'Like his father, he had every gift but length of years.'

Sen. Kennedy eulogizes life that was 'cut in half'

By Richard Pyle
Associated Press

NEW YORK — In a heartbreakingly familiar scene, John F. Kennedy Jr. was eulogized Friday as a free spirit who carried the torch of America's first family of politics with unusual ease and grace and — like his father — "had every gift but length of years."

"He was a boy who grew into a man with a zest for life and a love of adventure," said Sen. Edward Kennedy, JFK Jr.'s uncle. "He was a pied piper who brought us all along. ... He had a legacy, and he learned to treasure it. He was part of a legend, and he learned to live with it."

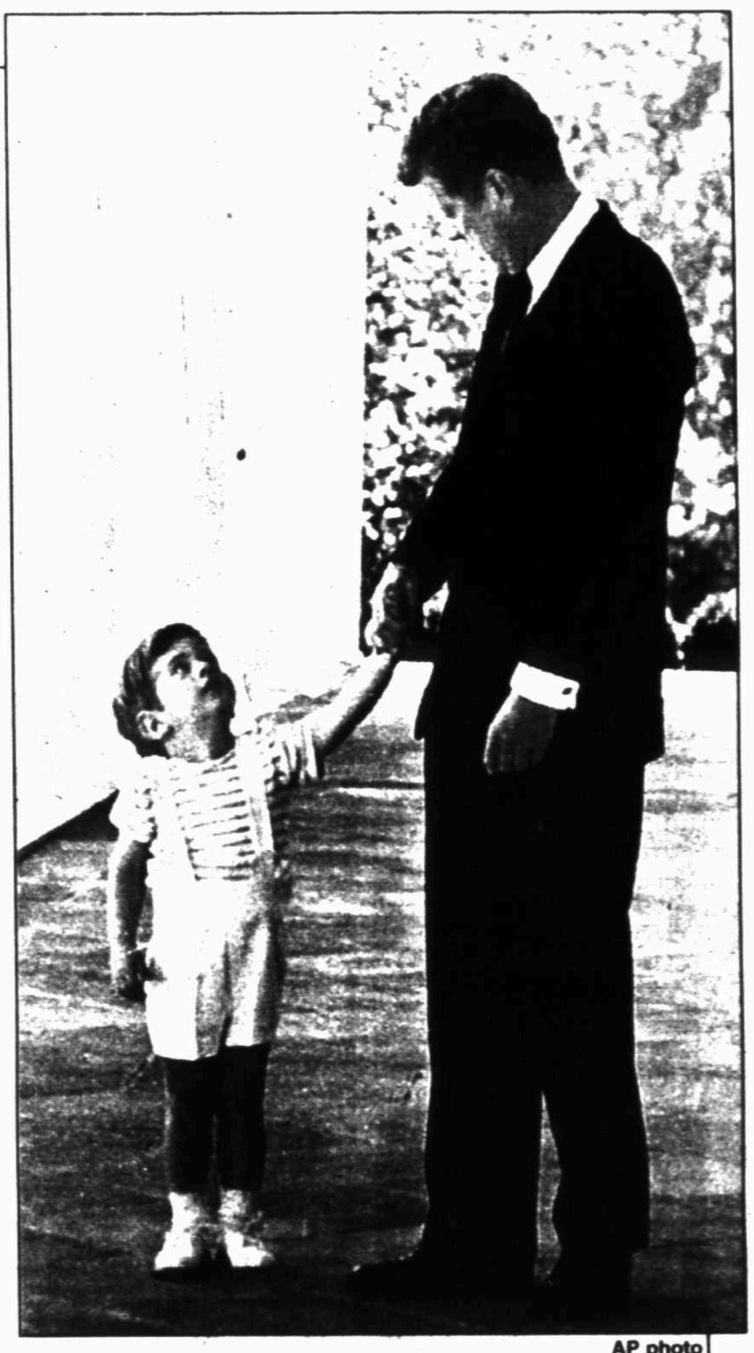

Kennedy's life was cut in half, the senator told 350 family members and friends who filled the velvet-lined pews at the Gothic-style Church of St. Thomas More on Manhattan's Upper East Side, where JFK Jr.'s mother often sought solace.

"We dared to think ... that this John Kennedy would live to comb gray hair," the senator said, borrowing from the poet William Butler Yeats. "But like his father, he had every gift but length of years."

The memorial Mass came a week after the plane piloted by Kennedy, 38, crashed off Martha's Vineyard — killing him, his wife, Carolyn Bessette Kennedy, 33, and sister-in-law Lauren Bessette, 34.

Family and friends — among them President Clinton, Hillary Rodham Clinton and Muhammad Ali — celebrated Kennedy as a playful and courageous man who kept his bearings long after he was the child who saluted his father's casket and was cast as the heir to Camelot.

Midland pilots ponder Kennedy's last flight

By Ed Todd

As the nation mourns John F. Kennedy Jr.'s death and remembers his father's legacy, several Midland pilots ponder his last flight a week ago.

Kennedy, 38, died off the shores of Massachusetts' Martha's Vineyard in the crash at sea of the single-engine airplane he was piloting at night in a haze.

Continental to switch to regional jets

■ Continental Express to take the place of Continental Airlines at Midland International Airport.

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Continental Airlines will discontinue service at Midland International Airport beginning Dec. 16. In its place, Continental Express will begin regional jet service between Midland and Houston.

Art Fuller, a team leader at Continental's Midland station, said Friday that the move was one of economics. He said the smaller jets would more economically service the Permian Basin market.

"It's still jet service," he pointed out. "It's just smaller planes."

Carroll Thomas, business development director at the airport, said, "I think it will be improved service for Midland." He said Continental Express will offer five flights between Midland and the Houston hub, which is an increase from the three currently offered by Continental Airlines.

"This will mean better connections, which could save a two-hour layover," he said.

"These jets are comparable to the larger jets in that they fly higher and give a smoother ride. The speed is identical."

Continental spokesman Dave Messing said the regional jets will be the newest, most efficient planes available.

"The jets we're flying in Midland are 30 years old. This will be the next generation."

Continental recently switched to regional jet service in Lubbock, Messing noted, and has seen an increase in passengers flying into and out of the city.

"What we saw in Lubbock was that the load factor went up. We had fewer seats, but the load factor went up because we're bringing more people in and out of the city."

The additional flights will create more connections at the airline's Houston hub, which will not only serve Midlanders wanting to fly on to Florida or Atlanta, for example, but for others wanting to fly into Midland, he said.

The move follows an industry trend of putting large jets on the long routes with heavier demand, and the regional jets into markets like Midland-Odessa that feed into the hubs, Messing said.

Airline employees will be impacted, he said, because the federal government has different rules for Continental and Continental Express. Employees will be given the choice of working for Continental Express or electing to transfer to another city with Continental.

Currently, Midland International is regularly serviced by American Eagle, Southwest Airlines, and Continental Airlines.

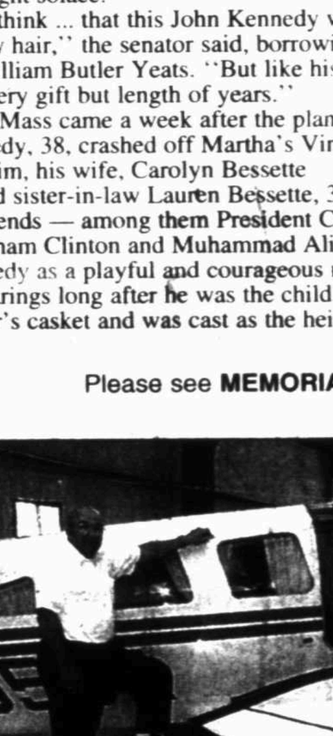

Later Friday, local and visiting airport customers gave their opinions on the option of jet travel when the news was flown by them.

Ryan Horning is not that concerned, except that the smaller planes such as those flown by American Eagle "are less com-

Grand jury OKs report to be released to public Tuesday

By Jeff Stevens
Staff Writer

After a two-hour deliberation and a month-long wait, the grand jury has finally agreed on a report about its investigation of Midland Independent School District, but it will not be released to the public until Tuesday.

The grand jury met at 1 p.m. Friday to review a rough draft of the report authored by District Attorney Al Schorre. Presentation to the judge and final copies were completed and approved at 5 p.m.

The school district will get a peek at the report Monday morning before the public gets its first view of the document on Tuesday, Schorre said.

"The grand jury felt, and the judge agreed, they ought to give it the school board first," Schorre said. "They didn't want the school board to be blindsided."

Schorre was asked by the jury to draft the report after its meeting in June.

The grand jury investigation arose from two allegations of open meetings violations in connection with a regular May 11 school board meeting in which a student's discipline appeal was denied.

Casey Gold Riggan, now a Midland High School graduate, was challenging a disciplinary decision made by his principal, Neil Richmond.

Witnesses claimed the vote rejecting Riggan's appeal occurred in a closed meeting.

According to the Texas Open Meetings Act, "A final action, decision or vote on a matter deliberated in a closed meeting under this chapter may only be made in an open meeting."

The school board's escape from indictment marks a successful clearance of just its first legal hurdle.

Riggan has filed a lawsuit against the school

Waste Control Specialists considers moving disposal site to New Mexico

By Richard Acosta
Staff Writer

After years of trying to get its business going in Texas, one radioactive waste company is looking for more receptive waters.

Waste Control Specialists has made a proposal to Lea County, N.M., to host a radioactive waste disposal site. WCS representative Susie Chase said she was unable to provide information about the move.

However, according to County Manager Dennis Holmberg, WCS representative Mark Turnbough proposed the idea to the Lea County Commission at its meeting July 20 in Lovington, N.M.

"If it is built it will be on the Eunice-Andrews Highway right on the state line," Holmberg said. "It will hold class 'A,' 'B' and 'C' waste. It will be active for 100 years and employ 35 to 40 people."

Sites in Texas are pursing only Class A, the lowest grade of low-level radioactive waste.

Holmberg said that before the commission makes a decision on the site they will go through the proper channels, which includes surveying the county's residents. If the program does not run into problems it should begin taking barrels in 2001, he said.

However, moving the disposal site to New Mexico doesn't mean that WCS is leaving Texas, according to Lloyd Eisenrich with the Andrews Industrial Committee. He said that the low-level radioactive waste still will go to the Andrews plant before it is disposed of (or buried) in New Mexico. He said WCS' moving the disposal site "just over the fence" to Lea County will still be beneficial to Andrews County by bringing in jobs.

"I am not surprised," Eisenrich said. "If Texas is not going to do anything with this and New Mexico will, they (WCS) are not going to just sit around. They would have to wait 18 months before they can even get permission to do anything in Texas. I am so fed up with the Texas Legislature right now I would not be surprised about the move."

Pilot slain in hijacking; suspect just wanted to fly a plane

By Todd Zaun
Associated Press

TOKYO — One woman noticed the fidgety man across the aisle and wondered why he was wearing gloves when the temperature outside was 91 degrees. Another passenger saw him get up from his seat aboard All Nippon Airways Flight 61 and figured he had a complaint.

Then the man pulled an 8-inch knife on a flight attendant on the upper deck of the Boeing 747, stormed the cockpit and slashed the pilot to death in Japan's first deadly hijacking.

Forty-nine minutes later, the jumbo jet returned to Tokyo's Haneda Airport and landed safely with the 516 other people aboard uninjured.

The hijacker, an unemployed man, told police he was a fan of computer flight-simulation games and wanted to fly a real plane, a Haneda police official said on customary condition of anonymity.

When the man hustled the attendant down the aisle, "I was afraid to look at his face because he might say, 'What are you looking at?' and take a stab at me," said a 61-year-old passenger who only identified himself by his last name, Okawa.

Once inside the cockpit, the hijacker forced the co-pilot out and ordered the pilot to steer toward the U.S. military's Yokota Air Base in western Tokyo, the police official said.

When the pilot refused, the hijacker stabbed him in the neck and seized the controls.

The plane suddenly lost altitude after the hijacker burst into the cockpit, passengers said. At one point, the plane descended 2,000 feet in five minutes, to 1,000 feet above the ground, the Transportation Ministry said.

"I really thought this was it," said Yasuhiro Fukuda, a 42-year-old musician.

Unnerved by the drop in altitude, the co-pilot and another ANA pilot who happened to be aboard burst into the cockpit and pounced on the hijacker.

Others helped tie him up with neckties and belts while the off-duty pilot took the controls.

The hijacker, 28-year-old Yuji Nishizawa, was arrested after the plane landed, said Norio Chichi, deputy police chief at Haneda Airport.

The pilot, Naoyuki Nagashima, 51, was pronounced dead by a doctor on board shortly after Flight 61 landed, Transportation Ministry official Satoshi Iwamura said.

The government tightened security at airports across Japan and launched an investigation into how the suspect got a knife aboard.

Accounts from the cabin depict a flight thrown into quiet terror once the hijacker pulled out his knife.

"Take me to the cockpit," Chichi quoted Nishizawa as saying to the flight attendant minutes after takeoff for Sapporo, in northern Japan.

The crew told passengers the plane had been hijacked and urged them to remain quiet. They showed videos of the popular "Pokemon" cartoon to keep children from panicking, passengers said.

A home video shot in the cabin during the hijacking showed people sitting quietly. Passengers later praised the crew's efforts to reassure them.

"I was shocked when I learned that the pilot was killed," said Miharu Hondo, who was on vacation. "When we saw a doctor coming into the plane, I thought maybe someone was hurt during the hijacking. But I didn't imagine that anyone had died."

The hijacker apparently just wanted to try some aerial tricks involving the majestic span across Tokyo Bay.

"I wanted to fly under the Rainbow Bridge and make a loop," Kyodo News agency quoted him as telling police.

Other reports said he suffered from depression.

Prime Minister Keizo Obuchi sent condolences to the pilot's family. ANA's president apologized.

Passengers said there were signs the hijacker was troubled before he pulled out his knife. One told NHK, the national TV network, that he saw the man leave his seat and speak quietly to a flight attendant before seizing her.

Yoshiko Kawase, 60, said she noticed the man while he was still in his seat because he appeared nervous and was wearing dirty white cotton gloves.

She heard someone "shouting in a threatening voice" in the cockpit but could not understand what he was saying.

The pilot's slaying was the first for a passenger or crew member in Japan's 20 hijackings since 1970, Transportation Ministry official Fumihiko Oinuma said.

The last hijacking in Japan was on Jan. 20, 1997, when a man armed with a kitchen knife commandeered a flight from Osaka to the southern city of Fukuoka.

Antenna problems block experiment during spacewalk

MOSCOW (AP) — Two cosmonauts spent nearly six hours outside the Mir space station Friday trying to test a new antenna, but they gave up after the mechanism failed to unfold.

Because of their space suits' limited oxygen supply, six hours is the maximum time Mir crew members are usually allowed to stay outside the station.

After the folding antenna failed to open automatically, flight commander Viktor Afanasyev and engineer Sergei Avdeyev spent 40 minutes kicking and tugging at the device to force it into action.

That didn't work, and the two were ordered to head back to the station. They may try the experiment again during another spacewalk planned for Wednesday, Mission Control spokesman Valery Lyndin said.

Some experts suggested the antenna might have malfunctioned because trace amounts of water that had condensed inside its cover turned to ice when the Mir left the sunlit stretch of its orbit and parts of the mechanism were frozen together.

Others said the antenna may not have been provided with enough electric power.

The cosmonauts did complete two other tasks Friday: collecting scientific equipment attached to the outside of the station and retrieving a device that measures the Mir's exhaust for a study of its effects on the environment.

"This is delicate work because (the device) needs to be packed into a special cover so that the cosmonauts don't get the dirt on themselves and the station's atmosphere is not polluted," Lyndin said.

MEMORIAL: Sen. Kennedy delivers JFK Jr.'s eulogy

(From 1A)

Sen. Kennedy, who delivered eulogies for Robert F. Kennedy in 1968 and Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis in 1994, invoked a phrase often used to describe the length of President Kennedy's term as he remarked on JFK Jr.'s marriage.

"For a thousand days, he was a husband who adored the wife who became his perfect soul mate," Sen. Kennedy said. "John's father taught us all to reach for the moon and the stars. John did that in all he did — and he found his shining star when he married Carolyn Bessette."

The senator added: "He was still becoming the person he would be, and doing it by the beat of his own drummer. He had only just begun. There was in him a great promise of things to come."

At the end of the 10-minute eulogy, JFK Jr.'s sister, Caroline Kennedy, rose and hugged her uncle, who had fought back tears. Mourners said she read from Shakespeare's "The Tempest" and, helped by her husband and three children, lighted a candle.

A gospel choir sang "Amazing Grace." Worshippers sang along and tapped their seats to "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot." Hip-hop artist Wyclef Jean was the soloist for the reggae anthem "Many Rivers to Cross."

Fashion executive Hamilton South gave the eulogy for Ms. Kennedy. He was a close friend of the couple and had joined them on skiing trips.

Ms. Kennedy's mother, Ann Freeman, read from Henry Scott Holland's meditation "Facts of Faith." Though it was not known which part she read, the piece includes this passage: "Death is nothing at all. It does not count. I have only slipped away into the next room. ... I am but waiting for you, for an interval, somewhere very near, just around the corner."

Also among those filling the 126-year-old church for the invitation-only service were RFK's widow, Ethel Kennedy; Robert F. Kennedy Jr.; Maria Shriver and husband Arnold Schwarzenegger; and Maurice Tempelsman, Mrs. Onassis' longtime companion.

After the memorial, the congregation walked two blocks uptown to the landmark Convent of the Sacred Heart for a reception. Several Kennedys walked hand-in-hand, their heads down and their eyes hidden by sunglasses.

The media-shy Caroline Kennedy, her husband, Edwin Schlossberg, and their children took a limousine to the reception as church bells rang and helicopters buzzed overhead. At one point, she lowered a window and waved to the crowd that had swelled on the sidewalks around the church in the hours before the service.

Onlookers were kept more than a half-block from the entrance to St. Thomas More amid tight security.

Dog-walkers, nannies pushing strollers and tourists jockeyed for the chance to bid farewell to the man who grew up in front of a nation's eyes to become a prosecutor, quiet philanthropist, irreverent magazine entrepreneur and subway-riding New Yorker — one of their own.

"I feel like I grew up with the Kennedys," said Alane Repa, 48, visiting from Chicago.

Genie Wong, 46, who lives five blocks from the church, said she often saw Kennedy riding his bike in nearby Central Park.

"Now, I'm sorry I never stopped to say hello," she said. "I'll never get that chance."

Ms. Bessette is to be honored with a private service today at an Episcopal church in her family's hometown of Greenwich, Conn. Sen. Kennedy and several other members of the Kennedy clan are expected to attend.

Also Friday, wreckage from the plane was brought by a Navy salvage ship to Middletown, R.I. The National Transportation Safety Board will truck the pieces to Otis Air Force Base on Cape Cod, Mass., where they will be examined by crash investigators. Determining the cause of the crash is expected to take six to nine months.

fortable."

Ellis and Phyllis Fulton of Odessa "hate small planes, and avoid American" for that reason. The couple would be willing to pay up to $50 more to avoid "the noise, discomfort, and aggravation" that they said is more prevalent with turbo-prop service.

Judy Querio "would hate to see (the change.) It would be horrible for not just Midland/Odessa but for the whole region that uses the airport."

"I prefer jets for the size, safety, and the smoother flights. Bigger is better," she said, laughing. She also said that it could have an impact on business.

A Michigan woman, whose husband used to fly a single-engine plane, prioritized the service of the airline above the plane that they offer, as she fumed over a delayed flight.

Midlanders Jewel and Leonard Mouser, headed to Austin, were flying Southwest because they "don't like the feel of American Eagle, because they're a lot rougher."

"It may or may not be false that jets are safer, but they sure are a lot more comfortable, especially in bad weather," Mrs. Mouser said.

The couple would be willing to pay up to 25 percent more to choose an airline that offered them jet service.

Ginger Lewright of San Angelo does not foresee the possible change as a problem "unless it cuts down on the destinations that they offer direct flights to."

FLIGHT: Many pilots feel Kennedy suffered vertigo

(From 1A)

to fly at night over water in poor visibility," Sabrehna Wyche, 41, a Midland-Odessa pilot and instrument-rated flight instructor, said on Friday.

The apparent consensus among many pilots is that Kennedy, who was not rated for instrument flying but was for visual flight, suffered vertigo or spatial disorientation after he lost sight of the horizon while making his descent for landing.

Kennedy, who earned his private pilot's license last year, died along with his wife, Carolyn, and his sister-in-law, Lauren Bessette, in the crash of his six-seat Piper Saratoga II HP.

The image of the young child saluting his father in the funeral procession 36 years ago is embedded in the hearts and minds of people the world over. President John F. Kennedy was assassinated three days before his son's third birthday.

Kennedy's last flight started in the pre-dusk hours, about 8:38 p.m., of July 16, from New Jersey for about an hour's flight to Martha's Vineyard. The 300-horsepower, $400,000 Piper Saratoga has a "best power" cruise speed of about 186 miles per hour (162 knots) or 191 mph (166 knots) depending on altitude, according to the Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association publication, AOPA Pilot.

Kennedy and his passengers reportedly got a late takeoff from the Fairfield, N.J., airport en route to Martha's Vineyard for the July 17 wedding of Kennedy's cousin, Rory Kennedy, youngest daughter of the late Sen. Robert Kennedy.

As his flight was about to end, Ms. Wyche noted, Kennedy apparently did not "squawk" the 7700 distress frequency on his transponder or switch to the 121.5 international emergency radio "mayday" frequency.

Those emergency frequencies are continuously monitored by Federal Aviation Administration control towers, stations and other sites, according to veteran Midland pilot William Jessup.

Although Ms. Wyche has not flown the Saratoga, she has piloted a precursor to the aircraft, a 1977 Piper Lance, which she described as a safe airplane.

The Piper she has flown is owned and flown by Midland pilot Robert Evans, who, like Jessup, flies out of Skywest Airport southwest of Midland.

"I think it is probably one of the most stable single-engine airplanes you could have," Evans said.

Of Kennedy's last flight, "It was completely legal," Evans said. "Personally, I wouldn't do it. I'm instrument-rated. And personally, I wouldn't fly in haze over water at night."

Ms. Wyche figured that the night's weather conditions and Kennedy's apparent loss of the horizon had "everything to do" with the crash into the ocean.

"He lost the horizon," she surmised, and apparently did not rely on his instruments, especially the gyro-horizon and the gyro-compass, in time to recover.

Ms. Wyche noted that the FAA requires its flight instructors to "teach stall-spin awareness but the actual demonstration of spins is not required" by the FAA for the private pilot's license. However, Ms. Wyche said that she teaches her student pilots spin recovery.

"Unless you are proficient at reading the instruments, you shouldn't be flying at night," she said.

Jessup, a World War II U.S. Army Air Corps and Army Air Forces fighter, bomber, and transport pilot who taught Ms. Wyche to fly in the 1980s, said that a flight "can be legal and not necessarily safe.

"It's the same in a car," he said. "You can be driving within the legalities and not necessarily be safe."

Kennedy was "doing everything legal as far as I know," Jessup said. "You don't have any business flying at night unless you are instrument-qualified.

But even an instrument-rated pilot can "get in trouble over water with bad visibility and illusions," Jessup said. "Maybe you see a cloud deck and think it is a piece of land. And you get disoriented, and you get vertigo. If you don't really believe your instruments then, you've had it."

Kennedy, he noted, was "familiar with the area" over which he was flying and figured that he could make the flight safely.

Midland geologist-pilot Jack Edwards, who did nighttime instrument flying as a World War II naval aviator in the Pacific Theater, noted that Kennedy was flying into darkness, and there was "less than a quarter-moon that night. It was reportedly pretty hazy. That will obscure the horizon pretty much in the day over water.

"If you don't see the horizon, you don't know whether you are right-side up or not," Edwards said. "It was real dark and hazy, and off to his right, it was just bound to be a black hole out over the water. To his left, he probably had some lights because that is a pretty well-populated area."

Edwards said that when he first learned of Kennedy's missing airplane a week ago today, "My first thought was, and I think it's pretty much consensus, that he got vertigo, spatial disorientation. You don't know whether you are upside down, right-side up, in a dive or a climb.

"Whatever your senses tell you (in a state of vertigo), they're wrong," Edwards said. "If you are in clouds or standing in a pitch-dark room, you can't tell which way to go, what to do, or nothing."

In "instrument conditions" devoid of visual reference, "You depend on your gyro-horizon (artificial-horizon gauge)," Edward said. "You level your wings. You believe your instruments. Don't believe your senses. There's a tremendous conflict there because the seats of your pants will tell you one thing, and those instruments will tell you something else.

"Go with the instruments, level your wings, stabilize your heading with your gyro-compass, then control your airspeed with your stick or with your yoke. You've got to believe that gyro-horizon and that gyro-compass and your airspeed.

"Thank goodness for that golden rule: 'Get on those gauges, believe them, and stay on them,'" Edwards said. "Don't depend on your senses" lest the airplane go into a "fatal maneuver" and into what pilots call "the classic graveyard spin."

district and Richmond, claiming his rights to due process and freedom of speech were violated by punishment administered by Richmond and enforced by MISD.

For possessing two photos of Richmond's car parked on a public street outside a female teacher's house, Riggan was suspended for three days, put in an alternative education program for five days and ordered to write two letters of apology for "disrespect to an adult."

That lawsuit, presided over by U.S. District Judge Royal Furgeson, was expected to begin Tuesday. Furgeson granted Riggan's attorney Brian Carney a continuance, however, because of problems Carney had receiving information.

A new trial date has not been assigned but Carney deposed Richmond regarding that case Friday.

City looks at ways to keep YMCAs open

By Ian Heald

City representatives, headed by City Council member Jose Cuevas, are to meet with YMCA board chairman Randy Bailey Monday afternoon to discuss the future of the Northeast and Midland Drive facilities.

The YMCA has scheduled closure of the two facilities because of decreased memberships and an inability to bring in profits.

"If they're not interested in maintaining the facilities, then we want to know what they plan on doing with the buildings," said Deputy City Manager Rick Menchaca.

Bailey contends that "we're exploring any and all alternatives" in relation to the facilities.

Cuevas is spearheading an effort that he hopes will translate into a city purchase of the facilities or community-based financial support that would maintain them under YMCA direction.

"If the board wants to close it then that tells us we that we need to put together a plan to purchase the buildings," Cuevas said.

"The City Council has demonstrated a general interest of support but a commitment to purchase the facilities isn't forthcoming," Menchaca said. "We're currently conducting research into what the facilities would cost to run them."

If a sale was agreed to, Cuevas thinks "the city would incur the brunt of the cost. The city would have to use HUD (Housing and Urban Development Section) funds or block grants" to make the purchase.

"But, some corporate people, and private, have contacted us with ideas to address the issue," he said.

Those who support city sponsorship of the facilities think the neighborhoods where the YMCAs are located are prime for youth activities.

"There are a lot of kids in these areas," Menchaca said. "Everybody has a vested interest in their well-being. Drop-out rates and crime rates have been directly correlated to the level of youth participation within a given community."

If the city does assume control of the facilities, then a variety of programs could take form.

Monette Burke, assistant director of the Community Services Department, said the new facilities could open up additional youth development programs, aquatic programs, day care, city wellness programs and senior programs.

Ms. Burke thinks a cooperative agreement between the city and YMCA would provide the best opportunity for successful implementation of these programs.

China detains more members of popular sect

By John Leicester
Associated Press

■ Related story/9A

BEIJING — Police on Friday detained more members of a popular sect banned as a threat by China's leaders, and riot police took up positions to guard against further demonstrations.

The communist government, meanwhile, increased its public criticism of the Falun Gong meditation group and its leader.

Authorities took away 15 people who stood quietly outside the compound where President Jiang Zemin and other leaders live. The street outside the compound was the scene this week of three days of protests by hundreds of Falun Gong members over the arrests of dozens of sect leaders.

About 100 people were detained in nearby Beihai Park, sitting quietly on the ground surrounded by police. Hundreds of riot police were deployed throughout the capital to prevent further protests.

Police also took the unusual step of closing Tiananmen Square in the heart of Beijing early Friday and the area around the Great Hall of the People, where China's legislature meets. Both sites were later reopened to tourists.

Shocked by a large April protest by Falun Gong members outside party headquarters, the sect's degree of organization, and inroads it has made among Communist Party members and ordinary Chinese, the government banned the group Thursday and began a concerted campaign to vilify its teachings.

In Beijing's leafy Temple of the Sun Park, one of the places where middle-age, largely female members of the sect would meet to meditate and do their slow-motion exercises, a notice was posted announcing the ban.

Passers-by read the sign. Some giggled. Two plainclothes police watched, but there was no sign of Falun Gong practitioners.

The government declared Li Hongzhi, who founded the sect in 1992 and lives in New York, an "evil person," describing his teachings as a menace to society and his group a would-be political organization that dared to challenge Communist Party authority.

In outlawing the group, communist leaders demonstrated their fear of — and determination to crush — any organization that could rally people to defy the government at a time when discontent over layoffs, stagnating incomes and official corruption is mounting.

Li, revered as "Master Li" by his followers, warned China's leaders that outlawing his Falun Gong exercise and meditation group could backfire.

Making enemies of Falun Gong practitioners — estimated to be as many as 70 million in China — "would cause people to lose confidence in the government and its leadership," Li said in a statement on the group's Web site.

In his Internet statement, Li said Falun Gong was simply a type of "qigong" — traditional meditation and martial arts movements practiced daily by tens of millions of Chinese to channel unseen forces and improve health and spirit.

Practitioners say Falun Gong teaches good citizenship. Followers believe Li implants a falun — a "wheel of law" or miniature of the universe — into their bellies, where it spins constantly, absorbing and releasing energy.

China's entirely state-run media Friday stepped up its barrage of criticism of the group. The government also announced that civil servants were banned from practicing Falun Gong, along with members of the Communist Party and its Youth League.

Television broadcasts and newspaper articles accused the sect of misleading and abusing followers.

Reports claimed Falun Gong followers died after eschewing medicine, went mad, and committed murder or suicide — including one man who slit his stomach looking for his "wheel of law."

Italian woman seeks glory in the bullrings of Spain

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Raised on a diet of Hemingway and dreams, an Italian girl who ran away from home to become a bullfighter in Spain has worked her way up to junior matador — more through guts than skill.

She calls herself Eva Florencia, a show-biz name honoring her home town of Florence, but her parents know she's really Eva Bianchini.

Although it's a supremely macho world she wants to break into, the 20-year-old is undaunted — even by the recent retirement of Spain's top female matador, Cristina Sanchez, who said she was fed up with toreros who wouldn't fight alongside her.

While there are hundreds of male apprentices — or novilleros — hoping to advance to matador, the women only number in the dozens. Few will succeed, and of those trying, Eva is the only foreigner.

At 5-foot-7 and 120-pounds, she takes on 600-pound bulls, teasing and finessing them in the dangerous ballet she's come to love. Still, the animals are 2 or 3 years younger and 300 pounds lighter than the snorting hulks featured in top-rate bullrings in Madrid and Seville.

So far, Eva has fought only 15 bulls. But, she says, she's won lots of trophies — 22 ears and four tails — which are bullfighting's way of acknowledging a job well done.

Morocco's King Hassan dies from heart attack

RABAT, Morocco (AP) — King Hassan II, a Middle East peacemaker who ruled this North African nation for 38 years, died Friday. He was 70.

The health of the monarch has been fragile for some years. His successor will be his son, Crown Prince Sidi Mohamed, who announced the death on state television late Friday.

The monarch was hospitalized earlier in the day in Rabat, the capital, for an acute lung infection, according to a palace statement. The Crown Prince gave the cause of death as a heart attack.

"I announce to the Arab and Islamic nations and to the whole world the death of a great leader and a man of this world's great men," the crown prince said.

Television and radio stations stopped regular programming and broadcast readings from the Koran, something done only when a top official dies.

Hassan's death deprives the Middle East of an important peacemaker. His diplomacy helped bring about the 1979 peace treaty between Israel and Egypt and subsequent agreements between Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization, and with Jordan.

Hassan was friendly with the United States and has given counsel to every American president since John F. Kennedy.

An all-powerful monarch, Hassan is revered as a descendant of the Prophet Mohammed and has been an important unifying force in Morocco.

Moroccans like to say Hassan has "baraka," signifying that he had God on his side through a series of daring political maneuvers.

It was Hassan who in May 1995 mediated peace talks between Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres and PLO chief Yasser Arafat. Peres later told Israeli radio that Hassan's mediating role was "giving impetus to the process."

And a summit of the world's Muslim leaders hosted by the king in 1994 resulted in a public statement against Islamic extremism. The statement was one of the resolutions made at the December 1994 summit of the 52-nation Organization of the Islamic Conference, which brought together leaders of the Middle East, Europe and Asia.

In 1983, Hassan bluntly violated an Arab taboo, inviting hundreds of Jews of Moroccan origin, many from Israel, to a convention in Morocco.

The monarch took another of his greatest risks in the 1980s in inviting Peres to meet him in Morocco for secret talks seeking to end the Middle East deadlock.

Early in his reign, Hassan ignored advisers who warned of the risk involved in instituting the Arab and Islamic world's only genuine multiparty democracy.

He enjoyed a prestige and influence in the world far beyond the global importance of his Muslim nation of 25 million facing the Atlantic, the Mediterranean and the southern shoreline of the Straits of Gibraltar.

Hassan inherited the throne of Morocco when his father, King Mohamed V, died in 1961.

Almost immediately, he was plunged into a desert war with Morocco's newly-independent Arab neighbor, Algeria.

In his first spectacular initiative as king, he met Algeria's then president, Ahmed Ben Bella, in Bamako, the capital of neighboring Mali, and made sweeping concessions with which he won 12 years of peace in the Sahara.

But his own army grumbled at the abandonment of thousands of square miles of sand to Algeria. Some army leaders dreamed of a military dictatorship, and in July 1971, 2,000 men overran Hassan's birthday party in the ocean-front palace of Skhirat. Nearly 100 of the guests were killed.

Top general says army will protect Milosevic from ouster

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — A top Yugoslav army general warned Friday that the military will support President Slobodan Milosevic and would move to stop opposition attempts to unseat him.

Gen. Nebojsa Pavkovic, head of the 3rd Army Corps that fought in Kosovo, accused the opposition of trying to grab power by force.

"The Yugoslav army will ... give its unconditional support to the state institutions and their legally elected representatives, from the lowest officials to the president of the republic," said Pavkovic.

He said the opposition protests and petitions calling for Milosevic's ouster are leading to "civil war, and the army is against it."

Milosevic has tried in the past to use the military to protect his post, but the previous army chief, Gen. Momcilo Perisic, refused to side with him and tried to distance the military from politics.

Perisic, who was ousted last November, sharply criticized Milosevic's government in an interview published Thursday and called for it to be replaced.

Some fear army intervention could spark civil war in Serbia. There also has been speculation that Milosevic might trigger such a war to stay in power in the face of mounting popular anger over the moribund economy, international isolation and the crisis in Kosovo.

Dragan Tomic, Serbia's parliament speaker and a close Milosevic ally, sharply criticized Perisic on Friday, calling him a "traitor."

Meanwhile, thousands of leaflets calling for Milosevic's ouster fell Friday on downtown Belgrade in the first anti-government action by Serbia's university students in months.

"Resistance is the answer. There will be no other way," read leaflets thrown from buildings around Terazije Square in central Belgrade, the Yugoslav and Serbian capital. "This is not a system. This is a disease. Resistance!"

On the other side of the leaflets, which caused some traffic jams in the area as people stopped to read them, the students printed a clenched fist, the sign of their resistance group.

"The aim of this action is to convince the people that this regime must go," said Boris Karaicic, a student leader. "We hope that one day soon this regime indeed will leave."

Karaicic said his group plans similar actions in other Serbian towns during the next few days.

The action Friday was the first by university students in Belgrade since the end of NATO bombing last month and the start of almost daily opposition protests across Serbia.

Serbia's university students played a key role in the 1996-97 protests against an attempt by Milosevic to reverse opposition election victories in Serbia's major cities. The colorful protests gained much sympathy from Serbs, who generally do not trust opposition political parties.

Later Friday, more than 4,000 people chanted anti-government slogans at a rally called by the Alliance for Change, the main pro-democracy coalition. The rally was in the industrial town of Pancevo, just northeast of Belgrade.

200 pig farms closed in latest twist to Belgian food scare

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Belgium's new prime minister tried to allay fears of a new tainted-food crisis after the Health Ministry said Friday it would close 200 pig farms because of suspected dioxin contamination.

Following reports that contamination among pig farms was more widespread than expected, the Health Ministry said pork products with a fat content between 2 and 20 percent will be withdrawn from the market, extending a current ban on pork with more than 20 percent fat.

"This way the population will no longer be exposed to possible dioxin contamination," the ministry said in a statement. The wider ban applies to pork products from animals slaughtered between Jan. 15 and June 3.

However, the measure had not been formally adopted by the Cabinet, which met late Friday to consider the new restrictions.

The fresh scare comes as farmers are struggling to recover from the food crisis that erupted in May, when the government announced that dioxin had contaminated animal feed and ordered a wide range of foods pulled from stores.

Countries around the world banned Belgian products including eggs, poultry, meat and dairy goods.

"The dioxin crisis has struck again. This has hit us like a cold shower," said Jose Happart, farm minister in the southern Wallonia region.

Prime Minister Guy Verhofstadt sought to allay those fears Friday.

"It's not a new form of contamination and there's no new suspected suppliers," he told a news conference.

The measure was announced after reports surfaced that investigators had found toxin levels more than 50 times the permitted level at pig farms.

Government says scientist faked data on power lines

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A scientist whose 1992 study linking high-voltage power lines to cancer contributed to public fears was found to have faked his data and has left the Lawrence Berkeley National Laboratory, the government said Friday.

Richard P. Liburdy had claimed to have found a link between the electromagnetic fields around power lines and certain cellular changes in the body.

After a whistle-blower complained, the federal Office of Research Integrity investigated and concluded that Liburdy had committed scientific misconduct by tossing out data that did not support his conclusions, said the agency's director, Chris Pascal.

"The evidence demonstrates Liburdy knew his data manipulations were significant to the conclusions of the paper," the agency said.

Liburdy, a 51-year-old cellular biologist who lives in Tiburon, outside San Francisco, resigned his 15-year position in March after losing his funding, the San Francisco Chronicle said.

In May, he agreed to ask the scientific journals that published his work to retract three key graphs.

Liburdy, who had received $3.3 million in federal grants for his research, also agreed to a three-year ban on receiving federal funds.

However, in a letter in last month's issue of the journal Science, he denied doing anything wrong other than failing to explain his graphing procedures.

"My scientific conclusions stand as published," Liburdy wrote. "I admit no scientific wrongdoing. I could not afford a protracted legal battle with the ORI, and a settlement was reached by which I admit no liability."

Three independent scientists who evaluated the facts at Liburdy's request supported him, the Chronicle reported.

Liburdy did not respond Friday to a request for comment faxed to his home by The Associated Press.

The possibility that electromagnetic fields can cause childhood leukemia and other illnesses has raised fears among people living near high-tension power lines.

The theory had been raised well before Liburdy's study, but he found what was thought to be the first plausible biological explanation for such a connection. However, at least 20 subsequent studies failed to find any conclusive link of the sort he described.

Some statistical studies that looked at the rate of cancer among people living near power lines have indicated that it is more common among those exposed to electromagnetic fields.

But according to the National Institute of Environmental Health Science, virtually all of the laboratory studies of animals and humans "fail to support a causal relationship." At the same time, the agency has said that invisible fields created by power lines "cannot be recognized as entirely safe."

Liburdy's studies, published in the Annals of the New York Academy of Sciences and FEBS Letters, a publication of the Federation of European Biochemical Societies, tied electric and magnetic radiation to calcium signaling, a process responsible for a number of cellular functions, including cell division and the turning of genes on and off.

ORI examined Liburdy's raw data and found that in one graph, he had used only 7.1 percent of his data. The ORI also said he fabricated data.

"In contrast to the data shown in the figure, the full set of primary data does not show that exposure to low-strength electromagnetic fields results in an inhibition or in a lower level of calcium ions in the cells," the ORI reported.

Raymond Neutra, chief of California's Division of Environmental and Occupational Disease, said Liburdy's 1992 research was important, but the epidemiological studies that followed are more so.

Gore's canoe kept afloat by dam water

CORNISH, N.H. (AP) — When Vice President Al Gore paddled a canoe along the Connecticut River for a photo opportunity, he had some help staying afloat.

Utility officials, saying they were acting on a request by the Connecticut River Joint Commission, opened a dam and released about 4 billion gallons to raise the level of the river so Gore's canoe wouldn't get stuck in low water during a campaign visit Thursday. The request came after commission members and the Secret Service toured the site before Gore's visit.

The Washington Times quoted a state official who suggested that the presidential candidate received special treatment.

"They won't release water for the fish when we ask them to, but somehow they find themselves able to release it for a politician," said John Kassel, director of the Vermont Department of Natural Resources, according to the Times.

Conviction of Tyson executive reinstated

By Janelle Carter
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In a small victory for Independent Counsel Donald Smaltz, a federal appeals court reinstated the conviction of a Tyson Foods executive accused of providing illegal gifts to former Agriculture Secretary Mike Espy.

Friday's 2-1 ruling sends the case of Archie Schaffer III case back to the lower court for sentencing on charges he violated the Meat Inspection Act. A lower court had overturned the jury's guilty verdict last June on two counts, violations of the Meat Inspection Act and the federal gratuity statute. The appeals court left alone the gratuity acquittal.

The Meat Inspection Act, a charge that has a mandatory one year sentence, prohibits giving "money or other thing of value, with intent to influence" to a government official.

"While we agree with the district court's determination that the evidence cannot support a conviction for giving an unlawful gratuity, we find sufficient evidence in the record from which a reasonable juror could have concluded that Schaffer violated the Meat Inspection Act," the court wrote in the 26-page decision.

The ruling is a minor boost for prosecutor Smaltz, who unsuccessfully prosecuted Espy for accepting gifts from Tyson and other companies regulated by the Agriculture Department. A federal jury in December acquitted Espy of all charges.

For his part, Schaffer said, "I remain absolutely convinced that I am innocent of any offense. ... This matter has been long, drawn-out and difficult for a lot of people. I believe we will prevail in the end."

"We will pursue all further remedies available through the judicial system," said William H. Jeffress Jr., Schaffer's attorney.

In a dissenting opinion, U.S. Circuit Judge Karen LeCraft Henderson wrote: "I believe, like the district court, that the government failed to adduce evidence to support a finding of intent to influence discharge of a specific duty under the Meat Inspection Act."

U.S. District Judge James Robertson overturned Schaffer's convictions in September.

Schaffer, a company spokesman and governmental affairs director, was convicted of providing illegal gifts to Espy on two occasions: in January 1993, at President Clinton's inaugural dinner; and in May 1993, at a birthday party for company chairman Don Tyson in Russellville, Ark.

In his ruling, Robertson noted that Schaffer was indicted for trying to influence two proposed rules under the Meat Inspection Act. But the judge found "no evidence that Mr. Schaffer or anybody in Tyson Foods knew of or anticipated anything about" the proposed policy changes at the time of the events.

He also noted that once the policy changes were announced, there was no evidence that "Mr. Schaffer or Tyson Foods had any objection or opposition."

Another Tyson executive, lobbyist Jack Williams, was tried with Schaffer last year and convicted of lying to investigators. He has withdrawn his appeals.

Tyson Foods, based in Springdale, Ark., the nation's largest poultry producer, was just one company involved in the investigation of Espy. Prosecutors have said the company spent about $12,000 on Espy and his then-girlfriend, including tickets and air fare to a Dallas Cowboys football game and limousine rides.

Woodstock '99 gets rolling

ROME, N.Y. (AP) — More than 200,000 music fans streamed into town Friday for Woodstock '99, a three-day celebration of love and peace held at a former military base instead of the farm where the original antiwar festival took place 30 years ago.

James Brown opened the show, introduced as the "general of soul" as he looked out on giant hangars that used to house B-52 bombers. Also on the weekend bill were Limp Bizkit, Dave Matthews Band, Korn, Jewel and Sheryl Crow.

While original Woodstock announcer Wavy Gravy returned to urge fans to take care of each other, he was surrounded by reminders that it was a long way from 1969.

Skateboarders sailed up ramps in an "extreme sports" park, vendors sold hemp tacos and people complained that cell phone transmission lines were jammed.

By midday, the crowd was estimated at 220,000. Promoters planned for 250,000 but said they would keep selling tickets as long as people wanted to get in.

"It's 1999, the turn of the century, and this is going to be the biggest party of the century," said Shawn Hagen, who drove 27 hours with four friends from Monticello, Minn., to attend the concert.

Authorities reported few problems, but first aid workers were kept busy treating several hundred people woozy from the 90-degree heat. One woman was in labor in a first aid tent.

Naturalist found beheaded near stream in Yosemite

YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK, Calif. (AP) — A Yosemite naturalist was found beheaded along a stream near her home in a remote part of the park, and the FBI was searching a large area for clues Friday.

Rangers found the body of Joie Ruth Armstrong, 26, on Thursday a few hundred yards from the park housing she shared with two people who were away on business at the time.

She was found just a few miles from El Portal, the town where three sightseers were last seen alive in February before their bodies were found about a month later. No charges have been filed in those slayings, and an FBI task force and federal grand jury investigating that case have said they are confident that most of those responsible are behind bars on unrelated charges.

"We have absolutely no reason to believe there is a connection" between the two cases, said FBI agent James Maddock.

Authorities began searching after Ms. Armstrong was reported missing by a woman she was supposed to visit in Sausalito, just north of San Francisco. Ms. Armstrong's loaded car was found outside her quarters, ready for the trip.

Maddock said Friday "a large, very large" area was being carefully searched for clues, and a number of people were being questioned. The FBI is assisting in the investigation because the park is federal property.

Ms. Armstrong worked at the Yosemite Institute, a nonprofit group that runs education programs through a partnership with the park service.

"We have nothing but accolades for Joie," said John Carlstroem, executive director of the Headlands Institute, the Yosemite Institute's sister campus, his voice choking with emotion. "She was one of the finest naturalists and science teachers I ever met."

Carlstroem, who described her as "wiry, red-haired and full of enthusiasm," said she loved children and teaching, especially when she was "connecting young people with nature."

"There are going to be a lot of sad kids when they find out she's gone," he said.

Park spokesman Kendell Thompson said the last murder in the park he could remember was a dozen years ago, when a husband pushed his wife off a cliff. He said such incidents draw so much attention precisely because they are so rare, pointing out that the park averages about 4 million visitors a year.

"We get one incident in 12 years," said Suzette Prue, a coworker of Armstrong's who took a hike alone Friday. "I feel really safe here."

Crops dying from drought, water restrictions placed

BALTIMORE (AP) — Malcolm Goode Jr. is so discouraged he can't bear to look at his field of dead corn, shriveled from drought.

"I don't think it is going to turn around this year," said Goode, 46, who owns 500 acres in Maddox, Md. "The corn crop is just about shot."

A growing number of farmers who can only stand by and watch their crops die because of a drought that began last summer.

The worst conditions are in the mid-Atlantic and the interior Pacific Northwest. Drought conditions also exist in the Northeast and California.

The last time a dry spell continued this long in this region was November 1979 to April 1981.

Already, Pennsylvania has declared a drought emergency, which means mandatory restrictions on water use. In New Jersey, the governor has asked people to cut back. Areas of Virginia have been declared agriculture disaster areas. Maryland and Delaware have issued drought warnings, asking the public to conserve.

New Jersey farmer Bob Puskas said the last good rain was 3 inches in May.

"It is very devastating," said Puskas, who farms 1,500 acres in Somerset. "Our corn is pretty much a lost cause. Milk production is off by one-third. It is from the heat stress and there's no pasture left."

Reservoirs throughout the region are below normal and dropping. In eastern Pennsylvania, some wells are drying up.

Areas of Maryland and Virginia are running a 15-inch rain deficit over the past year, meaning rainfall is about 32 percent below normal.

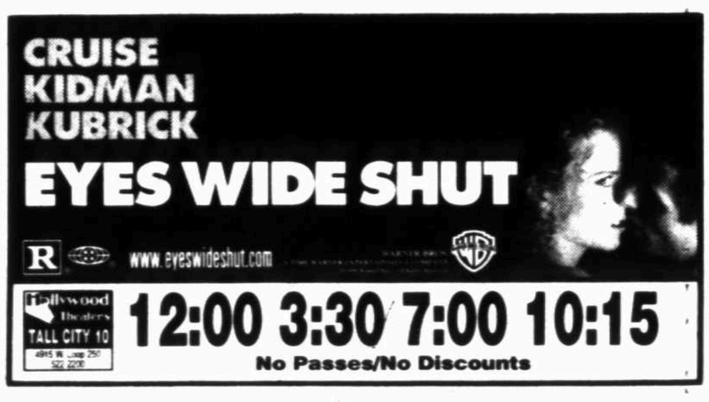

It would take a tropical storm to pull the region out of the drought, but those conditions probably wouldn't come until August or September.

In Maryland, the mayor of Myersville employed dowsers — people who search for water using divining rods — after the town spent $20,000 on a geologist and an engineer who both came up dry. Drillers found water Thursday where the dowsers said it would be, but a hydro-geologist said the flow was too little for a city.

In Philadelphia, city fountains have been turned off and sprinkler caps were removed from more than 100 fire hydrants used by children to keep cool.

Eleven counties in Virginia have asked to be declared disaster areas. About 500,000 fish were found dead Thursday in a tributary of the Pocomoke River — apparent victims of excessive heat, which can deplete water of oxygen.

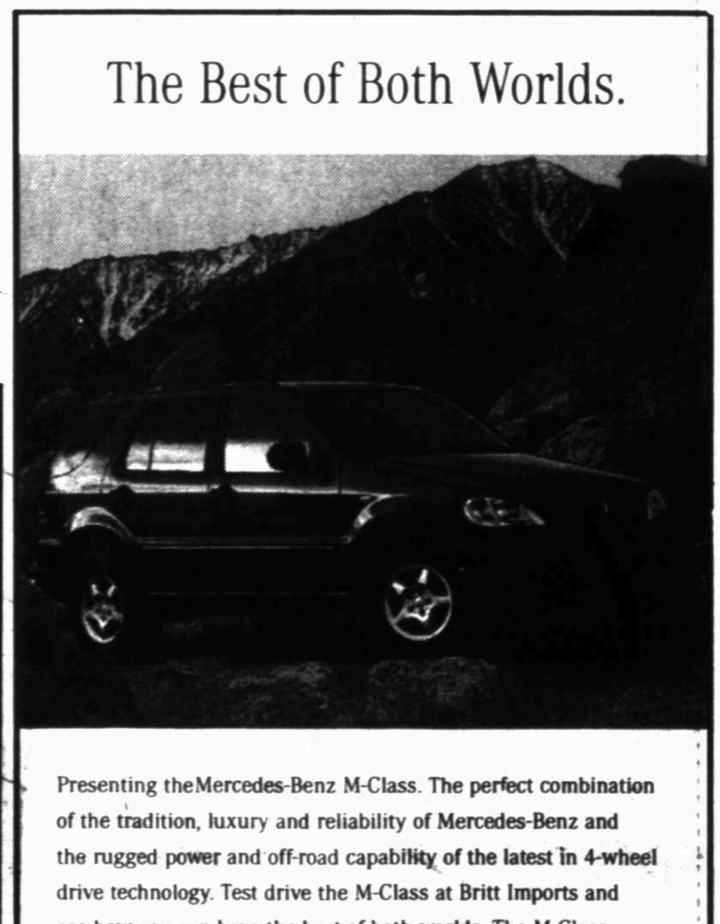

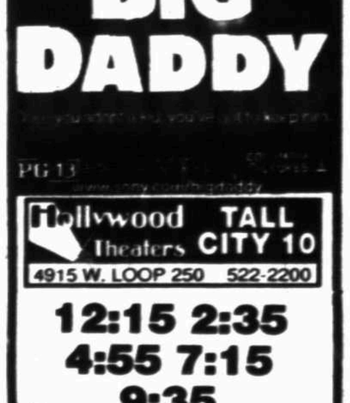

Spiritual leader rebuts Chinese propaganda campaign

By William Foreman
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Angered by a fierce Chinese campaign against him, the leader of a meditation group newly outlawed by China's communist rulers accused Beijing on Friday of trying to brainwash his followers.

The Chinese government has forced many detained followers to watch "fabricated" videotapes that claim the group's teachings encourage people to stop taking medicine or mutilate themselves, Li Hongzhi said in an interview at a supporter's apartment in New York City.

Despite Beijing's banning of his Falun Gong group this week, Li remained defiant and said he could not stop his followers from continuing to protest in several Chinese cities.

"I did not ask them to go" out into the streets, said Li, whose crisp blue suit, white shirt and tie made him look more like a businessman than a guru. "I don't have any control over them."

The 47-year-old former grain clerk left China last year for New York, saying he was under political pressure. His spiritual practice, which he had developed by 1992, involves a blend of Buddhism, Taoism, meditation and martial arts. His "students" are estimated to total 70 million.

He said he worried that the military might violently suppress the protests, as they did 10 years ago during Beijing's democracy demonstrations in Tiananmen Square. Busloads of people have been detained in the past three days in Beijing, where crowds have dwindled from hundreds of people to small groups.

Sitting in the modest apartment with walls decorated with a collage of snapshots of Li and diagrams of yoga-like Falun Gong exercises, Li calmly answered most questions with one- or two-sentence answers, showing little or no emotion.

He declined to discuss his thoughts about communism or other political issues, insisting his movement had nothing to do with politics and posed no threat to the government.

Li grew visibly agitated when asked to rebut recent allegations in China's state-run media that his teachings caused people to go insane, commit suicide or eschew medicine. One report claimed a man slit his stomach looking for his "wheel of law," or miniature of the universe mentioned throughout Li's writings.

Followers believe Li implants the wheels into their bellies, where it spins constantly, absorbing and releasing energy.

In an answer that lasted nearly five minutes, Li said he has never encouraged mentally unbalanced or severely ill people to give up medication or practice Falun Gong, which is too physically demanding for sick people.

"If they die, Falun Gong would be blamed," Li said. "But some people still want to practice."

Li joined the army at 18, and spent eight years working on a horse farm in northeastern China. Later, he was a trumpeter and a clerk at a government grain company.

What is known publicly about him gives few clues about how a junior high school graduate could in just a few years amass such a broad following.

"The things I learned are things you can't learn in a textbook," he said.

Beginning at a "young age," Li said he studied Falun Gong with a spiritual master. "Other people don't give much attention to spiritual cultivation. They go swimming or play ball in their free time," he said. "I spent my time practicing spiritual cultivation."

Falun Gong has been enormously popular, particularly among Li's own generation, which grew up in a spiritual void left by the Cultural Revolution and the materialistic era that has ensued.

Program that pays addicts for birth control going national

CHICAGO (AP) — A privately funded program making its way across the country pays $200 to drug-addicted women to get their tubes tied or use some other long-term means of birth control.

The California-based program has drawn the wrath of critics who call it short-sighted, racist and a source of drug money for users.

But Barbara Harris of Anaheim, Calif. — founder of CRACK, for Children Requiring a Caring Kommunity — says this is a response to a system that often fails to punish women who give birth to drug-addicted babies.

"I can't believe that these women are able to stop by the local hospital yearly, drop off a damaged baby and walk away," Ms. Harris, who has adopted four children born with cocaine in their systems, said Friday.

CRACK gets funding from private donations. Since 1994, Ms. Harris said, CRACK has paid $200 each to 57 California women who had given birth a total of 262 times.

Now the program is catching on in Chicago, Minneapolis, Fort Pierce, Fla., and Dallas.

Among the acceptable forms of long-term birth control are Norplant, which are capsules that are inserted under the skin in the upper arm, and the IUD, or intrauterinve device. Tube-tying is the most controversial method because it is not always reversible.

State Democratic chair criticizes Bush

By Troy Goodman
Associated Press

IRVING — The state's top Democratic Party official assailed Gov. George W. Bush Friday, saying he has dodged important issues such as national health care reform and tax cuts that hurt poor and working-class Americans.

"He never takes a stand on anything," said party chairwoman Molly Beth Malcolm in a speech before the Texas AFL-CIO. Ms. Malcolm called the Republican presidential hopeful "Governor Beat Around The Bush."

Meanwhile, Republican Party officials said state Democrats' complaints against Bush are overwrought and false.

Ms. Malcolm accused Bush of failing to stand up to a Senate Republican bill that features a watered-down version of the Democrats' health care reform plan, the so-called patient's bill of rights.

Ms. Malcolm said despite Texas' own stringent patient protection law, which the Legislature passed two years ago, current GOP congressional proposals would render those protections "wiped out."

"You need to know that George W. Bush, the self-proclaimed compassionate conservative, said he was comfortable with this bill," Ms. Malcolm told the crowd of about 200 state organized labor leaders. "Whose side are you on, governor?"

She also said Bush tried to fund a tax cut, which the Legislature passed this session, by cutting millions from pre-kindergarten and kindergarten programs.

"Those are just misleading statements," said Robert Black, spokesman for the state Republican Party. He said rather than taking money from education, Bush had been a key player in one of the largest increases in education funding in Texas history and had backed teacher pay raises that were passed into law.

"Ms. Malcolm is just playing word games, trying to spin things," Black said.

He said the health care laws Bush signed in 1997 have so strengthened patients' rights in the state that the protections have become a model for other state proposals.

Earlier this month, Bush signed a bill allowing Texas doctors to become the first in the nation to bargain collectively with health plans. A congressional committee has taken up a similar proposal, and doctors are pushing the issue in several other states.

Ms. Malcolm, who has been the Democratic Party chairwoman for a year and was a Republican several years ago, said Bush's refusal to take a stance proves he's not presidential leadership material and is doing a poor job as governor.

"We don't have 15 months for you to count your campaign contributions to see what your policy is going to be," she told the crowd Friday.

The conference was held for such internal state AFL-CIO business as the election of officers and setting of its agenda for the coming year.

State AFL-CIO spokesman Ed Sills said the group will make no formal political endorsements until January.

Compassionate conservatism: Political tonic or 'weasel words'?

WASHINGTON (AP) — George W. Bush's description of himself as a compassionate conservative is being ridiculed by liberals and, at the same time, annoying people whose conservatism comes plain and simple, with no adornment.

In that sense Bush has bridged the ideological divide — some on the left and the right alike say the phrase is nonsense.

But Bush is speaking to the great mass of voters in between. What they make of it will help determine whether he wins the Republican nomination and becomes president. The Texas governor says "I'll take my stand" on compassionate conservatism.

"Mushy," offers Sarandis Karathanasis, 27, working a baklava booth at a Concord, N.H., fair. "It's almost like what people want to hear — too much what people want to hear — a little corny."

Bush proposed Thursday to spend $8 billion in one year on tax credits and grants to encourage charitable giving and support an increased role by religious organizations in reducing poverty, welfare and crime. He would summon America's "armies of compassion."

A lot of people are baffled by compassionate conservatism. But it's early, and millions are at the beach or have their minds there.

"Conservatively compassionate?" mused Sharon Lyndon, 25, pausing to think on the campus of George Washington University in Washington. "I have no idea," she concluded, shrugging. "It sounds a little superficial."

Some scholars see the phrase as a pretty frame for a largely blank policy canvas. Others believe a mutation is going on in politics, a drift toward the center that has seen liberals abandon their ideological label and conservatives now starting to do the same.

Unqualified conservatism has become identified with unyielding Republican leadership in Congress, personified in the House by former speaker Newt Gingrich, Majority Whip Tom DeLay and Majority Leader Dick Armey, said Wayne Fields, a professor at Washington University who has studied presidential speechmaking.

"These are exterminators," he said. "Zealots don't believe in synthesis. That's not how George Bush built a career. He's saying, 'I'm not one of them.'"

Columbia University presidential historian Henry Graff thinks Americans are wearying of Madison Avenue-inspired catch phrases that seem to get emptier with time.

"I don't know how to implement compassionate conservatism," he said. "If there's a hurricane that wipes out Tampa, the government will send out aid. Presidents have all been compassionate, I think."

Clinton says a compassionate conservative is a polite Republican.

"It means, 'I like you. I do,'" he said mirthfully. "'And I'd like not to squander the surplus and, you know, save Social Security and Medicare for the next generation. ... But I just can't, and I feel terrible about it.'" Later he said he was kidding and people should lighten up.

Bush's GOP rivals see red when they hear the phrase. "Those are weasel words," Lamar Alexander said. "I think we need to say in plain words, 'I am a conservative.'"

"Conservatives ARE compassionate," Quayle said. Elizabeth Dole calls herself a "courageous conservative."

Doug Noah watches his tee shot during the Blowout Friday at Ranchland Hills Country Club.

Out-of-towners make good 1st impression at Ranchland Hills Country Club Blowout

By Stewart Doreen
Assistant Sports Editor

Golfers came in from all over to make the 1999 Blowout field one of the best in recent memory, and after Friday's first round, the Tall City's visitors were flexing some serious muscle.

Home-course and home-town advantage were not the order of the day at Ranchland Hills Country Club, because of the two four-man teams tied for first after the first round, only one player resides in Midland.

At 12-under-par 128 in the format, which counts the two lowest scores on each hole, are the teams of Dan Desilets, Marshall Morgan, Larry Nunez and Kelly Creagar and Chris Brown, Steve Wilkins, Ronald Koerth and Rick Preston.

Two teams full of Midland's best players are tied for third two shots back.

In the lead packs, only Brown is from Midland. Koerth and Wilkins are from Ozona, Ricky Preston is from Salado, Desilets and Morgan are from Kermit and Nunez and Creagar are from Odessa.

"I don't mind driving 60 miles to play this golf course," said Wilkins, who had five birdies and no bogeys on his round. "This tournament is a lot of fun and this is a neat track. It is fun to come here and play."

Both teams played like it.

Wilkins' foursome tore up the front nine, firing a 62.

"We had two birdies on (Nos.) 6, 8 and 9," Wilkins said. "We turned it up there."

The Desilets foursome had trouble putting together a string of holes but when it scored, it scored in bunches. On the back nine, the group scored multiple birdies on three holes (11, 14, 15) en route to a seven-under back nine.

"On the back nine, we doubled up on three holes. That helps your score," Desilets said. "Six-under on three holes helps."

Still in competitions like the Blowout, most people agree that a tournament can't be won on the first day. It just helps to go out strong.

"I told someone if we could shoot 10-under for the three days, 30(-under) for the three days, that would be a good score. We are two ahead of our expectations," Desilets said. "You plays as good as you can on the first day because there is not that much pressure. Play as good as you can and try not to shoot yourself in the foot.

"Saturday's round is the key. If you play well on Saturday, it sets up Sunday's (final) round."

The Wilkins' foursome also believes this, and for good reason. It has won the Blowout twice. Those wins came in 1978 and 1979 when all four players were playing college golf. Since then, the group finished third three years ago, but that has been its top finish in a long time, so they want to make the most of this opportunity.

"Tomorrow will be a big round," Wilkins said. "We have had a hard time teeing off at 8 a.m. Sometimes, we have had too much fun on Friday nights. We have to try to change that."

Longhorns relish high expectations

By Mike Finger
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS — Texas quarterback Major Applewhite has always been able to blend comfortably into the background, whether at a local supermarket or in the same backfield as a Heisman Trophy-winning tailback.

But Friday, the unassuming sophomore with the Opie Taylor looks arrived at Big 12 media day as one of the most recognizable and popular players in the conference.

And just like the rest of the Longhorns, Applewhite said he's fully enjoying his sudden rise to fame.

"I don't mind it when people recognize me in the grocery store," said Applewhite, who led Texas to eight wins as a starter last season. "I'd start to worry if they didn't, because that means we're not playing well."

The Longhorns' surprising 9-3 finish was one of the hottest topics at the media event, as reporters grilled Texas players and coaches about increased expectations and the loss of a strong senior class, including Heisman winner Ricky Williams.

Second-year coach Mack Brown said he realizes his team will be hard-pressed to match last year's success and the signing of the nation's top-ranked recruiting class, but explained he's still careful not to prepare himself for any disappointment.

"Some people say that the smart thing to do would be to make excuses and say that we don't expect to win every game," Brown said. "But instead of hiding from the pressure, we embrace it."

At last summer's media day, Brown tried to convince people he could win with a team that went 4-7 in 1997, and Applewhite was on campus merely trying to earn the Longhorns' second-string quarterback job.

A year later, both Brown and Applewhite were surrounded by the media for almost three hours, granting a multitude of interview requests while Texas officials scrambled to bring them glasses of water.

The excitement and expectations swirling around the Longhorns also are evident in Austin, where record-breaking ticket sales are taking place. A university spokesman said Texas already has sold more than 43,500 season tick-

Reporters surround Bubby Brister, the man charged with replacing John Elway as the Denver Broncos' quarterback. The Broncos opened training camp Friday in Greeley, Colo.

Broncos begin life after Elway

By Aaron J. Lopez
AP Sports Writer

GREELEY, Colo. — Are the Denver Broncos reluctant to face a future without John Elway? No way.

Tight end Shannon Sharpe, one of the retired quarterback's favorite targets, was so anxious to get to camp at Northern Colorado University that he got a speeding ticket.

It's easy to get pumped up for football when you've won the last two Super Bowls, and no one is conceding there won't be a third straight just because Bubby Brister, and not Elway, will be the guy throwing the ball.

"We definitely have to go on," Sharpe said. "I'm not going to sit here and try to kid anybody and say that we don't wish that he (Elway) was back, because we do.

"Bubby now has to prove that he can throw the foot-

THSCA ALL-STAR GAME

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Midland Lee offensive lineman Rex Richards, center, clears the way for running back Cedric Benson during a playoff game against South Grand Prairie in 1998. On Tuesday night in Fort Worth, Richards will play in the THSCA All-Star Football Game

All-Star Game has Rebel flavor

Richards eagerly awaits return to field

By Stewart Doreen
Assistant Sports Editor

FORT WORTH — There are a lot of reasons Rex Richards can't wait to put the pads on and play in the Southwestern Bell Texas High School Coaches Association All-Star Football Game.

Richards, an all-state offensive lineman, wants to compete with the best in the state. He wants to see what it is like playing a game weighing more than 300 pounds for the first time in his career. There is even some old business he wants to finish.

But most of all, he just wants to get back on the field. It has been seven months since he and the rest of the 1998 Lee football team put a 54-0 beating on San Antonio MacArthur to win the Class 5A Small School state title, and Richards can't wait to start hitting.

"I am missing football." Richards said.

This all-star game, which will be played Tuesday at Amon Carter Stadium on the campus of Texas Christian University, will on one hand close Richards' high school career, and on the other be the start of his new one.

Richards is about to start a career as a Texas Tech Red Raider, and he is pumped up about that.

"He has been working out really hard," Lee football coach Jon Parchman said. "He is probably in the best shape to play football that he has been in."

Richards has spent the summer in Lubbock, where he has stayed with Ryan Aycock, a Lubbock Coronado graduate and another member of Tech's incoming freshman class.

While in Lubbock, Richards has become a changed man, especially when it comes to the weight scales.

"I looked up and I was five pounds heavier. Then there was another five," said Richards, who has added 21 pounds to the 6-foot-5, 280-pound high school frame that battered 4-5A defensive lines and paved the way for 2,000-yard rusher Cedric Benson in Lee's postseason run.

"They (Tech coaches) told me my weight is fine. It was just working out and working hard," Richards said.

The weight will make Richards fit in well with the other Red Raider offensive linemen. According to Dave Campbell's Texas football, of the five Red Raiders who are No. 1 on the depth chart, four weigh more than 300 pounds. The other — former Odessa Permian standout Jason May— weighs 299.

"It hasn't been me sitting around and eating all summer," Richards said. "We have been working hard, six or seven hours a day.

"I will keep working hard. At Lee, we worked hard. I will never lose that hard work ethic we had at Lee."

This type of work ethic has turned Midland Lee into a factory of Division I linemen. Players like Jake Young and K.C. Jones went on to all-American status at the collegiate level, and more often than

Parchman accepts inconvenient honor

By Stewart Doreen
Assistant Sports Editor

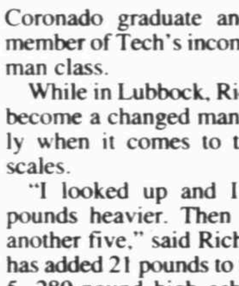

FORT WORTH — Sometimes, there are those inconveniences that you can deal with.

For example, Midland Lee head coach Jon Parchman has less than two weeks before his defending state champion Rebels hit the field for two-a-days. Knowing that, it is not exactly the best time for he and the Lee coaching staff to have to drop everything. But that is what they are going to do.

Parchman and the rest of the Lee coaching staff will coach the North All-Stars against the South in the Southwestern Bell Texas High School Coaches Association All-Star Football Game, which will take place Tuesday at Amon Carter Stadium on the campus of Texas Christian University.

Again, it is an inconvenience but something that Parchman, the 1998 Texas Sports Writers Association 5A Coach of the Year, can deal with. These opportunities don't come about every year — in Parchman's case, it is once a decade. In 1989, he was on the Lee staff when former Rebel coach Earl Miller was asked to coach the North team.

So yes, it is a big honor, but yes, there is the inconvenience factor.

Parchman

"It is a lot of work, a lot of work for this staff," said Parchman, who estimates spending two weeks evaluating videotape of the 34 players on the North roster. "Nobody is complaining about it, it is a great honor but it is work. I have talked to coaches who have done it before and they have said if you are fortunate to go to the playoffs, you look back at it and think, 'My gosh, we have been in football from June into December without even a break.' It takes its toll."

Joining Parchman on the sidelines are Lee assistants Kelvin Ratliff, Ronnie Reeger, Mike Meeks, Randy Josey, Randy Smith, Joel Gotcher and J.C. Gotcher. Lee trainer Hondo Schneider, student trainer Sarah Parchman and student managers Erica Stevenson and Jon Aaron House also make up the North staff.

The fact is the staff has been in Fort Worth since Thursday.

"From the time we play the game we will have about a week," Parchman said. "When we get done with the game we have to hurry on back and start our preparation for our coming two-a-days. We will not have a couple weeks to lay on the beach. We have to get back to the desert and go to work."

The Rebel coaching staff is just part of the West Texas influence on this all-star game. On the North roster is Lee lineman Rex Richards (who will play his college football at Texas Tech), Stanton defensive back Kyle Herm (Rice) and Andrews running back Shaud Williams (Tech).

Joining the West Texas stars are a pair of standout quarterbacks — maybe the state's most heralded prep signal callers:

Astros take two; A's deal Rogers

HOUSTON — A grand slam won the first game and another slam won the second.

More than five weeks later, Larry Dierker and the Houston Astros finally finished their suspended game against the San Diego Padres, winning 4-3 Friday night behind the grand slam Derek Bell hit June 13.

Mike Mieske's third career slam then broke a eighth-inning tie as Houston rallied past former-Astro Donne Wall 7-4 in the second game. Mike Hampton (13-3) pitched his third complete game of the season, allowing eight hits.

"I've been counting this win for about a month now," Dierker said after the first game.

The manager caused the suspension when he collapsed in the dugout from a seizure. He had brain surgery two days later to repair abnormal blood vessels and returned last week after the All-Star break.

"I had this one logged as a win, although I knew anything could happen," he said.

Billy Wagner pitched the ninth for his 24th save despite allowing solo homers to Phil Nevin and Ruben Rivera.

Shane Reynolds (11-7) got the victory without throwing a pitch Friday and Heath Murray got the loss without being present.

Reynolds allowed six hits in eight innings and struck out six when the game began last month.

■ Baseball News

"If anything more had happened, I might have had another seizure and Shane might have had one with me," Dierker said. "Billy went out at the beginning instead of the end. That's something he's not used to."

Murray (0-2), who allowed the grand slam, was scheduled to start for Triple-A Las Vegas on Friday.

Dierker was glad to get the suspended game over with.

"I don't say there is a sense of closure. That's too romantic," Dierker said. "But there is a finality to it. This doesn't give a different sense of accomplishment. It's just a game we were supposed to win and we won it."

Trevor Hoffman was facing Jeff Bagwell, the first hitter of the inning on June 13, when Dierker collapsed with a 1-0 count and started shaking violently in the Astros' dugout.

In the regularly scheduled game, Mieske's second homer of the season came off Wall (6-2) after Craig Biggio singled, Jeff Bagwell was intentionally walked and Richard Hidalgo reached on third baseman George Arias' fielding error. It was the third slam for the Astros this season.

Rangers 11, Devil Rays 8

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Todd Zeile hit a three-run homer, and Danny Kolb got his first major league victory as the Texas Rangers won their sixth straight, 11-8 over the Tampa Bay Devil Rays on Friday night.

The Rangers lost both outfielder Juan Gonzalez and starting pitcher Mike Morgan to injuries early in the game.

Texas, at 56-40, has its best record after 96 games. The Rangers, who have gone 8-1 despite homering in just three games since the All-Star break, homered four times.

Lee Stevens and Ivan Rodriguez added two-run homers and Rusty Greer hit a solo shot.

Gonzalez jammed his right wrist sliding into third base in the fourth inning and was taken out for precautionary X-rays.

Morgan left after two innings with a bruised right forearm after being hit by Bubba Trammell's line drive. X-rays were negative and Morgan is listed as day-to-day.

Rogers returns to New York

NEW YORK — Kenny Rogers is ready to give New York a second try, this time in the National League with the Mets.

Rogers, who washed out as a high-priced free agent with the New York Yankees, was acquired by the Mets from Oakland on Friday for two minor leaguers.

The Mets, returning from a 6-2 road trip just two games behind Atlanta in the NL East, sent outfielder Terrance Long and pitcher Leoner Vasquez to the A's for the 34-year-old left-hander.

Rogers is excited about the chance to erase some bad memories from his first stay in New York.

"I look forward to this challenge," he said. "I'm happy it worked out this way. It's a chance to go back to New York and pitch well. I have something to prove to myself more than anyone."

He said he had heard that other teams had been interested in acquiring him.

"I think it was Boston, New York, Cleveland," he said. "After all is said and done, I've always wanted to try the National League."

Rogers is in the final year of a $20 million, four-year deal that brought him to the Yankees as a free agent before the 1996 season. He was 12-8 that season with a 4.68 ERA but his pitching was spotty.

The next year he was 6-7, relegated to the bullpen and left off the postseason roster. He then was traded to Oakland for third baseman Scott Brosius with the Yankees agreeing to pay half his salary in 1998 and 1999.

Pirates trade Guillen

PITTSBURGH — The Pittsburgh Pirates, in desperate need of catchers, traded outfielder Jose Guillen and a minor league pitcher to the Tampa Bay Devil Rays on Friday for two minor league catchers.

In return for Guillen and right-handed pitcher Jeff Sparks, the Pirates pick up Joe Oliver and Humberto Cota. Oliver will join the Pirates in Montreal.

Enochs returns after long layoff; RockHounds lose

Staff Report

SHREVEPORT, La. — It wasn't the type of return Midland RockHounds pitcher Chris Enochs wanted but at least he was on the mound after eight weeks on the disabled list.

Enochs walked Carlos Mendoza on a 3-2 pitch with the bases loaded in the sixth inning for the eventual game winner as the Shreveport Captains handed the 'Hounds a 5-3 loss Friday.

The game saw the return of both Enochs (3-4) and starter Eric DuBose from the DL. DuBose started Friday's game but only lasted in the third inning as he was obviously kept on a very strict pitch count. DuBose exited on just 52 pitches.

Midland got on the board in the top of the first inning as Jeff DaVanon tripled and then scored when Eric Byrnes hit a chopper to third base.

The Captains responded in the bottom of the first as Guiseppe Chiaramonte singled home Chris Magruder.

The RockHounds scored two runs in the third when Adam Piatt had an RBI sacrifice fly and Willie Morales added an RBI double.

Once again the Captains had an answer in the bottom of the third when Juan Dilone hits a two-run double off Chris Gorrell to tie the game at 3-3.

Shreveport took the lead for good in with the bases-loaded walk in the sixth and added an insurance run in the seventh when Chiaramonte singled home Damon Minor, who reached with a triple.

Jake Estevez (4-1) picked up the win for the Captains, while Jason Davis earned his 15th save of the season.

As the 'Hounds saw two players come back from injuries, they saw starter Luis Vizcaino depart straight to the majors as he joins the 'Hounds parent club in the Oakland Athletics. In return, the 'Hounds get left hander Leo Vasquez in a trade which involved the A's sending pitcher Kenny Rogers to the New York Mets for two minor leaguers.

COACH: Rebel mentor directs All-Stars

(From 1B)

Stephenville's Kelan Luker (SMU) and Brownwood's Colby Freeman (Texas A&M).

However with some monstrous linemen, the game plan will start on the ground.

"We have got a couple lineman, including Rex Richards," Parchman said. "(Next to Rex,) we have got Derrick Dockery (6-7, 330) from Garland Lakeview Centennial and on the other side we will get Robbie Doan from Coppell who is 6-7, 295, and Derrick Long from Celina is 6-6, 317. We have got big offensive lineman, and that ought to tell you what we are going to do."

Parchman and his staff are going to put his running back corps, which includes Williams, one of the most prolific backs in Class 4A history, to work. It should be a far cry from the one-back, multiple wide receiver attack installed by Flower Mound Marcus coach Que Britton for last year's event.

"It will be West Texas style of football," Parchman said. "It is not a West Coast offense. It is West Coast with more sand on it."

A running offense might be a good way to go. Again, Parchman will be inconvenienced that he doesn't have a lot of time to put in an offense or defense. Parchman says the key here is to go with what you know and keep everything simple.

Parchman File

College: Graduated from Texas Tech. Received Masters degree from Sul Ross University.
Years in coaching: 28
Record at Lee: 41-8-1 in four seasons.
Overall head coaching record: 109-55-1 in 12 seasons at five schools.
State Championships: 1
Awards: State Coach of the Year by Texas Sports Writers Association and Fox Sports.
Coaching stops:

1973-74	Lubbock Roosevelt (JV)
1975	Dimmitt (assistant)
1976	Frenship (assistant)
1977-79	Frenship (head coach)
1980-82	Lubbock Coronado (defensive coordinator)
1983-84	Cisco (head coach)
1985-88	El Paso Socorro (head coach)
1989-92	Midland Lee (assistant)
1993-94	Llano (head coach)
1995-	Midland Lee (head coach)

"It is like you start from scratch and they start from scratch and you see what can happen in eight workouts," Parchman said. "I remembered how simple we had to keep everything (in 1989). You would say this would be a great play and that would be a great play. Then, you say how can you get this taught and that taught in eight workouts. You start simplifying blocking schemes and stuff like that. I hope I have learned from the last go-around. What we are going to do is keep everything basic."

One interesting note to this game as far as the coaches go is that this game will pit Parchman against Katy head coach Mike Johnston.

High school football fans will remember that Katy was supposed to play Lee in the state finals last season before the Tigers were ruled ineligible for the use of an ineligible player in a previous round.

Lee went on to demolish San Antonio MacArthur 54-0 in the finals.

Will Parchman be thinking about that? He says no.

"I don't think either one of us has time to get caught up in that too much," Parchman said. "With the limited time we have to work with those kids, you have to hit the ground running and hope you can put a team out there on that Tuesday evening that will look fairly good."

RICHARDS: Lineman wants to hit field

not, their college coaches always pointed to a work ethic they brought with them.

"The tradition of offensive linemen doesn't graduate," Parchman said. "I guess it perpetuates itself with each lineman who comes through and does well. More and more kids coming up are saying it is good to be a lineman. At a lot of places, it is the last choice (of many players) to be a lineman because they don't get their name in the paper very much. They don't get a tremendous amount of recognition on a weekly basis like some skilled players do. At Lee, it is a neat thing. It has been an asset."

"There have been role models at Lee," Richards said. "I want to be another guy who everyone talks about. I want to be a big name. I want to be looked at. I don't want it to be over in college."

Before the NFL calls, Richards has a college career to take care of, and he is ready to get started.

"It will be great to get the season started," Richards said.

And before his first round of two-a-days as a Red Raider, Richards gets to write that last chapter on his high school career. It should be a fun night. Richards says that he will line up on a number of occasions against Katy's Lance Redmon. It was Katy which was supposed to play Lee in the state title game before the UIL forced Katy to forfeit its spot in the final due to the use of an ineligible player in a previous round.

"I have seen him (Redmon) on film and I will be ready to wear him out," Richards said. "I wanted to play him months ago but it didn't happen. Now, I will get that chance."

BRONCOS: Denver must win with Brister

ball, that he can beat people. If Bubby can't throw the football, we're in trouble. He knows that. We know that. There's no sense in me trying to sugarcoat it, but I think Bubby can get the job done."

He did last season, guiding the Broncos to five victories when Elway was sidelined by injuries. Nobody expects Brister to put up Hall of Fame statistics, but there will be no shortage of pressure. A crowd of cameras and reporters greeted him as he arrived Friday.

"I think I can deal with it for a year or two and then let somebody else take over," Brister, 36, said. "I'm excited about it. I'm ready to do some talking with my body instead of my mouth."

So are his teammates, who throughout the day pulled to the curb outside the dorm in luxury sedans and shiny sport-utility trucks to unload quilts, pillows and video disc players.

While his former teammates prepared for training camp, Elway was vacationing with his family, far removed from the spotlight he held since 1983.

There was an Elway at camp, however.

"I don't think I'm filling any void, but it's different," said John Elway's father, Jack Elway, the team's director of pro scouting. "His time had to come eventually. It's here, and I'm sure he doesn't have any reservations that he had to change gears and go in another direction."

The quarterback's absence drew as much attention as his presence ever did.

"It's going to be different for everybody," coach Mike Shanahan said, "but his spirit is still here. How competitive John was and what he's meant to this organization, it's still in every player on this football team. Even though he's gone, his spirit's still within us."

Leaf needs shoulder surgery, could be out for '99 season

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Ryan Leaf's already rocky NFL career took another hit Friday when the San Diego Chargers announced that the second-year quarterback needs shoulder surgery and could miss the entire season.

Surgery was scheduled for Monday to repair a torn labrum in his right shoulder. Rehabilitation could take to three to four months, possibly all season, depending on the extent of the damage.

"It's tough," Leaf said. "I was just getting back to what I love to do. I was shocked. I didn't know it was that bad. I just thought it was a sprain or something."

Leaf injured his shoulder during voluntary workouts in June jumping on a fumble. Twenty minutes into the team's first training camp practice Friday, he complained of shoulder pain when throwing the ball deep. He was taken for MRI exam, which showed the shoulder damage.

Leaf did not undergo an MRI exam in June.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Saturday, July 24, 1999:

Let your imagination flow. Creativity surges in both work and love. You come up with solutions when there appear to be none. New beginnings are possible. Emphasize doing what you want and having more fun in your life. Listen to your inner voice. Give others plenty of space as well. If you are single, romance reigns. The question is: How many suitors can one person have? If attached, your relationship takes a hot turn. Let more passion into your life. SAGITTARIUS is fun to be with.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★★ "Expansive" is the word right now. Take a leap of faith. Follow another's suggestion. Excitement punctuates a friendship. You want everything right now, and why not? Bring friends together; pursue a fun, mutual pastime. Tonight: Make the most of the night and the mood!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★ You can shake your head as you attempt to maintain the status quo, though another seems bent on uproar. Don't fight the trends or attempt to dominate others. The only person you can control is you! Tonight: Dinner for two.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★★ You didn't realize you had so many admirers. Go in a different direction than you had planned. Greet an exotic new friend; you have a lot to learn from this person. Tonight: Opt for very different cuisine or entertainment.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★ Be careful with someone you believe to be a steadfast friend. This person could shake you down to your very bones. You are unable to make headway on a home project or at work because there is so much going on. Take a break from the mad pace. Tonight: Easy does it.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★★ Unexpected developments cause you to change your thoughts, if not your plans. Though you can be quite fixed at times, now is the time to be flexible. Flow with different situations. Broaden your circle of friends while the opportunity to meet new people is present. Tonight: Enjoy life.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★ The pressure on you to get things done is coming from yourself. Stop demanding so much from yourself. Take some leisure time at home. Get plenty of R & R. Understand what you need to do. Life is meant for living and enjoying, especially during the weekends! Tonight: Barbecue.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★★ If you go with the flow, you won't be able to complain about boredom. Life proves to be exciting and dynamic. If single, you might be surprised at a romantic opportunity. If attached, a loved one spices up the moment, the day and your life. Tonight: Out and about.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★ Deal with money matters; get to the bottom of what is happening with your budget. Before you commit to any other expenditures, consider your domestic life. A new addition or paint job may be just what the house needs. Use care before deciding. Tonight: Indulging.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★★ You naturally draw in the right people as you pull the social wild card. News could be wild and out of control, but you might not care. Follow a whim; live in the moment. Use your magnetism to get what you want. Tonight: Keep grinning.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★ Be mellow. Take time to do some reflecting. Right now, you might feel like your financial life is a carousel, but you could actually tumble off if you aren't careful. Slow down and keep everything under control. Tonight: Please yourself right now.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★★ Unpredictability suits you. What you desire drops into your lap. Be carefree and spontaneous. Your instincts are good. Hook up with friends and take that day trip. Tonight: Follow that impulsive side!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★ Be direct when dealing with others who really want you to bring them together. You can see a different side of an important person in your life. Consider how you might have been boxing him into a corner. Tonight: Enjoy the limelight.

Berry: Hollywood isn't ready for black leading lady

LOS ANGELES — Halle Berry says Hollywood isn't ready for a black leading lady.

The actress came to that conclusion after starring in the upcoming HBO movie "Introducing Dorothy Dandridge," about the first black woman nominated for an Academy Award as best actress.

"For the last six months, I have not been able to find a project that can even compare to the role that I've just been able to play, so that's how I'm sure there's no place for a black leading lady right now," she said.

Berry, whose credits include "Bulworth" and "The Flintstones," also served as an executive producer for the first time on the HBO movie.

"Producing always seemed so scary to me, you have to make something happen," she said. "Now that I've done it, I realize that producers don't even know what they're doing. There's no formula, you just have to have passion to do it."

MILL VALLEY, Calif. — The Grateful Dead's Bob Weir has given up bachelorhood at 51.

Weir married Natasha Muenter, a former teacher, on July 15 at the couple's Mill Valley home.

"It was a happy day for the Grateful Dead family," said band publicist Dennis McNally. "At long last, the man who single-handedly was entrusted by the Dead to uphold rock 'n' roll's reputation for comely young maidens has finally gotten married."

Weir wore a Scottish kilt and the 31-year-old bride wore an antique white gown for the ceremony, which was performed by a Tibetan monk as Weir held the couple's 1 1/2-year-old daughter, Shala Monet.

About 40 guests, included actor Peter Coyote, attended the outdoor wedding.

LAS VEGAS — Celebrities attending the opening of the first Madame Tussaud wax museum in the United States found themselves seeing double.

"I think it's a marvelous piece of work. It's uncanny," singer Neil Sedaka said Thursday as he stood next to his wax figure at the $20 million Madame Tussaud's Celebrity Encounter.

The museum is housed in the $1.5 billion Venetian resort and features figures of more than 100 celebrities, including Elton John, Cher, Mel Gibson, Babe Ruth and Judy Garland.

A second museum by the London-based company is under construction in New York's Times Square, with opening set for the summer of 2000.

LONDON — The guitar Beatle George Harrison played on a London rooftop during the band's final performance 30 years ago is expected to fetch more than $320,000 at an auction Aug. 19.

"It is incredibly important. It is the one Beatles guitar to have come up for such a long time," said Sarah Allen, a spokeswoman for the auction house Bonhams.

The custom-made rosewood Fender Telecaster was commissioned by classic rock guitar maker Leo Fender as a gift to Harrison in 1968.

Harrison used it in recording the Beatles' "Let It Be" album and film.

OLYMPIA, Wash. — Deciding whether to hobnob with President Clinton or coach the next generation of soccer players was not a hard choice for World Cup soccer champion Michele Akers.

The 34-year-old eschewed the post-victory celebrations of the U.S. women's championship team, including a trip to the White House, to work in a summer soccer camp. On Thursday, about 400 young soccer players showed their appreciation with wild cheers.

She was emotional and surprised by the large and eager crowd.

"I expected maybe three people," she said later.

The Washington state native said the past year has been an emotional roller coaster of victories and losses and battling her personal challenges, including the chronic fatigue syndrome that leaves her feeling like she has the flu every day.

"It's been a tough year and a tough career," she told the crowd. "I've been on the U.S. team 14 years and not all of it has been easy. I've been beat up a bit."

Akers credited her strong Christian faith, her family, coaches and fans for sustaining her.

Armstrong prepares for win

Associated Press

FUTUROSCOPE, France — Coasting from wine country to cognac country to a theme park, Lance Armstrong could be forgiven for thinking the party had already started.

But the 27-year-old Texan needs to stay upright on his bike for two more days before he can pop open the champagne.

Barring a mistimed flat tire or a bad fall, Armstrong will cap his remarkable comeback from cancer with a Tour de France victory Sunday on the Champs-Elysees in Paris.

He moved a step closer with Friday's 18th stage, won by Italy's Gianpaolo Mondini. Staying safely in the pack, Armstrong came in 31st and didn't lose a second of his lead of 6 minutes, 15 seconds.

"The tactic is to protect the yellow jersey from danger," said Johan Bruyneel, director of Armstrong's U.S. Postal Service team. "We're in an ideal situation, but we have to be careful there isn't an accident."

"We've had the perfect scenario play out here," he said. "I couldn't have made it up myself."

And the scenario couldn't be more promising for Saturday's time trial, Armstrong's specialty. He won the race's other two time trials and is heavily favored in the last one.

His exploits have brought out a larger contingent of American fans. Penny Zim of Peoria, Ill., is in France on a cycling trip and likes what is happening to her sport.

"When you have a huge spread on cycling in the hometown paper, well, that's progress," she said.

French fans are a lot more discouraged. Their countrymen haven't won a stage on this Tour. The last time the French were shut out was in 1926.

Frenchman Jean-Cyril Robin came close Friday with a second-place finish, and Alexandre Vinokourov of Kazakstan was third.

In the overall standings, Spain's Fernando Escartin is second, followed by Alex Zulle of Switzerland at 7:28 behind.

The 117-mile stage began in Jonzac and finished in Futuroscope, a futuristic science fiction park in central France. The riders passed from Bordeaux's wine country into cognac country. "Cognac Loves Armstrong," read a banner in the town's main street.

In yet another labor protest along the route, workers from Cognac, angry at the multinational corporations they say are making huge profits off them, briefly disrupted the start of the race.

But the Cognac protesters were not entirely confrontational. They handed cups of brandy to drivers passing ahead of the cyclists — in full view of smiling gendarmes.

On Thursday, a labor protest by firemen caused a momentary ruckus.

The stage began with an early break by five riders, including Frenchmen Frederic Bessy and Christophe Mengin. The group shrank and grew throughout the stage, and with 15 miles to go, 13 riders were in front by just more than two minutes.

One of five Frenchmen in the group, national champion Francois Simon, made a valiant attempt toward the end but was outraced by Mondini, who attacked with two miles to go and went unchallenged.

BLOWOUT: Whiteside misses 10 holes

(From 1B)

The championship flight begins at 8:30 a.m. today. The leaders will tee off first.

BETTER LATE THAN NEVER: The team of Jon Christian, Jeff Moses, Tim Kohn and Steve Whiteside came into the Blowout as a tournament favorite. Christian and Moses had teamed earlier this month to win the Green Tree Jamboree and Kohn won the stroke play championship at Midland Country Club. Whiteside is a three-time Midland city champion.

However, a problem at work forced Whiteside to join his partners late — 10 holes late to be exact. It still remains to be seen if his arrival was too late. The group shot two-over on the front side but finished eight-under over the last seven holes to end their score at minus-6 (134). They are six strokes back of the leaders.

GETTING IN ONE MORE ROUND: There were a few familiar faces from the high school athletic programs around the city. Among those who are playing at RHCC and who you will see throughout the athletic season are Midland High football coach David Browning, Midland Christian football coach Greg McClendon, MC baseball coach Gordon Awtry and new MC girls basketball coach Dub Huckabee. For those keeping track, Huckabee's team shot 130, Browning's 134, McClendon's 144 and Awtry's 166.

ets, almost 4,000 more than the previous high.

"You can see it just walking around campus," linebacker Anthony Hicks said. "People can't wait for the season to get started."

For now, the Longhorns will have to wait until Aug. 28, when they open their schedule against North Carolina State in the Black Coaches Association Football Classic.

Brown said junior running back Hodges Mitchell probably will serve as Williams' replacement at the start of the season, although redshirt freshman Victor Ike will continue to push for playing time.

Brown said he's prepared for the scrutiny of that decision, as well as every other move he makes in what could be one of the most pivotal transitions in the history of the Texas football program.

"This probably wouldn't have been a good job for me 10 years ago because of the pressure," Brown said. "If I sat around and thought about the pressure, I'd probably throw up."

Brisky fires ace, leads Deere

Associated Press

COAL VALLEY, Ill — Mike Brisky parlayed the fourth hole-in-one of his PGA Tour career into a three-stroke lead after Friday's weather-interrupted second round of the John Deere Classic.

Brisky, a sixth-year touring pro, aced the 161-yard, par-3 eighth hole with a 7-iron enroute to an 8-under-par 62 and, at 12-under 128, held a three-shot lead over Brett Quigley, J. L. Lewis and Robert Damron, who shared the first-round lead with Joe Ogilvie and Kenny Perry.

Quigley carded a 66 Friday, Lewis shot a 65 and Damron finished with a 67. Quigley, Brisky and Lewis are 143rd, 151st and 155th, respectively, on the money list.

Friday's round was suspended by thunder, lightning and heavy rain for 1 hour, 43 minutes, then was halted when two weather systems were reportedly converging on the area late in the afternoon. Thirty-one players still on the course had to return Saturday to complete their rounds before the cut could be made.

Among those still on the course was Brian Henninger, who birdied the seventh hole just prior play being suspended, to go to 11-under.

Two tied for 1st-round lead of LPGA tourney

HOWLAND, Ohio — Marta Figueras-Dotti and Jackie Gallagher-Smith each shot a 6-under-par 66s Friday to tie for the first-round lead of the LPGA Giant Eagle Classic.

Eight players each were at 67 and 68 and defending champion Se Ri Pak was in a gang of 17 at 3-under 69.

Figueras-Dotti and Gallagher-Smith played similar rounds, each with birdies on Nos. 3, 5, 9, 17 and 18. Figueras-Dotti bogeyed the 384-yard, par-4 second hole, but made up for it by making birdie on Nos. 4 and 6.

■ Golf Roundup

The co-leaders had early tee-times, and morning starts seemed to produce better scores as afternoon temperatures surpassed 90 degrees on the 6,308-yard, par-72 course Avalon Lakes Golf Course.

Hale Irwin's 64 leads Burnet Classic

COON RAPIDS, Minn. — Hale Irwin birdied five of the first six holes and tied a course record with a 8-under-par 64 Friday to take a one-stroke lead in the opening round of the Senior PGA Tour's Burnet Classic.

Jim Colbert and David Graham, each seeking their first victories of the year, had season-low rounds of 65 that featured seven birdies and no bogeys.

Irwin, who has won four of his last seven senior tournaments, also had a bogey-free round in becoming the fifth player to post a 64 in the seven-year history of the event at Bunker Hills golf course.

Irwin set the tournament record of 17-under in winning here in 1997 and was third at 9-under last year when the tournament was shortened to 36 holes because of rain.

Promise Keeper group alive in West Texas, will stage rally

By Jimmy Patterson
Staff writer

ODESSA — Nationally-known Christian speaker Dr. Gary Rosberg will appear at a rally for West Texas Men of Integrity Thursday at Barn G of the Ector County Coliseum.

West Texas Men of Integrity is an outgrowth of the Promise Keeper's organization and includes almost 100 members in Midland-Odessa. Rosberg, an author and speaker who has been affiliated with James Dobson's Focus on the Family, will, at his speech, do just that: focus on the family.

"We felt having him here would be good for West Texas," said Larry Potter, a lay worker and member at Odessa's Emmanuel Baptist Church. "He's excellent with fathers. He speaks to them and makes them stronger. He speaks to husbands to love their wives better.

"In today's society, if we want stronger homes then we need stronger husbands and fathers. If we want stronger cities, we need to have stronger men. If we want a stronger country, then we need to have stronger men."

Potter admitted that the influence of the nationally-based Promise Keepers organization has flamed out with media reports of financial difficulties, but noted that the organization has produced many leaders who continue to thrive on a smaller scale.

■ Gary Rosberg will appear at 7 p.m. Thursday at Barn G of the Ector County Coliseum.

"We have heard a lot of negativty (regarding Promise Keepers)," Potter said. "But they're reorganizing. They have broken ground for a lot of other organizations to come about, including West Texas Men of Integrity. A lot of Promise Keepers' former employees are CEOs for the different smaller groups."

Media negativity didn't come about, Potter said, until the organization ran into financial difficulties.

"What's amazing is there are a lot of guys still supporting Promise Keeper financially," Potter said. "When you put on large-scale events — 16 probably this year alone — at places like the Alamo Dome and other closed-dome stadiums, and others at large football fields and smaller stadiums, and when you put them on free, you've done a lot with your income.

"What's really encouraging is that there were more men saved last year than any other year before with Promise Keepers."

West Texas Men of Integrity was started in September 1998.

"We felt that God was working in West Texas," Potter said. "We saw him working and we decided to just join him.

"What's really neat about this group is that it's not about any one church or denomination. It's about a group of people who are there to glorify Jesus."

Whose Islam is it anyway?

Harvard religion professor hopes to uveil a hidden Islam for women

By Julia Lieblich
AP Religion Writer

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — It was the 27th day of Ramadan in Alexandria, Egypt. Leila Ahmed was 6 or 7 when she followed her grandmother up the steps to the roof, the old woman's long black robe and veil blowing in the breeze.

Her grandmother always wore black, mourning a son lost long ago. But this evening was for celebrating, she told her. In Islam's holiest month, this was the Night of Glory when the gates between heaven and Earth opened and God might send the angels.

The little girl sat for hours, scanning the sky for signs.

"The angels didn't exactly come," she says now, sipping tea in a Cambridge, Mass., hotel. "But it was so wondrous to sit there waiting at my grandmother's side."

Prayer in the mosque is central to the lives of most Muslim men. Women like Ahmed's mother and grandmother rarely went to the mosque, she says, but they were as true to the spirit of Islam as any imam.

Now, newly appointed as the first women's studies professor at Harvard Divinity School, 59-year-old Ahmed hopes to unveil a hidden Islam, a woman's Islam, as part of her work on women in world religions.

"For women, being in tune and aware of the Catholic parishes welcome 2 new faces to Midland

Men and women of the cloth have a great number of responsibilities and duties that sometimes go beyond what one person is capable of doing. The burden of some of those responsibilities will be eased in two Midland church.

Rebecca McIlwain, from Odessa, is the new pastoral assistant at St. Stephen's Catholic Church and Deacon Odie Saldivar, from outside of Lamesa, will serve as deacon at Our Lady of San Juan.

Saldivar said deacons do a great deal for the Catholic communities by freeing up priests. In fact, the priest at Our Lady of San Juan is currently out of town and Saldivar "pinch hitting," until he gets back.

"I can do communion services, blessing, baptisms, marriages, graveside services and minister to people," Saldivar said. "I have not got into to it yet, but I used to minister in person, especially to young people. I love what I am doing. I really enjoy the people here they are warm and faithful."

Having an active deacon has allowed Our Lady of San Juan to become involved in a number of projects. Currently, Saldivar will work as associate director of a new school for deacons that is scheduled to begin soon. The school will have its office based in Midland but will hold class in San Angelo.

Ms. McIlwain's position is a bit more unorthodox than a deacon. She will work as the Pastoral Assistant for St. Stephen's Church. Her duties are what an associate pastor would do, short of ordained duties.

"This job was created because of the shortage of priests in the diocese," Ms. McIlwain said. "I improve worship, oversee staff, the youth minister, the children's ministry and the RCIA program (Right of Christian Initiation for Adults.)"

Although an uncommon position, Ms. McIlwain said that her church community has accepted her and what she is doing.

"As a woman lay person in the Catholic church it is clear in what I can and cannot do," Ms. McIlwain said. "Everyone knows what I am doing and has been very supportive. I have been in professional ministry for 11 years, so this is not a new thing for me or for people to see me doing."

Paul Pressler tells his story (conservatively speaking)

By Richard Vara
Houston Chronicle

HOUSTON — Retired Texas appellate Judge Herman Paul Pressler III is very comfortable being both revered and reviled.

To many Southern Baptists, Pressler is the heroic architect and leader of the "conservative resurgence" that brought the 15.7 million-member denomination to its historical, evangelical, biblical roots.

To others, he is a crafty denominational politician who launched a divisive movement that has led to Southern Baptist Convention fracturing.

"For me, (leading the conservative wing) was the worst thing that could have happened to me professionally and for my own welfare," the 69-year-old Pressler said recently in the spacious, sun-splashed living room of his southwest Houston home.

Paul Pressler, left, said leading the conservative wing of the Southern Baptist Convention, "was the worst thing that could have happened to me professionally and for my own welfare."

His health and family life suffered as he crisscrossed the nation, primarily at his own expense, urging pastors and laity to rally around biblical inerrancy, the theological view that the Bible is completely true.

It cost him friends in the legal profession and in the denomination, he said. His son was critically ill. He sacrificed runs for a Texas Supreme Court seat to devote himself to the convention cause.

But would he do it again?

"Yes," he replied emphatically.

Pressler has written his personal account of the resurgence in the newly released "A Hill on Which to Die" (Broadman & Holman Publishers, $29.99). He titled the 362-page book after a frequently asked question from a fellow conservative leader, the Rev. Adrian Rogers of Tennessee. "Is this a hill on which to die?" was Rogers' way of determining whether an issue was important, Pressler said.

Firmly anchoring the convention to biblical inerrancy was the hill on which conservatives were willing to risk everything, said Pressler, a member of Houston's First Baptist Church. He said he wrote the book to explain the nature of the controversy

The Good Book: I Corinthians

(Pt. 46 of 66)

Overview:

Written by Paul to the church in the Greek city of Corinth, this letter provides a vivid picture into the life of the early church. Paul addresses various divisions that have occurred in the life of the church as a result of disagreement over practices and teachings. Paul also offers pastoral guidance to the Corinthians on issues of pagan practices, communion, worship and the resurrection. This epistle contains some of Paul's most popular writings such as the teaching of the cross in Ch. 1, the hymn on love in Ch. 13 and the discourse on resurrection in Ch. 15.

Theme passage:

1:20-25 "Where is the one who is wise? Where is the scribe? Where is the debater of this age? Has not God made foolish the wisdom of this world? For since, in the wisdom of God, the world did not know God through wisdom, God decided, through the foolishness of our proclamation, to save those who believe. For Jews demand signs and Greeks desire wisdom but we proclaim Christ crucified, a stumbling block to Jews and foolishness to Gentiles, but to those who are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God. For God's foolishness is wiser than human wisdom, and God's weakness is stronger than human strength."

VINCENT KITUKU

'Rejects': What' is their hope?

'Rejects' is the title given to students who have gone amok and killed their peers. When I heard "rejects" used by Talk Show hosts, columnists, politicians and the common man following the Columbine School incident I found myself wondering, "What is the hope of the "social rejects?"

Kituku

Before the intrusion of western cultures in Africa, some African communities had their own "rejects," too. Those suspected to be witches were excommunicated to some distant lands. Lazy people were not respected and held no social status. Some were rejected for their inability to bear boys or any child.

The coming of missionaries gave the African "rejects" identity and dignity. They were accepted in the churches. Since they belonged to the churches, they identified themselves as Christians. They also were the first ones to learn the European education and ways of life, thus favored by the changing economic climate.

"Rejects" of earlier generations were different. Joseph was a "reject" because of his dreams that his brothers thought were preposterous and the love his father had for him (Genesis Ch.37-45). His brothers tried to kill him, but decided selling him into slavery was a lesser harm. The plan of God, however, was different. The "reject" years later helped his "rejectors" and all his father's house survive drastic famine. He told his brothers their rejection was God's plan so that he could save lives (Genesis 45:7).

In many cultures, folks suffering from some illnesses were excommunicated from their communities. In Jesus' time, those suffering from leprosy were excluded from public places. These "rejects" found a cure for their physical and spiritual infirmities from the Master.

For one reason or another, and from time to time, social structures have rendered some people less value while elevating others to higher values. Our generation is not the first to have "rejects." However, it is the first to suffer from students' hands of those who feel rejected. Rejected adults "Go Postal" when a fired or disgruntled employee kills his boss and/or co-workers.

What's the hope for a young person who feels society does not value his or her existence, a fact affirmed when he or she is referred to as a "reject"? What's the hope of the young generation that is exposed and fascinated by Hollywood's violence and sexual fantasies? What is the hope of modern "rejects" when they learn right and wrong have no distinct difference?

These "rejects" are also "rejectors." They have "rejected" everyone and themselves. So we are all "rejects" depending on whose point of view. In the book, "The Burdens," John Ruganda presents a well-to-do family whose fortunes change and circumstances relegate them to a "Ghetto" like life. With time the husband starts to think if it were not for his wife, life would be better. The wife viewed the hus-

ISLAM: Many women had a low opinion of clerics at one time

wonder of life was part of what Islam was," Ahmed says. "It was not the ritualistic things one reads about, or the official, Islam. It was about what sense you make of your life and how aware you were of other people and the stars and the rhythms of existence."

Those rhythms are central to her most recent book, "A Border Passage: From Cairo to America - A Woman's Journey" (Farrar, Straus and Giroux). In this memoir of identity across cultures, Ahmed looks back at a childhood immersed in a woman's Islam: the long hours in her grandmother's receiving room, where no men entered and children were privy to private conversations and pointed, if affectionate, imitations of pompous men.

Many women had a low opinion of clerics, Ahmed says, and men were not considered necessary intermediaries in the realm of the spirit.

"We grew up understanding that nothing came between you and God," she says.

Ahmed learned about religion by watching. "The messages were hidden messages: attitudes, posture, a glance of approval," she says. "It's the lived version of Islam that's passed down from generation just as surely as the textual tradition."

Her mother saw herself as a religious woman, but without the formal trappings.

She always quoted one verse as summing up everything Islam meant: "The person who kills one being kills all of humanity, and the person who gives life to one being gives life to all humanity."

Her mother went so far as to prohibit her sons from serving as combatants in any of the wars that wracked the Middle East. She could not live, she said, with knowing that she had given birth to a man responsible for the death of another mother's son.

Later, Ahmed would learn of another Islam preached among men in the mosque, which she describes as more authoritarian and sometimes violent. "But for me Islam was a pacifist, gentle tradition," she says.

Only when she began teaching women's studies at the University of Massachusetts did Ahmed confront the prevailing images of Islam in the West. Her non-Muslim colleagues seemed to have only one subject on their minds: female circumcision. And Ahmed found herself continually explaining that it was a custom that predated Islam, a point she reiterated in her earlier book, "Women and Gender in Islam."

She was no apologist for violence committed in the name of Islam nor the repression of women in any tradition. But she was distressed to see her religion viewed through a single lens.

"I had to address the issue of prejudice about Islam as much as sexism within Islam," she says. "I was really stunned at how unaware American feminists were of what Islam was and any connection between Islam and Christianity and Judaism. It was as if it was a religion of some wild savages.

"If you want to see Islam as violent you can find a violent Islamic history legitimated," she says. "You can also find a completely pacifist tradition. The debate within Islam is a mirror of what is going on in Christianity, Judaism, Hinduism. Whose tradition is valorized?"

Or: Whose Islam is it anyway?

It's a question Ahmed will address in her women's studies classes at Harvard tracing the development of feminist thought on religion, courses that will treat women's testimony with the same respect as religious texts.

"I want to find ways to bring what is ordinarily left out of academic discourse, and makes up most of our lives, into recognized space," she says. "It's knowledge my grandmother and mother passed onto me that is as key as any knowledge I acquired in the academy."

Orthodox interpreters of the Koran would likely dismiss such knowledge, says Judith Tucker, director of the Arab studies program at Georgetown University. "They think lived experience is irrelevant, and that a good Muslim is trying to find the meaning of the text," she says.

Still, Tucker says, more scholars are recognizing the importance of such experience in Islam, particularly anthropologists who study how oral tradition is passed down from generation to generation, grandmother to granddaughter.

Ahmed looks back fondly on her days in her grandmother's receiving room, a woman's space she has never been able to recreate in America. And she remembers evenings on the roof, particularly the night of the year when heaven and earth opened, and an old woman and young girl sat gazing at the stars.

PRESSLER: Former judge thought SBC leaders would fix problems and his role in it, believing that both the denominational and the secular press have not always accurately reported the struggle. He is donating book proceeds to charity.

Pressler, Rogers and Paige Patterson, now president of the national convention and president of Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary in North Carolina, were the major shapers of the resurgence, said Bill Leonard, dean of Wake Forest University's Divinity School. Leonard, a historian and moderate leader, said the three, especially Pressler, were keenly tuned to the conservative religious, social and political currents that characterized the 1980s.

"He represented right-wing sentiments beyond the convention and inside it," said Leonard, who has not yet read Pressler's book.

Rogers and Patterson could not be reached for comment on the book. But in a book jacket endorsement, Rogers said, "No one can tell the story better than Paul Pressler. Southern Baptists owe an incredible debt to this man."

Pressler set out to organize denominational conservatives to elect one of their own as president in 1979 only to get the attention of the national convention's moderate leadership.

"We really began looking for parity," Pressler said. The convention's agencies and six seminaries were perceived by conservatives as moderate bastions espousing liberal biblical views. Conservatives felt they were considered backward fundamentalists and shut out of convention appointments by the moderates.

"I thought at that point (1979) that if we did win, the (convention) bureaucracy would recognize that we had a point and would cooperate," he said. "They would add some conservatives to the seminary faculties and that would be all there was to it."

Pressler details in his book how he became concerned about the theological direction of the convention as a 16-year-old student at prestigious Phillips Exeter Academy and later Princeton University.

The liberal biblical views of Northeastern Baptists were in stark contrast to his own views, he writes. The Bible was considered a human work and not divine revelation. Biblical miracles, the virgin birth, the resurrection were questioned if not discounted, Pressler notes.

It was eye-opening for the young Houston native.

Pressler learned his conservative biblical views at South Main Baptist Church. He accepted Jesus Christ as his personal savior when he was 10. His maternal lineage includes a former president of the Baptist General Convention of Texas and Baptist pastors in Texas, Virginia and South Carolina.

After a stint as a U.S. Navy officer, he enrolled at the University of Texas Law School in 1954 and found that Baptist churches in Austin also were teaching what he considered liberal biblical views. "I didn't think we had problems in the convention until then," Pressler said.

But Pressler thought the problems would eventually be corrected by convention leaders. In the meantime, the sixth-generation lawyer was elected to the Texas House as a Democrat. (He switched to the Republican Party in 1988.) He then joined the firm of Vinson and Elkins and was assigned to Chicago. He returned to Houston in 1960.

In 1961, a convention controversy erupted over a book by professor Ralph Elliott of Midwestern Baptist Theological Seminary that questioned the accuracy of Genesis, the first book of the Bible, which describes the creation of the world and humanity. Pressler became increasingly incensed not only about Elliott's book but also about the lack of any corrective action from convention leaders.

"If there is a God and that God loves man, he is going to reveal himself," Pressler said. "If he is God, he can reveal himself accurately. If you can't rely on an accurate revelation from God, you have nothing you can rely on."

But Pressler did hear from other like-minded Southern Baptist leaders and groups. In March 1967, he and his wife, Nancy, met with then-seminary student Patterson and his wife, Dorothy. Moderates have long regarded the meeting as the beginning of a conservative plot to win the convention. But Pressler denies that. "The conversation was between four individuals who had a mutual interest in winning people for our Lord Jesus Christ," he writes.

In 1975, Pressler — by then a state district judge — learned from the late Rev. William Powell, leader of a conservative group named the Baptist Faith and Message Fellowship, how the SBC presidency could control the convention: The president appoints a committee that, in turn, recommends trustees for appointment to trustee boards for agencies and seminaries. Conservative appointments would assure that agencies and seminaries would reflect that viewpoint.

It was one of the messages that Pressler brought to pastors and laity in numerous meetings across the convention. Pressler and Patterson were able to bring together prominent pastors such as the Revs. W.A. Criswell of Dallas, John Bisagno of Houston and Rogers and harness the support of lay people concerned about modern biblical scholarship.

Leonard credits the conservatives' success to focusing solely on biblical belief. "They made it a yes or no question," Leonard said. "Either you believed the Bible from cover to cover or you don't."

The resurgence kicked off at the 1979 annual meeting, which was held in Houston.

"Nobody expected (conservatives) to win," Pressler recalled. Rogers' unexpected victory brought what Pressler describes as vitriolic attacks on himself, Patterson and other leaders, attacks that continued throughout the 1980s.

"The denominational press and everybody cranked up to call us everything but children of God," Pressler said. The attacks on him, his beliefs and his family along with attacks on other conservative leaders led Pressler and others to assume a "winner takes all" attitude, he said.

"It took three or four years, but we stopped thinking about parity," he said. "We realized it was not possible to work with (moderates.)"

The 1985 annual meeting in Dallas, which brought out more than 45,000 messengers, was the turning point of the battle, Pressler said. Conservatives were able to win with a Georgia-based candidate, the Rev. Charles Stanley, against the Rev. Winfred Moore of Texas by a vote of 24,453 to 19,795. The huge attendance was indicative of the intensity of the struggle. Six years earlier, only 12,000 delegates attended the annual event. This summer, 11,000 attended.

Conservative leaders have won all but one SBC presidency since 1985. Moderates no longer attend national SBC meetings.

Despite the battle for control of the denomination, it has grown to the largest Protestant denomination in the United States with more than 40,000 churches.

But conservative control has come at a price, Leonard said.

Conservative control of seminaries has spawned more than 10 new seminaries, including Baylor University's Truett Baptist Theological Seminary.

The threat of conservative control has prompted many universities and colleges, including Baylor and Samford University in Alabama, to move away from state conventions.

Both Texas and Virginia have seen moderate-conservative splits, with conservatives forming their own conventions. Texas, firmly under moderate control, is slowly distancing itself from the national convention, Leonard said.

Leonard said the fracturing is not solely because of conservative control. He points out that a new generation has arrived that is not loyal to denominations and is more concerned about local church matters than national convention affairs.

Pressler points out that only about 15 colleges out of 50 have left state conventions. He also notes that enrollment has not been impacted at seminaries by the establishment of the new divinity schools.

But he is convinced the best lies ahead for the denomination. "The storm has passed and the Southern Baptist Convention has weathered the tumult," he writes. "We shall move into the 21st century stronger than ever."

KITUKU: No rejects in eyes of God

(From 1C)

band as the cause of her miseries. Their son knew if his sister was never born, he would have a great life without having to share a bed and get urinated on. The sister hated him for his nagging.

Their fiasco worsens when the mother kills her husband. She was imprisoned and the children are send to orphanage.

So long as there are "rejects," no one is safe. We become each others burden. The scary part is that modern day "rejects" are armed.

There are no rejects in the eyes of God. We are all His children. Christ Jesus died for these "rejects" the same way he died for you and I. We need to reach out with open minds and listen to others. Let's put ourselves into their shoes.

No end in sight for revival

By Bill Kaczor
Associated Press

PENSACOLA, Fla. — The century's longest-running charismatic revival is still going strong four years after it opened its doors — undeterred by defections, questions about its financial accounting and criticism of its spiritual practices, which include shouting, shaking and falling to the floor, "slain in the spirit."

Thousands of people pack the so-called Pensacola Outpouring, which started at Brownsville Assembly of God on Father's Day 1995. As long as they do, the revival will be in business, say the ministers who began the movement.

"When they stop coming, then that'll be a sign from God to ... do other things," said the Rev. Steve Hill, an evangelist who began the revival with Brownsville's pastor, the Rev. John Kilpatrick.

Crowds fill the 2,000-seat church and overflow into another building where services are shown on a huge video screen. The revival runs four nights a week, with Hill preaching at two of the services.

It also is being taken on the road, and its presence on religious television stations across the nation is growing. The revival has led to the creation of a school where 1,700 students train as ministers and missionaries. The goal is for a million people to make professions of faith by Jan. 1, 2001, Hill said.

In longevity, Brownsville has surpassed the three-year Azusa Street Revival in Los Angeles that began in 1906 and boosted the growth of the Pentecostal movement.

Brownsville's faithful exhibit physical manifestations similar to Azusa Street's. People jump up and down, their hands raised, as a choir and musicians sing and play contemporary Christian tunes. Some shake uncontrollably, fall "slain in the spirit" or speak in tongues.

"A rock concert in robes," the New York Times once called Brownsville. It also has been compared to the Jesus movement of the late 1960s and early '70s, when hippies began following Christ and college students were holding revivals.

"It's just an old-fashioned camp meeting," Hill said.

Critics such as the Rev. G. Richard Fisher, a Baptist minister from Bricktown, N.J., contend such "weird and crazy" goings on put emotion before reason and are contrary to orderly worship dictated by the Bible.

"This is a feel-good culture. If you make them feel good they think something is happening," said Fisher, a board member of Personal Freedom Outreach, a nonprofit association created to educate Christians about aberrational and false teachings.

Hill responded: "A physical manifestation is just how someone responds to the presence of God touching them. It doesn't make any difference to me if somebody falls down. I want to see them when they stand up, living for God."

Hill declined to comment on former Brownsville church member Vicky Conroy's claim she had been told to fake manifestations. She is among hundreds who have left the church because they disagree with various aspects of the revival.

While acknowledging departures, Kilpatrick said the church has grown to about 5,000 members from 2,000.

"When God breaks out in a major way like this, people are going to come (who are) desperate," Kilpatrick said. "There's a lot of people who don't want that type of people in their churches. They don't want the demon-possessed coming. They don't want the drug addicts, the prostitutes."

In 1997, Hank Hanegraaff, president of the Christian Research Institute in Southern California and host of the "Bible Answer Man" radio program, criticized Brownsville and its manifestations on CNN's "Larry King Live."

Kilpatrick's response: that God would bring Hanegraaff down if he continued his criticism. Kilpatrick later apologized.

Brownsville's financial practices have also brought criticism. The revival appeals for contributions, and separate ministries established by Hill, Kilpatrick and Michael Brown, president of the Brownsville Revival School of Ministry, sell books, videos and other revival-related items.

An investigation two years ago by the Pensacola News Journal found the revival had pumped millions into their coffers with little or no accountability and without paying sales tax on the items sold.

Since the News Journal reports, sales taxes are being paid, and two of the ministries, Hill's Together in the Harvest and Kilpatrick's Feast of Fire, have joined the Evangelical Council for Financial Accountability, a watchdog group formed by Billy Graham and others. Revival leaders blamed state revenue officials for giving them conflicting information on whether sales tax should be paid.

Fisher and other critics contend that Brownsville's traveling revivals, the Awake America crusade, are just another way to make money. Hill denies it, citing high costs for travel, leasing stadiums and other expenses.

Amarillo church is fulfillment of dream for Vietnamese immigrants

By Kimberly Burk
Associated Press

AMARILLO — The dedication of Our Lady of Vietnam Catholic Church was a feast for the soul and the senses. Parish members pulled out all the cultural stops to praise God for the church building they have waited for since 1975.

Bernard Cardinal Law, archbishop of Boston, was welcomed to the church grounds on Sunday with firecrackers, a dragon dance and a balloon launch. Liturgical dancing by adolescent girls clad in traditional costumes of pink and gold was a highlight of the dedication Mass.

After the ceremony, parishioners and guests gathered beneath the shade of a tent, where they were treated to a stage show and heaping plates of green salad, egg rolls, battered fish and shrimp fried rice.

"You have done a great work," Law told the overflow crowd in the church's newly remodeled building at 2001 N. Grand St. "As beautiful as is this building, however, of far greater beauty are your lives of faith and hope and love."

Law, who is top-ranking in seniority among the 384 American bishops, dedicated the building with prayers, the sprinkling of Holy Water and the burning of incense as choir members sang in Vietnamese and Latin.

"Here may the poor find justice; the victims of oppression, true freedom," Law prayed as he stood before a congregation of immigrants with much to celebrate on Independence Day.

"In the dedication of this church, we must remember the history of the Vietnamese martyrs, of the church in Vietnam which continues to suffer restrictions on its freedom," Law said. "So many of you came to this country at great personal peril."

Vietnamese who came to Amarillo beginning in the 1970s were "escaping from the darkness that had descended on Vietnam," said Thanh Hoang, parish council president. "It was not an easy beginning. Today we have reached a high point."

Hoang asked that all who worship in the new building "will be a faithful witness and messenger of God's love."

Bishop John Yanta of the Diocese of Amarillo closed the dedicatory service by announcing that the parish's debt to the diocese has been forgiven.

Yanta said about 10 days ago he decided to cancel two-thirds of the nearly $33,000 the parish had borrowed to help complete purchase of the former Christ Lutheran Church building. But "God was not happy with what I did," Yanta said. "The Holy Spirit was angry with me, and even his eminence (Law) was scolding me this morning."

So after consulting with Law, Yanta said, he decided to wipe out all the parish's debt to the diocese.

"Effective June 30, this beautiful parish of our Lady of Vietnam owes nothing to the Diocese of Amarillo," Yanta said amid enthusiastic applause.

Church pastor the Rev. Polycarp Nguyen Duc Thuan said he was happy to hear the debt had been canceled, because he remembered it as being more like $53,000.

"God has blessed you so much, and you are such a blessing to the diocese," Law said. "I plead with you to be an active participant in the life of this diocese. You have had your debt forgiven. I hope it will encourage you to lead in generosity all the other parishes of this diocese."

Parishioners had met for several years in the basement of the old Alamo Catholic High School while raising funds for their own building. The church had been a "quasi-parish," but was dedicated Sunday as a full-fledged "personal parish," which means it has no geographical boundaries but rather is open to all Vietnamese members in the diocese "to help them preserve their language and customs," Yanta said.

"Now we have a building that we can call a church, and we became a parish," member Anh Tien Bui said. "It's a great feeling. It's a great, great honor to have him (Law) here today."

Law's relationship with Vietnamese immigrants dates back to his days as bishop of the Springfield / Cape Girardeau Missouri Diocese. When Our Lady of the Ozark Seminary in Carthage, Mo., closed, then-Bishop Law invited and sponsored the Vietnamese order of the Mother Co-Redemptrix to take over the empty property. Duc Thuan was associated with Law during those years.

Hutterites focus on work of today with little concern for year 2000

By Becky Bohrer
Associated Press

EDGELEY, N.D. — At Willowbank Colony, folks don't pay much attention to the approaching millennium. There's too much work to do.

A crop must be tended. An order of wooden trusses has to be hauled out. Livestock must be fed.

A distraction like the arrival of the year 2000 is of little concern to Dan Wipf, a spiritual leader of the Hutterite colony for 29 years.

"It'll just be another day, another hour, another minute," said Wipf as he rushed from his home late one morning to the on-site truss company where he works.

Wipf, a short, bearded man, also dismissed forecasts that the so-called Y2K computer glitch could have catastrophic consequences, a phenomenon that some in other religious groups have seen as signaling the end of the world.

"God does not want us to know when that will happen, so why speculate?" said Wipf.

Outward preparations for the end times aren't being made at the colony. There's no need.

The 90 or so Hutterites who live southeast of Edgeley, population 680, are self-sufficient. They drink the milk from dairy cows among the 100 head of cattle, raise 100,000 turkeys each year, use eggs from their chickens, and farm about 2,000 acres of corn, soybeans and wheat, plus garden crops.

They built the colony — the long barns and garages, a church and school, a dining hall and laundry, a lumber business and identical three-apartment homes.

Hutterites are Anabaptists who trace their roots to the 16th century Protestant Reformation and take their name from Jacob Hutter, an Austrian religious reformer who was burned at the stake in 1536. They arrived in North America from Germany in the 1870s and number about 25,000, mainly in Minnesota and the Dakotas.

The Hutterite religion is based on communal life. A colony provides its members with food, clothing, shelter and medical care, and all eat at a common dining hall. The colony owns all property. Community life, including farming, is inseparable from religious belief, Hutterites say.

Hutterites speak a German dialect, reserving English for dealings with others.

Those relationships have improved. For the most part, Hutterites are no longer viewed as extremist or threatening and, after many years, are being accepted as part of the larger community.

"They're good for their word," said Clint Hoggarth, a salesman at the local farm implement dealership. "They're good people to deal with."

Pam Schrader agrees. The Hutterites often come into her Edgeley cafe. "They are very polite, very reasonable," she said. "You don't hear complaints."

The commune resembles a small-town neighborhood. Trees grow in generous clusters, kids ride their bikes on paved sidewalks, and an underground sprinkler system waters the grass.

Women and girls wear ankle-skimming dresses they've sewn and head coverings that Wipf says are "the mark of a true Christian." Women spend most of the day preparing large meals they serve to the men in the dining hall. Women and men eat separately.

The interior of each home is the same: basic furnishings and cabinetry made by the Hutterites, and perhaps a toaster and refrigerator.

But the Hutterites do not live strictly off the land. Their communal income is primarily from their on-site hardware store and truss company, Golden Rule Lumber and Willowbank Truss. The trusses are sold through contractors to customers across the country.

Wipf has a fax machine and desktop computer in his office and a laptop and two-way radio at home. Internet access for a select few is in the works. A pool of vehicles is available. There are delivery trucks for the trusses, plus tractors and a new combine.

At Wipf's home, which he shares with his wife, Mary Ann, and their son and his family, a stack of Bibles sits in the living room, and Wipf leads nightly church services and reads Scriptures daily.

Spirituality is central to colony life. A chaste lifestyle means no card games, photographs, jewelry or makeup. Smoking or swearing could lead to expulsion.

Rarely do Hutterites leave the colony, Wipf said. And rarely do newcomers join.

Hutterites pool their money. They get allowances for trips, but no pay for their work.

Work begins at age 10. Children are assigned to the dairy barns, fields, truss company, gardens or turkeys and chickens. They adopt the trade that a five-member governing board believes they do best. Their formal schooling ends after eighth grade.

The Edgeley Public School District provides two teachers and an aide for the colony's 17 students. In addition to their schooling in English, they have two hours a day of German studies taught by a Hutterite.

Hutterites can go to college, though most don't, Wipf said, adding that he and others taught themselves their vocations.

The group has evolved this century, Wipf said, adding, "You have to change. You can't always be the same." Women, for example, no longer milk the cows by hand. They now have milking machines.

Unchanged and unaffected by public perceptions is the Hutterites' faith, Wipf said.

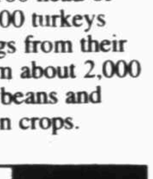

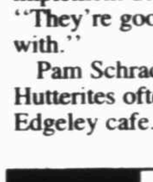

"Let people say what they want. This is our way of life," he said. "As long as the people here are sincere about it, that way of life won't fade."

Midland women attend Lutheran conference

by Jimmy Patterson
Staff writer

Midlanders Shannon Burks, Denise Burns and Mina Fitting were among those in attendance over the July 4 weekend at "Let Freedom Ring," the triennial meeting of the Lutheran Women's Missionary League conducted this year at the Minneapolis Convention Center.

At the gathering, convention delegates approved the disbursement of more than $1 million to global mission projects, money the women had raised during the past two years through mite boxes and other activities.

The LWML has a membership of more than 200,000 and is the official women's auxiliary of the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod. For more than 50 years, the LWML has encouraged and equipped women to live out Christian lives in active mission ministries and to financially support global mission projects.

"The two things that came out most to me is the freedom that we have as a country and the freedom that we have in our Savior," said Burks, who is the president of the local LWML Convention. "This is the last convention of the millennium so it was very uplifting because we think about it as being our last one and we think about freedom of country and with our God."

Burns was the local delegate; Fitting is on the quarterly LWML magazine staff.

Funding included over $76,000 earmarked for assistance to the Ysleta Lutheran Mission in El Paso, and the Lutheran Synod of Mexico for its work in Zaragoza, Mexico.

Other global mission programs funded include:

$104,000 to fund a program for at-risk children based at Trinity First Lutheran School in Minneapolis;

$100,000 to support two missionaries and to print religious literature for the formerly Communist country of Kyrgyzstan;

$100,000 to expand urban ministries in the United States;

$100,000 to implement and develop the Jewish Ministry Training Center in St. Louis;

$100,000 in scholarships to enable inner-city children to attend Lutheran elementary schools;

$100,000 in start-up funding for new international student ministries on North American college and university campuses;

The remaining $275,000 went to a variety of efforts in Burma, China, Laos, North Korea, Russia, West Africa, Vietnam, and Russia and to college age missionaries, and leadership and training programs.

Chrysler Town & Country Limited becomes the ultimate mini-van.

BY BOB PLUNKETT

NEW YORK, N.Y. -- An unconventional limousine stopped at the curb of a Manhattan hotel and a passenger climbed through the right-side sliding door and slipped laterally into one of two back-seat buckets on the second of three rows.

Settling in for a traffic-bound trek to the airport, this rider immediately noted a profusion of plush interior elements in the vehicle's expansive cabin.

Perforated leather, chamois soft and shaded in a subtle taupe tone with decorative suede inserts, draped every seat.

Armrests on either side of the high-back buckets folded down for additional comfort, and individual controls for overhead lighting as well as vents of the climate system were located within easy reach.

Seats rose to chair height, allowing erect posture unlike the slinky sofa of a conventional limo. Because of the elevated position, I had a commanding view along the avenue through multiple tall tinted windows.

The passing street scene seemed like a silent movie, though, because all of the grating noise of Manhattan's urban congestion -- a blaring taxi horn, the mufflerless delivery truck revving up, rap-rap-rap of a sidewalk jackhammer -- faded behind layers of sound-deadening insulation, door metal and window glass.

And New York's finest potholes failed to upset the smooth ride quality, as front suspension elements dampened each jolt and prevented it from jiggling seat occupants.

Climbing a ramp from East 57th Street to the Queensboro Bridge, the driver accelerated and I felt shoulders pushed into my seat from the force of this power play.

Several lane-changing maneuvers on the bridge then demonstrated that this was no point-'er-straight land yacht. Instead, it responded with a nimble hip-flicking hula which indicated that curves won't trick it.

Then, after a quick zip to speed on the Queens-Brooklyn Expressway, we reached LaGuardia's air terminal and the end of a nice ride.

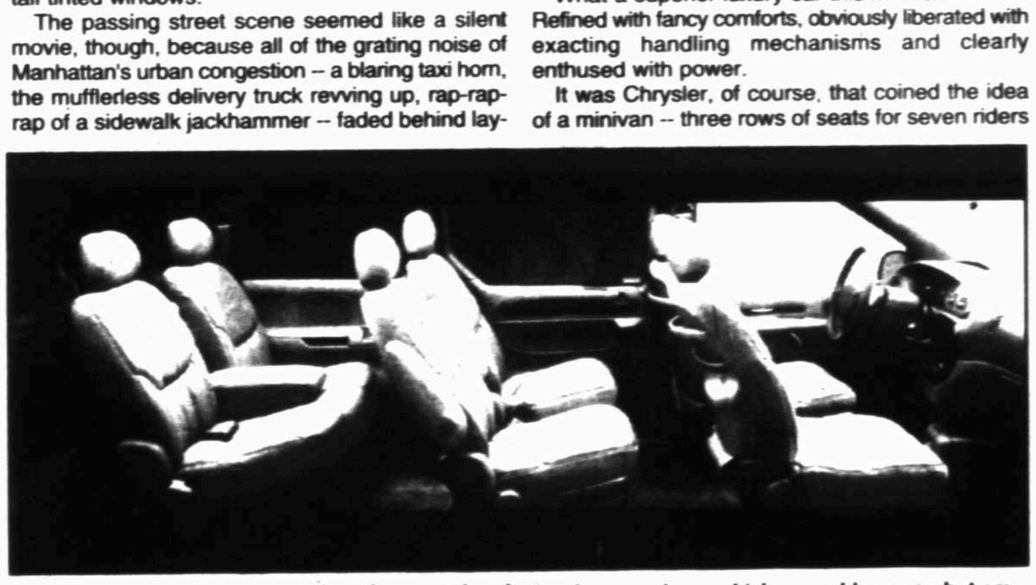

In retrospect, what struck me as unusual about the cushy trip was that my run in limousine luxury defied the stereotypical image of a big conventional sedan and instead substituted that box-on-wheels icon of suburbia carpoolers, the minivan.

Give credit to Chrysler's stretched Town & Country minivan with a new ultimate leather-lined luxury edition called Limited.

Give credit to Chrysler's stretched Town & Country minivan with a new ultimate leather-lined luxury edition called Limited.

What a superior luxury car this minivan makes: Refined with fancy comforts, obviously liberated with exacting handling mechanisms and clearly enthused with power.

It was Chrysler, of course, that coined the idea of a minivan -- three rows of seats for seven riders in a boxy package which resembles a van but emulates the driving manners of a conventional family sedan. A dramatic remake of Chrysler's minivan for the 1996 model year produced stunning improvements with new people-pleasing features including dual sliding side doors, and in 1997 a version appeared with optional all-wheel-drive traction capacity.

The same essential minivan concept shows up under Dodge and Plymouth labels by different names, but it is with Chrysler's Town & Country badge that the minivan peaks in all aspects of performance, paraphernalia and power.

This top-of-the-line Limited edition for the 1999 Town & Country series caps a string of three trims and in effect transforms the all-too-common minivan into a fancy people-hauler whose appointments and ride quality beat a limo.

It functions like a big car but measures small enough to park in a home garage. It also looks smallish, although the stretched-wheelbase Town & Country seats up to seven, with space left in the rear bay for luggage or sports gear.

Smoothly shaped exterior elements flow together in streamlined fashion so the package doesn't seem bulky.

The most striking exterior feature concerns the expanse of glass that rings the cabin. A front cowling dips to enhance driver's forward vision, and side glass sheets extend vertically to bring panoramic views for riders.

Inside, a low platform affords minimal step-up height which compares to a sedan so it's easy to climb aboard.

A sliding slab door on each side immediately behind front hinged doors allows easy entry for back-seat riders.

Second and third tiers of seats can be removed for additional storage space. Following the flick of a switch, seats roll on floor tracks for quick removal.

Best of all, Town & Country is easy to drive, thanks to responsive systems like power-assisted rack and pinion steering and a malleable suspension which produces the living-room smooth ride quality.

A wide front track sets up a turning circle that's significantly short. This subsequently enables Chrysler's minivan to navigate paths as tight and narrow as those in a shopping center's parking lot.

For power, the Limited edition draws from a 3.8-liter 180-hp high-output V6 that's optionally available with LX trim. As the largest V6 offered for Chrysler's minivan fleet, this plant feels gutsy in all gears of the 4-speed automatic shifter, and it links to a standard traction control system.

Standard engine for issues below Limited is a 3.3-liter V6, rated at 158 hp.

An all-wheel-drive device is also available for Town & Country Limited, with an inter-axle viscous coupling to automatically channel engine torque to front and rear axles.

Under normal driving conditions, the smart linkage distributes about 90 percent of the power to front wheels, so the minivan behaves similarly to a front-wheel-drive version. However, when on-board sensors detect wheel slippage at front wheels the coupling instantly transfers some of the power -- up to 100 percent, depending on amount of slippage detected -- to rear wheels to boost tire grip.

Added safety gear ranges from twin frontal air bags to steel door braces and anti-lock brakes.

Ultimately, Town & Country Limited scores as the minivan with utmost appointments, but it also ranks on top of the price charts, beginning around $36,000.

Standard equipment includes the leather-trimmed cabin with front heated seats and 8-way power movements, second-row bucket seats and rear bench, plus a leather-wrapped steering wheel, security system and power for everything.
