Talks bring no end to impasse

Clinton, Republicans won't meet again for a week

■ Congress blunts some shutdown edges with legislation to get benefit checks moving.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton and his chief Republican adversaries discussed their budget clash eye-to-eye at the White House Friday, and reported making progress. But all they acknowledged agreeing on was to meet again next Friday.

As a result, there was no end in sight to the week-long federal shutdown. Congress sought to blunt some of its sharpest edges, shipping Clinton legislation that would get benefit checks moving to veterans and many poor people on welfare.

And with that, most lawmakers prepared to leave town for a curtailed Christmas recess, with no votes expected until at least next Wednesday.

Participants, speaking on condition of anonymity, said no new offers were presented in the discussions Friday, but that the tone was positive. Staff aides were told to list options for finding savings in Medicare, Medicaid and other major programs that negotiators could consider in meetings next Friday.

"Things are going well," House Majority Leader Dick Armey, R-Texas, said in the House chamber after the longer than two-hour White House session involving Clin-

Soup kitchen's celebration reflects holiday spirit of entire community

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Blessings of compassion and sharing during the Christmas season took hold of the Midland Soup Kitchen Ministry at noon on Friday.

It was then, on a cold, overcast day, when spirits brightened and about a thousand people — grown-ups, youths and, especially, children — sauntered into the friendly soup line and signed up to eat, to fellowship and to celebrate the Yuletide.

The ticket to the event was just showing up.

"It's wonderful. I have never seen so many people," exclaimed Mary Rendon. "It's beautiful. I'm just blessed by it."

Early morning shooting marks Midland's ninth homicide in '95

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Midland's ninth homicide of 1995, and the fifth slaying by gunfire, occurred about 1:30 a.m. Friday when 44-year-old Wanda Randolph of Midland was fatally shot during an alleged struggle between her and her husband in their southeast Midland home.

"Preliminary investigation indicates that this was a domestic dispute that started when Mrs. Randolph came home late and was confronted by her husband," according to Midland Police Department spokesman Sgt. David Garcia. "At that point, the argument escalated into deadly violence."

'Preliminary investigation indicates that this was a domestic dispute ... .'

— Sgt. David Garcia, Midland Police Department

Daniel Randolph Jr., 40, was subsequently charged with murder and booked into the Midland County Detention Center.

Garcia said that Mrs. Randolph was shot one time in the head with a .45-caliber Colt semi-automatic pistol and died in Midland's Memorial Hospital and Medical Center. She was pronounced dead by Justice of the Peace Keith Jobe.

Randolph told police that the firearm accidentally discharged in a struggle for the weapon after he had confronted his wife for returning home late, Garcia said.

The shooting occurred at 302 S. Adams St., he said.

The year's ninth homicide in Midland was the fifth by gunfire, although one death involved both stabbing and shooting, Garcia noted.

He said that eight of the nine deaths have been solved, mostly through

Investigators find black box from crashed American flight

BUGA, Colombia (AP) — Amid a field of bodies — some still strapped in their seats — and wreckage hanging from trees, investigators found a flight recorder Friday that they hope will explain why an American Airlines jet flew off course and crashed into a mountain with 164 people aboard.

Four people, all Americans or people living in America, survived the Wednesday night crash 40 miles from Cali, Colombia's second-largest city.

State Department spokesman Nicholas Burns said at least 48 of the people on the flight were U.S. citizens, but determining the precise number was difficult because many passengers were dual nationals.

The crash was the deadliest involving a U.S. airliner since a Pan Am flight went down over Lockerbie, Scotland, on Dec. 21, 1988. That crash, blamed on terrorists, killed 270 people.

In Cali, the family of two survivors, Gonzalo Dussan Monroy and his daughter, Michelle, called area hospitals and aid agencies, seeking word on the fate of Dussan's wife, Nancy, and son Gonzalo Jr. The Red Cross initially said the family of four from Somerville, N.J., had survived, but on Friday there was no word on Nancy and Gonzalo Jr.

"We hope that they're still alive," said Vilma Rodriguez, a sister-in-law of Dussan. "We don't know anything about (what happened to) them."

Area unemployment figures drop slightly in November

By Melia McEwen
Staff Writer

Unemployment in Midland-Odessa continues to improve as 1995 draws to a close.

The unemployment rate for the Odessa-Midland metropolitan statistical area (MSA) dipped to 5.8 percent in November from October's 6 percent, according to statistics released Friday by the Texas Employment Commission. A year ago the rate was 6.3 percent.

The unemployment rate for the city of Midland also continued to improve, dropping to 4.5 percent from 4.7 percent in October. The rate was 5 percent a year earlier.

The Odessa-Midland civilian labor force numbered 120,600 in November, up from 120,100 in October and well above 119,700 employed last year.

In Midland, the civilian labor force numbered 49,942, up more than 200 from 49,716 in October and up from 49,569 in November 1994.

Of those in the MSA's labor force, 113,600 were employed, up 700 from 112,900 in October and up 1,400 from 112,200 in 1994. That dropped the number of unemployed residents to 7,000 from 7,200 in October; a year ago 7,500 were unemployed.

There were 47,674 Midlanders employed, up from 47,370 in October and from 47,114 last year. The number of unemployed Midlanders fell to 2,268 from 2,346 in October and is below the 2,455 unemployed last year.

Yasser Arafat's wife ushers in Christmas in Palestinian Bethlehem

BETHLEHEM, West Bank (AP) — As thousands danced and cheered, Yasser Arafat's wife lit the Christmas tree in Manger Square on Friday, ushering in Bethlehem's first Christmas under Palestinian rule.

"We are very proud to finally be in liberated Bethlehem, the home of Christ," said Soha Arafat, a Christian, flipping the switch that set a 30-foot pine aglow with red, green and yellow lights.

She held up for the crowd her five-month-old daughter Zahwa, decked out in a pink-and-white snowsuit topped with a fluffy white pompom.

Arriving in Bethlehem the day after Israeli troops pulled out of the city, Mrs. Arafat was welcomed by a crowd of celebrators, who danced, sang and milled cheerfully in the square, where the Palestinian flag and pictures of Arafat hung alongside Christmas decorations.

Thousands pressed into the small plaza outside the Church of the Nativity — built over the grotto where tradition says Jesus was born under a shining star — to watch Mrs. Arafat and her young child launch the holiday celebrations.

A Palestinian policeman sitting on the shoulders of a dancing man raised his Kalashnikov assault rifle in joy. One woman, clapping and cheering, grabbed the red beret of a police officer and placed it over her white head scarf.

Arafat himself plans to address the crowds Christmas Eve from the roof of the church.

"We are very happy today," said Victoria Freij, wife of the city's Palestinian mayor of 23 years. "We have freedom, happiness. You see how very happy the people are."

The Israeli pullout Thursday ended almost 28 years of Israeli rule in the West Bank town, just five miles south of Jerusalem, which Israel occupied following the 1967 Israel-Arab war. The troops were replaced with 850 Palestinian policemen.

"It is the moment we have waited for since 1967," said Joma Yussuf, 25, a computer student at Bethlehem University. "Two days ago, the occupation was here, but under our own forces we have freedom."

Earlier, French Foreign Minister Herve de Charette saluted the crowd from a balcony overlooking the square, his palms pressed together in a salute of peace.

"I share the Palestinians' happiness," said de Charette, the first foreign leader to visit Bethlehem under PLO rule.

De Charette plans to call on PLO headquarters in Jerusalem over the weekend. In the past, Israelis have opposed that kind of visit as lending legitimacy to Palestinian claims to the city, but Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres seemed resigned Friday.

"The question is whether it is worthwhile making an issue out of it for our dignity. What for?" Peres asked.

For his part, normally conciliatory Bethlehem Mayor Elias Freij suggested that Israeli officials were not welcome to attend the celebrations in his town.

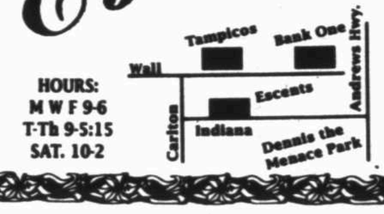

"For 28 years, Israelis were represented here by their military governors. Maybe in three years we'll invite them," said Freij, whose town has 35,000 Muslims and 15,000 Christians.

Freij, a Greek Orthodox Christian, said no heads of state — except Arafat — were invited to the Christmas festivities.

Cloudy skies to cover Midland

Staff Report

The snow-threatening weather may just back off and give way to a partly-cloudy sky with not even a hint for a snow-graced Christmas come Monday.

But for today, the weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport is calling for a mostly cloudy sky, a high temperature near 40 degrees, and southeasterly winds at 5 to 10 mph.

For tonight, the weatherman is predicting a partly-cloudy sky and a low temperature between 20 and 25 degrees.

Sunday's offering is to be more of that cloudy sky and a high temperature between 45 and 50 degrees.

Christmas day's weather is to be somewhat cloudy. The nighttime low temperature is to be between 20 and 25 degrees, and the daytime high temperature is to be near 50 degrees.

Friday's peak temperature was 38 degrees, and the overnight low temperature was 30 degrees.

The record high reading for Dec. 22 is 79 degrees in 1933. The record low temperature for the date is 4 degrees in 1989.

STATE

Texas had a chilly first day of winter Friday, but most parts of the state escaped the snow featured in forecasts over much of the northern half of the state.

Winter began at 2:17 a.m. CST Friday.

High pressure continued to build southward into North Texas during the afternoon. However, cloudy skies persisted over much of the state.

The overcast skies and north to northeasterly winds around 5 to 15 mph kept temperatures cool over the state. Afternoon readings ranged from 27 at Amarillo and Guadalupe Pass, 34 in Abilene, 51 in Lufkin and 55 in Harlingen in Kingsville.

The North Texas outlook called for partly cloudy and continued cool today. Highs from 38 west to 45 southeast. Skies will be partly cloudy tonight and Sunday, with warmer temperatures Sunday. Lows from 24 to 30. Highs from 48 to 54.

In West Texas, skies will remain mostly cloudy today, becoming partly to mostly sunny by Sunday. Highs from the low 30s in the Panhandle to the mid-50s in the Presidio Valley. Lows today night near 10 in the Panhandle to the 30s in the Big Bend. Highs Sunday from the mid-30s in the Panhandle and mountains to near 60 in the Big Bend.

NATION

Winter arrived with a whimper Friday, scattering light snow from the lower Great Lakes into northern New England. Snow fell as far south as Texas, Arkansas and Louisiana, but there was less than an inch in most areas.

Rain fell along the coast of Northern California, and a low pressure system in the Gulf of Mexico spread rain from South Texas into Florida. Galveston, Victoria and Palacios, Texas, had up to an inch.

Friday marked the winter solstice, the official start of winter, meaning that days will slowly grow longer and nights shorter.

Up to 2 inches of snow was expected in parts of Maine, and scattered snow showers were reported across the Plains. Freezing drizzle snarled traffic in southern Minnesota.

Light snow showers were scattered widely throughout the Rockies, and up to 2 inches of snow fell overnight around Denver.

Light snow was forecast for the lower Great Lakes and central Appalachians, with additional snow showers from the central and southern Rockies into the Plains and as far south as the lower Mississippi Valley.

TALKS: Clinton, Republicans meet; shutdown continues

ton; House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga.; Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan.; and other congressional leaders and administration officials. "I think there is a very healthy rapport being established."

But Armey also warned of lengthy negotiations ahead, saying, "We don't necessarily expect them to be completed soon."

A written statement from Clinton and the bipartisan leaders was equally vague. It described "good meetings" and said staff would "clarify options" so congressional budget writers and White House aides could meet next week, followed by another session between Clinton and the Republican leaders.

Asked if this schedule meant the partial shutdown of federal agencies would continue, House Minority Leader Dick Gephardt, D-Mo., said, "That seems to be the Republican majority's choice."

With negotiations more than a month old, there was agreement that the budget should be balanced by 2002 but wide gulfs over how to do it. The most intractable conflicts were over GOP proposals to scoop deeper savings out of Medicare, Medicaid, welfare and other domestic programs than Clinton wants, and a Republican tax cut proposal far bigger than the president's.

The continuing stalemate pushed the partial shutdown of nine Cabinet departments and many other agencies whose budget bills were incomplete into its seventh day. As a result, 260,000 federal workers remained at home — about one-third the number idled during the six-day shutdown last month. They are expected to be paid later for their missed work time.

But with Christmas just three days away, lawmakers seemed eager to avoid being blamed for imposing suffering on some of America's most vulnerable — or politically active — citizens.

To accomplish that, the House and Senate used voice votes to approve a bill letting benefit checks be mailed to 3.3 million veterans and their dependents; to 13 million welfare recipients under Aid to Families With Dependent Children; and for adoption and foster care.

The measure, which would be in effect through Jan. 3, would also let the District of Columbia spend local funds to keep its government running, but would withhold any federal aid. Clinton was expected to sign it.

In addition, the Senate by voice approved legislation proposed by Dole that would let furloughed federal employees return to work, since they are being paid anyway. Their agencies, however, would remain unable to spend money for other purposes, such as providing aid to state and local governments for various programs.

Unlike the more combative Gingrich, Dole has repeatedly said he is uneasy keeping parts of the government closed. The House could consider the measure next week.

To no avail, Democrats begged Republicans to halt the shutdown.

"This shutdown of government is unnecessary," said Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass. "This hostage-taking is unnecessary."

But Republicans, especially those in the House, said they were determined to keep the shutdown going until a budget-balancing deal was signed into law.

"We will never, never, never give in! We will be here until doomsday! Merry Christmas!" shouted House Appropriations Committee Chairman Bob Livingston, R-La.

tims from the forested mountain ridge began in earnest Friday. Rescuers, some with machetes, threaded their way through thick undergrowth. Occasionally, a worker shouted, "Body here!"

Most of the bodies were placed in black bags and flown by helicopter to Buga, the nearest town. Some were carried the two-hour trip down the mountain to a farm, where helicopters waited to take them to Buga. There, officials set up a morgue at a sports center where relatives could identify the dead.

Some relatives of passengers joined the search. Cesar Ruiz looked for his daughter, Paula, 21.

"I know she's dead," Ruiz said.

He shouted to others: "Everybody, my daughter has a tattoo on her back and a mole near her mouth."

Searchers found the bodies of a woman and a boy still strapped in their seats.

Suitcases and clothes were snagged in tree branches. In the undergrowth were dolls, in-line skates, a stuffed rabbit and a book on how to prepare for the Scholastic Aptitude Test. Pieces of the plane, including one with part of the American Airlines logo, were strewn about.

Relatives waited in Buga with photos of loved ones, hoping someone would recognize them.

Hospital Universitario in Cali said it held the only four survivors of the crash: Dussan, 36, in good condition; daughter Michelle, 6, who suffered a broken leg; Mercedes Ramirez, 21, of Kansas City, Mo., in critical condition; and Mauricio Reyes, 19, a business student at the University of Michigan-Dearborn, in good condition.

A fifth survivor of the crash died en route to the hospital.

Authorities initially had said eight, then seven people were taken alive from the wreckage.

Two people reported alive on Thursday could not be accounted for Friday, Eduardo Arizabaleta, head of the Red Cross in Cali, told The Associated Press.

A dog — a small brown mutt — was found alive inside an animal carrier, an American Airlines investigator said Friday. The dog, believed to have been in the cargo hold of the airplane, was dubbed "Milagro" — "miracle" in Spanish.

Investigators from the FBI, the Federal Aviation Administration and the National Transportation Safety Board were in Colombia to find the cause of the crash.

The jetliner lost radio contact about 9:41 p.m. Wednesday. There was no word of trouble from the cockpit, and no report of bad weather. Alvaro Cala, director of Colombian civil aviation, said the plane was 13 miles east of its intended flight path when it crashed into the mountain.

Cala said there was no evidence of an explosion on the plane and that all ground radar and radio systems were operating normally. He said a probe would take at least six months.

Three years ago, leftist rebels sabotaged the area's navigation system. Alberto Davila, assistant head of Colombia's civil aviation agency, stressed Friday there was no evidence of terrorism in connection with the crash.

Most of the passengers on Flight 965 apparently were, like Dussan, Colombians headed home for the holidays in Cali. The airline said it would not release a full passenger list until relatives were notified.

The flight data recorder should provide investigators with important information including the plane's airspeed, altitude and heading at the time of the crash, Davila said. It also should indicate whether the plane's nose was up or down.

The cockpit voice recorder, with the last 30 minutes of conversation among the crew and between the plane and ground controllers, had yet to be recovered, Davila said.

Ground navigational aids were functioning normally Wednesday night, he said.

"The plane went down at 9:41. From nine until midnight, 10 planes operated in that area. Nine arrived safely," Davila said.

In Seattle, Boeing spokesman Bill Curry said it was the first crash involving a 757, a twin-engine, medium- to long-range jetliner.

EDITORS: People seeking information about passengers on Flight 965 can call an American Airlines help number at 1-800-245-0999.

(From 1A)

Mrs. Rendon and her husband, Mario Rendon, have operated the community-supported Soup Kitchen to freely serve needy and hungry people with food, clothing and spiritual support since the mid-1980s.

"I am very proud of Midland; Midland came through," Mrs. Rendon said. "They provided toys, the hams, everything we needed. Praise God. We're so glad."

Needed donated goods included the groceries to prepare the hot meals for the people; presents for adults, youths and children; sacks of groceries for people to take home to feed their families; choruses and soloists to sing Christmas songs; and volunteers to serve the needy and hungry people.

"We had a man come from Monahans, brought hams," Mrs. Rendon noted. "One lady from Odessa brought toys. I don't know who else from out of town, but Midland was great."

Sammie Whitney, a 71-year-old World War II U.S. Army veteran who sported an olive-drab jacket for warmth against the cold, stepped quietly into the line, as gifts were being passed out by church groups. The scent of seasoned foods and chatting and singing were filled the air.

"You know, we've just got to take it (life), as it comes," Whitney declared. "I'm just glad to be living."

Maria Navarrete, 25, brought her two children, son Alex, 6, and daughter Yaritza, 3, to join in the Christmas celebration.

"It's real nice to be around family and good friends," she said.

Rich Gonzalez, 35, was bore a bundle of presents. "Christmas time is a time of giving," he said. "People are really being blessed. There's the spirit of Christmas (here); it's wonderful."

Midland minister Hector Gonzalez, who is the Midland Police Department's chaplain and a choral singer, surmised that the celebration was witness to the community's "coming together instead of being divided."

Gonzalez applauded the work of Mario and Mary Rendon, their volunteers and their mission to feed people in spirit and with food.

"Regardless of who you are, they help people. When somebody comes in here, all they need to do is sign at the door, and they are welcome," Gonzalez said. "They don't ask questions. They don't ask whether you have money. They don't ask if you have a job or not. They are open, and they help people whether they need clothing or they need to be fed. It doesn't matter what age or race. It is wonderful. And I admire them for that."

Among the volunteers were counselor Pat Cobb, who served meals, and biochemist Dr. Richard Haroz, who played the role of Santa Claus.

"We volunteered because it is a good thing to do," Haroz said. "We are happy we did."

He recalled that Rendon was "looking for someone slightly oversized to play Santa Claus. And Mario, who runs the place, said he's too busy. So, he looked at me and said, 'You're it.'

"The kids are great," said Santa Claus Haroz, as he took off smiling. "I've got to get some more presents (for the children), or I'm going to get attacked."

Mario Rendon cited the cause of the Yuletide party: "Celebrating Jesus's birthday. This is the biggest celebration ever" for the Soup Kitchen.

Olivia Wilson and Maria Navarez, supporters of the Midland Soup Kitchen, found delight in the Christmas joy radiating in the Soup Kitchen's spacious dining area.

"They never turn anyone away," Mrs. Wilson said. "And they were the only service agency in Midland which gave (food and services) without any questions asked, ... no red tape, ... no matter what was needed," Mrs. Wilson said of her experience with the Rendons when she was director of the Midland Sheriff Department's Crisis Intervention Unit to help victims of violence. "They fed our children. They baby-sit our children. They ministered to some of the older people."

Kim Bogart, a volunteer who directs the Midland Soup Kitchen Ministry's children's ministry, said that the Soup Kitchen open-door practice to serve people in need "helps them to keep their pride," for they are "able just to walk in the door and just feel the love of Christ and to be able to eat without any questions asked."

Mrs. Bogart saluted the community's support: "We had gifts pour in from all over the city. Midland has just been wonderful."

HOMICIDE: Police charge husband

arrests of the suspects.

Only one of the nine deaths, the slaying of 41-year-old Carolyn Kolas while she was walking near her west-side Midland home in the pre-dawn hours of May 27, remains unsolved. No one has been arrested in her death.

Garcia said that while "nine or 10 homicides (in a year's span) for a town this size ... is out of character for us," the number of homicides is "not really a bad number.

"Really, we have been kind of lucky, because we have had several of these drive-by shootings that could have really gone bad if these guys (the gunmen) had aimed right," he said.

In recent years, Midland has been experiencing "seven, eight, nine homicides, including drive-by shootings, per year," Garcia said. In the mid-1980s when Midland was in the boom-to-bust throes, there was a year in which 15 homicides were recorded.

FIGURES: TEC report shows slight dip

(From 1A)

Noting that total employment rose by 700 and unemployment fell by 200, Rachel Porras, employment supervisor with the TEC's Midland office, attributed the improvement to new businesses opening in the Midland-Odessa area and to the effects of seasonal holiday hiring.

In addition, "The prospects of continued trade and service businesses locating in the MSA and construction on announced projects actually beginning means the labor market should continue to look good into the new year."

POLICE REPORTS

Fatal injury

A 60-year-old Odessa man, Bobby Gene Gotcher, was fatally injured early Friday afternoon when he was struck by a forklift as he and others were unloading equipment from a tractor-trailer rig near Gotcher Cable Service Inc. in far west Midland County.

He died at Midland's Memorial Hospital and Medical Center at 1:30 p.m., according to a hospital spokesman.

The Texas Department of Public Safety, which is investigating the accident, is to determine today whether the fatality was a traffic accident or an industrial accident, according to a DPS spokesman.

Robbery

In Midland near midnight Thursday, a lone, ski-masked gunman robbed two employees at the Sonic Drive-in at 1109 N. Midkiff Road and locked them in the restaurant's walk-in refrigerated unit, according to Midland police. They escaped from the locker in about 15 minutes, according to reports.

The gunman, who was described by the victims as a 5-foot-8 white man in his late teens or early 20s and weighing about 160 pounds, entered the business through an unsecured back door at about the eatery's closing time, according to reports.

"We have robberies year-round," said Midland Police Department spokesman Sgt. David Garcia. "It just seems like they get more notoriety during the holidays."

RINGER: Salvation Army gives man job

have 18 members who have come in and asked for assistance this Christmas. You also have the single person and the elderly that are basically just in need of food, not anything else," Major Tulcher said.

The application process to be eligible for assistance at Christmas started back in October. Those seeking food, clothing or toys brought in proof of income and bills that they owed. From that it was determined how much need there was in a family, Tulcher said.

Tulcher said that he was very impressed with people's attitudes this year and cited an incident with a local radio station earlier in the week.

The station had two disc jockeys up on their sign board on Gregg Street promoting the Angel Tree Program. At that time there were still 50 Angel Tree angels not adopted. By the end of the day, all 50 were gone.

"That's the spirit of Christmas," said Tulcher. "I really haven't seen any bad spirit. You always have your 'baa humbugs.' That's going to be around forever. But for the most part, Christmas is a cheerful time."

Homeless man in Big Spring sees Christmas through job as bell ringer

By Jeff Lightfoot
Reporter-Telegram Correspondent

BIG SPRING — What is very Christmas, wears red and jingles?

It is not jolly old Saint Nick, but it does help make some Christmas dreams come true for needy children. You see it all over town, especially in front of major retail stores and government buildings.

Only a Salvation Army bell ringer could fit the description.

Mike is a friendly bell ringer who most recently has staked out the Big Spring post office. Homeless for the past several months, he went from "this place, to that place, to this place," until someone in Temple told him that Big Spring was a good place to come. It appears that the word is out on the street that in Big Spring there is a Salvation Army that cares.

Mike has been in Big Spring for the past month and a half and has been provided food and shelter by the Salvation Army. He was given a job bell ringing to help earn his keep, but he says that his motivation for doing the job goes beyond that.

"Why do I do this?" he asked. "When I saw all those toys down there and I saw that we were going to help some needy people, and I realized that some children were going to get a Christmas that normally wouldn't get a Christmas, it was inspirational."

According to Major Roy Tulcher, the commanding officer of the Big Spring Salvation Army, the bell ringing program is all about helping those in need:

"The bell ringing program started over a hundred years ago in San Francisco and started with a big soup pot to help collect money to feed people at Christmas." Hence the red "kettle" into which money is dropped.

"And nowadays when children come in, if they're not getting anything for Christmas, we want to make sure that they get something under the tree. Basically, that's what it is for ... to feed and get clothes and toys for children for Christmas."

Although Mike is new to Big Spring, he is impressed with the townsfolk and their friendliness. He said, "There are some pretty nice people in this community. I've begun to know some people here by ringing. I say, 'Hello, How are you,' and they know my face and I know their face. I've begun to know some names and meet some folks that go to church and I've even begun to go to church with some of them."

As a homeless person, Mike's attitude about Christmas is somewhat different than it has been in the past.

"This is my first Christmas to be homeless. This time last year I had a good job, nice car, nice place to live. I just thought Christmas was a time to eat, drink and be merry, and I didn't put God in the picture too much," he said.

"This year, I'm like 'wait a minute. Christmas is not about all this gift-giving, commercialism and food. It's about when Jesus was born, about helping one another and having more love for your fellow mankind.' (My situation) has shown me a lot more love. I have a lot more love in my heart towards other people."

What does Christmas look like through the eyes of a bell ringer? Mike said that he has seen a real giving attitude and much friendliness from the people of Big Spring. From what he has observed, he is somewhat concerned that the giving is not always for the right reasons, though.

"I think that in the hustle and bustle, some people forget. Some of them give out of the generosity of their heart and some don't. I think that some people don't understand why they're giving to us. They do it just because we're in the newspaper, or on TV or promoted by different organizations. They relate this (as he points to the sign and the bucket and the bell in his hand) with giving. So automatically they give," he said.

"I rang at WalMart one day and I put the kettle right in the middle of where you come in so that you had to walk around me. Some people gave, but when a lot of them saw me they automatically fidgety-fiddled at their pockets, but then just walked on by. You could tell that they didn't really want to give. Maybe their conscience bothered them.

"This bell makes people nervous," said Mike, who believes that the bell and the red kettle and the person ringing the bell remind people that there is something beyond themselves, that there is poverty and there is homelessness. That reminder seems to make some uncomfortable.

And there is more to this job than just standing there with a bell in your a hand.

"You've got to work this thing. This is a job," Mike said. "You've got to look people in the eyes and tell them 'Good morning. How are you?' If you just stand there you don't get anything. That's just the way it is."

Location and weather seem to make a difference, as well. On this day it was sleeting and Mike had moved inside the building. Collections had tapered off.

"I don't know exactly why fewer people give when you're inside. Maybe they think that if you're having to suffer some to get the money, they want to give," he said.

The donations do add up, with all of it staying at home. An average Christmas intake for a community the size of Big Spring, from not only the bell ringing program but also what is received in the mail, is about $35,000. The monies donated each year usually cover all the Salvation Army's Christmas needs, and any extra goes toward winter relief programs.

The revenues raised provide money for the Angel Tree Program — where people buy gifts for children with specific needs, particularly clothing — food baskets and a Christmas dinner at the Salvation Army Lodge for anyone that comes in.

"We make sure everybody has a good Christmas dinner. We give a basket of food out that will supply whatever size family that comes in. We have some families who

World's richest lottery pays out $1.3 billion to 117 lucky people

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Sparkling wine flowed and townspeople danced in the streets of Palma de Mallorca on Friday after their neighbors won the $285 million jackpot in a lottery that bills itself the world's richest.

Each of the 117 tickets with the winning number in Spain's Christmas lottery — dubbed "El Gordo" (The Fat One) — paid out the equivalent of $2.4 million.

El Gordo has the world's biggest payout for a number chosen by ticket buyers, although other lotteries award larger jackpots, according to the lottery commission. This year it handed out a total of $1.3 billion in prizes.

In the lottery, 117 tickets are printed with each number. This year's jackpot-winning tickets all were purchased in the working-class Coll d'Enravassa neighborhood of Palma de Mallorca on Mallorca, an island in the Mediterranean Sea.

It wasn't known how many people were splitting the jackpot: The tickets, which cost $245 each, usually are purchased by groups of friends, families and work or club mates.

"Today we'll be treating everyone to champagne!" declared Jose Antonio Gomez, the 24-year-old chef of the Hotel Linda, in a nationally televised interview. His staff won a share of the jackpot.

"It's more than welcome," said a middle-aged woman who wasn't identified on TV. "My husband is unemployed and my house is old."

Participation in El Gordo is a national tradition. Spain's national lottery system was set up in 1763 under King Carlos III, and El Gordo has been held each Christmas since 1818.

The country comes to a virtual standstill on Dec. 22 when the jackpot is awarded.

The winning number — 45495 — was broadcast nationally on radio and television from Spain's National Lotteries Department.

Second prize was $138 million, awarded to number 43893. Third prize of $68 million went to tickets numbered 10631.

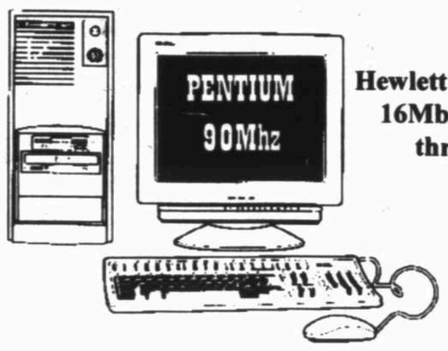

Prize money is tax-free, though any interest or dividends earned will be taxable.

Lottery ticket sales were expected to top $1.9 billion. The profit goes into the national treasury and covers administrative costs.

British troops confront Bosnian Serbs, report soldiers were meek

KRUPA ON THE VRBAS, Bosnia-Herzegovina (NYT) — In the largest movement of NATO forces yet to enter territory formerly controlled by the Serbs, the British army reached the blustery peak of Kula Mountain on Friday to confront men in the Bosnian Serb army.

Despite the army's reputation, the British soldiers found the Serbian soldiers meek.

This was especially interesting because the British mission here was to inspect and then begin disarming one of the antiaircraft units that only three months ago was exchanging fire with NATO planes attacking Bosnian Serb military positions.

Still, meekness appears to be the universal response as the British forces quickly spread through about 60 square miles of Serbian-controlled land in central Bosnia and then moved north about 10 miles to Banja Luka, the most important city held by Bosnian Serbs.

The confident British commander of the operation, Maj. Robert Polley, said, "We are in complete control of this area."

A Serbian soldier answered humbly as a British serviceman questioned him about what weapons were on hand, and where the unit's headquarters were. As the British column of armored vehicles pushed on through deep mud and snow, the soldier said, "We are ready to do anything to end this war."

However, even if exhausted by the war and bowed by the arrival of heavily armed British soldiers, many Bosnian Serbs do yet believe that the peace for which they are hoping will be just or that it will last longer than foreign governments choose to enforce it.

"The West bombed us and supported the Muslims and Croats," said the operator of an antiaircraft gun. "It's hard now to trust the West will be fair when it oversees this peace."

Other Serbian soldiers based in the valley where the Vrbas River cuts through Bosnia's high mountains spoke of being afraid Croat and Muslim armies will be allowed to get stronger over the next year and then will assault the Bosnian Serb area when the foreign troops leave.

For now, though, in their effort to show their strength and to find heavy weapons and mines, the British troops here, an armored reconnaissance unit, say they are being so successful it surprises them.

After about seven hours of patrolling through mountain roads and tracks Thursday, they reported complete cooperation from Bosnian Serb officers, who offered to show where their artillery pieces and mines are hidden as well as the details of how their troops are deployed.

"They've been filling us with coffee," Sgt. Mick Rowell said. "And they say they only wish they could have had more notice that we were coming so they could prepare a more hospitable welcome for us."

In addition to finding weapons and troops, the British soldiers are officially informing the local Serbian military and civilian authorities of what they must do within 30 days of the Dayton accord.

This includes removing heavy weapons from the field and withdrawing military units 1.2 miles from the front lines.

Civilians gathered most of the day to watch the activity at the British camp in the village of Krupa. In one group of stern men, wearing uniforms indicating they were members of the local militia, a farmer named Strika Nenad said he was glad to see the foreign soldiers.

"We don't want to fight anymore," he said. "They should have come before now."

By cruising easily down roads and over confrontation lines where so many Bosnians have died, NATO soldiers seemed to begin to break down both the physical and psychological barriers that have separated people.

Second cover-up revealed in Japanese nuclear accident

TOKYO (AP) — Caught red-handed, nuclear plant operators admitted Friday they concealed a second dramatic videotape showing extensive damage from a recent accident.

Tons of explosive sodium coolant leaked from overheating machinery on Dec. 8 at the experimental plutonium-powered Monju plant. No one was injured, but the incident dealt a blow to Japan's vision of a nuclear-powered future.

After the plant admitted employees had withheld a 15-minute video showing extensive damage caused by the leak, furious government officials announced Thursday they were stepping up their investigation.

Soon they found a second incriminating video, this one 10 minutes long.

Plant operators again acknowledged a cover-up.

"We were worried that it could destroy the Monju project itself," Isao Sato, a senior official of the governmental Power Reactor and Nuclear Fuel Development Corp. said Friday when asked why the second tape was concealed.

The first video showed workers in body suits and gas masks confronted with mounds of sodium compounds on the floor and caked around cooling vents. The video also showed large holes in pipes, apparently where the sodium had eaten through, and burn marks caused when the sodium combusted on contact with the air.

The footage was a sharp contrast to a four-minute video the company released several days after the accident that showed little damage, and its earlier statements insisting there was no other footage.

The corporation, better known in Japan by its abbreviation Donen, admitted Wednesday that company officials purposely misled the media and the government by withholding parts of a video showing the aftermath of the accident.

It did not, however, mention a second video.

The first video discovered was taped at 4 p.m. Dec. 9, about 20 hours after the accident. The second video was taped about six hours after the accident.

Actress McQueen burned in fire

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — Butterfly McQueen, who played Scarlett O'Hara's young scatterbrained slave in "Gone With The Wind," was critically burned Friday when a kerosene heater caught fire.

McQueen, 84, told firefighters her clothes caught fire when she was trying to light one of two kerosene heaters in her home just outside Augusta.

She was in very critical condition at Augusta Regional Medical Center, with second and third degree burns on over 70 percent of her body, said Butch Dorman, nursing director at the hospital's burn center.

"Prognosis is poor," Dorman said.

McQueen was lying on the sidewalk when firefighters arrived at her one-bedroom cottage, which was destroyed.

Her neighbors said they knew McQueen by her given name, Thelma, because she didn't want people to know who she was. McQueen was nicknamed Butterfly after appearing in a production of "A Midsummer Night's Dream," in which she danced in the Butterfly Ballet.

■ More National News/ 3B

Dorman said McQueen does not have any family. A woman identifying herself as McQueen's "adopted daughter" lived in the back of the cottage, said Tommy Whitener, battalion chief of Richmond County Fire Department.

McQueen's most memorable role was Prissy, the squeaky-voiced, tearful slave in the 1939 film version of Margaret Mitchell's Civil War epic. In a famous scene, she admits that she had lied about being a midwife: "Miss Scarlett, I don't know nothin' 'bout birthin' babies!"

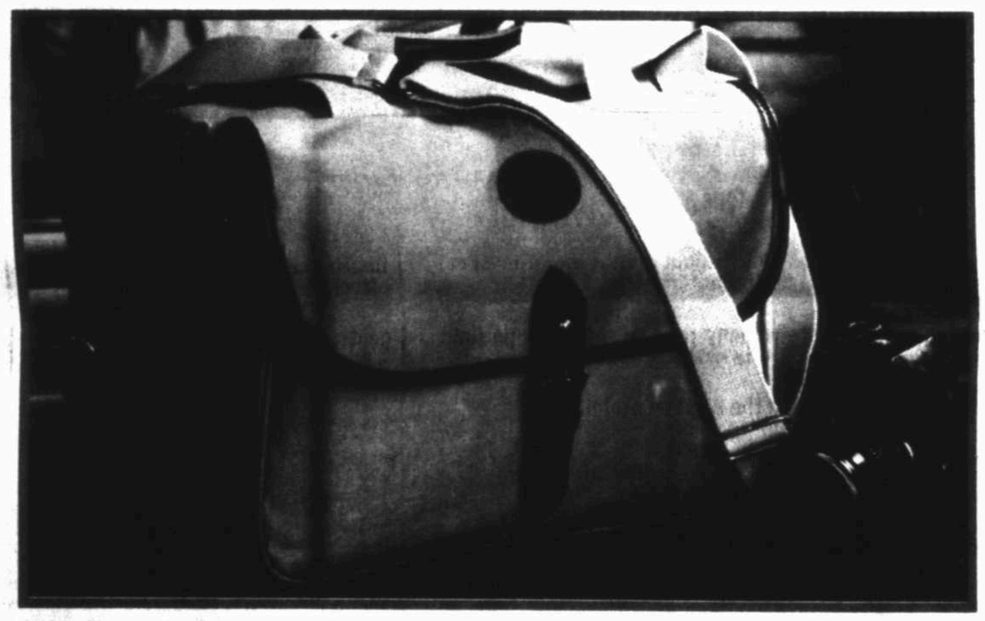

McQueen later appeared as a sobbing maid in several films of the 1940s.

After tiring of being typecast, she retired in 1947, worked various jobs and in 1975, at age 64, earned a bachelor's degree in political science from New York's City College.

Niacin, cholesterol

Before you try prescription drugs to lower cholesterol, why not try niacin? The vitamin is the oldest of all cholesterol-lowering agents and it works, says Virgil W. Brown, M.D., Emory University School of Medicine. Unquestionably, niacin can lower bad-type LDL cholesterol and triglycerides and raise good-type HDL cholesterol, declares Brown after a recent review of the medical evidence. In fact, daily doses of 1.5 to 3 grams per day can have remarkable benefits. A daily dose of 2 grams or less may lower LDL cholesterol up to 20 to 30 percent and increase HDL cholesterol as much as 32 percent.

But many people experience skin flushing from niacin. Reduce that discomfort several ways, suggests Brown: Always take niacin with meals; avoid hot liquids and alcohol immediately after taking the vitamin; take an aspirin tablet (325 mg) or 200 mg of ibuprofen 30 to 60 minutes before taking niacin. Most important: Start with low doses of niacin and over a period of a month or so gradually increase to the high dose.

Warning: Don't substitute sustained-release niacin; it can cause liver damage. Consult your physician before using niacin.

Reduce pressure

You can get your blood pressure down without drugs. New proof comes from a multicenter study of 900 men and women who did it and kept it down. The subjects, ages 45 to 69, had mild high blood pressure — diastolic (lower number) pressures of 90 to 99 mmHg. During the four-year study, their diastolic blood pressures fell an average 9.4 mmHg and their systolic pressures dropped 10.4 mmHg. Fully 59 percent of them controlled their blood pressure entirely without medications. Here's what they were told to do:

- Lose 10 pounds, which most did in the first year, but gained four pounds back by the end of four years.
- Eat 25 percent less sodium, which most also accomplished in year one. By year four the reduction was only 9 percent.
- Engage in moderate exercise — such as walking, bicycling and doing calisthenics for 150 minutes a week. Most upped their activity by 83 percent in the first year.
- Limit alcohol intake to less than two drinks per day. Most reduced alcohol consumption by 30 percent during all four years.

The study was headed by University of Minnesota researchers.

Nutty myths

Nuts are full of fat, and all fat is bad. Therefore, nuts are bad. Absolutely not, according to scientists at a recent international conference on nuts.

Unfortunately, nuts have been put on the "avoid" list because of their high fat, and it's wrong, says Gary Fraser, M.D., professor of medicine at Loma Linda University. He points to studies showing that nut-eaters have lower rates of heart disease. In fact, he found in one study that "as the frequency of consumption of nuts increased, the risk of heart attack came down about 50 percent, very, very dramatically," says Fraser.

Why? Several possible reasons. Nuts are high in unsaturated fats that lower cholesterol. Controlled studies find that eating almonds or walnuts lowers cholesterol. Nuts are high in B-6 and magnesium, both heart-protective nutrients, according to new research.

But don't nuts make you fat? Sure, if you overeat them. But in Dr. Fraser's study, nut-eaters were thinner than non-nut-eaters. They ate nuts often, about five times a week, but sparingly — a few at a time.

Dry or wet?

NEW YORK (AP) — Common sense and your mother have always told you to come in out of the rain.

But, making a dash for a dry place doesn't keep you much drier than walking at a normal pace, according to research findings. A person running at 22.4 miles an hour gets only 10 percent less wet than a hasty stroller, sauntering along at 6.7 mph. The extra speed scoops up a lot of extra raindrops that you would miss if you were just walking. The benefit you get from speed doesn't justify the extra energy used, and so you might as well walk.

Breast cancer screening

Richard Grable shows off his new breast cancer screening equipment at the recent annual meeting of the Radiological Society of North America in Chicago. The new technique employs a laser beam to deliver computerized views of the breast, eliminating exposure to radiation during mammography. The technique has yet to undergo clinical trials and remains unproven.

Research links gene, breast cancers

By Gina Kolata
N.Y. Times News Service

A gene that was thought to cause only a small proportion of breast cancers now appears to be at the heart of nearly all of them, researchers report.

The finding may lead to new ways to give a prognosis and to treat breast cancer, but there is no immediate action recommended for women who have breast cancer or are concerned about a genetic predisposition to the disease.

Researchers are excited about the finding because it means that the rare forms of breast cancer that run in families appear to be not distinct from the most common forms of breast cancer, but instead linked to them.

The gene in question, known as BRCA-1, was isolated just a year ago, after a heated race among molecular biologists who felt certain that it would provide vital clues to the causes of breast and ovarian cancers. It did. Women who inherited a mutated form of the gene had about a 90 percent chance of developing breast cancer and about a 60 percent chance of developing ovarian cancer in their lifetimes.

But women with familial breast cancers constitute just 5 percent of all women with the disease, so the importance of the finding seemed of minor importance for the vast majority of women who might contract breast cancer. When researchers examined cancers from women who did not have a strong family history of the disease, the gene seemed normal.

Now, Dr. Wen-Hwa Lee and his colleagues at the University of Texas at San Antonio report that women with breast and ovarian cancers but no family history of the disease have certain abnormalities related to this same gene. The abnormalities have to do with a protein called the BRCA-1 protein; the BRCA-1 gene instructs the cells to make this protein.

Normally, this protein is successfully produced and does its work in the cell nucleus, a sack at the center of a cell that contains the genetic material. In the rare familial breast cancers, the gene produces a faulty form of the protein. In the more common forms of breast cancer, the researchers report that the protein is misplaced, found in the wrong part of the cell.

Lee and his colleagues looked for the BRCA-1 protein in normal cells from various body tissues, including the breast. They also looked in breast and ovarian cancer cells taken from women with advanced cancer and in cells from cancers other than those of the breast and ovary.

What they found was that normal cells and cells from other sorts of cancers contained the protein in the nucleus. But the protein was outside the nucleus, in a substance called the cytoplasm, or absent altogether in nearly all the breast and ovarian cancer cells that they examined.

Lee said that the BRCA-1 protein's structure suggests to scientists that its role is to attach itself to genetic material in the cell's nucleus and control the switching on and off of genes. If that is correct, then the misplacement of the protein outside the nucleus could leave a cell without a vital modifier of cell development, leading to malignant growth.

The misplacement of the BRCA-1 protein in cells indicates that the protein, even if properly formed, may not be functioning in most women with breast or ovarian cancers, Lee said.

It indicates, he added, that the BRCA-1 protein may be a vital factor in determining whether a breast or ovarian cell becomes cancerous. The main conclusions of the study have to do with breast cancer because the researchers looked at far fewer cases of ovarian cancer.

Dr. Barbara Weber, the director of the breast cancer program at the University of Pennsylvania School of Medicine, said the finding "means that this gene may be what we hoped for — a tool to really understand why breast cancer happens."

Dr. Weber said that if the protein is misplaced in breast cancer cells, it might be possible to discover how to move it back where it belongs.

"It may be easier to move it from the cytoplasm to the nucleus than to actually fix it," she said.

If the location of the protein is a key to the progress of cancer, the finding could have another dramatic effect. Dr. C. Kent Osborne, a cancer researcher at the University of Texas at San Antonio who provided tumor cells for Lee to examine, said the discovery may lead to a better way to predict how aggressive a woman's breast cancer is.

Home safety is important during holidays

ATLANTA (AP) — The holidays are special for many reasons, but it's the children who make them magical. Unfortunately, children are especially at risk during this season.

Child safety specialists at Egleston Children's Hospital at Emory University offer these holiday tips:

Decking The Halls

- If you choose a live Christmas tree, water it frequently to prevent it from drying out and keep it away from fireplaces and items that could catch on fire. Anchor it to keep it from tipping over, and hang ornaments and tinsel out of reach of very young children. Avoid glass ornaments if young children will be in your home.
- Make sure young children can't reach seasonal plants that could be poison if eaten, such as holly and mistletoe.
- Don't use tinsel containing lead if children will be in the home.
- Don't use Christmas tree lights with frayed or damaged wiring. Never decorate your tree with candles and avoid "the octopus" — too many plugs in one electrical outlet. Repeatedly blowing fuses and tripped circuit breakers are signs of an overloaded electrical system.
- Never try to hide electrical cords under a carpet or rug — a damaged cord could cause a fire.
- Don't use latex balloons in your decorating plans if you have young children in the home. They are a leading cause of infant death by choking.
- Avoid using tablecloths. A child can be injured if he or she pulls on the overhanging edges of the tablecloth.
- Never leave burning candles unattended, even for a few minutes.

Parties

- Avoid serving small, round foods such as nuts, hard candies, cocktail hot dogs, peanuts, popcorn, grapes, small candies and pieces of raw carrots if children under the age of 4 will be present. These kinds of foods can easily choke a child of that age since they are very similar to the width and diameter of a child's windpipe, making them potentially dangerous plugs in a child's throat.
- Never leave alcoholic drinks unattended. Alcohol can have serious effects on children. If alcohol poisoning is suspected, call the local poison control center immediately.
- Move hot drinks away from table edges where they could be knocked over and scald children. Don't serve hot drinks on tablecloths, where scalding injuries could occur if a child pulls on the cloth's edges.
- If several children will be present, consider having a children's party with "safe" foods suitable for children, such as cupcakes and fruit punch. Ideally, arrange for a baby sitter to help organize children's party activities in a separate room, away from the adult festivities.
- When the party is over, empty drink glasses and put away any alcohol. If guests have smoked cigarettes in your home, check for cigarette butts that could still be burning in ashtrays or that could have fallen onto the carpet or become lodged between furniture cushions.

Flu shots can help protect from outbreaks of the disease

Hearst News Service

The only way to avoid getting the flu is to get a flu shot because even though this year's virus is similar to last year's, immunity only lasts about a year.

The flu vaccine generally works 70 percent to 90 percent of the time, according to "Jane Brody's Cold and Flu Fighter," excerpted in a recent issue of Redbook, and is most effective in younger people.

Researchers observe changes in the flu virus during the year and create a modified vaccine that protects you from the latest variations. "It's not going to be too different from last year, which was mild," Bill Gamble of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention said. "There's only been a drift in the virus, so it hasn't changed dramatically."

Even a mild flu can keep you out of action for four or five days. "A lot of people worry about the side effects of the vaccine," Brody wrote, "but these have been greatly exaggerated. It is biologically impossible to get the flu from the vaccine because the viruses in the vaccine are dead and thereby incapable of invading and reproducing in your cells. All they can do is rev up your body's immune system and prompt it to produce antibodies to knock out the live flu viruses.

"This revving up may produce a flulike reaction. But that means you're probably extremely susceptible to the viruses the vaccine is designed to protect against. If you were unprotected and contracted the flu from one of those live viruses, you would undoubtedly become very sick. It's much better to have a brief flulike reaction than a full-blown flu." The most common side effect of flu vaccine is minor redness and soreness at the site of the injection.

It usually takes two to three weeks after you've gotten the shot for your body to build up immunity. Flu epidemics generally strike in December or January.

Adults who must get flu shots because they have the greatest chance of suffering serious complication from flu include people with cancer or an immunological disorder, or those on medications that suppress immunity and lower the body's resistance to infection.

Also on the "must" list are those with chronic heart or lung disease, cystic fibrosis, diabetes, kidney disease, anemia or severe asthma, and residents of nursing homes or other chronic care facilities, and anyone 65 and older.

"Children don't get as sick from the flu as adults do and generally don't need to be immunized. But just as with adults, there are groups of children who must get the shots," Brody wrote, citing these recommendations from the CDC as to which children they are:

- Infants older than 6 months and children with chronic heart or lung disease, cystic fibrosis, a chronic metabolic disorder such as diabetes, kidney disease, anemia or severe asthma.
- Kids between 6 months and 18 years who are on long-term aspirin therapy.
- Children who live with a person at high risk for serious flu complications.
- Children 12 and younger should be given split-virus vaccine, which is less likely to produce side effects. Those under 9 who have not been previously vaccinated should receive two doses of split-virus vaccine one month apart.
- Since the vaccine is produced from viruses grown in eggs, people with a severe egg allergy should avoid the vaccine, and people already suffering from an infectious illness should let themselves recover before getting a flu shot.

Some leg pain is traced to spine

Dr. Michael L. Freedman

NEW YORK (AP) — The pain in the legs suffered by many older people when they walk can often be traced to the spine. A condition called spinal stenosis, which causes narrowing of the spinal column and typically affects adults after 50, can cause leg pain.

Spinal stenosis usually results from osteoarthritis, the "wear-and-tear" kind of arthritis. The discs between the spinal vertebrae begin to wear out, the protective cartilage covering bone surfaces deteriorates, and sometimes bone spurs develop. As a result, bones and soft tissue begin to fold inward, compressing the nerves of the spinal column and causing pain to radiate down the sciatic nerve, which runs from the back to the lower leg. The pain is sometimes accompanied by numbness or weakness in the legs. Some people suffer reduced control of the bladder or bowels, because the nerves controlling them can also be affected.

In treatment, the first step is to be sure that the pain is caused by spinal stenosis rather than poor circulation in the leg or something else. A X-ray examination, computerized tomography or other diagnostic tests may be necessary.

If spinal stenosis is diagnosed, treatment can include medications such as aspirin or other anti-inflammatory drugs, steroid injections, physical therapy and a recommendation to wear a brace or corset.

If the pain becomes severe enough, if the legs grow weak or if there is reduced bladder or bowel control, an operation called laminectomy can be performed. The surgeon removes bones and tissue pressing on the spinal column, sometimes fusing lower backvertebrae .

Dr. Michael L. Freedman is the Diane and Arthur Belfer Professor of Geriatric Medicine and Director of Geriatrics at New York University Medical Center.

Over-the-counter medications may contain caffeine, affect sleep habits

By Dr. Michael L. Freedman

NEW YORK (AP) — Older people who have trouble sleeping should check any over-the-counter medications they might be taking.

Many of those medications contain caffeine. And a study of older people has found a higher incidence of sleep problems in those who take caffeine-containing medications.

The Iowa 65+ Rural Health Study asked 2,885 participants aged 65 and older if they had trouble falling sleep or other sleep complaints.

In the 5.4 percent of persons who took medications that contain caffeine, there was a significantly higher incidence of difficulty in falling asleep.

For example, the incidence of that problem was about 50 percent higher in people who took over-the-counter painkillers containing caffeine than in those people who took similar but caffeine-free products.

Surprisingly, the problem was not related to coffee consumption, depressive symptoms and use of multiple medications.

Recommendation: For a better chance at a good night's sleep, read the labels of all medications and cut back on those that include caffeine.

What happens when doctors miss clues to mental disorders

By Jane E. Brody
N.Y. Times News Service

Gail Greenberg was a New York high school student when the signs of depression first appeared in the guise of a succession of bodily complaints. She developed one physical symptom after another, consulting the family doctor almost weekly. Each time he ordered a series of tests and each time he found no physical explanation for her symptoms.

At no time, however, did the doctor ask Gail about what was going on in her life at school, at home and beyond. At no time did he ask the leading questions that would have revealed a persistent emotional depression to be the real cause of her symptoms. Not until college did a counselor find the reason for her misery and prescribe a treatment that could remedy it.

Now, in her mid-30s, Ms. Greenberg, who is pursuing a Ph.D. in social work and education, is doing her thesis on the training of primary care doctors in the recognition and treatment of mental illness.

Changes in the way medical care is being administered make this educational task even more important than it was when she was a teenager.

As Eleanor Jacobs, director of outpatient services at Charles River Hospital, a psychiatric hospital in Wellesley, Mass., put it: "The primary care doctor has become a gatekeeper — the person who decides if and when a patient should consult a specialist and which kind of specialist the patient should see.

"If the doctor is not asking questions that could lead to a diagnosis of an emotional illness like depression, anxiety, panic disorder, substance abuse or pathological bereavement, the patient will not get proper care."

This means the patient and the patient's family have to be able to recognize when doctors have failed to make a thorough assessment of the patient's condition. Patients should know when to ask for a referral to an appropriate specialist and when to give up on a doctor and move on to another primary care practitioner.

MENTAL ILL'S HIGH COSTS

Studies have shown that about one patient in five who is seen in a primary care setting is suffering from one or more mental disorders, and that the correct diagnosis is missed half the time.

As a team of experts wrote last month in The Journal of the American Medical Association, "mental disorders are not only common in primary care but are frequently overlooked because primary care patients with mental disorders typically present with physical symptoms rather than psychological symptoms."

To help remedy the situation, the team of seven mental health specialists devised a simple diagnostic tool called Prime-MD, for "primary care evaluation of mental disorders," to help primary care doctors detect mental disorders even when the symptoms are well hidden.

The project was underwritten by an unrestricted educational grant from Pfizer Inc., a New York pharmaceutical company that produces a popular antidepressant, Zoloft. A year ago in the AMA journal, the team published a study of 1,000 patients showing that Prime-MD, which mainly consists of a questionnaire that patients fill out themselves, significantly improved the recognition of mental disorders in primary care settings.

Now, in a new study, also underwritten by Pfizer and published in the AMA journal, the team has reported an astonishingly high impact of mental disorders on patients' "health-related quality of life."

The study showed that when both the degree of disability and the prevalence of various disorders were taken into account, mental disorders caused significantly more impairment than did common physical ailments like diabetes, arthritis, heart disease and cancer. Depression alone resulted in more days of disability — an inability to perform one's usual duties — than did cancer and diseases of the liver and lungs.

'The primary care doctor has become the gate keeper — the person who decides if and when a patient should consult a specialist and which kind of specialist the patient should see.'
— Eleanor Jacobs, director of outpatient services at Charles River Hospital

Impairment was measured using surveys that assessed patients' physical functioning, bodily pain, role functioning (the ability to perform their usual duties like work, housework or schoolwork), general health, social functioning and mental health.

AS MIGHT BE expected, arthritis caused more bodily pain than depression. But depression took a greater toll than arthritis on patients' physical, role and social functioning as well as on their general and mental health.

And although cancer might be expected to cause more bodily pain than, say, depression or anxiety disorder, the mental disorders are far more commonly seen in primary care settings and therefore account for more bodily pain because more people are involved.

The research team, headed by Dr. Robert L. Spitzer, a psychiatrist at the New York State Psychiatric Institute at Columbia University, pointed out that patients with undiagnosed (and, therefore, untreated) mental disorders now place a huge burden on the medical care system because they repeatedly seek help in primary care settings for physical symptoms that have a psychological cause.

In the study, 31 primary care doctors at four sites used Prime-MD to screen 1,000 adult patients for the five mental disorders most often seen in primary care settings: mood disorders (mainly depression), anxiety, somatoform disorders (physical symptoms that are not the result of a physical disorder), alcohol abuse and eating disorders. One-quarter of the patients were found to have a mental disorder, as defined by the official psychiatric diagnostic manual.

GETTING GOOD CARE

When a patient visits a primary care doctor for a general physical examination or with a physical complaint, questions should be asked that can reveal an emotional disorder. "Patients should be concerned if the doctor fails to ask about their mood, how they are sleeping, whether they have lost interest in things that used to give them pleasure, their appetite and recent changes in weight, their energy level and other characteristics associated with depression," Spitzer said.

"Too often physicians are thinking of what new diagnostic tests to order instead of taking 10 minutes to ask patients about what their life is like, what kind of stresses they face, how they are getting along at home and at work and whether they have suffered a recent trauma."

Jacobs offers advice to patients who repeatedly see doctors with complaints of "physical symptoms for which no physical condition can be found — headaches, backaches, stomach problems, intestinal distress, generalized pains, malaise, fatigue, lack of energy, insomnia or hypersomnia." She said: "The cause may be depression or anxiety. The doctor should ask you, 'What else is going on in your life?'"

And when a doctor has failed to come up with a meaningful diagnosis within one month, Ms. Greenberg says it is time to move on. She also suggests changing doctors "if you have a gut feeling that the doctor is not on the right track or is not hearing you or gives you the royal rush."

Experts modify exercise advice

By Jane E. Brody
N.Y. Times News Service

There is good news for Americans who have put off exercising because they were reluctant to first get an OK from their doctors or could not imagine themselves taking up a vigorous activity like jogging to push their pulse into a heart-protective target zone.

Faced with the fact that more than half of American adults get little or no physical exercise, an expert panel Wednesday revised such long-standing advice in hopes of encouraging sedentary Americans to protect their hearts by becoming more active.

Almost any kind of activity, including yard work and brisk walking, will do, the experts said, as long as it is done regularly.

"Physical inactivity afflicts most Americans," the panel said. "Exertion has been systematically engineered out of most occupations. In 1991, 54 percent of adults reported little or no regular leisure physical activity," which can protect against the development of cardiovascular disease, still the nation's leading killer, and can reduce risk factors like high blood pressure, obesity, insulin resistance and heart-damaging levels of cholesterol.

THE PANEL, convened by the National Institutes of Health, advised against waiting until adulthood to start moving. Instead, the panel urged that children become a main focus of efforts to make physical activity a lifetime habit.

Although adults over 40 have long been cautioned to check with their doctors before taking up exercise, the panel suggested that most people can begin a program of moderate activity without first having to undergo a medical exam.

MEDICAL CLEARANCE is still advised for anyone known to have cardiovascular disease and for all men over 40 and women over 50 who have "multiple cardiovascular risk factors." In addition to a sedentary life, these factors include high blood pressure, diabetes, elevated cholesterol levels, cigarette smoking and obesity.

A middle-aged person with two or more of these factors may already have hidden heart disease that could become clinically obvious after an abrupt or unsupervised increase in physical activity.

The panel also reinforced a recent shift away from earlier advice that to benefit the heart, an activity must be vigorous enough to push the pulse into an age-dependent target zone and sustained at that level for at least 20 minutes.

The panel recommended instead that all children and adults strive for a total of at least 30 minutes of moderate activity on most days and preferably every day. The 30 minutes, the panel said, can be divided into three 10-minute intervals if that is more convenient.

"Current low rates of regular activity in Americans may be partially due to the misperception of many that vigorous, continuous exercise is necessary to reap health benefits," the panel said in a statement issued at the conclusion of the consensus conference, held in Bethesda, Md.

The panel chairman, Dr. Russell Luepker, an epidemiologist at the University of Minnesota School of Public Health, said, "More than half of adult Americans do not get enough physical activity, and these are the very people who can gain the most by just getting started."

What type of activity? That, the panel said, "is best determined by the individual's preferences and what will be sustained." The list might include brisk walking, cycling, swimming, home repair and yard work, the panel said.

THOSE WHO ARE already moderately active could gain further advantages from an increase in the intensity or duration of their activities, the panel said. Optimal levels of physical activity — how intense the activity should be and how long and how often it should be pursued to maximize benefits — have not yet been determined, experts conceded.

The panel also conceded that there could be risks associated with physical activity, including musculo-skeletal injuries and, rarely, a heart attack or sudden death. But evidence presented to the panel unquestionably found the benefits of activity to far outweigh the risks.

The panel called upon health care providers, employers, schools and communities to take steps that will encourage all Americans to become more active.

In addition, family and friends can further the cause by becoming an exercise buddy or by offering to take over a household task to give someone more time to pursue activity. Parents can help their children, and themselves, by participating with them in physical activities, the panel said.

GENE: Test might eliminate chemotherapy for some

(From 1B)

Such a test might identify women whose cancer was cured by surgery alone, thereby sparing tens of thousands of women the rigors of chemotherapy.

Osborne is now investigating whether the location of the BRCA-1 protein might indicate how malignant a cancer is. As part of the study, Lee examined 50 early breast cancers. In eight of them, the BRCA-1 protein was in the nucleus where it belonged. In 34, it was in both the nucleus and the cytoplasm. And in six, it was in the cytoplasm alone. It was absent in two of the tumors.

It is possible, Osborne said, that the protein may serve as a marker of aggressiveness — if it is in the nucleus, a cancer could be relatively benign, but if it is absent or is in the cytoplasm, the tumor could be extremely dangerous.

To examine that hypothesis, Osborne and his colleagues plan to look at tumor cells from 500 to 1,000 patients whose cells are stored in a tumor bank at the university.

The investigators know the eventual fate of these cancers — whether they spread and how aggressive they were. So they can ask, Where was the BRCA-1 protein when the cancers were first discovered?

In the meantime, researchers said, others will study other aspects of the gene.

The discovery "leads to some new ways of thinking about the gene," Dr. Weber said.

Dr. Bert Vogelstein, a cancer researcher at the Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine, said Lee's work was "of major importance." He said it was "the first clue to how BRCA-1 might function, and it is the first evidence that BRCA-1 may play a role in a far greater number of breast cancers than was believed."

Whitewater notes prompt new GOP questions

WASHINGTON (AP) — Promising a new batch of White House subpoenas, Republicans said Friday that Whitewater notes surrendered by President Clinton raise questions that "cry out for an explanation."

The notes, 12 pages of barely legible scrawls by then-White House attorney William Kennedy, are filled with titillating references that carry multiple implications — some of them damning.

One entry noted that FBI subpoenas were issued against Clinton's chief accuser, David Hale, the same day that White House attorney Vince Foster died — July 20, 1993.

"Also the day that VF killed himself," it read.

"Factor."

Republicans said the cryptic notation raised the prospect that Kennedy or other aides at the meeting suspected a link between the suicide and Whitewater. The White House said the entry was typical of the notes: An innocent remark easily twisted by political foes.

Speculation that Whitewater had something to do with Foster's death "has since been thoroughly disproven," White House spokesman Mark Fabiani said. Kennedy's entry referred only to press accounts linking the two events, he said.

The notes were taken during a Nov. 5, 1993, meeting between several White House attorneys and Clinton's new personal lawyer, David Kendall. The White House says the gathering was designed to bring the private attorney up to speed on the growing controversy.

Many of the entries support the White House position that Kendall was given information that already was in the public domain. Kennedy refers to reporters and newspapers repeatedly.

But Republicans claimed the notes bolster their belief that White House aides used the power of the presidency to gather confidential information about the criminal inquiry and pass it along to Clinton's private attorney.

"Vacuum Rose Law files," read one entry by Kennedy, a former Rose partner of first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton. "Documents — Never know go out ... Quietly."

Republicans seized on the notation, speculating that "vacuum" was a euphemism for eliminating the files and "never know" was a prediction that a cover up would not be discovered. Republicans have suggested that law firm files were destroyed to suppress damaging Whitewater information, a charge the Clintons flatly deny.

"This give evidence, this points in the direction for the first time, that people may have obstructed justice by the deliberate removal, destruction or — as they call it — the vacuuming of the Rose Law files," Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., chairman of the Senate Whitewater Committee, said in a telephone interview.

"It's nothing, but they'll try to make something of it," said Fabiani, the White House spokesman after notes were released to avert an embarrassing court fight with the Senate.

The White House released a statement by Kennedy from his home in Little Rock, Ark., in which he said the "vacuum" reference applied to an "information vacuum" that had confounded Clinton staffers trying to piece together details of the Whitewater land investment matter.

"Documents — Never know go out ..." referred to the fact that Kennedy did not know how his files came into the possession of the campaign, the statement said.

D'Amato said Kennedy and other aides at the meeting will be subpoenaed, if necessary, to testify before his committee about the notes.

Several entries in the notes discussed information from a criminal referral, meaning the private attorney was given a substantial briefing on the confidential document. Former White House counsel Bernard Nussbaum had testified under oath that information gathered by the White House about the investigation had not been given to anybody outside the White House.

Fabiani said the information passed on to Kendall did not come from the referral, but from newspaper reporters or aide Bruce Lindsey's review of Clinton's gubernatorial campaign records.

Republicans said several items will warrant further investigation, including:

—Jim Blair, a longtime Clinton friend and chief lawyer for Tysons Food Inc., is mentioned several times. One entry says he "could be source of money" to allow Clinton's Whitewater partner, Jim McDougal, purchase stock.

House defies ethics committee; Members to get unlimited royalities

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defying its ethics committee, the House voted Friday to let lawmakers receive unlimited book royalties as long as they have their book contracts cleared by the ethics panel and do not accept advances.

By 259-128, the members rejected a strict curb on income they can earn from books — a proposal that could have cost House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., handsomely in connection with his book, "To Renew America."

The rule adopted Friday applies to book contracts signed after Jan. 1, 1996, so that Gingrich's deal would not be affected. The issue of book sales, which felled a Democratic House speaker in the late 1980s, has bedeviled Gingrich this year.

In Friday's vote, 46 Democrats sided with the majority Republicans. Five Republicans voted against the rule, which covers only House members.

Democrats accused the Republicans of pushing through the rule to shelter Gingrich's royalties. They said it was the first time a recommendation from the bipartisan ethics committee had been weakened in a House vote.

"This vote is for private profit. That's what this is all about," Rep. Rosa DeLauro, D-Conn., said after the House action.

House Democratic Whip David Bonior, D-Mich., referring to the ongoing government shutdown, said, "Veterans are still waiting for their checks ... kids are being denied Christmas presents ... (and) Congress voted to protect its own interest and to protect the speaker's interest to make money."

The original rule proposed by the ethics committee would have cost Gingrich a substantial amount of money. The panel said it proposed the rule because Gingrich left the impression he was using his office for personal gain.

The ethics committee voted 10-0 on Dec. 6 to curb royalty income starting Jan. 1 by putting royalties under the current $20,040 annual cap on outside earned income for lawmakers.

Under present House rules, there are no restrictions on book advances or royalties other than the "usual and customary" contract standard for them.

In overturning the ethics committee's bipartisan proposal, Bonior said, the House has "undermined" the panel. "This was a vicious, savage attack on a bipartisan committee," he told reporters.

Rep. Gerald Solomon, R-N.Y., who introduced the rule, said that by prohibiting lawmakers from accepting advances, it eliminated possible conflicts of interest. But in limiting royalty income, the original ethics committee proposal was too punitive, he said.

"Let's not make members of Congress second-class citizens," Solomon said on the House floor before the vote.

Democrats said the new rule could lead to abuse.

"You leave open the door to multi-million-dollar contracts that we cannot monitor," said Rep. Jim McDermott of Washington, the ethics committee's senior Democrat.

Gingrich's publisher, Harper-Collins, has sent about 650,000 hardback books to stores. At the suggested publisher's price of $24 a copy, sales would be $15.6 million. Gingrich's 15 percent royalty on hardcovers would bring him about $2.3 million.

In 1989, the ethics committee charged former Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, with violating ethics rules through bulk sales of his book. Wright, who was investigated after an initial complaint filed by Gingrich, was accused by the panel of arranging for organizations to purchase books when he bumped up against a limit on speaking fees.

MIDLANDS FIRST ANNUAL BLUE LIGHT CAMPAIGN

During the Christmas season, it is traditional to give gifts to those you care about and those who care for you. The first annual BLUE LIGHT CAMPAIGN is being started as a gift from the community of Midland to the Police Officers of Midland as our way of saying we care, and Merry Christmas to the men and women in blue.

It's simple and significant. It's nothing more than a single electric candle with a blue light placed in your front window throughout the night. It can be displayed with the rest of the Christmas lights, or just by itself. During the day, a Blue Bow placed on your front porch or door would also be a wonderful way to say "I care" for the officers on the daytime shifts.

We, as a community, aren't able to pay these men and women enough for the job they do everyday. That's why, if nothing else, we can give them the gift of love. So, the BLUE LIGHT in the window will enable residents to give the officers a Christmas present that they can carry around with them in their hearts during the holiday season.

With this being the first season to start the campaign, we are going to rely heavily on word of mouth by residents to urge their fellow neighbors to participate and make this a very special Christmas for the police officers of Midland.

Poll shows economy as number one issue for 1996

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democrats enter the 1996 election year viewed as the party best suited to address the top three issues Americans cite as the key to winning their votes, according to an Associated Press poll.

Jobs and the economy topped the list. Education and health care came next, followed by crime and taxes, the poll found.

With the presidential campaign year at hand, the AP poll showed Democrats with an early edge, 42 percent to 35 percent, when respondents were asked which party they trusted to lead the country for the next four years.

Democrats had a similar 40 percent to 34 percent advantage over Republicans when respondents were asked which party would do a better job on the issue that mattered most to them.

Issues and parties aside, a clear majority of Americans — 55 percent — believe their household financial situation will stay about the same in 1996. Thirty-five percent were more optimistic, predicting their financial situation would improve, while 9 percent expected to be worse off.

Economic anxiety was clearest among middle-aged Americans: 39 percent of respondents between the ages of 45-54 cited the economy and jobs as the most important issue.

Overall, 26 percent identified jobs and the economy as most important in shaping their 1996 political thinking, while 18 percent cited education and 16 percent picked health care. Respondents most concerned about these issues said Democrats could do a better job handling them. The Democratic edge was modest on the economy, 37 percent to 31 percent, but lopsided on health care and education.

Fifty percent of voters picking education as their top issue said Democrats were best suited, while 27 percent chose Republicans. Among those who picked health care as their top issue, 58 percent said Democrats could do a better job, while just 13 percent chose Republicans.

"I don't like Republicans," said Rose Bowers, a 36-year-old Pittsburgh optician. "It goes back to the jobs issue."

Scott Merrill, a 29-year-old New Hampshire cab driver, said he was worried "about the elderly and health care and who's going to take care of them, especially if the Republicans should get what they want."

Such comments in AP interviews with voters and data in the separate poll of 1,013 adult Americans offered a glimpse at the political fallout of the budget impasse between President Clinton and Republican congressional leaders. The telephone survey was taken Dec. 15-19 by ICR Survey Research Group, a division of AUS Consultants, and has a margin of error of 3 percentage points for the national sample, slightly higher for the subgroups.

Medicare spending has been a big issue in the budget fight, and the poll showed clear evidence of the political fallout: 30 percent of those 65 and over picked health care as the No. 1 issue — nearly twice the overall figure. Respondents in this age group also sided with Democrats by a 46 percent to 31 percent margin when asked which party they trusted to lead the country for the next four years.

The news wasn't all bad for Republicans, however.

The GOP ran even with Democrats on the question of which party was best suited to deal with crime, an issue that 12 percent of respondents said was most important. And Republicans had a lopsided edge among the 10 percent who said taxes was the top issue: they picked Republicans by a 57 percent to 27 percent margin. Abortion and ethics and morality were cited by a combined 13 percent, and Republicans had big advantages on these.

As Congress engaged in its traditional year-end rush to pass legislation — this one complicated by the budget impasse — respondents gave mixed grades to Republicans for delivering on promises to balance the budget, cut taxes, reform welfare and dramatically shift power from Washington to the states.

Thirty-nine percent said Republicans have not gone far enough, 35 percent said Republicans have gone too far and 16 percent said they had done it just right.

The poll data suggest a possible silver lining for the GOP: Since 4 in 10 Americans believe Republicans have not gone far enough, they could gain if they deliver on promises heading into the election year. Just Friday, Congress voted final passage of a GOP welfare measure, but Clinton has vowed to veto it.

"The Republicans haven't gone far enough with their promises," said Peter Marchesi, a 34-year-old mortgage broker in Boston. "But I think if we elect a Republican president in '96 the party will be more able to come through."

Democrats and Republicans are loyal — by overwhelming margins — to their party when asked who is best suited to handle a particular issue, or who they trust to lead the country.

But critical independent voters appear to be up for grabs.

Asked which party was best suited to address their top concern, 30 percent of independents picked Democrats, 28 percent Republicans. Twenty-nine percent said neither party, and 14 percent weren't sure.

"I think we need some real choices so I'm keeping my eyes open for a third party," said Sheri Kelly, a 27-year-old computer saleswoman in Lakewood, Colo.

Police say Reno's IRS bomb real

RENO, Nev. (AP) — A 30-gallon plastic drum left outside the Internal Revenue Service office building here was packed with explosives, but authorities refused Friday to say what type.

The New York Times reported Friday that the 100-pound bomb contained ammonium nitrate and fuel oil — the same type of ingredients used to blow up the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building in Oklahoma City on April 19.

The Times, citing unidentified law enforcement officials, also reported that the bomb was enhanced by an explosive powder packed in a length of pipe.

Bob Stewart, resident agent in charge of the Reno office of the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, would say only that preliminary laboratory results confirm the device was a bomb.

"As far as the contents of the device, we won't discuss it," Stewart said. Senior resident FBI agent Jerry Hill also refused to comment.

An IRS employee arriving for work discovered the bomb Monday morning in a side parking lot at the building in southwest Reno.

The white plastic drum was wired to a hand truck with muddy wheels and left behind a blue Oldsmobile bearing government license plates. The fuse had been lit, but fizzled before a full explosion occurred.

If it had gone off, the blast would have caused serious damage to the building and cars in the parking lot and could have killed anyone in the vicinity, Stewart said.

Bomb experts dismantled the device before taking samples of its contents for analysis. The rest was taken to the desert east of Reno and destroyed.

While authorities are concerned about growing anti-government sentiment in Nevada, Hill said there is no evidence linking the IRS bomb to three other bombings in the past two years.

The Bureau of Land Management building in Reno was bombed on Halloween 1993. The building, empty at the time, suffered heavy roof damage.

On March 30, a pipe bomb slightly damaged the U.S. Forest Service office in Carson City. The building was unoccupied.

On Aug. 4, a pipe bomb tore through the parked vehicle of Forest Service District Ranger Guy Pence at his home in Carson City. He was away at the time but his family narrowly escaped injury.

No arrests have been made in any of the bombings.

"There's nothing to indicate that any of these bombings are related," Hill said. "In fact, there's more to indicate these are independent actions than there is to indicate there's any relationship between them."

Teacher says Barbie may be poor role model

NEW YORK (AP) — There are rules for the pre-kindergartners in Jeannette Williams' class at Convent of the Sacred Heart school: no yelling, no messes, no Barbie.

"She's a poor role model for children," said Williams, who has taught at the school for seven years. "As an educator of girls, I find her personally distasteful."

While Barbie sales continue to grow — topping $1.2 billion in 1994, compared with about $1 million when the doll debuted in 1959 — some parents and educators are trying to teach kids that the buxom bombshell isn't the only doll around.

"There is a lot of feelings out there that Barbie is not politically correct," said Joanne Oppenheim, co-author of "The Best Toys, Books & Videos for Kids."

"She's still a symbol of the anorexic bombshell that few grow up to be. That's what makes it attractive to kids and a nightmare to parents."

Kids as young as 3 now choose Barbie over "baby" dolls. Mattel Inc. even acknowledges that it's marketing Barbie to a wider audience than the 7-to-9-year-old range it originally targeted.

Mattel spokeswoman Lisa McKendall said it was important to preserve the doll's features in order for the clothing and accessories to fit properly. She also said adult concerns about Barbie's influence on young girls are unfounded.

"Barbie's look isn't relevant to a child when they're playing with Barbie," McKendall said. "I think adults bring a whole set of values and expectations to toys that children don't."

In 1994, 1.5 million Barbies were sold per week. They cost as little as $5. This Christmas, there was a shortage of the white Happy Holidays Barbie.

"I know all my daughter wants is Barbie this and Barbie that," said Jess Schneider, who took her 5 1/2-year-old daughter on a pre-Christmas visit to New York's FAO Schwarz toy store, which devotes sections of two floors to Barbie and Barbie accessories. "But I'm trying to get her to think beyond Barbie by encouraging her to play with other dolls."

Schneider said she has stopped buying outfits for her daughter's one Barbie — which was given to her as a birthday gift from a neighbor.

Some psychologists say that parents must take an active role in how their kids play and what they play with.

"Too many kids are left on their own when they play," said Alan Hack, a clinical psychologist at Downtown Professional Consultants in New York. "But if the child is playing with Barbie and does something stereotypically female, the parent can use the playtime to show a more balanced view."

Oppenheim, who has written 40 books for and about children, suggests that parents broaden their children's array of toys.

"Forbidding your child to play with Barbie is making her more desirable," she said. "But limiting the amount of paraphernalia — you don't need the stretch limo and the yacht — and reminding the kids about other playthings, creates a much healthier play environment."

Citicorp considers headquarters relocation

NEW YORK (AP) — Citicorp, the nation's largest financial institution with a name and history etched into New York, is considering moving its headquarters out of the Big Apple after 183 years.

Chairman John Reed believes the city has too much of a corporate atmosphere and big-money mentality for a global consumer bank, spokesman Jack Morris said.

"He wants (Citicorp staffers) to think more broadly," Morris said in an interview Friday. "He's thinking how this place would operate if senior officers" were not insulated in a city known for high finance and skyscrapers.

With its emphasis on any-time, anywhere services, Reed believes Citicorp would be better off near a technology center such as Northern California's Silicon Valley or Boston, Morris said.

Reed was not available for comment. The possibility of moving from New York was first reported Dec. 14 in The Christian Science Monitor.

Morris said Reed has thought intermittently for years about leaving New York, and though he's given more serious consideration to the matter in recent months no decision has been made.

Citicorp was founded in 1812 as City Bank of New York. Since then it changed names a few times, but always kept the word "city." In 1974, it became Citicorp and is the largest U.S. bank with $257 billion in assets.

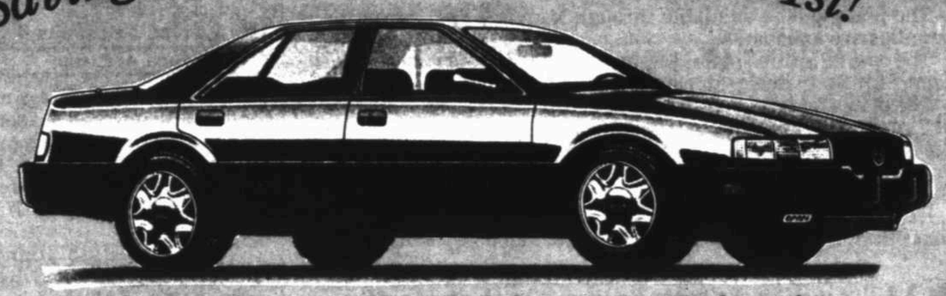

Though far from assured, such a decision would be a major blow to New York. Citicorp is one of the city's largest employers, with more than 20,000 workers at its headquarters and branches. The bank's slope-sided skyscraper anchors Citicorp Center, a major midtown retail space.

But New York is among the most expensive U.S. cities to live and work in, and many corporations have moved to cut costs.

Citicorp, parent company of Citibank, has been slashing expenses through reducing staff, consolidating operations and exiting certain businesses. Some operations, such as securities processing and credit card services, already have been moved out of New York.

Morris said Citicorp would not leave New York solely to cut costs. If it did move, it would relocate company headquarters and perhaps 400 senior managers and staffers, he said.

He said the bank would continue to operate branches, where most employees work.

STATE IN BRIEF

■ Commission issues preliminary order

AUSTIN — The Texas Public Utility Commission has provided the first clue to what utilities will have to prove in seeking higher rates to cover the cost of "stranded investments."

The clues came in a 14-page preliminary order issued Thursday in a rate request filed by Central Power and Light Co.

The panel is asking the utility for more detailed information on its costs companywide, as well as power generating and transmission facilities whose costs are no longer covered by rate revenue.

The new data demands result from increasing utility industry concern about "stranded investments," generally large generating plants built during the 1970s and '80s, when energy costs were higher.

Utilities now contend that, in an increasingly competitive market place, revenue is not covering the cost of paying off the debt from those major projects.

The preliminary order presents the first look at what the PUC wants to know before it would allow a utility to raise rates to cover that revenue shortfall, said Martha Hinkle, PUC manager of financial analysis.

■ Plate commemorates anniversary

AUSTIN — Motorists proud of the Lone Star State soon will have a new way to show their feelings.

The Texas Department of Transportation is issuing a license plate commemorating Texas' 150th anniversary of statehood that will be available beginning Dec. 29, 1995, the actual anniversary date.

The plate will be available through March 1, 1996, or until all supplies are exhausted.

The special-edition plates temporarily will replace the standard Lone Star State design during those months.

The plates feature a shooting star logo and the words, "150 Years of Statehood." They will be available to motorists who buy a new car and those who require a replacement due to loss or damage, or because their current plates are more than five years old at the time of registration renewal.

Replacements may be purchased at the local county tax assessor-collector's office for $5.30, the Transportation Department said.

■ Millionaire faces felony indictments

AMARILLO — The Marsh-Whittenburg feud has been raised to a new level of intensity.

As creator of the avant garde "Cadillac Ranch" automotive sculpture, flamboyant Panhandle millionaire Stanley Marsh 3 is no stranger to controversy.

Now, Marsh finds himself crosswise with the law, indicted on felony charges of kidnapping and aggravated assault, according to Potter County Jail records.

The indictments were sealed, officials with the district clerk's office said, and District Attorney Rebecca King declined Friday to confirm or deny the indictments.

However, Marsh attorney John Montford of Lubbock said the charges track allegations made in a civil lawsuit filed against Marsh on behalf of Ben Whittenburg, 19-year-old son of George Whittenburg, attorney and member of one of Amarillo's most prominent families.

"This feud's been going on for 30 years," said Montford, also a Democratic state senator.

Marsh, 57, posted a $1,000 bond on each count and was released from jail Thursday, records showed.

Ex-civil rights director sues Transportation Department

According to a report by a Transportation Department hearing examiner who looked into the case, Ms. Henry said she fired Bailey for reasons involving his management of the division and instances of insubordination.

AUSTIN (AP) — The former director of the Texas Department of Transportation's civil rights division is suing the agency for more than $2.2 million, saying his firing violated his rights.

Besides the millions in punitive damages, Charles Bailey is seeking reinstatement to an "appropriate position" with the state agency and back pay since his June 1994 firing.

"I've been hurt significantly, but I think in the larger sense, the greatest damage that's been done has been done to the employees in (the agency)," said Bailey, a retired U.S. Air Force colonel who was chief officer of equal employment opportunity at the Texas Rehabilitation Commission before going to the Transportation Department.

"Several (Transportation Department) employees called me in essence and said, 'If this can happen to the director of civil rights, what does that say about me and my civil rights?'" he said Friday.

Transportation Department spokesman Alan King said the agency had no comment on the matter because it involves pending litigation. Bailey's lawsuit was filed this week in state district court in Travis County.

King also said the officials named in Bailey's suit declined comment. They are Commissioner David Bernsen, who was chairman when Bailey was fired; Executive Director Bill Burnett; and Daffney Henry, assistant executive director for human resources management, who fired Bailey.

Ron Dusek, spokesman for the attorney general's office, also had no comment on the pending lawsuit. The attorney general represents state agencies in court.

According to a report by a Transportation Department hearing examiner who looked into the case, Ms. Henry said she fired Bailey for reasons involving his management of the division and instances of insubordination.

Bailey, who said he had been hired to create the division in February 1992, said he was wrongly fired and that officials used improper procedures in terminating him.

He said his firing came two days after he filed a complaint against Ms. Henry with Burnett.

Bailey said in his lawsuit that he received "favorable and congratulatory" performance evaluations before Ms. Henry became his supervisor in October 1993.

His lawsuit says he was fired "in retaliation for exercising his right and duty to defend the civil rights program," which Bailey says Ms. Henry and Burnett tried to dismantle; that the two interfered with his contract with the agency; and that Bailey was subjected to emotional distress.

Among other claims, he says his right to due course of law was violated because proper procedures weren't used after it was decided he would be fired; and that he was denied his right to have his case aired publicly at a Texas Transportation Commission meeting.

The Transportation Department hearing examiner who looked into the case, Heidi Jackson, said in her report that some conduct Ms. Henry considered insubordinate was not, such as Bailey recommending an employee for a transfer.

Ms. Jackson also said some of the alleged instances of insubordination seemed more to reflect miscommunication.

She added, however, that "the record does reflect a tendency on the part of Mr. Bailey to ignore or otherwise not follow directives he disagreed with or decided were unimportant, which constitutes insubordinate behavior."

The hearing examiner concluded that problems regarding Bailey's performance and behavior justified his termination as director of the division.

But Ms. Jackson went on to say that proper procedures weren't followed in his firing. Bailey shouldn't have been immediately terminated, but should have been given a chance to correct the alleged problems, she said.

Mountain's decorations are familiar sight to Texas travelers

By Louise Popplewell
The Victoria Advocate

'Because we love Colorado and we love the mountains, one year my husband said I'll just build us our own little mountain.'
— Joyce Gray

BEEVILLE — First came the mountain and then seasonal decorations which have become a Gray family tradition since the first scene of a man and a huge, round bale of hay went up for Halloween in 1991.

Traveling state Highway 202 between Beeville and Refugio, a stranger might be surprised to see an eight-foot bunny or turkey, in the proper season, perched high up on the 30-foot manmade mountain.

People who travel the road frequently are not surprised. They have come to expect the art work of Joyce and Norman Gray, their four children and their spouses, and seven grandchildren.

The mountain has been there a long time.

"Because we love Colorado and we love the mountains, one year my husband said I'll just build us our own little mountain," Joyce Gray said.

And he did, using dirt dug out for ponds. The final touch was to add two pine trees ... or so they thought.

Then the idea came to add the huge, round bale of hay and a man.

That went up on a smaller hill near the highway. When that scene disappeared — mysteriously on the night of the Refugio High School bonfire — and then a second one vanished, the Grays were disillusioned. So the next holiday they commemorated with larger figures on a taller hill and put a spotlight on it.

Joyce remembers that first effort with affection. The man was dressed in new boots that pinched Norman's toes and an old, old ragged pair of jeans. People teased; "Norman, those must be your jeans ... they look just like you," Joyce remembers with a chuckle.

During the year, the holidays they celebrate are Easter, the Fourth of July, Halloween, Thanksgiving and Christmas. But between holidays, Norman tries to provide some kind of entertainment for motorists. Just recently, the hill was aflutter with decorative flags.

"If there is nothing up there, people will stop and ask us why not," Joyce said. "It has gotten to be quite a tradition. We enjoy it so much and the people and kids of the area do too." While some of the scenes are not lighted, the Christmas one will be.

This year's display is an eight-foot Santa waving to passersby and a four-foot toy bag, and all sizes and shapes of colorful toys tumbling down the mountainside.

The main figures are cut from eight-foot sheets of plywood, hence the eight-foot everything. Toys, Joyce explained, come into being when Norman and son-in-law Kevin Shreckengost twirl a scrap piece of plywood around until something appears.

One of the men might exclaim, "Oh, look this has become a sailboat."

Joyce said everyone helps decide what will go up. The men do the sawing, and she the painting.

Norman Gray might go to bed thinking all the work is done, only to get up the next morning and find Joyce has painted over everything during the night and started over.

"I'm very, very picky about what goes up there," she explained.

Each season sees new additions to last year's scene and each season brings a lot of new visitors from far and near. And there is a lot of picture taking.

Joyce remembers opening a big-city newspaper one day and seeing a bunny. "My, that looks familiar," she thought before realizing it was hers.

The mountain has become a familiar landmark. When people ask directions, Joyce will tell them to stay on the highway until they see an eight-foot witch or whatever is there at the time.

The frequent response, she said is, "Oh. We know where that is."

Joyce said putting up and taking down the decorations is a lot of work and time consuming, but "It's a very interesting thing to do."

The Grays' mountain, which is slowly evolving into several mountains, is on state Highway 202, 12 miles west of Refugio and 20 miles east of Beeville, in Bee County.

Santa relocates operations from North Pole to shopping malls

By Jim Barlow
Houston Chronicle

HOUSTON — Santa has already come to town. You'll find him at the mall.

While Santa used to live at the department store — when he wasn't at the North Pole — he can now be found mostly at the mall. Sure, a few department stores — Marshall Field's and Macy's come to mind — might still have Santa at select stores.

But most department stores prefer to use the place where Santa used to hang out as selling space. Besides, as the marketing guy at one department store chain told me, with all the hysteria about child molestation these days, the stores regard close physical proximity between their employees and your children as a potential lawsuit.

So Shopping Mall Santas now fit right in with the times. They've been outsourced. Companies such as Cherry Hill Photo Enterprises in Cherry Hill, N.J., or Western Staff Services of Walnut Creek, Calif., provide the Santas.

And they too worry about Santa and lawsuits. That's why they spend so much money on background checks and training, says Sandra Graubner, a spokeswoman for Western. It's also why all of Western's 3,000 or so Santas in the United States, Australia and New Zealand always wear white gloves so there is no flesh-to-flesh contact with the children.

And it's one of the reasons children don't sit on the laps of Western's Santas. They sit on Santa's knee.

The other reason is concern for Santa's back. Western teaches him a nifty way to use his leg to boost a child up to a handy talking and photo level. That means fewer workers' compensation claims.

You must remember that Santa is a profit center these days. About 90 percent of the parents who watch their children on Santa's knee also buy a picture of the event — paying anywhere from $6 to $9 for a single photo and more for a package of shots.

The malls and the Santa company split that. The split varies with volume and negotiating clout, but usually the mall winds up with the short end of cash. The outside contractor provides the Santa — with suit — along with assorted elves, managers and the camera. Electronic cameras using computers instead of film to make instant pictures are popular these days.

The mall usually does the Santa setting and often plows back its portion of the Santa proceeds into either the set or marketing of the program.

The money isn't all that big for Santa. The usual shift is four hours a day, for around $7 to $9 an hour. Santas with real beards get more, as do those with great personalities who can really relate to kids. A few Santas — you see them in print advertisements and on television commercials — make professional baseball player salaries.

Mall Santas come from everywhere. Some are actors, playing just another gig. One actor in Chicago plays Santa at Christmas because he likes costume work. Around Easter he plays a bunny. At income tax time, he's outside the Post Office inside a giant Excedrin bottle.

Other Santas come from the ranks of the retired, or the merely unemployed. Many are people with good jobs who take vacations every year just to play Santa one more time.

So why do they do this tough job for little money? And it is tough. You have problems with the costume. There are the children who are frightened of that strange man in the stranger suit and scream "no ho-ho" in your face.

But the toughest part is deflecting all those demands fueled from the incessant marketing we aim at children today — from the commercials on TV to the year's top movie box office attraction, which is designed to be both entertaining and to sell toys.

Santa's job is to take the focus off the gift list and return it to the child.

When asked, the Santas who come back year after year will tell you what keeps them returning is the same thing that attracts the children.

It's magic.

Resident seeks damages from Pantex nuclear test explosion

AMARILLO (AP) — A longtime critic of the Pantex nuclear weapons plant and her husband say they want an estimated $7,000 to repair damage to their home allegedly caused by an Oct. 4 test explosion at the nearby plant.

A plant spokesman said 80 pounds of plastic explosives was set off during an emergency exercise.

"The blast broke my house," said Jeri Osborne, who lives across the road from Pantex, a U.S. government complex where nuclear weapons are disassembled and plutonium is stored.

"It knocked pictures off the wall," she said. "You heard dishes rattling and windows rattling. A fixture over a fluorescent light fell off the ceiling. It cracked the shower and the shower pan."

The blast apparently cracked the slab, brick walls and a water line, Mrs. Osborne and her husband, Jim Osborne, said in a letter to plant officials.

Plant officials offered Osborne a $500 settlement for repairs after visiting their farmhouse to inspect the damage. She told plant officials she would get professional estimates and later found additional wall cracks, plumbing leaks and other damage.

Plant representatives again viewed the house on Thursday and plan to photograph damaged areas of the home, Mrs. Osborne said.

"I don't think we've begun negotiating, but what we have asked the Osbornes to do is give us repair estimates, two estimates, and to put their claims in writing," Energy Department spokesman Tom Williams said. "I think we're intending on trying to negotiate this to some kind of an agreeable settlement between all parties."

Farmers whose land borders Pantex, a 16,000-acre complex 17 miles northeast of Amarillo, said officials alerted them at public meetings that the field exercise would begin with a small but loud explosion producing a plume of smoke.

Mother requests freedom for man accused of teen's death in wreck

AUSTIN (AP) — Saying the 19-year-old man accused of causing her son's death will "suffer enough," the mother of an 18-year-old killed in an alleged drinking-and-driving wreck has asked prosecutors to let Aaron Deking go free.

Alva Reeh, who's son Ryan Reeh died in May after a roll-over crash at an area park, says Deking will face enough suffering through his life without being sent to prison.

More than six months after the crash, a grand jury indicted Deking of intoxication manslaughter on Dec. 11, according to a story published in the Austin American-Statesman on Friday. He faces up to 20 years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

But Mrs. Reeh says she and her family have asked prosecutors not to pursue the case.

"We ... asked that nothing happen to Aaron," Mrs. Reeh said. "We don't want him to go to prison or anything like that."

Prosecutors say probation is possible, and added that it is not unusual for families of victims to oppose prosecution when the accused is a friend.

"We're just going to have to listen to what (the Reeh family) has to say and determine the right thing to do," said Buddy Meyer, an assistant district attorney in Travis County.

Ryan Reeh, a junior at Bowie High School, was at a party and campout on May 20, celebrating the end of the school year.

According to the Department of Public Safety, Deking drove around a curve at the park too fast and the 1991 Mustang he was driving plunged down an embankment and rolled. Ryan Reeh, who was riding in the car, was thrown out. He was not wearing a seat belt.

Mrs. Reeh said she does not personally know Deking, but does not want him punished.

Donation received

Midland Lutheran Church recently received $450 from Lutheran Brotherhood, a fraternal benefit society, through the Society's Congregational Matching Funds program.

Lutheran Brotherhood matched the amount that the congregation raised through a Thanksgiving dinner and Easter breakfast, which took place on Nov. 12 and April 16, 1995.

Midland Lutheran Youth Organ will use the funds it raised and the matching funds from Lutheran Brotherhood for an annual ski trip to Ruidoso, N.M.

Lutheran Brotherhood, a fraternal benefit society, offers a broad range of high-quality financial products and services to Lutherans nationwide. Through its fraternal program, Lutheran Brotherhood aids its members, their communities and Lutheranism. Over the last ten years, Lutheran Brotherhood has contributed more than $360 million to fraternal programs.

Three services set

Midland Lutheran Church, 2705 W. Michigan Ave., offers three worship opportunities on Christmas Eve.

At 10:30 a.m. the Fourth Sunday of Advent Service will be a Communion Service. The Christian Education hour begins at 9:15 a.m. for all ages.

There will be two candlelight services on Sunday evening.

The Christmas Eve Candlelight Carol Services will begin at 6 p.m. This will be a service of familiar carols and candles. Kerri Muldrow will present "O Holy Night" and Ron Brasel will sing "There's a Song in the Air."

At 8 p.m. there will be a Candlelight Communion Service. Special music will be presented by Charlie Oxford.

The public is invited to share in the celebration of the Birth of Christ with Midland Lutheran. A nursery is available for the morning and 8 p.m. services. For more information about these or any programs of Midland Lutheran Church, please call Pastor Glenn Kramer at 694-1373.

Tree to transform

A bare tree sits cold and leafless today in the sanctuary of Midland's First United Methodist Church.

This is a Christmas tree of a different kind.

The Rev. Lane Boyd says the stark tree soon will be transformed into an "enchanted tree."

It is all part of a program designed to put Christ at the center of the Christmas experience for all the church's members.

Boyd says the transformation will occur during worship services through December.

The goal is to raise $100,000 for Missions and local expenses.

The "Enchanted Tree" was created by the late Rev. Thomas E. Hardy. He wanted to unify his Dallas congregation in the Christmas spirit and motivate his members to give extra money for a very special purpose.

Churches across the United States have used the program numerous times. It has helped them spiritually and financially.

Special service set

Odessa Christian Faith Center will be presenting a special Christmas Eve service at 6 p.m. Sunday. This will be a wonderful evening of special music, your favorite Christmas hymns, Communion and candle-lighting. Music featuring Odessa Christian Faith Center's Adult choir, praise team, band and string orchestra together with elementary and pre-school choirs will minister to your heart and set the tone for your entire Christmas experience. Come join us for an unforgettable evening of Christ-centered festivities this year.

Odessa Christian Faith Center is located at 8860 N. Andrews Highway. A nursery and children's church are provided. For more information, please call 368-7714.

"Waiting for a Baby" will be the title of Mary Beth Anton's sermon Sunday at Trinity Presbyterian Church. The worship service will begin at 10:55 a.m. A nursery is available during the worship service. There will be no Sunday School classes this week. If you do not have transportation for Sunday services, call the church office 682-2514 for assistance.

The 11 p.m. service of the Word and Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, celebrating our Savior's birth, will begin with special music by Steve Spain and close with candlelighting. "Who is Waiting Tonight" will be the title of the Rev. Dr. Fane Downs' sermon.

Our Savior's Lutheran Church will hold a Candlelight Christmas Eve Service on Sunday at 7 p.m..

A special candlelight and communion service will be celebrated with featured soloists Joseph Shuffield on violin, Mellisa Omernik on flute and Laurie Allen,

Donation received

Midland Lutheran Church recently received $450 from Lutheran Brotherhood, a fraternal benefit society, through the Society's Congregational Matching Funds program.

Lutheran Brotherhood matched the amount that the congregation raised through a Thanksgiving dinner and Easter breakfast, which took place on Nov. 12 and April 16, 1995.

Midland Lutheran Youth Organ will use the funds it raised and the matching funds from Lutheran Brotherhood for an annual ski trip to Ruidoso, N.M.

Lutheran Brotherhood, a fraternal benefit society, offers a broad range of high-quality financial products and services to Lutherans nationwide. Through its fraternal program, Lutheran Brotherhood aids its members, their communities and Lutheranism. Over the last ten years, Lutheran Brotherhood has contributed more than $360 million to fraternal programs.

Tree to transform

A bare tree sits cold and leafless today in the sanctuary of Midland's First United Methodist Church.

This is a Christmas tree of a different kind.

The Rev. Lane Boyd says the stark tree soon will be transformed into an "enchanted tree."

It is all part of a program designed to put Christ at the center of the Christmas experience for all the church's members.

Boyd says the transformation will occur during worship services through December.

The goal is to raise $100,000 for Missions and local expenses.

The "Enchanted Tree" was created by the late Rev. Thomas E. Hardy. He wanted to unify his Dallas congregation in the Christmas spirit and motivate his members to give extra money for a very special purpose.

Churches across the United States have used the program numerous times. It has helped them spiritually and financially.

Adam Kopulsky dyed his hair pink and now is not allowed to play for his high school team because of it.

Rodman Jr.?

LOS ANGELES — Adam Kopulsky's hair is pink. His high school basketball coach is seeing red. Will the coach blink or will the student bleach? Al Bennett, coach of the Birmingham High School junior varsity team, isn't backing down. He's refused to play Kopulsky for two games since the teen showed up at practice last week with the unusual 'do. Bennett said he won't change his mind until the color is gone.

"I draw the line when I think it's a distraction, when I think he's put himself above the team," Bennett said.

Kopulsky, a 15-year-old sophomore, says he can't understand Bennett's pique over pink. "I don't think hair color matters," he said.

Golf ace dies

HEMET, Calif. — Using a driver, Peter Sedore got a hole-in-one at the Panorama Village Golf Course. Then, he died. Sedore, 83, got his 18th career hole-in-one on the 129-yard fourth hole at Panorama Village on Wednesday. A hole later, he collapsed, and was pronounced dead at Hemet Valley Medical Center, apparently from an aneurysm.

"There was no other way he would have wanted it," said Sedore's son, Dennis, who lives in Rancho Palos Verdes, Calif. "Maybe God wanted him to do it one more time before taking him." The elder Sedore could be found on the links nearly every day.

Nashville stadium

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — The permanent seat licenses for Music City's new stadium don't go on sale until Jan. 8, but 57,000 is the number that officials are hoping to sell by Feb. 15. The relocation agreement Nashville has with the Houston Oilers requires that a minimum of $71 million be raised from the sale of PSLs, the one-time fee for the permanent right to buy season tickets. At an average price of $1,600 a PSL, a sellout would generate about $91.2 million for the $292.1 million stadium deal. The prices will range from $250 and top out at $4,500.

Dallas quarterback Troy Aikman (8) said recently he would never keep playing only to earn a paycheck.

Aikman, Switzer in reported rift

IRVING (AP) — Troy Aikman grumbles and the earth rumbles for the Dallas Cowboys. And the seismographs are twitching at the team's Valley Ranch home.

A reported philosophical rift between the star quarterback and second-year coach Barry Switzer has the coach-player relationship on the rocks, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported Friday.

This isn't the first disagreement for Aikman and Switzer. Aikman had played as a freshman for Switzer at Oklahoma before transferring to UCLA after a difference in philosophy.

Switzer, who says he will remain with the Cowboys next year, downplayed the disagreement and says "outsiders" have long tried to poison his relationship with Aikman.

"Troy gets squeezed all the time by people who have their opinions of me. People who pretend to be his friend are trying to create a separation," Switzer said.

"Troy's got to filter through that and understand we're on the same team here."

Switzer says he has talked over some issues with Aikman. Owner Jerry Jones says he plans to confer with Aikman after the season.

"All Troy wants to do is win," Jones said. "His concerns have to do with the direction we're heading more than with personalities.

"The bottom line is, Troy and I walk in the same shoes here. He has as much at stake in the Dallas Cowboys as I do."

"I know it's totally a business," Aikman said. "I do still get the spirit of competition, the camaraderie with the guys, the emotions. But beyond that, everything that's happened has taken a lot out of me.

"At some point, there will be a physical reason (to retire). Or there will be the fact that it's just no

Stormin' Norman

■ Midland Lee junior John Norman gives state something to remember by being named Defensive Player of the Year.

By Stewart Doreen
Sports Writer

"If you don't wear a name on your jersey, you have to give them something to remember you by."

Those words hang in the locker of Midland Lee defensive back John Norman and serve as a reminder on how he should conduct his business.

That motto was rewarded with the state's highest honor as Norman received the distinction of being named The Associated Press Sports Editors' Class 5A Defensive Player of the Year on Friday.

"That is a great honor," said Norman. "I thought I could be the best in the district but not the best in the state. You can make them remember you for bad or good. I want them to remember the good."

Did he ever. Norman intercepted 10 passes and returned four for touchdowns. He also had an amazing 259 interception return yards, including a Lee record 101-yard interception return against Abilene Cooper.

In addition to the pass defending skills, the District 4-5A Defensive Player of the Year had the speed to make him a key cog in the Rebels' run defense. Those skills make him very valuable to Lee and make the type of player that colleges will drool over in 1996.

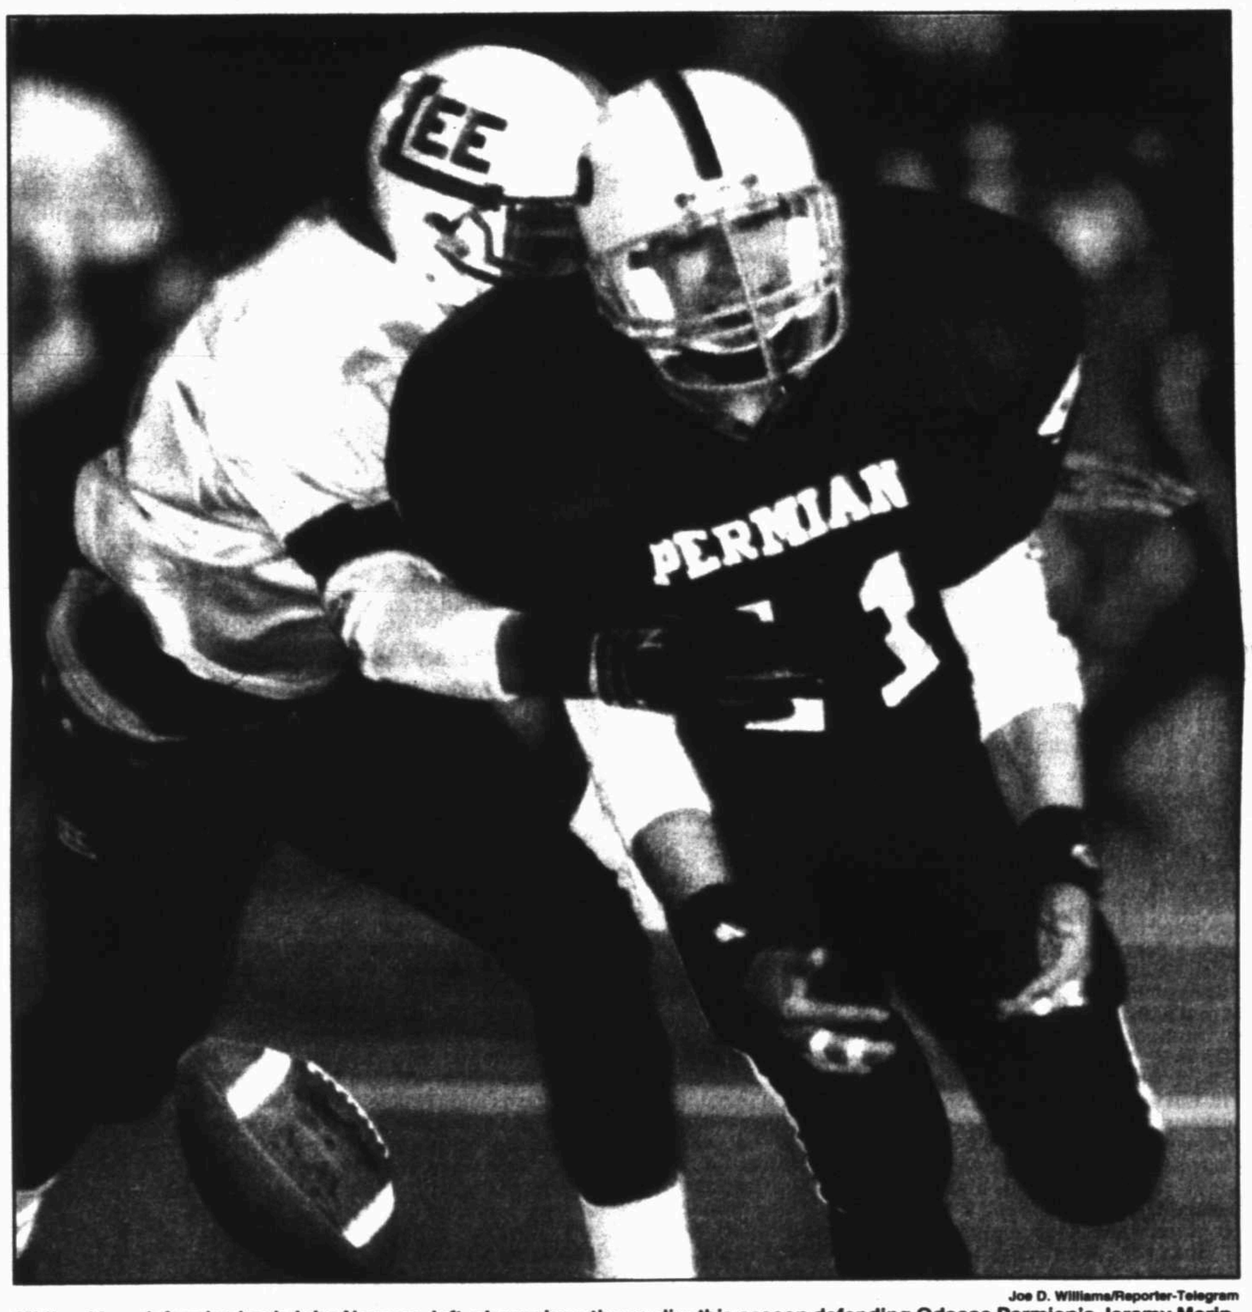

"We feel had he been a senior, he would be a highly recruited athlete," said Midland Lee head coach John Parchman. "That will give him an opportunity to be a leader (next season), and can be a big asset for us."

Norman was also named as a first team defensive back.

Norman, in typical Rebel fashion, credits that the Lee mentality is why he plays at such an elite level. He stresses that individual honors and district titles begin when you have players who have that attitude.

"(It's about) hard work and dedication," said Norman, who said that his goal at the beginning of the season was 12 interceptions (the number of the

Two Midlanders were named to The Associated Press Sports Editors Class 5A All-State football team Friday, including one being named as the Class 5A Defensive Player of the Year.

Midland Lee defensive back John Norman (10 interceptions, 259 return yards, four touchdowns) was named as 5A's defensive player of the year while also earning a berth on the first team as a defensive back (Please see accompanying story). It was the first time in history that a Midland athlete was singled out as 5A Player of the Year. Norman was also the only junior to grace the first team.

Also, Midland High punter/kicker David Leaverton earned a first team berth as a punter and second team honors as a kicker.

Other first team selections from 4-5A include Abilene Cooper defensive back Brandon Berg, giving 4-5A half the defensive backfield. Odessa Permian's David Bobo also earned first team honors as an offensive lineman.

Lee senior center Toby McCarthy was selected as an offensive lineman on the second team as was Odessa High's Matt Hill. Also, Lee defensive senior lineman Ben Acosta earned second team honors along with Permian linebacker Rory Couch, who was the 4-5A defensive player of the year in 1994.

Permian running back Ja'Quay Wilburn and OHS running back LaQueencey Williams received honorable mention notice, bringing 4-5A 12 different mentions on the complete All-State list that includes first team, second team and honorable mention choices.

Chances slimmer free agent Rogers will stay with Rangers

ARLINGTON (AP) — Chances that Kenny Rogers will remain a Texas Ranger have gotten slimmer.

The free-agent left-hander, who established himself as the ace of the rickety Rangers pitching staff last season, rejected what club President Tom Schieffer called a "final" offer from the team.

Unless Rogers' agent Scott Boras reverses his decision, Rogers will be pitching elsewhere next season.

Citing unidentified sources, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported Thursday that the Rangers offered close to $4.5 million per season for four years. Boras said that it is less than market value for his client. He conveyed the same message to the Rangers.

"He rejected the last offer," Schieffer said, adding that the team will not increase the offer.

"There's not anything else to throw in the pot," Schieffer said. "We made our best offer when we went to the fourth year. We've never signed a pitcher to a four-year contract, because of the risk of injury to a pitcher."

Rogers, 17-7 with a 3.38 earned-run average, was the team's best pitcher last season.

"We'd still like to sign Kenny," Schieffer said. "We left the door open to talk some more."

Rogers may yet accept the offer because several teams he had been talking with have already signed front-line pitchers.

The New York Yankees, Cleveland Indians, Baltimore Orioles and Florida Marlins were the clubs most interested in acquiring Rogers and had the financial resources to pay the requisite $4 million plus.

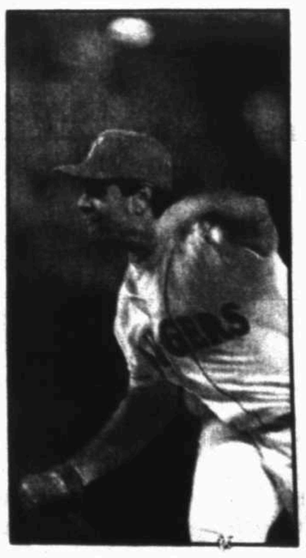

The Yankees re-signed David Cone Thursday. The Indians already signed Jack McDowell. The Marlins said they are out of the bidding for Rogers because they don't want to offer four years.

The Orioles signed second baseman Roberto Alomar to a three-year, $18 million contract Thursday and may not have enough money to pay an expensive pitcher like Rogers.

Yet, Boras said he does have another four-year offer on the table.

Schieffer said he hopes that if Rogers and Boras change their mind about the latest offer from the Rangers, they will do it soon.

La Marque vies for final two-team 4A title

By Jaime Aron
AP Sports Writer

DALLAS — La Marque coach Alan Weddell sees what has happened with the two-tiered playoff format in Class 5A and he doesn't like it. He's not too thrilled that 4A will follow the plan next season when it adds a third team per district to its postseason.

That's just another reason why Weddell and his Cougars are so eager to win today's 4A championship game — he sees some real pride attached to the last consolidated crown the class will be awarding.

"I think it means a lot and we've been telling the kids that too," Weddell said. "It's sort of like winning the last Southwest Conference title."

Marcus quarterback Chris Sanders, who was the Class 5A Offensive Player of the Year, leads his team into the Small School title game.
AP Laserphoto

It's good motivation for La Marque, but probably not needed. The school has never won a state title and everyone is pumped to finally win the big one after losing the last two championship games.

The Cougars are 15-0 this season, same as they were entering last year's title game against Stephenville. La Marque was 14-0 before losing to Stephenville in the 1993 championship. That much postseason experience and the caliber of players who earned it are plenty to worry Denison coach Bob Brown, whose Yellow Jackets also are 15-0 and are seeking the school's first title since 1984.

"The kids are real excited about this opportunity, but we're at a disadvantage in that we haven't been in that situation before and La Marque has," Brown said. "And they're getting to do it on their home-away-from-home at the Astrodome."

That game kicks off at 2:30 p.m. on Championship Saturday.

At noon, Flower Mound Marcus (15-0) and San Antonio Roosevelt (15-0) meet.

Roosevelt went 5-5 last year and now could win its first state championship, making it two this year for District 26-5A as Converse Judson won the Division I title.

Marcus, in only its 10th year, also is seeking its first crown. The Marauders are led by record-setting quarterback Chris Sanders, the 5A offensive player of the year on The Associated Press Sports Editors' all-state team. The Marauders have scored 654 points; six more and they'll have scored the most points for any 5A school in one season.

The 2A game between Celina (14-1) and Alto (15-0) is at 7 p.m. in Texas Stadium. Celina was ranked No. 1 from the preseason until a loss in the season finale. Alto took over the top spot in the season's final poll.

The game also pits the Celina's Moore family vs. Alto's Gamble family. Celina is coached by G.A. Moore, the state's winningest active coach with 305 victories. His son Gary Don is the starting quarterback. Alto is coached by Lucky Gamble. His son Brian is an all-state linebacker.

At 6 p.m. in Brownwood, Thorndale (15-0) will try becoming the first team to repeat as Class A champs since the UIL went to five classes in 1980. Standing in their way is Roscoe, which went 14-1 in its first season under coach Robbie Tindol.

Tindol had the good fortune of inheriting a talented group of kids who have been winning together since middle school. The guys won the state track meet last spring and dedicated themselves then to being big winners in football.

"They used that (track title) as a springboard. It gave them confidence they can run with anybody in state," Tindol said. "These guys are going to perform and act like champions no matter what they're doing. They expect a lot out of themselves. It's been a true pleasure working with them."

This could be Thorndale's last shot at a 1A title for a while. The Bulldogs, who also were champs in 1989, are likely to be going to 2A in the next realignment.

That realignment will be interesting because it also will determine the new look to 4A next season, when the largest of the top three finishers in each district go into Division I and the other two into Division II.

Had that been the case this year, La Marque and Denison each would've been in Division II.

In fact, Weddell said seven of the eight 4A semifinalists would've been in Division II.

The only likely Division I team from that group, League City Clear Brook, likely will be Division II next season because Texas City is expected to fall from 5A into Clear Brook's district, but still be bigger than Clear Brook.

The battle between La Marque and Denison should be interesting because the teams are so similar.

Each team's defense is fast — all starters run the 40 in less than 5.0 — and both have great kickers. La Marque's Russell Bynum was first-team all-state; Denison's Cody Mitchell was second-team.

"When we looked at films, our offensive coaches came in and said it looks like we're playing the La Marque defense," Weddell said. "Then the defensive coaches said it looks like Denison copied our offensive."

Brown said he's gone back to look at films of the last two championship games to see whether Weddell changes his coaching strategy in the big game. He said he didn't find any secrets Denison could exploit.

NORMAN: Junior ready to be team leader next year state's 1994 leader).

"You have to want to win. You have to play up to a standard. Whatever it takes to win. That's what will happen. If I have to intercept five passes in a game, then that's what has to happen."

Putting the team first is what Norman did during Lee's 10-1-1 season and run to the 5A Small School regional round. That attitude is why Parchman thinks Norman will come to play at the same level next season.

"It would be difficult to see how it affects him because he has another year and he can't forget what got him here," said Parchman. "I don't think it will affect him."

Norman agrees saying that being a senior will add the responsibility of providing that leadership. However, Number 38 also realizes that going about his business, and not being concerned with what others think should be enough.

"When I'm on the field, I don't focus on what other people think," said Norman. "I see it as another year. I will be a leader being a senior. It will not affect my play."

With the awards that have come, the respect of the players and coaches in the district and state has followed, that is a given. But getting the acknowledgement from the fans, especially the young ones, has touched Lee's phenomenal athlete, who also plays on the varsity basketball team in his spare time. The lesson not only includes success on the athletic front but success as a well-rounded individual.

"There are many kids who tell me I'm their role model," said Norman. "I have to do something positive."

ALL-STATE: District 4-5A picks up 12 slots on team

(From 1C)

It was thought that MHS' Leaverton, a senior, might have had a chance to land both the first team spots as punter and kicker.

Leaverton had a 62-yard field goal that tied him for second place in Texas high school history and placed him in the Top 10 in the nation for distance. But Temple's Chris Birkholz was given the place kicking role on the first team with 41 of 41 PATs and 10 of 12 field goals. Leaverton was good on seven of eight field goal attempts and 17 of 17 on extra point boots.

Acosta

McCarthy

"I was hoping I could make all-state, but I thought if it happened, it would be the other way around (first team kicker instead of punter)," Leaverton said Friday when told he was named as the top 5A punter in the state.

"When I kicked the 62-yard field goal against Permian, that didn't even make the Texas bests that week, probably because we got beat so bad in that game. That may have had something to do with it. But this is really neat coming either way."

Leaverton has been named as a Top 100 prospect for college by the Dallas Morning News and is highly recruited.

Leaverton was the top punter in 4-5A, however, averaging 42.5 yards per punt to earn first team honors. He had eight punts blown dead inside the 10-yard line and five more inside the 15-yard line. As a punter, he had a long punt of 80 yards, two over 60 yards and seven over 50 yards. He was 4-5A's All-District choice at both punter and kicker.

"This is a kid who has a chance to kick on Saturdays and Sundays before he's through," said MHS coach Ronnie Reeger. "He's the best I've seen."

Leaverton is still waiting on the USA Today high school all-america team for which he has been nominated. And he is also knee deep in the recruiting process.

"We have visits with Tennessee, Texas A&M and Baylor through Jan. 26, and then we'll have to sit down and make a decision," said Leaverton, who has already visited Rice and Miami. "It's tough to fit in five visits before the signing date, but it's going to be one of the most difficult decisions of my life and an important one."

Both McCarthy and Acosta are seniors at Lee and the second team selection is a nice way to end a career. McCarthy started 25 consecutive games at Lee while Acosta started some as a sophomore. Both made it to the state playoffs every year they were on the varsity.

Chris Sanders, who this summer considered quitting football to help care for his ill mother but returned to lead Flower Mound Marcus to the Class 5A Division II title game, was named the offensive player of the year.

Sanders easily was voted the state's top quarterback and he was joined on the first team by offensive lineman Brian Gaither and linebacker Steve Smith as Marcus earned a 5A-best three first-team selections.

Behind that trio, Marcus is 15-0 heading into Saturday's championship game against San Antonio Roosevelt, also 15-0.

Roosevelt's biggest task will obviously be trying to stop Sanders.

The 6-foot, 215-pound senior has led 5A in passing the last two regular seasons, but never earned much attention for it. Texans mostly pay attention to running backs, so quarterbacks must be top college prospects or incredible record-setters to get the praise they often deserve.

Sanders has done the latter.

With one game left in his career — Saturday's championship against San Antonio Roosevelt (15-0) — Sanders has thrown for 7,261 yards in two seasons, including 4,444 this year.

According to the 1995 National High School Record Book, only 26 players in the country have ever thrown for 7,000 yards. None did it in two seasons, as Sanders has.

His career yardage is the fourth-best in state history and his 40 touchdown passes this season are third-best by a Texan. As a result, Marcus is six points away from being the highest-scoring 5A team in state history.

"The main thing is he has a great arm," Marcus coach Que Brittain said. "And he has great touch. If he needs to throw a bullet between two defenders, he can do that. And if he needs to drop it in over a linebacker, he can do that."

The best part of Sanders' success is that his mother has been able to enjoy it. Debbie Sanders has missed only three games this season as she battles Hodgkin's disease.

Where Sanders will play next season is still up in the air. He's not considered a blue-chip recruit, but he's a good student and could shine in the right kind of offense.

Elsewhere on the all-state team, there was a definite North Texas tilt to the offensive line.

Four of the five selections are from the Dallas-Fort Worth area: Jeff Barnett of Richardson Lake Highlands, Ahmad Johnson of Arlington Lamar, Plano's Chris Valletta and Gaither, the only junior on the first-team offense. The lone non-North Texan was Permian's Bobo.

The first-team backfield was highlighted by the return of last year's selection Darrell Bush, a Jersey Village star who ran for 2,029 yards in the regular season.

Other picks were Mike Green of Klein and Brownsville Hanna's Tony Ellis, who led 5A with 2,309 yards and 174 points. Ellis finished his career as 5A's second-best rusher with 5,523 yards.

The receivers were Georgetown's Matt Domingues (64 catches for 1,097 yards) and Quincy Morgan of South Garland, who turned 43 catches into 939 yards.

Two defensive players returned from last year's all-state squad, linebacker Shannon Brazzell of Lewisville and lineman Enoch Jackson of Fort Worth Wyatt.

Wyatt was the only school besides Marcus to have multiple first-teamers as it was represented by Jackson and defensive back LeAundre Brown.

The APSE All-State team is based on regular-season performance. Nominations for the sixth annual team were made during the season and votes were cast before the playoffs.

Temple knocks off No. 1 Kansas

The Associated Press

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — John Chaney has no one to blame but himself and no one deserves as much credit either.

Just nine days after beating then-No. 2 Villanova, Temple beat No. 1 Kansas 74-66 in overtime Friday night in the opening game of the inaugural Jimmy V Classic at the Meadowlands.

Chaney does the scheduling. He also does the coaching.

"Everybody we play has a number. They're No. 5, No. 1, No. 10. There's a lot of numbers out there," Chaney said after his Owls (3-4) scored the first 10 points of the overtime to take control against Kansas. "I schedule as many tough teams as I can. The more tough teams you play the more character you develop."

The Owls lost to No. 9 Cincinnati in between the wins over Nos. 1 and 2 and things didn't look too good for them against the Jayhawks (7-1).

Jerod Haase of Kansas was at the free throw line with 8.2 seconds left in regulation and the score 56-56. He was 10-for-10 from the line until then, but missed both. Temple didn't even get a shot off, but it didn't matter.

No. 2 Massachusetts 75, No. 21 Georgia Tech 67

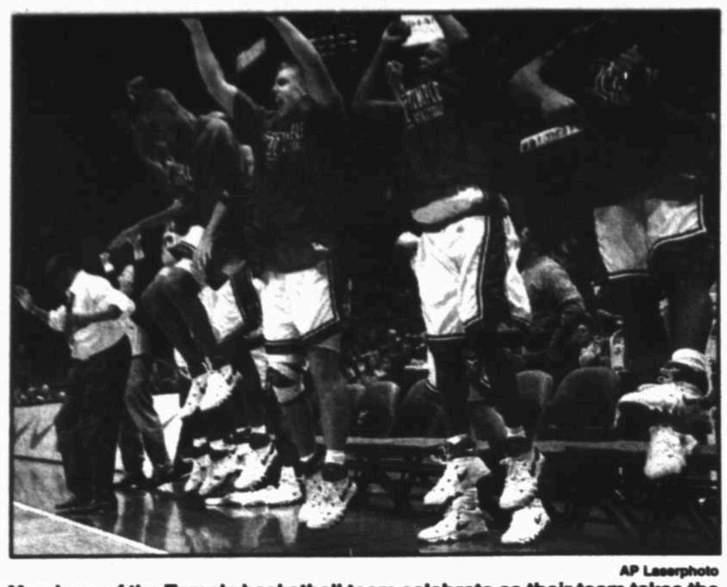

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Playing hours after top-ranked Kansas was beaten, Massachusetts took advantage of the opportunity to move to the top of the poll with a victory over Georgia Tech.

The Minutemen (7-0) weren't as impressive as in their other victories this season, but they took control with a 9-0 run midway through the second half of the second game of the Jimmy V Classic and weren't really threatened. Marcus Camby had 18 points to lead the Minutemen, who had five starters in double figures. They accounted for all but five of the points.

No. 7 Villanova 80, New Orleans 72

NEW ORLEANS — Kerry Kittles shook off one of the poorest performances of his career, coming back to score 30 points and lead Villanova to a victory over the University of New Orleans.

Villanova (8-1) could not put the game away until the final five minutes when it outscored New Orleans 12-2, with Kittles scoring seven of the Wildcats' final points.

Members of the Temple basketball team celebrate as their team takes the lead against No. 1-ranked Kansas in overtime. Temple won 74-66.

New Orleans' only basket was a wild leaping leaner by Jermaine Spivey.

Nine days after Kittles missed 12 of 14 shots in Villanova's loss to Temple, he started off slowly against New Orleans. Kittles, who holds 13 school records, did not score for the first 7 1/2 minutes. But after finding his mark, Kittles had 16 points in the first half, including 10 of 10 free throws.

Sophomore Carr scores career-high 27 as Texas Tech stays unbeaten

The Associated Press

LUBBOCK — Sophomore guard Cory Carr poured through 19 points in a stretch of 7:25 as unbeaten Texas Tech beat Brigham Young 81-71 Friday night.

Carr was seven for seven from the floor in the first half — including five 3-pointers — and finished with a career-high 27 points for the Red Raiders (7-0).

It was Tech's seventh victory of the season and 22nd in a row at home.

Tech trailed 13-8 at the time but a driving baseline layup and 3-pointer from Koy Smith tied it 13-13.

■ SWC Roundup

Jeff Campbell led BYU (5-3) with 20 points. Kenneth Roberts and Byron Ruffner had 19 each.

The Cougars took their last lead on a Kenneth Roberts free throw. But Carr responded with back-to-back 3-point buckets, putting the Raiders ahead for good.

TCU 89, Coppin St. 86

FORT WORTH — Texas Christian freshman Damian Walker amassed a team-high 29 points, including a scoring burst with nine minutes remaining that pulled the Horned Frogs from a deficit to an victory over Coppin State .

Walker tossed in three mid-range jumpers with TCU trailing 72-65.

Also, junior Jeff Jacobs hit a pair of free throws to put the Frogs in the lead again, 76-75, with 6:06 remaining.

With the score tied at 82, the point guard accounted for the next six points by TCU (6-4) with two free throws and a three-pointer for an 84-84 tie with 48 seconds left.

Jacobs made another free throw the finish with a season-high 24 points.

Shaq sacks Ewing, Knicks in 111-90 win

The Associated Press

ORLANDO, Fla. — Shaquille O'Neal scored 28 points, grabbed 12 rebounds and blocked six shots Friday night to win another personal matchup with Patrick Ewing and lead the Orlando Magic to a 111-90 victory over the New York Knicks.

The defending NBA scoring champion only had eight points after halftime but broke a 16-minute drought to help the Magic hold off the Knicks, who fell behind by 19 in the first quarter and never got closer than 14 the rest of the way.

Bulls 113, Raptors 104

CHICAGO — Michael Jordan had 27 points and 10 rebounds and Scottie Pippen added 25 points as Chicago won its 12th consecutive game.

Steve Kerr and Bill Wennington came off the bench to score 16 points each for Chicago, which improved to 22-2 overall and 12-0 at home. The Bulls were 11-of-19 from 3-point range, including 5-of-10 by Pippen and 4-of-5 by Kerr.

Celtics 114, Timberwolves 113

BOSTON — Dana Barros and Todd Day each got his name in the record books while helping the Boston Celtics improve their record to .500.

Barros sank a 3-pointer for an NBA-record 80th consecutive game. Day scored 24 of his career-high 41 points in the second quarter to tie Larry Bird's team record for points in a quarter.

But it wasn't until Dino Radja made one free throw with 2.4 seconds left to break a 113-113 tie that the Celtics' record improved to 12-12. The Timberwolves posted their fifth consecutive loss — three of then since Flip Saunders replaced Bill Blair as head coach.

Pacers 90, Mavericks 79

INDIANAPOLIS — Mark Jackson scored half his 20 points in the fourth quarter and the Indiana Pacers pulled away to a victory over struggling Dallas.

The Pacers won for the sixth time in seven games, their strongest run of the season.

George McCloud, an Indiana draft pick released after the 1992-93 season, scored 19 points for Dallas while playing for the injured Jamal Mashburn. The loss was the fourth in a row for Dallas, which is 3-16 since winning its first four games of the season.

Bucks 99, 76ers 94

PHILADELPHIA — Vin Baker scored 10 of his 22 points in the fourth period and Glenn Robinson added 19 as Milwaukee defeated Philadelphia.

Two in-season additions also had big games for Milwaukee. Sherman Douglas, acquired last month from Boston, had 16 points and nine assists. Benoit Benjamin, picked up in a trade with Vancouver, had 12 rebounds.

Clarence Weatherspoon had 21 points and 12 rebounds for Philadelphia, while Sharone Wright had 19 points.

■ NBA Roundup

Pistons 84, Heat 75

MIAMI — Grant Hill scored 24 points and Allan Houston added 22 as Detroit held off a late Miami comeback and won its third straight game. The injury-riddled Heat have lost seven of eight games, scoring less than 94 points in each of the losses. Detroit led by as many as 18 in the first half, but saw its lead dwindle to six with three minutes to play before Hill made four free throws in the final 1:26 to seal the win.

Hawks 94, Nets 91

ATLANTA — Grant Long scored a season-high 23 points, including a pair of crucial free throws with 8.7 seconds remaining, and Mookie Blaylock had a key block of a last-second 3-point attempt to preserve Atlanta's victory. It was the second straight win for the Hawks but just their third in 10 games. The Nets lost their fifth in a row.

Suns 101, Grizzlies 80

VANCOUVER, British Columbia — The Phoenix Suns had no problem with Vancouver, opening a 21-point halftime lead and a 35-point edge after three quarters.

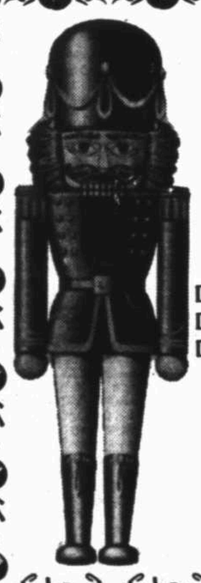

Charles Barkley had 24 points to lead six Phoenix players in double figures. Wayman Tisdale and A.C. Green added 13 each. The Grizzlies, playing their seventh game in 10 nights, were led by rookie Bryant Reeves with 19 points.

North Texas investor Hicks close to icing deal to purchase Stars

DALLAS (AP) — North Texas investor Thomas O. Hicks was close Friday to putting the Dallas Stars under his Christmas tree. At the same time, Norman Green is growing reflective over his five years as sole owner of the hockey franchise and three years in Dallas.

For Green, the signing of the papers expected to transfer the NHL team to Hicks will mark the end of 16 years of owning NHL hockey teams, from Calgary to Minnesota to Dallas.

The sale to Hicks, chairman of Hicks, Muse, Tate & Furst, will still require league approval, expected next month. Green will stay on the team payroll for 10 years as a consultant.

"I've been an owner and a fan. What I've enjoyed the most is the fan part, so I'm going back to what I enjoy most," he said.

Hicks reached an agreement with Green two weeks ago to buy the team for $84 million, including $79 million immediately and a 10-year consultancy for Green, valued at $5 million.

Green, who took sole control of the Minnesota North Stars in 1990 before moving them to Dallas for the 1993 season, says he has enjoyed his years as an owner. However, he regrets that Dallas fans haven't yet experienced the excitement of a Stanley Club championship.

Green also conceded that leaving Minnesota's hockey fans in a lurch when he moved the club to Dallas still hurts.

The best of times for Green came in 1989 when, as part-owner of the Calgary Flames, he sipped champagne from the Stanley Cup, emblematic of the NHL championship. Two of his teams, most recently the Minnesota North Stars in 1991, reached the Stanley Cup finals.

For all the enjoyment Green claims to have received as an NHL owner, it was seldom productive for him financially. The North Stars lost $20 million in three seasons. Once in Texas, the Stars piled up another $10 million or more in debt in the first two seasons at Reunion Arena.

ROGERS: Five free agents pick new teams

(From 1C)

"We can't continue to sit here and wait," Schieffer said. "If (Rogers) is not going to be here, we have to put together a team. I think we have to explore all possibilities. We need to put a pitching staff together."

Hill, Henneman to Texas

NEW YORK — With David Cone's future decided, five other free agent pitchers picked their new teams Friday.

Kevin Brown got the biggest deal, a $12.9 million, three-year contract with the Florida Marlins. Next was Ken Hill, who agreed to a $8.15 million, two-year deal with the Texas Rangers, who also agreed to a $2 million, one-year contract with reliever Mike Henneman.

Erik Hanson and the Toronto Blue Jays agreed to a three-year contract worth about $9.5 million. And Jamie Moyer and the Boston Red Sox agreed to a one-year contract worth at least $600,000.

Other deals were percolating. Andy Benes and the St. Louis Cardinals were said to be close to a two-year contract for about $8 million. Kenny Rogers, according to some agents, was nearing a decision to re-sign with Texas.

But Rogers' agent, Scott Boras, said no deal was near with the Rangers.

More Sports/12C

Among non-pitchers, third baseman Todd Zeile and the Philadelphia Phillies agreed to a $2.5 million, one-year contract. Infielder Craig Grebeck and the Marlins agreed on a minor-league contract that will pay him $400,000 if he makes the big league club.

Brown, 30, spent nine seasons in the Rangers organization before signing with Baltimore last spring. He was 10-9 with a 3.60 ERA for the Orioles and made $4,225,000. His deal with the Marlins pays him $3.6 million next season, $4.5 million in 1997 and $4.8 million in 1998.

"I'm looking forward to coming here to a very young promising team," he said. "Maybe the Braves won't be able to stay on their pedestal."

Hill, who helped the Indians to their first AL pennant since 1954, gets $3.5 million next year and $4.25 million in 1997. Texas and Hill have a mutual option for 1998 at $4.6 million with a $400,000 buyout. He made $4,375,000 last season.

Henneman will receive $2 million in 1996 and Texas has an option for $2.1 million in 1997 that becomes guaranteed if he pitches in 55 games next season. He had a $4.5 million salary in 1995.

"These two signings certainly strengthen our 1996 pitching staff," Rangers general manager Doug Melvin said. "Ken Hill has been one of the top starting pitchers in baseball over the last five years and Mike Henneman is a solid closer who had one of his best seasons in 1995."

Hanson, 30, was 15-5 last season with a 4.24 ERA. He spent the first six years of his major league career with Seattle and Cincinnati before moving to Boston for the 1995 season.

"I know the Blue Jays are in the process of r building but that appeals to me because I'd like to be part of that," Hanson said. "I'm approaching the prime of my career and I look forward to being part of making Toronto a winner again."

Zeile, 30, became a free agent Thursday when the Chicago Cubs failed to offer a 1996 contract. He hit .246 this year with 14 homers and 52 RBIs. St. Louis traded him to Chicago during the season.

"He's the right-handed bat we've been looking for," Phillies general manager Lee Thomas said. "He'll fit right in the middle of our lineup nicely."

'Today' host Katie Couric nears Joan Lunden in on-air, off-air achievements

NEW YORK — She's ahead in the ratings, and now Katie Couric is pulling closer to Joan Lunden in an off-the-air achievement.

Couric made her last live appearance on the "Today" show Friday before beginning maternity leave. Her second child is due Jan. 5.

"Good Morning America" host Lunden was one of some three dozen show-biz and political figures wishing her well in a prerecorded feature.

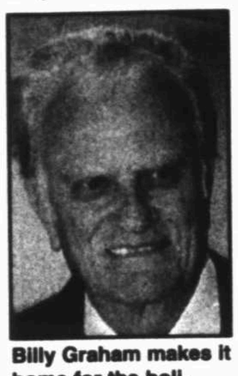

"Been there, done that," Lunden said. "Three times, in fact."

Other greeters included Annette Bening, who warned, "Your sleep is over," and first lady Hillary Clinton, with a simple, "The very best, Katie."

Until Couric returns to the top-rated NBC morning show in mid-March, her anchor's chair will be filled by Elizabeth Vargas, Maria Shriver and Jane Pauley. But thanks to videotape, Couric will be seen on various NBC shows for several more days.

NEW YORK — Home for the holidays: Billy Graham.

Billy Graham makes it home for the holidays.

The 77-year-old evangelist left Beth Israel Medical Center after a 10-day stay and headed home to North Carolina for Christmas. The 77-year-old minister fractured four ribs and bruised his right shoulder after falling in the shower of his Manhattan hotel room Dec. 12.

Walking with a cane, Graham hugged a nurse and said he felt "fine." In a statement, he praised his doctors and said, "Overall, I am still in good health and expect to have several more years to preach the gospel."

Doctors operated on the 84-year-old founder of the Spoleto Festival on Monday night to remove a hematoma, a tumor-like lump of clotted blood, that resulted from a fall in his home.

He has left intensive care, "but will be spending Christmas with us," said Dr. Aristide Paci, head of the neurology department at the hospital in Terni.

Menotti founded the Spoleto Festival dei Due Mondi 38 years ago and the Spoleto Festival USA in Charleston, S.C., 18 years ago.

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — Hoping to be home for the holidays: Jimmy Stewart.

The star of "It's a Wonderful Life" and "The Philadelphia Story" suffered a minor head injury when he tripped and fell in his home Thursday night. He left one hospital early Friday but later went to another for observation.

Jimmy Stewart hopes to be home for Christmas.

"Somebody sent him a plant and he didn't know it was there. Apparently he tripped over it and hit his head on a table leg," said Stewart's longtime publicist, John Strauss.

Strauss said Stewart was expected to leave St. John's Hospital in Santa Monica later Friday. "He's 87 so he's no spring chicken, but he's going to be with us for a long time," Strauss said.

LOS ANGELES — A judge's $5 million threat got the Material Girl's attention.

After Madonna failed to show up Thursday at a court hearing for a man accused of stalking her, Superior Court Judge Andrew Kauffman warned she would be arrested and held on $5 million bail if she failed to appear Jan. 2.

Prosecutors say they need her testimony to prosecute Robert Dewey Hoskins, who allegedly threatened the singer and her employees and twice invaded her Hollywood Hills property, where Madonna's bodyguard shot him in May.

Madonna's lawyer, Nicholas DeWitt, told Kauffman that the star was tired and sick after a stay in Europe, and has to be in Argentina soon to film the movie "Evita," in which she is to star.

But Dewitt promised she'll appear Jan. 2.

He received the degree from HSU President Lanny Hall at commencement exercises.

Wood is a former pastor of Crestview Baptist Church in Midland.

Carpenter to visit

ODESSA — On Sunday, Dec. 31, Marj Carpenter, moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), will continue her odyssey as she visits the Permian Basin to deliver her message to fellow Presbyterians.

Carpenter will address combined Sunday School classes at 9:30 a.m. in the Fellowship Hall of First Presbyterian Church, located at 1401 N. Sam Houston Ave. She will preach at the 10:50 a.m. worship service, and members and guests will have an opportunity to meet the church leader at a luncheon following the worship service.

Marj Carpenter is the eighth woman to be elected moderator of the Presbyterian Church in more than 40 years.

While holding the highest elected office in the denomination, the 69-year-old Big Spring resident travels across the world serving as the conscience and the voice of the PCUSA. Carpenter's response to being too old to serve as moderator was a Robert Frost quote: "The woods are lovely, dark and deep, but I have promises to keep, and miles to go before I sleep."

■ Cardinal embraces death as a friend

CHARLESTON, S.C. — Cardinal Joseph Bernardin says he has learned to look on death as a friend during his fight against pancreatic cancer.

Bernardin, a Columbia native and leader of the 2.3 million-member Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Chicago, said he was frightened when he was diagnosed last June.

"We can face death in one of two ways. We can look at death as an enemy or we can look at death as a friend," said the cardinal, who has started a special ministry for cancer patients in the archdiocese.

Embracing death helps people find peace, he said recently.

"For 44 years as a priest, I have always told people to put themselves in the hands of the Lord and to be people of faith," he said, adding that he has had to take his own advice.

Bernardin, 67, was in town to mark the close of the 175th anniversary of the statewide Diocese of Charleston.

Earlier, he told reporters that doctors have given him a 25 percent chance of living more than five years.

His only Christmas wish is to share, he said. "I am so full of love, and all I want to do is give that love to everyone."

■ Ministers plea for shorter store hours

LUBBOCK — Christians belong in church — not at the mall — on Sundays, a dozen ministers said in a plea for retailers to open no earlier than noon on Christmas Eve.

The ministers said they made the request out of concern for the spirituality of shoppers and store employees.

"The Christmas season has been negatively impacted already by excessive consumerism," said the Rev. Michael Passmore, pastor at the First Christian Church.

"Having stores open on Christmas Eve Sunday can only feed that distressing trend," Passmore said at a recent news conference.

Few people at South Plains Mall seemed to mind that the department stores plan to open at 8 a.m. Dec. 24. The mall usually opens at noon on Sundays.

Several store managers declined to comment, saying that their corporate offices set Christmas Eve policy.

The ministers said they would contact stores and ask them to reconsider their hours.

"This is one time the churches of Lubbock, regardless of their denomination, speak with one voice: the voice of concern," said the Rev. D.L. Lowrie, pastor of First Baptist Church.

Passmore said the ministers understand the big economic impact of Christmas on businesses. But, he said, "I don't think the dollars they gain will be worth the grief they cause their employees or us in the religious community."

■ Judge wants Ten Commandments hearing

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — A county judge wants the U.S. Supreme Court to hear his legal battle over his practice of displaying the Ten Commandments in his courtroom and opening his court sessions with prayer.

"I have a right to acknowledge God. I want the end result to be complete freedom of religion in this country," Etowah County Judge Roy Moore said at a recent fund-raising rally at Lighthouse Church.

The American Civil Liberties Union and several Etowah County residents sued Moore in March, accusing him of violating the separation of church and state.

Moore countersued recently, accusing the ACLU of infringing on his First Amendment rights.

Moore said he wants a ruling prohibiting the ACLU from "intimidating" him into removing religion from his courtroom.

The lawsuits are pending before a Montgomery County judge.

"All I've done is acknowledge God. And any law that forbids an acknowledgment of God is an infringement of my rights and creates a new religion, a religion where man follows only the rules of man and not God," Moore told the crowd.

■ School's president bids students farewell

PROVO, Utah — Rex E. Lee, the 10th president of Brigham Young University, admonished 5,500 students and faculty members in a farewell address to lift their eyes to life's miracles.

"I've learned so many things from you the students, faculty and staff," a visibly shaken Lee told those attending his campus farewell. He is resigning Jan. 1 for health reasons.

"I've learned from and been strengthened by great examples of courage, steadfast and determined devotion to eternal principles. And how miracles, grand and small, occurring in one person's life can have profound effects in other lives."

Lee, 60, has been president of the Mormon Church-owned university since 1989.

His resignation was announced in June, and the appointment of Merrill J. Bateman was announced in October by Gordon B. Hinckley, president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

If any team needs bowl win, it's A&M

By Mark Babineck
Associated Press Writer

If any team needs a victory during bowl season, it's the Texas A&M Aggies.

The team's high points came before the season's opening kickoff. The Aggies were ranked No. 3 and junior running back Leeland McElroy appeared poised to make a run for the Heisman Trophy.

At the end of the regular season, the Aggies had settled for No. 19, McElroy was capping an injury-plagued season and the team had lost to the Longhorns 16-6.

Since then, three A&M players have been suspended and McElroy has aggravated his ankle injury. It's not exactly the best way to kick off preparations for Thursday's Alamo Bowl in San Antonio against No. 14 Michigan.

McElroy's Heisman hopes were dashed when he badly sprained his left ankle in a 14-7 loss to Texas Tech on Oct. 7. He missed the following week's game, which A&M barely won at home against Southern Methodist.

McElroy, a junior, was injured again Monday when a teammate rolled over his tender left ankle during a workout in full pads.

The good news for A&M seems to be that as McElroy's prospects fell in 1995, the likelihood improved that he would return for his senior year rather than declare for the NFL draft.

"Leeland has not had the kind of year that would warrant him coming out now," coach R.C. Slocum said. "My recommendation is for him to come back. I'd hate to see him leave after what has, without a doubt, been a disappointing season."

An X-ray detected no break and McElroy's brother, Lee McElroy, said Leeland will be ready to go against the Wolverines. However, his troubled teammates, who probably wouldn't have been a factor against Michigan, won't be making the trip.

Defensive lineman David Maxwell and running back Michael Williams, both reserves, were suspended earlier this month following arrests on charges of assaulting a school-employed monitor at a fraternity party.

Another reserve defensive linemen, end Zerick Rollins, was suspended shortly after the Texas game because of a separate assault charge.

Most teams would have gladly traded records with A&M (8-3), but the Aggies have established a higher standard for football success over the past decade. They have beaten arch-rival Texas 10 of the previous 11 times and posted the best Southwest Conference record for four straight years.

An NCAA-imposed probatio for questionable payments by a Dallas booster to some star players knocked A&M out of contention for the SWC title in 1994, but the Aggies were poised to make a statement in 1995, the conference's final season.

Instead, the Longhorns went out as champs.

"It's very upsetting, especially against a rival like Texas," A&M quarterback Corey Pullig said afterward. "It's not easy to swallow."

Blame Pullig for some of the choking. A starter since his freshman season, Pullig appeared to regress instead of progress as a senior.

"It's been tough at times, but I've been so blessed and so fortunate that it's really hard for me to complain," Pullig said. "At times I felt like I have taken heat undeserving, but that is the nature of the position and the nature of the game."

The Aggies finished with the best record in the SWC in Pullig's first three years, then settled for a second-place tie this season.

"The team has done so well under his leadership that it almost maximizes the games that we lost," Slocum said. "The losses become bigger because we only lost two conference games during that period of time.

"You can always look at people's shortcomings or dwell on some flaw, but I'm going to remember Corey for all the positive things he's done. He'll leave here the winningest quarterback in A&M history."

Nine Michigan players native Texans

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — This year's homecoming games are long gone for Texas A&M and the University of Michigan. But the teams' matchup in the Dec. 28 Alamo Bowl is a homecoming game of sorts for a handful of Michigan players.

Led by senior receiver Mercury Hayes and junior linebacker Jarrett Irons, a total of nine Wolverine players are native Texans.

"It was great when I found out that I was coming home for this game, but I sure expected Texas weather, not this," Irons said on Thursday after Michigan's first Texas practice at Trinity University.

A cold snap pushed temperatures down to the mid-40s through most of Texas as the 14th-ranked Wolverines (9-3) began practice for next Thursday's Alamo Bowl against No. 18 Texas A&M (8-3).

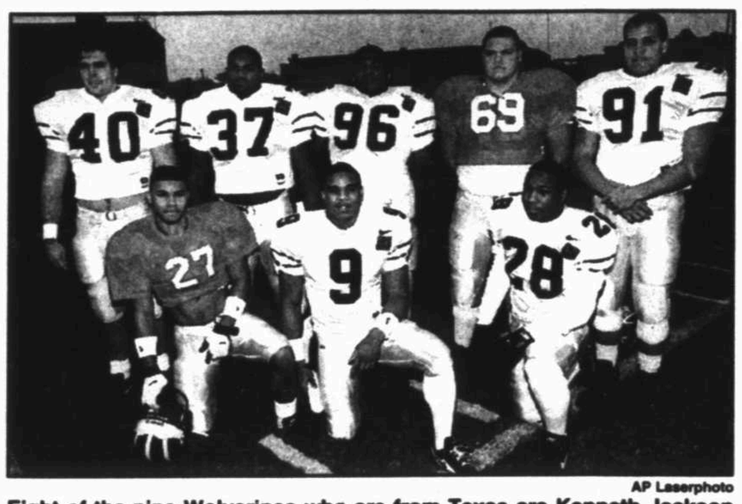

The cold temperatures were expected to remain through the weekend.

"It's just going to be fun to play in this state again," said Irons, who is from The Woodlands outside of Houston."

Hayes, a native Houstonian, said each bowl game is different. But he said wrapping up his season and college career in front of friends and family makes this bowl game special.

"I'm very excited to come home and finish my season here," said Hayes, who said he needs about 30 or 40 tickets. "A lot of people didn't get to see me play in person, so it's a great feeling."

Eight of the nine Wolverines who are from Texas are Kenneth Jackson (27), Josh Williams (91) Mercury Hayes (9), Daydrion Taylor (28), George Howell (40), Jarrett Irons (37), William Carr (96) and Steve Frazier (69).

■ NFL Roundup

The Associated Press

The site is Lambeau Field in Green Bay, Wis., and a division title is on the line. The date is Dec. 24. The question is, what year is this?

The Packers are 10-5 and haven't won 11 games in a season since they were 12-2 under Vince Lombardi in 1966, but this isn't the '60s anymore. This is the 1995 Packers, and they face Pittsburgh Sunday with a lot riding on their season finale.

"I'm glad this game means something," said Packers coach Mike Holmgren, whose team clinched its third straight playoff berth with a victory at New Orleans last week.

Now, the NFC Central Division title is at stake for Green Bay, while Pittsburgh (11-4) could earn the home-field advantage throughout the AFC playoffs with a victory.

"I don't think we'll rest any of our players," Steelers coach Bill Cowher said.

The Packers haven't won the NFC Central outright since 1972, and Lambeau Field would be a likely place for Pittsburgh's eight-game winning streak to end. The Packers have won 16 of their last 17 at Lambeau, including a victory over Detroit in the playoffs last season.

The NFL schedule has three games today — San Diego at the New York Giants, Detroit at Tampa Bay and New England at Indianapolis.

Sunday's schedule has Houston at Buffalo, Seattle at Kansas City, Cleveland at Jacksonville, San Francisco at Atlanta, Philadelphia at Chicago, New Orleans at the New York Jets, Minnesota at Cincinnati, Carolina at Washington, Denver at Oakland and Miami at St. Louis.

Dallas is at Arizona in the season finale Monday night.

Pittsburgh already has earned a first-round bye in the playoffs, but because the Chiefs kick off at the same time Sunday, the Steelers won't know if Kansas City is willing to hand them home-field advantage until they're both done playing.

Despite the loss of Rod Woodson and the offseason departure of tight end Eric Green, the Steelers have the NFL's second-ranked defense and the seventh-rated offense.

If Green Bay loses, and Detroit beats Tampa Bay on Saturday, the Lions and Packers wind up tied at 10-6. Detroit wins the division tiebreaker and the division in that case. The Buccaneers were eliminated from playoff contention last week.

Detroit has won six in a row since owner William Clay Ford handed coach Wayne Fontes his "playoffs-or-else" ultimatum.

The Bucs are the lowest scoring team in the NFL and are 27th in total offense despite coach Sam Wyche's reputation as an offensive innovator and developer of young quarterbacks.

Second-year pro Trent Dilfer has thrown only four touchdown passes this season.

The Chiefs (12-3), meanwhile, stand in Pittsburgh's way to the home-field advantage, but they face a red-hot team on Sunday, namely the Seahawks (8-7). Seattle, meanwhile, could go to the playoffs with a win.

Seattle is 6-1 in its last seven games. Kansas City is unbeaten at home this year.

Fortunately for Atlanta, the Falcons are still in the playoff chase. Unfortunately, they need to beat San Francisco to get in. And even more unfortunately, the 49ers have something at stake, too.

Both San Francisco and Dallas have 11-4 records going into their season finales and are fighting for the home-field advantage in the NFC.

The silver lining is, even if Atlanta loses and ends up 8-8, it could make the playoffs if the three other teams still in the chase for the final NFC berth lose. They are Minnesota, Chicago and St. Louis.

AIKMAN: 'This has not been an enjoyable year,' says quarterback fun. How soon that comes, I don't know. But that will be the end."

Although he is only 29, Aikman has experienced back soreness and knee problems that are the sort of ailments that could drive the five-time Pro Bowl player and Super Bowl MVP to an early retirement.

"At this time, it's ridiculous for me to say I'd retire," Aikman said. "For 60 minutes, I get to do what I enjoy.

"But this has not been an enjoyable year for me, in regard to things outside the football field."

Aikman, who says he likes the area, the fans and the lifestyle, says he has no desire to play elsewhere.

Jones predicted that Aikman's views will not lead to the end of his career with the Cowboys and said he doesn't believe they will bring a premature end to what he believes is a bright future in Dallas for Switzer.

"I remember when Troy tolerated (former head coach) Jimmy (Johnson) when he was unsure of the direction we were going," Jones said. "That took time then, and it can be expected to take time in other situations too."

Switzer believes that he and Aikman, who is paid $6 million per year, will be able to work out the problems.

"Some of this comes with the territory. But he's making millions," Switzer said. "We've all got B.S. we've got to put up with. He shouldn't dwell on the negatives."

But Aikman said that money will not keep him in shoulder pads longer than he wants to be.

"I played here in 1989, was making a lot of money, but we went 1-15 and it wasn't enjoyable," Aikman said. "I paid my dues. Then we built something very special. Believe me, the money is nice, but I will never play for just a paycheck."

Aikman called commitment more important than money.

"I can't predict what's going to happen this off-season," Aikman said. "But what I've always believed is that we all need to be committed to reaching our potential, and if we're ever doing less than that I don't want to be a part of it."

Source: Schnellenberger's habits reviewed

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — University of Oklahoma athletic compliance officer Larry Naifeh interviewed players and athletic department personnel about Howard Schnellenberger's personal habits in the days before the coach abruptly resigned, the Tulsa World reported Friday.

The newspaper said two high level sources who spoke on condition of anonymity confirmed the interviews, which included questions about the consumption of alcohol on university property and while representing the school in official business.

Schnellenberger resigned abruptly Monday after a year and two days as coach of the Sooners.

The newspaper said Naifeh reportedly spoke with a player who said he smelled alcohol on Schnellenberger's breath during a university-related function. It said athletic director Donnie Duncan confronted Schnellenberger about the accusation Sunday.

The newspaper said an atmosphere existed in the meeting with Duncan that would have left no choice but for Schnellenberger to step down. A message left on Schnellenberger's answering machine at his home in Norman was not immediately returned Friday. He has maintained his silence since issuing a videotaped statement announcing his resignation.

Schnellenberger said his decision had nothing to do with "inaccurate reports or hurtful rumors that often accompany head coaches and top programs."
