Councilmen vote support for MIDTRAN

By JIM STEINBERG

Car pools and van pools, along with the purchase of from five to 10 vans, may be the solution to Midland's transportation needs.

That conclusion, drawn from an extensive study by the Transportation Systems Division of General Motors, was announced to the Midland City Council during its meeting Tuesday.

GM project engineer Paul Forney told the City Council that a combination of "fixed route-fixed schedule" bus service and "demand responsive" service might be the best alternative for Midland, but "the management and scheduling of such a system is too sophisticated for a system starting up."

Forney was part of a team hired by a special transportation task force of the Midland Chamber of Commerce this summer to study Midland's transportation needs and produce a plan to meet those needs.

Traditional bus service was ruled out as a possible public transportation mode in Midland. Because of the demographics of Midland, it is doubtful that the service would attract sufficient riders, Forney said.

Although the central business district of Midland would justify the fixed route-fixed schedule service, analysis of travel patterns indicated that most work trips to this area are made from residential sections with the highest auto availability.

The combination of car pools and van pools to the central business district and other major employment centers would meet the existing levels of demand with the greatest cost efficiency, Forney said.

John Ingram, chairman of the chamber's transportation task force, said after the council meeting that a non-profit corporation would be formed within six to eight weeks to coordinate and manage MIDTRAN, a transportation agency designed to implement these transportation ideas.

Ingram added that the new transportation agency would be operational in six to eight months.

A non-profit agency approach to transportation management in Midland would best be able to provide representation of all sectors of Midland and "could enhance the initial coordination efforts of existing transportation agencies," said Forney.

Ingram noted that by taking the transportation burden off many social agencies now serving transportation needs as a "sideline," these agencies could return to the tasks they were originally chartered to perform.

After hearing the transportation development program presentation, the City Council unanimously voted to support a resolution that the Transportation Task Force of the Midland Chamber of Commerce "legally and properly organize a non-profit private entity for the purpose of providing public transportation to the citizens of Midland."

The GM study determined there were 10,734 "one-way person trips" per month that would be served with the establishment of a demand responsive transportation system.

This demand responsive transportation system proposed for Midland would provide door-to-door service, with intermediate stops to pick up and drop off people sharing a ride. A person would call a dispatcher and request service. A vehicle, usually a van, would then pick up the prospective rider, the GM report said.

A breakdown of the 10,734-rider figure includes 3,650 one-way trips provided by existing social service transportation agencies and projection of 3,084 trips not provided for by these or other social agencies.

In addition, the Texas Employment Commission reports that approximately 100 persons cannot be employed because of a transportation need. Assuming these people would make two trips per day to and from work, the equivalent need is 4,000 one-way person trips, according to the GM study draft.

To serve these needs, Forney proposed MIDTRAN operate either a five-vehicle system, costing between $45,000 and $75,000 or a 10-vehicle system, costing between $90,000 and $150,000.

The annual operating cost for the five-vehicle system would be $138,000, compared to $243,600 for a 10-vehicle system.

Van pooling would require the purchase of vans by various employers for their employees' use to and from work. The employees would be charged fares to cover the operating expenses and capital outlays for the van.

According to the transportation draft, car pooling and van pooling programs should be implemented at the central business district, the Midland Regional Air Terminal and

Erskine pursuing lawsuit against Edison principal

Refusing to accept an apology from Edison Freshman School Principal R L. Williams in connection with the deaths Friday of several hundred birds at the school, Midge Erskine, a Midland bird rehabilitator, said today she will go ahead with her law suit against the principal.

Mrs. Erskine Friday filed a complaint with Assistant City Attorney Bill Clifton against Williams, who she said, admitted firing three shots at the birds Thursday night.

Williams broke the Midland bird sanctuary ordinance, prohibiting the killing of birds here, she said. "I've been working for six years to get people educated so that they know they can't do that," she said.

Mrs. Erskine appeared before the Midland public school Board of Education Tuesday. She accused Williams and Assistant Principal Tex Paris of lying to her about the deaths of the birds.

She said Edison students were "appalled" at the "inhumane treatment" of the wounded birds that Friday, which she said was instigated by Paris.

Bringing a bag of the dead birds with her to the board meeting, Mrs. Erskine told the trustees that these birds had been crushed and some had been shot. She also said, "there has to be a poison situation there."

She said her earlier estimation of 2,000 birds killed was wrong and that more than 2,000 had died.

Board President Johnny Warren said he thought the principal "definitely used an error of judgment" in handling the bird problem, but there was no use in "dragging his name" through the National Audubon Society or the public.

He said Williams told him the birds "were driving him crazy" and that he had tried to do something about the problem. Warren than said Williams was willing to make a public apology.

The board will take any action against Williams or Paris it thinks is justified, Warren said.

Mrs. Erskine asked the trustees why nothing had been done about the bird problem prior to the incident.

"Students are walking through an inch of bird droppings," she said. She said this was creating a health problem.

Mrs. Erskine suggested that Edison install a sprinkler system in the school where the birds were roosting. She said if the sprinklers are turned on early in the evening and kept on un-

Justice to seek order blocking school elections

By MARLEEN RAY

Midland public schools attorney Charles Tighe said Tuesday he received word from the U.S. Justice Department that it will seek a restraining order from the U.S. district court in Dallas today to prevent the school district from holding trustee elections April 1.

If the restraining order is granted to the department, Tighe said it will ask for a temporary injunction. "There very likely will be a hearing within 10 days on the injunction," he said.

At the hearing, Tighe said the district will try to have the effect of the injunction postponed until after the elections in the interest of the voters.

"If we're not able to do that, the April 1 elections most likely will not take place," he said. He would not hazard a guess at this point of what the outcome would be.

In the event an injunction is given to the Justice Department, Tighe said the district would have to obtain further instructions from the department concerning scheduling new elections.

"We would have to start from scratch with elections to be reset," he said.

Currently, the Justice Department is suing the Midland school district and several other districts in Texas to comply with the federal Voting Rights Act of 1965. The school district is contending it is not covered by the act since it is not a political subdivision and does not register voters.

However, in a recent decision, the U.S. Supreme Court said school districts are covered under the Voting Rights Act, and therefore, the Justice Department is contending any changes made in Texas school district election systems since 1964 must be cleared by the department first in order to determine whether they might abridge the rights of minorities.

The Midland school district changed its election system to a place system with majority vote requirement in 1973. Prior to that, it had an at-large system with those candidates who received the most votes winning.

Tighe said the Justice Department prefers the at-large system as opposed to the place system because it believes it is much harder for a minority candidate to get elected in a place system.

He said the school district must go to the Justice Department to get any

'Frat rats' planning to roll out the barrel

ALPINE — The 16-gallon keg the "frat rats" will be a'rolling northward from Alpine for 330 miles will be empty and well banged-up.

You can count on that.

And you can also count on some real, live cool kegs of beers being hauled alongside to keep the 120 fraternity guys in condition for the weekend roil to Lubbock.

This day-and-night push that's to start in Alpine at 7 p.m. Friday is billed as the "World's Longest Keg Roll." Could be.

Other than for the endurance the big push will require, it doesn't seem any more daft than the old pranks of college kids piling into a phone booth or a VW beetle, swallowing live goldfish or slivers of raw liver, or raiding a girls' dorm and flying the coeds' lingerie from the nearest flag pole.

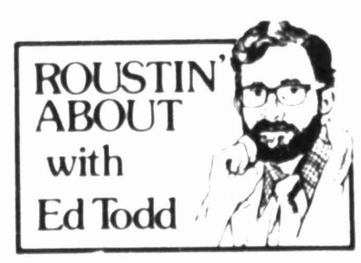

But it — the keg roll — is out of the ordinary.

And Lynn Caffey is banking on the unusuality of the roll to drum up publicity and cash for the cause for which the the Tau Kappa Episilon fraternity men will be toiling.

Businesses and folks will be donating money for each mile the keg is rolled. The income, which Caffey estimates between $5,000 and $10,000, will go to the Memphis, Tenn.-based St. Jude's Children's Hospital, founded by actor-comedian Danny Thomas.

It's a cinch that the alternating keg rollers and their fraternity brothers in cars, vans and pickups gladly will accept handouts along the route.

Joining in on the fun will be TKEs from Sul Ross State University at Alpine, the University of Texas at El Paso, New Mexico State University at Las Cruces, and Texas Tech University at Lubbock.

The Tech bunch will join in on the task when the battered keg clangs into Midland-Odessa, said Caffey, who is president of the TKE chapter at Sul Ross.

The 330-mile roll will take in such communities, towns and cities as Fort Stockton, Grandfalls, Royalty, Monahans, Penwell, Odessa, Midland, Stanton, Big Spring, Ackerly, O'Donnell, Woodrow and, finally, Lubbock.

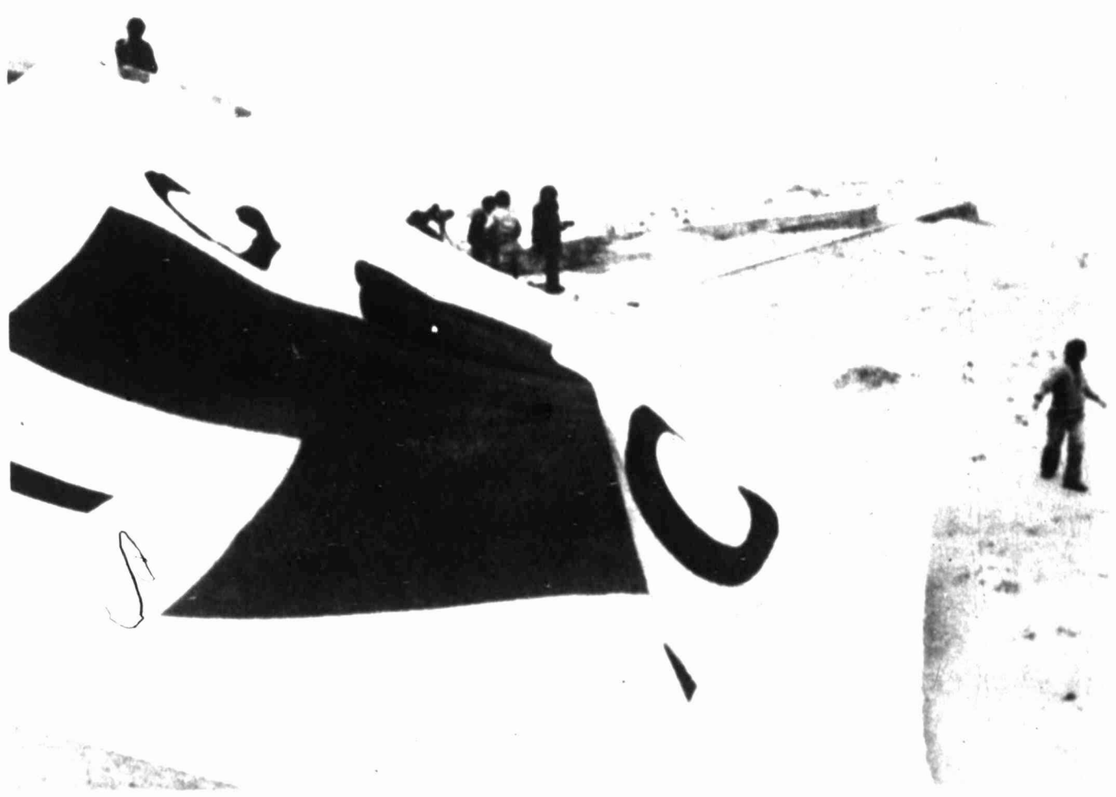

The sweaty troops are to hit Lubbock between 2 and 4 p.m. Monday, said Coffey, who just happens to claim one of the route's towns — Stanton — as his home town.

Idea for the keg roll, which borderlines on the absurd, came from Sul Ross TKE'er Kenny Ersch of Fredericksburg.

It's an original . . . at least for West Texas.

A bonus in the keg roll, Caffey told The Reporter-Telegram on Tuesday, is the setting of a beer-keg rolling record for the "Guinness Book of International Red Cross personnel hoist large flag today on the Lebanese coast near Tyre as Israeli troops invaded southern Lebanon. (AP Laserphoto)

Israelis drive guerrillas from Lebanese positions

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Thousands of Israeli invaders drove Palestinian guerrillas from major strongholds across southern Lebanon today and launched air attacks against the Sabra refugee camp outside Beirut, widening their offensive to the nation's capital.

The aim of the attack was to clear a guerrilla-free strip along Israel's northern border and deter repetitions of the terrorist raid last weekend in which 33 Israelis died. It was believed to be the biggest Israeli assault ever, and the Palestinians said 25,000 Israeli soldiers were involved.

Witnesses said Israeli jets swooped down in pairs from cloud-filled skies and fired rockets at the Sabra camp, home for some 20,000 refugees and base of Yasser Arafat's military command.

"I saw eight sweeps by the planes, each time firing four rockets. It is difficult to see what was hit," Associated Press photographer Farouk Nassar said.

Witnesses also said Israeli missile boats teamed up with long-range artillery in murderous barrages that set off several fires in two Palestinian camps at the port city of Tyre, 12 miles north of the Israeli frontier.

They said ambulances with wailing sirens and guerrilladriven Land-Rovers sped out of the smoking camps with full loads of victim and that guerrillas commandeered taxis to transport victims to hospitals in Sidon, 25 miles north of Tyre.

Health Minister Ibrahim Sheito ordered hospitals throughout the country to stay open around the clock because of the casualties and appealed for nationwide blood donations.

Lebanon's Moslem premier, Salim el Hoss, called the invasion "unjustified aggression" and appealed for international intervention to bring it to a quick end. But there was no immediate comment from the country's Christian president, Elias Sarkis.

Reliable observers in southern Lebanon said the Israelis overran at least four key Palestinian bases, gaining control of Naqoura and the inland towns of Bent Jbeil, Maroun al Ras, Khiam and Ebl as Saqi.

The Israeli command in Tel Aviv said its troops crossed the border at six points, from Naqoura on the Mediterranean to Alhiam near the Lebanon Mountains. The command said the ground forces were about five miles into Lebanon and the air force struck deeper.

Defense Minister Ezer Weizman and Lt. Gen. Mordechai Gur said most of the guerrilla strongholds attacked were overrun and scores of terrorists were killed. They reported Israel also suffered casualties but said it was too soon to say how many.

Gur told a news conference in Tel Aviv that Israel planned to create a five-mile-deep "cordon sanitaire" north of the Lebanese frontier that would link up the Christian enclaves which Israeli artillery has been helping to defend against the Palestinians and their leftist Lebanese allies.

Weizman said controlling the area "does not necessarily mean you have to physically be there all the time." He said the invasion force would withdraw when it completed its mission, but Israel would continue "to keep order" in the area if the Lebanese government did not.

The defense minister said Israel has no territorial claims on the area. "It was, is, and will be seen as part of Teachers' aides verdict tabled

While agreeing to keep the full-day, multi-age kindergarten program at Rusk, Long and Burnett Elementary schools, the Midland public schools Board of Education voted Tuesday to table its decision on whether to provide teachers' aides for the rest the district until its next meeting March 28.

Of the 15 kindergarten organization plans, board members reached a consensus on the seventh alternative, calling for full-day programs at all Title I schools and half-day sessions at all non-Title I schools while maintaining the multi-age programs.

Gail Ashby, coordinator of early childhood education, said this would involve implementing full-day programs at Pease, South and Travis Elementary schools at a total personnel cost of $562,800. With the addition of aides for each self-contained class, the total personnel cost would be $700,050. If every teacher were given an aide under this plan, the personnel expense would amount to $751,900. Currently, personnel costs in the kindergarten program add up to $497,550.

Board President Johnny Warren said people seem satisfied with the present organization, but a "definite need" exists for full-day programs at the Title I schools which do not have them now.

Schools Superintendent Dr. James Malley said the best educational plan would be the establishment of the full-day program district-wide. He said he would prefer keeping the full-day, multi-age programs and moving toward full-day programs for the rest of the district.

Board member Ann Page said although the board recognizes the success of the multi-age program, she would like to see the kindergarten staffing equalized throughout the district. She spoke out in favor of adding aides to self-contained classes.

However, Malley said the administration does not recommend hiring any additional aides.

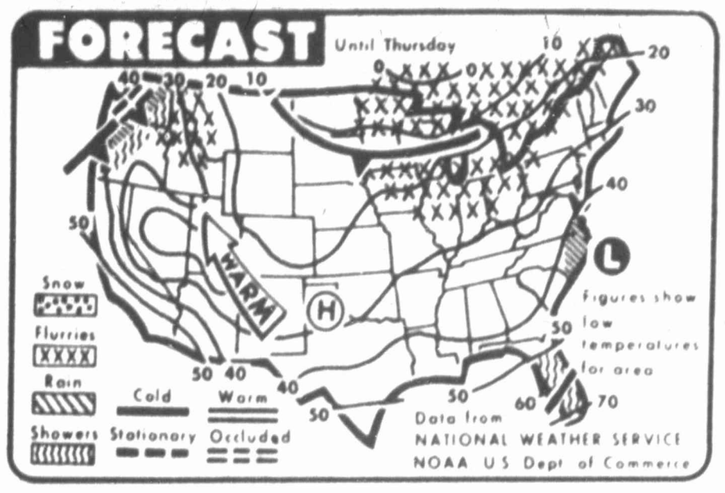

Doug Brown, assistant superintendent of instructional services, said hiring more aides would decrease the adult-pupil ratio in these classes so much that it would become too expensive.

He said current adult-pupil ratios in half-day programs and in full-day, multi-age programs are equal, but with the addition of the aides, the half-day programs would have more staff members.

He noted that although teachers in

Faster enrollment growth likely at Midland High, official reports

By MARLEEN RAY

Population trends in Midland seem to indicate Midland High School will experience faster growth than Lee High School due to expansion in rural areas and northwest Midland, Payton Cook, director of pupil and community services for Midland public schools, said Tuesday.

In a report to the Board of Education, Cook said the city's population was in a "state of flux," making it difficult to say for certain whether the school district will have any appreciable growth.

He said northwest Midland, the "Bald Prairie" area, seems to be growing. "The 'Bald Prairie' isn't bald any more," he said.

Even though it seems that high school students from northwest Midland would attend Lee High, Cook said some of these students are assigned to Midland High due to boundary changes made earlier to equalize enrollment between the schools.

Although rural areas are developing, Cook said whether this trend will continue is debatable. He said tentative plans to increase the size of rural trailer courts here could cause schools, especially Henderson Elementary School, to fill up rapidly.

Board President Johnny Warren pointed out that most rural high school students were bused to Midland High. He said the board needs to decide which future rural bus routes will go to Midland High and which will be assigned to Lee High. He said the board at least ought to allocate some of the new rural routes to Lee High.

However, board member Joe Dominey said the board has to be careful that enrollments at both schools remain relatively equal.

Board member Ed Runyan said the board should determine which school to send students of developing areas to early so that the growth does not catch the district by surprise.

In his analysis of population trends, Cook noted that enrollment has declined in all grades except for first. He said he couldn't explain this, but he thought the increase in the number of first graders this school year may be due in part to former private school students returning to the public school system.

He said that younger families are moving into Midland, and this may account for the decrease in upper-grade levels.

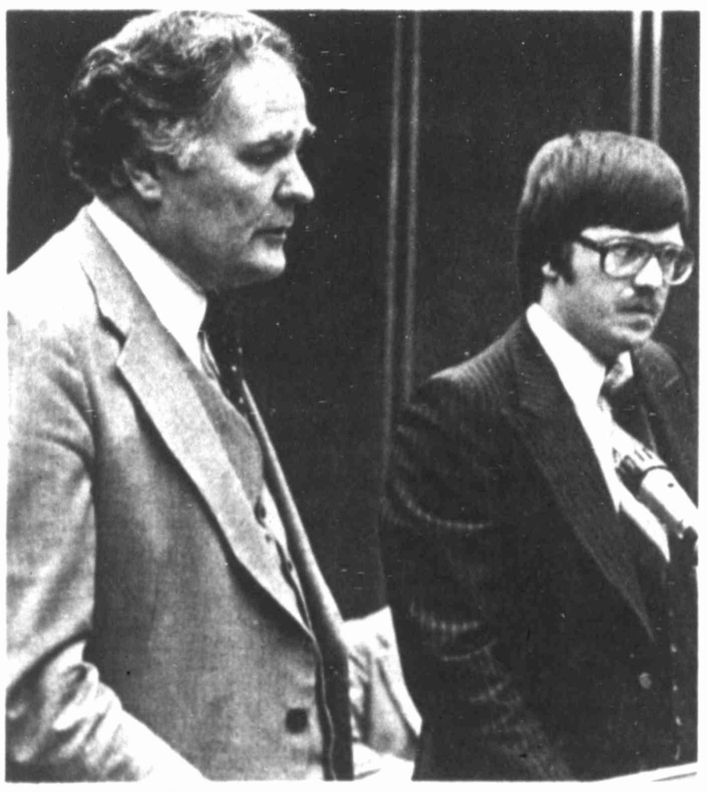

"It's difficult to put your finger on it," he said.

Cook said part of the decline in enrollment may be explained by the "expanded family idea." He said when some children are grown, they move out of their family's home and into one of their own. He said this has no impact on the growth of the school system.

In addition, he said single persons and families without children, although they have a demand for more housing, do not affect the school system's growth.

Disagreeing with the claim that enrollment declines are due to increased student enrollment in private schools, Cook said private school attendance in pre-school to 12th grade has increased by 113 students from the past school year. But he said since the increase is distributed evenly among the grade levels, it's not as great a number as it first appears to be.

He said many students enrolled in private, pre-school programs attend first grade in the public school system.

Welfare administrator tells needs of elderly

By BROOKS KELLER

The greatest unmet social problem in the country today is finding a way to keep the elderly in their own homes and out of nursing homes, a state welfare executive said in Midland Tuesday.

He was Jim Harvey, West Texas regional administrator for the Texas Department of Human Resources.

"We must develop homemaker and foster care services that will keep them in their own homes and communities," said Harvey, who works out of El Paso.

As an example, he told of an elderly lady in Terlingua. She tried a stay in a nursing home, hated it, then left it and went back to her home in Terlingua.

A state investigation showed that if she could get the services of a homemaker to do the heavy housekeeping once a week, she could get along fine in spite of her advanced years.

This was done. The homemaker visits cost the state about $100 per month. The monthly charge to the state while the woman was in the nursing home was $400 a month.

Harvey was in Midland to get public comment on state welfare programs from 1979 through 1981. He and members of his staff spoke to and fielded questions from an audience of about 100 persons in the American Legion Hall.

The second most urgent social problem facing the state and nation, he said in an interview prior to the public meeting, is strengthening the protective system for abused and neglected children.

According to literature passed out at the meeting, two on-going problems in connection with these children are the recruitment of adequate foster homes and adoptive parents for children under DHR conservatorship.

"In meeting the needs of these children, we need better staffing at every level, and the court system needs to take a second look at its role," Harvey said.

Citizen input into welfare programs was required by the Title 20 section of the federal Social Security Act, he said. Title 20 appropriates money to the states for many welfare programs.

Jerome Chapman, DHR state commissioner, believes in this approach, Harvey said, and the meeting here Tuesday and another in Odessa today are part of that effort to inform the public on welfare problems and to learn from the public what it thinks of those programs.

On another subject, Tony Ortiz, DHR regional Director for financial services, said he expected an increase in the food stamp case load in the future because of the passage of new legislation by Congress.

Under the present system, he said, a food stamp recipient may pay $20 for $50 of food stamps. Under the new system, he would pay nothing and would receive $30 in food stamps.

Long lines may greet visitors to department's vehicle division

With only 2½ weeks left, long lines may be in store for those who have not yet obtained their 1978 motor vehicle registration validation stickers, predicted Bob Townsley, director of the motor vehicle division of the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation.

Deadline for obtaining validation stickers is March 31.

Elmo Linebarger, Midland County tax assessor-collector, said that, as of today, his office had issued 36,293 stickers. At this time last year, 34,181 stickers had been issued.

By the end of March 1977, 60,674 stickers were issued. Linebarger estimated that 68,000 stickers would be issued by the end of March 1978.

"That means we have about 32,000 stickers to issue in two weeks, where we've issued only 36,293 in about 2½ months," he said.

Linebarger added that the tax office would be closed March 24 for Good Friday and would not be open April 1, which is a Saturday.

Otherwise, the office will be open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Penalty for driving with an expired registration sticker is a fine and a 20 percent penalty added to the registration fee, Linebarger said.

To register, the owner must bring his renewal notice or the vehicle's title and current registration receipt to the tax assessor-collector's office.

This year, Texas will join 22 other states using a staggered registration system. The new system should eliminate long registration lines in the future, Linebarger said. Registration records also will be put into Department of Highways and Public Transportation computers more quickly, he said.

Under the current system, law enforcement agencies must wait several months for access to registration records after the February and March flood of new registrations because tax offices cannot process the paperload immediately, he said.

'Burger thief' strikes again

For the second time in three days, the manager of the Burger King, 200 W. Florida Ave., has found the safe open and money missing.

Vada Cockrell reported Tuesday to police that when she opened the restaurant Tuesday morning, the safe and cash register were open. Ms. Cockrell told officers that $200 was missing from the safe, and $66 was missing from the register.

Police said all windows and doors were locked.

Sometime Saturday night, $1,000 reportedly was taken from the business. Ms. Cockrell discovered the money missing Sunday morning. Police said the outside door and the door to the safe were found open.

World Records."

But while they're working for an inroad into Guinness, you can be sure that the good-hearted TKEs will be imbibing of the hops-and-barley Texas nectar called Lone Star beer. The Lone Star brewery in San Antonio not only is providing the beer for the three-day trek but is also sending along a van rigged with a sound system to herald the roll.

Roll heartily, kind fellows.

You'll find, as you must imagine now, there's more fun to be had in drinking a barrel dry than in pushing one.

•

The TKE's, by the way, will be carting along a spare keg, should the starting one give out.

•

Besides barreling, the TKEs are taking up marathon running to garner money for their chosen charity.

•

Back on campus, the Sul Ross TKEs play some games of sanity. For instance, they issue a challenge on what group can give the most in a blood drive.

The TKEs usually bleed more than any other blood-giving organization and thereby keep their $25 wager, or so Caffey said.

And just before Easter — this Thursday, in fact — Caffey and his frat brothers will really show what kind of guys they are. They'll be putting on an egg hunt for the girls and boys in kindergarten in Alpine.

You see, there's more to being a "frat rat" than just talk, guzzling beer and rolling the keg.

Council established rates for parking at airport lot

The Midland City Council voted unanimously Tuesday to set a 50-cent per hour charge on covered parking and a 35-cent per hour charge on uncovered parking at the new parking lot under construction at the Midland Regional Air Terminal.

The council agreed to a $5 per day ceiling on the covered parking and a $2 limit on parking for the uncovered area. After the first hour, parking in the uncovered area of the airport will be 15-cents per hour.

The decision to set the rates now was necessary because orders for the parking-ticket machines need to be placed, said city Director of Aviation Wilson Banks.

In other action, the council passed on first reading an ordinance prohibiting parking along Big Spring Street between Michigan and Indiana avenues and providing a continuous left-turn lane in the same area.

The council approved a resolution approving a contract with Midland College concerning their advertising for bids and supervising construction of the new Tennis Center Complex Building on the college campus. The city has agreed to contribute $25,000 for its share of the project.

The council passed on first reading an ordinance vacating and abandoning Baird Street between Texas and Illinois avenues.

The land is adjacent to property recently purchased by the county government for eventual use as a court annex. A question concerning value of the vacated land was postponed pending research of a legal matter.

The council approved the appointment of Dr. James M. Humphreys Jr. as a part-time city health officer, replacing Dr. Stuart I. Draper, who retired.

In other business the council approved a resolution urging the granting of a permit to the Colorado Municipal Water District for a new reservoir.

Teacher aides verdict tabled half-day programs want help with their record-keeping and parent conferences, the aides would not be able to help them with this.

Board member Joe Dominey said he would like to see aides hired for the self-contained classes "if we can see our way clear to raise the taxes."

According to administration figures, providing full-day programs at the three Title I schools which do not have them now would increase the local tax rate by .3 percent. With the addition of aides for each self-contained class under this plan, the tax rate would go up by 1.6 percent. An aide for every teacher would lead to an increase of 2 percent.

Warren said he was in favor of deciding whether to add aides at the next meeting, since the board needed more time to consider the cost of this. He noted that the teachers have asked for a salary increase for the upcoming school year.

Board member David Grimes said he'd like more time to look at hiring new aides because he'd prefer seeing the cost of the kindergarten in relationship to the total school budget.

However, Mrs. Page disagreed, saying she thought the board had enough information to make a decision.

If clearance is denied, Tighe said the only recourse for the schools is to file a suit in Washington, D.C. "Imagine what that will do to small school districts," he said.

But he added that the Lebanese government admitted it could not control the South "so we shall continue to clear the area as long as we find it necessary and as long as someone else doesn't put his foot down."

In Beirut, Lebanon's Moslem premier, Salim el Hoss, called the invasion "unjustified aggression" and appealed for international intervention to bring it to a quick end. "But there was no immediate comment from the country's Christian president, Elias Sarkis.

The Israeli command did not say how many of its soldiers crossed the border, but Radio Israel said it was the biggest operation ever mounted against the guerrillas. Yasser Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization said 25,000 Israeli troops were involved.

Israeli tanks and armored units swept across the entire length of the frontier after the air force bombed and strafed guerrilla positions, and the navy blockaded Lebanon's southern Mediterranean coast, an Israeli military spokesman said.

A guerrilla spokesman in Beirut said columns of Israeli tanks, armored cars and personnel carriers fanned out along the border behind a screen of bombing and strafing jets.

The Palestinians said Israeli warplanes blasted at least six guerrilla-held towns and that a three-pronged tank assault was under way in southernmost Lebanon.

Winds again blowing sand

The sand was blowing in the Permian Basin, as winds today were 20 to 30 mph and gusty. Blowing sand was reported this morning in Andrews, Lamesa and Big Spring. Rankin reported sand on the horizon.

All other area towns reported clear skies.

The forecast, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal, calls for fair skies through Thursday, with northerly winds calming tonight to 10 to 15 mph.

The low tonight should be in the mid-30s, and the high Thursday should be in the mid-60s.

If any litigation against school officials is involved, Endress said he will turn over his findings to a U.S. attorney in San Antonio.

Search for treaty votes continues

By MIKE SHANAHAN

WASHINGTON (AP) — With a Senate ratification vote on the first of two Panama Canal treaties only a day off, President Carter is continuing the search for an elusive handful of votes needed to ensure the pact's approval.

Both treaty supporters, led by Carter, and opponents kept at their frantic maneuvering for votes.

With Thursday's outcome on the pact to guarantee the waterway's neutrality likely to be decided by one or two senators, four uncommitted lawmakers were tentatively scheduled to announce their intentions today.

They are Democrats Wendell Ford of Kentucky, Russell Long of Louisiana and Edward Zorinsky of Nebraska, along with Republican Charles McC. Mathias of Maryland.

Ford is seen as a probable "no" vote while Mathias and Long are expected to support the agreement. Zorinsky, according to both sides, was "up in the air."

Although an informal poll Tuesday gave treaty foes the 34 votes needed to ensure defeat and supporters 64 votes, three short of the necessary two-thirds majority for ratification, senators continued to shift positions.

Zorinsky and Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., were no longer considered certain Tuesday to vote against the two agreements.

Carter planned to meet today with DeConcini, now seen as undecided. DeConcini wants to include a provision in the treaty permitting the United States to take any step, military or otherwise, to keep the canal open.

And Republican Bob Packwood of Oregon, who had been counted a firm treaty supporter, complained bitterly Tuesday of what he said was an apparent willingness by Carter to make political deals in exchange for votes.

Specifically, Packwood referred to published reports that the administration had ended its opposition on a pending farm bill in exchange for the vote of Sen. Herman Talmadge, D-Ga.

Both Talmadge and the White House denied a deal had been struck.

Packwood, who said he had also heard reports that the administration was offering federal judgeships in exchange for votes, said he was now "wavering" in his support of the treaties.

"The president shouldn't be the host of 'Let's Make a Deal,'" he said, referring to a television show.

The Senate, meanwhile, neared a vote on a "reservation" allowing the United States and Panama to negotiate whether U.S. troops could stay in the Canal Zone after a transfer of the waterway to Panama in the year 2000.

Vaccination against new disease proposed

By ROB WOOD

HOUSTON (AP) — A new disease, as yet unnamed and carried by parents unknowingly, is killing and disabling more children than did polio in the 1950s, say two researchers at the Baylor College of Medicine.

Drs. Carol Baker and Morven Edwards said the disease — known only as "Group B Strep" — strikes some 15,000 infants a year. Half the babies die, they say, and the others are left blind, deaf or mentally retarded, with spinal meningitis, or later, with learning and behavioral problems.

"When you say 15,000 infants a year, perhaps that is not an impressive figure," said Dr. Baker. "But it is a greater toll than the polio babies of the 1950s. It is a heartbreaking experience to see a child born with this disease and then die within two to 12 hours."

The doctors said the disease was first spotted in children early in the 1970s and its growth as yet is statistically impossible to measure. Their feeling, however, is that the disease is striking more and more children.

Drs. Baker and Edwards said in a recent interview that they are working with doctors at Harvard Medical School to develop a vaccine that would slow and possibly stop spread of the disease, which is similar to group B streptococcus.

The streptococcus family causes such diseases as scarlet fever, rheumatic fever and strep throat, but the new disease produces symptoms of none of these in the parent carrier.

The scientists said the disease is carried by the mother in her vagina or can be transmitted from the father during sex but is not a venereal disease. There are no social or economic boundaries of who contracts the disease, which can strike after a normal pregnancy begins, often too late for treatment, the two researchers said.

"We can detect the disease at birth but by then it generally is too late," said Dr. Baker. "We must immunize the mother. But because of concern of administering vaccines to pregnant women, the solution seems to be giving the vaccine to women of childbearing age."

The doctors said a preliminary test with volunteers indicated the possibility of immunizing mothers from passing along the disease, even when the father is the carrier. They said large-scale studies would begin this spring to determine the effectiveness of a vaccine.

The two doctors said it is mandatory to begin an education program, possibly in schools, to tell young people about the disease. Dr. Baker suggested immunizing women who apply for marriage licenses.

Judiciary to hear first case

WASHINGTON (AP) — After years of investigating alleged South Korean attempts to influence U.S. policy, the government is ready to try its first case in court, that of a lingerie salesman accused in "Operation White Snow."

A panel of 100 prospective jurors was summoned today for the trial of Hancho C. Kim, a Korea-born naturalized citizen charged with conspiring to defraud the United States and lying to a grand jury.

Kim, who had a cosmetics and lingerie business in suburban Washington, allegedly received $600,000 from the Korean Central Intelligence Agency to pay and entertain U.S. officials, including members of Congress.

Kim is one of three men charged in the scandal which has occupied congressional probers for a year and investigators in the Justice Department even longer.

Negotiations with postal unions have priority, postmaster says

By JEFFREY MILLS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Saturday mail delivery will continue at least until next year, the nation's 65th postmaster general says.

William F. Bolger, who takes office today, said in an interview:

"With the priority of labor negotiations and other things that are pressing at the moment, we are not giving the question (of reducing deliveries) a high priority in 1978."

Asked whether this was a hint that the Postal Service would not seek to reduce deliveries this year, Bolger replied, "I'm not hinting it. I'm saying it."

The Postal Service has eyed the elimination of Saturday deliveries for several years as a potential economy measure. A federal study commission last year estimated the cutback could save $412 million per year.

However, the Postal Service has taken no steps toward cutting deliveries and the House on Monday sent out a strong message of congressional opposition: a 371-6 vote on legislation designed to forbid the end of Saturday mail. The bill went to the Senate.

The cost-cutting ideas have been prompted by the mail service's chronic deficits: $1.2 billion in fiscal year 1976 and $688 million in 1977.

Asked if there was any prospect of eliminating deficits during his tenure, Bolger said, "Nothing in the law requires us to break even without any subsidies. That is a goal but not a mandate. We are aiming to be as fiscally responsible as we can be."

He said, as his predecessor Benjamin Bailar frequently did, that the Postal Service is willing to provide any service that the American people want and is willing to pay for.

"What we're trying to do is determine what the American public wants from postal service, as long as people realize they have to pay for it. If the public knows just what it costs and is willing to pay it, then we should provide the service," he said.

Bolger faces several other pressing issues as he replaces Bailar, who resigned to re-enter private industry.

He said his highest priority will be negotiations next month on a new labor agreement with the four postal unions.

Since labor costs account for about 85 percent of all Postal Service costs, the expenses built into the new contract will be the major factor in how fast postal rates will have to rise, Bolger said.

Spending patterns changed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans are spending a smaller part of their paychecks for food and clothing but a bigger piece for housing and transportation, the government says.

As wages and prices have climbed substantially since 1960, the average worker substantially has changed the way he divides up his earnings, a Labor Department report shows.

The department discovered the changed spending habits while constructing a new Consumer Price Index, which went into use last month. The index is designed to measure changes in the prices Americans pay for a wide range of goods.

When the old price index was first used in 1960, the average hourly worker spent 26 percent of his income in groceries and restaurants. In 1977, he spent only 20 percent. Nine percent went for clothing in 1960, but just 6 percent was spent for the same purpose last year.

Housing consumed about 35 percent of take-home pay in 1960 while eating up about 41 percent last year. Higher prices for houses, financing, rent, fuel and repairs account for most of the increase.

Transportation costs — gasoline, cars and bus rides — rose from 13 percent to 20 percent of spendable income during the 17-year period.

The average worker's buying power now is about 10 percent above the 1960 level. That's 4 percent below 1972 when spendable income was 14 percent greater than in 1960.

A department economist explained that workers tend to spend a smaller percentage of their disposable income on food and clothing as income increases.

With more money to spend outside the grocery store, workers buy second cars and longer vacation trips, he said.

Howdy, Governor!

Gov. Dolph Briscoe today is a visitor in the Tall City and, as always, Midlanders are delighted to have him as a special guest.

He was the guest of honor and principal speaker today noon at the meeting of the Midland Downtown Lions Club.

The governor has spoken here on previous occasions and it is good to have him back in Midland at this particular time.

The Uvalde rancher, banker and civic leader was elected to a two-year term as governor in 1973 and then to a four-year term in 1975. He is seeking re-election in the 1978 balloting.

He long has been active in civic affairs of his community, region and state. He is a past president of the South Texas Chamber of Commerce and the Texas State Chamber of Commerce. He also is a past president of the Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association.

The Texas Legislative Conference at New Braunfels last March honored Gov. Briscoe as "Texan of the Year" for 1976, in recognition of "distinguished, dedicated service" to the Lone Star State. He also holds the Silver Beaver and Antelope awards for outstanding service to Boy Scouting.

The governor further distinguished himself while serving as chairman of the Interstate Oil Compact Commission in 1976, as an active member of the National Petroleum Council, and as chairman last year of the Southern Governors Conference.

A stanch defender of Texas' rights and economic interests, Mr. Briscoe also is a firm believer in fiscal responsibility and balanced budgets at all levels of government.

The governor always is welcome in Midland, and it is hoped that he will return to the Tall City at every opportunity.

Good suggestions

Fike Godfrey of Abilene, who is seeking the 17th District (Abilene) congressional seat being vacated by Rep. Omar Burleson of Anson, has come up with a novel idea which seemingly has considerable merit.

He said Congress should consider devoting the first three months of each session in overseeing regulatory agencies.

The former executive vice president of the West Texas Chamber of Commerce said that Jim Wright, Fort Worth congressman and House majority leader "almost had apoplexy when I mentioned my proposal to him." This really would shake up some of the House leadership.

Godfrey, in briefly outlining his plan, said it would call for Congress to take the first three months of each year to call in people from the regulatory agencies, quiz them in detail about the rules and regulations written in their agencies, take a recess to return home to tell the people, in town hall meetings, what they have learned and "then go back up there and vote your sentiments."

If he had his way, Godfrey told an Abilene luncheon group and as reported by Jerry Reed in The Abilene Reporter-News, he would like to see the "bureaucratic chiefs" register as lobbyists, just as do private citizens who go up to Capitol Hill asking for something for their clients.

These are interesting suggestions and, if they could gain approval and be enforced, would lead to better government at the federal level.

Godfrey also told his listeners that 10,000 bills are tossed in the hopper during a legislative session, and he doesn't believe there is that much wrong with America that needs remedying.

Again, we are in agreement with the Abilene businessman.

BROADSIDES

CHARLEY REESE:

Fiscal responsibility of Congress cited by Pike

By CHARLEY REESE
Sun Belt Syndicate

Rep. Otis Pike, D-N.Y., is one of 30 congressmen not running for re-election. In a radio broadcast, Pike told his constituents why he is quitting after 18 years. He spoke plainly.

For one thing, he said people were beginning to bug him.

"They are asking their government to do more for them, and are willing to do less and less for themselves. This is a broad generalization, and surely unfair to many people, but the people who write their congressman, and there are about 300 a day these days, are more and more demanding and the demands get more and more shrill," he said.

Secondly, he cited the fiscal irresponsibility of his fellow congressmen.

". . . I am increasingly uneasy with the never-ending fiscal irresponsibility of the majority of my own party, and the absolute indifference of both political parties to inflation, the size of the annual deficit, our national debt, or any obligation to pay our bills and balance our budget.

". . . neither the Democratic Party nor the House of Representatives is a comfortable place for a congressman who believes that people should work when they can, earn what they can, save what they can, pay their bills and balance their budgets. And that nations should, too."

Pike also complained that far too much of a congressman's time is taken up by trivia.

"The day to day operations of the House ,the time we spend, the hours of our lives are to a large extent controlled by a small group of procedural nit-pickers, and the leadership seems powerless to do anything about it."

All together it is a sad commentary on the country and all the more believable because it comes from a man who is not an idealogue and who has no ax to grind.

What he depicts is a dependent people ruled by a self-indulgent but not too competent or courageous group of leaders.

I have to concur. In my roaming about, I run into more and more people who are looking to the government to solve all their problems, real or imagined.

A couple of years ago, the Ford White House held a series of meetings at which anyone could attend and voice his concerns. I saw a transcript of one of those meetings and without exception every person who came asked for something. Not one came to complain of government interference, high taxes or lost liberty. They wanted everything from bicycle paths to subsidies for business.

I learned a long time ago at chamber of commerce meetings that many people who call themselves conservatives are in fact only long-distance conservatives. They want all the federal goodies they can get for their city and they want all the conserving done somewhere else. One man's pork barrel is another man's bureaucratic waste.

Of course the government has encouraged this attitude of dependency. The politicians have pushed federal aid like the Mafia pushes heroin — and the results have been the same: we're hooked.

If you want to see most mayors or school board chairmen turn pale, get on the agenda at the next meeting and suggest that they reject all federal funds. They complain about federal interference. Well, all they have to do is refuse the money. Quit taking the cash and you can throw out the bureaucrat and his library of guidelines.

But I fear that is an impossible dream. Instead, like the wolf licking the knife imbedded in the ice, we shall bleed ourselves to death under the illusion that it is not our own money which Washington is showering on us, but someone else's.

Pike's picture is sad indeed: a great nation at a crisis point in man's history with a populace of babies seated around Mother Government, rubbing their tummies with one hand and pointing to their open mouths while Mom botches the lunch.

Unfortunately, there is justice in the Universe. People who don't deserve freedom always lose it. To paraphrase somebody, those who would rather be fat than free will end up as skinny slaves.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Will the U.S. welcome refugees?

By JACK ANDERSON

WASHINGTON — "Give me your tired, your poor, your huddled masses yearning to breathe free," proclaims the lady who stands, with torch thrust proudly skyward, on Liberty Island in New York harbor.

And they have come by the thousands. Jews from Hitler's Germany; Hungarian Freedom Fighters who fought Russian tanks in Budapest; Cubans who opposed Castro.

Now, the nation's willingness to open its arms to the world's homeless is about to be tested again. At this moment, the Carter administration is trying to hammer out a comprehensive policy on refugees. But the president's advisers are hung up over what to do about the thousands of refugees who have fled Indochina since the communists took over Laos, Vietnam and Cambodia.

The United States has already approved, on an emergency basis, the admission of 172,000 Indochinese refugees into this country since Saigon fell in April 1975. But thousands upon thousands more are crammed like sardines into squalid camps in Thailand, Malaysia and elsewhere.

Each month, an estimated 1,500 "boat people" flee by sea from Indochina to join the 100,000 "land people" who have already escaped. Their only route out of the limbo in which they are trapped appears to be emigration to other nations. But no country has been willing to step forward and accept them.

In preparation for testimony before Congress, the Immigration and Naturalization Service recently sent investigator Michael Harpold to Southeast Asia on a fact-finding mission. He has compiled a compelling eye-witness account of the trials the "boat people" have undergone in their flights to freedom.

Harpold and his boss, INS Commissioner Leonel Castillo, told our reporter Doug Southerland they have been waiting since Jan. 24 to make public the account. Meanwhile, we have obtained a copy of the document.

In Songkla, Thailand, Harpold spoke to a group of Vietnamese refugees who had fled in a 34-foot fishing boat. "Aboard it were 13 men, five women and 16 children," wrote the investigator. "Most were sick because they had been reduced to drinking sea water. Many of the children, in particular, were ill. The boat's engine was not working. They had only 20 kilos of rice left, about enough for one day."

The night before they arrived in Thailand, the refugees were intercepted by Thai pirates who robbed them of watches and jewelry. Had they been turned away from Thailand, the refugees said, they had intended to sail on to Australia, some 3,000 nautical miles away.

Three refugee boats which arrived at Trengenu, Malaysia, Harpold found, were told to ride at anchor at the mouth of a nearby river. During the night, a storm came up and one of the boats broke anchor and capsized. There were 21 refugees aboard. Fifteen of them drowned and only six were able to swim to shore. We found that drownings and piracy are the most frequent hazards the boat people face."

While in Singapore, Harpold heard of a boat carrying 27 Vietnamese refugees which had been rescued by a tanker. He hopped a ride with a pirate and sped to the location, about 120 miles east of the Vietnamese coast.

"We found the Italian crew joyfully feeding spaghetti to the 13 children, four adult females and 10 males," reported Harpold. "Originally, they had planned that only the one family group of 12 would go, but 15 other neighbors who knew about the plot simply came along ...

"Using a compass, the same as used by our foot soldiers in World War II, and a political map showing only Vietnam, they set a course ... and headed out for 'any country out of Vietnam.'

On their second night out, the refugees ran into a severe storm, and their boat began taking on water. When the engine sputtered to a stop, they hoisted an SOS flag. Three ships approached them, took a close look, then simply sailed away. When they were finally picked up, they were 450 nautical miles from the Philippines and had only three bags of rice left.

Wrote Harpold in awed admiration: "Thier spirit, their will was unconquerable."

Near the Cambodian border, Harpold found a five-acre refugee camp with 1,055 inhabitants. The only well in the camp had run dry, and the refugees were forced to use their own meager savings to purchase water and food from nearby villagers. Even under these adverse conditions, the INS investigator found the camp clean and the inhabitants eager to organize their new lives.

The escapees from communism, and the thousands yet to come, Harpold concluded, are truly facing a "life and death situation." And their ultimate fate, he wrote, is in the hands of the United States. If the American people open their arms to these homeless fugitives from oppression, other governments would probably cooperate.

"We should adopt and announce as policy," he urged, "our willingness to accept and resettle refugees rescued by vessels at sea and those who arrive by boat on the shores of those countries bordering the South China Sea. Only by doing so can we ensure that masters of commercial vessels and the governments of Malaysia, Thailand and Singapore will treat the boat people humanely."

Footnote: Only four Immigration and Naturalization Service officers have been assigned to the vast Indonesian archipelago to deal with the swelling refugee problem.

INSIDE REPORT:

Jimmy Carter's stock hits new low in North Carolina

By ROWLAND EVANS And ROBERT NOVAK

Evans

Novak

RALEIGH, N.C. — When a distressed Gov. Jim Hunt of North Carolina visited the White House Feb. 28, he warned Jimmy Carter how low the President's stock had fallen here — an appraisal with origins and implications going well beyond the borders of North Carolina.

Hunt's polite warning only suggests the blunt assessment here. "If Carter were running against Jerry Ford right today," one veteran Democratic politician told us, "there is no way he could carry North Carolina." More immediate is widespread Democratic fear that the Carter connection could reelect conservative Republican Sen. Jesse Helms and unseat three Democratic Congressmen in 1978.

Specific reasons are the federal government's unrelated drives to curb tobacco smoking and force further — and highly questionable — racial integration at the respected University of North Carolina. Thus has the Carter administration joined together two disparate lobbies in this state: tobacco and the university. Behind this lies President Carter's failure to remember one campaign pledge and his too-faithful fulfillment of another.

The remembered pledge promised cabinet government without White House interference. The anti-smoking campaign and, to a lesser extent, the university integration push are creatures of Secretary Joseph Califano, who runs the Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW), without much presidential supervision. But in giving Califano his head, the President has acquiesced in more federal interference in the affairs of local government and individuals — not less, as promised.

That is the sad conclusion of Hunt who, unlike many Southern governors, likes and admires Mr. Carter. An early Carter-for-President backer, Hunt told us the President has talked to him of the terrible burden of foreign affairs. "With all that on his mind," Hunt said, "I think the President has gotten away from some of the things he started with."

The governor, no state's rights Dixiecrat, is a moderate liberal with national aspirations. Nevertheless, he believes the troubles in his state reveal the federal government's obsession for a centrally-directed statist society. If being for smoking and against integration were not politically reprehensible, Hunt might take his case to the nation.

Hunt has tried dealing directly with Califano — cornering him for 15 minutes at a fund-raising dinner at Atlanta plus several telephone conversations. Super-bureaucrat Califano cooed his understanding of the governor's problems. But nothing changed. Matters had to be taken up with the President.

So Hunt (in Washington for the winter governors' conference) and Sen. Robert Morgan visited the President Feb. 28. Carter was sympathetic to the tobacco-university problem, and the governor returned here voicing optimism; the rhetoric from Washington would soon change, he promised.

In truth, most everybody else involved is pessimistic that anything will change. Nobody at the White House has been able to control Califano, who is perceived there as a grandstander. The President told Hunt and Morgan he would talk to Califano. But Vice President Walter Mondale — Califano's friend, ex-neighbor and political patron for the cabinet — interjected to say he would handle that unpleasant task.

Relying on the Vice President to curb a cabinet member running counter to the President's stated philosophy suggests the administration is malfunctioning. At this writing, the "no smoking" campaign is still lit up at HEW.

If that continues, Democrats will try to salvage the 1978 North Carolina election by pinning big brotherism on Califano while isolating Mr. Carter. Democratic leaders here take malicious delight in mispronouncing the Secretary's name while attacking him. One party strategist invariably drawls out "Caluh-fran (rhyes with pan)-o," adding an "r" with unmisable contempt.

But isolating the President from his own administration is difficult. At one cabinet meeting, Secretary of Commerce Juanita Kreps (a North Carolinian and longtime Duke University official) protested HEW activities in her old state. Califano responded with customary vigor. That much is certain. What Mr. Carter then said is in dispute, but one version widely circulated here was the President backing Califano. True or not, the story has taken on a life of its own.

The President will be at Winston-Salem, N.C., March 17 for a hastily arranged speech (on defense matters only and scheduled without consulting Hunt or other North Carolinians). But what will really determine his political future here are the tobacco and integration campaigns. Without any change, Democratic candidates here will treat Mr. Carter like a plague this year. More important, fresh doubt will spring up whether he yet firmly grips the reins of government.

South Africa's 'beach apartheid' gradually dying

By CARYLE MURPHY
The Washington Post

CAPETOWN — One recent sunny day Phyllis Tshomela, 36, bundled her children into a bus and then aboard a train for a trip to one of South Africa's beautiful beaches in the Cape Peninsula.

They were not at the beach long, however when they became victims of the South African racial segregation scheme that "allocates" the sky, sea, sand and surf of its magnificent coastline to separate races.

A policeman told the Tshomelas they had to leave the beach because they are black and the beach is for whites only, even though the nearest black beach could be reached only by car.

It is "beach apartheid" that makes the coast of Durban look like a "Dagwood sandwich" when seen from the air.

The blacks are all congregated at one end of the shoreline where a sign says, "African beach." Adjacent to them are the separate beaches for "Coloreds" (people of mixed race), and then the beach for Indians. Finally comes the "white beach" for those endeavoring to become as brown as those on the three other beaches.

Blacks and Coloreds who holiday in Durban find they can frequent the "international hotels" and "international restaurants" that serve all races, but when they want to swim, they must go to the segregated "African beach" or "Colored beach."

Most of South Africa's coast along the Indian and southern Atlantic oceans is "undeclared," that is, not allocated to any one race. "You know, like what a beach is supposed to be," said a resident. But these undeclared beaches are far from population centers and without public transport, and swimming in many cases is not possible because of rocks.

"Beach apartheid" is the result of the ruling National Party's philosophy of keeping racial groups separate to "avoid racial friction." Opponents of beach segregation say it is the separation of the races that causes the friction.

Nothing illustrates better the National Party government's failure to fulfill its promise of eliminating unnecessary racial discrimination than this issue. Although much of the white population would support the scrapping of beach apartheid and although it is a sphere that does not vitally affect peoples lives, the national government has not yet prodded the conservative forces in coastal areas who support the segregation scheme.

Ever since beach apartheid was introduced in the 1960s opposition politicians have regularly called for its abandonement, but their pleas have been ignored. In Cape Town, for example, the City Council dominated by opposition Progressive Party members, refused to "allocate" its beaches, so the provincial government, dominated by National Party members, put up the signs and sent the bill to the city.

Lately, however, because of genuine overcrowding and growth of the black consciousness movement, beach apartheid is breaking down. Coloreds and blacks appear on white beaches — sometimes they are asked to leave, and sometimes they aren't.

Cape Town beach constable Willie Geldenhuys has another explanation.

"It's the Jewish people, they're coming up for the Coloreds," he said, referring to the predominatly Jewish population of some Cape Town suburbs who traditionally support the antiapartheid Progressive Party.

Every Sunday Geldenhuys can be seen on the beaches sweating in white shirt and tie, with his two-way radio slung over his shoulder. Geldenhuys passes out summonses for dogs without leashes, and for ball playing, but the City Council orders that he forget about beach apartheid. If everybody is getting along in mixed company, he is to let them alone.

This relaxation does not please everyone.

"There's no white beaches any more," said a white woman who refused to give her name. "They want to do away with it because they're being egged on by Communists."

There are objections even in the Miami-type beachfront communities which are represented by the opposition politicians who are calling for an end to beach apartheid.

These complaints are against the "hooligans and unruly elements," who have begun to invade the beaches.

"They say they want to deal with the 'riff-raff' problem but because of the short-circuiting that goes on in the brain, it comes out as a black and white problem," said a newspaper reporter.

Many whites, however, echo the sentiments of a white school teacher who said. "I wouldn't mind if beach apartheid were scrapped."

Among the Colored and black population there is both continued resentment and quiet acceptance of beach apartheid.

Francis van Rensburg, a black personnel supervisor, drove down from Johannesburg with his family for a holiday in Cape Town.

When they saw only white people at the first beach they stopped at, they decided not to venture out on it, "in order not to cause unnecessary racial friction," van Rensburg said sardonically.

A 30-year-old Colored woman who works as a maid, when asked how Coloreds feel about beach apartheid, said: "They smile but inside they don't like it. You wonder how long they can go on holding it in."

Frederick Truter, 31, a Colored hardware salesman, who was asked to leave a white beach, said, "I don't understand beach apartheid. It's the same tide."

The dangers of the sea are also the same. When a skull was found recently inside the stomach of a shark, it was not clear whether it was the skull of a white man or a black man. (Sharks swim at all beaches).

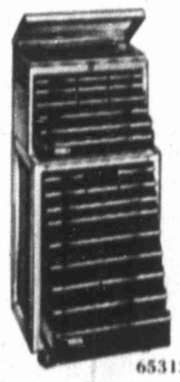

The local masgistrate sent it to the anatomy department of a nearby university medical school to determine the race of its unfortunate owner so the authorities could decide where to bury it — in a black or a white cemetery.

Brooks likely shoo-in

By ROB WOOD

HOUSTON (AP)-One more victory and Democratic Rep. Jack Brooks of Beaumont will become the dean of the Texas congressional delegation.

There appears little doubt at this time, but that Brooks, in Congress since 1952, will sent back for another two-year term.

He does have primary opposition from Alan Verret of Beaumont, and then will face either Ed Falk of Forest Cove or Randy Evans of LaMarque, the Republican candidates.

With his long stay in Congress and his chairmanship of the House Government Operations Committee, Brooks seems untouchable at the polls.

He never overwhelms a challenger, be it in the Democratic primary or the general election, but always gets enough votes from the residents along the eastern segment of Texas' Gulf Coast to go back to Washington year after year.

The district includes a sliver of populous Harris County (Houston) and then reaches out to embrace the resort island of Galveston and east to the petrochemical and shipping lanes of Beaumont and Port Arthur.

Political experts in the district said Democratic candidate Verett, 32, an oil refinery employee, and the two Republican hopefuls, Evans, 50, a senior clerk with an oil firm, and Falk, an economist and writer, have neither the money nor the orgainization to run a successful campaign.

The two Republicans and Verret are singing the same campaign song-Brooks has become too rich and too powerful and is failing to represent the district.

Verret came in at the last minute as a Democratic opponent and Falk, a native of New York, also was a late entry in the campaign.

"THINKING" with ODOM PHILIPPIANS 4:8

Last Wednesday I discussed with my readers the "works of the flesh" as contrasted with the "fruit of the Spirit," as mentioned in Galatians 5:19-23. Having pointed out that Christians must live above reproach and the standard to determine such is the word of God, let me persue the subject of the sin of the tongue.

"Behold we put bits in the horses' mouths, that they may obey us; and we turn about the whole body. Behold also the ships, which though they be so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet are they turned about with a very small helm, whithersoever the governor listeth. EVEN SO THE TONGUE IS A LITTLE MEMBER, AND BOASTETH GREAT THINGS. BEHOLD HOW GREAT A MATTER A LITTLE FIRE KINDLETH! AND THE TONGUE IS A FIRE, A WORLD OF INIQUITY: SO IS THE TONGUE AMONG OUR MEMBERS, THAT IT DEFILETH THE WHOLE BODY, AND SETTETH ON FIRE THE COURSE OF NATURE; AND IS SET ON FIRE OF HELL," (emph. mine, L.O.) "...the tongue is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison." Read the entirity of James 3:1-12. While the context has reference to the teaching of the word of God the writer uses the principle of the tongue being an unruly member of the body to make his point. Hence to apply the misuse of the tongue to lying and to gossip is not amiss.

Sometimes we find people who can praise God and at the same time lie on their fellowmen. Sometimes we hear of people who praise God with the tongue and with the same tongue gossip and slander the fellow-Christians. The sad part about such wickedness is that the victim can do little about it, especially when people allow their ears to be garbage cans for the lier and the gossip to dump the filth of their hearts.

There is one thing we can be sure of, however, God will one day call for an account of all such people as they stand before Him in Judgment. Paul warned about some ladies (?) who had nothing better to do than to sit around and gossip and lie about others in the kingdom (1 Timothy 5:13). Revelation 21:8 speaks of the fate of all liars and shows what class of people they belong to.

Dear reader, if you are a member of the Lord's church use your tongue to a better walk of life that what we have herein been speaking. Use it to expose error and teach the truth. Use the tongue to confess Christ. Use the tongue to sing and pray and teach, but not to assinate the character of others. This is to your destruction.

Beetles protect plants

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The familiar ladybug is hard at work at the San Diego Wild Animal Park, helping experts avoid pesticides while controlling pests that threaten exotic greenery around the popular animal sanctuary.

The idea might be worth a try for backyard farmers, say experts.

"Both adult and larvae ladybugs feed on aphids and scale insects that are very injurious to a lot of cultivated plants, especially oranges and things you might plant around your house," says naturalist Steve Hutchison of the San Diego Museum of Natural History.

Forty-gallon jugs containing a total of about three million ladybugs and costing about $200 were opened at the park last fall after the ladybugs had been hibernating under refrigeration for several days during transport. They woke up hungry and went to work after being exposed to warm weather.

Hutchison says they eat a tremendous amount of pests.

"They've probably invested over a million dollars in plantings around the park and the idea is sort of a natural predator-prey relationship rather than using insecticides that could be harmful to animals by getting into their food," he explained.

Many ladybugs — small, roundish beetles of the Coccinellidae family, with spotted, brightly colored backs, usually red — are sold in volume through biological supply houses and gardening magazine ads.

Voracious killers when it comes to pests, ladybugs are cold-blooded in both senses. They are usually found in large wintering masse in the mountains and are refrigerated to keep them inactive during transport.

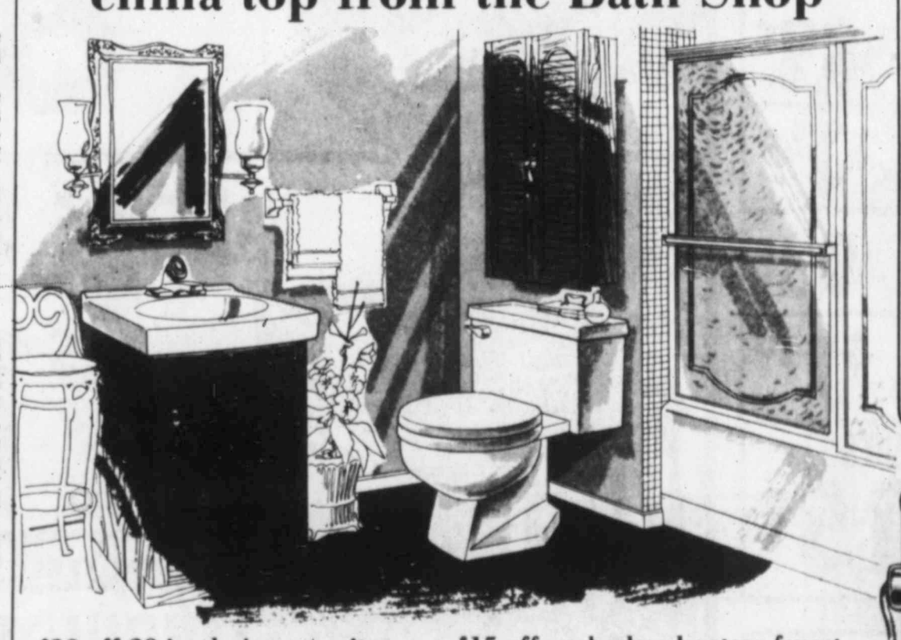

Three million starving ladybugs may sound like a lot. But Hutchison says "only about 10 percent of them hang around where they are released."

Thanks to the increasing popularity of organic gardening, many home growers try both ladybugs and the formidable praying mantis, which uses huge clawed forelegs to hold its catch for dinner.

"I tried a little biological control in my garden and found that the praying mantis eats the ladybug," said Hutchison. Because the two are incompatible, it's obviously wise to opt for either one or the other. Other ladybug enemies include spiders and certain birds.

Boy warrior bills stalled

By MILLER BONNER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Navy sailed onto troubled waters last week when it disagreed with two United States senators, the House majority leader and Calvin Graham, the boy warrior.

As a 12-year-old aboard the USS South Dakota, Graham played a man's role in the 1942 Battle of Guadalcanal only to be rewarded with a trip to the brig in shackles after the Navy discovered he had lied about his age to enlist. He was stripped of his medals and, more importantly today to Calvin Graham, of his veteran's benefits.

Graham, now 48 and living in Fort Worth, enlisted the aide of Sens. John Tower, R-Texas, and Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, plus his U.S. Representative — House Majority Leader Jim Wright.

Tower and Bentsen teamed to introduce a private bill in the Senate on Sept. 12, 1977, that would grant Graham an honorable discharge and restore his veteran's rights. On Nov. 29, 1977, Wright sponsored a similar bill in the House.

Both bills are stalled in committee, stacked behind a horde of other private bills and regular committee business.

And last week, the Navy defended its action in a letter to the chairman of the Senate Armed Forces Committee and urged Congress to forget Calvin Graham.

"The Department of the Navy, on behalf of the Department of Defense, opposes enactment of S. 2119," the Navy wrote referring to the Bentsen-Tower private bill.

The Navy letter further stated that "Mr. Graham executed an enlistment contract on August 16, 1942, to serve in the U.S. Naval Reserve. His mother signed parental consent papers on his behalf certifying that he was 17 years of age, when in fact, he was 12-years old. Mr. Graham's enlistment was canceled on April 5, 1943, upon receipt of documentary evidence establishing his true age. During the eight-month period between enlistment and cancelation thereof, Mr. Graham underwent recruit training at the Naval Training Center, San Diego, Calif., and served aboard the USS South Dakota.

"While aboard the USS South Dakota (October 1942-February 1943) the ship participated in the Battle of Guadalcanal thereby entitling Mr. Graham to wear the Navy Unit Commendation, Asiatic-Pacific Campaign Medal with two battle stars and the World War II victory Medal."

Graham said he wrote last year to President Carter — "because he's a Navy man" — and asked for help.

Last fall, W.L. Gulley, director of the White House Military Office, sent a letter to the Fort Worth Star Telegram explaining that Graham's enlistment under false pretenses prevents Graham from receiving his discharge through normal channels. Gulley's letter added that Graham's "youthful services were appreciated."

During the Battle of Guadalcanal, an enemy shell exploded on the USS South Dakota, sending Graham tumbling through "three stories of superstructure."

When Calvin landed on the deck, his two front teeth didn't. "I didn't go complaining because half the ship was dead," he said. "It was a while before they worked on my mouth."

Graham added that Veteran's Administration officials "just laugh at me" when he tells them about his dental problems and when his injury took place.

Graham thought his problems would be solved after Carter allowed Viet Nam deserters to make their peace with the government. But phone calls to bureaucrats only spawned phone calls to bureaucrats.

"It was just more red tape," he said.

"I think it is disgraceful the way Congress acted for them (Viet Nam deserters and draft dodgers) and how I'm being treated," he continued. "It's just unbelievable... my shipmates who died (on the USS South Dakota) would roll over in the sea bags we buried them in if they knew what was happening."

"Characteristically, private legislation takes quite a long time," said Wright recently from his majority leader's office. "The difficulty essentially is that there is such an enormous number of them at any given time pending before the (House) Judiciary Committee. The committee doesn't meet each week to discuss private bills. They wait until they have the departmental reports and set hearings on them."

Wright also noted that it took "about three years" to get a private bill passed that restored veteran's benefits to an elderly Fort Worth woman.

John Hill files motion to battle Bell Telephone over rate hike

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Attorney General John Hill says he wants to do battle again with Southwestern Bell Telephone over the rates charged consumers.

He filed a motion with the Public Utility Commission on Tuesday asking permission to intervene in Southwestern Bell Telephone's $214 million rate increase case.

Intervention would make the attorney general a party, with full rights to cross-examine Bell witnesses, present witnesses of his own and argue before the commission.

Hill said at a news conference his advisers, including Dallas utility consultant Pat Loconto, believe Bell's request is "substantially out of line."

Bell filed the request Thursday, saying its revenues were not producing an adequate rate of return.

The attorney general, currently running for governor, said Loconto had calculated that the increase would raise the return on Bell's common stock from 12.5 percent to as much as 16 percent.

"I haven't foreclosed in my own mind that the phone company might be entitled to some rate increase," Hill said.

Bell received a $58 million increase in December 1976 — far below the $298 million it requested.

"The statutes of this state require the attorney general to respond to grand jury requests. . . In addition, it has been traditional in the attorney general's office for the attorney general to assist the Department of Public Safety in connection with narcotics control in this state. The attorney general has a clear statutory responsibility to move against any clear misapplication of public funds, as in Duval County," Hill said.

He said if Briscoe truly believed the attorney general had no business in criminal law enforcement, "why has he allowed his office to fund this (organized crime division) program for the last five years?"

Hill said he doubted the CJD would cancel the $380,000 federal grant that funds the organized crime program.

"It would be a crippling blow," he said.

Texas union members given voting choice

By ROB WOOD

HOUSTON (AP) —Texas union members have been given a free hand as to whom to support with their campaign contributions and their votes in the 1978 Democratic gubernatorial primary where the two major candidates are incumbent Dolph Briscoe and Attorney General John Hill.

For the most part, the decision by the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education (COPE) to recommend, rather than endorse, Briscoe, could be considered a victory for Hill.

Hill supporters had been battling for three days to keep the conference from the all-out, full-scale endorsement to Briscoe, who is seeking his third term as governor.

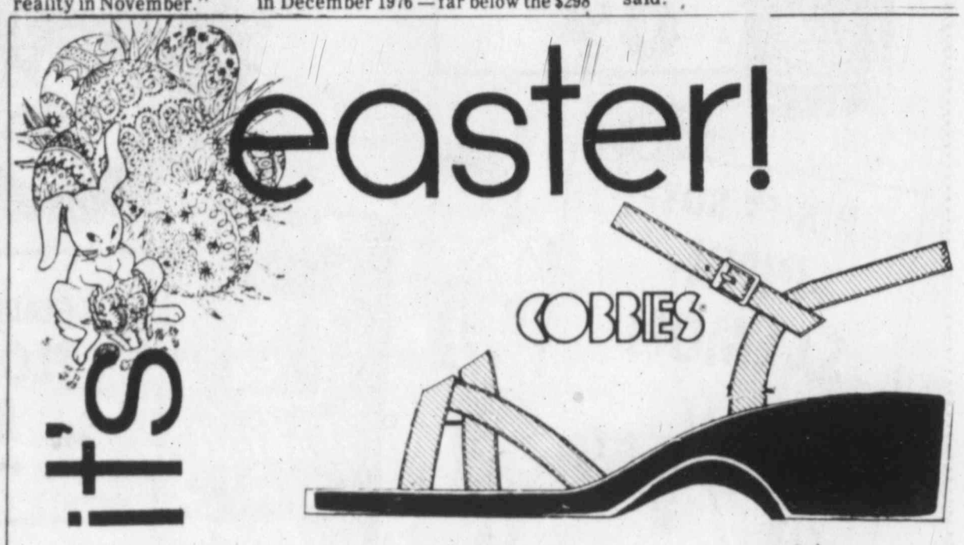

What it all means is that each union can go the way it wants in the May 6 primary, with no mandate from the 255,500 union members in Texas.

Labor doesn't carry the clout in Texas politics as it does in more unionized and industrialized states. Texas has a large voter bloc in insurance, banking, real estate, and such, in addition to a still important rural vote where independent thinking is the rule among the ranchers and farmers.

The compromise was reached by a COPE committee after it became apparent Briscoe couldn't get the two-thirds of the 1,000 delegates needed for a full-scale endorsement.

The delegates, however, left no doubt as how they stood on the Democratic senatorial race, giving strong support to Joe Christie, a former state legislator and one-time chairman of the state insurance board. He is opposed for the Democratic nomination by Rep. Robert Krueger, D-Tex.

In the official report adopted by the delegates, the defeat of Republican Sen. John Tower was listed as the "number one priority in 1978. By working together, we are confident that the job will be done and the defeat of John Tower will be a reality in November."

U.S. abstains in vote denouncing Rhodesia

By WILLIAM N. OATIS

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The United States, Britain and three allies abstained as the other 10 members of the Security Council voted to denounce the agreement between Prime Minister Ian Smith and three moderate black leaders for black-majority goverment in Rhodesia by the end of the year.

Britain and the United States pledged to continue efforts to reconcile Smith and the three moderates with the guerrilla leaders who condemn the deal signed in the Rhodesian capital, Salisbury, 12 days ago.

But both the guerrilla leaders and the moderates refused to meet.

In London, the two leaders of the Patriotic Front guerrillas ended two days of talks with British Foreign Secretary David Owen and declared: "The war goes on."

Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe said Owen failed to persuade them to agree to terms for a new conference on Rhodesia. They contend that only their guerrilla war has made the Rhodesian whites agree to give up power to the blacks, and they demand that they and they alone control the future government.

The three leaders who signed with Smith said earlier they were going ahead with the Salisbury agreement. It provides for an election by universal adult suffrage to choose the nation's first black government by Dec. 31 and special guarantees for the white minority.

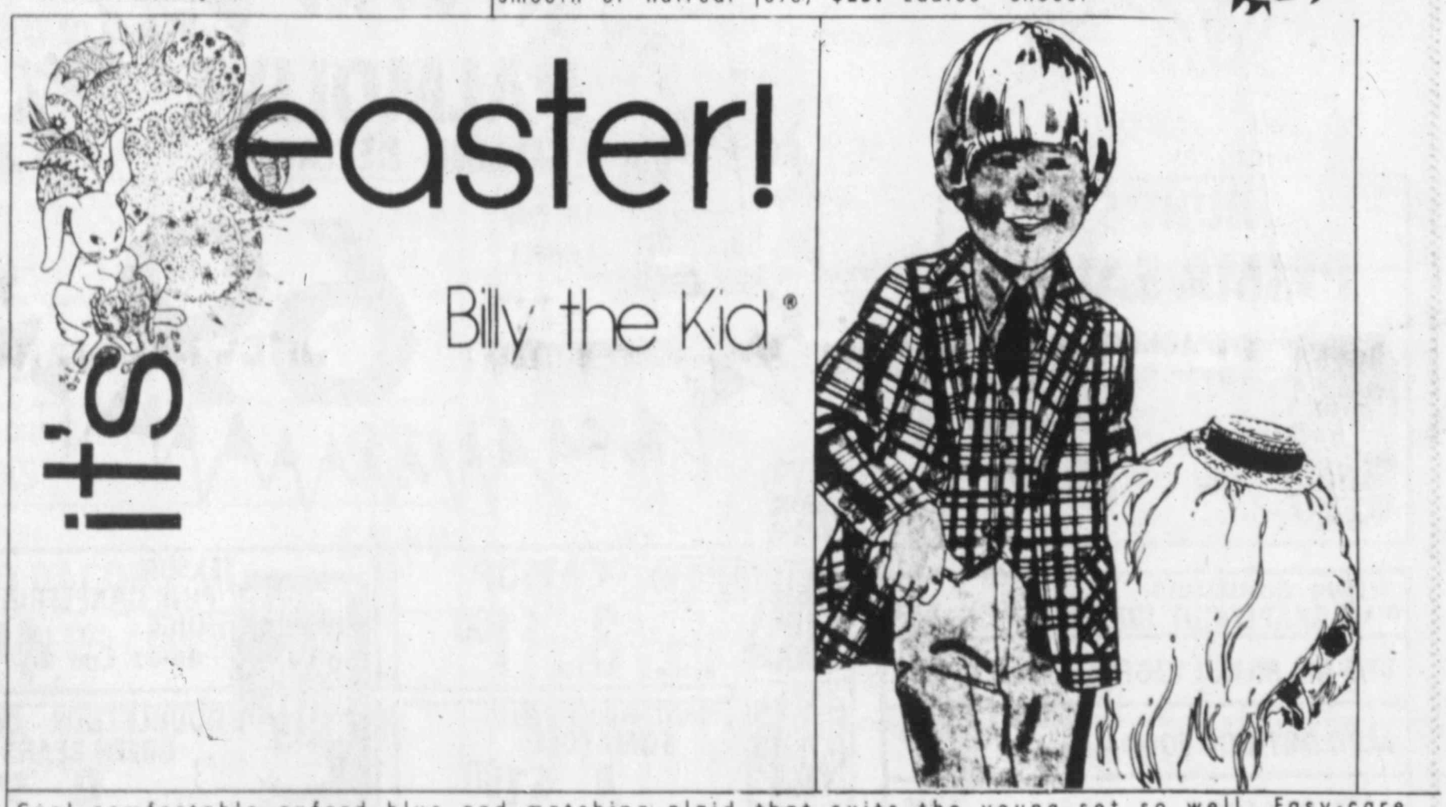

The United States, Britain, France, Canada and West Germany abstained Tuesday after failing in an attempt to water down an African resolution terming the agreement "illegal and unacceptable."

Voting for the resolution were the sponsors — Gabon, Mauritius, Nigeria, India, Kuwait, Bolivia and Venezuela — plus the Soviet Union, China and Czechoslovakia. They opposed it because Nkomo and Mugabe oppose it.

U.S. Ambassador Andrew Young urged dispassionate examination of the Salisbury agreement, which Britain and the United States say is inadequate but a significant step toward majority rule in the country of 6.7 million blacks and 263,000 whites.

"We must not resign ourselves that the birth of a new nation must be bloody and violent," Young told the council.

British Ambassador Ivor Richard said the Salisbury agreement could not be endorsed, "but it is a reality and it makes no sense to ignore it."

Cool comfortable oxford blue and matching plaid that suits the young set so well. Easy-care Dacron® polyester/cotton fabric in a reversiable vest, solid or plaid blazer, solid or plaid pant and a solid shirt. Sizes 2-3-4, $6 to $15.50. Children's Department.

Poage retiring from Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — "What makes this so nice is that there isn't a thing in the world I can do for you now," Rep. W.R. "Bob" Poage said in thanking 1,200 members of the Washington agricultural policy establishment.

"It somewhat makes me want to run for office," the Texas Democrat grinned at the conclusion of a four-hour tribute in a jammed hotel ballroom.

Poage, second in House seniority, is retiring at the end of this year after 42 years in Congress — eight as chairman of the Agriculture Committee.

He was deposed by the Democratic Caucus in early 1975, the first victim of a three-man purge of committee chairmanships fueled by that year's crop of new representatives.

Those who opposed him, all from other committees, said he was too autocratic and neglected the needs of food consumers. His committee colleagues immediately elected him vice chairman, a post he had held before.

Poage turned 78 last December. Last year, he underwent surgery for an intestinal growth.

Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland recalled the advice Poage had given him during his other terms on the panel and read a letter from President Carter expressing his "personal gratitude for the benefit of your experience."

Telegrams were read from Vice President Walter F. Mondale, former Agriculture Secretary Ezra Taft Benson, former First Lady Lady Bird Johnson and former President Gerald R. Ford, who jokingly called Poage, who has a legendary temper, "the classic strong, silent legislator."

"If he has anything to say tonight, I'm sure I'll be able to hear him in Jacksonville," concluded Ford, once leader of the House Republicans.

Taped messages were sent by former secretaries Charles Brannon and Earl L. Butz, who advised Poage to "never be a senior citizen, be a dynamic elder."

After the dinner, Agriculture Committee chairman Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., told committee staffers and leaders of the 75 established farm organizations.

There's a touch of the extra-ordinary with Melissa Lane for Easter '78. This chic jacket dress proves it! The versatile sleeveless dress has a drawstring waist, doubles as a smart jumper. Top it off with the mandrain' collar jacket. Pure polyester in yellow, (8-10-12), $54. See our exciting Easter collections in our Ready-To-Wear Department.

Buscycles now assist commuters, students

By ART SEIDENBAUM
The Los Angele Times

SAN DIEGO — The buscycle moves through the traffic, carrying pedalers across the Coronado Bridge, driving them down the coast from Del Mar and over to Fashion Valley, rolling through San Diego State University on the way to Grossmont Center.

The buscycle is a piggyback transit system combing the long-haul, mass-carrying capacity of the bus with the free-spirit, gas-saving beauty of the bicycle.

It is an engagingly simple idea:

Commuter leaves home, pulls bicycle out of garage and pedals to bus stop. Bus comes along; commuter pulls machine up Transit Bike Bank attached to rear of bus and locks wheels in place while boarding the bus as passenger. At destination, commuter debarks, releases bike and pedals off into the sunrise.

Commuter is easily interchangeable with college student or weekend wanderer or weekday shopper. The buscycle marries the personal convenience of the bike to the distance capability of the bus.

The California Department of Transportation made it possible.

The experiment began in the summer sn Diego Transit installing racks on the back of Coronado buses. Passengers had to pay an extra dime in the beginning, to open the lock that held the bike. By fall of that first year as many as 50 people a day were enjoying the combination of public and pedal transportation.

By the summer of 1977, the state agency came to several favorable conclusions about its demonstration project:

Operation of buses is not disrupted by the addition of bikes. Bus stops for loading bikes were marked by illustration and loading time was minimal.

Cost of the buscycle proved to be less than an earlier experiment using vans with trailers.

Increased use of the buscycle might make possible free rack service to cyclists, with added passenger fares offsetting the costs of rack installation.

When the demonstration ended in late 1977, Comprehensive Planning Organization — a regional body — came to the rescue with a fresh grant of $20,000 to expand and continue service. Routes had already been lengthened and crisscrossed to cover more of the city. A private Woodland Hills firm, Sunshine Recreation, had supplied a new security system without coin box.

By this January, San Diego Transit issued its own evaluation of the little revolution bolted behind its buses. General manager T. O. Prior reported 18 racks rolling around the system. All of the newest coaches in the fleet are equipped with brackets to accommodate racks when and if desired. All racks have been modified to permit free locking service.

"When we switched from the coin boxes," wrote Prior, "...we gave up an accurate way of accounting for how many riders we are accommodating . . . However, we now take spot counts that enable us to make fairly accurate estimes . . ." Some 20 bikes a day were piggybacked between Fashion Valley and Del Mar, with the University of California at San Diego on the route. Some 1,500 bikes will be aboard the whole system for this fiscal year, with a forecast for 10 percent increases each year thereafter.

The one-word summary from San Diego Transit: "beneficial."

There were some small problems along the way:

—Drivers have forgotten about the racks extending their total length and there are a few recorded cases of buses banging into other vehicles.

—One cyclist cut one finger on the locking mechanism.

—A small number of bicycles do not fit the racks.

There is only room for five bikes on any one carrier, meaning limited capacity to haul a whole party of pedalers and limited access to the service at any one time. If the buscycle becomes a big hit, more racks will have to be attached to more vehicles.

Right now, the system is relatively unsung. Most of the publicity has been in biking magazines. Shantzer said the racks are their own best advertisements.

U.S., Dutch ink new air accord

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States and The Netherlands have approved a new air transport agreement that will increase the possiblity of lowfare competition between the two countries, the Transportation Department said Tuesday.

Under the pact, fares and rates for both scheduled and charter airlines will be subject only to the control of the country where a flight originates.

U.S. negotiators had sought this provision as a means of encouraging competitive low fares. In return, KLM Royal Dutch Airlines got the right to fly to Los Angeles and another U.S. city yet to be selected.

Governments more inclined to act against terrorism

By PHIL McCOMBS
The Washington Post

In the eerie, violent world of international terror, governments seem increasingly to be reacting with sophisticated military tactics. As soon as it appeared Tuesday that Moluccan terrorists had begun executing hostages, a specially trained team of Dutch marines successfully stormed their stronghold.

"There's less tendency to wait, and my feeling is that even those peaceful nations like The Netherlands are just losing patience (with terrorists)," said Robert Kupperman, chief scientist of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency.

"They won't take the ...," he said. Governments "intend to negotiate, but their tolerance is lower."

Kupperman, who led three important secret studies of terrorism by U.S. government agencies recently, said that if a military option looks viable to a government dealing with terrorists, "then there's a tendency to use it. Nobody wants a giant catastrophe, but at the same time ... (nobody's) interested in having the whole nation go through a kind of soap opera, it's just not going to occur. If you get hit enough, you punch back."

J. Bowyer Bell, a senior research associate at Columbia University's Institute of War and Peace Studies, said that nowadays, "Practically every country would prefer to be strong and harsh, (to show) that you can't challenge authority."

He said that generally public pressure is put on politicians to end terrorist incidents, and then the politicians tend to communicate the pressure to the negotiators on the front lines.

The storming tactic gained enormous currency at Entebbe Airport in July, 1976, when Israeli commandos rescued a planeload of hostages in a daring raid.

At nearly the same time the Dutch marines were storming the terrorist stronghold in Assen Tuesday, Israeli troops invaded southern Lebanon in retaliation for the recent hijacking and bombing of an Israeli bus by Palestinian guerrillas that resulted in more than 40 deaths.

ELEVEN Israeli athletes had died at Munich less than four years before the Entebbe raid, after police engaged in a shootout with Arab terrorists. Yet so stunning and successful was the Entebbe raid that the slaughter at Munich seemed part of the distant past. The day of the antiterrorist shock troops had arrived.

Last October a West German commando force successfully freed 91 hostages from a hijacked Lufthansa airliner in a lightning raid at Mogadishu, Somalia. The raid reportedly prompted President Carter to order formation of an elite commmando unit to give the nation its first full-time capability for dealing with terrorism against American citizens or property abroad. The troops of "Project Blue Light" are now in training at Fort Bragg, N.C.

Egyptian commandos tried out the tactic last month when they went to Cyprus and attacked a jetliner controlled by two Arab terrorists with 16 captives aboard. Cypriot national guardsmen fired on the advancing Egyptians and drove them away from the plane, killing 15 of the commandos.

Israel remains the leading hard-line nation on terrorism — and the small country has more or less made it clear that the loss of a few lives in fighting a terrorist incident, while lamentable, is a necessary price to pay for national survival.

In 1975 Israeli commandos stormed a beachfront hotel in Tel Aviv to end a seven-hour siege by Arab terrorists and free a large number of hostages. In late 1976 Israeli authorities refused to allow a hijacked airliner to land and refused to release prisoners as demanded by the hijackers despite threats to blow up the plane. The hijackers subsequently surrendered in Cyprus.

"The major lesson to learn is ... not to surrender to blackmail, threats, ultimata," then-Israeli defense minister Shimon Peres reportedly said.

The United States has long had a similar policy, and the successful West German raid at Mogadishu last October prompted the State Department to reiterate its position that "we make no concessions to terrorist blackmail, because to do so would merely invite further demands."

The State Department created an office for combating terrorism in 1972, following the Munich incident and the creation by President Nixon of a cabinet committee for combating terrorism.

"The policies of other governments have been as tough or tougher than ours," said a department official who asked not to be identified. The Dutch government has a policy of listening to terrorist demands, but without making significant concessions, the official said.

ONE exception is Japan, which in at least two incidents in 1975 and 1977 gave in to terrorist demands to release jailed members of the Japan Red Army and to pay millions in ransom money.

In the 1977 incident, Japanese Justice Minister Hajime Fukuda said he accepted full responsibility for the release of the prisoners as necessary to save lives and Prime Minister Takeo Fukuda declared that "human life is more precious than the earth."

There is concern among many observers that an increasing government tendency to use force may result in a major disaster — a backfired raid in which large numbers of hostages and troops are killed. The way around that in most cases, say the experts, is a strong government commitment to patient, long-teerm bargaining with the terrorists if necessary.

Dr. Frank Ochberg, a psychiatrist who is a consultant for the FBI on terrorism and who was present in the command center last summer when Moluccan terrorists seized a train with hostages, suggested that the media coverage of such events may create impatience for a settlement of the crisis.

"Patience is something we've got plenty of," he said. "Lives are not. Here's where the media themselves must ask some questions."

That Moluccan raid was broken after the same group of Dutch marine commandos stormed the train. The raid followed 20 days of negotiation and began after the terrorists executed a hostage in full view of the government authorities.

"The Dutch government just lost patience, and they went in. They ended up with dead people and got (the hostages) out," said Bell of Columbia. "It makes them feel a lot better. People just don't like to sit around and wait them out, particularly the politicians."

Bell said this sort of action, which "the public is usually calling for," shortcuts negotiations that have by this time been worked into a science.

Another source familiar with the Moluccan incident a year ago, however, said there was no political pressure from The Hague to end the incident with a raid. The decision was made by the forward command, this source said, and was based on a feeling that hostages were going to die unless saved by immediate military action.

Drug law changes to be recommended

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration plans to ask Congress this week to approve massive changes in the nation's prescription drug laws that are sure to encounter strong pharmaceutical industry opposition.

The legislation, the most comprehensive rewriting of the nation's prescription laws since the Food and Drug Administration was created in 1906, is designed to lift the lid of secrecy from FDA operations and make it easier to get new drugs on the market and pull problem ones off druggists' shelves.

Sources who have seen the most recent draft of the bill, still under review by the White House Office of Management and Budget, say the proposal would:

—Allow provisional approval of some new substances that otherwise might be held up by months or years of research. Such approval could be withdrawn quickly if risks were discovered, another lengthly process under current regulations.

—Give the FDA the power to limit distribution of new drugs to hospitals or possibly to patients with prescriptions from certain medical specialists.

—Require that prescriptions contain leaflets written in nonmedical language telling patients what the drugs are good for and their possible hazards.

Refusal to 'stonewall' cost job, Colby claims

By GEORGE LARDNER JR.
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Former Central Intelligence Agency Director William E. Colby says he believes President Ford fired him in the fall of 1975 because of his determination not "to stonewall" congressional and executive branch investigations of CIA wrongdoing.

In an autobiography scheduled to be published in May, Colby says he got a number of warnings from the outset that he was being too candid, including one from then Vice President Rockefeller.

Ford named Rockefeller in January 1975 to preside over the executive branch inquiry as chairman of the Presidential Commission on CIA Activities Within the United States.

In his book entitled "Honorable Men: My Life in the CIA," Colby says Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and Brent Scowcroft, who headed Ford's National Secuurity Council, also expressed their distress to him as the congressional inquiries proceeded.

In a prepared statement, Rockefeller denied a brief account in Newsweek magazine's Periscope column saying that Rockefeller had asked Colby to "stonewall" Rockefeller's own investigating commission. But the former vice president declined Tuesday through a spokesman to go beyond that and comment on the book.

The former CIA director said that after his second or third appearance before the Rockefeller commission in early 1975, the vice president drew him aside "and said in his most charming manner, 'Bill, do you really have to present all this material to us.'"

According to Colby, Rockefeller continued, saying, " 'We realize that there are secrets that you fellows need to keep, and so nobody here is going to take it amiss if you feel that there are some questions you can't answer quite as fully as you seem to feel you have to.' "

Colby said he "got the message quite unmistakably" and didn't like it. The vice president of the United States, he said, was "letting me know that he didn't approve of my approach," and that he would rather Colby begin "fending off investigators by drawing the cloak of secrecy" around the CIA in the name of national security.

The former CIA director said he "mumbled something appropriate" to Rockefeller and then "went on to give the commission what it needed to get a fair picture of CIA's history."

After Newsweek's one-paragraph item about Colby's forthcoming book appeared this week, The New York Times published additional detail in Tuesday's editions.

It also quoted Richard E. Snyder, president of Simon & Schuster, which is publishing the book, as deploring a "front-page mentality" that is making it difficult to circulate advance proofs of works such as Colby's.

The Washington Post then decided to publish an article based on a proof copy of the book in its possession. Snyder could not be reached for additional comment.

Colby recounts in some detail why he chose to oust CIA counterintelligence chief James Angleton in December 1974, just before publication of The New York Times story that prompted the investigations of the agency. According to Colby, Angleton had an "ultraconspiratorial turn of mind," full of tortuous suspicions that Soviet intelligence agents were planted in the heart of allied and neutral nations and notions about false defectors being sent here to undermine American policies.

What really turned him off, Colby said, was the discovery that good CIA officers were being hurt as the result of such theories. On one occasion, he said, the head of a friendly liaison service in a foreign capital "drew me aside on a visit to confront me with the fact that Angleton had told him that our chief of station there was a Soviet agent." Colby said he checked and found that the matter had been thoroughly investigated years earlier and the offficer "given a totally clean bill of health."

Asked for comment, Angleton expressed alarm Tuesday night that Colby had been permitted to make such disclosures. He also said that he made no allegation of his own, but merely conveyed information from "a sensitive source" with whom the Foreign Service was familiar.

Charging that Colby was being permitted to give out "some of the most sensitive counterintelligence" information, Angleton protested that "there'll be at least a dozen people (in Moscow) reading his book against their (KGB) data computer machines." The former counterintelligence chief deplored that the CIA, which reviewed the manuscript, had permitted such information to be published.

For his part, Colby said he felt the agency had made too many exmisions.

Mrs. G. N. (Alice) Hughes

Alice Hughes

Mrs. G. N. (Alice) Hughes, 63, of 3402 Thomas St. died Tuesday afternoon in a Midland hospital.

Services will be at 4 p.m. Thursday in Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home. John Palmer of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, will be the reader. Burial will follow in Resthaven Memorial Park.

Mrs. Hughes was born Sept. 5, 1914, in Anson and grew up in O'Donnell. She moved from O'Donnell to Harlingen where she lived several years. She married George Newell Hughes Dec. 31, 1936, in Lovington, N.M. They moved to Midland in January 1950 from Pecos.

A musician, Mrs. Hughes taught piano and organ many years. She was a member of the National Guild of Music Teachers and was a past president of the Midland Music Teachers Association. For a number of years, she played with the Downtown Lions Club band. She was a former sweetheart of the downtown club and the West Side Lions Club. She was a member of Asbury Methodist Church.

Survivors include her husband; two sons, George Michael Hughes and James Newell Hughes, both of Midland; a daughter, Mrs. Vaughn Archer of San Antonio; a sister, Fannie D. Shumake of Seagraves, 11 grandchildren and a great-grandchild.

The family requests memorials be made to the Lions Crippled Children Camp at Kerrville.

Pallbearers will be Earl Waltrip, Jimmy Furman, John Biggs, Carl Hyde, Robert Pine, and Victor Horn.

Honorary pallbearers will be members of the Midland Downtown Lions Club Band and Tracy Ratliff, Tom Nipp, and C. A. Churchill.

Florence Bass

Services for Mrs. G. A. (Florence) Bass, 71, of 1119 N. Colorado St., were to be at 10 a.m. today in the Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home chapel.

The Rev. Bob Mason, associate minister at Kelview Heights Baptist Church, was to officiate. Burial was to be in Resthaven Memorial Park.

Mrs. Bass died Friday night at her residence. She had been in failing health for several months.

She was born March 1, 1907, in Eagle Bend, Minn. She lived in Midland from 1945 until 1963, moving then to Berryville, Ark. She returned to Midland in 1972. She was a Baptist.

Survivors include her husband, G. A. Bass; two sons, Bryan Bass of Little Rock, Ark., and Bruce Bass of Fort Worth; two sisters, Ruth Grubb of Minneapolis, Minn., and Hulda Olson of Parkersburg, Minn., and one grandchild.

Pallbearers were to be Jack Leonard, John Walling, W. C. Smith, Charles West, Joe McClury and Loyd Russell.

Webb died Monday in his home in Canoga Park, Calif.

He was born Feb. 22, 1894, in Arkansas. He was a veteran of World War I. He served as sheriff of Ector County from 1923 to 1941.

After retiring in 1941, Webb ranched for several years at Beaverhead, N.M. He returned to Odessa in 1953, and was employed by the Ector County Highway Department, retiring in 1967. He was a member of the Masonic Lodge.

Survivors include a son, Jack R. Webb of Canoga Park; a brother, George Webb of Torrance, Calif., and three grandchildren.

G. Morehead

BIG SPRING — Gibby Morehead, 71, died Tuesday in a Big Spring hospital after an illness.

Services will be at 10 a.m. Thursday in the First Baptist Church. Burial will be in Trinity Memorial Park directed by Nalley-Pickle Funeral Home.

Morehead was born May 21, 1906, in Moore, Okla. He married Thelma Staggs Sept. 26, 1927, in Okmulgee, Okla. They moved to Big Spring in 1936. He served on the board of the Baptist Geriatrics Hospital in San Angelo and the Board of Regents of Mary Hardin-Baylor College. He is a past state president of the Gideons Society. He was a Sunday school teacher and deacon for more than 30 years.

He owned and operated the Allied Van Lines in Big Spring. He served on the Salvation Army advisory board for 20 years. He was past president of the Kiwanis Club.

Survivors include his wife; two sons, Jimmy Morehead of Big Spring and Robert Earl Morehead of Houston; a daughter, Doris McCulloch of Amarillo; three sisters, May Muse and Lela Simpson, both of Wheeler, and Edith Chaney of San Antonio, seven grandchildren and a great-grandchild.

McMillan infant

LAMESA — Graveside services for Chad Allen McMillan, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Ronnie McMillan of Lamesa, were held Sunday in Lamesa Memorial Park with the Rev. Dan Rice of the First Baptist Church officiating. Arrangements were handled by Branon Funeral Home.

The infant died Friday in Lubbock.

Survivors, other than the parents, include two sisters, Sherry Lynn McMillan and Amy D'Ann McMillan, both of the home, and his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Miller and Mr. and Mrs. L. R. McMillan, all of Lamesa.

Sarah Kincaid

LUBBOCK — Services for Sarah Sellers Kincaid, 76, of Lubbock, stepmother of Kay Smith of Big Spring, were to be at 2:30 p.m. today in the Pleasant Ridge Baptist Church with the Rev. Frank Jones, pastor, officiating and the Rev. Orville Seay of Amarillo assisting.

Burial was to be in Resthaven Memorial Park directed by Sanders Funeral Home.

Mrs. Kincaid died Monday in a Lubbock nursing home.

An Ennis native, she had lived in Lubbock the past four and a half years. She moved here from Eunice, N.M., where she had lived 10 years. She was a member of the Pleasant Ridge Baptist Church.

Other survivors include her husband, a stepson and a brother.

Silber says BU admits on sex, race, money

BOSTON (AP) — The medical school of Boston University accepts students based on grades, sex, race — and on how big a gift their fathers can make to the university, the BU president has admitted.

President John Silber responded Tuesday to a story in today's edition of the student newspaper, BU Exposure, which printed excerpts from a transcript of a trustees meeting 4½ years ago.

Silber was quoted as saying at the October 1973 meeting that "when we facilitate (an) admission there's no reason why we shouldn't go to ...the father of the person who's been admitted and talk to him about a major gift to the school."

A spokesman for the university, Wesley Christensen, confirmed the authenticiy of the transcript, pages of which were made available to The Associated Press.

Silber said in a statement that of 6,000 students who apply for 85 openings in the medical school, about 50 are chosen because of outstanding academic records.

The remaining 35 are selected from those who qualify academically and also balance the class in terms of race, sex and distribution by home state and undergraduate school, Silber said.

"Finally," Silber's statement said, "we will be very concerned to be on the lookout for potential gifts to BU from wealthy students or their families who can afford to make a gift to BU and whose gift provides a reason for selecting their fully qualified son or daughter over some other fully qualified but not better son or daughter who could not make this contribution."

Christensen said he did not know whether other schools in the university considered family wealth in admissions criteria, but the transcript indicates the law school is also involved.

In an interview, Christensen said the Office of Resources, which is responsible for BU's fund-raising activities, helps the medical school locate potential contributors among applications.

If an applicant has a famous last name, for example, the Office of Resources checks to see whether the applicant is related to the well known family, Christensen said.

The office, he added, also notes whether the applicant has relatives who attended BU and investigates to determine whether the relatives are large contributors, he said.

During the trustees' meeting, which was held to plan fund-raising strategy, Silber is quoted as saying the university should obtain a list of the "admission considerations that we've given."

"There have been any number of people crawling all over me for admission to our medical school and our law school who have never been tapped systemically for a gift to this university. I'm not ashamed to sell those indulgences," Silber said in the transcript.

"We don't admit someone to our medical school or our law school who isn't qualified to get in."

Chemists dig for safe sweetner

By GEORGE ALEXANDER
The Los Angeles Times

ANAHEIM, Calif. — The continuing search for a safe and effective artificial sweetener and the development of a new age-dating technique were just a few of the subjects discussed here Monday at the start of the 175th national meeting of the American Chemical Society (ACS).

"We're looking at macromolecules (large molecules) that would impart some characteristics of foods — such as flavor, color or anti-oxidation," said Dr. Guy A. Crosby of the Palo Alto, Calif.-based firm of Dynapol, "and having done that, will pass right through the gastro-intestinal tract and be excreted because they're too big to be absorbed (by the human intestine)."

Crosby said that his firm currently has two food colors, red and yellow, and an anti-oxidant currently well along in toxicity testing. Such tests, required by the Food and Drug Administration, involve feeding a proposed food additive to animals like rats for 30 months or so to see if any adverse consequences develop.

The firm has yet to begin toxicity testing of an artificial sweetener, Crosby said, because it is still searching for a promising compound which would become the basis of such a program.

Crosby said that experiments which have been carried out with the compound called neohesperidin dihydrochalcone have not been satisfying so far. The problem is that it doesn't taste quite like sucrose, the natural sugar with which most people in the United States and the Western world are familiar and its taste lingers on three to four times longer than that of sucrose.

Moreover, it takes two to three seconds for the sensation of NHDC, as chemists conveniently refer to this compound, to reach a peak, whereas the peak on sucrose's sensation is almost immediately apparent after ingestion.

Crosby said the molecule does meet the firm's requirement in being too big to pass through the human inestinal lining. This is considered to be an advantage because it does not enter the bloodstream and therefore does not have to be shown to be a non-carcinogenic or toxic material.

The Dynapol representative said that his firm was continuing to tinker with the molecular structure of the sweetener in the hope of solving the problems of a tardy initial sensation of sweetness and a protracted after taste.

The market for artificial sweeteners is considered to be enormous. Carbonated soft drinks, especially those of the so-called "diet" variety, tooth pastes and other consumer products all make use of noncaloric artificial sweeteners and the search for an effective compound has been intense since saccharin and cyclamates ran into trouble in recent years.

Both have been suspected of being carcinogens.

Another scientist, Dr. Richard A. Muller of the Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory at UC Berkeley, told a different ACS session about a new dating technique which, if it proves out, might enable geologists to determine the ages of geological formations as old as 30 million years with considerable accuracy.

The technique revolves around the quantities of Beryllium-10 remaining in a rock sample. Beryllium-10 is formed when cosmic rays enter the earth's atmosphere and strike oxygen or nitrogen atoms. The atoms break apart and Beryllium-10 is one of the fragments produced by these collisions, Muller explained.

"Beryllium-10 settles in the oceans," the physicist said, "works its way to the bottom and is trapped in sediments. So if you look at any particular layers of sedimentary rock, you can tell how long it has been there by the amount of Beryllium-10 remaining."

Car salesman proves he can sell anything

The Washington Post

It was always Joe Girard's goal in life to win his father's approval. In the process of trying, he made the Guinness Book of World Records as the world's best salesman for 12 years in a row.

"You know what my Sicilian father said?" demands Girard, imitating his immigrant father's accent. "He said, 'Joe, you bull-a too much-a. You can talk-a you way outa hell.'"

Girard's mother always took his side in the family squabbles and would tell him, "Don't give up-a Joe, you show him."

In 1973, when Girard was 45 years old, he sold 1,426 cars and trucks, earning the Detroit salesman a commission of $189,000, according to Guinness. His lifetime sales number, 13,001. "I was the world's greatest salesman and it was only two days before my father died that he finally came by the showroom and said, 'Joe, I'm proud of you.'"

There might have been a tear, but it is hard to catch as Girard moves around the hotel room acting out his selling techniques.

The room becomes a furniture salesroom as he sells a husband and wife a mattress. First the husband (as Girard turns to the air): "Try it, lie down, get a feel for it." He stretches out on the mattress, jumps up and walks to the other side to talk to the man's wife. "Here," says Girard, to a lamp, "Lie down next to your husband; it's a good mattress." He stretches out, now the wife.

A chair is dragged into the center of the hotel room; now it becomes a car showroom as he sits, right foot stretched out, holding a steering wheel, tooling along a highway.

Next it becomes a living room in someone's house with a man buying insurance. Two ashtrays become the photos of the man's children.

The mattress is purchased, the car bought and a $100,000 insurance policy signed as we try to find out how this human tornado became so persuasive.

"I'm a Sicilian, not an Italian and I'm proud of it. I had a lot of fights on the tough lower east side of Detroit when I was growing up when people made cracks about Sicilians."

Girard has the look of a successful scrapper with his $300 suit, monogrammed Dior ties, a diamond on his pinky finger, a big watch, manicured nails and a mod haircut.

"I dropped the 'i' from the back of my name when I found out I was losing sales. Some guy with his wallet out, the deal closed, would ask, 'Are you Italian?' When I told him I was a Sicilian he would slide the wallet back into his pocket and say he had better talk to his wife."

Born to Sicilian immigrants in 1928, when most Americans were out of work, Girard scrambled around doing anything that could make him a buck, including getting busted a couple of times when the police looked askance at some things he did.

"For the first 35 years of my life," Girard says, "I was the world's biggest loser. I got thrown out of high school. I got thrown out of 40 different jobs. I lasted only 97 days in the Army. I couldn't even make it as a crook. I tried twice. The first time I wound up with a night of terror in a juvenile detention center. The second time the charges against me were dropped for lack of evidence."

Girard went into business building houses and went bankrupt, owing more money than he had ever seen.

Like most Depression kids Girard learned to move fast as he stole coal from the yard across the street, to keep the family fire going. He shined shoes across from the factories, kneeling on barroom floors cadging pennies from drunks.

His father, a hard-working man who couldn't find work, took a lot of his frustrations out on Joe and eventually caused him to stutter, something that Girard eventually curbed — but not until he was 35 years old.

His sensitivity to racial slurs cut his schooling short. He popped a high school guidance counselor in the nose for making cracks about Sicilians.

Girard was 35 years old when he walked into the showroom of a new car dealer and begged for a job.

He sold himself to the owner and sold a car the first day. "I had a wife and kids at home and no groceries. I had to sell. I knew I couldn't let the guy get away. I couldn't let him leave without buying," he says.

The next day Girard built his customer list by removing four pages from the Detroit phone book and calling people. He remembered an old saying from his neighborhood. "If you throw enough spaghetti against the wall, some of it has to stick."

Girard, who was called "the No. 1 positive thinker" by Norman Vincent Peale, comes on a little like the Billy Graham of the new car lot.

He is selling his book, "How To Sell Anything to Anybody," and if he has his way we may all spend the rest of our lives buying things from each persuasive other.

Del Rio woman wins acquittal

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP)—A prominent Del Rio woman has been aquitted in U.S. District Court here of charges she encouraged Mexican aliens to illegally enter and remain in the United States.

It took a jury of five men and seven women just three hours Monday afternoon to void the government's charges against Delia Gonsalez, a notary public who has been active in Democratic Pary politics.

Mrs. Gonsalez was a delegate to the 1976 Democratic National Convention and was appointed by Gov. Dolph Briscoe to serve on the South Texas Basin Commission. Her husband is a Del Rio city council member.

Mrs. Gonsalez was acquitted of all 10 counts against her, including none counts of encourageing aliens to enter the United States and one count of making a false statement to a government agency.

The jury heard four days of testimony last week before listening to final arguments on Friday. Judge D.W. Suttle charged the jury before lunch Monday.

The trial was move to San Antonio from Del Rio at the request of Mrs. Gonsalez' lawyers.

Bureaucrats dig in, find answer to wolf problem

By WALTER R.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Now they've thrown the wolves to the bureaucrats.

And after 3½ years of deliberation, the bureaucrats have figured out what to do about it.

Compromise.

It seems that the gray wolves of Minnesota, enjoying the protection of the Endangered Species Act and not knowing when they were well off, began to prosper, and therefore to multiply.

That is no way to keep the government from the door.

According to the most recent census, there were an estimated 1,200 gray wolves in Minnesota. Not only that, they were hungry and had taken to munching on livestock.

So on Oct. 4, 1974, the state government of Minnesota cried wolf.

The state asked the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to take Minnesota's gray wolf off the list of endangered species, a classification which made it illegal to kill them.

The state complained that the wolf was ranging into populated areas and said that government protection should be dropped altogether.

"In response, the service initiated a review on Nov. 21, 1974," the Interior Department reported on March 9, 1978.

A team of wolf specialists spent two years considering the matter. Finally, the experts were ready. They decided that gray wolves residing in Minnesota should henceforth be considered a threatened species instead of an endangered species.

That means that designated government hit men can kill some wolves if they keep eating farm animals.

An endangered species is one threatened by extinction in at least a significant portion of its range. A threatened species is one likely to become endangered in the foreseeable future.

With the recommendation of its wolf experts in hand, the Fish and Wildlife Service asked for public comment. The cards, letters and petitions flowed, and they showed:

—1,017 signatures in support of leaving the Minnesota wolves alone, as an endangered species immune from capital punishment.

—326 people said the government should stop protecting the wolves, so that farmers could start shooting them when they show up at the sheep fold or the chicken coop.

—Seven people said Minnesota's wolves should be reclassified, from endangered species to threatened species.

So the Fish and Wildlife Service declared that, in accordance with the experts' recommendations and with "relevant public comments," presumably meaning the seven letters, it would make the wolves a threatened species.

The reclassification will permit limited killing of wolves that prey on domestic animals. Only authorized federal or state wildlife agents can shoot them.

Back when the wolf was endangered, instead of just threatened, the government used to trap wolves that attacked livestock and ship them out of the territory. That's the hard way, and besides, it seems that a displaced wolf, moved from its own turf to roam the territory of another pack, is likely to be killed by the resident wolves anyhow.

Even with the new rules, the Minnesota wolves can find sanctuary in the northern reaches of the state, where there is a 4,462-square-mile range in which they still can't be killed.

On the other hand, any wolves showing up in Minneapolis will do so at their own risk.

The government says it has the wolves' best interests at heart. "Although an increased legal take of wolves commiting depredations on domestic animals will be authorized, it is hoped that this action will reduce present conflict between the wolf and human interests," the Fish and Wildlife Service declared. "Such conflict would hinder conservation efforts and thus work against the long-term welfare of the wolf."

The wolf has been the heavy in literature ever since there were wolves and people to write about them. "He's mad that trusts in the tameness of a wolf," Shakespeare wrote.

Rudyard Kipling consigned them to the law of the jungle, "as old and as true as the sky.

"And the wolf that shall keep it may prosper.

"But the wolf that shall break it must die."

There's a new law now. But Endangered Species Act doesn't rhyme with much.

Whoa to cutbacks

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House is telling the American public and the Postal Service that it will not permit elimination of Saturday mail deliveries.

Legislation designed to prevent the service cutback passed 371-6 on Monday and went to the Senate.

The measure would require postal officials to tell Congress in advance of any plan to change the level or type of service. Either house could pass a resolution of disapproval within 60 days to block the plans.

Issues requiring notification would include planned curtailment of operations at post offices and any planned increase in letter delivery times.

The Postal Service has been considering elimination of Saturday deliveries, but never formally proposed the idea.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON
Most vegetable oils are 'light'

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am on a low-cholesterol diet. Are vegetable oils all OK?—R.Y.

Dear R.Y.: Almost all are. The two to avoid are coconut oil and palm oil, as they do have a high proportion of saturated fat. They are used very often in process foods. Corn, safflower, sesame seed, soybean and sunflower-seed oil are all highly recommended as they are mostly polyunsaturated fat. Olive oil and peanut oil are predominatly monounsaturated—they do not lower your cholesterol but they don't raise it either.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I came across something the other day about drugs for strokes. Now I can't find it anywhere. Is there something new?—Theresa Q.

Dear Theresa: Very promising research is going on in this area. For instance, Dr. George S. Allen, a neurosurgeon at Johns Hopkins, reports that he has been able to restore circulation by the prompt use of two druga. The first, nitroprusside, makes the blood vessels relax and expand. The seconds, phenylephrine, makes them contract. Paralysis was avoided in these patients. The treatment, however, is still experimental.

Meanwhile, anyone who has had a stroke, or is close to someone who has suffered one, should be aware of all that modern physical therapy and rehabilitation can do to overcome paralysis and restor a normal life. Even patients who have been disabled for months or years can be helped.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My hearing has been getting much worse during the past year, and I am afraid I am going to have to get a new hearing aid. I have had very bad luck with the one I have now. It cost me about $250 and really didn't help too much—even at the beginning when I could still hear better than I can now. Do you know where or how I could find a reliable one?—Frances H.

Dear Frances: If you can't get a good recommendation from your doctor, I would try asking at the nearest hospital—preferably one that specializes in ear problems. They should know of a good dealer. The important thing is to get your specific problem accurately diagnosed, so that you get the right hearing aid.

Some hospitals have started selling hearing aids directly to the public because they have found that patients were getting poor service or the wrong devices when they simply go them at stores. among these hospitals are the Pittsburgh Eye and Ear Hospital, the Siegel Institute for Communicative Diseases in Chicago, and Northwest Hospital in Seattle. I hear that quite a few other hospitals around the country are thinking of setting up programs similar to these, so do be sure to inquire at your local hospitals.

Dummy's king of spades won the first trick. No need to think about that, and declarer drew a second round of trumps in his sleep. It was then too late to wake up. South had to lose two hearts, a diamond and a club.

After winning the first trick with the king of spades, declarer should immediately return a diamond from dummy.

In actual play, West would win this trick. But suppose East has the nerve to put up the ten of diamonds and suppose that East returns the jack of hearts, forcing out dummy's ace. This is the best defense, but South is still in good shape.

RUFFS DIAMONDS

Declarer ruffs a diamond, leads a trump to the ace and ruffs another diamond. By this time it is clear that the diamonds are breaking well. south draws the last missing trump, leads a club to dummy and ruffs another diamond.

This sets up dummy's last diamond. South can get to dummy with the remaining top club to cash the last diamond. The point is that every entry to dummy is needed to bring in that diamond trick. South cannot afford to waste a trump entry before he does his thinking.

DAILY QUESTION

Partner opens with one diamond, and the next player passes. You hold: S 763 H K72 D AJ97 C 975. What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid two diamonds. This weak response promises about 6 to 10 points with good trump support.

Baton Rouge ad firm acquires Frontier Corp.

The Lamar Corp. of Baton Rouge, La., the nation's sixth largest out door advertising company, has purchased Frontier Advertising Corp. of Midland, according to Lamar President Kevin P. Reilly.

Lamar acquired Frontier's assets from Rohland R. Reider, Frontier president.

Manager of the former Frontier operation, renamed Lamar-Frontier Advertising Co., is Robert Campbell, 29, formerly assistant manager of Lamar's interests in Mobile, Ala.

Lamar-Frontier's account executive is Mike LaBorde, who had been assigned to Lamar's operations in Baton Rouge, La.

The Lamar-Frontier operations covers posters, painted bulletins and billboards in and around Midland, Odessa, Big Spring and Stanton.

Campbell joined Lamar in 1972 as a posting supervisor. He is a native of Mobile, Ala., and is a graduate of the University of South Alabama. He is married to the former Jeanette Little, and they are parents of three children: Tammy, Stephanie and Brian.

LaBorde, 23, who had worked for Lamar in the summers while in high school and as a student at Louisiana State University, joined the out door advertising company full-time in 1976.

Senate committee passes bill to aid farm prices

By RICHARD L. LYONS
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Senate Agriculture Committee rushed out a bill it hopes can be enacted before spring planting to raise depressed farm prices by taking 31 million additional acres out of production.

Before a roomful of visor-capped farmers who have been here seeking higher prices since January, Chairman Herman Talmadge, D-Ga., persuaded his committee to report our the bill alone rather than tie it to a more controversial plan to raise price supports. The vote was 16 to 1.

All the committee members want to do something to help farmers, who despite a generous general farm bill enacted last year are hurting in some parts of the country because of crop surpluses last year.

Talmadge argued that the quickest way to get money to the farmers was his program to pay an average of $75 an acre not to plant crops this year. Cutting production should force an increase in farm prices. The bill must be enacted before farmers plant their 1978 crops, he said, and some planting is already underway in the South.

Talmadge wants the bill sent to the president before Congress starts its Easter recess a week from Thursday.

He said Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., said the bill could be taken up after the Senate votes on the first Panama Canal treaty Thursday, if there is unanimous agreement on the time it would take.

There is no assurance that the acreage set aside bill alone would satisfy the House Agriculture Committee. Rep. Thomas Foley, D-Wash., House committee chairman, said his committee might want to add higher price supports as a better way to assure the farmer higher prices.

Talmadge's set aside bill would cost an estimated $2.3 billion, but according to the Congressional Budget Office would mean a net saving of $171 million in the long run because higher farm prices would reduce price subsidy payments.

"We can save money and raise prices at the same time," said Talmadge happily.

The administration isn't keen about the bill. It has authority to conduct such a set aside program now but prefers as more "responsible" a build up of crop reserves. A Department of Agriculture spokesman said he didn't know whether President Carter would sign Talmadge's bill or not.

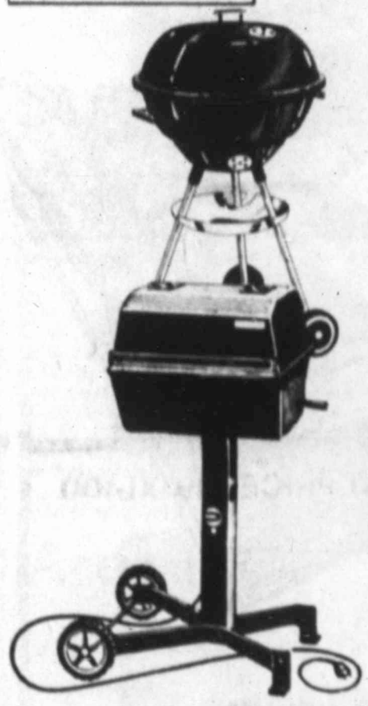

An amendment to add a 50-cent a bushel increase in price supports for wheat, corn and feed grains was defeated on a 8 to 8 tie. The CBO said it would cost $3.9 billion.

Talmadge said that if the committee would send out the set aside bill alone to see if it could speed unencumbered through Congress by spring, he would call another committee meeting Wednesday to deal with the high price supports, emergency loans for farmers facing mortgage foreclosure and other assistance programs. The House committee has approved an emergency loan bill for House action next week.

Gigantic figures, designs on plateau puzzle scientists

By ESTHER GWYNNE
Copley News Service

NAZCA, Peru — From the air the view is awesome.

Why, when and how were these gigantic figures and designs marked on this arid plateau?

A perfectly proportioned candelabrum, etched along 840 feet of coastal slope at the Bay of Baracas, points the way to the mysterious and intriguing Nazca markings.

Giant birds, reptiles, fish and flowers are etched on 200 square miles of desert floor. The most startling impression is their enormous size. An alligator stretches 600 feet long. A bird, perhaps a condor, at 66 feet is small. A monkey as large as a football field has an intricately curled tail that is more than a mile around.

Farther on are a 200-foot stylized flower, a human figure with giant eyes, an enormous dog.

But where the imagination really takes hold is at the sight of trapezoidal figures...

They look like colossal landing fields, arrow straight and intersecting in the way modern jetport runways do. They were clearly visible to our astronauts.

Scientists believe the markings were made more than 2,000 years ago by a culture that flourished from about 100 B.C. to 700 A.D. Then it vanished, leaving colorful pottery, fine weavings and these mysterious markings.

Why were they designed so that they can be seen clearly only from the air?

Books have been written and films made speculating that the markings are ancient landing fields for visitors from outer space, and that the garantuan figures are somehow a message for those visitors.

"Nonsense," says Maria Reiche, a suntanned, white-haired whisp of a woman in her 70s, who began a study of the markings 25 years ago. She insists they are documentations of a calendar science of the Nazca culture that was as important in this hemisphere as are the Egyptian pyramids. A German-born mathematician and geographer, Reiche is fanatical in her determination that the markings be studied, classified and. above all, protected.

Already an influx of visitors who walk among the markings, motorcycles and off-road vehicles that are driven over them are dimming the clarity of some lines.

Earlier, they had been preserved intact over the years because of the extreme aridity of the land (it receives less than an inch of rain a year) and by the structure of the soil which permitted the original Nazcans to remove dark topsoil to reveal the light, rocky surface of the markings.

The Peruvian government has erected a viewing tower beside the Pan American Highway that runs south from Lima through Nazca to Chile, in hopes of discouraging wanderers on the desert.

A small airport has been built at Nazca, a green oasis on this vast coastal desert. It is the base for planes that carry one or two passengers on 30-minute flights over the markings. An advantage to photographers — the plane door can be removed.

Nazca is best reached in six-passenger planes of Aero-Condor, an enchanting name for Peru's official airline from Lima to Nazca. We fly south along the coast, over the seaside suburbs of Lima....

Where the great rivers flow down from the Andes, there are fertile valleys where grapes are grown for the famous Peruvian brandy, Pisco, as well as crops of cotton, one of Peru's major agricultural products.

With an early morning departure, the flight takes little more than an hour, giving ample opportunity to study the land and to muse about the mysterious markings.

Bigger-than-life drawing of a whale is only one of many mysterious drawings and other markings in a vast desert plain at Nazca, in southern Peru. They are about 2,000 years old, but scientists disagree as to why they were created in the first place. (Copley News Service Photo)

Congress rethinking SS payroll tax hike

By ART PINE
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The phone call from the constituent was succinct — and undeniably clear. The increase Congress voted in Social Security payroll taxes last December was more than taxpayers could stand, and President Carter's tax cut wouldn't make up for it, no matter what the White House said. Then came the tagline: "Rich people don't have enough votes to get you re-elected, but working people do."

The congressman on the other end, Rep. Jim Mattox, D-Tex., lost no time in responding. Not only did Mattox draft a reply, he also introduced a bill to head off the payroll tax rise now scheduled for next January. "There's a lot of sentiment back home about payroll taxes," Mattox says, clearly concerned. "And we'd better do something or some of us may not be back."

Mattox isn't the only lawmaker who now thinks Congress made a mistake last year when it approved legislation increasing the payroll tax. Dozens of other senators and representatives are running scared over the issue — from panic-stricken freshmen to nervous old veterans. And most of them voted for the tax-hike bill last December.

Indeed, voter protests over the coming payroll tax increases have been mounting so rapidly in recent days that it now seems an odds-on bet that Congress will move to head them off more quickly than expected. Although only a few weeks ago any such legislation seemed a year or more away, momentum has been growing for action this year — certainly before the November election.

The evidence has been cropping up all over Capitol Hill. Two weeks ago, the House Ways and Means Committee was snagged for two days debating whether to roll back last January's rise. The proposal — a largely symbolic measure in the panel's annual budget recommendations—lost by only 1 vote. And last week, House Budget Committee members showed strong support for a rollback.

A key test vote may come Wednesday, when, at the demand of 92 congressmen, the issue is scheduled to come up at a meeting of the House Democratic Caucus. If the caucus votes formally to seek rollback legislation, House leaders effectively will be forced to go along with the effort. If that happens, observers predict, the Senate won't be far behind.

The major problem is how to go about undoing December's payroll tax vote. By far the easiest way would be simply to roll payroll tax rates back to their 1976 levels and make up the difference by earmarking some of the money that otherwise would have gone to the president's tax-cut package. Then, when the issue comes up again two years from now, Congress could take another look.

But the lawmakers have other plans to choose from as well. One, backed by liberal Democrats and Republicans, would separate the Medicare and disability insurance programs from Social Security and finance them with income tax revenues rather than with the payroll tax. Another, by Rep. James A. Burke, D-Mass., would use income tax revenues for one-third of the present program.

There also have been suggestions that the lawmakers enact a simple tax credit that effectively rebates the payroll tax increase without actually cutting into the Social Security trust fund. But the support for a rollback is indisputable: The Burke bill alone has 140 co-sponsors in the House and less-ambitious rival measures have 40 to 50 co-sponsors each.

The congressional burnabout is virtually an overnight development. As late as six weeks ago, Congress was still relatively satisfied with itself for having cleared the December hurdle. The issue last year was how to "save" the Social Security system from bankruptcy. Rising payroll taxes seemed a simple solution. Any major overhaul could wait until 1980.

Since then, however, the lawmakers have been hit with a spate of complaints by constituents, whose consciousness was awakened by a previously enacted payroll tax increase that went into effect Jan. 1. When the lawmakers went home for the Washington's Birthday recess, they were called on the carpet by angry taxpayers, and told to undo the tax.

The response has surprised even some supporters of the rollback effort. Rep. Abner J. Mikva, D-Ill., a liberal Ways and Means Committee member who is sponsoring a bill to shift the Medicare program out of Social Security, had little hope of seeing his bill pass when he introduced it a month ago. But Mikva now says payroll tax relief is "almost a sure thing." Many agree.

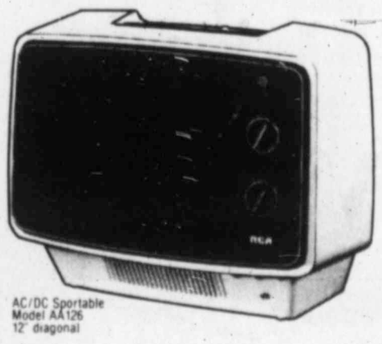

Indeed, congressional and administration leaders still haven't adjusted to the change. Both Rep. Al Ullman, D-Ore., chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, and Sen. Russell B. Long, D-La., who heads the Senate Finance Committee, oppose any reconsideration of last year's tax increase this session. Officials fret the lawmakers may botch it again if they act in undue "haste."

The administration has been waffling over the issue. When the question first arose a few weeks ago, Secretary of the Treasury W. Michael Blumenthal said he'd go along with whatever Congress did. But other officials, including Charles L. Schultze, the president's chief economist, have seemed decidedly more reluctant.

Last week, Blumenthal, Labor Secretary Ray Marshall and Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare Joseph A. Califano met privately on the question, with Califano and Marshall leaning toward some accommodation. The very next day, though, Blumenthal abruptly toughened that stand, telling the House Budget Committee he "strongly" opposed any change before 1980.

'Doubtful Princetonians' proving growing problem

"No man ever yet became great by imitation."
— Samuel Johnson.
By ROBERT E. DALLOS
The Los Angeles Times

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — Apparently a lot of people haven't gotten Johnson's message. They are among an ever-increasing number who are fibbing about where — or even if — they went to college. If they are not lying outright, they are at least magnifying their cum laudes.

They do it to get jobs, to boost their egos, to borrow money, to sell magazine subscriptions, to win political posts, to lure prospective investors into business ventures, to gain entrance into graduate schools and to impress prospective fathers-in-law.

The more prestigious the school, the bigger its roster of phony graduates. And companies that once accepted everything on a resume without question are becoming more suspicious and more alert.

"If people never went to college and if they pick a school out of the air, they are certainly more likely to pick a more famous institution — one which comes to mind easier or one that will be more beneficial in getting a job," Wesley Poling, Yale University's director of alumni records, said. "If they are graduates of colleges with lesser reputations, they'll also pick the better schools."

Yale's files of persons who have come to its attention for claiming to be alumni when they are not number more than 7,000. Of the requests that come into Stanford University for substantiation of graduation, an average of one a day doesn't check out. Schools find that many names come up over and over again.

There is little the schools can do to stop it. Such false claims constitute misdemeanors in several states, including California and New York. But it is difficult to prosecute even if an offender can be apprehended.

Last year a man from Alexandria, Va., pleaded guilty in a federal court in Baltimore to making an illegal attempt to obtain a high government job with the Federal Trade Commission. He had lied when he said he had a doctorate in computer sciences and three master's degrees.

At a few schools, phony graduates are given their own handles. At Princeton, they are dubbed "doubtful Princetonians." At Stanford, the names go into the "no such people" file. At Columbia they are known as "special cases." Yale's alumni office maintains a "special non-Yale" file that is more commonly referred to as the "imposter" file.

The Harvard Business School says it writes to those it catches making phony claims. A typical letter: "A person claiming a degree using your name has been fraudulently representing themselves. We really don't like this. We are going to have to do something about it."

STANFORD goes further and threatens legal action, but so far it has not taken any.

Dr. Donald W. Hammersley, deputy director of the American Psychiatric Association, believes that such dishonesty takes place because society puts value on attendance at prestige schools.

"Apparently it is so important to some people that it almost seems true to them that they did go there because they wished so badly that they had," Hammersley said. "If a person has that kind of personality characteristic allowing him to tell lies and if he thinks he'll not get caught, why then he'll lie about this."

Although some persons lie only on resumes for job or loan applications, others go to greater lengths.

Matthew J. Stephens, director of the undergraduate division of the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania, recalls that an official-looking transcript was sent back to Wharton by a suspicions personnel officer at Ford Motor Co. The transcript had Stephens' authentic signature stamp and the imposter had followed the correct grading system, had listed existing courses and given himself average grades.

"It looked like an absolutely authentic transcript," George Parks, associate director of Wharton's graduate division, said. "We really began to wonder if we had made some kind of mistake. But we just couldn't find this fellow anywhere in our records. Then we discovered one mistake. He had stamped the date of graduation next to the signature and the date was off by one day."

Wharton has not been able to determine how the phony signature was acquired or how the imposter got an official transcript form.

Another individual went so far as to counterfeit a University of Pennsylvania diploma, claiming a degree in "negotiation administration." It, too, looked like the real thing. But there was a tell-tale error. The counterfeiter had used Gaylord Hornwell's signature on the diploma. Hornwell had retired as university president three years earlier.

The Harvard Business School prints a formal resume book each year that contains the curriculum vitae of all graduates who want to be included. It distributes the book to 300 to 400 corporations looking for prospective employes.

One man who had never attended Harvard had his resume and picture in the book. As if that were not enough, he got his picture in the Harvard Yearbook that year.

SINCE then, Harvard has tightened its procedure. It requires producers of the resume book to check the names against the official graduating roster.

Prominent persons sometimes lie a little about their education in biographies they supply to Marquis Who's Who, Inc. When the publishing firm discovers an exaggeration, the subject is asked to supply proof. If he cannot, his sketch is pulled from the next year's edition of the proper volume.

"Schools and education," Ken Petchenik, president of Marquis, said. "That seems to be the one category of information that people who are going to lie about do lie about. The ironic thing is that these are all successful people. I cannot think of a single instance where the person lied about the reason that gained him entry into Who's Who' in the first place."

One educator maintains that by the time a person rises to the prominence necessary to qualify for listing in one of the Who's Who volumes, he is trapped by an earlier lie.

More often than not, the lies on a job resume come out after a person has been hired because employers often initiate verification checks after the employment process is completed.

Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner and Smith, Inc., the brokerage firm, said New York Stock Exchange regulations require it to check out backgrounds of all applicants. The 1 percent who lie are fired.

Sally Mahoney, Stanford University registrar and associate provost, said Stanford has begun to check more thoroughly into backgrounds of applicants for faculty and administrative openings.

Recently a man applied for a management position at Stanford, claiming he had earned a B.S. degree in administrative services at Yale, class of 1962. Upon checking, Stanford discovered that although there was a graduate with a name similar to his, his name was not on the graduation list. Although the man said that his parents had changed his name upon entering him at Yale and that he changed it back after graduation, he did not get the job.

Officials at Sarah Lawrence and Vassar receive clippings of newspaper articles that mention their institutions. Often they get clippings concerning people — some of whom are seeking minor political offices — mentioning that the individuals had been graduated from that institution. Frequently a check turns up a lie.

Although the number of imposters is on the rise, the practice is by no means new. Yale's files of imposters date back to about 1900. There are irate letters from hotel keepers who charged that persons claiming to be Yale alumni skipped a bill or cashed a bad check. In those days, a Yale degree was equal to today's American Express card in securing credit.

Many of the entries in the Yale roster of imposters are the result of requests by persons checking their roots. And there are many recorded disappointments when a great-great-grandson finds out that his great-great-granddaddy did not get his degree from Yale, no matter what the family stories had held.

There are fathers who find out that their daughters are not marrying a pedigreed Yale or Princeton graduate. Quite a number of prospective fathers-in-law check out their daughters' fiances, educators say.

Even the federal government is getting into the act. When the Justice Department created a new identity for a man convicted of mail fraud who had become a government witness, he was installed in several high-ranking jobs in city departments.

AAPL president warns of system's destruction

Members of the Permian Basin Landmen's Association heard a clear, unwatered down warning Tuesday night that this nation's free enterprize system is slowly being destroyed.

J. F. Womack, president of the American Association of Petroleum Landmen, said "the American free enterprise system is under assault today and is being replaced by a system which has never worked in history and which is working nowhere in the world today."

"Our American free enterprise system is the system that has made us into the greatest industrial and agricultural power in the world. But isn't it strange that despite unparalleled success, there are those that are destroying it," Womack said.

"Just consider the economic achievements of our country during its lifetime as a nation. The founders of our country were used to strict government regulation and control of trade and industry, but they didn't like it...so they rebelled, won a war, and built a new system to their own liking.

"Our country had an abundance of natural resources, but so did other parts of the world. The big difference was the manner in which we used those resources. The engine of our economic progress was the free enterprise system," Womack said.

He told his audience at the monthly meeting in the Midland Country Club that it was through the free enterprise system that life for the average man and woman improved, and that 200 years ago people worked from sunrise to sunset to make out a modest subsistence.

"Over the last century alone, we have had a 40-fold increase in our output of goods and services.

"The simple fact is that the economic growth in our country has done more toward eliminating poverty than all the welfare programs ever conceived by government, Womack said.

"Yet, we are in the process of replacing a system that rewards success and individual freedom with a system which has the philosophy of failure, the doctrine of collectivism and the creed of envy," Womack warned.

"There is loss of confidence in our government, in the business community, large institutions, schools, our time-honored professions, in the news media, and even in our churches. There is even a new game in the stores for older children and adults called 'Lie, Cheat and Steal — a game of power politics.' That is a sad reflection of our time," Womack said.

He further stressed his point by saying that critics of business engage in scapegoating to gain support for action against whichever industry at the time is a convenient target of opportunity. "This has led to the passage of legislation, and the people find out too late that they have lost some more freedom."

"For example, as a result of the Occupational and Safety Health Act, better known as OSHA, stories of abuse are cropping up everywhere. There is a case pending now in the 10th Circuit Court of Appeals on a case in point. A Mr. Hertzler employs five people in his small factory which is adjacent to his home.

"Mr. Hertzler keeps their lunches in his refrigerator. Because of this courtesy to his workers, OSHA was planning to enter his home without a search warrant and conduct a safety inspection.

"Refusing to let that happen, he is now paying the expense of fighting OSHA in the courts. Mr. Mike Levine in the Department of Labor said that OSHA did, indeed, have the power to inspect private homes under Section 8(a) of the Act.

"Now the consequences of this are staggering. What has happened to the Bill of Rights on searches and seizures?" Womack asked.

Womack said "our private enterprise system is threatened in the form of government action through regulatory agencies. By gradually expanding their jurisdiction and power, these agencies may accomplish by that means what the critics of business have so far been unable to achieve through litigation and legislation."

"Historically, the government has had regulations to tell us what we could not do, but this is changing with agencies setting out regulations on what we must do. This has created an expensive paper glut estimated to cost consumers $130 billion a year," Womack said.

He pointed out that in 1932 the U.S. bureaucracy was heavy with 150 bureaus and that we now have 3,500. He revealed that in 1932 there were 600,000 federal civilian employees and that there now are 2.5 million with 8,000 separate record systems. There are over 6,000 federal forms, he added. "Senator Proxmire said there is almost a new form everyday for everybody, everywhere."

He brought his red tape point home by saying "it costs $400 million a year and 10,000 oil company employees to handle government regulatory matters affecting petroleum.

"The federal government land withdrawal program is running rampant. About 62 percent of the federal domain is closed or so burdened by restrictions as to preclude exploration and development of energy minerals," Womack pointed out.

J. F. Womack

He added: "The environmentalists get in the act with protection of endangered species. A $116 million hydroelectric Tennessee project was enjoined because it threatened a little fish, the snail darter. A $2 billion New Hampshire nuclear project was stopped because of the threat to clam larvae. A $700 million Maine hydroelectric project was stalled because of a weed, the Furbish lousewort. A $3.5 billion project in Utah was cancelled after 13 years of consideration because of the black-footed ferret and the kangaroo rate. You wonder when they are going to consider human survival."

"Well, to this point it seems that we have nothing but a pessimistic outlook on life—that nothing can be done about it. But things are being done.

Womack, Houston, is manager of Landowner Relations in the headquarters Exploration Department of Exxon Co., U.S.A.

Some large power companies are resisting water energy

The Washington Post

NEW YORK — What may be the fastest-growing alternative energy source in the Northeast is one that is natural, renewable, non-polluting, native, and being resisted by some very large power companies. It's called water.

Henry Griffin of Collinsville, Conn., is working to restore a hydroelectric power plant that he helped chop up into scrap metal a dozen years ago.

In West Carthage, N.Y., Mary Jane Hirschey wants to generate power from her dam on the Black River that was producing electricity until 1963.

The 10,000 citizens of Springfield, Vt., have voted to spend $58 million to restore the generating capacity of six dams and to form a municipal power company and take over distribution from the investor-owned utility.

Water power built New England and made it prosperous. But over the last 60 years, the advent of cheap oil and gas and giant utility companies that had no use for small hydro-projects killed off New England's small power stations.

"Now we're returning to the river," says Vermont State Sen. Chester Scott, one of the backers of the Springfield project.

The 1973 oil embargo, quadrupled oil prices, two severe winters and depressing economic conditions in the Northeast have revived interest in small hydroelectric sites that would have been considered uneconomical 10 years ago.

The Department of Energy has earmarked $10 million for study and development of "low head" hydroelectric projects this year, and if the energy bill passes Congress it would provide $100 million a year for three years for renovation of existing dams. By the federal government's definition, low-head dams are those less than 64 feet high, with a production capacity less than 15 megawatts.

Some of the dams being looked at are as low as the four-foot one at Helen Winter's Grist Mill antique store at Farmington, Conn. It could light and heat only one building, while others could light a town.

"This is what created the industrial revolution in New England. We had sawmills, grist mills, every kind of factory — and they all ran on water," says Griffin.

New England and New York have many abandoned hydropower sites because they were settled early when water and wood were the only sources of power.

"These existing dams are pretty well confined to the original 13 Colonies," Lawrence Falick of the Department of Energy said.

For years, utility companies concerned with vast power grids and with huge plants like the nuclear ones that produce 1,000 megawatts have scorned little dam sites as an obsolete technology.

Officials of all the northeastern state energy offices describe the large utility companies as less than enthusiastic about developing small hydroelectric projects — even ones that they own.

"They destroyed our dam so that there would be no competition from small sources," Griffin says bluntly. "I don't think the papers were signed a minute before they were in there cutting up the generators."

Griffin signed on for $50 to help the scrap metal company cut up the generators at the Collinsville dam after the Hartford electric company bought it. Now, as a member of the town conservation commission, he is seeking one of the Department of Energy grants to study the feasibility of reviving the dam.

Donham Crawford, president of the Edison Electric Institute, representing the nation's investor-owned utilities, denies that power companies oppose developing small sites.

"We have no desire to do anybody in," Crawford said. "We're all for hydro, but the question is whether it's economic or not."

Edison Electric represents about 200 companies that produce over 75 percent of the nation's electric power.

"It's my feeling that the large, investor-owned utilities will pay a lot of lip service to small hydro and basically fear it," said Bob Mauro, energy research director of the American Public Power Association, which represents publicly owned companies.

The fear is that a community with a dam will divorce its power company and form a municipal utility, as Springfield is trying to do.

The Vermont community has spent more than $500,000 preparing its move, and part of the plan may be decided in court. In addition to activating the dam, the town wants to seize the distrubution system now operated by the state's largest electric utility, Central Vermont Public Service Corp.

"We're going to sit down with them for what I call the waltz of the partidges," Sen. Scott said. "We'll flap our wings and see if there's anyone who can't stand to be in the room. I'm cautiously optimistic, but we've been disappointed by them before."

John Mullen of Central Vermont Public Service said, "We're not interested in having them take over our distribution system. It'll end in litigation." Central Vermont believes that Springield's engineering studies overstate the potential of its dams and that the town's project is headed for financial disaster, Mullen said.

Discovery potentials

A Strawn reef oil discovery has been completed in Fisher County by Sojourner Drilling Corp. of Abilene.

Operator has suggested the strike, No. 1 Raymond Johnson, be designated the opener of the Five-N (Strawn reef) field.

On 24-hour potential test it flowed 50 barrels of 40-gravity oil and a trace of water, through a 14/64-inch choke. Gas-oil ratio is 200-1.

The production is from perforations at 5,135-5,140 feet. The perforations were washed with 500 gallons of mud acid.

Location is 2,150 feet from north and 2,000 feet from east lines of section 198, block 1, BBB&C survey and four miles southwest of Hamlin.

The discovery is ½ mile north of Canyon sand production. The Strawn reef was topped at 5,133 feet on ground elevation of 1,789 feet.

WARD WELL

Gulf Oil Corp. No. 4-B State has been completed from the Delaware sand in the Caprito multipay field of Ward County.

One location south and west of other production from the same pay, it finaled for a daily flowing potential of 320 barrels of 39-gravity oil and 170 barrels of water, through a 20/64-inch choke and perforations from 6,038 to 6,542 feet. Gas-oil ratio is 781-1.

Location is 1,980 feet from north and 660 feet from west lines of section 23, block 17, University Lands survey.

It is four miles northwest of Pyote.

UPTON OILER

John L. Cox of Midland No. 1-I Owens has been completed in the Upton County portion of the Spraberry Trend Area field, 13 miles northwest of Rankin.

It finaled for a daily pumping potential of 127 barrels of 40-gravity oil, plus 12 barrels of water, through perforations from 7,763 to 7,951 feet after 130,000 gallons of fracture solution.

Location is 1,320 feet from north and east lines of section 11, block Y, GC&SF survey.

STERLING WELL

The Texaco Inc. No. 4-1 Sterling Fee is a new well in the Big Salute (Canyon) area of Sterling County.

It finaled for a daily flow of 281 barrels of 49-gravity oil and 80 barrels of water, through perforations from 7,543 to 7,946 feet. Gas-oil ratio is 2,335-1.

Wellsite is 1,980 feet from north and 660 feet from east lines of section 31, block 31, T-5-S, T&P survey and 9½ miles southeast of other Canyon production.

Offset well completes in Irion

A west offset to the discovery well of the Irion 163 (Ellenburger) field in Irion County has been completed by Gulf Oil Corp.

It is No. 1-VE State, 660 feet from south and 1,880 feet from west lines of section 5, block 40, University Lands survey and three miles southeast of Barnhart.

It completed for a daily flow of 286 barrels of 48.1 gravity oil and 18 barrels of water, through perforations from 8,706 to 8,788 feet. The pay was treated with 15,000 gallons of acid. Gas-oil ratio is 434-1. Total depth is 8,900 feet and 5½-inch casing is set on bottom.

EDDY WELL

Cities Service Co. No. 1-CX State has been finaled ¾ mile northwest of the Winchester (Morrow) field in Eddy County, N. M.

Operator reported a calculated, absolute open flow potential of 3.71 million cubic feet of gas per day through perforations from 10,923 to 11,034 feet. The pay was acidized witn 8,000 gallons.

Location is 660 feet from south and 1,980 feet from west lines of section 28-19s-28e and 15 miles northeast of Carlsbad.

Stock market loses

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market retreated today amid caution over developments in the Middle East.

The noon Dow Jones average of 30 industrials was off 5.28 at 757.28.

Losers took a slight lead over gainers among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

The market began rallying late in Tuesday's session when negotiators for the coal companies and the United Mine Workers announced a tentative settlement.

Traders seemed to be hopeful that the union membership would react more favorably to the new pact than they did to the proposal which they rejected early this month.

But that enthusiasm was tempered today by wariness over Israeli forces' drive into southern Lebanon in retaliation for a terrorist raid last weekend.

Hercules Inc. led the active list, off ⅛ at 13. Blocks of 100,000 and 50,000 shares of the chemical company's stock traded at that price.

National Presto dropped 1¼ to 23⅞ after an 8¼-point slide Tuesday that was blamed on disappointment over the size of the earnings gain reported by the company for 1977.

The NYSE's composite index dropped .16 to 49.59. The American Stock Exchange market value index was up .18 at 125.95.

Volume on the Big Board reached 10.18 million shares by noontime, against 9.08 million at the same point Tuesday.

Chrysler hits choppy water on profits

By JACK EGAN
The Washington Post

DETROIT — After two years of smooth sailing, Chrysler Corp. is finding itself in the midst of some choppy financial waters again.

The smallest of the Big Three auto makers, Chrysler saw its share of the U.S. passenger car market drop to 13.4 percent in 1977, the lowest level in more than a decade and down from 15.1 percent in 1976. Each percentage swing in market share roughly equals $600 million in annual auto sales.

Chrysler also returned to the red-ink column in the fourth quarter of 1977, after eight quarters of profitability, with a $49 million loss. Chairman John Riccardo said he expects the red ink to flow at least through the first quarter of this year.

The lack of profits, in turn, has created a liquidity problem. That means the already-debt-laden company will have to scramble for several hundred million dollars in outside financing in the coming months to pay for an ambitious capital spending program dictated both by Chrysler's internal five-year plan to overhaul its product line and by government orders to improve the fuel efficiency and safety features of its vehicles.

THE LATEST SQUEEZE at Chrysler has caused some renewed handwringing by outsiders about the corporation's long-term ability to survive (through the situation is considered nowhere near as perilous as at American Motors Corp., which now only has 2 percent of the U.S. auto market).

"It's a tenuous situation" at Chrysler, said Richard L. Haydon, auto analyst with Goldman, Sachs & Co. "The company is under a great deal of pressure and it is not going to ease in the next two years," he added, noting the softening automobile market, the company's continuing large financing needs and its inadequate cash flow.

But Chrysler repeatedly has confounded such expectations and demonstrated its resiliency in the face of past losses, labor strife, mismanagement and even the closing of the commercial paper market to the company in 1970 in the wake of the Penn Central bankruptcy which required a bank rescue orchestrated by the Federal Reserve Board.

MOST RECENTLY, after being hit hard by the severe recessionary aftermath of the Arab oil embargo, which produced net losses of $52.1 million in 1974 and $259.5 million in 1975, Chrysler earned a record profit of $422.6 million in 1976.

Last year, however, Chrysler's earnings dipped to $163.2 million on worldwide sales of $16.7 billion.

Less than a third the size of General Motors Corp. and less than half as big as Ford Motor Co., Chrysler is more leveraged financially and has traditionally traced a more volatile profit and loss pattern than its two major competitors.

Spreading its overhead over a smaller number of unit automobile sales, Chrysler has worked on a much thinner profit margin than either GM or Ford — so thin, in fact, that it easily vanishes when conditions in the auto industry weaken as they are doing now.

CHRYSLER EARNED only 1.3 cents before taxes for each dollar of sales it had last year compared with more than 6 cents for GM and about 4 cents for Ford.

Chrysler now is in the midst of a five-year program, initiated in the 1975 model year, to try to improve its share of the market and also its profitability. The cost of implementing that program is given as one of the reasons for the company's current financial difficulties.

"We have a unique situation here unlike we've ever been involved in before," said scrappy Chrysler chairman Riccardo in an interview in his headquarters office. "The company is embarked on a very aggressive, major program to fix its major problems. It requires the complete implementation of this very aggressive product program, the completion of which will bring about many benefits."

Ricardo said he "would not characterize the future as iffy because that leaves the implication we can't make it — and that's not the situation we're in. I think we are very forthright in pointing out the problems we have short term, but that doesn't mean it's iffy."

THE CENTERPEICE of Chrysler's strategy is the Dodge Omni and Plymouth Horizon, two versions of a subcompact that Chrysler is assembling in Illinois and which it began marketing only in mid-January. Equipped with a Volkswagen engine, the car is the first front-wheel-drive small car to be manufactured in the United States, puts Chrysler into the subcompact market for the first time, and is already being hailed as the most successful car Chrysler has ever introduced. Initial press and dealer reaction has been excellent, and Motor Trend magazine named them its "Car of the Year."

The roomy, four-door hatchback is sticker-priced at $3,706, and thus is extremely competitive with such popular imports as theVolkswagen Rabbit, the Honda Accord and Ford's Fiesta. Chrysler is targeting first-year production at nearly 200,000.

Riccardo predicts the car will become "the standard small car built in the U.S. in the early 1980s," and gloats that Chrysler beat GM and Ford to the punch on this one.

Maryann Keller, auto analyst with Kidder, Peabody & Co., has called the two autos "the first domestic cars built that are truly competitive with the imports," and said she is "convinced that these cars should add between 1.5 and 2 percentage points to Chrysler's market share."

WHATEVER ADVANTAGE the Omni-Horizon provides to Chrysler will be needed to counteract the severe sales sag Chrysler's compact Volare and Aspen models are experiencing after providing Chrysler with nearly half of its total sales during the first 10 months of 1977.

Since the beginning of the model year last October, sales of the Volare and Aspen are down about 25 percent, or 55,000 units, and in recent weeks the sales have been less than half of last year's comparable weekly totals. With inventories ballooning, Chrysler has put into effect a series of temporary plant closings.

Analysts attribute the sales drop primarily to keen competition from Ford's successful new Fairmont and Zephyr lines:

But Aspen and Volare also have been subject to three widely publicized recalls recently, and one consumer group has named the cars "Lemons of the Year."

CHRYSLER OFFICIALS heatedly deny the cars are lemons, claiming the defects requiring the recalls are part of the normal run of bad luck all manufacturers have experienced and do not represent any special problem with quality control. And they attribute the sales slump primarily to the bad winter weather in the Northeast where Chrysler says a disproportionate share of its dealerships are located.

Fire extinguisher industry upset at training proposal

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN—Calling the plan "a design for disaster," representatives of the fire extinguisher industry have urged the State Insurance Board to reject a proposal that would allow Texas A&M University to train private inspectors to service non-portable systems required in restaurants.

The plan was conceived by SBI chairman Hugh Yantis as a means to allow competition to develop in the extinguisher servicing field.

Under the current SBI licensing system managed by the State Fire Marshal, inspectors must attend schools every year offered by each of the individual system manufacturers before obtaining a license to service that particular company's product.

Time limitations compel most distributor-inspectors to train at only a handful of manufacturer's schools. As a result, restaurant owners have difficulty obtaining competitive bids on servicing contracts, Yantis maintains.

The chairman's plan would allow inspectors to train at the university and receive state licenses to service any of the 17 systems widely sold in Texas.

Industry representatives complained that the plan would allow poorly trained or unethical operators to undercut legitimate inspectors at the risk of public disasters.

They maintain that the systems are so complex and so varied, it would require two months a year to adequately train an inspector to service all the 17 systems. Unfamiliarity with a system could induce an unethical operator to fix a unit he doesn't understand, they contend.

Ancient ruins still stand

MARY, U.S.S.R. (AP) — A crumbling mausoleum, a faded palace and some low walls of brick and stone are all that remain of the city of Merv, one of the ancient world's most highly developed civilizations from the seventh to the 12th centuries.

Surrounded by the scorching Karakum desert — once infamous as the "graveyard of the caravans" — the ruins of Merv have blended into the present-day city of Mary, a cotton-growing center of Soviet Turkmenistan 100 miles from the Soviet-Iranian border.

The region now has 700,000 people compared with some 5 million in ancient times. In place of Merv's one-time sway over lands from the Mediterranean to Northern India, Mary presides today over one province of Turkmenistan about the size of Alabama.

The most durable monuments to Merv are a small palace and the 118-foot, domed mausoleum of Sultan Sanjar, who ruled the city in the 11th century. The mausoleum took 10 years to build, and Soviet artists are now restoring the blue and red murals on its simple brick walls.

The remnants of the past run alongside modern-day buildings and farms. Nearby hang banners reading "We will fulfill the party's plans," a reminder that the Soviet Communist Party is the new management in what was Merv.

In Hindu and Arab folklore, Merv was regarded as the ancient paradise and the birthplace of humanity. Its existence is recorded in ancient chronicles from at least 1,200 B.C.

The city was ruled by a series of Greek, Persian and Christian empires until the seventh century, when it was occupied by Moslems loyal to the Caliph Othman.

It was soon transformed into an oriental center of learning, and legions based there conquered much of Central Asia, penetrating even into parts of China.

Arab rule in Merv ended in the ninth century, and was replaced in 1040 by the Seljuk Turkish dynasty that eventually produced Sultan Sanjar.

Merv, became an important way station on east-west caravan routes. It had advanced irrigation systems, markets covered against the desert sun, piped water, 10 libraries, a school for civil servants and factories for cloth, jewelry, and chemicals.

Grapes, wheat and sheep raising were major industries, along with warehousing and other services for passing caravans. Its population was bigger than the present population of Mary.

Mongols attacked and destroyed the city in 1219, killing more than a million people. The city then passed to a series of later Asian rulers, was captured in 1787 by the Emir of Bokhara and occupied by the Russian Empire in 1883. With the rest of Turkmenia, it was incorporated into the Soviet Union after the Bolshevik Revolution.

The current name of Mary, which means "city of snakes," was adopted in 1937. Mary and Merv had been used interchangeably as names for the region for some time previous to that and Soviet geographers apparently sought to standardize the usage.

Rutgers advances to NIT semis

By The Associated Press

It was a strange ending to a very peculiar game, but the bottom line shows Rutgers going to the semifinals of the National Invitation Tournament.

Indiana State led Rutgers 56-53 with 3:46 to go at Piscataway, N.J., Tuesday night. Following a Rutgers missed shot, Indiana State attempted to stall the game away, but Rutgers forced a turnover.

The Scarlet Knights again misfired and the Sycamores went right back into a stall. And again they lost the ball.

This time Rutgers' 6-foot-9 center James Bailey connected to cut the lead to 56-55. Bailey then stole the inbounds pass and hit a 15-foot jumper with 17 seconds to go.

That's where the turmoil began.

INDIANA STATE set up for the last shot, trying to work the ball into All-American forward Larry Bird. But the Rutgers box-and-one defense converged on Bird — who scored a game-high 23 points — and Harry Morgan missed a desperation shot with three seconds showing on the clock.

"Rutgers played great defense on Bird the whole game and at the end we couldn't get him the ball," said Sycamore Coach Bob King. "Morgan had to take the shot."

Rutgers' Tom Brown grabbed the rebound and was intentionally fouled with two seconds to go. He missed the first foul shot and intentionally missed the second, not allowing the Sycamores to set up for a final shot.

But the Sycamores weren't out of it — yet.

Indiana State rebounded Brown's miss and heaved the ball out to Bird, standing at midcourt. He collided with Steve Hefele as time ran out.

King charged referees Bob Wortman and James Desman, both of the neutral Mid-American Conference, claiming that Bird was fouled before the buzzer.

"The referees told me that there was no foul, that there was no contact," King said. "How can there be no foul? They wound up rolling on the floor."

BIRD ALSO went after the officials, but to no avail.

In other NIT quarter-final action, Georgetown defeated Dayton 71-62 and North Carolina State beat 18th-ranked Detroit 84-77.

In the semifinals, starting Sunday at Madison Square Garden, North Carolina State will face Georgetown and Rutgers will meet the winner of the Nebraska-Texas game, being played tonight at Austin, Texas.

Abdel Anderson led Rutgers with 16 points, and Bailey — who scored Rutgers' last seven points — was held to 13 points and played just 18 minutes because of foul trouble.

Kendal "Tiny" Pinder scored 18 points and Hawkeye Whitney added 17 as North Carolina State eliminated Detroit. The Wolfpack scored the last eight points of the first half and outscored the Titans 11-6 at the outset of the second half to take a 55-44 lead.

'Horns, 'Huskers clash tonight

AUSTIN, Texas (AP)—Unhappy and unranked Nebraska braces the 17th ranked Texas Longhorns tonight in the quarterfinals of the National Invitational Basketball Tournament at the vast "Super Drum" where opponents are 0-for-October-through-March.

Playing in its 16,000-seat facility for the first season, the Longhorns have beaten all 14 foes. The latest victim was Temple, falling 72-58 last Friday nightin the first round of the NIT.

"We're not happy about playing here because the same man who told them (Texas) they could be the home team also told us," said Nebraska Coach Joe Cipriano. "We didn't get anything in writing, but neither did they. Two years ago, (Texas) Coach Abe Lemons would have flown to the moon to play in the NIT. Now he insists on staying at home. We'd have much preferred a coin flip or a neutral site."

Nebraska regent Robert Prokop even went so far as to recommend that the Cornhuskers break all athletic ties with Texas.

To which Lemons replied: "I didn't know we had any."

At any rate, Cipriano knows there is another side to Lemons, other than his sense of humor.

"Even though he is known for his wit, Abe is also at the top of the list of great college coaches today," said Cipriano. "He has done a tremendous job at Texas...Playing at Texas will be a very tough assignment since nobody has won there yet this year, and Texas has played some very tough teams in Austin."

Nebraska nipped Utah State 67-66 last week as reserve forward Andre Smith scored 18 points.

The winner of tonight's game plays in Madison Square Garden in New York Sunday against Rutgers, winner Tuesday night over Indiana State, 56-53.

Nebraska, which is 22-7, could become the winningest team in the school's history with a victory. The 1920 team was 22-2.

Texas, 23-5, has the second best record in its history and is the highest scoring team in the school's annals at an 83.4 points-per-game clip.

Nebraska and Texas have met in basketball only once, in the 1936-37 season. Texas won 43-27.

Texas' Jim Krivacs will set a new school season scoring record with his first basket against the Cornhuskers. He has 620 points which ties the record established by Larry Robinson in 1974.

A crowd of near 14,000 is expected, which should delight NIT officials.

Cipriano, in his 15th year at Nebraska, has a solid 6-foot-3 guard in Brian Banks and a hustling center in Carl McPipe.

Krivacs, who averages 21 points per game, had a cold shooting night last week against Temple, but unheralded Tyrone Branyan shot the Owls out of their zone with a deadly bombardment from the corner.

"Texas has tremendous outside shooting," said Cipriano.

Texas was the Southwest Conference co-champion while Nebraska was third in the Big Eight.

NFL owners open up the offense

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — If you thought the Lynn Swanns and Drew Pearsons, the Daye Caspers and Russ Francises, the Ken Stablers and Fran Tarkentons were deadly before, wait'll you see 'em in action next season.

They'll have more time and more room to operate — and perhaps a little less fear about getting clobbered, too, thanks to the votes Tuesday by the National Football League's club owners.

The NFL, concerned that the increasing emphasis on defense and the steady drop in scoring could someday lead to an erosion of fan interest, decided to try and open up the offense in 1978 by:

—Allowing offensive linemen a little more freedom in their use of hands and arms against pass-rushers.

—Limiting the amount of contact (called "chucking") a defender can use against a potential receiver.

—Adding a "side judge," to increase the officials' coverage of downfield pass areas and prohibit mayhem occasionally perpetrated against receivers in the recent past.

The owners also decided to allow officials to penalize players who "bait or taunt" the opposition (an effort to cut down on potentially violent confrontations); to permit a receiver to tip a pass to a teammate without requiring a defender to touch the ball between them; to prohibit forward passes after the ball has crossed the scrimmage line, even if it is carried or thrown back again before the pass is made; to assess a 10-second and 5-yard penalty against a team which, in an officials judgment, stops the clock by intentionally committing a foul or penalty; to assess a safety when a passer intentionally grounds the ball in his own end zone; to reduce other intentional grounding penalties from 15 to 10 yards (retaining the loss of down); and to permit hurdling of players by a ball-carrier to avoid being tackled.

"Unquestionably in recent years coaches have adopted a lot of the Darrell Royal philosophy," NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle said of the former University of Texas coach, "that if you pass three things can happen and two of them are bad. That in turn has made more conservative offenses and has cut point production down considerably," a drop of nearly a dozen points a game in the last dozen years.

"What we're hopeful of here," he said of the passblocking and so-called chucking rule changes, "is that those philosophies will change if they've got receivers open."

Pass-blockers will be able to keep their elbows locked as well as flexed and their hands open as well as closed when dealing with defensive linemen or anyone else who tries to get to the quarter-back.

Jim Hall ready if weather is

By PAUL DOMOWITCH

At the Ontario (Calif.) Motor Speedway two Saturdays ago, they didn't need that cute little girl on the side of the Morton's salt box to tell them that when it rains it pours. A simple glance outside sufficed.

"We just sat around in the garage and watched it come down," explained Jim Hall after unceasing Southern California rains forced postponement of the Datsun Twin 200 and put off Hall and his Chaparral-Lola racing team's USAC championship circuit debut for another two weeks.

It was a tough break for the C-L team, which had been working at a feverish pitch since early February trying to get ready for their first crack at the USAC circuit and were eager to find out just how far they had come, and just how far they had yet to go.

But while the rain and subsequent postponement of the race may have been a momentary downer for them, it also could have been a blessing in disguise. The extra time has given Hall and company a chance to regroup and smooth out a few rough edges before Saturday's Jimmy Bryan 150 at the Phoenix (Ariz.) International Raceway.

"In that respect it was a break for us," Hall said. "Our pit crew really hasn't had a chance to work together and this has given us a little extra time to do that. But we also found out when we got to Ontario that some of the pit equipment we made didn't work right. So the extra time came in handy there."

ALL OF the top USAC drivers are expected to be at Phoenix Saturday competing for the winner's share ($20,000) of a total posted purse of $90,000, including 1977 champ Johnny Rutherford, and last year's Indy winner and runnerup at Phoenix, A.J. Foyt.

Hall's driver, 37-year-old Al Unser, finished ninth in this race a year ago when he was competing under the Vels-Parnelli banner, but he's hoping for better things come Saturday. He's test-driven Hall's Cosworth V-8 powered Chaparral-Lola twice already on Phoenix' one-mile oval, and he's been pleased with the way the new car ran both times.

"I think we're in good shape competitively," Unser said. "Timewise, we ran about a 24.6 (seconds) the lasted time we tested the car. The delay has hurt us because we're going up there still not knowing what the car will do in a race. But I'm optimistic."

THE HALL team will leave for Phoenix early Thursday morning, with practice and qualifying set for Friday. Saturday's race gets underway at 3 p.m. (MST).

Hall is still waiting for his second car to be shipped from England. He's hoping it will be here by the end of the week, which would mean it will be ready for the Texas 200 in College Station on April 15.

TRACK TALK: The Datsun Twin 200 has been rescheduled for Easter Sunday, March 28. ABC, which was out at Ontario, will still televise the race. . . Ray Smartis, general manager of Ontario Motor Speedway, is concerned about a lack of manpower for the rescheduled race. "It'll be tough getting people to work at the track on Easter. People like firemen and safety and medical people. But we're going to do it."

Pack explodes late to roll by Coronado

By BOB DILLON

Midland High had its hitting shoes on Tuesday afternoon.

Coach Larry Peel's Bulldogs pounded out 18 hits to come from behind to down the Lubbock Coronado Mustangs, 15-6, at the Memorial Stadium diamond.

Leading the way for the Purple Pack were Jimmy Zachry, James Allen, Tracy Gann and Joe Mowles.

Allen knocked in five runs and Zachry four more in coming from a 4-0 deficit in the third inning.

Midland erupted for seven runs in the fifth inning and added five more in the sixth to bring its season record to 4-5 going into today's game with Lubbock Monterey in the Tall City. It is a makeup game from two weeks ago that was called off due to cold weather.

BUD BRIGHAM went all the way on the mound for the Pack, scattering eight hits to bring his pitching record to 2-2 on the year.

Robert Ledbetter's triple along with a run-scoring double by Ronny Arterburn and run-producing single by Jim Wells and Bobby Blain, gave the Hub City team a 4-0 lead in the second inning.

Midland got back two of this those runs in the third inning, thanks to two errors along with a sacrifice fly by Joe Mowles and a single by Archie Booth.

CORONADO INCREASED its lead to 6-2 in the top of the fourth inning when an error opened the gates along with an infield hit by Gene Segrest followed by a single by Kenny Bunch and sacrifice fly off the bat of Dee Law in deep left.

A single by Brigham, ground-out and base hit by Zachery, cut the lead to 6-3 in the bottom of the fourth.

Then came the explosion by the Bulldogs in the fifth inning.

Steve Cole started things with a single and Joe Mowles banged a triple which bounced over centerfielder Ledbetter's head and Mowles scored from third when Ledbetter bobbled the ball.

Singles by Gann and Goode Zachry, set up Allen's three-run homer to highlight the rally, to give MHS a 10-6 lead.

MIDLAND ADDED five more insurance runs in the sixth inning for good measure.

A double by Mowles that bounced over the fence in right, started the big inning. Zachery delivered a two-run double while Allen delivered a two-run double and Zachry plated two more runs with a single.

Midland most likely will call upon Goode to pitch against Monterey's Derek Hatfield today at the Memorial Stadium diamond as the Plainsmen bring in a 3-2 record after pounding Midland Lee, 14-5 Tuesday in Lubbock.

Frazier faces Knoetze next

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Former heavyweight champion Joe Frazier has kissed off a fight with one South African boxer and signed to fight another.

Last week, it was announced that Frazier would fight Gerrie Coetzee April 15 in South Africa, but a provincial board failed to come to an agreement on the bout and on Tuesday Smokin' Joe signed to fight Kallie Knoetze in Las Vegas on April 29.

SMU's Dick Davis resigns AD post

DALLAS (AP) — Dick Davis, athletic director at Southern Methodist University for four years, has resigned effective June 1, denying he was under any pressure to do so.

"I think it was a mutual thing between Dr. Zumberge and myself," Davis said Tuesday. "Dr. (James Zumberge) is new, and he would like to bring in some new people."

However, Davis admitted it wasn't all his idea.

"It was not all my thinking," said Davis. "It was strictly a hand-in-glove operation between myself and Dr. Zumberge."

Zumberge said Associate Athletic Director Dudley Parker will serve as acting director until a new one is appointed. A university search committee will be headed by Dr. Mike Harvey, chairman of the SMU Faculty Committee on Athletics.

"Dick's record involved the recruiting of a number of outstanding coaches including Ron Meyer, head of SMU's aspiring football program; Sonny Allen, who is responsible for the university's hopes for a basketball team of national stature; Earl Stewart, golf coach; Steve Adair, baseball; Jim Benedict, soccer; and Bill McClain, tennis," Zumberge said.

"In addition, Davis has been instrumental in establishing a strong woman's athletic program..."

Davis, who played football for the Mustangs in the late 1940s, said he first discussed the possibility of resigning three months ago with Bobby Stewart, the school's board chairman.

What sports needs now is Frank Sinatra

The Los Angeles Times Syndicate

Johnny Carson calls him "Mr. Warmth." He operates on the principle that, if you can't say anything good about a person, be sure to say it.

He always has this slightly exasperated look of a mad duck. He's perfect for the role of a top sergeant whose shoes hurt, or a chief petty officer whose crew gets seasick all the time, and this is why he's such a success in his weekly "CPO Sharkey," on TV.

He is irascible, cutting, funny. The world is full of people pretending they're something they're not, and they're his meat. He puts them in their place. He gets away with outrageous humor. ("Looka that Nazi, "he's going, "Hey! I thought we killed all these people!") He insults everybody without regard to race, creed or color. He's fed up with the world, is his shtick. People love it. You're nobody until Don Rickles has insulted you. His smile is as thin and icy as an ax-murderer's as he goes for the jugular of a heckler. "And you, sir, would you mind removing your hat? Oh, that's your head?! Sorry about that."

SPORTS FIGURES are not immune. Rickles is a genuine, Ebbets Field bleacher-type sports fan with all that implies. He can take on the Dallas Cowboy coach Tom Landry, "Eighty thousand people in the stands are going bananas, the Super Bowl is at stake — and Landry is standing there watching a fly die on his nose." Or, he can stick the needle in all sports and everyone in them:

BOWIE KUHN — "He's the commissioner and he says 'I'm the commissioner, I'm the commissioner.' And he must be. He has a note from Walter O'Malley saying so. So I give him a hockey puck and a picture of Gabby Hartnett and he goes away."

CARL YASTRZEMSKI — "Carl Yastrzemski is the only guy in baseball who can not only read an eye chart but understand it. He's playing out his option because they won't let him grow potatoes in leftfield."

TOMMY LASORDA — "I lost a bundle on the Dodgers. When Lasorda talked about the Big Dodger In The Sky, I thought he meant Sinatra. Tommy took the defeat in stride. He went right over to St. Patrick's and started to yell up at the ceiling, and this voice comes down, 'Never mind that, dummy, who told you to pitch to Jackson?' "

REGGIE JACKSON — "If his hair gets any longer, he'll need a ladder to put his hat on. If Reggie got a haircut, he'd be a midget."

CHARLIE FINLEY —"Charlie Finley will never be happy til he can sell Vida Blue to Scarlett O'Hara. Vida is going to write his life story with Finley. He's going to call it 'Roots.'"

TOMMY JOHN — "Tommy John won 20 games with one arm shorter than the other. In fact, it was shorter than his hand. Tommy gets a discount on his shirts because he only needs one sleeve."

PETER O'MALLEY — "His father told him he had to run the Dogers on his allowance. So he took the spotlight out of the team showers and he put plants in all the whirlpool baths."

STEVE GARVEY — "Steve Garvey is not sure whether he wants to be a first baseman or a Pope. He's so goody, he goes out behind the barn to chew gum. They named a school after him in Northern California. It's called 'E-3.'"

FRANK TANANA — "For years, people told Frank Tanana, 'get married, stop running around, and you'll win 30 games.' Now, he's gotten married, he takes naps on the mound."

NOLAN RYAN — "When Jim Bouton wrote 'Ball Four,' everybody thought it was Nolan Ryan's autobiography. Actually, Nolan's autobiography is going to be called 'Three-and-two.' Nolan sat down and cried last week because a train beat his fastball. He only threw 1,004 pitches in losing 2-0."

GEORGE ALLEN — "George Allen is a very spiritual man. He wasn't always. But, when he saw the Ram quarterbacks, he went right out and opened the 23rd Psalm."

ON THE FUTURE OF SPORTS — "Sports needs a strong man at the top. Someone who's a diplomat. Frank Sinatra. Frank could say, 'Hey, you gonna do this — or do I hold your hand over a hot stove?' Know what I mean? A real statesman. Frank is at home with all groups. One group is called Mangano Manzanari and Alfatto DiNanno — and the other group is Claudette Colbert and Gregory Peck. Sports has got to get down to the people. Hey, we got a president called 'Jimmy' Carter and the leading minister is called 'Billy' Graham. Any day now, the king of England will be called 'Slick.' We got to get a boxing commissioner named 'Mushy,' and a baseball commissioner called 'Hack.' Then we've got to get a tennis commissioner called 'Bruce.'"

Evert back, but not confident

BOSTON (AP) — Chris Evert is happy to be back but none too confident about her once flawless tennis game.

"I'm not tournament tough. I wasn't confident. I don't expect to be in the finals," Evert said Tuesday night after marking her return to competition with a tense three-set opening-round victory over JoAnne Russell in a $100,000 tournament.

"My concentration wasn't there," Evert said after her first match since November.

She had taken a vacation because, "I wasn't happy with my tennis and my lifestyle. I'd wake up in the middle of the night and not know what city I was in, and winning got to be very routine."

Evert struggled against Russell, failing to hold her serve in the second set when she fell behind 0-4, and having trouble with Russell's powerful serve and ground strokes. She eventually won 6-4, 4-6, 6-3.

"At least I made her sweat," said Russell, a former childhood tennis opponent of the superstar Evert.

Evert, who had last played competitively in the Wightman Cup competition against Great Britain last November, has spent four months at home in Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

"I didn't know what to expect coming back," she said. "But I gutted it out in the third set."

Evert, seeded second in the Boston tournament, complained that her concentration was poor, forcing her to miss several points that "just got by me."

In the last women's circuit event in Boston, in 1976, Evert was knocked out in the first round by Dianne Fromholtz, and Evert said it took several weeks for her to get over it.

In other matches, third-seeded Evonne Goolagong and sixth-seeded Billie Jean King got by the first round with little difficulty. But fourth-seeded Betty Stove was upset by Marita Redondo 6-4, 6-2.

Goolagong beat Brigitte Cuypers 6-2, 6-3, and King beat Regina Marsikova 6-3, 6-4.

Australian Lesley Hunt defeated Renee Richards 6-3, 7-5, and Beth Norton — Evert's next opponent — beat Laura DuPont 5-7, 6-4, 6-3.

Eighth-seeded Kerry Reid beat 16-year-old Woodbury, Conn., high school student Barbie Potter 6-4, 6-1, and Anne Smith beat Caroline Stoll 7-6, 6-2.

The tournament's top seed and winner of seven circuit events this season, Martina Navratilova, was to have her first match tonight against Mima Jausovec.

In Tuesday's lone doubles match, King and Navratilova beat Marsilova and Katja Ebbinghaus 7-5, 6-1.

The tournament, with its $20,000 first prize is sponsored by Virginia Slims.

Plant destroyed

PALO ALTO, Calif. (AP) — Flames fueled by synthetic materials destroyed the production plant of one of the world's leading manufacturers of all-weather athletic tracks Tuesday, firemen said.

At least $100,000 in damages were attributed to the early morning blaze at Marathon Corp., a firm owned by Bill Nieder, winner of the Gold Medal in shotput competition at the 1960 Olymics in Rome.

Cause of the fire was under investigation. The building was nearly a total loss.

Houston, Dallas win big

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Hurricane, paced by Mark Lindsay's five goals, defeated the San Diego Sockers, 10-5, and the Dallas Tornado, with a five goal performance from Kai Haaskivi, crushed the Los Angeles Aztecs, 18-7, in indoor soccer games Tuesday night.

In addition to Lindsay's five goals, the Hurricane, making its home debut, got a pair each from Yilmaz Orhan and Stewart Jump to register its first victory of the exhibition season against a pair of losses.

The Tornado had an easy time in the opener of the informal tournament played in The Summit on a field the size of a hockey rink.

Dallas' Kyle Rote Jr., who spent the first period signing autographs in the stands, still managed three goals for the Tornado and Kevin Kewler, Jeff Bourne and Freddie Garcia all chipped in with a pair.

Brian Gottfried coasts to victory over Ashe

WASHINGTON (AP) — Brian Gottfried says he doesn't care whether he is seeded first or 10th in the field because he doesn't look ahead at the draw.

"It's just someone's opinion of how he thinks it will turn out at the end," top-seeded Gottfried said Tuesday night after winning his first-round match against Arthur Ashe in the $125,000 Washington stop of the men's pro tennis tour. "If my mother did the seeding, she would have me at one each week.

"I don't look at the seedings or the draw," said the defending champion here. "It doesn't do any good to look and say if I get him in the semis, it would be great and then lose in the first round."

The 26-year-old Gottfried had a relatively easy first-round victory over Ashe, who is making a comeback this season after remaining off the tour for almost a year because of heel surgery and an eye disorder.

The relative ease Gottfried enjoyed, however, was a result of Ashe's erratic play.

"I had a million chances but I couldn't convert," the 34-year-old Ashe said after losing 6-4, 6-1. "I just made errors at the wrong time. He just played the tie points very well. I must have had 10 ads in the first set."

Ashe gave Gottfried a difficult time in the first set even though his service was broken in the first game after he double-faulted twice.

In game four he had the advantage twice but Gottfried hit an ace, a backhand placement and scored on a serve that Ashe could not return.

Ashe had two service breaks in game 8 but netted two approach shots, took the advantage when Gottfried doublefaulted but again netted a backhand approach and lost the point when he was unable to return the following two serves.

The key to the match, according to Gottfried, "was probably me getting out of those break points early in the match.

"If you have that many go against you, sometimes it can get to you. You start thinking about them, instead of thinking about the match," he said.

Other first round winners Tuesday included No. 3 seed Manuel Orantes, No. 6 John McEnroe, No. 7 Stan Smith, unseeded Phil Dent, John Newcombe and Tony Roche, and Bob Lutz.

Dent defeated Mike Fishbach 6-1, 4-6, 6-4; Roche beat Nick Saviano 6-3, 5-7, 6-4; Lutz swept by Ricardo Yeaza 6-4, 7-6; Smith defeated Butch Walts 6-2, 6-1; Newcome topped Zeljko Franulovic of Yugoslavia 3-6, 64, 7-5; McEnroe defeated Tom Gullikson 6-3, 7-6, and Orantes defeated Billy Martin 6-4, 6-4.

Lee succumbs to Monterey

LUBBOCK — Midland Lee pounded Lubbock Monterey ace Ron Reeves for 11 hits Tuesday, but still dropped a 14-5 decision to the Plainsmen.

Seven errors by the Rebels along with leaving 10 base runners stranded, was the difference. That and the fact that Reeves struck out 12 batters.

Monterey, meanwhile, in bringing its mark to 3-2 on the year going into today's game with Midland High in Midland, pounded two Lee pitchers for 13 hits.

Dana Rieger hit a double and homer for the Plainsmen.

Ricky Pinkerton added a triple for the winners while Larry Bevins, Reeves and Bob Fannin, all rapped doubles.

Danny Brenner and Tyler Alcorn, had two-baggers for the Rebs who are now 7-4 on the season going Saturday's doubleheader with the Andrews Mustangs in Andrews.

Lefthander Gary Gibson started for Lee and was relieved by Mark Denny in the fourth inning.

Lee cut Monterey's lead to 4-3 in the top of the third, but that was as close as the Rebs were going to come the rest of the way.

score by innings:

Theokis in line for Nets job

RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Charles Theokis, a long-time associate of New Jersey Nets owner Roy Boe, is expected to succeed Bill Melchionni as the Nets' principal front office executive.

Melchionni resigned Tuesday as assistant to the president (Boe), citing "personal reasons." Melchionni's job had been the equivalent of general manager on other clubs.

Scramble is on in NBA West

By The Associated Press

Imagine every team in a division making the National Basketball Association playoffs.

Okay, now stop imagining and look at the NBA standings. Golden State, in last place in the Pacific Division, is just 1½ games behind Milwaukee in the race for the final Western Conference playoff berth following the Warriors' 103-96 victory over the Chicago Bulls Tuesday night.

Here's the way the playoff setup works: the four divisional winners qualify, as do the teams with the next four best records in each conference. Thus it is possible for every club from a five-team division like the Pacific to qualify, as long as the record of the last-place team in the Pacific is better than the record of the second-place team in the Midwest.

Got it?

NOT TRY this: with less than four weeks remaining in the regular season, no less than seven teams are fighting for three Western Conference playoff berths. Only six games separate the No. 4 team in the conference, Los Angeles, from the No. 9 team, Detroit.

Golden State, Milwaukee and Los Angeles all strengthened their chances with victories Tuesday night. While the Warriors were beating the Bulls, the Bucks defeated Phoenix 121-106 and the Lakers outscored the New York Knicks 135-117.

Warriors 103, Bulls 96

"Winning for the third straight time away from home has got to give us the confidence we need if we are going to make the playoffs," said Warriors Coach Al Attles, after watching the lead change hands 11 times in the fourth quarter before Phil Smith's jumper with 3:28 to play put Golden State ahead to stay.

Rick Barry scored 10 of his 24 points in the fourth quarter and caused six turnovers that helped clinch the victory for Golden State.

It was the fourth loss in a row for the fading Bulls.

Bucks 121, Suns 106

Brian Winters scored 29 points and rookie Ernie Grunfeld — making his first pro start because regular forwards Dave Meyers and Marques Johnson are both sidelined — added 22 as Milwaukee built a 73-49 lead in the third period and coasted home despite 38 points by the Suns' Walter Davis.

Lakers 135, Knicks 117

Los Angeles, 20-6 since the All-Star break, pulled away from New York with an 80- point second half, including a 43-point fourth quarter. Adrian Dantley scored 29, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and Don Ford 22 each and Lou Hudson and Charlie Scott 18 each.

New York Coach Willis Reed blasted referees Lee Jones and Bill Saar, calling their work "a disgrace to the game of basketball." He contended the officials were giving "special treatment" to Abdul-Jabbar, allowing him to get away with contact and not calling fouls.

Jazz 109, Blazers 103

Aaron James hit three consecutive baskets in the final two minutes as New Orleans scored the final 10 points of the game to beat Portland. After James put the Jazz ahead, Gail Goodrich and Paul Griffin sank two free throws each for New Orleans in the final seconds. James led all scorers with 26 points.

Portland, which was without its three big men — Bill Walton, Maurice Lucas and Lloyd Neal — because of injury, suffered only its second loss in 34 home games.

Celtics 105, Pistons 98

Boston dealt a blow to Detroit's fading playoff hopes as John Havlicek and Dave Cowens combined for eight points in the final 2½ minutes as the Celtics erased a 95-91 deficit. Cowens finished with 19 points and Havlicek 17.

Braves 123, Spurs 115, OT

Randy Smith scored 38 points, including six in overtime, and Swen Nater added 30 for the Braves, who made up a six-point deficit in the final 1:27 of regulation. Smith's 20-footer with 25 seconds to go sent it into overtime.

Bullets 120, Sonics 115

Mitch Kupchak scored nine of his 24 points in a four-minute span in the fourth quarter to hep the Bullets defeat Seattle and climb within 4½ games of first-place San Antonio in the Central Division. The Spurs have won seven of their last nine, all since Kupchak returned from a hand injury.

Cavaliers 119, Rockets 98

Cleveland hit 71 percent of its shots in taking a 38-26 lead and was never caught as Houston went down to its ninth straight defeat. Elmore Smith scored 19 of his 26 points in the first half to help the Cavs break it open.

Hogs in for stern test

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Marvin Delph will be going against David Greenwood, while Sidney Moncrief and Ron Brewer will be battling Roy Hamilton and Raymond Townsend.

And that says UCLA basketball Coach Gary Cunningham "adds up to an awfully good basketball game."

The game will be the glamour matchup of Thursday night's semifinals of the National Collegiate Athletic Association's Far West regional basketball tourney. Delph, Moncrief and Brewer will lead the fifth-ranked Arkansas Razorbacks against the second-rated UCLA Bruins paced by Greenwood, Hamilton and Townsend.

The regionally televised Arkansas-UCLA clash is set for 7:06 p.m. (MST) at the 17,121 seat University of New Mexico Arena. Surprising Cal State-Fullerton will challenge 11th-ranked San Francisco in the second semifinal contest. The winners will tangle Saturday for a berth in the final four next week in St. Louis.

Guards Moncrief and Brewer and forward Delph, a trio of 6-foot-4 sharpshooters who all earned at least honorable mention All-America notice from The Associated Press, have led Arkansas to a 29-3 record, which includes last week's 73-52 handling of Weber State in first round tourney action in Eugene, Ore.

The Bruins also were in Eugene, where guards Hamilton and Townsend, an honorable mention All-America, and Greenwood, a first team All-America forward, led UCLA to an 83-76 triumph over nationally ranked Kansas for the club's 25th victory in 27 outings this season.

Fullerton (22-8) and San Francisco (23-5) earned trips to Albuquerque by winning first round games last weekend at Tempe, Ariz. Fullerton, which is in its first NCAA tourney, stunned nationally rated New Mexico 90-85, while San Francisco upset last year's NCAA runnerup, North Carolina, 68-64.

"We have lots of respect for Arkansas," said Cunningham. "I'd say that they are a very well coached team and they play outstanding defense. They run a good fast break. And they have a lot patience on offense."

Cunningham said his team will need to play "at both ends of the court" to beat the Hogs. "We have to play good defense and good offense."

Eddie Sutton, whose talented basketball squad has excited the football crazy state of Arkansas, said his club will "need to be at our peak both physically and mentally. I like to think that rebounding and tempo will be the keys."

The battle between San Francisco and Cal State-Fullerton will have a big strong team led by a seven-foot center taking on a smaller team that must try to neutralize the size difference with quickness.

The Dons are led by 7-foot pivot Bill Cartwright and forwards Winford Boynes and James Hardy, who has been out with a broken thumb but should see some action.

Cal State-Fullerton will counter with a club led by four-year starter Greg Bunch, who leads the club in scoring and rebounding.

Marines, Army hold upper hand in tourney

CAMP LEJEUNE, N.C. (AP) — Marine and Army boxers have taken the upper hand in the semifinals of the annual Interservice Boxing Championships here.

The Marines won all five of their fights Tuesday in the first of two nights of semifinal matches. The Army won four bouts and the Navy won one.

In the flyweight semifinals, Marine Jose Vasquez of The Bronx, N.Y. decisioned Airman Larry Erwin of Fort Worth, Texas, and the Army's Dario Medrano of Lansing, Mich., decisioned the Navy's Jerome Stewart of Washington, D.C.

Marine Tony Santana of Brooklyn, N.Y., decisioned Airman Jerry Smith of Shreveport, La., in the featherweight semifinals, and the Army's Alphonso Moten of Columbia, S.C., decisioned the Navy's James Sowell of La Margue, Texas.

In the light-welterweight semifinals, Marine George Haynes of Memphis, Tenn., won his match when the Navy's James Lucas of Lowell, Mass., was disqualified in the third round for ducking. In the other match, the Army's Charles Garner of Ruston, La., decisioned the Air Force's Richard Johnson of Richmond, Calif.

The defending interservice light-middleweight champion, Marine J.B. Williamson of Indianapolis, decisioned Air Force entrant Roger Leonard of Palmer Park, Md, a former two-time interservice welterweight champion.

In the other light-middleweight contest, the Army's Clayton Hires of Fayetteville, N.C., decisioned the Navy's Richard Beranek of Rapid City, S.D.

Semifinal bouts will continue here tonight before Thursday night's finals.

W. Texas drops first

HUTCHINSON, Kan. (AP) — Defending champion Independence, Kan., outscored Faulkner State, 26-1 in the final four minutes and routed the Alabama school, 101-64, in the Mens National Junior College Basketball Tournament Tuesday night.

In the final match Tuesday night, Palm Beach, Fla., met Niagara, N.Y.

In earlier games, Ken Offet and James Dumes combined for 42 points as Columbia State (Tenn.) cruised past Mesa, Ariz., 72-60; Casper, Wyo., upended Western Texas, 61-57, Three Rivers, Mo., beat Vincennes, Ind., 87-82 in overtime, and Westark (Ark.) outdueled Baltimore, 47-40.

Independence, after struggling the opening minutes, took a 42-32 halftime lead and then coasted the rest of the way. Bobby Potts had 25 points for Independence, Thomas Louden 15, Calvin Coleman 14 and Leslie McLeod 11. Joe Naves led Faulkner with 15.

Casper held a 28-16 lead over Western Texas at halftime. But the margin was cut to 44-43 with eight minutes left when Casper went into a spread offense which helped Kevin Sprewer stuff three buckets in the final minutes to put away the game. Sprewer topped Indpendence with 14 points and Gerald Mattinson had 12. Douglas Worthington hit 14 for West Texas.

Alamo pair wins titles

Mike McFadden and Georgie Cravens of the Alamo Junior High tennis team won titles over the weekend at the Abilene Junior High Tennis Tournament.

McFadden won the eighth grade 'B' boys singles title, defeating Scott McDaniel of Brownwood in the finals, 2-6, 6-3, 6-2.

Cravens carted home the eighth grade 'C' girls singles crown, knocking off Abilene's Maria Ramirez, 7-6, 6-3, 6-2 in the finals.

Two other Alamo netters, Cory Denena and Ricky Wooten competed in the eighth grade 'C' boys singles event, but both were eliminated in early rounds. Wooten lost in the first round, while Denena was eliminated in the quarterfinals.

MCC holding golf event

Midland Country Club will hold a best-ball foursome golf tournament on Saturday, March 18. The deadline for entering the event is 6 p.m. Thursday and all those interested in competing are asked to call the MCC pro shop.

Greene in line for cage job

MURRAY, Ky. (AP) — Ron Greene, selected Southeastern Conference Coach of the Year in his first season at Mississippi State, is apparently an active candidate for the basketball coaching position at Murray State University, according to a Paducah, Ky., television station.

WPSD-TV reported that Greene, a 1962 graduate of Murray, visited the campus of the Ohio Valley Conference school about two weeks ago, and discussed the coaching job left open since Fred Overton announced his resignation last month.

Greene said that a major factor in his decision to seek the job is that he and his wife, who is also from the Murray area, want to return home, WPSD reported.

WPSD said that a university search committee is expected to offer the name of its candidate for the coaching post before the Murray State University Board of Regents on Saturday.

Greene led Mississippi State to an 18-9 record this year and second place in the SEC behind top-ranked Kentucky.

Greene, a native of Terre Haute, Ind., was head coach at the University of New Orleans for seven years and at Loyola, La., for three seasons before taking the Mississippi State post.

Greene was reported to be out of town on a recruiting trip and could not be reached for comment.

The Bird lets one fly Tuesday in an exhibition game against Philadelphia at Lakeland, Fla. The Tiger pitcher, who missed most of last season due to arm problems, three-hit the Phillies and won his second Grapefruit League decision. (AP Laserphoto)

The Bird is flying again; beats Phils for 2nd win

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

Now hear this, you American League baseballs — "The Bird" is back!

And Mark "The Bird" Fidrych says he's over his sore arm, which means that flocks of baseballs are in for sore ears when the talkative Fidrych gets his verbal act down pat.

"The Bird" won his second exhibition game Tuesday, allowing one run — on two singles around a stolen base — in three innings as the Detroit Tigers trounced the Philadelphia Phillies 8-3.

Steve Kemp, Tim Corcoran, Lou Whitaker and Alan Trammell drove in two runs apiece as the Tigers jumped on veterans Jim Lonborg for three runs and Jim Kaat for five.

But Fidrych, who missed the last 12 weeks of 1977 with tendinitis in his pitching arm after winning Rookie of the Year honors in '76, was the big news. The 23-year-old right-hander said he threw "a heck of a lot more" fast balls than he did in his first spring appearance.

"Every time I go out there, I let loose," he said. "If you short-arm it, you can hurt yourself. Even if I had a sore arm I'd go all out. I gave up being concerned about it. If it goes again, it goes again. That's part of life."

SOMEONE WANTED to know when Fidrych will be totally recovered from his arm miseries.

"I am right now," he said.

Meanwhile, two veteran lefthanders were in the spotlight with mixed results.

Oakland's Vida Blue allowed one hit in four innings and outpitched Frank Tanana as the A's notched their first spring triumph, defeating the California Angels 7-2. "I imagine you'll see him April 7 in Anaheim," said Manager Bobby Winkles, naming his opening day pitcher.

Ken Holtzman, however, was bombed for seven runs and nine hits in just two innings as the Atlanta Braves clobbered the world champion New York Yankees 11-1. After a 2-3 record and 5.75 earned run average in '77, Holtzman was being showcased for a probable deal, since the second interleague trading period ends tonight.

THREE OF the hits were infield nubbers and another a bouncer past third and Holtzman said he "thought I threw the ball all right. It's my control. Everything is high, in the same spot."

—George Foster, the National League's Most Valuable Player, slammed three home runs and a double and Mike Lum drilled a game-winning two-run homer in the ninth inning as the Cincinnati Reds outlasted the St. Louis Cardinals 11-10 despite a pair of three-run homers by the losers' Dane Iorg.

—Dwight Evans socked a three-run homer and Mike Torrez hurled four strong innings as the Boston Red Sox beat the Toronto Blue Jays 3-1. However, relief ace Bill Campbell will miss a few days with a sore elbow.

—Lee May rapped out four hits and Billy Smith, Pat Kelly and Dave Skaggs homered, powering the Baltimore Orioles over Texas 12-1. It was the Rangers' first defeat in five games.

—Wayne Nordhagen's three-run homer helped the Chicago White Sox defeat Pittsburgh 7-5. The Pirates are winless in five games.

—Home runs by Tony Perez, Ellis Valentine and Andre Dawson paced the Montreal Expos past the Los Angeles Dodgers 7-2.

—Craig Swan, Bill Greif, Skip Lockwood and Paul Siebert combined on a six-hitter as the New York Mets blanked the Minnesota Twins 1-0.

—Andre Thornton collected three hits, including his second spring homer, in the Cleveland Indians' 13-6 victory over the San Diego Padres.

—Mick Kelleher's two-run double in the 11th inning gave the Chicago Cubs a 6-4 triumph over the Seattle Mariners and rookie Skip James delivered a two-run pinch double to lift the San Francisco Giants to a 3-1 decision over the Milwaukee Brewers.

Although the Yankees and Dodgers both lost, last year's World Series rivals were installed as pennant favorites by the Hollywood race and Sports Book in Las Vegas. The Yankees are 4-5 in the AL while the Dodgers and Reds are 8-5 in the NL.

Yanks 4-5 favorites

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Spring training isn't even over, but oddsmakers at one sports book Tuesday made the New York Yankees and the Los Angeles Dodgers the favorites to clinch the pennants in their respective leagues.

The Yankees are 4-5 favorites to take the American League pennant, according to the odds posted at the Hollywood Race and Sports Book, while in the National League Los Angeles is an 8-5 favorite. Bettors wanting to back the Yankees must put up $5 to win $4, while Dodger fans can win $8 on a $5 bet.

In the American League, Kansas City was right behind New York at 3-1 odds. In third place was Texas at 4-1.

Boxing owes Ali a shot

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

WBC, CBS, WBA, Bophuthatswana, Ali or Norton, Arum or King — it's a wild mess of porridge that's been cooked up for followers of heavyweight boxing.

Nothing unusual. It's a sport that's always been populated by wheelers and dealers, paper mache regulators without clout and characters that leap out of Damon Runyan novels.

EVEN THE angles have angles.

Now the WBC — whose square name is World Boxing Council — is threatening to strip the new champion, Leon Spinks, of his title unless he agrees to fight Ken Norton instead of giving a return shot to Muhammad Ali.

All because it says so on a piece of paper. Most ring agreements are written in invisible ink.

This is the same WBC that wrested the title from Muhammad Ali in 1967 because of the latter's anti-war stand and allowed him to rust for 3½ years before the Supreme Court and the American public agreed that Ali may have been right all along.

THE CURRENT WBC threat is equally ludicrous. It ultimately will carry the same impact.

Irrespective of the back room deals and so-called promisory notes, the first shot at Spinks' crown belongs to Ali — if Ali wants it.

Ali has paid his dues. He deserves the chance to redeem himself. Besides, we owe him one.

If Ali had beaten Spinks, as he was supposed to do, then he should have been compelled to fight Norton as agreed or have his championship declared vacant and opened up to a shootout.

But Ali didn't win. Whether it was bad advice, over-confidence, pure carelessness or something else, the great champion allowed himself to be licked by a raw rookie with only seven pro fights under his belt.

Having lost, Ali deserves at least another chance. He has contributed too much to the game down through the years — fighting anybody and everybody, sometimes two and three times over — to be given short shift now.

IT IS no idle boast of Ali's that he is not just a single cog in the big complex boxing machine. He is boxing itself — and he remains so until he is put on the shelf for good.

That time is not now.

Let's hear no charges that Ali has been ducking Norton, or anybody else. He fought Norton three times, winning twice. Must he, as in tennis, make it best three-of-five?

Spinks, a man of character, seems to think that ethically he should give a return chance to the deposed champion who, despite taunts from the sidelines, gave a chance to him.

IF IT'S traditional for the champion to give the first shot to the No. 1 contender, who would deny — no matter what the WBC has on a piece of paper — that Ali rates above Norton or anyone else?

Boxing has an unpaid debt to Ali — those 3½ years scissored out of his prime years.

So let Spinks and Ali fight again in September. Certainly Ali, with his dedication and resourcefulness, would win the next one, becoming the first man to win the title three times, and retire in glory.

Then, if Norton, Frazier and Foreman — not to mention Earnie Shavers, Larry Holmes, Jimmy Young and Spinks — were still of a mood to fight, put them in an elimination and let them slug it out.

There are years enough ahead for all.

Roth tops list

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — Nelson Burton Jr. of St. Louis, fresh from a victory in the bowling U.S. Open, jumped into the top 20 rankings of 1978 money makers.

According to figures released Tuesday by the Professional Bowlers Association, Burton picked up $10,000 in first-place money at Greensboro, N.C., last week, boosting his earnings for the 10 weeks of this year's tour to $14,925, good for 13th place in the standings.

But Mark Roth of New York, who finished seventh in the Open, held on to first place in the earnings list, with $55,390 from the eight tournaments he has participated in.

Marshall Holman of Medford, Ore., who was sixth in the Open, remained second overall with $39,440 in prize money in nine tournaments.

Randy Lightfoot of St. Louis was third, followed by Larry Laub, San Francisco; Pete Couture, Windsor Locks, Conn.; Bill Coleman, Campbell, Calif.; Earl Anthony, Tacoma, Wash.,; Dick Ritger, River Falls, Wis.; Ernie Schlegel, Staten Island, N.Y.; and Pete McCordic, Houston.

This week the pro bowlers tour moves to St. Louis.

Reed attacks (verbally) refs for giving Jabbar free hand

NEW YORK (AP) — Coach Willis Reed of the New York Knicks leveled a verbal barrage at referees Bill Saar and Lee Jones following Tuesday night's 135-117 loss to the Los Angeles Lakers.

"It's totally disgraceful, the kind of officiating we had out there tonight," Reed said. "It's a disgrace to the game of basketball. Guys go out there and play hard, but when infractions occur and no fouls are called, it's just got to break their spirit."

Saar and Jones called 26 personal fouls against New York — and a technical on Reed — to 21 against Los Angeles. The Lakers took 34 free throws to 19 for the Knicks and outscored New York 29-13 from the free throw line.

But what Reed was really upset about was what he called "special treatment" accorded Lakers center Kareem AbdulJabbar by the referees.

"He was getting away with just about anything," said Reed. "He commits fouls and no calls are made, or they give the fouls to somebody else. A couple of times he jumped into guys — no foul.

"Okay, then call it that way at both ends. But they didn't. There can't be that difference from one end of the floor to the other. You've got to call the same play the same way."

"Why should they be intimidated by Jabbar?" Reed asked.

The Lakers' center scored 22 points and grabbed 17 rebounds against the Knicks. He was called for four personal fouls, but on three other occasions fouls that could have been called against Abdul-Jabbar were assessed to other Los Angeles players.

"I would like to think that every NBA official is fair and objective and doesn't bend the rules for anybody," said Reed. "I don't think anybody could say that happened tonight.

"There are close calls which can go either way, that's okay. But there were some plays that were so elementary, any fan could see a foul should be called — and they didn't call anything. Some calls there was no question about, and they didn't make them."

Reed, in his first year as coach of the Knicks, was fined earlier this season by National Basketball Association Commissioner Larry O'Brien for publicly complaining about the caliber of officiating in the league. But he says he isn't worried about his words costing him money again.

"The Commissioner can fine me, but what can I do?" asked Reed. "I've got to say what I saw out there. And you guys all saw it, too, so you've got to write about it. You guys are always writing about how bad we are, this time write about how bad the officials are.

"He (O'Brien) should have those guys (Saar and Jones) come to his office," suggested Reed. "I would like to see them run a tape of this game and see what he thought of their officiating."

"They sent me a form to rate the officials. What good does it do to rate officials like these? How would you rate these guys? Zero, that's how."

Sports in brief

TRACK AND FIELD

MILAN, Italy — European competitors dominated the early stages of the Europe-U.S. indoor track and field meet at the Milan Sports Palace Tuesday night.

The Europeans took the first seven events of the night before Herman Frazier captured the men's 400 meters.

Frazier, who led from start to finish in the 400 meters, managed to stay one step ahead of Stan Vinson and won in 46.48 seconds, fastest in the world indoors so far this year. Vinson's comeback put him second at 46.50 with the Europeans far behind.

FOOTBALL

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. — The National Football League voted to clamp down on players who showboat and bait opponents and approved rule changes to open up the offense next season.

The owners voted, 26-2, to let officials throw the book at players guilty of "baiting or taunting" the opposition, including a 15-yard unsportsmanlike conduct penalty.

Other rules approved by the owners: —Offensive linemen can fend off charging defenders with hands open or closed into fists and elbows flexed or locked. Previously the hands had to be closed into fists and the elbows had to be flexed. —Cut down the times defenders can interfere with potential receivers. Previously a defender could make contact with a receiver as often as he wished within a three-yard zone of the line of scrimmage — then he could be hit again. Now, the receiver may only be chucked once in a five-yard zone. —A seventh official, the side judge, will be added. —A "double-touch" on a pass will be allowed by offensive players as well as defensive players. —A passer may not cross the line of scrimmage, then cross back and throw the ball, nor can he carry it over the line, then toss it back to another player who passes it.

—Intentionally stopping the clock by committing a foul or penalty is illegal. It will cost the team a penalty of 10 seconds plus five yards.

TENNIS

BOSTON — Second-seeded Chris Evert survived a scare from JoAnne Russell and made a triumphant return to the professional circuit after a fourmonth vacation, winning a first-round match 6-4, 4-6, 6-3 in a $100,000 tournament.

In other first-round matches, third-seeded Evonne Goolagong defeated Brigitte Cuypers of South Africa 6-3, 6-2, Billie Jean King eliminated Regina Marsikova of Czechoslovakia 6-1, 6-4 and Maria Redondo upset Betty Stove 6-4, 6-2.

WASHINGTON -Top-seeded Brian Gottfried defeated an erratic Arthur Ashe 6-4, 6-1 in the first round of the $125,000 Washington stop on the men's professional tennis tour.

In other matches, sixth-seeded John McEnroe defeated Tom Gullikson 6-3, 7-6; seventh-seeded Stan Smith ousted Butch Walts 6-2, 6-1, Phil Dent of Australia defeated Mike Fishbach 6-1, 4-6, 6-4 and Tony Roche of Australia ousted Nick Saviano 6-3, 5-7, 6-4.

BOXING

PHILADELPHIA — Joe Frazier, former heavyweight boxing champ, signed a contract to fight Kallie Knoetze, a South African, who in his last bout knocked out Duane Bobick.

The Frazier-Knoetze bout is scheduled for April 29 in Las Vegas and after that the former champ, now 34, is hoping for a chance to stalk new heavyweight champ Leon Spinks.

GENERAL

WASHINGTON — Mickey Holmes, commissioner of the Missouri Valley Conference, told Congress he believes the NCAA will make major changes in its enforcement procedures at its annual convention next January.

Holmes told the House oversight and investigations subcommittee that the powerful collegiate sports organization made substantial changes at its meeting in Atlanta last January but "did not come quite far enough."

HORSE RACING

CORNWELLS HEIGHTS, Pa. — Whitebackle, $11.40, passed tiring favorite Duckworth Dilemma in the stretch and drew off to a five-length victory in the feature at Keystone Racetrack.

European cindermen dump U.S.

MILAN, Italy (AP) — Star high jumper Franklin Jacobs said he was not pleased with his victory Tuesday, one of just five for the United States team soundly defeated by a European selection in an indoor track and field meet.

Jacobs cleared 7 feet, 5 inches in the men's high jump, but then failed three times at 7- 7¾, one-half inch more than his previous best of 7-7¼, a world record at the time he set it last January.

It was another disappointment for an American squad that lost 16 of 21 events and left Milan's Sports Palace a 141-80 loser.

The meet lost most of its touch when defections were announced from both teams, particularly American sprinter Houston McTear, nursing a pulled hamstring, and Soviet high jumper Vladimir Yashchenko, who said he was "tired."

The 6-foot-5, 19-year-old Russian had won the European indoor championships here on Sunday, clearing 7-8½ and breaking Jacob's indoor mark and his own outdoor best of 7-7¾.

JACOBS SAID Yashchenko's default and the absence of consistent contenders killed his drive and he just could not do better. Many other Americans, however, were way below their normal standards and were never in competition.

The team even failed to place a second competitor in two events, the pole vault and the men's shotput.

All five American victories were produced by the men as the women were never in contention. Jodi Anderson of Northridge, Calif., who leaped 20-8½ in the long jump to finish second behind Jarmila Nygrynova of Czechoslovakia's winning jump of 21-0, was the closest the U.S. women came to first place.

The men's victories, besides Jacobs, a Fairleigh Dickenson University sophomore who beat Rolf Beilschmidt of East Germany at 7-3¼, came from Al Feuerbach of Los Gatos, Calif., in the shotput at 66-10¾, Vesco Bradley Fort Lewis, Wash., in the long jump with 25-8, the 1,600-meter relay in 3 minutes, 8.9 seconds and Herman Frazier of Philadelphia in the 400 meters with a 46.48, the fastest in the world this year.

FRAZIER EDGED teammate Stan Vinson of Chicago, 46.50, into second place for the only American 1-2 placing.

Ron Livers of San Jose, Calif., leaped 55-4½ in the triple jump to come close to Anatoly Piskulin of the Soviet Union, whose winning effort was 55- 7¼. Veteran Charles Foster of Durham, N.C., battled Thomas Munkelt of East Germany right to the tape in the men's 60 meters hurdles.

Munkelt won in 7.65 seconds with Foster timed in 7.67.

Vladimir Trofimyenko of the Soviet Union won the pole vault with a vault of 17-2¾ meters but then failed in three attempts at a world record 18-5¾.

The American women's only other second place came from Sharon Dabney of Philadelphia with 53.27 seconds in the 400 meters, trailing Maria Sidorova of the Soviet Union, who won in 53.01.

POSING AS a con-woman calling Florence Shaner, right, a senior citizen, is Mavis Murphey. The two Midland Community Theatre players are rehearsing for a skit called "Home Improvement Swindle" to be performed at the "Senior Citizens Against Crime" seminar to be held from 9:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. Thursday in the Fine Arts Building at Midland College. Purpose of the seminar is to educate senior citizens on protecting themselves against the criminal element in Midland through the above skit speakers on procedures for reporting crimes to law-enforcement agencies. The seminar will be interpreted in Spanish and a box lunch will be served in the Student Center at the College. (Staff Photo)

School board adopts textbooks

Textbooks in drama, Texas history, English composition and literature, business, German, driver education, chemistry, biology, Spanish and free enterprise were adopted by the Midland public schools Board of Education Tuesday.

Despite an objection to the textbook on free enterprise called "Consumer Economic Problems," published by South-Western Publishing Co., board members approved adoption of the text upon recommendation of the textbook committee.

Committee member David Fly said Leonard H. Caryl earlier had protested adoption of "Consumer Economic Problems" because he believed it was overly biased towards government involvement in the economy.

However, Fly said he thought this book covered all aspects of the free enterprise system better than the other book considered for adoption.

Board member Ann Page declined to vote on adopting "Consumer Economic Problems" since she wanted to see a copy of the other text first.

School Superintendent Dr. James Mailey said the 13-member textbook committee has been working on its list of recommendations since the state-approved book list came out late in November 1977.

The committee, with the exception of Mailey who acts as chairman of the group, is made up of teachers. Mailey said these teachers are the ones who will be using the texts which were up for adoption.

In other business, the trustees granted a change order regarding the new Midland High School Vocational facility. The board approved the adjustments made in the building plans and specifications, recommended by Charles Neuhardt of the architectural firm Neuhardt and Babb of Midland, which would reduce the contract price of the building by $20,668. The original contract price was $549,000.

Board members heard a report from the joint salary committee of the Midland Educators Asaociation and Midland Classroom Teachers Association on the proposed teacher salary schedule for the 1978-79 school year.

The schedule would raise the salary of a beginning teacher with a bachelor's degree from $9,752 to $12,252. A teacher with a master's degree would start out with a salary of $12,900, instead of the present salary of $10,400. With the addition of 30 semester hours of graduate studies, the proposed schedule would increase a teacher's salary from $10,900 to $13,400.

Committee chairman Tom Marsden said this is what teachers need to live in Midldnd. The proposed schedule would upgrade the purchasing power of teachers here to the 1968 level.

During the meeting, Garland Chapman, assistant superintendent of administrative services, informed the school board that requests for use of the drug detection dog by Midland school principals first must be cleared through the central administration office. He said this will be "smoother than having 20 principals calling (the Midland Police Department) at once.

Chapman said the dog has "performed well" at the two schools he has visited so far. He said the dog found some marijuana seeds at Edison Freshman School. He said the dog handler lets the school principal know 15 to 30 minutes beforehand when he will arrive for an inspection.

The board accepted the proposed summer school program and calendar. It granted the Midland Federation of Teachers the privilege of using the intra-school mailing system, but refused other requests, such as allowing payroll deductions for monthly dues.

The trustees approved gifts totaling $2,850 from the Fannin Elementary School PTA to be given to the school. It also accepted $1,900 to purchase a hard-top playground area for Houston Elementary School from the PTA there.

In addition, the board members granted the Midland Jaycees' request to use the Midland Memorial Stadium in May for a fund-raising project to benefit American Lung Association. However, the members turned down the Jaycees' request to promote this project at the schools since they have not allowed other organizations to do so in the past.

The trustees okayed the use of a classroom at San Jacinto Junior High School March 28 by the Midland Education Association political action conmittee for a business meeting.

It decided in favor of letting the Lee Street Church of Christ use the Carver School auditorium Sunday to host its 19th annual West Texas Lectureship.

In other business, the board reviewed bids from several companies for cafeteria equipment. It awarded bids totaling $31,744 to these companies. It also gave its approval to bids totaling $21,598 to various companies for cafeteria paper goods.

In addition, the trustees awarded bids totaling $35,377 for reproduction paper to Graham Paper Co. of Lubbock. It accepted a bid from Thermo-Trol Service Co. of Midland totaling $8,605 for reconditioning an air conditioning unit at the school administration building.

The trustees met in executive session to discuss hiring a new Midland High Football coach to replace Jerry Hopkins who resigned to take on a new position and to consider a real estate matter, but no action was taken.

UMW seeking approval of industry concessions

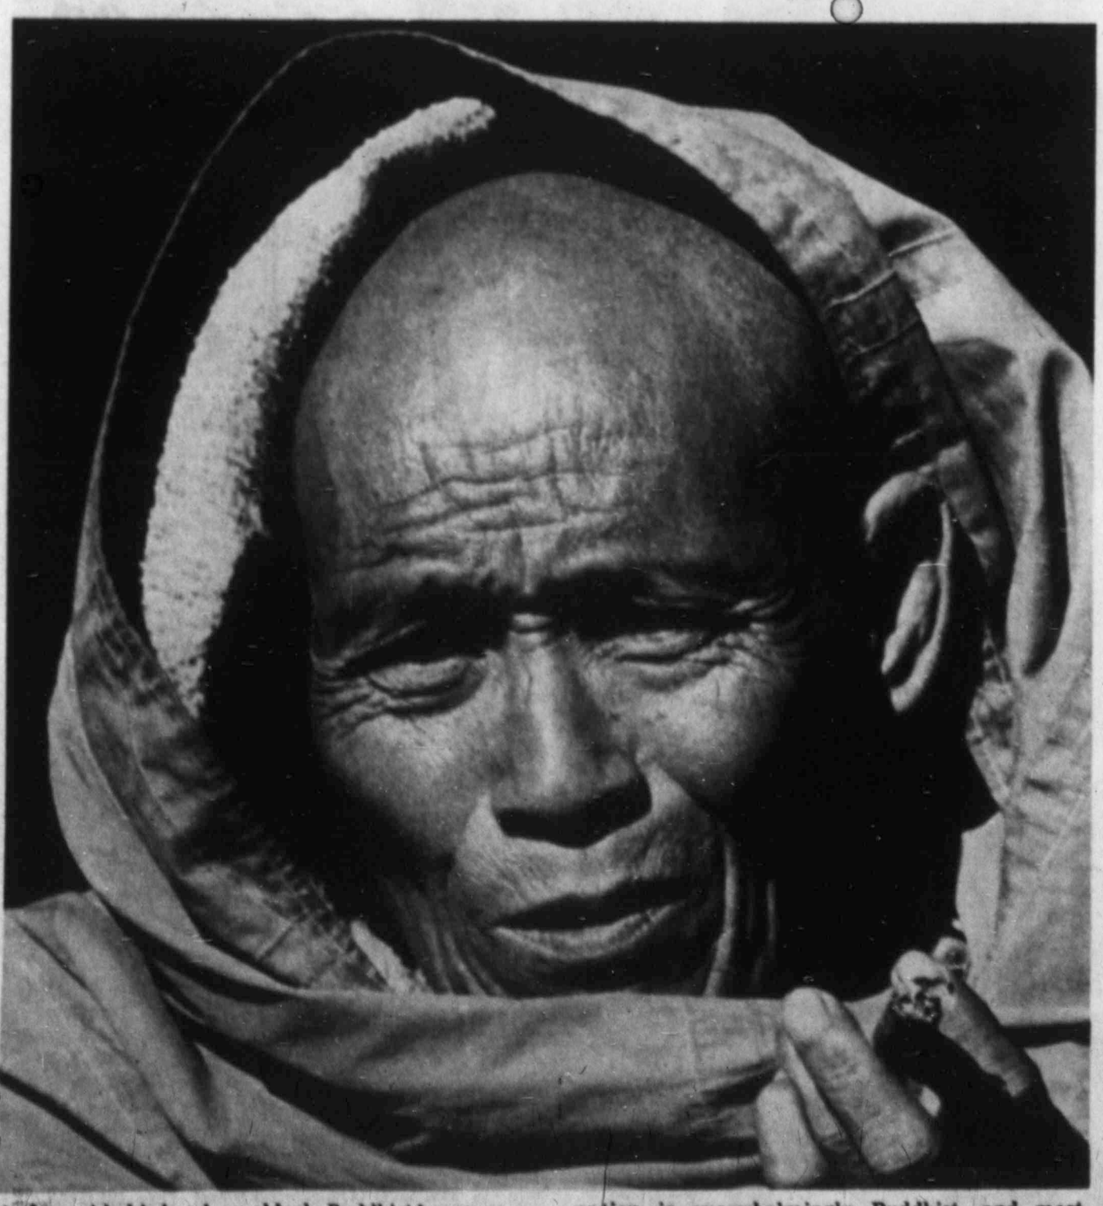

WASHINGTON (AP) — With the coal strike now 100 days old, leaders of the United Mine Workers are hoping their unpredictable bargaining council and rebellious members will approve a new tentative contract containing industry concessions in two key areas.

The 39-member council, which torpedoed a proposed agreement a month ago, was arriving in Washington today to vote on the settlement reached Tuesday by negotiators for the UMW and soft coal industry.

The new settlement includes concessions by both sides, but the industry appeared to have given up more — particulary in agreements on health care and wildcat strikes, two areas of chief concern to the rank-andfile.

If it passes the bargaining council, the agreement can be put to a vote by the 160,000 miners next week and bring to an end a bitter strike that the Carter administration has been unable to curb.

The miners overwhelmingly rejected a previous proposal on March 5 and have been ignoring a federal judge's back-to-work order issued under the Taft-Hartley Act.

Bridge club to host charity game

The Permian Basin Duplicate Bridge Club will host a charity game today in the Knights of Columbus Hall at 2401 W. Indiana Street.

The game, part of the American Contract Bridge League's charity program, will get underway promptly at 7:30 p.m., Mrs. V. V. McGrew, game director, said.

Proceeds will be given to the Mental Health & Mental Retardation Foundation.

Mrs. McGrew said the bridge hands to be played are prepared hands and the same hands will be played throughout the nation at the same time.

Persons wanting partners for the game should telephone Mrs. McGrew, 686-8688, or Mrs. Joe Ranne, 684-4129.

"All bridge players in Midland and other West Texas cities are invited to participate in this worthwhile charity game," Mrs. McGrew said. "Membership in the ACBL is not required for participation," she added.

Water tower called 'attractive nuisance'

Some days problems just seem to tower over the city

That must be how city officials feel today, as they hunt for an economical solution to rid Midland of the 145-foot tall, 1920s-vintage downtown water tower which, after three known suicide threats from its heights, has been branded an "attractive nuisance."

Members of the Midland City Council and city staff were optimistic about an early resolution to the problem Tuesday when Mayor Ernest Angelo Jr. began to open the lone bid submitted for the "nuisance's" removal.

After the mayor glanced at the bid, spirits in the council chambers sank. Angelo's smile turned into a frown.

It turned out, the "bidder" didn't really want any part of the job, although he said he might consider it — provided the city would pay him $80,000 to cart the tower away.

Mayor Angelo said he hoped the bidder would have thought it worthwhile to pay the city for the right to salvage 100 tons of scrap metal.

The bidder, however, felt it would cost about $220,000 to take the structure down, and indicated that he could "salvage" a profit with $80,000 from the city plus what he could get on the market for the junk metal.

After the bid was rejected, Mayor Angelo instructed city staff members to find a more promising offer.

Midland College faculty receive raises of $700

Midland College's 62 faculty members were granted $700 cost-of-living salary raises Tuesday by the college's board of trustees.

That blanket raise coupled with other salary increments brings the nine-month salaries $10,439 on the low end and $17,729 on the high end.

The low end of the range would be for an instructor with the master's degree and no teaching experience. The top pay would be for a professor holding the doctorate and backed up with nine or more years of teaching.

The $700 raise is in addition to the annual "step increases" of $321 for a faculty member holding the master's degree and $535 for one with the doctorate.

Salary increases from $1,400 to $1,600 were granted four members of the adminative staff.

The hike brings the 12-month salaries to $20,652 for Dr. L. P. Coston, director of the Learning Resource Center; $21,000 for Delnor Poss, athletic director; $17,100 for Joe Hopkins, director of maintenance, and $16,500 for M. A. Tuck, public relations director.

Trustees accepted the resignation of Charles Gronow, automobile technology instructor, and announced the hiring of Larry Campbell as director of the Chaparral Center effective April 1.

Trustees noted that Lady Bird Johnson will be on campus April 10 to cut the ribbon in the formal opening of the Lyndon Baines Johnson Educational Forum in the college's Learning Resource Center.

The ribbon cutting will be at 10 a.m., and will be followed by the dedication of the Fine Arts Building.

The LBJ Forum, in honor of the nation's 36th president, was built from contributions, including those from college supporter Veda Hodge of Midland.

Action begins limiting mobile home location

ODESSA — The first step toward outlawing mobile homes in any area of Odessa except those areas specifically designated as mobile home parks was taken Tuesday by Odessa City Council.

Following a motion by Councilman Glenn Brown, the council instructed the city staff to start action that eventually will restrict placement of mobile homes in any area except mobile home parks. The staff is to bring recommendations to the council for action at a later date.

Brown said that when the city decided to allow the placement of mobile homes in general residential areas and other zoned districts about three years ago, the decision was based on an acute housing shortage existing at the time. Now, he said, the matter is out of hand and the city is finding it almost impossible to regulate such placement.

In other action at Tuesday's meeting, the council:

— Granted permission to call for bids on structures and improvements on the property purchased for the Texas Tech Medical School's teaching facility site.

— Approved final acceptance of emergency water reclamation plant improvements.

— Awarded a contract to an auctioneer to conduct a public sale of city equipment on May 15.

Commissioners vote to extend Yukon Road

ODESSA — Ector County Commissioners this week voted to extend Yukon Road, in far north Odessa, eastward from Ector Street to Loop 338, to provide access to a football stadium site donated to Ector County school system by Odessa rancher James "Buzz" Hurt and his family.

Hurt also has donated right-of-way for the Yukon extension, and he told commissioners he would donate all the caliche needed for the road. No dollar value was placed on the extension project, but commissioners have indicated that the only costs to the county would be the grading of the road and installation of cattle guards at Ector Street and Loop 338.

The site of the proposed stadium would be at Yukon and North Grandview if the two thoroughfares intersect. Hurt also has donated right-of-way for the northward extension of Grandview to Yukon.

LEGAL NOTICES

Proposals may be submitted by Public Housing Agency (PHA) Owners or by private individuals authorized by PHA's to submit on their behalf.

Metropolitan Areas (PRPC, SPAG, PBRPC, WTCOG)
Contract authority in the amount of $775,000 is being made available to provide assistance for an estimated 100 units for large families (3 or more bedrooms) and 150 units for other families for a total of 250 units.
Proposals for metropolitan areas must be received by 1:00 P.M. on April 7, 1978. This deadline may be shortened or extended by HUD. In such case HUD will notify all parties who have previously registered with the field office requesting such notification.
Nonmetropolitan Areas (Texoma)
Contract authority in the amount of $217,000 is being made available to provide assistance for an estimated 24 units for large families (3 or more bedrooms) and 46 units for other families for a total of 70 units.

Projects to be located in nonmetropolitan areas are not subject to a submission deadline However, if a sufficient number of nonmetropolitan proposals to fully utilize the available contract authority are not submitted prior to 1:00 P.M. on April 7, 1978, HUD may cancel this Notification and reallocate any unused funds to another nonmetropolitan allocation area.
Submission deadline shall not apply to Proposals for projects in which the number of assisted units will be limited to 20 percent or less of the dwelling units. However, such proposals received after the deadline will be reviewed only if sufficient contract authority remains from this Notification to fund the proposal.
If additional funds are made available the estimated maximum number of units in the Metropolitan and Nonmetropolitan Areas may be exceeded for this NOFA. In addition we will issue a NOFA for those allocation areas (COG's) not covered herein.

/s/ J. W. McCullough
City Secretary, City of Midland, Texas

(City Seal)

RESOLUTION NO. 78-71

A RESOLUTION AND ORDER by the City Council of the City of Midland, Texas, Calling a bond election to be held within said City, making provision for the conduct of the election and other provisions incident and related to the purpose of this resolution and order; and declaring an emergency.

WHEREAS, the City Council of Midland, Texas, has determined that an election should be called to ascertain whether said governing body shall be authorized to issue bonds of said City in the amount and for the purpose hereinafter mentioned; therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED AND ORDERED BY THE CITY COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF MIDLAND, TEXAS:

SECTION 1: That an election be held on the 1st day of April, 1978, which date is not less than fifteen (15) nor more than ninety (90) days from the date of the adoption hereof, at which election the following proposition shall be submitted:

"SHALL the City Council of the City of Midland, Texas, be authorized to issue $500,000 general obligation bonds of said City for the purpose of making permanent-public improvements, to wit: acquiring or improving, or both, land for park purposes (enlargement of the present municipal golf course by the construction of at least nine additional holes and modification of the existing holes necessary to coordinate play with the holes to be added); said bonds to be issued in one or more installments, to mature serially over a period of years not to exceed FORTY (40) years from their date, to be issued and sold at any price or prices and to bear interest at any rate or rates as shall be determined within the discretion of the City Council at the time of issuance; and shall there be levied, assessed and collected annually ad valorem taxes on all taxable property in the City sufficient to pay the annual interest and to create a sinking fund sufficient to redeem said bonds as they become due?"

SECTION 2: That voting machines shall be used at each polling place on the day of the election and for absentee voting by personal appearance. Paper ballots shall be used for absentee voting by mail. The voting machines shall be arranged and the paper ballots prepared in accordance with V.A.T.S. Election Code so as to permit voters to vote "FOR" or "AGAINST" the aforesaid proposition which shall appear on the voting machines and paper ballots in substantially the following manner:

"THE ISSUANCE OF $500,000 GENERAL OBLIGATION PARK BONDS (ENLARGEMENT OF THE PRESENT MUNICIPAL GOLF COURSE BY THE CONSTRUCTION OF AT LEAST NINE ADDITIONAL HOLES AND MODIFICATION OF THE EXISTING HOLES NECESSARY TO COORDINATE PLAY WITHT HE HOLES TO BE ADDED)"

On the paper ballots, the word "FOR" and beneath it the word "AGAINST" shall be made to appear on the left of the proposition. A square shall be printed on the left of each of the words "FOR" and "AGAINST", and each elector shall place an "X" in the square beside the statement indicating the way he wishes to vote.

SECTION 3: That the polling places and officers of said election shall be as follows, to wit:

ELECTION PRECINCT	POLLING PLACE	ELECTION OFFICERS.
No. 1 (containing Midland County Election Precincts Nos. 1, 10 and 12)	Fire Station No. 3 1710 N. Edwards	Mrs. Sonya Scholl Presiding Judge; Clarence Meekins Alternate Presiding Judge

J. R. Smith
Mel Butler

On election day, the polls shall be open from 7:00 A.M. to 7:00 P.M.

SECTION 4: Each Presiding Judge shall appoint not less than two (2) nor more than four (4) qualified clerks to serve and assist in holding said election; provided that if the Presiding Judge herein appointed actually serves, the Alternate Presiding Judge shall be one of the clerks.

The City Secretary is hereby appointed Clerk for absentee voting for said election, and the Business Office of Midland Independent School District Administration Building, 702 North "N" Street, is hereby designated as the place at which absentee voting shall be conducted for said election. For the period absentee voting is permitted by law, the hours designated for absentee voting shall be from 8:00 A.M. to 5:00 P.M. on each day except Saturdays, Sundays and official State holidays. Applications for ballots by mail shall be addressed to City Secretary, 702 North "N" Street, Midland, Texas 79701.

SECTION 5: That all resident qualified electors of the City shall be permitted to vote at said election. This election shall be held and conducted in accordance with the Texas Election Code except as modified by Chapter 1 of Title 22, V.A.T.C.S., and as may be required by law, all election materials and proceedings shall be printed in both English and Spanish.

SECTION 6: That a substantial copy of this resolution and order shall serve as proper notice of said election. Said notice shall be posted in the election precincts and at the City Hall not less than fourteen (14) full days prior to the date on which said election is to be held, and be published on the same day in each of two successive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation in said City, the first of said publications to be made not less than fourteen (14) full days prior to the date set for said election.

SECTION 7: That inasmuch as the public importance of this measure and the fact that it is to the best interest of the City and its inhabitants to provide funds for the improvements herein contemplated at the earliest possible date for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health and safety of the citizens of the City of Midland, Texas, constitute an emergency and an imperative public necessity that this resolution and order take effect and be in full force immediately upon its passage, all Charter rules governing the effective date of any resolution and order are hereby suspended and this resolution and order shall take effect and be in force and effect from and after its final passage, and it is so resolved and ordered.

PASSED AND APPROVED, this the 28th day of February, 1978.

There's never been a better time.

Reason 1: The Peugeot 604 and 504 sedans are among the best riding and handling luxury cars you can buy. They all have four-wheel independent suspension, Peugeot patented shocks, rack and pinion steering, plus power-disc brakes on all four wheels.
Reason 2: The Peugeot 504 wagon is one of the best riding and handling wagons you can buy. Unlike most wagons that are a little more than modified sedans, the Peugeot wagon is engineered from the ground up to be a wagon.
Reason 3: When you buy a Peugeot Diesel, you're buying experience. Our 1978 diesel sedans and wagons are the result of 56 years of refinement.
Reason 4: There's never been a better time to come in and talk to us.

Scientist wants a tooth to check Soviets' story

By KEN RINGLE
The Washington Post

For more than 40 years, Russians have been telling us, most recently via televised yogurt commercials, that scores of people in Soviet Georgia routinely live more than a century.

Now comes Dr. Jeffrey Bada, a 34-year-old organic chemist at the Scripps Institute of Oceanography in San Diego, with a way to prove these claims once and for all.

So far, the Russians haven't called.

Four years ago, Bada took the archaeological world by surprise with a method of dating prehistoric fossils through changes in their amino acid molecules. His dating technique, still argued but so far unrefuted, showed early man migrated to America at least 48,000 years ago — fully 18,000 years before most anthropologists thought possible.

Bada says his technique can also be used to date the celebrated "long livers" in the Soviet Caucasus, some of whom claim to be a mere 130. Two years ago, he began trying to get a testable tooth from a live or recently deceased Soviet centenarian. No luck. Last November, a delegation of Soviet scientists and aging specialists visiting this country were informed anew of Bada's interest. So far, nothing.

"I was told they were all familiar with my work and supposedly interested in cooperating," Bada says. "But I've had no direct correspondence with them on this. It's sort of a mystery just what is going on."

There are plenty of scientists who think it is no mystery at all, that the Soviets are stalling to protect claims of extraordinary longevity they themselves believe may be largely a product of cultural chauvinism and political puffery.

One doubting Thomas is Dr. Richard Mazess, assistant professor of medical physics at the University of Wisconsin, who has researched similar age claims in the village of Vilcabamba, Ecuador. Recently, Mazess told a conference at the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md., that most of those claims are false.

Mazess and Dr. Sylvia Foreman, a University of California anthropologist, matched the age claims and geneology of some 30 Vilcabambans, alleged aged 100 and up, against baptismal records in nearby churches. Though some people in the village have claimed over the years to be as old as 167, Mazess said, the church records showed nobody living in the village now was as old as 100. Most of those claiming to be were in their 70s and 80s.

"We had one woman who told an Italian television crew she was 146," Mazess said. "She said she had her last kid when she was 115 ... And, of course, they put it right out on the tube."

Mazess and others interested in the dynamics of aging consider such reports more a measure of the gullibility of some researchers than of the old people involved, and they view the Soviet claims as similarly farfetched.

One of those on their side is Zhores A. Medvedev, an exiled Soviet biologist and geneticist now living in England, who has been debunking such claims for years. Medvedev notes that the world's several celebrated gold mines of longevity — in Russia, Ecuador and Pakistan — are rural areas with little literacy and few written records against which age claims can be checked. In such areas, where the old are greatly honored, he says, people vie to be thought the oldest and due the most respect.

In the Soviet Union, moreover, the number of 100 year olds increased noticeably during Stalin's reign because the dictator liked the idea of people in his native Georgia living to advanced age, Medvedev adds. Since those who ignored Stalin's likes and dislikes had a way of disappearing, Soviet census workers labored hard and long to find 100 year olds for Uncle Joe.

More men trying cosmetics behind closed doors

By NANCY YOSHIHARA
The Los Angeles Times

In the dead of winter, a businessman looks unusually ruddy and tanned even though he hasn't been out in the sun for months. "He uses a bronzer," confides one of the man's associates. "But don't tell him I told you or I might lose a client."

What is going on behind closed doors? A lot, cosmetic manufacturers contend.

They have begun to produce and market the bronzers — a form of makeup that provides a thin veneer of color for the pallid — one of the more daring items in their rapidly expanding lines of men's toiletries.

Once virtually exclusive to women, cosmetics for men — or grooming aids, as most manufacturers prefer to call them — are crowding their way into medicine cabinets next to the familiar bottles of after-shave lotion.

Around the country, cosmetic companies report, men are primping and preening as never before. They are using such newly emerging products as men's skin moisturizers, "muscle-soothing" soaps, skin and hair treatments, friction body splashes and bath salts.

Firm figures on the trend are hard to come by but retailers variously estimate the annual sales of men's cosmetics and toiletries at between $560 million and $1.2 billion. While that is less than 15 percent of the $7 billion to $8 billion annual cosmetic market, manufacturers maintain that sales of men's cosmetics are expanding by 12 percent to 15 percent a year, twice the rate of women's.

"Men don't want to do anything considered effeminate or regarded as sissy," says Philip B. Miller, president of the Dallas-based Neiman-Marcus stores. "But men are just as vain if not more than women. They would kill to look good."

Since 1965 when Bloomingdale's in New York set up a department called Harry's Bar to showcase men's fragrances, most major department stores have established separate men's toiletries areas — often staffed by attractive women.

Names like Aramis, Pierre Cardin, Royal Copenhagen, Brazzi, Brut, Kanon, or Paco Rabanne grace bold packages of bravado browns or cool blues and a variety of odd-shaped bottles.

"It was once an underground situation," explains John Tulin, vice president in charge of merchandising toiletries at Swank Inc., New York. "A man used to take his wife's moisturizer or steal his girl friend's shampoo. They're now realizing they have their own products — it's a case where there is a demand for these products."

"Fragrances have always done well among gays and the fashion-conscious black and Chicano communities," explains one buyer. "But most men are afraid of the nuances of these types of items. It took them a while to accept fragrances."

"A man has to feel he is doing something health oriented — not cosmetic oriented," says Miller at Neiman-Marcus. "He wants to look young, virile and vital — it's a whole mental thing."

Richard Barrie, president of Faberge Inc., New York, which puts out Brut, Macho and Zizanie, agrees. "It will take a while — first, to educate men on skin care, and second, to make them feel it is not effeminate," he says. "But it will happen in the next few years, because men should take care of their skin like women."

"We say we have something that can help you," says Toni Hopkins, vice president and divisional merchandise manager of toiletries at Neiman-Marcus. "But we don't like to call it cosmetic."

One of the skin treatment lines sold at Neiman-Marcus is put out by the Erno Laszlo Institute. The morning and night routine calls for a soaping with Sea Mud Soap and a dousing of Light Controlling Lotion, an astringent. In the evening, there is an additional splash of a slightly tinted Heavy Controlling Lotion.

Then there is Active Phelityl Oil for the dry face and neck and Active Phelityl Cream for the eyes and lips. Laszlo also provides, for youths of 11 to 17, a line that includes Special Skin Soap, Condition Preparation, Heavy Controlling Lotion and Bronzing Lotion, which the company lists as optional.

"Guys are looking at their faces," says a cosmetic buyer at a major Southern retailer. "They now use a moisturizer or after-shave balm to tone up the face. They don't want wrinkles and so they take the moisturizer they use after they shave and bring it up further around the eyes and nose."

"A lot of things we had to overcome were overcome without us doing anything," comments Tulin at Swank. "If a man wore a chain without a crucifix five years ago, people looked at him like he was a freak. Today, a chain is nothing."

To help the trend along, manufacturers are allocating more dollars to advertising. Most rely heavily on selling the image of success and romance.

Faberge uses Joe Namath to project a masculine image for its Brut line. Others use a more subtle approach.

The emphasis in Royal Copenhagen's advertising, says Tulin, is, "You dress well, you want to look your best, this is simply your way of doing it." Aramis says its Devin line represents a relaxed attitude toward life. Devin uses an "estate" of mind advertising gimmick by showing a simple scene of a country meadow.

Critics maintain that the industry is being opportunistic — creating a need based on the insecurities of men. The new skin treatment items, they say, are just more expensive versions of old, drugstore variety goods.

"Those cosmetic saleswomen — they're like barracudas — they can sell anything," complains one resistant man who says he just uses toothpaste, soap and shampoo. "It's like the vaginal sprays of a few years back — women did not need them."

The record of the men's cosmetics wave is not one of unbroken success, however.

A few years ago, for example, Revlon Inc. introduced a genital spray for men called Private. It flopped. "Ahead of its time," a Revlon spokesperson in New York says.

Some in the industry doubt that enough men will go beyond the skin conditioners and join the trend toward out-and-out makeup.

Mary Quant cosmetics Ltd. has had to discontinue its makeup kit for men — with foundation, mascara, lip gloss and eye shadows. And Faberge's Barrie says wide acceptance of a full line of male makeup will be slow to emerge. "Perhaps a little covering for a blemish . . .," he says. "But makeup; that is a long way off."

City ordinance keeps fight running with council, joggers

By JERRY REMMERS
Copley News Service

The news item that flashed across the country was crisp and concise:

"LOS ALTOS HILLS, Calif. (AP) — The City Council is considering two ordinances Wednesday which would ban joggers from city streets."

Well said, AP. Now, a story like that piques the curiosity of even the non-jogger.

After all, we've seen 'em. Some of us even jog ourselves.

So, what in tarnation could get the Los Altos Hills City Council in a snit over joggers?

"I'll tell you why," said Sue Buttler ("That's with two t's," she advised). Sue is deputy city clerk.

"Hundreds of them jog together and completely take over the street."

What street?

"Moody Road, mostly. The worst day is Sundays. They park at the base of Foothill College and start jogging up Moody Road.

"They sometimes are 10 and 20 abreast. The road meanders up one of our hills for five or six miles. It is only 40 feet wide, and when they come by, no cars can get through."

"Sounds like locusts coming through, huh?'

"Kinda." (Giggle)

"And," Sue Buttler continued, "they use abusive language to the residents and sheriff's deputies when you try to get them off the street so traffic can go by."

"Sorta like 'The Wild Ones,"' I said. "Who's their spokesman, Marlon Brando?"

"No." (Giggle) "They really don't have one. They come from all over. Los Altos. Sunnyvale. As far as Palo Alto."

Los Altos Hills (population, 7,225) is a swank residential community in the South San Francisco Bay area which even has an ordinance banning sidewalks.

"We try to keep a rural setting," said Buttler, who in the last few weeks has answered media inquiries from newspapers throughout the nation.

"Time magazine did a story on us and Terry Drinkwater of CBS-TV was here the other day doing some filming," she said.

"Seems like you people have been found on the map, so to speak."

"Boy, you said it."

City Attorney Frank Jillio said as far as he knows no other California city has an ordinance banning joggers.

One ordinance proposes to ban joggers from running on city streets. The other, apparently if the first fails, would require joggers to be licensed by the city before they can break out of a walk on city streets.

Butler said the Santa Clara County sheriff tried to reason with the joggers but there was no law the sheriff could find to enforce to get the joggers to break ranks.

Sheriff Lt. Darrold Thomas said he was reassigned to handle the problem over two months ago. "I sort of inherited it," Thomas said. "However, I have no firsthand knowledge of the problem."

He said he has learned there have been abuses from the joggers, residents and motorists.

Many hair problems induced by poor care

By VIVIAN BROWN
AP Newsfeatures Writer

Hair falling out?

Any number of medications — aspirin taken every night, amphetamines, the "pill," cortisone, anti-coagulation or diet pills — could be the likely cause.

Nothing you rub on your scalp will bring the hair back in most cases, advises Dr. Jonathan Zizmor, author of "Super Hair." Your hair must be fed from within by good nutrients.

"Hair follicles are among the most rapidly metabolizing organs in the human body. Deprive your body of essential proteins and calories due to an unbalanced and insufficient diet and the follicles will not produce good keratin," he points out. Keratin, the substance that constitutes hair, is pure protein.

In addition to the 100,000 follicles on the normal head, people with luxuriant hair have better hair genetically, but very little can be done to alter genetic makeup. The essential quality of hair is predetermined by genes — you can only improve it cosmetically by conditioning and so on.

Many common hair problems may be self-induced, says Zizmor.

For example, dryness can result from too much blow-drying, sun exposure, permanent dyes, not enough brushing. And there are other problems also:

—Fragility: The cuticle may be eroded.

—Dullness: Faded color and lack of sheen from dryness and overexposure to strong chemicals.

—Split ends: One major cause may be overtreatment with dyes and bleaches — all chemical treatments inevitably damage cuticles.

—Oiliness: Glands attached to hair follicles secrete too much oil as a result of hormonal makeup.

Zizmor, chief of dermatology at St. Vincent's Hospital in New York City, believes that proper hair brushing — letting the head hang between the knees and brushing from back of head forward — can improve appearances of hair as scalp oils are distributed. It is bad to brush hair from front to back in front of a mirror, he says.

A lot of what we do to our hair on a daily basis can make it look dreary, he indicates.

For example, blow dryers can induce excess drying, which makes hair dull and brittle, he points out. The dryers should be selected with care and not used on a daily basis, only occasionally.

"If your hairstyle depends on its use, give up the hairstyle," he advises.

DISCO FEVER, SATURDAY NIGHT. So you're worried about what to wear Saturday night at the disco. Well, don't. Sacroiliac stretchers wear costumes that range from the chic to the bizarre to the come as you are. The costumes are as loud as the music, and as revealing as the day on which you can see forever. Here are some ideas for the undecided, as spied in New York. (AP Laserphoto)

DEAR ABBY

Alcoholic mother needs to take first step

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: What can be done for a 72-year-old woman with a drinking problem? That woman is my mother, and it breaks my heart to see her destroying herself. It all began several years ago when Dad retired and they started spending their winters in Arizona. Why would a loving, respected grandmother turn to alcohol when she hardly ever drank before?

Dad is strictly a one-drink-before-dinner man. I finally got the courage to speak to mother about it, and she said she could quit anytime, but I know she can't. She drinks alone and thinks no one knows it. I can't force my mother to go to a doctor, and I can't accuse my father of lying when he says she is "better." How can I help her, Abby?—HEARTBROKEN DAUGHTER

DEAR HEARTBROKEN: No one can overcome alcoholism unless he admits that he is powerless against drink. That is the first step in the Alcoholics Anonymous program. Your mother could possibly be helped by joining that group. It's worth a try.

It is a sad fact of life that no one can be helped who will not help himself. Another fine program I highly recommend is Women for Sobriety, Inc., P.O. Box 618, Quakertown, Pa. 18951. When writing, please enclose a stamped, long, self-addressed envelope since this is a non-profit organization.

DEAR ABBY: I've been going with Adam for two years, and I always thought his family liked me. Adam's brother is getting married next Sunday and Adam will be an usher in the wedding party. I am very upset because I wasn't invited to the wedding. Who does the inviting anyway?

Please answer soon as this has left me sleepless.—HURT

DEAR HURT: The bride and her family "does the inviting." But the groom and his family are also allowed to invite a certain number of guests.

If Adam had requested it, you probably would have been invited. But it's possible that they had to limit the number of guests, or maybe the ushers were asked to "escort" the bridesmaids, so Adam had a "duty" date. Ask him.

DEAR ABBY: If I don't get this off my chest, I'll burst. We have two sons. There are none better. Both are married and have lovely families.

When we go to their homes, it hurts when we don't see even one photograph of Dad and me in sight.

Our home is filled with pictures of our sons, their wives and children. Am I wrong to feel hurt?—HIDDEN

DEAR HIDDEN: No. Apparently your sons and their wives are not aware of your feelings. No harm in being honest. Mention it.

Fifth-graders present program to DAR chapter

Approximately 170 fifth grade students of Walter Nedd at Fannin Elementary School, members of the Junior American Citizens, presented the program for Col. Theunis Dey Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, in the school cafeteria.

This is the fourth year the JACs have performed for the chapter, which sponsors the program.

Dr. Robert Carter and Bertha Starks were special guests from the school administration. Mrs. Lawrence Brady is faculty advisor to JAC.

The JAC Clubs, sponsored by the chapter in other Midland schools, is an important program of the National Society, DAR. Boys and girls are taught loyalty and respect for the USA.

Awards received by the chapter at the Texas Society, NSDAR, state conference announced included certificates of merit for Constitution Week, outstanding achievement in conservation, Seimes Microfilm Center, 100 per cent DAR subscription and honorable mention for magazine advertising.

Mrs. Walter C. Hubbard III, TSDAR, resolutions chairman received two citations at the conference for serving as chairman of resolutions and regent of the chapter.

Mrs. Solon Crain, Mrs. John Butler, Mrs. Ben Black and Mrs. Clarence Kerth were the chapter's delegates to the conference. Also the chapter's state officers, Mrs. Hubbard and Mrs. George Van Husen, chairman of Division IX. Mrs. Crain was elected to the nominating committee

The chapter made monetary contributions to the landscaping funds of the new Girl Scout Little House and Midland Community Theatre, and it was announced harnesses for flag bearers Texas, DAR, state conference will be given in honor of the chapter's founding regent, Mrs. Butler. A monetary contribution will be made to the Midland County Public Library for the genealogical department fund.

The national defense chairman, Mrs. Van Husen, read some of the resolutions adopted at the DAR state conference.

The is scheduled for April 16 in Washington, D.C. Mrs. Hubbard will be the delegate.

Linda Ewan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Donald N. Ewan, was elected a new member. Her mother also is a member of the chapter.

Margaret Foster of Clinton, Iowa, DAR member and mother of Mrs. Richard Stump of the chapter, was a guest.

The next chapter meeting will be at 9:30 a.m. April 10 in the home of Mrs. Roy Davidson Jr., 1702 W. Storey St. Mrs. Richard L. Hughston will be the speaker.

Invention shown to Mensa group

Mike Craddock, Big Spring member of the Permian Basin Mensa, presented the program for the group in the home of Jim and June Stevens.

Craddock demonstrated his own invention, a silicon-dioxide filled lightning arrestor, which is an improvement over the old spark-gap type still widely employed. Using a high voltage generator with a DC rectifier and oscilloscope, he showed how his arrestor completely nullifies high and low power surges, thus protecting equipment on the same circuit from damage. Many of these arrestors are in use on Permian Basin oil leases.

Craddock also generated lightning strokes of a million and one-half volts with a Van de Graaf generator, giving members a graphic illustration of how lightning occurs in nature.

Membership in Mensa is open to anyone scoring in the upper 2 per cent of the general population on a standard IQ test. Additional information may be made by contacting 683-3296.

PTA gives membership

Parent-Teacher Association life memberships were awarded and new officers elected during a meeting of the Lamar Elementary PTA in the school cafeteria.

Receiving life memberships from Robert Milam, principal, were Chuck Redger, Mrs. Arlene Canales and Mrs. Pamela Carr.

New officers elected were Mrs. Larry Cummins, president; Mrs. Jerry Brown, first vice president; Mrs. David Caffey, second vice president; Mrs. Homer Garza, secretary, and Mrs. Bobby Williams, treasurer.

Plans were announced for a unit bake sale to be held Saturday in the Dellwood Plaza Mall.

GRAMMER-MURPHEY

Ruth Schwede thought losing 60 pounds would take a miracle, but it happened at Pat Walker's.

Although she weighed 175 pounds, Ruth Schwede had never really tried to lose weight. She knew she weighed too much, but it didn't really concern her...until the day her doctor told her that unless she began reducing immediately she would be risking serious illness.

Sixty extra pounds made Ruth Schwede look much older than her years.

Her health depended on her choice of a good weight loss plan. Because she's in her late sixties and had mild arthritis, strenuous exercise was out of the question and, of course, crash dieting was unwise, too.

When she heard about the Pat Walker's program, she thought it sounded like a sensible approach, one that might work. Still, losing 60 pounds seemed almost impossible.

She began with 3 thirty-minute sessions a week on the passive exercise unit, working gradually up to three hours a week. Always, her counselors were there to advise her about her eating habits, to chart her progress, and most of all, to encourage her.

Taking care of her health has brought amazing changes to Ruth Schwede's life. Not only has she gone from 175 pounds to 115, from a size 18 to a size 10—she's also begun to feel truly alive again.

As she says, with a smile, "Pat Walker's changed me from a fat, old woman to a vigorous new woman with an active business and social life! My friends and family say I look like I did 25 years ago!"

Her success story could easily be yours.

Tests attempt to recondition child's eating habits

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — It was snack time on a rainy morning in College Park. A 4-year-old, wearing a card with his name on it, stepped into a room and was confronted with a tray containing samples of six foods. In the background, women prepared other trays. In the foreground one researcher had a pencil poised while another asked questions.

"Ben, do you like chicken? Chili? Yogurt?"

Ben nodded yes to each question, though few of the other pre-schoolers were quizzed before or after him did. The questioning is part of an ambitious three-year experiment to see if it is possible to change the seemingly knee-jerk rejection of many healthful foods by children.

"An American child probably wouldn't taste a hot tamale," said Premala Brewster, a home economist working at the Center for Young Children at the University of Maryland. "But a Mexican child likes it. Eskimo children eat whale blubber, Japanese children eat raw fish. They eat these foods because they are presented to them from the time they are very young. They're used to them."

Familiarity may breed fondness for food by children, or at least temper rejection. Conditioning can lead to acceptance of nutritious foods traditionally assumed to be anathema to youthful diners. These are the theories behind the experiment Brewster and her colleagues are conducting.

The program is now in its second year. During the first year children 3 to 5 years old were given 2 1-2 months of nutrition education as part of a general pre-school program. The subjects were 31 fruits and vegetables. Pre-and post-testing showed "significant differences" in the youngsters' receptiveness to foods. At the end of the session, the children were much more receptive to spinach, Brussels sprouts and green peppers and accepted bean sprouts, a vegetable previously unfamiliar to most of them.

This year the focus is on protein foods.

"People didn't believe a 3-year-old could learn about nutrition," Brewster said. "Below grade 6 there's a vacuum in nutrition education, especially in pre-school. But we had some fantastic responses on attitude changes at home. Even if the children wouldn't eat certain foods, they weren't repeiled." To put it less academically, the children's chorus of yuks subsided.

About 65 children at the center are involved. A control group at another location is going through the pre-and post-testing exercises but does not receive the special training. Their test results "didn't change much" the first year, according to Brewster. A third group of children has been used in a parallel study involving junk foods.

Ben, the 4-year-old, was participating in the three days of pretesting before the protein education program began. Once he had said how he felt about the six foods, a portion of the tray was covered and he was asked to choose between two. This was repeated twice, with responses carefully recorded. Then Ben went off to another room where he sat at his own table (to avoid peer pressure and the possibility of food switching) and another researcher recorded how much of each food he ate and whether he wanted more.

In the three days he and the other children were exposed to as many as 18 foods in different combinations. When the session ends he and the others will repeat the tests, as will the control group.

The foods were selected after parents' responses to a questionnaire isolated some of the children's most and least popular foods. The most popular, hamburgers for instance, were eliminated. Milk, almost universally accepted, is served with the test foods as it is with ordinary snacks.

There are six categories in the protein testing: nuts, meat, fish, legumes and beans, cheese and yogurt, eggs. The emphasis is on "fresh" foods, according to Brewster. Processed foods that use artificial coloring or sugar as a lure, or that might be recognized from television advertising, were avoided.

In the weeks that follow, the children meet the test foods again in the classroom. Twice a week special lessons are given and reenforced on other days and during snack periods. Last year carrots, beets and turnips still buried in earth were brought to the children. They were pulled out, washed and prepared for cooking. Field trips, to an orchard and a bakery, were organized. The children heard stories about foods and became familiar with them through photographs and drawings.

The project was funded by the Maryland State Education Department, and there is some hope it will attract attention across the nation.

Miss Millican to wed Cary

LUBBOCK — Mr. and Mrs. J. Frank Millican of Lubbock announce the engagement of their daughter, Janet Beth, to Mark Wesley Cary, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Cary of 1423 Ventura St., Midland.

The wedding will be at 2 p.m. May 13 in home of the bridegroom-elect's parents.

Miss Millican attended Texas Tech University, where she was a member of the Texas Tech High Riders, spirit promotion organization. She is a teacher at Children's Learning Academy, Lubbock.

Cary is scheduled to graduate in August from Tech. He is a member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon (University of New Mexico Chapter) social fraternity and the Society for the Advancement of Management. He is to receive a degree in management and is employed by Cloth World, Lubbock.

HOROSCOPE

By CARROL RIGHTER

(Thurs., Mar. 16)

GENERAL TENDENCIES: New ideas are all right to look into now but don't expect one in a position of influence to give you the backing you wish. Make sure you study every phase of a condition facing you.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) One to whom you are obligated can keep you from gaining a goal now, so postpone your plans until a better time.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Obtain the data you need from the right sources early in the day. Come to a better understanding with family members.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) You can gain an aim that is important to you, but it entails much work at this time. Put those unused talents to work.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) You can gain much now by confering with one who is an expert in your field of endeavor. Sidestep a troublemaker.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Listen to what a good friend has to divulge to you that can be helpful but don't enter into an agreement that could be detrimental to you.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Take care of an important business matter early in the day for best results. Later contact good friends and plans social affairs wisely.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) You get a good idea that should be discussed with a higher-up, but don't let seeming disinterest discourage you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Find a better system for carrying through with your work so that it is better and brings in greater income. Be logical.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Be sure you understand what is expected of you by allies and then carry through in a positive fashion. Be wise.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Handle necessary tasks early in day so you will have time to make future plans with associates. Strive for greater success.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) You have a fine, creative idea that should be in operation as soon as possible for best results. Show affection for mate.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Put your talents to work and add to present security. Allow time to put you personal affairs in the right order.

Joggers find it difficult to keep running alone

By DAVID ZINMAN
Newsday

Does a jogging program change a person's lifestyle?

A recent study at Pennsylvania State University showed that in many cases it apparently does not. The problem is that once the jogger leaves a fitness program, it gets harder and harder to keep running alone.

Patricia C. MacKeen, a Penn State physiologist, did a follow-up study recently on a three-month exercise program for middle-age women. The women ran about 2 miles a day and did other conditioning acitivty in a gym five days each week. The program ended after 12 weeks, and they were on their own.

Eighteen months later, MacKeen said, the vast majority had regained all the weight they had shed. On the aveage, they also had lost 75 percent of the improvement they had made in physical work capacity (as measured by their performance on a treadmill).

The reason: of the 28 participants who were re-evaluated, just eight were still jogging. And only four of the eight were still jogging at the exercise program frequently.

The study raises a question about the longrange effects of community exercise programs -not just 18 months later, but 3, 5 or 10 years later. Exercise programs built around jogging or swimming activities have become incresingly popular. Colleges and universities, YMCAs and other private orgaizations conduct them.

Doctors have found that 12 weeks of exercise increases heart-lung efficiency and decreases the percentage of body fat. But a common problem is that most programs are limited to several weeks, or, at most, a season or a school term. Few follow-up studies have been done to see how many people actually maintain the exercise habit after the program has run its course.

Why do people quit? In the Penn State program, MacKeen said the reason the participants gave was that jogging conflicted with other personal priorities. But that may have been only a rationaliation because the 28 participants had put personal priorities aside during the three months exercise program.

"Many said it's more difficult to maintain a fitness program when you're on your own and not getting the group support and ledership of a formalized program," MacKeen said.

The implications of the study, she said, are that many people perhaps ought to try to stay in exercise programs and not assume that they can go out and do it on their own. Thought also should be given to other kinds of aerobic activities — like aerobic dance, swimming and bicycling — to give more variety to exercise programs. (Aerobic activities are long, continuous, endurance-type exercises that step up heart and lung activity but that are done at less than maximum intensity. In contrast, anaerobic activities, like sprinting, are carried out at all-out effort, and, because they incur severe oxygen debt, can be done only for short periods).

And, MacKeen said, research ought to be done to see how people can be successfully weaned away from programs. Perhaps, there should be more of a gradual withdrawal period. "It's fair to say that as things stand now, people getting into exercise programs should be aware that they are going to have a problem keeping it up — no mater how enthusiastic they are," MacKeen said.

Bamboo scaffolding puts steel to shame

By DEREK MAITLAND
Copley News Service

HONG KONG — They rarely fail to impress and fascinate visitors to Hong Kong — the "spidermen" of the territory's construction industry.

They're the men who weave vast webs of scaffolding around building projects here that range from 10-story apartment blocks to structures like the pride of Hong Kong Island's commercial district, the 52-story Connaught Centre, one of Asia's tallest buildings.

What makes their work fascinating, even alarming, is the scaffolding itself. It's made entirely of bamboo. Not only is it made of bamboo, it's also lashed together with thin bamboo strips called splits.

To the visiting Western builder or engineer whose own scaffolding has become a highly sophisticated science of steel tubing, supports, frames and bolted joints, the sight of a 30-story building swathed in frail-looking latticework of bamboo poles is often confused with technological backwardness...

"Well, I guess they've been doing it that way for hundreds of years. ..."

Certainly, for thousands of years, bamboo has reigned as possibly Asia's strongest, most durable and versatile natural material providing food, shelter, clothing, furniture, paper, medicine and the basis of a vast range of arts and crafts. And for the spidermen of Hong Kong — the craftsmen who work for the territory's 300 or so scaffolding subcontractors — bamboo has, on at least one latter-day occasion, put steel scaffolding completely to shame.

In 1964 two 25-story buildings in Hong Kong Island's central destrict, one with bamboo scaffolding and the other clad with steel, were exposed to a typhoon which blew in with winds howling up to 120 miles an hour. The typhoon tore away the steel scaffolding, causing considerable damage around the building, while the bamboo frame bent and swayed with the winds and withstood the storm.

So entrenched is the tradition of bamboo scaffolding, so skilled the men who erect the frameworks, that there are no rules in the territory's buildings ordinance specifically covering scaffolding..

The public works department, which administers the ordinance, accepts this time-tested tradition. The spidermen themselves know that one mistake can mean death — their own deaths.

"There are no rules that can really apply to bamboo scaffolding," says the department's principal government building surveyor, E.T. Kennard. "These men are the experts, after all, and they're working with traditional materials that have always proved reliable. It would be difficult, if not ridiculous, for example, to try to apply rigid specifications to the length or width of a bamboo lashing.

"The riggers know exactly what's needed to hold their structure together, and they're the last people on earth who'd want to take the risk of it falling apart."

Traditionally, bamboo has been not only trusted but also revered, even feared, in China and Japan for devine powers. It's also regarded as a symbol of uprightedness, chivalry and devotion for its ability to sway and bend with the wind, yet withstand the fiercest storms.

Botanically, it's classed as a member of the tropical tree-grass family and in Asia it grows both abundantly and in all shapes and sizes...

Russian barred from home

Newsday

LONG ISLAND CITY, N.Y. — Pyotr Grigorenko began life in the Ukraine, became a major general in the Soviet Army, won its highest decorations, then made the mistake of criticizing his government. Now, at age 70, he faces the prospect of living out the rest of his life here, in a four-room apartment in a strange land where he came for an operation.

Friday, Grigorenko learned that he had been stripped of his Soviet citizenship and barred from returning home. This gray, industrailized community in western Queens has become his Elba.

Monday, Grigorenko challenged the Soviet government to let him return to Moscow and be tried openly. "The burden of truth is on them," he said. "They won't give me an open trial because I have committed no crimes against my homeland." Soviet government spokesman could not be reached for comment Monday night.

This isn't the first time Grigorenko has been punished for his outspoken criticism of Soviet oppression of human rights. Since 1961, when he publicly criticized the late Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev, he has been demoted from general to private, ejected from the Communist Party and committed to a mental institution for five years. He also emerged as a leading Soviet dissident. And since Friday he has been a leading exile.

In a decree signed by Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev, the Supreme Soviet stripped Grigorenko, who had received five decorations including the Order of Lenin for his service in World War II, of his citizenship, declaring that he had undermined the prestige of the Soviet Union.

"I want the truth to be known," the rugged, six-foot Grigorenko said through an interpreter during an interview in the dining room of the neat apartment he is now sharing with his wife, Zinainda and one of his five sons, Oleg. Grigorenko, in a white shirt and tie, his bald pate gleaming under the overhead light, said he knew that if the Soviets did give him a trial it would not be a fair trial — that there was no such thing in the Soviet Union. But he said he would stand trial anyway.

"There is a Christian saying that says we are all going to the symbolic crucifixion," he said.

Girgorenko is a stolid, intense man who, despite his 70 years, looks fit enough to have just stepped out of a yogurt commercial. He said his disillusionment with the Soviet system began during World War II, when as a major, he criticized some tactical plans made by his superiors. "That almost got me killed," he said.

After that, he said, he realized that the system was dishonest and he spoke out from time to time. In 1961 he spoke out against what he saw as an evolving "cult" of Khrushchev and was shortly afterward demoted to private. He continued to speak out and was finally sent, without a charge or a trial, to a mental institution. Since his release he has been writing a book on Stalin's role in World War II. He came to the United States Nov. 30 for a prostate operation and to see his son, Andrew, a tall, thin bespectcled engineer who wmigrated from the Soviet Union in 1975. Andrew lives in a nearby apartment.

Like his father, the 32-year-old Andrew Grigorenko had been active in human rights causes — freedom of speech, freedom for Soviet Jews to emigrate. And for his activities, he said, the Soviet government offered the young man the option of leaving and giving up his citizenship or of being incarcerated, as his father had been, in a mental institution.

"There are some in the human rights movement that do emigrate when they have had enough of the suffering," the elder Grigorenko said, "I am one that has not reached that limit yet. We are willing to stand up and fight to change the government. We can still live there if they will let us go back."

Grigorenko said he and his wife were surprised by last Friday's decree by the Supreme Soviet. He said they had been deliberately keeping a low profile since they arrived here Nov. 30, that they had refused to give interviews about the human rights movement in the Soviet Union and that they had made no public appearences for fear it might jeopardize their return.

Grigorenko was granted a six-month visa when he left the Soviet Union. He said Monday he now thinks 5 government granted the visa with the intention of getting him out of the country for good.

He and his wife, whose citizenship has not been taken away, were visibly saddened at the prospect of never seeing their relatives and friends and never being able to continue their efforts to oppose what they view as totalitarian excesses in the Soviet Union.

"Friends are what we miss the most," Mrs. Grigorenko said through an interpretator.

Teachers to attend 99th state convention

Eleven Midland educators are planning to attend the 99th state convention of the Texas State Teachers Association to be held Thursday through Saturday at the Dallas Memorial Convention Center.

Some of the Midland educators will be voting representatives to the 1978 TSTA House of Delegates. This official governing body will meet during the convention to act on proposed amendments to the TSTA constitution and to consider committee reports, resolutions and other business.

The Midland delegation will include Billy Gilbreath, Mae Beth Tyron, Francine Weaver, Rose Shamblin, Raymond Painter and Beverly Holmes. Also attending the convention will be Jim Leeper, Printus Burkhart, Bertha Stark, Olessie Moore and James Bradford.

Race incident recalled by erstwhile Plains minister

By NANCY COLLINS
The Washington Post

In 1965 the deacons of the Plains Baptist Church — Jimmy Carter's church — voted to bar from its membership "Negroes and any other civil rights agitators." Carter and his family opposed the resolution, but to no avail.

Eleven years later — and one week before the 1976 presidential election — that near-forgotten resolution catapulted the Plains Baptist Church and its young minister, 30-year-old Rev. Bruce Edwards, into the national spotlight. That was the moment a black minister from Albany, Ga., the Rev. Clennon King, chose to integrate the church, but was barred when parishioners invoked the '65 resolution.

Despite efforts by Carter and Edwards, the bar to King stood and the bitter fallout from the incident eventually split the congregation and forced Edwards to resign.

Today Bruce Edwards is about as far away from Plains and publicity as he can get. Last July, after one more effort to rehire him in Plains failed, Edwards moved his wife and two children (one is adopted half-Polynesian boy) to the Makakilo Baptist Church in Makakilo, Hawaii, population 5,000.

Edwards says he loves his post as pastor for the racially mixed congregation of 100. But as he speaks on a recent trans-Pacific phone call, it is clear that Plains, Ga., is still very much on his mind.

"The thing that disturbed me most about the whole thing," says Edwards, "is that it thrust the black-white issue into the foreground in my life. I am a spokesman for God, not civil rights. If I say something about civil rights it must come from a theological standpoint, not a political one. I am not a politician."

Of course, when you're a Baptist minister in Georgia who happens to have a parishioner named Jimmy Carter, religion turns into politics. Which, Edwards says, is what happened when the Rev. King came to him a week before the presidential election seeking admission to the Plains Baptist Church.

"In my opinion, King's move was very carefully, very skillfully planned ahead of time as a political move. It was meant all along to take advantage of racial attitudes in Plains and hurt Jimmy Carter.

"When King first came to me I talked with him and told him I would be willing to help him join our church. But I pointed out that his chance of acceptance would improve if he waited one week, until after the election.

"He refused. And I can only tell you that the Republican committee had telephones ready to go as soon as King walked in the church."

Nevertheless, Edwards and Carter backed King, especially after the old '65 resolution was dusted off and trotted out by the deacons. Edwards says when he took the position at the church he didn't know the resolution existed.

Following Carter's election, the president joined with Edwards to overturn the '65 resolution even though King's application was eventually turned down by the church. However, sentiment still ran strong an in February at a church meeting ostensibly called for other purposes Edwards got the ax.

"I did not expect to be fired," Edwards recalls. "There was no advance notice; no charges brought against me. A special church meeting had been called after services and suddenly in walked a whole lot of people I had never seen before."

As Edwards explains it, two weeks before the meeting the church rolls had mysteriously disappeared. On the rolls were the names of 400 parishioners, even though the regular congregation numbered only about 200. But that day in Plains, the church was filled with people who, although technically members, hadn't set foot in the door for years.

"An hour into the meeting I turned to my wife and said, 'It's over. We might as well resign.' They had won."

Even now Edwards will not characterize Plains as racist. "There is a group that is," he says carefully. "And they have a great deal of influence on the community."

When the pro-Carter-Edwards forces eventually split to form their own new church — the Maranatha Baptist — Edwards declined an offer to lead the new congregation. "I didn't want the church to be viewed as pro-Edwards or pro-Carter."

Edwards chose the Hawaii assignment because "it was a relatively new church. Not steeped in tradition."

Yet even Hawaii didn't keep the Rev. King away.

"Just before I came here," says Edwards, "King arrived at my new church. He tried to claim I was the one who kept him out of the Plains Baptist Church."

But when Edwards arrived in Hawaii himself, he was met at the airport by 60 parishioners in a solid display of support.

Although Carter and Edwards have not been in touch lately, Edwards is still very much in the Carter camp.

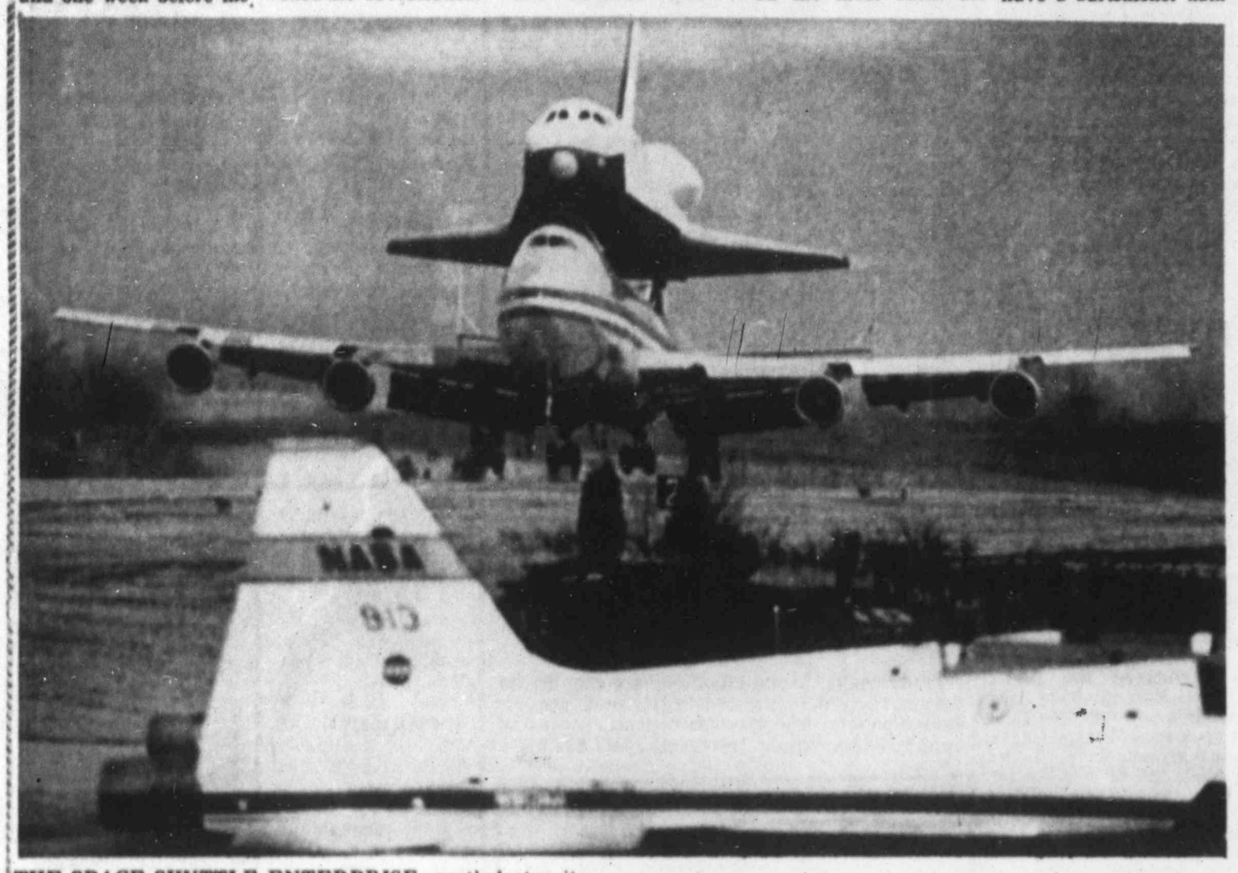

"A lot of people were critical of Carter during that time in Plains, but his Christian faith is a very personal thing. I didn't want to see that exploited."

Edwards insists he is not bitter about the Plains experience.

In fact, perhaps predictably, he confessed he is working on a book about it for Simon and Schuster, due out this year.

"I'm convinced it had to happen eventually in Plains," muses Edwards. "And I felt I did the right thing under the circumstances. And anything God is involved in has to have some good in it.

"Besides, it caused a whole lot of people to get hold of themselves. Including my own family — my wife and I are a lot closer having been through it together."

Rooney calling it quits?

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Is Mickey Rooney finally calling it quits after 50 years in show business?

Rooney says yes. His agent says no.

"I'm going to bring down the curtain," Rooney said Tuesday in an interivew on NBC's "Tomorrow" show. "As soon as I finish a movie I'm working on now, I'm going to devote all my time to marketing a self-study acting course I've been working on for 15 years."

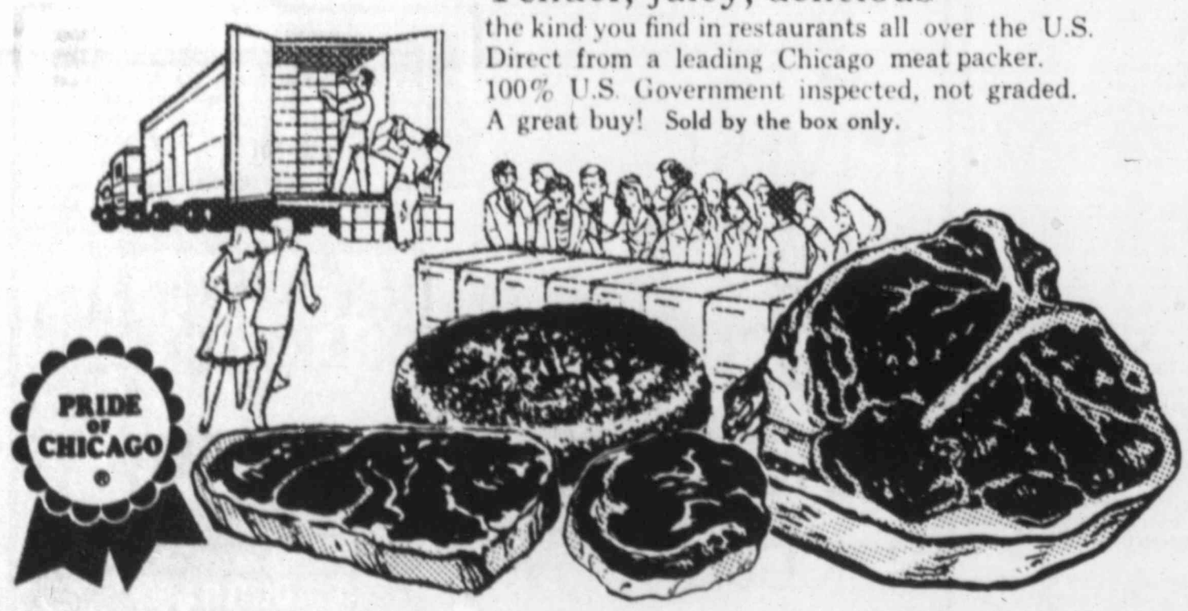

The Oscar-winning actor could not be reached later for elaboration, but his press agent, Dick Gutman, said it's nothing new for Rooney, 57, to announce plans to stop acting only to change his mind later.

Family gets involved totally in TV comedy

By DON SHIRLEY
The Washington Post

LOS ANGELES — America — without quite knowing it — watches them at work from 8 to 9 (EST) every Tuesday evening. They're the Marshalls, and their work — "Happy Days" and "Laverne and Shirley" — resembles a filtered version of their lives. They're television's First Family, and these are the Marshall Chronicles.

Meet father Tony, mother Marjorie, son Garry and daughters Ronny and Penny. America's two most popular TV series are their babies. "Happy Days," home of Fonzie and the Cunninghams, placed first in the ratings last season and ranks second this year. It was pushed out of first place by its own spinoff, "Laverne and Shirley" — America's weekly fling with two brewery bottle-cappers in Milwaukee circa 1960.

So far this season, an average of half the homes watching television on Tuesdays have tuned in to the Marshall duo.

Not since the Nelsons has one family affected so many televised fantasies. Unlike the Nelsons, only one of the Marshalls — Penny — actually is on the screen. She plays Laverne. But her brother Garry is the real boss. He was the most active partner in the creation of both shows and remains more responsible for them than anyone else.

As co-executive producer of the shows, Garry hired Tony as a producer, Penny as a star and Ronny as a casting director and associate producer. He uses his own children in one "Happy Days" each year and his dogs in the credits for "Laverne and Shirley."

Have we left anyone out? We certainly have. Over all of this, mother Marjorie Marshall watches with an eagle-eye. This TV juggernaut is just a shuffle and a slide away from her two-bit dancing school (literally two bits a lesson) in the Bronx.

Marjorie Marshall sat front and center at a dress rehearsal of "Laverne and Shirley." She was surrounded by the very young, who are allowed to watch this particular session each week without older guardians in tow. Occasionally she threw a dirty look at the noisier youngsters. Occasionally she issued her own comments on the proceedings. There's "too much of a sameness" about this show, she volunteered. She pointed out her son, the boss, and grinned. "You know," she said, "my son did all this for the money."

Still, she smiled and waved when she was introduced to the audience. And she seemed to appreciate it when Garry approached her and warned that Penny would take a big fall in this episode. Sure enough, Penny took a spectacular stumble down a ramp. The crowd roared, and Marjorie Marshall joined in. But then she muttered quietly: "Some time something's going to hurt her."

The Marhsalls are troupers and it was their mother who trained them to be that way. Marjorie Ward was already teaching dancing when she was barely a teen-ager, and Tony Marshall says she was attracted to him in high school "because she thought I was a good dancer."

It's hard to imagine Tony tripping the light fantastic with Marjorie.

He spent most of his career in advertising, most often as a maker of industrial films. He maintains meticulous files on his children's accomplishments and he wears a prim dark suit to his office on the Paramount lot. His dignified presence seems a bit out of place — "we shoot holes in dignity," points out his son. But Garry values Tony's service. "I spend money and he saves it."

The stately executive and the madcap dancing teacher were married in 1931. Garry was born three years later, Ronny arrived four years after Garry, and Penny six years after Ronny.

The children weren't as quick on their feet as Mom. Garry was "a klutz," he recalls, and wound up playing drums for the Marjorie Ward Kiddie Revue. His other teen activities included the Bronx Falcons — "a group disbanded by New York Police in 1951," notes his official bio — for which Garry used the name Gino Marscharelli (the last name was Tony's father's when he immigrated to America). "Happy Days" is a sanitized, Midwestern version of his teen years, he says, and Fonzie is drawn from several friends, particularly the one with the motorcycle.

Neither of the girls was Miss Twinkletoes, but they kept dancing. Their mother would take her troupe into a show at the slightest excuse — "if a stranger on the subway asked her," says Garry. Once they did the Gleason show.

On rainy Wednesdays Mom would pull her brood out of school and herd them into Broadway matinees. They would take a lunch and sit in the balcony. Penny remembers "the tuna reeking through the theater during 'The Miracle Worker.'" Usually they would stick to comedies and musicals. Mom didn't like anything heavier unless children were involved, as in "The Miracle Worker."

Her two eldest went to Northwestern — Garry in journalism and Ronny in radio-TV. Then Garry worked for the Army and the New York Daily News, and Ronny for the Nielsen ratings service and the Screen Actors Guild.

Garry broke into the bigtime as a gag writer for Jack Paar and Joey Bishop. This led to a writing partnership with Jerry Belson, churning out scripts for the Danny Thomas, Lucy and Dick Van Dyke shows. Like most TV writers, Marshall wanted to produce. But a vet endowed him with these words of wisdom: "Every Lucy show you write is an insurance policy for your kids' education," he was told. This has been literally true, he reports.

Finally, however, Marshall and Belson sold a series, "Hey, Landlord." It lasted a year. "Me and the Chimp," one of TV's most scorned flops, didn't even last that long. But it was worth the humiliation, for it was Marshall's first collaboration with Fred Silverman, then at CBS. Later they would create "Laverne and Shirley." And less happily, "Blansky's Beauties."

Marshall and Belson finally made it big with "The Odd Couple," which lasted five years. The series also introduced Penny Marshall to the world.

Tentative pact reached in suit

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A tentative settlement has been reached in a $1,025,000 invasion of privacy suit filed by Texas Ranger Ramiro Martinez against Metro Golden Mayer Inc. and the National Broadcasting Co., the Austin American-Statesman said Tuesday.

Martinez was one of two Austin police officers who stormed the University of Texas tower and killed sniper Charles Whitman Aug. 1, 1966. The suit was filed in federal court in Laredo after NBC aired a made-fortelevision movie called "The Deadly Tower."

The American-Statesman quoted Martinez' lawyer, Donato Ramos of Laredo, as saying the negotiated settlement will be discussed Wednesday with U.S. District Judge Robert O'Connor Jr. in Laredo.

Martinez now is a Texas Ranger stationed in New Braunfels.

Originally filed as a breach of contract suit it was later amended as an invasion of privacy suit.

"He (Martinez) had an oral contract with MGM that they could use his name and he would assist with information only if the movie was based on fact, not fiction," Ramos said. "But his private life was disclosed and that was unauthorized."

He said if the settlement is approved one stipulation would be that certain parts of the movie will be changed. He would not say whether a cash settlement was involved.

Fans brand John Wayne as 'liberal'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — John Wayne has spent a lifetime building an image as America's consummate tough-guy superpatriot, the on-and off-screen idol of those who wear their loyalty on their sleeves.

But now Wayne is being blasted as a closet liberal by some of his conservative fans who think the Duke has gone haywire on the issue of the Panama Canal.

"People started sending me letters that I'd fallen off my horse too many times, that I'd been bounced on my head as a baby," Wayne says.

What caused Wayne problems with part of his usually adoring public was word that he was in favor of the Panama Canal treaties, which would eventually turn control of the Canal Zone over to Panama. To some folks, the Duke might as well have donned a black hat and joined up with the rustlers.

Actually, Wayne had only sent a telegram to Panama's political boss, Gen. Omar Torrijos, offering "best wishes for a good relationship between our countries." But when the mail started pouring in, Wayne studied the proposed treaties and became an articulate supporter of the pact, hoping to enlist some fellow conservatives to its cause.

Most people "now respect my position," Wayne said in an interview Monday, "but there's a certain little group that continues to ride me. I try to answer them but they keep sending me these maniacal statements."

Wayne said that through business investments and personal relationships, "I've known these people (Panamanians) for 40 years." In Panama, he says, it is the leftists who are against the proposed treaties.

"I think there are points in the treaty that make it worthy of the conservatives' backing," Wayne says.

City honors Tex Ritter

NEDERLAND, Texas (AP) — The late country and western singing star Tex Ritter was honored Tuesday by this Southeast Texas city where he attended school when a downtown park was dedicated in his honor.

Ritter, who died in 1974, was born in Panola County and attended the University of Texas at Austin before breaking into show business by singing Cowboy ballads on a Houston radio station.

Ken Ritter, a nephew of the singing star and now mayor of nearby Beaumont, was scheduled to deliver an address at the dedication.

The entertainer, who was voted into the Country Music Hall of Fame, is buried in nearby Port Neches.

Drink to me only with thine eyes

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

RIDGEFIELD, Conn. (AP) — The consumption of strong spirits and the moral implications thereof have been much in the news of late, what with the presidential assault on the three-martini lunch and White House denials of a story that a key staff member disposed of a toddy down the bodice of a female taxpayer.

In the same week that all this was coming to pass a friend asked me if I would like to contribute to a home recently established for alcoholic nuns. At first I thought it was a joke, and a terribly bad one, but it turned out he was deadly serious and sincere in his fund raising.

It seems that in some of the more liberated convents across the land, and for all I know abroad, too, the community life style under the new rule includes a cocktail hour. Sadly, some problem drinkers already have cropped up in the ranks of the sisterhood.

All of this probably would not have come as a shock to St. Benedict, the sixth century abbot of Monte Cassino, who founded Western monasticism and wrote a very tough rule of life for members of religious orders. St. Benedict's Rule, however, did not deter his followers in France 1,000 years later from concocting an excellent liqueur called benedictine in the cellar of one monastery and another called chartreuse at a separate monastic distillery, both containing more than 50 per cent alcohol.

So perhaps even at the end of the Dark Ages, there was an Abbot James preaching the evils and inequities of the three-benedictine collation in the refectory while his Brother William went about peddling the stuff wholesale.

And back then, as now, people of a reform turn of mind were going around saying that there was entirely too much drinking going on in the world. They were saying it long before the Anti-Saloon League went around banging on the doors of America's quaffitoriums with fire axes.

In Samuel Johnson's day, London had no swinging singles bars for off-duty members of the establishment to douse drinks down the decolletages of the citizenry. But, by actual count of the Lord Mayor's census in 1778, the city did have 447 taverns, 207 inns, 5,875 beer halls and 8,659 brandy shops.

Even so, Dr. Johnson thought there was less drinking going on than when he was a boy and "all decent people in Litchfield got drunk every night and were not the worse thought of."

Besides, George III was busy losing the American colonies about then and people on that side of the ocean probably thought they had reason enough to drink. The price was right, anyway. A pub on Bow Street had a sign "here you may get drunk for a penny, dead drunk for two pence, and get a straw for nothing."

So who worried about deducting it from their income tax? Certainly not Horace Walpole, a keen chronicler of those times, who reported on one business lunch in which he and his tablemates "drank 32 bottles of wine and finished the entertainment by pelting the mob in Pall Mall with bottles and glasses."

It will be recalled that the Charles Townshend who introduced the Stamp Act that led to the Boston Tea Party had the nickname of "Champagne Charlie" because of his drinking habits in government circles, so gossip about administration figures was part of the American experience even before the Revolution.

However, Georgian drinking habits in the great houses of the day rarely inspired the Upstairs-Downstairs class jealousies of the later Victorian Age or even the scandal-mongering so in vogue in Washington today, because, as another chronicler explained, "it was then considered common etiquette for the visiting servants to be made as drunk as their masters."

Strong waters have always had their strong defenders throughout history, particularly among the poets who often have been very hard on ordinary water.

"No poems can please or live long which are written by water-drinkers," wrote the poet Horace in 65 B.C., anticipating W. C. Fields by a few millennia.

H. L. Mencken, a three-martini man, put it even stronger: "All the great villainies of history from the murder of Abel onward have been perpetrated by sober men, and chiefly teetotallers. But all the charming and beautiful things from the Song of Songs to bouillabaisse, and from the nine Beethoven symphonies to the martini cocktail, have been given to humanity by men who, when the hour came, turned from tap water to something with color in it, and more in it than mere oxygen and hydrogen."

Or as a tax lawyer told me in the station bar the other night, trying to be impartial about it all, "I don't care what they say about this fellow Carter, I still like him, even if his brother is president."

Expressway named for Martha Mitchell

PINE BLUFF, Ark. (AP) — A stretch of U.S. 65 Expressway that runs from the western to the eastern city limits has been renamed after one of Pine Bluff's favorite daughters — Martha Mitchell.

The City Council on Monday night approved the name change by adopting a resolution drafted by the Southeast Arkansas Jaycees.

Jim Burns, president of the Jaycees, said the highway will be known as the Martha Mitchell Expressway.

One of the reasons for wanting the name change was the affection Pine Bluff residents felt for the late Mrs. Mitchell, who was born in Pine Bluff, and the affection she had for her hometown, Burns said.

The resolution said Mrs. Mitchell "will be remembered by future generations as a person whose actions were historically significant."

It says she deserved recognition because of "her courage and integrity for speaking out for the things she believed in in the face of adverse reaction and even public ridicule."

Mrs. Mitchell was separated from her former husband, former U.S. Attorney General John Mitchell in 1973. She died in 1976. She became well known for her outspoken comments about the Nixon Administration during the Watergate scandal.

"We felt Mrs. Mitchell had shown character by standing up for what she knew was right. A person with that strength of character deserves to be honored," Burns said.

Pothole fixers all set

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — Some 500 men and women who normally design new highways will be pushing asphalt instead of pencils in a stepped up battle against potholes on Pennsylvania's battered roads.

Most of the white collar workers who volunteered to join regular road crews filling the holes were among 1,105 employes who had been threatened with layoffs because of a budget crunch in the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation.

Gov. Milton Shapp canceled the planned March 1 layoffs under legislative pressure. Although it was not clear whether the pothole program was an offshoot of the layoff cancellation, the legislature agreed quickly Monday to shift $10 million to the road maintenance fund to pay for pothole repairs.

Shapp called the extra money "an emergency shot in the arm."

"I think it's a great gesture on their (the employees') part and on the department's capacity to get more people out to fill potholes," said Lt. Gov. Ernest Kline, who announced plans for the pothole offensive. "I thought it was silly for PennDOT to be laying off people with all those potholes to be filled."

Eileen Carroll, a typist in the transportation department's Philadelphia office, was among the handful of pothole volunteers not in the design department where the cutbacks had been planned.

"I think it would be a change," she said. "They explained in a meeting they didn't want to discriminate and would offer the job to women. I was thinking maybe I'd lose some weight. From what I understand it will be hard work."

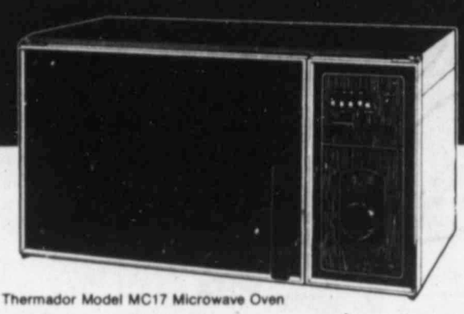

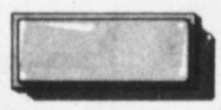

Most of the volunteers have been working on designing construction projects, which for the most part were halted last June for lack of money. The design division employees who did not volunteer for pothole duty will work on design projects which are continuing for safety reasons.

The American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees agreed to have white collar workers step from behind the drawing board to trudge along the highways doing maintenance work.
