OPEC trying to curb Iran, Iraq

By JOHN RICE

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Oil prices could fall sharply if Iran and Iraq increase production to raise cash for post-war reconstruction.

A glut in world oil supplies drove the price below the $18 a barrel level set by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries even before the Aug. 20 cease-fire in the Persian Gulf war. Prices now stand at around $15 a barrel.

OPEC's efforts to curb output depend on whether it can persuade Iran and Iraq not to use their newly regained export capacity.

The cartel already is plagued by overproduction by some of its 13 member states, mainly Iraq and the United Arab Emirates. Current total output is estimated at around 20 million barrels a day, around 3.5 million barrels above the cartel's quota ceiling.

OPEC's Secretary-General, former Indonesian Energy Minister Subroto, recently visited Tehran and Baghdad to persuade Iran to allow Iraq a quota equal to its own, 2.36 million barrels a day. That's far less than what both countries pumped before the war broke out in September 1980.

Iraq refused an earlier OPEC quota of 1.54 million barrels a day and demanded parity with Iran. Iraq failed to win that during the war, leading it to pump as much oil as it could, about 2.8 million barrels a day.

It is not known how successful Subroto's mission was. But Iraq's Oil Minister, Issam Abdul-Rahim al-Chalabi, voiced support Friday for OPEC and for "acceptable and just solutions to the problems facing the organization."

Iran and Iraq desperately need revenues to rebuild their economies. Each depends on oil for about 90 percent of its foreign earnings. Both have both made developing their oil facilities a top priority. Iran's long-term production target is 4.5 million barrels a day, around its prewar level.

During the war, Iraqi air raids on Iran's oil facilities and tanker routes forced exports down to an average 1.5 million barrels a day.

Iran's deputy oil minister, Khazempour Ardebili, recently said Tehran will stick to OPEC rules for the time being and work to prevent overproduction.

Repairing Iranian oil installations damaged in Iraqi air raids — and in recent months by the U.S. Navy warships — will take time. Development will cost both states billions of dollars.

Real estate values blamed for tax hikes

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

When it is all said and done, the owner of a $100,000 valuated home in Midland can expect to pay $182.70 more in property taxes in 1989 than he did the previous year. The total bill will be $1,810.70.

Everyone is raising taxes. Technically, that even includes the county, although its property tax tab is expected to decrease by $45.70 per $100,000 valuation.

This has meant tough decisions for politicians, administrators and board members. At the root — the pinnacle collapse of energy prices in 1986. It was a year that changed spending habits, a year that sent real estate values into a severe tailspin, a year that brought the plunge in sales tax collections.

But Midland residents — despite some grumblings on the street — have been relatively quiet as one governmental entity after another announced rate increases to offset shattered revenues.

Only a handful of taxpayers in this city of 100,000 even bothered to attend the public hearings and some of them had little to say when given the opportunity.

Parker & Parsley was one company that had something to say, sending a representative to each of the meetings, according to President Scott Sheffield. "We just wanted them (the entities) to look at the bottom line, rather then assuming the oil operations would pick up the tab. We were just making them think."

Many of those who didn't speak apparently thought Midland's Tax Awareness Group would carry the ball. But that group, too, was no where to be seen — and for good reason.

Explained Larry Wollschlager, a member of the group. "My phone's been ringing. People are concerned, but one person just can't do it."

Walt Laufer, a TAG co-founder, agreed. "Frankly, I got tired of it. I spent a full year writing letters and setting up meetings...but you can only do it so long. Someone (else) is going to have to take the ball and run with it. Midland is trying to be all things to all people and it can't." He said the problem is public apathy.

TAG members say the group still exists — but it needs new leaders who are willing to put themselves in the limelight and who are willing to commit themselves to the purpose.

But local taxing entities claim they're not to blame — that in order to generate the same revenues as the previous year, the effective rate had to be taken, which amounted to a hike.

As to why taxes are being raised above the effective, their reasons run the gamut from higher insurance premiums to paying for indigent care.

Topping everyone's list is declining real estate values. "That's been a basic problem for all entities," remarked Jim Williams, an economist and principal of Midland-based Texas Business Forecasts. "In order for them to stay even, they've had to raise rates to offset lost income. The choice was less services or higher taxes."

Bond issues add dollars to tax bills, too

Maintenance and operations aren't the only budget areas where tax dollars go. Bond issues also affect the level of taxation. At right are yearly costs on a $100,000 home for debt reduction of two Midland taxing entities. MISD's figures include debt reduction costs for a bond issue voters approved in May. City of Midland figures assume voter approval of a bond issue Sept. 17.

Midland's tax dollars also used to reduce bond indebtedness

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

When local governments approve a tax rate each year, they're not just providing a vehicle to pay for their operations and maintenance.

A portion of the tax dollars each rate generates is intended to help reduce debts incurred by capital improvement projects such as new building construction, street resurfacing or communications improvements.

So far this year, two local governments — the Midland Independent School District and Midland County — have garnered voter approval to add to their long-term debt.

A third, the city of Midland, will ask for similar approval in a four-part bond election scheduled for Sept. 17.

According to city Financial Director Trdy Gifford, if voters in two weeks approve all four portions of the total $17.4 million bond proposal, costs to taxpayers won't show up until the 1990-91 fiscal year.

At that time, whatever the total tax rate approved by the City Council, 8.771 cents per $100 valuation should be applied to debt reduction.

On a $100,000 home that amounts to about $8.77 in the first year of payback. Over the succeeding five years, the amount applied to debt reduction will jump to as high as $10.49 on a $100,000 home before receeding.

Gifford's figures assume the city will break the bonds into four actual sales — one each year from 1989 to 1991 and a fourth in 1993. Each sale should carry a 15-year payback period.

The four proposals scheduled for voter consideration are intended to address needs in areas of drainage, streets, parks and public safety.

For drainage, a total $3.5 million would go for improvements to the Northwest Drainage Channel, Scharbauer Draw and Mulberry Lane area.

Experts say it's miracle so many survived crash

By SCOTT McCARTNEY

GRAPEVINE (AP) — The first reports from the control tower indicated the crash was "non-survivable."

The Boeing 727 skipped through a dry, rock-hard field off the end of a runway, lost its right wing, turned 90 degrees and caught fire.

"There was a humongous fireball. I didn't think anybody had made it," said Mary Centron, a toll booth worker who also witnessed the fiery crash of a Delta Air Lines jumbo jet three years ago here.

Yet one by one, passengers crawled and clawed their way to daylight, some through doors, other through cracks in the aluminum shell of this Delta jet, Flight 1141 of Wednesday.

Some helped mothers get their babies out. The pilot, pinned in the cockpit under a pile of debris, kept telling passengers, "Slow down. Watch your step."

Somehow, 95 survived. One woman ran to a road and flagged down a ride back to the terminal. Another man said he's been hurt worse shaving. Just 24 hours after the crash, 62 people had been treated at hospitals and released.

■ Engine and cockpit pulled from wreckage, related stories — 4A

Thirteen people died. But experts and officials who specialize in dealing with disaster called the relatively low death toll a miracle.

"I had expected fewer survivors," said Julia Wells, a Parkland Hospital emergency-disaster team nurse who arrived by helicopter. "When you see a plane that looks like that, you don't expect that many to be walking around."

While the National Transportation Safety Board evaluates the cause of Flight 1141's disaster, investigators say they also are studying why so many survived.

"It's a particularly important opportunity for accident investigators," said U.S. Transportation Secretary James Burnley.

Rescue workers credit their experience of the Delta crash three years ago with preparing them for a fast, efficient effort. The NTSB had criticized the response to the crash of Delta flight 191, saying no coordinated effort was in place to handle the victims.

"There's no comparison. Everything went so smoothly," said Texas Department of Public Safety Cpl. Bill Taylor.

"When we got here," paramedic supervisor Mike Sympson said, "it was click, click, click."

And speed of evacuation, whether through the work of rescue workers or the calm and capabilities of those on the plane, may have been the key.

"It appears we got a majority of the passengers out before the fire really set in," said Oris Dunham, executive director of the Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport. "Most of the fire occurred after the plane was evacuated."

Girl hospitalized after being bitten in head by dog

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

A 6½-year-old girl was listed in stable condition at Midland Memorial Hospital after being bit in the head by a dog, a Rottweiler, that was later destroyed by the city's animal control department.

Charissa Reeves of 4011 W. Wall St., Midland, was "resting comfortably" after the ordeal that took place at about 5:50 p.m. Friday, according to officials with the Emergency Medical Services.

Animal Control Director Coy Willis said his department is still uncertain just what prompted the attack on the child, who reportedly climbed over a fence of a Brunson Avenue neighbor.

According to reports, the dog's owner reportedly came to the girl's aid when she began screaming for help.

Willis said when animal control officers arrived on the scene, they were given permission by the owner to kill the dog, which was given a leathal injection of sodium phenobarbital.

A sample of the dog's brain has since been forwarded to the El Paso City Health Department for rabies testing.

"She somehow got into the neighbor's yard and it attacked her," said Willis. "It bit her in the head...it did some severe damage."

Animal Control was contacted by Charissa's mother, Cynthia, shortly after the attack.

Willis said city records showed no previous attacks by the dog and that the animal had all its required shots.

He said because the dog was properly penned, the owner would not be cited under the vicious animal ordinance, which would require the purchase of insurance.

Midlanders report an average of 378 dog bites a year, according to Animal Control and the majority of those involve children 9 years of age and younger.

"She (Charissa Reeves) somehow got into the neighbor's yard and it (dog) attacked her. It bit her in the head...it did some severe damage."
— Coy Willis, director of Animal Control

"There are things we need to do to teach our children about animals and things we need to know about keeping them as owners," said Willis.

Ironically, at about the same time Friday, two Odessa residents were attacked by two high-bred dogs, which escaped by jumping through a plateglass window of Country Club Estates home, about one block east of Loop 338.

Listed in stable condition at Medical Center Hospital in Odessa was Bob Peters, 43, and his son, Brian, 11, of 2741 Brainbridge Drive.

Odessa Police said the dogs, a Great Dane/Bull Mastiff mix, attacked the boy first, who was bouncing a ball off the family carport at the time. Police said the boy was bitten several times in the head and on the face.

Upon hearing his son scream, police said the father came outside and was also attacked when he attempted to free his son from their grip.

According to Odessa Sgt. Jon Hubbs, one of the dogs tore the father's calf muscle with its teeth.

Hubbs said the two dogs were later taken away, along with three others owned by a neighbor that lived across the street from the Peters family. The two attacking dogs were described as "very large," weighing about 130 pounds each.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Slight chance of rain forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

Today wil be partly cloudy with less than a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms. Highs will be in the low 80s with overnight lows expected in the mid 50s. Winds will be out of the northeast at 10 to 20 mph. Fair Monday, with less than a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms. Highs are expected in the mid 80s, according to the National Weather Bureau at Midland International Airport.

STATE

A cold front moved into the South Plains and northwest part of North Texas Saturday afternoon, pushing thunderstorms and showers through much of the eastern and central parts of the state and into the Gulf of Mexico.

Flash flood watches were issued for northeast Texas, southeast Texas and upper coastal regions. Some of the heavier showers had the capibility of producing rainfall amounts between one and two inches in a short period of time.

Heavy showers in central Texas prompted weather officials to warn residents in Leon, Robertson and Brazos counties to be alert at low-water crossings and flood prone areas.

Scattered showers between Stephenville and Mineral Wells were expected to move southeastward into the area Saturday night.

NATION

Heavy rain fell over the lower Mississippi Valley on Saturday and extended northeastward up the Ohio Valley, and thunderstorms were scattered across the upper Midwest.

Abundant moisture flowing northward from a tropical disturbance anchored over the northwestern Gulf of Mexico collided with a cold front extending from the Great Lakes into northern Texas, producing locally heavy rain.

Rainfall amounts Friday night and Saturday morning ranged from 2 to 5 inches across the region.

Thunderstorms were widespread over Louisiana. A tornado was spotted in the Whisperwood subdivision of northern Slidell, but only minor damage and no injuries were reported.

Showers and thunderstorms also spread northeastward through the lower Mississippi Valley, with rainfall amounts ranging from 1 to 3 inches over southeastern Oklahoma. Natural Dam, Ark., reported 4.6 inches and 3.44 inches of rain was measured at St. Francis, Ark.

Many areas of Indiana reported over an inch of rain with Alexandria measuring 2.36 inches.

Rain and thunderstorms spread across Ohio and Kentucky, with rainfall amounts generally around an inch. However, Lexington, Ky., measured 2.08 inches in just over an hour during the afternoon.

Strong thunderstorms also developed over southern and eastern Wisconsin during the afternoon, with one-inch hail reported in Green Lake County.

Other showers and a few thunderstorms were scattered over parts of southern Minnesota and the western half of Iowa.

For Sunday, rain and thunderstorms were forecast from the Great Lakes to western New England and the Atlantic states, and over the western Gulf Coast. Scattered showers and thunderstorms were forecast over the southern Atlantic states and the lower Mississippi Valley.

TAXES

The 4.38 cent increase to 12.48 cents per $100 valuation was blamed primarily on sharp climbs in indigent care costs — $1.5 million of which was placed on the back of Midland Memorial Hospital, even though that responsibility belongs soley to the hospital district.

MCHD's hike — while lower than its original projection — factored in a 12 percent increase in indigent patient volume. Last year, that volume increased by 24 percent.

"Our single purpose is to pay for costs of indigent care," remarked MCHD Board President Gene Abbott. "We have no way of controlling the number of indigents."

He said the district services not just indigents at Midland Memorial, but patients that must be transferred to other facilities as well.

He said there also are a number of other factors not widely publicized, such as medicine, which is provided to those who can't afford it and transportation costs to other hospitals.

As for its relationship with Midland Memorial Hospital, the discounted bills that are sent are "reasonable, fair and honest," Abbott said.

According to district statistics, MCHD expects a $1.7 million shortfall in 1988. That figure — to be paid out of revenues — is above and beyond the 20 percent discount Midland Memorial gives the district for indigents.

Hospital officials have budgeted $5.6 million for indigent care in 1989 — up $500,000 from the previous year.

Midland Independent School District

The largest dollar increase came at the hands of Midland Independent School District, which raised taxes (inclusive of the effective) by 13.3 percent.

Assuming no change in valuation, an owner of a $100,000 home will pay an additional $106.40 per year or a total tab of $905.40 in 1989.

Two weeks ago, district trustees voted to adopt a 10.64 cents hike to 90.54-cents per $100 valuation as part of an overall $63.2 million budget. MISD's last tax increase came in 1986.

District officials cited a dwindling tax base as a main factor in approving the rate hike.

Also factored into the increase was a $2 million pay raise for teachers, which accounted for 56 percent of the total budget. It also added salaries for new teachers in order to comply with a state mandate that dictates a smaller teacher-student ratio.

Of the remaining budget, 13 percent was allocated for maintenance and operations; 12 percent for pupil services such as transportation; 9 percent for instructional costs from textbooks to sports; and 10 percent for bonded indebtedness purposes, administrative costs and data processing.

In addition to the tax hike, district officals report the need to spend an additional $1.3 million from operational reserves to meet other budgetary demands, according to its business manager.

City of Midland

The City of Midland has two income sources — property taxes, which account for 60 percent of its revenue, and the sales tax.

"You can't raise the sales tax, so any adjustment has to go on property," said Midland Mayor Carroll Thomas.

Unfortunately for Midland, property valuations here have declined significantly over the past three years.

The result — the tax bill on a $100,000 valuated home (inclusive of the effective) will increase $68.50 from $438 to $506.50 in 1989 — a 15.6 percent jump, based on actual year-to-year figures that assume no change in valuation.

Two weeks ago, city council adopted a $57.3 million budget that added 6.85 cents to the current 43.8 cent rate per $100 valuation.

Midland Council members point to sliding real estate values as one of the culprits for its eroding revenues. Based on net assessments, market worth, which peaked at $3.05 billion in 1985 (a year after the tax district's reappraisal), then nosedived. By 1987, total valuations stood at $2.60 billion.

City Manager Fred Poe calculated that the latest increase will generate about $990,000 and will still require officials to tap about $1.8 million in surplus funds to meet operating expenses.

City officials said that without the increase, services such as fire, police and operations would have suffered. During the downturn, the city eliminated 100 jobs and about $400,000 in wage and salary cost. While the jobs were never replaced, the paycuts were restored.

Recently, the city received high marks from its auditor — Peat, Marwick & Main, which said Midland operated in a strong "fiscal manner," noting further that its debt-ratio was healthy, its budget met and expenditures reduced.

Midland College

Among all entities, Midland College's increase was by far the lowest of the lot at $10.10 per $100,000 valuation. Taxes there are expected to increase from $98.90 per year to $109 per year, inclusive of the effective rate.

Like the others, College President Jess Perrish cited a 6.3 percent drop in property values in 1988 and further cuts in state appropriations when it decided to raise the tax rate from 9.89 cents to 10.9 cents per $100 valuation.

In adopting its $10.2 million budget, college officials noted that state funding — which peaked at $5.01 million in 1986 — would amount to only $4.8 million in the coming year.

The college also was smacked by a hefty increase in medical insurance premiums which added $89,055 to operations. The college is now spending $750,000 a year in this area when combined with all other benefits, or 10 percent of its total budget.

At its last regularly scheduled meeting, board members agreed they are interested in cutting insurance costs, indicating they may even go so far as shopping for a new carrier.

Midland College is currently part of a consortium of colleges and public schools which is insured through the Texas Educators Health Trust.

Midland County

Midland County, which is expected to adopt a tax rate of 16.50 cents per $100 valuation on Tuesday, will lower taxes by $45.70 on a $100,000 valuated home when commissioners take advantage of a half-cent sales tax, which was approved by local voters earlier.

But, technically, the county is raising taxes.

Currently, the county's rate stands at 21.07 cents per $100 valuation. With addition of the sales tax income, the rollback would have stood at 14.65 per $100 valuation. However, county commissioners are expected to add about two cents to that rate.

Still, the bottom line is most homeowners in Midland County will see a savings on their property tax bill — even 3 percent more if they pay their bills early, according to Tax Asssessor/Collector Frances Shuffield.

On a $100,000 valuated home — assuming no change in valuation — an owner will pay $165 in 1989 compared to $210.70 this year.

Commissioners adopted a $14.9 million budget last Thursday. With the addition of the sales tax, property taxes will comprise 43.6 percent of the county's total budget in 1989, compared to 70 percent this year.

BONDS

Some of the money would be spent contingent on voters approving the parks section of the bond issue, which holds a proposal for a new northwest Midland park.

The street improvement portion of the bond proposal amounts to $5.5 million — the largest of the four.

A total of 28 projects fall into the streets category, including $1.03 million that would be applied to signal synchronization in the central business district and on Big Spring Street, Andrews Highway, Midland Drive, Midkiff Road, A Street, Wall Avenue, Florida Avenue, U.S. Highway 80 and Fairgounds Road.

Other portions of the streets proposal would go toward intersection improvements and resurfacing at locations around the city.

A third portion of the bond issue would apply $4.2 million to park improvements — including construction of a new 150-acre northwest Midland park — if voters approve.

Actual site work would include excavation of the Northwest Drainage Channel just west of Holiday Hill road and grading of the area to provide runoff from the park into the waterway.

Excavation work would ultimately result in fields for soccer, baseball and flag football in addition to bikeways, volleyball courts, hiking trails and picnic pavillions.

Other money from the parks section would go toward construction of a new $300,000 senior citizens center on Midland's east side as well as expansion of the current westside center.

Upgrading current park facilities also holds a place in the proposal.

Within the $4.3 million public safety proposal, Midland's public safety communications efforts would be consolidated into one main center. Midland's antiquated fire dispatch system would be upgraded and mobile data terminals would be added to police, fire and emergency medical units.

In addition, the police department mainframe computer would be in for upgrading and a digitized trunk communications system would be put in place.

Voters this year already have approved bond issues totaling $15.6 million — $3.8 million in January for construction of a new county jail and $11.8 million in May for school expansion and construction.

MISD officials called the larger of the two bond elections as a result of two factors: state school reforms that called for smaller student-teacher ratios and a "mini-boom" in the number of Midland students.

The plan calls for construction of 79 new classrooms, seven libraries and a new 15-classroom primary school.

MISD Business Manager Don Furgeson said the district was "very pleased" over financial details of the bond sale, which included a restructuring of the total MISD debt to keep payoff rates low.

From 1989 to 1992, the debt reduction portion of the MISD tax rate will remain at 9.32 cents per $100 of property valuation. That means the owner of a $100,000 home would pay $9.32 yearly to help reduce the school district debt.

In 1993, that cost would fall to $7.30 and fall even further thereafter, according to Furgeson.

In contrast to the proposed city bond issue and the school district bond issue already approved, the $3.8 million county bond issue voters passed in January should provide almost no burden to taxpayers, county officials hope.

Included in the construction of a new county jail on the so-called "south superblock" downtown are cells for non-county prisoners whose incarceration officials hope will cover costs for almost all of the entire project.

The county has in hand informal commitments from the city, other counties, the U.S. Bureau of Prisons, the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service and the U.S. Marshal Service to help fill the 192-bunk detention facility.

Taking all county debt into consideration, the debt reduction portion of the county tax rate for fiscal 1989-90 amounts to 3.227 cents per $100 property valuation. On a $100,000 that amounts to about $3.23.

Should the commitments come to pass, officials have estimated that figure for a $100,000 home should fall to about $1.

MIRACLE

Those on board said somehow, calm prevailed. Passengers waited in line to crawl through a hole in the fuselage, and helped each other out. Smoke filled the cabin, some crawled on the floor. Many could see the ominous orange flames of burning jet fuel.

"It was kind of surprising," said Andy Dyer, a passenger who was on his way to help fight forest fires in Montana. "There wasn't any screaming hardly at all. It was real quiet. I think everybody was aware of what was going on."

All but two who died were found in the rear of the aircraft, many by an exit door that would not open. In fact, it took workers one hour Thursday to jar the door loose.

The plane hit the ground at the tail, investigators said. Fuel from the ruptured right wing is thought to have sprayed the rear and touched off the fire. The right engine was found 100 feet away. The cockpit section of the 727 broke open, fire burned through the plane's skin and melted the plastic windows.

Yet the plane had come to rest without hitting any structures, like two water tanks several hundred yards ahead. It was a similar water tank that caused Delta 191 to break up and explode, investigators said. That crash killed 137 people.

For those back in the Delta terminal, it seemed horrifyingly obvious what had happened. A cloud of black smoke, and eventually live television pictures of the charred carcass of an airplane had most, including relatives of passengers, assuming the worst.

"My husband was on the plane," JoAnn Waugh of Dallas cried to a chaplain at the terminal.

Later, she sprinted for an exit, racing to a nearby hospital where her husband, Penn, was being treated for minor injuries.

"I'm the luckiest person in the world," she shouted as she ran. "God is so good."

Reading electric meter helpful

NEW YORK (AP) — Learning to read your electric meter is helpful when trying to cut down on electricity consumption.

By monitoring usage, you can, for example, see how much it costs to run the air conditioner for several days straight, or how much you save when the water heater is turned off for a day compared with leaving it on.

Kids learn morals from experience

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Children don't always need adults to teach them right from wrong, according to a study of moral development in children at the University of Rochester.

Professor Judith Smetana found that children often learn moral values — that hitting people is wrong, for instance — from their own experience. They see that hitting others produces crying, pain and other distress that is clearly negative.

Social conventions, on the other hand, such as dressing boys in blue and girls in pink, must be taught by adults because such conventions are arbitrary and not obvious to children.

OPEC

Iraq could boost its exports by as much as 1 million barrels a day within months through makeshift terminals now that its ships can sail the gulf again.

During the war, Iraq built pipelines through Turkey and Saudi Arabia that allow it to export about 2.5 million barrels a day. Another 200,000 barrels a day is trucked through Jordan and Turkey.

Another pipeline due for completion next year, and reopening its gulf ports will push Iraq's export capacity to about 5.5 million barrels a day by 1995, oil analysts said.

Iraq plans to build a north-south pipeline within its borders, repair its southern gulf terminals and develop new oilfields.

It badly needs increased oil revenues to pay off its foreign debt, estimated at between $70 billion and $85 billion, and to finance its ambitious development plans. The $12 billion to $14 billion it earns a year from oil make it difficult to do both, diplomats said.

Iran earns around $9 billion annually.

Diplomats said Iraq's expansion plans are aimed mainly at diversifying its oil export lines so it will never again be trapped by the closing of its gulf ports and tanker routes, as it was at the outbreak of the war.

Baghdad-based diplomats said they expect Iraq, second only to Saudi Arabia in oil reserves, to try to abide by OPEC quotas, largely because it is in Iraq's own interests to help hold up oil prices.

But several sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said Baghdad might be tempted to overproduce if Iran does, or if oil prices and revenues fall so much that its development plans are endangered.

UT student killed in fraternity prank

AUSTIN (AP) — A 21-year-old University of Texas student died when he fell about 125 feet off a cliff after running from two other students during an apparent fraternity prank, authorities said.

The body of Scott Gregg Phillips, a member of Delta Tau Delta fraternity, was found early Friday near the bottom of a cliff along Barton Creek in western Travis County, said Sgt. Mike Lee of the Travis County Sheriff's office.

The death was ruled accidental by Dr. Robert Bayardo, Travis County medical examiner.

Phillips, a junior from Austin in the UT College of Business Administration, had disappeared after running into the woods late Thursday, officers said.

Officers said he apparently ran through about 50 feet of woods before suddenly coming to the cliff and falling off.

"Unfortunately, even during the daytime it's hard to see where the dropoff is," Lee said.

Bayardo said Phillips died of a broken neck. The student also crushed his chest when he fell against a tree and a large rock, Bayardo said.

The prank apparently began Thursday night when two fraternity pledges started following Phillips and another active member in their car, spokesman Curtis Weeks of the sheriff's office said.

Weeks said the pledges were following them with the intention of "grabbing them and throwing them in some sorority's swimming pool."

The other member ran to the left, away from the cliff, as Phillips disappeared among the trees, officers said.

The fraternity had no immediate statement Saturday, said a man who answered the telephone at the fraternity house and declined to give his name. He said he was a member of the fraternity.

No charges were filed. The death might be taken to a grand jury, Weeks said.

Ronald Brown, UT vice president of student affairs, said the fraternity could face disciplinary action by UT officials. He said university officials have not talked to any students involved.

"It's a source of great regret to us whenever the life of a student is lost, especially when it's lost in a tragic way," Brown said.

Brown said his office will decide if any action is necessary after it is determined if any illegal activities were involved.

Two students shot after pep rally

DALLAS (AP) — Two Lincoln High School students were hospitalized Saturday after they were shot in the school parking lot when they apparently got caught between four gun-wielding youths and their intended target following a pep rally, authorities said.

One of the student, Mark Lee, 15, was in serious condition late Friday at Baylor University Medical Center, where he was being treated for a gunshot wound in the hip. Sony Batts, 15, was in good condition at the same medical facility suffering from a gunshot wound in abdomen, police said.

Witnesses and authorities said Lee may have been wounded as he tried to shield Miss Betts from the assailants.

Witnesses said one youth who was taken into custody by police as a suspect may have been the intended victim of the attackers, who were trying to steal his gold necklance.

Officers said that students were milling around the school parking lot Friday after a pep rally in preparation for Saturday night's first football game of the season when a car approached the front of the school.

Witnesses said four youths, all armed with pistols, jumped out the car and began shooting at one student in the parking lot.

The intended victim started running through the crowd of students and Lee and Miss Betts were wounded while attempting to get out of the way, witnesses told police.

"All four shot their guns, and they were aiming at one guy," said a Lincoln High senior who asked not to be identified. "He started running, zigzagging and trying to get away."

Three of the youths then got back in the car while the fourth backed slowly towards the car, continuing to fire his pistol in the crowd.

Lincoln High School principal Napoleon Lewis denied that the attackers were students from his school.

One witness told the Dallas Morning News that one of the attackers attended nearby Madison High School, but Madison principal Alfred Jones said he was told by police that the attackers attended Lincoln High School.

Jones said there is no history of trouble between the two predominantly black high schools.

"No, we've had football and basketball games against each other for years and had no fights then. We've never had problems," he said.

About 1,600 students attend predominantly black Lincoln High School.

Dallas Independent School District officials say weapons have been an increasingly serious problem at Dallas schools in the past two years.

School security officers investigated 143 weapons possession charges during the last school year, compared with 125 the year before.

Firm offers to buy San Antonio utility

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Central and South West Corp. of Dallas and Houston Lighting & Power Co. have expressed interest in buying San Antonio's city-owned electric utility, officials said.

Merle Borchelt, president, chairman and chief executive officer of Central and South West Corp., confirmed Friday that the company has discussed buying the city of San Antonio's electric utility. But he characterized the discussion as "very preliminary and philosophical."

San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros disclosed Thursday that he had held preliminary talks about the sale with a Dallas holding company.

Jerry Hunter, a director of communications for Central and South West, said discussions about the sale consisted of one talk between Borchelt and Cisneros during an appearance by the mayor in Dallas on Wednesday.

"He (Borchelt) simply asked if there was interest there by San Antonio as a step toward further discussions," Hunter said.

Cisneros indicated that the sale of City Public Service could mean at least $1.5 billion, and possibly as much as $2 billion, to San Antonio if other utilities were to begin bidding for the system.

Central and South West is the parent company of several electric utilities in Oklahoma, Louisiana and Texas, including the Central Power & Light Co. of Corpus Christi.

The possibility that City Public Service may be put on the auction block generated interest by HL&P.

Robert L. Waldrop, HL&P vice president for public affairs, said if the city-owned utility were put on the auction block, HL&P would be interested.

"We would look at it," he said. "We are in the business of generating power. That is what we do best."

HL&P is a subsidiary of Houston Industries, which has struck a tentative deal to buy the U.S. holdings of Rogers Cablesystems, including the San Antonio cable franchise. The two issues are not related.

If Central and South West purchased the San Antonio system, it would become the majority owner of the South Texas Nuclear Project.

Houston Lighting & Power Co. is currently the largest share holder, with 31 percent. Austin owns 16 percent. Central Power & Light owns a 25 percent share of the project, and San Antonio owns a 28 percent share.

The sale would require authorization by San Antonio voters and approval of the Texas Public Utility Commission.

Austin would also have a say in such a sale because of its participation in the South Texas Nuclear Project. Under an agreement among the partners, the other have the right of first refusal if one seeks to sell all or part of its share.

Engines, cockpit pulled from charred Delta jet wreckage

GRAPEVINE (AP) — Cranes and trucks hoisted engines and the cockpit from the muddy wreckage site of a Delta jet Saturday as investigators met to resolve contradictions in accounts of events leading up to the crash that killed 13.

"There's a lot of inconsistencies and a lot of questions that need to be answered, and obviously we're going to get the answers as quickly as we can," said Lee Dickinson Jr., a member of the National Transportation and Safety Board team.

The three Pratt & Whitney JT-8D engines from the Boeing 727 that crashed Wednesday will be sent to the manufacturer for inspection, NTSB investigators said.

One of the engines had fallen off the plane during the crash at Dallas Fort-Worth International Airport. The other two had been removed from the aircraft Friday and placed nearby the burnt aircraft.

Also the Washington Post reported Saturday that the cockpit crew talked, as they taxied to the end of the runway, about the 1985 Delta Flight 191 crash that killed 137 at the airport.

Some 30 people, federal investigators, Delta officials and airport personnel, in hip boots and bib overalls slogged through ankle-deep mud during intermittent downpours at the crash site Saturday afternoon while they looked for other clues to the cause of the crash of Delta Flight 1141.

Ninety-five people survived when the plane, en route to Salt Lake City, crashed and burst into flame on takeoff.

The accident represented the first real-life test of a plane fitted with seats and carpets made of new fire-blocking materials required by the Federal Aviation Administration, experts said.

While it is not known how large a role the fire-resistant materials played in buying time for the 95 survivors, they may have helped, said John Mazor, spokesman for the Air Line Pilots Association in Washington.

"Just looking at the airplane — the scorch marks and the way it broke up on impact — typically you might have expected a greater number of fatalities out of an accident like that," he said. "We won't know how we were so lucky until we get more factual information and some analysis."

The wreckage was visible to passengers of planes landing or taking off, but its Delta logo had been covered with white paint Saturday.

Funerals for three of the victims were held Saturday. Services were held Friday for a Dallas couple and a veteran Delta flight attendant.

The NTSB teams concentrated on inconsistencies regarding the plane's wing flaps and engines.

Evidence has not yet confirmed witness' accounts that the engines trailed flame dur..g takeoff, said Bernard Loeb, NTSB deputy director of investigations.

No signs of damage have been found on any of the engines, which will later be shipped to Pratt & Whitney in Hartford, Conn., investigators said.

Although cockpit instruments told crew members that the wing flaps were in proper position for takeoff, inspections of the wreckage found that the flaps and slats appeared to be in the opposite of the correct position, investigators said.

NTSB officials said locking devices on the slats probably would have prevented them from being knocked out of position during the crash.

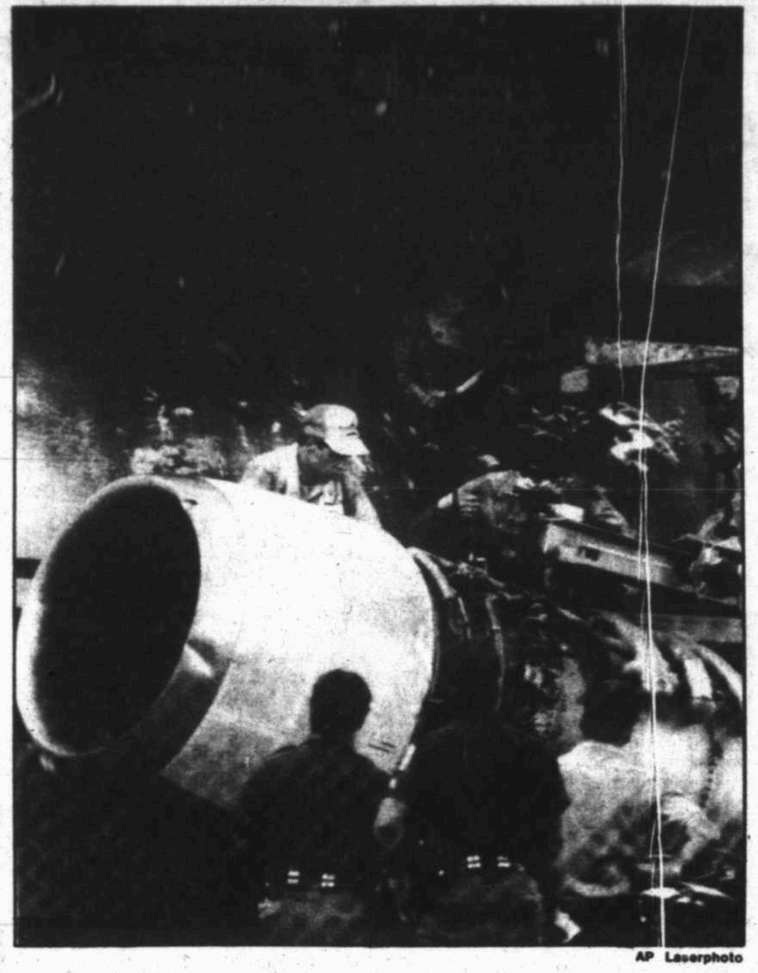

"We've got our investigators writing up their field notes, doing as much work as we can inside and continuing to discuss some of these questions to resolve some of the inconsistencies," said NTSB member Dickinson.

Flight engineer Steven Judd, interviewed in his hospital room Friday, told investigators he remembered pilot Larry Davis saying, "15, 15. Green light," indicating the instruments showed the flaps were at the proper 15 degree angle for takeoff, Dickinson said.

Davis, 48, was in fair condition at Parkland Memorial Hospital, but Dickinson said Davis' doctor had not given investigators permission to talk to him. "My information is he is not medically fit to talk to," he said.

Dickinson said the inspectors would review Delta's operations procedures to see if the flaps might have been brought up as a response to emergency engine failure. He said they also needed to reconstruct the history of the crew: how much rest the members had before the flight, if they had worked together before, and other factors that may have affected performance.

As Delta Air Lines Flight 1141 taxied to the end of the runway Wednesday, the three pilots in its cockpit joked that they should say something about their flight attendants so the media would have something to report when they crashed, the Washington Post quoted a source who heard the doomed jet's cockpit voice recording as saying.

Workers attach cables to one of the engines from Delta Flight 1141 Friday evening in order to remove the engine for further study.

Delta explains delays in flight passenger list

DALLAS (AP) — Delays in obtaining complete passenger lists after Wednesday's crash of Delta Flight 1141 are the price the public pays for flexible travel plans, a Delta Air Lines spokesman said.

The number of passengers reported on the flight changed several times in the hours after the plane crashed Wednesday morning. The fluctuations resulted from the time-consuming process the airline uses before it releases the names of people on downed flights, spokesman Bill Barry said.

"We don't want to falsely say someone is on the plane if they actually skipped the flight," he said.

The Federal Aviation Administration requires that every commercial flight contain a passenger manifest that lists all travelers and crew members on board, but it gives companies flexibility in how they compile and maintain that list, said Theresa Greco, an FAA spokeswoman.

Delta matches a computer-generated list of ticket-holders with the ticket stubs of those who actually boarded the flight, Berry said.

Children under 2 who sit in a parent's lap and non-working crew members don't have tickets. Those passengers are recorded only on the mainfest at the gate.

Berry said that to get the information quicker, parents would be forced when they bought tickets to announce whether they would take a child with them, and everyone would be required to check in at the ticket gate before boarding.

Crash survivor gets welcome upon arrival

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Dennis Selvage's children dropped the hand-painted "Welcome Home Dad" sign and ran as soon as they saw the smiling man with a slight limp walk into Salt Lake International Airport.

Selvage, a 42-year-old father of seven, was one of the survivors of crash of Delta Flight 1141.

"We almost lost him," said a tearful Kim Selvage, 19. "He's a hero."

Selvage arrived in Salt Lake City Thursday on a Delta flight from Dallas, where 13 people died when the Boeing 727 crashed and burned on takeoff. Like scores of others, Selvage scrambled from the wreckage and walked away.

Selvage was one of five Utahns on the flight. Two remain hospitalized in Texas, including Delta pilot James Fuchs, 50, of Farmington, who suffered a broken back, and Brad McClarey, 34, of Sandy, severely burned on his arms and face.

Like Selvage, Daman Berry, 37, of Sandy, another Delta pilot, and Rusell Guttu of Salt Lake City are home again.

"At first he didn't want to fly home, but Labor Day weekend is coming up and there'll be lots of cars on the road," said Selvage's wife, Nonie. "It's still a lot safer to fly."

Selvage said it was miraculous that he and 94 others survived the crash.

"There was the first impact and a fireball came by us on the left," said Selvage, who'd been sitting by the left wing. "I guess the left wing exploded.

"I thought I'd already bought the big one," he said. "I wished I'd been killed on impact so that I didn't have to go through that."

Mrs. Selvage said Delta had flown her husband's brother, Doug Ramer, from Tennessee to Dallas to meet him, and after a stay in Salt Lake city the airline would fly Ramer home.

"I didn't want to go to an airport. I didn't want to relive that terrible experience," Selvage said. "I'm glad it's over."

Delta spokesman Fred Rollins said marketing representatives are assigned to every passenger to "bake cookies," or do whatever they can to help.

"As human beings, as Delta employees, we feel very sad about this," he said. "We take this personally."

Berry, who returned to Utah on Wednesday, said he was "in good shape and good spirits. And that's about all I'm going to say."

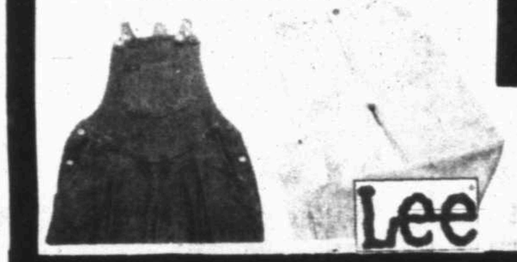

Guttu made it out of the plane with nothing more than a scratched ankle, said his wife, Cory. He flew home Thursday and spent his first day sleeping.

Deputy trys to evict wrong resident

HOUSTON (AP) — A Harris County deputy constable was fired for leaving a house ransacked after he learned he had gone to the wrong address to confiscate property and serve an eviction notice.

Deputy Constable John Forbes realized his mistake Thursday after spending about three hours preparing to remove the household effects of Christine Tucker, 32, from her rented duplex at 3818 Meadow Place Drive in west Harris County, Constable Steve Radack said Friday.

The correct address was a house at 3818 West Meadows which is only a few blocks from Ms. Tucker's home.

Ms. Tucker, who was preparing to move into a condominium Friday, said most of her belongings already were packed, and she was at work when Forbes and four movers came to her home.

When she got home, everything that had been packed was unpacked; some things that had not been packed were dumped in boxes and plastic bags by the movers. Bedding and clothing were tied in bundles. Furniture was piled on the floor, the couch was on its back and a love seat on end.

"I was dumbfounded. I couldn't guess what had happened here. I called 911; I wanted someone to tell me what had happened," Ms. Tucker said.

Officers who came to her home decided she was a victim of an attempted burglary and dusted various objects for fingerprints. After they left, she said, she sat down to cry, and her hands fell on a form Forbes had left behind.

"I think he left it by accident," Ms. Tucker said, referring to the piece of paper stamped by Radack's office and bearing Forbes' name and the message "re: information on an execution."

Ms. Tucker said her impression is that Forbes panicked after realizing his mistake and tried to cover up the error as a burglary.

"If they had just left a note saying what happened, it would have been so much easier," she said. "I don't think they intended for me to find the note (from Forbes). I think they just wanted me to think the house had been burglarized."

Commissioner objects to abortions

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Medical Center Hospital officials say they will follow Bexar County Commissioners Court orders on whether abortions should be performed at the hospital.

The move comes after Commissioner John Longoria said he would oppose the Bexar County Hospital District's budget because abortions are performed at the medical center.

John Guest, executive director of the hospital district, in a prepared statement Friday said, "We will be responsive to what the Commissioners Court decides."

Longoria said he and hospital district officials had reached an agreement on the issue.

"They have made a commitment to me that whatever policy (on abortion) the majority of Commissioners Court agrees on would be seriously considered," Longoria said. "Based on the commitment of what I perceive to be honorable people, I will not oppose their budget or tax rate."

Commissioners Court is scheduled to vote on the district's budget and on the intent to set the district's tax rate next Wednesday.

In July, Longoria said he would oppose the district's budget and tax rate request until the district took action to ban abortions at the hospital except in extreme cases, such as when a mother's life is in danger.

"Commissioner Longoria has always been supportive of the hospital district in the past," Guest said. "We appreciate his continued support and we respect his views."

Longoria said he would not put the abortion issue up for a vote Wednesday, but would support the district's requested tax rate even without a decision from Commissioners Court in hand.

"They're (hospital staff and administrators) doing a magnificent job," Longoria said, adding that he and several family members have been treated at the medical center. "The level of care is excellent. They're all very professional.

"Of course, as in any institution, there's some (problem), nothing is perfect, but they do excellent work. That's one of the reasons it's been traumatic for me to have to oppose them on the issue of abortion, but even there I have found that the board and administration are willing to work with me to do what's best for the community overall."

Hospital records for 1987 show that about 325 abortions were performed at Medical Center Hospital that year, a spokeswoman said.

Mauro calls organization 'historic'

AUSTIN (AP) — Democratic campaign workers from around the state met Saturday for an organization, training and strategy session that Land Commissioner Garry Mauro called "historic" because of its early timing.

Mauro and Railroad Commission member John Sharp told campaigners their efforts are crucial for Democratic candidates, including the presidential ticket of Michael Dukakis and Lloyd Bentsen.

"If you do your job right, there is no way in the world that the Dukakis-Bentsen campaign will not win," said Sharp, Texas chairman of that campaign.

Mauro, noting that important races have been decided in Texas by several votes per precinct, said, "If y'all do your work, y'all will elect not only the next president and vice president of the United States, y'all will elect a new generation of Democratic courthouses in the state of Texas...You can put Democratic power back in those courthouses.

"We are far ahead of the game," Mauro said. "There has been no time in the history of this state when we've had an organization like this before Labor Day."

About 100 people, including organizers, staff members and volunteers, attended the meeting. Among the areas represented were Harris County, Bexar County, Dallas, Tarrant County, El Paso, Hidalgo County, Corpus Christi, Laredo, Ector County and Midland County.

Hazel Obey — who served as state vice chairman of the Rev. Jesse Jackson's presidential campaign and is director of the party's Campaign 88 — said cooperation within the party is important. Mauro voiced a similar sentiment.

"We have got to forget about all the old battles. There are no Hightower Democrats, no Mauro Democrats, there are no Bentsen Democrats," Mauro said. "There are just good old non-hyphenated Democrats. We have got to get all our Democrats together."

Woman who wrote about con man sought

EL PASO (AP) — The FBI is looking for the woman who wrote Ann Landers about a con man she married who could "make you feel like a million."

FBI agents say they may have the man.

The FBI said it wants to contact the woman to see if she can identify him as the tall, handsome military man who wooed her with his smooth talk.

The letter, signed "Slow Learner" of El Paso, appeared in Ann Landers' advice column Aug. 30.

The woman told Ms. Landers she realized the man had other wives and was probably out to get her possessions, so she annulled the marriage. She said she wrote to warn other would-be victims.

"I married a con man," the woman wrote. "After the shame and guilt subsided, I began to think a little more rationally. I wonder how many others have had this experience. I'm sure there are many, but they are too embarrassed to admit it.

"He's a fabulous dancer, smooth talker and will make you feel like a million. His line is irresistible, and his ultimate goal is to 'move in,'" she wrote.

Agent Terry Kincaid of the FBI office in El Paso said that agents in New Orleans arrested Byron Clovis Brant and that the man sounds the one in the letter.

The FBI reported Brant uses many aliases and may have victimized women from California, Hawaii and the Midwest. Usually, he impersonates a military officer but he also has impersonated a doctor, the FBI said.

"He's a very accomplished dancer," Kincaid said Friday. "He has ... traveled throughout the country, preying on vulnerable women."

The FBI called the Chicago office of the advice columnist but the staff said the letter had no return address, Kincaid said. He said the identity of the woman would be protected.

The bureau knows of at least three women in their 40s who were victimized and suspects there may be more, the FBI said.

STATE in brief

Teen-ager charged in shooting released

HOUSTON (AP) — A 15-year-old boy accused in the fatal shooting of another teen-ager at a southwest Houston mall was released to the custody of his grandmother following an emotional hearing.

His parents, grandmother and other relatives packed a courtroom Friday ready to testify on how the boy was a straight-A honors student at Madison High School who never had any previous legal trouble.

State District Judge Eric Andell released the boy to the grandmother on condition that he remain on her Brenham-area farm and leave only under chaperoned trips or to attend school.

The boy's attorney, Paul Nugent, said the teen already had served 30 days in juvenile detention center.

The state argued that he should remain in custody and detained.

Officers don't request jobs

HEMPHILL (AP) — The three white law officers acquitted of violating the civil rights of a black Louisiana truck driver have not asked for their jobs back, Sabine County and city of Hemphill officials said.

Officials said they want all appeals in the case and civil lawsuits resolved before they consider reinstating the three.

A state district court jury in Sabine County on July 15 acquitted former Hemphill Police Chief Thomas Ladner, 41, and Sabine County sheriff's deputies Bill Horton, 58, and James "Bo" Hyden, 35, of violating Loyal Garner Jr.'s civil rights by beating him and denying him medical attention.

Law officers arrested Garner, 34, of Florien, La., last Christmas and charged him with driving while intoxicated. Garner suffered head injuries at the jail and died two days later at Tyler Medical Center.

Bus driver convicted

HOUSTON (AP) — A woman whose bus full of students chased a carload of rock-throwing teen-agers and killed a motorist in an ensuing accident was granted probation after being convicted of involuntary manslaughter.

Jurors in State District Judge Ted Poe's court granted Patsy Windom, 33, a five-year probation Friday.

But Poe, lambasting Ms. Windom for "turning your bus route into a Grand Prix race" and creating "a nightmare on Journs Street," imposed a 30-day jail sentence as a condition of probation.

Death of inmate changes black businessman's life

HEMPHILL, Texas (AP) — The black man's violent death and the circumstances surrounding it registered in Vollie Grace's chest, a nightmarish, suffocating feeling like he was standing in a dark tunnel and the walls were closing in.

Grace

His discomfort those days in early January was puzzling, Grace remembers now, for while it occurred only a few miles from his home, the fatal beating of Sabine County prisoner Loyal Garner Jr. seemed to have little obvious bearing on what Grace considered a happy existence.

Like Garner, Grace is black. But in his 47 years, most of them spent near this East Texas village, he had always been treated fairly by whites. He had carved out a comfortable life for himself and his family with hard work, owned a cement finishing business and kept his mouth shut.

In his version of the American dream, Grace could come home at the end of a day, eat his favorite meal of steak and rice, and plop down on a padded sofa in a cool living room in front of his color TV.

To Grace, if injustice indeed existed, it existed elsewhere.

But then, on Christmas Day last year, while Grace and his family dined on holiday ham, Garner, a 34-year-old truck driver from Florien, La., just east across the border, was arrested in Hemphill for suspicion of drunken driving. Two days later Garner was dead in a Tyler hospital from head injuries delivered in jail by three white law officers, subsequent criminal charges alleged.

Hemphill was hence lugged unwillingly into the national spotlight. At the same time, for reasons he still doesn't fully understand, the gentle life of Vollie Grace was changed forever.

Today, the man once so oblivious to problems outside his own life both leads and epitomizes a black awakening spawned in Hemphill by Garner's death and its aftermath, an awakening that has turned this quiet Piney Woods town on end.

"I had no business whatsover fooling with this," Grace said recently of Garner's death. "It didn't have any business worrying me. But if I didn't do something I would suffocate."

Days after Garner died Grace formed Concerned Citizens of Sabine County to organize the black community where no organization had existed before, and thereby assumed the mantle of black leadership here.

And eight months later, on a sweltering day in early August, it was Grace, who joined Garner's widow to lead 300 people, most of them black, on a loud march through Hemphill.

The unprecedented demonstration, organized by Grace, protested the July acquittals of suspended Hemphill Police Chief Thomas Ladner and suspended Sabine County deputies James Hyden and Bill Horton, who were accused of violating Garner's civil rights.

Grace now is president of the fledgling Sabine County chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, is a newly appointed minority representative to an East Texas government council and is still president of Concerned Citizens.

Even Grace's wife of 21 years finds the turnabout in her husband curious.

"He would hardly talk before this came about," said Alice Grace, 44. "Now I just can't seem to keep up. There's something different every month, something else he needs to look into or explore. Now he'll tell you what he's thinking.

"Now he's thinking about it all day and dreaming at night about something he needs to do."

Don Coleman, Grace's close friend from nearby Jasper, thinks there is a Vollie Grace in every rural community in America, waiting to be summoned by circumstances to leadership.

"That's what happened in Hemphill," Coleman said. "I think he's taken a tremendous stand and went out on a limb to where the fruits are. I think Vollie has a calling from God to be taking the stands of the nature he's taken."

His ascendency, people here say, is even more extraordinary because it has happened in a place where for decades blacks have been muzzled either by their own complacency or their fear.

In Hemphill, a school board member is the only black public official in a town 20 percent black.

But last spring, in an unprecedented occurrence, three blacks ran for public office — two for the city council, one for the school board — albeit unsuccessfully. The NAACP chapter was formed. Blacks press now for black deputies and black police officers.

After the July 15 innocent verdict rendered by a Hemphill jury of 11 whites and one black, Grace charged that many whites openly rooted for the officers' acquittals with little regard for the facts of Garner's death.

"I can't go with that any longer. That's just blatant racism. If this trial would have been held in hell, they would have had a better chance of getting a guilty verdict. Where does that put Hemphill?"

Perhaps predictably, in a town embittered by news reports portraying Garner's death as a lingering vestige of Southern racism, some white residents take a dim view of Grace's words and actions.

There has never been a problem between blacks and whites in Hemphill, a town of 1,500 that survives by the logging industry and tourism generated by nearby Toledo Bend Reservoir, many whites say.

Some openly criticize Grace, others speak with measured diplomacy.

"I consider him a friend of mine," said Hemphill Mayor Richard Bass, who owns an auto parts store on the courthouse square. "He's never caused any problems as far as I know anywhere."

Philip Crowell, president of the Sabine County Chamber of Commerce, defends Grace's right to speak.

"I feel like he's telling you what he feels. He's told you what he thinks and his opinion is as good as mine," Crowell said.

Students battle police

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Radical students demanding that North Korea be allowed to co-host the Olympics pelted police Saturday with rocks and firebombs, but the communist nation said it would boycott the Games and asked other countries to stay away too.

Police carrying iron bars and wooden clubs hurled back rocks and unexploded firebombs at about 600 students in the clash at Sungkyunkwan University in Seoul, but they used no tear gas because of a new government ban.

Several protesters and police were injured, but authorities had no figures for injuries or arrests.

A declaration by the students said: "If the Olympics cannot help nurture a desirable atmosphere, they are nothing but divisive Olympics, dictatorial Olympics and war Olympics."

North Korea announced Saturday it would boycott the Sept. 17-Oct. 2 Olympics because its demand to be a co-host had been rejected. It has said for months that it would stay away from the Games if the demand was not met.

North Korea, in a report carried by its official Korean Central News Agency, said the Olympics were being used to perpetuate the division of the Korean peninsula, and it urged other nations to back its boycott.

"For us, Olympic Games are important, but more important is the future destiny of our entire nation. For this reason, we cannot take part in the Olympic Games that is forced by single-handed hosting," said the report, monitored in Tokyo.

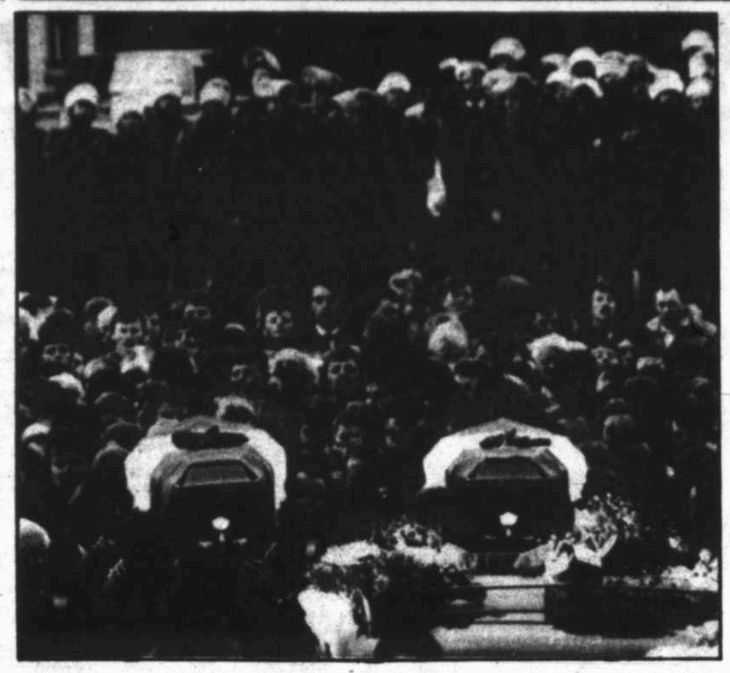

The agency, citing a statement released by the north's Olympic committee, said the Games will be "crippled" by a boycott, but only Cuba and Ethiopia have said they will back North Korea.

South Korean officials fear the north may try to sabotage the Olympics. The two sides see the Olympics as a major symbol in their struggle for dominance.

The peninsula was split in 1945. The north invaded the south in 1950, starting the Korean War, and the border between the two sides remains tense years after the 1953 armistice.

In its announcement Saturday, North Korea lashed out at the United States, Japan and South Korea, charging they conspired to hold the Games in Seoul to keep the two Koreas apart.

"By holding the Olympiad in Seoul, they tried to give the impression (that) South Korea, the complete colony, military base of the United States, was an 'independent state' and legalize the occupation of South Korea by the U.S. troops."

Mourners bury IRA guerillas, victims

DUNMOYLE, Northern Ireland (AP) — Armed soldiers lined narrow roads in this remote village Saturday as thousands of mourners followed the funeral cortege of an IRA guerrilla, one of three men killed in an ambush by British soldiers.

A Protestant leader bitterly protested the presence at the funeral of the dead man's brother, another IRA guerrilla who was released from prison to attend the service.

Across the province in Londonderry, family and friends gathered to mourn a man and a woman who went to check on a neighbor but instead stumbled into an explosive booby trap laid for British soldiers.

The Irish Republican Army apologized for the bombing deaths of Sean Dalton, 55, and Sheila Lewis, 60, but the clergyman who gave their eulogies had a bitter reply.

"We do not want to hear any more apologies from the IRA or from anyone else," Edward Daly, the Catholic bishop of Londonderry, told the mourners.

"We want an end to all this death and destruction, which is destroying our city and destroying our people and destroying the chances for the young people coming along for work, for opportunity," Daly said.

Dalton broke into the neighbor's apartment on Wednesday and triggered a bomb rigged by the IRA, which had kidnapped the occupant and planned to blow up any army squad that came to check on the missing man. The IRA apologized, saying the operation went "tragically wrong."

As the families of the dead mourned in the two towns, a British military base in Crossmaglen near the South Armagh border came under mortar attack. Police said two of the three shells that exploded landed inside the heavily fortified base but that there were no injuries and little damage.

In Dunmoyle, police and soldiers stood guard as mourners followed the cortege of 26-year-old Brian Mullin, one of three IRA men shot to death Tuesday by the waiting army as the guerrillas drove along a country road on what the IRA called "active duty."

News reports said Mullin and brothers Gerard Harte, 29, and Martin Harte, 21, were about to try to kill an off-duty member of the Protestant Ulster Defense Regiment when soldiers lying in wait riddled their stolen car with bullets.

The Harte brothers were buried Friday.

Among the mourners at Dunmoyle was Mullin's elder brother, Patrick, released on a day's compassionate leave from Belfast's Maze prison, where he is serving a life sentence for the 1977 IRA murder of a school bus driver — another mistaken killing for which the IRA apologized.

Ken Maginnis, a member of the Protestant Official Unionist Party, expressed outrage over the release.

Severest strike since 1981 ended

WORLD

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Solidarity leader Lech Walesa succeeded in stopping Poland's strongest wave of strikes in seven years Saturday when 250 coal miners ended a sit-in and 2,400 bus and dock workers cut short a strike.

The 19-day wave of strikes, which involved 100,000 employees nationwide, ended in a whirlwind of appeals and arm-twisting. Walesa urged supporters to end local disputes so that promised roundtable talks could begin on union pluralism and legalizing Solidarity.

The labor unrest was the strongest challenge to communist authorities since they crushed the Soviet bloc's first independent labor federation with the 1981 martial law crackdown.

Walesa said the strikes were a warning to authorities to meet workers' demands and that if they fail, "all this will be repeated again...stronger and more dangerous, and that problem will be even more difficult to solve."

Walesa said he had had to convince the striking miners "that despite everything Polish problems can be resolved only when the hand is outstretched for reconciliation."

Strikers at the July Manifesto coal mine near the southern town of Jastrzebie, where the nationwide strikes began Aug. 16, carried a Solidarity banner as they marched out in a steady rain at about 6 a.m. after 15 hours of negotiations among Walesa, strikers and management.

In the Baltic port city of Szczecin, about 1,800 dock workers abandoned a strike at 12:15 p.m. and 600 bus workers about an hour earlier. The port and the city's main bus depot had been occupied by strikers since Aug. 17.

During the strikes, Poland's two biggest ports were virtually shut down and production of coal from the Silesia region, a vital source of hard currency, was sharply reduced. Authorities claimed losses of tens of millions of dollars.

Police ended some strikes, but the final breakthrough came when the government agreed to the first high-level meeting between Walesa and authorities since 1982.

After that meeting Wednesday and the promise of further talks, Walesa put his personal reputation on the line to end the strikes despite opposition from many strikers.

Solidarity and authorities are readying lists of proposed participants for the roundtable, which could start any day, said Roman Catholic mediator Jacek Ambroziak in Warsaw.

"Lech is really pushing for it. He would like talks to begin next week and hopes to be ready then," said Solidarity adviser the Rev. Henryk Jankowski of Gdansk, who returned Saturday with Walesa from Jastrzebie.

Weary, unshaven miners walked two miles in the rain to a church where a priest celebrated Mass for strikers, their families and supporters from other mines.

Miners from other Jastrzebie-area mines awaited the strikers at the church and chanted, "Thank you, thank you."

The strike ended exactly eight years after the government signed accords with striking coal miners in Jastrzebie during the upheaval that gave rise to Solidarity.

Uncertainty prevails week after German air show crash

RAMSTEIN, West Germany (AP) — A woman walks aimlessly through the information center at Ramstein U.S. Air Force Base calling out "Hans," the name of her missing husband.

In a hospital in nearby Kaiserslautern, the mother of a young child screams and faints when she realizes the boy's face has been burned away.

At an emergency burn center near Mannheim, a mother weeps quietly and says, "It would be better if our daughter does not survive."

These are scenes from the aftermath of the Ramstein air show a week ago, when three Italian jets collided during a stunt and one crashed into a huge crowd of spectators and exploded.

Fifty-one people died, 15 remain unaccounted for and more than 160 are hospitalized.

Within an hour after Sunday's crash, volunteers set up a casualty information center in the base theater to help locate the missing.

"People were crying and in a panic," recalled Airman Stoney Glover, a volunteer who was working at the center shortly after the disaster.

"They were shaking and looking desperately to find their relatives," Glover said. A few hours after the crash, "one woman just wandered through the hall in a daze, calling out the name of a missing relative," he said.

About 300,000 people attended the show and watched in horror as three Italian jets collided during a high-speed stunt, sending one flaming aircraft plunging into the crowd.

Hundreds of spectators rushed to the information center immediately after the crash, Glover said.

"By then the area at the crash site had been sealed off," Glover said. "They had no where else to turn to."

Glover, of Orlando, Fla., said after word of the accident spread, the center was flooded with calls from worried relatives in the United States.

"People were calling in hysterics, trying to find out the whereabouts of sons or daughters stationed here," Glover said.

As volunteers at the center worked frantically to reunite families and friends, relatives of the severely injured faced grim emergency ward scenes.

"Relatives who arrived after the accident were confronted with sights that no one can prepare for," said Werner Overbeck, head of surgery at Kaiserslautern City Hospital, where 98 victims were treated.

"Many patients had suffered burns that made them unrecognizable to their families," Overbeck said.

"It was pandemonium here" the day after the crash, said an emergency room receptionist. "I saw a woman scream and faint when they brought her son in on a gurney. His face was gone."

One young mother, after visiting her daughter at the burn unit in a hospital near Mannheim said: "It is difficult for parents to say, but it would be better if our daughter does not survive."

The woman told the Frankfurt Abendpost newspaper that the child had suffered burns over 70 percent of her body, including her face. It was not known if the girl survived.

Two Americans were among the dead. Most of the dead and hundreds who were injured at the air show were West Germans.

Alfred Witt of Trier found out Friday his 16-year-old son Mario was dead after discovering the boy's house-key among long rows of items found on the bodies of victims who had been so mutilated they could not be identified, the Bild newspaper reported.

"They wouldn't let us see the dead," the father said.

Days after the accident, some families were still waiting for word about missing relatives.

"Every time the phone rings our emotions sweep from hope to despair," the Abendpost quoted Gerd Wagner of Nuremberg as saying.

Twelve-year-old Andreas Wagner had left the rest of the family to get a closer look at the aerobatic display, his father said.

"I thought to myself, 'Nothing can happen to him,'" Wagner said.

In the turmoil after the accident, many injured family members were sent to different hospitals.

"We are treating the parents of a seriously injured girl here in Kaiserslautern," Overbeck said. "The little girl is fighting for her life in a hospital near Ludwigshafen."

Overbeck and other specialists said many of the most severely burned probably will die of complications over the weeks to come.

While grief for lost loved ones is enormous, Overbeck said relatives of the maimed and the victims themselves will face unique psychological burdens long after they leave the hospital.

"These people must now deal with the pain of disfigurement and loss of function for months and years to come," Overbeck said.

Jeffrey Nelson, a psychiatrist stationed at Ramstein, said attendance at a special grief clinic on base soared after the accident.

"What we are seeing is a classic disaster response," Nelson said. "At first, people were too stunned to talk. Now they are moving through other stages of guilt, anger, depression and anxiety."

"Anyone who has gone through such an experience has their sense of life's predictability and security taken away," Nelson said.

He said the sessions are open to Americans and West Germans and are being expanded to include all personnel at the base.

"We need to move quickly to get them to talk about it before they close up and withdraw," Nelson said.

At Ramstein's busy west entrance, the only sign of the tragedy is a flickering red candle and bouquet of flowers placed along the roadside by an unknown mourner.

WORLD in brief

Little movement made in Iran-Iraq peace talks

GENEVA (AP) — A U.N. mediator Saturday reported little movement in the stalled Iran-Iraq peace talks despite attempts to bring both sides together for face-to-face negotiations.

Saturday was the 10th day of talks aimed at agreement on follow-up measures to the U.N.-sponsored cease-fire that took effect Aug. 20. The Iran-Iraq conflict, which began in September 1980, has claimed about 1 million lives.

Mediator Jan Eliasson, on his second day on the job, said, "We are working hard and we hope that we will be advancing."

Eliasson spoke shortly before meeting with Iraq's foreign minister, Tariq Aziz, and 10 members of the Iraqi delegation. Eliasson said he hoped to meet later Saturday with Iranian Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Velayati but that the meeting was indefinite.

Eliasson, named special representative last Thursday by U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar, met separately with both ministers Friday. Perez de Cuellar left Geneva on Thursday, after mediating the first week of the talks.

Maps found falsified

MOSCOW (AP) — Roads, rivers and towns were moved or removed on Soviet maps for 50 years by order of the secret police, who were trying to throw off aerial bombers and spies, the Soviet Union's top cartographer said.

Those inaccuracies are now being corrected, said the cartographer, Viktor R. Yashchenko.

"People didn't recognize their own homeland on maps," Yashchenko told the government newspaper Izvestia in an interview published Friday. "Tourists in vain tried to orient themselves to locations."

Yashchenko, head of the government's Main Directorate of Geodetics and Cartography said the falsifications began in the 1930s under now-disgraced dictator Josef Stalin and continued until this year.

Stalin's policy of revising historical records to suit his political needs has been severely criticized under Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

Disease prompts inquiry

LONDON (AP) — The government has begun a study of a rare cattle disease that has worried the domestic industry and prompted two countries to ban British livestock, officials said.

The disease has not been documented in any other country, though there have been anecdotal reports from the United States, said Dr. James Hope, head of an independent research unit studying the disease.

Hope said 833 cases of the disease, which affects the animals' central nervous system, were discovered since 1986 among 13 million British dairy cows. It is more common in sheep.

The government has launched an inquiry into the disease, known as Bovine Spongiform Encephalopachy, officials said Thursday. They said there was at present no evidence humans could catch it by eating beef.

Israel and Australia have banned imports of British cattle, according to an official for the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food who spoke on condition of anonymity.

U.S., Burma to meet

RANGOON, Burma (AP) — U.S. Rep. Stephen J. Solarz said Saturday he would meet with government and opposition leaders to see how the United States can encourage democracy after 26 years of authoritarian rule.

Small groups of anti-government protesters met in the capital, but there were no rallies after a week of major demonstrations against the one-party rule of the Burma Socialist Program Party.

"I've come in order to assess the situation and its implications for American interest in the region," Solarz said after arriving Saturday in Rangoon. He was reached by telephone from Bangkok, Thailand.

Sources said Solarz would meet separately with President Maung Maung; with Ang Gyi, Burma's best-known dissident, who was recently freed from a month's detention; and with Tin Oo, a former defense minister who re-emerged to lead calls for multi-party democracy.

Debate on statehood, government causes friction among Palestinians

GAZA CITY, Occupied Gaza Strip (AP) — Throughout the West Bank and Gaza Strip, Palestinians are holding an intense and sometimes violent debate on the wisdom of declaring a state and forming a provisional government.

Leading members of Yasser Arafat's Fatah faction of the Palestine Liberation Organization have proposed recognizing Israel and seeking international recognition for statehood on the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

These ideas are meeting surprisingly strong opposition from Islamic groups and radical leftists.

The misgivings prompted a recent decision to postpone until the first week of October a meeting of the 447-seat Palestine National Council, the PLO's parliament-in-exile.

The debate also has touched off some inter-Palestinian violence. Last month, for example, the car of a prominent Islamic fundamentalist was firebombed in Gaza and PLO supporters were blamed.

Daoud Kuttab, a prominent journalist and leading advocate of the provisional government idea, wrote in the weekly Al Sinara that Palestinians "should not hesitate" or they would lose a golden opportunity.

"One of the problems in the past has been that the PLO was too tied to the principle of national consensus. You can't have total agreement on every issue. The majority should decide. Having some opposition, in fact, would be healthy," Kuttab said in an interview.

Kuttab argued a major benefit of changing from a guerrilla organization to a provisional government would be an improvement of the Palestinian image, especially in Western eyes.

"Instead of guerrilla fatigues, Arafat will be wearing a suit and tie. It's a good idea to change the image of Palestinians as revolutionaries, which is looked at negatively in the West," he said.

Kuttab said a provisional government also would have more flexibility in negotiations and be able to change positions when necessary in contrast with the PLO, which had to cling to revolutionary ideals.

Moslem fundamentalists of the Islamic Jihad (Holy War) and the even harder line Hamas (Zeal) are opposed to the existence of a Jewish state. They demand an Islamic state and remain outside the PLO because it calls for a secular nation.

"I don't think it's the right time to establish a provisional government or declare an independent state because the Palestinian side is weak, and the weak are always commanded by the strong," said Ahmed Ismail Yassin, spiritual leader of the Islamic Jihad.

Yassin, who is paralyzed and confined to a wheelchair, is a charismatic figure who preaches in the Mujamaa Islami Mosque on a dirt street in the run-down Sabra section of Gaza City. He was released in a prisoner exchange in 1985 after being sentenced to 13 years in jail for financing Islamic militants.

In an interview, Yassin said, "If the PLO doesn't change some of its ideas, there is no need for us to cooperate with them."

Yassin, who has hinted that fundamentalists may form an alternative PLO if a secular state is declared, indicated he was concerned about inter-Palestinian violence and warned it was a "dangerous disease."

The Islamic militants broke off cooperation last spring with the clandestine United National Leadership of the Uprising, which is believed to be made up of representatives from the PLO factions.

Both groups issue separate underground leaflets calling for competing strikes and boycotts. They also proclaim their positions in multi-colored graffiti that covers walls and shops throughout the occupied lands.

The slogans of the Islamic militants usually have a religious theme: "Our martyrs are in heaven, yours are in hell."

Criticism of Fatah's campaign also comes from the left.

"They (Fatah) are forcing the issue on which there is no unanimity," said Haidar Abdel Shaafi, a prominent figure associated with the Communists.

Abdel Shafi, head of the Palestinian Red Crescent society, the Moslem equivalent of the Red Cross, said he opposed for tactical reasons making the concession of recognizing Israel in advance of negotiations.

"The matter of recognizing the Jewish presence here is really no longer in question. But how can I recognize Israel when Israel does not recongize me, when Israel claims all of Palestinian to be their territory," Abdel Shafi said.

He said he hoped the Palestinian council would not take a decison until after Israel's Nov. 1 elections so as to not to make advance concessions.

It is not known which group commands the most support, although the conventional wisdom is that Islamic militants have the backing of most of Gaza's 650,000 residents and Fatah controls most of the West Bank's 850,000 Palestinians.

50,000 flee floods from tropical storms

TUXPAN, Mexico (AP) — Rains from two tropical storms triggered floods near the nation's coastlines that forced more than 50,000 people to flee their homes and killed at least three people, officials and news reports said.

Rains from Tropical Storm Debby caused mudslides that buried two homes and killed three people in Papantla, about 16 miles from the Gulf Coast and 150 miles northeast of Mexico City, said Veracruz state official Alfredo Algarin Vega.

Another person was swept away and presumed drowned when the Hueleque River overflowed its banks in Poza Rica, according to police chief Rosell Olivares Hernandez.

More than 500 people who lost their homes to flooding in Poza Rica were lodged in city government offices and the public gymnasium, the government news agency Notimex said.

Rains caused a flash flood in the town of Alamo, but about 30,000 people evacuated safely, according to Enrique Estrada, head of the Red Cross in the nearby Gulf Coast city of Tuxpan. About 5,000 homes were flooded by the Tuxpan-Pantepec River there, he said. No injuries were reported.

Estrada said the river overflowed its banks shortly after midnight.

"In a few minutes, it inundated most of the town," he said in a telephone interview. However, he said residents were evacuated to schools and office buildings on high ground before the flood.

He said it was still raining heavily in the area Saturday.

Alamo, a coffee-producing town of about 40,000, is 25 miles inland from Tuxpan in the southern state of Veracruz about 300 miles south of the Texas border.

Rivers and creeks overflowed their banks and destroyed homes in the nearby towns of La Antigua, Cazones, Coatzintla and La Palmilla, Notimex said. One man reported swept away by flood waters in La Palmilla was found alive three miles downstream, it said.

The government oil company Pemex said flood waters from the Cotaxtla River ruptured nine oil and natural gas lines in Cotaxtla, about 285 miles east of Mexico City.

Workers were able to shut down the pipelines, which supply the Matapionche petrochemicals plant with 3,600 barrels of crude and gas daily, Pemex said.

Another tropical storm, Kristy, doused the Pacific Coast with rain on Saturday, the Weather Service said. Rivers in the southern states of Chiapas and Oaxaca overflowed in the heavy rains ahead of the storm.

Chiapas state Gov. Absalon Castellanos Dominguez declared a state of emergency after 20,000 people evacuated their homes because of flooding.

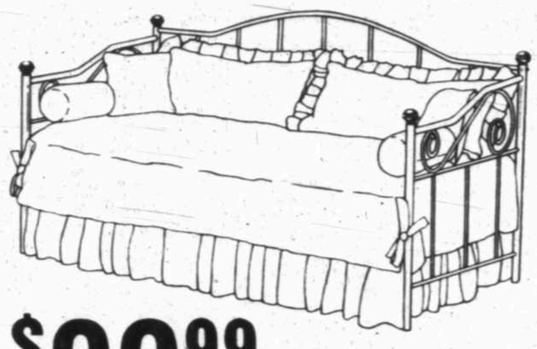

Thousands of people were evacuated from Huixtla, Escuincla, Pijijiapan, Arteaga and Tonala when the Cuatan Grande and the Chico rivers flooded, the Excelsior news service said.

Toxic chlorine cloud forces evacuation

COMMERCE, Calif. (AP) — A 10-square mile cloud of toxic chlorine gas leaked from an industrial plant and forced a 7½-hour evacuation of up to 27,000 people east of Los Angeles on Saturday. At least seven people were taken to hospitals.

The gas cloud formed just after midnight outside a plant that makes chlorine tablets for swimming pools, authorities said. The chemical reaction that caused the cloud was brought under control about nine hours later.

Residents were told they could return home after getting the OK from the Los Angeles Couunty Department of Health.

An estimated 550 gallons of a chemical used to make the chlorine tablets apparently became contaminated, setting off the reaction, said Sheriff's Deputy Van Mosley.

The air was permeated with the smell of bleach from the the wispy, smoky-gray gas that billowed from the Grow Group Inc. plant. Chlorine can be lethal in high concentrations but otherwise causes burning eyes and sore throats.

Firefighters and sheriff's depudes evacuated between 25,000 and 27,000 people in surrounding neighborhoods, about 10 miles east of downtown Los Angeles, Mosley said. Wind was light and variable.

Three people were in stable condition at Santa Marta Hospital and Clinic, said nursing supervisor Verna Brinson. Four others with respiratory complaints were treated at County-USC Medical Center and released, said Norka Manning, a hospital spokeswoman.

At the Pioneer High School gym, where hundreds of evacuees waited, many said they were notified by neighbors or knocked on doors themselves to rouse people.

Grace O'Brien of Montebello said she bundled up her 89-year-old mother when they left her home.

"I tried not to take deep breaths," she said. "I told my mother to roll up the car windows, and I made an illegal U-turn — I didn't think the deputies would stop me."

Like many other residents, Ms. O'Brien said she didn't smell anything or see the chemical cloud.

"Didn't bother me. I've been through so much...tornadoes, things like that," said Ms. O'Brien's mother, Marguerite Secrist, a former Texas resident. The area evacuated comprised several square miles in sections of East Los Angeles, Monterey Park, Montebello and Commerce, authorities said. Residents were sent to several high schools where the Red Cross had set up shelters.

The plant was closed at the time of the leak, said plant manager Kim Marti. "The sheriff's department woke us up," Marti said.

Sheriff's Deputy Sam Jones said the exact cause of the toxic cloud was undetermined, but one possibility was that moisture seeped into the containers in the plant and activated the dry chemical, releasing chlorine gas.

Satellite failure leaves U.S. dependent on old systems

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A secret new spy satellite circled the globe in a useless orbit Saturday, leaving the United States to continue relying on aging systems for eavesdropping and warning of missile attacks.

The satellite, said to be designed for intercepting Soviet communications, was propelled into a successful preliminary orbit by a $65 million Titan 34D rocket launched here Friday.

But a source close to the project said the spacecraft failed to achieve a desired stationary orbit 22,300 miles high when the upper stage of the rocket failed to re-ignite.

The source, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the satellite remained in a sharply elliptical orbit ranging from about 100 to 22,300 miles above Earth.

He said the payload was useless on that course and there was little hope of salvaging the mission.

The Air Force, as is its custom with military launches, did not announce the liftoff in advance. Several minutes after launch, with the Titan apparently working well, it reported a successful start to the mission.

Asked about the reported failure, Air Force Lt. Col. Ron Rand, director of public affairs at the Eastern Space and Missile Center here, said the Pentagon had a policy of not commenting on the results of military space flights.

John E. Pike, a space policy expert for the Washington-based Federation of American Scientists, said the satellite was code-named Vortex, a series designed to monitor Soviet missile tests and military and diplomatic electronic communications.

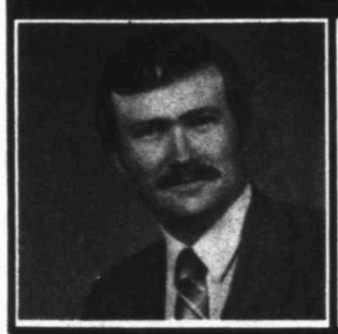

It was intended to replace a satellite that has been in use for several years and is showing signs of wear, the source reported.

Aging is a problem with many of America's military satellites and is causing concern among military planners, who over the last two decades have relied heavily on space-based systems for reconnaissance, communications, electronic eavesdropping, missile-attack alert and navigation.

Since the space shuttle Challenger explosion and a Titan 34D blowup, both in early 1986, the Pentagon has been limited in its ability to lift heavy satellites into orbit to replace older systems, many of which continue to operate long past their anticipated operational lifetimes.

The Titan 34D, the United States' most powerful unmanned rocket, was grounded for redesign for 18 months following its 1986 failure.

Dukakis, mother makes sentimental journey to Ellis Island

ELLIS ISLAND, N.Y. (AP) — Michael Dukakis, in a visit with strong personal and political overtones, was touring Ellis Island Saturday with his immigrant mother Euterpe, and he declared "we are one nation, one people, one community."

Dukakis

One day short of her 85th birthday, Mrs. Dukakis was living the ultimate American dream, visiting the island where she landed more than 75 years ago as a 9-year-old Greek immigrant, with a son who was the Democratic candidate for president of her adopted land.

Panos Dukakis, who would later meet and marry Euterpe, passed through Ellis Island a year before her.

"Their story is your story, it is our story, it is the story of America," Michael Dukakis said to a gathering of first-generation Americans.

Among those joining them for the occasion was New York Gov. Mario Cuomo, the son of Italian immigrants.

Cuomo introduced Dukakis as someone who "stands on the edge of realizing the immigrant fantasy, he is about to become the president of the United States of America."

Cuomo is among as many as a dozen political leaders expected to be named this week as co-chairmen of the Dukakis campaign. Others included Sen. John Glenn of Ohio, Sen. Sam Nunn of Georgia and Gov. Madelyn Kunin of Vermont, according to a campaign source who demanded anonymity.

Dukakis' visit to the island had more than personal significance. It also was designed to strengthen his identification with ethnic voters in the presidential election.

Many voters who retained strong identification with their ethnic roots traditionally supported Democratic presidential candidates in the past. But large numbers shifted their allegiance to Ronald Reagan in the 1980 and 1984 elections.

Now Dukakis is trying to win them back to the Democrats.

"America's story is the immigrants' story," he said. "Newcomers arriving, some on slave ships to our lasting shame; some on converted coal ships like my mother, immigrants from every corner of earth drawn by the torch of freedom."

The Massachusetts governor said, "We must never forget that we — like those who built our nation — must have our minds on the future."

He said the choice between him and Republican George Bush in the presidential election was "between accepting the world as it is and accepting our responsibility to make it better."

"We must never forget — though some would have us do so — that the dream belongs not just to the privileged few, but to all of us," he said.

"We must never forget — though some would have us do so — that today the rich are getting richer; the poor are getting poorer; and those in the middle must work twice as hard just to stay in place.

"We must never forget — though some would have us do so — that we have a responsibility not to be satisfied; not to be complacent; not to be weary; not to rest until all our citizens are full shareholders in our shared dream."

Dukakis said that when he looks at the American flag, "I see a quarter of a billion faces of all ages, all colors, all shapes and all sizes; I see a nation dedicated to a belief in individual rights, strengthened by a commitment to family values; united by an understanding that for all our diversity, we are one nation, one people, one community."

Dukakis spoke from a podium facing the large brick building his mother passed through when she arrived in America.

When he finished speaking Dukakis turned around and walked to his mother who was seated behind him and kissed her.

The Ellis Island stop was the end of a three-day pre-Labor Day campaign trip to California, Oregon, Washington and South Dakota.

At an early morning rally in Sioux Falls, S.D., Dukakis chided Bush for calling an increase in the unemployment rate "irrelevant."

Bush sticks to plan for two debates

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican George Bush said Saturday he is standing firm on his proposal for just two presidential debates even though Democratic rival Michael Dukakis, whom he called a "better debater," wants three.

Bush

"We've made a strong proposal that calls for two debates at this level and one at the vice presidential level and we're going to stay with it," Bush told reporters. "I think it's the right amount of this kind of campaign activity."

So far, the Bush and Duakakis camps have been unable to agree on debate details with a deadlock over timing and number of debates. Bush forces insist on no more than two debates, to be held between Sept. 25 and Oct. 17.

Bush labeled the Democratic presidential nominee "a good debater" and recalled Dukakis' role in moderating the Public Broadcasting System televison debate show, "The Advocates," from 1971-73.

"He's probably a better debater," Bush told reporters he had invited to lunch at his residence at the U.S. Naval Observatory.

He added quickly, tongue-in-cheek: "I'm lowering expectations...My wife Barbara, when I practice debating, she falls asleep. And I've got to do something different about that."

Barbara Bush, who was sitting on the grass among reporters at the outdoor news conference, told reporters Bush's comments were "not true."

Bush, who had no campaign events scheduled Saturday or Sunday, begins a week-long campaign swing on Monday with several Labor Day events planned in San Diego and Los Angeles. The vice president said he would stress the economy and jobs in his Labor Day appearances.

On another subject, Bush said he was not concerned over disclosures that the political consulting firm of Stuart Spencer had been paid more than $350,000 in 1985 and 1986 to assist the Panamanian government headed by Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega. Spencer is the chief political strategist for Indiana Sen. Dan Quayle, Bush's running mate.

"Panama's a friendly country," Bush declared. "And as he (Spencer) made clear, I think, (Eric Arturo) Delvalle was the president under which he was hired. So I have no concerns about that. And I think he explained it pretty well."

Delvalle, the former civilian president of Panama, was hand-picked by Noriega to run the country but was ousted by Noriega in February. Bush did not elaborate on whether he thinks Panama is still a friendly country.

Responding to reporters' questions, Bush said that while he disagreed strongly with Dukakis' veto of a Massachusetts bill requiring teachers to lead students in the pledge of allegiance, he would not propose such a law nationally.

"I happen to be a 'federalist,'" Bush said, suggesting that such matters should be left up to the states.

When asked whether he would favor state laws that might punish teachers — including jail sentences — for refusing to lead students in the pledge, Bush said:

"I don't know if it's a jail offense. I think each state should make that determination certainly. So I'm not advocating putting any (teachers) in jail. What I am advocating is what I think of as a fundamental value: that teachers ought to lead the kids in the pledge of allegiance."

When pressed on the matter, and asked why he wouldn't advocate jail terms for teachers who refused to follow such laws, Bush snapped: "I'm not going to make any punishment. I told you I'm going to leave this matter to the states. I think states should support their own laws. That's all that I have to say on that one."

Man held on charges of threatening justices

WASHINGTON (AP) — Authorities held a Florida man in the city jail on Saturday after he was arrested on charges of threatening to kill the nine justices of the U.S. Supreme Court.

George Thomas Haley, 38, was arrested without incident Friday afternoon in the Washington suburb of Arlington, Va., said Bill Dempsey, spokesman at the Alexandria, Va., field office of the U.S. Marshal's Service. He is scheduled to be arraigned on formal charges Tuesday in U.S. District Court in Washington.

Park service blamed for loss of business

GARDINER, Mont. (AP) — As the town meeting in the high school auditorium dragged into its third hour, with townspeople shifting on their metal folding chairs, a biologist droning on about the effects of forest fires on endangered species in Yellowstone National Park was curtly interrupted.

"I think the people here are primarily interested in another endangered species — the local businessman," boomed Ken Dixon. "We are also in a survival situation ourselves."

In Gardiner, perched just yards from the gateway to Yellowstone, the lucrative summer season has disappeared in a cloud of forest-fire smoke. Stores offered end-of-the-season sales and switched to winter hours before Labor Day. Hotels have lost guests. Workers have lost wages. In all, merchants reckon they'll lose millions.

But townspeople like Dixon, the owner of Cecil's Restaurant, don't blame the gigantic fires. They blame the National Park Service, which let the fires burn naturally until they got out of control.

"They've killed our business," said Donald Laubach, whose son owns the Town Cafe and Motel.

"We all feel anger toward the park service," added cashier Jackie Thompson.

When lightning touched off wildfires in June, Yellowstone's management followed National Park policy and let them burn. Fire-fighting efforts were launched immediately on manmade fires, but blazes started by lightning strikes were considered part of the natural ecosystem and beneficial to the overgrown forest.

By mid-July, with fires burning in all corners of Yellowstone, all-out containment efforts began, park officials say. By the end of August, nearly one-quarter of Yellowstone's 2.2 million acres had been engulfed. At least one of the fires charring Yellowstone was believed started by chainsaw sparks outside park boundaries, but it has defied efforts at control.

The fires — the worst in more than 200 years — fed on drought-dried timber and scattered on record-breaking winds. Today, they threaten towns, buildings and even the Old Faithful geyser.

Long after heavy rains or early snows smother the infernos, debate over the let-it-burn policy will rage, townspeople and park officials agree.

Congressional hearings are expected, and application of the policy will be re-evaluated, said Yellowstone Superintendent Robert Barbee, the official at whom Dixon and others in the region have directed their attacks.

It is shaping up as a classic confrontation, a clash between businessmen and nature, with its roots sunk deep in the very mission of national parks, which officials insist are intended to preserve nature, not cater to tourists.

"Where do you draw the line?" Barbee asked in an interview with The Associated Press. "We say when push comes to shove, nature wins in the national parks. But it isn't pure and simple."

Forestry officials say the fires prompt rebirth in the wilderness, clearing away the old, dead and overgrown while making way for new vegetation and new wildlife habitats.

National parks, they say, are intended to be laboratories of nature, not "tree museums."

"Are we to promote these lovely pastoral scenes people are used to seeing on postcards and in coffee table books? Or is a national park a repository for naturalness?" Barbee asked. "Everything doesn't have to be picture postcard scenes. That's not what we're trying to accomplish."

To Ronnie Wright, the national park fire policy is good in theory, but poor in practice. Like others living on the edge of the nation's oldest national park, Wright makes his living from nature. His company, Beartooth Plateau Outfitters, offers tours and hunting trips.

Fortune hunters try for chance at $52 million

MIAMI (AP) — Dreams of riches were churning out of Florida Lotto machines at a rate of more than 850 a second Saturday as fortune hunters rushed for a chance to win the nation's largest-ever lottery jackpot, an estimated $52 million.

"We've gotten calls from London, Australia and Spain asking about the Lotto game," said state Lottery Secretary Rebecca Paul.

The payoff was estimated at $52 million, and the late avalanche of sales may push it even higher, officials said. The previous record jackpot of $51.4 million was set in California in June; two winners split that one.

Players have turned to psychics, gimmicks and other formulas to beat the 14 million-to-1 odds of picking the six winning digits out of 49.

The drawing wa. scheduled for 11 p.m. Saturday. Afterward, six cheerleaders at the Florida State-University of Miami football game here planned to wear the winning numbers.

At times Saturday, tickets were going at a pace of 859 a second, Ms. Paul said. By noon, 34.5 million tickets had been sold for the week.

"Frantic isn't the word," said James Salvatore, owner of Lotto News in Miami, which has sold more than 40,000 of the $1 tickets since last Sunday. "It's madness."

There hasn't been a winner in the drawing since Aug. 6. That boosted the jackpot with each passing week. A week ago, the jackpot was at $30 million.

"The public is going wild," said James Stephen, manager of the Stop'n'Go convenience store in Riviera Beach. "They are lined up. They are standing in line 30 minutes, an hour. It doesn't matter. It's totally crazy."

Mrs. Paul said the heavy pace of ticket sales, which may exceed 40 million for the week, could boost the jackpot above $53 million.

Mrs. Paul touts the lottery as a way to attract tourists to Florida, and people were spilling over the borders in search of tickets.

David Kelley, owner of the Interstate Lottery Courier Service in Stafford, Va., drove 700 miles to Jacksonville on Thursday to buy 4,000 tickets. By Friday evening, all the tickets were sold for $1.75 each.

Kelley was scheduled to return Saturday evening on a flight from Jacksonville with 2,300 more tickets, said his wife, Judy. "And about 700 to 800 of those are already reserved," she said. "People want that prize."

Hundreds of players also traveled from Georgia and Alabama, which do not have lottery games.

"There are times when the parking lot looks just like a drive-in theater," said Donnie Trednick, a regional manager for Jax Liquors chain. "Almost everyone's from Georgia. It's just a big social event."

Those who don't want to bet on a string of relatives' birthdays in their quest for Lotto luck can turn to other sources for their numbers.

For Lotto players at Frank Russo's Tampa newsstand, 25 cents can be put in a machine that coughs up six numbered balls. Russo also has sold out of 500 Pocket Picks, a $1.89 plastic device attached to a key chain that dispenses six pellets marked 1 through 49.

"People went nuts for them," Russo said.

Personal computer users can buy a program to select numbers randomly the high-tech way.

For $25, psychic Madame Ann will pick the digits.

"When I concentrate on the numbers for them, I may get one, two, three or 15," she said. "Unfortunately, I haven't met any psychic who could pick numbers to benefit themselves. The gift I have is to help other people with."

NATION IN BRIEF

Returning Congress faces heavy load

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress returns this week to a full agenda of budget and spending bills, Contra aid, welfare reform and anti-drug legislation, but eyeing an early adjournment so lawmakers can campaign for re-election.

The House and Senate aim to complete work by Sept. 30. All 435 House seats and 33 of the 100 Senate seats will be up for grabs on Election Day Nov. 8.

Despite the wide assortment of issues Congress has to deal with, the agenda will be chiefly driven by attempts to enact a Pentagon budget bill and 11 separate spending measures by the Oct. 1 beginning of the new fiscal year.

Only two of the 13 appropriations bills needed to finance the government have been passed and signed into law.

"Defense will certainly be the big thing that we have to agree on. I'm pretty optimistic that everything else can be worked out," Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., ranking Republican on the Senate Budget Committee, said last week.

President Reagan last month vetoed the first Pentagon budget bill sent him by the Democratic-controlled Congress because he objected to arms control restrictions and cuts in his proposed "Star Wars" budget.

The Senate has passed a second defense budget, which includes the same proposed Star Wars slashes but none of the arms control limitations.

Ex-officer seizes official

ST. LOUIS (AP) — A former police officer facing a prison term for his part in a pension fund scandal took the man who exposed the kickback scheme hostage on the 15th floor of an office building Saturday, police said.

A hostage-response team and dozens of officers surrounded the building where Anthony D. Daniele, 39, held John Frank, vice president of the city police board, police said.

Police spokeswoman Linda Hancock said the hostage-response team was negotiating with Daniele, who was armed with a weapon that was not immediately identified and was demanding to make a statement over St. Louis radio station KMOX-AM.

The incident began at 10:30 a.m.

Daniele was one of six men who received prison sentences Friday from U.S. District Judge William L. Hungate. Daniele, in addition to an eight-year term, was ordered along with the scheme's purported mastermind to make restitution of $200,000.

Hurricane threatens Hawaii

HONOLULU (AP) — Hurricane Uleki resumed its march toward the Hawaiian islands Saturday, slightly weakened but still posing a considerable threat, forecasters reported.

"We hope it will weaken, so when it gets close, it will have lost much of its punch," said meteorologist Clarence Lee of the National Weather Service.

At 8 a.m. (2 p.m. EDT) the storm was centered 325 miles south southeast of Honolulu, or 345 miles south of Lihue, Kauai, with maximum sustained winds of 110 mph and gusts to 130 mph, the weather service said.

Uleki was moving to the north at 2 to 3 mph, but that was expected to pick up slightly to about 5 mph, Lee said.

The storm had wind gusts up to 150 mph when it stalled about 360 miles south southeast of Honolulu on Friday night after making a surprise turn towards the islands earlier in the day.

Even if Hawaii is spared the storm's worst winds, Uleki probably will bring strong winds and rain to the islands sometime Sunday, Lee said.

Mars moves closer to Earth

CHICAGO (AP) — Mars will move to within about 36 million miles of Earth this month — the closest its been in 17 years — and dozens of "Mars watches" are planned to view the red planet named for the Roman god of war.

The planet will come closest to Earth on Sept. 22, but the best time to see it is the next few nights, said Norman Warns, an astronomy professor at South Suburban College in South Holland, a Chicago suburb.

"It's a perfect time to see because the moon doesn't come up until late at night," Warns said Friday. "It's a definite orange bright spot in the southeastern sky at about 10 at night."

The Planetary Society, an amateur astronomy group, plans about 50 Mars watches this month, said Linda Low, the group's Illinois regional coordinator. Thousands of smaller, informal Mars parties also will be held, she said.

On Saturday, outer-space buffs were encouraged to bring Mars bars and other earthly delights to a Mars watch, picnic and jazz concert at the college.

The last time Earth and Mars were so close was in 1971, Warns said. He said viewing conditions this time are better because the planet is much higher in the sky.

'Krushed Kitty' toy upsets humane society

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Two humane societies are urging consumers to boycott a new stuffed toy called Krushed Kitty.

The yellow-and-black striped toy — a cat's bottom with hind legs and tail — is designed to be stuck out of car doors, hoods and trunks. A card attached states that "a portion of the profits are donated to the Humane Society."

However, Phyllis Wright, a vice president with the Washington D.C.-based Humane Society of The United States, denied any connection to the item and said she doubts "any legitimate humane society would take one penny from this."

She and Gerri Bain of the Capital Area Humane Society in Columbus called on consumers not to buy the stuffed toy, which retails for $17.99.

"I think the onus is on the consumer," Ms. Wright said. "Unless the public responds in a negative way and goes to a store and threatens never to buy anything else there because of this item, nothing will get done."

The attached card does not state how much will be donated, nor whether the money will go to the national Humane Society or to local humane societies, which are privately operated and not affiliated with the national organization.

The Krushed Kritter Kompany of Kalifornia, which lists its address as Tarzana, Calif., could not be reached to comment Friday. No telephone listing was available.

The toy's packaging said the cat parts are registered in at least five states — Ohio, Maine, Pennsylvania, Florida and Texas.

The packaging urges the purchaser to "Krush your kitty in your car, work or home!" and to write to the company to "tell us your favorite place to krush your kitty. And vote for who or what you would like to see KRUSHED next."

"This will do for kittens what 'Jaws' did for sharks," Bain said. "This is not only disgusting and irreverent, but it is misleading."

Quarter million children won't return to school

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A quarter million school-age children across America won't be returning to the classroom this month.

Instead, they'll learn reading, writing and arithmetic at the same table where they eat breakfast, and Mom and Dad will be the teachers.

The U.S. Department of Education estimates more than 260,000 children are being taught at home, more than twice as many as in 1985, primarily for religious reasons.

Other motivations range from doubt about the abilities of public school teachers to shielding children from peer pressure.

"I see it as a reaction of one part of the population to the over-institutionalization of the child," said Patricia Lines, a research analyst at the Department of Education.

Red Balfour, who heads a home-schooling program for Orange County in southern California, said he gets at least five calls a day from parents interested in the growing movement.

Parents taking such action could face legal problems. Some states do not have statutes that specifically address the practice, and disputes have developed over who is qualified to teach their children at home.

The Home School Legal Defense Association, based in Great Falls, Va., provides legal advice and representation to its more than 9,000 members, said attorney J. Michael Smith, the group's vice president.

Smith said his group intervened in two cases during the 1987-88 academic year, and both were dismissed in court.

A couple in the Covina Valley district east of Los Angeles lost a case last year in which officials claimed the child didn't have structured lessons. The district also complained the parents had only a high school education.

In California, where some 2,100 home schools are registered, requirements for home teaching are vague, said Fred Fernandez, consultant for non-public schools at the state Department of Education. No statute provides guidelines for home teaching; the law mandates only that instructors be "capable of teaching," he said.

Micki and J. David Colfax of rural Boonville have become national heroes in the home school movement. Their oldest son, 23-year-old Grant, graduated magna cum laude from Harvard in 1987, and his brothers Drew, 20, and Reed, 18, now attend the university.

"I think public schools, especially high school age children, are mostly a holding operation," Mrs. Colfax said. "I think there's an enormous waste of time."

The Colfaxes, both former teachers, began teaching their children in 1973 when they moved to a ranch about 100 miles north of San Francisco. Mrs. Colfax said she wasn't impressed with the public education in the area.

Couple has Midland's first test tube baby

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Jason Foreman remembers a passing pang of feeling "left out" when he learned his child would be conceived in a test tube.

Stefani Foreman, adamant in her desire to bear a child, feared doctors would muddle the concoction and implant within her another couple's embryo.

Any twinges of seclusion Jason felt likely ebbed Aug. 19 while he stood by Stefani during her Caesarian-section delivery.

And judging from the thick cap of brown hair on Barre Keaton Foreman's tiny head, his brunet parents got the right baby.

The baby is to Midland today what Great Britain's Louise Brown was to the world 10 years ago...its first test tube baby.

Delivered at Midland Memorial Hospital by obstetrician Luis Montaldo, Keaton was five years in the coming.

Married in 1982, the couple began trying a year later in what resulted in a futile attempt to conceive a child.

"The doctor told me everything was all right and to just relax," she remembered. "But I kept thinking 'This is a bunch of bull.' "

Stefani, 26, turned to a new obstetrician, Montaldo, who diagnosed a bevy of gynecological maladies plaguing her.

Two major surgeries and two failed pregnancies later, Stefani, a Wagner & Brown secretary, and Jason, a 27-year-old auto mechanic, were still childless.

The obstetrician suggested they try "in vitro" fertilization, a process in which the sperm and egg are fused in a test tube and implanted in the woman's uterus.

Last November the Foremans trekked to Birmingham, Ala., and the IVF Australia Program at Brookwood Medical Center for preliminary testing.

"I told her that if she didn't quit smoking, we weren't going," Jason added. She did.

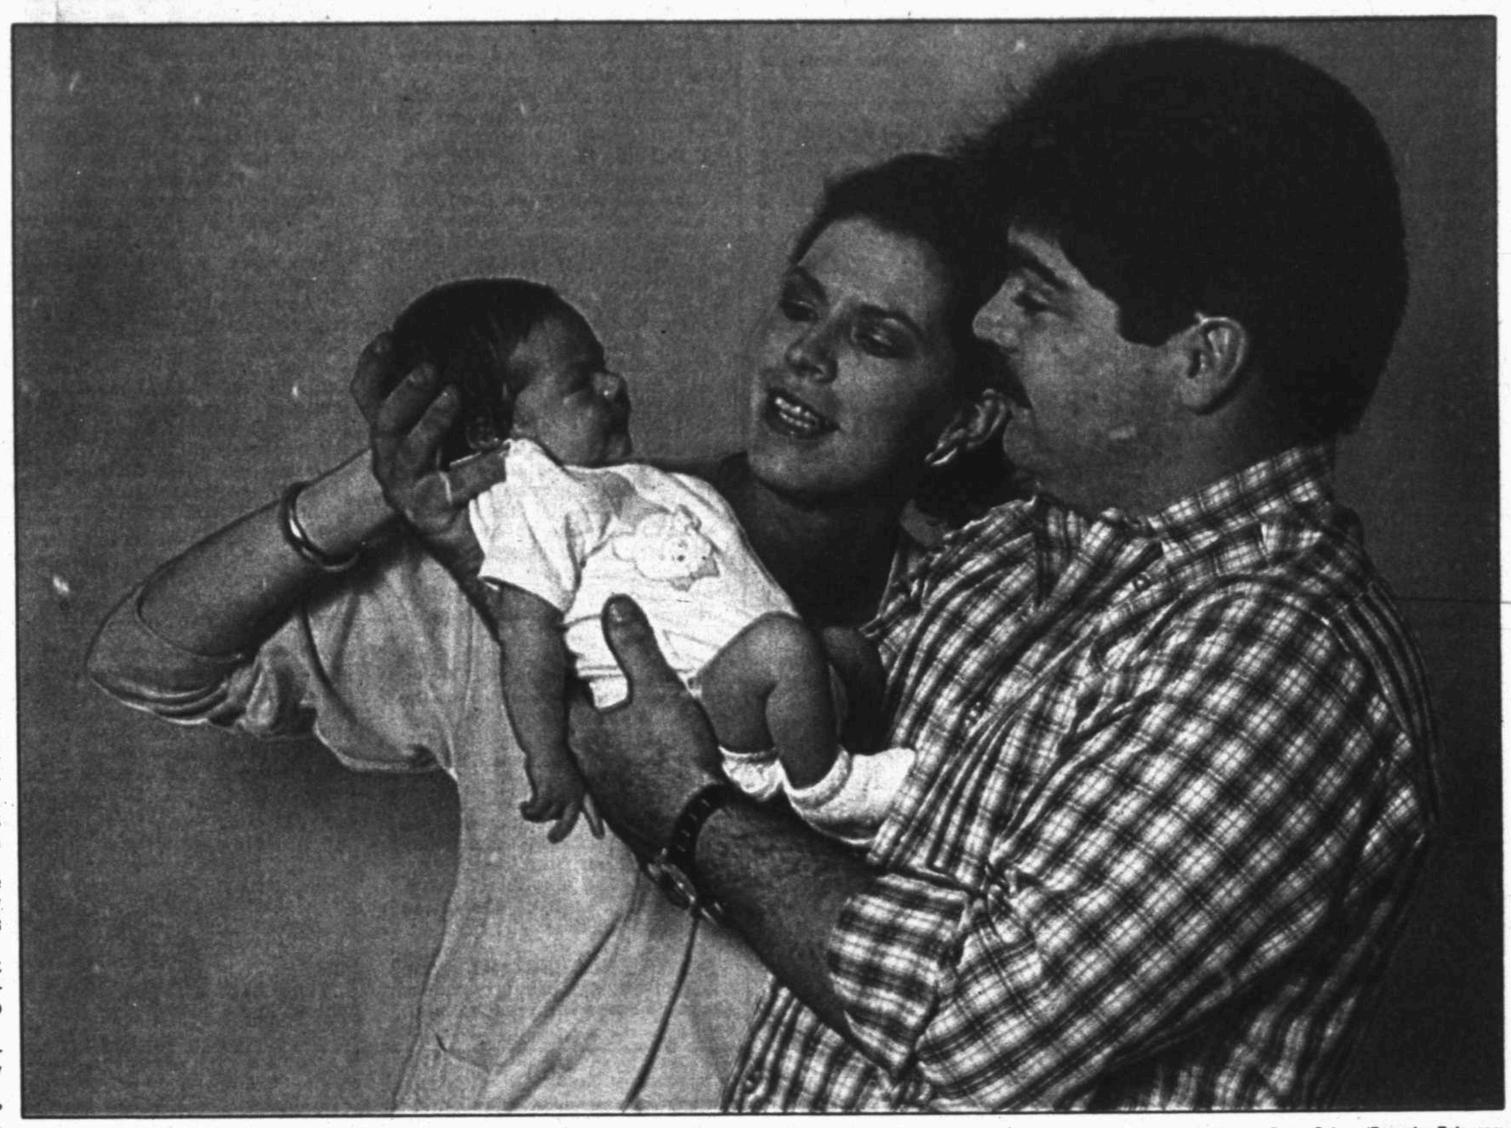

"We went to the bank and told the loan officer we wanted to borrow money to have a baby. He was great," Stefani said.

They borrowed about $7,000, but state law in Texas mandates insurance reimbursement for in vitro fertilization.

The entire process wound up costing $65 after the insurance money paid off the loan, Jason said.

"We're just plain-Jane people," Stefani added, advising couples not to think they can't afford in vitro fertilization.

Stefani and Jason Foreman rejoice at the arrival of their first child, Barre Keaton Foreman. The 16-day-old infant was the first test tube baby delivered in Midland.

Baressi one of state's top superintendents

From Staff Reports

Dr. Joseph Baressi Jr., superintendent of the Midland Independent School District, has been named by the Texas Association of School Boards (TASB) as one of the top superintendents in the state.

Baressi was included in this select group of professionals for his civic and professional involvement, communications abilities, managerial skills and educational innovations.

Each year, the TASB honors Texas' educational leaders during the organization's annual convention in San Antonio. Winners are selected from the 20 regional divisions delineated by the Texas Education Agency.

MISD is in Region 18, an area covering 33 West Texas districts.

This year, 17 superintendents were selected for recognition from Texas' more than 1,100 school districts.

In addition to Baressi, the honorees were:

— Pablo Perez, MacAllen ISD;
— Henry Herrera, Alice ISD;
— Michael Moses, La Marque ISD;
— Gifton Underwood, Montgomery ISD;
— Bill Knight, Mineola ISD;
— Carroll Tatom, Graham ISD;
— Arzell Ball, Richardon ISD;
— Elmer Russell, Little Elm ISD;
— Wayne Bingham, Breckenridge ISD;
— Tom Howard, Zephyr ISD;
— Don Taylor, Roosevelt ISD;
— Shiela McCullough-Hurtte, Daingerfield-Lone Star ISD;
— Marilyn Hoster, Temple ISD;
— Charles Bradberry, New Braunfels ISD;
— Roy Pennington, Dumas ISD; and — James Vasquez, Edgewood ISD.

McCullough-Hurtte, Hoster, Bradberry, Pennington and Vasquez have been named as finalists for the designation "Superintendent of the Year."

Baressi has served Midland schools for eight years. Prior to his present position, he held administrative and teaching assignments with Seguin and Eanes (Austin) public schools as well as in Erie, Pa., and Lockport, N.Y.

New GISD official likes rural setting

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

GREENWOOD — The Greenwood school is out in a country setting where academics, discipline, and enjoyment of life merge to produce a "top-notch rural school," said Superintendent Tim Outlaw of the Greenwood Independent School District.

"Maybe we're rural and maybe we're not," he said. "I still like to think of us as that (rural)."

And Greenwood's three "principals have put together an instructional staff that's probably second to none for a school our size," Outlaw said.

"And I really believe that. It's not a lot of hype. We have our ups and downs out here like everybody."

Greenwood, which has an enrollment of about 1,300 students from kindergarten through the 12th grade, is nine miles east of the eastern outskirts of Midland.

The Greenwood community takes in the school, churches, farms, ranches, and isolated and clustered houses. It essentially is a "bedroom" suburb of Midland — a city of almost 100,000 people.

Midland supports several private and parochial schools, a college and a public-school system which has an enrollment of almost 19,000.

"I like the idea of a rural school," said the 37-year-old Outlaw, a 14-year educator who is making his debut as Greenwood's chief administrator. "I've loved living in the rural setting," he said.

The pressures of running a rural school may be no more or no less than that of administering a school in town, he said.

"But I'm not a city person. I think our students are fortunate to have the city of Midland this close to where they can go to enjoy those things that the city has to offer. I think most of them enjoy coming home. Maybe it's slower-paced — this country life. I don't know if you can say that anymore. If you can say that, it's a plus. Things move pretty fast out here."

ONE THING which does move fast here and most places is money.

And Outlaw expects Greenwood will need about $5.4 million to fund its budget for the 1988-89 school year. The budget is more than 2 percent — $144,000 — higher than last year's budget and reflects the first teacher pay raise in three years. "We cut the budget in some places," he said.

The Greenwood school board, headed by Trustee James Brooks, is to consider the 1988 tax rate to help fund the school's budget at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in Greenwood ISD's Central Office Board Room.

Purvis latest recipient of Trimble award

From Staff Reports

Purvis

Margaret Purvis has been selected as the July recipient of the Trimble Service Award.

The award, sponsored by Leadership Midland Alumni Association and the Reporter-Telegram, recognizes citizens who best represent the spirit of volunteerism and who have contributed to the community.

Mrs. Purvis was nominated by the Social Work Department at Midland Memorial Hospital for her outstanding volunteer efforts on behalf of the hospital and the many contributions she has made to the community.

"When she and her family moved to Midland, Mrs. Purvis decided she wanted to a part of the growth and development of West Texas. Over the years she has certainly fulfilled that dream," according to a press release naming her as the monthly winner.

Mrs. Purvis began her volunteer career working one-on-one with the church group, Action Line Fish, which assisted indigent families find solutions to their needs.

Today, she is involved in leadership roles with several organizations. She is president of the Midland United Way, vice president of the Midland County Hospital District Board of Directors and active in the Midland/China sister city program. She also represents Midland and West Texas on the Legislative Task Force on Cancer, and chairs the United Way of Texas' long range planning committee.

Mrs. Purvis blazed the trail for leadership roles for women in Texas.

"Her ability to identify problem areas and find solutions have resulted in the formation of such programs as Big Brothers/Big Sisters and the Child Abuse Prevention Program," the press release said. She served on the founding boards of both organizations.

Chamber's M-Squad has fun with eight holdups

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Eight unsuspecting out-of-state motorists fell prey to local lawmen this summer in a holdup that was like no other.

No citations were issued — just a rowdy West Texas howdy.

The drivers had little choice but to accept the offer of free-night's lodging, dinner, entertainment and a full tank of gas to start them on their way the next morning.

With the help of lawmen, Midland Chamber of Commerce's M-Squad accomplished what it set out to do this summer: show out-of-towners some Midland-style hospitality.

The M-Squad staged eight holdups each Tuesday in July and August along Interstate 20 south of Midland.

"What we tried to do is spread the word that Midland is a good town to visit," 44-year-old Sue Monroe, co-boss of this summer's holdup program, said of the scheme.

The M-Squad — a 60-member team of navy-blue-jacketed men and women — are noted for their appearances at ribbon cuttings, trade shows and visits by dignitaries.

GARY OTT

Fame, wealth don't give people right to act like maniacs

Ott

Every once in awhile a television commercial will come along that grabs my attention.

Usually it has a catchy tune or the main character does something so incredibly silly that it comes off as funny. In any case, when one of those commercials appears on the screen I stop what I'm doing and become glued to the tube, even if I have seen it a thousand times before.

That's why businesses invest money on advertising. They know an effective spot — whether it is on TV or in a newspaper — can make them large sums of money in the long run. It gets the people's attention.

The latest commercial to catch my fancy is the one for a particular brand of beer. I'm sure you've seen it. Frank Sinatra sings a song while the TV cameras capture various big city scenes featuring beautiful women. In the end, the name of the beer appears on the screen. It is one of those classy commericals that appeals to sophisticiated people like myself.

The product being advertised is not my beer of choice but everytime I see the commercial I briefly consider buying a six pack of it.

Occasionally I even follow through and make the purchase. But more times than not, I don't.

The reason?

Frank Sinatra.

A couple of years ago an unauthorized biography was written about Sinatra by some woman named Kitty Kelley. Frankie — as he was known when he made young girls swoon — refused to be interviewed by the writer, but Ms. Kelley talked to numerous other people — including his friends, former associates, ex-lovers, fellow entertainers, etc. — and the picture she paints of the famous singer is not very pretty at all.

If the book is to be believed, Frank Sinatra is a little tyrant who would think nothing of having your legs broken if you did something to cross him. He surrounds himself with giant goons who make sure his every whim is satisfied.

Likewise, there have long been whispers that he has contacts with the underworld.

His temper is legandary.

Still, he apparently has his good side, too.

According to everyone interviewed, even those who don't like him, Sinatra can be one of the most generous people in the world. He has been known to give thousands of dollars to people — in many cases total strangers — who are down on their luck. He is renowned for raising money for charitable organizations and he freely gives of his time and energy.

But then something snaps.

The book is full of stories by people recalling times when Sinatra would be totally charming, complimenting everyone around him, and then suddenly flip out for no apparent reason. It might be over something as trivial as a poorly told joke. But for whatever reason, he would then fly into a rage, often directing physical violence to those around him.

It is that personality characteristic that bothers me.

I've known people who do the same thing and, frankly, they scare the you-know-what out of me.

One minute they are Mr. Nice Guy, the next they are a screaming maniac.

Oftentimes the outburst is the result of booze, but not always. Like with Sinatra, it might be something seemingly minor. Still, you can usually sense when the change is about to occur. You can see it in their eyes. They become slightly glazed and then the explosion erupts.

It can be truly frightening.

The more of the book I read, the more disgusted I became with Frank Sinatra. No amount of generosity justifies that kind of behavior. A person, no matter how rich, should not be able to act like a spoiled child and then expect to make everything OK by buying expensive gifts.

Fame and wealth shouldn't guarantee a person the right to conduct a reign of terror, no matter who that person is.

And what if Frankie sends one of his bodyguards after me?

Simple. I'll say this column was ghost written without my consent and then quickly add, "By the way, tell Mr. Sinatra he's a great American and I love his beer commercial."

Hey, I can be intimidated.

Gary Ott is city editor of the Reporter-Telegram.

HOLDUP

In promoting Midland through its pursuit of out-of-town guests, the M-Squad seemed to carry out the early stages of an arrest on the highway.

"This year we had several couples who were retirement age and actually seeking a retirement home. So, we were really able to pitch the city as a potential place to live," Ms. Monroe, owner of American Forms Inc., said.

Bill Moler, the 61-year-old owner of A-1 Office Service and the holdup's other co-boss, recalled one holdup attempt that took nine stops of potential guests to find one consenting driver.

"It's an interesting situation when the officer walks up and tells them that they didn't do anything wrong," he said.

Each family that consented to the fruits of the holdup, were treated to a night's lodging in a hotel or motel, meals and entertainment. Included in the free-for-all were tickets to a Midland Angels baseball game, viewing a movie, bowling, playing at Water Wonderland, or touring the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, Library & Hall of Fame.

Midland businesses cooperated with the M-Squad in absorbing costs associated with the holdup.

The Midland Police Department and Midland County Sheriff's Department provided the M-Squad with patrol cars to round up the eight sets of guests.

"It's a publicity stunt, but it's a lot of fun," Ms. Monroe said. "Usually, they laugh. They get tickled about it once they understand what we're doing."

That was the case with the M-Squad's first stop this year. The car was driven by a teen-ager, who had just received his learner's permit, Moler said, recalling that the youth was terrified when he thought he was going to get a traffic citation.

"He fell over the steering wheel and died laughing when it was all over," Ms. Monroe said.

At another moment, a young couple traveling through Midland from Dallas told Moler and Ms. Monroe that the M-Squad holdup had interrupted a "personal situation."

The drive had just proposed marriage to his female companion and she accepted.

"That was probably the most fun we had," Moler said.

GREENWOOD

"Nobody is happy about taxes," surmised Outlaw. "You just mention taxes and that turns everybody off."

That, he said, is quite understandable. "I'm not up here trying to gouge the public."

But "the fact of the matter is" that tax revenue is necessary to fund and to operate the Greenwood public school, Outlaw said. "Learning how to learn, learning the discipline of learning, is very important."

Greenwood's revenue comes from school-district property taxes, about $2.7 million; from state sources, about $2 million, and the balance comes from school-generated sources, such as sports gate receipts and the cafeteria.

Outlaw expects the effective tax rate to be increased by about 8 percent — the maximum allowed before the public may petition for a rollback election. The effective tax rate is that rate required to bring in the same tax revenue generated in the previous year.

The 1987 tax rate was $1.43 per $100 valuation based on 100 percent of property values in the school district's 122 square miles. Greenwood's tax base for last year was $183.6 million. The rate generated $2.6 million.

"Property values are down," Outlaw said. "The increase will be necessary. We've been steadily eroding our fund (reserve) balance" — the amount of carryover money — from $540,000 to about $320,000.

AND BECAUSE real estate and oil-and-gas property values have declined and resulted in an $11-million drop in the tax base, the effective tax rate to generate the same amount of income in 1988-89 that was generated in 1987-88 will have to be $1.5420 per $100 valuation, according to Midland County Tax Assessor-Collector Frances Shuffield, who collects Greenwood and Midland county taxes.

An 8 percent increase in the 1988 effective tax rate would be $1.615. And based on the 1988 tax base of $172 million, the rate would result in $2.78 million in revenue.

"Anything above 8 percent triggers the rollback," Ms. Shuffield said.

"We're trying to get by," said Outlaw, who said he would recommend "somewhere around" the 8 percent increase to meet the budget requirements.

Outlaw has pledged "to be as conservative as possible as far as spending" is concerned.

"There's a big difference between needs and wants," he said. "Anything they (teachers) need for the instruction of the students, we plan to supply."

Outside of paying salaries, financing bus transportation on 13 routes, maintaining the buildings and grounds, and funding extra-curricular activities, the school is obligated to pay on the "huge bonded indebtedness."

That debt came from a $7-million-plus bond issue to finance the building of a new high school, a bus barn, field house, administration building and 13 additional elementary-school classrooms. This year's payment on the indebtedness is $1.2 million.

"Times have been good here," Outlaw said. "Instruction here has been great. But times have come now where we are going to have to pay a little bit more for that to be done. The public has been very supportive."

Greenwood has "well over" 200,000 square feet of classroom space to provide its students with the "optimum learning environment and optimum instruction" by the school's 85 teachers, he said.

"AS EDUCATORS, what we do is not always exactly right," Outlaw said. "We like to make amends when it's not. We like to work together to do the things we feel will benefit the students.

"You give them and allow them everything they need to learn all they can learn — knowing that all students can learn," he said.

"You do that in the proper setting for all students...whether they be students who have difficulty learning, the average student that learns and struggles from time to time but will learn without a great deal of effort, and those students who are gifted," Outlaw said.

Outlaw described administrators as "defenders of the students and the teachers. They have to feel very strongly about what they are doing as far as curriculum, as far as discipline, and as far as instructional techniques that are used.

"They (administrators and trustees) have to be a guiding force to the teachers but at the same time a force that does not restrict the teachers in how they instruct. The teachers need to be given the opportunity to have individuality," he said.

Greenwood's three principals reflect pride in their school: Bob Pheil, the 42-year-old high-school principal; Don Dulin, the 54-year-old middle-school principal, and Hal Porter, the 39-year-old kindergarten and elementary-school principal.

"We probably do have one of the best school situations and collections of people around," Pheil said. "We are big enough to be able to expose students to knowledge and to so much more and do lots of things. We are small enough to make adjustments that need to be made. We can get things done. We are not encumbered by bureaucratic size. We've got a really positive environment."

"I'm really impressed with the quality of the educational staff," Porter said. "I have a mix of experienced and new teachers. Enthusiasm runs through the whole staff."

As did Outlaw, Dulin cited the value of extra-curricular activities — from sports and band to University Interscholastic League events and Student Council — in complementing the school's academic programs and goals.

"I feel like it's really the glue that holds the school together," Dulin said. "You have extra-curricular activities to help kids blow off steam and to learn a lot of good values and the product of work."

Students involved in activities outside the classroom "are being educated," Outlaw said. "They are learning to adjust. They are learning to get along with other people."

"I think rural schools are a fun place to be," Outlaw said. "They are an exciting place to be now."

BABY

On Dec. 8, 1987, Stefani was implanted with the embryo, and on Dec. 23 the two found out she was pregnant.

"That two weeks wait was a living hell," she said. "But we found out two days before Christmas and that was the best Christmas present in the world."

Stefani's next three months were riddled with thrice-daily blood tests that were packed in dry ice and shipped by Federal Express to the Birmingham clinic.

In addition, she injected doses of progesterone, a female hormone, to sustain the pregnancy. Today, she chuckles when she remembers the "one good vein" that remained in her left arm.

Her pregnancy was on par with any other woman's, replete with a craving for peanut butter and jelly sandwiches and bouts of morning sickness.

Because they were confident Keaton would be born healthy — "He was pretty active," Jason recalls — the two took to decorating a nursery in their West Louisiana Avenue home.

During the first three months of her pregnancy, Stefani kept all her sales receipts for maternity clothes.

"I kept thinking, 'Good God, it could happen at any time. I could lose it.' "

But God gifted the Foremans with a healthy baby, the two said.

Religious and ethical gray areas, however, continue to loom over the procedure for some.

Montaldo advocates in vitro fertilization, but claims he could not perform an embryo implantation himself.

"Infertility is a serious but treatable disorder. It is a physical condition that can have major emotional consequences that affect a person's ability to function in society," Montaldo maintains.

Nonetheless, he says he can empathize with hardliners who oppose the process because (they say) "It's not natural and it's not ethical," Montaldo said.

When the sperm and egg are joined, usually more than one embryo is created, the doctor explained.

The strongest embryo is transferred into the woman and the remainders are either frozen for later use by the couple, returned to them for disposal or donated to another couple for use.

The Foreman's didn't want another couple bearing any of their children, they said, so they disposed of the other embryos.

"I couldn't play God and say, 'This one is going to go, this one isn't' and then throw it away," Montaldo admits. "What do you do with the embryos? How are you to decide? You're not going to put them all in the patient."

The flipside of that question is that in vitro for many couples is the last resort, he said.

The couple can't conceive; they are frustrated and their expenses are eating them up, Montaldo said. For that reason, he suggests it to couples like the Foremans.

For them, members of the Church of Christ, the religious problem never gelled, the new mother explained.

Said Stefani: "I thought, who would they be to judge me?"

Their friends and family were excited the two were finally going to be able to realize their dream and did nothing but support the two, Stefani explained.

From 2.4 to 5 million couples are infertile, Montaldo said, adding that the figure represents anywhere from 8.5 to 20 percent of all married couples in the U.S.

"If this article can help one person, then it's worth it," Stefani believes. Advised the new and extremely happy mother: "Don't give up, have faith in God and keep trying."

Services for Mary Ann Cappadonna of Midland are pending at Ellis Funeral Home.

TRIMBLE

Mrs. Purvis was chairman of the United Way Government Relations Committee that secured Legislative support for the Child Protective Service, a United Way sponsored agency.

She chaired the working group that developed the Permian Basin Child Abuse Prevention Program. This group secured a year's funding, hired an executive director and became the managing board operating under the direction of the Family Services of Midland Board.

Founded in 1986, CAPP has trained teachers, families and others about child abuse prevention. The group also has worked to create public awareness and plans to begin a family outreach program.

"All of these accomplishments and goals are consistent with Mrs. Purvis' motive to bring about independence for the people, in which she voluntarily serves.

"Her commitment to Midland is evidenced by her work with many groups organizations and commissions. She worked with the Midland Planning and Zoning Commission, Permian Basin and Texas Prenatal Associations, Junior League of Midland and Texas, Midland Symphony Guild, Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Midland and Family Services of Midland and America," the press release said.

Mrs. Purvis served as a Midland Memorial Hospital trustee prior to her election to the MCHD Board of Directors in 1986. She was chairman of the Allison Cancer Committee and served on the ad hoc committee of the facility for chemical dependency.

Her grandfather and other relatives showed her the path of unselfish devotion to helping other. "The nicest rewards (when you volunteer) are the people you work with," she said.

Lawyer offers $175,000 for invention of device for hearing-impaired

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A Corpus Christi lawyer and philanthropist is offering $175,000 to anyone who will design a portable device that allows the hearing-impaired to communicate without having to use sign language, read lips or scribble notes.

William F. Wallace is willing to pay for development of a portable, computerized display screen for automatically translating a phonetic alphabet into readable words.

The challenge is to develop a computer that can understand phonetics spoken by individuals with varying voices and pronunciations and transcribe them into words, Wallace said.

"It's going to be difficult, but it can be done and it will be done," said Wallace, who lost most of his hearing while serving in World War II as an artillery officer, and later as a result of disease.

"If we don't do it, the Japanese will," he said.

Wallace, a South Texas attorney and banker who founded the Executive Audial Rehabilitation Society after losing his hearing, is offering the winning contestant $100,000 from his personal estate, plus royalties from manufacture and sale of the device.

Second- and third-place contestants would receive $50,000 plus royalties and $25,000 plus royalties, respectively, and their ideas would be incorporated into the winning design.

Although the basic technology for the device already exists in limited form, the object of the contest is to develop the first broad, practical application, Wallace said.

An estimated 17 million Americans with hearing loss severe enough to cause "speech deafness" could benefit from such a device, he said.

The committee of judges will be headed by Jack S. Kilby of Dallas, former chief of electronic development for Texas Instruments and inventor of the monolithic integrated circuit now widely used in electronic systems.

Other judges include Howard H. Arnold of Lewisville, N.C., former engineering manager for American Telephone & Telegraph; and James S. Newcomb of St. Paul, Minn., former senior research scientist for Control Data Corp.

Entry forms must be returned by Oct. 31, with designs and models received by May 1.

Although the contest began this week with the placement of advertisements in national scientific journals, contest applications already have been received from more than 50 electronics firms and individuals.

Odessa man killed in accident

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — An accident involving three Odessans left one dead and two others injured about three miles west of town at about 2:20 a.m. Saturday, according to the Department of Public Safety.

Pronounced dead at Medical Center Hospital in Odessa was James Wallace Mackey, 39, of 4706 Hereford St.

Listed in critical condition at MCH with unknown injuries was Rheta Reynolds, 40, 5910 El Paso St. Listed in stable condition at MCH with internal injuries was Larry Hugh Permenter, of 6803 N. Golder St.

DPS said Mackey was traveling west on West 42nd St., when his car slid sideways into the eastbound path of the Permenter vehicle.

According to the reports, the impact of the collision threw Mackey from the car after splitting his vehicle in half.

DPS said it appeared neither the drivers or the passenger of the Permenter vehicle were wearing seatbelts at the time.

Special Olympics swimmers participate in state meet

From Staff Reports

Midland Special Olympics ended their sports season this month with a fine performance by the swim team at the state meet held in College Station. Lead by coach Carol Gum, 11 athletes competed in the three-day event.

The past year has seen over 70 athletes compete in bowling, basketball, track and field, swimming, and softball. More than half of these athletes went on to represent Midland at state-level competition.

Special Olympics could not exist without the help of the many volunteers and businesses who have supported Midland athletes' quest for the Gold. Randy and David Isenberg of Delwood Lanes and David Rushing of Wal-Mart in Midland are honored for their outstanding contribution to Midland Special Olympics.

Randy Isenberg has supported the bowling team for many years, providing adaptive equipment like bowling ramps for wheelchair-bound athletes and serving as a clinician in training volunteer coaches throughout West Texas. David Rushing and the employees of Wal-Mart are thanked not only for their financial commitment to the local program, but also for joining Isenberg in encouraging the employment of people with mental retardation.

The new sports season has begun with the formation of softball teams in preparation for the State tournament, to be hosted by Midland in October. All people with mental retardation 10 years or older interested in playing softball are encouraged to contact the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens for further details.

MAKING YOUR FINANCES FIT

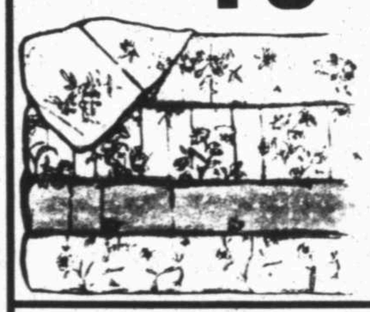

from Patteann Daniel-Beverley

Check Out Your W-4
Last year's W-4 form was designed so that you would end up having paid enough in withholding and estimated taxes that neither a large tax payment nor a refund would be necessary at filing time. The form was so complicated, though, that the IRS had to forgive some penalties for underpaid taxes.
No more. If you haven't paid 90 percent of taxes due on 1988 income before filing time (or 100 percent of taxes paid on your 1987 income), you're in for heavy penalties. If your withholding and estimated weren't right on the button, you'd be wise to file a new W-4 form with your employer.
In addition to the exemptions you can claim for yourself and dependents, you can take an extra W-4 allowance for each $2,000 of itemized deductions or other income adjustments over the standard deduction. Conversely, you may want to take off allowances to make up for outside income.

Quayle questioning should be at end

It seems that with every election that comes along these days, the news media end up getting a black eye for coverage of what most Americans would agree are legitimate matters of concern to the electorate — at least in the beginning. It happened in the recent past with investigations involving Sen. Gary Hart's relationship with Miami model Donna Rice and is happening currently with the questioning of Republican vice presidential nominee Dan Quayle.

While many people may agree that the press has a legitimate role in uncovering misconduct on the part of incumbent or potential politicians, though, what appears to concern a number of people is how far the press should go in carrying out its mission of probing allegations of improper behavior or conduct on the part of would-be public officials. The Dan Quayle controversy provides an excellent example.

Questions regarding Quayle's service in the Indiana National Guard certainly are legitimate to ascertain whether improper influence was used to get him into the guard and keep him out of military service in Vietnam. While that could have relevancy in terms of revealing where Quayle stands on the obligation of military service, it's hard to see how it could render him unsuitable for the vice presidency.

But that in itself is not the question. The question is: Did the news media "go too far" in probing into Quayle's background, eventually questioning the propriety of his entry into law school and his personal moral conduct. Feasibly it could be argued both ways. Probably, at times, the investigation became overly aggressive as news representatives battled for a toe-hold on the next day's banner headline. In that regard, many Quayle supporters would agree the media went overboard in pursuing a story that, to this point, has revealed little of consequence to the presidential election.

On the other hand, an entirely different group of Americans would not agree that too much heat was placed on Quayle, citing the intensive inquiry of Hart. While the two cases are vastly different in their natures, the point still must be made that whether the media went too far with either Quayle or Hart depends on whose ox is being gored.

There's no question about who's doing the goring, of course. It's "the media" and because of the nature of what it must do to get the facts to the public, it often comes out the loser regardless which way the stories go.

Too often the public seems to forget that it is for them that the media carries out its constitutionally-protected right to question those seeking and in public office. Reporters represent the public at news conferences and because citizens often can't be there to ask probing questions, they must ask them, like it or not, so that no stone is left unturned. From time-to-time that probing may make the media seem more of an attack dog than a watchdog, and threaten to turn politics and the press into an adversarial relationship. But it helps to keep the American electorate the most informed in the world and that's the point of it all. Few would like or appreciate a docile, submissive press.

How far should the press go? Far enough to conclude that all the facts have been laid before the public. Then the decision becomes the public's responsibility.

The Dan Quayle questions should be laid to rest now. The purpose has been served and Quayle has stood the political test of fire. The American people are once again the winners by getting a candidate who has withstood intense questioning and remains a viable nominee.

JACK ANDERSON

FDIC boss gets tough with Wall Street

WASHINGTON — William Seidman, the chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., spends his vacations at his New Mexico ranch, hangs Indian art on his office walls, wears cowboy boots and bicycles to work. He once suggested, only half in jest, that Ivan Boesky should get the death penalty for insider trading. William Seidman has a very low tolerance for greed.

Jack Anderson

It took this cowboy to put a stop to the shameless profiteering by Wall Street speculators circling like buzzards over failing banks.

Seidman is the former business school dean at Arizona State University, where he instituted an ethics curriculum long before Harvard knew there was an ethics crisis. He built one of the largest public accounting practices in the country and was a key economic adviser to President Ford.

He is in the headlines currently for throwing the noose around the necks of speculators who might have profited from the recent collapse of the largest insolvent banking organization in Texas, First RepublicBank Corp.

"It's a rare day when the money men on Wall Street earn a well-deserved lesson from government bureaucrats," one FDIC official told to our associate, Michael Binstein. If nothing else, he added, the well-heeled speculators, who hold out their hands when Uncle Sam protects the depositors at failing banks, have learned a lesson — "not to play chicken with the FDIC."

Seidman has dealt with hundreds of bank failures during his three years as head of the FDIC. All the while, he has been a model of calm, rarely showing irritation. But the one burr under his saddle, as he has attempted to save banks and their depositors, has been the slick Wall Streeters who were finding ways to cash in on the crisis.

Their tactic is to gamble on bonds. Banks issue bonds to raise equity, and when a bank looks like a losing proposition, the bond holders start selling at bargain prices. The Wall Streeters step in and buy the bonds, gambling that the FDIC will pull the bank from the jaws of death and make their investment profitable again. In addition, if the bank is reorganized instead of allowed to fail, the bond holders must agree to the arrangements.

According to FDIC officials, these speculators don't care about the bank's depositors. And their attempts to profit from misfortune by grabbing a chunk of the FDIC's financial assistance are costly to the agency's depositor insurance fund.

These profiteers were also imperiling Seidman's efforts to maintain stability in a financial system that has experienced its darkest period since the 1930s.

What one official called the "final straw" occurred earlier this summer. The FDIC was working with a group of investors willing to finance the rehabilitation of First City Bancorporation of Houston. With nearly $11 billion in deposits to protect, the FDIC built a life-support system involving billions of dollars in government aid and additional cash from the new investors.

Seidman's aim was to protect the depositors by saving the bank, but he didn't want to do any favors for the bank's owners who failed to keep it solvent. His view was that the owners should contribute to the rescue, not benefit from it.

The new investors had to cut a deal with the profiteering bond holders. An FDIC official told us the bond holders "let the FDIC know they would hold the deal hostage unless they were paid a hefty profit on their investment. They were gambling on history, which suggested the FDIC would never let such a large bank fail."

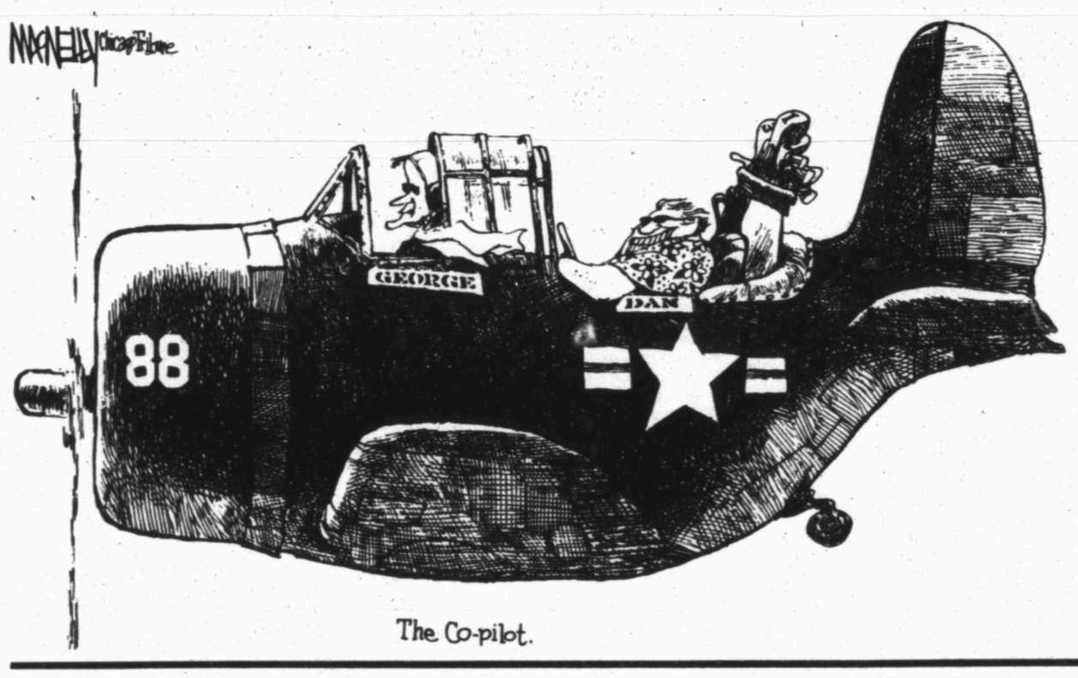

They were right, but maybe for the last time.

After saving First City Bancorporation, Seidman turned around and faced another Texas titan, First RepublicBank of Dallas, the biggest in the state. It once again looked like bond holders would hold a gun to the FDIC's head, particularly since First Republic was nearly three times the size of First City with $30 billion in deposits and the FDIC certainly wouldn't allow it to collapse.

But, Seidman had a surprise for everyone. Regulators declared the 40 banks of First Republic insolvent, shutting out the shareholders and eliminating the chance for legal extortion. Then First Republic was transferred to a federally chartered bridge bank that will receive $4 billion in federal assistance.

By treating the bond holders like stock holders who have no guarantees for their investment, Seidman closed the trough where Wall Street hogs had been feeding.

GEORGE F. WILL

Nevada senatorial seat not yet 'hatched'

RENO, Nev. — The referee should blow a whistle, throw a flag and assess a 15-yard penalty for piling on. At the bottom of the pile is Chic Hecht (R-Nev.), struggling to hold his Senate seat. But a funny thing is happening to him on his way to oblivion. He is climbing back into contention by being ridiculed excessively.

George F. Will

True, it is a short commute from his current standing to oblivion. Few Americans have heard of him. However, the Wall Street Journal has noticed Hecht.

It recently ran a merry article making fun of him as "a barrel of gaffes" and the Senate's Rodney Dangerfield who gets no respect. The article noted that early in his term, some congressmen and staffers did not recognize him as a senator (whose gaffes were those?), that he once said he debated a Soviet official about "diametric materialism," that when he was asked to name his closest Senate friends he cited Oklahoma's "Bob Nickles," whose name is Don.

The Journal noted, with asperity, that Hecht rarely speaks in the Senate and, worse, did not have an amendment voted on in his first three years. The Journal says Hecht does not walk with "the purposeful gait and stiff posture" preferred by senators. He is the shortest senator (5 feet, 5 inches) and has a lisp.

The Journal calls him "a press secretary's nightmare." His press secretary, who is a senator's nightmare, says Hecht's colleagues "either ignore him or ridicule him." The Journal sees unseriousness in the fact that he lives in a Washington hotel and has no car there. Hecht, brandishing a fistful of subway fare cards, says he can read on the subway.

Hecht knows the advantage of not being noticed. He was an undercover intelligence agent in Eastern Europe in the 1950s. And there are 10, maybe 14 folks in Elko and Tonopah and other Nevada towns who do not read the Journal as often as they should and who are not scandalized by the fact that Hecht has not blended in back East.

Nevada has nursed many grudges against the East. Against the wishes of many Nevadans, who feared higher taxes, it was made a state in 1864 because Lincoln wanted more votes to pass the Thirteenth Amendment. When the exhaustion of the Comstock lode caused the population to decline, Easterners called Nevada a "rotten borough." Now the national government wants to put a nuclear waste repository in Nevada that Hecht, inevitably, has called a "waste suppository."

This year's presidential campaign, which is miniature enough, appears in miniaturized form in Nevada's Senate race, which is relentlessly negative. Hecht's opponent, the popular Gov. Richard Bryan, can be caustic, as when he said that now more than ever Nevada needs two senators, and that Hecht can't find the key to the Senate men's room. Hecht shoots back, saying Bryan has raised taxes and his salary, has spent $3 million on an airplane and is ripping off the electorate by trying to leave the governorship in mid-term.

Their first joint appearance was last week at Reno's Rotary Club, which opened with a Pledge of Allegiance, a ceremony that stirred Hecht to proclaim how glad he is that he lives in Nevada, not Massachusetts, because here he can recite the pledge. Then he read part of a long list of labor-union contributions that comprise 42 percent of Bryan's war chest. He paused when he came to the Seafarers Union on his list, to say that he knows of no Nevada seaport. He says "out-of-state labor bosses" are trying to "buy" a senator. He reads a long list of labor's liberal legislative proposals and demands to know Bryan's stand on them.

Bryan ignores the challenge. Like Michael Dukakis and many other Democrats these days, Bryan is a rhetorical kleptomaniac. He sounds like a hard-shell Republican, deploring deficits and advocating a constitutional amendment requiring a balanced budget.

Hecht was a Reagan delegate to the 1968 — yes, 1968 — convention. Bryan does a Dukakisian dance, pirouetting away from what he disdainfully calls "ideology," meaning talk about liberalism and conservatism. He prefers to talk about his competence.

In 1980 and 1984, Nevada gave Reagan large majorities. But Republicans failed to hold Paul Laxalt's Senate seat when he retired in 1986. And Hecht, who slipped in with a 6,000-vote majority in 1982, has been far behind in polls.

But because he has shown some teeth, and because his disdainers have been a bit too dismissive, Chic Hecht's Senate seat is a chicken that Democrats should not count before it is hatched.

George F. Will is a columnist for Washington Post Writers Group.

STEVE LEVINE

State political bosses measuring 'coattails'

AUSTIN — First off, the easy part. The Democrats will control the Texas Senate next year no matter what happens on Election Day.

Levine

Only 15 of the 31 Senate seats are up for grabs this year. The remaining 16 senators, all in the middle of their four-year terms, break out as 13 Democrats and three Republicans.

In eight of the 15 races, the candidates are running without opposition. They include veteran senators such as Democrats Carl Parker of Port Arthur and Carlos Truan of Corpus Christi and Republicans Ike Harris of Dallas and Buster Brown of Lake Jackson. Two other Democratic incumbents also have a free ride.

The other two spots will bring fresh faces to the Senate, both Democrats. State Rep. Bill Haley of Center won the Democratic primary in District 3 to replace retiring Sen. Roy Blake of Nacogdoches. And in Central Texas' District 24, former Rep. Temple Dickson of Sweetwater upset veteran Sen. Grant Jones of Temple in the Super Tuesday primary.

The only question remaining for Nov. 8 is the depth of the Democratic control and whether it will remain over the magic two-thirds mark. Although 16 votes constitute a majority in the upper chamber, Senate rules require two-thirds support — 21 votes — for a bill to pass.

The seven contested races feature one Republican and four Democratic incumbents looking for re-election and two open seats, both now held by the Democrats. Officials from both parties say the length of the Texas coattails at the top of the tickets — GOP presidential candidate George Bush and Democratic vice presidential contender Lloyd Bentsen — will play a major role.

Fred Meyer, chairman of the state Republican Party, expects Bush to help other Republican candidates in his adopted home state, especially because of the party's growth in the past 10 years. Meyer also believes the conflict between Bentsen and Democratic presidential nominee Michael Dukakis on several issues actually shortens Bentsen's potential coattails from his earlier position solely as a candidate for re-election to the U.S. Senate.

"He doesn't help anybody down the ballot," Meyer says. "He hurts them."

Ed Martin, executive director of the Texas Democratic Party, says Bentsen's coattails are longer now, especially with conservative Democratic local elected officials. "They're willing to get up there and stand on the dias with the national ticket," Martin says.

Here's a capsule look at some of the seven races:

■ District 26, San Antonio: GOP incumbent Cyndi Taylor Krier vs. Democratic challenger Nef Garcia. Although Meyer says he feels "very good" about holding this seat, Martin says Garcia can recapture the seat for the Democrats with a strong Hispanic turnout.

■ District 30, West Texas: Democrat Steve Carriker of Roby and Republican Bobbie Albert of Wichita Falls in a rematch of the Aug. 13 special election Carriker won 60-40. Carriker won all 30 counties in this rural district, and Martin says voters blame the Republicans for the decimated farm economy.

■ District 31, Panhandle: Republican Teel Bivins of Amarillo vs. Democrat Mel Phillips of Amarillo in the race to replace retiring Democrat Bill Sarpalius of Canyon. Meyer calls this district the most Republican in the state and says Bivins' fundraising machine will help him overcome the Democrats' decision to give extra help to Phillips. "That's going to be a war," says Martin.

Calling the 'unlate' late can be grave error!

NEW YORK — Every time I mention Adm. Arleigh A. Burke in this column, I get two or three things terribly wrong.

For this reason I have been hesitant to report that Admiral Burke, a hero of World War II, is alive.

Russell Baker

I do so now only on the testimony of several reliable witnesses, including L. Edgar Prina, a veteran newsman whose trustworthiness I have respected for 30 years. "Very much alive," Prina says of Admiral Burke, whom I had called "the late" Admiral Burke.

This was not the only error committed in a column mentioning the admiral.

An effort to set things right in a second column produced yet more error and persuaded me I was the victim of a strange curse which doomed me to get everything wrong the instant I wrote the words "Admiral Burke."

Having recently seen "The Manchurian Candidate," I am still uneasy.

The pathetic victim in that movie has only to open a deck of cards and see the Queen of Diamonds to fall completely under the evil power of perverted Chinese Communist brain control and start killing people he would normally be content to dismiss with a sneer.

Of course, the poor devil has been kidnapped during the Korean War, hauled off to Manchuria and brainwashed by experts to go off the scope every time he sees the Queen of Diamonds.

The parallel between his predicament and mine was troubling. Every time I wrote the words "Admiral Burke," I lost control of my own mind and started committing errors galore.

I have never been in Korea, but in 1961 I did spend several weeks at a diplomatic conference in Geneva attended by the Chinese Communists.

I remember attending their news briefings. The Chinese smoked cigarettes incessantly. In rooms smokier than an old Bette Davis movie, I nodded.

At least I thought it was only a nod. But who knows? There has to be some explanation for this Admiral Burke business.

Calling him "the late" was the worst error of all, for I took an oath 20 years ago never to call anyone "the late" and believe I kept it inviolate until the words "Admiral Burke" leaped off my keyboard.

The vow was occasioned by an article in which I referred to the creator of Dick Tracy as "the late Chester Gould."

Gould, of course, was not a bit "late."

I was properly castigated as a shoddy example of a newspaperman who didn't even bother to find out who was late and who was unlate.

And quite right, too. So I swore off "the late." Why newspapers are so fond of it is a question some candidate for the Ph.D. in Pompous Prose might well explore in an exhaustive piece of research.

No journalist, after all, ever feels tempted to write of "the late Aristotle," "the late King Henry VIII," or "the late Thomas Jefferson."

Why should a humdrum, ordinary, run-of-the-mill journalistic mind, alighting on an Adm. Arleigh Burke or a Chester Gould, instinctively prefix the distinguished man with "the late"?

After the Chester Gould gaffe, I developed a theory. It concerned the nature of fame.

People who become famous when we are young often drop out of public sight and mind as we become older than they were in their time of glory.

Growing old ourselves, we tend to look back through a psychological distorting mirror on our youth as a time long ago, far away, and quite dead and gone.

By association, the people we remember as famous in that remote past tend to become dead for us, too.

If, writing away, we think of one of them whom we have not thought about in a long time — say, Max Baer, Richard Barthelmess, H.V. Kaltenborn — we are likely to assume he is dead and gone, gone with the wind that robbed us of our youth and our gods.

Well, it's only a theory. Still, note that Aristotle, Henry VIII and Thomas Jefferson, who have no meaning in our childhood outside the schoolroom, never suffer from being called "the late."

In short, my theory holds that in thoughtlessly, carelessly applying "the late" to long-forgotten giants of our youth, we are actually acknowledging the death of ourselves when young.

Of course, we mustn't overlook the journalist's frequent need to say very little at great length and to sound solemn while doing so.

Both goals are served by throwing in a superfluous "the late" while trying to think of something sensible and useful to write.

Anyhow, I apologize to Admiral Burke. He is a destroyer man and a hero. I was in the airplane Navy.

My greatest deed was creating a beautiful shower of sparks by forgetting to put my wheels down for landing one night. Figures, doesn't it, admiral?

For some, fear became reality as Delta flight crashed

Modisett

Everyone is afraid of something — the dark, elevators, heights, closed spaces and, yes, flying. For 107 people on Delta Airlines Flight 1141, the nightmare became reality earlier this week at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport.

We've all read the stories by now and seen the crash scene depicted on television news reports. We've heard how the plane failed to gain altitude on takeoff and crashed back to the ground, breaking in half and bursting into flames.

And we've all breathed a sigh of relief that 94 of the passengers survived the crash, while only 13 died. I say only because it's truly remarkable that even that many are alive today.

We've marveled at the untiring efforts of rescue workers and how, in the midst of such a tragedy, people could remain so calm.

Yet the most revealing story to come out of the accident, for me, was the one told by Robert D. Anderson, an engineer who lives in Dallas and was aboard Flight 1141. In a copyrighted Dallas Morning News article, he recounted the fateful takeoff attempt and how he and other passengers reacted to the crash.

Then he concluded the article with this comment: "I'll fly again. You can't do business in Texas without flying. I was in a bad car crash in 1967, and you've got to get back in and drive again."

That's a sobering thought. How can anyone walk away from a plane crash in one breath and admit that he will fly again in the next?

Personally speaking, I don't like to fly. I realize that many people do and some fly frequently, even weekly, but for me flying is worse than a walk through a roomful of rattlesnakes and scorpions barefooted.

It has something to do, I think, with not being in control of my own destiny while I'm in the air. At those times, your life's in some other human's hands. When something goes wrong on a flight, a person's options for getting out alive are considerably reduced. And I do like plenty of options.

Still, Anderson's comment contains a great amount of truth. Flying offers the best alternative for moving the most people around the nation or the world in the shortest time. In today's fast-paced society, mobility is money. To succeed in business, therefore, an individual needs to fly.

Perhaps there's some type of perverse fatalism in the admission that our society has molded us into beings who must place our lives in the control of others if we are to succeed. But hasn't it always been that way, to a degree? I've read all the statistics that show flying is a safe form of transportation and I agree with them. The problem for me is that I simply don't like to fly.

Robert Anderson says he'll fly again. I'm certain I will too. There are risks in life that must be taken, if life is to be meaningful and complete. Flying is one of them. But we should take time to mourn the dead and grieve for our society's terrible "cost."

Tragedy shows how much Midlanders care

Tragedy struck again in our hometown, Midland; the horrible accident that happened to the Boys' Club of Midland Inc. involving 14 of our children, one of our staff and two volunteers. Again our community responded with concern, warm compassion, care, donations and especially prayers.

We are still in shock. For the past 20 years Nick has been involved with children and young people through the YMCA and the Midland Boys' Club. The care, safety, and well-being of our children have always been my husband's profession and his primary concern. Never have we experienced such a nightmare, but we hope and pray that this will pass. It will always be part of our lives. With time the wounds will heal, but the scars will always be there.

Our deepest condolences go to the families involved in this tragedy.

We will live forever grateful to the caring volunteer Board of Directors of the Boy's Club of Midland Inc. for their total unselfish dedication to serve our youth; to my employer NCNB Texas National Bank, my dear co-workers, the Trust Department, Midland Banking Center and my boss, Bill J. Hill, for their loving support to us during this tragedy; to the Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, the Midland Angels, the Midland Lions Clubs, the Midland YMCAs, Karens, our dear friends who called us on the telephone from Midland, Brownsville, Houston, Dallas, El Paso and Indiana; to my friend Vangie, our neighbors, parents, children and, always, supporting family; to the Class of 1963 who were the first ones to donate $350 to the relief fund; to all the Boys' Clubs in Texas and the U.S.A. who have sent their condolences through numerous cards signed by all the members of their clubs and for their generous donations; to all of the churches, ministers, and priests of Midland for remembering us in their church services and prayers; to all of the people who sent flowers and food; to the news media who shared with us very frustrating moments, to our police department and sheriff's department for their professional support and super-effective assistance, to all of the volunteers from Sweetwater, Abilene, Lubbock and towns around Midland for their support and help in time of need; to the Midland Softball Association, the Victims Assistance Program, First City National Bank and their volunteer officers; to the Midland Reporter-Telegram and Ed Todd; and to all other organizations in Midland and outside Midland which are too numerous to list; to the entire Midland, Texas community: "Thank you and God bless you."

Airmen who served at Nagoya, Japan, sought

I am trying to locate former Air Force members who served at Nagoya, Japan, after World War II, and are now residents of Texas. A reunion in San Antonio is being planned and we would like to have maximum participation.

Those who served at Nagoya or the Komaki Airdrome between 1946 and 1959 are invited to attend. For more information, contact me at 206 Lemonwood Ave., Universal City, TX. 78178 or telephone (512) 658-1579. Please include unit and dates of assignment.

Texans should focus on Bentsen, not Quayle

I resent the term draft-dodger being applied to Sen. Danforth Quayle. Had Quayle set out to dodge the draft, he could have gone to Sweden or Canada. But no — he took the legal option of serving his country in the National Guard, a reputable branch of the armed services, while at the same time completing his education. In my opinion, this was far from a cowardly or evasive action. He became trained and was willing to be called into front line duty should an emergency require that the Indiana Guard be needed.

Furthermore, I have no trouble equating Sen. Quayle's National Guard service and his desire for a strong national defense, which some call a hawkish stance. He is a patriotic American who was willing to serve in an unpopular war but now uses his political expertise in the hopes of assuring American citizens that there will never again be another Vietnam War.

Since the media has nothing better to do than question a man's patriotism, I suggest they put their teeth into a real issue — the Bentsen tax. They might discover that the vice presidential candidate on the Democratic ticket is not the conservative they are striving so hard to establish. Had it not been for Sen. Lloyd Bentsen's vote for cloture, we would not have been strangled by the Windfall Profits Tax which the Wall Street Journal (Dec. 18, 1979) rightfully named the Bentsen tax. Fifty billion dollars has been taken from the oil industry; that's a lot of money that could have been reinvested or even socked away for the recession in the oil industry that ultimately came.

It is interesting to wonder how many hard-hit independents and individuals might have survived had they been allowed to keep that which ended up in Washington in the form of the Bentsen tax. Sen. Bentsen's voting record is neither conservative nor patriotic. He has not served his state nor the nation which depends upon a healthy oil industry in an honorable way.

Economic truth will give lie to GOP claims

Now that we have just experienced a week of the Republicans distorting the record of the Reagan-Bush administration, it is time for the truth to be told.

Since 1981, the ranks of the poor have increased by 6,300,000. The poverty rate at 13.6 percent of the population remains unacceptable. Currently, the U.S. has over 365,000 people living below the poverty level with 25 percent of them being children.

The Reagan-Bush administration has never submitted a balanced budget in its eight attempts.

The Reagan-Bush administration piled up a $230 billion deficit in 1986. In comparison, Jimmy Carter's largest deficit was $73.8 billion in 1980. The total of all the Reagan-Bush budget deficits is about $2 trillion. The total of all the administrations before the Reagan-Bush was $900 billion.

Over 60 percent of the new jobs created by the Reagan-Bush administration pay less than $7,000 a year. These jobs typically offer no benefits and little security.

In six years, the U.S. has gone from the world's biggest creditor ($120 billion in the black in 1981) to the world's biggest borrower ($260 billion in the red in 1987). The total debt owed to foreigners is expected to approach a trillion dollars in the next two years.

From 1981 to 1985, federal housing assistance was cut by $1.8 billion. Aid to Families with Dependent Children was cut by $4.8 billion, child nutrition was cut by $5.2 billion and food stamps were cut by $6.8 billion. The infant mortality rate is on the rise while programs such as WIC are having their budgets cut for the sake of the Defense Department.

Do not allow these insensitive and shortsighted policies to continue. In November we will have the opportunity to elect a president who cares about the future, not just the present. The choice is clear; vote for Michael Dukakis for president. Your children's and our country's future depends upon it.

We need to send strong 'no' on bond election

On Sept. 17, please join me in voting no in the bond election. The demands of city officials are not realistic, nor necessary.

We should send a tremendous, vocal "no" for upgraded communications, and an even louder "no" for additional parks!

The very successful Jessica McClure rescue verified the adequacy of city radio equipment, which was thoroughly tested during those dramatic three days, and came out faultless.

The equipment they want is very sophisticated, presently installed in only a few large cities. It's an unnecessary luxury that can be done without and the price of which is certain to come down in the future.

The city's radio system has room for expansion, if needed. Various departments do talk to each other now, as well as with the sheriff, the state police, and monitor the national weather channel.

Every year the city holds an "emergency disaster" which is covered by the media. Communications are severely tested, but not once has there been an official complaint about faulty radios. Vote no for new radio communications!

There is less reason to expand and improve the park system. Those we have are beautiful; but they are also sparsely used. Dennis the Menace park seems the only one in high use. Others are mostly vacant.

What about sharing school playground facilities with the baseball and soccer players? Install lights if needed. School crews already cut the grass and do maintenance. Not only would building parks be avoided but present underused facilities will carry their share.

High school tennis courts are open to public night-time use. Why not other play areas?

Your editorial stated "according to officials" then "the city's figures." This seems a one-sided basis to make such a strong pitch for bond passage. It also fails to say how many years the added expense of paying off the bonds will go on for.

Please join me in discussing the election with other citizens and ask them to express their feelings and send letters to the newspaper. Only streets and drainage should be passed. Anything else should be rejected.

Lincoln last GOP leader to lead U.S. in wartime

I wonder how many people know that we have never been in war with a Republican president since Lincoln, who voted against the war.

'Freedom of speech' cover for sick ideas

In reply to Mr. Shipley's letter of Aug. 28 and his enraged sensibilities, I would simply like to say that if he spent 20 years in the armed services to protect the right of those who lie and deceive and take the liberty to portray the One I worship as my Lord and Savior as a lunatic, wimp, and a man of sin, full of lust, then I think Mr. Shipley was possibly serving for the wrong ideals.

I, for one, am tired of "freedom of speech" used as a catch-all for every creep to display his sick imagination to everyone ignorant enough to listen. This old argument has been used to exploit everything God has given to man, including, I might add, child pornography. Now, it is used to attack the very God who created us.

Just as Mr. Shipley wants the right to judge for himself, I want the right to protest lies and filth. Unlike Mr. Shipley, I do not reserve the right to judge for myself, but bow before a higher authority, whom I believe is quite clear about the life and person of Jesus Christ, and does not include the imaginings of the "Last Temptation."

It is sad that today everyone is so afraid to protest or speak out against anything they feel is wrong for fear of being labeled "book burners" or narrow-minded, or horror of horrors, a fundamentalist Christian. At the risk of further enraging Mr. Shipley's sensibilities, I am thrilled to see that Christians have united on this issue and have the backbone to risk the mockery and scorn of others to protest this piece of filth.

Bush's child care tax won't help the needy

The latest Silver-Foot-In-The-Mouth Award: Imagine! George Bush wins it again...wins again-...wins again.

In the latest faux pas, George Bush's Ivy League "Let Them Eat Cake Syndrome" (Marie Antoinette 1755-93) has erupted again.

"Poor George is proposing a piddling $1,000 Child Care Tax Credit Package for impoverished parents (mostly single heads of household). Sounds good to people who are blissfully innocent about tax credits, but an impoverished single parent means exactly that, and he or she won't even have enough income to qualify for as much as a $200 annual cash savings (and probably zero) from this latest proposal of his."

Big deal! Thanks for nothing, George.

With the whole IRS national office staff at his beck and call, how in the name of Pee-wee Herman could he possibly come up with something as ridiculously simple-minded as this?

It is just like the Disability Tax Credit, whereby the Reagan-Bush Administration's so-called adjustment eliminated the Disabled Veteran's established tax savings by imposing criteria by which no longer does anyone qualify.

See now why that nice, young, and slim Barbara Bush's husband is usually silent?

He ought to be.

Photograph showed poor taste, judgment

I am writing to object to what I consider very poor taste and judgment. Last Sunday in the Reporter-Telegram's photographic supplement, we were treated to the photograph of a young man using the bathroom at a local restaurant. This is not something I wish to see.

Surely your photographers can find more representative and more appropriate subjects than what goes on in the men's room. But it does cause me to wonder — what was your photographer doing with his camera in the men's room anyway?

ETA added to water supply in Midland

I was pleased to read Kendra Benson's letter to the editor concerning the lack of concern of "old" Midlanders on the tax hikes. What Kendra does not know is about ETA (essence of tax apathy) that is being added to the Midland water supply. That's what makes it taste so bad.

This all started a long time ago. The City Council hired an outside consultant firm to advise them on how to best work with all taxing agencies. This firm showed them how to join with other county and municipal agencies and advised them to contract with yet another outside firm that specialized in water additives to achieve behavioral modification. This they did.

Now you see the results. You may ask, "If the City Council members, county commissioners, school board members, and the hospital board drink the water for so long, how come they want to raise taxes?" The answer is obvious. They drink bottled water. They even hired an outside consultant firm to advise them to transport Midland water to the Shrimp Boat in Odessa just in case the level of ETA in the Midland diner's blood stream was diluted.

This firm also advised them not to worry about the Roskie Club or the Ace of Clubs as very little water was being consumed on their premises. I strongly suspect that the members of the taxing agencies are also using bottled water in their automobile radiators. I am thinking about hiring a consultant firm to check this out.

Kendra should know it will be OK to mingle with the natives, but don't drink the water.

Reagan's SDI program may soon be expanded to allies

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — There was good news on several fronts this past week concerning President Ronald Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative program.

One of the most remarkable developments is the move underway to extend that program to defense of Japan, the Philippines, Europe and possibly Israel.

A Defense Department spokesman informed Joe Kingsbury Smith, our national editor in Washington, that the Pentagon's Strategic Defense Initiative Office expects to sign contracts within the next couple of months with private missile building companies to develop a plan for defending countries in the Pacific Basin, Europe and the Middle East against attack by tactical ballistic missiles.

The plan envisages the use of nonnuclear missiles and kinetic energy weapons to intercept tactical missiles. The KEW weapons are high-speed guided projectiles that destroy their targets by smashing into them.

About 70 companies have requested copies of SDIO's proposal which calls for designs of weapons to intercept and destroy tactical ballistic missiles. The Pentagon will not disclose the number of bids received, but only one or two contracts are likely to be awarded. However, a contract may go to a team of seven or eight companies who will cooperate on the study.

"There would be a primary bidder," the spokesman said. "For instance, possibly Lockheed. Very often, a company teams with other companies to gain the necessary expertise. Purpose of the architecture study is to produce a concept or design for defending the western Pacific Basin against tactical ballistic missiles, especially submarine-launched ones. However, the concept could be applicable to theater defense generally, whether that be the Mid-East, Europe, or wherever."

The SDIO has already awarded a contract to Israel to produce a theater defense concept for a new missile system it has developed. "We are paying 80 percent and Israel is paying 20 percent for an actual test of that missile," the spokesman said.

Studies made by companies whose bids are accepted will include whether the defense system against tactical missiles should be ground-based, the most likely mode, or sea-based, or even, a remote possibility, space-based.

One of the most interesting aspects of the SDIO project is that the anti-missile missiles may be built in Japan and other countries which are not bound by the Soviet-American Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty. Under a strict interpretation of the latter, building such missiles in this country would be prohibited.

I asked Joe to check the significance of this SDIO project with my good friend Lt.Gen. Dan Graham (Ret.), director of High Frontier, the Washington-based organization devoted to support of President Reagan's historic decision in 1983 to change U.S. strategy from Mutual Assured Destruction to Assured Survival.

Dan said our allies, particularly Japan, definitely need protection from submarine-launched tactical ballistic missiles, adding that "once you make the commitment to ground-based strategic defense, it will be logical to reinforce that with a space-based system."

Since the U.S. is the only western ally which has signed an ABM treaty with the Soviets, Gen. Graham believes there is nothing to prevent Japan and other allies from building and deploying non-nuclear, purely defensive interceptor missiles.

"The Japanese themselves have told me," he added, "that the great thing about SDI is that it doesn't offend their Constitution (which prohibits possession of offensive weapons) nor does it agitate the nuclear malaise of Japan."

The other good news about SDI is that Vice President Bush has re-asserted his strong support for development, testing and deployment of that system to defend America against nuclear attack. His commitment to space-based testing was questioned because he told the N.Y. Times recently that full deployment would be "very expensive" and any decision about it would depend on further research.

Gov. Michael Dukakis also has backed away from his previous position that "we don't need SDI" and now supports continued research.

"Apparently," Gen. Graham said, "they have heard something from their polling people that they could have found out by reading Bill Hearst's column — that a majority of the American people support SDI."

Timely Tips
Tips for Supporting Trees
•Make the stakes as short as possible but tall enough to hold the tree upright.
•Tie the trunk at only one level, near the tops of the stakes, to allow flexibility both above & below the tie.
•Use tie materials that will not damage the trunk by chafing or grinding.
•Use stakes and ties for as short a time as possible.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

TEC will offer job placement service at college

By H.A. TUCK

Tuck

Classes now have been under way for a week, but late registration still continues for three more days.

Students get a holiday Monday for Labor Day. It's a long stretch after that before their next break for Thanksgiving.

• • •

If you are an employer who could use some part-time help, here's a suggestion: contact the Texas Employment Commission about its weekly job placement service at Midland College.

Starting Sept. 8, the TEC will be at the Student Activities Office each Thursday from 2-4 p.m. to assist students with counseling, interviewing techniques, resumes, and job matching. Students must provide a college ID card, Social Security card, driver's license or birth certificate in order to participate. The TEC estimates it has about 400 jobs per month that might be suitable for students.

If you have job listings, just contact the TEC and they'll take it from there.

Please make it a point to see the art exhibit in McCormick Gallery this month, which features the works of Warren Taylor and Daniel Buckley. Both are MC employees who have great talent. Taylor teaches art and produces large watercolors, some as big as 70 inches by 90 inches. The works he's displaying are scheduled for three other shows later this year.

Buckley, who spent the past two years as a photo lab assistant and now is director of media services for the college's learning resource center, is a talented photographer. He is showing both color and black and white prints. Some of the latter include photos within photos.

Located in the Allison Fine Arts Building, the gallery is open Sunday from 1-5 p.m., Monday through Thursday from 8 a.m.-10 p.m., Friday from 8 a.m.-5 p.m. and Saturday from 10 a.m.-5 p.m. The gallery will not be open on Labor Day. This show remains on display through Sept. 25.

We began introducing new faculty and staff last week, and conclude those introductions this week.

Don Mullins joins the computer information systems faculty. He had been a computer instructor with the Lubbock campus of South Plains College. He also has computer experience with Lubbock General Hospital, Texas Tech University Health Science Center, Lubbock's Methodist Hospital, General Electric Atomic Power Department, and the U.S. Air Force.

Mullins has an A.B.A. degree from South Plains College, with his B.B.A. and M.Ed. degrees from Texas Tech.

Pam Owen also is teaching computers. She taught for MC during the spring semester. She has a B.S. degree from Eastern Illinois and an A.A.S. from Midland College. She has taught in elementary grades and has computer experience in areas of insurance and law.

Larry Pitts is the intraumural director, with an A.A. degree from Clarendon College and a B.A. from UTPB. He has taught in the Midland and Odessa school systems the past five years.

Mike Roark is a familiar face with a new title. He is Assistant to the Chaparral Center Director for Food Service. Chap Center is assuming the concession operations from Ogden Food Service, and Mike has been running that service the past two years. He has a B.B.A. degree from Eastern New Mexico University.

Joe Rojas is coordinator of the Respiratory Therapy program. He had been serving as evening shift director of Odessa Medical Center's respiratory care and a clinical director for MC's respiratory theraphy students. He also has been employed with hospitals in Weimer, Victoria, and Cuero. He has an A.A.S. degree from Del Mar College, a certificate in respiratory care from Victoria Hospital, plus certification as a Respiratory Therapy Technician and Registered Respiratory Therapist.

Dennis Sever is teaching computer courses. A former MC computer lab instructor for four years, he returns to MC from Texas Instruments. He has A.A.S. degrees from North Harris County College and Midland College, plus a B.B.A. from UTPB.

Robin Stilwell has the new post as Account Coordinator for the Continuing Education Department. She has a B.A. degree from Trinity University and an M.A. from Bowling Green State University. She has served as Associate Director and Acting Director of Admissions at Schreiner College, Coordinator of Parents' Programs at Bowling Green, and Coordinator of Student Organizations at Southern Methodist University.

Caprock Electric Cooperative is having its annual membership meeting and banquet at Chap Center Saturday evening at 5 p.m. More than 3,000 persons are expected to attend.

• • •

Don't forget to mark your calendar for Wednesday, Sept. 28, when Chaparral Center will celebrate its 10th anniversary with a concert by Michael Martin Murphey. Since the admission charge is one can of food per person, it's about as close to free as you could get. KNFM is co-sponsoring the event, with the canned goods going to the Permian Basin Food Bank and High Sky Children's Ranch.

The Continuing Education Department offer several ways for you to expand your mind, or your muscles, with the diverse classes it offers this week. You can choose from such subjects as "Building a Positive Self-Image," "Stop Smoking Clinic,""CPA Review: Auditing," "Woodworking II," "CPS: Behavioral Science, Economics and Management" or "Concrete Masonry."

You can register for any of these by visiting the Continuing Education Office. More information is available by calling 685-4518.

• • •

The college's Adult Learning Center is starting new courses this week for those not citizens of the United States. A special Amnesty class starts Sept. 7 and ends Dec. 14. This class will meet on Monday and Wednesday from 7-9 p.m. and is free. The Citizenship class also is free.

It meets on Tuesday and Thursday from Sept. 6 through Oct. 13 from 7-9 p.m.

Adult Basic Education classes began last week, but can be entered at any time for those seeking GED certificates. The center begins its English As A Second Language courses on Sept. 12. The classes are held both daytime and evening.

You can call 685-4566 for details on these classes.

The poor little rabbits which live on the campus are being harried from all sides. Not only have the young ones had to deal with the onslaught of students, plus dogs, but now they are being chased by some foxes who reside in nearby fields. One of the foxes was even bold enough to run through a building courtyard in pursuit of a rabbit which escaped by a hairbreadth. We don't know if it was a cottontail or a jackrabbit, but that might have been splitting hares.

H.A. Tuck is public relations director at Midland College.

EDUCATION IN BRIEF

Engineering classes offered

The Division of Science and Engineering of The University of Texas of the Permian Basin announces two courses to be offered in the evening for the fall semester, 1988. These courses are designed for the working engineer and will be conducted at The First City National Bank in Midland.

Transient Pressure Analysis (Mondays, 5:20-8:00 p.m.) will involve fluid flow in porous media, the diffusivity equation, interpretation of pressure drawdown and buildup test data, well damage effects, simple faults, multi-rate testing, well interference, and curve matching concepts.

Reservoir Engineering I (Wednesdays, 5:20-8:00 p.m.) will stress fluid and rock properties, original hydrocarbons in place, natural gas and gas condensate reservoir recovery predictions, decline curve analysis and material balance forms of oil, reservoir performance predictions, and natural water drive system.

Fall registration will be held Tuesday and Wednesday, Sept. 6 and 7. For more information contact the Office of Administrations at 367-2210.

Late registration to end

Late registration for Midland College's fall semester ends Thursday.

Fulltime students may enroll only through Tuesday, while part-time students may sign up through Thursday. Registration is done in the Student Services Office, Administration Building. Hours will be 8 a.m.-5 p.m. for the final three days. The college will be closed Monday for Labor Day.

By Friday morning, about 3,400 students had enrolled for credit courses. That's almost identical to the count at the same time for the 1987 fall semester when an all-time record 3,785 students took classes.

The late registration time period this year has been cut by three days in an effort to complete class rolls and give students a better opportunity to be successful in their classes.

"Despite our high student count, we still have a large number of classes which have openings," said Dr. Don Cates, associate dean of students and registrar. "Some of the classes might be at less desirable times, but we are making every effort to assist students in obtaining the classes they need and want."

Cates suggested that prospective students call the Student Services Office at 685-4501 or visit the office Tuesday to learn about classes which still are admitting students.

Regent to sit on board

Texas Tech University Regent Wendell W. Mayes Jr. of Austin has been selected to fill an unexpired term on the Advisory Board of Associated Press Broadcasters, Inc.

Mayes was nominated and confirmed earlier this month to fill a vacated one-year term on the 22-member board, according to Wendell Wood, spokeswoman for the broadcast news agency. Mayes will be one of two representatives from AP's southwest district that includes Texas, Arkansas, Louisiana and Oklahoma.

The board serves as an advisory council to Associated Press broadcast services.

Active in the radio and television industry for more than 25 years, Mayes currently is chairman of the board at KCRS and KWMJ radio in Midland and KAMG and KVIC radio in Victoria. His cable television involvement includes being president of Valley Pioneer Corporation in Pauls Valley, Okla., and Corsicana Pioneer Corporation.

Mayes is a former president of KNOW radio in Austin.

He also has served as president of Texas Association of Broadcasters the Texas Braodcast Education Foundation.

A Texas Tech alumni, Mayes began a six-year term on the University's Board of Regents in 1985. He was named chairman of the board in 1986.

Mayes was cited as a distinguished alumnus at Texas Tech in 1981, distinguished engineer alumnus in 1986 and inducted into the University's Mass Communications Hall of Fam in 1978. He was named Pioneer Broadcaster of 1978 by the Texas Assocation of Broadcasters.

Finance workshops slated

Methods of conserving and expanding personal wealth is the topic for a workshop at Midland College.

"Personal Financial Planning" is scheduled for two identical workshops. The first one will be presented on Mondays from 7-9 p.m. on Sept. 19, Sept. 26, and Oct. 3. The other will be offered on Tuesdays at the same time on Oct. 18, Oct. 25, and Nov. 1.

All sessions are scheduled for the Health Sciences Building lecture hall.

Cost of the workshop will be only $30 for an individual and the same fee for a couple.

Persons wishing to enroll should visit the Continuing Education Office in the Administration Building. Hours are 8 a.m.-8 p.m. Monday through Thursday and 8 a.m.-5 p.m. on Friday. Enrollment is limited.

Session one will cover the foundation for financial independence, objectives of financial planning, tax brackets, and reasons that people fail financially. The session also will begin discussions of putting money to work through cash reserves, money market funds, corporate and municipal bonds, and mutual funds.

In the second session, topics will include equity investments, common and preferred stock, and limited partnerships.

The third session will cover such tangible assets, precious metals, rare coins, and gemstones. Also discussed will be IRAs, Keogh and 401 (K) plans, annuities, life insurance, and pension benefits.

Professional financial planning consultants will conduct the workshops.

Beverley to teach MC class

Freelance writer Mary Frances Beverley will teach a Midland College Continuing Education class on "How to Sell What You Write," beginning Sept. 22 through Oct. 27.

The class will meet Thursdays from 7-9 p.m. in the Fine Arts Building at the college.

Ms. Beverley will cover such topics as thinking like a writer, writing query letters, finding the right markets, perfecting manuscripts, getting books published, networking and coping with rejection.

She has been publishing her work for more than 30 years in such publications as Texas Highways, New Mexico magazine, Southwest Airline's Spirit, The Dallas Morning News, The Houston Chronicle, The Fort Worth Star-Telegram, The Toronto Globe & Mail, City Life and Business Journal of the Permian Basin. She recently worked on the 1989 edition of Fodor's guide to Texas.

Ms. Beverley taught English and speech for 23 years in Fort Worth and Midland. She frequently reviews books for area clubs and organizations.

Her guide book to 100 Texas homeowned restaurants, "Great Hometown Restaurants of Texas," was published in 1984, and her latest book, "Cowbells and Coffins: The Old General Store," won first place for nonfiction in the 1987 Texas Press Women Communications Contest.

Registration for the course is being taken in the Administration Building in the office of Continuing Education.

GED preparation offered

Classes designed to assist with preparation for the GED tests are being held in McCamey again this fall. The classes are conducted through cooperation of the McCamey Independent School District, sponsored by the Midland College Adult Learning Center.

"The GED class we held last spring included 30 students and was most successful," said Bill Little, superintendent of the McCamey school district. "This is a service which the residents of McCamey have requested and have responded to enthusiastically."

This year's class will meet Monday and Thursday from 7-9 p.m. starting Sept. 19. Carla Brownfield again will serve as instructor.

Participants must be at least 16 years old to take the class and at least 17 years old to take the GED tests, which provides the equivalency of a high school diploma upon successful completion. There is no charge for the class and a small fee for the tests. Class size is limited.

Those wishing additional information may contact the McCamey school system, 652-3666, or the Midland College Adult Learning Center, 685-4566.

UTPB registration set

Fall registration for The University of Texas of the Permian Basin will be held 9 a.m. - 1 p.m. and 3 p.m.- 7 p.m. on Tuesday, Sept. 6 and Wednesday, Sept. 7, in the U.T. Permian Basin gymnasium.

Over 150 classes, both undergraduate and graduate level, will be offered through day, evening and self-paced instruction. Classes may be taken as ENCORE (no credit). Classes begin Thursday, Sept. 8. Late registration continues through Sept. 19.

For more information call 367-2210.

MAKING THE GRADE

McKown

Julie Elizabeth McKown, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas McKown of Midland, was a recipient of a $1,000 scholarship offered by the Past President's Parley of the American Legion Auxiliary, Department of Texas. These scholarships are limited to students pursuing a career in nursing.

Ms. McKown, a graduate of Lee High School, was sponsored by the local American Legion Auxiliary, Woods W. Lynch Unit 19. She plans to attend Texas Tech in the fall.

Plan would provide equitable state funding for public schools

AUSTIN (AP) — Equal access to education funding would be provided to 95 percent of the state's public school children by 1995 under a plan created by the dean of the University of Texas Law School.

The plan, dubbed "95 in 95" by creator Mark Yudof, would allow the state to phase in a funding plan over six years.

Texas is searching for a new school finance method because State District Judge Harley Clark of Austin has declared the current system unconstitutional. In a decision appealed by the state, Clarks said the system does not provide all students with equal access to educational funding.

Yudof is a member of the Select Committee on Education, which is to recommend new funding methods to the 1989 Legislature.

Yudof's proposal, enthusiastically received Friday by a subcommittee of the education panel, would attempt to have 85 percent of Texas students in "an equalized fiscally neutral system" by 1991. That means an equal amount of money would be available to be spent on each student in those districts.

By 1993, 90 percent of the students would be in such a system. By 1995, equity would exist in approximately 960 school districts attended by 95 percent of the children.

The remaining 5 percent attend the state's 100 wealthiest districts, which typically spend far more than average on education.

Under Yudof's plan, the state would set a minimum property tax rate. If a district levied that rate, it would receive enough state money to guarantee it could provide its students with an adequate education.

If a district set a tax rate lower than the state-recommended one, it would not receive state funding.

"Nearly all the districts are going to want state money. That's the carrot," Yudof told committee members. "If you don't want any money from the state, you can tax at whatever rate you please. Wealthy districts would not be compelled to reaise more money than they can reasonably and efficiently use."

The plan would require the state to pick up a bigger share of the cost of educating the state's 3 million public school children. This year, the state will spend about $5 billion on public education and local districts will provide another $5 billion, raised through property taxes.

Yudof said he believed the state should pay for 55 percent to 60 percent of the cost of education. Texas Education Agency officials were asked to determine the impact and cost of implementing the plan.

Yudof emphasized that the figures he proposed were tentative.

Rebecca Canning — head of the select committee's legal considerations panel, which reviewed Yudof's plan — said, "It appears to me that the most important part is that it sets a goal that provides almost absolute equity."

Larry Jenkins, select committee chairman, said, "I think, conceptually, it's one of the best (plans) we've seen."

MC to hold GED, adult education classes

From Staff Reports

Adult Basic Education and GED classes are being offered at five sites in Midland this fall, all conducted by the Midland College Adult Learning Center.

"Although Midland is known as a well-educated community, there are thousands of residents who don't have high school diplomas. This limits their ability to earn a living and handle many basic situations which most people take for granted," said Cindy Turland, coordinator of the Midland College Adult Learning Center.

In addition to the college campus, there will be ABE/GED classes at Hollowell Learning Center, Boys and Girls Club of Midland, Casa de Amigos, and County Probation Office.

"Students are given individual assessments, or pre-tests, then are tutored one-on-one before they take the GED test, which is recognized as the equivalent of a high school diploma," Ms. Turland said.

Students must be 16 years of age to enroll and 17 to take the GED, but there is no upper age limit.

Ms. Turland also noted that students who pass their GED tests after being enrolled in a Midland College-sponsored learning center may be eligible for Midland College scholarships.

Following is the schedule for ABE/GED classes:

Midland College, room 132 Occupational-Technical Building: 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Monday and Wednesday, 8 a.m.-8:30 p.m. Tuesday and Thursday. Classes are now under way.

Hollowell Learning Center, 400 S. Marshall: 7-9 p.m. Tuesday and Thursday. Classes start Sept. 20.

Boys' and Girls' Club of Midland, 110 E. New Jersey, 4-6 p.m. Monday and Wednesday. Classes begin Sept. 19.

Casa de Amigos, 1101 E. Garden Lane: 7-9 p.m. Monday and Wednesday. Classes start Sept. 12.

Probation Office, 218 W. Illinois: 7-9 p.m. Tuesday and Thursday. Classes start Sept. 13.

For additional information, contact the Midland College Adult Learning Center in the Occupational-Technical Building, or call 685-4566.

Symphony, chorale's pops concerts rescheduled

From Staff Reports

Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale's scheduled performance of "Pops in the Park" has been changed to 8 p.m. today at the University of Texas at the Permian Basin courtyard.

The performance was moved from Freedom Park because of flooding conditions. The concert is being sponsored by KMID-TV and the Permian Rehabilitation Institute.

Should rain occur, the concert will be moved inside the UT Student Center.

A second performance — "Pops at the College" also has been rescheduled because of unfavorable weather conditions.

That concert was rescheduled from Saturday to 8 p.m. Sept. 8 at Midland College's Beal Plaza.

Sponsors are the Reporter-Telegram, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Pevehouse, Texas Commerce Bank Midland, the Cardio MedCenter and the law firm of Turpin, Smith, Syer, Saxe and MacDonald.

The concert will feature old and new favorites from "MacArthur Park" to Michael Jackson's "Bad."

"Pops at the College" officially opens the Symphony & Chorale's 1988-89 concert season. For ticket information, call 563-5269.

TRINITY FELLOWSHIP
RENEWAL CONFERENCE '88
SEPTEMBER 21-25

Jimmy Evans
Conference Host and Senior Pastor of Trinity Fellowship Church

YOU'RE INVITED. . .

Maybe as never before in recent history, God is making Himself known in the earth. Why? Because God loves people and desires to have a relationship with every man, woman and child He creates. However, many of our day reject God's offer of love, acceptance and forgiveness or try to come to Him on man-made terms. Only God's offer, based on His own terms, is acceptable to Him. God's offer of total forgiveness is based on His pure sense of justice, lovingkindness and mercy. God's terms are repent, believe on Jesus and forgive as freely as He has forgiven.

Because of the many voices which are deceitfully proclaiming another way of salvation all over the earth today, God is once again, by the Holy Spirit, bringing Jesus back into fullness of view. God is shouting in various ways and in diverse places His eternal message from the heavenlies: "This is My beloved Son, in Whom I am well pleased - listen to Him!"

Can you hear Him?

Trinity Fellowship Renewal Conference '88 is specifically dedicated to helping all people of all ages better hear and respond to the message God is declaring to the Church today. We invite and, at the same time, welcome each and every member of the family to be present, September 21-25, at our worship facilities in Amarillo, located at 5000 Hollywood Road. Our hope is that you will be with us for what we believe is to be a special time of refreshing in the presence of the Lord.

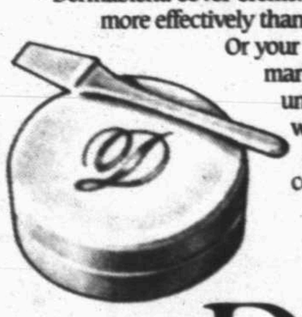

- Daytime teaching and workshops for Church leaders, teachers, staff and non-staff alike, beginning at 9:30 a.m. Wednesday through Friday.
- Evening worship services beginning at 7:00 p.m. Wednesday through Friday. (Special ministries for children and youth).
- Saturday - Men's Breakfast and Ladies' Luncheon, 8:00 a.m. and 12:30 p.m. respectively.
- Sunday morning worship services - 8:00, 9:30 and 11:00 a.m.
- Sunday evening - Twila Paris in concert, 6:00 p.m.

For more information call or write Trinity Fellowship Church, 5000 Hollywood Road, Amarillo, Texas 79110; (806) 355-8955.

SWTSU fall enrollment up

SAN MARCOS (AP) — Southwest Texas State University officials are attributing a 2.4 percent fall enrollment increase primarily to growth in two areas — graduate students and minorities.

A total of 20,700 students had enrolled for classes at the university by the end of late registration, according to a SWT statement. Official enrollment for the semester will not be calculated until after Sept. 10. There were 20,214 who registered last year at the same time period.

According to preliminary figures released by university Registrar Louise Johnson, graduate student enrollment is up 15 percent, from 2,180 in 1987 to 2,512 in 1988.

Ethnic distribution figures reflect a more than 10 percent increase in both black and Hispanic enrollment.

Beaches' mess hurt merchants

By JUDIE GLAVE

NEW YORK (AP) — Call it the lost summer. Call it the biggest beach scare since Jaws hit town. "Just call it over and let's get on with it," said New York's top parks official.

The fact that the summer of 1988 has ended is the only good thing many can say after Northeast beaches were sullied by medical waste and sewage.

"You can write off the summer of '88," said city Parks Commissioner Henry Stern. "It turned out to be the year of the plague."

With one of the hottest summers in 119 years — the temperature in Manhattan passed the 90-degree mark 32 times — it should have been a banner year.

But the tide turned in June when the first wave of medical debris — AIDS-contaminated hypodermic needles — appeared in Bayonne, N.J.; and then Long Island, Staten Island, Coney Island, and a string of beaches on the Jersey shore.

Medical waste also turned up on beaches in Connecticut, Rhode Island and Massachusetts and at Lake Erie's Cleveland Lakefront State Park in Ohio.

John J. Gaines, president of the Narragansett Chamber of Commerce in Rhode Island, believes his state benefited from the mess when tourists from New York and Connecticut headed north. He said tourism was up as much as 24 percent.

Connecticut also was plagued by hypodermic needles, syringes and high coliform counts at the beach, but the local economy did not suffer greatly; a majority of the beaches are privately owned.

In New Jersey and New York, vacationers and day visitors stayed away by the hundreds of thousands, and everyone from motel owners to local fishermen and parking lot attendants was hard hit.

"It was like a great shark scare," said Stern. "People stayed away from the beaches waiting for the all-clear signal, and it never came."

More than 1,000 pieces of medical debris were scooped up at city beaches from the Bronx to Staten Island, said Stern.

An investigation failed to pinpoint the source of the problem. A state report said it was probably caused by sewer runoff, illegal dumping and a laundry list of other reasons.

"The possibility is that we will never know," said city Sanitation Department spokesman Jim Hart.

New Jersey merchants estimate it will cost the $7.7 billion-a-year shore industry more than $1 billion in lost revenue. State officials said figures aren't complete.

The Long Island tourism board estimated business was off at least 20 percent. In Brighton Beach, Brooklyn, a seashore community that depends on a hearty summer to survive, business plummeted 40 percent to 60 percent.

"We were only closed for two days in July, just two days," said Ben Liederman, of the Brighton Industrial Development Group. "But the scare alone..."

The incidents were isolated, but everyone seemed to pay the price. "They closed six beaches out of 480; four miles out of 1,600 miles of coastline," said David J. Lee, vice president of the Long Island Tourism Commission. "It was minuscule."

New Jersey officials tried to counter the bad publicity by spending an extra $575,000 in advertising to attract visitors, said Liz Thomas, deputy director of the Department of Travel and Tourism.

Some merchants plan aggressive advertising campaigns to lure beachgoers back, while others will continue pushing elected officials to make sure the issue is not dropped once the headlines — and the summer — fade.

"I didn't ever want to get involved," said Jeff Konner, owner of the Sea Spray Motel in Shipbottom, N.J. "But now I'll take a day off and go up with a group to Trenton" (the state capitol).

"This is my life here," he said. "Everything I own is invested in this place."

Officials are considering laws aimed at tracking medical waste from its point of origin and requiring labels on all hospital and laboratory debris.

But, said National Park Service spokesman Manny Strumpf, "Even assuming the beaches are going to be clean next year...it's going to be one hell of a selling job," to get the public back.

Club members get together to celebrate tallness

By LAURA WILKINSON

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Ralph Berthene looked forward to socializing this weekend with 100 people from around the country who see things the way he does — from about 6 feet 5 inches up.

"It was a great experience to not have to stoop when you're talking to somebody," the 32-year-old St. Paul resident said of the first time he went to a Twin Cities Tall Club event.

The Minneapolis-St. Paul chapter is holding its annual weekend get-together for members of the 50-year-old Tall Clubs International, including a costume party, pig roast, dinner and sightseeing tours.

No basketball games were planned, says Chris Hager, president of the Twin Cities' chapter, who just meets the women's height requirement at 5-10. Men must be at least 6-2 to join.

Members don't concentrate on activities celebrating their height, but they do joke about it, and print the jokes on T-shirts they sell, said Hager, 45, a heating company controller in nearby Spring Park.

"One says 'I may be the first to get rained on, but I'll be the last to drown.' There's another one that says 'No, I don't play basketball. Do you play miniature golf?' The one I really like is 'Reach down and touch someone,' " said Hager.

Berthene added quickly: "We really don't have anything against short people."

One chapter even has an annual baseball game with members of a short people's club, Hager said.

The tallest member in the clubs' history was the late Don Koehler, an 8-foot-2 member from the Chicago area, said the clubs' mere 5-foot-7 historian, Doris Chickering. The Highland, Md., woman is an honorary member, "married to a guy who is 6-2."

The 92-member Twin Cities chapter was founded 47 years ago and serves Minnesota, Iowa and North and South Dakota.

Having fun with other tall people was the main reason the organization's founder, 6-foot-2 Kae Sumner Einfeldt, 72, of Santa Cruz, Calif., started the Tip Toppers Club of Los Angeles.

The retired free-lance commercial design artist, who worked on "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," held the first meeting in 1938. She said she was inspired to start the "world's highest society" by her work on Walt Disney's film.

"I like to tell people I got so sick and tired of looking at dwarfs," she said. "They used to call me the giant girl who painted dwa..fs for Disney."

Tall Clubs International claims 5,000 members and prospective members in 50 clubs in this country and Canada. The 60 European clubs have about 7,500 members.

The clubs remain social organizations, but have begun working to make life easier for a population that is growing taller, says the past president of the international chapter, 6-foot-7 Carl Bouler, 52, of Phoenix, Ariz.

Clothing and retail executives were invited to the clubs' national convention last year to hear members' desires for better selection among tall fashions, Bouler said.

"It was a great experience to not have to stoop when you're talking to somebody.

— Ralph Berthene, member of Twin Cities Tall Club

The clubs once urged an automaker to install telescoping steering, and the company came out later with tilt steering wheels. "I think we gave them the idea, although they never admitted it," Einfeldt said.

Otherwise, gaining acceptance for attributes besides their height has been a major accomplishment.

"It is very common when any number of us walk into a restaurant or any other place that people turn and look at us beeause we are tall. Tall people seem to be considered to have a lot of authority by other people," Hager said.

"I don't think it's bad (but) I don't think a lot of us realize we are treated as we are....We don't understand the authority we are being given."

Proxmire hasn't missed roll call since 1966

Proxmire

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Sen. William Proxmire hasn't missed a Senate roll call since April 1966. That's more than 10,000 roll calls, far more than any other senator.

"You're elected to vote," the Wisconsin Democrat said. "Of course, some people would say the country would have been better off if I'd missed them all."

Proxmire, who turns 73 in November, soon will see the streak end. He announced last year he would retire when his term ends in January.

The senator has gained much of his fame for his monthly "Golden Fleece" awards for government projects Proxmire considers wasteful.

"My primary role has been a watchdog over spending," said Proxmire. "I'd like to leave a legacy of people thinking about how much things cost."

Lamarr

NORTH BAY VILLAGE, Fla. (AP) — Former screen siren Hedy Lamarr has reported the theft of $250,000 in jewelry from her home here, but police aren't hopping on the case.

Detectives said the home showed no signs of a forced entry, and they haven't received a list of the items taken.

"The last time she saw it was two or three months ago," Detective Frank DeAlimi said Friday of Ms. Lamarr's jewelry.

He said the investigation is on hold until he receives a call from Tiffany & Co. jewelry store in New York to confirm that the 74-year-old actress had the jewelry.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country music star Hank Williams Jr. has more than a passing interest in his post as honorary chairman of National Hunting and Fishing Day Sept. 24.

He said he spends "virtually every minute of my free time hunting, shooting or tinkering with firearms."

Williams was on a hunting expedition in the Montana Rockies in 1975 when he fell 500 feet and was seriously hurt.

NEW YORK (AP) — Singer-songwriter Tracy Chapman, whose hit debut album chronicles the lives of the poor and disenfranchised, says many in her audiences don't come for her politics.

"I think lots of people come because they love the music, they love the way the record sounds, or they love my voice, and they don't care about any of the songs that have political content to them," she said in the Sept. 22 issue of Rolling Stone.

Rules Help Players Sidestep Injuries

By JERRY L. COCHRAN, M.D.
Midland Orthopedic Clinic
Texas Institute of Sports Medicine

In a moment of reflection, I find myself considering the multitude of football-related injuries I will be tending to over the next four to 12 months. I am probably the most avid football fan. Instead of my life hinging on which team wins or loses, I worry about picking up the pieces that remain of the players after the game is over.

Frequently, our young gladiators receive injuries in their teen-age years that they have to live with for the rest of their lives. These injuries are such that they profoundly affect the entire remainder of the athlete's life. Who wants to hire a young man whose physical capabilities may limit his ability to perform on the job? As an employer, would you hire someone who you knew had a "bad" knee, and would require recurrent knee surgery?

What can we do to reduce these injuries? What may we (parents, coaches, trainers, fan, and doctors) do to stop the carnage?

The following are "Cochran's Rules of Gridiron Engagement" or "How to Participate in High School Football and Not End Up Being a Total Physical Wreck."

1. If your son is too small, do not allow him to play. When a 145 pound split end is hit by a 225-pound linebacker, something has to give. It is usually the featherweight. Intensity of impact is determined by many factors, the primary being relative momentum (the player's weight times the velocity he is traveling over the ground). Obviously, a 225-pound player is going to develop much more momentum than a 145-pound player. Guess who is going to get hurt.

2. Coaches have a special responsibility. Not only do they have primary responsibility for each youngster, they have the PRESSURE from EVERYBODY else in the entire world to produce a winning team, regardless of the quality of players on the team. The fact is that most of the really good coaches I know and work with are much more concerned with the individual player and his development as a human being rather than in winning football games. Frequently, outside pressures force a re-prioritization of his primary goals. Whose fault is this?

The coach and his staff need to insure that each player is in the best possible musculoskeletal and cardiopulmonary condition. The best knee brace ever made is strong muscles in the lower extremities. As pointed out previously, the ever present prophylactic lateral knee braces are of absolutely no use and in fact may cause increased knee injury. Position papers have been published by the American Orthopedic Society for Sports Medicine and the American College of Sports Medicine frankly stating that these devices should not be used.

In addition, the coach needs to educate the player in such a way that the kid understands the offensive or defensive schemes thoroughly. Broken plays offer excellent opportunities for broken bodies.

Finally, the coaching staff must provide the atmosphere that the youngster can develop the ability to share goal-directed behavior with his teammates. Win or lose, there are many lessons of life that may be learned well in the adversity of a football season with his teammates. These are the kind of lessons that teach getting along with others, persevering through hardship, and learning to follow orders.

3. Trainers are important in injury prevention for many reasons. Not only are they usually the first person on the scene at an athletic injury, but frequently they are the person the player trusts the most. A trainer, therefore, has to be "approachable." If he loses the confidence of the players, then a valuable key in the total football program is lost. Perhaps one of the foremost responsibilities of the trainer is appropriate medical consultation. The trainer recognizes injury and then makes sure the youngster sees the right physician.

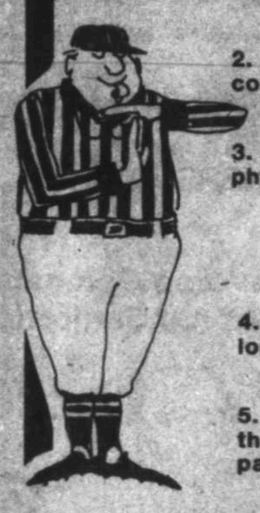

4. If it were not for overly aggressive fans, would football be faced with such issues as steroids, NCAA violations, and win-at-any-cost dictums? We all need to put football in a proper perspective. Its use in the high school (and college) setting is a framework to help build character and purpose in young people. In 20 years will it really matter which team won a particular football game? If a young man receives a devastating injury in such a game, it will make a big difference to the quality of his life.

5. The final concern is of the physician. Sports medicine is not simply routine medical science applied to sports. There are factors involved which may not occur to a physician who has not specifically devoted himself to that area.

To properly treat an injury, a thorough understanding of the mechanism of injury, the anatomy, and the pathology must be appreciated.

Please do not think that I am anti-football. I am not. In fact, almost any sport may be talked about in the same terms. I just think that there is life after high school athletics and it is all of our jobs to make sure that each and every kid has the best chance to have the best life to offer.

Cochran's Rules of Gridiron Engagement

1. Parents. Don't let children play if too small.

2. Coaches. Make sure every player is in the best condition.

3. Trainers. Recognize injury; get player to right physician.

4. Fans. Consider players' longterm future.

5. Physician. Understand the injury, anatomy and pathology.

Chef To Toss New Column; Gets Award

A new monthly feature in "House Calls" is being cooked up by Michael McKay, dietary services director at Physicians and Surgeons Hospital.

The column will focus on food, ranging from nutritional advice to foods for specific health problems to gourmet recipes. The first segment will be published in the October edition of "House Calls."

"Knowing the proper foods to eat, and especially on specific diets, is one thing. But knowing how to turn that food into a delicious meal is another thing. I will be covering both facets in this column," said McKay.

McKay has been directory of dietary services since December 1985. He recently attended the Texas Chefs Association State Convention and received an award for Outstanding Contribution to the organization. Last year he played a major role in helping to organize the Permian Basin Chapter of Texas Chefs Association.

McKay was elected Director of the Permian Basin Chapter and will serve as an officer on the state board.

Fishing For— A Medical Cure

It can lower triglyceride levels.

It can reduce the chance of heart disease and rheumatoid arthritis,

Fish oil. It sounds like the answer to a lot of health problems. But it may not be the total wonder cure that is being touted, according to an Aug. 5, 1988, edition of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

The public began to take an interest in fish oil supplements after some reports showed that Eskimoes rarely die from cardiovascular disease and attributed the phenomenon to the amount of fish they eat. One report indicated that eating only two fish dishes per week may be cardioprotective. Studies also showed Eskimoes had fewer cases of asthma, psoriasis and autoimmune diseases, such as rheumatoid arthritis. And diabetes mellitus is almost unknown in Eskimos who live only on seafood.

There are risks involved in using these fish oil supplements, according to the JAMA article.

To obtain enough of the active ingredient in fish oils -- fatty acids -- 15 to 30 fish oil capsules must be taken each day. The article's author, Jack Zeev Yetiv, M.D., Ph.D., noted that large amounts of fish oil can add weight to the patient. He also pointed out that large doses of some fish oils, such as cod liver oil, may cause Vitamin A and D toxicity while a diet high in fish oil may cause a vitamin E deficiency.

Yetiv wrote that a high dose of fish oil supplements may lower cholesterol and triglyceride levels while maintaining HDL levels. However, in some patients it may result in increased LDL/HDL ratios. Increasing the LDL, even while lowering the choiesterol levels, may be undesirable, he noted.

Researchers currently are recommending people increase the amount of seafood they eat rather than depend on the fish oil supplements, according to Yetiv.

Several factors should be considered for the following categories of people who may want to take fish oil:

1. Children, adolescents, pregnant women and individuals taking anti-coagulants or persons with known or suspected bleeding disorders should not take fish oil supplements.

2. Patients under a physician's care for a serious medical disorder should discuss plans to take a fish-oil supplement with their physician first. If the patient begins taking the supplement, the physician must watch for side effects and interaction with drugs that have not yet been found in research.

3. Patients with high serum triglyceride levels or cholesterol levels "may be reasonably treated with fish oils under medical supervision. But the fish-oil supplement should be tried only after other dietary therapy."

4. Normal healthy individuals represent the best potential market for fish oil manufacturers. The companies usually recommend three to six capsules a day, but this low of a dose is unlikely to have any serious side effects.

Crying Baby Upsets Sleep Pattern

By URMILA GUPTA, M.D.
And PREM P. GUPTA, M.D.

Does your child have a sleeping problem? The answer is "yes" if the child's sleeping habits cause a definite problem for you or the child.

Troublesome sleep habits include resisting going to bed or frequent awakenings during the night. In the case of an older child, the symptoms may be going to the parents' room or slipping into bed with them.

These behaviors by themselves are not serious but cause a great deal of inconvenience, fatigue, frustration and anger among parents. Efforts to control this problem result in frequent bottle or breast feedings, rocking the baby in arms, chair or swing until he falls asleep and then trying to shift him back to his bed.

Music or pacifiers offer some initial relief. All these quick-fix measures seem to work for a short time but make the child more dependent on parents' help to fall asleep. Continuing problems make the parents wonder why the problem is persisting. They start to ask, "Is he spoiled? Is he sick? Do we let him cry himself to sleep? When will he grow out of it and we can have a good night's sleep?"

"Normal sleep consists of light and deep sleep periods one after the other. It is during light sleep periods that the baby awakens and has trouble falling asleep on his own."

If all this sounds familiar, you are not alone. About 15-30 percent of children between the ages of four and 36 months show sleeping difficulties. A normal newborn baby sleeps about 16-18 hours every day. A one-year-old sleeps about 14 hours and a five-year-old can do with 11 hours. The total sleep time may be divided into naps and nighttime sleeping. Of course, there are variations among different children.

Normal sleep consists of light and deep sleep periods one after the other. It is during the light sleep periods that the baby awakens and has trouble falling asleep on his own. This results in crying because he needs all the things he is used to, thereby translating into loss of sleep for the whole family.

Sleep patterns develop by maturation of the brain system. Other problems that may interfere include illness, hunger, parent separation, pain and inconsistent sleep routines.

Now that you have a working idea about the problems, here are a few helpful hints:

1. The baby should need only one middle of the night feeding by two-to-three months of age. By four months, most babies should be able to sleep eight hours at a stretch. If the baby is not sleeping through the night, try to phase out the night feedings gradually and increase the daytime feeding interval.

2. Try to put the baby to sleep in the crib when he is still awake.

3. If the baby wakes up crying and you go into the room, try not to pick him up. Instead, pat him to sleep in the crib. Avoid turning the lights on and playing with the child.

4. Try to follow a consistent bedtime routine, like bath followed by feeding.

5. For older babies, use a cuddly toy or blanket to assist them to fall asleep.

6. If the child is frightened, go into the room immediately and stay with him until he calms down. Try not to lift him out of the bed. Instead, you can sit on a chair beside him and keep your hand on the body. You can leave for a few minutes in between.

7. Try to avoid long daytime naps in the evening hours.

8. Enlist the help of family members to avoid misunderstanding due to different opinions about ways to handle the sleep problem.

If the child is in pain or acts sick or you are having no success with the above mentioned routine, or you just can't take any more, contact your pediatrician for help and guidance.

Leeches Inching Back Into World of Medicine

Sometimes, new technology can't surpass the old. In some medical circles, leeches are making a comeback.

Unlike the days of old when numerous leeches were used to suck the "bad" blood from a sick person's body, today they are used only in certain conditions. According to the June 1988 issue of Surgical Practice News, leeches are "ideally suited for combatting venous congestion associated with microsurgical replantations, especially those involving fingers, toes and ears."

Conventional methods to relieve venous congestion usually involve damage to the tissue and are often inadequate, noted Dr. Fredrick A. Valauri, clinical instructor in plastic surgery at New York University School of Medicine. He said that leeches also may be useful in maintaining the viability of skin grafts and flaps when venous congestion threatens to compromise their viability.

When amputated body parts, such as fingers, toes and ears, are reattached, not all the veins can be reattached because of their small size. As a result, insufficient veins can lead to a backup of blood and congestion.

Two other techniques have been used for this problem, but both can injure the finger, according to Dr. Valauri. One method involves removing the nail plate in finger replantations and abrading the nail bed. With the application of heparin, bleeding is induced. The second method involves making an incision at the tip of the finger and attaching a small plastic drain.

The leech, however, can do the job without causing injury to the finger, according to the article. The leech has developed glands that secrete an anesthetic agent, a vasodilator called hirudin, and an anticoagulant. With its attachment sucker, the leech hooks onto the body part and bites down. The bite is not felt because of the anesthetic.

Dr. Valauri said the leech is used only after other methods have failed and often only when congestion threatens the success of the replantation surgery. "The patients recognize this as a last-ditch, salvage-type procedure, and they are very accepting of it," he said.

A leech will suck two-to-five times its body weight in 15-20 minutes, said Dr. Valauri. Once the leech is full, it falls off and is discarded.

"It's a wonderful solution to the problem," Dr. Valauri said of leeches. "These leeches have definitely salvaged fingers and ear replants that would not have survived otherwise."

Tech stumbles in second half of upset loss

SWC football

LUBBOCK (AP) — Running back David McGinty raced 20 yards for a touchdown to cap a stunning second-half comeback Saturday night and propel the University of North Texas to a 29-24 non-conference victory over Texas Tech.

Quarterback Scott Davis, who scored once himself, guided the Southland Conference club 63 yards in 6 plays and sent McGinty spinning around right end for the winning touchdown with 3:54 remaining.

Davis sparked the pivotal drive with a 27-yard pass to split end Thomas Greene for the Eagles, ranked No. 5 in Division I-AA.

Field goals of 51, 55 and 46 yards by Keith Chapman and a 46-yard touchdown romp by linebacker Rex Johnson with an intercepted pass kept North Texas within striking distance until the Eagles' closing heroics gunned down the favored Red Raiders of the Southwest Conference.

North Texas trailed 24-10 at halftime.

The stirring comeback overshadowed a sparkling performance by Texas Tech wingback Wayne Walker, who turned two passes into long-range touchdowns and gave him a total of 184 yards on five receptions.

Walker, one of the Mighty Mites of the deadly Red Raider receiving corps, raced 73 yards with Billy Joe Tolliver's screen pass on the first play from scrimmage to stake Tech to a sudden 7-0 lead.

The 5-9, 160-pound senior took a 52-yard Tolliver pass at the goal for a second score as the Raiders mounted a 14-point halftime lead.

The Eagles struck for nine quick points in the third period on a 1-yard run by Davis and Chapman's third field goal, the 46-yarder into the wind.

North Texas linebacker Byron Gross recovered two Red Raider fumbles in that chaotic quarter, one that set up an Eagle touchdown and another to torpedo a Tech scoring threat at the lip of the goal.

Charles Monroe's fumble recovery at the North Texas 3 killed still another Tech scoring opportunity in the same period.

Tech running back James Gray, who committed that last costly miscue, sped 25 yards behind a devastating Ervin Farris block to cap a 76-yard scoring drive that gave the Raiders a 14-3 lead with less that seven minutes gone in the game.

Aggies ground into Bayou dirt

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Seventeenth-ranked Louisiana State overcame a bad night by quarterback Tommy Hodson and ground out a methodical 27-0 victory over 11th-ranked Texas A&M Saturday night on the strength of a defense led by linebacker Ron Sancho.

The game was the season opener for LSU, while A&M is 0-2 after losses to the Tigers and No. 2 Nebraska.

Hodson, a 61 percent passer for two years as a starter, completed only seven of 27 passes Saturday night for 112 yards, about half his usual output.

Sancho scored a first-quarter touchdown on a 20-yard pass interception, and keyed a defensive effort that kept A&M out of the end zone on four shots from the 5-yard line as the fourth quarter began.

LSU's offensive touchdowns came on a 3-yard pass from second-string quarterback Mickey Guidry to running back Eddie Fuller in the second quarter and a 1-yard plunge by Victor Jones with 2:41 left in the game.

David Browndyke kicked field goals of 37 yards and 27 yards for LSU, both in the first quarter.

The Aggies used three quarterbacks, but only the third, Chris Osgood, generated any offense.

Bucky Richardson started for A&M and completed his only pass attempt, but for no yardage. Lance Pavlas played most of the second quarter, completing four of seven passes for 25 yards. He was also intercepted twice.

Osgood hit eight of 15 passes and ran for 110 yards. He accounted for 53 yards on A&M's closest approach to a score, a 77-yard march that died on the 2-yard line.

LSU marched 98 yards to Jones' touchdown after that goal-line stand.

The drive to Jones' touchdown took just over nine minutes, killing any time left for an A&M comeback.

Eddie Fuller led LSU rushing with 84 yards on 18 carries, and Slip Watkins had 60 yards on 14 rushes.

LSU was without Harvey Williams, its leading rusher the past two years. He has been slow recovering from off-season knee surgery.

Texas A&M, which lost 23-14 to Nebraska a week ago, got just 92 yards rushing against LSU. Larry Horton rushed for 35 yards on 13 carries.

Hurricanes blow through top-ranked Seminoles

MIAMI (AP) — The Miami Hurricanes, college football's defending national champions, continued their perfect record against No. 1-ranked teams in this decade by defeating top-rated Florida State 31-0 Saturday night as Steve Walsh passed for two touchdowns and Cleveland Gary ran for one.

The sixth-ranked Hurricanes' hard-hitting, lightning-quick defense smothered one of the nation's most explosive offenses, limiting Florida State to 91 yards in the first half — Miami had 239 — and permitting the Seminoles to cross midfield just twice in the first two periods.

Once they got to the Miami 30, where Richie Andrews missed a 47-yard field-goal attempt, and once to the 48, a 16-yard pass play on which wide receiver Terry Anthony fumbled the ball away.

So dominant was Miami's defense that FSU tailback Sammie Smith, who rushed for a school record 1,230 yards a year ago, was held to just six yards, a career low, on 18 carries.

Miami's record against No. 1 teams in the 1980s is 6-0. It also was the sixth straight year in which the Hurricanes have defeated the team ranked No. 1 in the Associated Press preseason poll.

It was only the second shutout suffered by the Seminoles in Bobby Bowden's 142 games as head coach. The other one, also at the hands of Miami by a 47-0 score, came in the second game of the 1976 season, Bowden's first at Florida State.

Miami marched 61 yards following the opening kickoff and Carlos Huerta's first collegiate field goal, a 39-yarder, gave the Hurricanes a 3-0 lead just 3:14 into the season.

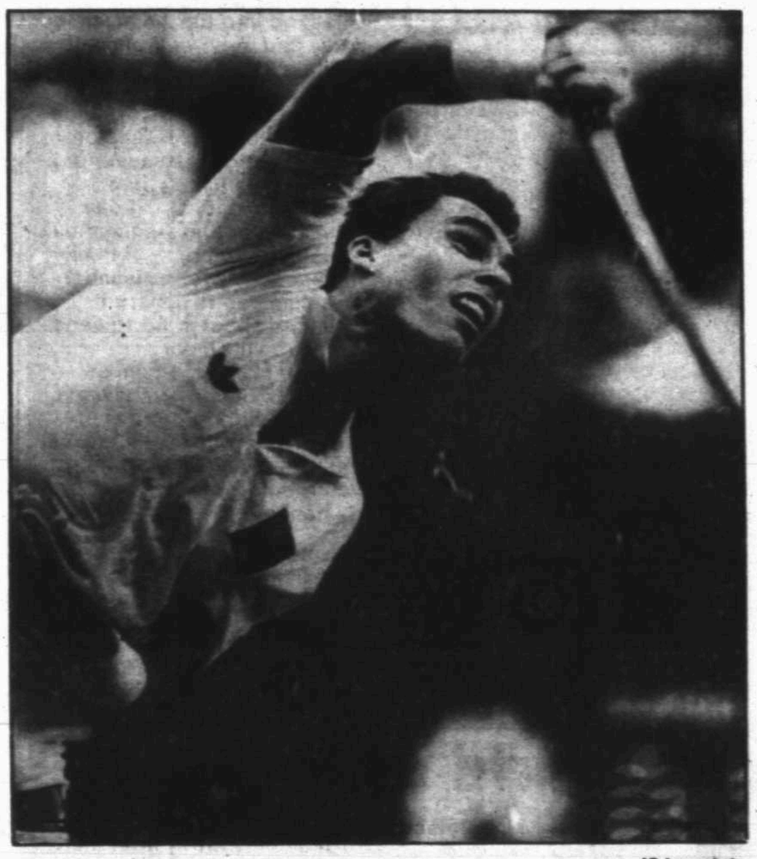

A 36-yard interception return by strong safety Bobby Harden to the Florida State 20 set up Gary's 2-yard touchdown run on the second play of the second quarter.

Huerta's conversion made it 10-0 and the Hurricanes took a 17-0 lead on Walsh's 19-yard pass to sophomore tight end Rob Chudzinski, one of Miami's 10 first-time starters, with 11 seconds left in the second period.

The 45-yard scoring drive followed a 29-yard punt by Florida State's Tim Corlew.

Walsh also threw a 5-yard pass to tailback Leonard Conley at 6:06 of the third period. The score came one play after an official's ruling went Miami's way.

Walsh threw a 36-yard pass to wide receiver Randal Hill at the Florida State 17. It appeared to be an incompletion, but it was ruled a fumble.

Graf rolls on; other seeds lose

U.S. Open

NEW YORK (AP) — Steffi Graf routed another opponent in her quest for the Grand Slam, while Henri Leconte became the latest victim of an Australian upset at the U.S. Open Saturday.

Graf won her 31st straight match, breezing past Nathalie Herreman of France 6-0, 6-1 in 45 minutes to advance to the fourth round at the National Tennis Center.

"Sure, you want a tougher match," said Graf, who has lost a total of four games in her first three matches. "I'm just hoping that the next one will be tougher."

Leconte, the No. 10 men's seed, was beaten by John Frawley 6-3, 6-4, 6-3. The Frenchman was the fourth men's seed to be ousted from the tournament by an Australian.

On Thursday, Darren Cahill beat No. 5 Boris Becker and Mark Woodforde eliminated No. 16 John McEnroe. The next day, No. 7 Yannick Noah quit because of painful knees while trailing Jason Stoltenberg in the third set.

"It's a big help to watch on TV and see Darren beat Becker and Woody beat McEnroe," said Frawley, ranked 45th in the world. "You walk out on the court feeling these guys are beatable."

Leconte was one of five seeds eliminated Saturday.

Eighth-seeded Miloslav Mecir, who reached the final in 1986, was beaten by Emilio Sanchez of Spain 6-3, 3-6, 7-6 (7-3), 6-1, and No. 14 Andres Gomez was defeated by Aaron Krickstein 6-4, 4-6, 6-4, 6-4.

The ninth women's seed, Lori McNeil, fell to Judith Wiesner of Austria 7-6 (7-3), 3-6, 6-4, and No. 15 Sylvia Hanika lost to American Patty Fendick 6-7 (4-7), 6-3, 7-5.

"I was too cautious to go for it — to take a crack at the ball," said McNeil, who beat Chris Evert in the quarterfinals last year and then extended Graf to three sets in the semifinals. "I guess when you chip and charge, everything has to be perfect."

McNeil, Leconte and Gomez were beaten on the grandstand court, which adjoins the stadium. Eight of the 14 seeds eliminated so far have lost on the same court.

Second-seeded Mats Wilander and No. 3 Stefan Edberg moved into the fourth round with victories over fellow Swedes.

Wilander, the Australian and French Open winner, beat former NCAA champion Mikael Pernfors 6-4, 6-0, 7-5. Edberg, the reigning Wimbledon champion, downed Johan Carlsson 6-0, 7-5, 6-2 in a night match.

Wilander, who won a five-setter over Kevin Curren in the previous round, said it was hard to concentrate against Pernfors because they are close friends.

"I thought I played pretty well," Wilander said. "A lot of games went to deuce and I won the tough, important points."

In women's play, Evert beat American Michelle Torres 6-3, 6-3. But it took the six-time champion 97 minutes to down her 82nd-ranked opponent — the combined time of Graf's last two matches.

"I can't win the tournament if I play the way I did today," said Evert, the third seed. "My concentration was on and off. I was so sharp yesterday, but today I was sloppy at times."

Graf, seeking the first Grand Slam since 1970, lost only point on her serve in the first set. She lost the opening game of the second set on a double fault — one of three on the day — but was never remotely threatened by Herreman, ranked 119th in the world.

Graf's toughest battle so far has been staving off boredom. To amuse herself, she is experimenting with "crazy things" like rushing the net on her first serve.

Aussies invade Forest Hills for upset victories

NEW YORK (AP) — They come from the land Down Under and they're turning the U.S. Open upside down.

Australia, which ruled men's tennis for two decades but has had only Pat Cash in the top 10 in the 1980s, is on the rise. Cash, the 1987 Wimbledon champion, isn't here, sidelined with an Achilles tendon injury. The Aussies haven't missed him.

Four young Australians have knocked off seeded players in the Open. Darren Cahill, ranked 33rd in the world, ousted No. 5 Boris Becker. Mark Woodforde, rated 36th, beat No. 16 John McEnroe — he also eliminated McEnroe from the Canadian Open last month. John Frawley, whose brother Rod was Australia's top player earlier in the decade, took out No. 10 Henri Leconte. And Jason Stoltenberg, the best junior player in the world last year, was ahead of Yannick Noah when the No. 7 seed retired with an injury.

Call them the Awesome Aussies.

"It's a big help to watch on TV and see Woody beat McEnroe and Darren beat Becker," Frawley said Saturday after his straight set win against Leconte. "You walk out on the court and these guys are beatable.

"When Pat won Wimbledon, the Australians started to realize we had improved tremendously. We felt, 'Hey, we've all got a chance to beat the top players.'

"We're all good players. Cash is in the top 10 and we're all trying to get up there. Just because he's out of the tournament doesn't mean we should fall down."

Not only haven't they fallen, the Aussies have been risen quickly. All four are considered rank outsiders to win here, but their strong showing certainly bodes well for Australian tennis.

"It's great to see so many Aussies coming up and having good wins," said Stoltenberg, 18 and ranked 100th in the world. "I think it did help me. If Woody and Darren can beat two players in the top 10 ...

"I think it's because we have such a good junior program. There's not another one better in the world. A lot of money is put into Australian junior tennis. We try and get results and that's what we are doing."

Sunday's Question— Most hits in a nine-inning major league baseball game?

Saturday's Answer— Ted Giannoulas of San Diego, Calif. is the Famous Chicken, who has come a long way since his beginnings as a radio station mascot.

Baseball Today...

1906 — The New York Highlanders blanked the Boston Red Sox twice, 7-0 and 1-0, to set a major league mark by winning their fifth straight doubleheader.

1916 — Long time pitching rivals Christy Mathewson and Mordecai Brown closed out their careers, by special arrangement, in the same game. Mathewson won the game 10-8.

1928 — The Boston Braves started a grueling string that would have them play nine straight doubleheaders, a major league record.

1941 — The New York Yankees clinched the pennant on the earliest date in baseball history with a 6-3 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

1966 — Los Angeles became the first team in major league history to draw over two million people at home and on the road as the Dodgers beat the Reds 8-6 in front of 18,670 Cincinnati fans.

Nebraska, Georgia, Clemson impress pollsters with victories

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — Quarterback Steve Taylor ran for two touchdowns and passed for another Saturday to lead second-ranked Nebraska past Utah State 63-13.

Taylor ran for scores of 22 and 15 yards in the first half and hit Richard Bell on an 11-yard pass to cap a 56-second, 74-yard scoring drive late in the first half.

Fullback Sam Schmidt added a 6-yard TD run following an 18-yard Taylor sprint in the first quarter for Nebraska, 2-0.

Taylor's 37-yard pass to Bell on the first drive of the second half set up a 7-yard Ken Clark touchdown run before Utah State, 0-1, scored its first points on a 1-yard TD pass from Brent Snyder to Patrick Newman.

Terry Rodgers added another Husker touchdown in the third period with a 2-yard run for a 42-7 Nebraska lead.

On the first play of the fourth quarter, reserve quarterback Gerry Gdowski hit Brad Devall for a 6-yard Nebraska scoring pass on fourth-and-four, then third-string quarterback Mickey Joseph ran 8 yards for another Husker score with 13:24 to play.

Gdowski added his second touchdown with a 1-yard run less than seven minutes later.

Snyder teamed up with Kendall Smith on a 15-yard scoring pass for the Aggies' other score.

Georgia 28, Tennessee 17

Rodney Hampton ran for 196 yards and two touchdowns and Tim Worley added 144 yards and two scores as No. 12 Georgia used an overpowering ground game to down 18th-ranked Tennessee.

Hampton scored on runs of 43 yards in the first quarter and went two yards on fourth down with 6:35 remaining to give the Bulldogs an 11-point lead.

Worley's scores in the season opener for both teams came in the second half, a 3-yard run following a fumble recovery and a 15-yard scamper that was set up by Hampton's 56-yard run.

The ground assault enabled Georgia to start Coach Vince Dooley's 25th season with a victory, leaving him seven shy of becoming the 10th coach in NCAA Division 1-A history to reach the 200 plateau.

The Bulldogs had to overcome the pinpoint passing of Jeff Francis, who became Tennessee's all-time leader in passing yardage.

Francis hit 25 of 39 passes for 354 yards, lifting his career total to 3,989 and breaking the record of 3,823 set by Alan Cockrell from 1981-83.

Francis scored one touchdown on a 6-yard scramble and the other Vols touchdown came on a 20-yard run by Reggie Cobb.

Chip McCallum kicked a 24-yard field goal for the Vols.

Top 20

South Carolina 31, North Carolina 10

Junior tailback Harold Green rushed for 100 yards and two touchdowns Saturday night as No. 19 South Carolina overpowered North Carolina in the season opener for both teams.

Todd Ellis threw for 290 yards and two touchdowns for the Gamecocks.

Green, who caught five of Ellis' passes for 68 yards, ignited South Carolina in the second half before suffering an leg injury with 5:52 remaining in the game and was carried off the field.

His longest run of the game was 28 yards and his longest pass reception went for 33 yards, setting up his second touchdown and putting the game on ice for the Gamecocks.

South Carolina, which finished its 1987 season with an 8-4 record, saw its rushing attack sputter much of the game, but came up with big pass plays to keep drives going.

The Gamecocks climbed to a 10-0 lead in the first quarter before the Tar Heels charged back in the second period on a 43-yard, end-around touchdown run by flanker Randy Marriott.

South Carolina's first points came on its second drive when Collin Mackie kicked hit a 29-yard field goal.

The Gamecocks' first touchdown was scored on a 48-yard pass from Ellis to tight end Carl Platt, who battled North Carolina's Dan Vooletich for the ball at the 15-yard line and then charged into the end zone.

The deciding points, scored on Green's 2-yard plunge, came with 35 seconds left in the first half.

Clemson 40, Virginia Tech 7

Quarterback Rodney Williams scored once and deftly ran the option offense in a 24-point second quarter outburst as the fourth-ranked Tigers rolled in the season opener for both teams.

With the victory, Williams became the all-time winningest quarterback in Clemson history with 23 victories, one more than Homer Jordan had from 1979 to 1982.

Williams, a 6-foot-2, 210-pound senior, and Clemson started out slowly, managing just one yard on their initial possession. But the Tigers scored on their final five possessions of the first half to put the game away early before a crowd of 80,500.

W. Virginia 62, Bowling Green 14

Sophomore quarterback Major Harris directed six first-half scoring drives Saturday to lead the No. 16 Mountaineers over the Falcons in the season opener for both teams.

Harris had 163 yards total offense in the first half, throwing for 90 yards and one touchdown and rushing for 73 yards and another score.

Hogs crush UOP

Arkansas 63, Pacific 14

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — Fullback Barry Foster scored three touchdowns and quarterback Quinn Grovey showed that he can throw the football as the University of Arkansas outmanned Pacific 63-14 Saturday night in the season opener for both teams.

It was the most points by the Razorbacks since they beat Northwest Louisiana 64-0 in 1947.

Foster caught a 25-yard scoring pass from Grovey and scored on two short runs as Arkansas built a 28-7 lead in the first 25 minutes.

Arkansas Coach Ken Hatfield promised some offensive changes in 1988 and the crowd applauded the Razorbacks' first play — an incomplete pass. Grovey completed five of 10 passes for 97 yards in the first quarter — Arkansas attempted an average of only 10 passes per game in 1987.

Arkansas was up 14-0 barely four minutes into the game.

The Razorbacks went 48 yards in 1:40 the first time they had the ball. Grovey started the drive with a 13-yard pass to Derek Russell and ended it when he rolled right and threw to Foster at the 5. Foster bulled over a couple of defenders for the score.

After three plays netted a yard, Pacific punted and Arkansas started from the Tigers' 46. Grovey threw 20 yards to Tim Horton to start things and Foster scored from the 2 on the sixth play of the 92-second drive.

Ty Mason's interception and 11-yard return, after the ball was tipped by fellow linebacker LaSalle Harper, put Arkansas in business on the Pacific 13. Five plays later, Grovey scored from the 1.

The Razorbacks had 210 yards at the half — 111 passing and 99 rushing.

Fresno St. 68, New Mexico 21

Redshirt freshman Mark Barsotti threw for 221 yards and a touchdown as Fresno State scored nearly at will against defenseless New Mexico.

The defeat extended New Mexico's losing streak to 12 games.

Fresno State, a Big West team, scored on its first 10 possessions to take a commanding 54-7 lead.

Fullback Myron Jones, who ran for 57 yards on 9 carries, scored on runs of 7 and 24 yards and tailback Darrel Rosette added scoring runs of 1 and 15 yards.

Steve Loop added four field goals for the Bulldogs.

Syracuse 31, Temple 21

Michael Owens and Daryl Johnston staked Syracuse to a 14-0 lead with first-quarter touchdowns as the Orangemen extended their unbeaten string to 14 games.

Syracuse, which boasts the longest unbeaten streak in Division I, struck quickly, driving 61 yards with the opening kickoff. Owens capped the drive with a 5-yard scoring run around the left side just 3 minutes 11 seconds into the contest.

The Orangemen made it 14-0 on their next possession with a 66-yard drive that took four minutes. Johnston scored after a pass interference call gave Syracuse the ball on the Temple 1.

S. Mississippi 21, Stephen F. Austin 7

Ricky Bradley scored two second half touchdowns as Southern Mississippi defeated Stephen F. Austin to give first-year head coach Curley Hallman his first college football victory.

The Golden Eagles, 1-0, struggled early against the Lumberjacks of the Southland Conference and Division II-A. The Lumberjacks, 0-1, led 7-0 at the half on a 30-yard pass from Todd Hammel to Larry Centers.

The Eagles took the second half kickoff and drove 79 yards capped by Bradley's 7-yard touchdown run.

Baylor defense halts UNLV

WACO (AP) — Baylor sophomore running back Eldwin Raphel rushed for 142 yards on Saturday night and the Bears' swarming defense held Nevada-Las Vegas to two first downs in a 27-3 non-conference season opening victory over the Rebels.

It was the first time a Baylor running back had gained so many yards since Alfred Anderson had 142 yards in 1983 against Houston.

Freshman placekicker Jeff Ireland kicked field goals of 41, 37, 29, and 32 yards to tie a school record as the Bears of the Southwest Conference defeated the Rebels of the newly formed Big West Conference for the second consecutive year. It was only the second time the two schools had met.

Baylor's defense, led by linebacker James Francis, dominated the Rebels, limiting them to only two first downs and 46 yards total offense.

The Bears' offense was crippled in the first half by two lost fumbles and two interceptions.

Baylor took a 7-0 first period lead after Raphel of Lawton, Okla., ran 53 yards to the UNLV 2-yard line. On the next play, Eric Gilstrap covered the distance for a touchdown.

Astros Ryan four-hits Cardinals

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Nolan Ryan allowed four hits and struck out eight in seven innings and Rafael Ramirez's two-run single highlighted a six-run second as the Houston Astros beat St. Louis 10-1 Saturday night to snap the Cardinals' five-game winning streak.

It was Ryan's 271st career victory, moving him past Burleigh Grimes into 25th on the all-time list.

Ryan, 10-11, has 204 strikeouts this season. It was his 12th season with 200 or more strikeouts, extending his own major-league record. In Ryan's previous four starts, the Astros had scored four runs. Dave Meads and Brian Meyer, making his major-league debut, closed.

Kevin Bass went 3-for-4 with two RBI to lead a 13-hit attack.

The Astros battered Larry McWilliams, 4-6, and John Costello for six hits and seven runs over the first two innings. McWilliams lasted just 1 2-3 innings, the first time Houston had knocked out an opponent's starting pitcher before the sixth inning in 23 games.

Mets 2, Dodgers 1

NEW YORK — Dwight Gooden allowed six hits in eight-plus innings and outdueled John Tudor as the Mets beat Los Angeles for their 10th victory in 11 games with the Dodgers this season.

New York began the day with an 8½-game lead in the NL East over Pittsburgh. Los Angeles had a 6½-game margin over Houston. The Dodgers lost their third in a row and have scored just 17 runs in the last 12 games.

Gooden, 16-6, improved his career record against the Dodgers to 8-1.

Tudor fell to 8-7 overall and 2-2 since being acquired by Los Angeles. He gave up two runs on seven hits in six innings and slipped to 8-6 lifetime against New York.

Kevin McReynolds, leading a Mets' lineup that had a .300 average against Tudor, went 3-for-3 against the left-hander and 3-for-4 on the day. McReynolds is 6-for-10 this season versus Tudor and 14-for-36 in his career.

Padres 5, Phillies 2

PHILADELPHIA — Ed Whitson pitched an eight-hitter and Keith Moreland's two-run single broke a sixth-inning tie as San Diego reached the .500 mark for the first time in over two years.

Reds 6, Cubs 4

CHICAGO — Nick Esasky hit a three-run homer and Paul O'Neill had two doubles and a triple as Cincinnati won its fourth straight victory.

Cincinnati reliever John Franco earned his NL-leading 30th save in 31 opportunities. Since June 30, Franco has allowed just one earned run in 32 1-3 innings for an ERA of 0.28.

Expos 6, Giants 4

MONTREAL — Nelson Santovenia hit a two-run homer with two outs in the 13th inning to give the Montreal Expos 4 victory.

Mustangs' opener spoiled

S.F. natives star together for N.Y. Mets

By GEORGE VECSEY
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Their lockers are side by side, no accident. When Gregg Jefferies was taken out of the game after a collision last Wednesday, Keith Hernandez cornered him and said: "You've got a great opportunity. Don't go out unless you've got a broken leg."

The restorative power of that somewhat pungent lecture was shown Friday night when Jefferies, bruised foot and all, slashed three more hits. Hernandez loved it.

He said, "What the heck, we're homies. We played for the same coach in the Joe DiMaggio League."

Thirteen years apart but neighbors in the locker room and the batting order, the co-captain and the pheenom both played for a coach named Tony Santora in Millbrae, Calif., just down from San Francisco.

"I don't think it's anything in the water," Hernandez said. "It's the doggone wind."

On Friday night, just as the late-afternoon fog and wind came swirling in, Tony Santora was watching the Mets' game at the home of John Hernandez, with the help of a satellite dish Keith installed.

It is a familiar story that Hernandez often consults his father, a former minor league batting star, whom Keith nicknamed Juan. And it is also known that Jefferies has been groomed by his father, Rich, a junior high school coach.

It recently came out that Bob McClure, the left-handed reliever who joined the Mets, had been a Little League teammate of Hernandez back in Pacifica, Calif.

But the connection between Hernandez, 34, and Jefferies, 21, has only come out since the young man smashed 9 hits in his first 19 at-bats, including three doubles, a triple and two home runs, going into yesterday.

With his Gary Carter smile and his Len Dykstra hustle and even his glove, of all things, Jefferies has captured just about every heart in New York, except possibly for a few hearts in the Met clubhouse.

His impact on the club has been like those beloved Canadian air masses that occasionally clear out the New York pollution.

Except for the pitching, this club was stagnant until Jefferies arrived last Sunday, after Wally strained a hamstring. Wally Backman, that is. Not Wally Pipp. The ironic part was that Backman was one of the few Mets having a productive season at bat.

Jefferies has been like a bowling ball hitting in the pocket, scattering the pins and making a loud clatter and putting big numbers on the scoresheet. Davey Johnson calls it "a very pleasant situation. Guys create tension by competing."

Three or four infielders are not sure about the pleasant part. Jefferies could be starting in the championship series, and a few of them could be playing for San Diego or in the Designated Hitter League by next April.

Darryl Strawberry — who just had as gruesome an August as Michael Dukakis and the Yankees — did not rip up the league in his first five starts back in 1983. Mantle had to be sent down in 1951 and Willie Mays started so badly he thought he should have been.

It is a safe bet that none of these pheenoms had as much preparation as Jefferies, who was raised to play ball by his father, a former college infielder, and was later turned over to Tony Santora.

Santora, 74, knows a thing or two about talent. When he was 9, he joined the Telegraph Hill Boys' Club on North Beach, not far from Fisherman's Wharf.

"When I was 15, I was playing for Sunset Produce," Santora recalled Friday night in a telephone conversation. "We played at Fort McDowell, on the island behind Alcatraz. The first time up, Joe hit one over the tennis court behind left field. The second time up he hit one over the center-field fence. Joe could hit."

Joe — last name: DiMaggio — moved up to the hometown Seals and the New York Yankees and the Hall of Fame. Santora said, "I would have given my right arm to get an offer," but he played semipro ball and worked as a linotype operator and coached in the league named after his old teammate from Sunset Produce.

"This is my 38th season coaching," Santora said. "I knew John Hernandez since he was a kid. The best batting average in San Francisco high school history, .667. The first time I saw Keith, I said, 'John, the kid can't miss.' "

Santora also coached Danny Frisella, the former Met relief pitcher who died in an auto accident in 1977, and Barry Bonds, now with the Pirates. And eight years ago, he began to coach Rich Jefferies's son.

Rangers victimized by veteran, rookie

TORONTO (AP) — Rance Mulliniks' three-run homer broke a sixth-inning tie and reliever Tony Castillo earned his first major-league victory as the Toronto Blue Jays beat the Texas Rangers 7-4 Saturday.

Fred McGriff hit his 32nd homer of the season and second in as many games for the Blue Jays. McGriff's homer Friday night broke the Toronto single-season record for left-handed hitters. The Rangers, who have lost four straight, managed six hits, none after Steve Buechele's two-out homer in the fourth.

Castillo, 1-0, came on in the fifth after starter Jim Clancy hit leadoff batter Jeff Kunkel with a pitch. The 25-year-old Castillo, making his sixth appearance in the majors, allowed no hits, walked two and struck out one in 2 1-3 innings.

Duane Ward earned his 11th save, allowing no hits and striking out six, including the side in the ninth, in 2 2-3 innings.

Tony Fernandez led off the sixth against Jeff Russell, 10-7, with a single and Lloyd Moseby walked. Mulliniks then hit Russell's first pitch to right for his 12th homer as Toronto took a 6-3 lead. Fernandez hit his fifth homer in the seventh.

Texas took a 1-0 lead in the first when Oddibe McDowell scored from third on Ruben Sierra's double-play grounder but Toronto came back with two runs in the second on McGriff's homer and Manny Lee's RBI double.

Jesse Barfield's run-scoring double made it 3-1 in the third. Texas tied it on the fourth on solo homers by Pete O'Brien, his 14th, and Buechele, his 16th.

Sierra had a run-scoring groundout in the eighth.

Twins 8, Royals 6

Pinch-hitter Jim Dwyer's two-run single off relief ace Steve Farr capped a six-run rally in the seventh inning to lift the Twins.

Three Kansas City pitchers, including loser Jerry Don Gleaton, 0-3, failed to get an out in the seventh as the Twins sent 11 batters to the plate.

The rally included Kirby Puckett's 100th RBI of the season and 400th of his career.

Singles by Al Newman, Dan Gladden and Tom Herr made it 6-3 and chased starter Bret Saberhagen. After Jeff Montgomery yielded Puckett's RBI double, Gleaton relieved and Kent Hrbek blooped a two-run double down the left-field line to tie the game.

Gleaton hit Gene Larkin with a pitch and Randy Bush loaded the bases with a bunt single. Farr relieved and, one out later, gave up Dwyer's line drive to center.

It was Dwyer's first hit since Minnesota acquired him Aug. 29 and the 86th pinch hit — third-best ever — of his career.

Athletics 5, Yankees 4

Jose Canseco hit a three-run homer in the eighth inning off recently acquired reliever Dale Mohorcic as the Athletics won a fight-marred game Saturday.

After Canseco put the A's ahead with his major-league leading 35th home run, Carney Lansford doubled and Neil Allen replaced Mohorcic, 2-7. Pinch-hitter Dave Parker struck out and Allen then hit Mark McGwire on the helmet with a pitch.

McGwire charged Allen and both benches emptied as players from both sides gathered around the mound. McGwire and Allen wrestled but it didn't appear any punches were thrown. Allen and McGwire were both ejected.

Pinch-hitter Stan Javier led off the A's eighth with a single and Dave Henderson walked off Mohorcic, who was making his first appearance in a Yankee uniform after being acquired on Tuesday from Texas.

Canseco hit an 0-1 pitch on a line over the right-field fence, giving 104 runs batted in.

Eric Plunk, 6-2, pitched 4 2-3 innings in relief for the victory and Dennis Eckersley pitched the ninth for his 37th save, an Oakland club record.

New York starter Ron Guidry allowed three hits in five innings in his first start since July 28.

Oakland starter Bob Welch left the game with one out in the fourth after straining his right Achilles tendon. The Yankees scored three runs in the fourth, two off Plunk, to take a 4-0 lead.

Plunk entered the game with Joel Skinner at second base and one out. He walked Rickey Henderson and the runners advanced on a wild pitch.

Brewers 7, Tigers 3

Joey Meyer hit a three-run homer and Jeffrey Leonard added a two-run shot as Milwaukee beat slumping Detroit to send the Tigers to their 10th loss in 12 games.

It was the fourth-place Brewers' fifth straight victory and moved them within five games of first place and one game of third-place New York. The Brewers, who have gained six games on the Tigers in the last 13 days, don't play any more games with AL East teams after this four-game series.

Leonard gave the Brewers a 2-0 lead when he homered in the first inning after Paul Molitor led off with a single. Meyer added an RBI single in the inning to chase starter Steve Searcy, 0-2.

In the eighth, Deer singled off reliever Mike Henneman and stole second and Greg Brock was intentionally walked. Meyer then hit his 11th home run to give the Brewers a 7-2 lead.

Mariners 1, Orioles 0

Mark Langston pitched a three-hitter and Mickey Brantley had a run-scoring double in the sixth inning for the Mariners.

Langston, 11-10, struck out eight and walked four en route to his sixth complete game.

In the sixth, Jim Presley doubled off starter Jose Bautista, 6-12, and scored on Brantley's double.

Bautista pitched eight innings and allowed four hits while striking out two and walking none. In his last nine starts, the Orioles have scored 16 runs.

Center fielder Ken Gerhart robbed Seattle's Jay Buhner of an extra base hit with a leaping catch of a 410-foot drive in the fifth inning.

The game was played 1 hour, 45 minutes, fastest in the majors this season.

No more surprises in store for NFL 'elite'

By THOMAS GEORGE
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The mark of the National Football League's 69th season, which kicks off Sunday afternoon, is that last year's surprise teams will not be surprises anymore.

When December rolls around, don't be shocked by the Minnesota Vikings and the New Orleans Saints. Don't let the Buffalo Bills and the Philadelphia Eagles catch you napping.

The NFL's mainstays won't.

Maybe most know that the Miami Dolphins, the San Francisco 49ers, the Washington Redskins, the Dallas Cowboys and the Denver Broncos are the most successful teams of the 1980s. But here is a hint of things to come: the league's best matchup Sunday isn't in Denver or Chicago or any other NFL city with a winning tradition.

It's in Indianapolis.

Indianapolis?

"I think there's something funny and exciting going on in the wind here," said Jerry Glanville, the Houston Oilers' coach, of the Oilers-Indianapolis Colts opener.

"Just two or three seasons ago, few would be interested in an opening Colts-Oilers game. But here's two teams capable of playing for the AFC championship," he said.

NFL Preview

Does anyone remember that the Colts won the American Football Conference East last season or that the Oilers, who were undefeated in a preseason that ended with a 54-10 whipping of the Cowboys, made the playoffs last season? That last season the Vikings were a whisker from reaching the Super Bowl? That the Saints were 12-3?

These teams — and add the Bills and Eagles — are no longer knocking on the door. This season they are set to crash the party and light up the league.

Glanville wears all black on the sidelines and his defense leaves teams blue. Some NFL coaches and players believe that the Oilers may hit often but also late, regarding them as cheap-shot artists. Glanville said: "When you're finally getting noticed and recognized for playing hard, when you're finally beating the people that have been beating up on you, well, that's a natural response."

The Colts' defense is also bruising, but their game begins and ends with "see Eric Dickerson run left, right, up the middle and sideways."

Over the past five seasons, Dickerson has never rushed for fewer than 1,234 yards in a year. His 8,256 rushing yards is the most any NFL back has ever totaled in his first five seasons.

At Dickerson's current pace, in his 11th season he would surpass Walter Payton's career records of 21,803 combined net yards and 16,726 rushing yards and Jim Brown's 126 career touchdowns.

"I'm happy about the good things that have happened, and I feel I'm the best at my game," Dickerson said unabashedly.

"But I want a Super Bowl," he added. "I want to be a champion. That's what everyone plays this game for. The changing guard in the NFL is exciting. Wouldn't that be something if the Lombardi Trophy wound up in Minnesota or Houston or better, right here in Indianapolis? It would be remarkable, and it would be due."

Certainly. But if you ponder now what's happening as the season bows in, there's one thing it would not be — a surprise.

Plenty of old faces are in new places this season, including the former Bear Wilber Marshall, now a Redskin, and the former Pittsburgh Steeler Mark Malone, a San Diego Charger.

Possibly the change of most impact is Tony Dorsett from Dallas to Denver, losers of the last two Super Bowls.

Dorsett starts at tailback when the Broncos are at home to the Seattle Seahawks Sunday afternoon. Look for his prescence to alter things immediately, and perhaps get Denver over its Super Bowl hump.

"We've been noted for John Elway's passing and, really, that's not a bad thing to be known for," said Dan Reeves, the Denver coach. "But we'd like to get Tony the ball 20 to 25 times a game. That will be a big change around here. It's meant rethinking some old values."

A familiar face in an old place is Neal Anderson, the Bears' tailback. Anderson was a starter last season, but Payton wasn't far away, always poised and prepared to spark the Bears. With Payton's retirement, Anderson officially begins life without that long, luminous shadow.

"I learned a lot from Walter, and I know he's always nearby for support," Anderson said. "I can't fill the shoes of the best producing back in NFL history. I gotta be me. And I think that's enough."

Fans will see two strategies of tremendous popularity this season: the increasing insertion of tight ends at fullback and offensive alignments that attempt to hide the pass by showing run.

The terms H-Back and F-Back and U-Back are relatively new, glitzy monikers for using tight ends at the fullback position. The Redskins, especially in their noted counter-gap play, employ the tactic as efficiently as any team.

"The idea is to have a bigger guy back there who can not only catch passes but is often a bigger, stronger guy who blocks more efficiently," said Joe Gibbs, the Redskins' coach.

N. Koreans ask others to boycott

TOKYO (AP) — North Korea called on other countries Saturday to join in a boycott that will cripple the Olympic Games in Seoul, South Korea.

"This will leave another stain in the Olympic history," the North's Olympic Committee said in a statement carried by the Korean Central News Agency.

Communist North Korea is one of six nations staying away from the Games, which begin Sept. 17, but the Soviet Union and China, the two largest communist nations, are participating along with the entire Eastern-European bloc which boycotted the 1984 Games in Los Angeles.

"For us, the Olympic Games are important, but more important is the future destiny of our entire nation," the North said. "For this reason, we cannot take part in the Olympic Games that is forced by single-handed hosting."

The North Koreans also lashed out at the United States, Japan and South Korea, charging they conspired to hold the Games in Seoul to insure the two Koreas, separated since the end of World War II and bitter adversaries since the 1950-53 Korean War, remain divided.

"By holding the Olympiad in Seoul, they tried to give impression (that) South Korea, the complete colony, military base of the United States, was an 'independent state' and legalize the occupation of South Korea by the U.S. troops," the North's Olympic Committee said.

North Korea has demanded to cohost the Games. The International Olympic Committee has repeatedly said the Olympics are awarded to a single city and cannot be shared, but the IOC and South Korea have offered a compromise that would allow the North to host five Olympic sports categories.

The North has turned down the offer.

In South Korea, Shin Hyon-ung of the Seoul Olympic Organizing Committee said, "Unfortunately, we've had no official response from (North Korea). But we're keeping the door open until the last minute."

The formal deadline for entries to the Olympics expired Friday and South Korea has said the North has until the last day of the Games to show up in Seoul, where a record 161 nations are due to converge for the biggest Olympics ever.

Flags of 161 nations were raised in opening ceremonies of the Olympic Village in Seoul, S. Korea Saturday, where 15,000 people will be housed for the upcoming Olympic Games.

USOC box official questions priorities

Olympics

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — Since 1984, the U.S. Olympic Committee seems to have forgotten its purpose and is "too busy building our bureaucracy," a USOC official has charged in a newspaper article.

Col. Don Hull, president of the USA Amateur Boxing Federation, said the priorities of the USOC "definitely are screwed up, and I am worried about the direction we are headed."

Hull made the comment in a copyright story published in the Sunday editions of the Colorado Springs Gazette Telegraph.

The Gazette Telegraph spent four months conducting interviews with key people associated with the U.S. Olympic movement and examining 10 years of USOC tax records and annual audits.

"The reason for our existence is the USA athlete," Hull said. "Everything we do should be with that in mind, and that's the way it was when (former executive director) Don Miller was in charge. He worked his butt off getting money for our athletes, and that's where a lot of it went.

"Now, of course, there's a lot more money than there was. But since 1984, starting when George Miller took over Olympic House, it seems like we've been too busy building our bureaucracy. We've got a lot of new guys in there who have no background in the Olympic movement.

"It's a name game now, with all the titles and departments at Olympic House.

The Gazette Telegraph said that since the USOC moved from New York City to Colorado Springs 10 years ago, it has raised more than $429 million toward preparing Olympic athletes.

A portion of that has gone to the 38 National Governing Bodies that rule over individual sports. The NGBs raised at least another $180 million of their own between 1985 and 1987, their tax filings show.

But no one has calculated exactly how much they may collectively have raised during the past 10 years, according to Kenneth Clarke, a USOC deputy executive director in charge of financial projects.

The current four-year budget started at $118.1 million in 1985, but has been revamped upwards each year, to $149.9 million this year — a 27 percent increase that far outpaced the cumulative 13 percent inflation rate for the same period, the newspaper said.

The Gazette Telegraph said the USOC "has looked to Congress for help, borrowed from a trust fund it administers, begged off paying grants already allocated to NGBs, and borrowed from the bank and the NBC television network.

"Yet all those millions translated to only six American medals last February in Calgary. And expectations are not high for the upcoming Summer Games in Seoul, South Korea."

The Gazette Telegraph quoted staff members as saying the Olympic House — the USOC's executive headquarters — is in disarray, fraught with questionable management practices and internal haggling.

The Gazette Telegraph also said its investigation into USOC found:

— USOC dollars have been used on first-class air fare for executives and charters of private planes, including a $45,000 chartered jet used by two USOC officials for a business trip to Europe.

— It appears USOC officials have at times turned to a friend or associate when letting contracts for Olympic services.

— During the last two Olympic Games, the USOC rented guest space costing nearly $400,000, and it went unused.

— USOC officials got rid of a former executive director by buying him out at a cost of $700,000, which included the cost of his expensive town house.

— A USOC official was caught falsifying parking passes at the recent Calgary Games to get Olympic officials closer to the arenas.

— A USOC official continues to work at Olympic House after he was implicated in a blood-doping incident for which a skier was disqualified from participating in the Calgary Games.

— USOC officials never sought prosecution of an accountant they say invented his own company and wrote Olympic checks to himself.

Many of the expenditures have come as a surprise to some of the USOC executive board members who approved them. They complain that budget items often are so broad they don't know what they're approving. And they wonder if mismanagement is siphoning money that should be going to the athletes.

Green grabs advantage

Canadian Open

OAKVILLE, Ontario (AP) — Ken Green birdied the final hole Saturday to take a two-shot lead after the third round of the $750,000 Canadian Open Golf Tournament.

Green, who lost two playoffs earlier this season, shot a soggy 68 and completed three trips over the the rain-soaked Glen Abbey Golf Club course in 13-under-par 203.

Jay Delsing, a non-winner in five years on the PGA Tour, was second at 205 going into Sunday's final round of the chase for a $135,000 first prize.

Delsing also had a 68 that included a double bogey and an eagle.

"Not much wind and with the moisture, with the greens soft, these guys really took advantage of it," Delsing said of the exceptionally low scoring.

Bob Tway, who hasn't won since his Player of the Year season in 1986, and Scott Verplank were another stroke back at 206. Tway had a 66 and Verplank shot a 67.

Rookie John Huston made nine birdies in a 64 that lifted him into a tie at 207 with Larry Rinker, Barry Jaeckel and D.A. Weibring.

Rinker had a second consecutive 65, setting a two-round record for the course that serves as a permanent site for Canada's national championship.

Jaeckel, who got into the tournament as the 12th alternate, had a 67 and Weibring shot a 68.

PGA champion Jeff Sluman, who led or shared the lead through the first two rounds, had a two-shot lead at one point on the front nine.

But Sluman took a pair of double bogeys in a three-hole stretch and had to settle for a 73 that left him at 208.

Jack Nicklaus, who had some hopes of winning his first Canadian Open when he had a first-round 68, took himself out of contention with a frustrating 76.

At 2-over 218, he leads only two other players in the 71-man field.

White holds off foes

LPGA

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — Donna White fired a 6-under-par 66 Saturday to take a one-stroke lead after the first round of the $250,000 LPGA Rail Classic golf tournament.

White had six birdies to lift her to a one-stroke lead over Adele Lukken and Marta Figueras-Dotti, who both shot 67.

Lukken, who posted her best round in two years on the LPGA Tour, was in front until missing a 4-foot par putt on the 17th hole.

White, playing in the next group, nailed a 20-foot birdie putt on the 17th to go under 6-under and take the lead.

Figueras-Dotti, who earlier sank a 130-yard 9-iron for an eagle, dropped a 10-foot birdie putt on the same hole to gain a share of second place.

Two-time champion Betsy King, who put together a string of five consective birdies and Nancy Brown, who eagled the 505-yard, par-5 sixth hole, were tied at 68 along with Penny Hammel, Missie Berteotti, Ayako Okamoto and Vicki Fergon.

Seven players were tied at 69, three shots off the pace. Defending champion Rosie Jones finished at 1-over 73.

Elliott takes pole position for S.C. race

DARLINGTON, S.C. (AP) — Don't misunderstand Bill Elliott. He's happy to be on the pole for the 39th annual Southern 500 NASCAR stock car race.

It's just that Elliott knows all too well that where a driver starts often has little to do where he is when the checkered flag drops.

"Sure, I want to sit on the pole. Don't get me wrong," said Elliott, who has won four races and four poles this year. "It's good for sponsors and it's good for everybody involved.

"But my goal is to come out here, run good, run consistent (and) be there at the end," he said. "With that in mind, you've got a chance to win. If you are running at the end and you're competitive, you've got a chance to win."

A simple philosophy.

"It may be simple," Elliott said with a wry smile, "but it's hard to do — especially dodging all the bullets you've got to dodge as far as what goes on in a 500-mile race."

Elliott, the Winston Cup points leader, may not have too much to dodge early. He will be starting up front when the green flag drops Sunday at Darlington Interntional Raceway.

Elliott, driving a Ford, won the pole with a record-setting 160.827 mph on Thursday on the 1.366-mile egg-shaped track. Elliott was one of nine drivers to break the Southern 500 qualifying record of 158.489 mph set by Tim Richmond in 1986.

Starting alongside the Dawsonville, Ga., native will be defending champion Dale Earnhardt, who turned in a lap of 160.198 mph in his Chevrolet.

Ruidoso readies for A-A Futurity

Racing

RUIDOSO DOWNS, N.M. (AP) — For most of his 54 years, John Clements has lived in a blue collar world — the broken bones of his youth mirrored by the callous nature of his current career.

A former rodeo cowboy turned horse trainer, Clements had settled into a comfortable if relatively anonymous life in northern California.

But all of that began to change 10 months ago, when Clements and a quarter horse named Sig Hanson were thrown together.

The now 2-year-old brown colt has developed into one of the country's best runners this summer and is headed for the biggest race in his and Clements' career.

Unbeaten in five races, Sig Hanson is the expected favorite in the field of 10 horses that will run in Monday's 30th All American Futurity, a 440-yard race for quarter horses that will pay the winner $1 million out of the gross purse of $2.5 million.

Six colts and four fillies qualified for the sprint after two sets of trials in August. The elimination process trimmed an original field of several hundred horses to the final 10.

Three fillies — See Me Do It, Our Special Girl and Fabulous Figure — are expected to be the top challengers to Sig Hanson, along with another consistent winner this summer, the colt Merganser.

The runner-up horse in Monday's race will earn $343,500 and third place is worth $153,500, with the prize money dwindling to the $51,000 that is assured the 10th place horse.

It all translates to considerably more money than Clements could have envisioned three decades ago, when the Montrose, Colo., native would ride bulls and bucking horses for a $120 pot. Should Sig Hanson win, Clements' cut of the $1 million first place check will be $100,000.

Clements said that possibility has been on his mind ever since he left Sacramento earlier this summer for the 15-hour drive to New Mexico.

"Naturally the money is part of it," said Clements. "But I've also had phone calls from people I haven't seen in 20 years, most of them just wanting to wish me luck."

Quarter horse racing has drawn Clements back to his rodeo roots. It was in this southern New Mexico resort town that Clements did much of his rodeoing during the 1950s and early 1960s. He rode his first bull at age 13, and by the time he retired in 1973, bore most of the trademarks of the sport.

"You name it and I broke it," said Clements. "I had a bull's horn go through my cheek, I broke a leg saddle bronc riding, broke a bunch of ribs and had a steer land on my back."

Fifteen years ago, Clements decided it was easier to train horses than to keep falling off of them. He settled in the Sacramento area and went to work.

Last November, Penn Valley, Calif., horse owner Jay Parsons turned Sig Hanson over to Clements.

"We breezed him real easy the first time and he looked very good," said Clements. "By the second time I breezed him I knew he was going to be a nice racehorse."

Sig Hanson was sent to Bay Meadows in February and won his first race by a length. Since then, he has won the $600,000 Dash For Cash Futurity at Los Alamitos and ran away from his competition in the two All American Futurity trials, winning by four and five lengths.

Sig Hanson's time trial win in 21.500 seconds was the fastest of the final 10 trials held Aug. 24. With his five-for-five record, the colt has earned $239,980.

Clements said this week he doesn't know if Sig Hanson has reached his peak, finding it hard to imagine the colt could run a better race than he did in the trials.

"He may have peaked out his last race," said Clements. "He ran an awfully good race."

As is the case with many 2-year-old horses, Sig Hanson came up a little sore after the two grueling trials. Clements said it's a common problem with the best of runners.

"If they can run, you end up with problems," he said. "A bad runner doesn't run hard enough to hurt himself."

See Me Do It also is undefeated in five starts. The filly earned the majority of her current $33,409 by winning the Oklahoma Springs Futurity at Blue Ribbon Downs last April.

Owned by Jean Dillard of Ringling, Okla., See Me Do It was sired by On A High, the 1983 winner of the All American Futurity.

Both Sig Hanson and See Me Do It were supplemented into the trials, with their owners paying a late fee of $50,000 for a shot at making the futurity field.

Our Special Girl, owned by Jack Hall of Corona, Calif., has won six of 11 races this year and finished fourth behind Sig Hanson in the Dash For Cash Futurity in July.

Fabulous Figure, owned by Betty Dillard and Betty Bryson, both of Dallas, has been almost as impressive as Sig Hanson and See Me Do It, with eight victories in nine starts.

Merganser goes into the race as the leading money winner among quarter horses this season. He has won nine of 11 races and has earnings of $321,049 for owners Jerry Wells and Ronald Shalz of Sulphur, Okla.

Taylor takes away junior welter title

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Meldrick Taylor was the last of five 1984 Olympians in Lou Duva's stable to get a shot at the title. After a four-year wait, he made the most of the opportunity.

Taylor took control in the third round with superior quickness and punching ability and stopped Buddy McGirt in the final round to capture the IBF junior welterweight title Saturday.

"The time was right," Taylor said. "I waited my turn and this was the right time. It wasn't too soon and it wasn't too late. It's four years after the Olympics. It took me to this day to get the experience and when my time came I did what I had to do."

McGirt had no argument with that. He threw his best punch at Taylor in the opening round and knew he was in trouble when Taylor fired right back at him.

"I just went out and tried to get the respect early," McGirt said. "But he was hitting me a hundred to one. So I said we have to change those tactics. But no matter what I did didn't work today and everything worked for Meldrick Taylor. I said earlier this week everyone has their time to shine. Today was Meldrick Taylor's day."

Duva said he did not know who Taylor would fight next, although they would like a big money bout with the winner of the fight between WBA champion Julio Cesar Chavez and W

COLLEGE

East Texas State 25, Livingston 14
Mike Trigg threw two touchdown passes and East Texas State held Livingston to minus 25 yards rushing.
Trigg, who completed 7-of-16 passes for 123 yards, tossed a 58-yard scoring pass to Gary Compton just 1:35 into the game and added a 22-yard touchdown pass to Ronnie Prater with 7:06 left in the third quarter.

UTEP 37, Mankato St. 3
Senior running back John Harvey scored two touchdowns and broke Texas-El Paso's all-time rushing record.
Harvey gained 125 yards in 15 carries to boost his career mark to 2,937. The old record was 2,834 yards set by Robert Elliott from 1974 to 1977.
UTEP scored on its first two possessions. The Miners scored on the second play of their first possession when quarterback Pat Hegarty hit wide receiver Reggie Barrett for a 69 yard touchdown.

Maryland 27, Louisville 16
Junior Neil O'Donnell threw two touchdown passes and ran for another score in a 21-0 third-quarter burst that carried Maryland to a 27-16 victory over Louisville in a season-opener for both schools Saturday night.

Grambling St. 27, Alcorn St. 13
Fred Jones ran 34 yards and Franklin Thomas caught a 30 yard pass from Clemente Gordon for second quarter touchdowns to lead Grambling State.

N. Carolina St. 45, W. Carolina 6
North Carolina State quarterback Preston Poag dived for three touchdowns and Anthony Barbour scored two touchdowns in his first collegiate game.
Poag, one of three quarterbacks used by Coach Dick Sheridan, capped drives of 21, 26 and 78 yards with his 1-yard scoring dives. Barbour, who had 47 touchdowns in his senior year at nearby Garner, N.C., High School, scored on his third play from scrimmage, running 15 yards around right end with 7:32 left in the second quarter.

Pittsburgh 59, Northern Iowa 10
Darnell Dickerson threw for two touchdowns and ran for another and Adam Walker ran for 148 yards and two scores for Pittsburgh.
Walker, who is replacing All-American running back Craig "Ironhead" Heyward, scored on an 89-yard run on the first play of the second half — the longest by a Pitt back in 71 years — to key a 31-point Pittsburgh third quarter.

Wake Forest 31, Villanova 11
Mike Elkins, Anthony Williams and Greg Long scored on three of four consecutive possessions in the second quarter for Wake Forest.

Appalachian St. 38, Citadel 14
Bobby Fuller passed for 228 yards and three touchdowns Saturday as Appalachian State opened its Southern Conference championship defense.
The victory extended Appalachian State's regular-season conference unbeaten streak to 19, dating back to 1985 when the Mountaineers lost to Furman.

Kent St. 34, Youngstown St. 3
KENT, Ohio (AP) — Quarterback Patrick Young, who missed all of last season with a hip injury, rushed for 172 yards and two touchdowns and passed for another score as Kent State defeated Youngstown State 34-3 Saturday.
The game was the season-opener for the both teams.

W. Michigan 24, Wisconsin 14
MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Dave Kruse passed 22 yards to Walter Cade for the go-ahead touchdown in the third quarter and Rob Davis ran for 136 yards and two scores Saturday as Western Michigan rallied for a 24-14 upset win over Wisconsin.
Western Michigan's victory in the season opener for both schools was its first ever over a Big Ten opponent and came after the Broncos fell behind 11-0 after one quarter and trailed 11-7 at the half.

Navy 27, James Madison 14
ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — Backup quarterback Gary McIntosh ignited Navy with a 37-yard touchdown run late in the first half as the Midshipmen came from behind for a 27-14 victory over James Madison University Saturday.
James Madison was leading 14-7 with just over four minutes left in the half when McIntosh faked a pitchout, sidestepped two would-be tacklers and ran untouched into the end zone. A 48-yard field goal by Ted Fundoukos with 58 seconds left in the first half put the Midshipmen ahead for the first time, 17-14.

Air Force 29, Colorado St. 23
Greg Johnson scored two touchdowns and Andy Smith bolted 66 yards for another for Air Force.
The Falcons, beating CSU for the sixth straight time, failed to complete a pass but generated 356 yards on the ground with their potent wishbone attack.

NOTICE TO BIDDERS

Sealed proposals, addressed to the President of the Midland Independent School District Board, Mr. Robert T. Rich, Midland Independent School District, Midland, Texas, Midland County, Texas, for the furnishing of materials and labor and construction of 830 L.F. of 16" water line, 1,887 L.F. of 6" water line, valves, fire hydrants, and appurenances, 192 L.F. of 6" sewer 4' -8" cut and manholes, will be received in the Board Room of the Midland Independent School District, at 702 North "N" Street, Midland, Texas, 79701 3:00 p.m. on the 8th day of September, 1988.

Any bid received after the closing time as stated above will be returned unopened.

Bid envelopes shall be plainly marked "Proposal for Wydewood Estates, Section B, Water and Sewer Improvements".

Information for bidders, proposal forms, specifications and plans are on file in the office of West Texas Consultants, Inc., 10 Desta Drive, East Tower, Suite LL-150, Midland, Texas 79705, and may be secured upon a deposit of FORTY DOLLARS ($40) for each set as a guaranty of safe return of the plans and specifications. The full amount of the deposit will be returned to the contractor on submission of bid on the work, with such plans and specifications; or upon return of the plans and specifications immediately after the examination of same and advising the Engineer that no bid will be submitted; otherwise, the deposit for same shall be forfeited.

A bid bond or proposal guaranty is to accompany the bid, thereby, guaranteeing the good faith of the bidder and that the bidder will enter into written contract. The guaranty is to amount to five percent (5%) of the total bid and must be in the form of cash or certified check, issued by a bank satisfactory to the Midland Independent School District, or a bid bond. If in the form of cash or certified check, it is expressly understood and agreed that the Midland Independent School District is given the right to retain such as liquidated damages if such bidder withdraws its bid any time after such bid is opened and before official rejection of such bid, or if successful in securing the award thereof, such bidder fails to enter into the contract and furnish the award thereof, such bidder fails to enter into the contract and furnish satisfactory performance and payment bonds. If a bid bond is submitted, it shall be executed on forms contained in these contract documents by a corporate surety authorized to do business in the State of Texas, and acceptable to the Midland Independent School District.

The Midland Independent School District, reserves the right to accept or reject any or all proposals or bids, to waive technicalities, and to make any investigation deemed necessary concerning the bidder's ability to perform the work covered by the plans and specifications, to award this bid by items and to accept what in the judgment of the Midland Independent School District the most advantageous bid.

ADVERTISEMENT FOR BIDS

NOTICE TO BIDDERS

Sealed proposals addressed to the Honorable Mayor and City Council of the City of Midland, Texas will be received at the office of the City Secretary, City Hall, Midland, Texas, until 2:00 P.M., October 4, 1988, for furnishing all necessary materials, machinery, equipment, superintendence, and labor for constructing certain improvements at the Midland International Airport, Midland, Texas.

Immediately following the closing time for receipt of bids, proposals will be publicly opened and read aloud. Any bid received after closing time will be returned unopened.

The principal items of work for Midland International Airport set forth in specific detail in the Proposal section of these specifications; however, the work items may be generally described as installation of new runway taxiway lighting, electrical manholes, wiring and conduit, a new electrical vault and equipment, runway and taxiway signing, a new sensor monitoring system, a new segmented circle and wind cone, and miscellaneous items of construction.

A bid proposal guaranty is to accompany the bid, thereby guaranteeing the good faith of the bidder and that the bidder will enter into the written contract. The guaranty is to amount to five percent (5%) of the total bid and must be in the form of cash or certified check, issued by a bank satisfactory to the City of Midland, or a bid bond. If in the form of cash or certified check, it is hereby expressly understood and agreed that the City of Midland is given the right to retain such as liquidated damages if such bidder withdraws its bid anytime after such bid is opened and before official rejection of such bid, or, if successful in securing the award thereof, such bidder fails to enter into the contract and furnish satisfactory performance bond and payment bond. If a bid bond is submitted, it shall be executed on forms contained in these contract documents by a corporate surety authorized to do business in the State of Texas, and acceptable to the City of Midland.

The successful Bidder will be required to furnish a Performance Bond and a Payment Bond each in the amount of the contract, written by a responsible Surety Company authorized to do business in the State of Texas, and satisfactory to the owner, as required by Article 5160, V.A.T.C.S., as amended by H.B. 344, passed by the 56th Legislature, Regular Session, 1959.

All lump sum and unit prices must be stated in both script and figures. The Owner reserves the right to reject any or all bids and to waive formalities. In case of ambiguity or lack of clearness in stating the prices in the bids, the Owner reserves the right to consider the most advantageous construction thereof, or to reject the bid. Unreasonable (or "unbalanced") unit prices will authorize the Owner to reject the bid.

Bidders are expected to inspect the site of the work and to inform themselves regarding all local conditions.

It is the policy of the Department of Transportation (DOT) that disadvantaged business enterprises as defined in 49 CFR Part 23 shall have the maximum opportunity to participate in the performance of contracts financed in whole or in part with Federal funds.

All bidders and proposers shall make good efforts, as defined in Appendix A of 49 CFR Part 23, Regulations of the Office of the Secretary of Transportation to subcontract two percent of the dollar value of the prime contract to small business concerns owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals (DBE). In the event that the bidder for this solicitation qualifies as a DBE, the contract goal shall be deemed to have been met Individuals who are rebuttably presumed to be socially and economically disadvantaged include women, Blacks, Hispanics, Native Americans, Asians-Pacific Americans and Asian-Indian Americans. The apparent successful bidder (proposer) will be required to submit information concerning the DBE's that will participate in this contract. The information will include the name and address for each DBE, a description of the work to be performed by each named firm, and the dollar value of the contract (subcontract). If the bidder fails to acheive the contract goal as stated herein, it will be required to provide documentation demonstrating that it made good faith efforts in attempting to do so. A bid that fails to meet these requirements will be considered nonresponsive.

CONTRACTS OVER $10,000

The proposed contract is under and subject to Executive Order 11246 of September 24, 1965, and to the Equal Opportunity Clause.

The bidder (Proposer) must supply all the information required by the bid or proposal form.

The successful bidder will be required to submit a Certification of Nonsegregated Facilities prior to award of the contract, and to notify prospective subcontractors of the requirement for such a Certification where the subcontract exceeds $10,000. Samples of the Certification and Notice to Subcontractors appear in the specifications.

In all areas of employment, women and men will be afforded equal opportunity of employment. The employment of women shall not diminish the standards or requirements for the employment of minorities.

CONTRACTS OVER $50,000

A contractor having 50 or more employees, and his subcontractors having 50 or more employees, and who may be awarded a subcontract of $50,000 or more, will be required to maintain an affirmative action program within 120 days of the commencement of the Contract.

ADDITIONAL NOTICES FOR $1,000,000 CONTRACTS

For each contract which may result in a bid of $1 million or more, the following notices shall also apply:

1. Preaward Equal Opportunity Compliance Reviews. Where the bid of the apparent low responsible bidder is in the amount of $1 million or more, the bidder and his known all-tier subcontractors which will be awarded subcontracts of $1 million or more will be subject to full, on-site, preaward equal opportunity compliance reviews before the award of the contract for the purpose of determining whether the bidder and his subcontractors are able to comply with the provisions of the equal opportunity clause.

2. Compliance Reports. Within 30 days after award of this contract, the contractor shall file a compliance report (Standard Form 100) if:

a. The contractor has not submitted a complete compliance report within 12 months preceding the date of award; and

b. The contractor is within the definition of "employer" in paragraphs 2e(3) of the instructions included in Standard Form 100.

The contractor shall require the subcontractor on all-tier subcontracts, irrespective of dollar amount, to file Standard Form within 30 days after award of the subcontract if the above two conditions apply. Standard Form 100 will be furnished upon request.

Minimum wages and labor rates for the construction of the proposed work have been established by the Secretary of Labor. A schedule of labor classifications and wage rates to be paid are included in the specifications and will be made a part of the contract. The bid form shall contain a statement that the prices bid are based on such wage rates.

This project is subject to Equal Opportunity, Affirmative Action, Minority Business Enterprise Contract Provisions, and other requirements stated in the Instructions to Bidders and other sections of the project specifications and contract documents.

Information for bidders, proposal forms, specifications and plans are on file in the office of the Director of Airports, midland International Airport, Midland, Texas, and at the office of Parkhill, Smith, & Cooper, Inc., Consulting Engineers, 5214 Thomason Drive, Midland, Texas 79703.

Copies of the Plans and Specifications may be secured from Parkhill, Smith & Cooper, Inc., Consulting Engineers, 5214 Thomason Drive, Midland, Texas 79703, upon a deposit of ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS ($100.00) of which the total amount is non-refundable.

Restaurant Management

A Wishbone will never take the place of a Backbone.

Let's face it, a restaurant manager's job is for "doers," not "dreamers." The work is physically demanding and if you can't do it hands-on, you're in the wrong business.

However, there's also more to it than just a strong back. At Grandy's, our managers demonstrate a strong pride of ownership in their restaurants, with:

- excellent customer service skills
- profit-making talent
- ability to motivate an hourly staff

If you have all these plus 1 or more years current and successful experience in fast food management, we offer:

- comprehensive training
- compensation that rewards your experience and potential
- competitive benefits such as discounted family meal privileges and 2 weeks vacation during your first year
- career growth with the restaurant offering the BEST fast food

Please call Debbie Shelton at (214) 317-8149.

DAIHATSU:
The word on the Street.

Everyone is looking for the next performer. And right now they're talking about the new hot car from Japan: Charade by Daihatsu. Read the chart and you'll see Charade's record of wins around the world. A winning combination of quickness and handling for over a decade. The more we test it in racing, the better it works on the street.

- Car of the Year Japan
- Four-time Rally Champion East Africa
- Three-time Rally Champion Monte Carlo
- Rally Champion New Zealand
- Rally Champion Malaysia
- Rally Champion Finland
- World Economy Record Paris
- World Economy Record Singapore
- World Economy Record Australia
- Car of the Year Thailand
- Most Popular Car in Australia

Not only do you get proven performance, but Charade gives you quality and workmanship that you thought came only in more expensive cars. The level of luxury is unprecedented for a small car. Think of it as luxury condensed.

Daihatsu Charade winning in Monte Carlo, January, 1988.

The interior reflects style and craftsmanship. It is perfectly color-coordinated throughout. Door trim incorporates seat material on top and carpet material on the bottom for a perfect interior match. There's a rich cloth liner overhead. And the fold-down center armrests on the CLX add extra comfort.

Versatile, fold-down rear seat triples cargo space.

Every Charade comes with tinted glass all around: windows and mirrors. For an extra touch, there are swing-out quarter windows in the rear.

Charade is low and wide for a small car. The extra width gives you a surprising amount of interior room. Charade's wide track gives you far more stability on the road than other small cars, especially when cornering.

Wide stance for stability.

Charade is quick, with multi-point EFI, fully independent suspension and stabilizers in front and rear. The five-speed transmission is butter-smooth for easy shifting.

Charade is affordable to buy and affordable to own. Daihatsu Charade has an EPA rating of 42 MPG highway and 38 MPG city. That is one of the best mileage ratings in the country.

Get behind the wheel of a winner! Test drive Charade today! Daihatsu may be new to America, but we've been in business in Japan since 1907. The name is pronounced Dī-hot'-sue. It means Large Enterprise.

Charade has been tested, raced and proven around the world. It is the logical evolution of a dedication to performance. You know what they say, "Racing improves the breed."

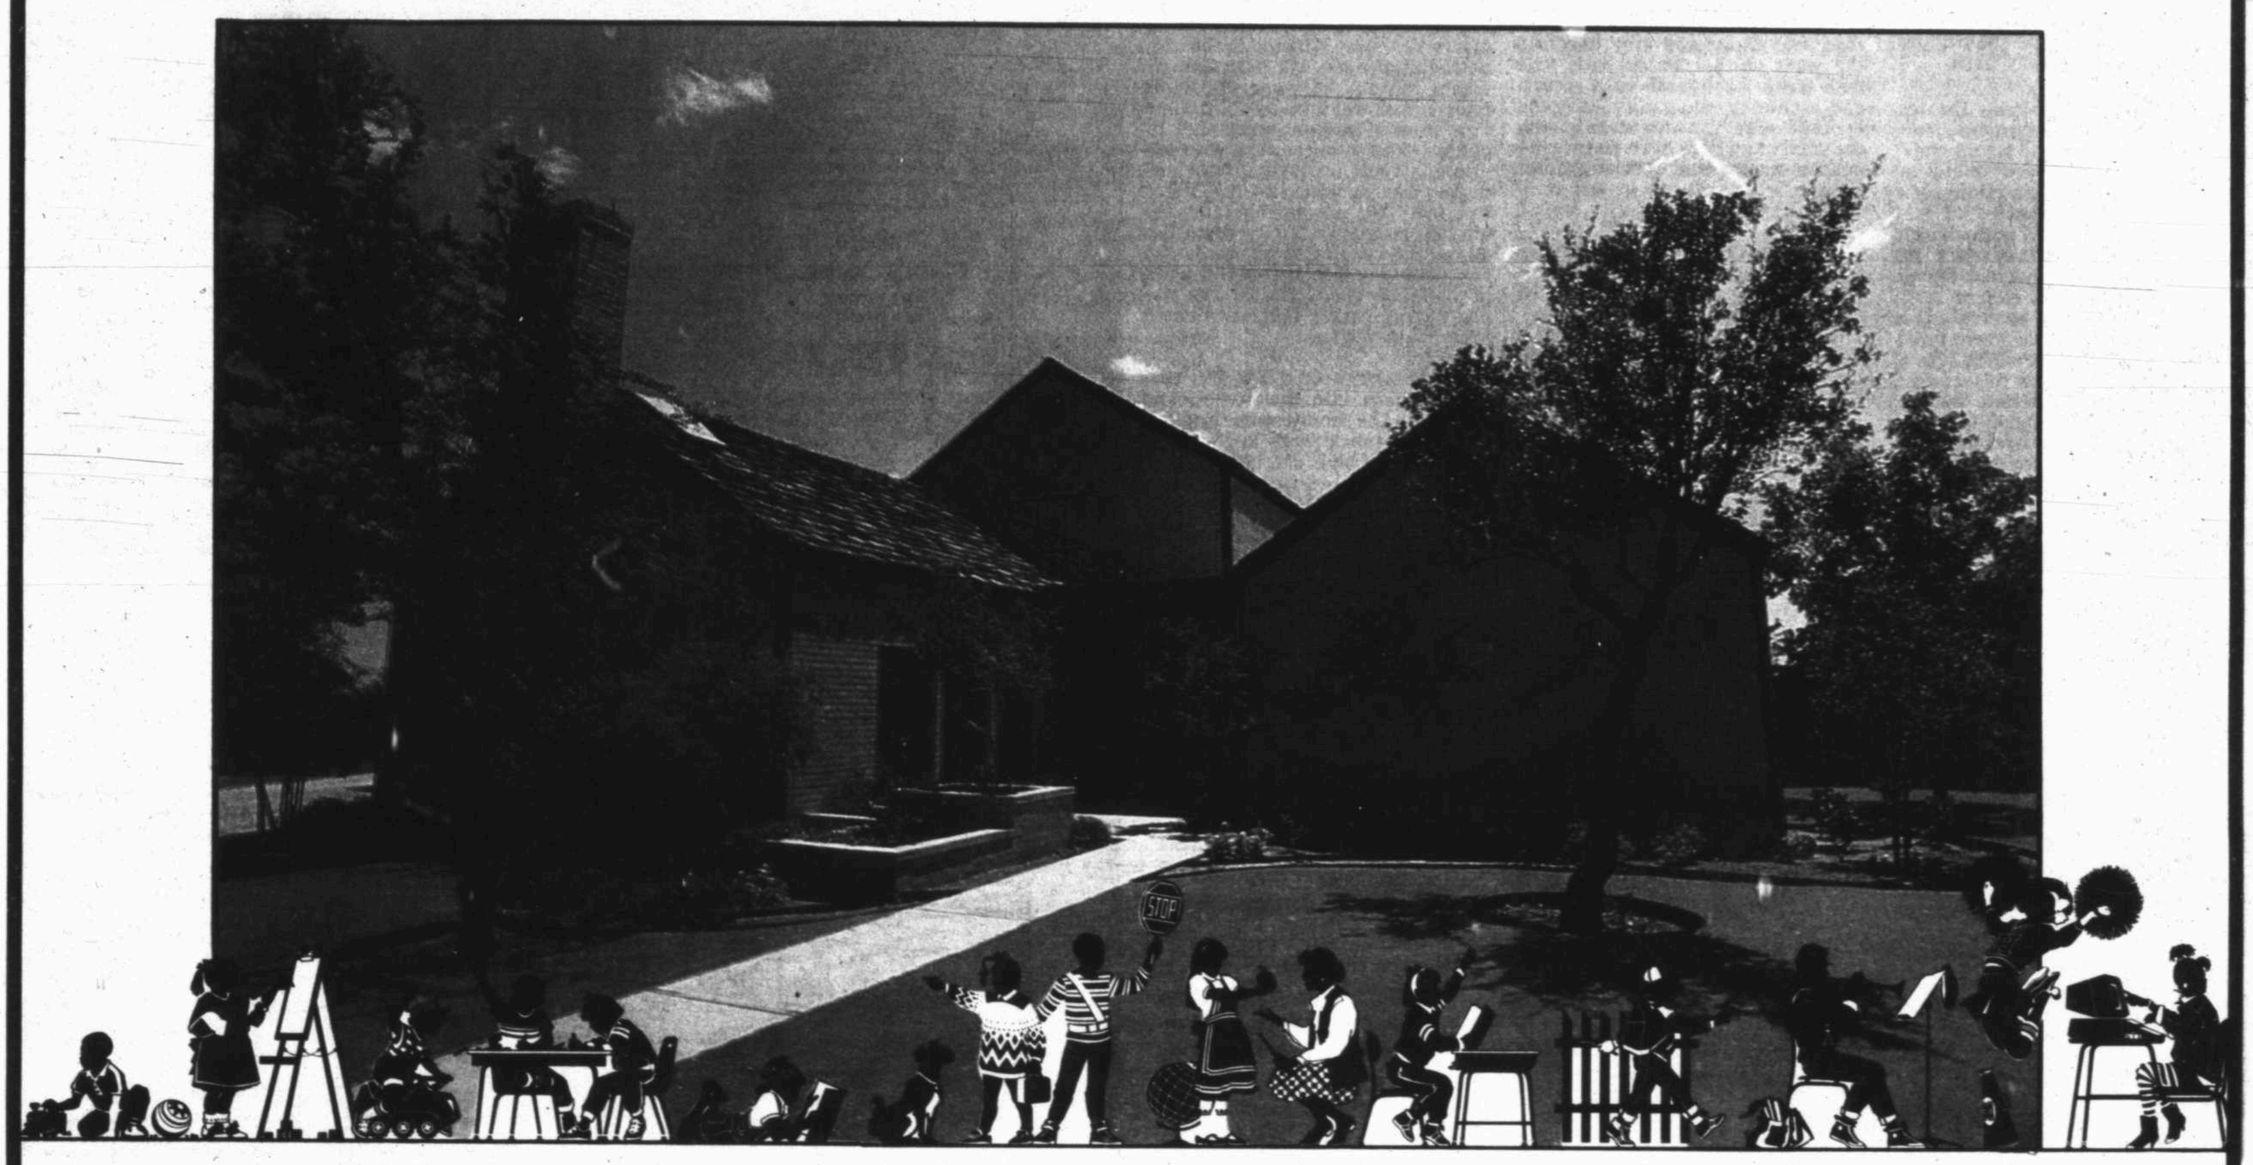

You'll think the world of Daihatsu.

Green Tree Estates home designed for active family lifestyle

By JILL HANCOCK
Advertising Feature Writer

This week's featured home was designed with an active family in mind, where each member's individual needs are met. For Mom, there is an exquisite atrium - complete with a fish pond - where she can enjoy watching many variety of plants flourish even in West Texas. Dad will enjoy the comfortable family room where he can unwind after a day at the office or playing 18 holes of golf across the street. The kids will enjoy the privacy that the two upstairs bedrooms offer them when they are wanting to get away with their friends from other family members or working on the computer in the upstairs study area.

Located in Green Tree Estates, this versatile three bedroom home has two living areas and a study next to the master bedroom could be used as an additional bedroom for a smaller child, if needed.

A fabulous atrium immediately captivates a visitor as they enter this classic contemporary styled home. Many species of fish can be seen swimming in the rock pond which is surrounded by many different types of plants. A skylight provides lots of sunshine while a person relaxes on a small bench as they watch the fish swim throughout the pond. Not only does the foyer have a splendid view of the atrium, but it also leads to the many rooms which are located downstairs.

One of the highlights of this home is the beautiful wallcoverings that can be seen in each bath. The powder room is adjacent to the foyer and has a stunning Oriental wallpaper that features lily pads in shades of green and peach.

The master bedroom is located to the right of the foyer. A sitting area in front of a large window which overlooks the lovely backyard is perfect for reading a favorite book as birds can be seen feeding in the distance.

A flame stitch pattern in shades of rose, teal, taupe and gray decorate the walls of the master bath. The bath has a marble tub with jacuzzi and a ceramic tile vanity lines the opposite wall. The two sinks match the vanity and have brass fixtures. A built-in shower and spacious closet are the other features in this wonderful bath.

A door from the master bedroom leads to another room which was designed as a study but could also be used as a bedroom for a small child. This room has a wall of cabinets with bookcases and a big window that views the backyard.

The formal living room and dining room are situated to the left of the foyer. The living room has a brick fireplace that spans into the vaulted ceiling and windows along two walls provide a wonderful view of the front yard.

A wet bar with a sink and ice maker is conveniently located between the formal living room and dining room. When formal entertaining of friends is necessary, the design of these rooms enables the hostess to serve her guests easily. The formal dining room also has a spectacular view of the atrium.

The kitchen is located behind the formal dining room. White wash cabinets are one of the many unusual features that this kitchen has to offer. A triple Whirlpool cooktop, with six burners, will help prepare meals for any of your children's friends that will drop by for dinner. The other Whirlpool appliances include a built-in microwave with self cleaning oven, trash compactor and dishwasher. A breakfast bar which can seat five people separates the kitchen from the family room but allows the cook to be involved with any activities that are taking place in the family room. The kitchen also has a large pantry that leads down into a wine celler.

The breakfast room is by the door which opens into the atrium and flows into the family room. Another bath, with fabric walls in shades of tan and navy blue, can be found between the breakfast area and study.

The family room has three walls of windows which provide a splendid view of the home's two backyards. A door leads to the patio in one yard which is covered by a blue and white fabric awning and has lush landscaped beds. A gate leads to the second backyard which is large enough for any play equipment that your children would desire.

A staircase off the family room leads to the two bedrooms upstairs. If your children need a quiet place to study or want to play their favorite electronic game with out interruption, then they can retreat to their own bedrooms. Both rooms have their own private dressing areas with fashionable wallpaper and walk-in closets. These rooms are joined by a bathing area that includes a tub/shower with glass doors.

The other amenities of this wonderful family home include solar shades, ceiling fans, a sprinkler system and an oversized two car garage that can easily accommodate a golf cart.

Chaparral, Realtors is offering this home for $225,000.

The master bath, top right, has a jacuzzi tub and is decorated in an attractive wallcovering in shades of rose, teal, taupe and gray. The bath also has a stall shower and a spacious walk-in closet with built-in cabinets.

This home is built around an atrium, left, that features a rock pond - complete with fish. Many varieties of plants will flourish in the atrium that is brightened by a skylight.

The focal point of the formal living room, right, is a brick fireplace. One of the unique features of this contemporary home is the view of Green Tree Estates that is seen from each wall of windows. A wet bar is situated behind the desk. Photos by Brian Adamcik

About Real Estate
With Don Campbell

How long is "a long time"? And at what point does it "pay" or "not pay" to embark on a mortgage acceleration program?

DEAR MR. CAMPBELL: I have been paying about six months' principal with each of my mortgage payments. But my husband says that there is no advantage in this if we are not going to live here long enough to pay it off. We plan to be here about three or four years. Mrs. S.R.C., Allentown, Pa.

ANSWER: That's a common enough rationale, certainly, and it might be valid if — in addition to the extra payments you're making — there were some other costs involved. (For instance: In refinancing a home, where there ARE add-on costs, it rarely pays to do it unless you plan on staying in the same house for at least two more years and will be shaving at least 2 percentage points off your interest.)

But, in simply accelerating your principal payments, doesn't your husband's argument that it "doesn't pay," sound a little bit like the person who refuses to go on a diet "because I'll just gain it back"? I don't know what the actual dollar figures are in your case, but let's take a hypothetical instance: You've bought a $75,000 home, have paid $15,000 down and so you have a 30-year, $60,000 mortgage at, we'll say, 10½ percent. That would make your payments for principal and interest $548.84. So, OK, in four years you move and put the house up for sale and, at this point, you've reduced your principal from $60,000 to $58,585. Your equity is $16,415 — your $15,000 down payment plus the $1,415 reduction of your principal.

If your house has appreciated 10 percent in those four years (this will vary all over the landscape, of course) you should be able to sell it for $82,500. After you pay the broker's commission (6 percent, we'll say, or $4,950) and pay off your lender ($58,585) you'll walk away with $18,965, or $3,965 more than your original down payment.

Now, instead, let's say that during those four years you paid your regular payment ($548.84), but added an additional $100 each month to principal. Again, you sell it after four years and have had a 10 percent appreciation in the value of the house. At this point, however, you have reduced the principal to $52,651 ($5,934 more than under the standard pay-off schedule). Now, when you sell for $82,500, pay the broker off ($4,950) and pay off the balance owed the lender ($52,651), you are netting $24,899 — $9,899 more than your original $15,000 down payment, and you are clearing $5,934 more than under the straight pay-off schedule.

Naturally, it's cost you $4,800 (48 times $100) to achieve this but in just four years you've saved $1,134 in mortgage interest and have a cool $24,899 available for a down payment on your new home — versus $18,965 under your regular amortization. Maybe it isn't worth it. Maybe it is. You'll have to be the judge.

DEAR MR. CAMPBELL: Please tell me if I can afford to buy a house. I want one so very much. I just retired, enjoy good health, love to decorate, refinish furniture, work outside, etc. I have always lived in an apartment and have longed for the day I could move out.

I have $67,000 available to me in cash — $46,000 of this is in a company pension supplement, $19,000 is in IRAs and $2,000 in checking. My pension and Social Security checks amount to $1,091 a month after taxes and health insurance. I am 62 and at 65 must find another health plan. Where I live now my expenses are modest and I manage to spend as I please with $300 or $400 each month. I am ready to make sacrifices and do anything I have to do to have a home. Ms. R.B., Indianapolis, Ind.

ANSWER: After a lifetime of apartment living, I can't blame you a bit. However, you're going to need some good financial guidance by someone who can delve into your finances a little more closely than I. You can't really consider that $67,000 as being all that "available," because I assume that any depletion of the $46,000 tied into your pension plan would seriously affect your monthly check. So, that leaves the $19,000 in your IRAs from which to dredge forth a down payment and there are going to be tax consequences here (since you'll be taking out a lump sum, not rolling it over). I'd figure a maximum of no more than $9,000 to $10,000 as available for the down payment.

Now, the rest depends on your local housing market. With a $10,000 down payment could you find a small house carrying a mortgage of no more than $28,000 to $30,000? If you can, then you can probably swing it, but I wouldn't — in your circumstances — want to see you putting more than 25 percent of your monthly income into housing.

See if you can't find someone to look more closely into your affairs.

A home located in a prestigious area of the city-...built with the lifestyle of the busy executive in mind, offered by RE/MAX of Midland...

Photos by Janice Ford

This home, top right, exhibits classic drive-up appeal, including professional landscaping and an attractive circular driveway. The driveway, enhanced with inlaid brick, provides extra parking when company comes.

The nucleus of the comfortable, cozy living area, center, is the fireplace and its matching built-in bookcases.

Contemporary Saddle Club South home tasteful, intriguing

By JANICE FORD
Advertising Feature Writer

A bright and spacious home, designed to enhance the busy executive lifestyle, is this week's RE/MAX of Midland feature home. This three-year-old home is in the heart of the thriving Saddle Club South addition, one of the most prestigious, coveted areas of the city. The four bedroom and three bath home is noteworthy because of its combined open living and dining room area, a family room and professional landscaping by Davis Garden Center.

Something is blooming year round in the gardens which surround this home. This week, the mums in the front yard are primed to burst open. Japanese pagoda trees frame the home, and a healthy red oak tree is in the center of the brick-inlay circular driveway.

Entrance to the front of the home is gained through a uniquely designed leaded glass panel door. The tile floor of the entryway is just one of the many special custom touches of this home. The dining area is to the right of the entrance. This area can easily accommodate a large dining room table, a china cabinet and a buffet server. A large window allows for a beautiful view of the outside landscaping.

Because the dining room and the living area are combined, the spaciousness would allow for easy circulation of guests at parties. One can't help but notice the ash picture frame paneling and built-in extras of the living area.

An example is the handy wet bar, which contains brass fixtures and a built-in wine rack. Built-in bookcases surround the fireplace. This area is warm and cozy, designed for comfort and relaxing.

This contemporary home has a large kitchen, with a combination sink/bar area as its focal point. It would be so easy to prepare food and talk to family or guests at the same time as they relax in the adjoining breakfast nook. Ash cabinets and wainscoating surround the kitchen. The extra touch of a captain's rail adds extra, useful space for displaying collectibles or decorative pots and pans.

The kitchen sink area is especially adaptable for just about any job. With 2 full basins and a third middle basin which houses a garbage disposal, this sand-colored sink is a really functional plus.

Other kitchen amenities include a trash compactor, a built-in microwave and a range. The decorating theme of this area is a clever combination of southwestern design and country charm.

A look out the window of the breakfast room reveals one of the unique aspects of this home. The "l" shaped driveway also functions as a courtyard, complete with a basketball goal for the kids. The idea is to utilize the "dead" space of the driveway and make it into something extremely useable.

In fact, almost all of the lot is used effectively–an extra value for the housing dollar. Also in the backyard are curved, curbed flower beds and just enough yard and garden work for a "yard person" to feel like he's in his element.

A hallway from the kitchen leads past a spacious utility room to the sequestered master bedroom. It has a uniquely designed ceiling which features recessed lighting and ceiling fans. Glass patio doors open out onto a covered patio in the well-manicured backyard. In this room, as throughout the house, the two tone paint scheme adds to the feeling of expensive, custom decorating. The baseboards are painted white and the walls reflect a light sand tone.

An extremely large dressing area and a jacuzzi make the master bedroom a special place for the owners of this home. A shower, "his and her" closets and ample storage from built-in cabinets are added custom touches.

The remainder of the home consists of three rooms and two baths. Originally built as a four bedroom home, one of the family bedrooms is in use as a second living area. It is complete with built-in bookcases, a high raised ceiling, a separate half-bath, a walk-in closet and a door which opens onto the backyard.

The middle family bedroom contains a study area–perfect for a student–and a large walk-in closet. A full-sized Hollywood bath connects this bedroom to the third family bedroom. A skylight brightens this area, which is heightened with extra cabinet space.

The third bedroom is now used as a study. A big window allows a great view of the exquisite front yard landscaping.

The other amenities of this contemporary home include energy-efficient double paned windows, a sprinkler system and bubblers.

Dennis Rambo is the agent for this RE/MAX of Midland offering. The home contains more than 2600 square feet, and it lists for $145,000. Call 697-8232 or 683-7147 for more information on this lovely home.

Langston Realtors Talk About....

Largest Realtor firm, new disclosure form, transferring

Q. Is Langston Realtors really the largest and oldest real estate firm in the city? J.A.

Langston

A. Thanks for asking! Yes, we are the largest firm, with full time licensed agents. We are 14% larger than our nearest competitor, according to Midland Board of Realtors records. The growth of our company has been consistent and gratifying, especially with the intensive recruitment programs being conducted by some of the newer real estate offices. That our agents choose to remain with our firm, and that it continues to grow with new, unsolicited associates, is not as much a compliment to the Langston organization as it is to the loyalty, cooperation, pride and friendship that exists among our sales associates. We really do like and respect one another and work well together, a very important factor in our 24 hour, every day stressful profession. As to being the oldest real estate company in the city , while there are several single brokers in business longer and a firm that was established earlier but later sold, Midland's oldest firm with multiple agents, still owned by its original founders, is Langston Realtors.

Q. My husband just told me we were being moved to Houston and I'm about to go bananas! Help! What do I do? M.A.L.

A. No wonder you are feeling helpless right now; most experts believe that relocation rates third in degree of stress to an individual. Death of a family member and divorce rate first and second. Based on many years of assisting transferring families, my advice to you is(1) Find a calm, empathetic Realtor who is reassuring yet realistic about the sale of your home. Be sure he/she knows your neighborhood, is experienced in your price range, and has the support of a large, active office for the most effective marketing. You are hiring a partner and going in the business of selling a home, so feel good about the Realtor you employ, then give him/her your trust.

(2) Next, follow his/her advice about pricing and about preparing your home for sale, then put your house on the market, even though you may have a "company buy back" option. It is usually not necessary to wait on your company appraisal, a competent Realtor will help you price your property above an anticipated company offer; also by listing immediately, you are simply buying more marketing time.

(3) Ask your Realtor to refer you to an associate in your destination city, so that you can begin to get acquainted with your new home town and to develop a rapport with the Realtor who will assist you on the buying side of your transfer. Again, you need to feel comfortable with the new Realtor. Does he know the market in the area you've selected?

Is he willing to help you learn about other areas and, should you choose to consider one, will he refer you to another associate if he is not experienced in that section? Does he cooperate with builders and is he familiar with the newer areas? Will he help you find a rental if you elect to custom build or delay purchasing? Is he doing what he says he will do that is following through by sending the information you've requested? Be honest and open with the destination Realtor; be receptive to his assistance, even though you may be frustrated about moving. If you honestly do not feel completely comfortable with him, do not hesitate to ask your agent in Midland to recommend another.

(4) Obtain loan approval for a purchase in your destination city even before going on your first home finding trip. Our firm has two excellent sources in Travelers a d Prudential Mortgage Companies; the cost is minimal and rates are competitive, so do let us assist you in learning what you can buy before you buy, your offer on a purchase will certainly be more carefully considered if the seller know you are already approved for mortgage financing.

(5) Finally, sit back, relax and let the professionals work with and for you. Cooperate with them, trust them, and don't hesitate to ask for all the assistance and information you need in this stressful time.

Q. The Realtor showing us homes asked us to sign an Agency Disclosure Form. What is this? D.P.

A. As of September 1, 1988, it was mandatory that all Texas real estate licenses use this new form promulgated by the Texas Real Estate Commission. The form was created and designed to clear up any confusion as to whose agent the Realtor is in a sale or a residential lease transaction (the form applies only to leases for a period of more than one year). Quite often buyers or tenants are under the impression that the Realtor is working for them, when actually, a Realtor's "duties, loyalties and faithfulness" are owed to the person who pays them, and that is most often the seller or owner of the property. As a buyer, do be assured however, that, even though the Realtor may not be your agent, he still has an obligation to "treat fairly all parties to the transaction", a practice I find faithfully employed by the Midland real estate community.

If you have any questions on real estate that you would like answered in this column, you are invited to call or write me at Langston Realtors, 1908 West Wall, Midland, Texas 79701, (915)682-9495.

INTRODUCING THE NEW BMW 325 SERIES AUTOMOBILES

GOOD THINGS HAPPEN IN THREES

About 20 years ago, BMW gave the world a new motoring concept. That first sports sedan offered a unique combination of automobile personalities. It had the practical seating and cargo advantages of a sedan, but it also had the performance, handling, and spirit of a sports car. BMW has remained true to this concept. Nowhere is this demonstrated better than in the 3-Series for 1989. You are cordially invited to see and test drive the new BMW — good things happen in threes.

HUD HOMES ANNOUNCES

A lawsuit has been filed in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia in which plantiffs have asked the court to stop all sales of HUD-acquired single family properties until HUD takes certain actions which plaintiffs claim HUD is required by law to do. HUD is opposing this lawsuit. Because the court has issued a Temporary Restraining Order stopping all sales until September 14, 1988, the bid opening date has been set for (September 15, 1988) at which time we expect to know if HUD may award contracts.

All contracts acccepted prior to August 30, 1988 will be processed as usual. Please hold all phone calls to a minimum.

LEARNING TO LEARN

Text and Graphic by ELIZABETH EDWIN

As children enter the hallowed halls of education, there is one purpose for them being there — to learn. Oh, of course the children are eager to see old friends and meet new teachers. But most of all, these children are in school to learn.

Soon, students will bow their heads over books and hold their pencils tightly in their hands as they laboriously scribble everything from the ABC's to research papers. For nine months, each child will try to learn everything that is required of them in order to graduate to the next stage of education.

Each will be dressed in their new school clothes, carrying their new notebooks and lunch boxes. Basically, all of these children will look just alike within their age group — their faces freshly scrubbed, their hair neatly combed. But not all of these children learn just like the other children in school.

Some must learn how to learn. These children are the learning disabled — and for them, learning is more difficult. That's where special education classes come in.

"Except for the mentally retarded students in special education classes, these kids look and act just like others kids," said Dr. Ruby Morris, coordinator of special education for Midland Independent School District, they just have more trouble learning certain subjects than other children. Morris earned her undergraduate degrees at Texas Tech University and her doctorate of education from East Texas State University. She also taught special education for 10 years before acquiring the position of coordinator.

"My part is primarily the administrative part," Morris said, "I direct the special education programs."

OVER 1,800 students are expected to be enrolled in MISD's special education classes this year. Students range in age from birth through age 21, according to Morris.

"If they (learning disabled children) are either visually impaired or hearing impaired at birth, then they can get in the program then," Morris said. For other disabilities, such as speech, children become eligible for the program at 3 years of age, Morris said.

Children eligible for the special education program include those who are mentally retarded, speech handicapped, or have physical, emotional, visual or hearing disabilities. Morris added that pregnant students or students who are otherwise severely health impaired, such as severe asthma, also may be eligible for the special education classes .

However, disorders such as dyslexia and Attention Deficit Disorder (ADD) are classified as health problems by the state and children suffering from these problems are not automatically eligible for the program, Morris said.

A learning disability is defined as, "A severe discrepancy between the child's measure potential (which is the IQ) and the child's measure achieved in academic areas (reading, writing and math skills). A severe discrepancy is a difference of more than 15 points," said Margie Lee, a resource teacher at Henderson Elementary School. "For example, if a child's IQ is 100 (points potential) and achieved is 80 (points) in math, there is a 20 point difference. That is a severe discrepancy in math."

HOWEVER, JUST because a child is enrolled a special education class for math does not mean that the student will spend all day in special education classes. For example, the student in the previous example tested 20 points below the potential IQ in math, but if his reading and writing skills are within 15 points of or above the potential IQ, then he would be enrolled only in a special math class. All his reading and writing classes would be regular classes.

Educators warn that it may take a while for a learning disability to be visible.

For example, a child entering first grade may test close to or above the potential points. But as classes become more difficult, the gap between potential points and points in measure achieved of academic areas will grow wider. When the child is tested in the third grade, a discrepancy of 15 points or more may be found. The child is then eligible for the special education program. When the student's test points reach a level close to the potential points, the child will be taken out of the special education program and put back into regular classes.

"The goal of special education is to get them (the students) out of the program," Morris said, by placing the students back into the regular schedule of classes.

For children to become eligible for special education programs, they must first be tested by a diagnostician. If the tests show a discrepancy of 15 points between the potential IQ and the achieved score, then that child's case goes before the Admissions Review Dismissal (ARD) committee.

This committee reviews the child's case and formulates an Individual Education Program (IEP). The child's parents are very much a part of this committee, Morris said. The IEP basically specifies what kind of services and in struction are needed, and how long the child is to be in the program. When the IEP is complete, then the child is appropriately integrated into the special education program that has been created for them.

AFTER THREE months and at the end of a year, the child's progress is reviewed by the ARD committee. However, a diagnostician can recommend a review at anytime during a child's program. The reviews are to determine if the special education classes are achieving the goals stated in the IEP. If a child is not learning as quickly as expected or is progressing at a faster pace than expected, then the program can be altered to fit the child's needs.

Each campus in MISD is assigned a diagnostician who tests the students and keeps up with progress of each child, "and I think ours (MISD's diagnosticians) do a wonderful job," Morris said.

Although learning disabled children may be receiving some extra help at school, the education progress should not end when the student leaves the class-room, Morris said.

"Parents are a very important factor. It's very important for parents to work in close harmony with the schools," Morris said. "In fact, some teachers have even given parents home programs to work on with their children."

Morris believes that interaction with children outside of the special education classes also is very important.

"All of our children are provided opportunities for integrated activities," Morris said.

She believes this integrating process, or mainstreaming, may be the key to other children accepting learning disabled children as equals.

"The integrated activities really help," Morris said. "Before, they (learning disabled children) were separated, but now they (all students) are together for at least some of their classes." Morris referred to a program started by Mamie Williams, principal of Scharbauer Elementary, called "Pals."

"In Mamie's program, some of the students go and read to some of the special education students," Morris said. "Some of the other schools have programs too, but her's is really outstanding," Morris said.

For some disabilities, particularly those that are physically distorting, sometimes there is a stigma associated with being a special education student. Social stigmas also seem to make it more difficult for a special education student to be accepted. But overall, Morris said, "I think our principals and others do a good job of helping others understand what being learning disabled is about."

"Teachers, diagnosticians and principals all try to keep the parents in touch with what is happening with their child and their child's progress," Morris said. "There will probably always be at least one bum," Morris said, "but I think the majority accept these kids," as they learn how to learn.

Have you heard...?

The weather tried but failed to put a damper on the festivities when the Midland Jaycees held their annual beach party a week ago Saturday at Mission Country Club.

Held traditionally at the end of the summer, the party serves as a kickoff for the organization's fall community development projects.

Dancing to the music of "Nuvo Baroque," inflatable whale races and swimming were all a part of the evening's fun. Tiki torches and other decor in a beach party theme adorned the premises.

A special guest was Larry Latham of Houston, president of the Texas Jaycees, who was here to make arrangements for a statewide meeting in November.

Among the 175 persons attending were local president Matt Blair and his wife, Michele; Annette and Larry Armstrong, Jan and Ron Munn, Pat and Mike Davis and Patty and Mark Veerkamp.

Ken White was party chairman and Diane Johnson, director in charge.

The Midland Jaycees are celebrating their 50th anniversary this year. Highlighting the celebration will be a black-tie dinner dance on Jan. 28, 1989.

CONTRATULATIONS TO Margaret Newnham, who celebrated her 80th birthday on Aug. 23.

To mark the milestone occasion, a festive party was hosted that afternoon at the Newnham home by Margaret's cousin, Virginia Alexander of Kerrville.

Among the guests were a number of longtime Midlanders and from out-of-town, Peggy and John Heidman of Dallas and a former Midlander, Wilda Simpson of San Angelo.

ALTHOUGH THE ANNUAL Shrimp and Crab Boil is just behind them, members of the Louisiana State University Permian Basin Alumni Association are already busy with plans for future events. Coming up are football and Mardi Gras parties.

Their recent gathering was held at the Coors Hospitality Room and featured boiled corn and potatoes, along with the seafood. Entertainment included a video featuring highlights of LSU's 1987 footbal season. Purple and gold balloons and purple megaphones were used to decorate.

Approximately 65 persons turned out the event, including alums from Midland, Odessa and Big Spring. Dominick Bazile was in charge of arrangements. Association officers are Clay Othold, president; Judy (Mrs. Mark) Jones, treasurer, and Warren Bell, president-elect.

Among others attending were Sara and Manny Selber, Susan and Lloyd Tabor, Linda and Kevin Hughes and Lois (Mrs. John) Smitherman.

WITH FORMER MIDLANDER, Daren Taylor of New York City, as their host and tour guide, four local residents recently saw the Big Apple from a New Yorker's viewpoint.

Mona Gale Gibson, Libby Watson, Bob Anderson and Tim Rosborough have returned with many memorable experiences, and Mona Gale reports, "It was not a vacation but an adventure." They traveled by subway or on foot most of the time, when not entrusting their lives to New York cabbies.

Highlights of their trip included several Broadway shows, including "Les Miserables"; the Egyptian exhibit at the Metropolitan Museum, a ride on the Staten Island Ferry at night, and a NBC Studio tour.

They also enjoyed visits to the Statue of Liberty, Trump Tower and Central Park. Other shows they saw were "Into the Woods," "Starlight Express" and "Me and My Girl." And before returning home, they took a side trip to Atlantic City.

The foursome are reportedly planning another "adventure," and it will be interesting to see where it takes them.

Daren, who is pursuing an acting and dancing career, was active in Midland Community Theatre and Summer Mummers productions while living here. He is the son of Dalys and Jerry Atkinson.

FROM THE UNIVERSITY of Oklahoma comes word that Mark Hubbard of Midland has pledged Alpha Tau Omega social fraternity. He is the son of Sherry and Jerry Hewett.

AMONG THE LATEST Midlanders to trek to Santa Fe for the opera season was a group sponsored by the First United Methodist Church. The trip was an outgrowth of a class, "Learn To Love Opera," which was taught by Jane Ward during the church's "Wednesday Night Live" program series last spring.

The operagoers were Brad Kisner, who made the travel arrangements, and his wife, Jane; Barbara and Jack Cartwright, Betty Barnes, Aida Dunlap, Ruth Roberts, Dorothy Smith, Helena Gaston, Polly Snyder, Jane and Bob Ward, Ruth Story, and her sister, Nell Huff of Evergreen, Colo. They saw Strauss's "Die Fledermaus" and Mozart's "Cosi Fan Tutte," with a mini-refresher course given by Jane on the way to the opera each evening.

Daytime was "free time," and individuals pursued their own interests, only to gather together for dinner each evening. They enjoyed dining a Santa Fe's trendy, new Coyote Cafe, the well-known La Tertulia and the elegant La Casa Sena.

Staying at the Hotel St. Francis in Downtown Santa Fe, they enjoyed tea in the hotel lobby each afternoon and their proximity to the historic plaza. Shopping, visiting the galleries on Canyon Road and touring the International Folk Art Museum were among other activities.

Curiousity is important part of learning

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Too much emphasis on achievement tests can have negative consequences, says a University of Rochester motivational psychologist.

"We should nurture children's basic curiousity and help them enjoy challenges," says Richard Ryan. "Do that, and children will educate themselves even after schooling ends."

When the focus is on achievement tests, he says, "There can be short-term gains in test scores but students don't retain rote learning well."

Parents add stress to child's life

Copley News Service

Do you want to help your kid ace a test this week?

Then make his bed and tidy up his room.

That's the advice of British psychologist Dr. Teresa Foot, who counsels parents having trouble with their kids.

Her point is that parents unwittingly add stress to their children's already stressed out lives by carping and harping on them.

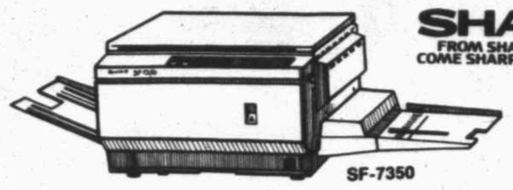

For example, if Johnny is nervous about a test, parents add to the pressure by making him clean his room, or trying to bribe him into doing well by promising some great reward like a new toy or bike.

However, she says both methods are detrimental to your child.

Foot says kids who are offered rewards think their parents don't trust them to do well. And it could cause them to freeze up on an exam.

So, if Johnny has the exam of his life coming up, don't bribe him, clean his room. But not necessarily in that order.

Childbirth Isn't A Spectator Sport.

Childbirth is an intensely personal moment for women. And, a lot of us are tired of being good sports about sharing that moment with a room full of strangers.

That's why we've designed a whole new kind of birthing environment at Women's & Children's Hospital. It's called a Labor/Delivery/Recovery room (LDR)—a place where you can have all the peace and security you need and deserve for a very private occasion. The birth of your child.

Designed for low-risk births, our LDR's look more like luxury hotel suites than hospital rooms. We think that's a welcome improvement. Beautifully appointed furnishings, a private bath, and even a cozy easy chair add to the special feeling of warmth and elegance you'll find here. State-of-the-art equipment and supplies necessary for childbirth have been thoughtfully hidden from view, but are available whenever needed.

The LDR rooms are different in other ways, too. When you're admitted to an LDR, you will remain there throughout the entire birth process and recovery. And, best of all, you can share the experience with loved ones. You may be supported by your husband or other chosen "coach" throughout labor and delivery.

After your child's arrival, you will remain in the LDR for as long as possible spending a relaxing time getting acquainted with your newborn and visiting with family and friends before being moved to your hospital room.

Having a baby isn't like scoring a touchdown. The LDR's at Women's & Children's Hospital are dignified, rewarding, and personal places for special experiences. Ask your doctor about the LDR concept, then call 334-8200 at ext 297 for a tour or more information about The Birth Place. You'll find our new LDR is something to cheer about.

Routine visits urged by doctors

By DUDLEY PERCY
New York Times News Service

ATLANTA — When 8-year-old Tucker Perkerson goes to the doctor's office, they prick his finger for blood, press a stethoscope to his chest and stare down his throat.

Not because he's sick, but because he's well — and his parents want him to stay that way.

"I'm very thankful that nothing has been discovered," said his mother, Nancy Perkerson. "But that's why I go."

It's part of Tucker's routine health care.

"A large part of what we're doing is picking up on things early, screening them out and trying to prevent them from ever happening," said his doctor, Joy Maxey, a pediatrician with The Children's Clinical Center in Buckhead.

As the opening of school draws nigh, more and more school-age children such as Tucker are heading to see their pediatricians.

But just what should parents know about their children's health care visits?

According to the American Academy of Pediatrics, children 6 and older should receive a complete physical examination — including a urinalysis, blood pressure test, hemoglobin test and hearing and vision tests — at least once every two years. In addition, they should be protected against childhood diseases for which vaccines are available.

Those immunizations include measles, mumps, rubella, polio, tetanus and diphtheria. In recent years, doctors have also begun giving the Haemophilus b vaccine, to protect against Haemophilus influenza, which causes about 12,000 cases of meningitis each year, mostly in children under 5.

To monitor a child's health status more closely, many pediatricians urge annual checkups.

"If you wait too long and there is a problem, you've missed a golden opportunity to intervene," said Dr. Joe Snitzer, assistant medical director at Egleston Hospital. "It can actually change their whole lives."

Health supervision visits, unlike sick visits, allow the doctor to focus on important developmental achievements, as well as uncover health-related problems, such as hypertension or high cholesterol, which might otherwise go undetected.

The emphasis on preventive care is evident by the fact that some pediatricians have begun doing routine cholesterol checks at the 5-and 15-year examinations.

"The time to make inroads is when they're young and they're still establishing their eating habits," said Dr. John Cantwell, cardiologist and medical director of the Preventive Medicine Center at Georgia Baptist Medical Center. "If you wait until they're 20, when they're eating fast foods, it's harder to change."

But many children may not be getting the routine health care they need because of costs, doctors say. In many states, children's health supervision visits, including immunizations and routine labs, are not covered by most private health insurance companies.

That may soon change. The Georgia chapter of the American Academy of Pediatrics, in conjunction with the Medical Association of Georgia, is actively supporting a bill that would require health insurance companies to cover health supervision visits for children up to age 5.

States such as Florida, Minnesota, Massachusetts, Hawaii and Rhode Island have already passed similar legislation.

In addition to performing the usual medical procedures during a physical exam, the American Academy of Pediatrics recommends pediatricians focus on health areas related to the child's stage of development.

With children ages 4 and 5, for example, the emphasis is on growth and learning. Can the child ride a tricycle? Does the child dress and undress without supervision? Does the child follow directions? Is the child hyperactive or aggressive in a group setting?

"If we find a problem early, we can refer the child for testing," Dr. Maxey said.

With children in the elementary school years, the pediatrician should continue to check for developmental and learning difficulties, as well as screen for scoliosis (curvature of the spine).

The American Academy of Pediatrics also recommends that the doctor question the child about the family, school and friends: How do you get along at school? How are things at home? Are you following proper safety rules when you ride your bicycle?

At this point, some pediatricians may also administer an exercise checkup.

"We check their pulse and blood pressure prior to exercise," Maxey said. "Then we run them around the block and check their vitals again."

When the child reaches the pre-adolescent and adolescent years, the doctor should begin to focus on such issues as dietary habits, sexuality and use of tobacco, drugs and alcohol.

"It's a different agenda than it was 10 or 20 years ago," said Dr. Morris Green, who edited the American Academy of Pediatrics manual "Guidelines for Health Supervision" and teaches at the Indiana University School of Medicine.

"It's more than just a physical, just listening to the heart," he said. "You have to talk to the teenagers and hear what they're saying."

Doctors have become increasingly concerned about the health of the nation's 30 million teenagers, the only age group that has not experienced any improvement in health status in the past three decades.

"Their death rate has not been decreasing," Green said. "That's due to things like accidents and drug abuse."

Congress recently commissioned a major study of teenagers' health needs. In particular, doctors say, adolescent boys do not take advantage of available health care. In surveys of clinics serving teens in the San Francisco area, the ratio of girls to boys seeking health care ranges from 3-1 to 8-1.

One reason for the disparity, doctors say, may be that girls see doctors because of painful menstruation or to receive birth control. Boys, on the other hand, rarely see a doctor unless they're injured, very ill or need a form signed to get a job, play sports or attend a school.

"The challenges of taking care of teenagers have changed," Green said. "Society has changed. Families aren't as stable as they once were. And there are more dangerous sexually transmitted diseases than ever before. There are just immense problems."

Dietary intake reflected in grade point average

Copley News Service

A child's grade point average might reflect dietary intake, according to R. Garrison of Health Media of America in San Diego.

Seven-day dietary records were gathered from a group of high school students, and a dietary co-efficient was obtained for each student by dividing the daily intake of protein by the intake of refined carbohydrate. The dietary co-efficient was compared to the students' grade point average.

Results showed diet was directly related to grade point average. The grade point average decreased as protein intake declined and refined carbohydrate intake increased.

No association was found between vitamin/mineral intake and scholastic achievement.

Author recommends cholesterol check for children

Copley News Service

That little dumpling walking around your house may have a cholesterol problem. According to the book "Kids and Cholesterol," 50 percent of American children suffer serious heart ailments later in life.

Author Robert Kowalski says lack of exercise and poor nutrition are to blame. He says every child should have a cholesterol checkup. And Kowalski says parents should get kids off junk food by teaching them how to read food packaging labels.

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Healthy mental attitude is key to quality life

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

For older individuals, mental well being includes maintaining independence, managing stress, and understanding and coping with the process of aging.

For retired persons, maintaining independence seems to be a key factor in keeping mentally fit. Independence helps promote a positive self-image, linking together other factors such as proper nutrition, physical fitness, medical care and healthy living. A healthy mental attitude is the factor that gives quality to life.

Unfortunately, society does not have a positive attitude toward retirement or aging. As individuals retire, many younger people tend to believe that older people give up social and business skills gained through a lifetime.

In fact, too many retirees share this attitude, allowing their skills to die from lack of use. With early retirement now encouraged by many large corporations, the problem is becoming worse. The early retirement programs are creating more retired persons in a much younger age group who are losing the opportunity to use their knowledge and experience.

This attitude toward retirement can cause older persons to lose their positive attitude and feeling of mental well being. If the mind, which is stimulated by tasks and challenges, is used less and less, life, for many retirees, can lose its purpose. This negative quality of life can result in poor nutrition, lack of physical fitness, substance abuse and loss of self respect.

Even though a person ages, his life experiences with business, family and friends continues. Employers should be encouraged to hire older persons. Retirees may consider volunteer work, community involvement or even going into business for themselves. Because of their many years of experience, older individuals have much to offer.

With 26 million Americans — nearly 12 percent of the population — over 65, retirement is an issue that concerns everyone.

Two major attitudes need changing: the first is the country's negative view of retirement and aging; the second is the retiree's attitude about aging.

Retirement years can be full of hope and possibilities. Purposeful living and a positive self image can be found in retirement.

Steve Edwards is executive director of Community and Senior Services and the Visiting Nurse Service of Midland.

Dower chest ancient tradition

Associated Press

The tradition of providing a young girl with a dower chest to fill with treasures for her wedding is centuries old.

Though it's not certain exactly when or where the custom originated, by the 15th century most European families made sure that each daughter had a chest of her own. In the chest were stored precious linens, blankets, china, silver and family heirlooms, all saved for the longed-for marriage. When a young woman married she took the chest, filled with many of the essentials of housekeeping, to her new home.

According to Country Home magazine, chests were some of the earliest pieces of furniture, made in the days of ancient Egypt. They first were used to lock away church treasures. Later, during the Middle Ages, each home had several chests in which the family clothing was kept. Eventually, certain chests were set aside especially for the trousseau of a bride-to-be. Bridal or dower chests became important to every young woman and furniture builders did some of their finest work in producing them. These chests were valued as works of art as well as for the riches they held.

When settlers came to America, they brought cherished souvenirs of the Old World to the new land in chests. Colonial furniture makers carried on the tradition of dower chests: By the time a colonial girl was 8 or 9, she probably had one of her own. In addition to household and personal items, the girl stored her needlework here, knowing it would one day embellish her own home.

The most popular dower chests came from Pennsylvania German furniture makers. These often were painted in soft blues or greens. Against this background fanciful motifs were applied, many of them reminiscent of the old-world tradition of manuscript illustration.

Today, a return to traditional weddings has created a renewed interest in dower chests. More than 100 styles are available, many of them replicas of colonial American pieces adorned with hand-painted primitive motifs.

Homeowners unaware of liabilities

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Homeowners often are not aware of property liabilities they are responsible for in the event of an accident.

Owners are required to take reasonable steps to protect children, even those who are trespassing, from dangers on their property.

Attorney Armond Budish provides a homeowners safety checklist in Family Circle magazine to help protect yourself and your neighbors.

■ Take a good look around your property. An uncovered wading pool, swing set or a ladder leaning against your home are all accidents waiting to happen.

Storing dangerous equipment in the garage and leaving the door open is another potential hazard.

■ Is it possible for children to come onto your property? Can a neighbor's baby crawl into your yard? Could neighborhood kids climb your woodpile or ladder?

■ Take steps to prevent injuries.

Cover the wading pool and close the garage door. Think about safety when buying playground equipment. Nonmetal swings and seesaws are best because they don't rust or have sharp edges.

Put sand on the playground as a cushion for falls.

Women feel pressure to marry

Copley News Service

Something called "The Spinster Report" said a 40-year-old woman has a better chance of being hit by a terrorist's bullet than marrying. Now a book called "Why Isn't My Daughter Married?" uncovers more facts about today's spinsters.

Author Patricia Curtis, who surveyed 72 unmarried women and 58 mothers, says never-married women feel the kind of stigma today that divorced women felt in their mother's generation.

Curtis also reports that daughters feel tons of pressure to marry — even though their mothers try not to pressure them.

Do young women still want to marry? Curtis says the answer is a firm "yes."

Unfortunately, many modern spinsters are learning to be happy with friends, lovers and pets instead of a hubby.

Lifestyle policies

Policies for publication of announcements in the Lifestyle sections of The Midland Reporter-Telegram are:

Information for Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday. For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the information is to be published. For example, an item for Wednesday's paper must be received by noon Monday.

Engagement announcements must appear at least two weeks before the wedding date. Wedding announcements must appear within one month of the event. Anniversary announcements — 25th or higher — must be published within one month of the anniversary date.

Announcements of pageant winners will only be published for teenage pageants and older. Photographes will be published only for winners, not runner-ups. These announcements are published Tuesdays. Deadline is 5 p.m. Friday.

All articles must be submitted in writing. Forms for weddings, engagements and anniversaries, only published Sundays, are available in the Lifestyle office. All materials must include the signature and telephone number of the person submitting them.

We cannot mail forms to persons in Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication. To have a photo returned by mail, include a self-addressed, stamped envelope. Unclaimed photos are discarded after a month.

Photographs may be submitted with wedding and engagement announcements, and anniversary announcements of 50 years or more, but are not required. A portrait of the bride-elect or of the future bride and bridegroom together may be submitted with engagement announcements. Portraits of the bride only or of the wedding couple may be submitted with wedding announcements. A different photo must be submitted for the engagement and wedding announcements.

Photos should be vertical, black and white, glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but quality reproduction cannot be assured. Snapshots generally are not acceptable and Polaroid shots are not accepted. The MRT reserves the right to deny publication of any photo due to quality or content.

There is no charge for publication of photographs and stories.

MIMS-LUTHER

Mr. and Mrs. Jack R. Mims of Midland announce the engagement of their daughter Pamela Gail to Glen C. Luther, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank W. Luther of Midland. The wedding is scheduled for 2 p.m. Sept. 17 at St. Paul United Methodist Church in Midland.

Miss Mims is a graduate of Midland Christian School and a student at Abilene Christian University. Her fiance graduated from Lee High School and Texas Tech University. He is employed with Goodyear Proving Grounds in San Angelo.

Romance found on aisle 14 of supermarket

By SUZANNE DALEY
New York Times News Service

Looking for romance?

Try the supermarket, says Shellie Fraddin, a woman who once met a man over a mango and who teaches New Yorkers that love can easily blossom in the fruit and vegetable sections.

Don't bother with the paper-goods aisle though.

You're probably wasting your time there.

You should start, said Ms. Fraddin, by looking in a person's shopping cart for clues.

If they are buying small portions — indicating they live alone — and food you find appealing, find a way to approach them.

Ms. Fraddin was in Sloan's in midtown Manhattan recently showing how it is done.

She spotted a likely target almost immediately — a cart containing a package of pita bread, imported chocolate cookies and frozen okra.

Whoever had choosen those items, Ms. Fraddin said, would be very interesting.

"The secret here," she said, waiting for the cart's owner to return, "is to be a little creative, to think before you speak.

"I could say: 'Okra? I've never tasted that. What does that taste like?' Then, go on from there."

The cart, however, turned out to be abandoned.

YOU SHOULD never go to the supermarket just to flirt, Ms. Fraddin said.

You should go to shop too. That way if you don't meet anybody, at least you've got your groceries.

Supermarket encounters should be fun, playful, cute, she said.

For example, you could walk by a person you want to meet three times, drawing attention to yourself.

Or, if you saw somebody buying birthday candles, you might say, "Celebrating your 30th birthday?" But only to someone who is at least 35.

Ms. Fraddin, 49 and divorced 12 years ago, said she dates only younger men.

When a handsome one passed by her twice near the dairy section, her eyebrows rose and she chased after him.

"Oh, excuse me," she said to the man. "What does that calcium milk taste like?"

But the conversation was brief.

"He's gay," Ms. Fraddin whispered, moving on.

On handling rejection, Ms. Fraddin tells her students to repeat to themselves, "Anyone who doesn't realize how great I am doesn't deserve me."

Certain places in the supermarket are slightly better than others for flirting, Ms. Fraddin said.

It's hard to tell a lot about a person from the toilet paper they buy.

On the other hand, the produce section, where people linger, is usually good.

The time she met the man over a mango, she didn't know much about the fruit, and so she asked him about it.

Eventually, she worked up to saying: "I'm going to try it. Would you care to meet me later in the week and show me how to prepare it?"

MS. FRADDIN has been teaching her course at the Learning Annex, which runs nonacademic classes for adults, for two years now.

But she has been studying the relationships between men and women for 30-odd years, she said.

She is also writing a book on the subject called "Superflirt."

Ms. Fraddin said she would like to marry again.

For a time she moved to California, thinking better men might live there, but not so, she said.

At the moment, Ms. Fraddin is dating someone she met on a train to Long Island. (Actually, he approached her.)

Everywhere you turn in a grocery store, there are conversation starters, Ms. Fraddin said.

Take Perdue chicken. "It has no chemicals — that's a perfect opportunity to ask them why they are buying it," she said.

Or mashed potato flakes. "You could say, 'I'm making the best real mashed potatoes tonight. Want to come over and have some?'"

But some people you might not want to bother with — for instance, some with cheap ice cream in their cart.

"They are probably like that about everything they buy," Ms. Fraddin said.

In front of the deli counter, Ms. Fraddin headed for a man who was lining up for cold cuts, but she veered away quickly.

"He's wearing a wedding band," she said.

Finally, unable to find a male prospect, Ms. Fraddin decided to strike up a conversation with a woman.

She approached one at random.

"Excuse me, have you ever met a man in the grocery store?" Ms. Fraddin said.

"Yeah," said the woman. "I took your class."

THE WOMAN then told the story of her one supermarket adventure. It went like this:

At the checkout counter a man looked at her.

She looked at him.

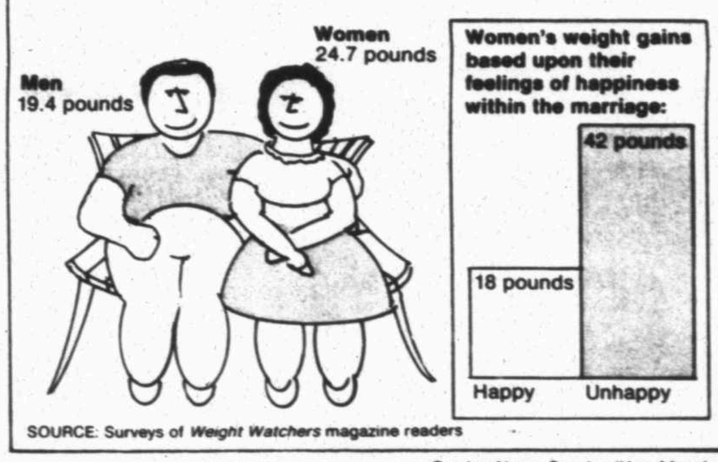

He waited for her outside the store, took her telephone number and called soon after.

"To make a long story short," said the woman, "he explained that he had an hour to kill before his girlfriend got home."

At least she had her groceries.

Designer furnishings not important to son

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

I just bought our son a book on "How to Decorate Your First Apartment." What kind of a mother would buy her son such a book, you ask?

The same stupid mother who sent him off to college with an umbrella. Who put name tags in his pajamas for camp. Who packed carrots in school lunches. Who gave him an extra handkerchief for the prom. That's who!

My husband said he needs a decorating book like television needs another rerun. I told him, "My idea is just to get him set with a master plan so he won't go out and buy 15 periods of furniture and assorted colors and end up with a mishmash of eclectic pieces that don't begin to make a statement."

He looked at me a full minute before he responded, "He has roaches that move the sofa! That makes a statement!" He thumbed through the pages of the book and asked, "What's an armoire?"

"You know," I said, "it's one of those huge wardrobes that take up a whole wall and you hang things in."

"It says here they cost $3,000, but it's a good investment to start you off."

"That makes sense," I said.

"If the kid had $3,000 to spend, he'd live in the armoire with four other guys. You never learn, do you?"

I knew without listening he was going to bring up the Liberia story. He had told it so many times at parties I could lip-sync it without missing a word.

"It's the Liberia story all over again," he said.

"I don't want to hear it."

"What other mother do you know would send her son a Crockpot in the Peace Corps in the boonies of Africa?"

"I didn't know they didn't have electricity where he was," I said tiredly. "And while we're on the subject, I wasn't the one who gave him a tool box when he got his first car."

"Everyone ought to have a tool box in his car," he said. "It just makes good sense."

"The only thing he used was a wrench to get the top off a bottle of Orange Crush to put in his radiator when it boiled over."

"We don't know that for sure."

"I think we're dealing with a generation thing," I said.

"There's nothing we can do to stop him from furnishing his apartment with beaded room dividers and revolving mood lamps with a fake fountain that changes colors. Nothing."

An existence without one Laura Ashley print. I'd have to live with that.

A Town Tossed Away

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the fourth article in the five-part series "Tombstone Tales," about Texas ghost towns.

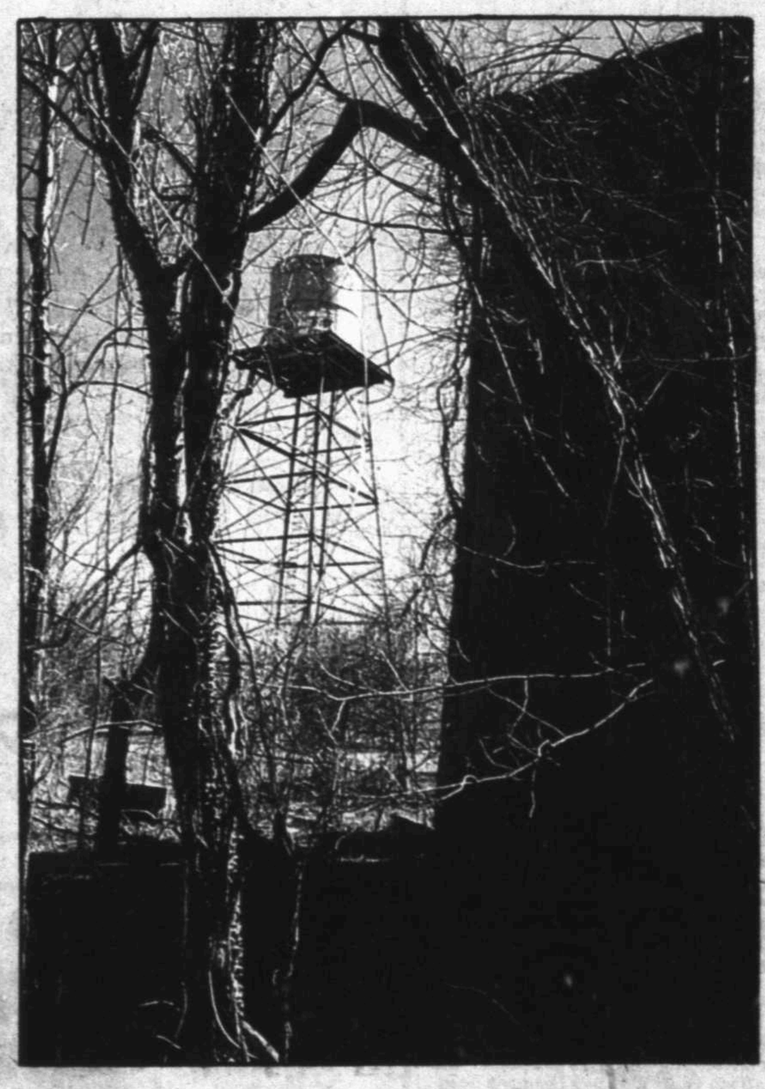

There's a sad truth about the towering hulls of reinforced concrete scattered around the East Texas ghost town of Haslam. The roofless concrete buildings, grown up in trees and shrubs, are remnants of a mill which once produced 400,000 feet of lumber daily.

The ornate office desks and heavy footings of machinery that have been left behind reflect the advent of a society inclined to dispose of things once they have served their purpose. Like the old soft drink cans along the highway, the town was tossed away once its natural resource of lumber was depleted.

"Cut out and get out," was the motto established by Haslam's founders in 1894, and the crumbling shells of the lumber mills are the only evidence that anyone every penetrated the dense Shelby Forest.

LOCATED IN the extreme northeast corner of Shelby County, one mile from the Louisiana state line, Haslam was a vast area of farming country. But it was the immense quantities of short leaf pine timber and hardwood timber which attracted William Alfred Pickering, son of millionaire lumberman William R. Pickering, to the area.

Please see HASLAM, Page 2F

Haslam

Haslam is located off of a gravel county road which leads south from U.S. Highway 84 opposite the highway junction with Farm to Market Road 3174, approximately 1.2 miles west of the Sabine River Bridge across from Logansport, La.

The above four photos represent all that is left of Haslam, once a thriving lumber mill town in East Texas, now completely abandoned. The roofless concrete hulls of the lumber mill complex are grown up in trees and scrub.

HASLAM

The elder Pickering, the son of English immigrants, began his career with a lead mine in Joplin, Mo., before organizing the Pickering Lumber Company in 1894. In 1898, the firm began purchasing timberland in Louisiana and Texas, and Pickering allowed his son to take over the company. By 1906, the company had purchased 100,000 acres of woodland in Shelby County, according to "Ghost Towns of Texas" by T. Lindsay Baker.

Young Pickering named Haslam for his Missouri schoolmate, a freight train conductor who was soon hired to work on designing the town which bore his name.

The Pickering lumber mills, near the Sabine River, were chosen for the site of the future Haslam because of its short tree trunks, ideal for the type of logging planned. Pickering had considered building his mills in the nearby town of Center, which already had a lumber planing (wood shaping) business. But land was cheaper at the Haslam site, and the relatively level terrain of the woods floor was perfect for logging by tram railroad, according to an article in the Aug. 7, 1952, edition of "The Champion," a Center newspaper.

Haslam drew blueprints for a sawmill, planer, light plant, log pond, shop tram roads and office, separate hotels for white employees and Negro employees, and segregated resident sections.

Pickering's mills were built to last 15 years, the time operators decided was needed to mill most of the Shelby Forest. When completed, Haslam consisted of sawmills, planing mills, lumber curing sheds, a power plant, waterworks, a fire department, 25 acres of log ponds, a company commissary, a hotel and company housing for 400 families.

The first logs went through the saws in the early part of 1915. By Feb. 2, 1916, an article in "The Champion" said, "The mill of the Pickering Lumber Company at Haslam is not one of the largest mills in the Southwest, but it is one of the most energetic concerns that ever turned a saw or cut a log."

Pickering established an additional hardwood mill in 1920 where oak, gum and other spieces of hardwood were milled. Both mills were operated at top speed on 21 hour-per-day shifts, filling orders by the trainload, and the mills employed hundreds. About 400,000 feet of lumber was produced daily. Most of the loggers spent only weekends at home and lived in temporary housing or tents during the week.

The last log was cut in 1929 and the forest was nearly depleted. Haslam had died several years before the mill quit running and willed all his possessions back to the Pickering Lumber Co.

W.C. Garrett bought the mill in the 1930s and wood from Haslam was an important supplier for the nation during the World War I and World War II. After World War II, the community had six places of business and about 250 residents. Later, the Haslam mills were bought by the May Brothers of Beaumont, who shut down the mills for the last time in the 1950s.

A town that was once the largest producer of cut timber in the state is now a mere ghost of its former self. Haslam, which once harbored over 1,000 loggers, is completely abandoned, and the buildings — which were only meant to last 15 years — still stand to tell the tale of a town that once was.

New book useful to those restoring old house

By ANN BARRY
New York Times News Service

For those dedicated to restoring an old house in all its authentic particulars, "Floor Coverings for Historic Buildings" is a useful tool.

The book surveys the changing fashions of its subject from 1750 to 1930. If a rustic Colonial look is desired, a simple white-pine floor is recommended, possibly painted in the yellow, dark red, gray or brown that were popular then.

Gail Caskey Winkler, who works with a design and restoration service in Philadelphia, wrote the historical text. Helene Von Rosenstiel, a conservator of textiles and costumes in Brooklyn, wrote the sections on reproducing or adapting the materials described, including aged woods, brick flooring, floor cloths and stencils, matting, handmade rugs, flat-woven and pile carpets.

The book (Preservation Press, $12.95) can be ordered from the National Trust for Historic Preservation, 1600 H Street NW, Washington, D.C. 20006.

Gravesites of rich, famous prove fascinating to many

By PHYLLIS BATTELLE
Hearst News Service

NEW YORK — "The fence around a cemetery is foolish," columnist Arthur Brisbane once wrote, "because those inside can't get out, and those outside don't want to get in."

Presumably he was correct regarding the interred, (although believers in ghosts and zombies might beg to differ.) But Brisbane was dead wrong in stating that those outside don't want to get into cemeteries. Many Americans make a hobby of strolling through graveyards, seeking historical or genealogical roots by reading the epitaphs.

My mother was one. She doted on early New England cemeteries, and used to tiptoe through the tombstones the way other women haunted antique shops, reliving the past in the often crumbling messages on the markers.

While "cemetery buffs" in the Northeast tend to be on the lookout for 17th and 18th century nostalgia, those on the West Coast are inclined toward a respectful form of titillation — visiting the final resting places of the rich and famous, notably movie stars. In southern California, for example, cemetery-visiting is a growth industry. A new enterprise called "Grave Line Tours" offers $25 trips to the gravesites of such dearly departed as Bing Crosby and Rita Hayworth — and the mode of transportation, befittingly, is a well-appointed hearse.

"There's something fascinating about standing on the ground and knowing a body is down there."

Tourist on a tour of celebrity gravesites in California

"THERE'S SOMETHING fascinating about standing on the ground and knowing a body is down there," a tinsel-town tourist said recently. Grave Line Tours doesn't stop at only cemetery watching; it also guides guests past such landmarks as the Chateau Marmont, where John Belushi died from an overdose.

Going one step beyond simple grave-touring, a book called "This is Hollywood" lists celebrities' murder and suicide sites in the area, for people who want to strike on their own in search of the macabre. Now in its eighth printing, the book has sold nearly 250,000 copies.

To purist cemetery fans, such books are not exactly cricket. They pander to a readership seeking sensationalism, rather than enlightenment. The real bible to tomb travelers may be "Permanent Addresses — A Guide to the Resting Places of Famous Americans," which came out several years ago and was billed as an "off-beat travel book." Although sections of "Permanent Addresses" resembled a National Enquirer of the interred set, at least it focused on cemeteries, and the gossip was leavened on such grave facts as these:

Judy Garland is buried, not in Hollywood, but at Ferncliff Cemetery in Hartsdale, N.Y. where a spokesman told her fifth husband, Mickey Deans, "Your wife will be the star of Ferncliff."

The 19th century actor Edwin Booth, brother of presidential assassin John Wilkes Booth, is buried at Mount Auburn Cemetery in Cambridge, Mass. We learn that at the very moment his coffin was being carried from a church after the funeral, Ford's Theater in Washington, D.C. collapsed with a roar, killing 20 people.

AMONG OTHER highlights for cemetery afficionadoes we learn that Errol Flynn had recurring dreams in which he stood staring at his own unmarked grave in L.A.'s Forest Lawn, a burial ground he disliked. He told Ida Lupino that when he died, he wanted his ashes scattered at sea. But after Flynn's death, third wife Patrice Wymore rejected cremation — and had his body shipped straight to Forest Lawn.

And underworld kingpin Al Capone didn't have much to say about his burial, either. Capone's family had his body moved from one Chicago-area cemetery to another, leaving the original headstone to fool visitors. The headstone is at Mount Olivet, the book reveals, but the real remains are in Mt. Carmel Cemetery, Hillsdale, Illinois.

F. Scott Fitzgerald had a similar transitory fate after his death in 1940. For 35 years, the writer was refused official burial in a California Catholic cemetery because he was termed a "lapsed Catholic." In 1975, his remains were finally interred at St. Mary's Cemetery in Rockville, Ill.

Several other famous persons, including Davy Crockett, Thomas Paine and Albert Einstein are listed under a special category, "permanent addresses unknown," a fate that sometimes follows cremation, especially of humble men like Dr. Einstein: he requested that there be no funeral service, grave or monument in his honor, and even asked that the disposal of his ashes be kept secret. A friend reportedly drove the scientist's ashes to a river near Trenton, N.J., (not far from his home base in Princeton) and dropped them in without ceremony.

FINALLY, THE book concluded that truly dedicated cemetery buffs will find their greatest gratification in visiting the eastern seaboard rather than the West Coast with its celebrities-come-lately. In spite of the hype, the hooplah and the hearse-driven tours in Los Angeles, a geographical guide of final resting places, state by state, shows New York to have the greatest number of non-living, famous residents by far — with California a distant second.

Scientists search for 'real' Merlin

Copley News Service

Scholars have debated the existence of King Arthur for many years, with some arguing that his legend grew up around an actual early ruler and others dismissing the whole thing as fantasy.

However, most historical researchers haven't given a second thought to Arthur's wizard friend Merlin, certain that the fabled enchanter was conjured up by storytellers.

Until now, that is, with Nikolai Tolstoy's book "The Quest for Merlin," recently released in paperback from the Little, Brown publishing house.

Tolstoy submits evidence that shows Merlin was a real person who lived in the Scottish lowlands around the sixth century — not the supposed era of Arthur. However, he did have the power of prophecy, since Tolstoy believes Merlin probably was a Druid or high priest for the ancient Celtic religion.

Check your local bookstore for "The Quest for Merlin" by Nikolai Tolstoy, an enchanting way to spend the days and nights.

DEAR ABBY

Husband wants to love less of his wife

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My wife is about 45 pounds overweight and has been since her pregnancy. She wore her maternity clothes for more than four years — until I told her I couldn't stand to look at them anymore. I have asked her repeatedly to lose weight and have offered to help her in any way possible, but to no avail.

She says if I loved her, I would accept her the way she is. I say if you love someone, you do your best to look good for them.

Abby, I don't expect her to have a 22-inch waist — I'd just like her to trim down a bit. This has been bothering me so much that I am considering having an affair with a slender woman — or telling my wife to shape up or ship out! She reads your column every day, so please give her a little advice. — END OF MY ROPE

DEAR END: Your wife didn't ask for any advice, but I'll give you some: Quit nagging her. She is the only person she will lose weight for. And she'll do it for her own reasons when she's good and ready.

She's right — a loving husband will accept his wife the way she is. (I've yet to hear from a woman who would tell her overweight husband to "shape up or ship out.")

Now is the time to be especially loving and supportive. Love her to pieces and kill her with kindness, and say nothing about her weight. What have you got to lose?

DEAR ABBY: I just read the letter from the woman who bought herself a pair of expensive diamond earrings for Mother's Day because the previous year her husband gave her nothing, saying, "You're not my mother." She was the mother of his twin daughters.

Abby, since when is something one awards himself a "gift"? To me, this is about on a par with certain foreign dictators who cover their chests with medals and decorations. Assuming she did it to make a point, wouldn't a card and flowers have made her point without breaking the budget?

I was married for 14 years to a woman who never gave me a chance to buy her anything. She'd buy herself gifts (usually jewelry) on credit, using my name and credit references, as much as two months before the date. I would never have forgotten her birthday or our anniversary, but she took no chances. I am far from a cheapskate, but because she always selected her own gifts, I was cheated out of the pleasure I would have had, had I been allowed to do the buying and giving. — CHEATED IN BELLFLOWER

DEAR CHEATED: Some men do not like to shop and appreciate being relieved of the chore. But a wife should not take over the chore of buying her own gift unless her husband offers it to her.

DEAR ABBY: I have a conflict with my husband over the subject of children. We have been married for almost a year. He's 23 and I'm 19. We both want children — he less than I. I keep bringing up the subject and he keeps closing it. He says that a baby would tie us down, and I want a baby so much, it hurts. Can you help, Abby, or am I rushing things? — CAN'T WAIT IN SUBURBAN, ILL.

DEAR CAN'T: Yes, you are rushing things. Wait until your husband is just as eager as you are — then you won't be the only one who's "tied down."

Riverboats provide perfect relaxation

Cruise down Mississippi River is leisurely

By JOHN SINOR
Copley News Service

If I had to treat people with nervous disorders nearing the breakdown stage, I would put them on a paddle-wheel steamboat on the Mississippi River for about a week.

If you can't relax going up or down that lazy old river at about 7 mph, with a little banjo for background music, your case may be hopeless.

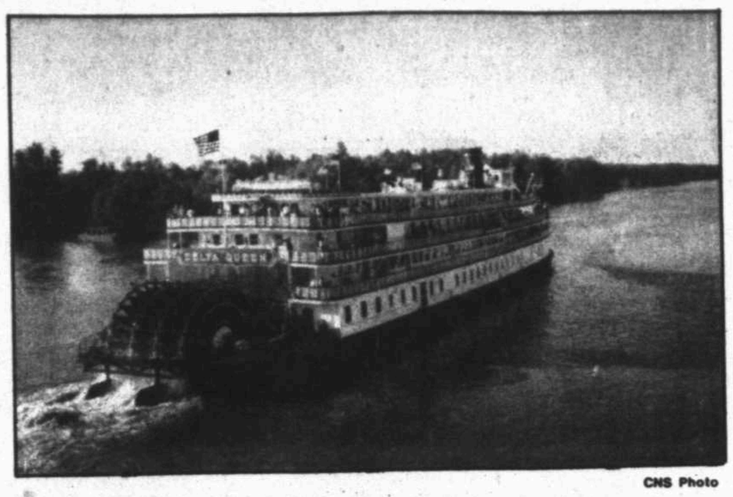

My wife and I traveled down the river from St. Louis, Mo., to New Orleans on the beautiful old Delta Queen. This is the same stretch of river Mark Twain, as the young Sam Clemens, had to learn to earn his license to pilot a river boat.

Our pilot, Capt. Gabriel Chengery, started much as Twain did. He first joined the river-boat family as a cabin boy.

By road, the trip is about 700 miles. By river it is close to 1,300 winding miles, flowing in all directions. The morning sun sometimes will be in front of you, sometimes at your back and other times on one or another side of you.

Our journey lasted 10 days. Most of the steamboat travel took place at night, since many daylight hours were spent investigating the sights and meeting the people of the South.

By the time we landed in New Orleans, our accents were dripping a little false honey. It's true, I do declare.

The Delta Queen heads down the Mississippi River.

EACH RIVER trip is different in length and theme. There are fall color trips, music trips, spring garden trips, holiday trips and so on. You can book an overnight trip or you can arrange for one of 10 days or more.

A couple of years ago I took a week's cruise solo on the Delta Queen's newer and bigger sister, the Mississippi Queen. This time, aboard the Delta Queen, I took my wife with me to share some of the beauty of the South.

We visited antebellum mansions and estates at various stops along the river. They are all impressive, but Rosedown at St. Francisville, La., is especially striking with its acres of formal gardens.

On our visit to St. Francisville, we docked across the river from the town and crossed over on a small car ferry. I noticed travelers on the ferry were mostly fishermen hauling small boats.

When I asked one of the ferrymen about it, he said, "Well, you see, all the fellers on that side think the fishing's better on this side, and all the fellers on this side think it's better on that side."

A favorite stop, one I remember well from the previous visit, was Natchez, La. It has more than 100 restored antebellum mansions, some of them with Northern cannonballs proudly embedded in their walls. The owners left the cannonballs there because they wanted visitors to always be aware whose side they were on during the war.

NEAR THE shore where the steamboats dock at Natchez is the restored (to its rough-hewn days) Natchez-under-the-Hill, once a hangout for cutthroats who robbed boatmen in the nearby forests and canebrakes of anything they had left after visiting the gamblers and shady ladies of the area's saloons.

Natchez still has a one-house red-light district — Miss Millie's. I once asked John C. Calhoun, who runs one of the mansion-museums in town, if the city had ever tried to close it.

He said, "Close it! Hell, John, it's practically a national monument."

Whenever you board either river boat, the first thing you do is have a party. That's also about the last thing you do when you leave, with a lot of parties thrown in between.

You aren't required to go to any of them, but you are invited to each one. If you prefer, you can just stay in your room and read or write letters or visit in several elegantly furnished salons.

Each of the Queens has a daily schedule of games and activities, such as trivia contests, kite flying and driving golf balls.

For the health conscious, there are daily exercise classes and a lot of jogging around the decks. I was so health conscious, I sent my wife to the exercise class each day.

There is music, music, music no matter which cruise you go on. We had three bands, Glenn Wilson and the Riverboat Five, Brian O'Neil and his band and the Reno Brothers, a western and bluegrass group.

A stop in Memphis, Tenn., will give you a chance to look at Beale Street, where W.C. Handy gave birth to the blues, the city's theme park, Mud Island, or the Peabody Hotel, where ducks march down from the penthouse every morning to spend the day in the main lobby's fountain.

STUDENTS OF the Civil War will want to visit the grounds of the National Battlefield at Vicksburg, Miss., where cannons are still in place and thousands of unmarked headstones fill the cemetery.

With a stop at Baton Rouge, La., you'll get to visit Louisiana State University and will be taken to a bayou where you can sample Cajun food and watch Cajun dances.

Save some time at one end of your cruise for a day or two in New Orleans. The French Quarter and its music and Creole and Cajun food make it an almost around-the-clock party place.

For more information, contact the Delta Queen Steamboat Co. at 30 Robin Street Wharf, New Orleans, La. 70130, or ask your travel agent for one of the company's brochures.

As the Cajuns say, "You gonna pass a good time."

Restored ship to be rechristened

Copley News Service

The Battle of Lake Erie on Sept. 10, 1813, which paved the way for America's expansion westward following the War of 1812, will be commemorated on its 175th anniversary this year with the rechristening of the U.S. Brig Niagara which served as Commodore Oliver Perry's relief flagship in the historic battle won by American forces.

The newly rebuilt Niagara is expected to lead a parade of ships on Lake Erie on Sept. 10. In addition there will be boat races and regattas, a parade, a memorial service, fireworks and a formal military ball.

When the Niagara's rebuilding is completed, she will be the only sailing vessel of her period in full operation in the world. The reconstruction has used more than 40 pieces of the original vessel including wooden beams and assorted hardware, some of which have been in storage for about 50 years.

Addition of new events sure to improve Olympics

By DAVID GRIMES
New York Times News Service

I am looking forward to the upcoming Summer Olympics because some new events, bowling and badminton among them, are going to be played on a trial basis.

I think it's hard for the average American to identify with traditional Olympic events, most of which are track and field sports that involve running real fast, jumping real high or throwing things a long way.

These are not the kinds of sports that have a great deal of appeal to your typical weekend warrior: "Hey, Joe. Let's get up a foursome this Saturday and go down to the club for a couple of rounds of high hurdles and maybe some hammer throws. I'll bring the beer."

Bowling is a particularly good choice for a future Olympic event, not only because it's popular in America, but because it's one of the few things the Russians and East Germans aren't likely to beat us at.

It will take a while for the Russians to get good at bowling because there are so many things about the game that are alien to their way of life.

Take bowling shirts, for instance. In America, bowlers must wear shirts that say either Al's Transmission Specialist or Vito's Pizzeria and Transmission Specialist.

Unless Al and Vito have franchises in the Ukraine, the Russians will have to come up with their own bowling shirts, which will probably say something like The Kamchatka Turnip Cooperative or The Uzbek Central Party's Bureau of Men In Big Suits In Charge of Hydroelectric Plants and Yak Fertilizer.

Clearly, no country can make much political hay by dressing its Olympic bowlers in shirts like this.

Then there is the matter of the bowling ball. Russian manufactured goods are notorious for their poor quality as well as being hard to find.

Future Olympians will have to stand in line for hours to buy their first bowling ball, only to discover when they get it home that it has two holes rather than three and is shaped like a football.

The Russians also have a lot of catching up to do in the way of bowling technology.

If they want to be taken seriously on the international bowling stage, they're going to have to spend a lot of rubles developing automatic pinsetters and scoring computers.

Russia will tell its spies to stop working on Pentagon and CIA officials for secrets about the MX missile and B-1 bomber and start getting chummy with Brunswick executives instead.

If bowling doesn't finish off the Soviet Union, badminton surely will. Half the population will freeze to death searching the snowdrifts for lost birdies and the other half will die of apoplexy trying to untangle the nets.

I'm sure Americans will agree that the real question about bringing bowling and badminton into the Olympics is not whether they're appropriate, but why we didn't do it sooner.

According to the American Cancer Society, one out of ten women in the United States will develop breast cancer sometime in her lifetime. It is currently estimated that over 37,000 women die each year as the result of breast cancer.

Ninety percent of breast cancers are diagnosed by women or their physicians finding a lump in the breast. Women who are diagnosed with a lump large enough to feel have a 50 percent five year survival rate. A woman who is diagnosed as having breast cancer by mammography, before a lump can be felt, has a 97% five year survival rate and a 90% 10 year survival rate.

A mammogram can detect a cancer this small, ● even before it can be felt.

APPOINTMENTS MAY BE MADE BY CALLING 335-8711.

THE MOBILE BREAST CANCER DETECTION UNIT WILL BE AT DR. BARTLETT'S OFFICE MONDAY, AUGUST 15th.

The American Cancer Society has established guidelines for mammography in asymptomatic women. (Women who have no symptoms of disease). Those guidelines have been adopted by the American Academy by Family Physicians, American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, and The American College of Radiology. Those guidelines are:

I. 35-40 years of age - One baseline mammogram.

II. 40-50 years of age - A mammogram every 1-2 years depending on breast type and risk factor.

III. 50 years of age and over -An annual physical examination and annual mammogram.

IV. Asymptomatic women under 50 years of age with significant high risk factors should be examined at appropriate intervals. These risk factors include previous breast cancer and family history of cancer.

V. A symptomatic woman should have a mammogram at any age when she experiences a mass, nipple discharge, skin changes or unexplained breast pain.

A screening mammogram is an x-ray of the breast using extremely low dosages of radiation (usually comparable to dental x-rays) and is designed to find very early cancers.

A female technologist who is highly trained in mammography will perform the examination.

The charge for the screening mammogram is $45.00. The Unit accepts cash, check, Visa, Mastercard and American Express.

pH AND YOUR SKIN

The pH facor of a given substance refers to hydrogen potential. This means the balance of hydrogen ions in the substance. It tells us if the substance is acid, alkaline, or neutral. It is measured on a scale of zero to fourteen. Seven is a neutral ph. Anything below seven is acid, and anything above seven is alkaline. The normal "resting" ph of the skin is just about 5.5, which means that it is slightly aci8d. This acidity is the result of secretions by the oil and sweat glands. They combine on the surface of the skin to form what is known as the "acid mantle." It is the skin's protection against the environment. Only two things can destroy the acid mantle. The are illness and soap.

Your hair can undergo abusive treatment as well. Harsh shampoos, chemicals and the harmful rays of the sun can be very damaging to the hair. By using ph balanced shampoos and conditioners, you can help to give your hair new life, keeping it soft and manageable. Look to Scarlette at SALON UNIQUE for beautiful hair. All facets of hair care are handled by our salon. You will find us conveniently located at 4400 N. Midland Dr. For an appointment, call 697-8711. Or salon is open to serve you 9-6 Tues.-Sat.

Either excess acidity or alkalinity on the skin can result in acne or uncomfortable dryness.

Recuperation after heart attack studied

Associated Press

Heart attack patients often benefit from getting up and around sooner, being released from the hospital earlier and exercising, according to a recent study in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Even so, heart attack patients generally take 60 days to 90 days to get back to work, and "physicians' recommendations concerning return to work are largely based on subjective judgments that have changed little since 1973," the study said.

The study, led by Dr. Charles Dennis of the Stanford Cardiac Rehabilitation Program in Palo Alto, Calif., evaluated 201 men who had suffered heart attacks without other medical problems. Subjects were divided into two groups: those receiving usual care and those receiving a special medical evaluation to determine fitness for work.

Evaluations were performed three weeks after the patient's heart attack by a team of heart experts who administered a treadmill test and used data on previous victims to estimate the risk each subject would have of experiencing further heart trouble.

The team then advised each patient's doctor of the findings so the doctor could make a more informed recommendation on when the patient could resume work.

The study found that unless otherwise informed, doctors generally estimated risk as much higher than it was and "patients' perceptions of risk mirrored those of their doctors."

Patients in the usual-care group were told by their doctors they could go back to work at 60 days and did so at a median of 75 days.

Patients in the special-evaluation group were told by their doctors they could return at 48 days, and did so at a median of 51 days.

"This 32 percent reduction ... was associated with $2,102 of additional earned salary" per patient in the six months after the heart attack, the researchers said.

Foldout provides information about memory loss

Copley News Service

Used to be that when a person started forgetting things as he or she aged, doctors shrugged off the memory loss as senility. Modern medicine, however, has recognized various memory-related disorders that affect the elderly, and our understanding the causes, effects and distinctions of these problems can make a big difference in an aging person's quality of life.

Memory and Aging, an eight-panel foldout from the Alzheimer's Disease and Related Disorders Association, gives the topic a good general overview, defining and discussing age-associated memory impairment (AAMI), dementia (a term now used to describe the symptoms of senility) and Alzheimer's disease.

U.S. nursing homes could be improved

By PHYLLIS BATTELLE
Hearst News Service

Most American nursing homes are depressing places. And the aging residents, many of whom are psychologically sound, when physical ailments force families to put them in "homes," all too quickly adapt the depressing aura that surrounds them.

That is a national disgrace, rooted in a young culture that fears growing old. "Americans cherish independence and self-sufficiency, so when our elderly become dependent, they lose respect in our society," says John E. Tropman, a gerontologist at the University of Michigan. This loss of respect for residents rubs off on those who care for them, presenting, Tropman says, "enormous obstacles to the self-esteem of nursing home employees whose job is to care for the very people our society shuns."

What makes U.S. homes so dismal is their focus on medical dependency, rather than on emotional well-being, as in other countries — notably Denmark. "Danish nursing homes are based on a psycho-social model." Tropman found in his studies. "They don't have the negative connotations we have here. The goal of their institutions is to bring the elderly into touch with society, not take them out of it. Emotional support and companionship come first. Medical care is the secondary goal." With that positive order of priorities, Danish nursing homes are far happier facilities than those in the U.S. "They are ushering their clients back to life," Tropman says, "not death."

Some non-profit U.S. nursing homes have successfully adopted that approach, recognizing that personal involvement is the best therapeutic root to prolonging life. Many of these "new attitude" homes are affiliated with Jewish or Christian organizations, and the ethnic backgrounds of the residents dictate the type of activities that are available. "Americans in their 80s still have a fairly strong religious feeling," said architect Peter Samton who designs such nursing homes. "So it's the non-profit, church affiliated groups which are doing the best things for them."

Samton described a Hebrew home for the aged in Riverdale, N.Y., where residents (average age: 84) are encouraged to interact with one another at a convivial coffee shop, which teems with talk and kosher food by day, and then converts into a nightclub after dark. The convertible "club" with glass doors leading to a terrace overlooking the Hudson River, offers occasional entertainment acts at night, and families — including grandchildren — gather regularly to view a first-rate show. "Elderly people, unless they're very ill, want to be considered as normal as anyone else," the architect said.

Samton also designed an Episcopal nursing facility on the outskirts of Cincinnati. The elderly of Cincinnati — whether because of a Protestant influence or a Germanic background — are not so interested in coffee shops or nightclubs. They're more into the work ethic perhaps as a result of a semi-rural Midwestern life most residents lived in younger days.

"For them, we developed a little Montessori nursing school right on the grounds," the architect said, "where some of the elderly act as paraprofessional aides to the teachers. Having youngsters around helps alleviate the feeling that they are there because they are old." The Cincinnati home, called Maple Knoll Village, was once an ancient mansion where residents had little to do but sit on the front porch and rock. It was rebuilt in the 1970s evoking a small-town atmosphere with shops clustered around a glass-domed interior street.

The tragedy is that such encouragement is all too rare in thousands of homes for the elderly. Professor Tropman, after studying their plight, says it is not the fault of the staff, who come to their jobs with enthusiasm, and quickly fall prey to an atmosphere of discouragement. He believes nursing home directors "must adopt management techniques used by our best-run corporations, imbuing employees with belief in their mission. When Americans wanted to win World War II, the most menial aspect of armament production became significant, even noble. Rosie the Riveter became a national heroine. If we can dignify the work of nursing home employees the same way, institutions could improve dramatically."

But it will take an all-out war against entrenched national attitudes "Most Americans," said architect Samton "think it is terrible to be old, and even worse, to enjoy it. Middle-aged children are especially selfish. As much as they claim to love their parents, they put them away to be medically cared for so they can get on with their own lives."

If nursing homes are usually dismal, it is because our expectations are self-fulfilling.

Support America's colleges. Because college is more than a place where young people are preparing for their future. It's where America is preparing for its future.

So help America prepare for the future by giving to the college of your choice — and you'll know you've done your part.

Pemex exploration on U.S.-Mexico border intensfies

New seismic, drilling seen in search for northern reserves

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Coronado came this way over 300 years in search of the Cibola, the city of gold. Now his descendants are looking beneath his tracks for another kind of gold — black gold.

If substantial oil reserves are indeed found in the Mexican state of Chihuahua it would not only provide Mexico with funds to bail out an ailing economy, it could also launch a new flurry of exploration activity on the Texas side of the border, by U.S. oil companies attempting to tap into the same formations that may or may not span beneath the Rio Grande.

Except for Paso del Norte which has grown from a cluster of Indian huts into two modern cities — Juarez, with 1 million population and El Paso with 500,000 — northern Mexico has not changed drastically since Coronado came this way.

Parched and rugged, it still harbors some of the most vacant and remote land this side of the Arctic tundra. Distances between towns are so vast that a less than full tank of gasoline can quickly become a fearful experience. In the "out back" off the Pan American Highway between Juarez and Chihuahua, ranchos can be 50 miles apart, and roads into the area are almost non-existent.

In other times, this rugged rangeland with little grass and fewer cows may have been one of the great untouched areas of Mexico, but as one flies over the region, it becomes quickly apparent that this remote land is no longer untouched. Now, it is heavily scarred by long, straight bulldozer gashes.

They are seismic lines — hundreds of them. From Juarez to near Ojinaga, in an area bounded by the Rio Grande and the Pan American Highway, the lines crisscross in every direction. It is only a subjective guess, but the heaviest concentration appears to be an area about 120 miles southeast of Juarez in the vicinty of two ongoing drilling projects.

Straight as an arrow, some lines were calculated to be 60 miles or longer in length. Many of the seismic lines are obviously old, perhaps from seismic programs of the late 1960s and '70s, but many appear freshly cut, perhaps less than 60 days old.

Seismic experts say the density and length of these hastily cut paths used by seismic crews to record underlying formations would seem to confirm news reports in Mexican newspapers that Petroleos Mexicanos (Pemex), the national oil company of Mexico, is aggressively looking for huge oil and gas reserves along the U.S.-Mexico border.

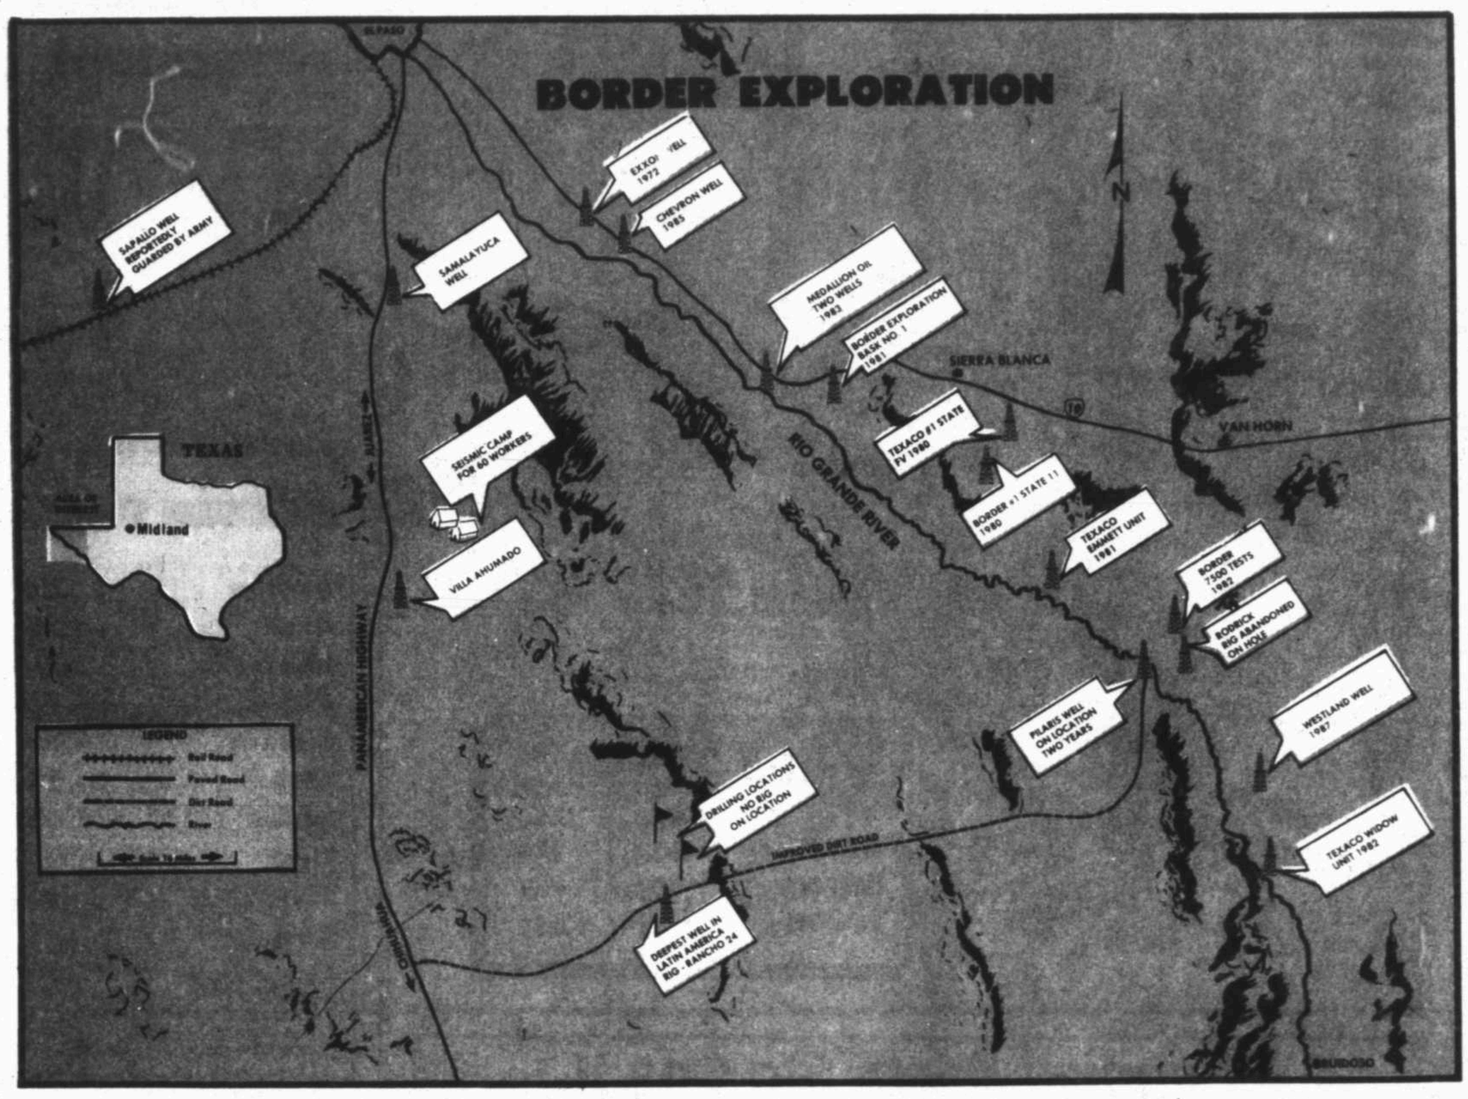

Decker Dawson, president of Dawson Geophysical Co. in Midland, and president-elect of the 51,000-member Society of Exploration Geophysicists says such seismic activity could well be indicative of efforts to find large reserves on the border.

Dawson says Pemex is well-qualified to look for such reserves: "The Mexicans are very up-to-date in seismic operations. I have been to international seminars with them. They know their science and they have the latest American seismic technology."

Fred Neland, an El Paso certified public accountant and rancher in the Big Bend along the Rio Grande has followed the exploration affairs of Pemex in Chihuahua carefully for the past two years.

"It seems apparent the Mexicans are looking for an elephant (giant oil or gas field) in northern Mexico. I think they are convinced it's there; they just don't know where — or maybe they do and they're not ready to say."

Malcomb McGregor, an El Paso attorney and part owner of Indian Hot Springs, a private spa on the Rio Grande, has also kept an eye on Pemex exploration activity near the border. "They are looking hard, and spending a lot of money," said McGregor.

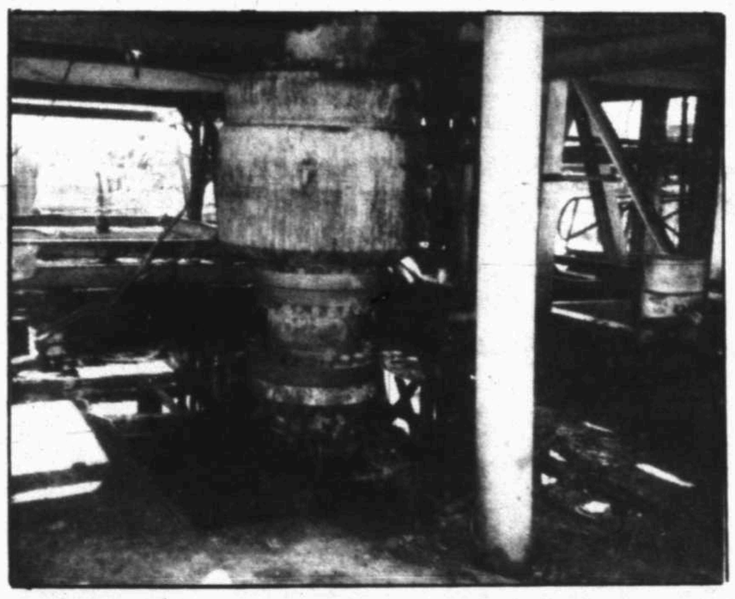

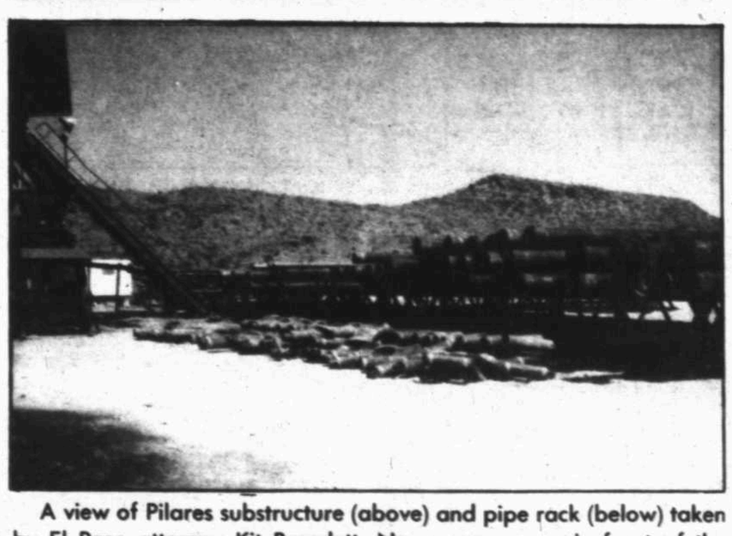

The intense exploration activity has not escaped the attention of the Mexican press. Since last summer there have been numerous news accounts in newspapers in Chihuahua and Juarez, about drilling and seismic activity in Chihuahua and the Pilares well, which has been drilling for over two years only three miles from the Rio Grande.

Both Neland and McGregor hope Pemex does find its "elephant" on the Rio Grande, because as landowners near the Rio Grande both could stand to benefit from U.S. leasing and drilling activity stimulated by Mexican discoveries.

PILARES REVISITED

A view of Pilares substructure (above) and pipe rack (below) taken by El Paso attorney Kit Bramlett. New reamers are in front of the rack.

Well still drilling after two years

EDITOR'S NOTE: Speculation and rumors about the Pilares well have been rampant and official information less available, since Pemex is a nationalized oil company with no need or mandate to divulge information. The following information has been gleaned from numerous fly-overs and aerial photos by local ranchers, one on-site visit by a rancher and news accounts in Mexican newspapers. It is the total of what the Reporter-Telegram knows about Pilares but seeks to make no conclusions.

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

For over two years the Pilares well, drilling three miles from the Rio Grande, where Jeff Davis and Presidio counties join at the river, has been a mystery.

In May 1987, rumors of an 1,800 barrel per day discovery on the Mexican side of the border near Ojinaga, Mexico began to circulate up and down the border.

At that time, the Reporter-Telegram dispatched a photographer and Midland geologist Clem Ware to take an aerial view of the Pilares well.

Following that initial fly-over, the Reporter-Telegram reported that the well appeared to be an oil discovery because of excessive oil in the mud pits and on the location. That conclusion, however, was disputed by other oil scouts in a subsequent article, leaving the question of a Pemex discovery up in the air.

To date, it is still not know what Pemex may or may not have found in the Pilares well. Is it a discovery being kept under wraps? Is it dry? Are they still drilling? If so, what for?

Repeated calls were made by the Reporter-Telegram to Pemex offices in Mexico City and Reynosa, which is headquarters for Pemex's northern region, but were unsuccessful in obtaining even a shred of information. However, a few months later Francisco Cortes, general superintendent in charge of Pemex operations in northern Mexico made positive, if not too revealing, comments about the Pilares well in a Mexican newspaper.

In an Oct. 27, 1987 interview in Novedades of Chihuahua, a Chihuahua City newspaper, Cortes spoke glowingly of the Pilares well, while hedging around calling it an oil discovery.

Said Cortes: "Of all the regions in northern Mexico, the area around Ojinaga holds most promise. It is Pemex's most important basin including Tamaulipas, Sinaloa, Coahuila, and Baja California."

Cortes said new hope for making Chihuahua an oil producing state had been borne out by the Pilares well. He went on to say that there was an adequate budget to continue work in the area and that over 300 men were employed in the northeast part of Chihuahua.

PILARES UPDATE

Here is a brief synopsis of events suuround Pemex's Pilares well as best can be surmised from airplane observation, Mexican news reports and other eyewitness accounts:

January 1, 1986

The Pilares well is rigged up on location.

April 1987

A new jet-quality landing strip is built on the location.

May 1987

Rumors of an 1,800 barrel per day discovery at 10,000 feet begin to circulate along the border of Mexico. The source of the rumors was not identitifed.

June 21, 1987

The Reporter-Telegram publishes an article calling the Pilares well an apparent discovery, this is disputed in a later article.

June 28, 1987

A fly-over shows drill pipe in the derrick is essentially the same as a week before.

August 26, 1987

The pipe rack is being worked. Some pipe is missing. The manifold which was not connected in June is now connected.

September 26, 1987

All the casing on the pipe rack is missing. It has either been moved to another rig or run in the hole.

January 1, 1988

No drill pipe in derrick. Steam coming from mud pits as if being circulated from a deeper depth

Press: "Is it true Senator Quayle that your father made a phone call to a friend who called a friend to get you into the National Guard? Did your rich daddy pull strings for you?"

Quayle: "What about the issues. My opponent advocates the killing of babies in their mother's womb. He would not require students to say the pledge of allegiance and he repealed laws against bestiality."

Press: "Forget the incidentals, how about the real issue of moral worth. Did you or did you not make a pass a lobbyist eight years ago."

That ridiculous exchange may not be exact, but it is embarrassingly close to what has been happening between Dan Quayle and the press in recent weeks.

It is also indicative of a growing chasm between the public perception of reality and importance and the media's. If the media, which has been booed at recent Quayle press conferences finds that uncomfortable, they may want to get prepared for more of it.

Obviously the press thinks it has uncovered a first class scandal in Dan Quayle and is prepared to milk it for all it's worth. The public is not so sure.

The man on the street knows that there are no flawless, perfect men — that we all have a moral pimple somewhere. The sanctified press is not willing that any man with a pimple should hold office.

What if Quayle did make a pass at a "lobbyist" eight years ago. What's to become of him? Is he to be declared unfit for public office and hounded out of public life, as was Gary Hart.

In Hart's case the press singled in on a single issue — Hart's womanizing activity. Every other issue — what Gary Hart stood for and wanted for America — suddenly ceased to exist. All that mattered to the press was the last finite detail of Hart's encounters.

When the press was questioned on this approach to journalism, the public was told by the press that it was for our own good — because the public has a right to know everything.

Certainly America has a right to know about the moral pimples and character flaws of its candidates, and it expects the press to expose them. But once told, American voters expect the press to shut up and let them determine in their own minds how important these flaws are to them in terms of a candidate's overall qualifications.

Americans want balanced coverage. They do not want the press to play a single insignificant issue over and over like a broken record, to the exclusion of all other issues. That is neither responsible nor objective journalism.

By asking the same questions over and over, trying to incite public indignation, the media sets itself up as agenda judge. Indifference is a wonderful device and the American people know how to exercise it very well, but when the media tells the public they have no right to be ho-hum about Quayle's military record or George Bush's involvement in the Iran-Contra affair, it has violated its duty.

Quayle's daddy pulled strings? So what? Many students were looking for a way to avoid Viet Nam, and almost any father who could have pulled strings to keep his son out of Viet Nam would have done so. This war was not a war like other wars, in which our clear objective was victory in the defense of America. It was an endless, no-win, that consumed 58,000 young Americans and finally ended in surrender.

Yet the press would make those string-pulling fathers out to be corrupters of public morals. Who are we kidding? Making money, gaining power and making friends to give your children a boost, an edge and an advantage in life is hardly considered criminal conduct by most Americans. It is the nature of parents, rich and poor, to try and "round the corners" for their kids.

Basin, U.S. tallies lose ground

From Staff Reports

Both the U.S. and Permian Basin rig counts lost ground this week.

The U.S. tally fell for the third consecutive week, dropping two to stand at 935, according to Baker Hughes Inc. of Houston.

The company also reported that the Basin total dropped five to stand at 100. Andrews County was the most active in the area, remaining steady with 14 rigs. Lea County, N.M. was second with 11, three less than last week. Irion lost all three of its rigs, leaving it idle this week. Cottle and Chaves counties were each idle this week. Midland County lost one rig to stand at four for the week.

Rig utilization — the percentage of available rigs being used — reflected the rig count. The U.S. rate dipped to 24.3 percent and the Basin percentage fell to 22.5 percent.

Among major oil producing states, Texas' gain of nine was the largest reported, followed by Louisiana, which added three, and Oklahoma, Colorado and Ohio with gains of two each. Pennsylvania's count was up by one.

Kansas and North Dakota both declined by four active rigs, followed by Michigan and Wyoming, which lost one apiece. California and New Mexico were unchanged.

Production from offshore wells down

AUSTIN — Leases in state offshore waters produced 127,728 barrels of oil during June, down from 133,142 barrels in May, the Railroad Commission has reported.

Gas well gas production from offshore leases amounted to 6,762,523 Mcf in June, down from 6,941,791 Mcf in May.

Production of casinghead gas — natural gas produced from oil wells — totaled 201,946 Mcf, up from 194,131 Mcf in May.

Production of condensate — liquid hydrocarbons produced from gas wells — amounted to 15,001 barrels, down from 18,066 produced the prior month.

In June, offshore crude production made up about 0.21 percent of the preliminary figure for crude production in Texas. Offshore gas well gas production was approximately 2.02 percent of the preliminary total.

June offshore production in state waters was reported from 35 oil and 406 gas wells.

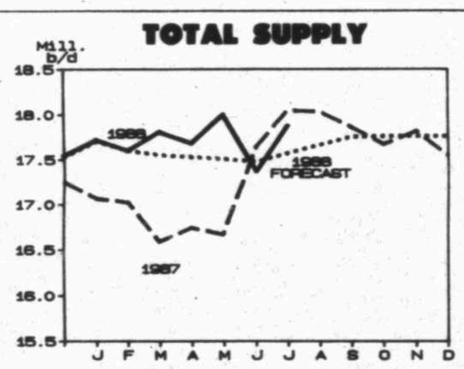

State's oil production drops slightly in June

AUSTIN — Texas crude oil production averaged 1,905,359 barrels daily in June, according to preliminary figures from the Railroad Commission.

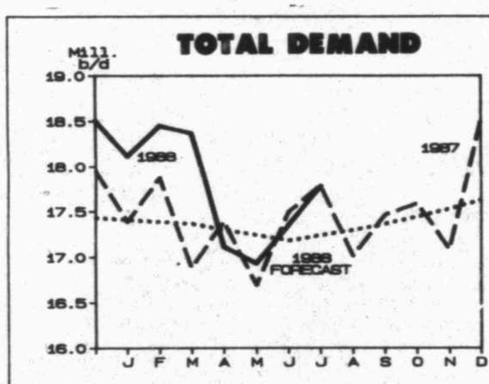

This compares with preliminary May production of 1,906,536 barrels daily. Final production reports for May indicate average daily production was 1,924,834 barrels.

The preliminary Texas production total for June is 57,160,784 barrels, down from 59,102,623 barrels in May.

Railroad Commission levies $19,500 in plugging fines

AUSTIN — The Railroad Commission assessed a total of $19,500 in administrative penalties to nine oil and gas operators for problems under Commission well plugging rules.

The penalties included $3,000 to Production Research of Texas, Inc. for a well in Medina County; $3,000 to WMT Operating Co., Inc. for a wll in Mitchell County; $4,000 to Wolf Operating Co. for a well in Archer County; $3,000 to Wall Production Co. for a well in Concho County; and $1,000 to Linois Oil Co. for a well in Garza County.

Other penalties went to Sleeth Operating Co., $4,000 for three wells in Jefferson County and one in Hardin County. The company was also ordered to reimburse the state $965 for cleanup of oilfield pollution in Jefferson County.

Luckey Me Oil Co. was ordered to plug an inactive well in Matagorda County within 60 days or pay a $3,000 penalty.

Two companies agreed to penalties without admitting any violations of Commission rules. C.E. Starrett agreed to a $500 penalty for six wells in Refugio County. Glenn Dugger agreed to a total of $1,000 in penalties for seven wells in Starr County.

To date in 1988, the Commission has levied more than $719,000 in pollution and well plugging penalties.

Office space glut beginning to dry up

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

Long-vacant excess office space is beginning to be absorbed in Midland, according to a survey by the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

For the first time in 18 months more than 70 percent of the city's nearly 6.8 million square feet of office space is under lease, chamber figures — compiled during July and released this week — indicate.

Leasing experts say increased absorption of space is a combination of new tenant move-ins and existing tenant expansion.

In the last six months, the office vacancy rate in the city has declined more than 3 percent as the total square footage under lease grew by more than 300,000 sq. ft.

The citywide occupancy rate at mid-year was 73.8 percent, the survey said, with just over 5 million sq. ft. of office space under lease.

"Our increase in absorption can be attributed to expansion by several of our larger tenants — almost exclusively oil companies," said Kelly Cooke, vice president of HBF Corp., which manages about three-quarters of a million sq. ft. of space in seven Midland buildings.

Among the companies taking additional space during the past year was Texaco, a tenant in HBF's Heritage Center.

Other oil company moves in the past year with an impact on the office market have included Arco Oil & Gas Co.'s move to the Paragon, Unocal taking more than three floors in Dinero Plaza and Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co.'s expansion in Empire Plaza.

"We've had several new one-man offices established in our building recently," said John Elphick, leasing agent for Property Management Systems.

The third floor executive suite in the NCNB Texas building, which Elphick manages, "has done extremely well," he said.

Secretarial and other professional services, upgraded office appointments and other amenities are among the features property managers can offer to tenants in the current market.

"The past few years have compressed rental rates so much there is little difference in the cost of 'Class A' space vs. 'Class C' buildings," Elphick said.

Class A space is defined as the newest and most desirable available space. In Midland, it generally includes those buildings completed since 1982.

Within the next 12 to 18 months, property manager Mike Lewis expects tenants to be "hard-pressed to find large blocks of 'Class A' and better-quality 'B' space," as tenants continue to upgrade their surroundings when existing leases expire.

Smaller tenants, in the 1,500-sq. ft. range, who could not afford to include a conference room, kitchen/break room and other amenities at old rents are now able to add those features at about the same price, said the president of Mike Lewis & Associates, which manages about 1.5 million sq. ft. of office space.

Of buildings and complexes larger than 100,000 sq. ft. completed in the last six years, all are enjoying above average occupancy except: Independence Plaza, 72 percent full; Atrium Center, 65 percent leased and some of the buildings at One Petroleum Center and North Petroleum Center.

Three of the large newer facilities are 100 percent leased: Empire Plaza, the United Bank Building and the Paragon. And three others are more than 90 percent full: ClayDesta National Bank Building, 98 percent; and Heritage Center and Dinero Plaza, each 95 percent leased.

Lewis' space is evenly divided between downtown and outlying "suburban" buildings.

Leasing experts say there is no discernible trend of movement into or out of downtown. Vacancy rate comparisons bear out their observations.

Downtown space is 73 percent leased, while outlying offices are 75.3 percent occupied, according to the survey.

"Those firms who moved out of downtown six years ago and decided they didn't like it came back about three years ago when prices first came down," said HBF's Cooke. For the most part, "those who are still here are going to stay," he said.

As a result of the limited availability of newer space, rental rates throughout the market are firming up, according to Bill Sandlin, leasing manager for Vista Management, which handles the Western Building.

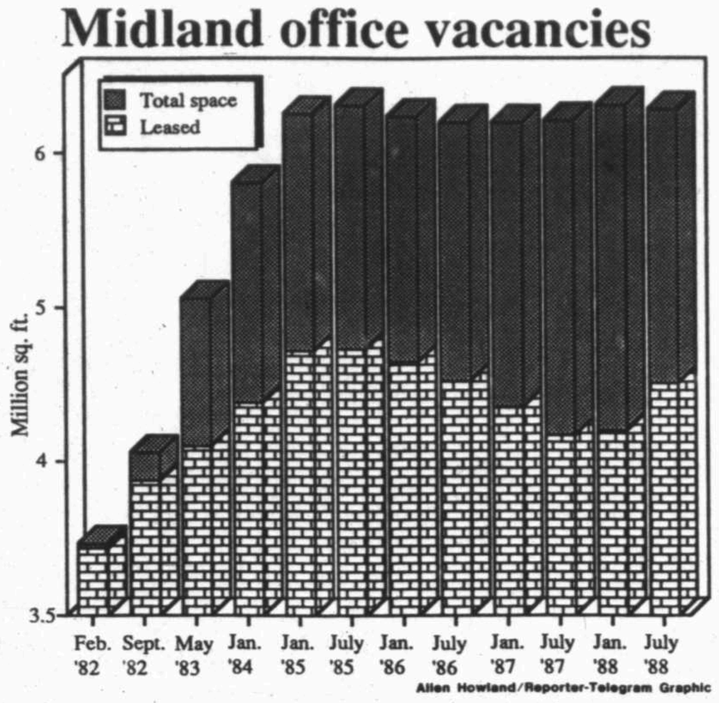

"I think we have seen the bottom as far as rates are concerned," Sandlin said. He estimated $5-7/sq. ft. as the lowest-price offered for Class C; $7-9 for Class B; and $9-10 in Class A space.

With further price competition likely out of the picture, "the market is going to come down to a decision of which building a tenant really wants to be in," because of the small difference in cost, he said.

Despite recent improvements, office leasing is "still tough business," said Brock Thompson, vice president of ClayDesta Corp.

Although leasing demand is "not roaring back like we would like" ClayDesta and other management and ownership groups are able to look at the long-run potential of properties, he added.

Underlying values of most of the city's newer buildings have stabilized and write-downs in property values by lien holders, repossessions and sales are for the most part in the past, said Sandlin. "That leaves a lot of upside potential for building owners and purchasers."

After nearly three years of decline, the amount of leased Midland office space is on the rise.

PAM PORTER has been promoted to general manager of the West Texas region for Southwestern Bell Mobil Systems.

She will be responsible for the company's operations in Amarillo, Abilene, Lubbock and Midland-Odessa.

Town & Country Food Stores of San Angelo has promoted three officers:

DON ALLISON is the new president and chief executive officer. He will direct the operation of 131 convenience stores and seven supermarkets throughout West Texas, Eastern New Mexico and the Dallas-Fort Worth Metroplex.

POLLYANNA STEPHENS was named secretary and currently handles public relations and special projects for the company.

ROBBIE PANTER was promoted from assistant controller to controller. He has been with Town & Country 11 years.

UTPB engineering division to offer two evening courses

From Staff Reports

The University of Texas of the Permian Basin will offer two evening courses this fall at the First City National Bank in Midland. The two courses will be offered by the Division of Science and Engineering.

Transient Pressure Analysis will involve fluid flow in porous media, the diffusivity equation, interpretation of pressure drawdown and buildup test data, well damage effects, simple faults, multi-rate testing, well interference, and curve matching concepts. It will be held Mondays from 5:20 to 8 p.m.

Reservoir Engineering I will stress fluid and rock properties, original hydrocarbons in place, natural gas and gas condensate reservoir recovery predictions, decline curve analysis and material balance forms of oil, reservoir performance predictions, and natural water drive systems. This course will be held Wednesdays from 5:20 to 8 p.m.

Fall registration will be Tuesday and Wednesday in the UTPB gymnasium. Further information can be obtained by calling 563-2400, extension 2210.

Braniff continues filling void in Kansas City

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Braniff Airline's reservation center near Kansas City International Airport will reopen this year and will eventually become the carrier's top reservations center, said the airline's chief executive officer.

The announcement by William G. McGee, the head of the airline, comes as Braniff continues to fill the void left by planned cutbacks by Eastern Airlines.

Braniff also announced it plans to add new non-stop flights to three cities beginning Oct. 1.

The reservations center could eventually employ 350 people, McGee said in a speech in at the Kansas City Club.

That would boost Braniff's Kansas City-area workforce by more than 30 percent, to nearly 1,500 people, and would make Kansas City the carrier's top employment point.

Kansas City would have about 100 more workers than Braniff employs in Dallas, where the airline is based.

Braniff handles reservations at a center in Dallas that employs about 350 people and at a center in Orlando that employs about 250.

McGee said those centers would remain open but that future increases in caller volume would be routed mainly to Kansas City. Employment at the reservations center would grow as flight reservations increase, McGee said.

Don McGuire, Braniff's vice president of public relations, estimated that at least half of the workers at the reopened reservations center would be former employees of Eastern Airlines, which is scrapping 47 of its 53 departures from KCI.

Billboard industry adjusts to increased restraint

By RICHARD W. STEVENSON
New York Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Concerned about what they consider visual blight and rampant commercialism, a growing number of local governments are clamping down on billboards.

King County, Wash., fearful that a proliferation of giant Marlboro Men, beer-endorsing dogs and the like would mar scenic vistas in the area near Seattle, adopted a law in May that imposes many restrictions. It completely bans billboards blocking views of sights, including Mount Rainier, Mount Baker, the Olympic Mountains, and Puget Sound.

The Denver City Council in June enacted a freeze on the number of billboards and required their removal from the historic tree-lined districts along two main roads, Speer Boulevard and Park Avenue. In Jacksonville, Fla., where voters last year approved one of the nation's most stringent sign-control measures, all billboards will have to be removed from city streets by 1992.

These and other actions appear to be more the result of people becoming more sensitive to their environment than a surge in the number of billboards. Although there has been some increase in the number in cities, the number of billboards nationally has declined sharply, to an estimated 300,000, in the last 20 years.

The tighter regulations, while almost always fiercely opposed by billboard companies, so far have not had any major impact on industry revenues. Last year, they totaled $1.34 billion, up 4 percent from 1986, and industry executives project growth of about 6 percent for this year.

Bravado or not, industry executives say the new local restrictions do not pose a threat to the industry's future. They note that many cities still do not have restrictions and that few of the ones that do actually require the removal of existing billboards.

But Edward T. McMahon, executive director of the Coalition for Scenic Beauty, a Washington-based lobbying group that favors billboard controls, said the restrictions are "part of a major national effort to curb an industry that in our view has run amok.

"It is the most intrusive form of advertising in the world today," he said, "the only advertising that can't be eliminated with the flick of a switch or the turn of a page."

The Federal Highway Beautification Act of 1965, which limits billboards on Interstate highways and federally aided roads, has led to a sharp reduction in the number of billboards on those roads, although the act has been widely criticized by environmentalists as loophole-ridden and laxly enforced.

In the last few years, the focus of the battle between the billboard industry and its critics has increasingly shifted to the local level, especially in fast-growing cities or redeveloping areas where new signs are being erected.

Philadelphia will allow no new billboards along the Vine Street Expressway, which spans the downtown area. St. Louis and Santa Ana, Calif., have capped the number of billboards they allow and enacted other restrictions. Other cities that have adopted freezes or other curbs in recent years include Houston, Phoenix, and Raleigh and Durham, N.C.

Billboards are a contentious issue in other regions, often leading to political battles and court fights. In Los Angeles, which is believed to have more billboards than any other city, the City Council in June narrowly defeated the latest in a long series of proposals to ban new billboards after heavy lobbying from the outdoor advertising industry.

The Oregon Tourism Division puts a billboard in one of San Francisco's busiest intersections to effective ironic use. Restrictions on urban billboards could make such innovative outdoor advertising obsolete.

Vermont, Maine, Hawaii, and Alaska have long banned roadside billboards, as have resort areas such as Martha's Vineyard, Mass., and dozens of other communities, according to the Coalition for Scenic Beauty.

Billboards represent less than 1.5 percent of the $100 billion that companies spend annually promoting their products and services in the United States. But with hundreds of thousands of them lining the nation's streets and highways, looming above motorists and pedestrians with often-clever marketing exhortations and colorful images of near-Brobdingnagian proportions, billboards have always attracted their fair share of controversy.

Industry executives defend billboards as an effective advertising medium. They say the industry by and large has become much more sensitive over the last decade to environmental concerns and avoids residential areas. They point to a code of ethics adopted by the Outdoor Advertising Association of America in May supporting "reasonable regulation" and preservation of scenic beauty in designated areas.

"We feel that outdoor advertisers are promoters of business and not polluters," said Myron Liable, a spokesman for the association.

The monthly cost of renting billboard space varies by location; for one billboard it can run from less than $100 to more than $10,000 for a heavy-traffic area in a big city.

While the industry continues to rely heavily on cigarette and hard-liquor advertising, which are both banned on television, billboard companies have successfully drawn a broader range of clients in recent years, including companies selling food, soap, and beauty products.

Helping the medium's image have been innovative, attention-grabbing campaigns from advertisers such as Nike Inc., the athletic shoe company, and bigger and more versatile signs that allow more creative displays, including the use of irregular shapes, lights and moving parts. Most billboards are pre-printed posters that are pasted up in pieces like wallpaper, although the larger ones are usually hand-painted to the specifications of advertising agencies.

Federal and state laws require that billboard owners be compensated financially in many cases if they must tear down billboards to meet new restrictions. But in many cities that have limited the number of signs, few new ones were being erected anyway, industry executives say.

"Most cities enact restrictions that in the final analysis are livable for us," said James Mellody, a spokesman for the Patrick Media Group Inc., the nation's largest outdoor advertising company.

Some politicians and billboard opponents, however, said concern about commercial signs has become an increasingly important component of the broader "quality of life" issue, encompassing all types of pollution and the effects of rapid population and economic growth.

"The residents of Jacksonville, like those in most growth areas of the country, want a certain quality of life, and that means they want to see visual pollution minimized," said Mayor Tommy Hazouri, who made billboard restrictions a major issue in his election campaign last year.

Politicians who have tangled with the industry said the companies fight tooth and nail against any restrictions and compromise only when they have little chance of winning.

"I've fought the tobacco industry and the oil industry and lots of others, and nobody is more powerful than the billboard industry," said Marvin Braude, a Los Angeles city councilman. Braude has been seeking restrictions for 15 years in Los Angeles, which has an estimated 10,000 billboards lining its traffic-clogged streets and freeways.

Braude said hard-nosed lobbying by industry forces, including campaign contributions to politicians and warnings to the public that jobs would be lost if curbs are enacted, makes him pessimistic that he will be able to come up with the vote needed to reverse the 8-to-7 loss the proposed anti-billboard law suffered in June. "The prospects are not bright," he said.

Other cities have enacted restrictions only after long fights and court challenges. In March, the St. Louis City Council approved a measure banning billboards at any new locations after a contentious debate between city officials and industry executives. Mayor Vincent C. Schoemehl Jr. thinks that billboards "are just a complete blight on society," said Kathleen Brady, an aide to the Mayor.

The St. Louis ordinance does not require that any existing billboards be torn down, but Brady said that about 150 of the 950 billboards in the city appeared to lack proper permits. "We are going to challenge those and get those taken down," she said.

Environmentalists have hailed the restrictions enacted in King County, Wash., as representing one of the first cases of a government acting specifically to protect scenic views against encroachment. The ordinance freezes the number of billboards allowed in the county's unincorporated areas at about 450.

"There are tremendous development pressures, and unless we act now we're going to lose the quality of life we have here," said Tim Hill, the county executive.

In Denver, where the number of billboards has doubled in a decade, to about 800, the ordinance passed in June freezes the number of allowable signs but allows a new one to be built for every existing one removed. Anti-billboard activitists are pushing for an amendment to the city charter that would ban new billboards.

"Colorado's natural beauty is one of the biggest factors we have to market," said Dave Doering, the city councilman who sponsored the anti-billboard ordinance. "This helps enhance the attractiveness of the area, it helps our tourism and it helps our image over all."

AAA says fuel readily available

HOUSTON (AP) — Fuel availability for the Labor Day weekend in Texas will be good with 83 percent of the stations surveyed planning to remain open during the holiday and 27 percent staying open 24 hours, the American Automobile Association says.

The Texas AAA survey included 220 stations, with 183 of them planning to stay open during the holiday and 59 to be open 24 hours a day.

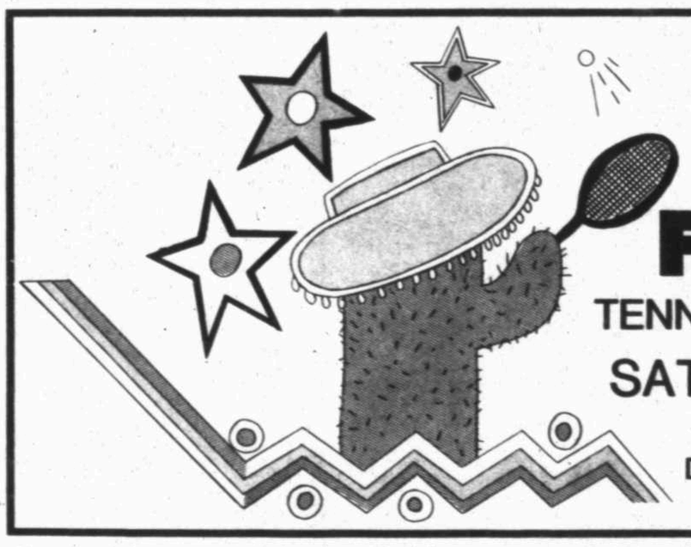

Gas prices per gallon are up an average of 2.4 cents at full-service stations while self-serve prices have increased by 1.6 cents since the July Fourth holiday, the AAA says.

Although motorists will continue to find low prices in Beaumont and Houston, consumers in Dallas, Fort Worth and San Antonio will find, on the average, that prices are higher.

In addition, the AAA said regular fuel is becoming more costly than unleaded fuel at self-serve gasoline pumps, with the gap in both fuel rates narrowing in the full-serve category in recent months, the association said.

The changes in gas prices is caused in part to the industry's phasing-out of regular fuel at the pumps. The trend is beginning to occur nationwide, where regular fuel purchases account for only 20 percent of gas bought by motorists, the AAA said.

PEMEX

With blaring, one-inch, banner headlines the news accounts have all foretold the promise of black gold in Chihuahua.

"Chihuahua on top of a sea of oil," reads a headline from the October 26, 1987 issue of Novedades of Chihuahua. Another reads in one-inch high headlines: "Pemex to drill 35 oil wells." One Chihuahua newspaper proclaims: "Abundance of oil in Chihuahua."

In June 1988, El Fronterizo, reported that Pemex had announced intentions to drill 35 wells in the northeast and southeast zones of the region and would involve the municipalities of Ojinaga, Manuel Benavides, Aldama, Coyame, Camargo and Jiminez. In the article, Pemex spokesman Hector Contreras is quoted as saying the drilling is to begin in the second half of 1988 and continue until 1990. A possible drilling target is listed as the "Ojinaga zone" a Cretaceous formation which outcrops near Ojinaga.

Contreras went on to say: "Pemex is almost certain there are abundant quantities of oil in Chihuahua that will help Mexico increase its strategic petroleum reserves."

Jerry McQueen, a geologist with Medallion Oil Co. of Houston, said he had heard rumors that the Pilares well might be targeting the Cretaceous formation. McQueen was the geologist on two Medallion wells drilled on U.S. side of the border in 1983.

"I think there is definite potential for the area, and its good to see Pemex taking a strong look at the area again," said McQueen.

The Ojinaga region received special mention in a Oct. 26, 1987 statement by Francisco Cortes, general superintendent of Pemex's North Zone, headquartered in Reynosa. "The Ojinaga region is the trend most important for Pemex in northern Mexico," Cortes told Novedades de Chihuahua.

Without calling Pilares a discovery well, he said the well had given Pemex new hope for extracting oil. He said the Pilares well was being worked like the Bermejillo well in Durango to study each possible oil bearing zone. He added that of all the basins in Mexico — including, Tamaulipas, Sinaloa, Coahuila and Baja California — Chihuahua offered the most promise.

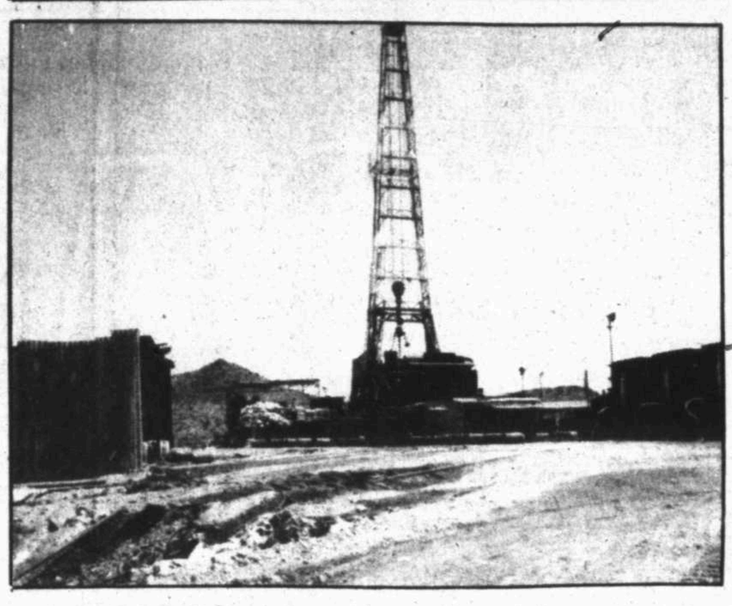

However, aside from these initial proclamations, Mexican newspapers, have had little luck in penetrating Pemex' silence. In the July 2, 1988 edition of El Heraldo, a Chihuahua newspaper, Daniel Martinez Lujan, who is described as a regional marketing superintendent for Pemex was asked to comment on drilling operations near Samalayuca.

He explained that the work was being done with "much disgression," that it was being coordinated directly from Mexico City and only personnel directly linked to be project were being kept informed.

However, referring to unnamed Pemex employees, the article goes on to report an array of Pemex activity already in progress which include:

- A discovery well near Villa Ahumads on the Pan American Highway, about 70 kilometers south of Juarez,
- A seismographic camp with a "brigade" of workers encamped about 25 kilometers from the village,

Drill pipe in hole, it was impossible to determine depth in this April on site photo of the Pilares well. A view from the mud pits.

- The drilling of the deepest well in Latin America (about 23,000 feet) at a location about 40 kilometers east of the Pan American Highway on the Rancho 24,
- Two additional staked drilling locations a short distance from the Rancho 24 well,
- A well near the village of Sapallo on the Juarez-to-Casa Grande highway, which is reportedly surrounded by cyclone fence and guarded by the army to keep the curious out,
- A drilling rig near Samalayuca south of Juarez, which is clearly visible from the highway,
- Another rig of unspecified status near Uruachi, far from the area of interest in the eastern part of the state, and
- Two wells drilled in 1966, the Ascension No.1 and No.2, the location of which are being kept secret because Pemex intends to reopen them.

Aerial surveillance of the area confirmed the location of the Rancho 24 well, reported as the deepest well in Latin America.

At the time of our fly-over the well had already reached total depth and the rig was rigged down and on location ready to be moved, two additional drilling pads were spotted two miles to the north of the location.

No attempt was made to substantiate the existence of rigs at Samalayuca and Sapallo. It is also possible that the Mexican newspaper may have confused the Rancho 24 well and the Pilares well, and that the Pilares well is, in fact, the deepest well in Latin America.

It is still not certain if Pemex is looking for gas or oil, but a depth of 23,000 feet would indicate they are looking for both, say geologists.

One theory is that Pemex is continuing to work the Western Overthrust Belt which was worked heavily by U.S. oil companies and resulted in a number of wells along the U.S. side of the Rio Grande, prior to the oil price collapse.

Another theory is that Pemex may be looking at Paleozoic rocks, such as those found in the Delaware Basin of Texas. Three separate news accounts have reported that a well drilled at Villa Ahumado has produced small but undetermined amounts of oil. One report said it was oil similar in quality to West Texas Intermediate.

Whatever the geological target, Pemex has apparently moved into northern Mexico in force and is spending big bucks in hopes of finding "something big."

"Looking for an elephant is the only way you can justify, working in a frontier area like this and spending that kind of money," said McQueen.

UPDATE

March 3, 1988

New casing is present on the rack.

April 30, 1988

A logging truck is on location, an estimated 17,000-20,000 ft. of drill pipe is in the derrick. Rotary table is out. New seismic lines are seen in the vicinity.

May 26,1988

Logging truck still on location, seismic truck also spotted at edge of location and a new seismic line running through the location is observed.

August 20, 1988

Logging truck and seismic truck are gone. Pipe rack has been worked. About one-third of drill pipe is in the derrick.

PILARES

He said the well (Pilares) would be worked like the Bermejillo well in Durango to study all possible oil formations. Nothing is known about the Bermejillo well, but it is speculated that he might be referring to extensive logging operations of the well. If so, that could account for logging units and seismic trucks seen at the Pilares well in the past year.

One interesting comment, apparently in response to a question by the reporter about "sucking hydrocarbons" from Texas. "That doesn't matter to Pemex," said Cortes. "The explorations are realized (exact translation) and they are not in vail."

As to why it has taken over two years to drill a well, now estimated at 17,000 to 20,000 feet, one news report says that Pemex exploration operations were suspended during the transition of the government during recent presidential elections. That could account for some of the delay. Logging operations and seismic measuring of velocities could account for some delay. Hole problems and the "Mexican pace" have been suggested as other answers.

What is known, the rig is still there. It is still making hole. The reader can make his own educated guess as to what it all means.

PITTS

pulled strings to get me a summer job with an oil company, and I have called on friends to give my son a job.

As for George Bush and his involvement in the Iran-Contra affair. Even though he denies involvement, my estimation of him went up considerably the moment I found out he might have been involved. Polls indicate I am not alone in that feeling. If there were a strong hint of suspicion that George Bush was deeply involved in the diversion of funds to the Contras, I think we would win in a landslide.

What it all boils down to is a fundamental difference between the moral perceptions of a liberal press and a conservative public. The public looks at a pimple and sees a pimple, the press looks at the pimple and sees a large, cancerous tumor.

The press sees the diversion of Contra funds as a hideous sin against America; most Americans see those involved as heroes. The liberal press would like to see Oliver North in jail; most Americans would like to see him in public office.

The press honestly thinks the public will quarter and draw Dan Quayle for joining the National Guard. Instead the public has become incensed at the press for making an issue of it.

Sen. Phil Gramm, speaking in Midland last week, put it in perspective best. "If joining the National Guard is the only thing Dan Quayle has ever done wrong, he is not only on his way to the White House with George Bush, he is also on his way to heaven," smirked Gramm.

Report lambasts OSHA enforcement

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Occupational Safety and Health Administration has failed to enforce laws protecting the nation's workers, a failure contributing to thousands of workplace deaths, a critic of the federal agency says.

A report being released by the Chicago-based National Safe Workplace Institute concluded that OSHA's ineffectiveness and unwillingness to be tough with violators has resulted in more than 9,000 avoidable workplace fatalities since 1981.

However, statisticians and the federal agency disputed the figure and said on-the-job deaths have declined sharply during the 1980s.

"This report represents a selective use of statistics," OSHA's chief spokesman, Terry Mikelson, said. "It creates the impression that more and more people are being killed at work, that more and more people are being hurt, when just the opposite is true."

The institute, which is supported by foundation grants and private contributions, said the United States has become "a first-rate nation with a second-rate record of protecting (its) workers."

"We have to agree with some of what they say," said Margaret Seminario, associate director of safety and health for the AFL-CIO. "We really do have some serious problems with OSHA."

The report, a copy of which was obtained Thursday, accused the agency of inconsistency and criticized "sweetheart deals" that reduced fines against large corporate violators.

For example, it said OSHA proposed fines of $1.48 million against Union Carbide Corp. in 1986 but accepted a settlement of $408,500.

But Mikelson, the OSHA spokesman, said, "Historically, the agency has reduced penalties in the interest of obtaining immediate abatement of hazards. That is our mission: to correct hazards, to get them out of the workplace, and we've done that."

The report said OSHA does not have a comprehensive program to target employers for inspections.

It said OSHA inspectors were three times more likely to issue their most serious sanction, a willful citation, in fiscal 1980 — before President Reagan took office — than in fiscal 1981 through 1987.

"OSHA's senior staff has failed to provide leadership to make its civil enforcement programs effective," the institute said. "That failure has cost lives. If we had continued improving job safety at the same rate which was in place in 1980, 9,115 workplace fatality victims would still be alive today."

The conclusion was based on a statistical analysis reflecting a change in the rate of deaths among workers in high-risk jobs: agriculture, construction, transportation and manufacturing. It said the rate of high-risk deaths declined by an annual rate of 2.2 percent from 1975 through 1980 and by 0.7 percent from 1981 through 1987.

The Chicago-based National Safety Council, whose data was used in the analysis, said the death toll from on-the-job accidents has fallen from 13,000 in 1975 to 11,100 last year.

Court levies taxes on offshore earnings

LAFAYETTE, La. (AP) — Seven Louisiana men have been ordered to reimburse the federal government for more than $100,000 in unpaid taxes on money they earned while working oil rigs in foreign waters.

In a U.S. Tax Court ruling last week from Washington, Judge Arnold Raum said the men failed to establish legal tax homes outside the United States and could not claim portions of their income exempt from U.S. taxation.

Raum noted the workers all maintained families and homes in Louisiana and had current driver's licenses, voter registrations, bank accounts and property interests in the state.

In 1982 and 1983, the seven worked off the coasts of Brazil, the Philippines, the Netherlands, and in the Mediterranean Sea and Persian Gulf. They were away from home from four to eight months of each year, working for Penrod Drilling Co. of Dallas.

In the case of barge engineer Paul E. Whitesell, court records show that a professional tax accountant advised the deductions were proper.

Raum's opinion said each worker clearly had his home in Louisiana "rather than the place in which he works under rigorous conditions, in isolation away from his family or friends and generally only in the company of his co-workers."

The men lived on the oil rigs to which they were assigned and had minimal contact with the countries near where the rigs stood. They received 25 percent salary bonuses from Penrod for working outside the United States.

The workers and their tax liabilities were listed as Billy T. Britt ,$16,116; Robert C. Bujol, $11,155; John T. Lemay $10,472; Thomas W. Miller, $9,468; Uwell J. Poirrier, $20,591; James M. Steel, $26,111; and Whitesell $20,892.

"It's fairly common for people in the oil industry to both live abroad and commute back and forth to the U.S. during their time off," said Penrod attorney Ralph White of Dallas.

With the exception of Lemay, who held a supervisory position in the Mediterranean, the workers were prohibited by Penrod from living onshore in their host countries.

Experiment finds forecasting as difficult today as in 1929

By PETER PASSELL
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — When the Great Depression slammed into the economy in 1929, professional forecasters never knew what hit them. That is understandable, given the primitive state of their science a half century ago. But now that economists are armed with sophisticated mathematical models and big computers to crunch the numbers, forecasters could not possibly be caught asleep at the switch. Right?

Don't bet on it — at least not before reading the surprising results of an experiment by the economists Kathryn Dominguez of Harvard and Ray Fair and Matthew Shapiro of Yale. Their simulations, in the September issue of the American Economic Review, suggest that modern forecasters would not have done any better at predicting the Depression than their untooled predecessors.

In the 1920s, two major macroeconomic forecasting businesses dominated the market. For $100 a year (a stiff $850 in today's dollars) the Harvard Economic Service provided reams of statistics in weekly and quarterly newsletters. Its complicated prediction technique, interpreting the cyclic interaction of indexes that were supposed to represent "speculation," "business" and "money," might have been inspired by Rube Goldberg.

A rival forecasting service, based at Yale, began as a syndicated newspaper column written by Irving Fisher, the preeminent American economic theorist of his day. Later it, too, was marketed to corporations as a weekly newsletter. Modern economists would find Fisher's forecasting methods more appealing, if only because they were based on a recognizable theory of how the economy worked. When the crunch came, though, the Harvard and Yale forecasts proved equally useless.

Neither offered a hint of an impending stock market crash. Six weeks before Black Friday, Irving Fisher opined that "the alarm over the supposed inflation of security values seems unjustified." And after the stock market went into free fall in October 1929, neither predicted that the economy would soon follow.

As late as June 1931 the Harvard group was still comparing the downturn to the brief recession of 1920-21. In October 1931, two years before the nadir of the Depression, Fisher predicted that the bottom had been reached the previous month.

None of this should come as a shock to a generation of mathematically trained economists who believe their profession came into its own sometime between the election of Ike and the first American tour of the Beatles. The surprise is that, applied after the fact, sophisticated econometric techniques fare no better.

Dominguez and company used data on industrial production, interest rates, stock prices and the money supply for 1908-1930 to forecast output and prices for 1930-31. Their model — actually a handful of related models — predicts that the recession that had already begun in June 1929 would be brief and shallow.

One variation of the model that includes data on stocks and the money supply through November 1929 does much better predicting prices, accurately forecasting the harsh deflation to come. But that seems to have been the computer's version of a lucky guess. Adding a few more months' data to the model actually leads to a prediction of rising prices by mid-1931.

If modern techniques would have been useless in predicting the last depression, is there any reason to believe they would do better predicting the next? The authors say that the paucity of data available as monthly series for years preceding the Depression made it impractical for them to construct a more complicated and more insightful model of the economy. A richer model, Fair concedes, might have yielded better forecasts.

This is a generous concession — probably too generous. The better explanation for the failure to predict the Depression is that catastrophic economic events are almost always produced by actions from policies that cannot be forecast with econometrics.

What model, for example, could have predicted in 1929 that the Federal Reserve would allow the banking system to collapse or the quantity of money to fall by one-third over the next four years?

On first thought, that explanation is reassuring: A depression that cannot be forecast because it turns on the unpredictably foolish responses of policymakers to continuing events is not a depression that is likely to happen.

On second thought, the reassurance is not worth much: The Fed's behavior in 1929-30 seems foolish only in hindsight. More than four decades later, a Federal Reserve with access to the most enlightened economic advice responded equally "foolishly" to the oil shock in 1974, tightening credit and producing a vicious worldwide recession.

The scary truth is that the limits of macroeconomic models reflect inherent limits to economic knowledge. If rigorously tested models cannot predict great turnings of the economy or offer insights into the appropriate response to unique economic events, there is no reason to expect economists operating on intuition to do any better.

MEETINGS

SPE study group schedules Tuesday meeting

The September meeting of the Society of Petroleum Engineers Midland operations study group will be Tuesday in the Midland Center at 11:30 a.m.

J. Wayne Wisniewski with OXY-Cities Service in Oklahoma City will discuss "A Case History of Horizontal Wells in the Spraberry Trend."

Desk and Derrick Club to hear about asbestos

The Midland Desk and Derrick Club will meet Thursday at the Petroleum Club beginning at 7 p.m.

Guest speaker will be George Price, a senior gas engineer with Arco Oil & Gas Co. He will speak on "Asbestos: Cause and Cure." He holds a bachelor's degree in petroleum engineering from Texas Tech and joined Arco in 1974.

Permian section, SPE, to discuss SACROC Unit

The Reservoir Study Group of the Permian Basin section, Society of Petroleum Engineers, will hold a catered luncheon meeting Thursday, Sept. 15 at the American Legion Hall, 501 Air Park. The meeting will begin at 11:30 a.m.

S.F. Hoadley of Chevron U.S.A. will lead a discussion on "Definitive CO_2 Flooding Response in the SACROC Unit."

Cost of the luncheon will be $6 per person.

Accounts receivable workshop scheduled

A accounts receivable workshop sponsored by the Permian Basin Association of Personnel Consultants will be Sept. 15 at the Best Western Airport Hotel from 1 to 4 p.m. The workshop will deal with recovering slow paying and delinquent accounts and the legalities of collecting.

Maurice D. Coats of Austin will present the workshop. It is open to the public and tickets are $25 per person. Information can be obtained from Alliance Personnel, Career Path or Key Personnel in Midland.

GM officer caps meteoric rise by moving to Navistar

Roberts

CHICAGO (AP) — Roy S. Roberts rode a rising star through General Motors Corp., flying through management ranks in an 11-year stint that he ended as the highest-ranking black officer at the dowager of American manufacturing.

He resigned Aug. 1 with his star still rising to take over the $3 billion truck division at Navistar International Corp. with the job of making a good operation better.

Roberts, 49, is bringing to North America's leading maker of medium- and heavy-duty trucks his reputation as "a very dynamic leader, accepted within all ranks," said spokesman John D. McDonald.

"We're happy to have him," McDonald said of Roberts, who joined Navistar Aug. 8. "He has a strong background in manufacturing, and certainly with ... people. He has some very strong leadership capabilities and a competitive spirit."

Navistar declined to make Roberts available for comment, "until he gets ... his feet on the ground," said spokesman Bill Greenhill.

As he departed, Roberts got an official blessing from GM.

"Roy Roberts has been a valued executive and an outstanding contributor in every assignment throughout his General Motors career," said Roger B. Smith, GM chairman and chief executive officer. "We wish him the best in his new position at Navistar."

With $4 billion in annual sales, Navistar is enjoying its third straight profitable year, after six money-losers stemming from recession, labor troubles and the farm crisis of the early 1980s.

The company's truck division is the leader in North America, and Roberts' job will be "to expand or strengthen that leadership position," McDonald said. "He is not taking over in a 'back' position."

Navistar plucked Roberts from possible contention as GM's first minority chief operating officer, luring him with cash and stock valued at about $400,000, plus an annual salary estimated at nearly $440,000, McDonald ackowledged.

Roberts, who was vice president of personnel administration and development for GM, is in charge of engineering, manufacturing and marketing of medium- and heavy-duty trucks for Navistar, formerly International Harvester.

His record for inspiring loyalty among employees while keeping operations competitive is among his chief assets, McDonald said.

Roberts faced perhaps his greatest challenge at GM when he had to lay off 40,000 white-collar workers, 25 percent of the company's salaried employees.

"If anyone thinks it's fun to ask anyone to leave General Motors, it's not fun. It's not fun," Roberts told USA Today recently.

It was employee loyalty to Roberts that caught the eye of a superior and served as a catalyst to his meteoric rise, according to a recent interview in the Chicago Tribune.

Elmer Johnson, then a GM executive vice president, said he was inspecting the plant that Roberts managed in Tarrytown, N.Y., when Roberts introduced him to about 70 employees, the newspaper reported.

Dallas company finds television all business

ASTN founder's expansion plans include banking, travel industry

By DAVE PEGO

DALLAS (AP) — All business. That's how Carl Westcott came to be one of the latest success stories in the television industry.

The 48-year-old Westcott, founder and chairman of Dallas-based Westcott Communications, has jumped to the forefront of the business television industry with his Automotive Satellite Television Network.

ASTN, billed as the largest private satellite network in the world, delivers about 30 hours of auto industry news and training programs to about 3,600 subscribing automobile dealerships across the United States and Canada.

The fledgling television network has been a rapid success, with about 18 percent of the nation's car dealerships currently forking over about $385 a month to receive ASTN programming. Westcott's goal is to have his programming aired to 50 percent of the the industry.

"It does take people by surprise," Westcott said of his creation's success. "They've been shocked."

Industry experts say private television networks for business are a tremendous growth industry and that the market could generate billions of dollars in business within 10 years, Westcott said.

Westcott already is looking ahead. He just moved his company into a new $6 million headquarters with three studios and production facilities where more than 600 thirty-minute programs will be created and produced this year.

His Westcott Communications plans to soon create private television programming for the banking, hotel and travel industries. Westcott said he also has contacted the Internal Revenue Service with a proposal to create training programming for its employees.

Westcott formed his private television network after buying an NBC affiliate in Tyler and discovering at a network meeting in New York how inexpensive it was to buy satellite time.

He realized that a private television network might be the perfect vehicle to provide top-quality training materials for automobile dealerships he owned. He had found that existing films and other materials were not effectively training his employees.

"We didn't invent anything," Westcott said. "But we just rolled it over into what it is now. We realize that people grow up watching 30 to 40 hours of television a week. And most people receive more information daily from television than any other source."

The private network also allows businessmen to get important industry news as soon as possible, instead of having to wait on newsletters that might not arrive until 10 days or more after something occurs.

"The news is what the dealer is most interested in," Westcott said.

With a Detroit news bureau and reporters in Los Angeles and Washington, D.C., ASTN delivers news about plant closings, strikes, new financing rates and other items of interests about the automotive industry every 90 minutes.

Westcott said many dealerships plan their sales meetings to include ASTN programming, and that an ASTN broadcast may be watched by as many as 20,000 people.

He also knows of at least three places where there are standing orders to schedule TV watching time for employees — the car dealerships he owns in Atlanta, Ga., Huntington Beach, Calif., and Tyler, Texas.

"You can bet on it," Westcott said.

How the 'have-nots' can help the 'haves'

BUSINESS MIRROR

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — It is a situation in which the fate of the haves and the have-nots are so closely linked that what happens to the have-nots might determine how comfortably the haves live.

It concerns the top-heavy home real estate market, one in which the future of high-priced housing is dependent on what happens at the lowest end of the scale, where first-time buyers generally enter the market.

First-time buyers increasingly are denied access to the market by relatively high prices, insufficient incomes and rising interest rates that push carrying charges beyond their financial abilities.

The link to the other end of the market is this: In recent years, the market for higher priced housing has been made up mainly of existing homeowners using their equity to move upto more expensive homes.

That is, the primary source of down-payment money for expensive homebuyers has been the equity accumulated in starter homes.

Very few homebuyers have been able to accumulate downpayment money without having owned previously. Inevitably, such buyers have been restricted at first to the least expensive "starter" homes.

Those who have sought to accumulate downpayments through savings accounts or investments have been stymied by income taxes, by home prices increasing faster than their incomes, and by sometimes high costs of renting.

Now, along with higher interest rates that may make carrying costs unaffordable, their problems with accumulating downpayments may be worsening.

A study of first-time homebuyers, conducted for the National Association of Realtors, shows that housing affordability is now lower than it was 11 years ago. First-time buyers, it said, are losing ground.

The study found that in this year's second quarter, a typical family of renters had only 79.8 percent of the income needed to qualify for a conventional mortgage with 10 percent down on a median-priced starter home.

In contrast, the typical family in early 1977 had 88.9 percent of the necessary income.

The baby-boom had a lot to do with the situation, since it filled the market with an overflow of potential buyers and a relative scarcity of houses. Thus, housing had its own inflation, apart from general consumer inflation.

In 1977, the median price of an existing single-family home was $42,900; it was more than double that in 1987. The median price of a new single-family home was $48,000 in 1977; it was about double that in 1987.

A big demand and a limited supply helped do that. But supply-demand also affected the job market. Glenn Crellin, Realtor economist, observes that "the growth in incomes of the baby-boom generation has been held back to some extent by the same (supply-demand) phenomenon."

He explains: "There are lots of baby-boomers but not as many mid- and upper-level jobs. The result is that incomes have not increased as rapidly as previous generations have seen."

It poses this threat to housing prices: If fewer buyers can afford starter homes, which are the primary source of downpayments for more expensive homes in the future, a prop will have been removed from the upper end of the market.

There may be an offset to the situation in the demographics.

As the population bulge works its way through the economy there will be a somewhat reduced demand for starter homes, a reduction that might be reflected in a slowdown of price increases.

The bulge of baby-boomers then will be in an older age category, one in which couples historically seek more expensive housing. There will, therefore, be a lot more people in the expensive-home market.

But, unless several factors are in their favor, including better incomes and lower interest rates — a big question remains:

If they can't buy starter houses now, where will the downpayments come for the bigger, more expensive houses in the future?

Moreover, if prices for starter homes don't rise as fast as in the past, a reflection of reduced demand, won't that diminish the equity available to those seeking to move up to more expensive homes?

That poses another question:

Given such factors, can the upper end of the market maintain its high prices?

Investing rules from a master contrarian

By ART GARCIA and CHRIS BARNETT
Copley News Service

If you are one who doesn't argue with success, you may want to heed the words and wisdom of one of the world's most successful investors, John Templeton.

For 40 years, Templeton, now 75 and living and working in high style on a small island in the Bahamas, has practiced what he has preached over his long career, and it has paid off.

Templeton is the lead investment manager of the 12 mutual funds bearing his name and which together have assets of about $9 billion held by 600,000 shareholders.

"It takes patience, discipline and courage to follow the 'contrarian' route to investment success — to buy when others are despondently selling, to sell when others are avidly buying. However," says Templeton, "based on a half century of experience, I can attest to the rewards at the end of the journey."

A pair of authors has tapped into the Templeton touch through a series of interviews with the master at his Bahamas hideaway. Norman Berryessa, an investment adviser with the San Francisco brokerage of Emmett A. Larkin, and Eric Kirzner, a professor of finance at Toronto's Waterloo University, talk about the Templeton strategy in their book, "Global Investing the Templeton Way" (Dow Jones Irwin, $24.95).

Besides patience, discipline and courage, to Templeton, the pursuit of profits demands also study and common sense, they write.

"He leaves it to the more frivolous investment managers to cast the I Ching, track the pattern of Super Bowl wins or study the behavior of pigeons in Battery Park to find a path to successful investing," note the authors.

In their sessions with Templeton, they quickly learned there are many Templeton rules that are keys to his success. They discovered, too, that the rules are constantly evolving and improving "and he freely makes exceptions to any rule when common sense dictates."

Here is the pick of Templeton's rules, or principles, for successful investing:

The Rule of the Importance of Price: "Purchase an investment only when you can pay less for it than it is worth today, and only if you believe that it will be worth more tomorrow." This, probably more than any other precept, is behind Templeton's envied reputation.

"For Templeton, price is absolutely fundamental," say Berryessa and Kirzner, who describe Templeton as "one of the world's most successful bargain hunters. Yet the idea underlying his success is the same as that employed by every coupon-toting food shopper seeking supermarket bargains or every comparison-shopping car buyer."

The Good News/Bad News Rule: Or, buy on bad news, sell on good news. Not quite contrarian in theory, this nevertheless is an attempt to be "apart from the crowd," Templeton explained. "You know you will never attain a superior record by buying the same stocks the crowd is buying. You have to do something different."

An example? Union Carbide, in the aftershock of the disaster that killed hundreds at its plant in Bhopal, India, in 1985. Price of Carbide shares on the New York Stock Exchange nosedived to $32.75 from $50 on speculation that legal suits by families of the victims would put the giant chemical producer out of business. Templeton mutual funds had positions in Carbide so bought more. When the price fell farther, the funds accumulated additional shares.

The Broaden-Your-Knowledge Rule: This states that where the possibility of a bargain appears present, the investor has the responsibility to acquire the expertise to evaluate the situation. It also could be called the "if the situation warrants it, get the facts" rule.

The authors point out this rule subtly goes beyond the popular brokerage firm credo to "investigate, then invest." A lack of understanding about a company or industry shouldn't permanently block finding and exploiting a bargain. Be alert for opportunities and do your homework.

The Quantification Rule: This gets a little more technical. It says that a bargain can be expressed in terms of its true current earnings, or likely future earnings, as compared with the cost of its shares or the price it could bring on the current open market.

This is a reflection of Templeton's pragmatic nature that demands all aspects of an investment be quantified to provide a method of comparing it with other potential investments.

"A bargain can be found in the earning power of a company as compared to the price the investor must pay for it," write the authors. "This is called 'bottom-up' investing, an outgrowth of fundamental analysis that discourages speculation."

The Hard Work Rule: Investing is hard work, and shortcuts produce second-class results. Investing is difficult and demanding. Templeton believes most people oversimplify investing, patch together shortcuts and learn painfully and too late that too often the path they have trod toward a "hot" stock or market frequently leads to a dead end.

As Templeton says, the price of a stock usually reflects expectations of a positive outlook.

"If all you know about any particular stock is that the product behind it is going to have a great future, you're nowhere near knowing whether you should buy the shares," he declares.

If an asset is shunned by the general investing public, then that is the asset to consider, is his credo.

"It goes beyond just not following the crowd," he told Berryessa and Kirzner. "You can gain opportunities in investing only by doing something the majority are against doing or something they don't know about."

Ready for Septemberfest's opening night preview party are Liz Greaves, chairman of publicity; Pam Dyer, artist chairman; Sara Selber, Septemberfest chairman; and Jana Hinkley, preview party chairman. The arts and crafts fair continues Saturday and Sept. 11 at the Midland County Exhibit Building.

Septemberfest '88

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Laughter and having fun occupy a top priority space on Sara Selber's "things to do" list. So far, serving as chairman of the 20th annual Septemberfest has provided her with both.

"Of all the events I have worked on, this is the most fun," Mrs. Selber says. "Septemberfest has had a face lift, and there's a feeling of excitement as opposed to exhaustion."

Pam Dyer, artist chairman, and Liz Greaves, publicity chairman, nod their heads in agreement. The three are sitting in the staff lounge at the Museum of the Southwest.

"I think this is the best Septemberfest ever put on — the most well-organized," says Mrs. Dyer, a four-year member of Las Manos, the event's sponsor and the museum's auxiliary organization. "We could go tomorrow if we had to."

"People in the community have been so good about helping out; there's an excitement about helping the museum," says Mrs. Greaves, who has been with the all-volunteer organization for five months.

Septemberfest '88, a benefit for the Museum of the Southwest staged by Las Manos, opens Friday with a Preview Party from 7-11 p.m., sponsored by Texas Institute of Sports Medicine, Jim Cox and First City National Bank of Midland.

A full dinner is catered during the Preview Party, while patrons preview the art work. A posted bid auction is held for art work donated by the artists to benefit the museum. Tickets, priced at $25 per person, will be sold at the door for the public event.

Then, the arts and crafts fair continues from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. Saturday and from noon to 5 p.m. Sept. 11. Tickets are priced at adults $3, children 3 to 16 years old $1, and children under 3 years of age free.

Because of the construction of the Fredda Turner Durham Children's Museum, Septemberfest has been moved from the museum grounds to the Midland County Exhibit Building, located at East Highway 80.

And, due to the generosity of four sponsors — Earle Craig and the three mentioned above — the entire event is under cover this year.

"Rain or shine, we're covered," Mrs. Selber says. "We have a mammoth circus tent — 60 by 90 feet — for the main tent and a 60 by 60 foot tent for Kinderfest."

Kinderfest has had a "definite face lift" and activities have been added that appeal to "older kids — 9 to 12," Mrs. Selber says.

The artists' booths, set inside the Midland County Exhibit Building, will contain works on display and for sale by 72 artists from across the United States. Out of the 72, 40 are returning from previous years.

"The artists always speak highly of our show," Mrs. Selber says. "They are excited to come; it's like coming home."

Although Septemberfest received no applications from Midland artists, the committee did receive several from Odessa, thus works by two Odessa artists are entered in the show.

In addition, Midland artist Cynthia Wolfe designed the invitations for this year's event.

"We've had such an amazing response," Mrs. Selber says. "We've been told — 'This is the first time we have seen an invitation indicative of an artist's festival.' "

The response was so positive, that the Septemberfest committee commissioned Ms. Wolfe to design a poster which she will be autographing at Septemberfest.

In addition, T-shirts, sweat shirts and shopping bags based on Ms. Wolfe's design have been printed with a third already sold.

Board members, including Mrs. Selber who has received eight such calls, have heard concerns that the Preview Party falls on the same evening as Lee High School's opening football game.

These three board members concur that no matter what weekend the event was held, a conflict would result.

How can you miss high school football in the fall on Friday nights? asks Mrs. Greaves.

They all point out that for a number of years Septemberfest has been held the first weekend following Labor Day, and artists count on the event being held the same time each year.,

If the committee loses touch with an artist, the artist may contact the museum. Just such a case happened this year when applications were sent out in February, and the one to Mary and Dick Rosen — the Hothatters — was returned.

"They called the museum because they knew when the invitations went out," says Mrs. Dyer. The Rosens had moved from California to Colorado and traveled the United States this year.

"Artists are pretty much on a circuit," Mrs. Selber says. "They figure they made it into the show, say the last two years, so the odds of them getting in again are pretty good. So they put us on their schedule."

Continuous entertainment is provided throughout the weekend, as is food sold from 15 food booths.

In addition, Septemberfest Fun Run will begin at 8:30 a.m. Saturday at Midland Centennial Plaza in downtown Midland.

The run is a two-mile or 10K race, and awards for all ages are given. The entry fee is $10 preregistration and $12 the day of the race. For more information contact Craig St. Martin of the Midland Jaycees at 699-5308 or 561-7288.

Another highlight of Septemberfest is a free drawing for two round-trip tickets to San Francisco donated by American Airlines. Entry forms will be available at the entrance area and the American Airlines booth at Septemberfest.

This year marks the first time the publicity has gone nationwide, Mrs. Selber says. "We have reached markets never before reached."

Between 7 and 7:30 a.m. Thursday, Septemberfest will be featured on "Good Morning America," an opportunity made possible through the efforts of Lois Smitherman, who is on the publicity committee, and Jeff McDonald, who is with the local affiliate, KMID-TV, Channel 2.

When Septemberfest opens this year, about 80 percent of the volunteers are people who have not worked on the event before, Mrs. Selber says.

Petra

Petra to give local concert

Petra, a well known Christian rock band, will be appearing at the Chaparral Center on Monday, Sept. 19 as part of their "This Means War Tour."

"Petra is encouraging youth to take a stand against the problems, such as drugs and suicide, that are destroying America's youth," says a release from Street Level Ministries, sponsor of the concert. "Their concerts are a celebration — youths are encouraged to live good, wholesome lives and to put God first."

Petra has appeared in the past at the June Jam with Alabama and The Beach Boys.

Petra's lead singer is John Schlitt who was lead singer for the rock group "Head East" from 1973 to 1980.

"Schlitt left the group with a terrible drug addiction and contemplated suicide," the release says. "He had a life changing experience when he asked Jesus Christ into his life."

Schlitt joined Petra in 1986 for their "Back to the Street" album.

Geoff Moore will be appearing with Petra. Moore is an artist on Sparrow Records and recently recorded Larry Norman's classic song, "Why Should The Devil Have All The Good Music."

Tickets are available at Scripture Shop in Odessa, Lighthouse in Midland, Sonshine Bookstore in Big Spring, Mary & Martha's in San Angelo, Lovelines in Hobbs, and from most area youth pastors, as well as Chaparral Center. Ticket price is $10 in advance and $12 at the door. For groups of 10 or more, tickets are $8.50.

For more information call 1-362-8195.

Gallery hosting open show

Gallery 1114, 1114 N. Big Spring St., opens its fall season Saturday with a 7 to 10 p.m. reception for the Second Annual Open Show, which will be on view through Sept. 29.

The Second Annual Open Show is open to all "things creative, not just those in traditional art categories," says a release from the gallery.

"All of us have some artist in us. A cake, clock, poem, dance — anything done with pride and originality — belongs in this show. Of course, things generally thought of as art are welcome, too."

Entries may be brought to the Gallery Thursday and Friday between 10 a.m. and 5 p.m. Culinary and performance art entries will be made during the opening reception.

Entry fee is $5 for each entry. No limite on number of entries. A $49.95 grand prize will be awarded for Best in Show. All entered works will be exhibitied.

For more information call 682-5434 or 686-7960.

Last chance to see the Petroleum Museum's Focus On Oil '88 Competition/Exhibition is Monday. Although a holiday, the museum will be open.

The 10th annual exhibition showcases the lensemen's talents of amateur and professional photographers of the Permian Basin and beyond. First Prize photographers were awarded $175, Second Prize earned $125 and third Prize won $50.

Hours at the museum, located at 1500 Interstate 20 West, are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday and 2-5 p.m. Sunday. A small admission is charged to see the museum's exhibits.

Many of the 65 active members of Las Manos are new to the organization.

In addition, the event is made possible through the efforts of community volunteers who are not members, Mrs. Selber says, adding that the Volunteer Center has been most helpful with this year's event.

Those interested in joining Las Manos are asked to call 682-5656.

"Anyone can be a member," says Mrs. Selber. "It's a very relaxed organization. The only requirement is that you work on Septemberfest."

In addition to Septemberfest, Las Manos is responsible for furnishing docents for the museum and helping to set up certain exhibitions, such as the Christmas tree exhibit.

Last year, Las Manos raised monies totaling around $55,000 for the museum, Mrs. Selber says.

"You can get involved in the leadership right away," says Mrs. Greaves, a newcomer to the organization. "I'm already making some good friends."

"It's been a very positive group," Mrs. Selber says. "The people under me have been unbelievable. It's the easiest job I've ever had, without a doubt."

Season's last derby scheduled

The Midland Suburban Lions Club is hosting its final 1988 Super National 2 Demolition Derby at Twin Cities Speedway at 8:30 p.m. Saturday. Feature races for double points will precede the derby.

The show will include other special attractions provided by those who prefer to live dangerously, such as the drivers in the spectator drags.

In addition, Midland Auto Buffs and Tall City Classics are hosting a car show from 5 to 8 p.m.

Entry fee for drivers in the derby is $25. Total purse is $2,000. For more information call 1-381-2401 or 683-8541.

GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE

Avid fans enjoy jazz society's jam session

Temple

Bobby and Georgia Crues are avid jazz fans.

In addition to being actively involved in the Midland Jazz Classic, set this year for Oct. 6 through 9 at the Holiday Inn Country Villa, Bobby is a member of the West Texas Jazz Society, Inc.

The society is a new non-profit organization which seeks to foster a greater interest, particularly among young people, in jazz. In March, the society presented the Cherry Creek High School Jazz band of Denver, Colo., in concert at Midland and Odessa schools. A public concert by the Denver students was performed at the Odessa Hilton.

Weekend trips mean Sunday evening recovery time, preferably at home. Right? When Bobby and Georgia drove in Sunday from Ruidoso, arriving around 3:30 p.m., did they go home and recuperate? No. They headed for the Midland Hilton and the society's jam session, the second such event staged by the group this year. The first was held at Mission Country Club.

"The place was packed," Bobby told me. "It really was. And there was somewhere around 30 musicians who showed up. It was really, really good. Jim Ross organized the sets, and it went off very nicely. Johnny Varro came up and played for a little while."

Varro had performed for the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale Inc.'s fund-raiser the night before at Midland International Airport. Billed as "A Red Hot Night in New Orleans," the event, which featured a catered dinner, complete with dessert, an auction, music and dancing, drew a full house.

"The occasion marked the first time in the organization's history that all branches of the organization — the Midland Symphony Guild, the Odessa Symphony Guild, the Midland Symphony & Chorus rAssociation, the Odessa Symphony Association and the joint board of directors of the MOSC — pooled their resources to present a combined fund raiser," said Connie Linsler, MOSC general manager.

At the fund raiser, I discovered that Midlander Barry Beck, president of the Midland Symphony & Chorus Association, has spent part of his summer getting in shape.

I was telling Barry about my escapade in Nevada in which my luggage was left at the hotel and our flight was rescheduled and he told me about almost missing his flight in New York.

Barry likes to travel on the early morning flight. He hailed a taxi around 6 a.m. At that time, the taxis are locked, he says. The driver, a Russian immigrant, put Barry's luggage in the trunk and before Barry could get in — the back doors were locked — took off. Fortunately, the taxi had to stop two blocks away at a red light. Imagine his reaction when his customer came running up along side the taxi and proceeded to beat on his window?

Barry pointed out that worse things exist than losing luggage. He recalled another ride to airport in New York. That time, his taxi driver sideswiped two cars and never slowed down.

At the fund raisee I also met Robert E. Hunt, the new symphony chorale director, and his wife, Jackie.

A native Texan, Hunt is completing his doctorate in chorale conducting at Indiana University School of Music. In addition to his experience in the classical choral repertoire, he also has worked extensively with show choirs. He's an accomplished pianist and has prepared choral works with the Dallas Opera.

He was most concerned about the current chorale auditions, which are in progress this weekend and next. He hopes all area singers will audition. For more information call the symphony, 563-5269.

I recently received a call for help from Charles Blanton, a book collector and ardent fan of J. Evetts Haley Sr. The J. Erik Jonsson Central Library in Dallas needs to enlarge its collection of high school and college annuals and has none from Midland. In 1987, the Big Spring High School donated more than 100 annuals to the Dallas library. Those interested in donating their annuals may do so by taking them by the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library, 1805 W. Indiana Ave.

Former Midlander Douglas G. McGrath and his cohort-in-print, Patricia Marx have written a book, "Blockbuster" under the Bantam New Fiction label. It tells the story of the rise and fall of an imaginary film studio. A clue to the type of book "Blockbuster" is lies in their resumes. Both are former Saturday Night Live writers. Stay tuned for further developments.

Lewis' telethon preparation emotional, tearful

By ROBERT MACY

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Jerry Lewis, who's spent a lifetime making people laugh, was deadly serious as he faced 250 local television personalities from cities across America — key players in this year's Labor Day Telethon.

"What probably put me in that hospital five years ago was saying goodbye to those little giants," said Lewis, referring to his 1982 double-bypass heart surgery and the children who've been lost to muscular dystrophy in the 22 years he has been raising money through the telethons to fight the crippling disease.

The local TV hosts, ranging from rookies to 20-year veterans, were gathered at Caesars Palace, where final preparations were underway for the telethon this weekend. They spent two days mapping strategy for what has become "the" telethon, Lewis' annual effort for the Muscular Dystrophy Association.

Lewis, the consumate showman, understands the impact of the local TV hosts in his Labor Day entertainment extravaganza. They orchestrate the 15-minute local cutaways each hour on some 200 stations, dubbed by Lewis his "Love Network."

Last year's telethon raised a record $39,021,723. The annual TV events, which began in 1966 and feature arrays of stars who participate at Lewis' behest, have raised $443,182,370.

This year's show is scheduled to run from 9 p.m. EDT Sunday until 6:30 p.m. Monday.

"Your work has produced some tremendous inroads this year," Lewis told the local TV hosts.

"This is my one shot at thanking you," he said. "We are No. 1 because of your dedication. This year our research-and-patient-care budget was over $100 million, thanks to you."

He praised the hosts who have been with the telethon for as long as 20 years, and he promised the first-timers, "Tis will be the first day of the rest of your life."

Lewis guided the local TV hosts through an emotional three-hour presentation of some poignant taped presentations for this year's show and introduced several victims and their families who are subjects of the segments.

Paul Miller, director of the show, said his hope was that "someday, I'll be able to say I directed the last Jerry Lewis Telethon."

Singer Tony Orlando, one of the co-hosts, urged the local hosts to make 1988 "one more year better than the last year, so we can get closer to that final year."

One of the afternoon's more dramatic moments came when the local hosts previewed a segment on singer-comedian Dennis Day, who died this summer of amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, more commonly known as Lou Gehrig's Disease. ALS is one of 40 neuromuscular diseases fought by MDA.

The video segment includes old black-and-white footage of Day as sidekick for the late Jack Benny. As some of his songs play in the background, Day talks of his hope for beating the disease. And two of his 10 children fight back tears as they recall the final months of their father's life.

"I could see it in his eyes," said son Tom McNulty. "He was afraid. I was afraid, too, afraid of losing him."

McNulty then appeared in person before the local TV hosts.

"I wish my dad could be here to celebrate this time," he said. "I wish my dad was here to sing."

O'Keefe subject of museum video

Video Tuesdays at the Museum of the Southwest are continuing through the remainder of the year with an emphasis on artists through the ages and art history.

Videos are shown at noon, 2 and 4 p.m. and those coming at noon are invited to brink a sack lunch. Drinks are provided.

The videos scheduled for Tuesday and Sept. 13 will provide background for those planning to see exhibitions in Dallas and Chicago.

"Georgia O'Keefe," to be shown Tuesday, is of special interest for those planning to see the O'Keefe exhibition at the Dallas Museum of Art, either on the tour scheduled by the Museum of the southwest for Sept. 16 or on their own.

On Sept. 13, "Paul Gauguin: The Savage Dream" will be shown. "The Art of Paul Gauguin" is a major exhibition showing at The Art Institute of Chicago Sept. 17 through Dec. 11. The Museum of the Southwest's President's Club is planning a trip to Chicago in October.

For more information on either trip call Enid Davis, 683-2882.

Impact of 'Betrayed' dwindles

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO

Salcedo

Constanin Costa-Gavras' film "Betrayed" begins on a chilling note with the brutal assassination of a radio show personality (Richard Libertinti) who encouraged his callers to "say what they want, as ugly as it may be." It is a shocking episode based on the 1984 killing of Alan Berg in Denver. Blood pools in the dead Libertini's open palm in crucifixion imagery. The moment is intense, but the film's impact dwindles from there.

"Betrayed" refers to the relationship between white supremacist Gary Simmons (Tom Berenger) and an incognito FBI agent, Katherine Weaver (Debra Winger), who operates under an "aka" of Kate Phillips.

Kate shows up on Gary's midwestern farm (somewhere outside of Chicago) as a combine operator from Texas. She is actually trying to infiltrate a group of racists bent on destroying what they call ZOG (Zionist Occupied Government.)

Unfortunately for Kate, she does her job too thoroughly, finding herself falling in love with Gary. Their relationship is difficult to accept, especially after Gary takes her on a "hunting" trip where the trophy is a black man. It defies reason that an open-minded, sophisticated FBI agent from Chicago would fall for a bigoted good old boy who accuses a friend with a strawberry birthmark of being "one of those dying, spotted faggots."

The strange relationship tends to crowd the real issue of racism, which is brought into focus with startling events, including a white-supremacist campout where vacationers dress in Ku Klux Klan robes and burn crosses as they gather to sing "Amazing Grace."

Kate's affection for Gary's daughter, whose mother had "an accident" when she disagreed with her husband's deranged philosophies, is more believable than her attraction to Gary. Hearing young children calling minority races derogatory names is more frightening than anything the adults say. The brainwashing of young minds might have been a better focus for the film.

Kate falls for Gary's family-man facade when he invites her over for dinner. She gets a chance to sample his mother's cake, the "whitest cake in the whole white world." Grandma is a dear. She unintentionally describes her own family when she says, "The bad just pushes out the good. There's filth and trash everywhere." And when she tells her granddaughter she can't cuss but, "Your Dad can cuss because he's a man," it's a wonder Kate doesn't leave while she can.

Despite Gary's chauvinism, murderous bigotry, homophobia and just plain cruelty, Kate can't stop loving him.

Her love is blinding. In an attempt to account for her time spent relaying information to FBI colleagues, she tries a shopping alibi by announcing to Gary, "I have a surprise for you." But in one of the film's more inane moments, she has no surprise gift and becomes hard-pressed to produce one. Finally, she rips her slip hoping that it will look like a new, fetching undergarment. Gary is unimpressed and accuses Kate of looking like a "$10 whore."

Even worse than Gary's treatment of Kate is her treatment by her FBI superiors, who tend to leave her life in the balance.

By the time the final scene appears, "Betrayed" finishes with a fizzle. To the film's credit it does grapple with controversial subject matter, and it does get its message across with a minimal amount of violence. It has powerful moments, but could have had more with better treatment.

"Betrayed," rated R for sexual situations and violence, is playing at Midland Park Mall Cinemas.

'Stealing Home' lacks definition

"Girls like guys who make a pass, smoke, talk about something other than themselves, and don't break their hearts," says Katie Chandler (Jodie Foster) to her charge, Billy Wyatt (Thacher Goodwin) in "Stealing Home." Katie is Billy's worldwise babysitter. He's 10; she's almost 16. But Katie exists only as a memory to the adult Billy (Mark Harmon). Her image comes to fore when Billy's mother (Blair Brown) calls with news that Katie has committed suicide. She named Billy to take care of her ashes.

Billy (a very grungy Harmon, who takes the unshaved look to new heights) is living with a cocktail waitress when his mother calls. "I was as lost as lost could be," says Billy, a budding baseball player who gave up his career before it ever began. The movie never satisfactorily explains his downfall, but it apparently hinges on his father's death — the boy hung up his bat and ball soon after the demise of his No. 1 fan.

Only one other person believed strongly in Billy's career: Katie. Her death initiates Billy's trip down memory lane in his attempt to shed light on his current miserable existence.

Some of his memories include his best friend, Alan Appleby (Johnathan "Brighton Beach Memoirs" Silverman), who reprises the role of the near-nerd looking to lose his virginity in "Summer of '42." However, Silverman's portrayal of a teen-ager whose hormones are in overdrive is refreshing.

Even better is Harold Ramis as the adult Alan. Silverman and Ramis are the best character match in the film. It's easy to believe that both actors could be the same person at different ages. The same doesn't hold true for Harmon, and the two younger versions of himself.

But even if Harmon's younger counterparts were better matched to him physically, there still would be flaws in "Stealing Home." The biggest hole is the period in which Billy drifted away from Katie. The last time he sees her she is leaving to be married when he is 16. However, the time period from 16 to about 30 is lost in the ozone. Another aspect which needs definition is why Katie had such an impact on Billy's life.

The best moments involve Alan's constant concern over whether or not Billy had sex with a girl Alan intended to be his senior prom date.

Harmon, who basically plays himself, is hampered by a script that allows him a limited range of emotions. Foster is well-cast, but despite her best performance ever, her relationship with Billy lacks resonance and tension. The most interesting relationship is between Billy and Alan's heartthrob, Robin. The movie includes a sex scene which, though comical, defies the PG-13 rating.

"Stealing Home," which refers to baseball as well as trying to go home again, doesn't have the poignancy of "Summer of '42." Co-directors Steven Kampmann and Will Aldis tended to give the film an erratic feel instead of a bittersweet edge. And some of the most interesting characters have the smallest parts. But nonetheless, "Stealing Home" is a likable, if undemanding film. However, it's disappointing to see a pinch hitter with home run potential "walk" home.

"Stealing Home," rated PG-13 for a sex scene which is very strong for its rating, is playing at North Park Cinemas.

Haley library exhibits prints, lithographs

The Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library, 1805 W. Indiana Ave., is hosting a special exhibit of original prints, lithographs, engravings and woodblock prints dating from 1861 to 1891 during September.

The prints, from a collection of Midland artist Tom Ryan, originally appeared in such publications as Frank Leslie's Illustrated Weekly and Harper's Weekly. Scenes of western migration — wagon trains, cowboys and Indians — are depicted by such artists as Frederic Remington, W.M. Cary, W.A. Rogers, R.F. Zogbaum and Henry Farny.

Hours at the Haley Library are 9 a.m. to noon and 1 to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. No admission will be charged.

'Earth Mass' paintings at art institute

ODESSA — "Earth Mass," an exhibit of paintings by Sally Chandler, opens Saturday at the Art Institute for the Permian Basin, 4909 E. University.

Ms. Chandler's vision of the world, "a place of beauty where peace can exist," is seen in her works as nature-filled landscapes that depict harmony between the plant kingdom and mankind.

"Earth Mass" is the collection of Warren Burnett.

Also on display is the juried exhibit "Watercolor Horizon" through Sept. 25.

For more information about this exhibit or any activities at the Art Institute call Letha Hooper, 1-368-7222.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1988

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Career opportunities will be abundant and exciting. There is more going on in your personal life than you let on. Your discretion enables you to enjoy greater freedom. Guard your privacy, but keep your high ideals.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You can get top dollar for something you want to sell. Do not panic and settle for less. You have a nose for a good deal. An overseas job opportunity has great appeal.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Put your ideas in play, but make sure that, if others benefit from them, you will, too. Travel may be difficult to arrange. Postpone it if possible. You can wiggle out of almost anything now.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Make this Labor Day a time for quiet relaxation and you will return to your labors refreshed. Give children a chance to do more things on their own. Eliminate certain routines that irritate.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Participate in a Labor Day parade or political rally and you will have a whale of a good time. Spend some money on yourself, perhaps a meal at a nice restaurant.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Romance should be both exhilarating and fulfilling. Put your full force behind a community project that is important to you, but avoid issuing ultimatums. Enjoy fun wherever you find it. Pursue romance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You have to understand what you are up against before you can craft a workable solution. Your imagination provides the spark that makes a romantic relationship become more meaningful. Be kind.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your workplace or home gets a new look. It is one you like a lot! Tread carefully when asking the boss for a favor. Expect surprising developments in a family or financial situation.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You like excitement, but not surprises. Be prepared for both in a business setting today. Lean on trusted allies when developing a plan to spur action in the marketplace. Old friends come through.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You find that you have more personal freedom than you thought. Your options are many. Profit or loss will be determined by the way you make a choice. The choice itself is less important.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You have no trouble making a good impression on all the right people this week. Move ahead with confidence, secure in the knowledge that everyone who counts is pulling for you. Enjoy the limelight.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A partner may decide it is time to go it alone. Keep your dignity. New financial trends favor a project you have only dreamed about up until now. Be consistent in approach.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): An important money decision must be made. Health should pose no problem if you follow the good advice you have been given. A career breakthrough is near. Hang on to your high hopes.

Opening lead: King of ◇

We know of a bridge teacher who began his first class at an intermediate course with the statement: "Not all four no trump bids are Blackwood!" Half the class promptly got up and walked out. North must have been one of those who stayed!

You might not think so from the bidding and play, but this hand cropped up in the finals of the Vanderbilt Knockout Team Championship. North's bid of four diamonds showed a club fit and singleton diamond. South intended his bid of four no trump as Blackwood; North read it as a natural bid and elected to pass since he felt he had shown everything he had. The final contract could best be described as "inelegant."

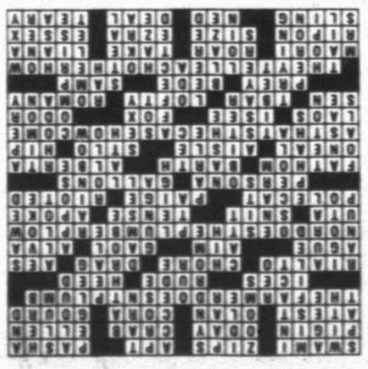

West led the king of diamonds, and East signaled encouragement with the nine. Now your Aunt Fanny would collect the first six tricks by simply continuing with a high diamond. Unfortunately for East, it was not that good lady sitting opposite him, but a fellow expert.

After giving the matter considerable thought, West decided to place his partner with Q-9-x in the suit and declarer with J-x-x. If he now continued with ace of diamonds and another, East would win the queen and be unable to get West back on lead to enable him to cash his three long diamonds.

There was a simple solution to West's problem. He led a low diamond to the second trick! A delighted South gathered in the queen and cashed out the rest of the tricks. To misquote Alexander Pope: "Too much learning can be a very dangerous thing!"

Noggle exhibit at art institute

ODESSA — An exhibition of photographs by Ann Noggle opens Wednesday at the Art Institute for the Permian Basin, 4909 E. University.

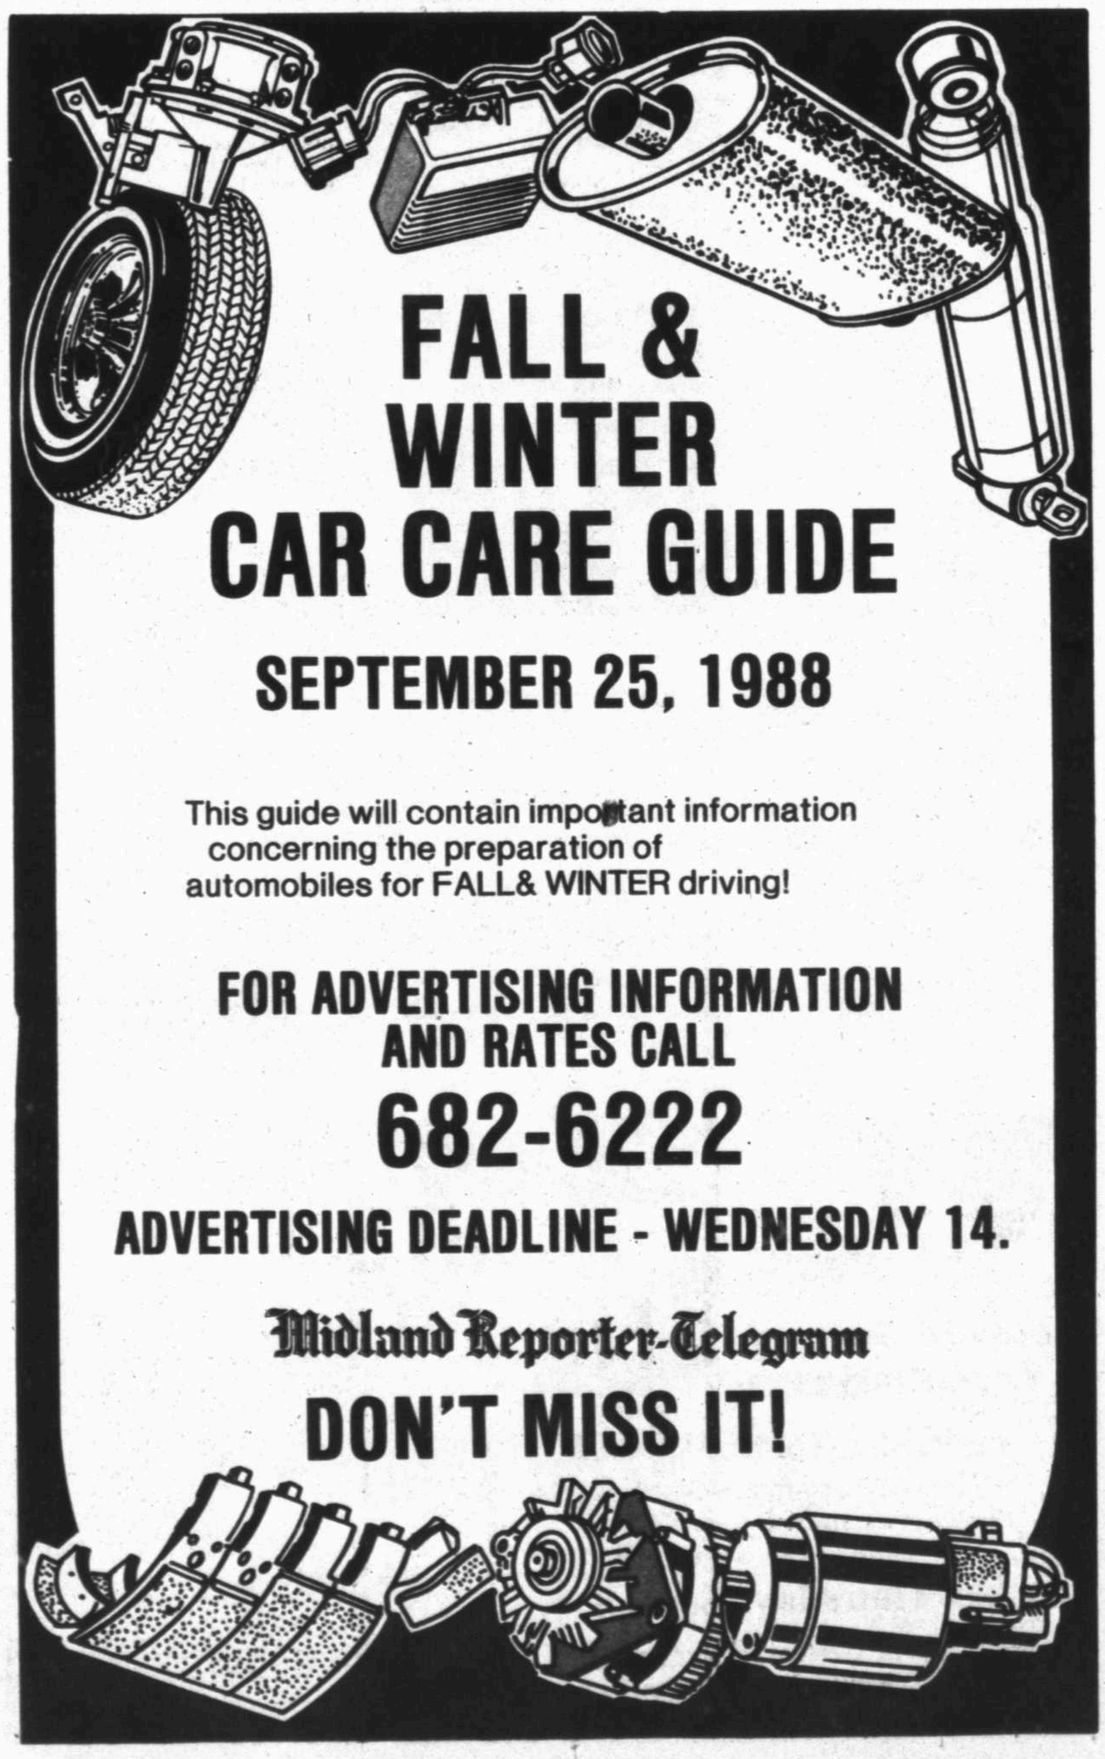

After serving as a woman Air Force service pilot in World War II, Ms. Noggle returned to active duty during the Korean War as an intercept controller.

She later studied photography with Van Deren Coke at the University of New Mexico where she is now an adjunct professor of art.

For seven years she was curator of photography at the Fine Arts Museum of New Mexico and, in 1975, she served as guest curator for the exhibition "Women of Photography: An Historical Survey" at the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art. She was awarded National Endowment for the Arts grants in photography in 1975 and 1978, and a John Simon Guggenheim Fellowship grant in 1982. A book of her photographs, "Silver Lining," was published in 1982.

The show will be up through Sept. 30. For more information call Letha Hooper, 1-368-7222.

La Quinta Inns to be hosting slumber party

La Quinta Inns is hosting Slumber Party USA Friday. Billed as "The World's Largest Slumber Party," La Quinta is preparing to welcome 20,000 guests that night.

In celebration of La Quinta's 20th Anniversary, all rooms will sell for $20 plus tax (one to four guests) on the night of Slumber Party USA. Six dollars of that amount will be donated to Make-A-Wish. The goal is to fill more than 20,000 rooms in 200 La Quinta Inns in 29 states and raise more than $100,000.

Slumber Party USA is La Quinta's first national fundraising event for the Make-A-Wish Foundation, a non-profit charity whose purpose is to grant the wishes of children up to the age of 18 who have life-threatening illnesses. La Quinta is a national sponsor of the foundation, a network of 6,000 wish volunteers for 122 chapters and divisions operating in 41 states. Founded in 1983, the organization has granted 6,000 wishes and is now the nation's largest non-profit, wish granting charity.

Reservations for Slumber Party USA are encouraged and can be made by calling La Quinta's toll free reservations number, 1-800-531-5900.

Dublin celebrating millenium

Magnificent sites surround Irish capital

Copley News Service

Dublin is having its 1,000th birthday this year, and while you are making merry in this delightful city, you may get the urge to visit the extraordinary countryside surrounding the capital.

One of our favorite short excursions is taking the city transit train out of the bustle of Dublin to the seaside town of Howth, which sits overlooking Dublin Bay. You are only a few minutes from hectic O'Connoll Street, and yet it feels like being in a tiny seaside village.

There are charming shops and wonderful buildings, and if you get hungry, overlooking the water is the King Sitric, specializing in excellent seafood and game birds.

Another relatively short jaunt is to head north in County Dublin to the Malahide Castle, a 250-acre estate that was home to an Irish dynasty. The Talbot family lived continuously in the same house from 1185 until 1976.

This magnificent edifice consists of a great hall that dates back to 1475, making it the best-preserved medieval hall still in use in Ireland. The adjacent Oak Room is done in the Flemish style and dates back to 1695. The 18th century drawing rooms and library are filled with some of the most celebrated Irish portraits in the country's history.

Relatively close to Malahide Castle is the magnificent country home called Newbridge House. It's a superb early 18th century Georgian manor house that belonged to the historic Cobbe family. Even though the house has been ceded over to the nation as a national treasure, Cobbe family members sstill live there from time to time in private apartments.

Incidentally, on the road going north from Dublin toward Malahide Castle and Newbridge House, ask directions for the Coachman's Inn, a historic travelers' inn that features a terrific restaurant and pub.

On another day, you may wish to drive south of Dublin toward what is known as County Wicklow. One of the most beautiful counties in all of Ireland, it is usually called "The Garden of Ireland."

By LOREEN ARBUS and and NORM CHANDLER FOX
Copley News Service

Let it be known that the Irish love having a party. What could be more characteristically Irish than making good conversation, singing, laughing and dancing?

These fun-loving people have a built-in excuse to throw a big bash in 1988 because the city of Dublin has decided to give itself a yearlong birthday party to celebrate the fact that this venerable capital is 1,000 years young.

First and foremost, you must be aware of the fact that in Dublin and throughout the entire Republic of Ireland, you are perfectly safe. All of the "troubles" are occurring in Northern Ireland, which is part of the United Kingdom.

Unfortunately, there have been so many headline stories about problems in the north that many Americans have become confused and believe that there is turmoil in the entire Emerald Isle. Not so!

On a recent visit, we were in a jovial mood from the moment we left New York. We flew Aer Lingus — Ireland's national airline — and the service was not only exemplary, but every flight attendant had a twinkle in his eye.

Each aircraft is named after a saint, and we had the good fortune to be flying on the Saint Patrick — the same plane that carried the pope from Rome to Dublin recently. The food was well-chosen and the libations were ample, and all of the Aer Lingus personnel offered delightful suggestions about what to do and see in their fabled land.

Dublin is a truly magnificent city. It reminds us of London, but is far less intimidating. The scale of Dublin is very human, indeed, and you can easily walk this attractive city as most sites are close to one another.

To really get in the spirit of what life was like over 1,000 years ago in these parts, we suggest you go to the Viking Adventure at St. Audoen's in the oldest part of Dublin. It is a re-creation of Dublin in A.D. 988; in essence a living museum of the time when Norsemen inhabited Ireland.

Everything we saw — the houses, interiors, clothes and ornaments — is based on detailed research. Actors play the roles of the ancient Norse people, and you watch them going through their day-to-day duties in this pre-medieval existence. It's one of the most authentic "living history" dramas we have ever seen.

Now that you know what life was like 1,000 years go, you can immerse yourself in present-day Dublin.

If you are in town on a weekend, go to the Portobello Market in Rathmines, which happens to be the best city market in town. There are wonderful bookstalls to browse through and all kinds of unusual devices like 19th century weighing scales. If you are lucky, you might find some fascinating antiques.

Although Dublin has a number of fine hotels, we were very impressed with Jurys Hotel, located in the beautiful section of town called Ballsbridge.

It is directly opposite the American Embassy, and among its many amenities are an indoor pool and health center, a great seafood restaurant, an elegant Irish/continental restaurant, a cabaret room and The Dubliner Bar, one of the nicest pubs in town. Order a pint of Guinness and then try to guess all the famous sons and daughters of Ireland who are painted on the walls.

Unlike the ivory towers of Oxford and Cambridge, which are in small towns of their own, the lovely mixture of Gothic and Georgian architecture that calls itself Trinity College is smack in the center of downtown Dublin. One of the world's great universities, Trinity is worth at least two hours of sightseeing.

And don't forget to visit the Long Room in the university library. In this magnificently arched, columned hall filled with marble busts of the world's finest thinkers, you will see the Book of Kells — the incredible hand-illuminated religious volume from the ninth century. Every day a new page of The Book is turned, allowing the faithfully inclined to return daily to see a new page of art.

If the weather is warm, and it's summertime — you might walk out of the back of the library where there are cricket fields.

Near Grafton Street, we were very impressed with the merchandise of Irish Cottage Industries and a nifty shop called Just Jumpers that just sold sweaters.

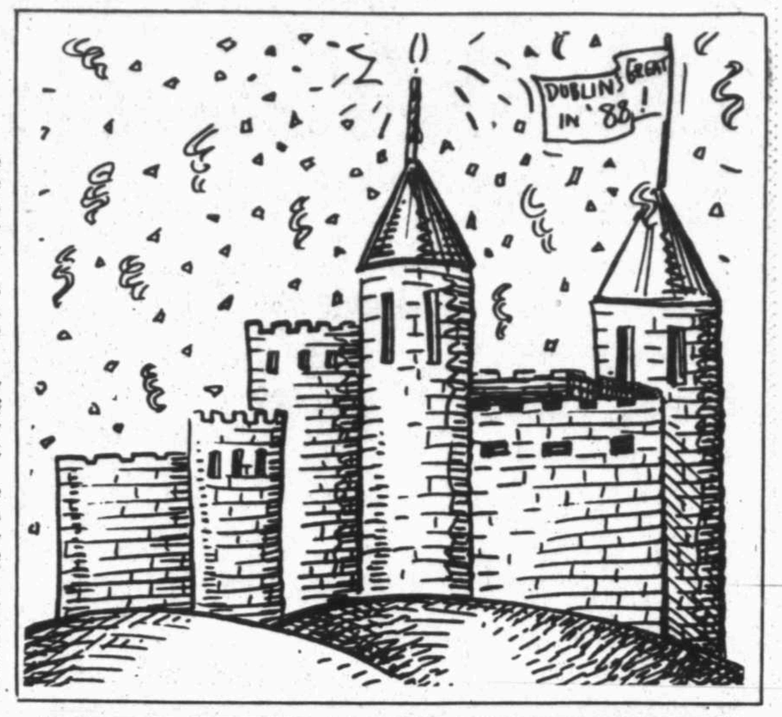

Further up on the banks of the Liffey River is the Dublin Woolen Mills, offering a magnificent selection of sweaters at very reasonable prices.

Incidentally, if you find you need a bit of sustenance while shopping, we suggest stopping at Chantal on Royal Hibernian Way where you can gobble up Leonidas Belgian chocolates.

Because of the millennium, Dublin is having some very special events this year. There was a literary festival celebrating the works of Joyce, Wilde, Yeats, Beckett, Swift, Synge, O'Casey and Shaw in mid-June and in July there were street musicians, outdoor plays and the probability of lots of impromptu entertainments.

Later festivities include horse shows, theater festivals and many athletic get-togethers. Check with the Irish Tourist Board for dates and schedules.

As the signs everywhere in Ireland proclaim, "Dublin's Great In '88." This is indeed a very special year for the Irish, and this is the summer or fall for Americans to kick up their heels for the best Irish party on earth.
