Not all protected oil bound for U.S.

By STEWART M. POWELL
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration, preparing to risk American lives and warships to defend Kuwaiti tankers in the Persian Gulf, has no assurance that oil shipped under U.S. naval protection will be destined only for U.S. allies, the Hearst Newspapers have learned.

Eleven Kuwaiti vessels to be escorted by the U.S. Navy will be free to deliver multi-million-dollar cargoes of oil and natural gas to any of more than a dozen nations, American and Kuwaiti officials said.

More than 80 percent of the 945,000 barrels of petroleum products exported daily is being shipped to Western Europe, Japan, Singapore, the Philippines, South Korea, the United States and other nations with close ties to the western alliance, according to State Department figures.

However, the remainder of the almost $17 million worth of daily oil exports is sold to a variety of nations in the Third World and East Bloc, raising the possibility that U.S. warships could defend cargo bound for nations hostile to the United States.

United Nations' estimates for worldwide oil shipments in 1984, for example, show that Kuwait sold more than 10,000 barrels of oil a day to Romania, a crucial Soviet ally bordering the Black Sea.

"We do sell to the Soviet Union and to the Eastern Bloc," said Fahad Al-Sabah, an official at the Embassy of Kuwait in Washington, D.C. "It's an international market, isn't it? We sell to it. We do business with anyone except South Africa and Israel."

No agreement exists to restrict the destination of cargo under American protection, the diplomat said. Kuwait, in addition to re-registering 11 tankers under the U.S. flag, has leased three Soviet tankers to qualify for additional superpower protection in the gulf.

The possibility of U.S. ships protecting oil shipments to nations other than U.S. allies did not come up in talks with Kuwaiti officials, according to Sens. John Glenn, D-Ohio, and John Warner, R-Va., who returned last week from a seven-day fact finding mission to five gulf states.

"That's a good question," Glenn said. "I don't know the answer to that."

President Reagan has justified an increased U.S. military presence in the gulf to ensure the free flow of oil and to deter Soviet influence in the region.

Officials at the State Department and Pentagon said the administration had not asked, nor had it received, any formal or informal assurances from Kuwait that vessels under U.S. protection would serve U.S. allies.

"What we're doing is protecting Kuwaiti exports in the context that their oil is an important part of the western supply," said a State Department official who spoke on condition of anonymity. "We don't monitor cargo...and we don't get into who their customers are."

Echoed a spokesman at the Pentagon: Cargo aboard Kuwaiti tankers flying the U.S. flag and under U.S. protection will be "treated as Kuwaiti oil, regardless of who is the final user."

The issue of whose oil is to be protected came as the administration intensified efforts in Western Europe and in Congress to win support for expanded U.S. naval protection of shipping in a region that provides one-third of the West's daily oil supplies and holds 70 percent of known oil reserves in the non-communist world.

Despite 4th-place finish, Alysheba 'still champion'

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

NEW YORK, N.Y. — It wasn't easy for Dorothy and Pam Scharbauer to watch as their colt, Alysheba, came up short in Saturday's bid for the Triple Crown at Belmont Race Track.

But the grace with which they, and the entire Midland family, handled defeat showed the nation why West Texans have admired the Scharbauers for more than 80 years.

As Alysheba came up fourth in the Belmont, the Scharbauers apologized to their friends and the gathering press corps for not pulling off the coveted Triple Crown.

"I'm sorry we just couldn't do it a third time, you all," Clarence Scharbauer Jr. said in his West Texas drawl as a throng of family and well-wishers filed from their private box. "But the best horse won today, he (Alysheba) just never got on the pace."

By finishing out of the money and with Kentucky Derby and Preakness Stakes runner-up Bet Twice first at the wire, Alysheba also missed out on a $1 million bonus offered by Triple Crown Productions for the top total finisher in the three races. In addition, had Alysheba won the race, the Scharbauers would have been in line for a $5 million total purse for winning all three of the Triple Crown races.

"It's not the money that is disappointing," Mrs. Scharbauer said. "I don't know how to explain it, really — I guess it's just the pride of being an owner. But we're just as proud of him today as we've ever been. He's still a champion."

Alysheba was clearly the people's choice as many of the 64,772 in attendance rose to greet the three-year-old as he entered the track before the race. He was also the bettor's choice, taking 4-5 odds to the gate.

Dorothy and Pam, the co-owners, sat nervously through the minutes leading up to the race as the field paraded in front of the grandstand. Alysheba looked poised and confident in his paddock, according to Scharbauer and trainer Jack Van Berg, but later, both admitted it was just not his day.

Business lobby rakes up measures in Legislature

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — For the second time in less than 12 months, the Texas business lobby has proven it can move its program around a budget stalemate and through the state Legislature.

Lawmakers spent 30 days here in an August special session, making virtually no progress on what was then a $3.5 billion state deficit. But while legislative number crunchers argued with themselves and then-Gov. Mark White, the House and Senate passed such important business-backed measures as parimutuel wagering on horse races, interstate banking and branch banking.

With that out of the way, the Legislature returned for a three-week session and whittled the deficit down to about $1 billion.

Replaying that scenario, senators and representatives adjourned their regular session here Monday almost no closer to solving a projected $5.8 billion shortfall than they were when they arrived Jan. 13. They'll be back to try again in two weeks.

But — counting a two-day mini-session — the 70th Legislature produced an amazing array of victories for the business lobby.

Partial deregulation came for local and long-distance telephone service and intrastate trucking. A constitutional prohibition against state income taxes, opposed by the Texas Association of Taxpayers, once again remained bottled up in the Senate. It took an extra-special session, but significant business-backed changes in civil justice laws making it more difficult for injured persons to win large judgments eventually passed.

"Without any question, the business interests had some major successes," says Austin lobbyist Don Adams, who worked on behalf of tort reform and trucking and long-distance telephone deregulation. "I don't think the session was a failure at all."

Much to the delight of the Baptist General Convention of Texas, the 70th Legislature also took significant stands on what could be called moral issues. Lawmakers succeeded in passing the first anti-abortion bill in state history, outlawing late-term abortions in all but extreme cases. The long fight for an open-container law culminated in a watered-down measure that prohibits a driver from drinking while driving.

The Christian Life Commission, the lobbying arm of the Baptist church, also claims success in passage of a so-called dram shop bill, a new minimum wage for farmworkers, the prohibition of challenging jurors based on their race and liability protection for directors and officers of volunteer and charitable organizations.

"So far, the 70th Legislature has to be a victory for the Texas Baptists," lobbyist Gary McNeil says. During the June 22 special budget session, McNeil says the Baptists will continue to push for increased health and human services funding.

The group won a major battle when a bill creating a state-run lottery died hard on the House floor last month. McNeil says the Baptists will work hard to hold on to that victory against "funny money" when lawmakers return. He admits concern that Gov. Bill Clements and House Speaker Gib Lewis seem to be including lottery revenue in their plans to balance the budget.

For the second regular session in a row, lawmakers talked a lot about but took little conclusive action toward revising the sweeping public education reforms of 1984.

Great debate on budget to resume

By DAVID PLESA
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — After five fruitless months of searching for what many hoped would be an historical solution to a monumental state problem, the Midland-area delegation has journeyed back home, but only for a brief visit.

The six of them, along with their Senate and House colleagues, have about enough time to enjoy a couple of weekend barbecues with their families before dragging themselves back to the Capitol for another try at a compromise on the state's oil-ravaged budget.

Arrival time is June 22, the opening day of a special legislative session called by Gov. Bill Clements to come up with a way to balance a state budget suffering from near-fatal revenue shortfalls.

Just how to do that, though, is a matter of great debate, and not one reserved exclusively for the governor and legislative leaders, who throughout the regular session failed to come to terms on a state spending plan for 1988-1989 and a realistic method to pay for it.

"I want to cut the budget as much as possible," said Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo. "I think we have cut it a lot, but I think there are some more cuts that can be made. Hopefully we could do it enough so we wouldn't have to have a tax."

Sims recommends a thorough study of the state's oil-dependent tax structure, but says such an examination takes time.

"I think the most important thing is going back and looking at the total tax structure, but that can't be done in a day or two, it has to be done with a lot of study," he said.

Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, says more taxes are distasteful, but will be needed eventually.

"First we need to get a solid dollar figure on where we are, and then attempt to address the disparity between the Legislature and the governor because there has got to be a better dialogue developed, and we have got to have decisions one way or the other, we can't have it both ways," the senator said. "We are either going to have to make the cuts or raise the revenue.

Local bills make successful showing

AUSTIN — Aside from the state's budget problems, the Midland-area delegation reported a successful 70th Legislature for passing bills that will help local communities.

Local bills dealing with water quality, the environment, oil and gas operations, agriculture, wildlife, education and other issues got favorable attention in the House and Senate, the local delegation says.

"I think it has been a pretty fruitful session," said Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland. "We had some local bills that needed to be passed and we got them all passed."

Craddick said he was particularly pleased with several bills that will help improve water quality in the Midland area. Others give favorable attention to the oil and gas operators, he said.

Rep. Larry Don Shaw, D-Big Spring, said the session proved a success for him on legislation that will help protect the environment.

"As far as my legislative program goes, I had a very good session with a fairly high success rate," Shaw said.

Although he passed about 70 bills, many of them local water bills, Sen. John Montford said his legislative agenda suffered somewhat because of the inordinate amount of time he had to spend on his sweeping tort reform package, which was approved in a two-day special session immediately following the close of the regular session.

"(Tort reform) really drained me," Montford said. "I mean I have worked on it at the sacrifice of other programs.

ISSUES

Teacher groups could claim an empty victory in the passage of a measure repealing a despised law no one ever intended to implement: subject-matter tests for all educators.

Texas State Teachers Association President Charles Beard, however, was furious when a measure containing TSTA-backed changes in the career ladder bonus-pay plan for teachers suffered a final-hour defeat on a point of order.

Two Clements-supported changes in House Bill 72 made little progress. A bill loosening the 22-to-1, pupil-teacher ratio in elementary classrooms passed the House but died in the Senate. A bill that began as a change from six weeks to three in the no-pass, no-play suspension period for participation in extracurricular activities turned into a limited pilot program on the Senate floor and made no progress at all in the House.

On the higher education front, Lewis used a parliamentary ploy to rescue a major overhaul of college and university administration from its last-minute role as a hostage in the Senate. That measure significantly strengthens the role of the renamed Higher Education Coordinating Board, gives regents the power to double tuition for graduate and professional courses and allows Mexican nationals to pay in-state tuition at four border universities.

Two other products of the Select Committee on Higher Education's 18-month study are also awaiting Clements' signature. The first would require all college students to prove minimum skills in reading, writing and math before moving on to upper-division courses. Beginning with this fall's freshman class, prospective teachers may no longer earn degrees in education but rather must major in the subject they wish to teach.

The Select Committee also recommended that the Legislature pass a comprehensive higher education charter, setting out the goals, missions and responsibilities of each of the state's universities and junior colleges. Lawmakers instead passed that responsibility on to the Coordinating Board.

While Clements, Lewis and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby could reach no agreement on taxes and the budget, the three men worked together to move a package of economic development measures through the House and Senate. With the governor's backing, Lewis succeeded with a plan to merge eight economic development agencies into one state Commerce Department, a bill cutting red tape for small businesses and another bill to create a State Economic Planning Commission.

Claiming that using bonds to finance state building projects can help rejuvinate the economy while spreading out the cost to taxpayers, Hobby moved his $1.3 billion "Build Texas" package of constitutional amendments through the Legislature and on to the November ballot. The bond plan includes $500 million for prison and mental health construction programs, $400 million for water supply and flood control projects and $400 million for local public works construction such as jails, parks, airports and convention centers.

"There is much left to be done in this area, but a great beginning has been set," Clements said of the economic development bills.

With those and thousands of other issues out of the way, the Legislature will return to Austin on the 22nd to try once again to solve a fiscal crisis that has plagued it since oil prices plunged 18 months ago. With their backs to the wall and nothing else to distract them, Lewis says, lawmakers should be able to concentrate all their energies on the budget.

Clements has already directed the various number crunchers to work together and develop a common ground on current spending patterns and projected demands on state services. House budget writers are scheduled get a one-week head start on the session.

"This Legislature did not finish the job because it was a gigantic task, one that has equally frustrated our sister states dealing with the same problem," Hobby says.

"But be assured of one thing: it may take a long time to finish the job, but it will be a first-class product, one that Texans can live with and point to with pride."

"I am not ecstatic about more taxes, but I think if you get a House-Senate (spending) bill, you have got to pay for it, therefore you have got to raise your revenues..." Montford said.

"These are just tough times for Texas and it doesn't do any good to procrastinate these problems."

Rep. Larry Don Shaw, D-Big Spring, says time has run short to the point where the only logical recourse left may be a hard-line stand against the governor, who remains firm in his pledge to veto a tax bill above the $2.9 billion generated by temporary taxes approved last summer.

"There is a lot of fault I think with the governor in not really honestly coming to the table for true negotiations," Shaw said. "I think the Legislature is at fault for not delivering an appropriations bill with the necessary revenue to pay for it to his desk.

"We tried so long to try to compromise that I think we wasted a lot of valuable time, and I think we should take a different approach," Shaw said. "I think it is time that we press ahead in a more aggressive way."

Midland Rep. Tom Craddick, a Republican, sees the situation differently.

"The people in my district support Gov. Clements and his view that we need to cut the spending and not have any new taxes, and I think they feel like they would rather have us go back into a special session than to give in and have some type of new tax program," Craddick said. "Economically, my area of the state is very hurt, the people are losing their jobs, many are out of work and they don't feel like they need any new taxes or any additional spending."

Freshman Rep. Gary Watkins, D-Odessa, says it was disappointing leaving Austin without a solution to the budget problem.

"I am somewhat disappointed in that we came down here with some major problems as far as the budget and taxes and I feel like we are going away having not solved quite a few of the problems after five months," Watkins said.

Although he too feels "a big letdown on the biggest bill of the session," Brownfield Rep. Jim Rudd, the chief House budget writer, says he is optimistic the special session will produce a budget compromise, preferably one closer to the House's version, if for only one reason:

"I think that we've got our backs fixed close to the wall and I think it is time some people start giving..."

BILLS

"Had I had more time, I would have spent considerably more effort on education reforms, on higher education reforms," he said. "I felt pretty strongly about those."

Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, said he helped pass a number of local water bills, plus several measures favoring hunters, ranchers and farmers.

"My philosophy is let the local people take care of their water because they know where the problems are and can do a better job," Sims said. "And that always has been my thought: let's do it locally instead of letting the state do it."

Rep. Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield, reported a successful session for his local agenda, and Rep. Gary Watkins, a freshman from Odessa, said he felt good about the passage of the few bills he sponsored.

"Mainly I felt good in just the fact that our institution, the University of Texas of the Permian Basin, wasn't picked on as it has been in the past, and I felt like that was good for our area," he said.

RACE

The two dozen or so members of the Scharbauer contingent cheered mightily as Alysheba and the other eight horses broke from the gates. And when the pack neared the final turn Alysheba seemed in his customary position on the outside ready to make a move.

But the anticipation of a stretch-run charge turned to disappointment as first Alysheba was nearly clipped by Gone West as he pulled up, and then when Bet Twice ran away with the lead.

"If you can't take the bitter with the sweet in horse racing, you're in the wrong game," said Scharbauer, who has become the media spokesman for his wife and daughter. "We've been in racing a long time and lost more times than we've won. Of course we're disappointed, but you haven't seen the last of Alysheba."

No decision has been made on when or where Alysheba will race again, but it seemed certain that he would. It is likely the Scharbauers will aim for the Breeder's Cup races in November, but could race once or twice before then.

"I still think this is the best colt in the country," Van Berg said. "But we'll give him some time off to make sure he's sound. Then we'll think about what to do."

For the Scharbauers and the people of Midland, Van Berg and Alysheba have done more than enough. They've made possible the dream of a lifetime.

Stormy memories cloud graduation

BALMORHEA (AP) — Tears and sad memories shadowed high school graduation ceremonies this year as students remembered the tornado that devastated nearby Saragosa, killing 29 people.

"This was a tough graduation," said school board member Darrel Rhyne as he followed the graduates out of the high school gymnasium.

"They needed this," he told the Dallas Morning News. "This is their first step back to normality, back to life."

No one from the graduating class died in the May 22 tornado, although seven of them were in Saragosa, about 10 miles from Balmorhea, when the tornado hit. Two graduates lost siblings and a third is mourning her mother, teachers said. Five of the 15 graduates lost their homes in the storm.

Many of the dead were in Saragosa to see a graduation ceremony for the community's Head Start program.

Reagan urges leaders to build on successes

VENICE, Italy (AP) — President Reagan Saturday urged his summit colleagues to build on a "solid record of accomplishment" when they meet Monday at a summit designed to demonstrate economic harmony but already overshadowed by current events.

U.S. leaders indicated in advance that they expect no major new monetary or fiscal initiatives to emanate from the economic summit.

Instead, the Reagan administration was emphasizing an emerging U.S.-Soviet agreement to remove hundreds of nuclear-tipped missiles from Europe and Soviet Asia, and protection of navigation lanes in the Persian Gulf.

Still, leaders of the United States, Japan, Britain, West Germany, France, Canada and Italy will spend considerable time discussing the international economy.

Reagan, in his weekly radio address Saturday, emphasized past successes in the economic arena — rather than breaking new ground.

Declaring that the 4½-year-old U.S. recovery, the longest peacetime expansion since World War II, helped pave the way, Reagan said: "The world leaders in Venice next week can look back on a solid record of accomplishment."

"Today, inflation remains low while interest rates are moderate and prospects are favorable for growth to continue for a fifth year," he added.

The summit, to be held at a former 8th-century Benedictine monastery on San Giorgio Island, one of the 117 that make up Venice, gets under way Monday and runs through Wednesday. Two large Italian naval vessels were moored just offshore, and tight security was being imposed throughout the city.

Italian Navy frogmen probed the waters around San Giorgio Island, which was closed for 12 hours Saturday night so troops and police armed with 300 metal detectors could search it. Officials said several hundred troops and police would patrol the island during the summit.

While Reagan has been in the area since Wednesday night, other heads of government were expected to begin arriving today.

Frank Carlucci, the president's national security adviser, talked to reporters about the Persian Gulf situation and the Chinese-made Silkworm missiles sold to Iran. The administration views them as a threat to oil tankers in the Persian Gulf and has protested to Beijing about the sale.

"The Chinese say they're not doing it," Carlucci said.

U.S. keeps Iran guessing about possible strike

VENICE, Italy (AP) — The Reagan administration kept Iran guessing Saturday on whether the United States would launch a pre-emptive strike against its anti-ship missiles and charged that China intends to double Iran's arsenal of the deadly weapons.

For a second straight day, U.S. officials refused to rule out attacking the missiles, some of which are in the final stages of deployment near the Persian Gulf.

"I don't think it does any good for anybody to speculate on military operations at this point," said Frank Carlucci, Reagan's national security adviser.

The United States is known to have asked China on at least three occasions, including a personal plea by Secretary of State George P. Shultz during a visit to Peking earlier this year, to stop helping Iran in its bloody war with Iraq.

But urging China to halt delivery of the Silkworms has had no effect.

"The Chinese say they are not doing it," Carlucci told reporters after joining President and Mrs. Reagan in an audience with Pope John Paul II in Rome. "We think they are coming from China."

Carlucci said the Iranians "have somewhere over 20 now and I think the (final) package is at least twice that size."

Two senators who recently returned from the gulf said Friday that the United States might have to consider a pre-emptive strike against the Iranian missiles if they were deployed against shipping in the Strait of Hormuz.

"You'd have to do it if you're going to have freedom of passage of those straits," Sen. John W. Warner, R-Va., said in an NBC television show.

The HY-2 missiles have been test-fired from the island of Qeshm into the strait of Hormuz. Some U.S. officials believe they could become operational by July 1.

The Strait of Hormuz is 30 miles wide at its narrowest point. Vital Western oil shipments must pass through the strait on the way from the gulf.

The United States is in the process of designating 11 Kuwaiti oil tankers as U.S. flag-carriers with American captains to protect them from Iranian attack. But Iran has said it will not be deterred.

Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, who accompanied Warner on a tour of the gulf, said a pre-emptive strike was one of several options.

Others include warning Iran not to deploy the missiles and using deceptive electronics and other countermeasures to destroy them if they are fired at the tankers.

Carlucci said the missiles were in the process of "getting operational," but that he had no idea when they would be installed. "It's not a process one can observe," he said. "They're doing some work on the site, but we have no idea what their plans are."

Carlucci insisted that U.S. naval forces in the gulf were a deterrent, not a threat. But, he said, "we do not think it would behoove anyone to attack our vessels."

Carlucci — and Reagan himself — refused, however, to be drawn into discussions about military actions that might be taken by the United States.

Iran's deputy foreign minister hints nation open to mediation

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Iran's deputy foreign minister indicated Saturday his country is open to regional mediation aimed at defusing Persian Gulf tension, but said Iran would immediately retaliate against a U.S. attack.

The comments by Hossein Sheikhuleeslam came after two U.S. senators who visited the gulf last week said America might have to consider a pre-emptive strike against any anti-ship missiles Iran deploys along the Strait of Hormuz.

"We are prepared to accept help from other countries in the Persian Gulf," the deputy foreign minister declared, insisting present tension in the gulf must be viewed separately from the 6½-year-old Iran-Iraq war.

"Problems concerning the war are so complicated that they cannot be solved in the short term, but the problem in the Persian Gulf is urgent, critical and solvable," he said.

About 250 merchant vessels from world shipping have been hit in attacks by both combatants since 1984.

Iranian interest in lowering gulf tensions was underscored in a statement issued by the Iranian Embassy in Vienna, where Sheikhuleeslam met reporters while stopping in Vienna on his way home from a visit to Turkey.

"Iran will step up its political efforts to find a solution, which (prevents) attacks on merchant ships and oil tankers and enables the withdrawal of the superpowers from the region," it said.

Earlier Saturday, White House National Security Adviser Frank Carlucci said the U.S. six-ship naval force in the gulf is a deterrent, not a threat, and suggested attacks against the ships would provoke a response.

The United States is expected to send three more warships to the gulf and the Soviets are reportedly dispatching three minesweepers to reinforce their two warships in the waterway.

Sheikhuleeslam ducked questions about whether Iran was deploying Chinese Silkworm missiles along the Strait of Hormuz at the gulf's mouth, as the Reagan administration has charged.

He pledged that "we will not attack any other ships as long as Iranian ships are not attacked," but said, "As soon as our ships are attacked, and we cannot export our oil, we will not permit any other country to export oil."

Sheikhuleeslam added, "It does not matter under what flag such ships sail, which superpower protects these ships," possibly alluding to Kuwait, which has has been loaned three oil tankers by the Soviets and promised U.S. military protection for half its own tanker fleet.

Iran, which accuses Kuwait of aiding the Iraqi war effort, has a policy of "security for all or for nobody in the Persian Gulf."

Tutu calls for end to emergency

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Archbishop Desmond Tutu said Saturday that Anglicans should wear black arm bands to mark the first anniversary of the state of emergency and pray for its end.

President P.W. Botha imposed the emergency on June 12, 1986, to quell anti-apartheid protest and unrest.

Tutu, the black leader of the Anglican church in southern Africa and an outspoken critic of apartheid, said in a statement that during the past year "untold suffering has been inflicted on the people of South Africa."

He called on all Anglican parishes in the country to ring church bells for 10 minutes at noon on Thursday, the day before the anniversary, "as a mark of deep concern and a call to prayer for the end of the state of emergency."

He also urged Anglicans to wear black arm bands "as an indication of our grief and distress."

Tutu, the 1984 Nobel Peace laureate, said the emergency declaration expires at midnight Thursday and urged the government not to reimpose the emergency through a new proclamation. However, Law and Order Minister Adriaan Vlok and other senior government officials have indicated the emergency will continue.

Also on Saturday, the Anglo American Corp., South Africa's largest mining conglomerate, said it closed a shaft at its Western Holdings gold mine after a clash between black miners and white mine security officers killed six blacks and two whites.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Soviets ready to lease ships

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Russia will lease Kuwait as many tankers as it needs to protect its oil shipments against Iranian attack in the Persian Gulf should a rival U.S. deal fall through, Arab and Western diplomats said Saturday.

Word of the Soviet offer comes amid congressional opposition to the Reagan administration's pledge to afford 11 of Kuwait's 21 oil tankers military protection.

The diplomats, demanding anonymity, said the understanding between the Soviet Union and Kuwait was verbal and apparently would become operative if Washington reneges on its commitment to reflag the 11 tankers and give them military escorts.

Reagan says putting the tankers under the Stars and Stripes is needed to keep gulf shipping lanes open and the flow of oil to Western allies unimpeded.

Iran accuses Kuwait of supporting Iraq in the 6½-year-old Iran-Iraq war, making Kuwaiti tankers a target of Iranian attacks in the gulf.

Quake hits Philippines

HONG KONG (AP) — An strong earthquake hit the central Philippines early today, the Hong Kong observatory reported. There were no immediate reports of casualties or damage.

The observatory said the quake, measuring 6.2 on the Richter scale, struck at 2:44 a.m. and was centered about 250 miles southeast of Manila.

It was not clear whether the center was on land or at sea. No further details were available.

The Richter scale is a gauge of the energy released by an earthquake, as measured by the ground motion recorded on a seismograph.

Every increase of one number means that the ground motion is 10 times greater. A magnitude 6 quake can cause severe damage while a tremor of magnitude 7 is capable of widespread, heavy damage.

Ortega announces hikes

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — President Daniel Ortega Saturday announced increases in the official prices of fuel and other goods, a cut in government fuel use and other steps to help the war-battered economy.

The measures came a little more than a week after officials of the leftist Sandinista government said the Soviet Union told them it could guarantee shipments of only 40 percent of Nicaragua's average annual crude oil needs this year.

Gramm refuses to surrender on federal spending hikes

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — Like the little Dutch boy plugging the dike with one finger, Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, appears intent these days on holding back, single-handedly if necessary, a potential flood of federal spending hikes.

Gramm, whose name became a household word as a sponsor of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit reduction act, is continuing his crusade against the mounting U.S. budget deficit.

Since the U.S. Supreme Court took the teeth out of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act of 1985 last July, Gramm, 44, has been exercizing his persuasive powers, strong-arm tactics and an encyclopedic knowledge of Senate rules in a tenacious effort to check Congress' penchant for spending increases.

The high court concluded that the new law violated the Constitutionally-guaranteed separation of powers by allowing a congressional office to trigger across-the-board spending cuts. While the law, mandating the elimination of the federal deficit by 1990, remains in effect, the court put a key feature — its trigger for automatic spending cuts — on hold.

Whether or not Gramm-Rudman-Hollings can be repaired, the Texas freshman in recent weeks has made good on a January pledge to raise points of order against bills that exceed spending limits senators set for themselves with their budget resolution.

Gramm focused his efforts on a $9.4 billion, high-priority catchall appropriations bill, holding up action on the measure with a series of procedural maneuvers.

What Gramm did was force votes, during nationally televised debates, that put each senator on record for or against appropriations that exceeded the budget guidelines. And, at one point in the proceedings, he even found an ally in liberal Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich. They unsuccessfully attempted to send the bill back to committee to find cutbacks to compensate for some of the proposed spending increases.

Ultimately, however, Gramm could not overcome his fellow senators' wish to pass the catchall spending bill.

Gramm voted against the measure, which included $6.7 billion for the Commodity Credit Corporation that assists America's farmers.

But the senator said he had made his point. The public votes he forced, he said, showed "who is for real and who is not for real" about cutting the federal deficit.

And Gramm's press secretary, Larry Neal, said that forcing senators to go on record with votes is having an effect in committees now considering spending bills.

"Those responsible for managing the bills are keenly aware that a point of order will be out there. And they know that they will need not 50 votes, but 60 (under Senate rules), to overcome it."

Gramm's zeal for fiscal responsibility won't win him any popularity contests on Capitol Hill. Some former House Democratic colleagues distrust him because of his role — before he switched parties and won election to the Senate — in fashioning the GOP-sponsored tax cuts they say contributed to the deficit of about $200 billion he is now trying to reduce. Some Republican senators view Gramm as a show off who is hogging the limelight.

While he may not be popular, there are few who question his determination.

NATION IN BRIEF

Anti-KKK protesters march

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — About 600 anti-Ku Klux Klan protesters marched through downtown Greensboro on Saturday singing "We Shall Overcome" in a demonstration to counter a Klan march planned for Sunday.

The Klan march would be the first major Klan activity in Greensboro since the 1979 confronation with Communists Workers Party members that left five CWP members dead.

The anti-KKK protesters marched inside a police cordon for about 10 blocks, using the same route that will be used by the Christian Knights of the Ku Klux Klan in their membership march.

City Manager William Carstarphen, who had drawn criticism for issuing a parade permit to the Klan, was one of those leading Saturday's march.

Balloon mishaps kill two

GAITHERSBURG, Md. (AP) — A hot-air balloon flying in a charity fund-raiser exploded in a fiery crash after it struck a power line Saturday, killing a teen-age passenger and injuring her pilot father, authorities said.

In a similar accident in Charlotte, N.C., a newlywed taking a hot-air balloon ride given as a wedding gift was killed when the craft went down in power lines. His wife was not hurt, but the pilot suffered electrical burns, authorities said.

The charity balloon, part of a 50-balloon fleet, was trying to land in an open field when it hit lines carrying 69,000 volts of electricity, said Montgomery County police spokesman George Luddington.

The gondola containing the pilot and his daughter was torn from the balloon, which began to burn when it hit the lines, said Luddington.

Killer set to be executed

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A high school dropout condemned for the murder of a guard during a bank robbery spent Saturday visiting his family while he waited for midnight and his scheduled execution in the Louisiana electric chair.

Benjamin Berry's appeals ran out late Friday when the U.S. Supreme Court refused to stop the execution and Gov. Edwin Edwards said he would not step in.

HOW THEY VOTED

Lamar Smith votes with majority on Persian Gulf resolution

Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Votes of area members of Congress on key issues during the week ending June 5, 1987.

KEY HOUSE VOTES:

HOUSE DEMANDS REPORT ON PERSIAN GULF SECURITY. Concerned with the prospect of increased U.S. military involvement in the Persian Gulf, the House June 2 voted 302-106 to require the Reagan administration to explain to Congress how the president's plans for U.S. military activity in the gulf region meet the security needs of the United States and its allies.

The vote came two-and-a-half weeks after an Iraqi jet attacked the USS Stark, killing 37 American sailors. It also followed renewed attention on the administration's proposal to honor a request by Kuwait to put Kuwaiti ships under the U.S. flag and escort them in the Persian Gulf.

The bill stipulates that the secretary of defense must file a report in classified and unclassified form within seven days after enactment of the bill. The report must specifically address the security threat to U.S. forces and to the interests of the United States, its allies and Kuwaiti shipping; rules and conditions of government operation of U.S. forces in the gulf; and cooperative arrangements made with European allies or countries bordering the gulf.

The Senate adopted stronger language May 21 in an amendment to the supplemental appropriations bill. The amendment, adopted 91-5, requires the administration to report to Congress on security arrangements in the gulf before entering into an agreement to provide U.S. military protection for Kuwaiti ships. Although the fate of both the House and Senate versions is unclear, the White House has indicated it favors the House bill.

Supporters of the bill insisted the measure does not signal support for administration policy in the gulf.

"Suggestions that this resolution is somehow an advance permission, a sort of Gulf of Tonkin resolution...are totally, absolutely wrong," said Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash. Proponents also stressed that the bill is not intended to undercut the War Powers Act, which requires the president to notify Congress prior to sending U.S. troops into hostilities. What the bill tries to do, they maintained, is keep Congress informed of administration policies before they are implemented so as to prevent mishaps such as the killing of Marines in Beirut in 1982.

Members opposing the measure attacked it from different angles. Some said it goes too far and would tie the president's hands in foreign policy crises, while others, fearing the United States was likely to get pulled into a war in the increasingly volatile gulf region, cited the need for invocation of the War Powers Act. "At best, the Persian Gulf is a snakepit, and we are going to be bitten," said Toby Roth, R-Wis.

Voting for the Persian Gulf report: Reps. Lamar Smith, R-San Antonio; Charles Stenholm, D-Stamford.

Voting against: Reps. Larry Combest, R-Lubbock; Henry B. Gonzalez, D-San Antonio; Beau Boulter, R-Amarillo.

HOUSE APPROVES 'FAIRNESS DOCTRINE' BILL. Despite opposition from the Reagan administration, the House June 3 passed legislation to make the so-called "fairness doctrine" law by a vote of 302-102. The bill prevents the Federal Communications Commission from scrapping its longstanding rule requiring broadcasters to air all sides of controversial public issues.

The action was prompted by a U.S. appeals court ruling last fall that the doctrine wasn't specifically required by law; thus, the FCC could repeal it without congressional approval. Before the ruling, the fairness doctrine was thought to have its basis in 1959 amendments to the Communications Act of 1934, which governs all uses of the airwaves.

Since the Senate OK'd an identical bill April 21, the measure now goes to the president's desk. White House officials contend that President Reagan strongly opposes the fairness doctrine because he feels it will restrict speech and may violate the First Amendment. However, it is not known whether the president will veto the bill and risk a confrontation with Congress.

Fairness doctrine supporters claimed it ensures that minority viewpoints will get aired on television. "The fairness doctrine does not serve to censure broadcasters," said Edward J. Markey, D-Mass., in response to the bill's critics. "It does, however, prevent broadcasters from censoring the rest of us — those of us who don't have broadcasting licenses."

But opponents of the doctrine countered that the bill stifles debate because broadcasters avoid airing controversial issues for fear they will have to provide free air time to opposing views. "The fairness doctrine, plain and simple, suggests that somebody at the FCC looks over the shoulder of journalists who are broadcasting...to determine whether or not they are doing a good job of presenting the news to the American people," said Tom Tauke, R-Iowa. "We cannot tolerate government control over journalism."

Voting for the fairness doctrine bill: Gonzalez; Stenholm.

Voting against: Smith, Combest, Boulter.

KEY SENATE VOTE

SENATE OKAYS SUPPLEMENTAL SPENDING BILL. Four weeks after beginning work on an "urgent" supplemental funding bill for fiscal 1987, the Senate June 2 passed, 71-23, a $9.76 billion measure and sent it to conference with the House, where its fate is unclear.

The bill provides funds for unanticipated expenses and replenishes programs due to run out of money before the current fiscal year ends Sept. 30. Major elements of the bill include funds for farm programs run by the Commodity Credit Corp., which ran out of money May 1; federal employees' salaries and pensions, military personnel health benefits and homeless aid.

House members approved a 20 percent across-the-board cut in their version of a supplemental spending bill before passing a $9.25 billion measure April 23. But the Senate, undeterred by congressional watchdogs howling for more spending restraints, turned back repeated efforts to bring the catchall bill within spending limits set by the fiscal 1987 budget resolution.

Before approving the bill, the Senate unanimously approved an amendment that directs the president to institute mandatory testing of all immigrants for acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Supporters stressed the urgent need for the dollars included in the bill over the bill's price tag, which exceeds limits set by the fiscal 1987 budget resolution. "This is, in fact, an urgent, must-pass bill," said J. Bennett Johnston, D-La., who managed floor debate on the legislation. "These funds are emergency in nature and are needed now in order to replenish funds."

But opponents argued that the measure's sponsors should reduce its cost before the Senate passed the legislation. They said the bill was a test of Congress' resolve to stick by its own budget rules. "I am not saying that some of these programs (included in the bill) do not have merit," said the measure's chief opponents, Phil Gramm, R-Texas. "But the point is these are not emergency measures, and I hope my colleagues...will not insult the American people in an emergency supplemental bill by funding...these programs which...do not represent emergency matters."

Voting for the spending bill: Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, R-Texas.

Voting against: Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas.

PHILADELPHIA TODAY

Bookbinder James Muir half-bound 100 spelling books for printer and bookseller Francis Barley. These may have been part of the 60,000,000 copies of Noah Webster's speller printed between 1783 and 1890.

CONFEDERATION TODAY

Once again, the New York, New Jersey, Virginia and North Carolina delegations and Nathan Dane of Massachusetts met, ascertained that there was not a quorum, and dispersed.

CONVENTION TODAY

"The Clause providing for the appointment of the 2d branch of the national Legislature, having lain blank since the last vote on the mode of electing it, to wit, by the 1st branch, Mr. Dickinson now moved that the members of the 2d. branch ought to be chosen by the individual (state) legislatures." Sherman seconded.

James Wilson, seconded by "Mr. Morris" (almost certainly Gouverneur, not Robert), moved that the people elect the Senate.

A lively debate ensued, for certainly James Madison, and probably most other delegates, realized that election of senators by the states ensured more of a role for the states in the new government than the nationalists wanted them to have, and it tended to work against proportional representation in the Senate.

A motion to consider Wilson's motion lost, 10 states against, Pennsylvania for. Dickinson's motion was then approved, unanimously.

DELEGATES TODAY

George Washington dined with a club of Convention members at the Indian Queen, and drank tea and spent the evening in his lodgings at the home of Robert and Mary Morris.

John Rutledge (S.C.) wrote to Thomas Jefferson in Paris to introduce his oldest son, who would present the letter in person.

The New Jersey Legislature resolved to appoint Jonathan Dayton "a commissioner on the Part of this State" to attend the Federal Convention. Dayton wrote David Bearly to announce his appointment.

LOOKING BACK
Jonathan Dayton (1760-1824)

Jonathan Dayton, the youngest of the delegates, was born Oct. 16, 1760, in Elizabethtown, N.J., where he was brought up the son of militia veteran and storekeeper Elias Dayton. He graduated from Princeton in 1776 and promptly joined the 3d New Jersey Regiment commanded by his father as an ensign and paymaster. Thereafter, he was promoted to lieutenant and captain serving at Brandywine, Germantown, Valley Forge, as an aide (with William Pierce) to Gen. Sullivan on the expedition against the Iroquois, and at Yorktown.

Upon his discharge, Dayton was admitted to the bar, and became active as a lawyer and businessman. He was elected to the New Jersey Assembly in 1786 and was serving in that body when elected a delegate to the Convention.

Within the convention he spoke fairly frequently for one so young and relatively inexperienced. He supported the small-state position on representation, opposing proportional representation in the House until after the Connecticut Compromise, and thereafter watched to safeguard the prerogative of the Senate. Otherwise, he was a moderate nationalist, opposing state payment of senators, seconding a motion to have only free inhabitants represented in the House, and supporting reasonable federal control over state militia.

Bush's press secretary Larry Thomas resigns

WASHINGTON (AP) — Larry Thomas resigned Friday as press secretary to Vice President George Bush after holding the job only since March.

Thomas, 39, cited personal reasons for the resignation, The Washington Post reported in its Saturday editions.

Craig Fuller, Bush's chief of staff, said Friday in a statement that Thomas "remains a friend and supporter and will be involved in future activities with the vice president."

Thomas replaced Marlin Fitzwater, who became White House spokesman after the resignation of Larry Speakes.

State judge could get 15-year term for fraud

FORT WORTH (AP) — State District Judge Tom Cave, cleared of sex-for-leniency charges, still faces a maximum 15 years in prison for mail fraud convictions and possible loss of his position.

He was acquitted Friday by a federal jury of accusations by prostitutes and drug users that he reduced their sentences in exchange for sex, but convicted on three counts of mail fraud. Cave could be assessed up to 15 years in prison and a $750,000 fine.

Cave's co-defendants, bail bondsman J. Dorsey Adams, 80, and attorney Ronald Aultman, 71, were found innocent of charges they arranged sexual liaisons for Cave.

The "sweet-and-sour" verdicts, as Cave's attorney called them, were delivered the day before the judge's marriage to Cheryl Vaughan, a former Tarrant County adult probation employee.

Plans for the wedding were made in December, when the trial was scheduled for April, the Dallas Morning News reported. The trial was reset for May and lasted longer than expected, leaving Cave wondering if he would be waiting for a verdict on his wedding day.

The trial featured almost half-a-dozen weeks of testimony that included steamy tales of sex scandals and an airing of tactics used by a special Fort Worth police unit known as The Project.

Angela Smitherman, 18, testified the unit questioned her for 18 hours without letting her call an attorney, but police refuted her statement, saying she called her boyfriend several times and never asked for an attorney.

Bob Flowers, director of the State Commission on Judicial Conduct, said earlier this week that Cave would lose his $75,587 annual salary if he was found guilty. A hearing to remove him from the bench would follow, he said.

U.S. District Judge Mary Lou Robinson ordered a pre-sentence investigation of Cave be completed in a month. Sentencing would be scheduled after completion of the investigation, she said.

If that happens, "I'll have to go to work," Cave, 57, told the Morning News. Cave adamantly denies he will resign.

"You know better than that," he said. Cave said he would fight back "always and every day" but refused to explain how.

Waste dump opponents optimistic about proposal

HEREFORD (AP) — Opponents of a proposed high-level nuclear waste dump in Deaf Smith County say a proposal to halt the project could be introduced to a U.S. Senate subcommittee within three weeks.

"It's in draft form right now, but it looks like it's going to get bipartisan support," Delbert Devin, executive director of the Nuclear Waste Task Force, said Friday after ribbon-cutting ceremonies at the opening of the People Opposing Wasted Energy Repositories office.

The event, sanctioned by the Deaf Smith Chamber of Commerce, was attended by about 40 residents; Rep. John Smithee, R-Amarillo; Dan Smith of the Governor's Nuclear Waste Programs Office; and Hereford leaders.

Devin returned Thursday from a five-day trip to Washington in the latest of a series of lobbying efforts to lawmakers watching the federal nuclear waste program.

"I have never seen such momentum for such a proposal" among lawmakers on the trip with task force member Tonya Klueskens, Devin said. The pair also testified before the Nuclear Regulation Subcommittee of the Environmental and Public Works Committee.

The four-point proposal was developed in February by the task force and generally followed by Gov. Bill Clements in a letter he sent to Texas congressional delegates in April.

Among other things, it calls for a halt to the U.S. Department of Energy's repository program, including land acquisition efforts at the 9-square-mile site north of Hereford that is one of three finalists for the first dump.

It also proposes that Congress appoint an independent commission to review DOE's repository and Monitored Retrievable Storage programs.

Devin said the proposal most likely would be co-sponsored by Sens. Jim Sasser, R-Tennessee, and Texas' Phil Gramm and Lloyd Bentsen. All three were very receptive to the plan, he said.

Fredeman brothers plead guilty to theft

BEAUMONT (AP) — Two brothers of the Fredeman shipping family and their tugboat fueling company have pleaded guilty to federal charges involving theft of fuel and marine equipment.

Henry F. Fredeman II, 46, pleaded guilty Friday to two counts of theft of marine equipment, while his brother William Fredeman Jr., 49, pleaded guilty to charges of not telling about a federal felony of which he had knowledge.

Henry Fredeman could receive up to 10 years in prison and $10,000 in fines, and William Fredeman faces a maximum six years in prison and $1,000 in fines.

U.S. District Judge Sam Hall has scheduled sentencing for Aug. 3.

The brothers' Channel Fueling Services Inc. pleaded guilty to one count of theft of fuel and could be fined up to $5,000. Both brothers live in Groves and the company is based in Port Arthur.

Letter-writers deplore selling of Alamo, planning team says

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Texans should be ashamed of the way commercialism has enveloped one of the nation's most fabled shrines of liberty.

That's according to letters Alamo visitors have sent to the Alamo Plaza Planning Team, which is studying ways to renovate the plaza while adequately capturing the history of the Alamo compound as it was during the 1836 battle for independence from Mexico.

Team member Gary Foreman said the group, which hopes to take several proposals to City Council later this month, has received "hundreds" of letters from throughout Texas, the United States and even Europe.

And most suggested removing the raspa — snowcone — vendors and tour buses from the plaza.

"There are so many people outside San Antonio who are concerned about how we display the history of San Antonio," Foreman said Friday. "They want to make it more respectable than it is today. They think we should remove the commercialism and get rid of the buses."

HOW THEY VOTED

Lamar Smith votes with majority on Persian Gulf resolution

Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Votes of area members of Congress on key issues during the week ending June 5, 1987.

KEY HOUSE VOTES:

HOUSE DEMANDS REPORT ON PERSIAN GULF SECURITY. Concerned with the prospect of increased U.S. military involvement in the Persian Gulf, the House June 2 voted 302-105 to require the Reagan administration to explain to Congress how the president's plans for U.S. military activity in the gulf region meet the security needs of the United States and its allies.

The vote came two-and-a-half weeks after an Iraqi jet attacked the USS Stark, killing 37 American sailors. It also followed renewed attention on the administration's proposal to honor a request by Kuwait to put Kuwaiti ships under the U.S. flag and escort them in the Persian Gulf.

The bill stipulates that the secretary of defense must file a report in classified and unclassified form within seven days after enactment of the bill. The report must specifically address the security threat to U.S. forces and to the interests of the United States, its allies and Kuwaiti shipping; rules and conditions of government operation of U.S. forces in the gulf; and cooperative arrangements made with European allies or countries bordering the gulf.

The Senate adopted stronger language May 21 in an amendment to the supplemental appropriations bill. The amendment, adopted 91-5, requires the administration to report to Congress on security arrangements in the gulf before entering into an agreement to provide U.S. military protection for Kuwaiti ships. Although the fate of both the House and Senate versions is unclear, the White House has indicated it favors the House bill.

Supporters of the bill insisted the measure does not signal support for administration policy in the gulf.

"Suggestions that this resolution is somehow an advance permission, a sort of Gulf of Tonkin resolution...are totally, absolutely wrong," said Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash. Proponents also stressed that the bill is not intended to undercut the War Powers Act, which requires the president to notify Congress prior to sending U.S. troops into hostilities. What the bill tries to do, they maintained, is keep Congress informed of administration policies before they are implemented so as to prevent mishaps such as the killing of Marines in Beirut in 1982.

Members opposing the measure attacked it from different angles. Some said it goes too far and would tie the president's hands in foreign policy crises, while others, fearing the United States was likely to get pulled into a war in the increasingly volatile gulf region, cited the need for invocation of the War Powers Act. "At best, the Persian Gulf is a snakepit, and we are going to be bitten," said Toby Roth, R-Wis.

Voting for the Persian Gulf report: Reps. Lamar Smith, R-San Antonio; Charles Stenholm, D-Stamford.

Voting against: Reps. Larry Combest, R-Lubbock; Henry B. Gonzalez, D-San Antonio; Beau Boulter, R-Amarillo.

Bush's press secretary Larry Thomas resigns

WASHINGTON (AP) — Larry Thomas resigned Friday as press secretary to Vice President George Bush after holding the job only since March.

Thomas, 39, cited personal reasons for the resignation, The Washington Post reported in its Saturday editions.

Craig Fuller, Bush's chief of staff, said Friday in a statement that Thomas "remains a friend and supporter and will be involved in future activities with the vice president."

Thomas replaced Marlin Fitzwater, who became White House spokesman after the resignation of Larry Speakes.

State judge could get 15-year term for fraud

FORT WORTH (AP) — State District Judge Tom Cave, cleared of sex-for-leniency charges, still faces a maximum 15 years in prison for mail fraud convictions and possible loss of his position.

He was acquitted Friday by a federal jury of accusations by prostitutes and drug users that he reduced their sentences in exchange for sex, but convicted on three counts of mail fraud. Cave could be assessed up to 15 years in prison and a $750,000 fine.

Cave's co-defendants, bail bondsman J. Dorsey Adams, 80, and attorney Ronald Aultman, 71, were found innocent of charges they arranged sexual liaisons for Cave.

The "sweet-and-sour" verdicts, as Cave's attorney called them, were delivered the day before the judge's marriage to Cheryl Vaughan, a former Tarrant County adult probation employee.

Plans for the wedding were made in December, when the trial was scheduled for April, the Dallas Morning News reported. The trial was reset for May and lasted longer than expected, leaving Cave wondering if he would be waiting for a verdict on his wedding day.

The trial featured almost half-a-dozen weeks of testimony that included steamy tales of sex scandals and an airing of tactics used by a special Fort Worth police unit known as The Project.

Angela Smitherman, 18, testified the unit questioned her for 18 hours without letting her call an attorney, but police refuted her statement, saying she called her boyfriend several times and never asked for an attorney.

Bob Flowers, director of the State Commission on Judicial Conduct, said earlier this week that Cave would lose his $75,587 annual salary if he was found guilty. A hearing to remove him from the bench would follow, he said.

U.S. District Judge Mary Lou Robinson ordered a pre-sentence investigation of Cave be completed in a month. Sentencing would be scheduled after completion of the investigation, she said.

If that happens, "I'll have to go to work," Cave, 57, told the Morning News. Cave adamantly denies he will resign.

"You know better than that," he said. Cave said he would fight back "always and every day" but refused to explain how.

Waste dump opponents optimistic about proposal

HEREFORD (AP) — Opponents of a proposed high-level nuclear waste dump in Deaf Smith County say a proposal to halt the project could be introduced to a U.S. Senate subcommittee within three weeks.

"It's in draft form right now, but it looks like it's going to get bipartisan support," Delbert Devin, executive director of the Nuclear Waste Task Force, said Friday after ribbon-cutting ceremonies at the opening of the People Opposing Wasted Energy Repositories office.

The event, sanctioned by the Deaf Smith Chamber of Commerce, was attended by about 40 residents; Rep. John Smithee, R-Amarillo; Dan Smith of the Governor's Nuclear Waste Programs Office; and Hereford leaders.

Devin returned Thursday from a five-day trip to Washington in the latest of a series of lobbying efforts to lawmakers watching the federal nuclear waste program.

"I have never seen such momentum for such a proposal" among lawmakers on the trip with task force member Tonya Klueskens, Devin said. The pair also testified before the Nuclear Regulation Subcommittee of the Environmental and Public Works Committee.

The four-point proposal was developed in February by the task force and generally followed by Gov. Bill Clements in a letter he sent to Texas congressional delegates in April.

Among other things, it calls for a halt to the U.S. Department of Energy's repository program, including land acquisition efforts at the 9-square-mile site north of Hereford that is one of three finalists for the first dump.

It also proposes that Congress appoint an independent commission to review DOE's repository and Monitored Retrievable Storage programs.

Devin said the proposal most likely would be co-sponsored by Sens. Jim Sasser, R-Tennessee, and Texas' Phil Gramm and Lloyd Bentsen. All three were very receptive to the plan, he said.

Fredeman brothers plead guilty to theft

BEAUMONT (AP) — Two brothers of the Fredeman shipping family and their tugboat fueling company have pleaded guilty to federal charges involving theft of fuel and marine equipment.

Henry F. Fredeman II, 46, pleaded guilty Friday to two counts of theft of marine equipment, while his brother William Fredeman Jr., 49, pleaded guilty to charges of not telling about a federal felony of which he had knowledge.

Henry Fredeman could receive up to 10 years in prison and $10,000 in fines, and William Fredeman faces a maximum six years in prison and $1,000 in fines.

U.S. District Judge Sam Hall has scheduled sentencing for Aug. 3.

The brothers' Channel Fueling Services Inc. pleaded guilty to one count of theft of fuel and could be fined up to $5,000. Both brothers live in Groves and the company is based in Port Arthur.

Letter-writers deplore selling of Alamo, planning team says

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Texans should be ashamed of the way commercialism has enveloped one of the nation's most fabled shrines of liberty.

That's according to letters Alamo visitors have sent to the Alamo Plaza Planning Team, which is studying ways to renovate the plaza while adequately capturing the history of the Alamo compound as it was during the 1836 battle for independence from Mexico.

Team member Gary Foreman said the group, which hopes to take several proposals to City Council later this month, has received "hundreds" of letters from throughout Texas, the United States and even Europe.

And most suggested removing the raspa — snowcone — vendors and tour buses from the plaza.

"There are so many people outside San Antonio who are concerned about how we display the history of San Antonio," Foreman said Friday. "They want to make it more respectable than it is today. They think we should remove the commercialism and get rid of the buses."

Legislature failed to address budget

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

Levine

AUSTIN — Pointing to a record 30-percent increase in bills passed, House Speaker Gib Lewis maintains that the 70th Legislature's regular session was not a failure.

He's wrong. Regardless of the number of good or bad bills approved, the Legislature failed because it did not — could not — address the only issue that really matters: the state budget. Lawmakers will return here in a few weeks to take another stab at the matter, but unless they understand why the first 140 days fizzled, no number of 30-day special session will succeed.

Despite passage of various tough-on-crime and economic development measures that he favored, the regular session goes down as a failure for Gov. Bill Clements, too. The Legislature never caught on to Clements' attempts to lead by pushing — a curious metaphor — rather than pulling them along.

The governor too must learn from his mistakes and step to the front as a consensus-forging leader. Otherwise lawmakers will do in the special session what many of them wanted to do during the regular session: leave him behind altogether.

Clements and the Legislature failed for a variety of reasons — some political, some philosophical and some mathematical — all intertwined. Until they all pick up on some simple lessons, they will remain billions of dollars apart. Some observations:

— All creatures of the electorate, our leaders' actions were obviously governed somewhat by how they perceived the voters would respond. Clements and the Republicans had a no-new-taxes vow to protect. Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and most of the moderate-to-liberal Democrats saw constituents in need of real services. Each side tried to gain political points by painting the other as the obstacle to compromise.

LESSON NO. 1: Put the next election aside and concentrate instead on Texans' needs from state government and their relative ability to finance those needs.

— The Senate, House and governor all hold genuinely different views of what government is supposed to do. They range from the Hobby-led Senate's perspective that an expansive government can both take care of citizens' needs and help rejuvenate the economy, to Clements' less-is-best and taxes-retard-the-recovery philosophy. The House occupies a middle ground, not out of genuine consensus but rather because of Lewis' need to balance 150 views that go from the left of Hobby to the right of Clements.

LESSON NO. 2: Combine political philosophy with compromise. Stalemate satisfies no one's desires.

— That compromise, however, can never be reached without solving a third, underlying problem. Like Reagan and Gorbachev summitting without a translator, Clements and the lawmakers never found a common budget language. When Governor Bill talked about the current level of spending, his figure — based on the bottom line in the most recent appropriations bill — was $36.1 billion. Legislators, relying on their staff's knowledge that the state spends a lot more than shows up on the bottom line, set that figure at $37.9 million. The law-writers and the chief executive also quibbled over the number of children expected to attend public schools for the next two years, the number of families eligible for welfare and the number of old folks whose nursing home care the state might have to underwrite.

LESSON NO. 3: Bring everybody to the same playing field. Clements rightly has directed the various staffs to come up with an apples-to-apples set of figures that all can agree on.

— The budget impasse never broke because neither the governor nor the Legislature fought more than a war of words. The Constitution directs legislators to write the laws and governors to veto or sign and enforce them. It became apparent months ago that compromise was not to come, yet each side acted like a pair of boxers sizing each other up and never throwing a punch.

LESSON NO. 4: Do what you're supposed to do. If no pre-arranged agreement can be reached, the Legislature should send Clements a budget and a tax bill to pay for it. If he signs it, you've called his bluff. If he vetoes it, try to override. If that fails, try again.

Good luck.

Steve Levine heads the Reporter-Telegram's Austin Bureau. When opinion appears in this column, it is the opinion of the writer and not necessarily of the newspaper.

Black woman among new astronauts

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — NASA has announced the selection of 15 astronaut trainees, including the first black woman ever picked for the space corps.

The astronaut class is made up of four trainees from the Air Force, three from the Navy, one each from the Marines, Coast Guard and Army, and five civilians, the space agency said Friday.

Seven were selected as pilots, and the others as mission specialists for the space shuttle. The selection followed evaluation of 1,962 applications, and medical examinations and interviews with 117.

The trainees are to report to the Johnson Space Center in Houston on Aug. 17 for a year of training and evaluation. They then would be eligible to be named to space shuttle flight crews.

Three of the civilians selected are employees at the Houston center, and one works at NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center in Alabama. The first black woman named an astronaut trainee is Dr. Mae C. Jemison, 30, a general practitioner in Glendale, Calif.

Those from the Air Force are Capt. Thomas D. Akers, Capt. Curtis L. Brown Jr., Maj. Kevin P. Chilton and Maj. Donald R. McMonagle.

The Navy selections are Lt. Kenneth D. Bowersox, Lt. Cmdr. Kenneth S. Reightler Jr., and Lt. Cmdr. Mario Runco Jr.

Others in the military are Marine Capt. Andrew M. Allen, Army Maj. James S. Voss and Coast Guard Lt. Cmdr. Bruce E. Melnick. In addition to Jemison, the civilians are Jan D. Dozier, C. Michael Foale, Gregory J. Harbaugh and William F. Readdy.

STATE IN BRIEF

Woman gets 33 years

EASTLAND (AP) — A woman convicted in the bizarre murder of a store clerk whose dead body was bathed, re-dressed and dabbed with makeup has been sentenced to 33 years in prison.

Brenda Gail Andrews, 24, of Austin was sentenced Friday, but her two co-defendants were acquitted in the slaying of Debra Jo Garcia, who was abducted, robbed and raped before being shot once through the head.

Ms. Andrews, who sobbed as officers led her to jail, cried out "God, I'm innocent," dropped her head and pounded her fist on the defense table as the sentence was read.

She received the only guilty verdict in the bizarre organized crime trial centering on a grocery clerk whose tidied corpse was found two days after her Nov 29, 1981, disappearance from the store where she worked in Cisco.

Richard Edward Hinton, 57, of Austin and Pat Starr, 24, of Gorman, were acquitted of charges of organized crime activity.

DPS agents kill man in lot

DALLAS (AP) — Two Department of Public Safety undercover officers shot a suspected drug dealer to death in a grocery store parking lot after he fired at them while trying to escape, authorities said.

In an operation described by DPS Capt. Wesley Crites as a "drug bust gone sour," the two officers fired four times, killing a man identified as Edward Dominques, 44, of Dallas.

A second man, Lasaro De La Paz, 38, was charged with aggravated delivery of a controlled substance and was being held in Lew Sterrett Justice Center Saturday in lieu of $25,000 bond, officials said.

DPS officials and Dallas police are investigating the shooting at Hodges grocery, DPS spokesman Ray Ward said Saturday. The grocery usually is crowded on Fridays, and several bystanders criticized officers for firing at a public place.

Ward said officers try to avoid public places for drug busts but sometimes it cannot be avoided. Undercover officers must meet suspects where they regularly conduct business to avoid arousing their suspicion, Ward said.

Whoopers' eggs moved

AUSTWELL (AP) — Experts have managed to slip two dozen whooping crane eggs under other nesting birds in Idaho and Maryland in an experiment to help save the endangered species, officials say.

Whooping cranes lay and hatch two eggs, but typically, only one fledgling per nest survives. So biologists recently took 24 unhatched eggs — one each from summer nests in Canada for use in experimental programs in the two states.

A record 30 pairs of whoopers, the same flock that winters in South Texas, are nesting this spring at the Wood Buffalo National Park in the Canadian Northwest Territories, said Tom Stehn, wildlife biologist at the Aransas National Wildlife Refuge at Austwell.

Thunderstorm chances grow

From Staff and Wire Reports

The chance for thunderstorms will begin building up today, predicts the National Weather Service at the Midland Regional Airport.

Today will be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of afternoon thunderstorms. The high will be in the mid-80s. Winds will be southeast at 5 to 15 mph.

Tonight will continue to be partly cloudy with a low in the lower 60s.

On Monday the chance for afternoon and evening thunderstorms will be 20 percent. The high will be in the upper 80s.

Saturday's high of 82 degrees was 22 degrees cooler than the record high of 104 degrees set in 1964.

The overnight low of 58 degrees was 10 degrees warmer than the record low of 48 set in 1983.

STATE

Scattered showers and thunderstorms ranged across parts of South Texas Saturday afternoon.

Runoff from heavy rains last week had the Guadulupe and San Antonio rivers out of their banks, but the National Weather Service said precipitation like that which caused flooding throughout the region was not in the forecast.

A weak, stationary front along the Texas coast combined with a weak upper-level low-pressure system over the Coastal Bend to create the most recent rainfall, the weather service said.

Strong thunderstorms dotted the coast near Corpus Christi and near Del Rio embedded in showers stretching from Brownsville to the Big Bend region.

The storms kept skies mostly cloudy along the coast as far as Galveston, along the Rio Grande and into West Texas.

NATION

Thunderstorms rumbled over the South from central Florida to southern Texas, and parts of southern California were under a flash flood watch, while parts of the Plains sizzled in record high temperatures.

Flash flood watches were posted in the southern California mountains and foothill communities as a new wave of thunderstorms followed an outbreak that caused blackouts and brushfires.

The National Weather Service warned that flooding was possible from San Bernardino National Forest to Los Padres National Forest, including parts of Riverside, San Bernardino, Los Angeles, Ventura and Santa Barbara counties.

The rain failed to stop a series of lightning-ignited brushfires in Riverside County, including 1,000-acre blaze near Lake Elsinore.

'Blue Star' not problem here

Police unsure where LSD tale began

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Colorful, LSD-soaked papers are not being offered to school-age children in Midland, despite a strong warning letter distributed by principals here, Midland police said this week.

A memo to Midland police, supposedly from the San Antonio Police Department, about "Blue Star" tattoos containing the hallucinogenic drug was copied and sent to most schools in Midland.

That was premature, police said.

"We had not checked it out, either in San Antonio or Midland, to find out if it really was a problem," said Cpl. Jim White, Midland police spokesman. "It should not have been sent out."

White said when he checked with San Antonio police, he found out the letter did not come from that department. The author of the letter is a mystery, he said.

"I contacted San Antonio police, found out they are not having a problem either," he said. "The letter just appeared on their doorstep, so to speak.

"There are cases existing of this type of LSD use, but not here, or in San Antonio. We've never had a case of it, nor have we ever arrested anybody who had a drug like that in their possession."

The letter was left in one of the deputy chief's office about May 1, White said.

According to the letter, the menace "is a small sheet of white paper containing blue stars about the size of a pencil eraser. Each star can be removed and be placed in the mouth. The LSD can also be absorbed through the skin simply by handling the paper.

"There are also brightly-colored paper tabs resembling postage stamps that have pictures of Superman, butterflies, clowns, Mickey Mouse, and other Disney characters on them," the letter said.

Some of the stickers steeped in LSD are also laced with strychnine, the letter said.

White said he was asked to "look into" the facts of the letter, but before he did the letter was copied and sent to the schools.

Since then, teachers and students have been notified that the problem is not serious.

"But, we are not just going to ignore it," White said. "The students have been told not to take anything that does not have a manufactured seal, or anything that looks old, dirty, or tampered with."

Kip Kapena, head of security for the Midland Independent School District, said he saw a copy of the letter. He said the problem as described in the letter doesn't exist in Midland.

"It (the letter) shouldn't have been distributed, because we don't have a threat," he said. "I've read about it and heard of them (the tattoos), you know, back in the sixties, but that's it.

"I wish they wouldn't have passed the letter to the schools."

White agreed, and he said the letter and its mystery author have caused nothing but headaches.

"It really caused a lot of alarm. It's something that we just didn't need," he said.

What's cooking at the hospital?

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Flabby red Jell-O and cold chicken bouillon topped with a flimsy layer of grease — arriving mercifully hidden by a jade green-colored Melmac cover sporting an index finger hole — used to be prototypic images of hospital food.

Perhaps reacting to subliminal survival instincts, patients may be justified in seeking cover under a hospital bed's muslin sheets when they hear kitchen staff — wearing hairnets — reeling steel food carts down the hallway.

Gone are those days in Midland.

In an effort to bring to new heights the culinary conscience of their respective kitchens, the city's two major hospitals now have employed bona fide chefs to oversee food preparation.

One was snagged from a French restaurant in Midland and one from an exclusive country club in nearby Lubbock.

The trend is relatively new, according to the president of the San Antonio-based Texas Chefs Association (TCA).

"Hospitals are getting more sophisticated and more gourmet meals are being put out," said TCA President Isaac Pina, chef at the Harlingen Country Club.

"I think it's tremendous," Pina said. Of the 592 members in his organization, Pina said about 25 are hospital chefs.

"There was an old joke in Canada about being a hospital chef," remembered Michel McKay, 29, chef at the 60-bed Physicians & Surgeons Hospital. "If the doctor doesn't kill you, the food will." He added that in days gone by, working as a hospital chef "was one step up from working in a coffee shop."

Upon entering the kitchen at P&S, one is first struck by the site of bottles of a nice fume' blanc — vintage 1985 — poised casually next to generic cans of pepper.

McKay, who graduated from a three-year cooking program at the Institute of Tourism Hotelerie of Quebec in Montreal, said the challenge in making that old joke ring untrue is in preparing hospital food that is visually appealing and tasty to boot.

The French-Canadian chef — who finds Texans "very, very friendly" — said that challenge is compounded by the fact that he's often working with diabetic, low-cholesterol and sodium-restricted diets.

Parents and students say Milam Elementary School teacher Jackie Payne personifies a genuine love for her students in and out of the classroom. Here, she demonstrates some of her teaching talents during reading class.

When teacher talks, her students listen

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

The relationship between Jackie Payne and first grade students at Milam Elementary School is one in which she talks, they listen. She teaches, they learn. She motivates, they strive. She excites, they excel.

But on holidays, when she has been known to dress up in costumes depicting special events at Midland Park Mall, that relationship changes to one between children and the Halloween witch, Mrs. Claus or the Easter Bunny's mother.

It is on both counts that Mrs. Payne has been selected Teacher of the Month by the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

Parents, students and colleagues tend to agree that Mrs. Payne genuinely loves her students in and out of the classroom.

"We have all known teachers who regard teaching our children as just a paycheck," Donna Terry wrote in her nomination letter. "We have also known those special few who put their heart and soul into teaching our children.

She added, "There is also the teacher who not only puts her heart and soul, but also her blood, sweat and tears into transforming our children into the best they can be. There is a special bond between this teacher and her students."

Jackie Burns said she was apprehensive about her daughter Rachel's first year of school. But once she saw Mrs. Payne in action in the classroom, she knew Rachel was in good hands, she said.

"I have never seen a more dedicated teacher.... She seems able to get the very most out of each student," Mrs. Burns said.

Rachel echoed her mother's sentiments, saying "She (Mrs. Payne) loves me. She is proud of me when I do my work. She is my teacher and my friend."

Teacher's aide Dinah Thomas, who was assigned to Mrs. Payne's class last September, said, "She is energetic, enthusiastic, patient, considerate, understanding, witty and very talented.... I, along with the children, adore her."

A graduate of the University of Oklahoma, Mrs. Payne earned a master's degree in education from East Texas State University and has been an elementary school teacher for 17 years, recently completing her fifth year with the Midland Independent School District.

She is a certified reading specialist, past president of the Texas council of the International Reading Association and comes from a long line of educators. Her husband, Bob, is a sixth grade teacher at Crockett Elementary School and her parents are teachers.

"We all share the same passion for teaching," Mrs. Payne said of her family. "There was never anything else I wanted to do with my life. I have a lot of interests, but I found that I can use all the talents God gave me in the classroom. I can't think of anything I'd rather do. For me, it's a profession, a career, a lifetime calling."

Howard County expected to approve ambulance contract

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

BIG SPRING — Meetings of the Howard County Commissioners Court and Big Spring City Council Monday are expected to bring approval of a contract for countywide ambulance service with a Scottsdale, Ariz., firm.

Mack Walker, Big Spring city manager, says a joint city-county advisory group has recommended acceptance of an ambulance service proposal from the Scottsdale-based Rural Metro, which was one of six companies responding to a call for proposals.

The current provider, Lee Ambulance, owned by Charles Ginn, notified the city and county of its intent to cease providing ambulance service as of July 15th.

The proposal submitted by Rural Metro, Walker said, closely approximated the total amount Lee Ambulance had been paid — about $101,000. The difference between the current contract and the proposed contract is that in-kind services provided by the City of Big Spring reduced the actual cash outlay.

The second company considered, Texas EMS of Houston, proposed a contract calling for a subsidy of $204,000 per year, according to the Big Spring City Manager.

Under the current contract, Howard County has been contributing $3,000 per month and the city about $4,000 a month, with the city providing space in the fire station and dispatching services through the Big Spring Police Department. Value of the in-kind services were estimated at about $14,000 by Walker.

Under the proposed contract to be considered by Howard County commissioners in regular session Monday morning and city council members in a special called session Monday afternoon, Rural Metro will provide three ambulances for full-time service. A fourth ambulance will be provided by the city. The fourth unit would be available on an as needed basis only.

Walker said the proposal calls for the city to provide 55 percent of the funding, while the county would put up 45 percent.

The primary difference between the current and proposed contract is that Rural Metro will provide its own housing for the three ambulance units. The city manager said he expected the police department would continue to provide dispatching services for the new ambulance company.

Walker said Rural Metro will be completely responsible for billing and collecting from patients using the ambulance service.

Lee Ambulance not only provided transportation service within the county for all residents, but had a contract to transport V.A. Hospital and other patients to wherever they needed to go.

GARY OTT

My dreams — what few I can remember — stink

Ott

It has always been one of my biggest disappointments that I do not have great dreams. Or, if I do, I don't remember them.

Other people will sit around a table and discuss in great detail some elaborate dream they had the night before. It will often involve international espionage or wild sexual fantasies.

I, on the other hand, can only lean back and listen. My dreams — what few I can remember — stink.

They are lousy. They are boring. And, they are no fun.

When God was handing out the ability to dream I must have been taking a bathroom break. Nature was calling and I got left out. Such is life.

Actually, that's not quite right.

I used to have dreams. They weren't terribly exciting, mind you, but they were certainly better than the mundane ones I suffer through now.

As a small child, I was fairly normal. I would dream of hitting a home run in the bottom of the last inning to win the big Little League game.

Later, while in high school, I would experience dreams — in unmentionable detail — about the varsity cheerleaders, often involving me and all of them performing remarkable physical feats off the playing field.

And, finally, as a married man, I continued to be normal. I would dream about a variety of women, none of whom were my wife.

But now something dreadful has occurred. My dreams have ceased to exist. Maybe God decided I was having too much fun and put an end to them. I really can't say for sure. All I know is that the dreaming has stopped.

Rarely do I awake these days with any fond memories at all. A severe case of the dry heaves is about it.

Still, I must make an important distinction here. Just because I don't have dreams doesn't mean I don't have nightmares. I do. Constantly. Big, nasty, ugly nightmares. The kind that make you leap out of bed in a cold sweat. The kind that leave you staring blankly at a wall while attempting to separate your false visions from reality.

In the past two months, for example, I have suffered through the following nightmares:

— Jesus, all 900 feet of Him, stands before me and says, "Oral Roberts was right. You really shouldn't have repeated all those jokes you heard. I was not amused."

— Spiro Agnew makes a successful political comeback.

— The Dallas Cowboys win next year's Super Bowl and I have to listen to their obnoxious fans for 12 months.

— I'm forced to have dinner with Nancy Reagan. Also seated at our table are Bert Parks, Minnie Pearl, Phil Donahue, Pat Boone and a Bloomingdale or two.

— I appear on "60 Minutes" and out of nowhere Mike Wallace reveals undeniable proof that I cheated on a high school history exam. The whole country watches as I squirm.

— Hardened criminals kidnap me and force me to watch reruns of "Three's Company."

— Sonny Bono gets elected president.

Pastor injured when addition's roof collapses

From Staff Reports

The pastor of a Midland church was hospitalized with a broken leg after the roof of a church addition he was working on collapsed Saturday afternoon, the Midland police report.

Manuel Hernandez, 52, pastor of the Templo Jerusalem Church, was listed in stable condition Saturday night at Midland Memorial Hospital following an operation on his broken right leg, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Armando Hernandez, 20, 22-year-old Martin Mendez and Rafael Carrillo, 39, were treated and released from the hospital after the accident, she said.

According to police reports, the men were putting up roof supports, when the roofing joints collapsed around 1:40 p.m. Saturday, injuring the four men.

In other police reports almost $700 worth of lawn equipment was taken from a home in the 4800 block of Elma Drive sometime between 5 p.m. and midnight Friday. The homeowners reported stolen a $329 lawnmower, a $100 gas-powered trimming devise and a $257 edger.

Two car stereos were reported taken Saturday including one in the 1500 block of south Baird Street and one in the 1400 block of south Marshall Street.

The sheriff's office reports almost $200 worth of magazines taken from the Stop & Go Market at 7715 E. U.S. Highway 80 sometime between 12 a.m. and 4:40 a.m. Saturday.

Reports said the burglars used bodily force to break a window and remove the magazines.

CHEFS

"There was an old joke in Canada about being a hospital chef. If the doctor doesn't kill you, the food will."

— Michel McKay, chef
Physicians & Surgeons Hospital

He uses fresh foods — mainly fruit, vegetables and fish — and amply spices dishes with approved condiments to balance those restrictions with a final goal of tastiness, he said.

When P&S opened in December 1985, McKay instigated a now-defunct gourmet meal composed mainly of French and Italian dishes.

De rigeur dishes included in his plan were lobster thermidor and veal cordon bleu.

"But you don't try to make somebody try a new dish when they're sick. They just want to have the nutrients," said McKay, whose daily servings add up to about 120 meals.

Midland Memorial Hospital chef Bobby Larry, 28, left behind horticulture studies at Texas Tech University in his home town of Lubbock to assume a full-time chef's position at the Lubbock City Club.

He later served as chef at the Lakeridge Country Club, also in Lubbock, before being handed the golden spatula at the 272-bed MMH last March.

"We are trying to change the image (of hospital food) from an institutional one to one of a restaurant or country club. It should look as good as it tastes," Larry said. "People remember the service and the food at a hospital."

A patient on a regular diet at MMH is presented with a filet mignon his first night, said Larry, whose servings number 500-600 a day.

With the help of dieticians, Larry has researched the types of food certain patients can and can't have, while keeping in mind the most patients' major complaint — blandness. "But for liquid diets, there's not much I can do," Larry acknowledged.

New deserts are on the way for diabetic patients at MMH. These promise to taste just as good as the fattening kind, but instead will be made with artificial sweeteners.

Parsley garnishes add to the aesthetic value of a dish, the MMH chef said.

"We are slowly changing the menus to nouvelle cuisine," Larry said, which means that lighter sauces and stocks cooked for shorter periods will be used.

The palates of many West Texan patients tend to run to their homegrown favorites — "Tex Mex" staples like fajitas, chicken fried steak, fried chicken and starches such as potatoes — the chefs agreed.

In addition to the basic daily fare at the hospitals — which are offered cyclically on a weekly basis at MMH and are written whimsically by P&S' McKay — patients also can ask for and receive a variety of substitutions.

On the days of the interviews with the chefs, for instance, McKay had scheduled fajitas for lunchtime. However, a patient also could have ordered shrimp, chicken salad or a hamburger, McKay said.

Across town, Larry — who carries a meat thermometer in his top left shirt pocket — offered catfish for lunch. But patients also could order basically anything they wanted — even a peanut butter and jelly sandwich, he said.

"I pushed my luck," McKay said, recalling an afternoon several months ago when his offering for lunch went a bit too far.

If no substitution request was registered, a patient at his hospital received octopus salad in a tomato juice spiced with hints of garlic, onions and peppers.

"I served it because it was healthy!" McKay said in his own defense. About 95 percent of the P&S patient just said no to octopus that day, but those who tasted it "loved it," the chef said.

A funny situation of a different sort happened to Larry one afternoon.

One of his duties in the kitchen at MMH is overseeing the daily scratch baking of bread and rolls, he said. And on that day, more than 30 loaves were set atop the warm industrial-sized oven to expedite the dough's rising process.

The dough rose, but then started oozing over the sides of the bread pans and down the sides of the hospital's huge ovens.

"That was a fun day in the cafeteria, let me tell you," Larry said.

Both chefs — who agree on their favorite spice: garlic — are married and both do the cooking at home.

"I wouldn't dare let my wife do the cooking," McKay said. "She takes two hours to do what I can do in 15 minutes."

Mrs. Larry tells her husband that cooking for a chef is too hard, Larry said.

When the chefs aren't taking care of patient and cafeteria meals, they cook for special affairs held at the hospitals.

Larry specializes in french pastries, ice carvings and "tallow" carvings. Those are similar to ice carvings, but made instead with a combination of animal fat, parafin and beeswax.

A spice and vegetable garden at home takes up some of McKay's spare time.

"I have recently experienced elephant garlic and I love it," the French-Canadian chef said. "It's more potent and it makes a flower."

Pastries and cookies also can be had by patients at McKay's hospital.

"We have cookies that bees would come to," he said.

Cause of fatal fire not yet determined

From Staff Reports

Fire investigators said Saturday they won't know until Monday the cause of a Friday afternoon mobile home blaze that took the life of a Midland woman.

Audrey Evelyn Potter, 51, died around 4:30 p.m. Friday inside her mobile home on County Road 121, about one-quarter mile west of Rankin Highway.

Assistant Fire Marshall Lon Dominguez said Saturday that the fire started around the couch in the living room.

The fire destroyed the northern portion of the home and caused smoke damage throughout the mobile home, fire officials said.

Man will be charged

AUSTIN (AP) — A man who was rescued from flooded Barton Creek Thursday by a city-owned medical helicopter will be sent a bill for $180, city officials said.

James Kopecky, 29, of Austin was stranded on a rock in the middle of the raging creek Thursday afternoon when he and two friends tried to ride a raft down the flooded creek.

AMBULANCE—

According to the cost of ambulance service for Big Spring-Howard County residents requiring advanced life support system assistance will be about $175 per run. The cost of a run for a patient requiring only basic life support has not yet been firmly established.

However, Walker said the actual amount of the city-county subsidy, as well as rates to be charged, won't be known for sure until both city and county governing bodies approve a final contract, he said.

A mudroom is a sensible, practical addition that provides a transitional space between the dirty outdoors and the clean indoors. A good mudroom serves as an entryway, storage area, and an energy-saving air lock that keeps the ambient air from mixing freely with the home's conditioned air. It has hooks on the walls or a built-in coat closet. It has at least one bench where a person can sit down to pull off muddy footwear. And, it has lots of organized space for keeping sports equipment, gardening tools, and other such gear in one handy place. A properly designed mudroom is easy to maintain with its sturdy, mopable floors and cleanable walls. However, even if the mudroom stays dirty for awhile, that is the point.

Support should go to Texas effort

The Superconducting Super Collider — that mind-boggling particle accelerator the U.S. government is proposing to build in the next couple of years — is a sugar-coated plum that most cities in this country would be delighted to acquire. After all, the predictions about the technological explosion, and the resulting business activity it will generate could mean an economic windfall for the region in which the laboratory is built.

So the intense competition for the facility was entirely predictable. The effort in West Texas promoting a site at Garden City has been at the forefront of the rush for the SSC with a staggering amount of money, time and talent invested by a large number of people. Their dedication to the Garden City proposal has been outstanding and in true West Texas style, they have pursued the goal with no thought of failure.

Unfortunately for the Garden City supporters — and we naturally have been among them — the Texas National Research Laboratory Commission charged with picking the sites the state will submit to the Department of Energy didn't choose the Garden City proposal. Then it went a step further by rejecting the Garden City group's appeal of that decision. We still believe that the Garden City site was one of the two best, if not the best, Texas could have offered. But after twice being rejected, the consideration now centers on whether the local commission should pursue the goal further or drop the quest. We believe it's time to accept defeat and move on to other matters.

That decision did not come lightly. There has been strong support shown throughout West Texas for trying to attract the facility. In Midland alone, $50,000 was raised in contributions from individuals and companies. That fact underscores the commitment locally to the effort to attract the SSC. But officials with the local commission have indicated it would take at least another $150,000 to polish the proposal were an independent offering to be made to the DOE. Frankly, that's too much to spend on what now must be viewed as a long shot at best.

Two other West Texas cities involved in the Garden City effort — San Angelo and Big Spring — have reconsidered the cost of updating the proposal. San Angelo chamber officials voted earlier this week to send the proposal as is without spending more money and Big Spring Industrial Foundation representatives have said they want the proposal submitted but at minimal cost.

While such a posture would address the concern raised about spending more on what appears to be a futile effort, we have some reservations about submitting the Garden City proposal to the Department of Energy at all. In large part those reservations stem from concerns expressed that indicate an individual effort aside from the official state offering would hurt the state's chances in the national bidding.

We truly appreciate all the time and hard work that has gone into the Garden City proposal, but going further certainly could prove counterproductive. At the least, all implications of a direct-to-DOE effort should be seriously considered.

When the project first became a public issue most supporters of the Garden City proposal agreed that if the site was not selected Texans should back the site (or sites) that were. Perhaps it is time to do just that.

Another View:

Picking presidents

When private indiscretions topple a leading presidential candidate, and scandalous performance in office threatens to disable a once-revered president, Americans need to ponder the standards they use in selecting their chief executive.

How much weight should be given to a candidate's private life, as distinct from his or her record in public office? (Reports about Gary Hart's private life destroyed his candidacy, even though he had solid professional qualifications.)

Is a candidate's ability to project the aura of leadership as important as his or her stand on issues and mastery of governmental process? Is it vital for a would-be-president to have a grand vision for the nation's future, or is it perhaps more essential to have good judgment, decent instincts, a solid grasp of public policy and an unswerving moral compass?

In short, which measures will best predict a future president's actual performance? The answers to such questions are never as clear-cut as one would like them to be. The presidency, after all, doesn't lend itself to detailed job description. Within the limits of the law — and, deplorably, sometimes beyond the limits — the office tends to be what the occupant makes it.

A president can sharply change the social order as Franklin Roosevelt and Lyndon Johnson did, or freeze the status quo for a time, in the style of Dwight Eisenhower. Presidents also can lead the nation into war, for unjust as well as just causes. That fact, above all else, should dictate that people know as much as possible about the candidates.

The Wall Street Journal recently commissioned a poll to sample the public's attitudes about the qualifications a presidential candidate should possess. "A vision and plan for the country" was put at the top of the list by 48 percent of the respondents. No other qualifications got so much support. In second place, with 24 percent, was "a record of competence." Third, at 17 percent, was "strong moral character." Only 9 percent of respondents said it was most important to have a candidate they agreed with on major issues.

Dreaming great dreams is a noble American tradition, but it's troubling that candidates' competence and stands on issues were not ranked higher. Fewer things can get a president in trouble faster than incompetence. And why do voters deem it so important for a candidate to have a plan for the future if it doesn't much matter whether they agree with the candidate's positions on issues?

Contradictions in public opinion polls, of course, are not always as real as they seem. Nonetheless, given the importance of choosing presidential candidates truly worthy of the office, voters would do well to pay more attention to competence, judgment and character in its broadest sense.

JACK ANDERSON

Mexico not expected to go communist

WASHINGTON — If the Mexican time bomb of chaos and revolution we've been warning about ever stops ticking and explodes, it's unlikely that our volatile neighbor will go communist as some apocalyptic right-wing analysts have predicted.

Jack Anderson

This at least is what a crack CIA team concluded after an extensive, in-depth study of Mexico. We have obtained a copy of the resulting report, which is stamped both "Secret" and "Noforn" (meaning it was not to be distributed to friendly foreign intelligence services).

In a notation attached to the team's report, Robert Gates, deputy director of intelligence at the time, explained what was "special" about the task force he had appointed to take an unprecedented four-month look at Mexico's problems.

The team included an expert on Mexico, an "LDC" (for lesser-developed countries) economic specialist and another on "Third World instability." These were all from the CIA itself. The fourth member of the task force was described by Gates as "an expert outside consultant."

They were "commissioned to carry out an independent examination of Mexico's problems and prospects, with special emphasis on the potential for significant instability," according to the Gates notation.

The report described the various ingredients that went into the study: "extensive travel by the team to Mexico; numerous meetings with U.S. academic and business people with expertise, experience or contacts in Mexico; a series of special studies and polls commissioned by the team and exploitation of considerable information and analysis already available to U.S. government (and intelligence) agencies."

One area of special interest to the team was treated in an eight-page Appendix F: "Communist Presence and Influence in Mexico." The task force's conclusion will provide little significant grist for the mills of the Reagan administration's alarmist advocates of a red tide/domino theory for Central America.

"Mexico provides a favorable environment for the Soviet Union and Cuba to push their policy interests against those of the United States, particularly as they pertain to Central America," the secret report notes disarmingly. "The Mexican government allows its territory to be used as a base for political support and propaganda — much of which is anti-U.S. — by foreign revolutionaries and communists as long as the government does not perceive those activities as internal interference."

But the report then adds: "Because Moscow values its close diplomatic relations with Mexico, the Soviet Union tries to keep a low profile in Mexico, relying to a greater extent on overt activities than does Cuba."

The secret report continues: "Cuba, which has interests of its own in Mexico, has always had a two-track policy toward Mexico — overt diplomatic and economic relations on the one hand and a variety of open and clandestine contacts with the Mexican left and foreign revolutionaries on the other. Cuba, however, also exercises caution so as not to damage official relations."

As for Eastern European nations, the report concludes that "East Germany has been the most active in support of Soviet policies in Mexico."

The Kremlin has not been above developing and maintaining "a wide range of contacts among leftist groups in Mexico," the report states, adding:

"The most important is the Unified Socialist Party (PSUM), a coalition formed in 1981 of the Communist Party and several small leftist parties. The Soviets and Cubans have helped fund PSUM — along with the Mexican government itself, although the latter was under political reform legislation that also brings subsidies to other registered parties."

The report describes what Moscow hoped to gain from this meddling — and how these hopes were dashed: "The Soviets had backed the formation of the PSUM, hoping it would be more supportive of Moscow. The PSUM, however, has differed with the Soviets on such issues as Poland's Solidarity movement and the invasion of Afghanistan, and has been accused by Moscow of being Eurocommunist in orientation and lacking influence in the labor classes."

Despite the Kremlin's disillusion with its intended puppet party, the PSUM is now, thanks to the Soviets, virtually the only leftist game in town, though its estimated membership of only 30,000 doesn't give it much clout.

GEORGE F. WILL

Sitting on lead perilous strategy for Bush

WASHINGTON — People who pursue the fox of enlightenment — or even just the rabbit of entertainment — through the brambles of journalism were rewarded recently by a report from congested Iowa. It seems that the George Bush campaign has adopted a carefully calibrated plan of tactical blandness.

George F. Will

Now, making Bush bland is not a challenge comparable to climbing Annapurna, but the reasons for the blandification are illuminating, especially when helpfully explained by a member of the Bush brain trust using hearty football lingo.

One of Bush's handlers, commenting admiringly on the dullness of Bush's speeches, says: "We're moving the ball on the ground just fine. Unless they make us put it in the air, why do it? Everytime you take a position, you know you'll make someone angry."

That football thought has a distinguished pedigree. Every real American knows that when Woody Hayes was Ohio State's football coach, he regarded the forward pass as a sin as scarlet as liberalism. His teams ground out yards on the ground. His philosophy was "three yards and a cloud of dust." Bush's doctrine for our troubled times is "three yards and a cloud of fog." Or as a coach once said, "I have nothing to say and I'm only going to say it once."

A no-damned-nonsense-about-ideas approach is an understandable temptation for a front-runner, and is to some extent an occupational necessity for a vice president. Regarding the latter, Bush's comportment in that inherently awkward office has earned admiration for the decorum and self-denial he has shown.

But by now Bush has earned the right to assert, with the delicacy he has hitherto shown in his reticence, an independent political existence. He should speak less blandly. And his aides should speak less.

They especially should shut up about a strategy of running out the clock, a strategy known in sports parlance as sitting on a lead. The danger of it, for a team or campaign, is of losing momentum, sometimes called The Big Mo. Then the team or campaign is, as the vice president says, in deep do-do.

Already derision is heard from rivals, such as Pete duPont, the former governor of Delaware, mother state of presidential candidates. (With DuPont and Sen. Biden, Delaware has a candidate for every 310,000 residents, a record ratio.) DuPont once was an indigo horse but has risen rapidly and now is only mildly dark. He says Bush is hiding in a "cocoon."

Paul Laxalt, also a candidate, says DuPont's criticism is naughty because it violates the 11th Commandment (Moses was a Democrat), "Thou shalt not speak ill of another Republican." But DuPont has earned the right to twit a candidate like Bush who is, as economists say, risk-aversive. DuPont has the highest substance-to-blather ratio among candidates, even on subjects as sensitive as agriculture policy and Social Security.

Steven Wright, a comedian, jokes about experiencing amnesia and deja vu simultaneously. For Bush supporters, that is no laughing matter. Reagan's 1984 "It's morning in America" campaign was a cotton-candy campaign, gooey and substanceless. It won him a second term, but did not — could not — win him a mandate. Hence his second term lacked The Big Mo. There is no reason to believe the electorate craves a cotton-candy campaign from Bush.

Republicans who would like a candidate who does not believe in tactical blandness, a candidate who takes six positions before breakfast, may only have to wait until September to find her.

Jeane Kirkpatrick is about to go, as is her summer custom, to the south of France, there to complete a book on foreign policy. (A book chock-full of positions that will make someone angry. Some true-blue Bushies must blanch at the thought.) When she returns, she will consider entering the race. If she does, the day she does she will become the intensity front-runner — the candidate with the largest number of passionate supporters.

Bush's principal problem is measured by what pollsters call the "anybody but Jesus" question. The question is, approximately, this: Would you support your candidate against anybody but Jesus? The question measures the quality of a candidate's support.

When it is posed to Bush supporters, it reveals something that causes some experts to doubt that Bush will make it beyond New Hampshire: Bush has a remarkable intensity-deficit. That is a natural consequence of sitting on a lead lest someone get angry.

When in Washington, just mention 'Ollie'!

I spent a few hours in Washington where life is hard to bear. Everybody was saying "Ollie." It reminded me why life in Washington is hard to bear. It's that habit they have of calling newsy people by first names or nicknames.

Russell Baker

It finally drove me out of Washington. That was in 1974 when I couldn't bring myself to say Henry. I had only met the man once, and very formally at that. If he heard a complete stranger — namely, me — was going around Washington calling him Henry he would surely have thought me a fool. So I called him Kissinger.

As a result I was kicked off all the best-guest lists. What list maker wanted a guest who refused to say Henry just because he and Henry didn't happen to be buddy-buddy?

It was swell being off all the guest lists. I no longer had to listen to people saying Gerry or Jimmy or Ronnie when they meant the President. Really now, does any New Yorker say Ed when he means Koch? All right, Koch's family and friends probably do, but you don't go into a New York saloon and hear a roomful of guzzlers all saying Ed, do you?

When Koch goes to Washington, however, people who never met him stand around saying Ed. That's Washington. When I was there the other day, Ollie was the Washington thing to say. Ollie means Oliver North, a Marine officer, who has been in the news.

Absolutely everybody was saying Ollie. Cab drivers, systems analysts, deep-fry cooks, embassy chauffeurs, congressional elevator operators, diaper-service deliverymen, ICBM targeters, image consultants, wiretap technicians, evangelical lobbyists — the whole spectrum of Washington population was saying Ollie.

My business took me into a record shop, my business being a search for a few of the great Erroll Garner's old records to round out my collection. A helpful clerk said, "So you're one of Erroll's fans? You'd never guess who else is really crazy about Erroll."

Before he could say Ollie, I moved to block it, saying, "You'd never guess half the great people now dead who were big Erroll Garner fans in their day."

"You mean like Henry," he said.

"Henry's not dead," I said, "it just seems that way because he's mixed up with Dick again. What's more, people who really know him don't say Henry. They say Hank. But Hank was never one of the really great Erroll fans. Not like Chuck was."

A less courteous clerk, desperate to say his Ollie, would have cried, "Ollie," and felt better at once, but a civilized instinct for everything but the proper way of referring to people you don't know compelled him, instead, to ask if Chuck had given me any inside dope on whether Nancy was really running things and how many marbles Ronnie had left.

"Hardly," I said, pointing out that Chuck had been dead for years, like his pals Frankie and Winnie. "But you're too young to remember the good old days when Frankie entertained Winnie at the White House and talked about Chuck behind his back. Winnie used to call Chuck the Cross of Lorraine. He once said of all the crosses he had to bear none was heavier than the Cross of Lorraine."

The clerk, so polite for one so young, said it was an honor to sell some Erroll to a person who could say Frankie, Winnie and Chuck without feeling self-conscious. "But," he said, "I never knew the old-timers called him Frankie. I always thought they said F.D.R."

I said it was scandalous how little history the schools taught young people these days. "You've probably never heard of Julie or Gus or Clyde or any of that old Caesar gang that ran Rome into the ground."

No fool was this kid, but quick of wit and, like a fine-bred Washingtonian, not one to stand mute when the nickname-dropping started. As soon as I said Caesar he said, "Julie Caesar was the dude Marlon gave the funeral oration for in the movie based on Bill's Elizabethan five-acter. But Gus and Clyde . . .?"

"Top-drawer Caesars also known as Augustus and Claudius," but only, I pointed out, to Italian rustics and provincials from around the Mediterranean who rarely got to Rome, couldn't find the Forum with a street map and were so out of it that they didn't know that nobody who was anybody ever said Cicero when referring to the town's famous orator.

"I didn't know that either," the gentlemanly clerk confessed. "If sometime I should find myself in Rome and don't want to be mistaken for a rustic or a provincial, what should I call Cicero?"

"Henry," I said and raced for the door. Alas, too slow. Exiting, I heard him cry, "If you see him, give my best to Ollie!"

When disaster strikes, West Texans unite for common good

Modisett

The tornado that wiped the tiny community of Saragosa off the Texas map and left 29 people dead should remind everyone living in this part of the country that destruction and death are only a heartbeat away.

After recognizing that fact, the next logical step is to make yourself well-informed about what to do in an emergency situation because realizing that you're not prepared a couple of seconds after you see a funnel dropping out of the clouds can be a deadly mistake.

The past week or two in the Midland area have provided several good "reminders" of how quickly a storm can develop and how serious the situation can get quickly. When a storm approaches, the only wise course is to prepare for the worst and then anything less than the worst will be easier to handle.

Elsewhere on this page today, John Wright, the meteorologist-in-charge of the National Weather Service office here, provides an informative look at the weather service's warning programs, which are designed to help protect the public without causing undue worry and without providing faulty information. All-in-all, the weather service does a great job, considering they're dealing with a highly unpredictable side of nature.

In recent days the Reporter-Telegram also has published a number of letters that cited the outstanding efforts of ham radio operators and other volunteers who really went beyond the call of duty in providing relief to the survivors of the Saragosa tornado. They are certainly deserving of all the accolades they receive and more.

And, of course, we should not forget all the others — the people who donated money, clothes, food, supplies or whatever — who helped in the Saragosa disaster. It was a widespread effort that was typical of the compassion and helping spirit of the West Texas people. The relief effort was simply outstanding.

It only goes to show that when a disaster strikes, the people of West Texas still understand the need to band together for the common good. That's one of the traits of West Texans that makes life here so enjoyable and, in this day and time, unusual.

What a joke! The more I watch the game of politics, the more disgusted I become.

I'm talking about the antics that were pulled as the session of the Texas Legislature was drawing to a close. The legislators literally were acting as though they were a bunch of high schoolers on the last day of school — somebody playing taps on a harmonica, others brandishing signs with goofy sayings and other nonsense.

While I certainly don't think that the important work of the lawmakers has to be all stuffy and void of humor, it seems that a lot of the ones elected to serve the public now believe that they're paid to be ridiculous and do precious little else. It's like they believe smiling for the camera's everything.

I wonder what would have happened if the good people attending this nation's Constitutional Convention in 1787 had been as lightheartened. Can't you just imagine what would have happened if Alexander Hamilton had worn a T-shirt proclaiming something like "Consti*what?*"

Where was Corrales in wake of tornado?

In the May 29 edition of the Reporter-Telegram, our City Councilwoman Corrales made some very false statements concerning the Red Cross. Please let me clarify some things for you, being one of the volunteers who went with the Red Cross, arriving in the early morning hours of May 23, the Saturday after the tornado.

We were told by law enforcement agencies that no one was allowed into Saragosa, and that all people were moved to Balmorhea or Pecos. At that time a command post was set up at Balmorhea High School and one in Pecos.

Just as soon as we were able to get a generator set up for power, first-aid stations were manned and food was prepared for both the shelter and field crews to take out on mass care runs.

A mass care run includes first-aid, food and any help we are able to give. This was done on an around-the-clock basis each day. Also, there was a bilingual person with each unit. Everyone was told in English and Spanish where and how they could get help.

I might add, these units were going to every site in Saragosa, talking to everyone with whom they came in contact. As for money, none goes to the staff, only to the victims.

I would like to ask where our city councilwoman was on that Saturday and Sunday when these people really needed help. You sure weren't there with us — the people who did the work, the people who cared enough to do the job that needed to be done. I ask you, where were you when the people needed comforting because they had lost loved ones, or because they had lost everything they had? Where were you when babies cried and old people needed help?

I guess it's so easy for you to judge someone else for not doing enough. Yet, as you sit in judgment, I ask what kind of person you are to use the innocent people of Saragosa as a stepping stone for your own self interest.

Midland, take a good hard look at your city councilwoman. Is this what Midland has succumbed to? I hope not.

Freedom's principles must be maintained

The Monroe Doctrine, proclaimed in President Monroe's message to Congress on Dec. 2, 1823, was a response to an attempt by Imperial Russia under Czar Alexander I to colonize our Pacific coast, from Alaska to San Francisco. History teaches that sometimes, the more things change, the more they remain the same.

The essential part of the Monroe Doctrine is contained in these words: "The political system of the allied power is essentially different from that of America. We should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety." The "allied powers" were defined as Russia and other European governments.

President Monroe's courageous statement was made at a time when America had no standing army and only five sailing ships in our navy, but at a time when we had a proud sense of national identity. His statement was enthusiastically supported by Congress and the American people. His secretary of state, John Quincy Adams, advised: "There can, perhaps, be no better time for saying, frankly and explicitly, to the Russian government that the future peace of the world cannot be promoted by Russian settlements on any part of the American continent."

The Marquis de Lafayette immediately called the Monroe Doctrine "the best little bit of paper that God ever permitted any man to give to the world." Daniel Webster later called it a bright page in our history.

The Monroe Doctrine was never limited to preventing territorial aggression. The key word in his quote above is "system," which would cover the importation of foreign "ideologies" even if implemented through surrogates. The Monroe Doctrine thus declared the fundamental difference between our republic and Old World empires and dictatorships.

Back in 1962, then-Soviet-boss Nikita Krushchev while moving his nuclear missiles into Cuba, taunted us by stating: "Now the remains of this Monroe Doctrine should best be buried, as every dead body is, so that it does not poison the air by its decay."

Now, Nicaragua presents Americans with the choice: American-style freedom or Soviet-backed tyranny. The Monroe Doctrine still is the lamp by which our policy should be guided.

Eternal vigilance is the price of freedom!

School zone speeding, dumping 'disgust' me

Cheers to school being over! Now my blood pressure will go back to normal, since I won't have to watch inconsiderate, dangerous drivers racing through school zones like they weren't there! I pray that a child won't have to be hurt or killed before people stop to think about how fast children can be in front of their cars, with no time to stop.

Jeers to city folk who think the country areas are dumping grounds for anything they don't want — and I mean ANYTHING, from trash and garbage to furniture to animals! You ought to see the abandoned puppies and kittens in the Greenwood area. It's disgusting! If you don't care enough to have your pet spayed or neutered, then at least have the decency to take its babies to the animal shelter and give them a fighting chance!

Whew, I feel better!

'Self-serving' doctors obviously above law

On a recent trip to Midland Memorial Hospital, I was appalled at the number of vehicles parked in the Handicapped Parking places, not bearing the approved Handicapped Sticker on the license plate. Almost invariably, however, there would be a sticker in the rear window indicating that the cars belonged to doctors of all people!

In my travels about the hospital property, I noted a similar situation at the Emergency Room entrance. Again, in an area clearly marked for Handicapped and Emergency Vehicles only. (I take "Emergency Vehicles" to mean ambulances and police cars) are still more vehicles with the omnipotent doctors sticker.

But I guess the part that really makes me do a slow burn is to see a parking lot at the west end of the hospital property designated "Doctors Parking" — you guessed it — virtually empty.

I don't know who is supposed to enforce these blatant violations, but if they are not going to be enforced as they should be, take down the signs and do away with the "Doctors Parking" lot. If they are not going to use that lot, open it to the taxpaying public.

Those "self-serving" doctors should not hold themselves above the law, or cause any inconvenience to those for whom these parking places were intended. Let's enforce the laws we have.

Column on Mideast policy 'on target'

We want to commend your business editor, John Paul Pitts, on his informative and accurate assessment of our wavering national policy in the Middle East. His column of May 31 was right on target.

FOCUS meeting was professional, organized

My comments relate to the meeting given by FOCUS on June 2.

As a concerned southeast neighborhood citizen, I must say I am most appreciative to the members of FOCUS who presented the meeting in such an organized and professional way. The meeting was very enlightening. The format was carried out so well that everyone present should have been able to see and understand the situation our community and minorities face here in Midland. I am grateful for discussion of some of the situations that I was unaware even existed in our school system.

I must say I was pleased that members of the MISD board were present to answer questions and give their opinions on important matters to us as citizens and taxpayers of Midland. Even though there were many points that I did not agree with or felt were unfair to my area of town, I appreciated the comment of one of the members. Along with him I continue to believe that it's up to concerned parents and citizens to make sure that their children receive quality education.

The meeting caused me to be more committed (where once disillusioned) to my community in particular and Midland as a whole. If not in presence, we should use the news media to keep abreast of the records and feelings of publicly elected officials. Do they truly know and represent the concerns of the community as a whole? Knowing the candidates and what they stand for at election time is most important.

Time out for that old philosophy of not voting because "they're going to do what they want to anyhow." It's time for Midland to be a better place for all the citizens by understanding and respecting each other.

Once again, thank you FOCUS and thank you school board members.

SPEAKING OUT

Weather service, SKYWARN keeps basin ahead of storms

By JOHN V. WRIGHT JR.

John V. Wright Jr., came to Midland in September 1985 from New Orleans. He is meteorologist-in-charge of the National Weather Service office at Midland Air Terminal.

I am not in the habit of writing to local newspapers about the National Weather Service and its operations; however, I feel I have something to tell the people of the Permian Basin and I am choosing this medium of communication to say it.

First, Saragosa was a terrible disaster, and there is no escaping that fact; yet there are things to be learned from most experiences of this magnitude, and this is no exception. The most glaring lesson is that West Texas is vulnerable to devastation by a very dangerous tornado. This means that someday Odessa and Midland will also be hit by this most dangerous of storms. The Petroplex must be ready for that day!

My staff is dedicated to the safety of life and property throughout our 18-county area of responsibility. We watch the skies 24 hours of every day to be able to warn our citizens of potential threats of severe weather. Meteorology is still an inexact science, one which is constantly dealing with theoretical probabilities of meteorological occurrences. Nevertheless, there is much more objectivity built into the systems of watches and warnings, especially warnings.

We are genuinely concerned about the success of our warning programs. Thunderstorm warnings are only issued when radar indicates the storm has exceeded defined reflectivity requirements; or if winds in excess of 50 knots (58 mph) or hail at least three-quarter inch in diameter has been reported. Tornado warnings are not issued unless there is evidence of a tornado (usually a hook echo) on radar or if a tornado is sighted by a credible source. This source can be the general public, but is usually a trained SKYWARN observer.

During 1987, my staff has trained more than 350 SKYWARN observers throughout our area of responsibility. We don't issue false warnings. It is very common for severe weather to go almost unnoticed given the population density of West Texas. Nevertheless, when we issue a warning, we have very good confidence that the severe weather is already occurring or is about to occur.

Now a word about SKYWARN observers, the true eyes of the National Weather Service. I can confidently say that if it weren't for the presence of dedicated SKYWARN observers, the Saragosa tornado warning would, in all likelihood, never have been issued. For it is true that most tornadoes in West Texas can not and will not be indicated by our present radar system. The radar of the future, a Doppler system, will provide much better indications of severe thunderstorm and tornado activity. The Midland office is expecting to have the Doppler system operational in late 1993.

SKYWARN observers are strictly volunteers who are very dedicated to the protection of their fellow man. These volunteers consist of amateur radio operators, volunteer fire departments, Civil Air Patrol, local, county and state law enforcement, and emergency officials who quickly move into position when the alarm sounds. They are in contact with the National Weather Service and keep us informed about what they are observing. The general public has little knowledge of this most unselfish group of people; yet many lives have been saved by their actions.

I take pride in knowing they are out there, and I want to thank them publicly for their effort, not only with the Saragosa tornado but for the many years of faithful service they have given to the people of West Texas.

We should all be very grateful for their efforts.

This week marked by cautious optimism at home, abroad

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — This was an eventful week with encouraging news prevailing over uncertainties at home and abroad.

As President Reagan flew to Europe to meet with the pope, attend the Economic Summit in Venice, speak in Berlin on the 750th anniversary of that city's founding, and address the West German Parliament in Bonn, prospects were brightening for a Soviet-American treaty to remove most, if not all, medium range nuclear missiles from Europe.

Having reached agreement on the treaty format, Soviet and American negotiators in Geneva were drafting the language for it. Problems still remain to be settled, especially Bonn's demand that West Germany keep its American-made Pershing II nuclear warhead missiles. However, the White House and State Department are so confident the pact will be concluded this year that Secretary of State George Shultz plans to meet this summer with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze to arrange a fall summit at which President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev would sign the treaty.

At home, there was increasing confidence there will be no recession this year. Addressing a Washington conference of publishers and editors of our 15 Hearst Newspapers, a high administration official said he foresaw no recession in the near future although he was not so sure about the latter part of next year. This accords with the growing belief in Washington that we may head into a recession the end of next year and probably see it worsen in 1989 unless strong measures are taken to bring the deficit below $100 billion in that year. However, the official said that if all federal programs were added together, our real deficit wouldn't be as high as those in some other industrialized nations.

This reminded me of what my good friend Lord Lever, one of Europes's leading monetary experts, told me in London in 1984. He saw no reason to be obsessed with anxiety about the deficit because the U.S. has the biggest single economy in the world. He pointed out that despite the big deficit at that time, America had achieved a remarkable economic recovery from its recession. He believed that if the deficit were gradually reduced below $100 billion, we might in the meantime have a mild recession but not a serious depression.

Appointment of the conservatively pragmatic and politically savvy Alan Greenspan to succeed Paul Volcker as Federal Reserve Chairman strengthened belief a recession is unlikely before the end of 1988. Greenspan is not expected to clamp down on the money supply to curb inflation as Volcker did. It was after that clampdown that the country entered a severe recession. A former State Department economist, Robert Hormats, appearing on the MacNeil-Lehrer TV program this week, ventured a hunch that Greenspan's mission may be to avert a recession until after the presidential elections next year.

Secretary of State Shultz took time out of a hectic schedule the day before he left with the president for Europe to come to the Mayflower Hotel in Washington to answer questions from our publishers and editors. He spoke bluntly on one matter that concerns me deeply — the apparent lack of understanding by so many Americans of the danger that confronts us on our southern borders.

As I have done repeatedly in this column, Secretary Shultz warned, in effect, that if we abandon the Contra freedom fighters and the Ortega Marxist regime consolidates its power in Nicaragua, we will be forced to take much stronger action in the future to deter the Soviet Union from establishing air and naval bases there that could threaten our security.

While he stopped short of predicting direct American military intervention, he said if we abandon the Contras and let Central America come under Soviet domination "we will wind up having to take action that I fear will be much more pronounced on our side than what is going on now."

It is unbelievable to me why so many Americans fail to realize that, as Secretary Shultz put it, "If the Soviet Union establishes a presence (in Nicaragua) in terms of harbors and airfields that can look at the Pacific side of our shores just as Cuba now looks at the Atlantic side of our shores, it will be bad news for the United States."

I hope you will tell that to your older children and your friends, I also urge you to write your representatives in Congress and tell those who support the president's Central American policy that you support them. Tell those who oppose aid to the Contras that they will be held responsible if we are compelled one day to send our sons and grandsons to fight and die in the jungles of Central America.

It was pretty good year for MC's athletes

By H A. TUCK

It wasn't a bad year for the Chaparral athletic programs, with three top three finishes in national tournaments for four sports. The basketball team took second in its national tournament, then the women's tennis team was second and the men's tennis team finished third in its tourney.

This is the week the registrar's office takes a deep breath. Those folks had graduation, interim registration, Summer I pre-registration, registration, and late registration in rapid succession and overlapping in some cases. Next week they'll begin preregistering for the Summer II session.

Commercial music instructor Jerry Tubb is playing next weekend at the Grand Ole Opry in Nashville! Well, it's not quite like it sounds. He's performing solo guitar June 13 and 14 as part of the World Fiddling Championship at Nashville. But it really is taking place at the Grand Ole Opry.

New basketball coach Reggie Franklin thinks he has all his recruits signed for next fall and he's excited by both the recruits and the new Texas letter of intent for junior colleges. Region V, which includes Midland and the other teams in the north half of the state, and Region XIV for East and South Texas, agreed on a binding letter of intent.

Coaches in the Western Junior College Athletic Conference formerly signed players only to have them lured away by teams in one of the other three conferences in the state. That's the reason former MC coach Jerry Stone never liked to announce his signees until after classes had begun.

The next step will be a national junior college letter of intent and it shouldn't be too many years before that is instituted.

Registration for the two-week Spring Interim session was almost double what it was in 1986, with 136 students signed up this year and 75 last year. Late registration for the Summer I term wasn't finished when this was written, but enrollment was running about 100 more than last year. Final Summer I count last year was a record 1,338.

Early predictions for the fall registration are that Midland College could have as many as 4,000 students. The fall enrollment in 1986 was an all-time record 3,683.

Midland College began with 688 students in 1969, jumped to 1,085 in 1971, enrolled 2,039 in 1975 when the present campus opened and surpassed 3,000 when 3,254 signed up in 1982.

Tennis coach Joe Williams just came by for a visit after being gone for more than two weeks for the two national tournaments. He reports that Tyler is hosting the men's tournaments again in 1988 and 1989. In the 1989 tournament, the format is being changed to a double-elimination team format rather than six flights of singles and three flights of doubles, all single-elimination. "I think it's a good change and one that should benefit us, since we usually are very strong as a team," he commented.

The women's tournament likely will return to Atlanta, Georgia, again next year as DeKalb College was the only school to bid on the tourney.

Williams also noted that the semifinals of the men's tournament was picked up and moved to Dallas on Friday because of rain in Tyler. This was something we didn't know at the time.

For instance, you can learn four different dances in "Ballroom Dance," if you can attend classes on Monday and Wednesday from 7:30 to 9 p.m. from June 8 through July 1. Fee is $20.

"Computer And You" helps you understand computers, what they do, how they operate, and what type you might want. This class meets from 5:30 to 8 p.m. on Monday and Wednesday June 8 through July 1 for just $45, and that includes some hands-on training.

"Improving Your Image" is a make-up class, with emphasis on self-assurance. It's going to meet on Tuesdays and Thursdays starting June 9 and ending July 16 at a cost of $30.

For just $19, you can learn "Self Hypnosis I." This course meets on Mondays from 7 to 9 p.m. from June 8 through July 20.

A "Speed Reading Clinic" is being offered from 2 to 5 p.m. on Monday, June 8. It meets just one afternoon and costs $6.

PRE-SCHOOL SHOTS

I know school is just out, but now is the time to start getting out the shot records for the pre-schoolers. Texas schools require a DTP shot and and oral polio booster between ages 4-6 years. This is in addition to the measles, mumps and rubella shot and at least three previous DTP and oral polio immunizations.

Those who get their pre-school shots now will need a DT booster in 10 years, so if you have a 14-16 year old, check to see if his or her last immunization was 10 years ago. If you have a child who needs a booster do it soon. Try not to have it the last week of the summer holidays. Apart from the rush, who wants a shot and possibly a fever on the first day of school.

NOVO-PEN FOR INSULIN-DEPENDENT DIABETICS

A compact self-contained unit for the adminstration of insulin without the handling of vials and syringes has been shaped like a fountain pen and its portable design is intended to make it easy to administer insulin, especially in situations away from home.

The device contains a replaceable insulin cartridge and a sterile disposable needle. There is also a carrying case that holds the Novo-Pen, three more needles and one spare cartridge.

This is a patient convenience item to make life easier for insulin dependent diabetics.

FREEDOM OF CHOICE

For the great majority of the people of the world, freedom is a foreign concept. My observation is that where freedom exists, it is mostly taken for granted.

One of the freedoms you have is the freedom to choose your doctor. It is important that you exercise and guard that principle because under the guise of reducing costs, competing factions are starting to push themselves on employers to deliver their employees to their "Plan".

Picking Up A Clean Habit

Armed with spears and trash bags, and clad in orange vests and gloves, a group of volunteers from Physicians and Surgeons Hospital last week completed an attack on trash.

As a member of the Clean Midland Litter Control Program, Physicians and Surgeons Hospital has joined the fight to control litter by adopting the section of Wadley from Big Spring to A Street.

The litter program allows a civic club, group or business to adopt an area with the charge they will pick up litter and debris at that location at least twice during the period of one year.

Spearheading the hospital effort is Dean Williams, director of support services. On a cloudy , misty Saturday morning, the volunteers gathered at the site and speared trash for more than an hour.

But it wasn't all work. Once the area was cleaned, the volunteers gathered around the chow truck that supplied them with doughnuts and coffee.

Implants, Treatment Can Solve Problem

By KIRBY TARRY, M.D.
Board Certified
Pediatric, Adult Urology

Men who are plagued by the centuries-old problem of impotence no longer need to shrug their shoulders and give up. There is help for them in the form of testing, counseling, drugs, and -- the latest development -- penile prosthesis.

Impotence is the inability to obtain or maintain an erection long enough for sexual intercourse. As Americans live longer and healthier lives, the problem of impotence has been growing. Normally, this problem affects men in the age range of 40 to 70. But accidents, illnesses or psychological conditions can cause impotence at any age.

Most men will suffer from impotence at some time in their life, but most are temporary cases. However, for 10 million men, it is not a temporary situation but a chronic problem.

Basically, society has looked at this as something it didn't want to talk about. In the past, people would just shrug their shoulders and give up that part of their life. Today, that no longer needs to be the case.

Impotence, whether caused by psychological or physical problems, is treatable. For the most severe cases, surgical implants in the penis will allow an impotent man to have an adequate erection for intercourse.

The penis is composed of three chambers -- the corpus spongiosum where the urethra is located; and two corpora cavernosa, the spongy tissue chambers which carry seven times the normal amount of blood flow during an erection.

A complex set of tests are conducted that will determine if the problem is psychological or physical. The testing includes examinations of the urinary system, hormone balance, glucose tolerance to rule out diabetes, and X-rays. About 10 percent of the cases are found to have psychological roots, and the patient then is referred to a psychiatrist or psychologist for counseling.

For the remaining patients, the cause often is physical. About 50 percent of diabetic men suffer from physical impotence; hypertension and high blood pressure also can be causes for impotence. It also may be the side effect of medication taken for high blood pressure, depression and psychosis, abnormal serum cholesterol, weight reduction, ulcers, stomach diseases and cancer.

If the cause is physical, it sometimes can be treated with drugs or hormones in some cases.

But for those who previously had no other alternative, there is implant surgery and, for a few, a vascular bypass operation.

To be a good candidate for implant surgery, the patient needs to show proven lack of rigid erection, lack of success with medical or psychological treatment, and the appropriate expectations about the outcome of surgery.

The patient has a choice of implants.

One procedure involves placing a malleable prosthesis in each of the corpora cavernosa. The prosthesis fills the chambers, keeping the penis in a semi-erect position at all times, but it can be bent for concealment.

Another variety uses two inflatable cylinders. But this type can have problems with leakage of the sterile liquid with which it is filled.

Another type of prosthesis is fully inflatable and most closely resembles a physiological erection. This prosthesis is made of three parts -- a balloon-shaped reservoir that is placed in the abdomen in front of the bladder; two soft cylinders which are inserted in the chambers of the penis; and a pump which is placed inside the scrotum. By manually operating the pump, the cylinders can be inflated. A pressure-release valve in the scrotum deflates the penile erection and the fluid is returned to the reservoir

These implants have a success rate of 95 to 98 percent nationwide, and we have performed the surgery on about 45 patients locally.

More than 16,000 inflatable prosthesis implants have been performed in the United States since the procedure was developed in the early 1970's.

While penile prostheses may not be the answer for everyone, this procedure is becoming more commonly accepted. The message is that something can be done for men suffering from impotency using procedures that are reliable.

Auxiliary Donates Time

The hours are specific--the final figures total in the thousands.

But the impact made by the Physicians and Surgeons Hospital Auxiliary is inestimable.

The tasks performed by this service are boundless. They wheel patients into and out of the hospital, deliver magazines and give refreshment cart to the patients, make visitors feel comfortable, staff assistance, prepare brochures for mass mailing, and assist at medical symposiums.

During a dinner held recently at the Ranchland, auxiliary officers for 1987-88 were installed and awards and recognitions were presented.

Those receiving recognition for the past year are: May Anderson, 500 hours; Maxine Biscoe, 100 hours; Marinelle Freeman, 1,300 hours; Nelda McDuffie, 500 hours; Becky Malaise, Senior Pin and 100 hours; Joanne Robertson, Senior Pin and 1,500 hours; Sue Rose, Past President's Pin and 1,000 hours; Claudia Smith, Senior Pin and 500 hours; Mary Lou Talley, 800 hours; Carolyn Tetteller, Vice Presidential Pin , Senior Pin and 750 hours; The Senior Pin represents 100 hours spent working the hospital floor.

Elected to serve as committee chairmen for this year are: Bonnie Beard, hospitality; Paula Beshears, publicity; Virginia Booker, scrapbook; Marinelle Freeman, scholarship; Christy Hudson, keys and mezas; Nelda McDuffie, orientation; Sue Rose, newsletter; Claudia Smith, membership; May Anderson, telephone; and Joanne Robertson, patient favors.

Dr.Tubb Honored As College Alumnus

Dr. Terry Tubb, a plastic and reconstructive surgeon in private practice in Midland, has been named a 1987 Distinguished Alumnus of South Plains College in Levelland, one of 5,000 alumni.

The recognition came during the college's Distinguished Alumni Awards Banquet held in conjunction with the school's 30th anniversary. Dr. Tubb graduated in 1962 from South Plains College with an Associate of Arts degree.

He is one of the nation's leading users of tissue expanders in a relatively new medical technique called interface surgery. The procedure, which Dr. Tubb began early after its inception, blends cosmetic and reconstructive surgery with the use of tissue expanders, also known as inflatable silicone balloons. Using this technique, he and his staff have restored the burned scalp of a child and have rebuilt the facial features of a young woman injured in an automobile accident, as well as reconstructed a teen-ager's nose. Through his continual studies in plastic surgery, he has been able to perform complex procedures on children with birth and traumatic defects.

Dr.Terry Tubb

After building a foundation in sciences at SPC, Dr. Tubb continued his studies at Texas Tech University and then began his medical career at the University of Texas Medical Branch in Galveston.

He served at the Naval Aerospace Institute from 1970-71 and was promoted to U.S. naval flight surgeon. In 1971, Dr. Tubb performed an emergency tracheotomy in flight on a young mechanic severely injured when a jet engine fell on his face. For that act, Dr. Tubb received the Sikorsky Helicopter Rescue Award for a Lifesaving Mission. He was subsequently promoted to Lieutenant Commander, Wing Flight Surgeon in Advanced Jets.

Dr. Tubb served as a member of the Board of Directors for Physicians and Surgeons Hospital .

He has authored numerous articles and has written a chapter in a two-volume "Aesthetic Surgery" book to be released in 1987.

Nursing Was Choice Of Honoree As Child

When Cheryl Brown graduated with her degree in nursing from Midland College a year ago, she returned to her birth place for a job.

This month she was recognized for her nursing efforts by being selected Nurse of the Month.

Ms. Brown was born 22 years ago in Midland at what then was known as Parkview Hospital. It was purchased in December 1985 and now is Physicians and Surgeons Hospital. At the age of nine, she decided nursing would be her career choice and she pursued it as a youngster. She worked as a Candy Striper and was a member of the Medical Explorers in high school.

Her pursuit of excellence in nursing hasn't stopped. Ms. Brown plans to earn a bachelor of science in nursing degree at Texas Tech University Regional Academic Health Center in Odessa.

As a staff nurse and relief supervisor on the 11-7 shift, Ms. Brown was cited for her work as a team member, her excellent documentation skills and the concern she shows for the patients.

When she finds some spare time, Ms. Brown works on her hobbies.

Dr. Singh Picked As Examiner

The American Board of Quality Assurance and Utilization Review Physicians has invited Dr. Tulsi Dyal Singh to serve as one of its examiners in the oral portion of its Board certifying exam. The examination is held annually and will be held in October this year.

Dr. Singh is a Diplomate of the Board, having passed the exam with honors, and he is also a Fellow of the American College of Utilization Review Physicians.

"It must be a lot more fun to be an examiner than to be sweating it out as a candidate," said Dr. Singh, who is chairman of the Quality Assurance Committee at Physicians and Surgeons Hospital.

Bet Twice shatters dream of Triple Crown

Pot of gold also goes to Belmont victor

NEW YORK (AP) — Bet Twice, who chased Alysheba to the threshold of the Triple Crown, took it away from him Saturday.

He stole the pot of gold, too, by winning the Belmont Stakes.

And just for good measure, Bet Twice snapped trainer Woody Stephens' string of Belmont victories at five.

"He was second in two fighting finishes and he deserved to win," jockey Craig Perret said, recalling Bet Twice's loss by three-quarters of a length in the Kentucky Derby and his half-length defeat in the Preakness.

Jack Van Berg, Alysheba's trainer, and Stephens, both members of racing's Hall of Fame, took their defeats in stride.

"I've had two tremendous Saturdays, and I have to take it with a smile," said Van Berg, who will be 51 on Sunday.

"I've already got five," the 73-year-old Stephens said. "No way I'm going to worry about six. This, the five, will stand as long as Belmont Park stands." Stephens saddled Gone West, who finished sixth.

By winning, Bet Twice gained a $1 million bonus offered to the colt who gained the most points in the three races, based on five for a win, three for a second and one for a third. He edged Alysheba 11 points to 10.

The race wasn't as close as that. Bet Twice's winning margin was 14 lengths as he refused to play Alydar.

Alydar, Alysheba's sire, is the only horse to finish second in all three Triple Crown races. He chased Affirmed to the 11th and last Triple Crown championship in 1978.

"That's what makes horse racing," Van Berg said.

The closest he got during the 1½-mile trip was third in the stretch run.

"I'm not going to jump off the press box," Van Berg said. "He might have gotten second but he wasn't going to win it. He just missed second by two noses."

Alysheba a neck from $1 million

By ERIC SCHURER

NEW YORK, N.Y. — Only a neck separated fourth-place Alysheba from second-place Cryptoclearance in Saturday's 119th running of the Belmont Stakes.

But for Dorothy and Pam Scharbauer's pocketbook, there was a world of difference. By finishing out of the money, Alysheba lost his chance at collecting the first $1 million bonus offered by Triple Crown Productions for his Midland owners.

Bet Twice, the winner by the fifth largest margin in Belmont history — 14 lengths, took the bonus after second place finishes in both previous races.

"Sorry, buddy, they took it all away from us today," trainer Jack Van Berg said kiddingly to Clarence Scharbauer, Jr., as he gave him a bear hug at Stall 33 after the race. "But you know what they say in West Texas: We shall return."

Though Alysheba's finishing kick was not what it was in both the Kentucky Derby and the Preakness Stakes, which he won, he very nearly brought the big money home for the Scharbauers.

A costly decision to stay in the pack by jockey Chris McCarron and a near collision may have been the difference, but Van Berg and Scharbauer stood by their jockey.

Coming around the final turn, both Alysheba and Cryptoclearance, running side-by-side were ready to make their moves. But as Alysheba began to move out, Gone West, riding in front of Alysheba began to tire.

McCarron, sensing the urgency of the situation, tried to force his way past the fading Gone West, but Cryptoclearance held his ground and Alysheba clipped the heels of the front horse.

"It was no foul, it was just one of those things that happen in horse racing," Van Berg said. "It was lucky no one got hurt. It probably cost us second money, cost us a million dollars, but there's nothing you can do. That's horse racing."

Everyone agreed, Laffit Pincay, Jr., who was up on Cryptoclearance, was in the right. But the near-collision caused Alysheba to turn nearly sideways and made a move into the money nearly impossible.

"But I can guarantee we aren't going to be changing jockeys," Scharbauer said loud enough for all to hear, including McCarron. "There isn't a finer young man or a finer jockey around than Chris McCarron."

IT WAS also agreed, no one was going to deny Bet Twice on this day. The $50,000 yearling purchase made a believer of everyone by taking the lead before the mile mark, holding off all comers around the final turn and pulling away down the home stretch.

"We got beat by a better horse today," Scharbauer said. "It would have been tremendous to win the Triple Crown, but it wasn't meant to

Alysheba just one of many near misses

NEW YORK, N.Y. — He was the people's choice, but once again, the people didn't get what they wanted.

Alysheba, the would-be Triple Crown winner owned by Dorothy and Pam Scharbauer of Midland, became another in a long list of near misses for the great unwashed.

It was the 13th time a horse had won the first two jewels of horse-racing's most coveted triple, but could not convert. The third since Affirmed nipped Alysheba's sire, Alydar, in three straight finishes in 1978.

But the public didn't supply the only near misses on this day.

Dorothy and Pam Scharbauer were members of the just missed club, by just missing bringing home one half of a $1 million bonus by finishing a hair out of third place. They also just missed winning the pot by themselves by coming in a nose behind the second place horse.

And the racing public just missed having the real champion it has lacked for nearly 10 years.

But they didn't miss it for lack of trying. This was to be Alysheba's coup de grace. His shining moment. Many predicted a runaway. The mile-and-a-half distance was made-to-order for the big-kicking Derby and Preakness winner.

And Alysheba was made-to-order for a public and a racing world that was starving for a winner.

EVERYWHERE HE went, Alysheba brought cheers. By the end of the race, Alysheba brought tears.

"The way the crowd stood and cheered for him when he was led in, it just filled our hearts," co-owner Pam Scharbauer said. "I didn't expect that at all. It really was special."

"It was very humbling, very appreciated," said Clarence Scharbauer, Jr. "They treated him almost like a human being, he really has become a popular horse."

"It tore us all up," added Clarence, III.

But alas, the masses were let down, again. Alysheba, for all his spirit, did not have it on this, of all days.

THE THUNDERING kick that he had shown in exciting finishes in both the Kentucky Derby and Preakness Stakes never materialized.

The "I told-you-so's" could be heard resounding off the pages of the Gotham presses already. Numerous reasons will be cited, among them the inability to use Lasix, an anti-bleeding medication, the New York jinx which has seen 12 straight horses that have run at the Belmont a winner in its biggest race and that maybe the horse was not a great champion.

But the answer may be none of the above. Alysheba had a bad day, but will return, perhaps as early as August in the Travers Stakes in Saratoga, N.Y.

The real question is will the public? "I just hope we haven't let the people of West Texas down," Clarence, III, said.

After the spine-tingling wins in the Derby and Preakness, the people of Midland will come back. And with the near-miss excitement of Alysheba's Triple Crown quest, so should the rest of the nation's racing fans.

Hammond races to victory

Robichaud fastest woman in triathlon

By TED BATTLES

Midlander Scott Hammond won the George Hoffman Memorial Tall City Triathlon, a test of endurance that requires a 1,000-meter swim, 30K bike ride and 10K run, covering the north Midland course in one hour, 44 minutes and 52 seconds Saturday.

Midlander Chris Robichaud, 32, who is part owner of a physical therapy business in Odessa, finished first in the women's division in 1:50.33.

In the team competition Dave Donnell and Bob Jones, meet directors along with Dave Clark, teamed up with Becky Durham to win the team competition. Donnell did the swimming, Jones the running and Durham the biking.

This was the third first place finish for Becky Durham, who missed last year's meet. "I was riding at the time, but had gone through childbirth not long before."

Becky won with an all-female team in the first two triathlons. "Some don't count the first triathlon because the swimming was 800 yards, the bike 10 miles and the running five miles, but it was sponsored by the Central YMCA," she maintains.

HAMMOND BEAT out Dave Wright, 30, who finished in 1:45.03.

"I guess for a hometown boy and having been good friends with George, I was fortunate today. It was a good course and the weather was perfect."

"George", of course, is George Hoffman, in whose memory the event is run. Hoffman was one of the original promoters of the triathlon and was killed on the highway while measuring the bike course three years ago.

Hammond, the race director in 1986, took second last year behind Doug Grosso.

"Doug moved back to Michigan and wired that he was with us in spirit," said Hammond.

Hammond qualified for the nationals, to be held in Hilton Head, S.C., at Waco, a few weeks ago.

"I've been running for the last seven or eight years, but I'm not very good in anything. The biking is easy, but the swimming is really tough. I gave Dave (Wright) two and a half minutes in the water."

Actually, Hammond, 31, was sixth coming off the bike in the Angel Stadium parking lot.

In the qualifying for nationals at Waco, "I was 82nd, last, coming out of the open water swim." He still managed to finish 13th.

FOR HAMMOND, the victory was a farewell of sorts. He is being transferred to Fort Smith, Ark., by Tom Brown. And, although he is looking forward to the job challenge, "Midland is home and always will be home."

Wright, a geologist with Mobil and a three-year resident of Midland, running in his third Central YMCA-sponsored triathlon, finished first in the 30-39 age bracket, improving on his previous fifth place best and his time represents a 22 minute improvement over what he was doing when he first started competing in triathlons four years ago.

Stanford ousts 'Horns from CWS playoffs

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Left-hander reliever Al Osuna pitched 8⅓ innings of scoreless relief and Frank Carey and Toi Cook had two-run triples as No. 2-ranked Stanford beat No. 1 Texas 9-3 in a College World Series semifinal Saturday night.

The Cardinal, 52-17, meets No. 3 Oklahoma State, 59-12, in the NCAA championship game Sunday at 7:10 p.m. CDT. The Cowboys beat Stanford 6-2 in the winners bracket final Thursday to earn an automatic berth in the championship game. Texas then outlasted Oklahoma State 6-5 Friday night to force the Sunday title game.

Texas, 61-11, took a 3-0 lead in the top of the first off starter Lee Plemel, who gave up four hits and pitche to only five batters.

Elanis Westbrooks hit his third home run of the season and Kevin Garner doubled in a run, with the third run scoring when Scott Coolbaugh knocked the ball out of Stanford catcher Doug Robbins' glove on Garner's hit.

Osuna, 9-2, came on to scatter nine hits and strike out eight to pick up the win. He was aided by four double plays.

Stanford picked up one run in its half of the first on Ed Sprague's 16th homer of the season.

Trainer Jack Van Berg accompanies his horse Alysheba and jockey Chris McCarron after failing in their bid for the Triple Crown.

Yanks trade Niekro for Minnesota catcher

MILWAUKEE (AP) — The New York Yankees traded veteran knuckleball pitcher Joe Niekro and cash to the Minnesota Twins for catcher Mark Salas, the Yankees announced Saturday night.

Niekro, 42, has a career record of 216-194 in 21 major-league seasons. He has struggled this year, going 3-4 with a 3.55 earned run average. The amount of money sent to Minnesota was not disclosed.

Salas, 26, has platooned as the Twins' catcher this year, his third full season in the majors. He was 15-for-42 with two homers and eight runs batted in entering Saturday night's game against Texas, and had a pinch-hit home run in the ninth inning that lifted Minnesota into a 2-2 tie with the Rangers.

Niekro had been plagued by nagging injuries and inconsistency this season and had lost his last two starts. He also had apparently lost his starting spot to Ron Guidry, who will rejoin the Yankees' rotation on Tuesday night for the first time. Guidry re-signed with the Yankees as a free agent on May 1 and has been working himself back into shape.

BELMONT

Actually, he was a nose and neck out of second place. Second went to Cryptoclearance while Gulch finished third in the nine-horse field.

Van Berg said jockey Chris McCarron might have had Alysheba back too far.

"Around the first turn he was really wanting to run and I feel I might have discouraged him a little bit my taking so much hold of him," McCarron said.

A collision with Gone West approaching the quarter pole didn't help, either.

'It was probably my fault," McCarron said.

Van Berg, though, said there were no excuses for the defeat. But there were questions.

"I didn't expect to win by 14 lengths but it proved two things: He can handle the distance and there was something wrong with Alysheba," Perret said. "I don't believe Alysheba ran his race today," said Bob Levy, who owns Bet Twice with his mother, Blanche, and wife, Cissy. "The two times he beat us, he beat us fair and square. Why he didn't run his race, I don't know, but he didn't and we did."

Did the absence of Lasix, a diuretic used to treat pulmonary bleeding, hurt Alysheba? The substance is banned in New York.

He raced on the medication in his three previous starts.

"I don't think it made any difference," Van Berg said. "I won't even test to see if he bled. I don't need to."

Was the 1½ miles too much for Alysheba?

Possibly, but the biggest single reason for his defeat Saturday was Bet Twice.

"When I hooked him this time, I was going to let him run," Perret said of Bet Twice. And run he did, moving from third into a 1½-length lead with a half-mile left.

That margin was five lengths with a quarter-mile remaining, seven at the eighth pole and 14 at the finish — the biggest winning margin since Conquistador Cielo won by 14 in 1982.

Bet Twice paid $18, $5, and $3 for his second victory in six starts this year and sixth triumph in 13 career races. The bonus and the $329,160 winner's share from the Belmont purse of $548,600 increased his bankroll to $2,313,207.

Had Alysheba won, he could have gotten a $5 million guaranteed payment, which included the winner's share from the three Triple Crown races.

Cryptoclearance, who was fourth in the Derby and third in the Preakness, paid $4.80 and $3.80 and Gulch, who ran as an entry with Leo Castelli, was $4.40 to show.

A crowd of 64,772, the largest Belmont turnout since Affirmed won the Triple Crown in 1978, showed up Saturday, most of them hoping to see Alysheba deliver Alydar's revenge.

Alysheba caught the public's imagination with a gutty stretch run in the Derby, during which he almost fell when he clipped Bet Twice's heels and was blocked twice before reaching the wire.

Alysheba moved to the threshhold of the Triple Crown with an impressive win in the Preakness, but the Triple Crown proved to be 1½ miles too far.

Completing the order of finish after Alysheba were Shawklit Won, Gone West, Avies Copy, Manassa Jack and Leo Castelli.

be. That horse ran a great race and the Levys (Bet Twice's owners) are class people. They were so kind to us after finishing second twice."

In the final leg, Bet Twice was clearly the strongest horse in the field. But the rivalry between Bet Twice and Alysheba has been a good one, and both sides hinted that it may continue in future races this year.

THOUGH ALYSHEBA seemed to be in good position going into the final turn, he didn't appear to be running his race, preferring to react, rather than act.

McCarron didn't take to the lead in the early going, preferring to let Avies Copy set the early, slow pace. Van Berg had expected a slow early pace and told McCarron to go out and force the speed, if necessary.

"The early pace crawled down too much, they were almost walking the first part," Van Berg said. "I was afraid it might be too slow, so I told Chris to go out front if he felt like it. (Alysheba) was just galloping, and he can gallop as fast as some of these horses can run."

But down the stretch, it was Bet Twice that seemed to be running full speed, while Alysheba and the rest were in a gallop.

Youth prevails in three

Graf youngest to win Slam event

PARIS (AP) — Steady Steffi Graf capped "six unbelievable months" Saturday, capitalizing on a crucial mistake to beat Martina Navratilova 6-4, 4-6, 8-6 and become the youngest women's champion of the French Open tennis tournament.

Graf won't celebrate her 18th birthday for another week. But on a wind-blown Center Court at Roland Garros Stadium, she displayed an iron nerve and shots to match to gain her first Grand Slam crown and make the top-seeded American a runner-up for the third consecutive year.

Match point came on the sixth double-fault by Navratilova, normally one of the sport's best servers.

The victory was the 39th in a row for Graf, and the tournament championship her seventh straight in 1987. It also kept Navratilova, the last person to beat the West German, last November in New York, searching for her first tournament title of the year.

"So far, I've had six unbelievable months," Graf said. "Every tournament I've played, I've won. I didn't think I would do this."

THE MEN'S singles final on Sunday will pit defending champion Ivan Lendl against fourth-seeded Mats Wilander of Sweden, a two-time French Open champion.

Navratilova made a major contribution to her latest loss, serving for the championship and getting the first point before twice double-faulting and allowing Graf to break for a 5-5 tie in the third set.

"Here it is again, another heart-wrenching loss," Navratilova said. "She played a very good game, but I was serving for the match."

But Graf did not have the championship handed to her.

She used her sledgehammer forehand and stinging backhand to repeatedly pass Navratilova at the net. And every time Navratilova looked ready to break through and win her 16th Grand Slam singles title, Graf held firm.

Against a player known as one of the steadiest the game has produced, Graf was steadier.

"She never missed a shot when she was down," Navratilova said. "And she played well enough when she was up to win the match."

Both players said that the American remained No. 1 in women's tennis, and Graf noted that Navratilova's best surfaces — grass at Wimbledon and hardcourts at the U.S. Open — were coming up.

On the red clay in Paris, however, Graf was champ, replacing 1959 winner Christine Truman of Britain as the youngest women's titleholder. Truman was 18 years, 4 months when she won in 1959.

The victory was worth $180,000 for Graf, her biggest paycheck. Navratilova won $90,000, pushing her record career earnings past the $12 million mark.

ROBERT SEGUSO of Prairie Oaks, Fla., and Sweden's Anders Jarryd won the men's doubles title with a 6-7, 6-7, 6-3, 6-4, 6-2 victory over Frenchmen Guy Forget and Yannick Noah. Jarryd was a last-minute replacement pairing in the tournament for Seguso after John McEnroe decided not to play doubles following his first-round elimination in singles.

In mixed doubles, Pam Shriver of Lutherville, Md., and Emilio Sanchez of Spain won the title with a 6-3, 7-6 victory over Lori McNeil of Houston and Sherwood Stewart of The Woodlands, Texas.

Shriver and Graf have a chance to be the tournament's only double champion when the women's doubles is played Sunday. Shriver and Navratilova play Graf and Gabriela Sabatini of Argentina for the title.

OSU star wins 440

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Butch Reynolds, Ohio State's brilliant quarter-miler, sped to a sizzling victory Saturday night in the NCAA Outdoor Track and Field Championships, while UCLA won the men's title by a record margin and Louisiana State took the women's crown in a controversial finish.

The meet also featured a world best in the women's triple jump, as sophomore Sheila Hudson of California leaped 45 feet, 2¾ inches, and a collegiate record of 3 minutes, 00.55 seconds in the men's 1,600-meter relay by UCLA.

Reynolds was timed in 44.12 — the second-best at sea level and the fifth-fastest ever — for 400 meters as he beat UCLA's Danny Everett and Arkansas' Roddie Haley. It was just barely off his personal best of 44.10 — the best ever at sea level.

The time also smashed the NCAA meet record of 44.30, set last year by Gabriel Tiacoh of Washington State.

"I think this proves that I'm a world-class athlete," Reynolds, a junior, said. "The world record is in reach."

THE 400 record of 43.86 by Lee Evans of the United States at the 1968 Olympics is one of the oldest in the record books.

Everett's second-place finish, worth 8 points, clinched the title for the Bruins, who finished with 81 points.

UCLA's winning margin of 53 points over runner-up Texas, which finished with 28, was the largest in meet history. The previous best was 48 points, when UCLA amassed 81 and second-place Brigham Young had 33 in 1966.

Texas Christian wound up third with 27 points, followed by Arkansas with 26 and Louisiana State with 25.

The seven titles made the Bruins the second-winningest team in the 66 years of the championships. Southern California is the leader with 26.

AMONG THE women, LSU finished with 62 points to 53 for second-place Alabama, its Southeastern Conference rival, and 51 for third-place Southern California.

It was the first outdoor title for LSU, which won the indoor championship in March.

Kite leads Kemper by one

POTOMAC, Md. (AP) — Tom Kite wound up having to defend himself Saturday after he shot a 3-under-par 68 to take a one-stroke lead over Chris Perry after the third round of the $700,000 Kemper Open.

Kite was at 12-under-par 201 after 54 holes, but everyone wanted to know what went wrong on holes 15 through 17, when he took three straight bogeys and dropped into a tie after owning a four-shot lead with four holes to play.

"Hey, I had some good shots, too," Kite said. "Why can't we talk about those?"

Kite made seven birdies, including one on the 18th hole that gave him the lead entering Sunday's final round.

It was his third consecutive subpar round at the 6,864-yard Tournament Players Club at Avenel Course.

"Those three holes were shocking," Kite said, referring to his lapse. "There was no reason for it. I hadn't missed anything to that point, then blew three straight holes."

The birdie on 18 encouraged Kite, who is in position to win his first tournament since last August.

"It was nice to finish well," he said. "It was an interesting round, to say the least."

Perry, the son of former major-league pitcher Jim Perry, shot a 70 to remain in contention for his first title in three years on the PGA tour. Perry trailed Kite by only one stroke after the eighth hole, but fell three back when Kite birdied the ninth hole and Perry followed with a bogey.

He then made up the ground by shooting a birdie on No. 15 and pars on 16 and 17 while Kite was struggling.

"I was really pleased with the way I played," Perry said. "I stuck to my game plan, playing one hole at a time and not looking ahead, and I'll do the same thing tomorrow."

George Burns, who began the day four strokes behind Perry, shot a 68 to move within three shots of the lead at 204. Burns opened the round by missing a two-foot tap-in for par, then turned around and got a birdie on No. 2 with a 40-foot putt. In all, he had seven birdies and four bogeys.

Defending champion Greg Norman, who began the day at 5-under, also had an up-and-down round and finished at 205. Norman, vying for his third Kemper victory since 1984, had a 68 in which he had seven birdies, two bogeys and a double bogey.

Scott Hoch was also at 205 after shooting a 72, and Dave Barr, Howard Twitty and Larry Mize were next at 206.

Keith Clearwater opened the day with a double bogey and finished at 207 after shooting a 73. That left him tied with Mike Reid and Scott Simpson, six strokes behind Kite.

Crampton ahead by three in Senior Players ReUnion

DALLAS (AP) — Steady Bruce Crampton fought off an early challenge by Chi Chi Rodriguez with a 3-under-par 69 Saturday to take a three-stroke lead after 36 holes in the $200,000 Senior Players ReUnion Pro-Am.

Crampton, who fired a tournament record 8-under-par 64 on Friday over perfectly groomed Bent Tree Country Club, settled for a less-spectacular round and a 133 total, 11 under par.

Rodriguez had an eagle three with an 18-foot putt on the sixth hole, a 485-yard Par 5, and also finished with a 69 for a 136 total.

Crampton said of his round that "nothing spectacular fell into place. Nothing seemed to fit. It wasn't a brilliant round, but anytime you shoot under par, it's a good day's work in my book."

Rodriguez relished being paired with Crampton for Sunday's final round.

"Bruce and I will be paired together tomorrow and that will be wonderful," said Rodriguez, who is shooting for his fourth consecutive PGA Tour Seniors' victory. "It will be a good dogfight. He's playing good and I'm playing good. That's what it's all about."

Rodriguez said he was unlucky on the greens.

"I must have hit eight buts that I would have bet even money would have gone in the hole," he said.

Orville Moody, the 1969 U.S. Open champion, carded a 4-under-par 68 for a 137 total and was alone in third place.

Four players were tied at 138, including Gary Player, who shot 67; Dave Hill, 69; Harold Henning, 70; and Bobby Nichols, 69.

Okamoto rallies from seven back to gain tie with Morse

WILMINGTON, Del. (AP) — Japan's Ayako Okamoto knew how far behind she was entering Saturday's third round of the $500,000 LPGA McDonald's Championship. But she hadn't expected to make up the entire seven-shot deficit in one day.

"I look at every scoreboard. I wasn't surprised. It was okay," said Okamoto, who shot a 6-under-par 65 Saturday — the best round of the tournament — to tie Cathy Morse for the lead after three rounds.

"I am thinking two or three under, not six," added the 28-year-old native of Japan, who matched Morse's 54-hole score of 8-under-par 208.

Okamoto rolled in seven birdie putts over the 6,366-yard Du Pont Country Club course in the 72-hole competition for a $75,000 first prize. She had one bogey when she twice hit trees on the 16th hole.

"I just kept trying to hit the ball on the fairways," said Okamoto, who missed only three and needed just 26 putts. "My putting and chipping had not been consistent," she added.

Okamoto, third on the LPGA's money-winning list this year with $155,366, started the third round 1 over par, seven strokes behind Morse, the leader at 6-under 136.

But Morse, who played bogey-free golf during the first two rounds, took bogeys on the fourth, fifth and seventh holes, three-putting the fourth and fifth and lipping the cup with her attempt to save par on No. 7.

"It was discouraging to get good shots and then three-putt. It was like throwing shots away," said Morse.

She was visibly upset after the third bogey.

"I'm very emotional. I'm not a zombie, not one who never laughs and never cries,' Morse said.

"When my putt lipped out (on No. 7) it was kind of like the last straw. I was really discouraged. I said to myself, 'when are they going to start dropping in.' "

But Morse recovered with a 9-foot birdie at the ninth, matched par on the back nine through 14, rolled in a 15-foot birdie on 15 and wound up with a 1-over-par 72 and a share of the lead.

"I looked at the scoreboard and knew I had lost the lead, but realized that I was still in the hunt," she said.

Sherri Turner, who momentarily held the lead after nine holes, wound up with a 4-under 67 and was third at 210.

Betsy King, the tour's second-leading money winner, Lauri Peterson and Amy Alcott were next at 211. King and Peterson shot 71s, while Alcott had a 72.

Midland's Angels were not only back in the win column but were back in second place in the Texas League East after a 7-5 victory over El Paso before 2,836 fans at Angels Stadium Saturday night.

Midland had won eight straight before Friday's loss and now has nine wins in its last 10 games.

In the chase for first place in the standings, Midland could have used a little help Saturday from San Antonio, but didn't get it. The first place Wichita Pilots won in 10, 3-2.

A game that started out like a typical 14-13 Midland-El Paso swatfest turned into a pitchers' battle after the fourth inning when lefthander Miguel Garcia entered the game in relief of starter Barry Dacus in the fifth for Midland and Jamie Bisco came in for El Paso starter Dan Murphy, also in the fifth.

Murphy surrendered a one-out solo home run to Stan Holmes and then singles to Joe Redfield and Edwin Marquez to bring Bisco out of the bullpen.

Scott Rathburn/Reporter-Telegram

El Paso shortstop Ernest Riles goes for the tag on Midland's Mark Doran while Diablo Frank Mattox backs up on the play Saturday at Angels Stadium.

GARCIA entered in the fifth with none out and two on and pitched no-hit ball until a two-out single in the ninth.

"We needed that to give our bullpen a rest," said pitching coach Chuck Hernandez of Garcia's five inning stint, his longest of the season. "Once he went past three innings, he wouldn't be able to come back tomorrow, so we let him go."

Hernandez described the Venezuelan as a sinker, forkball pitcher last year. "He is a better all-around pitcher this year and he's throwing his slider to lefthanders now."

El Paso went ahead 5-2 in the fourth, but Midland bounced back for four in the home fourth. Holmes beat out an infield hit, Joe Redfield reached on an error and Edwin Marquez singled up the middle for one run.

Mark Doran cleaned the bases with a triple and scored on Rick Adams' sacrifice fly. That made it 6-5, a lead that few would have bet would have stood up the rest of the way.

DOUG JENNINGS collected three hits and has 18 for his last 33 at bats. His single in the third drove in John Hotchkiss, who had walked.

Midland's second inning run came when Brian Brady doubled and Holmes, singled for the first of his three hits.

Phil Venturino, 6-2, will go for the Angels in the third game of the six-game series at 6 p.m. today while Luis Castillo, 1-1, will go for the Diablos, who are a half game behind the Angels in second place.

El Paso scored in the first on Jesus Alfaro's single to plate Frank Mattox, who had reached on a single.

In the fourth, the Diablos raked Dacus with five straight hits to open the inning with runs scoring on an error and hits by Walt Pohle and a force out. With the bases still loaded, things could have gotten a lot worse, but Freeman bounced to second baseman John Hotchkiss, who touched the bag and threw to Holmes at first for a double play.

Midland trailed 5-2, but not for long.

HALO HOOPS — Midland and El Paso are now 6-6 for the season's series....Despite being hit by a pitch and knocking in run with a fly, Rick Adams saw a 7-game hitting streak severed....Adams was 14-for-31 going into Saturday's game....Joe Mitchell, with 15 homers on the year and four against Midland, is sidelined with a broken bone in his hand....With Garcia pitching, Edwin Marquez catching and Jesus Alfaro batting in the eighth, it could have been mistaken for a Winter League game. All three are from Venezuela....Damon Farmar, 0-for-24, sat out Saturday's game in hopes a rest might help.....

Garcia's five innings were so impressive whether he couldn't make it as a starter. "Lefthanded relievers are a rare commodity," explained Hernandez, "And he's a lefthander who not only throws strikes, but strikes out a lot of guys."....

Cougars take 4-5A banner to Final Four

From Staff Reports

ABILENE — Tuesday, District 4-5A champion Abilene Cooper was totally stymied by Duncanville pitcher Chris Hill so the Panthers put him on the mound again in the third and final game of the quarterfinal playoffs here Saturday.

It didn't make any difference to the Cougars, who jumped out to a 4-0 first inning lead and coasted into the State Final Four to the tune of 19-0.

Hill was the starter in Game 1 and threw a two-hitter at Cooper for a 1-0 lead in the three-game series. Cooper countered with lefty Jason Satre in Game 2 and evened the series with a 4-0 victory.

In all, Cooper rocked three Duncanville pitchers while Danny Whitford six-hit the Panthers to run his season record to 8-0 in front of 4,200 fans at Cooper Field. Hill took the loss and fell to 12-5 on the year.

With the victory, Cooper advances to State next weekend in Austin, owning the best record of the foursome at 31-3, which also happens to be the best record in Cooper history.

Duncanville, the District 8-5A runner-up, bows out at 25-11.

Joining Cooper next week in the Final four will be: Houston North Shore; Plano East and San Antonio MacArthur.

TRIATHLON

For Wright this was his 14th triathlon and he will spend a busy summer competing at Big Bear Lake, Calif., July 8; Prescott, Ariz., July 12; Denver in August; the Prude Ranch race in August and the Odessa triathlon in September.

"I ran high school sports back in Sidney, Neb., then sat out eight years." In between, he attended the University of Nebraska and got his graduate degree at Texas A&M.

"WE DIDN'T have that horrible wind that we had last year and it was a good field. Four or five finished under 1:50 and that's the first time that ever happened," said Hammond.

"The thing that was so impressive was the city, Parks and Recreation and Chamber of Commerce got behind the triathlon this year."

"Although she began swimming competitively back in Cleveland as a six-year-old and later competed for 12 years on the high school and AAU level, it wasn't until four years ago that Robichaud, a nine-year Midland resident, got involved in triathlon. "I was running and friends teased me until I gave it a try."

"Before that I was running 5 and 10k races."

Her training regimen includes running five miles or so three times a week, swimming two times and riding the bike three times weekly.

For Becky Durham, the triathlon represents her only serious competition, but she makes the most of it, preparing with 200 miles of bike riding a week.

She, too, was high in her praise of the meet's organizers. "The stop lights always worry you and you slow down a little no matter how safe it may be."

Jones, a Wisconsin native and fitness director at the Y, and Donnell teamed up with biker Randy Kessling for a second place team finish to Becky's winning all-female team two years ago.

When Kessling decided to enter the individual competition, Durham took his place and the threesome turned in a winning time of 1:36.58.

The event attracted 130 individuals, 53 teams and a sizeable crowd for the finish at Angels Stadium in Hogan Park.

Brown defends regatta crown

LIVERPOOL, N.Y. (AP) — Brown University successfully defended its Challenge Cup title Saturday at the 85th annual Intercollegiate Rowing Association Regatta on Onondaga Lake, powering past runner-up Wisconsin at the halfway point in the varsity eights race and stroking to a length-and-a-quarter victory.

"It's great. They took control early on and just kept marching it down," said Brown Coach Steve Gladstone, whose rowers became the first team in 24 years to win the IRA Challenge Cup and the Eastern Sprints varsity eight races in the same year.

Minnesota slips past Rangers in bottom of 13th, 3-2

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Tom Brunansky scored from first base on Steve Lombardozzi's two-out single in the 13th inning Saturday night, giving the Minnesota Twins a 3-2 victory over the Texas Rangers 3-2.

Brunansky drew a one-out walk from Mitch Williams, 3-3. With two outs, Brunansky was running on a 3-2 pitch that Lombardozzi hit into left-center for a single, and he slid home safely just ahead of the relay from center fielder Oddibe McDowell to first baseman Pete O'Brien to catcher Geno Petralli.

Keith Atherton, 3-1, got the victory in the game that lasted four hours and 53 minutes.

Minnesota tied the score 1-1 in the ninth when Mark Salas led off with a pinch-hit home run. After the game, the Twins announced Salas had been traded to the New York Yankees for pitcher Joe Niekro and cash.

Salas, who also singled, hit his third home run of the season against Charlie Hough.

Rangers catcher Don Slaught tied his own team record with four passed balls. He was one short of the modern American League mark set by California's Tom Egan in 1970.

McDowell hit a 418-foot home run, his fifth of the season, with two outs in the second inning for a 1-0 lead against Frank Viola.

The Twins loaded the bases with two outs in the fourth on a single by Larkin and two walks, and Slaught's second passed ball of the inning enabled Minnesota to tie the score.

Texas went ahead 2-1 in the fifth with an unearned run. Scott Fletcher, who had three hits, singled but was thrown out at the plate on a double by Sierra, who also had three hits. Sierra then scored when shortstop Greg Gagne fielded Pete Incaviglia's infield single and threw the ball past first base for an error.

Tigers 5, Red Sox 3

BOSTON — Mike Heath, who entered the game as a pinch hitter in the 12th inning, singled home two runs in the 14th to give Detroit a victory over Boston.

Heath singled against reliever Wes Gardner, 0-3, after Lou Whitaker singled off second baseman Marty Barrett's chest, Bill Madlock sacrificed, Kirk Gibson was walked intentionally and Alan Trammell loaded the bases with an infield single.

Eric King, 3-4, pitched 5⅓ innings of one-hit relief and finished the 4-hour, 51-minute game.

The Tigers took a 3-2 lead in the eighth when Madlock beat out a grounder to second with one out, stole second, and scored on Matt Nokes' single.

Angels 2, White Sox 1

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Ruppert Jones led off the 10th inning with a home run to lift California over Chicago.

Jones hit reliever Bob James' second pitch over the right-field fence for his fourth homer for the season. James, 2-3, took over after starter Rich Dotson had pitched five-hit ball through nine innings, striking out eight.

Mike Witt, 7-4, completed the game, allowing seven hits and one walk while striking out eight.

Texas Ranger pitcher Charlie Hough fires a throw to first base in time to get Minnesota's Kirby Puckett after fielding a come-backer.

Blue Jays 8, Orioles 5

TORONTO — Jesse Barfield hit a three-run homer with two outs in the bottom of the 11th inning as Toronto rallied for a 8-5 victory over Baltimore.

Tony Fernandez tripled to center with two outs, and after Lloyd Moseby was walked intentionally, Barfield drove a 3-1 pitch from Ken Dixon, 3-5, deep into the left-field seats to end the game which lasted 4 hours and 7 minutes. It was Barfield's 14th homer of the season.

The loss was the seventh in the last eight games for Baltimore which squandered a 16-hit attack and stranded 15 baserunners, including six in the final three innings.

Jeff Musselman, 4-1, pitched the final 1⅓ innings for the victory.

Toronto, trailing 5-3 in the eighth, tied the score with two out when Garth Iorg singled and Charlie Moore homered to left off Dixon.

Moore, the veteran catcher, signed as a free agent on Friday. He doubled in his first at-bat as a Blue Jay when he pinch hit for Ernie Whitt in the seventh inning.

Athletics 6, Indians 4

OAKLAND, Calif. — Reliever Dennis Eckersley pitched six perfect innings and Ron Cey's two-run homer broke an eighth-inning tie to lead Oakland past Cleveland.

The Athletics, who trailed 4-0 after three innings, took the lead on Cey's third home run of the season. Jose Canseco, who hit a three-run homer in a four-run fifth, led off the eighth with a walk from Greg Swindell, 3-6. One out later, Cey homered deep into the left-field bleachers.

Eckersley, 4-4, relieved starter Moose Haas with no outs in the fourth inning and retired the final 18 Cleveland batters. He struck out five. Swindell struck out 10.

Brewers 7, Yankees 6

MILWAUKEE — B.J. Surhoff's bases-loaded bunt single with two outs in the bottom of the ninth inning gave Milwaukee a victory over New York.

Milwaukee loaded the bases against New York relief ace Dave Righetti on singles by Cecil Cooper, Mike Felder and an intentional walk to Glenn Braggs. Surhoff then bunted a 1-1 pitch past Righetti toward second baseman Willie Randolph and dove into the bag barely ahead of Randolph's throw. Surhoff had three RBI in the game.

A crowd of 52,366 saw the Brewers win for the seventh time in eight games. Dan Plesac won his first decision of the season and Righetti, 4-2, took the loss.

The Brewers had made it 6-6 with two runs in the eighth off Righetti. Greg Brock opened with a single and took third when Braggs doubled. Surhoff hit a sacrifice fly and Dale Sveum's two-out single tied the score.

Royals 5, Mariners 2

SEATTLE — Steve Balboni drove in all five Kansas City runs with a home run and a double and Charlie Leibrandt pitched a six-hitter through 8 2-3 innings.

Balboni hit a two-run homer in the fifth inning to put the Royals ahead 2-1 and added a three-run double in the sixth inning to tie a career high for RBI in a game.

Leibrandt, 7-4, allowed both runs, one earned, struck out four and walked two. Dan Quisenberry pitched the final out for his seventh save.

Seattle starter Scott Bankhead, 6-4, pitched a perfect game through 4 2-3 innings but then allowed a double to Thad Bosley and Balboni's ninth homer.

After getting the first two outs in the sixth, Bankhead walked Jorge Orta, gave up infield singles to Frank White and Bosley before Balboni's double.

Celtics aren't same team as '86; Neither are Lakers

BOSTON (AP) — One of the Boston Celtics' big problems is that they are not the same team they were last year. Another is that the Los Angeles Lakers are not either.

The Lakers take a 2-0 lead, great confidence and exceptional skills into today's third game of the NBA finals against the Celtics, last year's champions and this year's underdog.

"Last year was completely different," Boston forward Larry Bird said. "We were on a roll. Most of the games we lost was because we didn't execute or we got cocky."

Last year, the Celtics' 67-15 record was the NBA's best. They were healthy. This year, they were 59-23. Bill Walton and Scott Wedman were out for most of the season and Robert Parish and Kevin McHale have played in the playoffs with foot injuries that limit their effectiveness.

Last year, the Lakers were 62-20 and were beaten by Houston 4-1 in the Western Conference finals. This year, their 65-17 record was the NBA's best and they have lost just one of their 14 playoff games.

"Houston at that time was playing very well, better than we were," Lakers guard Magic Johnson said, adding that the loss played a big part in Los Angeles' success this year.

So did the addition of backup center Mychal Thompason, the emergence of second-year forward A.C. Green and the improved all-around games of Johnson, Michael Cooper and James Worthy.

In 1971-72, Laker Coach Pat Riley was a player on the Los Angeles championship team that set an NBA record with 33 straight victories.

"Teams like that, the more you win, the tougher you get," Riley said. "The Celtics had that last year. I think we've got it this year. I said to (assistant coach) Bill Bertka back in March, 'this is a special team.' "

NBA Playoffs

That became clear to the Celtics last week when they were routed in Los Angeles 126-113 and 141-122 in the first two games of the best-of-seven series. The Lakers ran at will against the slower Celtics and shot brilliantly from outside.

"I just don't think Robert and Kevin are getting back quick enough (defensively) right now," Bird said of Parish and McHale. "It's not because they don't want to, it's because I don't think they can.

"There's not much we can do about it with two guys with broken feet. You can't call Oral Roberts up and have him come and heal us overnight."

McHale and Walton have broken bones in their right feet and Parish has a sprained left ankle. McHale said he felt fine and he and Parish are expected to start.

The key for Boston to end its slide is to play more patiently and execute better offensively, McHale said.

"When we get into a good flow offensively, things go well. We can get back on defense," he said. "People forget they break off our mistakes. We weren't taking good shots."

"I think they've got to play their game," Laker center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar said. "If they make wholesale changes, they're not going to be playing the type of basketball that got them this far."

One change that should help the Celtics is the location of the game. They are 36-1 in their last 37 games at Boston Garden. But that loss was to Los Angeles last Dec. 12 and it broke Boston's 48-game winning streak at home.

"We're going to play better, I know that. I don't know if we're going to win," Bird said. "They're a great basketball team. We feel we're a great basketball team at the Garden."

"We've won here before," Johnson said. "Coming here is not as bad as for a lot of other teams who have never won. We're a veteran team. We've been here. We've been through it so many times."

On June 9, 1985, Los Angeles won the sixth game of the finals 111-100 in Boston to take the NBA title. The Celtics were 1-2 at home in that series.

"Usually when I walk in this building, the first thing that goes through my mind is you're going to play a big game because it's the Celtics and Lakers," Riley said. "The second thing is it's probably going to be for a world championship because we only come here one time in the regular season."

Tuesday night's fourth game also will be played in Boston, as will the fifth game, if necessary, Thursday night. Games 6 and 7, if needed, will be back in Los Angeles June 14 and June 16.

"You never can fall asleep against the Celtics," Worthy said. "They'll keep biting at you until they get a clean bite."

In the Eastern Conference finals, Boston was routed in Detroit in Games 3 and 4, then rallied to win the series. But there is a definite difference, Bird said.

"We're down two games in the finals to a much better team," he said. "We'll play a lot better, but the deck is stacked."

But, Riley said, "I don't believe the Celtics are going to do anything but come play their best game, come play their hardest game. They're not psychologically beaten. They're the world champions."

Giants beat Astros, 4-3, in 12

HOUSTON (AP) — Candy Maldonado's infield single scored Chris Speier from third base with two outs in the 12th inning to give the San Francisco Giants a 4-3 victory over the Houston Astros.

Speier led off the 12th against reliever Larry Andersen, 4-3, with a short fly to center that fell in for a double. Speier took third on Robby Thompson's sacrifice and after Jeffery Leonard bounced back to the mound, Craig Reynolds could not handle Maldonado's slow grounder to shortstop.

It was Maldonado's eighth game-winning RBI tying him with Dave Parker and Tim Wallach for the National League lead.

Keith Comstock, 1-0 pitched three innings for his first major-league victory.

Trailing 3-2 with one out in the ninth inning, Billy Hatcher beat out a grounder to the right side of the infield and took second on Bill Doran's grounder to first. First baseman Will Clark stepped on first to get Doran but his throw to second hit Hatcher in the back. Denny Walling then tied the score with a double down the left-field line against reliever Scott Garrelts.

Houston's Dave Smith struck out the side in the ninth inning and got out first-and-third, one-out jam in the 10th. He has not allowd a run in 21 innings this season.

In the first inning, Thompson singled off Houston starter Jim Deshaies and scored on Maldonado's double. Chili Davis then hit his seventh homer — and the Giants' 10th in five games — for a 3-0 lead.

San Francisco starter Kelly Downs blanked the Astros until Walling led off the fourth inning with a single, took second on Jose Cruz's single, and scored on Alan Ashby's RBI single.

Houston made it 3-2 in the sixth when Ashby doubled to left and scored on a single by rookie Chuck Jackson.

Cubs 6, Cardinals 5

CHICAGO — Keith Moreland drove in three runs and Jamie Moyer pitched five-hit ball over seven innings as the Chicago Cubs defeated the St. Louis Cardinals.

The Cubs snapped a two-game losing streak and moved within two games of the first-place Cardinals in the National League East.

Moreland capped a three-run first inning with a sacrifice fly after Jerry Mumphrey had doubled in two runs. Moreland's seventh homer tied the game in the fourth and he doubled in a run in the fifth to score Ryne Sandberg, who had doubled.

Moyer, 6-3, drove in the tie-breaking run in the fourth after Moreland had homered. Former Midland Cub Shawon Dunston doubled, went to third on Manny Trillo's single and scored on Moyer's sacrifice fly off starter Bob Forsch, 4-2.

Moyer did not allow a hit after the third inning. Lee Smith finished the game for his 14th save despite allowing a run and three hits.

San Francisco's Chili Davis receives a low five from Candy Maldonado after his two-run homer against Houston Saturday.

Reds 5, Dodgers 2

CINCINNATI — Ted Power pitched a three-hitter and Barry Larkin and Nick Esasky hit two-run doubles as Cincinnati defeated Fernando Valenzuela and the Los Angeles Dodgers.

The doubles came in a five-run third inning that carried the Reds to their fourth straight victory. The Dodgers have lost 14 of their last 20 games.

Power allowed doubles by Jeff Hamilton and Pedro Guerrero and an inside-the-park homer to John Shelby, as he pitched the second complete game of his career and the first since 1983. The former Dodger right-hander, purchased by the Reds in 1982, improved his career record against Los Angeles to 6-1.

Power, 5-2, struck out six and walked two.

Sloppy play hurt Valenzuela, 5-4. It was his sixth loss in his last eight decisions against the Reds and he hasn't won at Riverfront Stadium since June 13, 1983. The left-hander is 5-7 lifetime against Cincinnati.

Mets 4, Pirates 2

NEW YORK — Pinch-hitter Darryl Strawberry, scratched from the starting lineup because of the flu, hit a two-run homer in the seventh inning to give New York a 4-2 victory over Pittsburgh.

Strawberry batted for starting pitcher Sid Fernandez, 7-2. The left-hander allowed two runs and seven hits over seven innings, striking out four and walking two. Roger McDowell pitched the last two innings for his sixth save.

Pittsburgh starter Doug Drabek, 1-4, allowed four runs on eight hits, striking out six.

Phillies 4, Expos 3

PHILADELPHIA — Left-hander Shane Rawley won his fifth straight game and Rick Schu drove in two runs as Philadelphia defeated Montreal.

Rawley, 7-2, pitched his second complete game of the season allowing nine hits. He walked two and struck out four.

Montreal took a 1-0 lead in the first inning on Tim Wallach's RBI double, one of three he had in the game. The Phillies scored three runs in the bottom of the inning against Bob Sebra, 3-6.

Padres 5, Braves 3

ATLANTA — Randy Ready drove home two runs with three singles, leading a 12-hit attack as San Diego downed Atlanta.

It was the second victory in a row for the Padres, matching their longest winning streak of the year.

The Padres opened the scoring in the first inning against Larry McWilliams, making his first start for Atlanta since being called up from the minors this week. Shane Mack singled and later scored on a single by Tony Gwynn, who extended his hitting streak to nine games.

Mets happy to see Gooden back on mound

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Mets were happy Dwight Gooden won and even more encouraged by the way he did it.

Using a sharp-breaking curve to set up his fastball, Gooden won his first major-league start since cocaine rehabilitation by pitching four-hit ball for 6⅔ innings Friday night in New York's 5-1 victory over Pittsburgh.

"Last year, he was a one-pitch pitcher," Mets Manager Davey Johnson said. "Last year he was cutting too many fastballs and not throwing his curve."

Gooden threw 121 pitches against the Pirates. He threw 91 fastballs, 28 curves and two changeups. He admitted he was tired when he left the game.

"I figured hitters would be sitting on my fastball," Gooden said. "Early in the game, I started them off with a fastball and once I did that, I started them with a curve."

The Mets say opposing batters can expect to see a more complete pitcher when Gooden takes the mound this season.

"He was throwing 3-2 curveballs. It's a great sign when he does that," Mets pitching coach Mel Stottlemyre said. "He has the confidence to do that. Last year, he never had the confidence to do that. And I was impressed with the life he had on his fast pitch."

Not all of the Pirates were similarly dazzled.

"I thought he threw a good game, but his ball is not overpowering," said Sid Bream, who hit a hard single, lined out to deep left-center and grounded out against Gooden. "His fastball was straight and sooner or later the boys are going to start teeing off on it if he doesn't mix it up."

Throughout Gooden's month-long preparation period in the minor leagues prior to rejoining the Mets, he worked on his curve. After having trouble controlling it in his first few outings, he began to throw it for strikes.

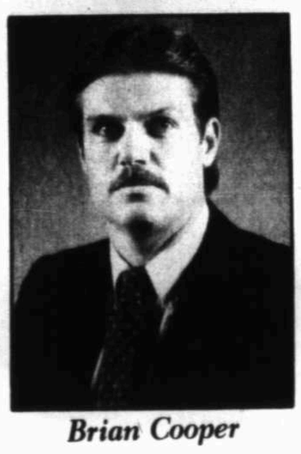
FINALLY, A REAL ESTATE AGENT FOR PEOPLE WHO BUY HOUSES, INSTEAD OF THOSE WHO SELL THEM.



Brian Cooper

It's no accident that most real estate agents celebrate their achievements by planting "Sold" signs in front yards.

After all, they represent the seller. So selling houses is their first priority. Which is why, if you're buying a house, your first priority should be an agent who represents you.

A buyer's agent doesn't divide his loyalties when he negotiates a selling price. He sides entirely with the buyer.

Nor does he have any favorites to push when it comes to choosing a house. He'll show you every house for sale in the area-including those for sale directly by the owner. He'll even help you find the lending institutions with the lowest financing.

THE RESULT: All the benefits of a trained Realtor along with whole hearted, expert representation of your best interest. Call Brian Cooper at RE/MAX of Midland for your FREE initial consultation.

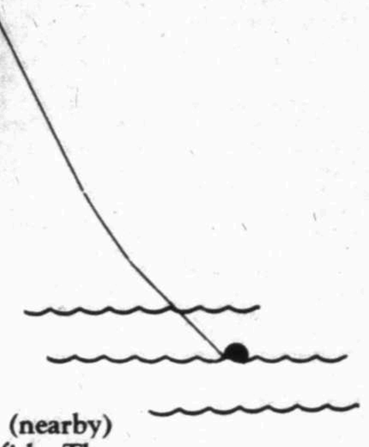
Go Fish! Midland



Summertime officially begins at 5:11 p.m. EST June 21 this year, but in West Texas, it's already summertime and it gets hot!

And judging from the numbers of area residents who own boats and fishing equipment, the absence of water really must make hearts yearn for wetter turf.

However, Midlanders don't have to travel for hours and hours to exercise their water wings. Mulberry Lakes is located on County Road 11 West in Midland County, just off Midkiff Drive south of the I-20 overpass — just minutes away from Midland.

Mulberry Lakes is actually seven small bodies of water, according to Sonny Lewis, son of owner Lorene Lewis. Some are actually man-made lakes, he said, and some are "filled-in caliche pits." Lewis said he has been helping his mother operate the business since his father died about five years ago.

The Lewis' stock the lakes with fish, including bass and catfish, for fishermen and families to enjoy. "We get a lot of parents with kids," Lewis said. "We have a lot of bass fishermen. A lot of times they bring their families out here and have a picnic — some barbecue. I guess it's something just to get away from the house.

"Sometimes we might have 100 (customers) a day."

A small shaded pond in the Lewis' backyard was designed especially "to let little kids fish," Mrs. Lewis said. "There's just perch in there."

Mrs. Lewis and her late husband opened the lakes about six years ago, she said. "We retired and just thought it would be a pleasure for older people and kids and everybody else. It would give us something to fool with, just for pleasure, and the senior citizens would have a place to go and enjoy. They come out here in wheelchairs and on crutches and everything else. They bring the retarded folks out."

Mr. and Mrs. Lewis' first lakes were in a different location, she said, a short distance away from where they are now. The couple had to move their lakes because "the water got bad. Saltwater from (nearby) oil wells got into the lakes and killed the fish. The water was good when we moved there, but it just turned bad."

Some of the lakes are even deep enough and wide enough for boats. Lewis said fishermen may use their own boats on the lakes, "as long as they don't have gasoline engines."

The lakes are filled with rainwater, Mrs. Lewis said. "Caliche pits hold water good. ... When it rains we have no problem with water. When it doesn't rain, they go dry. Last summer they almost went dry. There's no way of putting water (in the lakes) unless it rains."

But, she added, "it never has, since we've had it, got completely dry."

The lakes are continually restocked with fish, Mrs. Lewis said. "We have to keep putting more catfish in. We buy them big enough to catch. We get about 1,000 pounds once a month."

In addition to fishing and boating, the lakes also have other attractions. One of the lakes has been used by a diving instructor to teach his students scuba diving, Lewis said.

Ducks, geese, peacocks and horses call the lakes and their surrounding area home. So do Canadian geese, at certain seasons of the year. "This year there were seven of them," Lewis said.

The cost of fishing at Mulberry Lakes is $1 per permit for adults, 50 cents for children under 8 years old. Senior citizens and retarded persons can fish for free. Catfish caught are $2.50 per pound; perch and carp are $1.50 per pound. Bass fishermen pay $10 per day for a permit and are not charged for any bass they catch.

Mulberry Lakes is open all year long, Lewis said, because there's "no particular season" for fishing. "Fishermen fish all year."

A reception in the church parlor followed the ceremony.

SHARON SPEAR and H. Gene Smith were planning an outdoor wedding for May 23. As you'll recall, that was the day the big rains came, so alternate plans had to be put into motion. They were to be married in the garden area at El Chico. Instead they exchanged vows at the home of the bride, but flowers sent by Virginia and Hal Rachal turned the house into an indoor garden. The ceremony proceeded on time, and a song, entitled "One Love," written especially for the couple by Hollywood composers, Layne Bourgoyne and Joey Lynne, was played at the close of the service. The wedding party then went to El Chico for a seated dinner and returned to the home for the traditional cake cutting and champagne toasts.

On the morning of the wedding, Patsy and James Turbyfill entertained with a champagne breakfast for the bride.

In addition to a cocktail party given by the Turbyfills to honor the couple, they were feted with a surprise party at the home of LaVerne Foster. Rice bags were made, and a Mexican buffet was served on the veranda. Assisting was Wilma Odom.

A barbecue was given at the bride's home on the day preceding the wedding to welcome the best man, Randy Buhler and his wife, Jill, of Arlington, in addition to other arriving wedding participants. Special guests included the bride's mother, Mrs. Fern Heth of Midland, and the groom's parents, Ardel and Lee Roy Smith of Littlefield.

Campers' tents available in cotton, nylon

By BILL SCHULZ

ATLANTA (AP) — Nylon tents are the camping rage of the 1980s, but when shopping for a new tent, a camper should look closely at the fabric, coating and durability.

There are basically three types of tent fabric: the old, reliable cotton canvas, which is tough, durable and expensive; polyester-cotton blends, which are more resistant to mildew but aren't as watertight; and nylon, which will not mildew but isn't as durable.

"Nylon is the tent of preference in the '80s. It has dominated the market," said Paul Hardin, canvas product manager for the Coleman Co., in Wichita, Kan. "It's not nearly as abrasion- or puncture-resistant. It will last several years, but you can't get the 25 years you could get out of your cotton tent.

Unlike cotton fabrics, however, nylon will break down in sunlight and it is not naturally waterproof.

"Most nylon tents, if properly treated, will provide 120 days of continuous exposure," Hardin said.

If a tent from a reputable company doesn't last, return it; most name brand makers will replace it. Since nylon isn't naturally watertight, it must be coated.

The most common and best coating is polyurethane, a very durable substance, Hardin said. But there are cheaper, less durable substitutes and manufacturers are not required to tell the buyer which coating they use.

Buyers after the new dome tents should look for tents which can be supported by guy ropes in six directions for strength and stability in a windstorm.

Makers of nylon dome tents put roof vents and long rainflys, which are waterproof, over pieces of taffeta, which are not coated and can breathe. Be sure the fly covers the uncoated area and if the tent has screened vents make sure there is a long fly that covers those adequately, Hardin said.

There are two things to look for in all tents, he said. "Look for a tent with a true bathtub-style floor, one piece with no seams if possible that laps up the sides of the tent a few inches," he said. "It provides a greater degree of water repelancy."

Check the zipper, whether metal or nylon coil, to see that it's large enough for the tent. "Zippers are our biggest complaint with a tent," he said. "One way to avoid problems is to make sure all zippered openings are zipped shut when you put up your tent. If you put the tent up good and taut, you can stretch it too tight for the windows or doors to close properly. Then when you force the zipper it pops."

According to the American Cancer Society, one out of ten women in the United States will develop breast cancer sometime in her lifetime. It is currently estimated that over 37,000 wome die each year as the result of breast cancer.

Ninety percent of breast cancers are diagnosed by women or their physicians finding a lump in the breast. Women who are diagnosed with a lump large enough to feel have a 50 percent five year survival rate. A woman who is diagnosed as having breast cancer by mammography, before a lump can be felt, has a 97% five year survival rate and a 90% 10 year survival rate.

A mammgram can detect a cancer this small, ● even before it can be felt.

Appointments may be made by calling 561-9999

The Mobile Breast Cancer Detection Unit from Odessa Women's & Childrens Hospital will be in Midland on the Old Gibsons parking lot on Cuthbert St.

The American Cancer Society has established guidelines for mammography in asymptomatic women. (Women who have no symptoms of disease). Those guidelines have been adopted by the American Academy of Family Physicians, American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, and The American College of Radiology. THose guidelines are:

I. 35-40 years of age-One baseline mammogram.

II. 40-50 years of age-A mammogram every 1-2 years depending on breast type and risk factor.

III. 50 years of age and over-An annual physical examination and annual mammogram.

IV. Asymptomatic women under years of age with signifiant high risk factors should be examined at appropriate intervals. These risk factors include previous breast cancer and family history of cancdr.

V. A symptomatic woman should have a mammogram at any age when she experiences a mass, nipple discharge, skin changes or unexplained breast pain.

A screening mammogram is an x-ray of the breast using extremely low dosages of radiation (usually comparable to dental x-rays) and is designed to find very early cancers.

A female technologist who i highly trained in mammography will perform the examination.

The charge for the screening mammogram is $50.00. The Unit accepts cash, check, Visa, Mastercard and American Express.

Approved by the American Cancer Society.

Overweight not accepted by others, woman says

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — Overweight Phyllis Nilsson campaigns for fat people, saying they don't want diets or sympathy — just acceptance.

"The only reason they are not happy is because they're not accepted. If they were accepted by society, I can't see any reason why they would not be happy about the way they look. It's a matter of being accepted by this world," she says.

Mrs. Nilsson, 49, is somewhat of a crusader for fat people. She works as a medical transcriber at a Toledo hospital and has organized three singles groups, one for the overweight.

"Overweight people have been so maligned for so long. We need to stop sitting back taking cruelty and insensitivity," she said.

"I've been turned down for jobs when I was a lot thinner than I am now. I've seen an overweight woman laughed at in a bathing suit on a beach. I have heard her own mother say to a woman, 'Why bother wearing makeup? You're still going to be fat.'

"I would love to get back to the time of Reubens and Botticelli, when larger women were considered healthy and attractive."

Since that's not likely, Mrs. Nilsson is devoting her time to changing the way Americans perceive the overweight. She is the founder of several dating services and Very Special People, a group for overweight singles.

Mrs. Nilsson, who was divorced for six years, knows firsthand the loneliness of being fat and single. She married her second husband eight months after meeting him through Very Special People.

"What beauty used to be has changed, and it's sad that we've allowed it," she says. "So many people are so unhappy because of the way they're treated. The weight doesn't make me unhappy, but I deplore people looking at someone who is overweight and making a snap judgment as to why, and treat a person differently because of it.

"If a thin woman sees an overweight woman with a man in her life, she thinks it isn't deserved.

"They think overweight people don't deserve anything in life — that they are all gluttons. People are uneducated. Metabolism does play a part, and genes are inherited. You cannot change the stock from which you came. If you have two overweight parents, you have an 80 percent chance of being overweight."

She says overweight people are just like anyone else.

"They need to learn what's inside that is important. If you lose 50 pounds will you be sweeter or more loving? Before I die, I hope I have educated people to look for more. You don't have to be thin or fat. You just have to be you, and be willing to accept other people for what they are.

"The only time weight becomes a problem is in morbid obesity, or 100 pounds overweight or more. I am considered to be grossly obese — that's the physicians' term — but I am healthy."

Language of fishing explained

By ROLLA WILLIAMS
Copley News Service

One of the weaknesses of outdoor writers is forgetting the newcomers to our area of expertise.

Terms like pig 'n jig and flippin' are tossed out with a certainty the audience may not share. We talk of poppers and deep-runners, of yo-yoing and roll casts, of kneading the line and spin casting, of star drags and 8-pound line.

Hey, this is a foreign language to many folks out there — to youngsters just entering the fishing sport, women and senior citizens who'd like to fish if they only knew how to begin and all the others who may be put off or confused by jargon.

These are important people. They're readers — and what writer doesn't need a lot of those?

They're also license buyers, and the purchaser of a fishing license is the lifeblood of the Department of Fish and Game. Eventually, these are the people who pick up the check for all the good things the DFG tells us it's planning — from fish hatcheries, to stocked trout in streams, to management of precious fish and wildlife resources.

Further, a happy fisherman ("fisherperson" sounds dopey, and is) will go to the mat for the ultimate aims of conservationists, for wild trout streams, for stocking salmon and steelhead and walleyes, for pollution-free water, and for enlarged opportunities for fishermen locked into urban settings.

NOVICE FISHERMEN often are intimidated by the acres of tackle hanging in the average store. My advice to a beginning fisherman is to go fishing with a friend — an uncle, a cousin, a neighbor, perhaps — who knows the sport.

If that turns into a dead end, then join a fishing club. Clubs can put the novice in touch with fishermen interested in both freshwater and saltwater. Buying a good fishing book is important too, such as "North America's Freshwater Fishing Book" by Mike Rosenthal (Charles Scribner's Sons; New York) or "Fishing in Western Waters" by Morie Morrison (Chronicle; San Francisco).

As for saltwater, look over some basic books on the subject. Sample them in a bookstore. If they answer your questions, they're probably a good buy.

Take a half-day trip on a boat. Rent fishing equipment at the landing. Any of the deckhands will show you how to knot the hook to the line, how to fix a rubber-core sinker above the hook, how the reel works and how to cast an anchovy. You'll catch fish. That's guaranteed.

Don't buy expensive equipment until you've decided what kind of fishing you prefer. The technique is essentially the same for all, yet each type of fishing requires vastly different reels, lines, sinkers and approach to the quarry.

These things are not learned in one lesson or one year, but solving the problems that are presented is fascinating and rewarding.

OK. A pig 'n jig is a leadhead on a hook with a rubber or hair skirt and a trailer of pork rind. Flippin' is a close-to-the-bank, soundless, splashless, perpendicular approach to catching bass, usually with a lead-headed jig or a weighted plastic worm. The rod is longer than usual and the casting is underhanded.

Yo-yoing is an ocean technique, dropping a lure, usually a stone-white metal spoon, to the bottom and bouncing it up and down, reeling it quickly, letting it fall. The roll cast is a quick method of feeding out fly line and getting the fly to a fish that might be interested.

KNEADING THE line is a method of picking up fly line in the left hand (if you're right-handed), keeping the fly active in the water, and bundling the line to cast again. Spin casting is the quickest way to master the spinning technique, the reel on top of the rod, the release by thumb pressure on the back of the reel, the line shooting out through a small opening in the cone at the front of the reel. Most anyone can learn to spincast in five minutes.

A star drag is a star-shaped brake or drag, on the same gear as the handle, which can be adjusted easily to fight a heavy fish. Eight-pound line expresses its predetermined breaking strength as measured by the manufacturer. It, or 6-pound line, is usual weight for most lake fishing.

Finally, believe this — any way you choose to begin fishing is suitable. You'll have fun. You'll meet some good people. You'll be out in the fresh air and sunshine. Each day will present a new truth and a new problem. That's what fishing is all about.

Fisherman's Wharf now a tourist attraction

New York Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — On a hot, cloudless afternoon this week, Fred Miller, a vacationing Chicago salesman, looked around him and commented: "The first time I was at Fisherman's Wharf was 20 years ago, when I got out of the Navy. It was really a fisherman's wharf; now it's almost like Coney Island."

Miller surveyed shoulder-to-shoulder throngs of fellow tourists and a panorama of signs that sought to lure them into a wax museum featuring a "17-set re-creation of the Tomb of Tutankhamen," assorted T-shirt shops, a "Haunted Gold Mine," a Guinness Museum of World Records and, down the block, a steamy room presided over by an auctioneer selling dolls, sewing machines and other merchandise.

Changes at Fisherman's Wharf, San Francisco's most heavily visited tourist attraction, have begun to trouble many people here.

In what some residents here might regard as an understatement, the City Planning Department issued a 272-page study of the waterfront neighborhood last week that declared: "In the last 20 years, profound changes have altered the image, character and structure of the Wharf area."

Because of over-commercialization, alternately "gaudy" and "boring" buildings, traffic congestion and other problems, it said many San Franciscans now rarely visited the wharf area.

The Wharf, occupying a spot on the edge of San Francisco Bay, offers stunning views of the city's two landmark bridges and Alcatraz Island. Until the early 1960's, the Wharf was simply a port for fishing boats, along with a handful of unpretentious restaurants. Then a nearby chocolate processing plant was converted into an imaginative complex of restaurants and stores that began to lure people to the area.

From 1968 to 1987, more than 1,600 hotel rooms were added to the wharf neighborhood. Meanwhile, commercial developments extended farther and farther from the original two-block cluster of seafood restaurants.

Local officials say they are working to reverse the trend but that doing so will not be easy.

Five years ago, the Port of San Francisco began developing a two-part plan meant to re-establish the importance of fishing at Fisherman's Wharf, to attract local residents back to the area and to restore some of its lost charm.

The plan included construction of a center for research on commercial fishing, fish and vegetable markets, a hall for community events and a 500-room hotel. It also called for a new berthing facility for commercial fishermen with the kind of amenities that would attract more fishing boats to the wharf.

But Randall Rossi, the port's director of planning, said a recent financial study indicated this plan now appears unfeasible because of high costs.

Some fishermen are skeptical about ever reclaiming Fisherman's Wharf. Strieskal predicted that ultimately the new hotel would be built, but not the new facilities that fishermen were promised.

There are hundreds of ways to hook that tall-tale fish

Copley News Service

There are hundreds of ways to catch fish. One is bound to work. Trouble is, the fisherman can't remember all the methods, and he doesn't have enough hours in a fishing day to try out even the ones he can remember.

Take the pig 'n jig, sometimes called jig 'n pig. What it amounts to is a leadhead, sometimes with a skirt, sometimes hooked through a pork frog, or a strip or a plastic worm. This is a lure, in use for 15 to 20 years, that suddenly has arisen to wonder lure status this year.

It is cast into an area, usually around an underwater ledge, or into brush, against some bottom rubble, down a slope or up a slope, and lifted in short bumps back to the caster. It is a sport for line-watchers, for the hook must be set firmly the moment the line moves erratically. Often the hands, or even the boron rod, fail to signal that a bass is mouthing the jig.

In the hands of an expert, the pig 'n jig is a deadly weapon. But, like the plastic worm, its use is an acquired skill.

Roland Martin, in Bassmasters, told Tim Tucker that the pig 'n jig is his favorite all-around bass-catcher, particularly for big fish. He thinks this is because its movement resembles a crawfish. In fact, he told Tucker that he teams his jig with a No. 11 Uncle Josh pork chunk to match crawfish colors.

When jig fishing began some 15 to 20 years ago, Martin viewed the technique as a cold-water method, using it generally in the winter and early spring. When water temperature rose past 60 degrees F, he automatically shifted to worms. Plastic worms, in his view then, were the best summertime bait.

Subsequently, however, he determined that the pig 'n jig will draw strikes in waters up to 95 F. Now he uses it everywhere the Bass Anglers Sportsman Society holds its tournaments. But he doesn't just throw pig 'n jigs. He'll switch to worms, spinnerbaits, plugs, whatever his instincts tell him the bass might prefer.

Bo Dowden, Natchitoches, La., won the 1980 Bass Masters Classic on the St. Lawrence River off Alexandria Bay, N.Y., throwing a ⅜-ounce black jig with a weed guard and trailing a brown No. 11 Uncle Josh pork chunk. One bass he caught weighed 6 pounds, which is heavy for tournament fishing.

Springtime is spinnerbait time, many fishermen feel. They prefer white, chartreuse or yellow colors, generally, and cast them against the bank, starting the retrieve the instant the water is touched. When a patch of tules or snags is reached, they pull through, then allow the lure to sink once it is clear. When the lure is on top or just as it falls is when most bass intercept it.

The spinnerbait is a fun lure because it seldom gets caught in the weeds. It tumbles past obstructions. It bounces over bottom rubble. It works well in stop-and-go situations, if the bass prefer that move. Just grind it back to the boat. But work on the arms to assure that the lure runs upright; bass won't hit it, otherwise.

The single-spin is the deep-water performer because it sinks faster; the tandem is for shallow-water, make-a-lot-of-commotion work. Along with the buzz-bait, it's a great springtime attractor.

There is a technique called "tipping" that sometimes causes lockjaw fish to bite.

Once, years ago at Barrett, Calif., a group of us were fishing flies for bluegill. And we weren't doing much; in fact, nothing at all. While the other guys weren't watching, I put a piece of redworm on the barb of the fly. A bluegill struck immediately. Then another. My friends, who professed to be purists, finally saw what I was doing.

CNS Graphic

Some purists! They all loaded their flies with bait — and started catching bluegill. What's the fun in fishing if you're not catching anything?

Tipping, as this is called, is a reliable technique to keep in mind when fish turn haughty. When crappie won't take a jig, tip it with a mealworm. A nightcrawler, substituted for a plastic worm, often will draw a strike. And nightcrawlers are efficient tips for spinnerbaits, as well.

Ocean fishermen have been doing this for years. When yellowtail are obstinate, an anchovy hung on the barb of a jig or a spoon sometimes turns the fish on. Rockcod hooks are tipped with squid and double-hooked anchovies.

When a band of small fish won't allow bait to drift through to larger fish below, a strip bait, too big for smaller fish to handle, is sometimes the answer. You can reach yellowtail below mackerel that way, and corvina beneath Gulf croaker.

A piece of nightcrawler on a hook, with a split-shot to carry it a bit deeper, is a deadly technique for trolling up trout. So are silver Kastmasters, Panther Martins and Roostertails cast from the bank at any of the stocked lakes; of course, most successes are at dawn and at sunset when the trout normally are in the shallows feeding.

Some fishermen hang another trebel hook on the tie-on loop of a spoon. The theory is that fish strike the head of the lure rather than swallowing the whole spoon. It works particularly for suspended bass when they show up on the sonar screen. Use the yo-yo technique. Make the fish angry — get them angry enough, and they'll bite.

For short striking fish, particularly in the ocean, rig a sliding line off the head of the bait hook, and hang a small trebel — a No. 10 size trout trebel sometimes — in the tail of the bait. No more stripped bait. The sneak hook catches the fish.

What a fisherman must do is try different things till he finds what attracts the fish. The answer might relate to color, to movement, to depth, to smell. Once it's learned, fish-catching turns easy.

Well, usually. As fast as a fisherman learns, a fish unlearns. With luck, though, the fisherman will have a limit in the boat by then.

Expert: Establish marital guidelines

Copley News Service

If you want your marriage to last, treat it like a business. Establish a list of rules for handling relational conflicts.

Writing in a recent issue of Modern Bride magazine, marriage and family expert Stephanie Dahl says marriages — like businesses — need specific guidelines if they're going to survive.

For instance:

- Always stick together as a couple when dealing with outside conflicts.
- Consult with your mate before you make commitments.
- Treat your mate with respect, and be thoughtful. Just because you are married doesn't mean you can forego saying please and thank you.

Finally, honesty is a priority.

Orlando tops list in marriage city survey

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Marriages die of neglect in New York City and end up on the rocks in Los Angeles because of the temptation of too many good-looking men and women, a survey found. But in Orlando, Fla. the marital state flourishes.

Cleveland and Pittsburgh were also right up there in the listing of good places for marriage, according to a Forbes Magazine survey.

"People (there) ... have maintained their willingness to work and fondness for stability. They are educated, friendly — though not overly so; you never get the feeling you're in Dallas — and quite down to earth," the magazine said.

It based its conclusions on a survey of 3,719 business managers who have lived in at least three places for one year or more.

Orlando just "has the right one and feel to it." With Disney World setting the tone, it is a good place to raise a family, the survey found.

Philadelphia was another top-rated city, with Albuquerque bringing up the rear and Washington, D.C., not far behind.

SPEAKING OF the top-rated cities, Forbes reported, "A town doesn't have to be booming economically for it to be a good place to raise a family, though it can't be falling apart completely either."

Those surveyed found Albuquerque to be hostile to outsiders, and complained that it had a bad effect on their children, the magazine said.

"Albuquerque is torn between wanting to be part of the business mainstream and having a separate Wild West culture all its own," the magazine said. "The place gives you a sense of being isolated, and it's more antagonistic — in a quiet way — than other large cities to people transplanted there from one of the northern states or the East. Making friends of your neighbors is no easy task."

Marriages in New York, the survey concluded, "die of neglect" because hard-driving, two-career couples "become estranged, (like) roommates sharing the same living space."

In Los Angeles, the survey found a different problem: "There is just too much temptation" from highly attractive men and women.

However, the survey found that the marriage climate is improving in the nation's two largest cities as the singles scene loses its glamour, "thanks in part to herpes and AIDS and an increasing interest in family life."

Forbes ranked 32 cities on a five-point scale, with five being a healthy environment for a marriage, one being a difficult place and three being neutral. Orlando scored 4.7; Albuquerque scored 1.8; Denver was a neutral 3.

OTHER COMMENTS:

- About New Orleans (ranked 28th): "Being on display all the time is a strain for a city. Doing it day after day divorces you, first from your emotions, and eventually from your spouse."
- Of Dallas (25) and Houston (26): "Anyone who tells you that poor people fight about money more than affluent ones do never overheard the blistering battles that took place in Dallas and Houston in the 1970s and 1980s, when energy prices were soaring."
- Of Denver (21): "The same sense of adventure and individuality that made people move to Colorado in the first place makes each say, 'Time for me to hit the road — traveling light and alone — again.' That mentality makes it difficult to make up after a quarrel."

Work off winter weight, get in summer shape with a little work

Associated Press

Spring is the time of year when people start dreaming about outdoor summer adventures — and kick themselves for not staying in shape during the winter.

Basic outdoor chores such as lifting canoes, packs and coolers, chopping wood, pounding tent stakes and tightening a hitch on a pannier can leave the out-of-shape outdoorsman out of sorts, according to an article in the May issue of Sports Afield.

It is not too late to begin getting in shape for summer fishing excursions, backpacking trips and horseback ing in the high country.

You can shape up by doing some of the things you should have been doing all winter long — working out at a gym, swimming pool, squash court or jazzercise class three or four times a week.

Indoor aerobic exercise machines are an ideal way to maintain or improve your fitness level. These include the bike trainer, the Nordic Track and the rower.

As the weather improves, combine some of your favorite sports with fitness routines. Pick a fishing spot a few miles from the road and do the approach walk briskly.

Take along a daypack with some extra useful weight — binoculars, cameras, field guides. This gets you accustomed to the larger loads you will carry while backpacking in summer.

Moving along toward summer, you are in the prime backpacking period, but it also is time to scout for fall hunting terrain. And you can use reconnaissance trips as a workout.

One idea is to don running shoes and a pack for your scouting trip. The lightweight gear allows you to cover a lot of ground on both trails and steep and rocky sections. You may wind up within yards of deer, elk and moose.

During the summer you can work out your upper body without ever going into a gym.

One way is to set up a climbing ladder in a tree near your campsite. Tie a dozen stout dowels between two parallel ropes, spacing the dowels about two feet apart, to form the ladder's rungs.

Suspend the top of the ladder from a 20-foot high tree limb. Attach the ground end to another tree trunk, so the ladder stands at a 60-degree angle between the two trees.

Using your arms, climb up the rungs and back down. The ladder will act as an ultimate pull-up bar.

Mountain bikes, which use knobby tires and as many as 18 gears, are another way to build aerobic fitness outdoors in spring and summer while camping and fishing.

Keep these exercises in mind and next year start them in winter to create a foundation of aerobic fitness and muscular strength that will put you in really good shape for warm weather fun.

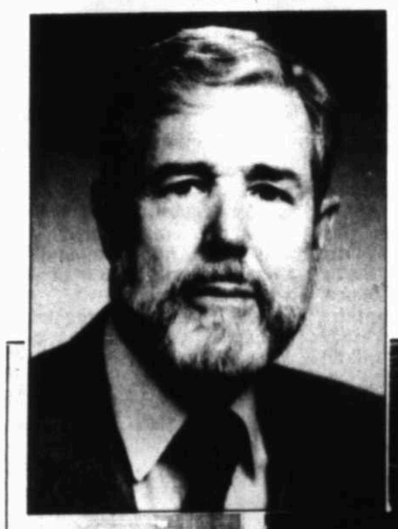
We're Proud To Be Homegrown

63RD BIRTHDAY



Son of the founder of the M System stores, Baugh Lewis assumed charge of company operations as general manager in 1966. Under his leadership, M System has reached its present position as the largest "home-grown" food chain in West Texas.

This first M System store was located on the corner of Chadbourne and Harris in downtown San Angelo. It took it's name from the "M" shaped arrangement of the aisles; shoppers entered at the base of one leg of the "M" and exited at the base of one leg of the "M" and exited at the other.

One of the newest M System Food Stores is located at 1926 North Bryant Blvd. in San Angelo.

The Plainview M System Food Store opened in August of 1979 and is located at N.W. Yonkers and 24th Street.

On May 26, 1983, M System Food Stores opened in Monahans, Texas. The store is located at N.W. I-20.

YESTERDAY

M System was the answer to shoppers needs in the West Texas of yesterday. From the earliest days, the founders of M System learned to know West Texas customers needs and, to offer them the products and prices they wanted. As our area grew our stores and services grew and we were ever proud to be home-grown!

TODAY

M System stores are still the answer to shoppers needs in West Texas. When you visit your M System supermarket today, you find foods in greatcr variety than ever -- with emphasis on quality meats, superior fresh fruits and vegetables, and an ever-growing abundance of frozen and other convenience foods to meet the needs of your way of life. And there are so many other things at an M System store. All at competitive low prices. And you find one thing more; the home-grown friendliness of M System's people.

TOMORROW

And at M System we understand the spirit of change which will enable us to meet your needs day by day, year by year. And to the future we will bring the best of the past -- the value, the low prices, the friendliness. As yesterday, as today, so will it be tomorrow -- M System, the answer, for all your shopping needs.

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of a five-part series on West Texas ghost towns.

Paul Zeitler carefully rolled a pinch of Prince Albert tobacco in cigarette paper and surveyed the shipping and ranching community that he has seen bloom, boom and bust during the past century and a half.

Even though abandoned buildings grown up in prickly pears, mesquite and weeds, are all that remain of the once thriving community of Girvin, Zietler said he can still hear the sound of the whistle of the Kansas City, Mexico and Orient freight train as it pulled into the bustling train depot when he was just a young man.

Gettin' to Girvin

Girvin is located beside the Santa Fe Railway tracks at Farm to Market Road 11 about one mile north of its intersection with U.S. Highway 67/385 and 34 miles northeast of Fort Stockton. A confusing sign for "Girvin," beside the commercial buildings at the crossroads, is actually one mile south of the ghost town.

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Medicaid helps elderly fill Medicare 'gaps'

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

When examining supplemental insurance policies, individuals over 65 years of age should realize that — although they may use different terms — many policies end up excluding the same types of coverage as Medicare does.

Policy terms,such as "medically necessary," "customary care" and others, may mean the policyholder is not purchasing coverage for actual charges incurred or services provided.

For low income elderly, the best way to fill gaps in Medicare coverage is with Medicaid, the states' medical assistant program.

A person who is eligible for Medicaid should never purchase private Medicare Supplemental insurance.

If your income is too high for you to be automatically eligible for Medicaid, you may still be eligible if you pay a monthly liability or share the cost.

Individuals pay the liability only during months in which medical help is required.

This is much more economical than paying a standard insurance premium where regular payments are made, even when the policy is not being utilized.

The Texas Department of Human Services has information on Medicaid eligibility requirements.

Currently on television, a number of supplemental insurance policies are being endorsed by famous personalities.

Although these policies are "endorsed," it does not mean it will be the best policy for you. Some of the lesser known policies actually offer better coverage than those with familiar names.

If you are in the market for a supplemental insurance policy, shop around and evaluate different policies.

Compare the amount of money you have paid or will pay in premiums with the maximum benefits you can receive.

Individuals may find that while they have paid several hundred dollars in premiums, the policy will only pay $100 toward a needed surgery.

It si very important to shop for a policy that effectively supplements Medicare Part B. This is where the most assistance is needed.

Do not be taken in by policies which offer up to $50,000 or more in hospital protection.

Remember, in most cases you would have to be hospitalized for "medically necessary" services for more than six months in order to benefit from these fantastic offers, and now such lengthy hospital stays are quite rare for patients.

The focus is moving more toward home health care and out-patient services. Policyholders should look for policies that effectively supplement Medicare Part B as well as provide for home health care coverage.

Shopping for Medi-gap insurance can be both confusing and difficult. Take time to analyze policies and know about the policy you are purchasing.

Ask your insurance agent to carefully explain the coverage. It's your money and you deserve the best available coverage for your dollars.

Law firm allows their lawyers to change diapers

Copley News Service

Can you imagine visiting a law firm where lawyers change diapers as well as work on cases during the day? That's what people find upon entering the office of Dunbar Sachs Appell in Toronto, Ontario.

The all-female law firm was established last spring with one objective in mind: accommodating the professional and family needs of its all-woman staff.

Lawyers are allowed to bring their kids to work when necessary. Staff members work as a team, acting as nannies, covering each other's caseloads, and making sure everyone is gone by 5 p.m. Partner Judith Beaman says the firm isn't prejudiced against men, it's just that most men have trouble accepting its philosophy.

After all, how many male lawyers would consider playing blocks during the day as part of the job?

San Antonio museum honors Texas Rangers

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — It may be San Antonio's least-known museum. Indeed, many visitors find the one-room museum only by accident, believing they are headed for the Witte Museum next door.

But whether visitors arrive by accident or intentionally, a fascinating look at Texas history awaits them at the Pioneer Old Texas Trail Drivers Texas Rangers Museum on Broadway.

They also find a friendly and fascinating museum guide, Glo Hensley Stuart. She clearly is proud of her Texas heritage and strives to share her enthusiasm and pride with visitors to the tiny museum.

"The Rangers are a special breed of men," she said. "I love to be able to tell people about the individual Rangers and their lifestyles. But, having known the men of the early Ranger days is what's the most exciting."

Mrs. Stuart is secretary-treasurer of the Former Texas Rangers Association and her duties include operating the Ranger section of the museum, which features photographs thumb-tacked to bulletin boards, weapons carried by some of the most legendary Rangers and their badges and other memorabilia.

The other section of the museum pays tribute to the pioneers and trail drivers who settled the state. Those people often were dependent on Texas Rangers to protect them from desperados.

Mrs. Stuart was eligible to join the association because her father, John Hensley, was a Texas Ranger for 15 years. As she conducts tours of the museum that includes more than 500 photographs and a few artifacts used by men in the agency organized in 1823 by Stephen F. Austin, she is quick to point out her roots by bragging a little about the badge her father wore when he served in the borderlands beginning in 1913 — back in the days when law enforcement officials had to contend with Mexican bandit Pancho Villa.

"I guess my pride and joy is my father's badge," Mrs. Stuart said, explaining Hensley also patrolled the massive King Ranch while he was a Ranger.

Mrs. Stuart, who has served as secretary-treasurer of the association for 11 years, said her main goal is to preserve the history of the oldest continuous law enforcement agency in the nation. But she also takes advantage of the situation to enjoy a little fun and adventure.

Through her job, she met "The Lone Ranger" actor Clayton Moore, and Ranger Doug, who performs with country band Riders in the Sky.

The museum is open 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesdays through Sundays from May through August, and from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. from September through April. Admission fees are $1 for adults and 25 cents for children.

Graduation gifts should fit grads

By VERONICA CASTILLON

Hearst News Service

Before you purchase a present for your favorite graduate, think about his (or her) lifestyle.

Graduates will be needing many items to make a successful entry into the "real world." Whether they are entering college or the job market, every grad needs clothes. If you don't know what size or style to settle for, buy a gift certificate from a store in the city where he or she will be residing.

If the student is moving away, buy him something that will help him keep in touch with his loved ones. When my sister graduated from high school, my uncle Joe presented her with a combination telephone, radio and alarm clock that still works to this day. Now she can call us when she wakes up in the morning and listen to the news at the same time. Talk about efficient.

One of my college roommates was delighted to receive a subscription to her hometown paper. It helped her at night when she was homesick and it was great for her bird's cage.

For the graduate who is leaving home for the first time, most portable inventions will make life easier: a coffeemaker, iron or steamer, hairdryer, study lamp, calculator, etc. My co-worker suggested a "voice-activated tape recorder with AA batteries" for the lazy student who doesn't want to write lecture notes.

Serious students will definitely need a collegiate dictionary, thesaurus and atlas.

If your favorite graduate wasn't the class valedictorian, she's going to need big bucks for her first year in college. Valedictorians are fortunate in that they receive money from colleges who want to attract the country's brightest to their campus. The rest of us dummies used creative finances to buy school books, pay for room deposits, telephone deposits and pepperoni pizza at midnight.

Since Mom and Dad love to read Junior's letters, send him a box of pre-addressed, fine stationery with a roll of stamps.

Mom would also love it if you gave her son a giant laundry bag, heavy-duty detergent and a roll of quarters for the washing machines.

AT WIT'S END

'Frugal' desirable trait, but 'cheap' is just cheap

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

I never think of myself as "cheap."

Oh sure, my wedding dress was a "second" and my kids had so many knots in their shoestrings we had to cut the shoes off their feet every night, but that's not cheap, that's being "frugal."

My mother was cheap. She laundered sandwich bags and laminated slivers of soap together. She steam-pressed every ribbon on every package she had ever received and wound it around a toilet tissue spindle to save. It used to drive me crazy.

I was very careful not to follow in her footsteps. When one grows up in such an atmosphere of economy, it's hard not to succumb. She used her old chenille bedspreads to cover her new sofa to save the cushions, and one day I actually saw her walk down the hallway with her legs apart so she could wear the carpet out a little more evenly. I didn't want to turn out like that.

Mom used to kid me about how my reading glasses were held together with a paper clip and my cookie sheet was bought the same year the Mouseketeers debuted, but I explained to her I was just being "frugal."

I thought of her recently when I saw a new book called "The Cheapskate's Handbook" by Mifflin Lowe. It could have been my mother's biography. Mifflin Lowe irons aluminum foil and slices paper matches in half so they go twice as far. He drops a plastic bug in his soup to avoid paying his restaurant bill and takes his own tea bag to a restaurant and orders hot water.

It is my belief there is a reason for this kind of tightness. The Depression had a great effect on an entire generation. You didn't waste or throw away anything. Every bit of food led a double life ... one fresh and one warmed over.

These are the people who can never throw away a half-used prescription. They save them, never knowing when someone might drop by with a case of conjunctivitis or morning sickness.

They get jobs putting round toilet tissue on square holders in public restrooms so you have to fight for one square at a time. They marry people who share their excitement over putting gum in the microwave and using it for glue. They send out Christmas cards with the original signatures covered with Erase.

I'm sorry, folks, but I can't live like that. I don't mind ripping uncanceled postage stamps off return envelopes that I have no intention of returning, or even of coloring my varicose veins with crayons and palming them off as textured stockings, but I just can't stand being "cheap."

The difference? Cheap is what everyone else is when you're being frugal.

FORGOTTEN

In 1928, 16 years after the railroad was built, Paul's mother and father, Fred and Helen Zeitler, moved to Girvin from Wisconsin to become ranchers in a town that was just beginning to blossom.

The town is located in semi-arid northern Pecos County about 34 miles northeast of Fort Stockton and 11 miles west of McCamey. It is named for the Girvin family, the earliest ranch settlers in the area.

The wooden railroad station for passengers and freight was built on the site in 1912 and a post office was added in 1913. Soon other businesses were built, adding a general store, a hotel, a saloon and a lumberyard to the town.

"The saloon only served beer," Zeitler recalled. "No whiskey. Oh, sure there were always a few bootleggers around selling the 'hard stuff' but the saloon didn't have any part of that."

For many years, Girvin's shipping pens, located beside the railroad tracks, held thousands of cattle that were in transit to markets. The town began to prosper, and by the late 1920s the Girvin Independent School District built a new brick school.

BY 1929, expanding oil fields created a demand for electricity and a generator was erected in Crockett County by Pecos Valley Power and Light Company to serve Girvin.

"During the 1930s there were about 200 children in school," Zeitler said. Even the new brick building wasn't adequate in size for the classes. One of the school's three teachers taught classes in a nearby lumberyard to acommodate the overflow.

"There was a time here when the town was so big, I didn't know everyone's names," Zeitler said.

After World War II, the economic base for Girvin was the ranching industry. Girvin also served as a supply center and shipping point for a large area.

WHEN OIL production began in the Yates and Trans-Pecos oil fields, the town also became a rail delivery point for petroleum equipment and supplies. A saltworks opened a mile west of Girvin and the town seemed destined to become a booming city.

But then a killing blow came. "A new highway was built to connect Fort Stockton with McCamey," Zeitler said. Instead of having the main highway passing in front of the Girvin Garage and depot, the new highway passed one mile south of Girvin.

People soon began leaving Girvin in search of jobs elsewhere. The population began to rapidly decline, and by 1933 only 34 pupils remained in the school, which finally closed in 1939.

Zeitler said the school building is now used as a community center and a polling place for people scattered around Girvin and McCamey. "However," he said with a conspiratory smile, "It's mostly used for 'hen' parties."

THE CENSUS of 1940 showed only 75 people left in Girvin. Then the final death blow was sounded in 1944 when the Santa Fe Railway, successor to the Orient, razed the half of the Girvin depot which had been devoted to freight, and in 1955 closed the passenger station. Even the post office moved out of town, relocating to a store on the new highway.

Today Girvin has a population of one — Zeitler.

"I don't get lonely. I have my dog, Bingo, and Jack, my burro who has been with me for 15 years," Zeitler said. Jack lives in the corral in back of Zeitler's house and adds a stalwart character to the otherwise crumbling landscape.

"You ever see a burro fetch a hat before?" Zeitler asked. With the agility of someone half his 83 years, the retired rancher nimbly climbed over the corral fence and hopped into the pen. He tossed a weathered cowboy hat across the pen and Jack obediently retrieved it.

Zeitler put the burro through his paces. Jack nodded or shook his head to questions asked such as "Do you know this stranger here?"

THE BURRO pawed his hoof five times on the ground when asked the answer to "What is two-plus three," and counted out the correct number to other mathematical questions, including "How many adults are standing out here?" "How many children?" and "How many people all together?"

For the grand finale, Zeitler commanded Jack to "make a face." The burro immediately complied by pulling back his lips and barring his teeth.

"That's one smart burro," Zeitler said. "We've been together a long time in Girvin. We like it here."

Zeitler said that he has friends who come to see him often, one lives less than a mile a way. "I go to McCamey once a week to shop." Although he lives simply, cooking on a wood stove and rolling his own cigarettes, Zeitler has some modern conveniences — electricity, a television and a radio.

He also has a brother, Irvin "Irby" Zeitler and his wife Gladys, and two nephews, all of Midland, who come to visit him. Irby and Gladys, along with Zeitler's parents, four other brothers and two sisters, were all residents of Girvin at one time.

"I remember how the wind used to really blow out in the open of Girvin," Gladys Zeitler said.

IRBY ZEITLER remembers working on the Orient Railroad from 1929-34. "I made 28¼ cents an hour," he said.

"There were about 50 or 60 houses in Girvin back then," Mrs. Zeitler said. "But it's difficult to estimate how many people were there because so many were living in tents."

Although his family members and friends chose to leave and retire elsewhere, Zeitler chose to stay.

Despite the mounds of rubble and antique oil cans grown over with mesquite, a few of Girvin's buildings still cling tenaciously to life. Tattered newspapers and yellowed shipping forms blow around the two-story concrete garage/filling station with the words "No Lofin" scrawled on its storefront, the only reminders of Girvin in its heyday.

PIECES OF the pressed tin ceiling litter the floor inside, as well as empty coke bottles, old shoes, gas stoves and antiques. A table set up with coffee mugs, now filled with dust, and cobweb covered plates, untouched since the 1930s, attest to a day when everyone just "up and left." But to tell about Girvin is also to tell about the people who built it and lived in it — and once had high hopes for its success.

Zeitler was one of those people and he still remembers the vision he had of a great city. Pointing proudly to a building which once housed the general store, Zeitler said, "Some folks are considering fixing up the store and reopening it as a cafe. Plenty of people still come out here and it would be a good business."

The sole inhabitant of Girvin owns his house and the general store. Pecos County owns the garage/filling station building. Zeitler admits his family has always had roots deeply entrenched in the West Texas soil, and the Zeitler name will still be a part of Girvin as long as he is there acting as caretaker to the once-thriving ranch town.

"After all," he said "Girvin's not dead yet."

Yellowware collectible Americana

Associated Press

American yellowware was first produced in the 1830s from an Ohio clay. The reinforced yellow clay was fired to high temperatures and sealed with a clear alkaline glaze. After glazing and firing, the clay turned a color that ranged from a pale mustard to a deep golden yellow.

Early yellowware was thrown on a potter's wheel; later examples were molded over forms. The embossed surface decoration sometimes found on yellowware was produced by pouring liquid clay into a mold. The interior of the mold was carved in an elaborate floral or geometric pattern. Embossing is relatively rare in yellowware.

Whether yellowware featured an embossed or smooth surface, it was sometimes decorated with bands of white, brown, green or blue.

When yellowware was first introduced, the most popular pieces were sets of mixing bowls, ranging in size from 2x24-inches wide. The challenge for today's collector is to find a complete set of bowls.

One pottery company produced bowls before the turn of the century. The bowls were made in 10 sizes, from ½ pint to three gallons.

Other desirable yellowware pieces include rolling pins, pudding molds and pie plates. Turk's cap molds, fluted cake pans, were used to make cakes and are difficult to find.

Some of these pieces, such as mixing bowls, are readily available. Rolling pins, fluted molds, and covered dishes are difficult to find and command a high price.

Keep in mind that even a hairline crack can reduce the value of a piece of yellowware by as much as 50 percent. If the piece is rare, it is probably wise to make the purchase

Children's teeth studied

New York Times News Service

Breast-feeding may contribute to straighter teeth because it leads to different growth patterns in the mouth than those in bottle-fed babies, according to a new study at the Johns Hopkins School of Public Health.

The study used data on feeding and dental problems collected on 9,698 children through the National Center for Health Statistics. The researchers, Dr. Miriam H. Labbok of Johns Hopkins and Dr. Gerry E. Hendershot, chief of the Illness and Disability Statistics Branch of the National Center, found that infants who breast-feed use their tongues differently from the way bottle-fed babies do. In bottle-feeding, the tongue must move forward to stop milk coming from the nipple of the bottle during swallowing. "This forward thrust may form into a habit," said Labbok. Breast-feeding requires no forward tongue thrust and infants must use mouth muscles more vigorously.

The research, financed by the center and the Mellon Foundation, also found that children bottle-fed or breast-fed for less than a year reported misaligned teeth 40 percent more often than children breast-fed for more than one year, although these children are slightly more likely to suck their fingers, a habit the researchers said can cause problems in tooth alignment. But those breast-fed for three months or less and those who continued to suck a finger had the highest risk of crooked teeth.

Breast-feeding has become more popular in the United State since its low in 1970, when fewer than 25 percent of mothers did so. Now it is estimated that 60 percent of mothers breast-feed.

Getting in shape for summer doesn't have to be tedious, unpleasant

By MONICA PEREZ
Copley News Service

After months of hibernation, warm weather finally is here. You have sunbathed, listened to the radio and completed the latest book on your vacation reading list. But perhaps your winter body needs more than a good tan. After months of inactivity, it might be time for a good fitness program to firm up muscle tone and lose winter weight.

You don't have to embark immediately on a spartan diet and non-stop exercise regimen to make up for all those sedentary months. In fact, you can walk your way to a toned, summer body and improved cardiovascular fitness.

Health walking, one of the hottest forms of exercise in the United States today, is an ideal summer activity. Nearly 60 million Americans are avid walkers.

STILL, LAZING by the poolside is easily the preferred activity when one is faced with the prospect of working out in the dog days of summer. Howard Jacobson, author of "Racewalk to Fitness" and consultant to Mazola corn oil, first official sponsor of the U.S. Race Walking Team and a sponsor of the 1988 U.S. Olympic Team, provides these simple tips for taking the heat out of a summertime fitness plan:

■ Drink plenty of liquids. "The key to safe walking in hot weather is water," Jacobson says. It is essential to keep fluid levels high so your blood volume remains at its normal level. Heat exhaustion can occur when the body loses water and electrolytes — sodium, magnesium, potassium — through perspiration during prolonged exercise.

■ Dress for the weather. In hot, humid weather, it is important to let your body breathe as much as possible. Nylon track shorts with built-in underpants are cool and lightweight — a popular choice for both men and women. Choose a cotton T-shirt to absorb sweat and keep you comfortable, and thin cotton anklet socks to prevent abrasions from walking shoes. Be sure the sock fits snugly, with no wrinkles or holes that can cause blisters.

■ Select lightweight, easy-to-care-for shoes. While leather shoes are wonderful for cooler weather, sneakers with nylon uppers will serve you well during the warm months. Opt for athletic shoes that fit comfortably and provide adequate support for both heels and ankles.

■ Wear headgear to protect yourself from the rays of sun. A lightweight cap provides protection against the powerful rays of the sun while keeping your entire body cool.

■ Use a sunscreen. Regardless of the season, whenever participating in an outdoor activity, protect your skin from harmful ultraviolet rays with a strong sunscreen.

■ Walk in the early morning or early evening to avoid the sun at its highest — and hottest. The middle four hours of the day — from 11 a.m. until about 3 p.m. — are the times in which the sun is at its strongest.

YOU ALSO can take your walking regimen indoors. Air-conditioned malls and health clubs with indoor tracks — even high school gymnasiums — provide the necessary terrain for a workout as well as a welcome respite from the heat.

Walk on the beach. The wet, firm sand along the water provides a steady surface to maintain the posture and technique necessary for health walking.

When shaping up, diet goes hand in hand with exercise. Here are a few eating tips devised by Lauve Metcalfe, one of the top 10 Healthy American Fitness leaders named by the President's Council on Physical Fitness, and a spokeswoman for V8:

■ Pack some clout into your calories. Instead of drinking diet soda or coffee, opt for juice instead. Yogurt instead of sour cream on a power-packed baked potato; bran muffins; peanut butter on rice cakes; and a steady supply of crunchy raw vegetables are other good choices.

■ Don't eat like a race car driver. Many of us are full long before our brain has a chance to tell our stomach. Choose slow eating foods such as fruits that need to be peeled and hot soups. Or, try using chopsticks — they're fun and reduce the amount of food you can eat in one sweep.

■ Lose no more than 2 pounds a week. Crash diets might yield immediate results, but really do more harm than good. If your calorie intake drops below a certain level, your metabolic processes will slow down and your body will resist losing weight. When more calories start coming in, they are stored rather than burned.

DEAR ABBY

Wife happy husband is unfaithful

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My husband of 26 years has had the same mistress for eight years, and I'm all for it. Here are my reasons: I am able to spend a lot of time alone (which I prefer), and anything I do is fine with him, because he's able to spend more time with her. He is not aware that I know what's going on and he treats me like a queen because he has such a guilty conscience he feels compelled to make it up to me.

He's an excellent provider, and I have total freedom. I figure he will die at a much earlier age due to the constant stress he is under trying to hide his affair from me. Also, he doesn't take care of his health. (He averages about three hours sleep a night.) When he finally drops dead, I stand to collect several hundred thousand dollars in insurance money, and all of our assets will be 100 percent mine.

The other woman is doing me a great favor. — LOVE BEING CHEATED ON

DEAR L.B.C.O: The lovely scenario you have written in your head may, in reality, have a surprise ending. For example: He could lose his money. Or instead of dropping dead, he could have a stroke or heart attack, leaving him incapacitated for many years. Or, YOU could drop dead or become incapacitated.

Lost time cannot be replaced, so why not tell him you know what's going on, then see a lawyer and make an honest man out of the guy? That way all three of you can be happy.

DEAR ABBY: Sometimes I wish I didn't have to take piano lessons. It's hard to find time to practice, or I just don't feel like it.

My mom keeps saying, "You'll be glad I made you practice." I don't understand why she makes me do something I don't feel is necessary. — TROUBLED

DEAR TROUBLED: How old are you? Do you have any special talent or are you wasting your mother's money and your time? All children are "made" to do things THEY don't think are necessary — like go to sleep, and wake up, study, practice, bathe and brush their teeth regularly. If you're over 15, ignore this answer. If you're under, hang in there, and go along with your mother.

DEAR ABBY: I know that I have a tendency to talk too much, but I can't seem to control it. I would appreciate any hints on how to remind myself not to talk so much. I just don't seem to know when to stop.

I know I'm a pest at times. Maybe some of your readers who have had this problem and solved it can offer some suggestions. — MOTOR-MOUTH IN DENVER

DEAR MOTORMOUTH: Rejoice. Your problem is half solved because you admit it's a problem. Consider a few rules: Don't talk just for the sake of talking — talk only if you have something to say. Say what you have to say in as few words as possible. After you've said it, be quiet.

DEAR ABBY: What an ironic coincidence that I read in your column in the Los Angeles Times a letter that said there are no hotel schools in the state of Texas! Only last week I was at the University of Houston to break ground for a new addition to the Conrad N. Hilton College of Hotel and Restaurant Management.

The Hilton College was formed in 1969 with a gift from my father, and the Hilton Foundation has been very involved over the years in an effort to make the Hilton College the top hotel school in the country. More than a thousand alumni of the school, who now occupy key executive positions in hotels around the world, are testimony to our successful efforts. — BARRON HILTON, CHAIRMAN AND PRESIDENT, HILTON HOTEL CORP.

DEAR MR. HILTON: I plead ignorance concerning hotel schools, but it would have done your heart good to have seen the many letters I received in praise of the Hilton College of Hotel and Restaurant Management. (P.S. Readers: This is not a paid advertisement.)

PLAYING THE MARKET

MC students 'first class' investors

By DEANNA J. NEAL
Business/Oil Writer

ENTREPRENEURS

It's no secret that Midland is a hot spot for entrepreneurship and business ventures, so it also comes as no surprise that one of the most popular courses at Midland College is a business course that teaches entrepreneurship. Two local students "earned" big bucks this semester by investing in an imaginary stock portfolio they developed.

Students William Blake and Sibyl Morrison each earned over $84,000 in a three-month period by investing in the stock market, making them the top earners for the semester. The project was undertaken as part of a business class instructed by Dr. Jerry Jones, chairman of the business studies department at the local community college.

"These types of projects are valuable, because theoretical circumstances are put into immediate practical use," Jones notes.

Although these types of business classes are becoming increasingly popular at college campuses throughout the nation, Jones feels the class is uniquely suited for Midland because of the spirit of entrepreneurship which exists here.

Blake is a freshman finance major while Morrison just completed her sophomore year and plans to pursue a business degree at University of Texas at the Permian Basin. "The project was fun and exciting, but also a good learning tool. You become more aware of what's going on in the world around you," Morrison points out.

Blake says students each began a portfolio with $100,000 at the beginning of the semester to invest any way they liked. "We used various financial publications, including the Wall Street Journal, Moneyline and company financial reports, to decide how much and in what stock we were going to invest."

Jones sees that as one big advantage of the class: "Learning to read financial publications and individual company reports is a valuable and essential skill.

"In addition, the students get out and talk to businessmen in the community and learn about financial ratios, projections and business trends — all skills necessary to be successful in business."

Blake's strategy was to purchase a large number of shares of four high-tech stocks, make his profit and get out. "I stayed fairly liquid, making my profit quickly and then selling."

Morrison purchased smaller lots and spread her investments over more than 25 stocks — everything from K-Mart and Texaco to IBM and Revlon.

Jones says both students significantly outperformed the market during the semester. "They had good timing; they bought and sold at the right time."

He says timing is a valuable asset, not only in playing the stock market, but in any situation. "There are many things beyond our control in life, just as fluctuations in the stock market are beyond an investor's control.

"Students who learn to anticipate and forecast learn a valuable lesson. They learn to become accustomed to inevitable "future shock." Most students will change careers two to three times during their lifetime — that change comes easier if they can forecast and project," he adds.

Earnings for the two business students were not all imaginary. A.G. Edwards representative Guy McKenzie presented both students with a savings bond for their outstanding performance.

Jones says that although the investment project is fun, only 20 percent of his students choose to do it as one of their required two out-of-class projects. "Students are afraid of the stock market and financial reports. Once they get into it, they find it is not that hard, but more fun and interesting." He admits that not all students make a profit in their portfolios, but notes that "losing your shirt" can be a valuable lesson in itself.

Other projects give the students practical and beneficial experience, too. Jones notes that this semester one of his students saved more than $7,200 on insurance bills for his own company because of his work on a business simulation project. "He

Family yarn dealership a 'close-knit' business

By JOHN PAUL PITTS

Francis Collins calls herself a "late bloomer." She started flying at 40, earned her commercial and instrument rating at 42 and flew in the last Powder Puff Derby. She graduated from college at age 56 with a degree in medical technology and now at age 60 she thinks she may have finally discovered her niche as an entrepreneur.

Selling for only 11 months in 1986, her infant firm, which distributes premium British yarns nationally, had $100,000 in sales. She expects to more than double that this year, and projects gross sales of "easily a million dollars" for the near term.

"This is one of the most exciting things I have ever done," says Mrs. Collins, who started her Bramwell Yarn distributorship in her garage with an inventory of only $10,000.

"This thing just snowballed on us," says her husband O.C., a retired veterinarian who calls himself the firm's chief "gofer."

He said the business started in the garage, but quickly overflowed into the living room, dining room and two bedrooms when 40-case orders turned into 400-case orders. "We had to get a warehouse for self preservation," he joked, adding that the business has increased even more dramatically with the new warehouse, an 800 number and a computer. Now, the firm has outgrown its 2,500-sq.-ft. warehouse and will break ground on a new 5,000-sq. ft. warehouse in Midland Industrial Park with completion slated for August.

O.C. (that's all the name he cares to give) retired in 1984, after practicing veterinary medicine for 32 years in Midland, and says he is 100 per cent behind his wife in her enterprise. "She spent her life helping me through school and raising our four children, and now I'm going to spend my time helping her with this project."

Mrs. Collins says her enterprise grew out of a hobby: "I had been hand knitting for 27 years, then six years ago I got my first knitting machine and began to look for a high-quality yarn." She began to use her resale number to buy the premium Bramwell yarn from England for herself and a few friends who had knitting machines.

Then, seeing the potential for a premium yarn and the possibility for a distributorship, she arranged to meet the owner of the yarn mills in British Columbia. That meeting landed her distribution rights to 16 states in the Southwest.

Bramwell had originally intended to establish six regional distributors in the United States, but within a few months the Midland grandmother had set such an impressive sales record (second in sales among 900 distributors in England and other countries) that the owner arranged a second meeting in Denver and elected to give her the rights for the entire U.S. territory.

O.C. Collins says his wife's business has managed to grow rapidly by simply getting the word out that quality British yarn was available. He said most of the yarn now being used by hobby knitters has been coming

Liquidators pushing to cut asset overload

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

The explosive growth in the number of Texas bank failures is generating an unprecedented workload for the liquidators of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.'s Dallas region, say FDIC officials.

At a press workshop in Arlington this week, Milos "Mike" Konjevich, deputy regional director for the liquidation division, noted that the increase in failures is dumping the inventory of failed banks' assets into the control of the region office which covers Texas, New Mexico and Arkansas. This week, the tally of bank failures in the state since the first of the year climbed to 29, compared to 26 for all of 1986.

Konjevich estimated that more than $3 billion is represented by the more than 60,000 individual assets from 144 banks which are under the region office's control. The Dallas region has, by far, the largest asset inventory in the nation, easily outdistancing the second- and third-largest regions combined, Konjevich said.

In the Midland consolidated office alone — one of six in the region — the most recent (mid-April) public listing of available properties showed more than $25 million in about 130 parcels of developed and undeveloped real estate. At the end of March, the FDIC controlled more than 1,350 pieces of real estate across the three-state region.

However, Konjevich told workshop attendees that the increasing frequency of failures is improving the efficiency, speed and aggressiveness with which the liquidation teams work.

Locally, faster liquidations are evidenced by the Jenkins' Luggage & Gift store which opened Saturday on Loop 250. Less than six months ago, the building housed Security National Bank.

Federal study: FAA inspection procedure too lax

By JOEL CONNELLY & DUFF WILSON
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — The Federal Aviation Administration devotes too much time to approving new airlines instead of inspecting current ones and fails to spot airlines with potential safety problems, according to a U.S. General Accounting Office study.

The FAA also is not adequately checking the safety of the nation's growing fleets of commuter aircraft, the study says.

The report praised the FAA for "taking corrective action on a broad front" in the past year and increasing the size of its inspector work force. But the study said the FAA does not yet know where to assign its newly hired inspectors and lacks ability to zero in on airlines with potential safety problems.

"While an increase in inspector positions is apparently warranted, the FAA does not at present know how many inspectors are needed or where they should be assigned," according to the Congressional watchdog agency. The study, using information from 1984-1986, focused on three of the FAA's regional offices — the Los Angeles-based Western Pacific Region, the Northwest Mountain Region office in Seattle, and the Atlanta-based Southern Region.

The 89-page GAO study is dated May 19 but has been held for release at a future date by the aviation subcommittee of the House Public Works and Transportation Committee. A copy was obtained Wednesday night by the Hearst Newspapers.

When asked for comment, FAA spokesman Bob Buckhorn in Washington D.C. said he had not yet seen a copy of the GAO report.

The GAO cited 1985 records showing FAA inspectors in five district offices around the country "spent 80 percent of their time" on tasks not related to discovering potential safety defects in planes.

"According to (inspectors), airline certification and other noninspection tasks such as pilot certification sometimes took precedence because of industry pressure on FAA to certify new airlines and operating changes for existing ones," reported the GAO.

Richard Blondefield, operations branch manager in the FAA's Seattle flight standards office, responded that the FAA has taken steps recently to bolster inspections of existing airlines.

The fine art of hunting Commie conspiracies

Pitts

The two are so interwined, it's hard to say which came first — the Commie conspiracy or the ultraconservative. But, there's no mistaking the need to hunt conspiracies that burn hot in the hearts of nearly all us conservatives.

Not limited to just "looking under every bed," I fancy myself a first-class conspiracy hunter, able to spot a Soviet ploy quicker than you can say John Birch. And, I certainly don't consider myself a right wing paranoid, as some have suggested.

If you have ever had a yearning to look for Commie plots against America, but didn't know how, perhaps I can help by pointing out a few of the choice conspiracies I have suspicioned in my time.

For instance, when the flap over the fluoride conspiracy died, I was the one that first suspected the red pot plot.

When you go into a restaurant and order decaffeinated coffee, and they pour it from the red pot, are you really sure it's decaffeinated? How do you know? It could be loaded with caffeine. And we know what that does to our nerves, don't we? We only have their word on it. And why do they always put it in a red pot? Think about it.

I have already mentioned the red light conspiracy at the corner of Andrews Highway and Illinois in this column, so I won't bore you again with the details of that devilish trap that seems to be aimed at eroding the patience of all decent, God-fearing Americans.

But I also lay claim to exposing this leftist plot: About 80 percent of the buildings in town have this sign at the entrance: "Please Use Other Door." Have you ever wondered why you should have to use the "other" door — especially when the one with your hand on it works perfectly? And have you ever noticed that it's always the door on the left they want you to use? Could it be some form of leftist conditioning?

I am most disturbed, however, by the revelation that there may be communist infiltrators in the American fashion industry — infiltrators who would make every American woman look like Granny Yoakum and all the men contestants in a nerd contest.

A communist plot? How else can you explain those who would have beautiful women in the world (American) wearing skirts that look like hand-me-downs from a Gypsy and sweaters that look like they were once owned by William "The Refrigerator" Perry.

As for the fashionable men — khaki pants with pleats and peg legs, tennis shoes, T-shirts and tweed sport coats with the sleeves rolled up? What next — designer pocket protectors?

If this same group of infiltrators ever gets into the decorating business, what can we expect for the fashionable American home — satin couch pillows that say San Diego on one side and U.S. Navy on the other? ... glow in the dark pictures of Jesus? ... plastic waterfalls and grass Tiki huts for the backyard?

Could it be part of the "Commie one world plan" to make the entire world as tasteless and ugly as Russia.

If you think conservative Texas is immune, think again. Perhaps you have noticed already, and are concerned as I am, that many of our school children no longer speak with a Texas accent. We now have native Texans who sound like kids from New Jersey, California or Wisconsin, and I wonder who is teaching our children to talk this way, and why?

We know the one-world Commies are working day and night to undermine our basic regional values. And

FDIC's staff is becoming more proficient at packaging and marketing assets such as loan portfolios and "hard" assets such as equipment and supplies.

"When a $100 million bank in Enid, Okla. failed earlier this year without a buyer to assume any part of its business, we set — and met — a goal of completely liquidating its holdings within 60 days." An earlier attempt to "hard sell" the disposal of a Tulsa bank's assets fell short of its quick-sell goal but "taught us important lessons."

A few of the "lessons" he cites are the "80-20 Rule," avoiding speculation at all cost and that real estate is expensive to maintain. The first rule applies to the fact 20 percent of the assets in number will account for 80 percent of the value of the inventory.

"That makes it important to quickly unload small items — both loans and hard assets — because they have a tendency to be labor-intensive. We try to concentrate on the 'high dollar' items which are more management-intensive," Konjevich said.

Non-real estate auctions garnered $116 million in liquidation income last year; the total for the first three months of 1987 was already $96 million. The target for total liquidation this year is a half-billion dollars, he said.

With depressed markets for oil field equipment and real estate in the Southwest — two of the largest categories in the liquidation inventory — wouldn't it be wiser to hold on to the goods until the markets turn around?

"No," Konjevich said. "Our board in Washington constantly reminds us that we are not in the business of speculating on the direction of price movements in the future. Our job is to do our best to get what it is worth today."

Said Konjevich: "As receiver of a failed bank, or of assets not assumed by a purchasing bank, the FDIC's two functions are:

- to get a bank closed and to evaluate its inventory in preparing the bank for pay-out or assumption, and
- to convert assets to cash."

The agency's chairman is insistent that FDIC asset inventories belong in the private sector, where individual businessmen can speculate on the future market, Konjevich explained.

Cutting the "holding time" on real estate properties — such as the Security National building — reduces maintenance costs, he said.

To date, the FDIC has had more success marketing loan portfolio packages in Oklahoma than in Texas, for a couple reasons. "There is a greater incentive to buy loans from us if loan demand from conventional sources is low. In Oklahoma, it has been virtually non-existent, so banks looking to build their portfolios have shown interest in our loan packages."

In addition, as the number of banks failing grows, there is less stigma attached to picking up the failed institution's former customers.

Also, there has been a steadier market for lower quality, distressed loans which sell at deeper discounts, than for higher quality loans, Konjevich said.

Aggressively scaling back loans and asset inventories has also caused the FDIC to institute a greater number of foreclosure actions, Konjevich said. "The statute of limitations on our secured interest rights was nearing expiration on many loans. In order to preserve our right to take possession of the loan collateral in case of a default, we had to move."

Improved efficiency and familiarity are also reflected in the liquidation division's ability to deal with the public when a failed bank must be paid out because of no purchaser interest.

In the Security National pay-out, the FDIC unlocked the bank's doors and began dispensing government checks to depositors within 48 hours. As recently as 1985, when a bank in Edinburgh collapsed, it took the liquidation team nearly five days to ready the bank's accounts for pay-out.

what could be more basic than the lyrical, Texas twang — except maybe the special friendliness we show by waving to each other on the highways.

But, we don't wave at each other anymore, you say. Am I making my point?

I'm not sure yet, but I suspect the mind-rotting plots of TV soap operas and horror movies might also be Commie conspiracies.

Let me make my case. How many times have you seen this horror plot?

Three couples are caught in a rain storm and forced to spend the night in a creepy old house, where they proceed to split up and wander around until they are graphically butchered one-by-one by an axe-wielding maniac.

The dialogue, with variations, offered by the lead character shortly after he finds his wife's head in the picnic basket normally goes something like this:

"Okay, gang we've got to get him before he gets us. Tom, you go and look in that musty old shed out back ... Mary, you take the basement, where all those strange noises have been coming from ... And Sue, you look in that dark, foul-smelling room at the top of the stairs. I'm going to take a shower."

Then, in view of 500 million people Bobby Ewing is killed, only to reappear, without a word of explanation, taking a shower. Now, Fallon Carrington Colby is on board a flying saucer — kidnapped by aliens — awaiting her fate for next season. And, Pam Ewing has been blown up in a collision with a gasoline-filled tanker and will probably return next season with a new face. The daytime stuff is even worse.

Could it be that such imaginings are deliberately designed to afflict the intelligence of Americans?

So, go ahead, call me paranoid. You're probably out to get me too!

Many of the students at Midland College are older than traditional college students, returning for additional training or those changing careers. "The course enables non-traditional students to get together and exchange practical experiences in actual business situations. They can learn a lot from each other's mistakes and successes."

One group of MC business students earned a trip to Memphis earlier this month with their presentation on the virtues of the free enterprise system. Blake, along with fellow students Gilley Ann Estes, George Galindo and Alisa Johnson, all members of the Students in Free Enterprise club on campus, earned the trip after regional competition in Dallas in May.

Students in Free Enterprise, based in Springfield, Mo., is an organization which encourages college students to educate themselves and others about economic issues and the free enterprise system. The Midland College chapter is one of 159 chapters nationwide.

The competition focused on which team had done the best job educating their communities about the free enterprise system, the federal deficit and other economic issues.

The local club sponsored a film series on free enterprise which was open to the public. They also sponsored a lecture series featuring prominent economists and business leaders and promoted a program for Midland school children. Their efforts in Memphis netted them a trophy for "Rookie of the Year" in international competition.

Each student said the opportunity to compete in Memphis was intellectually and socially beneficial.

Said one student: "You hear of entrepreneurs who have failed time after time — but all they are remembered for are their successes. They went back out again and again and took the risk. That's what entrepreneurship and free enterprise is all about."

To get the word out about Bramwell yarns, she advertises in three magazines, Western Knitting Machine Guide, Sew Business and McKnit, and travels to about six trade shows per year. "We manage to pick up about 20 new dealers at each show," she says. She adds that most of her dealers are retail sewing and knitting stores, but a few are custom production knitters who buy her yarn and convert it into commercial garments such as sweaters for cheerleaders, snowmobile clubs and other groups.

Says Mrs. Collins: "There is no telling where this business will go. It's just in its infancy — about eight years behind Europe. Also, no one really knows the potential of these new knitting machines. They are now beginning to connect them to computers, making for unlimited designs."

Currently six manufacturers make the home knitting machines which sell from $800, for the basic model, to $3,500 for the top of the line.

For now the Bramwell yarn distributorship is just a family business with Francis, O.C., their daughter and granddaughter pitching in to answer phones, fill orders and box merchandise for UPS shipment; but if it gets much bigger, it could mean a few extra jobs in the community.

Shipments to the Midland company arrive from England via American Airlines or British Caledonian and clear customs at Dallas or Lubbock, before being trucked to Midland. Mrs. Collins is hopeful that Midland will soon be declared a foreign trade zone to facilitate the process.

FAA

"Our highest priority in FAA flight standards is surveillance (and) inspection of certificated operators rather than certificating new ones," Blondefield said Wednesday.

While other recent GAO studies have focused on air traffic controllers, this report scrutinized the aviation safety inspectors who certify airliner operations, maintenance and equipment as well as repair stations and flight crews.

"Needed improvements in FAA's airline inspection program are under way," the GAO stated.

But the report said the FAA is still struggling to cope with a soaring number of commercial carriers and planes in the air.

The nation's commercial airline fleet rose from 250 commercial carriers operating 3,640 aircraft in 1978, to a total of 325 scheduled airlines with 4,470 planes in 1985.

By contrast, the FAA's force of air carrier and general aviation inspectors declined from 1,748 in 1981 to 1,494 in 1983.

The agency has since bolstered its inspector force back to 1,804 on the job as of the end of 1986, FAA spokesman Buckhorn said Wednesday. It plans to hire 165 more inspectors this year.

The GAO said special teams of FAA inspectors, established at the regional level, have discovered serious deficiencies in day-to-day inspection of aircraft.

"For example," reported the GAO, "two reports by special regional teams in the Western Pacific Region during 1986 showed that routine district office inspections had failed to identify numerous safety deficiencies at two large airlines."

A similar problem was uncovered in the Northwest Mountain Region.

"Current inspection guidance does not take into account an airline fleet's size, type and age, aircraft use rates, and the airline's record of compliance," the GAO stated.

The GAO report discusses the FAA's shortcomings — as well as efforts to improve — in a number of fields. These include:

— COMMUTER AIRLINES: The report says FAA management "does not know" how many of its inspectors are assigned to major scheduled airlines, and how many are inspecting "other, less complex aircraft and airline operations."

The lack of necessary inspector data has led to a shortchanging of inspections on the nation's rapidly expanding commuter airlines, reported the GAO. An October 1986 letter from the National Transportation Safety Board Chairman to the FAA Administrator highlighted this inadequacy.

— INSPECTIONS: GAO praised the FAA for developing national guidelines which include minimum inspection standards, as well as for upgrading its training programs.

"FAA still does not have in place, however, the internal management controls needed to ensure regional and district office compliance with national guidance," reported the GAO.

The congressional overseers reported that a new computer-based inspection records system "has encountered numerous design and operational problems since its inception."

— INSPECTOR TRAINING: The GAO said it will take "between two and four years training and experience" for the FAA's newly hired inspectors to become fully effective at doing their jobs.

The report said recent accidents — three in 1984 on Provincetown-Boston Airlines alone — have pointed to inadequacy in FAA training of its inspectors.

The U.S. Department of Transportation, which evaluated GAO's conclusions, generally concurred with its critical findings and recommendations.

The number of working oil and gas rigs in the Permian Basin hovered just over the 100 mark, climbing two to 106 this week. The United States rig count this week totaled 758, a decrease of four from the previous week, Baker Hughes Inc. officials said.

The nationwide count was 762 last week, while the Basin count stood at 104. Year ago rig counts were 723 in the nation and 75 in the Permian Basin area.

Lea and Andrews counties led local drilling activity with 15 and 11 rigs, respectively. Yoakum County posted an eight rig total, while seven rigs were reported at work in Midland County.

Nationally, Oklahoma and Louisiana each suffered rig loss, down eight and seven, respectively. Increases were seen in Michigan (up 5); Ohio and Pennsylvania (up three); New Mexico (up 2); and, Texas and Colorado (up 1).

Price for a barrel of West Texas Intermediate crude has remained high to stable over the past two to three months. The stability has not, however, resulted in a sudden increase in drilling as operators are taking a cautious eye on the market.

Two Permian Basin fields among most prolific in U.S. during 1986

The leading 25 U.S. oil fields in 1986 in terms of total completions included two in west Texas. The Spraberry Trend was ranked third with 339 wells completed. Only one of those wells was unsuccessful, giving the Permian Basin field a 99.7 percent success rate. Seventy-four wells were finaled in Levelland field by year-end, ranking it 24th. Operators working in that field during the year posted a 93.2 percent success ratio, according to Petroleum Information's Resume '86.

Through December 26, 1986, 7,836 completions had been counted in the Southwest Region of the United States (which includes the Permian Basin), with official 1986 completion dates. Of that total, 59.2 percent or 4,643 wells produced oil, while 568 (7.1 percent) were finaled as gas producers. Regional operators posted a 66.5 percent success rate in 1986, down more than five percentage points from 1985's 70.7 percent. Footage drilled totaled 35,526,426 feet — an average of 4,534 feet per well, 101 feet shallower than the year before.

The search for new oil and gas fields in the region accounted for 231 well completions during 1986. Twenty-eight new fields were opened — 21 oil and seven gas. The 12.1 percent success ratio is almost eight percentage points lower than the 1985 rate of 20 percent. Pure exploratory footage drilled totaled 1,331,756 feet, or an average of 5,765 feet per well, compared to 1985's 5,711 feet per well average.

"Other exploratory" completions — those wells drilled to extend or find new plays within existing fields — totaled 1,286 by the close of 1986. Of the total, 218 produced oil and 87 flowed gas, a 23.7 percent success ratio. During 1985, regional operators were successful 31 percent of the time in other exploratory ventures. The average well in this category reached a total depth of 4,907 feet, 97 feet shallower than the previous year. Footage cut totaled 6,310,830 feet.

More than 80 percent of the Southwest Region's 1986 completions were infill, or development wells, down slightly from the 82.5 percent share posted in 1985. Of the 6,319 development wells reported, 77 percent were successful, with 4,404 wells finaled as oil producers and 474 flowing gas. Footage drilled in the delineation of existing oil and gas fields totaled 27,883,840 feet, or an average of 4,412 feet per well, 117 feet shallower than the 1985 average of 4,529 feet.

Mobil Oil, the nation's fifth most prolific operator, was first in the Southwest Region in terms of total completions. Its regional total of 235 wells (nearly 46 percent of its U.S. total) included 208 oil and one gas well for a success ratio of 88.9 percent, Petroleum Information reports.

Rounding out the region's top five operators were: Exxon, 195; Amoco, 187; Sun Oil, 131; and Midland-based Parker & Parsley, Inc. fifth with 102 completions. Sun Oil was the region's top wildcatter with 13 new field attempts, all abandoned as dry holes. Amoco was ranked second with seven wildcats, all of which were also dry.

PI reports total expenditures for the entire Southwest Region are estimated at more than $1.5 billion in 1986, including $992 million for oil wells and $165 million for gas wells. The average cost per foot to drill and complete a regional well was $43.50, compared to $49.18 the previous year.

Austin company banks on information

By KIRK LADENDORF
Austin American-Statesman

AUSTIN (AP) — By several standards, Sheshunoff stands as a banking industry heavyweight.

First there are some physical dimensions: The company's blackbound Banks of Texas 1986 volume runs more than 1,400 pages and weighs 8 pounds, 4 ounces. It contains roughly 1 million numbers that rank and describe banks by nearly every financial category imaginable: earnings, assets, non-performing loans, capital, five-year performance.

The company publishes similar volumes for banks in every state of the union. The volume on Texas is the biggest because nearly one out of every seven banks in the country is located in the state.

Second, comes business media recognition: the Wall Street Journal quotes the company's analysts regularly. Inc. magazine identified Alex Shushunoff in a headline as "Banking Guru."

Third, and more importantly, is the assessment of John Adams, a crusty Corpus Christi banker who could speak for hundreds of executives at small and medium-sized financial institutions throughout the country.

"He's the best-known name in banking," Adams said of company founder and chief executive, Alex Sheshunoff. "He helped the bank industry, more than anyone else, recognize the good and the bad things they could do."

Sheshunoff (pronounced SHESH-un-off) has plenty of imitators, but no single strong competitor. The company says close to 10,000 banks buy at least one of it information products or services.

But the company, which employs 130 people, remains a mystery to much of the Austin business community.

Sheshunoff recently recalled that his company had spent two years in its high-rise offices without receiving a visit from the banker doing business on the ground floor.

But the situation is changing, Sheshunoff says, as some local banks have started to run into earnings problems.

Alex Sheshunoff, at 47, continues to be the company's foremost idea man and its marketing leader. His gentle-mannered, self-deprecating style sets the tone for the company and its products.

Robert Walters, who heads the company's investment advisory business, said: "Alex has always stressed, 'Let's be sincere; let's be honest; let's care; let's stress quality; let's don't be condescending; let's help.' "

The founder only reluctantly admits he is a graduate of Yale University, lest the Ivy League tie put off someone. Sheshunoff went to Yale after growing up in Magnolia, Ark. He came to Austin in the early 1960s to go to law school at the University of Texas, but left school just short of receiving a law degree.

His wife, Gabrielle, works from an office next door as the company's executive vice president and chief operating officer. "She really runs the place," Sheshunoff says.

Since the beginning, Mrs. Sheshunoff has ramrodded the day-to-day production and quality control process. She is the company's No. 1 "implementer," a key word in the Sheshunoff lexicon.

"The implementation of this is what makes them happen," Shushunoff said, referring to his wife's pivotal role. "Lots of people have wonderful ideas, but the reality is we get the books out and get them out on time and so on."

Gabrielle brought a strong background in business to the Shushunoff family. Her family, the de Kuypers of the Netherlands, has produced and sold liqueurs since the 1600s, and she was an executive with the company's Canadian operations.

The Sheshunoffs began their service in the mid-1970s, with the onset of deregulation. While the biggest banks, the Citicorps and Chase Manhattans of the world, did their own research and forecasting, thousands of small and mid-sized banks lacked access to the research and rethinking of the business that confronted them.

Sheshunoff saw the banking turmoil as a way to spread the word about his company's data and services. For five years in the late '70s, Sheshunoff spent about half his time on the road, giving 100 to 150 one-day seminars on high-performance banking.

Industry anxiety spurred Sheshunoff's growth since its first comprehensive state bank performance volume — of Texas — was published in 1974. Part of the message Sheshunoff spread to bankers was the need to start charging for what they had previously given away for free or for very little — consumer checking, bounced checks, check stops.

That first industry survey outlined how much more the new accounts would cost banks and what sort of limits ought to be placed on them. The product list continues to grow relentlessly, spurred on by customer requests for new information.

"He's probably done more than any other individual in America to raise bank fees," said William Ford, a former president of the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta, who now runs a large savings association in Cleveland. Ford and Sheshunoff were pioneers and collaborators in developing the principles of "high-performance banking" in the mid-70s.

Bankers talk about studying their "Sheshunoff book" when they want the definitive information on precisely how their institution performs against its peers and its competition.

In a nutshell, Sheshunoff defines four areas of bank operations, where clients can improve their bottom line: 1. Their interest spread between the cost of deposits and the return on loans and investments. 2. Service charges. 3. Overhead. 4. Loan quality, or minimizing bad loans. Sheshunoff's success has come from creating specific plans and procedures for tackling each area.

In the early 1980s, clients began calling on Sheshunoff to do more than just publish information and run seminars. So the company started moving to provide more one-on-one bank management consulting and investment advice on changes of bank ownership including mergers and acquisition.

Sheshunoff's management consulting work for clients is more likely to turn out numerous one-page "action lists" for individual bank officers, than lengthy reports for the chief executive officer.

"There are a lot of consulting firms that do a wonderful job of the cosmic issues," Sheshunoff said. "The focus here is implementing high-performance banking, not producing a thought piece."

The company keeps its own finances strictly private.

Sheshunoff will acknowledge that annual sales exceed $10 million and they have grown by more than 20 percent a year for the past five years.

One outside observer speculates that profits might run more than 20 percent of sales. The publishing side of the business, which includes a growing line of microcomputer software information products, accounts for 60 percent of Sheshunoff's sales. Seminars, consulting and investment advising account for the rest.

The company is already looking at one long-term growth threat, the widely predicted consolidation of the banking industry.

U.S. CEO's earn bigger paychecks

NEW YORK (AP) — Chief executives of major U.S. companies earn more money, keep more of what they earn, and get more for it than their counterparts in other industrial countries, according to a survey released Wednesday.

The average head of a U.S. operation with sales of $100 million made $265,000 a year in salary and bonuses as of Jan. 1 this year, said the international management consulting firm Towers, Perrin, Forster & Crosby.

That was more than twice the renumeration earned by the heads of comparable companies in nine of 20 countries studied — and about 16 percent more than the $222,600 earned by top managers in second-ranked Switzerland, it said.

Germany and Japan ranked third and fourth, respectively, while Hong Kong, Australia and Korea filled the last three places, with Korean chief executives receiving less than $90,000 annually, the survey said.

Robin Holloway, managing director of the consulting firm's international division, noted there are different ways of measuring compensation.

"Naturally, the amount and type of taxes the executive has to pay ... affect the value of his pay package," he said. "Purchasing power is also significant. For example, the Brazilian executive, although 10th in earnings, is second worldwide in purchasing power in his own country."

By the same token, the purchasing power of the fourth-ranked compensation received by Japanese executives was 16th on the list of 20.

The survey also found local customs or tax considerations affecting the compensation packages received by company heads in different countries.

For example, U.S., Belgian, French, German and British company chiefs commonly receive bonuses equal to 25 percent of their salaries. Spanish, Swedish and Swiss bonuses average about 20 percent, it found.

In Japan, Hong Kong and Argentina, such perquisites as company-provided automobiles, entertainment allowances and club memberships are common. U.S. executives often get augmented pensions and annual physicals.

Japan: Fear of robots doesn't faze factory workers

By JONATHAN FREEDMAN
Copley News Service

I met my favorite Japanese robot in a television factory near Osaka. I heard someone playing a Bach fugue and turned around.

A shiny silver robot rolled toward me, bearing circuit boards uncomplainingly on its back. It flashed its lights in a friendly way and stopped behind a woman bent over a conveyor belt. She was soldering tiny wires to minute silver dots on the circuit boards.

The robot didn't beep but contentedly played Bach until the woman turned around. She picked up the boards without looking and the robot rolled on to its next delivery stop, saying goodbye with a friendly flash of its lights.

I looked at the woman to see if she resented the robot, but she didn't seem to. He looked like a good sport, relieving humans of a boring job. On the other hand, the woman worked so diligently, without talking, that I had a hard time telling her from a robot, except she was less polite.

The whole assembly line was like that: orderly, quiet, perfectly functioning — eerily robotlike.

I had seen robots at a distance in Tsukuba, a science and technology city outside Tokyo where Japan held an international trade fair called Expo '85.

Tsukuba ranks with Brasilia as one of the more sterile cities that I've seen in the world. Like Brasilia, it was created by a committee on a drafting board, not by the infinite accretions of mortar and garbage left by individual people.

Unlike the Brazilian capital, Tsukuba is not a government office, but a center for research and development, with some 40 different think tanks and laboratories, including Japan's project to build a super-computer. The centers are located together to create "synergism," a word which made its way into Japan.

Tsukuba has a wonderful interchange of scientific ideas that may put Japan at the top of the world in technology one day. But as for human sustenance, an American student at Tsukuba University told me she was so starved for culture that she welcomed the opening of a department store where at least people could greet each other, passing on the escalators.

I had seen Fanuc Man, billed as "the world's largest humanoid robot," in the Fujitsu exhibit. A huge yellow automaton with hydraulic arms bench-pressed a couple of hundred kilos (a kilo equals about 2.2 pounds), then picked up an egg with its steel claws.

In another exhibition, a robot that looked a bit like a dentist's drill, with a television camera for a cyclop's eye, sight-read sheet music and played the piano. The playing was faultless. But I preferred to watch a movie on the wall of a woman dancing ballet in a leotard.

Maybe one day they'll have robots to dance ballet — and robots to sit in the audience and clap. Note a hint of disdain, bordering on panic?

I felt threatened by the robots we met in Japan and by the people who worked with such mechanical precision and lack of complaint. But again and again the Japanese we met seemed to be delighted by robots.

Robot toys were on sale at the hotel. Clap your hands and the robot would swerve around and do a mechanical break dance. Clap again and it would stop.

Not all robots are for entertainment. In Japanese industries, robots are serious business. We saw them welding auto bodies at the Mazda factory near Hiroshima, and Mazda is now developing its own robots to do other human functions.

U.S. labor leaders have resisted robots, because of fears of union members being laid off. But Japanese labor leaders welcome them. When we asked why, we were told that Japanese workers in big factories and corporations are guaranteed lifetime employment. If a robot takes over their job, they aren't laid off; they're transferred to another position. If the total number of employees is reduced, the reduction comes from natural retirement.

I listened to this explanation and imagined the day when the last human retired from work at the Mazda factory. The robots would gather in the company playing field, sing the company song on their synthesizers, do a robot parade step and hand the human a gold digital watch, complete with blood pressure calculator. Then the human would drive off in the Mazda and the factory would close, because there would be no more workers to buy Mazda cars.

A novelist I met in Tokyo said he thought the Japanese were unafraid of robots because, even as farmers, they had used scarecrows to scare off birds. But Americans also have scarecrows. What makes the Japanese able to accept robotization, while we joke nervously about robots and fall behind in mass production?

In Japan, people seek expression not in self but in group harmony. Japanese workers are hired by their company after leaving school. Bachelors live in company quarters and are married in company halls. They play in company sport clubs and live in company-subsidized homes. They get treated by company doctors and retire in company nursing homes. Some are even buried in company graveyards.

That scintillating existence seems more like living death than lifetime employment to me, but workers in the Rust Belt may prefer adjusting to robots than to standing in unemployment lines.

To show that I wasn't about to let my family become obsolete, I brought home a robot toy from Tsukuba for my 2-year-old son. He promptly ate the tiny plastic piece that held in the batteries. But we taped the batteries in place and the robot raced around, chomping its plastic jaws. Nick stuck his finger in the mouth and giggled, as my 4-year-old daughter Madigan squealed, "He's eating Nick!"

That didn't last long before Nick retaliated. The smashed-up robot now lies among the other junk in Nick's toy box. But I wonder if my children will one day have to compete, not only with the Japanese, but with Son of Fanuc Man.

U.S. going robotic

U.S. manufacturers, in an effort to compete with low labor costs abroad, are turning to automation. In the next five years, more than 80,000 new robots will be installed in U.S. factories, bringing the total in use to more than 100,000 by 1990. By that time, there will also be ten times as many robots with vision capability.

MEETINGS

Geologists to meet Tuesday

Calhoun

Gerry Calhoun will speak at the next luncheon meeting of the West Texas Geological Society on Tuesday.

The title of his talk will be "Systematic Geochemical Exploration." Calhoun graduated from the University of Oklahoma with a BS degree in geological engineering. He is president of New Paradigm Exploration.

Says Calhoun: "As finding costs increase, geologists must derive a new concept or face ever decreasing return on dollars invested. Business as usual in today's oil industry is a dead end street."

The meeting will be at the Midland Center beginning at 11:30 a.m. Cost of the luncheon is $7.00. Reservations can be made by calling the West Texas Geological Society at 683-1573 by 12:00 noon on June 8.

Accountants set shrimp feast

The Permian Basin Chapter of the National Association of Accountants will host their annual shrimp boil on Saturday at 2613 Frontier.

All NAA members and guests are encouraged to attend the feast beginning at 6:30 p.m. for happy hour and dinner at 7:30. Cost is $15 for individuals and $25 per couple. Reservations can be made by calling Sheila Timmons at 682-5311 or Ron Wade at 697-2307 by Wednesday.

Gain in U.S. output not evident in wages

By LOUIS UCHITELLE
New York Times News Service

LAWTON, Okla. — It used to take Gary Adair four hours or more to retool the computerized machines that assemble tires so they could make ones of a different size. But with the help of fellow workers at the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. plant here, Adair has cut that time to three hours. Such accomplishments are significantly increasing the number of radials the plant can produce.

But for all their efforts and enthusiasm, neither Adair nor Lawton's 1,800 other hourly employees are benefiting financially from the factory's rising productivity. Their hourly compensation (wage plus benefits) has barely risen in more than two years, while the plant's productivity has increased by more than 6 percent annually.

The Lawton experience is a common one in American manufacturing. For the first time since World War II, sustained and substantial productivity increases are not being shared with workers in the form of higher wages. Instead, the financial gains are going into corporate profits or to pay for the price cuts and cost-saving capital investments needed to compete with lower-cost manufacturers in Japan and other countries.

The hourly compensation of American manufacturing workers, adjusted for inflation, rose an average of only eight-tenths of 1 percent annually from 1981 through 1986, and actually declined in the year ended last March, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics. During the same period, the productivity of the nation's factories rose a very respectable 4 percent annually, on average. And in some industries — among them tires and rubber, steel, autos, copper processing, cement and railroads — productivity increased 6 percent or more a year.

Because of these healthy gains, manufacturing's share of the gross national product has remained steady at about 25 percent in spite of stiff global competition and a sharp drop in the number of factory workers. (Manufacturing now accounts for only 22 percent of national business employment, down from 27.3 percent in 1977.)

The minuscule wage increases that pervade the manufacturing sector today are likely to continue into the 1990s, economists say. "This is the heyday of wage mildness," said Henry Kaufman, chief economist at Salomon Brothers.

This trend marks a dramatic change for the American worker, who for most of the last four decades has enjoyed wage increases that reflected both productivity gains and cost-of-living increases tied to the inflation rate.

Workers are still receiving cost-of-living raises, albeit small ones because inflation has been low. But even these increases may be challenged now that inflation has begun to accelerate again and the number of major union contracts with cost-of-living agreements continues to decline. As of March, 38 percent of workers in major unions had such protection, down from 56.7 percent in 1985.

Union officials said they would challenge any further attempts to eliminate cost-of-living agreements. But many acknowledged that they had little hope of winning wage increases that come close to reflecting the gains now being achieved in productivity, which measures a factory's output for each hour of work. One key reason is that the power of unions has substantially declined as companies have automated their operations, closed factories and slashed their work forces. Major unions represent only 6.4 million workers today, a decline of 36 percent from the 10 million in the 1970s, when wage settlements were often considered inflationary.

Because they are weaker, the big unions are no longer able to set national wage patterns, as they did for decades. To keep plants from closing and to save jobs, scores of their local units have been negotiating special amendments to national contracts that reduce labor costs at individual factories.

New firms ease Houston economic woes

HOUSTON (AP) — An estimated 1,062 new firms started operations here during the second half of 1986, creating 10,670 new jobs, a study released Wednesday said.

"Houston continues to be a hot spot for new business formation," said Lee Hogan, president of the Houston Economic Development Council, which commissioned the study.

PBGC sets safety class

From Staff Reports

The Permian Basin Graduate Center continues to serve as a center for continuing education for the Midland professional community. Weekly classes are offered for virtually every aspect of the local business community. The center began offering reduced tuition fees last year for those left unemployed by the oil price collapse.

This month the center will offer courses in H_2S safety, computers and geology.

"Save-A-Life H2S Safety Course" has been scheduled for Wednesday from 8:00 a.m. to 1:00 p.m. The course, which has been reviewed by OSHA, the Texas Railroad Commission and the Texas Department of Health, exceeds all governmental and industrial standards concern hydrogen sulfide safety at the worksite. It contains all pertinent material on the characteristics and physiological effects of H_2S, detection and warning devices, breathing equipment, rescue operations and a review of CPR techniques. Harris LaFleur, Hazardous Material Safety Co. in Lubbock, will instruct the course. Fee is $40.

"An Introduction to Lotus 1-2-3," will meet Wednesday from 7:00 to 10:00 p.m. Topics covered include origin and theory of spreadsheet software, basic principles of Lotus 1-2-3, the 1-2-3 keyboard, numbers, formulas and text, saving, retrieving and printing a worksheet, getting help and 1-2-3 advantages, limitations and alternatives. Instructor for the course, which is $60 ($10 if unemployed), is Ted Windecker, president, Computers for Business.

"Stratigraphic Interpretation of Permian Basin Seismic, Well, and Outcrop Data" will be held June 15 from 7:00 to 10:00 p.m. and June 16 from 8:30 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. The course reviews seismic sequence interpretation, seismic facies interpretation and discusses the relation between geologic formations, lithofacies and geologic time lines. The application of sequence stratigraphy concepts to subdivide and correlate well and outcrop data is demonstrated in a series of exercises. The applications of sequence concepts and procedures to hydrocarbon exploration are highlighted. The Monday evening session will be an overview of the concepts and methods used in sequence stratigraphy. This will be followed on Tuesday by applying the concepts in hands-on work sessions using data and examples from the Permian Basin. Peter Vail, Ph.D., Rice University, will instruct the course. Fee is $150.

"Basin Applied Openhole Log Interpretation" has been set for June 15-19 from 8:30 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. This is a basic log-interpretation course for people who need to learn how to interpret modern well logs. No previous log experience is required, although a college degree is preferred. Identification and evaluation of hydrocarbon bearing zones is stressed. Attendees learn how to interpret all the common modern logs. Quantitative and qualitative interpretation of logs is stressed. Douglas W. Hilchie, Ph.D., Petroleum Engineering Consultant, Boulder, Colorado, will instruct. Fee is $750.

McAllen trade zone booming

Leads nation in FTZ industry

By JOEL WILLIAMS
Associated Press Writer

McALLEN, Texas (AP) — From a distance, the McAllen Foreign Trade Zone's metal buildings with corporate logos look like a typical industrial park, but the 80-acre complex is the national leader of a booming general-purpose trade zone industry.

Such "free ports," closely regulated by the U.S. Customs Department, allow companies to bring foreign products and components into this country with customs duties charged only on items actually sold in the U.S. market.

The zones also allow firms to delay or plan their duty payments for times when they will be the lowest.

About 1,500 companies selling abroad, as well as in the United States, boosted the number of foreign trade zones to 135 at the end of last year, from a total of seven in 1970, though not all are active yet, according to the U.S. Commerce Department.

In dollar value and tonnage of products moving in and out of its gates, McAllen's FTZ has consistently been the No. 1 general-purpose foreign trade zone for the past several years, according to the department.

The department lists 59 active general-purpose zones, which are not manufacturing-oriented, and 37 active manufacturing subzones.

In 1985, the year for which the most recent volume figures are available, McAllen saw $1.28 billion in merchandise.

Paul Moffitt, president of the McAllen Industrial Board, said much of the traffic comes from U.S. companies' "twin-plant" manufacturing facilities in the border city of Reynosa, Mexico. It is known as the "maquila" industry in Spanish.

He said the city-owned industrial park is not in itself a money maker, but has aided the area's economy by helping attract companies.

The McAllen FTZ, about seven miles north of the Mexican border, serves a variety of industries including electronics, jewelry, machinery parts, medical supplies and musical instruments.

Trucks from Zenith Electronics, General Electric Co. and other companies are regular sights, moving products and components between the Mexican plants and the trade zone.

Products are brought from the Mexican plants to the trade zone for purposes such as storage and quality-control testing. The companies only pay duties on the foreign components and value added to products destined for the U.S. market.

In addition to Zenith's Reynosa television plant and GE's small motors assembly, other maquila operations using the FTZ are Delco's automobile radio facility and the musical instrument assembly operation of McAllen American, a subsidiary of Kimball Piano and Organ Co.

The magnitude of the twin plants' effect on both sides of the border can be seen in the case of Zenith, which is Reynosa's largest employer, with 10,000 workers.

Not all of the merchandise involves the twin-plant operations, though, said Joyce Dean vice president of the McAllen FTZ.

She said there isn't one specific reason the zone leads its sector of the industry.

"We just have a lot of merchandise that flows through here, some of it into Mexico for the maquila plants and some of it is being sold into Mexico."

The McAllen facility opened in 1973 under a federal act passed in 1934 and amended in 1950 to allow manufacturing. The FTZ buildings originally were designed to help companies cut storage and shipping costs, and some manufacturers still use them for repacking containers.

But many other uses have been added over the years. Foreign and domestic merchandise may be brought into the zone and stored, exhibited, repackaged, assembled, graded, manufactured or re-exported without payment of customs duties.

Items such as Christmas tree ornaments can be imported to the zones and stored year-round, even if the actual selling period is brief.

One company several years ago used the zone to test a Mexican perfume essence it was shipping to a French company that didn't trust the reliability of tests in Mexico.

Security is tight at the zones, all located in designated areas legally outside the nation's customs territory. McAllen's maximum-security FTZ has a high fence, closely controlled access and signs warning that those passing through the gates are subject to search by U.S. Customs.

"When you're dealing with as much merchandise that's inside these gates — the duty has not been paid on it, and our bond is at stake — if there's any merchandise missing, customs (seeks) duties on the missing merchandise," Ms. Dean.

Sea ports were the original sites for foreign trade zones, and McAllen was the first inland port of entry to apply for such status, the Commerce Department says.

"They were very uncommon, and now it seems just a lot of them have sprung up," said Herbert Best, the U.S. Customs port director who oversees the McAllen zone from the Texas border city of Hidalgo.

The zones are popular, he said, because of the increase in foreign components, and because they allow companies to maintain cash flow by delaying duties.

They also have increased rapidly in recent years, because, with a rising interest in foreign trade, inland cities are looking at their airports as points of entry to the country, said Donald Creed, a Commerce Department spokesman.

Use of the zones probably will grow because of the increase of international trade activity, Creed said.

"They help facilitate international trade and they help encourage export," he added.

GM sets temporary closings

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Corp., in an effort to help reduce inventories of unsold cars, will close two assembly plants for a week and temporarily idle 7,500 workers, the automaker said.

From June 8 to 15, GM will close its 4,000-employee assembly plant in North Tarrytown, N.Y., and its 3,500-worker plant in Norwood, Ohio.

The Tarrytown plant produces the Buick Century and Chevrolet Cavalier. The Norwood plant makes the Pontiac Firebird and Chevrolet Camaro.

MGM plans to license lion trademark

LOS ANGELES (HNS) — Watch out Mickey Mouse, Leo the Lion may soon be on your tail.

MGM announced that it plans to license its roaring lion trademark to companies that sell consumer products — just as other familiar characters have been licensed for use on everything from watches to bed sheets.

"We're maximizing the use of this enormous asset," said Norman Horowitz, president and chief executive officer of MGM/UA Telecommunications.

"There is hardly a person on the planet who would not recognize the MGM logo," he said. "Our logo appears in theaters, televisions and videocassettes millions of times a week."

MGM is experienced in cashing in on well-known animal figures.

The letter, written by Owen C. Cash, a Tulsa, Okla., businessman, began:

"In this age of dictators and government control of everything, about the only privilege guaranteed by the Bill of Rights, not in some way supervised and directed, is the art of barbershop quartet singing. Without a doubt, we still have the right of peaceable assembly which, I am advised by competent legal authority, includes quartet singing."

Cash, along with his friend and confidant Rupert I. Hall, invited those who received this letter to the roof garden of the Tulsa Club at the Alvin Hotel for an organizational meeting April 11, 1938. The purpose of the meeting was to establish the Society for the Preservation and Encouragement of Barber Shop Quartet Singing in America, Inc. The name and its initials — SPEBSQSA — were a spoof on the alphabetical agencies of President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The original band of 26 men has grown into more than 825 chapters in 16 districts encompassing the United States and Canada, more than 2,000 registered quartets and 800 choruses and an international membership of more than 38,000.

The most recent charter in Midland was secured in 1984.

"We've had chapters on and off for about the last 25 years, but our most recent charter was in September of 1984," says David Frye, president of the Permian Basin Chapter. "We have members from Big Spring and Odessa. We have had members from Andrews. Men from all over the Permian Basin are welcome."

"The forerunners were Thane Akins, Bill Southerland and Bill Shaner, and they have had a quartet together in town for several years and have lived through several of the choruses that have been formed. The lead in their quartet has changed maybe three or four times over the past several years."

The other member of that particular quartet is Tom Roberts, Frye says.

The requirement for gaining a charter with the international organization is a membership of at least 30. Although Midland had secured a charter in the past, in 1984, the organization attained the magic number of members and rechartered.

"We had a big recruitment effort," Frye says. "The members themselves recruited friends and associates. Since that time we've gotten back down to 23 members. And we're again on a big membership push to get that up to at least 35."

The Permian Basin Chapter performs a service to the community and often offers its services to charitable events and organizations at no charge, Frye says. To join or for more information call Frye at 687-4283 or 688-6238.

Scott Rathburn/Reporter-Telegram

Members of the Permian Basin Chapter of the Society for the Preservation and Encouragement of Barber Shop Quartet Singing in America, Inc. include, from left Bill Shaner, Bill Southerland, Tom Roberts and Thane Akins.

"The society is really for the preservation and encouragement of barbershop quartet singing, but the chorus helps facilitate organizing quartets and is a way for men who don't feel comfortable singing in that small a group to still enjoy barbershop quartet singing."

— David Frye

Frye's interest in barbershop quartet singing dates back to his high school days.

"I started singing barbershop when I was a freshman in high school, and I just loved the close harmonies and a cappella sound of barber shop quartet singing. It's fun to sing."

To be interested in joining an organization such as this one, Frye says, "You have to like to sing and like the sound and the thrill of performing for audiences and the fellowship between the guys who are all bound with that common interest."

Like most organizations, the Permian Basin Chapter of SPEBSQSA has, Frye says, "some busy times and some slower times.

"We actually get together and sing once a week. We rehearse every Monday night at Theatre Midland, and we have several performances throughout the year at different activities, such as Celebration of the Arts, which we just finished. Septemberfest is coming up. We also do singing Valentines on Valentine's Day and go Christmas caroling at hospitals and senior citizens' centers.

"Those are our big ones. We also are planning a big show for next spring. We've also done several smaller performances for grand openings and just special requests by members of the community or community organizations."

Hearing barbershop quartet gives feeling of nostalgia

Temple

For those who haven't heard "Let Me Call You Sweetheart, I'm In Love With You" sung to them at work, it's a refreshing feeling, even when the singers aren't singing directly to you, but to all those who are listening.

Let me back up.

In February, right before the deluge of activities presented by local cultural organizations hit, four gentlemen walked into our office and proceeded to serenade those who were in. Even though they were outfitted in nonstandard street wear, their breaking into song was unexpected. After all, people come into a newspaper office dressed in all sorts of unusual ways to have their picture made.

I appreciated the nice gesture and mini-performance. I can't speak for the others, except they didn't complain and stopped what they were doing and listened for the few minutes the four were here.

I nabbed a photographer, and he took their picture. I asked them a couple of questions on their way out and discovered they were going around town presenting the same mini-routine at other businesses in honor of Valentine's Day.

The frenzied spring activity has passed into history for another year. That is not to say that cultural organizations have shut down for the summer. Hardly so. Midland Community Theatre is opening a new comedy, "Noises Off," Friday, the Museum of the Southwest has several exhibitions up including those associated with the future Fredda Turner Durham Childrens Museum and the annual Summer Mummers is just around the corner.

(As an aside, I'd like to say I've heard from someone who saw a rehearsal of "Noises Off" without sets and costumes and said it was one of the funniest plays he'd seen, and he's seen a lot. I said, 'I really enjoyed 'The Foreigner,'" to which he replied, "This is funnier." We'll see.)

Then, before we know it, the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale will be staging its annual pre-season Pops at the College Concert in August/September, and in what seems like less than the blink of an eye the Midland Jazz Classic will be here in October. Those of us who follow the cultural scene will be once again busy checking our calendars to make sure we haven't forgotten to attend an event.

The longer I live, the faster time flies, whether I'm having fun or not. At times, it's frightening.

But, at least for the moment, we are into the long, lazy days of summer and what is more appropriate than a barbershop quartet to put us in memory of times gone by, when life, I'm told, was simpler.

Perhaps a reason barbershop harmony has retained its popularity is that it is a method of adapting songs rather than a type of music. When I hear this style of harmony, it has a slowing effect because, regardless of the song being sung, the feeling is one of nostalgia. I slow down, take a look around, which allows my body, mind and spirit to arrive in and occupy, no matter how briefly, the same space in time.

The following comment, which comes from a release from the Society for the Preservation and Encouragement of Barber Shop Quartet Singing in America Inc., caught my attention. "Barbershop singing is a true American form of self-expression — not unlike jazz and the spiritual."

The release describes this type of singing as "a chromatic four-part harmony sung by unaccompanied male voices...The melody is usually sung by the 'lead.' The 'tenor' part, comparable to high alto, is customarily sung above the lead. The 'bass' sings lower than the lead and the 'baritone' provides those in-between notes that produce the distinctive sound of barbershop harmony."

While quartets have only four members, choruses often have more than 100 members. Currently, the Midland chapter of the SPEBSQSA is on a membership drive to enlarge its chorus and add additional quartets.

For those who might be wondering if they would be interested, the Society defines a typical member as "a middle-aged, college-educated, family man who enjoys the spirit of friendly competition. He's most likely employed in a professional, technical or managerial capacity with an average income. He may have had a bit of vocal or instrumental training while in school, but he's not a professional singer (few of the 38,000 members of the Society are). Men from all walks of life, each within his own local chorus or quartet, gather at least one evening a week for a few hours of vocal harmony and friendship. A Code of Ethics, finely tuned over the years, calls for a membership of 'congenial men of good character who love harmony in music and desire to harmonize.'"

Exceptions do exist. Average age in the youngest quartet, the Harrington Brothers of Kentucky, is 18. No member in one of the older quartets on record, the Accuchords from Florida, is under 75 years of age.

I certainly don't want to leave the ladies out. A similar organization for women, known as Sweet Adelines Inc., has been in existence since 1947.

The term barbershop quartet dates from the late 1800s when this type of singing centered around community barbershops. Times have changed. Fortunately, there are those who have helped keep this American form of "self-expression" alive so that those of us living in today's fast-paced world, can catch our breath and reaffirm our link with yesterday.

Gaither: Music makes day special

By JOE EDWARDS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Veteran gospel singer Bill Gaither says his music makes each day special.

"Gospel music gets me up in the morning, gets me excited and gets me through the day," the 51-year-old performer says.

For the past 21 years, Gaither has been a full-time gospel music entertainer. During that time, he's sold 4 million records and written 300 songs that have been recorded. He's recorded approximately three dozen albums — he's lost the exact count — including the current "Welcome Back Home."

He started out as an English teacher and says singing gospel music is not much different. "I'm still a teacher at heart, through my music," he said in an interview. "You teach an idea — something that could change lives."

Along those lines, he's turned out dozens of young people who performed with his group and then launched solo singing careers or careers in gospel music management and related jobs.

He says working with the younger singers has been the high point of a career that includes two Grammy awards and induction into the Gospel Music Hall of Fame.

"I get satisfaction out of spending time with them and maybe pointing out a few pitfalls along the way. It's a joy being able to help the younger artists and relating to them," he said.

Says his wife, Gloria: "It gives us joy to see performers who go out with integrity. It's like seeing our own kids do well."

Stars Sandi Patti and Steve Green, gospel music's reigning female and male vocalist of the year, are among those who sang with the Gaithers in past years.

Gospel singer Bill Gaither hosted the Dove Awards show with Carol Lawrence earlier this year.

Gaither's concerts typically draw crowds of 10,000 to 12,000 and he says he's been successful because he relates to the public.

"I have tried to be honest and I love people," he said. "I think people understand who we are in this day of cynicism. We are fellow pilgrims and don't have all the answers."

"We care about the people," Mrs. Gaither added.

Gaither, of Alexandria, Ind., wrote gospel music songs while teaching high school English. On weekends, he began singing in churches. In 1966, gospel music became his full-time occupation.

In 1984, he and his wife opened a complex of 10 music-related companies in Indiana. Included are a three-studio recording complex and a publishing company that is one of the largest sources of printed sacred music in the country.

He has 100 employees and says he learned his business acumen from German relatives who taught him "don't buy it unless you can pay for it."

"Bill is a rarity because he combines someone who understands creativity and is a good business head," Mrs. Gaither said. "If he doesn't know something, he hires people who know more than he knows. He puts people around him who ask hard questions."

Putting his business skills to work daily, he and his concert entourage of 25 stay at moderately priced hotels, often at day rates to save money.

His most requested songs are the gospel standards "Because He Lives" and "He Touched Me," both written by the Gaithers. The Gospel Music Association voted him songwriter of the year eight times and Mrs. Gaither once.

"We're motivated by the idea," he said. "That's first. The second part is finding a handle — a poetic phrase — a few words that will capsulize the entire song. This is the tough part. Third, lyrically, you tighten the poetry, sum it up in three minutes. Then you find the musical hook.

"All good songs come from God."

Mrs. Gaither said their relationship to each other has helped their composing. "When you isolate yourself, you lose creativity. Be close enough to fight."

Harris plays American who invaded Nicaragua

GRANADA, Nicaragua (AP) — On Nov. 26, 1856, an obscure American cutthroat and journalist burned this stately old city on the shore of Lake Nicaragua to the ground.

With his ragtag army of misplaced mercenaries, William Walker, a supporter of slavery from Tennessee, invaded Nicaragua, declared himself president and set about to convert this Central American country and its neighbors into a slave society.

Ed Harris ("The Right Stuff," "Alamo Bay") portrays the American invader in the movie, "Walker," which is being filmed in Granada by maverick British director Alex Cox.

Cox, whose movies such as "Repo Man" and "Sid & Nancy" often have a surrealistic glow, has added visual jokes to the story about the "gringo malo" — the bad American. Here and there one sees contemporary props — a bullet saturated plane, a decaying auto — stuck in the 19th century story.

The $6 million project, bein filmed entirely in Nicaragua, is full of parallels between Walker's failed attempt to build an empire abroad and American foreign policy in the 20th century.

The New Wave director, who wears torn, faded jeans and has long, lank reddish hair, said he hopes the film will speak out against American interventionism and the Reagan administration's support of the Contras.

Cox does not think his use of modern props in a movie set in the 19th century will distract from the seriousness of the project.

He uses a Sandinista Air Force helicopter for a scene in which Walker and his men are evacuated from the ruins of a cathedral.

But the aircraft was late for shooting because it had been sent to the war zone to pick up soldiers of the leftist Sandinista government wounded in their fight against the U.S.-supported Contras.

"By the time we got it, it had blood stains in it," said Lorenzo O'Brien, one of the film's producers.

Harris portrayed a mercenary in the film, "Under Fire," which was about the revolution that brought the Sandinistas to power in Nicaragua.

It took several takes during a recent night-shoot for Harris to deliver a line about quashing a rebellion in Central America. After flubbing the line, he slammed a desk with his fist several times, and, furious with himself, went on to repeat the line with the sort of menace that fit the scene and his character, Walker.

Marlee Matlin, this year's Academy Award-winning actress for her role in "Children of a Lesser God," portrays Walker's fiancee, who has a hearing impairment. Rene Auberjonois ("Big River") plays a soldier of fortune.

Much of the film is being shot in Granada, a lakefront city 30 miles south of Managua that boasts Spanish colonial architecture and was the site of some of the key events in Walker's adventures.

The hundreds of Nicaraguan extras are each making 6,000 cordobas a day, which is the equivalent of $1.

Maria Veronica Sandoval, a resident of Granada who was playing a fruit seller in the market, said she was not complaining about her wages as an extra because her average salary as a cook was 13,000 cordobas per month. The average monthly wage is 60,000 cordobas.

Residents of Granada well know the story of William Walker. He spent a year in power until he was forced out of the country. He fled to the United States where Americans, with a fervor whipped up by the yellow journalism of the time, made him a hero.

He returned to Nicaragua a few years later to try to regain power but was captured by the British Navy and executed.

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

Hockaday photograph exhibit documents Texas from 1930-'50s

ODESSA — The Art Institute for the Permian Basin, 4909 E. University, is showing the photographs of Scott Hockaday and Ela Hockaday Camfield through July 5. The photographs document Texas during the late '30s through the early '50s.

Born in Fannin County in 1893, O.S. "Cy" Hockaday was, by profession, an electrical engineer. Following his graduation from The University of Texas, he joined Texas Utilities in Dallas and in 1926, moved to Fort Worth to work for Texas Electric Service Company.

His principal hobby was photography, and his long time position as Superintendent of Transmission for TESCO gave him a choice opportunity to photograph Texas. He loved courthouses and photographed most of them in Texas during that period. His engineering eye gave him a special insight into structures and architecture.

His only child, Ela Hockaday II, shared the hobby of photography with her father, and they operated their own black-and-white darkroom in the family home. Her interest in photography and her studies in journalism and English at Hockaday School, founded by her great aunt, and Sophie Newcomb College led her to a newspaper career.

She served as a photo-journalist for the United Press News Service and the Fort Worth Press for several years before her marriage to Bill Camfield. The father-daughter team collaborated in the photographing, processing and printing of several hundred black-and-white photographs in the collection.

Mrs. Camfield died in 1965; her father died the following year. The collection is now owned by her son, Paul Hockaday Camfield, a resident of Odessa. Camfield has loaned a portion of the collection to the Art Institute for the exhibit.

The exhibit may be viewed in the Rodman Auditorium from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and from 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday. No admission is charged to view any of the exhibits at the Institute. For more information call 1-368-7222.

Jaycees to sponsor Film Follies

The Midland Jaycees' annual Children's Film Follies runs Wednesday through Saturday at Midland Park Mall Cinema.

Doors will open at 7:10 a.m. each day and the films will begin at 7:30 a.m. and end at 11 a.m. Films being shown this year include "Bad News Bears in Japan," "Care Bears II," "Muppets Take Manhattan" and "Star Treck 3."

Adult supervision will be provided during the entire time and children will not be allowed to leave the theater before 11 a.m. unless their parents pick them up.

"The film selection committee included a 7½-year-old to enable us to make the best selections," says Scott Haselwood, a Midland Jaycee. "Children will be able to move from movie to move during the showtimes to allow them to view the movie of their choice.

"The extra free time allows Mom and Dad to run errands or do chores around the house. For those who don't have small children, they can make it a special day for an underprivileged child in Midland."

Part of the money raised goes toward allowing children from any child-related charitable organization such as Big Brothers-Big Sisters, High Sky Girl's Ranch and Casa de Amigos to go to the movies free.

"The remaining proceeds will go toward benefiting the community by enabling the Jaycees to run projects such as child identification, children's shopping spree, MARC basketball tournament and Special Olympics events," Haselwood says. "The Jaycees ran over 50 such projects last year and need you help to continue their service to the community."

For ticket information call Brian Scarbrough, 687-3000 at ClayDesta Telecommunications. Contributions may be sent to The Jaycees Children's Film Follies, P.O. Box 9684, Midland, Texas, 79708-2684.

QUARTET

In addition, the Permian Basin Chapter is entered in a society contest set for September in Ruidoso, N.M.

"We'll compete with several other choruses from around West Texas," Frye says. "For a competing chorus, we have to have 20 members onstage.

"Right now, we have two organized quartets that are made up from people within the chorus, and those quartets do performances on request, just like the chorus will do.

"The society is really for the preservation and encouragement of barbershop quartet singing, but the chorus helps facilitate organizing quartets and is a way for men who don't feel comfortable singing in that small a group to still enjoy barbershop quartet singing."

'Chipmunks' for kids of all ages

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO

Salcedo

Those singing chipmunks are back, lead by the ever mischievous Alvin in "The Chipmunk Adventure," a modern cartoon adventure which succeeds in being entertaining to "kids of all ages." Although the chipmunks haven't changed their image much, (they are still toodling around in those weird floor-length T-shirts that look like long dresses) their image has been spruced up by the addition of Chipettes — Ellie, Wendy and Jeanette. The three Chipettes in short dresses and ponytails, look more like little girls than chipmunks. (Maybe it's because they aren't bald like the Chipmunks).

Nonetheless, the opening scene has David Seville (looking decidedly less nerdy than he did in days of old) traveling to Europe on business. The Chipmunks are left with an inept but well-meaning babysitter, the grandmotherly and accident prone, Miss Miller.

Alvin and his friends go to a video arcade to assuage their grief at being left home while Dave sees the world. The modern touch of the animated stars playing an "Around the World in 30 Days" video game is only exceeded by Wendy playing against Alvin and winning. The Chipettes seem to be the female counterparts of the Chipmunks: Elinore (Ellie), a chubby Chipette, is the female counterpart of the always hungry Theodore; Jeanette, the academic Chipette is akin to the brainy Simon; and Wendy is the first one to get into trouble like Alvin.

After playing the video game, the "boys and girls" get in an argument about who could really "race around the world faster." Klaus and Claudia, a brother and sister jewel thief team, overhear the argument and come up with a devious plan. They offer to send the "kids" around the world with a prize of $100,000 to the winner.

The catch is: the globehoppers must make "drop-offs" at certain points along the way to prove they are following the prescribed routes. The adventurers set off in balloons taking different routes, which affords the audience a lot of cartoon travel images of such diverse places as London, Venice and Athens, to name a few. The unsuspecting youngsters drop off dolls filled with diamonds in exchange for dolls filled with cash.

The adventure is fun, with a few songs along the way including a rock 'n' roll contest, an enjoyable dance number featuring animated cobras, and an even better rendition of "Wooly Bully."

The animated adventure is the work of Ross Bagdasarian — son of Ross Bagdasarian Sr., the Chipmunks' original creator — and his wife, Janice Karman. It is vividly colorful with occasionally soft backgrounds and maintains the lightheartedness of its predecessors. However, none of the songs match the pizazz of "Witch Doctor," and the fabled cry of Al-l-l-l-l-l-vin!!! is a long time in coming. But as far as family fare goes, "The Chipmunk Adventure" is one of the best family films currently showing.

"The Chipmunk Adventure," rated G, is playing at Midland Park Mall Cinemas."

Cartoon 'Aristocats' lacks Disney charm

The 1970 Disney film, "The Aristocats," is one of Disney's most dated animated films. From the very beginning, when an attorney sings "Ta-ra-ra-boom-de-ay" as he wobbles around on a cane, the humor seems to be stilted. The plot, about a rich lady who decides to leave her millions to her cats — Duchess (the voice of Eva Gabor), and her three kittens, Berlioz, Toulouse, and Marie — even seems tired.

The second-in-line to the inheritance after the cats is the butler, who overhears the will-planning session and becomes a catnapper. The cats are drugged and dumped far from town. They are aided by a charming alley cat, O'Malley (voice of Phil Harris).

The kittens are darling, if a little too sickly sweet, and the jazz music of some of the alley cats lead by Scat Cat (voice of Scat Man Crothers) is top notch. But as far as being entertaining for children, "The Aristocats" is often too highbrow to appeal to the younger audience. Not nearly as endearing as "Bambi" or "Snow White," the film about classy cats is too sophisticated for its own good.

"The Aristocats" doesn't have enough of the Disney charm to sustain it through years and years like many of the Disney full-length animated features. This may be in part because it was the first film made after Walt Disney's death. "The Aristocrats" lacks the depth in characterization to make any one of the animated characters memorable.

Another problem is that the artwork is overdone. The backdrop of an 18th century Paris is heavily detailed and stuffy. Worse than the dated backgrounds are the concepts, such as girls minding their manners while boys act up, and the idea of the lovable drunk uncle, (here a goose with the voice of Bill Thompson), just doesn't sit well in present times. An intoxicated goose stumbling around isn't any more funny than an old man falling because his eyesight is bad, yet both sight gags are played to the hilt.

"The Aristocats" does have its moments, some involving two good-ole-boy dogs, Napoleon and Lafayette, and the butler, are delightful for older and younger viewers — there just aren't enough of those moments to keep everyone from squiriming in their seats.

"The Aristocrats," rated G, is playing at North Park Cinemas.

Town not very amused by novels

By MIKE COCHRAN

AP Laserphoto

Laura Hamill, left, and Gary Beesinger, pose in front of a vacant lot and crumbling portion of fron facade, which is all that remains of the movie theater in Archer City, Texas. Author Larry McMurtry drew the title for his book "The Last Picture Show" from the building.

ARCHER CITY, Texas (AP) — Racy Jacy's back in town, more beautiful and mysterious than ever, and she's surrounded by Duane, Sonny and her other lustful pals from the pages of "The Last Picture Show."

They're 30 years older, not much wiser, a little sadder and no less welcome in some parts of Archer City than the first time around.

What we're talking about here is "Texasville" (Simon & Schuster, $18.95), the sequel to Pulitzer Prize winner Larry McMurtry's "The Last Picture Show," a novel about coming of age in a small West Texas town called Thalia in the 1950s.

Thalia is a fictionalized Archer City, where the 50-year-old author spent his childhood. It is a pleasant, Baptist-flavored little hamlet 25 miles south of Wichita Falls.

McMurtry keeps a ranch north of town but his visits are limited by new demands on his time, largely the result of last year's Pulitzer-winning "Lonesome Dove" and his promotional appearances on behalf of "Texasville," which is climbing best-seller lists.

McMurtry's 12th book finds the Thalia teenagers 30 years later, coping with middle-age, shaky marriages, bizarre romances, plunging oil prices and preparations for the centennial celebration of Hardtop County.

The anniversary gala includes a replica of the bar, bordello and post office that once served as the county seat of Hardtop County. Its name: Texasville.

Duane, Sonny and Jacy remain the major figures but are joined by newcomer Karla, Duane's tart but beautiful wife who drives a BMW, owns a waterbed and wears T-shirts decorated with "important truths."

Her favorites include "Lead me not into temptation, I'll find it for myself," "You can't be first but you can be next" and "If you love something set it free...If it doesn't return in a month or two hunt it down and kill it."

Duane Moore, captain of the football team 30 years ago, spends his evenings sitting in a hot tub shooting his gun at a new doghouse and fretting over declining oil prices, Karla's love affairs and the criminal activities of his four diabolical children.

"They've got personalities like wild dogs, but at least they're good looking," he says.

Duane's got $850 in the bank, $12 million in debts, recurring headaches and a rivalry with his drug dealing, bed hopping, 21-year-old son for the sexual charms of Suzie Nolan.

Meanwhile, Sonny Crawford's long-ago affair with the coach's wife, Ruth Popper, is a thing of the past and he is now mayor of Thalia. However, as Duane explains, "He's a little tired in his mind." He suffers mental lapses in which old movies such as "Rio Bravo" fade in and out of his head.

Once again it is Jacy Farrow who emerges as the most interesting of the McMurtry characters. She does, of course, leave Duane, Thalia and the reader guessing about her moods and motives and the depths of an unexpected and provocative relationship with Karla.

Archer City's 1,800 residents dabble mostly in oil, farming, cattle and conservatism, and not all were amused by the sexual hijinks of "The Last Picture Show." But grumbling turned to hostility in the early 1970s when Hollywood invaded the town to film the movie version of McMurtry's saga.

"A lot of people didn't want it filmed here because of the moral issues raised in the book," recalled Gary Beesinger, a Baptist deacon who played a small part in the movie. "I still cringe at some of the scenes, but it moved me emotionally...It was not entertainment, it was life. It was reality."

Peter Bogdanovich directed and the stars were newcomers Cybill Shepherd, Jeff Bridges, Timothy Bottoms and Cloris Leachman. Ben Johnson was the closest thing to a household name in the cast.

Preachers denounced the book and the film from the pulpit and even some old friends turned a chilly shoulder to the McMurtry clan, which included the novelist's late father, mother, two younger sisters and a brother.

"We were not too popular," recalled McMurtry's sister, Sue Deen. "But I'm older and wiser and I don't have to take that anymore."

The film opened with an R rating and was a 1971 Academy Award nominee for movie of the year. Johnson and Miss Leachman picked up Oscars for supporting roles. Miss Shepherd won instant stardom as the sexually adventuresome Jacy.

Bobby Stubbs, 53, the lean, leathery, easygoing owner of an oil well servicing company who was one of McMurtry's closest friends in high school, is the man "Duane" is believed to be patterned after.

'21' Club has new look, menu trying to tempt younger crowd

By MITCHELL LANDSBERG

NEW YORK (AP) — The '21' Club, that swank shrine of the swell crowd for more than 50 years, has just undergone its biggest change since Repeal. When you shell out $21 for a lunch entree now, your burger will come with a bun.

There are restaurants in America where such change would not be considered monumental, where burgers always have been served between bread, where for $21 you might expect an order of fries, too.

Those places are not '21,' a Prohibition speakeasy that became an institution through a combination of snobbery and sociability, respectability and rakishness, haute cuisine and home cooking.

The announcement early this year that '21' would be closed for restoration sent tremors of anxiety through the ranks of the rich and famous.

"I am very apprehensive about what they have done," said Cosmopolitan publisher Helen Gurley Brown, a '21' regular for more than 20 years. "I want it exactly the way it was before."

'21's' new management insists that regulars won't be disappointed.

"Shock not! Alarm not! Our patrons and future patrons are to think that this club has simply had a renaissance," said '21' spokeswoman Judy Woodfin.

Since January 1930, when it opened at 21 E. 52nd St., '21' has been one of America's favorite celebrity hangouts. Ernest Hemingway, Robert Benchley, Damon Runyon, Groucho Marx, Howard Hughes, Helen Hayes, Truman Capote, John Steinbeck, Edward R. Murrow, Katharine Hepburn, Henry Fonda, Alfred Hitchcock, Cole Porter and Noel Coward all have raised glasses there.

The gourmand and writer Lucius Beebe once described it as "a celebrity hideaway which had only three rivals in the United States: the Colony restaurant, El Morocco (both in New York) and the Vendome restaurant on Sunset Boulevard, Hollywood."

Prince Rainier is said to have courted Grace Kelly at '21', although in the Hitchcock movie, "Rear Window," it was James Stewart who was asked by Miss Kelly, "What would you think of starting off with dinner at '21'?"

Since Stewart was in a leg cast at the time, '21' sent dinner to his apartment — an example of the kind of service '21' provided favored customers.

The '21' Club — which, despite the name, is not a private club — was notorious for its chilly attitude toward strangers or the less-than well-heeled. Asked recently whether the club used to actively discourage strangers, former owner Peter Kriendler momentarily blanched.

"Discouraged?" he said. "What's a gentler word?...Well, we didn't encourage 'em ..."

Once accepted, however, patrons found in the '21' Club a comforting refuge in a jarring city, a place to pass time — and do business — with people of similarly rarefied status.

And it barely changed. Prohibition passed in 1933, leaving behind stories about the club's Rube Goldberg-ish attempts to foil the federal revenue agents. Booze was stored behind electrically triggered, hidden door panels. There was a secret wine cellar, still used today. When a raid was announced, a lever behind the bar would send its entire contents sliding down a brick chute into the New York sewer system.

The menu became a classic, and regulars knew they could always count on such down-home favorites as Chicken Hash '21' or Cobb Salad. Valued customers could order anything — on or off the menu — and '21' would try to please.

"The point of '21', the appeal of '21', was twofold," said travel writer Stephen Birnbaum, who has been a regular customer for nearly 30 years. "The first was the feeling of being at a club — the camaraderie that was a part of it, the friendliness. The other part was that '21' sold food — not cuisine."

The fact that '21' never jumped on culinary trends has been a big selling point for many older customers.

Still, in recent years, younger executives and celebrities began to look for trendier haunts, and restaurant critics speared '21'.

"Country club food and uneven service," concluded the most recent Zagat restaurant guide. "Not what it used to be."

In January 1985, Kriendler and partner H. Jerome Berns sold the '21' Club to General Felt Corp., a floor-covering company headed by Marshall Cogan. Last October, Cogan announced that Ken Aretsky and Anne Rosenzweig, co-owners of Arcadia, one of the city's trendier restaurants, were being brought in to manage '21'.

"When Marshall Cogan invited me to come into the deal, the restaurant was really tired and sad and had really been stressed," Aretsky said recently, sitting in the newly refurbished first-floor lounge of '21'.

"When I walked into the kitchens for the first time, I was absolutely astounded...It was a minor miracle that the kitchen crew and the chef could put out anything."

Aretsky and Ms. Rosenzweig closed the club, hired an architect and went to work. The first-floor kitchen was gutted and rebuilt. A new kitchen was put in on the second floor. New lighting was installed, chairs and couches were reupholstered, carpets replaced. The club's many Frederic Remington paintings were cleaned.

The iron jockeys standing guard out in front — gifts from customers who owned racehorses — were given fresh coats of paint.

Stuffed animal heads were removed from the Hunt Room upstairs and it was renamed the Harbor Room. One room was set aside for "The Breakfast Club" — an institutionalized "power breakfast" for invited guests willing to shell out a $1,500 initiation fee and $250 a year in dues.

"This restaurant really was missing a generation," said Aretsky. "It really did not cater to younger people. You have to understand something. When I talk about younger people...we're missing, I would say, from 30 to 60. That's a big gap. What we want to really do is broaden that. We want to appeal to a much broader cross-section."

In that spirit, Ms. Rosenzweig revamped the menu. She tinkered with some old dishes — the '21' Burger will come on "grilled country bread" instead of plain on a plate.

Chances for arthritis increase with one's age

ATLANTA (AP) — Osteoarthritis is one of the most prevalent diseases in America and the chances that a person will get it increase with age, says the Arthritis Foundation.

At age 75, 80 percent of the population has osteoarthritis of the hands, 15 percent have it in their knees, and 5 percent have it in their hips.

The condition is believed to be a result of the interaction of several factors, including heredity, occupational history and weight.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

MONDAY, JUNE 8, 1987

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Your mind will be sharper than ever in the months ahead. Success beckons! New business developments help ensure your financial well-being and promote greater happiness at home. Any misunderstandings should be cleared up on the spot. You are on a roll! Your social life accelerates, enhancing romance. Spend time with those who share your interests and values. Preserve important traditions.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: innovative American architect Frank Lloyd Wright, baseball's Mark Belanger, singer-actor James Darren, talk show hostess Joan Rivers, country music's Boz Scaggs, comedian George Kirby, actor Robert Preston, actress Alexis Smith, U.S. Supreme Court Justice Byron "Whizzer" White, comedian Jerry Stiller, actress Nancy Sinatra.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): The telephone continues to play an important role in your personal and professional success. Keep good records for tax purposes. Interesting news arrives from overseas. Keep in touch with the folks at home.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): An important message or telephone call will affect your future. Negotiations are taking place that will have a profound influence on your finances and personal happiness. Comparison shoppers find wonderful bargains.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Do not act on a friend's advice where your career or finances are concerned. Those who truly love you and understand your need for privacy come through for you at a critical time.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Old loyalties are tested in interesting ways. You will do best if you rely on your own efforts. Keep a low profile and higher-ups will show you new respect. Romance is pleasing.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Travel is best postponed. Attend to events taking place at a distance by writing letters and making telephone calls. A new relationship begins to look permanent. Extra care should be taken with your appearance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A new addition to the family brings great joy. You can expect to receive a letter or telephone call from an old friend. Reviving a former alliance will improve a financial situation.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Pay more attention to a willful child. This young person may be trying to tell you something. Higher-ups make special demands but are willing to pay for your efforts. Think things through.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Keeping a tighter grip on your purse strings will help you achieve a long-cherished goal. Probe beneath the surface if a friend or neighbor seems troubled. You are unlikely to be the cause.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Mixing business with pleasure helps you make new profits. Soft-pedal any differences of opinion with attractive member of opposite sex. Follow up a strong hunch regarding a stock tip. Your intuition is excellent!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Postpone signing an important agreement or contract until more facts and figures are available. Someone who flatters you may be trying to use you. The business outlook is much brighter now. Forge ahead!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Do what you can to bring your leadership qualities to the attention of higher-ups. There is room for you at the top! A relationship begins to take an interesting turn. Go slow.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your career or finances receive a welcome boost. Avoid choosing sides in a domestic argument. Family secrets are brought out into the open, relieving tension. Forget past grievances and plan for the future.

Opening lead: Three of ♠

It is a well-known phenomenon in chess that even in some carefully analyzed lines, transposing moves might allow a killing counterstroke. It also happens in bridge.

North-South conducted a perfect auction. North's jump to four clubs was a splinter bid, agreeing spades and showing a singleton club. With his host of first-round controls, South cue-bid his ace of hearts. North launched into Blackwood and, on finding out his side had all the aces, he used six clubs as the Grand Slam Force—five no trump would have asked for kings, but North was interested only in a specific king. With two of the three top honors in spades, South bid the grand slam.

Since it was obvious that North could use trumps profitably as ruffers, West wisely led one. Declarer had only 11 top tricks and, with the high trumps in dummy, he decided his best play for the slam lay in a dummy reversal. So he won the first trick in dummy, cashed the ace-king of diamonds and ruffed a diamond high as West sluffed a heart. After crossing back to the table with a trump to ruff the last diamond high, declarer tried to reach dummy with a heart to draw the last trumps. Unfortunately, West had disposed of his remaining heart on the fourth diamond, and his ruff was the setting trick.

There is no question that a dummy reversal was the correct tactic to adopt. Declarer erred, however in "transposing his moves." After ruffing the first diamond, declarer should cross back to the board with a heart. When he then ruffs the last diamond, he can get back to dummy with a trump to draw the outstanding trumps and claim the rest of the tricks.

Cotten's career has been on hold since 1981 stroke

By BOB THOMAS

LOS ANGELES (AP) — When both were young actors getting their start in New York, Orson Welles made this analysis of Joseph Cotten:

"You're lucky to be tall and thin and have curly hair. You can also move about the stage without running into the furniture. But these are fringe assets, and I'm afraid you'll never make it as an actor. But as a star, I think you well might hit the jackpot."

Welles fulfilled his own prophecy by making his friend a star in 1940 with the monumental "Citizen Kane," following with "Journey Into Fear" and "The Magnificent Ambersons." Then Cotten was signed by David O. Selznick and pursued a distinguished career in films that was halted — temporarily, he vows — by a stroke in 1981.

Recently published by Mercury House is "Joseph Cotten: An Autobiography." The subtitle sets the tone: "Vanity Will Get You Somewhere." It's a witty, irreverent recounting of a lively career that has encompassed radio, films and television. He also has done theater, appearing with Katharine Hepburn in "The Philadelphia Story."

Cotten, 82, came to Los Angeles with his wife, Patricia Medina, one of the world's great beauties, to talk about the book and other matters. They have made their home in Palm Springs since his doctor recommended daily swimming for therapy after the stroke. His speech is getting back to normal, though he still has to spell out elusive words.

"Joe was doing fine until he had a throat operation four months ago," his wife said. "He hasn't been able to resume the therapy, but he will soon.

"After the stroke they told me he would never speak again. If speech doesn't return in eight hours, they said, it's gone. It was over a year before he spoke."

In the book he writes fondly of his boyhood in Virginia along the banks of the Appomatox. His grandmother and uncle filled him with tales of the Civil War, and the boy grew up with a dramatic bent. He tried newspapering for a while, then realized he had to be an actor.

The most colorful portions of the autobiography are devoted to Cotten's association with Welles and the Mercury Theater. Cotten reported for "Citizen Kane" in August of 1940 and never had a chance to discuss his role of the reporter Jed Leland with Welles.

Welles called to say he had sprained his ankle and Cotten's first day of work would be the wheelchair scene. "I almost dropped the phone," Cotten writes. "That was the most difficult scene I had in the entire picture." What's more, he had to report to makeup at 4 a.m. to be aged with rubber cement. Cotten's monologue became one of the most memorable scenes in the film.

After "Journey Into Fear," which Cotten co-wrote, the pair went in different directions. Cotten became a popular leading man with such films as Hitchcock's "Shadow of a Doubt,""Gaslight," "Since You Went Away,""Love Letters,""The Farmer's Daughter,""The Third Man,""Niagara" with Marilyn Monroe and "September Affair." Despite a string of distinguished performances, he never was nominated for an Academy Award.

Joseph Cotten and wife Patricia Medina

Welles and Cotten remained close friends, and they could be seen in recent years lunching at the former's regular table at Ma Maison in Beverly Hills. Welles asked to see the autobiography, and he called one midnight to deliver his praise. Two days later he died.

Reflecting on his friend, Cotten observed: "I don't think Orson knew about love. There's a line in 'Kane;' Orson didn't write it — the other fellow (Herman Mankiewicz) did. Speaking of Kane, one of the characters said something like, 'He didn't know about love. He wanted everyone to love him.' That pretty much sums up Orson."

Cotten continues receiving offers to act, but he has accepted none since 1981.

"Joe says to people, 'I was a good actor, but I'm not now. I don't want anyone sorry for me. I'll let you know when I can do it.' And he will," his wife said.

Museum hosts church exhibit

"Inspirations: The Churches of New Mexico in Art" is on display at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., through June 21.

This exhibition celebrates the 100th anniversary of the Cathedral of St. Francis of Assisi in Santa Fe and is presented by the Archdiocese of Santa Fe and the Museum of Fine Arts, Museum of New Mexico. The purpose of the exhibition is to illustrate the power that adobe churches have had upon the spiritual and artistic life of New Mexico.

The exhibition was organized by Christine Mather in cooperation with the staff of the Museum of Fine Arts and the office of the Historic-Artistic Patrimony of the Archdiocese of Santa Fe.

Works by many of the finest artists who lived and worked in the Southwest, such as Ernest Blumenschein, Fremont Ellis, Peter Hurd, Gene Kloss, Ansel Adams and Laura Gilpin, are included in this exhibition. The wide variety of media such as oil and watercolors, drawings, photographs and lithographs, reflect the fascination that artists have had for the churches of New Mexico. The Spanish influence in the New Mexican culture is evident in the churches' design and construction. The exhibition pays tribute to the pioneering missionaries and priests who built the churches by including exhibition labels and text panels in Spanish and English.

Museum hours are Tuesday through Saturday 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday 1-5 p.m. No admission is charged to view any of the exhibits at the Museum.

'Cats' to be on stage in Fort Worth

FORT WORTH — Opening Casa Manana's season Tuesday is the National Touring Company's production of "Cats," being staged at Tarrant County Convention Center through June 14. Single admission tickets are being sold for this production.

Using a facility other than its theater-in-the-round, is a first for Casa.

"First and foremost, the complicated sets used make it literally impossible to present this outstanding musical on an arena stage," said Bud Franks, producer and general manager of Casa Manana.

"Secondly, we wanted to give Fort Worth audiences the opportunity to see this great show, and since 'Cats' is available to us for one week only, it was necessary to move to a theater with the larger seating capacity in order to accomodate all of our season-ticket holders as well as the others who will want to see this production. The Convention Center Theatre provides us with over 3,000 seats instead of the 1,816 we have at Casa."

Other productions this season include "Annie," opening June 15; "Cabaret," opening June 29; "Mame," opening July 13; "West Side Story," opening July 27; "Sound of Music," opening August 10; and "42nd Street," opening Aug. 24. "All but "42nd Street" and "Cats" have been staged before in Fort Worth.

"This is the strongest season we've had in a number of years, with an extremely good balance of old and new properties," Franks said.

Season tickets for the six regular season productions and not including "Cats" range from $64.80 per ticket for Saturday matinee tickets and $75.60 for Monday night, to $81 for Tuesday through Thursday and $86.40 for Friday and Saturday nights.

"Cats" tickets range in price from $20 each for Rear Balcony to $35 for Front Orchestra seats. For more information or to secure tickets call 1-817-332-6221 or write to Casa Manana Ticket Office, P.O. Box 9054, Fort Worth, Texas 76107.
