Reagan foresees no change in foreign policy

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan says he calls the shots on foreign policy and "there is going to be no change" despite outgoing Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig's charge that it is off-course.

"I think we are progressing very well with what it is we are trying to accomplish," Reagan said Wednesday night during his first televised news conference in seven weeks.

But the president again declined to discuss the reasons for Haig's resignation last Friday, saying the American people had been told everything about it that they needed to know.

Reagan disputed suggestions that the United States knew in advance of Israel's invasion of Lebanon and approved of it. "I've given no green light whatsoever" to the Israelis, he said.

He also made clear he is giving serious thought to running for a second term in 1984 because "it would be unlike me to think that I would walk away from an unfinished job."

While he said it is too early to make up his mind, he joked that he has advised his aides "they should not waste their time reading the help-wanted ads."

Reagan said he was "sticking with" Labor Secretary Raymond Donovan after a special prosecutor found Monday that Donovan had not done anything to warrant being charged with a crime, even though the prosecutor said there there were "a disturbing number" of links to underworld figures.

"I think it would be the most unfair thing in the world for anyone to think he has been anything but unfairly and unjustly accused," Reagan said of his labor secretary..

He also said he will fight for congressional passage of his proposed tax credits for parents of children in private schools. "It's simple fairness" to give them a break since they also pay taxes to support the public school system, he said.

The president said the nation was "fortunate" that former Treasury Secretary George P. Shultz has accepted his nomination to succeed Haig. He said Shultz "is a man with great experience and a man of unquestioned integrity."

In an obvious response to Haig's criticism that Reagan has wandered from the policy course he established when he took office, the president said he is satisfied he is meeting his goals.

"There is going to be no change in policy," he said. "Foreign policy comes from the Oval Office and with the help of a fine secretary of state."

The president met with Shultz this morning, then set out on a 10-day vacation trip to California. Shultz escorted the Reagans to their helicopter on the White House lawn, shook hands with the president and got a kiss from Mrs. Reagan.

Anti-ERA forces celebrate victory as time runs out

WASHINGTON (AP) — Celebrating victory in blocking the Equal Rights Amendment, Phyllis Schlafly accused women's rights advocates of using ugly tactics and the press of taking sides. But President Reagan said some good may come from the whole ERA episode.

Mrs. Schlafly, the amendment's most prominent foe, was hailed as a constitutional heroine at a banquet Wednesday night, just before the midnight deadline for ratification expired. Generals, senators, clerics, commentators, legislators and lawyers saluted her 10-year fight to prevent ratification.

Sen. Jesse Helms kissed her, Undersecretary of State James Buckley toasted her, publisher William Rusher proposed a Broadway tickertape parade for her and a former Nebraska state senator, Richard Proud, said he dreamed of her in the White House.

"I'm from Nebraska, and it's a place where men are men and women are glad of it," said Proud, to a roar from the crowd of 1,000 of Mrs. Schlafly's admirers.

In her remarks, Mrs. Schlafly, a lawyer, writer and conservative commentator, said her antagonists used brutal tactics — harassment, threats, bribes, pickets, obscene phone calls and bags of manure sent in the mail.

And she said the press engaged in "media advocacy" with no parallel other than the Watergate affair.

She said she had seen legislators weep because they were forced to vote for ERA under pressure and against their conscience.

Reagan, who opposed the ERA, took a more philosophical approach during a televised news conference Wednesday night when he was asked about remarks by his daughter that were critical of his position.

"I don't have a very good answer for why the president does not support an Equal Rights Amendment," Maureen Reagan told the National Press Club earlier Wednesday.

The president said the fight over ratification awakened America to legal bias against woman in laws and to that extent "I don't think that the effort was wasted."

But he said women liberationists could achieve what they want not by trying to restart the drive for the amendment — as they have vowed to do — but by searching the statutes for biased laws and eliminating them piecemeal.

Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker said efforts to revive the amendment now would be an idle gesture and called for a cooling off period. A new amendment should be modified and take a new tack, he said in an interview.

The proposed amendment would have prohibited government discrimination against women by law or action. First suggested in 1923, it was sent to the states for ratification by Congress in 1972 but won approval in only 35 state legislature, three short of the 38 needed.

Mrs. Schlafly, a mother of six from Alton, Ill., has been more closely identified with the opposition to the ERA than anyone else. Her organization, Eagle Forum, sponsored the Shoreham ballroom celebration dinner.

Presidential aide Morton Blackwell presented her with a 425-carat ruby the size of a coffee cup saucer and the same color and shape as her red eight-sided "Stop ERA" buttons.

Local reaction to varied

By MERRY SCOTT
News Intern

Services for the Equal Rights Amendment, age 10, will be held today in all parts of the country. Memorial services will be held in many states...along with a few celebrations.

The ERA was born March 22, 1972, when Congress sent the proposed amendment to the states for ratification. Within one month the ERA had been ratified by 14 states. By 1977 the ERA had been ratified by 35 states, only three short of the 38 required by law. Then something happened.

No more states ratified the ERA and five of the 35 that had already ratified it rescinded their ratification. On March 22, 1979, a deadline extension was granted until June 30, 1982 — Wednesday.

Local reaction has been varied, but for the most part, not extreme on either side.

"I feel kind of indifferent," said Linda Lassiter, a stockbroker for Howard, Weil, LaBouisse and Friedrichs, Inc. "I work in a male-dominated business, and I have never come across any discrimination."

Some people did feel a little more strongly about the ERA, however.

Pam Feist, a petroleum landman for Tucker and Gilmore, said: "I am very disappointed because I think it should have passed. Obviously, the majority of the people want it passed, but the legislators aren't representing the people. They are dealing more in politics.

"It took women 100 years to get the right to vote," she added, "and it will probably take another 100 years for them to get into the Constitution."

Joyce Sherrod, a member of the Midland Independent School District board of trustees, said: "I think there was a lot of good in the ERA, a lot of things we need to make things better. However, the process was well served. It was just not the time. People apparently understood it well enough to feel that it wasn't necessary."

"I think the effort was worthwhile and it will probably be back...presented better and better defined," Fran Hillin, president of the Midland County Republican Women's Club, said.

Darrell F. Smith, Midland County Democratic Party Chairman, agrees. "It is unfortunate for the rest of the country," Smith said. "Texas has had it (equal rights) as part of the law for a long time, and it hasn't been a real threat. There were no catastrophic effects like had been predicted...no unisex bathrooms or anything like that and women are no less feminine."

Bill Shaner, chairman of the Midland County Republican Party, said he feels there are enough laws "on the books" now to protect women and, "if the ones we have now are not working it is because they are not being enforced. More legislation won't change that."

Randall R. Owen, a staff psychologist at the Mental Health and Mental Retardation Center of Midland, seems to agree. He is 100 percent for women's rights, but the ERA would have been redundant legislation. "Women are very well protected," he said. "Some-

Midland officials now awaiting sewage 'score'

By LANA CUNNINGHAM

The city of Midland played a game of "hardball" Wednesday morning in the concluding hours of testimony during a public hearing before the Texas Water Commission on its application for a sewage disposal system.

On the second day of testimony, held in the Allison Fine Arts Building at Midland College, the city was placed in a position of defending its foothold on the "bases" it claimed Tuesday while the opposing team players attempted to "strike out" the city.

Final inning of the game will be played in about two months when the Texas Water Commission issues a decision on the city's permit amendment application. At that time, the city will learn whether it struck out or hit a home run by getting its permit.

The proposed amendment calls for sending the primary treated effluent from the wastewater treatment plant southeast of the city through pipelines to land owned primarily by J. "Timber" Floyd near the Glasscock County line. There the effluent would be kept in a holding pond until used for irrigating crops on the six-section tract.

Currently, the city is sending the effluent to a group of holding ponds near Midland Draw and close to the treatment plant. Part of that water is taken by nearby farmers for irrigation.

COMPRISING THE "visiting team" which attacked the plan were Rollin Harden, representing Glasscock County Underground Water District; Lee Wilson, a New Mexico hydrologist representing several owners of land south of the project; Victor A. Brown, division manager of Scurlock Oil Co., which owns several pipelines under the tract; Thomas Swann with the Glasscock District; and Mark Hoelscher, also with the district.

Harden, a consulting hydrologist and geologist from Austin, disputed the city's contention made the previous day that no good ground water exists in the area of Johnson Draw, which runs at the southern edge of the project. Nor did he agree with the city's hired hydrology team of Ed Reed and Joe Reed that the land contours would direct the water flow into Johnson Draw.

"I can't determine the movement of water on that map," he said of the Reed's land contour map. "From data available, I believe good quality ground water exists in a vicinity of the property for the project, principally the northern part."

During this part of the testimony, Joe Reed passed several notes to the city's legal representative, Assistant City Attorney David Reagan.

Noting that he had located some test holes to reveal water that contained 1,000 to 2,400 milligrams per liter, Harden theorized, "I expect water to be of comparable quality on other parts of the land. Very definitely I think there is good quality water under the proposed site."

THE REEDS HAD testified the previous day that the six-section tract was selected as the disposal site because test holes revealed poor quality ground water containing 10,000 or more parts per million of dissolved solids.

Continuing, Harden said he believed

Many will take Monday off

One of the best things about holidays, for many people, is getting the day off. Most people will be enjoying their Fourth of July holiday this year on the fifth of July.

All Midland banks will be closed Monday in honor of the Fourth of July holiday. All banks also will have either their lobby, their drive-in or both open until 6 p.m. Friday.

In addition to bank employees, city and county employees will have the 5th off. They will work a regular schedule on Friday and return to work Tuesday.

Store employees at Midland Park Mall will not have July 5 off, but will get to leave work early July 3, with most stores closing at 6 p.m. Saturday. Those at Dellwood Mall (except Kresge's and Dellwood Lanes) will have Monday off.

Celebrations scheduled in Midland for the Fourth of July include the 20th annual Sidewalk Parade, sponsored by the Col. Theunis Dey chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, at 10 a.m., Saturdayon the grounds of the Museum of the Southwest Complex; and a giant fireworks display at about 9:30 p.m Friday at Cubs Stadium following the baseball game between the Midland Cubs and Amarillo Gold Sox. Tickets for the fireworks display are available for $4 at the Downtown Chamber of Commerce or from Kiwanis Club Members.

The Midland Reporter-Telegram will follow a normal publication schedule Sunday and will publish a morning edition Monday.

Stockade plans due for expansion?

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

While Sheriff Dallas Smith continues to pack his jail to illegal numbers, the Midland County commissioners still are dallying over executing Smith's proposal for a stockade to board the more innocuous prisoners and to give the more hard-core prisoners more room in the steel-and-concrete courthouse jail.

Last Monday, the Midland County Commissioners' Court almost approved the prompt carrying out of Smith's stockade plan; the court already has lauded and sanctioned the concept, as has the Texas Commission on Jail Standards.

In fact, Smith's proposal for the military-type stockade has been so attractive that other county governments, including neighboring Ector County, have envied the concept. And with the goading of Commissioner Charlie Welch, who focuses much attention on saving tax money, other county governments are interested in exploring a joint venture.

LIKE MIDLAND County, Ector County has more prisoners than its jail legally can hold.

And representatives of Midland and Odessa city governments and Midland and Ector county governments are to meet at 10 a.m. Friday in the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission headquarters at Midland Regional Airport to, in Welch's words, "see if we can resolve, rapid-like, a joint venture."

Smith, who is not opposed to such a measure, has noted that the Texas Commission on Jail Standards has approved his plans to set up a temporary stockade on a 7½-acre Midland County-owned tract in far southeast Midland. A proposed joint venture would entail more encounters with the commission, which apparently liked Smith's pilot project.

"Where is the joint location?" Midland County Judge Bill Ahders asked in Monday's Commissioners' Court meeting at which Welch begged for postponing the decision on location of the stockade.

Repeatedly, Welch, who is running for re-election to the post he has held since 1969, harped on saving taxes. He said that a joint venture would be far good quality ground water existed to the east of the tract and that application of effluent to the land could adversely affect that water. In addition, he contended he couldn't determine the flow of the ground water from maps supplied by the city's witnesses.

Reagan began the cross-examination, turning the tables from what had started out as a slow-pitch softball game into hardball as he drilled Harden for specifics.

Pointing to a specific test hole on one map, Reagan asked Harden if he had heard the Reeds' testimony on that hole the prior day. "No," said Harden.

"I can't recall it," Harden replied.

"If four holes show no water and a triassic high, what does it indicate?" asked the city's attorney.

"I would say no aquifer exists there. But it wouldn't necessarily indicate a triassic high along that northern edge," said Harden.

"Why not?"

"It could be due to other factors, like recharge," Harden noted.

"DO YOU HAVE any information to indicate recharge up there?" continued Reagan.

"Basically, there is recharge throughout the area because the contours are shaped that way," the Austin hydrologist responded.

"Do you have information as to where that recharge is coming from?"

"Not specific, no," Harden said.

Turning to Harden's reason for appearing — to represent the objections of the Glasscock District — Reagan asked if he could determine any potential detrimental effects of the disposal project on Glasscock County.

"I can't determine any hydrological changes. Certainly they would be a long time in coming at those distances," said Harden.

Later, he painted a scenario of water levels building up beneath the areas being irrigated by effluent and from leakage of the holding pond. This buildup could change the underground flow of water "180 degrees from the present regional direction (which is to the southeast) or it could be slightly askew."

BROWN POINTED OUT that Scurlock Oil Co. had owned pipeline gathering lines under the Floyd project for many years. "My concern is with irrigation of the land and the type of irrigation water. It will be detrimental to our lines."

Reagan, in his closing statements, said the problem with the oil lines is a private matter and that the city would be contacting Brown to work out the problems.

Wilson, a consulting hydrologist for 12 years, said he had made "some educated guesses" as to how the effluent would affect landowners south of the project.

He questioned the seepage rates from the holding ponds given by the city's witnesses, saying he suspected it might be 10 times what had been presented. He also doubted the sealing capability of a compacted caliche liner.

"If the seepage is greater, the water table rise would be more rapid. I could not accept the conclusion that no effects would not be seen for five years or more," said Wilson.

He also claimed that landowners to the south have good ground water. When they pump it for their use it would bring in the poorer quality water from along Johnson Draw.

"I think these people definitely have an interest. They potentially have fresh water and have the risk of it being salted up in their lifetime. There's the risk that people can't use their own fresh water and pump it out and salt water might come near them," the hydrologist said.

Later, he suggested the city go back to an earlier plan of pumping the effluent to Salt Lake, which is about seven miles south of the city. "Salt Lake is closer, as safe and cheaper. Too much haste in solving the problem may lead to more problems in the future."

DISAGREEING WITH one of the city's contentions that the Floyd ranch was a better site because it could be expanded in the future, Wilson said the land would be there in 20 years. He then suggested a second alternative and that was to use the treated effluent for irrigating farmers' land in Glasscock County.

Taking up that argument was Mark Hoelscher, manager of the Glasscock County Underground Water District.

"We feel Midland hasn't established it could handle this project," he said, going on to suggest that the city "contract for the district to take the water and use it for irrigation. It would eliminate further land purchases and clearing the Floyd site."

During rebuttal, Reagan called back for testimony Joe Reed, the city's hired hydrologist. He pointed out test holes which revealed what he called "a good traissic ridge" across the northern portion of the property.

"If any water is coming across the triassic high, it would hit a mound of water and be carried into Johnson Draw."

Disagreeing with Wilson's interpretation of the data, Reed said, "Even with pumping, the salt water wouldn't migrate out. It's there by virtue of hydraulic contours. The water gradient has to be toward the draw, or the water wouldn't have stayed there."

LISTING SPECIFIC objections to the plan, Swann noted "a lack of data and a fear that the city woud be unable to properly manage the water and let it escape into Johnson Draw."

The last one at bat, so to speak, was Reagan, who claimed the city "has shown the need for a new irrigation site. We've conducted what we feel are exhaustive studies to take care of concerns of abutting landowners. We feel we've come up with a good plan. It doesn't damage any of the surrounding property. The water we put on over the years will improve what is in Johnson Draw."

Reagan then put aside the two alternatives suggested by opponents, noting that they hadn't been studied.

In closing the session, Hearing Examiner James Larkins said the record would remain open to allow the city's additional information on monitoring wells and lining the pond. The 1½-day session, he added, was one of the longer water project hearings over which he's presided.

Second half tax cut starts

WASHINGTON (AP) — Paychecks are a little fatter today as workers start collecting the second installment of the largest tax cut in history. If the Reagan administration's forecasts are on target, the extra money will spark a recovery from the worst recession since World War II.

The reduction in the tax withheld from individual paychecks will range from 40 cents for the $100-a-week earner to $13.40 at the $700 level and higher. The Treasury Department figures a typical married worker with two children and the median family income of about $24,000 a year will take home an extra $6 a week.

In some cases, the higher Social Security taxes that began Jan. 1 and the effects of inflation, which nudges workers into higher brackets as their incomes rise, will leave taxpayers no better off than they were.

But President Reagan's advisers are counting on that extra money and the 7.4-percent increase in Social Security benefits taking effect today to set off a consumer buying spree that would quickly work its way through the economy, firing up idle factories and slashing the high unemployment rate.

"If we stick to our plan, if we keep the Congress from going back to its runaway spending, the recovery will take hold, strengthen, and endure," Reagan declared Wednesday night in a nationally televised news conference.

Odessa, Midland officials to discuss stockade

Brown disagreed on the economics and the politics of any joint venture, which ultimately could involve other county governments looking for stockade space to rent to board their excess prisoners.

"That would be almost a regional concept," said Brown. "It would involve too many; it's going to get bogged down in legislative red tape."

Brown, who also is up for re-election but, unlike Welch, has no opposition, said that Midland County ought to be responsible for its own prisoners.

"I THINK we ought to go along and paddle our own canoe," Brown said.

Whether the stockade is Midland County's sole venture or a joint venture, the sheriff was unwavering on who would control the operation of the stockade. The sheriff would. "The men (guards, jailers) are going to work for Midland County."

The sheriff said Midland County "might be interested in leasing space" to Ector County, which has a "more serious problem" in jail overcrowding than does Midland.

In providing a place for overflow prisoners, Smith plans for the prisoner-volunteers to do the labor on building the double stockade fence and sentry towers; the county already has ordered $37,000 in material for a double fence, plans to pitch tents to house prisoners until barracks can been built, and to shower the prisoners in bivouac fashion.

The sheriff would oversee the project; the county consulting engineer, Bill Harral, would inspect the workmanship, and skilled craftsmen would be hired to carry electrical, plumbing and major building work.

In addition to providing a place for prisoners, Smith is proposing that prisoners do some vegetable farming and more or less support, or least feed, themselves until a new jail is built.

In persuading his fellow commissioners to go along with him in the Friday confab, Welch talked about a tax savings.

"How do you mean 'savings to the taxpayers?' " Brown asked his cohort. "You don't go up in a straight line. It (expenses) usually accelerates."

Judge Ahders is goading the Commissioners' Court to get along with the stockade work.

"To me, the whole problem is where are we going to build it," Ahders said. "We're going to go ahead with the plans, but may change the land."

Formal objections by Ken Peeler on the original choice for the site have caused the commissioners to pause. Peeler, who was representing landowners and businessmen in the vicinity of the 7½-acre tract near the intersection of Garden City Highway (Texas 158) and Interstate 20, contends the stockade will inhibit commercial and industrial growth in the area and will depress land values.

"There's going to be people who are going to object (to location of the stockade) wherever" it is built, said the sheriff.

"YOU'RE NOT going to find anybody who wants it," Commissioner C. DeWayne Davis said. Nevertheless, Davis noted that the sheriff has been proposing the stockade concept for at least a year.

"I am talking about taking care of the people of Midland County," Davis said. "I am tired of running to someone else."

Commissioner Durward Wright agreed to discuss a joint stockade venture.

"I don't think Dallas Smith has any objection to listening to a proposal of this type, do you Dallas?"

"No," replied the sheriff, who thenelaborated on his conditional willingness to consider benefits and disadvantages of the proposal.

At present, the sheriff has the need to transfer about 40 prisoners to a stockade. The jail, which occupies the fifth floor of the Midland County courthouse, legally can hold 102 prisoners, often holds more, but ideally has space for about 80 if prisoners are separated by sex, by juvenile and adults, and by violent and non-violent offenders.

"Our jail is full at about 80 as far as operating. We can hold 102, but after 80, we get under strain," he said.

The sheriff said he liked Davis' "idea of let's take care of our problem first."

"I want my county commissioners, as far as possible, to pull in the same direction," said the sheriff. "We're doing something that's a radical departure, and we need public support."

"The only problem," said the judge, "is where are we going to put it (the stockade). That's our only problem."

Maureen distressed by reversal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Maureen Reagan is "distressed" by her father's reversal of his one-time support for an Equal Rights Amendment but does not know why he changed his mind and helped bring about its death.

"I don't have a very good answer for why the president does not support an Equal Rights Amendment," President Reagan's daughter told reporters at a National Press Club luncheon Wednesday — the deadline for ERA ratification.

"I know that he did at one time when he was governor of California and he changed his mind as some people have — and I've always been rather distressed by that fact," she said. "But beyond that, you'd have to ask him."

While Ms. Reagan bemoaned the defeat at the ERA by "a handful of powerful legislators," her father, the president, said he did not think that the 10-year effort aimed at winning its passage was wasted.

ERA reaction 'not extreme'

times it is just a matter of pursuing and utilizing the laws."

One reason the ERA failed, according to Mary Garay, senior salesman for Basin Business Computing Inc., is that "too many of the women who got into it (the ERA push) a few years ago were not women who were attractive to or admired by the country as a whole. Homosexuality and the ERA should never have been associated."

No matter how a person feels about the ERA, they have a reason to celebrate. For those who were against it the battle is over (for a while) and for those who supported it the battle has just begun. A new ERA is expected to be presented to Congress next month.

Local program for hearing impaired not effected by ruling change

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Monday's reversal of a 1975 federal law which guaranteed a handicapped child "free appropriate education," specifically giving those children with hearing impediments the right to a sign language interpreter in a regular classroom, should have no immediate effect on hearing impaired children in the Permian Basin, Floy Hinson, director of special populations for the Ector County Independent School District, said this morning.

"Our deaf program, unlike any other program, is funded separately by the state," Hinson said. "It is a component under the umbrella of special education but it does differ in that it has a separate budget.

"If, for some reason, the Regional Day Care Center (which is the program public school districts in Texas are under) no longer existed, it would be the responsibility of each individual independent school district to provide the services," he said.

"In my opinion, that would be detrimental to the education of these children."

According to Hinson, Ector County will continue to provide the teachers, aides and support personnel for the Cluster A Region of the Texas Program for the Deaf.

The region, which consists of 14 counties, includes Midland, Odessa, Big Spring, Pecos and Fort Stockton.

Some 14 deaf students from Midland are expected to participate in the Regional Day Care Center program during the 1982-83 school year, Dr. Ruby Morris, director of special education for the Midland Independent School District, said.

Under the regional concept, one school district in a cluster provides the salaries for teachers of the deaf for the surrounding districts in the region.

ECISD provides the salaries for 14 teachers, including a "lead teacher" who serves as the curriculum specialist, Hinson said. Ector County also employs two speech therapists, a counselor-diagnostician and 11 aides who often serve as interpreters for handicapped children when they are mainstreamed into regular classrooms.

"Some of our aides are very skilled, and some are not," Hinson said. "In West Texas we don't always attract the skilled people that can be found in places such as Dallas."

All elementary-aged deaf children are taught in their hometowns, while the secondary students are bussed each day to facilities in Odessa, at the expense of ECISD, Dr. Morris explained.

The school districts provide the facilities and classroom space for their own elementary students, while the teachers, who live in that town and are part of the campus, are supported through funds from ECISD, Hinson said.

In Midland, Dr. Morris said that elementary-aged students, who are mainstreamed into regular classes, attend a special class at Fannin Elementary School every day for special help. A resource room at Lamar Elementary School also is provided. Secondary students from Midland attend classes in Odessa.

"I believe in the regional concept because I believe a student can get a more appropriate education if he is in schools where teachers are trained to work with him," Dr. Morris said.

Hinson agreed, adding that small towns which are serviced by the regional concept would be at a disadvantage if the state discontinued the Regional Day Care Center program.

According to Hinson, it would be difficult for a small-town school district to provide skilled teachers and counselor-diagnosticians. The child also would most likely suffer in his isolation from other hearing-impaired students, he pointed out.

"The decision by the Supreme Court is going to put the pressure on school districts who cannot find skilled employees," Hinson said. "Looking at the child in a small town is important. In this part of the country that would really hurt the service to the child.

"Even if the price (for providing funds for deaf education teachers) could be borne by the school district, that's not the issue. The issue is the child would have to pay the price (for less qualified teachers)," he said.

"I think it would be very difficult for every school district to provide an interpretor for every child mainstreamed into regular classes," Dr. Morris agreed.

Mainstreaming the hearing impaired is the most important aspect of the program.

"The concept and goal is to get the child mainstreamed as quickly as possible," Hinson said. "If that child can be mainstreamed, we're going to do everying possible to get that child an interpreter."

Reagan hints he will seek re-election in 1984

By JAMES GERSTENZANG

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, hinting broadly at a 1984 re-election bid, says he doesn't "walk away from an unfinished job" and his aides don't need to look for new ones.

Although "it is far too early" to decide whether he will run again for the presidency, Reagan said, "I have not been telling anyone around me that I won't run again."

"He sure didn't take himself out" of the 1984 race, said one well-placed White House official.

Reagan's comments during a nationally televised White House news conference Wednesday night was the first time the 71-year-old president has publicly addressed re-election other than to say he has not made up his mind.

On a matter of more immediate political concern, Reagan was asked whether Labor Secretary Raymond J. Donovan has become too great a political embarrassment and whether he'd continue to support him.

"I'm going to be sticking with him," he responded.

Special Prosecutor Leon Silverman reported Monday after a six-month investigation that he found no evidence on which to prosecute Donovan in connection with allegations the Cabinet member had had business and social ties to organized crime.

Before then, White House aides had said they considered Donovan a political liability and some made clear that they were ready to drop him.

"I think that it would be the most unfair thing in the world for anyone to think that he has been anything but unfairly and unjustly assailed," Reagan said of Donovan. "That case is closed."

Reagan said he would take "every initiative there is" to see that the 25-year extension of the Voting Rights Act which he signed on Tuesday is enforced.

He challenged critics to "point to a single instance" indicating that "I am racially prejudiced or am not in full accord with providing civil rights for all our citizens."

"And that goes back before there was a term called civil rights," he said.

The president scheduled his news conference on the eve of a 10 percent tax cut he fought for in 1981, and said in an opening statement that the reduction "marks the keeping of (an) important commitment."

"If we stick to our plan, if we keep the Congress from going back to its runaway spending, the (economic) recovery will take hold, strengthen and endure," he said.

Reagan also said the 7.4 percent cost-of-living increase that Social Security recipients will start receiving today honors his campaign commitment to protect Social Security benefits.

He denied that his support of legislation providing tuition tax credits of up to $500 per child for the parents of students in private schools is a political ploy and said he was prepared to fight for its passage in Congress.

"In eight years as governor of California and in 17 months here, I don't practice political ploys to get votes," Reagan said.

"We aren't taking anything away from the public school system," he added. "What would hurt the public school system is if all of the independent schools closed and those thousands and thousands of youngsters were dumped on the public school system which doesn't have the facilities or the means to take care of them."

The question about his political intentions stemmed from a New York Times column in which departing Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. was quoted as saying he had told Reagan "time after time that he has to stop telling those guys around him that he's not going to run again."

"I have not been telling anyone around me that I won't run again," Reagan said. "I have, at times, even expressed the idea to them that it would be unlike me, I think, to walk away from an unfinished job and I've suggested that they shouldn't waste their time reading the 'help wanted' ads."

Highlights of Reagan's news conference

WASHINGTON (AP) — Here, at a glance, are highlights of President Reagan's nationally televised news conference from the White House Wednesday night:

REELECTION

Although Reagan said "it is far too early to make a decision on a matter of that kind," he added: "I have not been telling anyone around me that I will not run again. ...I've suggested that they should not waste their time reading the help-wanted ads." He said "it would be unlike me to think that I would walk away from an unfinished job."

HAIG RESIGNATION

Reagan generally refused to answer questions about the resignation of Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. last week, but denied Haig had repeatedly threatened to resign. He said there is nothing further the American people need to know about the episode but conceded "there is no easy time for the secretary of state to resign."

DEFENDS DONOVAN

"I'll be sticking with him," Reagan said of Labor Secretary Raymond Donovan, who was accused of links with organized crime. A special prosecutor on Monday found "insufficient credible evidence" to charge Donovan with any crime despite "a disturbing number" of allegations of links to underworld figures. "I think it would be the most unfair thing in the world for anyone to think he has been anything but unfairly and unjustly accused," Reagan said.

LEBANON FIGHTING

Reagan declined to discuss negotiations aimed at ending the fighting in Lebanon, saying "I don't want anything in anyway to affect those negotiations." But he denied having given Israel a "green light" to launch its invasion earlier this month. "We were caught as much by surprise as anyone" Reagan said. He said the United States wants an end to the bloodshed with a Lebanese government capable of controlling its own territory.

THE ECONOMY

The president said his economic plans will work "if we stick to our plan, if we keep the Congress from going back to its runaway spending." He said "tomorrow marks the beginning of brighter days for everyone who works and makes our economy go" because of the start of a 10 percent cut in income taxes — the second phase of his three-year package of income tax cuts. He also noted that Social Security recipients will get a 7.4 percnet cost of living increase and pledged "we will protect those benefits and protect the integrity of Social Security."

TUITION TAX CREDITS

Reagan said he was prepared to fight for congressional passage of his proposed tax credits for parents of children in private schools. "This isn't a program to benefit the rich," he said of the legislation to give parents of students in private schools tax breaks of up to $500 per child by 1985.

Stravinsky hailed as grand old man of music

By LAWRENCE ELLIOT
Special from Reader's Digest

Composer Igor Stravinsky, who was born in tsarist Russia 100 years ago this month, still towers over 20th-century music. Long-ago critics reviled his departure from melodic tradition; audiences were stunned by it. Today, contemporary music without Stravinsky is as unimaginable as art without Picasso or physics without Einstein.

In his lifetime, Stravinsky pretended to stand apart from the agitation that swirled round his work. Coolly describing himself as an inventor of music, he presented the image of a practical, dispassionate man.

The truth is that Stravinsky reacted emotionally to everything — his children, the women he loved, good food and, more than anything else, his work. Behind the lordly self-assurance was a sometimes vulnerable, always very human, being. He could not sleep without a light on or work if he thought someone was listening to him play. A brilliant conductor and pianist, he was so nervous performing in public, he once forgot his own compositions.

Igor Fedorovich Stravinsky was born outside St. Petersburg (now Leningrad). His father was a great bass singer of the Imperial Opera and, at age 2, Igor hummed from memory the folk tunes he heard the country women sing.

But his tremendous aptitude was mostly ignored. Stravinsky's only real teacher was the composer Nicholas Rimsky-Korsakov, who gave him lessons in instrumentation when he was 21.

IN 1980, Stravinsky composed and sent off to his master a short orchestral fantasy to commemorate the marriage of Rimsky's daughter. Back came a telegram: Rimsky was dead. Stravinsky's preparatory years were over.

The catalyst for his astonishing leap to fame was the impresario Sergei Diaghilev, then organizing a ballet season in Paris — one that was to stretch into 20 fabulous years during which Diaghilev's dazzling "Ballets Russes" would tour the world's great cities.

In 1910, Diaghilev commissioned a ballet based on a Russian fairy tale, "The Firebird," for which he gave Stravinsky 1000 rubles (then about $500). In return, Stravinsky gave him a masterpiece that extended the possibilities of an orchestra to unimagined lengths and startled jaded Paris audiences with its flash and vitality.

For the 1913 Paris ballet season, Stravinsky composed "The Rite of Spring" — so primitive, discordant and forthrightly erotic, it had no connection with traditional harmony and burst like a bomb at the May 29 premiere. Few would have believed that the score which incited an angry audience to throw things at the dancers amidst hoots and catcalls would later be evaluated critically as "the most profoundly conceived piece of music of the 20th century."

Stravinsky had married his cousin, Catherine Nossenko, in 1906; they had two sons and two daughters and lived a high-spirited, peripatetic life, mainly in St. Petersburg, Switzerland and the French Riviera. In 1914, this idyllic existence ended: World War I began, Catherine was invalided with tuberculosis and, soon after, the Russian Revolution stripped Stravinsky of his home, volumes of his studies for future work and all income from his native land.

Stravinsky worked on in what he called "a fortifying bitterness." Switching suddenly to an austere new style he called neoclassicism, he was denounced by the hitherto loyal avant-garde. Impervious, he continued to break new ground.

THEN CAME the shattering winter of 1938-39. Within four months, both his daughter Ludmila, 30, and his wife succumbed to TB; that spring, he mother also died. It was a time of endings, and a beginning. In September, days after the start of World War II, Stravinsky, now 58, sailed for America.

Soon after arriving here, he married Vera de Bosset, a one-time Diaghilev costume designer. They settled in Los Angeles and, in '45, Stravinsky became an American citizen.

Six years later, his first full-length opera, "The Rake's Progress," with a libretto by W.H. Auden, premiered in Venice to extravagant reviews.

When he was 80, and hailed as the grand old man of music, Stravinsky returned to Moscow after nearly half a century away to conduct a concert of his own works. But no amount of adulation could temper his distaste for the Soviet style of government.

He was nearly 89 when he died in his sleep one morning in 1971. On this 100th anniversary of his birth, with festivals, concerts and ballets honoring him around the world, it is clear that his magic will endure.

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

No evidence light drinking causes danger to fetus

Dear Dr. Solomon: I know you've written about this before, but I've never been pregnant before so I didn't pay too much attention. How much alcohol is it safe for a pregnant woman to have without harming the baby? — Mrs. S.J., Phoenix, Ariz.

Dear Mrs. J.: The question is an important one, so an answer is worth repeating. Let me respond as simply as I can so there is no room for misinterpretation.

Firstly, not all obstetricians are in agreement on the amount of alcohol their patients may safely consume.

Finally, of one thing you can be certain — if you abstain complete from alcohol, the fetus will not be adversely affected by it.

Dr. Paul Scholten, of the University of California, San Francisco, School of Medicine, says that no one has shown light drinking to be associated with danger to the fetus. By light drinking, he means less than one ounce of absolute alcohol a day. On the other hand, no completely safe alcohol limit for the pregnant woman has been established.

The decision, then, is something each woman is going to have to work out with her obstetrician.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have a nephew who has been having a little trouble in school. The teachers say he has a short attention span, and he acts the same way at home. The doctor has put him on some kind of a pill. His problem isn't too serious because he's nine years old and people don't expect a nine-year-old boy to behave all the time. But what happens when he gets older? Does the problem disappear? — Tina, New York, N.Y.

Dear Tina: Unfortunately, not all problems disappear with the passage of time. Dr. Paul H. Wender, of the University of Utah College of Medicine, reports that a number of people who had what is termed an attention deficit disorder in childhood continue to show the same symptoms as adults.

Fortunately, adults who complain of a severe inability to concentrate may respond to the same kind of medication they took when they were children. The drug generally used in the treatment of the disorder is a stimulant, particularly amphetamines. When used in small doses, they do not produce the exaggerated sense of well-being that one might expect.

Dear Dr. Solomon: When my husband was a youngster, he worked in an industrial plant. There was an accidental radiation leak, and he was exposed to a high amount of radiation. Everything seemed fine until recently. My husband now is 65 years old, and we have just been told that he has cancer. Could there be a connection between his exposure to radiation years ago and his cancer now? — W.D., Baltimore, Md.

Dear W.D.: There very possibly could be a connection. Cancer is different from infectious diseases in that it doesn't appear until long after the person has been exposed to the agents that cause it. This is called the "time bomb" effect. The change a normal cell takes to become a cancerous cell is a very slow process that usually takes many years. That means that cancers that are diagnosed today were probably created many years ago.

Railmen threaten to strike

WASHINGTON (AP) — Contract negotiations between the railroad industry and unions representing workers who run the trains have soured to the point where labor leaders are threatening a nationwide strike as early as July 10.

"We presently are contemplating a strike on a national basis," G.R. Bichsel, vice president of the 40,000-member Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, said in a telephone interview from the union's headquarters in Cleveland. "We're preparing for one. But it could change."

President Reagan, however, could invoke his emergency authority under the Railway Labor Act to forestall any national walkout for up to 60 days.

THE NATIONAL Railway Labor Conference, management bargaining arm for virtually all of the some 110 rail carriers except Amtrak and Conrail, has achieved contract settlements with 11 of its 13 unions.

But the locomotive engineers rejected the board's offer of voluntary arbitration last month, and an initial 30-day cooling-off period required under provisions of the Railway Labor Act will expire at midnight July 10.

The United Transportation Union, largest of the labor organizations and representing some 85,000 trainmen, on Wednesday rejected voluntary arbitration by the National Mediation Board and said it also plans a strike within 30 days.

THE BLE REPRESENTS some 40,000 workers, including three-fourths of the engineers who actually run the trains for more than 100 rail lines across the nation.

If the carriers are struck, the BLE would likely be the first to walk out since its 30-day cooling off period is closer to termination than the July 30 termination date for the transportation union.

"I just wouldn't know how to assess the odds" of a nationwide walkout, said Charles Hopkins, chairman of the management group. "These (union officials) are responsible people and in the main reasonable. We just have not been able to bridge the gap. It's just unfortunate."

Reagan could forestall a strike by naming an emergency fact-finding board and imposing another 30-day cooling off period. The panel would have 30 days to report its findings to the chief executive. Under the law, the unions would not be free to act until 30 days after those findings have been issued.

HOPKINS SAID he believes Reagan would invoke the provisions of the act authorizing a fact-finding panel. A national rail strike, he said, "would be terribly disruptive in view of the other economic circumstances at the present time."

"The main (negotiating) problems," he said, "have to do with the fact that management has been pressing for relief from some of the restrictive practices and (work) rules that still beset the industry. We can no longer live with these conditions and remain competitive."

Bichsel, whose union represents three-fourths of the locomotive engineers on 100 railroads across the country, said the contract stalemate involves economic issues and demands by management for concessions on a host of work rules.

Robert Hart, a spokesman for the United Transportation Union, said it would have to notify the railroads two weeks before any strike.

"We plan to go," he said. "...We would strike selectively, maybe one, two or three carriers in pursuit of a national agreement." He said the three railroad targets would be the Baltimore & Ohio, the Southern and the Santa Fe.

The industry has signed a 39-month contract with 11 non-operating unions.

Reagan says Donovan unfairly maligned

By MERRILL HARTSON

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is sticking with Raymond J. Donovan as secretary of labor, declaring "that case is closed," but key members of Congress say Donovan's fitness to serve remains an unanswered question.

At his nationally broadcast news conference Wednesday night, Reagan gave Donovan a warm vote of confidence, saying the Cabinet officer had been "unfairly and unjustly assailed" by allegations linking him to mobsters.

"Certainly, I'm going to be sticking with him," the president said.

Reagan noted that a 1,000-page special prosecutor's report released Monday said there was no basis to prosecute Donovan on a variety of allegations by FBI informants that the labor secretary had ties to organized crime figures when he was a New Jersey construction executive.

Asked if Donovan had become a liability to his administration, Reagan said:

"Now, why should someone become an embarrassment who has been attacked and undergone what he has undergone all these months, and then a thousand pages of investigatory report says there was never any substantiation for those charges, as he had said in the beginning, there would be none.

"I think that it would be the most unfair thing in the world for anyone to think that he has been anything but unfairly and unjustly assailed."

But on Capitol Hill, Sen. Daniel Quayle, R-Ind., a member of the Labor and Human Resources Committee, said the panel "has no alternative" but to resume its investigation if Donovan remains in the Cabinet. The committee's probe was halted while special prosecutor Leon Silverman completed his investigation.

"If he stays on, there has to be an investigation," Quayle said of Donovan.

He said committee members will embark on "a period of digestion" of the contents of Silverman's three-volume report and then likely will resume their probe after the Fourth of July recess.

Meanwhile, Senate Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., has asked Reagan to turn over to the Senate any background material on Donovan or other administration officials that has been withheld.

In a letter to the president, Byrd said the failure of the FBI and White House to give a Senate committee everything it knew about Donovan prior to his Senate confirmation "may have been an accidental or an isolated incident."

He said he would be "remiss in my duties" if he didn't try to determine whether other materials had been withheld from the Senate.

Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, the labor committee's chairman, had no immediate comment on Reagan's remarks. But Hatch had said previously the panel would not rest until it presses an inquiry into the FBI's handling of the Donovan confirmation probe.

GOP Senators reach tax consensus

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republicans on the Senate Finance Committee say they are nearing the tax-increase goal set in last month's budget resolution.

Meeting in a closed caucus, 11 Republicans agreed Wednesday night to support a doubling of the excise tax on cigarettes to 16 cents a pack and the withholding of taxes on interest and dividends for the first time.

The measures are among about 20 designed to raise taxes by $21 billion in the next fiscal year, as required by the budget outline adopted last month. That outline projects a deficit of $103.9 billion. Tax increases over the next three years are supposed to total $98 million.

Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., the committee chairman, had said earlier in the week that the Republicans had agreed on taxes to raise about 75 percent of the $98 billion. Near the end of the session late Wednesday, Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., said the GOP members had a consensus on about 90 percent of the goal.

The cigarette tax increase would raise an estimated $1.2 billion, according to an aide who disclosed the decisions. The application of withholding to interest and dividends, always beaten in the past through the opposition of financial institutions, would raise about $4.5 billion through faster collection at the planned 10 percent rate.

Another measure agreed to during the session would extend the Medicare portion of the Social Security tax to federal government employees. That levy is 1.3 percent of the first $32,400 of salary. The government, as employer, would have to come up with the same amount from general revenue for the Social Security Medicare trust fund.

Medical deductions, now limited to those expenses exceeding 3 percent of taxable income, would be limited to whatever exceeded 10 percent.

Other provisions of the package would extend the minimum tax on corporations to certain income that is now exempt.

The full committee is expected to start voting on the package on Wednesday.

"I expect it will pass on a vote of 11-9," said the aide. The committee has nine Democrats.

Federal income-tax cuts start today

WASHINGTON (AP) — Here is how taxpayers at selected wage levels will fare when the 1982 federal income-tax cut begins showing up in paychecks today.

Actual withholding may vary a few cents from these figures because the Internal Revenue Service allows employers to use different methods of computing withholding.

The number of withholding allowances claimed by a worker can vary according to family size and can be increased to reflect certain tax credits, itemized deductions and such factors as investment in an Individual Retirement Account.

The first column is weekly wages; the second, number of withholding allowances; the third, the old withholding; fourth, new withholding; fifth, the withholding cut.

Emergency bill needed to keep agencies going

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reluctant to call campaigning congressmen back from their July 4 vacation, House leaders from both parties are telling President Reagan "to do whatever is possible" to keep cash-short federal agencies operating this summer.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., and Republican Leader Robert Michel, R-Ill., in a joint statement Wednesday, urged Reagan to keep the agencies and their programs running until Congress can break a deadlock over a new emergency spending bill.

They said the House leadership is "committed to acting as soon as possible to resolve the remaining differences and provide the necessary funding for essential government services."

But they gave no indication as to when — or how — the House might attempt to break the deadlock.

The impasse in the latest battle between the Democratic-controlled House and Reagan poses no immediate threat to Social Security checks even though the spending bill contains funds needed to process and mail those checks.

July checks are being mailed today, and August checks would be affected only if the impasse continued that long. Even then, other Treasury Department funds could be transferred to the affected division.

Some 8,000 Labor Department employees already have been told they will be furloughed if the impasse is not broken quickly. Those furloughs, a spokesman for the department said, are slated to start around July 12.

Nearly 2,000 Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms employees will be furloughed indefinitely July 11 unless new funds are made available. And another 3,000 Education Department workers have been told to expect furloughs during the summer.

The House has passed three separate bills to keep those and other cash-short agencies going. But Reagan vetoed the first two bills and his administration pronounced the third version unacceptable.

That bill would have provided $4.5 billion to keep the agencies running through July 20 — enough time to let the House attempt to override Reagan's veto of the second emergency spending bill, which appropriated $5.9 billion to keep the agencies going through Sept. 30.

The Senate, acting at the administration's bidding, on Tuesday passed a $5.4 billion bill that extended funding for the agencies until Sept. 30.

—House members could be called back from their vacations to work. Democrats, and some Republicans, however, reportedly don't want to make it appear that the president is pushing Congress around.

—The few House members holding pro forma sessions each day could accept the Senate changes to allow that bill to take effect. That would have to be done on a unrecorded voice vote since a recorded vote would show that a quorum of members was not present.

—The handful of House members still in town could pass the latest House spending proposal on a voice vote and send it back to the Senate in hopes the senators would reverse themselves and accept it. But any member can halt proceedings by suggesting the absence of a quorum.

—Ignoring the problem until the House returns July 12 from its recess.

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is about to move a trimmed-down "new federalism" back to center stage minus the $11 billion federal food stamp program that state and local officials balked at taking over.

Details of the plan to transfer $39 billion in federal programs to the states were learned from persons who attended final negotiating sessions at the White House over the past two weeks.

It would have the federal government assume most of the expensive Medicaid program costing states some $18.3 billion this year while transfering basic welfare and about 30 other federal programs to the states.

Reagan originally proposed a $50 billion package with the states taking over welfare and food stamps in return for federal assumption of Medicaid. He also would have transferred more than 40 other progams to the states over an eight-year period.

Under the latest version, Aid to Families with Dependent Children, the nation's basic welfare vehicle, would be turned over to the states immediately and 30 other programs would be handed to them over a transition period.

The proposal emerged after five months of negotiations with state and local officials and is still subject to some revision before it is submitted to Congress, officials said.

Reagan will send a federalism message to Congress followed by formal legislation with hopes of getting the debate fired up again this year even if it is too late to get a bill passed in this session, Williamson said.

"There's no question that budgetary matters have elbowed out almost all of the domestic issues on Capitol Hill this year, and currently it appears that will continue, at least to some degree," he said.

Texas City firm dumps residue in wrong place

CONWAY, Ark. (AP) — Employees of a Texas City, Texas, firm dumped a black mixture of water, rust and residue from a fuel storage tank at the wrong place, a company official says.

The petroleum-based substance was dumped at a fill site instead of at the Conway landfill. The mixture came from a Sun Pipe Line Co. bulk storage plant in the southern part of the city.

Keith Gossett, manager of the tank cleaning division of Coastal Environmental Services Inc., said Wednesday that the company would do whatever necessary to straighten up the matter.

"We certainly didn't intend to dump waste products on private property," Gossett said. He said the company had a good reputation in the Houston area.

The mixture was unloaded on property belonging to Anthony Halter of Conway. The land is on Arkansas Highway 286, about a half-mile north of the confluence of a ditch and Stone Dam Creek.

Halter had opened the site for disposal of rocks and soil. The petroleum-based substance covered an area 30 to 40 yards long and several yards wide.

Gossett said the firm originally intended to take the load to Texas, but had to change plans because there was more of the mixture than they thought.

In such cases, he said, the firm that generated the waste is responsible for directing the company to a disposal site approved by the Environmental Protection Agency.

Gossett said Coastal employees were given sketchy directions and ended up at Halter's property instead of the landfill.

"This is not the way it should be done, but that's the way it ended up," Gossett said.

Dwight Witcher, district inspector with the state Pollution Control and Ecology Department's water control division, took water samples Wednesday where Stone Dam Creek runs into Lake Conway.

"We've got something in the lake," Witcher said, although he said it was not very thick. He said he wasn't sure the skim on the lake was from the disposal. There was no sign of a fish kill, he said.

The first complaint about the dumping came Friday. Fire Marshal James Mullenax said someone told the Faulkner County Health Department there was an odor coming from the fill site.

Mullenax said he though several hundred gallons of waste were dumped.

Halter moved dirt to block further runoff, Witcher said.

Anybody out there seen a radioactive cylinder?

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Authorities are seeking the public's help in locating a cylinder of radioactive material, which apparently fell from a truck in downtown Knoxville while being whisked to the airport.

Authorities hoped that somebody along the 1½-mile downtown route would find the 25-inch-cylinder, packed in a 3-foot-long container.

The white container, marked "radioactive," apparently fell from the back of a Federal Express Corp. cargo truck Tuesday night, officials said.

Foot searches along the route, mostly in an industrial area, failed to turn up the missing cargo.

"I don't think it's theft. There's really no motive for theft," Brandon Davis, a Federal Express spokesman, said Wednesday.

Packed tightly inside the container is a steel cylinder, two inches in diameter, that contains tritium, a radioactive form of hydrogen.

Dr. George Kramer, a hazardous materials specialist with the Tennessee Emergency Management Agency, said the cylinder could be dangerous if somebody opened it.

"It's a lot of radiation. But it's the kind that's not very dangerous," Kramer said. "Compared to the amount of material in the core of a nuclear plant, it's miniscule. Compared to the amount often used in research, it's considerable."

Kramer said the radioactivity, if released, wouldn't penetrate the outer layer of skin, but could harm internal membranes if inhaled.

Jim Alexander, an Energy Department spokesman, said the container was one of two en route from Oak Ridge National Laboratory to New England Nuclear Corp. in Boston.

Chemical analyses conducted

HOGANSVILLE, Ga. (AP) — Water samples from West Point Lake are being analyzed for any evidence of poisonous chemicals that escaped from tanker cars that derailed six miles upstream, authorities said.

"We don't believe there is a health hazard from the spill," said Lucy Justus, a spokeswoman for the state Department of Natural Resources' Environmental Protection Division.

"As far as the drinking water is concerned, the stream has been dammed up and we do not know how much, if any, of the material reached the lake," Ms. Justus said Wednesday.

Railroad cars jumped off a trestle Tuesday and crashed into Beech Creek, which drains into one arm of the man-made lake on the Alabama border about 40 miles southwest of Atlanta.

Three cities that draw drinking water from the lake area temporarily switched to reserve supplies after the derailment, but returned to normal water supplies Wednesday morning.

Highways 'showing age,' Lions told

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Like man himself and everything he builds, highways also show their age and, if neglected, quickly go to pot.

"You have a highway system that is all paid for, but it is going down fast and is really showing its age," A. Sam Waldrop, a member of the Texas of Highways and Public Transportation Commission, told the Midland Downtown Lions Club Wednesday noon in the Midland Center.

Waldrop, an Abilene businessman who deals in furniture, was in Midland to campaign for public acceptance of hiking funds for the Texas State Department of Highways and Public Transportation. The system's $1.5 billion budget is inadequate to service the state's 73,000 miles of roads, which, he said, have a life expectancy of 20 years but often outlive their allotted time.

"Every inch is paid for and is owned by you," he said.

Many states plunge themselves into bonded indebtedness for 20 to 30 years to raise money to build, maintain, repair and service their highway systems. But Texas, he said, operates more on business lines and just spends its annual income via taxes on roads and highways.

In his campaign to fatten the Texas highway system's coffers, Waldrop is proposing:

—That the state gasoline tax of five cents on the gallon be increased. Currently, 3¾ cents of the nickel tax goes for highways and 1¼ cents goes into the education fund. Each cent from the gasoline tax puts about $70 million in the highway fund. Other states are tacking on a 12-cent tax on each gallon of gasoline, he said. Waldrop said that the increased fuel economy of cars has cut into that fuel-tax recent.

—That the automobile registration fees be based on market value of vehicles and not just on weight. Revenue could be increased by revising the taxing means on registration. Texas has 12.4 million registered vehicles.

—That the highway department, rather than the general fund, get the automobile and vehicle part of sales taxes. Though Waldrop said he has a "great tendency against taxation," he said that "conservative business understands this type of taxation."

The highway department operates on about 10 percent of the state budgets; in 1965, the department was taking in 26 percent of that budget. Education, which, he described as "big business, important business," absorbs 50 percent of the state budget.

In recent years, the "personality" of highway traffic has changed: major truck traffic is increasing. "Our cars are getting smaller, and our trucks are getting bigger."

Waldrop noted that the state highway department's No. 1 problem is the "maintenance and rehabilitation of highways. Our highways are getting old." In many cases, the highways may be fairly smooth on which to drive and the cosmetics may look good, but the foundations begin to deteriorate from age and weathering. Potholes appear; road-surface cracking shows up. Maintenance becomes almost futile.

Highways are vital to the economy, Waldrop said.

"The No. 1 connection to prosperity is highways," he said.

Waldrop noted Texas's has had favorable reputation for good roads.

"One thing Texas has never had to brag about is its highways." Travelers from other states do that for Texas, Waldrop said. "They've done that...very generously."

Shuttle crew tests balky cargo doors

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Columbia's commander, "watching like a hawk," overcame a vexing problem with the shuttle's balky cargo doors today, closing and latching them tight in a simulation of steps that must precede entry on the Fourth of July. "They closed normally," said Ken Mattingly.

He sounded relieved and so did Mission Control.

The ship was orbiting smoothly; Mattingly and pilot Henry Hartsfield did some celestrial sightseeing and crew calistenics, then televised an instructive "cook's tour" of the shuttle cockpit.

Columbia's port door failed to shut Wednesday after warping in the cold shadows of space. Overnight, NASA sent Columbia into a barbeque roll to expose the doors to the warmth of the sun. A similar fix succeeded when the problem cropped up on flight three, and as the shuttle passed 186 miles overhead Cape Canaveral, just after dawn, Mattingly tried the shut-and-open exercise again.

Operating from a remote control panel in the cabin, he needed only three minutes to do the job. It was beamed live to Mission Control.

Officials learned a lesson and capcom Brewster Shaw advised the astronauts that if an emergency forced them to make an early return to Earth, they should immediately point the open doors at the sun to minimize warping.

"Go top-to-sun and hold it there as long as possible" before closing, said Shaw.

Earlier, as the ship sped into the homeward half of its final practice run, Mattingly and Hartsfield delivered an enthusiastic report on Earth's "spectacular cloud formations,"

"A geologist flying over here could have a ball for a lifetime," said Mattingly as he marvelled at the vast territory of western Australia.

Then he went to close Columbia's errant 60-foot left door, telling Mission Control: "I propose I watch it like a hawk. The first time I see it bend upward, I'm going to stop." He never had to. Shaw said, "Everything looks good. Continue on with your normal procedures."

"It's real clean," Hartsfield said as the doors slammed shut.

Later, they beamed down a TV show of life in the cabin, with Mattingly pointing out the never-ending array of controls. There were banners hanging from the walls for Auburn University, from which both graduated, and for the Navy and Air Force. Mattingly is a Navy captain and Hartsfield a former Air Force colonel.

"That's a funny looking animal," Shaw remarked of the Auburn "War Eagle" benner. "Aw, that's no way to talk," Mattingly replied.

Flight four was entering its fifth of seven days today, looking toward Sunday's touchdown at Edwards Air Force Base in California.

Just 38 miles from the shuttle spacestrip, Columbia's sister ship, Challenger, was being taken from its hangar today to be towed through two desert towns to Edwards. It will make it first flight next January.

Mattingly and Hartsfield passed midpoint of Columbia's mission at precisely 11:27 p.m. EDT Wednesday, when they were in their 57th orbit. They planned to subject Columbia's complex systems to more fine-tuning today, to help it be declared fit for commercial trips starting in November.

Time out for sightseeing aside, "the main activity today is to make sure the doors are healthy for entry," Mission Control radioed the astronauts after they wakened.

Flight controllers studied the problem on television beamed down by the astronauts, but the replay of the tape to reporters was delayed so the Air Force could make sure it included no views of the classified Pentagon cargo.

Police escort Anna Aldovrandi and her three-year-old son to a Bangkok-bound plane at Rome's airport Wednesday. Her estranged husband, Sepala Ekanayaka, freed 138 of the 256 hostages he was holding in Bangkok on an Alitalia airliner after learning that his wife and son were on their way to meet him.

Hijacker in Bangkok surrenders after wife, son arrive

By DENIS GRAY

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — A Sri Lankan hijacker fighting for custody of his young son was reunited with the boy today and got $300,000 ransom and a guarantee of safe conduct to his homeland in return for freeing about 100 hostages. He walked off the Alitalia jumbo jet with his arms thrust into the air and his fists clenched in a victory salute.

"I think it is the love for the little boy that led to the hijacking," Thai Communications Minister Amorn Sirigaya said.

Amorn confirmed the Thai government agreed to the demands of 33-year-old Sepala Ekanayaka. He said the hijacker, along with his 29-year-old estranged Italian wife Anna Aldovrandi and their 3½-year-old son Free, would depart for Colombo, the Sri Lanka capital, later today.

Ekanayaka, who has a record of narcotics offenses, appeared more concerned about obtaining custody of his son than he was about his estranged wife, Thai officials said.

The Sri Lankan government has agreed to allow the trio to stay in the country for two weeks, the minister said.

Amorn said the Thais would not arrest the hijacker and that the Sri Lankan Ambassador, Mrs. Manel Abeysekera, had also promised that he would not be harmed. But in Colombo, the Foreign Ministry and police refused to say whether he would be detained when he arrived. It was not known what the hijacker would do after his stay in Sri Lanka.

Amorn said he did not believe that giving in to demands of a hijacker would have repercussions for Thailand and Sri Lanka.

"The first thing must be to save those lives," he said.

Ekanayaka was not under armed guard as he and his wife joined their son on a vehicle that picked them up at planeside. Amorn, who was in the vehicle, said the father hugged the child, who then sat on his lap and held his hand.

Amorn said the three were being kept at an air force facility at the airport prior to their departure. He said the hijacker — described by onlookers as unkempt, cocky and looking "like a hippie" — had taken pills to ward off sleep while aboard the aircraft.

More than 100 passengers and crew members filed off the Italian airline's Boeing 747, ending an ordeal that began 32-hours earlier when Ekanayaka seized the jetliner after it took off from New Delhi en route to Bangkok and Tokyo. The freed hostages were taken in four buses to the military sector of Bangkok's Don Muang International airport.

The hijacker, with what looked like a wreath of dynamite sticks around his neck, had threatened to blow up the jetliner and everyone aboard if his demands were not met.

"It wasn't easy to find $300,000 in cash around here, and the hijacker would not accept a check," an Italian diplomat complained.

Amorn said Alitalia agreed to pay the ransom, but Vincenzo Roversi, an Alitalia spokesman in Rome, denied the company had provided any money.

Mock attack by Israel panicks Beirut residents

By The Associated Press

Israeli jets roared low over Beirut today to drop smoke bombs and flares in a mock attack that sent thousands of panicky inhabitants rushing to basements and bomb shelters.

The 20-minute foray, which began at midnight, appeared designed to tell Yasser Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization guerrillas that Israel's patience was running out. No bombs were reported dropped during the raid.

Israel is demanding that the PLO's guerrilla forces surrender their heavy weapons and leave Lebanon or face a full-scale assault by the array of tanks, planes and naval vessels which have encircled the western Moslem half of the Lebanese capital.

Flares illuminated beachside resorts and shantytowns along the southern flank of the capital as nerve-shattering sonic booms shook the west Beirut PLO hideouts where Arafat and his estimated 8,000 guerrillas are trapped.

The U.S.-arranged cease-fire in and around west Beirut went into its sixth day virtually intact as American and Lebanese mediators sought to arrange intricate mechanics of the PLO evacuation operation.

A key Lebanese intermediary said Wednesday night that despite the PLO's defiant calls to fight to the death, the guerrillas were ready to leave their 10-square-mile enclave because they did not want a showdown with Israeli forces. But he said details of evacuating them remained unclear.

"It is not easy to say how armed people will leave Lebanon," the intermediary, former Prime Minister Saeb Salam, told reporters. "This is an intricate procedure and cannot be done overnight."

No official confirmation was immediately available from PLO leaders on how the armed guerrillas would be evacuated or where they will go.

Salam, Lebanon's 77-year-old Sunni Moslem elder statesman, has been playing a key role in indirect mediation efforts between Arafat's PLO and U.S. presidential envoy Philip C. Habib to solve the crisis. Habib arranged the cease-fire between the PLO and Israeli forces.

Publicly the PLO persists in proclaiming it will resist leaving Lebanon unless the Israelis grant several concessions, which include an Israeli pullback from around Beirut and allowing the guerrillas to maintain a token military and political presence in the country. Israel has rejected those demands.

Acting Lebanese Prime Minister Shafik Wazzan, fresh from a meeting with Habib late Wednesday, said the negotiations were progressing but gave no details. The two met again today at the Israeli-encircled Lebanese presidential palace in Baabda outside Beirut.

Rabbis debate Israeli invasion

NEW YORK (AP) — A national conference of Jewish leaders produced some sharp criticism of Israel's actions in the invasion of Lebanon, but a formal move of dissent was strongly rejected.

In a show-of-hands vote, the Central Conference of American Rabbis turned down Wednesday night by an approximately 2-to-1 margin a declaration that the Lebanese war "leaves us concerned ... for the soul of Israel."

Defeat of the measure, which said the Israeli leadership's view that American Jews support its Lebanon policies is "not entirely correct," came near midnight after almost two hours of debate.

But the conference, representing 1,400 Reform rabbis, called "on all sides to act now" to end the suffering in Lebanon "by extending the ceasefire."

American Jews have a "painful ambivalence" about the fighting, said Rabbi Roland Gittleson of Boston, in introducing the resolution that finally won approval. "We cherish Israel ... but we all shudder at the recent wholesale destruction of human life.

He also charged that "Israel has been savaged by the media" in reports from the front.

Texas' roads need

There was a day not all that long ago when the Texas highway system was known nationwide as the very best. Unfortunately, time has taken its toll on the state's highways and if action from the Legislature is not forthcoming, good roads will become a thing of the past in the Lone Star State.

Anyone who drives Texas' highways can tell you that the thoroughfares are deteriorating. The problem is a multi-faceted one with no inexpensive solutions. According to the Texas Good Roads/Transportation Association, factors that have brought on this transportation crisis include the 5-cent per gallon state gasoline tax that hasn't been increased since 1955, the fact that only 3.75 cents of that levy is dedicated to highways, the extremely low Texas vehicle registration fees, the trend the smaller cars in recent years which has further reduced revenues from the gas tax and registration fees and, that old nemesis, inflation.

Texans have been getting a good deal on their state highways, paying only about $53.14 a year in user fees. Ten years ago, in fact, Texans paid about the same amount in user fees. The difference is that inflation has eroded the purchasing power of that sum. In 1981, the purchasing power of that sum was only $23.99 or about half of what it was in 1971.

Motorists in the Midland area recognize the value of good roads because they travel the highways daily, as much out of necessity as anything. But the 72,000 miles of state highways are getting increasing use all over the state because of Texas' phenomenal growth. In fact, state highway experts say traffic on Texas roads will increase by 50 percent within the next 20 years.

Bad roads, it's safe to say, cost more than good roads. Studies have shown motorists driving on rough, broken pavement have about $130 worth of damage per year to their brakes, suspension systems and other vehicle components, and additional tire wear. Potholes and traffic congestion waste fuel and road-related accidents increase insurance costs, vehicle maintenance and repair costs, and medical expenses. In fact, the Houston Chamber of Commerce estimates each motorist in that city is paying a "traffic congestion tax" of almost $800 a year, which would compare to about $50 a year per motorist to fix up and maintain the roads.

The association says the Legislature has a number of options for dealing with the situation such as increasing the motor fuel tax, restructuring the automobile registration fee system, applying the current 4 percent general sales tax to motor fuel (which would generate an additional $384 million a year in highway revenue) or dedicating the 4 percent motor vehicle sales tax to highways (which would increase highway revenue by $500 million a year). And there are other options. Careful study would reveal which of the options is most suitable for Texas' purposes while remaining fiscally responsible.

The option that cannot be accepted is doing nothing. Letting the state highway system continue to deteriorate will only result in more expense in the long run. Texans traditionally have demanded good roads and the reasons for doing so haven't changed much in the past 50 years or so. Texans still need good roads to span the state's vast expanses.

The legislature should address this problem when it meets in January. With the growth Texas is experiencing, its a problem that will only worsen until corrective action is taken.

New German connection

Economic accord between East and West Germany is seen as the basis for easing travel restrictions between the two countries. Extension of West Germany's "swing" credit apparently has swung the Eastern sector around to liberalizing its way of thinking.

Under the new travel plans, announced in Bonn, East Germany has agreed to allow former citizens who fled to the West to make unhindered return visits. In return, West Germany will extend interest-free credits to the East.

West Germany's Minister for Inter-German Affairs Egon Franke said that East Germany also had agreed to relax other controls on travel between East and West Berlin. The agreements were reached during ministerial talks in East Berlin.

Although Franke did not directly link West Germany's granting of a three-year extension of its "swing" credit — which enables East Germany to buy Western goods — with the easing of East German travel restrictions, sources in East Berlin said the two agreements were part of a package deal.

Little by little, East and West Germany appear to be finding broader common ground on which to stand. But even with the new German connection, there's still a long way to go before the twain really meets.

Another View:

Wrong way on crime

Some U.S. senators want to fight crime by removing protections due everyone, innocent or guilty. That's a bad idea. But several such measures are moving dangerously close to passage in the Senate.

One bill would severely limit the ability of a state prisoner to challenge in federal court the constitutional fairness of his trial by filing a writ of habeas corpus. Another would abolish the exclusionary rule so that illegally seized evidence could be admitted at trial. Perhaps the worst plan, introduced by Sens. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., and Joseph Biden, D-Del., is a "violent crime and drug enforcement improvements" bill.

The measure does include some good ideas: tightening federal laws relating to drug and violent crimes; increasing penalties for persons who jump bail; establishing a commission to write sentencing guidelines. But its dangers outweigh the possible benefits. The bill would unnecessarily limit the rights of defendants. It would prevent the parole of anyone jailed for committing a federal crime, denying the possibility of rehabilitation. It would abolish the insanity defense in federal trials, circumventing needed congressional hearings on its merits. The bill also would install a system of pre-trial preventive detention for federal defendants; that is a form of punishment without trial, which also violates the constitutional presumption of innocence before conviction.

A crucial question is whether the many proposed "remedies" to crime would actually influence the number of arrests and convictions at all. The insanity defense and the exclusionary rule, for instance, play a part in only a fraction of a percent of all cases. At any rate, it's unlikely that these revisions would put many more criminals behind bars: About 90 percent of street crime falls under the jurisdiction of local police agencies, and would be unaffected by the federal plans.

Crime is a national problem without an easy federal solution. Tinkering with peripheral details or complaining about "coddled criminals" merely diverts attention. Neither flights of rhetoric nor restrictions of defendants' rights will alter the statistics or make crime easier to control. Congress should resist the flood of bad anti-crime proposals.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

SS trying to squeeze pennies from elderly

WASHINGTON — While corporate fatcats are allowed to get away with cost overruns and tax write-offs, President Reagan's people have been going after the widow's mite with all the ferocity of Dickensian debt collectors. The unfortunate old people are lucky that debtors' prisons have been abolished.

Jack Anderson

Here's what happening:

The Social Security Administration has been sending out notices to pensioners threatening to cut off their monthly benefit checks unless they repay immediately the sums they were overpaid in recent years in Supplemental Security Income.

I reported a few weeks ago that the Social Security Administration is trying to coerce pensioners into letting the agency snoop through their income-tax records. Unless they sign a waiver of the privacy that every taxpayer is entitled to, the pensioners are told, their supplemental income checks will be cut off. This is a bluff, and a cruel one. The agency has no legal right to follow through on its threat, and it knows it. Indeed a federal judge ordered Social Security Administration officials to cease badgering beneficiaries until the legality of their actions could be settled in court.

Now the Social Security bureaucrats are using the same tactics in their zeal to squeeze every last penny out of the poor, the sick and the elderly.

The first notification is relatively mild. Though it does say, "Please refund the $— immediately," it gives the pensioner a break if he can't pay the whole amount at once.

"For your convenience, we can withhold the balance of your overpayment from your social security benefit," the letter states. A form is included at the bottom of the page, stating: "For my convenience, please withhold my full social security benefit each month until my supplemental security income overpayment of $----- is fully recovered." If the pensioner doesn't sign away the Social Security checks — often the only income he has — a followup letter arrives. This one gets really ugly.

"If we do not hear from you (in 16 days) we will be forced to suspend payment of your Social Security Checks."

This threat is probably illegal. By law, Social Security checks are supposed to be immune from "attachment or assignment." The National Senior Citizens Law Center is planning to take the agency to court over it this week.

In fact, it appears that the Social Security bureaucrats themselves have doubts about the legality of their strongarm methods. My associate Lucette Lagnado was told that the threatening letter now reads "may be forced" instead of "will be forced."

And in its original 1983 budget request, the agency specifically asked for a "proposed change" that would allow it to "recover overpayments to individuals from available Social Security benefits." Obviously, if it already has this authority, there would be no need to ask Congress for it again.

Footnote: An agency spokesman tried to disassociate Washington headquarters from the second letter, insisting that such bullying tactics were not administration policy but an unauthorized bit of zealousness by a regional office. He stuck by the first letter, however, and saw nothing wrong in trying to trick terrified pensioners into signing away what, in many cases, is their only source of income.

Contrast this with the Reagan administration's casual attitude toward defense contractors, big oil companies and other business buccaneers. The Renegotiation Board, which used to collect overpayments from defense contracts, has been allowed to die. The Interior Department trusts the oil companies to report how much oil they pump on federal wells, despite evidence that the oilmen have been robbing Uncle Sam blind under the honor system.

Nor are government collection agents leaning on Chrysler, the Pennsylvania Railroad and other corporations that have received piles of money from the taxpayers.

ONE FOR GUINNESS: A new and awe-inspiring world record has been set in the field of bizarre physical tests: All 18 members of the American winter-over crew at the South Pole joined the exclusive "300 Club" in a single day, April 7. Two of the 18 are women.

The rules for membership in the "300 Club" are simple, if stupefying: The candidate must sit in the ice station's makeshift sauna at 200 degrees Fahrenheit for 15 minutes, then dash out — in the buff, except for boots — to the ceremonial pole on the ice cap and back to the station. The round trip is about a quarter of a mile. The temperature outside must be at least 100 degrees below zero; on April 7, it was minus-101.

A cable announcing the marathon initiation reported "numerous minor cases of frostbite" among the new members of the club.

• • •

SQUEAKY CLEAN: For the honor and status of working for the U.S. Treasury, officials of the agency must submit to a retroactive audit of their income-tax returns for the three years prior to their employment. And every year they continue to work at the Treasury, they are subjected to routine audits by the Internal Revenue Service. Not only that, but when they leave the Treasury, they can usually count on being audited for the next few years as well.

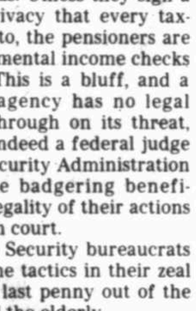
GEORGE F. WILL

Americanization process is worth the pain

WASHINGTON — Most current citizens of this "nation of immigrants" have no notion of the quintessential American experience — the experience of becoming an American. So this Fourth of July, instead of asphyxiating yourself while charcoaling chicken, or setting Aunt Min on fire by the rockets' red glare, read "Hunger of Memory," the autobiography of Richard Rodriguez.



George F. Will

He grew up in Sacramento in the Fifties, the son of immigrants from Mexico. This "history of my schooling" is about the place of language in the transformation of a "socially disadvantaged" child into a middle-class man. It is an elegant echo of the experience of millions of Americans before 1920; it is a sensitive anticipation of themes certain to become more familiar as America assimilates Spanish-speaking newcomers.

Rodriguez was a child "cloistered by family sounds," but timid in public, where spoken English was an unscalable wall. "At the age of five, six, well past the time when most other children no longer easily notice the difference between sounds uttered at home and words spoken in public, I had a different experience....I remained a child longer than most; I lingered too long, poised at the edge of language...." The day he entered school, with a vocabulary of 50 English words, was the first day he heard his name pronounced in English.

"One day in school I raised my hand to volunteer an answer. I spoke out in a loud voice. And I did not think it remarkable when the entire class understood. That day, I moved very far from the disadvantaged child I had been only days earlier. The belief, the calming assurance that I belonged in public, had at last taken hold."

Before elementary school, the screen door of his house divided starkly different public and private realms. And as he and his siblings learned more and more English, they shared fewer and fewer words with their parents. Education has divided many American families, generationally, but the experience is especially poignant when it touches language, the instrument of intimacy.

Rodriguez had in abundance the earnestness of a clear-sighted immigrant at the foot of the social ladder. Coming across someone's list of the "hundred most important books of Western civilization," he methodically read every one. Such a "scholarship boy," says Rodriguez, can not afford to admire his parents: How can he and still summon the stamina needed for rising above their life?

This book about language and intimacy is a controlled confession of loss and regret; but it is controlled by a sense of net gain. The loss was necessary because without being at ease in the public's language, one can not feel as though one belongs in public society.

Linguistically, America has long been (in Rodriguez's phrase) "a marinade of sounds." But the healthy trend has been away from the romance of diversity, toward uniformity. Today, Rodriguez says, the belief in bilingualism rests on the romantic hope that no private cost need be paid for public success. The bilingual voter's ballot "implies that a person can exercise that most public of rights — the right to vote — while still keeping apart, unassimilated from public life."

Advocates of bilingual schooling try to have it both ways, he says. They argue that such schooling will help in the classroom and hence will help with public success. But they also argue that it will preserve for the child a separate identity, distancing the child from the public culture. Rodriguez insists we are individualized twice, at home and in public. For any child, and for all parents, there must be pain in the pull between the two realms: Growing up involves growing away before going away. But for the child of a non-English speaking family in America, the lost intimacy can be especially bewildering. En route to postgraduate attainments in English literature, he came to be considered a "minority" student for "affirmative action" purposes. But by then he was in no meaningful sense a member of a cultural minority. And he was troubled that affirmative action in higher education helps the least-disadvantaged members of a minority group. He quietly stepped off a rising academic career path to assert a prosaic but hard-won identity: middle-class man.

His book is an affecting act of filial piety, a tribute to the special bravery of immigrant parents who point a child toward a cultural divide they can not cross. But his book also is a profound compliment to the country: He praises what he has lost, but insists that the gain — Americanization: a place in our public — has been worth the pain.

LETTERS

Individual action can stem erosion

To The Editor:

I would like to respond to Mr. Ed Vogler's letter of June 6 regarding our tax supported hospital for the right to build a chemical (alcohol) and drug dependency unit.

People complain of what has been happening to our country the last 35 years. Government has taken control of a large part of our lives. Why do elected or appointed officials feel they can handle our financial affairs any more than the individual? If the majority of us ran our lives like the government is run, we would be bankrupt in a short period of time.

When Midland Memorial Hospital was a private foundation it served both the rich and poor with quality service. Since it is tax supported we are getting inferior care, higher prices, higher taxes, plus the facility is running in the red. If that is the best this board can do why do we think another operation would be handled any differently.

Governmental or tax bodies should not compete with private industry. Let private industry handle the problem and also make a profit. That way those who need the service will pay for it and it will make jobs for some of our unemployed, thus helping the community as well.

It is not too late to take action, no matter what the outcome at Austin is. If this project is to go through, undoubtedly a bond issue will be needed. We citizens are larger in number than anyone governing body so if we each act as Harry Truman said, "Let the buck stop here," meaning with me as an individual, perhaps we can first stop the erosion of our private rights and then start enforcing the same rights and privileges.

Mayme K. Martin
Midland

Two-sided story

To The Editor:

I'm not real certain what Mr. Vogler's beef is with Midland Memorial Hospital, but as for Ms. Green, who has time to look at the main waiting room or even use it when one has someone in the hospital. There are times when a young mother or father have someone in the hospital and they neither have the monies or a good neighbor to care for the children. Where else but in the main waiting room can they put them. Perhaps Ms. Green would like them neatly hung on nails next to the sliding doors where they couldn't make a mess.

As for G.D. Sprawls, there didn't seem to be a legitimate excuse for his/her letter of June 24.

Having recently used Midland Memorial Hospital for my husband, we found the personnel in the emergency area to be most kind and efficient. The area was clean as was the other areas where we waited on the fateful night of May 24. The people were caring and I would like to take this opportunity to thank each person who desperately tried to save my husband's life that night.

The hospital is only as good as the personnel within its walls, so far as I'm concerned it isn't as lacking as these folks would like to lead us to believe.

One must remember there is always two sides to every story.

Lending a hand

To The Editor:

Enclosed are a few lines to express my graditude and appreciation to four of your Midland, Texas citizens.

Today (June 23) I was driving about four miles south of Lamesa, Texas on the Midland Highway, when I had a flat tire on my automobile. As I am a paraplegic, this was a problem that I needed help to solve. The temperature was quite hot and needless to say, I was becoming un-nerved.

Upon seeing that I was having car trouble, another automobile traveling north pulled over to assist me. These folks helped change the tire and put on the spare tire, which happened to be flat. After flagging down a passing tow truck to use his air tank to inflate my flat spare tire, I was again on my way. These good samaritans followed behind my car until I reached a service station on the outskirts of Lamesa.

In these days, when everyone seems to be in a "rush" going about their business, it is pleasing to know that there are still some people that are willing to "lend a hand" to someone in difficulty.

In my opinion, Midland can certainly be proud of these citizens.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history:

On July 1, 1969, Britain's Prince Charles was invested as the Prince of Wales.

On this date:

In 1535, Sir Thomas More was tried for treason in England for refusing the Oath of Supremacy.

Ten years ago: Former Attorney General John Mitchell, who had stepped down to become President Nixon's re-election campaign chief, resigned from that post to re-enter private law practice.

Psychiatrists testify before Congress

By MIKE SHANAHAN

WASHINGTON (AP) — Psychiatrists testifying before a Senate subcommittee say it is impossible to predict for certain that it would be safe to release John W. Hinckley Jr. or similar mental patients from a hospital.

"We don't have the means to guarantee members of society that we will protect them from a person like John Hinckley," Alan Stone of Harvard Law School said Wednesday.

Stone and six other pyschiatrists appeared before a Senate judiciary subcommitee considering proposals to change the insanity law under which Hinckley was found not guilty by reason of insanity for shooting President Reagan March 30, 1981.

Hinckley is undergoing tests in a federal mental hospital in preparation for a hearing later this summer at which U.S. District Judge Barrington D. Parker will decide if he should remain in confinement.

His trial ended last week after four months of testimony, including conflicting psychiatric opinions on his sanity at the time of the wounding of Reagan and three other men.

Under the insanity law in the District of Columbia, Hinckley would be eligible for a review of his sanity and his potential threat to himself and others every six months with the judge making the final decision.

Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., the subcommittee chairman, said he is looking for a way to enact legislation which would guarantee that Hinckley would remain in a mental hospital for a long time.

Specter said possible legislation might set "a new standard for Hinckley's detention...although it may present some problems of double jeopardy."

While there were major disagreements among the psychiatrists, all agreed that it would be a mistake to completely eliminate the insanity defense under which Hinckley's lawyers persuaded a jury that he was too mentally ill to know that the attack on Reagan and three other men was wrong.

"In a sense," said Jonas Rappeport, chief medical officer of the Maryland court system, the insanity defense "is a mark separating us from the wild beasts."

Mentally ill defendants, he said, are protected "from the harshness of the law."

Rappeport and two other psychiatrists, James Cavanaugh of Rush-Presbyterian Medical Center in Chicago and Ernst Prelinger of Yale University, were participants in Hinckley's four-month trial.

In his testimony, Rappeport cited figures showing that only about 10 per cent of defendants who successfully plead not guilty by reason of insanity commit new crimes once they are released from mental hospitals.

"Only a small number of those who are released return to the hospital," Rappeport said.

Cavanaugh said a program in which he works has allowed about 65 persons who were found not guilty, but insane, to be released and treated in a psychiatric clinic and only a handful returned to crime.

But Stone cited a study in Michigan which he said showed that about half of the defendants found not guilty but insane were released within three months.

The current legal standard which decides who is released, Stone said, "rests on quicksand."

The issue is controversial because of a change in psychiatric treatment from an era when seriously ill patients remained hospitalized for most of their lives to the current practice of emphasizing early release with regular treatment at a clinic.

Lawyer: Congressmen who quizzed jurors should be jailed for contempt

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The congressmen who called jurors in the John Hinckley trial to testify about their verdict should be jailed for contempt of court, says Houston defense lawyer Percy Foreman.

Hinckley was found not guilty by reason of insanity in the attempted assassination of President Reagan. A congressional committee launched an inquiry into the insanity defense question after a public outcry following the verdict.

"No one should criticize a jury's verdict unless they heard every word of the testimony," the 80-year-old attorney told the State Bar of Texas convention Wednesday. "If I'd been the presiding judge in the Hinckley case, I'd have put the committee in jail for contempt of court."

Foreman said he considered his greatest triumphs two cases where his client was sentenced to life in prison instead of receiving the death penalty because jurors recognized the offenders' mental illness.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Charges of illicit sex between members of Congress and their teen-age pages are being investigated by federal authorities, according to the FBI and Justice Department.

CBS News on Wednesday reported that "several" congressmen were subjects of the investigation.

"I can confirm that there is an investigation, as reported," Larry Knisely, night supervisor of the FBI's District of Columbia office, said.

"It's at a very preliminary stage," said Justice Department spokesman John Russell. "A page came forward and had some allegations. I can't discuss them right now."

The Arkansas Gazette, in a copyright article in today's editions, quoted an unidentified Justice Department source as saying the department was looking into complaints that members coerced or bribed pages of both sexes to engage in homosexual or heterosexual activities with them.

The Little Rock newspaper said nine or 10 members of the House and one senator were under investigation.

Homosexuality reportedly was not the issue in the investigation, but rather the promising of favors by members of Congress and sex with minors.

The network broadcast an interview with a former page supervisor who said he engaged in sex with a member of the House on three occasions, including once in the representative's office and once at an apartment in the Watergate complex.

Asked what compensation he received, the former page said he never saw money, but realized that on Capitol Hill, "one favor deserves another."

"Say, for instances, I was a junior while I was a page. If I wanted to stay for my senior year, I could have gotten a sponsorship by another congressman," he added.

There are about 70 House pages, ranging in age from 16 to 18, according to John T. Molloy, the House doorkeeper who has direct responsibility for them. He said their average stay on Capitol Hill is about a semester — some stay as briefly as two months and others as long as two years — during which they live in supervised housing near the Capitol, attend the Capitol Page School and must pay for their own uniforms, lodging and meals from paychecks somewhat above $600 a month.

An unidentified 18-year-old former page from the Little Rock area was quoted by the Justice Department source as saying he had encountered homosexual advances. But the youth told the newspaper that the investigation was based on rumors and "no one has any facts to back them up."

The youth said another former page heard rumors about sexual and drug activities and told his sponsoring congressman, who told the Justice Department.

Murderers get 10 life terms

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Two men convicted of killing a reputed "root doctor" and three other victims have been given the longest prison sentences in South Carolina history — 10 life terms plus 50 years.

Charles "Bo-Left" Livingston, 33, of West Columbia, and Willie James "Blood" Stroman, 43, of Charlotte, N.C., were sentenced Wednesday.

They could have been sentenced to death in the electric chair for the Sept. 29 murders of root doctor Edward "Doc" Harkless and two other men and a woman at the Harkless house north of Columbia. Two more people were wounded in the Sept. 29 attacks, but survived to testify for the state.

Frank "Frank-O" McDowell, who pleaded guilty to murder and testifed for the prosecution, was sentenced Tuesday to 10 life terms plus 45 years by Circuit Judge Dan Laney.

Under state law, a second trial must be held for a defendant convicted of a capital crime to determine the penalty. It took the jury only 52 minutes to reject the death penalty.

Presbyterians want to unite northern, southern bodies

By JIM SHEA

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Delegates to the 194th General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church in the United States were headed home today, hoping to gain approval of a plan to reunite the church with its southern counterpart.

Church leaders need support from the 150 regional districts to merge with the Presbyterian Church in the United States. The church had split into two bodies — north and south — in 1861 as a result of the Civil War.

The assemblies for both bodies have approved a reunion, but a merger can only occur if the regional districts, or presbyteries, for each body give their approval.

Church officials have predicted easy approval of the reunion by the northern presbyteries, but see a close vote shaping up among the 61 southern districts.

If the reunion is approved, the new church would have 3.2 million members and would be called the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

In one of its final acts before ending its 10-day convention Wednesday, the United Presbyterian assembly decided to remain a participant in a U.S. Supreme Court case over the tax-exempt status of Bob Jones University.

The 600 delegates voted by a 2-to-1 margin to continue with a friend-of-the-court brief on behalf of the university, even though the delegates disagreed with the college's policy of not admitting blacks.

The Internal Revenue Service questioned the religious status of the Greenville, S.C., institution and declined to grant it tax-free status. A lower court overruled the IRS and the case was appealed to the Supreme Court.

The United Presbyterians have claimed that First Amendment issues involving freedom of religion were involved.

In other action during the convention, the assembly voted to divest the church of $10.7 million in stock held in companies that are major suppliers of military hardware and essential nuclear components; called for a bilateral freeze on nuclear weapons and delivery systems by the United States and the Soviet Union; passed a resolution demanding that the Israeli army immediately pull out of Lebanon; and went on record opposing a constitutional amendment calling for prayer in public schools.

Senate overwhelmingly approves military funding bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite complaints the action might lead to deeper U.S. involvement in Central America, the Senate has given the Pentagon the go-ahead to help Honduras upgrade two airfields for use by American military planes.

The $21 million project was part of a military authorization bill approved 93-1 by the Senate on Wednesday and sent to the House. Sen. Robert Packwood, R-Ore., cast the only dissenting vote.

The $6.4 billion measure is $1.4 billion under the administration's request. It was cut to meet guidelines approved by the Senate Budget Committee.

Since the House is considered likely to approve an amount near the $7.8 billion wanted by the administration, the measure is likely to wind up in a conference committee.

Most of the three hours spent debating the bill was taken up with the attempt by Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., to delete the money the Pentagon wants authorized to aid Honduras. It was finally killed by a 65-29 vote.

Opponents of Pell's plan said Honduras wants to improve the two airfields, one near its capital of Tegucigalpa and the other near its northern border with Nicaragua, to deal with threats from Nicaragua.

Honduras is a U.S. ally and is worried about the Soviet-backed buildup that has helped Nicaragua develop the largest standing military force in Central America, said Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., the bill's main floor supporter.

The aid package, which would give the United States access to the fields should it be needed, was worked out during six weeks of negotiations between the Central American nation and the Reagan administration, Thurmond said.

Pell said the move "has grave foreign policy implications" and "sends a signal to the rest of the world that the United States is trying to involve itself deeper" in Central America. The Reagan administration has been actively supporting the El Salvador government against guerrillas that it says are Soviet-backed.

But Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, defended the money, labeling it a "gesture to a friendly nation that wishes to defend itself and uphold the common defense of the region."

Both Percy and Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, noted that no U.S. troops would be involved.

Tower said a refusal to spend the money would be tantamount "to sending (Cuban President Fidel) Castro a cable, inviting him to come on in ..."

"The threat in the region is clear," Thurmond said. "The United States must respond to maintain the regional balance of power."

Spending the money would "be concrete evidence that the United States is serious in its commitment to defend freedom," Thurmond said.

Sen. Edward Zorinsky, D-Neb., contended that there "is much more to this project than meets the eye" and worried that it might lead to deeper U.S. involvement in Central American affairs.

Under terms of the War Powers Act, the administration would notify Congress, were any U.S. troops or personnel to be sent to the area, Tower assured Pell.

The Senate approved an amendment proposed by Thurmond's subcommittee that would permit the Defense Department to sell unneeded land, if the proceeds were used to help reduce the national debt.

Currently, the General Services Administration manages all excess government property, but that system is cumbersome, Thurmond argued.

Pink has calming effect on inmates

By PETE JACOBS
AP Writer

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — The hollering, handcuffed man kicked arresting officers as they led him to the pink room. They tossed him in and waited with knowing smiles for his screams to subside.

Within minutes, the prisoner's rage turned to calm. He'd been "pinked."

Prison officials throughout the nation are learning that the pink room at the Santa Clara County Jail really works.

"We know that when we put someone in the pink room he's going to calm down," says Lt. Paul Becker, assistant detention commander at the facility.

The 12-by-14 room was painted pink about two years ago, Becker said, on the advice of color experimenter Alex Schauss, director of the American Institute for Biosocial Research in Tacoma, Wash.

Schauss says that in addition to its calming effect, the color pink can actually weaken physically strong men.

According to Scottish psychiatrist Humphrey Osmond, who has written about his work with schizophrenics in the Journal of Orthomolecular Psychiatry, those exposed to the color can become weak in as brief a period as 2.7 seconds.

The idea has also been tried in the San Mateo County Jail's detention center in Daly City, where facility commander Sgt. LeRoy Jones said he wouldn't part with his 5-by-12 pink room for anything.

"They start out kicking, screaming and yelling," Jones said. "They throw their bodies against the door. But in a few minutes they sort of calm down. They'll usually sit down. Maybe it's because they're tired. But the color does it to them. It works."

According to Schauss, as many as 1,200 jails, schools, hospitals and corporations have successfully experimented with the painted room.

"I understand there's one corporation that created a pink room for middle-management and management people who find themselves under a lot of stress," Schauss said.

"When a manager realizes he's under stress, he can go into the pink room. They even have a phone in there for him. Then, when he's calmed down, he comes out."

Researchers believe that a light wavelength of 620 nanometers emitted by the color affects the brain in a way that is not fully understood, Schauss said. Studies show that blind and sighted people respond to it the same way.

Not just any shade of pink will do. Schauss says that the proper pale shade can be created by adding four ounces of red coloring to one-fifth gallon semigloss white paint and fourth-fifths gallon flat white latex.

Schauss' theory was first tested in a correctional facility in 1978-79 at the U.S. Naval Correctional Center in Seattle.

"Basically, they found violent and aggressive behavior based on infraction reports were brought to zero," Schauss said.

He was lecturing about the idea when Becker and other Santa Clara jail officials decided to create a pink room at their facility.

"We don't keep records on it," Becker said, "but when you put them in the pink room they calm down in 15 to 20 minutes.

"Not only that, but they don't have their normal strength to fight you with when they come out even if they wanted to."

Schauss said that the effects last for about a half-hour after the inmate is removed from the pink environment.

But Schauss thinks that there could be an adverse reaction if people are left in pink rooms for long periods: They might even get angrier than they had been before entering.

And not all jailers have had success with the color therapy, Schauss adds. He visited one jail in North Carolina where the sheriff complained that painting the room didn't work.

"The problem was they painted it the wrong color," Schauss said. "It was orange."

Tamara Oatman, organizational chairman, standing, addressed the newly formed Texas Women's Political Caucus — Permian Basin when the group met Friday in the Hospitality Room of the Coors Building on Hwy. 80 to plan a meeting in August which would bring Jane Wells, state chairman of TWPC, to speak. The meeting will be open to the public.

According to Jan Foust, organizational publicity chairman for Midland, "The Caucus is non-partisan. There are party affiliated women's political groups, but the Caucus should fill the gap for women who don't want to belong to and work with a specific party; and also for women who want to work on issues of importance to women as well as work with a party group."

All women who are interested in joining the Caucus can contact Karen King at 683-4811.

Art Deco style in home furnishings being revived

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Between World War I and II, an architectural and decorative style known as Art Deco flourished in Europe and the United States. The movement combined many then-current influences, such as the Cubism and Futurism of the art world. Art Deco also incorporated an enthusiasm for the exotic, including both oriental and Egyptian motifs.

It was a short-lived period, ushered out by a worldwide depression and World War II. After the war, Art Deco was dismissed as hopelessly romantic and naive. However, the charcteristics that made it a laughing stock in the sober post-war world are now playing a role in the revival of a style some observers believe will be the next big decorative enthusiasm.

Richard Himmel, a Chicago designer, recently introduced a collection of reproductions of mainly-French Art Deco furniture based on pieces in the collection of originals he has been gathering since 1970.

He said the romance of the furniture and its setting — the drama, fluidity, jewel-like effects and soft colors of the associated textiles and paints — made it desirable today for use in spaces often devoid of architectural detail.

"It is a lightly scaled and sculptural furniture. It fills the space with lots of line, but is not massive. It really works in small rooms, and small rooms are what we have to work with today."

Himmel's collection is pricey. The mirrors, tables, chairs, cabinets and upholstered pieces range from $800 to $5,000. It represents a growth of interest in Art Deco at the upper levels of taste. The accessories and furniture in the style shown at the recent North Carolina furniture market indicate there is also interest at a broader level.

Yet another aspect to the Art Deco revival in the U. S. is the growing number of individuals and organizations working to preserve the Art Deco heritage. According to Barbara Capitman, of Miami, president and one of the founders of the Art Deco Societies of America, groups operating in more than 10 localities are devoting considerable effort to finding, publicizing, protecting from demolition, and restoring Art Deco buildings, monuments and furnishings.

She traces the beginnings of these efforts to a small group of interior designers who began in 1976 to call attention to a unique area in Miami Beach where hundreds of Art Deco buildings still stand, many in poor repair and in danger of demolition.

Awarded a $10,000 grant by the city, the group made an architectural study of Miami Beach. It found 800 buildings worth preserving in an area roughly a mile square, according to Mrs. Capitman, who is also a founding member of the Miami Design Preservation League.

The group's enthusiasm and efforts to save these buildings resulted in the formation of a historic district and a listing of the area on the National Register of Historic Places.

Acquiring landmark status has made it easier to obtain financing to save and restore some of the buildings, she said. One group of investors has purchased six hotels and is refurbishing them. It plans to promote the hotels and Miami Beach as a tourist attraction of interest to designers, artists and preservationists.

Miami is not the only city where interest runs high in preserving Art Deco influences. Art Deco societies exist or are forming in New York, Chicago, Minneapolis-St. Paul, San Francisco, Seattle, Cincinnati, Oklahoma City-Tulsa, Buffalo and Toronto as well as in Los Angeles, Boston and Philadelphia.

A recent cross-country trip convinced Mrs. Capitman there were considerably more Art Deco buildings than once was suspected. It is safe to assume that there are many undiscovered masterpieces in almost every locality where substantial building occurred during the 1920s and '30s, she said.

Recycling new life into old mansions

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

What do you do in today's world with a 15,000-square-foot house standing on over 50 acres?

Frequently the answer is to tear it down and develop the acreage for something else. As a result, the grand homes of a bygone era are disappearing.

However, some properties are being saved as creative individuals figure out how to transform yesterday's white elephants into useful additions to the present without sacrificing either the buildings or the beautiful grounds on which they often stand. The properties are being recycled into conference centers, country inns, condominium apartments, resorts, spas, nursing homes and schools.

THE NORTHEASTERN CORRIDOR is home to many white elephants. What is happening in one rural area where the states of Connecticut and New York meet offers an illustration of several imaginative salvage operations.

In Sharon, Conn., for example, the former William F. Buckley Sr., estate is being turned into Great Elm with division of the 15,000-square-foot house into five condominium apartments and subdivision of the acreage into 14 homesites. Some of the acreage is being left open, as it has been since 1760 when the house was built.

Nearby in Amenia, N.Y., Troutbeck, the former home of Joel Spingarn, one of the founders of the NAACP, has been turned into an executive conference center during the week and a country inn and restaurant on weekends.

Troutbeck's 422 acres and lake will soon be developed with 35 homes, plus open land and recreational amenities for those who will live there.

THE PRICE OF SUCH RENOVATIONS is not cheap. Homes at Troutbeck will range from $250,000 to $400,000 and at Great Elm, the asking prices for the condominium apartments start at $175,000 and for the homesites at $60,000.

Furthermore, the Sharon development does not sit well with all its neighbors. G. Laurence McGowan, developer of Great Elm, said turning crumbling former estates into paying propositions is rarely considered a good thing by all the neighbors.

"People are fearful there will be a negative impact on their property. They don't realize that if these places aren't developed in some fashion, they will end up being razed. It can cost between $100,000 and $150,000 a year just to keep a huge place like Great Elm empty," said McGowan.

At Great Elm, Jane Buckley Smith explained what led her family to develop their ancestral home. "We simply couldn't keep it up, but we did want to preserve it if possible." The family hired a firm to study what could be done to preserve the property.

A SCHOOL, AN INN, a corporate headquarters or a conference center were considered, but the rambling house seemed particularly suited to conversion into apartments, she said. Two members of the family have purchased condominium apartments and will continue to live on the place and one has bought a homesite.

Walking through the now-empty rooms of the house, once filled with furniture and accessories which were auctioned last year, raised another question: What happens to the furnishings when an old place is broken up or taken for other uses?

The answer was supplied by Elizabeth Fitch and Sally Kain, who run estate sales in the area from their Sharon headquarters. The two women have built a business over the past seven years by holding such estate sales. Each year over the Memorial Day weekend they run a consignment sale.

"Many of our consignors are moving from large homes they can no longer afford to maintain. Money may be short. Their children may not want their old things. So instead of keeping them, they are turning them into dollars," said Mrs. Kain.

HONEY RIBS

These are sweet, so the mustard dip is appropriate.

½ cup honey mixed with ½ cup frozen orange-juice concentrate, undiluted
Dijon mustard (made with white wine)

Arrange the ribs in one layer on a rack over a shallow roasting pan. Cover pan tightly with foil. Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven for 1 hour; leave oven control at 350 degrees. Lift rack with ribs from pan; pour off fat in pan; return ribs without rack to pan; pour honey mixture over them. Return, uncovered, to 350-degree oven; bake, basting several times, until tender and browned — 45 minutes. Serve hot with the Dijon mustard as a dip. Makes 4 servings.

Hats on to movie that helped hat industry!

By BOB KERR
AP Writer

DENVER (AP) — Bill Bland doesn't blink an eye when he tells you that President John Kennedy almost single-handedly decimated the men's dress hat business in the United States.

And, although the nation's urban cowboys made the Western sombrero business flourish it took Harrison Ford and his wide-brimmed, brown felt lid in the movie, "Raiders of the Lost Ark," to bring back the stylish hat, Bland adds with just a trace of a smile.

Bland, 75, has been selling hats in downtown Denver, off and on, since 1967. Today he operates the city's single hats-only business.

While he's in his suite, which serves as a hat shop on the third floor of an aging downtown office building most of the time, he will quickly tell you, "It's a part-time business but open-by-appointment any time you say."

Bland, a bachelor who lives in a hotel near his shop, has been a resident of and worked in downtown Denver for more than 30 years. A lot of that time he's sold hats in exclusive shops and department stores.

"Oh, I guess I've sold thousands," he said. "Almost everyone wore hats at one time."

"We lived in Longmont north of Denver and I can still remember the long rows of hooks along the school hallways where we would hang our hats and coats.

"If there was a hook without a hat on it you could bet that child came from an impoverished home or had lost his hat on the way to school that day. Everyone wore hats."

Bland said men and boys wore hats almost everywhere in those days.

"I can remember when you saw a man without a hat out on the street it was an oddity," he said. "In fact, you'd go home and tell people, 'I saw a man on the street today without a hat.'"

The men's hat business continued to flourish into the '50s, Bland said, and President Dwight Eisenhower even gave homburg sales a shot in the arm.

"Eisenhower wore a homburg occasionally and that helped homburg sales," he said.

Then came Kennedy, a handsome politician with one glaring fault in the view of the nation's hat salesmen: He didn't wear one.

A new face for Julie

By JANICE TYRWHITT
(Special from Reader's Digest)

Eleven years ago, Julie Michalski of Williamsville, N.Y. was born with abnormalities that doctors have collectively labeled Apert's syndrome. Her fingers and toes were joined like the paws of a teddy bear, her skull bones grew together so quickly that they boxed in her growing brain, her sight and hearing were defective.

Most conspicuous of all, Julie had a flat upper face. Her wide-set eyes bulged sideways.

WITH DEVOTED PARENTS, four brothers and supportive teachers, classmates and neighbors, Julie escaped the cruel teasing that bedevils most children with deformed faces. But her mother knew that she was uncomfortable when people stared.

When the other kids start dating, Pat Michalski wondered what will happen to Julie?

The girl's father, physician Stanley Michalski, wondered too: How can we help her?

Julie underwent nearly a score of operations to release the bones of her skull, separate her fingers, improve her vision and hearing. But her jaws were so badly aligned, she had trouble chewing — and she looked distressingly different.

ONLY CRANIOFACIAL SURGERY could change Julie's face, and this was a specialty so new and radical that until 15 years ago, it was considered impossible. Yet her parents decided to explore surgery before Julie reached her teens.

In April 1981, they took her to the most experienced cranio-facial surgeon in North America, 43-year-old Ian Munro, at the Hospital for Sick Children in Toronto, Ontario, Canada.

Dr. Munro explained to Julie and her parents exactly how he proposed to rebuild her face and skull. The chances of complication, he warned, would be minimal but real — possible death, blindness, brain damage, massive infection — and the recovery period would be long and tedious. Despite the dangers, the Michalskis agreed to surgery, which was scheduled for July.

IN THE WEEKS OF WAITING that followed, the parents often questioned their decision. So tense that she had trouble swallowing, Pat Michalski discussed her doubts with a psychiatrist. "This is not cosmetic surgery," he pointed out. "Without it, what chance has Julie for a normal life?"

Until the '70s, children born with monstrously deformed faces were crippled for life and often consigned to institutions for the mentally retarded. A lucky child like Julie might avoid psychological damage for several years, but the chances of becoming a normal adult were slight. The child would almost certainly be pitied, shunned, ridiculed — and soon would understand that his or her appearance literally shocked people. He would face life with monumental disadvantages.

NO ONE KNOWS HOW MANY children are born with this kind of handicap. Severe facial deformity may be caused by any of several congenital syndromes — usually named after the doctors who first identified them: Crouzon's syndrome affects the head in much the way Apert's does, but doesn't involve the hands or feet. Treacher-Collins, characterized by small or missing cheekbones and an underdeveloped lower jaw, is often accompanied by deafness. Neurological diseases like that of the well-known Elephant Man also cause overgrowth of tissue.

Such conditions often are accompanied by problems in breathing, eating, seeing and hearing. Rare as they are, they affect so many people that Dr. Munro is booked months ahead.

"The best result we can get is to make someone look normal," he says. "At worst, we can make him acceptably ugly. The more surgery we do, the more possibilities appear. There's no bone in the face or skull that we can't reposition."

TO PATIENTS WHO GREW into their teens and 20s before cranio facial surgery was possible, Dr. Munro's operations seem a kind of deliverance. They come to him from all parts of Canada and the United States, from as far away as Germany and Tanzania.

For these older patients, inner scars take a long time to heal. "It was years before I realized that I could be invisible in a crowd," says a man whose surgery was so successful that only his closest friends know how he once looked. "I'm still learning to meet people without guarding myself against humiliation."

ARMED WITH NEW CONFIDENCE, the beneficiaries of craniofacial surgery are fulfilling their own dreams: Barry Buller lived four years on welfare because he couldn't get work. Now 24, he has put himself through an accounting course and found a satisfying job. Marlene Hathaway couldn't breathe properly or chew food until Dr. Munro operated when she was 16. Today she's happily married and a crackerjack operating-room nurse.

AS FOR THE MICHALSKIS, they know they made the right decision. Ten days after her operation, Julie was home. With her jaws wired shut, she spent eight weeks on a liquid diet but gradually, as the incisions in her throat and rib cage healed, her face miraculously began to smooth and her hair grew back.

"At last Julie's face matches her person inside," says Pat Michalski. "Dr. Munro unlocked the person she was supposed to look like all along."

PATIO REFRESHER
Gugelhupf Iced Coffee

GUGELHUPF

It's made with baking powder rather than yeast.

2 cups fork-stirred all-purpose flour
3 teaspoons baking powder
1 teaspoon salt
2-3rds cup unsalted butter or margarine
1 cup sugar
4 large eggs
½ cup milk
1 teaspoon vanilla
2 squares (2 ounces) semisweet chocolate, grated

Stir together the flour, baking powder and salt. Cream butter and sugar in the large bowl of an electric mixer; beat in eggs, one at a time, until blended. Using low speed, add the flour mixture, alternately with the milk and vanilla until blended after each addition. Turn 1-3rd of the batter into a well greased and lightly floured 10-inch plain or fluted tube pan. Cover with ½ the chocolate. Spoon another 1-3rd of the batter over the chocolate, spreading carefully. Cover with remaining chocolate. Top with remaining batter. Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven until a cake tester inserted in the center comes out clean — 45 minutes or longer. Let cool in pan placed on a rack for 15 minutes. Loosen edges and turn out on rack. Cool completely. Makes 12 to 14 servings. Adapted from "The Chosen Appetizers & Desserts" edited by Marilyn Stone (Triad).

Son needs help in understanding what he reads

By WILLARD ABRAHAM, Ph.D.
Copley News Service

Q. Our 16-year-old son has become somewhat of a cynic about practices in both government and business. He has been reading quite a bit about the industrial conglomerates in the early part of this century, the needs of laboring people when they worked under sweat shop conditions and the oil and munitions cartels. I don't have to tell you that he has strong feelings about political hanky-panky of recent years, and he's started to delve into earlier, local, state and national scandals.

All of these are voluntary studies, eagerly approached, and he seems to have a lot of facts at his fingertips — far more than my wife and I have.

That's the problem: How to cope? Agree, defend or what? Your opinion, please.

A. Many other parents would envy your having a youngster with the motivation to read, study, evaluate (hopefully) and discuss!

One of your major efforts should probably be to avoid confrontation with your son, admitting that you haven't read all the materials he has, listening freely, asking him questions, and through these means, encouraging his continued reading.

You — and his teachers in related areas with whom you might discuss this matter — can alert him to possible biases that might be involved in some of the materials. Who are the authors? What are their major objectives? Are there other sides — and writers — on the issues?

His interests and enthusiasm can lead to active participation in acceptable youth activities which can benefit from his knowledge and contributions. Your involvement in bringing such possibilities to his attention (you may be too late — it sounds as though he probably is already well-informed about them) may depend on how you feel about such "controlled activism."

Q. I have a very bright four-year-old daughter who has been attending preschool for two years. I work full-time.

I reared her by myself until she was two, at which time I married her stepfather. We are now in the process of adoption.

How should I answer her when she asks, "Did you buy my daddy, or did you find him?" I have never discussed with her that my husband is her stepfather.

A. Usually the best way to answer children's questions is to provide what information they can understand at their stage of maturity. In this case it may be sufficient to say that you married him because you love him and want to live together. Adding the factor that you are so glad that she is there too so that all three of you can be a family may be a good point to mention.

You haven't made clear whether her father is around and available, and whether you were married to him. Such factors may have to enter your discussion with her — for example, how lucky she is to have two fathers.

But it may be enough at this point to share with her what she is asking for, no more and no less. To provide more may be confusing; to offer less would be unfair to her.

Q. "Make-up" is the issue — and my 13-year-old daughter is the person. She smears it on, thinks she looks cute, and goes out of here looking like you-know-what.

I've pleaded and threatened, but it all does no good. I've asked her friends to help me out, but get nowhere with that either. I don't know where to turn, so please give me some ideas of what to do.

A. In many communities there are organizations and businesses that help teen-agers with style, social relationships and make-up ideas appropriate for the age and the individual.

Through you local YWCA, Girls' Club or other agency, or your youngster's teacher, you might find out about a good one in which your girl (and one or more of her friends) might participate.

Dreams die hard for vision of special town

By RANDALL HACKLEY
AP Writer

GIFFORD, Fla. (AP) — Luther Robinson stops in mid-sentence as the rumble of a passing citrus truck fills his clapboard house bordering busy U.S. 1.

"Does this look like paradise?" asks Robinson, waving off exhaust fumes.

This is Gifford, a dusty, honky-tonk town that is so poor, its 6,500 residents were unable to incorporate last year. Their state representatives said it had too small a tax base to support any administrators. Neighboring cities have declined to annex Gifford, saying it would only burden their city governments.

Robinson put down his plow in South Carolina during the Depression, when he heard relatives and travelers whisper of a special town in Florida — a peaceful community where blacks would be free from Old South prejudice, a town owned and run by blacks.

Gifford — born as a camp for workers on the wild, mid-state section of the Florida East Coast Railway at the turn of the century — became Robinson's vision of the promised land.

Hope led Robinson, now 75, and hundreds of other farmers and workers to move to the nondescript nub on the mosquito-laden Indian River along Florida's mid-Atlantic Coast.

"We heard Gifford was good, that the waters were filled with fish, fruit fell to the ground, and that blacks could live peacefully," Robinson recalls.

But the town's promise has gone unfilled, says the bald, big-knuckled man.

Money woes interfered with the plans for the special town, and residents slowly took seasonal jobs in the mixed neighboring community. Some cut sugar cane. Others took jobs picking citrus. Many became domestic workers.

Meanwhile, the town followed an uneven course while trying to hold a special civic spirit, says Robinson, a resident for 52 years.

In 1981, neighboring Vero Beach — a town as old as Gifford — declined to annex the town, saying that the municipal services Gifford required would tax its citizens too heavily.

A year later, the only thing Gifford has to show for its efforts is street lighting for about one-third of the community, costing users $1 a month. The lights cast an eerie shine on delapidated huts hiked a foot off the ground by mortar blocks.

Indoor plumbing is unavailable in a quarter of the homes, and many streets remain unpaved. Only half the homes have electricity. There is only an auxiliary postal office.

And the town must rely on Vero Beach for a hospital, police and fire protection. Last year, Gifford was linked to a sewer plant in Vero Beach.

In exchange for the votes, politicians promised jobs, paved roads, electricity and other services cities customarily are given, says Jennings.

Vero Beach, a prosperous town of some 18,000, borders Gifford. It, too, sprouted at the turn of the century as a winter resort and packing house for the citrus industry.

Today, Vero Beach is the spring training camp for the Los Angeles Dodgers and has attracted such businesses as Piper Aircraft Corp. Along the north shore, $1 million homes are common.

Most homes in Gifford don't appear on local tax rolls because they are valued below the $25,000 state Homestead Tax exemption status.

Vero Beach claims as its own U.S. Secretary of the Treasury Don Regan.

Gifford's last claim to fame was Tyrone McGriff, now an offensive lineman for the Pittsburgh Steelers. But McGriff no longer lives in Gifford.

"The good always leave," says Jennings. "What's to keep them here?"

Of Vero's residents, only 54 — or one in 300 — are black, the Indian River County Supervisor of Elections' office reports. In Gifford, the county's second-largest town, only some three dozen are white.

Race is not the problem, Jennings said.

Still, Gifford has little to show for what started as a vision of a better life for blacks, says Robinson.

"Dreams die hard," he says.

DEAR ABBY

How to live with cancer

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Some time ago you published something that helped me tremendously when I learned that I had cancer. Please, please run it again. It's advice to patients on how to live with a terminal illness.

I showed it to my doctor, and he thought so much of it, he had copies run off to give to some of his patients. Thank you. — D.J. IN IOWA

DEAR D.J.: It's "How to Live With Illness" by Orville Kelly:

1. Talk about the illness. If it's cancer, call it cancer. You can't make life normal again by trying to hide what is wrong.
2. Accept death as a part of life. It is!
3. Consider each day as another day of life, a gift from God to be enjoyed as fully as possible.
4. Realize that life is never going to be perfect. It wasn't before, and it won't be now.
5. Pray! It isn't a sign of weakness, it's a sign of strength.
6. Learn to live with your illness instead of considering yourself dying from it. We are all dying in some manner.
7. Put your friends and relatives at ease. If you don't want pity, don't ask for it.
8. Make all practical arrangements for funerals, wills, etc., and make certain your family understands them.
9. Set new goals, realize your limitations. Sometimes the simple things of life become the most enjoyable.
10. Discuss your problems with your family. Include the children if possible. After all, your problem is not an individual one.

Have a good day ... make it count.

DEAR ABBY: I am a nice-looking, 28-year-old divorced woman. I have no trouble getting dates, but my problem is that every man I date runs to the nearest exit when I tell him I have three kids.

I do not hide the fact that I have three children. My oldest is 9 and my youngest is 2. They are well-behaved and well-mannered and I am not ashamed of them. In fact, I am proud of them.

The last four men I dated seemed interested in me — until I told them I had three children. After that I never heard from them again. I haven't dated anyone in nine months because I don't want to be hurt again.

What can a mother who loves her children do? — NOT DATING

DEAR NOT DATING: Look into Parents Without Partners. You will meet other single parents who also love their children. Don't waste your time worrying about those who ran for the nearest exit when they learned you had three kids. Too bad they weren't aware that some of the best deals are "package deals." It's their loss.

CONFIDENTIAL TO CHARLIE IN WILMINGTON, DEL.: Samuel Johnson said, "Every animal revenges his pains upon those who happen to be near." Man is no exception.

More women entering into male-dominated fields

STAMFORD, Conn. (AP) — Women have made substantial inroads into male-dominated fields, such as service and sales, in the past 10 years, according to a study compiled by a maker of office and postal equipment.

In 1972, 99.9 percent of all Pitney Bowes sales representatives were men. Today, women compose close to one-fifth of the sales force.

Service and repairing office machinery was then a solely male field, but women now account for 8 percent of the force. While most administrative employees are female, the percentage of men in that area has jumped from 6 percent in 1972 to 15 percent today.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

'Bootleg Beans' barbecue

DEAR HELOISE:

Please reprint your recipe for "Bootleg Beans." With the summer here, I would love to have this recipe for outdoor barbecues. Unfortunately, I've misplaced my copy. Thank you. — Ann Walter

+ + +

These yummy beans are hard to beat for cookouts and are so simple to prepare. Just dice three strips of bacon and fry them until about half done, then add a chopped small onion.

When the onion is slightly browned pour off most of the grease and add one can of pork and beans one tablespoon brown sugar two tablespoons vinegar and two tablespoons catsup stir well and cover.

Let this simmer for 30 to 45 minutes or bake slowly at 300F for a couple of hours.

Scrumptious! — Heloise

LETTER OF THOUGHT

Dear Heloise: Be good to yourself in constructive ways and enjoy life...

You're just as important as anyone else! — Marie Adams

CUSTOM COOKBOOK

Dear Heloise: I've made myself the best cookbook in the world. So can you... just buy a standard, three-ring notebook and a supply of notebook paper.

When copying any recipe, use the notebook paper, then file it, alphabetically or by category, into the ring binder.

If you clip a recipe from a magazine, tape it to the notebook paper and put it in the proper spot in the notebook.

Sure beats sorting all those scraps of paper in a drawer or box, looking for the recipe So-and-so gave you.

Also beats those 3x5 recipe cards. In my opinion, they're never large enough for most recipes. — Sharon Brandenburg

COUPONING TIP

Dear Heloise: I'm into couponing and refunding so I invested in a supply of those gummed address labels to use in mailing away the forms.

These labels fit on most refund forms. Besides cutting down on writer's cramp, they also cut down on processing errors. — Sharon

DOOR STOP

Dear Heloise: To make a handy, and quite pretty doorstop, take a brick or even a rock and cover it with a piece of material that coordinates with the room where it will be placed.

If you like, the brick or rock may be padded with foam rubber or other soft material before covering. — Mrs. Patterson

ROCK SALT HOLDER

Dear Heloise: Our family stores rock salt in an empty gallon plastic milk jug. One jug will hold a ten-pound bag of salt.

Makes it so easy to pour the salt into the ice cream freezer in the good old summertime, and to shake salt on the driveway in icy weather. — S.B.

If they can't get forecast correct...

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — A naturally occurring radioisotope may reveal ancient shifts in climate, University of Rochester researchers say.

Using ultra-sensitive techniques in rare-element detection, developed at the university's Nuclear Structure Research Laboratory, the researchers discovered an association between high levels of beryllium-10 and the "mini-ice-age" of the 17th century.

The isotope was measured in sediment, deposited in the late 1600s, from a lake near Syracuse, N.Y. Because the lake's waters have remained unmixed for centuries, its sediment layers, like tree rings, record each passing year.

The discovery suggests that by measuring the isotope in glacial ice cores, scientists may be able to trace climatic changes occurring thousands of years ago.

Pig shark

The young of the pig shark are packaged in an auger-like capsule. The female carefully deposits them in rocky crevices, and they are so protected from predators that scientists have to literally "unscrew" them for collection. The embryo is nurtured from a yolk sac for about a year.

Mentally ill may be hurt by cuts in medical aid

By ELAINE WARREN
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — It hasn't been easy for Mary Hughes. Her son Mat was 12 when she first noticed something was wrong. Mat seemed angry and hostile much of the time. He couldn't sleep at night. He spent hours staring at the walls.

Mat was diagnosed as paranoid-schizophrenic and began shuffling in and out of mental hospitals. The Hughes family poured its money into private therapy for their son and within two years filed for bankruptcy. They moved from Michigan to California, where Mat began showing signs of improvement.

He was 21 and living on his own, planning to go back and get his high school diploma. Then, three months ago, he died in a bizarre accident.

Hughes' life may be profoundly different now, but she says she will never change her active role in the advocacy network of kin of the chronically mentally ill — a movement begun in the last five years to provide support among family members and monitor state and federal legislation affecting their cause.

"I always was vocal about his illness because I wasn't ashamed of it," says Hughes. "A lot of people who have this problem in their family won't talk about it. The stigma that accompanies this illness is outrageous."

Following the "de-institutionalization" movement that began in the '60s with the widespread use of psychotropic drugs that suppress symptoms, mental patients now are more likely to be living at home or in board-and-care homes. As a result, family life can suffer greatly. And families are forming support groups, sharing their problems with each other and bringing their plight to public attention.

These advocacy groups focus much of their attention on President Reagan's social services slashes, which families of the mentally ill say will make an already bad situation worse.

Typically, parents say, they see their life savings depleted by expensive private medical care, only to discover that it hasn't done much good anyway. Medical insurance is usually inadequate; once private resources are gone, most families fall back on federal funding. This buys little more than what parents term "custodial care," provided by state institutions until patients are considered "well" enough to be released.

Their children become double victims: of mental illness and the revolving door syndrome. And parents become victims of their own children.

"We were never going to abandon our kid," Don Richardson says of his 24-year-old son, Bill, diagnosed as a paranoid-schizophrenic and manic-depressive. "We were going to do everything we could — until he almost drove us crazy."

Richardson's son has been hospitalized 20 times within the past six years. He was an excellent athlete and a better-than-average student until high school, when a strange pattern developed. He'd work hard to make the basketball team, get accepted, do well at practice. Then before the first game, he'd sprain his ankle or hurt his leg and be unable to play. It would happen again with the football team.

Full-blown symptoms developed: days without sleep, talking back to "voices," dashing outside in the middle of the night to chase the voices, tearing the radio apart because it was wired to his mind. At one point he took an axe and demolished his bedroom.

"We cried a lot, especially when we saw him being taken in an ambulance, completely shackled, with three police cars. Our hearts were broken."

Patriotism found in Frisbees, potato salad

By ERMA BOMBECK

The American people do something better than anyone in the world. They love their country.

A walloping 80 percent admitted this in a recent Gallup poll. That's pretty amazing when you realize that patriotism is a lot like sex to people. It's too personal to talk about in public or to flaunt on a bumper sticker.

Patriotism is also hard to diagnose. Most people don't realize they've got it.

Some people look at the Statue of Liberty and cannot speak. Others look at the flag on the side of the Space Shuttle and tears begin to well in their eyes. Occasionally, people will find themselves sitting a little taller when an athlete bends down to receive an Olympics medal and the massive United States flag unfurls behind him. Or the throat may hurt when a hostage from Iran puts his hand over his heart and salutes a flag he has not seen for 14 months.

These may seem like flu symptoms. It's patriotism.

Sometimes you travel with patriotism and don't know it. Like the Russian who said to me, "I've never been to the United States. What are the borders like?"

I told her there were no border patrols or checkpoints or walls to go through between the states. All 50 were open and free with only an amused California trooper who watches you eat three oranges and four bananas which you can't bring into California.

Or the Australian woman who cornered me on a book tour and said, "Tell me how far the American women are now in their struggle for liberation so that we will know where we'll be 25 years from now."

I thought the flush was menopausal. It was patriotism.

You have to love a nation that celebrates its independence every July 4, not with a parade of guns, tanks and soldiers who file by the White House in a show of strength and muscle, but by family picnics where kids throw Frisbees, the potato salad gets iffy, and the flies die from happiness.

You may think you've overeaten, but it's patriotism.

Single solution to quit smoking habit

By JOHN GUERNSEY
The Oregonian

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Some people can snap their fingers, grit their teeth and quit smoking overnight. Others write their quit-smoking resolutions in blood, grind their teeth until their gums bleed, but never quite kick the habit.

Rich's Cigar Store in downtown Portland offers just the crutch for those who don't quite make it, but at the same time don't want to become known around the office as moochers. The store has a little box on the counter, from which smokers who are cutting down can buy one cigarette at a time for five cents each.

Scott Henderson works the cash register and guesses that the store sells between 100 and 150 cigarettes daily out of the singles box.

"But it's not just people trying to quit or cut down on smoking who buy them," Henderson said. "Some people don't have the money for a full pack, so they buy 'em one at a time. Others just want a cigarette occasionally and don't want to be bothered with a full pack. One fellow comes in every night and buys two cigarettes."

Store operator Tom Moran explains that the store started selling cigarettes one at a time about eight months ago. But the move wasn't made to accommodate near-quitters and those without the price of a full pack.

"We got overstocked on the generics and figured we might move a few selling them one at a time," Moran said.

The gimmick caught on, and the number of customers buying one cigarette at a time continues to increase.

By ANNETTE M. JORDAN
Asheboro Courier-Tribune

ASHEBORO, N.C. (AP) — Well, it had to happen.

First they seemingly invaded every empty building in the city, hid out in theater lobbies and even managed to find their way to home-television screens.

Now video machines — those light-flashing, laser-blasting games that are all the rage with young people — have invaded a nursing home.

"I think we're the first in the state, maybe the country, to have them. This is the only one in any of the nursing homes as far as I know," said Faye Bullard, president of the Resident Council at the Brian Center of Nursing Care.

They're also probably the first to have a jukebox and a pinball machine, she said.

As she wheeled by, another resident stopped her for a moment. "Where are you going?"

"I'm going to play that pinball machine again," Mrs. Bullard laughed, bringing a grin to the other resident's face. Happily, the resident began wheeling after her in the general direction of the activities room.

There, Space Invaders, one of the biggest hits in video games before Pac Man took over, awaited — with a pinball machine on one side and a jukebox in the corner.

The machines were donated recently by Worth Heath, owner and proprietor of Heath Cigarette and Music Service in Randleman. Heath said he had donated them in honor of his mother, Mary Allred, who had lived at the Asheboro facility for 18 months until her death.

"I'd been thinking about it for some time. My mother was here, and they did such a good job looking after her ... and I thought the old people would enjoy something like that," Heath said.

Kerman Baker, a resident at the center, sure did. Especially the pinball machine.

Pressing the flippers several times, Baker waited impatiently for the silver ball to get within range. Lights flashed, bells rang and Baker laughed. But the ball once more got past.

Another resident, Mildred Shaw, rolled by, looked at the electronic creatures firing at one another, and rolled away shaking her head.

Westinghouse Electric faces major nuclear negligence suits

By RICHARD T. PIENCIAK

NEW YORK (AP) — In lawsuits that could result in damages of $1 billion, Westinghouse Electric Corp., manufacturer of nearly half of the nation's operating nuclear plants, is accused of negligently designing, manufacturing and installing reactors in New York and Florida.

The civil complaints filed in federal courts by Consolidated Edison here and Florida Power & Light Co. in Miami demand that Westinghouse pay for faulty steam generator systems that have frequently led to lengthy shutdowns and costly purchases of replacement power.

If Westinghouse is forced to pay, it could mean a break for rate-paying consumers who would be stuck for the repairs in the form of higher utility bills.

The suits "may put pressure" on other dissatisfied nuclear utilities to sue reactor manufacturers rather than applying for rate increases to finance equipment repairs, said Alvin Davis, who successfully represented Florida Power in two other suits against Westinghouse.

Westinghouse has built 32 of the nation's 72 nuclear power plants. Forty-seven plants use pressurized water reactors and the remainder are boiling water reactors, which do not have steam generator tubes.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission said in February that steam generator tube problems exist in 40 of the 47 pressurized water reactors. NRC records indicate Westinghouse built 25 of them.

According to a 1981 NRC report, the generator problems were caused by faulty design and construction as well as the use of poor quality materials.

John Burk, a Westinghouse spokesman in Pittsburgh, said, "We believe we have substantial defenses to the claims. We're obviously not counting on losing."

The suits allege negligence and breaches of contract and warranty in the defective design, manufacture and installation of steam generators at the two Turkey Point units, 30 miles south of Miami, and at Con Edison's Indian Point 2 unit, 24 miles north of New York City.

Con Edison also alleges that Westinghouse kept secret the results of 1975 tests that "revealed evidence of dented tubes and structural deterioration" for 18 months, and when specifically asked by Con Edison in March 1976, denied it was aware of any evidence of denting.

That concealment allowed the tubes and their support plates to corrode, enlarge and crack to the point where they became difficult to fix.

Filed May 28 without public announcement, the Indian Point action also claims defects in its four steam turbines and alleges that 60 other plant parts were "improperly designed, manufactured and installed," including low pressure turbine blades, condenser tubes, piping and circulating water pumps.

Con Edison and Florida Power, whose suit has been bogged down since it was filed in 1978, claim that by its negligence Westinghouse had forfeited its contractual liability limitations for "consequential damages," such as the cost of replacement power.

Westinghouse could lose about $600 million solely on the negligence issue since it takes at least nine months to replace generators at such units, with replacement power costing from $600,000 to $800,000 per day, per unit.

The defense will focus on whether the utilities operated the units properly.

The nation's second largest electrical products company, Westinghouse is still paying off part of a 1979 settlement for $949 million in cash, goods, discounts and services for reneging on uranium contracts with 27 utilities, including Con Edison and Florida Power.

Westinghouse refused to deliver on its long-term contracts after prices shot up from $10 a pound to $40. The settlements were reached after Westinghouse was found liable but before a separate $2 billion damages trial began.

In the past three years, Westinghouse, with 1981 assets of $8.3 billion, has made multi-million dollar out-of-court settlements of cash and discounted services in steam generators disputes with Virgina and Wisconsin utilities.

It also agreed last year to provide discounts on new equipment to settle a turbine dispute with the New York State Power Authority, which operates Indian Point 3, presently shut because of generator leaks and cracks.

While the suit "spells out the ways in which various plant components are defective or failed to operate properly, in no way does it imply that the plant is unsafe or that it poses any risk to the public or to Con Edison employees," said spokesman Laurence V. Kleinman.

Why Western Europe wants the Soviet pipeline

By SUSAN J. SMITH

BONN, West Germany (AP) — For more than a week, Western Europe has criticized the United States for still trying to delay construction of a Soviet pipeline that offers three things Europeans want — more jobs, more trade with the Soviet Union and more natural gas.

The way Europeans see it, American efforts to delay the pipeline to Western Europe won't hurt the Soviets but could throw thousands of people in Italy, West Germany and Great Britain out of work.

European officials say that if they respect the American equipment and technology embargo, they could wreck future trade relationships with the Soviets.

"What there should not be and what there will not be ... is a trade war with the Soviet Union with which a new epoch of the Cold War could be introduced," Chancellor Helmut Schmidt said last week in reiterating that Europe will proceed with the project.

Schmidt spoke after President Reagan announced he was extending a ban on U.S. technology for the planned pipeline, which is expected to deliver some 21 billion cubic meters of gas to Western Europe when it begins operation in 1984. The American embargo was originally imposed to protest the Soviet-backed declaration of martial law in Poland last December.

The 3,400-mile pipeline will start in western Siberia, go through the Ukraine and Czechoslovakia and end at the West German-Czech border where it will feed into an existing pipeline network.

West Germany, France, Austria and Switzerland have contracted to buy the gas, and the Dutch and Italians are negotiating.

The Reagan administration has criticized the pipeline deal on the grounds that it would make Western Europe too dependent on Soviet energy resources and give the Russians more hard currency to purchase western technology.

The Soviets say that despite Reagan's embargo, the pipeline will be built. What western Europeans may lose, however, are other benefits that go with delivering pipeline parts to the Russians — jobs and good trade relations.

Reagan defended the ban at his press conference Wednesday, saying "we did what we thought should have been done to release the oppression of the people of Poland." He added, "We think there is a risk that they (western Europeans) become dependent on the Soveit Union for energy."

In Italy alone, 6,000 to 7,000 jobs are affected. The Italian firm of Nuovo Pignone, a unit of the state energy conglomerate Nazionale Idrocarburi, has the largest contract in Europe for construction on the pipeline.

The company, which gets its parts from the American giant General Electric, will lose a $470 million contract to assemble 59 gas turbines if it goes along with the U.S. embargo. A decision has not yet been made.

"The company has other contracts. But without a doubt, this one is a very big one and there's some concern," a company spokesman said.

In West Germany, Reagan's decision has hurt AEG Telefunken, which has been asking the government for help to ward off bankruptcy.

The firm's turbine-making subsidiary, AEG-Kanis, had a $270 million contract to supply 47 turbines to the Soviets, but the company's chief executive, Heiny Duerr, said last week that the deal would not go ahead because of Reagan's embargo.

Duerr said the existence of AEG-Kanis and its 1,200 employees were threatened by the embargo because the turbines contract had been about half of the company's current orders.

British companies hold contracts worth about $344 million for the pipeline. A spokesman for John Brown Engineering Ltd. in London said the company has a $178 million order to provide 21 gas turbines and other parts for the pipeline.

The contract was providing "life blood" for the firm and hundreds of jobs would be at risk if it was canceled, he said.

Like the Italian company, AEG-Kanis and John Brown contracted to supply turbines that are made with parts supplied by General Electric.

In the current issue of the West German magazine Stern, U.S. Assistant Secretary of Defense Fred C. Ikle said Europeans should be looking to buy gas from partners in the NATO alliance, not the Soviet Union.

"There are plenty of opportunities to get natural gas from countries in the alliance," such as Norway or Britain, Ikle said, instead of "Moscow, the opponent against which the NATO alliance is based."

To the Europeans, however, and particularly the West Germans, who look over their back fence at Soviet military might in East Germany, amicable trade with the Russians can foster better relations between East and West.

Only 1.9 percent of West Germany's exports currently go to the Soviets. Schmidt's government would like to increase those percentages.

"The federal government adheres to long-term economic exchange between East and West," Schmidt said earlier this year. "Economic cooperation is conducive to the development of reliable political relations and hence to stability."

Three to be sentenced in oil theft case

LONGVIEW, Texas (AP) — Three people convicted of engaging in organized crime by stealing thousands of gallons of crude oil from East Texas storage tanks could be sentenced today to life in prison.

Jurors deliberated four hours Wednesday before convicting the trio and acquitting two others in the case that stemmed from a Texas Railroad Commission investigation that began in 1979.

Jean Brown of Sapulpa, Okla., W.S. "Bull" Barber, and his son, Buddy Barber, both of Kilgore, were convicted.

John Wilcox of Sapulpa, Okla., and James Breaux of Lafayette, La. — two of the original seven defendants in the eight-day trial — were aquitted Tuesday after the prosecution and defense rested their cases.

Judge Marcus Vascocu ruled prosecutors had not presented sufficient evidence to convict the two men and granted a defense motion for instructed verdicts of acquittal.

Rex Houston, the attorney for the Barbers, said he was surprised at the jury's verdict Wednesday and would appeal the convictions.

Ten people were originally indicted by a grand jury, but three were separated into individual cases that will come to trial at a later date.

The prosecution rested its case Tuesday without the testimony of a key witness who was granted immunity from prosecution in exchange for his testimony.

Special Prosecutor Chuck Campbell had said that the state could not prove its case without the testimony of Garvin Richardson, who refused to testify and was jailed last week by Vascocu.

The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals ordered Richardson released Friday, and then on Monday delayed a ruling on Richardson's case until July 7.

Prosecutors relied on the testimony of two men offered money to aid the string of thefts from storage tanks.

A Texas Railroad Commission employee said he was offered $1 a barrel for every barrel of oil stolen from an East Texas field if he would disclose the location of law enforcement patrols to defendant Buddy Barber. And an oil field pumper testified that he was paid $2 for every barrel of oil stolen after he left a security gate unlocked on specified nights.

Texas Railroad Commission technician Clint Garner said Barber told him his information could bring him "at least $5,000" a month.

Garner said Barber explained, "We have got to move hot oil out of the East Texas field."

Garner said Richardson arranged the meeting between the two.

Chamber introduces campaign

Assure Midland's economic and cultural position in the 1980s by bringing your association's next convention to the Tall City, and you will become the owner of a pair of numbered Nocona boots specially imprinted with a new Midland logo.

That's the message from the Chamber of Commerce Convention and Visitors Bureau, which today begins a month-long community awareness campaign called "Show Off Midland!"

The goal of the campaign is to make Midlanders aware of the impact of convention business to the city's economy, said Convention and Visitors Bureau director Dode Devore.

Midland mayor Thane Akins has declared July "Convention Contact Month." Campaign leaders will be speaking to various civic and professional clubs during the month to urge them to help bring conventions to Midland.

Anyone who helps bring a convention of at least 100 people to Midland will receive a pair of Nocona boots customized with a new Midland convention logo, Devore said. Akins has been given the first pair.

Promotional advertising and public service announcements are also part of the effort.

"Conventions generated over $3 million in Midland last year," Devore said. "There were 52 conventions with about 14,000 delegates from out of town. And, convention business employs more than 1,000 people through hotels, restaurants and other businesses directly related to conventions."

Only conventions of at least 50 delegates, all from out of town, are counted, she added. Local meetings where the majority of the attendees are from Midland aren't included in these statistics.

Devore said Midland is especially suited for conventions because of good transporation links with the rest of the state. In addition, there are almost 1,600 hotel rooms available, with 500 more projected to be ready by 1984.

She cited several local attractions as another plus for the city: the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, Museum of the Southwest, golf, tennis and polo facilities, and the unique qualities of West Texas.

"People are really eager to find out what Midland is all about. They've heard so much about it," said Devore, who travels regularly around the state to promote the city. "They are eager to come to West Texas — they're kind of tired of Dallas and Houston."

The "Show Off Midland!" campaign will conclude with a July 21 reception for all civic and professional club leaders. Convention Committee members will meet with each of these leaders to stress the importance of convention business and the need for local support.

Why does paying taxes have to be complicated?

By CHET CURRIER

NEW YORK (AP) — Taxes may be inevitable, but does the job of paying them have to be so complicated?

That's the question raised lately by some legislators, both liberal and conservative. They have proposed that the country switch to a greatly simplified "flat-rate" tax system, eliminating all or nearly all of the present deductions, credits and alternative methods of computation.

Prototypes have been drawn up of one-page tax forms, containing only a few lines to be filled in each year. The tax due would be a fixed percentage of one's gross income, whether that income was $10,000 or $10 million.

Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., announced a few weeks ago that the Senate Finance Committee, of which he is chairman, would hold hearings on the subject later this year.

Dole was quick to point out that such a drastic change would require a lot of study. However, he said, "a low tax rate on a broad base of economic income is an intriguing idea and has some merit."

It does indeed sound intriguing — no more wrangling over loopholes, no more struggling over fat piles of records and forms each spring. No longer would millions of Americans, both rich and not-so-rich, have to weigh the tax implications of every financial decision they make.

But in the view of one tax expert — Lee Seidler, professor of accounting at New York University and a partner in the securities firm of Bear, Stearns & Co. — this vision is extremely unlikely to become reality.

Seidler noted that the idea has been proposed before — "usually on or about April 15." It has, he conceded, "a seductive appeal to those in high tax brackets who have just wrestled with the agonizing complexity of Form 1040 and the even greater torture of writing a large check payable to the Internal Revenue Service."

Nevertheless, Seidler said, "as in the past, it has no chance of being enacted."

The uniform tax rate that would be necessary to keep government revenues around their present levels is generally estimated at somewhere between 15 percent and 19 percent. "Its imposition would result in an increase in income taxes paid by many workers," Seidler pointed out.

"The number of taxpayers whose taxes would be increased would be much greater than those whose taxes would be decreased. In addition, the largest percent increases would fall on those in the lowest, indeed zero, tax brackets. Politically, this is impossible."

Well, then, what about a graduated system like the present one, but without all the deductions, additions, credits and so forth? The problem remains, said Seidler, that "it is virtually impossible to simplify without raising someone's tax bill."

He also observed: "Consider the impacts on municipalities, local education and the housing industry of the elimination of deductions for real estate taxes and interest on home mortgages. Surely, an exception should be made in these cases."

Furthermore, he said, would the country be willing to eliminate medical deductions designed to lighten the financial burden on the seriously ill, or the casualty loss deduction for those struck by catastrophe?

And what would happen to charitable institutions and colleges if contributions to them were no longer deductible?

"The point is clear," Seidler concluded. "The complexity of the present Internal Revenue Code results not merely from the desire of the legislators to maintain the high income levels of tax lawyers and accountants. Rather, it is the result of a long-term, conscious effort to place some measure of equity as the huge tax burden is imposed.

"This effort frequently fails, but the sledgehammer approach of a flat tax rate cannot be a substitute."

Signs of economic recovery increase

By The Associated Press

The federal government today begins pumping nearly $1 billion a week into the economy, trying to trigger a boom in consumer spending and savings to lift the nation out of recession.

A 10 percent cut in personal income tax rates goes into effect, accompanied by a 7.4 percent increase in Social Security benefits.

It "marks the beginning of brighter days for everyone who works and makes our economy go," President Reagan said Wednesday night at the start of his nationally broadcast news conference.

The tax cut for a typical married worker with two children and earnings of just over $24,000 a year will be about $6 a week.

But the AFL-CIO said most families will pay more taxes this year than in 1980 because of inflation, higher Social Security taxes and increases in state and local taxes.

Meanwhile, two Commerce Department reports Wednesday indicated that a recovery may be near. The department said its broad gauge of economic activity, the Index of Leading Indicators, rose in May for the third straight month, and factory orders were up 1.5 percent following a 2.3 percent decline in April.

The figures mean "the recession is bottoming out," said Robert Ortner, chief economist for the Commerce Department.

The leading indicators rose 0.3 percent in May after a 1.3 percent rise in April and a revised report of a 0.2 percent gain in March.

Shipments of manufactured goods jumped 2.6 percent in May, the largest one-month gain since October 1980, while the value of inventories of unsold goods fell 1 percent, the department said. Falling inventories encourage stepped-up production and the recall of idled workers.

Private economists wonder, however, whether there can be a strong recovery as long as interest rates remain high. Expectations are that heavy Treasury borrowing to finance record federal deficits combined with a restrictive monetary policy by the Federal Reserve Board will contribute to keeping interest rates high.

The Fed's policy-making arm, the Federal Open Market Committee, meets in Washington today to map policy for the rest of 1982 and to make tentative plans for its 1983 monetary stance. Its decisions will be disclosed later this month when Federal Reserve Board Chairman Paul Volcker appears before Congress.

There was encouraging news on inflation Wednesday in an Agriculture Department report that prices farmers received for raw products dropped 0.7 percent in June following a 3 percent increase in May. It was the first monthly decline this year.

In a related report, department economists said food prices are expected to rise an average 5 percent to 6 percent this year, down from 7.9 percent last year and the smallest increase since the 3.1 percent of 1976.

14 indicted in computer case

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A federal grand jury has indicted Hitachi Ltd. of Japan and 14 people for conspiring to transport stolen IBM computer designs, charges the electronics giant promptly denied today in a statement from Tokyo.

The indictments issued Wednesday marked the first time charges in the industrial espionage case were leveled against the Japanese company.

In Tokyo, Hitachi responded in a statement saying: "Hitachi strongly believes that it and its indicted employees have not engaged in any illegal activities and that this will become clear in due course."

Hitachi said it has hired three New York-based lawyers: Peter E. Fleming Jr., who successfully defended former Attorney General John Mitchell against charges of obstruction of justice in 1974, Simon H. Rifkind and Arthur L. Liman.

Company spokesman Manabu Kuwae refused to say whether Hitachi would send its indicted employees in Tokyo to the United States to face charges.

The federal grand jury, in a separate indictment, also charged three others with transporting and receiving stolen property. One of those was a Californian not previously linked with the case, bringing to 22 the number of people believed involved in a seven-month scheme to obtain confidential tapes, designs and documents on IBM computers.

GM investingating Camaro fuel tank problems

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Corp. is recalling about 10,000 new Camaro Z-28 models because of water leaks into the engine that could stall the vehicle or cause engine damage.

Ralph Kramer, a Chevrolet Division spokesman, said Wednesday letters were sent to Z-28 owners starting about three weeks ago and that dealers are receiving new air systems to solve the problem.

The recall, which was not publicized, involves cars built in January through March at GM assembly plants in Norwood, Ohio, and Van Nuys, Calif. The recalled cars are equipped with an optional high-performance, 305-cubic-inch V-8 cross-fire engine.

Under certain conditions, water can leak into the air breather system through louvers in the hood designed to let in air, GM said.

It also was disclosed Wednesday that GM has received about 20 complaints from owners of the popular 1982 Camaro Z-28s about high-pressure buildup in fuel tanks. In one one case, the fuel cap flew 25 feet.

"The complaints have been related to hot-weather driving," Chevrolet division spokesman James Williams said Wednesday. "The bulk of the complaints have been out of the Southeast and Southwest."

Mike Beaver, a Dallas resident who owns a 2-month-old Camaro Z-28, said about four gallons of gasoline spewed onto him, the car and another vehicle three parking spaces away June 24 as he unscrewed the auto's fuel cap, which flew 25 feet into the air.

He was investigating a whistling sound coming from the rear of the car at the time, he said.

"I'm not going to drive the car," Beaver said. "I feel like somebody's going to get hurt."

Williams said, however, that "as far as we're concerned the cars are safe to drive."

He added that the whistling noise, which Beaver said he had heard for the past month, indicated the fuel tank vent valves were working to relieve the pressure.

"When it whistles, the fuel cap should not be removed," he said, adding that fuel expands naturally in all gas tanks in hot weather.

"We're reviewing the complaints and possible revisions to the vent valves," he said. "We're trying to determine the extent of the complaints."

Investigation of the problem should take about a week, he added.

Dave Bianchi, area service manager in the Dallas zone office of Chevrolet, says heat from the car's exhaust system, near the gasoline tank, or certain kinds of gasoline might cause the pressure buildup.

It also might stem from naturally higher pressure in the fuel injection system used in the optional high-performance, 305-cubic-inch V-8 engine, said Ralph Kramer, a Chevrolet spokesman.

Bruce MacDonald, spokesman at GM's Pontiac division, which markets a sister car to the Z-28 — a Firebird Trans AM with a V-8 engine — said there have been no complaints about Firebird fuel pressure buildup.

The Z-28, with a base sticker price of about $9,700, is the most expensive Camaro model. The low-slung, sporty Camaro was redesigned and the current model was introduced in January.

It has been a hot seller, with dealers saying they can hardly keep them in stock. About 40,000 Z-28s have been sold, Williams said.

By PETER OSNOS
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

LONDON — Britain's Trade Ministry took formal steps Wednesday to prepare a challenge to the U.S. restrictions on sales of equipment for the Siberia-Western Europe pipeline.

The ministry issued an order under the Protection of Trading Interests Act of 1980, asserting that the U.S. move was damaging to British trading interests. This enables Britain to take whatever legal steps are available to overturn the embargo.

The ministry said such measures might be taken if all other efforts at persuasion were to fail.

British officials also said Wednesday that the Thatcher government believes an unnecessary crisis over economic issues has erupted between the United States and Europe, and is urging the United States to reassess decisions that could have serious political consequences on the Western alliance.

PRIME MINISTER Margaret Thatcher shares the unhappiness of other European leaders over the Reagan administration's decision to extend restrictions on equipment for a Soviet natural gas pipeline and impose additional tariffs on steel imported from European Economic Community countries. But Thatcher, unlike many of the others, believes she can still prevail on Reagan to revise the policies and hopes to play a mediating role, sources said.

The prime minister, they said, believes a "crisis of European confidence" in the United States has developed since June's economic summit at Versailles and the subsequent announcement of American trade restrictions. They added that Washington would make a serious mistake in underestimating the scale of the difficulties merely because similar problems with Europe — especially over dealings with the Soviets — have emerged before.

This British view was instrumental in toning down an angry denunciation of the United States sponsored mainly by the French at the meeting of community leaders that ended in Brussels Tuesday. Thatcher told the others that such a "declaration of economic war" would be counterproductive, her aides said. The final version expressed concern over U.S. moves, but stopped short of vilification.

Britain's determination to play a role in resolving the latest flareup in alliance ties seems to reflect Thatcher's enhanced self-confidence following British successes in the Falkland Islands war with Argentina.

"She has shown her commitment to principle," one official said, "which should give her credibility in explaining the European dilemma to someone like Ronald Reagan."

THATCHER RAISED the pipeline issue with Reagan when she met him in Washingon last week. A British firm, John Brown Ltd., has a contract worth almost $200 million to make turbines, in part using equipment made by a General Electric subsidiary. Under the U.S. sanctions, the British company would be unable to fulfill the contract.

Thatcher's position, and that of other Europeans, is that sanctions should not be extended to existing pipeline contracts because of the potentially serious damage on companies holding the contracts. Moreover, many of these companies are arguably beyond the reach of U.S. regulations, but were affected nonetheless because of restrictions on the use of American technology.

On steel, the proposed U.S. tariffs on community imports would deal a severe blow to a British steel industry already in severe recession. Britain's trade minister, Peter Rees, is in Washington to make the case again that steel curbs, in addition to the pipeline equipment embargo, could lead to retaliatory action by the Europeans against American goods.

But the burden of Thatcher's arguments to the Reagan administration, as conveyed personally last week and repeatedly through British diplomatic channels, is, in the words of one official: "Punishment that you give the Soviets with the pipeline sanctions loses its purpose if it is so unacceptable to American allies."

British officials believe that as a result of Anglo-American cooperation during the Falklands crisis, a special rapport between Thatcher and Reagan was forged. Although the United States now would prefer to see Britain open negotiations with Argentina on sovereignty of the islands, officials here believe that a measure of "wartime" solidarity still exists between Washington and London.

AS THE BRITISH see it, the departure of Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. removes the staunchest advocate for the European position from the administration, but also should ease some of the controversy from the debates over issues like the pipeline in Washington. Officials here hope Reagan can be persuaded that it is worth reversing all or part of the new pipeline restrictions to bolster the alliance and that Thatcher, who basically shares the president's hard-line view on the Soviets, can make the case best.

In reporting to Parliament on her talks with Reagan, Thatcher said she agreed with the president, on "the need for ... progress" toward liberalization of the martial law government in Poland — which the pipeline sanctions are intended to encourage — "while reiterating the reasons why we thought existing commercial contracts should be exempted."

At least part of Thatcher's leverage with the president is undermined by Britain's continued adherence to a community policy that, in effect, provides credits at below market rates to British companies doing business with the Soviets. At Versailles, the United States pressed its allies to abolish such subsidies. British trade with the Soviets is relatively small, about 1.2 percent of the country's exports or roughly the same amount as trade with Finland.

Ford emission equipment problems cited

DETROIT (AP) — More than 1,400 current-model Ford Granadas and Mercury Cougars should be returned to dealers because incorrect parts were installed on emission-control equipment, Ford Motor Co. says.

In a statement Wednesday, the No. 2 U.S. automaker said 670 1982-model Granadas and Cougars with 2.3-liter engines may have the wrong type of temperature vacuum switch in the air cleaner.

Another 785 1982-model Granadas and Cougars with 3.8-liter engines have an incorrect thermactor air timer, Ford said.

In both cases, the cars' emissions could exceed federal regulations, Ford said, adding that the repairs will be done free of charge.

Public Notice

Southwestern Bell, in accordance with the rules of the Public Utility Commission of Texas, hereby gives notice of the company's intent to implement a new schedule of telephone rates in Texas, effective July 27, 1982, unless otherwise determined by the Commission.

It is expected that the requested rate schedule will furnish a 13.4 percent increase in the company's intrastate revenues.

A complete copy of the new rate schedule is on file with the Public Utility Commission at Austin, Texas, and with each affected municipality served by Southwestern Bell, and is available for inspection in each of the company's public business offices in Texas. The Commission staff has contended in the past that all rates are subject to change as a result of Southwestern Bell's rate application.

Notice to El Paso Area Customers

Effective January 1, 1982, Southwestern Bell adopted the Mountain States tariffs in effect for El Paso County. Southwestern Bell proposes to merge the separate El Paso tariffs with its tariffs applicable to the rest of Texas. The resulting new rate schedule is on file with the PUC and the El Paso area municipalities served by Southwestern Bell, and is available for inspection at our El Paso business office.

Notice to Customers of Other Telephone Companies

The filing includes, but is not limited to, proposals to increase rates for interexchange private line and foreign exchange (FX) service. Changes in such rates would also affect customers of other telephone companies because such companies provide interexchange private line and foreign exchange service in accordance with rates specified in Southwestern Bell's tariffs. While Southwestern Bell has proposed no increase in long distance rates, any change in those rates would also affect customers of other telephone companies.

Aviso Público

Southwestern Bell, en conformidad a las reglas del Public Utility Commission (Comisión de Servicios Públicos) de Texas, por la presente hace saber su intención de establecer un nuevo arancel para servicio de teléfono en Texas con vigencia a partir del 27 de julio, 1982, a menos que la Comisión haga otra determinación.

Se espera que el nuevo arancel que se ha solicitado rendirá un aumento de 13.4 por ciento en los ingresos intraestatales de la compañía.

Una copia completa del nuevo arancel se ha archivado en las oficinas del Public Utility Commission en Austin, Texas, al igual que en cada municipalidad afectada y servida por Southwestern Bell, y cada una de las oficinas de la compañía para negocios con el público en Texas tiene una copia para lectura pública. En el pasado, la Comisión ha sostenido que toda tarifa está sujeta a cambios que resulten de la manera en la cual Southwestern Bell aplique sus tarifas.

Aviso a Clientes en la Región de El Paso

Con vigencia a partir del 1o de enero de 1982, Southwestern Bell ha adoptado las tarifas de Mountain States efectivas en el condado de El Paso. Southwestern Bell propone unir las tarifas de El Paso con sus otras tarifas que se aplican al resto de Texas. El nuevo arancel que resulta de ésta union se ha archivado en la Comisión de Servicios Públicos (Public Utility Commission), al igual que en las municipalidades de la región de El Paso servidas por Southwestern Bell, y está disponible para inspección pública en nuestras oficinas de El Paso.

El registro incluye, pero no se limita a, propuestas para aumentar las tarifas para servicio de línea privada entre centrales telefónicas (interexchange private line) y servicio de central telefónica extranjera (foreign exchange FX). Cambios en dichas tarifas de servicio tambien afectarían a clientes de otras compañías de teléfono porque dichas compañías proveen los servicios ya mencionados en conformidad a tarifas especificadas por Southwestern Bell. Aunque Southwestern Bell no ha propuesto un aumento en las tarifas para larga distancia, cualquier cambio en las mismas tambien afectaría a los clientes de otras compañías de teléfono.

Midland loses as Greer slams

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

The last time an Amarillo pitcher went the distance was on May 22 in Shreeveport. Marty Kain collected that victory, 10-4, with the help of teammate Brian Greer who belted a grand slam home run.

If that game sounds familiar, then the result of Wednesday night's Amarillo-Midland game has gotten around. Kain went the distance, only the sixth time a Gold Sox pitcher has done so this season, for a 13-3 Texas League victory over the Cubs to claim a 7-5 record. And again, he got help from Greer who hit his 25th home run of the season in the first inning, his third of the year with the bases loaded.

"Tonight they jumped out to an early lead," said Cubs manager Brian Murphy. "Their pitcher did a good job. He kept the ball down and he got us to swing at some bad pitches. We were never in the game. He kept the ball away from us."

IT WAS also a case of history repeating for Carlos Gil. Amarillo jumped out to a 5-0 lead in the first inning when Midland Gil walked four of the first five batters he faced while managing to come up with only one out. George Hinshaw collected the fourth walk with the bases loaded to score the first Amarillo run and then Greer came to the plate to power his third grand slam of the year while snapping a 0-for-21 hitting slump that had plagued him in the second half of the Texas League race.

Murphy wasn't aware that Greer had come to the plate 21 times without a hit, but he knew how poorly the Amarillo outfielder had been hitting since he came into Midland.

"I don't doubt it," said Murphy about the slump, "but he's still scares me. If he was 0-for-50 he'd still scare me. He's got to come out of it sometime and he came out for one at-bat tonight."

After Greer's homer, Murphy pulled Gil for Tim Milner who found it just as hot on the mound. In 6⅔ innings of relief pitching, the hot-hitting Gold Sox collected 13 hits for six runs.

Two Amarillo runs in the second and third innings plus solo tallies in the fifth and seventh innings gave the Gold Sox a near-insurmountable 11-0 lead.

IN THE bottom of the seventh, the Cubs looked like they were going to start a rally when they came up with three straight extra-base hits. Fritz Connally opened the frame with his 19th home run of the season which cleared the left field fence and was followed by back-to-back doubles by Don Hyman, who came into the game in the fourth inning after Mike Diaz was hit with a foul tip and forced to leave the game, and Javier Fierro. Hyman scored on the second two-bagger and Fierro, who moved to third on Dave Owen's fly out to center field, scored on Bruce Chaney's single up the middle.

But the third run was the end of the offensive spurt and Kain allowed only one more hit the rest of the way to notch the victory.

Amarillo's Jeff Ronk upped the lead to 12-3 in the eighth with his seventh home run of the season and Jerry Davis made it 13-3 when his 14th home run cleared the fence in the ninth. Both homers came off the Cubs' third reliever of the night, Rob Blyth.

But, if it hadn't been for the three Midland runs in the bottom of the seventh, Blyth might never have given up the two pitches that cost him two runs on his ERA, for Murphy was considering sending shortstop Chaney to the mound to finish up the pitching chores and take part of the work load off of the bull pen.

"Chaney was going to pitch the last two innings," said Murphy, "but in the bottom of the seventh we got three runs and were down 11-3 and it looked like we could do something. We're down to eight pitchers and I wanted to save them by putting in Chaney in."

Dolphins cut suspected drug users

MIAMI (AP) — Several Miami Dolphins players were either cut from the team or traded following the 1976 season because they were suspected drug users, club owner Joe Robbie told a newspaper in a copyright story.

"We shipped some people out after the 1976 season," Robbie was quoted today in the Fort Lauderdale News and Sun Sentinel as saying in an interview Tuesday. "I'd never identify who they are because they might be totally rehabilitated by now."

Robbie's revelation is the latest alleging drug abuse among past or present National Football League players. Earlier, former Dolphin defensive lineman Don Reese claimed in a June 14 Sports Illustrated story that drug abuse was widespread in the NFL.

Robbie, however, referred to as "trash" Reese's claim that about half of the Dolphins used cocaine in small amounts, as "recreational doses."

Robbie said he was referring to players other than Reese and former teammate Randy Crowder, who were arrested and sent to the Dade County Stockade in 1977 for possession and conspiracy to sell cocaine.

In 1976, "there was a greater problem than Reese and Crowder," Robbie told the newspaper. "And I know the people involved and they weren't around for the 1977 season."

Asked how many players were cut or traded, Robbie said: "There were at least two or three directly involved and, among the others we suspected, there were another two or three. But they were not necessarily cocaine-sniffing cases."

Robbie correlated the Dolphins' 6-8 record in 1976 — Don Shula's only losing season since becominm Miami's head coach in 1970 — to drug use by players.

"There is a direct relationship, I feel, between drug addiction and lack of performance," Robbie said. "In the last couple of years, I haven't seen any indication of it, and the fine record of the team would indicate that there hasn't been."

Chris, Martina, Billie Jean, JoAnne hog spotlight on court and in press room

By WILL GRIMSLEY

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Wimbledon is a lady. She has to be. She wears basic green and garlands of roses in her hair. The whole world knows she loves strawberries and cream.

When she first came into being more than 100 years ago, she was an old lady then. They called her "The Old Lady of Walpole Street."

Apparently, the expansive green lawns of the All-England Lawn Tennis and Croquet Club ran alongside a thoroughfare called Walpole Street. Heaven knows where the street is now.

Now, Wimbledon, with its courts, moss-covered green stadium, museum and clubhouse structures run along Church Road. But nobody ever refers to this ancient playground for the world's best tennis players as "The Churlish Gentleman of Church Street."

If you've got to give a sex to neuter objects such as ships, you can't escape the fact that Wimbledon is feminine — never more feminine than this year, 1982.

PEOPLE FROM all the world — 750 overall, according to press chief Roy McKelvie — are here for the annual event, and who have they been straining their adjectives over? Billie Jean King, that's who. Billie Jean. And, Chris Evert Lloyd. And Martina Navratilova.

Not to mention a lass named JoAnne Russell who, while she's not going to take home any trophies, is delighting the press corps with her headline-catching interviews.

One day, she is talking about all the kooks who follow the ladies' tour, write letters and make obscene phone calls. The next day, she is telling how, in a city frozen by a transit strike, she has to lie down in the middle of a busy London street to hitchhike to the courts where she is late for her match.

All the raindrops that have fallen on Wimbledon the past 10 days are nothing more than tears shed by the heavens for the great men players who are not here — Bjorn Borg, the five-time winner who refused to qualify; Ivan Lendl, the Czech with the year's best tournament record, and such other such stars as Guillermo Vilas and Juan Louis Clerc of Argentina and American Davis Cupper Eliot Teltscher.

JOHN MCENROE, the erstwhile "Superbrat," is wandering around the premises, his arms loaded with rackets. So is Jimmy Connors, the pugilistic middleweight who missed his calling. Vitas Gerulaitis, better known for his Rolls Royce-disco lifestyle than his tennis triumphs, is staying alive in the absence of his idol, Borg, and some of the other Top Tenners.

But so far they have been merely bit players.

If it were a movie, the guys, even McEnroe and Connors, would be listed down in the credits under "also appearing were ..."

The redoubtable Billie Jean King has almost dominated the headlines since playing in her 100th match last week. As she continued stroking her way surprisingly past younger and higher seeded players in her bracket, attention on her has escalated.

ON WEDNESDAY, when she upset third-seeded Tracy Austin with a remarkable performance on Center Court, she had the attention of everyone.

Although McEnroe was playing on the adjacent No.1 court, most of the international journalistic corps deserted him to squeeze into the tight Center Court press pews.

Baylor aide for seven years

North Texas names Nelson

DENTON, Texas (AP) — Corky Nelson, defensive coordinator at Baylor for the past seven years, was named North Texas State's fourth football coach in five years today.

NTSU will split the head football coaching and athletic directorship, and the Eagles are still looking for an athletic director.

He also coached at Alamo Heights High School in San Antonio from 1965 to 1969.

At Baylor, Nelson was in charge of the defense for two Cotton Bowl teams, and he put together teams that had such standouts as All-American linebacker Mike Singletary on them.

Ironically, Nelson's first game as NTSU head coach will be against Baylor Sept. 4.

Newcombe denies 'alcohol' statement

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Don Newcombe denies saying there was "a very serious problem" concerning drug or alcohol abuse on the Los Angeles Dodgers. But the author of an article quoting the former pitching great as making the remark stands by his story.

Newcombe, the director of community relations for the Dodgers, was quoted in Wednesday's editions of the Santa Monica Evening Outlook as saying that between 70 and 80 percent of professional baseball players are presently using a "mind-altering substance."

NEWCOMBE ALSO was quoted in the newspaper as saying that there's "a very serious problem" on the Dodgers.

But at a hastily called news conference just before the Dodgers faced the San Diego Padres in a twi-night doubleheader Wednesday, Newcombe, a reformed alcoholic, issued his denial.

He also told reporters: "When I'm talking about mind-altering substances, I'm talking about alcohol; beer, champagne, wine. And when you get into the area of drugs, I'm talking about Valium, coke, marijuana. I'm not talking about heroin. The biggest problem in this country is alcohol."

Regarding his published comment about the Dodgers, Newcombe said: "If there is a problem, it needs to be dealt with and should not be swept under the rug. I never said there was a serious problem on the Dodger ballclub or in the Dodger organization."

However, when asked if he was misquoted, he replied, "No."

LEO NOONAN, who wrote the story, said: "I stand on that (Newcombe's comments) 100 percent. There was not anything taken out of context. I didn't tape the interview but I have his comments in my notes."

Noonan, the sports editor of the Evening Outlook and a newspaperman for 23 years, added, "There's no doubt he said what I printed, verbatim."

Noonan also wrote a story on how the California Angels deal with any similar problems.

"I was not digging for dirt," he said. "I was not digging for anything. The Angels have a very informal program and Buzzie (Bavasi, Angels executive vice president) said there is not a problem in baseball, there is not a problem on the Angels and there has never been a problem on any of the three clubs he has been associated with in 31 years."

Noonan said he had called Dodgers President Peter O'Malley in an effort to get comment on Newcombe's remarks, but said O'Malley, after listening to the former pitcher's quotes, declined comment.

Newcombe, 56, the chief Dodger executive in charge of an organization-wide search for abusers of drugs or alcohol put into action by O'Malley three years ago, met with the team president and also had a meeting with the players and other organization leaders Wednesday, prior to the news conference.

IN THE Evening Outlook, Newcombe, a standout for the Dodgers in the 1950s before his career came to an early end because of alcoholism, said he could not be specific about identifying the way the defending world champions are handling the situation.

Newcombe said in the newspaper article that the figure of 70 to 80 percent of "mind-altering substance users" could also be used in dealing with other major sports, football, basketball and hockey.

Meanwhile, Dr. Robert Woods, the Dodgers' team physician, denied that there was a drug problem on the team in another interview in Wednesday's Evening Outlook.

Diablos defeat Dodgers

By Associated Press

Dan Murphy's hitting and Brad Mengwasser's pitching gave the Tulsa Drillers a 6-0 Texas League baseball shutout victory over the Shreveport Captains.

In other Texas League games Wednesday night, El Paso edged San Antonio, 3-2, Amarillo smashed Midland, 13-3, and Arkansas beat Jackson, 6-3.

Mengwasser, 5-2, allowed only two hits, struck out 10 and gave up five walks to pick up the pitching victory.

The other Tulsa score in the fifth inning was on a single by Dave Stockstill. Murphy figured in the other Tulsa score, driving in a run with a single in the second inning.

Ron Koenigsfeld hit into a fielder's choice play to drive in the winning run as the El Paso Diablos edged the San Antonio Dodgers, 3-2.

Koenigsfeld drove home Dan Davidsmeier with what turned out to be the winning run in the fifth inning. Davidsmeier had doubled and moved to third on Eric Payton's single.

AL gate shows increase

BASEBALL—Attendance for the American League has passed the 10 million mark at the earliest point in its 82-year history. After Monday's games, attendance for the 14 AL clubs had totaled 10,000,872 for 487 playing dates, an increase of 515,321 fans for the same point in 1980. Comparison with 1981's attendance figures is impossible, the League said, because of the 10-week-long players' strike. In its record-breaking season of 1979, the AL had not passed the 10-million mark after a comparable number of dates...

The Sporting News named senior outfielder Jeff Ledbetter of Florida State college baseball's player of the year. Ledbetter, who slugged 42 homers for an NCAA Division I record, is one of two seniors on the TSN All-America team. The other is right-handed pitcher Todd Worrell of Biola College. Cliff Gustafson of Texas was selected coach of the TSN All-America team in a poll of major league scouting directors. Sophomore Jeff Peterson of St. Mary's of California is the left-handed pitcher and Franklin Stubbs of Virginia Tech the first baseman. Also selected were Mark Wasinger, Old Dominion, second base; Augie Schmidt, New Orleans, third base, and Spike Owen, Texas, shortstop. Joe Szekely of Texas A&M is the TSN team catcher, Steve Stanicek of Nebraska the designated hitter and Kevin Romine of Arizona State and John Morris of Seaton Hall the additional outfielders...

FOOTBALL— Derrick Ramsey and Jerry Blanton, two four-year veterans of the NFL from the University of Kentucky, contend reports of cocaine use in professional football have been exaggrated. Ramsey, Oakland tight end, and Blanton, Kansas City, were incredulous after reading a magazine article in which Don Reese charged 50 percent of the NFL players used cocaine to one degree or another. "Really I thought it was a great Dick Tracy story," said Blanton, who played for Kentucky in 1974-77. "It kept me awake all night. It also reminded me of science fiction. I've never seen anybody take anything before a game. Personally, I'd put alcohol above drugs as a problem in the NFL." Ramsey agreed. "I can't see anyone doing that and playing 60 minutes. Of course, pro football players are supposed to be supermen, a different breed, so I suppose it goes on. But if we have a problem in pro sports, it's alcoholism."...

GM Ladd Herzeg says the Houston Oilers plan to hire a drug abuse specialist on a consultant basis to assist Oiler players although he doesn't think the team has any heavy drug users. "I'm sure we have several players, not many, who used drugs socially. But this isn't something we're doing because we have a serious situation on our hands. It's just something we need to be doing for our players as well as for the club."...

Braves' booming bats rescue lost cause from Astros in 11th

By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports Writer

Atlanta's booming bats have the Braves clicking again.

The past two games, they've found that special something that invariably turns defeat into victory.

On Tuesday night, they rallied from a 5-0 deficit in the sixth inning to beat Houston 6-5 in 11 innings. On Wednesday night, things got a bit more improbable.

Down 4-1 going into the bottom of the ninth, the Braves got consecutive-pitch homers from Dale Murphy (his 22nd, tops in the majors) and Bob Horner (his second of the game and 13th of the season). And down in the bullpen, Biff Pocoroba began stirring.

"Once Murphy and Horner homered and Rufino Linares singled, I kind of saw the situation developing," he said.

Chris Chambliss also singled, chasing loser Bob Knepper. In came Randy Moffitt, who got Bruce Benedict to bunt into a forceout at third. But he walked Larry Whisenton to load the bases, bringing up Pocoroba, who batted for Carlos Diaz, a reliever making his major league debut. His single to right gave the Braves a 5-4 victory and gave Diaz the victory.

It also widened the Braves' National League West lead to three games over San Diego.

"I tried to make him hit into a double play," Moffitt said of Pocoroba. "He just happened to hit it in the hole. It's just like we can't do anything right. I don't know what you'd call it."

Pocoroba calls the Braves' success — this was their seventh victory this year after they trailed in the ninth or in extra innings — the result of faith in themselves.

"It's all kind of clicking together for us. The guys have a togetherness. It's an attitude that's never been here the eight years I've been here," Pocoroba said. "I think we've got the potential of being a winner and games like last night and tonight show it."

It's also a matter of Manager Joe Torre's faith in Pocoroba. "When it's on the line, I'm the one he usually calls," he said.

Pirates 7, Cubs 3

It had been a while between home runs for Willie Stargell — almost two full seasons, to be exact. And in this, perhaps his final season, he spent enough time on the bench to warrant a few friendly pokes from Pittsburgh's pitchers.

"They had said, 'Why don't you put on a toe plate and get in the rotation. You might get to hit more,'" he recalled.

But in his 33rd at-bat this year — his 32nd game of the year — Pops silenced those kidders, plus a lot of Cubs fans, too, with a three-run pinch-hit home run in the seventh inning to help pull the fourth-place Pirates to within one game of .500 and within five games of first place in the NL East.

Phillies 6, Cardinals 3

Philadelphia, which sampled first place in the NL East a couple of nights ago, got another taste of it, regaining the lead by two percentage points over St. Louis after Larry Christenson pitched and batted the Phillies past the Cardinals.

Christenson gave up 13 hits before giving way to Tug McGraw in the ninth inning — but he had one big hit, a two-run double in the Phils' three-run second inning.

"It feels good to get the decision," said Christenson, who had pitched eight times without getting one. In those eight appearances, the Phillies had scored two runs or less for him.

Bob Dernier, who had four hits, scored two runs, drove in one and stole his 32nd base, got the single in the second inning that drove in the decisive run.

Giants 7, Reds 6

Charlie Leibrandt's wild pitch, the fifth wild pitch of the game, allowed Johnnie LeMaster to dash home with with two outs in the bottom of the 12th inning, giving the Giants their victory in four hours, nine minutes.

Tom O'Malley led off with a single but was was thrown out at third on LeMaster's single. LeMaster took second on the throw, later swiped third on the front end of a double steal and came home when Leibrandt's wild pitch skidded 25 feet behind the plate.

Expos 4, Mets 1

Gullickson gave up all the Mets hits before leaving in the eighth inning. With the bases loaded and one out, Reardon got Wally Backman to hit into a double play.

Dodgers 5-4, Padres 1-6

Dusty Baker's grand-slam, a fifth-inning homer which just managed to make it over the railing down the left field line, gave Bob Welch and the Dodgers a victory in the opener, then Terry Kennedy's three-run pinch-homer and Broderick Perkins' solo shot enabled the Padres to come away with a split. Rick Monday of the Dodgers hit homers in his first two at-bats against winner Eric Show before San Diego began its comeback.

KENNY REDIN'S

Fin & Feather

Five Texas outdoor writers flew from Houston to the Caribbean Island of Cozumel to explore some of the most productive fishing waters in the world. From Cozumel a private charger took us to the Yucatan fishing camp of Pez Maya.

This was the first time for three of us and the first impression of the Cozumel and the Caribbean is that the gin clear waters are suited mainly for snorkeling, scuba diving and sailing. However fish abound as well.

The first night of a two-night stay at Cozumel was set aside for touring, learning from experts how to fish offshore and dining. The next morning we boarded Mauro Gonzalez 38-foot private charter at 9 a.m. for 15-mile trip into dolphin fish (dorado), white marlin sailfish and possibly giant blue marlin grounds.

Our captain and first mate rigged up three ballyhoo baits for trolling while one short teaser line was fed directly behind the boat. It wasn't long before we hit a school of dorado, the flourescent-colored fish took the bait quickly, which can be an exciting experience. These gamesters clear the water with wonderful aerial leaps, somersaults and give in to gravity with large splashes.

They then head for safety while angler applies just enough pressure to keep the dolphin on the line. They ranged from 20 to 25 pounds, but later we hit some bull dolphin that were bigger.

AS THE weary dolphin tires and is brought closer to the boat, it appears that you have hooked a brightly colored neon sign that glows in the water. The first fish boated turned a brilliant blue with sheets of metalflake green down the sides as we turned into the glowing sun.

One of the most exciting moments came when a 50-pound Atlantic sailfish came crashing down on one of the trolled ballyhoos. He took the bait, leaped for the clouds and cut the heavy leader with his speared bill. Within an hour, three more doreado were boated and a 100-pound white marlin struck. His first hit came on the teaser before he rallied in on the ballyhoo bait. He shook the shark hook on his first leap.

After landing two billfish, our captain wanted us to sample some offshore fishing. We moved closer to the mainland in sight of a Mayan ruin atop a rocky cliff. Our captain told us we could expect to catch about anything out from the rocks.

Within 15 minutes, three trolled baits were savagely thrashed by who knows what.

Two of us grabbed portside rods and the other grabbed the rod from the holder. One line was cut and the captain immediately screamed, "Barracuda." The fish were gaffed and boated that resulted in some high-stepping. Barracudas don't come easily and once they hit the boat floor, all hell breaks loose. Their denture work is more dangerous than a shark's. One bite can mean a finger or toe. We snagged three, the largest 23 pounds.

Within 15 minuts we were back in Cozumel with 10 dorado, three barracuda spiced by the hook throwing antics of a sailfish and white marlin.

It was a brief encounter, the day out of Cozumel, but it was long enough to convince me. The waters waters are prime for the species we grappled with as well as marlin, sharks, tunas, groupers and snappers.

In Sunday's Fin and Feather, we'll tayke you to the Yucatan Penisula for saltwater and lagoon fishing out of Pez Maya.

Principal receives reprimand

CHICAGO (AP) — High school basketball star Efrem Winters has been taken off his school's June graduation list and the school's principal has been reprimanded as the result of an investigation into grade changing, the Board of Education announced Wednesday.

The board's investigation followed recent newspaper reports that Winters' grades at King High School grades had been changed in order to keep the 6-foot-10 center eligible for sports and to qualify him for a basketball scholarship to the University of Illinois.

In a report to School Superintendent Ruth B. Love, Dr. Orpen Bryan, deputy superintendent of field management, said, "The discrepancies on the various records and the questionable signatures appearing in some instances on the student's court book (report card) would seem to indicate both poor record keeping and a deliberate attempt on the part of persons unknown to alter the student's records."

Bryan said the grades teachers said they gave Winters agreed, for the most part, with official records, "but there are some discrepancies."

Winters was one-half of a credit shy of graduation because he failed a semester of art during the 1979-80 school year. He earned passing marks in all other subjects.

Winters will be given an opportunity to attend summer school at Corliss High School to make up the grade and qualify for graduation.

Mishap paralyzes ex-Cowboy

MIAMI (AP) — Burton Lawless played in three Super Bowls and once could bench-press almost 400 pounds. But touching his thumb to his little finger is a major achievement for him since a farm accident left him partially paralyzed.

Doctors still don't know whether Lawless, a former offensive lineman for the Miami Dolphins and Dallas Cowboys, will regain use of most of his limbs.

A 12-foot plow arm, weighing about 5,000 pounds, crashed down on his head and neck last May 7 as he helped a friend plant pecans near his farm in Groesbeck, Tex.

"I'VE TRIED to think back," he told The Miami News from his hospital bed in Waco. "Things are sort of blurry as far as what happened. All I know is, if you could see how big that plow was, you'd just feel the way I do — lucky to be alive."

The plow broke two vertebrae in his neck and bruised his spinal cord, at least temporarily paralyzing the former University of Florida star. His parents, James and Virginia Lawless of Punta Gorda, Fla., have alternated 24-hour shifts at his bedside since the accident.

"We still don't know how he got from under that part that hit him ... we still don't know why he's not dead," said James Lawless.

"The doctor said that if he hadn't been in such great condition ... that he would have been dead now," the concerned father said. "He wears an 18½-inch shirt and the doctor said his neck would have been snapped in two if he didn't have such heavy muscles around that area."

LAWLESS, 28, said he somehow managed to move the plow arm off himself and crawl up on the tractor to call for help.

He was taken to the tiny hospital in Groesbeck, but officials there sent him on to Waco's Hillcrest Baptist Hospital. He spent seven weeks in traction.

NFL negotiations will include drug-use talks

NEW YORK (AP) — Contract negotiations between representatives of the National Football League club owners and the NFL Players Association will include discussion of drug-use tests on players, according the owner's chief negotiator.

Jack Donlon said he plans to inform NFLPA Executive Director Ed Garvey at the negotiations that he believes spot urinalysis tests of players are necessary because of the recent disclosures of cocaine use among NFL players.

"I think we have the right under the players' contract and collective bargaining agreement to give players spot checks during the season, and I think we should," he told the New York Daily News.

"I think an employee has a responsibility to his employer and I think it's fairly well spelled out that he's supposed to keep himself in pretty good physical condition."

Garvey, who is on vacation, could not be reached for comment, but has indicated in the past that he opposes such testing because it casts a stigma on every player in the NFL.

The talks, which had been scheduled to resume July 7 in Washington, will be held July 13 in New York, said Donlon, executive director of the NFL Management Council. The contract expires two days after talks resume.

Donlon said the switch in negotiation dates came about because of meetings within the management council.

"There is nothing really behind it," he said of the change. "We had a retirement board and medical subcommittee meetings during that period so we decided to move the (contract) meeting back."

The two sides, who last met for three days in Washington in early June, began negotiations in February.

Festival fives named

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — Coaches and players were named Wednesday for the basketball teams that will participate July 23-31 in the U.S. Olympic Committee's National Sports Festival in Indianapolis.

Among the 48 players will be the 1981 National Sports Festival's Most Valuable Player, 7-foot center Stuart Gray of UCLA, who will play for the West squad. Gray, who started for UCLA as a freshman last year, averaged 18.1 points per game during last year's festival in Syracuse, N.Y.

NBC offers breakfast-lover's dream

By LARRY SIDDONS
AP Sports Writer

It's a breakfast-lover's dream on NBC this weekend, with Wimbledon highlighting the early morning menu both days.

Dick Enberg and Bud Collins will be the primary announcers as the network provides live coverage of the women's singles championship on Saturday and the men's singles title match on Sunday. Each start at 8 a.m.

This is the 14th year for the All-England Tennis Championships on NBC, which has promoted the "Breakfast at Wimbledon" theme in connection with the men's championship matches on the final Saturday of the two-week-long tournament for the past several years. The catchphrase, by the way, was the brainchild of Bob Basche, director of creative services for NBC Sports.

But double the order for tea and crumpets this summer.

For the first time, there will be tennis on Sunday at the All-England Lawn Tennis and Croquet Club. TV money convinced the club's upper crust that a Saturday championship for the women and a Fourth of July finale for the men wasn't such a bad idea.

That doesn't mean, however, that NBC is getting special treatment when it comes to covering the matches, according to Enberg.

"We have the same access to the players as the BBC and everybody else," Enberg said in a telephone interview from Wimbledon. "After the match, you have 10-15 minutes to talk with the players in the interview area. It's well patrolled by the club, and the players hide very well."

TRACKING DOWN players for interviews has been a major concern of Enberg and producer-director Ted Nathanson at Wimbledon this year.

The rain which drenched London for much of the first week of the tournament played havoc with both the matches and NBC's telecast schedule.

While the network won't go live from Wimbledon until Saturday, it has been programming heavily from the tournament, including a total of 4½ hours last weekend.

"We have had less to choose from for our highlight shows," Nathanson said by phone during one rain delay early this week. "Thankfully, we had Billie Jean King winning an exciting match one day, and the next day the weather cleared a bit and we were able to get in some good matches. But we don't have the backup we're used to."

It looked for a while as if American audiences might be getting Breakfast at Wimbledon on Saturday and Sunday, and Monday brunch as well.

IF THE rain had kept up, one of the contingency plans called for the tournament to roll back a day, with semifinals Saturday, the women's final on Sunday and the men's final Monday.

"That's what we heard, although never officially," Nathanson said. Then, echoing a sentiment often voiced about Wimbledon by players, the producer added: "They're very strange here."

The rain has bunched things up. Tom Merritt, an NBC spokesman, said Thursday that the broadcast schedule looked like this:

—Friday afternoon, 1-4 p.m., on tape, one men's semifinal and both women's semifinals.

—Saturday morning, 11:45-1:45 a.m., on tape, leftovers from Friday and a preview of the women's final.

—Saturday, 8 a.m.-1 p.m., live, women's final and the remaining men's semi.

—Sunday, 8 a.m.-2 p.m., live, men's final and either the men's or women's doubles final.

Allan B. "Scotty" Connal, former executive producer and vice president of NBC Sports, has been named executive vice president and chief operating officer of ESPN, the all-sports cable-TV network.

Connal joined ESPN in August 1979, taking charge of production, network operations and all engineering functions. In his new role, he adds control of programming, communications, human resources and administration.

At NBC, Connal won an Emmy for production of the 1975 World Series between Cincinnati and Boston, and caught the memorable shot of Red Sox catcher Carlton Fisk jumping for joy over his game-winning home run in Game 6.

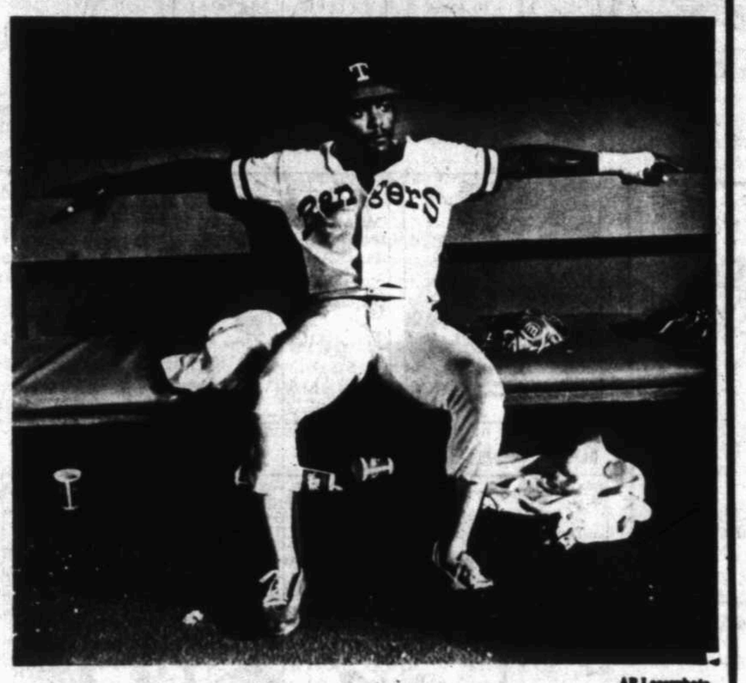
Thomas homer nips Yanks

By Associated Press

From the time the pitch left Shane Rawley's hand until the ball reached the plate, Gorman Thomas had a radical change of mind.

With the score tied 7-7 and Cecil Cooper on first base in the 12th inning, the power-hitting Thomas intended to lay down a bunt to get the winning run to second base.

In the fraction of a second it took the ball to reach him, however, the Milwaukee center fielder decided to swing away, and the result was a two-run homer that gave the Brewers a 9-7 victory over the New York Yankees Wednesday night.



AP Laserphoto

Billy Samples relaxes alone in dugout after game. His three-run homer with two-out in ninth had beaten the Angels for the Rangers.

"Sure I was looking for a bunt," said Thomas, who now had 19 homers this season. "I thought I might lay down a drag bunt with the situation the way it was."

Thomas said that when he saw Rawley's mediocre fastball, "I was surprised. I was looking for a breaking ball. When I saw the fastball, I just had to swing away."

The Brewers, who had 17 hits against five Yankees pitchers, had taken a 6-0 lead midway through the game before New York rallied to send the game into extra innings.

Rollie Fingers, who had given up a walk, two hits and sacrifice flies by Willie Randolph and Dave Winfield in the bottom of the ninth, got credit for his fifth victory in 10 decisions. Jamie Easterly got a save, holding the Yankees scoreless in the 12th after they loaded the bases with one out.

Tigers 12, Red Sox 3

Detroit, which had won only one of its previous 15 games, blasted first-place Boston for 17 hits, including a three-run homer and a run-scoring single by Mike Ivie.

Rangers 5, Angels 3

Mariners 10, Blue Jays 4

Richie Zisk hit two two-run homers and Dave Henderson blasted another two-run shot as Seattle overpowered Toronto.

Al Cowens went 4-for-5 for the Mariners and Jim Beattie went the distance, allowing nine hits.

"I put more pressure on myself than I should. But if this ballclub is going to be near the top this year, I've got to have a better second half," said Zisk, who is hitting .275 with seven homers and 22 RBI.

A's 4, Royals 0

Matt Keough blanked Kansas City on seven hits and Joe Rudi twice knocked in the speedy Rickey Henderson for Oakland.

Henderson singled in the first, stole his 73rd base in 78 games, advanced to third on a groundout and scored on Rudi's single. Henderson scored again in the third on Rudi's short fly that Royals second baseman Onix Concepcion caught with his back to the infield.

Indians 9, Orioles 0

Von Hayes drove in three runs with three hits and Rick Sutcliffe allowed four hits in seven innings of shutout pitching to lead Cleveland over Baltimore.

Sutcliffe gave hits in the fifth and sixth innings and two more in the seventh before leaving the game. Ed Whitson finished with two hitless innings for the Indians.

Hayes singled home a run in the second, completed a four-run outburst in the seventh with another RBI single and added a run-scoring double in the ninth.

Twins 4, White Sox 3

second win of the second half race against eight losses. It also tied the current series at two games apiece with two more to play.

Tonight, Cubs hurler Randy Clark will take a 3-0 record onto the mound in Game 5 against Amarillo's Neil Bryant, 2-5. The game is scheduled for 7:30 p.m. at Cubs Stadium.

On Friday, Midland and Amarillo will close out the series with a game that will be played at 6 p.m. instead of the normal 7:30 to accommodate a Fourth of July fireworks celebration at the stadium following the game.

Spain shoots for World Cup semis

By WINSOR DOBBIN

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Spain, which just squeezed into the second round of the World Cup soccer championships, now is bristling with confidence that it can make it at least to the semifinals.

The reason for this resurgence confidence has little to do with the way the Spaniards have played. Their 1-1-1 record in the first round was marked by offensive sloppiness and a knack for drawing penalties.

Still, Coach Jose Emilio Santamaria, after watching England and West Germany battle to a scoreless tie in Madrid Tuesday night, feels his team is capable of getting a victory and a tie in its upcoming Group B matches against those two teams.

Spain faces West Germany Friday and England Monday.

"We play with more fighting spirit, intensity and power than West Germany or England," said Santamaria Wednesday.

"Spaniards know how to fight."

Fighting spirit, however, was not particularly apparent when pain lost 0-1 to Northern Ireland in its last first round match and West German coach Jupp Derwall refuses to concede the 0-0 deadlock with England has wrecked his European-champion team's chances of advancing to the last four.

"We will then have a real chance of reaching the semifinals," he stated. "We are not eliminated yet."

In another Friday match, tournament-favorite Brazil faces defending champion Argentina, which needs to win to retain any chance of avoiding an ignominious exit.

The Brazil-Argentine clash had been expected to be the group decider but now the Italians have a very real chance of advancing — particularly if Argentina and Brazil tie.

The Brazilians, who won all three of their first round matches impressively, still are rated the most in the competition.

Further, Argentina has failed to beat Brazil in eight previous meetings stretching back to 1974. Brazil has won five and three games ended in ties.

Brazilian captain Socrates oozed confidence.

"Argentina will be obligated to win, but we trust in our strength and I'm very optimistic," said the midfielder.

Tiger-Cats nip Argos

HAMILTON, Ontario (AP) — Bernie Ruoff kicked a 33-yard field goal with seven seconds remaining to give the Hamilton Tiger-Cats a 17-14 victory Wednesday over Toronto, spoiling the Argonauts' perfect record in Canadian Football League exhibition play.

Both teams finished the preseason schedule with 3-1 records.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Friday, July 2, 1982

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Actor Robert Ito (Sam on TV's "Quincy") was born on this date in Vancouver, Canada. Also celebrating birthdays today: comedian Dan Rowan and LBJ's youngest daughter Luci Baines. In the months ahead, business success depends largely on your associates and coworkers. Those who work out of their homes are apt to make more progress and money than those who go to an office. Exercise some of your well-known patience if discontented with your job. Eventually, things will right themselves. Romance remains exhilarating! It would be a mistake to rush into marriage in November. Know your own heart before making a firm commitment.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Business and financial affairs call for a skeptical approach. Attention to detail will help you avoid making expensive mistakes.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Carve out more time for small fry. Tie up loose ends and fulfill promises. Group activities hold special appeal. Meet deadlines to protect your reputation.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Respect the wishes of someone who prefers to remain anonymous. Minor domestic differences can be easily resolved. Reach out to a troubled youngster.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Postpone signing contracts, documents. A gesture of goodwill cements a friendship. Make a special effort to strengthen your relationship with mate.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do not postpone business transactions. Romance improves if you learn to be more flexible with loved ones. Come to grips with any personal problems.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Start early today so that you can get away for the holiday weekend. Show greater independence and self-reliance, and others will respect you more.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Good news sparks your imagination. Routine tasks become less tedious. Make any criticism constructive. Let go of the past; the romantic outlook is bright.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Become a better listener. An invitation may require a gift. Shop in your own neighborhood; you could find exactly what you want at a bargain price!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Exercise greater patience and tact and things will go more smoothly at work. You and loved one draw closer together.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You can have considerable success in the money markets now. If possible, postpone travel. Be sure that people get the true story regarding a family situation.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): This is not the right day for visiting relatives. If traveling, guard your valuables. You find pleasure in the company of your friends.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): New opportunities for progress are evident today. They could involve career, money, business or all three. Protect yourself from gossips.

If you are a good guesser, you will always make three no trump on this hand after a heart lead. If you only guess right half the time, like most of us, you will have to rely on technique.

The auction was straightforward. Because he had no ruffing value, North chose not to search for a 4-4 spade fit, but simply made the value raise to three no trump.

West led the queen of hearts, and declarer could see only seven fast tricks. An eighth could be established in spades. The possibility of a 3-3 heart split could be discounted because of the opening lead, so the ninth trick would have to come from spades or a 3-3 club break. Obviously establishing a second spade trick had the better chance.

Declarer won the opening lead with the king and le ' the queen of spades. West made a superb defensive play when he smoothly ducked the ace. Now a good guesser would continue with a spade to the king to land his contract. Our declarer, unfortunately, did not divine the lie of the cards. He made the more normal play of running the ten. That lost to the jack and, with only one entry in dummy, declarer could not both set up another spade trick and cash it. Eight tricks were his limit.

Examine what happens if, at trick two, declarer runs the ten of spades instead of leading the queen. If West has the jack of spades, declarer can set up two spade tricks regardless of what the defense does. If East has the jack, it does not help to hold up, so he may as well win and shift to a club. Declarer wins in hand and can counter the possibility of a holdup in spades by leading the queen of spades and overtaking with dummy's king. By simply continuing spades, declarer establishes a second trick in the suit while the ace of clubs is still on the table as an entry.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Susan Anton has been placed on probation for 36 months and ordered to take part in an alcohol-rehabilitation program after pleading guilty to drunken driving.

Susan Anton

The 31-year-old Miss Anton, star of the movie "Golden Girl" and the short-lived "Cliffhangers" television series, entered the plea through her attorney Friday. She had been scheduled to be arraigned Wednesday.

In addition to the probation and rehabilitation program, the judge fined the Beverly Hills resident $390 and restricted her to driving to and from work for 90 days.

Miss Anton was arrested June 3 after crashing a car owned by actor-comedian Dudley Moore into a parked vehicle. Tests indicated she had a blood alcohol level of 0.17 percent. The legal maximum level for driving in California is 0.10 percent.

ATLANTA (AP) — A deadlock has developed in a $110 million plan to develop a northwest Atlanta park that would include the presidential library of Jimmy Carter — and it came after the former president had reiterated his support for the proposal.

The City Council's Transportation Committee Wednesday deadlocked at 2-2 over Mayor Andrew Young's development plan for the Great Park, sending the issue to the full council July 6.

In a handwritten letter, Carter urged the council to include the four-lane, 2.2-mile parkway the mayor had proposed along the length of the park.

"It will be my intention to work as closely and harmoniously as possible with local and state officials and with the interested neighborhood groups," Carter said in the letter.

"Also, I will do everything possible to assure that the plans for the presidential park, the roadways, bike trails, and footpaths are maintained as described to the public, and not later modified to the detriment of the community," the letter said.

E.R. Anderson

HONOLULU (AP) — Mayor Eileen R. Anderson quietly resigned her honorary membership in the exclusive Pacific Club after the membership retained a ban on women as full members.

Mrs. Anderson was made an honorary member of the club when she was elected mayor in 1981.

She resigned last April after the 103-92 club vote. The resignation came to light Tuesday.

In 1963, then-Gov. John Burns declined an honorary membership in the club because at that time it did not admit men of Asian ancestry. The club subsequently changed that policy.

Princess Diana celebrates 21st birthday

LONDON (AP) — With the royal family scattered from Scotland to the South Atlantic, there was no big party planned for Princess Diana's 21st birthday today, but Buckingham Palace said a few close friends would gather for a "small, private affair."

British newspapers heralded the event with birthday greetings for the princess and a special portrait of Diana by photographer Lord Snowdon, former husband of Princess Margaret.

The head and shoulders photograph was taken several weeks ago when Diana was heavily pregnant. It shows the princess, who as a bachelor girl favored blue jeans and bulky sweaters, wearing a demure, high-necked blouse of white lace and linen.

A Buckingham Palace spokesman said the birth of her son, Prince William, on June 21 left little time for planning a big party for Diana. But there will be small affair "just for close friends" tonight at Kensington Palace, the London home of Diana and her husband Prince Charles, the spokesman said.

With members of the royal family frequently away on formal duties, as is now the case, they often postpone big celebrations for months after the actual date of birthdays or anniversaries so all the family can be present.

Last year, Queen Elizabeth II's son Prince Andrew had his 21st birthday party four months after his Feb. 19 birthday. The same sort of celebration may be in store for Diana.

The queen and her husband Prince Philip are making their annual visit to Holyrood House in the Scottish capital Edinburgh. Elizabeth the 81-year-old Queen Mother has an evening engagement at St. Paul's Cathedral, while Andrew is still serving as a helicopter pilot with Britain's victorious Falklands war fleet in the South Atlantic.

Charles, 33, will be away from Kensington Palace for much of the day visiting a military hospital in Woolwich in southeast London to talk with soldiers of the Parachute Regiment and the Welsh Guards injured in the Falklands fighting with Argentina.

"I have got a present for her but I want it to be a surprise. I am longing to see the baby again," he told reporters Wednesday.

Spencer said his daughter, one of four children, was "up and about and very active" after the birth of Britain's future king. She left the hospital just 21 hours after the birth of 7-pound, 1½-ounce Prince William.

'Birth of a prince' commemorated

LONDON (AP) — Prince William of Wales, 11-days-old today, is already being commemorated on spoons, stamps and porcelain English roses — at very royal prices.

Businessmen, hoping to cash in on the birth of the future king, began advertising a host of special-issue mail-order souvenirs within 36 hours of his arrival June 21.

There's a solid silver baby spoon, with the initials of William's parents, Prince Charles and Princess Diana, set in entwined hearts for the equivalent of $54.

A royal christening spoon with the English rose, the thistle of Scotland, the Irish shamrock and the daffodil — the symbolic flower of Wales — is slightly more expensive, about $63.

For the big spender, there's a special eight-piece royal baby collection including a three-piece pewter coffee service, a silver and gilt goblet, a silver enamel box, a pair of porcelain plates, and a porcelain English rose with a silver stem. The total price: $1,332, but pieces can be purchased separately.

Six British Commonwealth countries — Nevis, Tuvalu, Kiribati, St. Kitts, St. Vincent and Mustique — are issuing royal baby stamps and a set of first-day covers is being offered for $364.

The cheapest baby souvenir being advertised is a large needlepoint pincushion with a crown in the center and the legend: "The birth of a prince." It's priced at $23.30.

There was no immediate word on how the souvenirs were selling.

The wedding of the royal baby's parents, Prince Charles and Princess Diana, last July 29 touched off a souvenir boom in Britain. But businessmen don't think the bonanza will be repeated for the infant prince.

"I don't think the royal baby thing will be that big," said one businessman, who asked that his name not be used. "My gut feeling is that it will be a medium successful venture, but nothing like the royal wedding."

For one thing, Buckingham Palace has refused to allow the use of any royal seals or coats of arms on baby souvenirs.

A palace spokesman said Queen Elizabeth II, the new prince's grandmother, relaxed rules governing the use of royal symbols on souvenirs for the royal wedding last July 29.

But the queen has not done so for the royal birth, in an apparent effort to avoid mass commercialization of the happy event.

There was no word on whether the Prince and Princess of Wales would receive any of the royal baby souvenirs flooding the market.

But a palace spokesman said 50 sacks of mail had arrived by the end of the last week along with nearly 2,000 presents including a large variety of toys and hand-knitted clothes.

"Up until the time of the birth, the princess had been looking at the presents to decide what she wanted to keep and what would be given to charity," the spokesman said. "I'm sure that she will be doing so again in the future" with the new presents.

America's first married Catholic priest says Mass

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. (AP) — A married Roman Catholic priest, ordained after his conversion from the Episcopal faith, said Mass on Wednesday night, becoming the first non-celibate Roman Catholic priest in the United States to celebrate the Western Rite, a church official said.

About 30 people attended the Mass at St. Anne's Carmelite Monastery in Springfield.

The Rev. James Parker, 51, was ordained Tuesday night in a private ceremony attended by about 100 people, including his wife and two daughters.

The ordination was allowed under a 1980 decision by Pope John Paul II to approve the ordination of married Episcopal priests in the Roman Catholic Church, said Bishop Bernard F. Law of the Diocese of Springfield-Cape Girardeau.

Eastern Rite Roman Catholic priests from the Middle East are allowed to marry. A few married Roman Catholic priests in West Germany were ordained after their conversion from the Lutheran faith.

SAN DIEGO (AP) — A college student accused of failing to register with the Selective Service System in the first such charge since the Vietnam war says he is "absolutely terrified" of the indictment but not about to back down.

Benjamin H. Sasway, 21, of Vista, Calif., was indicted Wednesday by a federal grand jury in San Diego, becoming the first person accused of failing to register for the standby military draft.

Sasway

Sasway, a political science and philosophy student at Humboldt State University, was to surrender for arraignment today.

"I'm absolutely terrified but I can't allow fear or threat of bodily punishment to alter a moral belief," he said Wednesday. "What good is a moral belief if we're just going to not pay any attention to it every time the going gets rough?"

Federal regulations require young men over 18 to register in case a draft is needed in the future. There are no current plans to draft any men into the armed forces, which rely on volunteers.

U.S. Attorney Peter Nunez said the charge was filed only after repeated efforts to persuade the young man to register had failed.

The one-count indictment alleges Sasway "did knowingly and willfuly-fail, evade and refuse to present himself for registration." If convicted, he could face five years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

Sasway told reporters earlier this week that he "is ready to go the distance — fine or jail or whatever it takes." He added that his parents feared the prospect of their son going to jail but supported him anyway.

Sasway said he is not a pacifist and would fight in a "just war." But "when they come into my home and tell me to start packing because I'm going to war wherever they think it's right, that's where I draw the line," he said.

The low-key announcement of the politically sensitive charge came from the Justice Department in Washington, which simply released a copy of the indictment. During his 1980 campaign against Jimmy Carter, Ronald Reagan voiced opposition to standby registration but changed his mind when he took office.

White seeks help from court

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — Attorney General Mark White says he wants direction from the U.S. Supreme Court before he interprets a ruling that could force some elected officials seeking higher office to give up their posts.

The high court last week upheld a requirement in the Texas Constitution that certain locally elected officials must resign if they run for another office.

White must determine which officials officials are required to resign.

"We could have a decision hopefully by this week, but it may be early next week," White told the South Texas Judges and Commissioners Association on Wednesday.

"We're trying to get further direction from the court. They didn't give us any direction. Hopefully, we'd not be leaving these people in jeopardy," said White.

One official anxious for White to rule is Nueces County Sheriff Soloman Ortiz of Corpus Christi, who didn't get a paycheck this week. He's the Democratic candidate for the 27th Congressional District.

By KATHY BAKER

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Texas property owners will pay an average of 16.3 percent less for insurance beginning Sept. 1, but renters may see a rise in the cost of their coverage.

The Texas Board of Insurance adopted the new rates Wednesday.

Property owners got another bonus from the board, which agreed to give a five percent credit on premiums for installing certain kinds of theft-prevention devices, including solid wood doors, dead bolts and certain kind of window locks.

No credit is given for burglar alarms or burglar bars. The credit goes into effect 60-75 days after being published in the Texas Register.

After adopting the security devices credit, board Chairman William P. Daves and Commissioner Lyndon Olson Jr. approved the board's staff proposal on rates, rejecting industry recommendations of a smaller decrease. The third board member, Durwood Manford, was absent.

The Board said although property owners will see an average decrease of 16.3 percent, the decline will average 20 percent for homeowners and 17.5 percent for farm and ranch owners. Rates for extended coverage policies will drop an average of 15.1 percent.

But, theoretically at least, the staff recommendation said, tenants' insurance should rise 22.3 percent. The rates may not go up that much, though, because they are calculated based on fire insurance rates, which will go down an average of 25 percent.

At its hearing on June 2, the board heard industry representatives complain that the staff based the new rates on unrealistic loss projections.

Staff actuary Gaylon Daniel said one reason the staff recommended the reductions was because there have been no "catastrophic" loss situations in Texas, such as hurricanes or major tornadoes, in the last 10 years.

The good luck won't hold, warned Sam Winters, representing the Texas Insurance Advisory Association. He urged the board to always include a "catastrophic loss" in any calculation of past losses for the purposes of projecting future costs to the industry.

But at Wednesday's hearing, Daves said, "The rate-setting method we are using has produced a healthy insurance climate in Texas."

He called the approved rates "reasonable and fair."

Midland homeowners should be paying less for insurance

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Homeowners in Midland should be paying less for their homeowners insurance coverage under new rates, effective Sept. 1, approved by the State Board of Insurance Wednesday.

The board adopted staff recommendations, which provide for a decrease in rates for the North Northwest Rating Territory of 20.4 percent on homeowners rates, and a decrease of 18.1 percent on farm and ranch owners rates.

Changes by categories for fire include: dwellings, up 5.9 percent; farms, up 5.2 percent; cotton, down 5.6 percent; and all other classes, down 25 percent.

Extended coverage is to decrease an average 12.2 percent.

Changes by category include: frame construction, up 3.5 percent; brick, up 3.0 percent; wind and storm resistant, up 4.5 percent; dwellings, down 25 percent; farms, down 25 percent; and all other classes, up 5.2 percent.

The board also approved a statewide credit of 5 percent for homeowners who install anti-crime devices such as deadbolt locks, solid core doors, etc.

Battle for health facility almost over

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

A decision from the Texas Health Facilities Commission Friday could put to rest a year-long battle for psychiatric and/or chemical abuse services in Midland.

The THFC in Austin is expected to render its decision during the 9:30 a.m. open meeting which is held every Friday.

As early as June 1981 the three hospitals — Midland Memorial, Parkview and West Plains — began to file pre-applications with the state health agency to convert or construct a facility for these health services, and Friday the final decision could put an end to the three-way battle.

On June 26 the THFC hearing officer in Austin recommended to the three-member commission that MMH and West Plains be granted approval to build their facilities.

MMH has proposed to construct a $3.4 million, 50-bed chemical dependency facility, while West Plains applied to construct a $4.1 million 60-bed psychiatric hospital with drug/alcohol services. Parkview applied for a $500,000 conversion of its existing 60-bed facility to a 60-bed psychiatric hospital.

Although the THFC hearing officer did not recommend Parkview's facility for Midland, Carol Daniels, THFC deputy administrator, said that could change in Friday's meeting.

In issuing its ruling, the three-member commission, which is appointed by the governor, can disregard any of the hearing officer's recommendations.

While Parkview and West Plains officials have stated that their attorneys will "more than likelyappeal" the decision, if it is not favorable, MMH officials said their concern is whether or not two facilities are recommended in Midland.

Ray Branson, MMH president, said the hospital's governing boards had not reviewed the possibility of two of the facilities gaining this approval; therefore, MMH's planning committee is expected to discuss the situation and the board of directors would give a final approval for the hospital to continue with its plans to construct the facility in northwest Midland.

In other action at the THFC meeting Friday, the commission will consider applications by the HH Holding Co. Inc., a wholly-owned subsidiary of Hillhaven Inc., Tacoma, Wash., to acquire Terrace West Nursing Center and Terrace Gardens Nursing Home, both of Midland; Deerings West Nursing Home Center and Deerings Nursing Home, both of Odessa; and Ridgeview Nursing and Convalescent Center, Wichita Falls from Nursing Homes of Midland and Odessa.

The nursing homes, which range in size from 60 to 150 beds would be purchased on or after July 23.

MMH lobby will probably be redecorated

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Attractive doesn't necessarily mean durable. And that's the case for some of the furnishings at Midland Memorial Hospital.

The hospital's main lobby area, although newly furnished approximately two years ago, will probably be redcorated.

An influx of letters to The Midland Reporter-Telegram has prompted MMH to answer some of the complaints from the public.

One letter pointed out that there were "many mistakes in the prior planning. The waiting area in the main lobby is very filthy and poorly planned. Visitors are allowed to bring in all kinds of food and drinks into this area, which has caused the carpet and furniture to be badly soiled and is now in a deplorable condition in such a short period of time."

According to A.C. Buchanan, the lobby furnishings, donated by the Cowden family, was set up in January 1980.

"I don't really know who the decorator was for the general lobby, but the fabric doesn't resist stains," he said, adding that the "Allison Center has similar fabric, but does not get the volume of people.

"We're looking for professional help for the answer," he added. "Groundwork is being done right now on the eating problem."

Presently, small children and adults are allowed to eat and drink in the area, but future plans include not allowing food in the lobby area.

Johnnie Gillespie, an institutional designer affiliated with MMH's architects, Flatow, Moore and Bryant, visited the hospital today to evaluate the lobby's condition.

"As an institutional decorator, she knows color coordination and what kind of furnishings will last a long time," Buchanan said.

"It's not the lack of taking care of the furniture, but the kind of and volume of traffic coming through here," he added.

Odessa company awarded contract to sealcoat roads within district

ODESSA — The State Department of Highways and Transportation has awarded a contract to Jones Brothers Rental Equipment Co. of Odessa to sealcoat 194 miles of highway within the Odessa district.

The contract price is $2,640,000 and 90 working days will be allowed to complete the work. Among the roads to receive the sealcoating are, by county, as follows:

Andrews County: FM 1967, from FM 87 to U.S. 385, 14.6 miles; FM 181, from Gaines County line to Texas 176, 14.2 miles.

Crane County: U.S. 67, from Crockett County line to Upton County line, 3.3 miles; FM 1053,from Texas 329 to Pecos River, 5.3 miles.

Ector County: U.S. 80, from east of Odessa to Midland County line, 1.0 miles; Loop 338 West, from U.S. 385 to near Texas 302, 6.2 miles.

Martin County: Interstate 20, from Midland County line to U.S. 80 east of Stanton, 9.7 miles; U.S. 87, from Howard County line to Dawson County line, 1.4 miles; FM 829, from FM 87 to south of I-20, 14.9 miles.

Midland County: U.S. 80, from Thomason Drive to Ector County line, 10.6 miles; I-20, from Texas 349 to Martin County line, 12.9 miles.

Winkler County: Texas 302, from Texas 18, east, 0.5 miles; and Texas 302, from Loving County line to Texas 115, 13.3 miles.

The sealcoating provides a skid-resistant surface and extends the life of the highways so major rehabilitation will not be necessary for some time.

You've probably seen or heard our advertising on television or radio. We don't talk very much about cars; instead we talk about our dealership and our people.

We also stress service, selection, and fair prices the year around.

But most important, we believe in practicing what we preach. That means we want to treat you, the way we want to be treated, when we spend our money.
