Lawmakers critical of Weinberger

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional critics say former Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger ignored reports of excessively cozy relationships between military officials and defense contractors during his seven years as Pentagon chief.

But Weinberger defends his stewardship of the department, which included one of the largest military buildups in history, saying it is still too early in the unfolding Pentagon purchasing fraud case to say whether there was any serious lapse.

"I don't have any basis whatever for saying I didn't do enough, and I certainly don't feel culpable," Weinberger said Sunday on NBC's "Meet the Press."

House Energy and Commerce Committee Chairman John Dingell, D-Mich., said he had warned Weinberger there was "a massive problem" with secret documents falling into the hands of defense contractors, but that Weinberger never responded.

"I have to say that there is every appearance that they did not want to know," Dingell said on ABC's "This Week With David Brinkley" program. "It appears there is some condoning, if not active participation, by the leadership of the Pentagon in these matters."

Sen. David Pryor, D-Ark., said on the same program that Weinberger had presided over "a feeding frenzy" of contracting, marked by "incestuous relationships" between federal officials and private contractors.

Pryor said the Defense Department has resisted every recent attempt by Congress to institute controls and accountability, including the establishment of an independent inspector general. Even now, Pryor said, the department's inspector general is not complying with the law that requires monitoring of outside consulting contracts.

The procurement fraud case, under development since late 1986, became public June 14 when investigators raided Pentagon offices and homes and offices of defense contractors and consultants.

Estimates of the number of contracts under investigation have ranged as high as 100, involving tens of billions of dollars. At least six Pentagon officials, 15 defense contractors and up to 50 consultants are reported to be under scrutiny in the probe.

Weinberger, who left the cabinet last November, said the Pentagon problems are no different from past scandals in Congress or illegality anywhere else in society.

Responding to questions about a 1985 allegation that the office of then-Navy Secretary John Lehman was the source of leaks of classified budget data, Weinberger said he had called for a meeting with Lehman to pinpoint the leaker and asked that he be fired.

Weinberger said he had been given the name by a newspaper reporter who was outraged after having been offered classified information. Lehman fired the official, he said. Weinberger did not identify the fired official or the reporter.

A memorandum filed in federal court as part of a criminal case against a former defense consultant said at least five people had continually leaked classified documents, including procurement schedules and five-year defense program plans.

Weinberger offered no explanation about the other individuals mentioned in the memo. Much of the document has been blacked out by Pentagon censors, but none of the readable portion makes specific reference to news leaks.

In another case, Weinberger acknowledged writing a critical letter to Attorney General Edwin Meese III after a Meese assistant, William Weld, told Congress of problems stemming from cozy relationships between Pentagon buyers and defense contractors.

Rainfall raises farmers' hopes

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The cloud cover that has been teasing the dry land with threats of rain over the weekend finally opened its bomb-bay doors today to settle the stirring dust.

"Well, it's helping my feeling," said Midland County farmer Vernon Chandler. "It's drizzling a little out here" west of Midland, he said.

"We haven't had any rain yet," he said, "but the clouds are getting our hopes up. We need about three inches. The cotton is holding up pretty good. It's just standing around waiting."

Until today's showers and light thunder, Chandler said leaves of some of his cotton were getting sunburned.

"The sun is taking the moisture out quicker from the leaves than the roots are taking it in."

Fortunately, cotton is a hardy crop suitable for the West Texas dry land, for cotton puts down a deep, moisture-seeking tap root.

"And that helps it survive," Chandler said. "I just hope the tap root goes down into the soil fast enough as the soil dries out."

Gene Jones, who farms in the Valley View community southeast of Midland, was appreciative of today's showers.

"It's coming a little light shower," he said. "When we get to where you can't go down the road, you know it's raining.

"If it rained like this for awhile, it sure would do some good," he said.

Jones noted that Sunday's overcast skies "looked pretty" in suggesting rain, but the clouds "suddenly disappeared" but returned today.

Northeast of Midland in the Lenorah area, rain was falling this morning, Jones said.

"I was talking to a fellow who said it rained about an inch in Lenorah this morning, but it played out going south."

Before the dust-settling showers had fallen on Midland today, Jones noted that "spots of rain" had fallen around the area.

"We need one (rain) to start somewhere and go somewhere — to cover a bunch of country," he said today. "This old cotton has got to keep on moving on. You're looking at the first of July. You've got to have moisture and (high) temperature" for the cotton to grow and prosper.

"It doesn't take long to rain," Jones said, "but sometimes it takes a long time to take a notion to rain. It generally rains somewhere or another every year."

Jones noted that cotton crops are in the ground south, east and west of town, but that that some areas to the northwest "didn't get enough rain to plant."

However, the rain clouds could let loose a drencher. "It's liable to rain you in," he said.

Prior to today's thundershowers, the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport had called for a 50 percent chance of rain. The ground-level humidity has been 90 percent of saturation.

Former day care center found innocent in paddling case

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — An Ector County court jury deliberated seven hours Saturday and found a former day-care center innocent of recklessly injuring a 3-year-old boy by paddling him.

About 5:30 p.m. Saturday, the county court jurors began sifting through more than 50 hours of testimony and evidence presented during court sessions that ran for 13-to-14 hours throughout last week.

County Judge Jan Fisher said Friday the case might have taken two weeks had she not held daily sessions that ran as late as 10 p.m. each day.

In defending Gene Stormes, former operator of the Young Sports day-care center, Jimmy Edwards characterized his client as a good friend who loved children and would not abuse a child, as he was accused of doing Sept. 9, 1987.

Taking the witness stand in his own defense Friday, Stormes admitted that he paddled 3-year-old Ezekiel Tijerina Jr. but claimed he gave the child only "three licks and not hard," with a paddle he had used to spank as many as 250 children over the years.

In addition to being a friend of Stormes, Edwards said his own three children went to Young Sports for years "and loved it," he stated.

Recalling that he had spent 10 years on the Ector County Children's Services Board protecting the rights of children, Edwards said he was not in the habit of defending people accused of abusing children.

He related that Stormes came to him "with tears in his eyes" and denied he was guilty of the charge against him. Edwards told jurors he was representing Stormes because he believed in his heart that Stormes was not guilty.

But, in spite of being convinced of Stormes' innocence, Edwards told jurors, "I'm worried. I'm scared...that emotion will overwhelm" you, he stated.

Edwards said because Stormes was on probation imposed by the Department of Human Services in connection with an earlier incident involving the spanking of a 5-year-old child, the DHS revoked his license. Stormes will never operate a day-care facility again.

"All he is asking is the return of his reputation and integrity," the attorney stated in his closing argument to the jury.

In defending Stormes, Edward contended Shelley Tijerina, 22, an employee of Young Sports, had asked Stormes to discipline her 3-year-old son because he had been misbehaving. Stormes testified that he "agreed, against my better judgment."

Looking at pictures showing bruises on the buttocks of the 3-year-old boy, Stormes stated without equivocation, "I absolutely did not cause those bruises."

Edwards claimed and attempted to show with other testimony that Mrs. Tijerina had spanked her son earlier. He suggested Mrs. Tijerina may have spanked and bruised her son and, fearing her husband's reaction, was attempting to shift the blame to someone else.

Assistant County Attorney Mike Griffin displayed two paddles to jurors, saying the heaviest one was comparable to the one Stormes used to spank children.

The actual paddle would have been much more impressive in evidence because, he stated, testimony showed Stormes' actual paddle was inscribed with the names of most of the children he had spanked over the years.

Griffin questioned why anyone would want to keep such a record. He introduced a Punishment Permission form used at Young Sports. He questioned why silhouettes in the margin of the form depicted various forms of punishment and execution, such as hanging, an electric chair, a guillotine, drowning, stocks, etc.

New bill would allow 'vaqueros' to cross over

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A congressman has introduced a bill to help Texas ranchers who need more help in rounding up their herds.

U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith, R-San Antonio, says the new immigration law has stopped Mexican cowboys, known as "vaqueros," from crossing the border.

Next month, Smith, who also represents Midland, will conduct a public hearing in San Angelo to drum up support for the legislation he says will solve the problem.

"It's a real problem, that's for sure," said Doug Gary, foreman of the 1,500 square-mile Callaghan Ranch, which is near Laredo. "What would help is if they would include cattle as a perishable product so cowboys can come over from Mexico to help out."

Under the new immigration law, immigrants living here since before 1982 could be granted amnesty. One provision of the law allows migrant farm workers to cross borders as guests to harvest crops, but does not allow vaqueros to cross to work on ranches.

Many longtime vaqueros working in the United States have applied for amnesty. But Texas ranchers are losing seasonal workers who travel between the United States and Mexico and a new generation of vaqueros.

Smith has introduced legislation that would allow vaqueros to come into the United States as guest workers to subsidize the shortage of American cowboys.

An example of the red tape was cited by Fernando de Leon Hernandez, a vaquero at the Callaghan Ranch.

The San Antonio Light reported Sunday that Hernandez took the two-hour bus ride last month from Nuevo Laredo to his home village, Ciudad Melchor Muzquiz.

Visits to his family are infrequent and made difficult by Mexican officials. Hernandez has legal travel documents but he says he and other vaqueros are harrassed by the officials.

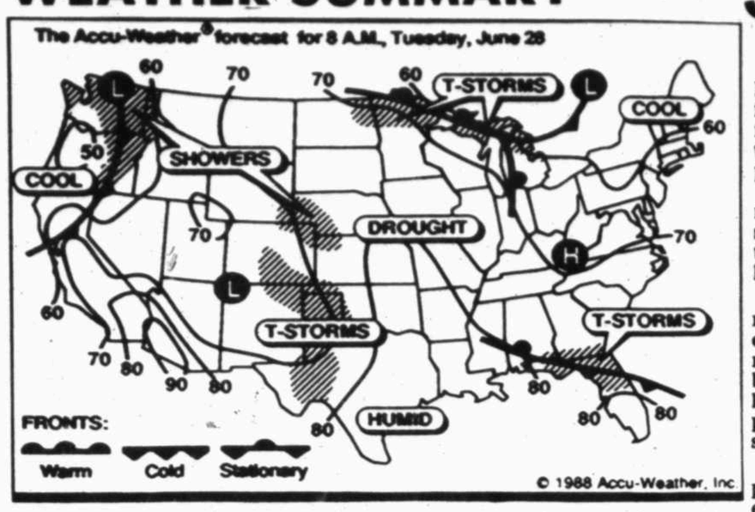
WEATHER SUMMARY



RAIN

Constantine Pashos, NWS meteorologist, noted that until this morning, "It had rained all through the area, although some parts have escaped getting any heavy rainfall — (such as) the city of Midland and the airport."

Generally, a 50 percent chance of rain means that there's a good chance for it. Some area have gotten a lot, and some others, very little," he said.

He reported a 1.4-inch rainfall about 20 miles south of Midland on Sunday.

"The amount varies all over," he said.

Rain is wide-spread from Arizona and New Mexico to the Texas Hill Country and east to the Gulf Coast.

"We have rain west of the Pecos (River)," he said, and north to Plainview, west to Abilene and south Sanderson.

"We could have a pretty good chance tomorrow," Pashos said.

STATE

Scattered showers and patches of light rain occurred over the western third of the Panhandle and much of the South Plains early Monday, while scattered rain dampened parts of the Big Country around Abilene.

Widely scattered showers and thunderstorms dotted a small area of south Central Texas and the Hill Country in and near San Antonio.

Some thick fog formed over parts of the Panhandle where the visibility was generally ranging below two miles.

Otherwise, skies remained partly to mostly cloudy over the greater part of the state. South to southeast winds breezed across most of the state at speeds in 5 mph to 10 mph.

However, winds were light and variable over the Trans-Pecos and across parts of the High Plains.

Scattered showers and thunderstorms should diminish across parts of North Texas tonight and Tuesday. Otherwise, skies will be partly to mostly cloudy through Tuesday.

NATION

Violent thunderstorms whipped through the Midwest and the Southeast today after battering several spots with destructive winds, large hail and lightning.

Thunderstorms were scattered from northeast Florida and eastern Georgia across South Carolina into southern North Carolina. Winds gusted to 90 mph at Tall Timbers, Md., on Sunday afternoon and up to 75 mph in northeastern North Carolina.

Tree and power lines were ripped down from southeast Virginia into central and southeastern Alabama. The fierce winds also toppled small buildings in South Carolina, east of Anderson; blew down a radio tower in Aiken, Ga.; overturned a small airplane at the Birmingham, Ala., airport and destroyed two mobile homes at Andalusia, Ala.

Evening thunderstorms produced hail the size of golfballs at Monticello, Ga., and Mooresville N.C.

Scattered showers and thunderstorms lingered from Colorado and New Mexico across western Texas, northwest Oklahoma and southwest Kansas. Golfball-size hail and a tornado were reported Sunday evening near Partridge, Kan., while a tornado touched down farther west, near Plevna, Kan.

In Oklahoma, winds up to 81 mph blew the roof off an apartment complex while downing numerous power lines at Stillwater. A roof was ripped off a trailer house and trees were uprooted in Cherokee County.

A few thunderstorms lingered from northeast Oregon into Montana and northwest Wyoming.

Today's forecast called for scattered showers and thunderstorms across the southern and central Rockies and from the southern Plains through the central Gulf Coast region to the southern Atlantic coast; numerous showers and thunderstorms across northern and central Florida and from northwest Texas to Colorado and eastern Utah; and continuing dry weather across the Midwest and the Tennessee Valley.

Swedish women have greatest equality

WASHINGTON (AP) — Women have yet to reach equality with men in any country but they come closest in Sweden, followed by Finland and then the United States, a study by a private population group concludes.

At the other end of the scale, women's status is lowest in poverty-stricken Bangladesh, according to the report by the independent Population Crisis Committee.

"The world's poorest women are not merely poor. They live on the edge of subsistence. They are economically dependent and vulnerable, politically and legally powerless," said Sharon L. Camp, vice president of the committee which studies population issues.

Scoring well in many categories, particularly in social equality and employment opportunities, Sweden was ranked first in women's status.

Finland was listed as No. 2, while the United States placed third, doing particularly well in providing educational opportunities for women.

No country managed to be listed as "excellent," however.

Sweden led the "very good" section and was joined by Finland, the United States, East Germany, Norway, Canada and Denmark.

Bangladesh finished a distant last, with Mali, Afghanistan, North Yemen and Pakistan rounding out the bottom five.

The ratings are based on measures of women's status in health, marriage and children, education, employment and social equality.

Nowhere do women enjoy equal status with men, the report said.

"But in the least developed countries of Africa, the Middle East, Asia and Latin America, crushing poverty overlaid with longstanding patterns of discrimination create living conditions for women almost too harsh to imagine," the report said.

Women grow half the world's food but most own no land. They are one-third of the paid work force, but are concentrated in the lowest-paid jobs. Those who have jobs outside the home usually put in a double day with household and child-care chores.

Here is a rundown of the five areas of women's status and the findings of the study:

— Health:

This category included infant and child mortality, mortality of women in their childbearing years and life expectancy. Finland was the top-ranked with a rating of 20. Austria and France were close at 19.5.

The United States scored 19, tied with Australia, Belgium, Canada, West Germany, Hungary, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Sweden and Switzerland.

Last was Afghanistan at only 3.5; Bangladesh and Mali were not much better at 5.5.

— Marriage and Children:

This ranking was based on the percent of women who marry while still adolescents, national fertility rate, prevalence of contraceptive use and ratio of widows and divorced women heading households.

Australia and New Zealand were the only countries to score a full 20 points. Scoring 19.5 were Sweden and Taiwan, while Belgium, Finland, Netherlands, Norway and the United Kingdom all scored 19.

The United States scored 18.5, as did Canada, China, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, France, East Germany, West Germany and Switzerland.

Last was Saudi Arabia at 4 points, while Bangladesh had 4.5.

— Education:

This category covered school and college enrollment of women, percentage of women teachers and differences in literacy rates between men and women.

The United States ranked first at 18.5 points, followed by Jamaica with 18. Sweden managed only 15.5 here.

Last was Benin at 2.5 points, while North Yemen had 3 and Nepal and Libya rated 4.

— Employment:

The employment category was based on the percentage of women working for pay, the share who are self-employed and the number in technical and professional occupations.

Sweden was tops in women's employment at 14.5 points, followed by East Germany at 13.5 and Mozambique and the Soviet Union at 12.5 each.

The United States scored 10, tied with Canada and Czechoslovakia, but trailing Barbados and Finland at 11.5; Denmark and Norway at 11; and Bulgaria at 10.5

Tied for last place with ratings of 2 were Afghanistan, Algeria, Iraq, Libya, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia and North Yemen.

— Social Equality:

This category generally measured women's political and legal equality with men, the degree to which they can expect equal treatment in the workplace, property rights, rights in divorce and protection from discrimination.

Finland and Sweden were tops with 18.5 points each.

The United States managed 16.5, as did Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, East Germany, West Germany, Greece, Hungary, Jamaica, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, the Soviet Union and Yugoslavia.

Finishing last with ratings of 2 were Pakistan, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates.

New French jetliner crashes at air show

MULHOUSE, France (AP) — Investigators began listening today to a recording of the last moments of a flight of a new Airbus jetliner that crashed before an air show crowd, killing three people and injuring 50 others.

The Air France Airbus A320 is the new European entry in the commercial aircraft market and a jet advertised as the fastest-selling plane in aircraft history.

Christian Roger, president of the Air France pilot's union, said there were early indications that "the engines failed to restart" at the pilot's command.

Unlike other planes, he said, connections from the controls to the engines are made through the computer and not directly by cables.

"The problem is finding out if the computer functioned properly or if there was a human error," he said.

The Air France twin-engine plane clipped some trees and plunged from about 60 feet into a forest at the end of the airfield before television cameras and a crowd of about 1,000 people attending an air show. The aircraft burned and sent a pillar of black smoke in the air.

The narrow-bodied jet, which went into service in April, was on a demonstration flight and carried 133 people.

The daily newspaper l'Humanite reported today that pilot Michel Asseline told a rescue worker, "I wanted to increase the power, but the aircraft did not respond.'

A control tower official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the jet appeared to lose power as it passed over the field in Habsheim, a village about 15 miles from the Swiss border.

Jean-Marie Schreiber, a reporter for the newspaper L'Alsace who was aboard, told the daily newspaper France-Soir he felt a jolt when the plane started to climb after passing over the field.

"Then, all of a sudden, I had the feeling we had hit a pothole, and I saw trees from the window," he said.

One passenger, Roland Schmitted, said, "We were flying low, and I was afraid there would be a catastrophe ...I am a pilot, and I said to myself, he's never going to make it over those trees."

He said passengers were able to get out after fire broke out because the crew put down the evacuation chutes almost immediately. All but the plane's tail was eventually scorched.

Officials said 50 people required hospitalization and some were badly burned. They said there was only a rudimentary passenger list and some aboard may have left the crash site without identifying themselves.

Officials quickly launched an investigation into the cause of the crash and Air France and British Airways announced they were temporarily grounding their A320s as a precaution.

Certified for flight on Feb. 26, the A320 has been touted by its manufacturer, Air Industrie, as the fastest selling airplaine in aviation history. The Toulouse, France-based consortium says it has more than 500 orders or letters of intent to purchase the A320.

The aircraft carries 168 people and consumes 40 percent less fuel than similar two or three engine jets.

It is the first civilian airliner equipped with a fully computerized flight-control system, which the manufacturer says permits safer, electronically controlled flight.

Instead of the old control column in front of the pilot, there is a "pistol-grip" side stick linked to five computers that modify and relay the pilot's directions to wing and tail flaps.

Airbus has been making inroads with the plane into a medium-range market long dominated by Boeing and McDonnell Douglas.

The plane operates with a two-man flight crew. Earlier this year, pilots and flight engineers of France's largest domestic carrier, Air Inter, called a series of protest strikes, saying three crewmembers were needed for safety.

Newspapers quoted Romain Kroes, a union spokesman, as saying Sunday's accident proved the necessity for a third person in the cockpit. He said a flight engineer is needed to take over manual controls in case of failure of the electronic system of supplying the plane's engines with fuel.

Transport Minister Louis Mermez, who rushed to the scene, said both black boxes with flight data had been recovered from the aircraft.

The government officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said pilot Asseline and co-pilot Pierre Mazieres were not injured and should be able to help investigators.

The aviation authority director general, Daniel Tennenbaum, said the pilot did not radio any problems to the control tower before the accident.

The plane had flown from Paris and landed in Mulhouse, about 320 miles to the east, to take on additional passengers and was to circle Mount Blanc in the Alps, then return to Paris via Mulhouse.

Airbus officials reacted to the crash with dismay. "We are disturbed, shocked and saddened," said Airbus spokesman Robert Alizart in Toulouse, where the plane is manufactured. France and West Germany each own 40 percent of Airbus, with Britain and Spain minority partners.

Insurance policy like 'gambling on rainfall'

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — Midwestern farmers whose crops are threatened by drought rushed to insurance agents this month to buy a unique rain-guarantee policy, but one official says it is more like gambling than protection.

Agents say farmers will collect if their counties receive less than a certain percentage of the normal June-August rainfall, regardless of how the weather affects their crops. More rain means no payoff.

"I guess it's like playing a hand of poker — you're just gambling on the rainfall," said farmer John Clark of Reddick in northern Illinois. "If it rains in August and your crops are already lost, you lose your money. But what do you do in a situation like this?"

Clark has about 800 acres of corn that soon will reach the most critical stage, but without rain there could be substantial losses.

"We've never had a year like this in all the years we've farmed," said Clark, who began working the land in 1945.

Many Cornbelt farmers are in the same predicament.

Federal crop insurance was available to protect farmers against losses from drought and other disasters, but University of Illinois farm management specialist Royce Hinton says only 13 percent of the acres in Illinois are covered.

And that insurance must be purchased each year by April 15. The drought was not as apparent then as it was when private insurance agents began advertising the newer drought insurance in May and June.

"I received applications for about $7 million in total coverage," said Gert McGinnis of Reddick, an agent with the Shafer-Pearson Agency.

She said about 150 farmers rushed into her office before the June 17 deadline. One applied for $1 million in insurance and paid a $20,000 premium.

"There is real fear and panic," said McGinnis. "One man said, 'The money I gave you tonight was as good an investment as I could make in Las Vegas.' "

Her agency advertised that the drought insurance would "guarantee rain between June 1 and Aug. 31."

Agent Earl Blair of Chatsworth said farmers jammed into his office and lined up on the street to buy the policy.

"It's about the greatest thing there is," said Blair. "It's just like you're house being on fire and we'll still insure you."

Farmers said agents cautioned them that they were merely applying for the insurance, and that companies could reject their requests.

Iowa-based seed company Pioneer International acted as an agent for the drought insurance, offering policies in Iowa, Indiana, Ohio and Wisconsin, said spokesman Steve Daugherty.

Richard Carlson, assistant director of the Illinois Department of Insurance, said the drought insurance was being offered by Federal Insurance Co., part of the Chubb Group of Insurance Companies.

"We've never approved the form, and we're not sure it's insurance," said Carlson, who has asked to see the policy and meet with company officials. "It may be closer to gambling."

Carlson said his department could fine the company for selling the drought insurance without approval, and could order refunds to farmers who believed they were misled.

"Your crops could be dead in the field and the last day of the policy it would rain a foot and you would not recover any money," said Beth Stuchel of the Iowa Division of Insurance. "But we have no problem with the company or what they are selling as long as the farmers understand what they are buying."

The insurance works this way, McGinnis explained:

A farmer in Kanakee County would pay a premium of $2.10 an acre for a maximum payoff of $100 per acre if the county received no more than 30 percent of its normal 90-day rainfall of 12.4 inches.

The more rain, the smaller the payoff. More than half of normal precipitation would mean no money for insured farmers.

Premiums for Kankakee County were as much as $14 per acre, depending on the level of coverage.

graphs of the Tijerina child's injuries and expressed the opinion the bruises depicted were examples of "inhumane treatment."

Garcia was testifying for the state.

Bright, testifying on Stormes' behalf, viewed the photographs and said they showed bruises upon bruises, indicating the child had suffered more than one spanking hard enough to causes bruises.

Regarding Stormes' contention that he acted "against his better judgment," when he was asked by Mrs. Tijerina to discipline her child, Griffin said he didn't think Stormes was acting against his better judgment, but was reckless in his actions.

A University of Texas Tech staff pediatrician and child abuse expert, Dr. Raphael Garcia, viewed photographs of the Tijerina child's injuries, indicating the child had suffered more than one spanking hard enough to causes bruises.

Griffin challenged Bright's testimony as that of "hired gun," an expert witness who testifies for anyone who will pay him.

On April 18, County Judge Carol Gregg dismissed a charge against Stormes alleging he "intentionally and knowingly" caused injury to a child because that charge was a third degree felony and county courts have no jurisdiction over felony crimes.

Griffin subsequently refiled the case as a Class A misdemeanor in the county court of Judge Fisher.

Had Stormes been convicted he could have been sentenced to two years in prison or fined $2,000, or both.

Dallas-area voters reject referendum for rail, subway system

DALLAS (AP) — Transit officials should study new ways to cope with traffic-clogged highways after voters trounced a referendum to finance a rail and subway system, say leaders of the group that helped engineer the defeat.

About 59 percent of the voters in Dallas and 15 suburbs, the area served by Dallas Area Rapid Transit, rejected a proposal Saturday to sell $1 billion in bonds to begin construction of a 93-mile commuter rail system.

"I think DART is at a crossroads," former Dallas County Judge David Fox, a leader of Sensible Metro Area Rapid Transit, said Sunday.

"The election is now behind us. We now have the opportunity to reassess where we are, what we've learned, and decide how to proceed from here."

SMART had waged a small-budget campaign to defeat the proposal.

The decision throws the transit agency's future into question because suburbs may call an election to withdraw from the agency. Dallas suburbs contribute about 45 percent of its financing.

Members of SMART say the area's traffic problems can be solved by systems other than rail. The group recommended restructuring and streamlining the transit authority, which critics say has become a swollen bureaucracy.

The agency had no official contingency plan in the event of a defeat and "will return to the drawing board," said Charles Anderson, its executive director.

Some transit authority board members see the bond vote as a mandate to develop a new transportation plan.

Saturday's results represented a turnabout from 1982, when 58 percent of the voters approved the measure that established DART, a regional agency that was to develop a mass transit plan, including a regional rail system.

Virtually all of Dallas' major freeways are at least 20 years old, and most are burdened with traffic that meets or exceeds capacity.

SMART also recommended that the transit agency develop a regional mobility plan that does not require incurring long-term debt.

Bill Ceverha, president of the citizens' group, said such a plan could include some rail, but added, "The election shows that the economics of mass transit are so fundamentally different today than they were a generation ago that they (the voters) regard fixed rail and subway solutions as folly."

Missing Houston woman found dead

BELLEVILLE, Ill. (AP) — Police are treating the discovery of what they believe is the body of a young reporter missing for a week as a homicide and may investigate whether her death is linked to the slayings of two other women.

The body of Audrey Cardenas, 24, a Houston woman who had arrived in Illinois on June 8 to work as an editorial intern with the Belleville News-Democrat, was found Sunday by an employee of Belleville East Township High School, police said.

The body was discovered in a dry creek bed in a wooded area on school property.

Police Chief Robert Hurst said the cause of the woman's death has not been determined, but an autopsy was scheduled for today. Hurst said he had no leads and no suspects.

The young women's parents came to Belleville when police were making no progress in solving her disappearance.

Her mother, Billie Fowler, had criticized police efforts and said she intended to hire a private detective to find her daughter.

Hurst, asked at a news conference Sunday what he could have done differently in the investigation, said, "in hindsight we would have gotten on it sooner."

He said the body had decomposed, and it was not apparent if Miss Cardenas had suffered any wounds.

The body of Audrey Cardenas, 24, a reporter for the Belleville News Democrat in Belleville, Ill., was found Sunday near a high school where she sometimes went jogging.

She was wearing tennis shoes and white sox when found, but some items of clothing were missing, Hurst said. He would not elaborate. He said it was impossible to tell if she had been sexually assaulted.

Hurst said dental records were being sought for a positive identification, although police are 99 percent sure of the identity.

Miss Cardenas was last seen by an off-duty police officer on June 19.

The local newspaper, which had offered a $5,000 reward for information leading to her safe return, has now doubled the reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of anyone responsible for her death.

Miss Cardenas went to the Belleville paper through the Capitol Cities Minority Internship Program.

After four months, she was to go to a bigger West Coast paper and then to the Fort Worth (Texas) Star-Telegram.

Friends of Miss Cardenas knew she sometimes jogged on the school's running track and searched the school grounds shortly after she was reported missing when she failed to show up at her job.

The searchers apparently missed the spot where she was found, however. Hurst said he believes the body has been at the scene since Miss Cardenas disappeared.

In September 1986, the body of a still-unidentified woman was found in St. Claire County just outside Belleville, and the body of Kristina Povolish of Belleville was found 12 miles south of here last July. Nobody has been charged in either killing.

The other victims, like Cardenas, were each about 5 feet tall and weighed about 100 pounds.

Immigration officials open centers for juvenile aliens

HOUSTON (AP) — An influx of illegal minors, many fleeing conscription, has prompted immigration officials to open juvenile centers to hold the youths until they can be deported or released to relatives.

But the home-style juvenile detention centers have been criticized by immigration advocates, who say federal authorities are just trying to make the idea of confining children more palatable to the public.

"Most people feel that it's a move in the direction of increased control and increased detention of minors," said Jonathan Moore, a paralegal with Proyecto Libertad in Harlingen. "But immigration is trying to sugarcoat it and I think a lot of people are fooled."

Over the last three years, increasing numbers of children have poured over the U.S. border as conditions in their countries worsened, said Mary Ruth Calhoun, detention programs specialist for the Immigration and Naturalization Service in Washington.

The INS takes custody of unaccompanied, undocumented children up to age 17, many of whom are traumatized by poverty and war.

On any given day, there are from 150 to 170 juveniles in INS detention in this country, not counting those who are picked up and released the same day. Most of the minors held are Central American boys 14 to 16 years old who come to this country alone in flight from conscription in the army.

In Houston, Catholic Charities provides shelter and services to juveniles detained by the INS. Their program is based on foster care, providing a homelike environment and offering education and recreation, as well as attempting to reunite the children with their families.

"We normally get them with a lot of trauma, depression, they're scared," said administrator David Rosales. "It's a real stressful situation for them. We just try to make them feel comfortable, and offer them all the services we can," he told the Houston Chronicle in a story published Sunday.

There are other juvenile facilities for undocumented juvenile aliens, including centers in Miami, San Diego, El Centro and Los Angeles. None, however, are similar to Houston's foster care system.

Pentagon probe figure knew how to play game, officials say

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a city where access, information and appearances often translate into financial rewards, former Navy official Melvyn R. Paisley knew how to play the game, acquaintances and former colleagues say.

Paisley, 63, a central figure in the Pentagon bribery case, was known in Navy circles as a hard-charging boss contemptuous of bureaucrats, as well as a fun-loving socializer married to his fourth wife, a stylish woman in her 30s.

"Colorful is the way people describe Mel," said one former Pentagon official. "Paisley is a kind of two-fisted fighter pilot," added James Durst, a former executive at Boeing Co. where Paisley worked before joining the Pentagon.

But Durst also had harsher words for Paisley, who became the Navy's assistant secretary for research, engineering and systems in 1981 after a 28-year career with Boeing.

"Usually every major company has one guy who does the dirty business," Durst said. "He was the guy."

Durst said he told the government in the early 1980s that Paisley, while at Boeing, bragged of committing a felony wiretapping operation and bribing people overseas for military contracts.

Lawrence E. Barcella, Paisley's lawyer, said Durst's "unfounded allegations" were "beneath the barrel." He called Durst "a disgruntled ex-employee."

Paisley and his wife, Vicki, have referred all calls to their attorneys since initial reports that FBI agents had searched Paisley's office and home in their investigation into allegations that defense contractors and consultants bribed Pentagon officials to obtain classified material vital for winning multibillion-dollar contracts. No one has been charged in the probe.

The Los Angeles Times last week quoted sources as saying Paisley and his wife copied secret documents, and Paisley then allegedly passed the information to his major client, McDonnell Douglas Corp.

Other sources said James Gaines, a deputy Navy secretary who worked with Paisley at Boeing in the 1970s, is believed to be one of the people who passed the information to Paisley. All of the sources talked on condition their names not be used.

An engineer by training, Paisley's government biography lists him as a 1953 graduate of the American Institute of Technology, and a 1954 graduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. MIT said Paisley attended one semester at the prestigious institution.

When Paisley came to Washington, he wasted no time cultivating people who made a difference, particularly the man who propelled him to the upper echelons of government power: former Navy Secretary John F. Lehman Jr.

Although Lehman was nearly two decades Paisley's junior, they socialized together: they live about a football field apart in an exclusive McLean, Va., neighborhood with big houses, rolling green hills and manicured lawns.

The two men had formed a friendship before President Reagan's election when Boeing hired Lehman's military consulting firm, Abington Corp., for $350,000 a year, according to a report published in The New York Times in 1983.

Their professional relationship blossomed at the Pentagon where Lehman presided over the Navy's massive peacetime buildup, and Paisley supervised procurement, specializing in acquisition of aircraft and combat systems. Defense spending, overal, more than doubled to $160 billion annually during the Reagan administration.

Law enforcement officials have said Lehman, now a managing director at Paine Webber Inc., is not a target of the probe, but investigators have evidence suggesting Lehman may have tipped Paisley about the investigation which has been under way since 1986. Lehman has refused to be interviewed.

This is not the first time Paisley has attracted the Justice Department's interest. He was one of several former Boeing officials sued for receiving improper severance payments after he left the aerospace company. Paisley's "golden handshake," amounting to $183,000, is still tied up in the courts.

While Paisley managed the Navy's weapons-buying, his wife, Vicki, went to work in 1983 for BDM International Inc., a defense contractor that hired Paisley as a consultant when he resigned from the government.

"She was a sharp young gal," said one of her former supervisors who said Mrs. Paisley was qualified for her management job even though she was given an entree through her husband. The supervisor spoke on condition of anonymity. Before coming to the capital, Mrs. Paisley had worked for Boeing Computer Services in Renton, Wash.

Although Mrs. Paisley was hired as a full-time employee, she cut back to part-time in part because of her busy travel schedule, the source said. She often accompanied her husband on trips, once taking part in a submarine-launching ceremony.

In 1986, Mrs. Paisley had several sources of income, according to her husband's financial disclosure form.

She received an unspecified amount from BDM, an unspecified amount from Town and Country Real Estate, and between $15,000 and $50,000 from VAMO Inc., a Vienna, Va., company which public records say was established by William Galvin, another defense consultant who is under investigation.

Jack Montgomery of Rome, Ga. shows a honey frame covered with some of his Italian bees who do little but stay home and fan, due to the drought. Montgomery says honey production for the year has stopped.

AP Laserphoto

Beekeeper says drought drying Georgia's honey production

ROME, Ga. (AP) — Jack Montgomery has a bunch of hard workers on his northwest Georgia farm, but they haven't done much lately except stay home and fan themselves.

"It's the danged drought," the 68-year-old beekeeper said. "All the flowers have died. North Georgia's honey production should be at its peak right now but it's already stopped for the year."

So, instead of spending these summer days collecting nectar and making honey, Montgomery's bees are trying to beat the heat, which was expected to reach only the upper 80s today after hovering near 100 degrees for the past week or so.

"The bees actually air condition their hives when it gets this hot," he said last week. "They deposit little droplets of water along the top of the honey frames and then fan their wings, causing it to evaporate and cool the hive.

"Then, they move the cool air throughout the hive, and take it out the door when it starts to heat up. They keep repeating the process all day long."

Montgomery keeps about 1.5 million bees — an Italian variety, of course — at his farm south of Rome.

He began keeping bees as a hobby 12 years ago, shortly after getting out of the dairy business. He now has 50 hives, or colonies, on his 1,400-acre farm.

"My bees actually like hot, dry weather, as a rule," he said. "The ideal temperature in the hive is about 95 degrees. But when it gets as hot as its been around here of late, the temperature will go up to 120 degrees inside the hive if the bees don't turn on the air conditioning."

Making matters worse is the horrendous lack of rainfall. Montgomery says he knows for a fact that he lives in perhaps the hardest-hit drought area of the Southeast.

"We've only gotten 14.9 inches of rainfall since the first of the year," said Montgomery, who has been keeping rainfall records for the National Weather Service for 22 years. "Under normal conditions, we'd have gotten 30 inches of rain by this time of year...

"I make my observations from the rain gauge I keep out in front of the house," he said. "This is the third real bad year in a row for us. Our normal annual rainfall around here is 53 inches but we only got 32.7 inches last year and just 29.0 inches the year before."

He said this translates into bad news for beekeepers, as well as everybody else.

"Normally, I'd take about 4,000 pounds of honey from my hives this summer but I probably won't get half of that. Last year, I only got 2,000 pounds and only 1,000 pounds the year before that."

He says the area is so parched that the few flowers now in bloom have ceased producing pollen.

"It wouldn't make any difference, anyway," he added. "When it gets this hot and dry the bees have to spend most of their energy trying to stay cool. It's become a matter of survival now."

Contractors not registered as lobbyists

WASHINGTON (AP) — When lawmakers are asked to identify Pratt & Whitney's chief lobbyists on Capitol Hill, they quickly rattle off the names of Jack Humphries and Mary Ellen Jones.

But despite their close and frequent contact with legislators and top aides, the two Pratt & Whitney employees are not registered as lobbyists with the clerk of the House. The company — and other defense contractors who do not register their legislative liaisons — say the staffers are not lobbyists but "information providers."

The confusion is an illustration of a federal law that critics say does not clearly describe what constitutes lobbying or provide a mechanism to regulate it effectively.

Pratt & Whitney and its parent company, United Technologies Corp., do not register their legislative liaisons as lobbyists because, they say, the staffers are only providing information to Congress — even though the information is about congressional issues that have a direct bearing on the businesses.

"Our people only visit the hill to provide information," said UTC spokesman James Linse. "He's not saying, 'Lowell, vote for A, B and C.' He's providing information."

The 1946 law describes a lobbyist as a person who is paid "for the purpose of attempting to influence the passage or defeat of any legislation by the Congress."

"The law is basically loophole-ridden," said Ann McBride, senior vice president at Common Cause, which has fought to toughen the law's reporting and enforcement requirements. "It is a law that is widely ignored."

McBride said the lobbying registration issue has been rekindled in the wake of the FBI's military purchasing investigation, which involves contractors, their Washington-based officials and their private consultants.

"We don't go out and seek lobbyists and determine whether those persons do or do not meet the requirements," said Patricia Bias, director of the House Clerk's Records and Registration Office.

Survey reveals Dukakis' image cloudy with voters

WASHINGTON (AP) — To an uncertain and divided electorate, Michael Dukakis is "a blank page" whose lead over George Bush is grounded in negative feelings about the Republican vice president, rather than positive attitudes toward the Democratic nominee-to-be, according to a survey released today.

The national poll did find Democrats remarkably united behind Dukakis at this point, although there are weaknesses in the coalition that Bush could exploit to build his chances for a fall victory.

Much of Dukakis' strength comes from voters worried about the course of the nation.

"Democrats are seen as the party of change. Bush is not," said Andrew Kohut, president of the Gallup Organization, which conducted the poll for the Times-Mirror Corp.

The survey, the latest in a series for the media company, is based on interviews with 3,021 adults in person from May 13-22. The margin of error was two percentage points.

The horse-race numbers for the poll gave Dukakis 53 percent of the registered voters and Bush 40 percent. Seven percent were undecided.

Overall, Dukakis drew a favorable response from 66 percent of the sample, while 22 percent rated him unfavorably. Bush got 51 percent positive marks and 42 percent negative.

But the Dukakis numbers are the result of a "vague, mildly positive image," the poll analysis said, pointing out that relatively few voters could rate Dukakis on a range of specific characteristics. Only 29 percent said he "can get things done" while 33 percent said he is well-informed.

Bush's image is a bit clearer, since he has been on the national scene longer, but he is stuck with "some strong negatives and relatively few positives," the analysis said.

"Dukakis is still a blank page to most people," Kohut said, adding that "neither man has a clearly drawn image."

Asked in the poll if they were voting more for their candidate or against his opponent, Bush backers were mostly positive. Of his 40 percent support, 26 percentage points were based on pro-Bush sentiments and 11 percent anti-Dukakis. Three percent were not sure.

But half of Dukakis' supporters took a negative stance. Of Dukakis' 53 percent, only 22 percentage points were pro-Dukakis; 26 percent were anti-Bush; and the rest were not sure.

The Times-Mirror surveys over the past year have divided the public into 11 groups based on their values and partisan affiliation.

Dukakis is doing well in part because he is drawing strong support in three of the four usually Democratic groups — 80 percent or better. In fact, the poll said that Democrats are slightly more loyal to Dukakis at this point than Republicans are to Bush — a dramatic change from the high rates of Democratic defection in recent decades at the presidential level.

Bush has solid backing in the two key GOP groups.

But the vice president has not won the strong support Ronald Reagan had in a group the poll calls the "Disaffecteds," those who are pessimistic and deeply suspicious of both big government and big business.

There are, however, weaknesses in the Democratic coalition.

One conservative segment — called "God and Country Democrats" — and a swing group called "Seculars" are giving about a quarter of their support to Bush, despite the groups' natural Democratic leanings.

Bush's poor showing, in the face of the relative economic prosperity of the country under a Reagan-Bush administration, seems to spring from long-term trends worrying the public.

For example, 54 percent think they will be personally better off next year, while only 10 percent say their financial situation will deteriorate.

Democrats agree on rules, platform

Associated Press

Democrats aiming for convention harmony reached agreements on party rules and a presidential campaign platform, but Jesse Jackson dismissed the platform document as "bland" — and predicted a floor fight or two.

Republican George Bush, for his part, said he and Democrat Michael Dukakis have serious foreign policy differences, singling out defense issues as a key battleground for the coming months.

Meanwhile, a Gallup poll released today suggested that Dukakis holds a 13-point lead over Bush, 53 percent to 40 percent, with 7 percent undecided. That is in line with a string of surveys putting Dukakis' edge in double digits.

But the poll, conducted for the Times-Mirror Corp., also indicated that Dukakis' strength stemmed more from voters' negative feelings about Bush than positive feelings about the Democratic nominee-to-be.

"Dukakis is still a blank page to most people," said Andrew Kohut, president of the Gallup organization.

The survey, based on interviews with 3,021 adults from May 13-22, had a margin of error of 2 percentage points.

Dukakis was wrapping up a four-day vacation today before heading out on a campaign trip to the Midwest. The Massachusetts governor was flying home from Nantucket tonight.

Dukakis tried to keep his island sojourn nearly free of campaign business. Press secretary Mark Gearan said Sunday the governor had not even talked by telephone with aides in Denver, where platform drafters were at work on a campaign manifesto.

The document that emerged conformed more closely to the wishes of the Dukakis camp than those of the Jackson forces.

Jackson's calls for raising taxes on the rich, freezing the Pentagon budget, pledging no first use of nuclear weapons and supporting a Palestinian homeland were all turned aside.

"I do not think that bland is beautiful," Jackson said Sunday in St. Croix. "People ought to be specific, ought to make promises, ought to keep promises, ought to make commitments.

"There will no doubt be some minority positions taken to the floor," he said, but he refused to specify which issues he was referring to.

The Jackson forces did get their way on some platform matters, including a call for South Africa to be declared a terrorist state.

And Democratic rule-makers, meeting Saturday in Washington, agreed to an overhaul of party rules — which Jackson hailed as a "victory for the people...a victory for democracy."

Under the agreement, the number of "super delegates" to the 1992 convention will be cut nearly in half, and all the other delegates would be awarded to presidential candidates in proportion to public suppor.

During the primary season, Jackson bitterly criticized delegate-selection rules, complaining that his delegate total did not reflect his proportion of the popular vote.

Even if Jackson isn't completely satisfied with the platform, the agreement on its broad outlines — along with accord on the rules — greatly reduces the prospect of a contentious convention. The Democratic gathering begins July 18 in Atlanta.

Jackson was wrapping up a three-day trip to the Caribbean on Sunday. Residents of the territories he visited — Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands — do not vote in the November election, but they sed a delegation to the convention.

Bush was in Washington today, after a one-day trip to Columbus, Ohio, where he blamed Congress for hampering the administration's drug war.

"Congress is full of rhetorical heroes on the issue of drugs, but when it comes to law enforcement, some of them go AWOL," or absent without leave, he told a police group.

The vice president told reporters traveling with him on Air Force Two he would be spelling out foreign policy differences with Dukakis. On defense in particular, he said, "a very serious debate...has not yet been joined."

"Obviously he (Dukakis) will have to join it," he said. "I think I will come out well on that."

Bush criticized Dukakis' calls for unilateral nuclear weapons cuts. "How do we defend if we eliminate these systems he's calling for?" he asked.

Ohio woman reaches out to death-row inmate

UNIVERSITY HEIGHTS, Ohio (AP) — For a few days that tried her soul, Kate Uhlir left her suburban Cleveland routine to witness life in a Georgia prison and to share what was supposed to be a death-row inmate's final hours.

On June 16, Freddie Davis, Ms. Uhlir's longtime pen pal, was spared from the electric chair, at least for 90 days. The Georgia Board of Pardons and Paroles suspended his execution six hours before it was to be carried out.

"I sort of felt like a soldier on an island with a bow and arrow to defend the island and there were tanks coming at me," Ms. Uhlir recalled.

She was in a waiting area outside the prison with some of Davis' family and friends when the small group of his supporters learned his execution had been delayed.

"We jumped up and down and screamed," Ms. Uhlir said. "Finally, we burst into tears...I put my arms around his mother. Her whole body just shook...It was something really extraordinary."

The 49-year-old office manager and mother of six first wrote Davis in 1980 after a friend involved in a Cincinnati-based program called Prison Pen Pals gave her his name and address. She said she knew nothing about him or his crime.

Except for a period in 1986, when Ms. Uhlir was struggling with a personal problem, she and Davis have written each other at least once a month.

She learned that Davis, now 31, was sentenced to die for the Jan. 30, 1977, rape and stabbing death of Frances Rice Coe, a Meriwether County, Ga., neighbor of co-defendant Eddie Spraggins.

Spraggins also was convicted of murder and sentenced to death, but won a new trial. He was the prime witness against Davis during his 1977 trial.

However, Spraggins said in an affidavit recently filed with the Georgia Supreme Court that his testimony that Davis was in the room with Mrs. Coe when she was killed was false.

The affidavit supported Ms. Uhlir's belief that Davis is innocent, developed over her years of correspondence with him.

His letters to Ms. Uhlir gradually became more personal, and she regularly wrote him about her children. In his letters, he called her "Sis."

Davis had been sentenced to die on Christmas Eve 1982, but was granted a stay of execution.

In his letters, he insisted that he killed no one but was preparing to die.

After learning that Davis had told his attorneys he wanted to meet his pen pal, Ms. Uhlir traveled to the Georgia Diagnostic and Classification Center, in Jackson, Ga. She met Davis for the first time in the prison June 14.

"We held each other right in the hallway," she recalled. "In the room, there were two plastic molded chairs. He said, 'Take your pick.' One of the things I remember well is that he was covered with sweat. But he was well-groomed and clean. He was warm and gentlemanly.

"He said, 'I'm not afraid to die, but I would like to die the way God wants me to die.'...

"He said, 'I didn't kill her, Katey. I've never killed anybody,' I said to him, 'Couldn't you have stopped it?' He just said, 'I don't know.'"

A federal appeals court refused to grant a stay of execution before the parole board suspended the sentence.

NATION IN BRIEF

Names of crash victims released

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Marine Corps on Sunday released the names of the seven Marines killed Saturday in a helicopter crash in Japan.

The CH-53D chopper crashed on Shikoku Island during a routine flight from the Marines' air station at Iwikuni to another corps air station at Futenma, where the craft was based.

A Marine Corps spokeswoman, Lt. Elizabeth Kerstens, said the cause of the accident was under investigation.

The victims, who were members of Heavy Helicopter Squadron 462, were based at the Marine Corps air station at Tustin, Calif., and on a six-month assignment in Japan, Kerstens said.

The seven were identified as Capt. Michael E. Bermel, Cataldo, Idaho; 1st Lt. Patrick C. Fleming, Bay City, Mich.; Staff Sgt. Stephen R. Yoder, San Bernardino, Calif.; Sgt. Eric C. Mau, Bakersfield, Calif.; Sgt. Donald R. McKay, Westlake, Ohio; Sgt. Jay A. Watkins, Spirit Lake, Iowa; and Cpl. Jason W. Chase, Bayside, Calif.

Top student charged with murder

NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y. (AP) — A valedictorian who killed his mother with a baseball bat only 10 hours before he was to graduate from high school said she wouldn't "give him any freedom," police said.

William Shrubsall, 17, was to be arraigned today on a charge of second-degree murder. He was being held in the city jail without bail.

Shrubsall beat his 56-year-old mother, Marianne, to death Saturday morning after an argument over his late return from his girlfriend's house, Detective Lt. Richard Clute said.

Friends and neighbors reacted with disbelief that Shrubsall, who was bound for the University of Chicago this fall, could have committed the crime.

However, Shrubsall's attorney, Paul Cleary, said there was a history of problems between mother and son. "He made a detailed statement of that to police and it will come out in court," Cleary said.

Dial-a-porn ban held up for ruling

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government has agreed not to enforce a law due to take effect July 1 banning sexually explicit telephone messages until a federal judge reviews a challenge to the statute, Justice Department sources say.

The suit, filed earlier this month by a California business in U.S. District Court in Los Angeles, contends that the law has a "chilling effect" on constitutionally protected free speech.

Another challenge was filed last Thursday in U.S. District Court in New York on behalf of a group calling itself "Consenting Adults Telephone Rights Association."

The government has agreed to give the Los Angeles court until July 25 to decide whether to put the so-called "dial-a-porn" law on hold pending further hearings, said Justice Department sources who spoke on the condition they not be identified.

Challenges to the law were expected. When President Reagan signed a massive education measure to which the dial-a-porn ban had been added, he noted that "current Supreme Court jurisprudence is unfriendly to parts of this bill."

Poll says U.S. still divided over anti-war protests

NEW YORK (AP) — Twenty years after anti-war demonstrations polarized the nation, Americans remain deeply divided over whether the protests changed society for better or for worse, a Media General-Associated Press poll says.

Nearly three-quarters of those questioned in the national survey agreed that the anti-war protests had a lasting effect on society, and a smaller majority said the movement forged lasting change in U.S. foreign policy.

But those who said the protests changed American society were split on whether the impact was positive or negative: 51 percent said positive and 41 percent said negative. The rest didn't know.

The division was even more pronounced among those who said the protests had a lasting effect on U.S. foreign policy: 47 percent said the effect was positive and 45 percent said it was negative. The poll's overall margin of error was 3 percentage points.

The movement protesting U.S. involvement in the Vietnam War reached a crescendo in the summer of 1968, as demonstrators occupied college campuses and battled with police during the Democratic National Convention in Chicago.

Two decades later, the Media General-AP poll found that divisions over the protest movement in many cases remain.

For example, a majority agreed that the protests influenced U.S. policy in Vietnam, and 59 percent said the effect was to shorten the nation's involvement in the war. But 23 percent said the protests prolonged the war.

In another measure, the respondents who thought the protests influenced Vietnam policy were asked if the effect was to prevent the United States from winning the war. Fifty-eight percent said no, but 30 percent said yes.

More people who identified themselves as conservatives said the anti-war protests prevented the United States from winning in Vietnam. Similarly, conservatives were more likely to say the protests had a negative effect on American society and U.S. foreign policy.

Fifty-two percent of respondents said society is more liberal now than 20 years ago.

Even Soviets can help bring peace

Does the path to peace between Arabs and Israelis lead through Moscow?

After his latest peace plan was rebuffed by all governments except Egypt, Secretary of State George Shultz has called for "intensive" Soviet-U.S. talks aimed at a Mideast peace settlement.

"If we (superpowers) see some things in a parallel way, it will probably make an impact," Shultz said recently in Cairo, as his fourth mission to the Mideast in five months was ending. He cautioned, "It's not for the Soviet Union and the United States to resolve the problems here. It's for the countries in the region to resolve their problems."

Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir quickly nixed Soviet involvement in Israel-Arab negotiations. But he agreed to meet Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze at the United Nations.

The cracking of Cold War ice at the Moscow summit actually may provide an opening for some form of reconciliation between the Soviet Union and Israel. The Soviets were the ones who broke off relations with Israel and have been arming Israel's enemies ever since. Israel has a right to be wary of Moscow, which continues to bar emigration for thousands of Jews who have requested exit visas to emigrate to Israel.

Deadlock between Israel and its neighboring states, the bloody Palestinian revolt in the occupied territories and deepening divisions between Israelis over the future of their country make it imperative for the superpowers to attempt to mediate. The Soviet role in the Mideast has been negative. It has spoken through violence, by backing Syria and by clandestinely supporting terrorism.

There is a slim chance, however, that the Soviets could take a more constructive role, if permitted to have a voice in negotiations. The chance is worth exploring, but cautiously, and with full consultation with our Israeli allies. America should not impose a deal on Israel. But neither should the United States miss an opportunity, resulting from the Moscow summit, to ease tensions in the explosive Middle East.

Israel is becoming battle-fatigued. Its courts have ordered the expulsion of a Palestinian-American proponent of non-violence, Mubarak Awad. The shrill cries of Israeli hardliners to "expel" Arabs from the occupied territories seem to address an inner fearfulness and weakness. The tension of 40 years of wars and terrorist attacks has left Israel morally and physically stretched to the breaking point. Politically, it is becoming more difficult for those who advocate peace within Israel. The hawks outnumber the doves.

But, deep down, most Israelis are realists. When given a chance for peace with Egypt, hawkish Menachem Begin seized it. Shamir, following in Begin's tradition, may be induced to seize another olive branch, should the Soviets and the Americans be able to extend one.

The Cold War did not cause the Arab-Israeli conflict. But it certainly helped make it more violent and more dangerous, not only for people in the Mideast, but for the world.

The dispute between Arabs and Israelis can't be solved in Moscow or Washington. But talks between superpowers can, perhaps, clear the way for direct talks between Israelis and Palestinians.

It's worth a try.

Soviet apology long time in coming

WASHINGTON — It took three years, a few summits and glasnost, but the Soviets have finally apologized for killing an American Army officer in East Germany in 1985.

Jack Anderson

The apology won't bring back Arthur D. Nicholson, but a simple "I'm sorry" from their defense minister helps the healing begin on this side of detente.

On another level, the uncharacteristic humility from the Kremlin is a clue that glasnost is making a difference.

Nicholson was killed March 24, 1985, in Ludwigslust, East Germany, while he was inspecting a Soviet tank shed. He was part of a 14-man military liaison team stationed in East Germany under an agreement with the Soviets that dates back to 1947. Americans are allowed to monitor certain Soviet military facilities in East Germany, and Soviets can do the same at U.S. facilities in West Germany.

A trigger-happy Soviet sentry either didn't know the rules or panicked. He shot Nicholson to death while the major was taking pictures of the tank shed.

We pressed the Army for a year to give us the investigative report of the incident. Then, after they released it, we reported the details of that investigation in a series of columns in January and May. For three years, the Soviets claimed Nicholson was in restricted territory. They blamed the officer for his own death or blamed the American commanders or simply refused to say anything at all about the incident.

The Pentagon continued to press for an apology, and on May 31 at the Moscow Summit, that apology came from Soviet Defense Minister Dmitri Yazov. In a statement to Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci, Yazov said, "I express my regret over the incident and I'm sorry that this occurred. This does not promote improved relations. Secretary Carlucci and I have agreed we will do all we can to prevent these kinds of incidents in the future."

Carlucci had demanded an apology in his first meeting with Yazov in March. The Pentagon released the news of the apology earlier this month.

The apology must give U.S. officials a sense of satisfaction, but it doesn't answer the lingering questions raised by the Army's own investigation:

■ Why did the sentry shoot Nicholson? Army intelligence analysts have theorized that the sentry may have feared for his job. Nicholson and his driver, Sgt. Jesse Schatz, were near the tank shed for 25 minutes before the sentry saw them. The sentry walked out of the woods and began firing without warning. Perhaps he had been away from his post and panicked when he saw that the Americans had arrived unnoticed.

■ When did Nicholson die? The Soviets did not turn over his body to the Army for more than 24 hours after the shooting. In fact, Soviet military men on the scene let Nicholson's body lie on the ground for eight hours while they interrogated Schatz. The Army investigation could not determine whether Nicholson could have been saved with prompt medical attention.

■ Was Nicholson in the wrong place? The U.S. Army claims the tank shed was not on the map of restricted zones where the American liaison team was not allowed to observe. For three years, the Soviets refused to budge from their story that Nicholson was in a restricted zone. Yazov's apology expresses regret for the incident but does not go so far as to admit wrong.

The tragic incident was a learning experience for at least one man. Brig. Gen. Roland Lajoie was in charge of the liaison team and was the one who arrived on the scene to free Sgt. Schatz. Lajoie had to listen as the Soviets claimed that the unarmed Nicholson charged at the sentry. Lajoie heard the abuse from a Soviet general on the scene who blamed the Americans for the incident. The Soviet general said Lajoie was personally responsible for worsening relations between the two countries. The Soviets even demanded that Lajoie sign a statement on the spot agreeing to their version of the events.

Lajoie refused to give in to the Soviet's bullying. It is a skill that will serve him well in his new job as the head of the U.S. inspection teams that will verify whether the Soviets are adhering to the intermediate-range nuclear forces treaty.

SPACE REAL ESTATE — President Reagan wants to open space to private businesses and has turned the project over to Secretary of Commerce William Verity. Verity is pushing ahead with plans to launch a commercial space station in 1992. His first choice was to put a station on the moon. But the National Aeronautics and Space Administration overruled him saying that an outpost on the moon would be too difficult to maintain.

Verity told us that his first priority is to work out financing for the space station. He hopes to put together a consortium of private companies to pay for it. They would be guaranteed a profit by the government, which would act as landlord renting out the orbiting space facility for research purposes.

Verity believes the project could revitalize American enterprise, because the technologies of tommorrow will be developed on the space frontier.

MINI-EDITORIAL — Just about the time that the Soviet Union is catching on to beauty pageants, some folks out in California remind us that beauty contests are sexist. While Miss Moscow is just getting used to her crown, the Miss California pageant is interrupted by protesters chanting, "Judge meat, not women." Beauty pageants took a beating in the 1960s, but lately it looked as if they were regaining ground along with other American standards like greed and crewcuts. We could dismiss this California brouhaha as an isolated incident, except we know that California is the birthplace of all trends. A word to the wise in Moscow: Get out of the beauty business while you still have your dignity.

Procurement integrity worth defending

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon's spreading procurement scandal has given Rep. Jack Brooks, D-Beaumont, new ammunition in his battle to clamp tighter controls on dealings between contracting officers and government officials.

Brooks' bill, to continue operations of the Office of Federal Procurement policy (OFPP), the government's main procurement regulatory agency, has been caught in a nine-month tug-of-war between two influential House committees.

Roberson

One is Brooks's Government Operations Committee and the other is the Armed Services Committee, headed by Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis. The dispute centers around Brooks' "procurement integrity" proposals embodied Section Six of the Texan's bill.

In the standoff, the Armed Services Committee has thrown its weight on the side of the defense industry and the Pentagon, whose officials strongly objected to including the section spelling out unlawful procurement practices and imposing fines and prison terms for violations.

Laws already on the books make fraud and bribery a crime, of course. But Brooks is trying to prevent corruption at the beginning of the procurement process instead of waiting for a whistle blower or a government audit to uncover the wrongdoing.

Brooks' bill requires defense contractors and their representatives — and other providers and contractors doing business with the federal government — to certify they have not violated prohibitions against handing out gifts or jobs in connection with selling goods, services or weapons systems.

Federal agency officials and employees, in turn, would have to certify that they did not ask for or accept anything of value, including future jobs, from anyone representing a contractor.

It would be unlawful for any procurement official or employee of a federal agency to disclose to contractors or their employees, prior to the award of a contract, any confidential data from competing contractors, or any information that would give that contractor an unfair advantage or otherwise undermine the integrity of the government's procurement process.

An individual could go to prison for five years or be fined $10,000 or both for lying about it.

A violation of "procurement integrity" also would be grounds for cancelling a contract and debarring a contractor from doing business with the federal government for five years.

The secret, two-year investigation of procurement fraud in the Defense Department, which came to light two weeks ago, focuses primarily on the controversial role allegedly played by defense consultants in the Pentagon procurement process.

Investigators are delving into the question of whether consultants used bribery as a way to gain inside information from Pentagon officials to help their clients win competitive defense contracts.

Congressional leaders said the chief prosecutor, U.S. District Attorney Henry E. Hudson of Alexandria, Va., told them that three types of corruption were involved in the investigation — exchange of restricted information, manipulation of the awarding of contracts and collusion on bidding by military contractors.

Since the investigation became public the Brooks bill has been placed on a fast track.

It is difficult to imagine anyone voting against a measure to tighten control over exactly the kind of wheeling and dealing alleged in news stories describing the ongoing probe.

The reason the Pentagon objected, according to a person acquainted with procurement policy, is that it is staffed with young military officers who are not ready for the rocking chair when they retire. "They have to try to set themselves up for employment," this source said. "To quote Mike Deaver (who was convicted for lobbying former associates at the White House), 'What did you expect me to do for a living, become a brain surgeon?"

EVANS & NOVAK

Reagan stands firm on Soviet cheating

WASHINGTON — President Reagan has privately warned Mikhail Gorbachev that he will agree to no new treaty reducing long-range strategic missiles so long as the Soviet Union keeps cheating on the 1972 ABM (anti-ballistic missile) agreement, a decision dooming a START treaty in the administration's fading days and probably for long afterwards.

The president's message to the Soviet ruler came during one of their summit sessions in Moscow. As described by a secret State Department summary early this month, Reagan said the U.S. "could sign no new treaty in the strategic area while their violations continue."

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

But a senior official told us that language was "mild" compared to the words actually used in talking to Gorbachev and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze by both Reagan and George Shultz. Not only was the secretary of state present but he gave Reagan his full backing.

The president's message to Gorbachev signals the revival of a powerful Reagan thesis abandoned when it came to the just-ratified INF pact eliminating intermediate range missiles: New nuclear treaties are bad business until the Soviets show a willingness to abide by existing treaties. The objection is to Soviet violations of the ABM treaty, mainly the giant Krasnoyarsk radar station in south-central Siberia.

Krasnoyarsk violations are nothing new, but Reagan publicly calling attention to them is. With the INF treaty now law, the long period of procrastination within the administration on treaty-cheating may be ending. Indecision and bureaucratic in-fighting, aided by the president's zeal to get his INF agreement, have delayed for almost a year the third five-year review of the ABM pact since it was ratified in 1972.

Reagan knew that if he protested too loudly about Soviet violations, he would be strengthening the anti-INF senators in the ratification process. Now he acts not just willing but eager to press the cheating charges.

Indeed, the renewed hard line might even threaten the ABM treaty itself unless the Soviets satisfy Reagan's complaints. The U.S. calls the Krasnoyarsk radar a clear violation of the treaty, both because of its location and because it might be used as part of a continent-wide "battle-management" radar forbidden by the ABM treaty.

Under a mandatory U.S.-Soviet review of both nations' adherence to the ABM pact that, because of the delays, is now due just before the November election, Reagan may be getting ready to charge Moscow with a "material breach" of the treaty unless the giant radar is dismantled. That could be the precursor of outright U.S. abrogation of the treaty, long demanded by arms control hard-liners but, until now, not seriously considered by the administration.

As part of the belated toughness, the White House has decided tentatively to establish a new and unprecedented high-level commission to handle the ABM treaty review. In contrast, both previous five-year reviews were performed by the comparatively low-level, Geneva-based Standing Consultative Commission (SCC), composed of U.S. and Soviet nuclear specialists.

Because the Soviets have failed to make any visible efforts to clear up Krasnoyarsk or any other U.S. cheating allegations, despite pressure from Americans on the SCC, the president is expected to base the new high-level review team here in Washington. The aim would be to give it more political clout and greater prestige, signaling a more serious American approach to ABM treaty violations.

In making such moves, the president is armed with massive votes in Congress a year ago that condemned Soviet refusal to dismantle the Krasnoyarsk radar. The House voted to declare the radar a clear ABM violation by 418 to 0, the Senate by 92 to 3.

With backing like that, Reagan's new determination to make Krasnoyarsk a symbol of how hard it is to do business with the Soviets could put Gorbachev back on the defensive and terminate the long Ron-and-Mikhail arms control dance. But the story could take another 11th-hour twist if the unpredictable Soviet leader stuns the world by tearing down Krasnoyarsk.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Deep doo-doo along the campaign trail

In order to get elected president, it's going to be necessary, I think, for George Bush to prove to us he's a regular guy, the kind of guy you'd like to go to a ballgame with or the kind of guy who wouldn't whine about the mosquitoes on a fishing trip.

Grizzard

I don't know what it is about the vice president that gives him that silk stocking image, but it's there, and it could cost him the election.

It has hurt candidates before. During the '72 campaign, Sargent Shriver, George McGovern's running mate, was campaigning in Chicago.

He walked into a bar filled with taxi drivers, introduced himself and shook a few hands.

Then, he said, "Bartender, a round of beer for everybody. And I'll have a Courvoisier."

Shriver was lucky to get out of the bar in one piece.

I think Bush's campaign aides should start with teaching him to watch what he says.

I read in a Bush profile that he says things like "We're in deep doo-doo."

I don't want a trashmouth like Nixon in the White House, but I'm not certain if the American people are ready for a president who says doo-doo when he, of course, means quite something else.

You simply don't see grown men going around saying doo-doo.

Do you think John Wayne said doo-doo?

Of course he didn't. He would never have led us to victory in the movie version of World War II if he'd gone around saying doo-doo.

Harry Truman didn't talk like that, either. And that's why he was so effective.

The story goes that some ladies were visiting the Truman White House and he was leading them on a tour of the Rose Garden.

"My, Mr. President," asked one of the ladies, "how do these roses grow to be so beautiful?"

Truman explained the secret was in the quality of the manure used to fertilize the roses.

Later the ladies met with Mrs. Truman and another said. "We certainly enjoyed being with the president, but is it necessary that he use such terms as 'manure'?"

"You don't know how long," Mrs. Truman replied, "it took me to convince him to say 'manure.'"

Here are some more terms George Bush shouldn't use on the campaign trail:

- Golly
- Horsefeathers
- Gee willikers
- Din-din
- Darn
- Skeedaddle
- Ca-ca

Quite frankly if Bush's staff can't turn Tony Randall into Charles Bronson, the Republicans are into it deep, too.

All the way up to their tushies.

Gulf Coast enthusiasts study habits of wild dolphins

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — They don't make a sound, just a shadow under the water. The subject of reams of research and intense lobbying, dolphins are oblivious to the attention they draw.

They're just having fun.

A trio — a calf scarcely 3 feet long and two adults — slice out of the water with their bodies, then plunge gracefully back down in one motion, leaving tiny wakes as their momentary signatures.

They may surface again or maybe they won't. But researchers and spectators on board the boat on a recent Saturday kept their cameras pointed in the direction of the last sighting in case they did.

If the dolphins don't surface, the boat plows on through the harbor and into the murky waters that beat against the jetties. As far as the researchers can figure, it's a favorite feeding place for the subjects of their scrutiny. If it's not, it's their playground.

"Little research has been done on wild dolphins in their natural setting," says Mike Hunt, who teaches psychology at University of Houston-Clear Lake and heads the research committee for the Gulf Coast Cetacean Society. "We hang out where they hang out."

"Cetacean" refers to marine mammals. Because dolphins breathe air, have hair, though just a sparse line of hair follicles in the whisker area when newborn that disappear later, and give live birth, they fit into this category, as do whales, sea lions and seals. Bottlenose dolphins are the species off Galveston Island that sometimes delight ferry riders and fisherman, and, of course, the research team.

The Gulf Coast chapter is a branch of the American Cetacean Society, which has 13 chapters nationwide and seeks to increase knowledge about dolphins and their protection and heads up lobbying efforts in Washington D.C. to that end.

The research Hunt is conducting, helped by a handful of volunteers, is a joint project of Texas A&M University at Galveston and University of Houston-Clear Lake.

In addition to learning more about how they behave in their natural habitat, the team adds to its ongoing photo identification program, taking pictures of the dolphins' fins, which is the only way to distinguish one from another.

Hunt had already spotted a "pod" of dolphins — a small group — before the boat's rumbling engine took it from shore, while waiting for latecomers on his twice-monthly trip the group sponsors through donations and society memberships.

A handful of people boarded as strangers. They left as friends, having collectively searched the waterline, hands shielding their eyes, and exclaimed or even applauded as they saw what they came for.

"I think some of them recognize us," Hunt says, adding that some of the dolphins come up to the research boat as if to say hello and some of them having nothing to do with the team.

"Many of the ones who swim up to us we've seen before, and there have been experiments (elsewhere) when they'd recognize their trainer in street clothes standing in a crowd," Hunt said.

Language on the boat is a series of gestures to the area the dolphins last splashed down and whispered oaths from frustrated photographers who always seem to be changing their film during the liveliest fits of dolphin antics.

Hunt spots them from the boat's bridge, and mutters information into a tape recorder as they perform for the spectators. One, after surfacing close to the boat several times, took off quickly and disappeared.

"What made him do that?" asked Laurie Leister of Beaumont, out on her first dolphin-watching excursion.

"Fun," Hunt replied.

Hunt and his photographer, Ken Bernard, supplement the boat trips with twice-monthly plane trips, which in some ways are better because the dolphins are not aware they are being watched.

They have been doing this for three years, "but this gives us just a very, very skeletal look at what's going on," Hunt says. Ideally, Hunt would like to go out three to five times a week, but funds will not permit that now.

Although Hunt's research is strictly scientific, there's an aesthetic and emotional attachment he feels toward dolphins, he'll concede when pressed.

After all, no one can return from a dolphin-watching trip unmoved by their synchronized movements through the water, frolicking and jumping just to be doing it.

"If I was going to be reincarnated, I would like to come back as a dolphin," Ms. Leister says.

Signs posted at an exotic animal auction in Delphos, Ohio, lay down some ground rules for the three-day proceedings — no tourists, cameras or recording equipment.

Publicity shunned at annual auction of exotic animals

DELPHOS, Ohio (AP) — As a flock of Canada geese fly northward on their annual spring migration, their honking cries arouse dozens of their kind held in wire cages and orange crates under a tent at a western Ohio auction.

The tent also shelters badgers, wood ducks, black bears, swans, foxes, prairie dogs, cougars and a large female lion, who growls when someone gets too close.

Beyond, in several newly built stalls and pens, is a veritable Noah's ark of animals from all parts of the globe with foreign-sounding names such as aoudad, binturong, colobus, emu, ibex, guanacos, muntjac, oryx, rhea, watusi and zebu.

Within hours, the fate of all will be set by an auctioneer's gavel, their destinations determined by the highest bidder.

Woods & Waters Auction, held twice a year on the outskirts of this quiet little farm town, bills itself as the largest animal auction east of the Mississippi River.

At its three-day sale in April, up to 8,000 animals, including birds and reptiles were sold to breeders, animal dealers, owners of game ranches, meat dealers and hobbyists with a penchant for a particular species, says Woods & Waters' owner Dick Osting.

For the most part, the customers were a reticent lot who shunned publicity and people trying to photograph animals were escorted off the premises by a security guard.

Osting complains that the media have "distorted" their business by only photographing animals that are injured, kept in undersized cages or left in pens without food and water.

"The media want to stir up a story...to shock readers," says Osting, 37, who's operated the family-run auction for five years. "The only thing the media do when they print this gory stuff is to upset the humane society and the government, which is two people we don't want upset at us."

Osting says auctions help the wild and exotic animal industry because they bring the business of buying and selling animals out into public view.

"The intention of the auction is to clean up the business," he says. "We're stepping out into the open, inviting regulation. We're saying, 'As long as you don't regulate us out of the business, regulate us.'"

Animal welfare people contend there are abuses. Anne Maroukis, cofounder of Guardians of the Earth, an Ohio-based animal welfare rights group, says some cages were inadequate, as in the case of three bear cubs brought to the auction in a cardboard box, or too small. An adult black bear, she says, had cuts above his eyes from hitting his head against exposed metal edges when he'd try to stand, and some cages lacked food and water.

Osting says some injuries do occur in the transport of animals to the auction. He adds, "I've heard about foxes in too small a cage. He's at a three-day auction. He probably just came from real nice facilities and he'll probably go back to real nice facilities.

Pandas feast on Georgia bamboo

SAVANNAH, Ga. (AP) — The agricultural research station near here doesn't just test alternative crops for farmers and help urban gardeners grow fatter tomatoes.

It also is home to "Chinese Goddess," "Tonkin" and dozens of other species of bamboo, the towering plant in demand for everything from flutes to panda food.

"There's tremendous interest in bamboo," said Charles Bruce, superintendent of the University of Georgia's Coastal Area Extension Research Center.

The 50-acre center, commonly called the bamboo station, has groves containing 85 to 100 species of the treelike grass that thrives in tropical regions.

During a recent tour of the facility, Frank Linton, a research assistant, pointed out a few varieties.

"When I first came here, I just thought bamboo was bamboo," he said while strolling past dense groves of giant timber bamboo and arrow bamboo.

The giant timber bamboo, used in the Orient for scaffolding and buildings, can grow to heights of 60 to 70 feet with diameters in excess of 4½ inches, he said.

Arrow bamboo is the favorite of pandas, but they will eat other types, he said. Tonkin is used to make flutes and split-bamboo flyrods.

The bamboo growing at the research center was planted by U.S. Department of Agriculture scientists in the early 1900s. They obtained varieties found in China, Japan and South America and placed them in the sandy white soil that is common along Georgia's coast.

When the university acquired the station in 1984, some farm specialists viewed the bamboo as a nuisance.

"All they talked about was bulldozing it. But this is an internationally known collection. We have people from all over the United States come to see the bamboo," said Bruce, a horticulturist. "There's a lot of interest in bamboo."

Bruce said the bamboo, some of which can grow as much as 18 inches in 24 hours, has helped generate extra funds that are used to help defray research costs.

Between January and March, people pay a fee to dig bamboo rhizomes, an underground stem with roots and bud, for replanting in their yards. Certain varieties of potted bamboo, also suitable for replanting, are available at the center year round.

"...We have people from all over the United States come to see the bamboo. There's a lot of interest in bamboo."

— Horticulturist Charles Bruce

When two giant pandas were on exhibit in Tampa, Fla., the center shipped 300 pounds of bamboo shoots a week to feed them. The female has been sent back to China for artificial insemination.

The center also ships bamboo shoots to at least four zoos to feed lesser pandas, the catlike cousins of the rare giants.

Bruce and Linton have made the revitalization of some bamboo groves a top priority. Some groves have been cut to allow new plants to grow and others have been thinned out to provide more sunlight to the remaining plants.

An unexpected source of bamboo demand has come from craftsmen who produce handmade shepherd's pipes, flutes and wind chimes, Linton noted.

"It's probably unlimited as to what people can do with it," he added. "It's become an asset to the station."

Besides the bamboo, the center has 150 types of day lilies, 78 varieties of roses, 45 types of hibiscus, 75 types of turf grass, 100 types of perennial flowers and 300 varieties of vegetables, including tomatoes, to help home gardeners.

The center also has one of the largest assortments of herbs grown anywhere in Georgia, including chives, Japanese onions and elephant garlic, Bruce said.

In addition, farm specialists have planted Christmas trees, Vidalia onions, watermelons, cabbage, cauliflower and broccoli to learn more about crops with a high profit potential.

"We're trying to show the farmer he can grow other money crops besides corn, tobacco and soybeans," said Linton.

Drs. Jack and Melissa Vallee are proud to announce the opening of their veterinary practice at North Midland Dr. Animal Hospital. Drs. Vallee dedicate their practice to small animal medicine and surgery.

Saving the condor costs $18.5 million

SAN DIEGO (AP) — What price survival of the species?

In the case of the California condor, it's $18.5 million over 13 years, with no guarantee of success and bills that keep coming in.

"We have football players that make more in a year than is spent on this program," says Bill Toone, curator of birds at the San Diego Wild Animal Park. "The federal commitment to conservation in general is smaller than the annual budget for military marching bands."

That money pays for nearly a quarter-million acres of habitat; the salaries of those who have studied and protected North America's largest land birds, captured them to save them from extinction, and take care of them; and for "condorminiums" to help them feel at home in captivity.

And don't forget $93 a day in chopped mice for 13 chicks hatched from eggs retrieved from the wild and for Molloko, the first California condor chick bred and born in captivity. Molloko was hatched April 29 amid national fanfare.

"It's still an act of faith on just about everybody's part," said Linda Blum, a National Audubon Society habitat specialist. Only 28 of North America's largest land birds are known to exist; Molloko is the first born in captivity.

"Over the long haul, we're going to have to spend even more," Blum said. "But I think (should the condor vanish) the world would be a poorer place."

The Audubon Society has spent about $1 million since 1975 on the fight to save the condor. The Los Angeles Zoo has spent about $1 million while the San Diego Zoological Society, which oversees the San Diego Zoo and the Wild Animal Park, has spent $1.4 million since 1979. Fifteen of the remaining condors are at the Wild Animal Park and 13 at the Los Angeles Zoo.

In addition, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the condor program's lead agency, has spent $11 million since 1979; the U.S. Forest Service, $570,00 since 1980; the Bureau of Land Management, $500,000 since 1978; and the California State Fish and Game Department, $3 million since 1979.

High priest wants witchraft to be legal religion

EDITOR'S NOTE: To hear some of them tell it, there are more witches in North America than you can shake a broom at. One of them is an American who emigrated to Canada, a high priest of Wicca who is campaigning for witches' rights. Among other things, he wants a license to perform weddings.

By JEFF BRADLEY

TORONTO (AP) — He's a Vietnam veteran who spends quiet evenings watching Cary Grant movies and would like to be reincarnated as Fred Astaire.

But Charles Arnold is also Canada's most visible witch, a second-degree high priest of Wicca, the religion of witchcraft.

"I don't melt if water is poured over me," says the 40-year-old clerical worker who is campaigning for legal acceptance of his beliefs in both a male and female divinity, the potency of magic and absence of original sin.

Arnold began the quest last year when he asked his boss for paid religious leave on the Wiccan holidays of "Samhain," Nov. 1, when witches celebrate the mortality of the body and immortality of the soul, and "Belthane," May 1, welcoming summer, life and fertility.

Humber College of Applied Arts and Technology, which employs Arnold in its hospitality office, denied his request because Wicca is not recognized by the Canadian Council of Churches and lacks tax-free charitable status.

ARNOLD PROTESTED to a labor arbitration board which upheld his grievance and said: "Wicca is obviously a religion...the modern survival of the ancient pagan religions of Western Europe."

But Arnold's victory was short-lived.

The Washington D.C. native, who served a year in Vietnam, became an anti-war activist and emigrated to Canada 15 years ago, had also applied for a license to become the first Canadian witch authorized to perform weddings.

In a March ruling, the Ontario registrar-general's office turned him down. It questioned the legitimacy of his ordination and the nature of the Wiccan marriage ritual, known as a "handfasting."

Arnold blamed Ontario's Protestant establishment, although Council of Churches official Edith Shore showed some sympathy for the Wiccans. "Christianity was a fringe group when it started, too," she said.

Arnold complained that the Marriage Act discriminates against Canada's 5,000 witches by making it a crime, punishable by up to six months in jail, to perform an unauthorized wedding.

"THEY SHOULD either license me or do away with the law altogether," he said, noting that Wiccan weddings are permitted in 38 U.S. states. He had to travel to Montpelier, Vt., for his own Wiccan wedding three years ago.

The practice of witchcraft is fairly widespread in the United States, but precise numbers are hard to discern.

"It's everywhere, every big city probably has a group," says the Rev. W. M. Kent Burtner, a Dominican priest based in Portland, Ore., who studies cults. "I see it basically as a nature religion not associated with Satanism, but that may be skewed because of whom I get to meet as a Catholic priest. It's a write-your-own theology sort of a approach and it runs a real broad spectrum."

Lady Sabrina, a high priestess in Nashua, N.H., estimates there are "a couple of hundred thousand" members scattered across the United States, including "a couple of thousand" high priests and priestesses.

Starhawk, a San Francisco high priestess and author of "The Spiral Dance," a book about Wicca, largely agrees.

"I just had a conversation with someone and we decided that there were between 250,000 and 4 million of us," she says. The 4 million, she explains, would include all pagans.

"IN ANY case," she says, "there are more of us than there are Unitarians."

Starhawk says many members are underground.

"There is a long tradition where it is not safe to be a witch," she says. "We don't necessarily announce it. Many people's jobs would be in jeopardy."

Starhawk, an author and lecturer, teaches at a Catholic college in Oakland, Calif. Her most recent book is "Truth or Dare Encounters with Power, Authority and Mystery."

Lady Sabrina runs Our Lady of Enchantment, a Wicca mail order school with 6,000 members representing 25 countries.

"I have performed marriages and have tax-exempt status, but I only know 12 or 15 others who have tax exempt-status," she says. "You really have to fight to get it."

"MANY OF us in California perform marriages, but here if you go through the trouble to sign the papers and take a blood test, you can get licensed to perform marriages," Starhawk says. "A dog could get the license here."

Lady Sabrina, whose church is open to the public on Friday nights, says she never heard of Charles Arnold, but that does not surprise her.

"For a while a woman in Salem, Mass., who was picketing the movie 'Witches of Eastwick' became very well known. Since there is no central organization, whoever makes the most noise becomes the most prominent witch."

Charles Arnold is a second-degree high priest of Wicca, the religion of witchcraft. He is leader of the 50-member Temple of the Elder Faiths in Toronto.

"It's (Wicca) everywhere, every big city probably has a group. I see it basically as a nature religion not associated with Satanism, but that may be skewed because of whom I get to meet as a Catholic priest..."

— The Rev. W.M. Kent Burtner

Arnold, a soft-spoken man with a beard, says he was initiated as a priest in witchcraft traditions dating back thousands of years.

Each coven, grove or temple chooses its own rituals and vows. Some covens meet in the nude, but Arnold's group prefers robes.

He offered this description of a Wiccan wedding:

Inside a magical circle, the male and female divinities are summoned along with the guardians of the four elements — air, water, fire and earth.

THE GROOM'S left hand is bound to the bride's right hand and some choose to draw blood from their skin and touch like blood brothers.

Couples exchange rings, bracelets or floral crowns; step over flames for purification and fertility, and jump over a broom to symbolize household unity.

Traditional gifts include bread (for plenty), silver (prosperity), salt (health) and wood or coal (physical and emotional warmth).

Before the priest pronounces them husband and wife, he invokes the couple "to pleasure one another," Arnold says. "We don't cut sex off from the rest of life. We don't make a big thing out of it either."

At the heart of the primitive religion lies the power of the male and female in nature, symbolized by the god usually referred to by the Celtic name Herne, and the goddess known as Cerridwen or Athena or Isis, Arnold said.

Wiccans also believe in the mysteries of magic, reincarnation and in celebrating the rites of passage, such as first menstruation and menopause.

"WE GO through life after life to learn and evolve and progress to the point where we rejoin the god and goddess," Arnold says. "Behind them, there is something we can't even identify, the unity they come from."

Witches don't go around laying curses on people, and they don't conduct human or animal sacrifices, eat babies or worship the devil as depicted in folklore and comics, he said.

But the craft does have a practical side.

"I mix up potions and my wife makes some of the finest liqueurs you've ever tasted," Arnold says. "I use wormwood and calendula (a rare herb) in vinegar to take bruises away and lavender vinegar for sunburn."

Arnold says he discovered his religion 10 years ago after intuitively constructing a Wiccan altar in his home. A woman he was dating happened to be a witch and was startled to see the altar.

Leader of the 50-member Temple of the Elder Faiths in Toronto, Arnold was raised in New Jersey by a grandmother who read tea leaves.

"WE BELIEVE that if you are meant to find the craft, you will," he says. "Many traditional Wiccans think we're growing too fast and this will water down the religion and may actually destroy it."

He said covens usually meet on eight sabbaths coinciding with the year's solar and lunar cycles. The average age in his group is 27 and members include a real estate agent, a schoolteacher and a naturopath.

"Covens are closer than most families. Members tend to be more imaginative than most people and a little bit eccentric," said Arnold, a published poet and expert on ritual body decoration.

"I want to come back in my next life as Fred Astaire. He had class."

Book chronicles Shenandoah Campaign

By MATT MILLER

CARLISLE, Pa. (AP) — Americans had learned to be merciless to each other by the Civil War's fourth summer.

For the armies of the Union, slash-and-burn assaults on Southern territory had become standard practice.

Northern leaders saw total destruction of the South's ability to make war as the quickest, and perhaps only, way to throttle the stubborn Confederacy.

It was under this theory that the Shenandoah Campaign was born.

Jeffry D. Wert, a Centre County schoolteacher, chronicles the military, political and personal patchwork that made up that decisive struggle in a new book, "From Winchester to Cedar Creek: The Shenandoah Campaign of 1864."

The 324-page volume, published by Carlisle's South Mountain Press, is the Centre Hall man's first effort at a full-length book. And it is something Wert thinks is long overdue.

"There was just not a good study of the campaign," Wert said. "I felt that an evaluation of the campaign, especially one that treated both sides fairly, was needed."

The Shenandoah battles have largely been overlooked by historians, who generally treat the actions as a sideshow to Sherman's March to the Sea and the bloody slugging match between Gen. Ulysses S. Grant and Gen. Robert E. Lee in northern Virginia, he said.

Yet, he added, the Shenandoah campaign was one of the last great offensives of the Civil War.

In 10 weeks beginning in August 1864, Northern forces under Gen. Philip Sheridan cut a swath of destruction through Virginia's rich Shenandoah Valley. When they were done, the breadbasket of the Confederacy was a smoldering ruin.

The efforts of Confederate Gen. Jubal Early, who was charged with the futile task of keeping Sheridan's overwhelming Union host out of the valley, may even have prolonged the war, he said.

At the same time, the battles there provided a strong backdrop for the vital presidential election in 1864, in which Abraham Lincoln was challenged by one of his erstwhile generals, George B. McClellan.

Wert's analysis of the Shenandoah struggle covers the large and the small pictures.

His narrative moves from the councils of generals and politicians to the campfires of tired and, often, terrified private soldiers.

Midland SPCA director Dalton Byerly eyes a six-week-old pup that had just been brought in. The pup had been left in the front seat of a pick-up truck while the driver was inside a grocery store, said Byerly.

SPCA HELPS ANIMALS IN NEED

Story By Patrick Crimmins

It may not be a well-known fact, but Midland's biggest cathouse is a bit south of Interstate 20, in an 80-by-40 metal building. The former day care center is carpeted, and the residents live under cool, whirring ceiling fans. At night, they listen to the radio.

Trouble is, there are too many of them.

"We probably have about 40 cats — cats and kittens," says Dalton Byerly, director of the Midland Society for the Prevention of Cruelty of Animals (SPCA) animal shelter at 15 Kerry Rd. "And this time of year, we get an average of 20 cats a week."

Byerly says adoptions of dogs and cats at the shelter currently are "average" in number.

Byerly, who unsurprisingly is an avowed animal lover, came to Midland in 1977 to work for the SPCA. He worked for the City of Midland animal shelter for several years before he returned four years ago to take over the SPCA.

"We are the only humane society shelter between Dallas and El Paso that I'm aware of," he says, pointing out one of three cathouses and roomy individual cages standing in the middle of the room. "It is a unique shelter. You don't see cages like this, this big, with air all around."

The Midland SPCA, which has been in operation since 1948, depends solely on private donations to operate. About one-third of the operating budget comes from proceeds from "Cause for Paws," the shelter's annual fundraiser. This year, it will be July 22.

Adjoining the main building is the kennel, which was added after the SPCA moved in, in 1984. On a recent visit, 24 dogs, from tiny mutts to two majestic-looking Great Danes, occupied the concrete runs.

Mornings at the shelter are busy, and in a period of a few minutes, three fluffy gray tabby kittens and a brown and black dog had been brought to the shelter.

Persons wishing to leave animals must pay a $20 admission fee, according to Byerly.

"It's because we feel the previous owner should bear some of the burden," he says.

If you wish to adopt a cat, a $30 fee is charged, which includes a certificate for a $20 discount to neuter the animal. A dog will cost you $35, and also includes the discount.

All adoptions require the new owner sign a contract stating the animal will be neutered when it turns the proper age.

A critically important task for the SPCA — and indeed included in the name — is the management of cruelty investigations, which usually number five per week, according to Byerly.

"They concern all types of animals — dogs, horses, cattle and cats," he says. "Most cruelty cases have to do with lack of care. A lot are outright abuses — shooting animals, mistreaing them."

On an investigation, Byerly will contact the presumed owner about the abuse. "We usually take the animal if it is a life-threatening situation," he says. "We prefer not to take people to court," but will if it is necessary, he adds.

While surveying the brook before him, Byerly noted the area's large animal population, and explained why the SPCA is so vital.

"This seems to be a heavily-populated area for dogs and cats, and I don't know why. One of the problems is the county does not look after any animals and they should."

Lawsuit against CECOS continues in fifth day

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A multi-million lawsuit alleging a company was negligent in failing to warn a well service supervisor and his workers that they could be exposed to toxic materials and fumes on a hazardous waste disposal injection well continues in its fifth day in 358th District Court today.

Mid-afternoon Friday, District Judge Bill McCoy overruled a motion by Midland attorney Charles Tighe when Michael McLeaish, the attorney representing Paul Farek, 36, of San Angelo, began questioning CECOS District Manager Ray Sonnenberg about an earlier accident involving an Odessa man that resulted in a lawsuit against CECOS and a $273,000 award against the company.

Tighe claimed the reference was not germane to the case because circumstances surrounding the two incidents were totally different. He argued that McCoy earlier ruled McLeaish could make no reference to previous accidents or court awards and that McLeaish's comments violated this ruling and introduced prejudicial references to an earlier incident.

McLeaish countered he was only trying to determine if CECOS ever warned outside workers of the need for protective clothing.

Jurors were removed from the courtroom to the hallway, while attorneys remained inside to argue the mistrial motion before the judge.

However, as the debate continued the volume of voices increased and began to reach the ears of jurors outside the courtroom and the bailiff had to move them to the other end of the hallway.

McCoy finally ended the argument, ruling that McLeaish's questions were not sufficient to declare a mistrial.

Farek is seeking $1.5 million in actual damages and $5 million in punitive damages for negligence on the part of CECOS and other defendants because he claims he was not warned and was subsequently sprayed by hazardous materials and exposed to toxic fumes that have left him with a variety of ailments.

If the jury finds CECOS, Sonnenberg and Ken Davis Associates (now know and KEDA Inc.) were grossly negligent by failing to warn him of dangers, then he asks the award of $50 million in punitive damages.

Farek was a supervisor for Well-Tech, a well servicing company, when he and two other workers were assigned to do a workover of the CECOS well in February 1985.

They were injecting brine into the well to kill it, Farek claims, when he and the other two were sprayed by hazardous materials and exposed to fumes that escaped from the well.

The trial was scheduled to resume in 358th District Court at 9 a.m. today.

Social worker says mysterious boy may be runaway

TAMPICO, Mexico (AP) — A Mexican social worker identified a mysterious boy found wandering in Ciudad Juarez as the same child brought to her by police last year and who ran away an hour later.

"That's him," Juana Brazal de Galindo said after examining a photo of the hearing and speech impaired boy called Sabath, the El Paso Times reported today.

Ms. Galindo is a social worker with the Integrated Family Development, a social service agency that has offices throughout Mexico and is known by its Spanish initials of DIF.

She said the child in the picture is the same boy who was taken to her office with a cut on his left leg just above the knee about a year ago, and that boy indicated with gestures he was injured in a motorcycle accident.

Sabath, believed to be 7 or 8, has been living in a DIF center in Juarez since he was found walking along a highway Nov. 7. He has a scar on his left leg, just above the knee.

Mexican and U.S. officials have failed to identify the boy, who cannot read or write and uses gestures to speak. Officials have interpreted Sabath's drawings and gestures as indications he may have been a survivor of a plane crash that killed his parents and sister.

"I think (the police) brought him here because they found him on the streets late at night. Now that I remember, I don't think he even saw the doctor for very long because he ran away," Ms. Galindo said.

She said she used hand gestures to ask the boy what happened to him. "He indicated that he and another youngster were on a motorcycle and that they crashed."

Roberto Chantac Dominguez, an employee at the Tampico juvenile detention center also identified the boy as one brought in by city police and transferred to DIF because of a cut on his leg. When told of the boy's airplane pictures, Dominguez laughed and said: "He's like a lot of little kids around here. They make up the most fantastic stories."

No records were filed on the boy because he was at the DIF office so briefly. Ms. Galindo says she believes the boy was picked up last summer because "it was very hot.

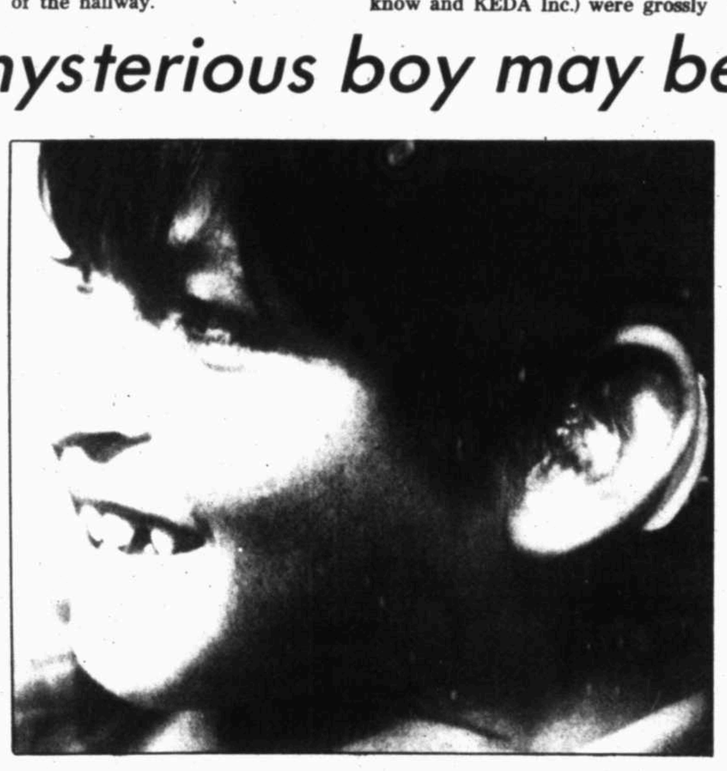
"He was wearing shorts and a shirt, but he had on no shoes. The boy was very dirty, and he looked like he had been on the streets a long time."

Ms. Galindo suspects the child may be from Tampico or a nearby village.

Tampico attracts many runaway children, who hitch rides to the city on buses and trucks, said Mireya Cardenas de Garmienda, director of the Tampico DIF office.

"We get a lot of parents who come here hoping to find their runaway children," she said.

One recent searcher was a woman who came looking for her deaf son, a boy who seems to match Sabath's description. Garmienda wasn't sure when the woman arrived, but said she spoke to juvenile facility officials after learning they had such a child.



Sabat, the deaf youngster found wandering Juarez, Mexico streets and now lives in a Juarez children's home, smiles at press conference when he was given a hearing aid. With the aid, he now has limited hearing in his left ear.

For Houston participants in study, day on job includes legal 'high'

HOUSTON (AP) — The pay was low and the advertisement small, but a university researcher's request for participants in a marijuana study drew more than 600 calls.

The 27 people selected for the experiment were injected with a form of marijuana, getting a legal "high" as part of a study to try to determine the effects of tobacco smoking on the metabolism of tetrahydrocannabinol, or THC, the active component in marijuana.

Shane McCluskey was one of those who took part in the experiment, conducted by researchers at the University of Texas Medical School in Houston.

"It was munchie city," said McCluskey, smiling slightly about the voracious appetite he experienced. "I started off the first 45 minutes with a fairly intense high, but about 2 p.m., I didn't feel the effects at all."

The 34-year-old Houstonian and merchant seaman had answered a small newspaper advertisement: "Needed: Healthy Male Volunteers, 18 to 40, for Marijuana Study."

He wasn't the only one; the ad attracted more than 600 calls.

The study is being by Dr. Leo E. Hollister, professor of psychiatry and pharmacology at the UT Medical School.

Hollister, a researcher of hallucinogens and their effects, has conducted experiments on such drugs since the late 1950s.

Hamp Gillespie, assistant professor of psychiatry at UT and Hollister's associate for more than 20 years, said the experiment is part of their ongoing research on marijuana.

"It is a drug that has been around for a long time and widely used by the public," he said. "It is a known substance, but you must redefine it again and again."

The current research, he said, is aimed at finding further therapeutic uses of THC and testing how smoking tobacco affects the absorption rate of the drug.

The experiment involved people who smoke tobacco and marijuana, some who do not smoke tobacco or marijuana, or who use it only infrequently.

Hollister said the results will not be known for several months because blood samples had to be sent to Sweden, where scientists have the best technology for analyzing the tests.

McCluskey said he volunteered because he needed the money — $50 plus an extra $10 for referring someone else who participated. His curiosity also spurred him.

The 24-hour experiment began for McCluskey at 8:30 a.m. Wednesday. He started receiving the synthetic THC intravenously about 10 a.m., and he was released at 8 p.m., with the understanding he would return the next day.

During the experiment, each participant had to rate his degree of "high." Blood pressure and pulse rate also were checked regularly.

Pari-mutuel critics say supporters should help develop new industry

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Parimutuel wagering critics say suggestions that the government help pay for race tracks in three Texas cities prove that horse racing supporters have broken their promise to develop the industry without taxpayer support.

But supporters say they made it clear from the beginning the public would be involved in building major race tracks.

"The whole thing was a fraud from the beginning. I don't think there was any intention by the downtown boys in Dallas, Fort Worth or Houston to invest one dime of their money in a track," said State Rep. Randy Pennington, R-Houston.

"I think you'll find they're willing to sell their property to the public for a profit. But they are unwilling to take the risk for a profit."

Pennington said suggestions that the government help build or pay for construction of race tracks in Fort Worth, Dallas and Houston are a form of "business welfare."

But Sen. O.H. "Ike" Harris, R-Dallas, the key sponsor of the Texas Racing Act and Ricky Knox, the head of the chief lobbying group for Texas horse racing, say they never promised that they could build a major race track without the public's help.

"We've talked in terms of the public involvement in a race track from the very beginning," Harris told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram in a story published Sunday.

"The biggest misconception was that there were going to be hundreds of people ready to develop race tracks in Texas," Knox said. "They may have the land, but they are lacking the knowledge and the other things they need to develop it."

Under most of the scenarios being discussed for Dallas and Fort Worth, tax money would not be used to build a track. Instead the track would be built with government bonds, some which would have to be repaid by the government if a track failed.

Knox, executive director of the Texas Racing Asociation, says the group has commissioned a study to ensure that money spent on Texas race tracks — public or private — can be repaid from profits.

Pennington said Texas voters were promised racing would be a boon to the economy — a cash-and-carry venture so promising that private investors would rush to put it in place, but the rush has not yet begun.

Before Texas lawmakers approved the state's racing act in 1986, they debated the question of using public money for racing.

Sen. Grant Jones, D-Abilene, says he sponsored but dropped an amendment that would have banned using public money after learning it would prevent county fair associations from using money from local governments to run already running, non-wagering tracks.

Wright wants computer dealer on list

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — House Speaker Jim Wright said he doesn't see anything wrong with working to get a hometown computer dealer on a list of approved congressional vendors.

Wright had originally said he knew nothing of the arrangement that allowed his friend and political supporter, Marshall Brachman, to install an experimental system in his Washington office. But the speaker told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram in a report published Sunday that he is trying to place Brachman's company on the approved list.

"I don't make any bones about it," Wright said. "I'm not ashamed of having a bias in favor of a local firm.

"I'm not asking that they close out other competitors. I'm just asking that they open up the range of competitors to include our Fort Worth firm so he can be considered for business along with these other firms."

The Star-Telegram reported June 16 that Brachman's company, Computerized Business Systems Inc, installed the system in Wright's offices as the first step to becoming an approved dealer to the House.

Wright said at the time that he was unaware of the arrangement, which was negotiated by two of his aides.

"That's the first I've heard of that," he said in the news conference. "What do you mean by an approved list, anyway?"

But in a telephone interview Saturday, Wright confirmed that is helping Brachman's company get approval from the House Administration Committee to compete for business in the offices of all 435 representatives.

Brachman has not collected payment for the $80,000 system placed in Wright's office over the last year, and some House members say Wright may be in violation of House rules, which prohibit accepting gifts.

"There is nothing wrong with getting business for Brachman if his services can be of as much benefit to members as they are to me," Wright said. "And as far as being a Fort Worth company, I don't see anything wrong with that. I'm always trying to promote business for Fort Worth people."

Wright is under a House ethics investigation that centers partially on past behind-the-scenes efforts for friends and associates. The computer deal is not part of that investigation.

Wright said he had forgotten specific details of the arrangement, handled by aides Marshall Lynam and Phil Duncan. But he said he enthusiastically embraces the idea of giving business to Brachman to expand computer competition on Capitol Hill.

"If it's a gift, it wouldn't be a gift for me," Wright said. "It's the government that gets the freebie, and the taxpayers would be the ones who benefit."

Midland graduates awarded Masonic medallions

From Staff Reports

Four 1988 Midland public school graduates are being awarded Masonic bronze medallions for their scholarship.

Students receiving the awards from Midland Masonic Lodge No. 623 and Acacia Masonic Lodge No. 1414 are Robert E. Lee High School graduates Kristen Knebel and Donald T. Artley and Midland High School graduates Christi Craddick and Kelly Allen Bedrick.

The medallions salute Republic of Texas President Mirabeau B. Lamar as the "father of public education in Texas" and as a Mason "who cared" about education.

"It (the medallion) demonstrates that Masons today still care and support the public-school system in Texas," according to a Masonic news release, "and the medallion recognizes that the founding fathers of both Masonry and Texas have left us a heritage that is not only unique, but has survived to become a great Texas tradition."

Let Your Voice Be Heard

MISD'S 24 HOUR SURVEILLANCE POLICY WILL BE DISCUSSED ON JUNE 28, 1988, at 7:15 P.M. AT THE MISD ADMINISTRATION BUILDING - 702 N. "H".

According to the City Council PTA questionnaire completed by our current Board of Trustees, all Trustees except Mr. Bob Rich opposed the 24 hr. surveillance policy. Mr. Rich stated in his questionnaire that "the concept is good but guidelines are unworkable".

We, as parents, recognize that some of our Midland teenagers have drug and alcohol problems. We are against ONLY the "24 hour surveillance policy" NOT MISD'S drug, alcohol and tobacco policy as it relates to school functions and activities.

OUR PROBLEMS WITH THE POLICY:

1. During non-school hours, students are parents' responsibility, NOT MISD'S.
2. During non-school hours, it is not the teachers' responsibility to police our children.
3. The policy has been unequally enforced.
4. The policy singles out extracurricular activity students.
5. The policy has created "witch-hunts" in our schools, turning students against students.

WE ARE LOOKING FOR ALTERNATIVES TO THIS POLICY. ATTEND THE JUNE 28th MEETING. LET YOUR VOICE BE HEARD.

Ocean, space exploration similar, scientist says

By KRISTINE MOE
Copley News Service

Exploring the ocean is much like exploring outer space, according to John A. McGowan of the University of California at San Diego Scripps Institution of Oceanography.

Scientists who want to conduct research in either place must take difficult trips through isolated territory. Usually these are brief journeys — a few days on the space shuttle or a few weeks on a research ship traversing thousands of miles.

However, while space researchers have convinced Congress to fund a permanent space station for long-term research, oceanographers are left with short cruises on relatively small ships.

It's time oceanographers had a permanent ocean station as well, McGowan says.

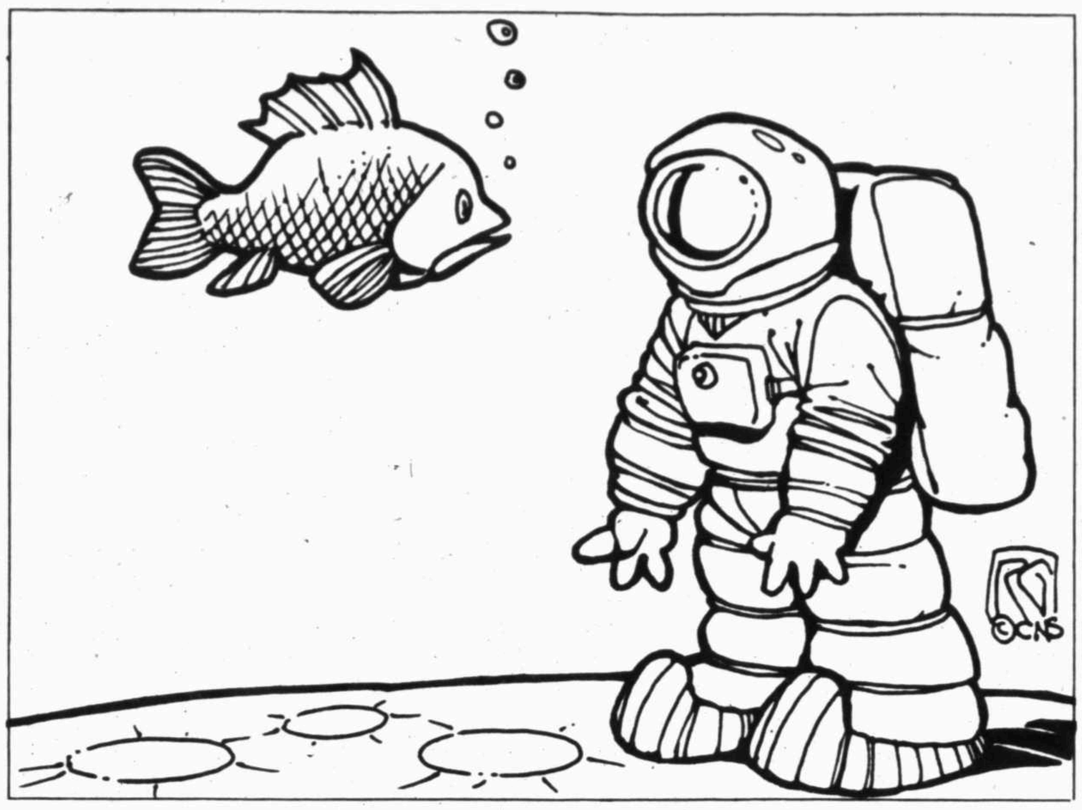
McGowan and several other scientists around the country are trying to drum up support for installing a large, permanently moored ocean observatory — the size of more than four research vessels placed side by side — somewhere out in the middle of one of Earth's oceans.

It would be staffed by perhaps 45 scientists and crew members and would give ocean researchers a chance to study conditions in one place constantly over a period of years.

"The idea is to take hourly measurements (of ocean and atmospheric conditions) for five or six years," McGowan says.

"Weather people have been doing it for years" with meteorological instruments based on land, "and for good reason," he says. The long-term weather observations have led to an understanding of the global warming of the "greenhouse effect," the hole in the protective ozone layer over Antarctica, and other large-scale climate changes.

"We want to do the same thing with the oceans," McGowan says.



The observatory could be built atop an oil platform; there are many sitting in storage now because of the current slump in the oil industry. These platforms typically float on hollow, catamaran-type pontoons that, once towed to the designated site, are pumped full with water and sunk to stabilize the entire structure.

Currently, oceanographic ships collect data at a number of locations. But that approach provides only a snapshot of conditions at one brief time over a large area; it cannot tell much about how the ocean changes over time.

"If you just take one or two measurements at yearly intervals, you really miss much," says Walter Munk, professor of geophysics and a physical oceanographer at Scripps. "One needs to take what the oceanographers call a time-series of measurements in order to make much sense."

By studying conditions at the same place over several years, researchers could find out, for example, if quick but violent storms have longer-lasting effects on the fish populations than a slow change like the ocean warming of El Nino.

"It may be that the whole state of the system is set by a few brief, energetic events," McGowan says. "On the other hand, there are those who say it is the very large and slow events like El Nino that are more important. We just don't know.

"We'd like to know if the small-scale changes are more important than the big scale."

A permanent ocean station "is a great idea," says Munk, who also is chairman of the National Academy of Sciences' ocean science advisory board.

McGowan hopes to establish plenty of support like that before going to federal funding agencies for the money. His colleagues in the effort are Robert A. Knox of Scripps, Peter H. Wiebe of the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution in Massachusetts and Charles B. Miller of Oregon State University.

"The way something large like this gets funded is to get the scientific community interested and enthusiastic. It's really going to have to have widespread, enthusiastic support if it's going to fly," McGowan says.

"Most of our colleagues don't seem to question the scientific necessity for this, but they're a little timid about what it's going to cost," he says.

The cost of acquiring an unused oil platform for the station could range from zero — if it is a donated by an oil company — to more than $5 million, McGowan said. Daily operating costs would be "not much more than operating a big research oceanographic vessel — on the order of $15,000," he says.

Federal research funds for this type of long-term project are increasingly competitive. For example, scientists who have been working for two years to drill a three-mile hole into the San Andreas Fault to study earthquakes recently found that their funding had been halted before the work was completed because of competition with other projects.

"I think it's worth going after," says Stephen Beck, an ocean engineer who manages a smaller ocean research station operated by Scripps.

"It may end up being cheaper to have a dozen scientists at one location (on the large ocean station) than a dozen groups in different locations in a dozen different research vessels."

Chris D'Elia, program director of biological oceanography for the National Science Foundation, says "there are very plausible aspects" to a permanent ocean station. "We're very good at monitoring all sorts of short-term bursts (of oceanographic conditions)...but down the line, we are going to have to make these long-term measurements."

...Scientists around the country are trying to drum up support for installing a large, permanently moored ocean observatory...somewhere out in the middle of one of Earth's oceans.

However, there are other ways to conduct a long-term ocean study, D'Elia and Munk point out. Satellites can detect conditions on the ocean surface; buoys can take measurements in the water. But so far, there is no good way to get biological data about fish and plant life without sending a researcher out to collect it personally.

Scripps' smaller portable research station, called FLIP, is now 26 years old and is due to be replaced before long, according to Beck. It can carry only 16 people and remain at sea for no more than 30 days. Until recently, Scripps scientists also used a research tower that was anchored in the ocean floor off Mission Beach in California. The Navy-owned facility, however, toppled over in a late January winter storm, and there are no plans now to rebuild it.

Meanwhile, shore-bound oceanographers pump seawater up to their laboratories at Scripps from pipes that extend along the research institute's pier. McGowan points out the severe limitations of trying to do ocean research that way.

"Instead of bringing organisms and seawater to the lab, we ought to take the lab out to the ocean," he says.

Town of Birds Landing has one of smallest post offices in nation

BIRDS LANDING, Calif. (AP) — The Birds Landing post office, named one of the smallest in the nation, looks more like a spruced-up tool shed than the local outpost of the U.S. Postal Service.

Postmaster Shirley Paolini admits that handling mail for the 24 folks in town and about 100 families in the surrounding countryside doesn't sound like a high-pressure job by city standards. Nevertheless, Paolini says she never has a dull moment.

"For me, it's never boring. It can be anything else, but it's never boring. You never know what the day is going to bring," she said.

The post office serves an important function for the farm families who have lived in the area for generations and for the homesick Basque, Peruvian and Mexican sheepherders under contract with local ranches.

Paolini, who lives with her husband in a frame house just behind the post office, has been postmaster for 20 years. In the summer, she and her husband are joined by their grandson, who catches turtles in the nearby creek and plays softball in the road.

An American flag and red geraniums grace the front of the post office, while two friendly old dogs watch the locals trade gossip at nearby picnic tables. Inside, a table and two chairs provide more opportunity to catch up on town news. Next door sits a 19th century general store.

Founded by settler John Bird in the 1870s, Birds Landing is located south of Fairfield in Solano County, about 20 miles northeast of San Francisco.

The U.S. Postal Service announced Wednesday that the Birds Landing post office tied with two others in a contest to name the nation's smallest post office. The two others were Salvo, N.C., and Ocholpee, Fla., beating out such places as Cut and Shoot, Texas; Smile, Ky.; and Remote, Alaska.

Candidates for the contest were nominated by the public. Using a point system, nominees were compared in such categories as square footage, local population, number of post office boxes and number of delivery route stops.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your basically shy personality could attract a bountiful job offer. Be more assertive in a close personal relationship. You need more time before deciding whether or not to make a commitment. Family members are your strongest supporters. Be true to your values. This is not a favorable time to lend or borrow money. Get your financial affairs in order and practice better money management. Investment opportunities abound.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: slugger Don Baylor, comedienne Gilda Radner, philosopher Jean-Jacques Rousseau, comedian Mel Brooks, actor Pat Morita, author Eric Ambler, country musician Lester Flatt, England's King Henry VIII, composer Richard Rodgers.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Truth is stranger than fiction and certainly your best weapon in making an important deal. Health concerns should not be overdramatized. Seeing a doctor will clear up any fears you may have.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Concentrate on work and ignore outside distractions. Today's events affect you in a positive way, opening the door to better financial opportunities. A relationship needs time to mature. Try to be patient.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Do not be afraid to make a positive statement and take decisive action today. You could be on the verge of achieving something special. Guard against a summer cold by getting more rest.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You have all the tools you need to win a competition. Parents instill character-building values. You are a leader, not a follower. Show you are mature and a relationship will develop the way you want.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You may have to work side-by-side with someone you do not care for. Hide your impatience and concentate on teamwork's many benefits. Leave your cares at home when you go out tonight.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Getting the go-ahead for a personal project makes you feel on top of the world. Do not expect too much; you could be overestimating a business proposition.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A happy-go-lucky attitude comes in handy when your relationship with someone gets a bit sticky. Try to be more tolerant of your loved ones' idiosyncrasies. Strengthen family ties. Keep confidences.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠KJ52 ♡853 ◇92 ♣6532
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ♠	Dbl	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—This is too easy. Partner has asked you to bid your best suit, so the choice is clear—bid two clubs. Don't bid one no trump. That is forward-going, and shows a minimum of 8-9 points (perhaps a point or two fewer where you have no room to respond at the one-level).

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠KJ83 ♡954 ◇KQ103 ♣AQ
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	2 ♡	?

What do you bid now?
A.—This is not a question of whether you should bid game, but whether you have a slam, especially since East's high cards are trapped between two good hands. Start by cue-bidding three hearts. At this point in the auction that simply shows a strong hand and does not promise a control in the enemy suit.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AJ952 ♡76 ◇K65 ♣A72
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—In the modern style, a rebid of two no trump would show a balanced minimum opening bid, and that's certainly what you have. However, you have a hand without a single tenace position, so if no trump is the right spot, partner should declare. Therefore, we would choose two spades as our rebid.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AKJ6 ♡AQ9 ◇73 ♣AQ72
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—A difficult hand to bid. Our first choice would be a jump to two spades. That shows our strength but slighly distorts the distribution of the hand—when we support hearts next, partner might get the impression that we hold a singleton diamond. The alternative is a jump to four hearts, hoping that partner has a five-card suit or that he will be able to handle the Moysian 4-3 fit.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQ ♡Q952 ◇AQ5 ♣KQJ6
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
4 ♡	Pass	5 ♡	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—Partner is interested in slam, and surely he must have some first or second-round controls to cue-bid. Instead, he has chosen to bid over game in the trump suit. Trump strength must be his concern, and since you have the weakest holding possible for your bidding, pass.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AJ1082 ♡AKQ ◇95 ♣K105
The bidding has proceeded:

East	South	West	North
1 ◇	1 ♠	Pass	Pass
Dbl	?

What action do you take?
A.— You have a very good hand, and you should make an effort to encourage partner to bid, even on slight values, should the opponents compete. The way to express your desire is to redouble.

Michael Reagan says he has talked to his biological father

NEW YORK (AP) — President Reagan's adopted son, Michael, recently heard from his biological father for the first time, according to a published report.

The 43-year-old Reagan says his biological father telephoned him following publicity in March about Michael's autobiography, "On the Outside Looking In."

Reagan said he and his biological father have not met yet, according to this week's People magazine.

Reagan said he won't disclose his biological father's name or hometown.

"He wants to stay out of the spotlight," he said.

Yeager

MONTROSE, Colo. (AP) — Aviation pioneer Chuck Yeager helped celebrate the opening of a $2.4 million, 28,000-square-foot terminal at Montrose County Airport.

"I've been in and out of that crummy place a thousand times, and it was horrible," said Yeager of the old terminal. "Now, when you move into a nice facility like this, people are going to like it."

Yeager, a U.S. Air Force general best known as the first pilot ever to break the sound barrier, was one of hundreds of people who attended Saturday's party to open the terminal.

Yeager said he often comes to the Montrose area to hunt and fish and to visit his son.

Rep. Ben Nighthorse Campbell, D-Colo., said the terminal would help bring in "a bumper crop of tourists."

NEW YORK (AP) — Divorce lawyer Marvin Mitchelson called two ex-clients "professional extortionists" who can "cry on cue" after they went on CBS-TV's "60 Minutes" to describe the rapes they said he committed on them.

"After their complaints were filed, I went and took a lie detector test on both women, and it came out 100 percent that I had had nothing to do with them," Mitchelson said after Sunday night's CBS program, which featured a look at the investigation of allegations by Kristen Barrett-Whitney and Patricia French.

"These women are charlatans, they can cry on cue," he said. "They know it didn't happen, and I know it didn't happen. They're professional extortionists, that's what you run into in this business. When you're a high-profile figure, these people come after you."

Ms. Barrett-Whitney said she paid Mitchelson $25,500 to represent her in a palimony action, only to have him rape her in a bathroom. The CBS program quoted Ms. French as saying she was raped by Mitchelson, and another former client as saying he fondled her and took a bubble bath in front of her.

The Los Angeles district attorney's office decided there was not enough evidence to prosecute, said assistant prosecutor Dan Murphy.

The "60 Minutes" report said that when Mitchelson was told about the story, "he cried and pleaded with us not to air this report," offering "10 great stories" if the program dropped the Mitchelson piece.

"I urged them not to do it because it was untrue, but it's a misrepresentation for (60 Minutes correspondent) Mike Wallace to say I begged him not to do it," Mitchelson said from his Los Angeles office.

Bumbry

LONDON (AP) — American soprano Grace Bumbry sang the first two acts of "Aida" in a spectacular production, but pulled out when she suffered voice problems.

Bulgarian Ghena Dimitrova took over the role of the Ethiopian princess for the rest of Sunday's performance before almost 15,000 people — Britain's biggest-ever opera audience — at the Earls Court auditorium.

Miss Bumbry had been suffering from tonsillitis and hay fever, but promised she would be "all right on the night even if my nose drips like the Nile."

She sang the first two acts in good voice but at the end of the second act the audience was told she was indisposed and unable to continue. Miss Dimitrova, due to sing the lead role tonight, was in the audience and quickly responded to Miss Bumbry's call for help, an opera spokeswoman said.

The audience gave Miss Dimitrova cheers and rousing applause.

DETROIT (AP) — Not even the theft of Rosa Park's new car could prevent the civil right's activist from celebrating her 75th birthday.

"Many times, I might not have been here, I would have been so upset," Parks told a birthday gathering of 70 people Saturday at Westminster Church in Detroit. "But I was determined to be here."

Parks' rose-colored Buick Century was stolen Friday but was found undamaged by police later in the day. Parks received the auto recently as a gift for her birthday, which was Feb. 4.

The prayer breakfast was one of a series of birthday celebrations for the woman who is considered the mother of the civil rights movement. In 1955, she refused to give up her seat to a white passenger on a Montgomery, Ala., bus, sparking the civil rights movement.

NEW YORK (AP) — Rudolf Nureyev will belatedly celebrate his 50th birthday tonight in the company of fellow ballet greats such as Dame Margot Fonteyn and some not-so-greats, such as the prima baallerina Miss Piggy of "Swine Lake" fame.

The Paris Opera Ballet, directed by Nureyev since 1983, will perform at the Metropolitan Opera House in honor of the dancer's birthday, albeit three months and 10 days after he reached half a century.

Nureyev's impact was first felt in 1961, when he bolted from the Kirov Ballet, a Soviet company visiting Paris at the time, and defected.

Nureyev is credited with breaking molds within tradition and blending a sensuality with disciplined virtuosity.

Johnston will be buried July 9 in Keene, N.H., where his racial secret came to light in 1940 when he was refused a commission in the Navy because he admitted being black, his son said.

Video terminal-related eyestrain avoidable, experts say

By PHILIP M. BOFFEY
New York Times News Service

Vast numbers of American workers are suffering eyestrain from prolonged work with video display terminals, most of it avoidable by wearing the proper glasses or changing the work environment, according to experts who have studied the problem.

Many workers, particularly those over 40, are unaware that the eyeglasses or contact lenses they wear to perform other tasks may be inappropriate for working with video terminals, which require reading material on a screen set at an abnormal distance and height from the viewer.

Instead of making VDT work easier, a pair of normal eyeglasses may well increase eye fatigue and cause the operator of a terminal to assume head or body positions that strain the neck and muscles, experts say.

The issue of eye and muscular strain will become increasingly important as video terminals spread further into the work place.

The machine, which is essentially a television-like screen attached to a keyboard, is replacing typewriters and other office machines in such industries as telecommunications, insurance, transportation and newspapers.

More than 15 million terminals are already in use in the United States, and the number will swell to 70 million by 1990, according to industry estimates.

ONLY THIS month the Suffolk County (N.Y.) Legislature passed a law requiring companies to subsidize annual eye examinations for VDT operators and any eyeglasses or contact lenses required because of working on the terminals.

Although some leading experts disagree with the specifics or intent of the Suffolk law, there is no doubt that it reflects a growing concern among VDT workers about the condition of their eyes.

Surveys have consistently shown that more than half of all workers who use the terminals complain about hot, tired or watery eyes, blurred vision, headaches and other symptoms of eyestrain after long hours staring at the screens. Such visual problems are probably the most common complaint of VDT workers, surveys indicate.

The visual problems can become a disruptive annoyance that reduces a worker's productivity and saps the ability to read or enjoy other activities after work.

But just about every expert group that has studied the evidence agrees that terminals cause no permanent damage to the eye.

"The VDT is not a lethal weapon," said Dr. Lowell Glatt, an optometrist in Hicksville, N.Y., who serves on the American Optometric Association's study group on environmental and occupational vision. "The VDT does not bombard the eye with mysterious things that are going to chew it up."

Nor will long hours at a terminal cause permanent impairment of visual function, most experts say.

The American Academy of Ophthalmology states that "eyestrain is an annoying symptom" but "not an indication that use of the eyes must be discontinued to avoid permanent damage."

SOME STUDIES suggest that too much concentration on close work can cause nearsightedness, but the evidence is hotly disputed.

The optometric association has warned terminal operators who experience vision problems: "Be careful not to assume that these problems are temporary and will go away. Most VDT-related vision problems can progress with time and affect your good vision without proper optometric care."

But that warning does not mean that VDT work will cause good vision to deteriorate, Glatt said.

Rather, it means that the demands of VDT work can expose underlying vision problems that were there all along but could previously be tolerated.

"The VDT will take a weak link in the vision system, magnify that weakness, and take the system to a stress breakpoint earlier," Glatt said.

Although the terminals will not ruin an operator's eyes, experts say, there is no doubt that long hours of staring at the screen can make the eyes uncomfortable.

Problems can arise if the VDT screen itself has a poor quality or flickering image; if the lighting in the workplace causes glare or reflections on the screen; if the screen is placed at an awkward distance or angle from the operator; if the worker's eyesight is marginal, or if demands of the job are too onerous, requiring unrelenting close attention to the screen, printed material or both.

There appears to be no standard checklist of all the steps employers and operators can take to alleviate VDT-related vision problems, but various professional groups have offered a range of suggestions.

ADJUSTABILITY APPEARS to be a key factor in assuring comfort. If the operator can move the screen, a detached keyboard, any reading material and an adjustable chair to the most comfortable positions, and can adjust the brightness and contrast of images on the screen, chances of eye or muscular discomfort are generally reduced.

Expert groups suggest that the top of the VDT screen be at or slightly below eye level so the eyes gaze slightly downward.

The machine should provide a stable, nonflickering image with high contrast against the background to allow easy reading of characters.

The room should be lighted so as to minimize glare, and lights should not be so bright that reading becomes difficult.

Many people may need new or different glasses, the academy of ophthalmology says. Some people who functioned without glasses before may need them for the terminal.

Other recommendations include frequent breaks, perhaps 15 minutes every hour or two, to perform non-VDT work, and frequent blinking to prevent drying of the eyes.

People over 40 typically begin to lose their ability to bring near objects into focus; they often need corrective lenses to read or perform close tasks.

But reading glasses generally focus the eyes at a point 12 to 18 inches away whereas a VDT screen is typically 19 to 24 inches away, making it difficult for people with reading glasses to focus clearly on the screen.

PEOPLE WITH bifocals may find that the upper part of their glasses, which are adjusted for distant vision, cannot focus down to the terminal's screen, while the lower part of their glasses, adjusted for reading, cannot reach out to the screen.

"As far as I know, no studies show any long-term damage to the eye from using glasses that are not appropriate," said Dr. Martin Mainster, an ophthalmology professor at the University of Kansas medical school who is a spokesman for the academy of ophthalmology.

"But it makes sense to have spectacles designed for the distance between the screen and the operator."

In a study conducted for the New York State Governor's Office of Employee Relations, two researchers found in 1986 that a special vision care benefit program for VDT operators and office workers could reduce the symptoms associated with use of the terminals.

The researchers, Dr. Barry J. Barresi and Dr. Jesse Rosenthal, of the Center for Vision Care Policy, a research unit of the State College of Optometry in Manhattan, reported that some 775 workers were given special eye tests through a panel of optometrists, and about three-fourths of these were prescribed special occupational eyeglasses keyed to the requirements of their work.

In a follow-up questionnaire answered by 208 workers who received the new eyeglasses, 94 percent reported improved comfort and 82 percent reported improved quality or efficiency of work.

"The benefit seems to be most effective for the worker who is over 40 years old and already wearing a vision correction at work," the study found.

DEAR ABBY

Some family quarrels outlive participants

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I can certainly relate to that woman who had a falling out with her brother. She hadn't spoken to him for seven years, and when he died, she didn't go to his funeral. She said, "I'm no hypocrite."

Three years ago, I learned that my brother had stolen from our elderly parents. When I confronted him with the evidence, he asked me to lie to cover up for him. I refused. That's when he hit me in the temple with a full can of beer, beat me up, took all my cash and left.

The day he did that to me, my love for him died. As far as I am concerned, I no longer have a brother, and if he were to drop dead tomorrow, I wouldn't attend his funeral.

Abby, you said: "Funerals are for the living. The deceased will not know who was there, but the grieving family will. Perhaps if that woman had attended her brother's funeral and buried her grievances, it might have made her feel better."

I rarely disagree with you, but this time you were wrong. Some grievances can never be buried. — NO HYPOCRITE NO. 2

DEAR NO HYPOCRITE NO. 2: I was clearly outnumbered on this one. Read on for a typical dissenter:

DEAR ABBY: Regarding your recent letter from the woman who didn't attend her brother's funeral because she wasn't a hypocrite, I think your answer was way off.

A funeral may well be for the living, but the living should apply first to the immediate family of the deceased, i.e. wife, husband, children — not brothers and sisters.

My father had a brother who ignored him in his later years despite repeated attempts by my father to initiate contact. This hurt my father deeply, but there was no falling out — they just never spoke. Then my uncle showed up at my father's funeral.

His presence upset my mother and me because we both knew how much one short visit from this brother would have meant to my father when he was alive.

You'll probably say that we shouldn't carry a grudge, and maybe my uncle was trying to make up for what he had failed to do before, but nothing could make up for the hurt he caused my father in his final years.

Bitter? You'd better believe I'm bitter. — TOO LITTLE, TOO LATE

DEAR ABBY: Speaking of hypocrites and funerals, when my wonderful mother died at 81, many of her friends came to her funeral. Did it give me pleasure to see such a turnout? No, it didn't.

Where were all these "friends" when my poor mother lay partially paralyzed in a nursing home for six years? Mother would have so enjoyed a visit from these so-called friends, but none of them came.

When I saw them "paying their last respects" at my mother's funeral, I wanted to say: "It's too late now. Where were you when she needed you?" — PESHE'S DAUGHTER

DEAR ABBY: Please print this message:

Dear Children: Enjoy your large homes, horses, fine furniture, designer clothes, foreign travel, pools and sports cars. I am pleased and proud you have it all.

If I failed to train you to remember me on my birthday, Mother's Day and Christmas, that's my fault, but please remember I gave years of sacrifice for your education, health protection and training.

Of course, it hurts when you ignore me, but I can handle it.

But won't you please try to repay some of the several thousands of dollars you have owed me for years? Since I am still working long hours at age 57, have diabetes and other complications and no medical insurance, I certainly could use the money, which could be earning interest.

I do have one heaven-sent daughter-in-law who puts you all to shame. When I leave her all my worldly goods, you won't need to ask why, because I have just told you. — FLORIDA MOTHER

DEAR ABBY: "Had Enough" deserved much more sympathy from you. When she complained about a co-worker who bored everyone at work about what she had for dinner, what she saw on TV, detailing her kids' and husband's illnesses, you told her "one's co-workers are like a 'second family,' so it's not unusual for co-workers to share bits and pieces of their personal lives."

Abby, I don't think you realize the total frustration of having a co-worker who monopolizes every conversation with boring details about herself, her kids, her husband, etc. These rude, insensitive clods don't want to hear members of their "second family" share bits and pieces of their lives. They want only to interrupt, to yak incessantly about "me" and "mine."

Our resident boor marches into our offices each morning and begins blathering. When we try to change the subject, it only reminds her of something else she or her kid did last night. Fellow workers walk away from her, rolling their eyes, but she goes right on yakking. She is driving us crazy! We deserve the "act of kindness" — not her.

We want to know how to make our telephones ring whenever she is in the vicinity. Please help us, Abby, before we go nuts! — DESPERATELY SEEKING SILENCE

DEAR SEEKING: I'll repeat my final paragraph: "However, if you all agree that this woman is overdoing it, ask the person closest to her to tell her so as diplomatically as possible. It would be an act of kindness."

Everything you'll need to know about planning a wedding can be found in Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send your name and address, clearly printed, plus check or money order for $2.89 ($3.39 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Mike Tyson
....experts' choice

The Consensus:Tyson by kayo

By PHIL BERGER
N.Y. Times News Service

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. — All along Michael Spinks has said that Mike Tyson — good as he may be — is a man like any other man and susceptible to the wiles of a shrewd boxer.

As pre-fight opinions go, however, Spinks appears to hold a minority view.

The opposite view was most pointedly expressed recently by a man who is hardly a boxing insider — the comedian David Brenner — who said, "Nothing is going to stop Tyson that doesn't have a motor attached."

AND MOST boxing experts regard Tyson as being too powerful a puncher for Spinks. The two will meet in a 12-round bout for the heavyweight championship Monday night at the Convention Center.

"Tyson, he's awesome," said Jake LaMotta, the former middleweight champion. "He'll be the greatest heavyweight of all time. He's a big strong Rocky Marciano. He should knock Spinks out very quick."

Angelo Dundee, the veteran trainer, said: "Tyson by a knockout, within five rounds. I just think Tyson will be too strong."

Jeff Levine, fight promoter and adviser to Hector Camacho, said: "It's simple. Mike Tyson is too strong. Take a look at the heavyweights Spinks has fought. The first time he fought Larry Holmes, Holmes was out of shape. He fought a not-young Holmes the second time and Holmes beat him even though Larry didn't get the decision. So he's one-one with Holmes.

"AND QUITE honestly, Steffen Tangstad is not what I'd call one of the great heavyweights. As for Gerry Cooney, Cooney never fought. I don't know why. He says his head was not into it. Forget that Cooney's a friend of mine. He didn't fight when he was in against Spinks. Michael Spinks is a good boxer, but not good enough to take on this bull Tyson. I see it as a two-, three-round fight. If I'm wrong, it goes five, six rounds. Mike Tyson is just too good."

"I don't think Michael Spinks can stand Tyson off," said Gil Clancy, the CBS boxing analyst. "With a normal punch, Tyson will knock Spinks off balance. I don't think Spinks will be able to stay away from him. I pick Tyson in a knockout in five or six rounds."

Among those who predict Tyson will win are heavyweights who have been in the ring with one or the other principals in the fight.

James (Bonecrusher) Smith fought Tyson in March 1987, losing a unanimous 12-round decision.

"If all the things I heard are true, that he got to camp late and so forth," said Smith, "then it could be a difficult fight. Spinks is a good fighter. If Tyson's mind is straight, he knocks out Spinks early. Spinks will not be able to take those punches. Tyson is just as quick, and he punches much harder. Larry Holmes hurt Spinks. He buckled his knees. He's nowhere near the puncher Tyson is. Tyson's got an aggressive style, he keeps coming. I pick Tyson by a knockout."

COONEY, WHOM Spinks knocked out in five rounds last June, was not persuaded that Spinks could do the same to Tyson.

"I see Mike Tyson as too strong for Spinks," said Cooney. "Spinks will try to run. But Mike Tyson is too aggressive. I think there will be a lot of aggression built in from what he's been going through lately — the personal problems. With he and his wife. But I say Tyson knocks him out in three rounds or less."

Richie Giachetti is the trainer of Holmes, the only boxer both Tyson and Spinks have faced. Holmes lost twice to Spinks by decision and in January was knocked out by Tyson in five rounds.

"Mike Tyson hits harder than I imagined," said Giachetti."Once he hits Spinks it's over. Like Larry, I think Mike Tyson wins easy. A knockout inside three rounds."

One fighter who bucked the currrent of pro-Tyson opinion was Marlon Starling, the World Boxing Association welterweight champion. Starling, like Spinks, is a clever boxer, and presumably that shared quality disposed him toward Spinks.

Swinging Sox rattle Rangers, 7-5

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — According to Manager Jim Fregosi, the Chicago White Sox are "starting to swing a lot better."

Texas pitcher Jeff Russell may think that's an understatement on Fregosi's part.

Harold Baines hit a 448-foot two-run homer off the previously unbeaten Russell in the first inning Sunday night and Daryl Boston hammered a 430-foot grand slam in the sixth, leading rookie Jack McDowell and the White Sox to a 7-5 victory over the Rangers.

It was Chicago's fifth victory in the last seven games and, says Fregosi, "The biggest factor has been Harold Baines. I felt once he got going, we'd get going, too.

"We started out not hitting at the beginning of the season, but the weather in Chicago was cold and the wind is always blowing in. Now, the weather is getting hotter."

Russell, who tied a club record by winning his first seven decisions and had pitched three straight complete-game victories, yielded all the Chicago runs and nine hits in six innings. He started the day as the major-league leader in winning percentage and was second in the American League in ERA, which rose from 2.36 to 2.99.

Boston's seventh home run of the season and first career grand slam came with one out in the sixth inning and gave the White Sox a 7-0 lead, enough to offset a Texas comeback.

"The guys knew he was 7-0 and that he's a good pitcher, but I don't think that mattered the way we're swinging the bats," said Boston, who also doubled and scored in the second inning.

Steve Lyons opened the Chicago sixth with a single and one out later a single by Dave Gallagher and a walk to Greg Walker loaded the bases for Boston, who homered into the center-field seats.

Baines hit his ninth home run in the first inning following a one-out walk to Lyons. The White Sox made it 3-0 with a run in the second on Boston's leadoff double, an error on the play by right fielder Ruben Sierra and Dan Pasqua's bloop single.

"They got some cheap hits," said Russell, who obviously didn't mean the two homers. "I wasn't spotting my pitches.I didn't throw the way I have been previously.

"I think the streak built up on my mind. I thought about it a lot. I've just got to put it behind me."

Bosox, Yanks batter rivals

From Wire Reports

BOSTON — Boston's Mike Greenwell hopes his hot hitting is being noticed by the right people. Greenwell hit a two-run homer and Jim Rice followed with another two-run shot in the first in the Red So' 10-1 win Sunday.

AL

With 32 hits in 70 times at bat in the last 17 games, Greenwell has raised his average from .286 to .344. "I'm just trying to hit the ball hard and get it up in the air," said Greenwell, who has driven in 20 runs and homered six times in his last seven games.

It was the fifth time in the last seven games that the Red Sox have scored 10 or more runs. Dwight Evans, Ellis Burks, Todd Benzinger and Rice had two hits apiece in leading Boston's 12-hit attack.

Yankees 4, Indians 3

NEW YORK — Claudell Washington's fourth hit of the game, a two-out single in the ninth, scored pinch-runner Rickey Henderson from third as New York defeated Cleveland.

The Yankees led 3-1 after eight and Neil Allen had retired nine straight batters, but Mel Hall led off the ninth with a single and one out later, Cory Snyder hit his 16th homer. Dave Righetti, 3-0, came in and retired the next two batters.

Blue Jays 4, Tigers 1

TORONTO — Mike Flanagan, 7-5, earned his 150th career victory and Jesse Barfield hit a solo homer as Toronto snapped Jeff Robinson's seven-game winning streak.

Tom Henke relieved with none out and runners on second and third in the ninth. Henke gave up a run-scoring groundout to Dave Bergman but earned his 15th save.

Mariners 8, Royals 0

SEATTLE — Bill Swift, 6-4, pitched a six-hitter and Rey Quinones hit two of Seattle's backed him with five home runs, two by Rey Quinones. Swift broke a personal three-game losing streak and pitched his first shutout in 51 major-league starts.

Notre Dame's Holtz for limiting campus tryouts

Battles

ST. LOUIS- The session was billed by AP as a "newsmaker" event and Lou Holtz didn't let anybody down.

He roamed over a variety of controversial topics, such as testing of college seniors on campus before the NFL draft, errant coaches, a college football playoff and even took a look at the teams he expects to be the powers in 1988.

If Holtz had his way, pro visits to conduct speed, agility, skill tests and verify weights would be limited to one.

The Notre Dame coach contends the way it is now, those visits "...are detrimental to the welfare of the athletes."

"One club may test a guy four times. That's four times 28 teams. We've got to have one tryout day, period, and anybody can come in who wants to test them."

WHAT HAS Holtz upset is that it hampers the athlete's chance of graduation.

That's an area emphasized by Notre Dame. In the last 22 years, says Holtz, Notre Dame has graduated 524 out of a possible 530.

"Last year, Notre Dame had 1804 freshmen and 1798 returned. It's the only school that lost more students than it did football games."

"The average pro career is 3.9 years, so at 25, with a life expectancy of 75, what does a player have to look forward to for his next 50 years?"

Holtz says studies show that a person with a college degree has $1 million more in career earning power than a person without a degree.

Players spend so much time preparing for tests by pro scouts that they fall behind in their studies and can't catch up.

They spend more time working out than they do in football season. They are in such great condition, I ask them how come they weren't in that kind of shape for the football season."

HEISMAN Trophy winner "Tim Brown was a good student, but there were so many requests on his time by pro scouts that his last semester was a struggle."

Still, Holtz has no intention of barring scouts from campus visits, describing it as unfair to the athlete.

And if a player were drafted by the NFL before graduation, "The pros should be required to guarantee that player one million dollars for two years."

HOLTZ, never a shrinking violet in expressing his opinion, had distinct views on a variety of touchy issues at the AP Sports Editors convention here on the banks of muddy Mississippi.

He also came out against freshman eligibility. "I don't think anybody would disagree that it would be best if freshmen didn't play. But financial and competitive demands overrule what is academically best for the athlete."

On agents, "abuse leads to restrictions and agents have abused their freedom in many cases."

Holtz would ban coaches who knowingly break NCAA rules and award federal grant money, in addition to athletic scholarships, on the basis of need.

AS FOR a college football playoff, Holtz is all for it. But he doesn't think the AP poll or Coaches poll should be used to determine the teams.

Noting that the tendency among some powers is to load up their schedule with weaker opponents, Holtz leans to computer ratings, based points awarded for for victories and so many points for victories scored by opponents. No points would be awarded to a team beating a Division II rival.

ON 1988, Holtz predicts progress, but points to a murderous schedule faced by the Irish.....Michigan, Michigan State, Purdue, Stanford, Pitt, Miami...the usual bare-feet on hot coals test.

As for the national scene, Holtz rates Florida State as "great", Miami as Miami; Oklahoma and Nebraska "exceptional"; USC coming back, maybe all the way; Michigan and Michigan State as tough as any and Texas A&M "awesome."

Holtz claims "the Aggies have more quickness than anybody, but they are playing a very ambitious schedule."

Notre Dame as National Champion. Holtz vows it will happen. "I don't know what year or who will be coach, but Notre Dame will be national champion again."

Win surprises even Kathy

By RALPH BERNSTEIN

WILMINGTON, Del. (AP) — Kathy Postlewait admitted that no one was more surprised than she with her victory Sunday in the $500,000 LPGA McDonald's Championship.

Postlewait, whose aching back limited her to just several rounds over the last five weeks, rallied with a 1-under-par 70 to win by one stroke over Patty Sheehan.

Postlewait, 39, shot earlier rounds of 69, 68 and 69 before completing the tournament at 276, 8-under par for the 6,366-yard DuPont Country Club course.

Sheehan held the lead for 38 holes, from the ninth of the second round to the 11th Sunday. But putting woes doomed her to a final-round 74 for a 277.

Postlewait, who began the day three strokes behind Sheehan, took advantage of a two-stroke swing on the 11th hole to move into the lead. Postlewait sank a 12-foot putt for birdie while Sheehan bogied the hole to go from one shot ahead to one behind.

"I didn't give winning a lot of thought until after I played a couple of rounds," Postlewait said.

"I just went out there and and had some fun, and it worked out fine. I tried to stay mentally alert. I didn't expect a whole lot. I certainly got more than I expected," she said.

Postlewait, whose back ailment prevented her from bending to take the ball out of the cup, said she would have been happy to finish 20th.

The victory, worth $75,000, was only the third in 15 years for Postlewait, who won once in 1983 and once last year. She started the tournament 17th on the money-winning list at $77,605.

"I didn't tee up in anticipation of a win. I thought, 'Let's play and we'll see what happens.' In this golf tournament, winning was not in my stars. I was gearing my physical therapy for the last few weeks to get to this tournament."

She said she will spend next week resting, skipping the du Maurier, one of the four majors on the LPGA tour.

Sheehan had a chance to at least force a playoff after Postlewait's tee shot on the 18th hole went into the water. Postlewait reached the green in three, 20 feet from the cup, and two-putted for bogey.

Sheehan, meanwhile, was only five feet from the cup in two, but three-putted for bogey. She left her par putt a foot short.

Postlewait said she expected a playoff after hitting into the water.

"I was walking up to the hole just assuming Patty would get up and down," she said.

"My playoff record is sort of like the Atlanta Braves'," she joked, referring to a 1-4 mark in such confrontations.

Sheehan said she knew she missed the chance for a playoff the instant she hit the ball.

"It was a left-to-right break and I pulled it right off the bat. ... It was a human error."

Sheehan led the turnament by five strokes at one point of the third round and by two starting the final 18.

"I just couldn't seem to get anything going. ... I didn't hit close to the hole all day," she said.

Three strokes off the lead at 6-under-par 278 were rookie Dottie Pepper Mochrie, leading money winner Nancy Lopez and Jan Stephenson.

Judy Dickinson, Colleen Walker and Jody Rosenthal finished at 280, with Vicki Fergon, Lori Garbacz, Amy Alcott and Tammie Green at 281.

Nelson learns even in victory

MARIETTA, Ga. (AP) — While Larry Nelson got some valuable experience Sunday, he'd just as soon not do it the same way again.

"The way I won it I may have learned more than if I had shot 68 and won by four or six or seven," Nelson said after blowing a four-shot lead and then rallying to win the Atlanta Golf Classic.

Nelson regained his lead with a 3-4 foot birdie putt on the 14th and then two-putted from 35 feet for a birdie 4 on the final hole to finish with a 1-over-par 73 and a 20-under total of 268 for 72 holes.

Chip Beck, playing three groups ahead of Nelson, sank a 10-foot birdie putt on the final hole to share the lead, completing a 66-269 that left him one shot off the pace when Nelson also birdied the finishing hole.

Nelson said he knew there wouldn't be as many low scores as in the previous three rounds because of the swirling winds.

Paul Azinger grabbed the lead from Nelson when he sank a 25-foot birdie putt on the 13th hole, but then went bogey-double bogey to fall out of contention.

Azinger sank a 12-foot eagle putt on the par-5 finishing hole to finish with a 71 and alone in third place at 270.

Nelson who owns a home adjacent to the course, never got it going the way he had in leading after each of the first three rounds in threatening to better the PGA Tour record of 27 under par for 72 holes.

The two-time PGA and 1983 U.S. Open winner got into trouble with a double-bogey 6 on the fourth.

Faldo bounces back from disappointment

CHANTILLY, France (AP) — Nick Faldo of Britain, who lost the U.S. Open in a playoff a week ago, won the $540,000 French Open by two strokes Sunday.

The current British Open champion fired a 225-yard three-wood to the green of the par-5 final hole, then sank the 33-foot putt for an eagle to seal his victory.

It was his first title since his British Open win at Muirfield last July.

Faldo shot a 2-under-par 68 for a 6-under-par 274.

Britain's Denis Durnian, who led by two strokes with two holes to play, shot a 74 for 276 to share second place with Australian Wayne Riley, who had a 70.

The triumph was Faldo's 14th title on the European tour but his first this year after four runner-up finishes. He lost the U.S. Open 18-hole playoff to American Curtis Strange in Brookline, Mass., last Monday.

Pearl Sinn claims Women's Publinx golf

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Pearl Sinn birdied three of the final five holes to defeat Tami Jo Henningsen 2 and 1 to win the 12th U.S. Women's Amateur Public Links Championship at Page Belcher Golf Course.

It was the second consecutive year that Sinn, who will be a senior at Arizona State University, had reached the final match. Last year, she lost to Tracy Kerdyk in the final match.

Sinn, of Bellflower, Calif., parred the first eight holes of the final and held a 2-up advantage. After the ninth hole was halved with bogeys, breaking a string of 35 holes in the championship without a bogey, Henningsen won the 10th and 11th holes to even the match. Henningsen is from Colorado Springs, Colo.

Sinn rebounded, making winning birdie putts at the 13th and 14th.

The match ended when Sinn sank a 22-foot birdie putt at the par-3 17th hole.

Earlier in the day, Sinn defeated Stacey Arnold of Glen Ellyn, Ill. 6 and 5. Henningsen reached the final by defeating Michelle Estill of Scottsdale, Ariz., 4 and 3.

Where have the big stars gone?

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Mike Tyson vs. Michael Spinks — once and for all, the promoters proclaim — for the undisputed heavyweight championship of the world.

It's a big fight, made so more by the stakes than the participants.

The heavyweight title carries with it images of the past, memories of Dempsey and Tunney, of Louis and Marciano, of Ali and Frazier. They were stars, captivating personalities who commanded attention.

Tyson and Spinks, even though they are quite capable fighters who carry undefeated records into Monday night's confrontation, lack the charisma that defines star quality.

And that lack of superstar status has invaded the other individual sports as well. Tennis looks for the magnetism of McEnroe and golf searches for the personality of Palmer or Nicklaus.

Tyson and Spinks search for the missing ingredient.

DESPITE HIS knockout punch, Tyson remains somewhat enigmatic and has achieved more popularity overseas than he has in the United States. His title waltz with Bonecrusher Smith early in his reign and his need to go the distance with Tony Tucker frustrated fans. He has yet to prove that he can grab a fight audience by the lapels and shake it awake in the manner of an Ali or Marciano.

Spinks still has the image of an inflated light heavyweight, pressed into service in the heavyweight division by the scarcity of quality fighters there. He is a nice guy but hardly a dynamic, dramatic boxer.

Monday night's opponents are both awkward fighters who lack the boxing style and savvy of some of the men who have ruled this division.

It is a measure of their status, perhaps, that promoters Don King with his electic hairdo and barechested Butch Lewis are perhaps more identifiable than they are. Tyson and Spinks are not stars, not yet, at least.

It takes more than winning to be a star. Ex-champ Larry Holmes can testify to that.

Holmes ruled the heavyweight division for 7½ years and was unbeaten through 48 fights, one short of Marciano's record. But he had the misfortune of being a former sparring partner for Ali and followed that legendary figure as champ. He never quite succeeded in escaping The Greatest's long shadow.

What defines a star, then? It is somebody who commands attention, as much by his personna as by his performance.

A star is an athlete who grabs the fans, who turns heads just by entering a room. They are necessary to their sports. They are the exclamation points in their businesses.

And they are easy to identify, too.

At major golf tournaments, the biggest gallery always belongs to Jack Nicklaus, not because he is a particular threat to win at his advanced golf age, but because he is a star.

CURTIS Strange won the U.S. Open and is considered the best golfer in the world right now. That doesn't make him a star, though. Not yet, anyway.

At Wimbledon, they applauded the abbreviated return to this shrine of tennis last week of John McEnroe, who had not played on the historic courts for two years.

No player has had a more tumultuous relationship with his sport than McEnroe and none was given more attention. He may not have always been endorsed by the staid British audiences but he was never ignored. That's one of the measures of a star.

So, until he was eliminated in the second round by a previously anonymous opponent, McEnroe commanded as much, if not more, attention around Wimbledon's lawns as Mats Wilander, who came in with Grand Slam possibilities after winning the Australian and French Opens.

Wilander is an efficient player, but he lacks the panache that makes McEnroe special. His No. 1 status notwithstanding, Ivan Lendl is in the same situation.

Magic Johnson of the Los Angeles Lakers may be the quintessential basketball star. He has an aura about him that defines him as something special.

So even as James Worthy was assembling a triple double to carry the Lakers to the NBA title and nail down the playoff MVP trophy, Johnson still got considerable support for the award. It was as much for Magic's reputation as his contribution.

BASEBALL'S most important
There are degrees of stardom, too.

Hockey's best player is Edmonton's Wayne Gretzky and he has the trophies to prove it. He is a star, but his quiet efficiency doesn't quite grip fans the way Rocket Richard once did.

Richard would tear down ice, ignoring finesse, concentrating instead on the puck and the net and driving one into the other. His eyes sometimes seemed on fire, a frightening, riveting look that was quite properly called the Rocket's red glare. His style was electrifying.

Gretzky then is a star, but Richard was a Star.

No gas, but Wallace finds a way

BROOKLYN, Mich. (AP) — Rusty Wallace, who lost the lead when he ran out of gas midway through the race, came back to outrun Bill Elliott and win Sunday's 400 NASCAR stock car race at Michigan International Speedway.

Wallace, Winston Cup point leader, held off a late challenge by Elliott, the pole-winner who had won six of the previous seven races on the two-mile, high-banked oval.

It was the second victory of the season and the sixth career triumph for the Wallace, from St. Louis, Mo.

The green flag came out with 30 laps to go following the fourth and final caution flag of the race, with two-time defending Winston Cup champion Dale Earnhardt in front and Wallace right behind.

Both Earnhardt and Wallace gambled by staying on the track while the other contenders pitted for a splash of gas.

Wallace, driving a Pontiac Grand Prix, won the gamble, racing into the lead on lap 172 and leading the rest of the way.

Elliott's Ford Thunderbird was fourth on the last restart, but moved to second on lap 176, trailing Wallace by almost two seconds. He was able to get close to Wallace's rear bumper, but never was able to catch him, crossing the finish line about two car-lengths behind.

Terry Labonte was third, followed by Earnhardt, Geoff Bodine and Ken Schrader, all on the lead lap.

The winner averaged 153.55 mph, breaking the race record of 153.485 set by David Pearson in 1973 but falling short of the Michigan track's 400-mile record of 153.863, set by Darrell Waltrip in the August race in 1984.

Davey Allison, whose father, Bobby, was critically injured in a crash last week at Long Pond, Pa., was hoping to give his dad a boost with a victory Sunday.

The younger Allison gave it a good shot, leading early and running a solid third when his engine blew on lap 71, ending his race day.

A team spokesman said Bobby Allison, a former Winston Cup champion and one of the sport's most popular drivers, watched the nationally televised race from his hospital bed in Allentown, Pa.

"We had a little engine trouble," the younger Allison said.

Player hits it big

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — A little adjustment resulted in a big paycheck for Gary Player on Sunday.

Player, who earlier had used a 7-iron to par the par-3 16th hole, changed to an 8-iron on the first hole of sudden death and wound up with a birdie that gave him a victory over fellow South African Harold Henning in the $250,000 Southwestern Bell Silver Pages Classic.

Henning had used a 7-iron the first time around and birdied the hole. But despite stronger winds during the playoff, Henning stayed with the 7-iron and landed in a sand trap behind the green.

"Before he hit I had the 8-iron in my hand," said Player, who earned $37,500 for winning his third Senior PGA Tour event of the year. "I knew that was the club."

Henning, a one-time winner this year, admitted he "didn't play that too smart, actually."

"The wind had stiffened a little bit and I took the wrong club," he said. "I hit the shot I was intending to hit, but it was the wrong key to a different door.

"Gary changed his club, he was smart enough to use one less club than he had a half-hour earlier," Henning said.

Martin saga: Billy V firing is panned at the box office

Billy manages. Billy's fired. Billy manages again. Et al, ad nauseum.

This is getting as bad as "Friday the Thirteenth" movies. Jason keeps coming back, too.

In case you've had your head in the sand and haven't heard the earth shattering news, Billy Martin was fired — again — as the New York Yankees skipper.

It happens with such regularity that it doesn't even belong in the sports pages anymore. It belongs in some sort of column labelled, "Around Town with Maxine."

What would really be news is if Billy retained employment — any employment.

Of course not.

Some of the blame — if not the large majority of it — must go to the Clown Prince of the New York Circus — the one, the only, the Mr. George Steinbrenner.

Georgie, who had been relatively quiet this season until last Thursday, received word that his Yankees were faultering while he was in Florida last week managing his ship building business. (Gosh, I wonder how that's being run?!)

So back to NY rushes Georgie to take care of the more important matters.

Never get Georgie confused with H. Ross Perot or Donald Trump or even Eddie Chiles if you want to go out on a limb.

Georgie makes Charlie O. Finley look like he knew what he was doing.

Sure, Billy has his bad points, but don't we all?

Sure, Billy told a questionable story about what transpired at an Arlington topless joint earlier this year and, sure, Billy got tossed for three days after throwing — not kicking, but throwing — dirt on an umpire.

OK, OK, so Billy's got a lot of bad points, but he has proven that he does know how to manage a baseball team. Just ask Reggie Jackson, Don Mattingly or any number of present, future or former pinstripers.

This whole ordeal began in 1975 when Billy was named manager of the Yankees for the first time.

If you're a history fan, here's what has happened in the last 15 years:

— Steinbrenner has had 15 managerial changes since he first took over the team in '73.

— After Billy was hired in '75, he resigns — many say was forced into it — in '78 (No. 1).

— Only five days after Billy quit, America gets its first hint that things are not quite normal in Steinbrenner's house when the Yankee boss announces that Billy would return for 1980.

— On June 18 of '79, Bob Lemon is fired, Martin takes over a year early.

— Billy is fired on Oct. 18 of '79, six months before he was even supposed to come back in the first place (No. 2).

— Billy actually did not manage the Yankees during 1980 or 1981 or 1982.

— On Jan. 11, 1983, Steinbrenner announces to a stunned baseball world that Billy's back.

— In Dec. 16, 1984, Steinbrenner announces to a not-so-stunned baseball world that Billy was fired again (No. 3).

— Yogi Berra lasts 16 games into the '85 season and is succeeded by, guess who?

— Billy's fired again in October of the same year (No. 4).

— On Oct. 19 of '87, Billy is again hired.

— Last Thursday, Billy gets the heave-ho for what many believe to be the last time. Oh yeah, No. 5.

And who takes over for Georgie? Billy Jr. — Lou Piniella.

Sweet Lou is not putting together the most impressive portfolio himself, as even he is being fooled by Georgie's revolving door.

Piniella is now in his second term as Yankee skipper, after his term as GM, a position Georgie said he was promoted to after his last managerial firing.

Just a week before Billy's latest canning, Piniella quit as GM because he couldn't work with Billy. Now Billy's gone and Lou's back.

(My head's spinning.)

"Here I am, back in the frying pan," Piniella quipped after he was re-hired. Yeah, he's laughing now ...

Enter Bob Quinn, who was hired to succeed Piniella in the front office. Many believe Quinn's decision to re-activate catcher Don Slaught from the disabled list — before he had completely healed — played a large role in Billy's ouster. Protecting his player, Billy was adamantly against bringing Slaught back so soon, but that's not what the new guy wanted.

So Billy's history, Lou's repeating history and even Gene Michael — a two time Steinbrenner manager himself — is back as a coach.

Some people just never learn.

Just once, wouldn't you like to hear of someone who turns down a job offer from Steinbrenner?

Now that would be newsworthy.

Doran finds day makes difference

From Wire Reports

HOUSTON — A day earlier, Bill Doran had splintered a bat against a wall in frustration after losing a game. After the Astros' 6-0 victory over the San Francisco Giants on Sunday, he was in better humor.

"One hour after I did that I was OK," said Doran, who had three RBI in Sunday's game. "I just don't like to lose."

NL

Doran's big blow was a two-run single in the second inning.

"We had a 3-0 lead at the time, but there's a big difference between 3-0 and 5-0," he said. "Those are the kind of hits that can break a team down."

Jim Deshaies, 5-5, the winner, went going 6 2-3 innings to snap a personal three-game losing streak.

Loser Mike LaCoss, 5-6, "...was wild, and we were able to take advantage of it," Doran said.

Three of the four hitters LaCoss walked scored.

Pirates 3, Expos 0

MONTREAL — Sid Bream's sacrifice fly and Mike Lavallliere's two-run double fueled a three-run 10th inning that enabled Pittsburgh to complete a four-game sweep of the Expos.

It moved Pittsburgh within 4½ games of first-place New York in the NL East going into a three-game series against the Mets at Three Rivers Stadium. that's all the better," Bream said.

Jose Lind opened the 10th against reliever Tim Burke, 2-2, going all the way to second when shortstop Luis Rivera threw wildly to first on his grounder.

Lind moved to third as Andy Van Slyke bounced out to reliever Joe Hesketh, and Bobby Bonilla was intentionally walked. Jeff Parrett was summoned to face Mike Diaz, who also walked, loading the bases.

Bream then drove in the go-ahead run with a fly ball to the center field wall.

Dodgers 9, Reds 6

CINCINNATI — John Shelby singled home the tying run in the ninth inning, and Steve Sax followed with a two-out, bases-loaded double off John Franco, sending the Los Angeles Dodgers to victory and three-game sweep of the Cincinnati Reds.

Cincinnati had taken a 6-5 lead when Barry Larkin hit a two-out, three-run homer off Tim Belcher, 5-4, in the bottom of the eighth.

The Dodgers, who lead the National League West, won for the eight time in nine games. Cincinnati has lost six of its last seven.

Padres 2, Braves 1

ATLANTA — Dickie Thon drove in one run and scored another, and right-hander Andy Hawkins allowed five hits over 7 1-3 innings, pacing San Diego over Atlanta.

Hawkins, 7-6, yielded only Ron Gant's leadoff home run in the third inning as he helped the Padres snap a three-game losing streakand Atlanta's three-game winning streak.

Cubs 6, Mets 3

CHICAGO — Rookie Jeff Pico pitched a six-hitter, and the Chicago Cubs broke loose for six runs in the sixth inning, capped by Shawon Dunston's two-run single to take three of four in the series.

Pico, 3-2, gave up an unearned run in the third inning. He then retired 16 in a row until Len Dykstra doubled with one out in the eighth.

Phillies 7, Cardinals 5

ST. LOUIS — Phil Bradley drove in the go-ahead run with a 10th-inning single, and Bob Dernier followed with a squeeze bunt as the Philadelphia rallied for a second time to beat St. Louis.

Philadelphia's second two-run inning in the last three gave the decision to Steve Bedrosian, 1-2, who squandered a 5-4 lead in the ninth. Bruce Ruffin pitched the 10th for the Phillies for his first major league save.

The Phillies used a bunt to go ahead of St. Louis 5-4 in the eighth inning, and Ozzie Smith's bunt single helped the Cardinals tie the score 5-5 with two out in the ninth.

Cutlass Reality upsets Alysheba

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Cutlass Reality wasn't expected to win Sunday's $500,000 Hollywood Gold Cup, but he did with remarkable ease. His jockey, Gary Stevens, sounded like he expected such an outcome.

The victory was only the 10th in 59 lifetime starts for Cutlass Reality and was worth $275,000, increasing his career earnings to $955,430. Cutlass Reality carried 116 pounds, 10 less than Alysheba and nine less than Ferdinand.

Alysheba, ridden by Chris McCarron and carrying high weight of 126 pounds, crossed the finish line 5½ lengths in front of Ferdinand and paid $2.80 and $2.10.

Second place was worth $100,000, raising Alysheba's career earnings to $4,170,842. Alysheba, a 4-year-old son of Alydar trained by Jack Van Berg and owned by Dorothy and Pam Scharbauer of Midland, Texas, ranks third on thoroughbred racing's all-time money list behind John Henry, who earned $6,597,947, and Spend A Buck, who earned $4,220,689.

"He ran good, but it wasn't good enough," McCarron said of Alysheba. "He started to make a good run at the half-mile pole, but he didn't really keep on firing big for me. But the other horse (Cutlass Reality) ran fast."

"I wasn't surprised at all," Stevens said after his mount prevailed by 6½ lengths over heavily favored Alysheba. "I felt we could win, but I didn't think we could take it like that."

Cutlass Reality went ahead for good entering the far turn and then pulled to post his third consecutive victory.

Ferdinand, the 1987 Horse of the Year, finished a badly beaten third in the 49th running of the rich race run before a crowd of 33,227 at Hollywood Park.

Cutlass Reality won an allowance race on May 27 and the Californian as a 13-1 longshot on June 12.

Prior to that, Cutlass Reality finished sixth as a 61-1 longshot in the John Henry Handicap on May 15 and out of the money in his two starts before that.

Stevens, the leading money-winner among jockeys this year, had never won in the Gold Cup. He was aboard victorious Winning Colors in the Kentucky Derby last month.

Cutlass Reality, a 6-year-old trained by Craig A. Lewis, covered 1¼ miles on a fast track in 1:59 2-5 and paid $11.40, $3.60 and $2.20. The stakes record of 1:58 1-5 was set by Quack in 1972.

"We are ready for any horse," Lewis said. "We have the horse nominated for the Arlington Million, the Laurel International and the $500,000 Hawthorne. He is not nominated for the Breeders' Cup, but money is no object."

CONCENSUS

"The one thing that Mike Tyson is vulnerable to is Spinks's best punch, the left uppercut," said Starling. "Tyson only throws two- or three-punch combinations, then he stops. Tyson sometimes is very wide with his punches, and a guy like Spinks can hurt him. I say Spinks is going to win."

Bert Sugar, the editor of Boxing Illustrated, agreed. He felt that Tyson is at a disadvantage in this fight without the counsel of Cus D'Amato, his legal guardian and mentor who died three years ago, and Jimmy Jacobs, his co-manager who died earlier this year.

Manning, Smits head draft list

By SAM GOLDAPER
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — "The Los Angeles Clippers select Danny Manning of Kansas."

That will be the first announcement of David Stern, the National Basketball Association commissioner, at Tuesday's college draft at the Felt Forum.

NBA

No surprise. The 6-foot-10-inch Manning, the college player of the year, has known since last month, when the Clippers won the lottery, where he will begin his pro career.

Rik Smits, a 7-4 center who came from the Netherlands several years ago to play at Marist College, where he averaged 24.7 points a game, is likely to play for the Indiana Pacers, who pick second.

After the Pacers won the second pick in the lottery, there were questions about whether Donnie Walsh, the Pacers' general manager, would select Smits or make a trade.

Walsh has been on the telephone talking trade. Herb Williams and Wayman Tisdale have been discussed, he said. Through all the discussions, however, it has become more apparent that players of Smits' size and potential, don't come along very often.

"I'm leaning toward Smits," Walsh said. "I think he is going to be a real good player. He is very athletic for someone 7-4 and stronger than a lot of people think. He can catch the ball, score and has great desire. He weighs 250 pounds and I foresee him going to 285 and 300 within the next three years."

After Manning and Smits are taken, the draft will turn into a guessing game, with the Philadelphia 76ers picking third.

Charles Smith, 6-10 of Pittsburgh; Tim Perry, 6-9 of Temple; Rony Seikaly, 6-11 of Syracuse; Chris Morris, 6-8 of Auburn; Hersey Hawkins, 6-3 of Bradley; Mitch Richmond, 6-5 of Kansas State, and Rex Chapman, the 6-4 guard who left Kentucky after his sophomore year, figure to be in the next group of players chosen.

Each of the top prospects have been well scouted and undergone extensive interviews and physical examinations by interested teams. Marty Blake, who directs the NBA's Scouting Service, sends reports to general managers periodically during the season. His reports often help determine whether and when a player is chosen.

On Smith:

"Many scouts feel he is better suited for the small forward role since he likes to go outside and take 15-18-foot jumpers ... did shoot nearly seven free throws a game ... did not appear happy to play at Pitt the past two years. ... If he plays like he did in Spain during the World Games, someone will have a great player ... can block shots ... played on a team in which big men did pass the ball ... only took 12.2 shots a game ... could be a much better player than he showed last year at Pitt."

On Morris:

Second in Southeastern Conference in both scoring (20.7) and rebounding (9.9) ... named to all-Orlando Classic team ... can play with anyone when he wants to ... may have more NBA skills than Chuck Person, who also played at Auburn ... disappears for minutes in game. ... He will either make you a great player or break your heart. ... He can run, jump, rebound, pass, shoot inside and outside and block shots ... is the best small forward in the draft and on ability he stands head and shoulders above them all. ... We can only judge ability."

With the draft reduced from seven to three rounds by the recent labor agreement between the league and its players' union, the 25 franchises will select a total of 75 players.

Somewhere in the first round, a team needing rebounding help, is likely to select Mark Bryant, who averaged 20.5 points and 9.1 rebounds a game for Seton Hall.

This is Blake's evaluation of the 6-9 Bryant.

"Had great second half of season when he carried Seton Hall ... has pro body ... can score with some range ... has funny shot but is consistent over career ... has effective hook ... can run the court ... at times is a dominant rebounder ... decent jumper ... needs work at ball handling ... can block shots but is not a shot blocker ... does not pass it well ... best bet is as an inside player as a power forward and he could be a good one in time."

Admission to the draft, which begins at noon, is free.

Diablos respond to Dave's words

Associated Press

El Paso Manager Dave Machemer had a few words with the Diablos, who had lost four straight games.

The words may have worked because El Paso grilled San Antonio and waltzed past the Missions 7-2 in Texas League action Sunday night.

In other Texas League games, Tulsa defeated Jackson 7-6 in 13 innings and Arkansas downed Shreveport 4-1. The Midland-Wichita game was rained out.

The game between Midland and Wichita rescheduled for today at 6 p.m. in Wichita.

The Diablos got five runs off starter and loser, Mike Pitz, 3-6, in the sixth inning. El Paso took a 1-0 lead in the third when Pitz gave up a home run to Mario Monico.

Rob DeWolf went 4-for-5 with two RBI and two runs scored and the Diablos cranked out 12 hits against Pitz and relievers Tony Mack, who entered in the sixth, and Jim Hickey, who took over in the seventh and closed out the game.

The Missions had 11 hits of their own off starter Jim Hunter and relievers Ed Puig, 6-0, and Keith Fleming, who picked up his first save. But San Antonio left 11 men on base including eight in scoring position.

Brett Harrison contributed two singles to Arkansas' 4-1 win over Shreveport. Harrison, who hit three singles Saturday night, popped another one in the third inning to score the Travelers' first run. He followed with another in the fourth.

Shreveport's only run came in the fourth inning when Deron McCue's single off the left field wall scored John Skurla.

Quinones homered in the first and sixth. Dave Hengel hit his second homer, a two-run shot in the fifth. Dave Valle hit his sixth homer in the seventh inning and Glenn Wilson hit his third homer in the eighth.

Angels 4, Brewers 2

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Willie Fraser and Bryan Harvey combined on a five-hitter and Dick Schofield's two-run homer highlighted a three-run fifth inning. With Milwaukee ahead 2-0, Tony Armas led off the fifth with a double and scored on Bob Boone's double. One out later, Schofield hit his third homer to left off Ted Higuera, 6-5.

Devon White gave California an insurance run with an RBI single in the eighth.

Twins 11, Athletics 0
Twins 5, Athletics 0

OAKLAND, Calif. — Frank Viola, 12-2, and Keith Atherton combined on a seven-hitter as Minnesota defeated Oakland 5-0 in the second game of a doubleheader after beating the A's 11-0 in the first

Charlie Lea, 4-3, won his fourth straight in the opener.

The Twins broke a scoreless tie with three runs in the fifth against Dave Stewart, 10-6.

Gary Gaetti's 16th homer capped a five-run eighth inning against reliever Gene Nelson. Kirby Puckett added a two-run single. Gladden had an RBI single in the ninth.

Ikangaa captures Sapporo 13-miler

SAPPORO, Japan (AP) — Juma Ikangaa of Tanzania overcame strong winds to win the 13-mile half-marathon through the streets of Sapporo in one hour, three minutes and 22 seconds. Ikangaa, who shared the early lead with compatriot John Bura, spurted ahead at the 11-mile point. Bura finished second in 1:03:42, followed by Japan's Takeshi So in 1:05:36.

Honda triumphs in Gotemba race

GOTEMBA, Japan (AP) — Kazuyoshi Hoshino drove his Lola-T88-Honda to victory Sunday, nearly 10 seconds ahead of Britain's Geoff Lees, in the fourth auto race in the six-event Grand Champion series.

Starting from the pole position, the 41-year-old Hoshino sped 40 laps around the 2.7-mile Fuji International Speedway in 56 minutes, 26.760 seconds. His average speed was 117.836 mph.

It was Hoshino's 23rd career victory and first of the season.

Swallows win, 6-3

TOKYO (AP) — The Yakult Swallows defeated the Yomiuri Giants 6-3 in Japense baseball Sunday as former major leaguer Doug Decinces singled home the tie-breaking run in a four-run, sixth inning.

Robert Gibson, a former minor leaguer, limited the Giants to five hits over five innings for his second victory against one defeat.

Spinks deals with fear

Murray

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. — On the eve of his fight with Rocky Marciano, English fighter Don Cockell's manager held out for a 20-foot instead of 16-foot ring.

"Why?" asked the humorist, Bugs Baer. "His man's not that tall."

On practically the eve of his fight with Mike Tyson, the manager of challenger Michael Spinks seemed to be holding out for a 15-round instead of 12-round fight.

"Why?" Bugs Baer might ask. "His man's not that durable."

Some guys fight out of a crouch. Some guys fight out of a stick-and-run. Michael fights out of fear. Some guys practice feints. Michael practices faints.

Some guys practice their jab. Some practice the left hook. Michael practices getting scared. No one knows whether he imports Dracula movies or listens to ghost stories but his style of fighting is sheer terror. The only thing Michael Spinks knows for sure in the ring is, he doesn't want to get hit.

He imagines the worst scenarios. Once he was getting ready to fight one of those head hunters with a name right out of the Arabian Nights and he told a magazine interviewer he put himself to sleep every night imagining himself getting the worst beating of his life. By the time he climbed in the ring he was so resigned to it, the fight was a walk in the park.

FEAR IS his ally. Will Rogers never met a man he didn't like, Michael Spinks never met a man he didn't fear. The minute he does, he knows he's through.

In the movie, "Patton," George C. Scott, playing the general, tells his troops: "Being a good soldier is not dying for your country, it's getting some other poor son of it to die for his country."

An old-time fight trainer, Eddie (Cannonball) Green, used to tell his fighters to go into the ring frightened out of their wits. "If a lion ain't scared, you can pull his tail and tweak his nose and ride on him and he'll yawn," he used to tell them. "But if he's scared, God help you."

Michael Spinks will drink to that. He had a brother, Leon, who wasn't scared of anything on this planet. That was just the trouble. Leon should have been scared of anything that came in a bottle. Leon is now getting bombed out in two minutes of the first round by guys who wouldn't scare anybody.

You examine Michael Spinks and he doesn't seem to have much else going for him besides fear. It's hard to figure what his ring style is because he doesn't have any. Michael is an ad lib fighter. He makes it up as he goes along. He's awkward, unpredictable, slow. All he does is win. If he were a ballplayer, he'd be Eddie Stanky. If he were a pitch, he'd be a knuckleball.

He does everything wrong. He hits off the wrong foot, he leads with the wrong hand — the right — he moves like a guy trying to get off a cake of soap. His hand speed is average, his foot speed non-existent. ("He couldn't catch a parked bus," Larry Holmes once scoffed — just before losing two fights to him). He can't punch. All he is, is undefeated. It's like getting beat by the heavy bag.

HE DOESN'T have a killer instinct. He doesn't enjoy hurting people. "I enjoy confusing 'em," he has told a reporter. He gets them to pick a card, then shows them another one. He didn't want to be a pug. He didn't want to be a janitor, though, either.

He's so good-natured, he's almost sweet. It's easy to make him laugh. Most fighters scowl a lot. Spinks grins a lot.

He himself, doesn't scare anybody. That's his greatest strength. Thirty-one guys have climbed into the ring with him in the pros thinking, "This guy's nuthin'. I can take this guy without training." When they got in the ring, they felt like Babe Ruth trying to hit a ball of cotton out of the lot.

He's like fighting China. You seem to disappear into the interior. When the fight's over, the judges look at each other. "I think that clumsy guy won it," they marvel. "Don't ask me how."

It's like an English movie where the butler did it.

You can hit Michael Spinks — but not hard. His nose is too big. A few more punches on it and he'll have to breathe through his ears. It's been hit so often, he's the only guy in the game with a cauliflowered nose.

He's not even really a heavyweight. He used to be the light-heavyweight champion and probably still should be. If he weighs 205 for his title fight with Tyson here Monday night, probably 30 pounds of it will be liquid.

And all 200 of it will be fright.

WILL WEIGHT slow him down?

"It's not speed that makes you hard to hit," says Michael Spinks. "It's fear."

If that's so, Michael Spinks is ready. His pulse is racing, his blood pressure is high, throat dry and he keeps looking over both shoulders at once. All his systems are go for him to fight his usual guerrilla-warfare fight. Michael Spinks will make his fight like a guy in a haunted house, a cemetery at midnight. Tyson may wonder if he showed up. Until the score cards come down.

Franklin Roosevelt told us the only thing we have to fear is fear itself. That's not Michael Spinks' position. the only thing he has to fear is courage.

Booze has killed some fighters, babes, others. Bravery is Spinks' bugaboo. As long as he can avoid that, as long as he can go into the ring shaking and having difficulty swallowing, he's ready.

If his teeth are chattering and he has a slight temperature, he may be unbeatable.

Just remember, courage has killed more men than cholera.

Niizeki notches first golf win

HAKUI, Japan (AP) — Yoshimi Niizeki sank a 40-foot birdie put on the first hole of a sudden-death playoff Sunday to beat Seiichi Kanai and win the Mizuno Open golf tournament.

The victory was the first in his 11-year pro career.

Kanai parred the 401-yard hole on the 6,766-yard, par-72 Bijodai course of Toki Country Club.

Niizeki and Kanai finished the regulation 72 holes tied at 280 after Niizeki shot a bogey-free 69 Sunday and Kanai had a 68.

Trade negotiators make progress

WASHINGTON (AP) — Negotiators report they are making significant progress in the effort to expand and strengthen the rules governing world trade despite a contentious fight over farm subsidies.

But the Reagan administration is concerned that global trade talks could be dealt a severe setback if the next president doesn't make the negotiations a top priority.

The United States and 95 other countries have been holding talks since late 1986 on ways to improve the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the global compact which governs trade.

These talks were in the headlines last week at the Toronto economic summit when President Reagan repeated his call for a total elimination of all agricultural subsidies by the year 2000. The other nations refused to endorse the idea, opting instead for a call to reduce subsidies, which now annually total $200 billion worldwide.

But the world's largest industrial powers, the United States, Japan, West Germany, Britain, France, Italy and Canada, did adopt strong language urging their trade ministers to make progress in the current global trade talks, known as the Uruguay round because they were launched in that country at a conference in late 1986.

"As the Uruguay round enters a more difficult phase, it is vital to ensure the momentum of these ambitious negotiations," the summit nations declared. "The greatest possible advance must be made in all areas."

Negotiators for the biggest trading markets, the United States, Japan, Canada and the 12-country European Economic Community, met after the Toronto summit for an additional two days at a lake resort in Brainerd, Minn. Officials there said they were encouraged by progress made in narrowing other differences.

An American official, who spoke on condition that his name not be used, said negotiators were close to reaching agreement on tougher rules to protect patents, copyrights and trademarks, areas where international piracy has cost U.S. businesses more than $46 billion.

The United States is also pushing for rules to govern trade in services, such as telecommunications and insurance, and global investment, two areas where the United States has a competitive edge. Neither category is now covered by global trading rules.

Officials said progress had been made in finding ways to increase the free flow of investment between countries, but they reported less success in trying to write rules governing trade in services, primarily because of a dispute over just which of 150 services categories should be covered.

Trade officials were more hopeful that a session scheduled for Montreal in December would bring agreement on ways to strengthen the Geneva-based GATT's procedures for settling trade disputes between nations by speeding up a process that can now drag on for a decade or more.

Braniff purchased in $111 million deal

DALLAS (AP) — The new leadership of Braniff Inc. pledges to become a competitive force in the airline industry, but at least one analyst says reaching that goal will take time.

Airline analyst Louis A. Marckesano of Janney Montgomery Scott Inc. in Philadelphia said Sunday that Braniff's market position, between the commuter airlines and the major carriers, makes survival difficult.

"That doesn't mean that they can't succeed," Marckesano said, adding he doesn't expect any rapid expansion or downsizing of the airline. "I don't think we'll know the answer to that for a while. They still have to find themselves a niche that they can survive in long term."

BIA Acquisitions, a PaineWebber-led investor group, said Saturday it agreed to acquire Dallas-based Braniff in a deal with an estimated value of $111 million.

Although Braniff posted a net loss of $8.1 million in the first quarter of this year, the airline has doubled its number of flights at Kansas City International airport since the beginning of the year.

Outgoing Braniff chairman J. Patrick Foley said the new management will continue the expansion. The airline is performing well in Kansas City, a hub it shares with financially ailing Eastern Airlines, Foley said.

"It's our understanding that they're going to leave everything in place for the immediate future," said Foley.

BIA agreed to buy Braniff from Dalfort Aviation Inc., which is owned by the Pritzker family of Chicago. BIA is paying $7 a share in cash and a pro rata share of 20 percent of the restructured airline for each share of Braniff common stock.

BIA appointed five top executives who resigned from Piedmont Airlines Friday to manage Braniff. The executives, led by new chairman William McGee, flew to Dallas Sunday and were expected to meet the company's employees and local media today.

"We intend for Braniff to become a strong competitive force in our nation's air travel and hospitality industries," Jeffrey R. Chodorow, one of BIA's leading investors, said in a statement Saturday. He could not be reached at his Philadelphia home for comment Sunday.

The investor group has pledged to protect the jobs of Braniff's 2,600 employees for at least three years.

Braniff primarily serves the Southwest, but analysts have speculated that it may try to reduce its operations at Dallas-Fort Worth, where there is strong competition between Fort Worth-based American Airlines and Atlanta-based Delta Airlines.

Dalfort owned 64 percent of the airline's common stock and all of its Series A preferred stock, which gave it more than 90 percent of the stock voting rights.

Dalfort will continue to hold a large equity stake in Braniff. PaineWebber also will retain equity interest in Braniff.

Texaco deal marks strategy shift for Saudis

By MATTHEW L. WALD

ANALYSIS

By the end of this year, if all goes as planned, the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia will be one of the biggest marketers of gasoline in the eastern United States, marking a huge shift in the strategy that has been used by petroleum-exporting countries for more than a decade.

Texaco Inc. and Saudi Arabia announced earlier this month that an affiliate of Aramco, the national oil company, would buy 50 percent of Texaco's distribution and marketing system in the East and Gulf Coast area.

The system comprises three refineries, 49 terminals, 1,450 service stations owned or leased by the oil company and a distribution network covering 10,000 more stations bearing the Texaco name.

Suddenly the largest member of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries will have more than $1 billion invested in an enterprise that cannot prosper if OPEC sharply restricts the supply of oil, as it has done in the past to raise prices, and leaves refineries idle. And suddenly the Saudis are confronted with having to squeeze out a profit in several unfamiliar parts of the oil business: refining, distributing and retailing.

It also raises the possibility of a kind of gasoline war unseen for many years, extending from the pump all the way back to the well. Such a war would be ignited if enough OPEC members invest in the "downstream" part of the business — refining and marketing — and seek to keep those operations healthy and increase their market share by cutting the price of the crude they supply.

UP & COMING

Ron Wise shoestrings idea into new firm

EDITORS NOTE: Up and Coming is a continuing series intended to recognize Midland's many young professionals and entrepreneurs, making a significant contribution in the business world.

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

When the oil industry went south, so did Ron Wise. The former service company sales executive says he grew tired of firing friends during the downturn, quit his job, and headed for Australia to "clear his head."

But, after only a few weeks below the equator, Wise returned to Midland with a clear head, dipped into his savings and founded Petroleum Listing Service, a Midland-based company with annual revenues of $250,000 and projections to hit $1 million within the next two years.

"When I kicked this thing off, I didn't have enough money to last another two weeks. I bet everything on a single mailing," says Wise, who adds that the business has cash flowed every month since.

He had fully intended to go into the investment business on his return, but when that deal fell through he found himself wandering about town and wondering what to do next. He said the idea for Petroleum Listing Service came by accident:

"I was going about town talking to people about one thing or another — trying to find something to get into. A couple of people asked me if I knew anybody that had Andrews County production for sale. Then the next day a secretary for an oil company asked me if I knew anybody that wanted to buy some Andrews Country production. The light went off in my head — why not provide a service that puts buyers and sellers of production together?"

He solicited the advice of others, and was advised the idea had merit. But he soon found that getting advice is decidedly easier than selling a deal.

"I thought the idea of putting buyers and sellers of production together had such great merit that everybody would see it and jump on the band wagon. I expected to have the first listing of properties for sale out in no more than 30 days," he recalls.

He did not get the first listings out in 30 days, nor in 60 days. It was four months before he could gather 100 listings to put into a small booklet printed on typing paper and mailed to a select group of operators.

Wise says he bet the last dollar on that mailing and set back to wait. Soon the checks began to come in. Not many, just enough to get through the next month. But each month has shown steady consistent growth.

From zero members, Petroleum Listing Service has now grown to 730 members and continues to sign two to three new members daily. The number of petroleum property listings in the monthly report has grown from 100 to 700 (1,800, counting leases).

'Oversupply' fears drop prices

Energy futures prices skidded lower Friday as profit-taking ended a three-day rally in the gasoline pit.

Meanwhile, futures prices for crude oil and home heating oil fell because of overabundant supplies, the analysts said.

The August contract for West Texas Intermediate, fell 36 cents to close at $16.01 per barrel. In early morning trading, the futures contract dropped anoth 15 cents to $15.86.

The July contract for home heating oil dropped 0.80 cent to close at 43.14 cents a gallon.

July unleaded gasoline contracts fell 0.15 cent to close at 50.91 cents a gallon on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Gasoline prices fell back after having crossed the 51-cents-a-gallon level on Thursday. Traders, believing that price was too high, moved in to take profits, said Madison Galbraith, senior energy specialist with Merrill Lynch Energy Futures.

Gasoline supplies remained tight in the Northeast, but that was not enough to extend the rally in the gasoline futures pit to a fourth day, said Peter Beutel, assistant director of the energy group at Elders Futures Inc.

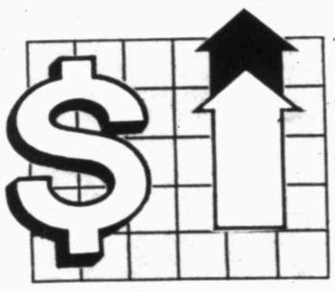
Dollar price higher but fading

LONDON (AP) — The dollar rose in early European trading today but dealers said it was off its best levels because of profit-taking.

Gold prices were slightly lower in quiet trading.

Despite the dollar's slight retreat at midmorning, dealers predicted it would continue to rise.

In Tokyo, the dollar rose 2.00 yen to a closing 131.70. Later, in London, it was quoted lower at 130.99 yen.



Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Friday's rates:

— 1.8245 West German marks, up from 1.8010

— 1.5078 Swiss francs, up from 1.4945

— 6.1380 French francs, up from 6.0635

— 2.0581 Dutch guilders, up from 2.0305

— 1,351.25 Italian lire, up from 1,330.37

— 1.20995 Canadian dollars, up from 1.2050

In London, the dollar rose strongly against the British pound. It cost $1.7158 to buy one pound, cheaper than $1.7430 late Friday.

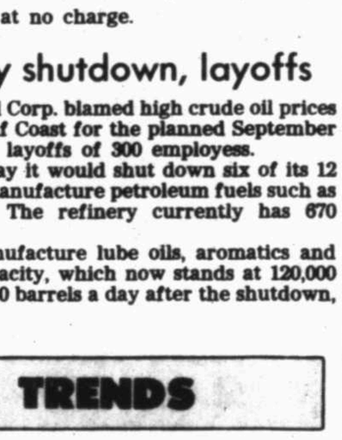
Gold opened in London at a bid price of $442.60 a troy ounce and at midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $442.00. Both were down from Friday's late bid of $442.90.

In Zurich, the bid price was $442.00, down from $442.90 late Friday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell $1.55 to close at a bid $444.14.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $6.85 a troy ounce, up from Friday's late bid of $6.84.

Stocks slip Friday; Higher for week



NEW YORK (AP) — Stocks retreated again Friday in moderate trading, which brokers attributed largely to investors cashing profits from the market's big advance earlier in the week.

The weakness came despite news of a sharply higher dollar and lower interest rates in the credit markets, which some traders believe could emerge as key elements for a sustained summer rally.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks, which fell 3.91 points Thursday, lost another 5.33 to close at 2,142.96, finishing the week with a gain of 38.94 or 1.9 percent. Broader market indices were mostly lower, although they ended with the week with gains.

Declining stocks outnumbered advances by more than a 7-to-6 ratio in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 774 issues down, 662 up and 525 unchanged.

Unocal plans refinery shutdown, layoffs

NEDERLAND, Texas (AP) — Unocal Corp. blamed high crude oil prices and low profit margins along the Gulf Coast for the planned September closing of its refinery here and the layoffs of 300 employess.

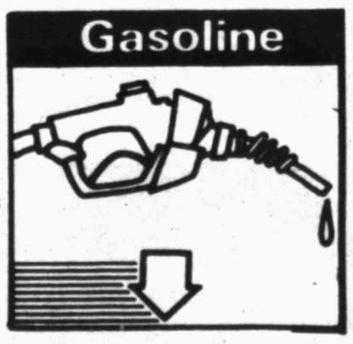
Company officials announced Friday it would shut down six of its 12 production units and will no longer manufacture petroleum fuels such as gasoline, diesel fuel and jet fuel. The refinery currently has 670 employees.

The refinery will continue to manufacture lube oils, aromatics and aliphatic solvents. The refinery's capacity, which now stands at 120,000 barrels a day, will be reduced to 40,000 barrels a day after the shutdown, the Beaumont Enterprise reported.

BUSINESS TRENDS

Prices buck summer trend

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Gasoline prices bucked a summer trend and dipped a quarter of a cent a gallon during the last two weeks, according to a nationwide survey of more than 12,000 stations.



The Lundberg Survey said the average price of all grades of gasoline offered at all types of service stations was 99.98 cents as of Friday, down from the June 10 average price of $1.0023 per gallon.

The average price was down nearly a full cent from comparable June 1987 prices, according to the survey released Sunday.

GENERAL NEWS

Allies to keep eye on Soviet meeting

By ALISON SMALE

MOSCOW (AP) — The millions of people who live in Eastern Europe could not send delegates to the Communist Party conference that begins Tuesday, but will certainly be watching it closely.

The Kremlin sets the tone for reform in its Warsaw Pact allies, and is now increasing pressure on those countries' Communist leaders to follow Mikhail S. Gorbachev's lead.

Because the 5,000-delegate conference is not a regular party congress, East bloc leaders will not be invited to observe the proceedings, but they are sure to pay close attention.

Gorbachev's opening speech is to be carried live by East bloc television and East Europeans will be tuning in for nightly bulletins on the conference or reading the Soviet dailies that now sell out fast at the news stand.

With Moscow now insisting publicly that its allies are free to dictate their own reforms at their own pace, East bloc officials are reluctant to admit openly that the outcome of the Soviet party conference will have any bearing on their own policies.

WORLD

But in Prague, for example, officials privately admit they are waiting to see whether Gorbachev will strengthen his hand.

Poland and Hungary have gone furthest in matching or even exceeding Gorbachev's reforms in the economic and political realms.

In Budapest, officials openly boast now of great support from the Soviets for their reforms, and accordingly have voiced the greatest concern that Soviet proponents of change are not well-placed to prevail at this week's conference.

"The fact is, the supporters of the new line cannot feel that their position is safe at the party conference," the Hungarian government daily Magyar Hirlap wrote last week.

"The open or covert opposition — the more conservative elements of the apparatchiks, the bureaucrats and the undecided — will make their presence felt as they did when the delegates were elected," the paper said.

In Poland, the subject of the Soviet Union and its future comes up in almost every conversation about the Poles' own future.

An opposition platform partially published by the independent Catholic weekly Tygodnik Powszechny two weeks ago noted that "chances for reform can be considered as growing" as Gorbachev's campaign crystalizes and "will weaken the position of conservative elements" among Poland's ruling Communists.

Soviet reforms have received scant attention in the official media in East Germany and Romania, whose Communist leaders so far have rejected any need to follow suit.

But East German youth have shouted "Gorbachev, Gorbachev" when protesting police attempts to disperse young rock fans at the Berlin Wall.

Romania's 23 million citizens are largely preoccupied in coping with severe food shortages. But they paid close attention to a visit from Gorbachev 13 months ago that offered them their only chance to date to hear a long, televised speech by the Soviet leader.

All of eastern Europe's Communist leaders, many now more secretive and orthodox their Kremlin counterparts, will closely follow conference debate over the Stalinist past and the need to open up Communist Party life.

As Warsaw Pact allies embroiled in a fierce dispute over the treatment of ethnic Hungarians in Romania, Hungary and Romania are likely to take a special interest in the ethnic unrest that has recently flared in the Soviet Union.

Soldiers wreck Arab stabbing suspect's home

JERUSALEM (AP) — Soldiers today demolished the home of an Arab suspected of stabbing a Jewish settler and police strengthened their ranks in Jerusalem, where underground leaders urged an escalation of the Palestinian uprising.

Also, Israeli troops closed more than 40 Palestinian schools in the West Bank city of Nablus, citing repeated stone-throwing incidents in the area in recent days. The army said the schools would be closed at least several days.

The bulldozed house belonged to Abdel Majid Sharawne, 22. American-born settler Yohan Chaiken said he chased and shot Sharawne Friday after the Palestinian stabbed him in the West Bank city of Hebron.

Sharawne's home was the second building wrecked by Israeli authorities in two days. On Sunday, the army blew up the second story of a building in the occupied Gaza Strip, where it said assailants threw a firebomb that badly burned two of its soldiers last week.

Five hundred extra police officers were put on alert in the mixed Jewish-Arab city of Jerusalem today to confront expected protests called in the latest leaflet distributed by underground leaders allied with the Palestine Liberation Organization, said city police spokesman Rafi Levy.

Israeli news reports said 1,500 police in all were stationed in the city.

The leaflet said Palestinians should mark today and Tuesday as "days for the escalation of the struggle." It said they should march in Jerusalem, which it called "the capital of the Palestinian state."

The call was meant to protest Israel's annexation of the Arab sector of Jerusalem a few days after it was captured from Jordan in the 1967 Middle East War, when Israel also seized the Gaza Strip and West Bank.

According to U.N. figures, 211 Palestinians and four Israelis have died in the anti-occupation uprising that began Dec. 8.

Underground leaders also urged merchants to take part in a general strike on Tuesday "in affirmation of the Arab identity of the city (of Jerusalem)."

Police have recently rounded up Palestinian guerrilla suspects from Jerusalem's walled Old City, most of whom are aged 17 to 23 and believed responsible for a rash of recent firebomb attacks in the city, the mass-circulation daily Maariv said.

In another development, the army said it was investigating allegations that soldiers used hypodermic needles to inject two Palestinian men in the Al Amari refugee camp near Ramallah on the West Bank to pry information about stone-throwers from them.

Nader Mahli, 24, said soldiers seized him Friday and gave him an injection while they asked him for the names of stone-throwers and members of the Shabiba, a PLO youth movement.

Masaad Jaber, a driver for the United Nations, said soldiers also forced his son, Midhad, to receive an injection during an interrogation.

One Palestinian showed reporters needle marks in his arm that he said was caused by the hypodermics.

In the Gaza Strip, meanwhile, Israeli troops clamped curfews on the Beach camp and a portion of the Jabaliya camp after an Israeli car was stoned and set ablaze in the nearby Beit Lahiya neighborhood on Sunday, Israel radio reported.

On Sunday, a fire damaged the Hassan Bek mosque in the seaside port of Jaffa near Tel Aviv.

Moslem leaders said the attack appeared to be the work of Jews seeking revenge for fires that have razed more than 35,000 acres of trees and farmland in Israel since May. Palestinian arsonists are suspected in those fires.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Fire causes damage in Tijuana shopping center

TIJUANA, Mexico (AP) — Firefighters from both sides of the U.S.-Mexican border battled a raging blaze that heavily damaged a shopping center in this popular tourist city, authorities said.

The blaze broke out in the one-story Centro Commercial Blanco Libertad shortly before 6:30 p.m. Sunday and destroyed up to 16 businesses, said Tijuana Fire Department dispatcher Ruben Garcia.

Firefighters from San Diego and the Mexican cities of Tecate and Rosarito Beach helped bring the blaze under control within 2½ hours, Garcia said.

Assistant Tijuana fire Chief Jose Carreno said fire hydrants in the area did not work and water had to be hauled in.

Some of the water used to fight the blaze was brought in from San Diego, about 15 miles away, said San Diego fire Capt. Ralph Haynes.

Seven Tijuana firefighters were treated for smoke inhalation at the scene, Garcia said.

The cause of the blaze was under investigation and there were no damage estimates.

Soviet officer to visit U.S.

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union's second-highest military leader will visit the United States during the first two weeks of July, Tass said today.

The official news agency said Marshal Sergei F. Akhromeyev, chief of staff and first deputy defense minister, will make the trip at the invitation of Adm. William Crowe, chairman of the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staffs.

Akhromeyev was Washington in early December for the summit between Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev and President Reagan.

The invitation is the result of an agreement announced by the countries' two defense chiefs in March to expand military contacts and exchanges of information between U.S. and Soviet officials on force strengths.

The agreement was part of a joint statement by Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci and Soviet Defense Minister Gen. Dmitri Yazov after a meeting in Bern, Switzerland believed to be the first such session between the countries' defense ministers since World War II.

Chinese turn to coffee

BEIJING (AP) — Tea-drinking Chinese are turning to coffee for their morning jolt in growing numbers, an official report said Sunday.

Most of that coffee is imported, and agricultural officials worried about the country's scarce foreign currency are scrambling to boost domestic coffee production, the China Daily newspaper said.

It quoted Yang Peisheng of the Ministry of Agriculture as saying Chinese now consume 21,000 tons of coffee beans a year, with all but 1,300 imported. He said China is seeking $2.6 million in foreign investment to start its own coffee plantations.

Disarmament meeting ends

UNITED NATIONS (NYT) — A world conference on disarmament concluded in disagreement, with the Reagan administration and many of its Western allies saying that irreconcilable differences separated them from the Soviet bloc nations and most Third World countries.

After two weeks of preparatory talks and four weeks of negotiations, the delegates to the Third Special Session of the U.N. General Assembly on Disarmament conceded Sunday, after an all-night meeting, that they were unable to agree on a joint declaration setting out new disarmament aims and priorities.

Couple flees East Germany

BAD BRAMSTEDT, West Germany (AP) — An East German couple was pulled to safety from the Baltic Sea on Sunday after fleeing their communist homeland in a small boat, officials said.

A spokesman for the coastal border patrol in Bad Bramstedt north of Hamburg said a West Germany rescue ship picked up the couple after they slipped past East German coast patrols.

Jefferson Davis' White House restored

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — After $4.9 million worth of renovations to bring the White House of the Confederacy to its Civil War-time stateliness, restorers are welcoming visitors again to "the executive mansion of another nation."

The house, built in 1818, was leased to the Confederate government for use as the residence of President Jefferson Davis, and in it he often mapped war strategy with his generals, including Robert E. Lee and Thomas "Stonewall" Jackson.

It gives a glimpse into the life of the South's first family while reflecting the decline and death of the Confederate States of America.

"As the war went on, the quality of what was served went down," said David S. Bundy, director of development and public relations at the house and the Museum of the Confederacy next door.

By the end of the Civil War, he said, the White House was serving "what became known as Jefferson Davis punch — water."

Richmond, the capital of the Confederacy, had bought the house for $42,000 in 1861.

Three decades after the war, in 1896, it opened as the Confederate Museum but closed in 1976 when its Confederate collections were moved to the new museum. Its restoration and reopening this month were underwritten by $4.9 million in private, corporate, state and federal donations.

"We feel like the White House is one of the most important historical houses in America," Bundy said. "It was the executive mansion of another nation. Whether you're from the North or the South, it played a big part in our destiny."

The three-story Classical Revival-style White House, actually painted a pale gray, stands in the heart of the city's historic Court End district.

Visitors can tread on a re-creation of the white carpet on which Lee inadvertently tracked mud. Restorers learned the carpet was white from a reference Davis' wife, Varina, made to the incident.

"General Lee came up from camp one day evidently worn out and worried, to find Mr. Davis lying quite ill on a divan, in a little morning-room in which we received only our intimate friends," Mrs. Davis recalled in her memoirs. "General Lee, with a bow and excuse for coming in on the white carpet with his splashed boots, sat down and plunged at once into army matters."

Visitors also can see the second-floor office where Davis met with Lee and Jackson to discuss strategy and the front parlor where Davis entertained the public, Bundy said.

Authenticity was important to those restoring the house. The only non-period pieces in sight are smoke alarms.

Most of the furniture in the house was used by the Davises in the four years they lived there and was donated to the restoration effort. A painted floor cloth in the round entranceway "was very trendy at the time."

"Anything that's not a Davis piece is of the period," Bundy said.

Most of the gaslight chandeliers in the house are original and have been restored. "We could have used substitutes, and 99 percent of the public never would have known," he said.

Restorers analyzed the paint on the furniture to determine which coat was on top when Davis lived in the house.

Reproducing textiles throughout the house cost "quite a bit over" $100,000, Bundy said.

A New York textile reproduction company created a green and gold silk for the drapes and an ottoman in the dining room that is almost identical to the fabric in place 123 years ago.

"We have these original fabrics. These are pieces of history. If we can recreate them, we make every effort," Bundy said.

It was painstaking work, copying the original design on graph paper, dying yarn to match the original colors and hand-tying 15,000 threads individually to a loom, said Adriana Bitter, one of the owners of Scalamandre, a restoration consultant in New York City.

The silk left the loom at a rate of only 4½ yards in an 8-hour workday, she said. The pattern still is not an exact copy because the patterns in the new fabric do not repeat at the same rate, Mrs. Bitter said. It could have been done for another $30,000.

Restorers discovered the house had one more room than previously thought — a secretary's office adjacent to Davis'. They found a joint that indicated where a wall had once been.

Among furniture and other items that Davis and his family used are his office chair and desk.

Many other items left in the pockets of Northern soldiers while the house was being used as Union Army headquarters after the war.

"A lot of Union officers took souvenirs from the house and a lot of them have found their way back," Bundy said. Many were returned when the museum first opened in the house at the turn of the century. Others, such as spurs Davis wore, have come back within the last month.

Last shots fired in recreated Battle of Gettysburg

GETTYSBURG, Pa. (AP) — After three days of wool uniforms and no showers, thousands of men helping reenact the Battle of Gettysburg have forsaken the life of a Civil War soldier to the 20th century.

"I'd like to stay longer, but you have to make a living," said Griff King, a 35-year-old machine operator from Weston, W.Va., and a member of the 2nd Virginia Regiment.

More than 8,000 uniformed men concluded a commemoration of the battle's 125th anniversary Sunday by staging the final charge of the war's bloodiest confrontation.

Organizers billed the event as the largest Civil War re-enactment ever.

Some 140,000 people witnessed the re-enectment over three days, said Paul Baebler, a spokesman for Napoleonic Tactics Inc., which staged the battle on 700 acres of farmland five miles south of the actual battlefield.

After the last shots were fired, participants from North and South stood in silence as a bugler played taps and cannons fired one after another in a 21-gun salute to honor those who died in the actual battle.

Close to 50,000 Union and Confederate troops were killed or wounded at the Battle of Gettysburg on July 1-3, 1863, when the Army of the Potomac turned back the Army of Northern Virginia's attempt to invade the North.

A series of cannon blasts by both sides opened the fighting Sunday. Then Confederates gave out a rebel yell and marched shoulder-to-shoulder 200 yards across and several men deep across a field and up a ridge, where Union troops waited.

Major Gen. George E. Pickett's unsuccessful charge with more than 12,000 troops against 9,000 Union soldiers was the Confederate's final offensive push at Gettysburg.

"If the Battle of Gettysburg was the turning point of the Civil War, then Pickett's charge was the turning point of the Battle of Gettysburg," said Kim Holien, a historian with the U.S. Army Center of Military History.

Troops for the North and South traded volley after volley in an engagement staged at one-third the original scale of Pickett's Charge.

"It was a great battle," said John McQueen, a 37-year-old marketing manager from Atlanta who fought for the 52nd Ohio Regiment as soldiers for both sides fell around him.

"The rifle barrels were getting so hot you couldn't touch them," he said.

Confederate troops fell back after an hour of battle.

Five ersatz troops required hospitalization for injuries suffered during the three days of soldiering, said Dr. Bill Steinour, director of the emergency room at Gettysburg Hospital.

He said there were two serious leg injuries, a skull fracture, a man suffering chest pain and another with a kidney stone ailment.

Portrait of the Great American Investor

Right now, Lisa Kramer is this dog's best friend. As a veterinarian, she spends her days looking after patients with names like Smokey and Snowball and Spot. But she remembers to look after herself, too. Lisa invests in U.S. Savings Bonds, and that makes her one of the Great American Investors.

More than 30 million people like Lisa invest in America while helping themselves. They buy U.S. Savings Bonds. Bonds pay competitive rates, like money market accounts, when held for five years or more. They're free from state and local income tax. And they're one of the safest investments around.

You can purchase Bonds for as little as $25. So no matter how much you're investing, buy U.S. Savings Bonds. The Great American Investment. Find out more, call 1-800-US-BONDS.
