A new look in '82

Despite the national recession's eventual arrival in Midland, the city's skyline made major changes in 1982. This fisheye lens photo shows only a part of the significant facelift that Midland underwent during the past year.

Reagan will seek decontrol of natural gas

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan said Saturday he will ask Congress to remove all controls from the natural gas market over the next three years 'to ensure abundant supplies...at reasonable prices."

At the same time, the Reagan plan would place a cap on consumer prices through Jan. 1, 1986, allowing increases based only on inflation, unless a government agency approves higher fees. On the first day of 1986, all price controls would be removed.

Long-term high price contracts between pipelines and suppliers, which many analysts blame for recent price increases, could be broken at will after Jan. 1, 1985.

"The key to cheaper, more abundant energy for all Americans is a policy that combines consumer protection, incentives to produce, and efficient economic use of our resources," the president said in his weekly radio address to the nation, broadcast from the Oval Office. "That's what our program will do."

The president said the Energy Department estimates that the plan will reduce prices 10 cents to 30 cents per 1,000 cubic feet of natural gas in the first year.

Larry Speakes, the chief deputy White House press secretary, said Reagan would send the proposal to Congress on Monday, and that Energy Secretary Donald Hodel has reported, on the basis of preliminary consultations, that congressional reaction "has been far better than expected."

"There seems to be a consensus that something has to be done," Speakes said, in reference to complaints about rapid increases in natural gas prices that have driven bills up 20 percent to 40 percent in some areas this winter.

However, Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, an opponent of decontrolling natural gas prices, said he believed Reagan's proposal would be defeated in the Senate. He called the Reagan plan was "absolutely off-base" and said he thought there were 10 to 20 senators who would join him in a filibuster against it.

He said a lengthy filibuster he led on gas legislation in 1977 "will be like a Sunday school picnic" compared to the one he expects now.

Metzenbaum also said the move would raise costs to homeowners and increase unemployment by hurting small business.

"The gas industry itself has estimated that decontrol will cost $60 billion a year," he said.

And Rep. Bill Hefner, D-N.C., giving the Democratic Party response to Reagan's address, said the president's proposal would increase natural gas prices by 67 percent over the next four years.

Supporting the president, Sen. James. McClure, R-Id., chairman of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, said the proposed protections for the consumer would be "better than the current law."

When current legislation was passed, McClure said, "We faced a radically different energy market. Certainly nobody can be faulted for failing to foresee today's surpluses."

McClure said his committee would begin hearing's on the president's bill on March 9.

Ed Rothschild, head of the Citizen-Labor Energy Coalition, an advocacy group, said a Wall Street study estimated that price decontrol would raise prices by $1 to $1.50 per thousand cubic feet. He said the average home using natural gas burns 140,000 cubic feet per year, so if the estimated price increase is realized, the average yearly bill would rise by $140 to $210.

Reagan's plan was backed by the Natural Gas Supply Association, an industry group, and the Natural Gas Consumers Information Center, an organization representing industrial users of natural gas.

Under Reagan's proposal, gas companies and their suppliers could renegotiate their contracts. Beginning Jan. 1, 1985, any party to a contract could break the pact at will, to seek a better price arrangement elswhere.

But, to protect consumers from prices regulated only, in effect, by competition in the marketplace, Reagan would order a cap on price increases charged to consumers. The companies could no longer pass along to consumers higher prices charged by producers, as they are now allowed to do.

Government, industry leaders expect 'sane growth'

When things are good in Midland, they're very good. When they're bad, well....

Midland's economy follows the local weather maxim: "If you don't like the weather, wait 15 minutes and it will change." If you don't like the economy one year, wait until the next.

As one city official described it, Midland has been on a roller-coaster. From an explosive high in 1981 the economy soared downward in 1982.

For utility companies and city and county governments, the slowdown has brought a breathing spell — a time to maintain and a time to review what they learned from the boom. But it also produced problems of another sort — decrease in tax revenues and resulting budget cuts.

Texas Electric Service Company has flowed through these cyclical periods before, said Winston Barclay, district manager. When the growth began doubling and tripling what had been projected, TESCO responded by adding construction crews to meet demand for new service.

"OUR TIME element for getting service to a big area slipped," said Barclay. "Instead of 30 days, it was maybe a week later" when the customer received service.

Now it's going the other way, providing service earlier than scheduled, he said.

The drop in new service requests has brought a corresponding decline in the number of contract crews working for TESCO. And it's also affected TESCO employees. "We're letting routine attrition bring us down to where we should be," Barclay added.

TESCO overspent its budget by 100 percent in 1981 trying to keep up with demand. That's no longer a problem, according to Barclay. "Through 1983 we should be able to maintain our budget estimate."

Even though new service requests have declined, TESCO is going back and maintaining what they have. "We're playing catchup, doing maintenance of power lines inside and outside the city, beefing up circuits and putting in bigger transformers," he said.

Energas is following the same pattern as TESCO. Once the gas company had hired three to four outside contractors to assist with new lines; today it's down to one.

"WE HAVE MORE time now to do our maintenance work," stated Norman Henry, Energas district manager. "We were galloping so fast there for awhile. We like to see a boom, but this gives us a chance to catch up."

They are back on target with their budget. In 1981, they had to toss it out the window and start over.

Police, fire departments feeling budgetary pinch

The proposed hiring of 29 additional police officers may have to be shaved by half because of decreasing sales tax revenues brought on by the economic slump Midland is experiencing.

"It's still under review," said Assistant City Manager Poe. "But there's a good chance they'll only get about 16 new officers. We almost have to (allow that minimum) because of annexation, population growth and the increased crime rate."

Meanwhile, the Fire Department's allocation of 18 additional personnel to staff two new fire substations remains intact but will be shelved for the time being, pending completion of delayed construction work on the stations.

City officials have announced that a declining economy already has cut into state sales tax rebates to the city by as much as $1 million during fiscal 1983.

The rebates — one cent for every five cents the state collects in local sales taxes — account for about a third of the city's general fund revenues and began dropping in November.

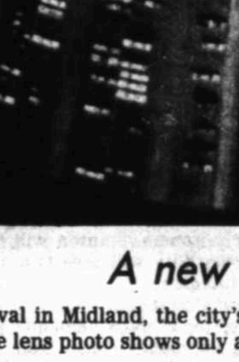

The biggest drop occurred in January when the rebate came to $365,635 — a 32 percent reduction from the January 1982 rebate of $540,665.

As a result, city department heads have been asked to review their individual budgets in an effort to cut expenses and avoid deficit spending.

Queen's welcome worth king's ransom

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Queen Elizabeth II and her husband, the Duke of Edinburgh, began their first tour of California on Saturday with a festive welcome at San Diego, where thousands braved crisp winds and occasional rain for a commoner's glimpse at royalty.

The royal couple planned visits to typical tourist sights in one of America's most popular resort cities on the first of their 10-day visit to California. Forecasters called for scattered showers under dark gray skies in the usually sunny border city.

The 56-year-old monarch sipped a California wine and lunched on lobster, seafood chowder and apple pie topped with cheese on board the aircraft carrier USS Ranger. About 400 people huddled together onshore, wrapped in blankets and plastic wrap to ward off a chilly downpour that halted just before the queen's mid-day appearance.

She dodged puddles on the flight deck while inspecting war planes and shaking hands with members of the 5,000-member crew, and received a replica of the ship's bell from the top crewmembers in a windy ceremony before dining in the executive officers' ward room.

While the queen was on board the massive aircraft carrier, about 75 Irish-American protesters gathered for a quiet rally at nearby New Town Park.

The demonstrators, some wearing Kelly green rain slickers, carried signs reading "England Out of Ireland" and "Human Rights for Ireland," and heard speeches by former New York state Assemblyman Sean Patrick Walsh.

Reviewing a Marine Corp honor guard upon her arrival in California is Britain's Queen Elizabeth II.

"I resent President Reagan and his ilk paying homage to the queen and her kind," said Walsh, a lawyer and political science professor at Pace University in New York City. "This is a republic and we threw out the crown and all that it represented 200 years ago."

Another speaker, John McDonnell, a member of the local chapter of the Irish Rights Committee, said, "We feel it is inappropriate for the queen to visit at a time when our economy is bad as well as theirs. This is no time to spend money on something like this."

Two San Diego police officers watched the group from their patrol car, but the rally broke up without incident.

Later Saturday, Prince Philip planned a visit to the San Diego Zoo and inspection of the site for the 1984 Olympic equestrian events near San Diego. The queen was to tour the Old Globe Theater, a replica of the London playhouse where William Shakespeare staged his works.

When the royal couple arrived at midmorning Saturday, a U.S. Navy band struck up "God Save the Queen" and "The Star-Spangled Banner" and a 21-gun salute resounded over the wide harbor where fireboats sprayed streams of water into the air and pleasure craft sounded their horns.

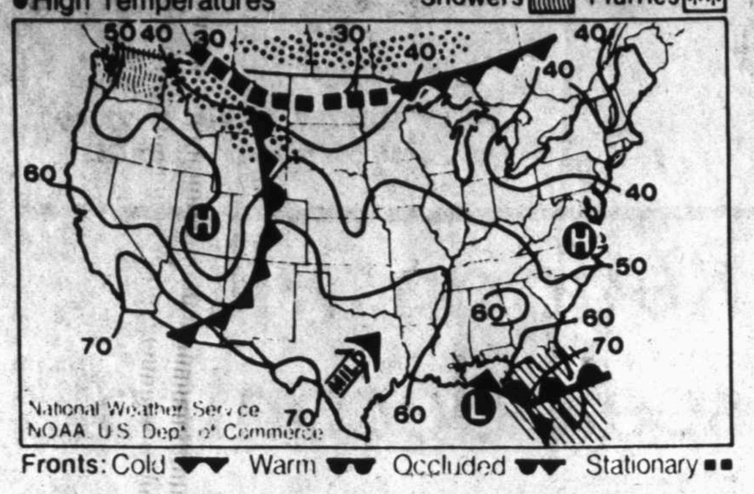

As the Britannia's approached the pier, a 90-foot motorized yacht suddenly veered off and lurched to within 75 yards of the royal craft.

It was intercepted and nearly rammed by the U.S. Coast Guard cutter Point Judith. The Coast Guard, which threatened to arrest anyone who came within 300 yards of the royal yacht, warned the vessel away without further incident.

Rain in parts of Florida, showers in parts of Washington and snow in parts of Washington, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming and South Dakota are forecast through today by the National Weather Service.

Temperatures expected to be in '70s

Midlanders who sport around in convertibles and water ski may let their tops down and get dunked today.

The weather won't be hot and sunny. But it'll be warm, the skies will be somewhat cloudy and the day will be for outdoors buffs.

Though winter is still in season, the temperature today is to peak into the low 70s, said the weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport. Winds are to be southerly to southwesterly at 5 to 15 miles per hour.

Tonight, the temperature is to drop down to the upper 30s. The high on Monday is to be in the lower 70s.

Saturday's high temperature was 55 degrees, while the record high for the date was 82 degrees in 1954. Saturday's overnight low of 44 degrees was considerably higher than the record low of 17 degrees for the date in 1934.

Sunset today will be at 6:45 p.m. Sunrise Monday will be at 7:18 a.m.

AFL-CIO again calls for job program

BAL HARBOUR, Fla. (AP) — With 11.4 million Americans unemployed, the AFL-CIO is trying to add one person — President Reagan — to the jobless rolls.

The attention of the nation's labor leaders last week was riveted on presidential politics even though the 1984 presidential primary and caucus season is a year away.

At their mid-winter meeting here, the AFL-CIO chiefs reiterated an earlier call for a massive, $68.5 billion job-creation program. They said the tab should be picked up by businesses that would have their "tax loopholes" closed by Congress.

With few murmurs of dissent, the AFL-CIO vice presidents gave a simple answer to the question of why the federation leadership spent so much time on politics instead of the economy.

THE ULTIMATE solution to economic problems, they say, will be the forced retirement of Ronald Reagan.

To the question of whether it was fitting to bemoan high unemployment and human suffering from this posh oceanside setting, they pointed to Reagan's trips to his Santa Barbara, Calif., ranch.

And when asked about individual union leaders setting up private meetings with a labor secretary who had been dealt an official snub by federation president Lane Kirkland, they noted that the dinner given in Raymond Donovan's honor in nearby Hollywood, Fla., was put on by Thomas W. "Teddy" Gleason, head of the International Longshoremen's Association and a member of the Republican Party's labor advisory committee.

AP Laserphoto

Secretary of State George Shultz points a finger while answering reporters' questions during a press conference Friday in Bal Harbour, Fla., following his meeting with the executive committee of the AFL-CIO.

The executive council united in dealing with the potentially explosive question of pre-primary-season candidate endorsments by affiliates. That would impair the leadership's quest to obtain a union consensus behind one Democratic Party candidate.

It urged the national union affiliates, which are autonomous, to refrain from making irrevocable commitments until the federation's general board sits down next December to decide if one candidate can garner the necessary two-thirds vote.

THE MASTER plan is to give big labor a major voice in determining the 1984 Democratic standardbearer who will oppose Reagan, assuming he seeks re-election.

Some labor leaders were getting edgy about the AFL-CIO's strident opposition to the incumbent.

Reagan hasn't said whether he will seek a second term. But the symbolism of his decision to help the unionized U.S. maritime industry wasn't missed by some labor officials

Gleason, who has been supportive of Reagan, ended up toasting the arrival of a half-million tons of wheat flour shipping business resulting from Reagan's decision to invoke cargo preference on the Agriculture Department sale to Egypt.

If politics is the art of rewarding your friends and punishing your enemies, one unionist said, what happens to labor if the economy rallies, Reagan runs and is re-elected?

THE LABOR movement could end up having its influence weakened for six more years, he said.

Another crack appeared in the federation's phalanx of unity.

The executive council, which has traditionally been hawkish on defense issues, called for defense spending lower than that advocated by Reagan.

It issued a policy statement saying that increases in Pentagon spending, after adjusting for inflation, should not exceed a range of 5 to 7 percent.

Reagan advocates a 10 percent increase after rising prices have been taken into account.

So the council said it should be given $231 billion in the new budget year starting Oct. 1 — rather than the $239 billion sought by the administration.

MOMENTS AFTER that AFL-CIO policy statement was released, federation staff officials put out a revision.

The council, it turned out, supported a defense spending hike "in the range of 5 to 7 percent or below."

Some council members wanted the spending range to be zero to 7 percent.

Second Challenger engine removed

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — NASA officials decided Saturday to remove a second defective engine from the space shuttle Challenger, which is already two months behind schedule for its maiden flight.

A third engine intended for the orbiter also proved defective and was never installed.

The latest problem was another leak, this time in the No. 2 engine. The engine will have to be removed and inspected to see whether it can be repaired at Kennedy Space Center, officials said.

The difficulty could mean the launch will be postponed beyond the target date of March 20.

But the National Aeronautics and Space Administration said it could not immediately determine how long the three-engine Challenger might be grounded.

The leak, discovered Friday, was described as a crack in a hydrogen line leading to an engine component called an augmented spark igniter. The igniter triggers the burning of oxygen and hydrogen propellants during launch.

The problem comes only three weeks after Challenger's No. 1 engine was removed because of a hairline crack that permitted gaseous hydrogen to escape into the tail section engine compartment.

That difficulty was compounded by a faulty replacement engine. Another leak was discovered in its heat exchanger before the motor could be mounted on the space plane.

Engineers are still waiting for another engine as a replacement for the No. 1 engine, and it is expected to arrive at Kennedy Space Center Tuesday.

Space center spokesman Hugh Harris said Saturday that the No. 2 engine would be removed today and a decision made about whether it can be repaired here.

"At the present time, no assessment has been made as to the effect of this work on the launch schedule," he said.

Substandard homes to be rehabilitated

The city of Midland is ready to spend another $250,000 for rehabilitating substandard homes in south and east Midland.

Under the Community Development Block Grant sponsored by the Department of Housing and Urban Development, owner-occupied houses in targeted areas can receive assistance to bring them into compliance with city standards.

This project is being administered jointly by the city of Midland, Human Relations Council and the Midland Housing Authority. Applications and eligibility interviews will be handled by the Human Relations Council from March 7-25.

To qualify, persons must own and occupy their house and live within the targeted census tracts of 1, 7, 8, 11, 12, 13, 14 and 15. In addition, the homeowner's income must fall below HUD's designated level. For a family of four, maximum income is $18,600.

Proof of home ownership, verfication of income and paid tax receipts must be provided when filling out an application.

To apply, call the Human Relations Council at 684-5866, or go by the office at 410 N. Weatherford St., between 9 a.m. and 3 p.m.

The rehabilitation project is scheduled to begin in late March. It will be following the same lines as the project funded by the 1981-82 grant of which $500,000 was directed to housing rehabilitation.

Persons with questions about the project may call the city of Midland, 687-0365.

City 'slowing down' following boom

"We see a lot more even growth for Midland," Henry added.

While TESCO was already aware of Midland's cyclical growth periods, Southwestern Bell wasn't. "If anything, we learned how quickly things can change in this town," said SW Bell spokesman Jay Allen. "It looked like we were fine and then suddenly we were way behind."

Bell Telephone started dropping money into the Midland area and the local phone company began diving into the streets, installing "miles and miles of cable." Allen contends SW Bell now is ready to handle any similar growth situation in the future.

As with Energas and TESCO, the crisis is over, the outside contractors have gone home. And SW Bell is back to providing service to new customers on an upgraded schedule. During the boom, customers often had to wait a month, according to Allen.

Pulling back and maintaining their facilities, SW Bell also is staying in line with its budget. "There are no major outlays like it was before," Allen added.

Budgeting during the boom and budgeting during the slump have been the source of the city's difficulties in coping with its roller-coaster cycles, according to Mayor G. Thane Akins.

The city would have been better prepared to handle the tremendous growth if there had been long-range plans, he said. "In the budget, then, you can prepare and get people and equipment and capital ready. Instead, we were shorthanded — not enough people or equipment. That's one of the things we learned."

TO RECTIFY THAT problem, the city initiated two-day weekend retreats in New Mexico. There the council meets with department heads and they study what will be needed in the future.

"With a normal growth rate, I feel we can do a better job with better planning than we've done in the past."

In addition to long-range plans, the mayor noted the city may undergo some organizational changes where managers do more managing and planning rather than handling the department's day-to-day problems.

Midland's roller-coaster economy has been difficult to handle on the budget side, and the city particularly is feeling the slowdown as revenues from sales tax rebates drop below what had been budgeted.

"When it happens in the middle of a budget year, you're faced with having to make do. You can't go and adjust the tax rate in the middle of the year," Akins added. "That's illegal."

But boom or bust, "We always manage to get through," he said.

The county still is feeling the effects from that boom and is trying to grapple with an overcrowded jail and courthouse, according to County Judge William Ahders.

"We learned we have a lot of problems and we're still trying to face up to them," said Ahders of that boom period. Adding to the cramped courthouse remains the problem of Odessa's sewage water flowing down Monahans Draw in the county.

WHEN THE EXPLOSION hit in 1981, it brought an influx of people into Midland and into the county jail, noted Ahders. Because of regulations set by the federal government, the county's jail is overcrowded and deemed substandard.

"We've talked to other cities in the area to see if they will accept some of our prisoners. Stanton will take two, Garden City will take two or three," said Ahders.

But that means money to pay these cities for keeping Midland's prisoners, and the money comes from local taxpayers, according to Ahders.

He pointed out judges offices are crowded and there aren't enough courtrooms to go around.

Ahders and a majority of the county commissioners are hoping a bond election in April to expand the courthouse and jail will solve their problems now and handle future years' growth.

And to iron out problems on Odessa's sewage, Ahders is proposing a joint meeting with the city and county governments of Midland and Odessa.

As with others, the mayor thinks Midland's roller-coaster cycle is over. "I expect growth to be more civilized after this," Akins said.

Commissioners to meet Monday

Midland County commissioners will consider a 14-item agenda in their 9 a.m. Monday meeting in the Midland County Courthouse.

Commissioners are to:

—Hear a report from Albert Stewart, superintendent of the county's Road and Bridge Department.

—Discuss the county-owned lot at Fort Worth Street and Kansas Avenue with J.H. Beaty of the Midland Gem and Mineral Society.

—Discuss Texas Agricultural Extension Service personnel with Earnest Kiker, county agent.

—Discuss changes in Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Texas health and dental insurance plans for county employees with Don Crawford, insurance company representative.

—Review bids for a county depository and outside audit services.

—Discuss basic motor vehicle bid package for county automobiles.

—Discuss Tax Office's automobile with Frances Shuffield, tax assessor-collector.

—Discuss recommendation for resolution concerning ad valorem tax certificates.

—Discuss with Sheriff Dallas Smith the replacement of Sheriff's Department radio.

—Discuss jail repairs and maintenance with the sheriff.

—Discuss judge's liability insurance.

—Accept road easements or deeds and requests for pipeline or cable crossings.

Highway construction contracts awarded

ODESSA — The State Highway Department has awarded contracts for two construction projects in the Midland-Odessa area.

The successful bidder was Jones Brothers Dirt and Paving Contractors Inc. of Odessa.

The first project is 3.2 miles long and covers reconstruction of West University Avenue from Mockingbird Drive to Texas 302 on the west side of Odessa at a cost of $1,753,000. Contract calls for 200 working days for completion.

The work is designed to make the road safer and allow increased traffic capacity, officials say. The speed limit will be reduced to 45 mph in areas under construction.

Highway engineer Vernon Wilkerson, who is in charge of the work, suggests "drivers use 16th Street and 42nd Street as alternate routes to avoid the congested areas during construction."

The second project involves construction of Spur 217 — a new entrance to Midland Regional Airport. The work will begin at FM 1788 west of the airport and extend 0.4 miles to the airport.

Contract price is $472,000 and 160 working days are allowed for completion. The road will provide "particularly convenient access" to the airport, upon completion of Texas 191, an official noted. Airport access from Interstate 20 also will be improved.

Departments feel city's budgetary pinch

Since most departmental budgets consist primarily of employee salaries and fringe benefits, that's the area which receives the most scrutiny, officials say.

"We were going to hire 18 new people July 1," said Fire Chief Raymond Lewis. "But we've put it off until after Oct. 1 (the end of the city's fiscal year)."

The deferral will save $86,184, according to Lewis. Difficulty in acquiring land for the new fire stations has delayed the start of construction, and Lewis says he can hold off the hiring until three months prior to completion of the work. (Three months are needed to train new personnel.)

While the fire department expects to get the extra help it eventually will need, the police department likely will have to live with the projected reduction in its new employee allocation — at least for the near future.

Chief of Police Wayne Gideon estimates that by hiring 16 new officers instead of the 29 allocated, savings to the city will come to about $208,000 during the remainder of fiscal 1983.

His total budget for the entire fiscal year comes to $7.1 million, with $5.8 million of that amount earmarked for salaries and fringe benefits.

Gideon said he is reviewing his budget accounts — "from capital improvements to travel expenses" — in an effort to trim spending and allow for the possible eventual hiring of additional officers. They are deemed necessary to adequately combat a growing crime rate which, he noted, rose 45 percent last year.

In the meantime: "We will do everything possible to cut corners and do the very best we can."

DEATHS

Mary T. Wilson

Services for Mary T. Wilson, 84, of 502 S. Dallas St., will be at 3:30 p.m. Monday in Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. Bob Porterfield of West Kentucky Baptist Church and J.E. Barrington of Primitive Baptist Church officiating. Burial will be in Resthaven Memorial Park.

She died Friday in a Midland nursing home.

Mrs. Wilson was born Oct. 19, 1898, in Lampasas. She spent her early life in Dublin and later lived in Arizona and New Mexico. She met and married Robert J. Wilson in 1926 in Beeville. They moved to Midland in 1926 and had lived here since then. She was a member of the Baptist church.

Survivors include her husband; two daughters, Mrs. John H. (Wanda) Burton of Midland and Mrs. Gene E. (Doris) Farris of Midland; nine grandchildren; 16 great-grandchildren and a great-great-grandchild.

Frances Newsom

Frances Newsom, 58, of 2007 N. C St., died early Saturday in a Midland hospital following a brief illness.

Services will be at 1:30 p.m. Monday in the First Christian Church with the Rev. Steve Edwards officiating. Burial will be in Resthaven Memorial Park, directed by Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Newsom was born Aug. 5, 1924, in Durant, Okla. She married Y.B. "Buck" Newsom in January 1942 in Lubbock. They moved to Midland in November 1958. She was a member of the First Christian Church.

Survivors include her husband; two sons, Dr. James G. Newsom of Shreveport, La., and Larry B. Newsom of Dallas; a sister, Loraine Graham of Midland; and a granddaughter.

William P. Stone

AMHERST — Services for William Porter Stone, 69, of Amherst, father of William R. Stone of Midland, are set for 2 p.m. Monday in the Amherst Church of Christ. Burial is to be in the Dimmitt Cemetery, directed by Hammons Funeral Home of Amherst.

Stone died Friday at a Lubbock hospital.

He was born April 7, 1913, in Choteau, Okla., and married Doris Hardin in 1938 at Weatherford, Okla. He was a retired maintenance supervisor for the El Paso Natural Gas Co. and had lived in the Amherst area for the past 29 years.

Other survivors include his wife, three brothers, two sisters, two grandchildren and a great-grandchild.

Amelia J. Wheeler

Amelia Jane Wheeler, 69, of Odessa died early Friday in a Midland hospital.

Services will be at 11 a.m. Monday in Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. Rex Ponder of Ranchland Heights Baptist Church officiating. Burial will be in Fairview Cemetery.

Mrs. Wheeler was born June 3, 1913, in Comanche. She spent her early life there and in Plains. She married Virgil Lee Wheeler in 1932. They lived in several places including Kilgore, Albuquerque, N.M., and Phoenix, Ariz., but always returned to Odessa. She was a member of the Baptist Church.

Survivors include her husband of Odessa; two daughters, Patsy Ruth Noel of Albuquerque and Betty Sue Carlson of Odessa; two brothers, Kit Morris of Cooper Coal and James P. Morris of Lubbock; two sisters, Jewell Casey of Alamosa, Colo., and Verea Raymond of Roswell, N.M.; five grandchildren and three great-grandchildren.

Habib ends talks with Lebanese

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — U.S. troubleshooter Philip C. Habib ended four days of talks with Lebanese leaders Saturday and was headed to Israel to press his efforts to expedite withdrawal of foreign armies from Lebanon.

Government spokesmen declined to discuss the outcome of Habib's talks. But one spokesman, who requested anonymity, said the U.S. special envoy was now aware of how far Lebanon will go for a troop withdrawal agreement with Israel.

"There are limits that Lebanon cannot possibly cross in the field of security arrangements and future relations," said the spokesman. "If he (Habib) can swing a compromise with the Israelis in these areas, then one can say an overall agreement may not be far away."

Habib and his chief aide Morris Draper will brief Israeli leaders in Jerusalem on the discussions with Lebanese President Amin Gemayel, Prime Minister Shafik Wazzan, Foreign Minister Elie Salem and government negotiator Antoine Fattal.

Lebanon's state and privately owned radios said Draper and Fattal drafted points of agreement among the United States, Israel and Lebanon. The radios did not further identify those points.

Peace Now demonstrators marched in Tel Aviv Saturday to demand the ouster of Ariel Sharon from the Israeli Cabinet. Sharon was transferred from the office of defense minister to minister without portfolio following publication of the Beirut massacre inquiry report. The demonstrators wore rhinocerous costumes to symbolize Sharon's "thick-skinned" refusal to leave the Cabinet.

Italian court sentences members of Red Brigades to life in prison

GENOA, Italy (AP) — A Genoa court on Saturday sentenced 10 convicted Red Brigades members to life in prison for six murders committed between 1978 and 1980.

The court also gave four other members of the left-wing terrorist gang prison terms ranging from seven years to 28 years. Seven defendants were found innocent. Italian courts hand down verdicts and sentences at the same time.

Six of the defendants given life terms — Prospero Gallinari, Rocco Micaletto, Lauro Azzolini, Franco Bonisoli, Bruno Seghetti, and Mario Moretti — received the same sentences last month for the 1978 kidnap-murder of former Premier Aldo Moro.

Francesco Lo Bianco, also given a life term, was sentenced last year to 28 years in prison for the kidnapping of U.S. Brig. Gen. James L. Dozier. He was granted a new trial in the Dozier case on appeal.

The others given life terms were Livio Baistrocchi, Lorenzo Carpi and Luca Nicolotti.

Two of the Red Brigades members found innocent were convicted along with Lo Bianco for the Dozier kidnapping.

Filipino political prisoners file suit

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Twenty Filipino political prisoners who claim they were arrested illegally and tortured have filed a $720,000 lawsuit against armed forces chief Gen. Fabian Ver, lawyers and the prisoners' relatives said Saturday.

Also named in the complaint were five colonels, a major, a captain, three lieutenants, a sergeant and an unspecified number of "John Does." The complainants alleged these men actively took part in or condoned torture.

The prisoners were arrested a year ago and have been charged with subversion for alleged links with the outlawed Communist Party of the Philippines.

Former Sen. Jose Diokno, a critic of President Ferdinand E. Marcos and head of the Philippine Civil Liberties Union, said in a telephone interview that the complaint was filed Friday before the Manila regional trial court. Diokno heads a battery of 13 lawyers handling the case.

Guatemalan guerillas declare truce

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Guatemalan guerrillas have declared a truce for the upcoming visit of Pope John Paul II to their country, the leftist newspaper Uno Mas Uno reported Saturday.

The Mexico City newspaper quoted a document from the Guatemalan National Revolutionary Unity coalition as saying the truce would be observed from three days before the pope's visit to two days after his departure.

The coalition links the four leftist guerrilla groups fighting to overthrow the military regime of President Efrain Rios Montt.

John Paul is scheduled to arrive in Guatemala on March 6 and stay through March 9, using it as the base for his trips to Honduras and Belize on a tour taking him to all seven Central American countries and Haiti.

Salvador's army about to run out of ammunition

WASHINGTON (AP) — El Salvador's Army is about to run out of ammunition and the Reagan administration plans to seek an additional $60 million in military aid for it this year, U.S. officials say.

Two officials who spoke late Friday on condition that their names not be used said the administration still had not decided how to get the money in the face of a Congress increasingly skeptical about the U.S. committment to El Salvador.

One possibility raised by Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger in congressional testimony this past week would be for the administration to use $60 million of a $75 million emergency fund earmarked for military emergencies anywhere in the world.

However, Weinberger and other administration officials said later in the week that they were also considering the diversion of military aid already approved for other countries, or seeking a supplemental appropriation from Congress.

Congres approved about $26 million in military aid for El Salvador in the current fiscal year, about $40 million less than the administration requested. Last year, the total was about $81 million, including $55 million from the emergency fund sent after guerrillas destroyed the bulk of the country's tiny air force in February 1982.

A Defense Department official said this year's $26 million had all been spent and the Salvadoran Army was "about to run out of ammunition."

He said some aid was still in the procurement pipeline but added, "it's a pretty short pipeline."

A State Department official said the Pentagon seemed interested in tapping the emergency fund, but the State Department feared it would have trouble with a convincing justification that the action was in response to an unforseen emergency, as the law requiries.

The administration is also considering "reprogramming" military aid from other countries and diverting it to El Salvador. That action requires notice to Congress, which could veto any diversion.

The third option is for the administration to seek a special appropriation for the additional money. However, officials fear that proposal might get bogged down in Congress where a stronger Democratic majority in the House has increasingly criticized the administration policy in El Salvador.

Leftist insurgents in El Salvador have waged a four-month offensive against government troops, striking in and about the country's provinces.

The administration officials, while expressing concern over the performance of the Salvadoran army, have publicly discounted the seriousness of the attacks.

Panama accuses envoy

WASHINGTON (AP) — After a long period of unusual harmony, the United States and Panama are once again embroiled in a dispute reminiscent of the troubled era before the Panama Canal treaties were signed five years ago.

Panamanians publicly are accusing the United States of intruding into their country's affairs. U.S. officials privately charge that Panama is making a crude attempt to resurrect anti-American sentiment among its people.

The two protagonists are Ruben Dario Paredes, the national guard commander and Panama's most powerful political figure, and U.S. ambassador Everett Briggs.

Paredes charged Feb. 19 that Briggs had attempted to make contact with national guard officers based outside the capital without seeking prior permission of their superiors.

Paredes said Briggs' conduct represented an interference in Panama's internal affairs and could affect national security. He suggested that Briggs was using his "diplomatic garb" as a cover for spying.

Ambler Moss, whom Briggs succeeded late last year as U.S. ambassador, said in a telephone interview that U.S. envoys in Panama routinely contact local commanders during trips to the interior.

If Briggs attempted to do so without prior clearance from the central command, Moss said his omission should not be considered serious.

"Based on my reading of the situation in the press, this was at worst a very minor breach of protocol," said Moss, who now practices law.

The State Department said Briggs had not gone beyond "customary diplomatic activities."

Canada upset by rulings

WASHINGTON (AP) — New disputes over free speech and cheap airline fares are ruffling an interlude of calm between the United States and Canada, but are unlikely to disrupt their traditionally close relations.

Canada, expressing "surprise and concern," has asked the United States to reverse the Justice Department's labeling of three Canadian documentary movies as "propaganda films."

The Canadian government also sought to salvage the vacations of thousands of economy-minded Canadian tourists who bought inexpensive air tickets to the United States only to be stymied by the opposition of the Civil Aeronautics Board.

Canadian officials said they do not view either U.S. action as an attempt to embarrass, harass or penalize their country.

BUT THE new irritants arose at a time when the two countries along the world's longest unarmed border have failed to agree on a common approach to another, long-simmering controversy: how to deal with acid rain pollution which many Canadians blame on U.S. industries.

Frictions are likely to intensify soon over U.S. complaints about Canadian lumber and natural gas prices, as well as attempts by Canadian anti-war militants to halt the testing of U.S. cruise missiles on Canadian soil.

Nonetheless, U.S. and Canadian leaders stress the positive aspects of the relationship. Foremost is that each country is the other's biggest trading partner.

"WHILE we have our problems from time to time, it's a terribly important relationship and a particularly strong relationship," said Alan Romberg, a State Department spokesman.

"I think the state of U.S.-Canadian relations is good," said Canadian ambassador Allan Gotlieb, after he delivered a protest note to U.S. officials on the air fare situation.

Gotleib said Canadians are concerned about lumber exports and acid rain.

"You can't share a continent and not have problems," he said. "But the relationship is good."

The dispute over three documentaries produced by the National Film Board of Canada began when the Justice Department ruled that the movies may not be shown in the United States without carrying a disclaimer that the U.S. government does not approve of them.

The department also requires that it be furnished a list of the U.S. groups that have asked to see the films. One is an anti-war documentary nominated for an Academy Award. The other two deal with the environmental hazards of acid rain.

THE decision sparked an immediate "free speech" furor in both countries.

"The United States is a democracy and...we don't understand how films of that sort, which are, after all, produced in an equally democratic country, can be viewed as political propaganda," Gotleib said.

A three-month, cut-rate air fare promotion by Air Canada was supposed to have begun Friday night, but the CAB said Thursday it was suspending the proposed fare reductions as part of a longstanding dispute between the two countries.

"We're still trying to find a way in which these ticket sales can continue and these passengers can fly, and we have asked the United States to suspend this order or not put it into effect at this time," Gotleib said.

On the horizon is a Commerce Department decision, due next month, on whether to impose retaliatory duties on imported Canadian softwood lumber, on the ground the industry is subsidized by Ottawa.

Many Canadians fear that an adverse U.S. decision could demolish the economy of such timber-producing provinces as British Columbia.

Investigators puzzled by loss of American ships

SEATTLE (AP) — Investigators may never solve the mystery of the two modern, sea-tested ships from Washington that were lost in the Bering Sea, says the chairman of a four-man Marine Board of Investigation.

"If we can find nothing wrong with the design, loading and seaworthiness of the vessels, about all we'll have left is a 'Bermuda Triangle,'" Coast Guard Capt. John De Carteret said Friday.

The Bermuda Triangle, according to folklore, is an area of mid-Atlantic in which ships and airplanes have mysteriously disappeared without a trace.

An investigation by two Coast Guard officers and two officials of the National Transportation Safety Board begins this week in Seattle.

The sea search has been abandoned, and 14 men from the sister ships based in Anacortes are missing and presumed dead.

One vessel, the 125-foot Americus, was seen capsized on Feb. 14, and sank on Feb. 16. The second ship, the Altair, simply was not heard from after both left Dutch Harbor, Alaska, on Feb. 14 for fishing in the Pribilof Islands of the Bering.

De Carteret said investigators are baffled by the fact that neither vessel sent out any radio calls, even from emergency transmitters in lifeboats, and that no trace has been found of the Altair.

The Altair was built in 1980 and went through several years of hard service in the far north, De Carteret noted.

The Americus, which another ship saw sinking in heavy seas, was built in 1978 and went through five years of work at sea in all types of weather, De Carteret said. He said it would be difficult to explain its sudden loss of stability when it capsized about 40 miles south of Dutch Harbor.

De Carteret said the board would investigate the design of the vessels, the way in which each was loaded for the 220-mile trip to the Pribilofs, weather and sea conditions.

The board will take three days of testimony in Seattle beginning Tuesday, then reconvene for two days of testimony in Dutch Harbor beginning March 8. De Carteret said a Coast Guard investigator from Anchorage is already gathering information at the scene of the disappearances.

Governors descend upon Washington

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's governors, reeling from financial catastrophe at home, are coming to town ready to demand an end to big federal deficits and a greater voice in the way Washington manages the economy.

A policy statement on federal budget priorities will get its first test today at a meeting of the National Governors' Association executive committee. The governors are to meet with President Reagan on Monday and Gov. Scott Matheson of Utah, chairman of the group, said "I will raise it."

"The economic situation in the states is so bad and there's so much austerity out there that it seems to me that governors need to face up to these absolutely unacceptable deficits and try to offer a solution for it, even though it's going to be hard for some governors," Matheson said.

The plan calls for a combination of spending cuts, including defense, stabilizing the Social Security system, cutting into politically sensitive benefit programs such as tax-paid pensions, and possibly raising taxes.

Matheson said the plan would reduce the national deficit to $90 billion by fiscal 1988. This compares with the $116.7 billion deficit the White House projects for that year and the $267 billion deficit forecast by the Congressional Budget Office.

"The governors are coming into this meeting under heavy stress at home that is absolutely forcing them to grapple with a new part of public policy in Washington because that policy has such a tremendous impact on the states' economies," Matheson told reporters on the eve of the meeting.

It would be the first time the governors had ever taken a collective stand on the federal budget, apart from grants and loans to the states and other programs directly affecting them.

Matheson said he is convinced that the crisis the troubled national economy has brought to state finances is grave enough to prompt the governors to approve the policy statement Tuesday by the necessary two-thirds majority.

"The economic condition of the states is so severe that the governors at home are forced to take drastic measures," including tax hikes and major reductions in services, Matheson said.

A survey of the 50 states by The Associated Press found 22 states running deficits with a combined total of $5.8 billion for the current fiscal year. In nearly every case the leading cause was a loss of state tax revenue because of the national recession.

The survey also found that in at least 16 other states, deficits were balanced only through the most stringent austerity moves. Another 13 states were breaking even.

Three Democratic governors joined Democratic National Chairman Charles T. Manatt at a news conference Saturday in calling for a cap on the scheduled July tax cut and scrapping of plans to index federal income tax rates to offset inflation.

The governors, James Blanchard of Michigan, John Y. Brown of Kentucky and Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts, also said the Reagan administration must stop trying to transfer federal responsibilities to the states "without revenue sources or corresponding pickup of responsibilities currently borne by the states."

They said the financial squeeze caused by substantial cutbacks in federal aid have forced the states to pick up the slack, to increase tax or eliminate essential programs.

Senator: Adelman will be confirmed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate probably will confirm the nomination of Kenneth Adelman to head the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, according to Sen. Larry Pressler, R-S.D.

Pressler, in the 9-8 majority on the Foreign Relations Committee against Adelman, said he opposed Adelman because he does not believe that Adelman "believes in moving the process (of arms control) forward."

Intelligence unit to be disbanded this week

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The elite intelligence unit of the Los Angeles Police Department, the roots of which go back to the 1920s, will be dissolved at the end of the week amid accusations its officers spied on citizens, public figures and their civilian bosses.

The Police Commission, a civilian group that hires and fires police chiefs and sets department policy, ordered Chief Daryl Gates to dismantle the unit by Friday in a controversy that one newspaper columnist has dubbed "Darylgate."

"For this controversy to have reached this stage...is purely dumb. I mean it's dumb," said Gates, who told the commission last month, "There isn't any way that we cannot on occasion trample on some people's privacy and freedom."

But Superior Court Judge Jerry Pacht, the subject of an intelligence dossier, said the unit must be disbanded because "if nothing is done, we are countenancing police-state tactics."

Five years ago political activist groups filed the first lawsuits alleging abuses by the Public Disorder Intelligence Division, which has been treated favorably on such television shows as "Dragnet" and "Adam-12."

The controversy lay dormant until late 1982, when there were new allegations that intelligence officers had compiled files on a judge, Mayor Tom Bradley, police commissioners and other officials and that the unit was keeping more than 90 boxes of files, possibly including some ordered destroyed by the commission in 1975.

The unit, which has 50 officers and an annual budget of about $2.5 million, also is being investigated by the district attorney's office, a grand jury and the police Internal Affairs Division.

Trial should start in October for six lawsuits, now consolidated into one, brought by 108 individuals and 23 political activist groups against the city, police officers, the Police Commission, Gates and former Chief Ed Davis, said Linda Valentino, a plaintiff and spokeswoman for the American Civil Liberties Union of Southern California.

The suit contends that for a decade intelligence officers improperly spied on their meetings, infiltrated their organizations and even engaged in "intimate personal relationships" with their members.

Created in 1970, the Public Disorder Intelligence Unit was a descendant of the old Red Squad of the 1920s. In 1975, the commission ordered the unit to destroy some 2 million outdated file cards on 55,000 individuals.

Gates said he was unaware that boxes of files, possibly some of those ordered destroyed, had been removed to a variety of locations, including one detective's garage. While he approved the targets of intelligence operations, Gates denied there was any improper spying.

City Councilman Zev Yaroslavsky, the subject of an intelligence file, said, "The issue is that the government should never be in the business of monitoring the lives of law-abiding citizens."

"I have never said we have always done everything exactly correct," Gates said in an interview last week, adding that any mistakes were "minor." But he reluctantly agreed to the commission's decision on Jan. 18 to disband the unit.

City Attorney Ira Reiner, who will be defending the city and police in the consolidated lawsuit, has criticized "zealot" intelligence officers who were "willing to abuse every single moral or ethical precept" in their work. Gates wants Reiner replaced on the case by a private lawyer, but the City Council has twice voted to keep him.

Council and Police Commission members, while saying Gates bears ultimate responsibility for the conduct of his officers, are awaiting the outcome of the pending investigations before determining if the chief was involved personally in any of the alleged misdeeds.

Gates says he did not authorize the keeping of the files and was not aware that dossiers, which he calls "folders" filled with "junk" like news clippings, were compiled on public officials.

Pacht, the judge whose dossier was compiled while he was hearing a case involving the unit, disagrees. "If you don't think that high-ranking personnel in the police department knew about the keeping of dossiers on non-suspect citizens, then you believe in the tooth fairy," he says.

Fire officials prepare to light a fuse linked to 3,000 M-80 firecrackers in the garage of an abandoned house in Downey, Calif., top photo. After a three-minute delay, the structure burst into flames. The explosives, which were confiscated last year, were hidden throughout the floor and attic of the house. Seven fire departments were involved in the display, which was video-taped for use as a training film.

Yearbook causes conflict

LAS CRUCES, N.M. (AP) — Some New Mexico State University students and faculty members want the university to quit using the swastika as the title and symbol of the school's yearbook because it connotes Nazism.

"It's not just Jews who are brutalized by the reality of a student annual named the Swastika, it is civilized people everywhere," said NMSU history professor Jerome Brown in calling for a name change.

Swastika has been used as the name of the yearbook with the symbol appearing on the cover off and on since 1907, stemming from the much older Zuni Indian symbol for protection and good luck that predates recorded history.

A panel of university students, staff and faculty met Friday to consider whether the swastika's identification with Nazism outweighs its much older link to the Zuni Indians.

MOST PEOPLE who spoke at the meeting said maintaining the traditional symbol is not worth offending those unfamiliar with its older meaning.

"The time has come that the students of NMSU should no longer have a yearbook that they are required to explain wherever they go," said Douglas Wright of the university's Hillel Foundation.

"What the symbol means to most people is at worst Nazi sympathies and at best gross insensitivity," he said.

Brown said he wasn't saying "the Swastika student annual at NMSU symbolizes Nazism, but many people fail to recognize that the swastika is a symbol, like flags are symbols, and the symbol is the most powerful human invention."

But some members of the audience gave the university credit for trying to maintain a school tradition and restore the symbol's positive connotation.

"WHY CAN'T we just forget about it?" one student said. "If it is used to mean peace and prosperity, why can't we go back to that? It's just a symbol, man, it can't hurt you."

An American Indian student said, "Why don't we do something beneficial for the people now instead of trying to tear down something that's been around for a long time?"

Pat Murdock of the student senate said steps are being taken to decide whether a bill should be drawn up to change the yearbook's name.

He said the senate cannot take a stand on the issue but can start a process to eliminate the symbol.

NMSU President Gerald Thomas and the university's regents have said they would support a majority decision by students to change the symbol.

Biology teacher who lectured on creationism loses award

LANSING, Mich. (AP) — A biology instructor who teaches creationism was passed over for honors as Michigan's High School Science Teacher of the Year.

David Bolhuis of Hudsonville had been described as the top finalist for the Michigan Science Teachers Association award. Instead, it was presented Friday to Marilyn Turner, a Ludington chemistry and physics teacher.

"I suspected this might happen," Bolhuis said. "But I have a good life, and I'm not going to let losing an award affect my happiness."

Awards committee head Karen Williams had told reporters Bolhuis was the top finalist, but on Friday, she denied making the statement. The American Civil Liberties Union criticized Bolhuis and another teacher for teaching the Biblical account of creation as well as the scientific theory of evolution. State education officials decided they were not acting improperly.

Man dies when scaffold collapses

TURLOCK, Calif. (AP) — A 30-year-old man plunged 46 feet to his death when scaffolding collapsed at a grain silo construction site just as his wife and teen-age daughter drove in.

Michael Deering's family did not see him fall to the concrete, but his wife became hysterical when she learned of the accident. The Yuba City man worked for Gruber's Concrete Silos Inc., which is building two 77-foot silos for Foster's Commodities.

Part of the scaffolding fell after an electrical cord became entangled in a scaffold support and lifted a pipe leg from its bracket, company supervisor Jeff Gruber said.

Composition inspired by wilderness

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The world premier of composer Richard Adler's "Wilderness Suite" was performed by the Utah Symphony under the direction of associate conductor Charles Ketcham.

The work was written by Adler through an arrangement with the Department of Interior and the National Park Service, and he said it was inspired by and dedicated to the parks and wilderness areas.

Among those at Friday's premier was Paul C. Pritchard, president of the National Parks and Conservation Association. "It's important that while we're celebrating the music of the parks, we also realize they need our continuous love and attention," he said.

New York power plant shuts down

OSWEGO, N.Y. (AP) — The state Power Authority's James A. FitzPatrick nuclear power plant shut down automatically, with no release of radiation, during a test of turbine control valves, a spokesman for the authority said Saturday.

Woody Berzins said the plant shut down at 10:30 p.m. Friday "during testing of turbine control valves used to regulate the flow of steam from the reactor to the plant's turbines."

Hispanic leaders don't like proposed immigration bill

WASHINGTON — Hispanic leaders said Friday that a proposed bill designed to overhaul the nation's immigration laws doesn't look any better this year than it did last year.

The leaders told a Senate immigration subcommittee that the leftover they find most unpalatable is a measure that would require the federal government to penalize businesses that hire illegal aliens.

Employers would be forced to think twice about hiring any person who looked foreign, and might stop hiring legal immigrants as well, said Joaquin Avila, president of the Mexican-American Legal Defense Fund.

"Hispanics and other persons of color will be forced to produce more identification than the Anglo white," he said. "It's not that employers will have any intent to discriminate, it's that they will be very concerned about incurring liabilities."

The bill, sponsored by subcommittee chairman Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., and Rep. Romano Mazzoli, D-Ky., passed the Senate last summer, but died because it was never voted on in the House. The same measure was reintroduced earlier this month.

The Hispanic leaders favor a provison in the bill that would grant amnesty to a large number of illegal aliens now living in the country. But Simpson said the "political reality" is that the amnesty provisions never will be enacted without the employer sanctions.

He said Hispanics would be even worse off if no immigration bill is passed because Congress will give law enforcement agencies such as the Immigration and Naturalization Service a freer rein to search businesses for illegal aliens.

"There will be a magnificent congressional knee-jerk reaction," said Simpson. "I really do believe you will have more intrusions in the work place. And finally, the employer who has been busted four times is going to say, 'I will never go through that again, I will never hire another person who looks foreign.'"

Although Simpson denied that the act's purpose is to create jobs, other supporters, including co-sponsor Mazzoli, have argued that the legislation will open about two million jobs for unemployed Americans that are held by illegal aliens.

However, Hispanic leaders claim that the immigrants are taking jobs that Americans shun because of low pay or poor working conditions.

The president of the League of United Latin American Citizens said last year's immigration debate was marked by members of Congress who used the plight of America's unemployed to try to drastically reduce immigration from Spanish-speaking countries.

"We were exposed to a bombardment of...horror stories of the negative impact the undocumented (people) were having on American society," said LULAC's Arnold Torres. "They chose to ignore the complexities of our real economic difficulties, primarily Reagonomics, thus making the undocumented the scapegoat."

Torres said economic and political factors in their native countries, rather than jobs, encourage immigrants to come to the United States.

"Employer sanctions and other provisions of the bill will not stop the flow of people fleeing for their lives from El Salvador," he said. "However, a foreign policy by this country which is aimed at decreasing the level of conflict as opposed to escalating it would go much further in having Salvadorans remain in their country."

Even the amnesty provision drew fire from the Hispanic spokesmen. Under the bill, aliens who were in the country at the start of 1980 would be given immediate residency status; others will have to wait three years.

The process will create resentment in the Hispanic community, said Frank Garza of the National Council of La Raza, who suggested that all aliens be granted amnesty at the same time.

GOP hopes to take over Chicago's mayor's office

CHICAGO (AP) — Chicago's predictable politics have turned topsy-turvy, raising Republican hopes about taking over the mayor's office for the first time in 50 years.

Where black leaders once railed against "plantation politics," a black congressman, Harold Washington, has captured the Democratic mayoral nomination and declared the once mighty patronage machine passe.

And where no Republican has won City Hall in a half-century, Bernard Epton, a 61-year-old millionaire and former longtime state legislator, is now considered a serious contender.

Since the 60-year-old Washington's upset victory Tuesday, Chicago has confronted a new political reality: Black voters, long relegated to a supporting role, are now in a position to take center stage. The black population has grown, and the black community's political awareness has increased.

"It's really been brewing for 20 years," said political strategist Don Rose. "All it took was a good serious split in the white vote."

Republicans comprise only about 20 percent of Chicago's voters, while 40 percent of voters are black. As Rose sees it, Washington needs only a small part of the white vote to win the general election April 12.

Washington, a state legislator for 16 years before winning election to two terms in Congress, got less than 10 percent of the white vote Tuesday and nearly 90 percent of the black vote. The bulk of the white vote was split between Mayor Jane M. Byrne, the party's candidate, and State's Attorney Richard M. Daley, son of the late mayor.

Washington and Epton say they hope the election will be man-on-man, not black-and-white. Epton calls it "insulting" to dwell on race. Washington has admonished reporters that to do so is "playing with fire."

"All this canard about white people not voting for a black is going to be put to rest when I get an avalanche of white votes all over this city," said Washington.

Epton, meanwhile, says he expects black support at the polls. He is also pursuing the support of "disenchanted Democrats", and says Washington's 1972 conviction for failing to file federal income tax returns deserves voter attention.

"I do resent anyone who would vote for me because I'm white," Epton said.

But some political veterans say race will inevitably be an issue.

"For the first time in 50 years, we've got a chance to win the mayor's office," said GOP committeeman Timothy Sheehan, adding: "There's going to be a racial issue whether they want it or not."

Alderman Roman Pucinski, a supporter of Mrs. Byrne, agreed. "How can you possibly have a race out of this campaign when Harold Washington won this nomination in an emotional appeal to the black community?"

Many who once would have treated Epton's candidacy as a political lark now are rallying to support him: The phones are ringing at his campaign headquarters, contributions are pouring in.

Principal didn't tell police of rape try

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A middle-school principal says he did not tell police about the attempted rape of a 13-year-old girl because he thought it was his responsibility to investigate.

"I didn't think it was a police matter," Daniels Middle School principal David W. Stipe said Friday.

The attempted rape allegedly occurred Feb. 17 in the school auditorium, and police said they learned of it when they were contacted the next day by a Wake Medical Center doctor who examined the girl.

Two students, ages 15 and 18, were charged with attempted rape last week and were being held at the Wake County juvenile detention center.

Police Sgt. Steven Price said the boys cornered the girl in the auditorium and locked the doors. When they thought they heard someone outside, they fled and the girl escaped.

Police have asked why they were not notified sooner. Chief Frederick K. Heineman said he was "certainly going to find out what happened."

Stipe said he learned of the incident the day after it happened, when the girl and her parents came to the school to report it. He said he did not notify police because he was uncertain what actually happened.

"I only had their word that day," he said. "At that point, I only recommended that they take her to a doctor."

Stipe said he told the girl's parents that when they took the girl to a doctor to be examined for possible rape, the medical staff would notify police.

Our future's strong

Leafing through today's "Permorama '83" edition should provide Midlanders with an insight into how the city progressed during 1982 — not the best of years but, statistically, not all that bad. More than that, it should give an indication of where Midland will be a few years down the road.

The inescapable conclusion repeated time and time again in this edition is that Midland is tied to the oil industry. As the oil industry goes, so goes the Tall City. In a way, that's good because the importance of petroleum in today's world has thrust the oil-rich Permian Basin region to a prominent position in the state and the nation.

On the other side of the coin is the volatility of the industry. Through the years, that volatility has given Midland bursts of frenzied growth, reduced periods of stability and declines in both oil activity and the city's progress. The periods of growth — when Midland was "booming" significantly — have outnumbered the years of decline. That's evidenced by the fact Midland has grown from a city of only 21,713 people in 1950 to more than 90,000 only three decades later.

Much of that growth has come about because of the escalating worldwide importance of oil and the realization that technological advancements notwithstanding, oil will continue to dominate the energy picture for decades to come.

In the overall scenario, though, 1982 was not one of the local oil industry's better ones and, consequently, Midland's growth has slowed. Multi-story buildings are still under construction, but it is obvious Midland has overbuilt. Apartment houses and office complexes are actively seeking renters in the Tall City now, a noteworthy reversal of the situation only a few months back. Numerous companies have reduced number employees and the citywide unemployment rate is at 5.6 percent — the level recorded in January 1982. On a positive note, more people are employed today here than a year ago.

Midlanders are well aware of the fact the recession that has gripped the nation finally arrived in Midland in 1982. And doomsayers took that as an opportunity to predict Midland's downfall.

In a recent edition, the Wall Street Journal looked at how First National Bank increased its loan-loss reserve from $11.2 million to $50 million on Dec. 31. The article seemed to imply that energy losses would undermine that great Midland institution. We view it as prudent management in a time of national economic uncertainty.

What should be noted in regard to First National is that even in these times the bank showed an impressive $1.8 billion in assets at the end of 1982 with $1.4 billion of that in deposits and end-of-year profits of $11.8 million.

Those facts and other upbeat Midland indicators detailed in this edition point only to continued strength in future years.

No, 1982 wasn't a good year. There may be even more dismal years in Midland's future. But the world still needs oil and gas. Until that fact of life changes, Midland and the vast Permian Basin will only become increasingly important.

Another View:

Right place for funds

By announcing its commitment to a $4.3 billion "jobs" program of vague specification, the White House has put Congress in a bind. Congressional leaders of both parties agree that swift action is needed — preferably by adding a jobs package to a March emergency appropriations bill needed to keep unemployment benefits flowing. But they are also aware that the limitations the White House has put on its program pretty much ensure that it won't do much to help the long-term unemployed.

The president's chief economic adviser, Martin Feldstein, described the program to a Senate subcommittee last week as an acceleration of planned spending on construction and maintenance, with no special targeting on the long-term unemployed. That probably means work on highways, dams, federal buildings, mass transit, port dredging, veterans' hospitals and urban renewal.

That will be good news for the construction unions in areas where these projects happen to be located. Unfortunately, most of the long-term unemployed aren't construction workers, and certainly no one would want to attract more workers into this perennially overcrowded field.

Feldstein defends this approach in more traditionally Keynesian terms. If the projects are going to be built anyway, they might as well be built when the economy is slack for whatever general stimulus value they may have. Looked at this way, however, the money is hardly worth spending.

It is far from clear that more of this sort of general stimulus is needed. Large tax rebates are due in April as the result of overwithholding last year; another tax cut comes in July; the $5 billion in added highway spending will begin shortly, and defense spending is accelerating. If there is any punch left in deficit spending, these outlays should provide it.

Feldstein should also ask himself whether it is really likely that this "speedup" of public works won't add permanently to the deficit. When Congress looks in the pork barrel next year and finds it empty, the temptation to replace the missing $4.3 billion will be irresistible.

Studies of local public-works programs have also shown that their job-creation value — even when both direct and multiplier effects are taken into account — is very low initially. In the first two years of operation, it would cost almost $50,000 a year for each direct and indirect job created in this way. The $4.3 billion would add only about 90,000 jobs a year — a drop in the unemployment bucket.

The only good reason to spend this kind of money on a jobs program is to relieve the hardships of people who have been out of work for a long time and have scant hope of being rehired. Almost 24 percent of the unemployed have been jobless for over half a year — a considerably higher number than in any other postwar recession. Their number, moreover, continues to grow. Spending $4 billion on helping the worst-off among this group could do much to get them back on their feet. If Congress and the president are interested in more than a symbolic jobs program, this is where their efforts should be concentrated.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Information sharing nixed by U.S.

WASHINGTON — On Feb. 14, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger had an unpublicized meeting with Israeli Ambassador Moshe Arens, who had just been designated to succeed Ariel Sharon as defense minister.

Jack Anderson

The tone of the meeting was cordial. Weinberger was even jovial at times; there was none of the personal animosity that marred relations between Weinberger and Sharon.

But the smiles faded when the two men got down to cases. Weinberger was asked why he had personally rejected an agreement that would have allowed the United States to share invaluable military information the Israelis had acquired during the Lebanon war.

The agreement, in the form of a "memorandum of understanding," had taken U.S. and Israeli defense teams months to hammer out. Pentagon officials flew to Israel at least twice to inspect some of the captured hardware and documents that were to be included in the information-sharing arrangement. The U.S. armed services — particularly the Air Force — were enthusiastically in favor of the agreement.

Finally, on Nov. 25, the memorandum was initialed by the Israelis and a Pentagon intelligence expert, Andrew Marshall. It was sent to Weinberger for approval.

But earlier this month, the defense secretary rejected the agreement. Arens wanted to know why.

Weinberger coolly but politely told the ambassador that there was really no need for such an agreement. To the astonishment of others in the room, he went so far as to suggest it had been a mistake for the Nixon administration to sign a similar agreement with Israel in 1974 following the Yom Kippur War.

It is generally acknowledged in the Pentagon that the 1974 agreement provided extremely valuable information on Soviet weapons.

Arens was too diplomatic to bring up a particularly sore point: the deliberate misrepresentation by administration officials — including Weinberger himself — of the agreement's provisions.

Weinberger told a congressional committee last week, for example, that the United States would be forbidden to share information it would get from Israel with its NATO allies. Unnamed administration officials leaked the same charge to favored reporters last week to explain why Weinberger was scrapping the agreement.

What Weinberger and the anonymous leakers evidently were referring to was a clause in the memorandum that requires "suitable restrictions" on transfer of information or equipment to third parties. Intended to protect Israel's security by preventing its defense secrets from falling into enemy hands through careless handling, the provision is regarded as a significant addition to the 1974 agreement, which did not spell out this Israeli concern.

What the officially inspired criticism conveniently overlooked, however, was a clause that explicitly covers the issue of sharing information and equipment with U.S. allies. Sources have shown my associate Lucette Lagnado the contents of the secret memorandum; here's what it says about that particular point:

The Department of Defense "may sell and-or transfer any newly developed or substantially U.S.-modified equipment and technical data thereto, derived wholly or in part from exploitation under the MoU (memorandum of understanding), if formal alliance arrangements already exist between the U.S. and the recipient."

If words have any meaning at all, this clearly applies to our NATO partners, with whom "formal alliance arrangements" have existed for more than 30 years. Yet Weinberger has deliberately created the false impression that NATO would be cut out of the deal, presumably at Israeli insistence.

Any Israeli nervousness over possible NATO breaches of security would be legitimate — and obviously the United States should be equally worried. If Israel's military secrets were leaked to the Soviets, they would not only wind up in the hands of the Arabs, but would undermine NATO as well.

In other words, the Israelis feel it's a bit hypocritical of Weinberger to distort Israel's understandable desire for strict security precautions as an explanation for spiking the information-sharing agreement. The United States has as much to lose as Israel does if the Kremlin and its Arab clients get hold of the military secrets of the Lebanon war.

The Israelis are also confused and angry over other judiciously leaked misrepresentations about the agreement.

The anonymous U.S. officials have let it be known that one stumbling block was the Israelis' stubborn insistence that they have personnel present when U.S. military experts test the captured Soviet weapons Israel would turn over. Though this might seem to be a reasonable request — the stuff is now Israeli property, after all — this provision was somehow made to seem yet another instance of Israeli arrogance.

In fact, however, the clause in question specifically states that the United States may go ahead with the tests when Israeli personnel aren't present, provided only that the results of the tests are then shared with Israel.

The looselipped officials have also made much of the agreement provision that gave Israel the right to share in production and export of U.S. weapons developed from the material provided by Israel. But the 1974 agreement also contained a similar provision.

Perhaps what infuriates the Israelis most of all is the unfortunate turn of phrase Weinberger and the anonymous officials have used to explain rejection of the agreement. They have said the Israelis were asking "too high a price" for the agreement. Some Israelis, perhaps oversensitive, see this as a veiled attempt to paint Israel as a moneygrubbing Shylock — a Jewish caricature.

GEORGE F. WILL

Reagan a 'New Deal Conservative'

WASHINGTON — Shortly after the Inauguration, Ronald Reagan met with congressional leaders on Capitol Hill, in private. He said: Some people are going to be surprised when they see that federal spending increases every year of my presidency.

George F. Will

Reagan's aim in 1981 was almost the same as that of the four persons — still the most conservative quartet in the history of modern American government: Gerald Ford, Alan Greenspan, William Simon, Arthur Burns — who had been setting policy five years earlier. Their aim was to slow the rate of growth of the public sector relative to the private sector. Reagan's aim, put precisely, is to slow the rate of growth of the non-defense public sector relative to the private sector.

Now comes a liberal, Prof. Samuel Beer (emeritus at Harvard, currently teaching at Boston College) to pronounce Reagan a "New Deal Conservative." Writing in Transaction magazine, Beer recalls a definition ("A conservative is a person who was a liberal when young and has not changed his mind"), and says that the key to understanding Reagan may be in understanding the essential difference between FDR's New Deal and LBJ's Great Society.

The New Deal was launched at about the time America became a predominantly urban and industrial nation, and during an especially brutal business cycle. The New Deal aimed to alleviate deprivation — assumed to be temporary deprivation — produced by large but correctable events. The New Deal agenda was not complex: full employment and social insurance.

The Great Society was born in the midst of a boom. Its focus was intractable proverty amidst sustained economic growth. This was diagnosed to be deprivation with deep cultural roots, a diagnosis made with the thumping confidence characteristic of the social sciences in the 1960s. So the Great Society, more than the New Deal, aimed to do delicate, problematic things, like impart skills and alter motivations. This involved heavy emphasis on bureaucratic expertise (policy roles for social scientists) and public spending, especially federal aid to states and localities.

Social Security — an insurance rather than a services strategy of social amelioration — typified the New Deal. Federal aid (and accompanying regulations) typified the Great Society. The fact that Reagan's budget-cutting was directed first and hardest against federal aid to states and localities prompts Beer to describe Reagan as a New Deal Conservative who is philosophically unsympathetic only to the Great Society overlay.

But Beer may be inferring principle where convenience is a better explanation. Rochelle Stanfield of the National Journal notes that federal aid to states and localities is about half the so-called controllable portion of federal spending, and its constituencies are diffuse.

More than one-fourth ($234 billion) of the $848.5 billion Reagan proposes to spend in fiscal 1984 is for transfers between generations — to the elderly (in pensions and medical care, primarily). Reagan's 1984 budget contains half-a-trillion dollars for non-defense spending — exclusive of interest payments. Measured in constant dollars, this is down just 4 percent from the 1981 peak and is up 95 percent over fiscal 1970, when the Great Society was fully in place.

That is, Reagan is spending almost twice as much, in real terms, on domestic spending as LBJ did. David Stockman notes that of the half-trillion dollars, $424 billion is for transfer payments and social programs. "Everything else, from the FBI to farm subsidies to national parks, etc., only costs $75 billion." For 1984, "safety net" programs for low-income persons are 85 percent of 1981 levels and two-and-a-half times the level — adjusted for inflation — in 1970.

Reagan's individualism is, as Beer says, both a theory of economic progress and a social ethic. But whatever his private views are about what an ideal society might be, were we starting fresh in Eden, I am increasingly convinced of this:

His budget-cutting is driven almost not at all by ideological animus against the form of government Democrats have largely built and Republicans such as Nixon and Ford have equably administered. Rather, the budget-cutting is driven by calculations — technical, not moral, judgments — necessary to restore economic growth while rearming. To the extent that rapid growth and rearmament are compatible with the post-FDR and post-LBJ government he inherited, to that extent Reagan is a Welfare State Conservative.

Surprised? How can a conservative be anything else? Conservative, as distinct from reactionary, politics values continuity and abhors radical ruptures with national patterns of action spanning 50 years.

ART BUCHWALD

That's how fortune cookie crumbles!

There is quite a flap going on between the People's Republic of China and the United States concerning some railroad bonds the Manchu Dynasty issued in 1911 to build a rail line between Canton and Peking. A federal judge in Alabama ruled that the present Chinese government had to make good on the bonds held by Americans, which have been in default since the 1930s.

Art Buchwald

The Communist government now in power refuses to honor the judge's decision, and is threatening to seize U.S. assets in China if America makes any move to seize Chinese property in the United States to pay off the $41 million plus 5 percent the judge ordered Peking to remit.

I have a friend named Marvin Kitman, who is the TV critic for Newsday on Long Island. In 1963 he was a freelance writer and one day he said to me, "I think I can get out of this rat race."

"How so?" I asked him.

"I'm putting every last nickel I own in Chinese Imperial Railroad Bonds."

"But you don't have any money."

"That's the point. They're now selling on the market for $10 on the thousand. For 200 bucks, I can own $20,000 worth."

"But if you can get them that cheap, they must be worthless."

"How can they be worthless?" he said. "They're backed in gold by the Manchu Dynasty."

"Where did you get the tip on the bonds?"

"If you promise not to tell anybody, I found it in a fortune cookie. It said, 'This is your lucky day. Invest in the Hukuang Railways Sinking Fund.'"

"You found that in a fortune cookie?"

"It was a very old, soggy fortune cookie, and didn't taste very good, but the message was loud and clear. I'm only passing the information on to you because you're a friend, and because I've invested so heavily in railroads, I can't afford to pay for my lunch."

A few years later I met Marvin on the street.

"How are you doing with your investment?"

"My bonds are worth $20 per thousand," he said. "On paper I've doubled my investment."

"How did that happen?"

"When I placed my order with Merrill Lynch I drove the price up. You'd be amazed what $200 can do to the market in defaulted Chinese railroad bonds."

"Why don't you sell out, and take your $400?"

"First, because the CIA reports the railroad is going strong, and secondly, I've been reading Time Magazine and they still believe Chiang Kai-shek will take back the Mainland. Once he does I could make my big score. I'm now the biggest holder of Hukuang Railway Bonds in northern New Jersey."

The years passed and Marvin and I lost touch. Then I read the story in The Wall Street Journal that the federal judge had ruled in favor of 280 bondholders in a class action suit against the Chinese government. I immediately called Kitman to congratulate him.

"I have to hand it to you," I said. "Merrill Lynch is not going to call you 'Crazy Marvin' any more."

He said modestly, "I can't take all the credit. I owe a lot of it to Nixon."

"Why Nixon?"

"He opened up new relations with the People's Republic. If he hadn't, we never could have sued them. I wouldn't be surprised if Nixon owned some Hukuang Bonds himself."

"What happens now, Marvin, if the Chinese refuse to pay off on the sinking fund?"

"I intend to seize three Chinese restaurants in New York City. Peking has to realize they can't flout a federal judge's order on defaulted railroad notes and get away with it. The integrity of Wall Street's bond market is at stake."

"I'm happy for you, Marvin, but I have to tell you something. I never did buy that story that you found the tip on the Hukuang Railway in a fortune cookie. Tell me the truth. Why did you invest?"

"The truth? Okay. One day I interviewed J.P. Morgan. I asked him, 'What is the secret of your success?' and he replied, 'I always bought Chinese Imperial Bonds when they were low, and I always sold Chinese Communist bonds when they were high.'"

West German elections crucial to future of NATO alliance

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST, JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

BONN — West German parliamentary elections a week from today will be one of the most crucial in the Federal Republic's history.

Hearst

At stake is the stability of the NATO military alliance, which could be threatened if the far leftist-tilting Socialist party wins.

The elections are seen here as a watershed, since the next government will have to decide whether to carry out NATO's 1979 decision to deploy by the end of this year the new American medium-range nuclear missiles to counterbalance the 300 Soviet missiles of similar range targeted on Western Europe.

The new government also will have to decide whether to impose further unpopular austerity measures and cut welfare spending to help pull West Germany out of the recession, now causing unemployment to head toward 10 percent of the working force.

We came here to find out about the situation following our private meeting with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher in London. It is gratifying to be able to report that in talks with Chancellor Helmut Kohl, American Ambassador Arthur Burns and other American and German officials, we found encouraging signs about the elections, the attitude of the West German people and the prospects for economic improvement.

MY ASSOCIATE, Joe Kingsbury Smith, and I were joined here by Bernard Kaplan, our chief European correspondent. We met first with Ambassaor Burns, who, as chairman of the Federal Reserve Board in the 1970s, was our country's most celebrated inflation fighter. One of the most independent and influential men ever to hold the Fed's top post, he assailed excessive government spending and kept interest rates high enough to try to curb inflation. For the past 30 years, he has been regarded in Europe as a symbol of American fiscal integrity. We had an informative chat with this quiet-spoken, pipe-smoking envoy, but his views were for our background information and not attributable to him.

Our meeting with the amiable, chubby-faced 6-ft-4 chancellor lasted an hour-and-a-half. From him and others with whom we talked, we gathered that his Christian Democratic Party and its Bavarian conservative ally, the Christian Social Union, have a slightly better than 50-50 chance of winning the elections. The latest poll indicated they would get 49 per cent of the vote compared to a projected 42 per cent for the Socialists (the SPD). The latter is the major opposition party which has tilted dangerously leftward and could weaken the Atlantic alliance if restored to power. It was because of the leftist swing of the SPD and its opposition to

Editor's Report

NATO's decision to deploy American medium-range nuclear missiles in Germany if the Soviets did not dismantle the 330 MRMs they have targeted against Western Europe that Helmut Schmidt, Kohl's predecessor as chancellor, resigned as the SDP's leader.

UNTIL RECENTLY, it was feared a freewheeling radical party, the Greens, might gain between 5 and 10 percent of the votes and provide the Socialists with a working majority. The possibilty of the Greens holding the balance of power in a Socialist-led government has been the bugaboo of our government and its NATO allies. The Greens are an amalgam of anti-U.S. pacifists, environmentalists, Marxists, churchmen, young beatniks and ordinary, concerned middle class Germans. They are led by 35-year-old Petra Kelly, a German girl whose American army officer stepfather took her to Georgia in 1959.

She later studied political science at the American University in Washington, D.C., worked for Vice President Hubert Humphrey and was invited to Hyannisport by the Kennedys. She returned to Germany to become a fanatical member of the Green Party shortly after it was formed in 1980. She served notice this week that the Greens' price, if they get into parliament, will be no deployment in West Germany of the medium-range American nuclear weapons regardless of whether it leaves the Soviets with the only ones in Europe, thus consolidating their superiority over NATO forces. Up to late last year, it was thought the Greens might win up to 10 percent of the vote in the general election and replace the moderate Free Democrats as the third party here.

THE GOOD NEWS is that we were told the popularity of the Green Party is declining and it may not even get the 5 percent necessary for parliamentary representation. On the other hand, the Free Democrats are expected to squeeze in. If they do, and join Chancellor Kohl's coalition, it would give him an absolute majority. Let's hope there is not too much wishful thinking in this scenario.

It is fervently to be hoped that this Rhineland-born, 52-year-old onetime farmer is elected. When the Free Democrats switched their allegiance from the Socialists to the Christian Democrats last year, the CDP leader was, in accordance with constitutional procedure, chosen to head the government. Bonn cynics dubbed the good-humored, lumberingly-built figure a country hick. He told reporters that if they thought he was a village idiot, they would soon get an eye-opener, and they did. He has proved tactically skillful and his wholesome, "plain folks" attitude has appealed to people.

Most important for our country, he is in the mold of the great Konrad Adenauer, founder of the postwar Federal Republic, first leader of the Christian Democrats and a staunch ally of America. Chancellor Kohl, if elected, will be much more loyal to the U.S. than his socialist predecessors, Schmidt and Willy Brandt. The former, a cool, highly disciplined ex-Nazi, seldom bothered to conceal his low opinion of the U.S. presidents with whom he dealt during his eight years as head of the SDP-Free Democrat coalition. He privately called President Reagan an "amateur" and considered Jimmy Carter erratic and "unpredictable." Under his leadership, U.S.-German relations were marked by frequent strains and bitterness. Brandt, whom I first met when he was mayor of West Berlin, sought as chancellor to curry favor with Moscow at the expense of American interests and Western security.

KOHL HAS already assured the Reagan administration that the West German government under him will no longer attempt to play the role of broker between Moscow and Washington and will make no private deals with the Soviets that undercut American policies. "We will not wobble," he said.

He told us he will, if elected, definitely deploy the new American Pershing II and cruise missiles in West Germany — if the Soviets, as expected, continue to reject President Reagan's "zero option" offer to ban all medium-range nuclear weapons in Europe. He also plans to spend up to a half billion dollars on long-delayed improvements to U.S. military installations in West Germany.

He seems genuinely confident the overwhelming majority of the West German people continue to support the Atlantic alliance, want American troops to remain in Germany, and would fight to resist Soviet aggression — contrary to the belief of Bavarian leader Franz Josef Strauss, and even some of our own officials, that most West Germans would rather be Red than dead.

Chancellor Kohl said that, apart from fear West Germany would become a nuclear battlefield in the event of war, or that America might leave the Germans in the lurch as they did the South Vietnamese — which Soviet propaganda keeps telling them — many ordinary Germans have lost a sense of stability in their lives.

"IT IS NOT only fear of missiles," he said. "It is a kind of fear of the modern way of life. I don't think this is fundamentally a political problem. It is rather a religious, or theological, problem. The more that people have lost their faith, which gave them a sense of stability, the greater becomes the fear of life in general.

"Changing conditions have also been a big factor. People moving from rural areas to cities, big families becoming smaller with the older members having less influence on the young, and a lessening of human warmth and understanding — all this has tended to create a lack of stability and a sense of fear about life. Worst of all, many young people give way to their emotions without really knowing anything about the facts and reality."

With this kind of rational, commonsense thinking, this man will be good for Germany, for America and for the Free World in general.

SPEAKING OUT

Clean Midland focuses on changing attitudes

By NANCY SHARP

Nancy Sharp is executive coordinator of Clean Midland, Inc. A native of Lubbock, she graduated from Texas Tech University in 1978, receiving a degree in advertising. She formerly served as marketing director at South Plains Mall in Lubbock.

As I sat in on an organizational meeting of Clean Midland, Inc. I thought the "litter-bug" label was intended for the "everybody elses" of the world. After all, I didn't throw trash out of my car onto the streets and I picked up the litter that landed in my yard. Then Chamber of Commerce President Larry Bell asked, "How many people can honestly say they carry their soft drink and popcorn cups out of the theater and carefully deposit them in a trash container?" I said to myself, "But everybody leaves their trash on the floor in a movie theater." I was an "everybody else." That was the day I began to understand what Clean Midland was all about.

Keep America Beautiful, Inc. commissioned research which revealed three key attitudinal patterns exist throughout America, and that these attitudes create social "acceptance" of littering in specific situations. People feel it's acceptable to litter: where trash has already accumulated (this includes even garbage properly packed for collection); where they feel no sense of "ownership" for property, (which explains people's propensity for littering in recreational areas and on vacation); and where someone else will clean it up, (the "let George do it" syndrome). We have indeed let littering become the expected standard of behavior.

If littering were an incurable condition, it might make sense to treat just the symptom, moving from cleanup to cleanup, accepting both the temporary improvements and the inevitable trash accumulations that follow. But the Clean Community System has provided Midland with a proven solution to the littering problem — changing attitudes.

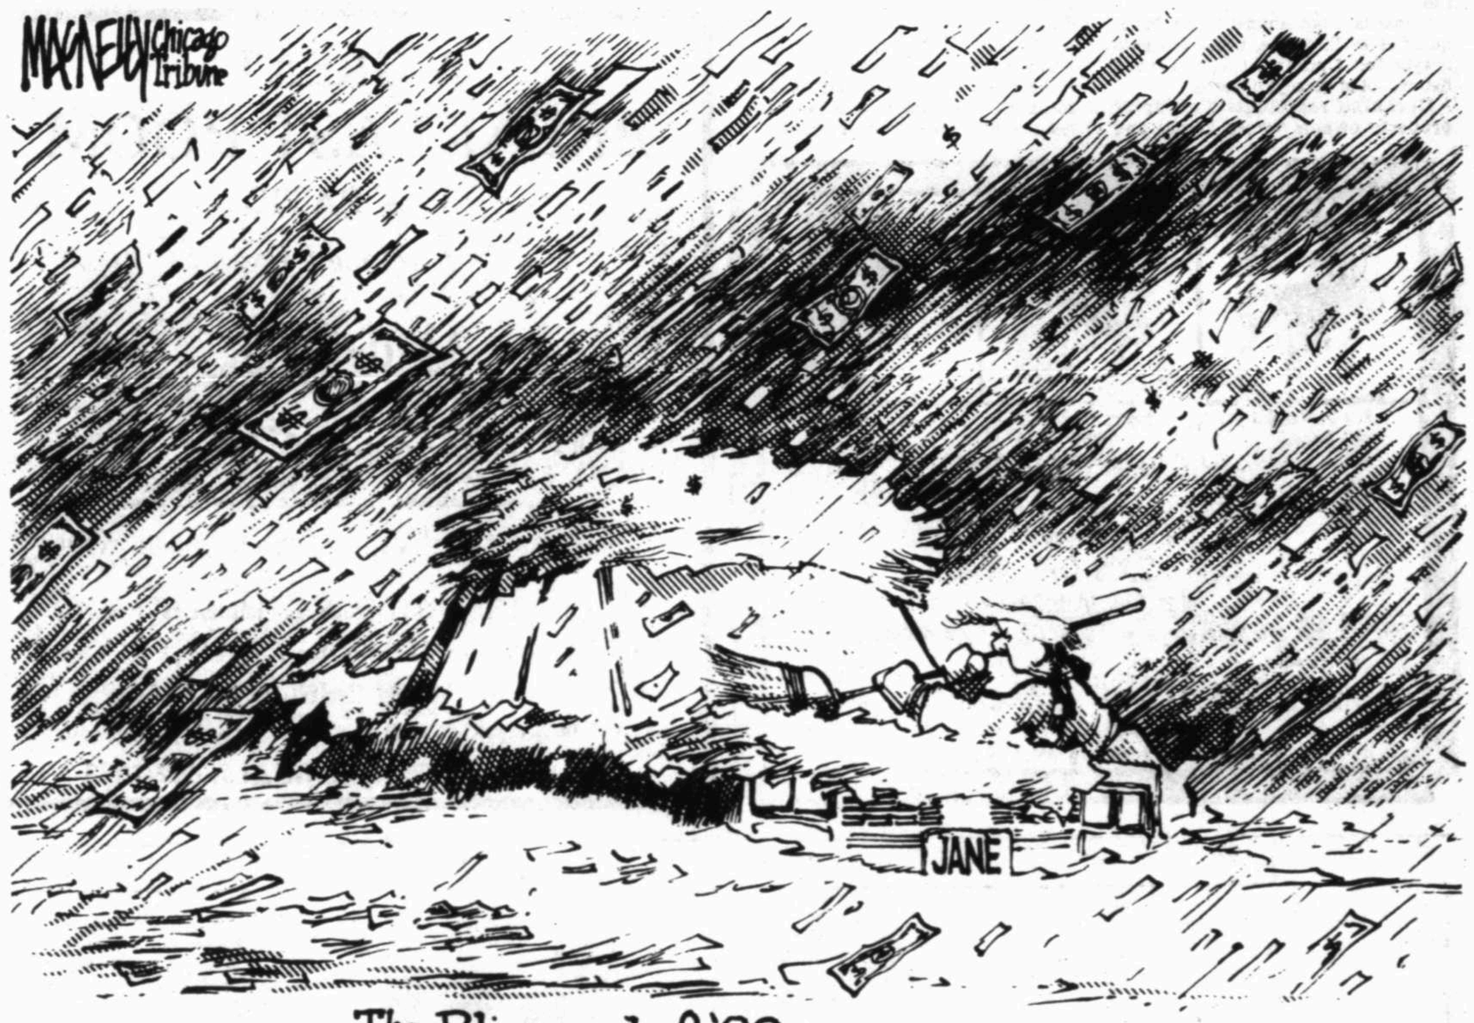

Clean Midland, Inc. was recently certified into the Clean Community System network. The CCS method of sustained litter reduction is comprehensive, concerned with people and cooperative. It is comprehensive because littering is not the sole property of any one group, but is characteristic of all segments of a community. It is concerned with people because people and their attitudes are both the cause and the solution of the littering problem. It is cooperative because only the combined efforts of business, industry, municipal government, civic groups, schools and other community members can successfully change attitudes and bring about a permanent change for the better.

To bring about that change, Clean Midland will be active in educational programs in many areas. A curriculum, developed by Keep America Beautiful for grades kindergarten through six, is being reviewed by the Midland Independent School District for future implementation. City codes and ordinances regarding solid waste will be compiled for distribution to Midland residents. Also, workshops for business and industry are being developed to improve employee morale and safety through better waste mangement. A speaker's bureau has begun making presentations to area civic groups. Many businesses will be recognized by developing an awards program for their contributions through beautification and improved waste handling. Neighborhood and special interest groups are developing projects for implementation in their specific areas.

The benefits of a successful litter reduction program reaches beyond the derived aesthetic value. Cleaner neighborhoods and work environments enhance economic development and tourism. Many CCS cities have also seen the pride that develops from a cleaner environment produce more active and responsive community organizations addressing other problems such as energy, crime, housing conditions, recycling, etc. Budget reductions and cost avoidance have also resulted from reduced litter in CCS cities. Memphis, Tennessee, officials estimate that for every single municipal dollar spent in the CCS program $110 were saved.

The city of Midland and the Midland Chamber of Commerce have set a great example by initiating Clean Midland. It is now up to each Midland resident to become personally involved in bringing about an enduring solution. If you have questions about what your role in Clean Midland can be, call us at 68CLEAN.

The Blizzard of '83 —

Central America fears Spanish mediation

By WILLIAM GIANDONI
Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — Central Americans are being told that the United States would like to turn the peacemaking job there over to the Socialist government of Spain.

That is what the democratic newspaper La Prensa Libre of Costa Rica says. That is what the Marxists broadcast over Radio Sandino from Nicaragua. That is what Central American anti-communists fear.

Why?

Simply because Spanish Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez has sympathized openly with Nicaragua's Marxist-led Sandinistas since before he became head of the government in Madrid last December.

In fact, Gonzalez, as a vice president of the Socialist International, has headed its Committee of Solidarity with Nicaragua since November 1980.

And Gonzalez has ignored the pleas of some prominent Central American and Caribbean area socialists to reconsider the backing that European socialists have been giving the avowedly Marxist-Leninist Sandinistas.

For example, Jose Francisco Pena Gomez, now the mayor of Santo Domingo, long the head of the Dominican Revolutionary Party, has publicly disavowed the Sandinistas for not living up to their pledge of prompt, honest elections.

Costa Rican President Luis Alberto Monge, whose National Liberation Party has been affiliated with the Socialist International as long as Pena's PRD, felt so strongly about the Sandinistas' totalitarian tendencies that he and other PLN leaders proclaimed their disagreement with the International's declaration of solidarity with the Nicaraguan regime two years ago.

Since then, Monge has charged repeatedly that the Sandinistas have been trying to destabilize Costa Rica by provoking labor troubles, that the Nicaraguans have been jamming Costa Rican airwaves with their radio and TV propaganda and that they have tried to keep Costa Rica from exercising its right to navigate on the San Juan River, which forms the boundary between the two countries.

Monge repeated his accusations against the Sandinistas to a special Socialist International investigating group that visited Central America recently, but to no avail.

Salvadorans have even more convincing reasons to doubt the impartiality of any mediation by the Spanish Socialists.

When last heard from, Guillermo Ungo, the Marxist who heads Salvador's Democratic Revolutionary Front, the political arm of the Farabundo Marti guerrilla organization, was in Madrid participating in preparations for the next Socialist International Congress, to be held in Australia in April. Ungo's group also is a member of the international.

That is to say that the governments of the two Central American countries that consider themselves most immediately threatened by Marxist aggression have valid arguments to reject any Spanish role in the area.

What Costa Rican Foreign Minister Fernando Volio reportedly found most worrisome on his recent trip to Mexico City was the report that Mexico, with the agreement of the United States and Cuba, is promoting the idea of Spanish mediation in Central America.

That information came on the heels of the return of Assistant Secretary of State Thomas O. Enders from a visit to Madrid that included talks with Gonzalez and Foreign Minister Fernando Moran. At the close of Enders' two-day stay, the Foreign Ministry announced that the United States and Spain will work jointly in favor of "democratization" in Central America.

The State Department insists that U.S. "policy is clear and will not change." Department spokesman Alan Romberg said that "we support the government of El Salvador in its struggle against the armed guerrillas...At the same time, we support reconciliation in El Salvador, giving all who renounce violence the opportunity to participate in democratic institutions."

Central American observers were not placated. That sounded "like Nicaragua, or Rhodesia, or Vietnam," one commented.

Economics provides stimulus for reform of Texas prisons

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Talk about prison reform and overhauling Texas' correctional system isn't new.

But there are indications that the 1983 Legislature is ready to move from the discussion of the subject to action on it.

And the reasons for that may have as much to do with economics as with philosophy.

"There really is a new atmosphere," says Charles Sullivan, executive director of the prison reform group CURE.

Much of the attention given to prison reform in recent years has come as a result of the lawsuit by Texas Department of Corrections inmates against the Texas Department of Corrections, in which U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice ordered the state to make extensive — and expensive — changes in TDC's operations.

It's the expense that has been of considerable concern to lawmakers recently.

DURING THE Legislative Budget Board's consideration of TDC 's budget request, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby noted that prison construction is a "bottomless pit" into which the state could pour hundreds of millions of dollars.

More recently, TDC Director W.J. Estelle warned lawmakers, during budget hearings, that Texans will have to pay more to build facilities to keep lawbreakers in prison, or will have to let them out sooner.

And Estelle says he needs $1.5 billion, instead of the $880 million approved by the Legislative Budget Board, to build those facilities and to operate the TDC.

So it's not surprising that lawmakers are starting to look at other options to simply constructing additional prisons.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

One area which is being considered is expansion of the probation system.

THE TEXAS Adult Probation Commission reports that in 1982, it cost 97.5 cents per day for an adult on probation — with the probationer paying 37.2 cents of that cost — compared to $12.11 per day for a TDC inmate.

Also under consideration are programs involving increased use of community-based facilities, work-release programs, and alternative sentencing.

"We're really not talking about anything all that new," Sullivan comments.

Over the past 10 years, he says, several interim legislative studies have recommended such changes.

"I think that part of the change is that the leadership has been exposed to these ideas for some time, and they're now ready to face any political consequences," Sullivan comments.

NOT ALL OF the proposals are going to find favor with all members of the Legislature, or with all the members' constituents.

Increased use of halfway houses has been something CURE has sought for many years, and which has seen what Sullivan calls a "test run" during the last two years.

There have been failures, and there have been problems, Sullivan says, but there also have been successes.

Still, he agrees, "there is a fear of halfway houses going into neighborhoods."

Gov. Mark White, Sullivan notes, has expressed concern over the idea of releasing prisoners from maximum security facilities to halfway houses — feeling there should be some in-between step.

Work-release centers might provide that step, Sullivan says, and also would allow for prisoners to provide money to support their families — thus helping to keep those persons off welfare — and to provide restitution to victims.

REP. PETE Laney, D-Hale Center, is the lead sponsor on legislation which would set up "restitution centers" which would, in effect, catch offenders before they go into the TDC system, and which would put emphasis on those offenders working in order to repay their victims, and to support their families.

Rep. Ray Kellers, R-Duncanville, chairman of the House Law Enforcement Committee, argues that such centers would "provide a less expensive alternative to housing minimum risk inmates in prisons than we do now."

Sullivan agrees, adding that "we're not talking about releasing people, or keeping people out of prison, who are violent."

TEXAS, SULLIVAN says, has "a surplus of non-violent offenders," with the state's average of violent offenders in prison below the national average.

For many lawmakers, it is the hope of finding a less costly solution than simply building more prisons that has them looking at these programs.

For Sullivan, it's a feeling that the programs will work better for prisoners, and for society.

But both Sullivan and many lawmakers agree that it appears time for Texas to try some new approaches to an old problem.

Amarillo's playa lake draws turkeys

By MIKE COCHRAN

AMARILLO (AP) — In the beginning, there was a zany millionaire who raised camels and buried Cadillacs nose down, fins up and called it art.

There was a noisy policial scandal, Pottergate, so named for Potter County and some Nixonian-style hijinks.

For a spell, the newspaper and a television station amused the citizenry with a mini-war, while a crusty district attorney kept the courthouse in perpetual turmoil.

More recently, a Catholic bishop touched off a firestorm by suggesting that employees of a local nuclear weapons plant consider another line of work.

Now comes a tiny, 40-acre playa lake with no official name but a multimillion dollar legacy of flooding, the last time during the summer of 1982.

It's been called Lawrence Lake, Dunven Lake, the White Turkey and, during three floods, a few other things. Stanley Marsh, who buried the Cadillacs, calls it Golden Pond.

Let's just call it Loon Lake and move along.

Incidentally, Panhandle residents insist playas such as Loon Lake are little more than natural indentations created by buffalo wallowing in the rain.

"Amarillo's not Animal House but it qualifies as Birdsville, USA," suggests lawyer Tom Upchurch. "We've got one helluva lot of turkeys up here."

Upchurch represents a group of property owners whose homes and businesses surround Loon Lake and routinely catch the brunt of its floodwaters.

He maintains the last lake owner knew it was flood prone and was grossly negligent in doing nothing to solve or minimize the problem.

To that end, he filed a $22.5 million damage suit.

And in a running battle with the city, he appealed in a legal document for the court to "ask God's blessing upon the city of Amarillo, because under this current leadership, such blessings are needed."

An opposing attorney, Richard Stokes, calls the litigation a joke and refers to Upchurch as Upchuck.

"There's no place like West Texas," sighed Stokes, and no one like Upchurch, whose plush office sits along Interstate 40 and just across from the flood plain in prosperous southwest Amarillo.

"He gets awful nervous when it rains," chuckled Stokes. "It almost gets him each time...Tell him to get a boat."

Stokes contends that his client, Paramount Development Co., was merely the last in a long line of lake owners, and is liable neither for damages nor financing a solution to the water problem.

"My client just happened to be the last in line...the last batter up," said Stokes.

City commissioners seemed to agree, since they voted late last year to assume ownership of the lake and responsibility for keeping it drained.

AP Laserphoto

Tom Upchurch, a lawyer representing Amarillo residents who live and work along a 40 acre lake with no name, stands near the lake. The lake routinely floods the surrounding area. The city has voted to assume ownership of the lake, and the responsibility for keeping it drained.

"The city ends up with all the losers, sooner or later," grumbled City Manager John Stiff.

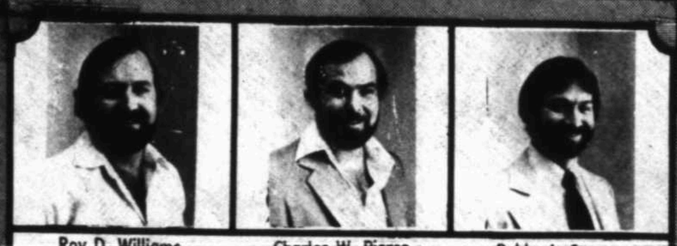

It goes without saying that taxpayers were hardly delighted by the acquisition.

Family of drowned woman files suit

FORT WORTH (AP) — The family of one of four women who drowned when their car sank on a flooded road has sued Grapevine city officials for $3.4 million.

The suit was filed here Friday on behalf of the family of Lucile Dean, who had gone to dinner with three friends Nov. 22, 1981, to celebrate her 62nd birthday.

Dallas businessman shot to death

DALLAS (AP) — A north Dallas businessman was shot to death while working in his office Friday while other employees were out to lunch, police said.

Danny Quinton, 32, of Mesquite, telephoned police after the shooting at Oak Lawn Electric Co. But he died about an hour later at Medical City Dallas Hospital.

"We got a call from the man saying, 'I've been shot four times.' Then he gave us the address," said homicide Sgt. Bill Parker. "We currently have no suspects or motives."

Nothing appeared to be missing from the office and there were no signs of a struggle, said officer D.P. Dodson, who found Quinton barely alive on the floor with a telephone receiver in his hand.

Judge blocks scholarship offer

DALLAS (AP) — A federal judge has blocked a man from offering $1,000 college scholarships in return for a $25 "processing" fee from area high school seniors.

Letters announcing the "Outstanding American" scholarships contain pictures of President Reagan and former U.S. Rep. Jim Collins to lend credibility to the program, said Assistant U.S. Attorney Cheryl Wattley.

Ms. Wattley said the letters were mailed to seniors at six high schools before Collins learned about them and filed a complaint with her office Friday.

Based on Collins' complaint that he had not authorized use of his name in the scholarship program, U.S. District Judge Robert Porter issued a temporary restraining order that bars Calvin Mayfield III from mailing more letters before a court hearing.

The order also authorizes the U.S. Postal Service to impound all mail sent to the organization.

Mayfield could not be located for comment.

Former exchange worker convicted

DALLAS (AP) — A former employee of the U.S. Army and Air Force Exchange has been convicted of conspiring to defraud the government by accepting bribes.

Rex J. Price, 46, was acquitted, however, of income-tax evasion for failing to report the bribes and of making false statements to a grand jury.

Friday's conspiracy conviction carries a maximum five-year sentence and $10,000 fine. U.S. District Judge Robert Porter scheduled sentencing for March 18.

Price was accused of accepting an $8,000 bribe from a representative of Churchill Sales Co., a firm that represented Fisher-Price Toys in its sales to AAFES.

West Texas town's inhabitants say it's one of world's 'garden spots'

VAN HORN (AP) — Tales of golden treasure hidden in nearby caves are unfounded and Van Horn International Airport remains a dream, but some in this West Texas town think they've discovered paradise.

"We are one of the garden spots of the world," former Van Horn Chamber of Commerce president M.J. Mitchell claims.

Tourists will miss something magical if they drive past this town that straddles Interstate 10 and decide Van Horn "should dry up and blow away," he said.

Locals insist little Van Horn, backed by brown mountains and a misnamed North Broadway Avenue that heads east-to-west, is an unpolished gem.

"We have 17 service stations, 16 restaurants, four churches, a very good hospital and 17 motels that night after night are full," Mitchell said.

In 1952, when Mitchell moved to Van Horn, there were about 1,100 residents. Now, Van Horn has swelled to 2,889 residents.

The reason for Van Horn's growth is that "we've got everything," Chamber of Commerce secretary Margalene Wright said.

For instance, Van Horn has a foreign flavor: "We're about half Latin American," said restaurateur Kathryn Van Horn, no relation to town founder Col. James Judson Van Horn.

Many locals, including town baker and Mayor Carlos Rodarte, and most of the city and Culberson County government, are Mexican-Americans.

Culberson County, nearly the size of Connecticut at 3,900-square miles, also contains Texas' largest mountain — 8,751-foot Guadalupe Peak.

Said to be secreted somewhere in Culberson County's Apache Mountains is a cache of gold that Mexican bandit Pascual Orozco planned to use to buy arms. But Orozco was murdered near Van Horn in 1903 and his treasure has yet to have been unearthed, locals say.

Yet to have been unearthed also is Van Horn International Airport.

Mitchell, a man with a vision, proposed to the Federal Aviation Administration that Culberson County's 6,000-foot runway be widened and lengthened two years ago to accommodate DC-8 airplanes.

The FAA in Albuquerque, N.M., said maybe, and told Mitchell to wait.

He's still waiting, saying planes could fly in and out of Van Horn with vegetables and Texas beef destined for quick delivery on the East Coast.

Van Horn's planned 200-acre industrial park also has ground to a halt.

"We're ready to go. We have water and electricity, but since this economy thing soured, nothing has happened," Mitchell said.

So much water lies about 1,300 feet underneath Van Horn that water is shipped to parched Sierra Blanca — about 30 miles west, and could "drown" El Paso, which has a looming water shortage, he said.

For entertainment, Mrs. Wright said she drives to El Paso: "It's only 120 miles, so I go there to eat. All you need is a good car."

Six visitors stopped Feb. 18 at Van Horn's Chamber of Commerce building, including Bill and Dorothy Fisher of Roseburg, Ore. Mrs. Wright advised the Fishers to see The Rock Shop.

The Fishers drove through the motel-laden main street, past the closed Rock Shop and were last seen heading west out of Van Horn.

The town has harbored hopes that homegrown wine from its wild grapes would grace the tables of the nation's finer restaurants.

A seven-year University of Texas experiment to determine where the best Lone Star State vineyards could be grown was narrowed to Van Horn and Bakersfield. This month, Bakersfield was declared the winner.

Finishing second was "depressing," the 72-year-old Mitchell said.

The city does have a first-rate climate, with about nine inches of annual precipitation and an average temperature of 71 degrees in summer and 42 degrees in winter.

Bills address problems of teen-age pregnancy

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Problems of teen-age pregnancy — an area of increased concern to Texas lawmakers — is addressed in three bills filed by Rep. Mary Polk, D-El Paso, who chaired a special study on the subject.

Polk, a member of a committee appointed by former Speaker of the House Billy Clayton, has introduced bills providing adoption counseling for teen-agers and their parents, establishing family planning services for minors, creating an office of adolescent pregnancy and parenthood and setting up programs to teach "reproduction and family life" in public schools.

The committee held public hearings across the state each month, Polk said. One of its findings was that adoption counseling for teen-agers isn't available in most areas of the state and is needed.

Polk told of one girl from El Paso who needed counseling and couldn't get it in her area. "She finally went to San Antonio to put her baby up for adoption," she said.

HB 914 provides for such counseling as well as establishing medical insurance to cover expenses during the prenatal period.

Polk said family planning, including birth control information, should be made available to teen-agers. "In a lot of places, it just wasn't available to teen-agers. They need a place where they can go and feel comfortable."

HB 916 would create an office of adolescent pregnancy and parenthood, which Polk described as a place where teen-agers could go for information on pregnancy, birth control and family planning.

HB 917 provides for the teaching of reproduction in health classes. Each school district will determine the "specific content of the instruction."

A student could be excused from attending such classes if his or her parent or guardian requested it.

"This would be started in the fourth or fifth grade when they're beginning to learn the functions of the body. Then by the junior or senior years, or maybe even the freshman year, they would learn about birth control," she said.

Polk said local school districts would help design the programs. "It's not going to be accepted locally, unless they have local input."

Polk also has introduced concurrent resolutions directing the Texas Department of Health and Department of Human Resources to give "high priority to family planning for adolescents," creating a joint committee to study child care needs and alternatives in Texas and directing the DHR to allow reimbursement for prenatal care for pregnant women.

"Universal-Life" is becoming an increasingly popular form of life insurance. In essence, it works by deducting the cost of your coverage from the premiums and investing the remainder in high-yielding Treasury Bills and Notes. Like traditional insurance, taxes on the interest are deferred until profits are withdrawn from your account. Until then, you can make partial withdrawals without paying loan charges. These policies include annual disclosure statements which indicate interest earned and where the money is going. Details may differ from policy to policy. Contact your insurance professional for details.

It is truly impossible to place a value on someone's life. That is not the purpose of life insurance. Such coverage strives to provide for the financial needs of the family when the loss of the income producing member is realized. Today, due to economics, such insurance is more important than ever on the life of each spouse. For a review of your insurance protection and the honest and objective assessment of your needs call the POWELL INSURANCE AGENCY, 601 N. Marienfeld. Tel. 686-2001. Open 8:30-4:30 Mon.-Fri.

Stuart Chase, assistant director, eyes arrowhead collection in the Museum of the Southwest's exhibit opening to the public in the Stables Gallery today at 2 p.m.

Starting at the beginning

This Texas Navy button was the museum's first acquisition in 1965.

"Indian with Hair Ornament," a painting by E.L. Blumenschein, was donated by Fred and Novadeen Hogan.

Choosing just the right name was important.

After all, this exhibit marked several beginnings. It was to be displayed in the newly completed Stables Gallery, and it was a retrospective show — one which chronicled the growth of the Museum of the Southwest's permanent collection.

After spending 30 hours and going through 300 names, the staff made a decision.

"From Modest Beginnings" was born.

Anne Sherburn, development and public relations officer for the museum, said, "This exhibit is a look at the 18 years of growth of the museum's permanent collection."

The collection has grown from a Texas Navy Button acquired in 1965, which was owned by a commander in the Texas Navy in the 1890s, to "2,000 pieces in our art and anthropology collection and over 40,000 in our archaeology research collection."

Due to the collection's tremendous growth in the past three years, Miss Sherburn said, "Many people don't know what we have." Pieces chosen for the opening exhibit in the Stables Gallery are representative of the entire collection.

A public reception for both beginnings will be held today in the new gallery from 2 to 5 p.m. The reception is also in honor of the museum's successful completion of Phase One in its Master Plan for Expansion.

The Master Plan is a multi-year strategy for creating a complex by connecting the museum's existing buildings. Constructed will be additional storage space, extensive exhibit galleries, a permanent history wing, an archaeological research center and library and expanded educational facilities.

Phase One involved closing neighboring streets to provide safe access to all of the museum's buildings and completing the Stables Gallery.

The museum and its permanent collection have grown, Miss Sherburn said, "because of the support of the Midland community."

The Stables Gallery renovation was made possible, in part, through donations of Midlanders Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Pearson and Mrs. John V. Terrill.

"The idea for the Stables Gallery," Pearson said, "evolved from a need for an adequate indoor storage and display area for large, heavy sculpture. The floors of the Turner galleries were not designed to support this kind of concentrated heavy load.

"We — Mrs. Terrill, Mignon and I — helped get things started, but the credit belongs to the members of the museum staff who designed and worked on the remodeling, raised the needed additional funds and completed the project."

The additional space will be used for temporary exhibits. Those coming up in the near future include "Works by Women;" "Progressions," an invitational show for last year's winners of the Southwestern Area Art Show on display at the same time as this year's exhibit; an interpretative archaeological exhibit; and a photo exhibit by Jim Bones.

"The petroleum museum is having a traveling exhibit of his (Bones') work, but ours is different. It's almost like a retrospective — he chose the works," Miss Sherburn said.

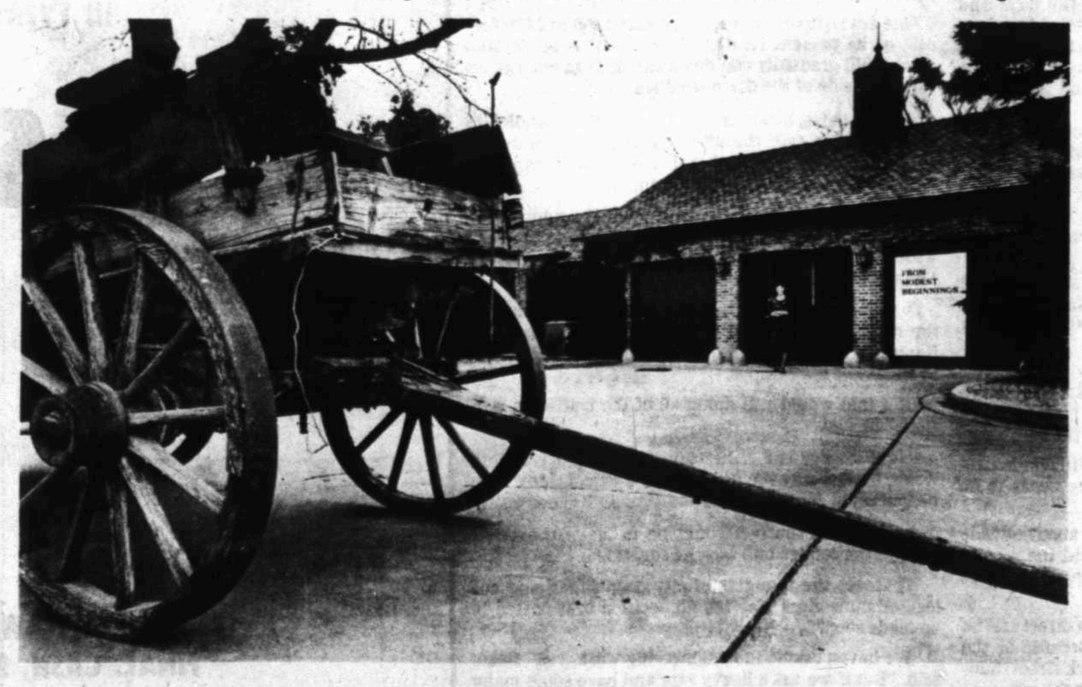

Another advantage of the additional space and its location is, as Miss Sherburn said, "It gives us the flexibility to exhibit, when we choose, art works that are for sale."

All of the exhibits in the Stables Gallery will have the same focus as those inside:

Education.

"Whether it's the artist coming to the museum and giving a lecture or the museum staff developing special programs, our exhibits are planned specifically for their educational value," Miss Sherburn said.

The current exhibit is no exception. It offers Midlanders an educational opportunity: The chance to acquaint themselves with the museum's growth from its modest beginnings.

An old wagon marking the trail to the Stables Gallery recalls Texas history and reminds visitors of the original purpose of the stable building.

Dinosaurs blazed trail across West Texas

1965 find still considered significant

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

McCAMEY — They remain as mute testimony to the cataclysmic event which swept their creators from the face of the earth.

Dinosaur tracks.

Embedded in the limestone of a creekbed 24 miles west of here, where the mesa country rises from the creosote lowlands of the Pecos River, the well-defined impressions are proof that eons ago West Texas was a land that could be trodden only by species long-extinct.

It was a terrain drowned by lagoons, slashed by reefs, through which roamed gargantuan denizens seen by 20th Century man only in literary imagery spawned by Edgar Rice Burroughs and Arthur Conan Doyle. It was an environment that has since been wrenched by catastrophe and subjected to re-birth, a lost world now as long-dead as those frightful behemoths who waded its depths.

IN EARLY 1965 a Texas Highway Department Field Party came this way to repair a highway cutting a swath between low hills where once a muddy swamp had reflected sky. Some say a Southern Union employee had walked these knolls before. At any rate, during lunch break the laborers wandered up the limestone bed of a dry wash — and the tracks reached across the ages and caught them by the collars.

They were three-toed, 21 inches long, 17 inches wide. A stride of 5 feet 9 inches was apparent. In the near vicinity were smaller tracks, tail markings, criss-crossed trails. It was an embodiment of the past staring them in the face, a find of monumental significance.

Dr. Wann Langston, professor of geology at The University of Texas and later to become director of Memorial Museum's Vertebrate Paleontology Laboratory, was summoned. He found them to be in the Glen Rose formation, representative of the Lower Cretaceous, with an age of 100-120 million years. He initially believed they were camptosaurus tracks, though continued study subsequently led him to alter that deduction.

Today, 18 years after his initial examination, Langston remains convinced of the paramount importance of their discovery. "These are the farthest west tracks that I've seen (in Texas)," he noted. "The nearest tracks to that area would be down around Uvalde."

Dwarfing a man's hand, the track of a dinosaur long dead bears testimony that creatures only dreamed about by the modern world once roamed West Texas. The 21-inch indention pictured above is located off U.S. Highway 67-385.

AT THE TIME the tracks were made, he explained, shallow water covered most of present-day Texas. "The Llano area...was sort of a central island, and sometimes this island was connected with the mainland to the north and sometimes separated," he said. "There were a number of reefs that were built up by various marine organisms that circled that island a couple of hundred miles away. Back behind these reefs were very broad and shallow lagoonal situations. Dinosaurs got out and waded around in these shallow lagoons — for what reason, anybody can guess."

The mud on the bottom, he noted, "was very stiff, and footprints were impressed in it. Sedimentation in the lagoons was very slow so they filled up gradually with overlying muds and limes and were preserved in that way."

Langston now believes the great lizards which made the tracks represent not camptosaurus but a related group of dinosaurs known as iguanodons.

"They were a plant-eating dinosaur which we call an ornithopod," he explained. "It was a primarily bipedal animal with fairly short front legs...the front end of the snout had no teeth and it was sort of spread out and duck-like. It had a thick, long, straight tail...They ranged in size up to 20 or 25 feet in length and maybe 8 to 10 feet high at the head when they were standing upright, and weighed three to five tons."

DESPITE THEIR MASSIVE proportions, iguanodons had relatively small brains. "They were a matter of ounces in weight," said Langston, "but they were certainly adequate."

Lying peacefully secluded a hundred yards beyond a roadside park and historical marker, the tracks thus far have eluded the havoc wreaked by 20th Century graffiti artists and vandals. At least 11 such tracks are clearly visible, with indications that many more must exist beneath overlying rock shelfs.

"They are just fabulous," said Mrs. Lee Harris of Pecos County Historical Commission. "There's no denying what it is."

But for every shred of evidence gleaned from the distant past, a multitude of questions forever surface.

Why did these nonpareil lizards fail to survive? Cataclysm? Starvation? Execution?

Toss the questions to the wind in this land of mesa and creosote and the only answers are the hollow echos of your own cries.

City, school officials debate need for south gate to Midland College

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Traveling west on Wadley, a few motorists slow down when approaching The Hillander School — but not necessarily because of the flashing yellow lights of the 20 mph school zone.

Many seem to hesitate and unconsciously lessen the pressure on the accelerator. Perhaps, just this once, the drivers are thinking, the south gate to Midland College may be open.

It rarely is.

It's not, however, the fault of the college, according to Dr. Jess H. Parrish, MC president.

"We don't even have a key to that gate," he said.

Put in about five years ago as a much-needed second exit after special events at the Al G. Langford Chaparral Center, the gate is locked during the days and unlocked certain nights by the City of Midland.

Located east of The Hillander School, the gate opens to a street which crosses the Northwest Drainage Channel, goes through another gate and enters the street circling the campus.

At the time of construction, MC administrators were opposed to a second entrance to the campus, according to former MC President Dr. Al G. Langford. Their opinion was based on the possibility of unnecessary outside traffic from motorists cutting through the campus to avoid the traffic light at the intersection of Wadley Avenue and Garfield Street.

"The college did not need (a second entrance) in the early stages to be open 24 hours a day," Langford said. "But now, as enrollment has grown, it certainly doesn't need to be closed 24 hours a day."

"(The gate) was put in as a temporary access only," Fred G. Baker, director of public works, said. "We're preparing plans now for its removal."

But this time, MC administrators want the gate.

"If the city is going to remove it, that will eliminate a back entrance," Parrish said. "Something needs to be done."

Although Parrish expressed concerns about outside traffic moving across the campus, he said the second entrance is a necessity despite the problems it has caused on Wadley.

The college hires off-duty policemen to direct traffic onto Wadley following special events. Because of the danger of standing in the middle of a dark street, however, policemen are reluctant to continue the job.

MC trustees supported Parrish's idea of installing a traffic light at the Wadley entrance. If it blinked yellow during the day, cross-town traffic wouldn't be hindered. At night, it could be activated to control traffic in the same manner as the one at the campus' Garfield entrance.

Cost for the light would be around $20,000, according to Baker.

The city wants to take out the gate because the bridge hinders the holding capacity of the drainage channel" during heavy rains, Baker said. "We had anticipated several years ago (the growth of northwest Midland), but no one had predicted the rate of growth."

The channel has been widened and deepened to a point that the bridge is an obstruction and must be removed.

One alternative is to move the gate 1,000 to 2,000 feet east of its present location, Baker said. A serpentine road could gradually run down the slope to emerge on the other side of the drainage ditch.

Control gates, however, would have to be installed to stop traffic in case the ditch began holding water. If this plan were followed, the road would run 5 to 6 feet lower than the existing channel.

"I think it's a possible solution. But I would prefer having no light on Wadley because it is the only east-west thoroughfare that goes from one side of the Loop (250) to the other," Baker said.

If the Wadley entrance is eliminated, Parrish said the only other alternative would be an extension of Haynes Avenue, which would run along the north boundary of the campus.

"But that would still dump all of the traffic on Garfield," he said.

Baker disagreed: "Dumping traffic on Garfield would hinder only the north-south traffic. I think most people could continue traveling west on Haynes."

Another alternative would be to make the circle around the college one-way, he suggested.

Whatever the thoughts of city councilmen and college administators may be, no decision is expected to be made soon.

"We haven't done the engineering work, yet," Baker said. "But if we get a heavy rain and have some major problems with back up (in the drainage ditch), we're probably going to see some quick action."

Hayfever makes seasonal comeback

Rising humidity, planting of grasses contribute

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

West Texas is not usually viewed as an oasis. But it's becoming more like Tucson, Ariz., every day, says Dr. Stephen Wiesenfeld.

"Achoo!"

"We've done what Tucson has — made an oasis out of this chaparral," said Wiesenfeld, a Midland immunologist and allergist.

"Achoo!"

Got a cold, doctor? "No, just hayfever."

The "just hayfever" season, usually predominant from spring through fall, starts earlier every year, says Wiesenfeld.

Although technically it's still winter, people are beginning to sneeze.

"We've planted grass, flowers and trees and watered them to death," he added. "And...Achoo! This is what many Midlanders are doing — sneezing."

A common respiratory allergy, hayfever is rarely caused by hay and there's usually no fever associated with it.

Hayfever is a seasonal allergy characterized by sneezing, itchy and watery eyes, running noses, burning palates and scratchy throats.

Caused by sensitivity to certain substances — most commonly pollens and mold spores — hayfever can range from minor irritation to complete disability.

There are three main pollen sources: trees in early spring, grasses in early summer and weeds in early fall.

"We have a 365-day growing season for weeds," Wiesenfeld said.

If sneezing occurs from spring to fall, the allergic reaction may be from molds, which are equivalent to grass and flower pollen.

ACHOO! Hayfever season is approaching.

Wiesenfeld blames the increase of allergies on rising humidity in "dry West Texas" and the importation of non-native grasses and trees.

He says his practice is blooming with allergy sufferers sneezing their way through his door: "People come in here dragging bushes behind them."

Statistically, 10 to 15 percent of the population — 17 to 23 million people — suffer some type of allergy or asthma.

Although many people can get by with over-the-counter antihistamines and decongestants, some patients suffer complications that require stronger medicine.

According to Wiesenfeld, hayfever deserves to be recognized as more than a mere nuisance.

"It causes lack of sleep and appetite," he said. "It can lower the body's resistance to disease, cause inflammation of the ears, sinuses and throat and bronchi. And a number of hayfever sufferers develop asthma.

"Besides the obvious symptoms, the usually overwhelming symptom is fatigue."

One of the culprits is pollen — a fine, airborne dust that enters the body by inhalation, Wiesenfeld noted.

"Even if it's dry, pollens can travel literally hundreds of miles," he says, explaining that Midland's recent dust storms have triggered early hayfever symptoms.

Springtime allergies are primarily attributable to pollenating grasses, but not every sneeze means a person is having an allergic reaction.

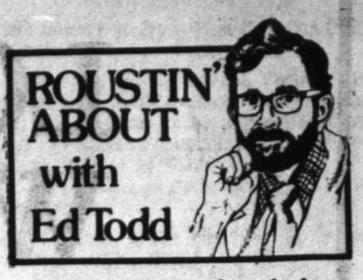

"You should live in an area and become sensitized," he said, adding that before an allergic reaction takes place, an individual first becomes sensitized by exposure to substances known as allergens, which cause the allergy.

In explaining sensitization, Wiesenfeld said: "The first exposure may be uneventful, but in the allergic individual the second or third season may bring on a distressing reaction."

Wiesenfeld says he works up a thorough history on his patients and then tests them for reactions. If the test is positive, the person has an allergy.

"Children who have repeated colds or ear infections may respond to antibiotics, but if they go right back to having problems, they're probably symptomatic."

Junk food not best fuel

You know what drip gasoline does to your car's engine?

It fouls it up and stinks up the air.

Junk food does the same to your body and to the air you breathe.

Though Americans are becoming increasingly health conscious, they still devour junk food as if it were everlastingly good, wholesome and delicious. But it's just like a quick snort of cocaine or a shot of whiskey: The first dose may make you feel comfortable or sensational. But if you take a few more, the shots and snorts will be your undoing. You won't feel so good.

Junk-eaters do have a choice; they don't have to eat those so-called "enriched" junk foods. They could reach for something else if only they would or could break the junk-food habit. It's rough.

But, the good ol' boy who siphons off some of that foul-smelling gasoline because he's stranded out in the oil patch just about has run out of choices; he either puts drip in his fuel tank and sputteringly drive on, or he waits or walks for help.

City dwellers have lots of choices when it comes to nutrition and dieting. Strangely, though, they may not be consciously aware of them. Their druthers may not be on the grocery shelf or in the restaurant's kitchen. They can select from utterly worthless food-like products and imitations, such as sweet cakes, which may fill the belly, expand it and give rise to pimples and irregularities of the colon.

Empty foods, like cigarettes and beer, have the advantage of advertised glamour and the palate appeal of Dallas and New York marketing techniques.

So, what's the glamour of apples and oranges, spinach and broccoli, steak and potatoes, rice and seaweed?

Wholesomeness.

Back when more folks grew gardens down on the farm and in backyard plots in the city, people naturally ate good, ordinary foods. They might go to the store and treat themselves to a candy bar, soft drink and a sack of peanuts. Otherwise, junk food wasn't in their diet.

They might eat an occasional hamburger, which, in some quarters, is a type of junk food. Others tout the hamburger, the taco and the pizza as reasonably nutritious. But a steady diet of the popular foods will turn the amazingly resilient body into a wreck. If you are in doubt, try to draw a correlation between people's physical appearances and apparent health and the food in their grocery carts. It's an enlightening experience.

The junk-food craze, fed by "instant" meals in frozen food counters and fast-food eateries and drive-ins, has made inroads into America's dieting habits. If people were eating wholesome and balanced foods before, they've changed.

The rush of the times surely has affected the quality of people's food intake. They think about wealth but often forego health or put it on a low priority until their poor bodies cry out for mercy.

If they're not "regular," they'll turn to the quick remedy — a flavored laxative — rather than prunes, figs and high-fiber and high-roughage food.

Years ago, men of medicine figured out that tobacco smoking and boozing were damaging to those who indulged in those "vices." Someday the U.S. Surgeon General may announce that a steady diet of junk food may cause a hardy and durable body to peter out and collapse like a car burning that old drip gas.

education in brief

Midlander to visit U.N. with Southwestern class

GEORGETOWN — A Midlander will be among 20 students from Southwestern University who will observe the United Nations in action when her class travels to New York, N.Y., March 8-15.

Freshman Scarlett Jo Moss, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Tommy K. Moss of 702 Sandelwood, will attend briefings on disarmament, transfer of technology, the U.N. Commission for Refugees and clean water supply by the Office of the Secretariat of the U.N. Students also will hear an address by the Palestine Liberation Organization ambassador and will be given an opportunity to ask him questions.

Local student in Rome

CHICAGO, Ill. — Dru-Anne Perry, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W.B. Perry Jr. of 2519 Neely, is studying abroad at Loyola University of Chicago's Rome campus. The junior radio-television film major is a student at Texas Christian University.

Students from about 400 different American colleges and universities have attended the Rome campus of Loyola's College of Arts and Sciences during it's 20-year history.

Top accountant named

ODESSA — Linda S. Kaplan of Odessa has been named top accountant of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

A December 1982 graduate of UTPB, she maintained a 3.85 grade point average and was an active member of the UTPB Accounting Association. She will receive an accounting excellence award and a certificate from the educational foundation of the organization at a May meeting of the Permian Basin chapter of TSCPA.

Nominations sought

ODESSA — Nominations are now open for the 1983 Amoco Foundation Outstanding Teaching Award at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin. Nominations may be made by UTPB students, faculty and administration.

Winner of the $1,000 cash award will be recognized at the annual Honors Convocation, which recognizes academic excellence among faculty and students in the upcoming graduating class. Nominating forms, available on campus bulletin boards must include supporting documentation and at least 10 signatures. Deadline is March 2.

Nominees must be full-time faculty who have had at least a half of their teaching load for the 1982-83 academic year at the undergraduate level and who have completed at least two academic semesters teaching at UTPB.

Book probes death

ODESSA — Two University of Texas of the Permian Basin professors examine the social, psychological and legal aspects of death and dying in a book scheduled for publication this summer.

Dr. R. Colbert Rhodes, associate professor of sociology, and Dr. Clyde Vedder, visiting professor of criminal justice, have co-authored the book "An Introduction to Thanatology — Death and Dying in American Society."

The book, which will primarily be used as a textbook, covers various social psychological and cultural factors influencing mortality. Fear of dying, the roles coroners and doctors play in notifying family, American funeral home ethics and the mourning process also are discussed.

Baressi named to council

Dr. Joseph P. Baressi Jr., superintendent of the Midland Independent School District, was recently selected to serve as a member of the Educational Productivity Council.

He will work with Drs. Authella and Wailand Bessent of the University of Texas at Austin in shaping the EPC into a working organization which seeks to promote improvement in educational programs through the more efficient use of resources within the school system.

The council, is in its third year and is comprised of 26 pacesetter Texas school districts across the state.

Career days planned

About 1,250 ninth-grade students will learn more about careers during Career Days Wednesday at Lee Freshman High School and March 9 at Midland Freshman High School.

Purpose of the events is to make students aware of job entry requirements such as education, experience, licensing or certification. Freshman vocational counselor Joe Williams, who is coordinating the program, said career days also are designed to help students avoid dead-end jobs and to dispel misinformation about careers.

About 50 different careers will be reviewed.

'TCU Today' to be held

FORT WORTH — A "TCU Today" program, coordinated by Texas Christian University admissions office, will be held at 7 p.m. at the Petroleum Club March 8.

Begun in 1965, "TCU Today" is a traveling program that features current students, faculty members and administrators. This spring, the group will explain advantages of an independent, coeducational institution when visiting 23 cities in 12 states.

Reservations for the complimentary program are accepted from high school students and their parents and are available by calling 694-4740.

Sculpture fund formed

AUSTIN — To commemorate The University of Texas' Centennial, the Ex-Students' Association will present a sterling silver sculpture to be placed in a public building on campus.

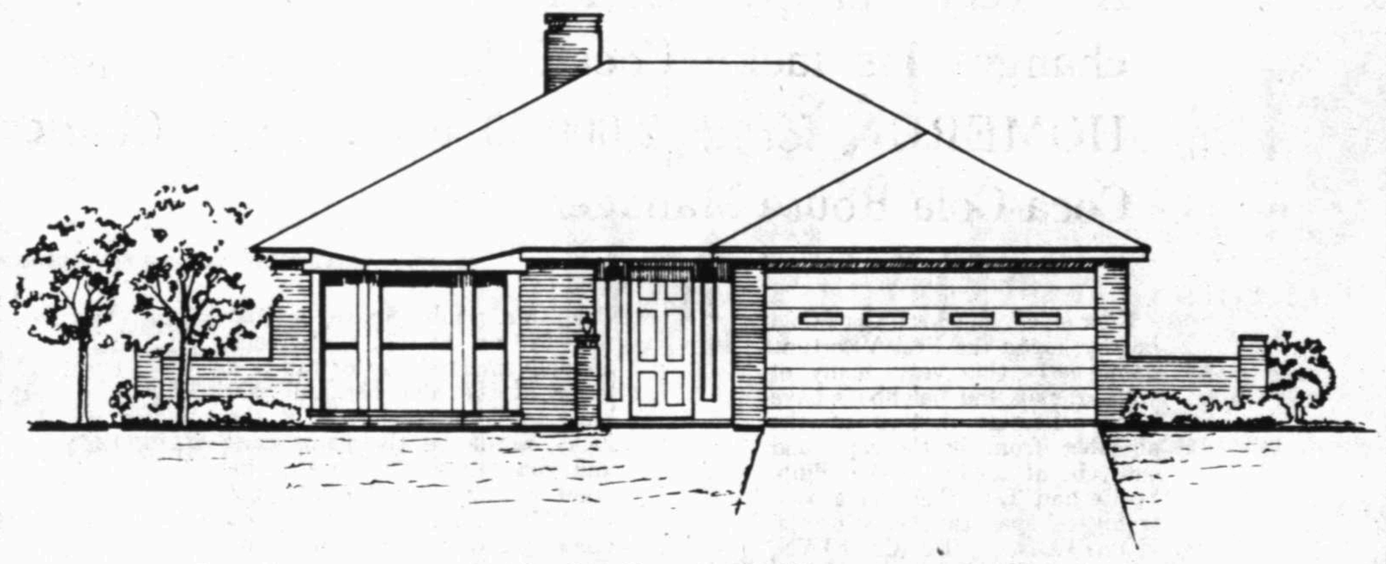

Cash donations will be accepted until March 15 and any Texas Exes Club making a group donation will have its name inscribed on the scroll of donors to be on permanent display at the Alumni Center. The sculpture will be made possible through donations from alumni around the world.

Rusk PTA board to meet

Rusk Elementary PTA Board will meet at 7:45 p.m. Tuesday in the library. Frank Marlow, director of elementary education, is the speaker.

LOOK! THE SIXTH $2000.00 WINNER FROM COCA -COLA PLAYING PEEL-A- FORTUNE IN MIDLAND

A very happy Ogdei Roman Moutes of Midland, Texas, exchanges his lucky Coca-Cola cash caps that spelled the word HOMERUN for a $2,000.00 check from Charles Richardson, Midland Coca-Cola Route Manager.

Ever since your local Coca-Cola bottler began the Peel-A-Fortune game early this year, many of your friends and neighbors have been collecting letters of the alphabet from bottle caps and can tabs of Coca-Cola, Mr. Pibb, Sprite and Tab. They have been trying to spell the lucky words, HOMERUN, TOUCHDOWN, POINT or COKE in hopes of winning a prize or instant cash up to $2,000.00 from their local Coca-Cola bottler. Now, Ogdei Roman Moutes of Midland, Texas has successfully spelled the word HOMERUN in accordance with the Peel-A-Fortune rules and has become Midland's Sixth winner.

You can win too. Just like Patti McDermott, Joe Sanchez, Mrs. Danny Kellum, Mrs. Busbee, Mrs. Allen and Mr. Moutes. When you stock up your picnic supply of soft drinks look for the bottle caps or can tabs of Coca-Cola, Mr. Pibb, Sprite or Tab with $$$ on the top. Under each specially marked cap or tab is a letter of the alphabet. All you have to do is spell one of the lucky words on the game card and you can win a prize or instant cash up to $2,000.00 just like Mr. Moutes, even if you don't spell any of the words, you are a winner because you have provided yourself and your family delicious, refreshing, Coca-Cola or its allied brands of Mr. Pibb, Sprite or Tab.

Coca-Cola...the No. 1 selling soft drink in Midland and the Permian Basin. Coca-Cola...the one the others try to challenge/or compare themselves to whether they are number 2 or 27. Coca-Cola...the one the others want to be when they grow up...the Real Thing. Just ask any of the following $2,000.00 winners in this year's Coca-Cola instant cash contest:

Virginia Busbee, Patti McDermott, Joe Sanchez, Mrs. Danny Kellum, Joyce Allen, Mr. Moutes of Midland and Martha Carlile and Renee Gamble of Clyde; Hope Lopez and James Rogers of Big Spring; Blas De Anada and Williard Farror of Lamesa; Dan Stone of Gayle and David Menzel of Desdemona.

No purchase necessary. Just look for game cards and details where you shop for Coca-Cola, Mr. Pibb Sprite and Tab. So play Peel-A-Fortune with Coca-Cola, Mr. Pibb, Sprite or Tab who knows...you could be a $2,000.00 instant cash winner...just like Mr. Moutes.

Royalty to dine in style

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Some of Hollywood's biggest stars will dine today with Queen Elizabeth II and Prince Philip on the former set of the "M*A*S*H" television series — transformed from Korea to California for the occasion.

Oscar-winning set designer Walter Scott created what he called a "lovely Hollywood-style garden" for the dinner, using fiberglass statues, painted outdoor scenes, 300 live trees, ferns and azaleas and a 24-foot-high fountain.

Among those joining first lady Nancy Reagan and the royal couple at the 20th Century-Fox lot will be such entertainment royalty as Bette Davis, Loretta Young, Fred Astaire, Rex Harrison, Frank Sinatra, George Burns, Greer Garson and Ginger Rogers.

The Reagans' daughter Patti Davis, will attend, as will former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger and the Reagans' socialite friend, Betsy Bloomingdale.

'Tribute' tryouts slated

Tryouts for Bernard Slade's "Tribute" are scheduled for Tuesday and Wednesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Redfern Room at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

"Tribute," which opens April 8 in Theatre I, has all the warmth and wit, humor and humanity, raucousness and romance found in Slade's smash hit, "Same Time Next Year." It features Scotty Templeton, age 50, who is the little boy who never grew up. A modern day Peter Pan, he is the hit of every party and the best friend of everyone, except his 21-year-old son. The play focuses on his attempt to woo and win the love and affection of the one person who means the most in his life.

Roles are available for three men and four women, with ages ranging from early 20s to early 60s. Perusal copies of the play are available in the Midland Community Theatre business office at Theatre Midland. The production will be directed by Ted Strickland. It is funded, in part, by a grant from Dresser Titan and Dresser Magcobar.

Thouvenel Quartet to be in concert

Today at 2:30 p.m. the Friends of Music will host members of the Thouvenel String Quartet and others in a chamber music concert at First Christian Church, 1301 W. Louisiana Ave.

Artists performing will be Eugene Purdue, violin; Sally Chisholm, viola; Jeff Levenson, cello; and Karen Follingstad, piano. Works to be performed include "Fairy Tales" by Robert Schumann, "Suite Populaire Espagnole" by Manuel de Falla, Sonata No. 3 "Ballade" by Eugene Ysaye and Piano Quartet in C-minor by Johannes Brahms.

The concert is open to the public at no charge. A free will offering will be taken.

Fiddling contest to be held at mall

Midland Park Mall will host the third annual "Best Little Fiddling Contest" in Texas Saturday.

The contest, approved by the Texas Old-Time Fiddlers Association, will award over $2,250 in cash prizes. Competition in the contest will be divided into the following age groups: up to 21 years old; 22-46 years old; 47-59 years old; and 60 and over.

Contestants must be members of the Texas Old-Time Fiddlers Association to participate in this event. Information regarding membership may be obtained by calling Midland Park Mall at 694-1663.

Pickwick Players 'honored' to be going to Savannah

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

ENTERTAINMENT

Going on tour sounds exciting, especially to kids. The competition for this Pickwick Players trip was tough. After all, Savannah, Ga., isn't next door.

Forty hopefuls showed up on audition day to beg, plead, steal or act their way into six slots. The odds didn't favor newcomers, but talent, drive and determination balanced the sheet.

When the cast list was posted, it was an even split. Three were veterans — Dee Ann Jones, Joe White and John Dennett. The surprised, shocked and dazed others weren't seasoned thespians — Stuart Williams Jr., Julie DeLong and Jenny DeLong.

"At first I was really surprised because usually much older and more experienced kids go on tour and I've been in Pickwicks for a year," Stuart said. Pausing, the 12-year-old added, "I'm one of the youngest."

Julie, 13, was "thrilled." She said, "I was really worried I wasn't going because we'd just started Pickwicks." Julie and her sister, Jenny, have been members of Pickwicks for less than a year.

For Jenny, age 16, auditions left her "wandering around in a daze.

"Sometimes at auditions you can tell, but this one you couldn't. It was really nerve-racking," Jenny said.

These Pickwicks are going to Savannah Wednesday to perform in the Southeastern Theatre Conference Festival of Plays for Young People.

"We're the only children's youth group going. There will be other youth groups there to perform children's plays, but they are all adults," Stuart said.

"It's a great honor to be asked to go," Dee Ann, 16, said, adding, "It's really important to the Pickwicks; it will give us great publicity."

But the trip isn't free.

"The board (Midland Community Theatre's board of governors) has underwritten the project, but the Pickwicks have to pay the board back" Elizabeth Spicer said. Elizabeth and Michael Spicer, theater school directors at MCT, will accompany the Pickwicks to Savannah.

"The total cost of the trip is $3,800 of which they (Pickwicks) have raised approximately $1,800," Ms. Spicer said.

"All the other groups performing are professional and college level, so it is quite an honor." She added, "We would appreciate anyone out there who would be interested in supporting this trip." American Airlines is picking up the fare.

Each of the six Pickwicks going has multiple parts in Shirley Pugh's "In One Basket," a collection of fairy tales. Polling the five who were present to find out their most challenging role revealed some interesting identity problems.

For Stuart the tale of the "Tiny Little Woman," which has a voice and a tiny little woman, represents his greatest challenge.

"I play the tiny little woman. I wear a dress, granny glasses and a bonnet," Stuart said. After thinking about what he had said for a moment, he added, "You can put this in the paper; I just don't know if it will help my reputation with my peers."

Stuart isn't alone. Joe Hill, 17, is in the same spot.

"I'm playing a small girl with a high falsetto voice," said Joe, who is decidedly not short. But then for this role his height isn't a problem. He'll be on his knees onstage.

Dee Ann has the reverse problem. She plays a boy.

"My most challenging role is probably Gustoff — a young boy who is very stupid. I think it's hard because it's a boy and I have to act really stupid. Girls are just easier to play; we're more flamboyant about our emotions."

Stuart and Joe might want to argue that point.

Jenny finds her hardest role to be that of a grandmother.

"I'm having a hard time with her voice and her mannerisms. I play mostly mothers and wives," she said. Then she added, "At one point I play a boy."

When asked if this was a difficult role for her she said, "No. I just deepen my voice and act tough."

Her sister Julie was the other cast member polled who was not having any problems playing male-female reversed roles.

Her most challenging role is unisex. She's playing a button.

Pulitzer Prize winning author, Tennessee Williams, left, confers with actor Richard Burton on the set of the film "Boom" in Italy in 1967. Williams died Friday at the age of 71.

Williams died by choking on bottlecap, doctor says

NEW YORK (AP) — Playwright Tennessee Williams choked to death on a bottlecap of the type used in nasal spray or eye solution dispensers, New York City's chief medical examiner said Saturday.

"Why it was there, I can't say," Dr. Elliot Gross said of the bottlecap, adding that the autopsy showed William's death appeared to be accidental.

The 71-year-old playwright, who won Pulitzer Prizes for "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof" and "A Streetcar Named Desire," died Friday.

Williams' secretary, John Uecker, who shared the playwright's two-room suite at the Hotel Elysee in Manhattan, told police that at about 11 p.m. Thursday he heard a noise from Williams' room, but did not investigate. Uecker entered the room at 10:45 a.m. Friday and found Williams lying next to the bed.

An empty wine bottle and some pills were found in the room, according to police, but Gross refused to comment on whether drugs or alcohol were a factor in the death.

He said chemical tests would be done over the next few weeks.

Gross also would not say whether the bottle cap actually came from either an eye solution or a nasal spray dispenser. He said the cap "lodged in the upper air passage" just below the opening to the larynx, indicating Williams had swallowed it.

Gross said Williams, who has been plagued by a history of health problems, was in acceptable physical condition "for a man of his age."

Gross refused to detail any circumstances surrounding the death. "I can't conjecture on the death," he said.

Final classification of the death would come later, he said, adding, "Deaths of this type are considered accidental."

Funeral arrangments remained incomplete Saturday. A memorial service was scheduled for Wednesday at the Tennessee Williams Fine Arts Center in Key West, Fla., where the playwright spent much of his time.

Williams battled health problems for years, mixing pills and alcohol in his bouts with depression, particularly during the '60s, a period he called in his memoirs "my stoned age."

The success which made him a force in the theater after World War II eluded him during the '60s, when the playwright said his life "fell apart" after the death of his longtime companion, Frank Merlo.

Williams' brother, Dakin, committed him to a hospital for drug addiction in 1969. The playwright continued to fight several physical ailments, including osteoarthritis, cataracts and heart problems.

"I've had every disorder known to man," he once said.

His passionate, often violent, stories of his regional South were infused with the dark side of his nature. Like the playwright, his characters were often vulnerable, tortured people.

"There was something of his own agony in every part," said actor Joss Ackland, who performed in a 1974 revival of "A Streetcar Named Desire."

Williams' plays at first shocked audiences with their use of homosexuality, nymphomania and sexual neuroses.

His first big success, "The Glass Menagerie," portrayed a young woman's preoccupation with her glass collection of animals. It was said to based on his own unhappy childhood and his sister Rose — later confined to a sanitarium.

Born March 26, 1911 in Columbus, Miss., the playwright was baptized Thomas Lanier Williams, the name under which he published his early works. He adopted the name Tennessee because he thought it better suited an author.

His works, which include more than 24 full-length plays, dominated the Broadway stage during the 1940s and '50s.

Local man wins camera competition

Bill Conrad of Midland won first place in the Gulf Coast States Camera Club bi-monthly slide competition with an entry entitled "Beggars."

The Midland Camera Club also took first place in the 21-club competition, a first ever, by compiling 39 points, beating out Houston and Tulsa, 38 each; and Amarillo and New Orleans, 37 each.

The club meets at 7:30 p.m. Monday at the Planetarium and the subject will be "Composition."

No retreat now

In his State of the Union message on Jan. 26, 1982, President Reagan said he would not retreat from his economic programs and urged Congress to pass his proposed "New Federalism."

Three Midland Community Theater actors chosen for All Star Cast

An All Star Cast was chosen at the West Texas Festival of American Community Theatres competition held in Odessa Feb. 19. Three of the five, Renee Yarborough, Mykel Mengert and Norma Short, were cast members in Midland Community Theatre's production of "Tintypes."

Purpose of the Odessa festival was to choose two plays from the western quadrant of Texas which would then compete in the Festival of American Community Theatres state contest slated April 1-3 at Houston's Nine Vance Alley Theatre.

MCT's production of "Tintypes" was chosen to be among the eight entries from throughout Texas at the state competition.

"Tintypes," originally produced at MCT last October and revived at the Yucca Theater in January, is a charming ragtime revue directed by Michael Spicer with musical direction by Shirley Hansen. The other cast members are Oza Whitten and Paula Butts.

One state representative will be chosen in Houston to compete in the five-state regional FACT competition, held April 22-24 in Denton.

The other production chosed to represent the western quadrant of Texas is Permian Playhouse's "Elephant Man."

Other members of the All Star Cast are Jeannie Summers of Permian Playhouse's "Elephant Man" and Fernando Mancillas of the Gilbert and Sullivan production from El Paso.

Mike Stevens

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

From Loverboy's hot rock to Tom Jones' pop eclectic, concerts at Midland College's Chaparral Center have run the entertainment scale.

Chaparral Center's fiscal year ends every September. The 1981-82 season, manager Mike Stevens said, "Was our best year ever. We had some of the most outstanding touring talent last year."

Sellout concerts included Ronnie Milsap, Alabama and Loverboy. Stevens said Midland was fortunate to get Loverboy because the Canadian rock group "didn't play that many places in Texas. The group played Dallas, Houston, San Antonio and us."

Other concerts held included Mel Tillis, Hank Williams Jr./Earl Thomas Conley, Chicago and Tom Jones.

Jones' concert was an important one because, as Stevens said, "It was the first time since the building opened with Captain and Teneille that a middle-of-the-road act was brought in. It (the concert) was excellent. They were hoping to draw 5,000 and we did nearly 4,700, so it was everything they hoped it would be and more." Stevens was pleased that the promoter's reaction to the concert here was he "wanted to do more business."

As far as this year is concerned, Stevens said, "It may be better."

Concerts in 1983 began with ZZ Top Jan. 2, which drew a crowd of 6,800, even, as Stevens said, "with a foot of snow on the ground.

"It was an excellent show, with the greatest light show I've ever seen." Pausing, Stevens added, "I didn't know I had a rock crowd here. It was the best rock crowd I've ever seen and I've been to concerts in Dallas, Fort Worth and Lubbock. There was no rowdiness."

This year has been a "very quiet year but very productive." So far attendance is "up 25 percent. A lot of that is attributed to basketball."

Chaparral Center is the home court of the defending national junior college champions, the Chaparrals.

"We've set all kinds of new basketball attendance records for the college this year. It's like having a concert every time they play with crowds ranging from 2,500 to 4,000."

Chaparral Center hasn't had a monopoly on presenting diverse offerings to its audiences. The Allison Fine Arts' McCormick Gallery has presented exhibits ranging from the 528-year-old German Gutenberg Bible to Midland contemporary art.

Currently at the mid-point in its season, the exhibitions scheduled this year have been favorably received.

Of all the shows, Warren Taylor, MC art instructor in charge of exhibitions, said, "The Gutenberg Bible, because of its universal appeal, and the (Marc) Chagall prints were the ones which attracted the largest audiences. We estimated around 2,500 which is the largest attendance we've ever had for a show here for a 10-day period."

The first volume of the two-part Gutenberg Bible, purchased by The University of Texas at Austin for $2.4 million in 1978, was on display from the end of January through Feb. 6. It is one of 48 surviving copies of the 180 estimated printed. During UT-Austin's bicentennial year the Gutenberg Bible, recognized as the first extant book known to have been printed on a press using moveable type, is on a tour of 18 Texas cities.

Forty of Chagall's 105 etchings illustrating The Bible were on display at the same time as the Gutenberg Bible. The Chagall etchings belong to the Perkins School of Theology at Southern Methodist University.

When asked what other exhibits have received popular appeal, Taylor said, "I would have to say that the photographs by Russell Lee last fall were well received.

"And this contemporary art show is creating a lot of conversations pro and con. For it, we had an enormous opening reception."

The Contemporary Artists of Midland exhibit is up until March 4. It features works by 14 local artists.

Next up is the circuit section of the Texas Fine Arts National Show in Austin, which will hang through the rest of March. It will be followed by the MC faculty exhibit in April and the two-week MC student exhibition in May.

This summer the travel section of the Texas Watercolor Society exhibit will be on display in the McCormick Gallery in July.

The diverse exhibit schedule at MC this year is a result of increased funds. As Taylor said, "Our exhibit budget was increased so our exhibits were more attractive and of a broader interest."

When asked if economic conditions here would affect the budget for next year, Taylor said, "I can't determine at this point in time budgetwise what will happen to our exhibit fund, but I assume it will remain the same."

Pete Cetera of "Chicago" sings during the group's appearance at Chaparral Center in 1982.

Many memorable moments end with 'M*A*S*H' finale

Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD — Kellye Nakahara was crying because "M*A*S*H" was finished.

Nakahara, who plays the plump little Oriental nurse on the series, was no more unhappy than anyone else associated with "M*A*S*H" that afternoon. It was the finale, the last day of shooting for everybody and, for some, the end of an 11-year adventure in artistic success on television.

The last original "M*A*S*H" episode, show No. 251, will be aired Monday when the landmark series finally finds peace in a 2½-hour finale on CBS.

It will be the end for many memorable moments in a show which lasted more than three times longer than the war it depicted.

Goodbye to the ersatz martinis in the swamp. Goodbye to Hot Lips. Goodbye to the peeks into the nurses' shower room. Goodbye to the trays of creamed chipped beef on toast. Goodbye to Klinger's party frocks and to his favorite place in Toledo, Packo's.

Goodbye to the incoming choppers. Goodbye to the operating room and post-op. Goodbye to the plasma and the morphine and the placid visits from Sidney Freedman. Goodbye to the colonel, his faithful horse and Mrs. P.

And goodbye to the plaintive theme song, Johnny Mandel's "Suicide Is Painless," now familiar to millions.

The final night of "M*A*S*H" was written by a committee and directed by Alan Alda. It was to have been a two-hour show, but they wound up with so much good stuff they couldn't bear to throw it away.

Peace, such as it is in Korea, does arrive and the 4077th is faced with the problems of getting its wartime lives geared up for new challenges. Nothing comes easily, including, incredible as it may seem, coming home. And saying goodbye.

"We're keeping the contents (of the final episode) secret," Mike Farrell (B.J. Hunnicut) said. "We don't need to divulge anything to attract an audience."

John Rappaport, the supervising producer of "M*A*S*H," was asked if anybody in the cast dies. "My answer has been, we've killed before and we could kill again," Rappaport said. "We wrote the movie so that it's the best entertainment we can provide, without regard to future spinoffs."

The final chapter has a huge cast with virtually everybody still with the show included. The list also includes portrayals of President Truman and Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

Klinger has got to get home somehow, we know, because he, Col. Sherman Potter (Harry Morgan) and Father Mulcahy will be the stars of a new CBS series about their lives back in the states. The new chapters are scheduled to begin unfolding on television in the fall.

The rest of the cast also will keep busy. Most are looking at offers of new TV series. Alda, the glue that held the 4077th together throughout its war, is multitalented and he'll be busy in several areas of entertainment.

Give Rebels another Comanche Relays crown

Rankin's Dennis Black guides Red Devils to Division I title

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

FORT STOCKTON — After winning their fifth Comanche Relays title over the last six years, one couldn't blame the Midland Lee Rebels if they are asking Fort Stockton to be the annual host of the District 4-5A track meet.

Coach Sam Volpe's thinclads rolled out 151⅓ points here Saturday to keep their Comanche domination intact, and they did it with a blend of new and old talent.

Highly touted sophomore Walter Jones won his first varsity race in the 100 meters while junior Issac Garnett, the defending shot put title holder in 4-5A, took up where he left off last year with a win in the shot. Old time senior Luther Johnson won both the long jump and intermediate hurdles while senior Damon Polk, a Region I qualifier a year ago, nailed down the high hurdle title.

It all added up to a 10-point victory over the Odessa Ector, er... Odessa Permian Panthers. The Panthers just look like Ector with all the new southside blood.

San Angelo was a distant third with 115⅓ points, but the Bobcats were way ahead of the rest of field, which was made up of 4-5A teams. It was mini-district meet. It appears that the track year will feature the Big Three — Lee, Permian and San Angelo — and the rest. Midland High was fourth with only 39 points. The lower five 4-5A teams combined would have only finished third with 119 points.

JOHNSON'S VICTORY in the intermediate hurdles was a new meet record after burning to a 39.36 and Polk's win in the highs was also a meet record with a 14.41. Neither was pleased with the record setting performances, however.

"I didn't get out of the blocks well and I hurt my ankle," was Polk's reply to the record pace while Johnson said, "I had to take everyone on the back curve. I was getting stronger while everyone else seemed to get weaker. I can do better."

Johnson also ran a leg on both Lee relay teams, both finishing second. Polk ran on the mile relay team.

The long awaited debut of Jones, however, turned out to be special. Jones won the 100 meters with a 10.85, but it was Midland High's Allan Foret who Jones had to beat at the wire. Both are sophomores and it looks like a three-year battle could shape up between the two.

"I didn't know if I had won or not at the end, but I just kept running," said Jones, who also was second in the 200 meters, third in the long jump and ran a leg on the sprint relay.

Garnett's 54-6½ in the shot put was a career best, but "Things got all fouled up with the shot put going on at the same time. We had to wait on several of the discus guys and we all got cold."

MIDLAND HIGH'S only victory came from Chuck St. Germain in the 800 meters, an event he qualified in for the Region I meet last year. St. Germain posted a 1:59.35, but he too wasn't pleased. "I didn't run a smart race at all. I was fourth coming off the last turn and just barely won at the tape."

Foret was close to bringing MHS another win, but Jones got by him at the very end of the 100.

Rankin walked away with the Division I title by a 109-72 margin over rival Reagan County. Dennis Black led the way with victories in the 200 and 100 while anchoring Rankin's winning mile relay team. Reagan County won two events with Howard Williams in the high jump and Gregg Fisher in the intermediate hurdles. Mark Helms of Stanton won the 100 meters and McCamey's Terry Kenny took the long jump.

Monahans won the Division II race going away, posting 123 points to Andrews' 97. Andrews won five events, but lack of depth hurt. Kirk Pearcy, as usual, won the 1600 and 800 meter races while Larry Baeza took the 200, Brent Shoemaker the 3200 and Leo Ruiz the pole vault.

Only four meet records fell Saturday, all coming in the Division III competition. In addition to Lee's two hurdle records, Permian's Dennis Alexander rushed to a 49.12 in the 400 meters for another record and Permian's mile relay got the other with a 3:21.29.

Duncanville rallies to gain state berth

By CHAD PUERLING
Sports Writer

The Duncanville Panthers rallied from a 13-point fourth quarter deficit to defeat the Nimitz Vikings 43-42 for the Region I Girls' 5-A Basketball championship at Chaparral Center Saturday.

With the victory, the third in four meetings over their district rivals this season, Duncanville won a trip to the state meet in Austin next weekend.

Nimitz, which built the 36-23 lead with a tenacious man-to-man defense and accurate shooting, tried to slow the pace of the game and force the Panthers out of their zone by holding the ball in the final period. But the strategy backfired as the Vikings committed seven turnovers and didn't get a basket in the final eight minutes of play as they were outscored 20-6.

"We were trying to keep them from beating us instead of going out there and beating them," Nimitz coach Al Tiler said, "And there is a difference. We tried to hang on instead of attack and they shut down our offense."

IN THE final quarter, Duncanville hit nine of 13 shots from the field, which was led by Cathy Nixon's 6-for-8 performance. The 6-foot-1 junior had a game high 21 points and was named to the All-Tournament team.

"They were scoring well on us," Duncanville coach Sandra Meadows said. "To me it's a mistake to hold the ball, but that's what got them this far. They play that kind of a game, we don't."

Nimitz got a break with two seconds left when the time keeper failed to start the clock on a jump ball that was tipped out of bounds. Since Duncanville's Shelly Wolf won the jump, the ball went to Nimitz for one last play. A beautifully executed inbounds play gave Ava Reyna the ball under the basket but her layup hit the backboard, bounced to the front of the rim and fell harmlessly to the floor.

MONICA SCHULTZ, who scored 19 in the losing cause, was named the tournaments most valuable player. The 5-foot-6 foward, who had 25 points in the Vikings' first round victory, was perfect from the line (5-for-5), hit seven of nine from the field and hauled in eight rebounds in the final game.

Cheryl Woodruff joined teammate Nixon on the All Tournament team along with Nimitz' point guard Marlee Clark, Eastwood's Carol Glover and Bel Air's La Tanya Thompson.

The victory gave coach Meadows her third trip to the state meet. "We won it all in '76 and lost the finals by one to Lubbock Monterey in '81," she said.

"This team has the best and most talent I've ever coached, but they lack the court sense and maturity of previous teams. We have the height, speed and leapers," she said, "Better athletes than I've ever had. I guess that's why I expect so much from them."

STATISTICALLY NIMITZ looked like the easy winner. The shorter Vikings out rebounded the Panthers 29-15. Duncanville's inside starters included 6-1 Nixon, 5-10 Wolf and 5-10 Woodruff while Nimitz had 5-8 Jerrilyn Edgar, 5-6 Schultz and 5-5 Wendy Pate.

Nimitz also out shot Duncanville both from the field and the free throw line. The Vikings used excellent shot selection in hitting 15 of 27 (56 per cent) from the field, complimented by an 80 per cent performance (12 of 15) from the charity stripe.

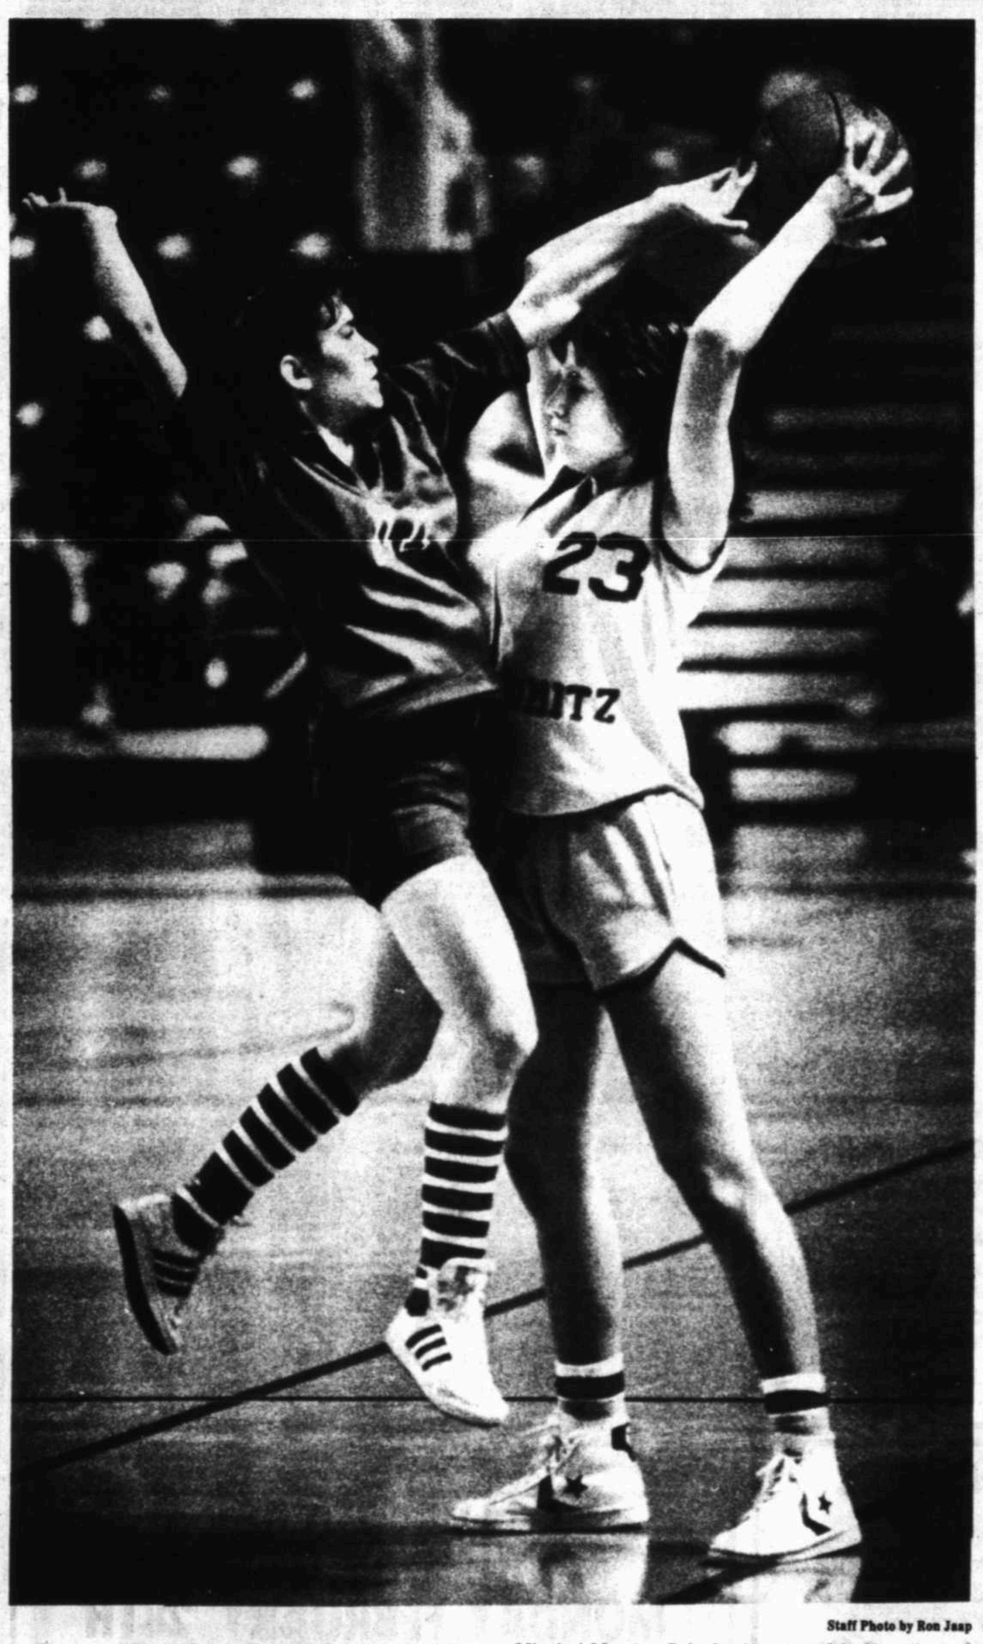

Duncanville shot poorly hitting 18 of 45 (40 per cent) from the field and seven of 16 (44 per cent) from the line.

Houston rolls Rice, 86-52

SWC BASKETBALL

By The Associated Press

HOUSTON - Amid shouts of "We're No. 1," Akeem Olajuwon scored 15 points and blocked five shots as second ranked Houston rolled to an 86-52 victory over Rice Saturday night and extended its winning streak to 18 games, longest in the nation.

The victory boosted Houston to a 23-2 season record and 14-0 in the Southwest Conference and put the Cougars in position to challenge for the No. 1 spot in The Associated Press Poll following Fullerton States upset of No. 1 ranked University of Nevada-Las Vegas.

The Cougar victory also set up a showdown Thursday in Fayetteville, Ark. against No. 6 ranked Arkansas. Houston is 0-7 in games played at Arkansas' Barnhill Arena.

The Owls, who dropped to 8-17 on the season and 2-13 in SWC play, started to wilt through the opening 10 minutes of the second half when Michael Young hit all 12 of his points as the Cougars sprinted into an insurmountable lead.

Arkansas 77, Texas Tech 63

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. — Junior Alvin Robertson scored 19 points and senior Darrell Walker had 17 Saturday night as sixth-ranked Arkansas defeated Texas Tech 77-63.

The Razorbacks, now 24-1 overall and 13-1 in the Southwest Conference, are to play the Cougars Thursday in Fayetteville. Houston defeated Rice Saturday night to run its league mark to 14-0. Arkansas' only loss has been to Houston.

Tech never got closer than nine points again. With Walker and Robertson inflicting most of the damage, Arkansaw pulled out to a 71-47 lead before using substitutes for most of the final four minutes.

The victory was Arkansas 100th against only six defeats at Barnhill Arena in the nine years Coach Eddie Sutton has been with the Razorbacks. Tech fell to 10-17, including 7-7 in the SWC.

Baylor 86, Texas 57

AUSTIN — Baylor reserve Glen Mays had a game-high 15 points, and another substitute, Craig Kaiser, scored 14 as the Bears took an easy 86-57 victory over listless Texas.

Baylor led by 24 at the half, 46-22, and increased its margin to 35 points five minutes into the second half.

Starting guard Jay Shakir also had 14 points for the Bears.

Carlton Cooper and David Seitz each scored 14 to lead Texas.

The victory upped Baylor's season record to 11-14, 3-11 in the Southwest Conference. Texas dropped to 6-19 and 1-13.

Texas A&M 60, Texas Christian 58 OT

COLLEGE STATION, Texas — Freshman Kenny Brown swished a 25-foot jumper with four-seconds left in overtime to give Texas A&M a 60-58 win over Texas Christian. The win raised A&M's record to 8-6 in the SWC and 15-13 overall and kept Aggies hopes alive for a first-round bye in the upcoming postseason tournament. TCU fell to 9-6 in the SWC and 18-8 overall.

Claude Riley led Texas A&M with 18 points, while Tyron Naulls and Brown each scored 10.

Doug Arnold paced TCU with 18 points, Darrell Browder had 15 and Christensen added 11.

Browder's field goal with 11:27 remaining made him TCU's all-time leading scorer, surpassing Dick O'Neal, who scored 1,723 points at TCU between 1955 and 1957. Browder now has 1,729 points.

Sudan ousts Greenwood

LEVELLAND — The Greenwood girl's basketball team was eliminated from the state playoffs by Sudan 64-40 in the semi-finals of the Region I playoffs here Saturday.

"You can put your money on Sudan for the state title," Greenwood coach Cliff Stephens said. "It was no disgrace losing to them, they have a great team."

Greenwood stayed within reach of Sudan through the first two periods but the second half belonged to the Hornettes as they outscored Greenwood 34-15.

"It was 30-25 at the half but the third quarter broke our backs," Stephens said. "In the fourth quarter we had to foul and they must have made 12 or 13 freethrows."

Sudan had three players in double figures led by Lisa Wood's 18. The Hornettes canned 26 from the charity stripe.

Renvy Evans, the only senior starter for Greenwood, scored 18.

Greenwood (40): Renvy Evans, 8-5-21; Michelle Fletcher, 0-0-0; Kay Wallace, 2-1-5, Cindy Lee, 1-0-2; Belinda Duke, 1-4-6; Andrea Graham, 0-0-0; Diona Dean, 1-0-2; Maria Morgette, 1-2-4. Totals: 14-13—40.

Sudan (64): Lisa Wood, 7-4-18; Shanda Vernon, 0-8-8; Judy Wiseman, 5-3-13; Marie Withrow, 0-4-4; Missy Fisher, 2-2-6; Charla Harrison, 5-2-12; Shawnda Mastan, 0-2-2; Jeannia nix, 0-1-1. Totals: 19-26—64.

High school baseball season soon here

Johnson likes MHS, Whalen Lee, both pick Big Spring

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Depending on who you ask — Tim Whalen at Midland High or Ernie Johnson at Midland Lee — each of the two Tall City high school baseball teams could be in the running for District 4-5A's two state playoff berths. Whalen likes Lee's chances and Johnson prefers Midland High's.

"Lee will be a runner at it and I think Big Spring," said Whalen when asked to pick a district favorite.

Why Midland Lee?

"Because of Ernie Johnson who is the best high school coach I know. He also has Barry Blackwell and four pitchers back from last year."

"Big Spring first, Midland High second," said Lee's Johnson when asked to make his choice. "After that it could be anybody."

Why Midland High?

"Tim has a chance to have a good ball club," said Johnson. "They look like they can hit the ball real well. If they find some pitching, Tim can feel his way along."

WHILE EACH coach likes the chances his cross-town counter-part has, neither seems to be thrilled with his own team's prospects as the 1983 baseball season nears opening day.

"We might be down in the pack somewhere," said Whalen who has six varsity players back from last year's team. Despite his cautious outlook, Whalen does see some strong points to his team.

"The shortstop (returning varsity starter Jose Carrasco) will be one and Tim Davis, whereever he plays (pitcher, catcher or outfield) will be our strengths." said Whalen. "Judd Ryan (who played varsity last year) is looking good at third base and our outfield has been pretty adequate so far and I think they're going to get better.

"Our pitching is uproven so far," continued Whalen. "We're in the same boat as last year but as far as variety goes, we have more kids to choose from. Five or six kids can go to the mound and throw strikes. If Tommy Davis comes through behind the plate, that means we can put (Tim) Davis in the outfield or at pitcher. Tommy's doing an adequate job right now."

On the other side of the coin — the weaknesses — Coach Whalen said, "We're not going to have great speed. A couple of kids can hit the ball hard, but (Tim) Davis is the only long-ball threat we have."

MIDLAND LEE'S season seems to be relying heavily on four returning pitchers: Craig Ray, Kerry Robertson, John Denton and Brian Willis. All four saw starting action in the Rebel rotation last year.

But, after the first few weeks of practice, Coach Johnson isn't too thrilled with what they've shown so far.

"We have a lot of pitching back but they haven't shown a lot yet," he said. "We've got all four back from last year and they've shown nothing, especially Willis who was our top pitcher last year and is probably fourth this year. He's throwing the ball hard, but throwing it high.

"Craig Ray has been wild and Kerry Robertson and John Denton have been so-so. They haven't had good control mainly."

And if the pitchers don't find their control?

"If not, we're not going to be very strong at all," said Coach Johnson.

"Our outfield is weak defensively and just about as weak offensively. The seniors have been weak as a group. I've given them their chance to perform, and they haven't come through. I've been totally dissatisfied with the seniors so far. They're no where near ready to contend for the district title and district play is coming sooner this year and what we do now is important for them."

One senior did escape Johnson's wrath, shortstop Barry Blackwell who is, other than the pitchers, the only returning starter from last year.

"Blackwell is hitting the ball real good," said Johnson.

Hitting is another area Coach Johnson isn't too thrilled about, hitting and speed. "We don't have bad speed, a few guys can run, but overall we don't have great team speed," he said. "We're nill on power. We're going to have trouble scoring runs."

With the baseball season for Midland High and Lee scheduled to start on Tuesday with doubleheaders in Lubbock (MHS at Coronado and Lee at Monterey, each at 2 p.m.), there isn't much time to improve on the weak areas for either club.

The Quotebook...

"When we go on the road, we always try to get back the night of the game. We try to leave so the team can eat its meals on campus. We try to cut every corner we can," Bishop College Coach Ben Lilly on what it's like coaching a Black small college basketball team in the Dallas area.

Villanova edges St. John's

College Basketball

By The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Center John Pinone sank a 17-foot jumper with one second left in overtime, carrying seventh-ranked Villanova to a 71-70 victory over No. 9 St. John's in BE college basketball Saturday.

Pinone, a 6-foot-8 senior, had sent the game into overtime with a pair of free throws with 1:07 left that tied the game at 58-58. He did not have a field goal after halftime until his winning basket.

Villanova is now 21-4 overall and 12-2 in the Big East. St. John's is 23-4 and 11-4 in the conference.

Florida State 74, Memphis State 72

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Freshman forward Granville Arnold rolled in a layup with two seconds remaining as Florida State, sparked by Mitchell Wiggins' 37 points, upset 14th-ranked Memphis State 74-72 Saturday in Metro Conference basketball action.

The victory moved Florida State ahead of Memphis State in the league standings. The Seminoles have a 14-10 record overall and are 5-5 in Metro play. Memphis State dipped to 19-5 and 4-5 in the conference.

Louisville 73, W. Kentucky 62

BOWLING GREEN, Ky. — Lancaster Gordon scored 10 of his 14 points in the second half to lead No. 5 Louisville to a 73-62 victory over Western Kentucky.

Louisville, 24-3, held an early 5-2 lead before the Hilltoppers capped a 10-0 scoring run on a three-point play by Tony Wilson to take a 12-5 lead with 16:42 remaining. Western, 12-15, later extended its margin to 11 at 26-15 with 8:50 to go on a layup by Percy White.

Missouri 54, Nebraska 51

LINCOLN, Neb. — John Sundvold's 19 points allowed Missouri to defeat Nebraska 54-51 and clinch at least a share of the Big Eight Conference basketball title Saturday night.

The No. 15 Tigers are now 10-2 in the conference and 22-6 overall. Despite its loss, Nebraska still was able to clinch a home-court berth in the first round of the conference basketball playoffs when Oklahoma State defeated Iowa State 78-70. Nebraska is now 7-5 in the conference and 16-8 overall.

Boston College 70, Pittsburgh 52

PITTSBURGH — John Garris scored 15 of his 19 points in the first half as 19th-ranked Boston College breezed to a 70-52 victory over Pittsburgh in a Big East Conference basketball game Saturday night.

Boston College, 20-5, fell behind by five points early in the game, but never trailed after Jay Murphy scored six consecutive points in less than a minute to push the Eagles into a 27-23 lead.

Billy Culbertson scored 10 points for Pitt, which fell to 13-12 overall and 6-8 in the Big East.

Michigan St. 62, Indiana 54

EAST LANSING, Mich. — Sam Vincent pumped in 19 points to lead Michigan State to a 62-54 upset victory over fourth-ranked Indiana in Big Ten basketball Saturday night.

The defeat was the Hoosiers' second straight as they fell to 10-5 in the conference and 20-5 overall. Michigan State lifted its record to 6-8 and 13-11.

Georgetown 71, Seton Hall 60

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Patrick Ewing scored 16 points and had seven steals to lead 18th-ranked Georgetown to a 71-60 BEC victory over Seton Hall.

Freshman Horace Broadnax came off the bench to score 12 points for Georgetown, which boosted its record to 19-7 overall and 9-4 in the Big East.

The Pirates, who lost to Georgetown 71-48 earlier this season, fell to 5-20 overall and 1-14 in the conference.

Kentucky 81, Georgia 72

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Charles Hurt scored 14 of his 15 points in the second half Saturday and sparked foul-plagued Kentucky to an 81-72 SEC victory over Georgia.

The victory raised No. 10 Kentucky's record to 19-5 overall and 11-4 in the SEC. Georgia dropped to 17-8 and 8-8.

The Wildcats blew open the game with a 10-1 streak that widened their lead to 80-66 with 1:49 remaining.

Utah 62, New Mexico 61

ALBUQUERQUE — Guard Pace Mannion went the length of the court and finessed home a driving layup at the buzzer to lift Utah to a 62-61 Western Athletic Conference basketball victory over New Mexico Saturday night.

The teams were tied 11 times and exchanged leads on 11 other occasions.

WEST TEXAS SPORTS

Permian gymnasts beat Lee

No. 2 ranked Odessa Permian took a dual gymnastics meet decision from Midland Lee Saturday at Midland College's Physical Education building, posting a 99.6 score to Lee's 89.25.

Lynn Sanders and Kris Orrell fared the best for the Lady Rebels with Sanders placing third in all around with a 30.75, third on the bars at 7.7 and third in floor exercise at 8.35 while Orrell finished fourth all around at 29.2 and fourth on the bars at 7.5.

Renee Winder added to Lee's scoring with an 8.3 in the floor exercise for fourth place.

"I think we're coming along real well," said Lee head coach Mark Townzen. "We're starting to get closer to qualifying scores for the state meet."

On Saturday, Lee will host Abilene High at MC's P.E. building at 3 p.m.

Rebels second in Abilene B tennis

ABILENE — Host Abilene Cooper posted a one-point, 18-17, victory over Midland Lee in B Division play in the Abilene Tournament Friday and Saturday.

In Boys' singles play, Lee's Darrell Barnes defeated teammate Walter Hickman in the finals, 6-2, 6-3 to be the only Rebel overall winner of the day.

The girls' doubles team of Lisa Fierro-Krista Harvey made it to the final round only to suffere a 6-1, 6-0 loss to Madison Junior High's Galbraith-Pugn.

Midland fencers win own tournament

Midland's LaBelle Fencing Club won it's own two-tournament Saturday held at the United States Armed Services Center at Midland Airport, beating out the Amarillo Fencing Club.

In the Novice Division, the top six finishers were from LFC. Jim Kahle won the title followed by Matt Landenberger, David Olivas, James Friedrichs, Peter Thorpe and David Spencer.

The top four positions in the Advanced Division also went to LFC members led by Robert Walter in first. Mike Husband finished second followed by Gilbert Garcia and Orlando Temple.

The next fencing meet for LFC will be the Division Championship meet on March 26 at the USASC. Winners from that meet qualify for the National Tournament to be held in San Francisco.

Brigham Young defeats Texas-El Paso, 58-54

EL PASO, Texas — Devin Durrant scored 23 points and Brett Applegate hit two key baskets late in the game to carry Brigham Young to a 58-54 victory over Texas-El Paso and knot the Western Athletic Conference basketball race.

Both clubs now have 10-4 league records with two games remaining.

Applegate finished the game with 19 points and 11 rebounds. BYU improved its record to 14-13 on the season. UTEP is now 18-8 overall.

Kent Lockhart scored 13 points for the Minors.

North Texas 99, Oral Roberts 78

DENTON, Texas — Senior guard Fred McDade scored 31 points to propel North Texas to a 99-78 non-conference victory over Oral Roberts Saturday night.

Chaps face Ranger at 9

Midland College faces Ranger at 9 p.m. Thursday in the opening round of the Region V Junior College basketball tournament at Langford Chaparral Center, but matchups up in three other games have yet to be completed.

Amarillo College finished second in the Western Junior College Conference race and gets the other automatic berth against the third place finisher from the Northern Conference. The other two WJCC tournament teams are in the process of being decided. Two teams will emerge from playoffs which match teams three through 10.

Tickets for the tournament are on sale at the Chap Center box office. Tickets are priced $12 for either reserved seats or general admission. Individual sessions are $4 each.

McLennan won the Northern Conference and will play the WJCC's fourth place team in the tournament opener at 2 p.m. Thursday. Amarillo plays the Northern No. 3 at 4 p.m. and at 6 p.m. it will be Northern No. 2 vs. Western No. 3. Ranger and MC meet at 9 p.m.

Friday's semifinals are scheduled for 7:30 and 9:30 p.m. and Saturday's championship game tips off at 7 p.m.

Joining McLennan from the NC will be Cisco, Southwest Christian and, of course, Ranger.

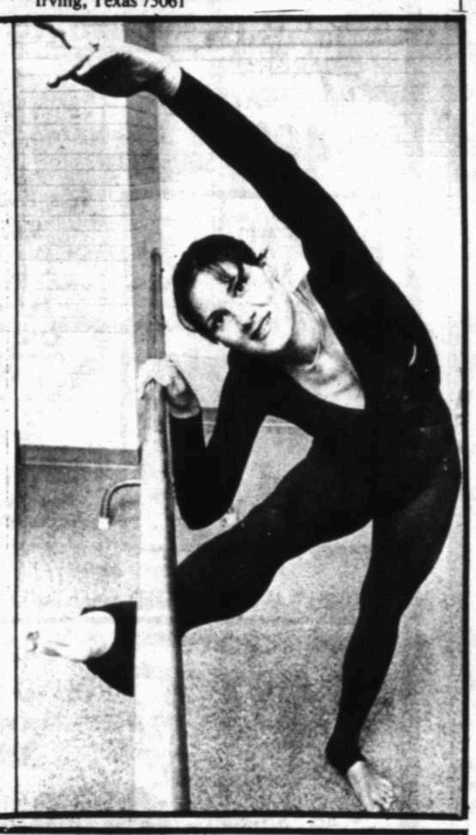

Midland College closed out a 17-1 WJCC season, the Chaps third straight conference title, and a 28-3 regular season by defeating Western Texas College, 74-65 Thursday in Snyder.

In addition to the Region V tournament, the Langford Center will host the Region I Class 5A boys tournament with games Friday and Saturday.

Something special for tourney week

Chaparral Center site of two weekend tournaments

With both the Region V Junior College and Region I Class 5A tournaments scheduled for the Langford Chaparral Center this week, you can feel the excitement growing.

I heard one of the fans at this weekend's Region I 5A girls tournament complain, "This has been kind of a letdown, but then I guess they are cooking up something super special for next week, since they'll have two tournaments. The crowds will be bigger and they can aggravate more people at one time."

"With four out-of-town teams playing this weekend, they just didn't have the crowds to create the usual pregame and post-game excitement to which Chaparral fans have become accustomed." The guy was almost apologizing.

WITH TWO tournaments going on simultaneously, the potential for mischief boggles the mind. I mean, look at what they do during the regular season with just one game.

With one stop-lighted entrance, impatient fans claim getting off the MC campus after a game is like baling out a sinking rowboat with an eye dropper. It is reported unreliably that one enterprising Midland druggist has put in for a concession at the corner of Garfield and the MC exit. He plans to sell blood pressure pills and aspirin.

Two tournaments! The night of the Harlem Globetrotters was bad enough when 4,100 showed up. It was as tough getting on campus before the game as it was getting off after the game. In fact, they delayed tipoff 30 minutes.

TWO TOURNAMENTS! They knew it was coming, so they warmed up for this week last Monday when the MC Chaps closed out their regular season against Odessa College at the Center. At least, I don't think it was just because the Chaps were playing a team from Odessa.

The first hint of the devious plot came while I was taking a shower that afternoon. Water was coming out of the spigot like traffic out of MC after a game. Neighbors were calling to compare notes. Some didn't even have enough pressure to flush the commodes. Little did anyone suspect it was part of the plot. After all, we were two miles from MC.

It all began to fall into place on the way to the game that night. One lane traffic forded Wadley at its own risk. It took 15 minutes to go two blocks on Garfield to reach the Wadley light before peril could be seen. Then it was too late to turn back.

ONCE ACROSS, those of us who made it, it seemed the ordeal was over until Lt. Herman Wicker was spotted at halftime and quized as to how much the water level had receded. "It hasn't. It's higher. They are evacuating, er, routing traffic west on Maxwell and north on Garfield after the game."

What happened? Did a water pipe break?

Mike Stevens, director of Chaparral operations, standing nearby, offered, "You know our flooded basement. It's dry. You can go down and look if you don't believe me." They obviously drilled a hole in the wall and let the water out on Wadley.

That, fans, was a meaningless season-ending game. You can imagine what they'll have in store for us this week.

One fan, his pulse quickening in anticipation as his imagination activated, "With three straight afternoon-night sessions. That means, the Chap Center will be emptying out the same time it's filling back up. I got it!" His face lit up like he was panning at Sutter's Mill. "They'll use the stop light exit from the college for the entrance, too. I can see the havoc now. It will be wonderful."

Nearby another fan, almost to himself, mused, "You know, I can remember not too many years ago, when we didn't have these problems. No one came to these games out here."

Oh, for the Good Ol' Days?

Sheehan birdies into tie with Stephenson

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Patty Sheehan rolled in a three-foot birdie putt on the 18th hole Saturday to tie Jan Stephenson for the lead after the second round of the 54-hole, $150,000 Tucson Conquistadores LPGA Open.

Sheehan and Stephenson are tied at 140 heading into Sunday's final round. They are three shots in front of five other golfers, including LPGA Hall of Famer Sandra Haynie and Anne-Marie Palli, who was tied for second after Friday's first round.

Debbie Massey, Barbara Moxmess and Amy Alcott are also at 143.

Sheehan's pressure putt on the par-5, 455-yard 18th capped her 3-under-par round of 69 on the par-72, 6,248-yard Randolph North Golf Course here.

The 26-year-old Sheehan hit a 4-iron over the 18th green and into a sand trap, but blasted out to within three feet and sank her tying putt.

Stephenson had a 4-under-par round of 68 after sinking six-foot birdie putts on the first two holes.

First-round leader Beth Daniel double-bogied two holes to finish with a round of 77 and a 145 total. Defending champion Ayako Okamoto shot a 75 Saturday after Friday's 77 and failed to make the 36-hole cut of 150 by two strokes.

Nancy Lopez, this year's leading money winner on the tour, withdrew from the tournament after four holes Saturday due to the flu. She had fired a 1-over-par 73 on Friday after dropping out of the pro-am competition the day before because of her illness.

Arguello gets unanimous decision

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Alexis Arguello put himself in line for a rematch with Aaron Pryor with a unanimous decision over Vilomar Fernandez in a 10-round, non-title fight Saturday.

Arguello, a three-time world champion, had to chase Fernandez for a majority of the fight. The two fought four years ago in New York with Fernandez winning that bout.

Arguello, from Miami, landed a right hook in the fourth round that forced Fernandez, from New York, to collapse along the ropes.

"I hit him on the chin with a left hand and followed with a right," said the 140-pound Arguello, now 77-5.

"He was always running when I hit him. My strategy was to put together punches but that's hard when someone is running. I didn't feel in control at all in the fight. But I was not frustrated by his movement," said Arguello.

Arguello is seeking a rematch with Pryor, the World Boxing Council Junior Welterweight champion.

Fernandez said he was a different fighter when he scored a decision over Arguello in 1978.

"The last time we fought I was quicker. But now I've slowed down," said the 140¼-pound Fernandez, now 27-10-2.

"His punches were stronger than they were four years ago," added Fernandez. "Everytime I'd throw a punch, he'd throw power."

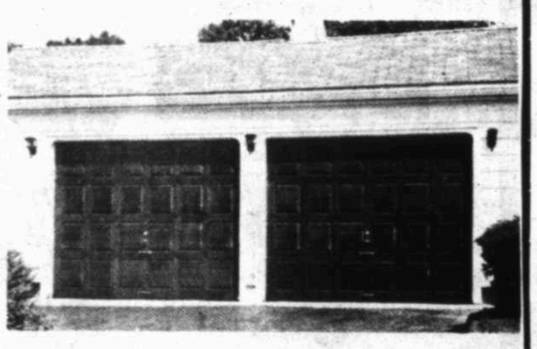

Arguello received $200,000 for the nationally televised fight and Fernandez took home $50,000.

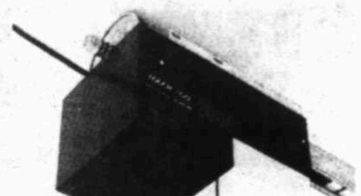

"Vilomar's style was exactly the same as it was four years ago," said Arguello. "This time he ran more and I put on more pressure."

Rudd wins Richmond 400 pole

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Ricky Rudd of Chesapeake, Va., sped around the Fairgrounds Raceway at 93.439 mph Saturday to capture the pole position for Sunday's $203,030 Richmond 400 Grand National stock car race.

The time trials for all 30 starting positions were delayed because of rain here Friday.

Rudd's speed was slightly slower than the 93.695 track record set by 1982 Winston Cup points champion Darrell Waltrip in February 1980. Waltrip qualified for the fourth starting spot, behind Rudd, Joe Ruttman and Terry LaBonte.

He was followed by Ron Bouchard in the fifth starting spot and Bobby Allison in the sixth position.

Allison, the winner of the Wrangler 400 here last September, will be driving a new Chevrolet Monte Carlo when the green flag drops at 1 p.m. Sunday.

"I think the conditions may give us a little advantage," said Gary Nelson, Allison's crew chief. "Even though it's a new car, it's basically the same as what we ran here last year. We came with the same weights and chassis setups we used last time."

Allison was runner-up behind Waltrip in the points standings last year.

Rounding out the top 10 were Geoff Bodine, Dale Earnhardt, Mark Martin and Richard Petty, who will be starting his 900th race.

Defending Richmond 400 champion Dave Marcis qualified for the 16th starting spot.

Waltrip, meantime, still was sore Saturday after his frightening crash during the Daytona 500 last weekend.

"I feel all right, but I have felt better," he said. "I'd like to say, 'Hey, get somebody else to drive this week. I'm going to rest up.' But you can't do that."

Waltrip's car hit an inside retaining wall after skidding across the track. He was kept overnight in a hospital for observation after experiencing some loss of memory.

"I don't think there's any question in my mind that if I hadn't gotten turned around and had gone into the wall head on, it would have killed me," Waltrip said.

Brewer has Vintage lead by two shots

INDIAN WELLS, Calif. (AP) — Gay Brewer fired a 4-under-par 68 Saturday, giving him a 54-hole score of 209 and a two-shot lead over Miller Barber and George Bayer after three rounds of the $300,000 Vintage Invitational golf tournament for seniors.

Brewer, 50, had four birdies, all on the back side, and no bogeys over the lush 6,903-yard, par-72 Vintage Club course. He had scores of 68 and 73 in the first two rounds.

The final 18 holes will be played Sunday. The winner of the tournament for former golfing greats 50 years of age and older will collect $35,000 with the runnerup earning $25,000. Thirty-six players are competing in the third annual event.

Anthony wins 40th PBA title

PEORIA, Ill. (AP) — Earl Anthony, pro bowling's only millionaire, survived a late rush by Mal Acosta to capture his 40th career title Saturday afternoon with a 224-220 victory in the $150,000 True Value Open.

Anthony, a 44-year-old Dublin, Calif., left-hander and Pro Bowling Association Hall of Famer, entered the championship round top-seeded. In the title match Saturday, Anthony jumped to an early lead.

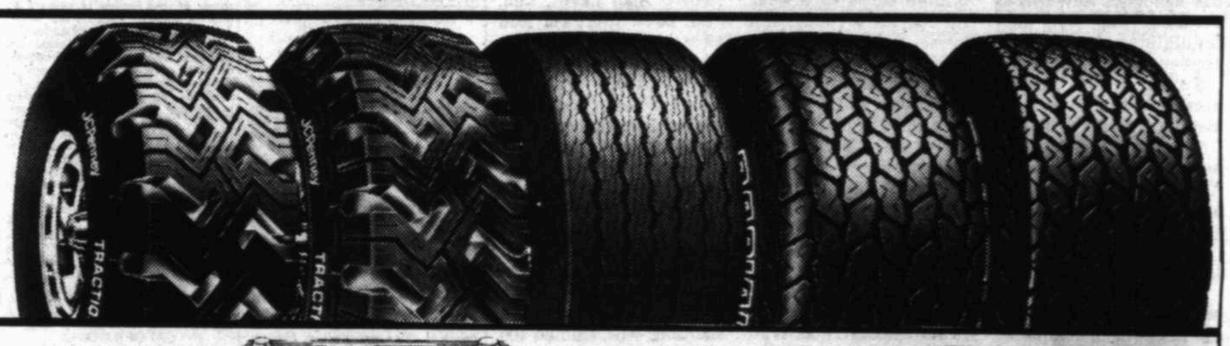

But Acosta, a three-time titlist from Hayward, Calif., threw three consecutive strikes starting in the seventh frame to close the gap.

Make your plans early for spring trip to Big Bend

BY RODNEY REELE

Planning to visit Big Bend National Park during the spring or Easter break?

"Plan your trip carefully," advisies Park Superintendent Gil Lusk, "and be prepared for crowded conditions."

Lusk added that campers should be prepared to find sites outside the park. "In the past, we tried to absorb campers in a free overflow area, after designated grounds were full. We found it had a tremendous impact on both the environment and utility systems."

"Last year we had campers tying their tents off with their neighbors tent pegs, because they were jammed so tight, there was no room for another stake. That's not a park experience—that's just trying to survive."

There are four campgrounds in the park, two at Rio Grande Village, one in the Chisos Mountains and one near Castolon. All fill on a first come, first serve basis. For information before driving into the area, the park number is 915 477 2251...

STRIPED BASS fishermen at Lake Whitney are being asked by the TPWD to be alert for stripers equipped with tags and ultrasonic transmitters. Six stripers ranging from seven to 14 pounds were tagged and given transmitter implants in November. Thirty more will be processed this month.

The idea is to learn more about the daily movements and migration patterns and seasonal water temperature preferences. The transmitters were inserted into the fish's body cavity through a small incision so the only visible evidence are yellow numbered tags placed on the back below the dorsal fin...

Lead poisoning takes duck toll

By The Associated Press

An estimated 2,000 ducks have died of lead poisoning in the Lower Klamath National Wildlife Refuge in northern California, the third time in two years that a large kill has been linked to lead shot, officials say.

Many hunters and wildlife biologists view this as evidence that steel shot regulations aren't being applied adequately.

Some 2,000 birds, mostly mallard ducks, died in February 1982 in Oregon at a reservoir near the Columbia River. And some 5,000 birds, mostly Canada geese, died of lead poisoning at Lake Puckaway in Wisconsin in January 1981.

The counting of dead birds in northern California hasn't been completed yet and there's no way of knowing just how serious the problem extends beyond the Lower Klamath National Wildlife Refuge, one of six in the Klamath Basin.

IT'S A MAJOR hunting area where lead shot litters farm fields. Ducks feeding in the fields flooded by winter rains swallow some of the pellets.

Experts say lead shot poisoning kills 2 million-3 million birds each year. All species of ducks and geese are susceptible to lead poisoning, but mallards, blacks and teal are most susceptible because they tend to feed in shallow water. Most of the birds counted so far in northern California are mallards; a few are pintails.

Last year, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service stopped investigating lead shot poisoning of waterfowl. The National Wildlife Federation and wildlife officials in 23 states assumed management of the program, saying the Reagan administration wasn't interested in solving the problem.

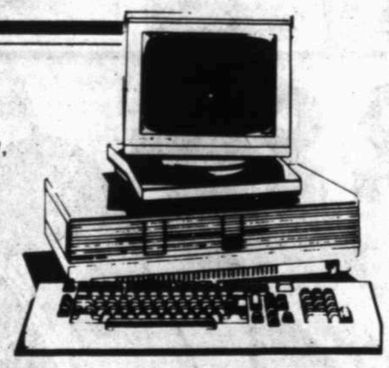

JAY HAIR, executive vice president of the wildlife federation, said one reason the Interior Department withdrew from the program was that assistant secretary G. Ray Arnett opposed it.

A spokesman for Arnett, Alan Levitt, said, "We know there's a lead shot problem, but we don't know all the facts."

"We don't want to mount a major campaign against lead shot until we know just how bad the situation is," he said. Levitt emphasized that birds also fall victim to diseases such as botulism and avian cholera.

Wildlife biologists at the National Wildlife Health Laboratory in Madison, Wis., studied 100 birds found dead in the Lower Klamath refuge. They found evidence of lead poisoning in 68 of them.

WHICH IS THE DIESEL ENGINEERED LIKE NO OTHER CAR IN THE WORLD?

From 0 to 55 the Volvo Diesel out-accelerates the Mercedes 240 Diesel by a full three seconds.*

The Volvo Diesel also exhibits some exceptional traits standing still.

Among them: room enough to comfortably seat five large adults, standard amenities that include a sunroof and air conditioning, and the kind of rugged construction for which Volvos are famous.

Recent findings, in fact, indicate that Volvos in general have a life expectancy that's one third longer than the average for all other cars on the road.*

So if you're in the market for one of the world's finest diesels, compare our Volvo Diesel sedan or wagon to the Mercedes 240D.

Even if you're not impressed by the seconds it saves on the track, you'll be amazed by the money it saves in the showroom.

VOLVO
A car you can believe in.

Introducing...
Mission Square Plaza
Retail and Office Condominiums

Owning is better than renting.

If you're presently renting retail or office space, you already know some of the disadvantages-frequent cost-of-living rent increases, leases that give the landlord all the advantages, costly sales overrides on your retail sales. In short, you're not in control.

From a pure economic standpoint, ownership beats renting. Consider these advantages:

* You mortgage payments are fixed and not subject to escalation or overrides to a landlord.
* You receive tax deductions for interest and tax payments.
* You get a tax deduction for depreciation over the next 15 years.
* You have control over your space, and no one can cancel your lease.
* You can buy enough space to meet your future growth plans and lease the expansion area until it's needed.
* All maintenance and upkeep is furnished through the Owner's Association.
* Your real estate investment gains value.

In addition to all this, Mission Square is strategically located in one of the city's fastest growing areas, North Big Spring and Loop 250, just northeast of Cloverdale Plaza.

Mission Square is an ideal location for professionals, service businesses, and a variety of retails stores. Contact our office now, for a full color brochure and further details.

BILLINGSLEY ENTERPRISES
Presents
LaVillita Office Suites

The developers of LaVillita know your concerns about leasing office space and your need to know exactly what your cost are. So we've taken the guess work out of leasing new space.

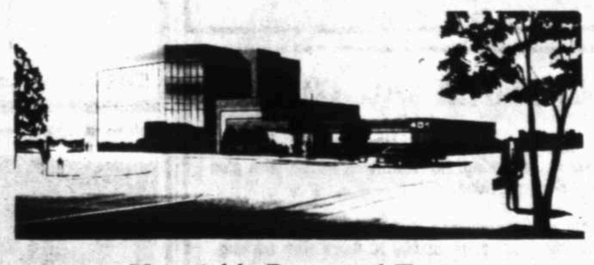

The remainder of our atrium building and our single level office building are built out in luxurious suites with one to six offices, reception area and coffee bar. We added plush carpet and decorator wallpapers; all at OUR cost.

Your rent payment at LaVillita includes all utilities, janitorial, insurance, taxes and parking downtown and on site.

Before you make a leasing decision, visit with Helen Moise in our leasing office about the many advantages of locating at LaVillita. We offer COMPETITIVE RATES, IMMEDIATE OCCUPANCY and ON-SITE MANAGEMENT. We don't think you can do better anywhere in town.

GRAND GRAND OPENING

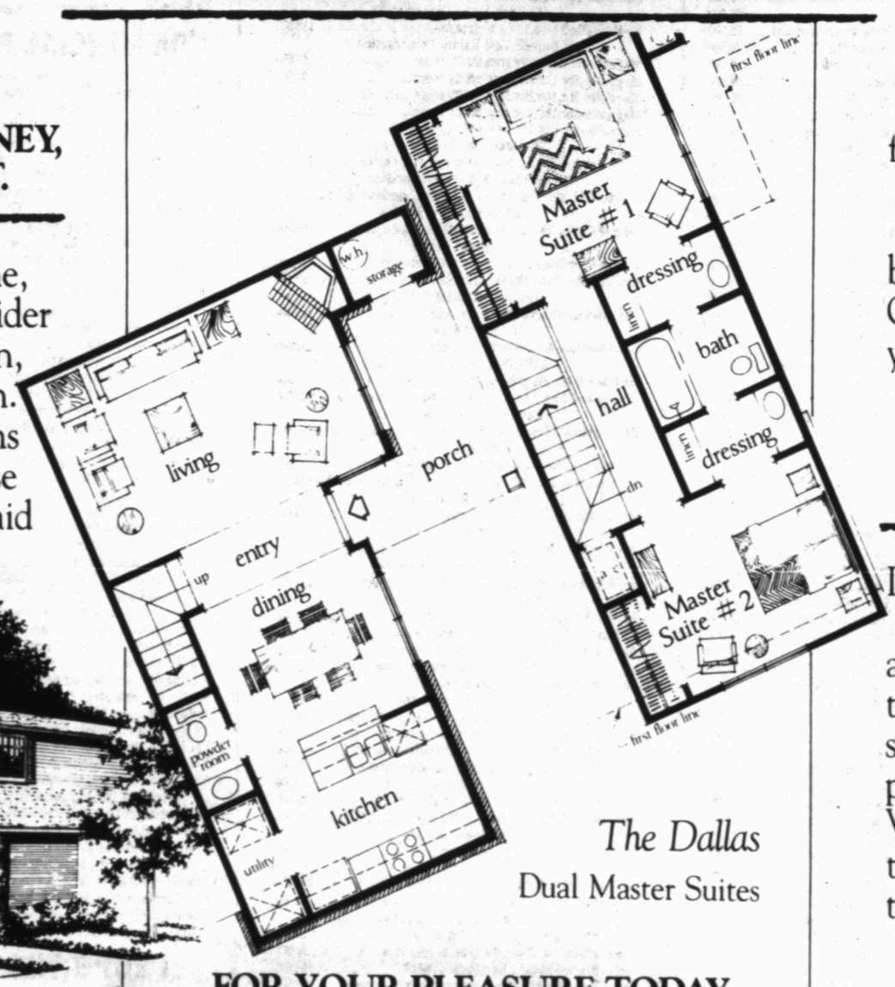

MORE FOR LIVING, FOR LESS.

GET MORE FOR YOUR MONEY, IT'S AS SIMPLE AS THAT.

When you're buying a new home, there are a lot of details to consider such as price, financing, location, floor plans, features, and on and on. At Autumnchase Condominiums you'll find we've considered these questions long before we even laid our first brick.

The Dallas

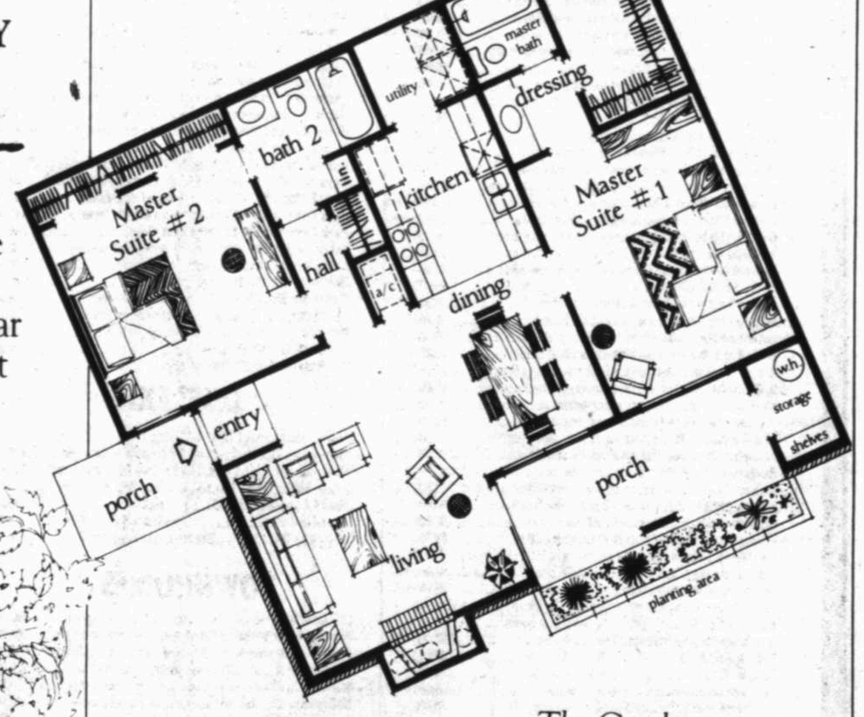

The Dallas
Dual Master Suites

FOR YOUR PLEASURE TODAY AND INVESTMENT TOMORROW.

Consider the luxury, the price and the interest rates then consider the VALUE. Autumnchase is your hedge against inflation. Our popular two bedroom floor plans are perfect for you or the two of you and especially when you consider the high resale value potential of two bedroom homes in today's market. Owning at Autumnchase today is your investment in tomorrow.

Make-overs

Text by LINDA ANDERSON

Photos by RON JAAP

Tammy Vandertoorn before...

...and after the make-over session.

The mystery of "what to do with brushes, bottles and boxes at the cosmetic counter" was unveiled at the High Sky Girls Ranch at a recent "make-over seminar."

The seminar, conducted by professional model and beauty consultant T.J. Ford, instructed teens how models achieve "that special look."

Mrs. Ford, who teaches "Totally Beautiful" and "Total Teen" classes through the auspices of the YMCA, said she chose to take her seminar to High Sky "because any teenager, any person, has room to improve their own positive personal image."

Approximately 22 girls, ages 13 — 17, and six housemothers, learned about hair styling, skin care, make-up and personal positive image during the four-hour session. Skits, balloons and before-and-after photos were included in the seminar. The girls learned how to choose the "look" most comfortable for them, and how this "look" can help them with their self-esteem. "The girls caught on real quick," Mrs. Ford said.

"There are girls as young as 8 at High Sky, but I concentrated on the older girls because we were doing make-up and things." She added she hopes to present a similar seminar designed for the younger girls at High Sky.

According to Mrs. Ford, local merchants Christine Valmy Salon, Sakowitz, Balloons 'n Things, Dillard's, Julian Gold, Dwight Adams of "D" Production Studio, Sharon Evans of Headquarters Beauty Salon and Lee Ann Heitzman of Christine Valmy, donated time and supplies for the afternoon seminar.

"A seminar doesn't have to be quiet, dull or boring," Mrs. Ford said. " You can learn about a beautiful personal image and at the same time have fun and enjoy yourself."

High Sky Girls Ranch is funded primarily from contributions from local interested individuals and not funded by the state, although a few of the residents may be eligible for limited funds from such sources as Social Security. "We are so fortunate to have something like this in our backyard. Anyone who lives in Midland with time on their hands could invest it well at High Sky Girls Ranch."

Residents of High Sky come from all over the country, not just from Midland. "High Sky girls are not delinquents. They are there (at High Sky) for no other reason than what fate handed them. Many of them stay at the Ranch for up to two years.

"They are there because of difficult situations in family life, some to the extreme. Some have been hurt emotionally and physically, through no fault of their own."

Mrs. Ford said she was "impressed with how well-mannered, well-behaved and adjusted they are." She said she may make the seminar at High Sky a yearly event.

High Sky Girls Ranch, not funded by the state, is primarily supported by contributions from local interested individuals.

A "Totally Beautiful" course is scheduled March 19 at the Alamo YMCA.

Patricia Steelman of Stillwater, Okla., sister of the bride, was matron of honor. The bridesmaid was Sharon Richter, and the bridesmatrons were Cynthia Dorries of Stanton and Brenda Sellers, sisters of the bride.

Tony Acuna Jr. of McLean attended as best man. The groomsman was Robert Aldana. Junior groomsman was Michael Acuna of McLean, nephew of the bridegroom. Michael Hunt, brother of the bride, and Gilbert Hunt, uncle of the bride, were the ushers. The flower girls were Denise Moreno and Belinda Moreno of Merkel, nieces of the bridegroom. Joshua Acuna of McLean, nephew of the bridegroom, was ring bearer. The junior bridesmaid was Tonya Morena of Merkel, niece of the bridegroom.

Early radio

CHICAGO (AP) — In the early days of radio, the most common way to get a sponsor's name on the air was to name the program's orchestra after the sponsor's product, reports an advertising magazine.

Popular musical programs in the 20s featured such groups as the "Vicks VapoRub Quartette," the "Ipana Troubadours."

The first modern submarine was developed by John Holland in 1900.

Don Brown was the first person to cross San Francisco's Golden Gate Bridge when it opened on May 27, 1937.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Susan and Alan Friedman, who were united in marriage Saturday evening in St. Ann's Catholic Church, are now en route to the Hawaiian Islands for a two-week honeymoon. Upon their return, they will make their home in Dallas, where Alan is an operating partner with Lincorp, Inc. Susan is the daughter of Betty Jo and George Moberly.

The beautiful candlelight ceremony, which included musical selections by the Thouvenel String Quartet, was followed by a reception in Midland Country Club. The clubhouse was transformed into an English garden setting with a profusion of spring flowers, vinery and latticework. Guests enjoyed dancing to the music of the Dave William Combo from Dallas. A sumptious wedding buffet was served.

Parties continued for the couple throughout the week preceding the wedding. Using Mardi Gras as their theme, Joanie and Bobby Holt, Barbara and Don O'Shaughnessy, Violette and Bill Blanks, Frances Metcalfe, Penny Branum and Marjorie Wiseman entertained with a delightful party at The Bar the evening of Feb. 19. The colorful decor included balloons, masks and confetti, and guests enjoyed the hamburgers for which the popular downtown spot has become well known.

A cocktail party was held Thursday in the home of Andree and Bill Hickey. Co-hosting the affair were Michele and Rob Arnot of Breckenridge, Pat and Brent Blonkvist, Betty and Pom Smith, Marty and Jim Conine, Dyan and Kip Agar and Courtney and Carl Holiday of Oklahoma City. A picture of Susan and Alan, which had been enlarged to poster size, was signed by the guests and will be framed and hung in the couple's new home.

Festivities continued on Friday with the bridesmaids' luncheon given by Susan's sister, Mary Jo Moberly of Dallas, in the Garden Room of Midland Country Club. That evening the groom's parents, Corky and former Fort Worth mayor Bayard Friedman, hosted the rehearsal dinner at the Petroleum Club. A wedding day luncheon for members of the family, wedding party and out-of-town guests was given at The Energy Club by Mary and Henri deCompiegne, Patti and Watson LaForce and Sydney and Bill Hover of Houston.

GENE GILBERT returned Monday from an unforgettable vacation experience in Alaska. Visiting his sister, Linda Gilbert, who is an engineer for ARCO in Anchorage, Gene timed his trip to coincide with the 48th annual Anchorage Fur Rendezvous and the attendant festivities, over 135 in all.

Gene tells us that the "Fur Rondy" got its start with a Fur Auction. For almost 100 years, miners and trappers from the north countries gathered together annually to trade and sell furs and share some fellowship before resuming their solitary harvestings. In 1936, after a particularly hard winter, Anchorage held its first winter carnival, with a one-day sled race up Fourth Avenue, the town's only paved street, and several other sports events. The trappers joined forces with the townspeople, and thus the Fur Rendezvous was born.

Highlights of the 10-day jubilee, considered one of the 10 largest festivals in the nation today, included the Miners and Trappers Ball, a costume event that starts festivities off with a bang; the World Championship Sled Dog Races; the Fur Auction, now the largest public fur auction in the nation; traditional native events, including the Eskimo Blanket Toss; winter sports, such as the Snowshoe Softball Game, the Frostbite Footrace and Snowmachine Race; horse drawn sleigh rides, and numerous exhibits and slide and stage presentations, which show the heart and soul of Alaska.

Gene also enjoyed scuba diving at Whittier and skiing at Alyeska Resort as part of his 12-day Alaskan trip.

OUR NOMINATION for "Cleverest Party of the Month" was the cocktail buffet given by Donna and John Yuronka in their home the evening of Feb. 13 to celebrate the Chinese New Year.

Since this has been designated by the Chinese as the "Year of the Pig," a soft sculpture of Miss Piggy reposing in a silver champagne cooler adorned the serving table. Other party decor included Oriental kites and a Chinese horoscope wall hanging above the fireplace. Guests were treated to such Oriental delicacies as wontons, ribs, shrimp, Peking duck, steamed buns with pork filling and fortune cookies. Donna tells us the Chinese New Year is traditionally observed on the day of the first new moon after the first of January, which falls on Feb. 13 this year.

WE ENJOYED BEING in the spacious new home of Pat and Chuck Dougherty in Green Tree Country Club Estates recently. Four of Pat's P.E.O. "sisters," Dottie (Mrs. Norman) Barker, Barbara (Mrs. Lyle) Case, Chris (Mrs. Fred) Newman and Sharri (Mrs. James) Pruett, honored her with a housewarming party on Valentine's Day. The contemporary, one-and-a-half story structure is designed for entertaining, with the party rooms flowing together and a spa and exercise room having direct access to the swimming pool in the front courtyard.

But Pat recently gave one party she wasn't planning on. With the University of Kansas chancellor, Dr. Gene Budig, coming down from Lawrence and 45 K.U. alumni expecting dinner at an area restaurant, Pat received notice of the eating spot's "demise" less than 24 hours before the gathering. Plans shifted and went into high gear. With the assistance of friends and a local catering establishment, the party came off the evening of Feb. 10 as planned and at the appointed hour but in the Doughertys' home.

BORN ON VALENTINE'S DAY 91 years ago, long-time Midlander Lena Mae (Mrs. A.W.) Wyatt celebrated her birthday at a series of events over the past two weeks. A resident of Trinity Towers where she maintains her own apartment, Mrs. Wyatt (or "Mommie Mae" as she is known to family and friends), continues to lead an active and fulfilling life. She is a private math tutor and after 40 years, still serves as secretary of her Sunday school department at First Baptist Church. Born in Hillsboro, Mrs. Wyatt came to West Texas as a girl of 16, moving later to Midland in 1929. She has one daughter, Marceline (Mrs. Robert K.) White, twin granddaughters, Susan White and Sharon (Mrs. Barry) Keenan, and two great-grandchildren, all of Lake Whitney.

Mrs. Wyatt's birthday celebration began the weekend of Feb. 12 when her sister and brother-in-law, Frankie and Otis McClain, came from Plainview for a visit. Observing the philosophy that "on your birthday, you are to do for others," Mrs. Wyatt chose to entertain several friends at Sunday dinner at Trinity Towers and the play, "Guys and Dolls." She was honored at birthday luncheons on Monday and Tuesday by Mayme Martin and Thelma (Mrs. J.J.) Kelly. Mrs. Wyatt also received special recognition at her church, both in Sunday school and at a meeting of the DMA (Don't Mention Age) Club, as well as at Trinity Towers monthly birthday party.

AND LAST but not least, our sincere apology for last week's error on the Valentine's Day tea honoring the engagement of Kimberly Wood and David Skinner. The item, which read Ruth (Mrs. Bob) Davenport gave the party, should have read Ruth (Mrs. Harvey) Conger, and her aunt, Eloise (Mrs. Bob) Davenport.

Redoing bathroom's look easier than expected

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Decorating most rooms in the home is a challenge because of the many options which are possible. Even a room's dimensions can be changed through the removal or addition of walls.

But decorating the bathroom is different.

"It's one room where you usually have to keep what is already there, short of ripping the whole thing out and starting over," says Fred Palatinus, a designer in New York. If there are pink tile walls with flamingoes on some of the tiles or aqua bath fixtures, that's what you have to work with.

Over the years, however, interior decorators have devised a variety of techniques to deal with liabilities they cannot change, said Palatinus, who was recently hired by a bath fixture manufacturer and Bell Telephone Co. to design some luxurious baths using their products.

As he showed a visitor around the bathrooms he had created on the New York showroom floor for American-Standard, Palatinus said working with odd-or unpleasant-colored tile or fixtures is easier than most people realize. Though many consumers consider it their biggest insoluable problem, it doesn't have to be.

A color's hue can be changed in intensity and effect depending on what other colors are placed next to it, so, it is possible to change the effect of pink tile walls from saccharine to sophisticated by painting the area above the tile pale gray or black, hanging the same color towels and introducing some art deco elements in cabinetry, mirrors and lighting fixtures.

Palatinus updated the bathrooms displayed in the showroom by employing large doses of currently fashionable colors, patterned fabric and unusual accessories such as antique furniture and containers, flowering plants and scented soaps. Though his designs were costly, many of the ideas could be carried out less expensively.

He suggested the following be considered by those who are redecorating the bathroom:

— Bring an unexpected element into the room, an accessory not normally found in the bath. Perhaps, it could be a whatnot or some antique shelves set against a wall to hold towels or toiletries, or a small painting or print.

— When choosing a shower curtain, take one of two courses. Either do something minimal and tailored, creating your major effects elsewhere, or make the shower curtain a focal point in the room by constructing a wood valence covered with fabric and hanging an overcurtain and undercurtain. A shower-curtain liner and the use of sturdy, water-resistant fabrics will keep the arrangement attractive.

— To make a small bath look larger, mirror the walls and ceiling or cover them with a scrubbable, small-patterned wallpaper that can be matched to a fabric in the same print for a shower curtain and window covering.

BOSTON BREAD

1 cup whole wheat flour
¼ cup all-purpose white flour
¾ teaspoon baking soda
½ teaspoon salt
1 cup buttermilk
¼ cup molasses
½ cup raisins

In a 1-quart bowl stir together whole wheat flour, white flour, baking soda and salt. Add buttermilk and molasses; with an electric beater, beat until dry ingredients are moistened. Stir in raisins. Turn into 2 well-greased 16 or 17-ounce round cans from fruit or vegetables (each 4 by 3 inches), using about 1 cup batter for each and filling them about ½ full. Bake directly on middle rack of a preheated 350-degree oven until a cake tester inserted in center comes out clean — 45 minutes. With a small metal spatula loosen sides and turn out on a rack. Let stand 10 minutes; slice and serve hot. Makes 2 round loaves.

BARBECUE CHICKEN

Jonathan Dudley's version of one of my sister's recipes.

2 large boneless skinned chicken breasts, halved
Salt, pepper and paprika
½ cup water
1-3 cup ketchup
1 tablespoon cider vinegar
½ small onion, finely chopped
1 clove garlic, finely chopped
1½ tablespoons Worcestershire sauce
½ teaspoon dry mustard

Arrange chicken in a single layer in a 10 by 6 by 1¾-inch baking dish; sprinkle with salt, pepper and paprika. In a small saucepan stir together water, ketchup, vinegar, onion, garlic, Worcestershire and mustard; simmer for 10 minutes; pour over chicken. Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven, basting once midway, until tender — about 20 minutes. Makes 2 large or 4 small servings.

Delicious Irish dish

COLCANNON

3 large (about 1¼ pounds) mealy potatoes
1½ cups (about ¾ pound) coarsley grated, tightly packed green cabbage
¼ cup butter
Medium-small (about 3 ounces) onion, finely chopped
¾ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon white pepper

Pare and quarter potatoes; cover with boiling water and boil, covered, until tender — 15 minutes or so; drain. Put through a ricer or mash smooth; keep hot, covered, in a low oven or over boiling water. In 1 cup boiling water boil cabbage, uncovered, until tender-crisp — about 5 minutes; drain and stir into potatoes. In a 6-inch skillet in the hot butter gently cook onion, stirring often, until golden; stir onion and butter into potato mixture with salt and pepper. Serve hot. Makes 4 servings.

Why diamonds sparkle. The diamond cutter must reveal with his skill what nature has created with hers. A master cutter allows for the greatest amount of light to pass through the diamond. For it is the combination of light and cut that causes the fiery brilliance, the flashing rainbows.

And a diamond of a carat or more simply takes in more light than an identically cut smaller stone.

A carat or more. The sparkle can only be compared to the look in her eyes.

New products make mark in house care market

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

What's new on the market?

THE PRODUCT — An acrylic coating for no-wax floors.

Manufacturer's claim — That this coating lifts away dirt and eliminates scuffs ... that it is spread on the floor and, within 15 minutes, produces a clear, protective barrier against everyday wear and tear ... that it protects the shine without any waxy buildup, because the tough, acrylic coating is dissolved with each new application ... and that it does away with the need for detergents and harsh abrasives.

THE PRODUCT — A ceiling-mounted device that recirculates the rising warm air in a room.

Manufacturer's claim — That this device equalizes floor-to-ceiling temperatures by directing downward a low-velocity, draft-free column of warm air ... that it is 6 inches wide and 8 inches high, weighs 2.3 pounds and is made of impact-resistant plastic which can be painted ... that it is suspended from the ceiling in an obscure corner and is plugged into an electric outlet ... and that it also helps eliminate "hot spots" caused by improper circulation in air-conditioned rooms.

THE PRODUCT — A hot water heater said to provide more hot water for less money.

Manufacturer's claim — That this heater provides virtually unlimited hot water and saves fuel by reducing the average boiler water temperature ... that its secret is a heat exchanger that dissipates heat quickly, turning cold water hot almost instantly.

CROW-McCANN

Rebecca Crow and Fred Lee McCann, both of Midland, will be married April 2 at 2 p.m. at Fannin Terrace Baptist Church. Parents of the bride-elect are J. Marcus Crow of Andrews and Betty Ward Crow of Midland. The future bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred J. McCann of Midland.

Miss Crow is a graduate of Midland High School and attended Midland College. She is employed with Lantern Petroleum Corp. Her fiance graduated from Midland High School and attended Midland College. He is employed with Metro Bank of Midland, Regional Air Terminal.

Revised lifestyle policies

The following are policies for publication of stories and announcements in the Lifestyle Department of The Midland Reporter-Telegram:

Information for our Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday. For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the story is to run. For example, an item to appear in Wednesday's paper must be received by noon Monday.

Engagement announcements must appear at least four weeks before the wedding date. Wedding stories must be submitted within five days of the event.

Engagements, weddings, anniversaries and club notices must be submitted in writing. All materials should include the name and telephone number of the person submitting them. These items appear in the Sunday paper only. The Reporter-Telegram has forms for announcements of engagements, weddings and anniversaries.

We cannot mail pictures or forms to persons living within Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication.

Only the bride's picture will be used with both the engagement and wedding announcement.

Pictures should be black and white, preferably glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but they may reproduce poorly. Good reproduction cannot be assured when color prints are used. In general, snapshots are not acceptable.

There is no charge for publication of pictures and stories.

How To Buy The Biggest And Best Diamond Engagement Ring You Can Afford

The diamond engagement ring tradition.

The engagement, or betrothal, ring is one of man's oldest expressions of love. The ancient Egyptians developed the tradition. But until a century ago, diamonds were so hard to come by that only the wealthiest of men could afford to give their fiancees engagement rings set with diamonds.

Fortunately, since the discovery of further deposits of diamonds, they are now available in a variety of sizes, shapes, and qualities that are within reach of us all. In fact, today, the diamond is our culture's most widely accepted symbol of love and romance.

How much should you spend on a diamond engagement ring?

Today, a diamond that you will cherish for a lifetime should cost you at least one to two months salary. Now at first, that may sound like an awful lot of money, especially if you don't know the first thing about diamonds. But in a way, buying an engagement ring is no different from buying a car, a stereo, or any other significant item. You have to do a little research before you can truly understand what makes one diamond worth so much more than another.

Don't scrimp on a once-in-a-lifetime purchase.

Rarity Unlike just about anything else you buy, your diamond engagement ring is a once-in-a-lifetime purchase. And when you consider how much money you constantly spend on things that just don't last, you'll realize how important it is to buy the biggest and best diamond ring you can afford.

What makes a diamond so valuable?

In spite of all the new diamond deposits that have been discovered during the 20th century, the fact remains that diamond mining is extremely difficult. Only 20% of diamonds mined are suitable for fine jewelry. And today, larger stones are becoming more and more scarce. All these factors contribute significantly to the rarity of the diamond.

Uniqueness Like snowflakes, no two diamonds are alike. Each has a beauty and mystique all its own. The cut of the diamond should accentuate this uniqueness. But it takes an expert diamond cutter many hours (sometimes even months) to bring to life the individual qualities in each diamond.

Staying PowerA diamond is the hardest substance man has ever discovered. It is extremely resistant to deterioration, and its beauty can be enjoyed for many generations. In fact, a diamond engagement ring is the one thing your wife will wear every day for all the years to come. So you owe it to yourselves to go for the best.

Value

Unlike most of the things you buy diamonds will not perish, wear out, or become obsolete. Add to this their rarity, and it is easy to see why they are regarded by so many as a store of value.

Shopping for a diamond engagement ring.

Becoming a diamond expert takes years of intensive study. So the best way for you to be introduced to the world of diamonds is to find an expert jeweler and ask a a lot of questions.

It's absolutely vital to purchase your diamond from someone you know and trust-your jeweler-so don't wait until the last minute to start shopping. Look around and shop carefully before making your final choice.

Let us inform you. Take advantage of our expert knowledge by having us show a whole range of sizes, shapes, and qualities up close. You might even ask to look at the finest diamonds we has. After all, you deserve to see the best, even if it's out of your price range right now. Remember, the only way you'll begin to get a feeling for the type of diamond you prefer, is by examining a variety of different diamonds and comparing one with another.

Where to buy your diamond engagement ring.

By all means go to a reputable jeweler who is established in the community. We can give you reliable information on current value, and you can be sure our prices will be fair. Also, we will provide service if anything should go wrong with your purchase. And if you require assistance or advice on choosing additional diamond jewelry in the future, we will be there.

Be cautious about a "bargain" or "wholesale" offer. There are many factors that determine the cost of a diamond-color, cut, clarity, and carat weight. A lower price might well reflect a lower quality diamond than what you had in mind.

This is another reason to deal with a jeweler you know and trust. After all, the diamond engagement ring you buy is an investment in love, beauty, and prestige. Making the right choice will give both of you years of enjoyment.

Sweet onion for salads

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

Sweet Spanish onions, widely available now, are great to use in winter salads.

One of the best tasting — and the best-liked — of these salads is made with membrane-free orange sections, Spanish onion rings, salad greens and an oil-and-vinegar dressing. Since this salad was first concocted, good cooks have been adding to it in interesting ways. Here are five of them:

Avocado, peeled, seeded and cut in lengthwise slices or crosswise rings, looks pretty and tastes good with the citrus combination.

Pitted ripe olives, whole or halved, can go in.

Blue or Roquefort cheese, crumbled, may be scattered over the salad.

Fresh red peppers, when they are available, make a colorful addition. Just seed the peppers and cut them in slices or rings. When fresh peppers aren't on hand, you may want to use the roasted sweet red peppers that come in jars, or pimentos from jars or cans.

Strips of bacon, cooked until crisp, may be used to top the salad "as is" or the bacon may be crumbled.

The best guacamole I have ever tasted used to be served at a Mexican restaurant in my neighborhood. It differed from other guacamole recipes because of its utter simplicity — in my opinion, a great virtue. The avocado for the guacamole was mashed just until it was partly smooth and the only ingredients added were sweet Spanish onion — diced coarsely enough to be in distinguishable pieces — and salt and freshly ground pepper. It was served in a bowl, along with a basket of corn chips for dipping, as an appetizer.

Jefferson's Monticello gardens being restored

By DON IRWIN
From Wire Reports

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — Any day now, as the warming Virginia sun dispels the danger of hard frosts, they will begin planting early peas on a sheltered bank below the south lawn at Monticello, religiously following a plan laid down by Thomas Jefferson two centuries ago.

In Jefferson's day, the understanding among the squires whose estates stretched across the neighboring Piedmont and the foothills of the Appalachian Mountains was that the first one whose garden produced a sufficient crop had to invite the others to dinner.

And today, lineal descendants of Jefferson's spring peas and other such delicacies are being meticulously restored to their original sites — gentle reminders of a little-known fact about the third president:

Not content with writing the Declaration of Independence, helping to guide the fledgling nation through the Revolution and the creation of the Constitution, serving two terms as President and founding the University of Virginia, Thomas Jefferson was a gardener on a scale to match his genius.

During a period of almost 60 years, America's First Gardener experimented with fully 250 varieties of vegetables, not to speak of at least 150 different kinds of fruit trees and berry bushes. In 1812 alone, he recorded with a scientist's meticulousness, the vegetable garden at Monticello boasted 61 different kinds of tomatoes, peas, carrots and other truck.

INDEED, THERE were times when Jefferson sounded as though he considered gardening the best part of his long and luminous career. "The greatest service which can be rendered to any country is to add a useful plant to its culture," he once declared.

"No occupation is so delightful to me as the culture of the earth, and no culture comparable to that of the garden," he wrote to the painter Charles Willson Peale, on another occasion late in life. "Such a variety of subjects, some one always comming to perfection, the failure of one thing followed by the success of another, and instead of one harvest, a continued one through the year.

"Under a total want of demand, except for the family table, I am still devoted to the garden. But though an old man, I am still a young gardener."

Now, an unusual team of agricultural specialists, historians, archeologists, Jefferson scholars and other experts is working to re-create the extraordinary vegetable garden and orchard that Jefferson, aiming to make the most of the early spring sun, situated southeast of the great house he designed and had built, largely by slave labor.

The mountaintop estate — "Monticello" means "little mountain" in Italian — with its panoramic view of the Blue Ridge foothills and the campus of the University of Virginia, was Jefferson's pride, his headache and his private agricultural experiment station.

"THE EXPERIMENTAL nature of the garden and orchard is especially noteworthy," according to Peter Hatch, grounds superintendent at Monticello. "Not only did Jefferson import the finest French pears, English cherries and Dutch cabbages, but he also cultivated beans, corn and gooseberries brought from the West by Lewis and Clark, as well as apple and peach varieties newly discovered in the New World."

"This proliferation of varieties enabled Jefferson to selectively eliminate inferior types," Hatch said, so that his garden and orchard represented "the state of the art of fruit and vegetable culture in the early 19th century."

Jefferson's passion for unusual plants was widely known, and kindred spirits from around the world sent him contributions. Seeds from Europe often arrived buried in moss to preserve them through the vicissitudes of ocean travel.

Occasionally, even Jefferson hesitated to plant some of the exotic seeds he received. In 1813, for instance, a Mississippi friend forwarded "a round black nut said to be used at St. Antonio as a poison for animals and insects."

"I have so many grandchildren and others who might be endangered by the poison plant that I think the risk overbalances the curiosity of trying it," he wrote the sender, then added this macabre footnote — doubtless drawn from his friendship with Frenchmen who had survived the Reign of Terror:

"The most elegant thing of the kind known is a preparation of the Jamestown weed, Datura-Stramonium, invented by the French in the time of Robespierre. Every man of firmness carried it constantly in his pocket to anticipate the guillotine. It brings on the sleep of death as quietly as fatigue does ordinary sleep, without the least struggle of motion." The Thomas Jefferson Memorial Foundation took over the long-neglected mansion in 1923 and began the slow job of restoring the house and 1,800 surrounding acres, paying as it went with the proceeds from admission fees, now $3 a head, from about 500,000 visitors yearly. And the foundation is now laboring to restore the gardens to their condition in 1812, the third year after Jefferson retired to Monticello as an ex-president with a bent for creative farming. His gardens were at their peak.

JEFFERSON WAS 66 when he finally returned to Monticello as a permanent resident. The dome was completed and the porticoed brick house looked much as it does today. The garden was ready for spring planting, but work still had to be done to carry out Jefferson's full plan for a vegetable garden and to revive the orchards — projects that had languished recurrently during the long absences from Monticello necessitated by his government service.

The garden eventually filled a 1,000-foot-long terrace on the sunny hillside. A wall of rough native stone, pried out of the mountain as the plot was leveled, had been completed without cement in 1807 to retain the fertile earth. Below the wall, which stood 11 feet high at some points, was the eight-acre orchard in which Jefferson planted 400 fruit trees and varied grape vines and berry bushes.

Surrounding the orchard was a 10-foot paling fence built, by Jefferson's specifications, so tightly "as not to let even a young hare in."

In addition to rebuilding, the restoration project involves reproducing as faithfully as possible the five dozen-plus varieties of vegetables and as many more strains of fruits, nuts and berries that Jefferson had under cultivation in the abundant summer of 1812.

And that has turned out to be a massive challenge.

Interferon tested for children's disease

By JOANN RODGERS
Hearst Feature Service

BALTIMORE — Interferon has failed to live up to overblown expectations against cancer, but scientists at Johns Hopkins University are giving it high marks in a pre-cancerous disease of childhood.

"Preliminary results with 30 children around the country and a few in Sweden are very, very encouraging," according to Dr. Brigid Leventhal, director of the children's cancer service at Hopkins.

Inteferon is a natural anti-virus substance that in recent years has also been found to kill cancer cells. Early hopes that it would give doctors a superdrug against the disease have dimmed in recent months, although studies show some benefit against a few tumors.

Because of inteferon's anti-virus action, however, Leventhal and her team suspected it might work against laryngeal papillomatosis.

This condition, marked by wart-like growths on children's voice boxes, is believed to be caused by viruses, just as warts are. While rare, it is the most common tumor-like disease of the larynx in children.

Laryngeal paillomatosis is not, technically, a cancer. But for the estimated 700 children a year in whom it is diagnosed, it is dangerous.

The airway in a child's throat is so small the growths quickly block air intake, and in severe cases the disease requires surgery or radiation treatments every few weeks to re-open the airway and prevent choking.

The surgery, she said, "no matter how delicately performed, is going to cause some scarring which eventually may interfere with the voice or perhaps breathing."

In addition to this hazard, certain kinds of stimulation — including radiation treatment and cigaret smoking — transform the disease into cancer in a large number of patients, Leventhal noted.

"In one of these cases we know interferon is life-saving," Leventhal said at a press briefing Tuesday. Eight-year-old Fernando Lecaros of Peru has an aggressive form of the disease which has spread to his lungs, seriously blocking his breathing.

His condition is unreachable with surgery and radiation might provoke cancer.

The youth, a patient at Hopkins since 1980, is flown to Baltimore from Peru for his shots of interferon.

Success in controlling the disorder in children like Fernando led Leventhal to initiate a national study.

They include cancer services at the University of Florida in Gainesville; Oklahoma University in Oklahoma City; University of Washington in Seattle; St. Louis Children's Hospital; University of California at San Francisco; the University of Iowa in Iowa City; Yale University ; Children's Hospital of Los Angeles and Dr. C. Stephen Foster in Boston.

"So far we have 30 children in the study and hope to have 70 soon," Leventhal said.

The Swedish study found that in some cases, interferon may have cured the disease, since there was no re-growth of the wart-like tissues (called papillomas) after treatment was stopped.

"We think interferon works by preventing the virus from spreading to normal cells," Leventhal noted. "Our hope is that we can use interferon as a natural alternative to repeated surgery to control the disease lifelong."

Side effects with interferon are known to include fever, headaches and occasionally hair loss. So far, the children treated in the Hopkins study have had only "very mild" side effects to their shots of the drug.

Leventhal said the interferon treatments are also shedding light on the development of cancer itself.

Scientists now believe that many, if not all cancers, begin when normal cells are transformed by certain activated genes.

They also believe there are two steps in the development of cancer. The first is an initiating step that primes the cells and makes them vulnerable to a malignant takeover.

The second is called "promotion," in which the now-vulnerable cells is permanently transformed.

It may be, Leventhal's work suggests, that laryngeal papillomatosis represents a built-in first step, while radiation and cigaret smoking act as promoters to complete the cancer process.

Patient's in the nationwide study will undergo six months of interferon therapy and six months without it.

In that way, each patient will serve as his own comparison to determine the effectiveness of interferon.

Burroughs-Wellcomme Laboratories are giving Leventhal interferon made in the laboratory from human blood cells.

Sportswear look 'French connection' in menswear

By PAT MCCOLL
The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

PARIS — While active sportswear is still strong in the winter menswear collections that were just shown here, the clothes often are mixed with unexpected pieces to bring out a fresh mood of refinement and a hybrid look you might call the gentle sport.

A theme at many houses is the stretched-out, oversize blouson or ski parka, worn with what appears to be a pair of slacks. Take off the blouson or parka and underneath is a classic, successful-executive suit in traditional menswear fabric.

For a casual touch, some of the suits are worn with color-coordinated cords and tweedy-look knit vests. For chic touches, there are small-collared, classic, striped shirts; quiet silk ties and expensive-looking shoes, often in suede.

In the week's strongest collection, Nino Cerruti proved his mastery at juggling all of the above elements with a sense of color and fabrics that never faltered. An added attraction at the Cerruti collection was the designer's sense of humor. Models wearing his most conservative suits took off their jackets to reveal rolled-up shirt sleeves held in place with sleeve garters.

MORE CERRUTI wit is evident in his all-black evening looks, which are eclectic mixes of fabric and texture. For the chiquest hit-man-in-town look, consider the designer's black wool Jacquard jackets layered over black silk shirts with black bow ties, black gabardine pants and black, oblong crepe de Chine scarves trailing over everything.

On the serious fashion side are Cerruti's almost-ankle-length overcoats with deep raglan sleeves.

American retailers here for the menswear showings all commented on the number of good-looking coats in the collections. On the streets here this winter, trendy juniors have made oversize salt-and-pepper-tweed overcoats their fashion statement.

Those salt-and-pepper tweeds turned up on the runways, too. Jean-Charles de Castelbajac mixes blocks of tweed to shape a patchwork jacket and bands them in horizontal stripes for tweed trousers, then hides both under an almost-floor-length tweed poncho.

Castelbajac, who spends much of his time at his country house in the heart of France's cattle country, designs for the outdoor man. Comfortable jackets or raincoats cover up rugged sweaters patched in leather or canvas and paired with sturdy trousers.

OTHER CASTELBAJAC looks that retailers like are his brightly colored blanket-plaid coats and jackets trimmed with fringe, the buffalo-check jackets in mixes of green and sand worn with bright-orange flannel shirts, and zipper details used throughout.

There was mixed reaction to the Club des Createurs show — a joint presentation by Mic Mac, Marcel Lassance, Daniel Hechter, Marithe and Francois Girbaud, Faconnable, Christian Aujard and Vestiare.

Daniel Hechter, who usually has a strong fashion personality, got a little carried away with looks inspired by World War I soldiers, coal miners complete with coal-dusty faces, and bootleggers. The groups inspired by coal miners did, however, confirm the importance of black for daytime menswear, a trend that appeared in almost all of the major collections. At Mic Mac, black mixes with white and color for tweedy-look, salt-and-pepper knits splotched with blocks of red and blue and worn with black cords.

At Christian Aujard, the best look is the shawl-collared, black-cashmere overcoat with the collar piped in leather. Designer Michele Aujard showed it over a black-cashmere jacket, red-cotton shirt, skinny black-leather tie and black-leather trousers.

Evening looks at Aujard include a black-leather spencer topping black-leather trousers and mixed with a traditional smoking shirt and red-satin cummerbund.

FRANCE'S PRESIDENT, Francois Mitterrand, is a Marcel Lassance fan, and Lassance knows what the president likes — baggy cords and country tweeds — so that's what he delivered.

While other menswear designers have been refining the jacket silhouette, slimming it and stretching it out, Lassance's and the design duo at Vestiare (Jean-Alain Le Moing and Jean-Louis Sponville) are keeping to a '50s-inspired shorter boxy jacket with exaggerated lapels. The Vestiare look is typical of what the present generation of James Dean fans wears to nightclubs, such as the Privilege, or for dinner at Pacific Palisades in Les Halles. Vestiare's collection is yet another in which the stars are the coats — shawl-collared wraps in gray, black or white plush.

As always, fashion as seen by Marithe and Francois Girbaud is so avant-garde you sometimes wonder what you are seeing, as in the case of their clothes for abominable snowmen crossed with road warriors.

Faconnable's Albert Goldberg does what the French call "sans histoire" clothes — no fuss, easy-to-understand separates. Standouts include navy shirt-jackets over blue oxford-cloth button-down shirts, plus white cords.

Ethnic foods are key to immigrants' new lifestyle

By JAMES FLAGG

EASTON, Pa. (AP) — A family that fought to leave the Soviet Union only to find unemployment in the United States has turned the corner in Easton and now is faring well by serving up pierogies, holubkies and beliashes in a downtown restaurant.

A four-year ordeal to emigrate from the Soviet Union led Vasyl Reshetylo and his family to the American Embassy in Moscow 15 times before they were granted exit visas, allowing them to move to New York, then to Allentown and now to Easton.

Reshetylo, his wife, Eugenia, and their three children have endured repression and poverty in their old country to get where they are today — the proud owners of the newest, and perhaps most ethnic, restaurant in Northampton County — the Veselka Pierogie Shop.

"It's unbelievable. We really didn't know what to expect," said Irene Reshetylo, 23, pointing to a stack of customer checks on a wall clip.

The Ukrainian natives just recently opened their small luncheonette in the Mohican Market, specializing in their native treats.

And although there are only three tables in their tiny establishment, the walk-up lunch crowd has been brisk, pleasing the Reshetylos.

Irene Reshetylo and her brother Steven, 22, both fluent in English, do most of the speaking for their parents. The third child, Nadia, is still in high school.

"It was really hard for us to get a visa," Miss Reshetylo said. "It took us four years."

And when the family renounced its Soviet citizenship and sought to emigrate, the government responded as it often does, she said.

"They fired my father from his job."

She said she was expelled from college, where she was studying elementary education. And her brother also was expelled from technical school.

"We had to show that we knew someone here (in the U.S.)," she said, explaining that her father had an aunt in New York. "They just didn't want to allow us to go."

She remembers traveling with her father 15 times to the American Embassy in Moscow from their home in the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic.

On one visit they were stopped, detained at a police station for two days and interrogated, she said.

She credits Malcolm Toon, then U.S. ambassador to the Soviet Union, and other American officials with helping her family through the Soviet bureaucracy.

When the family finally made it to New York, Reshetylo, who was a mechanic and built stoves in the Ukraine, found work in a New Jersey factory making medical instruments.

Mrs. Reshetylo found work at a Catholic high school in New York, where Nadia was enrolled.

In 1980, they moved to Allentown, where they had some friends, but they found employment more elusive there.

But they met Jerrya Kindrachuck, an accountant and a son of Ukrainian immigrants.

He was able to help the Reshetylos get a mortgage for a run-down duplex, which they renovated and then sold one half.

And after Reshetylo lost his job at the Fairtex Mills in Allentown, which closed, the family decided to try their own restaurant business in Easton.

Besides the homemade pierogies, the rest of the dishes are authentic — holubkies (stuffed cabbage rolls with rice, beef and tomato sauce), beliashes (meat pies), potato pancakes, turnovers and borscht.

Parsnips make elegant soup

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

Is it because the often gnarled roots of parsnips are the ugly ducklings of the root vegetable family that today's cooks are inclined to disdain them?

It was not always so. In early New England families, parsnips added their piquant flavor to the standard winter chowders of salt pork, onion and potatoes. New Englanders also relished Parsnip Stew, sometimes with dumplings.

When I was a child in Canada, my sisters and I loved the candied parsnips my mother made. And her parsnip croquettes — bound with fresh bread crumbs and egg, seasoned with onion and parsley and fried golden brown in butter — were a special treat. Like all good cooks of her time, she inluded parsnip in poultry and meat soups.

As a guest at a recent dinner party, my sister Phyllis tasted a Cream of Parsnip Soup that delighted her. Spurred on by Phyllis, I created my own recipe for it. Utterly elegant, my tasters said, and delicious enough for a company dinner. I've named it out of my own conceit.

CREAM OF PARSNIP SOUP CECILY

3 medium parsnips (about ½ pound), peeled and thinly sliced (2 cups)
1 small onion, chopped medium-fine (1-3 cup)
2 large outer ribs celery with leaves, thinly sliced (1½ cups)
2½ cups clear fat-free chicken broth
⅛ teaspoon curry powder
1 cup heavy cream
Salt and pepper to taste
Fresh chives, finely chopped

In a 2-quart saucepan bring to a boil the parsnip, onion, celery, chicken broth and curry powder; simmer, covered, stirring often, until vegetables are very soft — 30 minutes. In an electric blender puree in two batches. Return to saucepan; stir in heavy cream; reheat. Season with salt and pepper to taste. Sprinkle with chives. Makes about 4 1-3rd cups.

Vaccines made from cancer tumors

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Vaccines produced from a cancer patient's own tumor are becoming an important weapon against cancer.

Developed at the University of Rochester Cancer Center by Dr. Craig McCune, the vaccines stimulate the patient's immune system to destroy malignant cells.

In research involving kidney cancer patients, McCune found that a vaccine — made of irradiated liver tumor cells and dead bacteria — caused five of 16 patients to go into remission, one lasting longer than two years.

The vaccines are produced from a piece of the tumor which is removed during surgery.

The vaccines are not a cure, but an immunological approach expected to soon join chemotherapy and radiation as a cancer treatment.

New luxurious cruise ship makes debut

By MICHAEL CARLTON
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

MIAMI — Welcome to (trumpets up!) "The World's Newest Cruise Ship," the Song of Atlantic. No, that isn't right. It's the Tropicale Fairsky. No, no, that's not it. It's the Nieuw Astor. Or is it the Olde Scandinavia?

Just a minute.

OK, I have looked at the bow and the name of the ship is the Song of America. With all the new cruise ships entering service in 1982 and '83 — Carnival Cruise Line's Tropicale, Home Line's Atlantic, Sitmar's Fairsky, Holland American's Nieuw Amsterdam, Scandinavian World Cruises' Scandinavia, Hadag Cruise Line's Astor, to name just a few — it is hard to keep the ships straight without a scorecard, or at least a glance at the bow.

Anyway, the newest "Newest Cruise Ship in the World," (at least until the next "Newest Cruise Ship in the World" is launched, probably in 10 minutes) began service Dec. 5 in Miami.

Unlike many of her sister "Newest Cruise Ships in the World," the Song of America is pretty, with the long, graceful lines like a ship should have. Most of the new "Newest Cruise Ships in the World" look like floating condominiums, efficient at stuffing more passengers on board, but unattractive with their boxy, bloated profiles.

But not the Song of America. This is a handsome ship, as pretty as her sisters of the Royal Caribbean Line — the Song of Norway, the Sun Viking and the Nordic Prince.

The Song of America was built in the same place — Finland's Wartsila Shipyard — as her sister ships, and carries out the gracefully elegant designs of traditional passenger ships.

SHE HAS ALL THE tricky electronic gear, of course, including computers monitoring fuel and satellite readouts, and radar sensitive enough to pick up a passing school of dolphins. She has modern galleys with enough microwaves to set off your pacemaker, and her public areas have stain-resistant fabrics to make housekeeping easier.

But even with all these modern innovations, she has the feel of an old ship when you board her — the entranceway reeks with wood and brass; sweeping stairways carry you between decks; and huge public areas abound — including the largest (more than half an acre) enclosed sun deck in the world, with two pools, four bars and enough deck chairs so everyone can get his Caribbean sunshine.

The Song of America also has the standard gluttony-based menus for all her demanding gourmands. For breakfast passengers are offered seven juices, seven fruits, four hot cereals, 10 cold cereals, four fish dishes, eggs prepared five ways, six omelets, seven meats, plus potatoes, grits, pancakes, 10 pastries and six beverages. For luncheon choices can be made from 24 appetizers, 18 soups, 15 salads, 17 vegetables, 62 entrees, 49 desserts, 10 cheeses, seven fruits and six beverages. All to warm you up for dinner, which is even more lavish. Ah, tradition! Ah, cholesterol!

There are plenty of bars, including one wrapped entirely around the ship's funnel, giving you a seagull's-eye view of the sun deck and the surrounding sea. In most of the bars, and in all of the hallways and public areas, artworks are scattered about like paintings in the Louvre. Some are quite good, a lot are mediocre, but all serve to break up the monotony of most ships' corridors.

There is also the usual cinema playing first-run movies, a well-equipped gym for the one passenger in a hundred who wants to work out, and a mediocre nightclub act featuring a comedian who likes to tell toilet jokes and an overage, undertalented singer.

The Song of America offers some interesting innovations, including a rare Sunday departure from Miami (good for all you honeymooners) that allows the ship to call in booze-laden St. Thomas (the other ports of call are Nassau and San Juan) on Thursday when there are fewer cruise ships in port and fewer shoppers jamming the streets.

NOW FOR THE bad news.

Although the public rooms of the Song of America are large and airy, the staterooms are tiny and cramped. The average stateroom, according to ship's statistics, contains 130 square feet. Perhaps, if you count the space under the beds and multiply by three. You should be really good friends with your cabinmate, or the two of you will kill each other by the end of a week in these tiny cabins.

Like most of the other "Newest Cruise Ships in the World," the Song of America has followed the philosophy that "you won't be spending much time in your stateroom anyway, so why build them big?" I guarantee you will not want to spend much time in these rooms, unless you love claustrophobia.

Now the other bad news.

The color scheme used in the ship, a scheme described by the ship's publicists as "being designed to create a color decor especially favored by Americans," is horrid — unless, of course, you like to mix shocking pink, deep purple, Florida orange, electric blue and apple red together — all in one room. If you like bad taste, you'll love this color scheme.

Still, most of the news is positive about this ship, which is as good as — and in many ways better — than any of the "Newest Cruise Ships in the World" now in service. Can the Song of America succeed in the most highly competitive tourist market in the world? Can this graceful ship pay off Royal Caribbean Line's $140 million investment? Probably.

Backed by the strong marketing arm of the company, one of the most respected in the business, and helped by Royal Caribbean's good reputation for service and food, the Song of America will most likely be one of the most successful of the new ships.

THE FIRST FOUR cruises are already sold out, according to Roderick McLeod, vice president of sales and marketing for Royal Caribbean, and the first quarter of 1983 is already 85 percent booked.

"We expect the Song of America will sail close to capacity in her first year," he said on a pre-inaugural sailing.

The Song of America, unlike many of the new ships coming into service in the next few years, will probably be around happily making waves in the Caribbean for decades to come. Hopefully when she gets older she'll remove some of that youthful bad taste in purple and rose and orange and red and blue from her face and have a bit more interior grace to blend with her exquisite exterior.

Rates for seven-day cruises on the Song of America range from $1,085 per person for a standard inside stateroom to $2,050 per person for a seven-day holiday cruise in a deluxe larger outside suite. Details from your travel agent.

Serious fishermen go for lure of lovely Costa Rica

By JERRY RUHLOW
The Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

RIO COLORADO, Costa Rica — The tarpon is king, and this is where serious anglers from throughout the world come to pay homage to what is generally acknowledged as the most spectacular of all game fish.

Our guide's name was Edwin (Ginder) Clark, a descendant of the Jamaicans who were brought to Costa Rica during the last century to build the jungle railroad that connects the capital city of San Jose with the port of Limon.

He piloted the 16-foot skiff to the mouth of the river, timed the waves breaking over the bar, then gunned the outboard motor to send us surging into the calm, blue waters of the Caribbean.

We scanned the horizon for signs of fish as Ginder headed north along the verdant coastline where bands of howler monkeys catapulted themselves through the treetops.

"Here they come," the guide said as he quickly changed course to intercept what appeared to be a ripple moving across the water far in the distance.

Suddenly the fish were all about us, an acre of giant acrobats ranging from 40 to more than 100 pounds leaping skyward, twisting and turning in the air before splashing back into the water.

TREMBLING, I cast in their midst, cranked the reel and was rewarded by a smashing strike. The tarpon leaped clear of the water, and I watched in disappointment as my lure shook out of its mouth.

But I needn't have worried. Another turn or two on the reel and another strike. Heeding Ginder's advice this time, I set the hook hard: once, twice and then again, to penetrate the bony mouth of the tarpon, taking special care to dip the rod tip to allow him slack each time he jumped.

After a 40-minute battle and six or eight jumps that set the nerves to tremble, the exhausted fish slid alongside the boat where the guide was able to free the lure and hoist the 100-pounder into the air for photos before setting him free to fight again another day.

For five days we fished tarpon, both in the open sea and in the river itself, varying the routine with forays after snook, a smaller but equally worthy light-tackle prey that abounds in the river and estuaries near the border of Costa Rica and Nicaragua.

We were based at the Rio Colorado Lodge, built on stilts in a jungle clearing at the edge of the river in the northeast corner of the tiny Central American nation. One of three fishing lodges in the area, it looks like a set from a Tarzan movie, but offers the comforts of a first-class hotel.

The six-day trip was booked through Sportsmen's Travel Service International in Anaheim, Calif., exclusive West Coast agent for the lodge. The cost is $1,600 including air fare from Los Angeles via LACSA Airlines to San Jose, one night at the posh Irazu Hotel in the capital, air transportation to the lodge, all accommodations, guide, boat and tackle for five days of fishing and all meals.

IF YOU BRING your own booze, the only additional cost is for tips, soft drinks and beer (25 cents a bottle).

While primarily a fishing lodge, a visit to the Rio Colorado also offers a rare chance to visit the tropical rain forest of Costa Rica, with its rich variety of plant and animal life. The village of Barra Colorado is right across the river.

The $800 round-trip air fare is the major cost of a package trip to Costa Rica, so the visiting fisherman is well advised to allow some extra time to enjoy more of the country and take advantage of low prices brought about by the devaluation of the colon, the unit of currency, which is fluctuating between 43 and 50 to the dollar.

The price for a double room at the Irazu is listed at about $40 a night, but if you are staying a week or longer you may be able to negotiate a special rate with the manager, getting the cost down as low as $25. It depends upon the season, the flow of tourists, current value of the colon and your skills at bargaining. Smaller but adequate hotels in town are as low as $8 a night.

You can enjoy a first-class steak or seafood dinner for under $3 at restaurants. Tips are included in the price at all restaurants. Taxi fare anyplace in the city is less than $1, and the cost of native leather and wood crafts is incredibly low. A hand-tooled saddle was offered for $30, a carved rocking chair of native hardwood, disassembled for shipping, at $18.

JANUARY through April is the dry season, the ideal time to visit Costa Rica, while San Jose on the central plateau, where two-thirds of the nation's 2.3 million population lives, is the perfect base of operations.

San Jose is an immaculate city with many parks, fine restaurants, an elegant opera house offering daily cultural attractions, museums, botanical gardens, an active night life and an all-year average temperature of 72 degrees.

The Pacific coast, where temperature averages in the low 80s, has miles of unpopulated beaches, bays and lagoons where you can swim, boat, water-ski and gather lobsters and oysters by wading out among the rocks at low tide. There is outstanding fishing for marlin, sailfish, dorado, wahoo and other species, and resort hotels in every price range.

You can enjoy a one-day train trip to the port of Limon on the Caribbean and return, traversing tropical jungles with torrential rivers and thundering waterfalls. The visitor will pass sprawling blue lakes and, if returning by bus, can stop to visit banana and coffee plantations.

PERHAPS the most spectacular trip is by riverboat from Limon to the Rio Colorado Lodge, which I recommend as an option to the 35-minute flight by small plane. It takes a full day, but the boat glides through a system of canals and rivers overhung by dense jungle. You see a dozen varieties of wild orchids and bromeliads, giant ferns, colorful macaws and toucans, crocodiles, tree sloths, iguanas and monkeys, pausing along the way at a small "finca" for lunch that includes fresh coconuts chopped from a nearby tree.

Costa Rica, sometimes called the Switzerland of Latin America, has been unscathed by the turmoil that typifies the rest of Central America. Its army was disbanded by constitutional decree in 1948, and most of the national budget goes into education and health care.

There are four universities, and the nation boasts it has more schoolhouses than policemen. The literacy rate is above 90 percent, among the highest in the world, while the infant mortality rate is among the lowest. Spanish is the official language, but English is commonly spoken almost everywhere.

Perhaps the greatest attraction of Costa Rica is its people. U.S. visitors are well liked, and everyone we met was genuinely eager to be helpful.

On one occasion my wife, Faith, was waiting for a bus from the hotel to go shopping and started talking to a San Jose resident. When Faith said she did not know her way around town, the woman said she had nothing special to do that afternoon and spent the afternoon taking her to favorite stores and helping negotiate the best prices.

ANOTHER TIME, while enjoying a carnival in a nearby town, my wife commented to another bystander about how much she liked the coffee. "Don't go away," the woman said. She disappeared into a store and returned a few moments later with a pound of coffee.

"Here," she said. "Drink this when you go home, and you will remember Costa Rica."

Birth of 'Yellows'

DETROIT (AP) — In 1883 a local printer in Cheyenne, Wyo., ran out of white paper, so he made use of a supply of yellow paper to print the telephone directory.

But, the idea of printing classified advertising on yellow did not catch on until 1906 when the first Yellow Pages directory, featuring classified business advertising, was issued for Detroit by the Michigan State Telephone Co.

Today, the term Yellow Pages has become synonymous with classified advertising not only throughout the Bell System but throughout the industry. Detroit, by the way, has the largest single volume with 2,232 pages.

NTSU Jazz Band to play for Charity Ball

The One O'Clock Jazz Band of North Texas State University will provide the music for this year's Charity Ball sponsored by the Junior League of Midland, Inc., slated from 8 p.m. to midnight March 11 in Midland Center.

The Jazz Band, under the direction of K. Neil Slater, director of jazz studies at NTSU, will alternate with First Crossing to provide continuous music for dancing.

This year's Charity Ball will feature a Grecian theme and will transport guests through time and space into a Grecian temple. The ballroom will be lined with Greek columns and ruins of past treasures.

Proceeds from the ball are returned to the community through the projects of the league.

Sourdough winning fans around country

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine And Food Writer

Homesteaders used to call it "cellar bread," but sourdough is the term generally used to describe that classic mixture of potato mush and flour the prospectors used to carry in their packs to make bread along the trail.

The pioneers preferred this active "starter" to real yeast, which was usually hard to obtain and was easily ruined by bad weather conditions when living in the open.

The Alaskan trailblazers of yore wouldn't dream of hitting the road without a starter pot strapped to their back so that they could make bread when they stopped to set up camp.

James Wickersham, noted Alaskan pioneer who became a judge and a delegate to Congress, carried a pot in his provisions on his first attempt to scale Mount McKinley in 1903. It is also said the late supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas always took his pot along on fishing trips.

Wickersham's niece, Ruth Allman, has written a book (SOURDOUGH. Alaska Northwest Publishing Co., Box 4-EEE, Anchorage, AK 99509. $6.95) about the famed starter which Alaskans used not only for bread, but also pancakes, waffles and muffins.

Sourdough buffs have an easier time transporting the starter than our forefathers, but they still must take certain precautions. Avoid putting the starter in a glass jar, since the stuff begins working and expanding at temperatures between 65 and 77 degrees, says Mrs. Allman.

Sourdough's popularity with prospectors stems partly from the fact that it was known as a good source of energy. Laboratory tests have shown that sourdough contains probably the greatest amount of protein for any comparable food per pound.

Here's a classic formula the book gives for a starter.

2 cups thick potato water (see below)
2 tablespoons sugar
2 cups flour

Boil two medium potatoes with jackets on until they fall apart. Remove skins and mash potatoes and water to make 2 cups of puree. Cool. Put sugar and flour into pot with potato water. Beat until it becomes smooth, creamy batter. Cover and put in a warm place to start fermentation.

How long does it take the starter to become ripe enough for use in various recipes? The enzymes will start working in as little as three days, but it is better to wait at least a week, says Mrs. Allman. The longer the better. After a month, the sourdough becomes a rich, creamy batter honeycombed with bubbles. Some old-timers are said to wait a year for the sourdough to mature, claiming it takes that long to acquire a distinctive taste.

FABRIC SECRETS

BETTY MARTIN

Use a corded seam as a decorative touch when making bedspreads, draperies and slip covers. Start by inserting the cord in a bias cut strip of material. Make the stitches as close to the cord as possible. Use a zipper or cording foot for this purpose. Next, insert the encased cord between two pieces of material whose two good sides are facing each other. Face all the seam allowances the same way. On the wrong side of the material, make your stitches as close to the cord as possible. The result should be a professional-looking seam that is neither pulled nor puckered, but an inconspicuous part of the whole.

Perhaps you are not quite ready to tackle a bedspread, slip covers or some draperies. If you are a beginner when it comes to sewing you will receive just as much assistance as you need at LEGGETTS FABRICS, 1541 Parkway, Odessa, 362-8255 and #9 Plaza Shopping Center, Garfield at Wadley in Midland, 683-3101. We will be happy to suggest an easy pattern and will guide you in choosing a fabric that will not be difficult for you to handle. In short we will make sure you have everything you need when you leave our store so that you can begin to experience the same feeling of satisfaction your friends who sew already enjoy.

HINT:

The type of fabric usually determines the type of seam that will be needed.

'Thought-leader' magazines often money losers

By DAVID SHAW
The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

About 10 years ago, when Rob Sennott was the 28-year-old advertising director for National Review, he decided to see if he could develop a few cost-cutting ideas that might enable the magazine to break even — or perhaps even make a small profit — after 17 consecutive years in the red.

At his next regular business meeting with the magazine's founder, editor, patron and best-known contributor — William F. Buckley Jr. — Sennott proudly trundled out his list of "a half-dozen good suggestions, in terms of procedure and personnel" to effect the desired economies.

Sennott laughs when he recalls Buckley's reaction.

"Bill was clearly taken aback ... amazed" by the notion that anyone would think National Review could, or even should, make a profit, Sennott says.

"A profit?" Buckley intoned. "National Review make a profit?"

Long Buckley pause. Big Buckley grin. Then:

"You don't expect the church to make a profit, do you?"

NO, INDEED. And to Buckley and most of his staff, National Review is a church, a mission rather than (or at least more than) a business: The magazine exists to make a point, not necessarily a profit.

National Review has now lost money 28 years in a row, that is, every year of its existence. In 1981, the magazine ran up its biggest deficit ever — $600,000. The final figures aren't in for 1982 yet, but the magazine's publisher, William Rusher, estimates that loss at $450,000 to $500,000.

National Review isn't alone in its perennial bath of red ink, though. Far from it.

Journals of opinion, or "thought-leader" magazines (as they are often called in the Madison Avenue advertising community), have historically lost money in America. Many such magazines have long since gone out of business, and virtually all those still publishing lose money with clock-like regularity, whether published on the Right or on the Left, on the East Coast, on the West Coast or in the Midwest.

THE OTHER MAJOR conservative magazines:

—Human Events, based in Washington, has lost money 26 of its 28 years, and Editor Thomas Winter says the two break-even years were "just flukes."

—The American Spectator, published in Bloomington, Ind., has lost money all 15 years of its existence, and Publisher Ronald Burr says that the losses have accelerated to about $500,000 in each of the last three years, even though both circulation and advertising have doubled in that time.

—The neo-conservative Commentary, published in New York, receives an annual subsidy of about $150,000 from the American Jewish Committee to offset its losses.

Among the liberal and radical magazines:

—The New Republic, published in Washington, D.C., has lost money every year since its founding in 1914. ("There is a rumor that it made money at some point," Publisher James Glassman says, "but there are no records that I can find to that effect.")

—The Nation, published in New York, has lost money 115 of its 118 years, and no one now connected with the magazine seems to know just when those three "profitable" years were. Publisher Hamilton Fish 3rd says that the best he can hope for when all the figures are in for 1982 is a $225,000 loss "and it could be worse."

—The Progressive, published in Madison, Wisc., has lost money (generally $100,000 to $200,000 annually) in 73 of its 74 years.

—Mother Jones, published in San Francisco, has lost money all seven years of its existence, with losses reaching $500,000 in each of the past three years, Publisher Robin Wolaner says.

WHY?

Why can't magazines edited by intelligent, committed journalists for intelligent, committed readers publish profitably ... or at least break even?

This question is particularly galling to Buckley, whose widely trumpeted conservative views embrace wholeheartedly the principles of a free-market economy: the theory that in a free-enterprise, capitalist society, a product or service ought to live or die on its own merits in the marketplace, without any government subsidy or other artificial support.

National Review receives no government subsidy other than the second-class mailing privileges accorded most magazines, but it does receive considerable financial support from Buckley himself, and despite his lofty attitude in rejecting Rob Sennott's cost-cutting proposals a decade ago, Buckley says that he would like very much to see his magazine become profitable.

Would that happen if Buckley were more businessman than ideologue?

"Of all the charges that might be leveled against National Review, that particular one I most cherish the opportunity to defend ourselves against," Buckley wrote last year in his annual fund-raising letter to 60,000 of the magazine's subscribers and previous contributors.

BUCKLEY THEN WENT ON defend of the magazine's business practices, assuring the recipients of his fund-raising appeal that everyone at the magazine was cost-conscious and that Publisher William Rusher himself went over the magazine's books "as solicitously as if looking after his aged mother's monthly budget."

But the deficits and the fund-raising appeals continue.

Why, especially at a time when the president of the United States has said publicly that National Review is his favorite magazine, hasn't a popular, multifaceted figure like Buckley been able to transform into loyal readers of National Review his own enormous personal following? Why don't those hundreds of thousands of people who read his columns, buy his books and watch him on television also read his magazine regularly?

One explanation may be that National Review is the least interesting, or at least the most doctrinaire, manifestation of the otherwise delightful Buckley persona. As Buckley himself suggests, many non-conservatives buy his books and watch him on television, but for the most part, only conservatives are likely to read his magazine regularly.

"A lot of conservatives don't read much," Buckley says. "A lot of them are activists .... Liberals tend to be more verbal. Conservatives build bridges."

THE COMMERCIAL FORCER are largely the same for all "thought-leader" magazines: the increased cost of postage and paper, the high cost of acquiring new subscribers, and, more than anything else, audiences too small to attract enough advertising to pay their bills.

Most major advertisers and advertising agencies don't pay much attention to magazines with less than 300,000 circulation. Advertisers believe that they need at least that many readers to make their advertising dollars cost-effective, especially in this faltering economy.

Magazines like National Review (circulation 103,000), the New Republic (circ. 96,000) and the other journals of opinion (virtually all under 60,000 circulation) fall so far below that minimum they don't even show up as tiny blips on most ad agencies' radar screens.

The average magazine draws slightly more than 50 percent of its revenue from advertising, but most 'thought-leader" magazines draw only 5 percent to 20 percent of their revenue that way. Even Mother Jones, with a circulation of 175,000 and a record of three prestigious National Magazine awards, receives only 10 percent of its income from advertising.

That means these magazines must rely primarily on income from17, and circulation is very costly to acquire.

A MAGAZINE CAN OFTEN increase circulation substantially, almost at will, by sending mass direct mailings to potential new subscribers, using lists from other magazines, from political organizations or from any other source whose readers, supporters, members or customers are thought to share an affinity with their own readers.

But with few exceptions,returns from direct mail solicitation are notoriously low; if 2 percent to 3 percent of the recipients of such solicitations actually subscribe, the campaign is considered very successful.

With postal costs having skyrocketed as much as 500 percent for some magazines in the 1970s, a magazine now has to spend so much money to mail so many letters that the investment is rarely worth the return.

Desperate to increase circulation, in order to attract more advertisers and also increase advertising rates, many magazines have resorted to hiring independent subscription agents to solicit new readers.

But subscription agents keep for themselves the vast majority of the subscription fee collected from each person they sign up. The magazine only begins to make money when these subscribers renew. But with certain exceptions, fewer than 5 percent of subscribers attracted this way renew their subscriptions; if they'd really wanted the magazine, they probably would have subscribed before being approached by a subscription agent.

SMALL MAGAZINES that cater to other kinds of special-interest groups, such as skiers, computer buffs, automotive enthusiasts, photographers, don't generally have this problem; advertisers are eager to fill their pages with pitches for products that they know these particular readers will want, buy and use (skis, video games, cars, cameras).

Even a high-brow "thought-leader" magazine like the New York Review of Books can be seen, in this context, as a sort of intellectual Ski magazine, filled with advertisements for a specific "product" — books — that its readers buy in large quantities.

New officers of the Ladies Auxiliary, Parkview Hospital, are Cathy Stump, seated, president, and, left to right, Brenda Yowell, treasurer; Evelyn Bagwell, secretary, and Donna Campbell, vice president. They were elected during a membership coffee hosted by Mrs. Joe Campbell. A report was given on the blood drive held by the auxiliary for United Blood Services, San Angelo. Ms. Campbell was chairman of the project. Auxiliary members work on a weekly basis in several departments of the hospital, and volunteers are always needed. Women interested in working a minimum of two hours a week may contact Ms. Stump, 684-8847, or Ms. Campbell, 682-0606.

Easter safe holiday

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Preparing for Easter can be a safe as well as enjoyable activity for children, according to PAAS, a producer of Easter egg colors, which offers these tips:

—Egg shells are highly porous and toxic materials can seep onto the hard-cooked egg. If the eggs will be eaten later, do not use felt-tip pens or rubber cement for decorating. Use only non-toxic materials such as crayons and wax pencils. Check labels carefully if in doubt.

—Sharp or pointed objects, such as darning needles, pins and scissors, are excellent tools for designing and applying decorations, but be certain to keep them well out of reach of small children.

—Always use cold water for dissolving coloring tablets and make sure colors are non-toxic.

'Superfoods' coming trend

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — The day may be near when the traditional meat and potatoes will be replaced by wingbean and tilapia fish, an agricultural expert says.

The new foods will gain popularity as soon as farmers adopt techniques that produce more crops with less water, Merle Jensen told the Tucson Trade Bureau recently.

"It's got to be economical, and that's the only way it will work," said Jensen, who headed a six-year effort by the University of Arizona to develop the agricultural section at Walt Disney World's EPCOT Center.

Among the "superplants" that he expects to become commonplace are the wingbean, whose roots contain 10 times the protein of potatoes and whose leaves are nutritious; the Chinese cabbage, which can grow to 14 pounds in 60 days; and amaranth or "pig weed," a plant high in amino acids first nultivated by the ancient Aztecs.

The plants grow at EPCOT's $55 million "The Land" pavilion under unique conditions, such as hanging in the air or on vertical boards instead of in soil.

Jensen and the UA Environmental Research Laboratory also developed an intercrop technique for EPCOT in which melons, lettuce and tilapia fish all grow in the same greenhouse space. Melons hang in the air, lettuce grows on vertical boards and gets water from holes through the boards, and the fish live in the water under the boards.

Tilapias, from Africa, live off of algae, which lives off of the waste of the fish. He said it tastes like snapper and will be sold in the Tucson area within the next four months.

The fish can live in water with high levels of salt, Jensen said.

...Family Services of Midland presents a workshop on effective parenting five consecutive Thursdays, beginning Thursday, from 7 to 9 p.m.

The workshop is conducted by Teresa Jimenez, counseling intern at Family Services. She is completing her master's degree in counseling at UTPB and has taught 13 years, 11 of these in Midland.

The sessions are designed to help parents deal with their children's temper tantrums, low self-concept and poor school performance. It's focus is on rearing self-disciplined and self-motivated children and aims at improving the child's self-esteem and self-assurance.

Format for the workshop is a program entitled "Systemic Training for Effective Parenting (STEP)," which focuses on teaching parents to raise responsible decision makers.

The workshop consists of lectures, discussions, role-playing exercises and homework assignments that help parents master, stay with and put into practice the basic principles of effective parenting.

The workshop meets at Family Services, 2101 W. Wall St., Suite 9. The fee is $30 for couples and $20 for single parents. Prepayment and pre-registration are required. For further information, call Family Services, 683-4241. The number of participants is limited to seven couples to allow for more individualized instruction.

...THE FIRST CITY NATIONAL Bank of Midland presents a special exhibit of works by West Texas photographer, Sandor A. Aldott, through March 9.

Aldott, Hungarian born, has received several awards, including the Southwestern President's Trophy for Best of Shows, Western State's Sweepstakes Award for Best of Shows, four "Aurora Awards" of Hollywood and his works are in the Photography Hall of Fame, Kirkpatrick Center of Sciences and Art in Oklahoma City, Okla.

The exhibit may be seen at the bank'slobby, 500 W. Texas St. during normal banking hours.

...WEST TEXAS ASSOCIATION for the Education of Young Children conducts a workshop from 8:30 a.m. to noon Saturday in the Children's Center at Odessa College. Registration begins at 8 a.m. and is $2 for members and $5 for non-members.

Session I includes interest centers, nutrition and toddlers, and Session II includes infants, language experience for beginning reading and director's sharing session. Participants are requested to select one topic in each session.

For more information contact Kristie Brame, 699-5792, or Terry Lindsay, 687-1016.

...PAINT DAUBERS present an arts and crafts sale Thursday through Saturday in Dellwood Mall. The sale opens at noon Thursday and features a variety of items by Midland artists.

...FAMILY PREPAREDNESS FAIR features breadmaking, cheesemaking, displays and workshops March 5, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Free admission is open to the public, sponsored by The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

...MIKE RICHARD has been accepted to the Texas Tech University Medical School for the term beginning in August. He is a graduate of Hardin-Simmons University with a bachelor of science degree in biology, a minor in chemistry and a staff member of the Fairleigh Dickinson Research Center.

Richard, a 1978 graduate of Lee High School, is married to the former Jan Carr of Sweetwater...

...12TH ANNUAL Easter Seal Telethon will be held March 26 — 27, hosted by KOSA, and beginning at 10:30 p.m. Local hosts include Jim Reese, Susan Lish and Gary Hopper. This years poster child is 5-year-old Cody Clayton from Odessa, who suffers from cerebral palsy.

Permian Basin Easter Seal Society serves nine counties — Ector, Midland, Winkler, Ward, Crane, Andrews, Pecos, Upton and Reeves. The Society provides services for handicapped children and adults, including physical, occupational and speech therapy, in addition to various audiological services. Through the Easter Seal Society the Permian Basin Rehabilation Center also provides equipment such as wheelchairs, crutches and braces.

A unique feature of this telethon is that the money raised in the Permian Basin stays in the Permian Basin...

Care in choice

Lists of the most common complaints of bridesmaids have been compiled by Bride's magazine.

Perhaps the most frequently heard complaint is that the bridesmaids didn't like the dresses the bride chose for them; they were the wrong color, the wrong style, were too expensive or couldn't be worn again.

It's difficult for the bride to please everyone, but one approach is totake only your maid or matron of honor with you shopping and narrow down the almost limitless choice to three or so styles.

Camp Fire, Inc. candy sales supports group's activities

Camp Fire, Inc., A United Way Agency, features three types of candy, Pecan Carmel Patties, Chocolate Covered Mints and Peanut Crunch, for their annual candy sale project, which lasts until March 6.

Funds raised from this year's candy sales support Council activities and individual groups for their weekly meetings and projects. The summer activities sponsored by Camp Fire includes local day camps, camping and hiking trips, resident camp and local learning experience of business by selling to neighbors and friends.

These activities are open to both girls and boys, members and members-at-large. The member-at-large program is open to the public for a registration fee. All activities the local Camp Fire Council offers are in conjunction with the National Camp Fire Organization, promoting the members' individuality, diversified interest and relationship with community spirit.

Groups and leaders have worked with the City Beautification to plant shrubs in city parks, city neighborhoods with different clean-up projects, and visits to local nursing homes.

Camp Fire members participating in the sale may be identified by the Camp Fire uniform and sales badge they wear. For more information call Midland Council of Camp Fire, 694-7704.

Ham, pasta are great combo

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

HAM PASTA SPECIAL

½ of a ¼-pound stick (¼ cup) butter
12 ounces mushrooms, sliced
4 tablespoons flour
4 cups half-and-half
¼ cup medium sherry
¾ cup grated Parmesan
2 cups strips (1 by ½ by ½ inch) cooked ham
Salt and pepper to taste
8-ounce package thin spaghetti

In a medium saucepan in the hot butter briskly cook mushrooms until wilted — about 5 minutes. Stir in flour. Off heat, gradually stir in half-and-half, keeping smooth. Cook over moderate heat, stirring constantly, until thickened and bubbling — sauce will be on the thin side. Off heat, stir in sherry, ¼ cup of the Parmesan, ham and salt and pepper. Cook spaghetti according to package directions; drain and spread in a shallow 3-quart broiler-proof baking dish. Pour hot sauce over spaghetti and mix; sprinkle with remaining Parmesan. Broil 6 to 8 inches from high heat until browned — several minutes.

Cornelia Guest, 1982 'Deb of Year,' tells of her life

By ELISABETH BUMILLER
The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — Cornelia Guest comes in from the wind blowing at 59th Street and Park Avenue to Cafe Reginette, the Manhattan restaurant frequented by South American playboys, English disco dancers and hipsters from Queens. She wears black leather pants and a coyote fur coat. She has blond, glamour-girl hair, a silky complexion and a pretty, red mouth that forms a small pout. In 1982, the New York press dubbed her the "Deb of the Year."

She is the goddaughter of the Duke of Windsor, and often dances at Studio 54 until 4 a.m. Among her friends are Francesco Scavullo, the photographer, and Mick Jagger, the rock star. She says she went to 500 parties last year, although she later amends that to 365. She wants to be an actress.

"Bonjour," she says to Sylvain Snanou, the Reginette manager. They kiss. She's just back in the city from Palm Beach and Aspen, where she says nothing happened at night. She walks over to the table, pulls out a package of Marlboro Lights, then orders champagne. It is 3:30 in the afternoon. She is 19 years old.

"I had a wonderful year," she says. "I had some bad times, but you know, God, it was just a year where I met more people. There were so many great things." She has dramatically madeup eyes, and a soft, luscious fullness to her face and upper arms. "And I loved the parties and. ... "

THE MANAGER interrupts.

"Oui?" says Guest.

"Mr. Persky's on his way," he says. Producer Lester Persky ("Hair"), fiftyish, is one of her best friends. He arranged the interview.

"Ah, merci beaucoup, great, thank you," says Guest.

"It was a wonderful, wonderful year," she continues. "It was, you know, one of the best. God, I'm young, but it was probably the best year of my life in certain way."

She has been to the White House as a friend of the first lady.

Tonight her daughter will sing "It's My Party and I'll Cry If I Want To" on the David Letterman show. On New Year's Eve she sang at Xenon. She came out at the Debutante Cotillion and Christmas Ball at the Waldorf-Astoria. At 15, she dropped out of Foxcroft, the Virginia boarding school, to ride horses. She got her degree by mail. She thinks the Equal Rights Amendment is "pompous" and "ridiculous." Her ambition is to win an Oscar. She has a 42-year-old boyfriend, Peruvian real estate developer Roberto Riva. Not too long ago, she forgot and called him "Antonio." Despite her good fortune in life, she says she does get depressed. "Sometimes my dog will get run over," she says, "or my horses get sick."

DEBUTANTES HAVE BEEN back in style for several years, but no one since Brenda Frazier has made such a splash as Guest. Frazier, the 1938 "Deb of the Year" who appeared on the cover of Life, died in May after a nervous breakdown — and publication of a 1963 memoir called "My Debut-A Horror." "It's a tragedy that she died," says Guest. "She was a wonderful woman. So beautiful." Guest's mother had her own celebrated debut the year before Frazier, right at the end of the Depression. Her daughter, who has been told of the current recession, thinks there's a reason that money is flaunted in bad times. "It's partly because people feel so bad about the economy," she says. "They want to get dressed up and feel good."

The door of Cafe Reginette opens. Persky. His hair is mussed and his coat is hanging from his shoulders slightly askew.

"Pesky, darling!" says Guest, lighting up. "You look like something the cats dragged in. What's happened to you, my darling? You've lost so much weight."

They kiss. "Forgive my cold hand," says Persky. "I walked up Third."

"It's good to be home," says Guest. "God, you miss the city. Pesky darling."

"Pesky," says Persky, slightly annoyed.

He orders a Virgin Mary and pea soup, then addresses the question of how and why Cornelia was chosen "Deb of the Year."

"Well, the first I knew that the press was showing any particular attention was when we went to the opening of 'Ragtime,' " he says. "Suddenly the bulbs kept blasting, and I knew it wasn't just me, because I didn't do the movie. This was a year and a half ago. The next day someone gave me a copy of Women's Wear Daily, and here, dominating the whole spread — which included the director, the stars, Mayor Koch — was this huge picture of Cornelia with me next to her, saying, 'The Deb of the Year.' Suddenly, she was the Raquel Welch of the year. Of course, I think it's just that Cornelia is one of the few people who has the credentials. And she looked like her background. Very pretty, blond, young, a little plump then. She's better now."

"Lester!" says Guest.

"AND SHE HAD clothes," Persky continues, "and she knew how to wear them. She was a storybook princess, an old-fashioned American princess. And here she was, with an unlikely person, me. They were ready to pounce on her. And of course, Cornelia had all the things they wanted. She really was the first gal, I think, since — what were they called, the hippies? The public was ready for a new mood, a groomed mood. No beads."

Does she agree with all this?

"I don't agree that I was plump, at all," says Guest.

"You weren't very plump," says Persky. "Just a little baby fat."

Does she like being described as pretty and sweet, or would she prefer elegant and sophisticated?

"Yeah, Lester," says Guest. "Puppy dogs are cute and sweet. But I'm still happy. It's better than nothing, Uncle Lester. Right?"

"I would say that Cornelia is, outside of pulling a few bank jobs or getting kidnapped, I mean, it's the only way to really get your name in the paper," says Persky. "You're quite right to be pretty and sweet."

"I think so, too," says Guest.

FOR TWO YEARS, this Deb of the Year was living on the East Side of Manhattan with a roommate. "It's an absolute mess," she told New York magazine last year. "I've got to do something about picking fabrics." But the new year finds her back at home with her mother on Park Avenue. What happened?

"I don't want to talk about it," says Guest. "It makes me sick."

"Is that what she said, that it makes her sick?" says her ex-roommate, a 23-year-old Sarah Lawrence graduate named Lisa Burgis. She is talking later, by phone. "Oh God, I don't know what to say. It's a long story."

She makes it short: "I threw her out because of competition over a boyfriend." There is no elaboration.

"I have no comment," says Guest about Burgis' claim, "because she's nothing. She's no friend of mine. There's no point in giving a girl like that the time of day."

"Cornelia, when she was living with me," says Burgis, "was always depending on me to take care of her. We were both really social, but she was just a bit ... ridiculous."

C.Z. GUEST thinks not. Her daughter "had a very structured family life" and therefore "has a discipline over herself."

("I had a governess for my children," she said in a 1977 Washington Post interview. "I think children are better brought up with a governess. Children need someone to discipline them. And after all, Winston didn't marry me to be a maid. Besides, I couldn't go around with Winston, traveling, doing all the things he wanted me to do, if I'd had to stay home and take care of the children. That doesn't mean I never saw them. Of course I saw them. I went fox hunting with them.")

Now, says C.Z. Guest of her daughter, "I don't tell her what to do. If she wants to stay out late, it's her choice. She's 19. She can vote."

Although she might have some trouble with that. Back at Cafe Reginette, when asked if she is a Democrat or Republican, Guest turns to Persky for an answer.

"Don't look at me," he says.

GUEST IS WORKING her way through the pack of Marlboros. "I hated school, and I hated being away from Mom," she says about Foxcroft. "It just wasn't the place for me. I just like to be with my horses and my dogs and my parents. And I was very into my riding. The level that I rode at just wasn't available at Foxcroft. And I was away every weekend, and my trainer would come in, and it's hard when you're in a different surrounding. At a boarding school, they have certain rules. You can't have your own coach come in. I just couldn't really go on and fulfill myself as a rider as much as I wanted to. So I left."

Her mother not only supports her decision, but takes responsibility for it. She says the headmaster first told her that her daughter could leave school for six weeks on the riding circuit, but then said she couldn't. "I was really furious," says C.Z. Guest. "So I just sent the van to pick up her horse, and our man. I sent for her clothes later."

These days, Guest's clothes are by Fabrice, her favorite designer. He frequently loans them to her for big events. "Sometimes she buys them, sometimes I give them to her and sometimes she just wears them for a night," he says. His birthday gift to her was a silk taffeta, short evening dress that retails for $1,400. Asked what Guest has purchased from him, Fabrice says: "Ummmm. God. It's been so long. Ah, a beaded tunic dress and a black dinner dress. I do a special price for her. It's usually a little less than wholesale" — or about 60 percent of retail. "She's very good for my clothes," he adds. "It's very good publicity for me."

ON THIS NIGHT, Guest is just planning a casual dinner with friends, and then a trip to Xenon. She hasn't been out in a week.

"I've spoken to everyone on the phone," she says. "And I'm just like, 'Hi, how are you?' and they say, 'God, we haven't seen you. What do you look like?' You know."

"They'll be surprised," says Persky.

"They will be surprised, won't they Lester?" says Guest. "I think it'll be fun to go see some pals again and do it once a week. Once every few weeks. Everything is going to stay exactly the same in New York. Nothing is going to change, the people aren't going to change, the parties aren't going to change. So what's the point in going out every night?"

"Go out once a month to see what happened," says Persky.

Does she think she'll be able to stick to that?

"Yeah," says Guest. "Well, no, no, no. Wait a second. There are different charities that I work for. The National Council on Alcoholism and the New York affiliate."

It's not too early to start thinking bikini weather...

Bid goodbye to 3 to 5 pounds a week-pounds you'll never see again.

Every year Americans spend millions of dollars in pursuit of flat tummies and Scarlett O'Hara waists. Achieving the ideal weight seems to be a national obsession—and piling it back on a universal plight.

What most Americans don't realize is that diets which recommend a radical change from natural, normal eating behavior are doomed to fail. The body was meant to be satisfied by nutritionally balanced meals and a regular schedule.

At Professional Diet Systems, we work with you, individually, to tailor a safe, natural program that will enable you to permanently lose an average of three pounds per week.

A professional diet counselor renders emotional support and nutritional guidance. In addition, you receive a diet supplement of natural vitamins, minerals, unsaturated fatty acids, and amino acids. Because your body is not starved for these essential nutrients, your impulse to overeat is suppressed.

Don't let the fantastic weight-loss claims of some diet programs fool you. Permanently bid goodbye to three to five pounds a week through the doctor-approved, Professional Diet Systems program. Call now for a free consultation.

Matching registered dogs by computer

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

Computers are well on the way to becoming as necessary to 20th century living as the automobile and the telephone. Everyday, in thousands of different ways, computers touch all of our lives.

Roger Coughlin of Midland has found a new and slightly unusual use for the computer. He, along with his partner Brenda Williams, has taken his love for and knowledge of animals, applied it to computer techology, and turned both into an intriguing new business. Coughlin is the founder of Coughlin's Computer Stud Listings, a service that provides matches for the breeding of registered dogs and cats (although his client list thus far contains only dogs).

"Working at the pet store, I had people coming in constantly, wanting to know where to find animals to breed their pets with," he said. "In the old days pet stores kept stud books."

Although Coughlin is not a veterinarian and cannot himself offer pet owners medical advice concerning their pets, he does work closely with Dr. Greg Adkins of Shannon Animal Hospital here in Midland. "He not only got me going (in this business), but he also handles all my professional questions," Coughlin said.

This computer "dating" sevice works only with registered animals. Coughlin specified that dogs listed with his service must be registered with the American Kennel Club or the United Kennel Club.

"Normally the (pet) store or vet or boarding kennel will call and tell me what they are looking for," he said, "and normally it's the female looking for the male (since breeding depends on the female's cycle.)"

COUGHLIN SAID for a flat fee of $20 per year an animal is listed in his computer; for the same $20 the animal can make as many matches per year as the owner wishes.

"First step is the owner fills out an application with all the information I need," he said. "AFTER I have accepted the animal, the owner pays the fee. That puts both male and female animals' (statistics) into the computer, and the owner gets a free listing of all eligible matches." Coughlin follows AKC rules and guidelines to determine which animals may be listed with his service.

The idea behind the service is twofold: (1) to help pet owners who wish to breed their animals find suitable matches for their pets; and (2) to provide the owners peace of mind that the animals they choose to breed with their pets are AKC registered animals.

In addition to finding matches for registered animals, Coughlin said he is "also trying to give information on what the norm is (in the various breeds) — what and how to get it. If I don't have the information I have a very excellent vet who gives me professional answers."

A pedigree is basically a dog's family tree, Coughlin explained. Dogs that are listed with the computer service must be pedigreed and registered. "A pedigree is not the same as being registered. Normally they come together, but if (the animal) has a pedigree it doesn't always mean he/she is registered.

"You usually pay more for a registered dog," he added. "A registerd dog is protection because you know who the parents are, you know the standards have been met. AKC sets standards for different breeds. Registration gives the owner the state of mind that the dog is pure breed. If you are interested in breeding your pet, you'll find it hard if the dog isn't registered in AKC or UKC."

Coughlin said that with his listings the owner of a female dog will be able to select the match for the female that the owner feels is best. In return for the stud service by the male, the owner of the male usually receives $50 and pick of the litter, though the terms of the agreement are left up the two owners.

"IT'S ALWAYS THE STUD who sets the price, never the female," hesaid. "The female can refuse if the price is too high. AKC and all professionals say that the female goes to the male (to breed) because the male is a lot more territorial and often he has to be at home."

The gestation period for dogs is usually 58—63 days. "Sometimes it happens that the female doesn't get pregnant — often because the owner didn't figure her cycle out properly and missed her breeding period," Coughlin said. "Sometimes the male or the female is just not fertile. A vet's care is very important in this to figure the best time to breed. Females especially should be looked at by a vet — to do a checkup, make sure the dog is healthy, get her shots, get her wormed...

"If a person really is interested in having nice puppies he or she ought to be selective as to which dog he picks to breed with his female. The computer runoff gives extensive information about the studs," he said.

"Inbreeding is something owners should not do — that should be left to professional breeders. You want to see the pedigree and make sure the two dogs aren't from the same family," Coughlin said.

In addition to being a dog's family tree, a pedigree shows which of the dog's ancestors were champions. "A pedigree can never hurt you," said Coughlin. "Pedigree has nothing to do with saying a dog can't produce champion dogs — maybe lack of champions on a pedigree means lack of money or time needed to show on the part of the owner. The biggest thing to remember is 'did the owner even show the dog's ancestors?' You can take a dog with no champions (in his/her ancestry) and still produce champions. I encourage all my clients to get their dog's pedigree."

AKC registered dogs are more expensive and more valuable in a monetary sense, than unregistered dogs. Coughlin stresses the importance of AKC registration. "If it's a pure breed dog, and you paid more for it, you want to be assured you got what you paid for. AKC is very disciplined on how this is done — you must follow their rules and regulations or you won't be allowed to register your dog."

AKC RECOMMENDS AGE guidelines for the breeding of both male and female dogs. For male dogs AKC says they should not breed if they are older than 8 — 10 years. Coughlin adds that the age a male dog reaches sexual maturity is "variable — it depends on the breed and on the individual dog. Normally a male is fertile after six months, and reaches mature fertility at 12 — 15 months. He usually stops being sexually active at 8 — 10 years. Males can mate anytime."

Female dogs follow a cycle, he said. "A female is usually fertile at six months, or as late as 18 months. They can have a cycle between four and eight times a year, but it's usually every six months until about age 6. AKC recommends 6 years as the age for females to stop giving birth — it can be dangerous for older females."

According to AKC guidelines a male or female must be eight months or older to produce a litter. "It's not good to breed (a female dog) on the first cycle (heat) — you should wait to breed a female on the second heat," Coughlin said. "AKC says breeding too early might stunt her growth."

Another reason for waiting, he said, is to give the owner an idea of how her cycle goes so the owner will be able to more accurately judge when will be the best time for the female to breed.

Applications for listing animals with the computer listing service may be picked up at Jerry's Perfect Pets in Midland Park Mall. Coughlin said he usually recommends that interested owners fill out an application a few months before their pet is ready to breed. "That way, if anything ever happens to their paper work, it is already on file in the computer."

Many people find breeding their registered dogs and then selling the puppies can be quite profitable. Coughlin pointed out that "the only (money) outlay for the female's owner is the stud fee. Males have hardly any risk involved. But it's not just a money venture, it's a way of having pride in your dog.

"If most people start ahead of time they can find many people who want the puppies," he added.

Coughlin's Computer Stud Listings operate mainly in the Midland-Odessa-Big Spring area. For more information or for applications contact Ron Coughlin at Jerry's Perfect Pets, or Roger Coughlin at 697-3484 or 686-7227.

ESA Charity Western Dance scheduled

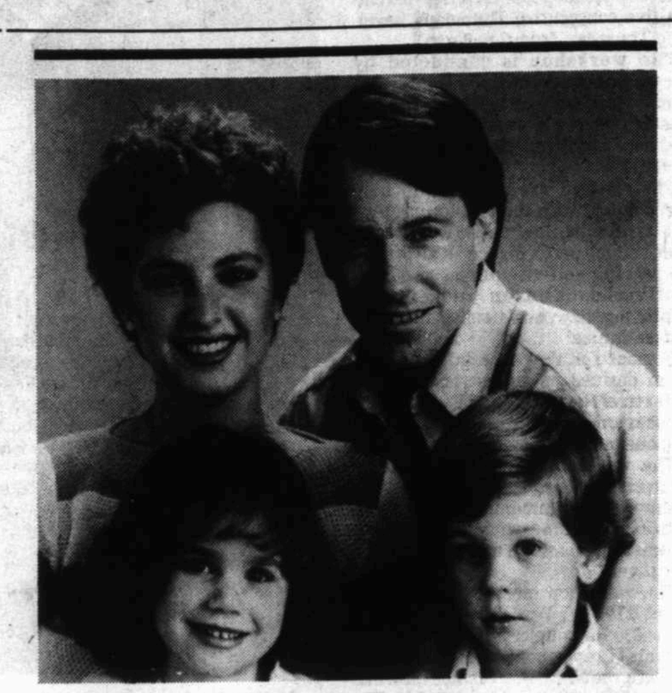

The Beta Eta Chapter of Epsilon Sigma Alpha International will host the 7th Annual Charity Western Dance from 9 p.m. to 12:30 a.m. Saturday in the American Legion Building on Air Park Road. The well-known local band, Shade Country, will play for the benefit.

All proceeds will be donated to St. Jude's Children's Research Hospital in Memphis, Tenn. Tickets are available at the door and the public is invited. Tickets are $10 a couple and $6 singles.

Founded by entertainer Danny Thomas, St. Jude's Hospital is the largest childhood cancer research center in terms of number of patients and treatment successes.

ESA is focusing its efforts on neuroblastoma which annually strikes one in every 100,000 children and is uniformly fatal unless detected at an early age.

Recipe classic: Artichokes with Hollandaise sauce

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

DEAR CECILY: My husband loves artichokes with Hollandaise. Can you tell me how to prepare the artichokes and make the Hollandaise? — NEW COOK.

DEAR NEW COOK: Use a heavy sharp knife to cut off about 1 inch from each artichoke top. Pull off a few of the bottom leaves and cut off the stems so the artichokes will stand straight. With a kitchen scissors cut off the tip of each leaf. Rinse the artichokes in cold water.

Stand the artichokes upright in a saucepan — preferably one into which they will just fit. Add enough boiling water to come half-way up the artichokes and drop in a tablespoon of olive oil. Bring the water to a boil; cover and boil gently until the artichoke bases are barely tender when pierced with a fork — about 35 minutes for medium-size artichokes. (If water gets very low during the boiling, add a little more.) Remove artichokes and turn them upside down to drain. Gently pull out the small soft inner leaves attached to chokes (thistle portion) and discard. With a sturdy teaspoon, scoop out chokes and discard. Serve warm or at room temperature.

Now to the Hollandaise Sauce. I have an easy method I have given to many new cooks and it has always worked.

EASY HOLLANDAISE

¼-pound stick (½ cup) refrigerator-firm unsalted butter
2 large egg yolks
1½ tablespoons lemon juice
Salt and white pepper

Cut butter into 4 equal pats. In a 1-quart mixing bowl with a whisk slightly beat egg yolks; whisk in lemon juice until blended. Add one butter pat.

Place bowl in a deep 8-inch skillet and add enough hot tap water to have it come up as high as possible. Remove bowl. Bring the water in the skillet to simmering; return bowl to simmering water. Adjust heat so water simmers and never boils; whisk until the pat of butter blends with the egg yolk mixture. Whisk in a second pat of butter the same way, then a third pat and last the fourth. Continue beating until the sauce is a little thinner than mayonnaise consistency. Beat in salt and pepper.

Serve the Hollandaise as soon as it is thickened. Or make it a few hours before serving and turn it into a wide-mouth vacuum jar and cover tightly. Uncover at serving time and the Hollandaise will be pleasantly warm — the temperature it should be.

Charter Altrusa Club members honored

Caroline Keisling, Ada Phillips and Annie Ford, three charter members of the Altrusa Club of Midland who are still members, were honored at a dinner meeting of the club in the Midland Woman's Club.

The trio organized the club Aug. 31, 1948, and the club received its charter Oct. 13, 1948. Each of the honorees made brief remarks about the history of the club. Ms. Ford told the group that she treasured being an Altrusan because of the many friends she has made and the fellowship. Ms. Keisling said she enjoyed meeting other Altrusans to learn from their experiences and be inspired by their creativity. Being associated with Altrusa has made me a better person and, through working with others, I have developed my own talents and skills, Ms. Phillips remarked. She pointed out that when Altrusa was organized it was the only women's service group in the community.

Mary Alice Tidwell spoke on "Reminising," recounting serious and lighthearted incidents which have occurred in the club through the years.

Certificates of Appreciation were presented to the honorees by Ms. Tidwell, Thelma Gardner and Loleta Guffey.

Musical entertainment consisted of piano selections by Beverly Wise. The president of the club, Mary Ritchie, welcomed the guests.

Botary to participate in state pageant

Toni Botary of Midland has been selected as a state finalist in the 1983 Mrs. Texas Pageant scheduled for March 12-13 at the Greenspoint Marriott Hotel in Houston.

Mrs. Botary, creator of Finishing Touches, a self-enhancement program, is among approximately 60 women from Texas competing for the title. She will be judged on the basis of beauty of face and figure, poise, personality, grooming, intelligence and speaking ability. The winner will represent Texas in the seventh annual Mrs. America Pageant from Las Vegas, Nev., on syndicated national television in late April.

Mrs. Botary moved to West Texas in January 1982 from Houston, where she was a model and modeling instructor more than 10 years. She developed Finishing Touches which encompasses the entire spectrum of self-enhancement to include visual poise, self-awareness, motivation, grooming and etiquette, for women of all ages.

In addition to her teaching and modeling background, she works with pageant contestants at local and state levels and is involved in fashion commentary.

She does radio and television commercials and is a guest lecturer for business and civic organizations. She is the 1983 publicity chairman for Midland Community Theatre and is a volunteer member with the American Heart Association and Midland Memorial Hospital.

Mrs. Botary and her husband, James, have been married 12½ years and have a son, Nicholas Anthony, age 9.

DEAR ABBY

Stripper at shower could bring complaints

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My sister's shower is coming up soon, and I was just informed that the girls she works with have hired a male stripper to come in and do his act.

They said he doesn't take off all his clothes, and it's nothing really dirty, but it is rather suggestive.

My question: How are the older women at the shower going to react? The grandmothers of the bride and groom (both past 65) will be there. On one hand they might get a kick out of it, but on the other hand, I'm not sure.

I really need your opinion, and possibly the opinions of your female readers who have been through this. — CONCERNED SISTER

DEAR CONCERNED: When in doubt, don't. To embarrass or offend even one person could spoil the occasion.

And by the way, age is not necessarily the criterion — some older women are more broad-minded than the younger ones.

DEAR ABBY: Eight years ago I purchased a pair of artificial legs for my husband. He wore them twice and then refused to wear them again. They are like new. Since that time, they have remained in the closet.

Last December my husband passed away and now I'm stuck with a pair of useless legs.

Do you know of any organization I can sell them to? — WITHHOLD MY NAME

DEAR WITHHOLD: Get in touch with your nearest orthopedic rehabilitation center.

If that doesn't get the legs out of the closet, you might consider donating them to the local chapter of the National Society for Crippled Children and Adults for a tax deduction.

DEAR ABBY: My husband, who is in his 40s, has a new hobby. He makes obscene phone calls. He dials numbers at random, and from time to time he gets a woman to listen to him and has an "affair" with her on the phone.

I have caught him at it several times. He says he isn't really doing anything wrong, it's just a harmless pastime. Then he begs me to forgive him.

I hate to leave the house because I know the minute I do he will start making these calls. When I'm away and call our house, the line is always busy. I think there's something wrong with him.

What should I do? — WORRIED IN MAINE

DEAR WORRIED: Your hubby's hobby is a symptom of a sick mind. It could also bring him trouble with the law.

I urge you to get him to a doctor before he finds himself in serious trouble. He needs to be examined by a psychiatrist.

DEAR ABBY: My husband works for a cable TV service. Every day he comes home and tells me about parents who leave their kids at home to let the serviceman in. Today he told me about a sweet little 8-year-old girl who was left home alone to let him in!

What are parents thinking of? Why don't they try to protect their children? These kids could be opening the door for a thief, murderer or rapist.

I think all service companies should require that a person 18 years or older be home to receive services of all kinds. — MOBILE, ALA.

DEAR MOBILE: So do I.

AT WORK

Foil those frustrating interviews

By DR. ADELE M. SCHEELE

When everything goes smoothly during an interview (or anything else in life, for that matter), it is said to come "naturally." Conversely, when you get caught in a bad situation, it feels "unnatural." We have to rely on feelings because the real process of doing things is hidden from us. We never get to witness good, bad or even mediocre interviews. Therefore we have to make assumptions about how things go.

First we assume that the interviewer has read our resume or application or recalls our phone call of last week. Therefore we don't repeat aloud what we wrote. That in itself makes us appear inexperienced.

Instead, rehearse a zesty presentation, even with the possibility of repeating yourself. For example, when you are asked whether you've had any experience or special training — all carefully listed on the resume — don't respond, "I told you that before over the phone." Instead, answer without rancor.

Then, too, circumstances beyond our control often interfere. We can't help but lose our momentum during a seventh interrupting phone call. How do successful people handle such frustration? They meet it head on, saying, "Since this is obviously an incredibly busy day for you, shall we reschedule our interview for a better time? I'd be glad to come back later because this interview is very important to me." The interviewer can then (a) apologize but continue, (b) not take any more calls for the duration of your session, or (c) reschedule. Saying something sweetly is better than not.

Sometimes we are sure that the interviewer just doesn't like us. Should we just chalk it up to another situation out of our control? It's easier to, but there's a lot more value in trying to deal with it. We could say, "Is there something wrong? I sense you have something on your mind." Or if that doesn't lessen the tension, we could say, "Working here is important to me. I'd like to talk to some other people too — the people I'd be directly working for."

Or sometimes we blow it because we're too anxious. Instead of coming across as a competent worker, we sound like we just learned how to speak English. The only way out is to confront ourselves. "I'm surprised at my nervousness today. I'm really a terrific worker and think I could be an asset here. Has this ever happened to you?" A smile, an apology, an appeal may break the negative pattern and set things right.

Or sometimes we're vulnerable. We haven't worked for a period of time, or we've been fired, or we don't have the exact experience asked for. So when we're questioned, most of us get defensive. Instead, prepare ahead of time a rehearsed story that explains your lack or failure in a way that answers the question and gets you off the hook. Not looking embarrassed is essential. We all feel embarrassed, of course, but to reveal it makes us look like a bad risk.

If we have been fired and are questioned about why we left our job, we cannot say we hated our boss or it was a set-up. Instead we must play it light, refrain from launching into our perhaps justifiable lament, and tell about reorganization or irreconcilable differences. You could say, "My boss and I didn't see eye-to-eye on principles but looking back I wish there had been a middle ground. It's a great loss when both sides lose, so I don't want it to happen again."

A little time to plan out an interview session helps, but mostly we do it in the dark. Television has playbacks to enhance sports coverage. We see in slow motion a specific play again with arrows pointing to the critical move. I wish our working lives could be revealed the same way. We'd get to witness what works. We'd appreciate success even more. We'd grow bolder to try more of it ourselves.

AT WIT'S END

Television series of future

By ERMA BOMBECK

On the eve of the last episode of "MASH," which is a monument to how good television can be, it's interesting to speculate on what is down the road.

I saw a promo the other night for a new show, hosted by attorney F. Lee Bailey. It seems a guest who has some real important reasons not to tell the truth (the one I saw featured the man who claimed Howard Hughes bequeathed him a fortune), but swears he is not lying, is given a lie detector test.

A great part of the program is watching a needle zig back and forth on a polygraph test. You could die from the excitement.

What do I know? Maybe an electronic series starring a machine is the wave of the future. Nothing else has "worked."

It's possible the human element no longer amuses or titillates us.

I know this. If this show has any kind of rating at all, indicating a trend, you can look forward next season to the following lineup:

Celebrity Heartbeat! An exciting new game show where celebrities are given an electrocardiogram and contestants chosen from the audience are pitted against one another to see which one has the best score. (The audience is divided into red, blue, and green teams and can also share in the fun.)

"And The Winner Is . . ." A weekly series on how the votes are tabulated for such exciting shows as the Oscars, Emmys, Tonys, Grammys, Country Western, etc. A behind-the-scenes look at Price and Waterhouse pushing buttons and discussing how many rented tuxedos are soiled when they're returned. A family bonanza.

"Feeding Your Computer." A computer nutritionist discusses how to keep your computer healthy. With guest appearances by H. and R. Block, E.F. Hutton and I., B. and M.

"Go Play in the Traffic," a sitcom set in the drama of the Driver's License Bureau. Every week, Professor Kingsley helps teenagers cram for their eye test. The drama builds as each week we try to guess which students will pass and which one will fail. (Look for Parallel Parking to be a spinoff.)

Television has always gone with trends, from medicine to law to Westerns to drama to comedy and private eyes. It's the machine's turn. Be still, my beating heart.

Keeping juice fresh

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A development called aseptic packaging keeps juice products fresh for several months without refrigeration according to Del Monte, which uses the technique to package fruit juices and punch.

In aseptic packaging, juices are sterilized for a few seconds, then are hermetically sealed in sterilized paperboard cartons.

Design for Today

by Belle Glaros

Color is a vitally important element in establishing the mood in any decorating scheme. However, many people are unable to verbally convey what they want in a house paint, often, for no other reason than the lack of the proper terminology. These explanations should help: "Hue" denotes the actural color name such as green. A color's "value" refers to it lightness or darkness by mixing white, gray can be effected. Those color values closest to black are "shades" while those closets to white are "tints". "Tone" refers to a color's intensity. This is the degree to which it displays brightness or dullness.

Color selection is just a part of our complete service at BEVERLY HILLS INTERIORS INC, No. 3 Oakridge Square, 686-9607. We have unique designs for your home and office, including that accent piece you haven't be able to find. We also specialize in the restoration and rebuilding of fine furniture for reuse." Beverly Hills Comes West"

DECORATING TIP:

Avoid fluorescent lighting as direct lighting as it can greatly affect hue.

Opportunity Center announces new project

The Opportunity Center Auxiliary and the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens announce plans for a five-acre project for the new "Opportunity Complex."

The Opportunity Center Auxiliary, principle fund-raiser of the project, is undertaking responsbility for all architectural fees for the new $4.5 million complex.

Plans for "Phase I" of the project include renovation of the existing Opportunity Center facility, additions of perimeter fencing and a line thicket.

Plans also include enlargement of the playground area, additional equipment, and adjustments for visitors and office parking.

Additonal apartment complexes are scheduled to be added to the existing two care facilities. Also planned is an all-purpose recreational facility for general use and public rental.

Programs offered by Association for Retarded Citizens include "Summer Learn to Swim," Texas Special Olympics, Self Advocacy Programs (for retarded adults, 18 or over), sitter-companion referral, loan library of publictions, "Helping Hands" newsletter, information and referral, Opportunity Center day care for the early childhood mentally or physically handicapped (before and after school), pre-school children day care, parent support groups, residential facilities, public interest and information meetings, summer camps, recreational facilities and "Pop Bottle," a recreation-type youth center.

Girl Scout adult volunteers receive awards

Anne Josefy was named the 1982 outstanding adult volunteer of the Permian Basin Girl Scout Council at their recent annual meeting at the Midland Program Center.

Carol Ann Hunt and Ava Jane Warren were presented "Thanks" badges by former Midlander Bob Goff, a member of the Girl Scouts national board of directors.

"Thanks" badges were also presented to Pat Godbold of Marfa and Barbara Richardson of Alpine.

Midland residents recognized for serving on the board of directors include Mary Josefy, Karen Carpenter, Elizabeth Mallonee and Schatzie Tighe.

Geriann Green was presented the "Appreciation" pin for her volunteer efforts. Also honored were 1982 Day Camp directors Freda Kinsay and Sue Roberts, Lou Ann Graham, member of the council-wide cookie committee, and Pat Stanley, coordinator of the father-daughter event.

Engagement announced

Mr. and Mrs. Terry Smith of Midland announce the engagement of their daughter, Judy Carol, to Raymond Lee Davis of Midland, son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Davis of Shallowater. The wedding will take place March 18 at 7 p.m. at Crestview Baptist Church in Midland.

The bride-elect is a graduate of Lee High School and attended Midland College. She is an aerobics instructor at Crestview Baptist Church and is employed with M.D. Abel Co.

The future bridegroom is a graduate of Coronado High School in Lubbock and attended Texas Tech University. He is a member of the Midland-Odessa Symphony and Chorale and is employed with the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

HELP FOR OILY SKIN

What's the best thing you can do for oily skin? Keep it sparkling clean! That means frequent clean-ups during the day to keep it clear, oil-free. Here, some savvy skin care tips, to keep your oily complexion fresh, pretty, pampered.

• Think "portable"! Keep a small bottle of antiseptic cleanser in your desk or tote bag, and use it whenever your skin feels sticky, grimy. Smooth it on your forehead, wrists, temples, along your hairline, at the back of your neck—for an instant pick-up. And sweep some on hot spots after sports, whenever you need a quick clean-up. Leaves skin feeling tingly, too—refreshed.

• Pay attention to the foods you eat—proper nutrition is vital in maintaining a healthy-looking complexion. Take in plenty of fresh fruits, vegetables, lean meats. Don't be tempted to go on a crash diet—strive for balanced meals.

Beverly Hills chutney bread delicious

By ROSE DOSTI
From Wire Reports

DEAR SOS: Trumps Restaurant in Beverly Hills serves a delicious Chutney Bread, which I would love to make. Any chance of a recipe? — READER

DEAR READER: The recipe is definitely a winner.

CHUTNEY BREAD
2 1-2 cups flour
1-2 cup granulated sugar
1-2 cup brown sugar, packed
1 teaspoon baking powder
1 teaspoon salt
3 tablespoons oil
1 1-4 cups milk
1 egg
1 tablespoon orange peel
1 (10-ounce) jar mild chutney, chopped
1 cup chopped nuts

Combine flour, sugars, baking powder, salt, oil, milk, egg and orange peel. Mix just to moisten ingredients. Do not overmix. Add chutney and nuts. Turn into greased loaf pan and bake at 350 degrees 55 to 60 minutes or until golden brown. Bread will be moist.

DEAR SOS: I often enjoy the Chinese chicken salad at Madame Wu's in Santa Monica, Calif. It is served at room temperature. Can you provide the recipe? —LOIS

DEAR LOIS: Madame Wu's chicken salad recipe has stood the test of time deliciously.

MADAME WU'S CHINESE CHICKEN SALAD
3 chicken thighs
Oil for frying
2 teaspoons dry mustard
2 teaspoons water
3 ounces rice sticks
1-2 teaspoon Chinese five-spice powder
1-2 teaspoon salt
1 1-2 tablespoons soy sauce
2 teaspoons sesame oil
1-3 cup chopped toasted almonds
6 to 8 green onions, cut in 2-inch lengthwise slices
1-2 head iceberg lettuce, shredded

Cook chicken in water until tender and drain. Fry chicken in deep oil heated to 400 degrees until crisp, about 5 to 8 minutes. Drain on paper towels and cool.

Meanwhile, mix mustard and water and let stand 15 to 20 minutes. Cut cooled chicken into fine lengthwise strips. Add rice sticks to oil and fry 30 seconds or until puffed. Drain on paper towels and cool. Add spice powder, salt, soy sauce and sesame oil to mustard-water mixture and stir until smooth.

Just before serving, combine shredded chicken, rice sticks, mustard mixture, almonds and green onions and toss. Place shredded lettuce on chilled platter. Top with tossed chicken mixture and serve at once. Makes 4 servings.

DEAR SOS: I am wondering if you might know how Chicken Fried Steak is prepared in restaurants. The recipes in cookbooks do not turn out like the ones cooked in restaurants. —MRS. H.W.

DEAR MRS. H.W.: First of all, those who expect chicken, may be surprised to learn that chicken steaks are a cut of boneless piece of beef from the top of the chuck, sometimes sirloin tip. The steak is rolled in seasoned flour, pounded fiercely with a heavy saucer to coat it well enough to help produce a gravy made by adding milk or water to drippings after frying.

Chicken fried steak and gravy or country fried steak, as it is sometimes called in the Midwest and South where it is a regional specialty, is often prepared for a hearty home meal and found readily in coffee shops. The dish is usually served with mashed potatoes, a vegetable and biscuits for sopping up the gravy.

I am not sure what restaurants do differently, but suspect that the cooking utensil has achieved a matching perception with its ingredients over a period of time. This recipe should approximate any authentic version.

CHICKEN FRIED STEAK
1 pound sirloin tip steak
1-4 cup flour
1 teaspoon salt
1-8 teaspoon black pepper
Dash paprika
1 tablespoon oil
2 tablespoons water

Cut steak into serving pieces. Roll in flour seasoned with salt, pepper and paprika, and pound with edge of heavy saucer. Brown in hot oil on all sides. Add water, cover and simmer 45 minutes to 1 hour, or until meat is tender. Serve hot with meat drippings spooned over meat. Gravy may be made by adding milk or water to drippings, using 2 cups liquid and 3 tablespoons flour. Makes 4 servings.

Only recipes of general interest will be printed. We are unable to answer all requests. Please include restaurant address when requesting recipes from restaurants. Send your letter with self-addressed, stamped envelope to Culinary SOS, Food Section, Los Angeles Times, Times Mirror Square, Los Angeles 90053.

Home floor sanders handy when used properly

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — I expect to sand our dining room floor soon and intend to rent a floor sander. Is there anything special I should know about handling it? I have done considerable sanding on unfinished furniture.

A. — First, when you rent the sander, arrange to pick it up at the dealer shortly before you are ready to use it so you don't pay for an idle machine. Secondly, don't let the dealer assume you know how to use it. Have him show you exactly how to attach the sandpaper (once you will need three different grades) and everything else you should know to get good results. Perhaps the most important thing there is to know about using a large floor sander is that the sandpaper should never rest on the floor except when the machine is moving. Allow it to remain in one spot, even for a moment, you'll gouge it. Be sure, at the same time you rent the big machine, to rent an edger to get close to the walls.

Q. — WE RECENTLY used candles on the dining room table during meals and some wax got on the wood and hardened. We have let it go until now because we were afraid we might ruin the table top. Before we start removing the wax, can you give us any information we should have?

A. — If you place an ice cube on the hardened wax, you will be able to scrape it off somewhat easier. However, keep a dry cloth handy so that any water which gets on the table can be wiped up immediately — not a few minutes later, but instantly. Use a small knife that doesn't have much of an edge to do the scraping. Work very gently and hold the blade horizontally or as much so as possible. If you don't mind messing up your fingernails a bit, use them for some of the scraping. No matter how you do it, the trick is to work very slowly and very carefully. After the wax has been removed, the area may require a little polishing to restore whatever shine was there originally.

Q. — I AM considering buying a stationary power saw. I am trying to decide between a table saw and a radial arm saw. What are the differences between them?

A. — It would take an entire page to tell you all the differences, but here are the principle ones: With a table saw, the wood is fed into the blade. With a radial arm saw, the blade is moved across the wood, with the exception of the ripping operations, which aren't too often used by amateurs. With both machines and their attachments, a variety of cuts can be made. Since your preference is likely to be a personal one and unlike that of a friend or neighbor, try to make your choice on the basis of machine usage. Some establishments that sell both kinds of saws will allow you to try out the machines. If you have never used either one in the past, have somebody show you how to use it. When you do, be very careful. In some cases, running the machine just a few minutes will help you decide whether you do or don't like it. As with many workshop tools, it should feel comfortable before you purchase it.

Q. — I KNOW there are various ways to finish the edges of plywood, but for the job I have in mind I would be satisfied with just painting them. Should anything be done to the edges before putting on the paint?

A. — If you want the edges to be smooth, rub wood putty or something similar into them. The mixture should be slightly on the liquidy side so it will fill any holes or imperfections. Wait 24 hours, sand and paint.

Q. — I AM NEW to woodworking and only recently have learned how to use a couple of power tools. What has started to intrigue me is the wood operations in which grooves are put into the surfaces of large pieces of wood. How are these done and can a beginner learn how to make them?

A. — There are several power tools which enable such grooves to be made, but the one that does an excellent job for a novice is the electric router. By machine, you can do a creditable job of using the router in a short time. A router is a fairly specialized tool, so if you plan to do routing only occasionally, it may be you should consider doing it with one of the other electric tools. If you expect to do it often, then a router is your best bet. The type of work you do with a router, most of it called either routing or shaping, is determined by the kind of bit you use in the machine.

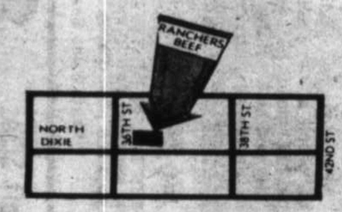

Q. — IN A HOUSE we bought, there is ceramic tile on the floor, not the tiny ones but the larger ones you sometimes see on the wall. We have never liked the color and have been wanting to paint it. We have always thought a strong detergent or commercial tile cleaner. It then must be sanded to give better bond for the new tile. After sanding, rinse with clear water and allow to dry thoroughly. Be sure you use an adhesive which says on the label of the container that it is suitable for ceramic tile, but the old surface must be sound and well-bonded. If it is, you are able to set the tile in place. When setting the tile, use a slight twisting motion and press firmly into place. Align the tiles in the adhesive, slide a flat board across the surface while tapping it with a hammer. Dry tile can be polished with a clean cloth. You probably will need a tile cutter and tile nipper.

FOCUS: Manek Panthaky

Achieving his goals with a positive outlook

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

From a village near Bombay, India, to Midland, Texas — with stops in London and Pittsburgh — Dr. Manek Panthaky has been successful at some diverse careers: medical doctor, researcher, computer salesman.

Through them all, he has worked under one philosophy: "When your mind wants to do it, you can do it. There's no two ways about it. You have to say, 'I will do a better job, and I can do it.'

"Almost anybody who has a positive attitude can be anything he wants, whether they are Greek or Japanese or whatever. The desire to succeed is very important."

This desire caused Panthaky to make another career change last October. He left his lucrative and secure job as one of IBM's top salesman (he was a member of the top one percent of the sales force), after 12 years with that firm.

He says he wants to prove to himself he can succeed or fail on his own.

His new job? Owner of Regency Motor Cars, the Rolls Royce and Aston Martin dealership on West Highway 80.

"I WANTED TO do something for myself, on my own," he explained. "I have a strong belief in the 'you are the captain of your own ship' philosophy.

"At IBM, if I had a bad year, I could always blame it on the corporation, or the machines, or something. I need something more absolute that says, 'Yes, Manek, you can do it,' or 'No, Manek, you can't.'"

So far, he has beefed up the service and repair end of the business, started a body shop for exotic foreign cars, and begun a Rolls Royce limousine service available by the hour (with free champagne for wedding parties).

Panthaky believes success stems from how a person is perceived by those around him, whether co-workers or customers or friends.

In 1980, he won IBM's Eagle Award for having been in the top one percent of the sales force. Only 17 others out of 2,700 won it that year.

YET, HE CLAIMS it was not really all that important.

"Just to have a customer come to you and ask to buy a computer is not my achievement — it is the corporation's. To me, the true achievement is when my former IBM customers call me and ask, 'Hey, when are you coming to see me for coffee?'

"That is an achievement that turns me on. If I had done a lousy job, they wouldn't call me."

Panthaky plans to run the Rolls dealership with three key ingredients: leadership, teamwork, and creativity.

"To me, leadership is not sitting at some big desk with your feet up and saying 'hear ye, hear ye,' but is rather, setting a good example for others to follow." He also believes strongly in delegating authority, based on trust and competence.

TEAMWORK MEANS "everything is 'us and we,' not 'I' or 'you'. If a customer comes in and says there's a speck of dust on a car, I don't go jump on the guy responsible, because it's 'us'," Panthaky said.

"The other thing I like is creativity. It gives you fulfillment," he said. "If an idea is put to work and succeeds, the guy who had it is so elated. It's better than a monetary bonus."

Overriding it all is the positive attitude, which Panthaky said he picked up from his parents in India. "I would rather train an incompetent person with a good attitude than work with a competent one with a negative attitude."

At the weekly staff meetings, attended by salesmen, administrative people and the auto mechanics, Panthaky "chews out" anyone who expresses negative thoughts. The employees share equally in the problems of the dealership and make suggestions.

"You'd be amazed at what ideas we come up with when people are given free reign," he said.

THE ROAD TO Midland was a long one for Panthaky.

First, he was a physician in Bombay who practiced with his father, a general practicioner. With dreams of becoming a cardiac surgeon, he went to London in 1965 for further study.

He practiced with a consultant physician there who numbered several pop and movie celebrities among his patients. Panthaky wouldn't name names, however, because of doctor-patient confidentiality and because he thinks trading on a famous person's name is inappropriate.

After growing disenchanted with consulting medicine, he saw an ad in the London paper describing a job doing cancer research with Westinghouse in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. He decided to make the move, and came to the United States in 1969.

PANTHAKY SAYS he went through greater culture shock moving from England to the U.S.than when he moved from India to London.

"I'm pretty much adaptable, but it was an adjustment. I didn't understand the people at all, in either their speech or actions. Take a policeman for example. In England and India, they never carry a gun."

He said he loved the food right away, however, and the fact Americans were so friendly, especially compared to the more formal British.

Panthaky was disappointed when the cancer research turned out to be more statistical than clinical, so he left Westinghouse in 1970 to join IBM as a systems engineer. He heard of the job opening from a neighbor at the apartment complex where he lived.

In 1974, he became an American citizen. "I had no choice. There's no sense in being an immigrant all your life. And besides, I paid taxes, so why not vote?"

WHEN PANTHAKY heard of an opening at IBM's Midland office in 1979, he came here to scout it out. He transferred here in January 1980.

It was here that he "achieved" the Eagle Award, and later bought himself a Rolls Royce.

When the former Rolls dealer, John Schaler, wanted to retire and leave Midland in the fall of 1982, Panthaky saw an opportunity, and as in the past, he took it.

"Every friend I have in this town said 'Go for it, Manek, you can do it.' It's very encouraging. That's what I like about Midland. People in Texas have a tremendous amount of faith in people. They like to do business on trust, and more with an individual than with a company."

Texans' way of doing business differs from the way Easterners behave, Panthaky noted with some amusement.

"THIS TEXAS slowness they portray is very deceptive. In Pittsburgh when I called on a client, I could go in quickly and 'snap,' make a sale. Here, I go in and for half an hour, they talk about the Cowboys, or the weather, or whatever.

"But what you must realize is the whole time you are sitting there, they are assessing you, to see if they can trust you. Once they think they can, boom, you can talk business."

Reagan's gas decontrol bill may be anticlimactic

By WILLIAM GARLAND

FROM OUR WASHINGTON BUREAU

WASHINGTON — It may seem almost anti-climactic next week if President Reagan, as expected, finally introduces his long-awaited bill to decontrol natural gas prices.

But the Reagan decontrol plan, by most accounts, will be a stick of political dynamite whose fuse both consumer groups and northeastern congressmen are ready and willing to light.

Reagan met Thursday with his Cabinet Council on Natural Resources and the Environment, led by Energy Secretary Donald P. Hodel, and the president was then informed that key responses in Congress to his proposed gas package had been positive.

The decision on when to introduce the bill will now be Reagan's, according to Phil Keif, a Department of Energy spokesman. The department already has drafted a bill and is ready to send it to Congress, said Keif and other sources.

Soon thereafter, probably next week also, consumer groups are expected to introduce their own bill as a counterattack to the Reagan decontrol plan. The Citizen-Labor Energy Coalition and northeastern congressmen want so-called "recontrol" rather than decontrol to fight the rising cost of gas to consumers.

REAGAN'S BILL would immediately lift controls on all natural gas production on Jan. 1, 1985.

The coalition bill would lower the ceiling prices on current controls, do away with the current phasing out of controls on "new gas" (generally flowing prior to April 1977) and allow gas prices to rise only with the rate of inflation. New gas would be decontrolled on Jan. 1, 1987 rather than Jan. 1, 1985, as planned under current law.

The arrival of formal proposals for decontrol will be the "beginning of the 'Thrilla in Manila,'" said Edwin Rothschild, spokesman for the Energy Action Project, another foe of decontrol. He referred to the famous 1975 fight in the Phillipines between Muhammad Ali and Joe Frazier, "the bloody match that went 14 rounds. I think the analogy is applicable," he said.

One section of the administration bill, if it is not altered, would immediately free renegotiated and new natural gas contracts from price controls.

"The pipelines get most of their gas from major oil companies, their primary suppliers," said Rothschild. It would be wrong to believe that "the pipelines are going to put up that big a fight with their primary suppliers. The pipeline is going to be under enormous pressure (to renegotiate a higher price)," he said. Because of that, he said the expected "fly up" of natural gas prices with decontrol would occur immediately instead of Jan. 1, 1985, when new gas would be free of controls.

THE COALITION BILL would save approximately $71 billion for consumers over a period of four years, Rothschild added.

A spokesman for natural gas producers said that members of the industry had voiced support for the administration bill, but he added that independent producers are waiting to see the final version. Some key independents with the Independent Petroleum Association of America will meet Monday at the Dallas-Fort Worth Airport to study the Reagan plan and whether formally to support it, said IPAA spokesman Peter Wellish.

Sen. James A. McClure, R-Idaho, chairman of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, will be a key Senate supporter of the bill, according to his spokesman, Bill Livingstone.

"It has the elements necessary to have an effective decontrol policy," he said. "It talks about the producers, it talks about the pipelines and it talks about the consumers."

One Texas congressional aide noted that opposition to the bill had been limited since it was first circulated in summary form on Capitol Hill last week.

HE SAID THE administration probably won't make major revisions in its proposal. "If you change anything, the whole thing comes apart" in terms of compromises within the bill, the aide said.

From all indications, that quiet response to the bill will end next week. The last natural gas battle, which produced the landmark Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978, lasted about 16 months. No one is betting how long this one will take.

Oilmen, analysts expected crude oil price reductions

By JIM PRESNELL
Energy-Business Writer

Last week's $2-per-barrel drop in oil prices was almost a relief to oilmen who feared the price would drop as much as $7 a barrel, stock analysts said Friday afternoon. The drop in crude prices has been expected for at least a year, according to one source.

After the New York Stock Exchange closed Friday, discount broker Glenn Little of Little and Co., Midland, told the Reporter-Telegram that eventual drops of as much as $7 off the price of West Texas Intermediate Crude were, and are, expected by less optimistic oil companies. That crude was $32 a barrel until recently.

"Right now the fear is that that $2 a barrel drop is not enough — that the price will have to go lower," he said. "The stock market only functions on fear and greed."

The direct effect of a slight oil-price drop to $30 a barrel, "did not affect the (stock) market in itself," Little said. "However, the uncertainty as to how much the eventual drop will be has affected energy stocks recently."

In fact, this past week was a record-shattering bull market on Wall Street, and many energy companies fared quite well. This seems to be partly due to the fact crude oil has taken only a small, calculated slip in price.

Thursday, Texaco held steady as Tenneco and Texas Oil and Gas made fractional gains. Standard Oil of Ohio made a good advance, up a full point to 41¼.

InterNorth, Atlantic Richfield, Exxon, and Pennzoil posted gains up to ⅝ of a point, while Mesa Petroleum slipped ⅜ of a point.

Houston market analyst David Ullom, of Rotan Mosle, said Friday, "The impending cut in crude prices is a minor positive, since investors have expected oil prices to drop for at least a year now."

Ullom said the price cut (assuming Nigeria agrees to OPEC prices) "clears the air or settles the dust, whichever you prefer."

This $2 drop "...lessens concern about the extent of the eventual price drop," Ullom continued. "There has been an increase in activity of energy stocks, especially service-side stocks. There is some bottom-fishing going on."

Ullom said investors and investment counselors have been using a lower-than-market crude price to estimate the value of reserves "for at least the past year."

Of the oil production and oilfield service companies, he said "This kind of economic tightness is going to thin out the field a bit in these areas, and you may lose a few firms in Midland."

Midland officers of the Permian Corporation had no comment on the weakness of crude prices due to OPEC's pricing games. Permian lowered the prices it pays for crude oil to $25 to $30 for each barrel of crude it buys.

This $2 drop in Permian's crude-buying prices is in line with the actions major oil companies took last week to pay less per barrel of crude they must buy to make oil-derived products.

Analyst Ullom said that many of the oil refiners in this country are turning to lighter products, like highly refined jet fuel, because these products sell for more money than less-refined substances, like home heating oil, a seasonally-produced product.

"The refiners are looking to increase their cracking capacity," to make light end products, Ullom said, alluding to a possible rise in the use of crude for refining more of its end products.

Wall Street takes a shine to housing

By SUSAN WARFEL
Hearst Feature Service

Wall Street has taken a shine to just about everything with some connection to housing. Since interest rates began to sink last summer, the stocks of home builders, mobile home manufacturers, savings and loan associations and building material suppliers have spiraled upward in price. Even considering the significant improvement in the stock market in general since last August, the gains have been impressive.

While the surge in housing-related stocks has quieted in the last month or two as investors wait to see where interest rates go next, the advances have not been erased.

"They've done excellently," said Nicholas Tetrick, a housing stock analyst for Standard & Poor's Corp. in New York. Tetrick explained that housing and related industries generally are among the biggest beneficiaries of lower interest rates. Mortgage rates have slipped from 16 1/2 percent and up last summer to as low as 11 3/4 percent today.

"Generally, when an economic recovery gets underway, it's led by housing," Tetrick said. "Whether that will happen this time or not is questionable, since mortgage rates are still high on a historical basis."

However, he said, housing-related stocks still have chalked up big advances because "people are accustomed to housing stocks going up at the end of a recession" and buy shares on that basis.

Jim Carter, who follows the thrift industry for Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc., New York, said an S&L stock index that he compiles leaped 152 percent in the second half of 1982. S&Ls' fortunes rise and fall with the housing industry because they are the primary provider of home loans. Although Carter said some stocks have retreated slightly in recent weeks as investors started taking profits, that hasn't stopped a wave of S&Ls from issuing shares for the first time. Stock ownership helps S&Ls both because it provides access to new capital markets and because stock-owned S&Ls have some legal powers prohibited to mutuals.

John E. Maack, a forest product and building analyst with Rowe & Pitman Inc. in San Francisco, noted that some home building, building supply and S&L stocks have declined somewhat this year.

"Since January, there have been some worries about interest rates and the world monetary situation," Maack said. He said the decline of oil prices is one reason behind the concern.

"If the price of oil drops too quickly, it can lead to substantial pressure on our banking system," he said. "Also, it would force some of these oil-producing countries to dip into their savings and take some funds out of the United States." That would reduce the amount of money available for mortgages and other loans, he said.

Some market analysts believe it is unlikely future gains of housing stocks could match those achieved since last summer.

Still, Maack said, "I don't think it's too late to buy into these building-related stocks. My own belief is that we're entering into a period of stable energy prices and more stable prices in general, and I think that will lead to a decline of interest rates over the next few years," he said.

Insurance board OKs rate increase

By BILL KIDD

AUSTIN — State Board of Insurance has approved an average increase of 6.3 percent in rates for the Texas commercial multi-peril program.

SBI staff members had recommended an average increase of 2.9 percent, while the Texas Insurance Advisory Association had recommended an average of 25.8 percent.

Board members instructed the staff to recalculate rates using a five-year experience period for the fire coverage, instead of two years.

TIAA actuary J.M. Eddins says fire losses on commercial properties are susceptible to wide variations so that year-to-year results may fluctuate sharply, so that the longer period "would give greater stability in rate levels and should clearly be more desirable."

The new rates are to go into effect May 1.

Savings and loan association trade officials were jubilant over Senate committee action approving a proposal by Sen. Bob McFarland, R-Arlington, to allow savings and loan associations, as well as banks, to act as depositories for state funds.

McFarland succeeded, on a 7-2 vote, in adding an amendment to a bill by Sen. Ed Howard, D-Texarkana, for continuation of the state Depository Board, to provide for the state treasurer to place funds in savings and loans.

Earlier, McFarland had proposed that credit unions also be allowed to act as state depositories, but he later modified his amendment.

Under the amendment adopted by the Economic Development Committee, savings and loans would be eligible to receive funds up to their insured account limits, with any funds beyond those limits required to be collateralized as are funds now placed in banks.

McFarland answered criticism from the Texas Bankers Association regarding the amendment by saying the language on insured accounts also would apply to banks, and would reduce the amount of funds they're required to collateralize.

The treasurer would be allowed, but not required, to place up to 30 percent of eligible funds in savings and loan associations.

****

Sen. Kent Caperton, D-Bryan, has introduced legislation to create the "Institute for Ventures in New Technology," otherwise known as INVENT, as part of the Texas Engineering Experiment Station, under the Texas A&M University System.

INVENT would "participate in the creation of a new diversified high-technology tax base for the state," and provide assistance to small businesses and individual entrepreneurs in developing new products.

The bill, SB 468, states the Legislature's finding that "an indispensable element of the American economic system is free and vigorous competition and that the preservation and expansion of economic competition is essential to the economic well being of this state and of the United States."

****

Legislation providing for municipal solid waste management and recovery has been introduced by Rep. Paul Colbert, D-Houston, as HB 694.

The bill would provide for a state policy of "encouraging the reduction in solid waste generation and the proper management of solid waste, including disposal and processing to extract usable materials or energy."

The bill would create a "municipal solid waste management planning fund" in the state treasury, which the Texas Department of Health could use to provide financial assistance to "public agencies and planning regions" to develop solid waste management plans.

Also created would be a "municipal solid waste resource applied research and technology fund," which would be used to assist public agencies — including providing technical personnel and consultant services through TDH.

Public agencies would be authorized to issue bonds to finance waste recovery and energy production facilities, and to sell or lease those facilities. Colbert has offered similar legislation n prior sessions.

****

The State Depository Board has adopted a new formula, to take effect March 3, for setting the interest rate charged banks for use of state funds.

The rate is based on U.S. Treasury bills, and is to change twice monthly (on the first and third Tuesdays).

The rate for time deposits of 14-90 days will be that for 13-week "T bills," with the rate for deposits of 91-180 days being that for 26-week "T bills."

For deposits of 181-360 days, the rate will be that of 26-week "T bills," plus 25 basis points.

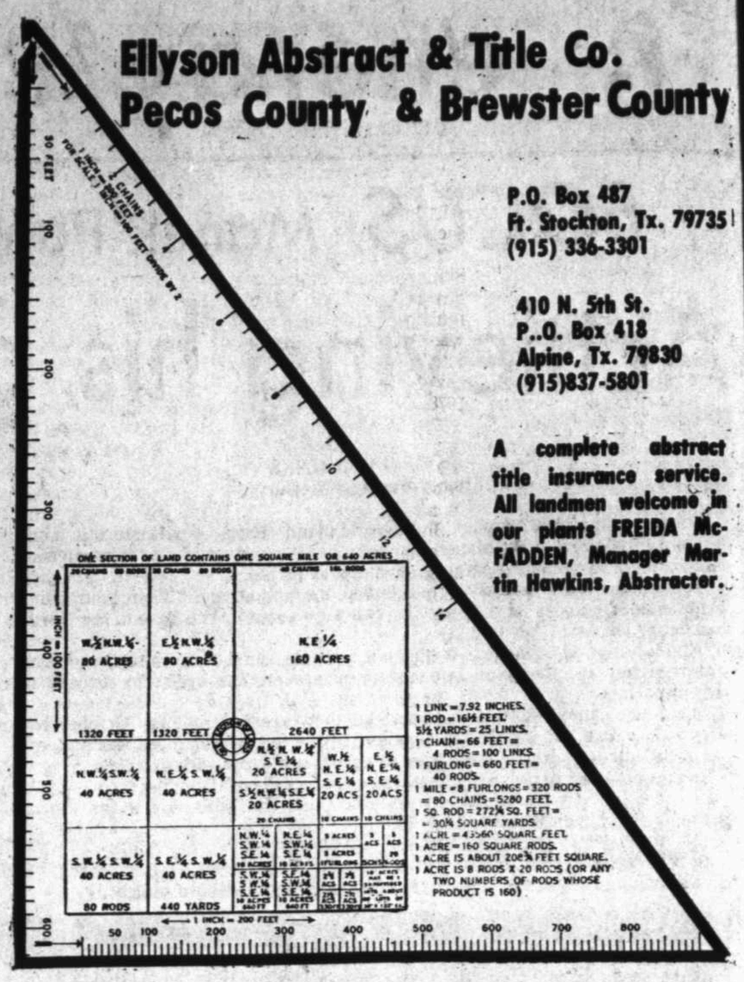

The board also approved placing deposits in "NOW" (negotiable order of withdrawal) accounts, in order to increase interest earnings for the state.

Unlucky 2% should be prepared

Copley News Service

If you're one of the unlucky ones — among the approximately 2 percent of U.S. taxpayers selected for audit — the best thing to do is be prepared.

Chances are you have made an appointment with an Internal Revenue Service agent after being notified by mail that you were selected for audit. You know what to expect. The auditor has told you what to bring.

You needn't be awed by the audit.

If you paid someone, such as an accountant, to assist you with your income tax return, bring that person. Also:

— Bring canceled checks, contracts, financial statements — supporting records that will verify your claims.

— Make sure the items are in the same order as they were listed in the return.

"If some items are misplaced or were not kept, substitute documents may be easily obtainable," said Vivian Draughon, branch chief an IRS office. "For example, you can contact banks and lending institutions for amounts of interest. A letter from an employer can confirm a business expense."

It is advisable to keep your records for as long as four years, said Draughon, because you are eligible for an audit as long as three years after your filing date.

"If you are called for an audit," she said, "and you have been audited in the previous two years — for the same issues — and the audit resulted in no change in your tax liability, the audit can be waived."

Don't blame the computer if you feel you've been singled out unfairly. If your return is one of those kicked out by the computer, it will be checked visually at two or more stages after that to see if the apparent discrepancy is real. Frequently, acknowledges the IRS, this review will disclose that no irregularity exists.

Should you dispute the findings of the auditor, you have the right of appeal. Or you can request an immediate meeting with a supervisor to explain your position. Should no agreement be reached, you can petition the U.S. Tax Court for review of your case.

Magantex sells Starr subsidiary operation

Magnatex Corporation has sold the Sayre, Oklahoma operations of is wholly owned subsidiary Starr Gas Company to Star Fuel and Lubricants Company, which is owned by Gary Bullen of Sayre, Oklahoma. In conjunction with the sale Starr Gas Company has discontinued its warehouse facility in Okalhoma City.

In announcing the discontinuance of all Oklahoma operations of its subsidiary, Charles H. Priddy, President of Magnatex Corporation stated "the withdrawal from Oklahoma was in anticipation of the decline in deep drilling activity in the Fletcher area of Oklahoma."

Starr Gas will continue its fuel and lubricant distribution activities in Midland-Odessa, Big Lake, and Denver City in Texas, and Hobbs and Roswell in New Mexico.

Southwest geologists meeting in Abilene

The Southwest Section of the American Association of Petroleum Geologists will hold its annual convention in Abilene March 6-8 at the Abilene Civic Center.

The theme for this meeting is "Exploration in a Mature Area". Twenty-one technical papers will be presented in the program on diverse topics concerning oil and gas exploration.

AAPG vice president John Lockridge, an independent oilman from Denver, Colorado, will present an award to the author of last year's best paper and will also introduce the new officer candidates for AAPG. Keynote speaker for the meeting will be Robert Gunn, Independent from Wichita Falls. Title of Mr. Gunn's speech is "Optimism Enough". Gunn served as president of AAPG in 1978-79.

The meeting will also feature a six-hour short course Sunday, March 6, on "Exploration for Sandstone Stratigraphic Traps", by Robert Berg, Texas A&M University.

Entertainment plans include an Icebreaker party Sunday night and a dinner-dance Monday night, as well as special Ladies Entertainment Monday and Tuesday.

Registration onsite is $75 for delegates, $35 for spouses and $5 for students. Registration for the short course is $60.

SIPES to meet soon at San Antonio

The 20th Annual Meeting of the Society of Independent Professional Earth Scientists will be held in San Antonio, on March 3rd and 4th. Convention Headquarters are the Hilton Palacio del Rio. The Convention Chairman is Stuart Chuber.

This year's convention theme is "Geostrategies", and speakers include: Bill Fischer from the Texas Bureau of Economic Geology; Pete Rose, a consultant and carbonate authority; Don Timko, a log and geochemical analyst; Ralph A. Page and Ray Poage of Main Hurdman; and Don Clutterbuck of Oxoco.

Frank Harrison of the LaFayette Chapter and past president of the AAPG will conclude the technical session. The annual business meeting will be followed by the Awards Banquet where Dr. Ed Roy will speak.

The day after the convention, SIPES will have a field trip to the Ixtapa on the west coast of Mexico which will be headquartered at the Club Med's newest Pacific resort. The Mexican fold belt will be the subject of the trip.

Positive signs spark buying wave on Wall Street

By JAMES PELTZ
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — In some ways it appeared to be the best of all worlds this past week.

Oil prices fell. The prime lending rate fell. Consumer prices only edged higher in January, the government reported.

New orders for durable goods rose a robust 4.5 percent last month, the government said, instead of falling as some economists predicted.

Watching all this, the stock market churned out a wave of buying that lifted the Dow Jones industrial average to a new record.

Is it too early to predict substantially better times for this year? Or is evidence becoming overwhelming that a recovery stronger than previously throught is unfolding?

PERHAPS BECAUSE of the recession's severity, caution remains in force. And several thorny issues still loiter that warrant such an outlook.

Take interest rates. Some major commercial banks cut their prime lending rates this past week to 10.5 percent from 11 percent — the lowest level since November 1978.

The cuts reflect declining open-market rates, which have lowered banks' cost of acquiring money for lending.

But fears remain that interest rates will head back up this year for two main reasons: First, that the recovery will create stronger demand for credit, and, second, that any evidence of rising inflation will force the Federal Reserve Board to be less expansive with money.

Rising private demand for credit could bump into the considerable financing needs of the government, with the collision pushing rates up. A more restrictive Fed policy on the amount of money available could only aggravate the situation.

IT REMAINS to be seen how much tension the central bank keeps on its credit reins throughout the year. Fed Chairman Paul Volcker said he saw "significant room" for bank lending rates to fall further, but said that was the banks' decision.

In testifying before the Senate Budget Committee, he also said current inflation, money supply and credit levels "implies lower interest rates than otherwise and more room for real growth" in the economy.

Volcker said the drop in oil prices "only reinforces that outlook."

The consensus about lower oil prices, at least on Wall Street, seemed to shift this past week. Initially, fears ran high that dropping prices would place international banks in jeopardy, since heavily indebted nations that rely on oil income would face further problems.

But the announcement that six OPEC nations had agreed on a new, albeit undisclosed, price signaled some stability in the oil market. That translated into an orderly decline in prices, and its benefits seemed to outweigh its detriments, many observers believed.

FOR THE consumer, the latest news is brighter than that heard a year ago. Fuel bills are down. Installment and mortgage rates have fallen, although not as sharply as open-market or the prime rates. Average food prices are flat. And overall, consumer prices rose just 0.2 percent in January.

A time to cheer? For some, but not for many others — those workers still unemployed and those firms that are still not sure whether they will emerge from the recession healthy enough to reap a recovery's benefits.

In the week ended Feb. 17, amid lots of talk about a budding recovery, business failures hit a post-Depression weekly record of 713, up from 461 the previous week and 505 in the year-earlier week, according to Dun & Bradstreet Inc., a business-information service.

The previous post-Depression high was 696 in the week ended Aug. 26, 1982.

So far this year, 4,319 companies have failed for an average of 617 a week. At this time last year, 3,065 firms, or an average of 438 a week, had failed.

IN OTHER NEWS during the holiday-shortened week:

—American Airlines and its president were charged by the Justice Department with attempting to monopolize air routes by encouraging Braniff International to raise prices. American termed the suit "entirely unjustified."

—The economy was not as weak in last year's fourth quarter as the government first thought. The nation's gross national product contracted at an adjusted 1.9 percent annual rate in the period, after adjusting for inflation, instead of the 2.5 percent decline earlier reported, the Commerce Department said.

—The number of U.S. autoworkers on indefinite layoff fell to 254,350 from 260,050 the previous week. U.S. car production, meanwhile, edged up 0.8 percent from the previous week to 131,687, and the output was up 45.5 percent from a year earlier.

—Sales of existing single-family homes in January posted their largest monthly increase on record, 15.5 percent, the National Association of Realtors said. The gain lifted the seasonally adjusted annual rate to 2.61 million units for the month, up from 2.26 million in December.

Area frims seek brine production permits

AUSTIN — Chief Transports Inc., Monahans, has applied to the Texas Water Commission for a permit authorizing the production of 10 pound brine from a well in Ward County.

The brine well will be located on a permit area of approximately one acre and will consist of a brine injection production well, freshwater storage tank and loading facilities.

The production zone is the Salado Salt Formation at approximately 1,000 to 2,000 feet.

A monitor well will be located along the hydraulic gradient between the brine well and the City of Monahans, to detect possible excursions of brine solutions into overlying freshwater acquifers.

Injection pressure wil not exceed 650 pounds per square inch. No surface discharge is authorized.

The brine station is to be located on the west side of Loop 464 approximately 1.25 miles south of its intersection with Interstate Highway-20 near Monahans.

No public hearing will be held unlsss requested by affected persons.

* * *

A hearings examiner of the Texas Water Commission will conduct a 9 a.m. March 23 public hearing on the application of Permian Brine Sales Inc., Odessa, for a permit authorizing the production o 10 lb brine from two wells in Crockett County.

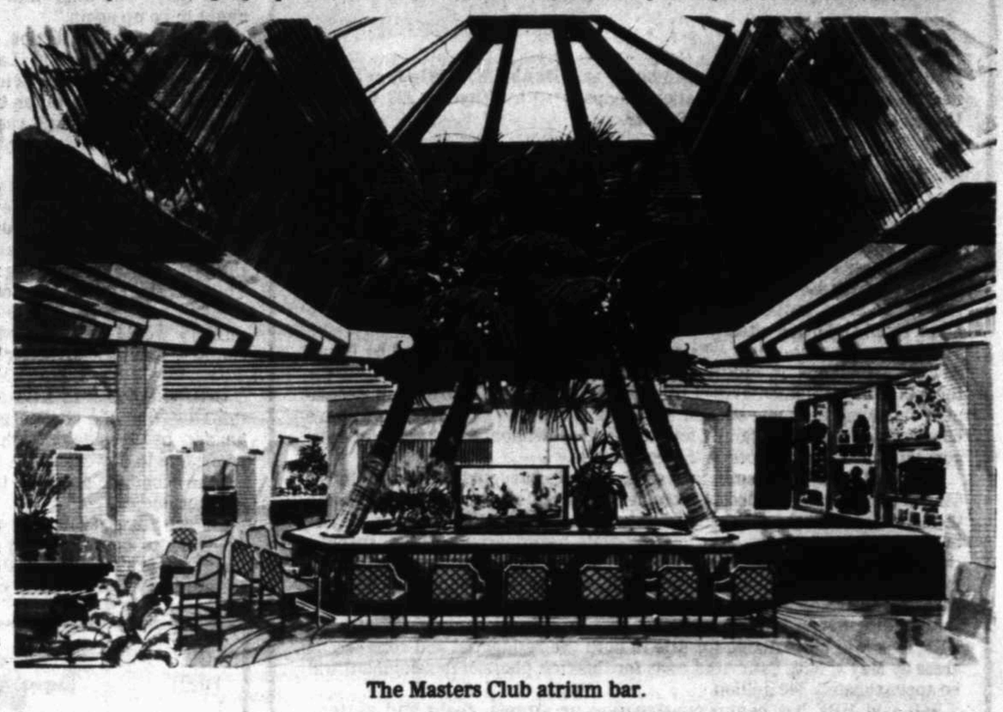

The hearing will be held in room 618 of the Stephen F. Austin State Office Building, 1700 North Congress Avenue, in Austin.

The wells will be located on a ten acre permit area and will consist of two brine wells, two freshwater/monitor wells and related surface facilities.

The production zone is the Salado Salt Formation at approximately 850 to 1,150 feet.

Injection pressure will not exceed 525 pounds per square inch.

Two Monitor wells located down the hydraulic gradient, will be used to detect brine solutions in overlying freshwater aquifers. No surface discharge is authorized from any production or processing facilities.

New private club to open late this year; Manager coming from Rome

McClure-Williams Investments has announced plans for a new private club to open late this year in Midland. The Masters Club, as it has been named, will be located in North Midland, near the ClayDesta project and Paul Thorpe's Midlander health club.

Claudio Brugalossi, presently manager of Sans-Souci in Rome — where he first became acquainted with the Tall City when he met Midlanders dining there — will manage the new club. Brugalossi has wide experience working in restaurants in Rome, Paris, London and Beverly Hills.

"I started, really, washing glasses at the bar," Brugalossi told The Reporter-Telegram. He worked his way up through the ranks to management level.

"I'm not coming to Midland to open just another club," Brugalossi said. "We want to make the club and restaurant look like a movie set. Without being too much, we're going to make a nice scene of the restaurant every night."

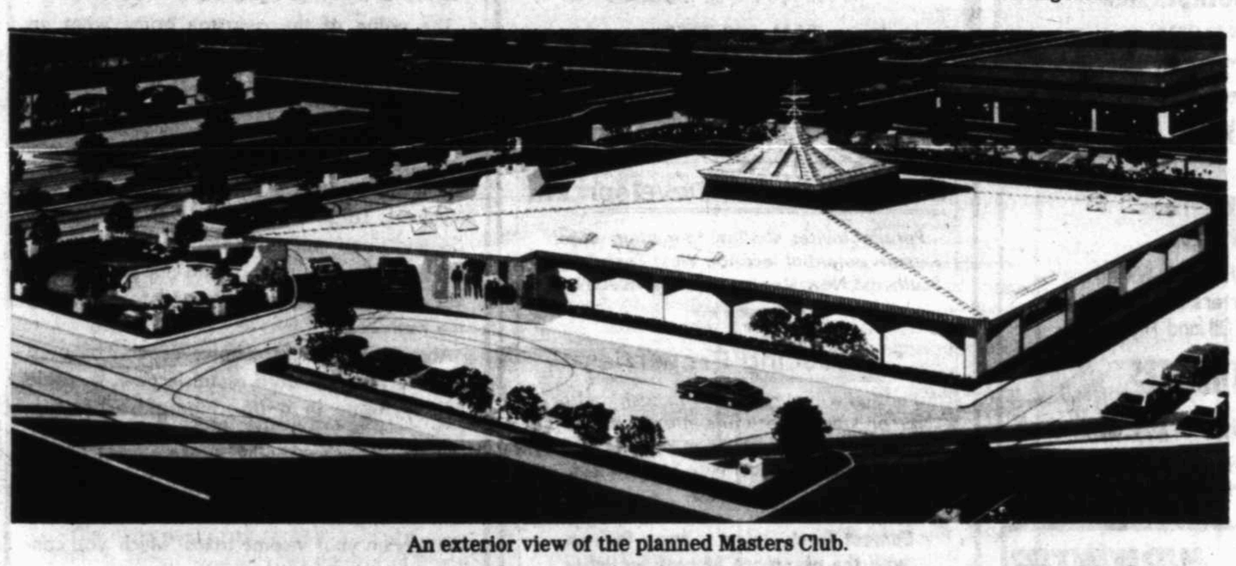

Although Brugalossi has had the opportunity to manage restaurants in Beverly Hills, he said he would rather be in Midland. "In Midland, if you do something right, the people stay with you," he said.

Brugalossi is now in Rome but will be returning to Midland soon. He said he will bring trusted help from Europe to man the Masters Club. Others will come from Beverly Hills. He estimated about 20 staff members will be hired locally.

French and Italian chefs will be employed, Brugalossi said. However, Texans will not be denied their favorites. "Even chicken fried steak and hamburgers will be available," he said.

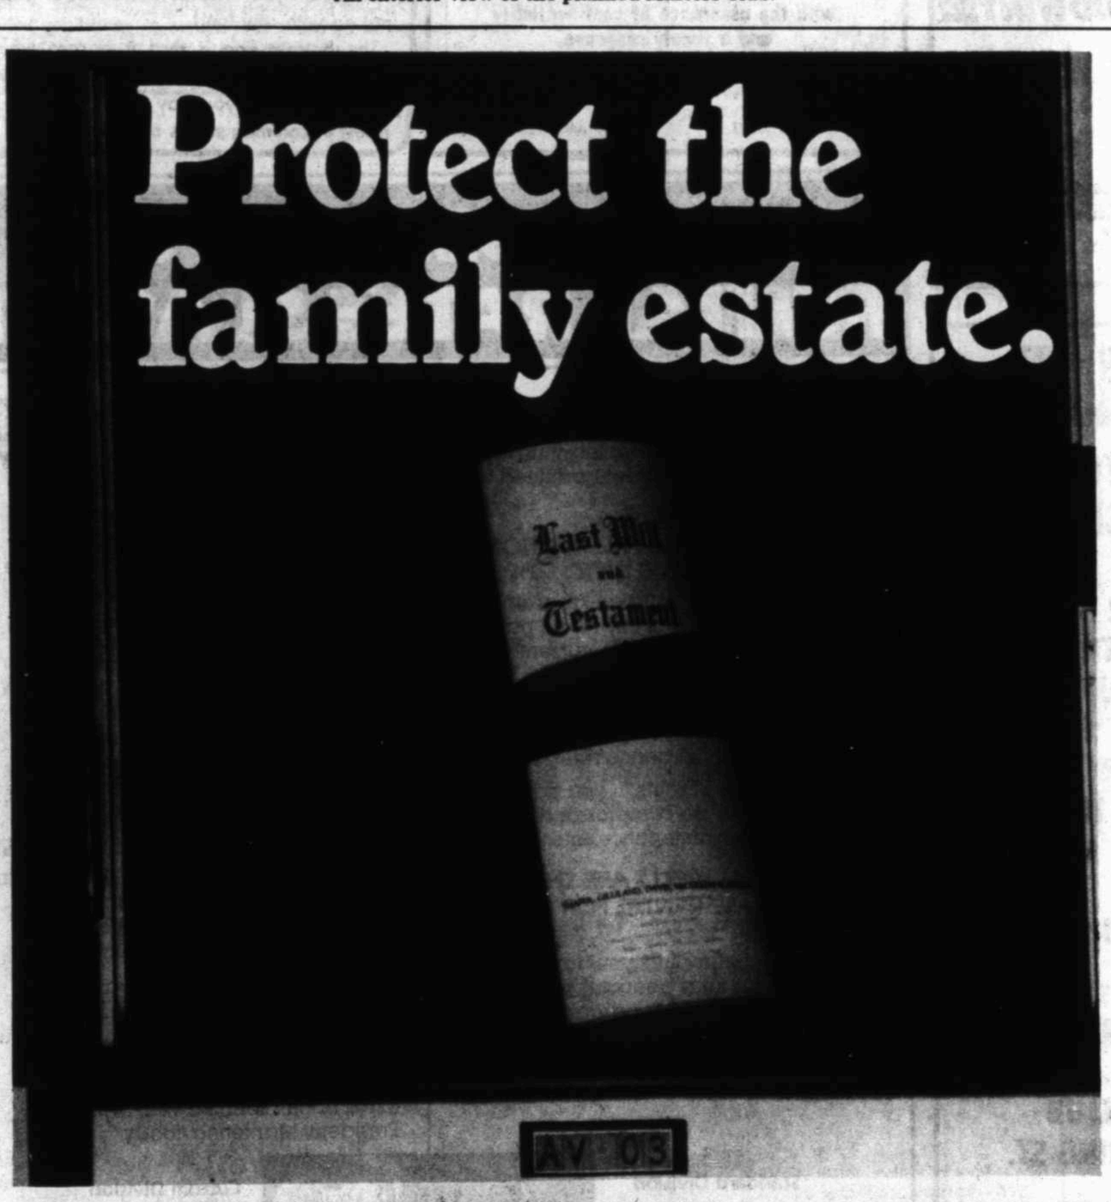

The 9,300-square-foot club was designed by architect J. Ellsworth Powell. It will feature a home-like design. The center of attention will be a centrally-located bar beneath an atrium, where palm trees will grow and fish will swim in a large aquarium.

Henry Williams, one of the club's developers, said the building has been designed to serve a variety of functions. In addition to the bar and dining area, there will be a dance floor, small rooms for private affairs, and mens' and women's lounges. The walls, Williams said, will be sound proof, to insure a quiet atmosphere.

Larry J. Bell, president of HBF Corporation announced today that construction has begun on the first phase of residential development for Mision Dorado, HBF's new 2,200 acre planned community development in Odessa. Phase I will include approximately 250 acres of residential development with over 400 single family lots and three condominium or two house sites. In addition to the residential sites, Phase I will include several apartment, retail and office sites.

Construction of the Mision Estates subdivision is being financed by Home Savings Association. In addition to furnishing the construction financing for the subdivision, Home Savings will also be furnishing interim and permanent financing on home sites in the subdivision. The subdivision will have large estate lots, single family lots, and patio-townhome lots. Each lot category will have selected lots on the golf course.

The subdivision will surround the newly constructed Mission Country Club golf course, scheduled for completion this summer, which will become the focal point for the residential and business center of Mision Dorado. The business center includes sites for corporate headquarters offices, speculative office buildings, medical facilities, retail, condominiums and apartments. Financing for Mission Country Club and the Commercial areas is being furnished by First City National Bank of Midland.

According to Jim Rhotenberry, vice president for project development at HBF, sites will be available for sale in both the residential and commercial areas by May 1, 1983. Estimated costs for this first phase of development will be approximately $40 million.

Bell said HBF has begun construction on streets, curbs and gutters, sewer and water lines in preparation for residential sales later this Spring.

The Midland Office of Manpower Inc., the world's largest temporary service firm, recently received the company's Power Award for outstanding sales growth during the 1982 fiscal year.

According to Manpower President Mitchell S. Fromstein, "The Midland Manpower organization has distinguished itself by exceptional performance and well deserves this honor. Even in normal times, this coveted award is won by only a select few of over 1,000 worldwide Manpower offices but, considering the state of the economy and its inescapable impact upon our business, this award carries an even greater significance."

This is the Midland operation's fourth Power Award. It received its first in 1969. The office is locatded at 1002 W. Wall.

Manpower annually provides temporary work for more than 600,000 people through its more than 1,000 offices in 31 countries. Office services account for the majority of the jobs at which its work force is engaged.

Reality of austerity arrives in Nigeria

By the Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Serivce

LAGOS, Nigeria — In the streets of Lagos, the reality of austerity has arrived.

Back in December, when Bisi Alawaye, a housewife and the mother of four, went shopping in the great, boiling Oke-Arin marketplace, she could buy a container of cooking oil for one naira (about $1.50).

"Now the same container costs one naira fifty," she said, "and I hear it is about to go up again."

In the Isale-Eko section, the oldest, most crowded part of Lagos, a 22-year-old government clerk named Michael Ogunshakin sat on the veranda of his old house rolling cassava mush into little balls and dipping them into a peppery sauce.

"Yes, there is plenty of food around," he said as he ate his lunch, "but it is so expensive these days. It is costing more and more, especially in the last month. It is this government. This government is no good. Everything is costing too much. I wish the military would come back to run this country. Things were better then."

OGUNSHAKIN IS NOT alone in his thinking, that the civilian government headed by President Shehu Shagari, who came to power in 1979, is to blame for the economic problems the country is experiencing.

Before Shagari came to power, Nigeria was the boom country of Africa. But it is very doubtful that the previous military government could have prevented the downturn Nigeria is presently caught in or that one could do much now to reverse it.

The trend is linked to oil, which provides 90 percent of Nigeria's income. And oil sales and oil prices are both falling sharply. Just how much farther they will fall is a matter of worldwide speculation and concern.

Nigeria is both a major victim and a key protagonist of the oil price slide. Indeed, some members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries have singled it out as the cartel's weakest link. In any event, its plight, more than any other country's, illustrates the cross currents buffeting the OPEC nations these days. Unable to cope with softening demand and falling prices in world oil markets, it has been pushed to further cuts in prices.

On Feb. 19, Nigeria announced that it was reducing the price of its high-grade (bonny light) crude by $5.50 a barrel, to $30 a barrel, making it the first OPEC country to announce a substantial price reduction. The oil ministers of other OPEC countries are considering what action to take in light of the Nigerian decision, struggling to stem what they fear is turning into an all-out price war.

SOURCES HERE SAY that Nigeria took its step reluctantly, after Britain decided to reduce the price of its North Sea oil to $30.50 a barrel. North Sea oil is comparable in quality to Nigerian oil, and the Nigerians clearly felt that they had no other choice if they wanted to hold on to any significant share of the world's tightening petroleum market.

"The Nigerians really want to hold the price firm," a Western diplomat in Lagos said. "They say that if there is only so much oil that can be sold, then OPEC should try to hold the price steady and get as much as they can for whatever they can sell."

The world marketplace, however, applies its own pressure, and the pressure has seemed to be increasing week by week since the end of last year.

"Finally," the diplomat said, "they (the Nigerians) were just pushed to the wall."

In December, Nigeria produced an average of 1.2 million barrels a day. At that level (and at the prices then in effect), some experts say, Nigeria would have had a difficult time balancing its 1983 budget but could have managed with the help of some overseas borrowing.

BUT IN JANUARY, production fell to about 840,000 barrels a day. An OPEC price-setting meeting broke up without agreement and spot-market oil was selling at $5 or $6 a barrel below the $34 OPEC benchmark price.

Then, in the first 10 days of February, Nigeria's oil production fell to an average of 550,000 barrels a day, and that, contrasted with the level of two years earlier — about 2 million barrels a day — looked like economic disaster.

It is too early to determine what the effect of the price reduction will be on sales but, according to economic experts here, it is likely that Nigeria will again be forced to revamp its budget, which had already been modified in the face of falling revenues.

The budget currently in effect was based on a goal of restricting imports to about $1 billion a month. That level could be maintained, the budget writers said, with oil production of about 1 million barrels a day.

One Western economist said, "At the January rate of production, (Nigeria) would come up with about a $2-billion shortfall." Now, with the price reduction and further declines in production, the result is anyone's guess.

NIGERIA HAS been pressing hard to reduce its imports, but has been unable to reach its goal. A month ago, for example, imports were still running at about $1.3 billion a month.

Nigeria has become dependent on imports over the last decade, as soaring world oil prices triggered massive development projects that, in turn, fueled an explosion in local business, particularly in the construction field. The government has let billions of dollars in private contracts.

The oil money had a profound and in some ways damaging effect on Nigeria, whose population, which is believed to be approaching 100 million, is the largest in Africa. Millions of Nigerians flocked to the cities to get jobs, especially in construction, creating choked urban slums and straining city services beyond the breaking point.

At the same time, agriculture suffered. Nigeria, which used to export food, is now forced to import it.

Texas economists see improvements

DALLAS — A survey of eight leading Texas economists, published recently by the newsletter Inside Texas, shows they all believe the state's economy will improve slightly, not dramatically, in 1983.

The consensus view is that unemployment will increase on the average, industrial production will make modest gains, the prime will hold at about 11 percent, the cost of living will go up a moderate for to five percent in Dallas-Fort Worth and Houston and the number of rigs deployed will drop some.

Inside Texas is an independent business, economic and public affairs report published biweekly in Dallas.

RAW LAND VS HOUSE INVESTMENT

The value of the average home went up 113% during the past ten years while the price of unimproved land rose 150%. So which is the better investment-raw land or a home?

While raw land might seem the better investment, most experts caution against the risk involved. Large profits on land sale usually depend upon major development or rezoning for commercial use; underdeveloped land can eat up mortage payments and taxes during the wait.

An existing dwelling, however, can be used as your home or earn rental income. A single family home in a good neighborhood is today's best investment. With smaller, individual units, including condominiums, they are easier to get into and out of financially than raw land, plus you can deduct the "depreciation" from your income taxes which you cannot do with raw land.

The bottom line is that it is rare when an investor loses money on real estate over the long run. Can you say that for those who invest in common stocks or commodities?

GAS COMPRESSOR RENTAL RATES SLASHED

Compressor Dynamics, America's leading gas compressor rental company, has put into immediate effect innovative new programs that are guaranteed to save you money.

IF YOUR GAS WELL PRODUCTION IS CURTAILED ... SAVE UP TO 50%
CDI's Curtailed Production Program can reduce your monthly rental payment up to 50%. If you are currently operating:
• 1-10 days per month ... you pay CDI only 50% of base compressor rental; 75% of full maintenance rate.
• 11-20 days per month ... you pay CDI only 75% of base compressor rental; 100% of full maintenance rate.

IF YOUR GAS WELLS ARE SHUT-IN ... PAY NO BASE RENTAL FOR UP TO 3 MONTHS.
If you're not pumping, you don't have to be paying for a gas compressor that's sitting idle. CDI's aggressive new Shut-In Rental Program allows you the opportunity to avoid costly production delays.

EVEN IF YOU'RE RUNNING 30 DAYS A MONTH, WE'RE BETTING $100 CASH OUR COST/PERFORMANCE ANALYSIS WILL SAVE YOU MONEY.
At absolutely no cost to you, CDI will evaluate your current compressor requirements. If we find you can operate more economically by switching compressors, we'll recommend a more efficient unit. And, if we find you're using the correct unit for your requirement, we'll tell you that too. But, in either case, if your application fits one of our 25 standard rental units, and we can't beat our competitor's monthly base rental rate, we'll give you $100.00 cash!

CDI WILL ELIMINATE OR SUBSTANTIALLY REDUCE CHANGE-OUT COSTS.
As an added incentive, CDI will give an $800 credit for change-out roustabout services, as well as a freight credit for transportation costs on the units.

Sound like the kind of innovative programs you'd expect from America's leading gas compressor company? You bet they are. For more details, contact your Compressor Dynamics representative or call John Bowen, Senior Vice President, Marketing, today.

Invest in one of New Braunfels' scarce natural resources– waterfront property on the Comal River
Riverfront property around New Braunfels is getting mighty scarce—and valuable—these days. Which is why it's smart to invest in RiverRun Condominiums, a resort community right on the meandering banks of the Comal River. Choose from 1, 2, and 3 bedroom homes. The condominiums are completely furnished and even leased and professionally managed. In short, RiverRun Condominiums represents an exceptional opportunity. However, there's only a limited number of condominium units left, so act quickly while they're still available. Cornerstone Development 500 North Market New Braunfels, Texas

Donoghue's Money Fund Average (Averages for all 233 taxable funds)		36	7.8	7.8

MONEY FUND TABLE COMMENTARY: Assets of the 233 money funds reported by Donoghue's MONEY FUND REPORT of Holliston, Mass 01746 declined $1.3 billion to $187.5 billion for the week ending February 23, 1983.

The funds' 7-day average yield held steady at 7.82% for the second week in a row. The funds' 30-day average yield increased slightly, from 7.80% to 7.81%.

The funds' average maturity figure fell one day to 36 days following one week at 37 days.

William E. Donoghue says, "This week's $1.3 billion asset outflow experienced by taxable money funds is the smallest since the banks and thrifts began offering the money market deposit account. Assets of taxable money funds have decreased $39.3 billion since the MMDA's introduction in mid-December. Tax-free money funds, however, grew slightly this week as these funds attracted an additional $75.8 million in assets. Following last week's trend, the fund's average maturity figure declined by one day. If the funds' average maturity figure continues falling in the next few weeks, fund managers could be positioning themselves to take advantage of rising interest rates."

Yields represent annualized total return to shareholders for past seven- and thirty-day period. Past returns are not necessarily indicative of future yields. Investment quality and maturity may vary among funds. x - average term to next rate adjustment date. Reprinted in condensed form with permission from Donoghue's MONEY FUND REPORT of Holliston, MA.

RRC says less wells found

AUSTIN — Railroad Commission Chairman Mack Wallace has announced that Texas operators reported 93 gas and 60 oil discoveries in January 1983.

One year ago, 121 gas and 43 oil discoveries were filed with the state's energy regulatory agency.

Gas discoveries in January included 38 in deep South Texas, 15 in Southeast Texas, 12 in West Central Texas, six in East Texas, five each in North Texas and the Midland and Refugio areas, three in East Central Texas, and two in the San Antonio and San Angelo areas.

Oil discoveries included 17 in West Central Texas, 10 in North Texas, eight in Southeast Texas, six in the San Angelo area, five each in deep south Texas and the Midland area, four in East Texas, two in east Central Texas, and one each in the Panhandle and the Lubbock and Refugio areas.

In January, operators reported 620 exploatory and field tests wound up as dry holes. New applications for permits to drill oil and gas tests toaled 2,385 in January compared with 2,862 in January of 1982.

Applications to drill, deepen, plug back and for service wells in January amounted to 2,697 against 3,099 a year earlier.

Operators filed 782 amended applications to drill. A year earlier they submitted 791 amended requests.

PRODUCTION SYSTEMS NODAL ® ANALYSIS

A ONE WEEK COURSE
March 7-11
Midland Hilton Inn

A Nodal (new and revolutionary) systems analysis approach for oil and gas wells.

This course is designed for Engineers, Managers and Field Foremen associated with Production Systems and Artificial Lift Planning.

Instructor:
Carl Granger, BS

Each participant will receive three books:

•Technology of Artificial Lift Methods, Vol. 1, inflow performance, multiphase flow in pipes, the flowing well.

•Technology of Artificial Lift Methods, Vol. 11, beam pumping, gas lift, electrical pumping, hydraulic piston pumping, jet lift, plunger lift, other methods of lift and comparison of methods (2 books).

•Vol. III, 2200 pages of new gradient curves including vertical multiphase flow, horizontal multiphase flow, gas production and gas injection curves. (scale = 20,000 ft. by 5600 psi.) (2 books).

This course will show you how you can SAVE MONEY and INCREASE PRODUCTION by:

• Changing the separator pressure
•Changing the flow line size
•Changing tubing size
• Increasing perforation shot density
•Placing well on Artifical Lift
•Applying Nodal Systems Analysis to entire system
• Knowing how to predict flow capacity of oil and gas wells.

QUESTIONS TO BE ANSWERED IN THIS COURSE

• Production rates possible -oil or gas?
•Tubing size correct?
•Flowline size correct?
•Enough perforations?
• Completion problems gravel pack or other restrictions?
•Safety valve sized and set correctly?
• Is surface choke necessary and is it sized correctly?
• Should be on Artificial Lift?

The above questions will be answered in detail by:

• Showing methods for predicting the flow rates possible from oil and gas wells.
• Showing how to use gradient curves and computerized multiphase flow correlations to select tubing sizes for vertical or directional wells.
•Showing how to use gradient curves or multiphase flow correlations to select flow lines for either horizontal or inclined flow.
•Presenting a complete systems analysis to show the effect of perforation shot density. A standard shot density of 4 to 8 shots per foot may not be sufficient.
•Applying the Nodal systems principle to check the effect of restrictions such as gravel pack.
•Applying the Nodal Systems approach to see if the safety valve is sized correctly and check to see if it will close correctly.
•Applying the Nodal Systems approach to correctly size a choke for a certain flow rate and to see if the choke should be eliminated.
•Applying systems analysis to see what effect the separator pressure has on the entire system. A correct setting of the separator pressure, in particular for a closed rotative gas lift system., may show a tremendous rate of return on investment.
•Working example problems to show: (a) the rate possible by natural flow, (b) the rate possible by artificial lift.

WE WILL SHOW YOU:

•How a change in separator pressure will save money with no loss in production.
•How a change in flowline size or separator pressure may prevent buying additional compressor H.P. for gas lift.
•How increasing the perforation shot density may double the production on gas wells.
•Why the tubing size may be too small or possibly too large.
• How to predict the flow capacity of oil and gas wells.
• Other production problems.

COURSE OUTLINE

Ability of oil or gas well to produce fluids.
Oil wells

1. Predicting present-day inflow curves Constant PI case, Changing PI case, Vogel's solution, Standing's solution - for flow efficiencies = 1.0. Fetkovich flow after flowand isochronal tests, flow equations and making use of pressure build-up and fall-off tests of prepare inflow curves.

2. Predicting future inflow curves. Standing procedure, others
Gas wells
1. Flow after flow tests
2. Isochronal tests
3. Modified Isochronal tests
4. Pressure build-up and fall-off

Multiphase flow in pipes
Vertical, horizontal, directional and inclined flow
1. Best correlations
2. How to use gradient curves and computer applications
3. Effect of rates, pipe sizes, GLR's, fluid properties, etc.
4. Practical problems on correct selection of pipe size, find flow rates, wellhead pressures, GLR's, etc.

The flowing or Artificial Lift well
Applying systems approach to:
1. Size tubing and flowlines
2. Correctly predict rates
3. Analyze wells

Evaluation of completion
Sufficient perforations or not?
1. Prediction of flow rate through reservoir with no restrictions.
2. Determining dp occuring across perforations, gravel pack or other restrictions

Nodal systems analysis
An over-view of the entire flowing or artificial lift system to evaluate:
1. Separator pressure
2. Flowline
3. Surface choke
4. Tubing string
5. Safety valve.
6. Any other tubing restrictions.
7. Completion efficiency - (a) perforations, (b) gravel pack (c) skin

Summary for planning
This new course will tell you:
1. Sufficient perforations
2. Pipe sizes correct or not
3. Flow rates possible - now and future
4. When Artificial Lift is needed.
This course makes use of new technology applied to everyday practice in the field.

OSHA sets kelly bushing rules

The oil and gas drilling industry has received new federal guidelines for protecting workers exposed to kelly bushings and portions of rotary tables used on drilling rigs. The Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) approved alternate protection techniques that proved successful in tests at selected drill sites after employers in the industry requested a review of federal guarding standards as they apply to drilling equipment.

"The success of the experiment confirms industry's claim that safety problems have arisen due to the agency rules requiring machine guarding," said Thorne G. Lauchter, assistant secretary of labor for occupational safety and health.

The experiment, which began June 8 and ended Sept. 7, 1982, was conducted under limited and controlled conditions to assure that it provided equivalent or injuries involving the rotating equipment were reported to OSHA's office of Variance Determination.

"We developed with the close cooperation of industry drilling contractors and their employees alternative methods incorporating modification of some equipment, changes in work practices and strengthened training requirements," Auchter said.

"At the outset, we said that if the results proved to provide as effective or greater protection than that of the machine guarding rules, then a directive would be issued permitting employers to use the alternative protection," Auchter added.

The alternative protective methods include:

Drilling rigs using kelly bushings other than the "smooth" type shall have a substantially constructed kelly bushing/rotary table guard. Rigs using the "smooth" type kelly bushing have the option of using a substantially constructed guard for the rotary equipment.

Employees shall be trained in safe operating procedures when around the rotary table and kelly bushing.

Faulkner's Office Machine Corp., 2612 W. Front St. in Midland, introduces the latest innovation in modular electronic typing: the Royal 5040. This simply amazing machine can work wonders for your office in many ways. Call Faulkner's today at 563-0030 to see the 5040 and learn what it can do for you.

Faulkner's introduces the Royal 5040 to Midland

It's jusy about that time of year...Time for you to take a long look around your office and inspect your office equipment. What do you see? Probably many of you see outdated, dilapidated old equipment. There may even be a few of you with typewriters that look as if they come from the stone age and beyond. Most of you probably still need to get with the times. This the eighties, man,the age of electronics. Most of the others of you may be in the electronic world, but you're still outdated. Now, Faulkner's introduces a new concept in modular electronic typing, the Royal 5040.

The Royal 5040 grows as your needs grow. The 5040 is the newest and the most advanced model in the Royal line of microprocessor-controlled electronic typewriters. It is designed to meet the daily typing and text editing requirements of the growing company or office whose workloads are expanding. As your needs expand, the Royal 5040 can expand with you. You can take advantage of its computer-based interface capability; and when you're ready, add plug-in modules for a disk drive, a multi-line display and communications. You buy only what you need when you need it.

The 5040 is flexible, too. The printing unit of the 5040 is attached to the keyboard by a connecting cable. This means the typist is no longer confined to a restricted work area. The keyboard, and a copy holder, can be moved to take advantage of more favorable lighting, or shifted on a desk so the typist can operate with maximum comfort and efficiency.

And talk about large enough and versatile enough to do just about anything! The Royal 5040 incorporates a 16,000-character memory that is expandable to 32,000-characters. It stores up to 10 pages of text, as well as frequently used phrases, formats, names and addresses, in 100 available storage centers. Information may be recalled for repetitive use, to make revisions, or to insert frequently used text. Time— consuming typing is eliminated.

Another fine feature of the Royal 5040 is the single-key commands for many functions. Instead of a two-key operation like many other electronic typewriters, the 5040 offers one-key command for automatic centering, automatic carrier return, automatic relocation, automatic decimal alignment, automatic right margin justification, and automatic four way print selector. And remember, there functions are done with only one key!

If you make an error while typing with the 5040, no problem! The Royal 5040 provides two-way error correction either on the page or when typing the display. Its high speed error correction key can correct a single character or word that is noticed immediately. And it can lift off entire blocks of text up to the full extent of its 16K memory. It can also back up and change a single character anywhere on the page and then automatically relocate to the last typing position. When a correction is made, you type only the correction. The 5040 does the rest.

The 5040 is simply amazing! It makes typing forms and custom letters amazingly easy. A 500-hour memory retention prevents loss of your important information in the event of a power failure. It adopts to the fastest typist, yet gives precise impressions with interchangeable print wheels. The Royal 5040 gives proportional spacing plus three standard type pitches, and yet with all of the features of the 5040, the most important could be that it is amazingly quiet! There are numerous other advantages to owning a Royal 5040, but rather than list them all here, why not try one out yourself?

Call Faulkner's Office Machine Corp. today at 684-6625 or 563-0030. If you are out, stop by 2612 W. Front St. in Midland. The friendly and experienced staff will be happy to assist you with any of your needs, including demonstration of the Royal 5040 or any of their other office machines. Faulkner's offers prompt dlivery and service on all items in their full line of typewriters and calculators.

Qualified Printers keeps pace with machinery

It takes a special breed to keep up with the fast pace of today's society. Man has advanced more technologically in this century than in all the centuries preceding. It is advancing so fast that not everyone can keep up the pace. It truly does take a special breed to keep up. But those who are able to keep the pace are the ones who will always come out ahead. Qualified Printers, 2803 N. Big Spring in Midland, is one of the few who have stayed even a step ahead of the printing needs of today's businessman.

Since 1964, when Qualified Printers was established, the Rhoden family has added highly skilled personnel and sophisticated machinery to keep pace with the rapid growth of Midland's economy. But althought Qualified Printers has constantly added to and installed new machinery, they still offer the expert craftsmanship of yesteryear. At Qualified Printers, you get the best of both worlds; you get the expert craftsmanship of yesterday along with the speed you need in today's fast-paced society. And the family-owned business still offers an important service that is virtually extinct anymore; they still offer the personal supervision that assures you of the best job possible.

With the recent expansion and new offices, Qualified Printers is even better able to meet all of your needs than before. The job storage and retrieval capabilities are unlimited now, and the new equipment is 10 times faster than that of before. Qualified Printers has 80 type faces on line, or your logo may be stored into the computer for quick service every time you have something printed. The new machines will even set ruled forms and publications.

At the Meat-N-Place, 4402 W. Illinois in Midland, you will find the best quality meat and best prices. The Meat-N-Place will cut their halves and quarters to your specifications. Call them at 694-5536.

Best quality meats, best prices at Meat-N-Place

Fact: Convenience has become a way of daily life for the average American living in today's society. Fact: Meat is an important part of the nutritional needs of the human body. Fiction: Getting your meat at your local grocery store where you do the rest of your shopping is both cheaper and more convenient than buying from a meat market. The alternative to long lines, high prices, and compromised quality is at the Meat-N-Place, 4402 W. Illinois in Midland.

With the onset of the inflationary period in the early 70's, more and more people found themselves actually shopping for the best price for the highest quality. This is especially true today. The smart shopper is not the one that picks up the first item he sees, or stops at the first place he passes by, but rather the one who takes the effort to check prices and quality for the best possible price on the highest quality item. If you are a smart shopper, you will stop buying your meat at your local grocery store after you check the high quality and low prices at the Meat-N-Place.

The Meat-N-Place does not compromise quality. Only the finest meat is used there. The fresh ground beef is... exactly that... freshly ground with no ice water or formaldehyde, pink overhead lights, soy products, or excess fat. Only enough fat is used to give it the just right flavor; very little flavor is lost in cooking. Only the best meat is put out for sale. The Meat-N-Place will never hold back the choice cuts, and as a result, there is a noticeable difference between the meat there and that which you are probably now buying.

Although the Meat-N-Place stocks bulk packages of roast, sausage, bacon, chicken-fried steak, dinner steaks, pork chops, chicken, franks, and corn dogs— all of which are cut and layered in neat, flat boxes which easily fit into any size freezer— that's not all they stock. Individual steaks may be bought daily, as well as halves and quarters. Lamb and goat are also available at the Meat-N-Place, just in time for the summer BBQ's. And convenience? How about no long lines, no crowds to fight, no impersonal cashiers, and no worry about finding a good steak!

Yet with the high quality meat, convenience of quick and friendly service, and the choice of bulk purchasing or daily buying at the Meat-N-Place, the prices are much lower than you would expect. They are lower than those at your grocery store! So now there should be absolutely no question in your mind as to where to go for quality, service, convenience, and price... for your daily, weekly, or monthly shopping.

All quarters and halves purchased at the Meat-N-Place may be cut to your specifications by our Greg Galvan, one of the best butchers in the area. The Meat-N-Place can acquire for you just about anything, and they offer delivery for those of you who can't seem to find the time to go by. In addition to meat, the Meat-N-Place also stocks cheese, french fries, tater tots, onion rings, and other delicious items. So for the best quality, best prices, friendly service, and a wide variety of meats to choose from, go by the Meat-N-Place at 4402 W. Illinois in Midland. For more information, or for delivery, call the Meat-N-Place at 694-5536. The Meat-N-Place is open 10:00 to 6:00, Monday through Saturday.

Cattleman's Steak House truly a delicious treat

Everyone deserves a treat every now and then! No matter what you do or who you are, you deserve to be treated at times. If you enjoy eating, it sometimes seems a hopeless case to find a place that you really consider a treat without feeling that the place is feasting on your pocketbook. Good food at an affordable price is often hard to find. Or is it? If you just can't seem to find the right place to eat, with delicious food at a moderate price, you just haven't looked in the right places. Tonight, treat your family, as well as yourself, to a pleasant evening meal at Cattleman's Steak House.

One trip to Cattleman's and you'll love what owners Bill and Pat Henkle have done to serve you. The pleasant, relaxed atmosphere and the friendly, efficient staff will make you see what a treat eating really can be! Once you have eaten there, you will want to go back again and again. But, for as good as the service is and as friendly as the staff is, nothing quite compares with the delicious food.

Appetizers at Cattleman's range from an extra large or regular size mountain of onion rings, to shrimp cocktail, fried zucchini, or fried mushrooms. Maybe a hot bowl of homemade soup, steaming chili, or frito pie would better suit your tastes. The salad bar at Cattleman's is truly a work of art.

To complement your dinner, Bill and Pat have included a good selection of wines, champagnes, and sherry, ranging from inexpensive to exquisite. They serve only the premium beers, those generally considered to be the best.

Now comes the steak, cooked to perfection just the way you like steak. Dinner steak, club steak, or ribeye would be the perfect way to fill even the hungriest tummy. Sirloins come in all sizes, from sirloin for one up to sirloin for eight. T-Bone steak is an old favorite at Cattleman's, and comes in three sizes to satisfy even the hungriest appetite. Prime rib is a prime choice of many hungry diners (when available).

Steak is not the only specialty at Cattleman's, seafood is quite popular. Delicious fried shrimp, oysters, scallops, catfish, and even froglegs are available at Cattleman's. And although every item is a special treat at Cattleman's, you owe it to yourself to try their special specialty: chicken fried steak. Other menu items include chicken strips, hamburger steak, and Virginia ham steak. All entrees include a hearty baked potato and a trip to the wonderful salad bar.

For those of you who are not quite so hungry, Bill and Pat provide the all-American favorite hamburger and cheeseburger, each available in two sizes. If you really want to spice it up, try their jalapeno burgers. Grilled cheese, ham and cheese, steak sandwiches, and a delightful turkey, ham and cheese sandwich are waiting for you there if you only have a light appetite. A trip to the salad bar may be made without a dinner order.

Kids are welcome at Cattleman's, too. Special child's plates are available for the little ones. Beverages include tea, milk, soft drinks, and coffee. And the dessert is heavenly, if you have any room left after the steak. Top it all off with scrumptious cherry or blueberry cheesecake or delicious pecan pie. Hours at Cattleman's Steak House are from 10:00 to 2:00 and 5:00 to 9:30, Mondaythrough Friday, and 5:00 to 10:00 on Saturdays. Cattlemans is closed on Sundays. And if the parking lot is full when you get there, go on and stop. It almost always is, and you very rarely have to wait more than five minutes to be seated.

Cattleman's Steak House, at 300 N. Big Spring in Midland, is able to fulfill any appetite, from mild to extra large. The fantastic service and delicious food will keep you coming back again and again. Treat yourself to Cattleman's tonight.

We helped the Torturos when fire destroyed their home. Who can you turn to?

The Torturos weren't covered by any insurance. Red Cross found them a place to stay. We gave them food, warm jackets and winter boots.
Most people think it takes a major disaster like a flood, a hurricane or an earthquake for the Red Cross to respond. But Michael and Phyllis Torturo know differently. Their Red Cross disaster relief didn't stop with just food, clothing and shelter. We helped them re-establish their source of income.
Then showed them how to use those funds to obtain a trailer home for their family.
What if the next fire in town destroys your home? Who can you count on to lend a helping hand? You can count on us.

Money funds make new effort to push product

By the Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

With rumblings that evoked the imagery of war, gladiators' contests, and family brawls, the banking industry squared off with the popular money market mutual funds at Christmastime to compete for nearly $500 billion in savers' and investors' cash.

On the surface, it was the money funds' blood that was spilled. From Dec. 1, when the funds managed a peak $232 billion in customers' assets, through Feb. 16, the funds lost $39.7 billion, or 17 percent of their assets.

From their introduction Dec. 14 through Feb. 9, the banks' money market deposit accounts had sucked up $254.4 billion in capital, although 80 percent of that or more appears to have come from other bank accounts.

So it's not surprising that harsh words are being slung in the banks' direction by the fund managers. And while both sides deny with some justification that they are competing for the same market, the money funds have begun pushing their products with cosmetic changes and special offers.

One fund, the huge Dreyfus Liquid Assets, is offering some of its customers low-interest car loans. Some are planning to market their products through banks. Others have reduced the minimum check amounts they allow investors to write. Still others, on the reasoning that one big selling-point of the banks is their federal deposit insurance, are planning to insure their funds.

THE MONEY FUNDS' trade group, the Investment Company Institute, hasn't been silent either. In a press release, the Washington-based group sniped that the banks are being awfully misleading by calling their accounts "funds" or suggesting in advertising that they serve customers with "warm friendly professionals" rather than "cold computers."

Money market funds, the institute stressed, "have telephones answered by real, warm, and friendly human beings," too.

The Securities and Exchange Commission is joining the fray; the SEC on Friday approved a rule allowing the money funds to advertise compounded yields on their investments, which many banks are doing because it improves the apparent yield by a fraction of a percentage point. (The rule is subject to several months of public scrutiny before it becomes final.)

The mutual funds have been prevented from advertising anything but average weekly or monthly yields since 1979, when the SEC decided that would give investors a uniform figure with which to compare funds. But because the funds' portfolios generally mature in less than a year, their yields to customers are compounded anyway, even if their ads don't say so.

The SEC is moving to revise the rule now because "no one ever asked before," says Gregory Todd, a staff attorney in the agency's division of investment management. If the banks can advertise a compounded yield but the funds cannot, that would deceive investors into believing the banks offer a better deal, Todd added.

AFTER THE MONEY funds assets hit their peak of $232 billion in the week ended Dec. 1, several conditions conspired to knock them off their perch. In the first place, money fund managers argue, Christmas encouraged consumers to draw down their savings in the high-yield funds. At the same time, many investors who had parked their cash in the funds until the stock market revived finally decided to shift their assets into the bull market in equities. So a lot of the funds' assets went into stocks or stock mutual funds.

Throughout this period interest rates were declining in the money markets: Funds that were offering yields of more than 15 percent a year ago were down to 9 percent or less; customers in 30 percent or 40 percent tax brackets found it profitable to move from the all-purpose money funds into tax-exempt funds.

The banks' inflow was deceptive as well. As much as 80 percent of the $275.1 billion that went into the money market accounts and related Super-NOW accounts instituted at year-end came from other bank accounts or certificates of deposit, analysts say. That's bad news for the banks, for deposits in the money market accounts cost them more than those other deposits.

It may be bad news for borrowers as well, argue analysts for Sanford C. Bernstein & Co. The New York-based brokerage predicts in its February economic research report that "bankers will, of course, attempt to recover the added costs by raising their loan charges" on variable-rate loans and new loans.

Although much of the banks' promotional fervor has abated, they are still beating the funds' yields. Financial analysts disagree, however, on whether banks and thrift institutions will be able to beat the funds' yields consistently.

"It's possible that the thrift institutions can afford to pay whatever they have to pay to get money in the door to reinvest in floating rate mortgages," says Glen King Parker, chairman of the Fort Lauderdale-based Institute for Econometric Research, which rates money funds for safety and yield.

THE STRATEGEM of borrowing short and lending long is perilous, others argue. "If the banks want to play the same game that got them into trouble, oh sure, they can offer higher rates," says Silver of the Investment Company Institute. "We don't think the banks can afford it."

The most aggressive competitive reaction to the banks is expected to come from the investment industry's largest funds, which are generally operated by the most diversified firms. New York-based Dreyfus Corp., whose Dreyfus Liquid Assets is the third-largest money market fund, is using its newly-acquired Lincoln State Bank of East Orange, N.J., to offer New Jersey shareholders in Liquid Assets 11 percent interest on loans for Ford or Chrysler cars. Bank car loan rates are closer to 17 percent.

The public's reaction to the deal so far has been "encouraging, but not overwhelming," said Monte Gordon, a vice president and director of research at Dreyfus.

Some money funds moved swiftly to counter what appeared to be the banks' other strong suit: federal deposit insurance. Vanguard Group of Valley Forge, Pa., and Travelers Corp. have both announced money funds that will be privately insured, and other funds are looking at proposals to institute some sort of group insurance. In any event, some in the mutual fund industry say that insurance is not such an important consideration for customers.

According to a survey conducted for T. Rowe Price, the Baltimore-based sponsor of some of the industry's largest money funds, the main consideration of customers who switched their money was the banks' high yields, which money market specialists don't expect to last much longer.

THE T. ROWE PRICE telephone survey involved about 300 of its 300,000 customers, or those who wrote a check on their money fund of more than $2,500 between mid-December and Mid-January.

Of those surveyed, 53 percent said their main reason for switching was yield, while 19 percent cited insurance, an unexpectedly low figure. Some 87 percent said they left their accounts open at Price, an indication they will switch back if the bank rates fall below the funds' yields.

To emphasize yield, some organizations are encouraging investors to shift their money into tax-exempt funds, which invest in municipal or government securities rather than such taxable money market instruments as commercial paper, bankers' acceptances, and certificates of deposit. Others find that customers are moving money into better-yielding funds on their own.

Funding children's education

By JOHN BURKE

Today, an ever-increasing number of parents are planning ahead for the means to provide their children with a college eduction. With education costs on the rise, most parents are concerned about providing their children with the best possible education at the lowest possible cost. As with any expense, it is better to pay education costs with pre-tax dollars rather than after-tax dollars. This can be achieved by having income earned by the child rather than by the parent who presumably is in a significantly higher tax bracket.

The ten year or "Clifford Trust" is a useful vehicle for building an educaional fund. The parent transfers money or income-producing property to the trust which lasts for more than ten years or the life of beneficiary, if less. When the trust ends, the trust principal reverts to the parent. The income from the property has been removed from the parent's higher tax bracket and is taxed to the child or the trust at lower tax rate. In lieu of a "Clifford Trust" other types of trusts could be established. For example, a long-term trust which could provide that the principal is to be paid to the child upon attaining a certain age. Another type of trust is a current income trust which provides for the mandatory distribution of income annually.

Interest free loans could possibly be used to provide for educatonal funds. The parent would loan the money to the child backed by a demand note, with the loan proceeds being invested by or for the child. Since there have been recent cases in which interest free loans were disallowed and others in which they were allowed, the Supreme Court has agreed to look into the situation. Therefore, when using interest free loans in any situation, great care should be followed so that the Internal Revenue Service will not disallow them.

Gifts of marketable securities or investments in oil and gas are very good for parents to give to their children. Appreciated securities can be gifted to children for them to sell and use the proceeds to pay for their education. There would be more money after tax to use than if the parents sold the stock and used the proceeds to pay for the education because of the lower tax rate of the children. When gifting oil and gas investments, the ideal time for such a gift would be after the deductions have been taken which normally occurs in the first two years.

If the parent is the owner of a closely held company, there are a number of ways in which funds can be channeled to the owner's children for educational purposes. Summer employment, gifts of subchapter stock, or gifts of debt securities are ways to transfer income.

In conclusion, by having lower bracket taxpayers (children) earn income rather than the parent, support of the child can be provided at lower after-tax cost. This is true regardless of whether or not educational funding is a goal.

Crude yield down

AUSTIN (AP) — Crude oil production in Texas crude oil dropped 3 percent in 1982, according to Railroad Commission Chairman Mack Wallace.

A preliminary report released Thursday by the commission showed oil production of 871,780,379 barrels last year, down from the 1981 production of 897,573,416.

Mexico sets hotel rates

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The Tourism Department has moved to curb the overcharging of foreign hotel guests by establishing new maximum room rates for Mexico's hotels.

A regulation published in the federal register Friday sets maximum legal prices and lists them in pesos only. The exclusive use of pesos is intended to stop hotels from charging Mexicans in pesos while quoting a higher price in dollars for foreigners.

The new prices are to stay in effect until next Dec. 15.

The practice of dual pricing began after the peso was devalued last December for a third time in a year. It dropped from about 26 to the dollar in January 1982 to the current free-market rate of 150 to the dollar, giving foreign tourists a big bargain.

Hotels still may accept dollars in payment, but only at the equivalent of the free-market exchange rate in effect at the time to eliminate overcharging guests, the department said.

Hotels violating the decree could be fined 100,000 pesos — about $660 — the first time, double that the second time and have their licenses revoked the third.

The new scale sets prices for various categories of hotels in six geographic zones. The cheapest rate is 300 pesos — $2 — for a room in an economy-class hotel to 10,925 pesos — $78 — for the top hotel in the zone that includes Acapulco and other coastal resorts. Hotels may offer lower rates to promote business.

Tourism is a major source of foreign exchange and the government is counting on an increase in revenues to bring in needed dollars to help pay its $83 billion foreign debt.

SBA offers assistance by long distance

Have you called SBA's Answer Desk yet? According to Philip J. O'Jibway, district director of the SBA, Answer Desk received some 15,000 calls during its first three months of existence.

Manned by SBA's office of Advocacy, the Answer Desk became operational in October 1982. SBA experts are prepared to handle questions from small business persons needing help or guidance with problems connected with their firm and the U. S. Government.

Interested persons may dial, toll free, 800/368-5855 Monday through Friday-from 8:30 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. (EST). During other hours, calls will be handled by a recording device amd answered the next business day.

The public should continue to call the Lubbock SBA office at (806) 743-7462 for inquiries of a routine nature or to inquire on specific cases.

Grad Center schedules rock, law, data classes

The Permian Basin Graduate Center will offer five courses at the PBGC Building, 105 W. Illinois, Midland,

The final session of Oil and gas Fields in the Permian Basin "North Basin Platform" will be held Tuesday, March 1, from 7-10 p.m. Mr. Ed Sneed District Exploration Manager, Marathon Oil Company, and Larry Wagner, Independent Geologist, will instruct the course.

The third session of Principles of Oil and Gas Law "Common Title Problems" will be held Thursday, March 3, from 7-10 p.m. Robert C. Bledsoe, Cotton, Bledsoe, Righe & Dawson, will instruct the course. Fee is $25.

Gas Contracts will be held Monday's March 7 and 14, from 7-10 p.m. Mr. John D. Ochsner, Regional Manager, Lone Star Gas company, will instruct. This course is designed to improve the proficiency of those responsible for negotiating satisfactory sales conracts and will cover provisions involved in such contracts. It will be primarily of a discussion and quesion-and-answer nature. Fee is $60.

Oil and Gas fundamentals - 1 will be held Mondays, March 7-21, from 7-10 p.m. This is a team-taught course taught by Ed C. Kettenbrink, District Geologist, J. M. Huber Corporation; Jerry Moritz, Consultant, Meyer, Moritz & Co.; and Albert L. Standord, Petroleum Engineer, Adobe Oil and Gas Corpoation, will instruct. Designed for office managers, secretaries, production clerks and other personnel - expecially those new to the oil industry. Fee is $60.

Introduction to Data Processing will be held Wednesday and Thursday, March 9-10, from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Richard Fleming, Director of the Computer Science Porgram and Small Business Management Probram, Dallas Community College. This course is for management and staff who assist in the implementation and maintenance of support procedures, staff who work with data processing and need to know the capabilities and systems processes; and well as personnel new to data processing. It is also beneficial to executives in companies where use of the computer is being considered. Fee is $260.

Dorchester strikes in Borden

Dorchester Gas Corporation recently announced an exploatory well discovery in Borden County. The well, the Good No. 1, flowed during a 24 hour test at the rate of 203 barrels of oil and 35,000 cubic feet of gas on a 24/64" choke. The well is producing from the Fusselman formation through perforations at 9,739 to 9,745 feet.

Dorchester owns a 75 percent working interest in the well until payout; 61 percent after payout, and working ineresets varying from 61 percent to 75 percent in a total 1,480 gross acres on the prospect. A northeast offset, the Dorchester Good 15-1, has been permitted.

Other interest owners in the well and the prospect acreage include Spectrum 7-1982 A&B Programs, NRM Petroleum Corporation, Western Equipment Company, Tri-Service Drilling Cmpany, M.W. Braunum and Jack O. McCall.

Rig count bobbles

The Permian Basin area rig count edged down last week. According to a survey by Reed Rock Bit Co., the figure for the area covered by the map was 253.

The tally in recent weeks has been: 280, Jan. 28; 272, Feb. 4; 261, Feb. 11; and 264, Feb. 18.

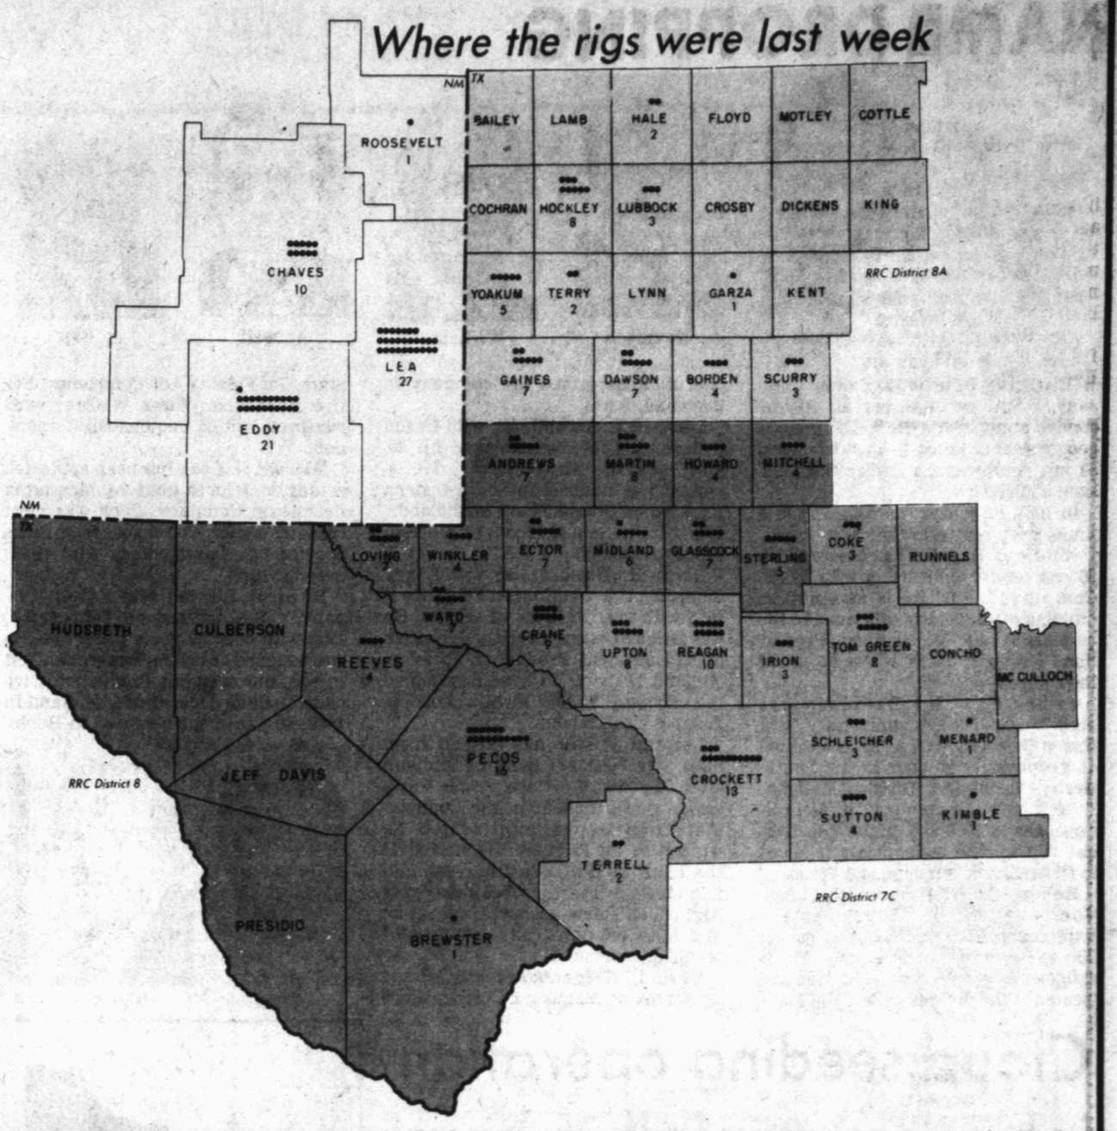

One year ago the regional count was 443. In 1981 the figure was 379.

The International Association of Drilling Contractors reports 2,147 rigs were making hole nationwide Feb. 21. That's down from the week earlier, when the score was 2,223.

A year earlier the IADC spotted 4,072 rotaries cutting new hole.

The latest IADC tally sheet shows a slight increase in some states, but generally the rig count state-by-state is down.

The IADC gave Texas credit for 793 busy rigs — 54 of them offshore. New Mexico had 63.

Texas American completes gasser

Texas American Oil Corporation, Midland, a subsidiary of Texas American Energy Corporation, recently announced that it had completed a dual-zone deep gas well with a combined choke flow rate of approximately 2.4 million cubic feet of gas per day, in Eddy County, New Mexico.

The company said that the gas well, Todd Federal 23-3, was drilled to a total depth of 15,120 feet in order to evaluate the Atoka Limestone and Morrow Sandstone formations. Five potential development/discovery producing zones were encountered in the two objective formations. The well has been completed as a dual-producer in two porosity intervals within the Morrow Sandstone and is presently awaiting pipeline connection.

The Lower Morrow zone tested at a flow rate of 1,872,000 cubic feet of gas a day through a 10.25/64 inch choke from perforations at 14,752 to 14,804 feet, while an Upper Morrow zone tested at a flow rate of 513,000 cubic feet of gas a day through a 6/64 inch choke from perforations at 14,414 to 14,442 feet, for a combined flow rate of 2,385,000 cubic feet of gas per day.

Texas American Oil Corporation is the operator of the well and owns a 33 percent working interest. Other significant interest owners are Marathon Oil Company (24 percent), Mobil Oil Company (18 percent) and CPC Exploration, Inc. (13 percent). Additional corporate and individual interests own smaller percentages.

Texas American holds significant property interests in this general area which are currently being evaluated for deep drilling.

Cloud seeding operation increases rainfall in area

Although 1982 was far below the average in cloud seeding opportunities, the year's weather modification effort by the Colorado River Municipal Water District continued a 12-year pattern of increased rainfall and increased cotton yelds in the project's needed area.

The CRMWD has completed 12 consecutive years of a study in a 14-county portion of mid-west Texas, all or part of nine (four principally) fall within the target. The remaining counties are mostly in the control area for comparisons.

The chief objective of the research and operational activity, explained Ray Pat Jones, CRWMD meteorologist, is to determine the feasibility of increasing precipitation through seeding clouds with silver iodide. If this is so, a secondary question is will it increase run-off into the district's reservoirs, Lakes J. B. Thomas and E. V. Spence. A co-product of the study is whether increased water supplies wll result in greater agricultural output.

The advantage in rainfall measure- ments for the 12-year period (1971-82) within the cloud-seeded target is 42 per cent greater than in the preceeding 35 years prior to the program. In stations outside the target area, the increase is only 15 per cent over the pre-seeding period.

In 1982, rainfall for the stations within the target area was 42 per cent above the mean for the period 1936-70, but outside the target it was up only 20 per cent.

During 1982 there were only 22 seeding missions on 20 different days as compared to an average of 34.4 for the 12 years. The peak year was 1976 with 52 missions, and the low years were 1974 and 1080 with only 17.

On the basis of the continuing study, Jones concluded that "some positive results of analyzed date have emerged to support the CRMWD weather modification program." He also noted that" in seven of the last 11 years, cotton production for the cloud-seeded (counties) has surpassed both upwind and downwind counties. In the 35-year period prior to seeding operations, this happened only in 1941, 1950, and 1970.

Counties in the control and target areas are Lynn, Garza, Kent, Dawson, Borden, Scurry, Fisher, Martin, Howard, Mitchell, Nolan, Glasscock, Sterling and Coke. Target boundaries go from Big Spring to Lamesa and near O'Donnell, then eastward along the Garza-Borden line to U. S. 84 highway, sutheast through Roscoe to Maryneal, southwest to Sterling City and back to Big Spring along U. S. 87. Within this territory, the district maintains a network of 187 rain gauges, of which 106 are recording and 81 are fence-post gauges.

Only convective (cumulus) storm clouds are seeded from a CRMWD aircraft equipped with 12-flare racks on each wing.

Flares are ignited near the base of promising clouds so that silver iodide crystals will be drawn into the updraft to a poijt where, at minus 10 degrees centigrade, the crystals promote greater condensation of moisture droplets. Experience has indicated little profit in seeding small, isolated thunderstorm cells, but also that seeding may actually promote growth of moderate storn cells into significant ones.

The Midland skyline gained a few additions during 1982, and even more new buildings are expected in 1983.

Midland now able to offer premium office space

By JIM PRESNELL
Energy-Business Writer

How much office space is too much? Or, is plenty never enough?

These questions aren't just coming from detached observers — these are concerns expressed by the leasing agents and construction financiers of Midland. And if it all sounds a little unsure, there is one fact that's undeniable: Midland has more office space — and more tall buildings — than ever before.

Completed during 1981, 1982, or early 1983 were several sizable structures: The Summit, a mirrored oval off Illinois Avenue; Two Midland National Center, a stepped glass and brick mirror of an earlier structure; HBF Corp.'s Empire Plaza, in brick and glass at Wall and Pecos; the grey granite enclosed-mall Paragon at 600 N. Marienfeld; Big Spring Street's six-story Energy Square, a condo-office building where suites are custom-built for buyers (as they are in many new structures); and the Hightower Building, Jack Hightower's construction, 10 stories tall, north of Midland National Center.

The combined square footage of these recent buildings' office areas is 1.035 million square feet. But Midland isn't stopping there. Many buildings scheduled for completion soon will further add to the office space market.

Heritage Center

HBF Corporation is constructing Heritage Center, an 11-story tower at Loraine and Michigan that will host many area firms. The facility will be readied for move-in by March and will host its initial tenant — attorneys Smith and Kerr — at that time.

Leasing is proceeding, and going fairly well, developers said. Negotiations are proceeding with a major tenant who tentatively will take 60 percent of the building's 200,000 square feet of office space.

A second, taller 17-story tower was in the original HBF design for Heritage Center, but its construction "is now a remote possibility: only if a major client is found to take the added space," agent Kelly Cooke said.

Hightower Building

Jack Hightower recently completed his Hightower Building at Illinois and Pecos and has the building 98 percent leased.

The 125,000-square-foot, $6 million building is a technology-laden, 10-floor structure.

The building is now complete and finishing is being done for the last few tenants. Mostly oil clients occupy the spaces, with the largest blocks going to Arco Oil, NRM Exploration, and Union Oil of California.

Atrium Center

Trigon Corporation is putting finishing touches on the Atrium Center, and leasing is "going very well" in the five-story structure, located at Louisiana Avenue and Colorado Street. Total square footage is 72,936.

Forty percent of the building is now preleased. The developer is negotiating with a major client who would take the rest of the building.

Gary Crabb said the first tenant moving into the building he's leasing will be Foy Boyd's engineering firm. He said many companies are moving now in order to consolidate their operations. "A lot of firms grew out of the space they leased, and they have to get back together to solve broken-down communications."

Dinero Plaza

The six floors of striking pink-chrome-pillared Dinero Plaza offer 300,000 square feet of office space at the 1000 block of North Big Spring. Leasing Manager Bob Lawson says Dinero has a slate of tenants scheduled for move-in during and after February.

The first tenant will be namesake Dinero Operating Company, which will occupy about 10 percent of the available space. Completion of basic facilities should be achieved soon, allowing finishing work to continue on individual office spaces.

A second building was in the original design, but market conditions will dictate whether it is called for.

Internorth Building

Wall and Pecos Streets will see the construction of a joint venture building this year, to be named after major tenant Internorth, a diversified Omaha-based energy firm.

The 11-story building, set to break ground soon, will feature a reflective glass traditional-styled facade.

The Wall-Pecos Joint Venture, Internorth, and Dallas developer Sussex Group announced the project in January. Contained in the building will be a concealed six-level garage and 100,000 square feet office space.

Glass elevators will give a view of the open, 11-story atrium.

511 Building

Pierce and Pace's chic, black, 66,000-square-foot, six-story 511 Building (511 W. Ohio at Pecos) is about 20 percent leased.

The energy-wise mirrored structure is equipped with mini-blinds, and all the offices are customized with carpet and walls and an individualized office plan.

One free parking slot is alotted for every 500 square feet rented. "Our chief advantage is we're just barely out of the downtown, one-way-street traffic hassle, yet still convenient to all downtown," said Joe Bill Pierce.

Office Triangle

Pierce and Pace also offers space in its single-story buildings at 3001 W. Illionois, Office Triangle.

The A and B buildings are 60 to 75 percent leased and are faraway from downtown traffic.

Liberty Square

Dwayne Casbeer's company, Casbeer and Associates, has leased 75 percent of Liberty Square, a park-like office project between Midland Drive and Midkiff Road on Andrews Highway. The buildings are twin sand brick structures with bronze glass, two stories high.

"We feel we have a real edge, with lots of parking space outside, janitorial service, and utilities included in our lease rate," said agent Mike Lancaster.

Executone of the Permian Basin, Allstate Insurance, and Conner-Eastup/Dersch Insurance Agents are a few of the major clients already in Liberty Square.

401 E. Illinois

Casbeer is also developing 401 East Illinois, a two-story structure that is already open. It's being greatly enlarged with a four-story addition. The building is close to downtown and is placed east of town — Casbeer sees it as a good development spot. He owns the four corners at this street intersection. Casbeer has 8,000 square feet of office space available and 28,000 more under construction.

Mission Square

The north-town office areas are booming. A development being completed now at North Big Spring, Mission Square, is an office/retail condominium and leasing development of Jay Peck Construction Co.

Tax advantages and owner equity, according to agent Gary Viles, attract retail and office clients to the development. "The cost is nearly even between leasing and buying, and with buying you get the option of later selling your property, or just using it rent-free once the note is paid."

Viles said Mission Square's total 47,000 square feet of office space — mainly contained in the two-story building "E" — is about 25 percent full. The mix is even, but "Most people, especially retailers, want to buy," he said.

Conclusions are easy to draw when looking at all these new buildings. While one Realtor said Midland has been overbuilt, one of the area's chief builders said the office glut is a short-term coverage.

"Obviously there is more office space than there is demand for it," Area Builders' R.B. Hampton said, "but many just-finished spaces will be leased soon, and there's still speculation on various large firms moving some operations into Midland."

The Permian Basin Associated Builders and Contractors predicts that office, restaurant and motel construction — all commercial building — will stay very strong thoughout 1983.

"We'll see substantial drops in apartment and metal building construction," Massey Brand said, "but office buildings will continue to go up.

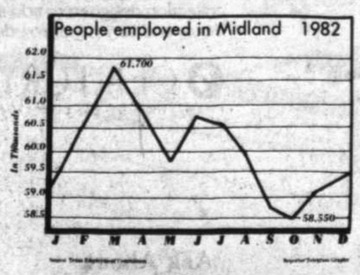

"Profits for builders are expected to drop, because what had been a contractors' market, is turning into a clients' market, but volume will at least remain steady," Brand said.

THE BUSINESS CLIMATE

1982 was a record year for Midland: the work force was at an all time high, but so were the unemployment rolls; utilities provided their services to more households because there were so many more households in need of services; Loop

250 development took a new turn, providing new areas for housing and retail establishments; Midland's late great housing shortage gave way to a "buyer's market" with the addition of many single-family homes and apartment complexes. For a climactic look at the business climate, see Pages 2-8AA.

From plays by Midland Community Theatre to diverse showings at Midland's Permian Basin Petroleum Museum and Museum of the Southwest, Midland had much to offer art afficianados during 1982. Pages 8-10AA.

Midland home of abundant housing

Housing additions, aparment complexes open doors

By JIM PRESNELL
Energy-Business Writer

For the last three years, the number of new housing units built in Midland has been increasing. Growth slowed, construction peaked and fell, and now the city is wide open. There is almost anything, in the way of housing, one might desire.

"Midland is leveling out — getting an even course for our economy," Dene Kelly said. Ms. Kelly has her own real estate firm, Dene Kelly Realtors, that is moving this month to plush new northside offices. "I think we're all very lucky to live here."

As for the state of Midland's housing market, Ms. Kelly said, "Prices are stable, the market has depreciated, and interest rates are down, especially the 12 percent FHA and VA loans. It's an excellent time to buy."

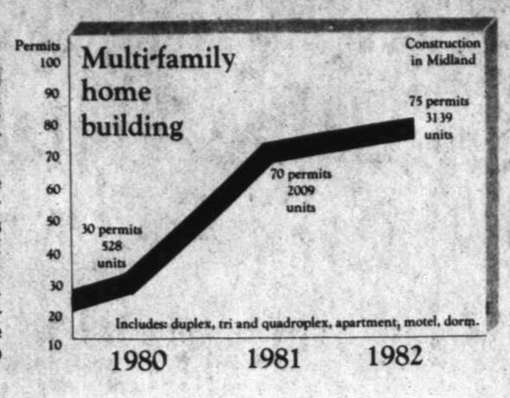

Ms. Kelly disputes the alleged housing shortage. "There was never a time when you could not find a home here," she said. She attributed any housing shortage here to a larger transient worker population during Midland's self-fueling construction boom. "Apartments and rental homes were difficult to find throughout that period," she said, "but both those kinds of rental housing are in plentiful supply now.

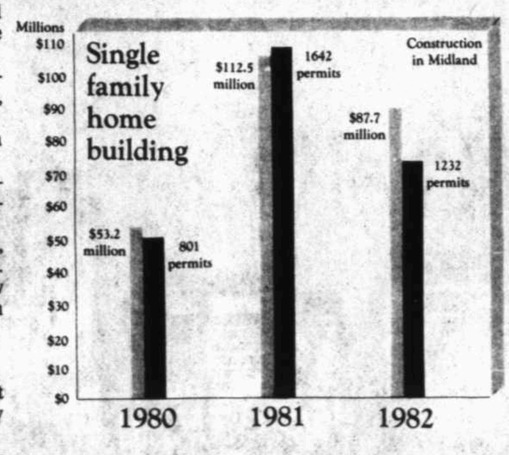

"It's obvious to any observer that Midland is overbuilt," she said. "You can see it in all the new homes, apartments, and office buildings."

New units constructed (all types of living spaces) in 1980 were 1,329.

In 1981, 3,651 new units — double the '81 total — were completed, aimed at a large audience of prospective tenants and/or buyers.

Despite sluggish building activity at the end of 1982, apartment and other multi-family construction was up. The eventual new unit total for '82, including new homes built, was 3,851. A unit could house one person or a nearly infinite-sized family.

The rental market

The names certainly sound good. But even without the rustic or greeting-card feelings, Midland was ready for them: the new apartment complexes.

Midland has seen unprecedented apartment construction in the last two years. Some brand-new apartments are open now: Chasewood, at 3100 Caldera; Wildflower, at 4301 Raleigh Court (rents start at $355); Canyon Creek, at 5244 N. Loop 250 (rents $350 up); Clusters, 4415 Northcrest (60 units open at $465 and up); Brentwood, 2408/2508 Faulkner (duplex, $375 up). There is Polo Park, open at 4700 Polo Parkway, and there are many complexes still under construction.

Many of the complexes mentioned above will open more units as completed. The units may be reserved now.

In the near future, even more of the new apartments will be open: Coming up are the Meadows, 2301 Cottonflat Road; Northgate, 4400 N. Holiday Hill; Belmont, at 2305 S. Belmont; and new projects at 3007 W. Louisiana and 1907 Tarleton that have yet to be named.

Midland no longer is short of rental housing, at least not in the high-rent and middle-rent apartments.

There's a wide range of rental housing, and rental houses listed with Realtors, at prices that vary as widely as the selection.

Renting a five-year-old apartment may cost $250 to $400 a month, according to Midland Chamber of Commerce surveys. A two-bedroom apartment costs somewhere around $450 to $550.

An apartment in a newer area (Loop 250 — a continual growth area for apartments) might have oodles of French doors, ceiling fans, an icemaker, a dishwasher, a microwave oven, patio, clubhouse, sports facilities, and other amenities: from $450 to about $650 — top rent for 2 bedrooms.

Additionally, a security deposit can be counted on to cost from $150 to $400 or more.

Five years ago, 2,350 units in multi-family settings were on the rental market. Today, the local apartment group says there are close to 8,000 rentable units with tenants, waiting for tenants, or under construction.

In six months, most of the units will be complete. The rental market could then become a true "buyer's market," with more special offers, rent-cutting and free rent offers.

This is all great for tenants. But what about landlords? It could get tough. Many apartment complexes are less than half full. The landlords aggressively seek new tenants as occupancy rates fall. Many tenants leave to buy homes, and others find new properties to rent.

V.E. "Mac" McFarling, president of the Midland Apartment Association, said, "It's not going to be easy for the apartment industry to absorb the large number of new units coming onto this rental market. There is a two- to three-year time lag in building a new apartment complex here — what with financing, purchasing land, construction schedules," and other costs which may total $4 to $7 million or more.

Homes for sale

Lower interest rates from the banks and savings institutions — especially VA's and FHA's 12 percent — piqued Midlanders' interest in buying homes recently.

The home sellers are doing better and the whole industry is a bit less strapped. "It's a more open market, buyers and sellers are happier, and it is moving at a slower pace — which has to be good," Ms. Kelly said.

Optimism, indeed, seems called for when one considers the number of homes sold in January this year was 122, just seven less than were sold in the frenetic home market of January 1982.

And now, there are so many new choices. The Fairmont Addition, off Midland Drive, is a new development offering homes by Ramcon and Concept for around $100,000 plus $15,000 to $20,000 for the land. "Lots are still priced rather high, but there are three times as many lots for sale," Ms. Kelly said.

Wydewood Estates, located in the same area, sell at $80,000 to $100,000. Belaire homes are available behind the Midland Drive YMCA, offering comfortable new homes at $75,000 total cost.

Northgate, located at Loop 250 and F.M. 868, offers $72,000 to $100,000 houses. Crestgate homes sell for $120,000 to $180,000, off Midland Drive at Loop 250 service road.

And The Oaks, a newly announced Green Tree development on Oriole Drive, offers a set of homes that start at $260,000 — touted as "a celebration of casual elegance."

A rough average price during 1982 for an existing home was about $70,000 to $90,000, in Midland, during 1982. A new home here costs about $105,000.

The prices have gone down a bit lately, figures reveal. This deflation, according to Ms. Kelly, has put 1982's $80,000 to $83,000 home in a more affordable 1983 price range of around $73,000 to $74,000.

Midland Realtors sold less homes in 1982 due to slower growth here. Still, only a few Realtors have been seriously hurt by the soft market, and many are doing very well.

Deals were closed on 2,374 homes here in 1981, for a total $185 million. Only 1,856 deals were closed during 1982, for total prices at around $169 million.

Realtors said the home market is brisk on the lower and upper ends, and soft in the middle. A $90,000 to $200,000 house may be hard to sell.

The seller may cut price because of this soft market. In January 1982 the $15.1 million in home sales were made at just a $100,000 discount from the asking prices. In January of this year, a $12 million home sales total was discounted a much higher figure of $444,000 discounts off prices sellers wanted.

A slowdown in housing sales, with over 1,200 homes on the market (twice last year's figure), "...reflects the economic times," said Grant Billingsley with the Midland Chamber of Commerce. "People stay with what they've got rather than making additional financial commitments."

Billingsley says Midland housing is following economic trends.

"Now, we're seeing a market slowdown. Demand has not expanded as fast as the supply of new homes has increased."

Satellite transmitter fails

WASHINGTON (AP) — After praising the Landsat 4 photos as the best ever taken of the Earth, the space agency announced recently that the satellite's transmitter has failed.

The photos, snapped by a device called a thematic mapper, were being used to forecast harvests, locate minerals and manage water supplies.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration reported an X-band transmitter on the satellite has failed, stopping the flow of these high-resolution pictures, which clearly show earth resources such as mineral deposits as small as 90 feet in size.

NASA said it is studying the problem with General Electric Co., Valley Forge, Pa., the prime Landsat contractor, and TRW, Redondo Beach, Calif., which built the transmitter.

THE FRENCH CONNECTION - ART DECO...

THE SUPERB CONSTRUCTION - CENTURY®....

THE DINING ROOM COLLECTION - CONFIDANTE.

Introducing Confidante, an innovative collection that reflects the influence of French designers in the 1920's — designers such as Ruhlmann who contributed so much to the contemporary settings of today. The name for the "new look" was art deco, derived from the Paris L'Exposition des Arts Decoratifs et Industriels Modernes," held in 1925 ... evolution inside tradition, furnishings that were an interpretation of the rounded forms of the 1830's using the "bois clairs" or light colored woods, and the "bountiful-nature" themes of decoration favored during Louis Phillipe's reign ... the best esthetic ideas of a century earlier, reintroduced in a new and modern way. Today, Century® echoes the evolution inside tradition theme of the 1920's with a grouping that takes the art deco influence an important step further — intricate reeding and molding details are abundant, and on pieces without hardware, a brass-colored fillet is inserted.

Crafted of maple solids and pecan veneers, Confidante is available in three fashion finishes including Chiffon, an exciting beige lacquer with elements of peach. Shown, just part of an extensive collection designed to add a new dimension to art deco, and to your dining decor ... bon appetit!

Loop 250 scene of much development

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

Five years ago, Loop 250 was a farm-to-market road which wound its way across north Midland, through lands of mesquite and tumbleweed. The only activity was an occasional small airplane taking off from Midland Airpark, or a jack rabbit scampering along the side of the road.

Today, the loop is hot.

There is plenty of traffic, at least a dozen apartment complexes, hundreds of single and multi-family houses, and acres of land cleared to make way for commercial development in 1983 and 1984.

Many hopes and dreams depend on land along the eight-mile loop, since Realtors and developers live by the old maxim, "location, location, location." Land values there have increased tenfold in the last few years, and are now up to $7 to $15 a square foot.

THE KEY TO THE loop's success is more residential housing full of people, according to the developers, in order to build up a demand for commercial and retail projects to come later.

Much of the work done along Loop 250 in 1982 is not too fancy and cannot be seen: digging drainage ditches, relocating pipelines and installing underground utilities for huge residential subdivisions.

Progress can be seen, however, in terms of asphalt. Last year all access roads running parallel to the loop between U.S. Highway 80 West (Holiday Hill Road) and State Highway 349 (North Big Spring Street) were completed by the State Highway Department.

Taxpayers have paid $8.2 million so far, or about $1 million per mile.

THIS YEAR, TRAFFIC lights will be installed at three intersections along the 8-mile route, at North Garfield, Midkiff Road and Midland Drive.

Still to come, in late 1983 or 1984, is the eastern leg of the frontage road from Highway 349 east and south to U.S. Highway 80 east of Midland, at a cost of about $2.4 million.

"We currently are in the process of planning the construction necessary for the utility and pipeline facilities to be relocated, and to acquire some drainage easements," said Charles Muery of the State Highway Department.

"We don't know if these tasks will be done in time to advertise for bids in the latter part of '83 or not, or whether the funds will be available."

CITY AND STATE planners knew the loop would be a shot in the arm for Midland, just as loop roads have been in other cities, but they are amazed at how fast growth has taken place along the eight-mile stretch of highway.

"I'm going to guess that traffic is heavier than we first anticipated when we began planning it," said Muery. "There's been more development north of the loop than we anticipated."

At one time, planners said the loop would be a 20-year project, Muery said, "but when you begin looking at priorities, it's obvious the facility is needed now. We'd definitely like to see funding for the main lanes and interchanges."

Loop 250 was first proposed in the 1950s. The first public hearings were held in 1973-74 and detailed planning began in 1978-79, he said.

THE LARGEST SINGLE project along the Loop in terms of acreage is Polo Park, at North Garfield. The 113-acre site eventually will have a combination of single and multi-family residences, office and commercial space and a shopping center. Steenson Properties Inc., Midland, is the developer.

In 1982, Phase I was completed. Castleford Street was extended from North Garfield to Saddle Club, and Polo Parkway was extended from the Loop north to Castleford. All utility and paving work was also finished for this section of the site.

In addition, the 184-unit Polo Park Apartments were completed. Leasing is still underway, in spite of an October fire which leveled two buildings and destroyed 16 apartments. Re-construction expenses have cost the builder $500,000 so far.

Sixty-eight duplex lots were also readied in 1982 and are now for sale to builders, said Scott Steenson.

PLANS IN 1983 call for further extending Polo Parkway north to Bluebird Lane and bringing 45 residential lots on line with utilities installed.

Design and planning continues for the retail center, which will occupy 11.5 acres at the northeast corner of Loop 250 and Garfield. Leasing was to begin in January 1983 with actual construction not scheduled until the summer.

Plans for the office portion of Polo Park have slowed somewhat until the Midland office market improves. Steenson said he has no immediate plans to develop the 5- and 10-acre tracts set aside for office buildings.

"The orginal plan was for a three-year project," he said. "We're preparing to develop the project gradually. We won't bring on any more residential lots than can be absorbed in any one year."

The most unique project found along the loop is Manor Park, a residential retirement community planned at the corner of Sinclair Avenue and Loop 250, just north of Andrews Highway.

THE $50 MILLION project will be completed over a seven to 10 year period by Trinity Towers, a Midland retirement complex.

It will eventually have living space for 550 persons aged 62 and older.

Ground was broken in September 1982 for the first part of the project on a 40-acre site. Installation of street lights and paving is underway and a few model homes are expected to be open to the public soon.

In April 1983, two buildings containing eight townhouses and a third building with six garden apartments should be ready, according to Mike Morgan, project manager for HBF Construction.

Sometime in 1983 construction will begin on a three-story apartment building and a central facilities building, as soon as the board of directors issues the final word.

DIRT WORK, UTILITIES installation, street paving and other work continued in 1982 for the Courtyard at Midland Park and North Park, two other commercial developments along Loop 250.

In December ground was broken at the Courtyard, on the southeast corner of the loop and Midkiff Street. Security National Bank opened a temporary banking facility there earlier in the year. Its four story office building is under construction now.

Groundbreaking was originally set for October 1982 at One North Park, on the northeast corner of the same intersection, but it has not taken place yet. Eight buildings are planned, including a Super-Duper Grocery Store and Cinema. Completion is scheduled in the fall and winter of 1983.

Glass fibers could replace asbestos as reinforcement material in cement

WASHINGTON (AP) — Glass fibers spun from waste slate and limestone may be an inexpensive substitute for the asbestos used to reinforce cement, according to a recent report in the American Chemical Society's Chemical & Engineering News magazine.

Chrysotile asbestos has been widely used in the building industry to reinforce cement, but it is now considered a cancer-causing agent both in its native state and in finished products, the report says.

The glass fibers, which appear to be good substitutes, are not believed to be carcinogenic and should be cheap and easy to make in large quantities, the report said. They were developed by Dr. John MacKenzie and his coworkers at the University of California, Los Angeles.

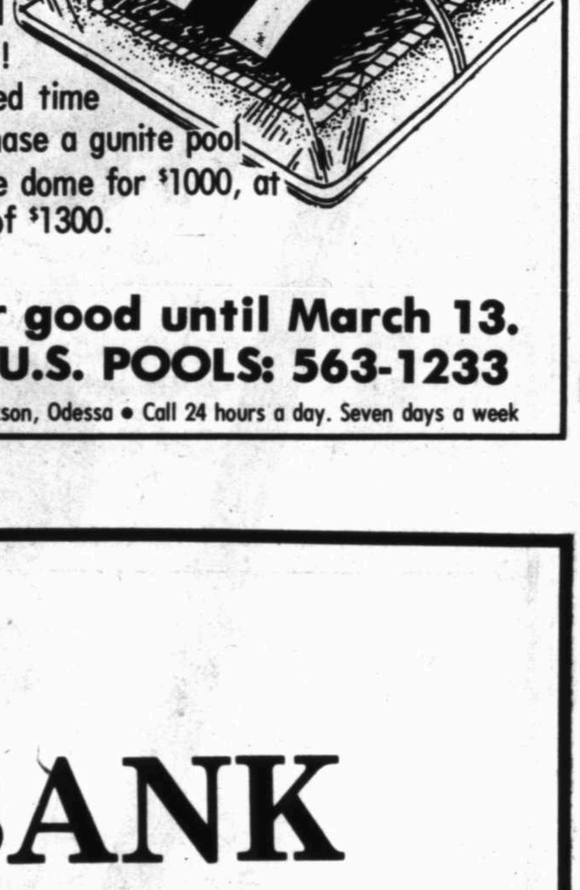

The Manville Service Corp. is now under contract with the Bureau of Mines to test the glass fibers in actual cement reinforcement and to show that they can be made under industrial conditions.

Midland's employment picture 'mixed'

More persons have jobs; More persons unemployed

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

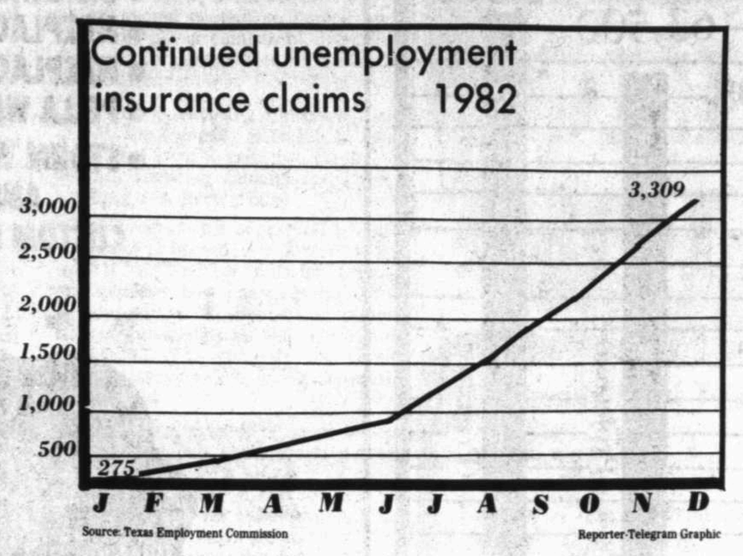

Employment statistics. What do they really mean?

For some Midlanders last year, they meant new job opportunities. For others, they meant a trip to the Texas Employment Commission on Tennessee Street to file for jobless benefits. For many, they meant the beginning of a long search for new employment.

According to the statistics, 1982 was a very mixed year, and by way of comparison, both better and worse than 1981.

The fewest people employed at one time in 1982, 58,550 in October, was still higher than the average for 1981, which was 57,300, indicating more people were working in Midland and thus, that the area's economic base had grown.

On the other hand, the lowest rate of unemployment experienced, 4.3 percent in December, failed to match 1981's low of 3.3 percent, also recorded in December.

OVER A PERIOD OF 12 months, the net number of people employed in Midland ended up remaining stable, increasing by just 100 from 59,350 in January to 59,450 in December.

The 1982 jobless high, 7.5 percent recorded in June, was still not as bad as the 9.5 percent recorded in November 1981, during the tail end of the boom, when the closing of the Levi Strauss plant and the large influx of newcomers here combined to create an all-time high unemployment rate for Midland.

The number of persons employed in 1982 ranged from the high, 61,700, reached in March, to a low of 58,550 in October.

The number of people without work in Midland in 1982 also varied from a high of 7.5 percent reached in June to a low of 4.3 percent by December.

Tracking these statistics on a monthly basis doesn't always paint a clear picture, due to seasonal variances and other factors. For example, Midland's unemployment rate jumped from 4.6 percent in May 1982 to 7.5 percent in June, and in the following month, fell back to 5.2 percent.

DURING THE YEAR, many area companies announced plant or office closings: AMF Tuboscope, Coquina Oil Corporation, and Geophysical Systems Corporation among them.

Several exploration and production companies headquartered out of town or out of state announced staff reductions, transfers out of Midland or the closing altogether of their Midland offices. Most oil operators and manufacturers have been forced to make severe cutbacks in personnel and operating budgets.

"The layoffs started in February and March," said Ed Miller, manager of the Midland office of the Texas Employment Commission. "When the number of individuals asking for unemployment insurance crossed the 1981 line in February and continued going up, I knew we were in for trouble."

In the early days of July, 150 to 200 oilfield workers came to his office seeking employment and/or benefits. At that same time, about 200 welders had been laid off between Midland and Odessa.

COPING WITH THE rise in unemployment was difficult: Miller faced personnel cutbacks himself due to budgetary restraints. There were eight staff openings which he was not allowed to fill, just when the Midland TEC office was beginning to be swamped with jobless Midlanders.

When the year began last January, there were 71 people who filed initial claims for unemployment benefits at the Midland TEC office. The number of people filing initial benefits rose in every succeeding month of the year, ending with 463 people filing in December.

The number of people who filed for continuing claims also rose steadily, from 275 in January to 707 in May to 1,546 in August. By October, the number of people receiving benefits passed 2,000; by year end it reached 3,309, an all-time high.

The number of transients arriving in Midland is a reflection of the area economy. That number dropped drastically in 1982 as the year progressed. Where previously they were attracted by Midland's high growth economy in late 1981, 12 months later transients were looking elsewhere.

"The word is out that jobs are not that plentiful in Midland now," Miller said, "but we still get occasional calls."

IN THE FIRST half of 1982, transients were quite a problem for Miller and his staff. Thirty or 40 people showed up at the office on Tennessee Street each morning looking for day work. Many of these people had nowhere to go and camped in the parking lot, Miller said. "They defecated in the parking lot, set fires, left garbage. They even accosted some of our employees. It was chaos. They would get into fights."

Finally, with the cooperation of Midland police, Miller cracked down and began strictly enforcing trespassing laws around the TEC property, especially on weekends. Transients are no longer allowed to mill around outside the building, carry weapons or drink liquor on the premises.

Employment agency owners report that many companies have instituted a hiring freeze for an indefinite period; those which are hiring new people are taking longer to make up their minds and are more selective than in the past.

An employment outlook survey conducted by Manpower Inc. in November showed that 23 percent of the local employers polled expected to hire additional workers in the first quarter of 1983. None said they expected staff reductions and 77 percent planned no staff changes.

Californians receive IOUs

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — California officials said Wednesday they are mailing thousands of IOUs to state income taxpayers, but they can be cashed immediately like checks because the state received a last-minute $428 million loan.

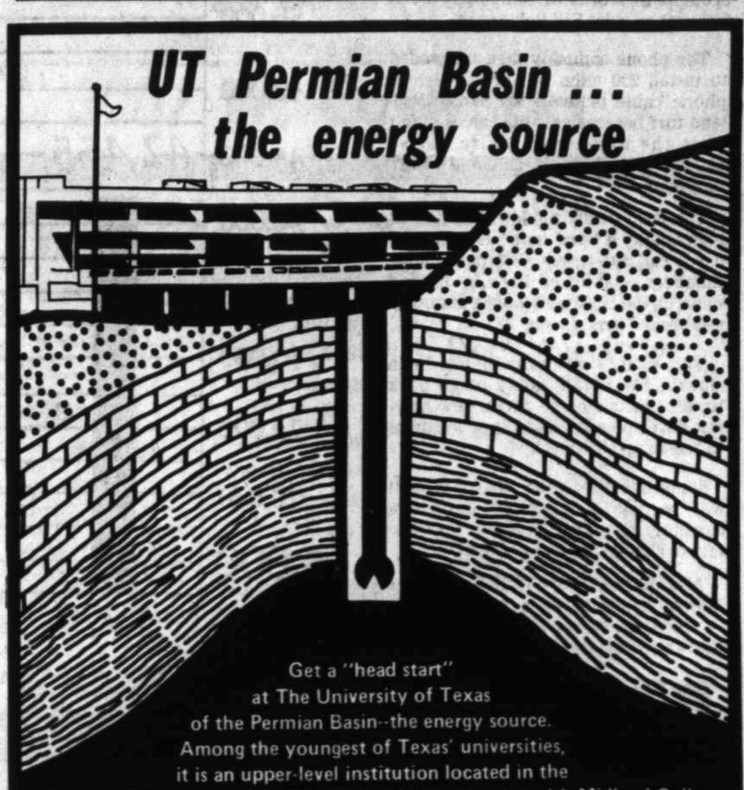

More than 103,000 registered warrants totaling "just under $20 million" were to be distributed by late afternoon, said John Jervis, a spokesman for the state controller's office. The checks averaged about $200, Jervis added.

State Controller Ken Cory and Treasurer Jesse Unruh had feared that the registered warrants — bureaucratic jargon for checks — would bounce if they were cashed immediately because there had been insufficent money in state coffers.

But a last-minute compromise was reached by legislators and Gov. George Deukmejian last week to head off a $1.5 billion budget deficit.

The budget agreement paved the way for a short-term loan to the state from a banking syndicate.

SW Bell copes with Tall City growth

By JIM PRESNELL
Energy-Business Writer

It could have been a lot worse for Midland phone customers, but for fast thinking on the part of the local phone company.

During 1981 and part of '82, Southwestern Bell found itself critically underbudgeted and, worse, understaffed.

To solve growing pains the company brought in scores of temporary help from other cities SW Bell serves.

The phone company then proceeded to install 250 miles of additional telephone cable beneath the sandy Midland turf because existing cables didn't have the number of "wire pairs" needed to hook up for Midland's business boom.

The local utility couldn't provide as high-quality a "dial tone" as Bell standards call for to all 7,000 new phone numbers established here in '81 and some of the 5,500 new phone numbers established here during '82.

This year, since growth has been slower, SW Bell is going to go back to some mobile home parks, new housing developments, and other locations to "clean up" the work.

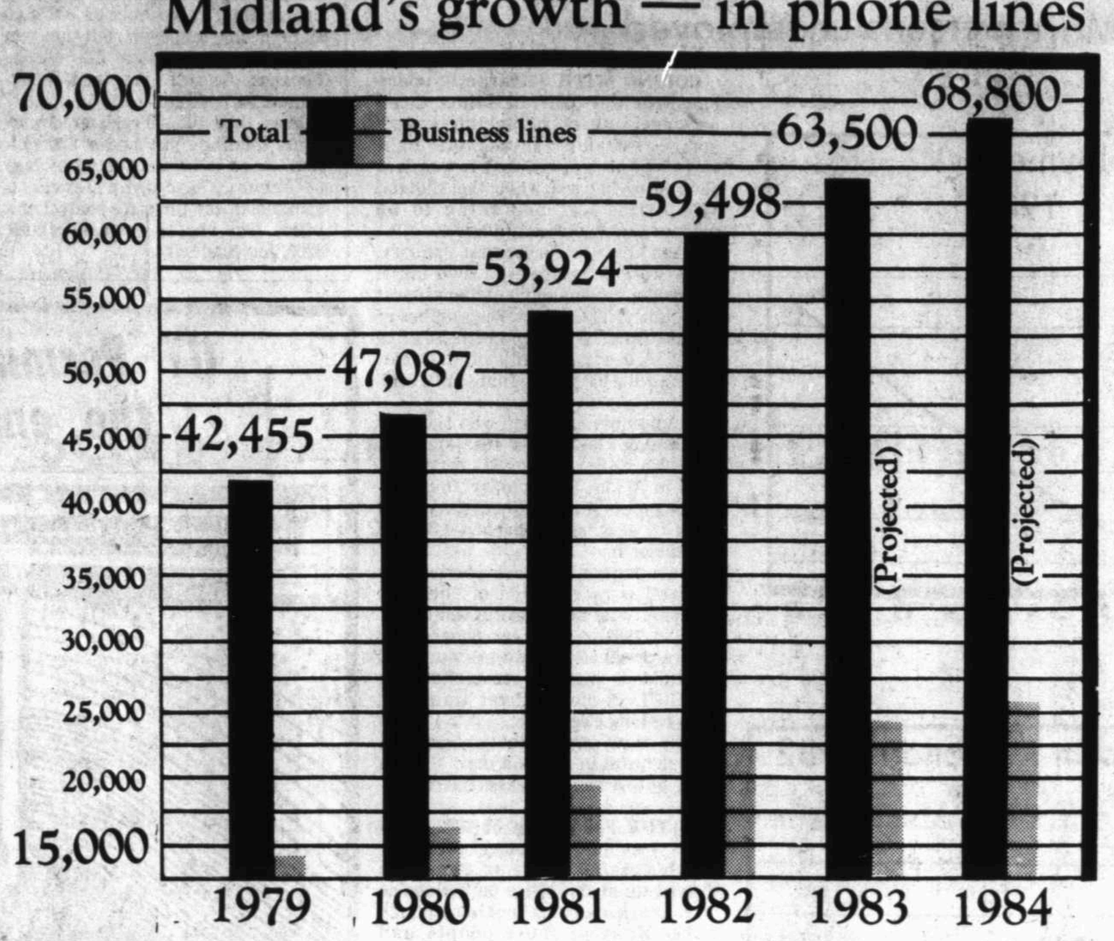

Sometime this year, also, SW Bell will "regrade" to offer most customers currently on party lines the opportunity to change to a private line.

Also during 1983, SW Bell will wire Midland's sprawling new office area — ClayDesta — in a $500,000 project that's their biggest ever.

The Bell affiliate has not laid off any employees — but its workload is, admittedly, less. Southwestern Bell employs approximately 700 people in Midland and Terminal.

"We paid a heavy price in reputation in 1981 and 1982," Bell spokesman Jay Allen said, recalling the utility's problems accommodating boom-town business and residence customers.

"Although we got caught short then," Allen said, "Southwestern Bell spent an unprecedented $31 million in two years ('81 and '82) here, in an area that isn't heavily populated, and really is not very large."

Most of the funds were spent installing the added underground cable. Much of this cable was new "Slick 96" cable, an enhanced capacity product. "Slick 96 greatly expands usual cable capacity. Where this is installed, we can reach a large number of customers at a minimal expense," Allen said.

Slick 96 especially helps the phone company connect large numbers of new homes and mobile homes in what were rural areas a short time ago.

The telephone company "...is prepared for anything," Allen said. SW Bell plans to spend a mere $9 million on Midland's phone system during 1983, a figure that is a bit more than half of 1982's $17 million in expenditures.

"Midland is totally ESS (Electronic Switching System), which is state-of-the-art," Allen said. "We are 100 percent ESS while Odessa still has 20 percent other switching.

"Midland now has all that present telephone technology can offer," Allen said, including custom calling services and a measured service option that will be popular "as local phone rates are expected to rise steeply."

Switching stations are at three phone company locations: 410 West Missouri, downtown; Midland Drive, central switching; and Air Terminal, the newest switching center, opened in February 1982.

Another new item Bell has introduced in this area is a state-of-the-art fiber optic long distance hookup from Midland, through Odessa, to Monahans. Long distance calls all over this part of the Permian Basin use the lightwave line.

"It's one of the few places in Texas we use lightwave communication," Allen said, "and this area was chosen because of the growth in long-distance calls here."

Each call rides on a threadlike strand of pure plastic fiber: the 60-mile system is the longest fiber optic phone line in Texas.

Technician program initiated by telephone company

Southwestern Bell is making up for a past tainted by ill-managed phone service programs.

Bell is improving its service time to residences, and beefing up business phone service with a new technician program that assigns final responsibility for 10-20 business customers with a specific Southwestern Bell technical person.

Residential telephone service from the phone company has xastly improved since Midland's growth calmed in '82. Spokesman Jay Allen said that 95 percent of all residence service calls are now answered within five days of the customer's contact with SW Bell.

Business phone service improvement is coming in the guise of a Bell program to calm "hostility among some (Bell) customers" and the "frustration among Southwestern Bell employees," according to a news release.

The concept calls for a "jack of all trades" Bell technician to be assigned responsibility for 10 to 20 business customers with multi-line telephone systems.

The technician assumes full answerability all installation and maintenance needs.

"Previously, we had difficulty finding who to talk to about our telephone problems," said Decker Dawson of Dawson Geophysical, Midland. "Sometimes we would have to explain the problem to five or six different people."

Now that a single technician has taken responsibility for Dawson's account, "there have been no problems," he said. Totally, 17 SW Bell technicians are responsible for 205 business accounts, says Michael Schack, supervisor.

14 percent more homes now served by TESCO

By JIM PRESNELL
Energy-Business Writer

In servicing increasing numbers of electricity customers in Midland, Texas Electric Service Company (TESCO) is supplying the very juice that runs Midland and perpetuates its growth.

At the final tally for 1982, TESCO calculated an increase of 13.62 percent in residential electric customers, for a total 35,819 homes served.

Commercial and industrial accounts increased again in 1982, and Texas Electric began service to three new high-rise office buildings during the year, "powering up" a total 380,000 square feet of new office space.

Midland and Texas Electric shared growing pains in 1982. Now, the electric company said, growth is slowing. Projections made by TESCO here, according to the community relations staff, call for a stabilization of the local economy and a return to growth and commerce more consistent with 1970s activity.

To meet the "ups and downs" of the economy the electric company will continue making long-range plans for construction of plants and maintenance of power generation.

Currently, 50 percent of the energy used by Midland electric customers comes from lignite coal-fired plants in East Texas. The other half of the power comes from natural gas-fired power plants here in West Texas, with the closest plant located in Monahans. These gas plants may be converted to burn fuel oil when necesssary.

But in 1984, the first part of lower-cost nuclear power may be supplied to Midland by TESCO's $3.44 billion (estimated) construction project — Comanche Peak Units 1 and 2 near Glen Rose. Nuclear electricity is made from "...a much lower cost fuel (compared to gas and oil), a fuel that is also stable in price," the company said.

The Comanche Peak reactors are a jointly-owned project of TESCO and five other power companies, including Dallas Power, Brazos Electric, and Tex-La Electric.

As well as shooting for lower cost power, the company is trying to help customers learn to conserve energy — thereby reducing demand and lowering their own electric bills.

One program for conservation used in mid-1982 provided a 60 cent-to-$1 subsidy per bulb for business customers installing new energy-saving fluorescent lights. The specified lamps have reduced wattage with no loss of light levels. The customer also could reduce electric bills by using the subsidized lamps.

Also, a conservation program began last year to pay commercial power users $150 for each kilowatt of peak summer load avoided through use of high efficiency air conditioning. The payment helps make up the cost difference in installing the new unit, and the less strain on TESCO during peak summer months, the better off the power company is.

Consumers had the chance to get involved in electric power conservation during 1982, with workshops Texas Electric offered: Operation Tighten-Up. The neighborhood sessions give residents the chance to find out how to save power — saving money in the process.

Residential Load Management is a Texas Electric program that pays cash incentives to customers who buy high energy-efficient appliances. The money helps offset the cost of replacing air conditioners, heaters, refrigerators, and other units that may be outdated and could waste power.

Natural gas service records biggest year yet in 1982

Midland's natural gas service had its biggest year ever in 1982, adding a record 2,700 new business and home customers in the city, according to Energas Company's district manager.

In the heat of this activity, Energas hired five contractors to help build gas lines. It now has let go all but one contractor — Permian Utility Contractors. The addition of contractors averted possible expansion in staff, so Energas has been able to keep a constant number of employees.

The utility installed a half-million dollars worth of gas lines in Midland during 1981. In 1982 it devoted twice that figure — $1 million — to extending gas lines here.

This year, the company will add only a third as much new pipe as it did in 1982, district manager Norman Henry said. January gas hookups are down "about a third," from the same month a year ago, Henry said, and "The rest of 1983 looks like it will be way off."

Many areas got pipelines readied for construction last year — with building permits down, the gas company will have less pipe to lay.

Energas Company is a division of Pioneer Corporation. Both firms are headquartered in Amarillo.

The number of customers Energas added during 1980 was a mere 450. 1981 saw 1,500 new gas customers, and an attendant slowing of the speed of the connections. After 1982's record 2,700 new lines, Henry says gas company operations have "pretty well caught up" with the city's growth.

No large commercial or industrial users of natural gas are located in Midland, the Texas Railroad Commission reports. But roughly 22,000 of the city's homes use a yearly 2.075 billion cubic feet of the fuel.

Business customers consume a more modest .872 billion cubic feet, spread out between almost two thousand Energas business customers here.

An important plus for Energas is large amounts of gas are available if needed for industrial — or residential — use. Eugene Luntey, past chairman of the American Gas Association, said recently that "with the supply problem solved, the natural gas industry is focusing on improving the market environment for selling gas energy."

Residential customers pay Energas an average $4.50 per thousand cubic feet of gas. An average monthly residential bill, for gas, is 10 mcf — $45. That's the figure for average year-round natural gas use in a private home.

82 'very good year' for theater group

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

For Midland Community Theatre 1982 was the best of times.

"Nineteen eighty-two was our best year ever," said Jim Salners, president of MCT's board of governors. "We sold for theaters I and II, and not including Summer Mummers, 38,000 tickets."

Since MCT's move into its current Theatre Midland location at 2000 W. Wadley Avè. in 1978, Salners said, "It's been getting better ever year. And our membership (1981) was the highest total ever."

This year in addition to its regular season and its Summer Mummers presentation, MCT will be staging Larry King's "Best Little Whorehouse in Texas" in May.

Jim Salners

"Larry King will not be in the show but will be down here for a gala opening," Salners said. The gala will be held May 12.

Of the opportunity to stage "Whorehouse," Salners said, "MCT has been asked to be the first amateur theater to produce 'Best Little Whorehouse in Texas' and we have the exclusive amateur rights across the country through September of '83."

The monies raised from the production, which will be staged at the current home of the Summer Mummers, The Yucca Theatre, will go "to do 95 percent of what needs to be done at the Yucca."

Those who have attended the annual Summer Mummers know that the sound system as it existed last summer needed an overhaul job.

This year, MCT has already spent "over $40,000 on our sound system," Salners said. "We are putting in acoustal treatment inside the Yucca. For the first time people will be able to hear the Mummers."

Another change in store for Mummers' fans include a new twist to the melodrama.

"To mark the 35th anniversary (of the Mummers) the show being written is a musical in the Mummers style." Pausing, Salners added laughing, "If you're expecting an opera, don't come."

MCT's annual membership season is a calendar year, beginning in January and continuing through December. Last year the community theater presented nine membership productions, including "Funny Girl," "Whose Life is it Anyway?," "Tintypes," "Sly Fox" and "Jesus Christ Superstar."

This year the membership season's format has been changed.

"We've gone from nine membership productions to eight membership productions and then added what this year will be three special performances to which anybody who is a member receives a 50 percent discount," said Ted Strickland, assistant director at MCT.

"What we're hoping it allows us to do and provide to the community is, first of all, to keep our membership prices the same (as last season) and more importantly it will allow us to provide an audience to see a broader spectrum of theater."

This year's membership drive is currently under way with "Guys and Dolls," based on tales by Damon Runyon, currently onstage through March 5 in Theatre I. Next up will be Lanford Wilson's Pultizer Prize-winning "Talley's Folly" in Theatre II from March 4-19 in Stage II.

Other productions slated for the main stage, Theatre I, include Bernard Slade's "Tribute" April 8-23, Neil Simon's "The Good Doctor" June 10-25, Lillian Hellman's "The Little Foxes" Sept. 9-24, "Jacques Brel is Alive and Well and Living in Paris" Oct. 21 through Nov. 5, and Joseph Kesserling's "Arsenic and Old Lace" Dec. 2-17.

MCT also offers a complete Children's Theatre, which includes classes for children ages 3 through 18, plus the Pickwick Players, the theater's youth performing group. Classes in acting are also offered for adults.

Cinema '83, a classic film series, is another MCT offering, as is the theater's dance program.

It is not necessary to be a member of MCT to be involved in the organization's various programs or to try out for a role in a production being staged at Theatre Midland or the Yucca Theatre.

It also is not necessary to have a membership card to attend its productions. Single admission tickets are available. It is cheaper.

Of the price of membership, Salners said, "It's still the most inexpensive form of entertainment in town."

Antique show raises fund for MCT

The 1982 Act IX Antique Show raised $49,000 for the Midland Community Theatre, according to Debby Hedrick, publicity chairperson for the show.

Robert Sakowitz was honorary chairman of the three-day event, which included displays of antique furniture, jewelry, accessories and paintings from Texas and around the nation. The show's preview party was sponsored by Sakowitz, Inc.

Act IX's 1983 Antiques Show is scheduled for April 29, 30 and May 1. The preview party will be April 28.

General admission tickets to the show will be $3 in advance and $4 at the door. Group tour including admission, lunch, lecture and tour of the show will cost $6. Food and beverages will be available at a tea room set up during the show.

A lecture series is planned in conjunction with the show. Lectures will be on Chinese export porcelain, April 11; Oriental rugs, April 18; and American fine arts, decorative arts and architecture, April 29.

Information on the lecture series and show is available at P.O. Box 7962, Midland 79703.

Act IX is the fund-raising organization for Midland Community Theatre.

Symphony, chorale taking on new direction

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

This year has represented a season of changes for the Midland—Odessa Symphony & Chorale.

"We've undergone by the end of December (1982) 100 percent turnover in the administrative staff," said the organization's new general manager, George Esparza. The turnover began in June with the resignation of Sam Woodward, then general manager. Woodward left the organization to head a newly formed arts organization.

A change in personnel this December which was felt at the symphony offices as a "major blow to the administrative staff, because she was 50 percent of our fulltime staff" was the untimely death of Nita Armstrong.

"Nita Armstrong started with the symphony last February as a consultant to help set up normal office systems for the organization and improve our financial records keeping system. It was not until September, a month after I joined, that she became a full time employee of the symphony.

"With her passing we are currently undergoing another administrative reorganization. We have hired several part-time employees who are essentially on flexi-time. And we have added a full-time production manager Linda Scott."

Another goal of reorganization is, as Esparza said, "So we can position ourselves to be more responsive to new programming opportunities."

Esparza cited the February choir festival as an example of expending energies in diversified programming.

The second annual Midland Adult Choir Festival was a joint project of the Midland Association of Churches and the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chroale. Held at First Baptist Church, the festival featured an all-community festival chorus, directed by the chorale's conductor, Dr. Stanley Engebretson. The work performed was the Easter portion of Handel's "Messiah."

"It is an effort on our part to have a direct influence on other musical groups in the area that have no direct relationship with our chorale," Esparza said.

Among its existing programming opportunities is the performance of youth concerts.

"We did a large one at Chaparral Center in early October and every seat in that place was full. They had various grade levels from the schools here in Midland and we had students from private schools as well as other schools in the county.

"Before the performance, members of the orchestra circulated among the kids and talked about their instruments. It gives the kids a chance to put a face on musicians sitting in the orchestra," Esparza said.

The current season structure is nine subscription concerts. To date, six have been presented. Next up is the March 7 and 8 concert with the winners of this season's National Young Artists Competition, followed by "Bach's Greatest Work" featuring the Mass in B-minor March 19 and 20. The season closes with "The Verdi Requiem" May 9 and 10.

"Last year (1981) we had a Christmas Cabaret Pops; this year we have one coming up this spring," Esparza said. The cabaret pops concerts are not currently a part of the regular subscription series.

"We are seriously considering going to a two-series structure — one (series) which would be the traditional symphonies and choral literature and one which would be strictly in a lighter vein on a series of its own."

The change could be an important one for the organization.

"We could serve the two constituencies better, instead of trying to be everything to everybody in one series."

Renwood halfway in to first season

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Midland's newest non-profit organization, Renwood Inc., has reached the halfway mark in its first season.

The game plan was to present four evenings of professional entertainment to its subscribers, all wrapped up in an elegant evening out atmosphere. To date, Margaret Whiting and Shari Lewis have been here, with Bobby Short (March 22) and Roberta Peters (April 26) still to come. All Renwood concerts are presented at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

Short is performer in residence eight months of the year at the Cafe Carlyle in New York City, while also making regular engagements at the Fairmont Hotels in Dallas and San Francisco.

Albums to his credit include recordings of the works of Cole Porter, Noel Coward, George Gershwin and Rodgers and Hart. He has also performed with the Boston Pops, the Buffalo Philharmonic, the Dallas Symphony, in addition to making his concert debut in Paris in 1977 at the L'Espace Cardin.

"The New York Daily News stated that 'The test of an entertainer is how well he pleases his audience, and to that test, Bobby Short has to score in the top percentile,'" Sam Woodward, Renwood's executive director, said in quoting from Short's reviews.

Miss Peters' name is familiar to area audiences.

This Metropolitan Opera star held audiences captive in 1981 during her two performances with the Midland-Odessa Symphony. Her performance this spring will feature her outstanding voice presented in a slightly different type of concert than held here last time. It will be a vocal recital featuring arias as well as audience favorites.

Zuma Renaud

Sam Woodward

"Roberta Peters' interpretations of arias drawn from the operatic repertoire is spellbinding in its effect upon audiences," Woodward said. "To be able to hear her in the intimacy of Theatre Midland is in itself a most unusual treat."

Of the season to date, Zuma Renaud, Renwood's president, said, "The people that were there have so far loved our offerings, but there were people who would have liked to have been there and should have been there, but because of the price were unable to attend."

Subscription cost for the four concerts was $200, with individual tickets sold at $65. One of the major determinations of ticket price is the cost of the individual performer. As Mrs. Renaud said, "World class entertainers demand world class fees."

Renwood is addressing the problem of cost, not by lowering the quality of its productions, but by cutting its overhead.

"If we lower our prices without lowering the quality of our performers, we will have more people attending. The way we do this is by cutting back on our overhead. The executive director has decided to donate his time rather than draw a salary this coming season."

As for the future, Mrs. Renaud said, "Once the auditorium in Midland is constructed with its 2,000 to 3,000 seat capacity, we can lower our prices again." She said this will be true for all local arts related organizations. It will, she said, "make the arts available for everyone."

Renwood is involved in other arts' related businesses in addition to presenting its Select Series.

Of these other endeavors Mrs. Renaud said, "We are an enhancing, rather than a competing organization. We help other non-profits by making available resources drawn from a network of national contacts within the arts, by serving as consultants in specified areas of need, and by serving as producer for major entertainment events used as fund raisers by organizations not usually involved in entertainment events.

"One example is our bringing the national touring production of 'Deathtrap,' starring Leslie Nielson, to Big Spring for the Big Spring Symphony Guild."

It is the objective of Renwood to provide area residents with stellar professional performances which in no way conflict with local community endeavors.

"The community organizations (here) are among the finest in the country, but there are many people here who have moved to Midland from other metropolitan areas who miss professional entertainment provided in a night-out-on-the-town atmosphere, therefore we decided to offer this select series," Mrs. Renaud said.

Pausing she added, "We have to start somewhere in providing this type of entertainment for the public. And the Select Series is our beginning."

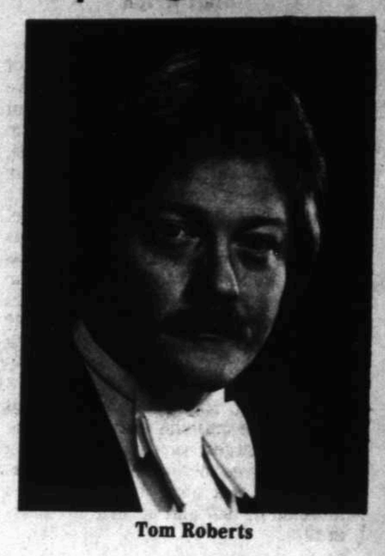

New umbrella organization shelters local arts programs

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

After a long and arducus two year labor, the birth of the Midland Arts Assembly became a reality this past October.

Traditionally an arts council functions as an umbrella organization for a community's arts programs providing such services as granting support money, providing information on how to secure funds, coordinating special programs, publicizing local events, and encouraging individual, group and community endeavors.

The need for an arts council here has long been recognized and even attempted on several occasions since the late 1960s. The groundwork for an operable and effective council had been laid prior to the October election of officers through the diligent work of a provisional board of trustees, led by the Rev. P.D. Peterson, headmaster of Trinity School.

Tom Roberts

Officers for the Midland Arts Assembly are Tom Roberts, president; Ann Goff, vice president; Dorothy Perkins, secretary; and Maridell Fryar, treasurer. Pederson is the immediate past president with Charles Stewart currently serving as executive director.

Members of the board of directors include both organizational representatives and members at large.

Serving as board members are Donna Gore, Anne Sherburn, Fran Birdwell, Peterson, Jean Posey, Pederson, Zuma Renaud, Don Bachmann, Homer Fort, Darryl Knapp, Jerry Prothro, Victoria Gilkerson, Joan Baskin, Barbara Jowell, Jim Servatius, Dick Dunbar, John Ingram and Midge Anderson.

The term of office for all board members has been established on a rotating basis.

The articles of incorporation written in 1981 mandated that the Midland Arts Assembly address the needs of both the individual artists and organizations.

After much discussion and review the attention of the Midland Arts Assembly has been focused upon providing three services.

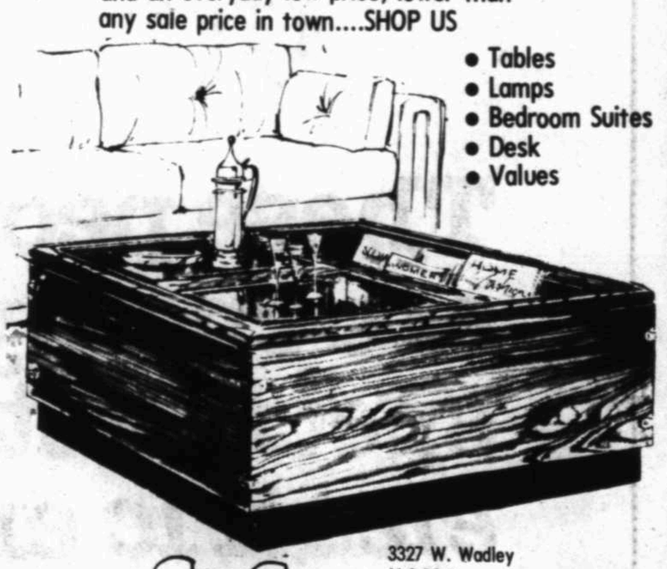

These services include compiling a master list of all persons sensitive to the needs of the arts, working with the Midland Chamber of Commerce in providing information about the arts activities to the community as well as visitors, and finally, coordinating a city wide celebration of the arts to be held the fourth week of April in 1984.

Record 55,000 visitors view Midland's Petroleum Museum

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

Perspective.

Considering the historical nature of their work, museum directors like Homer Fort, executive vice president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, Library and Hall of Fame, likely learn early on that maintaining perspective is essential in analyzing a museum's progress, growth and future.

In judging the museum's high points of 1982, Fort noted that the year was almost predestined to be less spectacular than 1981, when the museum increased its exhibit space by about 40 percent with the addition of a north wing at a price tag in excess of $1.3 million.

More than 55,000 visitors traipsed through the museum's exhibits during 1982, the largest yearly attendance in the history of the museum, which was organized as a non-profit, tax-exempt museum in 1967 and opened to visitors in 1975.

COMPARING 1982 with 1981, Fort hastened to put matters in perspective. "We can't do that kind of an encore every year," he said.

But far from dismissing the year as a failure, Fort said the museum realized many notable accomplishments during 1982 — including another attendance record.

Fort noted that during the first 10 months of 1982, Texas museums recorded a 5 percent drop in average attendance. "We were really going against the trend of museums statewide," he said.

He said the museum hosted 62,893 visitors in 1982, a 13.8 percent increase compared with the previous year.

Homer Fort, executive vice president of the Permian Basin Petroleum, Library and Hall of Fame, stands outside the popular tourist attraction.

Attendance ran 25-30 percent ahead of 1981 during the spring and summer months, but trailed off late in the year, Fort said.

Hazarding a guess at the reason behind the attendance dip, Fort said: "We think that the bulk of the decrease of visitation is the result of a decrease in pleasure driving on Interstate 20."

THE 1982 visitors included a British Broadcasting Company documentary camera crew, a Japanese swim team and many student groups, both from local schools and from some distant communities.

Fort explained that museum volunteers have developed an educational program, including a puppet show, designed to visit schools and give young children a taste of the museum experience prior to their visit.

"The whole purpose of this is really to be sure they get just as much out of it as possible," said Fort. "Each year we seem to do it better."

Fort praised the museum's volunteer organization, the Santa Rita Club, which includes 171 "active" members and about 120 "patrons."

The volunteers conduct tours, help erect museum exhibits, maintain exhibit pieces at "museum quality" and provide other valuable services.

"ONE REASON our staff is so small is our volunteers are so big," said Fort, who noted that a staff of eight full-time workers and one part-time employee is a "tight ship" for the labor-intensive museum business.

"We are blessed with a marvelous volunteer group," he said. "How we lucked into them, I'll never know."

Fort said the museum featured a variety of notable exhibits during 1982, including the annual, increasingly popular "Focus on Oil" photography contest and a special display entitled "Mummies and Mud Baths."

For 1983, Fort said the museum staff is considering — "if we can get the information" — pulling together an exhibit comparing the United States' oil industry with that of the Soviet Union.

"There is information available," Fort said, "the Russians are not totally secretive."

A special display commemorating the 60th anniversary of the Santa Rita well discovery, along with an exhibit of work by Jack Nolan, a renowned oil field photographer, are also in the planning stages.

IN CONJUNCTION with Texas A&M Press, the museum published its first book in 1982. Fort said "Oil in West Texas: A Pictorial History of the Permian Basin," authored by the recently-deceased Dr. Walter Rundell Jr., was a significant accomplishment for the museum.

The museum's Hall of Fame will receive five new inductees during a commemorative dinner May 5.

The oilmen selected for the honor include Robert O. Anderson, from Roswell, N.M., the retired chairman and chief executive officer of Atlantic Richfield Co.; Prentice F. Brown, from Midland, a geologist and executive of Honolulu Oil Corporation; Erle P. Halliburton, founder and president of Halliburton Oil Well Cementing Co. (now the Halliburton Co.), of Duncan, Okla., and Los Angeles; and partners E.G. Rodman and William D. Noel, oil men and industrialists from Odessa.

Of those picked for enshrinement in the Hall of Fame, Brown, Halliburton and Rodman are deceased.

Fort said the museum staff continues to seek additional oil field equipment to add to its already large collection.

Museum of Southwest has diverse displays

By GEORGIA TEMPLE

From Jim Hall's racing cars to special Christmas miniatures and dollhouses, two consistent factors surrounded the Museum of the Southwest's 1982 exhibits — quality and diversity.

Primary among the museum's goals for 1982 was to bring more visitors through the doors. It was a goal realized.

"The Jim Hall show as well as the Day of the Dead exhibit brought new audiences to the museum," said Anne Sherburn, the museum's development and public relations officer.

Then in 1983, the Hillin Collection of the Cowboy Artists of America drew "141 people in three hours one Sunday."

In 1982 the museum announced plans for a major expansion. Two months later the museum's director, Joan Hellen, was no longer a part of the museum staff. Since October, the museum has been functioning with Mike Collins serving as acting director while the board finds another permanent director. In the interim period, the phased expansion plans have not been set aside. Instead they are in the process of being re-evaluated as to their "feasibility."

"We have to make sure what we are doing is best for the museum and the community; that's why we are going slow with incremental steps," Miss Sherburn said. "We may get a director who comes in and has different ideas."

To date, the proposed closing of Indiana Avenue where it splits the museum's property behind the Turner Mansion and in front of the Lancaster House has been accomplished. In addition, the stables area has been redesigned into gallery space.

The opening of the stables gallery Feb. 27 with the exhibit "From Modest Beginnings" is, as Miss Sherburn said, "tangible proof of our expansion."

Existing property is one of the museum's greatest grants. Included in the museum's property are the Turner House and Thomas Gallery, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., the L.B. and Naomi Lancaster House, 1705 W. Indiana Ave., and the Marion Blakemore Planetarium in nearby Haley Park.

It has long been an established goal of the museum to act as an educational facility for the community.

The planetarium serves as an astronomy classroom for students in the Midland Independent School District and Midland College, as well as for students from nearby school systems, such as Stanton, Greenwood, Coahoma and Forsan. It also services private schools.

The museum has a strong docent (tour guides) program, with volunteers being provided by Las Manos, the volunteer organization for persons interested in working with the museum, and the Junior League of Midland Inc., one of the museum's chief financial backers at the time of its founding in the mid-1960s. Guided tours are provided for school groups visiting the museum and for clubs and civic organizations viewing the exhibitions.

"One of the other highlights of this past year is that we've been able to work more closely with the schools, both public and private, and community groups to develop special programming. We're now taking programs at the museum out to both Casa de Amigos and Trinity Towers," Miss Sherburn said, adding, "This will be expanded this year to include public schools."

The museum's major fund raiser is held every three years. The gala event is a dinner and auction featuring some unusual items. This year's auction items included a miniature horse, front row seats at the space shuttle landing and tickets to Roberta Peters' spring performance with dinner afterward at the Lionel Daury Restaurant. Auction '83 held in February raised over $300,000 gross. The net amount goes toward the museum's operating fund.

President's Message

I am proud to announce the 4th quarter of 1982 reflects the continuing success of Petroplex Savings Association. As a new S&L, we have produced a record six-month growth in deposits and revenues despite a serious recession, over-burdened credit markets and justifiable fears of continued failures within the banking community.

The primary contributor to our success is an aggressive survivor's approach of adjusting to and accepting the harsh reality of volatile interest rates and generally unstable economic conditions. This survival approach has afforded us the opportunity to seek and acquire a solid portfolio of loans and investments which either reduce or eliminate the risks of fluctuating interest rates. Our asset management philosophy has positioned us in 1983 to attract investment capital, lendable funds and quality real estate lending opportunities which will enable us to pass along ever-increasing benefits to our investors, customers and stockholders.

All of us at The Petroplex Savings Banking Centers appreciate your support and loyalty and stand ready to assist you with all of your financial needs at any time.

City 'growing up'

No one disputes that the recession finally creeped into Midland during 1982. After years of tremendous growth, the Permian Basin's economy began to feel the effects of the national slump.

But, despite the slowdown in '82, Midland continues to build in and around the downtown area, adding credence to the Tall City moniker.

Completed during 1982 were The Summit, Two Midland National Center, Empire Plaza, the Paragon, Energy Square, the Hightower Building, 511 Building and Liberty Square.

Nearing completion are Dinero Plaza and Heritage Center.

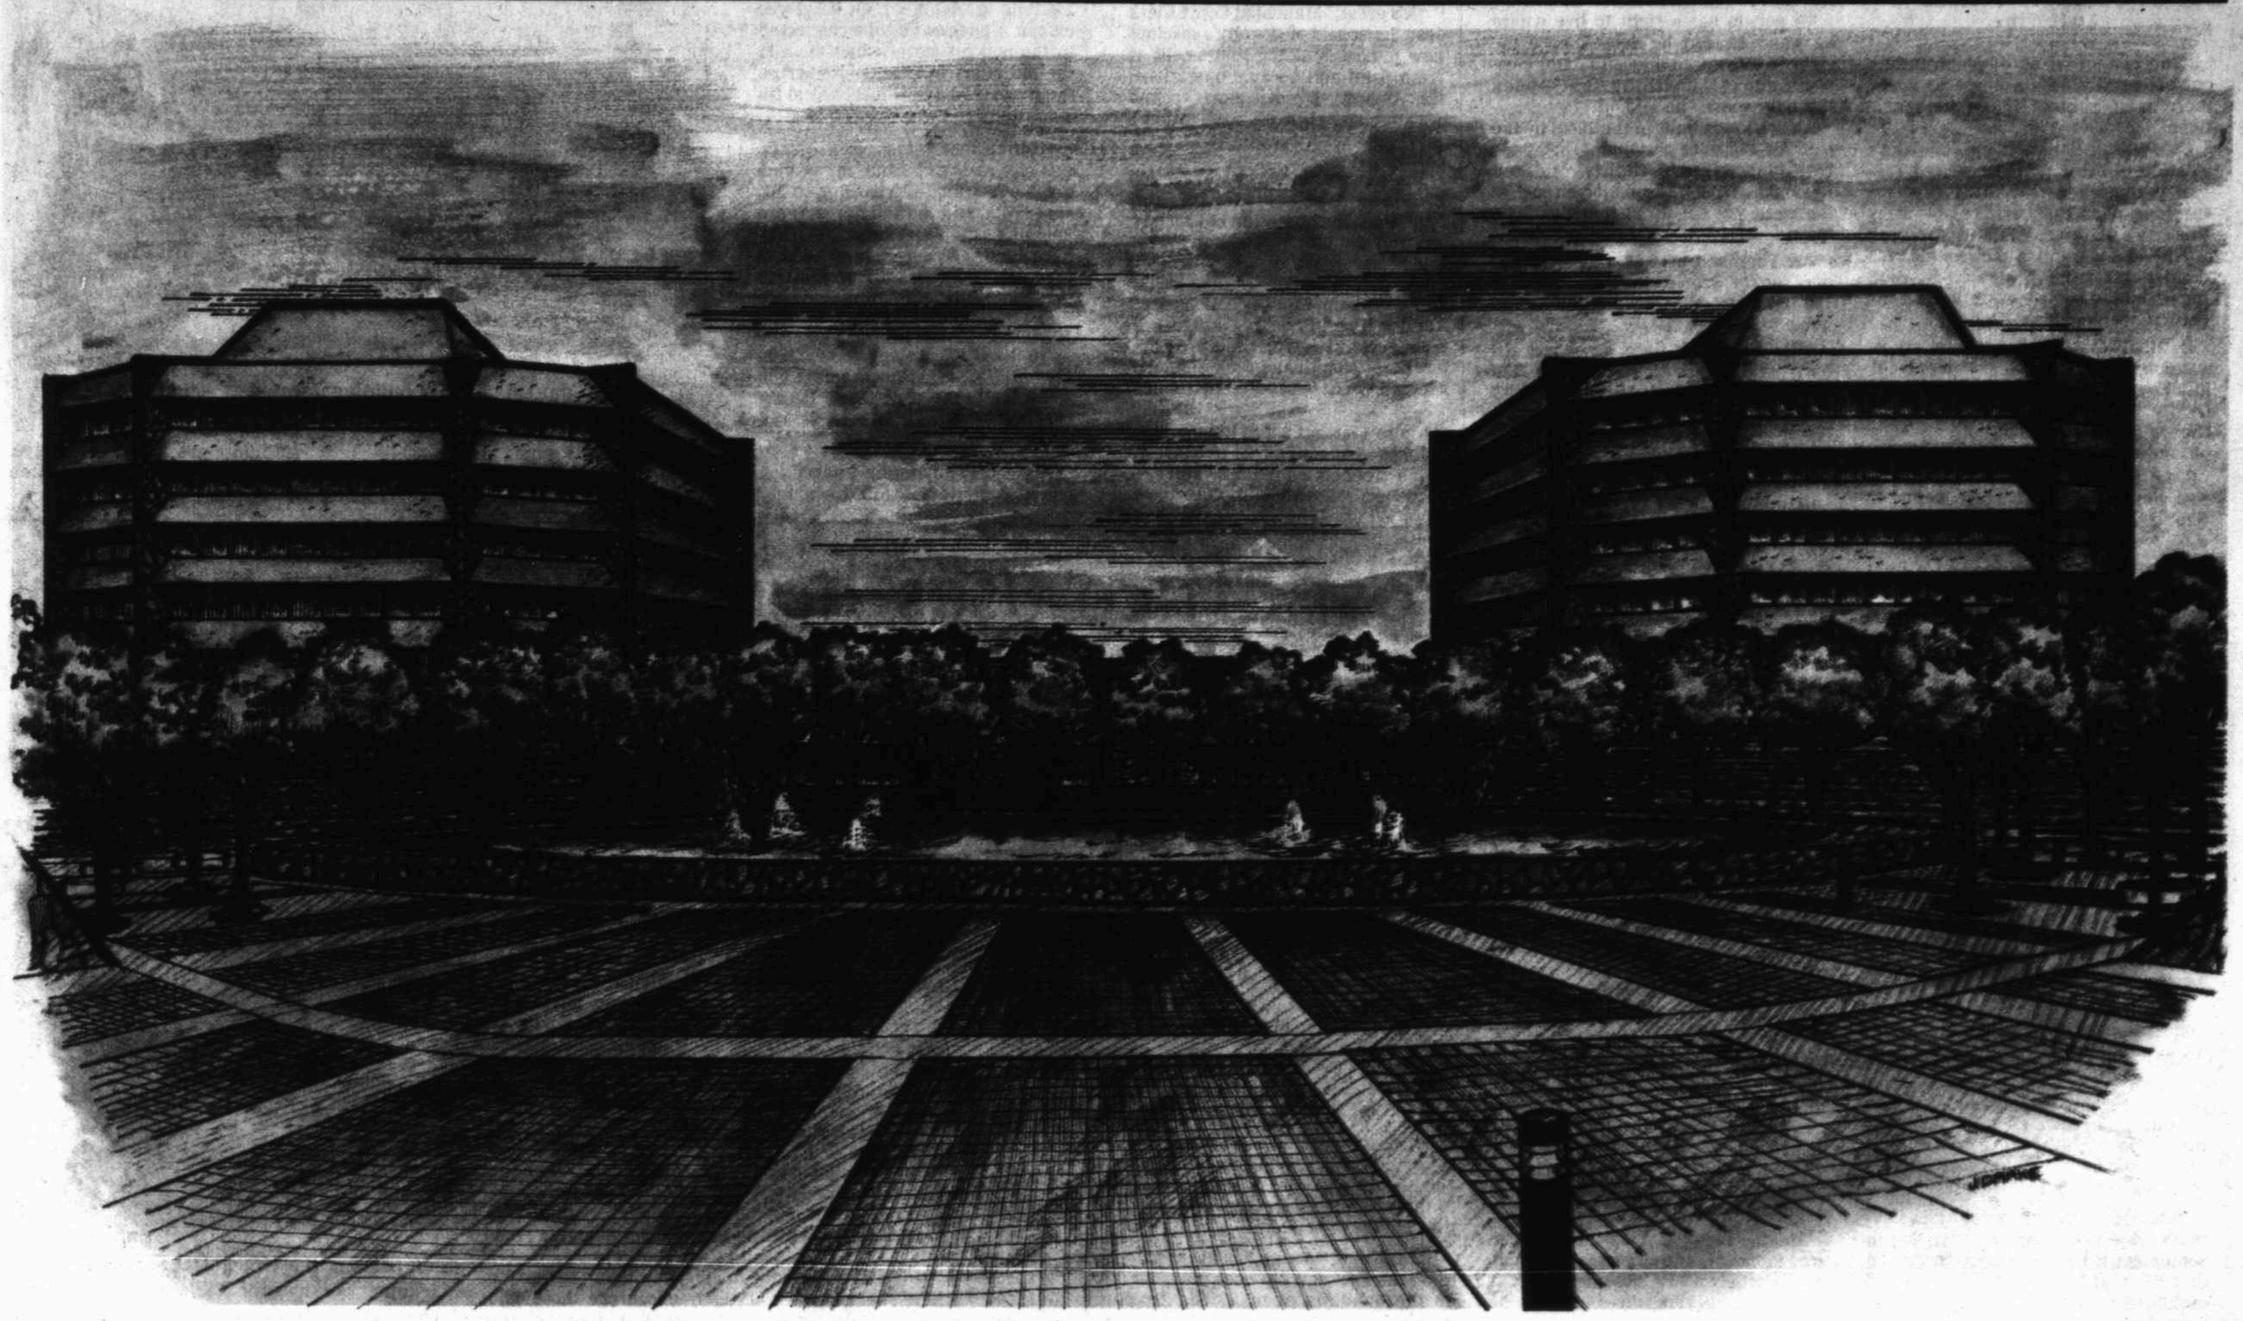

What about 1983?

Construction is well under way on one complex, Atrium Center, while another, 401 East Illinois, is being expanded to four stories.

Meanwhile, groundbreaking is scheduled this year for I. David Porras' 37-story First Energy Square, The First National Bank's 40-story tower in Eagle Plaza and Internorth, an 11-story building downtown.

And two other projects involving the city of Midland are also under way — a two-story addition to City Hall and a 10-floor parking garage downtown.

City real estate developers challenged in 1982

Permorama '83
reflections and directions of the permian basin

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

In many ways, 1982 was a challenging year for real estate developers in Midland — and 1983 promises to be about the same.

The economic noose tightened in '82. Banks became more selective with their financing and oil companies became more cautious about signing leases for new office space.

In spite of these factors, the buildings of ClayDesta Plaza have continued to rise steadily in north Midland, creating a new horizon at the corner of Wadley Avenue and North Big Spring Street.

Together with the eight black and white buildings of developer I. David Porras and the 10 low-rise offices of Pierce Pace & Associates south of ClayDesta, this area has created new options for office space leasing.

New housing developments in northeast Midland, the proximity of Midland Airpark, access to Loop 250 and acres of free parking have all contributed to the growth of the area.

THE 170-ACRE ClayDesta site, in which there are currently seven buildings completed or under way, has attracted much further development along North Big Spring and north of Wadley Avenue:

—California developer Jay Peck announced in August 1982 the $9 million Mission Square, a large office condominium and retail shopping complex now nearing completion across Big Spring and north of ClayDesta.

—Paul Thorpe's athletic complex, The Midlander, opened recently on Corporate Drive, just south of Mission Square.

—Corporate Plaza and Spring Park, both office complexes, are scheduled to be built in 1983 south of The Midlander and across Big Spring Street from ClayDesta.

—Ground will be broken in March for The Masters Club, a private dinner-dance club, being developed by McClure-Williams Investments. The club is scheduled to open in November 1983, just east of the Midlander.

—Midland architects and developers Pierce Pace & Associates completed in 1981-82 a 10-building complex of smaller office buildings to compliment the entire area south of ClayDesta.

—Porras will build three additional six-story office buildings immediately north of ClayDesta, to be known as North Petroleum Center. Each will be black with green glass.

THESE OFFICES WILL have a total of 450,000 square feet. The first of the three is under construction now with August 1983 as the targeted completion date. Dirt work on the second building should start this month, he said.

ClayDesta Plaza also has attracted attention from around Texas and the nation.

"Other developers come into town just to see what we're doing," said Bob Smith, executive vice president of ClayDesta Corporation. "They say the concept is quite unique. They really can't believe something like this is going on in Midland, Texas, and in these economic times."

TOTAL CONSTRUCTION costs have topped the $110 million mark so far, Smith said.

Already completed are the ClayDesta National Bank drive-in, which opened in late October 1982; ClayDesta Towers, the twin six-story office buildings which were the first to be completed; Southland Royalty's two-story office which opened in May, and the Williams Accounting Building, occupied by the accounting departments of the various Williams Companies.

ClayDesta Plaza was conceived by Midland oilman and rancher Clayton W. Williams Jr.

Plans in 1983 are to finish buildings still under construction:

—Gulf Oil Corporation's $25 million, six-story office, scheduled for occupancy in September, will house Gulf Exploration and Production's Western Division on a 13-acre site.

—Sun Exploration and Production's six-story office, to be completed in May, will be 70-percent occupied by Sun. The $6.8 million building is a project of Midland oilmen Griffin and Burnett.

—The six-story ClayDesta National Bank building will be finished in July, with Cities Service the major tenant.

—Harrigan's Restaurant is also scheduled to be completed in May.

SMITH WOULD NOT say whether there will be any new ground broken in '83, but he wouldn't rule it out either. It all depends on how the economy, and particularly the oil industry, fares, he said.

"We're going to take a good hard look at what the economy is going to do," he said. Financial arrangements are becoming more difficult to obtain because lenders are unsure which way the price of oil and Midland's economy are heading.

Smith said there will be no further building in ClayDesta on speculation; only pre-leased structures will be considered. Negotiations are still going on with major oil company tenants for the six-story bank building and ClayDesta Towers, he added.

"I can't say the timing has been bad, what with the acceptance we've gotten, but we certainly would have preferred the economy to be better (in 1982)," he said. "It would've made things a lot easier."

Clayton W. Williams Jr. purchased the land in 1980. His ranch hands cleared away the old Fiesta Drive-In at the site in May of that year. After more than a year of planning, initial groundbreaking occurred in March 1981 for ClayDesta Towers, which was completed in July 1982. The building is about 85 percent occupied.

IN JUNE 1982, ClayDesta Corp. announced a Granada Royale Hometel would be built on the site. Construction of the 207-room luxury hotel was to begin in July, with first occupancy in September 1983. Groundbreaking for the project has not yet taken place.

Smith said the project is temporarily on the back burner. Without going into details, he said, "It's on hold at the present time. It's more accurate to say that plans are being revised."

Constant flooding at ClayDesta's east entrance off North Big Spring Street in 1982 was a problem foreseen by the developers, Smith said. They intentionally built the entrance at a low point to conform to plans by the city and state highway departments to widen and lower Big Spring in 1983, he said.

"We have coordinated with the city and state all along in their drainage plans, which have been on the drawing board for over a year."

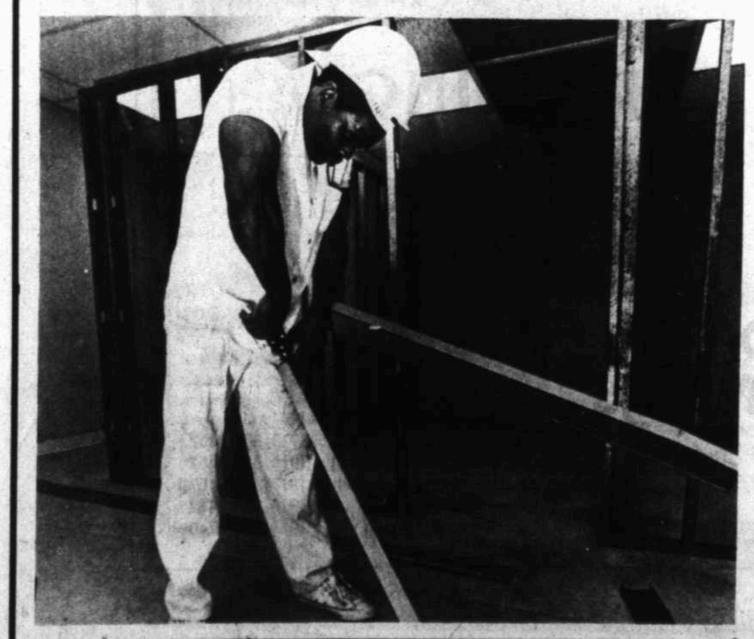

Across Wadley Avenue from ClayDesta lies Office Park North, a project of Pierce Pace & Associates. The architectual and development firm started the ball rolling for office development in north Midland in late 1979 by purchasing the land and starting its first building on the site, before ClayDesta or Porras' projects were begun.

Phase I and II were completed between 1980 and 1982 for a total of 10 one- and two-story buildings. The original concept was for each building to be occupied by a single tenant, according to Joe Bill Pierce. Crown Central Petroleum and J. L. Davis companies are two such tenants; the other buildings are shared by a variety of tenants.

Land is still available for a large, preferably single-tenant building on the site, which is bounded by Wadley on the north and A Street on the west.

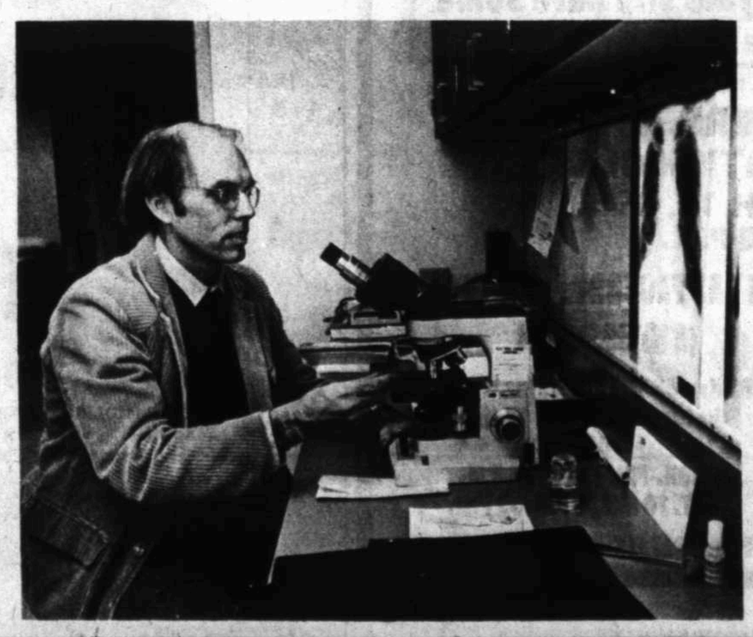

Pierce said in 1983 no further building on speculation will occur at the site.

Aviation director deals with 'remote' chances

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

"The chance of an airplane falling out of the sky onto a house or apartment is so remote that it is sensational."

Col. Wilson Banks, city of Midland's aviation director until he retired Feb. 1, had remarked several times about the long odds that an airplane using the city's in-town Midland Air Park would go down into a burgeoning residential area around the airport, injuring or killing someone. Until 1982, the occurrences had been almost nil.

But in 1982 — his last of 13 years as aviation director — Banks found out just how sensational one incident can be. He had to grapple with that one chance out of a million, not only once but three times.

The first occurred May 2, the second and most "sensational" crash landed on Sept. 24, and the third dropped on Nov. 9.

The first incident involved a light airplane taking off from Air Park after being filled with what was thought to be jet fuel, instead of gasoline. After being airborne about 10 seconds, both engines died. The pilot landed the craft on East Cedar Avenue, injuring no one, including himself.

STOPPING AT MIDLAND Air Park for refueling before continuing to its destination in Louisiana, a Beechcraft Baron took off shortly before 2 p.m. that September day and crashed into the Warwick Apartments west of the airport for the second and most serious crash. All four on the plane were injured, as was one of the apartment residents. One of the plane's passengers later died.

It was this one chance out of a million that became "sensational."

November's crash was much less sensational. A light airplane ran out of fuel on its way to Midland Air Park, landing in an open field just north of the airport. As in most of the light plane crashes, no one was injured seriously.

Outcome of the last crash, however, could have been similar to the one in September if the city hadn't purchased that piece of land as a clear zone and prohibited any structures from being built there.

"I was surprised I didn't have more phone calls or letters after that incident" in September, said Banks. "I thought there would be a horde of people at the next City Council meeting, asking that Air Park be shut down." But no one showed up to voice a complaint.

"The airport itself had nothing to do with that accident," he said. "There was no deficiency on the part of the airport to cause the accident. It was pilot error, from what I've been told."

BANKS DEFENDED the right of Air Park to remain in its location.

"A person has a right to live where he wants to. But he doesn't have the right to move into a location and complain about something that's been there for years," he said.

Air Park was built in the 1940s by the U.S. Air Force as a stopping point for transient military flights. Midland Regional Airport, the major airport to the west, was set up at that time as a training base.

Air Park still acts as a reliever airport for the primary facility with over 100 light aircraft tied down there as home base.

"We definitely need a second airport," said Banks. "It reduces the load at Midland Regional Airport and also the accident potential for a mid-air collision."

Relocating Air Park isn't an impossibility, but Banks pointed to the high cost and problems in locating more land. Formerly a chief of site selection while an officer in the Air Force, Banks said, "It's not a simple matter of going out and finding a piece of land. You don't want to find a place that will later be encroached."

Several years ago, a rough estimate on moving Air Park put the price at $7 million, and Banks noted there has been a lot of inflation since then.

"It would probably be $10-12 million to relocate Air Park and build a good facility.

"There's something about an airport that attracts people. You may have to go into the next county to protect the area around it."

WHEN IT WAS built in the 1940s, Air Park sat in an isolated area. But with Midland's growth during the 1970s, housing and offices sprouted closer and closer until the city and the Federal Aviation Administration put their feet down.

"The developer doesn't have to live there," Banks pointed out. "I told one he was a damned fool for building apartments so close to Air Park."

Moving Air Park, however, may destroy its usefulness, he noted. "It's handy where it is."

Another factor that should be considered in moving the airport is that while it may satisfy a few close neighbors, it is all the taxpayers who must foot the bill.

"I think the City Council will make the best decision for the entire community, and I mean all people. They all pay taxes, even the people on the south side. People who live near Air Park shouldn't have the final say. It belongs to all the people of Midland," said Banks.

By the same token, he added, railroad tracks that run through south Midland also is the scene of accidents. "Several people have been killed crossing the tracks. But I haven't heard a hue and cry to move the railroad tracks."

City's new judicial building 'great'

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

"It's great," Municipal Court Clerk Jean Jones said of the city's spacious new judicial building that smells of fresh paint and became operational last August. "We can move around without stepping on each other's toes."

The new building, located at 406 E. Illinois Ave., provides three to four times the space the old facility did and doubles just about everything else:

Two full-time judges, (Michael A. Abrams II and Presiding Judge Jim Fitz-Gerald); two full-time prosecutors (Robin Smith and Jack Connors) and two, count 'em, two courtrooms.

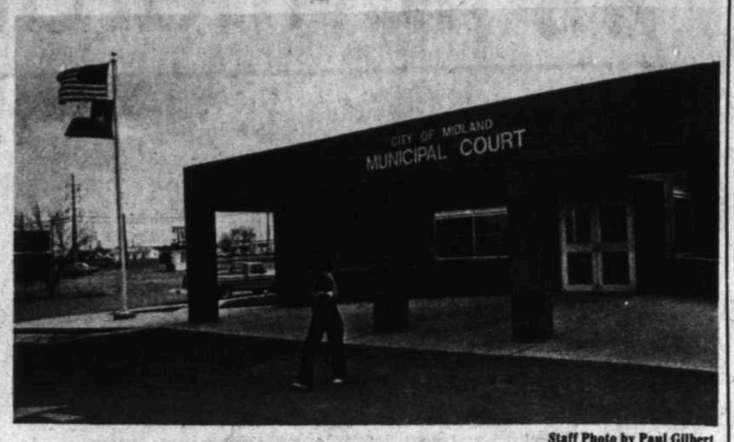

It also features a full-time bailiff, an expanded staff of 23 employees, much needed additional storage space, an "almost complete" law library, about 70 parking spaces, a jury room, separate security cells for male and female defendants awaiting arraignment, an employee lounge, a pneumatic tube connected to the police station (which housed the old court building) just across the street, and a new mechanical filing system.

Unlike many federal projects, this city endeavor came in "at budget" — $885,000 — according to Ms. Jones, who said she and her staff are "playing catch-up" now that they have the space and help needed to process the thousands of matters that come before them in a a year's time.

In 1982, for instance, they handled 41,722 traffic cases, 11,136 "other" misdemenaor cases, 188,827 parking tickets, 79 jury trials and 272 non-jury trials.

The court's operating budget for 1981-82 came to $443,515. Its budget for fiscal 1983 stands at $744,130 — due in large part to the hiring of additional employees.

Its hours are 8 to 5 weekdays, except Thursday, when it's open until 7:30 p.m.

Post office uses hands-on approach

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The U.S. mail is entering the Age of Computers and the electronic sorting of mail.

But for now in Midland, the hands have it. Mail is still sorted by hand, though machines assist in speeding up the mails.

"For the next many years to come, we don't see any way of handling the mail flow except by hand," noted Stan Sartain, customer service director for the Midland Post Office, which last year processed 64 million pieces of mail for a West Texas area from Big Spring to Pecos and from San Angelo to Kermit.

The U.S. Postal Service's electronic-mail system is in the planning stage, and the system, ECOM (Electronic Computer Originating Mail), is years away for Midland.

More than 17 million pieces of mail were delivered in Midland in 1982.

"Production is rising," said Sartain, "but not as fast as it was due to no new mechanization now for several years. There's plans for more mechanization."

By 1985, the Midland Post Office may be employing equipment to "spray on" bar codes, similar to pricing and identifying codes on most packaged grocery items, to increase efficiency and accuracy and to speed up the delivery of mail.

Before that, though, many postal patrons may be using the five-digit Zip Code plus four (Zip+4) to speed up the handling of mail. The Zip-plus is designed mainly for "the large volume business mailer," Sartain said.

The idea is to improve postal service, reduce errors and to give the business mailer a financial advantage.

"It means reduced costs for us, less breakdowns and less errors. It's going to help stabilize their (businessmen's) costs. It will help us."

Eventually, the electronics and computers may have major roles in the U.S. mails. But, noted Sartain, as long as there are rural communities such as Midkiff and Tarzan, sorting by hand and person-to-person delivery of mail will be practical.

Midland's 332-strong postal force includes 104 city carriers. And while they're working and awaiting innovative technolgy, such as electronic transfer of "mailed" information, they also are still taking complaints.

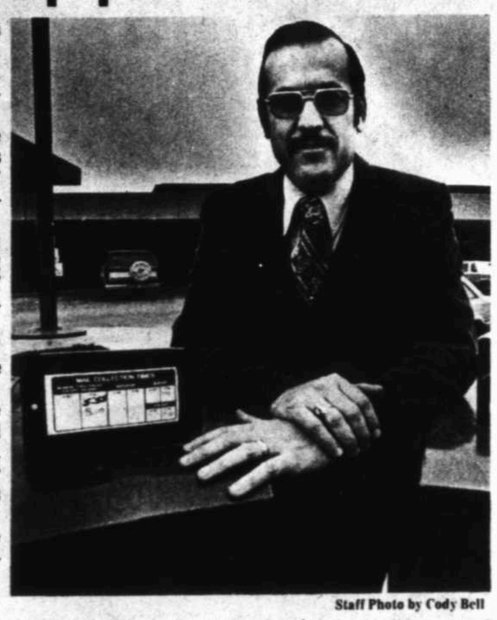

"Most of our complaints are on mis-delivery of mail," said Sartain, who noted that oftentimes letters are incorrectly addressed.

"We get quite a few comments on our courtesy," he said. The older, more experienced postman, who well knows the route and customers, gets the recognition. "We get a lot of compliments, particularly on the older employees who go out of their way to do extra things for them (the customers)."

"But the person who is satisfied or is happy (with the postal service) rarely takes the time" to pass on a compliment or to write.

Sartain philosophically accepts the negative comments.

"People are more apt to complain than they are to praise," he said. "We certainly encourage those who are happy or satisfied to let us know and (expect) the same if they're not."

Nancy McKinley, chairman of the Midland County Historical Commission, examines some of the paperwork for the upcoming Midland County Centennial. Plans are already being made for the celebration in 1985.

History buffs ready for centennial

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

History buffs are preparing to celebrate Midland County's Centennial in 1985.

"This (centennial) is in the very first formative stages," said Midland County historian Nancy McKinley.

Much of the Centennial planning will be the burden and joy of the Midland County Historical Commission and the Midland County Historical Society.

"Members of both organizations will be working together (on the celebration)," said Ms. McKinley, who is chairman of the Commission and is president of the Society. Joining the two groups in staging the celebration, which will be keyed to June 15, 1885, when Midland County was organized, will be the Midland Chamber of Commerce, patriotic organizations, civic clubs, businesses, church groups and academic circles. "In fact, anyone who wants to work can have a job" on any of the various committees serving the cause of the centennial, she said.

"We're going to have the ball rolling."

Committees will be designing the centennial logo and will be making contacts with pioneers, delving into historical records, readying publicity and will be planning centennial entertainment, programs, projects and special events.

"We have talked to people," Ms. McKinley said. "Plans are being started. We welcome anyone who wants to work with it or has any suggestions at all. It's going to take everybody. This is supposed to be county-wide. We hope that everybody will participate."

Ms. McKinley said Midland County was "carved out" of a territory called Tom Green County on Feb. 28, 1885, by the Texas Legislature and Midland County's first election was on June 15, 1885. At that time, the county's officials, including the judge, comissioners, county clerk and sheriff, were elected. County Judge was E.B. Lancaster.

The railroad came through the county in 1881, when the Texas & Pacific Railway Co. was laying rails across the breadth of the Lone Star State.

Foundation of much of the centennial observance is with the collection of the Midland County Historical Museum, which is in the basement of the Midland County Public Library.

"We have one of the finest collections of early-pioneer pictures — as fine as you can find in any museum," Ms. McKinley said. Members of the historical society and commission put together the collection of artifacts, records, photographs and memorabilia which range from "bits" (as in coins) and tools to housewares and costumes.

"This museum is 50 years old...and was created by the county librarian in 1932. We have added to the collection; that's been one of our main projects."

Another project has been getting significant sites and buildings recognized by the Texas State Historical Commission. Throughout the county, there are approximately 25 TSHC markers. Markers are on the T.S. Hogan Petroleum Building and the adjoining Yucca Building, which were built in the late 1920s; at the site of a Spraberry Oil Field well from the late 1940s and early 1950s; and on the Brown-Dorsey House, which was constructed about 1900. The Brown-Dorsey House is listed in the National Registry of Historic Structures.

Those interested in working on Midland County's Centennial may telephone Ms. McKinley at 682-2931 or Dode Devore at the Midland Chamber of Commerce at 683-3381

Ms. McKinley said she senses that Midlanders will have "quite a bit of interest" in the celebration. "I think it is going to be great.

"I'd like to see it be kind of a pioneer celebration like they used to have," she said. Centennial fanfare in the spirit of an old-fashioned Fourth of July Celebration would be an idea for a 1985 celebration.

Ms. McKinley, who emphasizes the significance of history and its bearing on civilization, fondly recalled a comment by her grandmother, Eliza Rankin.

"You can't stop progress," her grandmother once said.

"Yes," agreed Ms. McKinley, "but preservation is progress, too."

Fighting fires just part of job

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

The main purpose of any fire department is, of course, to fight and prevent fires.

But something which often gets overlooked is that how well a given fire department does its job determines what home and business owners pay for fire insurance.

To that end, the Midland Fire Department has over the years striven to maintain the finest equipment, manpower and training programs available, according to Deputy Fire Chief James L. Roberts.

For example, said Roberts, two new $131,000 fire trucks are on order, two new fire substations are in the works, 18 new employees are scheduled for hire, a new $247,000 bucket snorkel has been ordered and some $30,000 has been spent recently on the latest protective helmets and clothing available for firemen.

The department conducts free fire hazard checks for homeowners on request, and routinely inspects local business and industrial sites on a periodic basis.

A new ambulance is also on order, and work has begun on a new $500,000 fire training center going up near the sewage treatment plant on the southeast side.

Most of the funds for these projects came from a successful bond issue last year, according to Roberts, and account in part for Midland being able to maintain a fire insurance premium rate of 18 cents per $100 valuation of the policy.

"Also, because of the city's good fire record, there's a 10 percent premium discount," said Roberts. "The discount is based on the ratio of what's taken in in premiums to what's paid out in losses."

The fire department's budget for fiscal 1983 stands at $4.8 million and includes the operation of the ambulance service. All told, the department employs 140 persons, including administrative and clerical help.

The ambulance service is rated as "advanced life-support" and can provide specialized heart-care treatment, including drugs, Roberts said. "The EKG equipment is capable of transmitting (print-out) information to the hospital. The doctor, by turn, can then instruct the paramedics on the scene.

"This is the highest state-of-the-art equipment and know-how in the emergency medical field. It's the ultimate you can give. And we have an extremely good working relationship with emergency room personnel, including doctors."

The new ambulance on order will bring to seven the number of ambulances scattered about town in various fire stations. All Emergency Medical Service personnel are first certified as firemen, according to Roberts. They then take a total of 160 hours in classroom and in-service training to become certified as emergency medical technicians.

Checking out the equipment for the fire department's newest pumper are, from left, Dave Cowan, Duane Knapp and Ken Carter. The $102,000 American LaFrance pumper was purchased in August 1982 to replace a fire truck that was damaged in an accident on Highway 80.

From the EMT ranks are drawn — on a voluntary basis — the paramedics who man the ambulances. To become a paramedic requires 400 to 600 hours of additional classroom training. They then must be certified by the state.

Roberts said when the fire department began providing ambulance service in the mid-1970s, a five-to-six-minute response time was considered an "adequate goal. But we set ours at three minutes. Today, our response time — on runs inside the city limits — is 3.2 minutes.

"That's an average response time taken in a year's period and involving several thousand calls. I'll put that record against anyone's in the state. If you can beat it, show me."

One of MidTran's 23 vehicles gets the "once over" from Don King, maintenance superintendent.

MidTran director wrestles with myths of mass transit

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

As director of MidTran since late 1981, and for about 14 years working in two California municipal transportation systems before that, Jim Johnson has continually wrestled with the subtle psychology of mass transit.

"For a lot of years, the only people who rode buses were the people who couldn't afford cars," Johnson said.

But with Americans becoming increasingly attached to the freedom and status of owning a car, the transit system manager's job becomes tougher.

"What we have to do is come as close to that mobility as possible with a transit vehicle," Johnson said. "We have to approach people that normally don't ride buses. We have to convince people that even if you use it only once in a while, it's going to be to your advantage."

Toward that goal, Johnson said MidTran is considering several possible changes, including additional downtown service.

"One of our concerns is — and has been for a while — the amount of traffic in the downtown area," said Johnson, adding that he'd like to see MidTran expand to provide greater downtown service during peak periods.

JOHNSON SAID limited parking space downtown continually frustrates workers who, after driving their car on errands or to lunch, return to find the "you move, you lose" theory of parking in operation.

"The kicker of the whole thing is we're trying to set up some kind of a shuttle that instead of moving your vehicle, you can get on the bus and it will take you to the restaurant."

He said MidTran will likely continue investigating the possiblity of a downtown shuttle service during 1983.

To further alleviate downtown parking problems, Johnson said, MidTran may examine the possibility of having workers park at remote locations and take shuttle buses to and from downtown.

Johnson suggested the Memorial Stadium parking lot as just one location that might help remove some parking congestion from downtown.

He said MidTran also will continue looking for opportunities to add "productive" routes in other parts of the city.

SERVICES FOR young people and senior citizens may be expanded as well, according to Johnson. MidTran will likely continue summer bus routes to Water Wonderland, he said.

For the elderly, Johnson suggested that a weekend "loop tour" bus, stopping at shopping malls, the library, museums, restaurants and other establishments, might be an idea worth pursuing.

"I think they deserve more than to be isolated in one spot with no mobility. If you take something out of the community, you have to put something back."

Johnson noted that MidTran service will expand markedly with the arrival of seven new buses as early as the end of this month.

Originally, the new rigs were to be delivered in September 1982. But the bus company, Microbus, of California, went bankrupt before delivering the goods.

1983 time for catch-up on city streets

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Employers and economists complained about the slow year in 1982 and expect the same this year. But for City Hall, it's time to play catch-up on streets that were damaged or outgrown during the boom of 1981.

The city of Midland has started a $5 million-plus street rebuilding program, and the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation is seeing the light at the end of the road on its Loop 250 project. In the case of the latter, only a few new projects are scheduled to begin this year.

Waiting for a "red" light on new office buildings so they could "go," the city has stacked up money for two years in its coffers. In 1981-82, the council set aside $800,000 for major street rebuilding projects. They did the same for the current budget. And the taxpayers passed a $3 million bond issue last spring to improve streets.

That doesn't take into account $146,000 from the Community Development Block Grant fund which will be designated for paving streets in south and east Midland.

DURING THE LATTER months of 1982, it appeared the downtown streets finally were free of being torn up. But Fred Baker, public works director, noted that the city was waiting for the holiday season to pass. Previously, the city had tagged various downtown streets for reconstruction, especially the rugged intersection at Illinois and Marienfeld. But every time the city was ready to proceed, another utility company came chugging through, digging up the street to put in additional lines for planned but unbuilt offices.

Five major projects are in the works:

—Michigan Avenue from Pecos to Big Spring Street, $46,384.

—Illinois Avenue from A to Marienfeld streets, $128,789.

—Texas Avenue from A to Marienfeld, $134,106.

—A Street from Illinois Avenue to Tennessee Avenue, $82,967.

—A Street from Crest to Scharbauer Drive, $392,024.

Assessment paving programs are eating up $2 million, but the city is paying only about $300,000 of its share. The rest is being paid by property owners along the streets that are being paved. Baker said that by law, the city must pay from 10 to 25 percent of the total cost.

Another project calls for upgrading and widening A Street near Bowie Elementary School to allow for a continuous left turn lane.

THREE ADDITIONAL major projects to be funded through the $3 million bond issue are:

—Illinois Avenue from Midkiff Road to Midland Drive.

—Midland Drive from Illinois Avenue to Andrews Highway.

—Rebuilding a portion of Garfield Street and overlaying another portion.

Another smaller project will involve laying two inches of asphalt at the intersection of Wadley and Midkiff.

With the federal government's 5-cent-a-gallon gas tax, the funds run a better chance of being available, he noted.

The city "will be in much better shape once this work is done," Baker said in summary of the total street package.

And if money is left over, he sees it going into Louisiana, Michigan, Neely and Lamesa Road.

As the city spread out during the boom time with new subdivisions, it also meant City Hall inherited several miles of new streets for future maintenance, according to Baker. And annexation of land east of the city means maintenance of former county roads, "which are in poor shape."

ADDING TO THE city's plans for tearing up major thoroughfares throughout the city is the State Highway Department. Its main project this year within the city limits is widening Big Spring Street from Wadley Avenue to Loop 250. When completed, it should speed up the clogged traffic that turns into a bottleneck there around 5 p.m. on weekdays.

"We will put in two lanes in each direction with a continuous turn lane and a parking lane on each side with curb and gutter. If in the future we need more lanes, we will remove parking, giving it three lanes in each direction," said Charles Muery with the State Highway Department.

In addition, drainage work will be done around the entrance to ClayDesta Plaza, enabling that office complex to remove its "No Fishing" sign, added Muery.

Plans call for Loop 250 frontage roads to be constructed from Big Spring Street eastward to connect into Highway 80, said Muery. Because all drainage easements haven't been obtained, he expects a delay on the work getting started.

This will complete the first stage of development on Loop 250 and it should stay in that mode for several years due to lack of highway funding to build the inside lanes and overhead interchanges, he said. Building the west half to complete the final phase, which runs from Highway 80 on the west to Big Spring Street, has been estimated to cost $30 million, he said. Cost of the frontage roads ran far below that, he added.

HIGHWAY 191, the new linkup from Midland to Odessa, should be completed by fall 1983. According to Muery, the west half from FM 1788 to Midland should be open for vehicles in the summer, while the second half that extends to Odessa should be driveable in early fall.

And the second major entrance into Midland Regional Airport, known as Spur 217, should be finished this year. Work was to start late this month, said Muery. This road will connect the airport to FM 1788 and channel traffic into Highway 191.

On the fringes of Midland, the State Highway Department will be doing a pavement overlay job on Interstate 20, starting 2.1 miles east of FM 1788 and running four miles west. This job should be contracted in April, said Muery.

A similar job on I-20 will start east of Rankin Highway and run to the Martin County line. This pavement overlay work should begin about May.

Additionally, the state is reconstructing Garden City Highway from I-20 to four miles southeast of that point. Plans also call for widening the road and improving the drainage where it intersects with I-20. That point, where Drilco is located, is known for its standing water, said Muery.

However, he doubted the drainage improvements would be put in this year because Midland County doesn't have the money to buy the necessary drainage easements.

City Hall will gain higher perch in 1983

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

When 1983 comes to a close, City Hall will be watching downtown activities from a higher perch. By then, barring vast amounts of bad weather, the two-story addition should be completed.

The extra space is coming 17 years after it was planned. According to City Mananger James Brown, City Hall was designed with two additional floors and larger in width and breadth. "It was reduced in size because they (the city) didn't have the money.

"When we moved in in July 1966, every office was full. We weren't crowded and we would have been comfortable if we hadn't grown at all," he said.

But the city did grow. And the staff's work expanded proportionately.

The first bond issue on expanding City Hall was presented to voters in August 1979. At that time, estimated cost of the addition was $750,000. But the proposal failed.

MIDLAND EXPERIENCED a growth boom from that time until the second bond issue in April 1982. Again, City Hall expansion was on the list. Like the city, the cost had grown — this time to $1 million.

But it got the voters' approval and in November the City Council selected the $1.075 million bid from HBF Construction to do the job. Designed by Bill Babb with the architect firm of Neuhardt & Babb, the two top floors when completed should look much like the bottom floors.

Meanwhile, departments will be playing shuffleboard on the lower floors as they move to larger areas redesigned for them. And the City Council is considering modifications to the Council Chambers.

The Inspections Department takes up much of the basement now, and it will be booted upstairs. Moving in will be the Emergency Operating Center, a facility which the city currently lacks. One area will house eight to nine radios, said the city manager. And a larger room will handle emergency operations.

BECAUSE THAT room will be sitting idle until a disaster hits, Brown has plans to install long tables and use it as a classroom for driver training, new employee orientation and various other courses given city workers.

The first floor will see the Personnel Office move out and Customer Service take over with meter readers. And the computer room will grow to enlarge space needed for data processing, he said.

Little change will be seen in the design of the second floor. It should stay as is, but with the City Secretary moving out and Code Enforcement moving in.

Brown plans to stay on the third floor, but to expand the City Manager's suite of offices as the Legal Department stretches to take over the building's east side. Instead of two offices with a reception area, Brown plans to take two of the rooms now used by assistant city attorneys, giving his department four offices.

WHAT WAS A drafting room will be turned into the Purchasing Office. And John Lowe, director of public utilities, will stay put in his spot across the hall from the city manager.

On the fourth floor will be the Personnel Office and City Secretary's home spot. Across the hall, Inspections will be coming up out of the basement.

And the Public Works Department will take over the entire fifth floor, according to Brown.

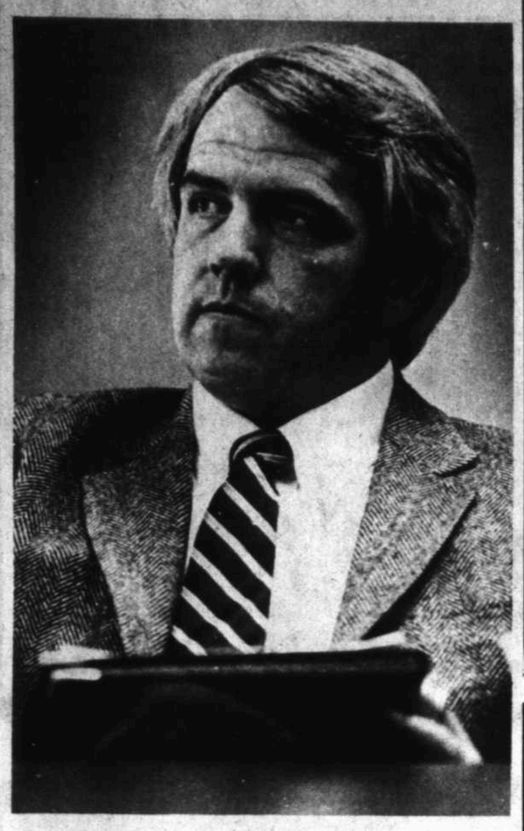

As far as interior decor, the top floors will look like the bottom, said architect Babb. Carpeting will be installed in several of the offices. But high traffic spots, such as reception areas, will be covered with vinyl.

"It's utilitarian," Babb said of the decor.

Brown hopes this addition will carry the city for at least 10 years. "It depends entirely on how the city develops. If the city grows, we might need more facilities in 10 years."

But they're already thinking of options. Brown suggested the city could expand north on its block and build a five-story building to connect into the present structure. Babb said the first floor would be on stilts to allow parking.

Or, Babb continued, a City Hall annex could be built elsewhere and some departments, such as public works, could be sent there.

Paul Harvel

Chamber dresses up in theme of 'Midland style'

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Midland has its own personality. To show it off, the Chamber of Commerce will be dressing up this year in the theme, "Midland Style."

"It's a connotation. Midland has a different style of its own," said Executive Vice President Paul Harvel, proceeding to list the vast amount of office space, tall buildings, cultural offerings and the unique small accessories, such as helipads.

"We're trying to educate people as to what Midland is all about," he said of the chamber's desires this year. "It's not a little town; it's a city. We will be focusing most of the advertising this year on Midland as a city.

"We have a lot of things that towns twice our size don't have, such as the theater. I've never seen the talent that individuals in this town have. The office complexes in this city are astronomical. And the helicopters with the helipads...," he said before pausing.

LAST YEAR WAS one of transition for the chamber and Harvel. In March, both began a new phase in their lives. Harvel took over as the new executive vice president, replacing Fred Tyler who had died the previous September. In the ensuing months, Harvel and elected president Larry Bell evaluated what they wanted the chamber to accomplish.

As in a fashion show, they have presented the new "style" of the chamber to its members and the city one by one.

It's a combination of a streamlined, yet fuller, look.

"We took big steps in improving the Economic Development Department in funding and staffing. Now we can compete with anyone," said Harvel, listing an assistant that was hired recently.

The Convention and Visitors Bureau also took a big step forward with money and employees. "We're still at least two years away from having a real competitive bureau like a lot of other cities. But we now have advertising dollars for the Economic Development Department and Convention and Visitors Bureau. That's a big plus for 1983.

"We can do some advertising for the first time," he elaborated. "One of our main areas in the Convention and Visitors Bureau is to advertise in the state. We're trying to solicit Texas meetings and conferences."

AND THE Economic Development division will be concentrating its advertising on state and national magazines, according to Harvel.

An addition in the chamber's offerings to local businessmen is a Small Business Council. "We need more action there. I would like to see us be more aggressive on nationwide and statewide legislation that affects us," Harvel stated.

Other changes include initiating a Clean Midland, Inc., program and streamlining various chamber committees that are composed of business members.

The transportation committee will be revving up to see improvements in the means of traveling around the Permian Basin. Harvel would like to see Midland get more funds out of the State Highway Department and thus accelerate the long-range plans for Loop 250. Acknowledging that the airport service is flying at a steady level, he wouldn't mind seeing another major carrier landing, such as Delta or TWA. "But if the market is here," he said, adding that "we don't want to hurt the existing airlines."

MIDLAND OFFICE Task Force now serves as the official ambassador for new businesses opening in the Tall City, he cited. And an industry committee focuses on agriculture, retail and existing businesses and how to solve common problems.

Through the various committees, the chamber now has 800 members involved, according to Harvel.

Coming on board in March, Harvel said he expected to spend at least a year analyzing the problems and people of Midland, finding out the programs they want.

"You can't go from one city and one chamber and run the chamber in another city exactly the same way. What works in Elk City, Okla., won't work in Midland," he said.

"The changes we made were what the community was wanting. It was our duty to develop these programs. We accomplished a lot in less than a year," he reflected, attributing the rapid moves to Grant Billingsley who, as head of the Economic Development Department, also took over as temporary executive vice president until Harvel was hired.

During the year, cooperation between the city government and chamber has been woven tighter. "The cooperation I have received from the city for funding our programs has been excellent. Ultimately, our goals have to be the same. You can't do things within the city if you don't have the council behind you."

By adding accessory programs and cutting off those considered unnecessary, the chamber has been developing its own style in 1982 to reflect that of Midland.

"We're trying to make Midland a better place to live," Harvel said.

Library houses more than books

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Though not the only library in town, the Midland County Public Library is the largest.

Within the split-level building are more than 140,000 books — from light fiction to complex scientific-technological reference material — and almost 17,000 non-book items. The latter includes art prints, genealogy and sci-tech maps, video-discs, phonograph records and cassette tapes, and microfilm and microfiche equipment.

The downtown library, which was opened in 1958 in the 300 block of West Missouri Avenue, is programming itself for the Computer Age and, eventually, for a new multi-story edifice later on in the 1980s.

The first of the library's line-up of computers is one used for cataloging books.

"That gives us an on-line access to a computerized data base of more than 1 million catalog records," said Deats. "Most of them are Library of Congress official cataloging records of books and non-books."

The Midland library is linked by computer to the Dublin, Ohio, OnLine Computer Library Center, which serves thousands of university, college, public and corporate libraries.

In 1982, the Midland library's total circulation was 384,865, which included 292,309 books.

As of December 1982, the library's book collection totaled 140,275. Non-book items totaled 16,887. In the library's reference stacks were 2,125 books.

The library boasts of almost 51,000 card-holding patrons, which include 41,031 adults borrowers and 9,963 child patrons. Deats noted that more than 50 percent of Midlanders use the library.

County jail inmate Joe Harris was one of several prisoners who pitched in recently to help turn vacated courthouse tax offices into additional office and storage space for the sheriff's department. Using inmate labor, Sheriff Dallas Smith estimates the county saved more than $20,000 in construction costs on the project.

Sheriff's office updates system

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

"One significant thing we achieved this past year was the updating of our communication system," said Sheriff Dallas Smith. "We added another frequency and installed a back-up system in case of tower failure."

Other accomplishments include now putting at least one supervisory officer a year through the FBI Academy at Quantico, Va., authorization for the hiring of six new officers and getting a crime prevention unit operating in conjunction with the county extension office.

Recently completed was the renovation — using jail inmate labor — of the old tax office adjacent to the sheriff's quarters in the courthouse.

The remodeled county tax office now provides the sheriff's department with an estimated 50 percent increase in office and storage space at a substantial savings to taxpayers because prisoners, some of whom are construction workers, did most of the work themselves under supervised conditions.

"We needed the space badly," said Smith. "The question was, where would we get the $25,000 an outside contractor probably would have charged? The (county) commissioners were willing to back me and get it done with inmate labor for much less money: $2,500."

Prisoners also are now used to wash department vehicles at an estimated savings of $5,000 per year, according to Smith, who added:

"It helps them pass the time and gives them something to do."

Perhaps the things Smith is proudest of, however, are that the officer turnover rate seems to have stabilized and that he has been able to recruit more experienced officers, both of which ultimately result in taxpayer savings.

The department initially lost some people who weren't willing to go along with the rigorous, periodic physical and legal training programs Smith instituted after becoming sheriff, he noted.

But pay hikes sought by Smith and granted by the commissioners' court apparently have boosted morale and brought more, higher caliber officers in looking for jobs.

"It improves the overall operation of the department and gives us more time to spend on the investigation of the less serious crimes," he added.

In installing the new communications system, Smith said the radio room was reorganized and made more efficient so that he was able to get by without having to hire another employee in that division.

All told, the sheriff's department employs 65 persons, including an authorized contigent of 51 certified officers.

Its budget for fiscal 1983 stands at roughly $2 million, which encompasses both the operation of the department and the jail.

MidTran head tackles mass transit myths

"Luckily for us and the city, we require that when they bid they have a performance bond," Johnson said. The bond ensures that MidTran will receive its buses from another California company, National Coach Builders.

UNTIL THE buses arrive, Johnson said "we're kind of stymied in terms of growth and so forth." But he added that on a positive note, MidTran may actually receive about a $3,000 savings on the $280,000 contract as a result of the switch in bus manufacturers.

MidTran's 24 drivers currently operate 23 vehicles, five of which are owned by The First National Bank.

The new buses will have advertising space — not previously available on MidTran buses — which Johnson said should help offset operating expenses.

Johnson said MidTran will likely "phase out" three or four gas-powered buses when the new diesels arrive. Given the simultaneous increase and loss of seating capacity, Johnson estimated the new buses will boost the fleet's seating capacity by about 100 seats.

With its existing vehicles, MidTran has offered a variety of services to Midlanders, including a weekday medical route for citizens in need of transportation to medical facilities and doctors offices.

MidTran buses travel some established routes, especially in the south and east sections of the city.

BUT MUCH OF the bus travel between 9 a.m. and 3:30 p.m. is done on a "demand-response" basis. A person needing transportation may call MidTran's office 24 hours in advance to arrange pickup and delivery for a $2 fee.

Early morning and late afternoon riders traveling to and from work generally arrange for transportation on a subscription basis, at monthly rates of $35 for two-way trips and $21 per one-way fare.

Senior citizens offering identification may ride free and handicapped passengers are charged 50 cents per trip. Riders catching a MidTran bus on one of the flexible routes must pay 75 cents.

Johnson said the rate structure reflects a Jan. 1, 1983, increase designed to boost revenues and help cut into monthly operating deficits.

Johnson said total ridership in 1982 increased by about 40,000 fares — to 169,208 — when compared with 1981.

"I think the citizens of Midland deserve a big 'thank you' for accepting that increase," he said. "It's phenomenal, to me, to have a rate increase and not hear anything negative about it."

City within a city

Practically a city within itself, ClayDesta Plaza finally began to take shape in 1982. Most of the buildings will be open for business sometime this year.

ClayDesta, the brainchild of Clayton W. Williams Jr., covers 170 acres in north Midland and is the first major office complex away from the downtown area.

Already open for business are the ClayDesta National Bank's drive-in facility; ClayDesta Towers, twin six-story office buildings; Southland Royalty's two-story office; and the Williams Accounting Building.

"Other developers come into town just to see what we're doing. They say the concept is quite unique. They really can't believe something like this is going on in Midland, Texas, and in these economic times."

— Bob Smith
executive vice president of ClayDesta Corporation

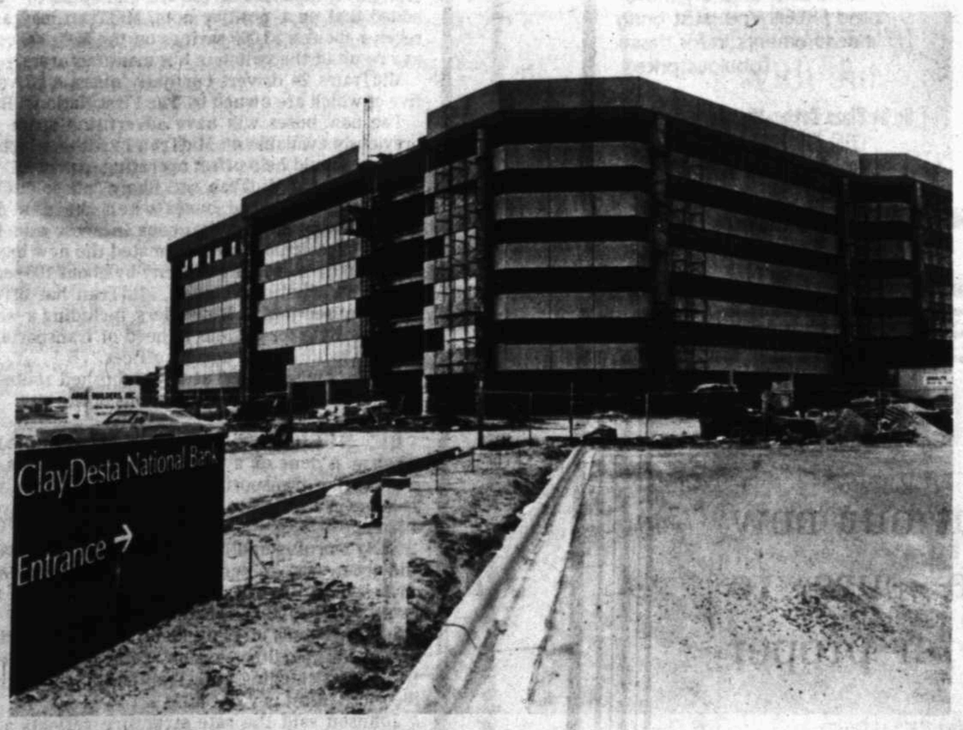

To be completed this year are the six-story Gulf Oil Building; the six-story Sun Exploration and Production Building; the six-story ClayDesta National Bank; and Harrigan's Restaurant.

Manager Tom Moore stands outside the bustling, 3-year-old Midland Center.

Midland Center expects another hectic year

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

If the Midland Center's five-person staff ever gets to wondering whether it's coming or going, it'll be no real surprise.

Tom Moore, manager of the three-year-old complex, said the center hosted approximately 800 events in 1982. In narrower terms, the total breaks down to a hectic 65-75 events per month, or a mind-dizzying average of about two events each day.

The center is open seven days a week except for three holidays during the year.

Moore said that despite the hectic parade of various shows, demonstrations and meetings that trooped through the center in 1982, this year's schedule is already beginning to look equally tight.

In 1982, "we had an increase every month in total events and total revenue for the city" said Moore, the center manager since July 1981.

He said total revenue was approximately $23,000 in 1980, the center's first year, $59,500 in 1981 and $73,800 in 1982. Moore said the center's event count is up from about 40-50 events per month in 1980 to about 65-75 monthly in 1982, when some events were turned away for lack of time and space.

Moore said he expects 1983 to be "as good or better" than 1982. Through June 1, 1983, Moore said, "I don't have a Friday or Saturday open" for a large event.

Events hosted by the Midland Center in 1982 included gun and knife shows, antique shows, a computer show, a charity ball, a Monte Carlo Night, several weddings, a high school senior party and many meetings and banquets.

"Basically any kind of function that the people would like to have," said Moore, explaining the center's open-arms criteria for booking events. "We'll try to work with the people any way we can to have any kind of function they want to have — if it's within reason."

Moore said a 2,200-square-foot portion of the center's storage space was converted into a meeting room in 1982. The new construction leaves the center with five meeting rooms and a large, dividable convention hall.

"We've had some real good comments. Everybody that I've talked to has been very pleased with the facility," said Moore, who added that parking is a problem that plagues the center along with all of downtown. "That is the one, biggest complaint we have from anybody local or out of town," he said.

Moore said parking difficulties apparently aren't serious enough to drive business away. Several 1982 events are already scheduled for 1983, some for 1984.

"I think we're in real good shape as far as that goes," said Moore. "I think it's running real smooth."

MMH will increase center's visibility

Allison Cancer Center to become truly regional

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Midland Memorial Hospital officials plan to increase its cancer center's visibility this year.

It's been called a regional center, but most of the patients are from Midland. That will change this year.

The Allison Permian Basin Cancer Therapy Center was intended to be a regional cancer center and, according to James Deuvall, administrative director, plans include "developing and implementing a comprehensive market plan with immediate attention toward physicians, patients and the general public."

By June 1982 the Allison Center's patient load had doubled from its opening to the 17-county Permian Basin area in May 1981. And with any new medical service, the center's patient load has shown the usual peaks and valleys.

But, according to MMH officials, treatments increased 225 percent following the arrival of Dr. David Snyder, medical oncologist. Snyder joined the Allison Center in July 1982. Also in the same year, Dr. Eric Svenson, radiation oncologist and acting director of the center since June 1981, was relieved of administrative duties with the hiring of Deuvall in November 1982.

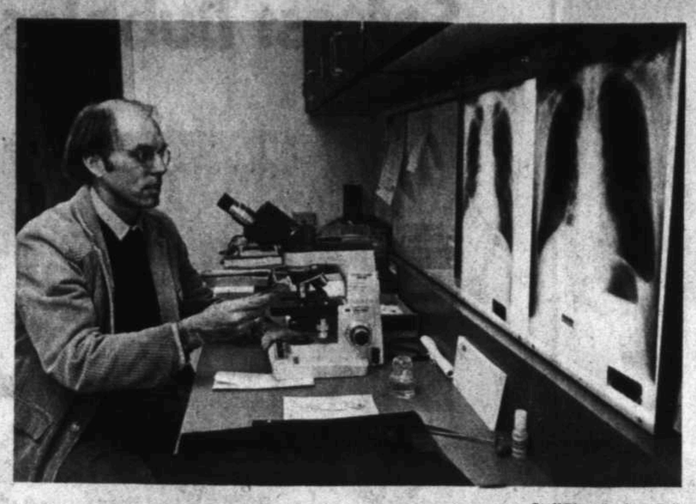

Deuvall said statistics show an expected 1,100 cases of cancer in the Permian Basin this year. He said the Allison Center should get some 450 patients in 1983 with the center providing 1,400 units of service — medical and radiation treatments. He added that the center will concentrate on in-service and patient education.

Deuvall said the Allison Center's doors are open for full-service 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. five days a week. Three registered nurses were added in 1982 along with a secretary for the chemotherapy department. Medical oncology was only operating one day a week before the arrival of Snyder.

Deuvall said the Allison Center staff has addressed waiting time for the patients, and currently "patients don't wait more than 15 minutes."

A Speakers' Bureau implemented by MMH during 1982 is expected to increase awareness of the center, according to Deuvall. There will be some remodeling this year with plans for two new treatment rooms and a pharmacy service in the medical oncology department.

The center also will be able to do prostate implants in 1983, and will be stepping into the future with the use of investigational drugs, which are proven and effective drugs in the stages of approval by the Food and Drug Administration.

Commission files complaint against seller of sleepwear

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Consumer Products Safety Commission says it is filing an administrative complaint charging that a New York firm is selling children's sleepwear that fails to meet federal flammability standards.

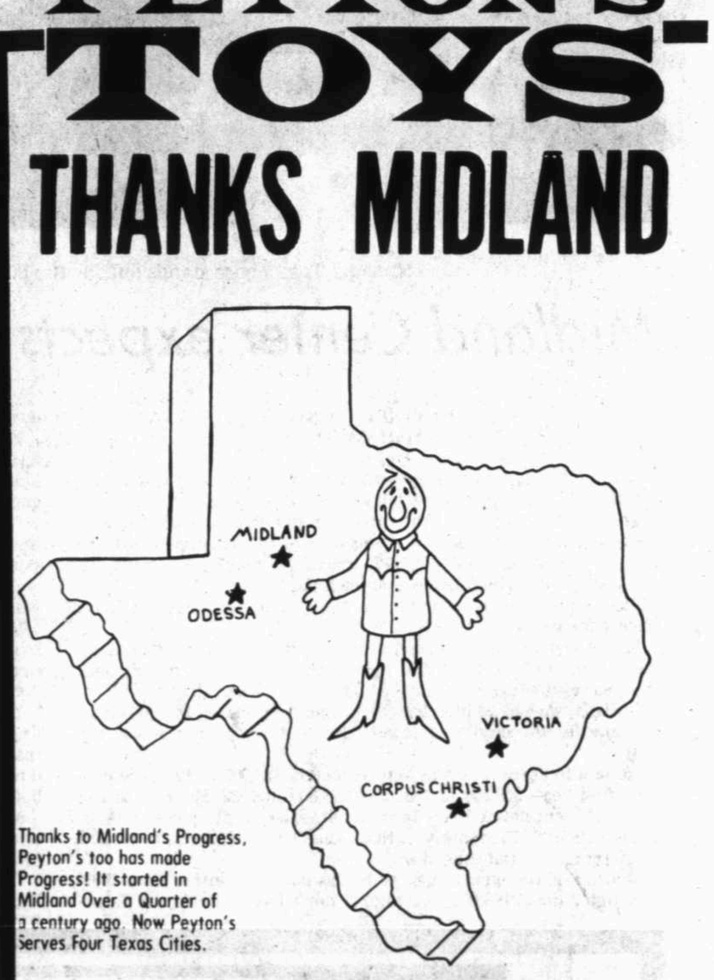

The commission said it will ask a judge to ban the firm, Sun and Sand Imports, Ltd., from selling sleep apparel that doesn't meet the standards.

The company has declined to stop selling the garments because it contends they are not sleepwear, the commission said. Company officials were not available for comment.

In question are about 60,000 cotton garments sold over the last three years, identified as Sun and Sand garment styles 7101, 6421, 6123 and 6115, the commission said. Two of the garments are described as bodysuits or coveralls and the other two as dresses.

Midland responds to needs of elderly

Trinity Towers Manor Park will be built at Loop 250 and Sinclair Avenue in four phases with an estimated completion date in 1989. The residential retirement center will house about 550 elderly citizens.

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

With the overall increasing age of Americans, many questions are raised about society's response to the needs of the elderly.

During 1983, Midland intends to answer the housing needs of some 550 retirees with its plans for Trinity Towers Manor Park, a $40-50 million retirement community. Although the attraction will be quite different from the purplish mountains against the Arizona horizon or the palm trees swaying on the sand's edge of Florida and California, Midland's backdrop for the 40-acre mecca for retirees 62 and over will be much more practical, according to backers.

Manor Park, a four-phase, 7-10 year project to be located at Loop 250 and Sinclair Avenue in northwest Midland, has a projected completion date of 1989. Groundbreaking cermonies for phase one were held in September 1982. This phase, expected to be completed late this year, will consist of 60 townhouses, 36 garden apartments, 30 sheltered living apartments, central food and recreation services, and a central health care facility.

A $1 million gift marked the beginning of the project. Guy and Joe Mabee presented the gift on behalf of the J.E. and L.E. Mabee Foundation in Tulsa, Okla. The donation, one of the largest single sums ever given to a non-profit health group in Midland, went toward the initial construction of a portion of the personal care facility that will be part of Manor Park's health program.

The personal health care facility, providing services to the residents, is the portion of Manor Park's design that makes it stand apart from many conventional retirement communities across the country — where little or no health care is available to active and independent residents living in townhouses and garden homes.

Also in September 1982, Manor Park officials announced HBF Corporation as general contractor for the retirement center. HBF began constructing 20,000 square feet of phase one of the project, including townhouses and garden homes.

According to Bill Saxton, administrator of Trinity Towers on Illinois Avenue, a director of admissions and public relations was hired in December 1982 for the Manor Park project.

To date, more than 225 persons and couples have signed up to be on the preliminary waiting list for Manor Park.

By April, Saxton said model units should be ready and in the fall, residents should be able to begin moving into the apartments.

Meanwhile, during 1982, Trinity Towers went through major remodeling inside and out, including painting and carpeting. The Bridgewater Room was doubled in size for recreation.

Saxton said there is a waiting list from six months to five years with the largest demand for outside apartments.

Hospitals battle for regional drug facilities

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Three hospitals battling for regional drug/alcohol services were in a stupor during 1982, but they could feel a sobering effect in 1983.

While Midland Memorial Hospital secured interim financing earlier this month for a $3.4 million behavioral health center, Parkview Hospital's $500,000 conversion to a psychiatric hospital is still tied up in litigation.

And a third hospital, West Plains, a privately-owned Arlington corporation, is struggling for zoning approval for its Air Terminal-based $4.1 million pyschiatric hospital.

All three hospitals' state-required certificate of need applications were joined at the Texas Health Facilities Commission hearing in April 1982. The two-week hearing for similar facilities resulted in approval of MMH's planned 50-bed chemical dependency unit located in northwest Midland and West Plains' proposed 60-bed psychiatric facility located at Midland Regional Air Terminal. Parkview's 60-bed conversion was denied.

PARKVIEW OFFICIALS, unhappy with the outcome, filed a lawsuit in a Travis County court to overturn the THFC's decision on West Plains. Although MMH is not being sued, the hospital is named in the suit.

A suit usually exempts an applicant from compliance with the THFC rules which requires an applicant to "commence development" 180 days after state approval, or forfeit its application. But it isn't clear — because MMH is not a defendant in the lawsuit — whether these rules apply to the chemcial dependency unit.

Therefore, MMH requested the THFC to define, or interpret its rules in a "declaratory ruling." A decision has not been made.

Meanwhile, MMH's board of directors have secured interim financing at First City National Bank of Midland. The interim financing will be used to begin construction for the project until permanent financing is sought through a general obiligation bond issue, requiring an election, or revenue bonds which do not require voter approval.

ALSO, THE DIRECTORS accepted a 10-acre donation from Scharbauer Brothers & Co. to MMH for the $3.4 million behavioral health center. The site, located one-fourth to one-half mile west of Loop 250 where Loop 250 and Thomason Drive intersect, is within a 40-acre medical center proposed by Scharbauer Brothers.

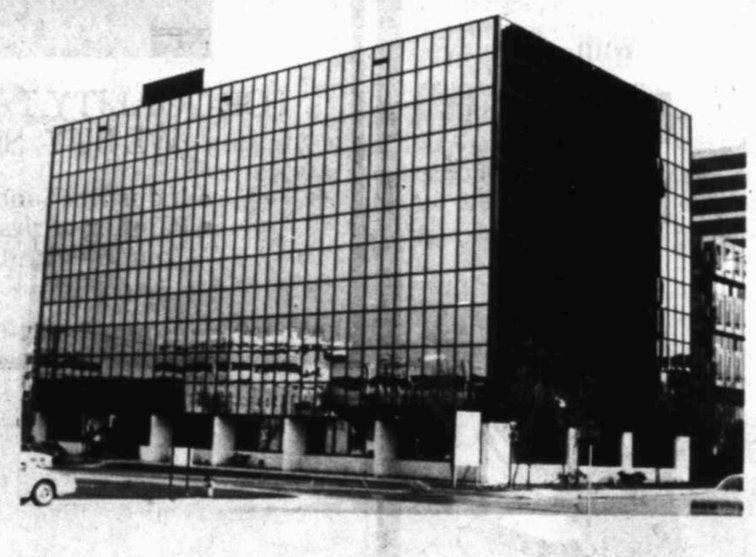

Because West Plains Hospital is in litigation with Parkview, they do not have to comply with the THFC rules. It is not known when a decision will be passed concerning Parkview's suit.

But West Plains is laying the groundwork for rezoning its proposed location at Air Terminal.

MMH pulls itself up by bootstraps in 1982, now walks tall

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Midland Memorial Hospital pulled itself up by the bootstraps in 1982 and began "walking tall" after recruiting personnel, re-opening beds, initiating new programs, improving its financial situation and winning a certificate of need application.

It was a trying year, at times, for MMH, but the 206-bed facility accomplished most of its goals in 1982.

MMH started 1982 with a bang, entering a three-way fight for a drug/alcohol treatment center. Officials fought tenaciously against two private hospitals — Midland's Parkview Hospital and West Plains Hospital, owned by an Arlington corporation — that were vying for similar facilities. After receiving local approval for its $3.4 million, 50-bed behavioral health center, MMH won in Austin.

In June 1982, the Texas Health Facilities Commission granted MMH a certificate of need application for its chemical dependency unit. Although MMH accomplished its goal, there are a couple more hurdles — pending litigation from a suit filed by Parkview Hospital against West Plains Hospital has resulted in a detour for MMH's construction. A ruling is expected soon.

APRIL ELECTIONS saw the return of a familiar face and the addition of fresh blood to the MMH board of directors. Incumbent Pat Estes and challenger Tevis Herd won the two seats on the board. Although incumbent Martin Neill did not win a second term, he is presently sitting on MMH's board of trustees.

Another new face also showed up at MMH in April 1982. Al Kelm, vice president of patient care services, brought a "progressive attitude" to the facility. Kelm gave the nurses a voice at the highest level, supporting them through a nursing shortage that was occurring not only at MMH, but also nationwide. Meanwhile, MMH was experiencing a record baby boom with 222 births in April 1982.

Kathy Chatman, medical records employee, transcribes physicians' notes for Midland Memorial Hospital patients.

Kelm was instrumental, along with the rest of the administration, in hiring 12 nurses after an improved salary package was implemented. Also 10 beds that had been closed due to the nursing shortage were re-opened.

MMH entered into another certificate of need application in June 1982 for a $15 million, 77-bed expansion. At the local level, MMH again received approval from the local health systems agency in September 1982. Currently, MMH and Parkview, which is fighting for a $17 million, 110-bed full-service hospital, are awaiting the THFC's decision March 4.

SEPTEMBER 1982 marked the completion of a $26,000 renovation, bringing the facility to 195-bed capacity with 11 additional beds for same-day surgery. But the high point of September and perhaps for the year, was MMH's role in a twin-engine plane crash at Air Park which left five victims seriously burned. MMH personnel moved quickly and efficently in bringing the best medical attention to these victims.

A forerunner in medical services, MMH began a hospital-based midwife program also in September 1982 which provides the best quality care for indigent patients and drop-ins. Sandra Haldeman, a certified nurse-midwife, was hired and, thus far, the program has been an overwhelming success.

The emergency room, which seems to be a thorn for most hospitals, took on a "new attitude" with the appointment of Wanda Douglas, a registered nurse trained in critical care. Ms. Douglas took on her new post in October 1982, offering a positive image to the community by inaugurating communication among the ER personnel, patients and patients' families.

Staff Photos by Cody Bell

Midland Memorial Hospital personnel and visitors now eat lunch in the newly-decorated hospital cafeteria.

As part of a comprehensive mental health program at MMH, group therapy sessions were initiated in October 1982 for psychiatric patients by newly-hired Jane Dresser, a clinical pyschiatric nurse specialist. The program was extended to anyone needing to alleviate stress, including patients and families who may have anxieties or concerns about a disease or operation.

ANOTHER HOSPITAL-based program appeared in November 1982. CanSurmount, traditionally a community-based program, was coordinated by Alan Schroeder, MMH's social worker. CanSurmount offers support for hospitalized cancer patients.

December 1982 brought an early Christmas gift to the elderly with another hospital-based service — Lifeline, an emergency response program sponsored by the Lutheran Social Services of Texas in Midland. Lifeline allows an elderly or disabled person to live independently, while still being in touch with help, if needed.

MMH fared well in a study of room rates among Texas hospitals. While hospital room rates increased nationwide, the December study scored MMH with the state average.

An upbeat year came to a screeching halt, however, when MMH and other hospitals discovered the impact of a new three-year tax and budget package involving a 12.5 billion reduction of Medicare costs. The Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982 (TEFRA), which became effective in October 1982 for MMH, will have a dramatic impact on the way MMH will conduct business and deliver health care in 1983.

According to Ray Branson, MMH president, "1983 will provide perhaps the stiffest challenge yet to effectively monitor and control costs. Pressure is being brought on hospitals through such laws as TEFRA and other third party reimbursement programs to reduce reimbursements to hospitals and physicians.

"THE GOVERNING boards of MMH, the medical staff and administration will have to work in concert to ensure that health care programs and services needed by the community can be provided," Branson said. "The challenge is particularly great for a hospital like MMH which has a growing medical staff, an increasing population to serve and a need for additional capital equipment and expansion. The penalty may be quite high for what should be a positive situation."

MMH has already prepared for the TEFRA impact this year with a juggling of personnel and a change of hats. Dale Miller, vice president of finance, will take charge of the TEFRA situation, head the hospital's construction programs and direct the business department. A new vice president of finance is expected to be hired in a couple of months.

Kelm predicts this year will be a time "to fine tune the components that we have initiated in our implementation of quality assurance.

"For example, we will continue to review patient teaching programs, increase the percentage of licensed personnel who provide direct patient care and continue to staff with nurses who specialize in clinical areas of nursing such as mental health, orthopedics, high-risk newborns and critical care," Kelm said.

Midland's small private hospital rattled loudly in 1982. And if all goes well, the outdated 60-bed Parkview Hospital could be transformed into a psychiatric hospital and a modern 110-bed full service facility could begin construction this year.

"While we had an exciting year in '82, we're looking forward to a new hospital," said Dick Liley, Parkview administrator.

Parkview's owners, American Medical Corporation, sought approval for two certificate of need applications in 1982 — one for conversion of the existing hospital into a 60-bed psychiatric hospital and the second for a new full-service hospital to be located in northwest Midland.

Both applications were pitted against Midland's public facility, Midland Memorial Hospital. And a third party was also involved in the pyschiatric application.

Although the Texas Health Facilities Commission denied Parkview's application for the psychiatric hospital — awarding a certificate of need to West Plains, a private hospital corporation from Arlington, and MMH — AMC filed an appeal in Travis County court to overturn the ruling. The decision is pending.

And the THFC ruling for the new hospital, named Doctors Hospital, is expected to come March 4. AMC's proposed $17 million, 110-bed hospital will be the "Cadillac of hospitals," according to Liley. The modern facility, including new services, an emergency room and an obstetrics department, will be located at Wadley Avenue and Loop 250.

The Doctors Hospital would include Parkview's existing 60 beds with an additional 34 medical/surgical beds, 10 obstetric beds and 14 bassinets. The obstetrics, perinatal and emergency services would be a level II (intensive care) classification.

Besides traveling to Austin for state approval for the proposed hospital, Parkview's administrator was busy in 1982 improving the existing hospital.

One of Parkview's most successful ventures was the first microscopic surgery for a reversal tubal ligation. After Parkview purchased a $27,000 high-powered microscope with attachments, Dr. Luis Montaldo, obstetrician, operated on a 23-year-old Midland woman who had decided to be permanently sterilized in May 1981. She underwent the operation for a reversal in September and became pregnant about two months afterward.

According to Liley, the microscope will be used for more reversal tubal ligations. Also, the equipment will be used for reversal vasectomies and nerve repairs this year.

Parkview Hospital's intensive care unit supervisor, Jill Zeman, a registered nurse, attends to a patient in the hospital's renovated ICU.

Parkview opened its intensive care unit in 1982, offering additional care for patients. Liley said the ICU, microscopic surgery and a 59 percent increase of surgeries has contributed to the hospital's improved community image.

Liley projects 1983 to be "a very exciting time, going all the way to keep Midlanders in Midland for health care."

Parkview will begin a new service — a cardiac rehabilitation program.

A $35,000 treadmill is now available at the hospital as a diagnostic tool for screening potential heart disease and determining a person's physicial ability. Midland physicians are excited about the partially-computerized treadmill that stresses a person's heart as he walks, according to Liley.

Midland's private hospital also has its own radiologist, Dr. Stephen Sherman, who came to Parkview Jan. 1 from Allentown, Pa.

Liley added that he anticipates a gamma camera will be purchased this year, introducing nuclear medicine to the facility. Also, an ultrasonography will be bought. Ultrasonography is a non-invasive diagnostic piece of equipment which uses sound waves.

Red Cross has 'disastrous' year

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

By almost any standards except those which serve as day-to-day operating guidelines for Midland's Red Cross chapter, 1982 could have been considered a "disastrous" year.

Disasters, both man-made and natural, were all too plentiful for executive director Elvis Curb and a small army of Red Cross volunteers and staff.

Whether at a fierce May hailstorm in Monahans or on the scene of a fiery September airplane crash in Midland, Red Cross workers had a busy 1982, according to Curb, who makes no secret of the fact that he wouldn't mind seeing a little less excitement this year.

Along with the bad news came some good, however. Midland's chapter celebrated its 65th year in the Red Cross and received a plaque from the national organization to commemorate the milestone. Curb said the organization was also honored for its years of service by Midland Mayor G. Thane Akins and Midland County Judge Bill Ahders. Midland's Red Cross chapter received its charter in 1917.

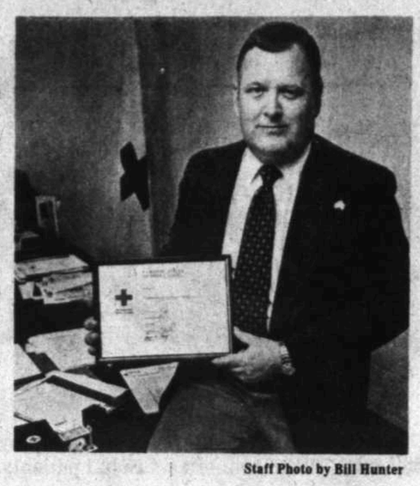

Curb called 1982 "a banner year for the American Red Cross here in Midland," not only because of the anniversary but also in light of the distinguished performances offered by Red Cross volunteers in both disaster situations and community service programs.

CURB SAID Red Cross volunteers and the food-and-drink canteen truck responded to the Carver Center fire in March 1982.

Red Cross volunteers and equipment were sorely needed in Monahans when a brief but vicious hail storm tore through the town in May, leaving behind millions of dollars worth of damage and rendering some residents homeless.

"It was one of those freak West Texas things," Curb said. "Virtually every structure in that community suffered from minor to major damage."

Curb said that within 10 days, Red Cross distributed about $13,000 in disaster assistance funds for emergency house repairs and some medical treatment.

Elvis Curb, director of Midland's Red Cross chapter, displays a certificate commemorating the chapter's 65th year of operation.

The Monahans destruction was followed by two tornadoes in Seminole, severe flooding in Wichita Falls and the Polo Park Apartments fire in Midland. Curb said Midland's Red Cross provided assistance in each emergency.

Curb recalled, with gratitude, that Red Cross workers were only called upon to dispense food and drinks during the September plane crash and fire at the Warwick Apartments complex.

"The Good Lord was watching over a lot of people that day," said Curb, noting that the damaged apartments were mostly vacant at the time of the crash.

HE OFFERED praise to several local business establishments that provided food and drink during the crash aftermath.

Curb added that the work and services provided by the local Red Cross are not all sirens and canteen runs. But he noted that many Red Cross programs tie directly into its emergency services.

"We still have as an objective training at least one person in every family in first aid and cardio-pulmonary resuscitation."

Red Cross volunteers regularly conduct training programs in swimming, lifesaving, first aid and CPR.

"Those all tie directly into disasters. When there is a disaster, Red Cross feels like the more people that can help their families, that frees up the emergency medical system for the trauma cases."

Curb added that Red Cross is also beginning to expand its programs in the area of "health and wellness."

"The mood of the nation seems to be most of us are interested in taking better care of ourselves," said Curb. "Red Cross is not cast in concrete. We're looking at becoming the best provider of health service of any volunteer agency in America."

CURB SAID Midland's Red Cross is in dire need of volunteers — especially nurses — to help achieve its goal.

"Volunteers are the backbone of our program," he said.

Workers are needed to staff training programs — some proposed and others already in existence — in subjects which include vital signs, preparation for parenthood, home nursing, babysitter certification, stress managment, basic aid training for youngsters and others.

"With some luck and with some planning and a little bit of help, we hope to get all of these off and running."

Curb added that a small but important part of the Red Cross' mission includes acting as the agency which provides all branches of the military with verification in case of death or illness within a military person's family.

In 1983, Curb said the Red Cross would also like to work with other area emergency and relief agencies to develop plans to better coordinate their efforts in the event of a large-scale disaster in Midland.

"We would like to see and be involved in a coordinated effort by all the agencies," said Curb. "We West Texans, although we're kind of individuals, we do pitch in and kind of help on things when they're needed."

After a boom year in 1981, oil activity slowed somewhat in 1982, forcing some belt-tightening in the Permian Basin.

Area's booming oil business slowed during '82

reflections and directions of the permian basin

The past year might best be described as the year the petroleum industry once again learned to conduct its affairs in a businesslike manner. It was the year devil-may-care wheeling and dealing slipped from fashion and hard-nosed management once again came into vogue.

For the oil and gas industry 1981 was a gusher year. It was a year of new Cadillacs, fat cigars and large bonus checks. It was the year people heartily chuckled and said, "Only in Midland," at each new report of success.

With the snows of January 1982 came hard times. The boom slowly started to fizzle.

Many who were still possessed by the exuberance of 1981 laughed off the warnings. Call them the Grasshoppers. Older, wiser hands paid heed and readied themselves for hard times. Call them the Ants.

AND HARD times came. It wasn't long before the Grasshoppers died off, victims of bankruptcy and mismanagement. The Ants began to worry if they'd be able to hold on. The pop phrase of 1982 was a sadly uttered, "I don't know when, but it's got to get better."

The hard times of 1982 forced Midland's petroleum industry to do some belt tightening. Staffs were cut or reshuffled. In some instances wages and salaries were cut. Fringe benefits became shorter. The lessons taught in Business Management 101 were dusted off and put back to work. "Survival" became the watchword for Midland's oil companies.

Heading into 1983, Midland's oil and gas industry is, as a whole, taking a tough, no-nonsense approach to the business. There are signs of still harder times to come.

Yet, despite the slowdown, Permian Basin oilmen managed to finish 1982 with a pretty good showing. According to Petroleum Information Corporation, a firm keeping an eye on oil industry statistics, within the Permian Basin region 8,825 oil and gas wells were completed during 1982. PI says 5,599 of the completions were oil wells and 1,350 gas wells.

WITHIN TEXAS as a whole, PI reported, 26,897 wells were completed in 1982. The total was 1,895 higher than recorded in 1981.

The completion statistics make 1982 look like a good year. However, they must be taken with a grain of salt. Many of the wells completed during the first three quarters of 1982 were drilled in 1981. The fourth quarter statistics for 1982 look less exciting. Although it is too early to tell, the first quarter 1983 statistics likely will be somewhat gloomy.

Fewer completions mean still harder times down the road for the Permian Basin.

The most watched, and probably most talked about, oilfield statistic is the rig count, the tally of drilling rigs actually cutting new hole. As 1981 came to an end, the rig count hit a record high of 515 in the Permian Basin Region. That figure started a long, steep dive toward the bottom the first week of January 1982. By the end of March 1982, people were starting to worry.

A VETERAN OILMAN told The Midland Reporter-Telegram he looked for a low rig count of 300 for the year. Many pooh-poohed his suggestion, saying things would never become that bad. Well, it turned out the veteran oilman was wrong. The low rig count was 257, much lower than anyone had predicted early in 1982.

It's normal for the rig count to drop in late winter months. Early in 1982, many attributed the dropping rig counts to the annual "spring slump." It wound up lasting nine months instead of three. It wasn't until late that they realized the spring slump was the boom going bust.

As this is written, the rig count is again falling. It looks like the normal spring slump at work. However, there is nothing to prevent the tally from sliding lower — as it did in 1982.

THERE'S ONE thing that hasn't changed — and for that, Midlanders cannot be thankful. Politicians are still looking to the oil and gas industry for revenues. The pro-tax forces seem to be slowly growing.

The petroleum industry has for some time been the most heavily taxed industry in the United States. The Windfall Profits Tax of 1978 has taken billions of dollars out of the Permian Basin economy.

A U.S. District Court judge in Wyoming declared the windfall tax unconstitutional Nov. 4, 1982. He had scarcely laid his gavel down when senators and representatives from the northeastern states began talking about writing a new windfall bill that would pass constitutional tests, in the hope of keeping the tax flowing.

The Supreme Court is to rule on the constitutionality of the Windfall Profits Tax. Although the court was asked to rule quickly, it is unlikely a ruling will be handed down any time soon —indeed it may be more than a year away.

Should the Supreme Court strike down the tax, Midland's economy could get a boost, as hundreds of millions of dollars would be freed for use here.

Midland's got everything for those who like to shop around

Strip centers, malls offer just about everything for shopping aficionados

By BILL MODISETT
Staff Writer

Shoppers in Midland can browse through numerous shopping complexes, ranging from fully enclosed malls to strip centers. There's something to suit everyone's shopping taste.

Many of Midland's shopping centers are new, developed in recent years when Midland experienced rapid growth; others, however, were meeting shopping needs decades ago.

Midland's shopping centers include:

Westwood Village

Phase II in this shopping facility's construction is scheduled to begin shortly, according to G. Adair Ratliff of Fort Worth, one of the center's developers.

During Phase II, the shopping complex will be expanded by 50,000 square feet, he said. Phase I, completed in 1982, consisted of 79,065 square feet.

The complex is being developed by Westwood Joint Venture, which consists of Ratliff, who was born in Midland and grew up in Monahans, and HBF Corp. of Midland, which is performing the construction.

Westwood Village is designed so that a continuous "can sign" advertises tenants and calls attention to the center. Design also enables all but one or two tenants to face Illinois Avenue.

Phase II of the project will include a landscaped courtyard. The contemporary center's construction features exposed wood and tan stucco walls.

The center now is 96 percent leased, said Ratliff, and only a couple of spaces remain to be filled. Shops now included in Westwood Village are Revco Discount Drugs, Fox Photos, Big Cheese Pizza, U.S. Army and U.S. Navy recruiting stations, Ms. M's and Supermat, a washateria. Also located in the center are Safeway Super Store, Chinese Kitchen, Westwood Medical Clinic, Curtis Mathes, Abacus Computers and Putt's Olympic Gym.

La Villita

La Villita, which consists of office buildings and retail establishments, is located near the intersection of Midkiff Road and Wadley Avenue. The Spanish-style center features 41,000 square feet of retail floor space and 79,000 square feet of office space in two separate structures.

During 1982, Body Works expanded its floor space and Casey's, a clothing store, located at the center. No additional construction is planned this year.

Other tenants of the shopping center include Sofas Unlimited, Electronic Service Center, House of Arts & Crafts, Reflections, The Very Thing, Shop of the Blue Gem, Zack's Frozen Yogurt, Jan's, the Polo Grounds and the Leisure Center.

Western Park Plaza

During 1982, management of this shopping complex was assumed by Commonwealth Management. In 1983, the shopping center is anticipating "a good year," according to regional vice president Roger Hughes.

Hughes said that, despite the economic slowdown of 1982, "we feel that Midland is still a real good city for business. As long as oil prices are in a slump it's going to affect you, but I think it has bottomed out."

Fundamentally, the center is full. Two spaces are vacant but have been leased, said Hughes.

The center's tenants include Anthony's Department Store, Carrasco's Spanish Inn, Pryor Shoes, Lone Star Camera, Casabella Homes, Beauty Castle, Gene Bartus Fine Men's Wear, Jenkin's Jewelry, Jimmy's Liquors, Midland Gallery, Nutri/system, Schlotzsky's, The Sound Machine, Windmill Hobbies & Crafts and the Court House & Spa.

Other merchants include Midland Family Physicians, Kings Bakery, Trafalgar Drilling Co. and Castle Gap Jewelry.

The Stronghold is housed in a separate facility in the shopping center. Albertson's and Handy Dan are a part of the overall complex, too, although each business owns its own land and buildings. The center's five buildings are of Spanish styling with a marble stucco finish.

Tierra del Sol

Tierra del Sol was built mainly in 1978 and 1979 and now features a number of shops, according to property manager Kim McGregor of Martine Properties Inc. of Austin.

Located near the intersection of Midkiff Road and Cuthbert Avenue, the center features Spanish architecture. First tenant was UA Cine 4, built in 1978, but many retail shops began locating there in 1979. Rapid growth for the center occurred during 1980 and 1981.

Shops in the center include Mr. Gatti's, Personally Yours, Hair Safari, Kids' Toggery, Lights Fantastic, Save-Way Beauty and Barber Supply, Cal's Man's Shop, Dial Finance, the Spread Shed, Shallow Waterbeds, Permian Pool Shoppe, Greene Optical, D&L Sports Center, Mr. Reuben's Restaurant & Tavern, Fox Photo, GDW Construction Co., Kwik Kopy and the Collage.

San Miguel Square

Little construction was performed at this shopping center during 1982 since it received extensive work a year earlier. The atrium area was enhanced with lighting and landscaping.

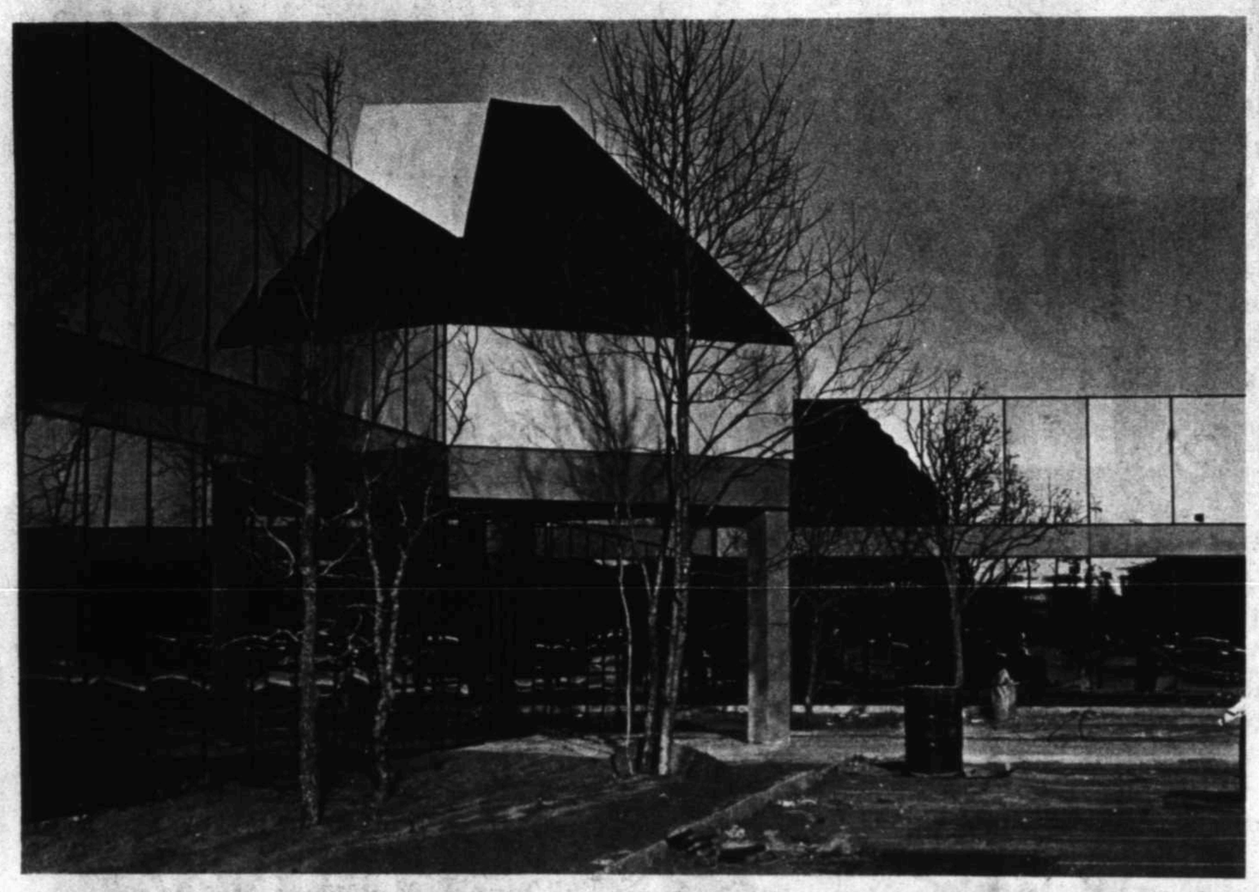

New signs were installed in 1981 to identify each occupant of the atrium and to more clearly define the atrium portion of the center. Additionally, the second floor of the atrium area was specified as prestige office space while the ground floor was retained for retail space.

The center is managed by Sentry Property Management Co. of Lubbock.

Tenants now include Kruger's Jewelry, Ye Olde Monogram Shoppe, Metropolitan Dance Center Inc., Calico Barn, Ms. A's Finishing & Modeling, A. Blackford's Ladies Investment Apparel, La Hacienda Mexican Inn, La Dulceria, The Gift Gallery, First Bankers Trust and Savings Association, The Roundabout, Jimmy Smith Shoes, P.J.'s Handbags, Etc., Fancy Fans, the Stitching Post, The Total Table, Stephenson Realtors, Command Performance, CTA Computer Store, TV Games Unlimited, Adobe Realtors, Chaparral Realtors, Pinocchio's Pizza and Betty's Boutique.

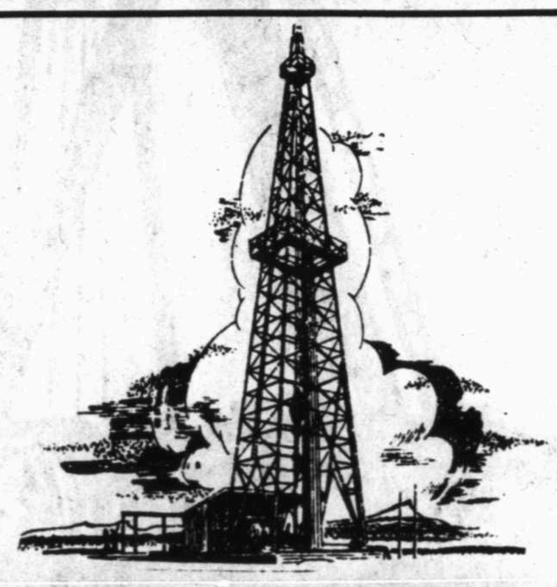

Also located at San Miguel are The Music Haul, Mortgage & Trust, High Sky Realty, James Pilgreen Bookkeeping Services, Holiday Travel, Consolidated Bankers, Select Personnel Consultants, Dr. Keith Poe, D.D.S., Sundance Tanning Salon, Medical Weight Control, The Dance Shop, Chatterton's, Friday's Child, Lou's Dress Shop, Yvonne's Dress Shop, Williams Jewelry, Sports Scene, Unique Shop, Gourmet Emporium and Jeneal International Skin Correction Center.

The Village

There were relatively few changes at this shopping center during 1982, other than tenant changes, according to Doug Messer, Grammer-Murphey store manager.

Current tenants at the center, located at the intersection of Wall Avenue, Illinois Avenue and Andrews Highway, include Grammer-Murphey Village Store, Walgreen's, Fabric Warehouse, Serge Hair and Make-up, Rudd Christian Bookstore, Sewing Machine Supply, Sandi's Candies and Gifts, Endless Horizons, House of India Imports, Pets Galore, Radio Shack, White's, Ray's Big & Tall For Men, Stout Fashions, TG&Y Family Center, Vos Custom Framing and Gallery and the Village Trading Post.

Other merchants in the Village include Cliff Summar School of Driver Education, Benton Howell, certified public accountant, Audio Acoustics Hearing Aid Center, Metropolitan Life, MWM Architects Inc., Ray Morris Jewelry & Gifts, Village Barber Shop, Carmela's, House of Carpets, Anada Shop, Tony Lopez Karate Studio, Texas State Optical, Janette Blatherwick's, Midland Satellite Television and Carpet Trends.

The Strip

This shopping center, located at 3302 W. Illinois Ave., is one of Midland's earlier shopping complexes. The shopping center was designed and built by Bob Lacy of Arlington, and was completed in 1959.

Shops in The Strip include Puppyland, 7-Eleven, Royale Art Studios, Yo-Yo's Flower Haus, Morris Caffy TV and Appliance, Frame's Etc., Parker's Package Store, US Life, Beneficial Finance, Pizza Inn and Shenanigans.

Town and Country

Another of Midland's oldest shopping centers, this center got a face lift during 1981 and 1982 and more is planned for 1983. A new facade with new signs was installed last year, and a paving project for the shopping center's entire parking area is planned this year.

The center is an open air strip center with a covered mall area. It was built in the late 1950s at the intersection of Cuthbert Avenue and Midkiff Road. The center's boundary also touches Andrews Highway to the north.

HFA Management Co. of Dallas manages the mall.

Tenants include Furr's Cafeteria, Furr's Supermarket, Fast Photo Service Inc., Lucille's, Town and Country Barber Shop, Curl & Swirl, Cloth World, Kodak Permian Photo, Magic Mirror Figure Salon, The Science of Mind Center and Town and Country Cleaners.

Plaza Center

A number of changes took place at this shopping center near the intersection of Wadley Avenue and Garfield Street during 1982, said Bill Reeder of the center's management.

The center is 100 percent leased and occupied, but during 1982 Le Bistro acquired a new dining room to supplement its courtyard dining area. The Fish Market is under new management now and the Safeway store is currently in the process of making a 6,000-square-foot addition to its store. Other new tenants include Optic Unique, Petroplex Savings, the Computer Patch and Pasty Factory.

Other offices and shops at the center include the Plaza Office, Don Rhamey Agency, Robert Glossop office, Knorr Furniture, Big Cheese Pizza, Butler's Pantry, Lionel Daury's French Cuisine Restaurant, The Mole Hole, Bah Humbug, The Carriage Company, Plaza Cleaners, Christine Valmy, Radio Shack, Baskin-Robbins Ice Cream and 7-Eleven Store.

Also in the center are Revco, Video Center, Leggett's Fabric, Cody Cattle Company, Hickory Farms of Ohio, Your Graphics Are Showing, Classic Hair Designs, Swartz Framing Studio, The Leather Locker, Christy's Boutique, El Chico Restaurant, For Kids Only Big and Little, Oriental Rugs by Overhue, Fruit Baskets Etcetera, Fast Copy and the U.S. Postal Service Plaza Annex.

Oak Ridge Square

Oak Ridge Square, just across Wadley Avenue from its sister shopping center, Plaza Center, continues to have 100 percent occupancy.

Last year brought a number of changes to the shopping center. The Salon at Pappagallo expanded further and Ron's Floral Designs was added as a new tenant. Adventure Travel expanded into space formerly occupied by another tenant, as did the Blind Spot.

Other tenants in Oak Ridge Square include Pappagallo's, Career Paths, International Research Group, Guy LaRoche Dress Shop, Beverly Hills Interiors, Nature's Pantry, Kit and Kaboodle, The Shoe Tree, Montana Mining Company, Back Stage, Lois Grupe's Gallery of Gifts, The Oak Leaf, Pat Walker's Figure Salon, Home Savings Association, Bradley-Cox Ltd., Paint and Palette and American Royalty Corporation.

The shopping center was started in 1969 and constructed in stages.

Dellwood Mall

Many shoppers have found this mall, located on a 17-acre site at the intersection of Illinois Avenue and Midkiff Road, suitable for their shopping needs for more than two decades. Dellwood Mall opened in 1962 and was fully enclosed in 1976. The mall is air-conditioned and features an indoor fountain and ample parking.

Midland's downtown parking situation and the escalating price of new office space has resulted in a demand for office space in Dellwood Mall, according to owner's representative Bruce Burgess of Dallas. So, the mall has concentrated in the past couple of years on devoting one wing to offices while retaining the remainder of the mall for retail tenants.

Among the mall's office tenants are Southland Corp., Times-Mirror Cable Television of Midland, Midland County Tax Assessor-Collector's branch office, Robert Evans Family Cancer Plan Insurance and Virgil Jones, realtor.

But the mall continues to have heavy retail emphasis, said Burgess. He noted during the past year both Dunlap's and Kresge's, the mall's two major tenants, renewed their leases. Dunlaps renewed for 10 years, said Burgess, while Kresge's renewed for five years.

Burgess also noted that while the Midland economy slowed down during 1982, sales began picking back up in November. For the remainder of 1983, said Burgess, "I expect an increase in gross sales above normal growth levels."

Dellwood Mall's other tenants include French Chateau Beauty Salon, Baskin-Robbins Ice Cream, Bed and Bath Fashions, Kelly-Moore Paint Co., Dellwood Firestone, Dellwood Lanes, Maverick Petroleum, Mode O'Day, Katheryn's, Connie's, Skibells, Fox Photo, Thornton's, H&R Block, The Bookworm, Weight Watchers, Dellwood Card Shop, Winchell's Donut House and Dellwood Laundry.

Imperial Shopping Center

This shopping center, owned and managed by the A.L. Attaway family, is located at the intersection of Midkiff Road and Wadley Avenue. The center experienced a number of tenant changes during 1982.

New tenants include T Shirts Etc., Country Collections, Simple Pleasures and the Art Attack. Additionally, Bennett Personnel Consultants is now called Total Office Service and Rapid Color is called Fotomakers.

Other tenants in the center include Imperial Produce, Carrousel Floors, The Gazebo, Robert's Copper Pot, The Peppertree, Texas Burger, Margaret's Children's Wear, Edbert's of Midland, Golden Dragon Restaurant, Sleepy Hollow Waterbeds, The Cherry Orchard, Kelly Services, Ventures in Light & Time, Bingham's Dance Studio, Suzi's Closet, Bride's Shop and The Sleep Haven.

Lifestyle improvement new at Y

New program can help smokers break the habit

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

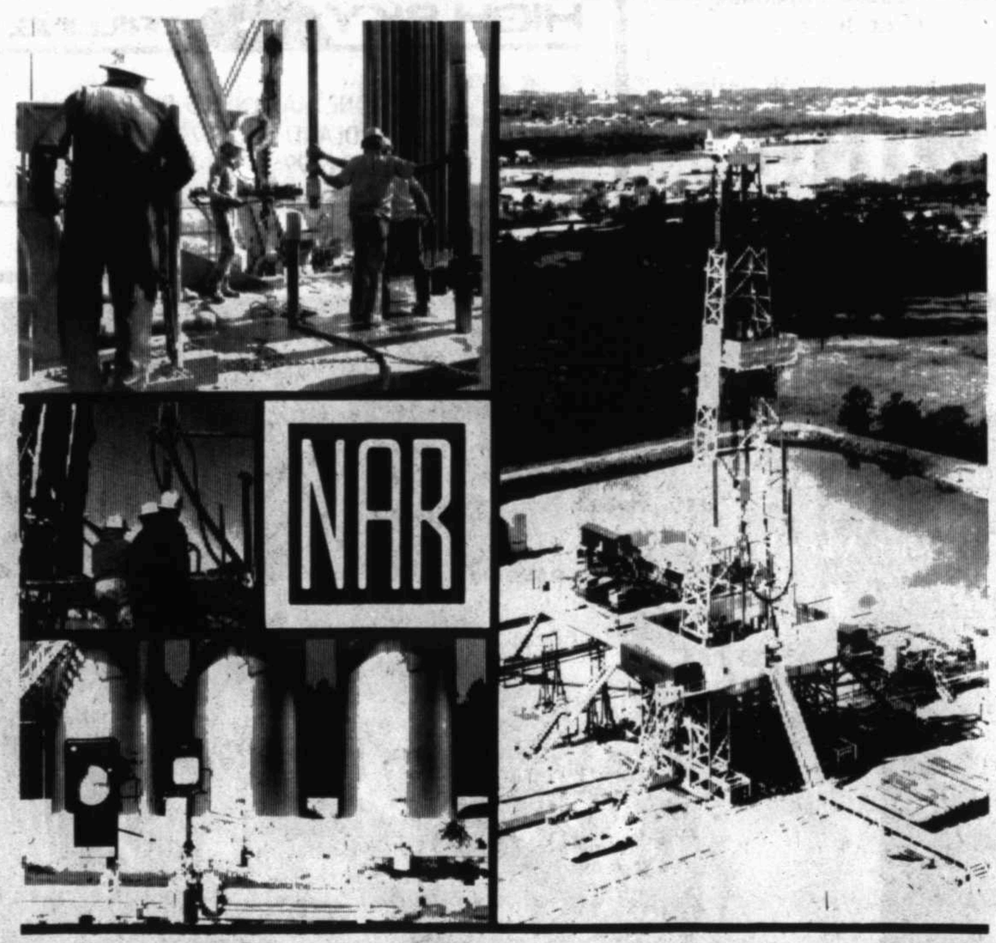

Health-conscious Midlanders want a slimmer waistline while keeping a close watch on the money belt. And many have found that the Midland YMCAs help keep a tally on both — waist and money.

Classes at the four Ys — Central, Alamo, Washington and Park Center — range from women's to corporate fitness programs with a new emphasis this year on rehabilitation.

At the Central Y, Director Rowland Wong will offer orthopedic and cardiac rehabilitation programs, along with a "health screen." The orthopedic program will help post-orthopedic patients get back into shape, while the medically-supervised cardiac program is also designed to help the post-operative patient. The health screening program will include testing for a well-rounded fitness program.

Central and Alamo Ys will offer dawn mini-workout classes and evening body revival, dancerobics and overweight (20 lbs. or more) classes. Tuning in to the teen-agers, the Ys will offer teen aerobics.

If you're shopping for new stores, just look around town

By BILL MODISETT
Staff Writer

For shoppers who've eagerly awaited construction of two more major shopping complexes near Midland Park Mall, the wait is nearly over. And while shoppers have been waiting on Courtyard at Midland Park and North Park, at least four more new shopping complexes appeared on the Midland scene.

Construction of the Courtyard at Midland Park, to be located directly east of Midland Park Mall across Midkiff Road, and North Park, on the northeast corner of a tract at the intersection of Loop 250 and Midkiff Road, is finally getting under way.

Courtyard at Midland Park

Dirt work has already begun on this 35-acre shopping center, being developed by Magnatex, according to assistant vice-president Richard McAlpin.

Construction began in the summer of '82 on the Security National Bank building and late in '82 construction was begun on some retail establishments. That work is being carried out by Woodmont Corp.

The entire Courtyard at Midland Park complex will include a section of single-family residences selling for $140,000 to $150,000 and a section of retail establishments which will include several restaurants, a four-story office building and a number of stores.

Construction of the building which will house the new Security National Bank began about two months ago.

The center will not be an enclosed mall, said Magnatex assistant vice-president Richard McAlpin, but will be designed with free-standing "pads," landscaping and paving. It will be in the style of a shopping plaza, he said.

North Park

Groundbreaking ceremonies were to be held recently for this shopping center being developed by Billingsley Enterprises. The center will hold about 75 shops in all when it's completed, which is expected to happen late this year.

Plans now call for North Park to provide 243,000 square feet of retail space with ample parking on a 19.5-acre site, according to the center's leasing agent, Helen Moise.

An 80,000-square-foot Target store will be featured in North Park, along with a 40,000-square-foot Super Duper grocery store and Cinema IV movie theater which will cover 14,000 square feet and is to open Dec. 1.

The center also will contain two large restaurants and several smaller sandwich-type restaurants, she said. All the center's shops will be contained in eight separate buildings.

General contractor is Jordan & Nobles Construction Co. The center will feature a landscaped plaza area and light-emitting canopies along walkways.

Mesa Verde Retail Center

This Spanish-Indian style strip center at the intersection of Midland Drive and Neely Avenue has just opened its doors for business, said leasing agent Todd Williams.

Construction on the 43,750-square-foot center began in April 1982, and when it opened for business it was already 70 percent leased, he said. The center was developed by Casbeer & Associates.

Williams said grand opening ceremonies for the center are planned for the near future. He said merchants locating at the center are optimistic sales in 1983 will be good.

Merchants at Mesa Verde Retail Center include Zentner's Steak House, Joey's Restaurant, BC's Frozen Yogurt, Ferguson Sports, U.S. Post Office annex, Mesa Verde Animal Clinic, Mexican Palace restaurant, the Carpet Gallery and Merry Hearts Trunk gift shop.

Mission Square

Jay Peck Construction Co. is developing this Spanish-style retail and office condominium complex on the corner of Big Spring Street and Palmer, just off Loop 250 in far north Midland.

Gary Viles, director of marketing, said the center is unique for Midland because "it's a different concept" that offers both retail and office space and allows retailers to purchase their office space. That way they're not subject to rent increases every few years, he said.

The center sits on seven acres of land and is constructed in Spanish style with stucco walls and a red tile roof. The complex offers a total of 103,000 square feet of space, 56,000 square feet for retail establishments and 47,000 square feet for offices. In all there are 56 condominium units, Viles said.

There are five buildings on the site including a two-story office building in the center of the complex. A 10-foot covered walkway surrounds the facility, which features desert-style architecture.

"We're getting very, very good response on our retail space," said Viles. He noted the developer is optimistic about Midland's future.

Mission Square will include People's Restaurant, a family-style restaurant, and a lounge. Also, there will be a variety of retail shops.

Polo Park

The retail section of the Polo Park development, a 1,300-acre multi-use tract on the northeast corner of Loop 250 and Garfield, is under way now. It will include a 105,000-square-foot fashion center, said Scott Steenson of Steenson Properties Inc., the developer.

"What we're trying to do is fill a void we see in the market," said Steenson of the fashion center, which will feature a number of exclusive shops directed at "the more upper-end fashion-type tenants."

Construction is scheduled to begin in late spring or early summer and the fashion center is to open in early 1984, Steenson said. Once complete, the center could possibly feature 35-40 shops.

There will be four separate one-level brick buildings with canopies, featuring individual storefronts. The complex will be heavily landscaped and parking will be provided in front of each store.

No name has been selected for the shopping center, but the name will incorporate the Polo Park name, said Steenson.

Tenants will include men's and women's fashion stores and one or two restaurants, he added.

Agora III Shopping Center

This shopping center is located on Garfield Street just south of Loop 250 and is being developed by Larry Lumpkin & Associates of San Angelo.

It was begun in April 1982 and is scheduled to open soon, said leasing manager Bryan Chandler.

The center includes 35,390 square feet of one-level floor space and is 45 percent pre-leased, according to Chandler.

A number of restaurants will be among tenants of Agora III, including the Casbaah, a restaurant and nightclub which covers 7,200 square feet and will offer dancing and drinks. Chandler said over $500,000 is being spent just to decorate the inside of the exclusive club.

Another restaurant in Agora III will be Beau Monde, a steak house covering 4,600 square feet. The developer also is in the process of negotiating for a Red Lobster seafood restaurant to be located in a 5,000-square-foot facility adjacent to the shopping center.

The center also will include a Colonial Convenience Store which will feature no gas service, but an expanded wine collection; a ladies' ready-to-wear store; shoe store; jeweler's; men's wear store; combined gift and antique shop; and an art gallery.

Shopping down, sales up at Midland Park Mall

By BILL MODISETT
Staff Writer

Just when you thought Midland Park Mall was everything it could be, you learn the truth: 1982 was another year of growth and excitement for mall shoppers and merchants, and 1983 promises to be even better.

Shopping was "off" throughout the nation in much of '82, as countless news stories to that effect testified. And shopping was off to a degree in Midland, too. When the economic road gets bumpy and pockmarked with potholes, people don't spend money as freely as they might like to.

But Midland Park Mall finished 1982 with an estimated 15 percent increase in sales over the previous year, noted marketing director Pam Leach, "which is well above the national average."

She went on to add that economically Midland is in an enviable position compared to the nation and said mall officials remain extremely positive about the Tall City's future.

In fact, Midland Park Mall is rapidly becoming the "hub" of retail development for the northwestern part of Midland, she noted, and continues to spark new businesses in that region.

At the mall itself, several new merchants opened their doors in 1982 and several more are scheduled to open this year. New merchants which located there in '82 included Bennigan's, the Phone Center, Beef 'n Go, Butler's Shoes and Games People Play.

Linksters have four courses to swing through

By CHAD PUERLING
Sports Writer

A mild climate and looooong summers have been major reasons for the rising popularity of golf in the West Texas.

Linksters in Midland have a choice of four locations where they can pound away at the little white ball and hope for that perfect shot.

Hogan Park, 3600 N. Fairgrounds Road, is the only public golf course available in Midland. The municipal course offers the opportunity to play three courses, depending on how one combines the 27-hole layout, which is divided into three nine-hole courses.

Holes one through nine measure 3,295 yards, with par set at 35. The same par holds for holes 10 through 18, but the course is slightly longer at 3,320 yards. The longest of the three segments, holes 19-27, is 3,410 yards, with par set at 36.

TWO ASSISTANTS, Tim Hanley and Daivid Tiechmann, have been added in the past year, bringing the total to five. The newcomers, along with assistants Joel Jackson, Charles Murphy and John Dill, provide private lessons and run the pro shop.

Rex Worrell is the head pro at Hogan Park, which annually hosts the Midland City Championship, sponsored by The Midland Reporter-Telegram.

"Our three biggest tournaments are the city championship, API (Affiliated Petroleum Industries) tournament and the Buffalo Trail Boy Scout Pro-Am," Worrell said.

Science critical for kids

NEW YORK (AP) — Many children, especially girls and minorities, are closed out of careers in science even before they reach junior high school, a leader in the television education field asserts.

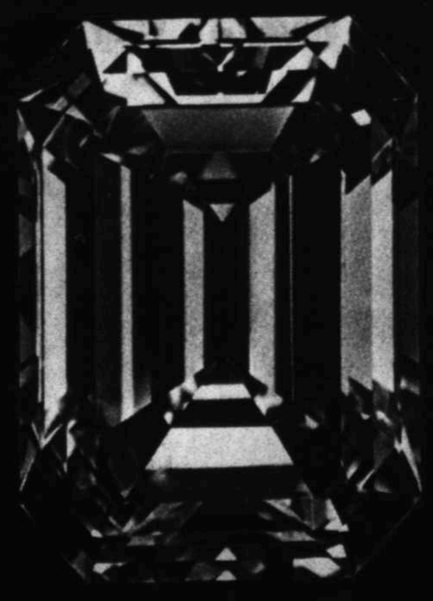

Joan Ganz Cooney, whose Children's Television Workshop has created teaching shows such as "Sesame Street" and "The Electric Company," declares that "science education continues to be a critical need in America." She spent two years in obtaining funds for a second set of "3-2-1 Contact" programs, the science series designed to introduce 8- to-12-year-olds to science and technology.

Most of the money came from the National Science Foundation and the U.S. Department of Education, which contributed $3 million each toward the 40 new half-hour shows scheduled for release in the fall of 1983. Meanwhile, the original "3-2-1 Contact" series has started its sixth set of reruns on the Public Broadcasting Service network.

"Our goal is to catch children even before they encounter much classroom science, and help them understand its relationship to their everyday life," Ms. Cooney explains.

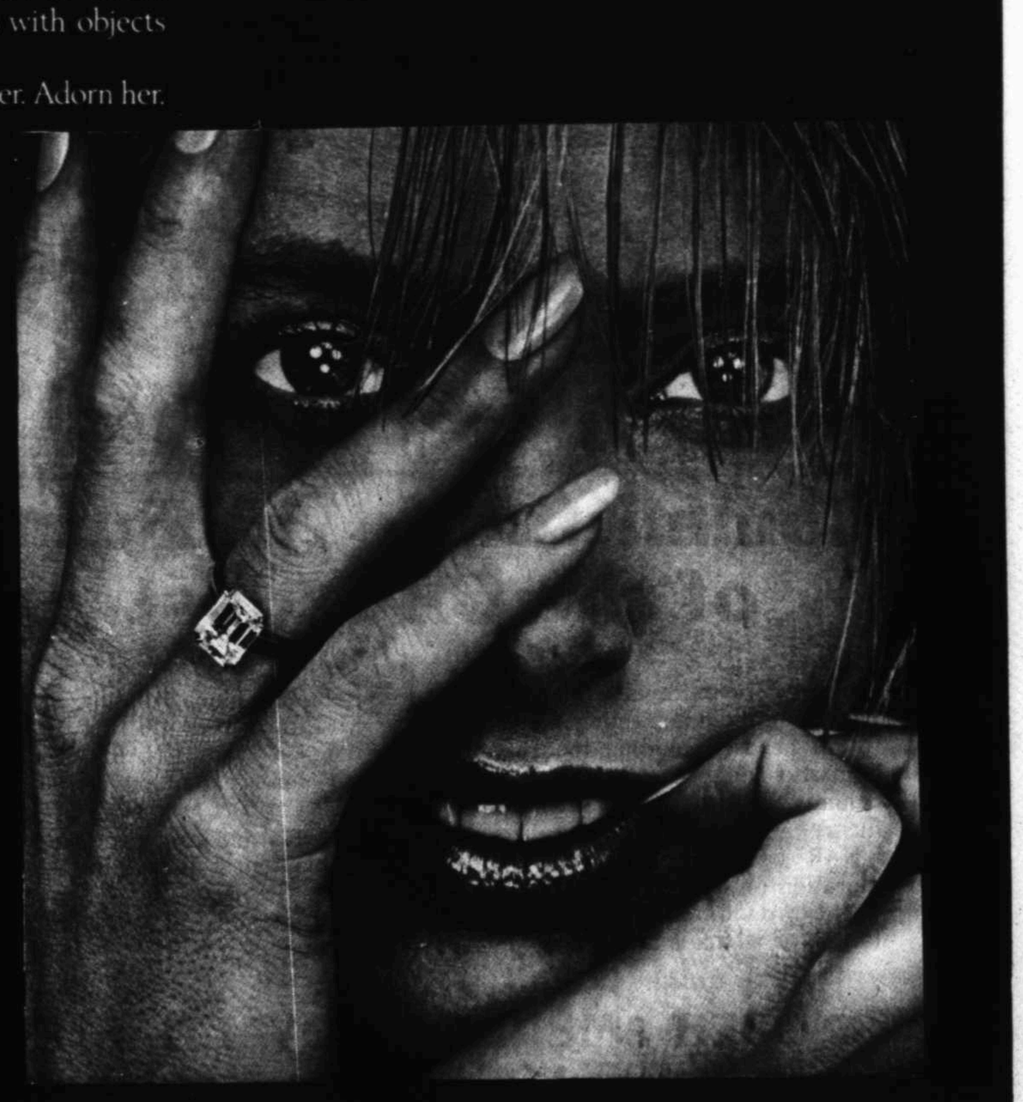

The diamond as adornment. With the beginnings of man came the basic desire of possessing beauty. For just as primitive man thought of decorating himself before he ever thought of wearing clothing, so do we wish to adorn ourselves with objects of great beauty.

And a diamond of a carat or more is the ultimate adornment. Adore her. Adorn her. Show the world you couldn't have made it without her.

Cubs should be in fine shape for '83

If '82 improvements are any indication...

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

If the strides made by the Midland Cubs last season are any indication, Tall City fans of the Texas League club can look forward to an exciting season in 1983.

Last year, the Cubs finished the first half race not only dead last, but from here to El Paso behind the first place Diablos. If Midland fell any further back, it was claimed, it would finish in the Class E Southeast Asia league, behind Rangoon and Bangkok.

Amazingly, about the only personnel change was to ship the team's best pitcher, Ken Pryce, to Des Moines in the American Association, and yet the Cubs behaved like a completely new ball club in winning the second half flag.

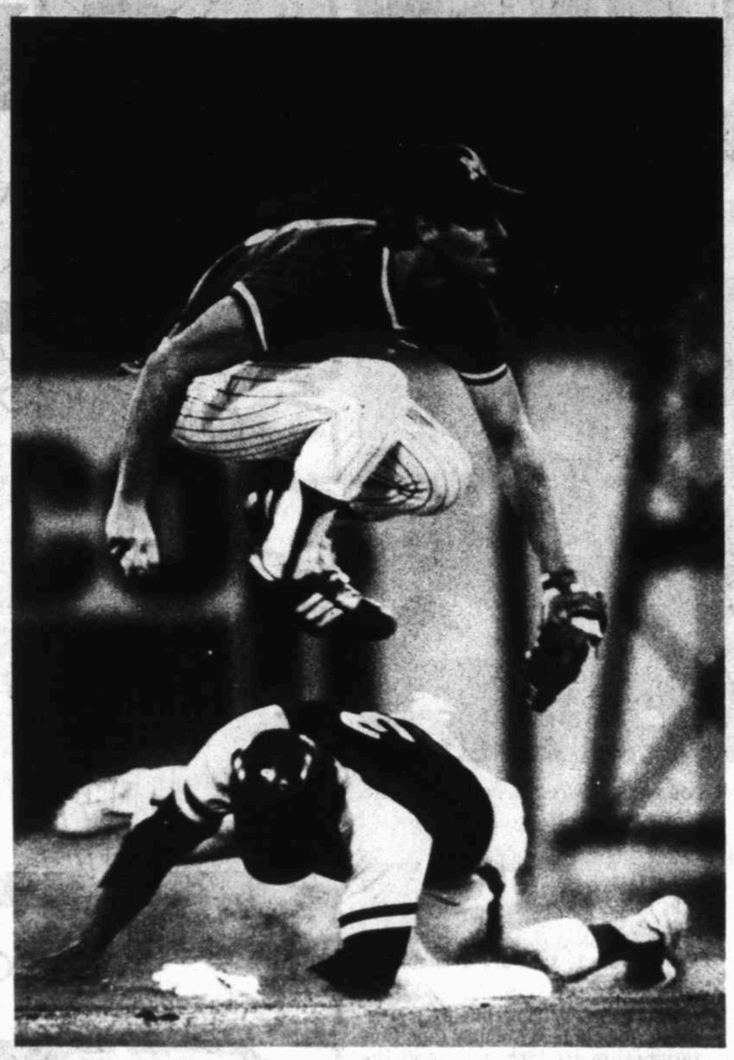

ALTHOUGH THE Chicago Cubs have had a farm club in Midland since 1972, this was only the first season under the Chicago Tribune ownership, with Dallas Green remodeling the National League club's image as new general manager.

So, if the Cubs can improve that dramatically in one season, fans can only breathlessly anticipate what may be in store this summer. In all likelihood the improvement may be more subtle, but Midland Cubs General Manager Bill Schammel came away from the Arizona Fall Instructional League with the feeling that "Chicago will be concentrating on its double A club this year. One thing that should help us is the fact that we now have two Class A clubs from which to draw talent."

Despite last year's foot-dragging first half, actual attendance was 71,000 and paid attendance was 114,000, up from 105,000 the previous season. Both are Midland records.

"It was a successful year and we were happy with some of the changes made," says Schammel.

One of the biggest was moving the Cubs' offices from Downtown Midland to the ball park. "It made for a much more efficient and convenient operation. We missed the drop-in visits of fans downtown, but at the stadium, there was no parking problem, making it convenient for fans to pick up season tickets and for getting deliveries," Schammel said.

The Midland Cubs, the Texas League Double-A farm team of the Chicago Cubs, provide summer excitement for baseball fans.

SPEEDING UP concession stand service, two satellite stands were built last year for beer sales, moving the malt out of the main concession stand.

"Naming Ernie Johnson to head the concession operations was a key to our success," Schammel said. Johnson is the Midland Lee High baseball coach. "We gave the fans good products at fair prices and they ate more than ever. This year we are going to put names on the backs of the concession people to give it more of a family atmosphere."

Last year, the entire stadium was painted and the old screen in front of the stands was replaced. The Cubs even received a tarp from Chicago to protect the field on rainy days.

This year, Schammel's pet project is doubling the size of the men's and women's rest rooms, "something that has been sorely needed for years."

Dead spots in the game will be enlivened by the addition of tapes for use over the PA. "We'll have 40 to 125 tapes, something for every occasion," says the Cubs' GM. "And organ music will be back. I taped the organ at Wrigley Field. Ed Bodecka is the organist and his music is up tempo. Organ music is traditional at ball parks and I think the fans will like the tunes that Ed plays.

"OUR OBJECTIVE is to entertain the fans in the dead spots, provide good concessions and a clean facility for wholesome family entertainment."

Special promotions will include the return of the Chicken and possibly Max Patkin, the Clown Prince of Baseball. There will be two Chamber of Commerce Pack-the-Park nights, back-to-back.

On the field, Tom Harmon, bullpen coach in Chicago last year, is the new manager and Schammel predicts he will be Midland's most popular manager since Jim Saul. Chicago GM Green publicly expressed his unhappiness with the pitching in the Cubs farm system and, in fact, it was one of the reasons for Midland's poor first half. Green is doing something about it this year by appointing Glen Gregson a full-time coach.

Midland Ys offer programs for everyone

For younger children, youth sports is an unbeatable combination of kids, adventures, values, sports and fun. Children in grades kindergarten through 6 have the opportunity to learn a sport, play to the best of their ability and have fun. Adult volunteers assist in coaching and officiating. Activities include flag football, tag football, a variety of basketball and softball.

Day care also is available at the Ys. Three programs — after kindergarten, total kindergarten and after school — offer care for children at various times. Parent-child programs include Indian Guides, Indian Princesses and Co-ed Trailblazers, designed to provide parents and children the opportunity to participate in planned activities.

Swimming classes for children and adults offer a variety of beginning, intermediate and advanced courses with an emphasis on safety. As with swimming, gymnastics is available for toddlers, allowing youngsters to explore a wide variety of movement and activities. Progressive gymnastics is designed for beginners through intermediate beginners, teaching the children fundamental gymnastic skills.

And for adults with nagging bad habits, there's the positive lifestyle program. This program can help a person quit smoking, lose weight and improve personal skills.

Midland offers linksters four choices

Three private, one public course available

The newest of the three private courses is Green Tree Country Club, 4900 Green Tree Boulevard. The 6,700-yard, par-71 course has the distinction of being represented on the Tournament Players Association tour by Tom Kite.

Kite has won the Vardon trophy, given to the golfer with the lowest stroke average, for the last two years, and was the tour's leading money winner in 1981.

HE IS currently ninth on the all-time money-winners list after 12 years on the tour. The University of Texas graduate moved past Billy Casper and Gary Player with his first tour victory in '83 at the Bing Crosby Pro-Am.

Despite all his accomplishments, Kite has not been a big winner on the tour, notching two victories in the last two seasons. But consistency has been his friend, as 36 times he's finished in the top 10.

The Crosby also was a historic win when his third-round score of 62 broke the course record by two strokes under less than ideal weather conditions. It was Kite's fifth tour victory.

And if you dream of scoring a hole-in-one, Green Tree offers the shortest posible route of area courses. The par-three sixth hole measures a mere 140 yards, but there's a catch — water. A lake that snuggles up to the right side of the green has an inlet that protrudes between the tee box and the green. There is also a sand trap on each side of the green, making this tempting hole a possible nightmare.

RANCHLAND HILLS, on East Wadley Avenue, has undergone major revisions in the past year.

"It was the culmination of an ongoing project over the last couple of years," Bob Pritchett, head pro, said.

The greens have been rebuilt and tee boxes relocated. Mounds, sand traps and water hazards have been added to the fairways along with the rarest of West Texas' foliage, trees.

Tournament Players Association tour pro Tom Kite holds court at Green Tree County Club, one of Midland's four golf courses — three private and one municipal.

"We re-seeded all the greens with bent grass," Pritchett said. "The new grass will be easier to maintain, especially in the winter, and it will putt faster," he explained.

The par-70 course used to be 6,555 yards long but the new layout hasn't been measured and certified by the United States Golf Association yet.

Playing on nine of the 18 holes is still on temporary greens. H.M. Veil, superintendent in charge of the renovation, expects the last nine greens to be ready in May.

Pritchett is assisted by Shaun McDonald and Rick Anthony.

Due to a high demand for their services last year, the three offered private lessons to club members only. But this year anyone can take advantage of their expertise, although their time is still limited.

FOR THOSE long-ball hitters, Midland Country Club on the Lamesa Highway offers the longest area course at 7,354 yards.

George Clark, the head pro, has four assistants — Mark Eaves, Terry Lester, Bill Irwin and Mike Peterson.

In 1981 MCC underwent renovations similar to those at Ranchland Hills.

The course now features five water hazards, 56 sand traps and sea-side bent grass greens.

Although the tee boxes remained the same, the general landscape was changed with the addition of several fairway mounds.

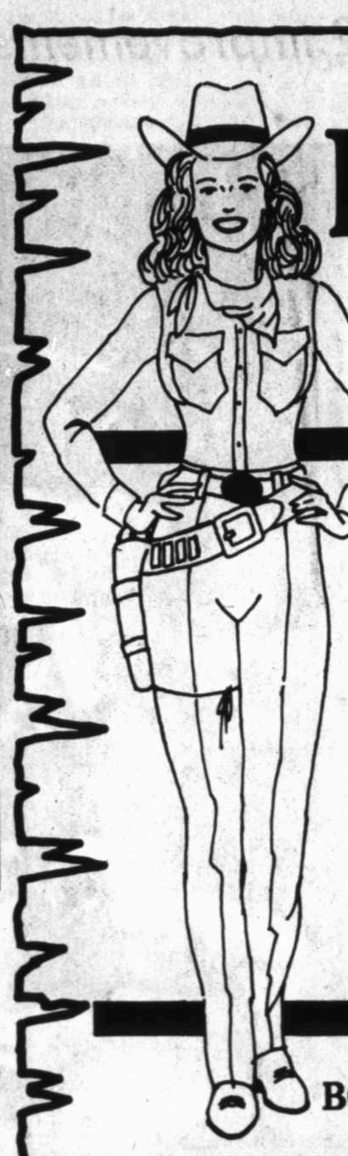

In keeping with its long image, the

The Pro Shop is open to the public and private lessons are available by appointment.

MCC hosts two long-running tournaments, the Midland Country Club Invitational, in its 13th year, and the Annual George Clark Tournament, now in its 19th year.

course offers a real challange to those wood players, with the city's longest hole.

The 601-yard, par-five 15th hole is a double dog-leg, with the curves running both left and right. For those afraid of heights in their golf scores it is the first handicapped hole.

'Best' Jaycee chapter not that in some minds

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The Jaycee chapter named best in California is being sued by the U.S. Jaycees because it admits women, a situation called "laughable" by the chapter's president because the women helped it achieve the honor.

"In Palo Alto, we have a woman mayor, half the city council is women, and about 30 percent of the police force is women," said chapter president Steve Poizner said. "We're in a city where women play an equal role with men in many situations, in business and in government.

"It's pretty funny, isn't it?" said Poizner. "I think it's laughable. We wanted to get this No. 1 ranking because it just points out why this whole situation is so ridiculous.

"For an organization that stands for leadership training and community service, we cannot justify having a men-only rule."

The California Jaycees, meeting in San Diego a little over a week ago, selected Palo Alto as the best of the state's 250 chapters for the quarter ending in February because of the excellence of its leadership training and community service.

The U.S. Jaycees filed its suit last summer, contending the chapter didn't deserve the Jaycee name because it broke a bylaw when it let women join.

Chaps, Stone keep excitement going

Basketball one of MC's successful athletic teams

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

West Texas is football country, but even a hotshot Hoosier or julep-sipping Kentuckian might feel at home on the stark plains of the Permian Basin if Midland basketball continues in its present direction.

Midland College not only has a National Junior College Athletic Association championship to go with three successive Western Junior College Conference championships, but, if MC Athletic Director Delnor Poss has his way, MC's Langford Chaparral Center will become the Madison Square Garden of West Texas basketball.

The Center will host the Region V Junior College tournament March 4-6 and the Region I Class 5A high school tournament the same weekend, just a week after the girls Class 5A Region I tournament at the Center. And Poss is thinking in terms of lower classification regionals here in the future.

It all serves to emphasize the up-and-coming athletic reputation established by Midland College in less than a decade. The program began in 1975-76 and already MC has notched national Juco (junior college) titles in women's tennis (1975, 1976 and 1981), men's tennis (1978) and women's golf (1982).

IN ADDITION to winning the NJCAA basketball crown at Hutchinson, Kan., last spring, MC produced two Juco All-Americans in Charles Johnson (1981) and Puntus Wilson (1982).

The basketball program began to take off when Poss took over as basketball coach at midseason of the 1975-76 season and guided MC to a second place in the Region V tournament. Poss was named athletic director after the season and began the search for a successor as coach.

"We set our goals to promote basketball," relates Poss, a one-time All-Border Conference guard at Hardin-Simmons University. "That we have is evidenced by the men's and women's Class 5A regional tournaments at the Langford Center."

Jerry Stone

"Dr. Al Langford gave me the authority to hire a coach. We narrowed the field to three. The two we didn't hire have gone on to become successful coaches at four-year colleges, both earning conference coach-of-the-year honors last year."

But Poss has never looked back on the one he did choose. Jerry Stone has made Midland College a national power.

Midland College, whose dynamic 5-foot, 6-inch guard Anthony "Spud" Webb was featured in "Sports Illustrated" last fall, has its eye on a second straight National Junior College Athletic Association championship.

POSS FIRST MET Stone when they opposed one another in a men's industrial tournament. "I worked some games for him as an official when he was coach at Tarleton College. You can tell a lot about a coach by the way his players react to situations and their overall behavior. I was impressed by his teams and their conduct, so I asked Jerry to apply."

It turned out to be a master stroke in the evolution of an embryonic basketball program that was still tottering on wobbly legs.

After a 16-15 debut season, Stone's Chaparrals were 21-12 in 1978-79 and finished third in regional. In 1980-81, the Chaps were 27-6, placing second in WJCC and Region V only because of the presence of eventual national champion Western Texas College.

In 1980-81, MC won its first WJCC championship with a 30-3 record, but was denied a trip to nationals in the Region V finals.

Last year, losing four early-season games and then reeling off 24 straight wins, the 34-4 Chaps went all the way, led by Wilson and 5-foot, 6-inch Spud Webb, both of whom were named to the All-NJCAA team.

As far as Poss is concerned, Stone is much more than a winning coach. "His philosophy is to help the young men to become better and more useful people. He feels we are not here to exploit their athletic ability, but rather to make use of that ability while directing them toward becoming better citizens."

OF COURSE, winning was just part of the task of the MC mission of promoting basketball.

Perhaps an even bigger task was winning the fans.

The first Region V tournament in 1980 was the first step, and the crowds at Chap home games have grown every year since.

"We recognized that we had to have a team that was entertaining as well as successful," said Poss, "and I think the fans' response indicates the brand of basketball we play is entertaining.

"One of Jerry's strong points is his ability to analyze character. As a result we have an exceptional percentage of athletes who stay and become productive (athletically and academically). That's a good indication that players Jerry recruits are quality athletes who are quality people. That goes for all our coaches, which is why we are able to field teams that are representative of the community."

MC will open its privately financed on-campus athletic dorms in March. The dorms will be beneficial to the overall program.

Midland College won the women's national golf championship last year and then dropped the sport because of scheduling difficulties. That leaves a program of basketball, men's golf under Poss, and men's and women's tennis under Dr. Leon Dulin, who is in his second year as coach.

Future additions?

"We thought about baseball," admits Poss, "but at the moment there are too many obstacles — scheduling, a place to play to start with. If a new sport is added, it would probably be women's basketball. It would be the most logical because of the built-in competition. And the WJCC is probably the best women's competition in the country."

Would you want to spend your vacation in Iowa?

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — A researcher investigating Iowa's tourism potential says the state ranks low on the list of places out-of-staters think of as a possible destination.

The solution? The state should spend $1.5 million a year for five years to snag an additional 1.25 million travelers who would spend an additional $160 million.

The plan suggested that Iowa be promoted as a place that offers travelers brief breaks from their routines. The campaign should focus on travelers with younger children, travelers older than age 50 and travelers passing through Iowa on their way to somewhere else.

Understanding school sports makes enjoying them easier

New system gives more teams chance

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

"I don't really understand all that goes on about the playoffs, but I just like to see the kids play. I do know that the good teams are rewarded for good seasons in some way, but I just read the paper to find out what it all means when one of our teams does good."

For the most part, Midland sports fans support local high schools in their athletic quests about as well as any town of similar size. Midland seems to want a quality atmosphere of competition for the community's kids.

However, at a recent basketball game where about 1,500 spectators gathered, a small poll was taken to determine if the average fan understood the competitive structure. Few did.

Thirty Midlanders, selected from the crowd at random, were asked three questions. Who governs the high school athletic competition? How many teams make the playoffs? What is the importance of making the playoffs?

Only 14 — less than half — knew that the University Interscholastic League is the governing body of sports competition in Texas. Of those that did know, only five knew how the UIL is structured.

Twenty-one of the 30 questioned did know that two teams from each UIL district make the playoffs. Some didn't know about the UIL, but they knew that two teams from this district will make the playoffs.

Ironically, only 20 of the 30 knew that teams which make the playoffs are in a battle for a state championship.

"I DON'T REALLY understand all that goes on about the playoffs, but I just like to see the kids play. I do know that the good teams are rewarded for good seasons in some way, but I just read the paper to find out what it all means when one of our teams does good," was the response of one fan.

Midland Lee and Midland High athletics are governed by the UIL, based in Austin. Schools in the UIL — over 98 percent of Texas' public schools — are divided into classifications by enrollment.

Midland is in Class 5A, the largest UIL classification. Each class is then subdivided into districts — there are 16 in Class 5A. Midland is in District 4, hence the 4-5A league.

Last fall the UIL made a new ruling that each district would be allowed to send two teams to the state playoffs in volleyball, football, basketball, team tennis, golf and baseball. Previously only one team from each district earned advancement to the playoffs.

Swimming and track are a bit different, in that the top individuals were already allowed to advance in state competition, regardless of how the team fared.

"I think the new UIL ruling is welcomed by everyone concerned," noted Gil Bartosh, athletic director for both Midland high schools. "It can't but help all of the programs involved. More interest will be created and the district races will have interest at a peak for most of the teams all through the respective seasons."

LEE FOOTBALL coach Spike Dykes became one of the first prophets of the new ruling. "I don't think it will take long for a second-place team in some district to win a state championship. Often there is not much difference in a second-place team and a district winner," Dykes said last summer before football was the first to test the new ruling.

Beaumont West Brook won the state football championship in December. It was a second-place team.

District 4-5A tested the new ruling about as well as any league in the state: Four teams tied for second place, forcing a coin flip between Lee, MHS, San Angelo and Odessa High. San Angelo won the coin toss and won two playoff games before being eliminated. The Bobcats went as far in the playoffs as did league champion Odessa Permian.

So far, Midland has only been a victim of the new ruling, but there isn't a coach in town who would want to change it.

Volleyball was much easier to decide. Midland High and San Angelo tied for the league title, making both eligible for the playoffs. Midland High defeated San Angelo in a one-match playoff to see who would be seeded the No. 1 district team in the playoff tournament.

Although the UIL is the ruling body, each district rules itself under the UIL guidelines. The District 4-5A Executive Committee has that job. It is made up of league athletic directors and school superintendents.

THE UIL RULING only stated that two teams from each district would be eligible for the state playoffs. The Executive Committee decides how that will be accomplished, with each district determining rules of its own regarding ties.

In District 4-5A, one-game playoffs will be held to determine the state tournament seedings in all sports except football, where the UIL does not allow an extra game to be played.

So the next time you see a Midland team compete, think about what it's all about. Although the UIL comes under much criticism from time to time, it's a unique organization and lays the foundation of the state's competitive athletic system.

The UIL has doubled its reward for the good teams and has given new hope where there was none. The competitive spirit now has doubled goals. We have already seen, in football and basketball, how this gives added meaning not only to the teams involved, but to the sports fans themselves.

The City of Midland Swim Team's home, Mabee Pool, underwent extensive remodeling recently. Visiting Japanese swimmers were given a tour of the facilities in January.

Midland's swim team sees changes for better in '82

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

The City of Midland swim team got off to a fresh start in 1983 with a new head coach, a renovated complex and a growing number of participants.

Paul Bridgers, 24, came to COM in September as an assistant coach "specifically to strengthen the younger age group program. Before that I coached in Las Cruces, N.M. (where he earned the honor of Swimming Coach of the Year in New Mexico), for two years and was an assistant college coach for the men's and women's teams at New Mexico State University before that," he said.

On Dec. 15, Bridgers took over the head coaching chores at COM when his predecessor, Hank O'Neill, had to step down for health reasons.

Before becoming a coach, Bridgers competed in swimming for 12 years in Orange County, California.

"My best event was the 400 I.M. (individual medley). In my last year of college, I was a junior college All-American in the 400 I.M. and the 200 backstroke."

COM, which provides a learning and competitive program for swimmers of all ages, is a non-profit organization receiving no government funding for its operations. The operating budget comes from dues paid by team members and from fund-raising efforts by members from within the community.

For the past two years, members have been working toward raising enough funds to build a 50-meter pool next to the team-owned Mabee Memorial Swim Center, which has a 25-yard pool.

Though they were able to come up with the necessary funds for building the pool, projected operating costs on a year-to-year basis proved to be too for COM to handle, so the idea was scrapped in favor of renovating Mabee.

"This has to be the best short-course facility in West Texas," said Bridgers about the recently completed remodeling.

Other new merchants scheduled to open this year include Foot Locker, an athletic sportswear and shoe outlet; Hit-or-Miss, women's ready-to-wear; and Schlotzsky's Sandwich Shops, which took the last remaining vacancy in the mall's "food court" area.

Of course, four big drawing cards for the mall are the "anchor" stores: Sakowitz, which opened last year, and the other three "anchor" stores, J.C. Penney, Dillard's and Sears. Those and the mall's other 85 merchants continually assure busy mall traffic.

Other mall merchants include Alroe, American Music, Baker's, Barnes-Pelletier, B. Dalton Books, Bealls, Bed & Bath, Bernie Franks, Brooks, Casual Corner, Chess King, Chick-fil-a, Coach House Gifts, The Cutting Edge, Desmond's, Famous Corndogs, Famous Ice Cream, Fanfares, Fashion Conspiracy, Florsheim Shoes, Foot Action, Foxmoor, General Nutrition Center, Gold Mine, Gordon's, Great Cookie, Great Expectations, Great Hot Dog, Gyros & Salads, Home Savings, The Islands, J. Midland Park Mall showed an increase in sales during 1982, despite shopping being down around the nation.

The mall continues to offer numerous special attractions throughout the year. The Midland Westside Optimists' Sportsfest — a display of sport and recreational equipment — entertained shoppers late in February. Some of the other events already scheduled for the remainder of the year include:

March 5 — The 3rd annual Best Little Fiddlin' Contest in Texas.

March 17-19 — Spring "festival of art."

April 11-16 — Home and Garden Show.

April 26-30 — Fine art show and sale.

Sept. 15-17 — Antique show.

Sept. 19-24 — Home energy show.

Other events to be featured at the mall this year include repeat appearances by Strawberry Shortcake and her friends, the Pink Panther and the Inspector, and Bob Eubanks and the Newlywed Game.

In addition to Ms. Leach, mall officials include Jim Ellis, mall manager, and Ted Connolly, operations director.

Somebody's reaction was 'hot dog!' to Elsie's cooking

ROANOKE, Va. (AP) — Elsie Chaknes said she was busy when the customer at her hot dog stand asked for pencil and paper and handed her a note earlier this month.

When she finally read it several hours later, it said, "The best in the states. Good luck," and was signed, "Robert Redford."

Whoever really signed the note was more of a hot dog connoisseur than a movie star, but it took some doing to find that out.

After several calls to Hollywood and a ski resort in Utah in which Redford has an interest, Mrs. Chaknes determined that Redford had never been in Roanoke and, apparently, had no plans to be, either.

New coach, improved facility highlight COM year

The renovation produced a slightly different look for the pool's interior. Concrete bleachers, a snack bar and carpeting were added to the pool area, while the locker rooms were enlarged, ventilated and a concrete ceiling was put in to replace the previous metal one.

"The whole baby was repainted also," said Bridgers. "It was looking sort of gruesome for awhile."

Future projects to improve the facility's training capabilities are also on the agenda, with the next big step being the addition of a weight room.

"Along with the bleachers, we have room underneath for a weight training facility, which is really becoming vital for age-group swimmers," said Bridgers. "The locker rooms have been greatly enlarged and improved. We had inadequate shower facilities, but now each locker room is 50 percent larger than before.

"I don't know if anyone will find this interesting or not, but we also have new pumping and chlorinating equipment, all brand new," he added.

COM has a membership of 76 swimmers from all age groups, which Bridgers says is from a "steady growth over the past couple of years."

Though exact figures on COM's growth aren't readily available, Bridgers said a comparison can be made through the annual Winter Invitational swim meet held at Mabee in January.

"Last year at this time (January), we only had 42 swimmers in the meet," said Bridgers. "This year we increased to 52."

After a successful run throughout most of the '60s and '70s, In 1979 through 1981, membership fell off from 1979 to 1981. The oldest members of COM, those ages 15-18, number the fewest in the program, but Bridgers says that is normal because of "other high school sports.

"When you reach that age, it becomes difficult for an athlete to excel in two sports."

A major goal for COM is to provide its members with a chance to compete on local, state and national levels. From each event, a swimmer's time can be used for qualification in TAGS (Texas Age Group Swimming) meet and for National Junior Olympics.

Surprisingly, according to Bridgers, qualification times for the NJO are slower than those for TAGS, but that is because Texas has the fifth-strongest youth swimming program in the United States.

"TAGS is the big swim meet at the end of the season," said Bridgers.

COM has a strong history of success in the TAGS meet. Nine pennants are currently hanging on the north wall, each earned by the team because of finishes in the top 10. One pennant, misplaced during the renovation, is for COM's first place finish in 1969.

"We've still got a lot of boxes to unpack and it's probably in one of them," said Bridgers.

Vets group grows in numbers, strength

Brotherhood of Vietnam Vets joins international group

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

A local chapter of a statewide Vietnam Veterans organization has grown from a scattered handful of inquisitive vets to membership in a worldwide organization with more than 200 Permian Basin members.

Roger Stinson, a veteran and victim of the toxic chemical Agent Orange, started the local chapter of the Brotherhood of Vietnam Veterans Inc. in late 1981. Its membership picked up in early 1982 and has continued to grow.

The defoliant, dubbed Agent Orange because of the orange-striped barrels in which it was shipped to Vietnam, was sprayed in that country to kill enemy ground cover and food supplies. One of its active ingredients, TCCD (2,3,7,8-tetrachlorodibenzo-p-dioxin), has been called "the most toxic synthetic chemical ever produced" by a number of scientists.

STINSON COMPLETED two tours of duty in Vietnam between 1969 and 1970, where in 1969 he dipped his canteen into a nearby river. He said he knew planes were spraying Agent Orange, but what he didn't know is that it would affect him the rest of his life.

The dioxin, which defoliated the heavy vegetation in Vietnam and along the Laotian border in the 1960s, today purportedly is causing severe emotional, mental and physical problems for veterans, including Stinson.

After a personal plea to get the government to recognize and aid Vietnam Veterans who had been exposed to Agent Orange, Stinson founded the Midland chapter of the Brotherhood.

In January 1982, State Rep. Larry Don Shaw of Big Spring came to a meeting of the Midland Brotherhood chapter to discuss a landmark bill on Agent Orange. Shaw was a sponsor of the Texas legislation that gave the attorney general jurisdiction to represent veterans in class action suits against the government and provide genetic counseling and screening for them.

The local chapter was honored with another guest in February — Dan Jordan, the Brotherhood's founder. The 35-year-old Jordan came to drum up interest among Permian Basin veterans to fight for recognition by the U.S. Veterans Administration and Congress.

THROUGHOUT THE remainder of the year, Stinson, housing the organization's office in his home, kept veterans informed through newsletters and meetings. Chapter membership finally peaked at 40.

By November 1982 Stinson finally caught a glimpse of light on the controversial Agent Orange issue. The VA issued newsletters with information about Agent Orange. For Stinson, this meant the VA's first move toward recognizing the toxic herbicide as a health hazard. In the publication, "Agent Orange Review," information was provided about Public Law 97-72, which allows treatment of certain disabilities caused by the defoliant for eligible veterans.

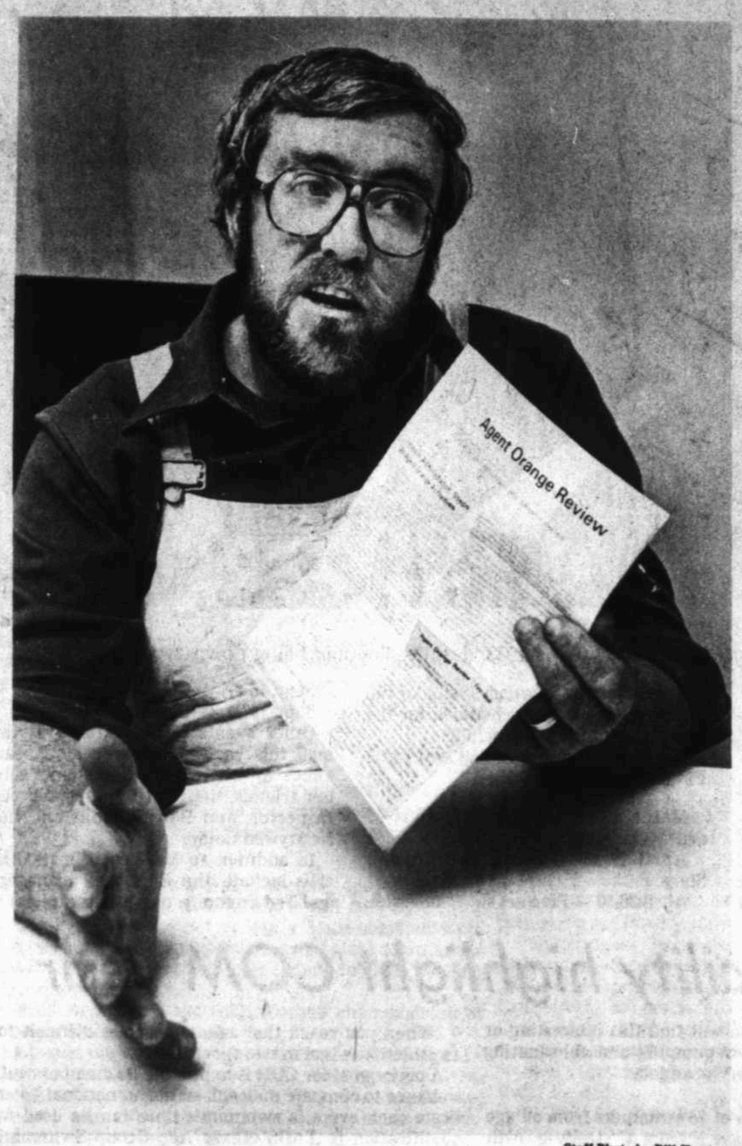

The Brotherhood went through a facelift in late 1982, attracting more than 200 Permian Basin members. The statewide organization merged with some 127 other veterans groups to form the United Vietnam Veterans' Organization (UVVO), which is recognized by the VA. The UVVO, serving 50 states and 11 countries, is for all veterans, with the major objective of helping them gain a better understanding of the VA.

Stinson said one of the greatest accomplishments this year concerning Agent Orange has been the Big Spring Veterans Hospital's acceptance of exposed victims.

"WE'VE SET UP a good rapport with the hospital," he said. "Now they have a Veteran Service Office which refers vets to the group (UVVO)."

In fact, Stinson was invited to speak at a medical conference at Big Spring. "We had one of the most honest meetings I've ever had at the VA," Stinson noted. "We've gained a new respect."

In the future, Stinson hopes to open a full-time UVVO office in Midland, set up a suicide hotline for veterans and get a full-time veterans service officer installed at Big Spring. The organization also plans to kick off a massive education program, informing local employers and the public about "our forgotten veterans."

Chemicals could add concern to beer drinkers' lives

Hearst Feature Service

Drinkers who have switched from wine to beer "because it's more natural" are in for a shock.

Between 1964 and 1966 brewers on both sides of the Atlantic added cobalt sulfate to their beers to build a better head of foam. They needed it to counteract a foam-flattening preservative, heptyl paraben. But cobalt salts killed about 48 beer drinkers in the U.S. and Canada. Had the ingredient been on the label, doctors would have been able to trace the cause of the deaths sooner and prevent many of them.

According to a $5 book, "Chemical Additives in Booze," alcoholic beverages are the only foods or beverages that don't have to carry a list of ingredients on the label. Some of those ingredients are surprising.

The Center for Science in the Public Interest published the book as "an attempt to alert consumers to what we do know, as imperfect as that knowledge is. We only hope that it will take less than another decade for companies to tell us about all the chemical additives they use in their products."

Country club life

Ranchland Hills Country Club, above, was the scene of several popular golf tournaments in 1982, along with many social gatherings. Midland Country Club, left, hosted the opening night party for "Waltz Across Texas," which was filmed in the Midland-Odessa area and had its West Texas premiere in October 1982.

Social events big at country clubs in '82

For Midland's country clubs, 1982 was a busy year.

According to George G. Bland, assistant manager at Ranchland Hills, the club offered a variety of activities, both on and off the golf course.

On the links, Ranchland Hills held six invitational golf tournaments in 1982, beginning with the Stampede, held May 28-30, in which approximately 250 golfers participated. The Women's West Texas Golf Tournament, June 7-11, was enjoyed by 250 women; the Firecracker Tournament, July 3-5, saw 200 golfers out on the links; 200 golfers participated in the Frank Key Sr. Tournament, July 17-18; 250 took part in the Blowout, July 29-Aug. 1; and 200 men and women participated in the Aug. 7-8 Fiesta.

On Oct. 1-3, Ranchland Hills was the scene of the Smash, an invitational tennis tournament enjoyed by 200 tennis buffs.

On the social side, Ranchland Hills hosted a Cajun Night, April 24, for 300 people. Featured at this casual event were Cajun food and music provided by a New Orleans jazz band. An Employees' Appreciation Day Picnic was held in September for all Ranchland Hills employees and their families. The all-day picnic featured barbeque, drinks and games. A Hawaiian Luau was held at Ranchland Hills Oct. 1. Attended by 200 people, the luau featured musicians and dancers from Hawaii. On New Year's Eve, the celebration was Country and Western style, complete with steak buffet, party favors and breakfast.

A board of directors was elected for the club in January. Staff members at Ranchland Hills are Charles Scott Jr., manager; J.J. Wagner, who joined the staff in June, assistant manager; George G. Bland, assistant manager; Norma Cook, office manager; Robert Pritchett, golf pro; H.H. Beal Jr., green supervisor; and Ronald Houdek, tennis pro.

Midland Country Club Manager Al Stepp said the club hosted the 1982 Crystal Ball and the premiere party for "Waltz Across Texas." Both of these were charity events supporting High Sky Girls Ranch. The premiere party netted High Sky $25,000.

Details on Greentree Country Club's activities were not available.

Organization reaches more children in 1982

Big Brothers-Big Sisters of Midland dramatically increased the number of children served during 1982 and made a break from its parent organization, according to Executive Director Carol Layman. The number of children participating in "Big Brother-Big Sister friendships" grew from 65 in January 1982 to 190 in December.

The agency, which matches adult volunteers with single-parent children, left Family Services and moved into its own offices, Ms. Layman said. Leaving United Way funding and increasing private contributions added to Big Brothers-Big Sisters' growth, as did a February guest appearance by Dallas Cowboy Billy Joe DuPree.

"Big Brother-Big Sister Friendships" grew from 65...to 190

"Big Brother-Big Sister friendships" involve 2-3 hours per week, Ms. Layman said. Big Brothers and Big Sisters serve as role models, companions and guides. Studies have shown these relationships contribute to better behavior among children, she said.

Seventy children are on the Big Brother Big Sister waiting list. People interested in becoming Big Brothers and Big Sisters can call 686-0033.

Some shopping centers were born, others were expanded and still others were remodeled in Midland during 1982.

Despite the recession, commercial retail space continued to increase in the Tall City, with the addition of several new shopping centers.

Shopping space will be enhanced in 1983 with the opening of three new complexes, including some of those pictured on this page:

—Mesa Verde Retail Center, Midland Drive and Neely Avenue.

—Mission Square, Big Spring and Palmer streets.

—Agora III, southwest corner of Loop 250 and Garfield Street.

Midland is in an enviable position compared to the nation, according to Pam Leach with Midland Park Mall. Mall officials remain positive about the Tall City's future.

Other shopping centers are either just getting under way or are in the planning stages. They include:

—Courtyard at Midland Park, Midkiff Road, across from Midland Park Mall.

—North Park, northeast corner of Midkiff Road and Loop 250.

—Polo Park, northeast corner of Loop 250 and Garfield.

Local service clubs have many worthy projects

By BILL MODISETT
Staff Writer

Throughout 1982, Midland service clubs and organizations were busy with projects designed to help people in the community.

Members of the Lions, Optimists, Rotarians and Jaycees conducted various community-oriented events worthy of note. The following is a compilation of the various organizations and their programs:

LIONS CLUBS

Downtown Lions Club — A total of 384 members make this active organization the largest of Midland's seven Lions clubs. The club also holds the distinction of being the third-largest Lions club in Texas and eighth-largest in the world. The club meets at noon each Wednesday in Midland Center.

Formed April 9, 1928, the club picks a Junior Lion and Lioness each week based on scholastic and athletic achievements, and provides financial support for the Crippled Children's Camp at Kerrville. During 1982, the club gave $4,500 to the camp.

A well-known event in Midland is this club's Pancake Jamboree. Last year the Lions fed pancakes, sausage and drinks to 7,800 people at Dellwood Mall. This year's version will be held March 12, and the Lions are hoping for 10,000 pancake eaters. Proceeds from the event fund various activities of the club throughout the year.

Club president is Jack Darden; first vice-president, George Loudamy; second vice-president, Bill Malone; third vice-president, Keith Somerville; and secretary-treasurer, Victor Horn.

Terminal Lions Club — Midland's second-oldest Lions club was chartered in the early 1950s. The club is involved in several community projects. The club will be conducting a raffle for a rifle in October or November in anticipation of hunting season.

The Terminal club meets at 6:15 p.m. Tuesdays in High Sky Restaurant in the Terminal Building at Midland Regional Airport.

Club officers include Richard C. Brandt, president, and Howard Barbee, secretary-treasurer.

Tall City Lions Club — Formed in January 1972, this club has a membership in the 40s. It meets at 8 p.m. Thursdays at 305 S. Stonewall. Each year the club participates in the White Cane project, a sight conservation program, and other community projects including a shopping spree at a local supermarket, the Christmas in April program and purchase of eyeglasses for children whose parents cannot afford them and for elderly persons. The club also is financially supportive of the Crippled Children's Camp in Kerrville.

Each year the club sponsors the annual Juneteenth Celebration, commemorating the day Texas blacks learned of the Emancipation Proclamation.

The club's officers include Ron Woods, president; Woodrow Bailey, immediate past president; Carneil Jackson, first vice-president; James Burton, second vice-president; W.M. Merritt, third vice-president; and Johnny Russell, secretary.

Westside Lions Club — Founded in 1952, this club supports the Crippled Children's Camp in Kerrville, along with several projects for the handicapped.

The club meets at noon each Thursday in its own building at Midland and Thomason Drives. Membership is in the 40s.

President is Bill Drummond. Other officers include Carl Pirkle, first vice-president; R.P. Greenwade, second vice-president; Warren Wallace, third vice-president; Warren Kelley, secretary; and Billy Burfeind, treasurer.

Eastside Lions Club — Members of this club are dedicated to helping needy people on Midland's east side. The club meets at 8 p.m. on the second and fourth Mondays of each month in the Rancho Grande Hall, 409 Scharbauer Drive.

There are 32 members in the club, which was founded in 1955.

Club officers include Mario Torres, president; Secundino Lara, vice-president; and John Rendon, secretary.

Southside Lions Club — This club was organized in May 1954, and was sponsored by the Downtown Lions Club. It meets at noon each Friday in the clubhouse at 111 E. New York.

The club holds various fund-raising events throughout the year.

Officers include Charles Gronow, president; Ken Overstreet, first vice-president; Tommy Woodruff, second vice-president; Coy Giles, third vice-president; and David Norton, secretary.

Morning Lions Club — This club, organized in October 1955, is extremely active in aiding the Crippled Children's Camp at Kerrville. In 1982, the club sent 18 children to the camp. Now it has organized a citywide campaign of all Midland's Lions clubs and is aiming to send 60 children to the camp this year.

Main fund-raiser for the club's 21 members is a hamburgerfest.

The club meets at 6:45 a.m. Tuesday at the Holiday Inn at 3904 W. Wall Ave.

Officers include George Thomas, president; Bill Bizzles, vice-president; and Frank Harlan, secretary-treasurer.

OPTIMISTS CLUBS

Optimist Club of Midland — This club's 42 members meet at noon each Tuesday in the Longhorn Room at Bonanza Sirloin Pit. All Optimist clubs stress "service to youth" and this one is no exception. This club sponsors Youth of the Month selection, Youth Appreciation Week, oratorical contests and Tri-star football.

The club also presents scholarships to two Midland College students each year and sponsors "Respect for Law" week.

Additionally, the club sponsors a "Help Them Hear" hearing assistance program and is now in the process of developing a portable hearing testing laboratory.

A main fund-raiser of the club is selling Christmas trees.

Club officers include Gary Nokes, president; Dan Cornelison, Don Parks and Max Reanau, vice-presidents; and W.E. Nance, secretary-treasurer.

Westside Optimist Club — This club's 36 members meet at noon each Wednesday in the Fraternal Order of the Eagles (FOE) aerie at 4300 W. U.S. Highway 80.

The club's primary youth-oriented projects include a moto-cross track project, girls' softball, oratorical contests, bike safety and Tri-star basketball. Money for the club's youth programs is raised during a spring sports show.

Officers include Dave Cooley, president, and Jean Junker, secretary.

Breakfast Optimists Club — This club meets at 6:30 a.m. each Wednesday in Sidewinder's Restaurant at the Holiday Inn. There are 12 members.

Primary projects of the club include youth oratorical contests, Youth Appreciation Week and sponsorship of baseball teams.

Club officers are Harry Griggs, president; Dale Biggs, vice-president; and Jack Moss, secretary-treasurer.

Greenwood Optimists Club — The Greenwood club meets at 7:30 p.m. on the first and third Thursdays of each month at Greenwood school.

Primary projects of the 35 to 40 members of the club include sponsorship of baseball, flag football and other community projects such as raffles. A barbecue is held at the school each year.

Salvation Army provides more help to needy in 1982

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

Slightly more than a year ago, Midland's Salvation Army served as a temporary home for a steady parade of immigrants with no place to call home but with steady work in the area's burgeoning oil business.

Major Pete Costas, Salvation Army director, suggested recently that 1982 differed from 1981 in one important, and disheartening, respect:

"This year (1982), most of the transient population we dealt with just had nothing whatsoever," said Costas. "Times are really bad right now. It's an entirely different thing."

Since the Salvation Army began operating in Midland in 1956, Costas said, people in need have been its specialty, prompting him to call 1982 "probably the biggest year we've ever had in Midland."

For example, Midland's Salvation Army served a total of 6,938 transient men compared with 4,836 men in 1981, or an increase of 2,102 cases. In 1982, 5,040 transient women were assisted compared with 4,200 in 1981.

In all, 10,166 transient persons received a variety of services, including food, lodging, medicine and clothing, during 1982. That total compares with the 5,903 persons served in 1981.

Nearly 30,000 meals were supplied for transients during 1982, compared with 12,351 meals in 1981.

"We really felt that we were doing what the Salvation Army is noted for doing, providing emergency services for transient people," said Costas.

"Honestly, it's really been fun," said Costas. "Like our cook says, you just throw another potato in the pot."

Costas noted that Salvation Army services are not reserved solely for transients, but spread among Midland residents as well.

A free lunch program boosted the total meals provided for residents to 4,833, compared with only 621 in 1981.

During Christmas, several Salvation Army programs provided food, toys and clothes for thousands of needy Midlanders. Christmas food orders for families jumped from 740 to 1,273.

New and used toys were given to 3,657 children, up from 2,014 in 1981. The Dress-A-Live-Doll program, in which people provide clothing for "adopted" children, helped put 412 youngsters in new clothes, surpassing the 334 children outfitted in 1981.

The Salvation Army also operates a day care facility for about 60-65 children, and sponsors summer camps, day camps and outings for youngsters.

Several Christian-oriented adult and youth programs are also part of the Salvation Army operation.

Workers conduct a League of Mercy Outreach Program in which shut-ins are visited and sometimes provided with gifts.

An emergency Salvation Army canteen often travels to the scene of emergencies, disasters and some special community projects to provide food and other services.

In January 1982, the Salvation Army was named the agency in charge of Transient Emergency Assistance for Midland. All churches refer transients in need of assistance to the Salvation Army. In turn, the Salvation Army receives TEAM financial support from the churches.

Costas said a thrift store and warehouse operation collect clothing and household goods and attempt to re-sell the merchandise to raise funds for Salvation Army programs.

During 1982, Costas said, the organization hopes to construct a two-story, 60-bed dorm from a portion of the warehouse to better serve the large number of transients flowing through Midland.

"The idea is to try to meet the need, whatever that might be," said Costas. "The needs are just as varied as the people."

Despite the difficult economic times which sent many people in search of the Salvation Army's familiar red shield, Costas said the organization had good success in raising money to finance its services.

"Midland is a very unique community. When there is a very viable need, the support has been there. It's probably unique anywhere. It's just beautiful, the amount of support here."

ROTARY CLUBS

Rotary Club of Midland — Largest of Midland's two clubs, this group, like all Rotary Clubs, takes part in community welfare, fosters good citizenship, promotes high business and professional standards and seeks to improve rural-urban understanding and advance international peace, understanding and good will.

The club has 123 members and meets at noon each Thursday in Midland Center. Projects of the club include support of High Sky Girls' Ranch, the Rotary foundation and other projects including scholarships at each of Midland's high schools.

Funds for those special projects come from club membership dues.

Officers include David N. Grimes, president; Camal C. Dakil, vice-president and president-elect; Roger A. Friedline, treasurer; and Russell O. Smith, secretary.

Midland West Rotary Club — This club's 50 members meet at noon each Tuesday at Broken Spoke Restaurant.

The club, which is 18 years old, boasts four Paul Harris Fellows, Rotarians who have donated at least $1,000 to Rotary International's fellowships for students to study at universities and colleges of their choice outside the United States.

With funds it derives from an annual art auction and membership dues, the club finances two college scholarships, two Boy Scout troops and an Explorer post. The club also sponsors a boys' R.Y.L.A. camp at Taos, N.M., and a diabetes camp at which campers learn information on the disease.

The club's officers are Jack Biscoe, president; Robert Gersten, vice-president; John Martin, secretary; and Mott Williamson, treasurer.

JAYCEES

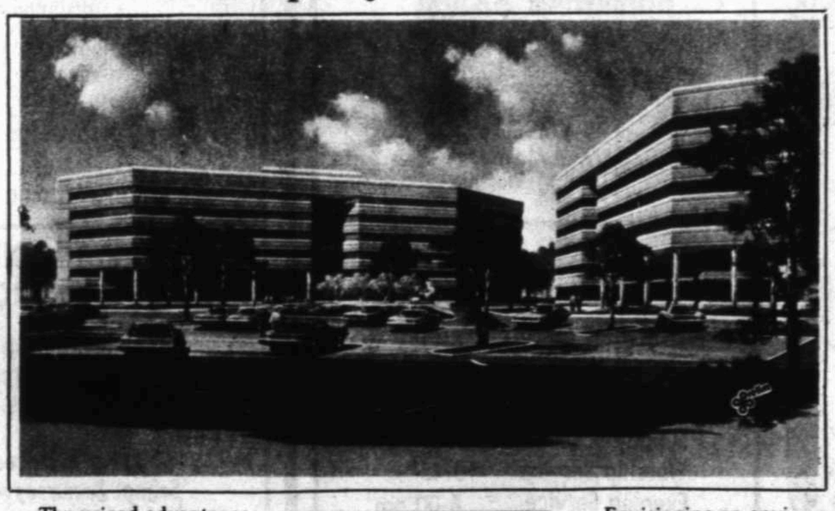

Midland Jaycees — This is a leadership-training organization for young men and women between the ages of 18 and 35. It attempts to improve leadership abilities of its 300 members.

Operating concession stands at athletic events, helping elderly or indigent persons and taking children on Christmas shopping trips are but a few of the projects undertaken by Jaycees.

The American Jaycees was first organized in 1915 at St. Louis, Mo., as the Junior Citizens Club. The name changed to the Junior Chamber of Commerce in 1918, went national in 1920 and became known as the United States Jaycees in 1965.

Officers include Robert McCommon, president; Jumper Davis, administrative vice-president; Bob Menefee, financial vice-president; Eloy Villafranca, civic vice-president; Phil Davis, treasurer; and Dan Pender, secretary.

New equipment will be installed soon in Midland Regional Airport's new control tower.

Airport will be taking off in new directions in '83

Permorama '83
reflections and directions of the permian basin

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Midland Regional Airport will be taking off in new directions this year, both in management and renovations.

While numerous businesses in the Permian Basin faltered last year as the recession initiated in the rest of the nation stalked in and grabbed the local economy, the city-owned airport not only flapped through intact but wound up bearing a profit.

In the view of outgoing aviation director Col. Wilson Banks, Midland Regional Airport serves as the lifeline for the Permian Basin, hooking up this isolated area with financial, business and industrial centers in the rest of the country to feed the local economy.

But last year wasn't all high-flying for the airport business. There were some downs, too, Banks noted.

Following its ascending climb pattern of the past years, the airport saw three new airlines and a resulting new record in boardings. Added to the list of carriers were Trans-Central, Air Midwest and Muse. Texas International and Continental merged into one airline. To be known as Continental, the larger planes used were substituted by TI's small aircraft. And Braniff, which had been one of two major carriers to Dallas-Fort Worth Airport with direct connections to the East Coast, crashed financially in May. Equipment and personnel were pulled out overnight, leaving the city holding the counter space.

THE YEAR STARTED with a boom in boardings. According to Banks, there was a 30 percent increase recorded for the first five months of the year. Then it leveled off, leaving a year-end figure that is 16.9 percent higher than last year's.

For 1982, there were 672,621 boardings. In 1981, the total was 575,139. And if it hadn't been for the snowstorms in late December which halted air traffic, the figure might have been higher, said Banks.

"It began to taper off after May," Banks recalled. "I think we've reached a leveling off point. If the economy turns around and the oil business starts to boom, we can expect an increase in 1983. But I don't think it will be as much as in 1982."

He expects Midland eventually to drop its increase down to the national average of 3 to 4 perent a year. The 20 to 30 percent growth of past years was unusual, he added.

But Midland still beat the Lubbock airport in boardings by more than 100,000. Lubbock reported 505,871 for the year.

Changing the face of the airport last year were additions and expansions to fixed base operators and a new air control tower.

THE CONTROL TOWER, being funded by the Federal Aviation Administration, is north of the current tower and is almost completed, said Banks. "It's now a matter of installing the equipment."

Texas Western completed construction of a hangar and began operation as an FBO. John Warren added a T-hangar and a common storage hangar to his FBO operation. The former Aquila Aero and now Memphis Aero finished construction of two common storage hangars and a taxiway. Chaparral Aviation added a new fuel service facility.

And a porous friction surface was poured onto the two primary runways. Not only does it reduce slipperiness of the runway, but it gives better drainage and eliminates ponding of water, Banks explained.

It was another record year in income as the airport generated more than $3 million. "We were above our budget by $1 million or so. We paid all our debt service and wound up with a profit," said Banks.

The airport also set records in revenues from the parking lot and rental car agencies. For 1982, rental cars brought in $579,686 and the parking lot generated $1,032,976. This is about $100,000 over the 1981 figure for rent cars and $200,000 more for the parking lot.

THAT ADDITIONAL revenue may help the city pay off its four primary projects which are in the mill for this year and estimated to cost about $17 million. And aiding the city will be about $8-9 million from a federal fund, known as ADAP, which is fed through airport user fees. The rest, proffered Banks, may come through Certificates of Obligation.

It was this increase in record numbers of the use of the airport which prompted the need for expansion projects. Banks said when the master plan was put together, Midland wasn't supposed to reach 600,000 in boardings until 1985. "This has fooled everyone."

The project that may get started first is expansion of the air carrier parking ramp. With bids to be opened in late January, work should be getting started by the end of March, said Banks. "This will add two air carrier parking spaces. Up to six 727s can park now. If we get another major carrier in, we need it."

The most important construction project and that which will bring the most dramatic change is the expansion of the parking lot. The lots currently hold little more than 700 vehicles. When completed, the new parking area will contain 660 spaces for short-term parking, 1,800 for long-term parking, 260 for rental cars, 270 for airport employees and 38 for impounded vehicles.

Included in that project is a change of the road system that goes around the airport. When finished, there will be two main roads into the terminal area, one from Highway 80 and the other from FM 1788.

Of all the projects, Banks called the parking lot expansion "the most important to us." By early March, the council should have bids before them to get started on the work.

"IT WILL TAKE about two years for construction. As it's completed, this whole airport complexion will be upgraded and it will be something people can be proud of."

The third project involves constructing a taxiway on the south side of the airport to serve the FBOs in that area.

And the fourth project, which has been on the back burner for over a year, means expanding the airport restaurant and relocating the Pliska Airplane to a spot inside the terminal building. The Pliska Airplane was one of the early-day planes and was constructed by a Midlander.

But this isn't all the construction that needs to be done at the airport. Banks said if he had an unlimited amount of money, he has a list of other projects which includes rehabilitating the general aviation aircraft parking areas and rebuilding runway 4-22 and replacing the lights. That lighting system dates back to World War II and replacement parts can't be found, he said.

With such a high growth rate at the airport, Banks wouldn't be surprised to see more major carriers trying to start service here in the future. Looking at Braniff's attempt to merge with Pacific Southwest Airlines and begin service to a few cities, Banks said Midland might be included. "If the merger is approved, Midland is on the list," he said. "And Delta Airlines still definitely is interested in Midland."

If more major airlines are added, however, Banks said the jetways may have to be extended. Part of the problem now stems from all the airlines "flying formation between here and Dallas," he chuckled.

GISD grows: Builds school; Implements new programs

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

GREENWOOD — No more striking example of the growth pains sustained by the Permian Basin exists than the metamorphosis of Greenwood Independent School System.

Eleven years ago the first senior class graduated four students. Six years ago the school's 12 grades contained 288 pupils. By May 1981, the figure had risen to 597. In the fall of 1981, it was 814. Last fall, it was 1,172, and by the time a new school year comes around next September, 1,300-1,350 students are expected to register.

That unprecedented growth of almost 500 percent in just seven years has transformed the school district from an intimate one into one of increasingly stupendous proportions. To cope with that astounding growth, the district is in the midst of a five-phase, $7.2 million building project and plans to implement new teaching programs to make the transition from a small school to a large one.

THE DISTRICT already has opened the doors of 13 new elementary classrooms and a bus garage, while Oct. 15 is the target date for completion of 31 high school classrooms, administration offices, a maintenance area and a physical education facility.

The new programs, meanwhile, are geared toward a "scope and sequence" system developed by the Houghton-Mifflin Company which details each instructional step for teachers and allows for an overlap from one grade to the next. A scope and sequence reading program already is under way for accreditation purposes while a similarly structured math program will be implemented next year.

"We felt a need to get back to basics," explained GISD superintendent James Warlick. "(Scope and sequence overlap) never creates a dead spot in the teaching situation...Six years ago when this school had 288 children the teachers visited and knew where each other was starting and stopping. But now we have four teachers on each level — not one — and for every grade level it's laid out for them."

TO PROVIDE parents with an understanding of the new system, two parent-teacher conferences a year are being conducted. "Reading to a child does not come naturally," explained Warlick. Parents need to work with their children at home to help us teach them to read."

The district also plans to upgrade its science and social studies curriculums next year.

While the entire Greenwood area has undergone tremendous growth the past few years, Warlick noted that most of the influx is younger couples with small children. While 120 kindergarteners trek to GISD daily, the high school contains only 40 candidates for graduation.

However, the very fact that greater numbers of pupils are within the lower grade levels is, in itself, reason enough to begin planning to cope with even greater growth in the future. "We will grow by at least 80 a year without any new influx," Warlick noted. "We hope to have students in good groups of size to create the best learning experience we can. The child is number one in the school and we need to always keep that in mind."

MOST OF THE Greenwood-area growth has been between the school and Midland, explained Warlick. "Our school district contains approximately 122 square miles and we run 11 bus routes daily with an average route of 10 to 12 miles one way," he said. "Ten of them go into a 24-square-mile area west of the school. Three years ago, we had six bus routes. Five of them went west and one of them went to the east. We bus about 90 percent of our students, and I imagine statewide that would put us in the top 2 or 3 percent."

Warlick has the previous school records of GISD pupils to indicate just where the families are coming from.

"At one time it seemed the major portion of our people were coming from elsewhere in the state or nation," he noted. "But the recent trend is that we're getting children from Midland Independent School District."

One major asset of GISD, said Warlick, is a lack of turnover in the school board, with only two changes during his three years as superintendent. "This allows consistency in the way the schoool is operated," he said.

Little doubt exists that GISD has been successful acamedically and athletically. High school students last year copped the state number sense championship and placed fourth in calculator, with five students qualifying for regional competition.

GHS also was scintillating at the state track meet, taking the high jump and ranking third nationally, while the boys basketball team was state runner-up. One boy made all-state in basketball and two made all-state-tournament. Football heroics were not unknown either: In one poll a Greenwood player was voted all-West Texas quarterback.

It's a district — and an area — which has made rapid strides in a few short years, and, if GISD estimates hold true, their impact may be even greater in the future.

Newly opened businesses make inroads in Big Spring's economy

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

BIG SPRING — It was a site forever on the minds of westward-bound emigrants traveling the southern overland route: a limestone-bordered basin into which poured the waters of a great spring.

For half a century before Captain Randolph B. Marcy watered his contingent from its purities, the spring had been frequented by the warriors who rode the Comanche War Trail. And for eons prior to that, it had served as an oasis for buffalo, coyotes, deer, wolves.

It became known as the "big spring," and the town that grew up around it in the latter part of the 19th century fittingly assumed the same appellation.

From those humble, though historic, beginnings, Big Spring has evolved into an important city and has seen a steady increase in manufacturing during the past year.

But adversity, traditionally, has not been unknown here.

"Our Comanche guide tells us that he has often been (to the big spring) before," recorded Marcy in 1849, "and that there was a battle fought here some years since between the Pawnees and Comanches, in which his brother was killed."

AND TOO, IT has borne evidence of cataclysm at times. The earliest settlers reported that so many buffalo had been slain in the vicinity of the big spring that a man could walk a mile in any direction from the pool without stepping on anything but bones.

Battles continue today, but of a different nature: economic.

"There's been some oil layoffs recently, but the (industry) is still in operation and that's the important thing," said Big Spring Area Chamber of Commerce director LeRoy Tillery. "We've had the same softening of the economy as everybody else but we are still ahead of the game compared to most places."

Industrially, Big Spring's wheels are beginning to turn, with a number of newly created facilities gaining inroads. Howard County Industrial Development issued $2 million in bonds during 1982 for expansion of Western Container, which supplies bottles and plastic jugs for companies in Texas, Oklahoma, New Mexico, Arkansas, Louisiana, Kansas, Colorado and Arizona.

INITIATED BY John Dunagan of Midland, who serves as president, the corporation produced 29 million containers its first year of operation and now has a capacity of 150 million. The $2 million expansion project allowed it to begin production of a half-liter plastic container.

The Industrial Foundation agreed during 1982 to finance the expansion of Roundup Tank, which manufactures fiberglass storage tanks for the oil industry. The company's best-selling project has been its 15½-foot-diameter tank which has a capacity of 500 barrels.

"They are unique in the fiberglass business in that they were the first to have the approval of the Railroad Commission for fiberglass storage tanks," said Tillery. "They have computer-controlled production and keep very high standards on their products."

OIL, meanwhile, suffered some layoffs, but has been budgeted for 1983 to produce 12 drilling rigs and keep 300 persons on the payroll.

"Total production at OIL last year allowed them to corner 50 per cent of the worldwide market of drilling rig production," said the chamber head.

Lamesa forges ahead despite adversity; Businesses come to town

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

LAMESA — Agriculture and oil: That the two are not such strange bedfellows is evidenced by the very existence of Lamesa.

Long a center for agri-business along a stretch of the lower Panhandle referred to by the early Spanish conquistadores as the Llano Estacado, or "Staked Plains," the oil boom of recent years has made the site of an oilpatch truck almost as familiar in the city as that of a tractor.

Lamesa, Spanish for "tableland," saw its genesis in July 1903. Two years later it faced its greatest battle for existence — an election to decide whether it or rival Chicago would become county seat. A handful of voters forever altered the course of Dawson County history, as Lamesa won by five votes. Offered free lots and horse and human assistance, the residents of Chicago were relocated to the new county seat and the little town ceased to exist.

In 1900 five great ranches sprawled across Dawson County, but by 1910 330 ranches and farms dotted the plains. Cultivation had encompassed only 35 acres at the turn of the century, but by the end of the decade 43,000 were under the plow. By 1950, 460,000 acres were in cultivation and by 1976, 474,706 acres comprised 900 farms.

Although livestock still assumes a level of importance, the main source of agricultural income is derived from cotton. In 1981 Dawson County farmers produced 270,600 bales, each with a net weight of 480 pounds. However, in June of 1982 severe weather damaged 10 percent of the county's crop.

It was an indication that, like all cities, Lamesa must fight adversity in order to achieve progress.

Adversity had to be dealt with at the very start of 1982, as the city saw federal budget cuts force the closing of the local Texas Employment Agency office.

However, advancement soon was evidenced. In February, the airport board and Johnson Flying Service contracted for airport management service, while two Big Spring radio stations filed separate applications for an FM station to be located in Lamesa. And United Supermarkets purchased Eggars in Pioneer Square Shopping Center.

The razing of the Palace Theatre that same month, however, signaled the end of a local era.

In March, Northridge Retirement Center contracted with Contractors, Inc. of Texas for construction of a $1.7 million facility at North 27th and Woody Road. Later in the year it gained approval of its application for funds for stage three of the two-story, 51-unit retirement complex.

March also saw Pioneer Housing announce plans to construct a plant in Lamesa. The company manufactures pre-fabricated houses.

In April, General Telephone announced the opening of a local service office at 704 N. First St., while Knox, Gailey and Meador, Inc. of Lubbock received a contract for school renovation.

The two Lamesa banks and a Lubbock bank purchased $1.5 million in bonds in May to finance construction and renovation of Medical Arts Hospital. Knox, Gailey and Meador was awarded the contract and work got underway in September.

In June, Lamesa Cotton Compress acquiesced to modern-day technology and replaced its 58-year-old steam powered system with a hydraulic system, while Long John Silver's seafood restaurant opened its doors at the shopping square.

Big Spring economy 'ahead of the game'

A NEW OFFICE building was constructed during 1982 by Fiberflex, which has produced fiberglass sucker rods for the oil patch the last four years. "In the last fiscal year their total sales were just in excess of $8 million," said Tillery. "Although they do have a few overseas markets, they basically supply the Permian Basin, (accounting) for 5 percent of its rod market. Within five years they expect to have 50-60 per cent of that market...There's a great growth potential for Big Spring through Fiberflex. They've come a long way in just four years."

One of the major events affecting the economy of Big Spring during 1982 was the opening of Big Spring Mall Feb. 10, 1982. Located at the corner of FM 700 and Birdwell St., the two main stores are Beall's and J.C. Penney.

Scheduled to begin production this year is a $10 million Union Carbide plant. "They make nitrogen for the oil patch, for injection into existing wells to enhance their production capabilities," explained Tillery. "They're making use of new technology, stimulated by the windfall profits tax."

The Union Carbide plant will employ 35 to 36 persons, he said.

Also upcoming this year is the initiation of a Wal-Mart store in Big Spring. The Arkansas-based discount center purchased Thorton's lease and will create 90 new jobs in the retail area, said Tillery.

IN MOST OF the economic indicators, Big Spring showed an upswing from October 1981 to October 1982. Bank deposits were up 23.60 percent; savings and loan assets, up 15.05 percent; and number of employed, up 4.75 percent. Building permits were up to 353 from 340 and income from sales tax rose 44.71 per cent.

On the minus side, the number of unemployed rose to 124.50 percent with more than 1,000 persons left jobless. That figure amounts to 6.3 per cent of the total labor force.

A hundred and fifty years ago it was the Indian who built his lodges on the banks of the great spring, finding sustenance in its waters and life in the buffalo which roamed the surrounding hills and vast plains to the north. They are gone today, but the pillars they implanted in this land have not fallen; indeed, they are being built higher and stronger with each passing year. And, most importantly, community spirits have reached new heights.

As Ted O. Groebl recently wrote in a paid advertisement in the Big Spring Herald, "Who could possibly want to live anywhere else?"

Martin County hit by both good, bad fortune

Staff Photo by Patrick Dearen

The historic Martin County Jail, left background, is alive more than ever in Stanton, where community supporters are using its restoration as a "rallying point."

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

STANTON — Residents of this community are delving into the past in the hope of creating success in the future.

Long subsidized by dry-land cotton farming and aided in the past decade by the oil industry, Martin County needs a flag to rally around, and supporters hope they have found it in the historic old Martin County Jail.

"Our basic thing this year is to get (Martin Chamber of Commerce offices) moved into that old jail," said Grant Mabry, outgoing chamber president who still retains a seat on the board of directors. "We want to use that as a rallying point for membership, get it back up to 100, at least. It's down to 60. That's kind of our thrust in '83 — to regroup."

During the past year both fortune and misfortune have struck this county, noted Mabry, who is also The Stanton Reporter publisher.

"All of our farmers have been hit for three straight years with bad conditions, either weather, bugs or a market decline," he explained. "The brightest light we've seen for 1983 is that we have two housing subdivisions (under development) in the city limits."

The subdivisions, known as the Lawson and Blocker addition and the Koonce addition, will allow Stanton to overcome the island syndrome it has lived with a long while.

"Stanton has been landlocked for the last decade," said Mabry. "Any land around it had been tied up in estates or for farming. The subdivisions hopefully will attract some middle income families that can afford the lots, folks that are working in the big city but like the small-town life."

Economically, Stanton has fared well the past year, despite the recession stifling many parts of the nation. Total assets of First National Bank stood at $41.5 million at the end of 1982, while First Bankers Trust and Savings drew more than $4 million in deposits in its first 10 months in existence without affecting the other institution.

Another bright point of 1982 was the announcement of application for charter for another bank in Stanton. Backed by Louie Koonce, Charles Koonce, Phil Stroud, Jimmy Wheeler and J.D. Crawford, the facility has already passed site inspection and the paperwork is in the final stages.

"We're expecting to hear on the last part of the charter any day," said Mrs. Louie Koonce, adding if all goes well the facility will become reality northwest of the high school just off Interstate 20 "probably in the first half of the year."

The local feeling is that it will keep more Martin County money in Martin County," said Mabry.

The retail trade business also has seen a steady increase during the past few years. While only 40 businesses were in operation within the city limits in 1980, said Mabry, approximately 60 open their doors daily today.

And too, high school sports have always played an important role in this community, as they do throughout West Texas. "We had our first district championship in football (in 1983)," he noted. "It helped the town a bunch in a time when everybody knew the cotton market was in pretty bad shape and everyone was kind of low. That brightened up our days in some sad times."

Mabry believes it imperative for residents of this city to band together to overcome adversity. "Every time we lose a good solid community worker it seems like it's harder and harder to find someone to take their place," he noted.

But he believes it is only a matter of time before progress assumes a level of scintillation. "We have all the machinery," he said. "We just don't have all the bolts there yet."

Airport takes off

WITH ALMOST 14 years behind him as aviation director, Banks stepped down at the end of January. His only regret, he said, was that he couldn't see the projects to completion. Taking over at the controls this year is Victor White.

In all those years, Banks' worst experience occurred last year. In September, a light airplane crashed into the Warwick Apartments after taking off from nearby Midland Air Park.

"It was one of the saddest experiences in my 13½ years here. I know it caused problems for lots of people. It was most unfortunate and I deeply regret it," he said.

"We've had some ups and downs," said Banks of 1982. "But generally it was a highly satisfactory year. We continued to make progress in several areas."

Rankin has many opportunities, advantages, says mayor

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

RANKIN — For centuries the mesas and canyons which surround Rankin have added richly to the lore and mystique of West Texas.

Only a few miles northwest of the city, the most legendary place of all — Castle Gap — slashes between Castle and King mountains. It was long known as a sanguinary gateway to Horsehead Crossing and the western frontier for the warriors of the Comanche War Trail and emigrants seeking the promise of wealth in California.

Then, it was but a land to endure, one to cross swiftly and see it recede.

Today, say those who compose its sparse population, it is an area rich in the most important aspect of all — quality of life.

"This is one of the finest small cities you can live in and raise a family," Rankin Mayor Allen Moore says proudly. He should know. He has walked the land of Upton County since 1926, the streets of Rankin since 1947, served 12 years as county judge, eight as county auditor and is in his second term as city mayor. "It's enjoyable living. We don't live in a fast-paced atmosphere at all — that makes it better."

The estimated 1,500 residents of this city, which has displayed a growth trend during the last three years despite a drop in oilfield employment in 1982, also have the advantage of opportunities which often are squelched by sheer masses of humanity in metropolitan areas.

"In big city life, you can become a number," says Moore. "If you come to Rankin, you're going to know everybody whether you want to or not. You'll be accepted until you do something to prove otherwise. I think it's wonderful to work here, and children have a great opportunity to participate in forensics or sports. It gives youth a chance."

Rankin's advantages, says Moore, include a good school system, an active senior citizen's center, sports activities and community spirit.

However, no city is without its problems; Rankin not excepted. The largest single employer, Halliburton Corporation, cut back on employees during 1982 and the number of city utility meters in use has dropped by 40 in comparison to the calendar average.

But even so, Moore and other city officials look on the bright side of the situation.

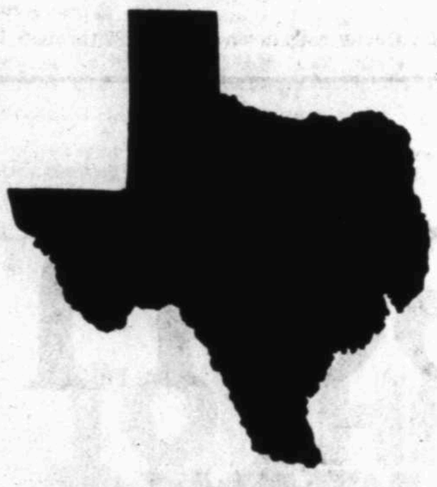

Both Halliburton and the second major employer in Rankin — The Western Company — expanded their existing facilities last year, he says, adding that "we're very lucky to have them here and to be in a central location. We have oilfields all around us."

New businesses also have sprung up during the past year, including M&N Drive-Inn along U.S. 67, The Wishing Well and a clothing store, the last two in the remodeled former post office building. Furthermore, Rankin has the unheard-of in Small Town, West Texas: not just a doctor, but two of them — both surgeons.

Additionally, James Dennis Funeral Home of McCamey is remodeling a historic home in the city with the intention of converting it into a local funeral home.

Strength of the local senior citizen's group, which meets daily in the old bank building for meals, has led many older residents who otherwise might have moved to remain in Rankin. The trend has been evident "for the last several years," notes Moore.

"BRIERCROFT SAVINGS MAY NOT BE IN A CLASS BY ITSELF. BUT IT SURE DON'T TAKE LONG TO CALL THE ROLL."

"Let's talk about West Texas for a minute. This sprawling place had to crawl before it could walk. And, years ago, back in those crawling days, Briercroft Savings was here to help coach it along. Briercroft Savings is one of West Texas' roots. If you've lived here long enough — mighty long — you remember it. And after all these years, they're still doing things right. Booming right along with the rest of the state. But never too big for their britches.

You see, Briercroft Savings didn't get to where they are by being confusing with a lot of high fallutin' talk, or by offering savings plans that were hard to understand. They did it by being up front about what's what and what's not. So, if you're confused by all that's going on around you, come on over and see some just plain folks. They're still dependable. Still doing business like they ought to. And I'm here to tell you that you can depend on 'em. Or my name's not Bum Phillips."

Andrews personified by active Chamber of Commerce

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

ANDREWS — Touting itself as loving God and country and supporting free enterprise, Andrews is a city both born of oil and sustained by it.

But for a few breaks here and there, it might have become "Midland," the teeming heart of the oil industry in West Texas. It's likely, however, that local residents are just as happy that it has remained small enough to have a quality of intimacy.

It was 1929 when the boom first struck Andrews as the black lifeblood of Texas was found in land leased from C.E. Ogden. Within 24 hours, or so legend has it, 600 scouts flooded the terrain signing additional leases.

The Depression crippled the nation's economy that same year, almost wrenching the life from metropolitan stripling. But Realtors foresaw better times ahead, lauding it as the "land where opportunity awaits."

Just about the time the nation was beginning to get a good grip on its economic woes again, the oil industry came to Andrews' rescue, likely saving it from certain death. Humble Oil Company brought in 16 producing oil wells and two gas wells, and from that moment in 1938 the city's existence never has been threatened.

Today, it is an active city, ever-alive, catering to roustabouts and others of the oil patch. It is personified by an active Chamber of Commerce, and the attendance of 400 at this year's annual banquet was indicative of the degree of concern held by community supporters.

During the past year the city has been busy with various projects and celebrations, including:

—Student government day and the retail committee-sponsored "Moonlight Madness," both in February.

—The visit of Gov. and Mrs. Bill Clements in May.

—The opening of the doors of Armadillo Wireline Service for business May 21.

—Highway 80 Tennis Tournament June 30-July 3.

—"Two Billionth Barrel" dedication ceremony in July.

—"Crazy Days" retail promotion in July.

—Hosting a collegiate football game between Sul Ross and New Mexico Military Institute in September.

—Cultural Affairs Music Club performances in October.

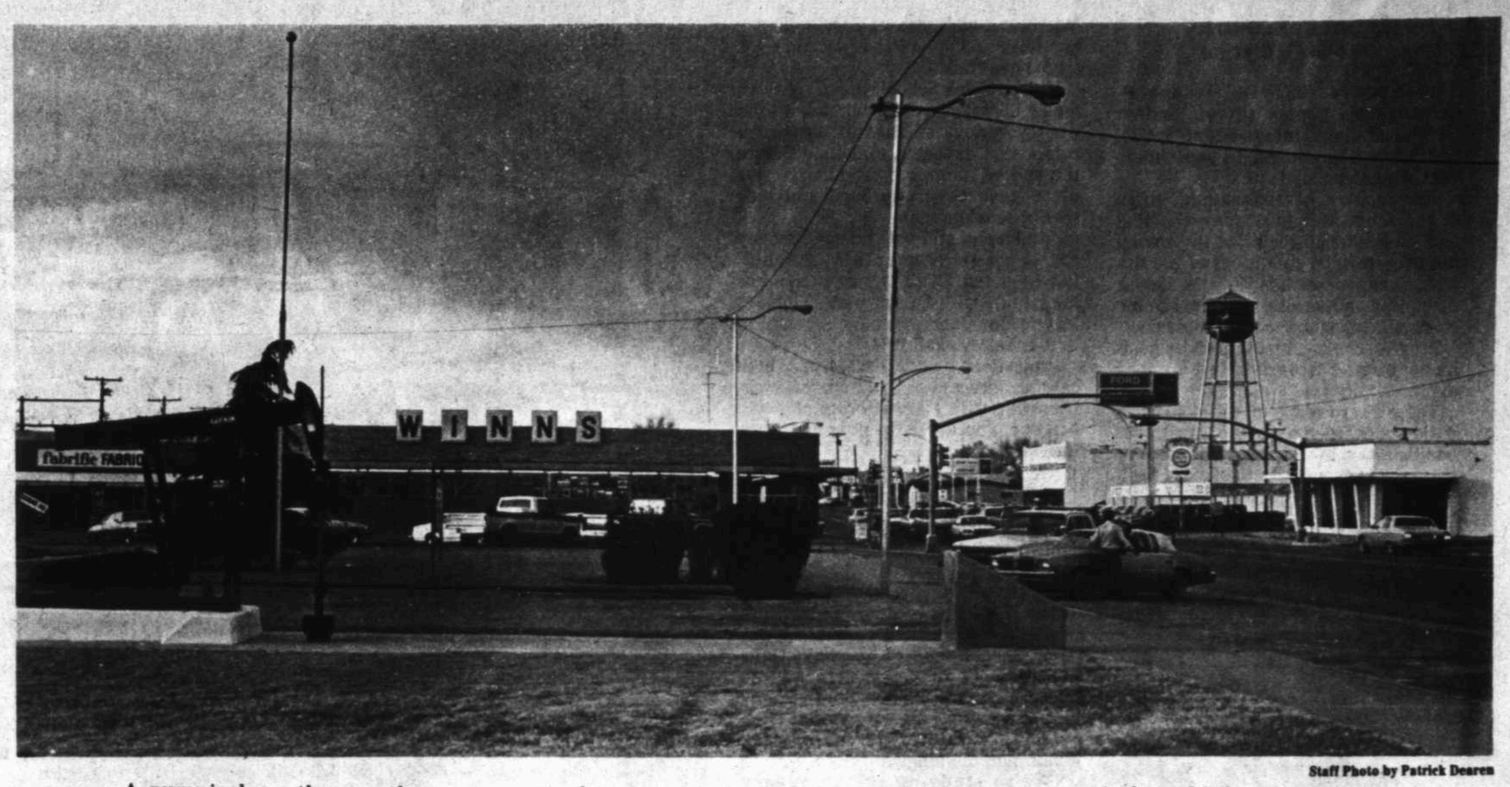

—Hosting a high school playoff game between Roscoe and Iraan in November.

—Christmas Arts and Crafts Show in December.

"It's been a good year for the chamber," said local newspaper editor James Roberts. "Our budget was the highest in history, and our membership at one point in '82 was the highest in history, despite the oil slow-up."

Furthermore, the chamber soon will release a new Andrews brochure detailing the city's attributes which it hopes will attract new businesses and residents.

Events upcoming in 1983 include a clean-up campaign, retail promotions, student government day, cultural affairs, Highway 80 tennis tournament and Fourth of July celebration.

Rankin has many advantages, mayor says

While for years Rankin's economy was dominated solely by the ranching industry, oil activity has caused an influx of persons and trailer homes. The dual economic opportunities has left the city standing in good stead, says the mayor.

"I think probably we have a little city that is as well off or better than other cities of its population," he opines.

Through the centuries, the surrounding terrain was one which, if it were ever perused, was never forgotten, not with the hardships of Castle Gap and Horsehead Crossing to dare. Similarly, say the locals, the Rankin of today will forever remain a part of those who have ever once walked its streets, all because of a sense of belonging spawned by a ubiquitous spirit of amiability.

Lamesa makes progress despite adversity

In July, bonds were approved for the renovation of the school buildings at Sands, while Second Baptist Church completed a new sanctuary and other facilities in August.

A $50,000 grant to Lamesa-Dawson County airport for construction of 7,000 square yards of hangar access taxiways was approved by the Texas Aeronautics Commission in October, while that same month building permits in the city eclipsed the $1 million mark for the year.

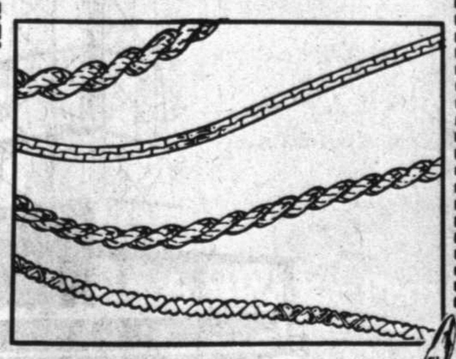

Also notable in Dawson County during 1982 was establishment of a new town, Los Ybanez, and the approval of Los Ybanez Mayor Israel Ybanez to open a retail beer store.

Upcoming in Lamesa this year are several activities and celebrations, including Pioneer Day the last Saturday in May, an amateur rodeo the first weekend in August and Dawson County Fair the third week in September.

Midland school district alleviates overcrowding

Students prepare to move into new schools

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

In January 1982, Dr. Joseph P. Baressi, then deputy superintendent for the Midland Independent School District, was promoted to superintendent, effective July 1, 1982.

That January, Baressi sat in his office at the school administration building and mapped out goals for improving the overcrowded conditions of the district, academic standards, attendance, discipline, supervision, school-home communication and teacher inservice.

Programs to meet most of those goals have been implemented or are expected to be soon.

The overcrowding of the district, a major concern before the April 1982 bond election in which voters approved two new elementary schools, has been alleviated thus far through the construction of two previously approved elementary schools, one of two passed last year and the addition of portable buildings and permanent additions at other existing campuses.

Dr. Joseph P. Baressi

Students are expected to move into the new De Zavala building, approved in spring 1981, in March. The old building, renamed the De Zavala Annex, will be used to house Headstart classrooms and offices, bilingual offices and the science, social studies, special education and early childhood materials center, thereby alleviating overcrowding at Carver and Bunche.

ANOTHER OF THE schools approved in the 1981 election, Quanah Parker Elementary, as well as one approved in last year's bond election, Santa Rita Elementary, are expected to be open for classes in September.

Also, the 10 new classrooms and the library addition at Midland Freshman High School should be completed in March and additions to Carver, Travis and Rusk should be finished in time for school next fall.

Midland High School, which received a new library last fall, will have its old library renovated into offices, with completion expected sometime before the end of summer. Preliminary floor plans have been approved and bids should be taken soon.

"And we've still got the bond money for the new elementary school," Baressi noted. "We're trying to monitor the population. We can wait as long as May or June and still have it ready in time for classes fall 1984."

Projections for the 1983-84 year indicate an increase of 1,072 students district-wide with a growth rate of 1 to 2 percent expected in the next few years, Baressi said.

"WE STILL HAVE board members and community members who cannot believe we're not losing enrollment," he said.

Although several remarks pertaining to the need for another junior high school have circulated around the district, Baressi said, "the projections show we should be able to handle junior high (enrollment) until 1985 or 1986. Possibly we'll need to move some portable buildings to (the present junior high buildings).

"We're studying the secondary school needs — without any foregone conclusions," he continued. "We hope to bring up this spring our plans to proceed with the types of decisions we need to make and get community input. It is a long-term project. September 1986 will probably be the target date for changes, and maybe the year before that."

Baressi named a few alternatives to the situation, such as the possibility of including ninth graders in high school. However, he added, the present program has advantages and Midland high schools have limited facilities.

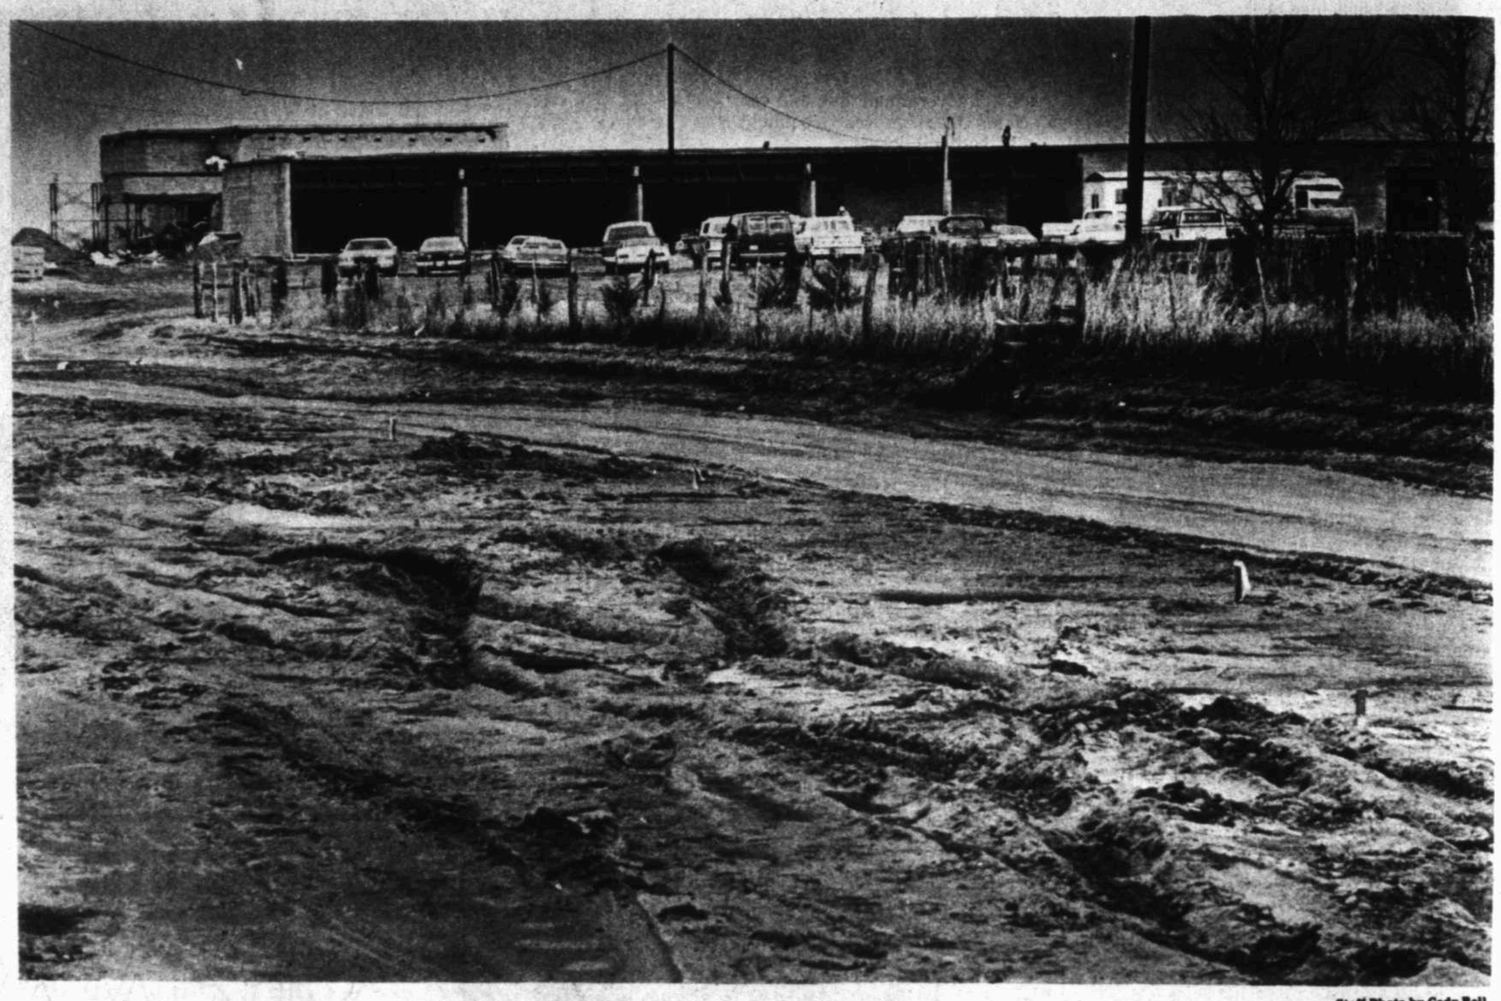

"It's only one of many alternatives. By 1990, we'll have to do something at the high school level," he added.

Meanwhile, attendance rates in the district are up about 2 percent over 1981-82, Baressi said.

"PRELIMINARY attendance figures show approximately a 2 percent increase in attendance, which represents a fairly substantial improvement," he said, "not to mention the increase in students so our ADA (average daily attendance) increases substantially."

Roughly, the district is reimbursed $6 per day for each child who attends school.

Although the new attendance policy has had some impact on the increase in attendance, Baressi said he feels part of the increase is because teachers and principals are giving more attention to attendance requirements.

Santa Rita Elementary School, one of two elementary schools passed in the bond election last spring, is expected to be ready for classes for fall 1983. The dirt road in front of the school will be paved at the school district's expense before it is deeded to the city.

"Discipline I feel is good, but that's an area that requires constant attention," Baressi said. A new policy requires that parents of students with discipline problems are sent written notices of the situation. "Our hope is that if we can communicate a sensibly fair and consistent approach to discipline, the vast amount of parents will support us," Baressi explained. "Also, we continue to use the on-campus suspension centers as an effort to provide alternatives to suspending students off campus."

Along with both attendance and discipline communication between the homes and schools is an effort to communicate with parents on positive levels. "It's hard to document substantial improvement but the feedback from principals is that teachers are giving more calls and invitations to parents to visit schools. VIPS (Volunteers in Public Schools) has helped a lot. The intent is to involve as many parents in education as possible."

OTHER IMPROVEMENTS and goals for improvements within the district include student achievement and academic standards. According to Baressi, the expansion of the GEM (Gifted Education Midland) program to include third and eighth graders is being studied. Currently, only fourth through seventh grade students are involved in the program.

Also, a plan dealing with computer literacy in certain grade levels and the type of equipment needed for courses is being studied. In addition, Baressi said, the standardized testing program is being re-evaluated. "We're trying to maintain the current level of information on students — but with less testing."

A revision in teacher supervision has been in effect for two years now, but Baressi said the plan actually "is in the process of implementation. We're only in the first stage.

"The total format as far as lesson planning has only been introduced to teachers and I see (total implementation) taking three to four years.

"We're trying to set up common elements to lesson plans to be fair and consistent with teachers but leave it flexible enough in that design to allow for individual teachers' creativity."

The program intends to provide more continuity and coordination between programs and schools, he added. Included in the plan is a consistent approach to observing teachers three times per year and in training supervisory personnel, such as coordinators.

"I THINK WE'VE settled on the format and we're on the perimeter of what we expect to see," Baressi said.

With cluster coordinators in their second year of reorganization, the continuity between curriculum for fourth, fifth and sixth grade students has been positive, he said.

A new program for teacher inservice, allowing those with three years of experience to take off usual inservice time for Christmas vacations, provided that the minimum hours of inservice have been completed, has been highly successful, Baressi said.

"It has worked very well and the teachers are happy with it. The quality of the workshops has improved and the actual hours of inservice have increased. The teachers are electing to take more than the minimum."

Because the new inservice program only was designed and implemented last summer, Baressi said next year's program will have an earlier start. "It will be better next year. We've entered into a cooperative effort with Region 20 (Education Service Center), Fort Stockton and Ector County so that we can have more cost effective inservices and can share the opportunities."

Midland's seven private schools grow, expand academic activities

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

A major goal of one of the city's seven private schools was reached this past year when Permian Basin High School received full accreditation with the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools in December.

The accreditation was awarded following a two-year process that included a 300-page documented self study and conferences with an accreditation visiting committee.

Permian Basin High School, which opened it's doors in September 1981 with 24 students, has grown to an enrollment of 42 and a staff of 12, according to executive director Glen Walton. The one-on-one method of instruction is available for students in the eighth through 12th grades at the school, located at 3100 N. A St. Other offerings besides college preparatory classes, include achievement test preparation and summer school, which are open to students of public schools as well.

Meanwhile, other private schools in the area also have grown and expanded academic activities as they move forward through the years.

The Accelerated School of Midland, 1904 W. Illinois, began classes only last fall. As the newest of the facilities offering private education, the school caters to students in kindergarten through eighth grade. Also based on the one-on-one instruction, the eight students are taught by two instructors. Other services offered to some 50 to 100 Midland students include tutoring, supervised homework, instruction for learning disabled students, counseling and computer-assisted instruction. Dr. Robert Currie serves as director of the school.

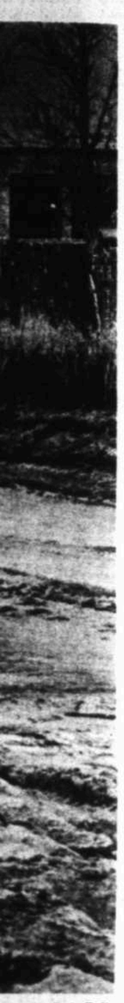

Trinity School is celebrating its 25th Anniversary this year with three major events for students, friends and alumni.

PBCG goes through evolution

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

On this, its 15th birthday, the Permian Basin Graduate Center's registration is down — but it has seen worse times.

"In our business, we're used to things that aren't always predictable," L.D. Robbins, new chairman of the PBGC board of directors, said.

From that February in 1968 when classes met at Midland High School, course selections were few and board meetings were usually held at some public meeting room, PBGC's students and facilities have gone through an evolution, Robbins said.

"When we first came we were involved in credit work," executive director Lola Igo remembered. "We had a few continuing education classes put out but we lost the credit courses in 1974. So then we started in continuing education which has slowly built up and up."

Over the years, as registration began to grow, a new breed of students began enrolling in the classes, bringing the need for a new avenue of education.

"We've been involved in basically two things: continuing education and training," Robbins said. "People moved to Midland straight out of college. They weren't specialized in the oil and gas industry so the graduate center entered into alot more specialized training."

Presently, the enrollment of young professionals, which peaked in 1981, is going through a change once again.

"We have seen a drop in the young professional because of the drop in the oil industry," Robbins admitted. "A lot of the companies that used to send us people are simply moving out."

"Most of the people being hired (today) are at the master's level," Ms. Igo agreed, although she added the center accepts "everything from Ph.Ds down to people who don't have a high school education."

Even though the number of students enrolling is lower than before, funds are up.

"The registration is down and although we did not make enough tuition overhead, the donations from the industry are up," Robbins said.

According to Paul Kirtley, director of administration, "We are a community effort. We receive no local, state or federal tax support. The funds generally necessary to run this operation and meet the overhead come directly from donations."

"We're very aware of the times we're in and we're also very aware of the fine staff, board, director, the fine facility that is paid for and that we have sufficient operating funds," Robbins added.

In addition to the monetary donations that have kept the center operating, a state-of-the-art terminal digitizer will be available for student utilization through a contract expected to be signed this spring between PBGC and a local company.

According to Robbins, the remote terminal will be used by company employees and graduate center students on a cooperative basis. "This will give us and our students the opportunity to have hands-on training in engineering, geology and geophysics," he said.

Around 60 classes will be offered during the spring semester during the day and night, according to Ms. Igo.

The curriculum is divided into oil and gas industry management, technical courses and business and management type course offerings, Kirtley explained.

"We're offering a full slate of courses," Robbins said. Classes are scheduled during the day and night.

According to Ms. Igo, only three or four courses have been cut and fees were reduced where possible.

MC had 'mostly good problems', Parrish says

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Traditionally, it is typical for community colleges to experience a slight increase in growth during difficult economic times. But, according to Midland College President Dr. Jess H. Parrish, administrators are confused about the enrollment at their college.

It isn't that the enrollment is not growing; in fact, the head count has increased 17 percent. More importantly, however, the number of contact hours has increased 27 percent.

"If you remember, last year I said this year was to be a year for beefing up academic programs," Parrish said. "We've done that but we've also had to back off some and take care of the growth.

"SOME OF OUR problems have slowed down," he continued. "In the past we've had tremendous problems with obtaining enough engineers and geologists (as instructors) but the demand has slowed down. Our petroleum land courses have slowed down somewhat. They are still healthy but we're able to meet the demand.

"Our problems are mostly good problems," he added. "They're the kinds associated with growth and health. They're the pleasant kinds to work with."

Although the first on-campus dormitory, which will house 40 out-of-town athletic and academic scholars, is scheduled to be occupied sometime in March, the possibility of the college building another housing unit is not being considered at this time.

Referring to it as a "critical need," Parrish said he thinks of the new housing unit as necessary but in no way related to the increase in students. Administrators, he added, say the increase is a direct result of the community growth the last two years. The correlation between difficult economic times and college enrollment does not fit the MC campus, Parrish noted, because, "our economy is not that slow" compared to other parts of the nation.

MEANWHILE, STEPS have been taken to alleviate some problems in enrolling large numbers of students through the introduction of computerized registration. According to Parrish, who has seen the system implemented at a few other campuses, "this was the smoothest ever.

"The first morning (of registration) we had the usual chaos. But we found the flaw in the program and by afternoon, we were running a student through every five seconds."

Once the student information system, containing data on students, is programmed, the computer system will be utilized in other areas, such as obtaining enrollment figures in each class. "The key is the student information system," Parrish said. "Everything is based on that. Once we get the student data, we'll move from there during the semester."

Departments such as accounting and others will increasingly turn to computers for more modern instruction, he said.

"THE BUSINESS, science and math areas are doing tremendously well. We fill everything that even says computer on it. Accounting is going well and the computerized system will make it more relevant. And we're using word processors instead of just teaching secretarial skills."

Other areas also are expanding, according to Parrish, who cited the health occupation fields as an example.

The implementation last fall of the Associate Degree of Nursing (ADN) program has had an effect on the increase in biological sciences, Parrish said, adding that both nursing programs require a certain number of credits hours in biological science before students are able to enter the programs.

"The LVN (licensed vocational nursing) program is the largest it has ever been. Respiratory-therapy has almost doubled in size. We're even anticipating going to a two-year degree."

Parrish explained the certificate awarded at the completion of the present respiratory-therapy program qualifies a student to work in a hospital. However, he said, the associate degree would give the student more clinical experience, as well as additional education.

OTHER AREAS OF the college also have been strengthened, he pointed out. "The athletic programs have been healthy and while some may think that isn't as important, you have to remember that athletics are just another part of what you do at a college — and they have to be equally supported.

"I think we have the strongest student government this year as far as student leadership," he continued. According to Parrish, the faculty senate, consisting of students appointed by faculty members, has been working effectively to develop a consistent teaching evaluation program.

"I think it is important that the faculty has, of its own volition, initiated this program."

Deans of vocational-technical areas are in the process of visiting with community businesses in an effort to better adapt the programs to the business world. "We want the on-site training (at different industries) and we want to be sure our programs are relevant to their needs," Parrish said.

The Allison Chair of Journalism is another area of which the college is proud.

According to Parrish, publications of the campus magazine and newspaper have improved in consistency as well as quality. "You don't find many community colleges with journalism programs — and you find none with endowed chairs," he noted.

"We're fortunate in that we're having that growth and the rest of the nation isn't," he pointed out, adding that qualified instructors are easier than ever to find. "You can tell the difference (the growth has made) from everything — on campus, in the cafeteria, in the walkways, in the campus parking lot.

"This all may sound a little pie-in-the-sky, but this year has almost been that way."

United Way of Midland successful in raising $1,612,000

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

A hint of defeat lingered amid the darkened corners of Midland Center the night of Nov. 10, 1982, when United Way of Midland staff and volunteers gathered for a campaign victory dinner that seemed destined to end in disappointment.

United Way president Jack Steele's lips were grimly pursed as he took his seat at the head table. Even the energetic antics of Tommy the Clown failed to raise more than a faint grin on the ruddy, ever-smiling face of campaign chairman Joe Kloesel.

Since late September, and during a pilot campaign before that, United Way volunteers had been working toward the seemingly unattainable goal of raising $1,612,000 in the face of harsh economic times.

Only two days before the victory dinner, the campaign goal remained nearly $200,000 away.

AS KLOESEL stepped to the microphone and began reading a litany of campaign divisions, subdivisions and the contributions secured by each, many in the crowd slid to their seats' edges in anticipation of Kloesel's announcement of the campaign total.

Earlier, Steele had prepared the crowd for a disappointing finish.

"The purpose of the United Way is not to raise money," he said. "The purpose of the United Way is to meet needs. We recognized early on that just because it might be a bad economic time, the people who need the services need them even more."

Steele described the campaign as a "series of highs": the hard-working loaned executives, the successful pilot campaign, the rallies, the more-than-1,000 volunteers working for a cause that in 1981 had benefited more than 40,000 Midlanders.

BY THE TIME Kloesel uttered the campaign grand total, the crowd was prepared for a campaign-ending "low."

"$1,612,925.30 — we've equalled goal, we have it," Kloesel shouted, bringing the crowd to its feet in applause and christening a high-water mark in the history of United Way of Midland.

The total — which will be used to fund at least 20 charitable and service organizations in Midland during 1983 — represents a 14.5 percent increase from the $1,407,895 raised in 1981.

Those organizations to receive support and the 1983 United Way allocations for each include: Alamo, Metropolitan, Park Center and Washington YMCAs, $230,741; American Cancer Society-Midland Unit, $75,000; American Red Cross, $108,000; Buffalo Trail Council-Boy Scouts of America, $111,500; Boy's Club of Midland, $103,650; Campfire Inc., $28,950; Casa de Amigos, $56,579; Community Day Nursery, $102,000; Council on Alcoholism, $21,877; Family Services, Inc., $90,715.

Other agencies and allocations include: Permian Basin Council Girl Scouts, $69,628; Midland Rape Crisis Center, $22,107; Midland Tape Lending Library, $27,750; Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children, $20,000; The Salvation Army Main and Daycare Centers, $190,000; and West Texas Epilepsy Association, $16,735.

ANOTHER $210,922 will go to United Way of Midland's administrative and campaign budget, $80,600 to a pledge loss reserve fund, $20,630 to United Way of Texas and United Way of America and $8,000 to a contingency fund for agency emergencies.

A special allocation of $5,000 was made for Transient Emergency Assistance of Midland, a program administered by the Salvation Army. The remaining $9,769 is budgeted for a Venture Grant Program, to encourage and fund innovative programs among both affiliated and non-affiliated agencies.

United Way figures indicate that about 88 cents of every dollar raised in 1981 went to service agencies in Midland.

Besides its heroic fund-raising efforts in 1982, United Way of Midland witnessed several significant events during the year.

Cooperative plan successful

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The last few months have had a large impact on the goals of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin. Following the late August resignation of Dr. V.R. Cardozier, who had been president of UTPB since September 1975, Dr. Donald T. Rippey entered as acting president, effective Oct. 1.

With the controversy over four-year status for the currently upper-division institution in full uproar through last fall, Rippey remained calm and steadfast in his noncommittal role — unlike Cardozier.

Donald T. Rippey

At that time, Friends of UTPB, a citizen-group advocating four-year status, as was Cardozier, and the adamant opposition for that to take place from the area's community colleges had Rippey riding a fence. He never wavered from his neutual position.

Now, with the Permian Area Cooperative Academic Plan kicked off to a successful and enthusiastic start by the Board of Regents of the University of Texas System in October, Rippey's stoic stance has continued.

"I think the Friends of UTPB still have (four-year status) as a high priority, but I don't know the real status of it," he said. "But my position, of course, is that I'm not in any way opposed to their efforts. In the same way, they have assured me they don't intend to impede our efforts in cooperation (with the community colleges), either."

PACAP is composed of three levels of committees formed to enhance the relationship and provide continuous degree plans between UTPB and the three community colleges: Midland College, Odessa College and Howard College.

The first level consists of a community liaison made up of five Odessans, five Midlanders and five persons from surrounding areas. Joint chairmen of the committee are Johnnie Warren of Midland and Steve Late of Odessa.

The second level is "more operative," according to Rippey. This adminstrative committee consists of Rippey and the three community college presidents: Midland College's Dr. Jess H. Parrish, Odessa College's Phil Speegle and Howard College's Charles Hays. Also serving on the committee are the independent school district superintendents from the three counties plus one from the surrounding area. Later, Rippey added, the chief academic officers of the three colleges also were asked to serve on the committee.

"The committee acts like a steering committee," Rippey explained, adding that an executive committee is included at this level with Parrish serving as chairman.

The final layer "is a lot of special purpose committees," he continued.

Formed to look into areas of improvement and cooperation, the committees are divided into student recruitment, curriculum, financial matters, joint use of facilities and student activities and athletics.

"All of these committees have met at least once and some of the things have gone into effect," Rippey noted.

Joint use of library cards so that students may study and check out books in any of the four participating libraries has proved successful, he said. Also, some student activities have been shared by those attending classes on the four campuses.

"They had some problems with socials (club activities)," Rippey admitted. "I don't think they have it all ready yet but we hope we can use (the cooperative plan) for some things such as athletics, performances and dances.

"What we hope, from all of this work, is that we'll begin to have some degree plans worked up and that those can work in the public schools at the junior and senior levels so that those who want to go to community colleges and UTPB will already have their degree plans laid out before they even graduate from high school."

He mentioned the possibility of including joint instructors for subjects such as music, art, computer science and engineering.

"To find faculty members is difficult enough, and also to find sufficient students is difficult," he explained, adding that one goal of PACAP is for a college to hire an instructor who may teach classes at the different campuses or who would teach classes of students from all four schools at one campus.

"Whatever will work out the best for the student and the instructor," Rippey said. "By cooperating, it seems like we could get more bang for the buck, so to say."

One of the first cooperative courses was announced in early January. The travel course to the Polynesian Islands will include students from UTPB and Midland College meeting together for lectures at both campuses prior to the trip all students will take together.

Rippey pointed out the committees will decide which courses should be requirements for a degree from the Permian Basin and which courses will transfer from campus to campus.

"(The beginning stages) took off really fast and while we don't have that degree plan as of yet, I think by September, we'll have some degree plans already worked in."

An interim report from all three levels of committees is scheduled to be ready by the first of March, he added.

"I think that for no longer than we've had to operate, it seems to have gone really well. There has been no criticism and no controversy. And we're now getting the faculty involved more with the curriculum. The registrars and the administrative people are involved and even the community and the boards of Midland College and Odessa College seem to be enthusiastically supporting it."

Although the UT-system regents are the ones who implemented the cooperative program in their meeting Oct. 8, four-year status also was mentioned as a possibility by 1990 if the population of the Permian Basin continues to grow. According to reports from that meeting, regents said a four-year university in the area would be needed if that were the case and UTPB would be the logical choice for conversion.

"I think for me or anyone to say if we made (UTPB) a four-year overnight, there would be sufficient population to enroll in all of the colleges — that would be debatable," Rippey said. "But if we doubled the population here, I don't think there would be any debate over the matter."

United Way of Midland raises $1,612,000 in 1982

In November, the Planning Division announced completion of an extensive study of Midland's human service needs and the agencies and programs available to meet those needs.

ALONG WITH the study, in cooperation with the Junior League of Midland, United Way produced a directory of the community services and agencies available in Midland.

United Way staff said the needs study will serve as a valuable tool to help human service agencies plan programs to meet the community's needs.

In a letter to United Way contributors included in the organization's annual report, Steele said the United Way also took a close look at the effect the Reagan administration's New Federalism will have on Midland's agencies.

He said increased funding in day care and food co-op programs helped local agencies handle a $105,415 loss because of federal cutbacks.

Sarah Smith, United Way executive director, announced her retirement effective Jan. 31, 1983. Ms. Smith resigned the post to become executive director of the United Way of Berks County, in Reading, Pa.

During her 3½ years with Midland's United Way, annual campaign receipts jumped by nearly 75 percent — from $930,000 in 1978 to $1,612,000 in 1982.

When she announced her retirement, Ms. Smith said: "My decision to accept this new position was not an easy one."

SHE CALLED Midland "a very special place with a uniqueness I'm sure won't be found elsewhere. I've observed and experienced a dedication to community and its citizens, a willingness to do whatever is necessary to make Midland outstanding, a genuineness, warmth and seemingly unending, inexhaustible support."

A search committee will be formed to select a replacement for Ms. Smith.

At its annual meeting and awards presentation, new United Way officers were selcted.

Officers for 1983 include: Harrell Feldt, president; Paul Rea, president-elect; George Irish, vice president; Michael Williams, vice president; Bob Sneeringer, treasurer; and Linda Isbell, secretary.

Outgoing officers include: Steele, president; Feldt, president-elect; Father Joseph Schley, vice president; Jane Wolf, vice president; Leon Jeffcoat, treasurer; and Ruth Bell, secretary.

Private schools expand academics

In October, an all-school picnic was held at the campus following a football game. During the annual Christmas Service of Lessons and Carols, the Right Rev. Sam B. Hulsey and former headmaster Bettis Lawrence joined in the special celebration, attended by alumni, guests, friends and students of the school. Prior to this spring's annual MayFair, a dinner will be held at the Petroleum Club in celebration of the past 25 years.

Alphabetic Phonics, a multi-sensory approach to reading, was introduced this year in grades first through third. Also, the gifted and talented program TEMPO was put into effect at the first of the year.

Presently, there are 490 students and 45 teachers at Trinity, located at 3500 W. Wadley Ave. Headmaster is the Rev. P.D. Peterson.

Enrollment at St. Ann's School, located at 2000 W. Texas Ave., keeps increasing as has been expected. Last year, when enrollment was 240, principal Ed Doherty said empty classrooms on the second story of the building could accommodate any expansion in growth. That growth was realized with some 260 students presently attending classes.

A resource program, implemented last year, is still in effect. The program keeps a teacher available at all times to work with children. Presently, there are nine full-time teachers at the school.

As the first year of Midland Christian School's Tree of Life Campaign, 1982 was successful and campaign chairmen now are looking forward to launching the next campaign in March.

According to Winston Bell, director of development, the $175,000 worth of cash and pledges received exceeded the 1982 campaign goal of $100,000.

The new high school building and regulation-size gymnasium, built with funds from a previous campaign, have been occupied for the second year by the 500 students and about 50 staff members, who are under the direction of principal Dr. Harley Tefertiller.

With a new principal, band program and six-man tackle football program, Oaklawn Park Baptist School, 3001 N. A St., is in its sixth year of operation. The band and football program were implemented last fall.

Five seniors are expected to graduate from the third graduating class at the end of the semester. According to administrator David Piercy, principal Mike King is in his first year with the school, which has an enrollment of 160 students and a staff of 14.

The Hillander School, located at 1600 W. Wadley, teaches students through the Carden method of instruction, a strong phonics program. The 372 students enrolled this school year range in ages from three-year-olds to sixth graders.

According to Mrs. Fred Sides, director, instruction is departmentalized in library, science, music, physical education and art. Reading, writing and spelling are taught at the age of 5 and instruction in Spanish begins in the first grade.

There are 26 instructors at The Hillander School.

Permian Basin Graduate Center goes through evolution

Because many of the courses offered were implemented through the suggestions of students, Kirtley urged anyone with specific needs or requests to contact the center.

"Our most popular course last year (Oil and Gas Fields in the Permian Basin) came from an anonymous source on an evaluation," he said. "Now that unit is in its second phase."

Despite the industrial slowdown, out-of-town people continue to participate in seminars and courses and the spring semester appears to be proceeding as usual. As far as the future is concerned, Robbins said, "Midland is an oil town. It could stabilize or it could get a lot worse. Nobody is really saying it could get better."

Kiker: Farmers in crisis

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Rather than a get-rich scheme, farming usually has made farmers just a living — sometimes, barely.

And, noted Midland County Agricultural Agent Earnest Kiker, Midland County farmers are in a critical situation due to high interest rates, rising production costs and static or low prices for their goods.

Their outlay is exceeding their income. And in some cases they might be working themselves out of a living.

"We're in a situation in which they are going to make it or are going to another source of income," he said. "If they've got oil on their land, it's another story. Otherwise, it's putting them in a financial crisis."

Kiker noted that farming is a "lot different" than other businesses.

"The farmer produces the product he's going to sell, and then he's got to market the product."

Midland cotton farmers are ill-equipped to bargain for higher commodity prices by such free-enterprise schemes as holding back a product until the commodity is relatively scarce, the demand increases, and the market prices rise to make farming a profitable undertaking.

"His (bank) notes are due, and he's got to pay it off" by selling his crops, noted Kiker. "I'm sure that there are farmers who have had to pay interest on interest."

The agent said he is aware of High Plains farmers whose bank notes were called in and who "had to sell their equipment and land" to satisfy their debts.

"If the farmers were financially independent and could hold back (their products), it would be different."

The reality is that the prices — about 50 cents a pound — which farmers are getting for their cotton is about 20 cents below production cost. "They can make it on 70-cent cotton," Kiker said. "It varies."

In 1982, Midland County farmers planted 35,926 acres in cotton. And the yield is expected to average about half a bale to the acre, though the cotton under irrigation may net more than that.

Though most of Midland County's 133 cropland producers raise cotton, some others plant alfalfa over 2,500 acres; wheat, oats and rye, 4,000 acres; grain sorghums, 2,500 acres; sorghum for forage and hay, 10,000 acres, and pecans, about 900 acres supporting 40,000 trees.

Basically, though, Midland is a one-crop county: cotton. And that very situation is putting farmers in a bind, Kiker said.

"They've got excess cotton, and they don't know if they should plant more cotton or go to another crop."

Cotton has been the mainstay in agriculture, since it has adapted to the loamy West Texas soil and to the relatively arid land and light annual rainfall.

"I think farmers are going to have to look for some diversification," said Kiker. "They're going to have to diversify as much as possible and not get their eggs in one basket in case that basket falls."

For example, he proposed that farmers put some of their land into livestock.

However, since cotton is the No. 1 crop, Kiker has cotton-related research plans in the offing. The idea is to produce a more hardy, disease-resistant cotton of such quality that it would demand high-than-average prices. However, the rub could be in an increased yield which could further pile up cotton supplies and further depress prices.

Kiker also proposes mixing cotton trash with cottonseed and using the mixture as livestock feed. The measure could be of economic benefit to farmers who are converting part of their land into grazing for livestock and possibly in driving up the prices of cottonseed.

Farmers who sell their cottonseed to the cotton gin or a cottonseed oil mill may thereby be able to pay for their ginning costs in cottonseed. "Some locales, yes, and some, no," said Kiker. "It depends on the gin."

To make cotton farming profitable, farmers have joined in efforts to increase the cotton market and to find more uses for the fiber and its byproducts.

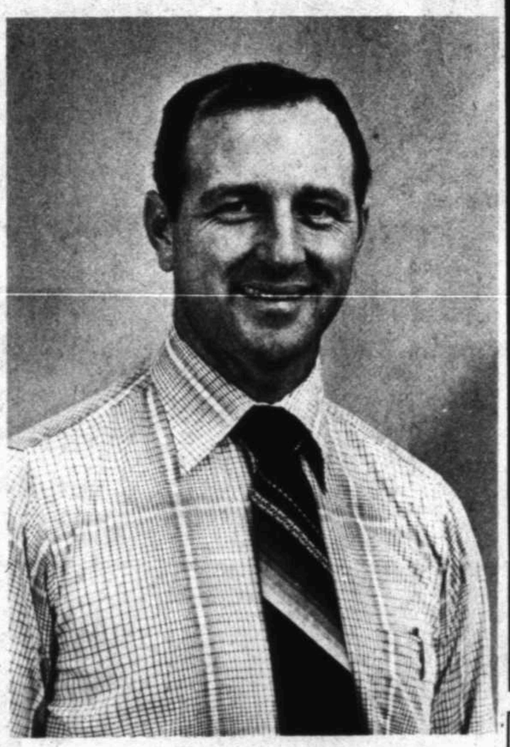

Americans, Soviets fishing for profit together

NEW YORK — Soviet and American fishermen are plying the Pacific Ocean in an experimental partnership whose final product is frozen fish labeled: "Product of USSR-USA."

Under the agreement, reports Popular Mechanics magazine's March issue, the Americans are catching "bottom fish" and turning the haul over to a Soviet floating factory on the high seas. The Russians are teaching Americans how to bring in the difficult-to-catch fish. They also are supplying sea-going technology not available to the Americans, including on-the-spot flash-freezing.

Earnest Kiker

Earnest Kiker, who says he is into Texas Agricultural Extension Service work because of his affinity for people, joined Midland's agricultural community in November 1982 as the administrative agricultural agent.

Kiker, 34, succeeded Charlie Green, who, as Midland County's 33-year veteran agent, retired late last year.

"I enjoy working with people; I like people," said Kiker, who grew up on a West Texas farm. "It's very satisfying serving not only your fellow man but your country."

Kiker was in Extension Service work in three communities before he moved to Midland and got his formal education in agriculture at Texas Tech University, where he received the bachelor's degree in 1971 and the master's degree in 1977. Both degrees were in agricultural education.

His Extension Service background takes in:

—Swisher County, where he was the assistant agent from 1972 to 1974. The agricultural income of this Northwest Texas county is based on grain sorghum, soybeans, "some cotton" and "lots of wheat and lots of cattle." Within the county are four big feedlots which each have 100,000-plus cattle.

—Borden County, where he was "the only agent" from 1974 to 1977. Borden County, which borders Dawson County and is just east of Lamesa, primarily is ranching and cotton country. While in Gail, he was married in 1974 to Vickie. They have a daughter, Jessica Ky, 2.

—Briscoe County, where he was the county agent from 1977 until his 1982 shift to Midland. The agricultural products there are cotton, wheat, grain sorghum, corn, soybeans, sweet potatoes, watermelons and peanuts. Like Swisher, Briscoe borders on the Panhandle. Silverton is the county seat.

In 1981, Kiker was presented the National County Agents' Achievement Award for his Integrated Pest Management Program.

"We had a real severe infestation of bollworms in cotton," he explained and noted that he worked with crops committees in developing educational and scouting pograms to control the bollworm.

Though Kiker has elected to be in agricultural education rather than to be down on the farm, he does admit to a closeness to the earth.

"I love agriculture."

Extension service employs four agents

In serving both the agricultural and urban communities in Midland County, the Texas Agricultural Extension Service (TAEX) has four full-time agents.

They are:

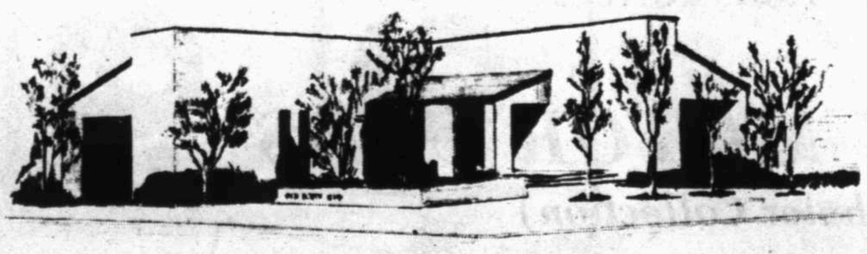

—Earnest Kiker, the administrative agent in charge of agriculture.

—Sharon Hillis, who is in charge of family living and community development and who works in 4-H projects.

—Willie Stumberg, who assists Kiker in agriculture and who works with youths in 4-H programs and projects.

—Cindy Mann, who assist Ms. Hillis in family living and community development projects and who works with youth in 4-H projects.

The Extension Service's array of specialities ranges from agriculture to community development. TAEX services are to enhance living. Aside from helping the farmer better plan his crop, the rancher better manage his range, the gardener lay out his garden and the homeowner landscape his lawn, the agents can help a community in most an phase of development, including setting up government to organizing a fire department and water and sewer system.
