PLO factions declare truce; Panel named

TUNIS, Tunisia (AP) — While its rival factions called a truce, the PLO's top leaders ended an emergency meeting today by appointing a committee to mediate the bitter dispute between chairman Yasser Arafat and Syria.

The initiative came one day after Arafat's loyalists and Palestine Liberation Organization rebels backed by Syria declared a cease-fire in eastern Lebanon's Bekaa Valley and appointed seven men to oversee the truce.

In Jerusalem today, spokesman for Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin said Begin had rejected a U.S. "idea" that Israeli troops should pull out of Lebanon and not wait for Syria to remove its forces.

Spokesman Uri Porat said U.S. special envoy Philip C. Habib raised the idea during a meeting with Begin this week. The scenario was not "an outright demand, but one of several ideas raised by Habib concerning timetables" for withdrawal, Porat said.

In a report today on the PLO-Syrian situation, the Saudi press agency said Saudi Arabia and Algeria have decided to mediate a settlement — an effort apparently not directly related to the work by the PLO-appointed committee. It quoted Saudi Foreign Minister Prince Saud al-Faisal.

Representatives of the PLO's eight major guerrilla factions announced the truce in a joint communique issued in the Bekaa city of Baalbek.

Arafat has been fighting a mutiny by rebel PLO guerrillas in Lebanon for nearly two months. The mutineers claim he has botched the struggle with Israel and selected aides for their loyalty rather than skill.

As the cease-fire took effect, 13 members of the 15-member executive committee, the PLO's highest decision-making body, were at Arafat's headquarters in Tunis for an all-night meeting that broke up today.

The participants included one member who reportedly supports the rebels in Arafat's Fatah faction, Abdel Mohsn Abu Maizar. He was one of six men named to a committee which will try to resolve differences between Arafat and Syrian President Hafez Assad, according to a PLO official who asked not to be identified.

But the official added: "It is a very difficult suggestion. They have been killing our people and I can't see how we can reconcile with them that quickly."

Relations between Syria and Fatah loyalists worsened after Assad kicked Arafat out of Syria last week to retaliate for accusations made by the PLO chief and his aides that mutiny was Syrian-backed.

The PLO official said Maizer and members of five other PLO factions — but none from Fatah — will try to mediate the Arafat-Assad dispute.

In Baalbek, one PLO spokesman told reporters the early stages of the cease-fire would "decide whether or not the Palestinian guns would stop shooting each other."

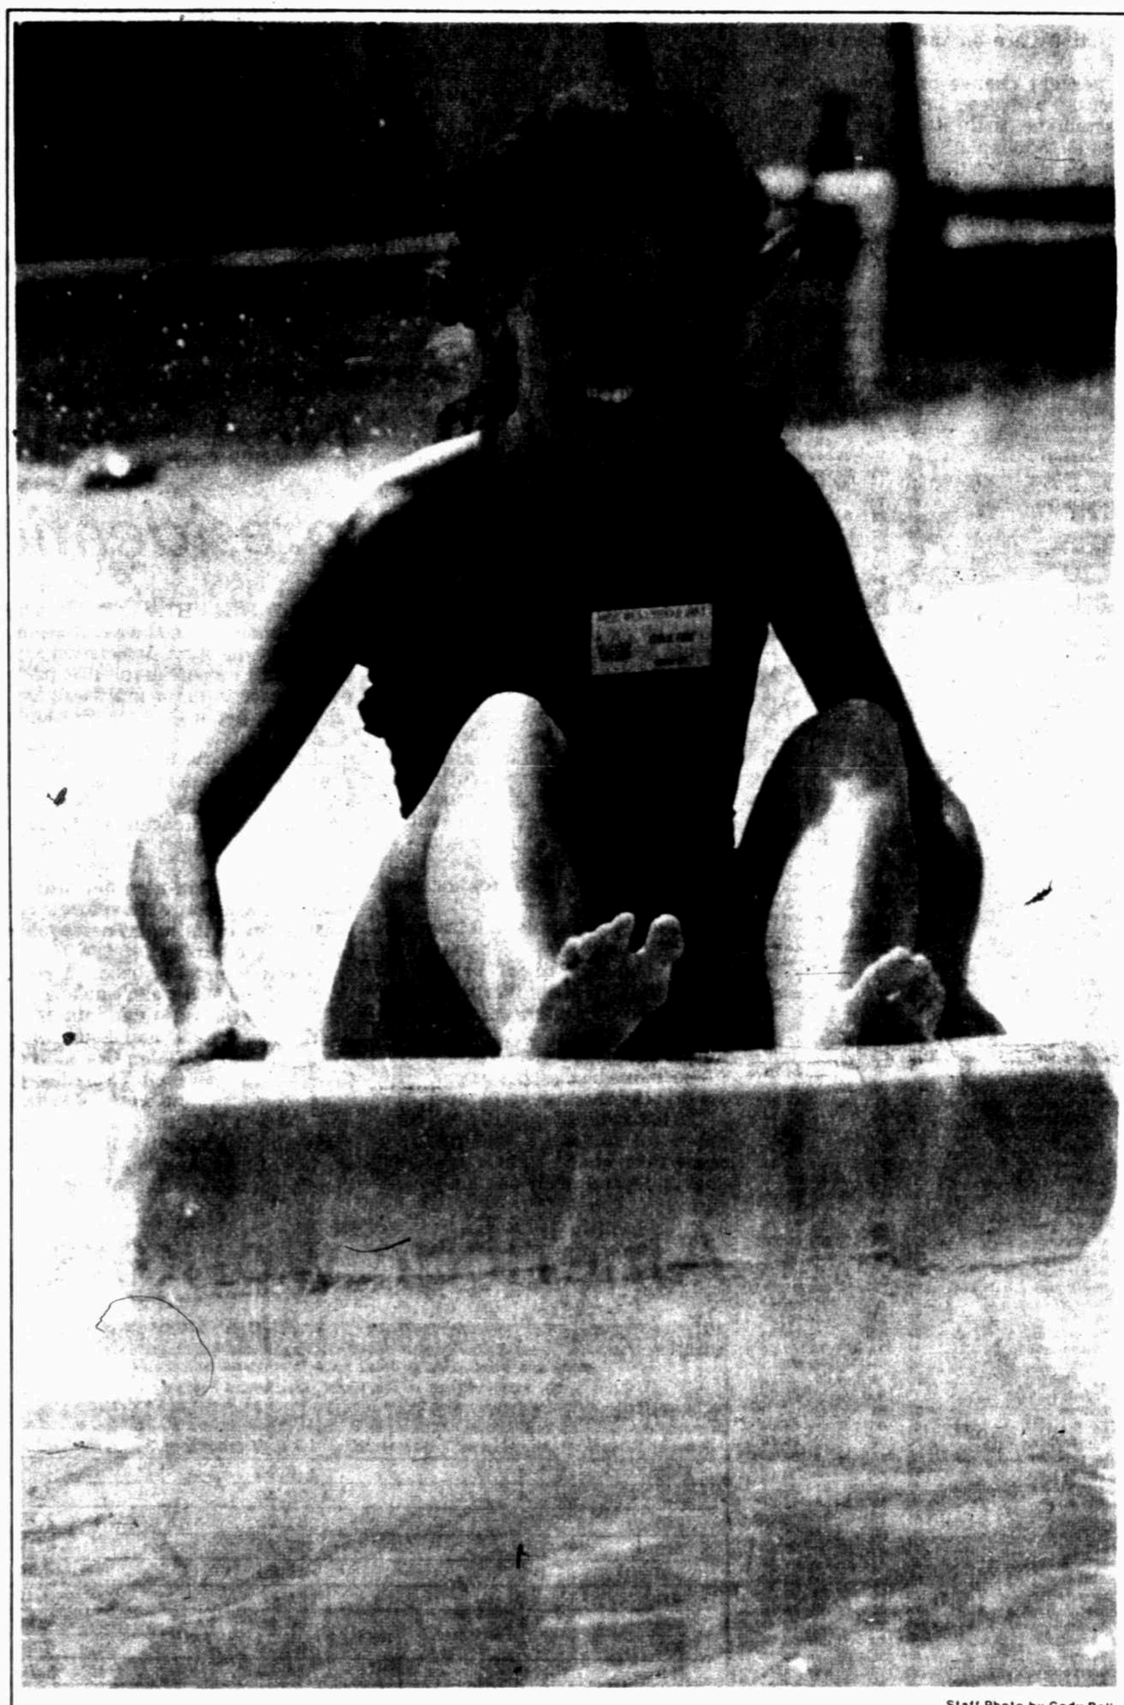

The cease-fire committee includes three Palestinian guerrilla representatives and four Lebanese leftist allies of the PLO, according to the communique.

The agreement calls for removal of all guerrilla forces from both sides of the Beirut-Damascus highway in the Bekaa, where fighting has flared since Monday. It also calls for the release of prisoners.

The communique said a "democratic dialogue" is the best method to resolve the mutiny, which has been led by breakaway PLO Col. Saed Mousa. Mousa was consulted about the agreement and pledged to abide by it, the communique said.

Despite Arafat's problems with his own guerrillas, his popularity among Palestinian civilians remains high — according to poll conducted by an Arab weekly paper and summarized today in the Jerusalem Post. The poll said 92 percent of 777 Palestinians surveyed in the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza favored Arafat's continued leadership of the PLO.

Syria's government-controlled media escalated attacks on Arafat Thursday, challenging the PLO's right to make independent policy decisions when they involve anti-Israeli strategy.

Leslie Fort, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Royce Fort, makes a big splash at a party given for 31 contestants entered in the 36th Annual Miss West Texas Scholarship pageant.

Regional pageant continues

Thirty-one young women will be competing in the 36th annual Miss West Texas Scholarship Pageant held Thursday through Saturday in the Ector County Coliseum.

Preliminary judging began Thursday and continues tonight, with the new Miss West Texas being chosen and crowned on Saturday. Pageant events begin at 7:30 p.m.

The theme for this year's pageant is "Dream Girl," with music from the Broadway play of that title being featured.

"We'll have the girls dressed in the styles of the '50s, '60s, '70s and '80s, with music to fit the era," said Russel King, pageant producer. "The opening number each night will be the 'Dream Girl' theme."

The 31 contestants make this the largest Miss West Texas Pageant ever. The pageant, which has been officially affiliated with the Miss America Pageant system since 1961, is the largest in the state with the exception of Miss Texas.

The only Midland resident in the pageant will be Leslie Gayle Fort, Miss Hamiliton Equipment, who is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Royce Fort of Midland. She is 17 and a recent graduate of Midland High School, where she was a cheerleader, twirler and a band member. She will play the piano and sing "I Owe You" in the talent competition.

The current Miss West Texas, Stephanie Oates, will perform "Under the Double Eagle" each night of the pageant. She will perform the same song when she represents this area in the Miss Texas Pageant in Fort Worth July 5-9.

MMH boards approve drawings for expansion

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Architectural drawings for a $15 million bed expansion at Midland Memorial Hospital were given a green light while construction of a drug and alcohol abuse treatment center stayed stalled pending a ruling out of Austin.

Bids for the construction of the 77-bed expansion, approved by the Texas Health Facilities Commission (THFC) in March, are expected to be taken in October, Gene Abbott told trustees and directors during regular meetings of the hospital governing boards Thursday.

"We're waiting for a revised estimate, which is due anytime," the chairman of the board of trustees said. "For all practical purposes, I think we're pretty well on schedule."

In other action, trustees heard updates on the purchase of a new $1 million Cat Scanner, parking lot expansions and an increase in patient revenues.

Drawings for the 77,000-square-foot expansion, approved in concept by both boards, will be returned to architects for preparation of the final detailed drawings, MMH President Ray Branson said.

The expansion will be used to house "primarily all of the nursing services," said Arlene Strickland, MMH director of public relations. Included in the services are maternity, surgery, radiology and same-day surgery, which will be a self-contained unit. Patients who enter, have surgery and are released during the same day will be admitted at the unit, rather than through regular hospital procedures.

The expansion also will be used to accommodate personnel, business, administration, social services and the chaplain's offices.

Approved by the THFC, the expansion is being financed through revenue bonds "that have been sold and delivered," according to Ms. Strickland.

"The money is in the bank," Dale Miller, vice president of finance, said.

Plans for the 50-bed drug and alcohol treatment center are proceeding although no action may be taken until the THFC rules on a site change, according to Abbott. Orginally planned to be built on 5 acres on Wadley Avenue, the site was changed to a 10-acre tract of land, donated by Scharbauer Brothers and Co. in February.

If the site, valued at $1 million, is approved, the City of Midland will need to annex it, Branson said earlier this month.

Reagan reiterates his Central American policy

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan says failure to approve his military and economic aid program for Central America could unleash an "explosion of violence" that would eventually threaten "the safety of American citizens."

The president told a Republican Party audience in Long Beach, before flying to his California ranch for the Fourth of July weekend, that "if we do not get what we asked for, we cannot do the job, and we will leave the door open to more subversion."

"We must not turn our backs on our friends," Reagan said. "We must not permit dictators to ram communism down the throats of innocent people in one country after another. If we are to be successful in helping the forces for democraey, then we must have the full financial package we requested."

Reagan's plans for Central American aid are running into opposition from some moderate Republicans as well as Democrats in Congress. But some Democrats fear that by failing to go along with the president, they will leave themselves open to blame for any leftist gains.

For El Salvador, where the president has focused his Central American assistance program to counter leftist efforts, Reagan is seeking $136 million in military aid this year. So far, Congress has approved spending $56 million. Overall, the president is seeking $392 million in military and economic aid, with $264 million approved so far.

The president's remarks on Central America represented a shift in his focus of the past two days, when education was the key topic as he headed West.

As he has traveled, however, one subject has been close behind: The briefing books prepared for President Carter during the 1980 presidential campaign that were obtained by Reagan aides.

Questions about the handling of the issue were occupying the time of the president's aides, if not the president himself, on the trip.

About 50 Texans expected to die in holiday mishaps

AUSTIN — The Texas Department of Public Safety estimates that up to 49 persons could lose their lives in traffic accidents across the state during the upcoming July 4 holiday period.

DPS Director Col. Jim Adams said the estimate is based on expected traffic volume and previous holiday fatalities.

"Independence Day can bring more motorists to our streets and highways, compared to a regular weekend," said Adams. "We are estimating fewer deaths than we had during the last July 4 holiday because thus far this year we have experienced a decline in traffic fatalities."

Last year, 55 traffic deaths were recorded during the 78-hour period. But subsequent deaths from serious injuries brought the final count to 64 for the three-day holiday.

Adams said if motorists would stay sober, slow down and use seat belts, their chances for survival would increase.

"Drivers who speed or who are intoxicated pose the greatest threat to law-abiding motorists," said Adams. "Some people will insist on drinking excessively and attempting to drive during this period.

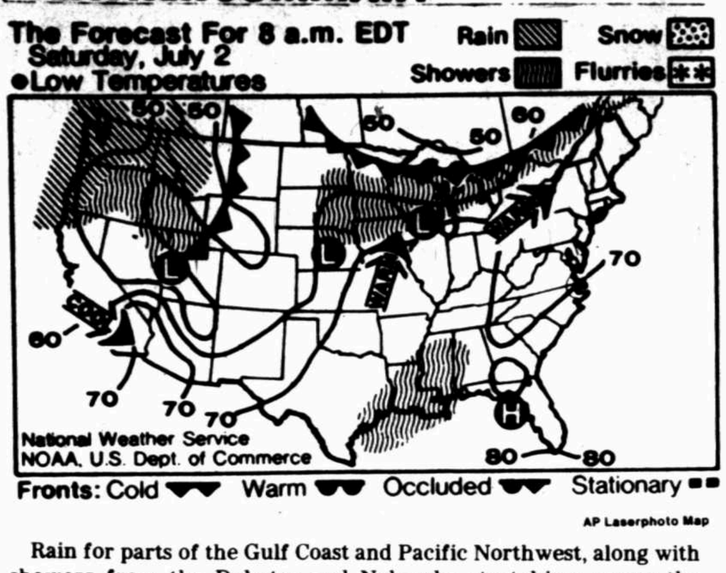

"We will do our best to remove these individuals from the roads. If a person drinks, that is his personal business. But if he drives drunk, that's police business."

Adams encourages motorists who observe drunk drivers to report them to the nearest police or DPS agency.

DPS commanders throughout the state will use additional troopers in areas deemed appropriate.

The DPS also will conduct "Operation Motorcide" to inform the public of the number of traffic deaths occurring during the 78-hour holiday period, which begins at 6 p.m. Friday.

WEATHER SUMMARY

WHITTIER, Calif. (AP) — Students at Pioneer High School, praised by President Reagan as among the best in the country, admit it takes some time getting used to the school's old-fashioned formula: hard work.

Situated in a predominantly Hispanic, middle-class community 15 miles southeast of downtown Los Angeles, Pioneer has 1,800 students firmly tutored in an academic work ethic that the National Commission on Excellence in Education recommends to stem "a rising tide of mediocrity."

"When we first came here, only the strong could survive. It was a tough school," college-bound senior James Leal said Thursday. "Now whatever you do, it's accepted (by other students) because you're part of the school."

The ground rules Robert Eicholtz spelled out when he became principal four years ago typify the old-fashioned values of the "back-to-basics" movement: nightly homework, demonstrated scholastic effort, regular attendance, Saturday schoolyard work for truants, respect for authority.

Pioneer High basked in triumph Thursday as Reagan personally presented its leaders with the first of 144 awards for excellence destined for top schools across the nation.

Teachers and administrators in business suits beamed as broadly as honor students in distinctive red T-shirts when Reagan lauded them for "pioneering a new age of education based on old values."

By students' accounts, Eicholtz has blended the basics with a genuine respect for them as individuals and a vision of the school as a community.

Another June graduate, Belinda Puno, recalled suffering through an English class, her boredom a frequent complaint of today's high schoolers.

"They tried me out in an easier class because I wasn't doing so well, and I was still bored," the 17-year-old said. "Finally, they switched me to a harder class and I got interested. I was challenged."

Before Eicholtz' arrival, 30 percent of Pioneer's seniors went to college. The average now is 50 percent. He has reduced absenteeism from 13 percent to 8 percent and cut instances of truancy from 3,000 to 600 annually.

More than half the school's incoming ninth-graders fail at least one of California's mandatory proficiency tests in reading, writing or arithmetic. By senior year, the failure rate is down to 1 percent, Eicholtz said.

The principal shares the credit with his "dedicated teachers" and the community.

"Parent involvement is incredible," Eicholtz said. "Their bingo every Tuesday night brings us almost $1,000 a week. We wanted to build a chain link fence; instead the parents voluntarily put up a beautiful wrought-iron fence."

The money crunch at most U.S. public schools plagues Pioneer, too — Eicholtz longs to add new computers for students — but there's a sense that what's right at Pioneer doesn't depend solely on money.

NEA's new leader says union's presidential support up for grabs

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The leader taking over the reins of the National Education Association says the union's support in the 1984 presidential race is up for grabs and anyone could get it — even President Reagan.

But Mary Hatwood Futrell, who is running unopposed to advance from secretary-treasurer to president of the union, said Reagan would have to mend his ways to get the NEA's support.

The 1.7 million-member union, holding its annual convention for 7,000 delegates through Tuesday, has become a mainstay of the Democratic Party and has been unremittingly critical of Reagan's policies.

Three Democratic candidates — Walter F. Mondale and Sens. John Glenn of Ohio and Alan Cranston of California — arrived Thursday to court the teachers' vote. Mondale and his wife, Joan, also were to make the rounds of state teacher caucuses today. Another Democratic hopeful, Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado, was due today, while Sen. Ernest F. Hollings Jr. of South Carolina was scheduled to arrive Sunday.

Mondale is considered a favorite to win the NEA's backing when its political action committee and board of directors meet in late September and early October. His brother works on the NEA's national staff.

But Ms. Futrell, who as president will make a recommendation to the political action committee, said in an interview, "I will be the one who will make that decision and I can assure you that I am just as neutral as neutral can be."

"If (Reagan) wants to, he has a chance of winning the NEA vote," she said, adding that Reagan would have to "come out in support of public education ... give up his fight for tuition tax credits" for private schools and stop trying to abolish the Education Department.

Unlike Reagan, who has tried to cut federal aid, most Democratic candidates favor sharp increases in federal aid to schools. Glenn unveiled a $4 billion plan Wednesday in Washington. Mondale is backing an $11 billion increase, and Hollings wants to give all teachers a $5,000 raise at a cost of $14 billion. Hart is the main sponsor of the NEA's American Defense Education Act to give $4 billion in general aid to public schools.

The Democrats agree with Reagan that standards need to be raised in schools.

Glenn drew shouts of "That's right!" when he told 500 teachers in a packed hotel ballroom Thursday that the harsh report from Reagan's National Commission on Excellence in Education was "just telling us something we've all known for a long time."

The former astronaut said it was "stupid" for the United States to let itself lose in international competition.

The NEA sent more than 300 delegates to the 1980 Democratic National Convention in New York.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Workers begin picking up their 1983 federal tax cut today along with advice from economists to spend it now and save later.

The third installment of the permanent tax cut enacted at President Reagan's request won't mean a lot of money to most people — about $2.40 a week for the median-income married wage earner with two children.

But the Treasury Department estimates it will pump $30 billion into the economy over the next 12 months — although much of that will be soaked up by rising state and local taxes.

"I would assume most people are going to spend it," Robert Ortner, chief economist for the Commerce Department, said of the federal tax cut, which will average about 10 percent. He advised workers to "enjoy it any way you see fit because this will only unravel a few years of 'bracket creep' (inflation-caused tax increases) and take your effective tax rates back to where they were in late 1978."

"Go out and spend it or we're all in trouble," said Sandra Shaber, a consumer economist with Chase Econometrics. She agreed with Ortner that the continued recovery from recession is dependent on consumer spending.

Ideally, she said, consumers should spend this year's share of the permanent tax cut but start saving it next year and 1985 when, many economists say, the growing federal deficit is expected to begin pushing interest rates upward. A larger pool of savings at that time would relieve some of that pressure, Ms. Shaber said.

Many Democratic members of Congress fear that the tax cut will do more harm than good for the economy. Since the government will have to borrow the money to finance the tax reduction, they reason, that is likely to push up interest rates.

The tax reduction is supposed to show up in all checks paid after Thursday, even those that are compensation for work done earlier. The cut in the amount withheld from paychecks will be about 10 percent for most workers, raising to 23.5 percent the average reduction in withholding since President Reagan's program began taking effect Oct. 1, 1981.

The Labor Department says the median wage — half the people earn more, half make less — is $319 a week. A married person with two children and earning $319 will take home an extra $2.40 a week starting Friday. Withholding will fall to $25.70 a week, $7.30 less than two years ago.

Withholding from a single person earning $319 will drop $4.40 a week to $44.40.

A single person earning $1,000 a week will get an extra $19.80. A $500-a-week married worker claiming withholding allowances only for himself and his wife will get a $7.60 cut. A married person earning $400 weekly and claiming four allowances will take home $4.20 more.

The cut in withholding is less as wages rise above $637 a week because that is the point at which the maximum withholding rate — 37 percent — takes effect.

MMH governing boards OK drawings for expansion

According to Abbott, an ad hoc committee is still in the process of "preparing proposals for the solicitation of two interested parties for operation or participation in operation" of the facility.

"We have been talking to two people but we are anticipating talking to a larger number of people," Abbott said. "We're sorta in limbo right now waiting (for the THFC ruling). We're trying to do a little groundwork now."

Branson explained the hospital is considering owning and operating the center, as well as alternatives, such as contracting with an outside firm to manage the operations.

If the site change is denied, Branson said he is not sure what process of appeals will be taken.

MMH officials expect to have a ruling on the site change later this month, Abbott said.

In other action, Abbott told trustees a developmental committee will be appointed to develop priority items. Number one on the list is the new Cat Scanner, he said.

According to Branson, the present scanner is outdated. A certificate of need (CON) must be approved by the THFC for any equipment of services costing at least $400,000. The CON was approved around June 14.

According to Ms. Strickland, the new scanner provides better images faster than the old one. Time should be reduced from 30 seconds to five to 10.

The scanner is expected to be delivered Sept. 5, Miller said. Installation takes about 30 days.

Bids for the construction of a parking lot south of the hospital are expected to be submitted in a week, Abbott said. A 2 p.m. meeting July 11 for the opening of bids was approved by directors, who will sign the contract if a quorum approves a bid. While bids must be opened in a public meeting, actual signing of the contract may be done later.

Gross patient revenues hit an all-time high of $3,064,000 at the end of May, Tom Bruner, chairman of the finance committee, told trustees. Partly because of a rate increase put into effect at the first of April, patient revenues exceeded the budget by $178,000.

Miller later explained there is usually a decrease in patients during the summer. According to Ms. Strickland, the patient revenues will provide a cushion for the slow summer.

"We were in a profit mode through May 31," Bruner said. "But there are some trends of concern."

The hospital, which was operating on a "very tight occupancy rate" of 80 percent was operating at 75 percent in May. Lengths of stay, which average 5.2 days, averaged 5.5 days and Medicare patients, which average about 30 percent of patient totals, were averaging 34 percent in May, Bruner said.

In addition, he said births budgeted for May were down although he said the numbers in June were making up for it. Emergency room visits and same day surgeries were above figures budgeted for May, he said.

In other action, directors approved the placement of $625,000 in contingency operation funds, $2,795,000 in capitalized reserve funds and $1,350,000 in interest and sinking funds into 18-month treasury bills drawing 9.9 percent interest.

Construction funds of $15.1 million were placed in treasury securities and two money market savings accounts were opened from which construction fund checks will be issued.

Directors also approved the following checks: $13,258.02 to the tax appraisal district; $1,436.89 for the hospital's share of costs from the April election; $6,719.95 for legal services to Kerr Fitz-Gerald & Kerr law firm; $96,542.32 for indigent care in May; $7,845.24 to Lubbock General Hospital for indigent care; and $65,037.50 to First Southwest Co., for financial advisory services in relation to the $19 million revenue bond issue.

Directors also approved bids on equipment totaling $107,980.50.

Upton County is so dry from a continuing 18-month drought that range cattle are eating cactus. Upton County extension agent Kent Powell shows a chewed-over piece of cactus on the Lew Smith ranch west of Rankin. Two inches of rainfall in 18 months have reduced the field to brown scrub.

West Texas suffering from 18-month drought

RANKIN (AP) — Kent Powell thinks it's ironic that while the Colorado River is overflowing from a record snowmelt, a Pennsylvania-sized part of West Texas nearly has been denuded by the worst drought since the Dust Bowl.

The 18-month drought that has stricken 27 Texas counties has left Rankin nearly devoid of rain — two inches have fallen since last summer. The normal is 12 inches.

"It's a shame some of that (flood) water can't come here," said Powell, the Upton County agricultural agent said.

The area is so dry that "if a grasshopper had to cross the county, he'd better pack a sack lunch," Powell said. "Our land is looking like an extension of the Chihuahua desert out of Mexico right now."

Officials say the parched land from southeastern New Mexico to the Big Bend area and 250 miles east to Big Spring is reviving memories of Dust Bowl days.

"We've got the makings of a new Dust Bowl out there," Texas Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower said. "These 27 counties cover an area larger than...Pennsylvania, and the drought is wrecking an agricultural economy that produces sales of a half-billion dollars in a normal year."

Hightower on June 21 asked U.S. Agriculture Secretary John Block to declare Upton County a federal disaster area and start an emergency feed program across West Texas to help beleaguered ranchers, who have had to import costly feed for their range animals since January 1982. Block has not acted on the request.

"I've burned (thorns off) cactus so that my cattle can feed. It's just terrible what's going on here. There's going to be a shakeout in West Texas — me included," said Rankin rancher Lewis Smith.

"I'm losing a tub of money. In all likelihood, I'm going to sell out pretty quick," said Smith, who has 10,232 acres of land for sale at $150 an acre — "or about 50 cents on the dollar. I'm going to get out while I can."

Rankin isn't the only hard-hit area. Portions of Winkler County near the New Mexico corner haven't registered rain in two years, Powell said. The lack of rain has had a ripple effect on most of West Texas.

Some ranchers are pulling their cattle from the land before the ground cover is eaten up and shipping them to fields as far away as Muleshoe, west of Lubbock.

Some of next year's animal crop also could be lost because "the momma cattle and ewe, she won't produce (under adverse conditions)," Powell said.

The drought also has affected area wildlife. Deer increasingly are spotted in roadside ditches, trying to find greens near water runoff spots.

Hungry rabbits also have swarmed on garden plots. One farmer shot about 300 rabbits who kept digging up his garden, Powell said.

"More predators seem to be coming in - coyotes, bobcats, some mountain lions. And skunks - some with rabies - have started showing up in town," he said.

Bill requiring smoke-detectors in hotels signed

FORT WORTH (AP) — During a visit to the city where a motel fire claimed five lives, Gov. Mark White signed into law a bill designed to avert similar tragedies in the future.

Flanked by Fort Worth lawmakers, White held a news conference here Thursday to sign the measure, which requires all hotels and motels in the state to install smoke detectors in all guest rooms by Jan. 1.

"I think the bill is going to save lives," said Rep. Doyle Willis, D-Fort Worth, sponsor of the measure.

The bill was approved by legislators during their four-day special session last week.

Investigators said the five victims of the June 14 fire at the Ramada Inn Central died from smoke inhalation. Thirty-four people were injured in the blaze.

Many of the survivors of the fire said they escaped their smoke-filled rooms only because they were awakened by honking car horns and the sound of shattering glass.

A city ordinance required smoke detectors in hotels and motels built after 1976. But the 10-year-old Ramada Inn did not have the devices, and investigators said the fire alarm in the wing where the blaze broke out did not sound because its batteries were corroded.

Investigators have said the fire started in rolls of carpeting stacked in a hallway and that it probably was deliberately set.

White, who was in town for a speech to the Texas Bar Association, praised lawmakers for their quick action on the measure, but called it the "absolute minimum" hotel guests should expect.

"I think a person has the right to expect that he's not going to be going into a public accommodation like that and not have the latest technological, and in this case, very inexpensive, equipment to protect his life," White said.

White said the cost of the devices, which already are standard in many hotels and motels, would "be a lot cheaper than the litigation that flows from the tragedy that occurs."

White added the smoke detector bill to the special session agenda after lawmakers acted on the two emergency measures they had been called back to Austin to address — extension of the Texas Employment Commission and creation of a federally approved program to test cattle for the contagious disease brucellosis.

The governor is expected to call lawmakers back for another special session to address teacher pay raises and public education funding.

Lawmakers declined during the regular session to accept White's proposal to raise taxes on "luxury" items such as tobacco and liquor to fund a 24 percent, two-year teacher pay raise.

White said he will not call another session until he receives a report from a special committee appointed to study education funding.

In the meantime, White said, he is continuing to try to convince lawmakers to consider raising taxes to fund the teacher pay raises he expects the committee to recommend.

White said the committee's report is expected late this summer or early this fall.

Prosecutor surprised that nurse posted bond

KERRVILLE (AP) — A prosecutor says he was surprised that a licensed vocational nurse, accused of killing an infant and injuring six others with injections of a powerful muscle relaxant, was able to post bonds totaling $225,000.

Genene Jones, 32, was free today after a Kerrville bonding company posted cash and property to cover the bond, authorities said. She was released about 5 p.m. Wednesday from the Kerr County Jail.

Kerr County District Attorney Ron Sutton said he was surprised by the release because testimony during court hearings indicated Ms. Jones was virtually penniless.

Asked if he was worried about her release, Sutton said, "Well, she made the bond. The bondsman should be the one worried."

Ms. Jones was reported to have left for her mother's home in San Antonio, the San Antonio Express reported today.

She was arrested May 25 after a grand jury here indicted her in the death of 15-month-old Chelsea Ann McClellan and accused her of injuring six other children while employed at a Kerrville pediatrics clinic.

Ms. Jones had formerly worked at the pediatrics intensive care unit at Medical Center Hospital in San Antonio where a grand jury is investigating a number of suspicious infant deaths. No indictments have been returned there.

The McClellan family expressed shock at Ms. Jones' release.

"They won't find her now — she's gone," said William Reid McClellan, Chelsea's father. "They didn't have her bond high enough."

Ms. Jones' posted bond one day after a hearing during which State District Judge Murray Jordan refused to lower her bond to $45,000. During that hearing, Sutton accused Ms. Jones of plotting his death.

Ms. Jones' attorney, William Chenault of San Antonio, called the alleged plot "totally absurd."

"The business about an alleged murder conspiracy is ridiculous and shouldn't have come out," Chenault said.

Ms. Jones denied the allegation during the hearing.

The defendant's other attorney, Joe Grady Tuck of Kerrville, said he worked out a "negotiated fee" with the bonding company in order to get Ms. Jones released.

Kerr County Sheriff Cliff Greeson refused to disclose exactly how much Ms. Jones had to pay to make bond and declined to reveal the value of the collateral put up by the bonding company.

PUC staff considers shaving $1.2 billion off Bell request

AUSTIN (AP) — While Southwestern Bell lawyers headed to court today to try to add about $92 million to last year's rate hike, Public Utility Commission staff members considered a proposal that could shave $1.2 billion off the company's 1983 rate request.

SWB asked for a $471.5 million hike in 1982, but was granted only $243.9 million by the PUC. State District Judge Harley Clark today will consider the company's complaint that it was entitled to about $92 million more.

Company spokesman Jim Goodwin said the PUC forced Southwestern Bell to make higher refunds than necessary to customers who paid bonded rates for two months while the case was pending.

Refunds totalling $29.4 million were made in June, according to Goodwin, although the company felt that refunds of only $8 million were justified.

Now pending before the PUC is a $1.7 billion rate hike request filed last week by Bell. That increase would mean the tripling of rates for basic residential service. Company officials said much of the increase is needed to cover revenues that will be lost as a result of a court-ordered break-up of the American Telephone and Telegraph system.

PUC General Counsel Allen King said Thursday the staff might recommend that $1.2 billion of the request be thrown out because the status of the divestiture is unclear.

Credit-card rates to drop this month

AUSTIN (AP) — A new law lowering the amount of interest consumers pay on their bank credit cards goes into effect today, and Sen. Ted Lyon, D-Mesquite, said it gives Texas the lowest rates in the nation.

"If you hold a Texas-based bank card, your rates should drop from as high as 21 percent in June to 16.69 percent after July 1," Lyon said.

He said even though the law goes into effect today, the lower rates won't show up until the second monthly bill received after July 1 on credit cards such as Visa and Mastercard.

Officials want safe deposit boxes from failed banks brought home

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas officials want to bring home abandoned safe deposit boxes that wound up in Washington when 19 banks failed in the state during the Great Depression.

As 627 banks folded during the difficult economic times, some were unable to locate owners of some safe deposit boxes. The U.S. comptroller of currency took the boxes and their contents.

Last October, Congress voted to allow the U.S. comptroller of currency to return the boxes to the owners or heirs. States, such as Texas, that have unclaimed property programs, can ask the federal government to return the boxes.

State Treasurer Ann Richards said Thursday that boxes from 19 failed Texas banks are in federal vaults.

Gramm claims he can sustain veto

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Rep. Phil Gramm, R., College Station announced Thursday that he now has 146 signatures on his agreement with congressional colleagues to hold firm to sustain any presidential veto of bills that increase federal spending. He figures this action will save the country $40 billion.

Gramm said 146 is the number required to sustain a veto.

"This is the first substantial effort in the 98th Congress to control spending," he said.

He plans to present his plan to the President formally after congressional members return here on July 11.

"I feel gratified that by stopping these big authorizations and appropriations bills that call for spending over the budget that we have cut off $40 billion of additional spending. It is the beginning of a movement that should have great effect on cutting back the deficits and I think the economy needs it. I am very happy about this."

Gramm was joined by all Republican members of Congress from Texas and in addition, one Democrat, Rep. Marvin Leath, D., Marlin.

House votes for wildlife refuges

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The House of Representatives voted nearly $2 millions for preservation of fish and wildlife refuges along the Rio Grande River and in Cameron county, Rep. Solomon Ortiz, D., Corpus Christi announced.

"Acquisition of patches of scrub land along the Rio Grande for 500 miles from Brownsville to the Big Bend National Park will cost $1.5 million," Ortiz said.

The remaining money, $373,000, will go for a refuge in Cameron county along the La Guna Atascosa refuge.

Defendant given alibi in bombing

ODESSA (AP) — An alibi witness says capital murder defendant John C. Skelton could not have planted a bomb that killed a former employee because he was with her at the time in Springfield, Mo.

Dr. Judy Parton testified Thursday that she also was with Skelton in Missouri at a time that other witnesses placed Skelton in Tennessee buying dynamite.

Skelton is accused in the death of Joe Lee Neal, 46, of Odessa, who died when a bomb wired to his pickup exploded April 24, 1982.

The state rested its case Thursday without calling on the daughter of Neal, who was almost a victim of the bombing.

Skelton went to his pickup and turned the ignition, setting off the explosion, while he was waiting on his daughter to locate a choir robe, authorities said.

Ms. Parton, who said she worked for a clinic in Springfield, was one of five defense witnesses who testified Thursday that Skelton was in Missouri the weekend Neal was killed.

Although Ms. Parton said she had been an almost constant companion of Skelton after January 1982, she denied they were lovers.

An explosives expert testified Thursday that the bomb in Neal's pickup "was designed to kill."

Sheriff to ask for probe of official misconduct

SILSBEE (AP) — Sheriff H.R. "Mike" Holzapfel says the Hardin County grand jury will be asked to investigate allegations of official misconduct in connection with a sexual rendezvous one of his deputies became involved in earlier this week.

Holzapfel has suspended Deputy Thomas Tyler, 22, without pay pending an investigation, but he said the grand jury should look into the possibility that Silsbee police helped set Tyler up.

Charges filed against a woman for bribing a public official also will go before the grand jury.

Holzapfel said after Sandra Kirkendall Gore, 37, of Silsbee agreed to have sex with his deputy on a country road, she tipped off Silsbee police so they could catch them in the act.

The next day, she called Holzapfel's office asking for "hush-up" money in return for her agreement not to talk about the incident, the sheriff said.

Holzapfel said he is pursuing a thorough investigation because "I don't intend to sit here and be used as a whipping boy for dirty politics in Hardin County."

Ms. Gore told investigators she agreed to meet for a sexual rendezvous with Tyler on a deserted road west of Silsbee about 8:30 p.m. Tuesday.

According to the sheriff, the woman left for a while to make a phone call, then returned to the deserted road and began to disrobe.

A short time later, Silsbee Police Chief Dennis Allen, Police Sgt. Thomas McGraw, County Judge Milton "Pete" McKinney and Precinct 1 constable Howard Grantham walked into the clearing and saw the couple, the sheriff said.

The judge said McGraw picked him up in a police car and drove him to the rendezvous site. McKinney said when he arrived, he was so shocked by what he saw that "I couldn't say anything."

McKinney said Tyler said he was "using the suspect for a dope buy" but then said, "I've been set up, Judge. I've been set up."

Tyler was off duty, but was in a sheriff's department patrol car.

Ms. Gore told authorities she went to the Silsbee Police Department before meeting Tyler, Holzapfel said. The sheriff and Assistant District Attorney Pat Hardy met for about 20 minutes Thursday night with Allen, McGraw and City Attorney Roger Ratliff to ask them about the incident and about what Ms. Gore had told authorities earlier.

The sheriff said his chief deputy received a telephone call Wednesday from a woman identifying herself as Ms. Gore and asking for "just enough money to get out of the state."

In a later phone call, the woman asked for $2,500 "in small change — 50s" in exchange for an agreement to keep quiet about the incident with the deputy, the sheriff said.

Holzapfel arrested Ms. Gore near the Hardin-Tyler county line after he gave her $2,500, he said. The sheriff, who was wired with a microphone, said she gave him a note promising she wouldn't talk about the Tuesday night incident, and he arrested her.

Ms. Gore was charged Thursday with bribing a county official.

Hart: Americans aren't getting what they want from Reagan

DETROIT (AP) — Americans want justice and jobs, but are getting neither from the Reagan administration, U.S. Sen. Gary Hart said in a campaign speech before a Hispanic group.

"The policy of this administration is to reverse years and years of economic and social progress in this country," the Colorado Democrat said Thursday night.

"In every area — education, job training, housing, health, business opportunities and all the rest — funds have been cut," Hart said. "It is a vision of this country's future which is negative and backward looking — one that must be reversed in 1984."

Hart was the first of five announced candidates for his party's 1984 presidential nomination to address the League of United Latin American Citizens' annual convention.

"We must work toward job training and education, the right and opportunity to own a business and create new jobs, cleaning up the environment of this nation, constructing a foreign policy which is not alligned with right-wing dictatorss but rather committed to human rights and democratic principles around the world," Hart said.

Delegates will hear today from U.S. Sens. Ernest Hollings of South Carolina, Alan Cranston of California and John Glenn of Ohio, while former Vice President Walter Mondale is Saturday's speaker.

President Reagan declined an invitation to speak, LULAC President Tony Bonilla said. He also told delegates that progress is threatened by "the callous attitude of the president."

"Our situation today is not as good as it should be and as good as it will be after 1984," the Corpus Christi lawyer said.

Bonilla blasted Reagan proposals to allow tax credits to schools which discriminate against minorities, to cut programs for children and the poor and for failure to hire more minorities and women in key federal posts.

He also urged delegates to flex their political muscles to accomplish their goals.

Study: $100 billion savings possible

WASHINGTON (AP) — A study concludes the Pentagon could save more than $100 billion in the next three years, but the Secretary of Defense says carrying out the proposed changes would hurt the nation's military effectiveness.

The savings could be achieved by overhauling the military retirement system, changing the way it buys weapons and increasing competition among contractors, a White House advisory panel of business executives suggested Thursday.

It is "cruelly unfair" to suggest that vast savings could be made in a short time, said Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, who added that changing the retirement system would "create havoc with the morale and readiness of our troops."

The report by the President's Private Sector Survey on Cost Control was the sixth in a series that began 15 months ago after President Reagan asked the group to propose ways to save money.

The latest defense spending reports proposed savings of $92 billion. Added to earlier defense saving ideas totalling $12.5 billion, that meant the panel had suggested $104.5 billion could be saved by improved Pentagon efficiency.

"Almost 40 percent of the recommended savings can be derived from improvement management of the weapons acquisition," said the study.

It called for more multi-year buying of the hundreds of types of weapons, purchasing of common parts rather than letting each of the four services buy its own, increased competition for contracts and elimination of overlapping purchasing systems.

MIAs return home from war

TRAVIS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) — There were no speeches, there was no music as the eight fliers returned home from the war.

There were only a few terse commands through the afternoon breeze and the shuffle of feet as the silvery caskets were hauled from the transport plane, carried before an honor guard and loaded aboard black hearses.

Four pallbearers in Air Force dress blues carried each casket. A color guard of riflemen and an honor guard of Air Force and Navy officers saluted. And a few civilians looked on.

Elizabeth Lancaster of San Luis Obispo was among them. She had come to see her son.

Navy Lt. Cdr. Charles R. Lee had been missing since he was shot down July 9, 1967, over Vietnam.

"After 16 years of coping with the uncertainty of my son's fate, it is a profound relief to be able to say, 'Thank you, God, for letting him come home at last,'" she said in a written statement.

The C-141 Starlifter touched down on the Travis Air Force Base runway at 6 p.m. And little more than half an hour later, the hearses left for the Tri-Services Mortuary at the Oakland Army Depot, where the families can make burial arrangements.

The Pentagon said the men were Col. Larry William Biediger, Air Force, of La Coste, Tex., shot down Jan. 29, 1967; Col. John Francis Dudash, Air Force, Manville, N.J., April 26, 1967; Col. Panel to investigate documents

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Ethics Committee will try to find out who doctored the printed remarks of some Republican congressmen during committee hearings on the Environmental Protection Agency and the silver market.

The House voted 409-0 Thursday to launch an investigation into the alterations, but many GOP lawmakers said they would have preferred a Watergate-type special committee probe of the matter. Instead, they got an ethics panel invesigation that will be carried out in secrecy.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., told a news conference he believes someone on a committee staff was responsible for the alterations, which twisted the remarks of some GOP lawmakers. Several Republicans said they were made to look foolish and uninformed. So far, the GOP has pinpointed alterations in reports of 1982 hearings on the EPA, and 1980 proceedings on the silver market.

At the same time, seven Republicans who said they were victims of the distortions also sent a letter to Attorney General William French Smith asking for a criminal investigation.

In other action, the House approved a bill that would reinstate a pilot program to give some government procurement contracts to companies operated by minorities and the poor. The 367-6 House vote sent the measure to President Reagan for his signature.

Under the program, which expired in 1980, the Small Business Administration determined which procurement needs of the Army were suitable for inclusion in the program. The SBA contracted to provide goods and services to the Army, then subcontracted the work to a disadvantaged firm. The bill would require the president to select an agency other than the Defense Department for the renewed pilot program within 60 days.

The House also voted 382-5 to set up a special committee to make arrangements for a joint session of Congress next May to spotlight the yearlong commemoration of former President Truman. The special joint session of Congress is tentatively planned for May 8, the 100th anniversary of Truman's birth in Lamar, Mo.

In committee action, the House Energy and Commerce Committee approved a bill authorizing federal regulators to impose civil fines of a maximum $50,000 a day for operators of obscene "dial-a-porn" telephone services. The measure was attached by voice vote to the Federal Communication Commission's $91.2 million budget authorization for next year, which then passed the committee on a 39-2 vote.

In congressional testimony, Rep. J.J. Pickle, chairman of the Ways and Means subcommittee on Social Security, said he will push for the full House to enact legislation in July revising government procedures which have thrown thousands of people off Social Security's disability rolls. The Social Security Administration has come under fire in the last 18 months for ending the disability benefits going to thousands of people. The complicated appeals process for trying to get back on the rolls also has come in for criticism.

At another congressional hearing, Rep. Timothy E. Wirth, D-Colo., testified that expected increases in telephone rates resulting from the corporate breakup of American Telephone & Telegraph Co. may force many elderly Americans to give up their telephone service. Wirth was testifying as chairman of the House Energy and Commerce subcommittee on telecommunications.

Hospital workers strike

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A union representing 7,500 hospital and health care workers struck two hospitals early today as negotiations continued to avert similar walkouts at 29 other area facilities.

Henry Nicholas, president of District 1199C of the National Union of Hospital and Health Care Employees, said the union executive board voted Thursday night to target Hahnemann University and Episcopal hospitals for strikes, rather than strike all the health centers in the Philadelphia area.

After the midnight deadline had passed, "a lot of people" showed up on the picket line around Hahnemann, said hospital spokeswoman Phyllis Fisher. About 1,000 of Hahnemann's 4,000 employees are union members.

At Episcopal Hospital, supervisor May Waldron said picket lines had been posted and union members did not show up for the night shift.

The union represents technicians, clerks and maintenance workers at 13 hospitals, 12 nursing homes and seven clinics in the Philadelphia area.

Hahnemann apparently was targeted for the strike because it had refused to join in the negotiations.

"Our negotiating team does not want to be part of a group because it feels that the union is putting on pressure for coalition bargaining," said Ms. Fisher.

Spokeswomen for both hospitals said the facilities could continue performing all functions during the strike, including emergency room treatment, elective surgery and admissions.

Ms. Fisher said the 606-bed Hahnemann Hospital could operate with nursing, medical and supervisory personnel. About 1,000 union members are employed at Hahnemann as housekeepers, maids, porters, dietary department employees, nurse helpers, patient transporters and maintenance workers.

Public Notice

Southwestern Bell, in accordance with the rules of the Public Utility Commission of Texas, hereby gives notice of the company's intent to implement a new schedule of telephone rates in Texas, effective August 1, 1983, unless otherwise determined by the Commission.

A complete copy of the new rate schedule is on file with the Texas Public Utility Commission (PUC) at Austin, Texas, and with each affected municipality served by Southwestern Bell, and is available for inspection in each of the company's public business offices in Texas. The Commission staff has contended in the past that all rates are subject to change as a result of Southwestern Bell's rate application.

As a result of the settlement of a lawsuit brought by the U.S. Department of Justice against AT&T, Southwestern Bell, on January 1, 1984, (or as otherwise ordered by the United States District Court) will no longer be a part of the Bell System, but will be owned by public shareholders. Under the terms of the settlement, Southwestern Bell has identified 15 areas in the state within which it may provide service, and the federal court with jurisdiction of the settlement has tentatively approved these areas, called LATAs (Local Access and Transport Area). On or about January 1, 1984, Southwestern Bell can not provide service between these LATAs, and in addition, must transfer to AT&T customer premises equipment that it leases to customers.

Southwestern Bell has filed a proposed revised rate schedule with the PUC reflecting these changes. These rates would become effective August 1, 1983, if they are not suspended by the PUC; however, it is expected that they will be suspended and that the rates ultimately set by the PUC will become effective on or about January 1, 1984. If the rates were to become effective as filed, they would produce a 48.2% increase in Southwestern Bell's unadjusted test year revenues (or a 76.36% increase in Southwestern Bell's test year revenues adjusted to reflect the effect of Southwestern Bell's divestiture from AT&T). Any change in the rates for any interLATA services offered by AT&T or a subsidiary after January 1, 1984, could affect customers of Southwestern Bell Telephone Company.

Notice to Customers of Other Telephone Companies

While Southwestern Bell has proposed no increase in rates for intraLATA interexchange toll services, any change in those rates could also affect customers of other telephone companies. Southwestern Bell is proposing changes in the structure of the present private line and foreign exchange services. Changes in these rates may affect customers of other telephone companies. Any change in the rates for any interLATA services offered by AT&T or a subsidiary after January 1, 1984, could affect customers of other telephone companies.

Aviso Público

Southwestern Bell, en conformidad a las reglas del Public Utility Commission (Comisión de Servicios Públicos) de Texas, por la presente hace saber su intención de establecer un nuevo arancel de tarifas para servicio de teléfono en Texas, con vigencia a partir del 1o de agosto de 1983, a menos que la Comisión haga otra determinación.

Una copia completa del nuevo arancel de tarifas se ha archivado en las oficinas del Public Utility Commission (PUC, ó Comisión de Servicios Públicos) de Texas en Austin, Texas, al igual que en cada municipalidad afectada y que es servida por Southwestern Bell, y dicho arancel está disponsible para inspección pública en todas las oficinas de Southwestern Bell en Texas. En el pasado, la Comisión ha sostenido que toda tarifa está sujeta a cambios cada vez que Southwestern Bell solicite un cambio en dichas tarifas.

Como resultado del arreglo judicial al cual se llegó tras el proceso legal entablado en contra de AT&T por el U.S. Department of Justice (Departmento de Justicia), Southwestern Bell dejará de formar parte del Bell System (Sistema Bell) a partir del 1o de enero de 1984 (ó en la fecha que disponga el United States District Court — Tribunal Federal de Distrito), y llegará a ser posesión de accionistas públicos. Bajo las condiciones de dicho arreglo, Southwestern Bell ha identificado 15 regiones dentro del Estado de Texas en las cuales puede proporcionar servicio, y el tribunal federal con jurisdicción en el arreglo ha dado su aprobación provisoria a éstas regiones, que se denominan "LATA's" (Local Access and Transport Area, ó Regiones Locales de Acceso y Transporte). A partir de fecha 1o de enero de 1984 aproximadamente, Southwestern Bell no podrá proporcionar servicio entre dichas LATAs, y además deberá ceder a AT&T todo equipo ubicado en premisas de clientes y alquilado a los mismos.

Estos cambios se han incluido en el propuesto arancel de tarifas de servicio revisado que Southwestern Bell ha archivado con la PUC. Dichas tarifas tendrían vigencia a partir del 1o de agosto de 1983, a menos que fueran suspendidas por la PUC; sin embargo, se espera que sí seran suspendidas, y que las tarifas que en último caso establezca la PUC entrarán en vigor a partir de fecha 1o de enero de 1984 aproximadamente. Si las tarifas entráran en vigor tal y como se han archivadas, aumentarían en un 48.2% los ingresos no-ajustados de Southwestern Bell para año de prueba (unadjusted test year revenues), ó sea un aumento de 76.36% en los ingresos de Southwestern Bell para año de prueba, ajustados para reflejar el efecto del desposeimiento entre Southwestern Bell y AT&T. Cualquier cambio en las tarifas para cualquier servicio tipo-interLATA que proporcione AT&T ó una compañía subsidiaria despues del 1o de enero de 1984 podría afectar a los clientes de Southwestern Bell Telephone Company.

Aunque Southwestern Bell no ha propuesto un aumento en las tarifas para servicios tipo "intraLATA interexchange toll", cualquier cambio en dichas tarifas tambien podría afectar a los clientes de ótras compañías de servicio telefónico. Southwestern Bell está proponiendo cambios en la estructuración de los servicios actuales de línea privada (private line) y de intercambio extranjero (foreign exchange). Cambios en las tarifas para dichos servicios podrían afectar a los clientes de ótras compañías de servicio telefónico. Cualquier cambio en las tarifas para cualquier servicio tipo-interLATA que proporcione AT&T ó una compañía subsidiaria despues del 1o de enero de 1984 podría afectar a los clientes de ótras compañías de servicio telefónico.

The union represents technicians, clerks and maintenance workers at 13 hospitals, 12 nursing homes and seven clinics in the Philadelphia area.

Hahnemann apparently was targeted for the strike because it had refused to join in the negotiations.

"Our negotiating team does not want to be part of a group because it feels that the union is putting on pressure for coalition bargaining," said Ms. Fisher.

Spokeswomen for both hospitals said the facilities could continue performing all functions during the strike, including emergency room treatment, elective surgery and admissions.

Ms. Fisher said the 606-bed Hahnemann Hospital could operate with nursing, medical and supervisory personnel. About 1,000 union members are employed at Hahnemann as housekeepers, maids, porters, dietary department employees, nurse helpers, patient transporters and maintenance workers.

Public Notice

Southwestern Bell, in accordance with the rules of the Public Utility Commission of Texas, hereby gives notice of the company's intent to implement a new schedule of telephone rates in Texas, effective August 1, 1983, unless otherwise determined by the Commission.

A complete copy of the new rate schedule is on file with the Texas Public Utility Commission (PUC) at Austin, Texas, and with each affected municipality served by Southwestern Bell, and is available for inspection in each of the company's public business offices in Texas. The Commission staff has contended in the past that all rates are subject to change as a result of Southwestern Bell's rate application.

As a result of the settlement of a lawsuit brought by the U.S. Department of Justice against AT&T, Southwestern Bell, on January 1, 1984, (or as otherwise ordered by the United States District Court) will no longer be a part of the Bell System, but will be owned by public shareholders. Under the terms of the settlement, Southwestern Bell has identified 15 areas in the state within which it may provide service, and the federal court with jurisdiction of the settlement has tentatively approved these areas, called LATAs (Local Access and Transport Area). On or about January 1, 1984, Southwestern Bell can not provide service between these LATAs, and in addition, must transfer to AT&T customer premises equipment that it leases to customers.

Southwestern Bell has filed a proposed revised rate schedule with the PUC reflecting these changes. These rates would become effective August 1, 1983, if they are not suspended by the PUC; however, it is expected that they will be suspended and that the rates ultimately set by the PUC will become effective on or about January 1, 1984. If the rates were to become effective as filed, they would produce a 48.2% increase in Southwestern Bell's unadjusted test year revenues (or a 76.36% increase in Southwestern Bell's test year revenues adjusted to reflect the effect of Southwestern Bell's divestiture from AT&T). Any change in the rates for any interLATA services offered by AT&T or a subsidiary after January 1, 1984, could affect customers of Southwestern Bell Telephone Company.

Notice to Customers of Other Telephone Companies

While Southwestern Bell has proposed no increase in rates for intraLATA interexchange toll services, any change in those rates could also affect customers of other telephone companies. Southwestern Bell is proposing changes in the structure of the present private line and foreign exchange services. Changes in these rates may affect customers of other telephone companies. Any change in the rates for any interLATA services offered by AT&T or a subsidiary after January 1, 1984, could affect customers of other telephone companies.

Aviso Público

Southwestern Bell, en conformidad a las reglas del Public Utility Commission (Comisión de Servicios Públicos) de Texas, por la presente hace saber su intención de establecer un nuevo arancel de tarifas para servicio de teléfono en Texas, con vigencia a partir del 1o de agosto de 1983, a menos que la Comisión haga otra determinación.

Una copia completa del nuevo arancel de tarifas se ha archivado en las oficinas del Public Utility Commission (PUC, ó Comisión de Servicios Públicos) de Texas en Austin, Texas, al igual que en cada municipalidad afectada y que es servida por Southwestern Bell, y dicho arancel está disponeible para inspección pública en todas las oficinas de Southwestern Bell en Texas. En el pasado, la Comisión ha sostenido que toda tarifa está sujeta a cambios cada vez que Southwestern Bell solicite un cambio en dichas tarifas.

Como resultado del arreglo judicial al cual se llegó tras el proceso legal entablado en contra de AT&T por el U.S. Department of Justice (Departmento de Justicia), Southwestern Bell dejará de formar parte del Bell System (Sistema Bell) a partir del 1o de enero de 1984 (ó en la fecha que disponga el United States District Court — Tribunal Federal de Distrito), y llegará a ser poseción de accionistas públicos. Bajo las condiciones de dicho arreglo, Southwestern Bell ha identificado 15 regiones dentro del Estado de Texas en las cuales puede proporcionar servicio, y el tribunal federal con jurisdicción en el arreglo ha dado su aprobación provisoria a éstas regiones, que se denominan "LATA's" (Local Access and Transport Area, ó Regiones Locales de Acceso y Transporte). A partir de fecha 1o de enero de 1984 aproximadamente, Southwestern Bell no podrá proporcionar servicio entre dichas LATAs, y además deberá ceder a AT&T todo equipo ubicado en premisas de clientes y alquilado a los mismos.

Estos cambios se han incluido en el propuesto arancel de tarifas de servicio revisado que Southwestern Bell ha archivado con la PUC. Dichas tarifas tendrían vigencia a partir del 1o de agosto de 1983, a menos que fueran suspendidas por la PUC; sin embargo, se espera que sí seran suspendidas, y que las tarifas que en último caso establezca la PUC entrarán en vigor a partir de fecha 1o de enero de 1984 aproximadamente. Si las tarifas entráran en vigor tal y como se han archivadas, aumentarían en un 48.2% los ingresos no-ajustados de Southwestern Bell para año de prueba (unadjusted test year revenues), ó sea un aumento de 76.36% en los ingresos de Southwestern Bell para año de prueba, ajustados para reflejar el efecto del desposeimiento entre Southwestern Bell y AT&T. Cualquier cambio en las tarifas para cualquier servicio tipo-interLATA que proporcione AT&T ó una compañía subsidiaria despues del 1o de enero de 1984 podría afectar a los clientes de Southwestern Bell Telephone Company.

THE BETTER HALF

"Sssh! The network president is groveling for forgiveness!"

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Saturday, July 2, 1983

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: U.S. Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall, LBJ's daughter Luci Baines Johnson, actress Polly Holliday, comedian Dan Rowan, auto racing's Richard Petty and actor Jimmy McNichol celebrate birthdays today. Greater success may depend on your ability to keep your business and personal life separate. A period of change lies ahead. Good luck accompanies you on your travels. You could fall in love while visiting a distant land. Proposals, awards, and a raise are part of the picture in November or January. Better communication can put to rest parent-child problems. Guard your credit rating. Money arrives from sources you never thought of tapping before.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): An excellent day to move into a new home. Fantasy plays a large role in your romantic involvements. Share secret with loved one. A light-hearted conversation puts you in a happy mood.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Now is the time to take a summer vacation. Romantic partner needs your understanding. Allow more time in your busy schedule for small fry. A last-minute invitation is great fun.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Sell white elephants and put the money in a savings account. You need to consult travel agent about your vacation plans. Dress with style to impress attractive member of opposite sex.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Learn to play the waiting game in romance. The pieces of a puzzle begin to fall into place. Be prepared for some constructive criticism from mate or partner. Pay overdue bills.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): An "I-told-you-so" attitude wins no friends. Show the generous side of your nature. Your concern for others makes this an outstanding day. You give and receive loving advice.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Set a good example by reducing your spending. Cleanup tasks shared by family members make your home more attractive and comfortable. Romance flourishes in an atmosphere of trust.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Take your time when making decisions. You need to let others know where you stand on basic issues. Group activities, social engagements have fast results. The evening brings important news.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Differences of opinion over finances could precipitate a quarrel with loved one. Talk things over calmly. Romance gives your self-esteem a big boost. Work hard to change bad habits.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Go easy on yourself. Keep good records for tax purposes. New alliances are possible. Your generosity ignites someone's romantic interest. Subtle clues tell you bold truths about loved one's intentions!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): There is a strong need for logical and diplomatic procedures. Dress conservatively if attending formal affairs. Avoid making rash decisions in your personal life. Maintain the status quo in romance.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Things begin to come together in business and romance. You will enjoy a bit of travel. Tighten your purse strings. Young people learn from your example. Love takes on a deeper meaning.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Work progresses at a smoother pace. Sudden changes in romance are possible—especially if you give partner a helpful nudge!

Brown on PBS reprise

NEW YORK (AP) — If Bryan Brown were an American, we might not be reading so much about Richard Gere as this country's reigning sex symbol.

Brown, who married Rachel Ward on the screen in "The Thorn Birds" and then in real life, is an Australian who's beginning to find celebrity here. He's already a major male star Down Under. "I do alright," he says about his popularity at home. "I've always done alright."

Brown first gained attention in the United States two years ago when he starred in "Breaker Morant" and then in public television's "A Town Like Alice," winner of an International Emmy.

"A Town Like Alice," the best TV series in recent years, packed more of an emotional wallop than "The Thorn Birds," in which Brown was the other guy to Richard Chamberlain's Father Ralph. But if you're skeptical, check it out Sunday when the six-part serial starts its repeat run on public television's "Masterpiece Theatre."

"A Town Like Alice" is a tender, thoroughly involving story. Brown, the solid, stoic Joe Harmon, and Jean Paget, played by Helen Morse, are captured by the Japanese during World War II, and fall in love after a chance meeting. Brown treats Jean better than he did Meggie in "The Thorn Birds."

In "The Thorn Birds," Brown's Luke married the beautiful Meggie, but he left her for work in the cane fields and Saturday nights carousing with the boys.

Fiction and reality travel together only so far, and Brown and Miss Ward, who were married this spring, share homes in California and Australia. They are looking to work together, too, shopping around for joint movie projects.

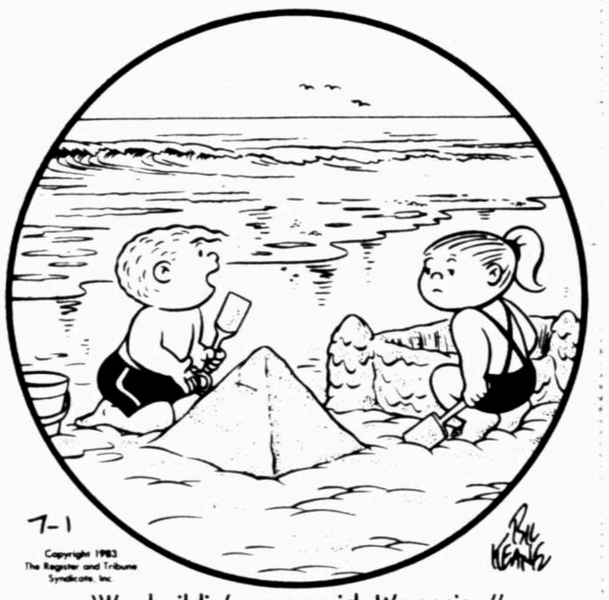

Brown is bucking a Hollywood system that, he says, has a built-in resistance to foreign productions for television and Australian actors for certain movie roles. "I'm trying to break down those barriers," he says.

Brown points out that Henry Crawford, producer of "A Town Like Alice," tried to sell that Australian production to the three U.S. commercial networks. "One of them gave him two minutes. He was in a rush because he was going on holiday," says Brown. "He told Henry that they didn't do anything outside the country.

North-South bid simply to a good grand slam. Note North's decision to raise hearts rather than rebid his six-card club suit. Once a good fit had been located, there was no point to wasting space with a club rebid.

West led the king of diamonds, taken by the ace. If trumps were 2-2 or if the jack were to drop, declarer would have no problems, so he started things off by cashing two high trumps. The break followed the probabilities and the knave did not appear.

Declarer now tried to set up spades with two ruffs. Unfortunately, East held only two spades and overruffed for down one.

There was another chance that declarer had overlooked. Once trumps don't break, it costs declarer nothing to go after the other black suit — clubs — before tackling spades. He should cash the ace-king of that suit and, when both defenders follow, continue with a third round of that suit. He can come to no harm — if East ruffs, declarer simply overruffs and he can then ruff two spades for his contract. And if clubs don't break, declarer can then fall back on trying to set up spades.

As the cards lie, the clubs split and declarer has no more worries. He draws the last trump, gets to dummy with a spade ruff and sluffs his remaining spades on dummy's good clubs.

Texas roadblock

While it's comforting to learn that Texas highway engineers don't fear a tragedy in the state akin to the one in Connecticut earlier this week that claimed at least three lives, a couple of recent notices are reason for concern.

One is a study conducted last year that determined nearly 40 percent of the 45,000 or so bridges in Texas are either too narrow or too weak to support modern traffic loads. That estimate may need to be tempered to a degree because of the fact it was funded in part by the construction industry.

More sobering is the fact that State Department of Highways and Public Transportation officials felt concerned enough about the bridge situation — and overall highway deterioration — last year to request adequate funding from the Legislature to prevent the system's continued decline.

The rest, of course, is history. The Legislature didn't see fit to earmark extraordinary funding for the highway system this biennium, appropriating only $1.9 billion each year. The highway department had asked for $2.7 billion each year.

Now, says Texas Good Roads President Eugene Robbins, the department is faced with the need to go back to the Legislature in yet another special session and hope to get additional funding. He says he feels confident Texas' highway needs will be placed on the agenda for the next special session because Gov. Mark White has listed state highways as his number two priority right behind a teacher pay increase.

All this becomes much more meaningful when you consider how often you personally use the highway system and realize you're only a part of a continually increasing traffic burden on an aging system. It's undoubtedly true, as highway engineers point out, that the roads in West Texas are younger than those in Connecticut and much of the rest of the nation, and they were constructed to withstand heavier loads. But for how long if we don't make the investment to properly repair and maintain them?

It's worth thinking about while Texas bridges are still standing.

Another View:

Dead budget cat

While Congress was belatedly giving final approval to its 1984 budget resolution last week, Senate Finance Committee Chairman Bob Dole complained that the Senate was leaving a "dead cat" at his committee's door. Most of the dirty work called for by the final resolution does fall within the jurisdiction of the Senate Finance and House Ways and Means committees, which are called upon, among other things, to raise taxes by $73 billion over the next three years. Last year Sen. Dole spearheaded even larger reforms, and he has plenty of good ideas about what should happen now. But his enthusiasm for a repeat performance is understandably restrained.

The big difference this year lies in the economic climate. Last year at this time it was apparent to all that instead of the forecast recovery, another recession was under way. This year, while the economy is still functioning well below capacity, the indicators are pointing upward, and the pressure to make hard choices is off. Congress is busily marking up appropriations that violate budget guidelines set for both this year and next and repealing the tax withholding reforms voted last year. Even conservative senators are writing legislation for multibillion-dollar health and housing programs, and House liberals are dusting off tardy recession relief plans.

The president will, no doubt, veto some of these spending plans, although he is apparently unwilling to take on such popular extravagances as occur in water projects. And sympathy for his resistance to out-of-line domestic spending has been eroded in both parties by the administration's stated determination to continue pressing for higher defense spending. Despite the big tax cut scheduled for July 1, the president has also vowed to veto any small increase in taxes voted for next year. Conservative Finance Committee members have advised Sen. Dole to ignore the tax targets set by the budget resolution for next year.

In this carnival atmosphere, why should the tax-writing committees take the chance of marking up a tax reform bill that will offend powerful people? Only because the budget situation is, in sober fact, even more perilous than it was last year. Numbers released by the Treasury Department last week show that in the first eight months of this fiscal year, the government has already run up a deficit of $162 billion. That's $50 billion more than the total deficit for 1982, itself record-setting. The country is already embarked on an experiment in deficit spending that strains the nerves of the most ardent Keynesians. Can more fiscal stimulus possibly be needed?

Revenue-raising can't bear the whole burden of putting the government on a prudent fiscal course. Congress has to get back to the serious business of restraining both defense and non-defense spending. But no one — including the administration — has a list of spending cuts that would bring the budget into balance. The only way to breathe new life into the dead budget cat is for the tax-writing committees to start work on a real tax reform bill.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Confiscated vehicles neglected

Jack Anderson

WASHINGTON — President Reagan made the multi-billion dollar dope traffic his No. 1 law-enforcement priority, so I've been keeping an eye on the results. Sad to report, the administration's great drug crackdown has been found wanting in many respects.

In fact, even when the drug prosecution succeeds, it manages to fail.

That's the ironic story of the millions of dollars' worth of airplanes, boats and automobiles seized from dope smugglers caught in the act. The vehicles are given such slipshod care in storage that by the time they are auctioned off they bring only a fraction of their original value.

This isn't peanuts we're talking about. From 1979 through 1982, seven law enforcement agencies seized more than 4,500 vehicles having a total appraised value of more than $82 million.

The cars ranged from barely drivable clunkers, good only for scrap, to brand new Mercedes and Rolls Royce limousines. The Customs Service recently nabbed an $800,000 yacht on her maiden voyage. And while most of the seized airplanes are small two-engine jobs, the recent confiscations included a Boeing 707 and a $3 million Lear jet.

Insiders gave my associates Donald Goldberg and Indy Badhwar some examples of the neglect that tarnishes this treasure trove while in official custody:

— A 40-foot fishing boat used for marijuana runs was appraised at $78,000 when customs seized it. After 15 months of neglect in a Houston marina, the boat was appraised at $52,000.

— Drug Enforcement Agency officials in Chicago stored confiscated cars in an underground garage with serious drainage problems. The cars were left standing in a foot of water and were badly rusted, stained and mildewed.

— A thief stole a confiscated airplane stored in an open field in Florida. But the plane hit a fence post on takeoff and had to be ditched in another field nearby. The thief got away; the plane was badly damaged.

— Automobiles seized by immigration officers from smugglers carrying illegal aliens into Southern California are regularly stripped of radios and tape decks, even though they're stored on a military base.

— U.S. marshals ordered customs agents to put back valuable equipment they had removed from a 112-foot yacht worth nearly $1 million. The expensive gear was replaced, but the marshals failed to post a guard; it was, all stolen before the boat could be sold.

The inescapable fact of the matter is that officials of the various agencies just don't care. Since the proceeds of sales go to the Treasury, not the agency that seized the vehicles, there is little incentive to take better care of them.

For example, the U.S. marshal's office in Houston placed an ad for a single day to sell a plane valued at $50,000. Four days later it went for $5,000.

In Hebbronville, Texas, immigration officials told investigators they couldn't even start their 192 cars periodically, complaining that it would take an agent an entire work week just to idle the engines for 10 minutes each — presumably running only one at a time. And officials in Laredo, Texas, said it would take two or three agents a week just to wash the 360 cars stored there — though why cheaper help couldn't have handled the job is not clear.

The results of all this are predictable: In fiscal 1981, cars fetched only 58 percent of their value when seized; boats went for 43 percent, and aircraft brought only 35 percent.

Footnote: Not all the fancy cars go to waste. DEA agents-in-charge at five field offices drove confiscated vehicles to and from work and on the job. One drove a $40,000 Mercedes, another used a Mercedes valued at $26,000.

TRASHING THE 1040: Taxpayers in Lafayette, Ore. (pop. 662), were irate: Their federal income tax forms were found in a trash dumpster by police looking for stolen property. The individual 1040 forms, on their way to Lafayette taxpayers, had been thrown away by the post office as "undeliverable" because they had no postal box numbers in the address.

The reason was simple: There is no space for a box number on the income tax form. The post office didn't try to match the street addresses with the patrons' box numbers, and because undeliverable third-class mail is not returned to the sender, the 1040s were simply thrown away.

The taxpayers of Lafayette complained to the House Appropriations Committee, which recommended that the Internal Revenue Service include space for box numbers on the form, and urged the Postal Service to "make special efforts to insure delivery of all tax forms."

A spokesman for IRS told my reporter Kathy McDonald that inclusion of box numbers would be confusing for individuals who have a P.O. box in one place and a residential address elsewhere. He said he had no idea how many tax forms are thrown away as undeliverable each year.

POLITICAL POTPOURRI: Rep. Morris Udall, D-Ariz., explained former presidential candidate John B. Anderson's decision to run again next year as a necessity born of federal campaign funding. INSIDE REPORT:

Soviet cheating presents dilemma

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

WASHINGTON — Just as President Reagan is trying to warm up relations with the Kremlin, he must decide what to do about the third Soviet test of a new long-range missile, secretly described by Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) and Air Force analysts as more than twice the size allowed by the SALT II treaty.

The CIA has sent its analysts back to restudy their data before sending it on to the White House, putting a "hold" on one of today's most important government secrets. But there is little doubt about validity. Administration officials were shocked by the clearest evidence so far of one-sided Soviet missile cheating. Thus, Reagan must decide whether to publicly accuse the Soviets of SALT II violations even though he may not consider the time ripe for confrontation.

That's because the president is trying to moderate his Cold War rhetoric and shed the Genghis Khan cloak, bestowed on him by Democrats, in time for the 1984 election. But Reagan's staunchest supporters in Congress, who have been dismayed by his past reluctance to confront Moscow on SALT II violations, will demand that he face up to the damning evidence once it reaches the Oval Office.

The Soviet missile, designated the PL5, underwent its third test May 30. This was the first test which the U.S. was able to scrutinize by special radar screens operated from an electronic ship, well-known to the Russians, stationed in the Bering Sea off the coast of Siberia.

Normally, radar readings are not nearly so informative as telemetry readings from the missile during its flight, but the PL5's telemetry was heavily encrypted. Radar scrutiny did reveal this central fact: The throw weight (payload) of the PL5 appears slightly more than 200 percent of the throw weight of the old SS-13.

The significance of that ratio derives from the fact that SALT II, which Moscow and Washington have agreed to obey even though it never was ratified, permits only one "new type" missile each for the two superpowers. The Kremlin has conducted four tests on what the U.S. regards as the one permissible "new type" Soviet missile, designated the SSX24. Thus, the PL5 cannot be a legal "new type" missile.

But SALT says the throw weight of a modernized or "follow-on" missile cannot exceed the original by more than 5 percent. Yet, the Soviets have informed the U.S. that the PL5 is a "follow-on" of the SS-13, not a "new type" missile. Clearly, then, if Air Force and CIA analysts are even close to being right in estimating a 200 percent in throw weight, the PL5 is a "new type" missile, not a modernized SS-13. Summed up, the radar ship caught the Kremlin cheating red-handed.

When the CIA and Air Force intelligence first received radar data from the May 30 test, they sent it routinely to the Foreign Technology Division of Air Force Intelligence and to the government's Lincoln labs in Cambridge, Mass. Examination of the data in both laboratories produced substantial agreement on throw weight. These findings were returned to the CIA and the Air Force.

Air Force intelligence officers argued for immediately sending the alarming report on the PL5 to the White House, State Department, Arms Control and Disarmament Agency (ACDA) and Department of Energy. But CIA officials worried about implications of so wide a dissemination. Despite months of White House hints about going to the mat with the Russians on alleged SALT violations, Reagan always has decided that evidence of cheating has fallen short and pulled back at the last moment from charging a violation.

The CIA finally decided it did not want the heavy responsibility of sending the president what looked to be irrefutable evidence of cheating, boxing him in a corner. Once he received the evidence, Reagan would have no exit from a major confrontation with Yuri Andropov at a time he might not want it.

Accordingly, the CIA ordered the data sent back to the labs for more study. It also ordered major efforts to break the encryption code of the missile's telemetry — in itself a probable violation of SALT II — to learn the PL5's secrets from its own reports back to Soviet earth stations.

But that can only delay the decision for Ronald Reagan. Both his political advisers and the State Department, taking different routes, have arrived at the same destination: agreement that now is the time for some U.S.-Soviet reconciliation, specifically a new arms control agreement. Just at this point, ironically, the president soon will have on his desk evidence of Soviet cheating so blatant that it could produce an outcry menacing even U.S. adherence to SALT II.

Flawed U.S. policy stirs Israeli woe

The plight of Israel in Lebanon reminds me of an old Jewish story. A Jew, standing on the street, saluted the emperor as he rode by. Immediately, the emperor stopped the procession and had the Jew killed on the spot for being so insolent as to salute the emperor. The procession started up again.

Charley Reese

Another Jew, who had observed the fate of the first, carefully refrained from saluting as the emperor passed by. The emperor stopped and had the Jew killed for failing to salute.

As you will recall, the U.S. Government raised heck when Israel went into Lebanon. Then, it raised heck when Israel went beyond a 25-kilometer line and flushed the PLO out of Beirut. Then, for months on end, the U.S. put pressure on Israel to withdraw without so much as a nod toward the Syrians.

Now the Israelis want to withdraw to a more easily defensible line nearer than on border, and guess who's putting pressure on Israel behind the scenes not to do that. You win the prize. It's the U.S.

The reason is simple — about as simple as President Reagan's flawed Middle East policy. As you know, after moralizing against the Israelis, Reagan shipped off the U.S. Marines to help those wonderful Lebanese people regain their sovereignty.

Well, as I pointed out at the time, most of the wonderful Lebanese people are either dead or in exile and what's left are several armed factions who are as kind as cobras and as cooperative as the opposite ends of a magnet. When the Israelis pull out of Central Lebanon, the duty of policing these factions will fall on the U.S. since the Lebanese government still controls not much more than the presidential palace. With over 30,000 Syrians and 10,000 PLO fighters occupying the country and showing no inclination to budge, the Lebanese government will be a long time becoming a government, if it ever does.

The Reagan Administration does appear to finally recognize that expecting the Arab goverments to pursue peace is like expecting the sun to rise in the west. There is no market for peace among the Arab governments at the moment. There may not be for a generation or two, if ever.

If Reagan had anybody on his staff who knew the first thing about the Middle East, he would have known that Syria is not likely to recognize the Lebanese-Israeli agreement and withdraw its troops. Syria has always considered Lebanon as a part of Syria, resented its independence, and for that reason has never established diplomatic relations with any Lebanese government.

(I love Arab rhetoric. It is the most creative and brazen political hogwash in the world. At first, Syria said they would not recognize the agreement because the Lebanese parliament had not approved it and the President did not legitimately represent the Lebanese people. So the parliament approved the agreement with only two dissenting votes. Not to worry. The Syrians say now that the Lebanese parliament does not represent the Lebanese people and for that reason, they will not approve the agreement).

In the meantime, the Israeli Defense Force has lost 100 men in the last year. Despite American pressure to stay put, Israel probably will pull back soon and consolidate its lines so that her men will be less exposed to ambush and snipers. What that means is, for all practical purposes, the permament dismemberment of Lebanon with Israel in the south, the Syrians and PLO in the east and north, and several warring Lebanese factions and the U.S. Marines in the middle.

It is not a happy situation for anybody but that was foreordained the day the U.S., heeding the Arab lobby, decided to hinder rather than help Israel clean up Lebanon.

Deng's 'Big Yellow Book' for sale to Peking crowd

By VICTORIA GRAHAM
Associated Press Writer

PEKING — Thousands of Chinese thronged bookstores today as the first quotations of Chairman Deng Xiaoping — China's new "Big Yellow Book" — went on sale, supplanting the late Mao Tse-tung's "Little Red Book" as the bible for modern China.

The first day of sale today coincided with the 62nd anniversary of the Chinese Communist Party.

"The Selected Works of Deng Xiaoping" is the first book published by Deng, who has become one of Mao's harshest critics.

The main bookstore on Wangfujing street in Peking was draped with red banners emblazoned with gold characters. Television crews filmed the crowd. Old peasants pushed their way to the counter and began reading avidly.

"Deng is not bad, he really is not bad at all," said a student flipping through the chairman's statements in praise of learning. "Let's see what he has to say, though."

"I am proud of all our leaders, but Deng is especially impressive," said an office worker in his 20s. "Deng knows how to get things done. He is full of energy at 79. He doesn't stop. He can move people."

A middle-aged intellectual said, "He has made life much better for the Chinese people. ...We are a strong country now because of him."

Deng's 393-page book contains 47 speeches and commentaries — some 265,000 words — made between 1975 and 1982, many never before published.

"This is a brilliant book marking a period of great historic change," writes the literature director in the party journal "Red Flag."

Readers can buy the book, which has a yellow cover with black lettering and a picture of a younger Deng inside, for 50 cents, or pay 73 cents for a sturdier edition. For $1.95, they get the deluxe hard-cover edition with a gilt-edged yellow cover and a golden book mark. It is about 8-by-6 inches.

Mao's "Little Red Book" was shirt-pocket-sized, with quotations for every occasion. During the 1966-76 Cultural Revolution, Red Guards would accost pedestrians and order them to complete a quotation before letting them cross the street.

Deng chairs both party and state military commissions and the Central Committee's advisory commission of elders. Although not titular head of the Communist Party, he is China's undisputed leader.

Foreign diplomatic analysts said the book aims to saturate the nation of 1 billion with his reformist views, including calls for modernization and more democracy.

The publication of his speeches signals that Deng is in control and that the leadership considers his views to be the intellectual framework for progress.

"Deng has a coherent, persuasive program to imbue his country with a new thought process," said one analyst, "and he pushes the Maoist rhetoric of the past back even further."

In the book, Deng criticizes Mao's personality cult. One of Deng's main criticism of Mao had been that he never listened to others' ideas.

In his book, Deng calls for upgrading the army, denounces the pampered life of some high Communist officials, praises intellectuals and says education — not divisive politics — is necessary for China's modernization.

Shultz urges united front

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz says India and its neighbors should band together to counter the presence of Soviet troops in Afghanistan.

Shultz, speaking at a banquet hosted Thursday night by Indian External Affairs Minister P.V. Narasimha Rao, welcomed recent cooperation among nations of the south Asian subcontinent.

Such cooperation "will discourage those who would upset the equilibrium of the region, the most recent and tragic example being the continued presence of over 100,000 Soviet troops in Afghanistan," Shultz said, winding up the first full day of his visit to the Indian capital.

Shultz's call for stability appeared to be part of an effort to rebut charges that the United States covertly supports various Indian separatist movements to try to destabilize India.

Accident victims identified

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — The U.S. Embassy today identified the embassy security officer and an Indian photographer who were killed in a traffic acccident involving staff assisting U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz.

The dead American was identified as Charles F. Soper, who worked for the U.S. Embassy in New Delhi as security engineering officer since 1980. Soper's hometown was not immediately available.

The Indian, identified as R.N. Khanna, was a photographer and retired U.S. Information Service employee who, under contract, took pictures of Shultz' visit to the Taj Mahal at Agra, 125 miles south of here.

Soper and Khanna were on their way back in an embassy van Thursday to New Delhi and were about 30 miles out of Agra when their vehicle crashed head-on with a truck.

Poland's currency devalued

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — The national bank devalued the Polish zloty today by about 12 percent against the dollar in an effort to boost exports to the West, the official PAP news agency said.

PAP said the official rate had been changed from about 80 zloties to the dollar to 95 zloties to the dollar effective today.

The devaluation comes six months after the rate jumped from 33 zloties per dollar to 80.

A top bank official was quoted as saying the move would "improve" the profitability of Polish exports to hard currency markets, which have fallen sharply during the first half of this year.

Wife's passport returned

BULAWAYO, Zimbabwe (AP) — Johanna Nkomo, wife of self-exiled opposition leader Joshua Nkomo, said today that police have returned a passport seized from her in March.

"The police told me I am now a free woman with all restrictions on my movements lifted forthwith," Mrs. Nkomo said in an interview with the Bulawayo Chronicle newspaper.

Police also returned the passport of her daughter, Thandiwe, and son-in-law John Ndhlovu, she said, although Ndhlovu, a journalist, is in detention.

Troops start training sessions

PUERTO CASTILLA, Honduras (AP) — U.S. Green Berets have started training the first of thousands of Salvadoran soldiers expected to pass through a military base set up by the United States in a jungle on Honduras' Caribbean coast.

Sixty Salvadorans soldiers began training in anti-guerrilla tactics Thursday with a rough physical exercise session early in the morning and basic courses with lectures and instruction during the day.

The training is part of a new strategy to strenghten the Salvadoran army in its 3½-year-old war against leftist guerrillas trying to topple the U.S.-backed government.

Cargo will return to earth

MOSCOW (AP) — A 20-ton satellite hooked to the orbiting Soviet Salyut 7 space station will detach part of itself and ferry some of its experiments and other cargo back to Earth, the Soviet news agency Tass said today.

The two cosmonauts aboard Salyut would transfer part of the satellite's three tons of cargo to their space station today, Pravda, the official Communist Party newspaper said.

Tass did not say when the satellite, named Cosmos 1443, would send part of its load shuttling to Earth.

Cosmos 1443 docked with the Salyut on March 10, doubling the size of the complex to 40 tons. On Tuesday, the Soyuz T-9 brought Vladimir Lyakov, 41, and Alexander Alexandrov, up to the station so the pair could climb inside Salyut.

U.S. involvement questioned

NEW YORK (AP) — A New York Times-CBS News poll indicates most Americans don't know which side the U.S. government is on in either El Salvador or Nicaragua but, informed or not, most oppose sending troops to Central America.

According to the poll, only 8 percent of the 1,365 voting-age Americans queried last week knew where the Reagan administration stands in both countries, the Times reported in Friday's editions.

Only 25 percent knew that the U.S. government supports the government in El Salvador in its battle with leftist guerrillas.

Only 13 percent were aware that the U.S. opposes the current Marxist government in Nicaragua and is supporting the insurgents in that country.

South African blacks face difficult odds

By TOM BALDWIN
Associated Press Writer

SOWETO, South Africa — Bank teller Nathaniel Mkobe earns more money than ever in a job he couldn't have held a few years ago in South Africa.

The 27-year-old resident of Johannesburg's black ghetto of Soweto says he has hopes of becoming part of a black middle class, but he doesn't know if the white-minority government's apartheid policy will allow it.

Apartheid keeps the races separated in South Africa.

Under apartheid, Mkobe's movements in the country are restricted by law. The government at any time can withdraw his privilege to work in a white area.

The government's policy of creating tribal homelands means Mkobe is on his way to losing his South African citizenship. Legally, blacks are temporary aliens.

His are the same difficulties facing most all the 21 million South African blacks who outnuumber whites, 4-1.

After bloody race riots in the 1970s, including one in 1976 in Soweto in which Mkobe was arresting for stone-throwing, blacks today are in some cases enjoying limited economic prosperity while standing farther than ever from winning political rights such as the rights to vote, own land and move about freely.

Blacks also are deprived of national leadership.

Virtually all their revolution-minded leaders have been banned, jailed or chased into exile. Even moderate black activists wonder if there is room left for public protest.

"Why expose ourselves? We know we'll be arrested," said a black-conscious sympathizer who asked not to be identified, because he did not want to jeopardize his new job as a junior executive.

The largest black-nationalist group is the African National Congress, a 71-year-old, onetime non-violent organization that has gradually turned to violence.

In its bloodiest strike at white dominance, the ANC on May 20 detonated a car bomb on a crowded Pretoria street outside the headquarters of the South African air force, killing 19 people and wounding more than 200. Some of the victims were blacks.

Anglican Bishop Desmond Tutu and Zulu leader Gatsha Buthelezi, two of South Africa's best-known blacks opposed to apartheid, condemned the bombing.

And ANC leaders exile in the Zambian capital, Lusaka, acknowledged in interviews with The Associated Press there that violence alone won't overthrow white dominance.

The unanswered question in South Africa is how many blacks sympathized with the car-bomb attack.

Very few, according to the Johannesburg security police commander, Col. Loue Malan, who said in an interview that the deaths of blacks in the bombing stunned the black community — a view the ANC disputes.

In a nation where white leaders simply rewrite laws to plug any of apartheid's loopholes, blacks have turned away from challenging the overall system.

They are concentrating instead on forming labor unions, legalized in 1979, and organizing community-action groups to deal with rents, utility rates and the quality of school teachers and what they see as unequal education between white and black.

Martina has it all

By WILL GRIMSLEY

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — When Martina Navratilova steps on a tennis court and starts hitting balls, you wonder how she could ever lose a match.

Based on physical assets and innate ability, she is probably the greatest woman player who ever lived. Conceivably, she could etch it all in stone.

Oldtimers sit around the tables at posh tennis establishments — such as the sedate All-England Croquet and Tennis Club here — and discuss such an interesting prospect.

France's Suzanne Lenglen was a tapestry of fluidity and grace. Helen Wills won eight Wimbledons with cold shotmaking precision. Maureen "Little Mo" Connolly could thread a sideline with her shots. Margaret Smith Court won all over the world, was big, strong but awkward.

Billie Jean King has been a competitive marvel. If you had one point to play and your life depended on it you'd want Billie Jean to play it. Then there's Chris Evert Lloyd, an ice princess who played the big tournaments as no one ever played them before — this year for the first time failing to make a semi-final in one of the Grand Slam events.

Yet when you imagine any of these pitted against Martina Navratilova at her best you can not think of any of them coming out ahead.

"I am not unbeatable," Martina says, "But at my best, I hope I am the best."

Martina Navratilova

At 5-7½ and 145 pounds, she is a physical marvel — strong legs and body, a powerful left-handed serve, quickness of a jungle cat on the court and reflexes as finely tuned as a violin.

She has everything — physique, natural instinct, competitive drive. One bolt is missing. Maybe one cannot see it. It's an intangible you might call cold steel under pressure.

When she is pressed too hard and begins imagining the consequences too much, she is a target for defeat.

"I welcome the chance to get Martina at 5-5 in the final set," Lloyd once commented. Once, a few years ago, at Amelia Island, Chris beat Martina 6-0, 6-0. It should be impossible.

But there are occasions when Martina is inclined to crack. When she does, she loses all conception of the match, and her game turns into shreds before her very eyes.

Panic sets in. All those wonderful skills she possesses seem to fly off in utter disarray.

To her credit, it must be said that she has worked hard to repair this one chink in her armor and these occasions are becoming rarer and rarer.

Such it has been a Wimbledon this week where she has now advanced to Saturday's ladies' final against 18-year-old Andrea Jaeger.

She has played remarkably, not losing a set and dropping very few games. She's been devastating.

Martina makes the game look so easy. She swings that big left-handed, high- kicking service, follows it to the net and — snap, crackle, pop — a winning volley.

When in form, she seems absolutely invincible. The London tabloids have dubbed her "The American Express."

Martina actually is a new American, having two years ago received her citizenship after defecting from Czechoslovakia.

Nobody ever became a quicker or more loyal Yank. Her accent is fast disappearing. She wears jeans, buys her purses at Gucci's, listens for hours to the records of popular rock stars and has become a pro football fanatic.

She has straightened out her personal life, surrounding herself with friends such as former pro basketballer Nancy Lieberman, coach Mike Estep and specialists who supervise her diet and training routines.

"I have never been happier or more comfortable," she says.

If Jaeger is to have a chance, she must strike early, put Martina in such a bind that the defending champion starts worrying about a possible loss and then apply the screws.

London bookies figure it can't happen.

Andrea is a delightful teen-ager, unawed by Wimbledon tradition and the aura of invincibility built around such players as Martina and Lloyd.

She's a unaffected tomboy who plays soccer, declines to practice or worry about tennis when she's not on court and goes down to a gas station every day before play to watch clips of old movies.

Lendl bows to McEnroe

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) - Rocketing 16 aces, John McEnroe swept past Czechoslovakia's Ivan Lendl 7-6, 6-4, 6-4 today to reach the final of the Wimbledon Tennis Championships for the fourth consecutive year.

Seeded second at the All-England Lawn Tennis and Croquet Club this year, McEnroe will face on Sunday the winner of today's second semifinal between 12th-seeded Kevin Curren of South Africa and unseeded Chris Lewis of New Zealand.

The victory was McEnroe's third straight over Lendl, the tournament's No. 3 seed. Before that, Lendl had defeated the New York left-hander in seven consecutive matches, the last time in the final of the Volvo Masters in New York in January.

But McEnroe finally solved the right-hander's game in the final of the U.S. Pro Indoors at Philadelphia in late January, then defeated Lendl in a fifth-set tiebreaker in the championship match of the WCT Finals in Dallas on May 1.

McEnroe won this tournament in 1981 and was runner-up to Sweden's Bjorn Borg in 1980 and to Jimmy Connors last year.

McEnroe and Lendl fought evenly through the first set as Lendl's booming serve set up easy volleys for him. But McEnroe's serve, depending more on placement and spin rather than brute strength, was more effective.

In the third game of the opening set, Lendl made his first run at McEnroe, taking the left-hander to deuce. But McEnroe's third ace of the game gave him the advantage, and he closed it out when Lendl mishit a forehand.

Lendl reached break point on McEnroe's service in the sixth game at 30-40 when McEnroe double-faulted. But the American ripped off the next three points to again hold serve.

It was in that game — the sixth — that the most important point of the match was made.

Following his loss to McEnroe at Dallas, Lendl angrily said if McEnroe questioned line calls in their next meeting, he would retaliate by hitting the American with tennis balls during their rallies.

In the sixth game of the first set, McEnroe, crowding the net as usual, slammed a vicious forehand volley right at Lendl. The Czechoslovakian ducked as the ball hit just inside the baseline.

For the rest of the match, whenever McEnroe had an easy ball to hit for a passing shot, Lendl stood riveted in one spot and McEnroe had his choice of going to either side of his opponent.

Twice more in the first set, in the ninth and 11th games, Lendl had break points. But each time McEnroe managed to hold.

1910 — Comiskey Park — then named White Sox Park — played host to its first big league game, an wich the St. Louis Browns beat the Chicago White Sox 2-0. The ballpark is the oldest one still in use in the majors.

1919 — Rabbit Maranville became the first player in major league history to his two inside-the-park ome runs if the saee game.

1920 — Walter Jonsof pitced the majors' only no-hitter that year as the Washington Senators beat the Boston Red Sox 1-0 at Fenway Park. Bucky Harris, whose error deprived Johnson gf a perfect game, also drove an the game's only run.

Steve Howe's $54,000 fine brings strong reaction. 2B.

Thursday's Stars...

BATTING — Sixto Lezcano, Padres, drove in five runs with a sacrifice fly, a single and a three-run homer to help San Diego beat the Los Angeles Dodgers 7-6.

PITCHING — Bob McClure, Brewers, allowed only six hits in seven innings to help Milwaukee beat the Detroit Tigers 4-1.

Lombarski, Kyles star in victory

SAN ANTONIO—Tom Lombarski continued on his hitting binge, going 3-for-4, to lead the Midland Cubs to a 9-0 victory over the San Antonio Dodgers in a rain-shortened Texas League game here Thursday night.

The win kept Midland tied for first place with El Paso in the West Division race and gave the Cubs a 3-2 edge in the current series over the Dodgers. The teams conclude play tonight. Midland returns home Saturday for the first showdown series of the second half race against El Paso.

The Cubs and El Paso are each 7-4, but perhaps the best thing about the Cubs' record is the fact that they haven't played a second-half game at home yet.

Lombarski, who now has six hits in his last seven trips, drove in four runs, tripling for two runs in the third. It was the Livingston, N.J., veteran's second triple in two nights.

The win went to Stan Kyles, 5-7, who limited the Dodgers to three hits before the rain hit. It was Kyles' second straight win. The last time out he pitched a six-hitter in going the route for a 6-2 win over first-half winner Beaumont.

Dave Anderson, 5-6, was tagged with the loss for San Antonio.

SWTSU sets sights on Division I status

SAN MARCOS (AP) — Southwest Texas State University is preparing to compete in NCAA Division I in all sports but football, according to Athletic Director Bill Miller.

The National Collegiate Athletic Association approved the Bobcats' move into Division I-AA for football and to Division I for all other sports during a June 23 meeting, Miller said Thursday.

The Bobcats will remain in the Lone Star Conference and continue to compete in Division II for the coming school year, said Miller.

Smith puts it together

POINTE CLAIRE, Quebec (AP) — M.J. Smith had a feeling her golf game was coming together, but even she had no advance warning that such improvement could lead to a career-best 65 for the first-round lead in the Peter Jackson Classic.

Smith eagled one hole and birdied seven others to go seven under par and take a two-shot lead Thursday in the Ladies Professional Golf Association event over the par-72, 6,033-yard Beaconsfield Golf Club.

"I told a friend last week I was really close to playing well," said Smith. "I'd been hitting the ball well, but I was making some stupid mistakes.

"I thought I might shoot a 68 today, but I'm surprised I shot a 65."

Former winners Pat Bradley and Donna Caponi head a group of five golfers five under par at 67. The others are Sharon Barrett, Marlene Floyd and Sue Ertl.

Jan Stephenson, another former winner, and Hollis Stacy are among five golfers three shots back at 68.

Smith, known as simply Marilyn in her native New Zealand, was told that wouldn't do on the LPGA tour since her namesake is a founder and charter member of the LPGA. So she became M.J. — the J for Janet.

JIM MURRAY

In good old days, it was described as 'color'

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Baseball, as a business, continues to slay me.

Consider what it has traditionally been conditioned to call "color." To baseball, color historically has meant a whiskey-swilling, people-hating performer about whom poems are written, songs are sung. Color is getting sloshed in a bar and half-killing a bar patron during a drunken argument. Color is the erratic behavior of a sick individual who may or may not be in the throes of addiction. Color is smashing up a locker-room urinal with a baseball bat.

The episodes that evoke some of baseball's fondest recollections were tinged by a haze of alcohol. Grover Cleveland Alexander staggering out of the bullpen in the 1926 World Series, stumbling through a red-eye warmup with the world's most monumental hangover and then proceeding to strike out Tony Lazzeri with the bases loaded. The story is never told without a chuckle on the lips and a tear in the heart. Good old Alex!

Who hasn't heard the anecdotes about Paul Waner coming up to bat and seeing two balls and trying to pick out the one that was real and smashing it down the left-field line? He was a card, that Waner! Think what he would have done sober!

TY COBB'S temper was legendary. He led the league in hate, too. That it was fueled in late life by alcohol argues that it may have been so early on. Still, it was part of the mystique of the game.

Who was the most beloved character who ever played the game — any game? Babe Ruth, that's who. A real-life cartoon character with that big belly, that booming laugh, those booming homers. Where do you think that big belly came from? Hot dogs and soda pop? That's what they told the kids in those boys' comic books. I mean, why trifle with the dreams of dirty-faced little boys? That belly came from bootleg booze and bathtub beer. You didn't read that till he was dead.

Mickey Mantle admits he might have set even greater records if he had taken care of himself. Mickey has never had any trouble with honesty. Baseball has.

The record shows that baseball never fined, suspended, barred or otherwise disciplined any of these worthies for what must have been by any yardstick an addiction. If anything, it glorified it.

The record shows that none of these heroes ever turned himself in publicly, admitted he had a problee, took treatment and fought to rehabilitate himself. Their behavior never modified appreciably.

BUT NOW it's 1983 and baseball still has its icons of Ruth, Waner, Cobb, Grover Alexander, Hack Wilson, and they name leagues and streets after them and tell stories about them far into the night.

And, along comes this kid with a million-dollar fastball and the unwavering control that only the great ones have, he has an earned-run average in the point-zero range, he was Rookie of the Year, he got the outs that won the World Series and pennant for the Dodgers in 1981 and, with him in the bullpen, when you went into the 9th inning with a lead, you could put it in the bank.

'Players' charge politics in fine

By HAL BOCK

NEW YORK (AP) — Angered by what is believed to be a record fine imposed on pitcher Steve Howe, the Major League Baseball Players Association has charged that the action taken by the Los Angeles Dodgers and Commissioner Bowie Kuhn may have been politically motivated.

"I'm shocked and saddened," said Kenneth Moffett, executive director of the union, after Howe was fined $54,000 and placed on three years probation by the Los Angeles Dodgers following his return from a drug rehabilitation program.

The fine, representing one month's pay for the pitcher, was announced by the Dodgers and reached, they said, "in coordination and consultation with the commissioner's office."

Moffett said he had met and talked several times with Kuhn about the Howe case.

"He assured me that there would not be disciplinary action taken in this case," he said. "Subsequent events have shown that the commissioner misled me concerning his plans, and that a decision had already been made to sacrifice Steve as an example to other players.

"I now believe he and the Dodgers management were motivated by personal and political considerations other than what is best for the game of baseball and the men who play it."

Kuhn's term in office expires Aug. 12 and the Dodgers have been one of the commissioner's staunchest allies in his battle to keep his job.

A number of major leaguers have been through rehabilitation programs in the last two years without any punishment imposed by the commissioner or their clubs. Apparently, the fact that Howe was forced to return for further treatment was part of the reason he was disciplined.

Kuhn issued a statement, saying, "This decision is entirely consistent with baseball's policy granting amnesty to players who on the first occasion voluntarily seek drug abuse treatment. Baseball's policy does not, however, guarantee amnesty for renewed drug usage or for failure to follow a rehabilitation program. Moreover, the facts developed in our investigation demonstrate that Howe sought treatment only after a series of absenses alerted the Dodgers to Howe's current problem, which the Dodgers relayed to Howe's agents.

"Baseball's policy granting amnesty to any player who voluntarily seeks drug abuse treatment will continue to be followed. However, in other types of cases, including trafficking, renewed involvement with drugs after undertaking rehabilitation treatment, failure of a player to follow a drug rehabilitation program or detection by a club of drug abuse by a player might well result in the imposition of discipline by a club, the commissioner's office or both."

"Our position from the outset was that unless the commissioner takes the same stance with all the players, they will not have anyone coming forward," he said. "All players in the past have had amnesty and were paid. They've gone 180 degrees in attitude."

Jim Murray

So now it's a new age and the drug of choice is not bathtub gin but powdered poison. Like the other, it's illegal but available, socially acceptable to some, profitabde and habit forming. And expensive. Just the ticket for a 25-year-old kid with the world at his feet.

Except Steve Howe didn't embrace his habit. He writhed in it and fought to get free. He knew it wasn't funny. He committed himself twice at great public embarrassment and humiliation.

And now baseball wants to punish him. Or is weighing the advisability.

For what? For coming forward and trying to cure himself, rid himself of this curse? Would baseball be better pleased if he continued to be a closet hophead, if he came to the ballpark in questionable condition to play? Would they then tell affectionate stories about him, would his exploits while under the influence go into the lore of baseball, the romance of the game?

STEVE HOWE is the victim in this crime. The fact that he's also the perpetrator is beside the point. There is, of course, no such thing as a "victimless" crime. That's like a "motiveless" murder. It doesn't exist.

Steve Howe broke the law. But so did Babe Ruth. Grover Alexander. Steve Howe is coming to the aid of the victim in this crime. Himself. The addict could have said to hell with the man, the game, the team, the family, the world. Most of them do. Some of the storied heroes of the grand old game, in a sense, did. Steve Howe didn't.

Punishment is not an outmoded theory. There are offenses it is needed for. It is hard to see why baseball is calling on its outraged morality at this late date for a man who is essentially fighting crime and struggling to remove one more addict from our streets.

'New' Texas back in first

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — The Chicago Cubs boast of a New Tradition. But the California Angels and Texas Rangers have a new tradition of their own as heated rivals for the American League West pennant.

In 1982, the Angels were champs and the Rangers posted the worst record in the league. But this year both teams are playing for the same stakes and their meetings have poisoned the blood between them.

Thursday night Texas won 4-2 on George Wright's two-run single in the 10th inning, thereby regaining a one-game division lead.

But again there was physical mayhem, and again it involved Ranger second baseman Wayne Tolleson, who last week in Texas brawled with Bobby Grich, his Angel counterpart.

This time, Tolleson came out a poor second best to catcher Mike O'Berry's chest protector.

Attempting to score from first base on Buddy Bell's two-out single in the fifth, Tolleson upset O'Berry with a head-first dive but injured his neck in the process.

Tolleson left the field on a stretcher, but by game's end was back in the Ranger clubhouse after X-rays taken at a nearby hospital proved negative.

Run-scoring singles by Parrish and Bucky Dent off starter Mike Witt gave Texas a 2-0 lead after two innings, but the Angels drew even on Brian Downing's solo homer in the sixth off Frank Tanana and pinch-hitter Daryl Sconiers' RBI single in the eight off reliever Dave Schmidt, 2-0.

Bell began the winning rally by being hit on the arm by a pitch from Luis Sanchez, 8-3. Parrish's single brought on Hassler. Pete O'Brien singled into right but Bell was thrown out at home by Ellis Valentine before Wright followed with his game-winner.

Will Tim never learn?

Yankees 4, Orioles 3

The last time Tim Stoddard he faced Butch Wynegar in a crucial situation, he tried to blow a fastball by him and the New York Yankee catcher slugged a two-run single in the 11th inning for a 4-3 victory over the Baltimore Orioles on Monday night.

Thursday the Oriole relief pitcher faced Wynegar with the score tied 3-3 in the 12th inning, and guess what Stoddard served up?

"There's no doubt Stoddard's a fastball pitcher," Wynegar said after his home run led the Yankees to another 4-3 victory over the Orioles.

Royals 7, A's 4

U. L. Washington knocked in four runs with a double and a bases-loaded triple and Willie Wilson had three hits and scored three runs as Kansas City beat Oakland.

Rickey Henderson's double and Bill Almon's two-run single off Keith Creel helped the A's build a 4-0 first-inning lead. Washington got three hits, starting the Royals' comeback in the third with a run-scoring double after Wilson singled.

Washington put the Royals ahead to stay at 5-4 with his triple in the seventh off A's reliever Tom Burgmeier, 4-4.

Brewers 4, Tigers 1

Paul Molitor hit a two-run single and Bob McClure and Tom Tellmann scattered seven hits, leading Milwaukee over Detroit. McClure, 4-7, gave up six hits, then Tellmann pitched the final two innings to record his sixth save. It was McClure's second start since he missed two weeks because of a sore shoulder he says is still tender.

Blue Jays 11, Twins 3

Willie Upshaw led a 13-hit attack with three hits, including a three-run homer, as Toronto trounced Minnesota.

Upshaw capped a five-run fourth with his 15th homer to give Luis Leal a 9-1 cushion. Leal, 8-6, allowed just one run and four hits over the first six innings before Gary Gaetti slammed a two-run homer in the seventh. Randy Moffitt pitched the final two innings for Toronto.

Robby seeks new recipe for Giants

By Associated Press

Frank Robinson thinks — or hopes — he has the recipe to get the San Francisco Giants cooking again: shake well.

"I don't know if they need to be shook up to go out there to catch and throw and pitch and hit the baseball," the Giants' manager fumed Thursday after his players responded to Wednesday night's 30-minute chewing out by committing four errgrs and a varietq gf other eistakes afd gettifg cdobbered 15-5 by Cincinnati, their third consecutive loss to the Reds.

"Between now and tomorrow night," Robinson promised, "we will get some people out there who know how to play the game — and will play it."

Cincinnati, which pounded out 16 hits, blew the game open with eight runs in the first inning — three on Gary Redus' homer — and added six runs in the fourth.

Phillies 3, Expos 1

Rookie Kevin Gross pitched and batted the Phillies past Montreal, posting his second victory in his second start and drilling a tie-breaking single for the run that beat the Expos.

Gross said it was his first hit since high school. In two minor-league seasons he played under the designated-hitter rule.

In the fifth inning, Kiko Garcia's single and Ivan DeJesus' triple tied it 1-1 and Gross singled. Joe Lefebvre homered in the sixth.

The Phillies brought up Gross because of his arm, not his bat, and so far it has produced. "He has four pitches and he's getting them all over and you're seeing the result," Philadelphia Manager Pat Corrales said. "He's shown a lot of poise."

Cubs 4, Pirates 3

Jody Davis entered June with 18 runs batted in. He leaves it with 43.

"It's been a great month," he said after driving in three runs against the Pirates, including the game-winner with a ninth-inning single off the Pirates' Kent Tekulve. "I've never experienced anything like this in the big leagues. I only had 52 ribbies all last season."

After Ron Cey and Keith Moreland walked, Davis singled to center, and the throw home appeared to have Cey beaten, but the ball took a strange bounce — straight up — and never reached the plate.

Padres 7, Dodgers 6

Sixto Lezcano drove in five runs, three on a third-inning homer, and Luis Salazar's double broke a ninth-inning tie to propel the Padres past Los Angeles.

Steve Howe gave up a one-out single to Juan Bonilla and, with two away, Salazar drilled his game-winning hit to right. Pitcher Burt Hooton had a two-run double and Pedro Guerrero a two-run homer for the Dodgers.

Cardinals 6, Mets 1

Neil Allen beat his former New York teammates for the second time in two starts since being traded to the Cards, and this time he did it with his bat, too.

He limited the Mets to eight hits over seven innings before a cramp in his leg forced him out of the game. He also hit a run-scoring double for the decisive run in St. Louis' three-run second inning that helped the Cards edge within three games of first-place Montreal in the East.

Braves 6, Astros 4

Chris Chambliss capped a three-run eighth inning with a two-run triple that boosted the Braves past Houston and within a game of the first-place Dodgers in the West.

Jerry Royster tied it 4-4 with his first homer of the season.

Museum showing earth in motion

The Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, Midland, is scheduling weekend showings of a film on the earth's history called "This Land."

The film will be offered to museum visitors at no extra charge on Saturdays and Sundays from July 2 through August. Time of the showings both days will be 2:30 P.M.

"This Land" was made by Shell Oil with the cooperation of some of the world's most famous natural history museums and parks. It shows how the shapes of continents and seas changed with time and the forces that created those changes.

Things were quiet Thursday at MGF Oil's production yard on West Highway 80 as news the company is being sued by three New Yorkers reached Midland.

Storm gathers over MGF Oil Corporation

By LESLIE HAINES
Business-Energy Writer

Three bondholders filed suit against MGF Oil Corporation in U.S. Bankruptcy Court in San Antonio Tuesday, charging the oil and gas firm defaulted on an interest payment due them May 1.

The move could force MGF into involuntary bankruptcy — liquidation of its assets — under Chapter 7 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code. MGF has until July 19 to respond in court.

MGF said it would contest the petition vigorously. Meanwhile, it suspended trading of its over-the-counter stock Thursday morning just before announcing the suit had been filed.

Company officials could not be reached for further comment. Neither board chairman A. F. Giebel nor president and chief executive officer Jack Major were in Midland Thursday.

The involuntary bankruptcy petition filed by the bond holders does not prevent MGF from continuing to operate in the normal course of business. It may, however, stifle ongoing negotiations with the company's trade creditors and bond holders.

Analysts said MGF has three options: pay the interest due its bond holders, file a contesting petition saying it is paying its debts in a timely manner, or file a Chapter 11 reorganization plan to protect itself from its creditors.

The suit apparently signals a break-down in negotiations between MGF and some of those who hold its 14 1/2 percent senior subordinated debentures.

The struggling energy company, which reported a $10.2 million net loss in the first quarter 1983, missed a $5.4 million interest payment due May 1 on its $75 million issue of the debentures.

The three petitioners listed in the suit are among those who did not receive their interest payment. They are Stanford N. Phelps, owning $5 million worth of debentures; Katherine Cimmino, owning $40,000 worth; and Megan Mahoney, owning $24,000 worth of the bonds.

All three listed a Manhattan address. Their Dallas attorney, Sander L. Esserman, said Thursday they work at the same New York firm, which he would not name.

Esserman said his clients feel MGF would be better off under court supervision, which would allow investors and creditors to keep a closer watch on what MGF is doing to meet its debts.

MGF admitted late in April it would miss the interest payment on the debentures, but that negotiations were continuing. On May 2, Standard and Poor's lowered its rating on the bonds from CCC to D, in effect saying the company was in, or near, bankruptcy.

"From a credit standpoint, clearly, the company was going into a deteriorating position," an S and P spokesman said Thursday.

"In the current economic environment, demand for their type of assets is not that strong." MGF has most of its drilling rigs stacked.

MGF recently has made progress in restructuring some of its debts. A new loan agreement was announced May 16 which extended MGF's secured bank credit and $33 million of rig partnership debt for two years.

A separate credit transaction which would have provided up to $15 million in additional funds hinged on whether MGF could successfully restructure the subordinated debt.

On May 16, MGF said it intended to make an exchange offer to holders of its 14.5 percent senior subordinated debentures, which are listed on the Philadelphia stock exchange. The three petitioners evidently are trying to block the offer.

MGF's statement issued Thursday said the company was not aware the involuntary bankruptcy petition would be filed and that MGF would oppose it "vigorously."

Although the petition filed in San Antonio does not prevent MGF from continuing operations, analysts said reaction to the suit might.

Other creditors, fearful MGF may not pay its debts, might decide to jump on the suit bandwagon to protect their interests. In turn, the Midland company might be forced to declare voluntary bankruptcy under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Code to protect itself from creditors.

The company has been negotiating for months with its lenders, lessors and major creditors to restructure its debts and stave off such a crisis.

Chevrolet Corvettes recalled

DETROIT (AP) — About 10,000 of the approximately 11,000 1984-model Chevrolet Corvettes built so far this year are being recalled because a defective brake bolt could work loose, General Motors Corp. announced.

In a statement Thursday, GM's Chevrolet Division said no accidents have been reported because of the problem, caused by an incorrectly coated bolt.

Defective bolts are coated with a slippery substance which could cause front brake calipers to loosen, "interfere with the operation of the wheel and prevent the wheel from rotating," the statement said.

Chevrolet spokesman Ralph Kramer said, the brakes will continue to work even if the bolt falls off but drivers will notice a clunking sound.

The problem was discovered in GM tests, Kramer said.

Owners of the vehicles will be sent letters asking them to have Chevrolet dealers replace the bolts without charge.

Donoghue's Money Fund Average (Averages for all 251 taxable funds)		36	8.1	8.0

MONEY FUND TABLE COMMENTARY: Assets of the 251 taxable money funds reported by Donoghue's MONEY FUND REPORT of Holliston, MA 01746 dropped $1.3 billion to $162.7 billion for the week ending June 29, 1983.

The taxable funds' 7-day average yield increased to 8.11% from 8.03%. The taxable funds' 30-day average yield increased to 7.98% from 7.91%.

The funds' average maturity figure decreased one day to 36 days.

William E. Donoghue says, "Continued shortening of the average maturity figure suggests portfolio managers expect interest rates to move higher. An average maturity of 36 was last reported on 2/2/83.

The spread between average money fund yields and the average money market deposit account rate reported by the Bank Rate Monitor has reached a new low of 23 basis points."

Yields represent annualized total return to shareholders for past seven- and thirty-day period. Past returns are not necessarily indicative of future yields. Investment quality and maturity may vary among funds. x - average term to next rate adjustment date. PUBLIC NOTICE

At the request of the Office of the General Counsel of the Public Utility Commission, the Commission has established Docket No. 5113 to inquire into pressing issues involving the entire telephone industry in Texas. Docket No. 5113 will deal with many issues resulting from the impending divestiture of American Telephone and Telegraph Company and Southwestern Bell Telephone Company. Some of those issues include establishing the service areas of Southwestern Bell after divestiture and assessing the impact on other telephone companies in Texas of current settlement arrangements between Southwestern Bell and those companies. Additionally, Docket No. 5113 will deal with the issues arising from the Federal Communications Commission's Final Order in Docket 78-72 (the Access Charge Docket) as they impact all telephone companies. It is anticipated that Docket No. 5113 will be evidentiary in nature. RATES FOR SOUTHWESTERN BELL MAY BE DETERMINED BY THE COMMISSION IN OR AS A RESULT OF THIS PROCEEDING. Interested parties seeking further information or desiring to participate in Docket No. 5113 are advised to write to Rhonda Colbert Ryan, Secretary and Director of Hearings, Public Utility Commission of Texas, 7800 Shoal Creek Boulevard, Suite 400N, Austin, Texas 78757 or telephone the Public Utility Commission Consumer Affairs Division at (512) 458-0223 or 458-0227, or (512) 458-0221 TTY for the deaf.

AVISO PÚBLICO

A solicitud de la Oficina de Consejo Legal (Office of the General Counsel) de la Comisión de Servicios Públicos (Public Utility Commission), la Comisión ha establecido la Acta No. 5113 con el fin de investigar asuntos de importancia que incumben a todas las compañías de servicio de teléfono en el Estado de Texas. La Acta No. 5113 tratará con muchos asuntos que resulten del desposeimiento que está pendiente entre American Telephone and Telegraph Company y Southwestern Bell Telephone Company. Algunos de éstos asuntos incluyen el de establecer las áreas de servicio de Southwestern Bell despues del desposeimiento y el de tasar los efectos de los arreglos judiciales que estan en vigor entre Southwestern Bell y otras compañías de servicio de teléfono en el Estado de Texas. Adicionalmente, la Acta No. 5113 tratará con los asuntos que surjan del Decreto Final (Final Order) de la Comisión Federal de Comunicaciónes (Federal Communications Commission) en la Acta No. 78-72 (ó sea la Acta de Cobros por Acceso — Access Charge Docket) en cuanto al efecto que tengan en las actividades de todas otras compañías de servicio de teléfono. Se anticipa que la Acta No. 5113 será probatoria. PUEDE QUE LAS TARIFAS QUE COBRE SOUTHWESTERN BELL SEAN DETERMINADAS POR LA COMISIÓN EN Ó COMO RESULTADO DE ÉSTE PROCESO. A las partes interesadas que búsquen más información, ó que deseén participar en la Acta No. 5113, se les aconseja comunicarse por escrito con la Sra. Rhonda Colbert Ryan, Secretary and Director of Hearings (Secretaria y Directora de Vistas), Public Utility Commission of Texas, 7800 Shoal Creek Boulevard, Suite 400N, Austin, Texas 78757, ó llamar a la Consumer Affairs Division (División de Asuntos de Consumidores) de la Public Utility Commission al (512) 458-0223, ó 458-0227, ó (512) 458-0221 TTY para aquellos que padecen de la sordera.

Perils! Doom! U. Bertie Dastard (Darrell Ward) has captured fair damsel, Daphne Dinsmore (Denise Jenkins). To know how the fair maiden fares catch MCT's 35th annual Summer Mummers — "Ripsnorting on the Roaring Fork" — opening today at 8:30 p.m. at the Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado Ave.

In this scene from MCT's 1971 production of P. McRae Jones' "Tribulation on the Tiber" it's hard to tell who has who.

Mummers ready for 'Ripsnorting'

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

The year was 1949.

"Four of us were sitting around the old City County Auditorium 35 years ago, just about now, as a matter of fact," Art Cole said, reminiscing about the beginning of Midland Community Theatre's Summer Mummers.

"We were searching for different ways that we might make extra money for the theater. The budget was very small in those days. Any dollars at all that we could earn for the theater would be a great help.

"One guy came up with the idea of doing 'The Drunkard.' And he (Norris Creath) said, 'I'll play the villain. You, Art, play the hero. Bill (Pennebaker) here will produce it. And Bill (Pomeroy) here will direct it.'

"The four of us said, 'We're going to do 'The Drunkard.' Ya'll come and be in it.' That's how the Mummers' was born."

The production was staged in the American Legion Hall which was right behind the City County Auditorium. The City County Auditorium was the site of what is now Midland County Library.

"We moved next door so that we could do the play on a tiny little stage with roll drops in the style of the old time melodrama. And so that the audience could sit at tables and drink beer and, in those days, eat peanuts and boo and hiss and cheer.

"The first year we made $1,800," Cole said, adding, "And it went from there. Each year its made more money than it made last year for 35 years.

"As it was then, that $1,800 turned out to be about 20 percent of the theater's budget, and its almost maintained that percentage to the total budget through all these years because, as the Mummers makes more money, the budget for the theater has risen proportionally. So that income is very important to Midland Community Theatre."

Today approximately 550 Summer Mummers performances have played to audiences who have cheered the good guys and gals on, while booing, hissing and throwing popcorn at the villa' .s.

Popcorn has becor . as much of a Mummers' regular as the melodrama and olio.

As Pennebaker states in the 1978 MCT program for "The Sunshine Boys," "Income from the sales of popcorn in a given summer will exceed income from all sources realized during the 1949 season."

Last year alone the Mummers's crews popped a ton and a half for eager audience members. Most of it found its way to the floor for the clean up crew at the evening's close.

And the audiences have grown.

"The members of those attending performances each week this summer (1978) will exceed that for the entire run of three weeks in 1949," states Pennebaker.

In 1974, the Mummers acquired its international reputation and billing when the production was staged at the Maytime International Festival in Dundalk, Ireland. The Mummers returned in 1977.

It was there that Municipal Court Judge James Fitz-Gerald was almost ejected from the audience.

Ron Hughes, president of the Summer Mummers Board of Governors and previous longtime Mummers hero, laughed as he recalled the story.

Fitz-Gerald had for a long time been the voice or heckler for the production, he explained, but the Irish were not familiar with this aspect of the production.

Thus, one night, a most upset female patron left her seat, walked to the box office and said, "There is someone yelling things at the Americans, and I think he ought to be thrown out."

It wasn't any easier to explain to her, than it was to another patron who told teenager Barry Fleming, one of the Mummers' entourage, who had been asked to throw peanuts — "Throw one more of those peanuts, and I will have you ejected" — that it's all part of the act, Hughes said. Nevertheless, he added, "the Irish seemed to love it."

Former director dips into new career

Dipping into another of his loves, Art Cole, back in town as director for the Summer Mummers, paints the backdrop for this year's production.

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Three years ago this June, Art Cole resigned as executive director of Midland Community Theatre. It was a position he had held for 35 years.

In his resignation request, Cole "I assume the Theatre would let me stay around until the end, allowing the moss to grow on my north side. However, I cannot do that for a variety of reasons, not the least of which is that it would not be good for the Theatre.

"Instead, I intend to use whatever is left of my three-score-and-ten to try some of the things I wanted to do 30 years ago. Among these are: to paint, to act — though no one is queing up to hire me — and perhaps try my hand at writing the book on community theater that I've never had time to do."

Cole is back in town directing an endeavor he was largely responsible for beginning 35 years ago — the Summer Mummers.

Although he hasn't written a book or acted in the three years which have followed, he has been busy working in an area he always knew he'd love. And he's eager to return to it.

"I paint pictures," Cole said in an interview held in the theater's backshop where he was busy painting the backdrop for the Mummers. "I can't wait to get back."

When Cole leaves after the Mummers' opening, he will return to his home in Colorado and days filled with painting from "around 9 or 10 in the morning" until "4 or 5 in the afternoon.

"If I'm on a roll, maybe as late as 6 or 7. I sort of set as a goal for myself four paintings a week, four watercolors a week, which isn't too much. I sometimes do more than that."

Pausing, he added, "Here for almost six weeks I won't have done any, you see, so I have to double up and catch up."

A man who devoted over three decades of his life to the single dream of successful community theater by working when necessary in any arena — director, actor, business manager, custodian, publicist — Cole's boundless energy entwined his life with the theater's in making him loved, revered and sometimes feared by those with whom he worked. He gave his all and has no regrets about moving from the public arena of theater to the vastly more private world of art.

"I'm so excited about painting and being able to start a whole new career. That's thrilling and exciting every morning.

"It's a discipline like any other discipline," Cole said of the lack of difficulty he has in being self-motivated.

"You see early on in life I decided I did not want to work for anybody.

"Here at the theater, I always really worked for myself. I called my own hours. If I wanted to go to work at 8 o'clock in the morning, I went to work at 8. If I thought 10 was a better hour that day, it would be 10, but I was in control of what I did."

Smiling Cole added, "And it's still that way, only I've just skidded over and spudded in on a new location."

Budget cuts force CBS News to curtail coverage

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK — When any major corporation tightens its belt, bodies inside feel the squeeze. It's a common occurrence in business, and not usually newsworthy. Who cares if International Widgets is cutting back production in its Pottsylvania plant and phasing out its line of plastic prongs?

But the budgetary in-fighting at one multibillion dollar company has become public because the pinched party is CBS News.

And what galvanized attention to the problems of CBS News is that when Pope John Paul II landed in Poland for the historic return to his homeland June 16, ABC and NBC broadcast it live, while CBS was showing "The Price is Right."

According to published reports, CBS spent about $1 million less than ABC and NBC to cover the pope's trip. "Internally, that was a symbol that we had serious problems," says a source at CBS News, who didn't want to be identified.

Yet, it wasn't until Gene Jankowski, president of the CBS Broadcast Group, saw the coverage from Poland and, about the same time, understood the furor within CBS News caused by suggested budget and personnel cuts, that he moved to bolster the hopes and morale of the troops at CBS News.

Various sources within CBS, who refused to be identified, provided information for the following account of last week's Battle of the Budget:

Last Thursday, Jankowski met with Van Gordon Sauter, president of CBS News, and Ed Joyce, the news division's executive vice president. The following day, he addressed two-dozen of CBS News' production and on-camera elite, including Dan Rather and Bill Moyers. He assured the group that he would not insist on any specific financial and personnel cutbacks, allowing Sauter to trim where he could.

Jankowski also promised that CBS News would have enough money to remain "competitive" with ABC and NBC during the 1984 election year.

Actor faithful to career plan

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Stan Shaw, who stars with Ralph Waite in the CBS series "The Mississippi," mapped out his career when he completed school and has stuck to his timetable and goals since then. He says he regards himself as "a different kind of actor."

"You have to plan," he said. "Some people just want to work and they'll take anything. I wanted to do films and movies of the week and basically that's what I've done."

Shaw said, "This is my first series although I did two pilots, 'The Buffalo Soldiers' and 'Venice Medical.' I've never really wanted to do a series. There're never any decent roles for blacks. The shows were all sitcoms and acting stupid and I didn't want any part of it.

"I was offered roles on sitcoms but I wouldn't do them. I wouldn't even do a guest shot. I don't like being funny. I'm a different kind of actor. I held out and I made it. Don't misunderstand me, I'm not against comedy. I got started in three musical comedies on Broadway. I just don't like what they're doing in television comedy. It's buffoonery."

Shaw is a serious-minded young actor who went straight from his high school graduation in Chicago to a role in "Hair" on Broadway. More plays followed, along with roles in such movies as "Bingo Long Traveling All-Stars and Motor Kings," "The Boys in Company C," and "The Great Santini." He starred as Will Palmer, Alex Haley's grandfather, in "Roots: The Next Generations."

"I got my first part on Broadway before I graduated from high school," he said. "I stayed on Broadway for five years in different shows. I've always had the 'I'm going to be great' syndrome. I've never had to deal with failure. I've lost parts but I knew something else was coming along."

In "The Mississippi," a CBS spring series returning in the fall for its first full season, Shaw plays Lafayette Tate.

"I have so many actor friends who hate their series," he said. "I love my show. I'm lucky. I think 'The Mississippi' is breaking grounds on subject matter, in how it attacks things. Ralph and I both like shows that mean something."

The Mississippi River remains the focus of the series, which strives for a Mark Twain quality as Waite, Shaw and Linda Miller roam the river in a paddlewheel boat. Waite plays a lawyer who picks up cases along the river, Miss Miller is his protege and Shaw takes care of the boat and acts as Waite's investigator.

The series is filmed entirely on location along the river. For the fall, the company will start at Minneapolis and work its way downriver to St. Louis, Memphis, Vicksburg and New Orleans.

For the first time this summer, MCT is staging a musical melodrama — "Ripsnorting on the Roaring Fork" — written by former Midlander P. McRae Jones, who, along with William S. Davis, William L. Adam and Randal Hicks, has authored many Mummers productions.

Of these writers and their scripts, Pennebaker states, "The locally authored melodrama scripts have pace, comic relief and items of topical or local interest. In a sense they embody a new theater art form to the extent that they incorporate these features and yet retain the classic-melodrama plots, characters, gestures, settings and costumes."

"Ripsnorting" opens today with a gala designed for those who have had anything to do with the Mummers, including longtime patrons, and runs Thursdays, Fridays and Saturdays through Labor Day. Reservations may be made by calling 682-4111.

What Pennebaker states in 1978 is still true today.

"The first performance of 'The Drunkard' by the Summer Mummers on the evening of July 28, 1949, ushered in a tradition of long standing associated with local summers. The stage settings of that production, the stylized acting and the oleo, or after show entertainment, all typical of American theater of more than a century ago, will be seen again this summer in Midland, as they have been since 1949."

Summer back at work after having children

LOS ANGELES (AP) — When Donna Summer belts out the lyrics of her new hit song, "She Works Hard For The Money," the millionaire queen of disco says she's singing about women she knows — including herself.

"I was poor longer than I was rich," she says emphatically, recalling a youth spent working at odd jobs. "I haven't forgotten other people's hunger and pain. I'm very conscious of it."

Ms. Summer, hitting the road once again after two years off to have two babies, says she's back at work out of both desire and necessity.

"If I don't work, who's going to pay the bills?" she asks, enumerating a long list of obligations including the one-tenth of her annual income that she tithes to various churches as a dedicated born-again Christian.

The largest drain on her finances, she says, was a bitter and prolonged lawsuit with her former record company that cost her $1.6 million to fight and was finally settled out of court.

In the midst of the suit, Ms. Summer's career stalled as she discovered she and her husband, songwriter Bruce Sudano, the new parents of a little girl, Brooklyn, were expecting another child. Ms. Summer, who has a daughter, Mimi, 10, by a previous marriage, gave birth to Amanda Grace last August.

The legal problems had begun when Casablanca Records, the firm that discovered Ms. Summer as a sexy voice on a German-produced record, "Love to Love Ya, Baby," was sold to Polygram International.

"When they bought Casablanca, they were mainly buying me," she says. "But I was no longer there."

Ms. Summer says both companies had ignored a "key man" clause in her contract that said that when Casablanca founder Neil Bogart left his company, Ms. Summer was also free to leave. Ms. Summer, who had already sued Bogart for alleged mismanagement of her early career, became embroiled in another lawsuit with Polygram.

"It was harrowing," she recalls. "And then in the middle of all of it, Neil died."

Bogart, a onetime boy genius of the record industry, died of cancer in May 1982 at the age of 39.

"I loved Neil," says Ms. Summer. "My life in America began with Neil. But I wasn't happy with the way he had dealt with me. He was a businessman, and I don't blame him for that."

During Bogart's fatal illness, Ms. Summer says she and her former mentor managed to bury some of their disagreements.

"We were on OK terms when he died," she says. "But after Neil died especially I was sick about the whole thing. I was sick of the fight."

The singer says she turned to the Bible and found the strength to fire all her lawyers and settle the case with only the aid of her manager, Susan Munao.

"I said, 'OK, enough is enough,' " she recalls, inadvertantly quoting the title of one of her hit songs. "I told my lawyers they were fired. I went in and saw the guy at Polygram personally."

ENTERTAINMENT

The result was a settlement in which Ms. Summer received "a few million" in frozen back royalties and Polygram received her agreement to record one original album and some additional material for them.

She refers to the new album as "the settlement album." For future recordings, she says, she will return to David Geffen's record company.

"They probably got the greatest album I've ever recorded," she says of "She Works Hard For The Money," which features nine songs she wrote either entirely or in collaboration.

The title for song and album, she notes, is not sarcastic but was inspired by an actual incident. Ms. Summer, attending a party at Chasen's restaurant, went to the women's room where she spotted an attendant asleep at her post.

"I said, 'Boy, she works hard for the money,' " Ms. Summer recalls.

That woman, Onetta Jones, who was holding down two full-time jobs then, is pictured on the cover of Ms. Summer's album.

"This is one person's life that brushed against mine and touched me," says Ms. Summer, who notes that her new concert tour is geared to affordability for her audiences.

Film fictionalizes Hammett's life

By SHEILA BENSON
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

HOLLYWOOD — Dashiell Hammett, the introductory words to Wim Wenders' film tell us, helped get murder out of the vicar's rose garden and back to the people who are really good at it.

"Hammett" is an imaginary story using a pivotal year in the writer's life. Produced by Francis Ford Coppola, "Hammett" looks like an opium dream of a '30s detective movie. This is largely due to the photography and the lushly atmospheric design.

There is Hammett himself (Frederic Forrest), the ex-Pinkerton detective, living in a seedy upstairs flat and struggling to make a reputation for himself as a writer of detective fiction, and a Hammett-like plot, set in motion by the appearance of Peter Boyle as Jimmy Ryan, an old Pinkerton mentor of Hammett.

The film opens by introducing us to a laconic detective, the Op from Continental (also played by Boyle), and his partner Sue Alabama (Marilu Henner) as they fend their way through extortion and murder on the foggy San Francisco docks.

Mobile home fire

Ricky Hall, a resident of the Pecan Grove Mobile Home Park on East Highway 80, works to extinguish a blaze that broke out in a mobile home owned by Dick Beaudoin about 2:20 p.m. Thursday. Firemen said Beaudoin was working on a patio cover with a cutting torch and sparks ignited grass surrounding the trailer, which sustained heavy damage to its floor and inside walls.

Midland oilman claims FNB, firm used 'trickery'

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midland oil operator Bill Mathis has charged in a lawsuit that The First National Bank (FNB) of Midland and Wood & Locker Inc. used "trickery and deceit" to get his signature on a $3.5 million Wood & Locker promissory note to the bank.

The FNB loan in 1981 was for Wood & Locker to secure 32,069 acres of oil and gas leases in the Overbelt region of Montana.

In turn and under a like-kind exchange, Wood & Locker agreed to acquire for Mathis a 4,500-acre ranch in Hood and Erath counties in Central Texas.

Proceeds of the note went to Wood & Locker but under Mathis' signature, according to the petition.

At time of the loan, Wood & Locker, independent oil operating company, "was at or near the limits of its credit line" with the bank.

Mathis claims FNB and Wood & Locker agreed that the deed of trust on the ranch would never be foreclosed, since "it was not being founded upon any debt" of Mathis. Further, FNB and John W. Wood Jr., president of Wood & Locker, and Walt A. Locker Jr., vice president, agreed that Mathis would not be liable for the note.

But, says Mathis, FNB turned the note over to Texas Commerce Bank National Association (TCB) for collection on March 24. Both FNB and TAC contend Mathis is liable for the note.

Three months later — on June 24 — Wood & Locker, one of the bank's larger debtors, filed for emergency bankruptcy under the re-organization (Chapter 11) of U.S. bankruptcy rules, reported the U.S. Bankruptcy Court in San Antonio.

In his petition, Mathis is seeking a court order to enjoin the TCB from the "improper confiscation" of his 4,500-acre ranch. A hearing was to be held at 1:30 p.m. today before visiting Judge George Kelton of Odessa in 142nd State District Court.

That first note was signed by Mathis, as managing general partner of Mathis Assoc. I, Mathis Assoc. II and Mathis Assoc. III, on Oct. 14, 1981, and was renewed by Mathis on April 12, 1982.

"The signature of Bill Mathis...was with the express understanding and agreement of all parties that the debt...was the debt only of Wood & Locker Inc...," says the petition.

Mathis claims he was "tricked and deceived" into signing the note.

He contends that Wood & Locker was "seriously and deeply" in debt to FNB.

"Bank examiners and auditors were observing and auditing the operations of FNB, which was by that time already in a precarious financial condition," says Mathis' petition.

"Special attention was being paid by federal authorities to FNB's loans to its larger debtors, including Wood & Locker Inc. FNB feared repercussions from the bank examiners and auditors in relation to additional loans to Wood & Locker Inc. or Wood and Locker."

Subsequently, FNB, Wood & Locker and Wood and Locker "devised a scheme" whereby the $3.5 million FNB loan to Wood & Locker "would appear" to be Mathis' debt as well and would be secured by a deed of trust to Mathis' ranch, Mathis charges.

"It was in FNB's interest for the loan to Wood & Locker Inc. to appear to be other than it actually was, so that the bank examiners and auditors would not place the loan in a category which would deny it the status on FNB's books."

Mathis says that attempts by FNB and TCB to compel him to pay the promissory note "constitute deceptive acts" under the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices/Consumer Protection Act.

Council decides not to decide

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

It took three days for Midland City Council to decide not to decide.

On Thursday, the council in its final work day on the 1983-84 budget was told the Midland County Appraisal District wouldn't have final tax figures ready until July 25. Although the council spent two days reviewing each department's spending requests, the panel held off making decisions until they can see how much ad valorem tax money the city will receive.

The tax rate now is 43 cents per $100 valuation. Roland Wilkinson, chief appraiser, said preliminary figures show the city's tax base to have grown from $2.36 billion to $2.765 billion this year. The final official tally should be ready by late July and the tax rate needed to cover all expenditures will be figured from that.

With the increase in tax base and regulations of the law, to bring in the same amount of revenue as last year the city may have to drop the tax rate. This is known as the effective tax rate, according to Wilkinson. If the city increases that tax rate above 3 percent, it will have to be advertised and a public hearing held.

Because of the way the tax law is written, Wilkinson noted that if the tax rate is dropped but is 3 percent higher than this year's effective tax, it still could be below 43 cents.

Using the preliminary figures and the 43 cent tax rate, Midland should receive $11,893,000 for 1983-84. This year, the tax revenue should have been $10,149,000. At the current tax rate, the city would get $1,744,000 more next year.

From 10 a.m. until 2 p.m., the council met in executive session to discuss salaries.

"No final decision will be made until they receive the information from the tax office," said City Manager James Brown. With an expected deficit next year, those final figures will be necessary for figuring the tax rate.

After finalizing the budget and deciding on a tax rate, the city must file the material for public review for 30 days.

The proposed budget of about $49 million should run about the same as this year's, with the expenditures kept at a level to maintain services.

Odessan loses cosmetics suit

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Maybelline's mascara survived a jury's scrutiny.

But an Odessa restaurant waitress was left without satisfaction and without money damages Thursday after the jury found the eyelash cosmetic was not in a defective condition and was not "unreasonably dangerous" to the user.

The woman, 51-year-old Lillie Bowling, had sued Maybelline Co. and its parent company, Schering-Plough Corp. of Memphis, Tenn., for $2.5 million in federal court after her right eye became infected in 1980 after she had used the company's Fresh Lash 24-hour Polymer Mascara, an oil-base cosmetic. She claimed use of the mascara and brush resulted in her suffering impaired vision.

"We're gratified that the jury agreed that Maybelline is a safe, quality product," Joe Connors, associate general counsel for Schering-Plough, said following the verdict by the three-man, three-woman jury in federal court in Midland.

"The company and the product were rewarded for its (Maybelline's) quality," allowed Jim Boldrick, Maybelline's Midland attorney.

The jury had deliberated about eight hours Wednesday and Thursday before rendering its verdict in the two-day trial. U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton presided over proceedings.

Ms. Bowling's counsel, Waco lawyer Tom Ragland, said he found the jury's verdict both disappointing and confusing.

"I was disappointed, of course, in the results," he said. "I'm not certain what it means."

In answering questions propounded to it by the court, the jury ruled that the mascara was not defective as manufactured, as designed or as marketed and was not "unreasonably dangerous to the ultimate user."

However, in answering other questions submitted to the it by the court, the jury determined that the packet of mascara Ms. Bowling had purchased in August 1980 was:

—Represented by Maybelline as "original or new when in fact it was deteriorated."

—Represented as "a particular quality when it in fact was of another quality."

In addition, the jury decided that Maybelline "failed to comply with any implied warranty that their mascara was fit...to be used."

The jury allowed that the mascara was "not a producing cause" of the eye injury and subsequent infections.

Ms. Bowling alleged that she inadvertently had scratched her right eye with a Maybelline nylon bristle brush while applying the eyelash makeup on the morning of Aug. 22, 1980. Later, the eye began watering, aching and oozing fluid, and the cornea was destroyed by the infectious bacteria pseudomonad. She suffered what physicians termed "pseudomonas corneal ulcer" and ultimately was given a transplanted cornea.

Midlanders deny shooting bears from helicopter

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Two Midlanders accused of shooting bears while airborne in a helicopter over Mexico and then smuggling the bearskins and a live cub across the border denied the accusations in federal court Thursday.

Instead, the men, Frankie Keller, 30, and Steve Dudley Quain, 40, admitted they did shoot and kill three bears in a Texas ravine near the Rio Grande. But they said they used rifles — not shotguns — and were stalking the bears on the ground.

The U.S. Airborne Hunting Act prohibits the shooting of wildlife from airborne aircraft.

Both men testified in the criminal jury trial in federal court that they paid Midland helicopter pilot J.C. Short $1,600 in June 1981 to fly them along the Rio Grande in search of a good fishing lease.

They drove from Midland to Pinky Carruthers' ranch, south of Sanderson. There, they met Short, who was hired by Carruthers to shoot, with a shotgun, coyotoes and other predators on Carruthers' 35,000-acre sheep ranch in the broken, mountainous country in Far Southwest Texas.

QUAIN SAID they were airborne for about 1½ hours when they spotted what appeared to javelinas in a ravine. He said Short landed the helicopter and that he and Keller grabbed their .223-caliber rifles, left the aircraft and stalked the wild hogs, which turned out to be bears.

Quain said they killed three adult bears and captured a cub on the southern part of the ranch.

New medical clinic limited to clientele with four legs

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

A new medical clinic will be opening tonight, but its clientele are limited to four legs — small dogs and cats.

After almost two years of planning, Permian Basin Emergency Veterinary Clinic will provide relief in two forms — for the owner whose pet needs immediate attention and for the veterinarians who want to spend a night or weekend with their families.

Dr. Tom Green, a Midland veterinarian, said the center is located at 8519 West Highway 80 between Midland Regional Airport and OIME. The gold metal building is about one-quarter of a mile west of the stop light at the entrance to OIME.

Opening at 6 p.m. today, it will be staffed by a veterinarian until 7 a.m. Tuesday. Normally, said Green, the center will be open until 7 a.m. the next working day, which is Monday. But with the July 4th holiday Monday, the clinic's hours will be extended.

"We will have one animal technician and a receptionist on duty with the veterinarian until midnight. The vet will be spending the night there," Green said.

Work schedule calls for one vet on duty from 6 p.m. to 7 a.m. during the week and from 1 p.m. Saturday to 7 a.m. Monday.

"We're real pleased with it," he said of the clinic. "It will provide a service to our clients and to our families. We'll live like normal human beings again."

Eighteen vets from Midland, Odessa and Monahans are participating in the clinic and will take their turns. First on duty will be Dr. Greg Adkins during the week and Dr. Phil Whisnand during the weekend.

Phone number for the clinic is 561-8301. Green said all participating veterinarians will have call forwarding on their lines. When someone calls their office at night or weekends, it will be answered at the clinic.

The emergency line will provide 24-hour care, he said.

A $35 fee will be charged for an office call, said Green. The bill will be determined by the amount of treatment.

The clinic also will ease the minds of veterinarians who have animals in their office which need to be monitored at night or during the weekend. The animal will be taken out to the clinic, watched all night and picked up the next morning.

If a cat is not sick enough to be hospitalized but needs daily injections, the owner will be given a prescription to take to the clinic where that veterinarian will administer the treatment.

As a joint venture, the area veterinarians have put in about $130,000 in the land and building, said Green. It was not intended to be a non-profit clinic, but he doesn't expect any of the vets will start getting repaid for five to 10 years. Money made by the clinic will go back into equipment there.

DEATHS

A.R. Kimble

BIG SPRING—Services for A.R.(Art) Kimble, 82, will be at 10 a.m. Saturday in the Nalley-Pickle Rosewood Chapel. Burial will follow in Trinity Memorial Park in Big Spring.

He died Thursday in a Big Spring hospital.

Kimble, a Big Spring resident since 1934, was a retired operator for the Colorado River Municipal Water District.

Beeman Fisher

FORT WORTH — Services for Beeman Fisher, 84, of Fort Worth, will be at 10:30 a.m. Saturday at the University Christian Church in Fort Worth.

He died Wednesday in a Fort Worth hospital.

Fisher, former president and chairman of the board of the Texas Electric Service Company, was a native of Dallas County. He began his career as a newsman before going into the electric utility industry.

He became TESCO's third president in 1961 and chairman of the board in 1966. He retired in 1969. In 1954, Fisher was cited for "Outstanding Service to West Texas," and in 1966, he was named "Top West Texan" by the West Texas Chamber of Commerce.

Survivors include a daughter Mrs. Lem G. Neely of Kerrville and a granddaughter.

Donald J. Simon

Services for Donald J. Simon, 60, of Midland, will be at 11 a.m. Saturday in the St. Nicholas Episcopal Church with the Rev. Joseph H. Schley, pastor, officiating. Burial will follow in Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home.

Simon died early Thursday in a Lubbock hospital following a heart attack.

Leona Bradley

Services for Leona Bradley, 80, of 2901 W. Ohio, will be at 3:30 p.m. Saturday at the Davis-Morris Funeral Home Chapel in Brownwood. Burial will follow in Cedar Point Cemetery. Local arrangements were handled by Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home.

She died Thursday, following a short illness.

Mrs. Bradley was born July 18, 1902, in Denton County, where she grew up. She married Morris Bradley in 1919. He died May 28, 1972. They moved to Brownwood in the late 1930s, moving to Cisco three years later. She moved to Midland three years ago. She was a member of the Freewill Baptist Church in Cisco.

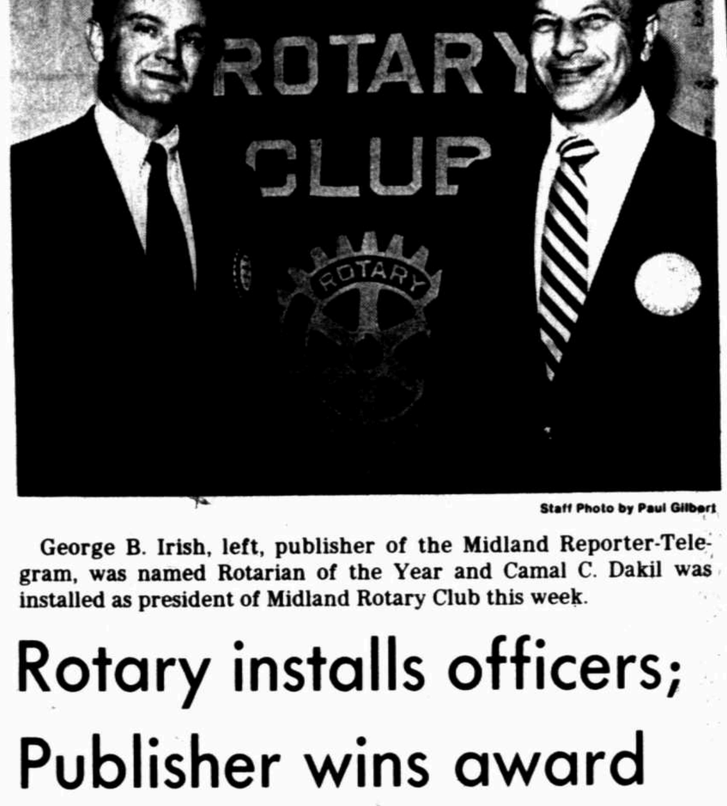

Survivors include two sons, Morris E. Bradley and James Bradley, both of Midland; a daughter, Wanda J. Seals of Cisco; a brother, John Trimble of Cisco; a sister, Rene Sparkman of Brownwood; seven grandchildren and 16 great-grandchildren.

LaVerne Rogers

BIG SPRING—Services for LaVerne Rogers, 68, of Big Spring were to be at 1 p.m. today in Nalley-Pickle Rosewood Chapel with burial to follow in Mount Olive Memorial Park in Big Spring.

She died Tuesday at her home in Big Spring.

Mrs. Rogers, a bookkeeper, was a member of the First Church of the Nazarene.

Afterward, Quain said Short was "upset about it" and feared the rancher "may not like this."

Short flew the bears back to the ranch, returned and picked up the hunters, who skinned the animals in a corral.

"We told everybody else we killed them in Mexico," Quain said. "I didn't have any idea we were going to get in trouble over it."

The trouble Quain and Keller got into was not reporting the bearskins and the live cub to U.S. Customs, since the government is contending the bears were killed in Mexico. Penalty for not declaring skins at Customs is imprisonment and a fine.

Quain said he and Keller decided to alter their hunting story to keep Short in good stead with the rancher.

However, Carruthers, who said he had never seen bears on his ranch until Short flew them in, said he would have been "very happy" had the bears been killed on his ranch.

Likewise, Texas Parks and Wildlife Department biologist Bill Russ of Sanderson testified that he had never seen bears or bear tracks in Texas. He, however, said he had heard of bears being sighted in the state.

"J.C. BROUGHT these boys down there to go fishing (on the Rio Grande)," the rancher said. "They went fishing, supposedly." Carruthers said he never saw any fish in the helicopter.

While in enroute to Midland with the bearskins and the cub, Quain said he and Keller stopped to eat in a cafe in Sheffield, where the bear cub escaped from the pickup's tool box.

Back in Midland, Quain and Keller hired taxidermist Karl Brosig to mount the bears at $725 per skin. One of the three skins was stolen.

"They (the bearskins) were slipping (losing) their hair (due to the heat of summer)," Quain said. "It was Mr. Brosig's first time to do this, and they didn't look too good." Furthermore, Quain said his wife "didn't want them at home."

"They were stinking pretty bad," Quain said. "They had bugs in them."

Subsequently, Quain destroyed the bear mounts by fire before, he said, he was aware the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service was investigating him and Keller.

Quain, a building contractor, said he and Keller decided not to ask Brosig for their money back. "I said, 'Don't worry about it. We'll make it up when we add on to his (office) building again.'"

IT WAS IN THE fall of 1982 when U.S. Wildlife Special Agent James M. Stinebaugh of Fort Worth approached him and "harrassed" him about allegations that he and Keller killed bears from a helicopter over Mexico.

"He (Stinebaugh) told me I was in a lot of trouble" with the wildlife department and that Internal Revenue Service and Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms agents were "interested in filing on me." He said the agent did not read him the Miranda warning and did not advise him to seek out a lawyer. Instead, Quain said the agent related a version of the Quain-Keller bear hunt in Mexico.

Quain said Stinebaugh told him that if he would "cooperate and tell me what I want to know" that he could "work out a deal" and get the $5,000 fine reduced to about half.

"We agreed on a price," Quain said, "and I just went back through what he had told me."

Quain said he just repeated Stinebaugh's Mexican version of the hunt even though he said it was wrong. "I figured a $2,500 fine to get rid of him was worth it."

"By God, that's not what I want," Quain said the agent told him of the repeated version. "I want names, dates, places. I'm going to prosecute you as far as I can."

In his testimony, Stinebaugh said Quain balked at relating anything about the hunt and denied that Short was his friend. "If Mr. Short wrecked his helicopter and killed himself the next day, it wouldn't make any difference to him," Stinebaugh said Quain told him.

Stinebaugh said he read Quain his constitutional rights and suggested he consult a lawyer.

After the agent told Quain what he had learned about the hunt through investigations, Quain acknowledged "I had the whole story," Stinebaugh said.

"He was willing to give a statement but that he wouldn't name anybody," the agent said.

"Neither one of them used names," Stinebaugh said. "Mr. Quain would not name Mr. Keller, and Mr. Keller would not name Mr. Quain."

Rotary installs officers; Publisher wins award

Officers for 1983-84 were installed and George B. Irish was announced as recipient of the Rotarian of the Year award at the regular meeting Thursday of the Midland Rotary Club.

Officers include Camal C. Dakil, president; Frank See, vice president and president-elect; Roger A. Freidline, treasurer; and Russell O. Smith, secretary. Dirctors are Joe Baressi, Mark Berman, Frank Downs, Irish, Jim May and Dick White. David Grimes is immediate past president.

Irish came to Midland as publisher of The Reporter-Telegram in March 1983 from Midland, Michigan, where he also served as publisher. He and his wife, Mary, have two daughters, Sandra Lynn, 15, and Christine Marie, 14. They attend St. Ann's Catholic Church.

He was described as having provided "outstanding service to his community" through a number of civic organizations. He is a member of the boards of directors of United Way, Chamber of Commerce, Junior Achievement, High Sky Girls Ranch and Palmer Drug Abuse Program, as well as the Rotary Club.

The Rotarian of the Year is chosen on balloting by the entire club membership and the award is based on Rotary International's three main areas of service: ethical business practices, better world understanding and service to the community.

Waiting room filled with plastic patients

GATESVILLE (AP) — They're all there, as if they just walked, stumbled or were carried on a stretcher from the pages of the catalog.

Choking Charlie, Mr. Hurt, I.M. Hip, Baby Hippy and sundry plastic hearts, lungs and skeletons are displayed in the waiting room of Medical Plastics Laboratory Inc. of Gatesville.

The small-town Texas company that makes the products has a promotional flair that gently and good-naturedly violates the often stuffy decorum of the medical profession.

The company's educational and training aids familiarize medical students, nurses and ambulance attendants with human anatomy. When they see genuine human distress, it might look like Mr. Hurt, a lifelike model of a man's head with no fewer than eight serious injuries.

Mr. Hurt comes complete with the grimace that would be expected of a man in his condition.

Choking Charlie is a plastic mannequin used to practice dislodging food from the throats of choking victims. Included is a piece of "meat" that can be placed in his throat to simulate the real thing.

I.M. Hip and Baby Hippy teach intramuscular injections and diagnosis of congenital hip malformation.

Oilman denies link

AUSTIN (AP) — South Texas oilman and rancher Clinton Manges insists he had no part in helping relatives of Attorney General Jim Mattox secure a $125,000 loan from a Seattle bank.

"No way. I had nothing to do with it whatsoever," Manges told the Austin American-Statesman in a report published Thursday.

A like amount was placed in Mattox' campaign treasury less than a week later, and Manges, a large contributor to Mattox' campaign, was one of the Seattle bank's biggest customers at the time the loan was made to Mattox' brother and sister.

State law requires statewide candidates report the amount and true source of campaign funds. Mattox reported the $125,000 as a personal loan from himself to his campaign, and insists he reported it correctly.

However, the woman claimed that she was left virtually blind in the right eye, which now is a different color than the left eye. Her vision is correctable with contact lens, but she claims she cannot comfortably wear contacts.

In expressing his regrets over the verdict, Ragland said the jury found a "breach of implied warranty — that it (the mascara) was not any good. But what that means, I don't know."

Jury foreman Carson Watt declined to comment on the verdict.

"It's confusing findings," said Ragland. "We're certainly disappointed."

MC to offer three short courses

The Midland College Department of Community Servics will offer three short courses beginning the week of July 11. Included will be Calligraphy for Beginners, Aerobic Dancing and A Friendly Introduction to Computers.

Kent Lawhorn will teach Calligraphy for Beginners from 7 to 9:30 p.m. Mondays and Wednesdays for four weeks. Calligraphy is the art of fine writing using a broad-edged pen. The class is limited to 15 students and the fee is $30.

Aerobic Dancing, taught by Becky Jones, is geared toward increasing cardiovascular endurance, decreasing body fat, increasing stamina and improving body tone. It includes both exercise and dance movements. Limited to 60 students, the class will meet from 7:30 to 9 p.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays for four weeks. Fee is $18.

A new course, A Friendly Introduction to Computers will be taught by Connie Davis from 3 to 5 p.m. for four consecutive days beginning July 11. An introductory course for children ages 10 to 12, the course will include basic computer parts, how computers work and some of the various applications. Students will learn general concepts of programming and how to do some simple programming in BASIC. A major portion of the class will involve "hands-on" experience with terminals. The class is limited to 18 students who must have at least fifth grade reading and writing skills.

Further information may be obtained by contacting the Midland College Department of Community Services at 684-7851, extension 216 or 147.

Bond set in attempted robbery case

U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton set bond of $25,000 each on two brothers accused of the attempted robbery of the Mid-American Bank at Loop 250 and Midland Drive about 3 p.m. Wednesday.

Released after posting bond Thursday were 30-year-old Randy George Pridemore of Andrews and his brother, 34-year-old Ralph Harold Pridemore of 2413 Emerson Court.

They were arrested by city police at the scene after bank employees sounded an alarm. Police said one of the suspects was arrested after he fell from a motorcycle that spilled on some gravel as he was attempting to flee with two bags of money.

The other suspect was arrested as he came out of the bank. Police said he told them he was on the bank's board of directors and that the robbery was "a joke" being played on the bank's president.

An undisclosed amount of money and a pellet pistol that resembled a .357 caliber handgun were recovered at the scene, according to police.

Midlander chosen to represent Scouts

Mary Bruton of 1604 W.Pecan has been chosen as a Texas representative to the 29th World Scout Conference, to be held July 18-22 in Dearborn, Mich. The conference, to be attended by Scouts from more than 118 countries, is designed to increase the common identity of Scouts around the the world and to promote a greater understanding of new and different cultures.

Mrs. Bruton, a Midland resident for 14 years, has worked with Scouting U.S.A. for 23 years and has two sons who are Eagle Scouts.

Houston police officer indicted for assault

HOUSTON (AP) — A suspended Houston police officer, already accused of raping a woman he met in a bar, has been indicted with another man in another sexual assault.

Glenn A. Whorton, 23, a suspended probationary officer, and Jay Callis Broussard, 24, were indicted Thursday on aggravated rape and sexual abuse charges.

Prosecutors said the charges stemmed from a June 3 assault in which a 22-year-old woman was raped at gunpoint.

Whorton also is charged with aggravated rape in a June 14 assault on a woman he met in a bar, authorities said.

Housing program matches seniors with students

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

CARSON, Calif. — For Ruth Miera, a childless, 69-year-old widow, Mother's Day 1983 proved a once-in-a-lifetime occasion.

At lunch that afternoon, Miera's "adopted" grandson, Richard Strawbridge, surprised her with a pound cake he had baked himself.

"It just brought tears to my eyes," she recalls.

Miera, a resident of this Los Angeles suburb, and Strawbridge, a college senior, are participants in a somewhat unusual shared housing program sponsored by the Older Adult Center at nearby California State University, Dominguez Hills.

For two years, the center has matched senior citizens seeking housemates with students in need of a home. Only a handful of matches have been made each semester, but relationships that work can prove rewarding, participants say.

"I get joy out of having someone with me," said Miera, whose husband died in 1980. "Since he has been here, I've done a lot of laughing. It's been so long since I'd laughed, I didn't really know how to anymore."

Without Strawbridge or some other housemate, she added, she may have been forced to give up her home. "I was so lonely and I was short on finances."

Strawbridge, on the other hand, raves about the relatively inexpensive rent — $200 a month — and the convenience of living in Miera's two-bedroom mobile home. Before moving in this year, the 32-year-old accounting major had commuted 15 miles from Pasadena. Now he can walk to school.

The arrangement with Miera is "kind of homey," Strawbridge said. "She reminds me of my grandmother."

The skyrocketing divorce rate shows it is not easy for married couples — let alone platonic housemates — to get along these days. Add a 40-year age gap, and the problems are bound to multiply.

But when a match does work, said Betty Peper, the program's student coodrinator, the benefits can prove enormous. For an older adult, a young housemate means companionship, rental income and help in taking out the garbage. For students, the program offers inexpensive housing in an era of high rents.

"It also helps as far as the intergeneration gap," said Delores Coleman, head of the Gray Panthers chapter at the university. "Many of the older adults and the young people have myths about one another that this would dispel."

Although the local share-a-home program is uncommon, it is not unique. In downtown Los Angeles, Alternative Living for the Aging matches senior citizens with Los Angeles City College students. Such matches are particularly worthwhile for foreign students who "want to live with an American to see what it's like," said the organization's executive director Janet Witkin.

The Lutheran Social Service of Minneapolis has made more than 150 similar housing matches in the last three years.

"The main goal is to help the elderly stay in their homes if that's appropriate. They generally have large homes, they're living alone and have trouble shopping or shoveling the snow outside in the winter," said Minneapolis coordinator Sandra Pranschke.

Pranschke's program, which is open to young working adults as well as college students, is far more complex and costly to administer than that of Dominguez Hills.

After a match has been made, the counselors in Minneapolis make periodic visits to participants' homes to ensure that the relationship is working. The average match lasts six to nine months, Pranschke said, and administrative expenses are over $800 per match.

In contrast, the Dominguez Hills program runs on a bare-bones budget — in essence, the petty cash it takes to photocopy application forms and place ads in the local media. Peper, a middle-aged behavioral sciences major, coordinates the program as a student intern.

Once she has helped arrange interviews between prospective housemates, the two parties are left largely on their own. They make their own arrangements on rent and food expenses.

The Dominguez Hills program has the blessing, but not the sponsorship, of the school's administration.

"I think it's an excellent idea," said the university's housing coordinator, Margaret Coda-Messerle, who predicts a waiting list of 200 for campus housing this fall. Dominguez Hills has about 5,000 full-time students but only 350 can be accommodated on campus.

Thus far, the Older Adult Center has received a limited number of applications and has managed to match only three or four couples per semester. That is an "extremely slow" rate, Marjorie Carter, the center's staff coordinator admited.

But the important point, insisted Peper, is quality, not quantity. Even if one senior citizen is comforted or can raise the finances to remain in her home, the program is succeeding, she said.

By that standard, it appears to be working.

Lucile Strohman, a Long Beach, Calif., resident, recalled the pangs of loneliness she felt in her three-bedroom house after her husband's death almost four years ago. That has changed somewhat since Heather Joie, 28, moved in three months ago.

The relationship, Strohman said, is the best of both worlds — friendly but private.

"If she's in her room, she most likely closes her door. If I'm in the living room and I want to talk, we talk. Otherwise we don't; we respect each other's privacy."

Joie, a behavioral sciences major, said, "I was living with a friend and I was wasting too much time talking. I wanted a quieter environment, someone that was older.

"We've become very good friends," she said. "She's like a mother to me."

One goal of the program has been to provide help for seniors who may find it difficult to do household chores. But Strohman "cleans my room for me too," said Joie, who pays $150-a-month rent. "My mother wouldn't do that."

Neither would the Rev. Marguerite Beissert, 68, an independent-minded Rolling Hills Estates resident whose husband died in 1981. The Presbyterian minister enters her housemate's room only to throw the mail on her bed. "I'm not crazy about housework," she said, smiling.

For 18 months, Beissert has shared her home with Jang Gouw, a computer science major from Indonesia.

"After my husband died, I realized I had never lived alone and I imagine that's true of a good many women," she said. "You grow up in your home with your parents, and when I went away to school, I had a roommate. After college, I moved back with my mother and then I was married and, you know, that's the story. I always was with someone in those years."

"And so it was very strange, very hard for me to get used to living alone and, most of all, it seemed so terribly quiet, it seemed so still."

Beissert is retired but still active in her church. Gouw is often away for weekends to visit friends.

With their conflicting schedules, the housemates rarely eat together, and in describing their relationship, Beissert seems to view Gouw, 24, more as a boarder than a buddy.

Nonetheless, the companionship makes a big difference.

"I still often eat alone, but it's not the same feeling. You know someone's coming," Beissert said. "There's life around you."

Spinal cord nerve discovery gives hope to paralytics

Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — During the summer that Michael Biber became a paraplegic, a notice was posted in the hospital about Soviet research into cures for paralysis. A nurse tore it down.

"She didn't want the patients to see it," said Jim Biber, Michael's father. "She didn't want to give them false hope."

But "false hope" was better than no hope at all, as far as 24-year-old Michael was concerned. That's why he headed for the Philippines, where he tried "everything from massage therapy and special potions to the wackiest faith healers." He resolved not to return until he could walk.

But then something happened to bring him back: the American Paralysis Association.

The APA was founded in San Francisco in 1982 by Michele and Joseph Alioto and a handful of others who rebelled against the perennial prognosis for paralytics: "There's nothing that can be done."

"That kind of negative attitude discourages research and people who want to find out about research," said Joseph Alioto, son of the former San Francisco mayor. But it didn't discourage Alioto. He and his wife were told that their daughter, Michela, now 15, would be paralyzed for life after a 50-foot fall from a ski lift in 1981, and that research on spinal cord injuries was scarce. Doctors were simply repeating what they had learned in medical school – that the brain and spinal cord, once damaged, could never heal themselves as other parts of the body can.

The Aliotos discovered it might not have to be that way. They spent weeks traveling across the country, interviewing scientists working in isolation on poorly-funded but highly encouraging projects that represented major advances in neurophysiology. These doctors expressed hope, and there is justifiable cause for optimism. Not only are promising treatments being tested that may dramatically reduce paralysis following an injury, but scientists are in hot pursuit of something thought impossible not long ago -- regeneration of damaged spinal cord nerves.

More than 200,000 Americans -- the APA puts the figure at 500,000 victims -- are partly or fully paralyzed because of injury to the spinal cord – a two-foot-long bundle of nerves as thick as one's little finger that transmit commands and sensations between the brain and body.

Scientists now know that spinal nerves attempt to regrow after an injury, but for unknown reasons, they stop.

Research aimed at fostering sustained regrowth and reconnection of the damaged "wiring" in the spinal cord has attracted an increasing number of top scientists in the past 10 years. "And there has been more progress in the past two years than the preceding eight," said Carl Cotman, professor of psychobiology at the University of California-Irvine.

Doctors who have seen many purported cures come and go, however, are wary of supposed breakthroughs. The Soviet treatment, for example, turned out to be worthless.

"There is nothing at this moment that can prevent paraplegia or make the paraplegic whole again, but I think there is great hope," said Dr. Murray Goldstein, head of the National Institute of Neurological and Communicative Disorders and Stroke.

Unlike some areas of medicine, scientists have many more good leads to follow than the federal government can fund, although the institute is spending about $18 million annually on spinal cord injury research. Hoping to augment that money and direct it to researchers who have innovative ideas that might not receive government funding, the APA has raised $1.5 million and now counts 10,000 members.

Research on spinal cord injuries is most promising on two fronts.

First, there are efforts to intervene within the first few hours of an injury in an attempt to halt the destruction process within the cord that accounts for most paralysis.

And as the Aliotos learned to their surprise, the great majority of injuries do not actually sever the spinal cord; rather, they compress or bruise it.

VDT radiation tests continue

Hearst Feature Service

A standard joke among medical statisticians tells of the researcher who announced the results of tests on a wonderful new anti-cancer drug.

"One third of the mice I tested were totally cured," the scientist said proudly. "One third of the mice stayed about the same. And," he concluded, "the third mouse died."

The story underscores the importance of interpreting numbers in context and the misleading conclusions that can be drawn when that lesson is ignored.

The March of Dimes Birth Defects Foundation in New York recently had reason to teach the lesson to an all-too-gullible public. Responding to what a spokesman said were "a lot of worried callers," the Foundation issued a statement reaffirming the lack of evidence that video display terminals cause birth defects and miscarriages. Experts, the statement noted, have "good reason to believe" that fears about VDT radiation are unfounded or misguided.

The question of VDT radiation emission, it explained, has been extensively studied and tested by the Food and Drug Administration's Bureau of Radiological Health, the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, the National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health and the Canadian Radiation Protection Bureau. "All report no detectable radiation hazard to any aspect of human health," the Foundation said, although there is "general agreement that prolonged operation of VDTs can cause eyestrain and neck, shoulder or back pain."

While the studies exonerating VDTs may not be the final word on the subject of very, very low-dose radiation, they offer a preponderance of evidence for safety. Where then did suspicions about VDTs – the TV-screen-style cases that display computer processed words, numbers and graphics – come from?

According to the Foundation, they arose from several reports of problems among people who work with or near VDTs. In those reports, small groups of co-workers in the same office or plant claimed an unusually high rate of miscarriages, malformed babies or both.

The presence of these "clusters" is certainly curious, and suspicions about the VDTs were not entirely unfounded. But there is a difference between a few eyebrow-raising numbers and proof.

Removatron

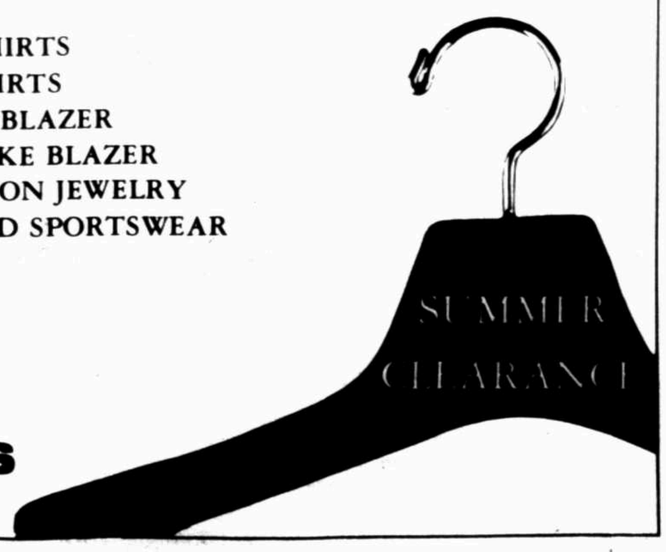

Because sometimes even nature makes mistakes. The sudden appearance of unwanted facial hair can be embarrassing. Now thanks to Removatron-the new no needle, painless method there's an effective way to get rid of unwanted facial and body hair from the first treatment on. The Removatron method is safe and effective even on sensitive parts of the body and uses only electronic tweezers that never touch your skin. You won't feel a thing...you can even nap during treatment. Best yet, you can even apply make-up immediately after treatment.

Asthma symptoms may be controlled with vocal cords

BOSTON (AP) — Doctors have found they can free some people from asthma-like symptoms of wheezing and gasping by teaching them to control their vocal cords.

The researchers reported today that some people who are thought to suffer from asthma actually have a newly discovered throat disorder that temporarily cuts off their breathing.

The syndrome was identified at National Jewish Hospital and Research Center in Denver, where doctors have so far have diagnosed it in nine people whose breathing problems had seemed to be classic cases of asthma.

Although there are probably other people with this disorder, no one is sure how many of the 8 million to 10 million people in the United States with asthma symptoms actually have it.

"We were surprised to find that many patients at this institution when there had been zero before," said Dr. Kent L. Christopher, who directed the research.

Several of the victims had undergone years of drug treatment or tracheotomies because they were mistakenly diagnosed as having asthma.

People with asthma have trouble breathing because of obstructions in the bronchial tubes in their lungs.

The new disorder, however, blocks the throat. For some reason, their vocal cords constrict, leaving only a small, "diamond-shaped chink" for the air to pass through. When the attack passes and the vocal cords relax, they seem to be normal.

"We really don't know what causes it," Christopher said, "but we are very much encouraged by the fact that there is effective therapy."

The doctors described five victims of the disorder in a report published today in the New England Journal of Medicine.

The patients ranged in age from 14 to 68, and one of them had had the problem for 13 years. Another had undergone eight tracheotomies — emergency insertions of tubes in the throat — to help her breathe, and several had taken steroid drugs.

"These patients were sent to us because they didn't respond to very proper, aggressive, state-of-the-art asthma therapy," Christopher said. Like asthmatics, they wheezed when they breathed, "but on careful listening, it seemed to be generated from the throat," not the lungs.

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — A new cardiac evaluation system using computer-processed X-rays of the human heart could save patients money by eliminating costly diagnostic tests, researchers say.

The system, called digital subtraction coronary angiography, uses computer-generated pictures on a television monitor instead of traditional X-ray films, University of Michigan scientists said Wednesday.

Besides giving more accurate indications of blood flow, digital angiography also allows doctors to eliminate such diagnostic procedures as stress tests, which add to the $2,000 cost of traditional angiography, said Dr. Robert A. Vogel. He is head of cardiology at the Veterans Administration Hospital in Ann Arbor, where the system was developed.

The new process could cost about $200, while stress tests normally cost up to $600, he said.

The VA hospital is the only one in the world with the new system, and has used it to examine about 200 patients, Vogel said. With about 4.6 million adults in the United States suffering from coronary disease, the system should be a boon to the nearly 300,000 patients who undergo cardiac evaluations annually, he said.

Digital angiography also allows doctors to tailor treatment for cardiac patients by giving, for the first time, accurate measurements of blood flow through the arteries to the heart, he said.

Vogel and his seven-member team can set the computer to show blood flow in colors that change with each heart beat. Blood entering the arteries is red on the first beat, yellow on the next, then changes to green, blue and violet through five beats. The changing colors show how far the blood spreads through the heart with each beat.

Rotavirus vaccine urged

ATLANTA (AP) — The World Health Organization has called for increased efforts to develop a vaccine for rotavirus, a major cause of diarrhea in children hospitalized for stomach and intestinal inflammation.

In a report published Thursday by the national Centers for Disease Control, the health organization also called for more study of the virus.

The organization said development of a rotavirus vaccine "deserves high priority." But WHO noted a major obstacle has been the inability to efficiently produce rotaviruses in cell cultures.

The exact structure of rotavirus is still unclear, and there have been very few studies of the mechanisms of immunity to it in humans, the organization said.

Rotavirus was first seen in humans by electron microscope examination of children's biopsies in Melbourne, Australia, in 1973.

"The virus has since emerged as the single most important cause of diarrhea in infants and young children admitted to hospitals for treatment of gastroenteritis," the World Health Organization said in the CDC's Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report.

Ceiling fans ease summer heat

By SHARON A. HILLIS
Midland County Extension Agent
Home Economics

Ceiling fans might make you think of steamy island hideaways or "Casablanca." But they can also help you have a more comfortable summer right in your own home. From ornate brass to pastel plastic models, ceiling fans are back in style.

You don't have to have 12-foot ceilings to use a fan either. But for safety's sake, a fan should be suspended from ceilings that are at least eight feet high, since the blades are at least one foot from the ceiling. For cathedral ceilings, an extension pole can be used to place the fan at the desired height.

Choose a ceiling fan based on the size and shape of the room. Most fans range from 36 to 52 inches in diameter. The 36-inch fan is useful in narrow spaces like kitchens, porches and sunrooms. The 52-inch fan is generally used in larger areas requiring a wider, more uniform distribution of air movement.

As you shop for a fan, notice that some have metal housings and hand-rubbed wooden blades. Other models are housed in plastic with either metal or plastic blades.

Metal blades are potentially more dangerous than wood or plastic. Any sharp-edged or thin blade can injure your hand if it accidentally touches the moving fan. So as a safety precaution, select units with blades no less than 3/16 inch thick at the tip.

If you want a fan with variable speeds, be prepared for a little noise. Some ceiling fans with speed control make a noise that sounds similar to the hum from a faulty fluorescent light.

Ceiling fan lights range from small fluorescent tubes to ornate globes. Carefully choose a place for a fan with a light. For example, a fan with a light fixture suspended from an eight-foot ceiling will probably be too low.

A fan hanging low over tables or furniture may not present much of a problem. But in traffic areas, the light could become an obstacle. Some manufacturers offer a low-profile model light for such areas.

Ceiling fans range in price from $50 to over $1,000. Higher priced models are often primarily decorative accessories cast of solid brass or finished with highly ornate trim, stenciling and hand-crafted detail. But the majority of models are in the $100 to $400 price range.

Installing a ceiling fan requires either an electrician or a competent do-it-yourselfer. The easiest form of installation is to use existing wiring from an overhead light fixture.

Family reunion a guilt trip

By ERMA BOMBECK

I just got a letter from a woman who, for the past four summers, has stuffed her family into a car and driven from New York to Provo, Utah, to join the rest of the family at a reunion at a total cost to her of $8,000.

To do this, she said, "We eat beans three times a week, drive an old rusted-out car for years and years, and are still eating on folding chairs in our dining room."

The logic behind this is, "Do you have any idea how far New York is from Provo, Utah? It's easier for you to come here." She asked for advice.

The first thing I'd do is to take four or five bucks and send the family a map of the United States listing the mileage between cities. If they're a quick study at all, they will discover that Provo to New York City measures exactly the same distance as New York to Provo.

We all know the relatives who every holiday say, "Why don't you all come here? Our house is bigger." Since when does the size of a house have anything to do with having a good time?

Or how about, "Why don't you all come here to see Mom? It's easier for her." Are we talking about the same Mom who sprints to the beauty shop twice a week, teaches aerobics, plays handball and isn't home when you get there?

I guess I'm really sensitive about this because my husband and I were childless for the first six years after we were married. Contain yourself. You know what's coming. Every holiday, we picked up our presents, food and whatever spirit we had left after loading up the car and went to where children were because "children like to spend Christmas at home."

Baloney. Dangle a gift in front of a kid and he'll spend Christmas in a public bus station.

We got sick of having our Christmas tree seen only by the washer repairman and vowed when we had children it would be different. It was. We alternated between having Thanksgivings and Christmases at home and away.

If I were my New York friend, come this summer I'd leave the old rusted-out car in the garage, buy steak and mushrooms for the entire family, face my new dining room chairs toward Provo and toast the no-reunion.

Then call your psychiatrist. The guilt could kill you.

Soap star shines by working out

By COLETTE BOUCHEZ
Copley News Service

When you're up at 5 a.m., and work as long as a 16-hour day, every day, finding time for an organized exercise routine is not always easy.

But superstar Ted Shakelford, who portrays the fourth Ewing son, Gary, on both "Dallas"and "Knot's Landing," manages to do just that, and it's part of the reason he's in such super shape.

"Basically," says Ted, "I work an exercise schedule of two days of workout, one day off, two days of workout, etc., and each time I work out I concentrate on a different set of muscles, so that my body is exercised all over, evenly.

"I do find, however, that even though my workouts consist of mainly free weights, which you can do almost anywhere, I enjoy working out in a gym, and have been doing so for about the last three years.

In addition, liking mostly solitary sports rather than team participation, Ted also enjoys swimming every day and if you watched him tear across the pool in the recent "Battle of the Network Stars,"you know he's being modest when he shyly admits to being in good shape.

"I also find that exercise relaxes me," says Ted, "and it's really a terrific way to work off stress and tension, providing you work out properly, and don't add more stress to your body. You have to know just how much you can take, and not overdoing it is important to keep in mind."

When it comes to diet, this member of the "Ewing clan" avoids both fats and sugars, but he openly admits the latter is difficult, since he has a "sweet tooth."

"Ice cream is my weakness," Ted reports laughingly. "and I practically 'mainline' Haagen Daz Swiss Almond Vanilla and Swiss Almond Chocolate. I really love it, so I have to be careful."

Although two of the hottest Super Beauties' on prime time have stolen the heart of Ted's character Gary on "Knot's Landing," (the blonde and beautiful Joan Van Ark as his wife Valeen, and the sizzling Donna Mills as his current romantic passion Abbey Cunningham) he admits that "in real life all women are terrific!"

Though he has no set definition of what his ideal super beauty must look like, Ted does admit he is first attracted by physical appearance.

"I think if you're talking about a stranger," he says "then it's the way a woman looks that would first catch my eye. But," he continues, "after that it's a sense of humor and intelligence and knowing about themselves and self-confidence that really keeps me interested."

When it comes to women having a career outside the home, Ted is quite candid about the fact that a woman should be free to choose what's best for her as an individual, and, in fact, he does like a woman who can make up her own mind."

"Women are human beings first," says Ted, "and they should decide what's best for them based on whatever it is they want. Working or not working shouldn't have anything to do with their sex life or the way they relate to a man. They are a total person, as they are, and that's why each woman is different, and must make her choices based on individuality."

For those of you who see Ted as your fantasy man, I'm sorry to tell you he is married. He and his wife live in both California and New York, with residences on both coasts.

Personality may develop at birth

Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES - The man who introduced the words "primal scream" into the American vernacular 13 years ago is back with a new buzzword: "imprints."

Arthur Janov wants the neurotics of the world not merely to re-enact painful childhood events - the crux of primal therapy -- but to go back one step further into the womb and remember how mommy treated them. Reliving one's birth, he says, is the only way out of crippling neurotic behavior.

Janov, a Los Angeles-born and educated clinical psychologist who now spends several months a year at the Primal Institute in Paris, believes that the birth experience -- whether your mother had a protracted or easy labor, whether you were slapped or serenaded when you emerged from the birth canal - is the most important factor in determining personality style, certain chronic physical ailments, homosexuality and even cancer. "Neurosis and personality have a beginning," says the natty, gray-haired Janov, "and I'm saying it begins in birth."

He also believes that the "birth trauma" leaves an "imprint" on the neurological system that can be scientifically measured through monitoring of blood pressure, heart rate, brain-wave patterns and other physiological signs. "It is not a theoretical invention of mine," he says, sounding a bit defensive. "I didn't make this up one day."

No one is implying that he did, but his theorems are hardly the stuff of everyday practice in the psychological profession. Dr. Robert Mittan, a research neurologist at the VA Medical Center in Sepulveda, Calif., says that Janov's theory is not a "fringe" idea, just an unfruitful one: "In terms of actual scientific data, there is very little to support the theory of birth-trauma imprints." Although Janov can cite research to the contrary, Mittan says that infants lack the ability to form complex memories, whether of birth or any other early experience.

DEAR ABBY

Hot husband chills wife

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My problem is my husband. He has become obsessed with sex. He's started to bring home every girlie magazine he can find. He also buys books that show pictures of all the different positions to make love.

When we were married 10 years ago, he was a normal, decent man. Then about a year ago he started to get sex crazy. Thank God I can't have any children.

Last Sunday he insisted on making love to me four times. By nightfall I was physically and mentally abused. The next morning he woke me up at 4 a.m. wanting sex again. I told him I just couldn't – I was still exhausted by Sunday. He got rough and tried to force me against my will, so I jumped out of bed and ran to the guest room and locked the door. He screamed at me, pounded on the door and called me a "frigid b—"! I thought he was going to break the door down. He finally gave up, and I stayed in that room until after he left for work.

Abby, I want out of this marriage. I am afraid to stay with this sex maniac. We just moved here and I don't know anybody. Please help me. – DESPERATE IN DENVER

DEAR DESPERATE: Call "Gateway" or "Safehouse." Each provides temporary shelter for battered women. In the meantime you should absolutely not live with him. His sudden preoccupation with sex and his abusive behavior could be symptoms of a mental disorder. Run for your life! But first leave a note telling him that you refuse to live with him unless he is examined by a psychiatrist and treated for whatever caused the sudden change in his behavior.

Women in other areas with similar problems should call their rape-crisis hotline for emergency help.

DEAR ABBY: This is probably the stupidest hang-up you've ever heard about. We have a son, 13 months old. When he was born, we debated between two names, Daniel and Patrick. We decided on Daniel because my brother, whom I love dearly, is named Patrick and I didn't like "Big Pat" and "Little Pat."

So the problem? As Daniel grew older, he became the image of my brother Patrick, and now I regret not naming him Patrick. It is driving me crazy.

My husband says at this stage of the game we can't change the kid's name. Why can't we? – KICKING MYSELF IN BOSTON

DEAR KICKING: You can if you want to. If you want to change his name legally, you should consult a lawyer. Otherwise, you can just start calling "the kid" Patrick.

DEAR ABBY: I need a lawyer and I need one fast. How do I find one who won't charge me an arm and a leg? – TEMPUS FUGIT

DEAR TEMPUS: First ask your friends and associates for their recommendations.

For helpful, detailed information about a lawyer's credentials, consult the Martindale-Hubbell Law Directory. It's the "Who's Who" of lawyers and can be found at your public library.

Don't be shy about "shopping" for a lawyer. For routine legal work such as drawing up a will, closing a real estate deal or checking a lease or contract, a low-cost legal clinic may suit your needs, but for trusts, tax work, divorce or trial cases, consult a lawyer who specializes in that field.

Find out in advance how much you will be charged. Some lawyers expect a retainer fee paid in advance, others charge by the hour, and in personal injury suits, a lawyer may take the case for a percentage of your recovery.

The local bar association referral service may be able to help you, but it only lists lawyers – it doesn't evaluate them.

(Getting married? Whether you want a formal church wedding or a simple, 'do-your-own-thing" ceremony, get Abby's new booklet. Send $1 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped (37 cents) envelope to: Abby's Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Grandmother killer sentenced

HAGERSTOWN, Md. (AP) — An 18-year-old man who killed his grandmother, possibly because she wouldn't let him take his wounded dog to the vet, has been sentenced to life in prison.

Charles Elmer Carpenter, of Clear Spring, was sentenced Thursday after pleading guilty in April to first-degree murder for killing his 77-year-old grandmother, Vada Viola Carpenter last November.

Carpenter has repeatedly refused to say why he killed the woman, but State's Attorney Kenneth Long speculated the murder may have been committed after Mrs. Carpenter refused to let her grandson have his dog treated after it was hit by a car.

Woman awarded $4 million

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — A jury has awarded $4 million to a woman who said her plans to become a lawyer were threatened by injuries she sustained in the 1981 Hyatt Regency skywalks collapse.

Kay Kenton, 28, suffered a broken neck and spinal cord damage when two skywalks at the Kansas City hotel collapsed July 17, 1981. The collapse killed 114 people and injured more than 200 others.

The circuit court jury returned the damage verdict on Thursday for Ms. Kenton in the first of some 40 remaining cases to go to trial.

Representative wants consultations

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is taking a first step that could lead to retaliation against Japanese restrictions on American farm products.

The office of U.S. Trade Representative William E. Brock announced Thursday that his representative in Geneva will ask Japan for consultations about Japanese restrictions on importing 13 kinds of American farm products.

Recluse with gay ties disappears

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — A reclusive man with ties to the homosexual community may be the ninth victim in a series of deaths and disappearances of gay men and boys, a police task force says.

Joseph James Sferruzzi IV, 19, was last seen June 24, and police said Thursday he had attended a meeting of a gay men's organization two days before he disappeared.

Police investigating the homosexual slayings say eight young men and boys — all connected to the gay community and ranging in age from 14 to 27 — have been killed since June 1980, with four killed in the last six months.

'Watchdog' hopes for the best

SALEM, Ore. (AP) — The lone government watchdog for a smoking ban that took effect today says he'll "hope for the best" in enforcing the law that prohibits smoking in most restaurants, stores, banks and other public places.

State Sen. Rod Monroe, who pushed the law through the 1981 legislative session, said he's confident that the "vast majority of people" will abide by the it.

But Joseph Petrovich, the state Health Division official in charge of overseeing the law, says it could be tough to enforce. He added that he was hopeful it would be obeyed.

Radio stations accept bailout plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's public radio stations have overwhelmingly accepted the general terms of a proposed bailout plan for National Public Radio.

Edward J. Pfister, president of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, said after a closed meeting Thursday of the corporation's board of directors that he had been authorized to negotiate an agreement with NPR. Under it, the corporation would lend National Public Radio the money it needs to survive. Pfister said he hoped such an agreement could be prepared by July 13, when the CPB board is scheduled to meet again.

Department denounces Soviet book

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department is denouncing as "viciously anti-Semitic" a new Soviet book alleging that Jews collaborated with Nazis in exterminating hundreds of thousands of people during World War II.

Entitled "The Class Essence of Zionism" and written by Lev Korneyev, the book has been widely praised in official Soviet reviews. But State Department deputy spokesman Alan Romberg said Thursday the United States condemns its "hate-filled message."

Volunteer forces are 10 years old

WASHINGTON (AP) — The all-volunteer armed forces are 10 years old today and are inducting half the number of low-IQ troops than the services would get in a draft, says a congressman.

"It's common wisdom to say we'd have a better military if we had a draft because conscription would bring in the smarter people who don't volunteer," Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., said Thursday in a statement.

U.S. lead in computer usage dwindles

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The United States pioneered the use of computers and semi-conductors and now sees its massive lead slipping away to Japan. It didn't have to be that way, a top group of Democrats say.

The harrowing competitive problems faced by the high-tech industry have been known for years, they say, but there has been no single government agency that was empowered both to validate the fears and to pave the way for solutions of what is now recognized as a major international trade issue.

No single government agency collects enough data from U.S. business to track what's really going on – here or internationally, they say. The responsibility for dealing with foreign trade issues is splintered, between the Departments of Commerce, the Treasury and the U.S. special trade representative.

That won't do, the Democratic activists say.

The computer industry, they say, cannot be let go the way of autos and steel: faltering so long that before the country realizes the full extent of the crisis, the industries are on the brink of disaster.

Led by Rep. Timothy Wirth, D-Colo., with the blessings of the House Democratic Caucus and its activist chairman, Rep. Gilles Long, D-La., the Democrats Wednesday proposed legislation to create an Economic Cooperation Council.

The nine-member council would be arms-length from the government itself. It would be both a quasi-public think tank, to collect and analyze data much as the Congressional Budget Office or Wall Street analysts now do, and also would draw upon the best talents in business, labor, academia and government to point the way to future growth and competitiveness.

Wirth and Long said the political role models range from last winter's bipartisan blue-ribbon committee to salvage the Social Security financing and the consensus that built the nation's system of highways and land grant colleges decades ago.

"There is a sense of momentum. People on all sides are asking us to 'bring us together'," Wirth told a news conference.

The economic council is the third specific proposal to emerge from the two-year blueprint by Democratic moderates on long-term economic policy.

Their agenda includes the hope that the Democratic presidential contenders will use it as a road map in the 1984 campaign, to point up what they contend are strong suits of the Democrats: the ability to unify seemingly disparate forces. They contrast this with they call the increasingly obvious anti-government attitudes of the current Reagan administration.

The Wirth-Long plan calls for more government – but, in the case of the economic council, it acts as a research and analytic tool to strengthen not only industry and workers but to insure that the country as a whole is not left behind in the international scramble for new jobs.

Texas Reps. Martin Frost and Charles Stenholm, for instance, said the very rules of the international business competition need to be reexamined to insure they are equitable to all playing partners. Frost said the council could serve as the "ready alert" instrument to analyze potential problems before – not at – the crisis stage, as with the energy supplies currently glutting the market but which are sure to cause rippling trauma through the society when prices rise again.

Midland College to present seminar

A seminar on "Women and Money" will be presented by Midland College's Special Needs Program from 7 to 9 p.m. for three consecutive Mondays beginning July 11. Held in Room 134 of the Occupational-Technical Building, the seminar will be offered free and no advance registration is required.

Gay Price, administrative assistant to the division manager of Bass Enterprises Production Co., an independent oil and gas exploration and production company, will be the instructor. She has been at Bass for seven years.

"The role of the American woman has changed rapidly during the last decade, but women are still lacking in the most essential knowledge for functioning in our technological society — the knowledge of money management," Mrs. Price said.

She pointed out women represent more than 40 percent of all adult stockholders, make up 43 percent of the work force and bring home paychecks totaling $390 billion each year.

"While women control the spending of almost half a trillion dollars annually, much of the money management is bequeathed to other individuals," she said.

The course is designed to acquaint students with methods of money management, opportunities existing in financial planning and the tools and people available to the interested investor.

Emphasis will be placed toward the working woman, the woman in transition such as a widow or divorcee, or the wife who wishes to participate more fully in fianancial planning with her husband.

Emphasis will not be placed on the sophisticated invester, said Mrs. Price, who indicated she is interested in reaching the working woman who is living on an annual income of $15,000-$25,000 and feels she will never get ahead.

Servant sentenced to prison

NORRISTOWN, Pa. (AP) — A woman who stole more than $87,000 during an 11-month period while working as a housekeeper for wealthy families has been sentenced to four to eight years in prison.

June C. Saunders, 29, of Philadelphia, was sentenced Wednesday after pleading guilty March 10 in Montgomery County Court to seven counts of theft by deception and one count of recklessly endangering another person.

Judge Anthony J. Scirica also ordered Ms. Saunders to pay $87,000 to her employers. Officials testified that Ms. Saunders had not helped police to recover some items, as she had promised at the March hearing.

Assistant District Attorney Steven T. O'Neill said Ms. Saunders answered classified ads using aliases and references from nonexistent past employers. She was finally arrested by Lower Merion Township police on Sept. 30 at the home of a prospective employer in Philadelphia.

Burma — Doing things its own way

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

RANGOON, Burma — On Inle Lake in central Burma, boatmen of the Intha Tribe row with their legs instead of their arms. They fish with huge, clumsy baskets instead of nets, and cultivate their gardens from canoes instead of dry land.

Not the easiest way of doing things, but it's their way, and not about to change.

That's Burma.

Proably nowhere on Earth is a land of such consequence — 35 million souls on 260,000 square miles, almost twice the area of Japan — so committed to doing things its own way.

But with good reason: It isn't easy preserving Burmese identity and culture when you've got 1 billion Chinese on one border and 600 million Indians on another (the world's two most populous nations), plus the East-West battleground of Indochina next door.

FOR 20 YEARS the strategy largely has succeeded, although some of the results have been a little odd.

This is, for instance, a Marxist state complete with a Soviet-style ruling party. But simultaneously, it's a most devout nation. Buddhism is its official, "Marxist" religion, and 1 million monks enjoy state protection. (So does a handful of Christian missionaries.)

At the same time, Burma is neutral in world affairs; so determinedly neutral, in fact, that a couple of years ago its delegation walked out of a conference of non-aligned nations, of which Burmese statesman U Nu was cofounder, because it perceived a tilt toward Moscow when Cuba's Fidel Castro became chairman.

It's not all so unorthodox as its Marxist-religious mix, or as picturesquely primitive as the Inle Lake and other tribal districts. Here in the capital, the handful of foreign businessmen and tourists at the Strand Hotel still is served with the same exquisite Victorian style established when Burma was a British colony. Rangoon has television, too, and you can see. "The Love Boat" on Sunday nights, or a Doris Day movie. And the glorious archeological wonders of Pagan, Sagaing and Ava, former capitals of vanished Burmese empires in the Middle Ages, are only an hour's jet flight away. The gateway of Bangkok, Thailand, is less than an hour by plane, and once-impossible visas now flow freely after a long period of near-isolation.

Unhappily, the problems as well as the progress of the outer world are beginning to catch up with Burma, and the next several years may shake the Burmese sense of self-containment as never before.

FOR ONE THING, the country's oil is running out. It was the first discovered in Asia, and was developed early in the century under the guidance of a young American engineer named Herbert Hoover. Possibly within months, Burma will be faced with importing petroleum for its ever-increasing fleet of automobiles, but it lacks the foreign exchange to pay for imports. (Despite this, the government continues to sell gasoline for the equivalent of 25 U.S. cents a gallon. The daily ration is five gallons, but plenty more is available on the black market for a little over a dollar a gallon.)

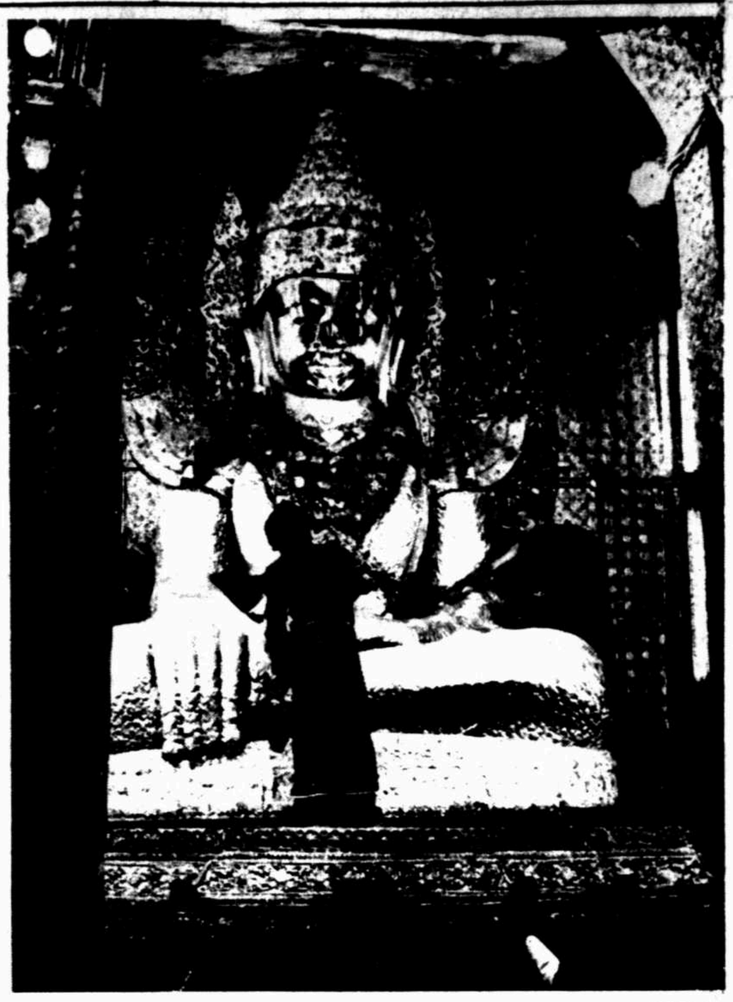

Equally ominous, the 72-year-old founder and strongman of "the Burmese way," Gen. Ne Win, soon will have to be replaced and there is no successor of national stature in view. Ne Win made sure of that as his strategy for holding unchallenged power since the military coup he led against U Nu in 1962. Admitting age and illness, Ne Win turned over the president's job to an underling in 1981, but he continues to wield real power as leader of the Burmese Socialist Programme Party (BSPP). He is Burma's Brezhnev.

Under British and then Japanese occupation (the latter in World War II), Burma served as little more than a gigantic rice bowl, generating income for the colonizers. There also was oil, and a similarly rich but irreplaceable supply of teak wood. Ne Win installed what one western diplomat calls "supply-sergeant socialism," an inflexible central planning system that left industry and agriculture in dire straits. Finally, Ne Win loosened central control, and foreign aid provided the new high-yield rice varieties. These the socialist proved adept in selling to the conservative peasantry. Unfortunately, just as Burmese rice production is soaring, the world price is falling. Rangoon's paltry reserve of foreign currency could run out with in the year.

Even so, Ne Win's isolationism has protected Burma from the worst swings of the world economy, at least until now. Moreover, even though per-capita income ranks near Asia's bottom — $170 a year comapred with Bangladesh's $130 and China's $229 — the country is affluent in terms of food supply. And the agile Burmese make up for the government's shortcomings in consumer goods output by operating the world's most pervasive black market. One western economist estimates 80 percent of retail trade is technically illicit, funneled through insurgent forces on the borders of Thailand and China. This trade in the hundreds of millions of dollars, of course does not show up in government statistics.

BURMA WILL HAVE to meet the petroleum and succession crunches while fighting an internal war as old as the land itself. Outnumbered hill tribes never fully accepted the overlordship of Burman kings before the British conquest in 1885, and to this day they fight the ethnic Burman majority that won independence from London in 1948. It is not one war, but a dozen: involving the powerful Shans and Karennis in the east; the Karens in the south; the Chin in the east; the Kachin in the north.

For years China aided the most dangerous of revolts in the northeast, that of the Burmese Communist Party (BCP) along the Sino-Burmese border. Since Mao Tse-tung's death in 1976, Peking has moved to normalize relations with Rangoon and largely has cut back its aid to the estimted 30,000 BCP rebels. But instead of cooling down the struggle, China's switch seems to have propelled the BCP into the Golden Triangle of heroin trade.

Calcutta: A city of chaos overflowing with people

CALCUTTA, India (AP) — Teeming Calcutta, India's capital in British colonial times, is deteriorating even as city planners try to make it better. But some Calcuttans say it's the only place to live.

The city's critics often say that Calcutta has been dying ever since it was built by the British 294 years ago on a malarial swamp.

Winston Churchill, the late British prime minister, once said of the port city in eastern India: "I shall always be glad to have seen it, for the reason that it will be unnecessary for me to ever see it again."

Its 10 million people are plagued daily with at least eight hours of power cuts, food shortages, lack of space and ever-increasing filth.

ABOUT A THIRD of the population lives in slums, officials concede. More than 200,000 people live on the streets, contributing to a population density of 85,800 per square mile. The population density of New York City is about 20,000 per square mile.

Calcutta's transportation system can accommodate 2.8 million people an hour, and that's only about half the peak demand.

People jam together on bus tops and hang from tramcars. Bullocks saunter down the middle of roads, and rickshaws thread their way through crowds at a bone-jarring pace.

Calcutta is building a subway to ease its traffic problems. But the construction, under way now for 10 years and scheduled for completion in 1987, only adds to the general chaos.

YET MANY CALCUTTANS say this is the only place in the world they want to live.

They are proud of their rich Bengali culture and artistic traditions. The city has a unique stimulation that has bred such internationally known figures as Nobel laureate poet Rabindranath Tagore, musician Shanki Shankar and film maker Satyajit Ray.

Mother Teresa, the Yugoslavia-born Roman Catholic nun known as the "Saint of the Gutters," has opened "homes for the dying destitute" and "homes for the living," providing a humane touch to the metropolis.

The French writer Dominique Lapierre, co-author of "Freedom at Midnight" and several other best sellers, has said he plans to write a book entitled "Calcutta, My Lord" because he loves the city so much.

For many a foreigner, the foul odors of the city, its poverty and its wall-to-wall humanity could discourage a second visit.

IT IS COMMON to see a woman, wrapped in a torn sari and carrying an undernourished baby, rush to a taxi stopped in traffic to beg for a rupee, about 10 U.S. cents.

Some slum dwellers sleep in waist-high dried mud boxes called "juggis" and in overcrowded huts and shacks, using water running in nearby gutters as their kitchen sinks.

Instead of resettling slum residents, the Calcutta Metropolitan Development Authority, a city planning organization, has installed power lines, light poles and water taps in the slums.

"It is far better, economically and from a social point of view, to keep the slums where they are and to improve them environmentally," an authority official told a reporter.

ONE SLUM DWELLER said he and his family would rather not move to apartment buildings in Calcutta's outskirts, as has been proposed, because they operate businesses or provide services in or near the slum. Living in the suburbs would mean a lot of traveling costs they can't afford, he added.

For Calcutta's masses the city is an acceptable place to live because it is cheap. A man working as a security guard for a foreign diplomatic mission said he would not dream of living elsewhere because only in Calcutta can he get a meal for two rupees (20 cents).

Members of the city's small, elite upper-class society have a different way of living. They swim and play golf in a few exclusive clubs, even celebrate what they call POETS day — Push Off Early, Tomorrow's Saturday.

Slow, painful recovery underway for Cambodia

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post New Service

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia — Dozens of squealing, giggling youngsters with book-sized bundles on their heads went frolicking down the crumbling ruins of National Highway 5 the other day in this northwestern province near the Thai border.

They were on their way to school, or, more accurately, on their way to help build their school. Those parcels were not last night's homework or today's lunch but tomorrow's classroom. The children were carrying chunks of tile from the husk of a bombed-out building to the site of a new schoolhouse under construction several miles down the road.

Progress comes slowly in Cambodia these days, often measured only in the amount of ingenuity, fortitude and manpower — or kidpower — people can muster on their own. But it does come.

That was clearly evident from observations and interviews during a recent two-weeks' press tour of the troubled Communist nation arranged by Oxfam America, a Boston-based relief agency.

LAT Photo

Cambodian schoolchildren carry tiles, not books, on their heads as they head to the site where they will build their school in Battambang Province. The devastated country is slowly rebuilding.

FOUR YEARS AFTER the overthrow of the cruel and inscrutuble Pol Pot regime, Cambodia remains destitute and in some ways less advanced than the 12th-century Khmer Empire which produced Angkor Wat, the spectacular temple, as well as an innovative and sophisticated system of agriculture, commerce and transportation.

It could take decades to undo all the physical as well as psychological damage done during the 1970s when the once-neutral and peaceful kingdom was, first, sucked into the Vietnam war and, then, enslaved in the bloodthirsty and backward rule of Pol Pot's Khmer Rouge, the Communist force that took power after the fall of the U.S.-backed government in 1975.

Things are calmer now, but there has been no return to normalcy. The Vietnamese troops that ousted Pol Pot and installed the government of current President Heng Samrin remain, according to Hanoi, as a guard against the return of the Khmer Rouge now waging a guerrilla war together with other resistance groups along the Thai border.

The United States and other Western nations maintain that Vietnam's aim is to control Cambodia and, because of that, they have blocked any meaningful aid programs which could help rebuild the shattered country.

And rebuilding is needed. The Khmer Rouge, either through design or sabotage, left the nation's infrastructure a shambles. Roads, factories, schools, cars, telephones, books and many other things which smacked of modern influence were deliberately dismantled, destroyed or damaged through neglect.

RECOVERY HAS BEEN agonizingly difficult and small. But there are some positive signs.

In the capital, Phnom Penh, a hustle has returned to streets, emptied by the Khmer Rouge who deliberately turned the capital into a ghost town. The markets are brimming with meats, fruits, cloth and hardware, not to mention radios, cassette decks, toiletries and medicines smuggled in through Vietnam or from Thailand.

Small barbershops and beauty salons have sprouted along the main roads and a wide range of fix-it shops offering to repair things from batteries to bicycles to teeth also dot the sidewalks.

The small community of Western aid workers living here reports that in recent months several new restaurants have opened, the number and length of electricity blackouts are down considerably, and the mounds of garbage that used to stink up the landscape have been substantially reduced in size and number.

PHNOM PENH RESIDENTS are beginning to complain about too many bicycles in town. And Keo Chanda, the party official who is, in effect, mayor, says plans are being drawn up to establish a "green belt" around the city of 600,000 to help feed its residents and also to relieve congestion.

In the countryside, the promising signs are spottier. The recently completed harvest here in Battambang Province, Cambodia's traditional rice bowl, has been a good one and granaries are overflowing. There is enough food to eat and then some. Though no one is getting rich, the income from the surplus is helping people become better clothed, better fed and better housed.

Elsewhere in rural Cambodia, though, hunger and poverty still have a firm grip. U.N. officials have identified seven drought-prone provinces where malnutrition is reportedly widespread.

In Kampong Speu province south of Phnom Penh, Ong Soeun, 53, labors long and hard with other villagers from the town of Dam Nak Tongro on the 50 acres of riceland allotted by the government to feed 35 families.

DESPITE THE WORK, the poor-quality soil cannot produce enough to adequately feed Soeun's eight-member family. There is no pond or stream nearby to yield fish, and they have no money to buy fish, meat or poultry. They also sleep in the open, since they only had enough cash to buy bamboo and grass to complete two of the four walls of their small hut.

Cambodia got the worst end of the Indochina war. Southern Vietnam, though ravaged by years of fighting, received massive infusions of U.S. aid and construction. It was left with a legacy of excellent roads, good ports and, to some extent, a fair communications system. Thailand, home to several U.S. airbases, also got generous aid and escaped the fighting as well.

But there were no permanent U.S. troops based in Cambodia, so it did not get the windfall its neighbors did. B-52 bombers flew in from elsewhere and flattened towns and villages suspected of being Khmer Rouge strongholds. The countryside still bears the scars of those strikes. Rice paddies in Takeo Province, 50 miles south of Phnom Penh are pockmarked with huge bomb craters.

Dotted along the highways are thousands of concrete foundations that used to support houses and buildings, long since bombed and burned out. The once thriving market town of Kantuot, only 20 miles south of Phnom Penh, was ripped by an air strike in 1974 and now stands a shell where buildings are but frames of four walls without roofs or interiors.

THE ROADS themselves are one of the most striking examples of what has happened to the nation and the problems it faces. Highway 5 is the main route between Phnom Penh, Battambang and the Thai border. Virtually no repair work has been done on the road since 1970, when the civil war here began in earnest.

In the interim, the road was bombed and strafed by American planes, mortared and shelled by troops of the old Lon Nol government, the Khmer Rouge and the Vietnamese, and mined and sabotaged by the Khmer Rouge as they retreated in the wake of the Vietnamese invasion.

Large sections of pavement have just fallen away, and there are gaping holes every few feet. Only large trucks or the sturdiest of four-wheel drive vehicles can attempt to make the drive, and even then a back-wrenching journey awaits the passengers.

The trip to Angkor Wat over Highway 5 and the equally atrocious Highway 6 once took five hours. It now takes two days. The crumbling highways make it difficult to promote cross-country trade or help redistribute rice from areas of surplus to areas of shortage. It also makes it very difficult to move sick and malnourished people in the provinces to Phnom Penh, where Cambodia's only sophisticated medical care is available.

CAMBODIA IS NOW firmly under Soviet influence, a condition underscored by the somewhat incongruous pictures of two bearded Europeans, Karl Marx and V.I. Lenin, that adorn almost every government office. President Heng Samrin and Ho Chi Minh run a distant third and fourth as favorites for office-wall photographs.

The Soviets and their Eastern Bloc allies, along with the Vietnamese, are the major sources of aid for the country. But diplomatic sources indicate that the Soviets have given far less aid than they have promised. Vietnam, itself broke and short of professional expertise in many fields, can not afford to do much.

The United States and its Western allies have, in the past, pledged massive amounts of emergency food and medical aid, but they now contend that the period of danger caused by famine in the wake of the Vietnamese invasion is over. A senior U.N. official, though he felt more Western aid was needed and justified, agreed. "We can't contend it is an emergency," he said. "It's more like a typical developing country."

As long as Vietnamese troops remain inside Cambodia, the United States and many other Western nations have refused to provide any redevelopment assistance.

Lately, the Reagan administration has been cracking down on aid given by private U.S. relief organizations, too. Last year, for example, the Mennonite service organization had to fight to win permission to send small kits of notebooks, papers and pencils to schoolchildren.

THE MAIN TASK of redevelopment has fallen to the Cambodians themselves. Within weeks after the fall of the Khmer Rouge — who forbade education — makeshift schools were being formed, and now the government says that more than 92 percent of all youngsters have the opportunity to attend primary school at least.

Attendance and enrollment figures fall off dramatically, however, for classes which would be roughly equivalent to fifth grade and beyond.

A major effort is under way to restore the traditional arts and culture of the nation, which the Khmer Rouge attempted to destroy. There is a twist to the renaissance, however.

Youngsters are once again learning how to paint, sculpt and weave at Phnom Penh's fine arts school, but their finished products often reflect the horrors of the Pol Pot years. In the "propaganda party class" at the school, the children draw pretty landscapes, chickens, ducks and bunnies — as well as skulls, crossbones and scenes of torture.

A new dance troop has revived the epic Ramayanma. But when the ballet is performed for East European audiences at the former royal palace, now a museum, a new touch is added when a dancer carrying a red flag adorned with hammer and sickle joins the other characters portraying ancient Indian gods.

Some routes to revival seem to be curious and cumbersome. The number one and two listed courses on the curriculm at the medical school in Phnom Penh are politics and Vietnamese language. There is no instruction in French, English, German or Russian — the major world languages of medical literature.

"The students are taking Vietnamese because they will go for a three- to six-month training course in Vietnam after they graduate," Dr. My Samedy, the school's director, explained. "If they want to learn French they can teach each other."

Nelson returns for the good ol' days

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — The good ol' days will return for country music fans when Willie Nelson brings his "Texas Woodstock" show to the Carrier Dome on Saturday.

Willie Nelson

The nine-hour concert is a continuation of Nelson's famed "Dripping Springs Reunion," a festival of rock and country music he started in Dripping Springs, Texas, in 1971. By 1980, the annual event was attracting up to 60,000, but heat, traffic jams and lack of sanitation facilities forced him to cancel.

For the Texas Woodstock series, the 50-year-old Nelson will perform, along with Linda Ronstadt, Emmy Lou Harris, Merle Haggard and The Stray Cats. The show moves Sunday to the Meadowlands in East Rutherford, N.J., and Monday to Atlanta's International Raceway.

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. (AP) — Former President Gerald Ford, who underwent urological surgery a week ago, went home a day early after a telephone bomb threat was received at Eisenhower Medical Center, a hospital spokesman says.

Ford, 69, had intended to remain in the hospital until Wednesday but went home to the Thunderbird Country Club on Tuesday night after a man called the hospital and said a bomb had been planted there, said spokesman Cliff Brown.

Riverside County firefighters and sheriff's deputies searched the facility but no bomb was found, Brown said.

The hospital refused comment Thursday on the ex-president's condition, referring calls to Ford's spokesman. Calls to Ford's office went unanswered Thursday night.

The elective surgery was performed June 23. Ford, who lives in this Palm Springs suburb about 120 miles east of Los Angeles, plans to travel to the Vail-Beaver Creek area of Colorado for the summer, aides have said.

California surf's up; Beaches are recovering

LOS ANGELES (AP) — California beaches, robbed of sand and covered with litter by last winter's brutal storms, are slowly but surely recovering as a rough summer surf helps with the cleanup.

Longtime observers of the ocean's ebb and flow said Thursday the gradual return of sand to the 840-mile coast is part of a natural cycle.

"It always comes back because of the movement of the water," said Ken Jacobsen, chief lifeguard for the city of Newport Beach in Orange County. "It's kind of Mother Nature's way of cleaning the beach. In some places we probably gained 40 feet."

Along with the sand, Jacobsen has noticed a bumper crop of sunbathers and surfers.

Rescues at Newport Beach, which normally run about 300 to 400 in June, are near the 1,100 mark so far this year — and Jacobsen blames surf that has been running up to nine feet, compared to usual levels of three to four feet.

In the Los Angeles County community of Hermosa Beach, where the beach is measured according to the number of volleyball courts it can accommodate, Mayor George Schmeltzer said storm erosion prompted residents to complain that the sand "used to be four volleyball courts wide; now it's one."

But more recently, Schmeltzer said, "we're talking about two or three volleyball courts wide. We're going to have a narrower but adequate beach."

Elsewhere along the coast, the story is much the same. Surf's up, and the beaches are back — not quite to normal.

"We don't have as big a beach as we had in the past," said Bob Millslagle, beach services director for the city of Santa Cruz in Northern California. "We have a lot of people, more than we've had in the last few years."

Millslagle said machines are being used to clean the Santa Cruz city beach, while bonfires have been held to burn scraps of litter at nearby state beaches.

Stinson Beach, 20 miles north of San Francisco, was among those hardest hit by the winter storms, but it's "still there and still popular," National Park Service spokeswoman Shirwin Smith said.

Youth work crews are cleaning the sand at San Francisco's Ocean Beach, which attracted 3.1 million visitors last year.

In Santa Barbara, where high seas covered 100 feet of city beachfront and parking lots, a harbor dredging project has helped restore most of the beach east of the city.

But a quarter-mile stretch west of town has more or less vanished, "and it's going to stay gone for an extended period of time," said city parks maintenance superintendent Ed Haldeman.

In Torrance, lifeguard Jon Stahl estimates that 100 feet of sand has returned to the beach since March.

In other areas the healing has been slower.

"I'd say it's about a two-thirds recovery," said lifeguard Rob McGowan in Malibu. "We're still missing probably a third of the sand that we had last summer."

Los Angeles County lifeguards also have made more rescues, from 239 in May 1982 to 1,059 the same month this year. The lifeguards say the storms gouged out underwater holes and helped create riptides that have made swimming more dangerous. And four miles of a popular coastal bike path, from Manhattan Beach to Marina del Rey, will not reopen for at least a year.

At San Diego's Mission Beach, lifeguard Jill Murray says there is more sand, "but we're still having some flux," with areas gaining sand one day and losing it the next because of unusually high surf.

Researchers: Gender gap may increase

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — If President Reagan and U.S. Sen. John Glenn face off in the 1984 presidential race as two researchers anticipate, women voters probably won't make their presence felt as strongly as in 1980.

Carol Christy and Virginia Currey say the 1984 election probably will result in less polarization of voting by sexes because the gap between Glenn and Reagan "is not so distinct in the differences in issues that affect women."

Ms. Christy, of Ohio Univerity, and Ms. Currey, of Southern Methodist University, presented their paper, "A Study of The Gender Gap" at the final day of the National Women's Studies annual meeting Thursday.

They predicted that in the long run, the gender gap will grow as the number of single-income households grows and political parties make clearer their distinctions on women's issues.

"If the parties had more distinctive positions, then we would expect a movement among voters towards a party that better represents their economic self-interest," Ms. Christy and Ms. Currey wrote.

"Both parties and candidates are now giving symbolic support to working women's concerns, but their desire to win elections requires them to be vague on specifics in order to avoid alienating other groups."

They said there are indications that Republican campaign consultants are working toward easing the gender gap by publicizing issues appealing to women, such as stricter drunken-driving laws.

"The fortuitous space ride of Sally Ride during Reagan's term and Reagan's pronouncements on education and his activity associated with these events do seem to have the ring of the subtle staging by sensitive consultants," they said.

The first real emergence of the gender gap was chronicled in another paper, "Guns, Butter and Equality: The Women's Vote in 1980," by Celinda C. Lake of the University of Michigan.

Former President Carter received 41.6 percent of the female vote that year, but only 32.8 percent of the male vote, she said.

There had been a gender gap in previous elections, particularly with more women voting for George McGovern and Dwight Eisenhower and less for George Wallace, she said.

Tons of molasses spill in bay

RICHMOND, Calif. (AP) — More than 140 tons of molasses oozed from a storage tank and slowly seeped into San Pablo Bay after a valve was accidentally left on, authorities said.

The Guatemalan blackstrap molasses leaked Thursday from a tank at the Pacific Molasses Co. after a worker apparently forgot to turn off a pump valve, said Gurt Niemeijer, a terminal manager.

"It's human error," said Niemeijer. He said most of the company's molasses is used in cattle feed.

The molasses flowed across the company's yard and entered San Pablo Bay along a 200- to 300-foot stretch, said Fred Dierker, executive officer for the San Francisco Bay Regional Water Quality Control Board.

"The discoloration resulting from this is extending up to 1,000 feet offshore as the molasses dissolves," said Dierker. "There is no evidence of fish kill."

Some of the goo reached nearby beaches and was being cleaned up with shovels, according to Dierker, who said the spill involved about 140 tons. Niemeijer estimated the spill at about 146 tons.

Tree proposal may get axed

SAN PEDRO, Calif. (AP) — A proposal to dress up downtown Los Angeles with a temporary three-acre forest for the 1984 Olympics may die on the vine, because officials fear residents may become too attached to the trees.

The Tree People, a Beverly Hills-based ecology group, has proposed planting a forest on vacant land at Fourth and Hill streets, near the new financial district on Bunker Hill.

The land is controlled by the city's Community Redevelopment ommission, but isn't slated for development for eight years.

Once the Olympics are over, the Tree People will pack up their trees and go elsewhere, said Andrew Lipkis, the director of the ecology group that plans to plant a million trees around Los Angeles before the Olympics.

But commissioners, confronted with the proposal Wednesday at their meeting in San Pedro, said they fear the lush greenery and grassy walks will become rooted in the hearts of residents. That, they suggested, could cause problems, when the city wants to develop the land commercially.

Lipkis denied that would happen.

"It would be something else if we were just going to cut them down at the end," he told commissioners. "As long as people know we're going to reuse everything, I don't think you would see people chaining themselves to trees."

State governments boost their tax rates to offset cuts

WASHINGTON (AP) — The impact of federal tax cuts is being partly offset by state governments, which are boosting their own rates to overcome financial problems triggered largely by the recession.

New state taxes enacted or nearing final action this year total at least $15.7 billion — more than half the $30 billion federal income tax cut going in effect today, concludes an Associated Press survey of the 50 states and the District of Columbia.

State increases account for only part of the new bills facing taxpayers. Local taxes, too, are on the rise. Overall, these added burdens will surely tend to offset the economic stimulus President Reagan is hoping for in the final chapter of his three-year tax cut at the federal level.

The most recent estimate by the congressional Joint Economic Committee found 59 percent of the country's cities running deficits in 1982 and facing tax increases or radical service cuts this year.

Among the states with the biggest financial problems:

California: Already has enacted a gasoline tax increase that will cost motorists about $1 billion this year. The state still faces nearly $1 billion in deficits and has a standby sales tax boost which will tap citizens for about $850 million if it is triggered in November. Meanwhile, the Republican governor and Democratic Legislature are still battling over more permanent fixes. Although the final formula may take some time, all sides are agreed on about $700 million in new taxes that are expected to be enacted this year.

Florida: Increased its sales tax last year to generate a new $750 million annually. In a special session this March, legislators raised various fuel and license taxes and fees to raise another $250 million. Another increase in the gasohol tax will create $3.5 million, and higher motor vehicle tags will generate $5 million. Still to be considered this year is a recommendation from Gov. Bob Graham to raise $500 million to balance a $11.45 billion budget for 1984.

Illinois: Pending in the Legislature are increases that include $713 million on individual income, $110 million on corporate income, $280 million on sales and $393 million on gasoline. Big boosts in licenses and fees also are being considered.

Indiana: A special session of the Legislature in December raised personal income and sales taxes enough to raise an extra $1.8 billion this year.

Adoption no serious cause of emotionalism

Dear Dr. Solomon: My husband and I have filled out an application to adopt a child. What I would like to know is whether adopted children tend to have more psychological problems than other children. Do you have any information on this? — Mrs. J.A., Kansas City, Mo.

Dear Mrs. A.: Adoption does not appear to be a serious cause of emotional problems in children. Researchers from the Case Western Reserve University School of Medicine in Cleveland have reported on a study of more than 5,000 patients seen at a psychiatric clinic over a 10-year period. Somewhat more than 100 of these patients were found to have been adopted as children. There were no significant differences between the adopted and non-adopted patients in regard to their psychiatric diagnosis.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I worked in a shipyard during World War II and I know that I handled asbestos during that time. I have not done that kind of work for about 35 years. I have regular physical examinations and I have not had any trouble with my lungs. Also, I have never smoked. Can I still get lung cancer from asbestos? — Tony, Midland, Texas

Dear Tony: According to Dr. Lawrence R. Goodman, of the Hahnemann Medical College and Hospital in Philadelphia, there is usually a 15- to 20-year period between exposure to asbestos and the first signs of disease. Since 35 years have passed since you last worked with asbestos, there appears to be little likelihood that you will develop lung cancer. I assume that you will continue to have periodic physical examinations.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I think you should be commended for emphasizing that old age is not a disease and that people should not try to explain why a person isn't feeling well simply by saying that he or she is old. But what I would like to know is whether good physical health during a person's earlier years means that the person will remain alert and mentally sharp in later years. Agnes, Tampa, Fla.

Dear Agnes: It seems logical that there would be an association between good physical health and mental alertness, but no such relationship has as yet been documented. In fact, Dr. Joseph A Brody, of the National Institute on Aging, says there are no identifiable risk factors to distinguish patients with senile dementia from the rest of the population. Specifically, Dr. Brody notes, there is no evidence that a person's medical or psychiatric history influences the likelihood that senile dementia will develop in later years.

More women than men are identified as having senile dementia, but even this fact may simply be a reflection of the fact that there are more women than men in the elderly population.

For Bill, Anchorage, Alaska: I believe you are confusing cancer of the prostate with enlargement of the prostate, which is quite common. More than 50 percent of all men in the United States who are over 40 years of age have noncancerous enlargement of the prostate.
