Officials: Low oil prices likely into '99

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

Low oil prices, created by a world oil glut, are likely to prevail well into 1999, unless there is a Middle East conflict, according to officials with the Department of Energy. Continuing low oil prices could also have a severe economic impact on the Permian Basin.

"The service companies are already impacted and will be impacted even more if oil prices stay low," said Morris Burns, executive vice president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association.

Burns, noting that the income of producers would be stretched by low oil prices, said more drilling rigs and workover rigs would be stacked. "When lifting costs exceed oil prices, operators will let drilling and remedial work slide. It will be a slowdown that will impact the entire Permian Basin."

It has already impacted companies like FWA Drilling which has only three rigs out of 20 marketable rigs running. "Extended low prices will keep drilling down, create intense competition and result in some companies going out of business," said Don Laxton, vice president of FWA. "We have already had to lay off roughnecks for 12 rigs. We have tool pushers drilling and drillers roughnecking on the three remaining rigs we have running."

Laxton said other drilling contractors are facing similar conditions. "Most drilling contractors I know are down 50 percent or more. We can only hope that natural gas prices stay up."

Predictions of continuing low oil prices are based on the failure of OPEC and partners to make promised cuts in oil production. According to the Wall Street Journal, the four primary nations involved in the pledged production cuts — Saudi Arabia, Venezuela, Kuwait and the United Arab Republic — all failed to live up to their promise. Non-OPEC producers Norway, Mexico and Russia also failed to make the necessary cuts.

"OPEC members just can't keep their big spigots shut," read the first paragraph of the Wall Street Journal story, which called the failure to make cuts "perplexing." Michael Rothman, a senior analyst quoted in the story, said compliance should have been higher given the severity of the oil glut and low oil prices. "This is the biggest glut since 1986." Since last October oil prices have fallen 32 percent.

Police to 'brake' drivers of running red lights

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Officials and law enforcement agencies in Midland and Odessa are teaming up to reduce the number of drivers running red lights in both cities.

Midland Mayor Bobby Burns, Odessa Mayor Mike Atkins, Midland Chief of Police John Urby and Odessa Chief of Police James Jenkins Monday unveiled the "Red For A Reason" public awareness campaign at the Center for Energy and Economic Diversification.

The campaign came about "because of the requests and concerns of the public," Atkins said. "As we've gotten busier, we've developed the bad habit of thinking we can save a few seconds running a red light. But running a red light doesn't save any time and it can cause death and property damage."

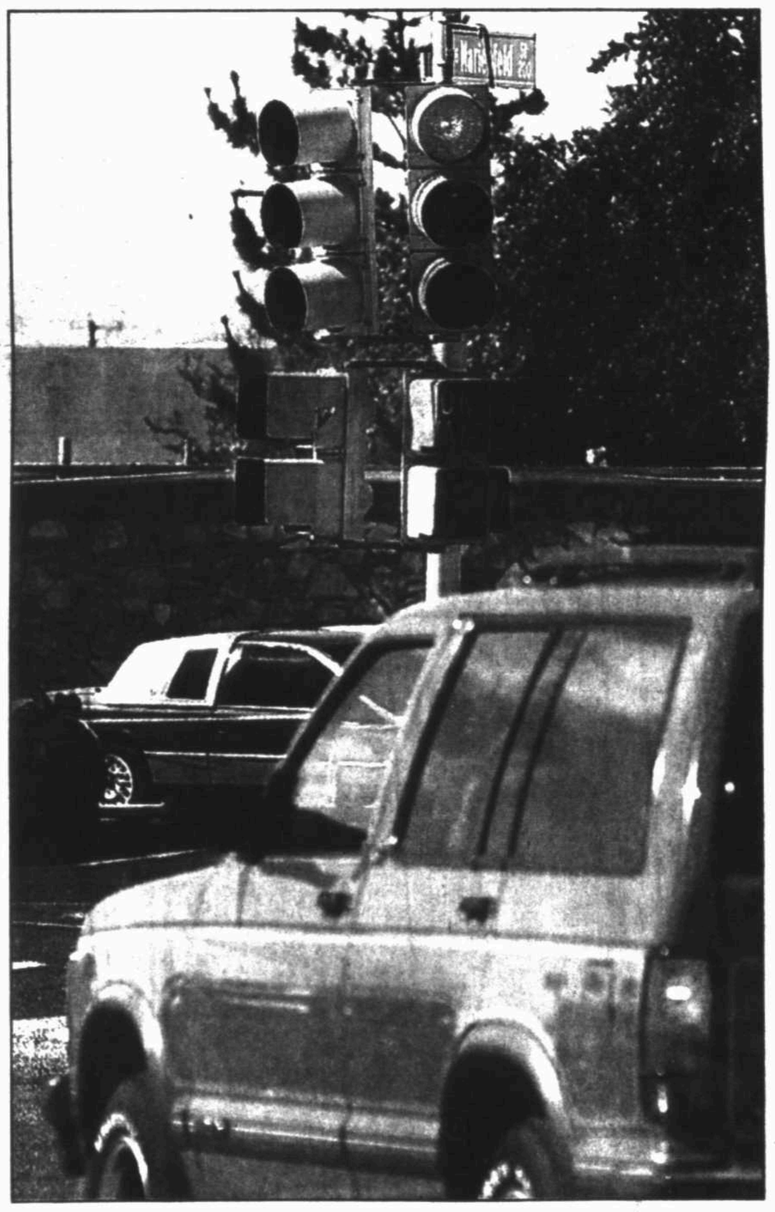

Burns said Midland and Odessa have not been immune to the nationwide pattern of more drivers running red lights, with 22 percent of all fatal accidents nationwide caused by someone running a red light.

"Midland and Odessa are not unique in that, but we see ourselves as a first class set of cities," he said. "Speeding up saves only a few seconds and could cost a life. We need to get back to the habit of stopping at red lights."

Urby said his department's five traffic patrolmen, when not busy with accidents, will focus on this 60-day campaign while on duty and when they're not on call, taking a zero-tolerance policy and issuing tickets to drivers who run a red light.

He said Midland police will focus on intersections with high accident counts — Garfield and Golf Course, Andrews Highway and Midland Drive, Midland Drive and Wadley, Midkiff and Wall, and Illinois and Midkiff — as well as intersections

Commissioners discuss raise in sheriff's budget

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

A precursor to next week's political skirmish over Midland County's disputed Fiscal Year 1999 budget loomed Monday in County Commissioners' Court when Sheriff Gary Painter argued for heightened employee benefits, including a cost-of-living adjustment (COLA).

"We have not had cost-of-living increases of any significance for quite some time," Painter told the five-member court.

The sheriff proposed an across-the-board 5 percent pay raise for the county's 500 hired and appointed employees and elected officials.

"I am not advocating a tax increase," he said.

Painter's proposals, which were at times in contrast to elements of the $20-million budget developed by County Judge Jeff Norwood, were endorsed by District Attorney Al Schorre.

Painter proposed that the commissioners:

- Consider a 5 percent COLA for county workers and officials.
- Maintain medical benefits at the "present level as not to increase out-of-pocket expenses or lower employees earnings."
- Return retirement benefits to the county's $2.50 "level of contribution" per each employee's $1 contribution. The county's current per-dollar contribution is $1.75.

An increase in wages and benefits, Painter said, would help ensure retention of experienced employees, cut down on retraining needed for new workers, make inroads into moonlighting, and "deliver valuable services to the public with knowledgeable, experienced staffs."

Schorre noted that he and Midland's Texas district-court judges, who are salaried by the state, "are very supportive of the sheriff's comments" in encouraging the commissioners to "take a real look" at employee wages and benefits, including "meaningful cost-of-living" raises and "retirement (income)

Big Spring corrections officer shoots, kills inmate during escape attempt

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

A Mexico native serving a prison term in Big Spring on felony convictions in this country was shot and killed while trying to escape from the privately-run Cornell Corrections Centers in that city, prison officials said.

At 4:20 a.m. Saturday, a warning alarm sounded and guards came to the eastern side of the Interstate Unit and found the 26-year-old inmate scaling the inside of the outermost wall of the two-wall perimeter, said Dale Brown, regional director for Cornell.

The Interstate Unit is a converted Ramada Inn hotel alongside Interstate 20 and is surrounded by two tall fences topped with razor wire. There are three facilities in the Cornell system in Big Spring, each of which houses federal prisoners who have been convicted of felony charges.

"He was told to get down, repeatedly — in both English and Spanish," Brown said.

Officers were urging the inmate to get down off the fence when he managed to get across the razor wire and began scaling down the outside of the final fence.

"He was outside the perimeter of the institution at that time," Brown said.

A warning shot was fired, but the escapee continued to make his way down the high fence.

Finally, a guard fired one shot at the escapee to stop him.

"Unfortunately, it was a fatal wound," Brown said.

The name of the inmate is not being released and prison officials are working with Mexican Consulate officials to try and locate the man's next of kin in Mexico.

The inmate was transported to Scenic Mountain Medical Center in Big Spring where he was later pronounced dead.

There are different rules that apply to escaping inmates regarding the use of force, Brown said.

"These are people already convicted of a felony ... when they're trying to escape you have to assume that they are desperate and dangerous to the public," he said.

The officer who fired the shot is scheduled to receive counseling to help with the emotional impact of killing another person.

"It's a difficult thing in our business, but our job is to keep them in the institution's perimeter," he said.

Israeli rescuer Gil Rainer gives flowers to Sammy Ng'ang'a Sunday in a Nairobi hospital. Ng'ang'a was found alive after being buried for 36 hours in the collapsed building next to the U.S. Embassy in Nairobi. Rainer was the first rescuer to reach Ng'ang'a in the rubble.

Survivor never doubted help would arrive

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Sammy Ng'ang'a took stock.

In the blackness, he could see nothing but knew his left leg was pinned — broken, it later turned out.

Blood poured down his face from deep gashes on his forehead and tongue. Some teeth were missing.

He patted his pockets. Nothing but some matches.

He fired one up and looked around.

Only moments before, the 48-year-old scrap metal dealer had been visiting a friend next door to the American Embassy in downtown Nairobi. Then everything exploded.

Now he was trapped in a small clearing near a stairwell at the edge of a gaping hole. A wire cable dangled nearby.

The clearing was no more than 4 feet high and a few feet across. The match's flicker didn't reach to the bottom of the hole.

Ng'ang'a freed his leg and grabbed the cable to haul himself away from the hole. Then he rolled his coat into a pillow and drifted off to sleep, never doubting help would come.

When it did, in the form of a crack Israeli rescue team calling out for anyone alive, he was startled to hear another voice nearby: a woman's.

"Amesema nini?" she asked in Swahili. "What did

Rescuers continue the race to find survivors

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Buoyed by the sound of tapping, rescuers heaved chunks of rubble aside Monday in a desperate effort to get to survivors of the U.S. Embassy bombing in Kenya. Police investigating the twin bombing at the embassy in Tanzania arrested several people.

As Secretary of State Madeleine Albright announced a $2 million reward for information leading to the conviction of "the cowards that committed this act," the hunt for the terrorists and the search for victims intensified.

Eleven Americans who had come to Kenya in peace began their last journey home in coffins Monday. A 12th American, married to a Kenyan, will be buried in her adopted homeland. The vast majority of the more than 200 dead and nearly 5,000 injured in both bombings Friday were Kenyans.

On Monday, three cranes and two bulldozers lifted pieces of rubble from the collapsed Ufundi Cooperative House next to the embassy, where weary rescuers said they heard tapping inside the building in the morning.

"As long as there is the slightest chance of any person being found alive, every moment up there is precious," said Nina Galbe, spokeswoman for the International Committee of the Red Cross. "We can't stop until the last stone is unturned."

Titus Ngwele, Red Cross coordinator at the scene, said an Israeli rescue team sank a microphone into the rubble late Monday afternoon to check whether Rose was breathing.

In the first confirmed detentions in either country, Assistant Police Commissioner Wilson Mwansasu announced that "there were some suspects arrested ... in different parts of Dar es Salaam," Tanzania's capital. The detainees were "connected to others," he said, but refused to elaborate on the charges.

Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs Susan Rice said about a dozen people had been detained for questioning in Dar es Salaam and advised reporters, "Don't attach too much importance to it."

Mwansasu refused to identify the nationalities of those arrested. But another U.S. official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Sudanese and Iraqi citizens were among those detained.

It was not known who was behind the blasts. News media received claims of responsibility in the name of the "Islamic Army for the Liberation of Holy Shrines" and the "Army for the Liberation of Islamic Shrines." The claims could not be confirmed and may have come from the same source.

U.S., Kenyan and Tanzanian investigators were silent on what evidence they may have recovered from the blast sites.

Israel army radio, in a report from Nairobi, said investigators suspect the bombers used the plastic explosive Semtex, which has been used by a variety of terrorist groups.

"Obviously the first priority is finding people alive and then to recover bodies," said U.S. Embassy spokesman Chris Scharf.

According to the latest Kenyan government figures, 192 people died in the Nairobi bombing, including 12 Americans, and 4,877 were injured; 542 were still hospitalized Monday, 24 in critical condition.

11 Americans killed in bombing sent home

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — The flag-shrouded coffins of 11 Americans killed in the worst terror attack on a U.S. Embassy were solemnly loaded onto a military aircraft Monday to begin their final journey home.

The 12th American victim, Jean Dalizu, who was married to a Kenyan, will be buried in her adopted homeland.

The explosion Friday killed at least 192 people, including the 12 Americans and 33 Kenyans who worked at the embassy, and injured almost 5,000 others. A nearly simultaneous attack on the U.S. Embassy in neighboring Tanzania killed at least 10 people, all Africans.

The Kenyan death toll was lowered Monday from 200 because of a double counting error between Kenyan and U.S. Embassy officials.

As the aluminum coffins were lifted one by one onto the U.S. Air Force C-141 aircraft, U.S. Ambassador Prudence Bushnell covered her heart with her right hand — still bandaged from the injuries she suffered in the blast.

Marine Brig. Gen. Stephen Johnson, Kenyan Foreign Minister Bonaya Godana and his assistant stood at attention nearby. U.S. troops saluted farewell.

Marine and Navy honor guards carried 10 of the coffins, and a special Marine unit carried the remains of fallen comrade Sgt. Jesse N. Aliganga of Tallahassee, Fla.

American and Kenyan flags fluttered in a soft breeze sweet with the perfume of grass and acacia trees. The airport was silent but for a distant rumbling airplane engine.

The most senior American diplomat killed was Consul General Julian Bartley, who died with his 20-year-old son Jay.

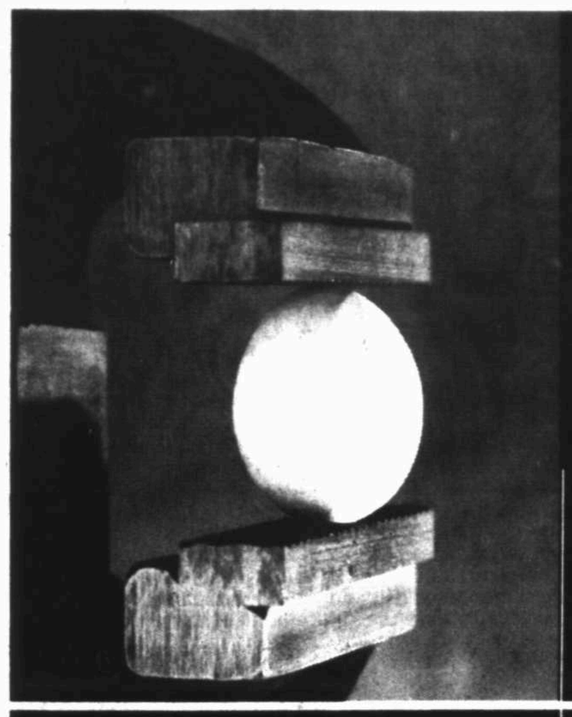

"He had an ability to help people understand that he was there to help. He was known for that throughout his career," U.S. Embassy spokesman Chris Scharf said of the consul general.

Watching the coffins file past, Scharf said he was struck by the enormity of the tragedy.

"I think of the Kenyan secretary who worked in my office," he said. "I think of the young sergeant that lived above me ... Those people are gone. We've suffered a terrible loss."

The bodies of the Americans killed in Nairobi were to be flown to Andrews Air Force Base in Maryland via Ramstein Air Force Base in Germany, where a memorial service was planned.

Arming and ready to fight, Kinshasa prepares for battle

KINSHASA, Congo (AP) — Fingers on triggers, soldiers roam the rutted June 30th Boulevard in Congo's capital. A clattering tank pushes down a side street and troop trucks rumble past.

Blocks away on a dirt patch in front of the main stadium, thousands of young men and women offer to fight as Kinshasa arms for a battle against Tutsi rebels and their alleged allies.

Last week, the Tutsi rebels revolted in the eastern Kivu region and western Congo and the government says the unrest is the work of two neighbors: Rwanda and more recently Uganda.

Although both countries insist they have nothing to do with the revolt, President Laurent Kabila's nationalist rhetoric broadcast repeatedly on state radio and television is striking a chord with Kinshasa's disenchanted population.

"Those people want the entire Congo to be their colony. They want to dominate central Africa," says Kabila, who seized power 14 months ago. "A defense force to be called the People's Self Defense force will be set up and weapons will be distributed."

Over the weekend, as many as 5,000 men and women enlisted in militia units and the army with a vow to defend Kinshasa. More and more civilians are pledging to take up arms, and some are already wielding machetes and toting AK-47 assault rifles.

Brewing enmities with Rwanda are fueling support for Kabila's new war, despite widespread resentment toward his regime — which many critics say has done little to help the people of Congo.

"I'm ready to fight for Congo," says Patience Yowa, a soft-spoken government bureaucrat who believes Kinshasa residents will fight to the death for their city.

"I want to see the day when we plant our flag on Rwandan soil," she said with a smile, while hanging laundry out to dry in her yard.

Kabila blames Rwanda for instigating the rebellion and accuses Uganda of sending soldiers and tanks into Congo to support the rebels.

The move to recruit fighters, part propaganda to whip up support against Rwanda and part defensive pragmatism, comes as Kabila struggles to regroup his military.

Before the rebellion, Rwandan troops who earlier had been in support of Kabila formed the corps of Congo's elite forces. But Kabila ordered them out of the country without explanation late last month.

Congo's former chief army commander, Rwandan James Kabari, was fired by Kabila and now appears to be leading the rebellion.

With many of his loyalist troops leaving Kinshasa and heading to the front lines in the east and west, Kinshasa's defense may be left to the paramilitary police and the public.

Kabila's battle calls, however, could turn Kinshasa into a dangerous place. Arms and poverty could be a volatile combination.

Despite Kabila's pledges of economic renewal after years of "kleptocracy" and decay under the late dictator Mobutu Sese Seko, Kinshasa and the whole of Congo remains a dramatically poor country.

The vast majority of young men are jobless, and those who do have work say they support Kabila's war only because they believe Rwanda is invading their country.

"If it's the Rwandans who are doing this, then if we must all die to stop them, we will all die," says Alomo Aron, a self-employed carpenter who earns about $50 a month.

Japan's opposition takes aim at Obuchi

TOKYO (AP) — New Prime Minister Keizo Obuchi had a rough debut Monday in Parliament when opposition parties clamored for fresh elections and accused his Cabinet of being incapable of rescuing Japan's economy.

After its disastrous showing in upper house elections July 12, Obuchi's governing Liberal Democratic Party needs cooperation from rival parties to pass key economic revival legislation.

That will be no easy task, judging from the atmosphere Monday when Obuchi fielded questions in Parliament for the first time since his July 30 election as prime minister.

"What qualifications and ability does this new Cabinet have? Without new policies, there will be no reforms. We must dissolve the Parliament," lawmaker Kansei Nakano, a member of Japan's largest opposition party, the Democratic Party, said as several lawmakers broke into applause.

In opinion polls, Obuchi's Cabinet has received less than 30 percent support. Japanese media have portrayed the new prime minister as colorless and unimaginative.

After gains in the July elections, opposition parties are attacking Obuchi's economic policies, saying they will be implemented by the same people who brought on Japan's recession.

The LDP has a majority in the more powerful lower house of Parliament, but the opposition can block the passage of urgentlay needed economic legislation in the upper house.

Obuchi tried to deflect calls for early lower house elections by promising tax cuts to boost consumer confidence and to clean up the bad loans plaguing Japan's banking system.

The opposition directed its sharpest criticisms at new Finance Minister Kiichi Miyazawa, a former prime minister who served as finance chief from 1986 to 1988.

OIL: Prices could stay low well into 1999

(From 1A)

one-half their promise caused crude oil for September delivery to fall as much as 55 cents to $13.25 a barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange, the lowest price since July 20. In London, September Brent crude oil fell as much as 32 cents to $12.27 a barrel on the International Petroleum Exchange.

"There is nothing that can save this market right now," said Tom Bentz, senior vice president for energy at Cresvale International LLC in New York.

According to the U.S. Energy Department's Short-Term Energy Outlook, a monthly analysis by the department's Energy Information Agency, expected supply reductions by oil-exporting countries won't be enough to significantly raise prices over the next few months. Current projections have the price of oil remaining below $14 a barrel until the fourth quarter of 1999. Crude oil for September delivery fell 75 cents to $13.05 a barrel in afternoon trading.

While over-production overshadowed an impasse between Iraq and the United States over weapons inspections, military action which is seen as a real possibility this time around could send oil prices upward overnight. Military action was very near in February when Iraq blocked inspection of certain sites, and only a last minute agreement brokered by UN Secretary General Kofi Annan, averted a U.S.-led military strike.

Iraq again last week blocked on-site inspections of suspected weapons sites by the UN Special Commission, charged with overseeing the dismantling of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction, causing the Commission to suspend most of its operations.

The U.S. is prepared to use force if Iraq continues to threaten the stability of the Middle East, U.S. Secretary of State Madeleine Albright and Defense Secretary William Cohen said over the weekend.

"We have a very formidable force" in the Gulf that Iraqi President Saddam Hussein "ought not consider trying to contest," Cohen said on ABC's "This Week" program. Increased oil shipments from Iraq, which now accounts for 2 percent of the world supply, have also undermined efforts to stabilize prices.

If tension rises and the U.S. moves more aircraft carriers to the Gulf then oil prices could rise by between 50 cents and $1, though any rise "would be short-lived," said one analyst.

The U.S. now has one aircraft carrier in the Persian Gulf, according to the Defense Department. At the height of the tensions in February, two U.S. aircraft carriers and one British carrier were in the Gulf.

However, some traders have speculated that crude oil prices will probably remain little change unless there is military action in the Gulf. "Until the bombs start falling, no one's going to react to the Iraq situation," said Andy Buttars, a broker with ED&F Man International Ltd. "If that happened, oil prices could rise a couple of dollars."

Another factor short of war that could turn oil prices upward include: A meeting later this month, of Opec and non-Opec producers to reevaluate production cuts, and a very cold winter.

Venezuela, the biggest supplier of crude oil to the U.S., said it's still producing about 3 million barrels a day, even though it promised to cut output to 2.8 million barrels a day by July 1. Officials at the state-run oil company said they needed more time "to phase in" the cuts. The South American producer is facing a severe fiscal deficit of $3.3 billion as a result of low oil prices.

BUDGET: Sheriff asks for raises for employees that they can live on ... that will support them.

"They really can't count on Social Security (payments)," Schorre said.

The principal function of county government, Schorre said, is "to keep the justice system going" and that includes maintaining daily law-enforcement forces, the jails, the courts, the prosecution staff, probation offices, and the County Clerk's and District Clerk's office.

Norwood, the county's chief fiscal officer, asked Schorre if he would want to raise property taxes.

"No," Schorre replied.

"All they (employees) want is to make a living and take care of their families," Painter said.

Norwood said that the county can "provide services at a quality level without increasing taxes if we have the courage" to be efficient.

In his proposed budget, which the commissioners are to discuss with other elected officials and department heads and possibly amend next Monday, Aug. 17, in the Midland County Courthouse, Norwood is proposing a 2.5 percent cost-of-living pay raise.

Norwood said he took $25 million in departmental requests and trimmed them to his proposed $20-million budget.

"I would like to hear from elected officials and department heads ... to hear their versions," said Commissioner Louisa Valencia, who said that "the judge (Norwood) did this (budget proposal) without consulting us (commissioners)."

Norwood said "the proposed budget is just a starting point."

The county's fiscal year starts on Oct. 1.

In arguing for the 5 percent pay raise, Painter noted that a 1996 Ray & Associates Salary Study "stated that Midland County has not kept pace with other (public and private) employees in this area." Three years earlier, Midland County was 9.5 percent "behind other" employers, Painter said.

Midland County did allow its workforce a 5 percent COLA in 1996.

Painter said that "merit raises were promised and budgeted" for 1998 but that those "funds were spent, leaving the employees without a performance (pay) increase.

"In this decade," Painter said, "we have had only two increases for cost of living" while "other (Midland taxing) entities are giving cost-of-living increases.

"There's no reason why the employees of Midland County should suffer simply because the Midland County commissioners refuse to look at the cost of living," Painter said later Monday. "We're hurt by it. It creates problems for employees and for their families."

In addition to the 2.5 percent COLA, Norwood's proposed budget includes some cuts in personnel, including deletion of the District Attorney's Warrants Division and the non-funding of Human Resources Director Sue Gambill's $45,400 annual salary.

"Obviously, when you refocus priorities, not everything can be funded," Norwood said of his proposed elimination of Ms. Gambill's job, which was created last year by the Commissioners' Court. "It's just one of those things that happens when you refocus priorities."

Of his proposed deleting of the District Attorney's Warrants Division, Norwood said that he has "always been opposed to putting the misdemeanor warrants service under the District Attorney's Office.

"Typically and historically, that job goes to the Sheriff's Office," Norwood said, "and that's where it should be. The District Attorney wants to continue to build his office and take on those additional duties, but it is a duplication of efforts to have two warrants-service offices": one in the Sheriff's Office and one in the District Attorney's Office.

"It's a simple efficiency measure" for misdemeanor, felony, and civil warrants to be served by the sheriff's deputies, Norwood said.

"We've debated this point for the last three years" about the time when Norwood first went into office in 1995. "I don't anticipate that the court will follow it. But I think it is the right thing to do."

Ms. Valencia said that on Aug. 17 she would make the motions to "reinstate" Ms. Gambill's position and to reinstate the District Attorney's Warrants Division and that she would propose a 3 percent COLA.

Commissioner James Brezina said that he would support both Ms. Gambill's position and the District Attorney's Warrants Division.

"I will at least go 3 percent" on the COLA, Brezina said.

At least three votes on the five-member court are required to adopt any order or to allocate funds. Serving with Norwood, Brezina, and Ms. Valencia on the court are Commissioners Guy McCrary and Henry Goulet.

Brezina also said that he would be in favor of adopting a $2.50 contribution per employee dollar in building up the employees' retirement funds.

"I'll try to do what's best for the whole community, for the employees and the taxpayers, try to find a happy medium," Brezina said.

Of Norwood's penchant to reduce taxes and to become a "friend of the taxpayer," Brezina said that Norwood apparently is "just building up a political resume."

"I'm leaving office; I don't have a resume," Norwood said. "I'm not running for anything."

"I have proposed a budget that I believe is very responsible," Norwood contended following the day's session. "It meets the needs of the citizens and provides all of the services that the citizens expect from county government."

STOP: Campaign to 'brake' bad habit with low traffic counts but high accident rates — "A" and Texas, Marienfeld and Michigan and Industrial and Midkiff. Other intersections will also be looked at, he said.

Since 1994, Urby said, accidents have increased 15 percent. In 1997, Midland saw 2,925 accidents, with injuries reported in 1,281 of them. Urby said 38 percent of the accidents occurred at intersections and were attributed to drivers running red lights, following too close or to driver inattention.

Jenkins said his city has a bigger problem, recording seven fatalities at intersections last year and 11 recorded to date this year. In 1997, Odessa recorded 3,125 accidents, of which 55 percent or 1,703 accidents, were at intersections and there were 1,888 injuries resulting from accidents.

"The mentality has become that, after a light turns red, the next three cars can go through. We need to change that mindset," Jenkins said, noting that the two cities combined had about 6,000 accidents last year. "In terms of medical expenses and property damages, those accidents cost $61.5 million, not including lost wages and other spin-off costs."

Jenkins and Urby both asked for the public's cooperation in obeying red lights and reducing the number of accidents and injuries.

Urby said a driver is charged with running a red light when the officer observes a vehicle entering the intersection when the light has turned red. A yellow light, he said, is a caution light warning the driver to stop.

"You have to be able to stop safely and operate your vehicle in a safe manner," he said. Addressing concerns that a driver would be rear-ended stopping at a red light, he said, "the driver behind you also has to operate safely, maintain a safe following distance and stop safely. You need to drive at a safe speed so you can respond to changes in traffic signals."

Drivers cited for running red lights most often say the light was yellow or wasn't red or they were in a hurry.

The goal, he said, is "reduce the number of accidents, increase public awareness of the need to stop at red lights, and make Midland and Odessa safer."

SURVIVOR: Man never doubted help would come

(From 1A)

he say?"

"They are trying to save us," he told her.

Ng'ang'a spent 36 hours trapped in the rubble, but he never lost hope. And he did his best to see that the woman still known to the world only as Rose didn't either.

He was perfect for the job. A cheerful stoic, Ng'ang'a came across as the plucky kind of fellow who takes what life dishes out without whimpering. He accepts — and survives.

When he realized his plight, Ng'ang'a said, his thoughts turned to stories he'd read about people trapped for days in collapsed buildings.

By his reckoning, he said, his rescuers were early.

"I was expecting to wait two or three days," he said from his hospital bed Monday as the search for the now-silent Rose grew more desperate.

Crews last heard Rose speak at 3 p.m. Sunday, but tapping was heard inside the wreckage early Monday, raising hopes that she and another woman identified by the Red Cross as Jane might still be found alive.

Friday morning, Ng'ang'a had dropped by the Ufundi Cooperative House to see a business associate. The friend's office was on the ground floor, perhaps 60 feet from the embassy across a parking lot.

Around 10:30 a.m. they heard a boom. People rushed to the windowed corridor facing the embassy to see what had happened.

They heard what sounded like a short burst of machine-gun fire. Seconds later the world around them blew up.

At least a dozen people were in front of Ng'ang'a and took the force of the blast. "I was lucky," he said. "I was not hit directly."

But he was trapped, bleeding and alone. By the time he heard the first voices, Ng'ang'a had lost all track of time — an hour seemed like days. It was Saturday.

"Is anybody alive?" someone called.

Ng'ang'a first thought he was dreaming. Then he cried out: "Yes! Yes! Yes!"

"What's your name?" they shouted.

They heard me, he thought.

"Ng'ang'a!"

Over and over they called his name and he replied to help them find him.

That's when Rose first spoke.

She wanted water, Ng'ang'a said, and she was frantic to get out. She asked to be the first one rescued.

But Rose and Jane were trapped in a much more difficult section of wreckage. The Israelis could reach Ng'ang'a; they couldn't reach the women.

Ng'ang'a tried to reassure Rose: "If I go, I said, they will come next for you."

Hours went by as the Israelis tunneled through the wrecked four-story building.

The work was painstaking. One wrong move and the rubble could collapse further, crushing the survivors.

Suddenly, they broke through to Ng'ang'a's burrow. Rescuer Gil Wiener stretched out his hand. Not yet.

The Israelis kept at it. Drilling, digging, gently nudging debris aside as the hours ticked by.

Finally, twisting through the rubble, they hauled him out Saturday night to a waiting ambulance, almost exactly 36 hours after the bombing.

Unlike many of his countrymen, Ng'ang'a isn't a religious man — or a superstitious one. He said he had no premonitions of disaster and didn't pray during his ordeal.

He had simply waited in calm confidence for help to come. He hoped Rose could do the same.

As he called out his farewell, he realized he knew nothing about her — not even her last name. Dozens of Kenyans were still missing Monday, and no one had come forward to claim Rose, or to say who she is.

"I told her: I'm gone," he said. "And they are coming for you next."

PRISON: Inmate shot, killed

(From 1A)

Cornell was not operating the Big Spring Correctional Centers in 1992 when a woman was taken hostage at knife point by two Mexican nationals who were inmates.

The inmates managed to get a vehicle and drove as far as Midland when Department of Public Safety troopers shot out the tires, bringing the vehicle to a halt.

One of the prisoners brought the woman out with the knife still at her throat and was shot and killed by a DPS officer.

Cornell has been operating the facilities for the past 18 months and this is the first escape attempt in that time, Brown said.

Fountains of Paris become swimming pools as temperatures soar

PARIS (AP) — The elegant fountains of Paris became swimming pools for the day and sweating tourists lined up at museums wearing Napoleon-like hats made of city maps.

But, really, ice cubes in the red wine?

After one of the wettest summers on record, temperatures soared to 100 degrees in the French capital on Monday, and even higher elsewhere in France.

The heat wave extended across Europe, prompting British bookmakers to slash odds from 20-1 to 16-1 for bets that temperatures in Britain would hit a record-breaking 100 degrees before the end of the summer.

In Paris, office workers and tourists stripped down and splashed around in fountains by the Eiffel Tower and the Louvre museum. Others sought respite in shady parks, where space was at a premium.

People hawking cold refreshments on street corners were doing a roaring trade.

At the Le President cafe, waiters were seen putting ice cubes in red wine, flirting with the sacrilegious.

AP photo

People relax or walk in the water of the Louvre museum in Paris Monday. Elegant fountains have become impromptu swimming pools in Paris, where temperatures climbed to 100 degrees, the hottest day this summer.

Susan Bentham, a 21-year-old tourist from Lancaster, England, danced on a hot pavement after emerging from the fountain next to the giant pyramid by the Louvre.

"We were going to go into the Louvre, but we saw the queue so decided to rest here," she said. "Standing in the water is better than standing in the hot queue."

Suzanne Deme, an 18-year-old from Senegal, lay in the shade nearby with a bottle of water.

"With this heat, you can't do anything. The sun, it beats down and gives you a headache."

On Sunday, when Paris temperatures reached 97 degrees, 6,000 people flocked to L'Aquaboulevard, an aquatic park in southern Paris, waiting in line for up to four hours to get in. Similar crowds were expected early in the week.

In Holland, the heat sent 50,000 people to packed beaches along the North Sea coast Monday, triggering an 85-mile traffic jam.

In Austria, a chemical tanker exploded Sunday in Linz in a blast blamed on the heat. In eastern Europe, a heat wave has reportedly claimed at least 20 lives in Romania, buckled streetcar tracks in Hungary and smashed temperature records throughout the region.

In northern Spain, authorities warned tourists against dehydration.

In Paris and other major French cities, heat is increasingly being accompanied by pollution.

With very little wind, an early-morning smog shrouded the Eiffel Tower, and authorities warned asthma-sufferers and the elderly not to venture out for too long.

Police urged motorists to leave their vehicles at home and take public transport, or just drive slowly.

Weather forecasts say the heat wave will last a few more days before dropping to more moderate levels.

Indians fight to save gold-rich Amazon paradise

EL DORADO, Venezuela (AP) — The Pemon Indians rolled a huge log across the highway to block traffic. The tribe, some dressed in red loin cloths and their faces streaked with paint, was defending its piece of paradise.

Tensions are rising in Venezuela's Amazon rain forests, where Indians and environmentalists are clashing with mining companies and government officials who want to exploit some of the richest gold deposits in Latin America and build towns and tourist hotels in the wilderness.

Rapid economic development "is going to mean the death of the jungles and of the indigenous people," said Pemon leader Jose Luis Gonzalez.

Workers with chain saws and bulldozers recently started cutting a swath through the forest in southeastern Venezuela for a 470-mile high-voltage electricity line that will be the lifeline of the projects.

During the last two weeks, about 400 Indians trying to stop the line periodically blocked traffic on a highway used by construction crews as national guardsmen stood by in riot gear.

The $110 million line is to provide hydroelectric power to northern Brazil, remote communities in eastern Venezuela and scores of gold mining companies eager to work the pristine Imataca rain forest reserve.

They're being drawn by gold deposits thought to be worth billions of dollars and that over the centuries have attracted explorers such as Sir Walter Raleigh looking for the legendary golden city of "El Dorado."

Last year, President Rafael Caldera authorized large-scale logging and gold and diamond mining in nearly half of Imataca.

Environmentalists and Indians say they aren't opposed to all development in the jungles, but the government plan is too much, too fast, and officials won't properly regulate the mining and logging companies.

The 9 million acre reserve — twice the size of Switzerland — sits in southern Bolivar state and boasts a variety of wildlife that few places in the world can match: jaguars, pumas, red howler monkeys, bearded bluebells, neon-colored butterflies and the world's largest eagle, the endangered harpy.

Imataca "is one of the most gorgeous endemic forests I've ever seen," said Mary Lou Goodwin of the Audubon Society in Venezuela. Nature lovers and scientists from around the world come to visit it.

The power line also will slice through Canaima National Park, one of about 100 U.N.-designated World Heritage Sites. The park is home to the mysterious flat-topped mountains that inspired Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's classic adventure story "The Lost World."

Government officials see the region as a vast untapped source of wealth that could help alleviate the poverty that afflicts more than half of Venezuela's population. Thousands of jobs would be created through projects including a proposed 500-room hotel to be built on sacred Pemon lands in Canaima.

Authorities deny their plans will wreak widespread environmental and cultural destruction. They contend the damage should actually decrease since large companies will help control thousands of illegal miners who poison rivers with mercury, knock down trees with high-pressure water hoses and create lawless boom towns rife with drugs, prostitution and violence.

"There are a lot of unfounded fears," said the Environmental Ministry's Santos Carrasco.

Environmentalists and Indians say they aren't opposed to all development in the jungles, but the government plan is too much, too fast, and officials won't properly regulate the mining and logging companies.

Bringing large-scale development to still mostly unexplored Imataca is "sort of like destroying a treasure chest before you even know what you're destroying," said Atossa Soltani of California-based Amazon Watch.

Bulldozers already have leveled some of the Indians' yucca, corn, banana and pineapple crops. The Pemons and three other tribes say they plan to keep shutting down the highway until the government halts the electricity project.

They also want officials to overturn last year's mining and logging decree, grant them title to what they say are millions of acres of their ancestral lands and recognize their right to decide the future of the region.

Pemon leader Lloyd Henrito said, "We're the owners of this land. We were here before Colombus, but in the eyes of the Venezuelan government we are nothing."

Embassy attacks call out for probe by U.S., action

While it remained unclear who was behind the bombings at two American embassies in the East African nations of Kenya and Tanzania Friday that killed 11 Americans and at least 190 others, a major effort was under way early this week to determine who was responsible.

Several hundred Americans, including more than 100 FBI agents were flown to Africa over the weekend to start the investigation of what White House national security adviser Sandy Berger characterized as "an act of unadulterated evil." He went on to say on "Face the Nation" that ",,, We will pursue every lead that we have until we have tracked these people down and held them accountable."

The twin attacks at the U.S. embassies in Nairobi, Kenya and Dar es Salaam, Tanzania were well-coordinated and, as Defense Secretary William Cohen pointed out, "long in the planning" and "not the act of some isolated individual."

The identity of the culprits must be determined and then appropriate steps taken to bring them to justice for this vicious attack.

As such, the identity of the culprits must be determined and then appropriate steps taken to bring them to justice for this vicious attack. Cohen even pledged that "the U.S. government would strike back if investigators find a terrorist state was responsible."

Several groups had claimed responsibility for the bombings and faxes bearing the name of the "Islamic Army for the Liberation of Holy Shrines" were sent to Radio France Internationale in Paris indicating that the bombings will continue until all American forces and civilians are removed from Islamic countries. The validity of that message had not been confirmed.

Although it remains to be seen whether the investigation reveals the involvement of a terrorist state such as Libya, it is quite obvious that by the way the bombings were carried out the attack was meant to be interpreted as directed at the United States. That means a firm response — whatever form it might take — is essential.

Americans have died as have others in this senseless assault. Now is not the time for a weak response.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, Aug. 12, the 224th day of 1998. There are 141 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

One hundred years ago, on Aug. 12, 1898, the peace protocol ending the Spanish-American War was signed.

On this date:

In 1851, Isaac Singer was granted a patent on his sewing machine.

In 1867, President Andrew Johnson sparked a move to impeach him as he defied Congress by suspending Secretary of War Edwin M. Stanton.

In 1898, Hawaii was formally annexed to the United States.

WILLIAM SAFIRE

Journalism: 'And what in heaven's name is content?'

In olden times, I used to file copy. A stack of cheap beige copy paper was on my desk for this purpose, and to crumple up satisfyingly when I rejected my own lede, or to make paper planes out of when the muse was absent. This was when copy boy was a coveted job for a kid and not a managerial slur. I used to get into arguments with the copy editor. ("I don't care if Shakespeare wrote paint the lily, people say gild the lily.")

Safire

Now there is a movement among upscale copy editors to call themselves language therapists. Copy paper went out with carbon copies, and former copy-paper crumplers now float painfully though the carpal tunnel of love. And I no longer file copy, or even transmit data; ever at the cutting edge of the pointiest cusp, I provide content.

If any word in the English language is hot, buzzworthy and finger-snappingly with-it, surpassing even millennium in both general discourse and insiderese, that word is content. Get used to it, because we won't soon get over it.

"The accent is on content" is an advertising theme that Conde Nast publications has been running for the past 18 months.

When Tina Brown, empress of buzz, left Conde Nast's New Yorker for a Disney affiliate to create a magazine that — living in synergy — would provide nonfiction material to become the basis of movies, she summed up her future with: "It's all about content."

This caused Maureen Dowd, the trend-sensitive Times Op-Ed columnist, to ask: "And what in heaven's name is content? Isn't it just a pretentious word for substance, which was, anyway, a pretentious word for ideas? Can content be synergized the way milk is homogenized?"

Only a few weeks before, a magazine about the media named Brill's Content burst upon the scene. "Steve Brill came up with the idea of content," says Bill Kovach, its external ombudsman and my former Times colleague, "to give the reader the understanding that the purpose of the magazine was to review the content of the writing of nonfiction journalism." To avoid litigation with another publisher threatening to seek an injunction to protect a trademark claim to Content, the proper name was added.

John P. Noon, who made the earlier claim (his Content World Publishing applied for the single-word trademark in 1991), says "we named the magazine Content because it was going to be geared toward people in the content industry. It covers how different types of content can make it into digital media." (If you're planning a publication about questions, be careful — he has trademarked Query.) Another magazine, published in London, Ontario, that describes itself as "paving the way to the information superhighway," is titled Content London and has been in business since 1996.

As used narrowly in the computer world, content means "the information on a Web site"; more broadly, it means "software rather than hardware" or "data or other material to be provided by online services." The phrase online service provider (OSP) — used to describe such firms as America Online, Fujitsu Niftyserve, or Compuserve — led to the term content provider (which is not shorthanded as CP, because some of us remember the Communist Party). "A service provider — Earthlink, Prodigy, AT&T — gives you access, like a pipeline to a destination," says Paul Lewis, an online advertising pioneer. "A content provider is the outfit that offers the stuff you want at the destination."

First use I can find is in the June 1, 1991, Byte, a McGraw-Hill print publication: "Compression will be handled primarily by the content provider." The phrase still requires explanation to the Great Unwashed: reporting in The San Francisco Chronicle about a Ziff-Davis venture, Jerry Carroll wrote: "ZDTV will create 300 new 'content provider' jobs. In case you're wondering what they are, look no further. I'm a provider and what you're reading is content."

Martin Nisenholtz, president of electronic media at The New York Times, recalls the predecessor phrase, information provider, in the days of videotext in the early '80s. "Information provider morphed into content provider," he says, "in the mid-'80s, when it became necessary to include entertainment." The content absorber (that's you, formerly Dear Reader) is undoubtedly experiencing the rush of insight made possible by the prism of lexicography. When information — the name of the highway, the society, even the era — needed a broader term to encompass or subsume entertainment, the carapace of content emerged.

And as the profit-making synergy — that combination of fact and fiction in which the entertaining whole is hoped to be greater than the informative parts — attacks the world of journalism, it has found its identity in the word content.

As a result, the old, narrow, truth-rutted information superhighway has morphed into nothing but a country lane, a tributary of the ever-widening channel of Original Synergy.

Access content before its stuff accesses you. But beware: this is no vogue word or Conde Nast usage. The darkly sweeping reach of content marks this coinage as a true millennialism. When every story is partly true, who can then be false to any man?

Webb points out hostility toward those who fought

The media lie about the use of nerve gas in Vietnam is only the latest of a long string of lies about Vietnam vets in what former Secretary of the Navy James Webb calls "the media's war on Vietnam vets."

Webb, by the way, ought to be persuaded to run for president. He's that rare public figure these days who combines intelligence and courage with a high sense of honor. He is hated by the right people -- feminists, opportunists, political generals and admirals who sell out their men for their own careers, and the average whining leftist. That is a sterling recommendation.

Reese

Webb recently ripped into the subject of the war on Vietnam vets in an article in which he pointed out the hostility toward those who fought has deep roots "in the elite among the old anti-war left whose members not only avoided military service but openly derided those who went to Vietnam as either stupid or evil."

When their claim that the Vietnamese communists had benign intentions was refuted by their Stalinist actions, the anti-war left just lied even more. That is the pattern among the riffraff that makes up today's elite. Many of these despicable people occupy high positions in the media, the universities and, of course, government.

Webb lists several lies repeatedly told about Vietnam veterans and then exposes them. It was claimed, for example, that the war was fought by the poor and the minorities forced to go by the draft. Webb says acidly that while the elite ducked out, the middle class showed up.

Of those who died, 86 percent were white and 12.5 percent were black. Volunteers accounted for 77 percent of the battle deaths.

He upends the lie peddled that Vietnam veterans were "overdecorated" by showing the contrasts between the medals issued in World War II and those in Vietnam. Vietnam soldiers were not overdecorated. They earned their medals the old-fashioned way. They fought bravely and often died for them.

Furthermore, Webb exposes the canard that the Vietnam vet was a disgruntled, disillusioned soldier. In the largest survey ever done of them, a whopping 91 percent in combat said they were glad they served their country, 74 percent said they even enjoyed their time in the military, and two out of three said they would go back to Vietnam -- even if they knew in advance what the outcome would be.

The men who fought in Vietnam were as good as the Americans who fought in any other war. What was different for them was that the country they fought for wasn't as good as it had been in the past. Instead of receiving a well-done, they got spit on by lousy leftists other civilians didn't have the guts to confront.

Webb also lashes Hollywood for its uniformly negative picturing of the American soldier in Vietnam. The American fighting men won the war on the ground. Hanoi admitted it lost 1.1 million soldiers dead plus another 300,000 missing in action. That's against 58,000 American and 254,000 South Vietnamese losses. The war was lost, just as the communists predicted, not in Vietnam but in the American media and on American streets and campuses.

A lot of the anti-war propaganda was fueled by people who pretended to have been in combat in Vietnam. Many of these were fakes. Webb says a new book by B.G. Burkett, "Stolen Valor," looks into 1,700 cases where people distorted or lied about their service in Vietnam.

This book, Webb says, "constitutes a damnation of the major media so great that the CNN-Time story on sarin will take its rightful context as a rare moment when the purveyors of dishonesty got caught, rather than as the journalistic aberration many would like to term it."

Let's start a "Webb for President" movement!

Television used to be welcome guest

What do the following have in common, besides their having died this year: Shari Lewis, Roy Rogers, "Buffalo Bob" Smith, Alan Shepard, Robert Young and Jerome Robbins? The answer is that they all contributed something worthy of our approval, praise and emulation.

It can be dangerous to live in the past, but the loss of such wonderful people within weeks of each other is an occasion to consider the substantial truths they taught and might still teach us.

Thomas

When I was young, my parents never worried that I might learn something bad from "Buffalo Bob" and Shari Lewis. Television was a welcome guest in our home. You could even watch the news as a family. Other shows -- like "Kukla, Fran and Ollie," "Ding Dong School" and "Romper Room" -- taught children right from wrong and instilled positive moral and patriotic values. Some scoff at such things today, but it might be argued that the rejection of those values has led to many of our present predicaments. Then, a stained dress went to the cleaners. Now, it goes to the FBI crime lab.

"Captain Kangaroo," "My Friend Flicka" (and another horse named "Fury"), "Lassie," "The Mickey Mouse Club" and so many other shows were part of the clean entertainment and virtue building blocks that television in those days accepted as its duty to impose. Yes, impose!

Alan Shepard, one of the original seven American astronauts, gave us something to look up to, literally. Years ago I worked in Houston and came to know many of the astronauts. While some had personal struggles and failings common to humanity, they carried with them the greatness and hopes of their nation. Much of the space program is now taken for granted, but who can watch the original films of those Apollo launches, or the dramatic re-creations by Tom Hanks, and not feel the thrill come back? You can see it still in the eyes of the once-and-future astronaut, John Glenn.

Robert Young, though troubled later in life by personal demons that led to a suicide attempt, personified what we wished our families could be in "Father Knows Best." His gentle, loving leadership taught lessons we have forgotten in our sex-obsessed age. Young, a successful screen actor before coming to television, was equally wonderful in the TV series "Marcus Welby, M.D."

Jerome Robbins made the human body beautiful on stage. His choreography in "West Side Story" and in so many other outstanding American musicals (made truly great by his dances) lifted spirits and caused audiences to forget their troubles, c'mon be happy.

The fun and excitement these people gave us was good and it was clean, and that's why those of us old enough to have personally experienced it can tell our children and grandchildren about them with pride. I wonder what this generation will want to share with the future? Old videos of "Dawson's Creek," or "Ellen," or "Married With Children"?

Larry King recently interviewed four men from television's Golden Age: Milton Berle, Sid Caesar, Steve Allen and Art Linkletter. In addition to expressing their criticism of and contempt for much of what passes for contemporary entertainment, these men talked about what they couldn't do on TV because of censorship in those days -- and what they would never think of doing. But these men had real talent, and the laughs they got were from live audiences, not laugh tracks. Falling ratings are the people's verdict on the trash served up today.

The federal government recently announced it is adding a West Coast salmon to a list of threatened species. Too bad we don't have a similar way to preserve the principles of some of those brave and talented people who have died this year.

To say that Lewis, Rogers, Smith, Shepard, Young and Roberts will be missed is only part of it. Who will replace them?

Clinton threatens veto of GOP's health reform plan

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — President Clinton promised on Monday to veto Republican legislation to regulate health care, saying it offers less security from abuses than his administration's "patients bill of rights."

"If I get that other bill of rights, I will be forced to veto it — and I will," Clinton told a friendly crowd of several thousand people at the Commonwealth Convention Center.

Clinton's trip to Louisville, followed by stops in Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles, was planned before he agreed to testify to Kenneth Starr's grand jury in the Monica Lewinsky matter. Aides said Clinton would have time later in the week to prepare for his Aug. 17 testimony.

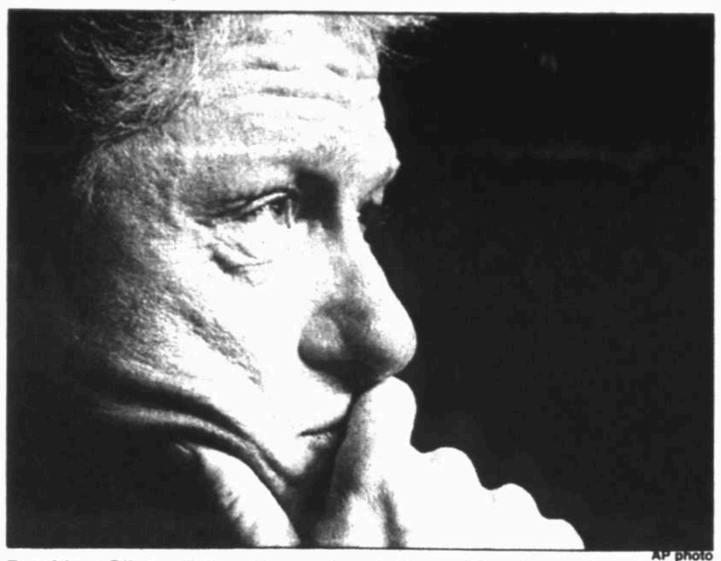

Originally planned for three days, the trip is being cut short by a day so Clinton can meet with advisers concerning the embassy bombings in Africa.

In the nearly-filled arena in Louisville, there were no outward reminders of the president's legal problems. An enthusiastic greeting for Clinton encouraged his senior advisers, who contend that many Americans care more about health care and other issues than the Lewinsky matter.

Responding to the reception, Clinton lingered to shake hands with people in the crowd. Most had left the arena, and the band had gone through about a half-dozen songs before he finished shaking hands. He paused to listen to the band himself and saluted them.

Later, the president attended a luncheon to raise $400,000 for Kentucky Democratic candidates and then flew to Chicago to headline a $1 million Democratic National Committee fund raiser.

Clinton opened his Louisville remarks by calling for a moment of silence in honor of the victims of the U.S. embassy bombings in Kenya and Tanzania. Aides said the president would return to the White House on Wednesday morning to meet with his foreign policy advisers instead of attending political and fund-raising events in Los Angeles and Milwaukee that day.

AP photo

President Clinton listens to speakers before taking the podium during a visit ot Louisville, Ky., Monday. Clinton used the speech to issue another call on Congress to approve a "patients' bill of rights," which would give Americans power to sue health care providers.

U.S. investigators in Africa are "searching and finding evidence," the president said without offering details. "We will do whatever we can to bring the murderers to justice."

Clinton will attend a receiving ceremony Thursday for the remains of the 12 Americans killed in the bombings, White House deputy press secretary Joe Lockhart told reporters.

Even as he was insisting that patient protection from abuses by health maintenance organizations and insurers was not a partisan matter, Clinton heaped scorn on the GOP's approach.

"For nine months the leadership of the majority party in Congress has resisted taking any action at all," Clinton said. He asserted that it was only after recognizing an "overwhelming grass-roots consensus" on the need for stronger patient protections that the House passed a GOP proposal and Republicans offered a similar version in the Senate.

Clinton said that his bill was superior to the GOP plan because it better protects people's rights to medical privacy, access to specialists and care not limited by financial incentives. He said the GOP plan would leave as many as 100 million people without protections.

To make the case that his own proposal is superior to that of the Republicans, Clinton showed the crowd an illustrated chart with point-by-point comparisons.

"You need to remember here, it isn't the title — patients bill of rights — it is the specifics," Clinton said. "This is not about politics. This is not about party. This is about a crying need for the American people, and it's time we did the right thing." He urged Congress to adopt his plan when it returns in September.

Republicans, however, have pledged to reject Clinton's version because, they say, costly new lawsuits could result. Legal attacks on HMOs could drive up health care prices and "cause some people to lose their health insurance altogether," Sen. Susan Collins, R-Maine, said earlier this month.

Clinton also announced a new regulation that would prohibit insurers participating in the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program from using "gag clauses" that he said prevents physicians from discussing certain medical treatment options with their patients. The federal health program has 350 participating plans that serve 9 million federal workers and their families.

Because many of Clinton's fund-raising appearances are coupled with official events, some of the cost of his travel will be borne by taxpayers.

Clinton advisers weigh president's options on testimony

WASHINGTON (AP) — A week before Bill Clinton's risky date to answer questions from prosecutor Kenneth Starr, some of the president's closest advisers are convinced he should try to avoid telling all.

The president last month agreed to testify "completely and truthfully" on Aug. 17 to a grand jury investigating whether he had sex with Monica Lewinsky and tried to cover it up — allegations Clinton denies. In exchange, Starr withdrew a subpoena, saving Clinton from being the first sitting president compelled to testify in a criminal case.

That concession could play a role in the president's strategy next week.

A longtime Clinton confidant said one option under discussion among the president's advisers would have him repeat his broad denials to the grand jury but refuse to answer specific questions about his relationship with Ms. Lewinsky.

A second Clinton adviser said the bombing of U.S. embassies in Africa and the resurgence of trouble with Iraq could be grounds for the president to delay his testimony.

However, White House spokesman Joe Lockhart said Monday he knew of no plans to delay or limit Clinton's appearance.

"As the president said recently, he plans to testify completely and truthfully to the questions put to him by the Office of Independent Counsel," said Lockhart, who was traveling with the president on a two-day trip to Kentucky, Illinois and California.

The advisers, who spoke on condition of anonymity, are confidants involved in preparations for the grand jury appearance. But they are not part of the tight circle of people — two or three lawyers and first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton — who could speak definitively about the president's plans.

Still, such discussions reflect deep reservations about the scheduled grand jury appearance.

With no subpoena, Starr could not compel Clinton to provide details about his relationship with the former White House intern, legal experts said Monday. If Clinton balked, Starr would have to get another subpoena, and wage a constitutional battle over whether the president of the United States can be forced to testify.

"The question is whether both sides want to delay and ratchet up the controversy," said Bruce Yannett, a former Iran-Contra prosecutor who works in New York.

To some Clinton advisers, the answer is yes.

Delaying the inquiry would buy time for Clinton's lawyers to assess the weight of Starr's evidence, including Ms. Lewinsky's testimony and perhaps the results of DNA tests that are being conducted on one of her dresses to look for evidence of a sexual encounter.

It would allow Clinton's political team to continue attacking Starr's credibility, a strategy that may have been given new life last week when a federal judge said the prosecutor would have to prove his office did not leak grand jury information to the media.

Clinton supporters also seized on indications that any impeachment report prepared for Congress would probably focus narrowly on evidence in the Lewinsky case rather than other aspects of Starr's Whitewater investigation.

Two boys, 7 and 8, accused in girl's beating death

CHICAGO (AP) — Police call them the youngest murder defendants in Chicago history — buddies ages 7 and 8, charged with beating an 11-year-old girl in the head with a rock, molesting her and suffocating her with branches and clothing, all for her shiny blue Road Warrior bicycle.

The boys were charged Sunday with the juvenile equivalent of first-degree murder in the slaying of Ryan Harris, who disappeared July 27 while bicycling around her South Side neighborhood with one of the youngsters.

"It's horrifying. ... Without knowing the details of the case, one can only shudder to imagine what happened in these young children's lives that may have precipitated this," said Dr. Lauren Wakschlag, director of the Pre-School Behavior Clinic at the University of Chicago.

Ryan's body was found a day after the girl disappeared in tall weeds not far from the boys' homes. She had been molested with an object that police would not identify, probably after the initial blow knocked her unconscious and fractured her skull, Sgt. Stan Zaborac said.

When police first questioned the boys during a door-to-door canvass the day after Ryan disappeared, the youngsters said they saw a stranger lure the girl into his car along with her borrowed bike, Zaborac said.

Police became suspicious when the boys began changing their stories. The two confessed Sunday after their parents brought them to the police station for further questioning, Zabor ac said.

He would not say what the evidence is.

Under Illinois law, a youth convicted in juvenile court can only be held until age 21, regardless of the offense.

Police said Ryan, the oldest of six children, had been staying with her godmother in Chicago this summer to attend a day camp at a high school.

The girl's grandfather, Nathaniel Hamlin, said Ryan was a straight-A student who had just completed fifth grade. She dreamed of playing professional basketball and becoming a doctor.

"I think we need to look at ourselves and look at society and think what can bring children to this place, and what we can do about prevention," Wakschlag said.

Midland College offers online philosophy class

By Richard Enos
Staff Writer

Midland College's philosophy department has a foothold on the Internet.

The college is offering Philosophy 2303: Intro to Logic entirely on the Internet through the Midland College web site.

Jerry Franks, philosophy instructor, said the Internet course allows students to take a class that won't conflict with work or other college classes.

"In a completely sensible world, classroom instruction would be the best," Franks said. "But students are looking for convenience. They could take it because it wouldn't conflict with any other class."

The class addresses correct methods of reasoning and different methods of it. It also deals with fallacies — or faulty methods of reasoning — and critical thinking skills.

Students register with the college and receive a password to access Franks' data from the MC home page at www.midland.cc.tx.us. Franks posts lessons and readings weekly, and students e-mail their answers to questions posted on the site to Franks.

The site includes class information, e-mail links and a section called "Letters to the Editor" which lists controversial topics, such as the actions of convicted Oklahoma City bomber Timothy McVeigh.

"I may ask them to look up at the Dallas Morning News editorial from 3 years ago — 'McVeighism has nothing to do with patriotism,'" he said. "It's a simple argument, that real patriots don't blow up federal buildings."

The students would examine the editorial and see if it clearly states its argument's premise and its conclusion.

"Once they examine it, they can call the premise into question and see if it's too emotional," he said. "There's a time for emotion. The important thing for students is to recognize the difference."

The students study fallacies in arguments like "Post hoc, propter hoc." The phrase means that one event is assumed to cause another since it follows it in a sequence. Literally "After this, therefore because of this" in Latin.

As the students gain more skill in their analysis, they may write essays on subjects. One example might be Martin Luther King Jr.'s famous letter from a Birmingham jail defending his fight against segregation

Students might examine and comment on the dozens of arguments contained in the letter. The class is about making effective, logical arguments.

"The point here is making sure to put your arguments together so that they're persuasive and there's no ... trickery about it," Franks said.

Franks also covers scientific thinking in the class, which is different from other ways of thinking. Scientists formulate their theories and conclusions through

Task Force probe

ODESSA — A special grand jury has been impaneled in Ector County to probe allegations made against the Permian Basin Drug Task Force. The panel met at the courthouse Monday and was presented with several witnesses, said John Neal, a prosecutor with the Attorney General's Office in Austin. He said he didn't know how long the panel would meet, but confirmed that they were meeting exclusively for that purpose. The panel was to meet again today, he said. They were excused for the day at 5:45 p.m. Monday.

Leadership MISD

Midland Independent School District is taking applications for its Leadership MISD class through Aug. 21. Leadership MISD is a program designed to inform Midlanders about the details and jobs needed to operate the $116 million business. The course will offer insight in all parts of operation from budgeting money to busing, feeding and teaching children. The sessions will be held from 8:30 a.m. until 10:30 a.m. on the third Thursday of each month from September through April. No sessions will be held in December. Each session will include a question and answer period. A total of 40 applicants will be accepted. Mobil Oil is sponsoring the first year of the program and there is no charge to participate. All participants are required to attend all of the sessions — with one excused absence allowed — in order to receive a certificate of completion. For further information or to apply, contact Jim Rodriguez at 689-1052.

Traffic restriction

Traffic at the intersection of Garfield and Neely is being restricted while crews do reconstruction work. Only southbound traffic will travel through Neely on Garfield. Northbound traffic will be detoured at Golf Course to "A" or Midkiff. Westbound traffic on Neely will also be detoured. Eastbound traffic on Neely will turn south on Garfield. The project is expected to last 30 days with this phase continuing for at least two weeks.

Big Bend haze

EL PASO — A pollution-monitoring plane will take flight as early as Wednesday to help scientists further analyze the haze that increasingly has obscured the Big Bend National Park's mountain vistas. The twin-engine plane, equipped with air monitors, tentatively is set to take off and sample air masses moving northwest toward the park. It aims to pinpoint the origins of pollution that has cut visibility drastically at Big Bend in recent years.

Sexual assault trial of Midland man under way

■ Six-year-old boy claims Calvin Dean Howery raped him two summers ago.

By Rick López
Staff Writer

Prosecutors gave opening arguments Monday in the trial of Calvin Dean Howery, a 43-year-old Midlander on trial for allegedly forcing himself on a six-year-old child two summers ago.

A panel was selected by 3 p.m. Howery is being tried on seven counts of aggravated sexual assault of a child.

Assistant District Attorney Robin Sams said the boy was sexually attacked in the summer of 1995, when he and his siblings were staying with Howery in Midland because their parents lost their business in another state.

According to the seven-count indictment, the encounters occurred between June 25 and July 1, 1995 — the week before the Howerys took the children to Six Flags in Arlington.

The boy claims that he slept on the living room floor when he stayed with Howery and his family that summer. During the middle of the night, Howery allegedly snuck into the living room, woke up the boy and took him into the garage, where he raped him on top of an ice chest, Ms. Sams said.

This happened the whole week before the Howerys took the children to Six Flags, Ms. Sams said. That's how the boy was able to remember the dates even two years later.

The boy finally spoke about the molestation when his parents were having a family discussion about child abuse, Ms. Sams said. It was reported to the Midland County Sheriff's Office in the summer of 1997.

Odessa attorney Thomas Hirsch, who is representing Howery, told the panel that the boy's allegations can't be proven.

The defendant's wife kept a detailed calendar of events that occurred that summer, which shows that the family was already in the Fort Worth/Arlington area the week that rape was said to have occurred, he said.

She was recovering from several surgeries and would have paid close attention to the dates and what activities the family would have done that day, Hirsch said.

He also noted that the defendant's family never saw a scenario like the one that the boy described. They were up at all hours of the day and would have noticed if anything was suspicious, he said.

No medical doctors or counselors have any evidence to substantiate the allegations brought against Howery, Hirsch said.

Almost a year ago, Howery was acquitted on charged of indecency with a child.

The trial continues at 9 a.m. today.

Annual Perseid meteor shower to peak Wednesday, Thursday

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

An almost full moon will dim but not completely outshine the annual Perseid meteor shower, which will reach its peak Wednesday and Thursday. The peak can be seen around 11 p.m. Wednesday, with a lesser shower visible Thursday evening.

The waning gibbous moon — as the moon undergoes a transition from Sunday's full moon to a new moon on August 23 — will wash out all but the brightest Perseid meteors this year, according to Steve Schmidt, director of the Blakemore Planetarium. He said this annual meteor shower produces a high proportion of very bright meteors right around its peak that are bright enough to blaze through any amount of light pollution or moonlight. The radiant — point in the sky from which the shower appears to radiate — will be barely above the north-east horizon. Also visible will be the planet Jupiter, which will become visible in the east by midnight and, while it is a magnificent sight through binoculars, it appears brighter than any of the visible stars to the unaided eye.

The Perseid meteor shower occurs when Earth passes through the orbit of comet Swift-Tuttle, a comet discovered back in 1862 and which returns to the inner solar system every 128 years. Its last visit was in 1992. The shower's radiant lies near the star Eta Persei, named after the constellation the meteors are seen to radiate from.

As Earth passes through the stream of debris following the orbit of a comet, meteoroids are captured by Earth's gravity. These bits of rock and metal, most no larger than sand grains, according to Schmidt, are heated by friction with the Earth's atmosphere until they glow

Police chase probably not as exciting as Burt Reynolds made it look

More rambling thoughts ...

— Weird feeling: Having your brain go completely blank when someone asks you for some basic information, such as your telephone number.

— Somehow, saying, "Uh, uh, gee, I can't seem to remember," doesn't make you come across as the sharpest person in the world.

— The only redeeming thing is that the other person invariably replies, "It happens to me all the time, too."

— Great. That means we're all going crazy together.

— Charles Kettering once said, "Research is an organized method for keeping you reasonably dissatisfied with what you have."

— I don't know about you, but something doesn't smell quite right to me regarding that, ahem, "horseplay" incident at the Dallas Cowboys' training camp.

— Here's betting the real story eventually comes out. It almost always does.

— I hope I'm never involved in a high-speed chase with police.

— It may look exciting in the movies, especially if Burt Reynolds is driving the get-away car, but somehow in real life I've got a strong suspicion it's not so much fun.

— Oddity: I love to read when I travel by plane, but I hate to when I'm in a car.

Horse Liniment Eases Arthritis Pain

OCALA, FL -- An ingredient derived from hot peppers that decreases inflammation in racehorse's legs, is now recognized as safe and effective for human use. The ingredient has been formulated into a product called ARTH-Rx and comes in a strength designed for humans. Researchers are excited and say the formula can relieve arthritis pain for millions.

Developed by the Phillips Gulf Corporation, ARTH-Rx is a breakthrough in the treatment of painful disorders ranging from minor aches and pains to more serious conditions such as arthritis, bursitis, rheumatism, tendonitis, backache and more.

Although the mechanism by which ARTH-Rx works to relieve pain is not totally clear, scientists suggest that pain is relieved because ARTH-Rx intercepts the messenger substance that sends pain signals to the brain.

ARTH-Rx is available in a convenient roll-on applicator without a prescription. According to a spokesperson for the company, due to the overwhelming demand for ARTH-Rx, supplies are sometimes limited. ARTH-Rx can also be ordered by calling 1-800-729-8446. ©1998 PGC

Meteors that survive the plunge to Earth and are recovered, such as in Monahans this spring, are called meteorites.

"Meteors are a common occurrence," Schmidt said. "Tons of this material enters our atmosphere from space every day. The trick is to be looking when it happens." Annual meteor showers are easy to keep track of, but a half-dozen or so sporadic meteors are visible every hour on clear evenings.

Another, larger meteor shower, the Leonid meteor shower, is expected in November. Schmidt said the Leonids are expected to storm, either this year or next, at a rate of several dozen per second. Such a meteor storm is visible from certain parts of the planet every 33 years. The last great meteor storm on Nov. 17, 1966, featured tens of thousands of meteors per hour at its peak.

Uncomfortable traveler thinks host should visit guest room

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Since travel season is upon us, I'd like to offer a suggestion as well as seek your advice. For the host and hostess who are having houseguests: Please spend a night in your guestroom to judge its comfort level.

Van Buren

We visit my in-laws in another state twice a year and stay in my husband's childhood room. The sheets are so thin you can read a newspaper through them and the pillows are so musty it is difficult to breathe. The only light in the room is a tiny decorative child's lamp, which does not cast enough light to tell what garments are in the closet, much less to read by. In addition, the closets are jammed with years of accumulation, making it difficult to find a place to put our clothes. It has been this way for years.

When my in-laws stay in our home, I go out of my way to make them feel welcome. I always include small "extras" —new magazines, an alarm clock, extra pillows, fresh soap, a couple of drinking glasses and even fresh flowers on the dresser.

Abby, I appreciate my in-laws' hospitality and do not want to appear ungrateful, but it has reached the point where I dread staying in their home. It is not a matter of money for them or for my husband and me. I would gladly pay to "freshen" the room, if it could be done diplomatically.

Any suggestions? — DREADING IT IN THE CAROLINAS

DEAR DREADING IT: Your suggestion to check out the guestroom before guests arrive is a good one. Your mother-in-law may think that your husband will feel more at home because she has left his boyhood room intact. However, I see nothing wrong with your providing her with a "hostess gift" of new bedding, a folding luggage rack or a new table lamp specifically marked for the guestroom. She should welcome it.

DEAR ABBY: My son died recently after a long illness, and many mourners stepped past my husband to offer me condolences. It hurt my husband deeply. He's the only father my children have known for the last 11 years, but even his family felt that was my loss, not OURS.

Abby, my son and my husband were very close, especially near the end. I think my son felt he could confide his fears to his dad, but must be brave for Mom.

In a world where birth fathers are walking away from their responsibilities, stepdads, foster fathers and adoptive parents are stepping in to shoulder that responsibility. Even though their presence is often resented by the children, these dads continue to love and care for their new families.

Abby, please explain to your readers that even if they don't understand the dynamics of stepfamily relationships, the stepparent shares in the rearing of the child, including loving the child. Condolences or congratulations should be expressed to the stepparent as well as the birth parent.

Thank you for allowing me to share my feelings. —GRIEVING MOTHER IN NEW JERSEY

DEAR GRIEVING MOTHER: Perhaps the mourners didn't mean to be insensitive. I hope your letter will cause them (and others) to reconsider their assumptions about stepparents who do, indeed, deserve more sympathy than your husband received in his time of sorrow.

San Antonio police hit $4 million jackpot in search of tractor-trailer

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A patrolman's routine check of a tractor-trailer rig turned into a big payoff when the officer discovered nearly $4 million in suspected drug money hidden inside the truck.

"Obviously, you see a smile on our face here today," San Antonio Police Chief Al Philippus said Monday, as he stood beside about $2 million of the cash bundled mostly in $100, $50 and $20 bills.

It marks the largest money seizure in the history of the San Antonio Police Department, Philippus said.

"We can speculate all day long, but obviously with that amount of cash and hidden in that type of fashion you can almost guarantee that it's going to be some kind of drug-related activity," Philippus said. "This is a major dent. Obviously, there's somebody who's very, very unhappy today."

Police have made no arrests. Local and state narcotics officers questioned and released the truck driver.

The truck was heading from New Jersey to Laredo when police found the money Sunday morning.

Patrolman David Sczepanik stopped the 18-wheeler along Interstate Loop 410 in south San Antonio and asked to see inspection reports and logs as part of a Department of Transportation truck check.

The driver said there was nothing loaded in the truck, but he agreed to open the back, Sczepanik said. That's when Sczepanik noticed a missing inside panel and saw some suspicious bundles, he said.

"I had a good feeling of what it was because of the way it was packaged," the officer said. "I thought it was a lot of money."

It was. Officers who later tallied the total with the help of a money-counting machine said it amounted to $3,999,758.

Philippus declined to release details about the driver or his truck company, saying the investigation into the origin of the cash continues. There is no basis for charging the driver at this time, he added.

Aerial monitoring to help identify pollution sources

EL PASO (AP) — A pollution-monitoring plane will take flight as early as Wednesday to help scientists further analyze the haze that increasingly has obscured the Big Bend National Park's mountain vistas.

The twin-engine plane, equipped with air monitors, tentatively is set to take off in Brownsville and sample air masses moving northwest toward the park. It aims to pinpoint the origins of pollution that has cut visibility drastically at Big Bend in recent years.

"We believe we can really advance the knowledge of what causes visibility problems in the area," said Commissioner Ralph Marquez of the Texas Natural Resource Conservation Commission, which is doing the monitoring. "We're taking a very open-minded approach to it and trying to look at all the likely sources and trying to get data from every one of them."

Marquez said air sampling will be faster and collect more data than ground monitors used in previous air quality studies at the West Texas park. It also will fill gaps left by ground-based monitoring.

Sampling will take place over as many as six flights between now and early October.

Since each flight has a different objective, there is no fixed schedule. Each will coincide with specific weather conditions and could follow different paths.

"We're trying to get winds that come from the Gulf, that come from Mexico, that come from the east," Marquez said.

Past research, including a binational study released earlier this year, indicates several faraway sources such as power plants in Texas and Mexico are responsible for park pollution.

The haze is so severe at times that it blots out the sight of the craggy peaks, rolling mountains and endless desert that have made the park southeast of El Paso so popular among tourists.

Miguel Flores, a National Park Service official, said the TNRCC flights could help in several ways, including helping officials place ground monitors for another federal study planned next year.

They will also provide information on whether pollutants appear in consistent concentrations throughout the haze, or are stronger or weaker in certain areas, said Flores, assistant chief of the park service's Air Resources Division.

Jury begins deliberating in murder-for-hire case

HOUSTON (AP) — One brother sealed his own fate with suicide. The other's now rests with 12 men and women.

Jurors began deliberations Monday in the murder-for-hire trial of Bob Angleton after prosecutors tried one last time to convince them the ex-bookmaker solicited his own brother to kill his wife.

"Today is the day that this man is held accountable for the tragedy that he caused to occur," prosecutor Ted Wilson said in closing arguments. "He took Doris Angleton from all of us. He left those two little girls without a mother — all over money."

As Angleton's twin 14-year-old daughters watched in anguish, prosecutors portrayed their father as a greedy hood who plotted to kill his wife when she filed for divorce and went after the millions of dollars he had made as the city's top bookie.

"His money meant more to him than his family — that's what kind of husband and father this defendant is," Wilson said.

Angleton, a former police informant, is accused of offering his brother about $1 million to kill Doris McGown Angleton on April 16, 1997, at the couple's River Oaks area home. If convicted, Angleton could face the death penalty.

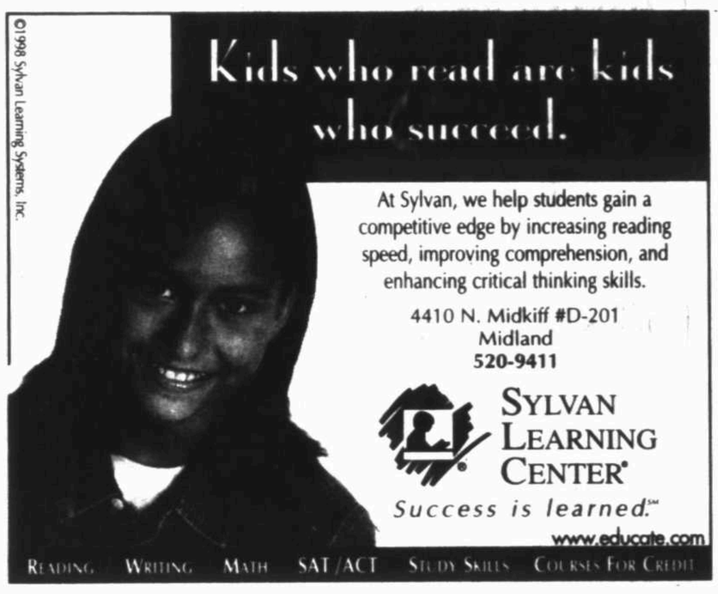

Mrs. Angleton, 46, was shot multiple times after returning home from her daughters' softball game to retrieve a bat her husband had asked for.

Angleton and his brother, Roger Angleton, were arrested last year. But Roger killed himself in jail in February, leaving notes in which he admitted killing Mrs. Angleton and proclaimed his brother was not involved.

But those notes were ruled inadmissible at his trial. Instead, other notes that prosecutors insisted point to a conspiracy between the two brothers were shown to jurors.

"My contract with you is the kill and no squealing. ... The method designed by me is to give you alibi and permit police to focus on me," stated one such note written by Roger.

The papers also included such details as the alarm code to the Angletons' house and instructions regarding their dog. Prosecutors insisted the information had to come from Bob Angleton.

The bidding:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1♣	Pass	1♡	Pass
1NT	Pass	3NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Five of ♡ Light opening bids often lead to precarious contracts. Canadian internationalist Haig Tchamitch took this action, but then found a way to nine tricks — a difficult task even looking at all four hands.

With the vulnerability in his favor, Tchamitch elected to open a hand that most would pass — change the minors to majors and an opening would be more appealing, but holding the aces in the short suits would still be a drawback. That soon led to a three-no-trump contract with only six fast tricks available after the opening lead and a lot of work to be done.

West led a low heart, and dummy's queen won the first trick. Obviously, there was no way to nine tricks without getting some from the diamond suit, and a technique known in the trade as an intra-finesse was one way to develop extra diamond tricks. At trick two, declarer led a low diamond to the six and West's queen.

The best continuation of the jack of spades was found, declarer winning in hand with the ace. Now came the key play: the jack of diamonds from hand, pinning East's ten and allowing declarer to collect three tricks from the diamond suit, bringing the trick total up to eight. The ninth trick presented no problem. Declarer cashed the ace and king of clubs and, although the queen did not drop, a club continuation guaranteed a ninth trick. Declarer still had the ace of hearts in hand as an entry to the high club.

Sheen admits problem, probation extended

MALIBU, Calif. — A judge extended Charlie Sheen's probation for a year Monday after the "Wall Street" star admitted using drugs while on probation.

The 32-year-old son of Martin Sheen had been on two years' probation since June 1997 after pleading no contest to knocking his then-girlfriend to the floor.

In May, however, Sheen was hospitalized for use of an undisclosed illegal drug after paramedics got a 911 call from his mansion. Sheen's father asked prosecutors to charge his son with violating probation.

Gloria Allred, the attorney for Sheen's former girlfriend, argued that Sheen deserved a year in jail.

But Municipal Judge Lawrence Mira ruled that drug rehabilitation was a better solution and ordered Sheen to remain on probation until June 2000. Sheen also must complete 300 hours of community service and submit to regular drug and alcohol testing.

Sheen looked tan and fit when he arrived at the courthouse in a dark suit, white shirt and tie.

"I have to say that you look remarkably better than you did then," Mira said, referring to his disheveled appreareance last spring.

Sheen said outside court that he is getting his life in order.

"I'm in a much better place these days. It's nice to have my health back," he said. "I'm really looking forward to getting back to work. I hope the next time we do this it's about a movie and not everything else, you know."

PLAINS, Ga. — Jimmy Carter, who has traveled on peace missions around the globe, is focusing his energies on his hometown this summer.

The former president is helping to build a recreation center and swimming pool in Plains, population 700.

"This will be the first time in 15 years that the children of Plains will have a place to go swim," Carter said. "I think this is the most important thing that could possibly be done in Plains."

Earlier this month, Carter appeared before the county commission and won approval for the project. He promptly started raising $300,000 in private money.

The grand opening is set for Sept. 26 during the Plains Peanut Festival.

DETROIT — The estate of Temptations singer David Ruffin is threatening to go to court to move filming of a TV miniseries about the group to its real home, Motown.

The show's executive producer and a former top Motown official, Suzanne de Passe, said earlier this year that most of the series would be filmed in Pittsburgh because Detroit "no longer looks like itself."

"They should have filmed the movie here," Gregory Reed, a lawyer for Ruffin's estate, said in Monday's Detroit News. "My lawsuit will seek relief by having it filmed here, for an accurate representation."

Reed also claims the producers never obtained permission from Ruffin's estate. Ruffin died in 1991.

LONDON — Poet laureate Ted Hughes has been named a member of the Order of Merit, one of the Britain's highest honors.

Hughes, 68, who has been poet laureate since 1984, won acclaim this year for "Birthday Letters," a volume of poems chronicling his courtship and marriage to American poet Sylvia Plath. Plath committed suicide in 1963 after Hughes left her for another woman.

The Order of Merit, founded in 1902, is awarded by the king or queen. Membership is limited to Queen Elizabeth II and 24 others.

Other members include former Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, actor John Gielgud and violinist Yehudi Menuhin.

ROSWELL, Ga. — "You-might-be-a-redneck" comic Jeff Foxworthy says he considered becoming a preacher after his TV show was canceled.

Foxworthy told a high school audience Sunday about his newly rediscovered Christian faith. He said his wife was skeptical when he brought up the possible career change.

"She looked at me kind of like a cow looks at a new gate and said that great Southern word: 'Dowhat?'" he recalled.

Foxworthy, who lives in suburban Atlanta, said money and success didn't make him happy. But "since I have decided to walk with God, it has changed my entire life."

Racing Hall of Fame

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y. — Jacinto Vasquez has a resume almost as long as his list of 5,231 winners. On Monday, there was an addition: a plaque in the Hall of Fame.

"I was very fortunate to ride a lot of good horses," he said.

The jockey was inducted into the National Museum of Racing and Hall of Fame with trainers William Mott and Ansel Williamson as well as thoroughbreds Riva Ridge and Bayakoa.

Vasquez rode for 38 years before retiring in 1996 as the 15th all-time leading jockey. He won the Kentucky Derby with Foolish Pleasure (1975) and Genuine Risk (1980).

He also rode the great filly Ruffian. He upset Secretariat twice in 1973 with Angle Light in the Wood Memorial and Onion in the Whitney Handicap.

Mott was elected in his first year of eligibility after training horses for more than 25 years. His most famous horse was Cigar, a two-time Horse of the Year who won 16 consecutive races.

Williamson, who was born before the Civil War and was once slave, trained Aristides, the first Kentucky Derby winner in 1875. Hall of Fame historian Tom Gilcoyne accepted the plaque because none of Williamson's descendants could be located.

Prep gridder dies

ERWIN, N.C. — A high school football player, considered one of the fittest players on his team, died a day after he collapsed while running sprints at practice.

Max Draughon, 17, of Autryville died Sunday at UNC Hospitals in Chapel Hill, where he was being treated for severe heat exhaustion.

Draughon would have started his senior year at Triton High School on Monday. The team's season opens Aug. 28.

"Max went down to one knee," said Brooks Matthews, the assistant principal. "He even told a player to help him up so he could finish his last sprint."

But he began to lose consciousness and was taken to Good Hope Hospital. From there, he was flown to UNC Hospitals.

Matthews said school officials were told severe heat exhaustion was the cause of death.

"His temperature reached 107 and they couldn't get it down." Draughon's sister, Lynn, 21, said. "The doctors did a magnificent job."

The practice Saturday, on a humid day, wasn't unusually strenuous, Matthews said. The 6-foot-3, 285-pound Draughon, an offensive and defensive tackle, participated in one contact drill, took a five- to 10-minute break, then started the sprints. There were water breaks every 20 minutes.

Comets nip Sting

HOUSTON — Sheryl Swoopes and Cynthia Cooper scored 20 points each to lead the Houston Comets past the Charlotte Sting 70-67 Monday night.

Cooper left the game after suffering a mild concussion when she butted heads with Charlotte's Sharon Manning with 5:59 to play in the first half. She returned with 7:52 to play.

Houston (25-2) outscored Charlotte (17-10) down the stretch 14-5 to rally from a 62-56 deficit with 5:45 remaining.

Tracy Reid, who finished with a career-high 22 points on 9-of-16 shooting, gave the Sting the six-point lead on a layup, but was limited to only eight points in the second half. Andrea Stinson added 21 points and Vicki Bullett had 15 points and seven rebounds.

Accuracy will count for this PGA Championship

By Doug Ferguson
AP Golf Writer

REDMOND, Wash. — The tee shot hugged the branches down the left side before gently fading into the fairway on Sahalee Country Club's closing hole. That's where the fun began Monday for Colin Montgomerie.

The PGA Championship, as is the case with most major golf championships, puts a premium on driving accuracy. But at Sahalee, just being in the fairway isn't always enough.

Montgomerie folded his arms and squinted as he surveyed the final 200 yards to the 18th green, his eyes locked onto a 50-foot cedar just behind a 100-foot Douglas fir, both guarding the left quarter of the green.

His first shot curved into the thick of the cedar and dropped down into heavy, 4-inch rough. His second shot followed the same path, only this time it ricocheted across the fairway some 50 yards short of the green.

By this time, Montgomerie had already dropped a third ball. This one stopped 15 feet short of the hole, drawing applause from a small gallery and a sigh of surrender from the Scotsman.

"It's a lovely course," Montgomerie said. "It's a beautiful place to play and a beautiful test of golf."

Then he gazed back at the 18th fairway and smiled.

"The trees get in the way too often," he said. "That's the only problem. From above, I'm sure it looks like you can only walk single-file down the fairways."

Trees figure to be the primary problem confronting the strongest field at the last major

McIver's back; little revealed

AP Photo

Dallas Cowboys offensive lineman Everett McIver, center, is shown after returning to practice Monday in Wichita Falls after suffering a neck wound in a Midwestern State University dormitory incident where the players are staying. McIver reportedly received a six-figure payoff from Michael Irvin to remain quiet about how he was injured.

WICHITA FALLS (AP) — Dallas Cowboys offensive lineman Everett McIver returned to the practice field Monday for the first time since suffering a neck wound in a dormitory incident.

McIver, who reportedly received a six-figure payoff from Michael Irvin to remain quiet about how he was injured, had not participated in team drills since the July 29 episode.

"We're going to see how well he does today, and then try to get him in the one-on-one play" prior to Tuesday's scrimmage against the New Orleans Saints in Shreveport, La., coach Chan Gailey said.

The rookie coach, who has only said that McIver was hurt during "horseplay" in the dorm, said the team is trying to keep the saga from becoming a distraction.

"I think if you think things are going to go completely smooth all the time you're living a little bit in a dream world," Gailey said. "There are going to be problems. There are going to be ups and downs. How you deal with it is the key. You deal with it. You go on to the next one. You work together as a team."

So, is he pleased with how it's been handled?

"We've handled it. I've talked about it. It's done," he said. "You can't get caught up in that or you don't go forward where you are supposed to go forward."

McIver refused to comment on the incident, telling reporters: "The questions are over. I try to cooperate with you guys and you won't cooperate with me."

Gailey said that McIver remains the starting right guard, despite the success of his replacement, second-round pick Flozell Adams. Adams has split time at right guard and right tackle.

McIver said he's working hard to get ready.

"Any time you miss time, going through the season, it's a setback," he said. "I've got a lot to make up, but I'm willing to do it."

Rookie free agents face uphill battle to make team

By Bart Hubbuch
The Dallas Morning News

WICHITA FALLS — Officially, it's the NFL. But for the lowly rookie free agent, there is very little glamour involved in training camp or the agonizing hunt for a roster spot that, deep down, many of them know will never come.

The food is good and plentiful, of course. They even get a golf cart to share, just like the veterans.

That's where the perks end and the drudgery begins.

Two-a-day practices in the scorching sun. The screams of impatient coaches ringing in their ears. The daunting task of getting a few weeks to absorb a playbook the size of the Dallas yellow pages.

And the payoff? An almost certain visit from The Turk, the dreaded assistant coach on every NFL team responsible for telling players they have been cut and need to turn in that playbook.

"You learn to be on the lookout for that guy," said Josh LaRocca, the former wishbone quarterback at Rice who has been cut twice by the Denver Broncos.

If it all seems pointless and painful, here is why they do it: The chance, however slim, to be the next Drew Pearson . . . the next Bill Bates . . . the next Kevin Mathis.

All started out as undrafted free agents, and all went on to make the Cowboys' roster. In the case of Pearson and Bates, they also went on to have long and distinguished NFL careers.

However remote their chances, that's the dream they're chasing. One look at Barry Cantrell tells you there is nothing normal about him.

Three earrings - one stud and two gold hoops - immediately catch your eye. The Fordham graduate wears them all the time, even under his helmet during games.

And since when do college high-jump champions become punters?

"I've always liked to be a little different," Cantrell said. "You always like to stand out."

Unfortunately for Cantrell, even a record-setting Division I-AA career at Fordham couldn't make him stand out in the eyes of NFL scouts. They virtually ignored the tape he had his agent send to every team in the league.

Only Dallas, Jacksonville and Miami called. The chance to work with noted kicking coach Steve Hoffman brought Cantrell to the Cowboys, even though Toby Gowin is entrenched as their punter.

Cantrell, though, has an ulterior motive. He figures there is no better way to get noticed elsewhere than to punt under the guidance of Hoffman, who has a lengthy track record of producing NFL kickers - not necessarily all of whom end up with the Cowboys.

So when Cantrell was booting three punts for a whopping 50.7-yard average in last Friday's pre-season opener against Seattle, he was really doing it

Despite hot run, Gordon not favored

■ Racer must win on Michigan track where he has never won for record fourth straight win.

By Dick Brinster
AP Sports Writer

After an astonishing comeback at Watkins Glen, the Jeff Gordon victory march heads to Michigan, where he will try to match the modern NASCAR record of four straight wins.

But to join the six other drivers who share that distinction, the reigning Winston Cup champion will have to pull off an upset. Gordon has not won in 11 races at Michigan Speedway.

The only driver in his class — Mark Martin — will be the favorite. Martin won his fourth Michigan race two months ago and is the defending champion of the DeVilbiss 400.

However, Martin will be carrying an emotional burden. On Saturday night, his father, half-sister and father's wife were killed in a plane crash in Nevada. The funeral is Wednesday in Arkansas.

At Michigan, Gordon's average finish of 5.27 is the best of the 13 tracks over which the series competes twice each season. He has won on all the others and four of seven at which one race is held annually.

"We've been close at Michigan so many times, but we just haven't been able to pull it off there," Gordon said Monday.

In his 11 losses, Gordon has finished second three times and third three times. He has six top-five finishes in his last seven starts at the 2-mile oval in the Irish Hills.

Martin, who finished second at Watkins Glen, suspects Gordon has no limitations.

"Jeff Gordon may win them all," he said.

In the Bud at the Glen, Gordon's shock chain broke during a pit stop with 33 laps remaining, and it cost him 14 positions. On a road course, no one is supposed to go from 15th to first over the entire length of a race much less in just 33 laps.

It was even more impressive because Gordon got by Martin and Rusty Wallace — the two greatest road racers of the era — en route to a final pass of Mike Skinner for the lead with four laps to go.

Still, Gordon was not thinking about that Monday. Nor was he concerned about a record.

His mindset — as it has been before and after all seven victories this season — is the points race. More than anything, he wants a third series title in four years.

That means another battle with Martin, the only other driver with a realistic chance to win the title. He has finished second to Gordon in each of the last three races.

"If you finish second every week you should win the title," Martin said before the race at Watkins Glen. "But we keep finishing second to Gordon and lose 10 for a chance to wear another NFL uniform.

"I'm realistic about the situation," Cantrell said. "I'm just here to do my best and get noticed. If I get noticed here, great. If someone else notices me, that would be just as good."

No one ever told Junior Filikitonga he was not tough enough, wide enough or determined enough to play college football or in the NFL.

Tall enough is another story. The Cowboys list the former Euless Trinity High School defensive tackle at an even six feet and 305 pounds, but the six feet part appears to be pushing it.

A lack of height couldn't prevent Filikitonga - whose family is from Tonga - from putting together an All-America career at Abilene Christian, where he had 52 tackles and four sacks as a senior.

But undersized linemen face a long road in the NFL, especially if they're rookies and miss an entire week of training camp with a sprained right knee. Such is Filikitonga's current lot with the Cowboys, who don't figure to keep him around much longer.

"I realize that (the injury) has probably cost me a chance at the roster, and that's disappointing," he said. "That's why I'm just trying to learn as much as I can."

Filikitonga thought he had a decent shot at making the Cowboys, considering how desperate they are for defensive lineman in the wake of Tony Tolbert's release and Shante Carver's retirement.

But that shot, it seems, went out the window the moment Filikitonga twisted his knee. Now, he looks on forlornly as the Cowboys proceed without him.

"Missing the (first) pre-season game was the toughest thing, because I walked on the field at Texas Stadium and a special feeling came over me," he said. "It made me feel like I missed out on something big."

Beau Morgan was a curiosity in the Cowboys' training camp last year. The former Trinity Christian-Addison standout has become the feel-good story of their camp this summer.

If not for a pesky little military commitment, the result of a four-year stint at the Air Force Academy, Morgan would be an oddity: a free agent who's a virtual shoo-in to make Dallas' roster.

Says who? Says new Cowboys coach Chan Gailey.

"He would be making a real run at earning a spot on this football team if he were going to be here," Gailey said.

Morgan, an option quarterback in high school and college, has been moved to running back by the Cowboys. He has made the move flawlessly, capturing Gailey's attention with his speed, toughness and lateral quickness.

Missions blank Halos, spoil McDowell return

Staff Report

SAN ANTONIO — The debut of major leaguer Jack McDowell for the Midland Angels was ruined by the San Antonio Missions Monday night as youngsters Allen Davis, J.J. Pearsall and Hal Garrett combined for a four-hit shutout to defeat Midland 3-0.

The Angel offense again sputtered, being skunked for the second time in five days after being shut out one other time the rest of the Texas League season. The Angels have now lost eight of their last nine games and have now dropped three in a row.

McDowell didn't do badly in prepping for a return to Anaheim. He lasted seven innings, giving up only five hits while striking out five. He walked two and gave up three runs, including the deciding two runs in the bottom of the first inning.

San Antonio's Chip Sell and Keith Johnson had run scoring doubles against McDowell in the first. Glenn Davis hit his third homer of the year, a solo shot off McDowell in the fourth to account for the only other run in the game.

McDowell is on a rehab assignment with Midland and it isn't known how many more starts, if any, he will have. He has started seven games with the Anaheim Angels this season, but has been on the disabled list twice with an inflamed right elbow.

Midland's Trent Durrington and Matt Curtis had infield singles. Randy Betten had Midland's other two hits, both singles, but both at least made it out of the infield.

Mission starter Davis (1-1) went seven innings, giving up just three hits to get the win. Pearsall and Garrett went one inning each with Garrett gaining his first save of the year. Pearsall gave up one hit.

This game marked the first of a 10-game road trip for the Angels.

ANGEL DUST: Outfielder Norm Hutchins didn't play Monday night and was in street clothes, leading to some rumors that he may be involved in a recent trade by the Angels... First baseman Danny Buxbaum, who has been the hottest Angel at the plate as of late, also didn't play, but was in uniform... Midland's Norm Montoya (1-1) will face San Antonio's Casey Deskins (3-6) in tonight's game...

championship of the year. Masters and British Open champion Mark O'Meara will try to become the first player since Ben Hogan to win three majors in a year, and Davis Love III will try to become the first back-to-back PGA champion since it went to stroke play in 1958.

Sahalee will also give the 20-somethings one last chance to win a major after they took three of the four in 1997. For all of them, Sahalee presents a new kind of challenge.

The PGA Championship returns to Washington state for the first time since Bob Hamilton's stunning 1-up victory over Byron Nelson in 1944. The PGA Tour stopped coming to Seattle in 1966, three years before Ted Robinson carved Sahalee out of a forest of trees next to Lake Sammamish.

"Guys who don't do well, or even guys who do well, always find something they don't like about a course," said Fred Couples, who learned the game on Seattle's public courses. "But I don't know what's not to like about this."

Not many dared guess what kind of score will win the Wanamaker Trophy, if only because not many have an idea what to expect. Couples occasionally plays Sahalee when he's in town, although the rough is not as punishing or the greens as table-top quick.

Sahalee plays to a par 70 at 6,906 yards, which is relatively short until you consider the 480-yard sixth hole and the 475-yard 18th, both of which are converted par 5s.

"Short is relative," Payne Stewart said. "I hit driver and 2-iron into 18, and driver, 4-iron into another par 4. Is that short?"

The last two majors have been won at even par — O'Meara at Royal Birkdale and U.S. Open champion Lee Janzen at The Olympic Club. Sahalee is sure to give up its share of birdies, especially with two par 5s that can be reached in two.

"It's hard to compare this with anything," said Bill Glasson, playing his first major of the year because of elbow surgery. "It's a nice change of pace from the typical TPC courses we play with bunkers and water. This is a natural wonder, not a manufactured one."

But the beauty of Sahalee is also its greatest menace.

The trees meet players on the first tee and follow them around until they are finished. If the massive firs and cedars aren't daunting enough, the fairways are no wider than a three-car garage in some spots.

"It's tight enough with only the trees," said British Open runner-up Brian Watts. "I walked off one fairway that was only 24 yards. You can't be off line anywhere."

And while it's easy to be swept up in Sahalee's charm, just wait for a tee shot to get buried in the clumpy rough, or an approach to get swatted out of the sky by one of the towering trees.

"We all realize there's a tournament to be won," said England's Lee Westwood. "There's no time to stop and look around."

Locked out from your favorite team? NBA could provide refund

By Chris Sheridan
AP Basketball Writer

NEW YORK — The NBA sent out a strong signal Monday that the lockout could last for months, announcing that season ticket payments will be refunded with interest if the work stoppage forces the cancelation of games.

Also Monday, the league gave the National Labor Relations Board its official response to the complaint filed last month by the players union, alleging the NBA committed an unfair labor practice by imposing a lockout before reaching an impasse in negotiations.

In Atlanta, union director Billy Hunter held a briefing for some of the locked out players, and attendees included Kevin Garnett and Stephon Marbury of the Timberwolves.

No new bargaining talks are scheduled. The last formal session ended abruptly last Thursday when owners walked out of the room after hearing the players' latest proposal.

"Regrettably, after last week's negotiating session there seems to be a greater likelihood that the season may not start on time," deputy commissioner Russ Granik said in a news release announcing the refund policy.

Season ticket holders, most of whom already have paid for their seats for the 1998-99 season, will receive 6 percent interest on their money if regular-season games, which are due to begin Nov. 3, are canceled because of the lockout. Refunds would be made at the end of each month.

"Season ticket holders make substantial financial commitments to our teams and we think they should be treated fairly in the unfortunate event that games are missed," Granik said. "A refund policy that includes interest is the right thing to do in this instance."

Holders of single-game tickets will be entitled to a refund or a rain check. Refund policies for holders of luxury suites, club seats and other premium seats will be determined on a team-by-team basis, the NBA said.

On the NLRB front, the next move will be made by Daniel Silverman, regional director of the New York office, who must determine if the players' complaint has merit. He would then report to the full board in Washington, which would decide if the agency should ask a federal judge to issue an injunction restoring the old work rules that expired at midnight June 30 when the old collective bargaining agreement elapsed.

RACE: Gordon aims for record

points every week."

Gordon, who at 27 is still by more than two years the youngest driver on the circuit, is excited by the prospect of competing each week against the 39-year-old Martin.

"I like to race Mark hard, but I like to race him clean," Gordon said after Watkins Glen. "That's the kind of respect he gives back to me."

Gordon's run over the last four seasons has been unrivaled since the prime of Richard Petty. Yet Gordon knows he is but one disastrous result from losing his 82-point lead over Martin.

And that prospect motivates him, even during qualifying, where he has started on the front row nine times in the last 11 races.

"If we win, Mark is right there in second place," Gordon said. "If he wins, we need to be right there on his tail."

That might be the case this weekend, when Martin tries to protect his turf. He is the latest of the drivers to have won four straight, and the second of those victories came at Michigan Speedway in August 1993.

Gordon likes being cast in the unaccustomed role of underdog.

"I don't think the odds are in our favor after winning the last three races," he said. "But we're going to do everything possible to be there at the end."

their defensive line, especially ends Kavika Pittman and Greg Ellis. Both were non-factors in Saturday's preseason loss to the Oakland Raiders.

Veteran end Fernando Smith, who was waived by Minnesota two weeks ago because of injury and salary considerations, auditioned for the position on Monday. Dallas was the sixth team Smith has visited.

The Cowboys did make one move, signing NFL Europe star receiver Marco Martos of Mexico in preparation for Monday's game against the New England Patriots in Mexico City. Martos worked out with the Denver Broncos last summer.

Official Rules: The game will begin the first week of the regular season and end the last week of the regular season. Each team owner must fill out the entry form and attend the Fantasy Football Kickoff day at the Midland Hilton. Each team will consist of two Quarter Backs, 2 Running Backs, 3 Wide Receivers, 2 Tight Ends, and 1 Defensive team. Points will be issued as follows. A touchdown pass will give the Quarter Back who threw the pass and the receiver who caught it 3 points a piece. A rushing touchdown will result in 6 points. Field goals will count as 3 points and extra points as one point. Any play that is over fifty yards resulting in a score of any kind will double the points for that play. The only way to get a defensive score is if there is an interception or a fumble returned for a touchdown, or if the defense has a shut out. If any defensive player scores points on special teams or on offensive points the points will still be awarded as defensive points. All players selected by the owners must be offensive players; for example an owner can not pick Deon Sanders as a Receiver because generally he does not play offense. Whoever has picked the Dallas defense will receive the points in the event Deon catches a touchdown pass or runs for a touchdown. Each team owner will have the opportunity to trade players halfway through the season. This will be the only time trades or changes will be allowed. Weekly winners will receive a room for two at the Midland Hilton (this includes dinner and drinks for two). The Grand Prize will be awarded after the contest has been completed. This will include A round trip for two to the National Collegiate Championship in Tempe Arizona at the Fiesta Bowl January 4, 1999, and two nights hotel for two. Second Prize will be a cash award of $250.00 and Third place winner will receive $150.00 cash. All entries must be received before or during the Kickoff Nite Monday, August 17th to be eligible to win the Grand Prize. Anyone can enter a team after this for the weekly prizes, but are not eligible for the Grand Prize. Ties will be decided by random drawing for both the weekly prize contests and the Grand Prize contest. Employees of the Midland Reporter-Telegram, Midland Hilton and Midland Travel not eligible. No Purchase Necessary. You must be 18 or older to enter.

If you're hungry for Jib's barbecue but can't decide between brisket, sausage or St. Louis style ribs, a combo platter can solve your dilemma. Combine any two, or get all three on one plate.

Savor every minute with Jib's barbecue

"I think there's a song about this," Earl said to Effie as he inhaled deeply the aromas of his barbecue combo plate at Jib's. "I think I heard it on the radio in your car. It's called ' Share a Tender Moment at Jib's.'"

Effie looked at Earl bemused. "I think it's 'Leave a Tender Moment Alone,' but it is really nice to get to share dinner at Jib's with you, Earl. Truly tender moments don't come along very often in a lifetime."

Earl started with a forkful of deep-smoked sausage. "Yup, you're right, Effie. Only at Jib's can you get such a collection of tender barbecue on one platter—slices of mesquite-smoked brisket, a pile of falling-off-the-bone-tender St. Louis style ribs, and this smoked sausage—all smothered in Jib's made-from scratch barbecue sauce. And you with your barbecue sandwich—it's hard to figure how it could get any better."

Effie stared at her plate. After a long moment of silence, she replied, "I thought you were talking about a tender moment with me."

"I was. A moment with tender barbecue and you. Well, I guess I did leave out one thing."

Effie brightened. "And that is...."

"These pinto beans. They're really tender, and so is the potato salad. I don't think I've ever had any better."

Effie looked down at her food again. Then she smiled suddenly and posed a question to Earl. "So...do you like Jib's food better than my cooking?"

Earl was startled. "Uh...well, you know, Jib's does sloooow smoke their barbecue all night over mesquite till it's got that Texas barbecue flavor all through it. But you know, you, baby, why you really do a great job with your cooking, too."

Unwilling to let him off the hook so easily, Effie pressed the point. "Which do you like better?"

Even the generally clueless Earl was aware that his life depended on his next answer.

"You know, baby, it's like this. I—I like both Jib's and your cooking—just in different ways."

"You never brag on my cooking like you do Jib's."

"Well, it's just that..." Drops of perspiration were beginning to form on Earl's forehead. "I like a lot of things you rassle up for us, honey. I...I tell you what, we can talk more about tonight. Let's go out somewhere."

"No tractor pulls," Effie said, firmly.

"Naw—I was thinking about taking you to that movie you've wanted to see—about the whispering horses."

"You mean The Horse Whisperer? You think you can buy me off by taking me to a movie?"

"I didn't mean it that way," Earl protested.

"It's okay," Effie replied. "When I get an offer like this, I think I'd better just take you up on it."

Located at 3316 W. Illinois, just north of Dunlap's, Jib's features steak fingers, chicken fried steak, chicken strips, deep-fried pork chops, catfish, shrimp, barbecue, smoked sausage, St. Louis style ribs and more made-from-scratch Texas fare. Their hours are 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. and 5 p.m. to 8 p.m. Monday through Thursday, and until 9 p.m. Friday and Saturday. Call ahead for carryout orders at 699-3008.

See what's new at Family Maytag

Maytag Neptune® Super Stack™ puts laundry in its proper place

Where would be the most convenient place in your house to do the laundry? The kitchen? The bathroom? The hall closet? With a conventional side-by-side laundry pair, you probably couldn't even consider these possibilities. But with the new Maytag Neptune Super Stack, now available at Family Maytag, you can now bring the laundry room out of the garage and put it wherever there are a few feet to spare. It's a win-win situation—you can maximize your limited space and maximize laundry cleaning at the same time.

Most importantly, the Maytag Neptune saves your valuable clothes, says Family's Blaine Hale. "By turning the wash basket on its side and removing the agitator, it's gentle on fabrics," Blaine notes. That means your clothes look newer longer. Yet it gets out tough stains like grass, blood and ring-around-the-collar better than conventional washers.*

What's the secret? Maytag's exclusive TurboClean wash system turns laundry over up to 35 times per minute. Unique waterfall baffles shower water down onto laundry for added cleaning effectiveness. The high-capacity dryer produces a diagonal airflow for fast and efficient drying, so the closely matched cycles cut down on the typical waiting period between washing and drying.

Even where there's room for a conventional side-by-side laundry pair, the Maytag Neptune Super Stack can open up a world of possibilities by cutting the space required for that washer and dryer in half. You could get your laundry better organized with extra clothes hampers or built-in shelves. You could install a handy work center which could double as a folding table. And, if you have a large family, a second Neptune Super Stack also makes sense.

Blaine Hale and his sister Kayla Rawlings show how much water you can save on every load done in the space-saving Neptune® Super Stack™ washer-drier pair from Maytag. That's over 23 gallons with every load. Ask about the special offer on Dannon drinking water when you see the Super Stack at Family Maytag.

More than space, Blaine says the Maytag Neptune Super Stack saves you in many other ways. "It saves on water—more water in a single year than you'll drink in a lifetime.*" It saves on the energy to heat the water. With the largest usable capacity available, it also saves time by letting you clean more items per load for fewer loads overall. And since the washer extracts more water during the spin cycle, it can even save on drying time.

What do all these savings add up to? Maybe enough money to eventually pay for your Maytag Neptune Super Stack!

Family Maytag, owned by the Hale family, is Midland's only locally owned appliance store. They are located in the Cornerstone Shopping Center at Midland Drive and Loop 250. They carry a complete line of Maytag and Jenn Air appliances, and they offer repair service on all brands. Store hours are 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. weekdays and 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturdays.

* In comparison to an average conventional washer, 9 loads per week, a Maytag Neptune washer saves 6,752 gallons per year. Compared to a figure in Robert Gardner's Water that humans drink about 6,600 gallons of water in a lifetime.
 Based on International Electrotechnical Commission 456 test procedure.
* Maytag Neptune washer versus leading brand conventional washers: 7 pound load, warm wash, recommended detergents, chlorine bleach.

Air conditioning service contracts: are they really worth your money?

~Terry Repman has better protection plan~

Have you ever bought a service contract for your air conditioner only to discover it didn't cover needed repairs? "This is not unusual," says Terry Repman of Terry's Plumbing, Heating and Air Conditioning. Fortunately there is a better way to protect yourself from expensive repairs—it's called a warranty contract.

"With an extended warranty contract, you pay one price based on the cost of your unit, and it extends the full manufacturer's warranty for nine years," Terry explains. "Added to the one-year factory/dealer warranty, that means you're fully covered for a total of 10 years."

Service contracts, on the other hand, are paid annually—a method that disguises the fact that you'll pay much more for it over 10 years than you will for a Warranty Contract. The service contract's coverage is usually limited to labor. That makes your service contract only as good as the person providing the service. It's important to find out if they are licensed by the state as an air conditioning technician to do air conditioning repair.

Also, Terry says the service contract covers one or two yearly service visits to do maintenance on your equipment. He believes that's too often. "Most equipment does not need service annually if it's in reasonably good shape and if you change the filter every month."

If you have extra money to spend, it's better used in other ways. "Is your ducting as efficient as it could be? That is, are you getting even distribution of air throughout the house? Does your filter fit right? Is filter access easy enough that you don't mind changing your filter as often as it needs? If not, money spent in these areas will help more than most service contracts," Terry says.

Spending money on efficient equipment is a good idea, too, because it can pay itself back in reduced utility costs. Carrier's new Weathermaker 38TXA with environmentally safe Puron™ refrigerant is a good example. Carrier developed the Puron unit in response to legislation that will begin scaling back today's R-22 refrigerant in 2004, six years off. As R-22, which contains ozone-destroying chlorine, becomes harder to get, it's likely to become more expensive. Six years is well within the life expectancy of any unit you buy today. That's why Carrier is the first to add an alternative to its air conditioner line.

And what an alternative! This 13 SEER (seasonal energy efficiency rating) is 30 percent more efficient than standard 10 SEER types, so it saves on electricity. It's the most reliable of Carrier's whole line. The 38TXA is very quiet, letting you enjoy a quiet evening in the yard.

Puron is already the refrigerant of choice in Japan and many European companies. Why pay more for R-22 later, when you can begin enjoying the efficiency of Carrier's 38TXA now?

MONEY MATTERS
PRESERVE TAX-DEFERRED GROWTH
Over your working career you may have accumulated a number of savings vehicles, including certificates of deposit, brokerage and mutual fund accounts, and retirement accounts such as IRAs. You now may find it necessary to begin withdrawing from these various accounts. Most financial experts would agree that your tax-deferred assets, such as your retirement accounts, should be preserved as long as possible and withdrawn last. The reason is because this money is growing tax-deferred.

VAN PEARCY of Edward Jones & Co.

Consider the options when settling a dispute with a broker

Most investment professionals are reputable people who work long and hard to help their clients succeed financially. The vast majority of investors have good relationships with their financial professionals.

Van Pearcy

Occasionally, however, investors have a dispute with a broker or financial professional. Some people in this situation file lawsuits. However, a lawsuit can be an expensive and harrowing ordeal. It's reported that more than 14.5 million civil lawsuits are filed annually, and the typical case takes three to four years to get to trial.

Fortunately, investors with legitimate arguments have another option, called alternate dispute resolution (ADR). ADR can be a two-step process. First, mediation is attempted. If unsuccessful, mediation may be followed by arbitration.

In mediation, both parties cooperate to solve the problem. A lawyer is not needed. However, the mediator—a person specially trained in dispute resolution—is often a lawyer, possibly a former judge. In securities cases, the mediator is generally familiar with securities law.

The mediator typically meets privately with each party to discuss the case and possible solutions. Approximately 85 percent of mediated disputes conclude in voluntary settlements. In the small percentage of cases where mediation fails, it is usually suggested both parties go to binding arbitration.

Arbitration is a method of having arbitrators (impartial persons who are knowledgeable in the areas of dispute) dictate a resolution. According to the Security Industry Conference on Arbitration (SICA), arbitration has long been used as an alternative to the courts because it is a prompt and inexpensive means of resolving complicated securities issues.

Unlike mediation, "an arbitrator award is final and binding. It is subject to review by a court only on a very limited basis," says the SICA. After arbitration has been selected, the parties generally give up their right to pursue the matter through the courts.

Yet arbitration is much simpler than a court trial. Rules of evidence, witnesses and testimony are relaxed. The arbitrators (typically three, representing the legal profession, the securities industry and the public) are more interested in hearing the entire story and reaching a fair decision than in getting mired in every detail. With arbitration, both parties can—and typically do—use lawyers, but the legal fee is usually only a fraction of what it would be for a court case.

A variety of organizations sponsor arbitration, including the national and regional stock exchanges, The Municipal Securities Rulemaking Board and the National Association of Securities Dealers (NASD).

The vast majority of securities disputes are solved by simple, open dialogues with your broker. If an error has been made, a legitimate firm will be anxious to rectify it. But if this doesn't work, consider ADR before jumping into a lengthy and expensive lawsuit.

He received his BA in economics and his Master's degree in business administration from the University of Notre Dame. Olympics beckoning Rudy T?

■ Tomjanovich could coach U.S. team in 2000 after World Championship success.

By Eddie Sefko
Houston Chronicle

ATHENS, Greece — Rudy Tomjanovich was whipped. He had just draped a bronze medal around his neck after a whirlwind 33-day adventure coaching stand-in American players during the 13th World Championship of Basketball.

Before that, he had exhausted himself with an NBA draft in which the Rockets had three first-round picks. All this came after an 82-game regular season and the playoffs.

"I need a break," Tomjanovich said.

It's true that putting in the equivalent of five weeks of overtime to coach the U.S. national team was a grueling prospect. But Tomjanovich couldn't help saying that if he had it to do all over again, he would. Without hesitation.

He may get the chance.

Warren S. Brown, executive director of USA Basketball, said after the U.S. charged to third place in the World Championship that Tomjanovich would "be the first name on the list" of coaching candidates to guide the Americans in the 2000 Olympics in Sydney, Australia.

The only question is whether Tomjanovich would be interested in investing another summer — probably one that will require him to be busier than this one, which came during the lockout of NBA players with Rockets basketball operations at a standstill. He removed all doubt after leading the U.S. to a 7-2 record in the World Championship.

"You know I'd do it," Tomjanovich said sheepishly after being pinned down on the question of whether he would like to coach the Olympic team. "I'd have to. It's your duty."

Brown doesn't have the job of selecting the coaches who will lead U.S. teams into international competition. A selection committee handles that process.

But Brown does have a strong leadership role with USA Basketball, and he was thrilled to learn Tomjanovich is amenable to the 2000 job.

"I don't make that decision," Brown said. "But I can't believe that he won't be the first name on the list. It would be wonderful if he would. I don't make that decision. But I can tell you he's going to get every consideration.

"I would think that whole (coaching) staff, with Rudy leading it, would be leading the pack."

Brown said the way Tomjanovich, along with assistant coaches Del Harris of the Los Angeles Lakers and Lon Kruger of the University of Illinois, handled the situation of NBA players being removed from the U.S. squad and replaced by Americans from the Continental Basketball Association, college and European leagues has left a strong impression on the higher-ups with USA Basketball.

"Where we started with this thing about a month ago, we didn't have any names on the team," Brown said. "We had a coaching staff that stepped up to the starting line, despite whatever else was going on. It's hard to put a worth on that, because that kind of drive was going to happen from then on.

"Rudy and Del and Lon stepped up and said: 'It doesn't make any difference (who they coached). We want to coach for our country.'

"So I think the coaching staff drove the whole thing. And what can you say about the team? They didn't ask for anything, just to be able to play and represent their country," Brown said. "And I couldn't be more proud of them.

"It sure makes you appreciate what players and coaches who want to do a job will do. And the results are that much more pleasurable. I do think it has more meaning in that light."

As Tomjanovich was quick to point out, the commitment of the players deserves recognition. And if they hadn't respected Tomjanovich's philosophy and strategy, they probably never would have gotten to the medal stand.

One thing is clear: The people at USA Basketball have come to know and love the effort of Tomjanovich and his staff.

"Rudy is just terrific," Brown said. "The players listen to him, and they know where he's coming from. He treats them even and tells them the way it is. They won because his philosophy of being tough-minded and keeping focused prevailed.

"I don't want to discount the players. But the combination of the coaching staff we had and the kind of players who wanted to step up results in this. It's a great, great feeling."

The reward was equally gratifying for Tomjanovich.

"My association with USA Basketball has been great," he said. "They're good people, and they've supported me. It was a great tournament, with a lot of guys out there playing their hearts out for their country."

Prices sink

Crude oil futures Monday fell to their lowest level in seven weeks on the New York Mercantile Exchange after a monitoring agency reported member of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries made only half their promised output cutbacks, ensuring low prices.

Crude sagged after a report from the International Energy Agency indicated nearly every OPEC member that agreed to cut daily output in March and again in June has exceeded its target.

And oil exported by Iraq under the auspices of a United Nations food-for-oil program, plus production increases from economically ailing Indonesia, whittled the actual output reduction to just 360,000 barrels a day, it reported.

Moreover, non-OPEC exporters Mexico, Norway and Russia also missed their export targets.

Crude for September delivery fell 75 cents to $13.05 a barrel. September natural gas rose 6.2 cents to $1.895 for each 1,000 cubic feet.

Dollar mixed

NEW YORK — The dollar rose against the yen Monday but its gains were limited by fears of intervention by Japanese financial authorities.

The dollar fell against the German mark during lackluster trading punctuated by the Bank of Canada's intervention to prop up its faltering currency and the fall of the Mexican peso to a low for the year.

In late New York trading, the dollar was quoted at 146.15 Japanese yen, up from 146.13 late Friday. The U.S. currency also was changing hands at 1.7759 German marks, down from 1.7792.

In Canada, the government bought Canadian dollars and stopped the decline of its currency, which has fallen to numerous record lows all year. In late New York trading, the U.S dollar was quoted at 1.5178 Canadian dollars, up from 1.5220 late Friday.

In New York late trading, the dollar was worth 9.1040 pesos, higher than 9.0570 late Friday.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Friday: 1.4953 Swiss francs, down from 1.4962; 5.9535 French francs, down from 5.9650; and 1,752.00 Italian lire, down from 1,755.75.

The British pound was quoted at $1.6359, up from $1.6305.

Stocks retreat

NEW YORK — Stocks fell Monday, halting a modest recovery from last week's selloff, in a sleepy session offering few clues on the economic uncertainties hanging over the market.

The Dow Jones industrial average closed with a loss of 23.17 at 8,574.85 despite overcoming an early 54-point drop and gaining as much as 37 points during the afternoon.

The Standard & Poor's 500 fell 6.31 to 1,083.14, and the Nasdaq composite index fell 7.56 to 1,839.21.

Declining issues outnumbered advancers by a 2-to-1 margin on the New York Stock Exchange, where composite volume 696.66 million shares.

The NYSE composite index fell 3.78 to 545.72, and the American Stock Exchange composite index fell 4.27 to 679.80.

The Russell 2000 index of smaller companies fell 4.16 to 411.64.

Microsoft asks judge to end lawsuits

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Saying there is no need for a trial, Microsoft asked a judge Monday to throw out the antitrust lawsuits filed by the Justice Department and 20 states.

Microsoft, which makes the popular Windows operating systems, also accused the government in an 88-page court filing Monday of asking it to develop "a new and inferior operating system" that doesn't include its bundled Internet browser.

"It is clear that the government will not be able to prove its case," William Neukom, a company vice president, said in a statement.

The Justice Department said Monday that Microsoft's court filings contained "nothing new."

"Ever since we brought this case, Microsoft's position can't be squared with the company's own documents much less with the large body of evidence that will be introduced at trial," Justice spokeswoman Gina Talamona said.

U.S. District Judge Thomas Penfield Jackson, who is in charge of the antitrust case, appeared unlikely to grant Microsoft's request when the company told him of its intentions during a hearing last Thursday, saying he still anticipated a Sept. 8 trial.

"It's not surprising that somebody would attempt to file a summary judgment motion," said Microsoft critic Mike Pettit, head of the Project to Promote Competition and Innovation in the Digital Age. "Defendants do that all the time, but the way they've teed this thing up, it's a public relations exercise."

Neukom said in an interview Monday that Microsoft was confident its request will get a fair hearing by Jackson.

"He and his law clerks will spend, I'm sure, an appropriate amount of time reading our materials and thinking about them," Neukom said.

In its court filing, Microsoft said it believes a favorable appeals court ruling earlier this summer — combined with evidence it has uncovered from business rivals — undercuts the most dramatic claims made against it.

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia ruled in June that Microsoft's decision to bundle its own Internet browser within Windows was a "genuine integration," which is legal, because a single combined product offers benefits over separate ones.

That ruling overturned an earlier decision by Jackson in a related case.

The government contends Microsoft's bundling amounts to illegal "tying," because it forces customers who use Windows also to use the company's web browser without any benefit while hurting corporate competitors.

Microsoft also argued that evidence it uncovered from rivals during its trial preparations prove that its actions did not prevent rival Netscape Communications from making its own Internet browser widely available. For example, Netscape announced plans this year to distribute more than 100 million copies of its browser.

However, the Justice Department's antitrust lawsuit cites internal e-mail by Microsoft executives who argued that asking consumers to download an Internet browser was burdensome.

"My sense is that these people are not very likely to download anything, let alone a browser that takes two hours to download from the Web," Microsoft's Kumar Mehta wrote in a March 1997 e-mail.

Since Microsoft began including free copies of its browser within Windows, Netscape has seen worldwide use of its browser fall from 90 percent to just over 50 percent, to about 68 million copies.

New technology fuels phone strike

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Above the din of picket line chants, the strike against Bell Atlantic reveals a growing union concern: Getting shut out of the hottest job-growth area in the telecommunications industry.

Like other major phone companies, Bell Atlantic Corp. is investing billions of dollars to upgrade its network to handle voice and data transmission using more efficient, Internet-based technologies.

But to pare costs in intense competition with smaller, more nimble rivals, Bell Atlantic is farming out these technical jobs to its non-union subsidiaries. And when the future calls, the striking Communications Workers of America union — representing 450,000 workers in the telecommunications industry — is afraid it won't be there to answer the phone.

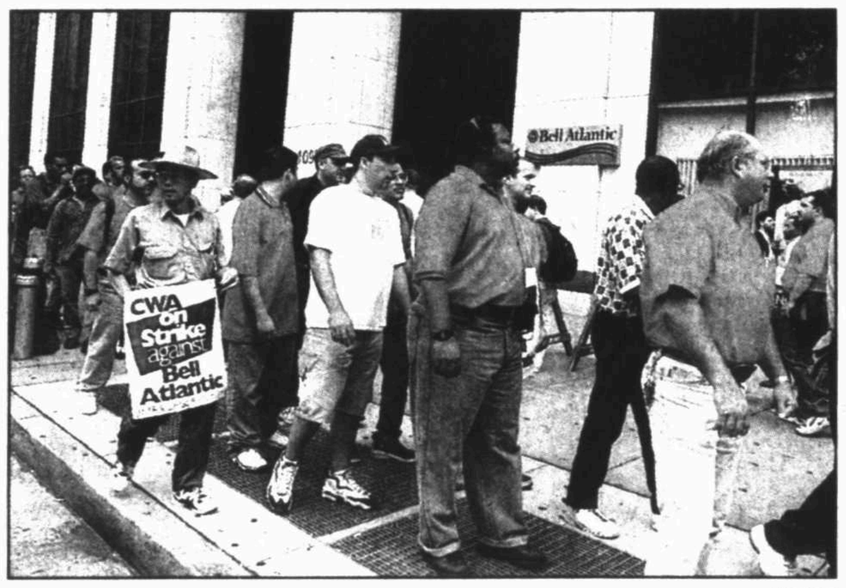

"We call them the jobs of the future," CWA spokeswoman Candice Johnson said Monday, the second day of a strike by 73,000 phone workers that threatened to inconvenience phone customers from Maine to Virginia.

Union workers are concerned they aren't getting trained for technologies that offer customers new, more efficient ways to exchange phone calls, data and video, including transmission by satellite and cable lines.

In addition, the rise of the Internet has brought into vogue a more efficient method for transmitting phone calls, data and even video. Using so-called "packet technology," voice and data is translated into a digital format and then broken into smaller pieces, which take the most efficient routes to the receiving end, where the information is reassembled. This method can be used across traditional copper wires, fiber-optic lines and via satellite.

The more efficient Internet-based technique is getting the attention of Bell Atlantic and other major phone companies strained by the huge increase in demand for Internet and data transmission by businesses and consumers. The problem has created occasional bottlenecks.

High-speed transmission is key for Bell Atlantic as it expands into the lucrative business of designing data networks for companies, which can generate enormous amounts of voice and data traffic. But calls by home customers are eventually expected to be made this way too.

AP Photo

Bell Atlantic workers picket at the Bell Atlantic Building at 42nd Street in New York City Monday. Striking workers are protesting forced overtime and shifting work to non-union employees. The strike is not likely to dramatically affect telephone service because of automation. But customers trying to reach directory assistance, pay bills or have phone lines installed or repaired can expect delays.

To get the job done, phone firms need software designers, computer-network technicians, and others who may not be represented by the CWA. The union is also worried that line installation and other tasks currently done by union workers are being given to non-union workers.

So far, Johnson said, the CWA has won agreements with other phone companies that give the union a shot at representing workers in these emerging areas.

"There's no question our members can do the work; they're constantly upgrading their training. The issue is having the opportunity to move into them," Johnson said.

But several experts said the longer-term trend is ominous for unions.

A new breed of nimble, phone company, known in the industry as competitive local exchange carrier has been successfully luring away Baby Bell business customers by offering high-speed transmission of voice and data.

Even if Bell Atlantic gives in to demands to open up the new technical jobs to union ranks, these upstart rivals increasingly are relying on non-union workers.

"Frankly, the union strike is a perfect example of why a Bell would be crazy to man all of these emerging technology jobs with workers who could shut them down when their competitors aren't burdened," said Jeffrey Kagan, an independent industry consultant based outside Atlanta.

"The unions, with all of their rules, aren't flexible enough for the new environment," Kagan said.

GeoCities IPO exceeds expectations

N.Y. Times News Service

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — GeoCities, a company that lets Internet users set up their own sites on the World Wide Web, raised $80.8 million in an initial stock sale, more than expected, amid strong investor demand.

The Santa Monica, California-based company sold 4.75 million shares, a 15 percent stake, at $17 each — $1 above the top of the $14-to-$16 expected range set by lead underwriter Goldman, Sachs & Co. The price range was increased from $12 to $14 earlier Monday.

The sale gave the company, which was founded in December 1994 and has yet to turn a profit, a market capitalization of $521.2 million.

"It's going to be a bit pricey," said Lawrence York, lead portfolio manager for the WWW Internet Fund, in Lexington, Kentucky. He expects the company's stock to perform well initially.

CMG Information Services Inc., a direct marketing firm, holds 9.8 million shares of GeoCities through its venture capital arm, or about 31 percent of the total following today's initial stock sale. Softbank Holdings Inc., the U.S. unit of Japan's Softbank Corp., a software wholesaler, holds 9.1 million shares, or about 30 percent following the sale.

Although many IPOs by Internet-related companies have been spectacular successes this year, the most recent one, by Cyberian Outpost Inc., wasn't. The company, which sells computer hardware and software over the Internet, closed below its issue price of $18 on its second day of trading, last Monday, and has done so ever since, with the exception of Friday, when it closed at 19.

At least a dozen IPOs were delayed last week after the Dow Jones Industrial Average shook investors by tumbling 299 points on Tuesday.

GeoCities hosts groups of personal Web sites where users with similar interests can build their own sites and visit related ones. More than 2.1 million such users, whom the company refers to as "homesteaders," had set up free sites as of July, up from 10,000 in October 1995.

GeoCities was the third most visited Web site on the Internet among home users in June, according to the company's filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

One obstacle to GeoCities' success is the new, undeveloped nature of the Internet, York said. Standards have yet to be set for electronic commerce, modems and security. "For the Internet to flourish, these standards have to be really developed," he said. "There's a lot of cost involved in doing that."

Most major airlines back off fare increase

N.Y. Times News Service

CHICAGO — Most major U.S. airlines increased leisure fares on U.S. flights by 4 percent over the weekend and rolled the increases back Monday when some carriers declined to follow suit.

Only Delta Air Lines Inc. stuck with the increase on certain routes while Continental Airlines Inc., AMR Corp.'s American Airlines, America West Holdings Corp., US Airways Group Inc., and UAL Corp.'s United Airlines all pulled back their increases.

It was the fifth time this year that major U.S. airlines tried to raise leisure fares as strong demand suggested travelers might be willing to pay more. Northwest Airlines Corp., the fourth-largest U.S. airline, didn't go along with the increases, which likely led the others to retreat.

"Nobody's going to be hanging out there with a pricing disadvantage," said Edward Starkman, an analyst with SBC Warburg Dillon Read. "I think right now it's a little difficult to try for an increase because of the situation at Northwest."

Northwest faces a possible strike by its pilots union at the end of the month and has been grappling with lower travel demand on its Asia routes, which account for about a third of revenue.

Northwest's pilots and other employee groups are seeking increased wages and benefits they say are justified by pay cuts they took to keep the carrier out of bankruptcy in 1993 and by the airline's profits over the past few years.

Northwest spokesman Jon Austin said that the airline's current fare structure was "optimal" and that the carrier was sticking with it.

Spokeswoman Kristina Price said United "chose to withdraw" its increase when the other airlines did to stay competitive.

While carriers can't legally agree to raise their fares at the same time, the airlines typically won't stick by an increase unless their competitors follow suit.

The fact that the carriers are trying to increase fares is a sign that their business outlook remains strong, said BT Alex Brown analyst Susan Donofrio.

Many airlines recently reported July U.S. passenger traffic was greater than last year's or at least remained as strong.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Stock mutual funds good for helping portfolios expand

By Eric Tyson

Q: I'm just getting started investing in stock funds in my retirement account and would like to know several things. What rate of return can I expect? How much might I lose in a correction? Are stock funds the place to be now with my retirement money? Can you name some specific funds for an investor like me who wants some conservative as well as more aggressive stock funds?

Tyson

A: Stock mutual funds, which invest some or all of their portfolios in stocks, are for you if you want your money to grow.

During the last two centuries, investors who held diversified stock portfolios earned a rate of return averaging 7 percent higher than the rate of inflation. Historic rates of return are not guaranteed to continue to be the same in the future. And, no one should expect the stock market to continue generating returns in excess of 20 percent, as it has in recent years.

Stock funds make sense for people who have got time to wait out major declines. In the past century, the Dow Jones Industrial Average of 30 large company stocks dropped 20 percent or more during 18 distinct time periods.

While large in magnitude, those drops have lasted about two years on average. Some, such as the October 1987 "crash," lasted less than one year. The longest decline lasted about six years.

Consider earmarking for stock funds money that you don't plan on using for a decade or more.

Investing in stocks inside of retirement accounts is ideal, since retirement probably is a long way off for you.

Even if you plan to retire soon or are already retired, some of that money you've got squirreled away likely won't be used for many years.

The least volatile of the mutual funds investing in stocks are hybrid funds that invest in a mixture of different types of securities, such as bonds and stocks. Such funds usually are less risky and less volatile than funds that invest exclusively in stocks; in an economic downturn, bonds usually hold up better in value than stocks do.

Vanguard offers a number of terrific hybrid funds. Vanguard Star, the oldest fund of funds, invests in various Vanguard U.S. stock and bond funds. Star keeps about 60 percent in stock funds that cover the range of small, medium and large company stocks and growth and value styles of investing. For a similar fund that also invests in overseas stocks, check out Vanguard's LifeStrategy line of funds.

If you want stock funds without the big bond positions, there are lots of options. Index funds are a good choice for investors who want the guarantee of getting the market rate of return without the possibility of doing worse. Unlike other mutual funds, in which the portfolio manager and analysts research and trade stocks, an index fund manager simply invests to match the performance of an index, such as the Standard & Poor's 500 Index of 500 large company U.S. stocks. Vanguard and Charles Schwab offer a number of excellent index funds that invest in both U.S. and international stocks.

Among actively managed funds that focus on stocks, Dodge & Cox's Stock fund is a fine choice that focuses on large company value stocks. Unlike most U.S. stock funds, it does little trading, often less than 10 percent of its portfolio annually.

T. Rowe Price offers a number of good stock funds, both U.S. and international. The T. Rowe Price Spectrum Growth fund of funds offers a simplified way to invest in some of the best of them.

Funds that invest overseas should be part of an investor's portfolio that is invested in stocks for diversification and growth potential. Among my favorite international funds are T. Rowe Price International Stock, Vanguard International Growth, Warburg Pincus International Equity and Tweedy Browne Global Value.
