Group touts bonds' virtues

Business leaders urging voters to pass bond issue

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

Midland business leaders are betting a last minute promotional blitz will be enough to sell voters on a proposed $17.4 million bond issue scheduled for special election Saturday.

Bruce Stanley is one of those leaders.

"When it rains, my business is hurt," says the Wadley Avenue Exxon service station owner — one of 15 local business leaders who, over the next 5½ days will be working to sell the bond project to voters.

Wayne Merritt is another bond proponent. "We have to make an investment in Midland if we expect to maintain our infrastructure," says the committee's co-chairman.

Both Merritt and Stanley, according to city officials, have good reasons to be concerned, and that's because much of what's being proposed is linked to the city's economic livelihood.

The upcoming election isn't a take all or leave it issue. The fact is, voters will have a choice, because the bonds have been broken down into four separate packages — drainage, streets, public safety and parks.

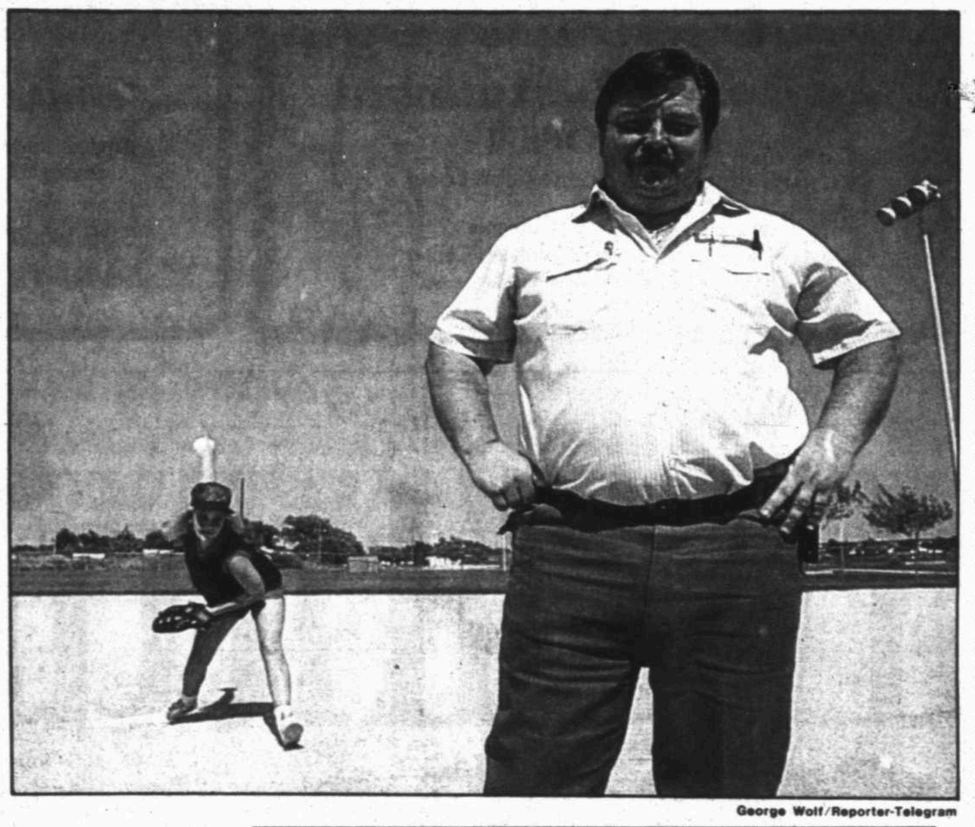

In essence, the city wants to repair and pave its streets and intersections as well as replace its traffic signals at a cost of $5.5 million; widen and deepen its drainage system to the northwest and east at a cost of $3.5 million; build a park and offer its senior citizens something for the future at a cost of $4.2 million; and strengthen its communications system, with the help of a $750,000 carry over from a previous bond election for $5.5 million.

That's it, straight and simple. But will voters, rocked by four tax increases in fiscal 1989, support the measure?

Bond proponents don't have those answers. What they do know is that if the package is stifled, Midland will end up paying even more in the long run to correct problems that are just now surfacing.

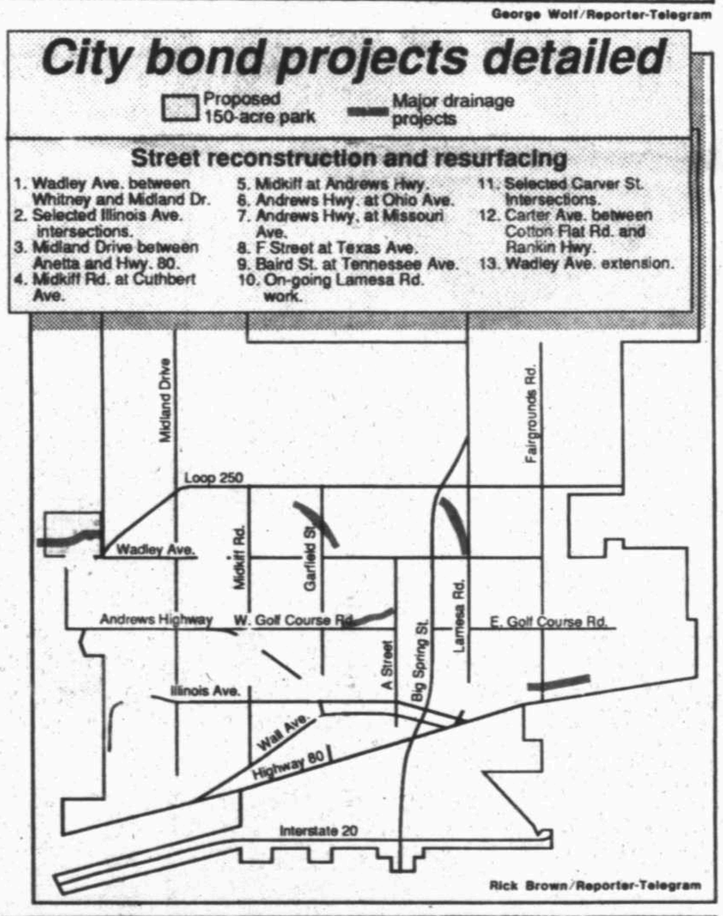

If for no other reason, Merritt says "sheer competition" among competing communities to attract new business and retain existing ones should be a considered incentive.

Bruce Stanley's interest in voter approval of new city bonds stems from two concerns. As a coach, above, in MUGS (Midland United Girls Softball), he thinks more playing fields are needed. As a service station owner on Wadley Avenue, he says flooding hurts his business.

Absentee voting for city's bond election being held

From Staff Reports

Absentee balloting for the city's proposed $17.4 million bond election is now going on at the Midland County Elections Administration building, 709 W. Washington Ave. through 5 p.m. Sept. 13.

Balloting — which began Aug. 29 — is open again to eligible voters 8 a.m. Monday. The elections administration is open each day from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Unofficially, the elections office has mailed out 154 ballots and reported another 201 walk-ins, according to officials.

Firefighters hit with rain, high winds

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK, Wyo. (AP) — Rain fell on Old Faithful Saturday, as thousands of firefighters faced high wind that fanned already enormous forest fires, and Cabinet-level officials inspected damage to the oldest national park.

A nearby mining town was evacuated and nonessential people were sent out of park headquarters.

A storm with winds up to 30 mph and gusts of up to 40 mph measured near Mammoth moved south and east through Wyoming Saturday afternoon.

But in most areas of Yellowstone, "things didn't get quite as intense as they thought probably they would," said Linda Miller, a spokeswoman at park headquarters at Mammoth Hot Springs.

About a quarter inch of rain fell in the Lake Yellowstone area, while scattered showers hit most of the southern half of the park. Fire information officials said puddles gathered in the roads and the rain quieted fire activity by increasing humidity in the area.

All roads and entrances were closed to visitors Saturday, and reporters had to travel in convoys escorted by park personnel. "We're making sure people don't get into situations they can't get out of," said Yellowstone spokeswoman Marty Tobias.

Interior Secretary Donald Hodel, Agriculture Secretary Richard Lyng and Deputy Defense Secretary William Howard Taft IV arrived at West Yellowstone, Mont., where they were briefed in private by fire and weather officials before going to Old Faithful geyser and flying over the park.

■ Related story — 10A

"I didn't think I'd ever see anything quite like Mount St. Helens, but I did here," Lyng said.

Fires have charred more than 906,000 acres of the 2.2-million-acre park. Adding destruction in the national forests and parks surrounding the park in Idaho, Montana and Wyoming pushes the figure to over 1.2 million burned acres.

Fires also burned in Alaska, California, Colorado, Utah and Washington.

So far this year, Western fires have burned nearly 3.8 million acres, an area larger than Connecticut, in what officials call the worst fire season in 30 years. That includes some 2 million acres in Alaska.

The 229,400-acre North Fork fire had burned to within a mile of Mammoth Hot Springs and was slowly bearing down on the area, fire managers said. Nearly 400 firefighters were on hand to protect buildings.

Filming of Jessica's story still hasn't begun

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

Midlanders watching their television schedules for the "Jessica McClure Story" are in for a long wait.

Even with the end of the Hollywood writers strike last month, the producer tapped to film the young girl's year-ago rescue can't say when his movie will reach the small screen.

Still, producer John Kander feels the lag won't hurt viewership.

"The story is timeless," said Kander, who is working in association with Interscope Communications of Los Angeles and the ABC network.

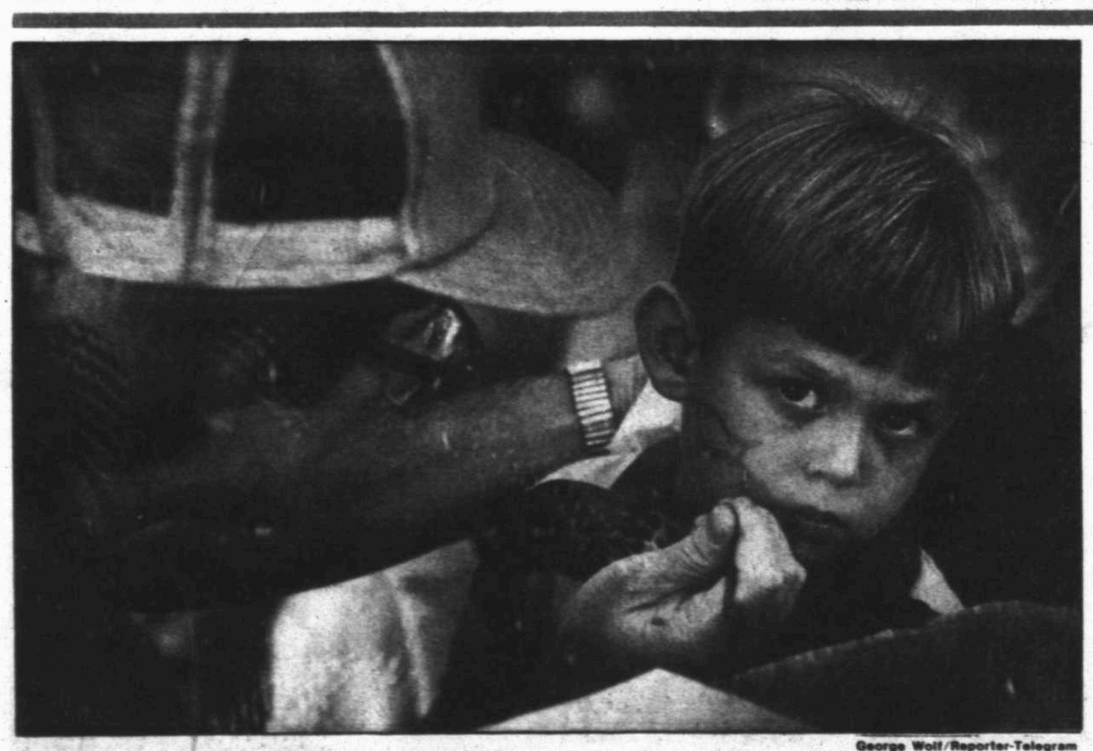

"I don't feel the sentiments that people felt are that easily forgotten," he said Friday. "The story is not the flavor of the month, so to speak."

Young Jessica, now 2 years old, was rescued last Oct. 16 from an abandoned southwest Midland water well she had tumbled down two days earlier. Her plight diverted the nation's attention from stock market crashes and Persian Gulf conflicts.

While Kander makes progress in "setting up" a screenwriter — "A lot of people would like to do it," he said — a second production company that lost the movie-rights battle continues to threaten legal action.

Highland Communications Group, also of Los Angeles, has gone so far as to hire a high-profile Houston attorney, Marian Rosen, to press its case.

Lawmen frustrated by unsolved Peace killing

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

The roomy top drawer of the file cabinet in Tim Rogers' office began to fill up about a year ago. Now it is full, as is half of the second drawer.

The drawers contain the file on the Verna Peace killing, currently the only unsolved murder case of the Midland County Sheriff's Department, and one of the few capital murder cases ever recorded in the county.

Just over a year ago, on Sept. 4, 1987, Ms. Peace, 41, was gunned down at the Town and Country convenience store on west U.S. Highway 80 where she worked as a clerk.

The killer has not been found, but Rogers, who is in charge of the case, clings to hope.

"We're just not having a whole lot of success with it — but we're still working it," he said.

The investigator, a lieutenant in the criminal investigation division, is all too familiar with much of what happened that night. But he wishes he knew more.

Just after 11 p.m. that Friday, a man entered the brightly lit store where Ms. Peace was on duty alone. He walked down at least one aisle, picked up a few items and as he reached the counter, asked her for a pack of cigarettes.

She began to turn around.

When officers arrived less than a half-hour later, they found Ms. Peace had been shot three times. They later determined she had been wounded in the arm, then the neck. The gunman then fired again and missed, and spent his fourth round in her back as she lay bleeding.

The shooter escaped from the store with less than $200 cash, according to investigators.

The physical evidence has been examined, and the hundreds of tips and bits of information generated by the brutality of the crime and publicity about a $10,000 cash reward offered by the store chain has been run down, according to Rogers.

Since he inherited the case from other investigators, Rogers has modified the original scenario of the getaway.

Investigators believed initially that a blue and white car seen near the store at about the time of the shooting was the suspect's vehicle. But Rogers thinks the car belongs to someone else.

Teachers' self-insurance program goes bankrupt

AUSTIN (AP) — A self-insurance program, which two years ago provided health and hospitalization coverage for more than 22,000 Texas school teachers and their families, has collapsed, leaving $8.5 million in medical bills unpaid.

Without coverage, the teachers and other school employees will have to pay the full amount owed, principally to doctors and hospitals.

Educators Group Health Trust, established by the Texas Association of Community Schools in 1983, filed this week for liquidation under Chapter 7 of the federal bankruptcy code, the Austin American-Statesman reported in Saturday's editions.

Officers and the administrator of the health trust said escalating medical costs in the past 18 months were the principal cause of the collapse. Soaring costs led to higher premiums and cash-flow problems that delayed reimbursement payments by months. As a result, many members quit the program and found insurance coverage elsewhere.

Membership fell from 18,313 last year to 8,200 at the start of this school year — far short of the minimum 16,000 needed to keep the program solvent, officials said. The number of school districts participating fell from 209 to 82.

In its bankruptcy filing, Educators Group listed assets of approximately $364,000 and and liabilities of nearly $8.5 million. The liabilities essentially represent medical claims by more than 6,700 teachers and their dependents.

The collapse of the self-insurance program left many members "in a state of shock," said Bill Alexander, superintendent of the Frankston Independent School District and president of the Texas Association of Community Schools.

The group, composed of 867 smaller school districts that average about 100 teachers and other employees, has arranged temporary coverage for Educators Group members through an Austin company.

That still leaves virtually all claims unpaid, principally to doctors and hospitals, because the bankruptcy liquidation is expected to raise less than 5 cents on the dollar.

The doctors and hospitals who expected to be paid by the insurance program will probably seek full payment from the individuals they treated, said Joe Seale, executive director of the school association.

Seale, Alexander and the three other officers of the Texas Association of Community Schools were trustees of Educators Group Health Trust.

Seale said he has contacted the executive directors of the Texas Hospital Association and the Texas Medical Association. He asked those organizations to advise their members not to press the teachers and the other employees for the money.

Researchers give biology teachers poor grades

ARLINGTON (AP) — A high percentage of high school biology teachers profess superstitious beliefs and about one in four think some races of people are inherently more intelligent than others, according to a survey.

Also, about 19 percent of the teachers believe dinosaurs and humans lived at the same time, according to the national survey by two University of Texas at Arlington researchers that will be released this week, The Dallas Morning News reported in its Saturday editions.

Dr. Raymond Eve, associate professor of sociology at UTA, and Dr. Dana Dunn, assistant professor of sociology, mailed questionnaires to biology teachers to try to determine why many college students held pseudoscientific beliefs, a finding of a 1987 survey.

The two researchers sent a 12-page, 88-item questionnaire to about 400 teachers selected at random from a list of 20,000 provided by the National Science Teachers Association. They received 200 responses; the survey had a 5 percentage point margin of error.

Eve said he hoped the results would spur further research.

The results, when compared with an international study of high-school students' biology knowledge, show "we're doing something very, very, very wrong in biology education," Ms. Dunn said.

A study this year by the International Association for the Evaluation of Educational Achievement found U.S. students scoring no higher than eighth among 13 countries in the sciences and last in biology.

The Texas researchers found what Eve called "racial bigotry" in responses to the survey statement: "Some races of people are more intelligent than others."

Twenty-six percent of the respondents said the statement was "definitely true" or "probably true," while 24 percent circled "inconclusive evidence."

Based on the survey responses, Eve said, "there's a sort of racism" that major cultural accomplishments, such as the Egyptian pyramids or Incan religious structures "couldn't have been built by stupid Indians; it had to be white Europeans or space gods."

Eve said 94 percent of those surveyed were white and 63 percent were male.

Central to the study — and most surprising to the researchers — was that biology teachers seemed to misunderstand "what science is all about," Eve said.

Given the statement, "Scientists seek facts, but sometimes the best they can do is theories," only 5 percent correctly answered "definitely false."

A theory is not an "educated guess," as many lay people believe, he said. Science is a systematic method of arriving at conclusions, or theories, using the facts as a basis, he said.

Eve and Ms. Dunn cited poor teacher training as a major reason for the pseudoscientific and superstitious beliefs. In Texas, for example, teachers are allowed to instruct one class a day outside their areas of certification.

Only about 25 percent of teachers surveyed have degrees in biology. And too often, the study found, the science class was the teacher's secondary area of instruction, or the teacher had only science education as a major.

Respondents to the survey were given statements and asked to agree or disagree.

Doctor says pilot not well enough to be interviewed

DALLAS (AP) — Although the captain of Delta Flight 1411 is listed in good condition, his physician said Saturday he is not well enough to talk to federal investigators about the Aug. 31 crash in which 13 people died.

Dr. William Thompson issued a statement Saturday saying he alone is responsible for denying investigators from the National Transportation Safety Board or anyone else a chance to interview Capt. Larry Davis about the crash.

Davis, who has not been interviewed by investigators yet about the crash of the Boeing 727, is at Parkland Memorial Hospital, where he is being treated for back and facial injuries, a hospital spokesman said.

"He hasn't given any permission to anyone to talk to Capt. Davis," said the hospital's administrative resident, Paula Turner.

Thompson, the assistant director of surgery for the University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center in Dallas, said Davis will cooperate with the NTSB investigation later, when his medical condition improves.

"Tentatively, Capt. Davis may talk with the NTSB early next week, depending on his condition, which may change from day to day," Thompson said in his statement.

NTSB officials, anxious to interview Davis about what might have gone wrong and to find out how 95 people survived, complained that they were being kept away from the Delta captain by overprotective Air Line Pilots Association and Delta Air Lines officials.

Since the crash he has spoken with visitors from his hometown of Greenville, including members of his church.

The Wall Street Journal reported Thursday that several government officials were frustrated that investigators were kept away from co-pilot Carey Kirkland and flight engineer Steven Judd for several days while officials from both Delta and ALPA were with the two crew members since the day of the accident.

Delta officials said they were not trying to prevent the NTSB from interviewing the crew, and they confronted the federal officials about the matter in a conference call Thursday.

Air Line Pilots Association spokesman John Mazor said the union and the flight crew have nothing to hide and that investigators may interview Davis as soon as doctors give approval.

"We've learned a lot of hard lessons in accident investigation, and one of them is that immediately after an accident is the worst time to talk to a crew," Mazor said. "They're in pain, they're racked with guilt. You have people who are in no condition to give a factual and accurate statement."

Lee Dickinson Jr., the NTSB member coordinating the Delta investigation, said he was satisfied that investigators will be allowed to question Davis in due time.

Friends who have visited Davis at Parkland said he discussed with them his recollection of the events in the cockpit before takeoff and of the crash itself.

"It just wouldn't fly," Davis reportedly told Raiford Stainback of Greenville a week ago during a hospital visit.

Davis said the cockpit checks had been completed, the wing flaps were set in the correct position and the plane was ready for takeoff the day of the crash, Stainback told the Dallas Times Herald.

"He said everything checked to be OK, the wing flaps and so forth," Stainback said. "He was concerned, you know, that everything was done that could be done."

Health official says state has yet to deal with AIDS treatment

Gigi Goren, left, and Robby Robinson, both of Austin, joined nearly 2,500 others Saturday for a 3-mile walk down Congress Avenue. The Austin AIDS Walkathon was the first such benefit in the state.

AP Laserphoto

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas has not done enough in the fight against AIDS, the state health commissioner said Saturday while attending opening ceremonies of the first walkathon in the state to raise money to fight the deadly disease.

"The state has not yet dealt with the treatment side of AIDS, nor have a lot of states," said Dr. Robert Bernstein, commissioner for the Texas Department of Health.

Bernstein said he hopes to see more benefits like the AIDS walkathon — entitled "From All Walks of Life" — a 5-kilometer (3.1 mile) race that began at the state Capitol building.

Organizers of the benefit, in which about 2,500 people participated, said they had probably raised more than their goal of $80,000. Funds raised from the event will go to area organizations that offer care and education on acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Bernstein, who did not participate in the walkathon, said, "The money is a pittance compared to what they need." However, the commissioner said the walkathon will help show community support for AIDS victims and increase awareness about the disease.

The commissioner said while the state has begun to address the AIDS issue, "I think we're coming along very slowly."

A person who has been diagnosed with the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV), may get the disease if the virus attacks the body's immune system, leaving victims susceptible to a variety of infections and cancers. It may be transmitted through sexual contact, transfusions of blood or blood products, or by the sharing of contaminated needles or syringes by drug users. The disease may also be passed from mother to child before birth.

"When babies are being born in the hospital with AIDS, the ignorance that suggests this disease only affects one segment of the population has got to be stopped," state Treasurer Ann Richards told race participants.

Ms. Richards acted as the official starter and took part in the walkathon.

A handful of demonstrators led by Mark Weaver, director of the American Family Association of Texas, protested the event's sponsor, AIDS Services of Austin.

Weaver said pamphlets and fliers provided by the ASA to educate people about the disease actually give information on how to perform "deviant sexual acts" and promote homosexuality.

Travis County Judge Bill Aleshire issued a challenge to Weaver, asking him to "join us in a positive effort to help solve this problem."

Fraternity urges students to use 'condom sense'

SAN MARCOS (AP) — Students making defiant speeches and distributing free condoms at a campus rally offered a hint that perhaps this wasn't going to be a normal fall semester at Southwest Texas State University.

Another sign came from Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity members, who spent the week inviting students and news media to a "Use Your Condom Sense" party at their house near the campus.

The fraternity's vice president said he talked a Dallas manufacturer into donating 5,000 condoms to distribute to party guests.

Other student protests against a ban on the dispensing or prescribing of contraceptives from the SWT health center will continue until the decision by the university's governing board is reversed, students vowed.

Protest organizers also said the ban was having an unforeseen side effect — the anger and resentment it generated has spurred educational efforts in the fight against the spread of AIDS.

The contraceptive ban was approved 5-4 by the Texas State University System Board of Regents on May 15.

The board governs Southwest Texas State and three other state universities — Angelo State in San Angelo, Sam Houston State in Huntsville and Sul Ross State in Alpine. The contraceptive ban took effect at all four schools.

The Southwest Texas State campus seemed awash in condoms and AIDS literature this week despite the ban.

A table at Friday's rally offered pamphlets on acquired immune deficiency syndrome and a grocery bag full of condoms donated by a San Antonio-based AIDS awareness group, the Tavern Guild AIDS Foundation.

Earlier in the week, about 300 condoms provided by a San Marcos family planning clinic were distributed on campus by Peace and Justice People, the student group that sponsored the rally.

"We got an unlimited supply of condoms — also T-shirts, caps and Frisbees" stamped with the company logo of the Rubber Ducky Condom Corp. of Dallas, said Peter Torres, 24, a senior and vice president of Lambda Chi.

"I think the regents took a step into the prehistoric past," Torres said. "We're throwing this party to protest (the contraceptive ban) and to raise awareness of the need to practice safe sex. We're almost in the 1990s and people are afraid to mention the word 'condoms.'"

Adell Hurst, who directs state and federally funded family planning clinics in San Marcos and in six other small cities surrounding Austin, said 178 students visited the clinic near the SWT campus in the first week of the fall semester, a 190-percent increase over the comparable period last year.

The clinic will provide educational materials on safe sex and contraception at the fraternity party, she said.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Today will be sunny, hot

From Staff and Wire Reports

No surprises are in store for weather-watchers, according to forecasters at the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

Today should by hot and sunny with a high in the mid-90s. Winds will be from the south at 10-15 mph.

Tonight will be clear with a low in the lower 60s. More of the same is predicted on Monday, as temperatures should climb to the upper 90s.

Monday will be sunny and hot.

The record high for Saturday was set 24 years ago, when the temperature reached 100, while the record low for today was set in 1935 when the mercury dipped to 51.

STATE

The weather was generally fair over most of Texas on Saturday, with a few showers near the Louisiana border in East Texas due to remnants of the tropical depression that was formerly Hurricane Florence.

Smoke from forest fires raging in western portions of the United States continued to linger in the mid to upper levels of the atmosphere over some portions of Texas.

The National Weather Service is predicting a chance of thunderstorms in northeast Texas for Sunday, but generally fair conditions are expected elsewhere.

NATION

The remains of hurricane Florence spread heavy rain over the South on Saturday, and a cold front ushered cool air and showers southward along the Rockies.

The center of what was left of Florence was over southwestern Mississippi drifting slowly towards the northwest, spreading showers and thunderstorms over Mississippi, Louisiana, Alabama and northwestern Florida.

A band of thunderstorms from the storm's remains produced heavy rain and severe weather over northwestern Florida and southern Alabama. A tornado touched down near Freeport, Fla., in Walton County, damaging some mobile homes, the National Weather Service said, and some bridges in Florida's Santa Rosa County were under water.

Rainfall totals over southern Alabama ranged from 2 to 6 inches, with more than 3.50 inches at Montgomery in 24 hours.

Tropical storm Gilbert was located in the eastern Caribbean about 400 miles southeast of Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic. It was expected to strengthen and move westward Sunday.

A cold front pushed across the northern Rockies and the area to the west, marking the leading edge of cooler air with showers and thunderstorms. Showers and thunderstorms were widely scattered over southwestern Montana and western Wyoming, an earea of severe forest fires. It was expected to push across sections of Nevada and Utah and drop temperatures 15 to 20 degrees below normal for this time of year.

For Sunday, scattered showers and thunderstorms were forecast over the Tennessee Valley, the lower Ohio Valley, most of Illinois, southeastern Missouri, and northern sections of the lower Mississippi Valley. A cold front was forecast to spread showers and some thunderstorms over the northern Plains, the northern Rockies, and northern sections of the central Rockies. Scattered thunderstorms were forecast over the southern half of Florida.

The Mammoth Hot Springs Inn, the last of the lodging facilities available in Yellowstone, was closed Friday. It had been scheduled to stay open for the season until Sept. 19.

The 650 residents of Gardiner, Mont., which is at the north entrance to Yellowstone and five miles north of Mammoth Hot Springs, stood ready to evacuate.

Jardine, Mont., a mining community of 100 to 150 people four miles from Gardiner, was evacuated Saturday because its only escape route was through a canyon to Gardiner, said Betty Schmitt of Gallatin National Forest in Montana.

A review of National Park Service policy on fighting wildfires will likely lead to changes after this year's devastating fires in the West, Hodel said.

"In light of what has happened, we recognize you simply fight every fire as hard as you can from the beginning," Hodel said to cheers from townspeople in the audience at a news conference in West Yellowstone, Mont.

"I think they'd have to" change, Hodel said of the Park Service's so-called "let burn" policy in which natural fires are allowed to burn except where they threaten lives or property.

In Washington state, the bodies of two men were recovered Saturday from the burned wreckage of a helicopter that disappeared Friday while fighting that state's largest forest fire, a 46,000-acre blaze, said Forest Service spokesman Greg Thayer. The craft was found near a ridgetop north of Wenatchee, and recovery teams had to ride helicopters to the top of the ridge and hike down.

Chelan County Sheriff Joe Collins said the HU-204 "Huey" helicopter apparently snagged its empty water bucket on some trees and crashed. Collins said the victims were believed to be Canadians.

The first death directly attributable to fires this year occurred last week in Glacier National Park in Montana, when a firefighter was struck by a falling, burning tree.

Miss Minnesota new Miss America

Carlson

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Miss Minnesota Gretchen Elizabeth Carlson, a self-assured performer who wants to be a Harvard-trained lawyer, on Saturday became the first classical violinist to win the Miss America crown in a close contest that needed two polls of the judges.

Miss Carlson erupted in tears as her name was announced. She laughed and cried as she took her victory walk along the runway at Convention Hall.

The first runner-up was Miss Colorado Maya Walker, 23, of Vail; the second runner-up was Miss Oklahoma Lori Lee Kelley, 23, of Clinton; the third runner-up was Miss California Marlise Sharleen Ricardos, 26, of San Pedro; and the fourth runner-up was Miss Alabama Jenny Lee Jackson, 21, of Auburn.

Miss Carlson, 22, of Anoka, is a senior at the prestigious Stanford University in California, majoring in organizational behavior. As part of her studies, she spent a semester at Oxford University in England. She plans to attend Harvard Law School.

The 5-foot-3, 108-pound Miss Carlson impressed judges with a spirited violin piece titled "Gypsy Airs." The piece started slow and moving, then jumped into a splashy, fast-paced beat.

But getting her name from the judges was not easy. As television host Gary Collins walked to the judge's area in front of the stage to learn who had won, he was told there was a tie.

In an affort to kill time, Collins nervously began making small talk with the contestants.

There was a flurry of activity in the judge's box.

Pageant Director Leonard Horn, sitting next to the judges, tapped his fingers on the edge of the stage as a discussion took place on what to do.

Eventually, a second poll of the judges resulted in Miss Carlson taking the coveted rhinestone-studded headpiece.

After winning a preliminary talent competition earlier in the week, Miss Carlson termed parts of her performance "exquisite" but vowed to do even better on the final night. She has studied the violin for 17 years.

For her performance, the brown-eyed blonde wore a black velvet gown with a sweetheart neckline with dramatic green lame-puffed sleeves and pleated layered skirts.

Miss Carlson, who prides herself on being 100 percent Swedish, had taken special pains during the week to highlight her heritage. At the Miss America parade on Tuesday, her hair and dress were decorated with a traditional garland of flowers.

However, for the evening gown competition, Miss Carlson chose a long-sleeved turquoise, beaded gown with a silver-beaded design on the bodice and back.

Horn, in his first year as the pageant's executive director, has stressed that the new Miss America will fit into a different mold than tradition previously held.

"Multi-faceted young women who are more than just physically attractive and talented" have become the ideal, he said. "These are dynamic young college women."

The new Miss America succeeds Miss America 1988 Kaye Lani Rae Rafko, 25, an outspoken nurse from Monroe, Mich., who has championed AIDS education and safe sex, and preferred to make charity appearances.

21 cattle killed in accident of tractor-trailer

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The driver of a 1980 Peterbilt received three traffic tickets Saturday after his tractor-trailer toting 84 cattle jack-knifed, killing 21 head.

Lawmen from the Odessa Fire Department, the Texas Department of Public Safety, the Ector County Sheriff's Department and the city of Odessa assisted in corralling wandering cattle and detouring traffic after the accident.

The driver, David Allen Roe, allegedly was speeding westbound on Interstate 20 outside of Odessa shortly before 8 a.m. when he veered off the highway's inside lane, said Odessa Police Sgt. Randy Clark.

When Roe, 27, attempted to get back on the road, his truck jackknifed, spilling the cattle onto the highway, Clark explained.

More than 30 volunteers from the area rushed to the scene to help herd the cattle and remove carcasses from the highway, Clark said.

The dead cattle were taken to the Odessa Landfill, while the survivors were transported to the Midland Livestock Yard, the police sergeant said.

Roe, a resident of Wauchula, Fla., received minor injuries and was treated and released at Medical Center Hospital in Odessa, Clark said.

He was ticketed for failure to drive in a single marked lane, having no liability insurance and for speeding, Clark said, though the report did not say how fast Roe was traveling.

No other vehicles were involved in the accident and Roe was alone in the cab, Clark said.

The police report said Roe was driving a truck owned by a family business, but did not say where the driver was transporting the cattle.

BOND

He said also that community improvements such as those proposed also have a positive impact on property values, which in recent years have been pounded by a soured economy.

"(Mayor) Carroll Thomas knows what's going on. It's not like he's not aware of the oil industry's problems. He knows this community is struggling...we're just hoping they (the public) make an informed decision," said Merritt.

So does Penny Angelo. As the committee's other co-chairman, Mrs. Angelo will be working hard this week to distribute brochures to get out the word on the bonds and just what they will cost in dollars and cents.

"The thing people don't understand is these (funds) are not going toward any operating fund...they're being used for capital improvements...I can't stress that enough."

John Fowler, president of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, says his organization has offered the volunteer group a helping hand to get the message out.

The chamber, with 1,800 members, represents about 75 percent of the employers in the city, according to Fowler. "Our board's endorsed it and we offered them as much assistance as they'll need."

Fowler, like Merritt, views passage of the bonds as a "vital ingredient" to Midland's future economic growth. "A number of these improvements have been put off long enough."

Parker Humes, president of KCRS/KWMJ radio and a pro-bond committee member agreed. "I just think we have a lot of things out there that need to be done before they get worse down the line...it's like that commercial, 'you can pay me now, or pay me later.'"

As for Stanley, besides drainage, he has a 9-year-old boy playing in the Midland baseball system. "Parks are important too...we've just about outgrown our other facilities. I know there's opposition out there, but I have a vested interest in this (election)."

MOVIE

Mrs. Rosen is working with as many as eight other law firms also connected with Highland.

"We are planning on instituting a suit," Mrs. Rosen said Friday, but she could not reveal details "as to where, when, why or how."

Mrs. Rosen had just returned from a federal court hearing for Galveston millionaire Shearn Moody Jr., whom Texas Monthly labeled "the sleaziest man in Texas" in an August 1987 cover story.

First threats of litigation in the McClure case came in April, when a five-member panel of prominent Midlanders recommended Interscope as the movie's producer.

Mayor Carroll Thomas had appointed the panel after a dispute between two groups of rescuers erupted over which company should make the film.

Larry Spivey, who shepherded Highland's hopes for production virtually from the day of Jessica's rescue, said Friday the company remains committed to the project. "They have about $150,000 invested so far," he pointed out.

However, "I wouldn't be involved in the film at all," he said, mentioning that his current status with Highland remains as a consultant "only for litigation purposes."

Spivey had told the Houston Chronicle in July that Highland is continuing negotiations with the McClure family, but Pete Snelson, spokesman for father and mother Chip and Cissy McClure, said Friday he doubted the assertion.

"From any knowledge I have of it and my checking, I haven't seen anything," Snelson said.

McClure attorney Darrell Smith of Midland said Thursday to protect their privacy he could not comment on matters relating to family negotiations.

Kander remains convinced that he has a firm commitment from the McClures to produce their story.

"When you do this and you invade somebody's privacy, you must have a release or an agreement with them," he said. "We do."

But the producer would not elaborate. "There's nothing more to say about that. The basis of the arrangement is not to be commented on to save their privacy and their feelings as well as ours," he said.

Chip McClure Friday acknowledged at least a tacit agreement for the family's cooperation. "We did say that we would go with the company that the panel recommended," he said.

Lost in the shuffle is the predicament of about 40 rescuers who had signed their portrayal rights over to Highland prior to the citizens panel's recommendation.

Said Kander: "We hope that nobody is prohibited from talking to us about their role, should we choose to do so. That would be a shame."

However, the rescuers' legal entanglement "in no way inhibits us at all, because there were so many people involved and so many points of view," Kander said.

"I think it's very sad," said Spivey of their situation.

Meanwhile, Kander will make the movie "as quickly as it can be made terrifically," he said.

"There is absolutely no snag whatsoever," he said. "Never was, never will be."

VERNA

"I don't think it belonged to the suspect," the investigator said firmly. "I believe there is someone who was there who saw something. But the initial stories were that the blue and white car was a suspect vehicle. That person surely wasn't going to say anything then. But I wish now I could talk to whoever it was."

Rogers is also bothered by the reluctance of two other persons, possible witnesses who lived at the nearby Airline Mobile Home Park. The persons, "who know who they are" have refused to talk to investigators.

"They don't want to get involved, they just don't want to," Rogers said. "Until something like this happens to you or someone you know, I guess some people don't want anything to do with it."

Sheriff Gary Painter said he shares Rogers' frustration with the Peace case.

"We're holding out hope it will eventually be solved," Painter said. "It's going to take some more time."

Painter said investigators have "one or two" people that "have not been ruled out" of involvement in the shooting.

"These people we feel know more than has been answered," the sheriff said.

Painter declined to comment on the whereabouts of the suspects, and declined to say if they were from the Midland area.

Rogers said he feels there are more than "one or two" possible suspects.

Months ago, Rogers sent all information about the Peace killing to the Violent Criminal Apprehension Program (VICAP), a computer network run by the FBI. The network seeks to match similar crimes which may have occurred in different parts of the country.

"I did get a letter saying they had received it," Rogers said. "But so far it hasn't hit on anything. I call them every once in a while just to check."

Every once in a while, the idea to drop the case crosses Rogers' mind because the leads have run out.

"I don't want to — as a matter of fact I can't give up on it," he said. "I feel especially bad for the family, because they are the ones who are suffering the most.

"There have been times when I thought I was there, that I really had something," he continued. "This thing has eaten my lunch. It's the only time I've had an unsolved homicide."

Painter said the case will never be closed, since the statute of limitations on murder does not expire. Like Rogers, the sheriff is especially anxious to find out who shot Ms. Peace.

"Here, you've got someone who died for less than $200, and there's a killer loose," he said.

The $10,000 reward still stands, according to both officers.

STATE IN BRIEF

Cavazos urges U.S. to care about education

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lauro F. Cavazos says it's time the nation "start caring" about the educational needs of all citizens, and is promising to put the focus on the issue if confirmed as the next education secretary.

"I know this won't be turned around in a decade. We can't wait any longer, we've waited too long," Cavazos told the Senate Labor and Human Relations Committee as it considered his nomination Friday to replace outgoing Secretary William J. Bennett.

If sworn in, Cavazos would become the first Hispanic member of a president's Cabinet.

Cavazos appeared headed for an easy confirmation, with senators praising the son of a King Ranch cattle foreman who went on to become president of Texas Tech University. He became the first Hispanic and the first graduate of the school in Lubbock to hold the post with his selection in 1980.

"He is eminently qualified for this appointment with considerable experience in higher education," said Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I. "And in view of the fact that he has 10 children between the ages of 21 and 31, he has also had a central investment in elementary and secondary education."

Woman seeks annulment

HOUSTON (AP) — The woman married to convicted embezzler Steven Riley Haldey is seeking to have the couple's marriage annulled, claiming her husband defrauded her by concealing his identity and criminal past.

In a state district lawsuit filed Friday under her maiden name, Roxy Anne Alden said when she married Hadley in April 1984, she knew him as Richard Glen Finley.

The lawsuit says she would not have married Hadley if she had known his background.

She has said that it was not until this April — when police arrested her husband at their suburban home — that she learned about his true past.

The 41-year-old Hadley pleaded guilty in June to embezzling $1.1 million from an Iowa credit union where he worked in 1983. He carried the money out of the credit union in three cardboard boxes and fled to Texas, leaving behind a wife and three children. His wife in Iowa has divorced him.

Error may have cost millions

FORT WORTH (AP) — American Airlines Inc. may have lost more than $50 million because of a mistake programmed into its computerized reservations system.

The airline's chairman told industry analysts this week that faulty computer software mistakenly restricted the sale of American's discount tickets, probably driving price-conscious travelers to competitors.

Analysts who met in New York with Robert Crandall, American's chairman, president and chief executive officer, said the revenue loss was due to a foul-up in the airline's yield-management system.

"(Crandall) said that early in the second quarter they had implemented a new software program, which appears to have backfired," said an analyst who asked not to be named.

The airline uses computers to determine how many seats on an airplane should be sold at various price levels, squeezing the greatest possible revenue out of each ticket sold.

Museum adds up losses

GRAND PRAIRIE (AP) — Losses from a fire that destroyed the Wax Museum of the Southwest may total $4 million, but many ruined items are irreplaceable, officials say.

Among the items destroyed along with 300 wax figures in Friday's fire was the dress worn by Judge Sarah T. Hughes when she swore in Lyndon B. Johnson after President Kennedy was assassinated in 1963.

New Dallas police chief fires 5 officers

DALLAS (AP) — Five Dallas police officers were fired and a sixth was suspended for three days by Chief Mack Vines Friday. Two of the officers were fired for drug violations.

The cases were unrelated, and Vines said that in each case he followed the disciplinary recommendations made by internal affairs and the officers' superiors.

In another development, Vines said he is considering reforms that would create formal reviews of every incident in which an officer uses force, and require some officers to undergo psychological testing.

Vines also said he will review the department's deadly force policy.

One of the possible policy changes would bring increased scrutiny of officers' use of force, which some community leaders have criticized as excessive.

Vines, who has been chief of the 2,300-member department since Aug. 22, said he would like to adopt a standard report that officers would be required to fill out each time they use force.

Among the dismissals from the force, were Stephen Bragg, whose superiors said had a prescription drug problem. In May, he voluntarily entered a rehabilitation program in Tennessee, officials said.

In the other drug-related dismissal, officer Gregory Davis, 31, told internal affairs officers he had trouble getting to work on time because he was addicted to cocaine.

A third officer, Stephen C. Coussens, 31, was fired for lying about how he lost his Dallas Police Department badge and city identification card, officials said. An internal investigation was begun when the manager of an adult bookstore notified police that he had found Coussens' property in his store on July 14.

Another officer also was fired for filing a false report. Officer E.J. Jaxon, 41, filed a grievance with superiors stating that one of his supervisors had yelled at him when he called in to report that he would miss work because he was ill.

Investigators determined that Jaxon, who had received numerous disciplinary actions previously, misrepresented the incident.

The fifth officer dismissed Friday, George Finley, 33, repeatedly had reported police property lost or stolen.

Police executed a search warrant at his parents' house in Irving and recovered nine Dallas police department badges, handcuffs, belts, holsters, uniform shirts and trousers.

Weight Loss Pill Approved for U.S. gov't. Patent

'Lazy Way' to Lose Weight Already Sweeping U.S.

BEVERLY HILLS, CA (Special)—An exclusive hard-to-get U.S. government approval for a patent has just been given to two prominent doctors, who after years of research, have developed and perfected an amazing new weight loss pill process at a world famous hospital in Los Angeles that reportedly "guarantees" that you can lose unhealthy fat and reduce calories by simply taking their tested and proven new pill.

You Can "Eat Normally"

Best of all, "you can continue to eat your favorite foods and you don't have to change your normal eating habits or exercise. You can start losing fat and reduce calories from the very first day, until you achieve the ideal weight you desire".

Gov't. Approves Patent Claims

The doctors newly approved claims for a U.S. government patent confirms that "there has never been anything like it before." It's a major scientific breakthrough for weight loss.

Flushes Fat Out of Body

The new pill is appropriately called the "fat-magnet" pill because it breaks into thousand of particles, each acting like a tiny magnet, "attracting" and trapping many times its size in undigested fat particles and calories from food that you have just eaten. Then, all the trapped fat and calories are naturally "flushed" right out of your body because they cannot be absorbed.

Within 2 days you should notice a change in the color of your stool, caused by the fat particles being eliminated.

"Automatically" Lose Fat

According to one of the inventors, Dr. William Shell, heart specialist and associate professor of medicine at UCLA medical school, the new fat-bonding process is a "lazy way" to lose weight because the pills alone "automatically" reduce calories by eliminating dietary fat. It is 100% safe and not a drug."

The fat-magnet pills are already sweeping the country with glowing reports of weight loss from formerly overweight people in all walks of life who are now slimmer, trimmer and more attractive again.

Now Available to the Public

If you are trying to lose 20, 50, 100 pounds or more, you can order your supply of these "no-risk" highly successful fat-magnet pills directly from the doctors' exclusive manufacturer only (includes optional calorie-reduction plan for even better results). Send $20 for a 90 pill supply (+$3 handling), or $35 for a 180 pill supply (+$3 handling), to: Fat-Magnet, 9016 Wilshire Blvd., Dept. W841, Beverly Hills, CA 90211. (Unconditional money-back guarantee if not 100% satisfied.) Visa, MasterCard and American Express OK. (Send card number, expire date, and signature.) # Hurricane moves inland, causes little damage

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The remnants of Hurricane Florence pushed into Mississippi Saturday as thousands of Gulf Coast residents returned home, happy to find little damage from 80 mph winds and sheets of rain.

"I was expecting to see my little trailer gone. It isn't tied down or anything," Bill Gibson, 58, said as he hauled away a 12-foot-long branch that had fallen from a tree next to his undamaged trailer house in Venice, near the mouth of the Mississippi River.

One death — that of an Alabama man who drowned Friday trying to secure a boat against the rising winds — was linked to the storm, which was downgraded to a tropical depression by dawn Saturday.

"All we lost was a good night's sleep," said Wade Guice, civil defense director for Harrison County, Miss. "This storm fizzled out. The hurricane didn't come."

Florence hit on the 23rd anniversary of Hurricane Betsy's 1965 landfall but packed little of Betsy's punch. Betsy killed more than 70 people in Louisiana and did an estimated $1.1 billion in damage.

Damage estimates for Florence were unavailable but appeared to be relatively minor.

Crews from the Louisiana Office of Emergency Preparedness went out Saturday to assess the damage and start cleaning up, said state police Trooper Paul Wood.

Sheriff's deputies said property damage appeared to be minimal and limited mainly to downed power lines that knocked out electricity to 115,000 or more homes and businesses.

Thousands of people ordered to leave homes in nine parishes Friday returned home when Florence dropped from hurricane to tropical storm. They found several broken branches and a few bent or broken signs.

"We were expecting the worst and hoping for the best, and we got the best out of it," said Larry Ciko, a spokesman for the sheriff's office in St. Tammany Parish, across Lake Pontchartrain from New Orleans.

A tornado was reported in neighboring Tangipahoa Parish, and the National Weather Service warned that more were possible in Mississippi and Alabama as the tropical depression moved east.

Winds unleashed by Florence never reached the 100 mph that had been feared.

Bill Tregre, a spokesman for the two companies which supply electricity to most of south Louisiana, said the storm cut power to about 70,000 Louisiana Power & Light Co. customers and about 33,000 customers of New Orleans Public Service Inc. Nearly 40,000 remained without power by noon.

Ciko said Central Louisiana Electric Co. officials told him that 12,000 to 14,000 customers were without power at the height of the storm.

Although the storm was expected to bring 5 to 10 inches of rain, less than 2 inches was reported around most of southeast Louisiana.

"The fast movement of the storm kept a lid on the rains," said a weather service meteorologist.

Environmental groups defend government's firefighting policies

WASHINGTON (AP) — Major environmental groups, some of them no friends of the Reagan administration, have jumped to the defense of federal forest firefighting policies attacked by some western members of Congress.

Sen. Malcolm Wallop, R-Wyo., last week suggested that William Penn Mott, director of the National Park Service, be fired for following a "let it burn" policy in Yellowstone National Park.

Environmental spokesmen compared Wallop to "Alice in Wonderland," accused him of grandstanding and called his suggestion ridiculous.

Members of Congress who lead the committees overseeing the parks, also heavily critical of the administration at times, defended the firefighting policy.

"I applaud the president and the secretary (of the interior) for standing firm" against Wallop's suggestion, said Paul Pritchard, president of the National Parks and Conservation Association and a critic who has rarely applauded them for anything.

"Those who jump up in the midst of a major catastrophe and cry bloody murder and 'Off with their heads' remind me of Alice in Wonderland," Pritchard said.

Interior Secretary Donald P. Hodel, one of the three-member inspection team sent by President Reagan to Yellowstone over the weekend, has called the firefighting policy a "disaster."

The "disaster" remark was clearly intended as "hindsight," said spokesman Alan Levitt, and Hodel stands by an earlier statement that what the park service and other agencies "need now is our understanding of the difficulties they face and our support."

The Park Service since 1972 has followed a so-called "let it burn" policy which fights forest fires caused by humans and natural fires that threaten human lives and property, but lets most natural fires burn for the benefits they bring to forest regeneration.

A century of fuel buildup from suppressing fires — Yellowstone was declared a park in 1872 — are worsening fires today, some suggested.

"There's been a lot of inaccurate information passed around," said Tim Mahoney of the Sierra Club. Because of the drought, "These fires are going to get away from you no matter what the policy is."

Sen. Dale Bumpers, D-Ark., chairman of the national parks subcommittee of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, toured Yellowstone in August.

"I don't mind telling you I was glad to get out of there" because of the fire danger and the fuel buildup, said Bumpers on Friday. "There were as many trees on the ground as there were standing."

"The fire management policies of the Park Service and the Forest Service are sound, flexible and scientifically based. We support them," said a statement by George Frampton, president of the Wilderness Society.

Referring to Hodel's "disaster" remark, Wilderness Society spokesman Ben Beach said, "I thinking he's hanging Mott out to dry...Mott has been one of the bright spots in an awful record."

"We think the calls for Mott to resign are ridiculous," said Robert SanGeorge, spokesman for the National Audubon Society in New York.

"Though we don't favor letting people's houses burn down, we're concerned that (calling for Mott's dismissal) would be the popular thing to do to respond to people who are concerned about their property," SanGeorge said. "Politics should not intrude on biology."

Yellowstone Superintendent "Bob Barbee oughtn't be made a scapegoat, and Bill Mott oughtn't be made a scapegoat," Bumpers said.

"Are you going to fire (Forest Service chief) Dale Robertson? The Forest Service fought every fire. There are fires burning out of control in Washington State right now (on Forest Service land)," Bumpers said. "There are some places where Mother Nature takes control and man just can't do anything."

60,000 gallons of crude gush into LA street

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Up to 60,000 gallons of crude oil from a burst underground oil line gushed down a busy suburban street into sewers and the Los Angeles River Saturday, officials said.

The break in the Mobil Oil Co. pipe closed Ventura Boulevard in the Encino area and exits from the Ventura Freeway. The line broke about 4:30 a.m. and leaked down streets in a half-mile radius, said police Sgt. Frank Guarino.

Mobil spokesman Jim Carbonetti said the company hired contractors to vacuum oil off the streets into trucks, sand oil-stained curbs and steam-clean and hose down Ventura Boulevard.

The cause of the break was unknown, Carbonetti said. A similar incident 2½ years ago in Granada Hills was caused by corrosion.

An operator at Mobil's Torrance plant shut down the pipe four minutes after a drop in pressure was noticed, he said. Automatic controls would have shut down the pipe a few minutes later, he added.

The leak in the pipe, which spans 180 miles from Bellridge to Torrance, will have no significant effect on the company's operations, he said.

Carbonetti said the company sent representatives through the affected neighborhood to take damage claims from residents and businesses.

Six barriers were placed in the river to prevent crude oil from reaching the ocean, he said.

Officials did not know how much oil seeped into the river through sewers, Fire Department spokesman Jim Williamson said.

A police hazardous materials team notified county health officials but determined the spill posed no danger and did not require evacuations, Guarino said.

Reserve and traffic officers spent the day diverting traffic.

Annual party celebrates man's disappearance

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Everyone showed up but the guest of honor, as friends and former colleagues of an aircraft engineer who went to lunch one day and never came back held their annual party on his behalf.

Members of the crowd that gathered at Tequila Willie's Saloon & Grill in trendy Manhattan Beach on Friday said the disappearance seven years ago of Ed Greer symbolized rebellion against the corporate world.

Richard Connett, Greer's old boss at the Hughes Aircraft Co., said others, himself included, have sometimes thought of disappearing when the pressures of family and job began to get to them. But Ed really did it.

"Hughes is full of very straight-laced people," said Sherry McCulloh, Greer's former secretary. "He is the anomaly. There is a little bizarreness in all of us."

Meanwhile, party-goers wore "Ed" masks, and, borrowing the "Where was George?" catch phrase from this year's Democratic National Convention, asked, "Where is Ed?"

Greer, an electronics engineer still in his early 30s and already on the fast track at Hughes, cleaned out his files on Sept. 9, 1981, and disappeared a day later, leaving behind a wife of 12 years and two young sons.

Hughes officials found his car one day later, with his wallet and clothing inside, near the beach in Venice.

But the theory that he drowned quickly evaporated when another Hughes employee reported spotting Greer, dressed in jeans, at Los Angeles International Airport around midnight the day he disappeared.

Planned layoffs force Yonkers to accept desegregation plan

YONKERS, N.Y. (AP) — Faced with $1 million-a-day fines and layoffs of hundreds of municipal workers, the City Council approved a court-ordered housing desegregation plan Saturday after two members switched their votes.

As an emotional crowd looked on, the council approved the plan by a 5-2 vote about 1:30 a.m., after a month in which escalating fines for refusing to endorse the plan threatened the state's fourth-largest city with bankruptcy.

Secretary of State Gail Shaffer, head of the state board that took control of the city's finances, suspended the layoffs of 447 city employees after the vote.

"This morning, the healing process begins," she said. "A new chapter in the history of Yonkers can and must begin."

Gov. Mario Cuomo said the council "did the right thing."

Two of the four councilmen who had long opposed the plan voted for it after city officials negotiated a modified plan with the NAACP that would mix some of the low-income units ordered by the court with more expensive ones.

City officials planned to ask U.S. District Judge Leonard Sand to adopt the modified plan in place of his original order, which he had enforced with fines that hit $1 million a day Friday.

The vote came as opposition to Sand's plan was starting to wane. Uncollected garbage sits outside many homes, children went to school without crossing guards, and the three town libraries were scheduled to close.

"In the past, we have thought of those fines somewhat in the abstract...The abstract has now become a reality," said Councilman Nicholas Longo, one of those who changed his vote. "The thing that most affected me was looking over a list of people who at the stroke of midnight would become unemployed."

Longo and Peter Chema, the other councilman who switched, prefaced their vote with long speeches in which they noted that Sand had said he would not agree to any changes in the plan unless the council first approved it unchanged.

One woman yelled "You little snake!" at Chema, while another man screeched at Mayor Nicholas Wasicsko, "You sold us out, Nicky! We'll remember!" The mayor also voted for the plan.

After the vote, about 100 spectators noisily filed out of the council chamber, some cheering, some cursing.

"I think they sold our constitutional rights out," yelled Walter Roland. Another resident, Michael Duffy, said, "It's wonderful for the city of Yonkers to be in compliance and following the law."

The fines had started at $100 and doubled each day, reaching a cumulative total of more than $1.6 million paid through Thursday.

The desegregation lawsuit was brought by the Justice Department in 1980 and joined by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Dukakis, Bentsen turn up heat on Bush campaign

Associated Press

Democrat Michael Dukakis and running mate Lloyd Bentsen turned up the heat Saturday in a get-tough campaign against Republican George Bush, who buoyantly prepared for a cross-country tour of industrial states rich in electoral votes.

Dukakis, spending the weekend in Boston, accused several of the vice president's closest aides of using the White House as a "back door for foreign lobbyists" and declared that "in a Dukakis White House, the staff will pledge allegiance to only one flag — Old Glory."

Preceding Bush to Los Angeles, Bentsen inspected evidence of gang violence — guns, knives and a bullet-riddled car — which he said had increased during the Reagan administration. Bentsen said Bush had led the wa against drugs as vice president and "blew it badly."

The GOP nominee, elated by an eight-point lead over Dukakis in public opinion polls, relaxed at his Washington home this weekend before leaving Monday for appearances in New Jersey, Illinois, Missouri, California and Ohio.

Bush also planned to announce the formation of a national security advisory task force including former Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, former U.N. ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick, former national security adviser Brent Scowcroft and Zbigniew Brzezinski, who was President Carter's national security adviser.

"I mean to win this election," Bush said repeatedly last week. And Dukakis finally heeded his worried supporters' pleas to take a more combative, aggressive stance against Bush.

The Democratic nominee stepped up the attack at a news conference Saturday in which he denounced the vice president for employing three senior advisers who also are partners in a Washington lobbying firm hired by the government of the Bahamas to improve its image among Reagan administration officials.

Dukakis released a memo by the firm of Charles R. Black, Paul J. Manafort and Roger J. Stone which boasted of the company's influence inside the administration and listed more than a dozen contacts in Bush's office.

The firm received $800,000 in 1985 and 1986 from the Bahamian government. The Bahamian prime minister, Lynden O. Pindling, long as been suspected of involvement with drug traffickers.

"The measure of a president is the quality and the integrity of the people with whom he surrounds himself," Dukakis said. "The American people have the right to know that the back door of the White House will not be the front door for paid agents of foreign governments. In a Dukakis White House, there will be no back doors for foreign lobbyists."

Dukakis referred to other campaign aides who reportedly have been sympathetic to Nazis and Nazi organizations, including Jerome Brentar, who resigned as co-chairman of a Bush campaign organization for ethnic groups when it was disclosed that he once defended convicted Nazi war criminal John Demjanjuk.

"I think it says a great deal about that campaign," Dukakis said. "It says a great deal about the judgment of Mr. Bush."

Dukakis also twitted Bush, as president of the Senate, for never proposing that senators recite the Pledge of Allegiance as part of their legislative business.

That comment, and his reference to pledging allegiance to only one flag, was the nominee's response to Bush's frequent criticism of Dukakis for vetoing a state bill aimed at requiring public school teachers to lead their classes in reciting the pledge. Dukakis says he was advised that the bill was unconstitutional.

Bentsen toured the Los Angeles County Sheriff's "Operation Safe Streets" program in the Carson area, a major site of violent gang activities, and took the occasion to blast Bush's role in the administration's anti-drug campaign.

"The ultimate irony of the Reagan-Bush popgun war on drugs is the role of the vice president," the Texas senator said. "They asked him to lead the battle, and he blew it badly."

Bentsen's GOP counterpart, Dan Quayle, relaxed at his home in the Virginian suburbs of Washington.

Most teachers feel left out of decision making

NEW YORK (AP) — Except for choosing texts and shaping the curriculum, most teachers feel left out of critical decisions affecting classroom life, according to a nationwide poll released Saturday.

Ten percent or fewer of 21,698 public school teachers surveyed by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching felt they had any say in issues like teacher evaluation or selection of new teachers and administrators. Just 20 percent believed they were influential in tailoring school budgets.

"The report endorses what I have often said — that teachers are treated like very tall children instead of professionals," said Mary Hatwood Futrell, president of the National Education Association, the nation's largest teacher union with 1.9 million members.

On the positive side, 79 percent of those surveyed said they felt involved in choosing textbooks and instructional materials, and 63 percent said they had a say in shaping the curriculum.

A report on the results, "Teacher Involvement in Decisionmaking: A State-by-State Profile," revealed wide disparities in the degree of involvement teachers felt in different states.

In Vermont, for example, 93 percent of teachers reported a high level of involvement in choosing textbooks, 85 percent said they helped shape the curriculum, and 50 percent said they were involved in setting student promotion policies.

But only 63 percent of Louisiana teachers said they helped choose texts, 40 percent said they were involved in shaping the curriculum, 36 percent had a say in tracking students into special classes, and just 1 percent felt they had influence in selecting new teachers.

"The evidence shows that in many matters that are important to building a good school, teachers have not been very much involved," foundation president Ernest L. Boyer said in an interview.

Boyer said school reformers must find a middle ground, a way to involve teachers while maintaining a sensible monitoring and support role for state education officials.

"America's school reform movement is at a crossroads," he said in a forward to the report. "During the past five years, academic requirements have been tightened, standards have been raised, but most of the mandates for reform have been imposed top-down, and we're beginning to discover that outside regulation has its limits."

The 50-state teacher survey was conducted by mail in the spring of 1987 by the Wirthlin Group, a polling organization in McLean, Va. The poll had a margin of error of less than plus or minus 1 percent for nationwide findings.

Among other results:

— 47 percent of all surveyed said they felt involved in setting standards of student conduct. The range was 68 percent among Oregon teachers to 37 percent in Florida, New Jersey and Rhode Island.

— 45 percent reported having influence in tracking students into special classes. The high was Minnesota at 63 percent; Louisiana was the lowest at 36 percent.

— 43 percent said they had a say in designing programs for staff development. Oklahoma was highest at 82 percent; Rhode Island was lowest at 30 percent.

— 34 percent said they influenced policies governing which students were promoted or held back. Vermont teachers reported the most involvement at 50 percent, Florida the least at 21 percent.

— 20 percent said they influenced the school budget. Hawaii teachers had a 57 percent positive response, while the low was 8 percent in North Dakota.

— 10 percent felt involved in evaluating teacher performance. Georgia and Utah led with 20 percent, while Florida, Nevada, New Jersey and Rhode Island were tied at 6 percent.

— 7 percent said they had a hand in selecting new teachers. Colorado, New Hampshire and Oregon tied at 20 percent, and Louisiana teachers reported the least involvement at 1 percent.

— 7 percent felt involved in picking new administrators. Vermont had the highest positive response at 20 percent, Nevada the lowest at 1 percent.

Janitor who claimed lotto ticket arrested

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — A janitor who convinced thousands he had won the nation's largest Lotto jackpot has been arrested and charged with two felony fraud counts, the Florida Lottery Department said.

Lottery security agents arrested Charles Hill at his home in Bristol Friday and booked him into the Leon County Jail in Tallahassee.

Hill, a father of five who earns $14,000 a year as a janitor at Bristol Elementary School, claimed to have the winning ticket in the Sept. 3 Lotto drawing that was worth $55.1 million.

Liberty County sheriff's deputies were sent to guard Hill's home Monday after he made his claim.

Postmaster hopes family histories will take root

WASHINGTON (AP) — Postmaster General Anthony Frank wants to bring America's generations closer together, and if that brings the Post Office a little extra business he won't mind.

"Plant a Family Tree" is the name of Frank's plan, in which millions of family history forms will be given out, in hopes that youngsters will write to their grandparents seeking information to fill them out.

"Letters provide an important link between families. Grandparents often meet their grandchildren through an exchange of letters and photographs long before they see each other face-to-face," Frank said.

But it isn't just a business proposition, says Frank. He could generate more business by concentrating on big advertisers and catalog companies.

"The Postal Service is part of the fabric of American life. We do more than deliver the mail. We deliver ideas and dreams and help preserve our heritage," he says.

As part of the family tree program the Postal Service has printed millions of folders which discuss family histories on one side and contain a genealogical form on the back to fill in information on parents, grandparents and great-grandparents.

The forms will be available, free, in post offices by the first week in October.

Eastern axes 4,000 jobs

MIAMI (AP) — Money-losing Eastern Airlines eliminated 4,000 more jobs Saturday in the "downsizing" it says it needs to survive, but the unions charged that the cutbacks are actually making the airline less competitive.

The cuts, which are being contested in court by the unions, reduced Eastern's workforce to fewer than 30,000. Less than four years ago, it had 42,000 workers.

Eastern eliminated 12 percent of its routes two weeks ago, ending service to 14 cities.

Laid-off workers with seniority can transfer to other cities, "bumping" newer employees out of their jobs. Thus, newer employees could take the brunt of the layoffs when the bumping is complete.

The mood around work gates was sullen.

"We've had very few who have already gotten their layoff notices, but we've heard there are about 80 who have shown intentions of bumping," said Don Boyd, a union chief steward representing ramp agents. "So a lot of these people don't know what to expect."

Rights activists honored

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass. (AP) — Civil rights activists who worked together in the 1960s were honored at a reunion Saturday for a struggle that one said is "not for one day, or one week, or one year, but for a lifetime."

Rep. John Lewis, D-Ga., former chairman of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, received an honorary doctorate at a convocation opening Williams College's 196th academic year, along with Rosa L. Parks, whose refusal to surrender her seat to a white passenger on a Montgomery, Ala., bus sparked the modern civil rights movement.

Parks received a standing ovation from the audience of 1,000 students, faculty and administrators.

Others also were honored, including the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, former president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, and Charlayne Hunter-Gault, the first black woman at the University of Georgia and now a public television news correspondent.

Perry's ship returns to Erie

ERIE, Pa. (AP) — Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry's brigantine Niagara returned to the Great Lakes on Saturday, exactly 175 years after his fleet defeated the British in the Battle of Lake Erie.

"We are starting a new page in Pennsylvania's history, and you all are a part of it," Gov. Robert Casey told an estimated 5,000 people gathered for the launching ceremony.

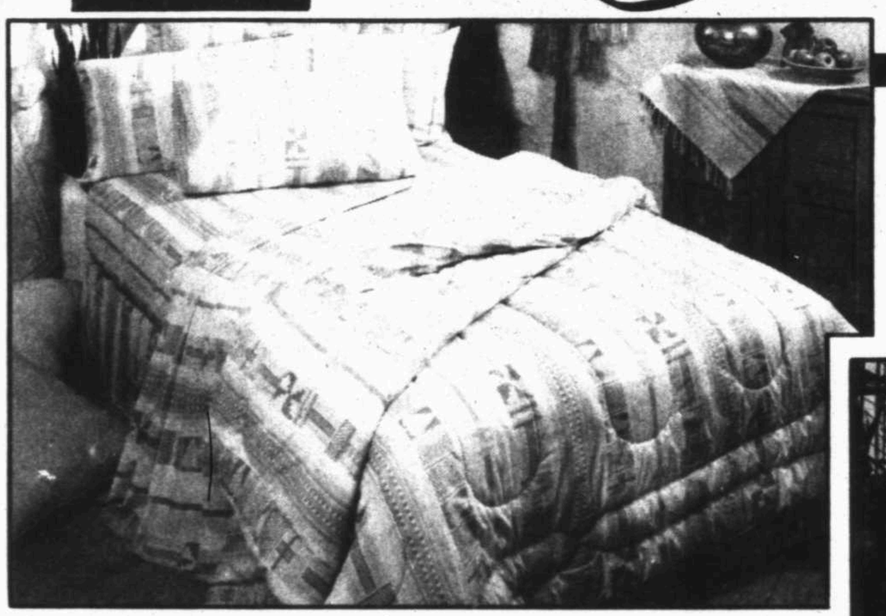

Casey's wife, Ellen, lifted a bottle of Erie County wine and struck the 182-foot, 278-ton restored ship, bedecked with the American flag and Perry's battle flag, "Don't Give Up the Ship." The bottle didn't break, however, and she had to strike the ship again, this time successfully.

Shortly afterward, a crane lifted the ship into Lake Erie's Presque Isle Bay.

Chinese happy with satellite agreement

SHANGHAI, China (AP) — Defense Secretary Frank C. Carlucci Saturday wrapped up his visit to China, leaving the Chinese happy about a U.S. decision that could permit Chinese rockets to launch U.S. satellites.

Carlucci also said he was satisfied that the Chinese would exercise prudence in their arms sales to the Middle East and other areas of the world.

Carlucci said he conveyed the U.S. decision about satellites to National Defense Minister Qin Jiwei.

"He was most pleased with that," Carlucci told reporters at the Wusong Naval Facility in Shanghai.

The Reagan administration Friday announced it would give export licenses for satellites manufactured by Hughes Aircraft that are scheduled to be launched for Australian and Hong Kong companies with China's Long March rocket.

The decision must be approved by the U.S. Congress and a group of Western allies that monitor high-technology transfers.

Hong Kong-based AsiaSat is to put a satellite in orbit next year, while AusSat from Australia will launch two satellites in 1991 and 1992 using the Chinese service.

Carlucci said he had recommended to Washington that the licenses be approved.

Burmese president says ruling party will give up monopoly on power

RANGOON, Burma (AP) — President Maung Maung Saturday bowed to massive pro-democracy protests and announced that the ruling party would relinquish its 26-year monopoly on power and hold multiparty elections.

But key opposition leaders pressed for more political concessions, including an interim government to cope with Burma's growing chaos.

Sporadic demonstrations continued in downtown Rangoon after the government declaration. Uniformed policemen led by their own marching band joined the protesters for the first time. Friday, about 500 soldiers joined protesters in the first major defection of troops to the opposition.

Millions of people have taken to the streets since March to call for democracy in Burma.

Speaking before 968 delegates at a special party congress, Maung Maung acknowledged that the party made major errors and said the interests of the people were paramount.

"Power corrupts, and absolute power corrupts absolutely," he said in a speech carried by the state-owned Radio Rangoon. "As members of the ruling party for a long period, they tended to forget the interests of the people and lose public confidence."

The Western-trained lawyer pledged fair and free elections as soon as possible, but he gave no firm date. He said he would not be a candidate.

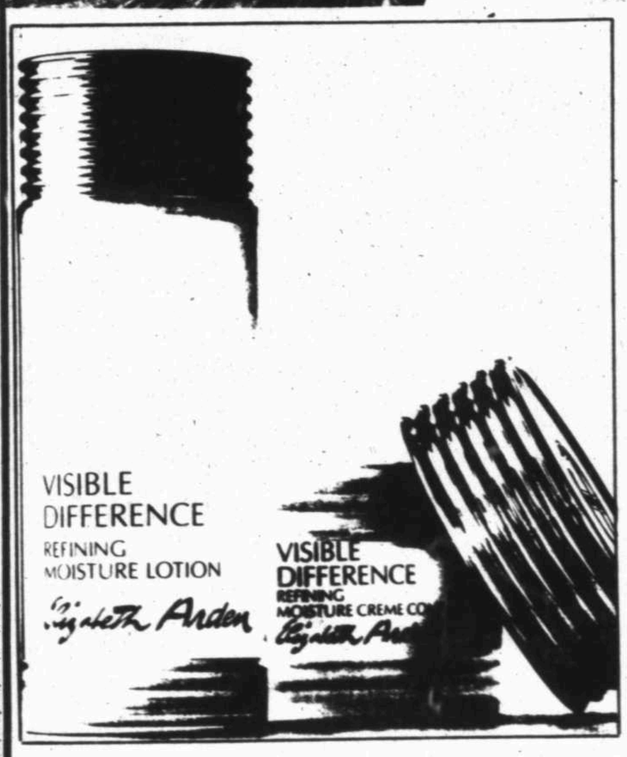

The broadcast announcer said the decision was unanimously adopted by the delegates of the Burma Socialist Program Party. Maung Maung said an emergency session of the Parliament today would make necessary amendments to the constitution to adopt the multiparty system and to form an independent commission to supervise the elections.

He urged government employees, who have gone on strike in sympathy with the massive pro-democracy movement, to return to their jobs and revive his stalled government.

The government move was another retreat in face of the sometimes bloody nationwide uprising. The movement has prompted the resignation of two hard-line presidents, the lifting of martial law and virtually unimpeded political activities that earlier would have drawn long prison terms or worse.

Western observers noted that the anti-government surge came without any outside support.

Walesa, Solidarity leaders demand end to reprisals

GDANSK, Poland (AP) — Lech Walesa and other Solidarity leaders Saturday demanded an end to government reprisals against workers who went on strike and said authorities should be prepared to consider legalizing the labor group.

Walesa, key Solidary advisers and other activists gathered in a Roman Catholic Church to plan their strategy for talks with authorities on the future of the outlawed labor movement.

They issued a statement late Saturday saying they wanted confirmation that authorities are prepared to "create conditions" for legalizing Solidarity, which was suspended in 1981 and subsequently outlawed.

The weekend conference is one of the largest gatherings of the Polish opposition in years.

The meeting Saturday included Solidarity regional leaders and strike committee members, and a gathering today is to include intellectuals and cultural figures who advise Solidarity founder Walesa.

The group is meeting to discuss the communist government's offer to enter negotiations. On Aug. 31, authorities agreed to open talks and Walesa agreed to end a 19-day wave of strikes.

Andrzej Stelmachowski, a Roman Catholic intellectual acting as a mediator between the government and opposition, said he expected the gpvermment-Solidarity talks would begin in the middle of the week. Diplomatic sources said they were told the meeting would begin Sept. 15.

At the end of Saturday's meeting the Solidarity leadership released a statement saying: "We expect a clear expression by the Polish authorities of readiness to create conditions for legal functioning of Solidarity.

"Only the legalization of Solidarity allows the effective participation of the union in reforming the country."

The statement also demanded an end to reprisals against workers who had participated in strikes.

Actions such as detentions, firings and induction of strike participants into the military "impair the credibility of the authorities' proposals," it said. "We expect an immediate end to repressions."

Union activists have reported about 350 miners were fired following strikes in the coal region of southern poland and dozens of other workers received army draft notices.

Solidarity sources, speaking with the condition of anonymity, said the statement should not be considered an ultimatum and the round-table talks could begin even without official gestures.

Tadeusz Mazowiecki, an adviser to Walesa, said Solidarity wanted a signal from authorities that the talks could be held "in serious conditions with a chance for success."

Mazowiecki said Walesa and representatives of four regional strike committees would represent Solidarity at the talks with the government.

Attending the meeting were the 15-member national executive commission of Solidarity, representatives of strike committees during the Aug. 16-Sept. 3 wave of strikes and members of the inter-factory strike committees.

Among the 40 participants were solidarity advisers such as Jacek Kuron, Adam Michnik and Zbigniew Romaszewski.

Nearby in another church, leaders of the banned Independent Students Association met and drafted a statement in support of Solidarity.

"I'm surprised by the way these people are prepared," Walesa said during a break in the session.

"There are a lot of fighting people who I expected to represent their fighting manner. And I am surprised by their great feeling of responsibility and great wisdom, especially among the young people."

Nablus curfew imposed

JERUSALEM (AP) — The army imposed a curfew Saturday in the West Bank's largest city after a Palestinian was fatally stabbed and Israeli troops wounded 14 Arabs in a series of clashes, the military and hospital officials said.

Residents in Nablus said the stabbing victim, 35-year-old Athad Abu Ghosh, may have been killed by fellow Arabs for allegedly collaborating with Israeli authorities.

His death early Saturday brought to 262 the number of Palestinians killed since the uprising began Dec. 8 in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, which Israel seized from Jordan and Egypt in the 1967 Middle East war. Five Israelis also have been slain.

In Gaza City, one Palestinian was killed and three were wounded Saturday when a bomb was thrown at their car, the army said. It reported the attack involved a feud between families and was not linked to the anti-Israeli uprising.

Hospital officials said Israeli troops firing regular bullets wounded four Palestinians in clashes in and around Nablus and at least 10 other Arabs were injured.

Ex-terrorists admit killing

JERUSALEM (AP) — Two former guerrillas of an underground Jewish group once led by Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir said they helped assassinate a Swedish U.N. envoy to Palestine 40 years ago, according to a television program.

It was the first time that members of the Stern Group acknowledged they were involved in the killing of Count Folke Bernadotte, Israel's state-run Educational Television said.

The militant group, also known as Israel Freedom Fighters, was initially headed by Avraham Stern. It was a splinter faction of the right-wing National Military Organization.

The faction, which carried out terrorist acts to undermine British rule in mandatory Palestine, opposed Bernadotte's proposals that the United Nations be given control over Jerusalem and key areas be returned to Arab jurisdiction.

In 1942, after British police fatally shot Stern, the group was led by Shamir, Natan Yellin-Mor and Yisrael Scheib-Eldad, the group's ideologist.

The organization officially disbanded about four months before the killing, and Shamir had no connection with the assassination, said his spokesman Yossi Ahimeir.

Millions run to end hunger

LONDON (AP) — Up to 50 million people will pound the boulevards, main streets and mud tracks of the world today in the second Sport Aid "Race Against Time" to raise funds for starving children, organizers say.

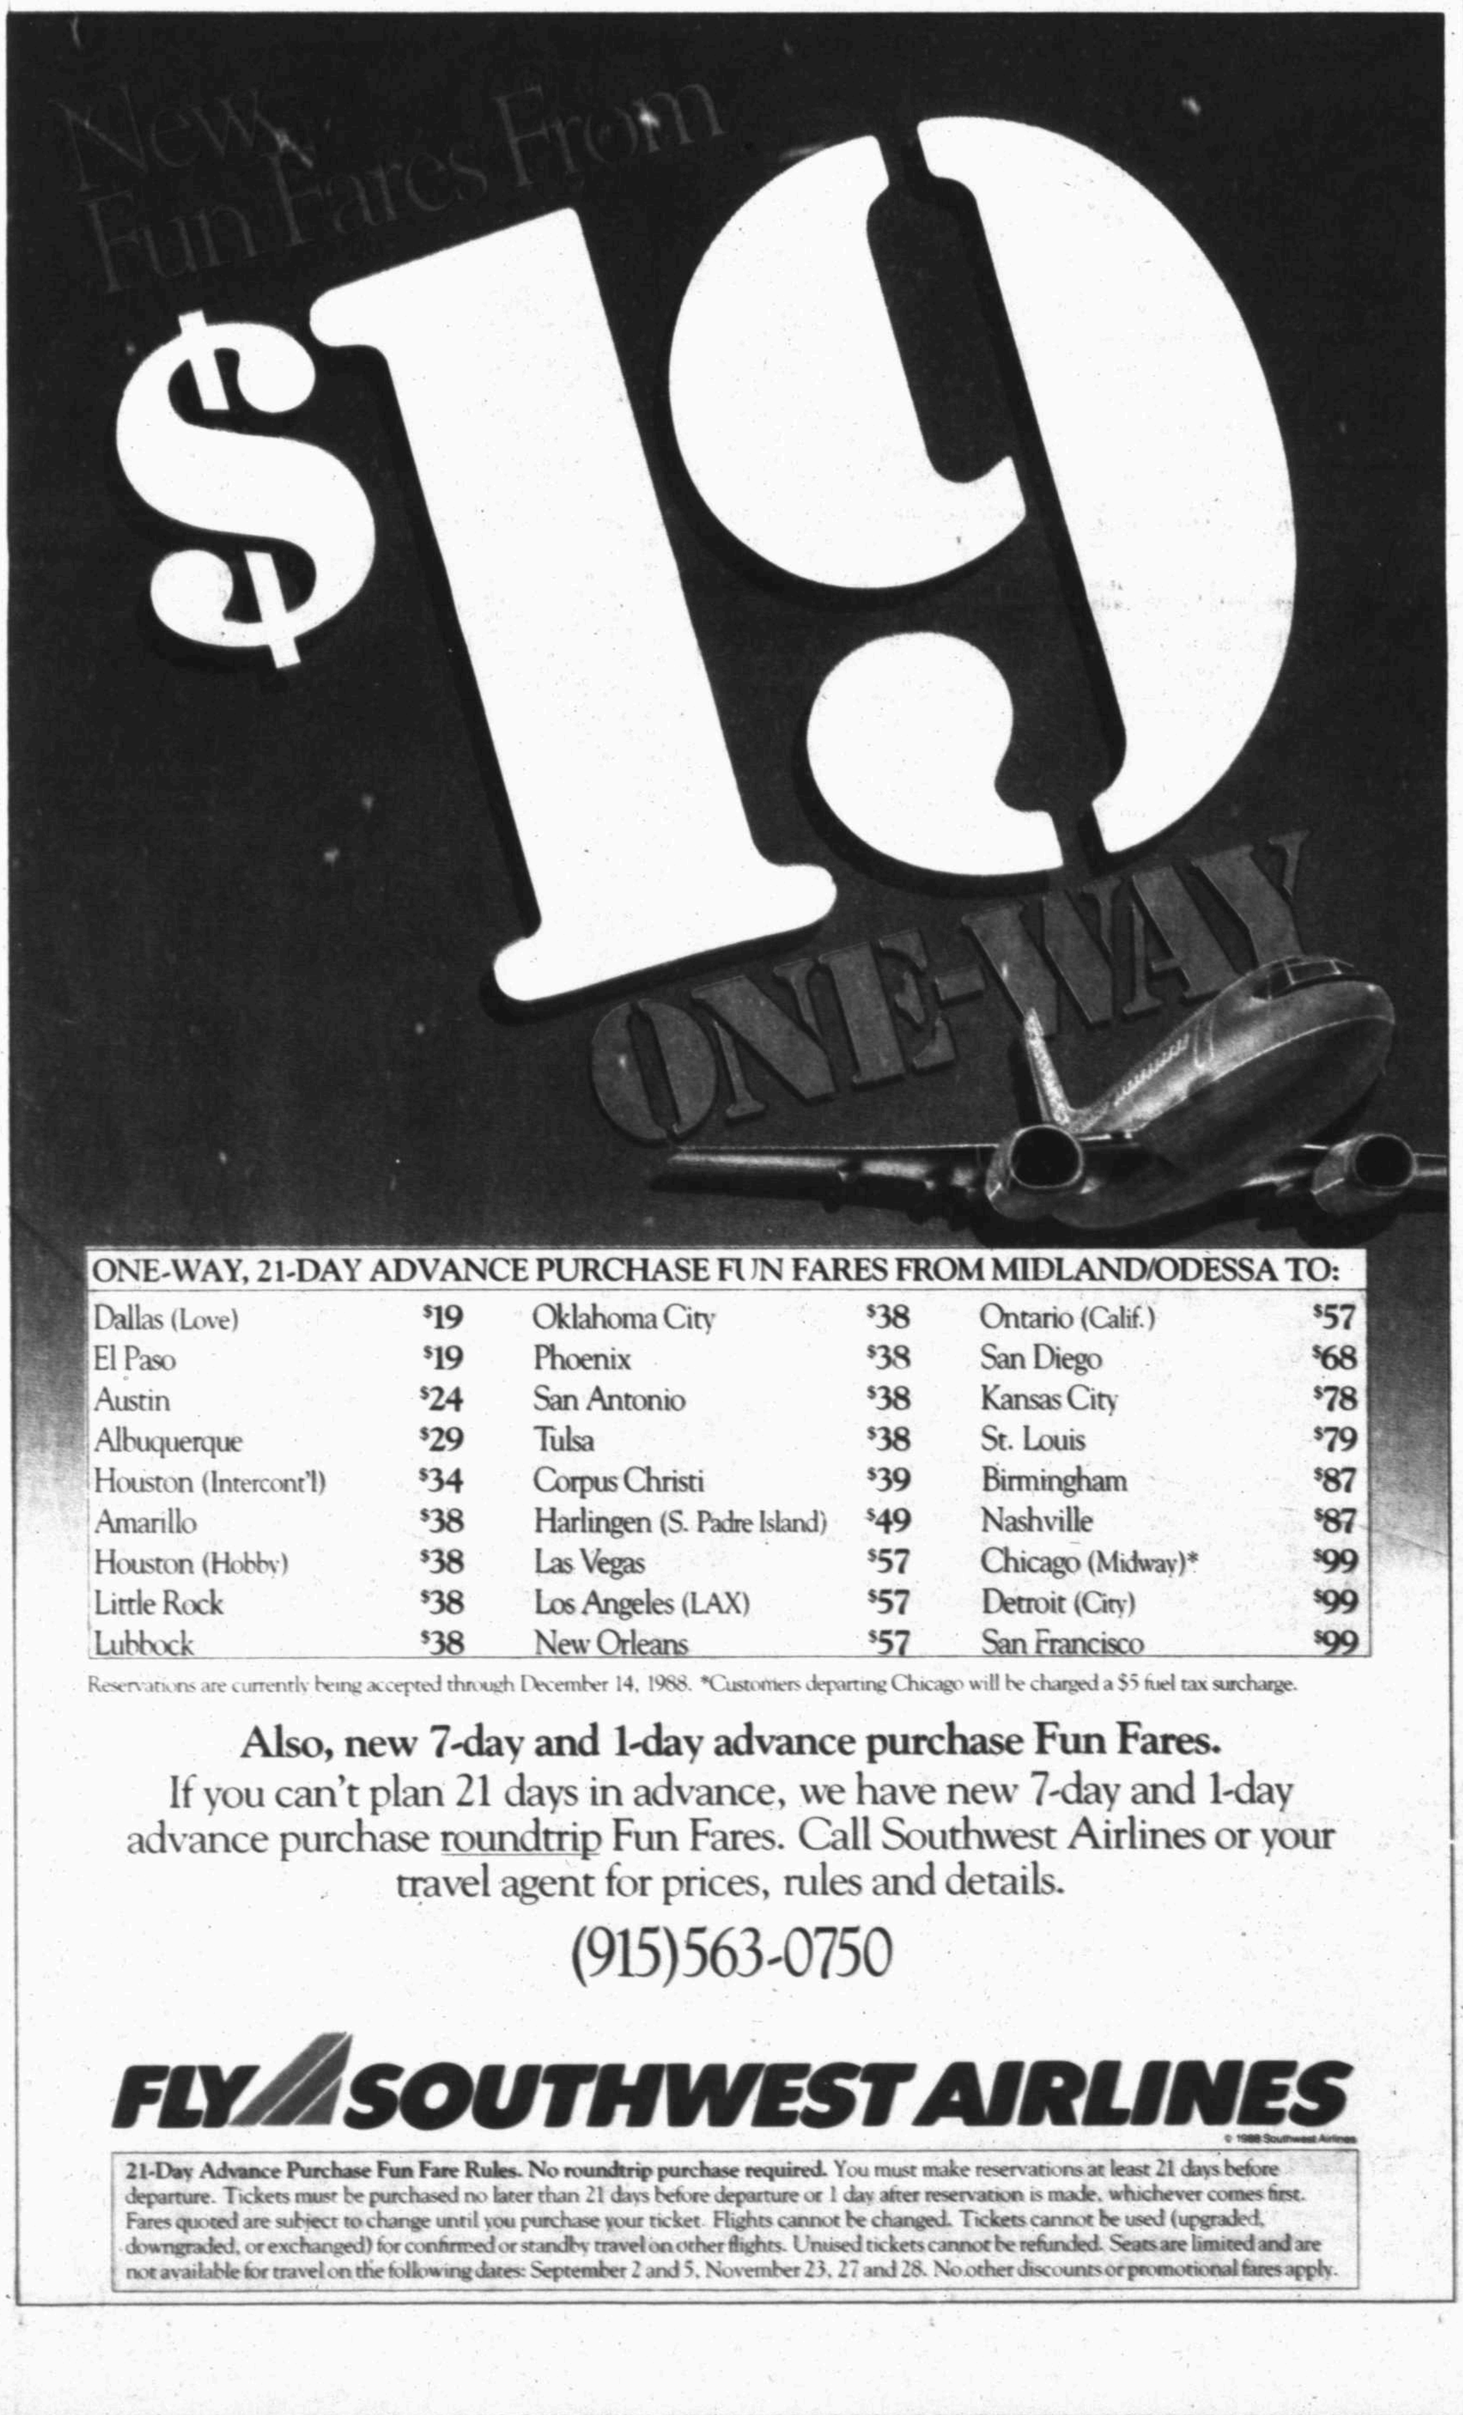

Billed as the biggest participation event in history, the six-mile road runs will begin in searing heat or torch-lit darkness, at speed or at a casual pace, when starting pistols fire simultaneously in 128 countries at 10 a.m. CDT.

From remote island outposts to the crowded streets of London, New York, Moscow and Hong Kong, young and old will don "I Changed the World" T-shirts for an enlarged rerun of Sport Aid '86.

Roman praises Delta crash rescue team

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Roman

When an Alert 3 alarm went off a few minutes after 9 a.m. Aug. 31 at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport, it meant a plane had crashed.

Less than an hour later, rescue teams in asbestos suits were crawling through the charred remains of Delta Flight 1141, looking for additional passengers and dousing sections still aflame.

"Their's was one heroic story after another," said Midland Deputy Director of Airports Larry Roman of the escape of 95 survivors from the crash. Roman was called to the scene last week by the American Association of Airport Executives to help assess the crash, fire and rescue.

Roman recalled hearing about an unidentified police officer, who reportedly draped himself over pilot Larry Davis so Carey Kirkland, the co-pilot, could wiggle out of the cockpit. A firefighter hosed down the lawman as the Boeing 727 burned profusely.

Since 1985, Roman has assisted in the rescue and investigation of more than 30 transportation disasters, including the Aug. 2, 1985, crash of Delta Flight 191 at D-FW Airport.

Delta Flight 191 crashed as it approached a runway during a violent thunderstorm, killing 137 people, including the driver of a car that was hit. Another 25 passengers were injured.

Of efforts during the most recent Delta disaster, Roman said: "I think they remembered Delta 191 and the frustration they experienced in not having the opportunity to save many of those passengers who were killed almost instantly.

"This time, they left the station with determination. They literally attacked the airplane," said Roman, who is a former National Transportation Safety Board investigator.

He surmised that the response probably spared the 95 passengers who survived the crash. Thirteen people died in the accident.

Roman was summoned to Dallas to coordinate the American Association of Airport Executives' investigation into the crash of Delta 1141 and the emergency response by fire and rescue teams.

He said in praise of the rescuers, "I think this was probably the most efficient rescue operation I've seen. I just can't see how it could've been any better."

Preliminary reports indicate that the first rescue vehicle arrived at the wreckage of Delta 1141 nearly two minutes after the crash.

However, Roman said the official data won't be available until the NTSB's final report is released in eight to 10 months..

"They (rescue crews) didn't hesitate on anything. Through experience and training they knew what was coming the minute they saw smoke way off in the distance," he said.

In the initial phase of the rescue, D-FW Airport's emergency response team hauled out 11 fire trucks, two life support ambulances and a quick response medical car. About 200 emergency vehicles, including 13 helicopters, were dispatched to the site.

The aircraft came to rest in a grassy field, making it difficult for emergency vehicles to maneuver toward the wreckage, Roman said.

At least one fire truck was damaged before it reached the crash site. "It didn't slow down any, but that's how rough of a ride it was out there," he said.

The Delta 1141 crash provided the first test of a number of changes made in the wake of the Delta Flight 191 crash, when communications problems slowed the response of off-airport mutual-aid agencies to the disaster.

The NTSB, in its 1986 report on the crash, gave high marks to the response of the D-FW airport crash teams, but criticized the airport's system of notifying the off-airport agencies.

The airport installed a computerized system that automatically calls all mutual-aid agencies and plays a recorded message asking for help.

The recording does not tell agencies the nature of the emergency, but simply issues the first call for assistance. The agencies then go to their standard plan and receive further instructions later from officials on the scene.

Roman also gave that system high marks, saying D-FW "controlled things much better this time."

If Midland International Airport officials questioned the ability of the D-FW Airport team who evaluated its crash disaster drill last month, Roman said they shouldn't doubt them any longer.

"They had the fire knocked down and firefighters inside the plane five minutes before we'd get our first truck in from downtown," he said.

Manuel Olivas, a Midland Fire Department division chief who assisted Roman in the investigation, agreed.

"Our guys would have a big challenge ahead of them if something of this magnitude happened here," he said.

Delegates to "Global Peace...from Vision to Reality: An International Women's Conference" join together in a universal greeting during the last session of the conference at Southern Methodist University's McFarlin Auditorium in Dallas last month.

Muscovite: Treaty step toward peace

EDITOR'S NOTE: On Aug. 8, 1988, more than 1,000 women from 63 nations met in Dallas for "Global Peace...from Vision to Reality: An International Women's Conference." The five-day event included lectures, workshops and multi-national entertainment with one basic premise: peace is possible. Staff writer Anntoinette Moore attended the conference. This is the first of a two-part series about her experiences.

DALLAS — Dr. Lily Golden doesn't mince words.

"The time has come to make global peace a reality," the African studies expert from Moscow told several hundred people packed into a Southern Methodist University auditorium.

She was one of the keynote speakers at "Global Peace...from Vision to Reality: An International Women's Conference." She led a delegation of some 15 women — a group she called a "social mirror which reflects the Soviet society of our time."

The United States and the Soviet Union have taken an important step on the road to peace with their treaty eliminating intermediate nuclear missiles, Ms. Golden asserted, even if these missiles comprise just 4 percent of the nuclear arsenal.

"It was a beginning, it gave hope. "They laid the foundations for dialogue and came close to reaching fundamental, large-scale accords.

"Even three years ago, we wouldn't believe what is happening now, between these two countries."

According to Ms. Golden, the thawing in the chilly relations between the U.S. and the Soviet Union is due to changing attitudes.

"Mr. (Mikhail) Gorbachev (the Soviet leader) says this almost every day: 'We must change our mentality, we must change our psychology. We must look for new ways of living.'"

The Soviet people have become enamored with the candid discussion of problems in the press, she said.

"People go crazy about newspapers, magazines. We want to see all this, we want to read all this.

"There are people who get up at 5:00 in the morning to stand in a big line to buy a newspaper to read new facts, new frankness about many problems," she claimed.

East Texas woman's vision leads to peace conference

By ANNTOINETTE MOORE
Staff Writer

DALLAS — When Vivian Castleberry says her global peace conference was the "culmination of a vision" she isn't exaggerating.

After she had been "challenged by a new friend in the Soviet Union and an old friend in East Texas" to bring women together for peace, she spent about six months in "a battle" with herself.

"I prayed over it, I meditated over it...Out of my faith — the Christian faith — the scene was 'Oh, God, let this cup pass from me.' I don't want to have anything to do with this.

"I went to sleep one night with it really bothering me," said the former women's editor of the Dallas Times Herald. "Shall I try or shall I not? This is bigger than I am. It's bigger than I have ever prepared to do.

"About 4:00 in the morning I woke up. I lay there meditating and thinking...Nobody will ever know whether it was a dream or a vision, but it was clear to me.

"I looked and I saw the women of the world come marching. The Indian women in their silk saris, and the African women in their turbans," Ms. Castleberry recalled. "All of the different women; different colors, all backgrounds, all sizes, all ages, coming forward."

"And behind them came the young men laying down their arms."

Then she fell asleep.

"When I woke up, I said, 'I'll do it. Whatever there is that needs to be done, I'll do it.'"

St. Lawrence farmers say hard work secret to high yield

Ed Todd/Reporter-Telegram

St. Lawrence farmer Alfred Schwartz, right, and Texas Agricultural Extension Service agronomist Charles Stichler of Fort Stockton examine cotton produced on the Billy Eggemeyer farm.

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

ST. LAWRENCE — Farmers in the St. Lawrence community may seem to have a natural talent for producing bumper cotton crops year after year, but they'll tell you the secret is hard work.

"I'll tell you why they do so well," observed Sammy Helmers, an El Paso horticulturist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service. "They don't like credit. They are easy to organize. And they help one another out."

And the farmers in this German Catholic community of about 250 families in Glasscock County southeast of Midland are legendary in their orderly work, efficiency, community spirit, success in fighting the boll weevil, water and soil conservation practices, and their joy of living — having good fun — particularly after the day's work is done.

"I raise cotton, grain sorghum, and a little hell," said a hearty Alfred Schwartz, who has been farming here since the mid-1950s.

The hard-working farmers "make this country shine," Schwartz said. "The country has been good to them — to us. It is high-producing. Two bales to the acre is not uncommon."

"They (farmers) know what they are doing," said Helmers.

That seemed apparent last week when loads of farmers, county agents, agricultural researchers, a politician and two candidates meandered in and about cotton fields in the St. Lawrence-Midkiff areas.

THE COTTON, nourished by richly fertilized soil and watered by furrow and drip irrigation and natural rainfall, is mostly tall and well-endowed with developing squares and bolls. The fruit of the farmers' labors — the cotton lint — will go to the gins, get baled, and head to textile mills for weaving into cloth, including denim and duck.

Working with agricultural extension agents and researchers and within their own associations, such as the St. Lawrence Cotton Growers Association, the farmers ferret out optimum ways to heighten crop production and increase profits. They seek out cottonseed best-suited for normally dry West Texas, determine the best spacing of cotton plants, use efficient ways of irrigation, and seek out the best markets.

Between cotton fields, Helmers noted the building of a spacious farm house.

"You can tell they had a good cotton crop last year," said Helmers, who was raised on a ranch near Girvin in Pecos County. "Look at that house."

At Tex Halfmann's farm, the cotton was standing tall.

"THAT OLD COTTON looks good," said Don Richardson, the Howard County agricultural agent.

Halfmann buried irrigation lines for drip-watering the cotton plants as opposed to above-ground furrow irrigation.

"Being profit oriented," said TAEX economist Rich Patterson of Fort Stockton, "he'd be interested in making more."

Patterson noted that farmer Billy Eggemeyer has increased his lint production appreciably by using drip irrigation.

"Billy has produced 300 pounds more lint per land acre (by drip irrigation) using a three-year average," Patterson said.

"If you don't take care of it (underground irrigation system) and if you don't manage it intensely to get the maximum efficiency from the water you apply, then you can go broke," said Charles Stichler, TAEX agronomist. Keeping the lines clean is essential, he said. Installing the system can cost from $800 to $1,500 per acre. "It depends how fancy you get."

The trick for efficient use, Stichler noted, is applying the right amount of water at the right times.

"It's just like money in the bank," he said.

Aside from watering, Stichler noted the importance of plant spacing — ideally about three to four plants per row foot — and keeping the weeds out.

"To me, a weed is any plant out of place," Stichler said. "If it is not producing cotton, it's a weed."

At the Billy Eggemeyer farm, Stiles farmer Rick Cunningham looked over the cotton.

"ANY COTTON can look like that (bountiful) if you put enough money on it," Cunningham said. "It's got a lot of TLC (tender loving care)."

Election could boil down to who seems most patriotic

Ott

The big question regarding this year's presidential elections seems to have boiled down to this:

Which candidate is the most patriotic?

Or, maybe it should be worded this way:

Which candidate is the least patriotic?

Both sides appear to have strong cases. George Bush got the ball rolling when he pointed out that his Democratic opponent, Michael Dukakis, had vetoed a bill in Massachusetts that would have required students in public schools to recite the Pledge of Allegiance as part of their day-to-day activities.

Dukakis, obviously embarrassed by this horrifying revelation, attempted to make the best of a bad situation by telling news reporters that he did indeed love the Pledge of Allegiance — and could recite it by heart — but had been forced to veto the bill because it was unconstitutional.

"Hogwash," said Bush, who then told those same reporters that he would have signed the bill — unconstitutional or not.

The implication, of course, was that Dukakis is not patriotic enough to be president of the United States. Besides, the rumors went, Dukakis' wife, Kitty, had burned an American flag during an anti-war protest in the 1960s.

That rumor was later proven false, but so what? If her husband would veto a bill supporting the reciting of the Pledge of Allegiance, then surely Kitty must be an unpatriotic communist sympathizer.

This logic apparently made perfectly good sense to a great many Americans, because Dukakis immediately began to fall in the polls.

All seemed well for Bush. Republicans had the patriotic vote well in hand.

Then, last week, something terrible occurred.

Bush, during a speech to a group of American Legion members, let it slip that Pearl Harbor was actually attacked on Sept. 7, 1941, a full three months earlier than the Dec. 7, 1941 date most of us had been taught as small children.

A few seconds later, Bush realized his error and corrected it.

Too bad. The damage had been done. A campaign issue was born. The TV networks led off their nightly newscasts with the blunder.

Bush's eldest son, George W. Bush, tried to soften the blow. He went on a TV talk show in California and said the news media was making a big deal out of nothing. After all, his father had simply experienced a minor slip of the tongue. It could have happened to anyone. Besides, everyone knows that the attack on Pearl Harbor occurred on Dec. 9, 1941. So there.

The Democrats had a field day.

These two blunders, coupled with vice-presidential candidate Dan Quayle's decision 20 years ago to join the National Guard instead of going to Vietnam, proved that Republicans weren't nearly as patriotic as they pretended to be.

Democrats said the Republicans might be able to recite the Pledge of Allegiance but they didn't know doodley-squat about American history.

Therefore, their candidate was unqualified to be president.

Now, some people — mostly fuddy-duddies who probably watch public television — have suggested that these kinds of issues are not really important in deciding who should be president.

Instead, these strange people say they want to know what the candidates will do about the budget deficit, oil prices, unrest in the Middle East, defense spending, the spread of communism and unemployment.

Can you imagine? No wonder those people watch public television. They're weird.

Uganda native thinks 'people are tired of wars'

Dallas resident survived brutal rule of Idi Amin

By ANNTOINETTE MOORE
Staff Writer

DALLAS — For Joy Kambarami "war and peace" is more than the title of a Russian novel by Leo Tolstoy.

The 29-year-old Uganda native lived through the brutal rule of Gen. Idi Amin, who may have killed as many as 300,000 of his political opponents during a reign of terror from 1971 until 1979, according to the World Almanac.

She and her family also survived the political chaos which took place as Amin was overthrown by a combination of rebels and troops from neighboring Tanzania.

These experiences lead her to attend "Global Peace...from Vision to Reality: An International Women's Conference" held in Dallas last month.

"War — I don't know how I can describe it," said the soft-spoken Ms. Kambarami, who has lived in Dallas for the past 19 months with her husband, Masimba, an accountant for Caltex Petroleum.

"Everything closed. You could go out in the day, but at night you really couldn't," she added. "When you could hear the gunshots going off, it got really tense. Everybody was scared."

Her three brothers and three sisters were out on their own. Ms. Kambarami, then 20, was the only child left at home in Kampala with her parents.

She recalled the day rebel forces reached the outskirts of the capital city.

"I was at my sister's that day," Ms. Kambarami said. There was an explosion "so loud that everything was shaking. Nobody knew what was happening."

The explosions lasted about 20 minutes — "it seemed like forever" — as the rebels bombed the outskirts of the city.

Then "an announcement came over the radio and TV. Amin's government told the people not to panic, to stay indoors, that 'the government is in control,'" she added.

"After three days, that's when the shelling came into the city. On the third day, the shelling started. It's an experience I wouldn't like to repeat," Ms. Kambarami said.

"At the time, I thought, 'If only I can live for one day!'"

Fortunately, most of the shells landed in streets or on vacant lots.

When the capital had fallen to the rebel forces and Amin had fled, the mood changed.

"We had jubilant emotions — 'He's out!'" she continued. "The streets were filled with people. I don't even know where they came from."

Although Uganda's political chaos didn't end with Amin's ouster, Ms. Kambarami believes things are changing.

"I think people are tired of wars. Everyone wants to settle down.

"When you look at why Amin was doing what he was doing (killing and torturing thousands of his countrymen), there's no reason," she said.

"I believe there are many more people like him in this world, and I feel it's up to people who love peace to change people like him.

"Peace cannot be, without somebody who loves peace promoting it or at least sharing it with other people," she added.

Ms. Kambarami has had an experience of peace to balance her experience of war.

From 1985 to 1987 she lived in Zimbabwe, her husband's native land, "where the racial harmony should be an example to the world."

Zimbabwe was once the former British colony of Southern Rhodesia. Rhodesia declared its independence in 1965 to preserve the white colonists' political control. Although blacks were the majority, they were prevented from voting by restrictive income tax requirements, according to the World Almanac.

After 15 years of ostracization by most of the world's nations and a bloody civil war which killed thousands of blacks and whites, the country of Zimbabwe was born in 1980 with a cease-fire and fair elections.

Rhodesia's former prime minister, Ian Smith, now serves in Zimbabwe's Parliament.

"What hit me first is that Prime Minister (Robert) Mugabe could sit in the same parliament with Ian Smith, and they could shake hands and talk," Ms. Kambarami said, adding that when Smith controlled Rhodesia, he had even imprisoned Mugabe.

But Mugabe apparently has forgiven Smith.

"I think Mugabe is a peaceful person. Mugabe has such peace within himself," she asserted.

"A lot of whites sold their properties and left" when the white government of Rhodesia lost power, she continued. "Now they're coming back; now they're sure there is peace."

To keep peace "we should listen; we should communicate. We should be color blind," she said forcefully. "Perseverance, persistence and courage. That's what we need to keep on."

When Ms. Kambarami and her husband return to Zimbabwe in a few months, she will carry a message to her contemporaries.

"As a young generation, we should look at our parents. They have forgiven their oppressors. We should continue to promote the harmony and love that exists in our country and spread it south."

GOLDEN — PEACE

Last Nov. 1, there was a newspaper subscription drive in Moscow.

"Almost 98 percent of the population subscribed in two days."

"We are not only for perestroika (restructuring) and glasnost (openness) in the Soviet Union," she continued, "we believe that many things in this world must also be reconstructed."

One of these is the idea that building bigger and better nuclear weapons necessarily guarantees any nation's security.

"More and more people understand that the military technology is unable to ensure anyone's security in our nuclear age."

Women throughout the world are especially aware of this, she said.

"All women of the world want peace because they are mothers and wives. They don't want their husbands and sons to be killed in wars," she claimed.

"They need badly this money, which men spend on arms, to feed hungry children in Africa, in Asia and to help those who are jobless and homeless."

And women live with the day to day knowledge that "when it comes to international relations as a whole, security can only be universal. Insecurity for any one country means insecurity for all," Ms. Golden continued.

"Only by rechanneling the best resources squandered on the preparation for war," will it be possible to solve the world's critical problems.

Ms. Golden herself has suffered the consequences of war. According to a conference press release, during the 1960s her husband was elected president of Zanzibar, then was arrested and murdered in a political coup while she was still living in Moscow with their young daughter.

Born in Taskhkent, Uzbekistan, Ms. Golden is the daughter of Americans who first came to the U.S.S.R. in 1931, 14 years after the 1917 Russian Revolution, the press release said. Her father, Oliver John Golden, was a black agronomist who introduced cotton-growing techniques to the Soviet Union. Her mother came from a Jewish family in New York City and was a teacher and radio personality.

Because of their interracial marriage, her parents faced discrimination in the United States. This was not a problem for them in the Soviet Union, Ms. Golden said, so they decided to stay there.

During her first trip to the United States, she spoke with many reporters about her parents.

"What was strange to me, everything I told about the experience of my parents in the '20s and the '30s — about the racism they went through — not one newspaper published" a story about it, she claimed. "I was so surprised. It (the racism) was in the '20s. Why were they afraid to say something about it now, in the '80s?"

Ms. Golden is familiar with the problems of Soviet women.

"Soviet women make up 53 percent of the country's population, half of the work force employed in the national economy and 60 percent of the employees" in education, she said.

Although women face few legal barriers, "this does not mean that all women's problems have been solved once and for all," she continued. "There's 'a heap' of problems, indeed."

Many women labor under poor working conditions, at manual, low-skilled, dead-end jobs, she said. Despite widespread, government-financed day care, women still find it difficult to combine child-rearing with productive work outside the home.

"Socialism does not solve all the problems," Ms. Golden admitted.

In industry, agriculture and construction, women are concentrated in unskilled jobs.

At the lower levels of management, the percentages of men and women are about the same. But, as in the United States, "the higher the level of management, the lower the number of women," she claimed.

She challenged conference participants to develop solutions for the problems facing women and suggested this might be achieved through "peoples' diplomacy."

Organizations which bring people from the Soviet Union and the United States together "eliminate all kinds of stereotypes that they had for many, many years about each other. And these stereotypes are still very strong."

Ms. Golden then related the following incident which occurred during her first visit to the United States.

In Mississippi, she telephoned a Golden who could have been one of her father's relatives. The woman who answered the phone said, "We don't want to do anything with these commies!"

"You see, this is a stereotype. First of all, I am not a member of the Communist Party," she said, laughing. "And why are they so afraid of Communists?"

To conquer this fear, "people must look at the eyes of each other. When people look at the eyes of each other, they will never be enemies,...there will not be a war."

The Soviet Union could be a land of opportunity for American capitalists, she claimed. Joint enterprises between the two countries could build roads and hotels, for example.

"The country is so vast — 300 million people — can you imagine how much money you can make there?" Ms. Golden chuckled.

MONDAY: Delegates' reactions to the conference

Twenty-two months of volunteer effort later, "Global Peace...from Vision to Reality: An International Women's Conference" came to Southern Methodist University, Ms. Castleberry's alma mater.

"From the very first, I said, 'We will have a thousand people and we will have 100 women from foreign countries,'" she continued.

More than 1,000 women attended the five-day conference held last month, and between 150 and 200 of the participants were from 62 foreign countries.

Ms. Castleberry's personal journey to peace had begun many years earlier.

"I was born and reared in East Texas, but I have always been a child of the universe...I have always migrated to people who are 'different,'" she said. "I've always been intrigued by people whose experiences were different from my own."

After 28 years of newspaper work, she took early retirement in May 1984. Within days she was on her first flight to the Soviet Union as "a grassroots citizen diplomat."

Although Ms. Castleberry has visited the U.S.S.R. twice since then, that first visit changed her life.

"The seeds for this conference were planted when one of the Soviet women — a professor at the University of Moscow — in telling me goodbye, said, 'Go home and bring us your women.'"

"The professor said, 'Men have been trying to bring peace to our world for hundreds of years and we still haven't even begun to think that we can live in peace.

"'We here in the Soviet Union have sent our fathers to war, our husbands to war, our sons to war, our brothers to war,' Ms. Castleberry continued, quoting the Soviet professor. "'And we are tired of it.

"'Go home and bring us your women, because it is time that women took responsibility for peacemaking. They have always been peacemakers in their private world. It is time they took responsibility for peacemaking in the public world.'"

As Ms. Castleberry and Peacemakers Inc.'s 14-member steering committee planned the conference, they had several basic concerns.

"Peace is possible," she asserted. "We did not want to provide a vehicle for anyone's political agenda.

"Although we cry for the women of Iran and Iraq or wherever they are persecuted, we do not hold with the tenet of peace with justice.

"Peace with justice gives people carte blanche to continue persecuting each other. It's a matter of retribution, of revenge," she said.

"What we at Peacemakers believe in, is to create the peace first, with the absolute, sure knowledge that justice will follow.

Vivian Castleberry, left, the woman behind the peace conference, hugs her friend Sara Kamenshekova, an American who married a Soviet citizen and has spent the last 23 years in the U.S.S.R. Ms. Kamenshekova is a producer for the English language division of Radio Moscow.

Anntoinette Moore/ Reporter-Telegram

"If we clearly understand that we are all one human race, that we all bleed when we're stuck; and that we all birth children as women, and that we all love our children, wherever they are born in the world," she continued. "If we can only create a world in which we recognize that we are one human being, universal, then justice will follow.

"I believe that to the core of me."

Ms. Castleberry also believes the peace conference can have a significant impact.

"It will make a difference in the individual lives of everybody who has been here."

"We are only one tiny link in a universal chain of people who are standing up and saying, 'Enough already. There are better ways of resolving human conflict than by killing each other.'

"I'm a realist, and know that we have a lot of violence to clean up," she added. "I know that we have a lot of evils to correct. I also know that the good things are going to prevail."

And "peace is profitable," Ms. Castleberry said with conviction. "Look what happened to Japan after World War II. We wouldn't let her arm again, so what she did was to take over the economic leadership of the world."

Although "the economic base of Dallas is very broadly defense oriented...I want to plant the seed that will eventually turn these military defense things into healthcare processes," she added.

"It must be economic conversion. There is no way to do it overnight. It's just a matter of turning our military weapons into things which will create peaceful jobs," she said.

"I have no more need for the child of the person making military weapons to go hungry than I have for my own grandchildren to go hungry."

FARMERS

At the Jimmy Eggemeyer farm, TAEX irrigation engineer Joe Henggeler talked about efficient well-water irrigation. And Howard County Agent Don Richardson of Big Spring seemed impressed with the tall, heavy-bolled cotton plants. But he found an opportunity to brag about Howard County cotton.

"We've got some better dry-land cotton," Richardson said. "We've had the rain."

Charles Neeb, director of the TAEX district office in Fort Stockton, said the St. Lawrence cotton "looks good."

"We've got good potential yield of over two to two-and-a-half bales" to the acre, Neeb said.

"They (St. Lawrence farmers) are very productive, hard working, solid people," Midland County TAEX Agent Earnest Kiker told TAEX Assistant Director Milo J. Shult of Texas A&M University at College Station.

Joining about 100 farmers and TAEX agents and researchers were Texas Senator Bill Sims — a San Angelo rancher and a former county agent — and two candidates, Johnnie Lou Avery, a Democrat, and her opponent, Troy Fraser, a Republican, who are running for the Texas House of Representatives. Both are from Big Spring.

"I always got along better with sheep and horses than I did (farm) tractors," Sims said.

Mrs. Avery said that she, as a state legislator from an agricultural territory, would "do the very best I can to listen to you (farmers) and be an action-oriented leader."

Fraser, who said he was "raised in the middle of a cotton field over at Coahoma," said he would strive to help "keep the family farm profitable."

MAKING YOUR FINANCES FIT
from Patteann Daniel-Beverley
Power of Attorney
Here's a just-suppose question: if something happened to you, who would take care of your affairs? Unless everything you own is held jointly, your finances would be locked up until your next of kin went to court for permission to act as your guardian.
It's smarter, surer (and less expensive in legal fees) to give power of attorney to someone you trust. That permits the named person to sign checks for you, sell and buy securities and real estate, even run your business if necessary.
A general power of attorney is effective if your are away, but becomes void if you are incapacitated. A durable power of attorney covers more situations, and is often signed along with your will. It remains in effect, unless you revoke it, as long as you live. A slightly different version, the "springing" power of attorney, goes into effect only if you are incapacitated. In some cases, a power of attorney may be combined with a living trust.

Death penalty step fits dealers' crime

In recent months, more has been heard about the drug threat facing this country — and methods to counter it — than ever before. Congress has been scrambling to enact measures to battle drug lords and protect American society.

This week Congress approved another step along the same pathway: enacting a bill authorizing the death penalty to be used against drug dealers and "kingpins" who kill innocent people while carrying out their crimes.

While approving the measure, which is only one amendment to the $2 billion anti-drug bill, amounts to tacit acknowledgement that other steps to control the drug threat have not worked, it is a step that needs to be taken to underscore the seriousness this society attaches to drugs. The influences of the drug culture pervade American society and if Americans are going to be adamant about winning this "war," identifying the enemy is the first priority. That enemy is the drug "kingpin" and dealer who make their poison available to Americans, and who often step on any other innocents who get in their way.

The bill introduced in the House by Rep. George Gekas, R-Pa., and supported by the 21st Congressional District's own Rep. Lamar Smith of San Antonio, would give judges the authority to impose the death penalty on anyone convicted of intentionally killing someone during a drug felony. Notably, use of the death penalty would be left to the discretion of judges and would not be mandatory.

Opponents of the death penalty battled the move on the grounds it was a mere attempt to expand the death penalty. But how can they argue against statistics? Literally thousands of lives have been wrecked by drugs over the last 20-25 years and Congressman Smith even notes that "37,000 people died last year because of drug dealing ...."

Countering drugs has been complicated by the fact that some drugs, such as marijuana and cocaine, have found general acceptance among the American population and laws to control such drugs are difficult to enforce without public support. But, slowly, the public has begun to recognize that drugs pose a great danger to society in general. What's more, a public outcry against drugs has been building in recent years.

The anti-drug bill is one embodiment of that outcry. The death penalty for those who prey on the lives of others to sell their illicit "products" is only logical.

Zimbabwe gamble

Zimbabwe, self-conscious torchbearer for the nonaligned third world, can be a very prickly friend. Yet it is also a heartening example of racial coexistence and sensible economic management in a troubled region and a victim of the dislocations brought about by the struggle against apartheid in South Africa. Washington has wisely ended a two-year freeze on economic aid.

Eight years ago the U.S. opened newly independent Zimbabwe's first foreign embassy and pledged a generous, three-year, $225 million aid package. Soon, however, the rhetorical stridency of Robert Mugabe's government began to take its toll. In 1984, mostly in reaction to Zimbabwean votes at the United Nations, the Reagan administration cut aid almost in half. The remainder stopped in 1986, after a Zimbabwean Cabinet minister affronted former President Carter at a Fourth of July reception with an offensive anti-Washington tirade.

That was undiplomatic on Zimbabwe's part. But ending U.S. aid was an overreaction, and risked pushing Zimbabwe into yet more antagonistic policies. Fortunately, Zimbabwe has proved wiser and held to a steady course. Racial reconciliation has replaced years of hatred. Black farmers, helped by credit programs and extension services, fair market prices and good transportation and storage, regularly produce surplus grains — even after five years of drought. And last year Mr. Mugabe signed a "unity agreement" with his longtime rival Joshua Nkomo to end years of division.

Still, Zimbabwe faces severe problems. The economy has grown too slowly to absorb an expanding, increasingly educated work force. Foreign investment lags. Meanwhile Zimbabwe, vulnerable to South Africa's concerted effort to destabilize its neighbors, spends half a million dollars a day on a security force in Mozambique.

Earlier this year, Mr. Mugabe adopted the new title of executive president as part of the march from parliamentary democracy toward a Socialist one-party state. Yet for all these trappings, Zimbabwe is not to be written off as predictable.

Given Zimbabwe's prospects for stable and harmonious development, and its leadership against apartheid, America has a clear interest in remaining involved. By promising $17 million to stimulate rural development and private business over the next three years, the administration serves that interest.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, Sept. 11, the 255th day of 1988. There are 111 days left in the year. The Jewish New Year, Rosh Hashanah, begins at sunset.

Today's highlight in history:

On Sept. 11, 1777, during the American Revolution, forces under Gen. George Washington suffered defeat at the hands of the British in the Battle of Brandywine near Wilmington, Del. Washington's troops were forced back into Philadelphia, which fell to the British.

On this date:

In 1789, Alexander Hamilton was appointed secretary of the Treasury.

In 1814, an American fleet scored a decisive victory over the British in the Battle of Lake Champlain in the War of 1812.

In 1850, the "Swedish Nightingale" — Jenny Lind — gave her first concert in the United States, at Castle Garden in New York.

In 1885, author D.H. Lawrence was born in Eastwood, England.

In 1936, President Franklin D. Roosevelt dedicated Boulder Dam — now known as Hoover Dam — by pressing a key in Washington to signal the startup of the dam's first hydroelectric generator in Nevada.

In 1941, in Des Moines, aviation hero Charles A. Lindbergh charged "the British, the Jewish and the Roosevelt administration" were trying to involve the United States in World War II.

In 1944, President Franklin D. Roosevelt and British Prime Minister Winston Churchill met in Canada at the second Quebec Conference.

In 1971, former Soviet leader Nikita Khrushchev died of a heart attack at the age of 77.

In 1973, Chile's President, Salvador Allende, died in a violent military coup that overthrew his government.

In 1982, 46 people were killed in a U.S. Army helicopter crash near Mannheim, West Germany.

In 1985, Pete Rose of the Cincinnati Reds cracked career hit number 4,192 off Eric Show of the San Diego Padres, eclipsing the record held by Ty Cobb.

Ten years ago: Georgi Markov, a Bulgarian defector, died at a British hospital four days after he was stabbed by a man wielding a poisoned umbrella tip.

Can defense industry regulate itself?

WASHINGTON — When President Reagan set up a committee to investigate military waste three years ago, the list of appointees looked like a "Who's Who" of the defense business. Included were board members from major defense contractors, retired military officers and lawyers whose firms represented defense contractors. These were the foxes that Reagan trusted to sweep out the hen house.

Jack Anderson

Today, with the FBI and Congress involved in a massive investigation of Pentagon procurement fraud, critics of that earlier commission are questioning whether people who make money off of hefty defense budgets are the best authorities on reform.

Reagan's panel was headed by electronics magnate David Packard and was known as the Packard Commission. The president appointed the commission after a series of embarrassing revelations about faulty weapons and overpriced spare parts.

Not surprisingly, the Packard Commission recommended that contractors should adopt and monitor their own ethical standards. Reagan implemented that and other recommendations of the commission in a classified directive in 1986, all the while reaping the political benefits of appearing reform-minded.

Yet, two years later, the defense procurement system — still an insatiable pig — trotted right into the arms of the FBI.

Looking back at the Packard Commission and ahead at the tough task of real reform, some critics, including Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., are asking whether defense contractors can be trusted as their own watchdogs and whether the president should have accepted that notion from the defense establishment in the first place.

At the same time, the critics aren't wasting a chance to tweak the nose of the outgoing Republican administration.

Our associate, Scott Sleek, has obtained an internal draft of a memo from Dingell's staff charging that Reagan's showy effort at reform — the Packard Commission — was ripe with conflicts of interest. The Project for Military Procurement, a Washington public interest group, has reiterated that conclusion.

Some of the commission members had only minor ties to the defense industry, but others were tightly connected.

Packard is the chairman and cofounder of Hewlett-Packard Inc., a defense contractor. He was also a deputy defense secretary in the Nixon administration.

He gained some notoriety in the late 1960s when his firm, although doing millions of dollars in government work, refused to open its books to the General Accounting Office. In 1970, we reported on a Pentagon memo that described a conversation between Packard and a subordinate when Packard was deputy defense secretary. The subject of the conversation was defense contractors and Packard was quoted as saying, "We have to do something to get (their) profits up."

Frank Carlucci was another member of the Packard Commission. Now the secretary of defense, Carlucci was then on the board of directors of Sperry Corp., a major defense contractor which later became Unisys Corp.

In earlier columns, we disclosed that Unisys paid Carlucci $96,000 last March for his work on the board. He also will get a $14,300 annual pension from the company when he leaves government service. Unisys is one of the firms being investigated by the Justice Department, and Carlucci has disqualified himself from any matters involving the company.

A sampling of commission members includes: Barber Conable Jr., who at the time was a board member of Honeywell Inc., a defense contractor; R. James Woolsey, a board member for such defense contractors as Fairchild Industries and Titan Systems; and William P. Clark, who works for a law firm that had represented a number of defense contractors, including Lockheed Corp. Clark was a White House national security adviser in the early Reagan years. He told us he was not involved in the legal work his firm did for defense contractors.

To their credit, the commission members recommended and the Defense Department implemented a system for contractors and their employees to report fraud.

Debating debates doesn't make them useful

WASHINGTON — The raw excitements of summer are yielding to the yet rawer ones of autumn as the presidential campaign careens lickety-split and right on schedule into a familiar cul-de-sac: a debate of sorts, about debates of sorts. Is this trip necessary? It is inevitable. It is not beneficial.

George F. Will

There will be only two too many debates this year. That is, there will be only two, as George Bush insisted, rather than the four that Michael Dukakis hankered for. By his hankering, he sent a subliminal message: Watch me, I am the Oakland Athletics of debaters.

Bush, following the rule that you should hang a lantern on your problem rather than try to hide it, has been happy to play the hapless fellow, the Atlanta Braves of debaters. His campaign has speculated it would be best for him if the debates occurred during the Olympics and World Series so they would not have the nation's undivided attention. And the last one should occur well before Election Day so Bush will have time to recover from any rhetorical pratfall, any self-inflicted Pearl Harbor. So now he stands to look surprisingly good if even a few of his sentences parse — by no means a certainty.

This Republic prospered from the presidency of Washington through that of Eisenhower without presidential debates, and there was, mercifully, a 16-year hiatus between the first set (1960) and the second. So why, aside from the fact that television exists, do we have debates?

In a fascinating volume of essays, "Presidential Debates: 1988 and Beyond," the editor, Joel L. Swerdlow, says that neither in democratic theory nor in practice were debates between candidates considered important, until recently. He notes that debates were defined as aspects of legislative deliberations, not as instruments of mass persuasion or electoral campaigning. The Lincoln-Douglas debates in the 1858 senatorial campaign were the first in an election of national significance and they did not inaugurate an era of debates.

It is said in defense of debates that because they last longer than 30 seconds they at least counter the trend toward trivializing compression in political discourse in this age of "sound bites." The trend is deplorable. But so are debates which, being incoherently episodic, are part of the problem.

Kathleen Hall Jamieson, a contributor to the Swerdlow volume, notes that voters have voted with their television dials, emphatically rejecting long — nowadays more than 60 seconds — political events. On Sept. 22, 1964, they gave a landslide victory to "Peyton Place" and "Petticoat Junction" over a conversation between Eisenhower and Goldwater. On Nov. 4, 1979, they chose "Jaws" over Roger Mudd's interview with Ted Kennedy. In 1960, viewership declined sharply for the fourth and final Kennedy-Nixon debate.

Broadcasting, says Jamieson, has brought a steady decrease in the length of political messages. "The 30-minute speeches that reached the nation's Motorolas in the 1940s were standard fare by 1952, the year of America's first telecast presidential campaign. By 1956, the five-minute speech and spot were edging out the longer speech. In 1964, the five-minute speech gave way to the 60-second spot and then the 30-second spot." In a wired nation, the political imperative is "survival of the briefest."

Debates reflect this. They are tossed salads of brevity. Here is a question hurled, like a high, inside fastball, at Mondale's head in the 1984 debate in which the format gave him 150 seconds to answer: "Do you accept the conventional wisdom that Eastern Europe is a Soviet sphere of influence? And if you do, what could a Mondale administration realistically do to help the people of Eastern Europe to achieve the human rights that were guaranteed to them as a result of a Helsinki Accords?" Asking the question takes 15 seconds, equal to 10 percent of the time allotted to an answer.

Because neither side is ever sufficiently confident to relish the thrust and parry of real debates, our debates are, inevitably, parallel press conferences. They test skills unrelated to the real tasks of governance. (Presidential press conferences, wisely de-emphasized by Reagan, are similarly overrated as useful events.)

Debates are supposed to test a candidate's ability to "think on his feet." But debates are primarily the regurgitation of market-tested paragraphs. Reflexes, not thinking, are crucial. Anyway, who wants a President thinking on his feet? The presidency is not a solo act. Successful Presidents surround themselves with specialized talents and act in concert with them.

This year's debates will be bracketed by sound and fury — the hype before and the spin-doctors after — and will signify the institutionalization of yet another idea that diminishes our politics.

Quayle 'feeding frenzy' made public fed up

NEW YORK — Newspapers and television overdid the Dan Quayle story. The result was the infamous feeding frenzy.

Russell Baker

The public was revolted, especially at breakfast time. It was bad for the image of the press. It was bad for the image of television.

And justly so. In the old days, there were certain stories, certain pictures that were not used in newspapers meant for the breakfast table. Dan Quayle being subjected to a feeding frenzy was such a story.

In the old days editors took one look at such stories and cried, "Is this a feeding frenzy?" If the answer was yes, there was an editing frenzy, and the offending material was killed.

To prevent another feeding frenzy and improve the image of the American news industry, the following rules are now in effect:

■ 1. When in doubt, poll.

Assume an event that is totally unanticipated and likely to be of great interest to many millions.

Yes, an event like the disclosure that an almost perfect stranger named Dan Quayle could become president of the United States.

To leave personalities out of it, let's say star-gazers have just discovered that a gigantic meteor on a collision course with the Earth is going to strike New York.

Does the public really want a lot on this story? Won't millions be disgusted if their regular television programs are pre-empted for news of the imminent collision? Won't millions more who already suspect the press of a morbid preference for bad news rather than good have their worst suspicions confirmed?

And what about conservatives from other regions who consider New York the home of elitist liberalism?

Will they interpret heavy news coverage as more proof of what they've known for years — to wit, that the media swarm with elitist liberals who wouldn't give a hoot if a meteor destroyed Huntington, Indiana?

Instead of rushing into print and interrupting "All My Children," editors will wait for results of a poll on the following question:

How interested would you be in learning that a big meteor was about to wipe out a good-size American city? Responses will be in four categories: extremely interested, pretty interested, mildly interested, not interested a bit.

■ 2. Fit the coverage to the poll.

If more than 50 percent of the sample falls in the "mildly interested" and "not interested" categories, the story will be covered by no more than 10 reporters until the collision occurs.

After that, 20 reporters will be permitted on the day after impact, 16 on the second day, 9 on the third, 5 on the fourth, and 2 for three days thereafter.

By this time another poll will be available on the public's appetite for continuing the coverage.

The question: How do you feel about continuing coverage of the meteoric destruction of New York?

The possible answers: "Fascinated," "Not as dull as most week-old stories," "Rather see more football," "Sick and tired of whole thing."

If the first two answers poll a majority, one reporter will continue to cover for another week, after which the story will be dropped until two weeks later when editors will permit one brief "What ever happened to New York?" article.

This may be followed a week later by the usual editorial and columnist material scolding Washington for not moving faster to fill the hole where New York stood, drawing profound moral parallels to the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, or reminiscing sentimentally about good old New York. (For example: "It was the kind of city where paying $3,500 a month for an apartment no bigger than a shoe box made you feel it was pure bliss to be alive.")

■ 3. Always remember the public has feelings about news coverage, too.

Though polls may justify covering the collision, a substantial minority of the public will be offended, even by the low-key reporting bound to result from Rules 1 and 2.

Editors will, therefore, intersperse reporting of the meteor story with announcements that a remarkably beguiling story of interest to all mankind will be reported as soon as this unpleasant meteor thing has run its course.

To keep this promise, a poll will be taken to determine what story of the past the public loved more than any other story ever reported.

This will probably require the news industry to reconstruct the wedding of Grace Kelly and Prince Rainier.

Awkward? To be sure, but it's time the media realized they have obligations to please the public, too.

And no feeding frenzy like last time in Monaco, either!

BILL MODISETT

American politics could use 'Hipshot' of moderation

Modisett

It's the season of politics, and that should be enough explanation for what Michael Dukakis and George Bush are saying about one another these days.

But the voters shouldn't take every word they hear as gospel. No, the Democrats do not hold the key to the future. But neither is strict Republican ideology in the best interests of the nation. Both liberal and conservative thought can prove beneficial to the nation...when used with care.

It calls to mind the wisdom of "Hipshot," the gun-slinging, hard-drinkin', cat-loving cartoon character in the Rick O'Shay comic strip of years gone by.

Hipshot's wisdom?

Moderation in all things. One can assume that "all things" included politics.

Hipshot seemed to know that too much of anything — too much hard work, too much gambling, too much leisure and, certainly, too much drinkin' — was not good for any individual. He also knew that a gun was a valuable commodity, but that there was a time to use it and a time to leave it alone.

Political ideology is a valuable commodity. It can provide direction and focus the attention of a segment of the population or even the nation as a whole.

But just as quickly as it can be the stimulus for political victory, it can become an albatross when carried to extremes. One example is liberalism that breeds unyielding governmental intrusion into private enterprise, which can kill the entrepreneurial spirit. Another is conservatism so blindly followed that the "helping" nature of government is cast aside, leaving millions on the bottom rungs of society to slip through the cracks.

Some blind men can see more clearly than those with perfect vision. But ideological blinders can blur a man's mind, where wisdom resides, or cast a shadow across man's soul.

The great Democratic exodus of the late 1970s and early 1980s, when large numbers of conservatives in Texas realized the party had disappeared from under them, is vivid proof that a majority of people accept without question Hipshot's "moderation rule." The two extremes — the far left and the far right — are simply that, extremes. Who wants to be labeled an extremist?

Not many Americans, I think. Americans tend to be moderate, although getting stuck with a label is easy enough. The meaning of the labels change with the times. Yesterday's conservative Democrat may be sitting in Congress today wearing a liberal Republican button.

So don't put too much stock in what you hear Bush or Dukakis saying in the heat of a political campaign. That's political ideology speaking.

To maintain political balance, pay more attention to what Hipshot advised: Moderation in all things.

FLORA LEWIS

Soviets' 'new thinking' could revitalize role of U.N. in world

Lewis

MOSCOW — The United Nations has long been lurching into disrepair, ineptitude and impotence. The main thing done about it was to ignore the world organization.

But since the Soviet Union unexpectedly changed its position, chances are starting to improve for making it work.

The Soviet policy is part of Mikhail Gorbachev's "new thinking" in foreign affairs.

Essentially, it is a recognition that military power isn't enough to insure Soviet influence in the world, that major war cannot be contemplated, and that Soviet domestic needs would be better served by pulling back from regional conflicts and if possible resolving them.

It follows logically that Moscow is seeking now to revitalize the U.N., since that is the best place for it to pursue a role that was getting difficult to sustain unilaterally.

A number of specific steps have already been taken, including paying up past dues. Moscow is now playing host to a big conference here on the "future role of the United Nations in an interdependent world."

There are reasons for caution in assessing how far this will really take the Soviets toward becoming peacemakers and how consistently new promises of cooperation in the U.N. will be fulfilled.

For one thing, there are too many Soviet proposals, on every possible aspect of U.N. operation — or paralysis — and too many of them are vaguely grandiose to take in earnest.

For another, the momentum of Gorbachev's reforms remains in serious doubt. It is easier to change Soviet foreign policy than to restructure the Soviet economy, and so the direction of this decision is probably irreversible.

But an ominous debate is surfacing, ostensibly about Stalin and the origins of the cold war, actually challenging the new line that "class analysis" doesn't apply to issues of world security.

"Class analysis" means simply that everything wrong is the fault of imperialists and capitalists, and that communists have a monopoly of good ideas and good intentions.

Though Soviet officials deny it, the argument echoes in reverse the warnings of American hard-liners about letting down the guard against the foe.

Nonetheless, official policy now is to strengthen the world system, undermined from the start by East-West conflict.

All the other things wrong with the U.N. have been encrustations on the fissured foundation. The secretary general's recent successes in regional wars owe a lot to the new Soviet stand.

Not surprisingly, prospects for peace in Afghanistan, Angola, the Western Sahara and Cambodia and between Iran and Iraq have excited a mania to "let the U.N. do it."

Now Iraq is saying the U.N. should assure clearance of the Shatt al-Arab, clogged by sunken ships. Some Palestinians talk of turning territories occupied by Israel over to temporary U.N. administration.

Ironically, inflated and unrealizable ambitions for U.N. responsibilities are coming along just when the organization is running out of means.

It can't pay for what it already has to do and will soon need to do.

Some people have suggested diverting supposedly vast savings soon to be achieved by disarmament agreements into building U.N. forces — sometimes the same people who already proposed using all that money for development aid, and then for protecting the environment.

That's the kind of blue-sky talk that makes U.N. debates so vapid.

The money has to come the way it always comes, from government budgets. The spotlight is now on the U.S., which can't consider its debts to the U.N. as another deficit, to be financed by foreigners.

By the time President Reagan goes to New York to make his last speech to the General Assembly this fall, he should certainly be able to announce that the U.S. will pay its arrears.

It may be self-satisfying but it is no excuse to say that since the U.N. refused to act when the Soviets wouldn't pay, the U.S. needn't meet its obligations.

And it is against U.S. interests.

Elliot Richardson, secretary of defense and then attorney general in the Nixon administration, points out that while relative U.S. power in the world has in fact declined, U.S. responsibility for leadership in maintaining world order remains intact.

That means a larger, more constructive role in international organizations, not copping out.

Richardson would make a good delegate to the U.N. in a Republican administration. Whether the Republican or the Democratic candidate wins, the next administration will have to be more U.N.-conscious.

It's good the Soviets are changing policy. It would be folly to leave them alone in the lead.

Midlanders make garage sale success

We would like to express our deep appreciation to the merchants of Midland area stores, parents of Midland High School students, and Midland area shoppers for their contributions to the Midland High School Booster Club Garage Sale.

It is through the efforts and support of the community that we are able to continue and expand our commitments to the extracurricular programs at Midland High School. We are looking forward to a successful year at MHS. The Garage Sale was a great beginning for the 1988-89 school year.

Where will tax hikes, bond issues end?

I am in full agreement with the recent letters concerning tax increases in Midland. And if this is not enough, the city fathers are planning yet another bond issue which, if passed, will surely require additional tax increases to support. Where is the end?

Speaking from a personal viewpoint, I find it appalling the city plans to supply utilities to Wadley Avenue and Loop 250 in exchange for a 150-acre plot to be designated as another park. This park will entail expensive furbishing in addition to maintenance.

Has the city of Midland considered supplying the residents of Melody Acres and Green Hill Terrace with any facilities other than city taxes since being annexed in 1979? Almost 10 years and we have nothing to show except our annual tax statements which continually rise. We were much better off before annexation. The county mowed right-of-ways and kept our streets in good repair. Now we either do our own mowing or it remains unmowed. And we constantly dodge the potholes in our streets.

Would it not make more sense to provide facilities to the existing taxpayers rather than trying to recruit new ones?

Growth is vital to any community but should the city of Midland show a responsibility to the existing taxpayers? With the depressed real estate market in Midland, the city should not be allocating additional taxes.

Numbers racket should be a 'sign' to others

Some three years ago a radio dispatcher complained on the air that emergency vehicles were having too much trouble finding residences at night. Signs were needed in clear and conspicuous places to be easily seen.

No particular improvement has been noted. But why are business houses the worst offenders? Many have no number at all.

Recently a yellow sheet was found taped to our front door. It stated that the Midland Fire Department, police department and ambulance drivers would greatly appreciate it if everyone would have a "reflective sign showing the house number painted on the street curb." Cost only $10.

This sounded great. Every house would now have a luminous sign in front! So we signed and re-taped the yellow sheet on the front door.

Next day a man knocked on our door and said, "The sign is on the curb." He collected 10 dollars. But the reflective paint would be worth it.

Later we searched over five blocks and found only one other residence where lived another dupe like myself.

Then we shined auto headlights on the new sign from various angles. Then we tried a flashlight. The sign is no more reflective than my old shoes!

Yesterday we were told that the perpetrators of that hoax are no longer in Midland. Good!

Police need reliable communications gear

In response to the letter published Sunday, Sept. 4, by Belinda Gentry, addressing the bond issue, Valerie Benton and I would like to present another point of view with regard to the public safety issue.

The upcoming bond election is divided into four parts, each of which may be voted upon separately. On behalf of Public Safety Communications, including law enforcement and emergency services, we would ask that all citizens concerned about their safety and a fast response to their emergency, vote yes for the public safety bond.

The police department communications center does not have the capability to monitor either the Midland Sheriff's Department or Department of Public Safety's primary radio channels. Only one channel is available to all three jointly, and during times of emergency it would be ineffective to attempt to coordinate all the efforts of several agencies into one channel. In addition, the police department cannot monitor the National Weather Service via radio. Any severe weather warnings are received by teletype and then broadcast on the air. The only contact between the police department and other agencies is by telephone.

Fortunately, disasters or emergencies such as Jessica McClure's rescue do not occur that often. Unfortunately, every day there is a variety of other emergencies that happen and that affect Midland's citizens daily. From a major traffic accident to a burglary in progress, the fast and efficient response of law enforcement and emergency services is dependent on the speed with which it can be relayed to emergency personnel. With the present equipment, response time is slowed due to inferior radio quality causing poor audio reception between the dispatcher and the officer. This can make the difference between life and death.

Again, we urge you to please vote yes, and think of the cost as an investment in yours and Midland's future, as well as another form of protection for those who make your safety their life.

Communications could be life, death issue

This letter is in response to the letter written by Belinda Gentry, regarding the upcoming bond election. The information she related was far from a true view of the Midland Police Department's communications situation.

The present communications system was installed in 1974. When either the base station or portable units break down, they have to be pieced together due to parts often not being available. Many locations across town have "dead spots" where the radios will not work. The portable radios will often not transmit inside a building, or on the north and west parts of town. Police and fire personnel, on the same scene, have no way to communicate except person to person. When police and emergency medical service personnel are at the same scene, and transmit on their individual frequencies, they bleed over onto each other's radios. The portable radios will only work on two of the four channels, because they are not strong enough to work. All police personnel work off two main channels, which are overloaded. Often, in an emergency situation, an officer is unable to get on the radio because of other communications.

At the Jessica McClure rescue, communications were very limited and poor. Radios would not work, and most communications had to be conducted by finding the needed person yourself or walking to your car and using a car radio. The various police and fire agencies could only communicate verbally, not by radio.

Our present computer is inadequate and approaching being full. Its down time is excessive, and causes delays in providing adequate service to the police officers and the citizens of Midland. It has been updated, but has reached its capacity.

Midland police and fire personnel are dedicated to serving the citizens in Midland. To provide adequate service, they badly need the items which can only be obtained through Proposition #4. Please support this important bond issue.

Soviet Union backs Dukakis in race; Chinese favor Bush

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — A significant development in our presidential campaign is that the Soviet Union is strongly supporting Massachusetts Governor Michael Dukakis for president and Communist China is supporting Vice President George Bush.

Foreign governments have seldom interfered in American presidential elections, but the increasingly strong Soviet support for the Democratic presidential nominee during the past couple of months apparently prompted the Chinese leadership to let it be known publicly it favored Bush.

Deng Xiaoping, China's senior leader, endorsed the vice president during a meeting in Beijing Wednesday with Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci and other U.S. officials. Recalling that Bush served as chief liaison officer in the Chinese capital in 1974-75 during the early phase of normalization of relations between our two countries under the Richard Nixon administration, Deng said he had a lot of contact with Bush and added: "I hope he'll win the election."

As vice president, Bush last visited China in 1985 and had established very friendly relations with the diminutive, dynamic promoter of China's modernization program and improved relations with the United States.

My hunch is that, apart from his personal relationship with Bush, Deng is concerned about Gov. Dukakis' weakness on defense issues, particularly as it applies to our military balance with Russia. In 1982, when he was vice premier and the top ruler of China — which he remains — Deng received my wife, Austine, and me, our two sons and their wives, and Joe Kingsbury-Smith, our national editor, for a 3-hour meeting in Peking's ceremonial Hall of the People where foreign chiefs of state are welcomed.

During the course of the interview, Deng stressed his conviction the ultimate aim of the Soviet regime is "to dominate the world." Expressing concern about the Soviet naval build up in the Pacific basin, he hoped we would maintain our 7th Fleet in the area to deter Soviet aggression against any of the Asian nations.

So, I can understand why he prefers the vice president to Gov. Dukakis as our next leader. He wants America to maintain a strong military posture against the Soviets while the latter obviously have been led to believe by Gov. Dukakis' statements that he will cut down our military strength.

This is not the first time the Soviets have taken sides in our presidential elections. They supported Jimmy Carter against Gerald Ford and had reason to regret it when President Carter led world opposition to their invasion of Afghanistan.

The Soviet media, which are, of course, controlled by the government and the Communist Party, started supporting Gov. Dukakis in July.

One of the leading analysts at the U.S.A. and Canada Institute in Moscow, Sergei Plekhanov, wrote in the party paper Pravda that Gov. Dukakis was "a strong leader" and that "in a cold war situation, a weak leader can be a disaster" — clearly implying Vice President Bush would be a weak leader. He then let the cat out of the bag as to why the Soviets would prefer Gov. Dukakis. "He has," added Plekhanov, "nothing but criticism for the Star Wars program."

That Soviet move to support Michael Dukakis against George Bush followed the former's statement at the Atlantic Council's annual convention in Washington that "We don't need SDI."

Since the polls have shown a majority of the American people favor President Reagan's program to defend America against nuclear attack, Gov. Dukakis has backed away from his total opposition to SDI. He now says he favors continued research but no deployment of strategic defense weapons in space — the one thing the Soviets fear most.

So, as the following report from Bernard Kaplan, our chief European correspondent, shows, Moscow is stepping up its support of the Democratic presidential candidate.

"The Soviets are making few bones of the fact they want Michael Dukakis to be the next president.

"Moscow's increasingly undisguised preference for the Democratic Party's candidate is all but unprecedented and is puzzling Western observers.

"In the past few weeks, Pravda, the Moscow Daily News, the Tass News Agency and other government organs have gone out of their way to portray Dukakis in an unusually favorable light.

"By contrast, the Soviet media seldom neglect an opportunity to mention Bush's past connection with the CIA and, in general, picture him as someone rooted in the Cold War era, for which Pravda in a lengthy article last week put the 'sole' blame on America.

"It has been normal Kremlin policy in most Western elections to prefer the incumbent to the challenger, even when the former is a conservative. But, in the current U.S. election campaign, the Soviets have broken with tradition and gone for Dukakis."

Bernie asks: "Why?" The reason seems obvious to me. The Soviets are fully aware of the positions Gov. Dukakis has taken in the past. Not only opposition to SDI but the modernization of America's missile forces, military aid to the Nicaraguan freedom fighters, and the liberation of Grenada from the Soviet-Cuban supported communist dictatorship.

No wonder Soviet leader Gorbachev would prefer Dukakis to Bush as our next president. I doubt Moscow's support will help Gov. Dukakis win in November. Let's hope if he does become president, he will stand as firmly against Soviet imperialism as President Carter did after the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan.

HOW THEY VOTED

Congressional Quarterly

WASHINGTON — Votes of area members of Congress on key issues during the week ending Sept. 9, 1988.

KEY HOUSE VOTE

House agrees to death penalty for drug-related killings. In a rush to complete tough drug legislation before the upcoming elections, the House Sept. 8 easily passed, 299-111, an amendment to an omnibus drug bill that would allow the death penalty for those who commit murder during a drug-related felony.

The death penalty provision was one of the more divisive issues considered during debate on the 400-page drug bill, which expands funding for drug enforcement and interdiction efforts, drug-abuse education, prevention and treatment programs, and calls for stiffer penalties against both drug traffickers and users.

The death penalty amendment requires a minimum sentence of 20 years, and allows life imprisonment or imposition of the death penalty for drug "kingpins" and traffickers who "during the commission of, in furtherance of, or while attempting to avoid apprehension, prosecution or service of a prison sentence for" a drug-related felony, intentionally kills someone. The amendment also provides instructions for dealing with extenuating circumstances such as appeals and possible racial discrimination in sentencing.

A similar death penalty provision passed overwhelmingly in the House during debate on a 1986 drug measure, but it was dropped in the final version of the bill. This year, the Senate has passed separate legislation imposing the death penalty for certain drug killings. A Senate filibuster is possible later this month, if a similar provision is attached to its version of the drug bill.

Supporters of the death penalty amendment argued that such harsh sentencing was needed to deter the rampant violence that has led to an increase in drug-related killings. "(T)he war on drugs cannot be won," said George W. Gekas, R-Pa., sponsor of the amendment, "without the ultimate weapon, the death penalty to be applied in the proper cases against the drug pusher, the trafficker, the dealer, who would kill in the furtherance of his enterprise."

Opponents of the amendment maintained that it posed little threat to drug dealers who routinely encounter drug-related violence. "The threat of capital punishment in 38 states has not deterred them (drug dealers) from committing capital crimes," reasoned William L. Clay, D-Mo., "and we all know it will not lessen their resolve to earn easy money and live in the fast lane." Further, they worried, the amendment would undermine efforts to extradite international drug kingpins, and would not protect accused drug offenders from racially-biased sentencing.

Voting for the death penalty amendment: Smith (R), Combest (R), Stenholm (D).

Voting against: Gonzalez (D).

Not Voting: Boulter (R).

KEY SENATE VOTE

Senate averts filibuster on textile-quota bill. Fearing a filibuster by "free-trade" senators who oppose protectionist trade legislation, the Senate Sept. 7 voted, 68-29, to invoke cloture and limit debate on a measure designed to set protective quotas for imported clothing, fabrics and shoes. The motion passed with eight votes more than necessary to invoke cloture.

In a move by the Senate's Democratic majority to head off a possible filibuster against the textile import-quota bill, the cloture vote was taken the same day the Senate was scheduled to begin floor debate on the legislation.

Despite a Reagan administration veto threat, the Senate Sept. 9 followed the House's lead and overwhelmingly passed its version of the textile quota bill. The measure now moves onto a House-Senate conference, where negotiators will attempt to work out a compromise.

The Senate-passed measure would freeze increases of non-rubber footwear imports and allow total imports of apparel and textiles to grow by no more than 1 percent annually, using 1987 levels as the base line.

It also would direct the president to portion put the permanent new quota by country and by product type and would authorize tariff reductions to compensate countries injured by the quotas.

Advocates of the measure and the cloture motion insisted that protective quotas are necessary and debate should not be delayed. In 1988 alone, they noted, first-quarter profits for the U.S. textile industry were down 12 percent and 31,000 textile and apparel jobs were lost. "I urge my colleagues to vote for cloture. The critical importance of the textile and apparel industry to this nation demands it," argued Strom Thurmond, R-S.C.

But opponents of the cloture motion, including so-called "free-traders" opposed to protectionist trade legislation, claimed that invoking cloture before debate of a bill was under way would set a dangerous precedent. "But procedure is only one thing; substance is more important," said Daniel J. Evans, R-Wash. "We need add no protection for the textile and apparel industry. It is already one of the most protected industries in the United States. ..."

Voting in favor of invoking cloture: Bentsen (D).

Voting against: Gramm (R).

Three incumbents were elected to the Stanton-based Cap Rock Electric Cooperative board of directors.

Carlos Dusek, A.D. Reed and Russell E. "Rusty" Jones, all farmers, were named to the board of the company which supplies power to rural and suburban West Texas areas.

Approximately 2,500 people attended the annual supper-meeting in which the three directors were elected to the nine-member co-op board.

The co-op buys its power wholesale from TU Electric and then distributes the power via its own power lines to 7,500 members in 13 counties.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Here's reminder: Yellow parking spaces for faculty cars

By H.A. TUCK

Tuck

Late registration is over, Labor Day is past, and classes are settling into their regular routine.

Most of the students have even learned which are faculty parking spaces and which aren't. Visitors also need reminders that parking spaces with white stripes are for them and for students.

The parking spaces marked in yellow are for faculty and staff only.

A small mystery was solved recently involving "The Case of the Missing Seal."

No, not a seal from Sea World or the circus. This was a painted wooden replica of the Midland College seal used on the front of podiums (podia?) for official functions. We'd been seeking it for several months, searching in all sorts of nooks and crannies...all to no avail. A plea in the campus newsletter, promising anonymity, finally caused the seal to reappear one evening.

When print shop manager-instructor Bob King was in Florida this summer he bought five lottery tickets at the urging of a friend he was visiting. He got rather excited last week when his friend called and told him he had winning numbers. No, not the single ticket that was worth $55 million, but one that had four of the six winning numbers, which took a third-place pay-off. Bob was preparing to fly back to Florida to pick up his prize. Then his friend reported Bob would collect a cool $60. The transaction now is being made by mail, while Bob considers what to do with his bonanza.

Starting Sept. 19 is a "Personal Financial Seminar" that will meet from 7-9 p.m. for three consecutive Monday evenings. Professional financial planning consultants will conduct the seminar, designed to assist those recently retired or contemplating retirement. Fee is $30 for one person or a couple, but enrollment is limited.

The same seminar will be conducted on Tuesday evenings, starting Oct. 18.

To register for either of these workshops, just go to the Continuing Education Office, Administration Building, or call 685-4518 for more information.

Still on display and drawing considerable attention is the exhibition by Warren Taylor and Daniel Buckley in McCormick Gallery. Watercolors and drawings by Taylor and photographs by Buckley are showcasing campus talent. McCormick Gallery is located in the Allison Fine Arts Building.

Exhibition hours are 1-5 p.m. Sunday, 8 a.m.-10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 8 a.m.-5 p.m. on Friday, and 10 a.m.-5 p.m. on Saturday. The show remains on display through Sept. 25.

There is a large number of continuing education courses starting this week, some of which might be of interest to you. The titles include: "Amateur Astronomy With A Telescope," "Nanny Training," "Assertiveness Training," "Bridge I" "Pilot Instrument Ground Training," "Private Pilot Ground School," "Self Hypnosis I," "Flight Instructor Ground Training," "Spanish I," "Crochet," "Introduction to Photography," "Interior Decorating I" and "Spanish II."

Those courses which include a "I" in their title have more advanced courses later in the year.

The photography course is one which I teach each semester and look forward to with great eagerness. Although it lasts just six weeks, it helps remind me of the skills which our faculty members need to enter classrooms each day to impart knowledge and skills.

To enroll for any of these classes, visit the Continuing Education Office in the Administration Building. The office is open from 8 a.m.-8 p.m. Monday through Thursday and 8 a.m.-5 p.m. on Friday.

Don't forget that Michael Martin Murphey is coming to Chaparral Center on Wednesday, Sept. 28, for a concert celebrating the 10th anniversary of Chap Center. Admission is just one can of food, with the donations going to the Permian Basin Food Bank and the High Sky Children's Ranch.

Murphey gained recognition in the 1970s as one of the Austin-based progressive country singers. His early hits included "Wildfire" and "Carolina in the Pines," while his latest are such songs as "What's Forever For" and "You're Talking to the Wrong Man."

"English As A Second Language" courses, usually known as "ESL," start this week in three different locales in Midland. These classes are for those residents whose native language isn't English. ESL is taught at three levels, depending upon the student's individual English language skills.

At the Adult Learning Center on the campus, ESL classes are taught Monday through Thursday from 9 a.m.-12 noon and Monday and Wednesday from 7-9 p.m.

Casa de Amigos, 1101 E. Garden Lane, also offers all three levels on Tuesday and Thursday from 7-9 p.m.

At the Boys' and Girls' Club of Midland, 110 E. New Jersey, Level I will be offered from 6:30-8:30 p.m. on Monday and Wednesday.

There's no charge for any of these classes.

Pappagallo's will hold fund-raisers for ALL STAR

From Staff Reports

Community support for the ALL STAR program has been strong. A new business, Pappagallo's, has joined the list of community businesses, such as Chevron-Gulf, who have donated time and money to this successful Midland Independent School District project.

Sally Reeder of Pappagallo's is organizing a series of events to raise funds for ALL STAR. Pappagallo's Teen Board, as well as several Midland and Lee high school football players, will be modeling the latest fall and winter fashions during a mother-daughter luncheon scheduled for Sept. 17 at Midland Country Club.

Tickets for this event are $15 and are available at Pappagallo's, Oak Ridge Square, at the corner of Wadley and Garfield.

On Oct. 15, an outdoor fiesta is planned. The fiesta will be a combined effort of Oak Ridge Square and Plaza Shopping Center merchants.

All proceeds of the all day activity will go to the ALL STARS fund.

ALL STAR, locally implemented in Midland public schools August 1987, is a positive peer leadership program aimed specifically at junior and high school students. Its name is an acronym for Activity Leadership Laboratories-Students Teaming Around Responsibility.

ALL STAR joins students, teachers, school administrators, and parents in the concept that young people can develop standards of behavior which positively affect their environment.

At the heart of the ALL STAR program is the proven theory that young people can take responsibility for their behavior.

This unique strategy, which has evolved since 1972, originated from the Center for Educational Development (CED) in San Antonio, Texas. CED is a non-profit organization which has developed successful strategies that many local school districts have used to define their substance abuse problems, and design and implement self-sustaining solutions.

By involving former professional athletes in the program, ALL STAR emphasizes the development of positive role models which can deter young people from socially and personally destructive behavior. Students are encouraged to develop their own standards of behavior in activities and academics which will benefit both themselves and others within the school and general community.

Woman chases down car thief

HOUSTON (AP) — A woman furious because her car was stolen outside of her apartment, chased down the thief and scared him out of her vehicle.

Allyson Land, 26, a furniture store clerk, said a friend who had gone out for cigarettes returned with news that her 1977 Toyota Celica had been stolen.

Thinking that the thief might still be in the neighborhood, Ms. Land borrowed her friend's van and went scouting.

"If I were going to go joy riding, I'd certainly steal a nicer car. It's yellow. It's got bumper stickers all over the back of it," she said. "...It's not something you could easily hide."

After a few minutes, she spotted her car at a stoplight, pulled alongside it and started yelling at the man behind the wheel.

"He was grinning at first...and then I said, 'Hey! You're driving my car!' and that's when he looked startled," Ms. Land said.

The thief made a quick turn and sped down a residential street with Ms. Land in close pursuit, blowing her horn.

She followed her car through several residential streets until the thief came to a screeching halt.

Seminars will be held to train notary publics

From Staff Reports

Permian Basin residents who hold Notary Public commissions in the State of Texas will receive update information at a special seminar Sept. 27 at Midland College.

Two three-hour seminars are scheduled to be conducted by the Texas Notary Public Association at Midland College's Allison Fine Arts Building.

One session is set from 1-4 p.m. and the other from 6:30-9:30 p.m. Fee is $65, which includes all course materials and certification by instructors from the TNPA.

Entitled "Texas Notary Law and Procedures," the seminar covers all duties and reponsibilities of the commissioned notary. Applicable statues, including the "new law" that became effective September, 1987, are thoroughly explained. Completion of the seminar not only assures the individual notary of knowledge, professionalism and legality of service, but also assures the public and employers that notaries know how to competently perform the duties of an individual state officer appointed by the Secretary of State.

"The best protection against business liability is education of notaries that handle the thousands of business transactions in this state daily," said W. A. "Doc" Ruhmann, president of TPNA. Notaries successfully completing the course will also be designated a Certified Public Notary (CPN).

Registration is being handled through the Midland College Continuing Education Department, Administration Buildilng. Other information is available by calling 685-4518.

Rotarians seeking business women to tour Belgium

From Staff Reports

Rotarians of Rotary International, District 573, are seeking four outstanding young business and professional women to visit Belgium in 1989 under the Group Study Exchange Program of the Rotary Foundation.

The program strives to improve international understanding by enabling young people from different countries to learn from each other. The awards involve exchanging teams of business and professional persons between 25 and 35 years of age for four to six week visits.

Team members also have the opportunity to meet their professional counterparts.

To obtain an application or to receive more information about the program, contact Jeff Sharifi, 2508 W. Golf Course, or phone 684-5125. Applications must be submitted by Sept. 27.

ARMED FORCES NEWS

Veterans of the first American Army division to invade Nazi-held Europe, the famed 36th Infantry ("Texas") Division, returned to the beach in Italy where they landed in 1943 to dedicate a memorial to their fallen comrades.

On Friday, members of the 36th Division Association commemorated the 45th anniversary of the amphibious assault at Paestum, south of Alerno, with ceremonies which will include American and Italian officials and dignitaries.

The Texas National Guard's 49th Armored Division band performed at the ceremonies at Paestum, and at subsequent events at sites near Naples where the 36th Division saw action. The National Guard also provided a color guard from Company G, 143rd Infantry, headquartered in Houston, which is the only unit still wearing the arrowhead-shaped "T-Patch" insignia of the 36th Division.

Over 200 members of the 36th Division Association, most of whom served during World War II, made the trip to Italy. A number of the German soldiers who defended Paestum also were expected to attend.

The monument dedication in Paestum was followed by a wreath laying at San Angelo Sepaturday where the 36th Division struggled to cross the Rapido River. Today, services will be held at the American cemetery in Nettuno, followed by another wreath laying at the tomb of the Italian unknown soldier in Rome on Wednesday.

Steffi completes Grand Slam

By PETER ALFANO
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — It took a 19-year-old West German with blond hair and a rapier forehand to give the National Tennis Center the tradition it lacked, and perhaps even some needed dignity. With the flags of the four Grand Slam countries fluttering in a strong breeze on the stadium court Saturday, Steffi Graf accepted the accolades and gifts of a tennis world that had just watched her make history in the United States Open.

For the first time in 18 years, tennis has a Grand Slam champion.

Graf joined the exclusive club when she defeated her teen-age contemporary, Gabriela Sabatini of Argentina, 6-3, 3-6, 6-1, adding the Open to her previous championships this year in the Australian Open, French Open and Wimbledon.

Only Don Budge, Maureen Connolly, Rod Laver and Margaret Court have won the Slam. Court was the most recent champion, completing it in 1970, when the United States Open was played at Forest Hills.

The Tennis Center is a much maligned byproduct of professional tennis, a place where money, not tradition, has counted most. Playing on synthetic Deco II hardcourt, which has replaced grass and red clay as the standard surface in tennis, Graf gave more than 21,000 fans a day to remember.

After the match, she rushed to the box seats where her family was sitting, hugging her father, mother, brother and coach Pavil Slozil. She participated in a postmatch ceremony, flag bearers adding to the pomp and circumstance.

Gordon Jorgensen, president of the United States Tennis Association, gave Graf a bracelet with four diamonds, one for each Grand Slam event.

Budge, who won the Grand Slam in 1938 and is one of Graf's fans, warmly congratulated her.

Graf then raised the Open trophy over her head in the customary victory pose. The victory was worth $275,000 in prize money for Graf, but that hardly seemed to matter. Earlier this year, she passed $1 million in prize money.

The final was a tense, if not classic match, the pressure obvious in some of the tentative points that Graf played.

But Sabatini also was eager for the challenge. The 18-year-old is ranked fifth in the world and is generally regarded as the player most likely to challenge Graf's status as the top player in the game. Last March, Sabatini handed Graf her only two losses of the year.

Men's results, Page 4C

"I think it is great what she did," Sabatini said. "Not too many people can win a Grand Slam. She won all with much confidence. Her mentality is perfect."

Graf has lost only four matches in the last two years, playing with a consistency that belies the grueling nature of life on the tour.

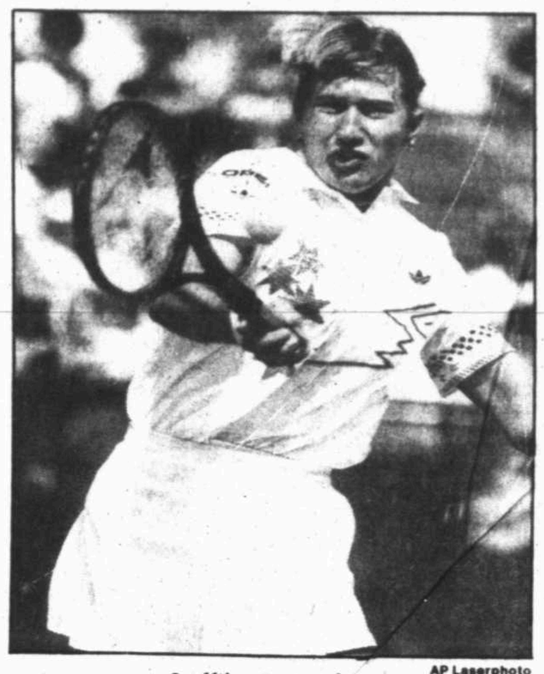

She has a 60-2 match record this year, and has defeated Sabatini in 12 of their 14 career matches.

Sabatini, however, has many of the same qualities that Graf brings to the court. She has an excellent topspin forehand, an ever-improving serve, and arguably, a better net game.

Saturday, she even varied the pace, looping some groundstrokes, making Graf supply her own power.

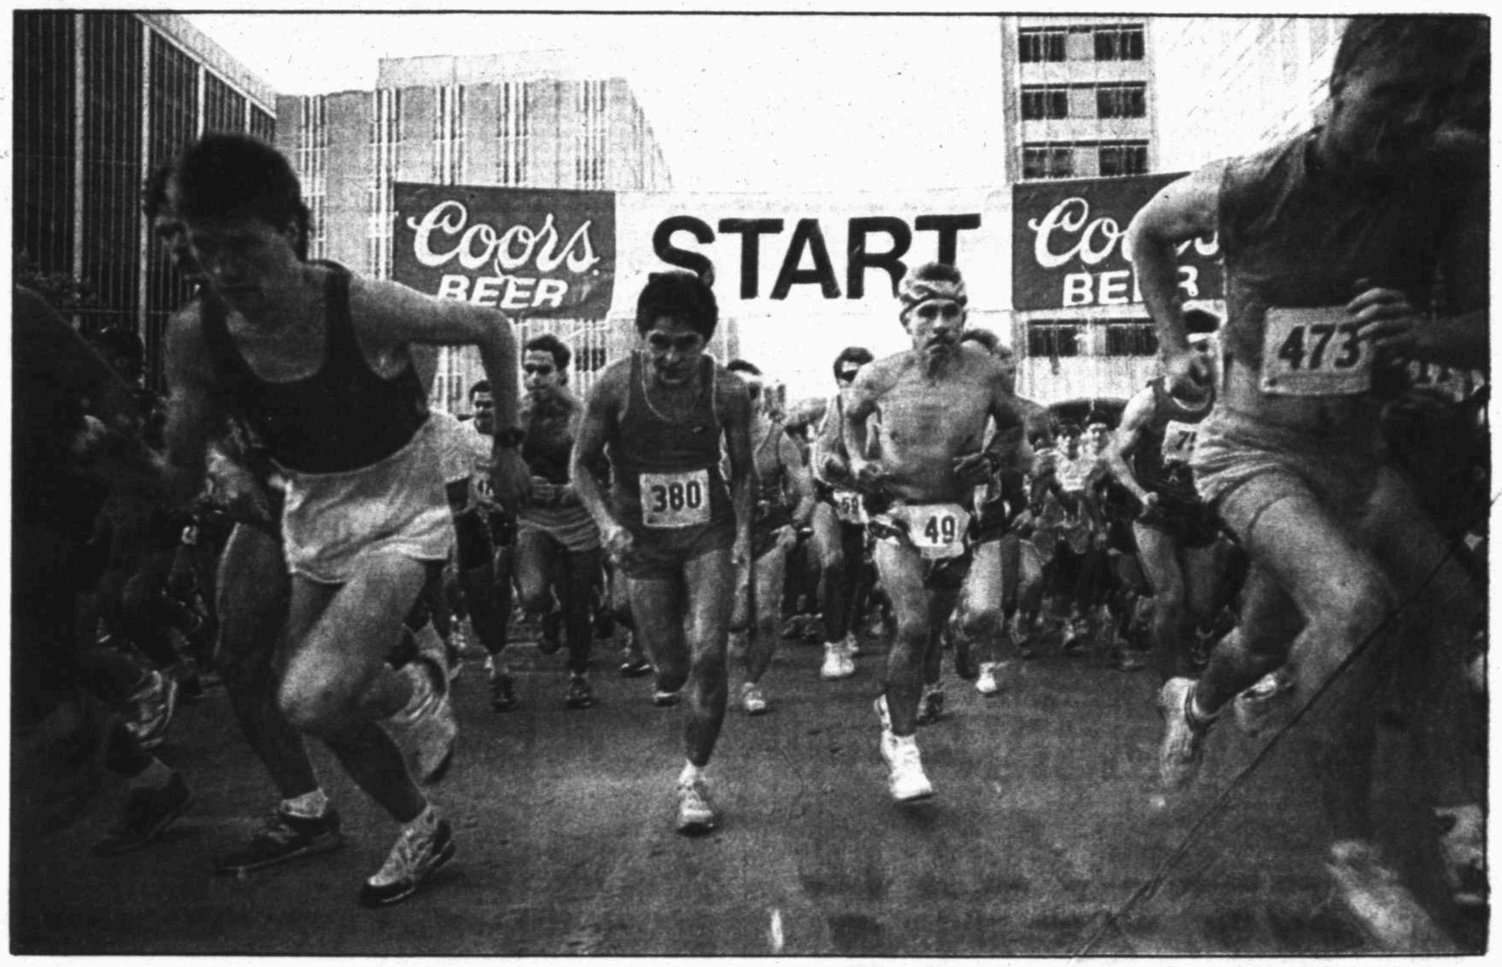

The difference between the two centers on Sabatini's penchant for tiring, her Achilles' heel, and the tendency for her mind to wander.

Local fireman burns up two-mile course

It's hard to run your best when you're by yourself and you have to make a 180-degree turn halfway through your race. At least that's the word from Midland Fire Department Capt. Dave Felice.

Not that Felice needed optimal conditions to win the SeptemberFest two-mile run Saturday. The former Penn State distance standout won his race with a time of 9:41.

Bob Jackson continued his mastery of the longer races with a easy win in the 10-kilometer race, while Helen O'Sullivan and Stacey Tighe took women's titles in the 10-kilometer and two-mile races, respectively.

Felice wanted to run closer to the nine-minute mark, but there was a mitigating factor or two that quashed that goal. First, he was off by himself from the start. Second-place finisher Joe Tighe finished more than a minute back.

Secondly, there was the matter of the highway cone that functioned as the turnaround point for the two-milers.

"It's tough when you have to do a complete 180-degree turn," Felice said. "I wish they'd make us go around a block."

Despite the time not being what he wanted, Felice was pleased with how things went in light of his recent training.

"I just felt like a good hard two-mile," he said. The local fire captain is currently preparing for the Johnstown (Pa.) Marathon on Oct. 2.

Felice ran a 2:23.55 at Johnstown in 1979, but his real goal is more on the long range.

He wants to qualify for the 1992 Olympic Trials. And, he only has to drop five minutes off his personal best to meet the qualifying standard of 2:20.

"I don't know if I will race more, but I will train more," Felice said.

In the 10-kilometer race, Jackson fought off a summer hamstring injury and his demanding position as a teacher-coach in Jal, N.M. to win by more than a minute. Odessa College freshman Brad Hawkins was far behind in second, while Midland's Robert Sanders finished a close third.

Jackson, a former Eastern New Mexico State University standout, had been hoping for much better at this race, such as perhaps a time in the 31-minute range. But a hamstring injury aggravated at July's Women's Distance Festival run hampered his effort.

Despite the injury and tough teaching-coaching schedule, Jackson was never seriously challenged.

Hawkins had some ideas, but "not after he (Jackson) took off at the three-mile mark," the former Odessa Permian standout said.

Drillers down Diablos for Texas League title

EL PASO (AP) — Gary Alexander's 3-run homer in the sixth inning keyed a six-run rally that lifted the Tulsa Drillers to a 7-4 victory over El Paso Saturday for the championship of the Texas League.

Tulsa won the best-of-seven series, 4 games to 2.

El Paso led, 2-1, going into the sixth. But Alexander, who had only three hits in the series until then, hit a 3-run homer to put the Drillers into the lead. It was Tulsa's only home run of the championship series.

Diablos first baseman George Canale said it wasn't Alexander's blast that sank his team as much as it was the three other runs that followed in the inning, after two outs.

"Instead of being down 4-2, 5-2, we're down 7-2 and there was just a big letdown. We played a pretty good game; they just played better. Those six runs put us in a hole ... we just dug it a little too deep," Canale said.

Ed Puig came on in relief for El Paso and retired the final 10 Tulsa batters, giving El Paso a chance to come back.

El Paso had runners on first and second with one out in the sixth. The Diablos scored one run in the seventh, but left runners on second and third with one out. They scored one run in the ninth, but left a runner stranded at third.

The Diablos appeared on the verge of digging out of that hole — especially in the seventh inning. They knocked out starter Steve Wilson when Roy Anderson led off with a double, Frank Mattox singled and Mario Monico brought Anderson home on a sacrifice fly.

A crowd of only 574 fans turned out to see the game.

Tulsa won its last Texas League title in 1982, also clinching at Dudley Field when it defeated the Diablos in game three of a best-of-five format.

V-Ball coaches optimistic

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Despite sub-.500 records in non-district play, volleyball coaches Sonja Pittman of Midland High and Janice Baulch of Midland Lee are optimistic that their teams can be in the thick of the District 4-5A title chase going into a MHS-Lee match Tuesday night at the Lee gym.

The Bulldogs have already defeated the Rebs in an early-season tournament at Monahans.

The 4-5A race could be tighter because there's no clear-cut favorite for a change. Both local coaches say perennial standout San Angelo Central appears to be down from previous years.

"I think any team could win it," Baulch said. Pittman concurs, but adds that Abilene High and Abilene Cooper could be teams to watch.

"The Abilene schools have done better since they moved their freshmen into high school three years ago," the fifth-year Bulldog mentor said. Having ninth-graders at the high school level increases their time in a high school program, something favored by most coaches.

Midland Lee

Baulch said her veteran team has plenty of athletic ability. But the Rebels don't always use that ability, she said.

"We're not putting the mental game with the physical," the seventh-year Rebel mentor said. The Rebs, 7-9, take last Tuesday's loss to Lamesa into their district opener with MHS.

The LHS spikers haven't defeated a Class 5A team yet this season, but that's not usually considered important in West Texas, where 4A and 3A schools traditionally rule their larger counterparts. The Rebs have defeated Monahans, Wink, Andrews, Snyder and Fort Stockton — proving that they could be competitive in District 4-4A, the group in which four of the aforementioned victims play.

Cougs go on record spree in 60-0 victory

SHREVEPORT, La. (AP) — Jason Phillips caught a Southwest Conference record 16 passes, two of them for touchdowns, in Houston's 60-0 rout of Louisiana Tech in college football Saturday night.

The teams threw a total of 129 passes in the game, an NCAA Division I record. Four Houston quarterbacks completed 45 of 73 passes for 552 yards in the Cougars' season opener and Tech, an NCAA Division I-AA team bidding to move to up I-A, hit 21 of 56 for 216 yards.

Houston also took advantage of seven lost fumbles by Tech, penetrated inside the 25-yard line five times without scoring and also had four touchdowns wiped out by penalties.

Starting quarterback David Dacus completed 25 of 43 passes for 310 yards and two touchdowns for Houston, and Andre Ware completed 14 of 20 for 195 yards and three touchdowns. Backups Ed Powers and David Klinger combined for the rest of the passing statistics.

Dacus threw one touchdown to Phillips and a 3-yarder to Jet Brown. Ware threw another touchdown pass to Phillips and two to James Dixon.

Baylor's Jeffrey Murray gains 15 yards and a first down before Kansas' King Dixon puts on the collar.

Bears overcome deficit to beat Hawks, 27-14

LAWRENCE, Kan. — Charles Perry ripped 13 yards off tackle for the winning touchdown with 1:36 remaining Saturday, lifting heavily-favored Baylor to a 27-14 victory over freshman-laden Kansas in the debut of Glen Mason as the Jayhawks' head coach.

Perry's sprint capped a 66-yard drive in eight plays that consumed only three minutes.

Baylor got an insurance gift touchdown with 20 seconds left. Anthony Ray scored from six yards out after Gary Joe Kinne intercepted a desperation Kansas pass and returned it to the Jayhawk 11-yard line.

The two quick touchdowns ended a day of offensive frustration for the Bears, who came in 18-point favorites in the season opener for Kansas.

Baylor opened its season a week earlier with a 27-3 win over Nevada-Las Vegas.

Junior Kelly Donohoe drilled two touchdown passes in a two-minute span of the second quarter and Kansas, which started seven freshmen and played 20 first-year players, made those points stand up until the final two minutes.

Baylor, its offense repeatedly stymied by a Kansas defense that includes four freshmen and four sophomores, finally got the break it needed from its defense late in the third quarter.

Brad Goebel passed to Perry for the apparent conversion but Baylor was penalized for illegal procedure. On the replay, Goebel underthrew Bobby Jack Goforth in the end zone to keep Kansas ahead, 14-12.

Trailing 14-3 at the half, Baylor drove 64 yards with the second half kickoff to trim the margin by three on former Abilene Cooper kicker Jeff Ireland's 33-yard field goal.

Baulch hopes that four returning all-around players can spur the Rebels beyond their customary middle-of-the-pack finish. Setters Marcia Del Llano and Ronnie Sandoval are charged with getting the offense going, while Melody Miller and Janice Samuels are capable outside hitters.

The Rebels use several players to fill the other two places on the court. Returning regular Monica Ramirez, a 5-9 middle blocker, alternates with back-row specialists Julie Bryan, LaDonna Lee and Sheila McHugh. Meanwhile, back-row player Maria Montez switches with 5-9 Marnie Sage at the other spot. Melinda Molina rounds out the squad.

Ramirez and Miller have been especially impressive this pre-season, Baulch said. "Monica is very strong and very powerful, while Melody is a left-hander, which gives her the inside track on hits."

Midland High

The Bulldogs took their lumps during a 4-9 non-district slate, but managed to play several West Texas toughies close, losing the third game of the match by two points on six occasions. Pittman says that's a good sign for her young team, which includes no starters from last season's Bulldog six.

"These smaller schools have played volleyball a lot longer than we have," she said. "Also, our junior high programs play eight to 10 games, while they play 20 or more.

"We have great athletes, but we have to get the experience."

Pittman has been using 10 athletes fairly regularly this season, but four players have been in the game for virtually every point — setter-hitters Gordy Rodriguez and Effie Freeman, and outside hitters Anita Montez and Meredith Harris.

Senior back-row specialist Shawnda Vines and 5-10 junior Cindy Offield split one of the other spots, while 5-9 junior Cindy Robertson and 5-5 senior Heidi Hodges usually see action at the other space.

Other varsity team members are Stephanie Sprowl, Kelly Lusby, Christi Underwood and Roschell Fryar.

Eight of the 12 Bulldog varsity players are juniors, giving Pittman reason to look ahead a year. But is she?

"We're not writing off this year," the coach said. "I'll match our athletes against those at any school."

"It's tough when you have to do a complete 180-degree turn," Felice said. "I wish they'd make us go around a block."

Despite the time not being what he wanted, Felice was pleased with how things went in light of his recent training.

"I just felt like a good hard two-mile," he said. The local fire captain is currently preparing for the Johnstown (Pa.) Marathon on Oct. 2.

Felice ran a 2:23.55 at Johnstown in 1979, but his real goal is more on the long range.

He wants to qualify for the 1992 Olympic Trials. And, he only has to drop five minutes off his personal best to meet the qualifying standard of 2:20.

"I don't know if I will race more, but I will train more," Felice said.

In the 10-kilometer race, Jackson fought off a summer hamstring injury and his demanding position as a teacher-coach in Jal, N.M. to win by more than a minute. Odessa College freshman Brad Hawkins was far behind in second, while Midland's Robert Sanders finished a close third.

Despite the injury and tough teaching-coaching schedule, Jackson was never seriously challenged.

Hawkins had some ideas, but "not after he (Jackson) took off at the three-mile mark," the former Odessa Permian standout said. He was able to outlast Sanders in the final miles for second place, however.

In the women's race, O'Sullivan had little trouble with her competition, defeating second-place Ulrike Kalt by almost two minutes. The soft-spoken servicewoman from San Angelo said she was pleased with her time of 38:55.

"I hadn't done a 10K in a long time," she said. The Republic of Ireland native is training for the ATC Championships at Randolph AFB in San Antonio later this fall.

O'Sullivan wasn't sure what her chances were going into the race.

"Usually when you look around, you can tell who's good, but there were a lot of girls in the race here."

There were a lot of people in the races, period, with 174 runners finishing the 10-kilometer race and 118 athletes taking part in the two-mile.

Lacy Jackson of Jal (guess who her dad is?) was the youngest two-mile finisher, while 64-year-old John Kirwan was the oldest two-miler.

Mustangs nip Three Way, 47-42

From Staff Reports

R.P. Johnson ran for three touchdowns and the Midland Christian Mustangs dodged some bullets in a 47-42 win over Three Way in six-man football action Saturday at the MCS field.

The Mustangs scored four of the first five touchdowns in the first half, but Three Way roared back behind the strong passing arm of Mario Guillen, who fired three touchdown passes in the second half. However, it was Guillen's three missed extra-point kicks that provided the margin of victory for MCS.

The Mustangs, 1-1, travel to Harper on Friday.

Lendl, Wilander in men's final

By BARRY WILNER

NEW YORK (AP) — After all the upsets, after all the new faces and surprise winners, the U.S. Open has come down to the top two. Again.

Ivan Lendl and Mats Wilander, neighbors in Greenwich, Conn., as well as the highest ranked men's players in the world, on Sunday will stage a rematch of last year's Open final.

Lendl moved to the edge of an unprecedented fourth straight American championship Saturday with a 4-6, 6-2, 6-3, 6-4 victory over Andre Agassi. Wilander, the second seed from Sweden, beat Darren Cahill of Australia 6-4, 6-4, 6-2.

The power and steadiness of Lendl's strokes were too much for the 18-year-old Agassi to overcome. The fourth seed from Las Vegas, Nev., saw his 23-match winning streak snapped. Agassi, who has won six tournaments this year, including his last three, was the youngest semifinalist in Open history.

"I didn't come here to beat Agassi, I came to win the tournament," Lendl said. "One was great, two was incredible, three was unbelievable and four will be better than that.

"I've beaten Mats the last six times, seven would be better than that," said Lendl, who is 13-6 against Wilander.

"I think his strength is he is a lot faster," Agassi said of Lendl, "and he doesn't only get the ball back, but he's prepared. It's tough to get him on the run or on the defensive."

Agassi's grunting in the first set put Lendl on the defensive and he complained to the umpire about it.

"Andre grunts, which is fine, but when he goes for winners, he grunts even harder," Lendl said. "It throws your rhythm and your timing off. I don't think he does it on purpose. I don't think he knows how disturbing it is."

Lendl also said he sensed, "in the second and third sets, it was like he was giving up. He went for shots he knew were not going to go in. It was almost like he was giving away the shots and I didn't understand that."

Agassi broke Lendl in the fourth game of the opening set, but Lendl responded with a break in the seventh game. Agassi then won the set with a break in Game 10.

But Lendl took control of the next two sets with his precision groundstrokes and forceful serves.

The fourth set stayed on serve until Agassi blew a 40-0 lead in the 10th game. When he sent a forehand wide, Lendl advanced to his seventh straight Open final.

Lendl, winner of 27 consecutive matches here, is seeking his first Grand Slam title this year and seventh overall. Wilander, who won the Australian and French Opens this year, also has six Grand Slam crowns. The 24-year-old Swede will stake a claim to the top ranking if he wins his first Open title.

"I think the record really speaks for itself," Wilander said. "It's hard to answer because it's not something I'm really thinking about.

"If I play . . . Lendl and I lose in straight sets, I'm not going to feel like No. 1. Over the whole year ... I think it would be hard for Lendl or Agassi to make up.

"It means much more for me to win the U.S. Open but, if it happens I do it, I think that's where I'll be."

Lendl thought the final would decide No. 1.

"I'll probably keep my No. 1 ranking on the computer if I win tomorrow ... put it this way, if I lose tomorrow, I can't be No. 1. But if I win, it's a pretty good chance."

Lendl is threatening Jimmy Connors' record for longest time as No. 1, 159 straight weeks. He can break the record if he is still No. 1 on Oct. 3.

Wilander struggled with his serve, being broken five times. But he broke Cahill eight times and had only 13 unforced errors.

"The reason for so many breaks was it was humid and windy and the balls were heavy," Wilander said. "When he serves, he tries to kick it and that's easy to break."

As for his own service problems, Wilander said, "I was playing a little too defensive and counting on being too steady."

Steadiness has been Wilander's trademark since he broke onto the tour in 1981. He has won three Australian and three French titles.

To win his first American championship, Wilander might need to alter his tactics. He knows it and he's ready to do so.

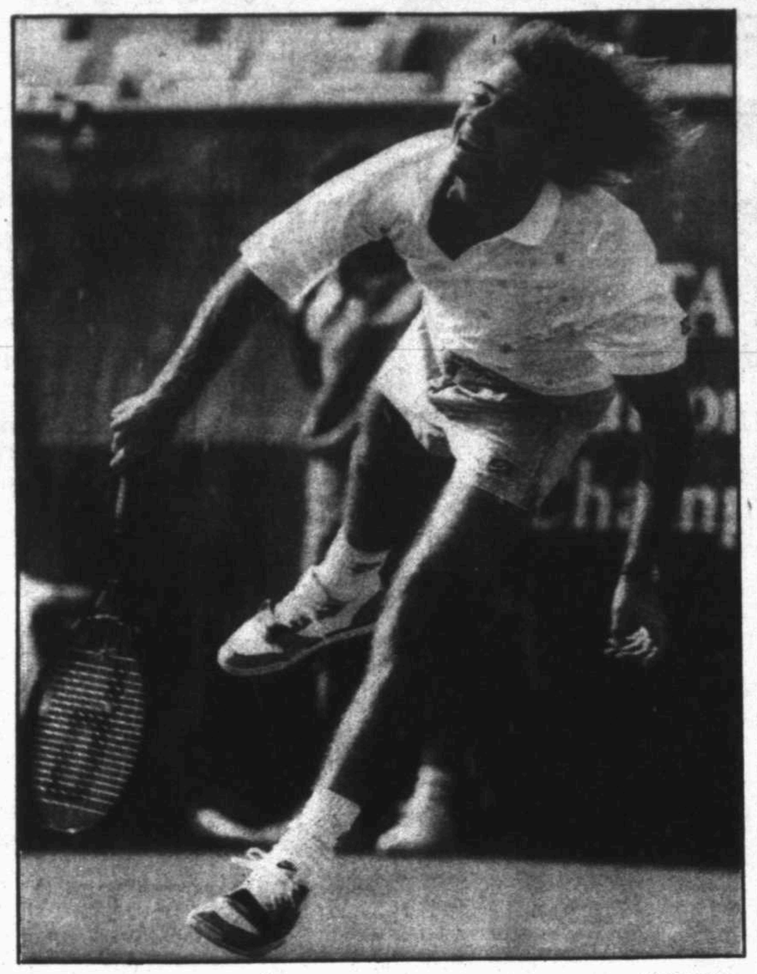

"Last year, I would hit a kick serve and come in, or whenever I would come in, I was doing it but not believing in it," Wilander said. "This year, I really believe I can win the points like that. I'm not doing it just to scare him."

Wilander didn't scare Cahill in their first meeting.

"I wasn't intimidated. I think I belonged and deserved to be out there," said Cahill, 22 and ranked 33rd in the world. "I tried to do good on my serve, but his return of serve, he does it so well. I tried to win free points on his serve and that's not the way to go against Mats Wilander."

Cahill was the lowest-rated player ever to make the semifinals of the Open.

"I'm not a very good tennis player yet. I still have a lot to learn," he said. "I think this is the best two weeks of my life. It's been a great experience and I was proud to be a part of this tournament at this time of the week."

STEFFI

Graf had advanced to the final when Chris Evert was forced to withdraw from Friday's semifinal because of a stomach inflammation. That probably increased Graf's anxiety level. She practiced with Slozil on Friday. He concentrated on hitting topspin forehands, emulating Sabatini. In the evening, Graf ate Chinese food and went to sleep at about 9 p.m.

"I was nervous and wanted to get out there, to finish this," she said. "It's been a tough two weeks, it wasn't easy for me, worrying about the Grand Slam. Now, I'm very happy not to have to talk about winning the Slam. I've done it, and there is nothing else I have to do."

"I knew she had to be nervous," Sabatini said, "but I just got too tired. I was trying, though. I played like I did against her in the last matches. I hit deep balls.

Green's course record paces Milwaukee Open

By JIM CARLSON

FRANKLIN, Wis. (AP) — Ken Green shot a course-record, 11-under par 61 Saturday to take a two-stroke lead after three rounds of the $700,000 Greater Milwaukee Open golf tournament.

Green, winner of the Canadian Open in a playoff Monday, birdied eight holes and eagled two to break the previous record of 62 at the 7,030-yard Tuckaway Country Club course. Green's total was 16-under 200 going into Sunday's final round for the $126,000 first prize.

Dave Barr, co-leader with Jim Gallagher Jr. at 10-under starting Saturday's round, was at 14-under 202 after shooting a 68. Next at 11-under 205 were Donnie Hammond, who had a 68, and Billy Andrade, who shot a 67. Gallagher was among four golfers at 10-under 206 after a 72.

"I don't know how you're supposed to feel after you shoot a 61 or what the thought process is when you tee up tomorrow," said Green, 30, a seven-year tour veteran from Danbury, Conn.

"It's my lowest round ever. The previous was 10-under. On the tour, I think my lowest was 7-under," he said.

His score was one stroke better than the previous Tuckaway record of 62 by Jim Thorpe in 1985 and Tommy Nakajima in 1987.

It was the best 18-hole score in a PGA tour event since David Edwards shot a 61 in last year's Bob Hope Classic.

"It's one of those fluke things," Green said. "Everything went right today, nothing went wrong."

But Green also made his own breaks. On the 445-yard No. 18, for example, his approach shot out of the right rough sailed within 15 feet of the hole and he made the putt for a birdie. He had made about an 18-footer on No. 17 for a birdie.

The eagles came on the 524-yard No. 6 and the 550-yard No. 16. On the sixth, he hit a 30-foot putt and on No. 16 he made a 50-footer. His one bogey came on the 197-yard No. 8.

PGA

"Eight birdies and two eagles — I've gone tournaments and not made eight birdies and two eagles," Green said.

His first eagle happened to be shown on the first hole ever to be televised live from the GMO, which is to go to full network coverage next year.

"I sure started it with a bang," Green said.

His score overshadowed that of Bob Gilder, who made the 36-hole cut by only one stroke Friday and then went to 10-under by shooting a 64 that was the best for the tournament until Green finished his record round.

"It was a good day; even the bounces went my way," Gilder said.

Gilder said one miracle bounce came when he was in the high grass next to a bunker on No. 15.

"I took a 7-iron and I hit it right over the green. I planned that it maybe would pull a little bit," he said. "It hit one of those rope stakes and kicked right at the hole about eight feet from the hole."

Bruins shuck Cornhuskers, 41-28

Associated Press

PASADENA, Calif. — Troy Aikman threw three touchdown passes, two of them to Charles Arbuckle, as fifth-ranked UCLA scored 28 points in the opening 14 minutes and went on to beat second-ranked Nebraska 41-28 Saturday night.

The victory was the 100th for Terry Donahue since he became UCLA's head football coach in 1976 and avenged three losses by the Bruins to the Cornhuskers in the last five years.

Nebraska had scored 42 points in each of those games — but the Cornhuskers fell far short of that total Saturday night before a Rose Bowl crowd of 84,086 and a national television audience.

UCLA's 41 points were the most ever scored against a Tom Osborne-coached team and the most against Nebraska in 20 years. The previous high against an Osborne team was 38 by Oklahoma in 1977. Osborne became the Cornhuskers' head coach in 1973.

The Bruins are 2-0 while the Cornhuskers fell to 2-1.

Aikman, who completed 13 of 22 passes for 205 yards with one interception, teamed up with Arbuckle on a 57-yard play after just 2:21 of play to get UCLA started. Arbuckle had five receptions for 100 yards, all in the first half.

Shawn Wills, a freshman playing in his second college game, scored on a 50-yard run to make it 14-0 with 6:38 left in the first quarter.

Aikman threw a 3-yard touchdown pass to Arbuckle just 3:17 later to make it 21-0, and Darryl Henley completed the first quarter outburst by returning a punt 75 yards for a touchdown with one minute to go in the period.

Nebraska scored early in the second quarter on a controversial 75-yard interception return by Mark Blazek.

But the Bruins responded, getting an 11-yard touchdown pass from Aikman to David Keating and a 42-yard field goal by Alfredo Velasco to give them a 31-point lead.

OU quarterback Jamelle Holieway is brought down by North Carolina's Stuffy Hewitt, 28.

No. 3 Clemson 23, Furman 3

CLEMSON, S.C. — Tailback Terry Allen scored two touchdowns and freshman Chris Gardocki kicked three field goals as No. 3 Clemson defeated Furman.

Clemson, 2-0, struggled on an overcast afternoon to defeat the I-AA Paladins, 1-1, who entered the game 3-1-1 since 1982 against Atlantic Coast Conference teams.

The Tigers, who have won the past two ACC titles, scored their first TD after recovering a fumble at the Furman 3-yard line and didn't have a single scoring drive of more than 52 yards.

Furman didn't look like a team playing against its highest-ranked foe ever before its largest crowd ever.

The Tigers were one notch higher ranked than Florida State was when Furman lost to the Seminoles a year ago. And the 80,300 at Death Valley easily eclipsed the 56,244 that saw the Paladins beat South Carolina at Williams-Brice Stadium in 1982.

No. 4 Oklahoma 28
North Carolina 0

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — Fourth-ranked Oklahoma, directed by its speedy quarterback tandem of Jamelle Holieway and Charles Thompson, racked up nearly 400 rushing yards Saturday in opening its season with a 28-0 college football victory over North Carolina.

Despite having a decided advantage in speed against the Tar Heels defense, Oklahoma didn't break off the long plays for which its wishbone offense is noted. Instead, Oklahoma used three sustained drives to get its points, and the fourth touchdown resulted when a North Carolina penalty on a Sooner field goal attempt kept a drive alive.

Oklahoma rushed 71 times for 391 yards. Holieway and Thompson combined to complete three of six passes for 72 yards. The Sooners fumbled seven times and lost two.

The Tar Heels, 0-2, have not scored in their last six quarters. Against Oklahoma, North Carolina has one touchdown in the last three games in the series.

Using an intercepted pass to get started, Leon Perry's 1-yard dive late in the first quarter capped a 71-yard, 10-play drive for the Sooners.

North Carolina, which penetrated Oklahoma territory four times in the first half, crossed the 50 three times in the second half. The Tar Heels' only scoring opportunity missed when Hamp Greene's 51-yard field goal attempt was wide left near the end of the first half.

No. 6 Southern Cal 24
Stanford 20

STANFORD, Calif. — Quarterback Rodney Peete threw a 10-yard touchdown pass to flanker John Jackson with 1:19 remaining as No. 6 Southern California rallied for a victory over Stanford.

Peete's pass into the back of the end zone capped an 80-yard march to give Southern Cal the lead for good. Peete, who fared poorly as the Southern Cal offense sputtered in the first half, completed six of seven passes for 54 yards on the 10-play drive to the winning score. Peete, who hit only one of his first five passes and had two intercepted, finished with 16 completions in 24 attempts for 187 yards.

Tailback Aaron Emanuel carried 17 times for 121 yards and two touchdowns for the Trojans, 2-0 after winning the Pac-10 opener for both teams. Stanford, which last beat USC in 1975, is 0-1.

No. 7 Auburn 20, Kentucky 10

AUBURN, Ala. — Auburn's James Joseph ran for 110 yards and two touchdowns Saturday, but the seventh-ranked Tigers had to hold off a second-half Kentucky rally to defeat the Wildcats 20-10.

Joseph touchdown runs of 1 and 33 yards helped Auburn to a 17-0 lead early in the second half. But Kentucky quarterback Glenn Fohr directed the Wildcats on a comeback bid that was stymied in large part by an interception and two fumbles in the fourth quarter.

Auburn won its opener in defense of its Southeastern Conference title while Kentucky is 1-1 overall and 0-1 in the SEC.

The Tigers were hanging onto a 17-10 lead when Freddy Weygand fumbled a punt and Kentucky's Mark Sellers recovered at the Auburn 8. But Greg Staples intercepted Fohr in the end zone two plays later to kill the threat.

Auburn put the game away in the closing minutes when Doug Huntley recovered a fumbled punt at the Kentucky 15 to set up Chris Dickinson's second field goal, a 26-yarder which built the Tigers' lead to 10 points.

No. 13 Irish 19, No. 9 Mich. 17

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) — Reggie Ho, Notre Dame's 135-pound Hawiian place-kicker, made the first four field goal attempts of his career Saturday night, including a 26-yarder with 1:13 remaining, that gave the 13th-ranked Irish a wild 19-17 victory over No. 9 Michigan in the season opener for both teams.

Ho, a 5-foot-5 junior who tied the school single-game record by also connecting from 31, 38 and 26 yards, capped a 10-play, 71-yard drive after Mike Gillette's 49-yard field goal had given Michigan a 17-16 lead with 5:39 to play.

Gillette missed a 48-yarder on the last play of the game and Bo Schembechler suffered a second consecutive opening-game loss for the first time in his 20-year coaching career at Michigan. Notre Dame beat the Wolverines 26-7 in last year's opener.

An 81-yard punt return by Ricky Watters and Ho's first two field goals gave Notre Dame a 13-0 lead less than 15½ minutes into the game.

Michigan took a 14-13 lead on 1-yard runs by Leroy Hoard in the second period and quarterback Michael Taylor in the third quarter.

Marshall downs Permian

From Staff Reports

MARSHALL — Quarterback Benny Valentine scored a touchdown with 1:35 left in the third quarter here Saturday afternoon to give the Marshall Mavericks a narrow 13-12 victory over Odessa Permian.

Both teams went into the game ranked in AP's Top 10 with Permian ranked No. 5 and Marshall No. 10. It was the first non-district loss sustained by Permian since a loss to Amarillo in 1979.

Permian held a 12-7 lead through the better part of three quarters before Marshall pushed in the winning touchdown. The Mavericks then staved off three Permian drives deep in Marshall territory in the fourth period to notch the win.

Permian rolled out an amazing 427 yards total offense to Marshall's 195, but failed on several scoring opportunities.

Permian running back Chris Comer had his second 100-yard plus rushing performance of the year in the loss.

Permian got field goals of 25 and 31 yards from Chris Brewster and a 34-yard TD on a pass from Mike Winchell to Lloyd Hill, but Permian missed the point after on the Hill touchdown and that was the margin of defeat.

Permian is now 1-1 on the season and Marshall stands at 2-0. Permian faces Amarillo High at home next week.

Briton netters arrive for tournament

From Staff Reports

The proximity of the Maureen Connolly Brinker Challenge Cup tennis matches between Great Britain and the United States is emphasized by the arrival of the English team today at Air Terminal.

The matches begin Friday and run through Sunday, but Coach Ann Haydon Jones will take advantage of the early arrival to acclimatate her team on the Racquet Club courts, site of the matches.

The Connolly-Brinker Challenge matches players under-21 in a Wightman Cup rivalry and has been played annually since 1973.

The U.S. holds a wide advantage in the series, but is coming off a 6-5 loss last year at the Queens Club in London.

In fact, in recent years, you a lace hanky would cover the difference in the teams. The last three matches have ended 6-5.

The U.S. team is captained by Sharon Walsh Pete, former National junior champion, Wightman Cup and Federation Cup player, and boasts both NCAA 1988 finalists.

Halle Cioffi, University of Florida, and Shaun Stafford, a teammate, met in this year's NCAA finals, Stafford winning. Also on the U.S. team are SMU's Jennifer Santrock, a two-time medal All-America, Stanford's Deborah Graham and Meredith McGrath, 1987 National Hard court champion.

Clare Wood, Great Britain, and Santrock are playing their third MCB event. Santrock was 1-1 in '86 and 0-2 in '87. Wood was 0-2 in '86 and 2-0 in london last year.

England, however, will have three players, Teresa Catlin, Valda Lake and Sarah Loosemoore are playing in their second MCB.

The matches will start 12:30 p.m. daily with the grand opening prior to Friday's play.

The MCB is sponsored by the NCNB Texas National Bank and supported by the Midland Reporter-Telegram and KCRS/KWMJ radio.

The format is nine singles matches and two doubles.

Florida State back on track with 49-13 win

Associated Press

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Chip Ferguson passed for three touchdowns, including a 93-yarder to Lawrence Dawsey, as 10th-ranked Florida State defeated Southern Mississippi 49-13.

Ferguson, who left after the first series of the second half with Florida State leading 35-10, completed 12 of 17 passes for 239 yards.

Dawsey, who also caught a 16-yard scoring pass, and running back Dexter Carter each scored a pair of touchdowns for Florida State. The Seminoles, 1-1, came back strongly after being routed 31-0 by defending national champion Miami last week.

Florida State grabbed a 7-0 lead in the opening 20 seconds. Cornerback Deion Sanders intercepted Southern Mississippi's Brett Favre on the second play and raced 39 yards for a touchdown.

The Seminoles opened up a 28-0 lead midway through the second quarter as Ferguson passed for 191 yards by halftime. His first touchdown pass of 22 yards went to Carter, who also added a 2-yard touchdown run, to give the Seminoles a 14-0 first quarter lead.

Southern Mississippi, also 1-1, scored 10 points in the final 71 seconds of the half to whittle the margin to 28-10 by intermission.

No. 12 W. Virginia 45, Fullerton St. 10.

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. — Calvin Phillips caught five passes for 190 yards and Anthony Brown and Undra Johnson each scored twice Saturday as 12th-ranked West Virginia turned back Fullerton State.

West Virginia, 2-0, struggled to just a 3-0 lead in the first quarter on Charlie Baumann's 28-yard field goal, but two 1-yard scores by Brown in a 21-point second quarter put the Mountaineers in control by halftime.

Fullerton State, 0-2 and a team that flew in from the West Coast so late Friday night it didn't get a chance to practice, managed its only points in the fourth period.

Phillips' receptions, three from Major Harris for 125 yards and two from backup quarterback Greg Jones for 65, tied a WVU record first set 20 years ago, when Oscar Patrick had 190 yards receiving against Penn State.

One of the receptions from Jones, a 37-yarder, gave WVU a 38-0 lead late in the third quarter.

Brown's first score wrapped up a 59-yard drive 11½ minutes before halftime and another came eight minutes later after a Chris Haering interception at the Fullerton 21.

No. 14 Alabama 37, Temple 0

PHILADELPHIA — Bobby Humphrey, showing no apparent side effects from two serious off-season injuries, ran for 91 yards and scored a touchdown as 14th-ranked Alabama opened its college football season with a 37-0 victory over Temple.

Humphrey, who suffered a stress fracture of his left foot in April and a broken jaw in July, ran eight yards in the first quarter for his 38th career touchdown. That tied the Alabama career record of 38 set by Johnny Musso in 1971.

The Tide, leading only 10-0 at halftime, blew the game open after Gene Jelks returned the second-half kickoff 96 yards for a touchdown.

The Alabama defense, led by nose tackle Derrick Thomas, had four sacks, recovered two fumbles and intercepted a pass as the Tide handed winless Temple its second defeat of the season.

It was the first time Temple has been shut out since a 35-0 loss to Pittsburgh in 1983, a span of 54 games.

Rutgers 17, No. 15 Michigan St. 13

EAST LANSING, Mich. — Scott Erney completed 25-of-36 passes for 239 yards and two touchdowns and Doug Kokoskie had a key fumble recovery as Rutgers stunned 15th-ranked Michigan State in the opener for both teams.

Michigan State tailback Blake Ezor, replacing departed All-American Lorenzo White, gained 196 yards on 33 carries, both career highs, but it was Ezor's fumble with 5:23 remaining that killed the Spartans' last drive at the Rutgers 11 yard line.

Erney tossed a 61-yard touchdown pass to Eric Young and an 18-yard scoring strike to Brett Mersola. Carmen Sclafani added a 39-yard field goal as the Scarlet Knights, playing only their second Big Ten opponent in the school's 119-year football history, built a 17-0 lead in the second quarter.

Michigan State's only touchdown came on a 1-yard dive by quarterback Bobby McAllister. John Langeloh kicked field goals of 37 and 32 yards for the Spartans, the defending Big Ten and Rose Bowl champions.

McAllister, under heavy pressure all day, completed 8-of-18 for 80 yards.

After Sclafani was wide-left on a 52-yard field goal attempt with 10:22 remaining, the Spartans drove from their own 35 to the Rutgers 15 where they had a first-down situation.

Ezor was tackled for a 1-yard loss. On the next play, Ezor skirted right end for a 6-yard gain but fumbled and Kokoskie recovered as the Knights controlled the ball the rest of the game.

No. 16 South Carolina 38 W. Carolina 0

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Mike Dingle, starting in his first football game for 16th-ranked South Carolina, scrambled for 85 yards and two touchdowns as the Gamecocks overpowered Western Carolina.

Dingle, a 6-3, 230-pound sophomore who was filling in at fullback for the injured Keith Bing, had 65 yards in the first half but had to leave the game with an injury late in the third quarter.

South Carolina improved to 2-0 while Western Carolina dropped to 0-2.

The Gamecocks, who scored enough points to win on their first possession with a 47-yard field goal by Collin Mackie, led 17-0 at halftime and used reserves the entire fourth period.

South Carolina's first touchdown came late in the first quarter on a 9-yard sprint around left end by tailback Gerald Williams, who was starting in place of injured Harold Green. Williams had 108 yards rushing.

Both Green and Bing were hurt in the Gamecocks' 31-10 victory over North Carolina last weekend.

The closest Western Carolina came to scoring was a drive that reached the the South Carolina 36-yard line before time ran out in the second quarter.

Iowa 45, Kansas St. 10

MANHATTAN, Kan. -- Chuck Hartlieb passed for 253 yards and Brad Quast, a 240-pound linebacker, lumbered 94 yards with an interception return to tie an Iowa record and spark the 17th-ranked Hawkeyes past Kansas State.

Iowa, favored by 31, led only 17-10 at halftime but took command with two quick touchdowns in the third period. Then Quast made it 38-10 with 5:16 to go in the third when he stepped in front of a Carl Straw pass and fled down the sideline.

Outrunning the K-State quarterback the final 25 yards, Quast matched the Iowa record for an interception return set by Bobby Stearns against Montana in 1954.

Late in the fourth quarter, defensive back Brian Wise sped 81 yards with an interception for Iowa's final touchdown. Kansas State, 0-2, saw its winless string reach 18 games while Iowa went to 1-1.

No. 18 Penn St. 42 Virginia 14

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — Gary Brown ran for two touchdowns and caught a 19-yard pass for a third as No. 18 Penn State opened its season by sco. ng 21 poimts in the first 9:07 of the game to defeat Virginia.

Brown, a sophomore tailback filling in for Blair Thomas, who is recovering from knee surgery performed in January, carried seven times for 38 yards, scoring on runs of five and 19 yards. He caught three passes for 45 yards.

Also running for two Penn State touchdowns was fullback Sam Gash, who gained 16 yards on four carries.

Penn State forced a pair of turnovers in building its early 21-0 advantage.

The Nittany Lions marched 61 yards on their first possession of the football game, with Gash scoring on a 1-yard run.

No. 20 Washington 20 Purdue 6

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. — Senior Aaron Jenkins rushed for a career-high 162 yards on 24 carries, including a 67-yard run that set up one of two John McCallum field goals, as No. 20 Washington beat Purdue 20-6 Saturday.

It was the second consecutive year the teams opened their seasons against each other; Washington took both games.

Jenkins, a 6-foot, 232 pounder, was caught from behind by Marc Foster and brought down at the Purdue 23 to set up the game's first score.

Reality rears its ugly head, Aggieland in shock

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — The day that Texas A&M football coach Jackie Sherrill dreaded has finally arrived.

"We're not proud to be here today but we're glad this day has come and now we can get on with our program," Sherrill told a packed news conference Friday.

"Ask all your questions today because after we finish here I will not answer any more questions about it."

After more than a year's investigation, the NCAA slapped the Southwest Conference school with a two-year probation, including a cut of five scholarships for next season, and leveled penalties against two assistant coaches.

The NCAA said Sherrill, as athletic director, did not exercise enough administrative control over the athletic program and apparently was unaware some of the violations were taking place.

Sherrill disagreed with many of the 25 violations listed by the NCAA in its 12-page report.

Sherrill admitted a need for better adminisrative control but said many of the allegations could not be proven. "But it was the (infractions) committee's call," he said.

A&M president William H. Mobley said the Aggies likely wouldn't appeal the probation and Sherrill agreed.

"We'll take the hand that's been dealt us," Sherrill said. "We've had our say and they've had theirs. It's not a normal appeal process."

Should the Aggies win their fourth consecutive Southwest Conference title this season, the second-place team will represent the league as host team in the 1989 Cotton Bowl.

Two assistant coaches unnamed in the report were disiplined by the NCAA. The coaches will not be allowed to recruit off campus and will not be allowed any merit pay increases.

Their jobs will be reviewed at the end of the season.

"I never told you that we were pure," Sherrill said. "In college football or basketball, it's difficult to sit there and say nothing has ever happened or will happen.

"But it's our responsiblity to make sure it doesn't happen."

The NCAA report was critical of Sherrill's lack of control over assistant coaches, athletes and "representatives of its athletic interests," meaning the school's alumni and boosters.

"The university's assistant football coaches, student athletes and representatives of its athletics' interests engaged in a variety of activities that demonstrated that these individuals had little knowledge of or regard for NCAA standards," the report said.

According to the NCAA, football prospects or their relatives were offered improper inducements or were told in such a way to imply they would receive improper inducements or benefits if the prospect attended Texas A&M.

"These violations for the most part appear not to have been discovered by the director of athletics, who also is the head football coach," the NCAA said.

"Although this individual had formally established some educational and monitoring systems, these systems did not, in fact, function in a manner that gave the institution appropriate control of its intercollegiate football program."

Mobley said he backed Sherrill, but has shifted responsibility for compliance with NCAA rules to Robert Smith, the school's vice president for finance and administration.

Mobley also said a new post of intercollegiate athletic compliance director had been created and the holder of that post would report to Smith.

Under the order, Texas A&M will be allowed to offer 20 new scholarships for next year, a decrease of five; have 75 on-campus recruiting visits this academic year, down by 10; and only eight football coaches will be allowed to recruit off campus, down by two.

Arkansas nips Tulsa

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. — Quarterback Jimmy Williams came off the bench twice to complete third-down passes in an 80-yard touchdown drive that lifted Arkansas past Tulsa 30-26 on Saturday.

The victory was not secured until Kerry Owens separated Tulsa quarterback T.J. Rubley from the ball with slightly more than a minute remaining and Arkansas' Wayne Martin recovered on the Arkansas 19.

Arkansas improved to 2-0 despite the performance of Rubley, who was never pressured until the final minutes. Time after time, he dumped the ball to receivers who made Arkansas tacklers miss them as they turned short passes into nice gains. Tulsa is now 1-1.

Giants' designated speedster steals Astros blind

Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Donell Nixon, the San Francisco Giants' designated speedster on the bench, helped his club steal a 3-2 victory Saturday over the Houston Astros.

Nixon, acquired from the Seattle Mariners June 24, stole his 10th base while pinch running in the seventh inning, and scored on Jose Uribe's one-out single up the middle to crack a 2-2 tie.

"Donell is a valuable weapon," Giants Manager Roger Craig said. "I'd like to play him more, but then I wouldn't have his speed on the bench when it's needed."

Craig also was impressed with rookie left-hander Trevor Wilson, who yielded one run the first six innings in his second major league start. Wilson was chased in the seventh when doubles by Rafael Ramirez and Gerald Young created a tie.

"Wilson showed me something," Craig said. "We taught him a cut fastball, and he picked it up real quick. He must have thrown about 40 of them today."

Wilson, who also singled for his first major league hit and scored a run in the third inning, said he developed the new pitch because his curveball has been inconsistent.

National League

Dodgers 5, Reds 0

LOS ANGELES — Orel Hershiser became a 20-game winner for the first time in his five-year major league career with a seven-hitter.

The victory, coupled with Houston's loss earlier in the day, restored the Dodgers' margin in the National League East to five games over the Astros and 6½ games over the third-place Reds.

Hershiser, 20-8, recorded his fourth straight complete game and his 12th of the season while striking out eight and walking three.

Padres 6, Braves 2

SAN DIEGO — Right-hander Eric Show pitched a three-hitter and singled home a run.

Show, 13-11, allowed only a second-inning homer to Ozzie Virgil and an RBI single by Dale Murphy as he pitched his sixth complete game in his last eight starts and 11th overall. Show struck out six and walked two.

Roberto Alomar tripled, singled twice and drove in two runs, while Garry Templeton singled three times and also knocked in a pair of runs to lead the Padre attack. Five of the San Diego runs came in the first five innings off Braves starter Rick Mahler, 9-14.

Mets 6, Expos 0

MONTREAL — David Cone pitched a seven-hitter for his fourth shutout of the season and rookie sensation Gregg Jefferies triggered two rallies.

With the victory, the Mets maintained their NL East lead at nine games over the Pittsburgh Pirates and reduced their magic number for winning the division title to 14.

Pirates 5, Phillies 1

PITTSBURGH — Dave LaPoint won his seventh straight decision, pitching a six-hitter.

The Pirates, who began the night nine games behind the front-running New York Mets in the NL East, won for the fourth time in five games and handed the Phillies their fourth consecutive loss.

Cardinals 9, Cubs 3

ST. LOUIS — Scott Terry won his sixth straight game as a starter and Jose Oquendo drove in three runs as St. Louis won its sixth straight victroy.

St. Louis moved into fourth place ahead of Chicago, the highest the Cardinals have been in the National League East standings since June.

Terry, 8-3, allowed nine hits, struck out one and walked two in 7 2-3 innings before Dan Quisenberry finished up.

Bosox' Clemens fires one-hit blanks

Associated Press

BOSTON — Roger Clemens allowed no hits for 7⅓ innings before Dave Clark singled and the Boston Red Sox beat the Cleveland Indians 6-0 Saturday for their fifth victory in six games.

Clemens finished with a one-hitter, the first of his career, en route to his eighth shutout of the season.

Six pitchers this season have lost no-hitters in the ninth inning. Cincinnati's Ron Robinson was one out away from a perfect game. The last no-hitter in the majors was by Milwaukee's Juan Nieves on April 15, 1987, a 7-0 victory over the Orioles at Baltimore.

Clemens, 16-10, who had entered the game with a career-high five-game losing streak, retired the first 14 batters in order before walking Clark on a 3-1 count in the fifth.

The two-time Cy Young Award winner then retired the next eight batters until Clark hit the first pitch for a looping single to shallow right-center field.

On May 25, 1986, Clemens had a no-hitter for 7⅔ innings in Texas until Oddibe McDowell singled.

Clemens would have been the first pitcher to throw a no-hitter in Boston since the Red Sox's Dave Morehead beat Cleveland 2-0 on Sept. 16, 1965.

Yankees 9, Tigers 4

NEW YORK — Don Slaught's two-run double sparked a six-run rally in the seventh inning and the Yankees charged to their third straight victory over the slumping Tigers.

The Yankees won for just the sixth time in 16 tries and stayed 4½ games behind American League East-leading Boston, which beat Cleveland 6-0. The Tigers have lost 16 of 19 and fell 3½ games back, their largest deficit since June 9. The teams conclude the four-game series Sunday.

Slaught went 4-for-5 with a pair of doubles, Rickey Henderson ended a 4-for-48 slump with three run-scoring singles and Dave Winfield reached the 100 RBI mark for the sixth time in seven seasons. They all contributed in the seventh inning as New York overcame a 4-3 deficit against Jack Morris, 12-13, and three relievers.

Royals 9, Athletics 4

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Pat Tabler got his seventh hit in eight at-bats with the bases loaded this season as Kansas City scored four runs in the second inning.

Boston pitcher Roger Clemens pitches his way to a one-hit shutout over Cleveland to keep the Red Sox in first place in the AL East.

Tabler has 18 runs batted in with the bases loaded this season and is 36-for-63, a .571 average, with 85 RBI when batting with the bases loaded in his career.

Larry Owen, Bill Pecota, Willie Wilson and Tabler drove in two runs each as the Royals ending Storm Davis' 10-game winning streak.

Davis, 15-5, had not lost since June 28, when Milwaukee beat him 4-1. He lasted just 3 1-3 innings Saturday, giving up eight hits and five runs.

Charlie Leibrandt scattered seven hits for his sixth straight victory over Oakland.

Jose Canesco hit a two-run homer in the ninth, his league-leading 38th. He also stole his 36th base.

Mariners 1, Brewers 0

MILWAUKEE — Eric Hanson allowed three hits over 7⅓ innings in his second major league start as the Brewers dropped 5½ games out of first.

Hanson, 1-1, had given up two unearned runs in his first start, losing to Minnesota and Frank Viola Monday. The right-hander struck out five and walked two against the Brewers before before Mike Schooler finished with hitless relief for his 12th save.

Teddy Higuera, 13-9, pitched a three-hitter, striking out six and walking four in his eighth complete game.

Orioles 7, Blue Jays 4

BALTIMORE — Joe Osulak hit a two-run double in a six-run fifth inning and Toronto fell 7½ games behind the American League East-leading Boston Red Sox.

Jeff Ballard, 8-11, gave up eight hits and two runs in seven innings. Mark Williamson, the fifth Baltimore pitcher, got the last out for his second save.

Twins 6, White Sox 5

CHICAGO — Gene Larkin doubled home Kent Hrbek from second base with one out in the 12th inning.

Kirby Puckett singled off Scott Rosenberg, 0-1, who relieved to start the 12th. Hrbek, who had four hits, then doubled and Puckett was thown out at the plate on a relay from second baseman Donny Hill, who took left fielder Daryl Boston's throw. Larkin then double to right.

UTEP pounds Weber State

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Tailback John Harvey scored five touchdowns as Texas-El Paso beat Weber State 48-21 Saturday night.

Harvey, a 177-pound senior, scored on runs of 11, 8, 52, and 1 yards and on a 4-yard pass from quarterback Pat Hegarty. It was the second time in his career at UTEP that Harvey scored four or more touchdowns.

With nine games to go, Harvey already holds the school's career record for most touchdowns scored. His five TDs boosted his career total to 39.

The old school record was 25, set by Fred Wendt from 1944-48.

Playing only three quarters, Harvey gained 135 yards on 16 carries.

UTEP scored its first touchdown on its second play.

King holding one shot lead

By WILLIAM C. CRUM

LPGA

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Betsy King, winner of last week's Rail Charity Classic, took the second-round lead by one stroke Saturday at the $250,000 Cellular One-Ping Golf Championship.

King, who started the day at 1-under par, shot a 2-under 70 for a two-day total of 141 over the 6,285-yard, par-72 course at Riverside Golf and Country Club. Stephanie Farwig, Sandra Haynie and Penny Hammel were tied for second at 2-under-par 142.

King emerged as the leader late in the afternoon as Hammel took a double-bogey and Farwig took a bogey on the 18th hole.

King said she did not feel like she had played particularly well and was happy to have the lead after two rounds of the 54-hole tournament.

"The course is playing tough," King said. "The greens are firm and they're fast. Still, I made a couple of good putts today to help myself out."

King said Riverside's greens, which gave players fits all day, were the fastest on the Ladies Professional Golf Association tour this year.

"We're just not used to it," she said.

She said the speedy greens made putting a difficult mental exercise and "it makes it hard to chip, too."

First-day co-leader Colleen Walker saw her putter abandon her, as she missed an 18-inch putt for birdie on the first hole and went on to take bogeys on the third, fourth, fifth, sixth and ninth holes. She shot even par on the back nine to fall to 1-over for the tournament, four shots off the pace.

The other first-day leader, Susan Sanders, was 4-over for the day and alone at even-par 144 for the tournament.

Hammell, who started the day at 2-under, took the lead briefly on the back nine when she birdied 11, took a par on 12, and sank three consecutive long putts, including a 40-footer on 15, to move to 5-under headed to the 16th tee.

Sealed proposals addressed to the Honorable Mayor and City Council of the City of Midland, Texas will be received at the office of the City Secretary, City Hall, Midland, Texas, until 2:00 P.M., October 4, 1988, for furnishing all necessary materials, machinery, equipment, superintendence, and labor for constructing certain improvements at the Midland International Airport, Midland, Texas.

Immediately following the closing time for receipt of bids, proposals will be publicly opened and read aloud. Any bid received after closing time will be returned unopened.

The principal items of work for Midland International Airport set forth in specific detail in the Proposal section of these specifications; however, the work items may be generally described as installation of new runway taxiway lighting, electrical manholes, wiring and conduit, a new electrical vault and equipment, runway and taxiway signing, a new sensor monitoring system, a new segmented circle and wind cone, and miscellaneous items of construction.

A bid proposal guaranty is to accompany the bid, thereby guaranteeing the good faith of the bidder and that the bidder will enter into the written contract. The guaranty is to amount to five percent (5%) of the total bid and must be in the form of cash or certified check, issued by a bank satisfactory to the City of Midland, or a bid bond. If in the form of cash or certified check, it is hereby expressly understood and agreed that the City of Midland is given the right to retain such as liquidated damages if such bidder withdraws its bid anytime after such bid is opened and before official rejection of such bid, or, if successful in securing the award thereof, such bidder fails to enter into the contract and furnish satisfactory performance bond and payment bond. If a bid bond is submitted, it shall be executed on forms contained in these contract documents by a corporate surety authorized to do business in the State of Texas, and acceptable to the City of Midland.

The successful Bidder will be required to furnish a Performance Bond and a Payment Bond each in the amount of the contract, written by a responsible Surety Company authorized to do business in the State of Texas, and satisfactory to the owner, as required by Article 5160, V.A.T.C.S., as amended by H.B. 344, passed by the 56th Legislature, Regular Session, 1959.

All lump sum and unit prices must be stated in both script and figures. The Owner reserves the right to reject any or all bids and to waive formalities. In case of ambiguity or lack of clearness in stating the prices in the bids, the Owner reserves the right to consider the most advantageous construction thereof, or to reject the bid. Unreasonable (or "unbalanced") unit prices will authorize the Owner to reject the bid.

Bidders are expected to inspect the site of the work and to inform themselves regarding all local conditions.

It is the policy of the Department of Transportation (DOT) that disadvantaged business enterprises as defined in 49 CFR Part 23 shall have the maximum opportunity to participate in the performance of contracts financed in whole or in part with Federal funds.

All bidders and proposers shall make good efforts, as defined in Appendix A of 49 CFR Part 23, Regulations of the Office of the Secretary of Transportation to subcontract two percent of the dollar value of the prime contract to small business concerns owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals (DBE). In the event that the bidder for this solicitation qualifies as a DBE, the contract goal shall be deemed to have been met. Individuals who are rebuttably presumed to be socially and economically disadvantaged include women, Blacks, Hispanics, Native Americans, Asians-Pacific Americans and Asian-Indian Americans. The apparent successful bidder (proposer) will be required to submit information concerning the DBE's that will participate in this contract. The information will include the name and address for each DBE, a description of the work to be performed by each named firm, and the dollar value of the contract (subcontract). If the bidder fails to acheive the contract goal as stated herein, it will be required to provide documentation demonstrating that it made good faith efforts in attempting to do so. A bid that fails to meet these requirements will be considered nonresponsive.

CONTRACTS OVER $10,000

The proposed contract is under and subject to Executive Order 11246 of September 24, 1965, and to the Equal Opportunity Clause.

The bidder (Proposer) must supply all the information required by the bid or proposal form.

The successful bidder will be required to submit a Certification of Nonsegregated Facilities prior to award of the contract, and to notify prospective subcontracators of the requirement for such a Certification where the subcontract exceeds $10,000. Samples of the Certification and Notice to Subcontractors appear in the specifications.

In all areas of employment, women and men will be afforded equal opportunity of employment. The employment of women shall not diminish the standards or requirements for the employment of minorities.

CONTRACTS OVER $50,000

A contractor having 50 or more employees, and his subcontractors having 50 or more employees, and who may be awarded a subcontract of $50,000 or more, will be required to maintain an affirmative action program within 120 days of the commencement of the Contract.

ADDITIONAL NOTICES FOR $1,000,000 CONTRACTS

For each contract which may result in a bid of $1 million or more, the following notices shall also apply:

1. Preaward Equal Opportunity Compliance Reviews. Where the bid of the apparent low responsible bidder is in the amount of $1 million or more, the bidder and his known all-tier subcontractors which will be awarded subcontracts of $1 million or more will be subject to full, on-site, preaward equal opportunity compliance reviews before the award of the contract for the purpose of determining whether the bidder and his subcontractors are able to comply with the provisions of the equal opportunity clause.

2. Compliance Reports. Within 30 days after award of this contract, the contractor shall file a compliance report (Standard Form 100) if:

a. The contractor has not submitted a complete compliance report within 12 months preceding the date of award; and

b. The contractor is within the definition of "employer" in paragraphs 2e(3) of the instructions included in Standard Form 100.

The contractor shall require the subcontractor on all-tier subcontracts, irrespective of dollar amount, to file Standard Form within 30 days after award of the subcontract if the above two conditions apply. Standard Form 100 will be furnished upon request.

Minimum wages and labor rates for the construction of the proposed work have been established by the Secretary of Labor. A schedule of labor classifications and wage rates to be paid are included in the specifications and will be made a part of the contract. The bid form shall contain a statement that the prices bid are based on such wage rates.

This project is subject to Equal Opportunity, Affirmative Action, Minority Business Enterprise Contract Provisions, and other requirements stated in the Instructions to Bidders and other sections of the project specifications and contract documents.

DAIHATSU: The word on the Street.

Everyone is looking for the next performer. And right now they're talking about the new hot car from Japan: Charade by Daihatsu. Read the chart and you'll see Charade's record of wins around the world. A winning combination of quickness and handling for over a decade. The more we test it in racing, the better it works on the street.

- Car of the Year Japan
- Four-time Rally Champion East Africa
- Three-time Rally Champion Monte Carlo
- Rally Champion New Zealand
- Rally Champion Malaysia
- Rally Champion Finland
- World Economy Record Paris
- World Economy Record Singapore
- World Economy Record Australia
- Car of the Year Thailand
- Most Popular Car in Australia

Not only do you get proven performance, but Charade gives you quality and workmanship that you thought came only in more expensive cars. The level of luxury is unprecedented for a small car. Think of it as luxury condensed.

Daihatsu Charade winning in Monte Carlo, January 1988.

The interior reflects style and craftsmanship. It is perfectly color-coordinated throughout. Door trim incorporates seat material on top and carpet material on the bottom for a perfect interior match. There's a rich cloth liner overhead. And the fold-down center armrests on the CLX add extra comfort.

Versatile fold-down rear seat triples cargo space.

Every Charade comes with tinted glass all around: windows and mirrors. For an extra touch, there are swing-out quarter windows in the rear.

Charade is low and wide for a small car. The extra width gives you a surprising amount of interior room. Charade's wide track gives you far more stability on the road than other small cars, especially when cornering.

Wide stance for stability.

Charade is quick, with multi-point EFI, fully independent suspension and stabilizers in front and rear. The five-speed transmission is butter-smooth for easy shifting.

Charade is affordable to buy and affordable to own. Daihatsu Charade has an EPA rating of 42 MPG highway and 38 MPG city. That is one of the best mileage ratings in the country.

Get behind the wheel of a winner! Test drive Charade today! Daihatsu may be new to America, but we've been in business in Japan since 1907. The name is pronounced Dī-hot-sue. It means Large Enterprise.

Charade has been tested, raced and proven around the world. It is the logical evolution of a dedication to performance. You know what they say, "Racing improves the breed."

You'll think the world of Daihatsu.

Kitchen only begins to highlight home

A country kitchen that would delight any person who enjoys cooking and an adjoining sunny breakfast room are only two of the many exquisite appointments that can be found in this week's featured home. This four bedroom home has three living areas that offers a gathering place for family members or a private retreat when desired.

The exterior of the red brick home is very pleasing and has an unusual brick and window design that is immediately noticed as you approach the front door. The front door has a leaded glass inlay with leaded glass panels on both sides, with a window above brightening the entrance hall. The walls are decorated in a grass cloth wallcovering in shades of navy, taupe and beige and have a taupe tile floor with delicately painted white flowers with wedgwood blue leaves.

The formal living areas are located on both sides of the entrance. The formal dining room, left, and the formal living room, right, both have light taupe walls and a unique arched window design that overlooks the front yard. These rooms are fantastic for formal entertaining and the living room can also be a quiet place to practice a favorite piano piece.

The main living area is situated beyond the entrance and is highlighted by a brick fireplace. A bookcase with cabinets are located along one wall and provide a wonderful place for displaying family photos, favorite best sellers and decorative pieces. This spacious room has two large windows and is centrally located to the home's bedrooms and kitchen.

The kitchen and breakfast room are to the left of the main living area and provides a gathering place for any active family and their friends. The kitchen has a central work island and Whirlpool appliances that include a double self-cleaning oven, microwave, stove top and dishwasher. The kitchen sink is next to a large breakfast bar that was built at an angle and separates the kitchen from the breakfast room. A country wallpaper in shades of wedgwood blue and tan, with a duck border, stylishly line the walls of these rooms.

A multi-purpose room is adjacent to the kitchen area. This room could be used as a playroom for small children, a game room for teenagers or as a study for Dad. A sunny bay window is the focal point of the room and has a window seat which was designed for storage - it even comes complete with a toy box. A big closet can be used for children toys, VCR tapes or for filing cabinets.

A guest room and a hall bath are located next to the play room and off the kitchen and formal dining room. These rooms afford a quiet place for grandparents or friends when they comes for a visit. The guest room has a large walk-in closet and the bath has a marble vanity with a tub/shower.

The home's other bedrooms are located to the right of the main living area. Two of the rooms are situated in the front part of the house and share a hall bath. These rooms have big windows and walk-in closets with built-ins for shoes or clothes. The bath has a tub/shower and a wallcovering in shades of peach and gray, with a teddy bear border. This wing of the home is ideal for children of any age due to the size of the rooms and closets.

The master bedroom is sequestered from the other bedrooms and access is also made to this area from the main living area. Located in the back of the home, this room is spacious enough for a sitting area at one end. French doors lead to the covered patio in the backyard and depending on a the needs of a family, the yard could easily accommodate the addition of a pool or spa.

A leisurely soak in the tub in the master bath would be the perfect way to relax at the end of the day. Three horizontal windows above the tub provide lots of sunshine for house plants that decorate the shelf above the tub. The bath has a marble vanity with two sinks and a make-up area. The bath also has two spacious walk-in closets with built-ins and an oversized shower. A floral wallpaper in shades of rose, blue and gray adorn the walls of the bath.

High ceilings and beautiful woodwork can be noticed in every room throughout the house. The other amenities of the home include a utility room with space for a freezer, a three car garage with automatic door opener, a music/sound system, gas grill, security system and a sprinkler system.

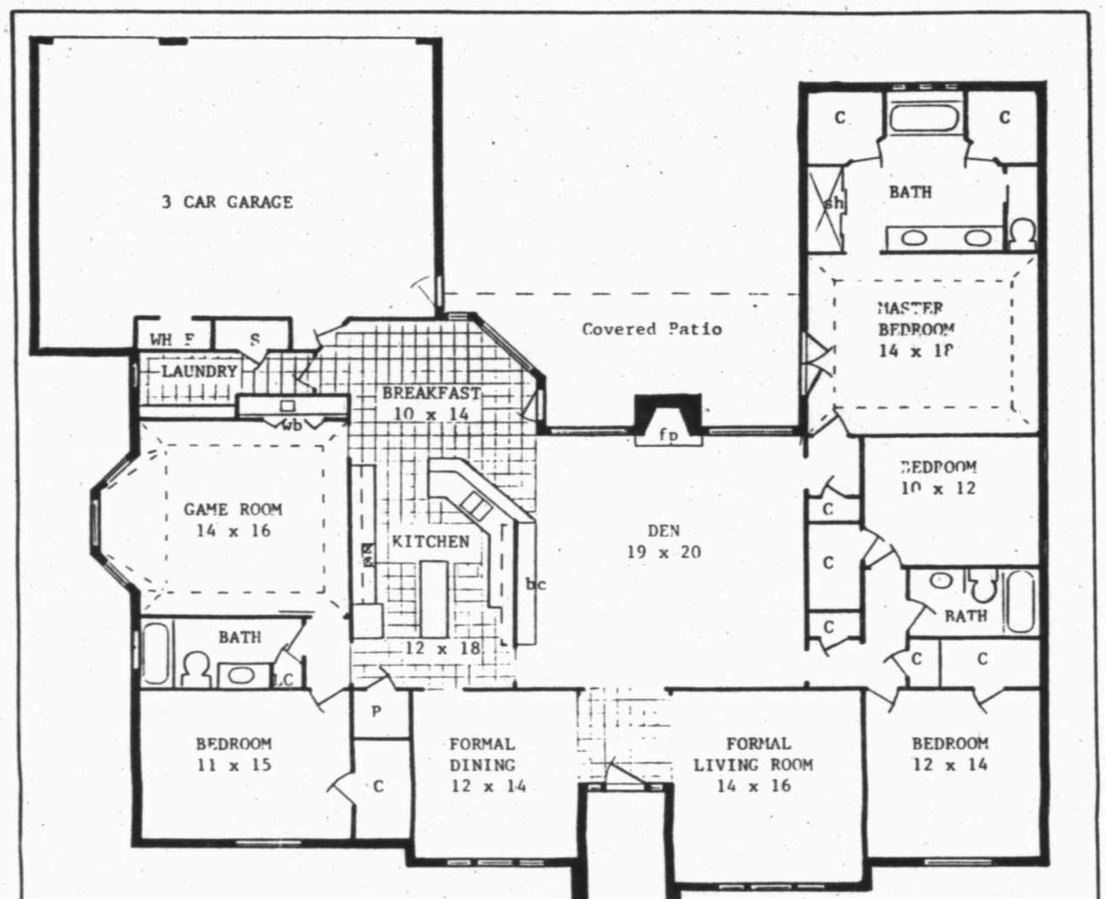

Action Realty is offering this Trinity Meadows home for $185,000.

The exterior of this elegant home is only one of the reasons that this house would appeal to many families. The home is brightened by many windows which provide a pleasing view of the well manicured yards.

The main living area has pale taupe walls with white panel moulding and are very striking to visitors. The fireplace is ideal for the winter months ahead and the windows provide a great view of the lovely backyard.

The floor plan of the four bedroom home shows how adaptable this house would be for many families, regardless of their children's ages. The three living areas are ideal for family members to entertain their friends or for a private retreat.

Langston Realtors Talk About...

Real estate values, 'good funds'

Q. I have heard that home values have fallen as much as 30 percent to 50 percent in Midland. Can this possibly be true? D.L.

Langston

A. In any discussion of the rise and fall of real estate values in the city, two factors are of utmost importance: timing and location. Most appraisers agree that values of residential real estate in Midland appreciated 30% to 35% in the pre boom period of 1975 to 1983, only to fall approximately the same percentage between 1984 and 1987. If an individual bought a home for $70,000 in 1975, he may be able to sell the property in the range of $90,000-$100,000 at he height of the midland boom years. However, if selling on today's market, he will be fortunate to recover his initial investment. The "good news" is for those persons who bought before 1975: they will probably realize a profit on a sale today. The "bad news" is for those persons who bought at "boom" prices in the early 1980's: they should anticipate losing money if forced to sell on the current market.

The other factor in the rise and fall of values, as I said, is location. Not all areas appreciated of depreciated equally; some neighborhoods exhibited more stability while others were more volatile in prices. Therefore do be aware that the above percentages apply to the market in a very general and average way and are not indicative of all areas. If you are considering selling, you are encouraged to obtain an appraisal or broker's price opinion for figures applicable to your particular property. Remember, too; that condition, maintenance, general appeal of decoration, style, amenities and plans are other determining factors that always affect the saleability and value of a home.

Q. I am closing on a purchase October 1 and have been told by my Realtor that I must bring a certified check for my down payment and closing expense. My brother bought this summer and just wrote a personal check. What has changed? G.M.

A. Effective August 1, 1988, a new Procedural Rule from the State Board in Insurance took effect in Texas requiring that the title company be in possession of "good funds" as: (1) Cash or wire transfer; (2) Certified funds, including certified checks and cashier's checks; (3) Uncertified funds in amounts less than $1,500; (4) Uncertified funds in the amount of $1,500, or more, when "collected" by the financial institution. This simply means that a buyer should bring certified funds to closing for $1,500 or above if he and the seller expect the transaction to fund (the seller to be paid) within a day or two of closing. As most of the sales contracts negotiated in Midland state that the buyer may have possession of property "on funding", not bringing "good funds" to closing may delay for as long as a week or 10 days the buyer's right to move into the home and the seller's receipt of proceeds, money that is usually necessary for his subsequent purchase.

Q. The Realtor showing us homes asked us to sign an Agency Disclosure Form. What is this? D.P.

A. Another ruling became affective September 1, 1988, making it mandatory that all Texas real estate licencees use a new Agency Disclosure Form promulgated by the Texas Real Estate Commission. The form was created and designed to clear up any confusion as to whose agent the Realtor is in a sale or a residential lease transaction for a period of more than one year Quite often buyers or tenants are under the impression that the Realtor is working for them, when actually, a Realtor's "duties, loyalties and faithfulness" are owed to the person who contractually retains and pays for his services, and that is usually the seller or owner of the property. As a buyer, do be assured however, that even though the Realtor may not be "your" agent, he still has an obligation to "treat honestly and fairly all parties to the transaction". He will provide you with information about available properties and sources of financing, aid you in analyzing and comparing the physical and economic features of different properties, will show you the properties and will assist you in making an offer to purchase or lease. In addition, by law, the broker must also present your written offers to the owner promptly, must disclose to you material facts about the property known to the broker, and must offer property without regard to race, creed, sex, religion or national origin. The real estate community has been doing all of the above for years, not a single change is being advocated or made; but I guess the TREC wants to remind you, as a prospective buyer or tenant, of whom the broker is representing in a transaction.

If you have any questions on real estate that you would like answered in this column, you are invited to call or write me at Langston Realtors, 1908 West Wall, Midland, Texas 79701, (915) 682-9495.

Furniture industry sales are declining

By BARBARA MAYER
Associated Press

Portrait of a furniture industry in trouble: a declining share of sales over the last 20 years, a negative public image, a shaky dollar and a jumpy stock market — all of which negatively impact sales.

Don Belgrad, chairman of the Furniture Information Council, said a recent survey had revealed most people found furniture dull and expensive, didn't enjoy the process of buying it and felt intimidated by decorators and salespeople.

Despite this gloomy picture, industry spokesmen at a furniture market in North Carolina say Americans can be encouraged to want to buy new furniture.

To cope with some of its problems, the industry has enlisted some of its competition: the computer and videocasette recorder. A computer and video exhibit directed to the man in the street — or in this case the shopper in the mall — is touring 28 shopping centers around the country through 1988.

The exhibit is designed to help people visualize how a room will look with the pieces which have been selected. It employs a computer program that creates an image of a room's dimensions, places furniture within it, varies the upholstery and accessories, and then allows the room to be rearranged. The final fillip is a computer printout which can be taken away.

The exhibit also includes a televised display of a choice of 35 room settings.

A special effects camera places the viewer inside the on-screen room setting and snaps a photo of the person inside the selected room setting.

According to Toby Weller-Poley of Videodisc Publishing Inc., which created the software, the company is devising similar computer programs for several American manufacturers with furniture galleries and "the last quarter of 1988 will see installations" in some gallery stores for use by consumers.

At a number of press conferences and in conversations at the sprawling marketplace that encompasses more than 6 million square feet of showroom space and over 1,600 exhibitors in 150 buildings scattered in and around High Point, N.C., it was pointed out that Americans in the 1980s don't necessarily respond to marketing methods that worked in the 1950s.

Carl Levine, vice president of Bloomingdale's, explained that the department store's customers today are well-educated, well-traveled, well-read and well-heeled. They are powerfully influenced by what they read in shelter magazines and continually seeking information about furniture and upgrading tastes. When Bloomingdale's plays videotapes on furniture and decorating, customers line up to see them, he added.

Speaking at a press conference, Levine said the public has gone further and faster than anyone might have predicted. "Leather 10 years ago was a high-priced luxury. Today, it's available at middle price points."

Evidence to support his statement was widespread at the market. For example, one middle-price-range manufacturer now makes leather recliners that sell for under $600 in stores and under $400 when leather and matching expanded vinyl are combined.

Top designer names are now powerful sales incentives in mass-produced furniture. For example, "Jay Spectre's furniture used to go into homes that easily cost half a million dollars to furnish. Now, it goes into homes where $5,000 to $10,000 is spent on new furniture," said Levine.

"It used to be people wanted to keep up with the Joneses. Today they want to be a little bit different than the Joneses and they want their home to be personal and unique," said Bill Hayes, a vice president at Drexel Heritage Furnishings Inc.

Drexel is catering to this desire by offering area rugs and carpeting made by Masland that match its fabrics; rugs have been designed with border treatments or center medallions that match 29 of the furniture maker's best-selling patterns. They will be sold only in Drexel-Heritage gallery stores and the customizing service will be available on all fabrics stocked by participating retailers, said Hayes.

This home is an excellent example of a house with "curb appeal." The exterior of this inviting home will make a lasting impression on anyone who is viewing homes on the real estate market.

'Curb appeal' makes right impression

The more attractive your home is, the easier it will be to sell at the price you desire. In other words, your home should have "curb appeal" to make the right impression you desire, both inside and out.

This is the advice of David Pine, president of Chaparral, Realtors, a Midland real estate broker who specializes in providing relocation services to both home buyers and sellers.

"You want your home to make a lasting impression that will remain right to the settlement table," Pine explains. "As a result, you need to ask yourself a basic question: If you were a buyer, would you want to stop for a closer look?" he asks.

As a result, Pine suggests that sellers examine the outside and inside of their homes from the buyer's standpoint to make sure their home has "curb appeal."

Helping buyers prepare their homes for sale is just one of the important services provided by Chaparral, Realtors which is a member of RELO/Inter-City Relocation Services, the nation's oldest and largest referral network of independent real estate brokers. The RELO network, headquartered in Chicago, provides a wide array of services to help individuals sell a house in one community and buy a home in the new communitv.

"It is always a good practice to make your home as appealing and uncluttered as the home you wish to buy," Pine notes.

According to Pine, "curb appeal" should start with the exterior. A trim lawn and well-proportioned shrubs will catch a buyers eye, Pine notes.

"Remove garden hoses, lawn tools, dog houses and toys from the yard. Check for peeling paint, flat-fitting roof shingles, straight lines on gutters, shutters, windows and siding; and solid caulking around frames and seams," he advises.

"Should you discover the need for any major work such as replacing a roof, consider how the improvement will affect your home's value. Generally, the more visible or popular the improvement, the more you can expect to regain through the sale of the property," Pine points out.

While the outside of a home is vitally important to a successful sale, you should not neglect the interior of the home, he notes.

"Before you show your house, make a clean sweep of every room. Get rid of any nonessentials that have accumulated in your closets, cupboards and garage so that your storage spaces will look neat and larger," Pine says.

In today's very competitive real estate market, the home that stands out from similarly priced ones is the home that sells - and the one that sells at the price you desire. For that reason, paying close attention to "curb appeal" is a wise choice, Pine emphasizes.

Chaparral is one of nearly 1,200 member RELO companies with more than 3,400- members offices nationwide. The RELO network has representatives in 13,000 cities in the U.S. and in 19 foreign countries.

Chaparral, Realtors has over 20 sales associates and has served the Midland area for nine years.

Financing home is complicated investment

By David Hatz
Copley News Service

You and your spouse are on Cloud Nine because you've found the house of your dreams. Unfortunately, now it's time to wake up to reality and ask the question: How are we going to pay for it?

If Aunt Martha didn't leave you her estate or you don't strike it rich in a lottery, you will have to finance your dream home.

Financing a home is the most complicated monetary investment/transaction in which most people will ever be involved. But it doesn't have to be a nightmarish experience. A little preplanning and the willingness to shop around can make the process easier, reduce the possibility that your loan application will be rejected, and ensure that you get the best possible terms.

Qualifying for a home mortgage today is different than a few years ago. There are almost as many qualifying formulas as there are loan types — and there are a lot.

FHA-insured and VA-guaranteed loans often are the only types of financing possible for the first-time buyer or others squeaking by on a minimal down payment and marginal income.

Loans insured by the Federal Housing Administration have lenient buyer qualifications compared with other types of loans. The FHA insures full payment of the mortgage to the lender, and will loan a maximum of $90,000.

Generally, FHA's qualification guidelines say a buyer may not spend more than 38 percent of his net monthly income for mortgage payments (principal and interest), real estate taxes, insurance and utility bills.

Loans guaranteed by the Veterans Administration can be obtained with no down payment. It guarantees up to $27,500 of the loan, or 60 percent of the property's value, whichever is less. The VA will loan a maximum of $135,000.

Conventional home loans usually carry tougher qualification standards and require more of a down payment. But with private mortgage insurance, a conventional loan can be as high as 95 percent of the purchase price.

A loan of no more than 80 percent of the property's value does not require PMI coverage. And without the PMI cost, the loan applicant is more likely to qualify for the loan.

Qualification formulas for conventional loans vary because of the range of loan types offered in today's market. But, generally, lenders require that borrowers spend no more than 25 percent of their gross monthly income on mortgage payments, and no more than 33 percent for all housing-related costs.

Once you have an idea of the type of loan you can secure, you must decide which kind of mortgage best fits your needs.

The basic fixed-rate mortgage is again America's clearly preferred type of home loan. But there also are new concepts appealing to many home buyers.

About 88 percent of home buyers who obtain new mortgage financing go for a fixed-rate loan, according to the National Board of Realtors. A fixed-rate loan is simple: Its rate doesn't change, its monthly payment doesn't change. And it's paid off in 15 or 30 years, depending on the length of the loan.

The main advantage of this type of loan is that the payment remains the same, even if interest rates go up. The disadvantage is that if the overall interest rates go down, your rate on a traditional mortgage will not. You would have to refinance, a transaction that can cost thousands of dollars, to take advantage of the lower rates.

While the basic fixed-rate 30-year mortgage is the most popular in today's market, the 15-year mortgage is becoming increasingly popular. The difference in monthly payments between a 15-year and 30-year mortgage is surprisingly small. And the savings in interests costs is huge. For example, total interest payments on a 30-year loan of $100,000 at 10 percent amount to $215,926. But interest payments on a 15-year loan at 9.75 percent comes to $90,685 — 15-year mortgages often carry slightly lower interest rates than 30-year loans.

Adjustable-rate mortgages, which became popular in the early 1980s when interest rates were much higher, can be complex.

ARMs are advantageous because their rates start out lower than fixed rates. But, depending on how the interest rate fluctuates, these mortgages can skyrocket past the fixed-rate figure.

ARMs are good to consider if you believe: a) that rates are going to fall to levels lower than they are today; or, b) you plan to keep your house only for a few years, and an ARM looks less expensive in the short term.

If you're looking to pay off your loan in a shorter period of time, one option to consider is a biweekly mortgage. With this loan, the borrower simply makes half of the regular monthly payment every two weeks. Because there are 26 two-week periods in a year, the equivalent of 13 monthly payments is made each year. This reduces the term of a 30-year mortgage to about 16 to 22 years.

The biweekly payment schedule can be used with both 30- and 15-year mortgage loans.

If you need quick approval on a loan — you can't wait the months it often takes for a standard loan to be approved — look for a quick-processing loan. These loans are usually closed within two to three weeks from the day the application is completed.

In these loans, the amount of cash down payment is usually 25 percent to 30 percent of the purchase price. Therefore, the lender's security is pegged more to the large equity in the property rather than in the personal qualifications of the borrower.

Quickie loans usually carry a higher interest rate than a standard mortgage loan and should be used only when there is a special and important need for a quick closing.

Regardless of the type of loan you try to secure, be sure to shop around. Large metropolitan areas may include as many as 150 lenders among banks, savings and loans and mortgage companies, with mortgage rates that vary from 0.375 to 0.50 for the same product. That difference amounts to $350 a year on a $100,000 fixed-rate mortgage at 10 percent.

Rates can change daily, and making 15 to 20 calls will help ensure that you get the best possible terms. Remember, most loan officers are commissioned salesmen and try to sell you loans they have and are most familiar with.

There are many reasons you might want to refinance your home, but all basically fall into three general categories:

Saving money by paying lower interest rates.

Borrowing more money.

Restructing (changing from one type of mortgage to another).

Saving Money: According to "The Mortgage Kit" (Thomas C. Steinmetz), mortgage interest rates have gone up and down more sharply during the past six years than they had previously since World War II. Rates today are the lowest they have been since the 1970s. If you bought or mortgaged your home with a fixed-rate mortgage between 1980 and 1985, you can probably lower your monthly mortgage payment and save thousands of dollars in interest by refinancing your old mortgage.

One general rule of thumb is: If can save at least 2 percent on the interest rate and plan to stay in your house for at least another two to three years, you should consider refinancing. Lowering your interest rate by as little as 2 percent on a $100,000 mortgage can lower a mortgage payment by $150. A 3 percent drop could drop your monthly payment by $228.63.

Refinancing costs run between $2,000 and $6,500, depending on a number of factors, including:

The lender and loan that you chose.

The cost of settlement services in your area.

The recording fees charged by your local government.

But actual out-of-pocket expenses usually don't amount to more than a few hundred dollars. By increasing your mortgage amount to cover the cost of refinancing, your cash outlay should be minimal.

Borrowing More Money: A home purchased in the 1970s is almost certainly worth more money than you paid for it. Additionally, since you have been paying off your old mortgage, you now have equity.

You can borrow more money using this equity as collateral by replacing your old mortgage with a larger new one, or by getting a second mortgage — leaving the first mortgage in place.

Both methods have advantages and disadvantages. The choice usually is based on what you plan to do with the extra money, how much you need and how quickly you plan to pay it off. Remember, you are borrowing, not saving, money, and your new monthly payments probably will be higher.

Restructuring: In the early 1980s, many houses were purchased with the buyers assuming an existing mortgage and the seller taking back a short-term second mortgage. Now that these second mortgages are coming due and interest rates are down from previously higher levels, it is possible to replace old loans with new ones.

The Super Handyman

By Al Carrell

With fall and winter coming up, mud and snow are sure to be tracked into your home. Make a handy holder so you can drain those boots. All it takes is one wire coat hanger.

Pull the bottom horizontal piece downward and then stretch it over the top hook, ending up with two loops with the hook in the middle. To use the holder, stick your boot through the loop and let it hang there. Stick the other boot into the other loop and hang the holder in the mud room, utility room or garage, wherever they can dry out. It sure beats a floor full of dirty newspapers and mixed-up shoes.

Dear Super:

My wife saves her old fingernail polish bottles for me. After they are completely cleaned out, I fill them with a lightweight oil. I keep one in the shop, office, kitchen and laundry room. The brush makes it easy to oil hinges and other small parts around the house. — A.D.

• • •

A SUPER HINT — When painting windows, masking is a must. If you run out of the famous tape, use soap. Rub the bar around the sides of the glass and wash it off after the paint dries.

• • •

Dear Handyman:

After completely stripping, sanding and refinishing our wood floors, we put a new scratch on them getting the dining room table back in. I couldn't believe it. I got a bunch of socks from my kids' drawers and put them on the legs of the chairs, tables and couch. Once the furniture was in place, I took them off. I also put plastic and rubber tips on the chairs to make sure they won't scratch the floor any time soon. — S.S.

• • •

Q: My concrete garage floor has always had a dusty surface. I believe the dust is from the concrete. Is there anything I can do to stop this?

A: Probably. First, remove all of the dust with a shop-type vacuum cleaner. Then, using a paint roller and following all the manufacturer's directions, apply at least two coats of masonry sealer. You may need to renew the sealer every few years.

• • •

Dear Al:

I thought I'd write you about my clever use for tin cans. Cut out both ends so that a cylinder is left and use them to dig around bulbs to relocate them in the winter. Place the can where you want to dig and push down with your foot. I also use the cans to cut out divots around my sprinkler heads. My string trimmer has damaged them in the past; my tin cans work better. — T.J.

A bare light bulb is better than no light in the shop. But you can easily make a shade that will reflect more light and stop some of the glare of a bare blub.

Get a disposable aluminum pie pan and cut a line from one side to the center of the bottom. Next, cut a half-inch-round hole in the center of the pan. Slip the metal pan over the top of the socket and pull the cut sides together until you have a cone shape. Tape the sides together, rivet them or punch holes and screw them together.

It's a simple project that can make your other projects go smoother.

Dear Al:

Whenever I get ready to store my tennis racket for the winter, I always coat the strings with petroleum jelly. This keeps the strings from drying out while in storage. It seems to keep them more pliable, also. — J.H.

• • •

A SUPER HINT — For drawers that run on plain wooden tracks, rub all connecting parts with candle wax. They'll slide much easier.

• • •

Dear Al:

I have seen lots of products made to get rid of pet odors in carpet, but I have used the same one all my life. I use a baking soda solution to clean the spot as best as I can. Then I set a raw onion on top of the spot for a few hours. I guess the onion smell goes into the carpet and discourages the animal from making this spot a place for regular visits. — J.K.

Q: Our asphalt driveway has developed potholes. When the drive was built, they used a caldron of molten asphalt, which isn't practical for me. Is there any other way I can patch the holes before we lose our car?

A: With the new cold-patch compounds, no heat is required. However, it is best to make your repairs on a hot day for better bonding.

Remove all the loose material. If the hole is more than 3 inches deep, lay in a bed of gravel. Otherwise, pour in the cold-patch in layers of about an inch. Tamp each layer to compact the stuff. Your final layer should be about a half inch above the surface. Tamp it and then sprinkle dry sand over it. Now drive slowly back and forth over the patch. When level, it's a good idea to cover the patch with an asphalt sealer.

Dear Mr. Carrell:

We had to come up with a makeshift night light when my son's was broken. After hunting around in the garage, we found an old brick with lots of holes around the sides. By setting the brick over a small flashlight, we made him a great night light. Of course, we had to charge up the battery the next day but it got us through the night. — E.M.B.

HUD HOMES ANNOUNCES

A lawsuit has been filed in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia in which plantiffs have asked the court to stop all sales of HUD-acquired single family properties until HUD takes certain actions which plaintiffs claim HUD is required by law to do. HUD is opposing this lawsuit. Because the court has issued a Temporary Restraining Order stopping all sales until September 14, 1988, the bid opening date has been set for (September 15, 1988) at which time we expect to know if HUD may award contracts.

All contracts acccepted prior to August 30, 1988 will be processed as usual. Please hold all phone calls to a minimum.

It used to be that people who wore glasses were plagued with such names as "four-eyes," "Coke bottle glasses" and "bug-eyes," but now, stereotypes are changing and eyeglasses are no longer considered to be for "nerds."

In fact, with the help of such fashion magazines as Vogue and Glamour, eyeglasses have become chic, "in" and quite fashionable, particularly in the business world.

That's right, glasses are highly thought of in the business world. You've heard of the power suit worn with the power tie, accessorized with the leather brief case and polished shoes. But don't forget to wear your glasses if you really want to make a positive impact on your climb up the corporate ladder.

No kidding. A survey of over 100 corporate recruiters and fashion/image consultants in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles and San Francisco revealed that 69 percent believed glasses are effective in enhancing a professional image, and even more, 79 percent, believed that glasses connote intelligence.

Of those interviewed, 80 percent said that eyeglasses exude power and help a person gain control. This same group said wearing glasses was beneficial in making a power statement during a business presentation and that removing them at strategic points was considered an effective way to emphasize a particular word or phrase. In fact, one-third of the those surveyed admitted to using glasses for this purpose.

"Eyeglasses are not only functional for vision correction," said Joseph Dono, senior vice president of marketing for Pearle Vision Center, "but they also make a statement about the individual wearing them. Today's consumer may purchase glasses as a fashion accessory, or to project a more business-like image for the 'board room' look."

For those who wear corrected lenses, this is great news. But for those who don't, the fashion industry has developed just the thing for you — "Attitude Glasses." They are one of the hottest fashion accessories for the fall.

What exactly are Attitude Glasses?

Well, basically, Attitude Glasses are glasses for those who don't need corrective lenses, but want the look, and power, that wearing glasses connotes.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN M. KNIGHT HARRISON

'Tis the season for "Smash Fiesta '88," an all-day event which includes a tennis tournament, dinner-dance and auction. To be held Sept. 24, the fourth annual event benefits the Developmental Disabilities Center.

The tennis matches begin at 9 a.m. at Midland Country Club, with a noon luncheon scheduled for the players. The evening's festivities start at 7 o'clock at Midland Center, with the auction set for 9:30. The auction items include trips to New York City, Maui, Hawaii and Purgatory, Colo.

The DDC, founded in January 1984, is a privately funded, nonprofit school serving developmentally disabled children.

The center recently moved to their mewly acquired location, which is situated on four-plus acres across from the High Sky Children's Ranch. Twenty-four students are presently enrolled, although up to 36 children can be served.

Future plans are to build a new facility within the next three to five years and begin serving youngsters with learning disabilities, such as dyslexia, as well as to continue to serve those with more severe disabilities, such as autism, behavioral management disorders, hearing and visually impaired and Down's Syndrome, who are presently being helped.

Eventually, it is hoped to set up a job skills training program for the older students and to develop a respite care program.

Additional information about the benefit may be obtained by contacting Marsha (Mrs. Harry) Bettis at 683-3721.

MIDLAND'S OWN JUSTICE, Barbara Culver, was in town over Labor Day Weekend while blazing the campaign trail and was honored at a rally last Sunday evening at the Yucca Theatre.

Justice Culver is a Republican candidate for the Texas Supreme Court, a position she has held since January when she was appointed to serve an unexpired term.

The crowd of supporters and well-wishers enjoyed a catered fried chicken dinner. Musical entertainment was provided by "The Dow Jones Average" and the "Mayor's Four-Um" Quartet, which is affiliated with the Permian Basin Chapter of the SPEBQSA. Doug Heck reprised his famous "Mule Train" number from the Summer Mummers Olio.

In her own inimitable manner, Mary Lou Cassidy emceed the event, which concluded with brief remarks from the justice. She shared her pride in being a Midlander and stated that one of the most fun events during her campaign was a party in Austin, where all the guests had a Midland connection of some sort or another.

Red, white and blue helium-filled balloons provided a festive setting for the event.

A special guest was Judge Ward Koehler of El Paso, a Republican candidate for justice, 8th Court of Appeals.

KARENS, ONE OF MIDLAND'S newest restaurants, recently held its Grand Opening Celebration, which will benefit the Boys & Girls Club of Midland, Inc.

The approximately 300 persons who turned out for the Sept. 1 affair got a panoramic view of the city from the restaurant's location on the 24th floor of the NCNB Bank Building and participated in a food and wine tasting. The music of "The Down Jones Average" set the mood for the festive affair.

The delicacies included fresh salmon with cucumbers and buttermilk dressing, sausage swirls, quiche with grilled vegetables, Creole gumbo, black beans with cheese and flour tortillas, and angel food cake and fresh strawberries dipped in chocolate fudge. California wines, Dixie beer and champagne also were served to the gathering.

Among those spotted in the crowd were Boys & Girls Club director Nick Sanchez and his wife, Sylvia; Chuck Clarkson, president of the club's board of directors, and his wife, Bonnie; Terry and Sam Flores, Millie Howard, Mary Alice Tidwell, Beth (Mrs. Joe) Rubin, Nancy Bishop, Celia and Felipe Morales, Jim Blakemore, and Margaret and Burgess Wade.

THE SUMMER MUMMERS closed its 40th season on a triumphant note over Labor Day Weekend. According to all reports, it was the most financially successful ever. The proceeds benefit the Midland Community Theatre.

To celebrate the closing — and summer's end — a gala party was held for cast, crew and friends at the home of Barbara and Mark Reed, with Beth Rodgers-Carr as co-hostess.

The very special "Mummer of the Year" Award went to three people, who played significant roles in the Mummers success. They are Gilley Estes, Harry Harrison and Richard Noel. Special recognition also was given to producer Doug Heck, director Ron Hughes and stage manager Karlis Gruzins.

A late night hot dog supper was enjoyed by the large throng. Among those attending was a former Midlander, Enid Phillips, now of Hemet, Calif. She and her husband, John, were in charge of novelties and raffle ticket sales at the Mummers for several years.

'Post-vacation dysphoria' ruins return

New York Times News Service

Vacation lag occurs when you return home and part of your brain is still on vacation.

It occurs most often after a refreshing, happy holiday, and the consensus is that the sensation may be pleasant, curious or hellish, depending on your perspective.

"It's really an out-of-body experience, coming back to the real world after being on vacation," Linda Bern said, on her first day back at work at the American International Group, an insurance company with headquarters in New York.

"I was in Bermuda with my husband for five days," she said, "and the most stressful thing we did was deciding where to have dinner. This morning, it was back to the pace of New York, the stress of commuting, the stress of coming back to a large folder of mail and telephone messages."

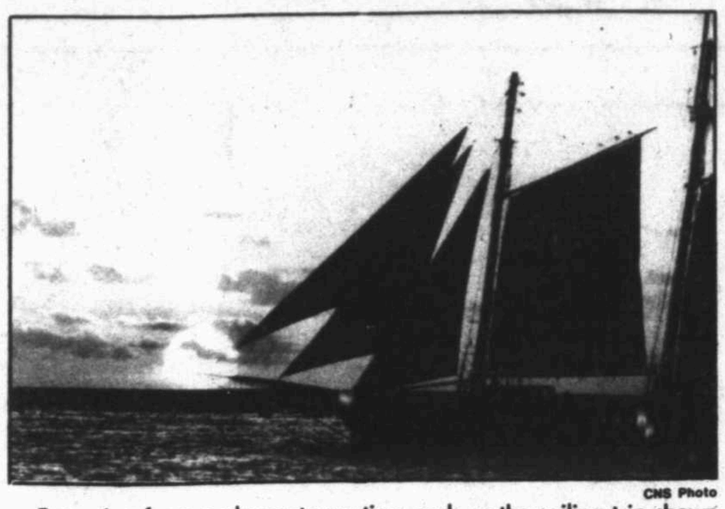

Explorations of vacation lag rarely go further than comic facial expressions on the office elevator.

With the passing of Labor Day, though, the time has come for the subject to come out of the elevator and be scrutinized, framed with anecdotes and tagged with a psychiatric label.

"There is a danger to oversimplifying the whole phenomenon known as post-vacation dysphoria," said Dr. Alan Stoudemire, an associate professor of psychiatry at Emory University.

"THE GENERAL idea is that people become accommodated to the day-to-day stress in their lives, and vacations give them a temporary respite. The risk involved in taking a break, though, is that a person has to re-experience the stress all over again, and he may not have realized his life was so miserable or stressful."

The return home, which is usually abrupt, invites comparisons with places and states of mind left behind.

CNS Photo

Returning from a pleasant vacation, such as the sailing trip shown above, and re-entering the "real world" can be a stressful experience

If the contrast isn't too stark, the lingering effects of a vacation may give a rosy tint to one's outlook and soften the re-entry shock.

But the person returning home from a mountain cabin to a dead-end job and a burglarized apartment in a decrepit neighborhood may wonder where he or she went wrong.

Some people seem immune.

Air-traffic controllers at O'Hare International Airport in Chicago, the nation's busiest airport, might be expected to suffer vacation lag.

Not Joe Bellino. The 20-year veteran of the tower said he never thought about it.

"I guess I'm a little behind the power curve when I've been gone for a while," he conceded, "but I like a lot of pressure."

Ralph Nader doesn't experience vacation lag either. The consumer advocate said he doesn't take vacations. That's one solution.

Demanding jobs are fertile breeding grounds for post-vacation dysphoria. Dr. Frantz Melio, a second-year resident in emergency medicine, said it took three days to regain his confidence after spending August in France.

Melio started his first day back with a 12-hour shift in the emergency ward at the Los Angeles County-University of Southern California Medical Center Hospital.

He said he spent the whole day "worrying that I had forgotten all the facts." He hadn't.

LONG VACATIONS — the kind students and teachers take — allow even more time for anxiety to build up. "In summer, you forget you're a teacher and get used to freedom," said Richard Curtis, who, when he is not writing himself, teaches creative writing at the Salisbury School in Salisbury, Conn.

"Then on Sept. 2," he said, "I have to reorient myself totally and start thinking like a 16-year-old taking an English course. The anticipation is worse than the reality; if it wasn't, I couldn't keep teaching."

How students feel returning to school may set up a lifetime pattern for vacation lag, said Howard J. Kogan, a Manhattan psychotherapist.

"Did you go back to school feeling confident, with a smile on your face?" he said. "Or did you go back with a frown, kicking and screaming?

"Patterns of how you respond to responsibilities are usually set early, and very often, those patterns persist into adulthood."

Painful re-entries, however, can be catalysts for an enormous number of positive personal changes, experts said.

To beat the blues, people often distract themselves by blocking out the calendar with sports, cultural activities and getaways.

Others resolve to improve their lives by going back to school, consulting therapists, selling their homes, changing jobs or careers, joining health clubs.

Managers of corporate employee-assistance programs said requests for counseling referrals peak twice: after summer vacations, and again after Christmas holiday season.

"People often think that a holiday will solve family or career problems, but they come back home and the problems have not gone away, and they get motivated to do something about it," said Mrs. Bern, who directs the employee-assistance program at the American International Group.

Job dissatisfaction prompted 500 people to sign up for career-change seminars this fall at the Center for Career and Life Planning at the New York University School of Continuing Education.

Nicotine affects concentration

Copley News Service

Smokers have long known something that nicotine researchers are just now finding out in the laboratory: Smoking appears to enhance performance, concentration, learning and memory, at least in long-term smokers.

"It's part of the reason why smokers who want to stop are so vulnerable to relapse," said Dr. Jack Henningfield at a conference sponsored by the Addiction Research Foundation in Toronto.

"If there is a problem concentrating, all the smoker has to do is go back to a cigarette," said Henningfield, chief of the biology of dependence laboratory at the National Institute on Drug Abuse Addiction Research Center in Baltimore.

"We have to find ways to help people to function so they're not so likely to relapse, to succumb to the easy way to restore their concentration."

Henningfield has tested smokers' cognitive function before and after they quit smoking, as measured by a rapid math test and short-term memory test.

"There is a significant degree of impairment within four to eight hours after smoking the last cigarette," he said. But cognitive deficits in the smokers given nicotine chewing gum "dramatically" reverse in contrast to those given placebo chewing gun, he added.

Those given placebo gum take longer to do the tests and make more errors, Henningfield said. By contrast, the gum restores performance as much as smoking does.

Although nicotine chewing gum restores the ability to function and perform, it doesn't do much to remove the urge to smoke, he noted.

Child's 'lazy eye' can be difficult to detect

New York Times News Service

SANTA ROSA, Calif. — When Jackie Gillespie took her son Jeremy to Strawberry Elementary School for pre-kindergarten screening, she had no idea the child was virtually blind in his left eye.

Jeremy didn't know it either until the school nurse introduced him to a machine used to test vision.

"We were totally surprised," said Jackie. "He had no symptoms at all."

An ophthalmologist confirmed the school nurse's findings. Jeremy has "lazy eye" and now wears a patch on one eye.

Eye doctors tend to see many children this time of year for such conditions as amblyopia, better known as "lazy eye."

According to the American Academy of Ophthalmology, such vision problems should be detected by parents long before the child starts school.

But it isn't always easy to discover eye problems in children, said Dr. Mark E. Jacobson, a Santa Rosa ophthalmologist with a sub-specialty in pediatrics.

Not all problems are as obvious as crossed eyes, and even a misalignment of the eyes can be very slight.

Sometimes a child with "lazy eye" is so adept at using only one eye that even his parents don't realize he has a vision problem, he said.

"The best way to pick it up is with vision testing," said Jacobson. Most children attain about 90 percent of their adult eye size by the time they are 3, and this is the time a child should have his first vision screening, he said.

ONE OF the problems in testing children, though, is that "kids want so much to please you and do it right. They'll cheat if they can. They'll tilt their head or do whatever they have to do to read the chart and perform correctly.

"That's how some kids can have 'lazy eye' for several years before someone finally discovers it."

In the absence of early detection, "lazy eye" and other adverse eye conditions can prove to be stumbling blocks to a child's ability to learn in the classroom.

Amblyopia is defined as poor vision in an eye that did not develop normal sight during early childhood, according to the academy.

For one reason or another, one eye develops good vision while the other — the lazy eye — does not. It affects four out of every 100 people.

Commonly caused by misaligned eyes, amblyopia can also be caused by a cataract, a clouding of the lens which prevents light from being focused properly by the eye.

"Lazy eye" also occurs when one eye is either very nearsighted or very farsighted, said Jacobson.

"In cases where one eye is either very farsighted or very nearsighted and the other eye is almost normal, the baby or child will make little effort to use the eye that has the greatest refractive error," he explained.

When this occurs, eyeglasses may be prescribed to correct blurred vision.

TREATMENT OF the cause, however, does not cure amblyopia. Most often, treatment consists of placing a patch over the good eye, which forces the patient to use the "lazy" one.

Most children don't mind the patch, said Jacobson. Jeremy has discovered it's a great conversation piece.

"His first reaction was, 'Do I have to wear this outside?' " his mother recalled. "He doesn't mind it so much now. He understands the concept and he can explain it to people who ask what happened to his eye."

The importance of wearing the patch can't be understated, said Jacobson.

Untreated, the amblyopic eye may develop a serious and irreversible visual defect. Depth perception may be lost. And, if the good eye becomes diseased or injured, a lifetime of poor and uncorrectable vision may result.

Strabismus is defined as a misalignment of the eyes where the two eyes are pointed in different directions, according to the Academy.

A common condition that affects 4 percent of children, it also may appear later in life.

The misalignment may be permanent and always noticeable, or may come and go, appearing normal at times and abnormal at others.

Although not fully understood, strabismus is caused by misaligned eye muscles.

Since the brain controls the eye muscles, the condition may be caused by a brain tumor, cerebral palsy, Down's syndrome and hydrocephalus.

Optical, medical or surgical therapy may be required to correct the condition.

Though fatigue or illness may worsen strabismus, children do not "outgrow" the condition.

TREATMENT IS most effective in young children and more difficult as the child grows older. Cosmetic straightening of the eyes is possible at any age.

While there is no known prevention for strabismus, loss of vision is preventable if treatment begins early.

Back-to-school ins, outs re-defined — again

By DAVID GRIMES
New York Times News Service

Hey, kids, it's back-to-school time!

How do I know?

Because the editors at the paper are racing about like ferrets in their annual attempt to persuade a writer what a terrifically timely, interesting and most of all original thing it would be if he wrote a story about What's In and What's Out at school this year.

It really cures my bacon the way these editors insist on doing the same story year after year when there are so many other, more worthy, subjects to write about — educational subjects, serious subjects, subjects that would help young people cope with the cold, hard realities of life in this complex world.

Just to show you how strongly I feel on this matter, the subject of today's column will be the Middle East and how its turbulent geopolitical situation has affected American soybean production.

The Middle East is ...

Note: We're sorry, but we've had to cut David Grimes's column at this point because we needed the space for an important story about What's In and What's Out at school this year. Besides, we really didn't think you wanted to read anything more about the Mideast. Thank you, The Editors.

Many of you have probably been wondering why some things are In and some other things are Out.

And how is it that something can be Really In one year, only to become Way, Way Out the next?

And why do some Out things come back In again while other Out things just get farther and farther Out, until they're so far Out that astronomers speak of them only in astronomical terms?

And why do I always get behind these people who drive 20 miles an hour in the left lane and then suddenly stop, for no apparent reason?

Obviously, I don't have any answers to these questions other than my own personal suspicion that all this In and Out business would stop if our friends The Media would stop making such a big deal about it, as if they really know anything about fashion anyway.

I mean, have you ever seen the way some journalists dress?

The closest some reporters I know come to making a fashion statement is occasionally wearing matching socks.

But, as usual, we're getting off the track.

So, without further ado, here's my carefully researched list of what's going to be In and what's going to be Out this school year.

If none of it turns out to be true, don't blame me. I wanted to write about soybeans.

IN: Tie-dyed shirts.

OUT: Tie-dyed shirts that say "Support Year-Round School."

IN: Seeing how many healthy, nutritionally balanced school lunches you can stuff into your milk container.

OUT: "Doggy-bagging" your school lunch.

IN: The clothes being worn by all the popular kids in your school.

OUT: Your clothes.

IN: Girls asking guys out on dates.

OUT: Guys asking guys out on dates.

IN: Forgetting your locker combination the first day of school.

OUT: Forgetting your name the first day of school.

IN: Not washing your gym uniform because you plan on entering it in the Environmental category of the school science fair.

OUT: Wearing your gym uniform on a date.

Glaucoma detected through regular eye exams

Associated Press

A three-part evaluation is the key to preventing complications from glaucoma, an insidious buildup of pressure in the eye which can cause gradual, irreversible loss of vision if it is untreated, warns an opthalmologist at New York University Medical Center.

"About 8 percent of Americans over 40 have elevated pressure in their eyes, and 20 percent of them develop glaucoma," said Dr. Robert C. Cykiert, clinical assistant professor of ophthalmology. "The most common type, chronic open-angle glaucoma, affects an estimated 1.5 million Americans."

"There are no early symptoms. Glaucoma can only be detected by regular eye examinations," Cykiert said.

(Another, much rarer type of glaucoma, called narrow-angle or acute-angle closure glaucoma, occurs suddenly, and is usually accompanied by severe eye pain, headache and other symptoms.)

An article in an upcoming issue of the Center's Health Letter explains that normally there is a steady balance between the fluid that flows into and out of the eye. If the balance is disrupted, pressure in the eye slowly builds.

"This is painless, and there is no abrupt visual change," Cykiert noted. "But gradually, the pressure destroys the tiny fibers of the optic nerve, which transmits images to the brain."

The result is a gradual loss of vision, starting with peripheral (side) vision. Typically, the loss goes unnoticed, since it is unconsciously compensated for by turning the head slightly more to the side. However, "tunnel vision" can develop, and a person may begin bumping into objects and having difficulty crossing the street.

Eventually, central vision is affected, and the individual is keenly aware of a problem. He or she becomes unable to read or watch television. By that time, peripheral vision is gone. It cannot be restored. The nerve damage is permanent.

"There is only one way glaucoma can be detected early," said Cykiert, "and that is with regular eye checkups — which should be annual after age 40." Although glaucoma may occur at any age and can be congenital, the risk increases with age.

The examination includes three main elements: pressure measurement inspection of the otpic nerve, and, if a problem is suspected, a visual field test.

If glaucoma is detected, treatment is instituted with eye drops that lower intraocular pressure, either by reducing the amount of fluid entering the eye or by increasing outflow. Should the drops prove inadequate, oral medications may be used. In some cases, laser treatment may be needed in the fluid-outflow area of the eye. In fewer cases, glaucoma surgery is necessary.

Cykiert cautioned that it is "essential for a person with glaucoma to have a follow-up ophthalmologic evaluation, including inspection of the optic nerve and visual-field testing, every three to four months. Pressure within the eye may rise despite previously successful therapy, and a change in medication may be required."

Choose gown to suit figure type

Associated Press

No matter what type of wedding is planned, it can safely be assumed that the goal of every bride is to look her best on this important day.

Since figure types vary, it stands to reason that the best style of wedding gown to choose is not necessarily the most fashionable but rather the one that best complements the bride's figure.

Cindy Rose, fashion director for Vogue Butterick Patterns, says there are three main figure types.

For one, visualize a triangle, the apex at the top. In this figure, the hips measure more than 10 inches larger than the bust. Choose a dress which builds up the shoulders and sleeves and enhances the narrow waist, but has a full skirt to minimize the large hips.

A top heavy figure (roughly described by an inverted triangle) is flattered by a straight-lined sheath without a clearly defined waist. Choose a columnar dress, providing fullness through the train.

Yet another figure type is a slender rectangle. This figure type is often characterized by a boyish figure with a flat bust, narrow hips and no very discernible waist.

Choose a dropwaisted dress whose deep V creates a waistline where none really exists. Another attractive option is a dress with a peplum, or flounce effect.

'Love at Work' may be answer to dating dilemma

Associated Press

Your office is a better place than singles bars or dating services to find a supply of smart, compatible, available men.

If you want love and marriage as well as career success, Margaret Kent and Robert Feinschreiber wrote in their book, "Love At Work," excerpted in the current issue of Cosmopolitan, then the most efficient place for husband hunting is at work.

"The only place where you spend enough time to meet and get to know a man is at work, so that becomes the natural place to meet men," they wrote.

The advantages of love and work include your ability to show your best personality to a captive audience. The qualifications that got you hired can make you look good in a social context.

You are at your mental best at work, using your talent, energy and concentration. You can show a man you are intelligent and articulate.

You don't waste time and energy on the wrong person. Work also makes it easier to learn about him. He got the job, so the company has done some of the weeding out already.

You will learn his real priorities as he makes decisions and acts on them. Coworkers can tell you what he is like and you can observe him without his being aware of it. It's hard to act phony day after day, so you will find fewer unpleasant surprises.

Some personality traits that can be observed at work and carry over into romance include assertiveness; capacity for stress, criticism and boredom; compassion; generosity; honesty; patience; humor; stability and temper.

Benefits of office romance range from realistic expectations to being able to drive to work together.

There are objections to office romance but few of them stand up under close examination.

Preoccupation. Some people claim that lovers who meet at work will become preoccupied with their relationship. Since often the people involved try to keep their relationship secret, they concentrate on work to try to appear no more than colleagues.

Cover up. Another objection is that lovers cover up each other's mistakes. Possible, but they also will be able to correct each other's mistakes rather than cover them up.

Lower work quality. Romance may reduce work quality initially, but within a few weeks you'll be helping each other succeed.

Favoritism. One lover showing favoritism to another can be a problem particularly when the relationship is secret and management can't deal with it. When you alone make a decision that favors your lover, be sure you can back it up with solid facts and objective standards.

Loss of confidentiality. Sometimes secrecy is necessary within an organization. You avoid this problem by working in activities where gathering and sharing information is encouraged.

Canada called most often from U.S.

Associated Press

BASKING RIDGE, N.J. — Canada is the country phoned most often from the United States, followed by Mexico, the United Kingdom, West Germany, Japan, France, Italy, Colombia, Korea and the Philippines.

According to a recently published 222-page book from AT&T titled "The World's Telephones," the United States is the country most often called from Nicaragua — despite political tensions between the two nations.

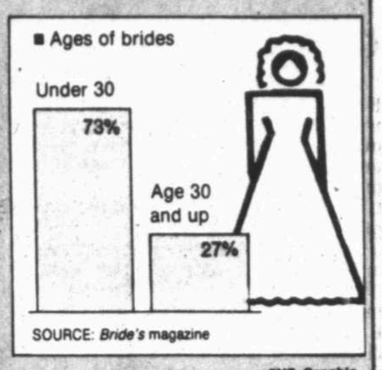

The book also notes that Sweden has the most telephones per capita, with 63 for every 100 persons.

India has the least, with five per thousand.

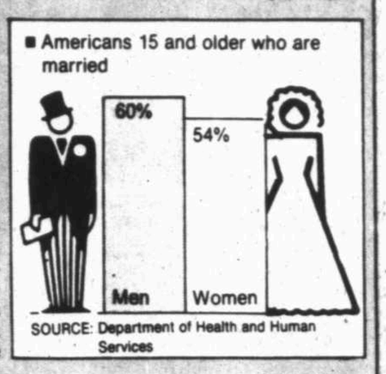

Countries with the most telephones are the United States, Japan, West Germany, France, the United Kingdom, Italy, Canada, Spain and Brazil.

Median age of brides, grooms growing older

By PATRICK KURP
Hearst News Service

CNS Graphic

CNS Graphic

Brides and bridegrooms are growing older, and Betty Friedan probably shares some of the responsibility.

"Much of it is women deciding to start careers first. It's certainly connected to feminism, 'The Feminine Mystique,' " said Robert Wells, professor of history at Union College, citing Friedan's epochal 1963 study.

One apparent byproduct of the Women's Revolution has been the steadily advancing age of marriage in the United States — now the highest in a century. The social reverberations of such a shift include slower birth and divorce rates, changing sexual behavior and new real estate markets.

IN 1890, the median age at first marriage was 26.1 years for men and 22 years for women. These numbers remained relatively stable for the next half-century, then dropped dramatically after World War II, when the parents of the Baby Boomers married. The trend bottomed out in 1956, when the average bride was 20 and her groom 22.5, and has climbed steadily ever since.

"Women are staying in the labor force longer. They're waiting longer to get married and they're waiting to have children. They're exercising choice," said Janet McLafferty, a research associate with American Demographics Inc. of Ithaca, N.Y.

"Women are exploring options other than marriage," said Tom Exter, a senior editor at American Demographics magazine. "With more educational opportunities, the female contribution to the labor market has become more valuable."

ANOTHER SIGNIFICANT trend is the narrowing gap between the ages at which men and women marry. Throughout most of the century, the average groom was about four years his wife's senior. Today, the difference has been cut in half.

A report issued by the Census Bureau in 1983 said "these changes suggest that the marriage pattern for women is becoming more like that for men as women pursue higher education and participate in the labor force before marriage."

As a result, the number of people who live alone has been rising for almost two decades. By 1987, one out of every three households had a single occupant, according to a report issued by the National Association of Realtors. By the year 2000, the report predicted, "Singles will make up the largest share of the nation's households."

"Women are choosing careers first. People are not as interested in having children in the sense that that's not the most important thing in the world," Wells said.

CENSUS STATISTICS show that 41 percent of adults of marriageable age (15 and older) are now single — possibly the highest rate ever for the U.S. Over the next several decades, Wells predicted that later marriage will result in a slowing of population growth. Older couples, he said, are less likely to have children.

John D'Amelio, professor of history at the University of North Carolina and co-author of "Intimate Matters: A History of Sexuality in America," agreed: "It has the effect of keeping the birth rate down, especially when combined with the universal accessibility of birth control."

Later marriage, he said, "virtually guarantees" that both partners will already have had active sex lives. "People are no longer unthinkingly marrying for sex alone."

An unexpected byproduct of later marriages, according to a senior fellow at the Urban Institute in Washington, D.C., has been the recently declining divorce rate.

MOST DIVORCES occur in the first five to seven years of marriage, Thomas Espenshade said. Delayed marriage, especially when the unmarried couples live together, eliminates that "vulnerable period."

"Those who get married younger aren't as mature," he said. "The younger the age of marriage, the more likely it will end in divorce or separation."

Later marriages also result in longer generations. In other words, couples having children at 25 create four generations in a century. Children at 33 result in only three generations — thus further slowing population growth.

Wells, however, noted that such demographic trends as median marriage age and length of generations have ebbed and flowed with the centuries. Today's older marriages, for instance, resemble marriage trends in 18th-century America.

"What we are seeing is not new," he said. "The causes are new, but if you take the longer view, you see that such fluctuations are relatively minor."

Fewer calories, proper nutrients needed

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — Women need fewer calories than men but not fewer nutrients, according to a food industry scientist.

"Years ago, before modern conveniences, women performed more physical labor than they do today," says Dee Graham of Del Monte Foods USA. And, it wasn't unusual for women to require 3,000 calories a day.

By contrast, Graham said, today's average woman needs only about 2,000 calories a day, but she needs the same amount of other nutrients.

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Exercise program vital activity for retirees

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

Physical fitness, including a regularly scheduled workout, is beneficial to everyone, but regular exercise is especially helpful to older individuals. An active physical fitness program can help retard the degenerative conditions of aging, and possibly lengthen life and improve its quality.

People who regularly workout often say they feel better or have more energy after they exercise. And indeed, research has shown that regular physical activity, along with proper diet, gives participants stronger bones and muscles, and improved circulation, muscular strength and elasticity. It improves endurance and posture, and helps boost morale and confidence. A good workout program also helps in controlling weight, reducing stress and stimulating body organs and systems, particularly the digestive system.

Any exercise program should first, be enjoyable, and second, be a regular activity.

The social aspect of an exercise program is as important as maintaining the program. Participating with other persons in a regularly-scheduled exercise program makes the program more fun and increases the chances of it continuing. Senior exercise classes at the Senior Activity Center and the YMCA provide both fellowship and physical benefits.

To get the most from exercise, working out three to four times a week, on alternate days, is best. Participants also should gradually increase the exercise, building up to 30 to 45 minutes of sustained movement. Because of differences in physical capabilities in participants, group sessions led by a trained instructor are very effective for for older individuals, especially those just beginning an exercise program. Controlled programs are safer and reduce the chances that an individual will do too much during the first days.

Persons age 60 and older should consult their doctor before starting a fitness program. In most cases, an exercise routine can be designed for an older person, taking into consideration any disabilities that individual may have. Most physicians can determine an individual's capability and how much exercise that person can participate in.

The best fitness programs are a combination of exercise and education. Participants should understand the benefits of the activity schedule and the recommended guidelines to achieve the highest level of conditioning. Attempting too much, too soon, can leave persons stiff, sore and discouraged. Trained fitness instructors can help set up a beneficial workout schedule.

Working out with a partner or in a group setting is highly recommended. For more information contact the YMCA or the Midland Senior Activity Center.

ATTITUDE

These glasses are simply plastic frames with clear plastic lenses worn to give the impression of the intellectual look that is associated with wearing "real glasses."

"They (Attitude Glasses) have been out in Midland since about June," said Terri Snider, assistant manager of Claire's Boutique. "They were out before that (nationally), but weren't really that popular in Midland until the first of summer."

"Now we sell on the average of two to three pairs a day," said Cristine Kennedy, manager of Claire's Boutique.

Ms. Kennedy and Ms. Snider said that most of the customers buying Attitude Glasses are between the ages of 13 and 19; however, buyers are certainly not limited to that age range.

"I sold a pair to a lady that was 43 years old the other day," Ms. Kennedy said.

"Some of the teenagers' moms are buying them, too," Ms. Snider said.

The fashion attitude about these glasses is so strong that many teens will wear Attitude Glasses with their contact lenses, but will not wear their real glasses, according to the store managers.

One advantage Attitude Glasses have over the real thing is price. They average about $7 a pair, versus about $100 and up for corrected lenses. But once you get passed the difference in price, many other attitudes about the imposter glasses versus "real" glasses are very similar.

For instance, most customers buy Attitude Glasses to achieve the "intellectual Look," according to the boutique's managers, a fact that is consistent with the national survey results of why people select certain frames for their corrective lenses.

Also in keeping with national results are the types of frames that are most popular.

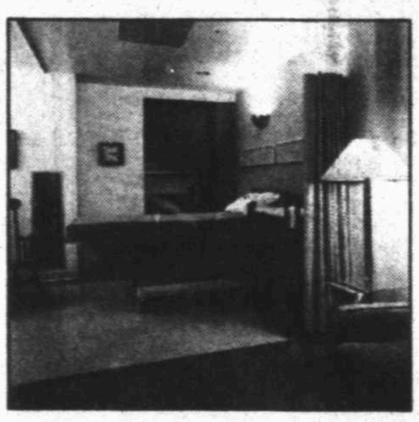

In survey results, the classic tortoise-shell frame, which once connoted a "book worm" image, is considered the best choice for men in the work environment, with conventional wire frames placing as the second favorite style.

For women in the office, the classic tortoise-shell frames won the nod again, but the ultra-modern designer frames ranked second.

Attitude Glasses follow the national trends according to sales at Claire's. Local buyers prefer the dark brown and simulated tortoise-shell frames, as well as clear ice-blue frames (which sold out almost by the time they hit the rack). Black frames seem to be the slowest selling color.

The survey was conducted by Pearle Vision Center. Approximately 60 percent of those polled recruit either for executive-level positions or for the financial or communications fields.

Childbirth Isn't A Spectator Sport.

Childbirth is an intensely personal moment for women. And, a lot of us are tired of being good sports about sharing that moment with a room full of strangers.

That's why we've designed a whole new kind of birthing environment at Women's & Children's Hospital. It's called a Labor/Delivery/Recovery room (LDR)—a place where you can have all the peace and security you need and deserve for a very private occasion. The birth of your child.

Designed for low-risk births, our LDR's look more like luxury hotel suites than hospital rooms. We think that's a welcome improvement. Beautifully appointed furnishings, a private bath, and even a cozy easy chair add to the special feeling of warmth and elegance you'll find here. State-of-the-art equipment and supplies necessary for childbirth have been thoughtfully hidden from view, but are available whenever needed.

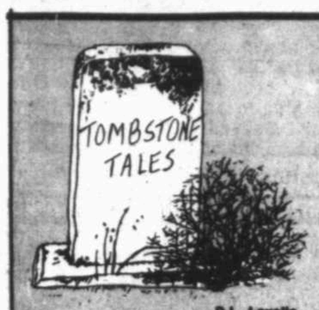

The LDR rooms are different in other ways, too. When you're admitted to an LDR, you will remain there throughout the entire birth process and recovery. And, best of all, you can share the experience with loved ones. You may be supported by your husband or other chosen "coach" throughout labor and delivery.

After your child's arrival, you will remain in the LDR for as long as possible spending a relaxing time getting acquainted with your newborn and visiting with family and friends before being moved to your hospital room.

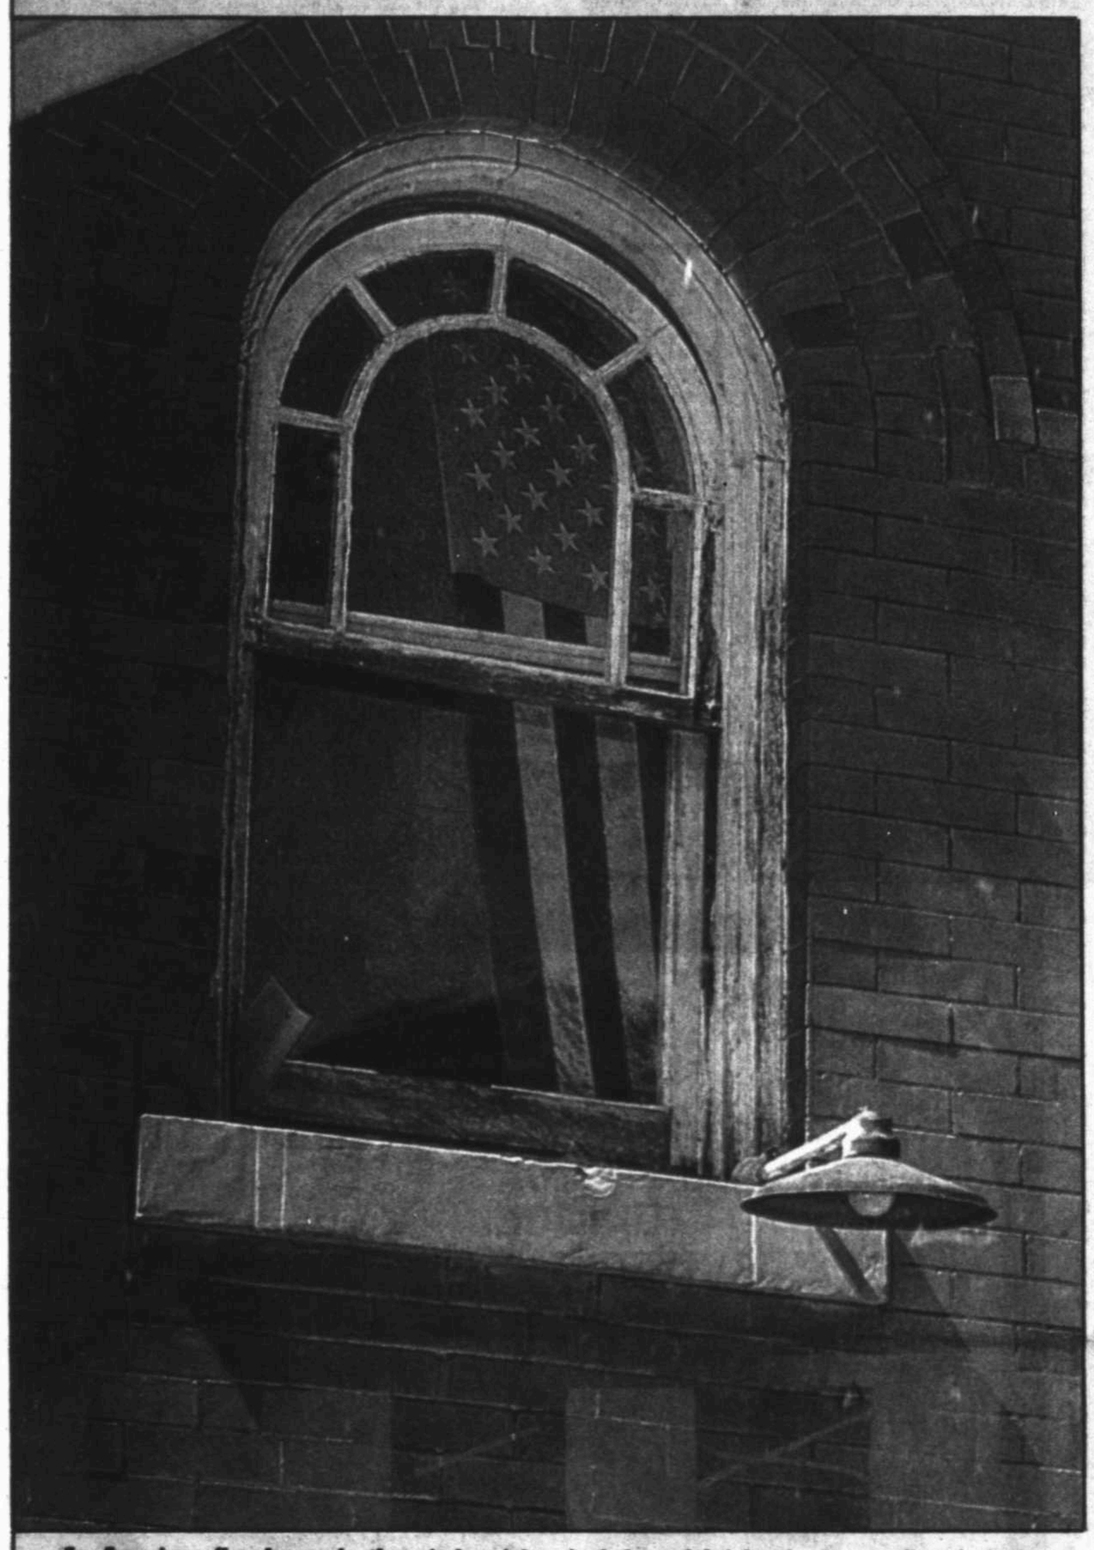

Having a baby isn't like scoring a touchdown. The LDR's at Women's & Children's Hospital are dignified, rewarding, and personal places for special experiences. Ask your doctor about the LDR concept, then call 334-8200 at ext 297 for a tour or more information about The Birth Place. You'll find our new LDR is something to cheer about.

Founded on Faith

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the final article in the five-part series "Tombstone Tales," about Texas ghost towns.

Scattered along either side of Farm to Market Road 1795, six miles west of Gilmer in East Texas, are the remnants of a community which once served as a haven for Mormons seeking freedom from religious persecution. Several wood frame houses and a red brick schoolhouse are some of the only original structures left to tell the tale of what was once a thriving Mormon colony called Kelsey.

IN THE EARLY 1800s, many immigrants came to America to avoid the suppression of their religious beliefs. They came to exercise their "freedom of religion" in a land that prided itself for its religious tolerance. Ironically, the Mormons — who founded the only major religion with American roots — were persecuted, killed and harrassed by other Americans with differing beliefs.

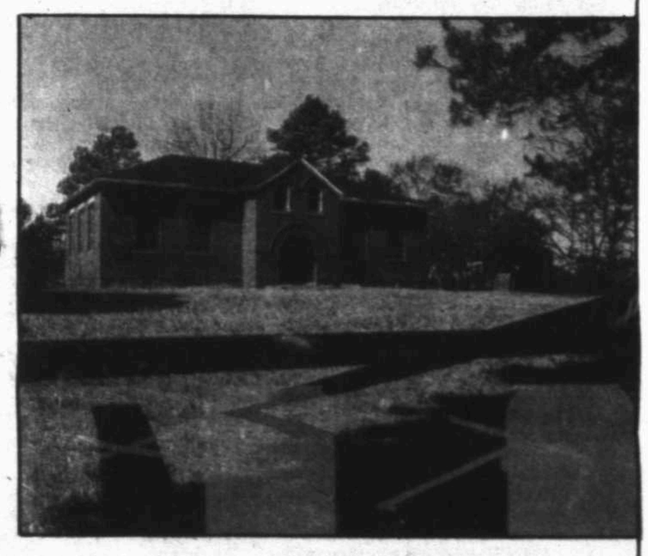

Because many of the Mormon beliefs challenged accepted values, Mormons in the southern states, especially those in Missouri, found themselves in the center of a growing anti-Mormon sentiment by 1832. The Mormons enraged Americans in the South when they befriended Indians and blacks. When Andrew Jackson's policies expelled Indians from their ancestral lands along the Ohio, the native Americans moved through Missouri to the high arid plains beyond the Mississippi.

TO MOST SETTLERS, Indians were savages crossing the land. But to the Mormons, the Indians were part of the literal gathering of Israel, according to "The Mormon Experience: The History of the Latter-day Saints" by Leonard J. Arrington and Davis Bitton. When they befriended the Indians, Mormons were accused of being "Indian agitators." The Mormons tolerance for other races, especially black slaves, was considered unacceptable to other Americans.

Please see KELSEY, Page 2F

Kelsey is scattered along either side of Farm to Market Road 1795 for about 1.5 miles south from its intersection with Texas Highway 154, about 6.2 miles west of Gilmer.

KELSEY

"The last train ran through Kelsey in September 1917, leaving the Kelsey farmers with no practical means for transporting their crops to market."

—T. LINDSAY BAKER

The Mormons tolerance for other races, especially black slaves, was considered unacceptable to other Americans. When Missouri laws were passed to keep free blacks out of the state, William Wine Phelps, editor of the Mormon newspaper "The Evening Star," infuriated the local populace by writing, "As to slaves, we have nothing to say; in connection with the wonderful events of this age much is doing towards ablolishing slavery, and colonizing the blacks in Africa."

Anti-Mormon sentiment exploded and Missouri residents signed a manifesto in July 1833 agreeing to rid themselves of the Mormons "peacably if we can, by force if we must," according to Linda King Newell and Valeen Tippetts Avery in "Mormon Enigma: Emma Hale Smith."

But, racial tolerance was just one of the Mormon beliefs other Americans disagreed with. The issue of polygamy, which was publically announced by the Mormons in 1852, made the sect more controversial. Hostility to Mormons was present in New York, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Iowa and most of the southern states.

Two Mormon brothers, John and Jim Edgar, left their home in Andalusia, Ala., in the late 1800s to escape the prejudice of their neighbors. They settled in the Mesa, Ariz., Mormon Colony. But they were unhappy with the desert climate and became homesick for the greenery of the South, according to T. Lindsay Baker in "Ghost Towns of Texas."

Jim returned to Alabama and John packed up his belongings in 1897 to follow his brother, but had only made it as far as Upshur County by the end of the year. He rented a farm in 1898 on the site which was to become Kelsey. John planned to farm for one season in order to raise enough money to join his brother in Alabama, but his harvest was so abundant that he decided to stay. The farmer wrote his brother suggesting that he join him in East Texas, an his brother did. The Edgar brothers then purchased 140 acres of farmland in 1900 and did so well that religious leaders in Salt Lake City decided that Upshur County would be a good location for a Mormon Colony.

In 1901, church officials sent missionaries to the colony where they set up a Mormon Sunday School. Nine Mormon families moved in and a log chapel was built. In 1902, a post office was established in the community and it was named Kelsey, after Kelsy Creek which flowed through town. Kelsey soon attracted other Mormon families, especially those fleeing from harrassment in the South. By 1917, Kelsey had a population of 750 people, a two-story red brick schoolhouse, a gristmill, five stores, a cotton gin, two blacksmith shops, a brick kiln, three sawmills and one shingle mill. The Marshall and East Texas Railway tracks were laid through town and a wooden depot was erected in Kelsey.

However, just as Kelsey's population peaked, families began leaving the area. As the controversial issues surrounding the Mormons died down, their need for a haven outside the South was soon lessened, and many families returned to their homes in southern states.

Another major contributing factor to Kelsey's decline, according to Baker, was the abandonment of the Marshall and East Texas Railway. Baker said, "The railway through the town had been built mainly as a logging line, and when the nearby timber areas it served were depleted, its economic base disappeared, and the railroad, bypassed the Kelsey line. The last train ran through the area in September 1917, leaving the Kelsey farmers with no practical means for transporting their crops to market."

Today there is a population of about 200 residents living in about 40 homes, according to resident and historian Fayrene Bonebrake. "About 80 percent of the population are Mormons — many of them are descendants of Kelsey founders," Ms. Bonebrake said.

There is no church or school, and many places of business have long since closed their doors in Kelsey. Now, the two-story red brick schoolhouse is a single story building and, according to Ms. Bonebrake, is used to store memorabilia which is displayed during Kelsey reunions or special gatherings.

Kelsey was awarded a Texas Historical Marker in 1969, which stands in front of a vacant building, the last commercial store that operated in the town.

Ms. Bonebrake, a resident of Kelsey since 1945, said that although Kelsey never had a large population, it's roots run deep for the Mormon descendents. "Wherever I go, I meet people from Kelsey," she said. The Mormon Colony founded on faith, "still has a faithful few."

Author compiles book of humorous tombstone epitaths

New York Times News Service

Read any good gravestones lately? How about this one from a cemetery in Burlington, Vt.:

Here lies the body of Mary Ann Lowder
She burst while drinking a Seidlitz Powder.
Called from this world to her Heavenly rest,
She drank it and she effervesced.

Or this one found on a headstone of a woman named Mabel Charlotte, who died in Oxfordshire, England, in 1800:

Here lies the body
Of Mabel Charlotte
Born a virgin
Died a harlot
She was a virgin
Till her 21st year
A remarkable thing
In Oxfordshire.

These are two examples of what you'll find in a new book by Richard De'ath called "The Best of Tombstone Humour" (Javelin, $5.95).

De'ath, also known as British writer Spike Milligan, says witty epitaphs have been around since about 1500.

Since then the smooth granite face of a tombstone has proven irresistible to all manner of morbid poets.

The author found this tombstone in Wiltshire, England:

Blown Upward
Out of Sight,
He Sought the Leak
By Candlelight.

Sometimes tombstones have been used as a sort of marble Consumer Protection Agency, as was this one spotted in a Pennsylvania cemetery:

In Memory of Ellen Shannon
Who was fatally burned by the explosion of a lamp filled with Danforth's Non-Explosive Fluid.

Other tombstones seem to be offering wry observations from the grave, such as this one from a cemetery in Dyfed, England:

Here I lie and no wonder I'm dead,
For the wheel of the wagon
Went over my head.

Or this one found in London:

We must all die, there is no doubt;
Your glass is running — mine is out.

Inscription-writers whose marriages were less than perfect saw the gravestone as an opportunity to finally get in the last word:

Here lies my poor wife,
A sad slattern and shrew,
If I said I regretted her
I should lie, too.

Or this from an Enfield, England:

Beneath this stone and not above it
Lie the remains of Anna Lovett;
But please, dear reader, not to shove it,
Lest she should come again above it.
For 'twixt you and I, no one does covet
To see again this Anna Lovett.

Naturally, the author of "The Best of Tombstone Humour" has already composed his own epitaph. "I demand a second opinion," it reads.

Historic restoration juxtaposes 1790s with 1950s

PORTSMOUTH, N.H. — When it comes to new exhibits, curators can experience the same opening-night jitters that actors do on stage.

"Will the public understand what we are saying?" is the question curators ask themselves as the curtain goes up on their displays.

The question was particularly worrisome for Jane Nylander, director of Strawbery Banke, a 10-acre complex of 35 historic buildings here.

"When it was decided to place a two-room 1795 setting beside a 1950s apartment on their original site here at Drisco House," she explained, "we knew we had an unusual concept — really a first in the museum world — but one that gave us little background for assessing visitor reaction."

The 18th-century Drisco House is the first building visitors see on entering the grounds.

When museum officials first started talking about restoring the building in 1984, "We felt that we needed a special theme," Mrs. Nylander said.

The house, in its prominent location, offered the curators an opportunity to tell the story of Strawbery Banke, one of the nation's oldest continuously occupied neighborhoods.

"Although our oldest house, the Sherburne, dates to 1695, it is Drisco House that has the longest record of continuous living, starting in 1795 until the last family moved out in 1957," Mrs. Nylander said.

The museum capitalized on this by installing two exhibits in the building, contrasting life in the late 1700s with life in the mid-1900s.

WHEN THE EXHIBITS opened on May 1, the experiment proved a resounding success.

"It is the '50s nostalgia that appeals to people," Mrs. Nylander said.

"After all, to see objects that we have used and lived with in a museum setting is really quite fun for everyone. But we also know that seeing the two periods challenges our visitors to observe by comparison. They see the past in a different light."

Strawbery Banke was named for the wild berries growing on the banks of the Piscataqua River nearby.

Settled in 1630, it evolved into a waterfront community where wealthy merchants and craftspeople lived side-by-side.

By the late 1800s, the once-prosperous neighborhood was occupied largely by poor European immigrants who called themselves Puddledockers, after the old canal that flowed nearby.

They lived in the small tenement apartments and duplexes that had been formed inside the ancient walls of the community's original buildings.

Urban-renewal enthusiasts marked the area for demolition in the 1950s, and the last occupants of the Drisco House moved out.

A small group of citizens, shocked by the threat of losing what they considered architectural treasures, formed Strawbery Banke Inc. in 1958.

After convincing state legislators to include restoration in the urban-renewal plans, the group was successful in getting Strawbery Banke declared a historic site.

It opened to the public in 1965.

At the start, the federal government, the city government and individuals financed the restoration, which has cost about $200,000 so far.

More recently, non-profit foundations have provided the bulk of the money.

Seven of the houses have been completed — each furnished in a period appropriate to its own history.

OTHER BUILDINGS contain exhibits like working craft shops, or are used to demonstrate traditional trades like small boatmaking.

The Drisco House project started in 1986 under the supervision of Arthur Gerrier, who was property manager for Strawbery Banke at the time.

"John Shapley built the house in 1794, and when he moved in, in 1795, he opened a front-room shop, a common practice of the time," Gerrier said.

"In 1800, Shapley sold it to Joshua Drisco, who changed the shop into a parlor. His heirs remained in the house until the turn of the century. Then, under new ownership, the single-family house became a two-family house, divided right down the middle."

The house presented several challenges to restorers: Should the two front doors be kept, for example? How should the room settings be handled, keeping in mind easy access for the public?

"In essence, we had a 1950s duplex that needed to be converted into a two-family house separated by 150 years," said Gerrier.

Renovating in a mixture of styles required a careful balancing of educational goals and esthetic judgments.

"We retained the 20th-century exterior, which included the two front doors and split window overhead, although we knew that the 18th-century pedimented door would have more eye appeal," Gerrier explained.

"Once inside, we went through 20 layers of wallpaper to find the shop's original shelf markings."

WITH THE LAST 18th-century architectural detail in place on the east side of the house, Gerrier and his staff proceeded to the west side, the modern apartment.

Returning to 1950 presented its own set of problems, however, among them producing by hand the kitchen's three-foot-high beaded wainscoting, which was originally made by machine.

Carolyn Parsons, Strawbery Banke's registrar and acting curator at the time of Drisco's restoration, furnished the four downstairs rooms (the upstairs is closed).

Since no records existed on the Shapley furnishings, Ms. Parsons took a sampling of 18th-century inventories from county records and fed them into a computer to determine the contents for the east side back parlor.

The result was a simply furnished room, but one that contained choice examples from Strawbery Banke's own collection: a New Hampshire slant-top maple desk, a gleaming drop-leaf Queen Anne table and two New England Windsor chairs set against a reproduction of blue and white striped wallpaper.

A collection of 18th-century ledgers, also taken from the museum's archives, guided her in furnishing the 18th-century shop.

"We gave it a slightly barren look because records told us Shapley's inventories varied according to the goods brought into Portsmouth by ship," Ms. Parsons said.

"He carried a wide variety, going from raw cotton to New England and West Indies rum."

For the west side of the house, Ms. Parsons and her staff worked with members of the last family to live at Drisco, who asked not to be identified.

"We looked through their old photo albums," Ms. Parsons said, "and then gave them Sears, Roebuck catalogues, asking them to check what they might have owned or what they remembered from other Puddledockers' houses."

TO STOCK THE kitchen shelves, Ms. Parsons contacted food manufacturers.

Some sent original boxes or photographs of 1950s brands, from which the museum experts made reproductions.

The curators also approached owners of antique shops, friends, even members of the staff.

"Everyone wanted to help," Ms. Parsons said.

"A Smithsonian curator, while visiting us, said that his wife's uncle had just died and left intact his Brooklyn brownstone. A number of our kitchen appliances came from that house."

Her own mother contributed two small fruit prints, which now hang on the living room wall.

"They were traditional giveaways when you bought suites of maple furniture like the one we display here," Ms. Parsons said.

The result: a realistic kitchen still life, with Depression glass and fiesta ware sitting alongside packages of Duz, Salada tea and Quaker Oats.

Lois Haine, a guide at Drisco House, said that the attention to accuracy and detail surprised and pleased visitors.

The young are as expressive as the old.

"They say, 'Look! The smoke stand that Granddad used'; sometimes it's Great-Granddad," she said.

"They laugh at the small Camel cigarette pack. I never know which item — it varies greatly — will bring forth the exclamations."

"It's like coming home again to Mom's and Dad's," said Nicholas Policastro of Woodcliff Lake, N.J., as he looked at the '50s apartment.

"There's not one thing we don't recognize, like the 'Persian' linoleum rug, and even the kitchen Hoosier hutch with a flour sifter."

THE HOOSIER HUTCH dates to the early 1900s; it is a single unit of cabinets and drawers with a table top.

It may have been manufactured first in Indiana, thus the name Hoosier.

"You see yourself as a child, then you appreciate your own beginnings and realize what a shame it would be to destroy this," Policastro said.

"By relating to your own history, you start thinking in a different way about the past."

BEFORE THE FALL

The sensitivity of the hair follicles is so acute that they can reflect changes in the rest of the body. As a result, hair loss has been linked to stress, hormonal changes, physical trauma, serious illness, and improper diet. However, the causes of hair loss can be difficult to isolate because there can be a six-month lag period between a cause and the onset of hair loss. For instance, a crash diet can lead to hair loss if insufficient amounts of protein are not being taken into the body. If a woman does not eat at least five ounces of protein each day, growing hairs can switch into their resting phase. This puts a majority of hair in jeopardy of falling out. A return to proper diet will reverse this particular cause of hair loss.

Knowing how to properly care for your hair is what Mary at SALON UNIQUE is all about. We keep current on all the latest hair care methods and techniques to offer you the finest hair care available. # Single mother of five succeeded on grit

By CLAUDIA FELDMAN

HOUSTON (AP) — When Ninfa Laurenzo seconded George Bush's nomination for president in New Orleans, she touched her listeners' heartstrings.

The story of the poor single mother of five who turned a tiny Mexican restaurant on Navigation into a wildly successful chain of Texas restaurants appealed to women, to minorities, to other hard-working people who have made it on nothing but grit.

It's a story Otila Garza, a hard-working minority woman, can appreciate. In fact, Ms. Garza and Ms. Laurenzo have an astonishing amount in common.

Ms. Garza, for those who have not been lucky enough to dine at one of her or her sons' establishments in Pharr, Harlingen, Edinburg or Mission, may be the premier restaurateur in the Rio Grande Valley. She's certainly one of the Valley's leading citizens. She's invented so many dishes and dreamed up so many successful restaurant concepts, even her kids can't remember them all.

But Ms. Garza, like Ms. Laurenzo, entered the restaurant business long on determination and short on cash.

Ms. Garza, like Ms. Laurenzo, has four boys and a girl, and both women were thinking of those kids when they launched their businesses.

Explained Ms. Garza, "I needed an open road. I was looking for a future for my children."

To Ms. Garza's knowledge, Ms. Laurenzo never has dined at her family's restaurants.

BUT MS. GARZA, whose daughter lives in Houston, has visited Ninfa's restaurants on Navigation and Westheimer.

"I like her food," Ms. Garza said. "I have plenty of admiration for this big lady. She is good and hard working like me."

Ms. Garza is 67. Rolando De Leon, her fourth of five children, is 35. "She's in better shape than I am," he said.

"She could run the Pentagon. Or Exxon."

Elvia De Leon Salyer, Ms. Garza's daughter and a resident of Houston, said, "The power you feel when you sit with her is just unbelievable. Yet, she'll jump up and get you a cup of coffee."

The grande dame of Valley restaurateurs was first exposed to the business as a child. Her grandmother ran a small restaurant in Reynosa called Rio Bravo, and there she taught Ms. Garza how to cook.

"Even at 8 years old, I was looking in the kitchen all the time," Ms. Garza said.

It was years, however, before she practiced her skills in a professional way. Ms. Garza married, produced five children, divorced and remarried. All the while, she focused on her children. She worked, Ms. De Leon explained, but her work was at home.

Ms. Garza came from a family that was well-to-do. Her first husband had been prosperous. Her second husband, however, tried to support her and her children on his truck driver's salary, and Ms. Garza found it difficult to adjust to the new standard of living.

In 1970, she took virtually all the money she had — $1,500 — and plunked it down on a small drive-in in Pharr known as the Round-Up.

"We had curb service, four little tables and a very simple menu," Ms. De Leon said. "Hamburgers, fried chicken, some Mexican food."

When Ms. Garza began searching for one more item to add to the menu, she settled on a fajita recipe she had learned at her grandmother's knee.

"At that time," Ms. De Leon said, "nobody in the area knew what fajitas were."

Ms. Garza remembered, "I gave them away free to the people. I would give them packages of tacos, fajitas, pico de gallo, flour tortillas, big butterfly shrimp. And everybody responded. Pharr is a small town, but the people are beautiful."

SOON, CUSTOMERS were forming lines out the door, and Ms. Garza was working 16-and 17-hour days. Her two boys still living at home, Rolando and Rene, worked almost that hard. They would go to high school, then head for the Round-Up.

Often, it was 1 a.m. before they tumbled, exhausted, into bed.

The restaurant helped the family meet expenses, Ms. De Leon said. "And for my mother, it was something she wanted us to do. She wanted to boost us up."

By 1972, Ms. Garza was planning expansions. She added a little patio and picnic tables to the Round-Up, and people continued to line up for her fajitas.

Soon, Ms. Garza's children were contributing to her store of recipes and marketing ideas. One menu item she called "Tila's Botana Platter for Four". It featured fajitas, complete with fixings and side dishes, and it cost $4.

Today, Tila's platter still is enormously popular, but it sells for $21.95.

Ms. Garza encouraged her children's creative cookery, added what Ms. De Leon described as "Mexican flair" to the dishes and put them on the menu.

"She pushed us — she demanded everything from us," Ms. De Leon said.

THERE WAS a reason for the pushing. Garza had more expansions in mind at the Round-Up — she added a dining room, then another, so that today the restaurant can handle 400 diners every two hours. Also, she was preparing her children for business.

Ms. Garza and son Ray have opened two restaurants called La Parrilla, one in Edinburg and another in Mission. Rolando and Rene run a second Round-Up in Harlingen, and Ms. Garza is making loose plans to open a fifth restaurant in El Paso.

The menus, the management philosophies, the special flourishes such as tuxedoed waiters, red velvet curtains and beautifully set tables are basically the same at all the restaurants.

The prices are the same, too, and inevitably they have risen over the years. Today, lunch can cost as little as $4 or $5 a person or as much as $15 or $20 a person.

To keep things running smoothly, Ms. Garza depends on 80 employees at the Round-Up in Pharr alone. "They are beautiful people — they are my family," she said.

Sometimes, however, those employees take Ms. Garza's recipes and open restaurants of their own. Sometimes restaurateurs from around the country eat at her tables, ask her for recipes and borrow her ideas.

Some folks go so far as to offer to go into business with her. They even offer to buy the restaurants.

About the employees who take her ideas and run, Ms. Garza said, "OK. Well." She paused for several beats.

Salyer, Ms. Garza's daughter in Houston, operates Elvia's Catering here, and she and her mom regularly meet for cooking classes, restaurant association meetings and other combinations of business and pleasure.

A few years ago, Ms. Garza helped Salyer start Elvia's Round-Up in the Clear Lake area. Before Salyer decided to call it quits, the restaurant had lost over $1 million.

"People didn't like our food," Salyer said sadly, "even though it was the same food served at the other restaurants. People were always telling me the hot sauce was too hot or not hot enough."

SALYER LISTED a string of things that she would do differently if she were to open the restaurant today, but she has no plans for that. Instead, she is comforted by the knowledge that some people must have enjoyed the food because her catering business is doing very well. She met many of her catering customers at the old restaurant.

She also got a great deal of comfort from her mother.

"My mother told me, 'OK, so you failed. I've failed many times. Now you've got to recoup and go forward.'"

Apparently, that philosophy works.

Tired owner wants to sell All-American vintage diner

BUTLER, Pa. (AP) — The bumper stickers bragged, "Nothing could be finer than to eat at Digger's Diner." Now it's a diner to go.

Anyone willing to flip flapjacks and hamburgers — and pay the cost of moving it — can have the 1940s-vintage restaurant free of charge, says William "Digger" Young.

He grew tired of the diner chores because he also was juggling jobs as a mortician, Butler County coroner, and "Clown on Roller Skates" at children's hospitals and nursing homes.

"It's just that I wore too many hats. I'd ... put an apron on over my suit and pour coffee. You didn't catch me cooking, but I'd be running the cash register. I liked to be where the money was," he said.

Young, 55, got his nickname from the funeral business his family has owned since 1896.

His funeral home is next to the diner, painted brown and yellow to match. But the location is purely coincidental. Unlike the funeral business, Young's diner brought customers back, before it closed a few years ago.

Young wants to use the land occupied by the diner to expand the funeral home and has been trying to sell the all-steel building for two years. When no buyers nibbled, he decided to give it away and placed newspaper ads that offered it "free for the moving."

So far, the response has been pretty dead because no one has been willing to pay the several thousand dollars necessary to have the diner dismantled and moved, Young said.

"When they find out what it will cost to move it, they don't seem to want to go any further," he said.

The diner is the all-American variety, a Jerry O'Mahoney Inc. special from Elizabeth, N.J., with curvaceous lines, stainless steel trim, vinyl-covered stools and formica counters.

But now all that's left is the building. Young sold the refrigerators and countertops to a pizza restaurant in Illinois, the pizza oven to a Pennsylvania campground, and the stoves, grill and cash register to a Youngstown, Ohio, restaurant.

Stale cake donuts, paper doilies and a baby's yellow rattle litter the dirty floor, and the walls in the kitchen area are coated with decades of grease.

But Young says there's still plenty of life in the diner, which, with its concrete floor and industrial-strength walls, seems built to last.

Speech patterns of pet bird, husband similar

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

For my wedding anniversary, one of my kids bought me a speech-training cassette for my pet bird.

I've had the bird in my office for three years now, and he's never done anything but dribble peanut shells all over the floor and occasionally fly over my typewriter and "make tapioca." Now he was about to sit around and hum opera tunes.

The instructions on the cassette were rather simple. For 20 minutes, twice a day, the bird would listen to five repetitive phrases, a soliloquy from "Hamlet," and arias from "Carmen" and "Madame Butterfly."

The phrases somehow seemed ludicrous. The first one was, "Hey, come on over here." OK, so let's assume I rush from the other end of the house to his cage. Now what's he going to say? Phrase No. 2: "I'm a bad bird!"? He tries that and he's going to spend the rest of his bird life looking at the wrong side of a cage cover.

The bird needed a finish for it like, "There's a gas leak" or, "I've sent out for ribs."

The instructions suggested you clip your bird's primary flight feathers so he can't fly. They said it would make him dependent on you as a trainer. I said it would give him speed when he tried to throw himself off a ledge after listening to 20 minutes of a bird la-la-ing the "Toreador Song."

I was attracted originally to my bird as a pet because he is a lot like my husband. He'll tell you his name when you ask, and when the phone rings he will say "telephone" but make no move to answer it. They are both limited to those two words.

Somehow I thought the cassette would stretch the bird's talents so that he could laugh out loud once in a while when I read one of my columns to him. That probably comes after he learns to recite the Constitution and hum the "Saber Dance."

But I'm hanging in there — 2 minutes, twice a day. "To be or not to be" ... "I'm a bad bird!" ... "Hey, come on over here" ... "What are you doing?"

Last night my husband looked up from his paper and chirped, "Hey, come on over here."

I walked over to his chair and asked, "What do you want?"

"I haven't the foggiest notion," he said, puzzled. "For no reason, I just felt like saying it."

At least one of 'em has started to talk.

DEAR ABBY

Readers tell couple to go for big wedding

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am writing about the couple signed "Making It Legal." They have lived together for 11 years, have two children, ages 10 and 3, and a third due in September. Now they want to make it legal with a formal church wedding in December, which they can pay for themselves. Family members stated that after 11 years and three children, that kind of wedding would be inappropriate, so the couple asked for your opinion.

You disappointed me when you sided with the family.

Abby, being a minister and having performed many weddings, may I offer my input? I see no reason why this couple shouldn't have the kind of wedding they want. It would make them happy, and would be hurting no one. They would be most welcome in my church, and their children could even be part of the service.

Last Saturday, I officiated at a formal church wedding. The bride was eight months pregnant. We threw puffed rice! — THE REV. JOHN ST. DENNIS, HI-DESERT CHURCH OF RELIGIOUS SCIENCE, APPLE VALLEY, CALIF.

DEAR JOHN ST. DENNIS: You win. My mail has been overwhelmingly in favor of letting the couple have the kind of wedding they want. Score: "Making It Legal," 467; Abby, 19.

DEAR ABBY: I thought I had heard every excuse in the book until I met a cowboy from Lodge Grass, Mont.

This guy drove 132 miles to spend a nice, romantic evening with me.

In the middle of everything, he decided he needed to check the newspaper to see how the horse races turned out. He asked me where the closest place to buy a newspaper was. I told him, and he left.

I heard from him a week later when he called me up and asked if he could see me again.

Can anybody top this for an excuse? — FRUSTRATED IN SHERIDAN, WYO.

DEAR FRUSTRATED: I hope you told him that you had had enough horsing around, and he should scratch you from the lineup.

DEAR ABBY: A reader asked why the waiting rooms of doctors' and dentists' offices are usually furnished with soft, low furniture from which people find it difficult to get up.

You suggested that doctors and dentists pay a visit to their own waiting rooms and sit down — and if they sink into one of those soft cushions from which they find it difficult to get up, they should replace their furniture with the firm upholstered kind.

Abby, no need to buy new furniture! We fit a 3/4-inch-thick piece of plywood under the cushions of any sofa or chair we use on stage. It's actually more comfortable. We don't sink down, and we can rise easily and gracefully to our feet. — NANETTE FABRAY MAC DOUGALL

DEAR NANETTE: The better to accept a standing ovation — of which you've had your share. Thanks for writing.

DEAR ABBY: Thanks for setting the record straight on Ima and Ura Hogg of Texas. I had also heard about the Hogg "sisters." Some people actually claimed they knew them personally.

I am particularly interested in oddball names because my name is Donald Sapp, and when you have a name like that, you might just as well laugh about it — everybody else does.

When one is saddled with a name like Hogg or Sapp, it's wise to choose your children's name carefully. I have a relative whose name is Harry Fox. Harry is a great name for a laugh if your last name is Wolf, Lyon or Foote. – DONALD G. SAPP, PARADISE VALLEY, ARIZ.

DEAR MR SAPP: Thanks for your good-humored letter. Are there any more oddball names out there?

DEAR ABBY: The letter from "On the Seashore," who complained about well-heeled moochers, reminded me of the way my late sister dealt with those leeches. She had a plan that never failed. I've concocted a letter like the one she would use. The names are fictitious, of course:

"Dear Janice: Harry and I are thrilled to learn that you and Bob are planning to visit us. We look forward to seeing you and hearing about your latest trip to Europe. We know that you wouldn't dream of imposing on us knowing how cramped we are, but we will gladly make a hotel reservation for you. In keeping with your expensive taste, I recommend The Paymore Plaza. It may not compare with the Ritz in Paris, or the Excelsior in Rome, but you'll find it adequate and surprisingly reasonable with rates that start at only $165 a day. And for $20 per person, its limousine will pick you up at the airport. However, you may want to rent a car if you plan to do some sightseeing here. There are several car rental offices right at the airport — how convenient!

"It's so sweet of you to want to include us in your travel plans. Please let us know when you'll be here so we can make all the necessary arrangements for you. Love, Denise"

Abby, if this doesn't work, nothing will. I hope you print this, as many of your readers will want to keep it on their writing tables — or next to their phones. — O.G., ANYWHERE, U.S.A.

DEAR O.G.: Should anyone ever write a book titled "How to Lose Friends and Alienate People," your suggested letter should be included.

Everything you'll need to know about planning a wedding can be found in Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding."Send your name and address, plus check or money order for $2.89 ($3.39 in Canada) to: Dear Abby Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Texas knife maker has an edge in movies

By JIM NESBITT

WEATHERFORD, Texas (AP) — There's sun-blanched pasture near Jack Crain's barn-size workshop — Holstein calves nose their way along a fence line, weeds surround a rusty John Deere tractor and chalky road dust boils behind a passing pickup.

It's country out here. The semi-dry kind. Country with a roll to it and a reminder that this is where the true West begins.

This isn't Hollywood. This isn't glitz. And this isn't the jungle location for an Arnold Schwarzenegger movie or the high-rise where Bruce Willis battles bad guys with thick Teutonic accents.

This is where Jack Crain, Hollywood's hottest custom knife maker, turns dull bars of steel into gleaming, razory works of art. From Bowie knives that are the stuff of Lone Star legend to the wicked-looking survival knives Schwarzenegger carried in movies such as "Commando" and "Predator," Crain's work touches the highly-esoteric world of knife collecting and the highly-visible world of movie-making.

"I live in Weatherford, Texas — that's as close to the real world as you can get," said Crain, 41, a former cabinet maker for fast-food chains.

HE MAY LIVE CLOSE and country, but the soft-spoken, bearish knifeman is on a hot streak that is rooted in the world of images and the unreal.

Crain's knives can be seen in three top-grossing action films — the two Schwarzenegger movies and Willis' "Die Hard." They are also featured in two works that are scheduled for release — a movie called "Roadhouse" with Houston's Patrick Swayze and Sam Elliott and a TV film of H.G. Wells' classic "War of the Worlds."

And Crain may make the knives for Schwarzenegger's next action epic, "Sgt. Rock," a movie based on the World War II comic book character.

There may be better knife makers. There may be better knives. But when it comes to combining craftsmanship with salesmanship, Crain is one of the elite.

"Lots of folks make real good knives," said Bruce Voyles, publisher of Blade magazine, a custom knife publication in Knoxville, Tenn. "But it's rare to find a guy who can make good knives and can market them. Jack is one of the few who combine good work with the personality it takes to sell it."

CRAIN'S MOVIE successes are the result of two decades of careful craftsmanship, hustle that is friendly but persistent and a reputation for quality and quickness that appeals to Hollywood producers and prop masters.

"He's the best — I'll tell you," said Tommy Tomlinson, the prop master on "Die Hard" and the "Sgt. Rock" project. "We can call him on a Monday and he can give us something on a Tuesday. His designs, his artistic ability and his willingness to give us something that fits the story line are what count."

Crain is riding the crest of a custom knife wave that started with the Sylvester Stallone "Rambo" epics — movies that featured knives made by an Arkansas craftsman, Jimmy Lyle. Lyle's entree to Stallone was a simple one — the actor collected his knives.

Such casual connections seem to be the way most knife makers get their work on the screen.

"Whoever gets lucky," said Chuck Stapel, 46, a Glendale, Calif., knife maker who crafted blades that appeared in "Little Nikita" and "No Mercy."

But Crain uses salesmanship. He also has tried to cash in on his customized popularity by endorsing T-shirts and a mass-produced copy of the futuristic machete he designed for "Predator." But this last effort hit a snag earlier this month when Crain's lawyers filed a $3 million lawsuit in a Tennessee federal court against a Chattanooga knife company.

CRAIN'S SUIT says Frost Cutlery has damaged the knife maker's reputation and violated its contract with him by farming out the job to a Pakistani firm that made replicas of inferior quality. James Frost, owner of the company, said the lawsuit is "frivolous."

Crain refused to talk about the suit, but said he has signed on with a Waco company that will make mass-produced copies of other Crain knives — work he plans to monitor closely as the company's quality control director.

Crain's movie successes have brought him the trappings of Hollywood — conference calls to Los Angeles, screen credits, stays in Schwarzenegger's mansion.

"It's refreshing to work with creative people, it keeps me going," he said. "Having those people respect what I do gives you a good feeling."

But Crain keeps his eye on the source of his fame — handmade knives. A simple hunting knife will bring Crain $500; a limited edition Bowie can cost up to $2,000. On the resale market, his knives bring as much as $7,000.

"This isn't like making gas for your car or coming up with a miracle cure for disease," Crain said. "It's a luxury item. So it's a privilege to make a living this way."

Crain has a craftsman's reverence for his work. He makes each blade by hand, using one of three processes common to the craft — stock removal, the careful grinding and polishing of a bar of high-quality steel; forging, heating a piece of steel and pounding it into shape; and the Damascus process, the complex heating, folding and pounding of several pieces of steel to create a strong, layered blade.

Each knife is different, each has a look and feel of its own. And each carries a shard of the craftsman's soul.

"There's a little bit of you in every knife," Crain said.

River cruise features 'vanishing' Texas

LAKE BUCHANAN, Texas (AP) — For a view of Texas as it was before high-tech, highways and high living took over, not much beats the Vanishing Texas River Cruise on Lake Buchanan.

The 70-foot-long, diesel-powered Eagle II takes its passengers on a 2½-hour, 24-mile round-trip glimpse of a piece of Texas unaltered by modern times, of snowy egrets and great blue herons poised for their next flight, goats playfully disdainful of the steep slopes and clifftop trees with root systems stretching thirstily toward the lake.

On a recent cruise along the lake and down the Colorado River, tour guide-narrator Charles Hughes enthusiastically pointed to a black frigate bird taking a break from his travels, but even when the ship's captain turned the Eagle toward shore, the bird stubbornly refused to take off and display his massive 8-foot wingspan for the 20th Century intruders.

A stump near the water's edge mystically seemed to split in half, but it was only a hungry loggerhead turtle diving from his lookout post.

Deer glided silently through the woods and a herd of cattle clumped down the bank for a drink of cool lake water.

Over the public address system, Hughes helped spot the wildlife for those more accustomed to watching for errant drivers or entries on a ledger sheet.

"This is the whole purpose of the trip," he said, "to show you the natural part of Texas that is vanishing as things get developed."

Those who take the cruise during the summer months might promise themselves a repeat trip between November and mid-March for a highly prized look at the bald-headed eagles who use the area as their nesting ground.

In any season, passengers should carry along a camera, and also may want a pair of binoculars.

The cruises are the brainchild of Ed Low, who came to Lake Buchanan seven years ago to recuperate from hip-replacement surgery.

"I camped out on the river and fell in love with it. I was looking for a way to get off disability — that was my goal — so we bought a small boat, and started these cruises.

"The first year we carried 1,400 passengers. Last year, we carried 62,000. It's been a lot of hard work. Now, we're just pouring the money back in to make it work better," he said.

He now has two boats, the 60-foot Eagle I, with a capacity of 80 passengers; and the Eagle II, which holds 180 people.

On the Eagle II, passengers may choose the windowed, air-conditioned main deck; the partially roofed upper deck; or, for the hardy hatwearer, the unshaded top deck. The smaller boat has an air-conditioned cabin and an upper deck.

Lunch ranges from $3 to $5.98 at the galley, with a choice of salad bar, sandwiches, quiche, soft drinks and iced tea.

The cruise holds little interest for children, who won't find much joy in sitting still for a couple of hours trying to spot a bird on a limb, a vitex plant in bloom or a turtle on a rock.

One 10-year-old, sprawled unhappily on the carpeted prow, smiled politely when asked if he was having a good time: "No, ma'am," he replied candidly, "not very much."

To reach the cruise area, the driver turns north off U.S. Highway 29 at an intersection 3 miles west of Burnet, and follows Ranch Road 2341 for 13.2 miles.

The cruise is $12 for adults, $10 for students and senior citizens and $8 for children under 12.

In addition to the regular cruise leaving daily at 11 a.m., the May-October schedule offers sunset dinner cruises starting at 6 p.m. — fajitas on Thursdays and Fridays for an additional $7.95; steak on Saturdays for an added $9.95; and a Sunday afternoon watermelon and picnic cruise.

Low has two, spick-and-span cabins across from his lakeside home-office, available — for adults only.

A $39.50 package — $37.50 for seniors — includes a night at the cabin and an outstanding breakfast of fresh fruit, ham and eggs and fresh hot biscuits. After breakfst, it's time to take the steep walk down to the dock for a peaceful cruise to yesterday.

Reservations for the Vanishing Texas River Cruise are made by telephoning 512-756-6986.

Midlanders hope to add ideas to economic base

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

A trio of enterprising Midlanders are working to turn their expertise with one natural resource — oil — into fertile ground for another abundant resource — ideas.

The three — Mike Moore, Bill Gay and Kevin Runkel — have formed MGR Enterprises to design and produce various products.

Currently concentrating on children's toys, they have developed mostly water-activated summer toys, which they are preparing to market in October and November, when the major retailers are looking for next summer's merchandise.

"From looking at the economics of making our products and the acceptance they've had, I think we'll be successful," observes Runkel.

Among the toys the trio has developed are the Wat/r/wienie® and the Bike Blaster, a squirt gun that fastens to bicycle handlebars. Also in the works is a water-powered merry-go-round.

They have an agreement with the manufacturer who makes and distributes the Wat/r/wienie, but retain the trademark and get a percentage of sales.

How did an insurance salesman and two contract draftsmen get involved in the highly competitive toy industry?

"Looking for ways to make money," says Runkel, 33. "With toys, you don't have to create a market. There will always be kids, and they'll always want to play with toys. It's highly competitive and constantly changing, which is where the fun is. It's a challenge to come up with something new or a new twist on an old product."

Runkel, a draftsman who graduated from Lee High School, studied at Midland College and American Commercial College. With his associate's degree in drafting, he became a designer for Sivalls Inc. and Perry Gas Cos.

Since losing his job in the oil bust of 1986, he has been doing contract drafting and design work. He is primarily responsible for designing the company's products.

Gay, a 58-year-old Permian Basin native, returned to the area six years ago after more than 20 years in the employment agency business in California. Since his return, he has been an independent agent selling insurance and annuities. He handles the marketing and advertising for MGR.

Oil workers' jobless benefits expanded

Program funds retraining, relocation

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

One small provision in the trade bill signed by President Reagan last month could have a giant impact on Texas' economy.

The provision — a change in Trade Adjustment Assistance for workers thrown out of work as a result of imports — extends that eligibility to oil and gas production companies and many of their suppliers.

The amendment provides benefits for a wide range of oil and natural gas workers, including those who were employed in exploration, production or drilling. Independent drillers, pumpers, seismic and geophysical crews, geological crews and mud company workers also are covered, according to the Texas Employment Commission.

Workers laid off since Sept. 30, 1985, may qualify for training assistance, job search allowances or relocation allowances when they find work, said Harry Crawford, the Texas Employment Commission's trade adjustment assistance coordinator in Austin.

In order to qualify, workers who have been unable to find "suitable" permanent work, must be certified as covered by an approved petition by the former employer. A petition for group eligibility may be filed by the company itself or its representative, by a union official, or by a group of three former employees. Applications must be filed before Nov. 18.

Roughly 600 companies whose petitions were filed under the trade act since 1985 have been denied by the Department of Labor will be eligible to refile their applications for reconsideration under the newly amended law.

Within 60 days the Department of Labor must complete an investigation to confirm or disprove that layoffs were caused by imports and notify the state employment office.

The Austin TEC office will trace the names of individuals laid off from the certified companies, and notify eligible employees within 30 days of certification approval.

"At this point, the only employees who need to contact the TEC are those who don't know if their former company has applied for certification," said Gay Honneywell, an employment interviewer in the TEC's Midland office.

"Otherwise, when the companies are certified, the employees will be contacted," she said.

Once workers are certified as a member of an eligible work force, each of the three major benefits of the new program must be applied for separately.

The benefits available are:

■ Tuition, books (or tools for vocational programs) and fees for career retraining programs for up to two years;

■ Extension of unemployment benefits for up to a total of 78 weeks for those enrolled in qualified retraining programs;

■ 90 percent reimbursement of job search expenses outside the local job market, up to $800;

■ 90 percent reimbursement of the moving, lodging and transportation expenses incurred in a non-paid move to relocate for a new job; or 3 times the new weekly wage or $800 — whichever is less.

Challenges fill decade of airline deregulation

By MIREYA NAVARRO
Hearst News Service

When President Jimmy Carter signed the Airline Deregulation Act of 1978 he removed the government's power to set fares, assign routes and judge whether an airline was financially fit to fly. It was a dizzying moment for advocates of unfettered free enterprise.

Yet now, a decade later, the top eight air carriers control more than 93 percent of the market, up from 80 percent in 1978. After a decade of market freedom marked by fierce competition, record losses and profits, and the ascent and crash of 153 startups, the airline industry has emerged more consolidated than ever.

Have we come full circle?

Deregulation did shake a complacent industry into real competition. It altered the way carriers do business and put at last 43 percent more passengers on airplanes. It spawned People Express and other price-cutting carriers, fare wars and triple mileage awards.

The likes of People Express, however, have either shut down or been taken over by bigger carriers. The number of large and mid-sized airlines went from 36 in 1978 to a peak of 123 in 1984, then dropped to 78.

The turnabout of recent years has considerably lessened competition and caused alarm both in and outside the industry. Survival of the fittest, critics say, has left us an oligopoly. Among the concerns:

■ Dwindling competition: Most of the nation's 50 largest airports are dominated by one or two carriers. At eight airports a single carrier boards more than 75 percent of all passengers. At 12 others, one carrier boards more than 50 percent.

■ Some carriers are prevented from starting or expanding service at some airports for lack of takeoff and landing slots.

■ Gates are also a problem. Some airports, such as San Francisco International, cannot accommodate more gates. The situation is worse at airports where one carrier dominates and there's no room for viable competitors. At Lambert-St. Louis International Airport, for example, TWA holds exclusive long-term leases on 60 of 78 gates.

■ It is virtually impossible for an airline to successfully take on a dominant carrier on its turf, even if it offers lower fares.

The volatile industry is doing well for the time being, after a dismal profit record throughout the early post-deregulation years. Carriers recovered from a net loss of $235 million in 1986 to make last year the most profitable ever — earning $601 million on revenue of $57 billion. Traffic was up 7 percent, from 419 million boardings in 1986 to 447 million last year. Revenue per passenger-mile also rose, from 10.9 cents to 11.1.

The ink was barely dry on President Carter's signature before competitive turbulence socked the industry. What came next was fierce turf and price wars among established airlines and their new challengers.

"They lost an awful lot" on fares, said John Pincavage, an airline industry analyst with Paine Webber Inc. "One quarter, they lost over $600 million, which is the biggest operating loss I can remember."

In many cases, established airlines selectively matched the prices of new competitors to force them out. In others, new carriers couldn't even approach the capabilities of the big guys.

Texas Commerce hopes 'relationships' meaningful

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

Relationship accounts — bank accounts that bundle a number of banking services into a single product — are catching on, and the growth shows no signs of abating.

Texas Commerce Bancshares says its "One Plus" account has attracted $900 million in deposits from 25,000 households since its May debut in six major Texas markets.

Beginning Monday, the company's "second sphere" of banks in smaller metropolitan markets, including Midland and Odessa, will offer the program.

TCB-Midland president Ed Jones said the new relationship account program is a response to extensive marketing research which showed that customers most wanted three things from their checking accounts: an interest-bearing balance; no service charge; and other needed financial services available in the same place.

Relationship accounts combine savings, checking, credit cards, lending and other banking services into a single account, often with a single consolidated monthly statement.

A customer gets reduced fees if his combined deposits exceed a set level.

TCB claims its new account is the "broadest-based relationship account available in the

Boesky as Drexel agent doesn't play well

By RICK GLADSTONE
AP Business Writer

ANALYSIS

NEW YORK (AP) — A theme underlying the government's unprecedented civil lawsuit against Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. is that the junk bond pioneer used convicted insider trader Ivan F. Boesky as a stooge for cheating and illegal profiteering.

But some securities lawyers find that idea difficult to accept, since it contrasts sharply with the now imprisoned speculator's earlier image as a shrewd, ruthless speculator.

More likely, they say, is that Boesky and Drexel had a mutually beneficial relationship, assuming the accusations leveled by the Securities and Exchange Commission are accurate.

"Frankly, I'm very skeptical that Drexel was the manipulator behind the scenes of Ivan Boesky," said Sam Scott Miller, a partner in the New York law firm of Orrick, Herrington & Sutcliffe and a member of the Securities Industry Association's trading practices committee.

"It's true in the securities market generally that people work together in all kinds of ways. Transactions are seldom isolated to one participant," he said. "So it's possible that Boesky could be an agent technically for some purpose in dealing with Drexel, but I'd say the converse is equally likely. That fact doesn't lead me to conclude Drexel was a puppeteer in this role."

The mammoth lawsuit, filed in federal court here Wednesday after an investigation lasting nearly two years, in effect asserts that Drexel had a secret pact with Boesky to cheat the firm's clients, profitably trade on inside information, manipulate stock, lie to the government and falsify records.

But as outlined in the SEC complaint filed in federal court, Boesky appeared to be acting in a subservient role during many of the allegedly illegal transactions.

For example, the complaint asserts, Drexel and its star junk-bond chief, Michael Milken, used Boesky's organization to improperly acquire or manipulate the common stock in Harris Graphics, Occidental Petroleum, Storer Communications, Wickes Cos., Pacific Lumber, National Gypsum, Stone Container, Diamond Shamrock, Fischbach, MGM-UA Entertainment and MCA.

The SEC asserted that Boesky served as a front for Drexel in 16 of the 18 instances in which Drexel and four of its employees are said to have violated securities laws.

If the portrayal of Boesky as little more than a corrupt Drexel agent is true, it would suggest the government's crusade against Wall Street corruption is shifting more toward outwardly legitimate activities of big investment banking firms and less on errant individuals.

"This is the final phase of what many people have been talking about for the last couple of years," Rep. Edward Markey, D-Mass., author of a proposed law to tighten penalties for insider trading and other securities fraud, said after the SEC action was announced. "Boesky looked like the middleman."

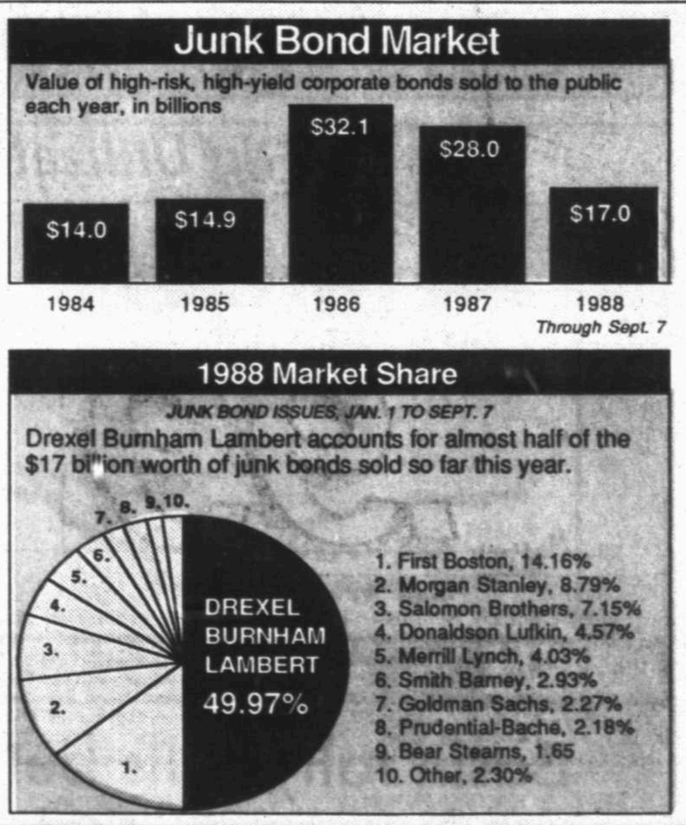

Nevertheless, other legal experts dispute that portrayal, partly because it is so inconsistent with Boesky's historical prowess at stock speculating, which began before his alleged relationship with Drexel took shape.

"It looked to me from the allegations that there were benefits to both sides. You do certain things for me, I'll do certain things for you," said Paul Fischer, a former assistant enforcement director at the SEC, now at the Washington law firm of Rosen & DeMartino. "I saw it as a two-way street."

Another securities attorney with SEC background, who asked not to be identified, said the Boesky-Drexel relationship appeared to be "more like a game of pingpong rather than one person calling the shots."

The long-awaited lawsuit has had little effect on the market for junk bonds, high-yield, high-risk securities. Junk bond prices late Thursday were little changed from Wednesday.

One of the companies named in the complaint, Wickes, expressed support for Drexel Thursday, saying it did not expect the government's action to affect a proposed leveraged buyout depending on $423 million in financing through an issuing of junk bonds by Drexel.

Pipe company pleads guilty to tax fraud

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal judge fined a Houston pipe company $500,000 after it pleaded guilty to charges of conspiring to fix prices and violating federal tax laws, authorities said.

The charges against TAD U.S.A. Steel Pipe & Fittings, Inc. stem from a nationwide investigation into suppliers and fabricators who have fraudulantly inflated prices on pipe and other materials.

TAD U.S.A. was accused of making $44,622.39 in kickbacks to Western Steel Specialty Co. of Tulsa, Okla., as part of a conspiracy in the pipe industry from 1981 to 1986.

The company, owned by the Italian firm Tubi Accicio E. Devivati, was charged Aug. 3 by federal prosecutors as part of the nationwide investigation. Federal Judge David Hittner fined the company $250,000 for attempting to obstruct the Internal Revenue Service and an additional $250,000 for the conspiracy charge.

Prosecutors alleged that TAD U.S.A.'s payments to the Tulsa company were the proceeds of an illegal scheme to fix prices on pipe supplied to power plants, paper mills and petrochemical facilities throughout the country.

The scheme involved cost-plus arrangements, which require buyers to pay a certain percentage above prices paid by suppliers of the material.

TAD U.S.A., which could have faced fines of more than $1 million, was given 90 days to pay the fines.

Hunt brothers, creditors sign agreement

DALLAS (AP) — An agreement worth nearly $780 million in the two-year legal battle over Penrod Drilling Co. between the Hunt brothers The Hunt brothers and creditor banks has moved the wealthy Dallas brothers a step closer to emerging from bankruptcy, a company spokesman says.

The agreement, signed Wednesday, calls for the Hunts, Nelson Bunker, William Herbert and Lamar to convey numerous tracts of real estate to the banks in consideration for forgiveness of $200 million in existing debt.

In addition, a newly restructured loan to Penrod in the amount of $525 million will be secured by notes and Penrod assets, and the restructured company will make a cash payment of $53.8 million.

"The agreement ends months of sometimes heated negotiations over the future of Penrod," according to a statement by Hunt Energy.

The trust estates of the Hunt brothers filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection in August, 1986, for the trust partnership that owns Penrod Drilling. Penrod, one of the world's largest offshore drilling companies, was not under bankruptcy court protection.

Penrod and the Hunts' Placid Oil Co., a sister company to Penrod, sued 23 of their lenders for fraud and misrepresenatation in 1986 after defaulting on about $1.5 billion in bank loans.

All parties to the Penrod agreement, Penrod officers, bank representatives and Hunt estate trustees were on hand Wednesday in New York to sign documents executing the plan. The documents will be held in escrow pending approval of the plan to reorganize the three trust estates that own Penrod.

National Pipe emerges from bankruptcy

By Greg Steinmetz
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — National Pipe & Tube Co., which grabbed national headlines when employees launched a letter-writing campaign to save the company from liquidation, has emerged from bankruptcy court.

Judge Manuel Leal of the U.S. Bankruptcy Court in Houston confirmed the company's reorganization plan, allowing the company to begin anew.

"This is the beginning of a new and exciting period for NPT," said John Castellvi, head of an investor group that bought the company last year. He said 96 percent of the firm's vendors and creditors accepted the plan.

The plan generally calls for secured creditors to be paid in full. Unsecured creditors, with claims to about $800,000, will receive 50 cents on the dollar, Castellvi said.

National Pipe, a maker of pipe and tubing for the energy industry, sought protection under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code in April 1986 following the downturn in oil prices.

Commission levies $10,000 in penalties

AUSTIN — The Railroad Commission has assessed a total of $10,000 in administrative penalties this week to seven oil and gas operators.

The penalties include $3,000 to Panhandle Drilling for an inactive and unplugged well in Collingsworth County; $500 to the W.L. Howe Co., Inc. for a well in Runnels County; and $500 to Clifford Atkinson III for a well in Matagorda County.

Several companies agreed to penalties without admitting any violation of Commission rules. The agreed penalties include $500 to Weldon George for an inactive well in Ellis County; $500 to Winchester Energy Co. for a well in Irion County; and $1,000 to Canyon Operating Co. for a well in Marion County.

Intercity Management Corp. of Corpus Christi agreed to a $4,000 penalty after Commission inspectors documented use of an unpermitted well for saltwater disposal and an unpermitted pit containing saltwater and oil in Goliad County.

Kitchen gadget retailers find competition heating up

Kitchenware now big business

By SHARON BENOIT
Copley News Service

To survive in a retail business, people must learn to cast away ego and be ready to wash down sidewalks and clean windows by themselves. This observation comes from Charles Williams, founder of one of this country's largest, most successful chains of gourmet kitchenware shops.

"The kitchen gadget business is no different than any other retail business. There are ups and downs. One of the downside effects, however,is having to do menial chores no one else would want to do," he says.

Williams founded San Francisco-based Williams Sonoma in 1955 in the Sonoma Valley of Northern California. Until 1972, he was dedicated to being a one-store operator. Today, Williams owns and operates 60 stores, primarily located throughout the western and eastern portions of the United States in malls and/or as free-standing stores.

In the beginning, Williams had only $1,000 and very little business experience to invest in his shop, which specializes in professional quality European cookware for home cooks. If he were to try his hand at opening a similar free-standing store these days, the investment would be considerable and the competition fierce.

"It would probably cost anywhere from $150,000 to $350,000, depending upon the location, inventory, fixturing and reconstruction of space necessities," he explains. "Location is of utmost importance in the success of this type of business. Find the best location and gain the most knowledge about this business before you invest any money in it. Make sure you are interested in cooking, be prepared to work long hours and harder than you possibly think, too."

GORDON SEGAL, co-founder of Crates & Barrels, a Chicago-based chain of 26 home furnishings and accessories stores, started his company in 1962 with a mere $2,000. He and his wife, Carole, traveled extensively to Europe and had seen several elaborate items used for dining that they later learned were quite inexpensive.

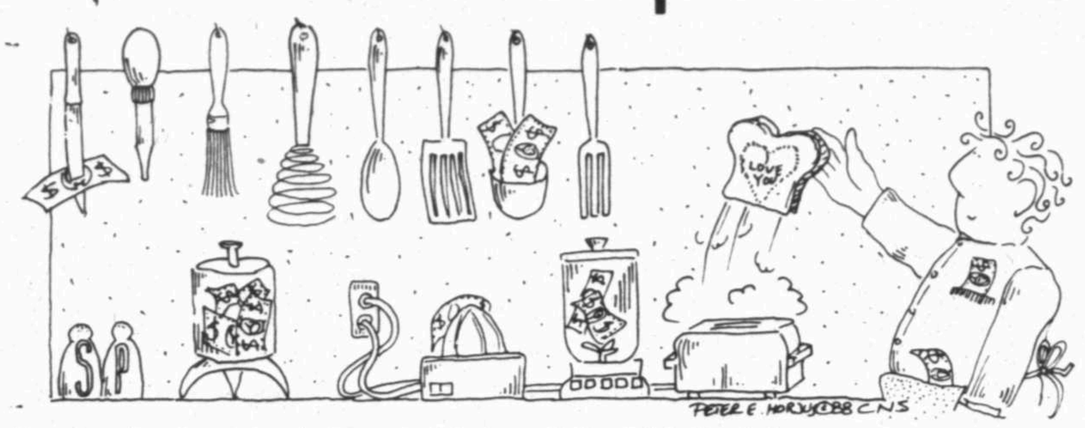

The Segals returned home and decided to begin offering American homemakers these same items in an informal and decorative fashion. Their store inventory has been displayed in crates and barrels since their first store's opening in Old Town Chicago simply because it was cost-efficient, he reports.

Segal says one of the most challenging parts of this business is finding hard-working, dedicated and energetic employees who are willing to go the extra mile for very little compensation.

"This is a seasonal business — most of our business comes during the last four months of the year, so it's difficult to keep good people interested. We've been successful because we are buying agents for our customers and they are repeaters. We also promote from within our company."

Williams and Segal are two of the most successful entrepreneurs in this category. There are other chains catering to kitchenware, in particular the Pottery Barn, but most of their most ferocious competition these days is coming from the major department store chains, such as Macy's, Bullock's, May Company and The Broadway.

"ONE OF THE biggest pitfalls of this business is its competitiveness," states Charles Williams. "The first 15 years I was in business, no one cared that I had a unique specialty store.

Now every department store in the country has remodeled its housewares section, and, in some cases, they've expanded the section to include furniture. In other words, the gourmet kitchenware business has become a big business."

Williams says small one-man shops usually lack the business savvy to compete against the big guys, his company included.

"There's an advantage to being able to buy in quantity, not to mention the advertising budgetary resources a larger, more powerful chain has to offer. Small, one-man shops just can't afford to advertise all of the time. The department stores can also attract book authors and chefs from around the world to stage demonstrations as promotional gimmicks and they can offer sales every other day."

While the larger chains battle with department stores, there are smaller, one-man kitchenware operations popping up all over the country. There are numerous other pitfalls and advantages to owning a shop such as this, according to two small-town operators.

Cindy Preciado bought her kitchenware business, The Cook's Corner, about three years ago, from a franchise operator, who has since gone out of business. It's located inside The Galleria at Glendale, one of the largest self-contained malls in Southern California.

"I PAID A $25,000 franchise fee to start up, but when the franchise died, I didn't get my money back," explains Preciado. "If I were to start this store from scratch, I would need between $200,000-$250,000, which would include the cost of inventory, mall lease and signage."

She confided that malls are pretty strict.

"The mall's management group usually dictates how they want your store to look, what your signage must be like, and they have final approval on it ... sometimes it takes weeks to get approvals. So there's no chance for a quick decision on anything. Still, I prefer being in a mall. The traffic flow is constant here, but that really depends on the mall, not what you have in your store."

While Preciado had never owned a kitchenware shop, she had previous pharmaceutical sales experience.

"I took an entrepreneurial class at the University of Southern California and started thinking seriously about the type of business I wanted to own. I knew a lot about cooking and decided that's what I wanted to do."

Preciado says the greatest problem about this business is that summer is not a high period ... there's no money to be made during spring or summer. Money, labor and seasonality are three negatives associated with this category.

MOST OF THESE retail stores mark up their inventory by 50 percent. Sometimes, they'll even mark up an item two and a half times what they paid for it at wholesale to include freight and partial gift-wrapping costs.

Lynn Carl, owner of Espirt de Cuisine, a free-standing gourmet housewares shop in Pasadena, Calif., inherited her business in September 1985. She strongly believes having a business background is essential to run one of these stores.

"You also need to be familiar with the types of items you will be selling. You should know food and basic kitchen techniques. Challenges change each day. They run the gamut from customers wanting to return defective products to broken items in the store."

Carl has been toying with the idea of expanding.

"I'd love to add another shop, but I wouldn't dare do it until this one gets going the way I want it to. You'll lose money for nine months and make it all up in three. Also, we don't get a constant flow of traffic here. So, we have to depend on quality service and personalization. We know all of our customers by name, we know their children. We give them special gift wrappings and go out of our way to please them. For this, they have to pay more than they would if they had gone to a department store housewares section."

Carl pointed out that it would have cost her $80,000 to purchase her existing business.

"I WOULD HAVE needed between $10-20,000 for additional inventory stock, totaling 2,000 items in a 1,382-square-foot store. This doesn't include operating costs of rent, salaries, office supplies, gift-wrapping supplies, telephone, taxes, permits and worker's comp. insurance. Overall, it normally costs an additional $110,000 for these items per year."

On the othe side of the coin, there are benefits to this kitchenware business, almost everyone concurs.

"It's controllable, challenging, you can match your wits against your customers trying to figure out what the next best hot sellers will be, you're working for yourself and have the freedom to work when you want. Best of all, the profits go right into your pockets," reports Carl.

As for the hottest sellers these days? Well, it depends on where you go. Here's a partial list of the most appealing: Wine Recorkers, Zyliss Garlic Presses, Cushaire Cookie Sheets, Salad Spinners, Micromeal Egg Cookers, anything acrylic (salt and pepper shakers, pepper grinders, etc.), ladles, wisks, cheese spreaders, garnish items, apple peelers/slicers, shrimp deveiners, flavor injectors, lemon reamers, fondue sets (they're back in vogue) and Mandolin, a gadget that helps cut vegetables in various thicknesses.

ASK BOB BULLOCK

Amusement services taxable, transportation exempt

By BOB BULLOCK

I am the owner of a sightseeing and charter bus company. The rates I charge depend on the type and length of each tour. I also provide transportation to and from different attractions, such as Six Flags and Texas Stadium. Should I collect tax on all of these fees?

Bullock

Whether you collect tax on these kinds of charges depends on the type of service you're providing. For example, sightseeing tours are considered an amusement service, which is taxable. So sales tax is due on the total charge for the tour, including box lunches, tickets and other extras.

If you're providing transportation only, then you don't need to collect sales tax, since this isn't an amusement service. An example would be transportation directly to and from Six Flags. Keep in mind that if you also collect the admission fee to the amusement park, you should collect sales tax just on that fee.

I belong to a private country club, and when I received my last bill I noticed I'm being charged sales tax on all of the fees, including my membership, golf cart rental and minimum food assessment fees. Are these items taxable?

If your country club is a for-profit club, then all of these fees are taxable. It sounds as though your club is for-profit and should be collecting the taxes.

However, if your country club is considered by the state to be a non-profit organization, then the fees you mentioned would not be taxable.

We are a property management company, managing several apartment complexes for different owners. Is sales tax due on the salaries we pay to maids and porters?

The State of Texas doesn't have an income tax, so you don't need to collect tax on the actual salaries you pay to your employees.

But some of the services provided to your clients could be taxable. For example, sales tax is due on your total bill to your client for lawn maintenance, landscaping and custodial and janitorial services such as building and grounds cleaning.

If you are the owner of the property, then the services your own employees provide would not be taxable.

A reminder: If you sell a taxable item that has been repossessed, such as a television set or a washing machine, then you should collect state and local sales taxes on that item. State law doesn't allow banks and other lending firms an occassional tax-free sale of repossessed property.

State and local taxes aren't due if you sell repossessed real property or motor vehicles, since sales tax on motor vehicles is paid during registration and sales tax isn't due on real property sales.

Merger will create fourth largest truck rental firm

By NELSON ANTOSH

HOUSTON — A private Houston investment group is making an acquisition that will create the nation's fourth-largest truck leasing firm, with more than 8,500 vehicles and annual revenues exceeding $225 million.

Officials of Contex Capital Partners said that a merger agreement had been reached between their wholly owned subsidiary, Lend Lease Trucks Inc. of Minneapolis, and the Whiteford National Lease division of Whiteford Transport Systems in South Bend, Ind.

Contex acquired Lend Lease Trucks from National Car Rental in October 1987. The business is operated through a Contex subsidiary, LLT Acquisition Inc.

Upon completion of the latest merger, expected within 60 days, the combined company will have 124 locations nationwide.

The agreement was announced jointly by John Lamar, chairman of Contex Capital Partners, and Ronald Whiteford, chairman of Whiteford Transport Systems.

Lend Lease is currently the fifth-largest truck leasing firm by revenues, and Whiteford is the seventh-largest. The three leaders are Ryder, Hertz and Rollins.

Computer technology dismantles language barrier

Breakthroughs mark threshold to new wonders

By MARCIA DUNN
Associated Press Writer

PITTSBURGH — Don't expect the Tower of Babel to tumble, but computer scientists are breaking down language barriers with machines that can translate languages in seconds and recognize speech regardless of accent.

"Where can it lead to?" said National Science Foundation Assistant Director Bill Wulf. "How big is your imagination?"

Need to call Tokyo? Hotel switchboards, within a few years, will be able to connect English-speaking callers to a special computer that translates their words into Japanese, then responds by machine in English.

Stuck in a foreign hospital? Patients and doctors who speak different languages will be able to communicate via computer in about a decade.

Traveling abroad and can't speak the language? Forget a dictionary. Plan on packing a pocket translator.

Too busy to type information into the computer? Just dictate.

The list goes on and on, including eyeglasses for the deaf with screens that provide transcripts of conversation, and the ability to order merchandise like plane tickets by talking on the phone to computers.

"One of the most distinguishing characteristics of human beings is our ability to communicate," Wulf said. "What you're seeing here are techniques that improve that ability."

Companies are beginning to cash in on voice recognition programs even while experts are trying to make the computers capable of dealing with the ambiguity of human language, bad grammar and different accents, among other things.

"We need to reduce the costs and increase the size of the vocabulary and increase the capabilities," said Raj Reddy, director of Carnegie Mellon's Robotics Institute. "All of those are yet to be solved."

"What is there is obviously a very significant improvement over what we used to know how to do even six months ago."

Dragon Systems Inc. of Newton, Mass., developed a program Xerox Corp. used in 1986 to save nearly $10 million by inventorying all 2.2 million of its parts for the first time, said Dragon assistant marketing manager Jonathan Robbins.

The $100,000 system recognized 1,000 words. A 5,000-word program is out, and a 20,000-word version is expected by early 1989, said Robbins. Dragon also is working with the federal Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency to develop a voice-controlled jet fighter cockpit.

Kurzweil Applied Intelligence Inc. of Waltham, Mass., has developed voice recognition systems for radiologists and emergency rooms. Doctors dictate their reports to a computer, and the reports are printed. The programs originally recognized 1,000 words, but the vocabulary has been expanded to 5,000.

More than 100 U.S. hospitals use the radiology system, VoiceRAD, and about a dozen have VoiceEM for emergency rooms, said spokesman Martin Schneider.

Both Dragon and Kurzweil's systems require brief pauses between words and must be trained to recognize each speaker.

"Most of us don't speak properly most of the time," said Reddy, president of the American Association for Artificial Intelligence. "If you transcribe anybody's voice ... there are all types of pauses and repetition, hums and haws, which we know how to ignore. Computers don't know that yet."

"Either we have to come up with ways to deal with (this) or we have to teach people to speak right," said Kai-Fu Lee, a Carnegie Mellon researcher who has developed a speech recognition system known as Sphinx.

It's a slow, complex task because human language is rife with ambiguity, unlike mathematical, scientific or computer language.

Take, for example, this sentence: "The box is in the pen."

"For humans, it's obvious because we all know that the box cannot be in the writing pen (through) our unconscious kind of common sense," said Masaru Tomita, associate director of the Carnegie Mellon University Center for Machine Translation.

"If you want computers to do this, it's going to be very difficult," Tomita said. "The computers have to know the typical size of a box and the typical size of a pen. One thing we can do very quickly is that whenever the word 'pen' appears, we can assume it's a writing pen. But on the other hand, then the system will make mistakes."

A classic example of machine misinterpretation involves the epigram, "The spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak." Early translating systems turned that into, "The vodka is good, but the meat is rotten."

Lee's Sphinx, unlike earlier systems, can identify English words spoken continuously. It boasts up to 96 percent accuracy identifying 997 words, people don't have to spend hours training it to recognize their speech patterns, and minor variations in accent pose little problem.

"It's the first system that has all these capabilities," said Lee, 26, who has been working on Sphinx for 1½ years, funded by the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency.

Sphinx transforms spoken words from changes in air pressure into changes in voltage. Each 10-millisecond slice of sound is assigned a string of digits and, through a mathematical process, matched with other sequences to yield the word with the best possible meaning. So time isn't wasted searching the entire vocabulary, Sphinx takes syntax into account.

Tomita, 30, who plans to work this fall with Lee, has developed a system capable of recognizing 100 words of doctor-patient dialogue in Japanese, then translating the Japanese into English uttered by a computer's speaker.

The computer transforms the spoken Japanese into its written equivalent, which is translated into written English and sent to another part of the computer that generates English speech.

Tomita also has devised a program that translates written English or Japanese into written English, Japanese or German. A hypothetical exchange between a doctor and patient — "I have a headache" or "Take two aspirin" — is typed into the computer and the translation appears within seconds.

Like Sphinx, Tomita's 1,000-word systems consider context.

He hopes to increase the programs' vocabularies and eventually expand them to conversation used in making hotel reservations and registering for conferences. His work is funded, in part, by IBM Corp. of Tokyo.

"We need to pick some domain where it's very, very defined, always clear what you're talking about," he said.

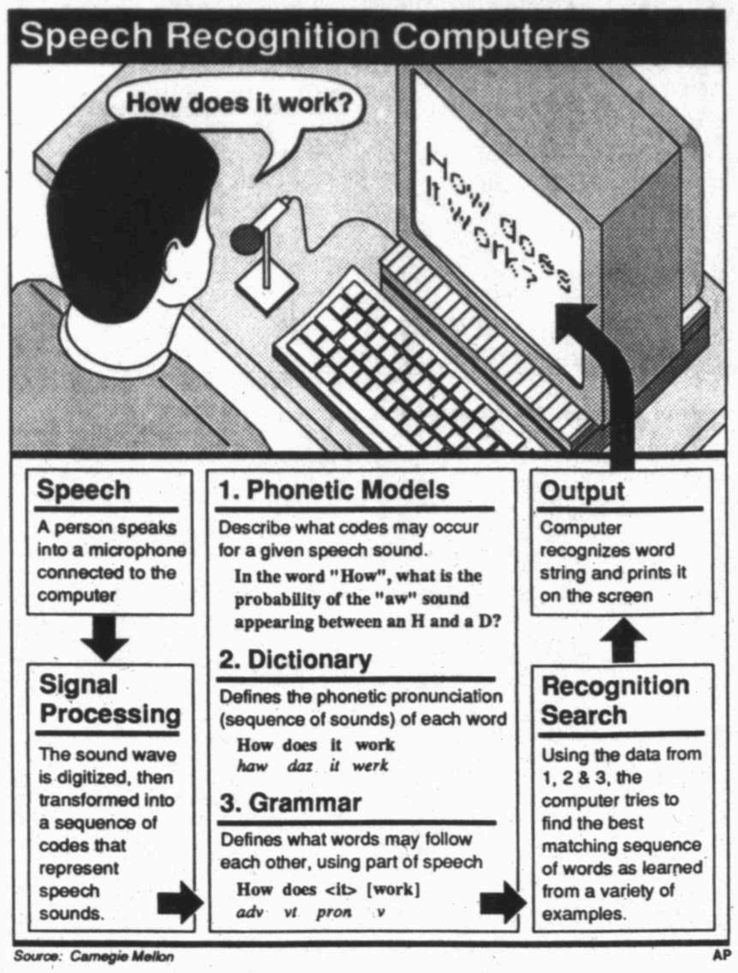

The need for translating systems is considerable, especially for those not fluent in English, according to Tomita, who counts himself in that category.

There are more than 3,000 world languages and dialects, said Jaime Carbonell, director of the Center for Machine Translation.

"Americans don't seem to be aware of the fact that maybe 90 percent of the world population doesn't speak English at all," said Tomita. "But everywhere you go, there is somebody who can speak English."

Because of that smugness and sense of superiority as well as insufficient funding, machine translation has received scant attention in the United States since the 1960s, experts say. Most work has been in Europe and Japan.

"The man on the street may or may not directly benefit from a machine translation system," Wulf said. "On the other hand, he may benefit indirectly from American scientists being able to interact better with the Russian or the Japanese or the French scientists."

Linguists, philosophers needed to compu-speak

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Computer scientists have machines talking, but linguists and philosophers are in demand to help put the words in their mouths.

"The last few decades have really seen a kind of merger of a technical tradition in the humanities. That merger has created a lot of opportunities," said Clark Glymour, head of Carnegie Mellon University's philosophy department. "More people are being drawn into it, and not for the traditional reasons."

In general, "programmers are a dime a dozen," Glymour said. "What is needed are people who can take vaguely formed problems and find ways to make them precise enough to be programmed."

American colleges and universities conferred 41,889 bachelor's degrees in computer science and 40,521 in psychology during the 1985-86 academic year, the latest figures available from the National Center for Education Statistics. That compares to 3,265 in philosophy and 470 in linguistics.

To help meet the demand for computer-conscious philosophers and linguists, Carnegie Mellon and the University of Pittsburgh's linguistics department have developed a doctorate program in computational linguistics.

The goal is to produce people who can do more than merely write computer programs based on others' ideas, who can, in fact, develop programs that better understand and emulate how humans talk and think.

"You can't have really robust, healthy technology without a science behind it, and we don't yet have the science," said Richmond Thomason, professor of linguistics and philosophy at the University of Pittsburgh. "So what we have to do is learn enough about human language and reasoning to understand what it is we're trying to do once we get these machines to do something."

Sixteen students have been accepted into the program, one of only a few in the world, in its two years of existence. Those skilled in the area have landed high-paying, high-powered jobs, unlike many of their more traditional brethren.

"There is a certain kind of stereotype about philosophy that's quite popular," Glymour said. "Think about what would distress a parent more than to pay a hefty tuition and discover Sammy or Samantha is going to study philosophy. The stereotype is a completely impractical and perhaps an even self-indulgent endeavor.

"The fact of the matter is ... 20th century philosophy has created through various pieces of work all kinds of technical traditions."

U.S. chip makers exert leverage over Asian products distributors

By ANDREW POLLACK
New York Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Samsung Semiconductor, a South Korean company trying to increase sales of its computer chips in the United States, achieved a major breakthrough in July.

Arrow Electronics Inc., the nation's second-largest distributor of semiconductors, agreed to sell its products.

But the triumph proved short-lived.

Two weeks after the deal was announced, the Intel Corp., one of Arrow's major American suppliers, cut back on the amount of business it did with Arrow.

Other American suppliers also protested Arrow's agreement with Samsung, according to industry executives.

In August, citing changing business conditions, Arrow terminated the agreement.

At a time when American chip manufacturers complain bitterly about being locked out of the Japanese market, the Arrow-Samsung incident indicates that the American market itself has not been completely open.

Indeed, for many years a key part of the American market for chips has been virtually closed to companies from Japan and Korea.

According to interviews with numerous distributors, the major American semiconductor companies have long had a tacit policy of preventing their distributors from selling products made by Japanese competitors.

The implied threat is that a distributor could lose its American product lines, which are more valuable than the Asian lines, if it takes on an Asian supplier.

Some say that the existence of such a pattern of resistance to entry into the U.S. market could undermine American complaints about lack of access to Japan's market.

"I don't want to accuse anyone of being a hypocrite, but the facts and circumstances suggest they are using the political leverage that they have just as the Japanese are using the political leverage they have," said Clarke Walser, an analyst who follows the semiconductor distribution industry for the Chicago Corp.

A policy of cutting off American distributors if they stock Asian chips is seldom if ever explicitly stated and is difficult to prove.

American companies that would comment denied having such a policy.

But distributors, although reluctant to comment on the record, often acknowledged it privately.

"There's nobody in this business of distribution who doesn't know that's the deal," said the head of one distribution company.

"This isn't a last-three-months event. It's been going on for 12 years."

Despite growing acceptance of Japanese chips in the world, only 1 of the 10 largest American distributors carries Japanese products.

The exception, Marshall Industries, carries many Japanese lines but only one major American line, that of Texas Instruments Inc.

The other distributors that carry Japanese products have no products made by the five major American producers.

Besides Texas Instruments, they are Motorola, Intel, National Semiconductor and Advanced Micro Devices.

And the distribution industry has seen incidents similar to the Arrow-Samsung one.

In April, for instance, Avnet Inc., the nation's largest distributor, terminated an agreement it had to buy chips from Japan's NEC Corp. after only three months.

"Those distributors who happen to have certain American semiconductor companies have a problem with Japanese suppliers," said Anthony Cucchi, president of the National Electronic Distributor Association, the distribution industry trade group.

Cucchi is also president of Almo Electronics, a smaller distributor that carries Japanese lines.

Asked if this was the result of some policy on the part of American manufacturers, Cucchi said: "I have no first-hand knowledge, but it would lead one to believe that it's more than just a coincidence."

Distributors are important because they reach customers that are too small to buy directly from chip manufacturers.

In the United States, between 25 percent and 30 percent of all chips sold go through distributors.

To be sure, denying access to their market, some American distributors maintain, is not as serious as denying access to the entire market, as American semiconductor officials contend is the case in Japan.

Japanese companies have not complained publicly about the situation.

Distributors and U.S.-based officials of those companies said that such public complaints are not the Japanese style and that the Japanese, who have even greater restrictions, would hesitate to call attention to this situation.

Unable to get their products carried by the biggest distributors, Japanese companies went with smaller American distributors that were anxious for their business.

They also concentrated on selling chips directly to large computer companies.

"We're happy with the distribution program we have now," said Daniel T. Buist, director of distribution sales for Fujitsu Microelectronics. "We all resolved to do the best with what we got."

Still, even if they do not say it publicly, the Asian companies have desired larger distributors.

For example, an internal memo, leaked to the trade press in connection with the NEC-Avnet agreement that fell apart earlier this year, stated that NEC was considering it a key part of its strategy this year to be picked up by a large distributor that also sold American chips.

Even without complaints, the distributor situation also serves as a case study of how difficult it can be to distinguish between decisions made on the basis of nationality and those made purely for business reasons.

Stephen P. Kaufman, president and chief executive of Arrow, said that Arrow added the Samsung line because it needed additional supplies of computer memory chips, or D-RAMs, which have been in short supply since the beginning of the year.

After Samsung was added, Arrow's American suppliers of D-RAMs, Intel and Texas Instruments, said they would be unable to meet Arrow's needs.

Similarly, Intel cited poor sales, not dissatisfaction with the Samsung move, as the reason it dropped Arrow as a distributor in nine cities.

Ben Anixter, vice president of external affairs for Advanced Micro Devices Inc., said, "It's not true that we refuse to share shelf space," with the Japanese.

Motorola, Intel and National Semiconductor did not offer comment when asked about their policy.

The issue is not nationality, Anixter said.

Rather, manufacturers never like to see their distributors take on competing products, regardless of nationality.

Asked why Japanese companies have not attracted major distributors, Anixter said, "The Japanese lines are really narrow lines and are not ones that lend themselves to distribution, and they don't bring that much to the party."

He and others noted that Japanese manufacturers themselves emphasized selling directly to big computer companies and did not understand the U.S. distribution system that well.

Distribution officials and even Japanese semiconductor companies said that those points are partially true.

But they sound very similar to the answers Japanese officials give in denying that Japan's market is closed.

Still, many officials said, mere reluctance to share a distributor with competitors cannot alone explain the segregation between American and Japanese lines.

Many distributors, for instance, carry competing American lines.

And, some note, the distribution industry has had numerous incidents that, if they happened in Japan, would be pointed to as evidence of a closed market.

These incidents include:

—An Avnet subsidiary called Time Electronics, which carried Fujitsu, Hitachi and Toshiba chips, received a franchise to carry Motorola chips late in 1986, its first major American line.

By mid-1987 its arrangements with all three Japanese companies had been terminated.

—Anthem Electronics Inc., a major distributor based in San Jose, Calif., had been carrying three major Japanese lines until 1982, when it received a franchise from the National Semiconductor Corp.

Within weeks, it dropped its Japanese suppliers.

Asked if dropping the Japanese lines was a prerequisite to getting business from National, Anthem's chairman, Robert S. Throop, replied, "I've never heard anyone tell me that."

Asked if he understood such a prerequisite to exist without being told, he said, "That's probably true."

—When Advanced Micro Devices bought Monolithic Memories last year, it had to select which distributors from the companies' combined roster would be allowed to carry the merged product line.

It eliminated the two former Monolithic distributors that carried Japanese products.

The seeming taboo on Japanese products also raises questions about whether distributors, most of which are publicly traded companies, are doing the best they can for shareholders by not carrying products that sell well elsewhere in the world.

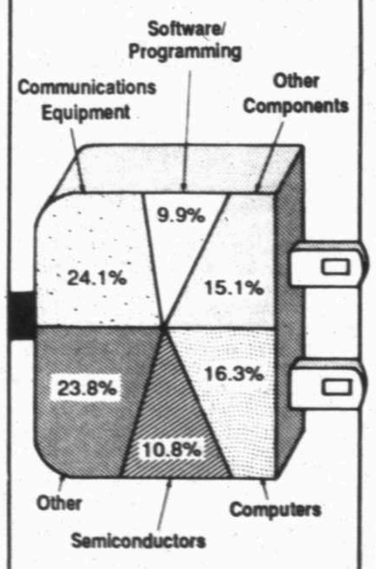

Certainly, some of the companies that have chosen to distribute Japanese products have grown faster than the ones that have not.

Marshall has risen from ninth-largest distributor in 1980 to the fifth largest in 1987.

Where are the electronics jobs?

More than 24 percent of the 2.5 million workers in the U.S. electronics industry are employed in producing communications equipment. Other strong industry categories include computers (16.3%) and semiconductors (15.1%).

Survey identifies high-tech areas in need of workers

DALLAS — A recent survey of Texas high-technology companies by the Dallas office of Richards Consultants, Ltd., an international executive search and recruiting firm, has identified near-critical shortages of qualified personnel for nine senior-level job categories.

The survey was based on interviews with 100 company presidents and human resources directors during the spring and summer. The following technical positions were identified as those for which there was the greatest demand:

- Software project and systems engineers;
- Radio (RF) design engineers advanced concepts;
- Electronic signal/image processing technologists — software, firmware and hardware systems design;
- Therman dynamicists dealing with next generation materials and fuels;
- Anti-detection materials engineers;
- Professional contract administrators;
- Professional program managers;
- Digital control systems engineers; and
- Professional quality assurance engineers.

According to Bob Petty, managing director for Richards, the survey found the Texas' high-technology companies are trying to "back-fill' positions that were either eliminated or vacated during the state's recession but which have since been re-established. In particular, retrenchment in the personal computer industry beginning about three years ago caused a "talent drain" that profoundly impacted the size and diversity of the state's high tech work force.

It's estimated that the high-tech industry in Texas lost approximately 32,000 jobs in 1985 and 1986. Experts believe that about 19,000 workers will join the Texas high-tech work force in the next two years. Overall, more than 300,000 jobs were lost during the mid-80s recession with 150,000 restored or created in the next several years.

To some degree, the expansion of Texas' high-tech industry and its continued economic recovery are dependent upon these and other critical technology jobs being filled, said Petty. However, Texas companies face a strong challenge in attracting high-tech workers to the state, particularly those who were displaced or decided to leae in the last several years and are unconvinced of the strength of the economy. In fact, some still view Texas as a "depressed" state.

Drilling lists oil industry records, trivia

By MICHAEL L. GRACZYK

HOUSTON (AP) — In an industry perceived as brash and swaggering, an oil business trade journal has assembled a book of records and trivia that chronicles many of the developments that give the "oil bidness" its unique colorful character.

"Drilling Magazine," updating a list it first ran five years ago, is giving its 20,000 readers — primarily well-site operators — some targets to shoot for and records to brag about.

"It's sort of the oil industry's Guinness Book," says Editor Mike Killalea, who put together the compilation that appears in the current issue of the bi-monthly magazine. "I'm very much interested in the curiosity and the oddball. While penetration rates and footage distances are incredible, they don't grip the imagination."

So besides records like the deepest, first and most productive well, the magazine's list includes such items as how the term "derrick" got its name, where the first dry hole was drilled and the strangest well blowout.

The U.S. oil industry is generally given a birth year of 1859 with the discovery of crude in Venango County, Pa., on land owned by the Watson & Brewer Lumber Co. The well generally is known as the Drake Discovery Well, so named for Edwin Drake, president of Seneca Oil of New Haven, Conn., the well owner.

But what's less well-known is the first dry hole, in neighboring Warren County, Pa. It also carries the distinction of the world's second oil well, started four days after the Drake Well. More dubious, however, it's the first well in which oil tools got stuck.

Magazine editors also have decided the strangest well blowout occurred in April 1, 1984, in Texas' Palo Pinto County, when the Mitchell Lease No. 1 well blew and was shut quickly as a safety precaution. The next day, however, an explosion two miles away was blamed on the shut well. Apparently pressure built up and traveled along a layer of rock and salt 250 feet underground until surfacing two miles away.

The term "derrick," by the way, is named after a famous English hangman who skillfully practiced his trade around 1600. He was so notorious that his name was applied to anything that was hoisted or lifted. And in oil, a derrick is the structure that lifts pipe in and out of the hole.

New entries to the record book include:

— The deepest water-depth oil discovery in the Gulf of Mexico: a 13,600-foot hole in 3,560 feet of water 55 miles east of the Mississippi River delta.

— Deepest water-depth drilling in the world: 7,520 feet, Gulf of Mexico, Nov. 5, 1987. The hole reached 17,430 feet before the drillship was moved Feb. 16, 1988.

— Most productive drill bit: "Big Bertha," a 17½-inch bit manufactured by Houston-based Hycalog, drilled 18,016 feet in 16 runs in five North Sea wells with no repair between wells. The bit, used in 1987 and this year, made more holes in the North Sea than any other single bit. And its mark of going through more than 30,000 cubic feet of rock could make it the most productive single drill bit of all time.

Meanwhile, U.S. state deep-drilling marks on the books include a well of 20,335 feet in Alaska, set in 1979; 22,712 in California, reached in 1987; Louisiana's 25,703 feet in 1980; 29,670 feet in Texas in 1982; and 31,441 feet in 1974 in Oklahoma, which used to be the world's deepest and may be again.

AP LaserPhoto

Editor Mike Killalea shows off the first edition of Drilling magazine's "Guiness book" of oil industry feats.

A 40,000-foot well being drilled in the Soviet Union, cited five years ago as the world's deepest, since then has caved in, according to unidentified sources quoted by Drilling Magazine.

"Glasnost or no glasnost, it's not the easiest thing to find out," Killalea says. "I ultimately did discover that the well caved in a year and a half ago. So they don't have that claim (of the world's deepest) any more."

Killalea says he called the Soviet Embassy in Washington for confirmation and was told to send a letter.

"They were very nice and told me they would get back to me," he says. "I'm waiting to hear from them."

For 2.2 million women, homework makes dollars and sense

By SHARON BENOIT
Copley News Service

Perhaps the greatest wave of the women's movement is one that has surfaced within the past five years. Working women have found it makes a lot of sense to work at home, enjoy the freedom to pursue dreams and make as much or as little money as they desire.

During the last couple of decades, as millions of American women first entered the work force, they were enticed by economic opportunities and a new, more challenging arena in which to demonstrate their skills. Many homemakers, frankly, couldn't wait until they got out of the house and away from feelings of boredom and isolation.

It took time, but eventually these women began the long, hard climb up the corporate ladder and into the coveted boardrooms once dominated by their male counterparts. The stumbling blocks were tossed around like winter snowdrops — everywhere.

Some women succeeded beyond their dreams and continue to climb the corporate ladder. Some capable women were stifled by limited opportunities for advancement. Others found the rigidity of a 9-to-5 work day incompatible with their concept of child rearing.

It is this group of women who, after having reached all of their goals in the corporate world, are returning home to become entrepreneurial success stories. This trend is perhaps the greatest, most positive step in a working woman's search for equality with a capital E.

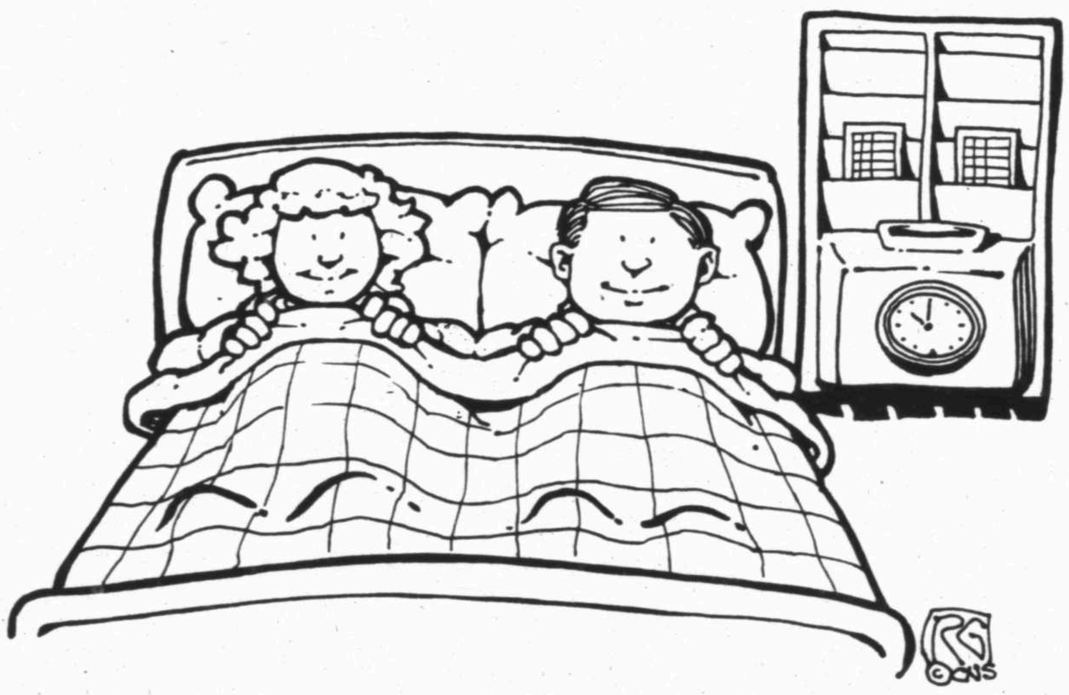

According to the U.S. Small Business Administration Office of Women's Business Ownership, there are about 2.2 million Americans running businesses at home today. Two-thirds of those people are women. Carol Crockett, director of this SBA department, acknowledged that there are more women than men working at home, presumably because of their roles as primary caretakers of home and family.

One study by the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported that about 60 percent more women than men worked the equivalent of a full-time work week at home.

Now the rise in home-based businesses mirrors the U.S. economy as it continues to shift from manufacturing to services. Many women-owned businesses are service-oriented and range from catering, direct sales, decorating and consulting to graphic design, publishing and accounting.

Interestingly, women tend to be more dedicated and disciplined when working at home than their male counterparts. Dr. Timothy Gehro, a clinical psychologist, feels this is so because women were forced early in their careers to be desk prone and handle mundane chores considered beneath their male counterparts.

"Therefore, entrepreneurial women find it much easier to deal with the mundane chores associated with start-up businesses — such as answering phones, filing, keeping records and exhibiting high quality performance — without conflict or distraction at home."

Jeannette R. Scollard, business consultant, entrepreneur and author of "The Self-Employed Woman," does not believe a woman encounters conflict while working at home. "Instead, I feel it makes perfect sense.

"The 9-to-5 work hours were created by men for men. Those working hours go against the grain for working wives and mothers," adds Scollard. "Less than 10 percent of American families fit into the traditional pattern of women staying home and men going to work. Today, 65 percent of all new mothers return to the work force within one year of childbirth. In 1986, 50 percent of mothers with children under three years old were in the labor force, more than twice the number of two decades ago."

This phenomenon, according to a number of studies, including those done by the U.S. Department of Labor and Catalyst, a woman's career-research organization, has forced children into the hands of baby sitters, preschools, day-care centers and grandparents.

"Smart moms are starting to realize they are losing their grips on the children," explained Gehro. "So, they're going home to start small businesses and, at the same time, regain control over their chicks in the nest. Best yet, they're getting to have their cake and eat it, too. There's a lot of money to be made from this tactic. This is how we are now defining equality."

Of course, not all women can just walk out on their jobs and return home to work alone. It takes a certain amount of moxie to start one's own business and build it into a strong, thriving force in the competitive world. Let's face it, working alone can be confining and lonely. One must be incredibly disciplined and self-motivated to succeed.

Scollard offers several pointers for women who may be considering this opportunity to take control of their lives and become entrepreneurs.

Do your homework. Keep your job and plan on the side. One woman I know worked for a broadcast firm and spent weekends and holidays setting up her client list. Once she quit her job she was able to earn $100,000 in the first month.

Also, it is easier to get credit while you are employed so make sure you purchase whatever equipment you may need before you quit that job. This includes the computer, the copy machine, the fax, the stationery and the file cabinets.

Designate a special area within your home or garage just for your office work. If you can set up a separate room with a separate telephone line, it's even more to your advantage.

Buy an answering machine. Sometimes answering services can be very annoying. They don't always answer your business calls on the third ring. They also put you on hold and can lose business for you. An answering machine — still annoying — is easier to deal with. You can put your own message on the tape and pick up messages quickly whenever necessary. It's also much less expensive — and when you start your own business, every dime counts.

Continue to do business as if you are working in a corporate office. Dress up whenever possible (silk suits are out at home, but a nice comfortable day dress or pantsuit should be worn) just in case an unexpected client knocks on the door.

Act businesslike at all times and return all calls within the same day.

Be in constant contact with your clients. Call them every day just to check in. Report to them on your activities. This gives them the feeling you are on top of their business, too.

Conduct your business within business hours.

Give out your business cards like popcorn.

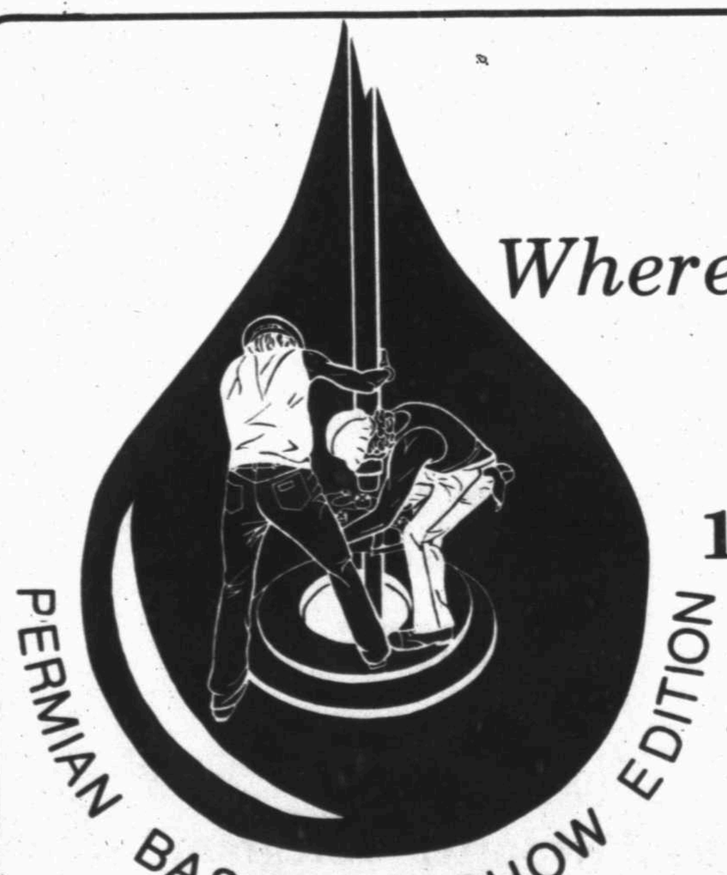

You never know where your next client is going to come from. Always dress well on planes and at lunch.

Avoid isolation. Get out, join civic groups, trade associations, take people to lunch. You'll learn a lot and people will know you are there.

Try to develop a high profile for yourself. If you're in a small town, try to get editorial press. It's better than advertising for your credibility.

Another important point, according to Scollard, is that "women must stop thinking in a box. They must begin to design their own life to fit themselves and their needs or desires. We've always done what is required of us ... what was needed.

"This trend is surely the coming of age of women. By 1990, the number of home-based businesses is expected to double. And the U.S. Labor Department estimates that about 75 percent of the work done in this country eventually could be moved home. It's such a great way to end the 20th century."

Grab a bull market's horns without getting gored

By CHRIS BARNETT
and ART GARCIA
Copley News Service

Very few investors make money in good times and bad, but William J. O'Neil does.

The savvy stock-picker-turned-publisher of Investor's Daily made enough money in one week to recoup two years worth of losses incurred in launching his financial newspaper that is giving The Wall Street Journal a run for its money.

O'Neil, a decisive, systematic investor who has written his own money-making rules and sticks with them, doesn't chase fads or rumors. Spend an hour with him and you would like to give him your nest egg to nurture.

Now he has written perhaps the first book on stock market investing that dishes up meaty strategies, not philosophical pablum and primerlike definitions. The title is straightforward — "How to Make Money in Stocks" (McGraw-Hill; 246 pages).

The soft-spoken Oklahoman writes like he talks — plainly. He insists the "beginning investor doesn't need a lot of money to start — $500 to $1,000 — and you can add to it as you earn and save more money."

That is the beauty of O'Neil's approach. You start small, build slowly but safely and don't worry about the "big ones that get away."

O'Neil has boiled down his stock-picking strategies to a formula with the catchy acronym CAN SLIM. It's based on studying past superperformers to spot tomorrow's winners. Here is how it works:

The "C" means a stock "candidate for purchase" should show a major percentage increase in its current quarterly earnings per share when compared to the prior year's earnings. O'Neil's computer database showed that winners between '70 and '82 posted quarterly earnings gains of some 86 percent. Only 2 percent of the Big Board and American Exchange stocks do that well so that narrows the field.

"A" is for stocks where the annual compounded growth rate of earnings for five straight years should be 15 percent to 50 percent or more. Don't get caught up in earnings "estimates," warns O'Neil. "Estimates are opinions, reported earnings are facts."

If a company's earnings plunge one year and bounce back, scratch if off your list.

"N" is for "new" and O'Neil says it takes "something new to produce a startling advance in the price of a stock." Looking at history, he notes how new products such as the self-developing camera that sent Polaroid's shares soaring; how San Diego's Price Co. stock shot up when it debuted its wholesale warehouse membership store. Of the great stock market winners from '53 to '85, over 95 percent had a major new product or service, new management or new, improved conditions in their industry.

"S" means look for companies with small amounts of outstanding common shares. Says O'Neil: "The law of supply and demand is more important than all of the analyst opinions on Wall Street. Plus, stocks where top management have major ownership are your best prospects." Another positive sign is when a company buys its own shares on the open market.

"L" is for determining whether the stock you are eyeing is a leader or a laggard. Only pick the best two or three stocks in any industry group, stresses O'Neil. And if your stocks start to slip, sell off the worst performers first. "Pros make mistakes, too," says O'Neil.

"I" is for institutional sponsorship, and O'Neil says any stock you consider should have at a minimum three to 10 mutual funds, corporate pension funds, insurance companies, bank trust departments or major investment counselors buying and holding its shares. Ask your broker to tell you who has major positions — up to 100,000 shares or more — and when they buy and sell. The New York Stock Exchange tape tells the tale.

"M" is for market direction and the best way to understand which way it's going is to personally track it every day, insists the stock market guru who also, coincidentally, publishes Investor's Daily. The paper itself is crammed with charts and graphs that contain all the information for putting the CAN SLIM formula to work. The bottom line: Do your own homework and don't rely on some stock broker or financial adviser to spoon-feed you market intelligence. No one is going to watch your money like you will.

O'Neil's book offers a potpourri of other commonsense truisms that many people ignore. For instance, does your broker only suggest stocks his firm recommends? If so, he's a peddler, not a professional. Real pros do their own analysis, can explain the rationale for buying in rather than trying to unload shares sitting on his employer's shelf just to keep his sales manager happy. "Ask hard questions; if you do not feel comfortable with your broker, change," he says.

Adventurous thrifts peg CD rates to outcome of presidential election

By SARAH BARTLETT
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Trying to harness the excitement over the presidential politics, several savings associations are offering bonuses to depositors who pick the winner of the election.

They are offering "presidential CDs," certificates of deposit that let customers tie their investment to a presidential candidate and earn additional interest if they are right.

This is not the first example of linking a CD's yield to sporting events, Washington or otherwise.

CDs have been tied to the Super Bowl, for instance.

But this development could give politicians and commentators some indication of what voters who save are thinking.

At the Regency Savings Bank in Naperville, Ill., a suburb of Chicago, customers can gain an extra half-point in interest on a one-year CD, above the currently offered rate of 7.5 percent, if they pick the winning presidential candidate.

Losers continue to earn the market rate.

Because investors pay nothing for the chance to win, Regency's lawyers said their product does not technically qualify as gambling.

When the product was introduced in mid-August, customers favored the Democratic candidate, Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.

But Vice President Bush has overtaken him and leads 2 to 1.

At others savings institutions, the interest rate that can be earned rises as the margin of victory grows wider.

The Merchants Bank of Boston, whose headquarters are in sight of Dukakis's State House, offers customers a presidential CD for as little as $250, compared with a $2,000 minimum at Regency.

Two days after the election Merchants will add one-hundredth of a percentage point to their customers' CD rate for each percentage point of the popular vote the party of their choice receives.

Thus, if Dukakis were to win 60 percent of the vote and Bush 40 percent, the rate on a four-year CD would rise from 8.25 percent to 8.85 percent for investments tied to the Democrats, while the rate tied to the Republicans would be 8.65 percent.

As might be considered appropriate for a Washington institution, Perpetual Savings Bank's presidential CD is more of a political bellwether than a speculative vehicle.

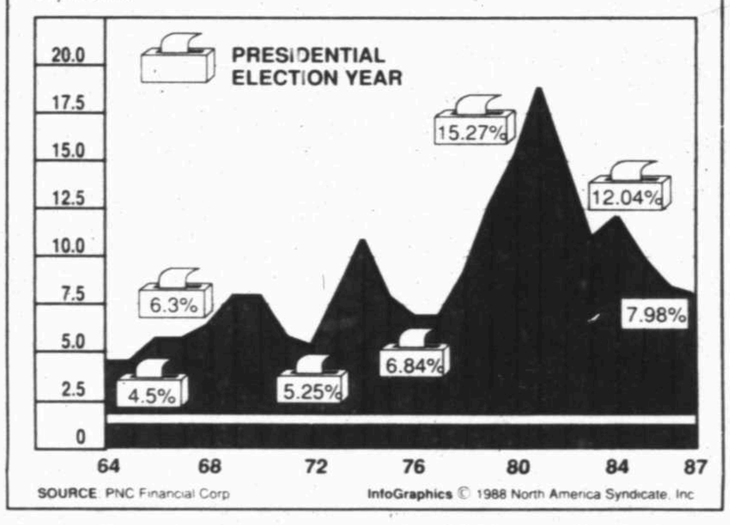

Perpetual will ask customers' preferences but will give a higher interest rate to all its presidential CD customers, whether they pick the winning candidate or not.

Perpetual hopes to generate interest in its CDs by publishing a weekly tally of customers' political preferences.

Interest rates seem steady in presidential election years

Perhaps contrary to popular belief, interest rates – reflected by the U.S. prime rate – have generally been steady or rising during presidential election years since 1964. The exceptions were in 1976.

GeoQuest acquires seismic library

From Staff Reports

GeoQuest International Inc. of Houston has purchased the seismic data library of Geo-Search Corp. of Midland. As part of the transaction, GeoQuest also acquired Geo-Search's data brokerage and data storage busiensss.

The seismic data library consists of over 10,000 miles of data in the Permian Basin. This data base, and the associated data brokerage business will be managed by Richardson Seismic Services Inc. and Seismic Reflections Inc., wholly owned subsidiaries of GeoQuest with offices in Houston, Midland and Denver.

Another aspect of the purchase is an agreement between GeoQuest and Geo-Search to acquire new seismic data in the Permian Basin over the next five years using Geo-Search's seismic acquisition crews.

In making the announcement, Bob Hodgson, president of Geoquest, said the acquisition is part of the company's continuing expansion of this sector of seismic exploration services. Coupled with GeoQuest's existing seismic data inventory, the company now holds a seismic data library of more than 52,000 miles in the onshore U.S.

GeoQuest plans to reprocess more than 13,000 miles of seismic data in the Permian Basin over the next several years, and will place special emphasis on stratigraphic processing technology keyed to the various types of stratigraphic targets that exist in West Texas.

Bill Gilluly, chief executive officer of Geo-Search, said the move will allow Geo-Search to focus its resources toward strengthening the largest segment of its business, seismic data processing and field acquisition. Meanwhile, the combination of the data libraries and other services is consistent with the needs of the market.

Geo-Search is a subsidiary of Simon Engineering PLC of Manchester, England. Simon's Geophysical Group operates worldwide, with headquarters in England and operation centers in North and South America, Canada, Australia, Europe and the Far East.

Congress nears offshore lease ban

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress is nearing final action on legislation that would bar the Reagan administration from any last-minute oil lease sales in portions of the Pacific and Atlantic oceans and the Gulf of Mexico.

The proposed prohibitions, opposed by the administration, are contained in the fiscal 1989 spending bill for the Interior Department, U.S. Forest Service and some Energy Department research programs.

The $9.9 billion appropriations package, which is drawing veto threats from the administration, is awaiting a final vote in the Senate following its 350-45 approval by the House on Thursday.

The margin of approval in the House indicates the legislation has sufficient support to ensure its backers could win a veto-override vote.

The bill would continue, through September 1989, a ban on Interior Department sales of oil leases off the coasts of northern California and Massachusetts and reinstitute a drilling ban for the waters off southwestern Florida.

This would stop the administration from holding lease sales for these areas during its final months in office. Both presidential candidates — Republican George Bush and Democrat Michael Dukakis — have said they oppose petroleum development in sensitive offshore waters.

Dropped from the compromise package was a House provision, also drawing fire from the administration, that sought to require at least 50 percent U.S. labor and materials for petroleum facilities along the outer continental shelf.

The spending bill, which contains no major new programs, would provide $190 million for the Energy Department's clean-coal research efforts in fiscal 1989, which begins Oct. 1.

This is $335 million less than the administration said it needed to fulfil President Reagan's pledge to Canada to spend $2.5 billion over five years in a search for ways to curb U.S. emissions of pollutants that cause acid rain.

In a letter to lawmakers last month, James C. Miller III, director of the White House Office of Management and Budget, cited the refusal of Congress to commit $525 million to the clean-coal program in fiscal 1989 as another reason the bill might be vetoed.

Since then, however, administration officials and congressional leaders have discussed their differences and may be near an agreement that could make the partial funding acceptable to the White House, according to an administration source who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Miller also has objected to giving states more than $150 million for energy conservation programs, which he said should not be federally financed. His letter also complained about putting more than $60 million into Indian health facilities when existing facilities have a 50 percent vacancy rate.

The bill calls for the National Park Service to receive $1 billion in fiscal 1989, some $280 million more than Reagan proposed in his budget and about $100 million higher than fiscal 1988.

The U.S. Forest Service would receive $1.84 billion in fiscal 1989, an increase of about $625 million over the current level and about $230 million more than the administration requested.

The bill sets a goal of selling 11.45 billion board feet of lumber from public forests, 198 million more board feet than the administration proposed. Road-building money would total about $176 million, down some $20 million from fiscal 1988.

BANK

state," because it considers all of a customer's balances — checking, savings, money market, certificates of deposit and individual retirement accounts — toward the minimum balance for free checking.

The "free checking" limits on the One Plus account are $4,000 average combined balance for interest-bearing checking and a $2,000 balance for other checking accounts.

In addition, One Plus customers are entitled to ¼-percent interest bonus on CDs under $100,000, 1-percent interest discount on fixed rate installment loans and TCB-issued credit cards, free checks and a one-year annual fee waiver on bank credit cards.

Banks use such umbrella enticements to draw business that had been going to rival institutions.

"We had to look at whether we could attract enough additional deposits to afford offering free checking and install the extensive software necessary to implement the program," Jones said.

The $900 million increase in deposits in the six major markets in just over four months was enough to justify the expense, he said.

First Interstate Bank of Texas said in July that balances for its Select Package account, started in January 1987, exceed $965 million from more than 60,000 households.

Small banks always have been able to give their best customers breaks from fees because they know who those individuals are. Big banks don't have that advantage, Andy Greenwood, a bank marketing consultant, recently told the Houston Chronicle.

"I might have seven or eight accounts at a bank, but they would never know unless I tell them," he said. Relationship accounts are a way for a big bank to know who its best customers are.

Greenwood said the various relationship accounts are hard for consumers to distinguish — an assertion hotly contested by bankers. "They are more alike than bankers would like to think," Greenwood said.

Ken Thorne, who developed One Plus for Texas Commerce, said 40 percent of the service's deposits were withdrawn from other banks.

Chip Carlisle, chief banking officer for First Interstate, said such numbers are meaningless because it is impossible to track them with any accuracy. He would say only that the level of deposits lured to First Interstate from other institutions was "gratifying."

In addition to Midland and Odessa, Texas Commerce is introducing the One Plus product in Amarillo, Brownsville, Corpus Christi, Longview, Lubbock and McAllen. The account has been available to customers in Dallas, Houston, El Paso, Fort Worth, Austin and San Antonio since May 2.

IDEAS

It was Gay's idea to design scorecards for Hogan Park Golf Course and sell advertising on them, the proceeds of which MGR keeps. Runkel designed the course's new logo, a sketch of the Midland skyline.

Mike Moore, 22, Gay's stepson, is also a draftsman and helps Runkel with product design. The three began sharing office space and, according to Runkel, "kept having these ideas for designs that might sell."

They put together some prototypes, and a company was born.

They spend a lot of time coming up with ideas and experimenting with various materials such as plastic and rubber cement.

"Information is the key to being a successful designer," he states. "You have to know what's available in the way of material and services."

Children's toys aren't the only products in development. A hydraulic boat lift, car jacks, and a garage door opener are all in various stages of design, according to Runkel.

They hope their company is successful enough to give an economic boost to Midland. While they do some light manufacturing — mostly prototypes made in a workshop at Runkel's home — most of MGR's finished goods are produced by other companies.

Gay points out they try to subcontract with local companies whenever possible. And a full-scale manufacturing facility is a future possibility, he added.

"Our idea is to manufacture our products in the Permian Basin, rather than sending them off to Mexico or Korea." About 90 percent of the company's toys are water-activated, and use a common water-activation component, which keeps manufacturing costs down, he said.

"Our overall objective is to have a business here in Midland that employs Midlanders and has a nationwide market."

Agrees Runkel: "We would love it if we could create some jobs. It's just a matter of seeing how successful our products are." Despite the economic downturn, the three are firm believers in Midland and keeping jobs and money in Midland.

They also help clients develop and market new product ideas. In the meantime, they continue coming up with new ideas and designs for a wide variety of projects.

Concludes Runkel: "We've got lots of things we can make and there's no limit to what we can dream up."

JOBS

Specific time limits and other eligibility requirements apply to each of the benefits, which must be applied for separately.

When originally enacted in 1974 the Trade Act was intended to protect manufacturing workers whose jobs were lost because of imports.

Nationally, $80 million has been allocated to the program, with another $40 million to be added when the president negotiates a tariff schedule as required under the trade bill.

Crawford said "Oklahoma and Texas alone could use all the funds, but we don't know yet.

"There are potentially very large numbers of petitions and many workers left without jobs," he said.

The petroleum industry is not the only one in Texas to qualify for the enhanced benefits. The machining, automotive, garment and computer industries have also been adversely impacted by imports, Crawford said.

AIRLINES

The industry also had to cope with a major U.S. recession, high fuel prices and an air controllers' strike. But analysts say even the best of conditions would not have made a big difference for the many carriers that started without adequate resources.

"This is not a produce stand," says Robert Joekicke, of Shearson Lehman Securities. "You have to have working capital to go through the period of public recognition and develop a market niche."

More than 200 carriers have filed for bankruptcy or ceased operations since deregulation, mostly between 1980 and 1985. The majority were small commuter-type airlines, but the failures also included such big carriers as Continental and Braniff.

By 1984, consolidation was the trend. Since then the U.S. Department of Transportation has allowed 20 mergers between major airlines. Some involved financially ailing carriers or the expansion of routes by the bigger carrier. Others — Northwest with Republic and TWA with Ozark — involved direct competitors and outraged other carriers, consumer groups and deregulation supporters who accused the department of ignoring anti-trust laws.

Severin Borenstein, an associate professor of economics and public policy at the University of Michigan, says his post-merger research shows that TWA's fares went up 14 percent for flights to and from St. Louis, where it boards four out of five passengers. Northwest's fares in Minneapolis, where it gained a dominant market share, rose 11 percent. This, he notes, came even as falling fuel costs and fare wars meant an overall industry fare drop of 18 percent.

In a study of airline competition last year, Salomon Brothers Inc. analyst Julius Maldutis concluded that 40 of the nation's 50 largest airports are dominated by one or two airlines and thus have "excessive amounts of concentration" of market power. Considering the industry was highly concentrated before deregulation, says Maldutis, "the bottom line conclusion is that the Department of Transportation shouldn't have permitted any of the mergers."

Analysts say airlines that have survived deregulation share more than luck. Officials from Airline Economics Inc., a consulting firm, say several survival characteristics mark the successful major carriers. They include:

■ Hub-and-spoke: A major restructuring of routes to one that feeds traffic from "spoke" cities to a central "hub" airport for cross-connections. Under this plan, larger planes fly fuller, and carriers hold on to passengers for their entire journey. Less than 3 percent of passengers who take connecting flights switch to another airline, down from 13 percent prior to deregulation.

Hubs have allowed carriers to capture huge local market shares. By the first half of 1988, USAir had a 92 percent market share at Charlotte and 85 percent at Pittsburgh. Northwest had an 84 percent share at Memphis and 79 percent at Minneapolis/St. Paul. Delta, which acquired Western Airlines in 1986, had an 80 percent share in Salt Lake City.

■ Pricing: Airlines today set fares through what they call "yield management," looking at the history of a flight and current market conditions to set fares that meet demand and fill their planes. The approach enables carriers to respond quickly to competitive fares and to lower or raise prices for different seats on a flight according to consumer response.

■ Computerized reservations systems: This is a key competitive tool that has sparked demands for reform. Five major airline-owned systems are used by other carriers to list flights and by travel agents to book seats. Two of them, American's SABRE and United's APOLLO, account for about 70 percent of bookings. United recently sold half of its system for $500 million to USAir and four foreign carriers.

Airlines that own the systems make money from subscription fees paid by travel agents and from commissions paid by other carriers, hotels and other businesses booked through the systems. But owning a reservation system is also advantageous in other ways. A Department of Transportation study found that travel agents end up selling more tickets for the airline that owns the system they use. This "halo effect," the study says, has increased revenues for system owners by as much as 40 percent.

■ Capitalizing on size: One way to gain from market dominance has been to offer frequent-flyer programs. Such incentives help airlines hold on to their most profitable customers — business travelers, who pay higher fares.

■ At four of the nation's busiest airports — Chicago's O'Hare, New York's La Guardia and JFK, and Washington National — potential entrants face another problem: the right to operate at a given time is restricted. Currently, they're obtainable only if leased or bought from the airlines that have them. And no one's selling. More than a third of the slots at Washington National and LaGuardia are held by Texas Air carriers and USAir. United and American hold more than half at O'Hare.

Lee Howard, executive vice president of Airline Economics, sees the industry consolidating even further, to six mega-carriers, something he says is not necessarily bad.

Airlines, he says, could be "as competitive as other major unregulated industries that consist only of a few very large firms. There's a major characteristic that airlines have that may tilt the industry toward more competition. That's mobility — the ability of those carriers to move in and out of markets without having to shift so-called fixed assets."

Citibank bid wins First RepublicBank credit subsidiary

DALLAS (AP) — Citibank of New Castle, Del., was granted approval Friday by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to acquire the credit card subsidiary of the former First RepublicBank Corp.

NCNB Texas, which purchased the Texas subsidiaries of the failed Dallas bank holding company, immediately announced that it intends to pursue the customers of the former First RepublicBank Delaware, N.A.

NCNB Texas' parent company, Charlotte-based NCNB Corp., had managed the Delaware Bridge Bank for the FDIC since the bank was declared insolvent on Aug. 2.

"We are very disappointed that NCNB Corp. was not the successful bidder for the Delaware Bridge Bank," said NCNB Texas President Kenneth D. Lewis. "We view these card holders as customers of NCNB Texas and will strongly pursue their continued credit card business."

Lewis said his company had made an extremely good offer, based on industry-standard premiums for credit card portfolios.

"The amount that we bid would not have been dilutive to NCNB Corp. shareholders and would have allowed us to make a reasonable return on our investment," Lewis said. "Obviously, Citibank paid a higher premium.

Delaware Bridge Bank had assets of approximately $662 million. Citibank (Delaware) paid a premium of $158 million to buy about $623 million in credit card receivables, FDIC officials said.

The acquisition is expected to be completed in about three weeks.

Productivity expert to the government: Butt out

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK — As an authority on economic and business productivity, C. Jackson Grayson Jr. watches in amazement as one legislator after another thinks government has the answers.

Having served in three administrations, Grayson knows how limited are government's abilities to intervene in the marketplace and correct its problems, specifically when they involve global competitiveness.

In that area, he says, there are important things that government should not do, no matter how insistent and intense the pressure. In keeping with that belief, he and associate Carla O'Dell have issued some cautionary advice.

Their views are in the form of a book titled, "American Business: A Two-Minute Warning," although it would take even the most efficient and productive reader a lot longer than that to digest their advice.

Grayson, chairman of the American Productivity Center in Houston, is well-grounded in his subject, having been President Nixon's price commissioner, and a member of President Carter's Commission on the Agenda for the 80s and President Reagan's National Productivity Advisory Council.

From such vantage points, says Grayson, he has observed growing pressure on government to "do something" about America's competitive posture, which is reflected in the balance of payments deficit and other problems.

Over the past five years, he says, there have been 112 recommendations for government action by 21 councils, commissions, congressional hearings and study groups on productivity and competitiveness.

It is frightening, say Grayson and O'Dell, that the 99th Congress had 108 committees and subcommittees in the Senate and 178 in the House, with 3,000 staffers "feeling they must do something to help American competitiveness."

Stating that such determination by Washington to do something "keeps us awake at night," the authors name five things they feel government must not do to "help American competitiveness."

1. The single worst thing is to increase protection, say Grayson and O'Dell. They say it invites reciprocity, lowers efficiency and shrinks export-related jobs.

Granting protection, they say, "is like putting an industry on a life-support system. It may prolong life for a while, but it can't restore health."

2. Government should not establish industrial policies.

Industrial policies are, in effect, attempts at centrally directing the economy to specific national goals. Call it "national planning" and you might get an argument, but you would also have material to defend yourself.

Industrial policies have been resurrected under the labels of "trade policies" or "competitiveness policies" or "living standards acts."

Grayson and O'Dell maintain that government personnel are not, by instinct or background, entrepreneurs or managers, and that their allocation decisions would be worse than those of the private sector.

Furthermore, they observe, authors and administrators of policies and laws tend to be lawyers or economists with little knowledge of business operations. And, they ask, aren't we aware that government cannot plan long range and cannot stay atop the rapid, continuous adjustments of a dynamic market?

3. The country should avoid currency devaluation as a competitiveness strategy.

Among other things, they argue, devaluing the dollar makes the United States compete on the basis of a lower standard of living. "Devaluation keeps knocking the dollar down until American wages are cheap enough to compete."

4. Capital investment shouldn't be overemphasized.

"We stress that capital investment is not only important for productivity improvement, it is essential," they say. "What we argue against is the overemphasis and wrong emphasis on capital investment."

One of their reasons for so thinking is that "merely calling for more capital investment confuses the volume of capital investment with the productivity of that investment."

5. More research and development is not necessarily better.

"The biggest competitive problem is not the amount spent on R&D, but on what is spent, and what is done with the ideas and techniques after discovery."

The United States, they point out, is still the world leader in originating new ideas. But, "while that is great for the good of the world, what counts in competitiveness is rapid commercialization of new knowledge."

Expenditures expected to reach record

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. businesses plan to increase capital spending by 11.6 percent this year, a fivefold increase over 1987, according to a government report.

The Commerce Department said the increase, if realized, would be the biggest advance since 1984, when spending shot up 16.6 percent as American industry recovered from the steep 1981-82 recession.

The advance would push business investment to expand and modernize production facilities up to a record high of $429.4 billion, after adjusting for the effects of inflation.

The boom in capital investment this year has been one of the main forces driving the economic expansion as businesses have stepped up investment plans in response to heavy demand.

The demand is coming in large part from a rebound in U.S. exports as a decline in the dollar since 1985 has helped manufacturers regain lost overseas markets.

The latest estimate of business investment plans is based on an industry survey conducted over the last two months.

It represented only a small change from a June report, which estimated spending would rise 11.9 percent this year. Both the June and September surveys, however, reflected a substantial increase from an initial industry projection for a 7.3 percent increase in investment. That estimate was made at the end of last year.

In 1987, investment spending rose a modest 2.3 percent after having fallen 3.9 percent in 1986.

The weakness in those years was blamed on the soaring U.S. trade deficit as a flood of imports reduced domestic demand for U.S. goods at the same time American firms were being priced out of overseas markets.

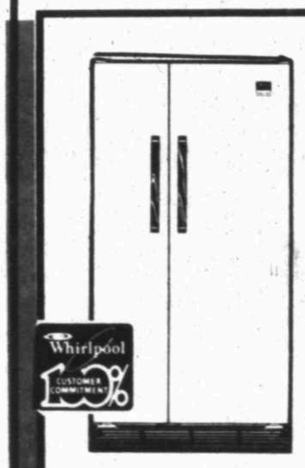

For 1988, manufacturing firms expect to boost spending by 12.5 percent with plants making non-durable goods projecting an increase of 13.2 percent and companies manufacturing durable goods expecting an 11.7 percent increase.

In other sectors, the report predicted an increase of 12.4 percent in capital investment by transportation companies, including airlines, and a 5.5 percent advance in the mining industry. This sector, which includes oil and gas drilling, had seen investment plummet 32 percent in 1986 and a further 2 percent in 1987 as oil companies cut back on exploration in the face of declining oil prices.

Before removing the effects of inflation, business investment is projected to rise by 10.6 percent this year to $430.9 billion, following an increase of 2.7 percent in 1987.

Yesteryear's little girls might be found bouncing a ball and reciting the words to a children's game — "A my name is Alice, and my husband's name is Allan, and we live in Alabama, and we sell apples."

In New York City in 1984, five grown up women were reciting their own, definitely updated, version.

"A my name is Alice, and my husband's name is Adam, and his girlfriend's name is Amy..."

This decidedly adult version is the one Midland Community Theatre goers will hear when MCT opens "A...My Name is Alice" Friday in Mabee Theatre II at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

Conceived and directed by Joan Micklin Silver and Julianne Boyd, the musical revue leafs through the various seasons of womanhood in some 20 songs and sketches.

"Women are beyond those angry, bitter movement days," Ms. Silver has said of the production.

"They seem to be at a point now where they are more relaxed and less defensive. We wanted to hear women laugh about themselves, for a change. We want women, and men, to have a good time about where women are today."

"Alice" began as an all-female project, an idea which was quickly revised.

"A lot of women whose writing we admired worked with men," Ms. Boyd is quoted as saying in an article in the New York Daily News. "The important thing is the view they had of women, not if they were women. I'd say men wrote a little less than half of the show, but we really didn't worry about that. We just took the best stuff."

"The best stuff" was refined through two workshop productions. The remaining material depicts, through lighthearted, fragmented slices of contemporary life written by an amalgam of 28 writers, women in assorted sizes, shapes and dispositions: a blues singer, a careerist careening out of control, a German-born French chanteuse, a dumped fiancee flipping out in a laundromat and an overbearing and oppressive school marm.

"Oh! She is, too. That's a hoot," Bert Bostic says of the school marm vignette. Bostic is music director at St. Luke's United Methodist Church and musical director for the production.

"The music, like the rest of the play, is very fast moving," Bostic says. "It's inclusive from very rhythmical upbeat and blues numbers through the ballad.

"The music is very easy to listen to, and the show is easy to watch. It moves so fast; its' full of one liners; it's the kind of show that the audiences will be able to identify easily with the characters portrayed. I'm sure there are mothers who are going to find themselves feeling the way this school marm makes Mrs. Johnson feel."

"A...My Name is Alice" is Bostic's first production at MCT.

"I have enjoyed working with the actresses, and I have found Don Bachmann, as the director of the show, extremely cooperative to work with," he says.

Cast members of the local production include Patty Loftis, Carole Cristiani, Patsy Allen, Dana Ritter, Barbara Iglehart and Debora Dillard. They will perform such numbers as "Emily, the M.B.A.," "Friends," "Sisters," "Bluer Than You" and "Honeypot."

MCT members saw Ms. Allen as Nellie in "South Pacific," Ms. Cristiani and Ms. Dillard in "Godspell," Ms. Loftis in "Noises Off" and as a Winning Season Singer and Ms. Iglehart as the mother in "Brighton Beach Memoirs." Ms. Ritter recently finished playing the lead in the Globe of the Great Southwest's production of "Hello Dolly."

Director for the production is Don Bachmann, MCT executive director; choreographer, Brenda May; stage manager, George Robertson; assistant stage manager, Megan Burleson; set designer, Dave Layman; light and sound designer, Jon Clark; property master, Gilley Estes; and costumer, Mae Dawson.

Also involved in the production are Larry McCoy, drums; Kyla Carver, synthesizer; and Jerri Young, flute.

"The show is coming together rather nicely," says Robertson, who works for Nabla Corp. "Everybody is having fun, that's been a real blessing. It's so much work that if they weren't having fun with it, it would be a disaster."

For reservations call Theatre Midland's box office, 682-4111. Show dates are Friday, Saturday, Sept. 18, 22, 23, 24, 25, 29, 30 and Nov. 1. Showtime is 8 p.m. except for a 2:30 p.m. matinee Sept. 18.

Is "A... My Name is Alice" suitable for male audiences?

"Anyone who likes musicals will love this show," Robertson says. "If anything, it takes more stabs at women than it does at men, although there are moments where certain males in the audience might feel a little uncomfortable, in an entertaining sort of way."

Those attending opening night are invited to a pre-show party which begins at 7 p.m. in the theater's lobby. Theatergoers will be served Ste. Genevieve's "First Blush" wine, compliments of a friend of MCT, and crackers, cheese and fruit, compliments of SouthPoint Catering.

"Since we started doing pre-show parties this year, opening nights have been almost completely sold out," says Linda Bond, MCT director of development and marketing. "We thought 'First Blush' wine might be fun for this adult show. We would urge anyone who would like to attend the opening party to please make their reservations early."

Lazy days of summer all but over

Temple

Fall arrived, and I'm still wondering what happened to what are supposed to be the lazy days of summer. Except for the heat, summer didn't feel like summer. Now it's over.

The pace has intensified. Septemberfest signals the plunge into fall activities, and the closing day of that event is today from noon to 5 p.m. at the Midland County Exhibit Building.

When I was young, I was told time moved faster each year. I had forever then so I didn't pay any attention. Now, today becomes yesterday when it's supposed to be next month. So before it is summer of 1989, I want to mention the personnel changes which have occurred during the summer of 1988 that I am aware of on the two beats that I cover — entertainment and religion.

Although I get questioned about handling such divergent beats, the two have more in common that most realize. They are usually peopled by dedicated and talented people who are willing to put in long hours for little monetary reward, and both require volunteers to operate effectively.

This summer, Midland Community Theatre said good-bye to Michael Spicer, associate director; Sharyllynn Shaw, choreographer; Elizabeth Lee technical assistant; and Dorothy "Dottie" Fox, volunteer coordinator; and said hello to Mike Kase, educational director; Brenda May, choreographer and dance instructor; Ross Wilmeth, shop foreman; Sheryl Berger, volunteer coordinator; and Renee Chambers, creative dramatics instructor.

Kase received his master of fine arts from the University of Louisville. He has taught theater at James Madison University and has worked professionally at the Merry-Go-Round Playhouse and the Syracuse Opera company in upstate New York. He has over 20 shows to his directing credit.

Ms. May has a degree in dance and a master of arts degree in theater, both from Southwest Missouri State University. She has been in such shows as "West Side Story," "Grease," "The Music Man," "George M!" and "Pippin."

Wilmeth comes to MCT from the Alley Theatre in Houston, where he was shop foreman. Prior to his time at the Alley Theatre, he was the technical director at the W.P.A. Theatre in New York. This theater has turned out such successful productions as "Little Shop of Horrors." In addition, he's worked at professional scene shops in New York.

Ms. Chambers has a bachelor of arts in theater arts from The University of Texas of the Permian Basin. In addition to teaching creative dramatics, she is also the producer/director of "Esteem Machine," a teen theater group that performs on socially relevant topics.

Ms. Berger has a bachelor of science degree from Texas A&I University. A former public educator, she has served as a volunteer at MCT in many capacities including publicity chairman, props, dresser, wardrobe mistress, bar crew, house manager and Summer Mummers crew as well as performing with the Winning Season Singers, now called the MCT Singers. This singing group has performed 46 times in 1988.

MCT is not the only organization welcoming new faces.

New to the Museum of the Southwest is Ron Aday, who joined the staff in June as exhibition designer. A former Midlander, Aday has been working in set design with community theaters.

And, the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale has added Robert E. Hunt, chorale director, who replaces Eugene Pierce (Pierce is working toward a masters degree in orchestral conducting at Carnegie-Mellon University); Max P. Goff, director of development; and Cathy Nouveau-ne,' administrative assistant. Ms. Nouveau-ne' replaces Beth Self.

In addition, the MOSC's Lone Star Brass Quintet has experienced the following changes: Barbara Adamcik, principal horn with the symphony, has been replaced by David Urschel, and David Scott, principal trumpet with the symphony, has been replaced by Patrick Tillery.

Mrs. Adamcik and her husband, Robert, have moved to Tennessee where she will be first horn with the Knoxville Symphony. Scott, and his wife, Jan, have moved to Abilene, where he will be a high school brass instructor, and she has secured a university position in woodwinds at McMurry College. Rounding out the quintet are veteran members Alan Harvey, tuba; Robb Belcher, trombone; and Michael Santorelli, trumpet.

The LSBQ's first official performance will be during the Christmas season (the date is being set at the current time); however, the group does perform for groups and private events and may be contacted through the symphony office, 563-0921. In addition, the quintet will be performing several out of town engagements.

Other changes in the symphony include second trombonist Carl Hallstrom, replaced by Brian Foote; second bassoon, Chuck Hazelwood, replaced by Billy Hardin; second clarinetist Jan Scott, wife of David Scott, replaced by Nancy Carr; violin Ricardo Flores, replaced by Gary Feltner; and timpanist Robert Adamcik, replaced by Max Derrickson. The symphony has added to the viola section, Kirsten Rusack, and to the cello section, Linda Kruger.

Also returning to our cultural community is former Midlander Jane Clancy Huddleston-Debenport, who has reported for duty as music director at Trinity Presbyterian Church. She is coming back after several years of music ministry in Odessa. During her previous time in Midland, Mrs. Debenport taught voice and was a soloist with the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale, The University Singers and The Friends of Music.

Among the faces leaving Midland are those associated with two of the oldest and biggest churches here — First Baptist Church and First United Methodist Church.

First Baptist Church lost its senior pastor, the Rev. Dr. Daniel Vestal, who answered a call to minister in Atlanta, Ga., at Dunwoody Baptist. A search committee is being formed.

The most changes have occurred at First United Methodist Church. The Rev. Dr. Charles E. Lutrick, retired, and he and his wife, Ruth, moved to Lubbock, leaving the position of senior pastor open.

That position has been filled by the Rev. Russell C. Parchman. Parchman comes to First United Methodist Church from serving as District Superintendent of the El Paso District in the New Mexico Conference. Moving to Midland with Parchman are his wife, Barbara, and daughter, Kerrie, a senior at Midland High School.

And the Rev. James Bell, one of two associate ministers at First UMC, has been reassigned to Post, where he is senior pastor at Post UMC. It will most likely be the first of the year before the position is filled.

In addition, First UMC has hired Robert Montgomery as director of Youth Ministries. A 1985 graduate of Trinity University, San Antonio, with a bachelor of arts in religion, Montgomery has served for the past three years as Minister to Youth at St. Paul's United Methodist Church, Muskogee, Okla. His wife's name is Becky.

And, St. Nicholas Eiscopal Church has hired a new rector who starts his duties this month. The Rev. Jon S. Stasney comes to Midland from Medina-Bellevue, Wash., where he was associate rector at St. Thomas' Church. He was reared at Abilene and graduated from St. Mark's School in Dallas. He and his wife, Dale, have three children; Sarah, 8; Justin, 6; and Susan, 4.

Saying hello is easier than saying good-bye, but on the positive side, new faces mean fresh energy, something a community can use even in the best of times.

American folk art will be displayed

From Staff Reports

FORT WORTH — A major traveling exhibition of American folk art from the Shelburne Museum in Vermont, one of the nation's foremost institutions devoted to collecting and preserving folk art, is on view at the Amon Carter Museum through September.

"An American Sampler: Folk Art from the Shelburne Museum" brings together more than ninety works from the museum's extensive collection of Americana, including quilts and coverlets, weather vanes and whirligigs, decoys, carousel animals, cigar-store Indians, trade signs, and carved figures.

The exhibition has been organized by the National Gallery of Art, Washington, D.C.

"An American Sampler" and its seven-city tour have been made possible through a grant from The New England, the Boston-based financial services and insurance institution. Locally, The New England is joined in sponsorship by its two affiliates in the Fort Worth/Dallas area, Ackley Financial and The New England Financial Services.

The Shelburne Museum was founded in 1947 by Electra Havemeyer Webb and her husband J. Watson Webb as a permanent home for her eclectic collection of American artifacts. Situated on 45 acres on the east shore of Lake Champlain in Vermont, the Shelburne Museum is housed in 37 different historic structures that were brought to the site from locations throughout New England.

The Amon Carter Museum's exhibition concentrates on the Shelburne Museum's renowned collection of sculpture and textiles, which fills all the main gallery and part of the mezzanine. The exhibition design consultant for the Amon Carter Museum installation is ElRoy Quenroe, Quenroe Design Associates, Baltimore, Maryland.

Among the objects are works by talented word-carvers, amateurs as well as professionals, such as the carved wooden sculpture of "George Washington On Horseback" (c. 1780) and the "Rooster Barber Chair for Children" (c. 1890). Also represented among the wood carvings are a wide variety of decorative work from the late eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, including figureheads for ships, eagles for public buildings, trade figures, and signs for tobacco shops.

An exotic counterpart to the wood carving is a collection of scrimshaw — whale bone and teeth, elaborately carved by sailors to relieve the tedium of long whaling voyages. They made a variety of objects such as crimpers in the shape of a woman riding an intricate rosette zigzag wheel and busks (for the stiffening of bodice corsets) incised with hearts and palms. The quilts and coverlets in the exhibition represent the variety of decorative bedcovers used in eighteenth- and nineteenth-century America. Several styles and techniques of quilting are represented: whole cloth, pieced, and appliqued.

As the exhibition illustrates, not all folk artists were amateurs working in cultural and artistic isolation. They were frequently inspired, consciously or unconsciously, by European subject matter.

Thouvenel String Quartet

Thouvenel quartet's concert season to begin

From Staff Reports

The opening weekend of the Thouvenel's Chamber Music Series will feature a Preview Concert of the New York performance at the Merkin Concert Hall of the Abraham Goodman House.

"This concert is another chance for Midland-Odessa audiences to stay one step ahead of New Yorkers," says Eugene Purdue, the quartet's first violinist.

The Midland performance is set for 8 p.m. Saturday at Midland College's Allison Fine Arts Auditorium, and the Odessa concert will be held at 3 p.m. Sept. 18 at the Founders Building of The University of Texas of the Permian Basin. The Midland performance is sponsored by Lynn D. Durham in memory of Fredda Turner Durham, and the Odessa performance is sponsored by Mr. and Mrs. Dan Carpenter.

The program includes works by Mozart, Carter and Ravel. Tickets may be reserved by calling 563-0921 or purchased at the door.

"This season promises to be a great adventure both in the music we will be performing and in the cities in which we will perform," says Janet Chisholm, second violinist. "Not only will we perform some of the most intriguing 20th century works in Baltimore, New York and Houston, perform great standard works in cities throughout Europe, but also hopefully record some of our favorite quartets."

"WQXR's 'Listening Room' will interview us on Oct. 13 and broadcast some of our concert selections, which will be very exciting for me, since it was one of my favorite programs while I was a student at Juilliard," says Rebecca Seiver, cellist.

The Thouvenel has been invited to perform in Taiwan in the coming year and is currently working on available dates.

Other dates of the Thouvenel's series are Nov. 5 in Midland and Nov. 6 in Odessa; Feb. 4 in Midland and Feb. 5 in Odessa; March 4 in Midland and March 5 in Odessa; and May 13 in Odessa and May 14 in Midland.

Tickets for the season will be available at the opening concerts.

Mexican artists' graphics displayed at museum

From Staff Reports

The Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., is hosting an exhibition of graphics by Mexican artists from the 1900s to the 1960s through Sept. 18. "Grafica Popular de Mexico" is from a private collection on loan to the museum.

The collector, who knew many of the artists as she was growing up in Mexico City, was given prints by the artists. Later she began to collect on her own. A wide variety of artists and styles is represented.

The collection includes work by Jose Guadalupe Posada, considered the founder of Mexican graphic art; Angel Bracho, painter and graphic artist; Leopoldo Mendez, leader of a major graphic arts workshop and one of the most politically active artists; Alfredo Zalce, muralist and experimenter in techniques; and Sarah Jimenez, a noted contemporary artist.

Subject matter ranges from portraits to scenes of everyday life of the peasants — tortilla makers, laborers in the fields, fishermen with boats and nets, and scenes of the struggle of "the people" for bread and knowledge, for land and freedom.

Jean Hagman, director of the museum, says the exhibition, which includes all types of graphics — etchings, wood cuts, lithographs, serigraphs and engravings — "is an excellent example of art work from our neighboring country, work not often seen in the United States." Viewing the collection also allows the opportunity to see several proofs from the same edition and to note the differences.

Also on display is "Traditions in Transition: Contemporary Basketweaving of the Southwest Indians," an exhibition of contemporary basketweaving by 27 Indian basketweavers.

The exhibition illustrates an art form practiced in the Southwest for more than 7500 years and kept alive by the talents of modern day Indian artisans in New Mexico and Arizona.

Traditional tribal styles and minute detail and workmanship in the weaving can be seen in the 31 baskets in the exhibit. Photographs of each weaver with a personal statement about the work, the tools, and materials utilized are also shown.

Basketweaving is traditionally a woman's craft in the Southwestern Indian cultures except for the Pueblo groups where men also create baskets. The skills have been handed down through families or reintroduced by tribal arts and crafts programs.

The Museum is open to the public Tuesdays through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and on Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m. No admission is charged.

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

Stewart movie will be shown at museum

ODESSA — Since 1952, Americans have observed "Citizenship Day" on Sept. 17.

Replacing "Citizenship Day" and "I Am An American Day," "Constitution Day" was established to celebrate the anniversary of the signing of the U.S. Constitution. The first observance was a three-day celebration during the Centennial in 1887, marking the historic singing of the Constitution.

"I Am An American Day" was designated a holiday in 1940 to recognize new citizens coming of age or naturalized.

The Presidential Museum will celebrate this historic day with the showing of the classic film, "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington," starring James Stewart. In the film, Stewart, who accidentially becomes a U.S. senator, goes to Washington holing to change some of the corruption he sees there. He filibusters on the Senate floor, delivering an emotional defense of our freedom, justice and liberty.

"This now classic scene will remind each citizen of the value of his American citizenship," says Anne Sherburn, the museum's director.

"Make plans to see the exhibit of political cartoons "Who's Laughing Now" on display in the temporary gallery and "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington" at the Presidential Museum on 'Citizenship Day,' " she says.

Bayfest '88 next weekend

CORPUS CHRISTI — The bayfront will sparkle with cultural, educational and artistic events at Bayfest '88 to be held Friday through Sept. 18 in Corpus Christi.

Activities include continuous entertainment on five stages plus the Children's Stage, street entertainment throughout the site, a parade Saturday, a fine arts performing segment, an arts and crafts show and sale featuring 150 exhibitors, food, games and waterfront activities.

The Mexican Consulate will help Bayfest celebrate "El Diez y Seis de Septiembre" with the Folklorico Ballet of Puebla, Mexico, at 6 p.m. Friday.

At least 40 booths and seven vendors, sponsored by non-profit community groups, will sell a variety of South Texas and ethnic food specialities such as fajitas, funnel cakes, turkey legs, polish sausage, lumpia and barbecue.

On the water, the "Anything That can Float But a Boat Race" is a popular attraction as is the Air/Sea Rescue by the Coast Guard. Sunfish races and sailboard sailing will color the waterfront. Several research vessels and the Coast guard cutter will be a dickside for tours.

On the barge dock will be a stage for music, the Texas State Aquarium exhibit, a video arcade, skateboard and trick bike performances.

For more information call the Corpus Christi Chamber of Commerce.

O'Keefe program slated

"Georgia O'Keeffe: The Artist and the Woman," a program of slides and commentary, is scheduled for noon Wednesday at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

The program will be given by Dorothy Perkins.

Those attending are invited to bring a lunch. The museum will furnish drinks.

Ms. Perkins, former head of Midland High School's English Department, book reviewer and a participant in many Midland community organizations, has a long held interest in Ms. O'Keeffe and her work.

Ms. Perkins' interest began in a college art history class and continued when she viewed the painting "Ranchos de Taos." Further study of Ms. O'Keeffe's art work and of her life added to Ms. Perkins' regard for the artist.

She felt a particular affinity when reading that Ms. O'Keeffe drove her Model T across the plains to a teaching job. Ms. Perkins drove her brother's Model A across the plains to Midland for her first teaching assignment.

Ms. Perkins earned a masters degree in English from Middlebury College in Vermont. This year, she was named "Outstanding Volunteer of the Year in the Arts/Humanities" by the Volunteer Center. She was nominated by the museum where she has been a long time volunteer.

Exhibit depicts American classrooms

HOUSTON — The Museum of Fine Arts, Houston presents "American Classroom: The Photographs of Catherine Wagner," an exhibition of 55 contemporary black and white photographs that portray learning institutions and environments in the United States, from kindergarten to acupuncture classrooms. The exhibition remains on view through Nov. 27.

Since 1983, Ms. Wagner has photographed a tremendous variety of educational settings, including public schools, parochial schools, high schools and universities, as well as speciality teaching institutions for police cadets, dog groomers, stenographers, astronauts, and beauticians.

The photographs of "American Classroom" depict empty classrooms just after their occupants have left, with evidence of their meetings still visible. Familiar teaching tools are juxtaposed with unexpected classroom props.

Ms. Wagner was born in San Francisco in 1953. She is currently Assistant Professor of Art/Photography at Mills College in Oakland, Calif.

"American Classroom: The Photographs of Catherine Wagner" is organized by The Museum of Fine Arts, Houston and curated by Anne W. Tucker, Gus and Lyndall Wortham Curator of Photography at The Museum of Fine Arts, Houston.

Petroleum Museum to open new exhibit

The Permian Basin Petroleum Museum has made a public invitation to the ribbon cutting ceremonies officially opening the "Development of Modern Pumping Unit " Exhibit at 11:30 p.m. Tuesday.

The event will also kick off the museum and library's 13th birthday celebration.

A barbecue lunch will top off the ceremonies, honoring the many individuals and companies invloved in the project.

"A deserving recognition will be made to those companies and individuals who donated much of the time and equipment to complete the project," says a news release from the museum.

Reservations to the lunch are mandatory.

Nearly three-quarters of the domestic oil production is lifted to the surface with sucker rods actuated pumps. The new exhibit shows 18 different machines used to raise and lower the rod strings.

Early day shallow wells were pumped with underpull jacks operated by pull rods from a central power house, or small beam counterbalanced individual pump units. As wells were drilled deeper, the pumping units were made larger with longer surface stroke length. Also, more counterbalance was needed to relieve the gear-reducer of some of the weight of the longer sucker rods.

A variety of styles and mechanical ingenuity are showin the exhibit. Some date back to the 1920s; others are still being manufactured. All the equipment and many of the services were donated to the museum. Donors of equipment are recognized on the descriptive plaques near each unit.

On Saturday, the museum's birthday celebration will continue with "Family Day" activities. Admission fees are reduced to $1 for all visitors and birthday cake will be served all day. "This Land" will be shown at 10 a.m., noon and 2 p.m. and a slide presentation called "The Great Bronze Age of China" will be shown at 11 a.m., 1 and 3 p.m.

Lithographs on exhibit

FORT WORTH — "George Bellows: The Artist and His Lithographs, 1916-1924," a survey of George Bellows' career as a printmaker, is on view through Nov. 13 at the Amon Carter Museum.

This exhibition of 75 lithographs has been selected from the collection of 220 prints by Bellows acquired by the Amon Carter Museum in 1985.

Bellows' lithographs span the wide range of his subject matter, from the popular depictions of boxing matches and gently satirical views of everyday life to the more intimate nude studies and portrait renderings.

The exhibition is the first major examination of Bellows' stylistic and technical evolution as a printmaker.

"In the history of American printmaking, Bellows stands out as one of the great masters and the one responsible for the growth of lithography as a fine art in the early twentieth century," said Linda Ayres, curator of Paintings and Sculpture.

Pictorial record exhibited

FORT WORTH — Sarah Ann Lillie Hardinge, hopeful of redeeming an inheritance her brother had left her, arrived in Texas from New York in 1852, and for four years she kept a pictorial record and diary of her life as a pioneer.

Accompanying the exhibition is a catalogue, "Views of Texas, 1852-1856: Watercolors by Sarah Ann Lillie Hardinge, Together with a Journal of Her Departure from Texas" with an introduction by Ron Tyler, executive director of the Texas State Historical Association (80 pages, 19 color, six black and white illustrations, paperback $19.95, Amon Carter Museum).

El Paso Symphony Association to present Moscow Classical Ballet

From Staff Reports

EL PASO — The El Paso Symphony Orchestra's 1988-89 "Gold Medal Season" promises to be a "brilliant season" in its more than 50 seasons of performing.

"The El Paso Symphony Association has presented quality classical music for 58 years with this season being no exception," says a release from the organization.

The symphony will perform eight-paired concerts, September through April 1989, featuring 20 award-winning artists.

In addition to the eight classical concerts, the association is presenting the United States premiere of the Moscow Classical Ballet. This young dance company has performed on more than 250 stages, but never an American stage. On Sept. 30 and Oct. 1, El Pasoans will have the opportunity to experience true, classical dance direct from the USSR.

The Moscow Classical Ballet will perform two programs during their premiere in El Paso. The opening performance (Friday, Sept. 30), a dance repertoire, will feature the pas de duex from Swan Lake, La Bayadere, Romeo & Juliet, and Don Quixote.

The final performance (Saturday, Oct.1), the company will dance in its entirety Prokofieff's "Romeo & Juliet."

The Moscow Classical Ballet, the brain-child of Igor Moiseyev, was organized more than 20 years ago. This was his attempt to preserve and promote the art of classical dance.

Today, the Moscow Classical Ballet, under the direction of Natalya Kasatkina and Vladimir Vasiliev, both former Bolshoi Ballet greats, has achieved national theater status in the USSR, the highest status for an arts group there. According to its directors, this company is a "specialized ballet theater." The aim of the dance company is to show the widest possible panorama of ballet.

The Moscow has won 11 gold medals and two silver medals in recent years at national and international competitions, while three of its dancers are recipients of the highest prize of the Paris Dance Academy. Many of these dancers also perform with the Bolshoi Ballet, another leading force in Russian Ballet.

In addition, the Symphony Season will feature three pianists — making this the first season to do so in one series. The September concert will open with the triumphal return of Russian, Alexander Slobodyanik. Horacio Guitierrez will grace El Paso's stage January 1989, while the closing concert will host Mark Zeltser in Rachmaninoff's "Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini."

The El Paso Symphony Orchestra will perform under the batons of two guest conductors — another first for the symphony. Guest conductor Christian Tiemeyer will share the excitement of music with guest violist Kim Kashkashian in October. Leo Dreihuys, brings his baton from the Charlotte Symphony to direct the El Paso Symphony and Italian-born violinist, Uto Ughi in February.

In November, the Symphony will perform an all orchestral evening, featuring principals Richard Lambrecht, John Groves and Ruben Smith in "Concertino for Two Horns" by Kahlau. David Schrader, Principal keyboardist with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, returns for an encore performance.

One of North America's finest brass quintet, "Empire Brass," will be featured in March. This young, prestigious group originated on the campus of Tanglewood. As a tribute to El Paso's own University, the March concert is dedicated to UTEP.

Festivities are planned to honor those who have supported both the symphony and university. As a part of this tribute a Master Class for all brass students will be conducted by the Empire Brass. This class will be held on Saturday, March 18 at UTEP. Those interested in participating need to contact the Symphony office after Oct. 1.

Tickets are available for the Ballet and the Season, starting as low as $25. Call the Symphony for more information, 532-8707.

The bidding:

| North | East | South | West |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 ♢ | Dbl | Pass | 1 ♡ |
| 3 ♢ | Pass | 3 NT | Pass |
| Pass | Pass | | |

Opening lead: Four of ♡

Each defender sees only half his side's assets, so the members of the partnership must cooperate to exchange information. And each must give the other every chance to convey that information.

South's decision to bid three no trump was a shot in the dark. However, you can't win at bridge if you do not gamble once in a while, and we like his action.

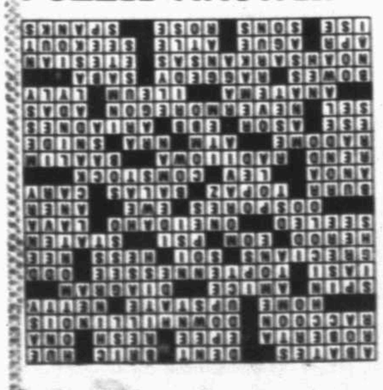

West led the four of hearts and East grabbed his ace. It was obvious that, if declarer ever gained the lead in any suit other than diamonds, there were nine tricks there for the taking. So at trick two East laid down the king of spades; West followed suit with the three. East decided that his partner was following with a low card, so he reverted to a heart. Declarer was not interested in the finesse. He rose with the king and reeled off his nine tricks with alacrity.

Obviously, a spade continuation would have allowed the defenders to beat the contract. How was East to know?

First, the fact that the two of spades had not appeared should have been grounds for suspicion—had declarer been falsecarding to encourage a spade continuation, he surely would have selected some card higher than the four. But East could have checked on his partner's intentions by continuing with the ace of spades—completely safe in view of dummy's doubleton. When partner completes an echo with the deuce, all is clear. A third round of spades allows West to gain the lead for the club shift that guarantees a one-trick set.

Ballet dancers

Ballet Hispanico of New York will perform at 8:15 p.m. Saturday at the Lubbock Memorial Civic Center Theatre. The dance performance will be the grand finale of the fourth annual "West Texas Fiestas del Llano," held Thursday through Saturday at the Civic Center and sponsored, in part, by Civic Lubbock, Inc. Tickets may be purchased at the Texas Tech University Center Ticket Booth and Sears in Lubbock. All seats are reserved. For more information call 1-742-3610 or 1-762-2878.

Fiesta will be held at Fort Concho

From Staff Reports

SAN ANGELO — Fiestas Patrias, celebration of tradition and country, takes place Thursday and Friday at historic Fort Concho in San Angelo.

Members of the Southside Lions and Lionesses Clubs in conjunction with Fort Concho will celebrate "Diez y seis de Septiembre" (the 16 of September) with the traditional 178-year-old "Grito de Delores" (Cry of Delores) first issued in 1810 by Father Hidalgo as he called for a new nation to be formed free of Spanish rule, Mexico.

Co-chairpersons Bill Najara and Juanita Criado plan to center all community activity around this historical re-enactment, plus fill 80 food booths with a wide range of Mexican food, provide free entertainment on center stage and organize street dances with music by "Los Tejanos" both evenings.

As a special events on Thursday, 20 young women age 17 to 20 will compete for two $1,000 scholarships and the title of "La Perla de las Fiestas Patrias." Judged on poise, presentation and knowledge of hispanic heritage, the two recipients will be announced by a panel of judges at the conclusion of the La Perla Pageant.

Over 100 costumed singers and dancers will perform "Viva Mexico! Viva America!," at 7 p.m. Friday.

A favorite Fiestas Patrias tradition, the pageant recounts the early history of Mexico and its people plus the history of Hispanics in San Angelo and the Concho Valley.

New to the two day festival this year is the Ballet Azteca from Cuidad Juarez, Mexico. This troop of 20 young adults will dance and sing to traditional music during the opening ceremony, the El Grito, on the free stage and as a new act in the historical pageant. Through careful attention to authentic costume, lyrics and dance movements Ballet Azteca authentically portrays the beauty and rich cultural heritage of Mexico.

Organizers plan to host between 10,000 and 15,000 participants on the four acre parade ground at the fort.

Museum to display Florence paintings

From Staff Reports

HOUSTON — The Museum of Fine Arts, Houston, is one of only two museums in the United States to receive an exhibition of 30 portraits of painters from the magnificent Uffizi Gallery in Florence.

The exhibition, "Painters by Painters: Portraits from the Uffizi Gallery," on view at the National Academy of Design in New York through July, marks the first time the portraits have been on public view outside Florence.

The exhibition, which opened Aug. 13, runs through Oct. 23 and is made possible by United Technologies Corporation.

The thirty painting included in the exhibition which date from the Renaissance to the early 20th century are from the Uffizi's collection of more than 1,200 artists' portraits — the largest collection of its kind in Europe.

" 'Painters by Painters' is the first full-scale loan exhibition ever organized by the Uffizi Gallery, and we are very fortunate to be able to present it in our city," said George Shackelford, associate curator of European painting and sculpture, The Museum of Fine Arts, Houston. "These great portraits give us a chance to see artists — both famous and little known — as they saw themselves."

In preparation for the exhibition, all 30 paintings were restored by the Uffizi. United Technologies contributed toward restoration of six of the 30 works.

Spanning nearly four centuries, the exhibition ranges in time from Andrea del Sarto's 1516 portrait of an artist to a 1912 self-portrait by Walter Crane. Twenty-eight of the paintings are self-portraits, most of them showing the artists at work in their studio environments.

"Painters by Painters" presents portraits by Italian artists of the Renaissance and Baroque periods such as Frederico Barocci, Annibale Carracci, Domenichino, and Luca Giordano.

The Museum of Fine Arts, Houston is open 10 a.m.- 5 p.m. Tuesday-Saturday; 5 p.m.-9 p.m. Thursday evenings; and 12:15 p.m.- 6 p.m. Sundays.

Rafting easy on Rogue River

By SCOTT LaFEE
Copley News Service

The raft was heavy with passengers. The passengers were heavy with anticipation. For a moment, both hung on the lip of the rapids, green and roiling.

Then, with a stroke of the oars, raft and cargo plunged over the edge, past the boulders and into the placid waters below.

So much for Grave Creek, a mere moment of terror but not nearly so ominous as its name. Why do they always give rapids such foreboding names?

"Like Widowmaker and Jose's Last Breath," observed Gordon Henley of Fullerton, Calif., as we drifted downstream.

Rafting the Rogue River lends itself to idle speculation. Unlike other rivers where the rapids have earned their names, the Rogue is a misnomer. For 215 miles, from south-central Oregon to the coast, it generally rolls along with just enough stretches of white water to keep the senses swimming.

The attraction of the Rogue is that you can see miles of magnificently wild scenery without carrying 50 pounds of food, clothing and shelter on your back.

The rafting is even easier when you let someone else do the rowing, as we did recently on a four-day trip down the Rogue. We hired a river outfitter to organize our trip and they provided all the equipment (rafts, waterproof duffel bags, food) and the guides — youthful sorts who would do the rowing and set up camp and cook the meals.

The name of Oregon's Rogue River is a misnomer. Though there is white water, it gently rolls along. The attraction is the wild scenery. Here, rafters row through Blossom Bar Rapids.

Canada trip delight for railroad buffs, admirers of scenery

By JOHN ENGSTROM
Hearst News Service

With a couple of traveling companions named Bullet Nose Betty and Royal Hudson, you can expect to blow off a little steam on a memorable journey.

Those two colorfully named steam locomotives, plus a third called Consolidation, will provide the power for "The Great Canadian Steam Railway Excursion" on a triangle loop through British Columbia and Alberta Oct. 21-25.

Traveling only during daylight hours, the excursion departs from Vancouver, with overnights at hotels in Kamloops, Jasper, Prince George and 100 Mile House before returning to North Vancouver. It's a 1,200-mile dream trip for railroad buffs and lovers of gorgeous scenery.

Each day a pair of the engines will pull a complement of passenger coaches in a "double-headed" steam-powered trip showcasing some of the finest country in the Canadian west — Fraser and Thompson canyons, Mount Robson, Jasper National Park, the Cariboo country, Seton and Anderson lakes and Howe Sound.

Seventeen passenger cars carrying 600 riders will make the trip from Vancouver to Jasper, where 10 ViaRail coaches will be dropped off. The remaining seven Royal Hudson coaches, with 250 on board, will make the rest of the trip back to Vancouver.

The cost of the full trip is $1,258 (U.S.), per person, double occupancy; $170 extra for a single supplement. If you have limited time or funds, you can take the Vancouver-to-Jasper portion — two days and two nights — for $549 per person, double; $85 single supplement.

All tour packages include rail transportation, meals, hotel accommodations, tips, entertainment and transfers. The only extras you'll run into are personal items such as a bar tab, or your return from Jasper if you take the short portion.

Newport path may be part of park system

By KIMBERLY M. SHEARIN

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — After years of wear and vandalism, a historic path that offers spectacular ocean views and a chance to peek at Newport's famed mansions may someday become a national park.

The fight to revitalize the centuries-old Cliff Walk has sparked the attention of a U.S. senator, the National Park Service and state and local officials.

The 3.5-mile public path, which draws 600,000 visitors a year, has needed a facelift for a long time. Dating back to the 1640s, the path sustained serious damage during the 1938 and 1954 hurricanes. While the walk begins as a smooth concrete pathway, visitors in some particularly worn areas have to leap from rock to rock.

Some walls and part of the walkway are adorned with fading graffiti. On one side, a steep wall of rocks leads directly to rocky shores and the water below. On the other, sweeping lawns lead to Newport's historical estates.

In October, the U.S. Senate authorized $55,000 to study the possibility of including the Cliff Walk in the National Park System.

Charles Tracy, a landscape architect at the National Park Service who started the study in mid-April, said he is focusing on the natural and historical significance of the walk. He also plans to develop a series of management alternatives. The study should be complete later this month, he said.

Tracy recently asked city and state officials what they valued most about the Cliff Walk — its proximity to the mansions or its view of the ocean. He found they were fond of both.

"That was almost unanimous," he said. "The Cliff Walk provides a variety of walking experiences."

One possibility, he said, is to split the path into different trails for novice and expert hikers.

"I think it's a beautiful place...it's a resource that has a lot of potential," he said.

Secretary of State Kathleen Connell agrees.

"It is, in my view, one of the great natural wonders of Rhode Island. It's a very unique structure," she said.

But the closeness of the Cliff Walk to the mansions has caused some problems because portions of it are on mansion properties.

The mansion owners have a right to their privacy, Connell said, and some have complained about tourists peering in their windows.

The federal legislation to study the path was introduced by Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., whose home is near the Cliff Walk. He was approached by Newport City Councilman Ronald Dick and other residents interested in repairing the structure.

According to Dick, 32 or more estates and a hotel-restaurant line the Cliff Walk. Of those, four are open to the public and the rest are privately owned.

Since some tourists don't know where the Cliff Walk ends and the back yards begin, he said, picnics have been spread on private lawns and properties have been explored.

"Those are problems that can be addressed with intelligent landscaping of the walk..." he said.

But his biggest worry is who would be liable now if someone fell and hurt himself on the walk, he said.

If the structure became part of the National Park Service, Dick explained, there would be no question of liability. For now, however, the structure should be as safe and enjoyable as possible, he said.
