162 of 380 wells have failed tests by RRC

By LARRY HOLLIS
Staff Writer

The number of Panhandle Field independents' wells failing to meet the Railroad Commission's gas to oil ratio standards inched nearer the 50 percent mark last week.

According to figures released Monday by District 10 Director Bob Blakeney, the local RRC office tested 95 additional wells last week, with 51 (or 54 percent) showing a higher gas-oil ratio than permitted under RRC regulations to retain their oil well classification.

Overall to date, in the testing that began in late June, 42.6 percent have failed to meet the ratio of no more than 100,000 cubic feet (Mcf.) of gas per barrel of crude oil.

Blakeney reported that 380 wells had been tested through Friday, with 162 of the Panhandle Field oil wells showing a high gas-to-oil ratio.

The number of wells removed from the testing procedure continued to increase, with 45 additional wells taken off the testing schedule.

According to the District 10 statistical report, 183 wells have now reported no gas connections are being used, with 292 wells indicating removal or no use of the low temperature or high pressure separation units (LTX units).

Last week the figures were 160 and 270 respectively.

Blakeney estimated there are 245 wells remaining to be tested under the RRC's order, with 87 scheduled for this week.

The commission has set a Sept. 1 deadline for the testing to be completed. With a number of volunteer operators asking for the testing before the official beginning date of July 1 and with the wells dropped from the testing schedule, the office personnel probably will be able to meet that deadline, Blakeney indicated.

The retesting is the result of a complaint initiated in 1981 by Phillips Petroleum Co. Phillips had protested that a number of independent operators were wrongfully counting the liquefied gases obtained from the LTX units - the so-called "white oil" - as crude oil for well classification purposes.

The commission finally upheld Phillips' claims in an order issued in May and implemented in June after the agency rejected motions for rehearing of the case.

Wells not meeting the proper gas-oil ratio under the current testing procedures are subject to reclassification as gas wells. Such status change would virtually shut down the production in those wells by the independents because of the unique separation of oil and gas lease rights in the field.

In other matters, E. Ray Grasshoff, RRC information specialist, said Monday afternoon the commission is considering whether to make a response to the recent order by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission against 35 independents in the Panhandle West Field.

The July 12 FERC ruling found the independents had been wrongfully producing and selling gas in violation of interstate market dedication and federal pricing regulations. A later hearing will be held to assess fines and penalties.

FERC had delayed its ruling early last spring at the request of the RRC. The state agency had asked the federal commission to delay its ruling until the RRC issued its decision in the Phillips case.

The RRC claimed that state law issues, including the definition of casinghead gas, would also be controlling in the federal case. But the state agency issued its ruling without determining casinghead gas matters, instead reserving that issue for later study.

However, FERC spokesmen said the RRC's position in issuing letters and memoranda to gather information on the casinghead gas aspects and on alleged illegal perforations in the well bores, along with its legal analysis, discussion and statements in the LTX unit case, is supportive of the FERC ruling.

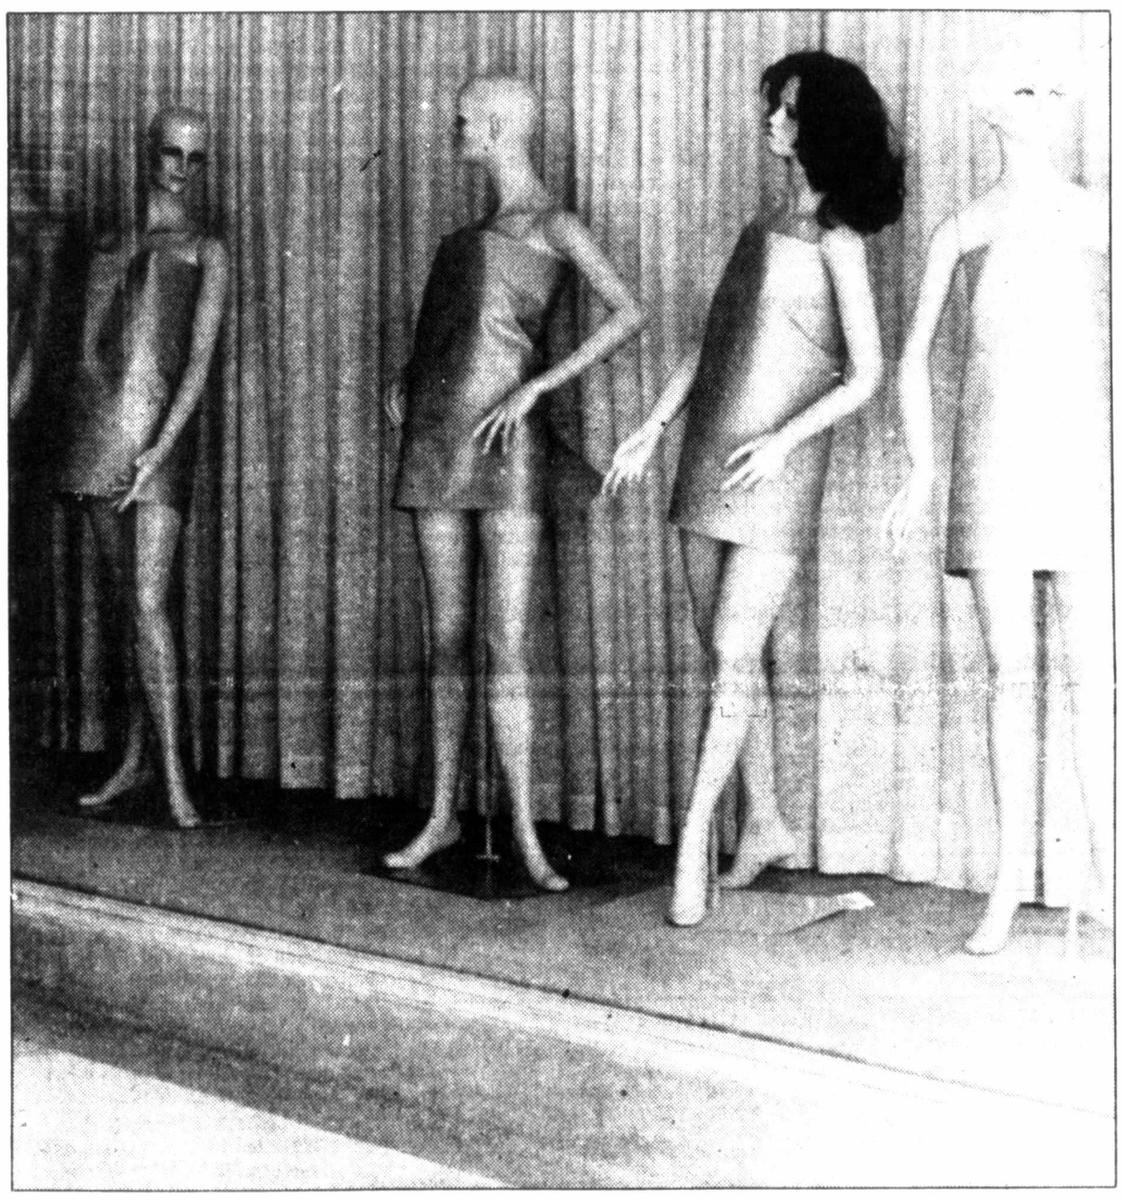

FERC had asked the RRC to attend a hearing in June to discuss matters further, but the RRC decided not to attend. Consequently, the federal agency commissioners decided to procede with their action and issued their final ruling, indicating the Texas statutes and field rules are unambiguous and consistent with the purposes of federal natural gas acts.

Now the RRC commissioners are considering whether to take any formal action in relation to the FERC decision, Grasshoff said.

Grasshoff also reported that well operators in the Panhandle Field have until mid-August to report any information regarding the alleged illegal well perforations to the state RRC office.

The RRC sent a letter to operators earlier this month asking for the information. Testimony made in its earlier hearings and examiners' studies indicated that some independents have perforated in other formations than oil producing strata in order to increase their gas production. Similar claims have been made in the FERC hearings and in court cases.

After it receives the replies from the letters, the RRC will decide whether to pursue investigation of those claims, Grasshoff said.

City approves using land for new park

By LARRY HOLLIS
Staff Writer

Pampa city commissioners approved designating land for a new park and expanding the membership of the M. K. Brown Auditorium Board during a special meeting this morning.

The commission met today in a special session after a quorum could not be gathered last Tuesday for the regularly scheduled meeting.

Accepting a recommendation of the Parks and Recreation Advisory Board, the commission designated the land around the water tower in the North Crest Addition as North Crest Park.

City Manager Bob Hart said the deed for the land had set it aside for use as a park and water storage facility. He said the city has been maintaining the land by mowing the grass and weeds. Officially designating the park will require the city to provide more careful maintenance of the grounds, he said.

Commissioner Bob Curry said he was opposed to developing the park unless funding was available to insure its proper maintenance, but he later voted in favor of the project.

Commissioner Joe Reed said the maintenance, except for the installation of a water sprinkler system and equipment, will not require much more maintenance than the city is already providing, since it already mows the area.

Commissioner Clyde Carruth said the park would be an asset to the community. He added that he hoped the public would show more interest in its upkeep and more responsibility for keeping it clean.

The project was initiated by a number of citizens in the area who expressed a desire to see the park developed. Hart said the parks board would work with the residents for development plans.

The commission approved on first reading an ordinance amending the membership structure of the auditorium board. The membership will increase from seven to nine members, with three-year terms established. After the board is reorganized, the members will draw lots to set up a schedule allowing three new members to be appointed every year.

The board also will meet monthly instead of quarterly. The members will work with an auditorium manager to deal with policies and promotional strategies for the use of the facility.

In other matters, the commission set Aug. 13 as the date for public hearings on ordinance amendments regarding home occupations in the city and establishing requirements for permits for drilling oil and gas wells within the city limits.

Commissioners approved an ordinance creating an expendable trust fund for employee insurance. The city will establish a self-insured program, with the city acting generally as its own insurer.

The commission also approved authorizing the staff to engage Insurance Management Services for the insurance administration and handling of claims.

The commission declared as surplus a number of vehicles, equipment, machinery, scrap iron and other materials and authorized the staff to conduct an auction. Hart said the items would be listed in advertisements in August, with the auction to be scheduled sometime in September.

Commissioners authorized payment of $8,103.33 to Wagner and Klein, Inc., for architectural services rendered on the renovation projects for City Hall. They also approved accounts payable.

Approved on second reading was Ordinance No. 1023 repealing Ordinance No. 352, which had been passed in April, 1952. The former ordinance had set restrictions on petroleum drilling within the city limits which are now out of date.

Chief J. J. Ryzman reported on the recent organizational meeting of the Traffic Commission, noting the advisory board had discussed the most dangerous intersections in the city and traffic problems around the schools.

Commissioner David McDaniel noted a large number of the intersections were on Hobart Street and expressed concern that efforts would be taken to alleviate

More problems face shuttle

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Spacelab scientists, working at low altitude after the harrowing shutdown of one of Challenger's main engines, had trouble operating several experiments today, including a $60 million device intended to point telescopes precisely at the sun.

One of the three solar telescopes was having power trouble and another was overheating. Specialists at Mission Control were troubleshooting, confident they would find solutions to all three problems.

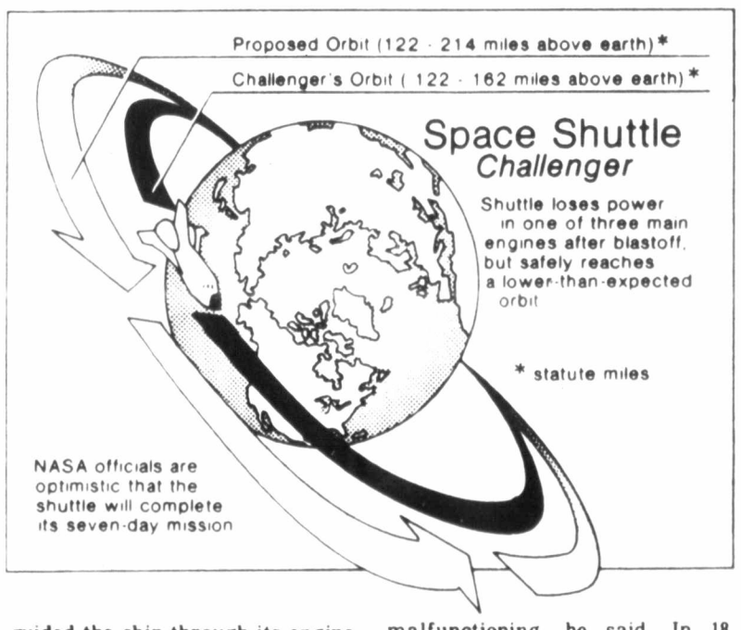

Most of the 13 experiments switched on as planned, including a generator that shot brilliant electron beams out of the shuttle's cargo bay in a study of properties of the ionosphere, the atmospheric layer that transmits radio signals around the globe.

"Brightness...beautiful," exclaimed astronaut Loren Acton, a solar physicist, as he photographed the beams.

"Sorry it's taking us so long to get on the sun," said crew member Karl Henize, an astronomer operating the pointing system. He said he had made some "rough tracks" on the sun and a star, but was having trouble locking firmly on the targets.

The shuttle's systems worked smoothly after Monday's dangerous and unprecedented "abort to orbit" and the astronauts — including five scientists — settled into a round-the-clock, two-shift routine.

"We're still going to get a lot of science out of this flight," said flight director Cleon Lacefield, who guided the ship through its engine cutoff.

During the tense first minutes after launch, the crew also disconnected a temperature sensor to prevent a second engine from shutting down before Challenger could reach orbit, Lacefield said.

If that second engine had failed or been cut off, Challenger would have faced a risky emergency landing on the Mediterranean island of Crete, or, more likely, Lacefield said, "We would have been in the water."

It was not known whether the engines actually overheated or the gauges showing 200 degrees over the normal 1,720 degrees were malfunctioning, he said. In 18 previous shuttle missions, "we have never had an engine overheat."

After the crisis had passed, the $1.2 billion spaceship, cruising at 17,400 mph, took up an orbit ranging from 124 miles to 165 miles above the Earth — far below the 241-mile orbit in the Spacelab flight plan.

Lacefield said the orbit would be boosted to 194 miles and officials announced that the $78 million Spacelab mission would be "full duration."

The lower altitudes were sure to curtail some experiments, but more troublesome to the scientific planners was the reduction in fuel available for the shuttle's Orbital Maneuvering System.

The main engines propel the shuttle to orbit and are not used again. The two smaller OMS engines are used during the flight to steer Challenger into the proper alignment for the Spacelab experiments.

During the crisis Monday, 4,400 pounds of OMS fuel were dumped to shed weight during the final boost and 750 pounds were burned to steer the ship into its new orbit. About 16,800 pounds of fuel had been earmarked for experiments and 11,300 of that remained.

"We'relooking at allocating the fuel to give science as much as we can," said National Aeronautics and Space Administration shuttle director Jesse Moore.

While experts at the Johnson Space Center in Houston refined the schedule, other NASA technicians analyzed data that might explain the crisis that began 3 minutes and 30 seconds after the 5 p.m. liftoff.

In the midst of the shuttle's climb, instruments at Mission Control said engine No. 1 was overheating. Heat sensors often fail, so controllers looked at a backup. Five minutes and 45 seconds after liftoff, the second sensor showed overheating and computers cut the engine off.

"We show a center engine failure," Fullerton said, without emotion.

"Roger," said Mission Control. "We copy. Stand by."

There was silence, then Mission Control said, "Abort ATO (abort to orbit). Aort ATO."

Reagan's budget stance leaves some allies bitter

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some of President Reagan's Republican allies are bitterly questioning his leadership after he sent the latest congressional budget effort into a tailspin by rejecting a proposal for higher taxes and a delay in Social Security increases.

"We made the offer, the president said no. That's over," said Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan. "I think for a while, at least ... there'll not be too many Republican senators listening to pleas from the White House on anything."

Dole said some GOP senators expressed disbelief Monday when the president torpedoed the Senate's three-year, $338 billion deficit-reduction package without offering Congress any new plan for reviving stalled budget negotiations or stopping the flow of government red ink.

It was the second time this year the president has walked away from a politically sensitive deficit-reduction package pushed by GOP senators.

The president's problems with majority Republicans in the Senate were sure to come up today in a White House meeting between Reagan and GOP leaders from the House and Senate.

"No process of Congress is any better than the will and the leadership that is forthcoming," said Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., chairman of the Senate Budget Committee. "In this case, there is not a will to address this huge deficit, and the White House has indicated that the significant portions of real deficit reduction are off the table."

Nonetheless, it appeared all but certain that Congress will begin a monthlong recess Friday with no more than a modest package of domestic spending cuts in place to combat the deficit. Some legislators said even that may not be possible.

"Any chance for this year getting a real, significant, reliable, credible deficit-reduction package is gone," Domenici said.

Reagan rejected the centerpiece provisions of the Senate's package, which included:

—Imposing a $5-a-barrel fee on imported crude oil and a $10 fee on refined products. This would have raised an estimated $25 billion over three years.

—Making inflation adjustments in Social Security and other benefit programs every two years, instead of annually. This would have saved $12 billion through 1988.

—Adjusting personal income tax rates to account for inflation every two years instead of annually. This would have saved $7 billion over three years.

The plan was projected to trim next year's expected $230 billion deficit by $65 billion.

The Pampa Police Department reported the following minor accidents for a 24 - hour period ending at 7 a.m. today.

MONDAY, July 29

A 1980 Chevrolet, driven by Vivian Lefferty Jones, 2113 N. Faulkner, collided with a 1980 Plymouth, belonging to Ruby Wagoner, 1429 N. Russell and properly parked in the 1400 block of North Russell. Jones received incapacitating injuries.

Delobry Seely, 621 Deane, backed into a 1979 Lincoln, driven by Dorothy Moihany, Wheeler, in a private parking lot at 1200 N. Hobart.

In the caption for Monday's front page photo, "Collecting Evidence," the police officer was incorrectly identified as Lt. Jess Walker. The correct name is Lt. Jess Wallace.

Addresses of Carlos Delgadillo, 33, and Jose Vasquez, 26, listed in Monday's arrest report by the Pampa Police Department were incorrect. Police now report the pair, charged with public intoxication and being illegal aliens, as 100 W. Brown.

And a listing in the Sunday Civil Court records should have read James M. Bowers vs Norman Leffew and Marty Leffew, not Norman and Marty Jeffers.

The News regrets any inconvenience this might have caused.

PAMPA CRIME STOPPERS

Drugs are a constant problem in most communities and Pampa is no exception. This week, Pampa Crime Stoppers will focus on drug trafficking in our community, and ask citizen cooperation is combating this continuing problem.

There are numerous persons who make their living solely in trafficking in drugs, whether it is transporting, distributing, dealing at the street level or manufacturing the drugs. At best is is extremely difficult to construct a good case against the dealers of drugs, and requires a great deal of law enforcement hours to make a case that is presentable enough to go to trial. Because of this, the cooperation of citizens is a must in combating the drug problems. The board of directors of Crime Stoppers urges anyone having information about drug usage or trafficking to report it immediately.

Crime Stoppers will pay $500 for information leading to the arrest and indictment of persons manufacturing drugs in our community. Rewards are available for information about other criminal activity. Call Crime Stoppers at 669-2222.

the dangerous situations.

Ryzman noted the board had appointed a committee to study the school traffic situation and make recommendations on solutions.

During the citizen's request period, W. A. Morgan expressed concern with the overall appearance of the city, saying he was speaking as a citizen and not as a member of any organization.

For 15 years "all I've heard is 'we don't have the money or manpower' " to make concerted efforts on cleaning up the parks and unsightly lots, Morgan said.

He said the city has a weed ordinance that needs to be enforced, though "the city might be one of the first culprits."

Morgan mentioned specific parks and other areas in which weeds and trees needed attention.

It requires manpower to maintain these facilities, he said, and that takes money raised from taxes. The city needs the "intestinal fortitude" to tell the people "if they want these facilities maintained, they're going to have to pay for it," Morgan stated.

He suggested the commissioners tour the city regularly to look at its appearance: "It looks like it's getting ready to be abandoned," he claimed. Newcomers or visitors might get the idea that "the city doesn't care," Morgan said. He said he knows that isn't true, "but it looks that way."

There's no sense in adding new parks or further developing existing ones "if we're not going to maintain them," he stated.

Mayor Sherman Cowan said the city was aware of the problems and had already taken the matters under consideration, with some changes already underway. "But we can't do everything in one day," the mayor said.

Zookeeper killed by two Siberian tigers

NEW YORK (AP) — A zookeeper fatally mauled by two Siberian tigers at the Bronx Zoo apparently entered their enclosure without looking to ensure that the animals weren't there, officials said.

Robin Silverman, 24, was killed Monday by two 4½-year-old female tigers when she entered their pen. Her death was believed to be the first such accident in zoo history, said spokeswoman Merle Frimark.

William Conway, director of the New York Zoological Society, which operates the zoo, said workers normally check the location of the tigers before entering the pen.

"For whatever reason, she did not do that," he said. "She was a very excellent and competent keeper, very highly regarded by her colleagues. And I can't understand this particular accident since it certainly is uncharacteristic of this young woman."

The tigers' behavior was expected under the circumstances, Conway stressed. "They're normal, healthy tigers and they should in no way be vilified."

Miss Silverman had entered the tiger enclosure at about 10 a.m., accompanied by volunteer Barbara Burke, Ms. Frimark said. The volunteer climbed a fence to safety.

A keeper and a maintenance worker used a fire extinguisher to keep the tigers at bay while rescuers took Miss Silverman from the pen, she said.

Texas couple kidnapped, beaten and robbed

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Only days after Mexico kicked off a campaign to attract U.S. tourists, a man and a woman from Austin were kidnapped, beaten and robbed by men who said they were federal police officers.

Dr. Henry Selby, a University of Texas anthropology professor, and Lucy Garretson, research director for the Austin American-Statesman newspaper, said they were attacked in the Mexico City suburb of Nezahualcoyotl Saturday night.

The incident came just as Mexico was renewing efforts to lure U.S. visitors.

The Mexican tourism industry has been buying full-page ads in Texas newspapers, urging travelers to take advantage vacation bargains made possible by a strong dollar and a recently devalued peso.

Selby and Ms. Garretson said they were robbed of $500 and a camera by two men who said they were members of Mexico's Federal Judicial Police.

"We were standing in front of a hotel waiting for a room when they approached us," said Selby, who speaks fluent Spanish. "They showed us their badges and then forced us into the back seat of a Volkswagen."

When Garretson challenged one of the men about his credentials, she said she was slapped in the face. One of the men also hit Selby twice in the temple with a leather-covered nightstick.

"(We were) in the back of the car and they were driving around these dark streets going through our wallets," Garretson told the Dallas Times Herald. "They were yelling at us, cussing at us, using every filthy word in the book.

"They kept saying that they respected the Mexican laws, not like Americans who are all drug dealers and 'narco-trafficantes.' They were saying this as they took our money."

Garretson said the "yelling got very political."

"They told us that the United States doesn't respect Mexico and that we throw Mexicans in jail there and beat them," she said.

After being driven around for about 15 minutes, the two were freed on a dark street near the hotel.

Selby, who worked as an adviser to the Mexican government from 1976 to 1980, had kept a small apartment in Nezahualcoyotl, a sprawling, high-crime area with 3 million residents on the eastern edge of Mexico City.

He said he had returned there Saturday to close out his lease. Selby and Ms. Garretson also attended a wedding in Mexico City later that night.

Selby and and Ms. Garretson said they chose to report the incident to the U.S. Embassy instead of Mexican police.

"We don't even know for sure if they were policemen, but we suspect they were," Selby said of his attackers. "But we felt that if we went to the police, we would have to name our Mexican friends who had the wedding and we didn't want to do that.

"The point is the police here are the most dangerous element in these marginal areas and I didn't want to get our Mexican friends involved," Selby said.

Vince Hovenac, an embassy spokesman, said the incident would be reported to Mexican authorities.

The embassy recently published a report dealing with crimes against U.S. tourists in Mexico.

Selby said that at one point during the abduction, his attackers spoke of U.S. Ambassador to Mexico John Gavin, who has complained to Mexican authorities about assaults on U.S. tourists, often by men posing as policemen.

Bones found in basement

HEREFORD, Texas (AP) — A forensic pathologist today was attempting to identify bones found in the basement of a house in this Panhandle city, while authorities sifted through dirt taken from the dwelling for clues.

"We have a duty to assume they are human until proven otherwise," said Peace Justice O.K. Neal.

The bones were discovered Monday after a 16-year-old girl told authorities she was held by a man inside the home and saw human skeletal remains in the basement.

The girl, who also told authorities the man allegedly threatened to bury her beneath the home, was treated at Deaf Smith Memorial Hospital and released on Monday.

About 15 men — including sheriff's officers, police and a district attorney's investigator — remained at the scene early today.

Dr. Ralph Erdmann, an Amarillo forensic pathologist, was examining the bones. Authorities were searching for the occupant of the two-story house.

"We haven't found anything like a skull or a pelvis that we could positively identify," Neal told The Associated Press. "The medical examiner has all the bones and will start work early in the morning to determine what they were."

Deaf Smith County sheriff's officials refused to comment on the discovery. A dispatcher, Elizabeth Castruita, told The AP she had been instructed not to release any information.

Authorities began their search about 2:30 p.m. Monday after the girl told authorities she was beaten at the home Sunday night.

An investigator for District Attorney Roland Saul would not comment on the investigation.

Prison guard accused of taking bribe from Cauble

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — The name of convicted millionaire drug smuggler Rex Cauble has surfaced again, this time in a four-count indictment against a former federal prison guard.

Eddie Joe Roybal, a former correctional officer at the Big Spring federal prison camp, was indicted Monday on charges of allegedly accepting $11,500 in bribes from Cauble when the cigar-puffing rancher was an inmate at the minimum security facility.

In June, Cauble was transferred to the medium-security La Tuna prison near El Paso, but officials would say only that the transfer was for "security reasons."

Cauble, 71, was convicted in 1982 on charges of masterminding one of Texas' largest drug smuggling operations. He began serving a five-year sentence in Big Spring in June 1984.

In Monday's indictment, a federal grand jury alleged that Roybal accepted two cashiers checks from Cauble before the transfer. The grand jury also alleged that Roybal accepted $1,000 from another inmate and that the officer provided pills to the inmate on two separate occasions.

Cauble, a Denton County businessman whose interests include oil, ranching and real estate, recently forfeited about $20 million in properties, including the famous Cutter Bill Western World stores, as part of his conviction.

Cauble was convicted of directing a drug-smuggling network that ferried more than 150,000 pounds of marijuana between Colombia and Texas in 1977 and 1978.

Roybal was indicted on two counts of bribery and two counts of providing contraband in prison, according to a statement issued by the FBI and U.S. Attorney's office.

The first count alleged that on May 31, Roybal accepted two cashier's checks totaling $11,550 from Cauble.

White plays governor in upcoming 'Dallas' episode

PLANO, Texas (AP) — Gov. Mark White went before the cameras to play his favorite character for an upcoming episode of the television series, "Dallas."

"I'm happy to be here with you all today," White said, playing himself and waving to a pretend rodeo audience as the cameras rolled.

But the governor said Monday after filming his one-liner that he's not ready to relinquish the keys to the statehouse for a job in Hollywood.

Asked what he would do just in case he's not re-elected next year, White said, "I don't think I have to worry about that part. I don't think that's going to be a problem we'll have to deal with."

White donned khaki pants, a blue western shirt and a straw hat to play the role of a special guest of Miss Ellie, actress Barbara Bel Geddes, at her benefit rodeo.

After completing his one-liner in just one take, the governor strolled through the movie lot talking to actors Linda Gray (Sue Ellen Ewint), Steve Kanaly (Ray Krebbs), and Jared Martin (Dusty Farlow), and others who star on the weekly nighttime soap.

White's appearance will be aired Nov. 15 marking the 200th episode of the show.

"Governor, just wave as if you're waving to a standing ovation. You should be used to that," said director Corey Allen.

Hot weather forced White to change shirts during the filming, but the show's executive director Philip Capice' said filming White took only one take.

After the performance, White presented a proclamation to Capice saying the series has been of "global importance" and has brought $25 million to the state since its beginning in 1978.

Ms. Gray presented White with a cowboy hat similar to one worn by J.R. Ewing (Larry Hagman).

"This is an official J.R. hat," she said. "If J.R. gives me any trouble I'll have a replacement."

Between takes White mingled with some of the actors and crew.

Put more in your morning

Is your love life less than gr-r-reat?

Has your Snap - Crackle lost its Pop?

Is your evening rendezvous lacking both Fruit and Fiber?

Well, maybe that's just what John Harvey Kellogg, founder of the you - know - what cereal company of Battle Creek, Mich. had in mind.

According to a new book, "The Destroying Angel" by John Money of the Johns Hopkins Medical School psychohormonal research unit, the cereal company founder and inventor of "those crispy golden flakes" developed the corn flaking process because he believed the cereal would help extinguish sexual desires.

Kellogg, an abdominal surgeon and early Seventh-Day Adventist devotee, reportedly devoted his life to three principles: a healthful diet, exercise and sexual abstention. And you know those crispy corn flakes that you drown with milk after a good night's rest? Kellogg felt that eating the flakes would help promote chastity.

Still hungry?

According to the book, Kellogg spent his honeymoon writing a pamphlet warning against the evils of sex. In "Plain Facts for Old and Young," Kellogg called the reproductive act "the most exhausting of all vital acts" and claimed that it "retards growth, weakens the constitution and dwarfs the intellect."

Kellogg's mentor of sorts was Sylvester Graham, a connoisseur of whole grain brown bread. Graham felt that whole-grain bread and sexual abstinence conserved vital fluids and warded off cholera. He taught that meat-eating caused carnal desires and that salt and spices "excited the passions as well as the taste buds."

A New York health resort owner took Graham's advice and developed a wafer made of graham flour and water, which was baked and broken into coarse particles. Called Granula, this was America's first breakfast cereal.

A follower of Graham and Seventh Day Adventist prophet Ellen Harmon White, Kellogg developed his own cereal: ground-up meal cakes made from wheat, oats and corn and called Granola. Later, Kellogg discovered a flaking process for cereal and in 1895 unveiled Sanitas Corn Flakes at the Battle Creek Sanitarium, where he was superintendent.

Now, before you mothers of active teens buy out the breakfast food section at the supermarket, read on:

At the turn of the century, the breakfast and sexual appetites of Victorian America were saved by Kellogg's brother, Will, who committed the unpardonable crime of adding sugar to the cereal. The alleged anti-aphrodesiac power of the Sanitas Corn Flakes was washed out. Graham's chastity crusade was also ruined when sugar was added to the crisp brown crackers he later became famous for.

What this means is that a person can devour all the Product 19, Cocoa Krispies and two scoops of raisins his stomach can hold and still remain In The Mood — if not bloated.

Still, I wonder what would have happened if Will Kellogg had stayed out of the sugar. Would the company still have used the slogan: "Let us put more in your morning. More flavor. More nourisment. More fun?"

Would that inticingly slim young woman be featured in Special K commercials?

Would the late Euell Gibbons, the naturalist peddler of Grape Nuts for the competing Post Cereal Co., have spent as much time in the woods to see what parts of pine trees were edible?

John Harvey Kellogg's dream of a healthy, sexually pure society consuming Sanitas Corn Flakes may be laughable by modern standards.

Still, I'm glad my mom and dad preferred bacon and eggs.

Married couple co-pastors church in Helotes

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Despite the problems that go along with a husband and wife team co-pastoring a church, Randy and Elizabeth Terry say they get a lot of satisfaction from their ministry.

The Terrys took over as pastors of Forest Hills Presbyterian Church in Helotes July 21.

It is not their first co-pastorate. They worked together as associate ministers at a Presbyterian church in Racine for four years before moving to Helotes.

The Terrys said they have discovered the key to success for married ministers is keeping clear who leads in what areas.

"Trouble happens to many clergy couples when the people say, 'He's really the pastor' or 'she's really the pastor,' " Mrs. Terry said.

The couple said they have a avoided a lot of conflicts because they have different talents and they can divide responsibilities easily.

Terry said he likely will lead the stewardship and property committees. His wife will be in charge of evangelism and worship.

When it comes to acting as moderator of the session, or the church's governing body, the two will alternate.

"One of the things that turned us off when interviewing for church jobs was when people would say they could find 'children's work' for me," said Mrs. Terry.

The Terrys tried to avoid that stereotype at the church in Racine, Wis. They divided the Christian education work, with him handling the younger children.

The Forest Hills Church, which has about 110 members, has only one minister's position, which the Terrys are sharing.

The arrangement will work out well, they said, when Mrs. Terry gives birth to their first child in December.

The couple met while at the College of Wooster and married in 1973.

They had no plans to enter the ministry and even avoided church membership for several years.

Mrs. Terry, the daughter of a minister, said she tried to get away from church work after growing up with the pressure of being a "preacher's kid."

But she took a job as director of Christian education at a church because it gave her an opportunity to develop creative teaching techniques for several congregations.

"We both went through a stage of anger at the established church," she said. "But in my church work I saw dramatic, dynamic things happen to people when in the church's small groups."

At the same time, Terry was growing disillusioned with his job selling jewelry for a large chain.

So he quit his job and took another one as a church custodian at half the salary.

The job allowed him to work with the youth group and to call on parishioners.

When he started thinking of entering the ministry, Terry said, "Betsy was shocked. Being a minister's child, she felt very safe from the institutional church with me."

"Before I knew it," she said, "I found myself in a preaching class."

They both received master of divinity degrees from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1981.

Houston mayor will seek third term

HOUSTON (AP) — Vowing to continue building the nation's fourth largest city, Mayor Kathy Whitmire announced she wants to reign at the top spot for a third term.

Mrs. Whitmire, standing in front of a "Keep Kathy Mayor" backdrop, told about 500 supporters at a $25-per person fundraiser Monday that the efforts to build the city during her administration added to her seeking re-election.

"We've come way too far to turn back now. Tonight, I'm announcing my candidacy for mayor of Houston for the third time," Mrs. Whitmire said to the supporters gathered at the red, white and blue decorated Shamrock Hilton grand ballroom.

Her announcement brought an immediate chant of "We want Kathy."

Mrs. Whitmire's main opponent in the nonpartisan Nov. 5 election is former five-term Mayor Louie Welch.

The perfect home for Tip O'Neill

Massachusetts and federal officials wanted to call it the "little town that could." Instead, Ripton, Mass., became the "little town that wasn't"—a perfect example of how little attention some bureaucrats pay to their work.

Masshusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis and others are chuckling over the latest in a series of spoofs pulled by the non-existent town of Ripton: letters to federal officials saying the town would welcome the 30 or more communications towers the Air Force wants to build on 600 acres in the western part of that state.

The catch? Ripton doesn't exist in a physical sense, as federal officials soon found out when they tried to contact its non-existent mayor. But it does exist in the 1984 Massachusetts budget, where it and several other communities were included in a $150,000 allocation for a regional school-improvement plan.

It was nearly included in the 1986 state budget under allocations for clearing several streams of debris. In 1985, state legislators went so far as to vote down—they really did vote—allocations of $10,000 for weed control at "Darey's Pond" and $50,000 to maintain "Lazy River," both in Ripton.

According to Dave Scanzoni, spokesman for the Massachusetts Senate Ways and Means Committee, Ripton illustrates one of the problems of big-time bureaucracy: "I would have to say it was some kind of joke to indicate how things get voted on but are not necessarily read through."

Amen.

August Schumacher Jr., commissioner for the state's Department of Food and Agriculture, isn't sure why Ripton's dirty streams showed up in his department's budget. "It just slipped in. We're not sure how."

Who's been pulling the Ripton scam? It's under investigation.

So that's the kind of scrutiny they give public-works projects in Massachusetts. No wonder it's the state Tip O'Neill calls home.

'Cotton Ed' had it right

The late Ellison D. ("Cotton Ed") Smith, U.S. senator from South Carolina, maintained an unvarying political program during almost ten years of public life earlier in the twentieth century. The Smith program embodied several regional aspirations - states rights, white supremacy, and tariffs for revenue only.

Well, the U.S. Supreme Court has pretty thoroughly mutilated Cotton Ed's first plank; changing times and perceptions broke up the second - to the considerable relief of many a morally discomfitted Southerner.

"Free Trade" was the meaning of the third plank; nor, whatever the fate of the other planks, does it seem even now worn and splintery. Protectionism was a historic Southern bete noire, even among Southerners who, like Cotton Ed, probably couldn't spell bete noire.

High tariffs and other protectionist devices, suh, were a Yankee snare and delusion. They kept the price of Northern-made goods artificially high by penalizing imports. A tariff for any purpose other than raising revenue was a imposition on the buying public. This was more than Cotton Ed Smith's faith. It was the Southland's.

But it's 1985, and what to our wondering eyes should appear but Southern senators battling not against but in behalf of naked protectionism. Southern oxen have this time been gored. The textile industry says imports are running it.

Specifically, the industry wants congress to pass the Textile and Apparel Trade Enforcement Act of 1985, on which congressional hearings began last week.

The act gets quotas for cheaper foreign textile and clothing imports, particularly from Indonesia, Brazil, Korea, the Republic of China (Taiwan), mainland China and Hong Kong. Imports would drop by as much as 90 percent, depending on the country of origin.

By recent count, the act had more than 280 sponsors in the House and 53 in the Senate. Rock-ribbed Southern conservatives like Strom Thurmond and Jesse Helms, from the textile-producing Carolinas, are leading the push in the Senate.

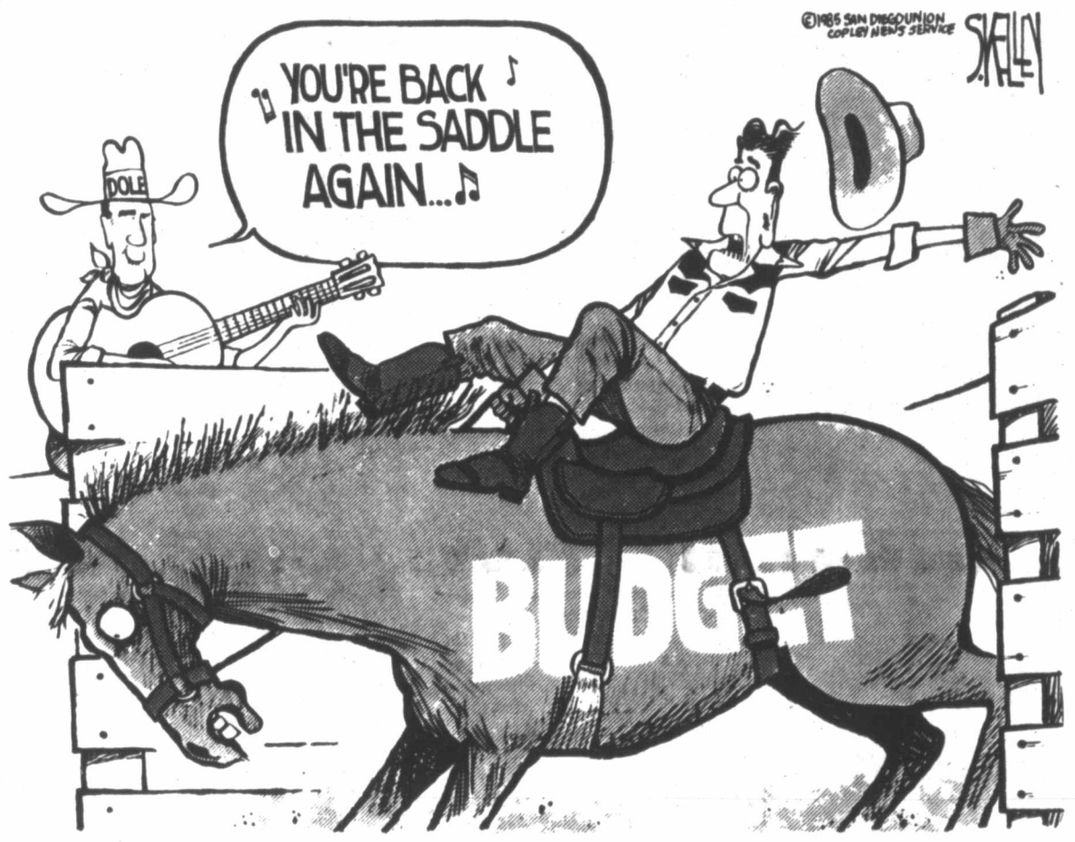

The honorable gentlemen need reminding that protectionism is STILL a snare and a delusion. If Congress insists on passing this regrettable legislation, President Reagan should veto it. The textile industry maintains that, absent legislation, imports could capture nearly the whole U.S. market by 1990, with attendant loss of U.S. jobs. In fact, the Reagan administration has established more than 300 special textile quotas since 1981.

Textile tariffs already average 22.3 percent; for all other industries the average is 5 percent. In January - April, 1985, textile and apparel imports dropped 1.1 percent from year-earlier levels. It's not as though the problem were being blatantly ignored.

What we have here - as always if the subject is trade - is a consumer issue of the first water. The more foreign goods Congress bars from this country, the higher prices domestic companies may charge with impunity. A tariff, as in Cotton Ed Smith's day, is an economic subsidy from consumers as a class to the protected industry. What if the textile bill should pass? One economic analysis of the legislation puts the extra cost at $1[illegible] billion a year; it suggests that clothing and textile prices would rise 10 percent. Nor is this to speak of what happens if the bill ignites a trade war, with the textile-exporting countries legislating quotas of their own, likely against U.S. agricultural exports. The U.S. textile industry has problems but not such large ones as it suggests. Makers of home furnishings and industrial goods are doing fine; in the clothing end, productivity gains have caused some of the joblessness.

What the textile industry wants is capital-protection. More to the point is capital-freedom - for non-competitive buisnesses to fail and therefore liberate capital for better uses; for businesses of every kind to compete all over the world as best they can; for consumers to buy at the best available prices.

The South of yesterday if not today had it right: The more "protection," the less genuine security.

At least the dog had fun

There is this man, see, and several years ago he received a surprise gift in the mail.

It was a funny-looking doll with large eyes and a fat little face. It looked a little like Elmer Fudd.

The doll didn't talk. It didn't walk. It didn't wet its pants. It didn't do anything but sort of sit there and stare at its new owner.

The man looked further into the box in which the doll had arrived. He found a birth certificate for the doll.

"Somebody is doing drugs and sending out dolls with birth certificates," the man thought.

The man had a little girl living in his house. Her name was Lisa and she was 7 or 8 at the time. Lisa came home from school.

"Look what a surprise I have for you," the man said to her as he handed over the fat-faced little doll and its birth certificate.

"What is that?" Lisa asked.

"It's a doll," said the man.

"Does it talk?" Lisa asked.

"No," said the man.

"No," answered the man. "I don't think it does much of anything but sort of lie there.

"Doesn't sound like much of a doll to me," said Lisa, "and it's really ugly."

A little boy also lived in his house. When the little boy—Bruce was his name and he was 5—came home the man tried to pawn the doll off on him.

"Dolls are for sissies," said the little boy, who went outside to drive the man crazy by riding his Big Wheel up and down the driveway for several hours without stopping.

The man didn't know what to do with the doll, so he threw it in a closet somewhere and promptly forgot about it.

A few year later the man was talking to a friend and the conversation got around to what children were getting for Christmas that year.

"Cabbage Patch Kids are still the big thing," said the friend, who also said, "I hear collectors are asking as much as $2,000 for the originals.

The man called Cleveland, Ga., home of Babyland and Cabbage Patch Kids, and asked if that was true.

"If the kid—we don't call them dolls—is from the original Helen Blue edition," said a woman, "we've heard collectors are getting as much as $4,000."

Suddenly the man felt very sick at his stomach. The doll he had received through the mail several years ago was, in fact, a Cabbage Patch Kid and perhaps one of the originals. He had received the doll as part of Babyland's promotion, but the man had no idea how valuable the doll—the Kid—would become, so he eventually gave it to his dog, who ate the blamed thing.

The man thinks he should find a Big Wheel and drive it off a cliff somewhere.

What follows apartheid?

Watching developments — both good and bad — in South Africa, and the responses thereto in the United States and elsewhere, I am struck by the fact that South Africa is failing to make one extremely important point in its own behalf.

The typical discussion of South Africa and its problems, at least in the United States, opens with declarations by everyone present that South Africa's current policy of apartheid is "abhorrent," and then goes on to analyze some subordinate aspect of the problem: Should the South African government release Nelson Mandela unconditionally? Should the United States bar further loans to South Africa by American banks? And so on.

Seldom, if ever, do the discussants pause to specify what ought to replace apartheid. For apartheid — the question: With what shall apartheid be replaced?

It is not a trick question, or an unanswerable one. In fact, there are dozens of possible answers to it, each with its adherents. But it is a difficult question, because every answer is, in one way or another, manifestly unsatisfactory.

The most clear-cut and sweeping answer, favored by many if not most South African blacks and many of South Africa's more extreme foreign meaning those laws that discriminate against blacks, and especially those that bar blacks from participating in the political process — cannot simply be abolished: It must be replaced by something else. And I have come to the conclusion that the South African government is making a grave mistake in not insisting on an answer to critics, is summed up in the formula, "One man, one vote, in a unitary state." That is to say, simply confer the franchise on every adult citizen inside the present borders of the Republic of South Africa, regardless of race, and may the best man win.

This solution has at least the merit of simplicity, and is moreover the system followed (more or less) in most of the world's democratic societies. But South Africa is, without much question, the most piebald, polyglot society on earth: a nation in which a high European culture composed of 5 million English- and Dutch-descended whites, 2.5 million long-acculturated "coloureds" of mixed ancestry, and perhaps a million "Asians" of Indian descent, plus an indeterminate number of blacks, exists side by side with a numerically dominant group of primitive, tribalized blacks who 150 years ago possessed neither a written language nor the principle of the wheel.

I do not say that South Africa's American critics, if pressed, would refuse to argue that it should submit itself unconditionally to rule by this black majority. But I notice that they don't dwell on the subject any longer than they have to, and I am confident that they would lose, if they adopted such a position, a large portion of the sympathy the anti-South African cause enjoys in the United States, because most Americans understand instinctively the inevitable and disastrous consequences of such a "solution." The implacable evolution of Robert Mugabe's Zimbabwe into a one-party tribal dictatorship is an object lesson to everyone.

Legislative battle over offshore oil revenues begins

WASHINGTON (AP) — The seven-year, $6 billion battle over offshore oil and natural gas revenues between the federal government and seven coastal states has moved to the halls of Congress.

If they agreed on nothing else, the parties to the dispute did agree in testimony before the House Interior Committee on Monday that Congress should legislate the answer.

"I'm afraid without comprehensive and permanent legislative solution, this issue will remain in litigation for years to come," testified Rep. John Breaux, D-La.

Since 1978, when Congress decided that revenues from shared offshore leases should divided between the federal government and the states in a "fair and equitable" manner, the Interior Department and the states of Alaska, California, Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and Florida have been arguing about what is "fair and equitable." In the meantime, about $6 billion has accumulated in an escrow account.

Louisiana and Texas have sued over the money.

William D. Bettenberg, director of the Minerals Management Service in the Interior Department, testified it is "clear that negotiated agreements under the current law are exceedingly difficult to obtain."

"We hope all parties will join together and support a legislative settlement which resolves all existing claims and prevents new disputes from developing," Bettenberg said.

After beginning last year with an offer to the states of 16-2-3 percent of a portion of the revenues from shared offshore lands, the Reagan administration now favors a House Budget Committee recommendation that it give the states 27 percent of a portion of the revenues.

Texas Gov. Mark White, who testified Monday, and the governors of Alaska and California in written statements, said they are sticking with the states' demand for 37.5 percent of the revenues — including royalties on the oil and gas produced, not just rents on the leases and the "bonuses" paid to get a lease.

"The House proposal notably lacks the inclusion of royalties," complained California Gov. George Deukmejian. "Royalties are potentially the largest source of Outer Continental Shelf revenues and would provide funds over a number of years."

"The fair and equitable share for Alaska should be at least 37.5 percent," wrote Alaska Gov. Bill Sheffield.

"I think there's no chance unless we try, and I was certainly dismayed to see reluctance on the part of some of our congressmen to seek that 37½ percent," White said after the hearing.

(Rep. Jack Fields, R-Houston, had testified in favor of the Budget Committee proposal.)

Louisiana Gov. Edwin Edwards wrote the committee that he would favor the 27 percent proposal if royalties were addressed as well.

White House tries to undercut Soviets

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House beat the Kremlin to the punch by first revealing — and then immediately rejecting — a Soviet proposal for a ban on nuclear weapons testing by the two superpowers.

At the same time, while deriding the Soviet offer, the White House announced it had invited Moscow to send a team of experts to the United States to monitor an underground nuclear test in Nevada.

Trying to undercut the propaganda value of the Soviet offer, the Reagan administration said Monday that the last time the United States agreed to such a moratorium — in the early 1960s — the Soviets followed a three-year test ban "with the largest series of high-yield explosions in history, including the largest single nuclear test ever conducted."

The White House said the Soviets appeared ready to do the same thing again.

Describing the U.S. invitation to the nuclear test the as a "far reaching offer," presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said it was an unconditional proposal and did not require a reciprocal visit by an American team to the Soviet Union.

The Soviet Union did not flatly reject the U.S. offer but called it a ploy to divert attention from Moscow's test ban proposal.

The sudden flurry of initiatives came in the midst of a recess in the stalemated nuclear arms control talks and appeared aimed at scoring public relations points for each side.

At the White House, a senior administration official charged that there had been "a significant acceleration in the number of nuclear tests by the Soviet Union" over the past month.

"Clearly this was designed to put the Soviet Union in a position not to need to test over the next five months and to break out on an accelerated schedule as they did in 1961 ... without real costs to Soviet programs," said the official, briefing reporters on the condition he not be identified.

On Capitol Hill, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., introduced a resolution in the Senate calling for renewed U.S.-Soviet talks aimed at achieving a comprehensive test ban, and debate and a vote on the measure was set for today. Last year, the Senate gave 77-26 approval to a similar resolution.

The test ban proposal was relayed to the United States on Sunday through diplomatic channels, then was made public by an announcement in Moscow on Monday.

The Kremlin said it would unilaterally ban all nuclear tests beginning Aug. 6, the 40th anniversary of the atomic bombing of Hiroshima, until Jan. 1. After that, the Soviets said, the ban would remain in effect only if the United States refrains from nuclear testing.

At the White House, the administration official said it would hurt the United States to halt testing now.

"Given the scope and scale of Soviet modernization programs and U.S. restraint, U.S. testing is necessary to ensure the continued credibility and effectiveness of the U.S. nuclear deterrent," the official said.

Discussing the offer for Soviet scientists to visit Nevada, Speakes said, "This is an effort to demonstrate that we would go the extra mile in order to get some results in arms control discussions. We would characterize it as a concrete step.

Astronauts showed no emotion during crisis with engine

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Challenger's astronauts were speeding toward orbit at 5,500 mph Monday when one of their engines quit, but they never betrayed a moment's anxiety in talking with Mission Control.

It was a problem they had dealt with many times in practice runs on the ground, and their reaction was no different when the problem was real.

"We show a center engine failure," said mission commander Gordon Fullerton. It could have been a comment on the weather.

"Roger," said Mission Control. "We copy. Standby."

There was silence, then Mission Control said, "Abort ATO (abort to orbit). Abort ATO."

The message to the astronauts was that they were to continue flying toward orbit with just two engines. They were then traveling at about 8,800 mph.

"Main engines limits to enable, Gordo," said Mission Control.

"OK," came the reply.

The astronauts punched in a code to tell the two engines to burn as long as possible at 104 per cent of rated thrust. The astronauts also dumped fuel from another rocket engine system, the Orbital Maneuvering System. This was to reduce the weight the two main engines would have to lift.

"Houston," said Fullerton. "We have about a minute and 50 seconds of delta time (additional rocket engine thrust). Can you confirm?"

"Challenger, Houston. Looks like a good dump. That's about the right time," replied Mission Control.

A minute or so later, Mission Control instructed: "Main engines limits to inhibit."

"OK Inhibit," came the reply.

Within moments, the two main engines shut down.

"Houston, MECO (main engine cut off) confirmed," said Fullerton.

"We copy and we're looking at it, Gordo," said Mission Control.

Autograph party set

Book takes unique look at Texas' past

James Haley, author of "Texas: An Album of History," is to be featured at an autograph party Wednesday at The Gift Box, 117 W. Kingsmill, from 12:30 p.m. to 2:30 p.m.

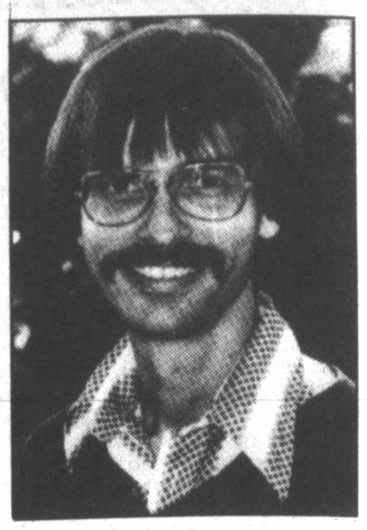

Haley, a native Texan, has produced an album of rare photographs, some never before published, with maps and primary source material, illustrating the history of Texas. The book has been published in conjunction with the 1986 sesquicentennial celebration of statehood.

Covering the time in the early 1820s when Moses Austin, a Connecticut Yankee, and his son Stephen first speculated in land holding in Spanish Texas, to the moment when Spindletop blew in 1901, changing the face of the land forever, this unusual history of the Lone Star State combines a historian's love of "Texana" and a keen sense of the things that make Texas unique.

Pampans might be especially interested in Haley's accounts of the battle of Palo Duro Canyon and Opening the Panhandle: Captain Goodnight and the JA Ranch.

Illustrations include rare photographs, collected from state and national archives, of Sam Houston, the Alamo, the Declaration of Independence of the Republic of Texas, the battles of Coleto and of San Jacinto, the German Settlements in the West, the cattle empire, the Civil War, Reconstruction, the Buffalo Days and the Red River War, the Texas Rangers, the Salt War, Sam Bass, the Apaches, the destruction of Galveston, and the dawn of a new age...

Haley, 33, has been acclaimed as one of the most versatile and respected of the new generation of Texas writers. He graduated summa cum laude from the University of Texas at Arlington in 1975, and studied at the UT School of Law, where he served as editor - in - chief of the Urban Law Review. His book reviews are a feature of the Dallas Morning News, and he serves on the steering committee of the Austin Writers League. His previous books include APACHES: A History and Culture Portrait and THE BUFFALO WAR: The History of the Red River Indian Uprising of 1874. He makes his home in Austin.

Furniture expert offers tips on collecting for quality, value

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Two questions often asked about old furniture are how much it's worth and what style it's in, says Dr. Joseph T. Butler.

Butler, who oversees Washington Irving's Sunnyside and several other historic restorations, is director of Sleepy Hollow Restorations in Tarrytown, N.Y.

Recently he wrote a book to help those who want to find out what style a piece is in. As to what it's worth, that's a question whose answer fluctuates, depending on which styles are currently "in" at the moment.

Although nothing seems likely to touch Queen Anne and Chippendale style furniture for monetary value and sheer popularity, Butler says that late 19th-century furniture is currently coming in for considerable attention and for price increases, judging from recent auction prices paid for some examples.

Belter's elaborate carved Victorian furniture, so-called aesthetic furniture of the late 19th and early 20th century, and examples that date from the Arts and Crafts movement in the late 19th century have all been commanding high auction prices.

"To our eyes, these styles that only a few years ago were considered too elaborate, ornamented and heavy are beginning to look good again," said the 19th-century furniture expert.

With late 19th-century pieces appreciating rapidly, many who like old furniture are being forced out of the market. So, what can an individual of moderate means collect that will be serviceable at present and that can be expected to appreciate in value later on, Butler was asked.

He offered a few tips: "Look for an original, not a reproduction. It's good if the product was made under the direction of a designer and if the designer's name is known. Look for quality materials and quality craftsmanship."

Examples of contemporary furniture he believes will probably appreciate in value are pieces designed by members of the German 20th-century design school known as the Bauhaus. On the other hand, some periods are fads for a while and then fade from view. An example of this type of design may be of 1950s furniture which he believes may be on its way out before it got properly started.

In his new book, Butler covers the range of American furniture styles from the 17th to the 20th century. Drawings by Ray Skibinski of actual pieces and characteristic design details are included so readers can use the book as a kind of dictionary to "look up" pieces they may find at yard sales, auctions and shops.

When there is a choice, Butler says drawings often provide better clues to identifying furniture styles than photos since it is possible to illustrate minute details.

One reason why identifying American antique furniture is often difficult to do with accuracy is the penchant Americans have for reviving old styles, but changing them a little bit.

The wing chair is a good example of how one idea becomes popular, then later is changed into something different. Wing chairs started out as bedroom chairs in the 17th century, and usually included a chamber pot concealed beneath the seat cushion. The chair went out of fashion after the American Revolution. It was replaced in the bedroom by a chair Butler says was known as the "lolling chair."

Then between 1875 and 1910, the wing chair was revived during the Colonial Revival period, which popularized 17th-and 18th-century designs as "colonial" furniture. However, instead of bringing back accurate examples of Queen Anne or Chippendale or other styles, many manufacturers created furniture that contained elements of all sorts of styles, indiscriminately calling them "colonial."

Wing chairs now reappeared as large easy chairs and were sold as living room furniture — a state of affairs which is still true today.

The unwary collector, attempting to date furniture, may easily become confused when dealing with later copies of earlier styles, noted Butler. That's why books such as his which describe and illustrate furniture examples are useful. ———

Dear Abby

Mother-in-law overstays her welcome before visit begins

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1985 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I've been married for two years to a man who never got along very well with his family. (I've never met any of them.)

His mother wrote to us saying she would like to visit us toward the end of the summer, so we invited her to come for four or five days. She wrote back saying she was coming for a two-week visit and was bringing her sister and her sister's daughter with her!

We wrote her saying we had a very small house and were not able to have guests for two weeks, but the three of them could come for one week only. Well, she wrote back and said she had to stay for two weeks to get a reduced air fare!

Dear Abby, are we stuck with three people for two weeks? We just can't handle it! His mother is not elderly, poor or disabled, if that makes a difference. Help!

NO NAME, OF COURSE

DEAR NO NAME: Even though this woman is your husband's mother, it doesn't give her the right to stretch a four- to five-day invitation to two weeks and bring two additional guests to boot.

Tell her that if they stay two weeks, you will be glad to make reservations at a nearby motel for the second week. And if you can't pick up the tab, send her the motel rates and ask for her preference.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: You missed the boat in your answer to "Bewildered," the couple who were sure that if they left their considerable estate to their only daughter, she would spend it all on her "no-good" husband.

You said, "There is no way you can control the way your daughter spends her inheritance." This is not so.

You should have suggested that they consult a lawyer experienced in wills and trusts, and consider leaving the inheritance in a trust for the benefit of their daughter for her lifetime. The trustee (probably a bank) could be directed to distribute the money, from the income or principal, only for the daughter's benefit, as the trustee decides is appropriate.

While the son-in-law would probably benefit indirectly from this arrangement, the daughter would get the primary benefit, and the principal of the trust would give her financial security for the rest of her life.

DONALD R. WAISEL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
HARRISBURG, PA.

DEAR MR. WAISEL: You are right, of course. And judging from the number of letters I received from lawyers and trust officers, I not only missed the boat, I missed the entire fleet.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: Two weeks ago I might have felt the same as "Disappointed Mom," but I hope that she will be thankful for her daughter's good qualities as you advised.

My daughter is nearly 20. She graduated No. 1 in her class and had her pick of the top colleges. She was beautiful and talented, but never seemed interested in boys the way most girls were.

After her freshman year of college, she told me she had fallen in love with another woman! My world fell apart, Abby. If she had had a normal heterosexual relationship, I would have overlooked everything else.

I still pray that some wonderful man will come along and sweep her off her feet. I love her with all my heart, but don't think I will ever be able to accept her lifestyle.

STILL HOPEFUL

DEAR STILL: If you love her, you will learn more about her "lifestyle." Do yourself—and your daughter—a favor, and write to PARENTS FLAG, P.O. Box 24565, Los Angeles, Calif. 90024.

The information is comforting, enlightening and free, but please enclose a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope.

Here's the Answer

I have to work with electric wires for small jobs, such as fixing a lamp cord plug. I see little caps in hardware stores for making connections between wires. Are these good to use?

A. — Yes. They are called solderless connectors or wire nuts. When you connect the two ends of wires, be sure they are well twisted together before you put the connector over them. The connector must then be turned clockwise for a secure grip. ———

Q. — I have a bureau I would like to refinish with lacquer. My plan is to remove all the old finish, then apply the lacquer. My neighbor says this will be a lot of work and that I probably can put the lacquer over the old finish if I sand it first.

A. — That would not be a good plan. Go ahead with your original idea. Lacquer sometimes acts as paint and varnish remover. That's why you should not use a brush that previously has been used for paint or varnish. ———

(The techniques of using lacquer, varnish, shellac, remover, stain, bleach, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," which can be obtained by sending 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P. O. Box 477, Huntington, NY 11743.

Cards aid cancer victims

Individuals and community organizations throughout the Panhandle can benefit those with cancer by participating in the sale of original Christmas cards, designed by local children.

The Christmas cards are available from August through December each year from Cancer Support Inc. of Amarillo, a non-profit organization made up of volunteers from the business and professional community.

The financial assistance provided by this program is available for all individuals who live in the Panhandle area and are treated in any of the Amarillo health care facilities or programs.

Cancer Support Inc.'s purpose is to assist patients and their families with health care expenses directed towards improving the patients' quality of life. Finances for the program are made by the annual sale of the Christmas cards. This year begins the third edition of the cards, designed by Panhandle area school children.

Designs for the cards are chosen through a contest held each year in November. A panel of judges selects the four winners whose cards are displayed at the Harrington Cancer Center during December. Each child with a winning design receives an award of $100. Businesses and individuals also select designs for exclusive cards.

Community organizations in the Panhandle also sell the cards as a fundraising activity for their group as well as assisting cancer patients.

For more information, call Elizabeth Carter at 358-2457 or Charlotte Rhodes at 373-8389, or write Cancer Support Inc., P.O. Box 466, Amarillo, 79105.)

Japan launches new open market plan

TOKYO (AP) — In yet another bid to head off a trade war with the West, economically powerful Japan launched a three-year trade program today that one Cabinet minister claimed would make it "the most open market among developed countries."

Under pressure from its Western trading partners, the government released a 47-page document outlining 87 measures aimed at streamlining Japan's import procedures, specifically those concerning certification of products and simplification of technical standards.

Appearing later in a nationally televised news conference, Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone appealed to the U.S. Congress to avoid trade protectionism, and asked the Japanese people to cooperate in liberalizing import markets.

"We must defend the free trade system to the last. We are fighting a life and death battle against protectionism ... we know clearly that if we let the protectionist bills pass in the U.S. Congress, the global economy will face another recession," Nakasone said.

Japan's surplus with the United States in 1984 was $36.8 billion, and some members of Congress have said it could reach $50 billion this year. Japan faces as much as 86 different bills In Congress designed to restrict its imports to the United States.

Japan also chalked up a $10 billion surplus with the European Common Market last year. Officials declined to say how much Japan intends to trim from its $45 billion global trade surplus over the next three years.

Nakasone likened Japan's current situation to "sakoku," the 250 years of self-imposed feudal isolation that ended in 1853, and said, "We must get ourselves out of isolation."

Officials of the U.S. Embassy and the American Chamber of Commerce declined to comment on the package until they could assess it carefully.

"We have high hopes for progress in self-certification and simplification of importation of automobiles," said Henry Leonard, an official with General Motors Corp. The U.S. auto industry has been hit hard by Japanese imports.

Jan van-Rij, charge d'affaires of the Common Market delegation in Japan, said in a telephone interview that he thought it was "too early to say anything; it's too important a subject to rush off an initial impression of thousands of hours of work and hundreds of pages."

35-nation conference underway in Helsinki

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — With the superpowers already sparring over arms control proposals, a 35-nation conference marking the 10th anniversary of the controversial Helsinki human rights and security accords gets under way today.

Both Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze and U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz are scheduled to address the conference.

Shevardnadze, named July 2 to replace Andrei A. Gromyko as foreign minister, is making his international debut at the meeting. Gromyko is the new Soviet president.

On Monday, the Soviets offered to halt unilaterally all nuclear test explosions between Aug. 6, the 40th anniversary of the atomic bombing of Hiroshima, Japan, and Jan. 1.

Shultz arrived in the Finnish capital Monday night after telling reporters on his plane that Washington considered Moscow's moratorium idea a publicity ploy.

"We don't believe it is in our best interest to stop our testing program under these circumstances," he said.

He said that without monitoring Soviet tests there was no way to know for certain if the moratorium announced in Moscow was being observed.

In an arrival statement, Shultz stressed the offer President Reagan made before the United Nations in September to tighten verification procedures to make sure limits already in effect were being honored.

In Moscow, the Soviet Union said a U.S. invitation to send observers to a nuclear test in Nevada was an attempt to divert attention from Soviet calls for a test ban treaty.

Shevardnadze did not mention the moratorium idea on his arrival in Helsinki on Monday.

But the Soviet news agency Tass later reported that he had reviewed the proposal with other Warsaw Pact ministers gathered in Helsinki.

He and the ministers also held "comradely" discussions on other bilateral issues, Tass reported.

The Helsinki conference commemorates the signing 10 years ago of the Final Act of the two-year Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

The conference involved the United States, Canada and every European country except Albania, and produced a wide range of pledges on human rights while cementing post World War II borders.

On his arrival in Helsinki, Shultz called the 1975 agreement a "beacon of hope." But in an apparent reference to the Soviet bloc, he said: "Not all participating states have fulfilled their commitments to human rights."

Shultz was scheduled to meet Shevardnadze on Wednesday. Shultz said he would take up the subject of human rights with Shevardnadze and make a point of it in his speech today.

For the past decade the United States and other Western signers of the Helsinki Accords have accused the Soviet bloc of violating human rights promises in its treatment of dissidents.

Moscow and its allies contend that the Western amount to interference in their internal affairs, which they say violates the Helsinki agreement.

Soviet and American officials said the two leaders also would discuss armaments and the summit scheduled for November between Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

Exported black widow spiders cost firm $50,000

MONTERREY, Mexico (AP) — Poisonous black widow spiders that hitched a ride to Michigan from an automobile parts plant near this northern industrial city have cost the company $50,000 so far, spokesmen said.

"We call them gold spiders," said Jorge de la Maza, general director of Carplastic, a Ford Motor Co. joint venture with the Mexican conglomerate Visa.

At least two dozen black widows have been found since June 25 in dashboard parts sent to a Ford plastics plant in Saline, Mich., Ford officials in Detroit reported.

The last spider was sighted more than a week ago, but authorities at the 3-year-old plant here said they are taking no chances.

The black widows, which have frightened but not bitten workers in Saline, hid in metal shipping racks that had been stored in a company warehouse, de la Maza said.

He said the spiders have been sighted occasionally on the outdoor patios at the Monterrey plant but that none of the plant's 820 workers has been bitten.

The problem, which surfaced after the Nuevo Leon state government began clearing a 240-acre brushy area near the plant for low income housing, has forced Carplastic to "take some drastic measures," de la Maza said.

The square metal basket-type racks holding the backplates — a part attached behind the dashboard — have been dipped in an insecticide to kill the spiders.

The company also has fumigated its entire plant and circled the area around the 175,000-square-foot plant with a "very strong insecticide," de la Maza said.

The baskets are fumigated again once they reach a customs broker in Laredo, Texas, before they go on to Saline by truck, he said.

A consultant hired for advice on the eradication program has discovered a few dead spiders and some egg sacs, de la Maza said. But, he said, company officials who check the plant daily have not seen any spiders, dead or alive, for at least a week.

Black widows are about the size of a grape and are characterized by a red hourglass shape on their bellies.

The bites usually aren't deadly, but symptoms include chills, fever, sweating, abdominal cramps, vomiting and pain.

SECURITY PROBLEM—Ken Allen, a 15 - year - old orangutan that is housed at the San Diego Zoo, has escaped his enclosure twice in the past two months. Ken Allen is now being held off display until zoo officials can determine his escape routes and rectify the security problem.

Orangutan likes to wander

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Keepers at the San Diego Zoo are putting the heat on Ken Allen and may even go undercover to learn how the sneaky, 15-year-old orangutan has been breaking out of his pen to wander among zoo visitors.

Ken Allen, named for one of the zoo's senior keepers, has taken it on the lam twice in the past six weeks.

"It's a minor concern for visitor safety because orangutans are generally very passive animals," said spokesman Jeff Jouett. "It's not like having a carnivore on the loose. It's more of a concern for Ken Allen's safety."

Jouett said keepers studying Ken Allen's pen have some ideas about the auburn-haired, 220-pounder's escape route, but they're not certain. One theory is that the orangutan is leaping over the back wall of the enclosure, where he has been seen sitting for hours at a time, peering into the distance.

The pen is a pit-like enclosure about 50 feet in diameter, surrounded by a moat. It has a climbing area and is designed to look like natural habitat.

The zoo is reinforcing parts of the enclosure, and on a more clandestine front, is laying plans to spy on Ken Allen.

"We think he won't really feel at liberty if he sees a keeper or a veterinarian," Jouett said. "So we plan to dress one of our people as a tourist — shorts, camera around the neck, the whole bit — and assign them to watch his every move."

Ken Allen had been living in the enclosure for a week when he leaped over moat and wall to freedom on June 13.

On Wednesday, Ken Allen took off after picking a fight with his neighbor, Otis the oranguntan. The two heaved rocks at each other and keepers feared for a time that Ken Allen might jump into Otis' enclosure for closer contact.

While obviously not escape-proof, keepers had thought the enclosure would hold Ken Allen. Three years ago, the zoo hired Hollywood orangutan C.J. to test it. C.J. broke out, but keepers reinforced the weak spots before putting the zoo's orangutans inside.

"We were testing (C.J.'s) strength and agility rather than his mental power," Jouett said of the orangutan who co-starred with Clint Eastwood in the movie "Every Which Way But Loose."

Ken Allen is using brains and brawn in his escapes.

"All they need to do is to wedge a little bit of their finger into a crevice to pull their whole body up," Jouett said. "Those crevices are going to be filled in."

Rock Hudson enters L.A. hospital

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Screen star Rock Hudson, battling for his life against AIDS and a liver disorder, flew home today aboard a chartered jetliner and was carried on a stretcher to a hospital-bound helicopter, officials said.

Hudson, 59, star of the "McMillan and Wife" and "Dynasty" television series, was returning home for treatment at the UCLA Medical Center, publicist Dale Olson said Monday.

He left Paris, where he was undergoing treatment at the American Hospital, late Monday aboard a chartered Air France jetliner that landed at Los Angeles International Airport, where he was transfered to a waiting copter.

Airport workers said Hudson was moved between aircraft on a stretcher. Reporters were kept at a distance.

"Here's a man who's fighting for his life, and a press event could jeopardize his life," Olson said Monday. "My major concern at this point is his condition and his comfort. That is the reason he is being brought back here."

Cathy Dunn, a medical center spokeswoman, said Hudson would be admitted today "for further evaluation and treatment for his present illness."

Initially, Olson reported last week that Hudson had inoperable liver cancer, but Monday he said that diagnosis was superseded by the diagnosis of acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

"They are still saying that there is a liver problem," Olson said, but he added that now they are no longer certain whether it is cancer.

There is no known cure for AIDS, which weakens and eventually destroys the body's immune system.

AIDS clinical research centers have been established at UCLA and University of California-San Francisco, UC spokeswoman Valerie Sullivan said in Berkeley.

Hudson had been in an isolation unit at the American Hospital in the Paris suburb of Neuilly but had not been treated for AIDS since he was admitted July 21, said spokeswoman Yanou Collart, countering reports that the actor was given HPA 23, an experimental drug not available in the United States.

The most common victims of AIDS are homosexuals, intravenous drug users and hemophiliacs. The disease is believed to be spread through sexual contact, contaminated needles and blood transfusions.

Last Thursday, Ms. Collart disclosed that Hudson was diagnosed more than a year ago as having AIDS and that doctors at the American Hospital had discovered liver abnormalities. By Monday, it remained unclear if the liver ailment was linked to AIDS.

Ms. Collart said Hudson remained in stable condition, the same term used to describe him since Thursday.

U.S. foreign trade deficit continues up

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. foreign trade deficit, powered by a jump in petroleum imports, surged to $13.4 billion last month, the second highest on record, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said that the merchandise trade deficit — the difference between exports and imports — rose from $12.7 billion in May.

The new flood of red ink came from an 8.1 percent jump in oil imports and foreign goods such as Japanese cars, which swamped a slight gain in exports.

For the first six months of the year, the deficit totals $70.7 billion.

Homeport cities balancing monies for incoming ships

By SUZANNE GAMBOA
Associated Press Writer

At least two of the nine Gulf cities that will become hosts for a spread-out fleet of Navy ships are having trouble coming up with the money they pledged in a bidding war to win the job-producing "homeport" status.

Over the past week, a Navy team has visited six of the nine cities that won in the 19-city competition to host the reactivated battleship Wisconsin, reminding them that commitments on the millions of dollars they pledged to spend are due Aug. 1.

The money the cities are to spend will go for construction of such public facilities as roads and docks, sewers and utility connections and, in some places, dredging of harbors.

In return, the 29 ships mean millions of dollars in jobs and economic development for the host cities in a region hard hit by stagnation in the oil industry.

But officials in Galveston have sent an urgent plea for help in coming up with the $8 million the Navy wants spent, and Pascagoula, Miss., officials say they don't yet know if they'll have the $25 millionWisconsin, will have the $50 million it offered.

Violet, La., and Key West, Fla., will receive only small ships at existing facilities and will not be asked to make large financial contributions.

And Pensacola, Fla., and Lake Charles, La., say they'll not only come through on their commitments, but also will take any ships other cities can't afford.

"All of this was in the initial proposals," said Navy Lt. Max Allen. "All the Navy is asking them to do is, even though they didn't get the Wisconsin, we still need support offered for these other ships."

Galveston Mayor Jan Coggeshall said her island city counted on $25 million offered by the legislature and included no local bond money when its proposal was drafted. But that state money was inonsin and its support group, and the Wisconsin and the $25 million went to Corpus Christi.

Galveston was awarded five smaller combat ships and the Navy expects the city to pay for improvements to handle them.

"Eight million dollars is a lot of money" for a city of 60,000 that is already near its legal taxing limit, Ms. Coggeshall said. Spokesmen for Gov. Mark White and Mayor Kathy Whitmire of neighboring Houston say they are studying the problem.

Corpus Christi Mayor Luther Jones said his city got the major part of the fleet because voters agreed to tax themselves $25 million on top of the state contribution. The Navy estimated the city will gain 5,200 military and civilian personnel and an annual payroll of $95 million to $100 million.

Pascagoula officials are still negotiating with the Navy, said City Manager Charles Fulghum.

Fulghum would not say if Pascagoula could meet the $25 eans of satisfying the Navy's needs," he said.

Fulghum said the city is considering all possibilities. "We intend to get our ships," he said.

Pensacola Mayor Vince Whibbs has offered the Navy his port for any ships that Galveston, or any other city, can't support.

Whibbs said the city will be equipped to handle more ships because it is already planning to spend an estimated $12 million dredging the port arrier Kitty Hawk.

"Pensacola is a very responsible and responsive city," Whibbs said. "The economic benefit is significant, but the bottom line is the defenses of the United States of America."

James Sudduth, port director for Lake Charles, La., said his port also can take on any vessels that other cities can't handle. He said the Navy is asking for 30 acres of free land, $5 million for construction and free utilities.

Armchair tax quarterback Wilbur Mills rejects the Reagan plan

By MIKE ROBINSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Once acknowledged as the leading tax expert in Congress, Wilbur D. Mills has a few choice words these days — all negative — for President Reagan's tax overhaul plan.

"There's no argument for it," says the former chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee in the husky drawl that became familiar during his 15 years as Capitol Hill's chief tax writer.

"Really, it doesn't produce any great degree of fairness," he said. "And there's no simplification in it."

With the budget deficit soaring toward $200 billion a year and the trade gap nearing $150 billion, there are more pressing problems than the quest for a simpler tax system, Mills said.

The 76-year-old Arkansas Democrat, who headed the committee from 1958 through 1974, was often called the most powerful man in Congress. His cloakroom wiles, knowledge of tax legislation and knack for getting his way were renowned among Washington insiders.

After 19 terms, Mills retired from Congress in 1976, two years after a series of embarrassing episodes involving stripper Fanne Fox and disclosure of his alcoholism. Now recovered, he practices law here.

When lawmakers talk taxes, though, his name still comes up.

Rep. Fortney H. Stark, D-Calif., recently told reporters that in herding tax revision through the committee the panel's current chairman, Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., might well take a page from the Mills book.

Actually, said Mills, times have changed so much that Rostenkowski will find little in yesterday's tax battles to serve as a guide. One reason, he said, is that the panel has been expanded.

"It's an entirely different situation," Mills said recently in an interview in his law office. "I feel sorry for Danny. He has got 37 voices to listen to now. We only had 25. It's a lot easier to get 25 people together than 37."

Reagan's plan would shrink the number of tax brackets from 14 to three, cut rates, remove numerous needy taxpayers from the rolls, end deduction of state and local taxes and alter the law in numerous other ways. Opposition to major provisions is coming from both business and labor.

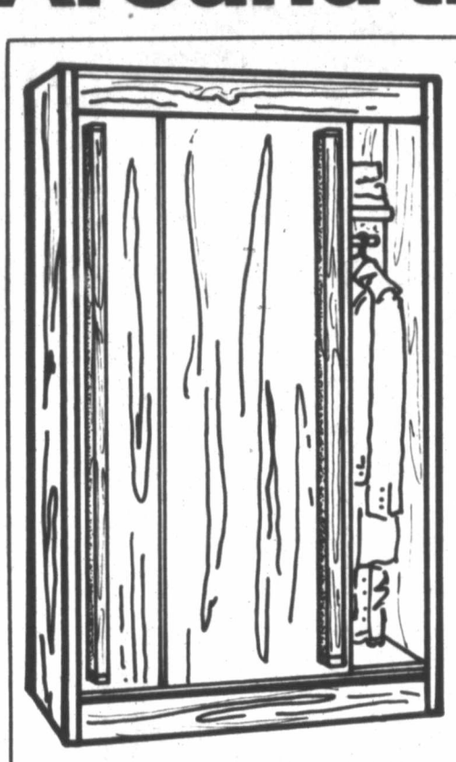

Under the White House plan, "I think actually you can increase a person's tax unduly under the minimum tax," Mills said.

"It's highly unfair in 16 states to eliminate the deduction of state and local taxes," he said, "because they have a very high rate."

GOOD FRIENDS—Tuffy, a pet cockatiel, likes to sit on Carl Smitherman's shoulders and listen as Carl plays the fiddle. Tuffy, one of about 200 cockatiel birds at Smitherman's Angleton farm, is the only housepet. Smitherman says it's best to have only one in the house because if there's a pair, they act like birds; if there's one, he thinks he's human. (AP Laserphoto)

Cockatiel farm home to 170 birds

By VIVIENNE HEINES
The Brazosport Facts

ANGLETON, Texas (AP) — In many ways, Tuffy is a fairly typical household pet. He lets his owners, Arline and Carl Smitherman, know when visitors arrive at their farm, he watches television with them, enjoys nibbling on occasional tidbits of junk food.

But Tuffy is a pet with a difference. He's a bird — a cockatiel, to be precise. Tuffy is one of about 170 birds on the Smithermans' farm, but he's the only house pet. The others are raised for selling and breeding.

"We got him in '81. My niece had him and Carl wanted him, so we traded two bicycles for him. So he was kind of expensive," says Arline Smitherman, 63.

She picks up a large, blond baby doll. "This is his baby. He loves little girls and dolls," she adds.

"Talk to the baby," she urges Tuffy.

Tuffy gives a whistle. "They don't talk as clear as myna birds but you sure can understand them," Arline says. "He says pretty baby."

"Oh, he has a time when we get some little girls in here," agrees Carl, 71.

The Smithermans are longtime county residents. They lived in Clute 10 years before moving to their Angleton farm in 1952. Carl worked 33 years for Dow Chemical Co. before retiring.

They have three children, nine grandchildren, three great-grandchildren, two dogs, 12 cows, about a dozen chickens, two parrots and, at last count, 169 cockatiels.

After Tuffy, the next pair of birds was acquired for Carl's birthday and were named Adam and Eve. Soon afterward, the Smithermans found a woman in Clute selling birds and the venture took off.

"We just started buying them and selling them, building houses," Arline says.

The biggest attraction for them, Arline says, was that the birds are so personable. For example, Tuffy likes to munch on Frosted Flakes, Fritos and Cheetos "but we don't give him many of those," Arline says.

And Tuffy is an avid television watcher. "He sits there at night watching TV with me. I watch a lot of those animal shows and if a cat comes on the screen, he'll cry and scream," Carl says, chuckling.

"He comes over and pulls on my eyebrows. If I have a day-old whisker, he'll find it and pull on it," Carl says.

Says Arline, "And once they start talking, they're like little kids — they'll say anything that you say."

It's better to have only one bird as a house pet, the Smithermans say.

"You don't want more than one in the house. They think they're people when they're in the house alone. You get two of them and they think they're birds," Arline says.

The Smithermans raise four types of cockatiels — the normals, which are mostly gray with yellow and white accents; the pieds, which have blotches of gray, yellow and white coloring; the pearlies, which have speckles of yellow, white and gray; and the whites, which are all-white.

Prices range for $25 for normals to $50 for whites. All the birds are kept in four houses in their back yard.

At birth, all the birds look alike — they're almost completely hairless, with closed eyes and pale yellow down. Arline marks them with food coloring so she can tell their ages. As they mature, it's often difficult to tell the younger cockatiels from their mothers since they all have gray heads until they reach maturity.

"The males have yellow heads and the females have gray heads. They look just like the babies. That's why you can't tell one from the other," Arline says.

When the birds are six weeks old, they're brought from their nests into a different cage to be sold. Since she feeds all the birds and visits with them constantly, the birds accept Arline's presence in the houses as natural.

"She spee birds and that's besides cleaning and feeding them and all," Carl says. "She talks to them, too."

Arline comes out of one house holding a baby bird born only a few days ago.

"They're ugly when they're like this," she says, gently holding the baby bird in her cupped palm.

Arline says the mothers don't mind her handling their young. "If you went in there or even if he did," she says, motioning to Carl, "you might get pecked. But I'm in there every day they don't mind me at all."

Most of their customers come on the weekends, the Smithermans say.

Duck Inn celebrating its 40th year serving catfish

By JULIE JEROME
and DAVID MONEY
Denton Record-Chronicle

LAKE DALLAS, Texas (AP) — In 1945 Aubry Howard quit his job as a sheet metal mechanic in Conway, Ark. But during World War II, if you quit a government job without the government's permission, you were guaranteed another job wouldn't come along.

So Howard returned to his wife, Nellie, in Lake Dallas, and they began serving dinner out of their home to approximately eight guests. Howard had built the house on land that formerly housed a bait and tackle shop called Duck Inn.

The name stuck.

"Mother and Daddy started serving anything they could find, and catfish was one of the items on the menu," said Steve Howard, the only son of Aubry and Nellie.

Steve and his wife, Inez, own and operate The Duck Inn, and recently handed over most of the business to their two sons and daughter — Steve Jr., David and Susan.

The Duck Inn, well-known for its all-you-can-eat catfish, recently celebrated 40 years of business in this lakeside community some 20 miles north of Dallas.

In the restaurant's 40 years, Howard has been the only name on the owner's books, and 503 Main has been the only address. The restaurant has undergone four major renovations and now serves up to 250 people.

Howard said he was in the Navy when his parents opened The Duck Inn, and he started working for the restaurant in 1951. Howard's father died in 1955, and he assisted his mother with the business until her death in 1980.

"It was the best thing we could do earning money," Howard said about the restaurant business. "We always worry about business. But we combat that with staying on the corner and doing what we've been doing as well as we can."

Some customers who have been eating catfish at Duck Inn for 35 years continue to patronize the restaurant, he said. One of The Duck Inn's waitresses has worked there 32 years, and the cashier has been employed there for 24 years.

Before Interstate 35 was built, the road in front of The Duck Inn, old Highway 24, was the only one to McKinney, Howard said. At that time the Duck Inn was situated on a major thoroughfare and its location was one of its features.

But Interstate 35 was completed, and The Duck Inn changed to a "destination" restaurant, where customers use it as their destination, rather than stopping by on their way somewhere else.

"There are new restaurants because there is a demand for them," Mrs. said. "The people will take care of it. And people are eating out more."

Howard said his business has not taken a downturn because of the new restaurants.

"We eat out a lot," Mrs. Howard said. "We like to eat, and we like to compare."

But she says The Duck Inn is still her favorite. "If we didn't own this restaurant, it would still be my favorite place. I love catfish."

"We happened to grow into this and with it," Howard said. "If you put us in a straight restaurant we may not know what we were doing."

Why DO they call it The Duck Inn?

"I was afraid you were going to ask that. I really wish I had a better story to tell you," Howard says. He says the name that originated with the old bait and tackle shop makes a play on words that was popular years ago.

"To duck in and get some bait," was the idea, Howard said.

The doors to the restaurant are high enough that regular folk don't have to duck to get in, but Dallas Cowboy Ed "Too Tall" Jones did have to duck to get into one of the dining rooms, Howard said.

He said the restaurant gets a lot of the Dallas Cowboys football team members coming in to eat all-you-can catfish.

One year Howard went out on a limb and told some of the players that if they went to the Super Bowl, he would feed the entire team. Luckily for Howard, it was not the Cowboys' year.

"I still think he knew something," Mrs. Howard jokes.

Pro football players aren't the only celebrities that dine at the inn. From the wrestling world there is Lake Dallas' own Von Erich family. Lillian Carter once ate there. Actors and professional golfers have broken bread there with the regular customers, who in the Howards' book are the real celebrities.

And they know what they like.

When the Howards attempt to change items on the menu or methods of cooking, customers identify the changes immediately and usually want it the old way, Howard said.

Mandatory Austin water rationing ordered

AUSTIN (AP) — Mandatory water conservation controls for Austin will begin Wednesday because of high water use accompanied by high temperatures the past week.

City Manager Jorge Carrasco ordered the mandatory controls Sunday on all outdoor use of water.

"The voluntary program that we have been involved in since May 1 will now be required," Carrasco said. "The major effect is that citizens will be asked to water once every five days."

Violators will be ticketed by the police for a misdemeanor and fined up to $200.

A city ordinance calls for the city manager to decide if controls are needed if treatment plants pump more than 150 million gallons of water a day for three consecutive days. The 150 million mark was exceeded Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

Residences may water every fifth day according to a prearranged schedule.

Psychology of a strike

BOSTON (AP) — No box scores with the morning coffee? No arguments about the pennant race at lunch? No baseball games to watch on television after a rough day at the office?

With the deadline for a walkout by major league baseball players just a week away, how will fans ever cope with the dawn-to-dusk deprivation that a strike would bring?

"We're all aware that children need to have routines and need to know what to expect," said Kathleen White, an associate professor of psychology at Boston University. "We sometimes forget that adults need that, too. Life's more comfortable when you know what to expect."

Stress brought on by a change in routine can lead to headaches, stomach aches and colds, she said.

"In stressful situations, some people turn to alcohol," she added.

Spouses no longer able to get rid of their inner rage by yelling at a game being shown on television might turn that anger toward family members, White said.

Jack Levin, a sociology professor at Northeastern University, said baseball's reach extends far beyond the foul lines.

"It's a daily event that people prepare for," he said. "It gives life a feeling of security. ...It's not just a game. It's not just kids collecting cards. Losing baseball is like losing good friends."

Harvard psychologist Paul Andreassen, an assistant professor specializing in group behavior, said he doesn't expect people to jump off buildings if wealthy players and wealthy owners can't figure out how to keep the game of baseball going.

"It's entertainment for people and, certainly, they care if teams win or lose," Andreassen said. "But I'm sure they can substitute another form of entertainment for it. I wouldn't wait around for the murder rate to go up."

Harold VanderZwaag, a member of the sports studies department at the University of Massachusetts, also downplays the impact of a strike.

"The person who really follows baseball probably would be very disappointed. I don't know if we'd ever want to use the word depressed. I think they'd have to be rather psychologically unsound to be depressed."

The key to coping with a strike is to find something to fill the gap, VanderZwaag said, suggesting that the start of the National Football League season could satisfy sports addicts.

But in early August, as teams are getting ready for the stretch run and Pete Rose mounts his final assault on Ty Cobb's all-time hit record, mornings without box scores could knock fans a bit off balance, Andreassen said.

Stephen Jay Gould, a Harvard anthropologist and an avid baseball fan, called the sport "a regular part of one's life."

"All things have a season, as they say in Ecclesiastes, and this is the baseball season."

Dorsett meets with IRS

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Dallas Cowboys defensive tackle Randy White says Tony Dorsett isn't the only National Football League player who has had bad experience with agents.

"There are a lot of players who have been the victims of bad agents," White said. "Some of 'em just take the money and run.

"They are not concerned about players after they get the signing bonus. You hate to see a guy like Tony get ripped off," he said.

Dorsett was to meet with the Internal Revenue Service in Dallas on Monday to discuss his financial problems. Dorsett's new agent is Howard Slusher, who also represents White.

"Slusher is a good man," White said. "He'll help Tony. You have to feel bad for Tony. He's certainly had his share of adversity."

Dorsett was subject to $1,000-per-day fines while he missed training camp but Coach Tom Landry says he wants to talk to Dorsett before he makes any decision whether to fine him.

"I can't tell what I'm going to do until I talk to a player," said Landry. "I don't want to hear anything second hand. I need to know it from the horse's mouth."

"I've got to know the facts," said Landry. "I'll talk to Tony this week."

Dorsett called club President Tex Schramm Saturday night and said he wasn't reporting to training camp despite the possible fine.

Slusher convinced White to hold out all of training camp last year.

"Tony's situation is different from mine and I really don't have any insight into what he will do," White said. "I just did what I felt like I had to do under the circumstances to get a fair settlement."

Dorsett would like to renegotiate his seven-year contract that brings him some $400,000 per year. He is in the fourth year of the pact. At one time, he had a 15-year deferred contract at $100,000 per year, but decided he wanted the money up front.

Dorsett was hit in Dallas with a $400,000 back tax notice by the IRS. The agency, which seized two of his houses in north Dallas, also has attached his paychecks since last October.

Oilers' Bingham requests trade

SAN ANGELO, Texas (AP) — Gregg Bingham, a cornerstone in three consecutive Houston Oilers playoff teams, won't get his day in the Astrodome as he had planned for the final game of his pro career.

"I always envisioned going to the stadium for that last game," Bingham said Monday after asking the Oilers to trade him. "I won't get that day in the Astrodome and it puts excess pressure on my wife and family.

"It's sort of an unhappy ending to a happy playing relationship."

Bingham, an alternate last season for the Pro Bowl, cited "irreconcilable differences" with Head Coach Hugh Campbell.

"Saturday, just before practice, Hugh Campbell asked me to request a trade," Bingham said. "The reasons are personal. Let's put it this way, there were irreconcilable difference between him and me that had been brewing for a long time."

Campbell said the Oilers, in the midst of a youth movement, had decided to go with younger, quicker Avon Riley at Bingham's inside linebacker position.

"I told him (Bingham) that he was one of the most intense players I'd ever coached and I admired his ability to play hard on every play but that I was going to make a change at the inside linebacker position," Campbell said.

Campbell said he knew nothing about "irreconcilable differences" with Bingham.

"He loves the football part so much now that I think it's easier for him to blame something other than physical," Campbell said.

Oilers owner Bud Adams offered Bingham an administrative post with the team if he decides to retire.

Bingham and 11-year veteran linebacker Robert Brazile were key players on the 1978-80 playoff teams and Brazile gave Bingham a vote of confidence.

"The only thing Greg has lost is his hair which it was his option to cut it," Brazile said, referring to Bingham's burr haircut.

"This is a guy that when I stepped in I had to play with. We played the right side and I would say we could write the book on the right side."

Bingham started training camp last week on the second team for the first time in his pro career, playing behind Riley, who was moved from an outside linebacking position.

Bingham started 173 games for the Oilers, including 134 straight, missing only two games in the 1982 season with a fractured hip.

"I'm I surprised?" Bingham asked. "I sort of had an inkling when I went from one vote in the Pro Bowl in December to second string without even putting on a jersey."

Bingham admitted to being outspoken and suggested his vocal nature might have stepped on some toes.

"I know what it takes to win in this league," Bingham said. "I know that formula. If somebody from the outside who's never been in the league before might be going around with what in my opinion might be the wrong formula, he might feel that I might be telling the wrong things."

Campbell said Bingham's departure was based solely on his on-the-field performance but offensive tackle Bruce Matthews feels Bingham still has the ability to play.

"He was almost in the Pro Bowl last year," Matthews said. "I don't understand the reasons. At this time, he was our best inside linebacker although we have guys with potential to be better."

Oiler defensive coordinator Jerry Glanville said Bingham likely could catch on with another National Football League team.

"I think it's best for him if he goes off somewhere and I think it's best for this team and organization," Glanville said. "Time catches up with a'l of us and if you look in the rear view mirror, sometimes you see ole Father Time passing you in a hurry."

Sizzling Dodgers rout Padres

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Inasmuch as Mariano Duncan, the rookie shortstop of the Los Angeles Dodgers, is hitting nearly 100 points higher batting right-handed, it has been suggested he might be better off abandoning his switch-hitting experiment.

But Duncan is working tediously with batting coach and fellow countryman Manny Mota.

"Every day I work at it," said a smiling Duncan, a native of the Dominican Republic. "Manny pitches — and he's got a good breaking pitch — and I hit, and hit and hit."

And his work is paying off.

Take Monday night, for instance. Batting right-handed against San Francisco starter Vida Blue, Duncan knocked in the tying run with a double in the fifth inning. Then, with the bases loaded in the sixth and facing ace reliever Scott Garrelts, he tripled batting from the left as the Dodgers erupted for seven runs for a 10-5 victory over the Giants.

It was Duncan's first triple in the major leagues.

The New York Mets edged the Montreal Expos 3-2 in the only other National League game Monday night.

The Dodgers pounded out 15 hits, including four by right fielder Mike Marshall and three by veteran catcher Steve Yeager.

The Dodgers have now won six of seven and 15 of 19 games to lead the San Diego Padres by five games in the National League West.

The Dodgers trailed 3-1 after Jeff Leonard's two-run homer in the sixth inning. But Los Angeles paraded 10 batters to the plate in the bottom of the sixth in their biggest inning in two years.

Blue, 5-4, took the loss, but Garrelts bore the brunt of the attack.

Garrelts took a 0.99 earned-run average into the game, the best ERA in the majors. But he was shocked for four runs in only two-thirds of an inning — three came home on Duncan's triple. A wild pitch allowed Duncan to score.

Bob Welch, 6-1, recorded his fifth straight win. Mets 3, Expos 2

New York rookie Rick Aguilera wanted to give away half of his victory because he showed up at Shea Stadium with a "50-50 chance" of pitching.

Tim Wallach's ninth homer, a two-run shot off Orosco, accounted for Montreal's runs in the ninth.

Aguilera walked two and struck out four.

Martin taken to Arlington hospital

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — New York Yankees Manager Billy Martin remained in good condition today at a hospital where he was sidelined by a partially collapsed lung.

Martin's condition was "not deteriorating," said a night supervisor at Arlington Memorial Hospital who declined to be identified.

Martin was required by doctors to stay in the hospital for several days with a cloud over his immediate future while his team flew on to Cleveland to start a five-game series with the Indians.

"He will be treated and have two to three days' bedrest," said Joe Safety, the Yankees' media director, in a statement issued in New York. "He is in good spirits, and at the end of the rest, his situation will be evaluated."

A hospital spokesman said Martin might not be released until Friday because of a puncture wound.

Martin was examined Monday morning by a respiratory specialist, who said the Yankee manager had suffered a "25 per cent collapsed lung" as the result of an injection for back spasms by a doctor Sunday that punctured one of his lungs, said Safety.

Martin had left Sunday's game against the Texas Rangers in the second inning complaining of back spasms, and was taken to the Arlington Stadium first aid station and given an injection by Dr. B.J. Mycoskie, the Rangers' team doctor.

Martin had more problems a short time later.

"Martin experienced problems with breathing, and he complained of shortness of breath," said Safety. "He was given injections at the park, and when the injections were administered, the problem of a possible lung puncture arose and at this point he was taken for X-rays."

The back spasms affected Martin's right side just below the shoulder, said Mycoskie. Shortly after the injections were given, Martin complained of chest pains and Mycoskie ordered Martin taken to Arlington Memorial Hospital for X-rays.

The doctors said X-rays showed a small perforation in the lung.

COOPERSTOWN, N.Y. (AP) — Successive home runs by Phil Garner and Harry Spilman in the 10th inning lifted the Houston Astros to a 5-3 exhibition baseball victory over the Boston Red Sox in the annual Hall of Fame game Monday.

Garner drove Tom McCarthy's first pitch of the inning into the right field stands and Spilman homered on McCarthy's next toss.

Houston had trailed 3-1 going into the ninth inning, but tied the game on RBI singles by Kevin Bass and German Rivera.

Tim Tillman singled to start of the inning and moved to second as Glenn Davis drew a walk.

Festival enters second week

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — The action took to the water in earnest as the National Sports Festival headed into its second week with many of the nation's best amateur athletes making golden splashes.

Led by Jeff Olsen, an 18-year-old high school student from Austin, Texas who won his fourth title here, 18 of 26 gold medals awarded on Monday, were in water events — one in yachting 80 miles south in New Orleans, eight in rowing at False River 20 miles north, and nine in swimming at Louisiana State University's new pool. Two were were given out for speed skating on frozen water.

Six more, two in table tennis and four in taekwondo, were earned on dry land.

Today, the top young swimming prospects go for gold in the final eight events of their three-day tournament. All together, nine events wind up competition today: archery, equestrian sports, speed skating, swimming, table tennis, taekwondo, team handball and tennis.

Andre duPlessis of New Orleans, 16, has won three silver medals in swimming at this festival and is considered to have a good shot at winning the men's 1,500-meter event today.

Jennifer Linder of Des Moines, Iowa, and Molly Magill of Largo, Fla., were expected to duel today in the women's 400-meter freestyle. Magill, 14, won the 1,500-meter women's freestyle by 40 meters on Monday, adding that gold to her victory in the 800 free on Saturday. Linder, 16, of Papillion, Neb., was second to Magill in the 1,500 free.

Jeff Olsen, an 18-year-old high school student from Austin, Texas, took the gold in the men's 400 freestyle on Monday, his fourth championship of the NSF. He won the 800 freestyle and 200 butterfly on Sunday and the 200 free on Saturday.

DuPlessis finished second, four-tenths of a second behind Olsen's 4:01.19 clocking in the 400 freestyle on Monday.

In other swimming events decided on Monday, gold medals went to Jim Askervold, 17, of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., in they; Mike Dobbs, 17, of Howard Beach, N.YON Burson," 17, of Garland, Texas, in the 200-meter individual medley; Karen McClure, 15, of St. Louis in the 200-meter breaststroke, and Jeanne Gibbons, 13, in the 100-meter free with a 58.11.

Bonnie Blair of Champaign, Ill., the reigning American champion, won both the 1,500-meter and 500-meter women's speed skating events, breaking her own festival record in the 500 with a clocking of 50.72.

Andy Gabel of Northbrook, Ill., won the men's 1,500-meter race and Dave Pavlacic of Florissant, Mo., won the men's 500.

Finals are scheduled tonight in both men's and women's 1,000-meter races, the women's 3,00-meter relay and the men's 5,000-meter relay.

Longview man lives and breathes dirt bike racing

LONGVIEW, Texas (AP) — All the trappings of a passion are clearly visible.

Walk into Doug Ingall's home on the outskirts of Longview and the recent fond memories of his life are clearly visible — Kodacolors framed and hung and covering an entire wall of his living room. Although differing in size, all of the photos have a similar theme: race-car driving.

Ingalls loves it.

He also excels at it. As evidence, numerous trophies — one seemingly tall enough to cover Ralph Sampson one-on-one — rise from his living room floor like the skyline of Manhattan.

For almost 20 years, Ingalls, a 33-year-old Longview native, has been doing left turns on quarter-mile dirt tracks from Dallas to Daytona Beach, Fla.

He straps himself into a cockpit — the size of which makes a Mercury space capsule seem roomy — puts the pedal to the metal, and, in most instances, beats the competition to the flag, winner's circle and most desirable paycheck.

The machines Ingalls controls are in the Modified and Late-Model racing classes. They are powered by 389 cubic-inch, small-block Chevy engines. They are capable of catapulting him down straightaways at over 100 mph.

It started as a hobby when he was 14.

"My father raced cars ... still does," Ingalls said. He hung around the track with his father (as his own three sons do with him today) until he finally got his much-desired chance behind the wheel.

"My dad had an extra car at a race and my grandfather said to him, 'Why don't you let Dougie drive in it and try to pick up some gas money?' My father didn't think I could do it," Ingalls recalled.

His father finally relented and gave him advice to keep from getting wiped off the track by other drivers, most of them men at least twice his age.

"Dad said to stay on the inside of the track, slow down enough to keep from spinning out on the turns, gas it down the straightaway and let off early enough to make the corners."

Ingalls, at 14, two years shy of a driver's license and drive-in movies, went out and won his first-ever feature race. His doubting dad, though, didn't stand and cheer from the grandstands — he finished back in the pack in the same race.

"My father wanted (the car) back," Ingalls said, "but my grandfather wouldn't let him have it."

What started as an adolescent hobby, however, has since matured into an adult profession.

"In all the years I've been racing, I'd been trying to work into making a living out of it," Ingalls said.

It's tough, though, breaking into black ink — much less putting Corn Flakes on the table — when a car goes for $25,000, an engine costs roughly $18,000, spare parts run around $25,000 a year and a trailer empties $10,000 from the pockets.

"When I started it seemed like a good way to make a lot of money," Ingalls said, "but I spent just as much keeping everything up."

What he needed was a free ride, a racing Sugar Daddy — a sponsor.

Four years ago, Tyler's Bill Day, owner of Bill Day Tire Stores, became Ingall's financier.

Ingalls explained the complexities involved in the formation of the partnership this way: "I liked to run, he had good equipment."

Simple, but it has been successful.

"It has worked well ever since," Ingalls said. "I feel fortunate to have hooked up with somebody that likes to go at it in a big way."

Pampa eliminated

Pampa's Babe Ruth League all-stars were eliminated by Belem, New Mexico, 5-3, Monday in the Southwest ...gional Tournament in Dumas.

Although the game was close, Belem was in front of Pampa all the way in the 13-year-old game.

"We went a lot further than a lot of people thought we would," said Pampa Coach Dannie Cagle. "We won the state tournament and advanced to regionals. No other Pampa 13-year-old team has ever done that."

James Bybee pitched for Pampa.

Stabler settles suit

HOUSTON (AP) — Former Houston Oilers quarterback Ken Stabler agreed to settle his $20 milion libel lawsuit against the New York Times and the National Broadcasting Co. and the network's parent company, RCA Corp., for an undisclosed amount, his lawyer says.

Stabler filed the lawsuit in 1982, citing reports that alleged he had ties to organized gambling and had thrown games or shaved points when he was quarterback for the Oakland Raiders.

Stabler's attorney, Craig Ball, refused to say who will pay the settlement.

Conditions that affect your work or career look promising for you in the year ahead. Build upon what you have already established, instead of looking for new fields to conquer.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) In matters that affect you singularly, your thinking will be on target today. When you try to make judgments for others, however, you may be way off base. Know where to look for romance and you'll find it. The Astro-Graph Matchmaker set instantly reveals which signs are romantically perfect for you. Mail $2 to Astro-Graph, Box 489, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You're going to be disappointed when you don't get all you hoped for, especially if you expect more than what is entitled to you.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) If you're invited to a social happening today don't overstay your welcome. If you are one of the early arrivals, try to be among the first to leave.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov.22) Disagreements within your family should be settled privately today. If relatives or outsiders get into the act, problems will worsen.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) You may enter into a discussion today with someone who feels as strongly about a subject as you do. Unfortunately, you might be on opposite sides of the fence.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You won't be suited for the roles of borrower or lender today. Being in either position could put you behind the eight ball.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Even though you may solicit advice from others today, there's a chance you'll ignore their suggestions and wrongly go about doing things as you first intended.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 19) Be sensible regarding your physical limitations today. Don't overexert yourself or lift things that are too heavy for you to carry.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Be extremely careful how you conduct yourself at social gatherings today. If a mishap occurs, there's a chance it could be completely blown out of proportion.

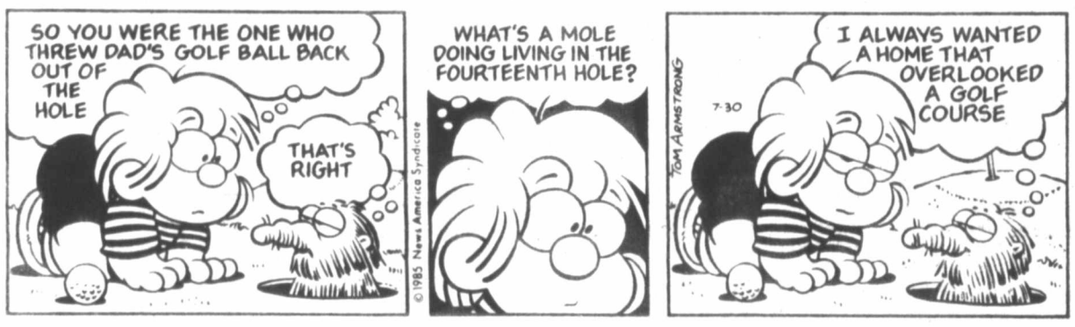

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Do not take your luck for granted today when you have a lot at stake. If you miscalculate, others may suffer as well as yourself.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Subdue temptations to boast about your accomplishments today, even if you do something impressive. It'll sound better coming from others.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Be more watchful than usual of your possessions today, especially those you keep in your car. Don't walk off and leave your auto unlocked.

'Man who got Lucas' lost job, but he has no regrets

FORESTBURG, Texas (AP) — The former sheriff who chased and eventually caught Henry Lee Lucas just like an "old bloodhound" says he is no longer bitter about losing his job.

Former Montague County Sheriff W.F. Conway says he is just proud of the fact that his persistence took Lucas off the street.

Montague, named Texas Lawmen of the Year in 1984, told the Houston Chronicle in a story published Monday that he lost his sheriff's post because some voters blamed his pursuit of Lucas for a tax increase.

"It hurts, but I'm not sorry about what I did," said Conway, a lawman for 27 years.

"I miss law work, and I guess I was bitter for a while, but I don't think I am anymore," he said. "I'm just proud he's off the street."

He said he spent nine months bird-dogging Lucas.

Conway says he became suspicious of Lucas after 80-year-old Kate Rich disappeared in September 1982. Lucas and his 15-year-old girlfriend, Becky Powell, had lived with Mrs. Rich.

"Mrs. Rich's daughters had thrown him out, and I just figured there might be some bad blood over it," he says.

After learning that Lucas had been convicted and later paroled for killing his mother, Conway picked up the trail.

"He was playing games with me, and that's exactly what I wanted him to do. I figured if we kept playing long enough, I'd win," Conway says.

When Lucas was traced to California, Conway went to California. When Lucas went to Oklahoma, Conway followed.

"He was just like a damned old bloodhound. I'll bet he didn't sleep four hours a night. He was either on the phone or in his car," said Bob Finoglio, former justice of peace.

Between September 1982 and May 1983, Conway was twice hospitalized for exhaustion. He admits he was starting to wonder if he would ever find the evidence.

Within days Lucas purchased a pistol, a crime for a felon. Conway arrested Lucas and Lucas eventually confessed to killing Mrs. Rich and Ms. Powell.

Lucas later confessed to hundreds of slayings nationwide and rapidly became known as one of the country's most notorious serial killers.

But in May 1984, Conway lost the Democratic primary to former Deputy Harry Walker. Three months after his defeat, Conway was named the 1984 Texas Lawman of the Year.

Lucas, sentenced to death for the 1979 slaying of an unidentified female hitchhiker near Georgetown, recanted his confessions.

Historic trade agreements signed by Texas, Mexico

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Agriculture officials from Mexico and Texas signed a unique agreement Monday to aid beleaguered farmers on both sides of the border by promoting trade and sharing research to solve farm-related problems.

The accord calls for a 38-member bilateral commission that will help match growers with markets, reduce trade barriers and speed up research on such matters as water management and conservation.

Texas Agriculture Commissioner James Hightower, at a news conference before signing the agreement with Mexican officials, said it represented the culmination of two years' efforts to promote trade across the Rio Grande.

"What we seek with Mexico is not a couple of down-and-dirty deals and then flee back across the border," Hightower said. "What we seek is a long-term, mutually helpful relationship" with Mexico, which he called the "salvation of Texas farmers."

No other state has signed such a bilaterial trade accord with Mexico, Hightower said.

Traditionally, exports of Texas goods have been hampered because the Mexican government buys in larger quantities than individual foreign farmers can supply, then sells the products to buyers here, Hightower said.

The agreement will allow buyers and producers to bypass that process by dealing directly with each other, Hightower said.

Currently, Mexican officials are interested in letting their feed lots, dairies and flour mills buy directly from the United States, and the accord will ease such transactions, he said.

Texan officials said they envisioned exports chiefly of breeding and feeder cattle, grain, sheep and goats. In turn, the state this year needs Mexican vegetables and citrus fruits, to make up the losses from a hard freeze in the Rio Grande valley, Hightower said.

The commission, which now awaits the appointment of its 19 Mexican members, will begin its work by taking up "a series of small projects and seeing what develops," Hightower said.

"If it works, we'll expand it. If the commission is beneficial, it will continue. If it's not beneficial, we'll fold," he added.

Possible projects include the cooperative development of the Mexican and Texan wine industries, or resolution of the problems of Mexican farmers who use pesticides banned in the United States, Hightower said.

While not technically empowered to change regulations on such federal issues as migrant labor and cross-border trucking, the commission might choose to lobby Washington in the interests of both U.S. and Mexican farmers, according to Hightower.

Hightower said he hoped to see an education exchange program in which, for example, a Mexican pork farmer and his children might spend several weeks or months studying the operations of a Texan counterpart, who would then return to Mexico for similar study.

The officials noted that Mexico has taken steps recently to ease trade, including the adoption of tariffs in place of import licenses for about 60 percent of incoming products.

Although the tariffs will rise to 50 percent from the current 10 percent, they will likely cut total costs by eliminating the possibility for corruption sometimes reported in the licensing process, said Bob Krueger, former U.S. ambassador-at-large to Mexico and a deputy chairman of the new commission.

Hightower said the continuing devaluation of the Mexican peso would also ease trade. But he said the U.S. officials had not set happen to the Texan agricultural economy."

The Texan officials could not provide a total current value of trade with Mexico, but noted that the state is currently exporting sheep and goats to Mexico for slaughter at a record rate of 20,000 head a month. Since 1981 the value of livestock shipments to Mexico has increased from $26.2 million a year to more than $55 million in the past 10 months alone.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Satman Crothers will undergo four to six weeks of outpatient radiation therapy near his Van Nuys home to treat an inoperable tumor doctors found behind his left lung, his publicist says.

Crothers, 75, was scheduled to leave Beverly Hills Medical Center today, said publicist Jerry Zelenka. Doctors found the tumor July 22 during surgery. "He's feeling fine and his spirit's great," Zelenka said. "He's looking forward after treatments to playing golf."

Crothers, whose real first name is Sherman, began his 60-year show business career as a musician and is best known as Louis the garbageman in the old TV series "Chico and the Man," and as a telepath in "The Shining."

NEW YORK (AP) — Cuban leader Fidel Castro is negotiating a book contract with Simon & Schuster, a company spokesman says.

The negotiations have been going on for a few months between Castro and Alice Mayhew, Simon & Schuster associate publisher and executive editor, Peter Minichiello, a vice president for corporate communications, said Monday.

MONTREAL (AP) — Actor Jean-Paul Belmondo, famed for his tough-guy film roles, shrugged off a weekend movie stunt accident that left him with a 3-inch gash across his forehead.

"I'm fine," the actor said Sunday after resting up from the accident. "And my knock on the head is finished, finished, finished."

Belmondo received 12 stitches to close the wound Saturday after he lost his balance on the back of a tow truck while filming the final sequences of the movie "Hold Up."

"We were really frightened when the accident happened," said Denis Heroux, Belmondo's co-producer on the $8-million film.

Conditions that affect your work or career look promising for you in the year ahead. Build upon what you have already established, instead of looking for new fields to conquer.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You're going to be disappointed when you don't get all you hoped for, especially if you expect more than what is entitled to you.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) If you're invited to a social happening today don't overstay your welcome. If you are one of the early arrivals, try to be among the first to leave.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov.22) Disagreements within your family should be settled privately today. If relatives or outsiders get into the act, problems will worsen.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) You may enter into a discussion today with someone who feels as strongly about a subject as you do. Unfortunately, you might be on opposite sides of the fence.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You won't be suited for the roles of borrower or lender today. Being in either position could put you behind the eight ball.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Even though you may solicit advice from others today, there's a chance you'll ignore their suggestions and wrongly go about doing things as you first intended.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Be extremely careful how you conduct yourself at social gatherings today. If a mishap occurs, there's a chance it could be completely blown out of proportion.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Do not take your luck for granted today when you have a lot at stake. If you miscalculate, others may suffer as well as yourself.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Subdue temptations to boast about your accomplishments today, even if you do something impressive. It'll sound better coming from others.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Be more watchful than usual of your possessions today, especially those you keep in your car. Don't walk off and leave your auto unlocked.

'Man who got Lucas' lost job, but he has no regrets

FORESTBURG, Texas (AP) — The former sheriff who chased and eventually caught Henry Lee Lucas just like an "old bloodhound" says he is no longer bitter about losing his job.

Former Montague County Sheriff W.F. Conway says he is just proud of the fact that his persistence took Lucas off the street.

Montague, named Texas Lawmen of the Year in 1984, told the Houston Chronicle in a story published Monday that he lost his sheriff's post because some voters blamed his pursuit of Lucas for a tax increase.

"It hurts, but I'm not sorry about what I did," said Conway, a lawman for 27 years.

"I miss law work, and I guess I was bitter for a while, but I don't think I am anymore," he said. "I'm just proud he's off the street."

He said he spent nine months bird-dogging Lucas.

Conway says he became suspicious of Lucas after 80-year-old Kate Rich disappeared in September 1982. Lucas and his 15-year-old girlfriend, Becky Powell, had lived with Mrs. Rich.

"Mrs. Rich's daughters had thrown him out, and I just figured there might be some bad blood over it," he says.

After learning that Lucas had been convicted and later paroled for killing his mother, Conway picked up the trail.

"He was playing games with me, and that's exactly what I wanted him to do. I figured if we kept playing long enough, I'd win," Conway says.

When Lucas was traced to California, Conway went to California. When Lucas went to Oklahoma, Conway followed.

"He was just like a damned old bloodhound. I'll bet he didn't sleep four hours a night. He was either on the phone or in his car," said Bob Finoglio, former justice of peace.

Between September 1982 and May 1983, Conway was twice hospitalized for exhaustion. He admits he was starting to wonder if he would ever find the evidence.

Within days Lucas purchased a pistol, a crime for a felon. Conway arrested Lucas and Lucas eventually confessed to killing Mrs. Rich and Ms. Powell.

Lucas later confessed to hundreds of slayings nationwide and rapidly became known as one of the country's most notorious serial killers.

But in May 1984, Conway lost the Democratic primary to former Deputy Harry Walker. Three months after his defeat, Conway was named the 1984 Texas Lawman of the Year.

Lucas, sentenced to death for the 1979 slaying of an unidentified female hitchhiker near Georgetown, recanted his confessions.

Historic trade agreements signed by Texas, Mexico

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Agriculture officials from Mexico and Texas signed a unique agreement Monday to aid beleaguered farmers on both sides of the border by promoting trade and sharing research to solve farm-related problems.

The accord calls for a 38-member bilateral commission that will help match growers with markets, reduce trade barriers and speed up research on such matters as water management and conservation.

Texas Agriculture Commissioner James Hightower, at a news conference before signing the agreement with Mexican officials, said it represented the culmination of two years' efforts to promote trade across the Rio Grande.

"What we seek with Mexico is not a couple of down-and-dirty deals and then flee back across the border," Hightower said. "What we seek is a long-term, mutually helpful relationship" with Mexico, which he called the "salvation of Texas farmers."

No other state has signed such a bilaterial trade accord with Mexico, Hightower said.

Traditionally, exports of Texas goods have been hampered because the Mexican government buys in larger quantities than individual foreign farmers can supply, then sells the products to buyers here, Hightower said.

The agreement will allow buyers and producers to bypass that process by dealing directly with each other, Hightower said.

Currently, Mexican officials are interested in letting their feed lots, dairies and flour mills buy directly from the United States, and the accord will ease such transactions, he said.

Texan officials said they envisioned exports chiefly of breeding and feeder cattle, grain, sheep and goats. In turn, the state this year needs Mexican vegetables and citrus fruits, to make up the losses from a hard freeze in the Rio Grande valley, Hightower said.

The commission, which now awaits the appointment of its 19 Mexican members, will begin its work by taking up "a series of small projects and seeing what develops," Hightower said.

"If it works, we'll expand it. If the commission is beneficial, it will continue. If it's not beneficial, we'll fold," he added.

Possible projects include the cooperative development of the Mexican and Texan wine industries, or resolution of the problems of Mexican farmers who use pesticides banned in the United States, Hightower said.

While not technically empowered to change regulations on such federal issues as migrant labor and cross-border trucking, the commission might choose to lobby Washington in the interests of both U.S. and Mexican farmers, according to Hightower.

Hightower said he hoped to see an education exchange program in which, for example, a Mexican pork farmer and his children might spend several weeks or months studying the operations of a Texan counterpart, who would then return to Mexico for similar study.

The officials noted that Mexico has taken steps recently to ease trade, including the adoption of tariffs in place of import licenses for about 60 percent of incoming products.

Although the tariffs will rise to 50 percent from the current 10 percent, they will likely cut total costs by eliminating the possibility for corruption sometimes reported in the licensing process, said Bob Krueger, former U.S. ambassador-at-large to Mexico and a deputy chairman of the new commission.

Hightower said the continuing devaluation of the Mexican peso would also ease trade. But he said the U.S. officials had not set happen to the Texan agricultural economy."

The Texan officials could not provide a total current value of trade with Mexico, but noted that the state is currently exporting sheep and goats to Mexico for slaughter at a record rate of 20,000 head a month. Since 1981 the value of livestock shipments to Mexico has increased from $26.2 million a year to more than $55 million in the past 10 months alone.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Satman Crothers will undergo four to six weeks of outpatient radiation therapy near his Van Nuys home to treat an inoperable tumor doctors found behind his left lung, his publicist says.

Crothers, 75, was scheduled to leave Beverly Hills Medical Center today, said publicist Jerry Zelenka. Doctors found the tumor July 22 during surgery. "He's feeling fine and his spirit's great," Zelenka said. "He's looking forward after treatments to playing golf."

Crothers, whose real first name is Sherman, began his 60-year show business career as a musician and is best known as Louis the garbageman in the old TV series "Chico and the Man," and as a telepath in "The Shining."

NEW YORK (AP) — Cuban leader Fidel Castro is negotiating a book contract with Simon & Schuster, a company spokesman says.

The negotiations have been going on for a few months between Castro and Alice Mayhew, Simon & Schuster associate publisher and executive editor, Peter Minichiello, a vice president for corporate communications, said Monday.

MONTREAL (AP) — Actor Jean-Paul Belmondo, famed for his tough-guy film roles, shrugged off a weekend movie stunt accident that left him with a 3-inch gash across his forehead.

"I'm fine," the actor said Sunday after resting up from the accident. "And my knock on the head is finished, finished, finished."

Belmondo received 12 stitches to close the wound Saturday after he lost his balance on the back of a tow truck while filming the final sequences of the movie "Hold Up."

"We were really frightened when the accident happened," said Denis Heroux, Belmondo's co-producer on the $8-million film.

Debate building over deported Salvadorans

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Every week about 100 Salvadorans get a one-way ticket back into the eye of the Central American storm.

Deported from the United States as unwanted illegal aliens, they stream in to San Salvador International Airport, returning to a land where 60,000 people have died in guerrilla war and political vendettas, where bombs rain down on embattled villages and where insurgents control a quarter of the countryside.

Times clearly are dangerous in El Salvador. But does that mean any Salvadoran who can make it across the Rio Grande should be sheltered in the United States?

The question, under debate since 1981, may be addressed in the U.S. Congress later this year.

Salvadorans, meanwhile, continue to filter into the United States by the thousands, joining perhaps a half-million of their countrymen already there illegally.

Most simply melt into the Hispanic community, some helped by the church-led "sanctuary movement" of Americans protecting Central American refugees. But others, after an arduous trip north through a Mexican underground railroad system, are caught and shipped right back aboard scheduled commercial flights to San Salvador.

The Reagan administration contends the Salvadoran migrants are driven north by economic motivation, like millions of people around the world who want to live in America. It says any Salvadoran genuinely threatened with political persecution can obtain U.S. asylum.

Pro-refugee activists, on the other hand, contend the war imperils all Salvadorans and that the United States bears some responsibility because it finances the government side in the conflict. Further, it says, the Reagan administration is discriminatory, since it grants some blanket exceptions for people fleeing leftist-governed countries.

"The United States should not be deporting people back here. It's a dangerous situation — human rights violations are severe. There's a great risk for these people," says Maria Julia Hernandez, who heads the Roman Catholic Church's human rights office in San Salvador.

But Laura Jordan Dietrich, a deputy assistant U.S. secretary of state for human rights, counters:

"We did a survey of 480 cases last year, and found one case of someone who was killed after being deported back to Salvador. Does that mean we should never deport a Salvadoran from the U.S.? The answer is 'No.'"

A key issue in the congressional debate is whether such surveys are meaningful.

Since December, in a new program, 2,528 U.S. deportees have been met at the airport here by officials of the Intergovernmental Committee on Migration (ICM), an international refugee relief agency.

The ICM workers offer assistance in resettling in El Salvador. Then, using mailed questionnaires, they try to monitor the Salvadorans' well-being for six months to determine whether they are being threatened by right-wing death squads or leftist guerrillas.

Of some 800 returnees checked earlier this year, only a dozen reported such problems after returning home, ICM official Marisa Loddo said. "And only three or four of those problems were possibly legitimate," she said.

But the ICM acknowledges that almost half the 800 could not be tracked down — in many cases, refugee advocates contend, because they were in war zones. The State Department survey cited by Dietrich also failed to trace about half the deportees.

In Washington, Congress is considering legislation that would declare a moratorium on deporting Salvadorans for about two years, until the U.S. General Accounting Office can study refugees' conditions in El Salvador.

The U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service says that last year 11,627 foreigners were granted U.S. asylum, including 7,442 Iranians.

GM Saturn plant to be in Tennessee

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Gov. Lamar Alexander knew the eight-month, 36-state scramble for industrial America's top prize — the General Motors Corp. Saturn car complex — was over when he got a call from GM Chairman Roger Smith.

Smith called the statehouse Monday and said, "Congratulations."

"The largest company in the world, after the biggest and most extensive search that anybody can remember, is putting in Tennessee the largest one-time investment in American history," a beaming Alexander told the press.

The official announcement, printed on General Motors stationery and given to reporters at a meeting room near the statehouse, was anticlimactic. The U.S. senators from Tennessee, both Democrats, announced last week that Spring Hill, 30 miles south of here, was the choice.

The jubilant Republican governor joined other state officials at a news conference, where they were photographed in front of a blue banner that read, "Tennesee Welcomes Saturn."

The show was Tennessee's alone. GM officials, who called the selection of Spring Hill tentative, didn't take part, saying they would meet with reporters here today.

Alexander said even he wasn't sure what drew to GM to Spring Hill, population 1,100, but said there was no doubt the state had landed the plant and that GM didn't call the decision final because no negotiations had been held with state, local and utility officials on a long list of items.

Saturn Corp. President William Hoglund, in a statement, identified those items as roads, sewers, education and training for employees, environmental matters and the cost of taxes, water, electricity and natural gas.

"They'll tell us their needs," Alexander said. "We'll try to meet them. We have no doubt that we can."

Talks with officials of Saturn Corp. begin on Wednesday, he said.

Alexander wasn't one of the two dozen governors who went to Detroit to make a pitch for the Saturn plant.

USDA finds 214,000 farmers deeply in debt

WASHINGTON (AP) — In its most comprehensive look yet at the financial pinch on American farmers, the Agriculture Department says 214,000 producers are so deeply in debt they can't make their payments.

Compiled as part of a detailed survey of farms this spring, the figure represents just over 12 percent of the 1.7 million farms covered by the study.

But even more telling is the news that the stress is greater among so-called commercial size farms, those selling at least $40,000 or more in farm products. These farms form the heart of the nation's food production system.

Among those farmers, one in three is suffering financial problems, either because of too heavy a debt load, inadequate cash flow, or both, the study said.

The findings were similar to those published in March, when the department issued its first assessment of farming's current financial problems. That paper was based on the ratio of a farmer's debts to his assets, with farms owing more than 40 percent of their worth deemed financially vulnerable.

The latest study adds cash-flow data to the mix to get a more complete picture of how well farmers can cope with debt. The new report includes, for example, off-farm income from a second job which many farmers use to make their loan payments.

Of the 214,000 farmers unable to make ends meet, more than half — 129,000 — were in the $40,000 and over sales class. Some 38,000, or 2 percent of the total, were technically insolvent, with debts greater than the value of their assets.

About 20 percent of farms in the $40,000-and-over class showed both high debt load and negative cash flow, while another 10 percent were considered potentially at risk because of high debt load, even though they broke even or better in 1984.

"This development is especially critical because commercial farms, although only 34 percent of all farms, account for 90 percent of all farm sales," the report stated.

Certain types of farms in certain regions were hardest hit, the report noted. Cash grain, general livestock and dairy farms accounted for more than three-fourths of the farms under stress.

Sixty percent of the financially ailing operations were in the Corn Belt, Lake States and Northern Plains, the study found. Those are the regions where drops in farmland values have been steepest, declining by up to 25 percent in 1984 alone while the national average was a 12 percent drop.

The flip side of the figures is that most farms remain financially sound. Four out of five farms had adequate debt-to-asset ratios and positive cash flow, the survey found, and two of every three in the crucial commercial-size category were faring relatively well.

But those farmers who are in trouble owe the bulk of the nation's $212 billion farm debt, a worrisome statistic for bankers and federal officials. As of Jan. 1, 29 percent of farm debt was owed by producers with debt-to-asset ratios greater than 70 percent.

Dissident appears in video

HAMBURG, West Germany (AP) — A newspaper says a new videotape indicates that Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov is in good health, but Sakharov's stepson, who viewed a tape obtained by ABC News, says he appears to be in "bad shape."

Bild newspaper said in today's editions that Sakharov, a Soviet nuclear weapons pioneer, left Gorky's Semashko Hospital on July 11, "obviously in good health," after spending about two months there. It said he was hospitalized after beginning a hunger strike.

Sakharov, the Nobel Prize-winning nuclear physicist, "spoke loudly and clearly, moved with confidence and appeared to be in full command of his mental and physical facilities," Bild said.

It said he had been reunited with his wife, Yelena Bonner, in the city of Gorky, where both are in internal exile.

The newspaper said its information was based on a 10-minute color videotape that was played for the newspaper by Moscow sources it did not identify. A West German television station also played parts of a tape late Monday that it said it received from Bild.

Sakharov's stepson, Alex Semyonov, 29, said in Newton, Mass., said he believed film footage of the Sakharovs shown on ABC News was shot with a secret camera. "It was obviously done without their knowledge," he said.

"As far as I can say of his physical condition, to me it looked like he was in bad shape, and she (Mrs. Bonner) was probably better than I expected," Semyonov said.

Sakharov was banished to Gorky in early 1980 for criticizing the Soviet Union's human rights record. Mrs. Bonner has been sentenced to five years of internal exile with him.

Both the ABC tape and the tape Bild said it viewed reportedly were made July 11.

MAKING A SMALL ROOM LOOK BIGGER
There are many ways that you can use the right furniture and the right decorating ideas to make any smaller room seem bigger.
We're going to list for you some of the ways of achieving it.
1. Use some more light colors. Light colors make a room look larger while many dark colors make it contract.
2. Use such things as two smaller pieces for one bigger one; for example, two smaller tables instead of one extra large one.
3. Use mirrors, mirrors give the illusion of adding space.
4. If you buy furniture or accessories with patterns, choose some smaller patterns.
5. Wall-to-wall carpet makes an area look bigger.
6. Try some pictures with deep perspectives; outdoor scenes, landscapes or seascapes that seem to show miles of space—add depth to a room.
7. Don't overcrowd a small room, create an impression of space.
8. Use some occasional chairs and some smaller-scaled furniture.
Those are just some of the ideas, and for the right selection of furniture for a small room—or any room—in your home, stop in. We're here to help you.
