Leaders toughen stance

Allies move to expand military role in Bosnia

■ Group of Seven agrees to protect overland relief convoys with European troops, American warplanes.

By Stewart Powell
Reporter-Telegram Washington bureau

MUNICH — Leaders of the United States and six other industrial giants prepared on Monday for a dramatic expansion of allied military intervention in Yugoslavia by agreeing to protect overland relief convoys with European troops and American warplanes.

The expanded relief operation will augment a modest, 10-day-old airlift into Sarajevo that is proving insufficient to feed the city's 300,000 isolated residents, much less reach equally desperate enclaves elsewhere in the breakaway republic of Bosnia-Herzegovina.

The allies' deepening involvement in the Balkan nation threatens to expose hundreds of European soldiers and dozens of American aircraft to the risk of hostile fire from various local militias that are battling for territory in the former Yugoslav province.

The potential commitment of American combat forces by President Bush in an election year, including the possibility of GIs on the ground, could reap short-term political benefits for him if Americans follow tradition and rally behind their commander-in-chief in a crisis.

But the widening U.S. pledge to help Yugoslavs carries considerable political risks as well. Senior administration officials expressed concern that the effort could become an open-ended "quagmire" akin to the Vietnam war.

National Security Adviser Brent Scowcroft, describing the agreement between the leaders of the United States, Canada, Britain, France, Germany, Italy and Japan, said they decided to expand current relief opera-

Cuomo takes a Clinton role at convention

■ N.Y. governor to give high-profile nomination speech.

N.Y. Times News Service

Cuomo

ALBANY, N.Y. — Gov. Mario M. Cuomo, who had insisted that he did not want and would not accept a speaking role at the Democratic National Convention, agreed Monday to place Gov. Bill Clinton's name in nomination at Madison Square Garden next week.

The New York governor's decision to give the high-profile speech signified a mutually beneficial rapprochement between two men who have had more than their share of personal and political conflict in recent years.

Coming one week before the opening of the convention, the announcement defused any possibility that the Cuomo-Clinton contretemps would become an unwelcome sideshow to Clinton's coronation.

Cuomo's change of heart — he preferred to say he had simply deferred to the judgment of Clinton and the Democratic Party chairman, Ronald H. Brown — symbolized a marked improvement in relations between two men who are considered leading spokesmen for the

'Fortunate' residents survey fire damage

By Darren J. Waggoner

The stench of smoke lingered in the air at Saddle Club Apartments Monday, the day after a barbecue grill ignited a fire causing extensive damage to eight units in one building. No one was injured in the blaze, fire officials said.

A Saddle Club resident reported the fire Sunday at 8 p.m. after observing small flames on the balcony of one apartment while driving on Loop 250.

No one was home at the apartment where the fire started. Investigators believe high winds may have tipped over the grill.

"The barbecue pit had been left unattended and we suspect the sparks from the coals set it all off," said assistant Midland fire marshall Lon Dominguez.

"It's amazing what you grab in the few seconds you have," Chris Petty said. "I yanked a pair of pants that were drying in the bathroom and our change jar, because I knew we would need the money."

A policeman knocked on Ms. Petty's door minutes after the fire was spotted.

"He told us there was a fire next door and said we better get out. When

Lottery loot won't pile up in state coffers

■ Texas' budget totals $60 billion — 1,500 times more than proceeds generated by the game.

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Texans may be spending $110 a second on lottery tickets, but the proceeds likely won't leave piles of extra cash sitting around the state Treasury. The Legislature already has spent it.

"The money's already been budgeted," said Andy Welch, a spokesman for the comptroller's office.

Lottery proceeds are lumped into the state's main checking account, the general revenue fund, along with the revenue from most of the major state taxes.

How it is spent is up to lawmakers. In this budget, lottery profits are being spent just like the other tax money — on schools, services and operations of state government agencies.

"If they wanted to spend an extra $461 million on highways or some other services, that would be a legislative decision," Welch said.

Some states dedicate all their lottery profits to one purpose, such as schools. But Texas lawmakers rejected that plan, noting that lottery income can fluctuate widely.

The comptroller's official estimate of lottery profits is $461 million during the current two-year budget period, which ends Aug. 31, 1993.

That money began coming in on May 29, when the first instant-win, scratch-card tickets went on sale.

Comptroller John Sharp said last week that in its first month, the Texas Lottery sales totaled $286 million. That's 110 of the $1 tickets a second, he said. Daily sales volume has averaged $9.5 million.

The largest share of lottery income — 45 cents of every dollar — goes back to lottery players in the form of Winds were generally from the south and southeast at 10 to 15 mph, gusting up to 25 mph along the coast.

Highs should be in the 90s and 100s again today, with lows in the 70s and 80s.

Monday's high of 103 at Lubbock was a record for the date, breaking the mark of 102 set in 1970. Mid-afternoon temperatures in West Texas ranged from 92 at Dalhart to 104 in El Paso.

NATION

Showers and thunderstorms were scattered from eastern Nebraska to southern Minnesota, associated with a warm front curving through the north-central states.

There was a possibility of severe thunderstorms during the night from the northern Plains to the Southeast, the National Weather Service said.

Showers and thunderstorms developing along a cold front lingered along the middle Atlantic Coast, and storms also were scattered from eastern Tennessee to Florida.

ALLIES: Leaders prepare to expand relief effort

tions by land with the backing of allied forces if necessary.

"The use of force would be with the goal of providing humanitarian assistance, not to deal with the basic conflict itself," Scowcroft said at a briefing Monday night following a dinner held on the first day of the seven leaders' 18th annual economic summit.

Scowcroft added that "Whether (the use of force is) necessary will depend on the level of violence." Noting that "it is not easy (from the air) to protect ground convoys" against sniper fire, he said he thinks road convoys "would have their own ground protection right along with them."

He said the leaders of the so-called Group of Seven nations hope that relief columns can enter the embattled republic without interference. But he added that the summit leaders "are determined" that relief supplies will get through in a "permissive environment" if possible and with military force if necessary.

Scowcroft said Bush plans, as the president said last week, to restrict U.S. military involvement to providing air cover and naval forces offshore.

But White House Press Secretary Marlin Fitzwater said earlier Monday that the president feels "all options are open" regarding the involvement of U.S. forces. "We don't rule anything out."

Fitzwater noted what he called "our reluctance to unilaterally" intervene on the ground, but he pointedly refused to reject American participation in a multinational ground operation.

A senior State Department official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the U.S. military contribution would remain "predominantly" air and naval forces, but added: "What other role we might play to help in ground convoys I think remains open."

U.S. officials suggested that an allied naval blockade using U.S. warships may also be added to sharpen international pressures on Serbia to end the ethnic warfare that has claimed tens of thousands of lives since four of the six republics within the old Yugoslavia began declaring their independence last year.

Threats of allied military action appeared designed to shock the Yugoslav combatants into halting attacks on relief operations.

U.N. spokesman Fred Eckhard said, "The security situation is extremely precarious and the fact that the relief flights have come in without incident so far is a small miracle."

He said relief workers were having difficulty moving the 465 tons of supplies that had reached the airport into starving neighborhoods. A convoy of armored vehicles was delayed for four hours Monday by sniper attacks.

Officials said at least two overland routes could be used to get food and medical supplies into Sarajevo — one from the Adriatic port of Split and the other from the Croatian capital of Zagreb.

The residents of Sarajevo, the mountain-ringed capital of Bosnia-Herzegovnia, have been trapped in more than four months of house-to-house warfare and long-range artillery duels.

Bosnian militias are defending their homeland's Feb. 29 declaration of independence; Serbian-led forces are fighting to link enclaves of Serbs to the republics of Serbia and Montenegro.

U.S. military officials in Europe and at the Pentagon said the Sarajevo airport cannot handle enough supplies to alleviate the threat of starvation. The field has a single 8,700-foot runway and lacks the apron space needed to park unloading planes

The Pentagon has stationed several Marine amphibious ships loaded with 2,200 Marines and dozens of combat helicopters in the Adriatic or nearby Mediterranean for possible use in Yugoslavia.

FIRE: Residents pick up salvageable belongings

we first got downstairs the only fire was on the balcony across the hall," Ms. Petty said.

But the fire, largely contained to the four upper units, spread quickly through the rafters and caused heavy damage to those units. The four lower units sustained heavy heat, smoke and water damage, fire officials said.

Families from all eight units moved Monday to executive suites at Saddle Club Apartments. All of the residents are expected to be moved into new apartments within three days.

"They've been really nice about the whole thing," resident C.E. Spangler said. "I guess they're already at work painting our new apartment. I guess it turned out all right for the lot of us."

The bedroom, bathroom, kitchen and laundry room in Spangler's apartment were heavily damaged by fire, smoke and water but the living room and dining room were left virtually unscathed.

"It's odd. When we were watching them fight this last night, we expected the whole thing to be destroyed so we we're sort of lucky," Spangler said.

According to Dominguez, all of the residents were fortunate.

"There was a lot of potential for someone to be harmed and everyone got out OK. All of our firefighters were OK, too," he said.

Traffic on Loop 250 remained congested for about an hour Sunday night as motorists slowed to watch the flames. North winds blew the heavy smoke away from the road.

(From 1A)

Northern liberal and Southern moderate wings of their party. But it also raised the question of whether Cuomo might also relax his vow of uninterest in the vice presidency.

Cuomo made a point of saying at a news conference Monday that Brown had discussed the vice presidency with him by telephone over the weekend.

Cuomo said the party chairman had not asked him to reconsider his position, but he declined to provide details about their conversation. He said that Clinton did not mention the vice presidency in a telephone call on Sunday night.

Ginny Terzano, a spokeswoman for Brown, said that "99.9 percent" of the conversation between Brown and Cuomo on Saturday concerned Cuomo's speaking at the convention. She said that Brown mentioned as an aside that he would have liked Cuomo to serve as Clinton's running mate.

"He was not speaking for Mr. Clinton," she said.

There was no sign Monday from Little Rock, Ark., where Clinton spent most of the day, that the Arkansas governor was considering Cuomo as a running mate.

Aides to Clinton said he had not yet decided whom he would select. But Clinton is expected to announce his choice later this week or just before the start of the convention next Monday.

Clinton said as he left Little Rock for Washington late Monday that he was "gratified" that Cuomo would give the speech, adding that the New York governor "would be very, very compassionate and forceful in making the case."

"I think he'll make a compelling case, not just for me, but for why we have to change," Clinton said.

Cuomo, by volunteering that Brown had spoken to him about the vice presidency and then declining to discuss the context, managed to insert himself back into the vice presidential search from which he had withdrawn weeks ago.

What seemed certain Monday was that no formal offer of the vice presidential spot had been made to Cuomo. But what was less clear was whether he would actually be interested in the job. The governor has conceded in the past that speculation linking him to a presidential campaign is good for his political stature at home and as a national party leader.

He said he considered the vice presidency a critical job. "I hope nobody thinks that a person who knows as much about government as I do and who feels the way that I do about government could say the vice presidency is not important enough, that you've got to be No. 1," Cuomo said. "It is a very important position. So please, it's not a disparagement of the office when I say it wouldn't work for me."

But he declined to predict whether he would accept the job, saying any discussion of the issue was "academic" because he did not expect to be asked. Cuomo told Clinton campaign aides several weeks ago that he did not wish to be considered.

"I'm told the process is concluded in the sense that they have all the candidates they can handle," Cuomo said.

Cuomo has sent mixed signals about the vice presidency in the past. Last week, he said in an interview with The Associated Press that it would be "very, very inviting" to defend the New York record in a campaign against the Bush-Quayle ticket. "But, of course," he added, "it's no justification for running for vice president."

A top adviser to Cuomo said he doubted that Cuomo, who harbors few warm memories of his four years as New York's lieutenant governor under Gov. Hugh L. Carey, would be interested in the vice presidency.

"Why should he come along for the ride with someone else driving?" asked the adviser, who spoke only on the condition of anonymity. "I don't know how he would feel about playing second to this man."

As recently as Friday evening, Cuomo said in an interview that, "I'm not going to be speaking at the convention."

He asserted then that he had had no discussions with Clinton or Brown about a speech and he denied reports that there had been talks between his staff, the Clinton staff and the Democratic National Committee staff.

Members of all three staffs said Monday that such discussions had indeed taken place, with one Clinton aide saying there had been "a flurry of calls between lieutenants and lieutenants."

Officials in the Clinton campaign said they had also considered offering the speech to Sen. Tom Harkin of Iowa, who ran against Clinton in the early primaries. They said Harkin had been approached about taking another speaking role, possibly to second Clinton's nomination.

Cuomo said Monday that he was persuaded over the weekend by Clinton and Brown, who was a student of Cuomo's at St. John's Law School.

whom Brian Maughan knows two biographies have been written and a third — by Orbison's widow, Barbara — is in the mill.

"My goal right now is to write another biography, the best one yet, and have it out by this time next year," Brian, 15, said at the recent Roy Orbison Festival in this out-of-the-way West Texas town where "Roy" was reared.

"I think it would be great if the people here in Wink had raised enough money to have the statue (a planned larger-than-life bronze of Orbison) here and I had the book out, both by next year," he added, referring to the event that is the first weekend in June each year.

Never mind that Brian is not a professional writer — "English is not my best subject, but I'm a pretty good student and I know a story line when I see one."

Never mind that he's a novice in the unjust and venal world of books. "I've heard about all that," he said.

It's a journey that has had Brian Roy-crazy since, well, since he was a child.

"It started when I was 9. I was watching 'Austin City Limits.' Well, Roy came on, and I turned to my dad and said 'Who is this guy?'

"Just the voice, how he could hit the full notes, the voice like no other. I told my dad right there this was my favorite singer. Neither of my parents, in spite of the fact they're baby boomers, were big Roy Orbison fans."

"Brian was 11 when Roy died," said Brian's mother, Charlotte, an accountant for Oklahoma City schools. "Within a few days after that happened, I was putting Brian to bed when he looked up and said, 'Y'know, Mom, I'm gonna write a book about Roy Orbison.'

"Y'know, a mother thinks that's just a boy talking and that's just what I thought at the time, that this would go away at some point. It never did. And when he was 12, we were at my sister-in-law's in Temple, Texas, and Brian heard there was gonna be a Roy Orbison Day in Vernon, the town where Roy was born, on the anniversary of Roy's birthday.

"Brian looked at me and said, 'Oh, Mom, please take me.' Well, I took him and we went back the only other time they've had a Roy Orbison Day there.

"What I remember about Vernon is that Barbara, Roy's widow, was there and Brian just walked up to her and said, 'Hi, I'm Brian Maughan from Oklahoma City and I'm writing a book on Roy,'" Charlotte Maughan said. "What amazed me is that she said that if he'd write to her, she'd help him with his book.

"What actually happened was that by the next year, she was tied up with so many other things that she couldn't help Brian, but she was very nice to him."

While Barbara Orbison didn't provide the assistance Brian wanted, he was more successful with other family members, according to Brian's mom.

"When Brian was in Nashville doing research, Wesley (Roy's only surviving son by his first wife, Claudette) came up to our motel and spent some time looking through Brian's scrapbooks on Roy," Charlotte Maughan said. "He's also gotten to know Sam (Roy's little brother and only living sibling) pretty well and Sam's been pretty helpful."

And Bennie Birchfield, Roy's closest friend at the time Roy died Dec. 6, 1988. And Pam Higginbotham of Grand Prairie, Texas, whose father was Roy Orbison's mother's brother.

Higginbotham said some information in the two published Orbison biographies "is untrue and has really hurt the family," as she put it. "Brian's book, I believe, will be fair. He's very smart, he's thorough in his research and I trust him."

In the course of his research — mainly via correspondence with other Orbison collectors through fan newsletters and the like — Brian has shared information and made friends with "some of the real die-hards about Roy."

A serious fan Brian met along the research trail was Charlotte A. Bohacheff of Bay St. Louis, Miss. Bohacheff, Brian said, "is going to meet me in Nashville for two weeks later this summer to finish our research, then she's going to help me with the business part of the book."

Businesswise, Brian is careful with his money.

"I made all the money I've used for my collection myself, mowing lawns," said Brian, whose father, Roy Maughan, owns a modest business, Roy's Air Conditioning in Oklahoma City. "When you make your own money, you tend to be pretty careful about how much you spend for something, and especially in collecting the kind of stuff I do, where people a lot of times want way too much for something. . . .

"Personally, I think the most I've ever paid for anything was $30," he said, almost wincing. "That was for a record, 'Roy Orbison Sings Hank Williams.'"

Charlotte Maughan said her son never was into sports, even though he's lived his life in football-crazed Oklahoma. As he puts it, Brian was "not sports-active at all. . . . Sports are OK, I'm just not into that. I have played musical instruments, the cello and guitar, but frankly, I'm not too good at that."

What he is good at is writing letters, probing, looking for information or songs he doesn't have. And recognizing that there's always information that's been hidden or otherwise not made public.

"We know, for instance, that Roy cut at least seven more songs that have never been released," Brian said. "We know that Roy was very lenient in the way he let people use his name and his recordings.

"My favorite song of Roy's was one called 'Coming Home' that a lot of people have never heard," Brian said. "It is on the 'Class of '55' LP when Roy went back to Memphis with Carl Perkins, Jerry Lee Lewis and Johnny Cash. I think it was the only song on the record Roy sang by himself. I also like 'In Dreams' and 'Crying' a lot.

"But, to be honest," Brian said, "there are a few songs Roy did that I just can't stand and I'd rather not name them."

LOTTERY: State already has spent game's proceeds prizes, said lottery spokesman Steve Levine.

The state gets the second-largest cut — 40 percent. Of the remaining proceeds, 5 percent is retained by ticket sellers and 10 percent goes for the administrative costs of running the games.

Welch also noted that lawmakers created a "lottery stabilization fund" as a hedge against a sudden, unexpected drop in lottery proceeds.

"On the first day of every (budget) biennium., $100 million of lottery revenue is transferred into the stabilization fund. It stays there and draws interest," Welch said.

"It's a cushion, a rainy-day fund to make sure that if, for unforeseen reasons, lottery revenues are a half billion dollars one year and nothing the next, some money is there," he said.

Because the lottery started selling tickets about five weeks earlier than planned, the comptroller's office says initial profits may be about $40 million higher than the official $461 million estimate.

But that's not a "huge" pile of cash by government standards, either. The current state budget totals $60 billion — 1,500 times more than the extra lottery money.

Dust from Mount Pinatubo eruption works to cool Earth, scientist says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Dust and chemicals from last year's eruption of Mount Pinatubo have cooled the Earth significantly by blocking incoming sunlight, a government scientist reports.

The planet's average temperature dipped about 1 degree Fahrenheit between the eruption on June 16, 1991, and May of this year, according to the report from the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

"It is a tremendous amount of cooling," Ellsworth Dutton of NOAA's Climate Monitoring and Diagnostics Laboratory in Boulder, Colo., said Monday.

Scientists said the cooling trend is temporary — it should be over in five years. But even a short-lived temperature drop will make it more difficult for scientists to determine if the so-called greenhouse effect is actually warming the Earth.

The greenhouse effect is caused by industrial gases that allow sunlight to pass through, but trap the resulting heat around the planet. The volcanic cloud blocks some of the incoming sunlight, which means there is less heat to be trapped by the greenhouse effect.

Dutton said a layer of sulfuric acid droplets released by the volcano has caused a decrease in the total amount of solar energy reaching the Earth's surface.

He reported that while some areas have been warmer than others, most of the globe has cooled.

The Northern Hemisphere, where the volcano is located, has cooled about 1.5 degrees, he said. Dutton said Monday that his temperature calculations were based on measurements made by microwave sensors aboard NOAA satellites.

The layer of acid now covers the globe, located in the lower stratosphere about 12 to 14 miles above the surface. The layer has been measured by laser-radar instruments in Alaska, Hawaii, American Samoa and Antarctica, officials reported.

The acid was created by sulfur dioxide from the volcano. NOAA said it poses no threat to life and is expected to fall out of the atmosphere gradually over the next two to three years. Any cooling induced by the volcano should disappear completely within five years, officials said.

The volcano spewed out as much as 20 million tons of sulfur dioxide, according to a report in Geophysical Research Letters by Gregg J. S. Bluth and Scott D. Doiron of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

Computer models predict an eventual, but temporary, decrease of about 2 degrees in the Earth's average temperature as a result of the volcano, the NOAA report said. Other recent studies have anticipated a lesser cooling than reported by Dutton, generally about one-half degree, as a result of the Pinatubo eruption.

The Earth has an average annual temperature of about 59 degrees Fahrenheit.

NASA researchers reported two weeks ago that the dust from Mount Pinatubo had spread worldwide and said weather impacts were likely.

Some experts have speculated that this spring's cool weather in the Eastern states could be linked to the volcanic material blocking sunlight, though some western states sweltered through heat.

Forbes: Fortunes grow in Latin America

NEW YORK (AP) — Latin America, once a sinkhole of Third World debt, has emerged as the world's leading breeding ground for billionaires, Forbes magazine said Monday.

A surge of private enterprise and foreign investment has nearly tripled the number of Latin American fortunes on the magazine's annual billionaires list from eight last year to 21, the magazine said.

Despite ailing economies, Japan still is home to the world's wealthiest people and the United States still has the greatest number of billionaires on the list with 101.

But the big story is Latin America, where a spree of fortunes were made in a region that only a few years ago symbolized intractable debt, deprivation and war, and the biggest single export was illicit drugs. Most of the region's population remains poor by U.S. standards.

"There is nothing sinister about all of this," Forbes said in its July 20 issue. "Economic growth requires large-scale undertakings, and the people who most successfully organize these undertakings inevitably accumulate wealth."

Mexico led the charge with seven billionaire fortunes, followed by five in Brazil, three each in Chile and Colombia, two in Argentina and one in Venezuela.

Forbes said the biggest Latin fortune is $3.8 billion, owned by Mexico's Garza-Sada family. It controls businesses ranging from a steel-petrochemical complex to a brewery that makes Dos Equis and Tecate beer.

Illicit drugs still play an important role in Latin wealth. Two of the three Colombian entries on the Forbes list are "narco-billionaires," running their empires from prison.

Forbes said Pablo Escobar Gaviria, a founder of the Medellin drug cartel, is worth an estimated $2 billion, while the three Ochoa brothers, also Medellin founders, are managing $2 billion culled from the cocaine trade.

The only legitimate Colombian entry Forbes found was Julio Mario Santo Domingo, owner of the Bavaria SA brewery and Avianca Airlines. He's worth $1 billion.

The richest person on the Forbes list continued to be Japan's Taikichiro Mori, 88, a former economics professor who owns properties ranging from swank office buildings to a vacant tract near Parliament in Tokyo. Forbes said he has a portfolio worth about $13 billion, down from $15 billion last year because of plummeting property values in Japan.

Still, Taikichiro remains comfortably ahead of No. 2 Yoshiaki Tsutsumi, 58, a Japanese industrialist with interests in railroads and golf courses. His fortune is worth about $10 billion, down from $14 billion a year earlier.

In the United States, the wife and children of Sam Walton, the late founder of the Wal-Mart discount chain, share the world's largest collective fortune, $23.8 billion.

Forbes said the richest single American is William Gates III, the 34-year-old Harvard dropout who founded Microsoft Corp., the world's leading maker of computer software. His net worth was pegged at $6.4 billion.

After the United States, Germany has the most billionaire fortunes with 44, followed by Japan with 34. Counting individuals and families, Forbes tallied 291 billionaire fortunes around the world, up from 274 a year earlier.

Fortune magazine, the chief rival to Forbes, publishes its ranking of the world's billionaires in August. Both lists, which are based on estimates and differing criteria, vary widely.

The 1991 Fortune list, for example, said the world's richest person was the Sultan of Brunei, with $31 billion. Forbes said it excludes royalty, heads of state and political dictators from its rankings.

The Forbes billionaires list differs from its annual "Forbes 400" ranking of the richest Americans, in which many of the same names reappear. That list is published in October.

PEROT: Interviews reveal a complex, candid self-made American software. As a result, the company sold the hardware, then helped clients cobble together the necessary programming and trained their operators. Perot had proposed establishing a service division to take over data storage and retrieval.

Though lacking the resources to purchase a computer, Perot knew that most mainframes sat idle from 5 p.m. to 9 a.m., and all weekend long. He thought he could lease this dead time from IBM's clients and form a company to specialize in data processing.

On June 27, 1962 — his 32nd birthday — he borrowed $1,000 of the savings his wife, Margot, had accumulated as a teacher and incorporated Electronic Data Systems Inc., a grand name for a firm with one employee and a $100-a-month lease on a one-room office.

But Perot had a well-grounded vision that started with a certain type of employee, which he described to a New York-based reporter in 1968. "We aren't looking for just the needle in the haystack. We're looking for the needle with the red dot on it."

The recruits who joined a nucleus of Perot's ex-IBM colleagues tended to be fellow ex-servicemen who thrived under the pressure of night and weekend work and who seemed not to mind EDS' no-frills atmosphere. Marital fidelity was a must, as Perot told the author of a March 1974 profile in "The Plain Truth" (published by radio evangelist Garner Ted Armstrong's Ambassador College and Worldwide Church of God), as were no-martini lunches.

"If we have a married employee who has a girlfriend, we terminate him. He's got a lifetime contract with his wife, and if she can't trust him, how can I? It's that simple." — Dallas Times Herald, March 14, 1974.

"I am frequently asked, you know, what I think of young people with long hair. I have to be very careful there, because I have an extreme haircut, too. You know, it is a matter of personalities." — ABC's "Issues and Answers," Jan. 11, 1970.

EDS' first major account, Frito-Lay, then a Dallas-based snack company, was billed $5,128 per month for data processing.

"I used odd numbers like $5,128 in those days to make it look like I knew exactly what I was doing and had figured everything down to the last penny.

"And I would say, 'We want you to pay us in advance.' And they would say, 'Why?' And I would say, 'Well, that's customary in the computer business.' In fact, if they hadn't paid me in advance, I couldn't have paid my people. That's the blocking and tackling that started EDS. It was a great adventure and a lot of fun. And I wouldn't want to do it again." — Dallas Times Herald, Feb. 9, 1986.

In 1965, business was still slow enough that Perot worked part-time for Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Texas. That year Congress enacted Medicare — mandating that each state handle its own claims — and thus guaranteed the success of EDS.

Starting with a successful bid to computerize Texas' program, Perot quickly branched out to other states until his firm was reporting $1.5 million-a-year profits.

Yet Perot kept the purse strings drawn tight. His office was decorated with tag-sale prints of a clipper ship and of an Indian, gun in hand, leaning against a telephone pole and staring at the horizon. "I like what I like, not because it's worth something," he proudly told one reporter. "No picture in my office is worth more than $25."

In 1968, Wall Street came a-courting. When EDS went public, Perot, who held roughly 90 percent of the shares, suddenly found himself a millionaire 205 times over, not to mention the subject of that admiring "H. Ross" profile in Fortune. Other writers soon copied, for Perot was supremely opinionated and compulsively quotable.

EDS — at this time primarily a government subcontractor — continued to grow like a mushroom in a spring rain. The firm's 300 employees in 1968 swelled to 1,800 in 1970, a headcount that almost doubled again in the next year. Revenues kept apace. Perot began to win local attention for both his new riches — and the manner in which he gave away large dollops of it, including $2.5 million for a pilot elementary school in the black ghettos of South Dallas.

"I know what the stereotype is: If you're rich and from Dallas, everybody expects you to be far right. I say look at what I've done and it isn't so." — The Washington Post, Nov. 23, 1969.

In late 1969, his celebrity went national when he announced plans to fly two cargo jets laden with medical supplies and food to Southeast Asia. Perot's goal: distributing the relief to an estimated 1,400 American POWs being held in North Vietnam.

"This is not a campaign to support Mr. Nixon himself — it was to support the office he holds. If Hubert Humphrey were president today, I'd be standing behind him." — The New York Times, Nov. 28, 1969.

"A large bank asked me to become a board member the other day but I declined. I knew they had asked me not from my knowledge of banks but because of my bank deposits." — The Dallas Morning News, Jan. 11, 1970.

Three months later, on April 22, 1970, Perot suddenly found himself with a lot less to deposit. Without warning, EDS stock went into freefall. By the end of the day, Perot was out an astonishing $450 million — until Black Monday in October 1987, his was the largest loss ever suffered by a single investor. The silver lining: He had $1 billion left.

"People asked me what I felt. Money is strange. I felt sorry for the little investors who got taken to the cleaners. But what did I feel for myself? I felt nothing." — The Washington Post, April 12, 1987.

WEDNESDAY: Perot the politician, and how the government should be improved.

World in brief

■ Leftist protesters try to disrupt summit

MUNICH, Germany — Police arrested more than 450 leftist demonstrators who tried to disrupt arrival ceremonies for leaders of seven industrial democracies launching their annual summit Monday.

The police said there weren't enough jail cells at police headquarters to hold all those arrested. Among those detained was Jutta Ditfurth, 40, former head of Germany's Greens party.

Earlier, dissidents hurled a firebomb through the window of a branch of the Deutsche Bank, inflicting $125,000 in damage.

The bank is Germany's largest and a frequent target for leftist anger over German financial power.

The mass arrests took place as demonstrators tried to rush Max Joseph Square where the leaders of Germany, Japan, the United States, Canada, Britain, France and Italy were arriving for their first meeting.

■ French police move against blockades

PARIS — Police and soldiers used helicopters and tanks Monday to dismantle roadblocks by truck drivers that have stranded hundreds of thousands of travelers and caused fuel and food shortages. At least 45 people were arrested.

Sixteen barricades were dismantled around the country, the government said, but about 150 other roadblocks continued to cut access between Paris and provincial cities in the northwest and south.

The truck drivers' union called on its members to leave their rigs in garages starting at Monday. But the union has limited control over its membership, and it was not clear if barricades would come down today.

Public pressure had built over the weekend on Prime Minister Pierre Beregovoy to take action to save the remainder of summer vacation season and the livelihood of damaged businesses.

■ Preliminary report clears police in massacre

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — An interracial, government-appointed commission said Monday it had found no evidence of involvement by senior officials in the Boipatong massacre or other black township fighting.

But the panel charged that President F.W. de Klerk's administration had ignored previous commission proposals on halting the violence, which has claimed thousands of lives, including 24 people slain over the weekend.

The report by the judicial commission, led by Judge Richard Goldstone, followed a preliminary hearing on the massacre June 17 of at least 42 blacks in the Boipatong black township south of Johannesburg. A more exhaustive probe was to begin Aug. 4.

■ Croatian state declaration fractures Bosnia

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — The declaration of an independent Croatian state within Bosnia was termed treasonous Monday by the Muslim-led Bosnian leadership.

The ethnic mosaic of newly independent Bosnia was fractured further with the proclamation of "Herzeg-Bosnia," a Croatian enclave covering more than 20 percent of the former Yugoslav republic.

Bosnia, with a combustible mix of Muslims, Serbs and Croats, was already carved up by the April proclamation of a Serbian state from nearly two-thirds of the republic at the start of the bloody civil war.

If the Croatian declaration becomes a reality, that would leave the Bosnian government in control of only the capital city of Sarajevo and a few provincial towns.

Although the political solution is deteriorating and the neighborhoods around the airport are still battlegrounds, the international airlift to Sarajevo is "a small miracle" going better than expected, said U.N. spokesman Fred Eckhard.

■ India's oldest captive tiger dies in zoo

NEW DELHI, India — India's oldest captive tiger died in a state-owned zoo in the eastern Orissa state, United News of India reported Monday.

Rekha, a Royal Bengal tiger and mother of 17 cubs, died of liver cancer in the Nandankanan Zoo at the age of 19. UNI did not say when the tiger died.

More than half of the world's estimated 5,000 Royal Bengal tigers live in India. The government says there are 4,334 tigers in India, most in the wild.

In 1970, the government banned tiger hunting and started 18 tiger reserves three years later. The tiger population had dropped to 1,827 in 1970 from an estimated 40,000 at the beginning of the century due to killing by poachers, maharajas and British colonial officers.

Japan admits to forcing women into brothels

■ Question of compensation for surviving 'comfort women' remains unclear.

N.Y. Times News Service

TOKYO — Bowing to pressure from neighboring countries to acknowledge a brutal chapter of its wartime history, Japan reversed itself on Monday and admitted that its military had forced tens of thousands of women to work in a vast network of government-run brothels for Japanese soldiers during World War II.

As recently as six months ago, Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa and other senior officials denied that the wartime government had organized and run the brothels, in which thousands of women died, insisting that the brothels were set up by entrepreneurs. Thus, the officials said, Japan was not in a position to pay compensation to the women.

The admission on Monday illustrates the continuing emotional power of the legacy of World War II in East Asia, where Tokyo's actions remain suspect and many people feel that Japan has not sufficiently atoned for its wartime behavior.

In recent months, Japan and South Korea have engaged in an increasingly angry diplomatic dispute in which Seoul supported the demands for compensation by women who had survived the brothels. Protests erupted in South Korea and began to spread to China and other countries.

Along with the admission of government complicity, Japan released a host of documents revealing details about how the elaborate system was run. Some documents provided the Japanese high command's justification for the brothels, arguing that it would discourage troops from raping local women, which would have aggravated civilian resistance as the Japanese army swept through Asia.

Japanese officials said they were searching for a way to provide financial aid for the Korean women, but they declined to use the term compensation. But details were vague, and it was unclear what the government would do about women in the Philippines, Indonesia, China, and other nations who were also forced into brothels.

Japanese officials had offered apologies to the victims of the brothels, but the refusal to accept government responsibility had been widely condemned in Asia as another example of Tokyo's reluctance to face up to war atrocities.

Taboos against discussing such subjects are still strong in Japan, where schoolchildren learn little of the reasons or details of the invasion of Asia and Japan's ultimate defeat. By releasing the report on Monday, Japan tried to show that its handling of such issues is changing.

Koichi Kato, the chief Cabinet secretary, announced the shift at a news conference. "I would like to express the sincere apology and remorse of the government of Japan to all those, irrespective of nationality or place of origin, who underwent indescribable pain and suffering as comfort women," he said, using the common term for the women. "My heart really aches when I listen to those who speak of this matter."

Mrs. Mitterrand escapes bomb in northern Iraq

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — A bomb exploded Monday near a motorcade carrying the wife of French President Francois Mitterrand in northern Iraq, missing the longtime supporter of Iraqi Kurds but killing four Iraqis.

Danielle Mitterrand's three-day trip to the Kurdish region was not arranged through President Saddam Hussein's government and was sharply criticized by Baghdad on Monday before the bombing.

Mrs. Mitterrand, 67, was accompanied by Bernard Kouchner, France's minister for humanitarian affairs, who also was unharmed. Both have frequently visited refugees in disputed regions of the world, and Mrs. Mitterrand has campaigned tirelessly to improve the plight of Kurds in Iraq, Iran, Turkey and Syria.

Monday's blast also wounded 19 people, said U.N. officials in Geneva and the opposition Iraqi National Congress in Vienna, Austria. No one claimed responsibility for the bombing near the city of Sulaymaniyah.

Mrs. Mitterrand talked with her husband by phone after the blast and reported she was in "perfect health," presidential spokesman Jean Musitelli said at the economic summit in Munich, Germany.

In Paris, Foreign Ministry spokesman Daniel Bernard said: "We condemn this kind of attack in the strongest terms." He would not comment further.

The French government has been a strong supporter of the Kurdish drive for autonomy. Mrs. Mitterrand, who was host at a 1989 conference at which many speakers called for a Kurd state, visited Kurdish refugees in Iran last year after their failed uprising against Saddam following the Gulf War.

Last week, Mitterrand himself made a dramatic trip to the besieged city of Sarajevo in Bosnia-Herzegovina on a mission to focus world attention on the bloody ethnic conflict in that former Yugoslav state.

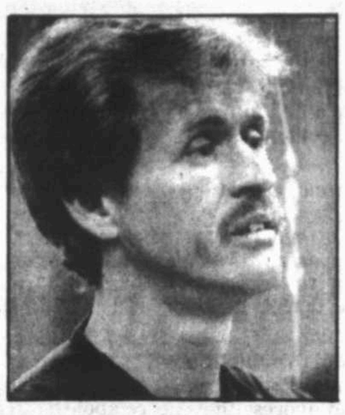
Fugitive pleads innocent to kidnap charges, threatens a 2nd escape



Danny Ray Horning, who escaped while serving life in prison, tells judge he wants to represent himself.

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. (AP) — A fugitive convict who eluded authorities for nearly two months pleaded innocent to numerous charges Monday and said he would try to escape again.

Danny Ray Horning, 33, who escaped while serving life in prison, gave not guilty pleas to four counts of kidnapping, two of armed robbery and three each of attempted murder and attempted kidnapping.

The crimes allegedly were committed during his seven weeks on the run. Trial was set for Sept. 1.

Horning, who had taunted his pursuers with notes and wisecracked in court Sunday when bail was set at $2 million, told Coconino County Superior Court Judge Michael Flournoy on Monday he wanted to represent himself.

Flournoy appointed a public defender to advise him and suggested that Horning would be wise to stop talking with reporters, saying he could hurt his case.

But Horning, asked outside the court if he would attempt another escape, replied: "In all honesty, yes, I will."

Coconino County Sheriff Joe Richards said Horning was returned to prison Monday afternoon.

Horning escaped May 12 from the state prison at Florence, in south-central Arizona 50 miles southeast of Phoenix. He was tracked to Grand Canyon National Park, about 200 miles north of Phoenix, where he allegedly took tourists hostage. He was arrested Sunday at Sedona, about 95 miles north of Phoenix.

He had been serving four consecutive life sentences for robbery, kidnapping and aggravated assault for a 1991 bank robbery in Winslow. California authorities had issued an arrest warrant in a 1990 dismemberment-slaying of a man he allegedly robbed.

Corrections Department spokesman Michael Arra said Horning will be under much more stringent security than even the maximum security classification he had when he escaped.

"Horning is not going to have many of the creature comforts that many inmates do, because since he's a high escape risk, many of those things could be used in an escape attempt," Arra said. He refused to discuss details.

Corrections Director Sam Lewis deplored news media coverage of the search for Horning, saying he was portrayed as a folk hero.

"He is not a folk hero. He really and truly is nothing but a smart aleck," Lewis said.

Wall Street cuts Calif.'s credit rating

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — California's credit rating was downgraded Monday as thousands more IOUs went into the mail and state political leaders again failed to end a budget stalemate.

Moody's Investor Service, one of three major credit-ranking agencies, reduced California's rating to AA, down from AA1 several months ago and AAA last year.

That means it will cost the state about $113 million more in interest than the approximately $640 million originally expected to sell $10 billion worth of voter-approved bonds, state treasurer Kathleen Brown said.

Moody's said the downgrade was necessary because the budget stalemate showed California was not managing its finances "in a manner consistent with its historic record of prudent and effective fiscal control."

The service also warned another change might be necessary if the budget stalemate does not end soon.

Another service, Standard & Poor's, said it would take another look at California's rating later in the month.

Despite the deepening crisis, Gov. Pete Wilson and legislative leaders had no plans to resume negotiations, which broke off about a week ago.

"They haven't asked us and we haven't asked them," said Franz Wisner, a spokesman for the governor.

Wilson sent a series of messages to the Legislature's budget-writing committee Monday, but it was unclear whether they signaled any change in his position.

"It's a stack of amendments inches thick and we're going to have to go through it. Right now, we just don't know," said Assembly fiscal consultant Geoff Long.

The Republican governor and legislative Democrats, led by Assembly Speaker Willie Brown, are at odds over how to erase an $11 billion deficit. Wilson proposes deep cuts throughout state government and has said he will not consider a budget that requires more taxes and does not deal with the entire deficit immediately.

Carnegie panel cites 16 heroes

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A gym teacher who tackled a man hacking people with a machete was one of 16 people cited for heroism Monday by the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission.

"When I went after him there was no doubt in my mind who was going down, and it wasn't going to be me," said Gary Lamberty of Racine, Wis.

The commission has honored 7,655 people in North America since it was founded in 1904 by Pittsburgh industrialist Andrew Carnegie. Six of the newest heroes died in their rescue attempts. Five others were honored for interceding in violent crimes.

Each hero or the hero's survivors receives a certificate and $2,500.

Charles Gordon, a 63-year-old judge from Encino, Calif., lunged at a man who held a woman at gunpoint in a courtroom in Los Angeles, knocking the gun to the floor.

Janice Hardy, 39, an elementary school principal from London, Ontario, helped free a woman being stabbed by a man in Goderich, Ontario.

Lamberty, a 42-year-old middle school teacher, said he ran outside his apartment building on June 3, 1991, when he heard a loud crash. Albert Price, 36, of Racine, had driven his pickup truck into four cars stopped at an intersection and emerged with a machete, which he was swinging wildly.

Price attacked an 80-year-old man and a woman in her car as firefighters and off-duty rookie police officer Russell Cera tried to stop him. Cera, 30, also was cited as a hero for repeatedly taunting Price to lure him away from the victims.

Bush program lacks specifics

President Bush bristles at the criticism that voters can't find his domestic agenda. He reminds audiences that he's sent scores of bills to Capitol Hill — on crime, education, welfare reform, tax cuts.

But people don't pay attention, he says, because this is "a weird political year."

On CBS's "This Morning" last week, he called attention to his program, one that "controls the growth of mandatory spending. . . . And we have a program. It's there. It's definitive."

In an interview recently with The New York Times, he challenged the idea that only Bill Clinton has offered a coherent economic plan. His administration has "32 pages of alternatives and options up there right now before the Senate."

In principle, the president has a point. The problem is that he has not pursued it in practice.

What is his "definitive" program? In the 1,000-page federal budget for 1993, Budget Director Richard Darman devotes 2½ pages to the idea of limiting mandatory spending — spending for programs that automatically continue from year to year — by a formula accounting for inflation and population growth.

It's a conscientious idea, but nowhere do Darman or his president suggest how they would cut spending to fit the formula. Would Bush charge retirees higher Medicare premiums? Would he cut back food stamps? He never says.

The 32-page plan Bush cited in the Times interview turns out to be a booklet advocating the balanced budget amendment. It consists mainly of charts; only three pages describe policies, largely a laundry list.

Some proposals, like the one for health care reform, are innovative but lack tough measures needed to work. Others, like education and urban aid, involve so little money they can't possibly achieve their lofty goals.

This document describes Bush's proposal for a cap on mandatory spending in a few lines, none detailed. Indeed, the cap is described only as growth of "X percent" after accounting for the impact of inflation and population growth.

It's not hard to see why voters fail to understand where the president stands, not when he flaunts "definitive" solutions of X percent.

Though sketchy, Candidate Bush's proposal to cap mandatory spending is a responsible idea for controlling the deficit. Too bad that, in 42 months, President Bush has done so little to achieve it.

OTHER VIEWS

Limits would be wise

While supporters of a balanced budget constitutional amendment bemoan its defeat in the House . . ., some analysts are suggesting it may have been a blessing in disguise.

We don't quite buy that rationale — a balanced budget would move the country a long way on the road to economic stability. However, the reasoning of some analysts is that the proposed balanced budget resolution was flawed because it did not contain a tax-limitation feature. Thus, big-spending advocates could have used the amendment, if ratified, as a means to raise taxes to finance their programs.

The view here is that given a clear choice between tax hikes and spending cuts, Congress would finally start to trim the budget. However, Daniel Mitchell of The Heritage Foundation contends that without specific cuts on the size of government, the amendment could have degenerated into an annual excuse to raise taxes to balance the budget.

Indeed, various proposals with built-in limits were floating around Capitol Hill but apparently got lost in the politicking shuffle.

Certainly, when the next serious effort is mounted to pass the balanced-budget amendment, provisions such as this should be considered.

'Dirty tricks' abound in politics

Rich Bond, chairman of the Republican National Committee, said recently, "There is no such thing as dirty tricks in this Republican Party."

For Bond, and anyone gullible enough to believe him, here are a few reminders: Willie Horton, Anita Hill and Watergate.

The Republican and Democratic parties both have a long history of "dirty tricks." The only difference is that the Republicans are very organized and generally artistic about their smear campaigns.

The Democrats in the past few decades have been almost reassuringly inept in most of their attacks. Even when they had evidence of a president selling arms to a sworn enemy of the United States the best they could do was take out a few of the minor players.

What probably has the Republicans scared this time around is that Ross Perot looks to be every bit as efficient and skillful as they are at digging up skeletons.

Combined with the fact that he has a larger war chest, you can practically hear the elephant's knees knocking.

Bush digs deeper hole with Iraqgate

WASHINGTON — In angrily insisting to have had no guilty knowledge of Saddam Hussein's abuse of our grain credits to buy destructive technology, George Bush last week showed no understanding of the First Law of Holes: when in one, stop digging.

Safire

The president, entertaining tourists in the Rose Garden for "CBS This Morning," was upset by an irreverent question. It had to do with sworn testimony by Frank Lemay, a Foreign Service officer, that he informed higher-ups on Oct. 13, 1989 — in a memo kept "out of the system" — about a rash of investigations into Iraq's ripoff.

"We didn't know that," Bush snapped. "The State Department didn't know it. You can talk about what one State Department employee" — he decided against attacking the FSO. "And if we had known it," he said about the corrupt diversion, "it wouldn't have happened."

The Bush Iraqgate defense is apparently to claim ignorance of the spreading Lavoro scandal before James Baker directed Agriculture Secretary Clayton Yeutter to push through a half-billion-dollar payment to Saddam.

The president dug himself in deeper: "We did not go to enhance his nuclear, biological or chemical capability." Then he inadvertently pushed open a door: "I have an executive order out on specifically that."

I called his press secretary to note that the President had just declassified National Security Directive 26 by describing its contents on the air, and asked for the text. Marlin Fitzwater confirmed that N.S.D. 26 was the document referred to, and suggested I get a copy from Congress.

A portion of which I did. That Oct. 2, 1989 policy directive making Saddam our central gulf ally contains this sentence: "We should pursue, and seek to facilitate, opportunities for U.S. firms to participate in the reconstruction of the Iraqi economy, particularly in the energy area, where they do not conflict with our non-proliferation and other significant objectives." (Italics mine.)

What does Bush's use of the word "non-proliferation" tell us? The "energy area" could mean oil and gas energy, or it could mean nuclear energy. Nobody worries about oil and gas proliferation — but we do oppose nuclear proliferation.

This strongly suggests Bush wanted to encourage U.S. firms to supply Saddam's nascent atomic program with our nuclear and computer technology, which the Defense Department had resisted. In the preceding paragraph of N.S.D. 26, he warns of economic and political sanctions for "Any breach by Iraq of IAEA safeguards in its nuclear program."

George Bush signed that infamous directive to help arm Iraq 58 days after the FBI raided the Lavoro Bank's Atlanta office to discover Iraqi skimming and abuse of U.S. loan guarantees. James Baker, well aware by briefing and in writing of Saddam's fraud, went ahead under N.S.D. 26 to arm-twist Agriculture to disregard creditworthiness and hand over $500 million more to Iraq.

Now about Bush's "the State Department didn't know it."

On Oct. 17, 1989, three days after Frank Lemay delivered his memo detailing the Iraq-Lavoro investigations to Undersecretary Richard McCormack, the Treasury Department's Rachel Bailey made contemporaneous notes of the reaction of its recipients in State: "McCormack is particularly seized. Baker is putting pressure. Bob (Downes) spending a lot of time: Sofaer, McCormack, Kimmitt. Baker is insisting on being kept informed."

Bush should stop pretending he and Baker were out of the loop, come clean on the real motive and ask the court to appoint independent counsel before Congress demands it.

Then he should try to redeem his failures before and after Desert Storm. That means recognizing the legitimacy of Kurdish leaders Talabani and Barzani, victors in democratic elections in the zone of Iraq we protect with Britain and Turkey.

It means publicly approving the recent meeting in Vienna of leaders of all anti-Saddam elements, and extending our aerial protection to a provisional government of all factions inside Iraqi Kurdistan. And it means inviting these anti-Saddam leaders to the White House to dramatize America's endorsement of their aim to establish democracy in Baghdad.

CHARLEY REESE

Give your values a rest please, Mr. Quayle

What's wrong with traditional family values that Vice President Dan Quayle says he supports?

Nothing, Quayle's hypocrisy notwithstanding. I don't know why the Bush administration has to wait until the reelection campaign to inform us in staged speech that it supports family values. It might have given us a hint that it did in the way it behaved, in the people it chose for jobs, in the legislation it proposed. Perhaps, though, as the Bush campaign mechanics believe, there is no limit to people's gullibility.

Reese

But there is one problem with values. They are not something you can take down off a shelf and hand to somebody. They cannot be injected into people. Nor, for that matter, can they be legislated, decreed, or court-ordered.

People derive their values from their experiences in their own environment. I use the word "environment" in a broad sense to include family, friends, acquaintances, schools, art, the media — all those things that are continuously educating us both verbally and by example.

For that reason, one generation's values cannot be superimposed on another because no two generations experience identical environments. Furthermore, it is folly to suppose that a boy growing up in comfortable circumstances in New England, for example, will develop identical values to a boy growing up in hard circumstances in Los Angeles. It is also folly to assume, as some do, that the boy in New England will turn out admirable and the boy in L.A. will turn out badly. It may just as well be the opposite.

The world-class looters in America all come from good families and have excellent educations. Instead of TV sets or a sack of groceries, they steal millions of dollars.

There are no generic values nor has there ever been a time in the United States (or anywhere else for that matter) where a large population shared a uniform set of values, no matter how much our defective and selective memories may argue otherwise. Even when Europe called itself Christendom and the church had the power of the state to enforce its rules, there was a heck of a lot of un-Christian behavior — not to mention heresy.

It's pointless for politicians to go around stating that they support traditional family values. We can all do that. Let's do it now. On the count of three, let's all say, "I support traditional family values."

Now, is the country any different? Is anyone's environment any different? Did we heal anyone's hurts? Did we find a job for anyone? Did we restore a father to an abandoned child? Did we the alter the tax laws? No, we didn't do anything except exhale a bunch of carbon dioxide.

It's funny really how many people think that making a pronouncement is an accomplishment. "I'm against that. Those people shouldn't do that. There is no excuse for that. It's just wrong." Wonderful. Now that we know what your subjective moral judgment is, do you have any constructive suggestions for solving the problem?

If not, you might consider the advice of the Asian sage who said if you can't improve upon the silence, zip it.

Maybe I'm just getting cranky. For too many decades I've been listening to politicians make pronouncements, express sympathy, and sweat sincerity. Of course, with rare exceptions, they never did a damned thing except perform favors for their big campaign contributors and retire from public office ten times richer than when they entered it.

Quayle has spent enough public money flying around to golf courses to provide college educations for ten children. Apparently it does not occur to people in Washington that the extravagance of their lifestyles makes a joke out of their words.

Apparently it does not occur to some people that to accept Quayle as a statesman makes a joke out of democracy.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

We need rules for talking about each other

To avoid any confusion in the future, I think we should, once and for all, decide the rules for talking ugly about one another.

Grizzard

Her point was this: instead of blacks killing blacks wouldn't it make a lot more sense to kill whites instead?

Well, you know what happened when Gov. Bill Clinton suggested that killing people — white or black — was a little insensitive. Jesse Jackson jumped on Clinton's case and Sister Soultrain, sporting a bejeweled nose, called the governor a racist on national television.

All this confused a lot of people. "It would be racist if I said whites ought to kill blacks," a white citizen was saying, "so why isn't it racist for a black person to suggest killing whites?"

It just isn't, according to Jesse Jackson.

The rule in these time of political correctness apparently is this:

If a member of the majority says anything detrimental to or about a member of the minority, it is racist.

If, however, a member of the minority says anything detrimental to or about a member of the majority, such as they ought to be killed, that's perfectly OK because of the way the majority has oppressed the minority.

The majority has it coming, in other words.

So Gov. Bill Clinton was way off base criticizing Sister What's-Her-Name and that just shows you how prejudiced he is.

The only way the governor could prove otherwise might be if he named Jesse Jackson as his running mate on the Democratic presidential ticket. I bet Jesse would be willing to forgive and forget.

Now that we have that settled, I'm wondering if it would smack of racism on my part if I asked a couple of questions about sister's suggestion, blacks kill whites for a change?

Is it her idea that blacks should kill whites at random or does she have specific whites in mind?

I hope it's not at random. In that case, I could be at the wrong place, like at a country music concert, at the wrong time, and get killed. I couldn't say it was racist, of course, since I'm a member of the majority.

On the other hand, if the good sister wants some specific whites bumped off, I'd like to know who they are so I could make certain I wasn't on the list.

If I happened to be on the list, I could go ahead and make reservations for a trip to a foreign country in order to avoid being killed in the name of reducing black on black crime.

I realize such an action would be the ultimate in white flight and probably shows my own bias. If I were a clear-thinking, politically correct, non-racist person, I'd hang around and get killed because of the hundreds of years of oppression for which me and my kind are responsible.

But what's New Zealand like this time of year? If the shooting starts, remember: white men can't jump.

Clinton mulls running-mate; aides debate timing of announcement

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — When should Bill Clinton announce his running mate? The campaign is debating whether to deliver the big news this week or hold off to create "high combustion" at next week's convention in New York.

Aides even toyed briefly with the idea of postponing the announcement until next Tuesday, so newscasters would break into baseball's All-Star game and its guaranteed audience of millions.

The timing of Clinton's announcement still depends mainly on when the Democratic presidential candidate makes up his mind, and that hasn't happened yet, aides report.

So far, Clinton has successfully kept his favorite choices under wraps to heighten suspense.

Clinton decided to travel to Washington late Monday, a day earlier than originally planned, allowing time for possible meetings with those under consideration.

The Arkansas governor, just a week away from the start of the Democratic National Convention, spent much of the holiday weekend mulling his choices while aides reviewed "a tremendous amount of background research" on potential candidates, one campaign aide said Monday.

Campaign spokeswoman Dee Dee Myers said the announcement would likely come sometime between Wednesday and next Monday.

Debating the exact timing is "like debating how many angels are dancing on the head of a pin," Myers said. "It's not productive, because Clinton's going to make up his mind and we're going to announce it. You're going to get a bounce out of it no matter when it happens."

So far, Clinton has successfully kept his favorite choices under wraps to heighten suspense. Rep. Lee Hamilton of Indiana, Sen. Al Gore of Tennessee, Nebraska Sen. Bob Kerrey and Pennsylvania Sen. Harris Wofford are widely mentioned as among those under serious consideration.

But aides said Clinton also was looking at other prominent Democrats, and a "surprise" pick was possible.

Speculation that Mario Cuomo might still be an option subsided with the campaign's announcement Monday that the New York governor will give the nominating speech for Clinton at the convention.

One faction is lobbying for Clinton to unveil his choice Wednesday or Thursday. That would drive the news Clinton's way in the days leading up to the convention.

Another school is lobbying for Clinton to hold off until Sunday night, and make the announcement in New York. That could heighten interest in the convention and prompt voters to tune in to the festivities as Clinton formally claims the nomination.

"I want high combustion, not regular combustion," said one aide lobbying for the delay.

Announcing the running mate while the All-Star game is under way was proposed but quickly shot down by aides who believe Clinton will have made up his mind well before then and the news could lead out.

Besides, as one aide said, why risk alienating baseball fans?

Clinton aides scheduled plenty of time in Washington on Tuesday morning to allow for any last-minute meetings with prospective running mates and to make final convention plans. He planned a noon speech to the National Education Association and an evening speech to an African Methodist Episcopal gathering in Florida.

The rest of the week's schedule was fairly bare, so any day later this week could work for an announcement.

Also Monday, the Clinton camp got a preview of the Republicans' fall attack strategy. Massachusetts Gov. William Weld, acting at President Bush's behest, stormed in to Little Rock to fire away at Clinton's record on the environment and taxes.

Weld accused Clinton of trying to "feather his own political nest" rather than going after toxic polluters. He also charged that Clinton had raised taxes and fees 128 times. "'Did he ever meet a tax he didn't like?' is a fair question to ask," Weld said.

Clinton operatives said Weld's speech was part of a GOP effort to divert attention from the main issue of the presidential race — returning America to economic strength.

"I think it shows how desperate they are," Myers said.

Columbia, seven astronauts set new record for longest space shuttle flight

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Columbia and its hardy crew set a record for the longest space shuttle flight Monday on the 11th day of a laboratory research mission.

Astronaut Carl Meade compared the flight to "an extended camp-out trip" and said he can't wait to take a shower when he gets back to Earth on Wednesday.

Columbia swept past the previous shuttle endurance record — 10 days, 21 hours and one minute, set by the same ship in 1990 — at 8:14 a.m. CDT. Its trip began at midday on June 25.

That still pales in comparison with other space programs, including NASA's Skylab and the Russian Mir space station, where one crew spent a year in orbit.

Mission Control congratulated the five men and two women aboard Columbia by playing the 1960s tune "Stay," which pleads: "Oh, won't you stay just a little bit longer?"

Shuttle commander Richard N. Richards thanked ground controllers and said he and pilot Kenneth Bowersox celebrated by doing the twist — "about the only thing you can do without going out of control up here."

The crew missed out on another shuttle first. Richards tried unsuccessfully to contact the two cosmonauts aboard Russia's Mir by ham radio as the craft flew over South America. Columbia passed 71 miles below Mir at the closest approach.

Columbia is scheduled to land at Edwards Air Force Base in California at 8:08 a.m. CDT Wednesday. Its trip odometer will read 5.36 million miles.

The astronauts shared their thoughts on extended space travel with "CBS This Morning" news anchor Connie Chung.

"The physical aspect of this is not very demanding at all," Meade said in the live space-to-Earth interview. "Actually, it's the mental that I think challenges most of the people. This is rather like an extended camp-out trip, if you know what I mean. So it's not really that bad."

Meade didn't hesitate when Chung asked what he would choose first after landing: a hot shower, a cold drink or a home-cooked meal.

"The shower, for sure," Meade replied.

There is no shower, tub or even sink aboard the shuttle, and astronauts must take sponge baths and use spray soap to wash their hair. There are two options for sponge baths: wet wipes or towels moistened with hot or cold water from the galley water nozzle.

Still, the shuttle is downright luxurious compared to the one-man Mercury, two-man Gemini and three-man Apollo spaceships.

Skylab, the roomiest manned spacecraft flown by NASA, has the record for the longest U.S. space flight, an 84-day mission in 1973-74. The world record is held by two Russians cosmonauts who spent 366 days in 1987-88 aboard Mir, a little more spacious than Skylab.

Skylab's three astronauts had 12,183 cubic feet of living area — about the size of a three-bedroom ranch house. That's almost three times the size of Columbia and Spacelab, the 23-foot-long laboratory in the shuttle cargo bay where most of the research is being done on this flight.

NASA plans two more 13-day shuttle trips before stepping up to 16-day excursions and, around the turn of the century, stays of several months aboard space station Freedom.

"We are gradually lengthening the flights, taking small steps and gaining a better understanding of how man adapts to longer periods of weightlessness," said crew member Ellen Baker, a physician.

Automation displaces meter readers

By Tony Rogers
Associated Press writer

BOSTON — The meter reader, long the victim of overzealous watchdogs and rickety basement stairs, may finally be displaced by automation as utilities check gas, electric and water usage with computers.

And since the technology that permits remote meter reading can also monitor whether a home is being burgled or the basement is flooding, utilities could soon protect homes as well as power them.

While the automation eventually will result in fewer jobs for meter readers, the utilities say their current employees will stay at work installing new devices.

In his three years as a meter man, Jack Friel encountered his share of growling dogs and darkened cellars. Now he supervises the shop at Boston Gas Co. where automatic meter readers are built.

"It's the unknown when you walk into a cellar with just a flashlight," Friel said. "It was a fun job. But I won't miss it."

'It's the unknown when you walk into a cellar with just a flashlight. . . . It was a fun job. But I won't miss it.'

— Jack Friel

The advent of automatic meter reading is an electrifying change for the utility industry, which has been sending out legions of meter readers since Edison's time.

"This is the most drastically new technology this industry has seen in over 100 years," said Frank Arricale, a Boston Gas spokesman. "The meter had never changed. That's our cash register."

Boston Gas began experimenting six years ago by placing tiny radio transmitters on gas meters. The devices sent the meter readings to passing vans stocked with receivers and computers that recorded the data.

The experiment blossomed into an ambitious $20 million program to outfit all of the utility's 500,000 customers with the devices. About 200,000 meters have been equipped with transmitters so far, and Boston Gas meter-reading vans regularly cruise residential streets.

The transmitters are installed at no cost to customers. But the utility saves because the system reads meters much faster and more cheaply than humans could, Arricale said.

A good meter reader might check 250 meters a day, while the van can cover 25,000 in the same time. The need to estimate the bills of people who aren't home when the gas man or woman knocks is eliminated.

"People don't like us estimating their bills," Arricale admitted, "because usually it's on the high side."

Automated meter reading systems of one kind or another are springing up nationwide. In Chicago, Peoples Gas Light and Coke Co. started converting its 850,000 meters last fall. Southern California Edison Co. is beginning to put in a system that combines radio transmitters with the ability to send meter information over the power lines themselves.

Archeologists explore ancient campsite

By Dick Stanley
Associated Press

AUSTIN (AP) — For almost a year, state archeologists sifted the rocky soil of an ancient campsite destined to be crossed by a highway. Finally, in late 1982, about 12 feet below the surface, they found human finger bones.

They soon uncovered something extraordinary about 10 miles northwest of Austin. It was the complete skeleton of an Ice Age woman, the oldest female human ever found in Texas — buried with simple ceremony between 8,000 and 11,000 B.C.

This month, scientists from the University of Texas at Austin began digging a deep pit in part of the site on the west bank of Brushy Creek, beside what is now four-lane Ranch Road 1431 in Williamson County.

This week, protected from the curious by a chain-link fence and guards, they begin a three-month examination of 20 feet of soil layers stretching back thousands of years, using techniques unavailable in 1982.

They've come back because, after almost a decade of analyzing the remains of the woman — who may have lived as long ago as 8,000 years before the building of the Egyptian pyramids — and Stone Age tools found near her grave, scholars have concluded the site may be critical to understanding the earliest inhabitants of the Americas.

"THERE'S VIRTUALLY the whole archeological record of Texas here — close to 11,000 years of continual occupation, which is real unusual," said Britt Bousman, a researcher at UT-Austin's Texas Archeological Research Laboratory.

Analysis of the artifacts, said Michael Collins, another lab archeologist, indicates the woman's culture may have been more sophisticated than previously thought, requiring some overhauling of ancient history.

Bousman, Collins and about 25 students and archeologists will, among other things, take geology samples and examine remains of plants and grasses for climate records. Using a new technique to determine the magnetic polarity of rocks, for instance, they will learn whether layers of burned stones existed naturally or were moved there for use.

"These are huge (cooking) hearths," said Bousman, pointing to a dark layer of burned rocks and soil about 6 feet below the surface. "There may have been large communal cooking or incipient earth ovens. At certain times there were large groups that camped here. Bison bones we've found may represent a butchering site."

IN 1982, SOME people nicknamed the woman Leann, because of her grave's proximity to the town of Leander. To scholars worldwide, the spot is known as the Wilson-Leonard Site, after the former landowners' names. Scholars snub the name Leann in favor of the Wilson-Leonard Female.

Last year, the family of Will Wilson Sr., a former Texas Supreme Court justice and attorney general, deeded some of the 2.5 acre tract to the Archeological Conservancy, a preservation group in Santa Fe, N.M.

Some scholars think the campsite may contain evidence of the first settlers of the Americas, who contemporary scientific opinion maintains arrived from Asia over an ancient land bridge across the Bering Strait about 12,000 B.C.

Among those awaiting the latest results is Gentry Steele, a professor of anthropology at Texas A&M University. Steele has spent several years examining the skeleton in his lab in College Station, as he has most ancient human remains found in Texas.

"There are very few paleo-Indian sites of that antiquity containing human remains," Steele said. "And most are represented by a fragment of a bone here or a bone there. She's one of the 10 or 15 best in completeness."

LAST FALL, HE and Oklahoma sculptor Betty Pat Gatliff, a police forensic artist, collaborated in creating a clay model of the woman's face for the Texas Committee for the Humanities.

Based on her skull measurements and cast in bronze, the bust is now the first thing visitors see in the McDannald Hall of the American Indian at the Houston Museum of Natural Science.

"Putting a face on the old bones gives you a unique insight into early populations," said museum curator Alisa Phelps. "They're not very different from the way we are."

At 5 feet 4 inches, the Ice Age woman was relatively tall among her peers, Steele said, and had a thin, sloping face and projecting teeth. The teeth were in good shape when she died, with modest wear and few cavities, he said.

"That could mean she's relatively young," Steele said. "Or it could be that her diet was largely plants. All we can say for sure is that she was a young, adult female, older than 18 but younger than 40."

A diet mainly of plants, Collins said, would alter current conceptions of these early peoples. They are thought to have been nomadic hunters and gatherers who depended mainly on a diet of meat.

SHE WAS, IN any case, a Homo sapiens, or intelligent human, like us, said Frank Weir, director of archeology for the Texas Department of Transportation. He supervised her discovery in 1982.

Cable delivers loads of information

N.Y. Times News Service

Progress in modern telecommunications is often invisible, but enormous. Scientists at AT&T Bell Laboratories reported last week that they had succeeded in doubling the previous record for information that can be conveyed using blindingly fast pulses of light — some 6.8 billion bits of information, or pulses of light, a second.

To put that gigantic figure into perspective, consider that household telephone lines carry about 64,000 bits of information per second. Using a strand of fiber-optic cable about the thickness of angel hair pasta, the new system could provide enough telephone service — about 100,000 simultaneous conversations — for nearly all the fans in both Yankee Stadium and Candlestick Park, or for a city the size of Gary, Ind.

In a paper delivered to the Optical Society of America and the Institute of Electrical and Electronic Engineers, an AT&T team reported transmitting 6.8 gigabits, or billion bits, of information a second with a new configuration of lasers. This was over a 520-mile fiber-optic cable on land.

The principle behind fiber optics is as simple as a Boy Scout on a summer night signaling a pal in Morse code with a flashlight. In fiber optics, computers fire lasers, which turn on and off rapidly in digital code. Optical detectors interpret the information.

The trick is sending the light signal so crisply that the billion-pulses-a-second do not look like a steady stream.

Deadline nears for council seat applications

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff writer

Several people have expressed interest in the vacant at-large seat on the City Council, yet three days before the filing deadline no one had submitted the forms necessary for consideration.

"Nine have picked them up but no one has turned them back in, so we haven't had anyone officially apply," Lyn Miller, deputy city secretary, said on Monday.

The seat was vacated by J.D. Faircloth when he became mayor on June 1.

Deadline for applying for the position is 5 p.m. Thursday. Council members will make the selection one week from today, the regular meeting day for City Council.

"We will actually deliberate, vote and appoint on the 14th," Faircloth said.

At a public forum that evening, applicants will be given 15 minutes to speak and then answer questions posed by council members, Faircloth said.

Council members will nominate any or all applicants and then vote. A majority vote is required (four out of the six council members) for appointment. A run-off of the top two candidates will be conducted if needed.

"Each person will be considered individually and on his own merit ... and the council will make its selection public," Faircloth said.

Those who would like to be considered must be legal residents of the city, registered voters and 18 years or older.

"Other than that it is generally open to anyone," Faircloth said.

Persons interested in the position must submit an application that includes a five-question form about city-related issues. "It's pretty much the same process you go through when you submit for an election," Faircloth said.

A similar selection process was conducted last month to fill the District 2 seat vacated by the Rev. Michael DeVaughn, who was transferred to a church in Tyler.

"We will duplicate that process as much as possible," Faircloth said.

Restaurateur Juluis L. Brooks was selected to fill that position on June 23.

"We wanted to fill the District 2 seat first. We wanted the District 2 person to have the opportunity to vote for the at-large" position, Faircloth said.

After this selection, three of the six council members will have been appointed rather than elected to the position.

In February, at-large representative William C. "Bill" Morrow was chosen to fill the seat vacated by John Castro.

According to the city charter, council members must appoint a new member to a vacated seat.

CAF leader keeps aviation heritage flying

By Ed Todd
Staff writer

Bob Rice, like many aviation enthusiasts, always had a love of flying.

It was an early fascination, born out of his childhood in the 1950s, when his father would take him "out to the airport over in Abilene and watch the airplanes land and take off."

Since those heydays of the propeller-driven airplanes, Rice, 50, still heads out to the airport — not just to watch the airplanes land and take off, but to ensure that the forces that keep 'em flying are churning and are being renewed.

The airplanes that Rice watches over are vintage flying machines from the 1930s and 1940s. They are restored World War II-era warplanes that now are in the Confederate Air Force's Ghost Squadron based at Midland International Airport.

Rice, a retired U.S. Army colonel and pilot, is executive director of the CAF and the American Airpower Heritage Group, which includes the American Airpower Heritage Museum and Flying Museum.

"I love the airplanes and the aura of the airplanes," he said.

Rice likes flying so much, that even before he graduated from Texas A&M university in 1964 with a degree in animal husbandry, he was flying single-engine airplanes through A&M's Army Reserve Officers' Training Corps.

By 1967, he was into his first of two tours in Vietnam, where he flew helicopters, primarily the scout observation helicopter — Bell OH-13 Sioux — for the Army's Air Cavalry.

In an earlier war, that type of helicopter was called the "Korean Angel" and was used to fly wounded troops to Mobile Army Surgical Hospital

Teen-ager loses fingers in pipe-bomb explosion

Staff report

A 16-year-old Midland youth suffered "massive" damage to his left hand Monday afternoon when a pipe bomb exploded as he handled it outside his house, officials said.

John Treat's condition was upgraded to fair late Monday night following several hours of surgery. Treat had several fingers amputated and suffered extensive tissue damage in the blast, according to officials at Memorial Hospital and Medical Center.

Police discovered several other homemade pipe bombs at 2202 W. Cuthbert Ave. and took them to the Midland Police Department shooting range for detonation.

"It's both sad and surprising to think bombs are being made in our neighborhood," said neighbor J.C. Dawson, while walking outside her home near Memorial Stadium. "I guess they are easily made, though.

"It is sad about the boy's hand. I'm sure he thought he was being safe," Ms. Dawson said. "I just hope others are more careful."

Treat's parents declined to comment on the incident.

Black chamber plans math, reading sessions for youth

Staff report

The Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs is hoping to invest in its future by stressing math and readings skills to young children.

A program consisting of one hour of training for six consecutive Friday afternoons is to begin this week at the chamber's office, 2707 N. Big Spring St.

"We will be appealing to the children in kindergarten through sixth grade," James Fuller said.

"The whole premise of the program is not new. Entrepreneurs need to know how to read and what better way to begin than with these kids. They are the future," he said.

Parents who enroll their children are encouraged to attend the sessions, which will be held from 3:30-4:30 p.m.

Each hour will include several different educational methods. For example, children will read to each other, parents will read to their children and children will read to their parents or another adult.

The program will continue through Friday, Aug. 14.

A party to celebrate the end of the program is tentatively set for Friday, Aug. 21. Organizers hope to hold the event at a local park.

Parents interested in enrolling their children in the program can call the chamber's office at 682-2864.

Nowlin refuses to remove self from remapping case

AUSTIN (AP) — The federal judge who was reprimanded for his handling of the state redistricting plan has again refused to remove himself from the case.

U.S. District Judge James Nowlin last week rejected a motion by Texas Attorney General Dan Morales, who wants the Austin judge off the case.

Morales has asked the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans to review Nowlin's decision, a spokesman said Monday.

Morales' spokesman Ron Dusek said the request of the 5th Circuit is not an appeal, but indicates the state's wish to have the court look at the action taken by Nowlin.

Nowlin is a member of the three-judge panel that voted 2-1 to reject a state Senate redistricting plan approved by the Legislature and substitute it with a court-ordered plan.

That plan has been criticized by Democrats and minority groups, who say the Republican-appointed judges drew the district boundaries in a way to help the GOP.

After imposing the plan, Nowlin was reprimanded by a panel of federal judges, which said he violated judicial rules by getting secret help from a Republican legislator in drawing a redistricting map.

Morales had earlier sought Nowlin's removal from the case because of the controversy. The judge refused. After the reprimand, Morales again tried to get Nowlin off the case. Again, he refused.

Gramm to help kick off library expansion project

Staff report

U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm will be in Midland today to help kick off construction on the $2.5 million expansion project at the Midland County Public Library.

The ceremony will begin at 12:45 p.m. in the vacant lot adjacent to the library, 301 W. Missouri Ave.

Gramm will be joined by Midland County Judge Charles W. "Bro" Seltzer, Mayor J.D. Faircloth, Doug Henson, chairman of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, and Max Perry, chairman of the fund-raising efforts for the expansion project.

When completed, the new 26,000-square-foot facility will nearly double the size of the existing library, providing enough space for the Midland County Historical Society and volumes of genealogical, oil and gas, and children's literature.

A computer system linking the Midland County Library to its branch facility, the Midland College library and the University of Texas of the Permian Basin library also will be housed in the new addition.

Funding for the library expansion was derived from several sources, including a $200,000 grant from the U.S. Department of Education, private foundations and donors, and certificates of obligation.

Billy Graham was different from today's TV preachers

Perhaps you noticed that on last Friday's front page there was a brief news item stating that for the past three years evangelist Billy Graham has been suffering the early stages of Parkinson's disease.

Ott

The story went on to say that Graham, 73, has had some difficulty writing and descending stairs without railings because of the nervous disorder, but that, overall, doctors were upbeat about the current status of his health.

Here's hoping the man is doing just fine. I've always liked Billy Graham. To my way of thinking, he was what a preacher was supposed to be ... kind, gentle, caring. He could do the fire and brimstone bit with the best of them, of course, but somehow I always got the feeling that despite his international fame he could still — if the need arose — preach a meaningful funeral for a little boy's dead pet. In other words, he didn't get too big for his britches.

That pet — probably an old scraggly dog that no else wanted — was in all likelihood the most important thing in the little boy's life, and, being a man of God, Billy Graham would see to it that a proper burial took place.

Why? Because it was the right thing to do. And he wouldn't pass the hat afterward, either. Hard to believe, isn't it? A preacher working for free, I mean?

But there's something different about Billy Graham, a quality that separates him from the Jimmy Swaggarts and Robert Tiltons of the TV preaching world.

The word that keeps coming to mind is "sincerity." Or "trust." Let me put it this way. I'd buy a used car from Billy Graham in a New York second. I wouldn't shake hands with Jimmy Swaggart without conducting a quick count of my fingers.

Nothing personal, mind you. I'd just want to be sure all 10 of them were still there.

Of course, I'm prejudiced. I grew up watching Billy Graham on TV. And, remember, this was 30-some-odd years ago, back before preachers took on the look and mannerisms of game show hosts. Back then, TV evangelists possessed a certain dignity that you don't see much anymore. Too often it has been replaced by gaudy sportscoats and fluffy hairdos.

And another thing. Billy Graham was a pioneer, an original, one of a kind. Now you can't turn on the television set without having a dozen or so wild-eyed preachers weeping and begging for money. But in the late 1950s and early '60s, that wasn't the case. In fact, Billy Graham was pretty much it.

And he talked about sinning, not cash flow.

Entire families would gather around the TV to witness "Brother Billy" in action. The sermon would generally begin at 8 p.m. so that gave everyone plenty of time to finish supper and put away the dishes. The kids, who were not overjoyed at the prospect of having to hear a preacher in the middle of the week, would take advantage of that brief in-between time to go outside and play.

But at precisely five minutes before the hour, mom would stick her head out the door and holler, "Ya'll come on in now. Brother Billy's getting ready to preach."

Sometimes the neighbors would join us. The living room would be crammed full of people, each with his or her eyes glued to the fuzzy black-and-white screen. It often took on the feel of an old-fashioned revival. There would be uplifting music. Gentle laughter. Lots of hearty "amens" and plenty of "stand as we sing all three verses of ..."

Glancing around the room, I would notice people reacting in their own way. The women would fan the summertime heat and nod their heads a great deal, silently agreeing with the message. The men were a bit more vocal. They would occasionally say, "He's right, you know." Or, "You tell 'em, Brother Billy."

The kids would do what I was doing ... glance around the room a lot checking out the grown-ups.

When all was said and done, though, there was a good feeling within the group. Maybe his words had indeed connected, found their target. Or perhaps it was just a matter of us enjoying the togetherness and camaraderie that comes with hearing the words of the "Good Book."

Who knows?

But it worked, that's the important thing.

For one hour, a group of people, many of whom had spent the entire day arguing and fussing, managed to put aside petty differences and behave in a civilized manner.

With the families I recall from my childhood, that was indeed a miracle. And if Billy Graham played any role at all in accomplishing that feat, then he should be allowed to continue.

Do we really want to leave the future of family gatherings in the hands of Jimmy Swaggart and Robert Tilton?

I think not.

The love of money has already caused enough break-ups in this country.

RICE: CAF director keeps history flying

(From 1B)

(M*A*S*H) units.

"... A scout helicopter and a gunship, would go out as a team and locate the enemy," Rice said, "and then we would try to develop that situation by putting a platoon of infantry on the ground to see how large a force we were dealing with.

"If it was a large force, then a larger infantry outfit would be airlifted in to develop the situation."

Rice, who has served with armor and airborne divisions and whose stateside duty ranged from the Pentagon to San Antonio, said he spent "a wonderful 26 years in the Army. I'd do it again in a heartbeat."

Reflecting over his wartime experiences and the U.S.' wars and conflicts, Rice said it is "the nature of Americans ... (to) rise to the occasion."

"They have been known to do that throughout history. American people answer that (patriotic) call," Rice said. "There's no doubt about it."

Among its worldwide resources, the 8,000-member international CAF has a fleet of about 140 warplanes mostly from the 1939-'45 period. Eighty aircraft are in airworthy condition; the others are in various stages of restoration. CAF airplanes include trainers, pursuit aircraft (fighters), bombers, transports, and liaison and rescue aircraft.

CAF colonels-volunteers locate, restore, maintain and fly the aircraft.

"It is a wonderful thing the volunteers do to maintain the aviation heritage of World War II," Rice said. CAF volunteers help "perpetuate the (American aviation) heritage that is near and dear to their heart," Rice said. "They do a fantastic job."

Many of the CAF's more than 100 wings and squadrons restore, maintain and operate the aircraft at their own expense and through fund-raising drives.

Rice said the "Confederate Air Force volunteers give so generously of their time and resources across the country" to restore, maintain and fly the aircraft.

"The things which the members do in this organization are extraordinary in terms of effort, volunteer time, dedication, imagination and ingenuity," Rice said. "These airplanes are extremely difficult to maintain (and) expensive to maintain and fly."

At Midland's CAF headquarters, between 15 and 20 warplanes are on exhibit or are undergoing maintenance and restoration.

The aircraft go on national and international tours to demonstrate America's World War II air-power heritage.

The American Airpower Heritage Flying Museum owns title to the "Ghost Squadron" aircraft, which are entrusted to the CAF.

The Midland CAF headquarters operates on an annual $1.2-million budget that is funded by CAF membership dues, revenue from the museum and airpower demonstrations, and donations.

The CAF, which was founded in the Rio Grande Valley of South Texas in 1957 by a band of five farmers and aviators, relocated to Midland in 1991 "thanks in large part to the generosity of many, many people in the Permian Basin," Rice said.

"Our honeymoon is over. It's time now for us to be a contributing member of the community."

In doing so, the CAF and its museum are developing into tourist attractions to help bolster the economy.

"We hope to become much more involved in the educational arena in the local schools in terms of establishing active education programs," including a summer aviation camp and classroom programs and projects, Rice said.

Since the museum opened last December, more than 5,500 school children have visited the facility, Rice said.

In addition to the static and flying artifacts, the American Airpower Heritage Group maintains an "absolutely magnificent" archives of World War II aviation literature.

"At this stage of our lives, 50 years after the war, all of us can learn a lot," Rice said. "A lot of us share the experiences, the emotions, all of those things that were so much a part of the war and not only for the American soldiers but for the other soldiers as well."

Rice acknowledged the "instant camaraderie" of CAF colonels, especially wartime aviators of whatever nationality, "whenever they join together and have that common ground, whether it be standing under the wing of an airplane, in the hangar, exchanging their stories — doing their hangar flying."

Among the pilots and other aircrew members, "perhaps their paths crossed in the air. Who knows? But the possibility was there, and they were happy to have that exchange."

The camaraderie of the all-volunteer CAF "is absolutely what makes the organization a fun organization," Rice said. "It was formed to be a fun organization. They (colonels) have fun, but believe me, it is not without considerable toil, blood, sweat and tears and just plain old hard work."

Richards: Clinton needs to 'convey his energy'

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Ann Richards, who will chair the Democratic National Convention, said Monday that presidential nominee Bill Clinton should use the gathering to tell the American people how he can get the job done.

"He needs to convey his energy," Richards said. "People need to see him as a worker, not a talker. Or maybe a talker and a worker."

Richards said that the nationally televised convention in New York City will be an important stage for Clinton due to the sizeable audience that will be watching.

But the folks at home all have heard politicians' promises before. So Clinton needs to do more when he delivers his speech accepting the nomination, Richards said.

"I think Bill's speech to the convention needs to be pragmatic. That is, he needs to lay out what he can do," she said.

"The American people — just like people in Texas — are sick of being told things that could be and would be accomplished that turned out they couldn't do."

Richards, who early on ruled herself out of the vice presidential derby, also said she had advised Clinton to pick a running mate with whom he feels comfortable.

"My advice to him was that he has to have someone that he likes. He really needs to have somebody he can work with," she said.

Although many people still think of the vice presidency "as a sort of ribbon-cutting, funeral-attending position," Richards said a president "really does need someone who can assume some heavy lifting. And it has to be somebody he can trust, so that business of personal affinity I think is real important."

So far, Clinton has kept his favorite choices under wraps to heighten suspense. Rep. Lee Hamilton of Indiana, Sen. Al Gore of Tennessee, Nebraska Sen. Bob Kerrey and Pennsylvania Sen. Harris Wofford are widely mentioned as being under consideration.

Richards, who is strongly pro-choice on abortion, said a Clinton running mate would suffer if he supports the Pennsylvania law restricting abortions that last week was upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court.

"I don't think they could be chosen if they support that law," Richards said. "It would be virtually impossible for them to be chosen."

Speculation that New York Gov. Mario Cuomo might still be a vice presidential option subsided with the campaign's announcement Monday that the New York governor will give the nominating speech for Clinton at the convention.

Richards hailed that choice.

"He's fabulous. He's a great speaker, a smart guy and I think it's a good choice too because Mario and I both have worked with Bill in the (National) Governors' Association. He knows what he can do."

Super collider supporters rally to save science project

WAXAHACHIE (AP) — Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, and two Texas congressmen donned construction hats Monday and were lowered more than 200 feet into a construction site of the controversial $8.25 billion superconducting super collider they are fighting to preserve.

As a crucial vote on the project's future approaches in the U.S. Senate, supporters organized a "SSC — America's Future" picnic and rally for later in the day in nearby Waxahachie.

Bands played, and hundreds of people began filling a park while awaiting a report from Gramm, Rep. Martin Frost, D-Dallas, and Rep. Joe Barton, R-Ennis, on their early impressions of what has been intended to become the world's largest scientific project.

Scientists hope the massive project, being built in a 54-mile underground tunnel about 35 miles south of Dallas, will help them understand the origins of matter.

But first, the project must be revived in Washington. The House stopped funding for the SSC last month, and the U.S. Senate is expected to vote in the next two weeks. If the Senate keeps the project alive, the House would consider it again.

The House had passed previous votes on the SSC, but after a balanced-budget amendment was defeated, the project was one of several costly projects that were axed or cut back.

"I think the vote in the House means we're shooting with real bullets," Gramm said. "We're talking about a quantum leap forward. The stakes are very high and the world is going to be affected for many decades to come based on that vote in the Senate."

The three lawmakers addressed workers at the Magnetic Development Laboratory before touring the construction site. The three were lowered on a crane shaft into the 30-foot by 60-foot hole, 216 feet below the surface. The area represents the starter tunnels of what will be a 54-mile underground circle, should all funding be approved.

"We're going to save this project and make it a reality," Barton said. "We are going to make this the finest resource facility in the free world."

The lawmakers greeted workers and promised to fight for its survival.

Two members of TV news crew suffer electrical shock in Amarillo

AMARILLO (AP) — Two members of an Amarillo television news crew suffered electrical shock injuries Monday when the antenna of their news van touched overhead power lines while they were reporting on a train derailment.

Officials said the incident occurred about 6 p.m., approximately an hour after cars of a Santa Fe Railway train derailed 5 miles north of Amarillo.

KAMR-TV newswoman Jill Yonas was touching the van when the electrical charge went through it and received burns on her thighs and back. She was reported in stable condition at a hospital. Photographer Todd Hunt was treated and released for minor injuries.

Kurt Ecker, a spokesman for the Amarillo Fire Department, said the train was northbound from Amarillo to Dumas when about 10 of its 25 to 30 cars derailed approximately 5 miles north of Amarillo.

Three of the derailed cars were carrying ammonia, which leaked from one of the cars and spilled, Ecker said.

Two of the train's three crew members were treated after complaining that their eyes were burning from the ammonia fumes.

The area where the spill occurred is not populated, officials said. Ecker said the ammonia would be allowed to dissipate and would cause no harm.

The train also was carrying helium and corn, which were not damaged in the incident.

Stephen Logan told police the reptile apparently used his 20-pound body to push aside the cover of his pen in the garage of Logan's residence two weeks ago.

Logan said he had closed the cage less tightly than usual in order to give Purvis more ventilation.

Logan said he doesn't consider Purvis dangerous.

"You'd really have to mess with him. He's much more interested in getting away from you," Logan said. The python will be concerned with seeking out food, although he was fed the day of his disappearance "and could go months without food," he added.

But Logan has alerted kids and everyone else in the neighborhood about the run-away snake.

Logan said a search has included his front yard, which he has covered on his hands and knees. Logan said Purvis is well camouflaged, colored several shades of brown.

He said abandoned buildings nearby seem a likely spot for Purvis to be hiding out. Logan, however, said he is not interested in crawling around under the buildings. "It's not him I'm afraid of — it's his cousins."

Logan said he and his wife, Lea, have a dance act that features Purvis.

"When we take him along, we don't have to dance so much. People are too busy asking questions about him," Logan said.

San Angelo Air Force base tries to continue operating normally

■ Community supports colonel who faces charges of transmission of pornography.

Associated Press

SAN ANGELO — Officials at Goodfellow Air Force Base said Monday operations were business as usual following the announcement that the base's former training center commander has been charged with electronic transmission of pornographic materials from his home computer.

"There has been no change in the mission or the way the base is run since this has happened," Lt. Mike Kelly, public affairs officer at Goodfellow, said Monday. "Everything is going on as normal."

Residents and community leaders were shocked to learn late last week that Col. James A. Maxwell Jr., 48, commander of one of the country's most sensitive military installations, had been charged with interstate electronic transmission of pornographic and obscene material.

An investigation into those charges could result in Maxwell facing a trial by court-martial, a rarity for high-ranking military officers.

Maxwell was commander of Goodfellow Training Center, the highest ranking position at the base, for two years.

He was abruptly removed from his command June 14, just six days before a formal change of command ceremony. The ceremony and a dinner in his honor were canceled.

Maxwell, who is still on base working in "special duty status," and is not restricted in any way, could not be reached Monday for comment.

Following the announcement of charges last Thursday, Maxwell said in a prepared statement he had been informed by Col. Joseph H. Wehrle Jr., Goodfellow's new training center commander, "that he has initiated court-martial charges against me.

"Due to pending judicial proceedings, I cannot currently comment further on the matter."

Maxwell was planning to take over as ROTC detachment commander at Baylor University in Waco, but that assignment was dropped, Kelly said. It was to be his final post before retiring from the Air Force.

Kelly said the charges against Maxwell came from an investigation by a civilian agency. But Kelly said he could not comment further because "that investigation is still going on."

"The material transmitted was obscene and pornographic written and photographic materials," Kelly said. "It was transmitted via a personal computer in (Maxwell's) home."

An officer will be appointed to investigate the charges against Maxwell in a procedure equivalent to a civilian grand jury proceeding, Kelly said.

The investigating officer's findings will be presented to the General Court-Martial Convening Authority, Maj. Gen. Dale C. Tabor, commander of Sheppard Training Center in Wichita Falls.

Tabor will determine if a trial by court-martial is warranted, Kelly said.

No details have been given as to the severity of the penalties Maxwell might face if he is found guilty.

Maxwell took over command of the Goodfellow center July 31, 1990, and was instrumental in the fight to keep the installation open while a congressional commission was considering the closing of many military bases nationwide.

City leaders say the community still supports its largest employer and Maxwell.

"The community has not questioned the base and its workings in the least," San Angelo Chamber of Commerce president Doug Kinsinger said Monday.

"There is just more of concern and caring for Col. Maxwell because there is a lot of respect, concern and sympathy for him. But it's now up to what this investigation finds out as to what is next."

As part of his statement, Maxwell said: "I continue to take great pride in whatever small part I have played in base and community progress during my time commanding Goodfellow. I have a deep affection for San Angelo and its people, and I regret this unfortunate conclusion to my family's two marvelous years in West Texas."

Federal judge clears the way for spreading sludge on ranch

PECOS (AP) — A federal judge cleared the way Monday for New York City sludge to be spread in West Texas this month.

U.S. Judge Lucius Bunton denied the state's request for a temporary injunction halting MERCO Joint Venture's plans to spread sludge on a 128,000- acre ranch.

The state attorney general sued MERCO and the Environmental Protection Agency last week alleging the EPA did not follow its own permitting procedures and MERCO was not complying with regulations to preserve documented archaeological sites on the ranch.

"We're pleased with the ruling and hope that because we are an environmentally-sound project, if any appeals are made we'll win on the merits," said Marc Sybert, MERCO spokeswoman.

Bunton did not immediately give his reasons for denying the injunction and will file them later. He set a Sept. 14 trial date and gave attorneys until July 15 to argue whether the case belongs in federal court.

MERCO's $168 million contract to begin shipping sludge, a wastewater treatment plant byproduct, from New York City to Texas went into effect July 1.

"Obviously we are disappointed with the judge's decision," said Assistant Attorney General Gregg A. Cooke. "We think it's ludicrous to allow the EPA to follow requirements in other states yet when it comes to Texas to fail to comply with proper state agency regulations as clearly required by state law."

The state argued in the hearing that the EPA should not have given MERCO permission to spread the sludge while an application for a permit was pending that would have required public hearings.

The state said granting the permission violated the National Historical Policy Act and the National Environmental Policy Act.

"They could have taken the position that they (MERCO) don't need a permit, but they didn't," said Cooke, who is chief of environmental protection division.

"Once they said, 'You need a permit,' then you've got to say, 'You've got to play by the rules.'"

James Bruseth, a Texas Historical Commission archaeologist and deputy, said the agency received a letter June 22 about MERCO's project. More than 100 archaeological sites have been documented in three surveys of only a portion of the MERCO ranch.

Bruseth said usually when a project involves possible historical sites a process is followed to come up with a way to protect the sites — before any are affected.

"That process has not been followed at all," Bruseth said.

But MERCO's attorney said MERCO was exempt from the federal regulations because the sludge was for beneficial use, improving the rangeland, and not disposal.

"The Clean Water Act does not apply, nor does it require MERCO to get a permit," he said.

"The attorney general says the EPA brought trouble on itself by (allowing MERCO to go ahead)," said MERCO attorney Robert E. Brine. "In other words, it was the act of cooperation with the EPA and supplying of information and making sure the project was environmentally sound that we ended up in court today."

Maria Arevalo Iizuka, a Department of Justice attorney representing the EPA, cited a 1982 Supreme Court ruling to argue the state had no standing to sue the federal government. She also said the MERCO project was exempt from the National Environmental Protection Act. The act would require an environmental impact study.

Hudspeth County Judge Bill Love said he was pleased with the judge's decision.

Police followed procedure with deaf mute, officials say

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas County officials said Monday they followed proper procedure when they detained a deaf and mute man for two weeks under the moniker of a comic book character.

The man, named on police reports as "Howard The Duck" but later identified as Howard Lee Brice, gave jailers his mother's name to contact within hours of his arrest after initially indicating he had no mother. Police say the man, who is mentally impaired, refused to give them his name.

The Dallas County Sheriff's Department failed to contact her because they weren't given an accompanying phone number or address by Brice, said Assistant Chief Deputy Bob Knowles.

"We are not charged with any investigative powers," said Knowles, insisting that because a phone number or address wasn't given, there wasn't any way to notify relatives.

Brice was arrested June 20 on public lewdness and failure to identify charges at a Greyhound bus station terminal. The failure to identify charge has been dropped, but the other is still pending.

Knowles said the Howard the Duck moniker was kept on police files along with Brice's fingerprints for consistency with information on the police department arrest report.

"That name was given to us by the Dallas police arresting officer ... and that's all we had to go by, and we have to put a name there," Knowles said.

"We don't pluck names out of the air," he said.

Dallas police Sgt. Jim Chandler said arresting officer William Perry listed "Howard The Duck" because the magistrate would not arraign Brice without a name. Police say Brice would not give officers his last name.

Relatives were not notified of Brice's imprisonment until a jail employee recognized Brice from a newspaper story and photo about the disappearance of a mentally impaired deaf mute. Brice was released Saturday after Brice's family posted $200 bail.

Vanessa Brice, an aunt, said the family had been calling police every day looking for Brice, whom she described as "mentally slow" and "like a child."

Brice's family is angry about the detention and have asked the Dallas County Commissioners' Court to investigate.

"Basically, they had been looking for him, had filed a missing person's report and did not understand why the police department didn't look in the jail for him to start with," said Commissioner John Wiley Price.

During booking, jail staff at the Lew Sterrett Justice Center recognized immediately that Brice was hearing and speech impaired, Knowles said.

School finance forecast remains cloudy

AUSTIN (AP) — Only days after Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock said public schools would get at least $650 million more state aid next legislative session, Gov. Ann Richards said Monday she doesn't know if that's the case.

"We all know that there's going to be growth in the economy, and we feel good about that. How much of it's going to go to the public schools, I don't know yet," Richards said.

Bullock last week said the increase would come from economic growth and improvement. He said it might be as much as $1 billion for the budget period encompassing the 1993-'94 and 1994-'95 school years.

Richards said she didn't want her statements to be painted as a disagreement with Bullock, adding, "I hope he's right."

The governor said she hadn't talked to Bullock because the lieutenant governor was preparing to have back and knee surgery.

But she told reporters, "I'd say you can't be definitive about exactly how much is going to go to public schools. ... Don't set that up as some kind of disagreement or quarrel or something because it really isn't. I mean there's going to be extra money there, and there are going to be a lot of competing things for that money."

Bullock's earlier statement came after he, Richards and House Speaker Gib Lewis told school superintendents in a June letter, "There will be no new state money for public education next biennium and you can expect per pupil state aid to remain, at best, constant."

Mary Jane Wardlow, a spokeswoman for the lieutenant governor, characterized the statement as a "clarification" of the previous letter.

Ms. Wardlow said Bullock wanted to emphasize that growth in the budget would provide money for additional students, even though school districts could not count on a funding increase per student.

She said there had been concern from school districts expecting a large number of new students.

Bullock last week said State Comptroller John Sharp says tax revenues are running ahead of projections, and that Sharp will recommend budget savings.

Workers return to courthouse after shooting

FORT WORTH (AP) — Some Tarrant County Courthouse bailiffs carried metal detectors Monday as work resumed for the first time since a gunman killed two and wounded three in a courtroom shootout last week.

The 32 hand-held detectors had been in storage Wednesday when attorney George Lott, 45, stood from the back row of an appellate courtroom and opened fire. The devices are only used when specifically requested, according to the head of security at the courthouse.

"When requested, we use them," Capt. Tony Wise said Monday. "Some of the judges requested it today."

For those judges who asked for the security, every person who stepped into their courtrooms first passed through a detector.

Judge David Farris, who sat in the courtroom when Lott went on his shooting rampage, said a bailiff had been assigned to his courtroom for the first time. The judge said he is considering carrying a gun for additional safety.

"It has occurred to me that if I had a gun, I would have used it on Mr. Lott," he said.

Several employees who were in the building during the shootout said Wednesday's events were hard to erase from their minds.

"It's going to take time to get over this," said courthouse employee Robert Smajstrla, who heard the gunshots from the building's basement and saw Edwards' body on the stairwell.

Debi Butler, who has been a clerk in the century-old courthouse for more than two years, said she has seen beefed up bailiff protection before but it has not calmed her fears.

"It doesn't change anything. It's short term. Another week goes by and it's all forgotten," she said.

Lott is being held in the Tarrant County Jail without bail on capital murder charges. Shortly after the shooting, Lott turned himself in at WFAA-TV studios in Dallas, saying he fired the 9mm semiautomatic pistol because he was angry over his divorce case and his ex-wife's child-molesting charge against him.

Midland Map Company has more to offer than its name implies

Experience and reliability are the by-words at Midland Map Company where they have been serving the public, and especially the oil industry, for 42 years. Their areas of expertise are reliable lease, ownership and production service — and state-of-the-art reproduction service.

The combined experience of their management and supervisory staff totals 141 years. Midland Map Company also has several key employees with 10 to 25 years of service.

The collective experience of this group in reproduction and mapping yields an efficiency that produces a very competitively priced service and product.

Although Midland Map Company is well know for its 42 years of reliable and affordable map services, some customers may not be as familiar with the reproduction services that they also have available.

L.C. Hobbs, reproduction department manager and a 35-year employee of Midland Map, heads a group that has a total of 65 years commercial reproduction experience.

They produce the kind of quality work that their customers want and have learned to expect. When you have special reproduction needs that go beyond sharp contrast, the value of this experience stands out.

In addition to being excellent technicians, Midland Map Company reproduction personnel has the expertise to work with customers on special composition projects. Some of these projects involve multiple scale segments that must be converted to a common and usable size.

Often the basis for these projects will only be a legal land description or latitude-longitude coordinate. They work daily with these projects.

Geologists, geophysicists and land personnel will find this capability to be very helpful. Hobbs and his reproduction department staff understand that no job is "just routine."

Whether it's an architect's rendering, an engineering drawing or map reproduction, the utmost care is given to produce clarity and quality.

They understand that their job is to project the image clearly and convey the original work accurately in duplication.

At times law firms and attorneys need presentation materials and documents reproduced. Great effort is made to fill this need in a timely manner.

So, when you have special reproduction needs that go a little past the ordinary, Midland Map Company's reproduction department will be of value to you.

Or, if you need just direct prints, cloth prints, sepia, 2080 Xeroxes, color copies, composites or film work, call L.C. Hobbs, Mike Scott or Rudy Madrid at 683-2777.

Brit Edwards will pick it up and deliver it back to you promptly and courteously.

Midland Map Company still has the maps you need. They invite you to try their reproduction service.

Midland Map Company is located at 106 N. Marienfield in Midland. Hours are 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday. Call 683-2777 for more information.

Mid-West Door & Window are leaders in home improvement

Mid-West Door & Window has been offering quality home improvements since 1976. Look to them for entry doors, atrium doors, storm doors, screens, patio doors, skylights, siding, guttering and windows of all kinds. Plus, Mid-West & Door Window offer the best service in town.

Competitive pricing is also an important factor. Mid-West Door & Window offers it in everything from doors to siding, from screens to skylights — with a no-nonsense warranty that the company can stand behind.

In today's competitive market, homeowners need to be aware of the "come-ons" and "gimmicks" so many companies are using in their advertising. As most all of us have learned the hard way: "If it sounds too good to be true, it usually is."

Mid-West Door & Window believes in standing behind its work with a fair, realistic warranty on their materials and labor — not a warranty that is just for show and a quick sale.

Three things to consider when shopping for your next home improvement are:

- Price — beware the lowest bid. Lower prices may mean poor quality and no service after the sale.
- Warranty — beware of unreasonable warranties.
- Discounts — beware of discounts offered if signing a contract that same day. That's normally an indicator that the price is too high to begin with.

Today's homeowners must always look to the future when remodeling or doing home improvements. Not only for service and parts in years to come, but also in increasing the resale value of their home. Upgrading your home can mean more dollars for you in the long run.

New windows, a new entry door, storm doors and windows, a skylight in a dark room — these are only a few of the ways Mid-West Door & Window can help you get the most out of your home, or enjoy a comfortable, energy-efficient home for years to come.

Mid-West also offers custom-made skylight sunscreens that block up to 70 percent of the sun's heat and still let the light through. These sunscreens are made of a special anti-tear, vinyl-coated polyester. It's woven so the yarn is interlocking and then heat treated to bond the material for strength and durability. In the winter, they can be removed to take full advantage of the solar heat needed.

Sun screen is also available for window screens. They too cut 70 percent of the sun's heat and glare before it strikes your window's surface. These products not only help with energy efficiency, but help protect your home's interior from fading and sun rot as well as provide daytime privacy.

Whatever your home needs, let the experts at Mid-West Door & Window help you choose the right product at a fair price. Come by the showroom at 2400 W. Front in Midland or call 682-4632 and visit with Mike Smith and his staff.

DEAR ABBY

Worrying about death is no way to live

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: A 13-year-old girl wrote to you saying that she is afraid she's going to die a virgin.

Well, I'm a 22-year-old girl who is still a virgin and I intend to stay that way until I'm married. I suppose I could wind up dying a virgin, but I am not going to have sex just so I can say I've had it.

Van Buren

OK, so if I should die tomorrow, I would die a virgin. I would also die without ever having eaten salmon tempura, vanilla coffee, or anchovies on my pizza. I'd die without having seen Paris, Tokyo or Berlin. I'd die without having read Tolstoy's "War and Peace," or the complete works of Shakespeare. I'd die without having seen a Broadway show, or my kid brother's high school graduation.

If I were to die tomorrow, I'd leave a whole lot of ambitions unfulfilled, including getting married and having children. On the other hand, there are a lot of things I have done in my 22 years. For example, I have seen a sizable portion of the United States. I've dipped my toes in the Gulf of Mexico, I've been to England, I entered a lip sync contest and won $50, and I graduated from Emory University.

The point I'm trying to make is this: Don't worry about getting everything done before you die. Just live every day as fully as you can, and never do anything just for the sake of getting it over with. That's the worst reason I know for doing anything — including having sex. — SHEILA IN ATLANTA

DEAR ABBY: Our daughter is one of the baby boomers who married well and have everything they want. She is also able to give her daughter everything she wants.

I am pleased that they have it, but it hurts my feelings when my daughter comments, as she often does, about all the things SHE wanted and had to do without when she was a child.

She obviously does not appreciate the fact that her father and I did without many things WE wanted in order to give her most of the things the average kid had in the '50s and '60s.

Had I known then what I know now, she would have done without a whole lot more! — HURTING

DEAR HURTING: Perhaps your daughter mentions the many things she had to do without as a girl in order to make her daughter appreciate what she is being given.

Obviously, it did not occur to your daughter that she would have had a lot less had you and her father not struggled to give her what she considered "meager."

Don't "hurt" in silence. Tell her — or better yet, show her this column, and tell her you wrote it.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 62-year-old man. I have been washing my own clothes for a few years now, and need to know something.

Why do my boxer shorts always turn inside out in the washing machine? Do the manufacturers put something in them to cause this? — RICHARD THOMAS, TRACY, CALIF.

DEAR MR. THOMAS: Are you sure the shorts were not inside out when they were placed in the machine? Next time you do your laundry, make sure all your shorts are turned right-side out when you put them into the machine, then examine them when they come out.

I'll be waiting to hear from you.

Kids now come complete with batteries

By Erma Bombeck

I can't predict exactly where Armageddon will occur, but I can tell you who will be there. Standing hopelessly by watching life disappear as they know it will be a generation of kids who cannot speak, write or read because their batteries went dead and they ran out of electricity.

Bombeck

It's coming. A few years ago in Boston, I was shopping when the computer system went out. I said to the young girl behind the counter as I presented my purchase, "No problem. I have the exact cash." She had never seen cash before and mistrusted it. "I can't sell you anything until the electricity comes back on," she said sharply.

"Why not?" I asked.
"Because of stock control."
"What does that mean?"
"I'm not sure," she shrugged. "The computer does it."

Recently, in a supermarket, the computer recorded a shopper's total at $12.47. Then it stopped working. The customer gave the check-out girl a $20 bill. The girl stared at it and said, "We'll have to wait until it comes back on and tells me what your change is."

The woman said, "It's $7.53."

"How do you know that?" asked the wide-eyed young girl.

"I subtracted $12.47 from $20."

"Wow!" said the clerk. She looked at the shopper as if she had just discovered a cure for the common cold.

Young people no longer have to rely on their brains to survive in this world. What time is it? Press a button on their watches and they light up. Can't spell? Doesn't matter. A spell-check computer or typewriter will do it for you. Bored reading history? You can get it in comic book form. Don't want to bother scouring the newspaper for current events? No problem. You can see it in your classroom on a TV hookup.

You don't even have to interview for a job or write a resume. Just send a videotape. Need a date? You don't have to form complete sentences on the phone. Send her a cassette, and if she likes the movie, she'll love Saturday night.

Educators have made some great contributions toward making school more interesting, but along the way we've produced a generation with a one-word vocabulary, "like," and the inability to be involved in the thinking process. Not to mention the attention span of a gnat.

You've all undoubtedly heard that Vice President Quayle was guest host of a spelling bee in Trenton, N.J., when he gave a youngster the word "potato" to spell. At the blackboard, the boy correctly wrote POTATO. The vice president pronounced him wrong and told him to add an E.

I ask you, how are our kids supposed to develop a fully developed egoe?

Aylor Pools boasts 24 years experience, master craftsman

Master pool builder Billy Aylor began his business over 24 years ago in Dallas. "We had four stores and built over 3,000 swimming pools in the Dallas area," he said. "Then in 1981 I wanted to come back home to West Texas, so we opened a store in San Angelo. The next year I sold the Dallas operation and two years ago we opened a branch office here in Midland. Last April, I bought this property and opened this store. I live in Midland now and love the community."

It would appear that the community also loves him.

"Two years ago we just did renovations," Aylor said. "But we perceived a need for a more complete swimming pool company."

Besides renovations, Aylor Pools now retails all types of swimming pool supplies such as filtration systems, pumps, heaters, parts and chemicals. They also offer free computerized analysis for pool water to assist swimming pool owners in keeping their pool water chemically safe and balanced.

"In the near future we will be building custom pools, and we'll be selling and installing spa systems," Aylor said.

Expansion of the business isn't the only exciting set of plans on Aylor's horizon. He will soon be building and renovating swimming pools in Bulgaria.

That's right, Bulgaria.

Aylor was selected by the tourism board of the Bulgarian government to initially provide from 10 to 29 Olympic-size recreational pools at Bulgarian resorts on the Black Sea. In addition, Aylor will train Bulgarians in the use of American pool technology.

During a trip by Aylor to Bulgaria last year, he and that country representatives reached what they called a "general agreement" to work together for 10 years.

One of the reasons Aylor was selected by the Bulgarian government is his designation as a Master Pool Builder. The Master Pool Builder's guild consists of less than 90 members world-wide — there are less than six in Texas. This prestigious organization offers membership only to those pool builders who have long-standing experience, are known for excellent craftsmanship and have impeccable reputations.

As if all that weren't enough, Aylor Pools is also the only Midland outlet for Baquacil chlorine-free pool treatment. Some of the benefits of using Baquacil (which is new to Midland but very popular in other areas of the country) is that it has no smell, it needs to be tested only once a week — shocked once a month. Also, it is not affected by heat or rain, offers superior water clarity, creates no hair discoloration. Additionally, it doesn't scale, it's non-corrosive, very stable and offers superior water clarity. It is particularly well-suited for use with Midland water.

Aylor Pools is also the Fibre Tech Dealer for Midland. The space-age technology of Fibre Tech's Dura-Tech coating helps to keep pool interiors significantly fresher and healthier for longer periods of time with less maintenance than is necessary for concrete or vinyl pools.

For more information on these products, call 699-0608 or 520-0644.

Aylor Pools is located at 333 N. Midkiff in Midland. Hours are 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday and 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturdays. Anyone considering a swimming pool renovation will receive a free estimate, along with a lengthy list of references. Call 699-0608 or 520-0644.

This delightful mural can be viewed on the south wall of Aylor Pool's store and office building. It's located at 333 N. Midkiff (at Ohio) in Midland.

Escape from Vietnam pays off for Texas Tech professor

By Chip Brown
Associated Press writer

LUBBOCK — Texas Tech plant genetics professor Henry Nguyen now researches agriculture because he loves it.

He used to study it to stay alive.

Nguyen, 38, was a student in Vietnam through the bloodiest days of the war-ravaged Asian country in the late 1960s and early 1970s.

Passing difficult tests to remain in school and avoid military service, Nguyen ultimately escaped Vietnam April 30, 1975, the day Saigon fell to the communist-led North Vietnamese.

Fleeing in a fishing boat with only $10, the clothes on his back and without a goodbye to his family, Nguyen traveled to Singapore and the Philippines before landing in a refugee camp in Pennsylvania.

He worked at McDonald's and in a towel factory as a janitor in Millersburg, Pa., until the factory manager encouraged him to resume his agriculture studies at Pennsylvania State University in late 1976.

Without any transcripts from his days studying agriculture at the University of Cantho in the Mekong Delta, Nguyen took and passed exams for advanced credit.

Translating his professor's lectures with a Vietnamese-English dictionary, Nguyen eventually earned his bachelor's degree in agronomy and later earned his doctorate at the University of Missouri in 1982.

Today, Nguyen is an associate professor in his final year of a $500,000 research grant he won after becoming the first U.S. crop scientist to receive the Presidential Young Investigator Award from the National Science Foundation.

Nguyen, who has helped turn Texas Tech's plant stress and water conservation program into one of the country's finest, says he owes it all to a country that allows success if you seek it.

"I wanted to make a living without being on welfare and have the respect of the people I work with," Nguyen says from his office lined with certificates and honors for his research. "That was all I was asking.

"But in America if you have a dream and are willing to work hard, you can make it."

"Henry was driven to succeed before he left Vietnam," says Vierling, who works as program director of the genetics lab for Indiana Crop Improvement in Purdue University's department of agronomy.

"But I am sure being a refugee has made him work extra hard — harder than most. Henry believes his students should work as hard as he does. You are going to benefit from working under him no matter what."

Nguyen, who became a U.S. citizen in 1981, says he is worried more and more students are taking education for granted.

"In my case education was life or death," Nguyen said. "I watched a lot of my friends die in the war because they didn't pass the tests to stay in school.

"My case is the extreme case," Nguyen says. "I don't think a lot of the students today see education as a privilege. This is their future. Mom and Dad may leave them a lot of money, but that will pass. No one can take away your education."

Nguyen says his thirst for knowledge came from his parents, whom he talked to last month for the first time in 17 years thanks to recently established long distance phone lines in Vietnam.

"We had written letters back and forth, but that was all we were able to do," Nguyen said. "It meant a lot to hear their voices."

Nguyen is leading cutting-edge research in the genetic development of crops such as wheat, corn and grain sorghum to thrive in drought conditions.

"Because of what Henry has overcome I would say that he has a very special kind of zeal with regard to conducting research that will benefit people all over the world," said Sam Curl, dean of the College of Agricultural Sciences at Texas Tech. "He has tremendous drive to be a world-class scientist."

In 1986, two years after he joined the Texas Tech faculty, Nguyen received the Presidential Young Investigator Award, an honor he said epitomized his relocation to America.

"I still have the envelope the announcement of the award came in. The return address says simply 'White House, Washington, D.C.' " he said with pride.

Surprisingly, chemical engineering, not agriculture, was Nguyen's first choice of study in college back in Vietnam.

"I didn't pass the tests to go into chemical engineering," Nguyen says with a chuckle. "I passed the agriculture test. So I figured if I wanted to stay out of the fighting I better keep going with agriculture."

'Because of what Henry has overcome I would say that he has a very special kind of zeal with regard to conducting research that will benefit people all over the world. He has tremendous drive to be a world-class scientist.'

Vincent shuffles NL

■ Baseball commissioner Fay Vincent sends the Cubs and Cardinals to the National League West while the Braves and Reds go to the East beginning with the 1993 season.

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Commissioner Fay Vincent forced realignment on the National League on Monday, sending the objecting Chicago Cubs and the St. Louis Cardinals to the West and moving the Atlanta Braves and Cincinnati Reds to the East.

Vincent

The Cubs had blocked the move in March, a right granted under the NL constitution, but Vincent decided to order realignment with his power under the Major League Agreement to act "in the best interests of baseball."

The move immediately drew criticism from NL president Bill White, who called it "extraordinary" and said he was "very disappointed." Vincent acknowledged the possibility of a lawsuit to block the move, but said he was convinced he had the power to order it. The Cubs called the decision "wrong and bad for baseball."

Under the NL constitution, a 75 percent vote is required for realignment, which also needs the approval of all clubs involved in switching divisions. On March 4, clubs voted 10-2 in favor, with the Cubs and New York Mets opposed.

"I have determined that the best interests of baseball have not been served in this instance by the National League's stringent voting requirement, which thwarts the preference of the great majority of National League clubs," Vincent said in his nine-page decision. "Therefore, I hereby order that the Atlanta Braves and Cincinnati Reds will play in the National League Eastern Division and the St. Louis Cardinals and Chicago Cubs will play in the National League Western Division beginning with the 1993 championship season."

The Cubs and the Cardinals have been in the East since the league split into divisions prior to the 1969 season. Chicago and St. Louis insisted on the placement before they voted in favor of expansion from 10 to 12 teams. Realignment became an issue with the 1993 expansion to Miami and Denver.

"I am very disappointed with the commissioner's extraordinary decision to override the National League constitution," White said in a statement. "By this act, the commissioner has jeopardized a long-standing, working document which has governed the National League for decades. Although we worked to attain realignment, we did so within the guidelines of the constitution."

Vincent, who at the same time declined to change the formula for splitting gate receipts in the NL, said in a telephone news conference that "there were probably four or five clubs who were in favor of realignment at the league level, but were opposed to my taking action."

"I think this was extraordinarily difficult," Vincent said. "There were times when I was pursuaded it shouldn't be done. I did go back and forth, I will confess to you."

Vincent, who last month fended off a power grab by some owners on the Player Relations Committee, has been criticized by some owners for his decisions on splitting expansion revenue and handling the George Steinbrenner litigation. He said he was prepared for further criticism.

"I don't know whether there will be a lawsuit," he said. "I think one is possible."

But he added that the majority of NL teams were behind him.

"A fair number of clubs in the National League are going to be very supportive," he said. "They expressed their points of view to me in writing."

The Cubs had opposed the move because it means more California games with later starting times for

Nike appeals

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Nike Inc., which paid millions to put its name on the U.S. track and field team's uniforms at the Barcelona Olympics, is appealing a stunning high court decision that bars the advertising or sale of Nike apparel in Spain, a company attorney said Monday.

Spain's Constitutional Court last week refused to lift a lower court order prohibiting the Beaverton, Ore.-based sports apparel company from using the Nike name on clothing because a Barcelona firm registered the trademark first in 1932.

Nike Inc., whose shoes are not affected by the ruling, has planned to use the Olympics promotional campaign to launch a new line of sports clothes.

Angels take 5-4 win in 10th

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Since his arrival in Midland, Hilly Hathaway, the Angel starting pitcher Monday, has struck out 16 and walked just two in 27 innings pitched. He was no-decisioned Monday after giving up four earned runs.

■ Jim Edmonds' home run ties the game in the eighth inning, then Rey Palacios singles home the winning run to defeat Wichita again.

By Jimmy Patterson

Pinch-hitter Rey Palacios singled to left field to bring home the winning run in a 10 inning, 5-4 Midland win over the Wichita Wranglers Monday night at Angels Stadium.

The win was the fourth straight for the Angels, clinging to a first place tie with the El Paso Diablos, who defeated San Antonio, 9-3 Monday. Both the Angels and Diablos are 11-6.

The Angels were about out of chances when Palacios came through with the game winner. Eduardo Perez opened the 10th with a strikeout. Phillips and Bobby Jones walked in succession, but Jones was forced at second on a fielder's choice by Jim Edmonds for the second out of the inning. On the grounder, which narrowly missed being turned into an inning-ending double play by Wichita, Phillips moved to third and resided just 90 feet from home as Palacios came to the plate.

The extra inning was made necessary after Edmonds' two-run home run in the eighth tied the game at 4-4. All three late inning runs — Edmonds' homer and Palacios' game-winning single, came with two out.

"I thought in the other games we've played up to this point (in the second half) we've had good intensity," Midland manager Don Long said. "I thought we

PAU, France — Richard Virenque of France gained the leader's yellow jersey as the Tour de France returned to its home country Monday after a weekend in Spain.

Virenque, a second-year pro for the RMO team, was part of a breakaway with Javier Murguialday of Spain that started practically from the beginning of the 158-mile stage that commenced in San Sebastian, Spain and crossed into Pau.

Agassi finally delivers Grand Slam goods

AP Laserphoto

By Hal Bock
AP Sports Writer

At a time when style seems to be widening its edge over substance, Andre Agassi, the pinup boy of the former, made a substantive statement for the latter.

In his fourth Grand Slam final, at a time when people were beginning to whisper about playing potential that might never be delivered, Agassi delivered.

And on Madison Avenue, there was a sigh of relief.

Agassi, already an advertising conglomerate whose endorsement income totaled about $3 million a year, was beginning to get a negative image. He was winning, yes, but he was not winning any of the big ones. Orlando and Washington were nice little victories, but that's not exactly what Andre's advertisers had in mind.

He took care of that oversight in the cathedral of tennis, the All-England Club, with a victory that will increase his endorsement income substantially.

"Wimbledon was probably worth $1 million right away and in the future will mean $2 to $5 million a year more for him," said Nye Lavalle of Dallas-based Sports Marketing Group.

Lavalle, who once managed pro tennis players, said Agassi was at an endorsement crossroads. "He had reached his advertising peak," he said. "How many advertisers were willing to hype him more?"

You can sell just so many cameras and tennis rackets with ponytails and earrings. Sooner or later, you need to win, too. Preferably a Grand Slam.

Given that circumstance, Agassi merely won the grandest of Grand Slams. It was a very good idea, much better, than staying home in Las Vegas, pouting over Wimbledon's stodgy

McEnroe, Stich win doubles title

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — John McEnroe turned overtime at Wimbledon into a carnival Monday when he won his fifth doubles title before a packed crowd.

The fans were allowed in free as Wimbledon was forced to play an extra day to finish matches delayed by bad weather.

The unseeded duo beat fourth-seeded Americans Jim Grabb and Richie Reneberg 5-7, 7-6 (7-5), 3-6, 7-6 (7-5), 19-17 in five hours, one minute. The match was suspended by darkness Sunday night at 13-13 in the fifth set.

The match was 13 games longer than the previous record, set in 1968 — before tiebreakers — when John Newcombe and Tony Roche downed fellow Australians Ken Rosewall and Fred Stolle 3-6, 8-6, 5-7, 14-12, 6-3.

McEnroe, winner of singles titles in 1981, '83 and '84, also had won doubles championships with Peter Fleming in 1979, 1981, 1983 and 1984. But he lost to Andre Agassi in the singles semifinals last week.

Rangers' Brown gets 13th win

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Kevin Brown became the first 13-game winner in the major leagues this season as the Texas Rangers beat the Milwaukee Brewers 3-1 Monday night behind home runs from Ivan Rodriguez and Dean Palmer.

Brown (13-4) won his fourth consecutive start and set a career high for victories in one season, surpassing his 12-9 record of 1989. He allowed seven hits in 8 1-3 innings, struck out eight and walked two before Jeff Russell finished for his 20th save.

Texas went ahead in the bottom of the inning when Rafael Palmeiro singled and Rodriguez hit his eighth home run, a 421-foot drive to left. Palmer hit his 14th home run of the season in the third inning.

Tigers 5, Mariners 4

DETROIT — Skeeter Barnes 14th-inning sacrifice fly lifted Detroit to a victory over Seattle in a game that lasted 4 hours, 23 minutes, the Tigers' longest home game in seven years.

Tony Phillips led off the 14th with a walk. Lou Whitaker then bunted and both runners were safe when reliever Mike Walker (0-3) threw wildly trying to force Phillips at second. Travis Fryman then sacrificed to advance both runners and Cecil Fielder was intentionally walked, loading the bases, and Devereaux singled past a drawn-in infield.

American

Blue Jays 3, Angels 0

TORONTO — Juan Guzman took over the American League lead in ERA and strikeouts as Toronto beat California, sending the Angels to their eighth consecutive loss.

Guzman (11-1) allowed two hits in seven innings, equaled his career strikeout high with 10 and walked one as the Blue Jays won their fifth straight.

He lowered his ERA to 2.01, overtaking Boston's Roger Clemens, and increased his strikeout total to 115, three more than Clemens. Guzman, who has won 21 of his last 25 decisions, also increased his major league-leading winning percentage to .917.

Royals 6, Red Sox 3

BOSTON — Rick Reed got his first win as a starter in more than two years as Kansas City continued its batting revival, beating weak-hitting Boston.

Reed (2-3) held Boston to five hits in 6 2-3 innings, while the Royals broke a three-game losing streak with an 12-hit attack. They began with a .306 average in their previous eight games that raised their season mark to .253, 12th in the American League.

Boston, baseball's second lowest scoring team, was 13th in the league at .243 and lost for the fourth time in five games.

Athletics 13, Indians 4

CLEVELAND — Scott Brosius returned from the minors with a fury by hitting home runs in his first two at-bats and going 4 for 5 as Oakland beat Cleveland.

The A's salvaged a split of their four-game series against the Indians, who had beaten them six straight times before Oakland recovered to win the last two games.

Brosius, recalled from Triple-A Tacoma before the game, drove in three runs and scored four, while Troy Neel homered, doubled and singled. Neel was called up from Tacoma last week when Jose Canseco went on the disabled list.

Twins 10, Yankees 5

NEW YORK — Kirby Puckett doubled in two runs in a four-run third inning while pinch-hitter Shane Mack also hit a two-run double as Minnesota rallied past New York.

Minnesota overcame deficits of 3-2 and 5-4 as it won its third consecutive game.

Carl Willis (3-2) allowed two hits in 4 1-3 innings in his longest outing this season, and Mark Guthrie pitched three innings for his second save. Bill Krueger lasted only 1 2-3 innings, the shortest stint of any Twins starter this season.

Orioles 4, White Sox 3

Baltimore has stranded 56 in its last four games, and is 6 for 46 with runners in scoring position in its last three games.

Leo Gomez opened the 14th with a walk off Roberto Hernandez (2-1) and took third on Tim Hulett's one-out single. Brady Anderson was intentionally walked, loading the bases, and Devereaux singled past a drawn-in infield.

'Zaney' Pirates stump Astros, 1-0

Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Zane Smith pitched five-hit ball for 8 1-3 innings and Orlando Merced's homer helped end Pittsburgh's four-game losing streak as the Pirates beat the Houston Astros 1-0 Monday night.

Smith, who beat St. Louis 1-0 with a five-hitter on July 1, was two outs away from his second consecutive shutout when Stan Belinda finished for his 12th save.

Smith (7-7) continued to dominate the Astros at Three Rivers Stadium, where he is 4-0 with an 0.28 ERA and two shutouts since joining the Pirates in August 1990. The left-hander struck out four, walked one to improve to 7-1 with a 1.62 ERA in his last 12 appearances against Houston.

Smith, who was 0-6 in nine starts until beating the Cardinals, has figured in blanking the Astros in his only two starts against them this season, including a seven-hitter in the Pirates' 3-0 victory on May 9.

Reds 6, Cubs 2

CHICAGO — Jeff Branson hit a three-run double as Cincinnati scored four unearned runs in the first inning and went on to beat Chicago for its fifth straight victory.

Although outhit 9-6, the first-place Reds won for the 10th time in the last 13 games to take a five-game lead over Atlanta in the NL West.

Keith Brown, acquired from Triple-A Nashville to replace the Reds' injured Tom Browning, made his first major-league start since 1988.

Mets 3, Braves 1

ATLANTA — Dave Gallagher's run-scoring double snapped an eighth-inning tie and David Cone pitched three-hit ball for seven innings as New York beat Atlanta.

Cone (8-4) struck out nine and walked a season-high seven in handing the Braves only their ninth loss in 33 games, and only their fourth in 20 home games. The loss dropped the Braves five games behind Cincinnati in the NL West.

Dodgers 8, Expos 3

LOS ANGELES — Dennis Martinez, pitching at Dodger Stadium for the first time since his perfect game last July 28, was hit hard this time as Los Angeles beat the Montreal Expos in the first game of three consecutive doubleheaders between the teams.

Martinez (9-7) lost for only the third time in his last 11 decisions, allowing 11 hits and a season-high seven runs in 4 2-3 innings. Only three of the runs were earned.

Winner Kip Gross (1-0), called up earlier in the day from Class AAA Albuquerque, allowed three runs and seven hits in six-plus innings.

Giants 4, Phillies 2

SAN FRANCISCO — Bud Black pitched 7 2-3 strong innings and Cory Snyder homered as San Francisco beat Philadelphia, dropping rookie Kyle Abbott to 0-11.

The win came in front of 8,548 fans, the second smallest crowd of the year at Candelstick Park. Black gave two runs on eight hits before Mike Jackson and Rod Beck finished. Beck got the last out for his sixth save.

Dodgers 8-4, Expos 3-3

LOS ANGELES — Mike Sharperson tied the score in the seventh inning with a bases-loaded, two-run double and Eric Davis followed with a two-run single as Los Angeles beat Montreal to complete a sweep of its first of three consecutive doubleheaders against the Expos.

In the opener, Dennis Martinez, pitching at Dodger Stadium for the first time since his perfect game last July 28, was hit hard this as Los Angeles won 8-3. Sharperson had three hits in the first game.

Cardinals 4, Padres 0

SAN DIEGO — Rookie Mark Clark allowed only four singles in his first complete game and Andres Galarraga homered in his second straight game as St. Louis beat San Diego.

Dodgers reactivate Strawberry

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Darryl Strawberry, who missed 48 games with a herniated disk in his lower back, was reactivated by the Los Angeles Dodgers on Monday between games of doubleheader with the Montreal Expos.

"It's great," Strawberry said one day after getting a medical clearance to play from team physician Dr. Frank Jobe. "It feels nice to know that the opportunity's there and that I get a chance to get back on the field with the guys and perform."

Pitcher Kip Gross, who was called up from the minors to pitch the opener of Monday's doubleheader — which he won 8-3 — was optioned back to Triple-A Albuquerque to make room for Strawberry, who started the nightcap in right field. Outfielder-first baseman Henry Rodriguez was sent down to the minors Monday morning to open the roster spot for Gross.

Neither the Dodgers' medical staff nor team therapist Pat Screnar could tell at first if Strawberry would return before the All-Star break. They also expressed concern about the eight-time All-Star's long-term health.

But after being hospitalized for almost a week, undergoing six weeks of therapy and refusing a minor league rehab assignment to continue working out at Dodger Stadium, Strawberry feels strong and confident.

"It's a blessing that I've been able to return so soon," he said.

NFL books opened: League made $1.4 billion last year

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — The National Football League last year was a $1.4 billion business that took in nearly twice as much money from television and radio as it did selling tickets to fans, according to financial statements released Monday.

The statements, submitted as evidence in an antitrust lawsuit against the league, are the first of their kind to be made public. In the past the NFL has released only selected bits and pieces of its financial picture, including television revenue.

Attorneys for the league last week asked U.S. District Judge David Doty to seal the documents. But the judge ordered release of the documents Monday after objections were raised by The Associated Press and the Star Tribune of Minneapolis.

The 28 NFL teams made $850 million, or nearly two-thirds of their income, from radio and television, according to the league's preliminary 1991 financial statement. Network television accounted for the vast bulk of that amount, nearly $783 million.

In contrast, NFL teams made $402 million selling tickets — just under 30 percent of their total revenue.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

TUESDAY, JULY 7, 1992

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Settling into a routine will bring your life needed stability. Influential people offer you strong support in the fall. A real estate matter will be concluded in your favor. Invest extra funds wisely. A job promotion or bonus is possible in December. The spotlight turns to your family in early 1993. Welcome a new addition to the fold! A new image will give you greater confidence next spring.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: baseball great Satchel Paige, fashion designer Pierre Cardin, basketball star Ralph Sampson, actress Shelley Duvall.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Start today on a brand-new note. Any gloomy thoughts will be swept away. Applaud public service work done by children or senior citizens. New enterprises face obstacles.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): An old friend helps you reach a difficult decision. Your ideas for change will not be easily accepted by your coworkers. Move slowly and make a strong pitch for cooperation.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A practical matter may baffle you. Other people are relying on you to find a solution. Explore various options. Greater self-discipline is needed to avert a possible health problem.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You may be able to make an investment now that will provide a quick return. Be certain you know what you are getting into. A young person confides in you. Listen attentively.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Boredom could set in today unless you push yourself to excel. An associate may be in a lazy mood. Complete pending projects rather than launching a new one. Practice good public relations.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): An unexpected announcement about work or money could cheer you greatly. A romantic interlude is destined to change your life. Loved one may require special care.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The spotlight is on legal negotiations, real estate and insurance questions. Shy away from a member of the opposite sex who comes on too strong. Put your imprint on career and financial matters.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Details are not your prime area of interest. Today you will be given a reprieve from minutiae and rewarded for your ability to assess the larger picture. Dine with loved ones tonight.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Out-of-town friends may pay you a long-awaited visit. Someone with whom you share a meeting of minds could turn out to be your dream lover. Take things nice and slow.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your interest in art and culture rises to the surface today. Be considerate when accepting or rejecting a social invitation. Keep spending to a minimum.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Wishful thinking is counterproductive now. An important personal relationship could be damaged unless you face reality. Do not gamble with money you cannot afford to lose.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be discreet when dealing with higher-ups or anyone else connected with employment. It may be time to withdraw from a romantic relationship if your differences have become too great.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are artistic, generous and easily distracted. Give these youngsters lots of drawing supplies and a tin of water colors. Shades and hues will fascinate them. Versatile and restless, they tend to change their plans at the first sign of opposition. They would rather switch than fight! Concerned parents will let these children know that there are times when they must stick to their guns. Affectionate and forgiving, these Cancerians make family life a top priority.

Opening lead: King of ♣ The oldest continuously held pair event in the U.S. is the Goldman Pairs, run in conjunction with the Eastern States Regional Championships over Memorial Day weekend in New York. This year's event had some fascinating hands. Consider this interesting defensive problem.

Where Tom Smith, a member of the Goren Editorial Board, and Arjun Ray held the North-South cards, they stopped in three spades on the auction shown. Most pairs, however, bid to four spades.

The opening lead invariably was a high club, East following with a discouraging spot. Most Wests then shifted, usually to a trump, although it makes no difference which suit West chose. Declarer won and drew a second round of trumps, drawing all the enemy fangs. Now a heart was led toward the king, and the defense had shot its bolt. Declarer could reach dummy by ruffing a winning club, then discard a diamond on the king of hearts and take the diamond finesse for the fulfilling trick. Making four-odd.

Sitting West at Smith's table was Margy Bielowsky. She led the king of clubs and, when her partner, Judy Tucker, contributed the deuce, continued with the ace, on which East produced the seven. After a few moments' thought, West persisted with a third club.

That effectively removed declarer's only entry to dummy, the club ruff, before the king of hearts was set up for a discard. Although the diamond finesse worked, declarer was forced to concede a heart and a diamond, as well as the two club tricks already lost. For scoring plus 140 declarer got exactly 1 matchpoint out of 25!

LONDON — Prince Charles, far from the cold, unfaithful husband portrayed in recent books about his wife, is "miserable and lonely" because Princess Diana is mentally unstable, an author says.

Charles' friends say Diana is "seriously unbalanced" and has distorted the truth about the couple's marriage because of her illness, Penny Junor, author of several books on royalty, wrote in Monday's Today newspaper.

"The fact is he has spent the past 11 years living with a seriously unbalanced wife," she wrote. "The princess is not the only one who has been miserable and lonely and disillusioned by an empty marriage."

Junor said her information came from friends of Charles, whom she did not identify.

"He will not denounce his wife," she wrote. "He knows she is unwell; and it is because she is unwell that she has twisted the facts and distorted the truth."

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Comedian Bobcat Goldthwait said his act may be as annoying as Andrew Dice Clay's, but at least he believes in what he's saying.

Goldthwait

"It's always annoying to me when someone hides behind a persona," Goldthwait said in an interview published Monday in the Nashville Banner. "Dice is always 'Oh, it's just an act.' Well, so what, if Hitler had had a character he would have been OK? That drives me nuts."

Goldthwait screams his punch lines in a shrill, hoarse voice that has become his signature. He tries to work in socially relevant topics like sexism and gay bashing.

Clay has raised hackles with jokes that some have called sexist, racist or homophobic. His appearance in May 1990 on "Saturday Night Live" caused cast member Nora Dunn and musical guest Sinead O'Connor to refuse to appear.

Goldthwait said Clay goes only for the jokes that will bring the biggest reaction from an audience.

"He doesn't really have a program or an ideology, I doubt," he said. "I think if making fun of shoes could elicit that response, that's what he'd do in stage because the response is much more important than anything he has to say."

Goldthwait has appeared in such movies as "Police Academy," "Scrooged" and "Shakes the Clown."

NEW YORK — Country singer Wynonna Judd says going solo has its downside — especially when your former partner in The Judds was your mom.

"I go between one minute feeling like I can conquer the world, and the next minute wanting to call my mom and have her come get me," she said in this week's People magazine.

Naomi Judd, 46, dropped out of the duo seven months ago when she developed chronic active hepatitis. Since then, she's been writing an autobiography and working on a television miniseries about her life.

Her 28-year-old daughter, who has resumed touring to support her first solo album, "Wynonna," said she's happy with her album and tour's success, but nerves and loneliness make it hard to sleep sometimes.

"I have dreams that Mom dies and comes back and dies and comes back," she said. "I have it several times in a week."

She even refuses to take over the bedroom her mother used in their tour bus. When the tour first began, she "decided to take her room, just to see what it was like," but discovered on the bed a tiara and scepter, joke gifts from Naomi's friends who referred to her as Queen of Everything.

"I didn't know what it meant, whether she was turning over her crown to me or whether she was leaving it there to remind me who was the queen," Wynonna said. Either way, "it was really a weird moment for me. I went on and slept there for a while but woke up and went back to my own room."

LOS ANGELES — Veteran actor Glenn Ford's medical condition after surgery for blood clots has improved, a hospital said Monday.

The 76-year-old star of such films as "The Blackboard Jungle" and "The Big Heat" was upgraded from critical to serious condition and remained in the intensive care ward at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center, said spokesman Ron Wise.

Ford may be moved out of the ward later this week, Wise said.

"His improvement over the weekend has been very encouraging," Wise said.

Ford was originally hospitalized in May for treatment of a heart problem and blood clots. He recovered briefly but became seriously ill with more clots in his legs in late June.

Oil slips

WTI crude oil for delivery in August settled at $21.89 per barrel at the New York Mercantile Exchange, down 21 cents from Thursday, the last trading day before the long Independence Day weekend.

Unleaded gasoline for delivery in August settled at 61.59 cents a gallon, down .86 cent. Home heating oil for delivery in August settled at 60.24 cents a gallon, down .91 cent.

Traders said there was no news to move the market, and that prices hovered at the levels set shortly after the market opened.

Natural gas prices were mixed. Contracts for delivery in August settled at $1.577 per 1,000 cubic feet, down .2 cent. Some contracts for delivery next year rose.

Dollar falls

NEW YORK — The dollar moved lower in light dealings Monday, with traders awaiting concrete announcements from an economic summit in Germany. Gold prices rose.

On the New York Commodity Exchange, gold for current delivery was unchanged from Thursday's levels at $346.50 per troy ounce. A late bid from Republic National Bank of New York quoted the metal at $346.40, up 15 cents. Metals markets were closed Friday in observance of the Independence Day holiday.

Currency traders said lackluster trading in the dollar was lackluster throughout the day. Traders were still digesting the June unemployment report, released last week, and awaited announcements from the Group of Seven meeting in Munich, said David Ogg, vice president at Credit Suisse.

Stocks gain

NEW YORK — A late round of buying carried the stock market to a moderate gain Monday, overcoming some early hesitancy about the progress of economic recovery.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, flat to slightly lower for most of the session, closed with an 8.91-point gain at 3,339.20.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 5 to 4 on the New York Stock Exchange. Big Board volume came to an estimated 186.41 million shares as of 4 p.m. EDT, against 220.13 million in the previous session.

Analysts said investors were still busy sorting out a weaker-than-expected government report on employment that was issued on Thursday before the July 4 holiday weekend.

Sky's the limit: Air fares to increase

■ United, American postpone until Friday 4.4 percent increases that had been scheduled to take effect today.

By Edwin McDowell
N.Y. Times News Service

With summer vacations in full swing, travelers who have waited until now to buy airline tickets are in for a surprise: beginning today, air fares are expected to rise to their highest level in months. And if the carriers have their way, fares will continue to climb.

The nation's largest airlines, American and United, said late Monday they would postpone until Friday fare increases that had been scheduled to take effect today. American also decided to tinker with some of the proposed changes.

The two carriers had planned to raise fares 4.4 percent today. After American decided to delay the increases, United spokesman Joe Hopkins said his carrier would remain competitive and also put off implementing its new fares.

Representatives of the other major carriers — Delta, Northwest, USAir, Continental, TWA and America West — said they were studying American's latest changes, which made the fare increases less steep in many markets.

The exact amount of today's climb remains a mystery, because at least three different formulas have been loaded into the reservations computers. But on average, fares are likely to rise at least 10 percent.

It is hardly surprising. Airline executives contend that higher fares are necessary for the future health of the ailing industry, which has lost $6 billion in the last two years and has seen Pan American, Eastern and Midway go out of business. And just Thursday, the shrunken Braniff International called it quits.

Analysts and industry experts generally agree with the airline executives' assessment.

"The only way the industry will return to profitability is by increasing revenues," said Paul P. Karos, an airline analyst with First Boston.

Joseph Murphy, the publisher of Airline Financial News and several other airline newsletters, said, "Airline costs have gone up consistently, but fares haven't kept pace."

Even Christopher Witkowski, the director of the Aviation Consumer Action Project, a Ralph Nader organization, agreed that the industry was experiencing hard times.

He also said that most passengers did not believe that fare increases were automatically bad. "But carriers," he added, "often try to use rising costs, including fuel increases, as an excuse to hike fares higher than justified."

In a speech at the National Press Club in Washington last week, Robert L. Crandall, the chairman of American Airlines, said: "By every measure of profitibility, airlines consistently rank dead last among major U.S. industries. Only once during the last 10 years — in 1988 — did the airline industry earn a net profit margin of as much as 3 percent. The average margin was actually negative."

Similarly, Stephen M. Wolf, chairman of United Airlines, told a meeting of travel and tourism officials in San Francisco last month that the industry's heavy losses had forced it to re-evaluate a number of airport improvement projects, to reconsider the feasibility of some recently developed hubs and to defer and cancel billions of dollars in orders for new aircraft.

By John Eckhouse
N.Y. Times News Service

California computer programmers are losing thousands of jobs to foreigners because of a loophole in U.S. immigration laws designed to protect domestic workers.

The foreign high-tech professionals work for just a fraction of the $40,000 to $100,000 that their American counterparts earn. That costs California programmers an estimated $2.4 billion a year and deprives state and federal coffers of $1.1 billion in taxes annually.

Behind the epidemic of lost jobs and tax revenues is an unintended use of the U.S. government's B1 visa. The State Department issued 2.6 million of these visas last year, permitting visitors to enter the country for short-term business assignments such as attending meetings, negotiating contracts or repairing equipment for their employers.

Most perform their chores, then depart. The Immigration and Naturalization Service said that fewer than 2,000 foreigners were deported last year for violating the terms of their visas, such as staying in the country longer than permitted or working while on a B2 tourist visa.

As it turns out, however, many programmers enter the United States on B1 visas and take jobs at U.S. companies that last a year or more. They work for less than their U.S. competitors because this visa permits them to receive only living expenses while in this country and does not require them to pay federal or state taxes. They collect a salary — meager by U.S. standards — in their local currency paid to a bank account in their home country.

"Jobs are being lost, money is being lost and this is a crisis because there is no limit to the number of visas issued in this category," said James Schneider, owner of a San Francisco computer consulting firm.

The loss of U.S. programming jobs may have far more serious implications for the long-term economic health of the United States than the larger number of low-wage, unskilled jobs taken by the estimated 3 million illegal immigrant workers in the country, said a spokesman for the Federation for American Immigration Reform.

Okla. wins petroleum testing site sought by A&M, Texas

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — The University of Oklahoma has been awarded a petroleum testing site in Pawnee County that university officials say will provide a wealth of information.

British Petroleum Explorations owns the site and will give it to the university this summer. BP Explorations had decided in December to give the Gypsy site to an interested university while it centralizes its research in Great Britain.

Texas A&M and Texas also had been interested in the sandstone testing site.

Charles Gilbert, director of the University of Oklahoma School of Geology and Geophysics, said the university will get the site, the surface facilities, all data previously collected and a $250,000 payment.

Charles Mankin, director of the Oklahoma Geological Survey at the university, said researchers hope to "better understand the geometry of the subsurface of the sandstone." He said the project may account for a substantial part of Oklahoma's oil future.

The university is trying to get funding from the federal Department of Energy and large oil companies.

Mankin said the university is gaining access to an "enormous wealth of information."

Ronald Evans, director of the School of Petroleum and Geological Engineering, said the site has no oil or gas present. He said the structure of the sandstone is similar to the structure of the sandstone in an ordinary oil reservoir.

Evans said researchers may discover how to retrieve the remaining oil in the ground by injecting liquids into the sandstone.

Hoechst to sell HDPE business to Fina

SOMERVILLE, N.J. (AP) — Hoechst Celanese Corp. announced Monday it will sell its high-density polyethylene business, which makes plastic products, to FINA Oil and Chemical Co.

Hoechst signed a letter of agreement last week to sell FINA the 350 million-pound-per-year business and related assets, pending Federal Trade Commission approval, said Hoechst spokeswoman Andrea Stine.

Somerville-based Hoechst also announced plans to buy out FINA's 26 percent interest in Cape Industries of Wilmington, N.C., which produces dimethyl terepthalate, a raw material used in making polyester fibers, film and resins.

Reader questions transaction-account interest drop

By Bill Doyle

Q: Why is my bank now paying less than 4 percent interest on my checking account? When I opened the account years ago, it was with the understanding I'd get 5.25 percent interest. The reduced rate of interest has nothing to do with the amount of money I have in the account. In fact, that amount has been increasing.

Doyle

A: Your "understanding" was a bit off-base. Banks never make commitments to keep paying specified rates of interest on "transaction" accounts, such as checking, savings and money market deposit accounts.

Banks do pledge to pay fixed interest rates on certificates of deposit. But that's a different story. When you obtain a CD, you agree to leave a certain amount of money with a bank for a specific length of time. In return, the bank agrees to pay a predetermined rate of interest on your CD money.

The deal there is that the bank can be reasonably sure it will have the money you and other people put into CDs until the CDs mature. As a result, the bank has funds with which to make loans and collect interest — its basic business.

Of course, if you pull out before your CD matures, you'll be hit with an early-withdrawal penalty, another source of bank profit. While banks can't be dead certain of keeping CD money until the maturity dates, CDs are a far more stable source of funds for them than transaction accounts.

If you are able to find the papers you signed when you opened your checking account, you won't see any promise the bank would always pay 5.25 percent. As interest rates in general have come down, banks have lowered the rates they pay on all kinds of depository accounts, including interest-bearing checking accounts.

You mention opening the account "years ago." It wasn't too many years ago that banks paid no interest on any checking account. Interest-bearing checking came into vogue in the 1980s. Even today, many banks pay no interest on certain types of checking accounts.

Q: I recently received my first bank statement for a savings account I opened about three months ago. It reads, in part, "Your average collected balance of $11,029.42 earned an effective yield of 3.62 percent for 82 days." The amount of interest was $89.40.

I spoke to the banking officer about this. He gave me a lot of mathematical answers I do not comprehend. I contend the bank statement is misleading, since I figure I got less than 1 percent interest.

A: Calm down. Although banks can use a number of variations in calculating interest, the statement you received is accurate.

I suspect you anticipated getting $399.26 — 3.62 percent of $11,029.42. But the 3.62 percent is an annual rate — for 365 or 360 days, depending on the number the bank uses.

Run this through your calculator: Annual interest of $399.26 divided by 365 works out to $1.09 daily interest. The bank statement covered 82 days. Multiplying $1.09 by 82 gives you $89.38 interest. With adjustments for compounding and calculation variations, that's mighty close to the statement's $89.40.

Q: If I have $100,000 in an individual retirement account and $100,000 in a savings account at the same bank, are both covered by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.?

A: Indeed they are, because IRAs are insured separately from other accounts at the same bank or savings and loan association.

You can have up to $100,000 in an IRA and up to $100,000 in other accounts — such as savings, checking or money market accounts — all at the same bank, with everything covered by the FDIC safety net.

Besides that, you can have up to $100,000 in a Keogh retirement plan for the self-employed at that bank, with full FDIC coverage. Along with IRAs, Keogh plans are covered separately.

Scholar links Huck Finn's voice to black child Mark Twain met

By Anthony DePalma
N.Y. Times News Service

You don't know about this without you have read a book by the name of "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn"; but that ain't no matter. Mr. Mark Twain wrote it and he got considerable praise for using a boy's voice to tell a tangled story about race and about America and nobody kin say for sure where that voice come from.

Now a Twain scholar has linked Huck's voice to a 10-year-old black servant Twain met just before starting work on the book. Twain described the boy in an almost forgotten article in The New York Times in 1874 as "the most artless, sociable and exhaustless talker I ever came across."

Shelley Fisher Fishkin, an associate professor of American studies at the University of Texas, shows that the speech patterns of the black boy, whom Twain calls Jimmy, and of Huck Finn are similar and in some ways identical.

But more important, given that the entire book is told by Huck, she shows how both voices mixed sassiness with satire, a point of view that helped make Twain's book one of the most important American novels.

"For Professor Fishkin to come up with this," said T. Walter Herbert, a professor of English at Southwestern University in Georgetown, Texas, and an expert on 19th century authors, "does not refute Hemingway's line that 'All modern American literature comes from one book by Mark Twain called "Huckleberry Finn.'" It simply complicates and enriches that claim."

UNCOVERING THE African-American roots of Twain's art could lead to a reconsideration of the author and his most important work, which has been banned in some places because of its attitudes and language, especially use of the word "nigger."

Twain's defenders have always argued that Huck's language was satiric, and meant to expose his late 19th century audience to its own hypocrisy and intolerance.

Tracing Huck's voice to a black source could also change the way the book, which is required by most high schools and colleges, is taught and revise the current debate over multiculturalism that often pits standard works by white authors like Twain against works from other cultures.

Professor Fishkin, who has specialized in mapping the connections between journalism and fiction, gained attention in 1985 when she discovered a letter by Twain offering to give financial assistance to the first black student at the Yale University School of Law. The letter suggested that despite some later criticism of him, Twain opposed racism.

Professor Fishkin lays out her new theory about "Huckleberry Finn" in a book to be published in 1993 by Oxford University Press called "Was Huck Black? Mark Twain and African-American Voices."

Scholars who have read the manuscript, which the publisher has been circulating to independent scholars for review, see it as a major addition to the understanding of a central work of American letters.

"The significance is that it reveals that even for creators of high American culture, such as Mark Twain, black vernacular culture held a tremendous fascination and contained a wealth of artistic potential to be mined," said Henry Louis Gates Jr., the W.E.B. DuBois professor of the Humanities at Harvard University, and a scholar in the way 19th century blacks, and especially slaves, used words to convey more than one meaning.

The heart of her argument rests with "Sociable Jimmy," which appeared on page 7 of a 12-page issue of The New York Times on Sunday, November 29, 1874. The page on which it ran also included obituaries, advertisements and brief news items.

In his introduction to the article, which was Twain's first published work dominated by the voice of a child, he said he had met Jimmy in "a certain little village," now believed to have been somewhere in Illinois or Indiana, and had been enthralled by the boy's unpretentious performance.

"He did not tell me a single remarkable thing, or one that was worth remembering," Twain wrote, "and yet he was himself so interested in his small marvels, and they flowed so naturally and comfortably from his lips that his talk got the upper hand of my interest, too, and I listened as one who receives a revelation."

THAT REVELATION, says Professor Fishkin, helped reconnect Twain, then living in Hartford, Conn., to the cadences of black speakers in his own childhood and his days spent on Mississippi steamboats.

Scholars who have read the manuscript, which the publisher has been circulating to independent scholars for review, see it as a major addition to the understanding of a central work of American letters.

"Jimmy allows him to liberate the language that lay buried in Twain's own linguistic repertoire," she said in an interview. "It suggests a very multi-racial community that obviously shaped Twain's imagination."

Twain scholars have known about the "Jimmy" article — the author often contributed freelance articles to various magazines and newspapers — but never considered it significant.

After coming across it in her research for another book on Twain, Professor Fishkin was struck by Jimmy's voice. She reread "Huckleberry Finn" 20 times and reread "Sociable Jimmy" more often, as well as examining much of Twain's writing for similar clues. She found passages in both the article and "Huckleberry Finn" that shared the same linguistic roots.

For example, Huck and Jimmy constantly repeat the same words, make frequent use of present participles, and often make the same mistakes. The two boys often use the same adjectives in place of adverbs. Jimmy says "He's powerful sick." Huck says "I was most powerful thirsty."

The boys not only talk alike, but are similar in other ways, according to Professor Fishkin.

The only real family each has is "Pa," and both "Pa's" drink too much. The boys are entranced by a particular clock; both consider themselves judges of good taste, and they are comfortable around dead animals, especially dead cats.

Jimmy entertains Twain with his story of the deceased cats that flavor his drinking water. When Huck is first introduced in the book "Tom Sawyer," he is carrying a dead cat, and in "Huck Finn" itself, Huck says he knows that the angry audience carries in 64 dead cats when the king and the duke give their third performance of "The Royal Nonesuch."

Some words and phrases seem to be backwoods white dialect, but Twain was careful to differentiate Huck's speech from that of other white people. For example, both Huck and Jimmy say "drownded" for "drowned," but in "The Adventures of Tom Sawyer," while Huck uses the word "drownded," Tom says "drowned."

Jimmy's manner of speaking also resembles the speech of Jim, the runaway slave in "Huckleberry Finn," but Professor Fishkin argues that Jimmy's dialect is closer to Huck's than to Jim's.

For instance, Jimmy and Huck say "an" or "and" while Jim always says "en." Jimmy and Huck say "can" or "kin"; Jim says "c'n." Jimmy and Huck say "was"; Jim says "wuz."

"Clearly, Jimmy's speech was ringing in Twain's head as he was writing 'Huckleberry Finn'," she said.

WHILE THEY DISAGREE about how much of Huck derives from Jimmy, all the scholars who have read the manuscript said it demonstrates — for the first time — strong black roots in Huck's speech.

"What we discover after all this time," said Gates of Harvard, "is that it is the black American linguistic voice which forms the structuring principle of the great American novel, and that ain't bad."

Other academicians have trouble with that argument. "I would not say offhand that this is a world-shaking idea," said Kenny Jackson Williams, a professor of English at Duke University who is often identified with conservative ideas about literature. She had not read read Professor Fishkin's manuscript and was responding to a description of it.

Literary critics have long recognized the influence of dialect and folk beliefs in Mark Twain's black characters, but they have not focused on the way Twain's central characters' voices may have been influenced by the black culture of Twain's time.

Doing so uncovers a new dimension of one of America's most important writers even for those who thought they knew all about him.

"If we really take her argument seriously we're going to have to rethink who Huckleberry Finn is," said James A. Miller, director of American Studies at Trinity College, Hartford, and an expert on American and African-American literature.

"I feel like someone has been explaining to me how to ride a bicycle which I thought I already knew how to do," said Hal Holbrook, the actor who for 38 years has played Samuel L. Clemens, the writer who took the pseudonym Mark Twain and then became him.

Holbrook said he had sensed a black strain in Huck's voice but never knew for sure, adding, "It's almost like the truth about something is so clear that you look right through it."

While they generally agree with her overall argument, some scholars expressed concern that Professor Fishkin is basing so much on the article about Jimmy, which runs for just a little more than a single column of newspaper print. Twain seems never to have referred to it again after it was printed.

"I really admire the argument and welcome the conclusions but I feel slightly uneasy about the foundation," said Justin Kaplan, whose book "Mr. Clemens and Mark Twain," won the Pulitzer Prize and the National Book Award in 1967. "I wish she'd been able to find one or two other evidential bases for her argument."

Professor Fishkin does offer other evidence in the manuscript, including comments from Twain expressing his own attitudes about race and his admiration for a teenage slave named Jerry, whom Twain at one point called "the greatest man in the United States."

LOUIS J. BUDD, the James B. Duke Professor emeritus of English at Duke University and a leading Twain scholar, said it was possible that the encounter with Jimmy had evoked what was "already lying there in Sam Clemens' conscience and subliminal memory."

Twain himself said that the model for Huck Finn was a poor white boy in Hannibal, Mo., named Tom Blankenship and Tom's brother Bence, who once helped a runaway slave.

Professor Fishkin said she is not arguing that Twain envisioned Huck as a black child, but that "his voice in key ways was modeled on black speakers."

"So it really is a question of voice," she said. "The voice we have come to think of as a vernacular voice in American literature is shaped by black speakers in ways that had not been apparent before."

In recent years literary criticism has become more sensitive to such concerns about cultural influence and voice. Writers and critics like Ralph Ellison and Toni Morrison have suggested there is an black presence not just in black literature but in all American literature. That presence, they said, had been minimalized, ignored or denied.

By re-examining such classic works as "Huckleberry Finn" in this new light, scholars are finding that much literary criticism has been shortsighted in many respects.

Colleges and universities in recent years have been immersed in debates over what to teach in literature classes — classic books by white authors, like "Huckleberry Finn," or works from the nonwhite cultures of many students.

"What could be more valuable to a proper and appropriate understanding of multiculturalism than the realization that an individual writer or a figure within his work can be intrinsically multicultural?" said Professor Herbert of Southwestern University.

Arnold Rampersad, professor of literature and director of American Studies at Princeton University, said that if Huck Finn's voice, which is so central to American experience, can be shown to have been influenced by several cultures, it would go a long way toward "a real transformation in the way American literature is taught."

Other scholars said that by tracing Huck Finn's voice to a black experience, Professor Fishkin might influence whether the book is banned by schools and libraries when accusations about its racism are raised.

"This may have some strange effect on the antagonistic critics of Huckleberry Finn," said Kaplan. He said many people have been offended by Twain's repeated use of the word "nigger," which appears more than 200 times in the book.

"My understanding, and that is a white understanding, is that nigger is a taboo word when used by a white person, but it's an OK word when used in a black framework," Kaplan said. "If you can claim that this is a black voice speaking, I believe the objection to the word nigger is to some extent defused."

Tips On Writing EFFECTIVE Classified Ads

◆ STICK TO THE FACTS
Prospective buyers need to know details, like the condition of the item for sale, the size, brand name, color and any other relevant information that would help them make a decision.

◆ BE HONEST
Aside from being unethical, exaggerating or misinforming potential buyers won't help you make a sale, and may only serve to lose a prospective buyers' trust. Even if they come to look at what you have to sell, they'll be less likely to buy the item or trust you once they see they've been mislead.

◆ SPELL IT OUT
Abbreviations are not easily understood by many people and may even confuse a reader. It only takes them a second to pass over an ad because it doesn't seem clear, why let it be yours because you abbreviated a description?

◆ THE BOTTOM LINE
State the price. You'll save yourself the hassle of having to answer calls from prospects who, upon learning the price, are not really interested. Price is the first thing they'll look for when reading your ad, and when prospects know the price, you'll know you have a serious buyer on the line.

◆ BE THERE
List the best hours to call and make sure you're at home. If you don't list a specific time, you could be flooded with calls any time of the day or night. And when you're not at home to take calls, most likely, they won't call back.

◆ ASK US
If you aren't sure how to word your ad or what features to include, why not ask us? Our professionals on staff know how to create an effective ad that sells, they're always willing to help, and there's no charge!

Poverty attacks in unlikely places

By Peter T. Kilborn
N.Y. Times News Service

MARSHALLTOWN, Iowa — This city of 25,000 sits amid cornfields and factories in the center of a state that has been riding out the recession with one of the lowest unemployment levels in the country.

Yet around 2,000 poor people there are getting help of some kind from the welfare system, from vouchers to heat a house to a regular welfare check.

This is not the South Bronx or Appalachia, where poverty often gets blamed on culture or behavior, on racism or reckless childbearing.

But Marshalltown shows with unusual clarity other powerful forces that make welfare and poverty hard to escape anywhere: the nation's proliferation of low-wage jobs and two decades of falling wages, especially for the least skilled, in terms of what they can buy.

Diana Kuchenreuther, 34, single, the mother of three children, has been working for two years and trying to get off the dole, but she is still desperately poor. Her home is an apartment in a big rundown house in a working-class neighborhood. Her entrance is on the side, over a concrete slab cluttered with two wobbly kitchen chairs and the jetsam of children.

Inside, the drain of the sink in the one bathroom hasn't worked for a couple of years, and the toilet leaked until a friend patched a crack in the bowl. The old carpet on the staircase is foul and torn. The upstairs ceiling leaks in the rain.

The place has two bedrooms, one for Ms. Kuchenreuther, Phillip, 9, and Aimmee, 7, the other for Lucinda, 13. The rent is $260 a month.

Although dependence on welfare is concentrated in inner cities, a majority of recipients live in suburbs, small towns like this one and rural areas around the country.

And although black and Hispanic people receive welfare out of proportion to their numbers, more white people, including Ms. Kuchenreuther, spend time on it than members of any other group.

Some common patterns of welfare are evident here. Ninety-one percent of Marshall County households that receive Aid to Families with Dependent Children are headed by women, many of them victims of abusive or runaway men.

But no one can blame racism for poverty here. Ninety-eight percent of the 38,000 people of Marshall County, of which Marshalltown is the seat, are white, as are nearly all the families on welfare.

In big cities and the rural South, welfare and poverty might feed on themselves in spreading through neighborhoods.

In Marshalltown, poverty stays indoors. The community is not rich, but it is barren of slums, and the poor live next to the middle class. The crime and drug problems of the inner cities are, by comparison, insignificant in Marshalltown.

Being on welfare in Marshalltown seems less the hassle it can be in big cities. From the center of downtown, people can walk to the various welfare offices and complete their business in an hour or two.

But there is also less room to hide. Case workers keep close tabs on their clients, and with more jobs available than in big urban centers, they go to some length to prod them to work.

People on welfare in Marshalltown say they also contend with the stigma of dependence in the asides of their neighbors and in the glances of shoppers in the supermarket checkout line when they pay with food stamps.

Ms. Kuchenreuther and other people interviewed are at various stages of the struggle with poverty, welfare and the low wage economy. She is paid $4.80 an hour as a nurse's aide. She often works up to four hours of overtime a day and earns as much as $350 a week.

She no longer receives a cash welfare grant, but she remains eligible for $177 a month in food stamps, and she is in line for a Government-subsidized house that should cost her no more than she pays now.

Ms. Kuchenreuther said she loves working and caring for the elderly. But she is trapped by her wages. "People say, 'Why don't you move out of this house?'" she said. "I can't afford to."

She said she wants to become a registered nurse, which would pay $12 an hour. But that means a couple of years of full-time schooling, giving up her work and going back to living almost entirely on welfare.

The attitudes of Ms. Kuchenreuther and other welfare recipients interviewed here run from defiant and confident to defeated and lost. Two are aiming for well-paid jobs that would free them from welfare. The prospects for the others are less certain.

CHRISTINE ANDERSON

For Christine Anderson, 25, the welfare system is not a permanent crutch, but a tool to escape the quicksand of a life of low-wage jobs. She wants to be a social worker.

With the aid of welfare and a federal grant for college students from families with low incomes, Ms. Anderson has spent a year at Marshalltown Community College working toward a two-year associate's degree.

With high grades so far, she hopes to keep getting grants and subsidies and eventually earn a master's degree in social work, which could lead to a job paying enough to support herself and her daughter, Burgundy.

Ms. Anderson, who was born in Wisconsin, moved in with her father in Des Moines at 11 after her parents divorced.

At 13 she was sent to her father's parents in South Dakota, who sent her to a Seventh-day Adventist boarding school near Bismarck, S.D. She was valedictorian of a class of 17.

Lacking money for college, she became a hostess in a restaurant and took up with a waiter. "I did an irresponsible thing," she said. "I got pregnant."

She said the waiter fled to Colorado. She took a job at another restaurant in Lincoln, Neb., had her baby, enrolled at the University of Nebraska and lasted a month.

"I didn't know about welfare," she said. "I was trying to work, go to college, pay a baby sitter and breast-feed my baby."

She went to Topeka, Kan., and found a job as a receptionist with an engineering firm. In three years, she was making $7.50 an hour. But fighting bulimia, a severe eating disorder, she moved to Marshalltown to be closer to her mother and in 1989 enrolled in the welfare system.

The system has helped her take control of her life, she said. Her apartment is bright and clean. In her living room, she has 12 potted plants, her 6-year-old daughter's toys tucked in corners and school drawings on the wall. "I do not present myself as poor white trash," she said.

But there are many things Ms. Anderson does not have, from a corkscrew to a sofa. She does without a telephone. She changes the oil in her car herself.

If short of cash for gas, she gets it with food stamps: if the change due on a food stamp purchase is less than $1, merchants pay in money, so Ms. Anderson goes from store to store buying 5-cent mints, accumulating enough coins to buy gas.

She feels the stigma of being on welfare — she receives $361 in AFDC payments a month, $118 in food stamps, a subsidy of $199 on her monthly rent of $303, and Medicaid. When she prepares to pay in the supermarket, she keeps the food stamp book in her purse as she tears out the coupons.

"Someone on my softball team was bitching because I was too tan," she said. "'Oh, I forgot, Christine, you don't have a real life,' she said. That was someone who got a free car when she got married and gets free rent from living with her in-laws."

She is irked that she lets it get to her. She worked for more than four years and paid taxes. "I don't feel guilty about taking your money," she said. "I'm not taking your money. I'm taking my own."

JoANN EARNEST

JoAnn Earnest, 37, and Roger Bunting, 31, together for two and a half years, say they want to be self-sufficient. He has just started a business, and she would like to start one. But they find the economy blowing against them and the welfare system a refuge.

"I'm tired of all this," Bunting said. As an able-bodied male without children, he is ineligible for welfare, but he benefits from the help Ms. Earnest gets.

"Nobody should get nothing for nothing," he said. "Russia was a welfare state since 1917, and look what it got them." But it is hard to get along without it, too. "In the winter," he said, "we don't make nothing. She's the one that makes everything happen then."

Most mornings, Ms. Earnest gets up at 5 a.m. A woman who works in a meat-packing plant brings in her mildly retarded 6-year-old son. Ms. Earnest watches the boy for $50 a week, income she reports to the authorities.

The boy curls up with his blanket on the living room rug, and Ms. Earnest goes back to bed for an hour or so. Then she gets up and puts on one of her three pairs of pants.

"I could use some more pants," she says. Her shoes are one of two pairs she wears. She has another pair she doesn't use, high heels that she bought on sale for $5.

She awakens Brandy, her three-year-old daughter by another man, and then gets up Bunting, if he has any work to do. Since quitting a pallet-making job paying the state's minimum wage of $4.65 an hour, Bunting has invested in three dump trucks for less than $2,000 to start a business.

He runs advertisements in a local paper. One says, "Hauling and Odd Jobs." The other says, "Black Dirt." The black dirt, good for gardens, comes from the 35-acre back yard.

"Want to see a rural ghetto?" he said, gesturing out a back window. Mounds of metallic debris and vehicles parts obscure the view of the property, which is owned by Bunting's father.

Bunting said that one month recently he earned four times what he could earn from the minimum wage. But in June, he said, he made nothing at all. In times like that, Ms. Earnest is the sole source of income. Besides her pay from watching the boy, she and Brandy are allotted $200 a month in food stamps and $357 a month in AFDC.

The Mid-Iowa Community Action Program, a service for the poor that is financed in part by the federal government, provides about $40 a month in food coupons for Brandy under the federal Women's, Infants and Children program and vouchers for part of the heating bill. It also insulated the house.

At that point, parents are beckoned to the state's job service for counseling and possible placement. If they do not show up, they can lose all but the food stamps and ADFC that their children need.

Ms. Earnest said she is not afraid to work. Earlier, while rearing three other children — daughters 18 and 19, and a son, 21 — she worked in nursing home as a housekeeper, in a garment factory and in a woodworking shop. All the jobs paid less than $5 an hour, but living was easier then.

She had a husband who was a machine operator in a factory. But he went to jail in 1983 for burglary, and she went on welfare for three years. They are separated now and he is somewhere in in South Dakota.

She said she went back on welfare a few months before Brandy was born because her doctor told her the varnish and paint fumes in the wood shop could endanger her pregnancy.

She wants a better job than before, running a day care business or another skilled job. But she could face a long haul. She stopped school in the ninth grade, and before training for a well-paid job, she would have to get the equivalent of a high school diploma.

GLENDA SCHMIDT

Glenda Schmidt, 39, did the right things to get off welfare, getting trained for a job and taking a one as a nurse's aide. But hers is not only a low-wage job. Like many of the economy's newer jobs, it is part time and irregular. She never really knows when she will she will be beckoned to work.

Mrs. Schmidt fits one stereotype of women on welfare but not another. She has five children, aged 9 to 23, which has qualified her for AFDC and food stamps on and off, depending on her husband's success with his work.

Under a special program in Iowa, parents, married or not, can get AFDC if both are at home, one or both are unemployed, and at least one has been working.

On the other hand, she has had a long and stable marriage, after one that lasted seven months and produced her first child. Every day at lunchtime she takes her husband, Robert, 43, a sandwich to the garage where he is trying to start a machinery repair business.

Mrs. Schmidt seems weary and worn sitting in front of a large television console in the living room of her small, rented brick house.

She said Schmidt bought the television in better times. Her big concern now is how she will pay for the family's medicine when the Medicaid coverage that came with welfare ends this fall.

She now pays only $1 for each prescription. She takes medicine for an inflamed stomach, for anxiety, for hypertension and migraine headaches. Until a couple of months ago, she was taking an antidepressant.

The Schmidts' 9-year-old daughter needs medicine for a urinary problem that alone costs $180 a month. Schmidt, who has had three heart attacks, takes nitroglycerin. But he is a Vietnam War veteran, so he gets free medical care.

Mrs. Schmidt's anxiety arises in part from trying to wean herself from welfare. Several years ago she went to school to learn to be a nurse's aide.

Last October, she landed a job at a local hospital that pays $5.77 an hour and about 50 cents more for night work. The work, however, is unpredictable, and she does not take the hospital's health benefits because they would cost her $53 a week, or half her pay many weeks.

In April, she earned $700 because she worked overtime filling in for a co-worker. One week in June, she earned $114. The next, she earned $108. The third she earned nothing. "They called me and said I didn't have to come in," she said. When that happens the welfare system helps out, but only after some paper-processing delays.

At the end of June the Schmidts had $300 in bills, for rent, light, garbage collection and telephone service, and nothing to pay them with. She still receives food stamps, $209 in June, but her $495 in AFDC was cut off the month after she started work.

She scrimps. "I don't buy lipstick," she said. "I don't buy fingernail polish. Now shampoo, that's a necessity. I get that for 89 cents." She drives a 1979 Plymouth Horizon to work, but it has problems with its gears, and the emergency brake is unreliable. The car is not insured.
