Both GM, UAW see settlement as 'win'

By TIM BOVEE
AP Business Writer

DETROIT — General Motors Corp. and the United Auto Workers tentatively agreed on a new national contract today, with the union declaring that it had won its fight to protect members' jobs and the company calling it a "win-win" settlement.

Union leaders called for an immediate halt to strikes at 17 GM plants which had idled 111,000 of the company's 350,000 UAW workers nationwide and cost GM an estimated $30 million a day. But some local leaders said they would oppose going back to work because of disputes over local issues.

Hours after the agreement was announced, workers continued to walk picket lines at 15 of the 17 plants.

UAW President Owen Bieber and chief union bargainer Donald Ephlin issued a statement at 2:10 a.m. EDT announcing the agreement, but they refused to divulge details.

"It is an excellent settlement that makes more secure than ever in history the jobs of our UAW-GM members, while providing much deserved economic improvements immediately and in the years ahead," the union officials said.

GM Vice President Alfred Warren, speaking later at a news conference, said "there were two winners — the United Auto Workers and the General Motors Corporation. I have never seen a better win-win situation."

"Our customers will benefit from this agreement through increased competitiveness of the corporation, as will our shareholders, suppliers and the many communities in which GM has concentrations of facilities and employment," he said.

Warren said the company was "confident" that the agreement would be ratified quickly by the union's membership. Bieber said the 11-member national negotiating committee recommended ratification by a 10-1 vote.

The first step toward ratification takes place Wednesday in St. Louis when the UAW leadership unveils the specific terms to the union's General Motors Council, a 300-member advisory board of local union leaders. Ratification votes by GM workers would occur afterward and would take about a week.

Both Bieber and Warren refused to divulge details of the pact until it was presented to the council.

As to the 17 strikes, Bieber said, "We're going to be advising the local union leadership that we want them to return to work immediately."

Pickets were quickly withdrawn at the GM Technical Center in Warren, Mich., and the plant in Pontiac, Mich., where the two-seat Fiero sports car is assembled. Pickets were pulled away from the gates in Warren, a Detroit suburb, soon after the agreement was reached, and negotiators in Pontiac reached an agreement on local issues early today, union and company officials said.

"I'm just going to let out a holler," said Harold Cox, vice president of UAW Local 653 in Pontiac. "We're kind of proud of how it turned out."

Officers of some locals whose picket lines remained in place held out the hope for an early end to their strikes.

"The international (union) is calling the shots," said Don Cooper, vice president of Local 652 at a struck Oldsmobile assembly plant in Lansing, Mich. "If they say go back to work, that's what we're going to do."

But a union official in Linden, N.J., said he hoped his members would be allowed to continue their walkout until all local issues are settled.

"We've made it clear what our decision was — we would like to stay out," said Michael Coughlin, administrative assistant of Local 595.

State officials to tour rain-soaked South Texas

By SYDNEY RUBIN
Associated Press Writer

BROWNSVILLE — Local officials say they will show representatives from the governor's office damage across far South Texas resulting from four days of unrelenting downpour that left an estimated 75 percent of the region under water.

Representatives from the governor's emergency management division were expected to tour eastern Cameron and Willacy counties today, officials said.

Information gathered by the state team will be submitted to Gov. Mark White, who may then declare the inundated counties a state disaster area and ask for similar status from the federal government.

County officials Thursday toured Brownsville, Harlingen, Port Isabel, South Padre Island and Los Fresnos by Coast Guard helicopter and "saw an enormous amount of damage," said County Judge Moises Vela.

"Half to 75 percent of Cameron County is underwater," he said.

Nearly two feet of water fell on eastern Cameron and Willacy counties between Sunday and Wednesday, forcing the evacuation of families living in low-lying neighborhoods.

Vela said public buildings, state and county highways and individual homes had suffered "between $25 and $50 million worth of damage."

County commissioners voted Thursday to declare the county a disaster area.

"We're looking for any type of assistance we can get," Vela said. "And if we get more rain, my God, I don't know."

The front that caused the rain remained stubbornly a few miles offshore, pieces of it breaking away to dump more water over the Valley Thursday afternoon.

Gale force winds and heavy rains were reported on South Padre Island and Port Isabel at noon Thursday. Seas were running up to 15 feet, according to the National Weather Service.

Richard Hagan, National Weather Service meteorologist in Brownsville, said the front covered the entire northern Gulf of Mexico from the Texas coast to Florida.

The National Hurricane Center in Miami dispatched two reconnaisance planes Thursday to monitor an area of "disturbance" in the northwestern Gulf of Mexico.

Hagan said the aircraft had found a "broad low pressure" system over the Gulf of Mexico with a poorly defined center and gale force, circulating winds about 200 miles east northeast of Brownsville.

The front was expected to remain stationary for the next 12 to 24 hours, he said.

"The longer it remains stationary over the water, the better chance it has of becoming something tropical in nature. Diana should have given everybody an idea that these things can develop any way they want to," Hagan said.

As the front moved up the coast Thursday afternoon, gale warnings were issued for Port Mansfield and the coast south of Corpus Christi. Heavy rain and possible flooding in low-lying areas was forecast for the area between Corpus Christi and Houston.

Smith will remove GOP symbol from signs

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midland County Sheriff Dallas Smith said Thursday he will comply with Republican Party Chairman Kelly Fish's request that he not use the Republican Party symbol — an elephant — on campaign signs promoting his write-in candidacy.

Smith made the statement that he would cooperate after he received a letter from Fish on Wednesday requesting he remove only the Republican emblem.

"My position has been that I would remove it (the emblem) if party officials felt there was a problem," Smith said.

The issue surrounding the latest controversy in the Midland County Sheriff's race involves Republican Party concern over whether Smith's use of the emblem would mislead voters into thinking that Smith is the Republican Party nominee.

Fish is attending the State Republican Party Convention in Corpus Christi. He was not available for comment.

Smith, 41, announced his write-in candidacy earlier this month after he was defeated by his former patrol lieutenant Gary Painter in the May 5 Republican primary. Painter, 37, received 60.9 percent of the vote to Smith's 39.4 percent.

According to Smith, only the emblem on the 35 four-by-eight foot signs currently displayed throughout the county will be removed. "They haven't asked us to remove the signs as Mr. Painter said," Smith contended.

Painter charged Tuesday that "Smith is insinuating that he is the Republican Party candidate.... They're (Republican Party officials) trying to get him to remove the signs but I don't know if there's anything they can do."

Smith reported another 15 signs will be distributed before the November general election. The same signs were used in the primary election, he noted.

According to Dean Rucker, legal counsel for the county Republican Party, the elephant emblem "is a symbol so closely affiliated with the party that the use of it by anyone who is not a candidate on the Republican ticket would not be permissible."

Rucker added that although he is not aware of any copyright law on the emblem, "the public could be misled into believing that anyone who uses the logo is a candidate on the Republican ticket which Sheriff Smith is not."

Smith contended, "We don't want to deceive the voters into thinking that I'm the Republican nominee. It would be contradictory for me to imply that I'm the Republican nominee when it's up to us to inform and educate the public of my write-in candidacy and to demonstrate how to do the write-in."

He said, however, "There doesn't seem to be a clear understanding of what the elephant means. I don't see that it means anything other than conservative Republican. Indeed, I am a Republican and, indeed, I am a conservative."

Dog dies after fall into car

From Staff Reports

In a freak accident Thursday, two Odessans were bitten by a dog after it fell or was thrown from the Midkiff overpass and crashed through a car's windshield as they traveled on Interstate 20.

According to police reports, the driver of the vehicle, David Nolan Davis, 39, was westbound in a station wagon at 6:40 p.m. and had passed under the overpass when the dog fell off, struck the hood of the car and broke through the windshield. Both he and his passenger, Mike Jacob, no age available, were struck by the dog, which then bit them on the hands.

The dog, described as a 6 month to 1-year-old female Beagle, then died, according to Rice Freeman-Zachery of the Midland Animal Control.

"It's just real strange," Ms. Freeman-Zachery said. "He was either apprehensive and jumped or was thrown."

Animal Control officers theorize the dog was on the overpass when it became frightened at traffic and probably jumped. Investigating Animal Control Officer Debbie Hill, said it was unlikely anyone parked the car on the overpass and threw the dog over.

The dog was thought to be purebred, Ms. Freeman-Zachery said.

Anyone who saw the dog before the accident is asked to call the animal control department at 683-2941.

According to Odessa Medical Center Hospital, Davis was treated for the bite and released. There were no records available on Jacob.

Prominent Odessans indicted in burning of building

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

Ector County Commissioner Willie Hammond Jr., and former Odessa City Councilman Keith Weddell surrendered to federal authorities this morning in response to a multi-count indictment alleging their involvement in the burning of an Odessa office building.

Hammond and Weddell are charged with conspiracy to maliciously destroy property and malicious destruction of a building used in interstate commerce. They face maximum sentences of 15 years in jail and a $20,000 fine if found guilty of these crimes.

Hammond was also charged with two counts of perjury stemming from his testimony in a case concerned with an insurance claim after the building's burning. The combined maximum sentence he could receive for the perjury charges and the conspiracy and malicious destruction charges total 25 years in prison and a $40,000 fine.

The indictment explains the alleged conspiracy by noting that in July 1980, Weddell bought interest in the building "in speculation that a civic center would be built near the building."

The bond issue failed in December 1980. "During the period from late 1980 until November 1981, rent money collected from tenants at the O'Michael Building failed to cover the building's operating expenses," according to the indictment, and in May 1981 the insurance premium on the building doubled.

Weddell and Hammond "along with other persons whom said Defendants recruited and hired" destroyed the building with an explosive, according to the indictment.

The indictment alleges:

— Hammond approached an Odessa man, John Peterson, about burning the building in October 1981.

— Peterson, who is currently serving time in the Texas Department of Corrections for burglary, discussed the burning of the building in exchange for the insurance settlement with the two defendants in October or November 1981.

— Peterson and Hammond came to Midland to talk with another man the same month about the burning.

— Hammond paid Peterson for the job in late November or early December 1983.

The O'Michael Building burned Nov. 25, 1983. Now known as Jackson Center, the building has since been refurbished and sold.

The indictment alleges the man the defendants met in Midland, L.C. Burditt, and Peterson's brother, Lawrence "Cotton" Peterson, set the explosion that destroyed the building.

Consumer prices up 0.5 percent

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Consumer prices, surging at their steepest clip in four months, rose 0.5 percent in August as both food and clothing became significantly more expensive.

For the first two-thirds of 1984, inflation is running at an annual rate of 4.2 percent, a slight deterioration from last year's 3.8 percent.

Much of last month's bad news was attributed to higher prices for food — up 0.6 percent, the most since February — and clothing — up 0.9 percent, the most since March 1980.

Housing prices rose 0.6 percent, their second big gain in a row.

Gasoline prices fell 0.9 percent. That decline, however, was only half the July improvement and helped explain the steep overall increase.

While the August gain was the steepest since April's 0.5 percent jump, Labor Department analyst Patrick Jackman said the new increase was likely to be the steepest for the rest of 1984.

"Most people are expecting inflation for the year to run at 4.5 percent to 5 percent. I think this will still be the case." He predicted that, for the balance of 1984, the department's Consumer Price Index will record monthly inflationary jumps of 0.3 percent to 0.4 percent.

Jackman called the August gain an "aberration caused by the jump in vegetable prices" and higher prices for new fall clothing.

Meese absolved, but fight resumes

WASHINGTON (AP) — The fight over the nomination of Edwin Meese III as attorney general is far from over despite a special prosecutor's finding of no criminal wrongdoing on the part of President Reagan's long-time friend and adviser.

The president says he still wants Meese in his Cabinet if there is to be a second Reagan administration, but Democrats in the Senate say they are not finished scrutinizing both Meese's ethics and the policies he'd pursue if he became the nation's chief law enforcement officer.

Meese welcomed Thursday's report of special prosecutor Jacob A. Stein that found no basis for a criminal prosecution on charges he used his position to get government jobs for friends who helped him financially.

But the president's counselor said the "long ordeal" had made its mark on the way he would conduct his official life.

"The experience has taught me a great deal about the special circumstances of official life in Washington and the need for constant vigilance and sensitivity, not only to actual conduct, but also to how conduct may be perceived," the nominee said. He read a statement to reporters at the White House but refused to take any questions.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., said while he accepts Stein's findings of no criminality, he has "some real doubts about Mr. Meese's sensitivities to issues of civil rights and civil liberties."

And Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, said that while criminality is "not an issue now...there appear to be numerous cases where the testimony elicited by Mr. Stein and his staff are at variance with previous testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee."

Counselor to the president Edwin Meese reads a statement to reporters in the White House briefing room Thursday on the findings of special prosecutor Jacob Stein who was appointed to investigate allegations concerning Meese.

He called on Meese to ask Reagan to withdraw the nomination. That's been his position for many months.

The Stein report culminated a nine-month fight that left the Justice Department to run by a lame-duck Attorney General William French Smith, who made no effort to hide his eagerness to leave.

At issue first in the battle between the White House and the Democratic minority on the Senate Judiciary Committee was Meese's conservative political philosophy, including his attitude toward the poor.

Then the issue became Meese's ethics, as allegations surfaced that he abused his influence as Reagan's closest friend in the administration.

Finally last April, with the nomination bogged down, Meese asked Smith to seek the appointment of a special prosecutor, or independent counsel, under the Ethics in Government Act and Smith complied. Stein was selected by a panel of three judges appointed by Chief Justice Warren Burger.

In all, Stein methodically investigated 11 areas of concern.

Of the charges, Stein, a highly regarded lawyer who is so non-political that he has never even cast a vote in an election, rendered a carefully worded verdict:

"We find no basis with respect of any of the 11 allegations for the bringing of a prosecution against Mr. Meese for the violation of a federal criminal statute."

Congressional leaders put MX on hold

WASHINGTON (AP) — Capitol Hill leaders have agreed on a compromise $292 billion defense budget that puts the controversial MX missile on the back burner and sets up new obstacles for it next year.

The agreement reached Thursday between Senate Republican Leader Howard H. Baker Jr. of Tennessee and House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., had President Reagan's consent and resolved a dispute that had Congress in knots.

Reagan made the major concessions, including the $292.9 billion budget figure approved earlier by the House, rather than the the $299 billion that had been passed by the Republican-controlled Senate.

Reagan also agreed to giving the House and Senate two votes each on the MX in April, political tests O'Neill said would make it hard for the 10-warhead missile to survive. He said the weapon "will never be deployed ... the defeat of the MX is well at hand."

In their one major concession, House leaders agreed to let the Air Force test its satellite killer, a missile fired from an F-15 jet, just twice against an object in space.

On another front, a House-Senate conference committee, seeking to agree on a sweeping immigration bill, hit a snag over whether non-citizens should be denied such public assistance as subsized school lunches and medical aid for pregnant women.

While the House and Senate scrambled to close up shop and head for the campaign trail by Oct. 4, emergency legislation to keep the government solvent after the new fiscal year starts Oct. 1 became bogged down. Lawmakers attempted to tack on money for dozens of politically popular water projects.

The House voted 225-168 Thursday to reject an effort to remove nearly $140 million for the water projects.

Malaysian authorities worried about break-dancing

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — Break-dancing is spreading in Malaysia and government authorities are worried about its effect on Malaysian youth, one of whom recently broke his neck while doing it and died.

Dr. Sulaiman Daud, the culture, youth and sports minister, told a recent news conference the government might consider banning the dance, whose quick, angular gyrations have spread from the streets of the United States.

The break-dance craze also is being fanned by the movie "Breakin'," which has been showing to packed audiences of youths over the last couple of months in Malaysia. The dance has even moved into the countryside.

In Kota Bahru, 210 miles northeast of Kuala Lumpur, Criminal Investigation Chief Hua Leng Kee reported that 11-year-old Zulkifli Bin Awang Kechik was fatally injured Sept. 11 while break-dancing.

Chua said Zulkifli was balancing on his head and doing various acrobatics with two other friends, 7 and 10 years old, when he broke his neck. He died on the way to hospital.

It was the first death attributed in Malaysia to break-dancing.

In Alor Star, 240 miles northwest of Kuala Lumpur, police arrested 50 youths on Sept. 5 for causing traffic jams while performing outside a mosque.

But the official expressions of concern and warnings have not deterred many of the break-dancers. Some of Kuala Lumpur's hotels, clubs and other social spots offer break-dancing for patrons; others hold break-dance competitions.

One group advertises a videocassette for use as a "visual guide to break-dancing" for the equivalent of $20.

In Johore Bahru, near the border with Singapore, Singaporean youths come across to show off their skills to Malaysians, and are spreading the fever there, the newspaper New Straits Times of Singapore recently reported.

It quoted police sources in Johore Bahru as saying they cannot arrest the the "breakers" because they don't violate any laws.

In Ipoh, 120 miles north of Kuala Lumpur, Police Chief Noordin Alauddin told reporters that a traffic jam was caused by a group of youths break-dancing in front of a movie house. No arrests were made, but the chief warned they could be picked up for obstructing traffic.

The youth wing of the governing United Malays National Organization political party wants the government to draw up guidelines on break-dancing.

Fruit cutback sends tremors through Honduran port

LA CEIBA, Honduras (AP) — Far into the night, trains rumble through the center of town bringing carloads of bananas to cargo ships tied up at the long wooden pier.

It is a scene that has been repeated day and night since the turn of the century when the U.S. giant Standard Fruit Co. made La Ceiba its headquarters in Honduras. As the banana business flourished, La Ceiba grew prosperous; it became the biggest banana port in Central America and far outstripped other towns and cities in Honduras.

But there is growing unease about the future in La Ceiba now.

Standard Fruit is slashing its operations in Honduras because of rising costs and an uncertain banana market, laying off workers by the hundreds.

"The people of La Ceiba are afraid. The company let 1,000 workers go last year," said Margie Dip, a Honduran who is Standard Fruit's public relations director. "They always told us we should not depend on them — when they stopped making money, they would have to go."

THE COMPANY still has 6,300 full-time and part-time employees. The next biggest private employer in La Ceiba is a printing firm that has fewer than 100 workers.

Most of the company's legacy remains — housing projects, roads, bridges, schools, a hospital, higher wages, a way of life heavily influenced by North America. But for La Ceiba's 80,000 people, the company became a crutch.

"We were the envy of Central America — this small piece of territory," said Mario Gonzalez, president of the workers' union at Standard Fruit. "Two years ago you would not have found a poorly dressed person on the streets of La Ceiba.

"If Standard Fruit leaves here, this will turn into a graveyard."

Few things have had as great an effect on Central America as the banana companies, and U.S. involvement in this turbulent region is heavily rooted in the role the companies have played here.

STANDARD FRUIT'S huge competitor, United Brands, is 110 miles west of here at La Lima.

With their economic clout, the banana companies became openly involved in the politics of this impoverished nation and won 99-year concessions to hundreds of thousands of acres.

As recently as 1975, United Brands was accused of paying a Honduran official $1.25 million to win a tax break.

The companies' impact extends beyond economics and is reflected in a lifestyle heavily influenced by American pop culture. Although Spanish is the national language, many people in the coastal cities speak English.

"Blue jeans, T-shirts with different sayings, even American slang — it doesn't take long for it to get here," said Mrs. Dip, the public relations director. "Almost every week people are traveling to the States and bringing back new things." Her son, like many young people from La Ceiba, attends a university in the United States.

UNTIL 1954, banana industry workers were poorly paid. In that year they went on strike for 67 days, winning a large wage increase from the companies and laying the groundwork for the strong labor movement in Honduras today.

"When the companies came here, they exploited the Hondurans," Mrs. Dip said. "But that's changed. They're not saints, but they're good to us now."

Standard Fruit gave the La Ceiba area a much higher standard of living than cities in the mountainous south, including Tegucigalpa, the capital. But at the same time the town came to rely on the company for everything from jobs to medical care.

"Standard Fruit has been a doubled-edged sword for La Ceiba," said Ricardo Irias, who took early retirement from the company to operate Maxim's, considered the best restaurant in town. "When La Ceiba needed something like a bridge, people would say why bother with the central government — we'll get it better and faster from Standard Fruit.

"The thinking of the government was why worry about the people in La Ceiba. Standard Fruit is taking care of them."

IN ADDITION to a railroad, Standard Fruit built canals, bridges and roads to its plantations. It ran a fleet of steamships that provided weekly passenger service between La Ceiba and New Orleans, giving people on the coast greater access to the United States than to their own capital. The ships also carried mail and freight to ports along the coast until the early 1950s.

The company at one time supplied La Ceiba with telephone service, electricity and drinking water. It built churches and schools both here and in nearby communities. It donated land for a public stadium and the city airport. Under the latest union contract, it is providing the site, complete with lights, water and sewage lines, for a housing project for workers and $2 million in financing.

The company's English-language primary and high schools are staffed by American teachers and are open to all children in the community.

Standard Fruit also built the Vicente D'Antoni Hospital, one of the country's best, and donated it to the town. It still subsidizes the hospital to the tune of $1.5 million a year, but has reduced medical personnel and other employees from 800 to 500 to cut costs.

Showers are forecast through Saturday for the Northwest, western and northern Plains, eastern Gulf and from northern Louisiana to the Midwest, according to the National Weather Service.

Fair skies, temperatures in upper 80s anticipated

From Staff and Wire Reports

Outdoorsmen will appreciate conditions through Saturday as fair skies accompany predicted temperatures in the upper 80s, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Forecasters predict lows tonight will be in the mid-60s with southerly winds at 10 to 15 mph increasing Saturday to 15 to 25 mph.

Thursday's high of 82 was mild compared to the record of 107 set in 1953. The overnight low of 59 was 19 degrees above the record low set in 1983.

STATE

Gale warning were in effect along the Texas coast early today as a low pressure system in the western Gulf of Mexico produced strong north to northeast winds.

Showers and thunderstorms were reported early today along the coastal plains with the heaviest storms remaining offshore in the Gulf of Mexico.

The National Weather Service warned of high tides and rough seas along the entire Texas coast through tonight.

A coastal flood warning was in effect through mid-afternoon for the upper Texas coast from Port Arthur to Port O'Connor and a flood and flash flood watch was in effect through tonight for Southeast Texas and the upper Texas coast.

The flood and flash flood watch area was south and east of a line from Palacios to College Station to Toledo Bend Reservoir and included the entire Houston metropolitan area. Forecasters warned of the possibility of as much as five inches of rain today in the watch area.

Elsewhere, an upper level disturbance moving across West Texas triggered light rain and a few thundershowers early today from near Fredricksburg northward to the Red River in the Gainesville area. And some light showers were reported in South Texas from north of Laredo eastward to Victoria.

Skies were mostly cloudy statewide except for the area west of the Pecos River.

Winds were mostly light, ranging from 5 to 15 mph over most of the state except along the mid to upper coast where they gusted to more than 20 mph.

Early morning temperatures were mostly in the 60s and 70s with cooler readings, mostly in the 50s, reported over the South Plains and Trans Pecos. Extremes ranged from 49 at Marfa in the Davis Mountains to 76 at Houston.

Other early morning readings included 60 at Amarillo, 65 at Wichita Falls, 69 at Dallas-Fort Worth, 68 at Waco, 67 at San Antonio, 71 at Corpus Christi, 72 at Brownsville, 63 at San Angelo, 58 at Lubbock and 63 at both Midland and El Paso.

Death toll much lower than feared

By TERRY A. ANDERSON
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Rescue workers today ended their search for bodies in the wreckage of the U.S. Embassy annex, and authorities said the death toll from the suicide car-bomb attack was sharply lower than first reported.

Lebanese military investigator Elias Mousa said the casualty toll, based on hospital and coroners' reports, was 12 dead and 72 wounded, while one U.S. diplomat said he believed only eight people were killed and 36 wounded. Earlier police reports had said 23 people were killed and 60 hurt when a van filled with explosives blew up Thursday just outside the annex.

U.S. Embassy Deputy Chief of Mission Stephen R. Lyne told reporters at the scene today that the search for victims was over.

"We have accounted for all Americans and foreign service nationals. All we are doing now is removing classified material for the sake of security," Lyne said.

Lyne put the final toll of U.S. casualties at two killed and 16 wounded seriously enough to be hospitalized. A U.S. source close to the search said earlier that 21 Americans were injured.

Another U.S. official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said rescue workers had "found all the bodies we will find," but "there are people we're not going to find any part of."

It was impossible to determine how many Lebanese visitors or visa applicants were at the annex when the van exploded, the source said.

The blast injured U.S. Ambassador Reginald Bartholomew and British Ambassador David Miers, neither seriously, the source said.

Bartholomew left the Abu Jawdeh Hospital in a wheelchair today, with stitches across his upper lip, a small bandage on the back of his head and a cast on his arm. He said his arm was not broken. Surrounded by bodyguards, he was driven to his residence east of Beirut.

Speaking to the American NBC television network, Bartholomew said the bomber zigzagged through anti-vehicle concrete barricades after shooting a Lebanese guard. The bomber was fired at and slumped over the wheel before the bomb went off, Bartholomew said.

British guards who were waiting for Miers outside the annex when the explosion occurred said they also fired at the attacker and believe they hit him.

One British guard, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said he fired five shots and saw the driver slump to the right, apparently preventing the car from reaching an underground parking entrance. If he had gotten under the building, the damage would have been much worse, Bartholomew said.

"God knows, this was bad enough, but it could have been a hell of a lot worse," he said.

In Washington, the Pentagon identified the American dead as Army Chief Warrant Officer Kenneth V. Welch, 33, whose mother lives in Grand Rapids, Mich., and Navy Petty Officer 1st Class Michael Ray Wagner, 30, of Zebulon, N.C. Both were described as embassy staff members.

The explosion was the third almost identical suicide bombing against U.S. targets in Lebanon in the past 17 months.

The twin truck bombings of U.S. Marine and French paratroop command posts in Beirut killed 299 people last October, and 63 people, including 17 Americans, perished in the April 1983 bombing of the U.S. Embassy in the Moslem sector of the Lebanese capital.

INDICT

Hammond allegedly lied twice Sept. 27, 1983 during federal court proceedings involving the suit for the insurance settlement, filed by owners of the building, including, Weddell, former Mayor Bob Bryant and attorney Ray Stoker Jr.

The sealed indictment was issued Thursday, but only became public record this morning after Weddell and Hammond appeared before U.S. Magistrate Darrell F. Smith.

Noting the fact the two defendants surrendered voluntarily, Smith released them on their own personal recognizance. Should either fail to appear for any court proceedings, they would be liable for the $50,000 bond originally set.

The indictments mark the first criminal charges filed after two years of investigation.

Proceedings were held up by the lack of an attorney to represent the federal government, who reportedly left after the grand jury session Thursday.

Embassy offices again relocated to safer site

By R. GREGORY NOKES
AP Diplomatic Writer

WASHINGTON — U.S. Embassy offices in Lebanon were being moved to safer ground today — driven from yet another headquarters by terrorist bombers — as Reagan administration officials defended their security measures against criticism they are inadequate.

Officials also discouraged speculation that the administration would retaliate for Thursday's attack, although they didn't entirely rule out countermeasures to the third devastating terrorist bombing of a U.S. government installation in Lebanon in the last 17 months.

Assistant Secretary of State Richard Murphy was en route from Washington to Beirut today to conduct an on-site investigation that will include an assessment of whether proper security measures were in place.

Two terrorists in an explosive-packed van shot their way through a checkpoint about a block from an embassy building entrance near East Beirut, the State Department said. They then sped 500 feet under fire from Lebanese and American guards until they were finally stopped at another checkpoint just 20 feet from the entrance, where the explosives were detonated, heavily damaging the building, according to State.

Two American military personnel were among the 12 killed in the blast which injured 72 people, according to the Lebanese military investigators who based their count on hospital and coroners' reports. Earlier, as many as 42 people were believed killed. The ambassador, Reginald Bartholomew, was injured and taken to a nearby hospital, but apparently his wounds weren't serious.

The Pentagon identified the American dead as Army Chief Warrant Officer Kenneth V. Welch, 33, whose mother lives in Grand Rapids, Mich., and Navy Petty Officer 1st Class Michael Ray Wagner, 30, of Zebulon, N.C. Both were described as embassy staff members.

A State Department official said the six-story embassy annex was "no longer usable" and that the embassy offices were being moved to another suburban location east of Beirut. The annex had only been opened two months ago as a temporary facility while a new embassy was being built.

The terrorists were also killed. The suicide attack was nearly a carbon copy of the devasting blasts that demolished the American embassy in West Beirut on April 18, 1983, with the loss of more than 60 dead, and the blast that leveled the U.S. Marine headquarters last Otober 23, killing 241 American servicemen.

Reagan administration officials were clearly sensitive to the suggestions that security might have been lax or that they hadn't taken sufficient precautions in view of the earlier attacks.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz said the devastation would have been a lot worse had it not been for security precautions taken in the wake of earlier attacks. The American Embassy in Kuwait was also devastated by a terrorist bomb last year.

President Reagan vowed the United States would not be driven out of the Mideast by such attacks. He spoke of "a moment of anger and sorrow" in reaction to the attack by terrorists "opposed to everything we stand for."

Democratic presidential hopeful Walter Mondale echoed Reagan's outrage and declined an opportunity to renew his earlier criticism of the administration's actions in Lebanon.

"I would not give these terrorists any excuse whatsoever," he said, declaring his "full support" for any appropriate countermeasures Reagan might order.

Shultz said progress had been made because the terrorist vehicle "wasn't able to drive into the building the way these vehicles have been able to do on other occasions..." and that the floors of the building did not collapse, as in some of the previous blasts.

"So it is a very different kind of result, and I think our security provisions, obviously, have helped some," he said.

But Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., the ranking minority member of the Senate Armed Services Committee, said he thought security at the annex was "clearly inadequate.... We seemingly need to change our approach to security of American embassies." He commented following a State Department briefing.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., said it appeared to him that "we were not prepared and we didn't have proper and sufficient (protection) barriers there. The question remains, did we have sufficient barriers? Apparently it appears as though we did not."

Sen. Bob Kasten, R-Wis., chairman of the foreign operations subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee, said he would work "to make sure we have more security, perhaps more Marines."

John Hughes, the State Department spokesman, said the embassy offices had been moved from Moslem-dominated West Beirut to the suburbs near Christian-controlled East Beirut because it was thought the eastern sector was "more secure."

Hughes disclosed that the embassy annex was already in a state of increased alert because of a Sept. 8 threat from a terrorist group.

Presidential campaign rhetoric returns to taxing, deficit issues

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

President Reagan is off the campaign trail after denouncing the Democrats for taxes "from here to eternity," while challenger Walter F. Mondale renews his demand for a White House plan to cut the federal deficit.

"Mr. Reagan, where's the plan?" was the line the Democratic presidential nominee was repeating Thursday as he criticized the president on federal budget deficits, jobs, education, civil rights and arms control.

But the rhetoric on both sides was tempered by the tragedy in Beirut, where a terrorist's suicide truck-bomb again claimed American lives Thursday. Twenty-three people died in the explosion at the U.S. Embassy annex, two of them U.S. servicemen.

Vice President George Bush, campaigning in Burlington, Vt., even offered praise for Mondale, saying the Democratic nominee was "acting in a most statesmanlike way in supporting the president of the United States" in his reaction to the attack.

Mondale voiced "full support for appropriate countermeasures" that Reagan might take in response to the bombing and sidestepped questions about whether Reagan's policies might be a factor in the terrorist attack. "I would not give these terrorists any excuse for what they've done."

Reagan was following a normal White House schedule today with no political events planned.

Mondale was holding a strategy session with Hispanic leaders in Washington today before heading on to Montgomery, Ala., for his weekly foray into the South.

Democratic vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro was in Southern California before heading home to New York. Bush was winding up a New England swing with appearances in Bangor and Portland, Maine.

Reagan kept to his schedule Thursday, despite the bombing. He campaigned in Iowa, where he visited a farm and a church picnic, and toured a factory and campaigned with former President Gerald R. Ford at a rally in Ford's hometown, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Although Mondale refused to link Reagan's policies with the bombings in Beirut, it was only Monday that Mondale had linked Reagan to the October 1983 bombing of the U.S. Marine compound in Beirut where 241 U.S. servicemen died. He said then that the administration had so bungled its Middle East policy that "in that swamp of policy confusion, we lost nearly 300 brave Americans who were placed in a vulnerable position over the objections of the Joint Chiefs of Staff."

At his stop in Michigan, Reagan avoided direct mention of Mondale but said of his Democratic opponents, "Their legacy to our children would be built-in tax increases that could only be described in one way: from here to eternity."

He also used a football analogy as he invoked his familiar rosy imagery of America under the Reagan administration: "Isn't it great to see America beginning to score touchdowns again?"

Campaigning with the president he unsuccessfully challenged for the GOP nomination eight years ago, Reagan sought to take advantage of Ford's home-state popularity. Ford "brought back our economy, began rebuilding our defenses," Reagan said of his old Republican rival.

He drew a crowd of about 10,000 earlier in Iowa, where his way was paved by an announcement Tuesday of additional government guaranteed farm loans and deferment of some existing farm loans. Reagan said that Mondale's farm and economic proposals "would reap a harvest of hardships" for farmers.

Mondale spoke to a union audience in Seattle, where he invoked the variation on the "Where's the beef" question Mondale used so successfully against Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado in the Democratic presidential primaries.

Then it was to suggest Hart's "new ideas" lacked substance; this time, it was to demand a response to Mondale's own proposal to cut the federal deficit by two-thirds through a tax increase and spending cuts.

"Today I ask Mr. Reagan, where's the plan? Where's your plan? Let's hear it," he said.

Back in Washington for an annual Hispanic Caucus dinner, Mondale charged that the Reagan administration tries to "make Hispanic Americans forget four years of neglect and keep them happy with a few fiestas."

Both Bush, in Vermont, and Ms. Ferraro, in Texas, faced heckling Thursday. Bush chided his hecklers, saying "they can't do it quite as well as they used to in the Vietnam days."

Ms. Ferraro was unable to complete a sentence about Reagan at one point and shot back at her hecklers, "I want to tell you — if I had a record like Ronald Reagan's I wouldn't want anybody to talk about it either."

The Democrats have been particularly dogged by hecklers and protesters lately, but Reagan dismissed suggestions that his people were organizing them.

"Good Lord no," Reagan said. "I wish people wouldn't do it. But I suppose if the speaker has a right to be heard, they've got a right to be heard."

PRICES

Indeed, vegetable prices recorded a 13.2 percent jump, their largest since February 1977.

Supply shortages were blamed for all of the increase. Specifically, hot weather in California drove lettuce prices up 28.7 percent while delivery woes forced tomato prices up 30.8 percent. Potato prices rose 12 percent, with the gain blamed on small spring crops caused by heavy rains.

As for clothing, Jackman said that this year's robust economic growth had prompted manufacturers to raise prices for fall-season clothes more than in the past. He predicted clothing prices would stabilize, or might even decline slightly, in the coming months with the next sharp increase unlikely before spring lines appear in the winter.

The sharp housing price increase was blamed on the second consecutive significant jumps in electricity costs, up 1.6 percent, and in natural gas prices, up 1.7 percent. Those gains were only partially offset by a 1.6 percent drop in heating oil prices.

Gasoline prices, which had fallen 1.8 percent in July and 1.5 percent in June, fell just 0.9 percent in August but were still 15.5 percent below their peak level of March 1981.

In other details, the department said:

—Beef prices rose 1.4 percent after five straight monthly declines. Poultry prices fell 2.2 percent while egg prices fell 2.1 percent and fish prices rose 0.2 percent.

Food prices had risen an overall 0.3 percent in July, their fastest pace in five months.

—The cost for meals eaten outside the home rose 0.4 percent. Alcoholic beverage prices were up 0.2 percent.

—New car prices rose 0.5 percent while used car prices dropped 0.4 percent.

NATION IN BRIEF

Gaye's father could get probation

LOS ANGELES (AP) — There is "every reason to believe" the father of soul singer Marvin Gaye will be placed on probation after pleading no contest to voluntary manslaughter in the April 1 shooting death of his son, a defense lawyer said.

Marvin Gay Sr., 70, pleaded Thursday to the charge reduced from first-degree murder on a plea bargain, said defense attorney Michael Schiff.

Gay could face up to 13 years in prison at his Nov. 2 sentencing, Deputy District Attorney Dona Bracke said.

A no contest plea takes the same criminal penalty as a guilty plea, but cannot be used against the defendant in subsequent civil action.

Indicted mayor won't resign

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Mayor Roger Hedgecock, who has surrendered to San Diego County marshals, says he won't resign from office and called the indictment charging him with conspiracy and perjury "a farce."

Hedgecock surrendered Thursday, was booked, fingerprinted and released pending a Sept. 28 arraignment on a 15-count criminal indictment. He was indicted Wednesday along with jailed financier J. David Dominelli, former J. David & Co. executive Nancy Hoover and political consultant Tom Shepard.

The four allegedly conspired to pump money from Ms. Hoover and Dominelli's now bankrupt money-trading firm into Hedgecock's 1983 campaign by laundering it through Shepard's consulting firm.

Dying woman can continue suit

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — A woman who is dying of lung cancer can proceed with her product liability lawsuit after a judge ruled the health warnings on cigarette packages do not protect the tobacco industry from legal action.

People who claim the warnings are inadequate "and that they have been injured as a result should not be deprived of the opportunity of so proving," U.S. District Judge H. Lee Sarokin said Thursday in a ruling believed to be the first of its kind in the nation.

Rose Cipollone, 58, of Little Ferry sued several companies, alleging they were negligent in not warning the public of the dangers of smoking. She is seeking unspecified damages.

Judge to hear lawyers charges

NEW YORK (AP) — A lawyer for one of three day care workers charged with sexual abuse of children will get a hearing on his allegations that the district attorney has used the case for political gain and that children were grilled "without relief."

Justice Howard Goldfuss ordered a hearing Oct. 18 so he could decide the validity of Anthony Suarez's charges. Bronx District Attorney Mario Merola denied the allegations.

Cause of fire may never be known

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The damage from an explosion and fire in a grain elevator that killed three people was so severe that inspectors say they may not be able to determine the cause.

Authorities on Thursday recovered the bodies of two men missing since Wednesday's blast at the ConAgra plant. Ten others were injured.

The explosion set off fires that destroyed a second elevator and three buildings. State Occupational Safety and Health inspector Jim Sibley speculated the blast was caused when dust inside a storage bin was ignited by a spark or hot machinery.

Incumbent leaves campaign trail

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — A legislative incumbent, citing "enormous physical and emotional stress," has quit his re-election campaign after his opponent revealed he had lied about being a Vietnam combat veteran during a state House debate in March.

Draft registration resister might go to law school after court victory

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Some law school students dream of winning their first case after graduation, but draft registration resister Gillam Kerley stood alone in court and beat the U.S. government in his two-year case without any legal training.

Kerley, 23, of Madison, won his battle against the government Sept. 17 in U.S. District Court in Madison after being indicted in 1982 for failing to register for the draft under the U.S. Selective Service Act. His arguments won a dismissal of the indictment, although the government has said it will appeal.

Then 19, Kerley began his David-vs.-Goliath battle against the government by deciding to represent himself to "speak with the jury person-to-person...so that they could see I was a real human being."

"Once the prospect of being prosecuted and possibly going to jail hit me, I knew I wanted to speak for myself," Kerley said. "I could also concentrate solely on my case. No attorney would have time to do that."

IF HE LOST, Kerley stood to serve up to five years in prison or pay a $10,000 fine.

Several attorneys he consulted wanted to be involved in the proceedings, and when Kerley sought help from the Wisconsin Civil Liberties Union, he was told that "their attorney would have full control and I would have to sit back and say nothing."

Kerley is the only resister of 17 taken to court by the government so far who has waged a successful battle by himself.

He said he was "very nervous" at the first arraignment on Sept. 8, 1982, because he did know if the U.S. magistrate would let him explain his plea — not guilty by reason of sanity.

"I HAD REHEARSED a three-sentence statement to explain my plea so that if he tried to stop me, I could still get through it all," Kerley said.

U.S. Magistrate William Gansner let him to speak, but the plea was entered as innocent.

It was then that the slight, soft-spoken Kerley, who once appeared in court in jeans and sneakers, began throwing wrenches into the government's case.

Soon after his initial appearance, Kerley found a typographical error on his copy of the indictment. The court's version had been corrected to show that he began violating the Selective Service Act on Aug. 3, 1980. His copy stated 1981.

"No one pointed it out...you just begin to notice every little detail when you're involved in something like this," he said.

GANSNER AGREED that Kerley had been given inaccurate notice of the charge and the government had to reindict him in November 1982.

Kerley argued that he was being selectively prosecuted because of his vocal opposition to the war. The government had sent a list of 160 names of violators of the 650,000 estimated not to have registered as of July 1982. His name was one of them.

He asked for transcripts and documents of meetings of the Presidential Military Manpower Task Force to prove his contention.

Kerley also contended that the Selective Service System had violated its public notice rule by implementing draft registration after only 32 days of notice, rather than 60 days.

U.S. District Judge James Doyle Sr. ruled against dismissal on the public notice motion, but agreed Kerley had a right to the documents. When U.S. Attorney John Byrnes of Madison refused to turn them over, Doyle dismissed the case.

Although he is "delighted," Kerley fears being brought into court again. Byrnes has said the case will be appealed.

Kerley, who grew up in Rock Hill, S.C., said that his parents supported him during the trial and that his anti-military views probably were nurtured by their opposition to the Vietnam War. They were upset, however, at the possibility he might go to jail.

Police apprehend suspect in death near Green River

AUBURN, Wash. (AP) — Police arrested a man Thursday for investigation in the death of a woman whose body was found near the Green River, but they said he was not the serial killer who has struck at least 26 times in two years.

The 34-year-old man was arrested without incident at his Auburn home at 8:40 p.m. and taken to the King County Jail in Seattle, said Fae Brooks, a spokeswoman for the Green River Task Force of the King County Police.

The man, whose identity was withheld, was "in custody" when the 26 deaths attributed to the so-called Green River killer occurred during the last two years, Ms. Brooks said.

He was held Thursday for investigation of murder in the death of Barbara Jean Hagedorn, 26, of Kent, whose body was found Wednesday near the Green River near here.

"He's not the Green River killer," Ms. Brooks said. "It appears it's not related." She added that the suspect knew the victim "for a very short time," but declined to say what led police to the suspect.

An autopsy was performed Thursday on the victim, whose body was the second discovered in the Seattle area within a week. The cause of death was being withheld at the request of the task force, Ms. Brooks said, but the manner of death was homicide.

The Green River Task Force took control of the investigation shortly after the body was found, because of what Capt. Frank Adamson called numerous similarities to the other slayings linked to the two-year murder spree.

Ms. Hagedorn, 26, an unemployed waitress from Kent, was last seen in the Auburn area early Monday and was reported missing later that day by a boyfriend, Ms. Brooks said.

The body was identified from fingerprints, Ms. Brooks said. The woman had a history of theft charges but was not a prostitute, Ms. Brooks added. Many of the victims attributed to the Green River killer had links to prostitution.

"There's always a better chance of evidence when the bodies are fresh," Adamson said. But he added grimly, "It's never a lucky break when there's another victim."

The body was found by an elderly man who had stopped and walked into the woods while headed to Flaming Geyser State Park, about 15 miles southeast of Seattle, for a picnic with his wife, said Ms. Brooks.

The 41-member task force, headed by Adamson, takes its name from the quiet stream which runs through the mainly rural southeast sector of King County. The first five victims were found in the summer of 1982 in or near the river near Kent, about seven miles northwest of the site where the body was found Wednesday.

Since then, the killer has discarded his victims, all young and female, in brushy or wooded sites off roads throughout King and northern Pierce counties. A number have been found in "cluster dumps" of one or more victims.

One of the bodies found in August 1982 was three days old, and another was four days old, but most victims found this year were mere skeletons. The most recent previous confirmed death was that of Debbie Abernathy in September 1983.

Neither the body found Wednesday, nor another unidentified body found Sept. 13 in Pierce County, about 40 miles south of Seattle, has been officially added to the list of Green River victims.

Police still are not close to making an arrest in the case, Adamson said, but remain confident they can solve it.

In addition to the women officially listed as victims, police fear another 15 missing young women may have fallen prey to the killer.

Mondale asking Reagan, Where's your tax plan?

WASHINGTON (AP) — "Mr. Reagan, where's the plan?" is the latest battle cry of Walter F. Mondale's presidential challenge.

Mondale got a rousing reception for his new slogan Thursday at a union convention in Seattle and then flew to Washington to bid for the support of Hispanics.

After a strategy meeting today with Hispanic leaders, Mondale was flying to Alabama for another of his weekly forays into the South.

Mondale aides often cite Alabama, which had one of the highest unemployment rates in the nation in 1982 and 1983, as one of the southern states where they have the best chance of defeating Reagan. However, a Birmingham News poll of Alabama conducted Sept. 8-15 showed Reagan leading in the state 58 percent to 32 percent.

At the annual Hispanic Caucus dinner Thursday night, Mondale cited his record of involvement in helping migrant workers and in the passage of voting rights and bilingual education legislation.

He said the Reagan administration thinks "they can make Hispanic-Americans forget four years of neglect and keep them happy with a few fiestas."

Hispanics are seen by both parties as a key voting group with growing influence in such states as California, Texas, New Mexico, New York, Florida and Illinois.

The Democratic presidential nominee brought union members to their feet cheering Thursday when he cited budget deficits, jobs, education, civil rights and arms control and, after each, asked:"Mr Reagan, where's your plan?"

The 3,000 delegates and guests at the annual convention of the International Union of Machinists and Aerospace Workers then roared their approval of a motion to endorse Mondale.

Mondale reminded the union audience of "Where's the beef?" — the restaurant chain's advertising slogan that Mondale used effectively during the nomination battle against Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado.

Battling to overcome Reagan's lead in the presidential race, Mondale has relentlessly attacked the president for not disclosing what he would do if re-elected.

For the past week, Mondale has ridiculed the president for waging a campaign of "cameo appearances, photo opportunities" and described him as traveling in "a protective cocoon, an answer-free zone."

Ferraro gets praise, criticism on campaign trail in Dallas area

DALLAS (AP) — After a warm reception at a downtown Dallas fundraiser, Geraldine Ferraro confronted some of the worst heckling of her campaign on the campus of the University of Texas at Arlington.

The Democratic vice presidential candidate's campus speech was repeatedly interrupted by several hundred sign-waving pro-Reagan dmemonstrators.

Gov. Mark White, who stepped to her side several times during the heckling, later tried to downplay the rowdy scence.

"We're doing our part for education reform in Texas. There are just a few students we haven't taught manners to yet," he told reporters.

But the campus crowd also included Ferraro supporters. Chants of "Ger-rey! Ger-rey! Ger-rey!" competed at several points with "Reagan! Reagan!"

The Queens, N.Y., congresswoman faced down her hecklers and pressed on with her speech. At one point, unable to finish a sentence about Reagan's record, she turned to the hecklers and said:

"I want to tell you — if I had a record like Ronald Reagan's, I wouldn't want anybody to talk about it either."

Earlier this week, her running mate, Walter F. Mondale, was confronted by a similar crowd of pro-Reagan hecklers at the University of Southern California.

During a campaign stop in Vermont on Thursday, Vice President George Bush said he had no knowledge of the USC heckling incident and added, "I don't like it and it invites retaliation." Bush was loudly heckled by nuclear freeze advocates during Thursday's stumping.

Ms. Ferraro began the day with a fundraising breakfast at the Fairmont Hotel that attracted an enthusiastic crowd of about 3,500, nearly twice what the organizers expected from this conservative, strongly Republican community.

A small crowd of mostly anti-abortion demonstrators marched outside the downtown hotel, but inside, the crowd cheered and applauded with vigor.

In speeches at both events, Ferraro criticized Reagan administration foreign policy.

"Like every mother in this country, I did not raise my son to die in an undeclared war for an uncertain purpose," she said in Arlington.

"Let's have a president that sends in the diplomats before he sends in the Marines," she told her first audience.

Hightower says Reagan's farm plan too late

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Agriculutre Commissioner Jim Hightower says President Reagan's new program to offer federal loan guarantees and debt forgiveness for financially troubled farmers isn't enough to solve farm problems.

"You can't cure cancer with a couple of aspirin. It's past time for major surgery on federal farm policies," Hightower said Thursday.

On Tuesday, two days before a campaign trip to the nation's farm belt, Reagan reversed previous administration policy. His new program will allow the Farmers Home Administration to forgo collection of interest and principal payments on some farm loans, while providing loan guarantees to help farmers and rural banks through hard times.

While the administration has insisted that the farm economy is improving, many farm groups and farm-state congressmen charge that Reagan policies have driven up interest rates, tightened credit and caused financial problems for farmers.

"Reagan says it's just a coincidence that this program was announced as he prepared to campaign for the farm vote in Iowa," Hightower said. "At first glace, this looks like the fastest turnaround since the Olympic swimming events.

"What it means is that the president and (Agriculture Secretary John) Block finally got around to reading their 1981 farm bill and discovered — glory be — that they actually have some authority to alleviate the disaster they've inflicted on rural America," Hightower said.

Hightower, chairman of the national Democratic Party Agriculture Council, said Reagan's change of mind came too late for 200,000 farmers and ranchers who already have been forced to leave the land.

He also found fault with the substance of the program, saying it has "the consistency of cotton candy."

Hightower said there are three factors in the new plan which he believes make it less than the president has said:

— The agriculture secretary already had the authority to grant three-year deferrals on 100 percent of a borrower's FmHA loans, not just the 25 percent that was announced.

— Government guarantees of certain farm loans at commercial banks "is really a banker bailout that will be of more value to the financial community than to farmers."

— The program will substitute more debt for earned income. "No emergency credit program can replace a new farm bill that gives our family farmers and ranchers a chance to make a profit."

Budget board works on state budget

AUSTIN (AP) — The Public Utility Commission says it needs $26.4 million for 1986-87, but state lawmakers headed for a budget crunch say the rate-setting agency can get by on about $6 million less.

The PUC budget recommended Thursday by the Legislative Budget Board is actually less than the agency's current budget because of a special $5 million federal appropriation now in effect.

Legislators on the 10-member budget board have started the cumbersome task of setting expenditures for the next two-year period. Their recommendations go to the Legislature next year.

Comptroller Bob Bullock this week guaranteed budget battles by projecting that the state could be as much as $1.7 billion short through 1987. Gov. Mark White, Speaker Gib Lewis and other state leaders have promised to try to avoid another tax hike.

Lawmakers this year raised taxes by $4.6 billion to pay for education and highway improvements.

The budget board, working agency-by-agency, looked at several state departments during Thursday deliberations. Board members indicated they will recommend no increase in personnel, unless the agency is under court order. Lewis and White have urged agency heads to ask for the same money they are receiving this year.

Nevertheless, the utility commission asked for a $26.4 million, two-year budget. The LBB said the commission could do its regulating of electric, water and telephone companies on a $20.6 million appropriation.

The LBB-recommended budget for PUC includes no pay hike for the three utility commissioners, who currently earn $59,200 a year. The PUC request called for $68,600 a year in 1986 and $71,300 in 1987.

The budget panel also scrutinized the budget request from Public Utility Counsel Jim Boyle, the state lawyer who represents consumer and small business customers in PUC rate cases. Boyle submitted an ambitious budget request that asks for an increase of about 250 percent.

Boyle's agency — created by the 1983 Legislature — now operates on $700,000 a year.

Prosecutors don't take threats against U.S. president lightly

TYLER, Texas (AP) — It's a rare kind of crime because you don't have to DO anything. Just to say the words is against the law.

A person can get up to five years in prison and a $1,000 fine for a written or oral threat against the President of the United States.

The same penalty goes for threats against any protectee of the U.S. Secret Service, a group that includes the Vice President, the President's family members, former presidents, their children under age 16, and spouses, until they remarry.

Prosecutors interpret the law to mean words "not uttered in jest, idle talk or political argument," said Chris Harrison, an assistant U.S. attorney in Tyler. "A person doesn't have to have had a gun, or flown to Washington, D.C. Just the statement in itself, if a jury believes it is a true threat, can convict someone," he added.

A 24-year-old Tyler airport employee realized the seriousness of the law recently when Secret Service agents arrested him at his South Tyler apartment for threatening the life of Vice President George Bush, who was campaigning in Tyler.

The man had boasted to co-workers of his access to light anti-tank weapons and his intention to appear on the Pounds Field runway in camouflage clothing, Secret Service agent Tom Holman said in a competency hearing.

THE SECRET SERVICE investigated about 4,000 threats a year, and the number grows in election years because of heavy media coverage of government officials and candidates, said Dr. Bill Logan, a psychiatrist at the Menninger Foundation in Topeka, Kan.

Logan recently wrote a study on presidential threateners based on his clinical experience at the U.S. Medical Center for Federal Prisoners at Springfield, Mo., the main psychiatric hospital for federal prisoners in the United States. The Tyler man arrested was committed by a federal magistrate to Springfield for 90 days.

Logan's conclusions about threateners and the danger they pose to society has added new findings to an already published profile of the presidential assassin.

Logan agrees with earlier studies, which portray would-be assassins as loners and misfits, often with histories of mental illness.

ALMOST EVERY threatener Logan examined at Springfield was unemployed at the time the threat was made. Many had criminal records.

But Logan also discovered a new category of offender — basically harmless individuals who are victims of government cutbacks and make the threat when they are intoxicated.

"When people are having a rough time financially, they tend to threaten the President when they're drunk. They're dissatisfied about Social Security benefits, or welfare," Logan said. Usually, they do not remember having made the threat when they sober up, he added.

A smaller proportion of threatmakers want to get out of state prisons and into the federal prison system, where conditions are considered superior.

Another small percentage voices threats to find a warm, secure, temporary shelter.

Logan said he knows an individual who calls the Secret Service in various cities to threaten the President "whenever it's cold or rainy or he's hungry.

"Very few (threateners) seem to be calculated assassins like the one who shot the Pope, and only a small number who threaten do it for fame and notoriety, like John Hinckley," Logan said.

A quarter of the 150 threateners sent to Springfield every year for psychiatric evaluation are psychotic, Logan said. If psychiatrists decide they cannot understand the charges against them or assist in their own defense, they are sent back to their state of residence for commitment to a state mental health facility.

Paranoia can cause some psychotics to think the FBI or the CIA is following them, on the President's orders. Delusions of grandeur lure others into believing they must act out a divine mandate to kill.

BELOW ARE PROFILES of three men accused of making threats against the President in the Eastern District of Texas. They share characteristics typical of the types found to make such threats. The profiles were compiled from interviews with prosecutors, law enforcement agents and mental health professionals. Initials are used in place of names to protect the subjects' identities.

D.S., a 32-year-old white male, was born in Dallas. An electrician, he has been arrested about 27 times, and has felony convictions for burglary, possession of drugs, and auto theft. He has spent time at Terrell State Hospital, a state mental institution.

D.S. told authorities he is a very religious person and reads the Bible continuously. He said the pages of the Bible fall open at places God has messages for him.

Last November, he was arrested twice in Denton within 24 hours. He had drunk several ounces of cough syrup and a six-pack of beer. Later, when he was sober, he claimed he could not remember everything that happened that day.

Denton police officers, however, signed sworn statements to the Secret Service that D.S. said, on the way to jail, that nobody could stop him from shooting the president.

D.S. fits a syndrome associated with threateners and described by prison psychiatrists. People who make threats seem to resent authority. They display quick tempers and often make rash remarks for the shock value.

After commitment to Springfield, D.S. was ruled competent to stand trial. Charges were dismissed against him in June, however, because psychiatrists found he was intoxicated when he made the statements.

S.H., 50, WAS BORN in Alabama. His last address was a Nacogdoches halfway house. He was admitted to Springfield after he walked into the Nacogdoches Police Department last October and said he was going to Washington to kill the President.

Authorities say S.H. traveled with carnivals and ran a dart game. He was a drifter, who preferred Southern states because of the warm weather. He slept in graveyards and ate from garbage cans.

Diagnosed as a schizophrenic, he was taking anti-psychotic medication and drugs for epilepsy at the time of his arrest.

S.H. has received more than 20 shock treatments. He told authorities a man's voice named John tells him what to say and do. He said he talks to God several times a day and God talks back to him.

In February, he was judged competent to stand trial. A federal magistrate sent him back to Springfield for an additional 180 days so prison doctors can decide if his condition is permanent. If he is diagnosed as legally insane, he will be referred to state mental health authorities.

J.R. WAS BORN 29 years ago in New York State. An eighth-grade dropout, he got a five-year sentence in Houston at age 17 for theft.

A year later, he was arrested in Rochester, N.Y., for burglary and unauthorized use of a motor vehicle. In 1974, he was arrested for burglary and theft.

A few months later, he started to serve a five-year sentence in the Texas Department of Corrections for burglary. In 1978, he was picked up in Tennessee for aggravated assault. Other arrests followed for carrying a concealed handgun, attempted burglary, arson and escape.

On his upper left arm is a tattoo of the word "Mom" inside a heart. On the other bicep is a tattoo that reads "Dad."

Last year he was arrested in Sherman for auto theft and possession of marijuana.

Factory worker gets grip on posterity

WILLARD, Ohio (AP) — Boyd Studer wanted to get a grip on posterity, so he held onto a car for more than three days.

The 34-year-old factory worker defeated 14 other contestants in a radio station's car marathon by keeping both hands on a 1980 Chrysler and both feet on the ground for 76 hours and 13 minutes.

Studer won a new Dodge Colt in the contest. But he said he already owns two Corvettes and entered the contest just to make history.

The marathon began at 12:30 p.m. Saturday. In the end, it was just Studer and Judy Smith, a homemaker.

Deserved honor

Tonight in Lubbock one of Midland's truly outstanding citizens will be honored when Foy Proctor is presented the prestigious 1984 National Golden Spur Award. The honor is being bestowed on Proctor for his lifetime of contributions to the livestock industry.

Those who know Proctor personally can — and do — confirm that he is deserving. But anyone can quickly and easily see that his lifelong involvement in the livestock industry has made him deserving merely by reading a listing of his accomplishments.

After coming to Midland in 1907 from a ranch in Runnels County, Proctor soon began ranching operations. In fact, at one time Proctor leased most of the ranchland between Midland and Rankin. Today he operates the C Ranch north of the Tall City and the Foy Proctor Ranch in Hartley County.

Throughout his lifetime Proctor has been active in ranching pursuits and has excelled as a rancher and cattle buyer. For 15 years he also served as a rodeo judge. His ranch in Hartley County has earned him a number of awards for cattle raising and its soil and water conservation practices.

Although Proctor has immersed himself in ranch work, he has given much to the civic life of Midland through the years. He served as president of the school board, as a city councilman, president of Citizens Savings & Loan Association, a director of the First National Bank of Midland and of the Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raiser's Association.

He obviously has been one of the driving forces in keeping the ranching heritage alive and healthy in the Permian Basin.

In nominating Proctor for the Golden Spur Award sponsored by various ranching and livestock associations, fellow Midland rancher Clarence Scharbauer Jr. capsulized the pioneer rancher best when he cited Proctor for "his lengthy, illustrious and successful career in the ranching industry of the great Southwest."

Foy Proctor has meant much to ranching in the Southwest and he's meant much to the community of Midland over the years. The honor bestowed on him is richly deserved. We join in wishing him a hearty thanks for a job well done!

Another View:
A modest proposal

Walter Mondale's "deficit reduction" package depends upon the dubious behavorial assumption that Congress would cut domestic spending in real terms. His scheme to spend less on defense, agriculture and health while increasing everyone's taxes not only is contradictory — the Fairness and Compassion issues at the heart of his domestic program depend on increased spending — but also unprecedented. When was the last time Congress actually spent less money?

Still, Mr. Mondale deserves a chance to make good on his proposal. After all, anyone who can put Washington on a spending diet should be president. So here's a challenge, in the spirit of the New Realism. As a down payment on the presidency, Mr. Mondale should convince Tip O'Neill and Co. to cut spending right now, while Congress is finishing up pre-election appropriations. That would show voters that he can convince 535 politicians to say "no" to lobbyists, military specialists and others who swill from the federal trough.

That's no easy chore. His defense policy alone would require him to tell Southern states that he doesn't want to finance their military bases, Western high-tech and aeronautics workers that they will have to find other things to do, and Midwestern parts manufacturers that their services no longer are needed. While breaking all this bad news, he also will have to show how he plans to skim $25 billion off the defense budget without harming national security.

Cuts in health spending would raise similar problems. He not only would have to fight medical associations, which most likely would oppose his plans, but also health-care bureaucrats who depend on federal money. Many of those can be counted upon to claim that his "cuts" would hurt the poor, the homeless and the infirm.

In his biggest challenge, however, he would have to pare perhaps the most sacred cow of all in Washington, the agriculture subsidy. Not only will people like Bob Dole and Jesse Helms fight with all their might, so will American farmers. Imagine, if you will, President Mondale staring down a convoy of farm tractors, preaching the virtues of smaller deficits to angry farmers.

These vignettes lead to the ineluctable conclusion that Walter Mondale has taken on a task that not only is inconsistent with his past behavior as a senator or vice president, but also would pit him against many of the nation's most powerful lobbies. If that weren't bad enough, he probably would have to fight his own political party. After having taken campaign advice from Tip O'Neill, he would have to turn around and make the House speaker stop spending so much money.

If he can do all those things, he not only will have accomplished an act of evangelism that would humiliate his preacher father and make Ronald Reagan look like a second-rate stump speaker; he also will have performed a great service for the Republic. So why not try it now? There's nothing to lose, because he's getting creamed in the polls. Yet there's everything to gain. He can show Republicans how to cut back successfully on Big Government. He can overcome the Big Spender label that makes his deficit reduction package seem hokey. In short, he could tighten up the race and maybe even end up in the White House.

But time's wasting. If Mr. Mondale is serious about his "New Realism," he'd better show Americans how it works.

JACK ANDERSON
Nuclear power future shaky

WASHINGTON — The nuclear power industry — already staggering under enormous construction-cost increases caused by safety concerns — may soon be "kneecapped" by more cancellations of plants now under construction.

Jack Anderson

And utility customers unlucky enough to be buying electricity from the affected companies could wind up paying huge rate increases to rescue the corporations from their sour investment in nuclear facilities.

That's the gist of a closely held federal agency report seen by my associates Michael Binstein and John Dillon. It paints a grim picture of the nuclear power industry's future.

"The earnings outlook for the nuclear sector clearly is not encouraging," the report notes with understatement. "Absent the unlikely emergence of strong demand and very large rate-hike approvals, several nuclear utilities will continue to labor under high financing costs, and earnings will sag."

The report warns: "Several bankruptcies are probable if regulators prohibit utilities from raising rates enough to cover a large share of the canceled projects."

But if the endangered utilities are allowed to pass the costs on to their customers and complete the power plants, they'll have to raise their rates anywhere from 40 percent to 80 percent, the report predicts.

The report identified 15 unfinished nuclear power plants on the danger list. Since then, five of them have been canceled.

Here are the 10 others that could be aborted:

— New Hampshire: Seabrook 1 and 2 (Public Service Co. of New Hampshire).

— Georgia: Vogtle 2 (Georgia Power Co.).

— Illinois: Carroll County 1 and 2 (Commonwealth Edison).

— Texas: South Texas 2 (Houston Light and Power).

— Mississippi: Grand Gulf 2 (Mississippi Power and Light).

— Pennsylvania: Limerick 2 (Philadelphia Electric).

— Ohio: Perry (Cleveland Electric).

— Michigan: Midland (Consumer Power Co.).

The shaky condition of the nuclear power industry is no secret to investors. Sharp drops in nuclear utilities' earnings and the expectation of further adverse regulatory decisions have sent the price of these companies' stocks down an average of 20 percent in less than a year.

In desperation, nuclear power companies have turned to their accountants to minimize the true state of their sorry earnings position. A bookkeeping device, "allowance for funds used during construction," lets the company suppose a certain equity resulting from the cost of building a new plant — a supposition that would obviously be untenable if the plant were not completed.

"More than half of all reported income in 1983 may have been attributable to the non-cash credits that are permitted by this accounting procedure, and thus actual earnings have been greatly overstated," another internal government report warns, adding:

"In fact, cash earnings in 1983 were insufficient to cover dividend payments for several nuclear utilities. ... Such a development can be particularly damaging for 'income' stocks like electric utilities, because those who invest in such stocks usually place great importance on the security of dividend payments."

Investors' demonstrated wariness of nuclear utility stocks has led to a new worry: that the power companies will turn to the banks for their long-term financial needs. And if the bankers rashly make loans to utilities that later are forced into a costly nuclear plant cancellations, the banks could find themselves in trouble.

SHIPPING SHORTAGE: The Pentagon will be spending hundreds of billions of dollars in the next five years getting American troops ready for combat assignments anywhere in the world.

But they may have no way to get there.

The Congressional Budget Office estimates that it will take up to $4 billion in subsidies, grants and tax breaks to make sure the ailing U.S. maritime industry will have enough sea-lift capacity to handle wartime emergencies.

The Pentagon is counting on ships to carry not only most of the combat troops overseas, but 95 percent of their supplies, including 99 percent of the fuel for military vehicles and planes.

WHOPPER OF THE WEEK: A CIA report several years ago predicted that the Soviet Union's oil production would fall to such a point that by 1984 it would be a net importer of oil. The chilling conclusion of this forecast was that the Kremlin, desperate for oil, would move to take over the Persian Gulf oil fields.

But a just-concluded study by the Brookings Institution points out that Soviet petroleum exports have actually risen in recent years. The study offers its own prediction: The Soviet Union will remain an energy-exporter well into the next decade.

Politics aren't local for Mondale

CHICAGO — The magnitude of Walter F. Mondale's campaign task is measured by the quiet transformation of Illinois from his strongest Midwestern state into a potential runaway for Ronald Reagan.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

No longer is the state of the president's birthplace and boyhood home a cliffhanger. A variety of public and private polls show Mondale trailing by a minimum 10 percentage points in surveys taken nearly a month ago, with newer data pushing the gap into the 15- to 20-percentage-point range. Prominent Democrats here have given up, choosing to concentrate on Rep. Paul Simon's challenge against Sen. Charles H. Percy.

This is crushing news for the Mondale campaign in a smokestack industrial state that the Reagan recovery seemed to have left behind. What's more, politicians of both parties reckoned continued tension between Gov. James Thompson, the president's state campaign chairman, and old-line Reaganites spelled big trouble for Reagan in Illinois.

That's why the president made no less than three appearances in Illinois just before and after Labor Day. But in a state where Cub fever transcends a dull political race, Reagan's surge was not the result of his ho-hum appearances here. It may be attributable to the state's slowly improving economy; more likely it is part of the national frame of mind.

What's happening here contradicts Tip O'Neill's maxim that all politics is local. To have a chance, Mondale cannot hope to pick off promising states one by one — as in a fight for the nomination — but must transform the national climate.

No major state looked more promising for Mondale than Illinois. Depressed agriculture, farm implements and steel, combined with expanded black registration, made Reagan's prospects bleak.

The topper seemed to be the absence of grass roots Reaganite activity. The decision by the White House to grant Big Jim Thompson his desire to be state campaign chairman has put Reagan's 1976 and 1980 chairman, Don Totten, on the bench — along with other Reaganites. "This is a Thompson organization, not a Reagan organization," a national Reagan-Bush operative told us.

Moreover, Democratic strategists have calculated that Thompson's unpopular tax increase in 1983 immediately after his narrow re-election would rub off on Reagan. That, indeed, had been considered a reason for close polls during the summer.

Finally, it has been the bipartisan conventional wisdom here that Chicago's tawdry "Council Wars" between Mayor Harold Washington and City Council President Edward Vrdolyak would reap dividends for Mondale. According to this theory, Washington's black wards and Vrdolyak's white ethnic wards would battle to outdo each other for Fritz Mondale.

To be sure, an efficient but uninspired Reagan organization (whose state headquarters was still closed over weekends in mid-September) might be done in by Chicago's Democratic organizational muscle in a close election. But the national tides have made Illinois no closer than its Midwestern neighbors.

Unable to come to grips with this hard reality, local managers of both presidential candidates tend to play "inside baseball" — particularly the Democrats. "Illinois is a most peculiar state to do business in," one Mondale tactician told us, "but I think we're going to be OK."

He referred to the art of keeping both Mayor Washington and Alderman Vrdolyak in harness (a task complicated by the mayor's insistence that the black vote may not be energized unless Mondale embraces a multibillion-dollar national jobs program). Chuck Campion, an ingratiating young Boston pol who is one of Mondale's personal favorites, has been sent here to hold hands with City Hall's warring factions.

But the Chuck Campions and even the Jim Thompsons become irrelevant if, as now seems increasingly likely, American voters have made up their minds early this time. Mondale has somehow to seize an issue that will change them, and that has nothing to do with local politics.

Grades may seem lower

For those who may not have been informed, the grading system of the M.I.S.D. has changed dramatically for this school year in the secondary schools.

According to new state policy, no one who has a grade average below 70% may pass that course. Instead of merely awarding a "D" as usual with the understanding that if it is a final grade, it is not passing, our administration has instead elected to keep the "D" for grade averages of 70 to 73%. We no longer have a 10-point grade scale.

A student may have a 91% average and still receive only a "B" or an 82% average and receive a "C".

Parents, if your children seem to be bringing home lower report card grades this may not be their fault nor a reflection on their teachers. To me, unless this scale becomes a mandatory statewide policy, this seems unfair to our students.

Students transferring from other school systems may seemingly have a better average than ours and be in a better position to compete for awards. They do not all submit numerical averages. On the other hand, our students who transfer to other school systems will be at a disadvantage because their grade point average may not reflect their numerical grades.

If you feel as I do about this policy, please contact the school administration and/or the school board members to let them know your views before we have any report cards sent out.

Progress seen; more needed

We've seen a degree of progress in southeast Midland, thanks to Mrs. Bertha Starks and the committee working with her.

Seeing as how this area was "red lined" for over 10 years, revitalization was and is still needed.

We still need to see more in the way of improvements before the residents will wholeheartedly join in Midland's Centennial Celebration. Maybe we should celebrate the centennial in 1990 when certain goals have been reached.

Residents of this particular area should combine their resources and assist Mrs. Starks in any way they can for this is "our" community.

Let us not forget those persons who served as the catalyst behind igniting the idea, namely Mr. Burl Bonner who wanted to locate a mobile home in the 100 block of South Tyler, Planning & Zoning members, Mrs. Wolf who suggested a compromise after much opposition and Mr. Seltzer who asked for a reconsideration after the motion was made to oppose the re-zoning. To these persons we say thank you.

As was suggested to the late Fred Tyler of the Midland Chamber of Commerce perhaps some trees along east U.S. Highway 80 would also serve as a means of enhancement. One only needs to view the ones planted along Scharbauer Draw west of A Street to know what an improvement they would make along the highway. Some of the churches in southeast Midland might like to join in with the chamber in such an effort.

Use of symbol raises question

It appears to me that the Republican Party is a bit confused as to who is their candidate for sheriff of Midland County. The campaign placards of both Gary Painter and Dallas Smith feature the elephant symbol of the G.O.P.

If Gary Painter is the party's official candidate, then should Sheriff Smith be allowed to associate himself with the Republican Party? If John Anderson, a Republican, couldn't use the elephant symbol as an independent candidate in 1980, then why should Dallas Smith be any different?

Epilepsy a common condition that's still widely misunderstood

Solomon

Dear Dr. Solomon: We have just been told our grandson has epilepsy. How common is it? — Mrs. I.A., Little Rock, Ark.

Dear Mrs. A.: One out of every 100 Americans has it. That means more than two million persons in the United States have epilepsy. It is a rather common condition — but one that is still widely misunderstood. (Many famous and productive persons have had epilepsy: Alexander the Great, George Frederick Handel, Feodor Dostoyevski, Vincent Van Gogh, Alfred Nobel.)

The early Egyptians called it "falling sickness." They were only partly right. Some persons who have epilespy do fall, but others merely stare, or blink, or engage in activities that have purpose such as picking at their clothing or smacking their lips. When people don't understand, when they don't know what causes an event or a behvior, they tend to fear it and to find a way — any way — to protect themselves from it. This has been true of epilepsy.

In many places, for many years, those with epilepsy have not inherited it. Some people are reluctant to associate with those who have epilepsy for fear they will "catch" it; but epilepsy is not contagious. The result of society's building these walls to "protect" itself against epilepsy was twofold; it unfairly, and with psychologically damaging effects, confined the person with epilepsy, and it kept out of the mainstream of society many persons with important contributions to make. Many of these walls still exist — and they won't come down until all of us, including the person with epilepsy, understand what the condition is (and is not) and what modern medicine can do about it.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've heard a lot about the importance of exercise for men to help them prevent a heart attack, but I haven't heard anything about how this affects women. Wouldn't exercise also help decrease the risk of women getting heart attacks? — Lois, Philadelphia

Dear Lois: Exercise does not discriminate between men and women in decreasing the risk of cardiovascular disease. The results of a study conducted by investigators at the Vanderbilt University Medical Center in Nashville showed that physically fit women are better able to cope with stress and have less chance of developing cardiovascular disease. Furthermore, the greater the level of total fitness of a woman, the better able she is to handle frustrations and focus on herself.

These findings generally parallel the results of similar studies involving men.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've been having some problems around the time of my period, and my doctor says it is related to the premenstrual syndrome. I asked him about psychotherapy and he said that he doesn't think it would do any good, what else is there? Your opinion will be appreciated. — Mrs. G.L., Kansas City, Mo.

Dear Mrs. L.: Formal psychotherapy does not appear to be very effective in the treatment of patients with the premenstrual syndrome. Vitamin B6, which is generally safe to take, is often recommended for these patients, as are a number of over-the-counter medications.

For Tina, Denver, Colo.: Heartburn may be aggravated by lying down, bending, or lifting. Antacids often are sufficient to provide relief.

Neil Solomon, M.D., is a columnist for Los Angeles Times Syndicate. If you have a medical question, write Dr. Solomon at 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon will not give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.

Environmentalists shift acid rain emphasis to protection of forests

WASHINGTON (AP) — The long-running acid rain debate, which once focused solely on protecting lakes, streams and fish, now includes protection of the nation's forests from what one scientist calls the "ecological catastrophe of the century."

Environmentalists believe this new focus eventually will win them one of their long-sought goals, reduction of sulfur dioxide emissions by industries that use fossil fuels such as coal. Meanwhile, both sides involved in the acid rain debate have increased pressure on the nation's wood and paper companies to join them.

Since visible tree damage is confined to a few species at high altitudes, and there is so far no evidence that acid rain is the cause, the industry is resisting the blandishments of both sides. But evidence of slower tree growth, as shown by tree ring studies, is widespread in the East.

THE NEW EMPHASIS on forests results from startling figures last year from West Germany, where air pollution is far worse than it is in the United States.

German forests are closely observed and managed. In 1982, foresters estimated 5 percent of their stands contained some sick or dead trees. Last year the estimate was 34 percent, with the damage in many species, in many kinds of soils and all altitudes. And tree ring studies show a slowdown in growth beginning about 10 years ago.

"If we are going in the same line as Germany, we are facing the ecological catastrophe of the century," Robert D. Bruck, a plant pathologist at North Carolina State University, has said.

In Congress, this year's skirmish over acid rain is over. A 10-9 vote in a House subcommittee killed the leading measure designed to reduce emissions of sulfur dioxide by utilities in the East.

THAT MEASURE was drafted and pushed because of reports that 216 lakes in the Adirondack Mountains of New York state had become so acidic that fish could no longer live in them.

Scientists believe that acid rain forms when sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxides are emitted into the atmosphere during the burning of fossil fuels. The fumes mix with water vapor in the air and return to earth as acid rain, dew, snow, sleet or even dry particles.

Environmentalists now say the fear of forest destruction eventually will give them the ammunition to win.

Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., a principal sponsor of the defeated bill, led a delegation to Germany, the latest in an increasing stream from the United States, over the Labor Day break to inspect forest damage.

Kathy Cudlipp, general counsel of the Senate Environment Committee, who made the trip, said in her opinion, "Everything is going in the direction of more controls being necessary, and there's nothing going in the other direction."

BACKING FROM the wood and paper industries "is not essential," she said. "But if the forest products industry retains its 'nothing (in the way of damage) yet' reports, it makes it harder."

Eli Gonick, senior vice president of International Paper Co., said, "We can't say that we've seen" damage in the company's nearly 6 million acres of trees in Maine, the Southeast and Pacific Northwest.

Environmentalists, according to John Thorner, a spokesman for the American Paper Institute-National Forest Products Association, "tell us if you get the paper and forest industries asking for controls you'd have something. The utilities know this, and are always asking us to meetings."

This tugging and hauling on forest companies has been going on for years, "But I would say it's increased recently," Thorner said.

Libya's revolutionary society creating problems

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP) — Col. Moammar Khadafy's drive to create a perfect socialist, Islamic state in Libya has largely wiped out poverty and unemployment. But the cost and problems have been enormous, foreign residents and diplomats say.

Even though oil revenues have dropped, people have money but little to spend it on. Youths roam the streets in boredom. Farmers are forced to hire foreigners to harvest their crops because they are forbidden by law to do it themselves.

There are indications that even more radical changes are in store for the North African desert nation of 3.5 million people.

In the 15 years since he seized power from pro-Western King Idris II in a military coup, Khadafy has used massive oil revenues to make health care and education free, provide minimum wages for all and build thousands of schools, hospitals and homes.

AT THE SAME time he has tried to transform a traditional Arab society into a revolutionary vanguard without class or titles and without private enterprise.

The end result has been to create an outward appearance of prosperity but with an inner malaise and smoldering discontent, residents and diplomats say.

The residents and diplomats who spoke with a visiting news correspondent did so only on condition of anonymity because of conditions here.

Perhaps the most obviously affected by Khadafy's policies are the young.

Driving around this Mediterranean coast city, one sees hundreds of youngsters sitting listlessly on street corners.

THEY DO NOT lack for money but for something to do with it.

"It is a very sad thing," one resident said. "They have nothing to do except sit or cruise up and down the streets in their cars."

A seemingly large number of them have turned to drugs to escape the boredom, several sources said. They had no statistics and there is no obvious indication, such as a rising crime rate, to indicate the problem is out of hand.

Since Libyans are allowed to travel abroad, the young people and others know what Western lifestyles can be like.

"So now everyone is frustrated because they know how rich their country is and what they could have," said one foreign diplomat.

BUT THE OIL that made the society possible is not the blessing it once was.

Annual oil revenues, which provide 95 percent of the country's income, have dropped from more than $20 billion in 1980 to perhaps as low as $9 billion this year, diplomats say.

They also say Libya faces a $6 billion foreign debt, mainly to Soviet-bloc countries for arms. Military spending for Libyan troops in neighboring Chad and other foreign adventures accounts for around 40 percent of the country's budget, diplomats say.

As a result, consumer goods are scarce, food though plentiful is bland and frequent shortages of particular products pop up.

Prices have soared and massive construction projects and roads that began during the oil boom have been canceled or delayed.

EVEN GASOLINE is expensive by standards of an oil-rich nation, costing the equivalent of just under $1.20 a gallon.

When Khadafy declared Libya a 'Jamahiriyah" (State of the Masses) with his "Third Universal Theory" of government, he outlawed most private enterprises.

But the theory, which rejects communism and capitalism, has created the paradox that Libyans cannot hire other Libyans.

So as many as 1 million foreigners have been imported to perform most essential services. Most Libyans work in white collar or government jobs.

Khadafy's philosophy has also caused problems for farmers.

"THEY HAVE three options around harvest time," a diplomat said. "They can hire foreigners to pick their fruit, which is expensive. They can try to pick it all themselves, which is impossible. Or they can let it rot. Most of them prefer to let it rot."

War destroys cities on border of Iran-Iraq

By JUAN-CARLOS GUMUCIO

KHORRAMSHAHR, Iran (AP) — Nothing is left of Khorramshahr, hammered to the ground in four years of Iraqi air strikes and artillery bombardments. Thousands of buildings lie in rubble. Trees are uprooted. There are no signs of where the city's thoroughfares once were.

People who lived in this once-flourishing port on the strategic Shatt-Al-Arab waterway say the devastation began with Iraqi air and artillery attacks Sept. 22, 1980.

Shells and rockets still pound Khorramshahr, as well as Abadan, Dezful and other Iranian border towns.

Iraqi officials, a few miles west of the waterway, say the damage on their side is the same, if not worse.

Despite an Iranian-Iraqi accord to stop attacks on civilian targets, missiles and artillery shells rain down almost daily at both sides of the border.

There seems little left to destroy; most of Khorramshahr's 200,000 inhabitants have fled to Iran's northeast.

During the two-year Iraqi occupation of the city, demolition engineers blew up damaged buildings in a block-by-block operation that Iranians claim killed "thousands" of people.

Then came the bulldozers which leveled the city's northern part, sparing only the city's main mosque, now standing amid flattened debris and mine fields.

When Iranian troops recaptured Khorramshahr in March 1982, they found that 8,000 structures, including 120 mosques, 100 schools and at least four hospitals, had vanished.

Both banks of the Karun River are littered with destroyed vessels of all sizes and types.

Iranian authorities say nearly 1,000 Iranian ships and at least 50 foreign vessels were damaged or sunk by Iraqi air raids and artillery attacks.

In Khorramshahr there are no people in the streets to ask about the war. Rats and doves have taken over the old marketplace.

Hoveyzeh, a small agricultural town about 75 miles north of here and less than 25 miles from the border, is also leveled, with only two buildings still standing — a grocery store and a mosque that served the Iraqi invaders as observation posts.

"How can we forget or forgive this?" asked an Iranian Revolutionary Guard on his way to the mosque.

A banner, "We shall avenge the blood of our martyrs," is the only distinct object atop a mountain of rubble, where the remains of a motorcycle rusts.

In Abadan, 10 miles southeast of Khorramshar, rows of buildings have collapsed, burying streets and cars.

Its main avenue, flanked by decapitated palm trees, is plastered with posters hailing the local "martyrs," young Islamic resistance fighters killed during Iraq's prolonged siege.

Those who stayed have learned to live under fire. Some schools are open and the local market is bustling with people, most of them off-duty Iranian soldiers browsing through magazines or crowding the public bath.

"There's non-stop shelling here," said Said Doneshwar, the local commander of the Islamic Revolutionary Guards.

"But I'm not moving," said Shariar Beiraghi, a 34-year-old tire dealer who said he lost three cousins during shellings in August. "This is my town. Nothing will get me out of it, not the shells, not the Iraqis."

A 16-year-old girl, wearing a head-to-toe black chador and walking to the market for the week's shopping, also said she will not leave.

"We want to live here," said Parivash Wasiri. "And we will."

Bulldogs seek first 3-0 mark since 1979

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Gil Bartosh, Midland athletic director, says that new MHS head football coach Doug McCutchen can now bring his team to Memorial Stadium after his perfect 2-0 start in 1984.

"We always put the new coach in town on the road to see how he does before we bring him home," joked Bartosh within earshot of McCutchen. "I guess he's passed the test, so we'll let him play at home this week."

YOU CAN'T ask for a better start from McCutchen and his Bulldogs. Winning twice on the road to open the season is a tough trick, but the Purple Pack has done it with bus victories over Lubbock Monterey and Andrews.

And today at 8 p.m. the Bulldogs will host the Lubbock Estacado Matadors with the high hopes of putting another feather in the pre-district cap. The last time the Bulldogs opened the season with a perfect 3-0 mark was in 1979 under Dennie Hays and you have to go back to 1965 and Harold King for a 3-0 mark prior to that. John Reddell was 2-0-1 in 1974.

As noted, tonight's contest is also the 1984 home debut for MHS and will be the first opportunity for Midland fans to see the Bulldogs.

The series between Estacado and Midland High is all even at 1-1, with MHS winning 14-13 last year. Estacado, a 4A team, was 13-2 last season, losing to Bay City, 30-0, in the state championship contest. The Matadors have a winning tradition under Coach Louis Kelley.

TONIGHT'S GAME could be a good measuring stick for McCutchen since Estacado defeated Big Spring by a 12-7 margin last weekend. Midland High will face Big Spring next week in the District 4-5A opener at Memorial Stadium. Comparisons will surely be made.

"Estacado has a lot of good skill people and are a threat to break at anytime," said McCutchen. "I think they are doing more things offensively than in the past. They are using more motion and shorter pass routes and I think that makes them more effective.

"On defense, they just line up and say 'come at us' because they have great speed. Estacado will certainly be a good test for us."

Estacado is 1-1 on the season, losing to Plainview two weeks ago. Coach Kelley was pleased to win last week, but didn't see what he wanted.

"We didn't look as good as we had hoped against Big Spring, but we were fortunate enough to win the game," said Kelley. "We didn't improve much from the Plainview game."

Kelley, who was on hand to see Midland High's victory over Monterey two weeks ago, said of Midland High, "They have an excellent skill game and against Monterey they looked to be in mid-season form except for the fumbles and that happens to a lot of teams early in the year.

"Midland High is bigger than us and they have that great combination of pass and run. The tight end (Darrell Davis) is a good one. I was also impressed with the quarterback (Matt Marcum). They create a lot of problems for our inexperienced team."

Estacado is a young team by most standards. Only five seniors start on offense and five on defense. Four sophomores are in the starting lineup.

McCutchen has been pleased with his troops through the first two victories, but admits that there is improvement needed.

"We have to be pleased with where we are. Two victories is certianly what these kids needed to start the season," said McCutchen. "The defense is playing well, but need to improve technique-wise. We improved on offense each week, but we are still making mistakes. We need better execution.

"I thought the kids played better against Andrews after looking at the game films than I did during the game. I think it was a good improvement from the first week. One thing we noticed on the film was how well Andrews played. They are well coached and did some good things."

BOTH SQUADS appear to be in good physical shape, however, Midland High will be missing the services of Mike Stanton, who suffered a knee strain against Andrews. Stanton, who is also a starter at safety, gained 77 yards on three carries last week and played well on defense before leaving the game early.

Running back Keith Byrd became the first 1984 MHS carrier to gain over 100 yards rushing in a single game last week, hitting for 110 yards against Andrews. He has 187 yards in two games, ranking third among District 4-5A backs.

Darrell Davis' five receptions for 120 yards ranks second in the league while Marcum's 15 of 36 passes for 235 yards ranks third.

The Midland Lee volleyball team celebrates Thursday night in the Lee gym after a District 4-5A victory over Big Spring. The win evened Lee's loop mark at 2-2.

Rebel rally beats Steers

By BRUCE CASTLEBERRY
Sports Writer

Midland Lee volleyball coach Janice Baulch is certain of one thing where her team is concerned. "They're never out of it. They showed me you can't doubt what they can do," said Baulch.

Her eight varsity players weren't about to dispute their coach Thursday at Lee Gym. When the Lady Rebs had a chance to fold, they reached inside and found an extra drive from somewhere.

As a result, Lee fought back from a 9-1 deficit in the second game to take a taut 15-10, 16-14 win over the visiting Big Spring Steers.

The win is the second straight for Lee and evens their District 4-5A mark at 2-2. Big Spring now drops into a tie with the Rebs in the district standings.

"They can beat anybody as long as they just play ball," a collected Baulch said after the dramatic win. "They did the same thing against Permian. They just kept chiseling away at 'em. It's a sign of maturity, and it shows me what they're made of."

They are a lot better than anyone expected and the Rebs seem to be improving steadily. Baulch is carrying only eight players on the varsity, and only Megan Pace had seen a lot of playing time before the season opened. But with the small numbers, the Rebs are learning to depend on each other.

"They're not quitters," said Baulch. "They don't like to lose."

The way the second game was proceeding, it appeared a real possibility the Lady Rebels could lose. Pace had gotten the ball rolling with a pair of spikes to open Lee scoring, and the Rebs were off to a 7-1 start in the first game. Eventually Lee claimed the first game 15-10.

But in the second game, the Rebs couldn't shake an offensive malaise and found themselves in a deep 9-1 hole.

At 2-10, Lee again started a run that cut the gap to 6-10, and then 9-12. But Big Spring, a talented team now 11-10 on the year, pounded out a 14-9 advantage that seemed to only inspire Lee.

The Rebs got tough and tied the score at 14 behind the serving of sophomore Michelle Lance. Big Spring regained the service but couldn't score, then Lee's Tina Swinney dropped in a tapped shot from the corner for the breakthrough point at 15-14. Big Spring felt the pressure and missed a return badly to hand Lee the victory.

In junior varsity action, Lee was not so fortunate. After earning a hard-fought 15-13 win in the first game, the team showed some inexperience by bowing 4-15 and 11-15 to drop the match.

Meanwhile, San Angelo continued to roll toward the 4-5A volleyball title with a quick 15-7, 15-3 victory over the Midland High Bulldogs, who fell to 2-2. The Bobcats are now 24-0 on the year.

MHS will host Abilene Cooper Tuesday at the MHS gym at 6 p.m. while Lee travels to Abilene High in the next round of 4-5A action.

Britton squeezes in 'unlucky 13'

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

One year ago Susan Britton won her 12th Women's City Golf Tournament and said, "I've been lucky 12 times and now I've got to worry about unlucky 13."

No matter the number, it doesn't seem to effect Britton's play. Thursday, in a match-play format at Hogan Park Golf Course, Britton defeated Jo Dickson 5-4 to win her 13th City title.

Britton's defense of her many titles quickly took shape against Dickson as she jumped out to a five-hole lead at the turn and went up by as much as six before Dickson won the 13th hole and cut it back to five.

"She birdied 13 and I thought she was going to birdie 14 and was going to make a run. She was starting to play real well," said Britton. "But, we ended up in a tie on 14."

And, with her lead, that was all Britton needed on any of the last five holes. No worse than tie.

Through the 14 holes of play, Britton was shooting at a one-under-par pace. "I can't play any better than that" said Britton. "I was playing out of my mind. I thought Jo played pretty well today too. I just got lucky. I always feel lucky to win. I don't know how much longer it will hold out."

Six into two doesn't work

As District 4-5A heads into its final night of non-conference games, three of the league teams are ranked among the Class 5A's Top 10. And since three doesn't go into two, we have a big problem facing the beginning of loop play next weekend.

Odessa Permian (No. 2 in the state), San Angelo (No. 6) and Midland Lee (No. 9) have gotten the respect they deserve. But those below them may have some surprises left up the loop's sleeves.

Midland High, Abilene Cooper and Abilene High are all unbeaten. Odessa High, a one-time loser, scored over 50 points last week. The road won't get any easier.

THE PROBLEM is that there are only two playoff berths available for District 4-5A and there are those saying that six of the league teams would be better playoff representatives than Districts 1 through 3 have to offer. Now we really have a problem since six into two really doesn't work. When the smoke clears, the two 4-5A playoff powers may be headed for another quarterfinal shootout like the one staged between Permian and Lee last year.

As far as this last weekend of non-conference games, two of District 4-5A's teams should find out if they are contenders or pretenders.

Cooper faces Temple, a team that Lee trounced 32-7 last weekend. Two questions should be answered in that game. Is Temple as bad as that 32-7 score would indicate? Or has Cooper's early season successes been done with mirrors?

Abilene High is in another pivotal contest since the Eagles meet No. 1 ranked Longview. AHS is supposed to be improved in 1984. They will find out how much against Longview.

The rest of the district slate doesn't have the drama as those two matchups, but here are this week's picks.

Midland High 21, Lubbock Estacado 13: Estacado defeated Big Spring by a 12-7 margin last week. The Bulldogs play Big Spring next week in the district opener and will want to give the Steers something to think about. Another Bulldog incentive is the fact that MHS hasn't gone 3-0 in pre-district play since Harold King was here in 1965.

Midland Lee 75, El Paso Eastwood 0: Please, don't talk to me about upsets, wrong scores or Temple. Note to KCRS' Ed Clements: Did I get this one right? Surely, he will let us all know.

Permian 31, FW Eastern Hills 6: It's certianly a long trip only to find out that Mojo is your opponent.

Odessa High 29, Hobbs 14: There won't be any 58 points in this one for OHS, but the Bronchos should win again.

San Angelo 29, FW Dunbar 0: This ain't basketball folks. Dunbar may show up at the gym instead of Bobcat Stadium.

Temple 17, Cooper 7: I almost hope that Temple wins big. Surely, the Wildcats aren't all that bad.

Longview 28, Abilene High 10: The Eagles are improved, but not good enough to pull what would be the state's major upset of the year in Class 5A.

Lubbock Monterey 12, Big Spring 7: An instant replay of last week for the Steers. Monterey never hits a real stride until about five weeks into the season.

Lamesa's Tors a big surprise

By BRUCE CASTLEBERRY
Sports Writer

The year of Big Brother, 1984, hasn't been without its' surprises.

Fortunately, George Orwell's doomsayer prophecies haven't completely been developed. Orwell never realized that gladitorial combat would return to prominence in West Texas in the form of football. That's one surprise.

A bigger one is the Lamesa Golden Tornadoes.

The program in Lamesa has been down for a very long time. In the two years prior to the arrival of head coach Clyde Noonkester in 1983, the Tors were 1-19.

Now, they are 2-0, and tonight is Homecoming. It will be a whiz-bang affair, since most of the players on the team were in grade school when Lamesa was last 2-0.

Yet in tonight's opponent, Lamesa will be tested. Seminole is 1-1, and are coming off a 41-12 loss to Colorado City. The C-City Wolves are tough, so Seminole can't be taken lightly.

But in the year of the unexpected...the Chicago Cubs, Geraldine Ferraro, rain...the dreams survive.

So will Lamesa in this week's featured area game. Golden Tornadoes on the horizon, blowing an ill wind back to Seminole, 7-6.

Yet another big surprise is the winning percentage of teams selected in the Friday area forecast. With two back-to-back weeks of 6-2, the total prognistication count is 12-4, and one of those losses came due to Stanton's 14-14 tie last week with Coahoma.

McCamey (2-0) hosts Alpine, and thus far the Badgers are on the right track. The offense, which has several new faces in the backfield and everywhere else, was productive in a 28-6 win at Marfa last week. Alpine is out of its league, and the Badgers roll 26-12.

Elsewhere in District 8-AA:

Greenwood vs. Presidio: This game is a home game for the Rangers - in Fort Stockton. Scheduling conflicts forced the date with Presidio, and Fort Stockton was chosen as a neutral site to save wear and tear, since the two towns are well over 200 miles apart.

Greenwood is beginning to look like the boy who cried wolf. After their first two games as a Class 2A school, the Rangers are unbeaten and unscored upon. Well, all good things must come to an end...but not completely. Rangers mean danger, 22-6.

MHS, Lee grid teams split four contests

From Staff Reports

There was mixed blessings for Midland football fans Thursday on the sophomore and junior varsity levels for Midland High and Midland Lee.

The MHS sophomores won a 27-6 victory over Pecos in Midland while the Lee JVs took a 27-7 win over Fort Stockton. The MHS JV lost a 14-12 decision to Big Spring while Lee's sophomores were blasted by Permian 48-6.

Anthony Adkison scored on runs of 85 and 52 yards to lead the MHS sophs while Tommy Yorkman scored on a 40-yard run and Tyrone Oliver on a 38-yard scamper to blow open a 12-6 MHS lead at the half. Richard Triplett kicked one extra point while Tim Christenson tackled a Pecos runner in the end zone for a safety as MHS' sophs improved their record to 2-1 on the year.

Rodney Johnson went wild for the 2-0 Lee JV, scoring on runs of six, 40 and 25 yards. Chris Alexander scored on a one-yard plunge and Brian Wurster kicked an extra point. Fort Stockton scored first in the game, but Lee answered with 27 points in the first half. Neither team scored in the second half.

The MHS JV team fell to 0-2 when Big Spring scored on a 60-yard fake punt with five minutes left in the game to erase a 12-7 MHS lead. The Bullpups had taken the lead with a 30-yard TD pass from Tim Madonna to Brett Carver in the third period and a 12-yard fourth quarter scamper by Madonna. Big Spring held an 8-0 lead at the half.

Permian scored 34 first half points against the 0-3 Lee sophomores in Odessa to gallop to victory. Lee's only touchdown came on a 40-yard pass from Billy Wagner to Danny Allen just before the half.

Both the Midland High sophomores and JV travel to Big Spring next Thursday in 5 and 7 p.m. games, giving the MHS JV a quick chance at revenge against the Steers.

The Lee junior varsity will host San Angelo in a 7 p.m. game at Memorial Stadium while the Lee sophs will host San Angelo at 5 p.m. at the Lee Field.

Little Richard addresses caucus

Little Richard

WASHINGTON (AP) — "Everybody got paid but me," rock 'n' roll pioneer Little Richard says, and now he has taken his complaints about the exploitation of black performers to the Congressional Black Caucus.

The 49-year-old singer-turned-evangelist said Thursday that many black performers weren't paid enough for their work back when his career was booming in the 1950s with hits like "Long Tall Sally" and "Tutti-Frutti."

Richard said he was virtually cut out of the royalties he should have received as the songwriter.

"The lawyers I used were their lawyers. It was a crooked set-up.... I'm pleading fraud and illiteracy. I was a country boy from Macon, Ga.," he said.

Also appearing Thursday was George Ware, executive director of the Philadelphia-based Black Music Association, who said there are few black superstars like Michael Jackson because the music of blacks is arbitrarily kept off many radio stations.

Hepburn

NEW YORK (AP) — Long before becoming an international film star, Audrey Hepburn reportedly gave one of her most daring performances — playing a carefree girl picking flowers while smuggling a message to an English paratrooper in occupied Belgium.

The episode is described in a new biography, "Audrey: The Life of Audrey Hepburn," to be published Oct. 12.

According to author Charles Higham, Miss Hepburn as a 13-year-old worked against the Nazi occupiers for the underground in her native Belgium and once acted as a courier to the paratrooper.

She "skipped through the woods, hearing German voices not far off.... She reached the rock where she had been told the soldier was hiding. She said just enough to establish in English that she was a friend, then slipped the message through the rocks and skipped off, picking more flowers.

"As she was walking down a forest path, a German soldier loomed up ahead of her," Higham continues. "She smiled sweetly at him and gave him her wildflowers. Delighted at this sign of friendliness, he touched his cap and patted her shoulder, and she strolled off...."

Miss Hepburn, 55, whose movies include "Love in the Afternoon" and "Breakfast at Tiffany's," did not authorize the biography, said Macmillan Publishing Co.

Bunker

BRATTLEBORO, Vt. (AP) — Ellsworth Bunker, who was the U.S. ambassador to South Vietnam in the latter stages of the Vietnam War, was in critical condition today at a hospital where he was admitted with shingles, his daughter-in-law and a hospital spokeswoman said.

The 90-year-old former diplomat, whose career spanned 35 years and seven presidents, was admitted to Brattleboro Memorial Hospital Sept. 13, said hospital spokesman Paul Stillman.

He was in critical but stable condition today, said night supervisor Martha Roberts.

Bunker "went in with shingles and there were some complications," said Bunker's daughter-in-law, Margery Bunker. "When you get ill and you are his age, you run into problems."

SEATTLE (AP) — Singer-songwriter Steve Goodman, best known for his song "City of New Orleans," died Thursday of liver and kidney failure after receiving extensive treatment for leukemia, a hospital spokeswoman said. He was 36.

Goodman, whose song with the refrain "Good morning America, how are ya?" was recorded by folksinger Arlo Guthrie and others, was admitted to the University of Washington Medical Center Aug. 21 with "a very rapidly progessing, acute leukemia," said spokeswoman Kay Rodriguez.

Victory tour now in capital

WASHINGTON (AP) — With their blockbuster "Victory" tour "in the groove now," the Jacksons are set for the first of two sold out weekend concerts tonight before 45,000 people in the nation's capital.

Michael Jackson and his brothers flew in separately this week for the concerts, which end the first three months of the music tour.

The one-hour, 45-minute extravaganza has been seen by an estimated 1.2 million people so far, with promoters still planning to carry the tour through November.

At $28 to $30 per ticket, the "Victory" tour has grossed about $30 million on ticket sales alone. The Jacksons organization also controls sales of memorabilia at concert sites, but the figures on those sales were not available.

Since it opened in Kansas City in July with the song "Wanna Be Startin' Somethin,'" the Jacksons have danced and sung across their 168-foot-wide, 95-foot-tall stage in 11 cities under a spectacular display of fireworks and lasers.

"It's in the groove now," said Peyton Wilson, production manager for the tour.

About 45,000 people will fill Robert F. Kennedy Memorial Stadium for the two D.C. concerts. About 12,000 seats were not sold because of the massive stage that almost completely blocks out one end of the stadium, stretching out to the 30-yard line of the football field.

President Reagan, at a White House ceremony with Michael Jackson, was among those who lobbied the Jacksons to bring their show to Washington. Only after negotiations that D.C. Mayor Marion Barry called "tough" were the papers signed a month ago.

Barry said the city stands to make $100,000 from the concerts.

Tickets, with their $30 price tag, were sold out after three days, with many people buying several and expecting to make a killing in the scalpers' market. That hasn't happened, however, and tickets were being sold and traded on college and high school campuses for their face value a day before the show.

State won't ask Sinatra to return

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — State legislators, scuttling a proposed apology to Frank Sinatra for the "unwarranted" criticism from a gaming commissioner that prompted the singer to boycott New Jersey, say they won't ask the Hoboken native to "come home."

"I will not ask Frank Sinatra to come back to New Jersey. Nobody asked him to leave New Jersey," Assemblywoman Jacqueline Walker said during the raucous Assembly debate.

Assemblyman Michael F. Adubato had urged his colleagues to call on Sinatra, "our native son, to return to New Jersey, the home of your parents, Dolly and Marty Sinatra."

"Frank, come back to your roots. Come home to New Jersey. I love you," he said before abandoning his effort on Thursday.

Adubato had offered the resolution in response to remarks by Casino Control Commissioner Joel Jacobson, who called Sinatra "an obnoxious bully" during an Aug. 1 hearing on an incident at the Golden Nugget Casino Hotel in Atlantic City.

The commission fined the casino $25,000 and suspended four employees without pay after the Dec. 1 incident in which a blackjack dealer gave cards to Sinatra and singer Dean Martin from her hand rather than a "shoe," a plastic card dispenser required by state law. Sinatra and Martin said they were unaware dealing from the hand was a violation.

Sinatra "decided he will not perform in a state where appointed officials feel the compulsion to use him as a punching bag," his attorney said.

Adubato's resolution never made it to the Assembly floor after Democrats prevailed on him to drop it during a private caucus.

But Adubato brought the subject up during discussion of a resolution praising Christopher Columbus, commemorating Columbus Day and honoring people of Italian descent — including Frank Sinatra.

Several Assembly members from the southern part of the state walked out of the chamber, and others rose to call the lawmaker out of order. Assemblywoman Barbara Faith Kalik cursed at him.

There is a solution to almost every problem, especially if there is someone around to give you a helping hand. Look at the problem faced by Steve White of Broomall, Pa., on this hand from the recent Summer North American Championships.

White and his partner were playing a forcing club system, so North's jump simply showed a positive response with a diamond suit. That it is seldom wise to play three no trump with a singleton in partner's suit was made evident by the opening lead.

West led his singleton heart. East overtook and continued the suit to knock out one of dummy's entries before it could be put to good use. However, there was no way that declarer could come to nine tricks without the diamond suit. His only hope was to find West with length in both spades and diamonds.

Declarer started to prepare for a strip and throw-in. He cashed the ace of diamonds and then carefully led the nine of spades to the king. Next came the ace-queen of spades and the ace-king of clubs. The groundwork was now complete.

To West's great discomfort, he was thrown on lead when declarer exited with the two of spades. West could take his two spades and the king of diamonds to go with the king of hearts his side had already banked, but then he had to put declarer in dummy with a diamond to score the fulfilling tricks.

North was perhaps a little conservative to settle for three no trump. Note that it takes a 5-0 trump split to defeat six diamonds — as a matter of fact, looking at all of the cards even that contract can't be defeated. Try it.

Rubber Bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? Charles Goren's "Four-Deal Bidge" will teach you the strategies and tactics of this fast-paced action game that provides the cure for unending rubbers. Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Saturday, September 22, 1984

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Academy Award winner Meryl Streep, teen idol Scott Baio, Debby Boone, actor John Houseman, popular Los Angeles Dodgers manager Tommy Lasorda, former Yankee manager Bob Lemon, football's Harold Carmichael and U.N. correspondent Richard C. Hottelet share your birthday. Greater personal effort brings big career strides. A romance with a co-worker could spell trouble. Think carefully about what you are risking. Form a partnership with someone who thinks positive. An imaginative approach moves you closer to your goals. Discuss your needs openly with loved ones. You find financial backing at a critical moment. Honest and outspoken, you risk offending those who can help you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Friends, relatives and business associates will get along well today. Although busy, you find time to spend with young children. Get in touch with an older person who shares your interests.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): New acquaintances are impressed with your wit and charm. One special person is bowled over by your views on current events, religion or education. Greater rewards and recognition are likely.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your experience and good judgment will be in great demand today. Put other people's needs ahead of your own comfort. A missing item reappears. Be more relaxed about romance.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Someone with great personal magnetism enters your life. Call home regularly when traveling. Any romance has its drawbacks. Do not expect to receive more than you are willing to give.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Plan entertainment that will please your loved ones. A work project holds special appeal. Go ahead and make a few phone calls. A new romance needs careful nurturing. Speak from the heart.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A family reunion proves very interesting. Offer suggestions if a younger person seeks your help. A real estate investment proves highly lucrative. A personal relationship needs more attention.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your mind runs on several different tracks now, allowing you to cover more territory. A difference of opinion on family finances or household management could lead to a tiff. A compromise helps.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Do not revive an old argument. Despite what others tell you, an eccentric individual is very loyal. Do not harbor any illusions about your spending habits. Practice more economies.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Loved one could be edgy for no apparent reason. An understanding attitude reduces tension. Partner or mate may need more breathing room. A change in lifestyle improves your relationship.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A friend helps you through a family emergency. Your faith in luck could be misplaced--stick to facts and figures where real estate deals are concerned. Joint ventures enjoy favorable influences.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A day trip holds great appeal for the whole family. Seeing old friends provides a fun change of pace. You make an important decision regarding marriage. Let loved ones know your plans.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be more innovative where both romance and money management are concerned. A child does you proud. Write a student away at school for the first time. Retired people have wonderful luck now.

Frog Fever contagious

Happy days here again for TCU

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — After 20 years of singing the blues, Texas Christian football fans are humming a new tune. Would you believe "Happy Days Are Here Again!"

Whether it's Purple Power or Frog Fever or Wacker's Wackos, no one knows. But it's contagious.

"Earlier this week we had the biggest turnout for a Frog Club luncheon in recent history," said Charlie Dierker, the Horned Frogs' assistant information director.

"Maybe 500. Normally, we have less than 200."

More importantly, TCU's 62-18 thrashing of Utah State last week triggered a record run on tickets to Saturday night's home opener against Kansas State.

"A week ago today (Thursday), we'd sold 18,000 tickets. We're now revising the crowd estimate up to 30,000," said Dierker.

"Twelve thousand tickets in one week is pretty hellacious. We've never done anything like that before."

Until last week, the Frogs hadn't done a lot of things before, not to mention compiling 677 yards in total offense, 494 yards rushing and 62 offensive points in a surprise performance that set or tied eight school records.

"Ho, boy, did we ever need that!" chortled Jim Wacker, the dynamic TCU coach who suffered through a 1-8-2 rookie season in 1983 and says he never intends to do that again.

"TCU has been down so long we needed something good to happen. We have been losing for too stinkin' long."

Wacker conceded that one game does not a season make, but "...I have been saying all along that I had a good feeling about this team."

Freshman running back Tony Jeffery of Gladewater, Tex., exploded for 182 yards rushing and veteran Kenneth Davis added 145 more as the Frogs shrugged off the loss of quarterback Anthony Sciaraffa to post only their fourth road victory in six years.

Sciaraffa went down with a severe ankle injury in the first quarter and apparently will be out for four weeks.

"How about Anthony Gulley?" asked Wacker, referring to his No. 2 quarterback. "He came off the bench and drove us to seven touchdowns. He had the game of his life."

The Frogs struck five times for long distance touchdowns and had a 99-yard kickoff return by Jeffery nullified by a penalty, moving Wacker to say:

"I have never been associated with so many big plays in any one football game. That was encouraging...and exciting."

Defensive back Sean Thomas said the same thing differently.

"I know we are looking forward to proving to everyone that we are not just a team of the future but we are a team of NOW," he said.

"The test this week is: Were we that good or was Utah State just not playing up to par?"

Gilbert aces hole

Mike Gilbert scored a hole-in-one at Green Tree Country Club, using a four-iron to hole out on the 191-yard, par three, No. 8 hole Wednesday.

Format confuses Vegas issue

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — After two rounds of the richest event on the PGA Tour, the $1,122,500 Panasonic Las Vegas Invitational, Lonnie Hinkle has the lead.

He has a 36-hole total of 130, the best on the Tour this season. He's 11 shots under par.

That much is certain.

After that, the relative standing of his closest pursuers is open to interpretation.

"I'll take the number," said big Andy Bean.

On that basis, rookie Corey Pavin is second.

"I think we're playing relative to par," said Pavin.

On that basis, Bean and South African Denis Watson are tied for second.

The discrepancies arise from the format for this five-day, 90-hole event that offers $162,000 to the winner.

"The format is a little tricky," Hinkle said Thursday after he had managed a wind-blown 68 at the Tropicana Country Club.

It is, indeed.

The 176 pros play one round on each of four desert courses — the Tropicana, Showboat, Desert Inn and Las Vegas Country Clubs — each day with a different four-man amateur team. At the end of 72 holes, the field will be cut for the pros-only final round Sunday at the Las Vegas Club.

The Showboat and Desert Inn courses carry a par of 72, Las Vegas 71 and Tropicana 70.

And that brings up the confusion.

On the basis of numbers only, Pavin is second at 133, followed by Bean, Gary McCord, Jim Blair and Mike Donald at 134, with Watson, Fred Couples and a half-dozen others at 135.

But, since they've played different courses, with different pars, their standing relative to par has Watson and Bean 9 under; Pavin, McCord and Couples at 8 under.

AREA PICKS

Stanton is also unbeaten, but suffered a 14-14 tie with Coahoma to drop to 1-0-1. This week the Crane Golden Cranes invade Stanton. A year ago it was 21-0 Crane, and the way things have been it could be a similar score.

The Cranes have been unlucky and not very good so far. In two games they have yet to score a point. Since the Cranes fell to District 8-AA heavy Reagan County 6-0 last week, this game will reveal if Stanton truly has the right stuff.

Maybe, but not yet. Crane breaks through, 14-11.

Reagan County faces its' second District 7-AAA power this weekend. Currently the Owls lead the district, which is especially interesting since they play in District 8-AA.

After beating Crane last week, new Owl boss Ronnie Reeger still has headaches. After the game against Ozona in Big Lake tonight, they still play at Coahoma and Sonora before hitting their own district. After tonight, the Owls will still lead both districts, because they'll tame the Lions 13-7.

In other games, Levelland visits Andrews and the Mustangs. Andrews lost a tough one to Midland High by a 21-7 count last week after winning their opener. The Mustangs showed signs of putting it together in a solid effort against MHS, and Levelland hasn't played up to expectations. Although the situation is ripe for an upset, Andrews will hold on for this one, 14-12.

Rankin hasn't crossed the goal line yet this year, and the Red Devils have a pretty tough draw this week against Water Valley. Although Water Valley took some lumps in a 29-0 loss at Greenwood last week, they'll handle Rankin, 27-8.

BRITTON

In last year's medal play for the City title, Dickson was one of the top competitors in the race to dethrone Britton. She finished the tournament in third place. It might have been the last year for medal play for the women's tournament. Britton doesn't object.

"I really do like them (medal play tournaments)," said Britton. "I think medal play is a better test of golf because you have to play good all three days. You can play a bad or a bad round and still make it up but it can get rough. In match play, if you lose a hole, it's over with and you go on to the next one."

Britton pointed out that the best score isn't always the winner in match play. For example, "Marion Spears and I tied for medal score and I still beat her one-up." said Britton. "I had a double bogie on one hole."

That doulbe bogie could have been 10 times worse and as long as nothing else changed, Britton would have still been a one-up winner.

"I thought the tournament was run so smoothly," said Britton. "There were no hitches. Everybody I played with was so nice it really made the game pleasant.

"I'm going to keep on practicing si I can get better for next year...hopefully," concluded Britton.

In other Women's City Tournament flights, Jane Thomas was the championship flight consolation winner, defeating Rachael Lyman.

In first flight, Flossie Larsh claimed the title while Nina Colter won consolation. Phyliss Maxwell was the second flight winner and Dorothy Melzer won consolation.

Joyce Cramer won third flight while Toni McMillan claimed consolation honors and in fourth flight, Maureen Phillis was the winner with Evelyn Milby taking consolation.

On Thursday, Thomas was also the golfer to win closest to the hole honors on holes nine and 13.

Democratic team plays 'hardball', coordinator says

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

With a promise that Walter Mondale and/or Geraldine Ferraro will be in the Permian Basin once or twice before the November general election, a campaign coordinator ended his talk before local Democrats with the announcement that Eleanor Mondale will be in Midland Tuesday.

Democrats opened their headquarters at 306 E. Illinois Ave. Thursday evening and heard pleas from local candidates for more campaign support. And Michael Higgins, local coordinator for the Mondale/Ferraro campaign, predicted the Democrats would take more of the vote than local Republicans are expecting.

Guest speaker was Lynn Tate of Austin, a special assistant to Gov. Mark White and a coordinator with the Mondale/Ferraro campaign. Although the Democrats may appear to be running in second place in Texas, Tate pointed out that the campaign didn't get started until about two weeks ago. He is in charge of an area stretching from Lubbock to El Paso.

"At all these areas we've had more enthusiasm than I've seen before this early in the campaign," Tate said. And while all the polls have shown the Democrats trailing Reagan/Bush, Tate recalled two years ago when the polls said Gov. Bill Clements would get re-elected. He lost. And when Hubert Humphrey fought Richard Nixon for the presidency, the Democrat carried Texas and without the strong network the Democrats now have, he said.

"We're playing hardball," Tate added.

The coordinator said El Paso has opened four Democratic headquarters and the party has 26 steering committee chairmen. "People feel they have to pull together in this party."

The state party has obtained a list of 700,000 people receiving unemployment benefits through the Texas Unemployment Commission, and these persons will be receiving mailers on the presidential race, according to Tate. "Talk to them about Reaganomics," he said.

"Banks are failing. Farmers are failing. Business folks are failing. The Republicans won't tell you that," Tate said. "The rich are getting richer. Middle America is moving downward on that ladder."

Tate announced that the 20-year-old Mondale daughter would be in Midland on Tuesday. Higgins said he didn't have a time or place yet.

Mondale for America parties will be held throughout the country Oct. 7 to raise money that will be kept in the various communities to finance a get-out-the-vote program.

Opera isn't always a formal, stuffy occasion performed in a dark theater. Dr. Michael Jordan from Midland College gives a sample performance during an outside event Thursday at Museum of the Southwest, which also featured beer and tamales.

Public television coming to Permian Basin in '85

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Public television is coming to the Permian Basin.

After four years of asking the federal government for funding, Odessa College was awarded $400,000 in late June to upgrade their campus station to where it can transmit Public Broadcasting Service programming.

The next step, advertising for bids on the studio equipment, antenna, studio link and transmitter needed, is about two weeks off, said David Paterno, OC's director of Research and Planning.

Because all purchases must go through federal agencies, Paterno estimated it would take up to nine months before the station was in place and viewers will be able to tune to Channel 36 on their UHF dial for programs now only available on KERA-TV, Dallas' PBS affiliate.

Initial applications were to supply PBS programming through cable, but the National Telecommmunications Information Agency approved an application that brings viewers the cable over the air, said Paterno.

Until the station begins transmission, possibly by April 1985, alternative programming aficionados have only the weakened KERA signal, skipped across more than 300 miles of the state to Midland/Odessa on 24 microwave towers.

Weather conditions anywhere along the way can hamper the signal, explaining why the KERA offerings are not always clear by the time they reach the Petroplex, said Paterno.

Though optimistic the station will be in place early next year, Paterno noted another federal agency, the Federal Communications Commission, would cast the deciding vote on the station once the equipment is in place for testing.

Currently, KERA is available only through the cable. Anyone with an UHF antenna should be able to tune in the Odessa affiliate.

What is now the college's station used in training audio/TV majors and broadcast on Channel 10 in Odessa will become the PBS affiliate for the area. Paterno said renovation of space at the college is under way to accommodate the new station.

While the signal will not be available initially throughout the area, plans are to expand south to Fort Stockton, west to Monahans and Pecos and east to Big Spring within 10 years.

Local programming will supplement the PBS programs, said Paterno. OC students will continue to use the station as their training ground.

"This area has grown to the point that we do need our own affiliate," said Paterno.

Volunteers enter world of computers

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

This year Midland Volunteers in Public Schools are signing up and being counted.

And their presence in the classroom is being counted on by school faculty and administrators with the initiation of a computer education program at Midland's elementary schools.

According to VIP District Coordinator Sandy Moore, an estimated 125 VIPs participated in a volunteer training and endorsement workshop from 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. Thursday at Washington Elementary School.

The workshops dealt primarily with teaching volunteers how to operate computers so they may serve as classroom assistants in a new computer education program designed for fourth-, fifth-, and sixth-grade students. It was sponsored by Midland Independent School District, Texas American Bank of Midland and Midland Volunteers in Public Schools.

Mrs. Moore said the workshop provided an overview of computer education at MISD.

Volunteer involvement in the computer education program is imperative to enriching the quality of education in public schools, Mrs. Moore said. It was initiated in part because of legislation passed by the State Legislature and "will allow the teacher more time to use professional skills and training in the classroom."

"There was good, active participation and everybody seemed to enjoy learning how to work various programs. Basically, it familiarized volunteers with what computers will do in the classroom. Hopefully, we can conduct a more concentrated workshop once the program gets underway," she added.

Jerry Mennenga/Reporter-Telegram

Nel Furgeson, former VIP chairman of storytelling, instructs future VIPs. New holiday packages are available for interested persons to check out and present to various grade levels.

Michael Worley, principal of Washington Elementary, said volunteer involvement in computer education, "may be the biggest step taken in a long time. We're going to depend on these volunteers to come in and keep these kids on track. And if we have parents who know something about computers, we'll make tremendous progress."

Courses in stimulating learning, reading and math skills, learning games, library skills, Partners in Reading, storytelling and book reviews also were offered.

A recruiting effort for VIPs is underway for the districtwide program. Volunteer forms were sent to elementary school parents last week and forms will be sent to all secondary school parents beginning Monday, Mrs. Moore said.

But the program is not limited to parents or elementary schools.

Clubs and civic organizations also are encouraged to volunteer under the Adopt-a-School program. In past years numerous civic and service organizations have adopted classrooms or entire schools, performing various volunteer activities, she added.

Mrs. Moore said she expects about 3,000 volunteer participants this year. Most VIPs are mothers of local public school children, though some are fathers, grandparents, college students and other citizens.

Deposits to increase at Hillcrest Manor

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

The security deposit for new tenants moving into Hillcrest Manor will be going up.

The decision to raise the security deposit was made Thursday afternoon by Midland Housing Authority board during a regular meeting at City Hall. The board also heard a report on a training visit by officials of the Department of Housing and Urban Development and an update on when more federal funds should be allotted.

Hillcrest Manor is the housing project built for low-income elderly and/or handicapped persons and is located at 700 W. Scharbauer Drive. The rents are subsidized by HUD.

Donald Craig, secretary for the board and executive director for Hillcrest Manor, said HUD officials informed him the security deposit could be raised from its $25 to $100. The lower amount, he said, "doesn't cover the work required for cleaning. People are willing to give up the $25 to avoid cleaning the apartment. It costs up to $300 for a cleanup."

Craig said he had checked with some local apartment complexes and the security deposit ranged from $200 and up.

Chairman Gene Abbott said he didn't think $100 was out of line and Craig was given authority to raise the deposit to "an appropriate" amount to cover the cost of cleaning when a tenant moves.

Suggestions from the HUD training visit included items such as instituting more pest control, using a certification form on each tenant and hiring an additional maintenance person on a part-time basis, Craig said.

Susan Howell, Community Development coordinator, said she was still waiting to hear from HUD on money for 1984-85 for the housing rehabilitation program. She also pointed out that the Human Relations Council director has left, but a replacement will begin Oct. 1.

In previous years, the HRC took applications from persons wanting their homes repaired under the housing rehabilitation program.

Plans for Langtry Village, a second housing project for low-income elderly persons, are being worked out with HUD, according to Ms. Howell. "The problem the architect is having is making the building aesthetically pleasing, safe and sound for the price HUD wants. Changes have been made in the plans by HUD. We're in the process now of trying to get more construction money."

Big Spring gets award to improve water system

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Big Spring has been granted $380,400 to make water system improvements under the Texas Community Development Program, according to Gov. Mark White.

The award is one of 118 grants totaling more than $29.1 million to local governments for public facilities which principally benefit those of low and moderate income, according to the governor's office.

Planned improvements include installation of water distribution lines, connection of new lines and repair of pavement after installation.

Other area awards include $293,000 to Grandfalls in Ward County to drill a new well, construct a transmission line and storage tank, and install a new pump; $247,417 to Balmorhea in Reeves County to install piping in the Hueister water field, encase highway crossings, and construct a ground storage tank; $415,000 to Colorado City in Mitchell County to provide sewer service to low- and moderate-income citizens; $262,446 to Alpine in Brewster County to construct more than 17 blocks of unpaved street and rehabilitate a neighborhood center; $131,128 to Van Horn in Culberson County to pave streets, install water lines and put in five fire hydrants in the northeast part of the city; $238,400 to Marfa in Presidio County to replace inadequate water lines, install fire hydrants and repair streets; and $125,626 to Presidio in Presidio County to provide sewer hookups for 470 households and hookup 30 households to the city's water main.

The state assumed responsibility for administration of this program, formerly the Small Cities Community Development Block Grant Program, in June 1983.

White said state administration of the program has increased local participation.

"This year the state received 461 applications compared to 300 during the last year of administration by the Department of Housing and Urban Development in 1982," he noted. "This increase in participation shows both the need for these activities and the outreach efforts by the state to make the program accessible to more communities."

Congressman believes he's in 'dirty campaign'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democratic challenger Don Buford says the large profit incumbent Congressman Jack Fields made on a real estate investment in a company owned by one of Fields' contributors is a "slap in the face" of the working-class congressional district.

"I have to come to the conclusion that this is a very dirty campaign that I'm being subjected to," said Fields, R-Humble. He said Houston real estate developer Bob Perry offered him the deal because the two are old friends.

According to financial disclosure reports Fields filed with the Clerk of the House, he has made at least $150,000 on 150 shares of Perry Contractors Inc., purchased in late 1980 for no more than $1,000.

"It's a slap in the face of the people of this district," Buford said Thursday in a telephone interview.

Perry, one of Fields' political contributors, incorporated Perry Contractors in November 1980, the same month Fields was elected.

"As far as I know, there's nothing unusual about the enhancement of value in a business like this in Houston, Texas," Fields said in a Tuesday interview in his office.

In a telephone interview Thursday, Fields said Perry had told him to expect a dividend this year of less than $10,000.

Members of Congress are not required to reveal the exact amounts of their holdings, income and debts, but instead describe them in terms of broad value categories. The highest category of income is $100,000 and over.

DEMOCRATS

Higgins told the group crowded into the headquarters that Democrats should take 35 percent of the vote in Midland. When someone yelled "40 percent," Higgins replied, "I'm going to be realistic and say 35 percent."

He explained that vote will come from the southern and eastern sectors of Midland which has a history of voting Democratic.

Odessan David Smith, who is running for state representative against Tom Craddick of Midland, urged the Democrats to get out and register other Democrats to vote. "Then get them to the polls. It's time to get rid of Tom Craddick. We don't have the Republican money, but we can outwork 'em. Get them out there to vote their conscience. And they should have a Democratic conscience after four years (of Reagan/Bush)."

Joe Carr, in a three-way race for sheriff against Gary Painter and Dallas Smith, said he doesn't believe Midland County will be going as strongly Republican as in the past.

"I'm not even trying to fight the Republican money," Carr said. But last week at a fund-raising barbecue, about $5,000 in tickets were sold. And while 300-400 persons were expected, Carr said they quit counting at 741.

Hal Marshall with the Lloyd Doggett for Senate campaign predicted Democrats would steal Midland County away from Republican candidate Phil Gramm.

Patient to return to Midland; Trust Fund will remain open

Midlander Ernest Locklar, 57, who has been undergoing treatment at Baylor Plaza Hospital in Dallas for cancer and related complications, is expected to return today to Midland Memorial Hospital.

A trust fund set up in August at First City National Bank to help defray living, travel and medical expenses drew about $1,700 from Midlanders.

Locklar, who was treated at both Midland hospitals in July before being transferred to Dallas, had little insurance to cover his medical expenses. His wife Betty remained with him during his stay in Dallas.

He will continue treatments in Midland and the trust fund remains open.

Contributions may be made to the Locklar Family Trust, Account Number 079087705, First City National Bank, 500 W. Texas Ave., Midland, Texas 79701.

Suicide call turns out to be murder

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A 35-year-old woman was in the city jail this morning, charged with murdering a man who reportedly had entered her apartment to render her aid.

Elizabeth Ann Geeslin, 35, who lived in the apartment where the shooting occurred, is charged with murdering Gary Lee Bienfang, 22, who lived in another apartment in the northeast side complex.

According to police reports, Ms. Geeslin's mother and the apartment manager asked Bienfang to help them with Ms. Geeslin, who had locked herself in the bathroom of the apartment about 3:30 p.m., Thursday.

When Bienfang attempted to force open the bathroom door, a shot was heard by the manager and the mother, who then went to call police. Officers arrived on the scene, Parkway Park Apartments at 1465 Parkway in Odessa, to find Bienfang lying in the bathroom area dead from a shotgun wound and the accused hiding in a closet, clutching a shotgun.

Police were summoned by a report of a possible suicide at the scene, but instead have listed this incident as murder. Justice of the Peace Manuel Valles pronounced Bienfang dead at 5:30 p.m., Thursday, and ordered an autopsy.

Charged with murder, Ms. Geeslin's bond was set at $25,000.

Subpoenas issued

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — As another trial is about to begin for former hospital nurse Genene Jones, authorities say they have issued 90 subpoenas to gather witnesses from around the nation.

Ms. Jones, who worked as a nurse in Medical Center Hospital's pediatric intensive care unit, is accused of injuring a child by injecting him with an anti-coagulant.

She is already serving a 99-year prison sentence after a Georgetown jury convicted her in February of murdering a 15-month-old Kerrville girl with an overdose of a powerful muscle relaxant.

Man ordered to remove house on open beach

AUSTIN (AP) — State District Judge Harley Clark surprised state and defense attorneys alike with an instructed verdict for the state in the first full court test of the Texas open beaches law.

Notice of appeal was given immediately.

The decision, handed down Thursday afternoon, gave Attorney General Jim Mattox a victory over Robert Matcha in a civil suit filed to stop Matcha from repairing a hurricane-damaged house on West Galveston beach.

Fourteen other similar suits are pending.

Matcha was ordered by Clark to remove the remains of his two-bedroom house from the West Galveston beach and to tear down an artifical sand dune he built in front.

The order was stayed until Matcha has a chance to appeal to higher courts.

"Of course we will appeal and we'll win it in upper courts," said Karen Lerner, one of Matcha's attorneys.

"I am very pleased with Judge Clark's decision," Mattox said. "The judge has ruled that the public beaches follow the natural beaches. This is the heart of the Texas Open Beaches Act that exists to insure that all Texans have equal access to the beaches."

The state waived its demand for a $1,000 civil penalty.

However, Matcha was forced to post $500 bond to insure he will fulfill the court's order on removing the house, if his appeal fails.

Testimony in the seven-day case ended Thursday morning and the judge had announced final arguments of attorneys would be heard Friday.

The judge's decision came after a session between lawyers and Clark over preparation of the judge's charge to the jury.

"Part of the reason we got an instructed verdict was because we agreed to waive the fine," said Will Rogers, a spokesman for Mattox, "but he's going to have to tear down his property."

Ms. Lerner was critical of Clark's decision.

"Ever since this judge (Clark) issued a temporary injunction he has shown a bias for the state," Ms. Lerner said.

"Never before have I had case taken away without going to the jury. My client has been deprived not only of his prokperty but of his constitutional rights to a jury trial," Ms. Lerner said.

Mattox had contended in the civil suit that the house should not be rebuilt because the site of the house is now on public land. The suit claimed Hurricane Alicia had changed the vegetation line — the boundary of the public beach — in 1983.

Dental hygienist has 'purr-fect' patient

FORT WORTH (AP) — Lee wasn't like most of her patients in her dental hygienist's chair, but then Kathy Heath doesn't have to use pliers on most of her patients.

Mrs. Heath, 32, was called in on Wednesday after Fort Worth Zoological Park workers noticed a heavy plaque buildup on the teeth of Lee, a 600-pound Siberian tiger.

While he was tranquilized for a sore foot, Lee's mouth was propped open by something akin to a car jack so Mrs. Heath could go to work.

"He was a wonderful patient," Mrs. Heath said after the tooth care. "He didn't complain any."

Mrs. Heath is a volunteer tour guide but has had some experience cleaning animal teeth. Five years ago, she helped clean the teeth of two lowland gorillas and she occasionally cleans her own cat's teeth.

By the time she entered Lee's cage, the 14-year-old tiger was napping from a tranquilizer. He gave her no trouble as she started out with a delicate instrument that works fine on humans but not on Siberian tigers.

She switched to pliers to break loose large chunks of plaque.

"His mouth is quite a bit dirtier than most of my patients," Mrs. Heath said. "But he's better than most of my patients are."

Bus-truck accident injures teen-ager

Police Round-up

From Staff Reports

A school bus carrying about a dozen children collided with a pickup at the intersection of East Cuthbert and North Carver, injuring a 13-year-old child.

Bobby Nelson, 13, of 1604 E. Maple, was transported to Midland Memorial Hospital by ambulance, where he was treated and released.

According to police reports, the Midland Independent School District bus, driven by Clark Newton Wilkinson, 66, had stopped at a stop sign at the intersection before continuing south on Carver and being struck by a westbound vehicle on Cuthbert.

Wilkinson, of 2200 Neely, told police he didn't see anyone coming before he pulled out. Children reported they saw a pickup coming at them at a high rate of speed.

Lanny Gene Rogers, 17, of 1706 Country Club, who was charged with speeding in the incident, told police the bus pulled out in front of his pickup.

A 21-year-old Midland man was released on a $7,500 bond after a grand jury indictment was handed down Wednesday for involuntary manslaughter.

Kenneth Everett Baskett was charged in connection with an Aug. 19 traffic accident, which resulted in the death of Midlander Joseph Wesley Higgins, 24.

According to the Department of Public Safety, Higgins was westbound on State Highway 191 just outside of Midland at about 1 a.m. when his 1984 Honda collided with Baskett's vehicle. Baskett, driving a 1976 Chevrolet, was eastbound in the westbound lane, according to the DPS.

Higgins was pronounced dead at the scene while Baskett was hospitalized in critical condition at Medical Center Hospital in Odessa. He was released Sept. 8.

A 20-year-old Midland man reported he was assaulted by three unidentified men as he walked home early this morning.

Bobby Doss, of 4404 Parkdale, said he'd been dropped off by friends at the corner of Parkdale and Midland Drive, and was walking in front of the 4400 block of Parkdale when the three men approached him from behind. He was hit about the head and ribs, reports indicated.

According to Doss, he did not know the men.

A burglary at 3705 Mark Lane resulted in the loss of about $2,400 worth of jewelry.

Ricky Foreman, of the addrees, reported the burglary, which apparently took place between 10:30 a.m. Sept. 10, and 12:30 p.m. Sept. 11. There were no signs of forced entry, reports indicated.

John Thames of 2438 Whitmire, told police his car was burglarized sometime while it was parked on the side of the road at the intersection of Loop 250 and A Street. Items worth about $435 were taken from a pried-open wooden box in the bed of the pickup.

Thames said he had blown a tire Tuesday night and parked the car on the side of the road.

Capitol to get new face

The West Front of the U.S. Capitol is undergoing a 3½-year, $48 million repair project scheduled for completion by April 1987. Some 7 million people visit the Capitol each year. The White House has about 1.3 million visitors annually.

Business keeps saddle maker in 'driver's seat'

ALPINE, Texas (AP) — A picture window on one side of Big Bend Saddlery lets visitors peer into the store's workshop, filled with the clutter of leather and tools.

Most customers aren't content with the window view, says Bret Collier, one of the saddle shop's owners. The smell of leather often draws patrons past displays of western goods and into the work area.

Consequently, Collier said he tries to keep an unfinished saddle or two sitting on a wooden work horse, although his business duties keep him from steady leather work.

"I made one in February, and started another last month," he said.

"I don't get to do near as much actual saddle-making as I'd like," the 25-year-old Sul Ross State University graduate said.

Instead, Collier and a helper keep busy with smaller orders, such as belts, saddle repairs and custom orders.

Most of the saddle-making now goes on about 12 miles south of the store, off a dirt road near Texas 118.

Big Bend Saddlery's other owner, Gary Dunshee, moved to the deserted location last March after deciding he couldn't get enough work done in the busy store.

"I just build the new saddles out here," said Dunshee, who at 34 has been making saddles for 13 years.

His workshop now looks out on the rolling green and yellow terrain of the Big Bend country. Chickens rest under the shop's wooden porch.

A breeze blows through the open doors and windows of the saddle-making shop, which is furnished with large work tables, sewing machines and a bathtub.

Dunshee began working at Big Bend Saddlery in the early 1970s when he moved to Alpine as a senior at Sul Ross. "I apprenticed for four years under George Nix. He owned the saddle shop then," Dunshee said.

"He starts you out sweeping the floor. You start your own business, and you know the floor has to be swept," Dunshee said.

Through the years, Dunshee learned a lot more than just sweeping floors. He studied pattern making and observed what pieces of a saddle to cut from each part of a cow's hide.

Nix taught him how to fit the leather over a rawhide and wood tree — the saddle's skelton. And he learned about stitching, design stamping, braid work, dyes and oils.

Dunshee bought the shop from Nix's widow in 1977, the same year he hired Collier. Dunshee brought Collier in as a partner early this year and then retired to the country workshop, located on 250 acres owned by Dunshee and his wife, Hillary.

Dunshee builds only custom saddles. "Right now, we're about three months behind," he said.

"I was probably making 12 to 15 saddles a year," he said. But since March 15, he has completed 20 saddles and expects to make 40, each with the Dunshee name stamped into it. The saddles sell for between $1,295 and $2,000 each.

Dunshee's favorite customers are the cowboys who still ride in West Texas roundups.

MCT production closes Saturday

Midland Community Theatre's production of "Crimes of the Heart" closes Saturday Theatre One at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

This play, written by Beth Henley, portrays the chaotic lives of the McGrath sisters of Hazelhurst, Miss. "Crimes of the Heart" won the Pulitzer Prize for drama in 1981 and the Drama Critics Circle Award the same year. It recently completed a successful run on Broadway.

MCT's cast includes Robin Stanton as Lenny McGrath; Dianne Lewallen as Meg McGrath; Renee Spicer as Babe McGrath Botrelle; Penny Taulman as te sisters' cousin Chick; Scott Hammond as Doc Porter; and Paul Talbot as Barnette Lloyd. The production is directed by Michael Spicer.

To make reservations or for ticket information call the theater's box office, 682-4111.

Registration cards may be at office

From Staff Reports

Residents who have not received their blue voter registration card in the past month should contact the Elections Administrator's office, 697-0231, by Oct. 5.

Janeice Builta, elections administrator, said her office still has 4,000 to 4,100 blue cards which the postal service was unable to deliver.

In addition, persons have until Oct. 7 to mail their registration card in order to vote in the November general election. If it is postmarked Oct. 8, it will be too late.

Voter registration cards may be picked up at her office, 707 W. Washington.

Ms. Builta also pointed out that absentee voting begins Oct. 17 at her office, from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. Last day for absentee voting is Nov. 2.

Youth offering free car wash

The Methodist Youth Fellowship of First United Methodist Church is offering a free car wash from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday on the church parking lot, Ohio and Baird streets. Each car will be washed within 20 minutes.

This is the annual fund-raising event for the youth program that goes to support many of the activities and trips during the year and to pay the group's pledge to the Youth Service Fund in support of missions.

The youth group makes its money by securing pledges from church members and friends in advance of the car wash. Persons pledge to pay a given number of cents per car washed. This year's goal is washing a minimum of 300 cars.

Bob Siekman sits at the wheel of an antique American-LaFrance fire truck in Pyote, Texas. Siekman began his truck collection eight years ago with a 1937 model and now has three more in addition to a 1925 Model T Ford truck.

Tycoon 'keeps on trucking' with hobby

PYOTE, Texas (AP) — Bob Siekman has a four-truck deep garage in this small West Texas town where he keeps his pride and joy — a treasured collection of fire trucks.

Siekman began his collection eight years ago with a 1937 model truck and now has three more in addition to a 1925 Model T Ford truck.

While their monetary value may not be overly impressive, the trucks satisfy the showmanship in Siekman.

"They just fascinate me," Siekman said. "I've always liked cars, machinery. But fire trucks have a lot of gismos and gadgets on them that really appeal to me."

His 1950 model La France fire truck, for example, has room for 14 ladders, each up to 50 feet long. "It's the newest one I've got and it's still usable. I keep it loaded up with water — just in case."

Siekman has been a volunteer fireman — "like every other man who stumbles into Pyote and stays" — since he moved there in 1962. Although he has never used his prize collection for fighting fires, he has had occasion to use the 1950 model in his road work business.

"We used it once to water caliche down. There were buildings, pipes and fences in the way and you couldn't get a water truck down in there," he said. "So I just pulled the fire truck in as close as I could and used the hose like a water hose."

Siekman's trucks also are brought out of their garage for annual parades in Pecos, Kermit and Monahans.

Last year in the Pecos parade, his 72-year-old mother played her organ in the back of his 1937 La France. In his 1950 model truck, Siekman has rigged a tape player that blasts carnival tunes.

Siekman also enjoys taking children — and grownups — for rides in the trucks.

"One time, before Christmas, I had promised to take some kids caroling. But when I took a step outside and started shivering — 22 was the high that day — I tried to think of every excuse why we couldn't go," Siekman said.

"But that truck started right up and we ended up having a nice, short trip," he chuckled.

If ever there was a chuckle that most conjured the image of Santa Claus, it was that which came from frosty-headed, heavy-set Siekman.

"I used to be a lot heavier," he recalled. "When I bought this Model T truck, I had to take the back out of the driver's seat to get in."

He said he bought the Model T to supplement his collection. "I got a good price on it," he said of his by-far cheapest purchase. "And it's crazy, what aggravates me is this is the truck everyone has fits about, saying how cute it is."

Siekman has a 1928 La France Slayton that has its steering wheel on the right side. He purchased his 1928 Hale "in boxes" and has begun a seemingly never-ending project of putting it back together.

The Hale has its own garage, just adjacent to the four-truck deep one.

Inmate's true story would make 'unbelievable' fiction

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — No fiction would propose a plot so farfetched as one that would make a minister of the gospel of a man serving a life sentence for four murders; a man considered so dangerous that he was kept in isolation for most of the 25 years he was imprisoned.

"If I had written 'The Meanest Man in Texas' as a fiction piece, we wouldn't have it because no one would believe it," said Don Umphrey.

Umphrey first heard the Clyde Thompson story in 1977 and believed it had all the elements of drama and inspiration that characterized the movie, "Rocky."

An instructor in the Mass Communications Department at Texas Tech University at the time, Umphrey called the Thompsons and asked for screen rights to the story. He first wrote a screenplay, but when plans to make a movie failed to materialize, Umphrey decidied to write a book.

The book is being released by Thomas Nelson Publishers, and Umphrey has not given up his intention of producing a movie.

He earned a bachelor's degree in English at David Lipscomb College in Nashville and worked in print journalism. He moved to Lubbock in 1975 to work at Lubbock Christian College and then earned his master's degree at Tech.

Umphrey does not view the book as religious, although it was only when Thompson reached out to God in despair that changes began in his personality that ultimately brought him out of prison and into a prison ministry.

Indeed, two-thirds of the account is a description of Thompson's struggle to survive in the Texas penal system. And it's not a pretty picture.

Thompson, 17, and two other teenagers murdered two young men in Eastland County. The first of many close calls for Thompson came while he awaited trial. A lynching crowd would have hanged him had they been able to find the key to his cell.

Convicted and sentenced to die, Thompson began learning the lessons of survival. His sentence was commuted to life after a 90-day-stay of execution that came the day before he was to die in the electric chair.

Finding protection in his reputation as the "meanest man in Texas," Thompson had killed two more men by the time he was 25 and received another life sentence. But through it all his father stood by him, refusing to believe that his son was beyond redemption.

And he spoke to his son of God, but the youth wanted no part of religion. It wasn't until after the death of his father that Thompson, placed in solitary confinement, found his thoughts turning to God. But when he asked for a Bible, it was only because he thought it was the only reading material he would be allowed. And he could barely read.

Barely literate, he began teaching himself to read, asking for a dictionary so that he could understand what he was reading.

Slowly, he began to wonder if there really was a God after all. Knowing he should have been dead many times, he began to wonder if there was a reason he had been spared. And for the first time he began to admit to himself that he was responsible for his own troubles.

Meanwhile, a young woman responded to her pastor's suggestion that members of the congregation send a Christmas card to a prisoner who was trying to learn to live a Christian life in prison. As a result Julia Perryman and Clyde Thompson began a correspondence, the beginning of a love story that defied logic and parental objections, and culminated eight years later in marriage.

Released in 1955, Thompson was pardoned by Gov. John Connally in 1963. The Thompsons moved to Huntsville in 1970 to begin a prison ministry supported by churches and directed by the Midway Church of Christ.

The Thompsons moved to Lubbock in 1977, seeking a drier climate to help her respiratory problems. He was named chaplain at the Lubbock County Jail, their ministry supported by the Sunset Church of Christ.

Thompson died in 1979.

Research for the book was aided by a diary Thompson kept for a year after he began corresponding with Miss Perryman. In addition to interviews, the author also spent many hours reading old newspapers, conducting much of his research at Tech in the Southwest Collection.

Residents adopting horses, burros

A. Laserphoto

Albert Hite, of the Collinsville adoption center for wild animals, walks a pack of wild burros. The center, which is Texas' only permanent adoption center houses wild free-roaming horses and burros protected by the Wild Free-Roaming Horse and Burro Act of 1971.

COLLINSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Glen Wilson balanced on the third rung of the red wood fence, mopped his dripping face and pointed into the herd of milling wild burros in the dusty pen below.

"That's it right there — no, that one. Wait. I think it's that one over there."

Finally, he clambered over the fence and joined Albert Hite in the pen, searching for just the right burro to take home. His choice — a dark, doe-eyed jenny with a white muzzle and belly — protested at being cut from the other burros and loaded into Wilson's cattle trailer. After all, only weeks before she'd been running wild in the deserts of Arizona.

Now, thanks to a federal adoption program for wild mustangs and burros, Wilson has a new "pet" to join the stallion and two mares he's already acquired through the program. In addition to its pet status, the burro will have the duty of helping tame the wild horses.

"I'll take it down and tie a wild horse to it to tame the horse," Wilson said. "The horse will drag that jenny till she gets tired. Then she'll sit down and that horse is through.

"My wife told me not to bring this one home," he joked. "She said we didn't need another jackass on the place."

THE ADOPTION program began in 1973 as a humane method for disposing of excess animals removed from public lands. Because the animals are protected by the Wild Free-Roaming Horse and Burro Act of 1971 and have no natural predators to limit population growth, their numbers are increasing rapidly.

The program, administered by the Bureau of Land Management, allows the animals to be rounded up in their natural habitat, moved to distribution points around the United States and adopted by qualified people. According to BLM literature, more than 45,000 animals have been placed by the program to date.

Texas' only permanent adoption center is two miles west of Collinsville on FM 902, about 35 miles northeast of Denton. The center is operated by Albert Hite. During the "adoption season," it moves a fresh load of mustangs and burros about every three weeks from early summer to Thanksgiving, Hite said.

He recently celebrated the first anniversary of the center with a special adoption day that included free barbecue for all adopters. A new supply of more than 50 mares, colts and stallions had arrived from Nevada, and by mid-morning, nearly half had been adopted.

"We have appointments up until 7 tonight. I'm afraid we're going to run out of animals," said Sharon Paden of the BLM office in Santa Fe, N.M.

MS. PADEN HAD traveled to Collinsville for the anniversary celebration and spent the day taking pictures of happy new adoptive "parents" and explaining to them their duties and obligations.

The cost of adopting a mare with colt, a single mare or stallion is $185, she said. The fee for adopting a burro is $110. That in no way compensates the government for rounding up the animals and transporting them, she explained, but about covers veterinary fees for shots, worming and Coggins tests for swamp fever that each animal must have before crossing state lines.

Each animal is also freeze-branded on the neck with numbers that show the animal's age and place of origin.

Adopters must be legal residents of the United States, be of legal age, have no prior convictions for inhumane treatment of animals and have adequate facilities and means of transportation to provide humane care and proper treatment for a wild horse or burro.

Each person is limited to adopting four animals per year.

Donnie and Carol Smith came from Vivian, La., to browse among the mustangs at the center. They adopted a mare and colt recently at a temporary center in Longview, and while both agreed they wouldn't adopt more until their 10 acres were fenced, Mrs. Smith looked at the sturdy little mustangs with longing.

"I COULD HAVE got into quarter horse raising, but I chose mustangs," she said. "They're good, intelligent horses, and not everybody has $1,000 to buy a kid a registered horse. I plan to adopt as many as I can handle on our place."

Paul McClendon, who helps out at the center, proudly showed off his newly adopted little mustang. The horse, which had been running wild the previous week, nuzzled visitors and allowed McClendon to pick up all four feet without protest.

"This animal came in here Thursday wild. I put a halter on it and it nearly flipped. I tied it up and two hours later I started leading it. I've only worked with it about four hours altogether, and just look how gentle it is," he said. "'Course, I can't guarantee they'll all be that good."

The sentiments of some of the animals were apparent as they were briskly loaded into cattle trailers.

Water: Profitable as oil?

Local water sales booming

BY SUSAN LINDSAY
Business-Oil Writer

It falls from the sky, pools by the curb, drips from the faucet, ripples by the acres in lakes, yet West Texas businessmen are making a fortune on it. It's water

A preference for cleaner-tasting and looking water as well as concern over contaminents in the public water supply have boosted bottled water and point-of-use drinking water equipment into a near billion dollar business.

Nationally, sales for bottled water and point-of-use drinking water equipment amounted to over $800 million last year with annual sales expected to exceed $950 million or 15 to 20 percent in 1985, according to statistics released by the Water Quality Association and the International Bottled Water Association.

Ozarka Water Co. manager Ken Martin said his company's sales are growing so quickly that he can't handle all of the customers wanting his product.

"We bottle over 5 million bottles a year and we'll bottle more this year than last year," he said, noting that his company is trying to add another crew and storage tanks to handle the increased business.

Safeway manager Charlie Jackson said trucks come to his Illinois Street store three times a week to keep the four brands of bottled water the store offers in stock. "It's a good selling item right now and throughout the year," he said.

The same holds true at the Rankin Highway M System and on weekends the store occassionally runs out of the four different brands it sells, Danny Hinshaw, store manager said. "Kids are home on the weekend and they drink more then and people do more shopping then," he said.

The point-of-use segment of the water industry uses carbon filters, distillers, reverse osmosis or ultrafiltration systems to remove impurities, chemicals and unpleasant tastes and odors from the water.

Culligan Water Conditioning Co., Midland, is one point-of-use company that installs units under kitchen sinks to filter water through reverse osmosis, said Herman Blakley, vice president of the company.

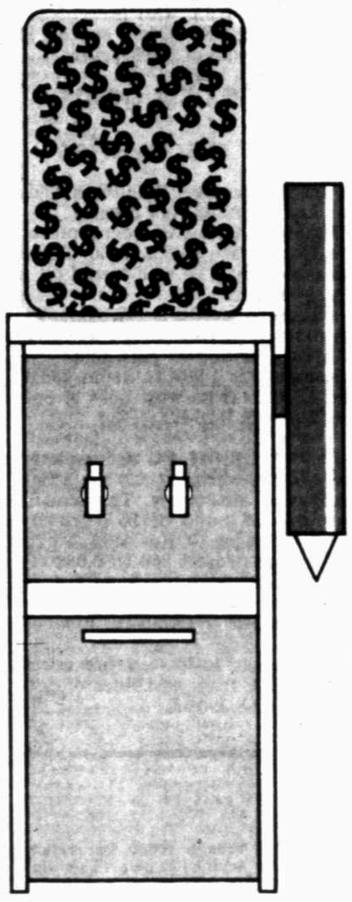
Reverse osmosis is a process in which pressure is used to force water through a semi-permeable membrane which will let the water pass through but reject most other dissolved minerals.

The process, which can eliminate 90 to 90 percent of all salt and dirt particles, is the same used by bottled water companies, he said.

The Culligan Company has sold or is renting between 3,000 to 4,000 water conditioning units in the Permian Basin, Blakley said, adding that he hopes the numer of units will increase every year.

Reasons making the water conditioning units and bottled water so popular include fear of the high level of trihalamenthene, a contaminant, and the addition of ammonia to drinking water. Another is a preference for cleaner water, said Blakley.

"Who wants to make a glass of tea that looks like you've poured a glass of milk into it," he said.



Lone Star to become independent

LONE STAR, Texas (AP) — Lone Star Steel Co. would become independent and be free of the $100 million debt it owes its parent company, Northwest Industries, under an agreement pending stockholder approval, officials say.

Northwest directors announced the tentative agreement Thursday to sell Northwest and make Lone Star an independent company.

As part of the proposed deal, Lone Star's $100 million indebtedness to Northwest is expected to be forgiven, officials said.

Lone Star, formerly one of Northwest's most profitable subsidiaries, was devastated by a drop in oil drilling enterprises — its biggest customer — in the early 1980s that forced it to lay off thousands of employees.

"Should this transaction become a reality, Lone Star Steel Co. would again become an independent, publicly owned company headquartered in Texas just as we were in August 1964, when we were first acquired by Philadelphia and Reading Corp.," Lone Star President James Chenault said Thursday.

Under the agreement, Northwest Industries would be sold to Oppenheimer & Co. and Kelly, Briggs and Associates, Inc. for $50 per share, said Mayo Lanagan, Lone Star spokesman.

Northwest stockholders would get $50 for every share they own, plus one common share of Lone Star Steel.

Oppenheimer and Kelly, Briggs will lead a group of investors that will merge their companies with Northwest, officials said.

The agreement is subject to Northwest's stockholder approval, said Joe Shenton, Northwest's corporate affairs director in Chicago, and final arrangements are expected to be completed in November.

Shenton said the pending purchase is good news for Lone Star because the plant "will be essentially debt free."

Northwest has invested hundreds of millions of dollars in capital expenditures at Lone Star in the past few years.

According to Mel Lewis, a representative with E.F. Hutton in Longview, 20 million shares of Lone Star stock are expected to be issued.

Lone Star, which opened in 1948, produced tubular goods for a booming oil industry and was Northeast Texas' biggest employer for several years. But in August 1982, burdened by rising imports and falling demand, Lone Star shut down most of its operations and laid off 4,500 workers.

Until 1982, Lone Star had been the most profitable of all Northwest's subsidiaries. Lone Star's value in 1981 was estimated at $2 billion.

Down from a peak workforce of 6,200 in 1981, Lone Star now employs about 2,300, Lanagan said, adding that no layoffs are planned.

WEEK IN BUSINESS

COMPILED BY SUSAN LINDSAY
Business-Oil Writer

In an effort to cut costs and shrink operations, INTERNATIONAL TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH CORP. has offered early retirement to 11 percent of its corporate headquarters staff and sold a West German household products unit for about $40 million.

LITTON INDUSTRIES INC. has agreed in principle to a leveraged buyout of its Monroe Systems for Business division by a group of New York investors and the division's president, Robert Kane.

Another company which may see reduction is WALT DISNEY PRODUCTIONS if Irwin Jacobs, whose investor group owns 7.7 percent of the entertainment company, seeks to control and dismantle the corporation.

On the other side of the coin, SCHLUMBERGER LTD. has offered $48 a share for about 45 percent of off-shore drilling firm Sedco and stock for the rest. This transaction is estimated at over $1 billion.

FREEPORT-McMORAN INC. has signed a definitive agreement to acquire Midlands Energy Co. for about $250.5 million in cash and notes.

Also completing a merger contract are WESTMIN RESOURCES LTD. and Soquip, the Quebec government's oil and gas exploration unit. Westmin has agreed to buy $130 million of oil and gas assets from the Canadian company.

SMITHKLINE BECKMAN CORP. will be buying International Hydron Corp., a maker of soft contact lenses, for about $162 million plus a percentage of royalties on future sales.

InterNorth Inc. has signed a letter of intent to acquire the assets of TEXACO INC.'s Chemplex unit, a transaction that could nearly double the company's petrochemicals business.

Most FROZEN ORANGE JUICE bought in the U.S. this year may be imported due to four freezes over the past decade and a recent threat of disease.

CITICORP, the nation's largest bank holding company, has found a way to make corporate loans without tying up any of its capital. The company has teamed with Travelers Corp. to enable the companies to take loans off their books by selling them to a separate company specially formed to hold the loans.

Another innovative move is FINANCIAL CORP. OF AMERICA's offer to award $1 billion of new certificates of deposit this month. The transaction is part of the institution's effort to reduce dependence on governmental loans and to strengthen its dwindling deposit base.

RETAIL SALES in August fell 0.8 percent while industrial production inched up only 0.2 percent far below the strong gains recorded earlier this year. Producer prices last month slipped 0.1 percent, the last decline since last November.

Also, personal income increased by 0.5 percent last month while spending rose 0.1 percent. HOUSING STARTS plunged 12.8 percent to the lowest level since December 1982.

The largest company to trade its stock over the counter, AMERICAN INTERNATIONAL GROUP, INC., has applied to list its stock on the New York Stock Exchange.

PAN AM WORLD AIRWAYS will buy or lease 28 jets costing nearly $1 billion from Airbus Industrie. Prior to the delivery of the aircraft, Pan Am will lease 16 jets from Airbus to provide an immediate increase in its fleet.

MIDWAY AIRLINES will acquire Air Florida, which will put the airline back in the sky under the name of Midway Express.

Another change in a transportation company comes from FORD MOTOR CO.'s raise of 1985-model car prices an average of $153 or one percent, which is slightly lower than tentative increases announced earlier. Prices will not change on optional equipment.

Federal criminal charges were filed against the CHICAGO BOARD OF TRADE CLEARING CORP. and two of its top officials who resigned last week. One former aide was charged with having subordinates funnel illegal campaign gifts to the 1980 Carter-Mondale campaign and to at least five senior U.S House of Representatives Democrats in 1982.

A FEDERAL GRAND JURY indicted eight men on securities fraud and other charges in connection with the theft of insider information on proposed takeovers from the New York law firm of Sullivan & Cromwell.

In other litigation, STEEL INDUSTRY DEMANDS for new quotos or tariffs on foreign steel imports were rejected by President Reagan. Instead, Reagan promised to persuade foreign steel-producing countries into limiting their shipments voluntarily and cutting back on various unfair trade practices.

Also, PRE-ELECTION TAX CUTS to benefit homeowners, small businesses and salaried workers may be approved by Congress. Proposals dealing with educational assistance, legal services and self-financing the sales of homes and businesses are receiving the most consideration.

INTERNATINAL BUSINESS MACHINES CORP. has introduced two high-speed information-storage devices that will increase mainframe computer power and put further pressure on makers of plug-compatible equipment.

Growth rate called 'the right medicine'

Associated Press

The economy is growing at a slower pace, but private and government economists hailed the news as just the right medicine for sustaining the current 22-month expansion.

In another report Thursday, the Commerce Department said after-tax corporate profits declined 0.3 percent in the second quarter after a 6.8 percent gain in the first quarter. The second quarter decline had originally been reported last month as a 1.5 percent gain.

And the Conference Board said its survey of about 1,500 executives shows business leaders continue to have strong confidence in the economy, although they are less confident than earlier in the year.

The business-sponsored research agency said its quarterly business confidence gauge slipped to 61 from 65 in the second quarter.

The growth of the gross national product, the total output of good and services, has slowed to 3.6 percent during the third quarter, substantially below the pace set during the first half of the year, the Commerce Department estimated.

"A rate of 3.6 percent is just right," said Allen Sinai, chief economist of Shearson Lehman-American Express. "It indicates a welcome, decided deceleration in the economy's growth, but it is big enough to relieve fears that the economy was sliding into a recession."

RRC approves gas contract reductions

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Railroad Commission said Thursday it has temporarily approved natural gas contract changes that could reduce rates to gas and electric customers of Houston Pipeline Co., Intratex Gas Co., and Texas Utilities Fuel Co. a total of more than $5.7 million.

Another vote is needed by the three-member commission before the approval is permanent.

Southwestern Gas Pipeline Inc. submitted three contract changes for approval, the largest of which involved a rate reduction on a Southwestern contract with Texas Utilities Fuel Co. estimated at more than $4.2 million.

Anoter Southwestern contract change would lower rates to Houston Pipeline Co. by $485,000.

The third change proposed by Southwestern involved a contract with Intratex lGas Co. and savings of $363,000.

South Cen-Tex Gas Co. sought a reduction in rates that would amount to about $296,000.

Ortloff passes billion dollar mark

From Staff Reports

A Midland-based company has joined the ranks of the billion-dollar industry. The Ortloff Corporation, a engineering and construction company founded and headquartered in Midland, exceeded the one-billion dollar mark in cumulative sales in July.

"We employ over 200 people locally," said V.E. Griffith, an Ortloff spokesman. "They are a highly-trained technical staff."

Started in 1962, by Robert M. Leibrock, George H. Landreth, Roy E. Campbell, F. H. Callaway and W.F. 'Bill' Ortloff, the corporation achieved its goal of one million dollars in annual sales in 1965 — two years ahead of its intended deadline. By 1968, sales of more than $18 million put Ortloff in the ranks of the top 200 engineering and construction firms in the country, according to "Engineering News-Record".

Originally involved with the emerging West Texas sulfur recovery market, Ortloff has expanded over the years and now has two divisions, (Midland and the Gulf Coast Division in Houston) and four subsidiaries, (Pro-Quip Corporation in Tulsa, Ortloff Mountain States Corp. in Golden , Co., Ortloff International Corp. in Houston and Ortloff de Venezuela in Caracas.)

"The Midland and Tulsa operations are our most active," said Griffith. "The Venezuela subsidiary is not currently active — that's just something we bring back to life now and then".

Ortloff has been a leader in technology and development of projects. Some contributions include: An award of five patents in the field of cryogenic gas processing for more efficient recovery of hydrocarbons, the development of two and three-dimensional computer-aided design systems, an award of a world class project for the recovery and recycle of CO2 from major West Texas enhanced oil recovery operation, engineering, design and procurement of a shipboard crude oil processing facility, now moored and operating off the coast of California. and the debottlenecking and expansion of a French refinery relocated to the U.S. Gulf Coast.

DeLorean in bankruptcy court

DETROIT (AP) — Lawyers for John Z. De Lorean are going back into court in a $17 million federal bankruptcy case that was suspended for six months while the former automaker was on trial on cocaine trafficking charges.

De Lorean, who was acquitted in Los Angeles last month on all eight drug counts, faces claims by creditors of his defunct De Lorean Motor Co. and a grand jury investigation into his handling of the company's finances.

A scheduled hearing before U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Ray Reynolds Graves today was to be the first substantive action since Graves ordered the bankruptcy case resumed in a hearing earlier this month.

At stake in the case is the more than $17 million creditors allege was diverted from De Lorean Motor Co. through banks in Europe and New York.

De Lorean Motor Co. — founded by the former General Motors Corp. executive with the goal of showing Detroit "how to build cars" — in 1982 sought protection from creditors under Chapter 11 of the Federal Bankruptcy Act.

The case later was converted to liquidation under Chapter 7 of the act.

In March, Graves suspended proceedings in his court during De Lorean's trial in Los Angeles on federal cocaine conspiracy charges.

In hearings on resuming the case, attorneys for De Lorean confirmed that his handling of company funds was the subject of a federal grand jury probe.

Life truly goes 'swimmingly' in community

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

MISSION VIEJO, Calif. — The 40-year-old housewife was feeling out of step.

"It's just a status thing here," she explained. "You must be happy, you must be well-rounded and you must have children who do a lot of things. If you don't jog or walk or bike, people wonder if you have diabetes or some other disabling disease.

"I think it puts a tremendous amount of pressure on the children," she said. "We need a little more Huck Finn around here ... more time to kick tin cans down the street."

She later asked a reporter not to identify her because her comments could create friction for her husband with his business and golfing friends, who, she said, "are very Mission Viejo."

Mission Viejo: Swim capital of the world, mecca for medalists, home of the perfect 10 high dive, three competition swimming pools, but only one public library.

Billed by its developer as "The California Promise," this town in the rolling hills of south Orange County has emerged as the epitome of the American Dream.

DURING THE Olympic Games, 200 of the world's best bicycle racers pedaled for the gold here past neat lawns, $1 million lake-front homes, a private gated community and 200,000 cheering fans.

Swimmers and divers trained here before reaping a harvest of Olympic medals, nine gold, two silver and one bronze.

A competitive zeal permeates this shining example of American suburbanism. Its affluent residents enjoy extraordinary sport and recreation facilities for a community of only 55,000. And while many, if not most, adore the life style, there are at least a few, like the housewife, who resent the pervasiveness of athletics. Furthermore, some experts question whether the highly charged competitive atmosphere is entirely healthy, particularly for children.

In any case, the first corporate-sponsored Olympic Games brought this corporate-sponsored community worldwide exposure. As a result, some of its people are predicting even greater popularity, abundance and success for Mission Viejo.

"How can anybody from the East have anything but desire to move out here with us?" asked Norman Murray, elected member of the quasi-governmental Municipal Advisory Council. "I guess you'll just have to excuse us gloating about it."

"I couldn't speak too highly of the community — I'm in love with it," he said. "A very preponderant majority feels that way."

THE PREPONDERENCE of people here also are young (50 percent under age 30), white (94 percent) and affluent (largely professionals or self-employed). For the most part, they leave town to go to work. They return to 18,033 homes whose median value was $129,800 on the 1980 Census. For families earning less than $44,430 a year, there are 234 "affordable" condominiums set aside near the railroad tracks and San Diego Freeway on the edge of town.

LAT Photo

The corporate community of Mission Viejo, Calif., may be the swim capital of the world.

The world-famous Nadadores swim and diving teams train here, and are subsidized by the Mission Viejo Co. The program has produced 22 Olympians, 104 national champions and 21 world records.

There also are three wading pools, four hydrotherapy pools, a 25-meter Olympic diving pool, 19 lighted tennis courts, 12 handball and racquetball courts, five volleyball courts, two outdoor basketball courts, men's and women's saunas, two weight rooms, four outdoor playgrounds, a multipurpose gym, 19 improved parks, four recreation centers, a 125-acre man-made lake, two golf courses, the three competition pools (one a 50-meter Olympic pool), and more — all built or donated, some still owned and operated, by the company.

THOSE WHO have flocked to Mission Viejo, suggests Mark Baldassare, a professor of urban sociology at University of California, Irvine, may be indicative of "some kind of self-selection" in which "you get more families and individuals who are sports-oriented because of its reputation."

"There would be a more intense lifestyle of sports and competition," said Baldassare, who publishes the Orange County Annual Survey, a public opinion poll funded by UCI and private companies. "From the surveys we do, in terms of quality of life and quality of services, Mission Viejo rates higher than almost any other area of Orange County. Apparently, the people get what they want."

"The dangers," he said, "are for people who haven't moved there for those reasons. They could feel isolated from the mainstream.

"The other danger is for children. It's possible for parents to get the whole issue of sports and competition out of perspective."

Sports psychologist Richard Lister, who has counseled child athletes since 1970 at his Costa Mesa office, agrees.

"The people who move to Mission Viejo have all been winning competitors ... in their business ventures and ... in school," said Lister, who once lived in Mission Viejo. "They want their children to be winners."

SOME PARENTS, he said, don't understand that the concentration of "winners" makes for stiffer competition than existed in the parents' hometowns. These parents, he said, "don't understand why their kid can't be as good a winner as they were."

Mission Viejo youngsters, according to University of Southern California clinical psychologist Chaytor Mason, are bound to feel peer pressure.

"Any young child moving into the area would be caught up in it," he said. "Highly motivated children will work from dawn to dusk and beyond, which they think will lead to adult success. But they don't know the needs of adult life.

"The first pitfall is going for the medal," Mason said. "When they find out they didn't win to their satisfaction or that it didn't solve all the problems of the world, they suffer burnout. Many of these people may not have fun for fun's sake."

Long before this summer's Olympic gold rush, Mission Viejo was touted by its developer as "America's most successful planned community" for people "in search of a better life."

In 1965, the Mission Viejo Co., now a subsidiary of Philip Morris Inc., started building this unincorporated community from the ground up. In the absence of a city government, the company continues to exert influence on the local lifestyle, including what colors houses may be painted and whether merchants may hang American flags outside their doors.

Porches can vary greatly

By ANDY LANGE
Associated Press

A covered approach to the entrance to a house is called a porch, but over the years the term has come to include almost anything that kind of leads to the front door, even if the covered portion juts out only a few inches.

The best advice that can be given to anybody who adds a front porch to his house, whether he does all the work himself, hires a professional or does part of the job by starting with a special kit, of which there are several different kinds these days, is to be sure it looks somewhat like the house. Time and again, front porch additions seems exactly like what they are — additions. If it is attractive and special, it sometimes overshadows the house. If it isn't done properly, it sticks out like the proverbial sore thumb.

The subject of porches has been given excellent treatment in "The Outside Handyman," by John McGowan and Roger Du Bern. They call attention to the necessity of making the porch match the house and go into detail about building a porch from a kit or erecting your own.

Before making a selection, it is suggested that as many catalogues as possible should be collected and read carefully. Once you have made a choice, some careful measuring is in order to be certain the one you have picked will fit your requirements. In some cases, a company representative will visit your home to help you choose the right components. McGowan and DuBern point out, however, that nothing works as well as getting to see one of the finished porches made from that company's kit.

If the company seems reluctant to give you the names and addresses of some of their customers, proceed with great caution, since there is no reason why the firm shouldn't be proud to have you see examples of their work. If you do not do this, whatever the reason, at least see whether the company has display sites that can be visited.

You cannot be warned too many times about the need to get a permit before any work of this kind is contemplated. Within the last few weeks, I have heard of two cases where homeowners had to tear down installations because they neglected to get the proper clearances for their projects. Sure, people will tell you stories of non-permit construction work that has been up for many years without trouble, but that is generally because nobody has complained. One complaint and you have a king-sized headache.

Detailed instructions are given on building the porch yourself. It is pointed out that you can do every single bit of work or you can use prefabricated components such as window and vestibule frames, which combine door and window openings to speed up construction.

Home loans helpful

WASHINGTON (AP) — The VA guarantee has helped millions of former servicemen buy homes, and can do the same for active duty personnel.

The Veterans Administration reports that active duty military personnel are eligible for home loan guarantees after having served 180 days.

To obtain the benefits, VA form 26-1880 must be filled out and submitted to the nearest Veterans Administration office along with a statement of service from the commanding officer where the individual is based.

New styles in housing necessary

By JOSEPH GIOVANNINI
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The nuclear family — a working father, homemaking mother and two or more children — may persist as a dominant image of the American family, but among all households, this unit is a statistical minority, a scant 5.7 percent of the 83,500,000 households in the United States today.

Yet the vast majority of houses and apartments in the suburbs and in most cities have been built for the nuclear family and still embody that family configuration in their interior plans and in the organization of their neighborhoods. The efforts of many developers to adapt houses to new market considerations often simply involve making the traditional house smaller rather than different. Still largely unaddressed are the needs of a diverse constituency of nontraditional households, including single parents, working parents, single adults living alone, the elderly, young couples without children and the handicapped.

IN VARIOUS PARTS of the United States, some designers and planners have tentatively begun to respond to the new family by reconsidering the nature of the house, the apartment, the apartment building and the neighborhood. In addition, on a grass-roots level, everyday homeowners have spontaneously responded to the need with accessory apartments built within their free-standing houses.

"The ideal of the intact one-family home dies hard," writes Dolores Hayden in "Redesigning the American Dream: The Future of Housing, Work and Family Life," (W.W. Norton & Co., 1984). In 1980 two-thirds of the housing units in the United States, or 53.9 million, were single-family detached houses, "originally designed for households with a full-time housewife caring for husband and children," she says. She writes that the house designs are frequently inflexible and residential zoning is often rigid.

In fact, the predominant American family type has become the two-income family. According to Miss Hayden, "Over half of all married women are in the paid labor force," and as a result there is, in many households, nobody at home during the day. In addition, largely because of today's divorce rates, the single-parent family is the fastest-growing family type, and in families in which the single parent works, there is, again, no one at home.

THE RESULTING ISOLATION and inconvenience of so many suburbs, says Miss Hayden, trace to the 19th-century ideal of separate spheres for the working man and the housewife. She says that while most people might complain about, for example, the distance betwen home and work, few would analyze the exasperation of their working day in terms of architectural design, real-estate development and urban planning. Solutions to what Miss Hayden calls the crisis in housing must, she says, also address such directly related issues as jobs, services and transportation.

Caroline Fung, whose master's thesis in the Columbia Graduate School of Architecture and Planning deals with housing for female-heads-of-household families in suburbia, says such families "are prime examples of a 'bad fit' with the suburban environment."

Theodore Liebman, the New York architect and former president of the New York City Chapter of the American Institute of Architects, says, however, that the problem of a bad fit with the environment also exists in the city, where there are not enough support facilities such as day care, after-school programs and accessible community services.

PERHAPS THE LARGEST cumulative effort throughout the United States at creating housing for non-nuclear families is accessory apartments built, legally or illegally, onto or within existing houses. According to the Washington-area planner Patrick Hare, "Preliminary data from the 1980 census indicate that between 1970 and 1980 there have been as many as 2.5 million conversions of single-family houses to create accessory apartments."

Some experts, including the architectural historian Gwendolyn Wright, believe that accessory apartments can collectively absorb the housing crisis, or at least defuse it.

There is, in addition to accessory apartments, the very simple alternative of sharing a house. The Shared Housing Resource Center in Philadelphia lists around 275 shared-housing programs nationally, including both match-up and group-residence programs.

WHILE ACCESSORY apartments, shared housing and smaller housing units solve certain specific problems, they do not address questions of neighborhood and services. Miss Hayden suggests that houses adapted with accessory apartments might become part of reorganized suburban blocks with such communal facilities as a common green, made up of collective backyards.

Developers have responded to the changing family configuration in several ways. While Lewis Homes in Upland, Calif., has marketed conventional but smaller units such as town houses intended for single men and women, the developer has also sold a free-standing independent house with two master bedrooms for unrelated people. However, according to Roger Anderson, marketing manager of Lewis Homes, "It's been a bust." The twin-master-bedroom homes did not sell well in southern California and even then were bought by blood-related people rather than the expected market.

Some recent efforts in progressive housing have been made to accommodate single-parent, low-income families. In Providence, R.I., the Women's Development Corporation working with a local community in a Federal housing program has addressed many social issues along with housing. Members of the corporation devised a floor plan suitable for a single-parent family; they rehabilitated triple-decker houses, built new ones and adapted an old factory, all in neighborhoods that were modest but still furnished with such supports as community centers, schools, shopping and transportation.

THE NEW HOUSING helped reinforce these neighborhoods. While the units can accommodate a traditional family, they were conceived by Alma Felix Green, Susan Aitcheson and Katrin Adam to work well for the single-parent family.

Typically, the floor plan in one of the 76 units completed so far has a kitchen open to a large family and dining area, allowing a parent to work in the same general area where children do homework, watch television or listen to music. The living room has been reduced in size and is a more formal area used primarily for entertaining.

In another project now in construction in Manhattan, the architects Katrin Adam, Barbara Marks and Ann Blanton have designed units for nontraditional households. Some are intended for the handicapped. One of the units has been planned with a built-in flexibility, to accommodate changes in its owner's life, as well as changes in ownership over the lifetime of the apartment. It has a study at the front of the apartment that can be used as an office. The second bedroom is equipped with plumbing for a second bath, so that the suite, perhaps occupied by a roommate, can have greater independence within the apartment. It is also large enough for a couple to live in, with or without children.

CAPTAIN CLARENCE Eldridge House, a publicly supported project for the elderly in Hyannis, Mass., by the Boston architect Barry Korobkin, perhaps best exemplifies housing attentive not only to the individual unit but to the larger residential group. While each unit has privacy, with a kitchenette and bed-sitting room, residents socialize in the "family" areas, such as the television room, common living and dining areas, laundry and porches. The kitchenette has windows and Dutch doors that open on a corridor designed as an interior street.

In Los Angeles County, Miss Hayden, working with the architect Ena Dubnoff and the Los Angeles County Community Development Commission, has designed a project of 48 units especially for working parents, with a special effort at integrating child care in the design. There are views of play areas from each apartment, a large laundry and community room next to a playground and a child-care center that includes infant-, day- and after-school care. "The ruling concern has been the working parents' need to have both institutional child care and informal supervision of children while doing such activities as cooking and laundry," Miss Hayden said.

Although some planners and architects have tried to accommodate the new family configurations, efforts larger than accessory apartments and shared houses are somewhat scattered so far. "It is just starting to be understood as a design problem rather than a policy problem," Miss Hayden said.

'White-on-white' featured in decorating strategy

From Staff Reports

A white-on-white color scheme unifies contemporary, traditional and country styles while allowing each element to stand out in the absence of color.

This decorating strategy can provide foolproof rooms which can be easily changed — different slipcovers, drapery — to achieve warmth and coziness or soothe with simplicity.

From whitewashed walls in Colonial times to white lace in the Victorian era, white historically has a wide range of uses. Whether called oyster, eggshell or any other name, white remains popular in its backdrop quality.

Doctors find lack of thirst common among elderly

BOSTON (AP) — For unexplained reasons, the sense of thirst grows weak with age — a development that may lead elderly people to drink less than they need, according to a recent study.

The weakened sense of thirst may lead to dehydration, a common problem among the elderly, said the study in the New England Journal of Medicine.

"If they get into situations where they're losing fluids, they may not be aware of the fact that they need water, because they won't necessarily feel the normal sensation of thirst," said Dr. Barbara J. Rolls of Johns Hopkins, one of the researchers who conducted the study.

"One of the old boys in our study who had gone without any fluids for 24 hours felt no thirst at all," said Ms. Rolls.

Ms. Rolls said most elderly people probably drink enough with their meals. However, problems can arise when people lose fluids because of sickness or some other disturbance and don't compensate by drinking.

She added that nursing homes should be careful to make sure that their patients get enough to drink.

The researchers, while unable to explain why elderly people are less thirsty, noted that other senses, such as taste, fail with age. They said this change might be related to that.

Stay-at-home mothers have special problems

By ANDREE BROOKS
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — There is no office to go to in the morning. Nobody to talk to when problems seem insurmountable during the day. No paycheck at the end of the week. No promotional opportunities. And little social approval to suggest that what is being done is right.

Psychologists and family counselors find that mothers who have chosen to stay at home while their children are small can find themselves coping with a barrage of assaults on their sense of self-worth, far more so than in the days when full-time motherhood was more highly regarded.

"They are often exhausted," said Phyllis Chesler, a psychologist and author of "With Child" (Berkeley Books, $2.95), an account of the devaluation of motherhood. "They are getting no wage, no pension, no financial security. There is no one to pass judgment on their worth. So all they are left with are their own insecurities."

Getting over that loss of confidence and sense of isolation is a primary need of today's full-time mothers. "It's become a serious problem," said Dr. T. Berry Brazelton, chief of child development at Boston Children's Hospital. Although there are no simple solutions, both professionals and mothers themselves say there are ways to ease the burden.

One of the first steps, said Ellen Galinsky, director of the work and family life study project at the Bank Street College of Education, is to accept that society will not provide the crutch as in previous days. "You have to trust to your own instincts," she said. Having that faith in your own decision, she said, is the beginning of a rebuilding of a sense of self.

Lack of social approval for their choice has made support groups vital for many of these mothers, Dr. Brazelton said. As a result he has been starting several such groups for mothers who use the hospital and recommending them elsewhere.

He is also looking into an intergenerational concept he said he has seen work on the West Coast. In these programs, he said, retired people are coupled with new mothers — "sort of as surrogate grandparents" — so that they can offer companionship and assistance.

Some of these support groups could be used to help with some of the household tasks that may have contributed to a lesser sense of self-worth, Dr. Chesler said.

"Not enough is being done," she said, "to change the view that being a mother and homemaker is a private job, something women must handle all alone." Among the shared tasks, she said, might be baby-sitting and shopping.

These mothers should find ways of making time for themselves every day, either through a sitter or a cooperative arrangement with a neighbor, said Sandra Rodman Mann, a family therapist in New York City and adjunct professor of parent education at Fordham University. "Think of it as an extended lunch hour," she said. "Something you have earned. And don't fill it with chores. Have lunch with a friend. Pursue a hobby."

It is also important, Dr. Galinsky said, not to be undermined by the fear that staying home may be jeopardizing a commitment to feminist goals, a conflict she says often occurs among today's young mothers. "Feminism is doing what you believe is right," she said. "And having a choice."

Mothers themselves have their own ways of coping. Gail Silver Schafran, a former credit manager on Wall Street now home with a 2-year-old son, says she makes sure she is out of the house a lot.

DEAR ABBY

Wedding plans weigh heavily in bride-to-be

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My fiance and I plan to be married next June, and I would like to ask my brother and his wife to be honor attendants. My problem is that they are both quite overweight. It's important for me that everything for my wedding be as perfect as possible. Since there is plenty of time until the wedding, I would like to ask them to go on a diet. I know they can do it because they were both thin a few years ago.

How can I make them understand that I am serious about the weight issue without hurting their feelings?

If they refuse to diet, I plan to ask others in their place. — SLIM SISTER

DEAR SLIM: I recommend that you ask others in their place right now. To invite your brother and his wife to be your "honor attendants" on the condition that they lose weight is no honor — it's an insult. Are overweight people any less loving than underweight people? And since you want everything for your wedding to be "perfect," what do you intend to do about your far-from-perfect values?

DEAR ABBY: Last night my wife and I went to our weekly bingo night with hopes of winning a few dollars to put toward outfitting the nursery for the baby we're expecting in three months.

The woman seated across from us heard our conversation about the baby and asked my wife how far along she was. My wife replied cheerfully, "Five and a half months — well beyond the critical period."

With a broad smile, the woman said, "Don't start planning yet, dear; I gave birth to two dead babies before I had a family"!

Abby, how could anybody be so unthinking? It so happened that my wife's first pregnancy ended in a miscarriage, and this time we felt able to relax and plan for our baby.

When I told a friend about the incident, he said, "The lady was right, you know. Even if your wife makes it to the delivery room, the baby could be either stillborn or deformed, and you must be ready for that."

What should we say to these people? — EXPECTING IN CALGARY

DEAR EXPECTING: Don't waste your energy trying to think of something to say to insensitive and ignorant people. Try silence. It speaks volumes.

DEAR ABBY: I'm 16 years old and my love life stinks. I like this kid who has been coming to my house for a year now. He likes to watch TV, make out and eat. (I make fabulous chocolate chip cookies. He can put away a double batch with two quarts of milk.) But, Abby, there are two things wrong with him: 1) He won't make any kind of commitment; 2) he never takes me anywhere.

I'm nothing to be ashamed of, and I am not boring. So what should I do? — GETTING NOWHERE FAST

DEAR GETTING: If he's going to drink your milk and eat your cookies, tell him he has to take you out occasionally. And you may quote me.

DEAR ABBY: I wonder if the general public knows that the waiter or waitress has to pay the check if the person he or she served walks out without paying? — WILMINGTON, DEL., WAITRESS

DEAR WAITRESS: They do now.

Time selected to start new business critical

By ADELE SCHEELE, PH.D.

How to start your own business is a frequent question from readers. I wish the "when to" was also asked, for it is just as critical.

My advice is, usually, to work first for someone else in the same industry to get both experience and perspective. In the process, you also learn about your own capability and ambition. You might realize that you really are a "company man" eager to accept the job at hand and the longer job of serving the organization.

Or, you might realize that you want to make your own decisions. This typically happens when the company has just made the decision to discontinue something that made you happy. Sound strange? I know so many cases that fit it.

I recently heard of someone who left the world's largest computer company to start her own related business. In fact, this very month marks her third anniversary.

Yet Sharon Campbell did not intend to run her own business. For more than a dozen years she piled up experience working as a support person to others — a paralegal and bookkeeper before joining IBM as a marketing and training representative. Nothing showed up on her record to indicate any entrepreneurial skills. It was only when IBM decided it was uneconomical to continue offering training services to its clients that Campbell was pushed into assessing what to do.

She had discovered her zeal for teaching clients how to use microcomputers and word processors. She had even developed unique methods of training them fast and easily because she knew their industries and their fears. Instead of staying at IBM in another position or going to a competitor, she chose to do what she loved.

Easy, you say? But she says the decision to leave left her shaking, physically and visibly. Yet she did it, using her own savings and a $20,000 Small Business Administration loan to start Wordtec Office Systems Institute, in Los Angeles. She had hardly enough to buy computers, rent an office, and print cards. But "hardly enough" was enough even in August '81 at the beginning of the recession.

This week she is opening a second office downtown, to be closer to the bankers and lawyers she serves. She is expanding her staff, buying more computers, writing manuals tailored to each large organization's special needs, and continuing to consult with companies and individuals. Her monthly overhead before she counts the second office is more than the entire SBA loan. Her institute has trained more than 300 clients. New ones are on a waiting list. She has not advertised once.

What does she fear now that her feet are more than wet? Competitors? Not really, since two small training firms backed by large organizations have already failed. Not because they didn't know computers or how to teach; they did. But because they didn't know the industries they were serving. Campbell obviously does.

Does she fear her staff running away with the idea? Not really, because she teaches them how to teach and rewards them for being better than she was. She keeps relationships friendly and personal. She also keeps costs down. When I visited her, a secretary rushed in asking where she might go that day to copy something. Surprised, I asked if she didn't have a copying machine. She smiled and shook her head; every cent goes into computer equipment. Being undercapitalized in a tough market taught her to run a "lean, mean ship."

She's also had to learn managerial skills. Quite apart from her amazing technical capacity to run and maintain computers, she has had to learn how to motivate her staff and delegate responsibility. Again, easy you say. But she started from the point of doing her own filing because she was too embarrassed to ask her secretary to do it.

How she's changed in three years is not a miracle. It comes from need and will. Plus a lot of experimenting. It's no accident that she also had joined the International Word Processing Association and served both as treasurer and director.

Now you say it can't be done? A woman who has cornered a piece of the great computer market will prove you wrong. And inspire you.

Professional trade secrets of parents revealed

By ERMA BOMBECK

With regularity, I get two kinds of letters. One is from young people telling me what rotten kids they are, how they've driven their mothers crazy and how they did things behind their backs that their mothers would disown them for forever.

They write they cannot say what they feel and so their mothers never know how much they love them.

As a parent, I belong to one of the biggest coalitions in the world. Our numbers are awesome. Our P.R. among the best in the world. Our bonds so strong that one mother can look at another one across the room and know exactly what she is thinking. Our methods of maintaining discipline — guilt and respect — are the best-kept secrets of the Western world.

At the risk of revealing a few confidences and jeopardizing our position of authority, there are some things children should know about us.

We came into this world as you did: naked, toothless, unable to communicate, with sub-standard plumbing.

We spilled milk, wet our pants, spit, hurt the dog, sassed, lied, stole, were hostile and made our parents wish they had quit when they got the puppy.

During the period our own children were growing up, we made approximately a quarter of a million decisions on their behalf, most of them based on no experience whatsoever and most of them probably bad ones. We try not to look back.

We talk a lot, but we never seem to say what we mean. We say, "Aren't you going to pick up your room?" like you have a choice. When you answer, "No," we get mad. We should say, "Pick up your lousy room before it catches fire," but we don't want to appear human.

We feel our kids don't trust us. (I know, that's their favorite line.) But it's true. If they did they would tell us the truth — especially when they screw up — and know that we won't self-destruct.

We don't know everything. We just pretend we do to maintain control and figure if we admit that, our kids will have less respect for us.

Ironically, the things our children are ashamed to tell us, we already know. We just don't say anything because we feel it will make you feel better about yourself if you can admit it.

You cannot do anything new under the sun. Any temptation, anything you mess up, anything underhanded, any mistake . . . we've done it . . . and survived it.

We really don't have to be told we are loved. We search hungrily for it every day of our lives and recognize it in a million forms. We can live on something like a homemade card or the first bite out of your ice cream cone for years.

We're human. We bleed when we're hurt, cry when we're unhappy, are disappointed when we fail, and wonder why we're here. That's why it takes a lot for kids to get us out of their lives.

The other kind of letter? They're from women telling me what rotten mothers they are and how they've driven their kids away from home and how they can't bring themselves to say to their children they love them.

For a society that talks a lot . . . we don't say much, do we?

September traditional lawn repair time

Hearst News Service

Getting grass to grow in areas of the lawn damaged by spilled gasoline or neighborhood dogs is relatively easy. Getting it to blend with the existing lawn is a bit tougher.

September is the traditional month for repairing lawns. Days are still warm, but nights are cool and natural rainfall more plentiful. The grass sprouts quickly and grows steadily through October, while roots continue growing well into November.

With such ideal conditions, a handful of seed thrown on a scuffed-up bare spot will probably grow. But it will not thrive to the extent possible without care in selecting seed, preparing the spot and caring for it through fall.

Fertilizer and water are critical to success in repairing a lawn grown from seed or sod, according to Shawn L. McBurney, a research technician and turf grass extension specialist at Michigan State University.

"There is no more critical time for fertilizer than at establishment of the new grass plant," he noted. "Fertilizing then will often be the deciding factor in the new stand making it."

A balanced feeding of 12-12-12 will give the new plant all the nutrients it needs to start well and grow through the cool, favorable fall. Even before grass seed germinates, it is absorbing the nutrients from the fertilizer.

A new grass plant is equally dependent on water, especially in those early hours as the leaf blade emerges and before the root can grow into the soil. Grass seed that dries out before sprouting may eventually sprout when moisture is present and constant. New grass deprived of water for even a few hours after sprouting will die.

Repairs made with sod should be watered every other day. Seed may need light sprinkling twice a day for seven to 14 days.

Popularity predicted for three-wheel cars

Hearst News Service

Three-wheel cars are making a comeback on the American highway — faster, safer and more economical

Two California companies are even producing three-wheelers that are so fast and so much fun that Popular Mechanics' October issue predicts they may become the sports cars of the late 1980s.

The new three-wheelers should also prove to Americans that they are no more likely to flip over in a curve than any other automobile.

One of the new three-wheelers is the Trihawk, made by Hawk Vehicles of Dana Point, Calif. — a car with a top speed of 97 mph that the magazine says is less likely to tip over than any four-wheel car. The Trihawk sells for $14,888.

New cable music network 'wants MTV' — in court

LOS ANGELES (AP) — When MTV burst onto the cable television scene three years ago with its pioneering programming of rock music videos it did so with the slogan, "I want my MTV." Now one of two fledgling competitors wants MTV — in court.

A federal lawsuit, filed earlier this week by Los Angeles-based Discovery Music Network Inc. against MTV Networks Inc., seeks to negate at least five "exclusivity" agreements that allegedly would deny Discovery access to the cream of the new rock video crop for up to a year, Discovery programming director Dain Eric said.

"We're without the videos that count," Eric said.

A pop tune's chart life is rarely longer than six months, let alone a year. The prospect that Discovery may be denied access to hits for such long periods is making it difficult for Discovery to sign up operators, Eric said.

"They (MTV) are locking up, for a significant period of time, the very product our client needs to compete in the marketplace," said Discovery attorney Joel R. Bennett.

But regardless of the lawsuit's outcome, Discovery will go ahead with plans to begin operations Jan. 1. Eric said Discovery hopes to reach 5 million homes via cable and another 10 million to 15 million through low-power broadcasters.

A court victory for Discovery would also benefit a second prospective MTV competitor, Turner Broadcasting Network's Cable Music Network, which is scheduled to start up Oct. 26.

"We haven't been served with any papers yet, so until we find out what it is, we don't have anything to say," MTV spokeswoman Margaret Wade said in a telephone interview from the company's New York headquarters.

MTV, which has had no head-on competition in its three-year history, serves up a non-stop diet of video clips, concerts, rock music news and interviews to more than 20 million cable households across the country.

'Sesame Street' characters speak Maori

ENTERTAINMENT

By BARRY RENFREW

AUCKLAND, New Zealand (AP) — Big Bird, Oscar the Grouch and all the other beloved "Sesame Street" characters have taken to speaking Maori when they appear on television here. But most viewers don't understand a word.

Just as the American producers of the educational childrens' show mix Spanish-language sections into the show, so the New Zealand version substitutes portions with the language of the indigenous Maori people.

Selwyn Muru, a senior director of Maori TV, says "Sesame Street" in English and Maori is part of an effort to help Maoris celebrate their culture while giving other New Zealanders some insight into Maori ways.

"It is also an attempt to try and build some common understanding between the two groups and replace racial divisions with respect," he said."The (white) majority culture has tended to ignore the culture of the indigenous people."

Maoris, a Polynesian race who were living in New Zealand when the first English settlers began arriving early in the last century, make up about 10 percent of the population. Relations between the two races traditionally have been strained, with Maoris complaining of discrimination that leaves many of them unemployed and poor.

Government funded New Zealand TV, which controls the country's two channels, began introducing Maori language programs three years ago in an attempt to give the Maoris a means of expressing and celebrating their culture.

The main English language national newscast is followed each night by Te Karere, a news program in Maori that concentrates on developments in the Maori community. There are also Maori current affairs programs, occasional drama and cultural productions and some childrens' shows.

History of sorts was made during the general election campaign in July when Maori representatives of the four main political parties held a TV debate in their own language for the first time.

Maori TV is helping to give Maoris greater pride and interest in their heritage, Muru said. "We have a distinctive culture and language that the country rarely hears," he said.

But the programs are also having an impact on New Zealanders of European ancestry as they discover the richness of Maori culture, Muru added. "The people of English ancestry are very interested. They're learning a lot," he said."We take a very universal approach. It's not a minority approach."

Maori broadcasters are looking for ways to bridge differences between the two communities, Muru said. A recent program compared Shakespearean plays with traditional Maori tales.

Maori themes are even showing up in popular English language dramatic shows. A recent installment of a police show focused on the problems of Maori teen-agers and how whites and the police respond or fail to respond.

There has been some negative reaction from non-Maoris, especially over programs with strong political views on Maori rights, Muru said.

"They don't like it and we're accused of being communists," he said.

But Muru believes such controversy helps to remind the white community of the problems facing Maoris.

While Maori programs have had an impact, they are not getting the funding they deserve in terms of the number of viewers attracted, Muru said. Maoris make up a tenth of the population, yet their shows get less than 1 percent of funds allocated for television, he said.

"It's so infinitesimal it's not even worth writing home about," he said.

Powerful Indian politician used to playing deities

By WILLIAM K. STEVENS
New York Times News Service

BOMBAY, India — When N.T. Rama Rao speaks to a political rally, many people hear the voice of the Hindu god Krishna or Vishnu or Rama. That's because Rama Rao, who was returned to power recently as chief minister of a southern Indian state, used to play deities when he was a film star.

Monday, a day after forces loyal to Prime Minister Indira Gandhi conceded defeat and reinstated him as chief minister of Andhra Pradesh, Rama Rao's former cinematic persona seemed to figure in the accolades. He has emerged as a political hero as well as a figure around whom the usually fragmented national opposition can rally.

Mrs. Gandhi is thought to have repaired her damaged political image by bowing to the will of the majority in Andhra Pradesh. But the praise for Rama Rao has been something more.

Among many of the rural people of Andhra Pradesh, southeast of here, into whose ranks he was born 61 years ago, Rama Rao is viewed as a palpable demigod.

He looks the part. Tall, broad-shouldered and imposing, with a high forehead, large head, aquiline nose and a profile that served him well in the 320 films he made as a major movie star, he looks as if he could be any of the many Hindu gods he played on the screen.

Press accounts of his return to power called the development a victory for democracy. An English-language daily in Bombay headlined the story "Return of Rama."

Political forces allied with Mrs. Gandhi contrived to oust Rama Rao on the ground that he no longer commanded a majority in the state assembly. As it turned out, he apparently still did command the majority, and his dismissal was seen across the country as a bald, extralegal power grab by the Gandhi camp. It provoked a sustained national outcry.

Indian politics since independence has been a singular blend of idolatry and democratic impulse, and Rama Rao has capitalized on this well enough to make himself the best-known Indian politician of the moment, and possibly the most influential, after Prime Minister Gandhi, whose political power was not enough to prevail against Rama Rao on his home ground.

Lately, N.T.R., as he is called, has burnished this image. There is an air of otherworldliness about him. He has taken to dressing in the ochre robes of a Hindu seeker-after-truth. He always wears the ash mark of Siva on his forehead. He does not drink alcohol, smoke or eat meat. He does yoga. He squats like a benevolent deity atop the 1940s Chevrolet van — his "Chariot of Divine Enlightenment," he calls it — drawing crowds wherever he goes, blessing them with dignity.

There are some who say the identification with things otherworldly goes beyond image. "He is persuaded that it has been God's will that he be Andhra Pradesh's chief minister," S. Sahay, a respected national journalist, wrote in the Statesman this year. "He is equally persuaded that God has bigger things in store for him. He told me as much."

Janet Leigh finally honored for her fine performances

By WILLIAM ARNOLD
Hearst Feature Service

Janet Leigh might well head any list of the most underrated movie stars of the past several decades, but this remarkable actress has given one solid, memorable performance after another for over 30 years and has had the good fortune — or shrewdness — to appear in at least three movies that would make any critic's list of the greatest 50 films of all time: "Touch of Evil" (1958), "Psycho" (1960) and "The Manchurian Candidate" (1962).

Yet Ms. Leigh has never been taken seriously as an actress, possibly because her storybook marriage to Tony Curtis in the '50s made her the darling of the fan magazines. She has always been considered by most critics as little more than a competent personality.

This injustice came to an end at the 11th annual Telluride Film Festival, America's most prestigious annual film event, which honored Ms. Leigh in a special tribute that was the centerpiece of the festival. In ceremonies at the small Colorado town's Sheridan Opera House, British critic and film historian David Thomson described Ms. Leigh as an actress who was able to effectively convey an extraordinary range of qualities — bravery, intelligence, humor and kindness — perhaps better than any other Hollywood actress of her era.

As evidence, Thomson screened for the audience 90 minutes of clips tracing a career that began as an MGM ingenue ("Words and Music") and developed through historical romances ("Scaramouche"), Westerns ("The Naked Spur"), a brief period as Howard Hughes' protege ("Jet Pilot"), a heyday as a mature actress (the three above-mentioned classics and "Harper") and a final appearance co-starring with her daughter, Jamie Lee Curtis ("The Fog").

In a question-and-answer period following the clips, Ms. Leigh explained that her film career was a complete accident. "Norma Shearer saw my picture on my father's desk when he was working as a clerk at a ski lodge. She gave my picture to Lew Wasserman, who gave it MGM's talent department. I know it sounds unbelievable, but they drew up a contract and the day I came to L.A. I had a job."

She described MGM in her early days as "a magic land. It was wonderful to be a young actress under contract. They guided you, gave you lessons, groomed you, allowed you to build a foundation. They also cared about you. They didn't just throw you to the wolves. Today, that's all gone. My daughters are both actresses and they have none of that."

This television season competent professional women arrive in force

By PETER KERR
New York Times News Service

"Now instead of lagging 30 years behind the times, the networks may be only 20 or 15 years behind."
— Dr. George Gerbner
University of Pennsylvania

NEW YORK — When Americans flip on their television sets beginning this week, Geraldine A. Ferraro, the Democratic vice presidential nominee, won't be the only woman they see in a role traditionally reserved for men. On new prime-time series this season a surprising number of leading characters will be women, including the head of a national advertising agency, a fashion industry mogul, a psychiatrist, a news reporter, space commanders — both good and evil — in an intergalactic war, and a legion of new recruits to television's already burgeoning army of female crime fighters.

The new characters together represent something of a watershed in the way the networks depict women on prime-time television, according to network executives, advertising agencies and feminist activists who monitor the image of women on television. After decades in which the three networks resisted giving women lead roles on prime-time dramatic series or casting female characters with authority over men, this season the competent professional woman has arrived in force. Indeed, leading roles for women have broken out of the narror confines of comedy and are taking on the kinds of serious endeavors until now reserved mostly for males.

"There is nothing coincidental about this trend," says Harvey Shephard, the CBS senior vice president, programs. "Traditionally, if you used women in prominent roles, well, you could get away with it in comedy or the woman could be a sex symbol, but ultimately they had to be in non-threatening roles.

"But there is really a sociological change going on," Shephard adds. "We are finding that there is a growing acceptance of the more liberated role of women. Our schedule reflects that."

OF THE 22 NEW prime-time series that are making their debut this fall, eight feature women in strong leading roles. In two other series, the comic premise places men in the traditionally female role of a live-in housekeeper. In addition, two shows with women as the title characters that CBS introduced late last season, "Cagney and Lacey" and "Kate & Allie," will return in the fall. CBS discovered that both programs appealed heavily to women 25 to 54, a group particularly desirable to advertisers.

Among CBS's new entries this season are "Cover Up," about two criminal investigators who operate under cover as a male model and female photographer, and "Murder, She Wrote," in which Angela Lansbury plays a mystery writer who uses unorthodox methods to solve crimes.

ABC launches "Jessie," featuring Lindsay Wagner as a police psychiatrist, "Glitter," in which Morgan Brittany plays a tireless magazine reporter, and "Paper Dolls," with Morgan Fairchild as the ruler of a large New York modeling agency.

NBC's new line-up includes "Partners in Crime," about two women who operate a San Fracisco detective agency, "Hunter," about two police officers, one male, one female, "Hot Pursuit," a husband and wife running from a false murder charge, and "V," a science-fiction series that features women as leaders on both sides of an earth-ling-alien conflict. Two other new programs, ABC's "Who's the Boss?" and CBS's "Charles in Charge," cast men in the roles of homemakers while the woman of house is the breadwinner.

NBC has also studied audience reaction to new women characters, according to Michele Brustin, the NBC vice president for drama development. "We found that when a female cop lifted up a gun, jumped off a balcony or did other things that men traditionally do," she says, "they really did well in audience response."

SUCH RESEARCH was hardly lost on the network's programmers. NBC is planning to introduce more dramas with female leads in action adventure programs in mid-season, Miss Brustin says. But, she adds, certain taboos for women characters may remain.

"It is still going to be hard to make a show with a single lead woman," she says. "And there is still concern about a woman punching out a guy on the screen."

Yet, Kathy Bonk, the director of the Media Reform Project of the National Organization for Women Legal Defense Fund, a group that has often criticized the networks for the way they depict women, says that "this season is greatly different than anything we've seen in the past. There are going to be about a half-dozen shows that are nearly ideal for the portrayal of women.

"I think," Miss Bonk continues, "this signals a recognition by the networks that to attract employed women as viewers, they have to present them in different ways."

But several critics of the networks say they are reserving judgment about how much more realistically women will be portrayed during this season in their ostensibly different roles. Dr. George Gerbner, the dean of the Annenberg School of Communications at the University of Pennsylvania, which has studied the sexual roles on television since 1967, questions whether the change in women on television even begins to catch up with the growing number of women entering the American workforce.

"Now instead of lagging 30 years behind the times," Gerbner says, "the networks may be only 20 or 15 years behind."

THE PARADE OF STRONG female characters this year came as a result of several factors, according to people inside the television industry. Writers, producers and other members of the "creative" community in Hollywood say they sensed that competent, dynamic women were needed to ensure the shows' success. Also, they say, a recent dearth of good leading roles for women in films has increased the number of established actresses available for television series.

At the same time, the networks have been closely studying viewer reaction to female characters and the demographic make-up of audiences for dramatic series that feature assertive roles for women. They concluded not only that America was ready for women in stong dramatic roles this year, but that women characters made sense for the networks' profitability.

They were the sex sirens of the '60s. One earthy and exotic; the other vulnerable and kittenish. Now, Sophia Loren and Brigitte Bardot are turning 50.

For Miss Loren, the years have been gracious. She looks upon her half-century birthday on Thursday as "a wonderful thing. You are born, you grow older and there's nothing wrong with it."

For Miss Bardot, the years have been awash with tears. She is reclusive and depressed, according to various reports. "It's really tough to age ... It's half a century. Welcome to the senior citizens' club," she said in an interview with Paris Match last July.

The French actress was a seductive sex kitten, whose perfect body, cascade of blond hair and dark, haunting eyes became legend after she made "And God Created Woman" in 1956.

After that, she made about 40 other films before going into retirement 11 years ago in her native France and devoting her life to the defense of animals.

"For me, life always has fresh beginnings. I have a very, very positive nature. In life, you have to work and do creative things and keep busy."
— Sophia Loren

Now, Miss Bardot usually hides behind sunglasses and seldom shows her face in public. Her birthday is Sept. 28; on her last one, she tried to kill herself.

She said she lives simply today, "no makeup, straight hair, with the lines on my face. You'll never see me in a gold lame dress again. ..."

She said she has never considered cosmetic surgery for her wrinkles: "Even as a grandmother, I prefer to be alive, to say what I have to say, than be a mask of reinforced concrete."

As for Miss Loren, there are no regrets. "I think my life has gone the way I wanted it to go," she said in a recent interview with The Associated Press. " I did things I never thought I was going to do. ... I appreciate so much what I have.

"For me, life always has fresh beginnings. I have a very, very positive nature. In life, you have to work and do creative things and keep busy."

Miss Loren, who won an Academy Award in 1961 for her performance in "Two Women," has just published a book, "Women and Beauty" (William Morrow & Co., $19.95), has a new perfume for Coty and a new made-for-TV movie, "Aurora."

The book, she said, is more than just another beauty-fashion tome. "I want to give the reader a mature look on the qualities we all have inside, like warmth and wisdom and intelligence," she said. "It's really a book about me and reflects what I think and what I feel about women and elegance."

More than 8,950 Argentine leftists 'missing' in crackdown

By KEVIN NOBLET
Associated Press Writer

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina — An investigative commission says at least 8,961 people — probably many more — disappeared during the former military regime's anti-leftist crackdown, with most of them abducted to torture camps and then killed in Argentina's "most savage" tragedy.

After the commission's report was delivered to President Raul Alfonsin on Thursday night, demonstrators in a crowd estimated at 70,000 rallied outside the presidential palace to urge the government to punish those responsible.

Alfonsin set up the commission immediately after taking office in December, ending nearly eight years of military rule. The commission said it documented the cases of 8,961 people who disappeared after March 1976, when the military took power and launched a campaign to wipe out leftist terrorism which gripped the nation in the early- and mid-1970s.

But the report said the actual number of missing people is probably "much higher" because relatives were afraid to talk.

It said the majority of victims were innocent of involvement in terrorist activities.

The report, containing 50,000 pages of testimony, evidence and conclusions, said: "We are certain that what the dictatorship produced was the greatest tragedy in our history — and the most savage."

"Human rights were violated in an organic and official manner through the repression by the armed forces," said the National Commission on the Disappearance of Persons. "And not violated sporadically but systematically, ...with similar abductions and identical torments across the entire country."

Only a 20-page summary of the report was made public. Alfonsin has not said if he will release the entire report, including the names of any military men blamed by the commission.

Hundreds of military officials are believed to have been implicated in the full report.

Alfonsin said the report would be passed along to the courts but did not specify what they might do.

The repression was aimed mainly at groups the rightist armed forces considered "enemies of Western and Christian values," the summary said.

"Everyone fell into the net: labor leaders fighting for a simple raise in salaries; youngsters that were members of student groups; journalists who were not addicts of dictatorship; psychologists and sociologists for belonging to suspect professions; pacifist youths, monks and priests who tried to carry the teachings of Christ to miserable neighborhoods; and whatever friends they had, or friends of those friends, people who were named through personal vengeance or by captives under torture," the commission said.

Many victims were abducted at their homes, beaten, dragged away to a detention center and almost always tortured, it said.

"Torture was an essential element of the methodology used. The clandestine detention centers were conceived, among other things, for practicing it with impunity," the summary said.

While saying it did not want its report to emerge simply as "an encyclopedia of horror," the commission cited testimony from some survivors who described being tortured.

"Of some of the methods employed, there are no known antecedents in other parts of the world," the commission said. "There are many statements of children and old ones being tortured in front of a relative."

The summary said:"The armed forces responded to the crimes of the terrorists with a terrorism infinitely worse than that of the combatant, because after March 24, 1976, they used the absolute power and impunity of the state, kidnapping, torturing and killing thousands of human beings."

Many pregnant women were arrested and bore children in captivity before they were presumably killed, the summary said. Those infants, as well as young children of abducted parents, were divided up "like war booty," the commission said. Many of the children are believed to have been sold or given to other families.

"Many families were unwilling to disclose abductions because of fear of reprisals," the commission said, explaining why it felt its count of the missing was conservative. "And they still are unwilling, out of a fear of resurgence of these evil forces."

Alfonsin has vowed to punish armed forces members who violated human rights but has concentrated on a handful of top commanders. He has ordered a military tribunal to prosecute nine members of juntas that ruled after the 1976 coup. The tribunal has yet to announce any verdicts.

Human rights groups, contending military courts will favor the defendants, want civilian judges to handle the cases. They also want middle- and lower-ranking officers to be prosecuted.

Submarine may have left Sea of Japan

TOKYO (AP) — A Soviet ballistic-missile submarine, spotted drifting in the Sea of Japan with smoke pouring from its conning tower, disappeared overnight and may have left the area, a Defense Agency spokesman said today.

The spokesman said surveillance aircraft from the Maritime Safety Agency, which had monitored the submarine's movements through much of Thursday, were unable to locate the craft this morning.

On Thursday, Defense Agency officials said a Japanese patrol plane observed the Soviet Golf II class submarine drifting 54 miles northwest of Okinoshima, a cluster of islands off the west coast of Honshu, Japan's main island. They said white smoke was coming from the conning tower, indicating that the submarine may have had a fire on board.

Pontiff completes his Canadian pilgrimage

Associated Press

OTTAWA — With a final appeal to Canadians to be "peacemakers hungering for justice," Pope John Paul II completed his coast-to-coast pilgrimage and today returned home.

In the last sermon of his 12-day, 8,500-mile journey in Canada, the pope Thursday urged 250,000 people in a windswept riverside park to "seek untiringly the ways which lead to justice and peace."

During his exhausting travels, the 64-year-old pontiff defended conservative church doctrine on sex, while calling on modern society to put the needs of workers and the poor ahead of the drive for profit.

The pope's special Air Canada jetliner landed in Rome this morning, and Vatican officials said John Paul will rest until next Wednesday at his summer residence in nearby Castel Gandolfo. But he will be on the move again soon, flying to Spain, the Dominican Republic and Puerto Rico Oct. 10-12.

Talking to reporters aboard the flight home, the pontiff said he may write a new encyclical — an authoritative form of papal teaching — on social issues he raised during his pilgrimage to update the teachings of Pope Paul VI.

Asked about the debate in the United States over religion and politics, the pope said "the church cannot be involved in politics as such. But the church has a duty to express itself — herself — in all moral problems of the politics."

"Of course it is possible for a Catholic to be a politician. She should, he should follow his Christian conscience being a politician," he said.

For his final homily Thursday, John Paul expanded on a line from the Sermon on the Mount: "Happy the peacemakers: They shall be called children of God."

The pope, his hair fluttering in the wind, said all humanity is threatened by the nuclear arms race and hunger.

"It is necessary to protect people from death — millions of people — from nuclear death and death from starvation," he said.

GAO study supports charge that UNESCO wastes money

WASHINGTON (AP) — A General Accounting Office study of UNESCO supports the Reagan administration's argument that the 161-member international agency wastes money because of sloppy management practices.

The Reagan administration has given formal notice that it will pull out of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at year's end, charging the agency with irresponsible budgetary growth and mismanagement, and with promoting anti-Western policies.

The GAO draft report, which did not address the administration's political objections to the agency, was prepared after its management consultants and systems analysts studied the UNESCO in Paris from April 1 to July 15.

The review was arranged in February by Rep. James H. Scheuer, D-N.Y., with UNESCO Director-General Amadou Mahtar M'Bow.

The report, a copy of which was obtained by The Associated Press, was submitted this week to UNESCO, the State Department and some congressmen for comments to be included in the final version.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Grenada plans election

ST. GEORGE'S, Grenada (AP) — The interim government has set Dec. 3 as the date for Grenada's first general election since 1976, the final step in restoring parliamentary rule after last year's U.S.-led invasion to oust a leftist regime.

Sir Paul Scoon, Grenada's governor general, announced the election in a 15-minute radio speech Thursday night. About 50,000 of the eastern Caribbean island's 110,000 residents will be eligible to vote

Officials had predicted an election would be held before the end of the year to restore constitutional government in Grenada, a member of the Commonwealth of Britain and its former colonies.

Salvadoran rebels attack

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Leftist rebels stepped up their guerrilla campaign against the U.S-backed government by derailing a freight train, shooting down a crop-dusting plane and raiding army posts in three Salvadoran towns.

In Honduras, 6,000 workers and students marched in the capital Thursday to protest the presence of 2,000 U.S. soldiers taking part in the latest of a series of joint military manuevers that began in February 1983.The march in Tegucigalpa was organized by a labor federation.

In Nicaragua, an opposition party source said the leftist Sandinista government has "tentatively" agreed to an opposition demand to postpone the planned Nov. 4 elections until Jan. 15.

The report was not confirmed. Defense Minister Humberto Ortega said earlier this week it was too late for a postponement, but he later held out the possibility that the main opposition coalition, currently barred from the campaign because it refused to register, may be allowed to participate.

Bokassa wants to go home

HARDRICOURT, France (AP) — Five years after losing his throne, self-styled Central African Emperor Jean-Bedel Bokassa says his income is so depleted his children are foraging for food on the grounds of his chateau, and he wants to go home.

Bokassa was accused of atrocities before he was toppled by a French-supported coup while on a visit to Libya in 1979. On Thursday, he appealed for sympathy at a news conference he called at the chateau, 25 miles west of Paris, where he has lived for nearly a year.

The 64-year-old Bokassa angrily denied charges by Amnesty International and the government in his native Central African Republic that he once ordered the slaughter of schoolchildren. He was sentenced to death in absentia on Dec. 25, 1980, for atrocities.

Briton with pistol arrested

BRACKNELL, England (AP) — Authorities say a man with a starting pistol was arrested as he stalked Princess Anne, Queen Elizabeth II's only daughter, during a royal visit to a shopping precinct.

British newspapers Thursday quoted witnesses of the arrest as saying he told the officers: "I was going to shoot her." Police declined comment on the reports.

Princess Anne, 34, was not hurt in the incident, which occurred Wednesday. Police did not identify the man.

The Sun tabloid reported that the pistol had been converted to fire live shells. Police refused comment.
