Hunt continues for earthquake survivors

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Survivors of the two killer earthquakes that left much of this city in ruins buried their dead and continued the desperate search for survivors today, but hope of finding many more alive ebbed as the hours passed.

Mayor Ramon Aguirre's office said Sunday night that 1,952 people were known to have died in the quakes that jolted central Mexico last Thursday and Friday, toppling buildings and leaving the heart of this capital city in shambles.

Spokesman Humberto Romero said the number of missing is estimated at 2,000, many of whom are believed dead and entombed under collapsed and crumbled buildings.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Dan Lawler said four Americans had been confirmed killed in the quakes, which measured 7.8 and 7.3 on the Richter scale. Nine Americans were missing, he said.

Over the weekend, rescue workers from the United States, Canada, France and West Germany flew in to join their Mexican counterparts, many who have been working nonstop since the first quake struck at morning rush hour on Thursday.

World leaders including Pope John Paul II sent condolences and offers of aid. First Lady Nancy Reagan was scheduled to fly from Washington today to inspect the shattered Mexican capital.

Under the eerie glow of arc lights, rescue operations continued overnight in the ruins of the Hotel Regis. Firefighters, soldiers and sailors hefted crumbled blocks of concrete, seeking bodies or signs of life.

"I suppose there might still be 100 people still in there," said one firefighter, who refused to give his name. "Nobody really knows for sure how many."

As the teams worked, wisps of smoke from smouldering fires beneath the rubble wafted into the air.

Mayor Aguirre has said more than 400 buildings were destroyed or damaged by the two quakes. There were unconfirmed reports from newspapers and rescue workers that officials planned to raze hundreds of structures feared near collapse or believed to contain decaying bodies that might trigger an epidemic.

Earthquake 'terrifying' experience for reporter

By MIKE COCHRAN
Associated Press Writer

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The parrot probably provided the first clue, squawking and fluttering about in its cage hysterically.

A silly bird.

We laughed and ignored him, and our host in the penthouse apartment mixed a fresh round of drinks.

A New York colleague named Jules Loh and I were taking a nighttime break from coverage of the killer earthquake that had crippled the Mexican capital 36 hours earlier.

Within moments, we would experience first hand the terror we had attempted to describe through the words of others.

We had climbed nine flights of stairs to the apartment of Eloy Aguilar, the Associated Press bureau chief in Mexico City, and his wife Venie was now describing the chilling events of the Thursday morning earthquake.

It was not her first, but it had been her scariest.

Outside, the night lights of the stricken city glowed through a haze of smoke and smog, and the sounds of police and ambulance sirens filtered upward from the streets below.

Not long after the parrot's outcry, the leaves on the indoor plants began to move as though caressed by some phantom breeze.

Mubarak likely to renew call for U.S., PLO talks

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt, the leader of the only Arab country to make peace with Israel, is expected to renew his call for a U.S. dialogue with the Palestine Liberation Organization in meetings with President Reagan and other administration officials.

Mubarak, who arrived Saturday, planned to see Reagan this afternoon. He also had meetings with Secretary of State George Shultz, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, U.S. Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter and M. Peter McPherson, the director of the U.S. Agency for International Development, before flying to New York tonight.

The United States, by honoring a 1975 pledge to Israel, is sticking to its policy of refusing to negotiate with the PLO until it accepts the Jewish state's right to exist.

Britain broke ranks last week as Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher said her government would meet with two PLO officials "as soon as that can be arranged" in order to promote a plan worked out by King Hussein of Jordan with PLO chairman Yasser Arafat.

But a senior Reagan administration official said that was not the "guideline" the United States intended to follow in pursuit of Arab-Israeli peace talks.

"We are interested in getting the message out our terms are the same as in 1975," said the official, who demanded anonymity. "We're not going to make them any easier or any harder."

Under the 11-year-old U.S. policy, the PLO must publicly acknowledge Israel's rights before gaining American recognition as having a role to play at the peace table.

Mubarak, on a visit here in March, called dramatically for a U.S.-PLO dialogue at the end of his talks with Reagan. The proposal was immediately rejected. As he left, the Egyptian leader said the administration had adopted "a defeatist attitude."

Despite differences on the PLO, which has murdered Israeli diplomats, farmers, athletes and school children, Mubarak is on easy terms with the United States.

Delivery of a special $250 million gift from the U.S. government was timed to his visit. The aim is to assist the flagging Egyptian economy, but also to keep Cairo lined up with the United States in the sensitive Middle East. This year Egypt is receiving another $2.31 billion in U.S. military and economic aid.

The Hussein-Arafat plan calls for several meetings between the United States and a mixed Jordanian-Palestinian delegation before peace talks with Israel can begin. Also, the king and the PLO chairman want the negotiations held at an international conference, with the Soviet Union participating.

The administration is willing to meet with Palestinians, but Shultz has vetoed some Palestinians on a list compiled by Hussein and Arafat because the nominees are closely identified with the PLO.

Israel, meanwhile, is willing to meet with Palestinians who live in the area and are not associated with the Aarafat organization.

Shultz also is opposed to bringing the Soviet Union into the negotiations. Their participation "would add to the trouble," the senior U.S. official said Friday at the White House.

On this issue, Mubarak is closer to the U.S. position. He would have outside parties become involved in peace talks at the conclusion of the negotiations.

But on the PLO, Egypt is solidly lined up with Hussein and Arafat.

Foreign Minister Esmet Abdel-Meguid, who is accompanying Mubarak on the trip, said earlier this month in Cairo that the PLO has the exclusive right to chose Palestinian delegates for peace talks.

New York to host U.N. celebration

NEW YORK (AP) — An army of security forces prepared what one agent called his agency's largest protective undertaking as international leaders began arriving today to commemorate the 40th anniversary of the United Nations.

At least 90 heads of government and more than 100 foreign ministers are expected during the next three months to mark the U.N. anniversary, with the peak of the celebation coming on Oct. 24.

"It's the sheer numbers that make it extraordinary," said Gillian Martin Sorensen, New York's liaison with the United Nations. "It is the largest gathering of high officials in one city at one time that has ever happened."

The session officially began last week, but the first major officials were scheduled to arrive at the United Nations today, with addresses by Secretary of State George Shultz and the presidents of Brazil and Peru.

Secret Service officials said up to 1,500 of the agency's 2,000 agents would be assigned to New York for all or part of the next five weeks.

"This is the largest protective undertaking in the history of the Secret Service," said George J. Opfer, acting special agent in charge of the New York field office.

City police officials said they also may have to transfer more than 3,000 officers to security detail in midtown Manhattan, thinning out patrols in other parts of the city.

"We could have days with 100 demonstrations going on at one time and 30 motorcades converging on one spot," said Assistant Chief Gerard J. Kerins, who will direct the New York City Police Department's security efforts.

"It's a tremendous amount of security," added Officer John Cummings of the police Harbor Unit, which is stationing patrol boats off the U.N. complex on the East River and dispatching divers daily to search the riverfront for bombs.

Police are coordinating the effort with the Secret Service, the State Department, the Coast Guard, foreign nations' security squads, hotel detectives and the United Nations' 250-member police force, which called seven retirees back to work for the session.

Officials said the security was commensurate with the caliber of leaders who are expected, including Prime Ministers Rajiv Gandhi of India and Margaret Thatcher of Great Britain, Poland's Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski and Pakistan's Gen. Mohammed Zia ul-Haq.

Libyan Col. Moammar Khadafy also may visit, and at the main event, the Oct. 24 celebration, President Reagan is to address the General Assembly.

Even Mayor Edward I. Koch, who has called the United Nations "a cesspool," will hold a reception for the visiting dignitaries next month — the first U.N. party he's thrown in eight years as mayor.

Another welcome will come from hotelkeepers, shepherding dignitaries and their entourages into some of the city's costliest rooms. Forty-eight delegation heads are to stay at the Waldorf-Astoria, where suites cost up to $2,100 a night, and 30 are booked at the United Nations Plaza Hotel.

One of the greatest logistical problems is moving those diplomats safely around Manhhattan, and the authorities have set up a computerized post to sort out the official motorcades expected to tie East Side traffic in knots.

"You're going to have 100 potentates coming, in all shapes and sizes," said Victor Ross, spokesman for the city's Traffic Bureau. "Which spells trouble with a capital T, as far as traffic is concerned."

Judge to hear motion on new trial for Skelton

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — District Judge Tryon Lewis late last week issued a bench warrant to return convicted murderer John C. Skelton to Odessa for a hearing Tuesday on a motion for a new trial.

On July 8, 1983 a 161st District Court jury of six men and six women sentenced the then-54-year-old Skelton to death by lethal injection for the April 1983 bomb death of 46-year-old Joe Lee Neal.

Almost two years later, on June 6, 1985, Skelton's Austin attorney, David L. Botsford, filed a motion for a new trial contending, in part, that the Ector County District Attorney's office, representing the State of Texas, was "in constructive, if not actual, possession of material evidence exculpatory to defendant prior to the trial of this case."

Botsford further contended the state violated Skelton's Texas and U.S. constitutional rights by its "failure to disclose exculpatory evidence" despite court orders to do so.

The Austin attorney claims the exculpatory evidence "would have created a reasonable doubt that did not otherwise exist as to defendant's personal involvement" in the death of Neal.

The evidence referred to by Botsford is contained in an affidavit submitted to support the motion for a new trial.

In the affidavit, signed June 4, 1985, Bob Byard of Odessa stated he was at Furr's Cafeteria, located at Grandview and Brentwood, the evening of April 23, 1982, the night before Neal was killed when a bomb placed in his pickup truck exploded. Neal, who lived at 3405 Brentwood Drive, had parked his vehicle on the parking lot across the street from his home.

Byard states that, as he entered the Furr's parking lot, he observed a two-toned red pickup he had seen parked there on at least two previous occasions.

Byard said there was a vacant parking space next to the pickup but, because of the way it and the car next to it were parked, he decided he'd have to enter the space from a different angle and drove down the line of cars to turn around.

As he approached the parking space, he said, a big white pickup he had seen parked on Brentwood moved onto the parking lot and stopped behind the two-toned red pickup, blocking him from the parking space.

Byard said he found another parking space, parked, and went into Furr's Cafeteria to pick up a food order for his family. When he came out, he said, he "noticed a man standing by the (news)paper machine looking out into the parking lot in the direction of the red two-toned pickup."

According to Byard's affidavit, he started to move toward his car, noticing the white pickup was still parked behind the two-toned red pickup. As he stepped off the sidewalk, he said, the man who had been at the newspaper machine yelled at him and came running toward him.

"Are you from here?" Byard said the man asked. Byard replied he was, expecting the man to ask directions. But, instead, the man asked if it had rained in the last 24-hours. He told the man it hadn't rained in that part of Odessa.

Byard said the man told him, "We came through Marfa on our way here to do a job and we spent all day in Marfa getting ready to come here." Byard said as the man talked he kept looking in the general direction of the two-toned red pickup. He said "he got curious since the conversation seemed pretty strange" and turned to look at the pickup too.

"All of a sudden," Byard said, "a man appeared next to the driver's side of the two-toned red pickup, like he had just stood up from bending down next to it." The man looked down, brushed his clothes, glanced in both directions, then started walking down the back row of cars.

Byard said the man got into an old dark blue or green car with a white vinyl roof that was parked next to the passenger side of his own car. He said he turned around to tell the first man he had to go but the man had disappeared.

He said he heard about the explosion at Furr's the next morning, but "what I had seen that night didn't immediately register as possibly being important until he (the neighbor) said a pickup was blown up." Byard said "I then concluded what I had seen the evening before was indeed important."

Saying he was concerned about getting involved, that he and his wife were scared, Byard added he waited "two or three weeks" after

Six thousand people were injured in the jolts that devastated much of the downtown area and destroyed homes and buildings throughout the capital city's metropolitan area of 17 million.

President Miguel de la Madrid has acknowledged rescue efforts had lacked coordination. But he said, "The action will be more organized in the coming days when the capital of the republic begins to return to normal and the services are re-established as soon as possible."

However, despite any lack of organization, rescue workers — most of them volunteers risking their lives to save others — gouged their way through rubble to reclaim bodies and hunt those who survived.

"Still, there are those who live," read a six-inch headline in Sunday's Excelsior newspaper.

At the pile of rubble that once had been the 14-story Nuevo Leon apartment building, crowds waited in silence Sunday as rescuers brought out a woman who had been buried alive for more than three days.

"She lives!" the shout went up as the weary, dust-shrouded woman was brought to an ambulance.

Vaccination clinics have been set up to immunize people against the possibility of disease. Red Cross officials said 5,000 people in the heavily damaged Tlatelolco area alone had been inoculated against typhoid and tetanus since Saturday.

For many, Sunday was another saddening, tiring day of searching temporary morgues set up throughout the city to find loved ones.

Thousands, many wearing masks to filter out the smell of death and possible disease, filed slowly past decomposing bodies packed in dry ice, looking for friends and relatives.

Sunday was also a day for many Mexicans to give thanks for surviving, or to mourn their dead.

At the basilica of Our Lady of Guadalupe, thousands clustered to pray and hear the priest's words of comfort. "My brothers," the priest said slowly, "this is not a punishment."

Many Mexicans found shelter at schools or other public buildings because their homes had been destroyed or damaged so greatly they felt it too risky to return. Others slept in parks or on the debris-clogged streets.

Water main in the southern part of the city were damaged by the quakes and some parts of the city were without water, but the mayor said 1,000 tank trucks were on the streets distributing water.

A presidential spokesman, Ricardo Ampudia, said Sunday that 5 percent of the capital remained without electricity and that 20 percent continued to lack drinking water.

City officials continued to worry about natural gas leaks which in some sections caused explosions that leveled homes already crumbled by the quakes.

In some neighborhoods, police stopped cars and pounded on doors of homes to tell those inside to shut off gas lines to avoid the possibility of an explosion.

Nancy Reagan to meet with survivors

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nancy Reagan, volunteering a gesture of U.S. friendship towards Mexico as it seeks life amid the rubble, is meeting the country's president and survivors of its twin earthquakes in a three-hour visit to Mexico City.

The first lady left Washington today on a direct flight to the battered city, where her first stop was to be a visit with President Miguel de la Madrid. She was carrying a letter to De la Madrid from President Reagan.

Then, Mrs. Reagan and Paloma Cordero de la Madrid, the Mexican first lady, were to tour an emergency shelter and a hospital.

Mrs. Reagan was accompanied by Elliott Abrams, assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, and M. Peter McPherson, director of the U.S. Agency for International Development.

At the White House, spokesman Larry Speakes said Mrs. Reagan's visit was intended to "express sympathy and solidarity that all Americans feel for Mexico at this difficult time."

Beforehand, Elaine Crispen, Mrs. Reagan's press secretary, quoted her as saying, "We're neighbors. I want to extend a loving hand."

The first lady has been assured that her visit would not be a burden to those organizing rescue efforts, Mrs. Crispen said.

"We would not be going if there was any hint that we would be in the way," Mrs. Crispen said. "I think that we are welcome."

Speakes said Mrs. Reagan would make an initial report on her trip in a phone call to Reagan. From Mexico City, she was flying first to Phoenix, Ariz., to visit her mother, and then on to Los Angeles. She will return to Washington on Friday.

The president has extended the offer of substantial U.S. aid to the Mexican government and is ready to move if any new requests are made, the spokesman said.

Mrs. Crispen said the first lady volunteered to make the trip after viewing scenes of the devastation on television. The president made the surprise announcement of her plans at the end of his radio address on Saturday.

State Department officials have asked that would-be volunteers stay out of the disaster area. But Reagan administration officials say Mrs. Reagan's visit has been cleared with the Mexican government and therefore is proper.

Last Friday, Abrams sharply criticized San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros for planning a trip to Mexico.

Cisneros went ahead with his 15-hour trip, despite the official's objections. On Sunday, the mayor and his largely Hispanic city sent a Boeing 707 to Mexico City loaded with four tons of food and 18½ tons of medical supplies.

Dan Lawler, a State Department spokesman, said Sunday that U.S. government officials are standing by on a round-the-clock basis to meet any further requests for aid.

Lawler said the United States has tried to fulfill two main requests from the Mexicans — one focusing on materials to help demolish damaged buildings and pull people from the rubble, and a second geared toward providing shelter and seeing to the needs of the homeless.

"We've been so swamped responding, that we haven't accounted for the cost of what we have provided so far," Lawler said.

Cochran

At 7:37 p.m. Mexico City time, the second earthquake hit.

The apartment building began to sway and shake and the floor trembled beneath us. The Aguilars knew at once what was happening and as Eloy started to the telephone, Venie told Jules and me to take cover under a doorway.

An instant later, the lights went out.

In the dark, I crawled across the floor, certain the building would break apart at any moment. I wondered if it would collapse or explode or maybe topple.

As I groped toward a doorway leading to the kitchen, I thought fleetingly of my family back in Fort Worth, and I realized I was an awful long way from home.

I was struck by the utter helplessness of the situation. There was no place to go and nothing to do. This was surely a strange way to die.

My life did not flash before my eyes like it was supposed to. Instead, my mind's eye could see only the crumbled, smoking buildings of central Mexico City and the awesome death and destruction I had observed since arriving here 24 hours earlier.

Now I was no longer an observer. I was a participant.

And I was terrified.

• • •

As the chartered Lear jet flew into Mexico City Thursday evening, I peered through a window at the sprawling city below and marveled that 18 million people could live in one place.

That's more than the entire population of Texas.

I was surrounded by a team of Fort Worth Star-Telegram reporters and photographers who were taking notes and shooting aerial pictures in the final half hour or so before nightfall.

We were wondering also where the devastation was that we'd heard about, for it was certainly not visible as we descended into the Mexico City airport.

We soon found out.

I had chased hurricanes down the Texas coast and into Louisiana and covered tornadoes in Lubbock, Wichita Falls and other Texas cities. I'd seen floods and plane crashes and reported on mass murders and a presidential assassination.

But nothing prepared me for an earthquake, particularly a disaster of this magnitude in a foreign city with a foreign language and a foreign lifestyle.

The next day, the American ambassador would say the death count could reach 20,000. That's about four times as many people who live in the West Texas town of Stamford where I grew up.

Commandeering a taxi and driver, I accompanied Jack Tinsley and Gayle Reaves of the Star-Telegram on a tour of the central business district, the oldest and hardest hit part of the city.

Among our first stops was an insurance building, where a rescue team was searching through the rubble for the bodies of two women feared trapped when the structure collapsed.

A young man in a military uniform said in halting English that four or five persons died on an upper floor.

It got worse.

At what once had been a hotel, smoke wafted from the debris and a uniformed man with a mask over his mouth said 20 persons had been pulled out but that an estimated 115 people remained inside.

Perhaps he exaggerated, but I knew for certain that nobody still in that building could survive.

I saw the grand old Regis Hotel, once among the finest in Mexico, as it slowly burned to the ground. Firemen could do nothing but attempt to contain the blaze.

Flames within the dying landmark cast an orange glow at glassless windows and created an image not unlike a giant Halloween pumpkin.

"It was a symbol of Mexico because it was so old," said a man who identified himself as a coin dealer whose shop was nearby.

Pointing to where a hotel wall had collapsed on a theater and restaurant, he said sadly:

"This was a very important corner in Mexico."

I watched scores of volunteers attempting to free four or five employees of a television station, where at least 19 reportedly died.

"They are still alive," a young medical student explained. "We can hear their shouts and screams from the building."

A nearby television tower had fallen on a school building, crushing it, but the death toll was believed to be minimal.

At a temporary morgue, bodies of victims, stripped of their clothing and identified by numbers, lay side by side on the blood-stained concrete floors of a government building.

Sacks of ice had been placed on the torsos of the victims, which included men, women and small children. The grim operation seemed terribly impersonal, except when friends or family identified a loved one.

A surgeon who had come to the morgue in search of a relative said a number of his medical colleagues had been killed and injured when the Mexican equivalent of a doctors' building collapsed near his hospital.

At least 10 died, 30 were rescued and perhaps 50 or 60 were unaccounted for, he said.

"The (medical) people who could have helped have been killed or injured," he said solemnly.

As the night wore on, I was struck by two recurring thoughts. First, the earthquake inflicted incredible damage on hundreds of buildings, yet spared other structures that sat side by side, across the street or around the corner.

It reminded me of the selective destruction of the Wichita Falls, Texas, tornado in 1979, although magnified many times over.

Secondly, despite the great loss of life and property, and the widespread suffering, life outside the stricken areas went on in something close to normal.

Until a governmental ban on the sale of alcoholic beverages was imposed Friday night, bars and restaurants did a booming business. To some extent, it was almost festive, as if the people of Mexico City were celebrating life in the face of death.

At the Camino Real and El Presidente Chapultepec hotels, two of the city's finest, bars and restaurants overflowed with people, and the sound of music drowned out the wail of sirens across town.

Mexican residents strolled along the main thoroughfares such as Paseo de la Reforma or huddled in such favorite gathering spots as Chapultepec Park.

By contrast, there was no gaiety to be found in Lubbock and Wichita Falls after disasters there, although both cities pale in size to the Mexican capital.

Long after midnight Thursday, I caught a taxi to the El Presidente Chapultepec Hotel, where The Associated Press had set up makeshift headquarters on the 27th floor. Our office on Paseo de la Reforma was heavily damaged and the building sealed off.

The earthquake had wrecked the Mexican communications system as well, and the problem facing the AP and other news organizations was getting their stories, photographs and television film out of the country.

At one point, I stumbled across a Texan working in Mexico for Bankers Trust of New York, which had what may have been the only long distance telephone line in town. He made it available to the AP, which reduced the need for shuttle plane flights in and out of Texas.

By late Friday, I was more than a little exhausted and by all means responsive to Eloy Aguilar's invitation to join him at his apartment for a drink, even if it meant walking up nine flights of stairs.

After all, the worst surely was over.

Only the parrot knew otherwise.

the incident and called the FBI in Midland. An FBI agent, whose name he couldn't remember, told him he had heard about the case, but the FBI had no jurisdiction, and that it was being handled by Odessa police. The agent also said he had heard they had a suspect they were pretty sure had done it, but suggested Byard talk to Odessa police, Byard said.

"He (the agent) was reassuring and for awhile," Byard said, "I didn't worry about it." But, he stated, what he had seen "kept eating on my mind."

It was not until just before Skelton was to go to trial, when he saw a picture of him in the newspaper, that he realized Skelton was neither of the men he had seen April 23, 1982.

Byard said he finally called Odessa police and "talked to a lady who is affiliated with I think, Jerry Smith, or one of the other detectives."

The woman took Byard into an office and they talked for awhile, Byard said, but she didn't take a statement, but she kept asking if the pickup he had seen was blue and if he could be mistaken about the color. Byard said the woman appeared to lose interest when he kept insisting the pickup he had seen was white. She didn't give him a business card, but took his name, address and telephone number and said detectives would get in contact with him if they were interested.

"No one from the Odessa Police Department or the Ector County District Attorney's office ever contacted me," Byard said.

Byard also said, after the trial started, he contacted Odessa attorney Cliff Hardwick, who was representing Skelton at that time, and talked with one of his secretaries. He states that Hardwick "got back in touch with me in early January 1985."

In the new trial motion, Botsford said, in reviewing records in the Skelton case, he found a notation of the phone conversation between Byard and Hardwick, then recalled Jim Vollers, who had previously represented Skelton, had mentioned the conversation to him.

Botsford said he contacted Byard and asked if he would sign a statement and Byard agreed to do so.

Because Byard talked with Odessa police, this put the State of Texas "in constructive, if not actual, possession possession of material evidence exculpatory to defendant (Skelton) prior to the trial of this case," which should have been made available to the defense.

Vollers, an Austin attorney and a former Texas Court of Criminal Appeals judge who represented Skelton after his conviction, sought a new trial during a hearing before now-retired Judge R.L. McKim Sept. 20, 1983, based on errors that occurred in the course of the trial, but McKim rejected Vollers' motion. He submitted an appeal to the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals that is still pending.

The day Skelton was sentenced to death in 161st District Court the Ector County grand jury indicted him on four counts of capital solicitation of murder. The indictments alleged Skelton tried to hire his stepson and another man to kill two former business associates.

Aug. 2, 1985, 70th District Court Judge Gene Ater granted a motion Botsford had submitted to the court, seeking to quash the indictments against Skelton. Ater had rejected a similar motion nearly two months earlier.

In the later motion, Botsford contended the indictments were defective because they failed "totally to allege the manner and means allegedly used by the defendant to accomplish the alleged offense, whether it be by written inducement, oral inducement or through an intermediary by either written or oral inducement."

Botsford cited prevailing case law to support his motion. Ater said he had no choice but to dismiss the charges since the district attorney's office could present no controverting case law.

Ater said, however, that his dismissal of the charges did not bar the state from seeking new indictments if it chooses to do so.

The 70th District Court judge had transferred Skelton's capital solicitation trial to Fort Worth. Ater estimated it would have cost the county as much as $100,000 to try all four cases there.

The Carpet Column

Only the very rich can afford cheap carpet.

Cheap carpet may seem to be a good buy because of its low price, but since you buy carpet to make your home more beautiful, and since cheap carpet may not look beautiful for very long, you may dicover that cheap carpet is actually your WORST buy.

Back in the "olden" days, your mother or grandmother or great-grandmother knew to buy the BEST in floorcoverings. She knew that better qualities not only lasted longer, but looked better during their lifetime. Well, things haven't changed that much-better carpet STILL looks better, longer.

Of course, if you're planning to carpet a rental unit, perhaps a cheaper carpet would be the wisest choice, but for your home...well, you deserve the best! You may be surprised that at the House of Carpets, the best costs very little more!

Whether you want better carpet for your home, or cheaper carpet for a rental unit, you need the advice of the carpet specialists at the House of Carpets, Midland's number one name in carpets since 1951. Drop by their store in the Village Shopping Center on West Wall Street, and invest a little of your time to find out which floorcovering is the best for YOU.

Ladies domimate Emmys

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Sonny Crockett, move over. Belker, take a break. It was ladies' night at the Emmys as CBS' Cinderella detective show "Cagney & Lacey" aced NBC's macho "Miami Vice" and "Hill Street Blues."

And the gentle CBS movie, "Do You Remember Love," also about a woman, won as top comedy or drama special at the 37th annual Emmy awards show Sunday night.

Four women picked up Emmys in categories dominated by men in the past.

"Cagney & Lacey," the distaff side of the detective-buddy genre, was named best drama series. It ended a four-year reign by NBC's "Hill Street Blues" and turned aside the challenge by NBC's "Miami Vice."

And an obviously pregnant Tyne Daly — who plays Detective Mary Beth Lacey on the show, juggling family and career — thanked her real-life husband and children, "the ones here already and the one that is coming soon, I hope."

The CBS detective series, which has survived a cast change and a cancelation, won six Emmys.

Joanne Woodward was named best lead actress in "Do You Remember Love," portraying a poet-professor struck down by Alzheimer's disease as she reaches the peak of her creative powers.

Karen Arthur was named best director and Patricia Green as best writer for "Cagney & Lacey."

"I gotta thank my mama," Ms. Arthur said. "She told me when I was a little girl I could do anything I wanted. She was right."

Vickie Patik won an Emmy as best writer for a limited series or special for "Do You Remember Love."

And Rhea Perlman, Carla the barmaid on "Cheers," zinged husband Danny DeVito after collecting her second Emmy in two years for best supporting comedy actress.

Krueger: Mexican people deserve respect

STATE

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The second earthquake to hit Mexico last week may have turned the tide for Mexican officials who were at first reluctant to accept help from other countries, former congressman Bob Krueger says.

"They are an extremely proud people. It is extremely important to show respect for them as a people," he said Sunday on board a Boeing 707 carrying the first planeload of relief supplies from Texas.

Krueger and San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros were appointed by Gov. Mark White last week to head the Texas relief effort for earthquake-ravaged Mexico City.

Despite reports that the Mexican government was not open to aid and a U.S. State Department plea not to go, Cisneros and Krueger went to Mexico City Saturday to pave the way for supplies to be shipped in.

Krueger said he and the mayor were greeted by a high-ranking foreign ministry official who welcomed the Texas aid.

"I think after the second earthquake, they reconsidered holding off accepting aid," said Krueger, former ambassador-at-large to Mexico. "I'm convinced there was not as strong a reluctance to accept assistance as one or two people in Washington felt there was."

The jet Sunday carried 37,000 pounds of medical supplies, excavating equipment, water purification materials and food.

"This is but the first of what we hope will be many signs of friendship from the people of San Antonio to the citizens of Mexico City," Krueger told Humberto Lugo, the director general of the airport.

Lugo, who spoke in Spanish through an interpreter, could not be heard above the airport noise. But Krueger said he responded by saying the Mexican people "were profoundly grateful for this generosity."

Enrique de la Mata, an international Red Cross official from Geneva, said, "I want to express my appreciation to the United States of America people. Their reaction was really generous."

The first cargo flight was sent aboard the Boeing 707 on loan to the Texas relief effort by Skystar International Inc. of Philadelphia. The privately owned company uses the jet, named "Queen of the World," for religious pilgrimages to Europe.

Also making the trip Sunday was Bexar County Judge Tom Vickers, who has coordinated the donations.

He said as many as 1,000 volunteers are ready to go to Mexico City when they are needed. But officials are waiting to see exactly what type of expertise is needed before sending volunteers.

Vickers said the plane will be available to the Texas relief effort for one to two weeks. The jet is scheduled to stop off in Dallas to pick up donations today, then head back to Mexico City via San Antonio, officials said.

Mexico City airport scene of hope, not despair, after quake

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The Mexican flag flew at half-staff at the Mexico City airport Sunday, one of few clues that disaster had struck this city in the past few days.

Earthquakes Thursday and Friday crushed hundreds of buildings and claimed thousands of lives in Mexico City.

But the devastation was not visible at the airport, where airliners loaded with passengers took off and landed as usual.

Instead, there were other signs at the airport that tragedy had struck this city.

Planes loaded with relief supplies from throughout the world arrived all day Sunday.

One of them was a Boeing 707 loaded with 37,000 pounds of medical supplies, excavating equipment, food and other items from the Texas relief effort.

The arrival marked the first of what officials say will be several planeloads of supplies from Texas.

Planes carrying supplies from Italy and McAllen, rested on the cargo apron as the San Antonio jet taxied in for unloading.

Journalists from several countries rushed to the passenger ramp to interview former congressman Bob Krueger and Bexar County Judge Tom Vickers, who accompanied the U.S. supplies.

Krueger, who traveled to Mexico City Saturday to grease the diplomatic channels for the Texas supplies, said he had seen supply planes from Nicaragua, the Dominican Republic, Brazil, Germany and France.

Could El Pasoans need earthquake insurance? Geophysicist says yes

EL PASO (AP) — In a city that was within 200 miles of three large earthquakes in the last 100 years, taking out quake insurance might not be such a far-fetched idea, a geophysicist says.

"There certainly is no reason, geologically, why we couldn't have something closer to us," said Randy Keller of the University of Texas at El Paso.

"In the last 100 years, there have been three large earthquakes all within 200 miles of El Paso, all over 6 on the Richter scale, and that's not exactly a low level of activity," he said.

But Keller said that a geological "likelihood" means only that an earthquake could occur any time in the next million years.

Because of reports about the devastation in Mexico, Keller said, he was not surprised when a woman interested in earthquake insurance called him for copies of the old newspaper articles about the shakings in El Paso.

"I had to tell her in all honesty that it is probably not a bad idea," he said.

Ray Montes, an Allstate Insurance agent at El Paso, said existing home and business protection policies do not cover earthquakes. Montes said he has never heard of earthquake insurance in Texas, and he does not think it is offered.

"Why? Because we haven't had any," Montes said.

But Keller said many El Pasoans should recall the series of tremors that occurred in 1969 and 1972, registering in the range of 3 on the Richter scale.

"They occurred over a period of days," he said. "There was no damage, but people did feel them."

Back in 1931, he said, there was a strong earthquake south of Van Horn with the epicenter near Valentine that registered 6.4 on the Richter scale.

Grand jury will probe 1983 Kilgore killings

KILGORE (AP) — A federal grand jury will convene soon to investigate the 1983 slayings of five people who were abducted from a Kentucky Fried Chicken restaurant, according to a published report.

The Longview Morning Journal reported Saturday that the panel will be convened in Tyler.

The five bodies were found in a row, face down in a grassy area next to a dirt road in Rusk County on Sept. 23, 1983. All had been shot in the head following their abduction from the Kentucky Fried Chicken restaurant in Kilgore around 10:30 p.m., authorities said.

Four of the victims, including two women and two college students, were employees. The fifth was another college student who had dropped by to visit.

Investigators believe one or two of the employees were jumped when they took out the trash, and that the killers then held all five victims at gunpoint as they robbed the restaurant of about $2,000.

"We have issued some subpoenas to the federal grand jury, and right now it would be just considered an investigative grand jury," said an investigator, who asked not to be identified.

The investigator said the grand jury would first review evidence and it is unlikely indictments would be sought during this session.

"When (the jurors) break, it will be at least 30 more days before they meet again," he said.

When indictments are sought, "there'll be many, many people called," he said.

An FBI agent, who asked not to be identified, told the Dallas Morning News that the motive for the killings remains unclear.

"If I were to say just straight robbery I would probably not be totally right," the agent said. "If I were to say robbery for the purpose of purchasing drugs I'd probably be partially correct."

An FBI spokesman said his office has interviewed 50 to 60 persons in the past four months. He said investigators are down to the "nitty gritty," and that they have been able to "get beyond some of the shadow chasing."

When investigators have completed their work, there will be "a large sit-down with prosecutors in Rusk and Gregg counties and the U.S. attorney's office."

"I feel confident this case is going to be solved if things continue as they have," he said.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Tuesday, September 24, 1985

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: A business deal is less risky than you think. Move forward with confidence. Business should be on the move. Financing is easier to obtain. Take advantage of every interesting career opportunity that comes your way. You enjoy tremendous success in December and again in March. Romance could lead to a change in lifestyle. Be sure that marriage is really what you want before making a promise. Family members draw closer together. CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Muppet creator Jim Henson, composer-actor Anthony Newley, Congresswoman Cardiss Collins (D-Ill.), Toronto pitcher Jim Acker, Atlanta Braves infielder Glenn Hubbard, the Expos' Hubie Brooks, author F. Scott Fitzgerald.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Make sure that any increase in spending will result in better service. It would be a mistake to let someone know how much his or her comments bother you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Good friends make up for someone who tries to upset your plans. A love-struck teenager needs understanding, not lectures. Call home more often. Cut back on assignments that sap all your energy.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): If you are living a double life, you had better straighten things out quickly. Someone is on to you. Business requires total concentration. You can get over a hurdle by telling the truth.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Affirmative action will work to your advantage now, even if you are not directly involved. Romance teaches you an important lesson. Writing your feelings in a journal proves cathartic.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): An emotional confrontation will only postpone a decision, not change it. A young person could turn out to be a wily negotiator. Do not count your chickens until they hatch.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Be careful not to take sides in an office war. Remain true to your high ideals. Advance menu planning is the key to better nutrition. Encourage mate to relax at home.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You enjoy the confidence of someone who can help your career. It is fine to ask a question so long as you are diplomatic. What you learn could surprise you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): If you feel uncertain about signing an agreement, seek expert advice. It is possible to breathe new life into a dormant business. Mate has an interesting idea.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be prepared to take on new responsibilities when a company expands. A special project gets the green light. Straighten out a situation that could be misinterpreted. Keep your appointments.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your integrity wins you many friends and admirers. One large question mark remains where a business deal is concerned. Postpone a decision until an advisor can check something for you.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): More and more people line up on your side when a final decision is made. Investigate an unusual career or business opportunity. You find an old romance is alive and well.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Rely on an information system that has served you well in the past. There is no reason for you to take unnecessary risks just because someone else does. Be conservative in money matters.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K106 ♡K9 ◇K763 ♣J854
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South
1 ♡	Dble	?

What action do you take?
A.—Your choices are obvious—either a redouble or a bid of one no trump. A redouble suggests that you might want to double the opponents, which is certainly not the case if they bid spades. Therefore, we would opt for a free bid of one no trump, which shows a fair hand.

Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠9 ♡AQ5 ◇K108765 ♣AK6
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—You would like to make some jump bid to show your strength, but all are flawed. You need a fourth trump to jump to three hearts; your diamonds are not good enough to jump to three diamonds; and your hand is not strong enough for three clubs. While we would not disenfranchise you if you chose three diamonds, we prefer a waiting bid of two clubs. Partner won't pass without four clubs and a very weak hand and, should he bid anything else, you will be ideally placed to direct the auction.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q1087642 ♡A7 ◇A107 ♣9
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
1 NT	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—If you take your distributional values into account, you have the equivalent of an opening bid. Therefore, you want to be in game, and you know where you want to play the hand. Bid four spades. Don't worry about the fact that your suit could be better—partner surely has at least two spades for you.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠95 ♡Q873 ◇AK52 ♣764
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 NT	Pass
3 ♡	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—This is simply a matter of whether you have a slam in hearts, and there is a simple way to tell partner of your interest. You have a maximum no trump and excellent support for partner's second suit, so cue-bid four diamonds. When you later retreat to hearts, partner will know that you have strength in diamonds and fine heart support.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK1065 ♡9875 ◇8 ♣AKJ
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	2 ◇	Dble	2 ♡

What action do you take?
A.—It sounds as if the opponents are in trouble, so don't let them off the hook. Double. Even though you have only four low trumps, East will surely have difficulty managing the hand, and your solid defensive tricks more than compensate for any weakness you have in trumps.

Q.6—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠8 ♡63 ◇KQ1097642 ♣J6
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
3 ◇	3 ♡	Pass	3 ♠
Pass	4 ♠	Dble	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—Don't try to save partner from his presumed folly. While you might have opened four diamonds, still your opening bid told him that you have a weak hand with long diamonds, and that is exactly what you have. Your extra diamond does not justify further action, which will result in a sure loss, when partner has told you that he expects to beat four spades.

Broken-down limousine, imposter top topics backstage at Emmy awards

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — A broken-down limousine, an impostor and the surprisingly poor showing of "Miami Vice" preoccupied discussion backstage at the Emmy awards.

Selleck

While most men wore black tuxedos, David Hasselhoff of "Knight Rider" wore a burgundy striped model, and Tom Selleck of "Magnum P.I." wore a white dinner jacket. Black gowns were the overwhelming favorite of the ladies.

Scuffed up tennis shoes were seen on a half-dozen guests, and actress Cybil Shepherd wore orange Day-Glo Reebok sneakers.

"I think women should have the right to have their feet feel good," she said.

More than 600 reporters jammed four rooms behind the Pasadena Civic Auditorium to record the comments of television's reigning stars.

A desperate Joan Collins of "Dynasty" bummed a cigarette from a radio reporter, then said she attributed her show business success to "my Nolan Miller dresses."

Members of "The Cosby Show" were constantly asked about star Bill Cosby's refusal to compete for an acting Emmy.

"He doesn't feel acting is a competitive field," Jay Sandrich said after picking up his "Cosby" directing Emmy. "We (production people), on the other hand, believe in competition."

Marcy Carsey, producer of "The Cosby Show," said the show centered around Cosby's creativity and humor.

"We thank Bill Cosby, who is the heart and soul of the show," she said.

Sandrich also noted "The Cosby Show" ushered in television's trend toward family situation television.

"In the 1970s it was a time for singles," he said. "Now is the time for families."

Betty Thomas, who plays Lucille Bates on "Hill Street Blues," got up to receive her supporting dramatic actress trophy and had a sudden rush of embarrassment when she arrived on the stage. Someone else had already picked up the trophy, and she said she worried that her name hadn't been called after all.

"I thought I made a mistake," she said backstage. "It was the nightmare you always hear about."

It turned out that an impostor had rushed to the stage to accept the Emmy. He was arrested and booked for investigation of attempted grand theft — a $150 Emmy trophy.

William Daniels, whose portrayal of Dr. Mark Craig won him the best dramatic actor Emmy over Don Johnson of "Miami Vice," went into detail about his broken-down limousine.

"I almost didn't come," he said. "But my wife got another limousine. We didn't arrive until 5:30 p.m., 30 minutes after the show started. We had to wait for a commercial to be seated."

Tyne Daly of "Cagney & Lacey" discussed her pregnancy, saying the baby was due last week.

"My daughter asked if the baby could fall out, and I said I hope so," the actress said, beads of perspiration rising on her face. "There's no problem. I won't be having it here. There will be several hours of labor."

The actress, who plays Mary Beth Lacey on the show, said the script calls for the baby to be born in February.

"Mary Beth's baby is due in February, so I will have to pad out for it," she said.

Prior to the ceremony, the trendy detective series "Miami Vice" was expected to take the bulk of Emmy Awards. Nominated for 15 awards last month, the show took only one Sunday — the supporting actor award for Edward James Olmos — plus three technical awards two weeks ago.

Olmos suggested the show needed to feature more acting.

"It's bordering on style over content," he said. "There is more room for acting on the show."

Fonda

HOLLYWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Actress Jane Fonda says that "Agnes of God" is the best script she has been offered in four years and that she got personal benefits from the film as well.

It gave her a chance to work with Anne Bancroft, who appeared in "Two for the Seesaw" with Henry Fonda, Miss Fonda's father, and the two actresses talked about what it was like to work with him, Miss Fonda said.

The 47-year-old actress said it was fascinating to get a firsthand report on her father as a stage actor.

Miss Fonda said the question of faith also lured her to the film, in which she plays a psychiatrist assigned to investigate whether a young nun, portrayed by Meg Tilly and charged with murdering her newborn child, is capable of standing trial.

"There are people who for their own reasons develop a well-defined philosophy to justify their atheism, as the psychiatrist has done in 'Agnes,'" Miss Fonda said. "But many more people obviously have a need to believe, some deep need to believe in something outside themselves."

Graham

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — The Rev. Billy Graham called on 15,000 Hungarian Baptists Sunday to pray that the U.S.-Soviet summit meeting in Switzerland in November will strengthen the chances for peace.

In his third visit to Hungary, the American evangelist preached in the Budapest Sports Palace, marking his first public appearance in a non-church building in communist Eastern Europe.

Graham's week-long visit to Hungary, which ends Monday, followed a ten-day visit to Romania. He came to Hungary at the invitation of the Hungarian Baptist Church and the Free Council of Churches.

On Saturday, Graham preached from the steps of the Roman Catholic cathedral in the southern city of Pecs. Thousands from Hungary and nearby Yugoslavia attended.

In Budapest on Sunday, Graham said it was the duty of all Christians to work and pray for peace.

"When President Reagan and General Secretary (Soviet Communist Party leader Mikhail) Gorbachev meet, there will be another presence — that of the prince of peace, Jesus," he said.

"Ours is a tormented generation...People cry out, save us from life's pressures," he said. "Escapism is a subconscious mechanism to escape realities. But there is no exit from the human dilemma. But Jesus said there is salvation for the world — I am the way out, he said — all who put their faith in me will be safe."

Evening TV Schedule

IZZY & MOE

Jackie Gleason plays a colorful Prohibition agent in "Izzy and Moe," a CBS movie airing Monday, Sept. 23. In the movie, Gleason is reunited with his "Honeymooners" co-star Art Carney.

Disaster calls

Throughout this nation concern ranges high for the people of Mexico, which has been ravaged since Thursday by two earthquakes. Rescue and relief operations are under way in massive proportions.

Nowhere is concern higher than in Midland. Literally thousands of Midlanders have friends and relatives in Mexico. Many Midlanders also will be taking part in the relief operation.

At first, Mexico officials did not seek U.S. assistance, apparently choosing to deal with the major disaster themselves. But after the second earthquake struck Friday night and the number of those feared dead or trapped climbed to possibly 10,000, the Mexican government requested aid from the United States and this country's aid and disaster relief pipeline began flowing to the interior of that nation.

While the list of equipment and assistance being provided is still being compiled and is incomplete, major assistance includes a five-member team of the U.S. Bureau of Mines search, rescue and demolition services, three U.S. Forest Service spray helicopters equipped to fight fires, 1,000 breathing masks for use by rescuers searching the rubble, and a multidisciplinary team of engineers and disaster-relief experts.

Although Mexico hasn't sought U.S. assistance since 1964 for whatever reason in dealing with disasters, the scope of the current catastrophe makes international assistance a foregone conclusion. Literally thousands of people were left homeless by the two quakes. Thousands of others are dead, injured or buried alive in the rubble. Humanitarian concerns demand international assistance.

For more than 200 years the United States and Mexico have shared a border in what has not always been a harmonious relationship. But in times of disaster past or current differences should be put aside and the two should work together to overcome the catastrophe.

People in Midland join all Americans in their concern for the people of Mexico and will continue providing all the help needed to our neighbors south of the border.

Running board return

About 20 percent of the nation's gasoline stations closed within the last year — and if the trend continues, automakers may want to put running boards back on cars.

When we had running boards, motorists could attach racks to them, holding a red can for extra gasoline, green for oil and white for water. Back in the vehicle's boot, there was a tire pump, wrenches and patches for inner tubes.

Car radios, air-conditioning, electronic ignitions? Those things were as far in the future as freeways.

Breakdowns were frequent, but motoring still was the cat's pajamas. So take back your Nissans, Fiats and Mercedes. Give us LaSalles, Studebakers and Packards. We long for the open road.

Another View:

Pacific overtures

New Zealand's deputy prime minister is in Washington in an effort to mend the rift between his country and the United States over the use of New Zealand ports by U.S. ships that are nuclear-powered or armed with nuclear weapons. The issue has all but buried the ANZUS alliance of the United States, New Zealand and Australia. Based on early reports about the plan Deputy Prime Minister Palmer will propose, the prospects for an early resolution seem remote, but the fact that the two parties are talking rather than shouting is encouraging.

Shortly after the Labor Party came to power in New Zealand last year, Prime Minister David Lange made good on a campaign promise to deny port entry to any nuclear-equipped ships. Since U.S. policy is never to state publicly whether a ship is or is not armed with nuclear weapons, the result was a suspension of port calls by all U.S. naval ships, a suspension that's been in effect for more than a year. Now, Lange has devised a plan that would allow Washington to remain silent about a ship's nuclear status, but with New Zealand retaining the option of banning entry, on the basis of its own determination.

That sounds unworkable at first, but it's to be hoped that, in Palmer's talks with Defense Secretary Weinberger and Secretary of State Shultz, some compromises that safeguard both countries' autonomy can be preserved without sundering the 34-year-old alliance. That shouldn't be impossible, given a little more flexibility on New Zealand's part. Denmark and Norway, two of this country's North Atlantic Treaty Organization allies, have long-standing bans on nuclear-armed ships in their ports during peacetime. Unlike New Zealand, though, they have not put the policy to the test by raising the issue publicly.

New Zealand's sensitivity on the issue of nuclear matters is long-standing and grows out of a bitter confrontation with France over that country's testing of nuclear weapons in its Pacific territories. Most recently, French intelligence agents have been charged with murder in New Zealand after the sabotage in a New Zealand port of a ship belonging to the anti-nuclear environmental group, Greenpeace. One person died in the explosion and fire aboard the ship. A French investigation of the incident resulted in a report that, in the face of strong conflicting evidence, absolved France of responsibility. That was branded a whitewash by New Zealanders, which it almost surely was. In response, Lange labeled France an "enemy" of his country.

Whether this renewed focus on France as Nuclear Enemy No. 1 is in any way responsible for Lange's more flexible approach to the United States cannot be known for certain. What is certain is that there is, for the first time in over a year, reason for hope that a U.S.-New Zealand compromise may be within reach. It's important to seize upon that, and not only for the sake of bilateral relations and the future of the ANZUS pact. New Zealand's concerns about the South Pacific becoming a nuclear arena are shared by virtually every nation in the region, even if they have not expressed them as stridently as Lange. That's a fact that must enter into any U.S. policy calculation.

CHARLEY REESE

'Star Wars' revitalized old truths

George Lucas, creator of the Star Wars movie trilogy, is the unsung, and perhaps unintentional, hero of the American conservative movement.

Charley Reese

One of the puzzling factors in the 1984 presidential election was the unexpected conservatism of voters 18 to 21, a majority of whom backed Ronald Reagan. Most liberal pundits — long on disappointment and short on insight — promptly labeled them the selfish generation.

You have to understand in our times certain intellectual low lifes have inverted language for purposes of politics. Thus, whatever suits their political goals is idealistic; whatever thwarts them is selfish. For purposes of sabotaging the U.S. war effort in Vietnam, lack of self-discipline, ignorance, totalitarian and treasonous behavior, drug abuse, cowardice and even dirty feet became idealistic in the 1960s.

Be that as it may, there is a more logical explanation for the return to patriotism of American youth. What you saw in 1984 was the Star Wars generation.

The original movie, Star Wars, came out in 1978. It was an unforeseen phenomenon. Lucas had had difficulty scraping up enough money to produce it. The leads were played by people not well known at the time. It hit the screens with neither a big promotion nor advertising budget. Yet, within a short time, it became one of the biggest grossing movies in all history.

Millions of American youngsters saw it — not once, but for many seven, eight and nine times. They were enthralled and captivated by the film. Well, a child of 12, 13, 14, or 15 in 1978 would be a young man or woman of 18, 19, 20, or 21 in 1984. To this day, many thick-headed critics fail to grasp the significance of Lucas's film. They still dismiss it as nothing more than a shoot'em up set in space.

Lucas was about something much more profound. The space stuff was merely the technical means of expression, a setting with which space age children could relate just as earlier generations had been able to relate to stories set on the frontier or in World War II.

Lucas was following the advice of William Faulkner who said in his Nobel Prize acceptance speech, "He (the writer) must learn that the basest of all things is to be afraid; and, teaching himself that, forget it forever, leaving no room in his workshop for anything but the old verities and truths of the heart, the old universal truths lacking which any story is ephemeral and doomed — love and honor and pity and pride and compassion and sacrifice."

Star Wars, the movie, is not about space but rather is about the old universal truths — love, honor, pity, pride, compassion, sacrifice, and courage. The characters in the film are motivated by their love for each other, by loyalty, by pride, by honor. It is a story of people willing to sacrifice themselves for each other in a war against great evil. It is a story that teaches another old truth — that context defines the morality of violence, that violence to protect the good is also good.

The bottom line theme of Star Wars — transcendance, the rising above self — is the exact opposite of the 1960s message of self-indulgence. And transcendance is the essence of patriotism, for the patriot must necessarily look beyond his own selfish interests to the greater good of his nation. It is never in the self-interest of the individual to fight in a war since to do so is to risk the death or mutilation of the self. It was the 1960s generation that was selfish and embraced the proposition that nothing is worth pain, suffering and death.

Star Wars provided the antidote to that moral poison. It's a fact that children do not learn their moral code from lectures and sermons. They learn it from examples, real or mythic. Lucas gave a generation examples of heroism, of love of the wider sense of that word, of courage, and of willingness to sacrifice.

Take another look at the movie on video cassette and look at the themes rather than the gadgets. You'll see why those liberals who thought the movie was a joke in 1978 discovered in 1984 that the joke was on them. Lucas singlehandedly stole a whole generation from their hippie parents.

U.S. hindering Zia's bomb plans

WASHINGTON — If Pakistan's dictator, Gen. Mohammad Zia ul-Haq, decides tomorrow that he wants to explode a nuclear device, it will be only "a matter of weeks" before he can do it.

Jack Anderson

This is the secret assessment of a top CIA official. In fact, the only reason Zia has not taken the final few steps and started producing the long-dreaded "Islamic bomb" is his desire to keep U.S. military aid flowing in, suggested the high-level CIA source. Zia knows that planes and other sophisticated American weapons would be cut off if he tested a nuclear device.

A candid private letter from President Reagan last September made this clear to Zia, warning that the nuclear weapons issue "could undermine all that we are trying to achieve." The president urged Zia to limit the uranium enrichment being done at the Pakistanis' heavily guarded plant at Kahuta to the 5 percent of U-235 necessary for reactor fuel.

This would be well below the percentage needed for weapons. Last November, the Pakistani foreign minister visited Washington and assured Reagan that the enrichment lid was being kept on as he had urged.

Our intelligence sources confirm that the Pakistani nuclear program has slowed down since Reagan's letter. The key to the situation is the activity of Dr. Abdul Qadar Khan, the Western-trained Pakistani who allegedly stole nuclear secrets from the Dutch in the 1970s and who now heads the nuclear bomb development program at Kahuta.

In the past year, Khan has diversified his military work to include such secret projects as development of a Chinese-style hand-held anti-aircraft missile. He still spends "a great deal of time" on the nuclear bomb program, however.

From highly sensitive intelligence documents and other sources, we've pieced together this discouraging picture of the Pakistani nuclear weapon effort:

— Technology exchange with China since at least 1980 has brought Pakistan to the point where it could have a small nuclear arsenal in less than two years. Chinese scientists have been to Kahuta to study the centrifuge technique that Pakistan stole from the Europeans a decade ago. And there is evidence that China gave Pakistan information about the actual design of a Hiroshima-sized bomb that the Chinese have successfully tested.

What makes this particularly alarming is that the bomb would be ideal for delivery by F-16s — 40 of which Pakistan is buying from the United States.

— The Pakistanis' own nuclear bomb is described as crude but effective. It consists of a sphere of enriched uranium about 6 inches in diameter, suspended within a steel sphere about 13 inches in diameter. This in turn is surrounded by more than 100 pounds of conventional "shaped charges," and the whole disaster is encased in curved metal plates to form a 21-inch sphere.

The shaped charges implode, compressing the uranium core until it reaches a critical density and blows up.

— Pakistan's bomb builders have tried to modernize their weapon through the illegal acquisition of Western materials. They succeeded in buying a high-speed Swedish X-ray machine that is crucial to the implosion technique they're using. But the acquisition was discovered in time to stop delivery of the operating manual and the dispatch to Islamabad of a Swedish expert who was supposed to help them use the machine.

A related deal was scotched earlier this year when the United States learned that two Pakistanis coming to be trained in the use of an X-ray machine to calibrate artillery were not army gunners but nuclear scientists.

— Perhaps most scary of all is Libya's involvement in the Pakistani bomb. Libya's petrodollars have helped finance the effort, and the CIA is afraid Pakistan would be obliged to share its nuclear technology with Libya as compensation.

WATCH ON WASTE: This is the tale of the one that almost got away: After four years of trying, the Harry Diamond Labs, an Army research agency, won a court decision giving it possession of an older model optical-pattern generator it had bought from the manufacturer for a trifling $58,000. The ultra-sophisticated generator had been illegally diverted by foreign agents, but was caught by alert Customs Service personnel at JFK Airport — and impounded while the situation was being investigated. The Army finally got delivery just a week after its old generator had conked out. A first-year saving of $400,000 is anticipated.

POLITICAL POTPOURRI: Some Mondale-Ferraro campaign contributors got fancy invitations to the opening of Bob Beckel's Washington lobbying firm, and began to wonder: Did Beckel, who was Walter Mondale's campaign manager, bring the list of contributors with him? "Absolutely not," said Beckel.

EVANS & NOVAK

Kreminologist fought revelation

WASHINGTON — The top Kremlinologist in the White House made a futile 11th-hour attempt to block Pentagon revelation of how the Soviet Union steals secret military technology from the West.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

The backstage effort was made by Jack F. Matlock Jr., a foreign service officer attached to the National Security Council (NSC) in charge of Soviet affairs. He is a former ambassador to Czechoslovakia who would like to be the next U.S. envoy to Moscow. An advocate of detente, Matlock contrasts sharply with hardline predecessor at the NSC, Harvard Prof. Richard Pipes.

Matlock argued that the Defense Department revelations could undermine the Reagan-Gorbachev summit in Geneva. But his boss, national security adviser Robert C. McFarlane, did not press the matter with the Pentagon.

PAT'S PROSE

In contrast to Washington rumors that Communications Director Pat Buchanan has lost his clout at the White House and may soon leave there, he played a major role in President Reagan's strong free trade statement opening last week's news conference.

Buchanan normally does not do speechwriting but got personally involved in the Reagan trade statement. "A mindless stampede toward protectionism will be a one-way trip to economic disaster" came straight out of Buchanan's typewriter.

A footnote: No firm decision has been made at the White House whether to send a trade bill to Congress. Several key advisers believe the president definitely should not get involved in negotiating with congressional leaders over protectionist legislation.

GETTING TEDDY'S GOAT

A "private and confidential" letter from Rep. Barney Frank apologizing for but not renouncing public statements that it would be a mistake for Sen. Edward M. Kennedy to run for president next year failed to smooth out relations between the two liberal Democrats from Massachusetts.

Kennedy and his staff were shocked when they read two newspaper interviews by Frank urging the senator not to run. The congressman then wrote Kennedy the letter expressing regret about the way the views came out but not claiming he was misquoted. Kennedy's aides felt Frank's apology would have meant more had it been delivered in person.

A footnote: Frank's outburst may have sounded a resonant note at the Statehouse in Boston. The ambitious Gov. Michael Dukakais has a shot at the 1988 national Democratic ticket only if Kennedy is not in the picture.

GOP TRADE TENSIONS

Internal Republican tensions emerged at the most recent House GOP Conference when Rep. Jack Kemp of New York encountered a turbulent reaction to his impassioned speech against protectionism and for free trade.

Kemp, chairman of the conference, did not win the cheers that usually greet his pep talks to colleagues. Instead, Rep. James T. Broyhill of North Carolina retorted that Alexander Hamilton and the other sources cited by Kemp might be fine, but he was interested in saving the textile workers from his state. That speech generated thunderous applause and cheers.

A footnote: Kemp supporters worry about the impact of his free trade position on his 1988 presidential prospects. Four conservative freshman House members from North Carolina targeted by the Kemp forces as potential backers resented his run-in with Broyhill.

MATHIAS CHAIRMANSHIP?

Liberal Republican Sen. Charles Mathias looks much more likely to seek re-election from Maryland, following reports that he may have a chance at the Judiciary Committee chairmanship he long has coveted.

Senate Majority Leader Robert J. Dole has been pleading with him to run for a seat no other Republican is likely to hold.

But Mathias has not raised a dime for a tough re-election campaign and has told friends he saw little hope of ever becoming a committee chairman. He was squeezed out of the top Republican spot on Judiciary in 1977 when South Carolina's Sen. Strom Thurmond moved in on a conservative power play.

Signs that Mathias would run after all appeared after reports circulated on Capitol Hill that Thurmond might take the Armed Services Committee chairmanship in 1987, relinquishing Judiciary. Mathias told us no such offer has been made him by anybody. But Senate GOP insiders say he now knows he would have a chance for the Judiciary chairmanship, if and when Thurmond steps aside.

White House ignores request for papers

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House is ignoring a congressional request for internal papers on contacts between a National Security Council military adviser and Nicaraguan rebels during a ban on aiding their war effort, government officials say.

Robert C. McFarlane, President Reagan's national security adviser, has assured Congress in writing that his NSC staff abided by the ban, but he handed over none of the documents requested by one committee chairman, said the officials, who insisted on anonymity.

McFarlane refused to answer questions from The Associated Press about the unreleased documents, but one administration official said the committee chairman, Rep. Michael Barnes, D-Md., "was informed as fully as we thought necessary."

White House officials have cited the principle of executive privilege in interviews about the request, but those familiar with the letter to Barnes said McFarlane did not specifically invoke it in his response. They said the McFarlane simply ignored Barnes' request for documents.

Executive privilege is the assertion by presidents that they have the right to keep confidential their internal documents and records of deliberation. While Congress normally respects the concept, it has challenged it in the past, most notably in the 1970s during the Watergate scandal.

Barnes, chairman of the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee on Latin America, declined to discuss McFarlane's classified response, but said through a spokesman that "the committee is going to continue to pursue this matter."

In an Aug. 16 letter to McFarlane, Barnes requested "memoranda and any other documents, pertaining to any contact between Lt. Col. (Oliver L.) North and Nicaraguan rebel leaders" since October.

North, a deputy NSC director for political-military affairs, has been described by administration officials and sources close to the rebels as a key strategist for Reagan's Central America policies.

McFarlane acknowledges that North kept in touch with the rebels during the ban that took effect last October, but denies he gave tactical military advice. Retired Army Maj. Gen. John K. Singlaub has said North advised him on his private fund-raising efforts on behalf of the rebels before the congressional ban was implemented.

Although it is unclear what documents North has relating to the rebels, one source said North has compiled his papers that are related to those actions.

In a three-page confidential letter to Barnes this past week, McFarlane reiterated that NSC contacts with the rebels focused on political, not military, matters and that no actions occurred that violated the congressional ban on "supporting, directly or indirectly, military or paramilitary operations in Nicaragua," according to congressional sources.

McFarlane has also been asked to provide phone logs, notes and tapes to the House Intelligence Committee on North's contacts with a group believed involved in raising funds for the rebels, a committee member said. The member said McFarlane was non-committal about providing that information.

The member said McFarlane told the committee that North had made eight trips to Central America to meet with political leaders in the region, including Nicaraguan rebels.

The National Security Council consists of top administration officials and provides advice to the president on defense and foreign policy issues.

Ex-EPA head arrested for public drunkenness

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Environmental Protection Agency head Anne Burford and her husband, Reagan administration official Robert Burford, face charges of drunkenness following a highway stop in Arlington, Va.

Robert Burford, director of the Bureau of Land Management, was booked for investigation of drunken driving, police said, and Mrs. Burford was arrested at the jail on suspicion of public drunkenness after police said she cursed and yelled at authorities. She was detained for four hours at the jail Saturday morning before the officials let the couple go pending court dates, which Anne Burford can forgo by paying a $30 fine, said Arlington County Sheriff James A. Gondles.

"She kept saying: 'I'm a lawyer and I know my rights and I know my husband's rights,' Gondles said in a telephone interview.

"My understanding is that she was cussing and the magistrate was pretty annoyed and finally called an officer to come down and arrest her," he added.

Virginia state police said a trooper had spotted the Burfords' car stopped at 12:53 a.m. in the middle lane of Route 395. The car had moved to the shoulder by the time the officer reached it. Burford was arrested for investigation of drunken driving, and later for refusing to take a Breathalyzer test, a separate offense under Virginia law.

He was ordered to appear in Arlington County's General District Court Oct. 16.

Mrs. Burford's arrest came after she demanded to be let into the jail offices to see her husband, and after being denied, repeatedly rang a buzzer to gain entrance.

Later, her shoes were taken from her because she banged with one on a window of her cell.

Panel zeroes in on 1982 defense 'horror story'

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House subcommittee, following up on an old Pentagon spare parts "horror story," has begun investigating two big defense contractors because of the way they negotiated a 1982 Air Force contract for repair tools.

The panel, chaired by Rep. John D. Dingell, D-Mich., is convinced the Air Force paid for the development and production of new repair tools for a jet radar system even though the service had previously paid for the development of similar tools.

A new General Accounting Office study that reaches the same conclusion was to be presented to the House Energy and Commerce Committee's oversight and investigations subcommittee today. Dingell has summoned representatives of the Air Force, the General Dynamics Corp. and the Westinghouse Electric Corp. to respond to the findings.

In a letter sent last week to Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger outlining the GAO's findings, Dingell flatly accused the two firms of "plotting together" to double-bill the Air Force.

"This raises serious questions about the integrity of corporate management of both General Dynamics and Westinghouse."

General Dynamics is the prime contractor for the F-16 jet fighter. Westinghouse makes the sophisticated radar system used on the plane. As prime contractor, after consulting with Westinghouse, General Dynamics recommended the purchase of a number of repair tools in 1982 that it said the Air Force would need to begin handling radar repairs itself.

The GAO report focuses on the contract that resulted from those recommendations — one that has already attracted great notoriety because it included a proposed charge of $9,609 for a single hexagon wrench. Following the disclosure of that contract item during a Senate hearing in 1983, the Air Force refused to buy the wrench.

Dingell said his panel "could easily have identified a new procurement horror story...but we wanted to take a procurement that the two corporations and the Air Force were already fully aware of and determine how it happened..."

The GAO report does not accuse either company of criminal activity. It does assert, however, that when the Air Force decided to take over repairs of the radars, General Dynamics recommended the design, development and production of new repair tools even though "equivalent tools were already in use at Westinghouse."

PRECIPITATION: Rain Showers Snow Flurries

FRONTS: Cold Warm Stationary Occluded

Conditions forecast for 8 p.m. Monday

Area forecast clear, cool

From Staff and Wire Reports

The weather forecast for tonight is quite simple: clear and cool.

And cool means a low temperature in the mid-50s, according to the weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Winds are to be northeasterly at 5 to 15 mph.

For Tuesday, the weatherman is calling for sunny weather and a high temperature in the lower 80s. Winds are to be easterly at 5 to 10 mph.

The high temperature on Sunday was 89 degrees, while the record high temperature for a Sept. 22 is 100 degrees in 1977.

The overnight low was 59 degrees. The record low for a Sept. 23 is 47 degrees in 1975.

STATE

A fast-moving cold front moved southeastward across North Central Texas today, triggering showers and thunderstorms, some very heavy, at it moved along.

Scattered thunderstorms and cooler temperatures were forecast for central and east portions of North Texas today. Skies were to be clear to partly cloudy over most of the state today.

Forecasts called for lows tonight in the 50s and 60s, with lows in the Panhandle and South Plains expected to dip into the 40s before dawn Tuesday. Highs Tuesday will be mostly in the 70s and 80s except in South Texas and in the Big Bend area where readings will climb to slightly above the 90-degree mark.

The cold front was located early today from the Red River near Sherman across Dallas-Fort Worth southward into the Concho Valley near San angelo.

Isolated thundershowers were reported early today in a small section of the Hill Country and along the Rio Grande plains.

NATION

Showers and thunderstorms stretched from north central Texas into southwest Missouri today and cold air pushed across the Plains as forecasters kept watch on a hurricane and a tropical depression brewing in the Atlantic.

A severe thunderstorm watch was posted for sections of eastern Oklahoma, northwestern Arkansas and southwest Missouri. A flash flood watch was issued in northeast Kansas and a flood warning was in effect for the Chickaskia River near Blackwell, Okla.

A cold front spread thunderstorms from the southwest Great Lakes to the southern Plains Sunday evening.

Rare call helps Pokes KO Browns

IRVING (AP) — Dallas Cowboys quarterback Danny White was surprised when Coach Tom Landry sent in a flea-flicker pass play in the third quarter of Sunday's 20-7 victory over the Cleveland Browns.

"It was the second time today that he called it," White said. "It's rare it gets called once. But for it to be called twice, that's really rare."

From the Cleveland 12, White handed off to running back James Jones, who ran to the right, stopped and tossed the ball back to White, who was wide open for a touchdown in the end zone's left side.

Landry had called the same play only minutes earlier from the Cleveland 13, but it never came off. White fumbled the snap and Browns linebacker Clay Matthews picked up the ball and ran for 25 yards.

"I'm glad he called it again, because I was the goat the first time he called it," White said.

"It's just a play we have in our playbook," Landry said. "We resurrected it this week, and it came through. About once a year is about all you can get away with it."

Cleveland Coach Marty Schottenheimer said, "This one is not difficult to dissect. The Dallas Cowboys played better than the Cleveland Browns today. We did not perform as well as we needed to in any phase."

The Dallas defense kept Cleveland scoreless until late in the fourth quarter, when Browns quarterback Gary Danielson combined with Kevin Mack on a 56-yard pass play to the Dallas 1, setting up Earnest Byner's short touchdown run.

End-zone interceptions by Dallas defensive backs Everson Walls and Dennis Thurman foiled two Cleveland scoring threats.

The Cowboys carved a 10-0 halftime lead on Rafael Septien's 39-yard field goal and White's 10-yard touchdown pass to tight end Doug Cosbie.

A 33-yard pass interference call against cornerback Hanford Dixon gave Dallas a first down at the Cleveland 12 in the third quarter. But White fumbled the snap two plays later, and Matthews scampered almost to midfield with the ball before he was overtaken.

Danielson then hit wide receiver Willis Adams for 11 and 22 yards on successive plays for a first down at the Dallas 22.

But Danielson aimed a pass for Adams on the next play in the end zone's left corner, and Thurman made a leaping interception.

From there, the Cowboys went 80 yards in 12 plays on a drive that ended with White's third pass reception ever, and his second for a touchdown.

Operating from the Cleveland 12 on third-and-8, White handed off to Jones racing around the right side. Suddenly, Jones pulled up and tossed a soft pass to White.

Septien added a 33-yard field goal in the fourth quarter.

Cleveland moved inside the Dallas 5 in the final minute of play, but Walls knocked down a fourth-down pass in the end zone and Dallas ran out the clock.

White completed 20 of 32 passes for 177 yards and one touchdown, while Danielson hit 14 of 26 for 193 yards.

Cosbie led Dallas receivers with six catches for 71 yards. Dallas also went to Timmy Newsome five times for 31 yards, and Tony Hill four times for 35 yards.

The Browns had only one scoring threat in the first half. They drove all the way to the Dallas 3 late in the second quarter before Danielson threw hurriedly trying to avoid Randy White's charge. Walls stepped in front of Byner at the goal line for the interception.

Walls' interception ended a string of 27 times in which the Browns scored after penetrating their opponents' 20-yard line.

Dallas took the opening kickoff and moved in 10 plays to the Browns' 20 before the drive stalled and Septien kicked a 39-yard field goal.

Rams have Dickerson back in lineup

SEATTLE (AP) — After a two-game absence because of a contract holdout, Eric Dickerson, the National Football League's single-season rushing record holder, returns to the Los Angeles Rams' lineup Monday night against Seattle and Seahawks' Coach Chuck Knox is worried.

"Eric Dickerson is one of the greatest running backs ever to play in the National Football League," Knox said. "He'll be a tremendous challenge for our defense. We will have to tackle a lot better than we have the past two weeks."

The 2-0 Seahawks are seven-point favorites over the 2-0 Rams for the nationally televised game — Seattle's 1985 regular-season home opener.

But the Seahawks have not been a good defensive team this season. They have allowed 59 points in two games, winning 49-35 at San Diego last Sunday.

In the two games, the Seahawks have given up an average of 450 yards. Chargers' quarterback Dan Fouts passed for four touchdowns against Seattle.

Dickerson ended a 47-day holdout before the Rams' game at Philadelphia last Sunday. He watched from the sidelines as the Rams won 17-6.

"He'll have fresh legs," Knox said of Dickerson's return to the Rams. "It doesn't take very long for a running back to fit in."

Dickerson led the league in rushing in his first two seasons in the NFL. He set the rushing record of 2,105 yards on 379 carries in 1984 and gained 1,808 yards on 390 carries as a rookie in 1983. He is bidding to join Jim Brown and Earl Campbell as the only players in NFL history to lead the league in rushing in each of their first three seasons.

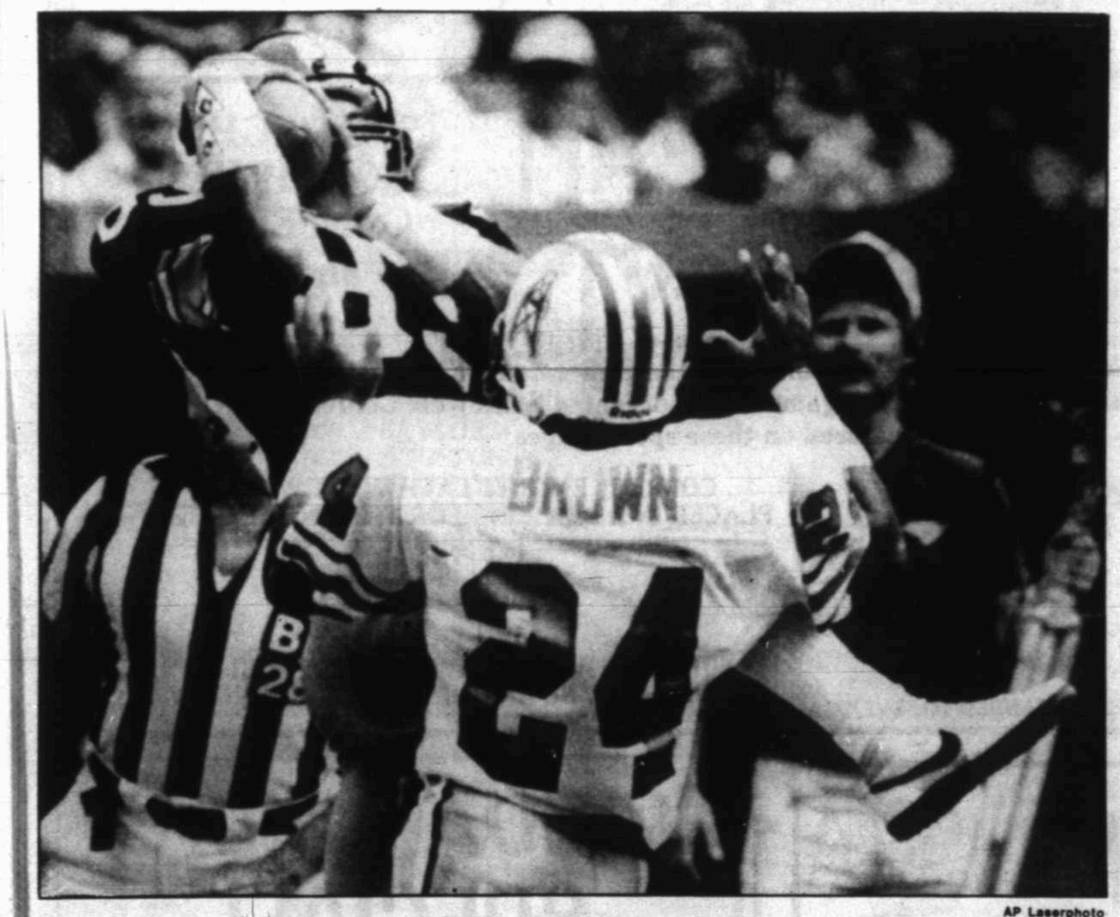

Meanwhile, the Seahawks' Curt Warner has demonstrated in Seattle's two games this season that he is fully recovered from a severe knee injury he suffered in the 1984 regular-season opener.

Warner, the next running back drafted after Dickerson in 1983, led the American Football Conference in rushing as a rookie with 1,449 yards.

He had his second-best single-game rushing performance of his NFL career in San Diego with 169 yards and two touchdowns on 28 carries.

"He's a really fine player," Rams' Coach John Robinson said of Warner. "He's the kind of guy who when he went down, everybody said, 'Darn.' You like to see those kinds of guys overcome those kinds of tragedies."

Pittsburgh's Steel Curtain no longer needs oiling

Pittsburgh receiver Louis Lipps hauls in a Mark Malone touchdown pass behind Houston defender Steve Brown in the first quarter of Sunday's game in Pittsburgh.

Associated Press

That shudder you might have heard throughout the National Football League is the reaction to the revitalization of the Steel Curtain and Killer Bees.

Pittsburgh's Steel Curtain defense blanked the Houston Oilers 20-0 Sunday and Miami's Killer Bees throttled the Kansas City Chiefs 31-0. Both the Steelers and Dolphins have been riding high-powered offenses to victory recently. This time, the resurrected defensive units were awesome in Week 3 of the NFL season.

"We didn't make any mistakes," said linebacker Robin Cole after the Steelers held Houston to 50 yards rushing and 92 passing. "Any time you get a shutout, it makes you feel good. We want to be as tough as we possibly can be this season, but it's too early to rate our defense. We have too many games left to play."

Veteran safety Donnie Shell, who was an integral part of the suffocating Steel Curtain which helped the Steelers to four Super Bowl titles in the late 1970s, intercepted a pass and recovered a fumble.

"You go into each game thinking shutout, because that's the ultimate," Shell said. "It's not easy, but we minimized our mistakes today. We showed what we're capable of doing."

As did the Dolphins in stopping the league's highest-scoring team, the Chiefs, who had scored 83 points in winning their first two games this season. After a scoreless first half, Miami also got its potent attack untracked as Dan Marino hit touchdown passes of nine yards to Bruce Hardy and 27 to Woody Bennett.

"There were more great plays out there defensively than I've been around in a long time," said Don Shula, who recorded his 100th home victory as the Dolphins' coach.

Chargers 44, Bengals 41

Bob Thomas' 34-yard field goal with four seconds remaining won this wild affair in which Lionel James caught one of Dan Fouts' four touchdown passes, good for 60 yards, and ran 56 yards on a draw play. James also had a 100-yard kickoff return nullified by a penalty.

Fouts was 24-for-43 for 344 yards, while Cincinnati's Boomer Esiason, a surprise starter, threw for 300 yards and three scores.

Eagles 19, Redskins 16

The Eagles got field goals of 34, 36, 37 and 41 yards from Paul McFadden and their first touchdown this year, a 17-yard pass from rookie Randall Cunningham to Earnest Jackson. Washington, which had its eight-game home winning string snapped, dropped to 1-2 and failed to score in double figures for the first time in 58 regular-season games.

The Redskins trailed 9-6 and were marching downfield when George Rogers fumbled at the Philadelphia 33. Wes Hopkins picked up the ball and returned it 42 yards to the Washington 25. Cunningham found Jackson three players later for the Eagles' TD.

Saints 20, Bucs 13

Dave Wilson threw two touchdown passes and safety Terry Hoage forced a fumble and intercepted a pass for New Orleans. The Saints lost guards Brad Edelman and Kelvin Clark and center Steve Korte to first-half injuries, but their defense made up for it. Bill Capece tied a club record with a 51-yard field goal for Tampa Bay, 0-3, which lost receivers Jimmie Giles and Kevin House to injuries.

"Their outside linebackers really had it on a roll today," said Bucs QB Steve DeBerg, speaking of Rickey Jackson and Whitney Paul, each of whom had two sacks. "The pressuer was tremendous. You can't even see downfield when the pressure is that heavy."

Colts 14, Lions 6

Colts reserve fullback George Wonsley, starting because of Randy McMillan's sore ankle, rushed for a career-high 170 yards on 27 carries, recording the fifth-highest total in team history. He also caught five passes for 32 yards as Rod Dowhower won his first game as an NFL coach. The Lions' Darryl Rogers suffered his first NFL coaching defeat.

"George found out a little more about himself," said Dowhower, "and we found out a little about him."

49ers 34, Raiders 10

San Francisco routed the Raiders and knocked out LA quarterback Jim Plunkett, who will be sidelined from 6-10 weeks with a dislocated left shoulder.

The 49ers had 11 sacks for 91 yards in losses, led by Dwaine Board with three. Joe Montana threw TD passes of 20 yards to Roger Craig and 14 to Dwight Clark, while linebacker Milt McColl sped 28 yards with a fumble recovery for another score.

Jets 24, Packers 3

Tony Paige scored two touchdowns and the New York defense overwhelmed the error-prone Packers, sending starting quarterback Lynn Dickey to the sidelines in the third period. Linebacker Lance Mehl had five tackles, two sacks and an interception.

The Jets clinched it early in the fourth quarter when the Packers tried a fake punt deep in their own territory. Guy Prather fumbled the snap and Jets defensive tackle Tom Baldwin recovered and ran nine yards for his first NFL touchdown.

Broncos 44, Falcons 28

John Elway had trouble hitting open receivers but managed three touchdown passes, and Rich Karlis kicked three field goals for Denver, which benefitted from two long pass interference calls on Atlanta's Wendell Cason, good for 31 and 42 yards. The 0-3 Falcons were without three injured regulars from their secondary.

"It may not have looked too pretty but the results were there," said Elway.

Giants 27, Cardinals 17

St. Louis hurt itself with penalties and three second-half turnovers and the Giants took advantage for TD passes of 20 and 16 yards by Phil Simms. Bobby Johnson, who caught the 16-yarder in the fourth quarter, also had an 8-yard score as he hauled in his first two receptions this season. Phil McConkey, who grabbed the 20-yard TD toss, also had his first two catches of the year.

Patriots 17, Bills 14

Given a second chance, Irving Fryar returned a third-quarter punt for 85 yards and a touchdown. Buffalo's John Kidd had punted and Fryar was stopped, but the Bills were penalized and Kidd had to kick again. This time, Fryar went all the way to clinch the win.

"The key was that it was their second trip downfield because of the penalty," said Fryar. "I didn't even realize there was a penalty but they had to run back down 75 or 80 yards."

1908 — In a crucial game against the Chicago Cubs, Fred Merkle of the New York Giants failed to touch second base as the apparent winning Giants' run crossed home plate. This resulted in a long dispute and the game eventually was declared a tie and played over on Oct. 8 when the Cubs and Giants ended the season in a tie.

1957 — Hank Aaron's home run off Billy Muffett in the ninth inning gave the Atlanta Braves a 4-2 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals and the National League pennant. It was the first time since 1950 that a New York-based team did not win the NL title.

Rebs open 4-5A against Bobcats

Winner could gain edge in race to playoffs

From Staff Reports

District 4-5A got its non-league business out of the way over the weekend and now comes some head-to-head knuckle cracking.

The district will waste no time in getting down to some possible playoff deciding business this Friday. The key matchup comes at Memorial Stadium where the Midland Lee Rebels play host to the undefeated San Angelo Bobcats.

Many think that the winner of this game will have a big advantage in gaining one of the district's two playoff berths. Both are heavily favored to make a playoff run and the winner will have a definite leg up in any ties that might result at the end of the year.

It is also a game that is a possible sellout. Lee's home side of Memorial Stadium was sold out before the season began. San Angelo has asked for around 900 adult tickets for the game, almost double what they have asked for in the past.

Still, Gil Bartosh, Midland athletic director, says there are around 2,200 adult tickets available to be sold this week. All of the seats are on the East side of Memorial Stadium. Those tickets will go on sale at 8 a.m. Wednesday at the Memorial Stadium ticket office, located at the northeast corner of the stadium.

"This game could be close to a sellout, but we have a lot of tickets to sell," said Bartosh. "We expect to have tickets to sell through Friday night. San Angelo will return the tickets they don't sell and they can be sold at the gate Friday night. We don't know what kind of rush we will have on tickets this week. We should know more by late Wednesday or Thursday. If people want to see this game, there should be enough tickets to go around."

Lee is fresh off a 53-7 victory over El Paso Eastwood after falling to Temple by a 19-7 count. San Angelo is unbeaten in three outings and defeated Fort Worth Dunbar by a 38-12 count Friday. San Angelo has not lost at Memorial Stadium in the last three years and defeated Lee in 1983 when the Rebels went on to gain the state finals. Lee won 42-20 in San Angelo last year and another high scoring affair is expected this time around.

So far, both teams have shown a productive offensive attack and both have been stingy on defense.

The Rebels have scored a total of 102 points this year while giving up only 26. The Bobcats are a bit behind the offensive pace, scoring 78 points, but the defense has allowed only 25.

ELSEWHERE AROUND the league, the Midland High Bulldogs open 4-5A play against Big Spring; Odessa Permian is at Abilene High and Odessa High hosts Abilene Cooper.

The big surpirse of this past weekend was the 1-2 Big Spring Steers, a team everybody was beginning to count down and out. However, after a 35-0 victory over Lubbock Monterey, thoughts are starting to turn.

The 2-1 Bulldogs, who lost to Lubbock Estacado 19-13, have two common opponents with the Steers this year: Estacado and Monterey. In the won/loss column, both fared the same, but MHS' victory over Monterey, 27-19, wasn't as lopsided as the Steers' win over the Plainsmen.

However, on the other side of the coin, the Bulldogs played Estacado a lot tougher than the Steers did, losing 19-13 while Big Spring suffered a 42-12 setback.

Comparing offense and defense, The Bulldogs have scored 59 while giving up 51 and Big Spring has tallied 75 and allowed 83.

Permian, the top ranked team in the AP Texas High School poll, among others, is facing an improved Abilene High squad. Both teams carry 3-0 records into the game and both have been giving a defensive clinic to their opponents this year. Offense is the BIG difference.

The Panthers gave up a touchdown to Fort Worth Eastern Hills Saturday for the only points they've allowed this season. The Eagles were able to ride a field goal to a 3-0 victory over Longview, and have only allowed six points.

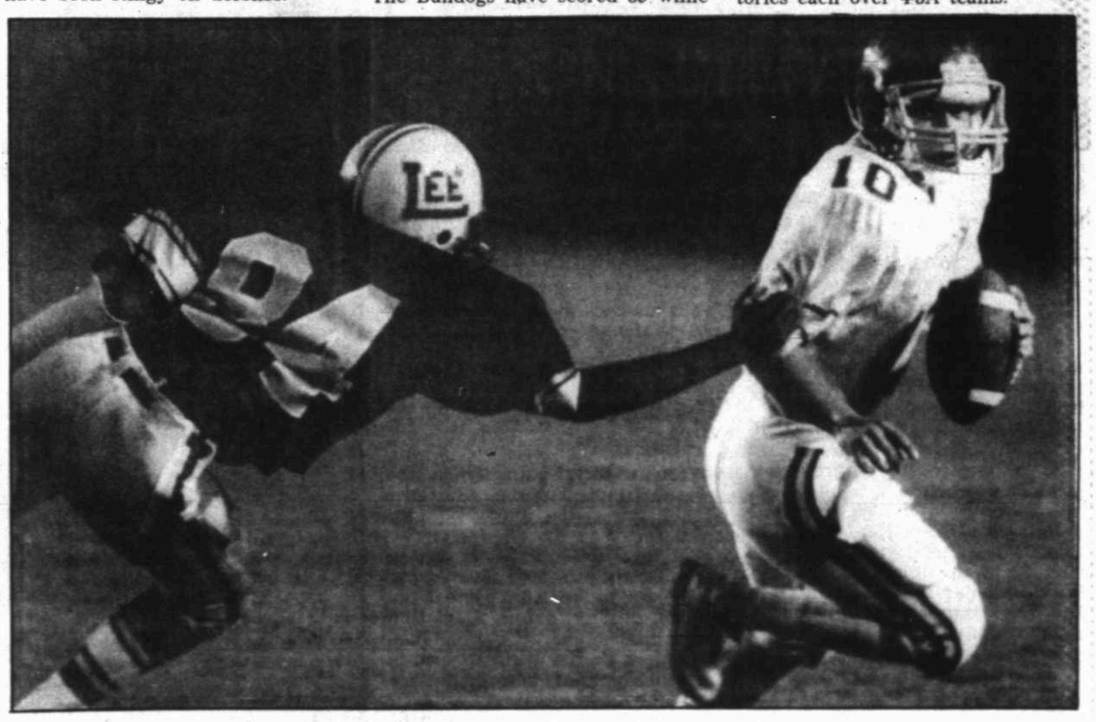

On the other side of the ball, the Panthers lead the scoring battle, 131-35.

Odessa High is also expected to be improved and a contender for a playoff berth. The Bronchos are also 3-0 and host the troubled Cooper Cougars, 0-3.

Statistically, OHS has outscored opponents 112-21 while Cooper has been outscored, 83-75.

In all, district teams posted a 17-7 record in pre-district play with Temple and Estacado posting two victories each over 4-5A teams.

SWC kicks off 1985 season

Kent Porter/Reporter-Telegram

Texas Tech defender Tim Crawford (92) hauls down North Texas State's Greg Lee (36) at Jones Stadium. On Saturday, Tech goes opens SWC play against Baylor.

Troubled teams TCU, SMU meet at Amon Carter

From Staff Reports

Southern Methodist University is ranked high in some Top 20 polls this year and not ranked at all in others.

The Mustangs have already been scratched from the Cotton Bowl, as well as any other bowl, but that doesn't mean they've been eliminated from post-season activity because of results from the playing field.

What caused these dilemmas for the Ponies this year is continued abuse of NCAA rules. In fact, the NCAA went so far this year as to place SMU on a three-year probation as part of the stiffest penalty ever handed down.

But, despite their wrong-doings, SMU is fielding one tough football team and Saturday the Mustangs travel to Fort Worth where they will meet another SWC team with similar problems in one of two SWC season-openers.

The Mustangs and Horned Frogs of Texas Christian University will collide at Amon Carter Stadium at 7:30 p.m.

Before Saturday's game with Kansas State, head coach Jim Wacker suspended six players from the TCU squad for accepting money from a slush fund reportedly set up by former head coach F.A. Dry and his staff.

When Wacker came to TCU, he said he wanted to run the cleanest athletic program in the NCAA and discouraged players and boosters against improprieties. "No one was more shocked the Jim Wacker to find out about players receiving money," he said after suspending the six, including consensus All-American and Heisman Trophy candidate Kenneth Davis.

THE LOSS of the six players didn't seem to effect the Horned Frogs much in Saturday's game against Kansas State as they came away with a 24-22 victory, stopping K-State's try for a two-point conversion late in the game to save the win.

The victory gave TCU a 2-0 record on the year while SMU, which defeated the University of Texas-El Paso two weeks ago, 35-23, is 1-0.

A year ago, both TCU and SMU were in contention for a Cotton Bowl berth before losing out at the end to Houston.

The Horned Frogs took a high-octane offense into Texas Stadium the third week of the season and suffered their first setback, coming out on the short end of a 26-17 score.

TCU went on to finish the season at 8-4, including a 31-14 loss in the Bluebonnet Bowl.

SMU, on the other hand, was the only SWC team to uphold the conference honor in post-season play. After compiling a 10-2 record, including a 27-20 victory over Notre Dame in the Aloha Bowl.

TCU still has hopes for a Cotton Bowl berth and a high ranking in the polls. SMU, without those options, is just looking to go undefeated.

THE OTHER SWC opener Saturday pits Texas Tech against the Baylor "surprise of the nation," Bears Saturday at Texas Stadium.

While Tech, 3-0, was busy beating up on outmanned North Texas State, 28-7, the Bears were on the coast facing the No. 3 ranked Southern Cal Trojans. The 20-13 Baylor victory stunned the NCAA and gave the rest of the league notice of the calibre of ball they are capable of playing.

The Bears are now 2-1 after a victory over Wyoming in their season-opener and a loss last week to Georgia.

Elsewhere Around the league, Texas (1-0), a 21-17 winner over Missouri, is at Stanford; Arkansas (2-0), 24-0 over Tulsa, hosts New Mexico State; Texas A&M (1-1), 31-17 over Northeast Louisiana, is at Tulsa; Houston (0-2), 29-12 losers to Washington, is at Louisville; and Rice (0-2), 59-17 losers to Air Force, hosts Lamar.

Texas Tech vs. N. Texas St. — RUSHING: Travis Price 11 carries for 85 yards and a touchdown, Isaac Garnett 60 yards on 12 carries. PASSING: Aaron Keesee 3-8, 37 yards and a touchdown. RECEIVING: Tyrone Thurman 1-15, Wayne Walker 1-11, Timmy Smith one carry for 11 yards and a touchdown.

Baylor vs. Southern Cal — RUSHING: Robert Williams 7-41, Derrick McAdoo 11-38, Cody Carlson 4-32, Jackie Ball 8-17, Tom Muecke 6-15 and a touchdown. PASSING: Muecke 5 of 7 for 65 yards, including a 22-yard TD pass to Derrick McAdoo; Carlson 2-6 for 19. RECEIVING: Williams 3-29, Ates 2-19.

Texas vs. Missouri — RUSHING: Charles Hunter, 15 carries for 112 yards, including a 26-yard TD run; Bret Stafford, 10 carries for 76 yards, including a 36-yard TD run; Anthony Byerly, 15 carries for 72 yards, including an 8-yard TD run; Darron

Sources claim Dry, staff initiated idea of slush fund

FORT WORTH (AP) — Former Texas Christian University football coach F. A. Dry and his staff initiated the idea of a slush fund that paid TCU players and eventually led to the suspension of a Heisman Trophy candidate and five other players, sources with ties to the university's athletic department have told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

One source, who did not want to be identified, said Dry and his staff spoke to certain TCU boosters about starting a slush fund. Morris Bailey, a financial contributor to the football program, said he was approached by Dry about setting up such a fund.

Dry, who is now the offensive line coach at Baylor, denied the charges.

"That's totally a fabrication," Dry said. "I can't confirm the activities of someone else but this looks like somebody is trying to get at me or use me to cover something up."

TCU coach Jim Wacker suspended six players — Kenneth Davis, Egypt Allen, Gary Spann, Gearld Taylor, Darron Turner and Marvin Foster — Thursday night after learning they had received cash payments from TCU boosters.

Herr's homer adds one to Cards' lead

Associated Press

It was a good day for division leaders in the National League as both the St. Louis Cardinals and Los Angeles Dodgers won and headed into the last two weeks of the season with solid leads.

The Cardinals defeated the Montreal Expos 6-5 on a dramatic, two-out home run by Tommy Herr in the ninth inning to move three games ahead of the New York Mets in the National League East. The Mets lost 5-3 to the Pittsburgh Pirates.

In the NL West, meanwhile, the Dodgers whipped the San Francisco Giants 5-3 behind the pitching of Orel Hershiser, who earned his ninth straight victory. The runnerup Cincinnati Reds kept pace by beating the Houston Astros 6-5, but still remained 5½ games behind the Dodgers.

In the American League East, the New York Yankees beat the Baltimore Orioles 5-4 to move within 5½ games of the front-running Toronto Blue Jays, who lost 2-1 to the Minnesota Twins.

And, in the AL West, the California Angels edged the Cleveland Indians 10-9 in 12 innings to take a one-game lead over the Kansas City Royals, who fell out of a first-place tie by losing 7-3 to Minnesota.

Cardinals 6, Expos 5

Herr's dramatic blast came on a 2-2 delivery from Montreal reliever Jack O'Connor, 0-2. O'Connor, who came on in the eighth, retired Brian Harper and Vince Coleman to start the ninth before Willie McGee rapped his 200th hit of the season, a single, to set the stage for Herr. Herr's homer made a winner out of Ken Dayley, 4-2, who relieved Joaquin Andujar to start the eighth.

Pirates 5, Mets 3

Former Midland Angel Bob Kipper gained his first major league victory with late relief help, and Sammy Khalifa's two-run single capped a three-run sixth inning to pace Pittsburgh over New York. Kipper, 1-1, gave up five hits, walked three and struck out four in 8⅓ innings before needing ninth-inning relief help from Pat Clements, who gained his second save. Mets' Terry Leach, 3-4, lost for the first time as a starter this year.

Dodgers 5, Giants 3

Hershiser's winning streak remained alive when Los Angeles came from behind to defeat San Francisco. Hershiser, 17-3, was touched for three runs in the first inning, but blanked the Giants until he was lifted in the eighth for Tom Niedenfuer, who gained his 16th save. The Dodgers went ahead to stay with two runs in the seventh off loser Vida Blue, 7-7.

Reds 6, Astros

Dave Concepcion smashed two hits and drove in three runs, including a game-winning ninth-inning RBI, to lift Cincinnati over Houston. With the scored tied 5-5, Concepcion's sacrifice fly scored Dave Parker from third with the winning run. Parker had doubled and moved to third on Eric Davis' sacrifice bunt.

Brewers 2, Blue Jays 1

Paul Molitor extended his hitting streak to 13 games with a run-scoring double that broke a seventh-inning tie and Ted Higuera pitched a five-hitter to lead Milwaukee. The Brewers finally went ahead after stranding seven runners over the first six innings against Dave Stieb, 13-11.

Major Leagues

Yankees 5, Orioles 4

Ron Guidry became the first 20-game winner in the AL while Rickey Henderson and Ken Griffey homered on consecutive pitches in the third inning to lead New York. Guidry, 20-6, gave up five hits through eight innings, but left after Mike Young doublead leading off the ninth and Floyd Rayford followed with his 16th home run of the season.

Angels 10, Indians 9

Shortstop Julio Franco's error on a grounder by Rod Carew allowed Rufino Linares to score from second base with one out in the 12th inning, lifting California to victory. The Angels, who trailed 8-4 early in the game, took a 9-8 lead into the top of the ninth but Cleveland tied it on singles by Brett Butler, Brook Jacoby and Andre Thornton.

Twins 7, Royals 3

Frank Viola scattered eight hits for his 16th victory and Mark Funderburk drove in three runs to lead Minnesota. Viola, 16-14, struck out four and walked one in winning his third straight decision. Funderburk, Mickey Hatcher and Tom Brunansky each had three of Minnesota's 14 hits.

Cubs 9, Phillies 2

Former Midland Cub Shawon Dunston hit a two-run homer and Leon Durham added a solo shot as Chicago defeated Philadelphia for a sweep of a three-game series. It was e first time since 1974 that Chicago had swept a series in Philadelphia. Dennis Eckersley, 10-6, allowed seven hits over six innings to become the Cubs' first 10-game winner.

Braves 7, Padres 5

Claudell Washington and Glenn Hubbard each knocked in two run as Atlanta ended a six-game losing streak by beating San Diego. Milt Thompson's two-out RBI single broke a 2-2 tie in the seventh inning and Atlanta staged a three-run rally in the eighth to pin the defeat on Andy Hawkins, 17-8.

Red Sox 6, Tigers 2

Dwight Evans hit Dan Petry's first pitch of the game for a home run, triggering Boston over Detroit. Winner Dennis Boyd, 15-11, scattered six hits through seven innings to earn his fourth straight victory, with relief help from Bruce Kison. Wade Boggs, leading the major leagues with a .374 average, went 2-for-4 in his 69th multi-hit game of the season, tying the Boston club record set by Jim Rice in 1978.

White Sox 7, A's 5

Luis Salazar hit a two-out, two-run homer in the 10th inning to give Chicago the victory. Salazar, who had four hits and drove in four runs, hit his ninth homer of the season after a two-out single by Rudy Law. The home run came off Jay Howell, 9-6. Dave Kingman's 28th home run pulled the A's into a 5-5 tie in the eighth.

Rangers 6, Mariners 0

Mike Mason scattered six hits and struck out 11 while Pete O'Brien went 3-for-3, including a homer, and drove in three runs fro Texas. Mason, 8-13, pitched his first complete game of the season. He walked one and his 11 strikeouts were a career-high.

World comes to aid of Mexico City

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Governments from around the world are providing Mexico with doctors and demolition crews, search dogs and medicines, food and blankets to aid the victims of last week's two devastating earthquakes.

Diplomats' cars streamed to Mexico City's international airport over the weekend, with ambassadors meeting cargo planes arriving from their nations.

Early Sunday a giant C-5A transport plane roared in from Norton Air Force Base in San Bernardino, Calif., and unloaded three firefighting helicopters, six trucks and water pumps, cots and medicine.

Six-man crews from the U.S Forest Service brought in enough food to support themselves for a month while they train Mexican helicopter pilots in aerial firefighting.

"From the people and government of Mexico, we appreciate this help from our brothers in the United States," said an exhausted Humberto Lugo Gil, the head of auxiliary airport services who was in his 40th hour of monitoring international relief shipments.

Among the new arrivals were dogs, mostly German shepherds, trained to search for survivors buried under the rubble of demolished buildings. France sent 19 dogs, the International Committee of the Red Cross sent 15, Switzerland 12 and the United States four.

U.S. dog handlers were at the annual meeting of the National Association for Search and Rescue in Nashville, Tenn., when the call for help came. A U.S. Air Force C-141 transport plane picked up the handlers and their dogs Saturday morning, said spokeswoman Caroline Hebard.

The plane also brought in nine demolition experts and equipment to raze damaged buildings.

The first relief shipments arrived Friday morning, about 24 hours after the first big earthquake and 12 hours before the second jolt. Colombia, Guatemala, the Domincan Republic and Costa Rica were among the first in with food, clothing and blankets.

From Argentina came 20 tons of medicine and supplies plus 29 people, including plastic surgeons and burn specialists.

Smaller planes arrived with private relief agency personnel. Operation California, a Los Angeles relief group, sent a team Friday to assess damage and determine needs.

A Soviet crew landed Friday with 50 tons of emergency supplies, the Soviet news agency Novasti said.

Switzerland sent 28 tons of medicine and rescue equipment, plus field tents and sleeping bags. Four United Nations observers came with the Swiss team to report back on the most critical needs.

France dispatched 179 doctors and firefighters plus the Red Cross canine crews. It planned to send a third aircraft this morning with equipment and rescue specialists.

Britain said it was sending assistance from its garrison in neighboring Belize. It said two army helicopters were delivering engineers and a transport plane with cutting tools, water pumps and lighting towers. A Royal Air Force plane was to fly 20,000 surgical masks to Mexico City on Monday.

Britain's Overseas Development Administration said its contribution was valued at more than $675,000.

Israel dispatched several dozen military experts and rescue equipment on an Air Force Boeing 707 Sunday. An earlier team arrived with generators, drills and medical equipment.

West Germany sent a 130-ton crane for demolition work plus medicine and rescue workers. Canada contributed clothing, blankets and relief workers, while Italy shipped 35 tons of medicine and camping equipment.

Heavy mining machines to excavate rubble was due in a later shipment from the United States.

Mexico asked most governments to send whatever they judged most appropriate, but it specified its needs from the United States, U.S. Ambassador John Gavin said.

Most of capital's cultural treasures unscathed

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Many of this city's cultural treasures and monuments, symbols of the centuries-old presence of man in Mexico, were unscathed or only slightly damaged by the two mighty earthquakes that leveled much of the capital.

The pyramids at Teotihuacan, 15 miles north of Mexico City, were untouched by the two jolts last Thursday and Friday that wrecked hundreds of buildings and killed more than 1,900 people.

The giant ensemble made of hewn rock was constructed by a now-vanished civilization that flourished in the central valley of Mexico from 300 to 900 A.D.

Mexico City's National Museum of Anthropology, which contains one of the world's finest collections of artifacts from pre-Columbian civilizations, was untouched.

Bellas Artes, the fine arts palace across from Alameda Park in the capital's center, was also undamaged. It houses an art museum and a theater frequented by tourists where the Ballet Folklorico performs.

The Cathedral of Mexico and the nearby Templo Mayor Azteca were reported to have riden out the quakes. In the city's famed Zocalo, or main plaza, buildings remained standing and only minor damage was apparent.

But the National Palace, where President Miguel de la Madrid and other government officials have offices, suffered some damage.

WWII vets cancel joint visit to France cemetery with ex-Nazi SS troops

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — A group of American World War II veterans flew to West Germany for an annual get-together with former adversaries from the Nazi SS, but canceled a joint visit to a military cemetery because of protests by Jewish groups.

The 25 Americans were greeted Sunday at the Frankfurt airport by three Germans who were members of SS forces in the Battle of the Bulge near the end of World War II. They said their annual reunions are unrelated to the operation of the Nazi concentration camps in which millions of Jews died.

But as a concession to the criticism, the Americans decided to cancel a joint visit to the St. Avold military cemetery in northeastern France today and go alone.

"The war is 40 years old; it's time to put it into history," said Delyle Omholt, president of the 70th Infantry Association.

"We're here to check out old battlefields, meet friends. We do respect criticism, and that's why we're now going to the cemetery alone. We of course do not condone Nazi atrocities," he said.

Germans veterans of the SS 6th Mountain Division and Americans have been exchanging visits since 1977. Earlier this month, Nazi hunter Simon Wiesenthal unrged the Americans to cancel this year's visit.

"The SS will use it as a sign of reconciliation," he said. "Your meeting will become an offense for millions of victims of Nazi oppression."

Neil Sandberg of the American Jewish Committee said the Waffen SS, the military arm of Adolf Hitler's elite guard, "included large amounts of people who ran...concentration camps."

Willi Weiler, an SS veteran who greeted the Americans at the airport, said his division had nothing to do with the death camps and was never accused of atrocities at the Nuremberg war crimes trial in 1946.

Wilhelm Gottenstroeter, director of the SS veterans organization, said the reunions with former enemies were meant to nurture friendships and "have nothing to do with politics."

"We have wanted them to meet our families, learn about Germans. It's a shame, after we have been meeting for nine years, that we are now being assailed with this collective guilt," he said.

However, he said meetings with the U.S. veterans this year "will be in private settings to avoid any disputes or trouble."

The former soldiers greeted each other with hugs and handshakes. They plan to meet informally later this week in Bad Windsheim, a Bavarian spa town.

Two 40th-anniversary reunions of Waffen SS veterans last May prompted violent street demonstrations outside the meeting places.

Jewish and left-wing groups fiercely protested President Reagan's visit in May to a German military cemetery where several dozen SS members were buried.

Family to appoint doctor for Mandela

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Imprisoned black leader Nelson Mandela, who requires surgery for a swollen prostate and internal cysts, will be examined by doctors chosen by his family, one of his daughters said today.

In scattered anti-apartheid disturbances Sunday and early today, police reported the deaths of three blacks.

Rumors that Mandela might die in custody have touched off sporadic black rioting around South Africa, torn by 13 months of anti-apartheid unrest. Though jailed since 1964 on a conviction of plotting sabotage, he remains popular among many of South Africa's 24 million blacks.

Zenani Dlamini, 23, the elder of Mandela's two daughters, said the examination of her father will be conducted by family-appointed doctors from Baragwanath Hospital, a medical center for blacks in the Johannesburg township of Soweto.

Worries about Mandela's health surfaced Sept. 6 when the Prisons Department reported he had been examined by a urologist.

Five days later, his daughter told reporters after visiting her father in Cape Town's Pollsmoor Prison that the government-appointed urologist urged Mandela to undergo surgery.

She did not specify what type of operation was needed, but said Mandela told her he suffered from a swollen prostate and had cysts on his liver and right kidney.

A one-time policeman, boxer and lawyer, Mandela helped found the armed wing of the African National Congress, the main guerrilla organization trying to end white-minority rule in South Africa.

In the latest reports of black unrest, police said today a mob killed a black policeman in a township near Port Elizabeth also named Soweto.

Nearby in Zwide, police said they shot and killed a black man who was throwing stones at a police car.

The burned body of a 23-year-old black man was found in Port Elizabeth's New Brighton township on Sunday, police said.

They said the man's killers had placed a tire around his neck and doused him with gasoline, a frequent form of retaliation used by blacks against other blacks suspected of collaborating with the government.

The military announced Sunday it had withdrawn about 500 soldiers from Angola, ending a weeklong assault during which they disrupted the command structure and supply lines of a South-West African rebel organization and killed 15 guerrillas.

Maj. Gen. George Meiring said the force also captured 49 members of the South-West African People's Organization rebel force that is fighting for the independence of South-West Africa, or Namibia, from South African rule.

The South African force caused "large-scale disruption" of the rebels' command structure and supply lines in Marxist Angola, he said. South Africa says Angola, to the north of South-West Africa, is a base for the rebel organization.

A leading anti-apartheid activist, the Rev. Allan Boesak, told his congregation at the Bellville Dutch Reformed Church near Cape Town on Sunday that he would resist proponents of apartheid "to the very end."

The mixed-race clergyman, president of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, was detained without charge by authorities on Aug. 27 and held until Friday.

The government then charged him with subversion and organizing a banned gathering, and released him on bail.

Deng warns capitalism threat to China's future

PEKING (AP) — Communist Party leaders closed a special party conference today by sternly warning newly elected subordinates that the "pernicious influence" of capitalism and corruption threatens China's future.

In one of his toughest speeches, 81-year-old leader Deng Xiaoping said, "only socialism can eliminate the greediness, corruption and injustice which are inherent in capitalism."

Despite production gains as China has opened to the West in recent years, Deng said "the pernicious influence of capitalism and feudalism has not been reduced to a minimum. Instead, some evil things that have long been extinct after liberation have come to life again."

Following recent million-dollar scandals and corruption cases, Deng urged all 40 million party members to examine their values and actions. He said party propagandists should oppose "bourgeois liberalism, that is, publicity that favors taking the capitalist road."

His Politburo Standing Committee colleague, conservative economist Chen Yun, 80, decried what he called "some people, including some party members, who have forsaken the socialist and communist ideal and turned their backs on the people."

Both demanded a return to ideological purity and Marxist theory as China proceeds with Deng's open-door economic reforms.

They spoke at the conclusion of a six-day meeting convened to replace 131 retiring elders with a new generation. Delegates elected 91 younger, better-educated members to the Central Committee and installed 87 others in advisory and disciplinary bodies.

The personnel changes were part of Deng's drive to rejuvenate the party leadership and promote talented people to carry out economic reforms.

Conference spokesman Zhu Muzhi announced the revised Central Committee, with 210 full members and 133 alternates, will meet Tuesday to elect newcomers to the Politburo and secretariat.

Ten of the 24 Politburo seats now are vacant, and several members of the party secretariat are expected to advance into the party's most powerful organ.

Recalling his seven years in power dismantling Mao Tse-tung's radical policies, Deng told the 936 delegates it was one of the best periods in communist China's 36-year history.

"It has not been easy to make it so. We have done mainly two things — we have set wrong things right, and we have launched the comprehensive reform," he said.

OPEN ART

Text by Mark Lewis

This war memorial was put up by the federal government in the mid-1970s.

"Solo" stands by itself in front of the Summit building.

Unlike the original, no scaffolding obscures this Statue of Liberty in front of the County Courthouse.

Throughout history, princes and potentates have put up public sculptures for the edification of the masses. The average person could hardly walk more than a block in ancient Rome without stumbling over several classical objects d'art, while on the streets of Renaissance Florence, a masterpiece by Michelangelo or Donatello was as familiar a sight as a 7-Eleven or Stop 'n Go is today.

But then somebody invented the museum. Putting four walls around the goods and charging admission was a great leap forward for museum curators but a net minus for the masses, who were left without daily contact with great works of art.

But in downtown Midland, oilmen Cyril Wagner and Jack Brown have resurrected the public statue: "Solo," by Connecticut artist Charles O. Perry, was erected in June in front of the Summit Building, 300 N. Marienfeld. Better known locally as "That Red Thing," this striking piece of sculpture was put up because, like the merchant princes of Renaissance Florence, "Wagner and Brown wanted to give something to the town in the way of art," said their secretary, Kim Young.

Tom Wolfe, that overdressed cultural curmudgeon, has complained that modern public art is too abstract. His point is that an oil-business building should feature oil-related art, such as a derrick or a roughneck or a "For Sale — See FDIC" sign. But Ms. Young likes "Solo" just the way it is.

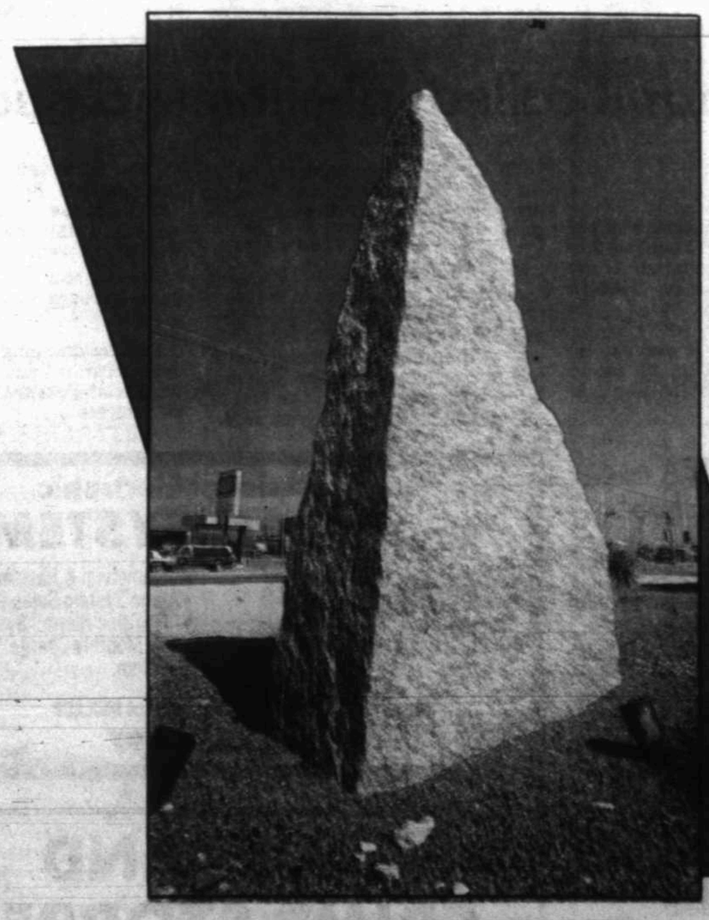

"There doesn't have to be a meaning," she said. "It's a beautiful piece of art."

Slightly less abstract is the war-memorial sculpture in front of the Federal Building, 200 E. Wall. It's a concrete block with a gray-metal latticework around the top, which may represent crosses, barbed wire or a crown of thorns, depending on one's point of view.

Dedicated to "The American Soldier," it reads: "I have kept the faith. I have fought the good fight. I have finished the course."

Less somber but equally patriotic is the replica of the Statue of Liberty which stands in front of the Midland County Courthouse. It was put up by the Boy Scouts in 1950 to celebrate their 40th anniversary, according to a plaque fastened to its base.

PUC officials abused privileges, paper says

DALLAS (AP) — Top Public Utility Commission officials have taken advantage of loopholes in state travel policies to treat themselves to expensive hotels, costly meals and expenses that were not documented with receipts, according to a published report.

The Dallas Times Herald reported Sunday that in the past year, commission officials have used their state travel privileges to make side trips to New Orleans, go to a resort in Palm Springs, Calif., and take numerous $30 cab rides to expensive restaurants.

The travel habits of the PUC, the state's watchdog over utility rates and utility company expenditures, emerged in a Times Herald examination of airline receipts and expense vouchers filed by the three-member commission and its staff since September 1984.

The expenses come at a time of a state budget crunch and when the PUC is under political pressure to keep utility rates low. The commission in a recent rate case prohibited electric company executives from charging ratepayers for expenses similar to those filed on PUC expense accounts.

During the past year, PUC staff members or commissioners went to more than 50 conventions, conferences and seminars in Los Angeles, Washington, Boston, Chicago, New York and other spots, often with delegations of five to eight people.

The period of travel examined was during the tenure of former Executive Director Jay Stewart.

His employment with the PUC began in October 1984, when he left a similar position in Mississippi, and ended with his resignation earlier this month to accept a job in San Francisco.

In his 11 months in Texas, he had more than $10,000 in personal travel expenses, the Times Herald reported. Stewart would not discuss the travel expenses, and commissioners said his resignation was not caused by the expenses.

Two PUC commissioners told the newspaper that the agency wants all employees and the commissioners to travel as economically as possible.

"If, in fact, they could have done it cheaper, they were not fulfilling our policy," Chairman Phil Ricketts said.

Ricketts, who said he was not familiar with the expenditures of individual staff members, said the extensive travel reflected a deliberate attempt by the agency to gain a "national presence" on utility issues.

Commissioner Peggy Rosson said the PUC may have been "remiss" in not scrutinizing its executive director's travel. She said the commissioners had decided to direct him to curtail his extensive travel, but he announced his resignation on the day they planned to discuss it with him.

"We were a day late and a dollar short there," she said.

Most state employees are limited to a daily travel allowance of $15 for meals and $55 for lodging. But agency heads — and any staff members traveling with them — are exempted from those restrictions.

In addition, many of the PUC expenses billed to taxpayers were not accompanied by receipts, a practice allowed under state regulations. There are several cases of officials spending nearly $100 a day on taxi and meal costs with no receipts.

Ricketts said the authority for approving and arranging travel for the commission staff rested with Stewart, who participated in much of the travel. Stewart also oversaw expense accounts.

Among the expenses the Times Herald said it documented:

— Last January, Stewart, Utility Evaluation Director Doug Divine, Engineering Director Sam Skinner and a PUC senior financial analyst charged the state $129.60 each for rooms at the Palm Desert Resort and Country Club in Palm Springs, where they were attending a full-day seminar.

On the day of the seminar, however, room receipts show Stewart played golf. He didn't charge the state for his green fees.

All told, the PUC spend more than $3,000 to attend the one-day seminar.

"I think probably we would not be attending these things like that very often, if at all, in the future," Ricketts said.

— In November 1984, Stewart rented a $138.60-a-night room at the Westin Bonaventure in Los Angeles so he could be at the headquarters of the National Association of Regulatory Utility Commissioner annual convention.

Seven Texas officials went to the convention.

Woman hopes award in incest case helps others

CORSICANA (AP) — Shelley Sessions, who says she had to pay for her father's crime, hopes her victory in a $10 million lawsuit against him for sexual assault will help other incest victims and abate their shame.

Miss Sessions, 18, said she spent a year in a girls' home and days suffering verbal abuse in a sometimes tortuous trial that ended Aug. 30 when a civil court jury awarded her one of the largest settlements in an incest victim's suit.

"I paid for his crime," she said. "I was locked up, and he was free."

Miss Sessions was sent to the church-sponsored Rebekah Home for Girls in Corpus Christi by her mother shortly after Bob Sessions was sentenced to five months in a psychiatric hospital and 10 years of probation.

During her confinement, she said she pledged to fight the system that made her appear "guilty" for the years of abuse she suffered.

"Justice is jutice," Miss Sessions had said after her victory. "If the (criminal) court makes a mistake, it needs to be corrected. I just want people to know the truth."

Miss Sessions now lives in Corsicana, south of Dallas, with a supportive aunt. But her battle with her father and family could be resurrected.

Sessions says he may appeal the civil court decision. If he does not appeal, details for payment of the $10 million still need to be worked out.

Sessions, an oil company executive, construction company owner and cattle breeder, adopted Miss Sessions when he married her mother in 1969. In court, Miss Sessions testified that her adoptive father began making sexual advances when she was 8 years old.

When she became 13, she testified, he began molesting her on a daily basis. Miss Sessions said her fear and confusion kept her trapped in the situation.

"She feared physical abuse if she spoke about her problems to anyone. She said there was a time he threatened to murder her, holding a pistol to her," Richardson-based psychotherapist Leslie Carter said in a court deposition.

Sessions admitted in court to engaging in sexual intercourse with her up to 500 times.

Privileges and possessions came at a high cost. Miss Sessions explained that financing for her pickup truck cost a specific number of "turns" for her father. She said her father made her engage in particular sexual acts before getting his permission to attend cheerleading practice or a party.

Miss Sessions frequently argued with her parents and began running away trying to get her mother to stop the sexual abuse, but nothing changed.

"She wasn't rebelling," said her aunt, Betty Duval. "She was screaming for help."

In May 1983 Miss Sessions told a minister and the sheriff and later that day her father shot himself in the chest. He pleaded guilty to a single charge of sexual assault on a child while recovering from the gunshot wound. He was sentenced to 10 years probation on the condition he enter a Dallas psychiatric hospital. Five months later he was released.

Meanwhile, Miss Sessions' mother sent her to Rebekah home, telling her she was going someplace safe from her father, Miss Sessions said. She says her mother deceived her.

"Alarms, bars, fences, barbed wire, microphones in your bedroom, solitary confinement. It's a prison,"

A year later she returned to her father's ranch and two days following her return, Miss Sessions ran away for good.

"They expected me to pretend nothing ever happened," Miss Sessions said. "My mother still doesn't know everything that happened. She doesn't care to know."

But not all of Midland's outdoor artworks have such an obvious inspiration. Several miles west of the courthouse, on the traffic island formed where U.S. Highway 80 separates into Wall Avenue and Front Street, sits a peculiar grouping of granite slabs which might have been patterned after Stonehenge.

The stones have an ageless air about them, as though they'd been left in place when the Permian Sea receded eons ago. But no local group of Druids ever daubed on blue paint and danced in the moonlight between these slabs, unless they did it since 1974, when the stones were quarried and trucked to Midland from Marble Falls.

"It was a landscaping project to dress up that island," said Elder McCarty of the U.S. Highway Department. The slabs are set in a field of red gravel within a field of white gravel, and around each stone are several spotlights designed to set them off at night. There are, however, no light bulbs in the lamps.

From a nearby window at Sloan Bagwell furniture, Don Bagwell looked at the stones and remembered the day a truck showed up at the quarry where he was working in the summer of 1974 to cart them off to Midland.

"They were heavy — God, they were heavy," he said, laughing at the coincidence which brought him to the very same intersection several years later.

"Texas pink granite is what it is," Bagwell said of the slabs, which bear the man-made scars of the effort which tore them from the earth. Despite their size and unusual shape, the granite monument doesn't seem to have much impact on most passers-by, he noted.

"You kind of just take it for granted."

Ouch.

Midlander critically injured in motorcycle accident dies

From Staff Reports

A 21-year-old Midland man critically injured Thursday in an Ector County motorcycle accident died Friday in Odessa Medical Center Hospital.

Jeffrey Dean Cradoct, 2202 Mark Lane, had been injured about 5:05 p.m. Thursday while crossing the intersection of 42nd Street and Roscoe Avenue in Ector County on his 1981 Kawasaki motorcycle. He struck a trailer being hauled by a 1980 Ford pickup driven by Clifford Geash of Odessa, according to the Department of Public Safety.

Midland police reported a Sunday motorcycle accident with injuries at the intersection of Big Spring Street and Loop 250, but the 19-year-old motorcycle driver and his passenger were apparently not treated, reports said.

Randall Handley, 2504 Emerson, ran a red light light while traveling east on the Loop, hitting a 1979 Oldsmobile Cutlass driven by Thomas Brice, 504 W. Storey, according to police. Brice was heading north on Big Spring at 4:56 p.m. when the accident occurred.

Handley and his 20-year-old passenger, Melissa Atkins, were injured, but apparently were not treated, according to police and hospital reports.

In other reports from law-enforcement agencies, property worth about $1,200 was reported stolen by Jose Angel Moreno, 206 E. Price. A $600 rifle, a $150 rifle, a $150 shotgun, a $130 car stereo, a $120 pair of binoculars and a $50 hunting knife were taken in a Sunday burglary of Moreno's vehicle, reports said.

Leticia Ortega, 3218 Hill St., reported the loss of a $250 water bed, a $125 food processor and other items for a total loss of about $435 in a Saturday night burglary which occurred at 1214 E. Oak Ave., reports said.

Odessa store clerk in ICU after stabbing

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A 62-year-old convenience store clerk, stabbed during the robbery of a northside store Saturday afternoon, was in stable condition in the intensive care unit at Medical Center Hospital today.

According to the Ector County Sheriff's Office, Mary Teakell was stabbed twice about 1:50 p.m. Saturday by a man who entered the Quik-Stop Grocery.

Sheriff's investigators indicated the man who allegedly stabbed the clerk took a money box containing an undetermined amount of money.

Reports indicate the suspect is tall, with blonde hair and a moustache. He was wearing blue jeans and driving a green Plymouth.

Investigators indicated there were two small girls waiting in the car while the man entered the store.

Sheriff's deputies continue to investigate additional allegations against a 31-year-old Bowie Junior High School choir director, jailed Friday on two charges of aggravated sexual assault of a child and a third charge of indecency with a child.

Anthony Spann remained in the Ector County Jail in lieu of $30,000 bond today. Spann was arrested Friday afternoon.

According to child abuse investigator Roy Gladden, the incidents have occurred over the past several years and involved at least three boys ranging in age from 12 to 17-years-old.

New landfill called 'phenomenal success'

From Staff Reports

The daily tonnage of refuse dumped at Midland's new sanitary landfill is averaging 410 tons, according to Jim Roberts, sanitarian for the Midland City-County Health Department.

The tonnage is a 20 percent increase over the amount of refuse dumped at the old landfill near Cole Park a year ago.

"It apparently has been a phenomenal success," Roberts said. "People are putting it where it needs to be put."

The 400-acre dump site was opened Sept. 3. Entrance to the landfill is off Texas Highway 158 — Garden City Highway — 6.8 miles southeast of the highway's juncture with Interstate Highway 20. The old landfill is to be covered with two feet of topsoil and seeded with grass seeds.

"The advertising campaign was phenomenal," Roberts said in citing the increase in refuse tonnage dumped at the new site. "It did phenomenally well."

The city and private trash haulers dump garbage and other refuse at the site.

Fees for dumping at the site are 50 cents a carload and $1.25 per pickup truck load. Fees are higher for heavier vehicles.

Businessman: TEA needs to go back to school

EL PASO (AP) — The Texas Education Agency needs to take a spelling test, in the opinion of an El Paso businessman.

William Roberts said he was a bit amused when he saw an agency brochure that had been distributed to students at Coronado High School.

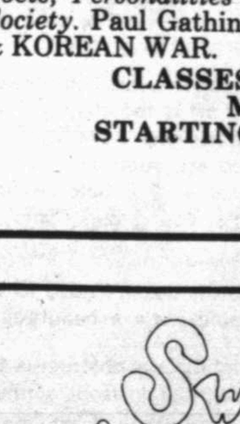

The 15-page brochure had sample questions that will be asked in a new statewide test of basic skills in school districts this year.

It was the following sample question that caught Roberts' attention:

Which, if any, of the following three words is mispelled?

A. imediately
B. appreciation
C. commercial
D. None of the above

"They're trying to teach kids to spell properly and they misspell the word 'misspell' themselves," Roberts said. "I got a big kick out of it. They ought to do better than that."

AIDS strikes San Francisco's gay population hard

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the second in a six-part series running through Friday on how various cities are coping with AIDS.

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — San Francisco has the country's second highest total of AIDS victims, behind only New York. Not surprisingly, for a city that for years has been a mecca to homosexuals, 98 percent of the cases are gay or bisexual men.

The remaining 2 percent fall within the now well-known profile of intravenous drug users, hemophiliacs and others who receive blood transfusions, and children of high-risk users.

The baffling illness has killed 706 people here in four years.

Officials estimate 15 percent of the city's approximately 720,000 residents are gay men and at high risk of getting AIDS.

"Everyone I know talks about 'safe sex' and how he has altered his lifestyles for sex," said Tim Wolfred, executive director of the AIDS Foundation.

There have been other changes. As out-of-town homosexuals pour into the city seeking medical help for AIDS, others flee the tight-knit gay community and the potential for contracting AIDS that casual sex appears to foster.

Many who remain are trying to fight the disease. "We're all in this lifeboat together," said veteran police officer Paul Siedler, a homosexual.

In August, 67 new cases of AIDS were reported, with 39 deaths attributed to the disease, said health department spokesman Paul Barnes. Altogether, 1,377 San Franciscans have contracted AIDS since July 1981.

Approximately $9 million is being spent this year by the San Francisco Board of Supervisors for AIDS tests, treatment, emergency housing, hospice programs, counseling, research and public education. The board is considering an ordinance that would ban discrimination against AIDS victims in housing and employment.

Siedler said some city police, deputies and firefighters remained apprehensive about dealing with AIDS victims in the street, on the job and in jail, so the San Francisco Sheriff's Department is preparing an educational training tape.

When a test to indicate exposure to the HTLV-III virus, widely believed to cause AIDS, was offered at no cost, early surveys said 70 percent of the city's homosexuals would take it. But only a fraction of that number have been tested due to fears about confidentiality, according to private health consultant and former city health director Dr. Mervyn Silverman.

"Even so, I think there's been an incredible change in behavior," Silverman said, citing reports that 80 percent of the city's gay and bisexual men have moderated sexual practices to guard against AIDS.

"If there were a real solid diagnostic test and if there were anti-viral drugs, I think people would be rushing to take the tests," Wolfred said.

Gay men from around the country are coming here with hopes of more informed medical care, said Siedler.

San Francisco General Hospital established an AIDS ward in 1983. The ward averages 27 to 30 patients today, said spokeswoman Gloria Rodriguez. "We feel very strongly about the fact that we are probably the most experienced hospital in the country with AIDS patients."

Death crashes perpetual party on Castro Street

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Death has crashed the perpetual party on Castro Street, the gay enclave that used to be a weekend crush of bodies cruising for sun and sex.

In the four years since AIDS began ravaging the gay community here and across the country, hedonism has been supplanted by health, promiscuity by survival tactics, say people who live and work in the Castro District.

Vitamin stores are beginning to outnumber ice cream shops. The bars complain about slow business. And the weekend brings out volunteers who staff booths offering information about AIDS and setting up discussion groups.

"AIDS has had a huge impact on the personality of Castro Street," said Sam Puckett, who has lived in the area for 15 years. "There's a general de-emphasis on sex, and on sexual attractiveness. The sexual vibes have just decreased dramatically.

"The purpose of going there now might be quite different than going there a few years ago. People are there to shop, people are there to do ordinary things that one goes to a business district to do. It's less of a four-block party area," he added.

At the Twin Peaks Bar at the mouth of the Castro, there's a yellow can on the counter where patrons can contribute to the fight against acquired immune deficiency syndrome. Bartender Paul Walliker says things are quieter now than in years past.

At Cliff's Variety, a neighborhood institution, co-owner Martha Asten can see the changes from her office window overlooking Castro Street.

"It doesn't seem to be as crazy as it used to," she said. "It's definitely calmed down. People are finally becoming more aware of what they're doing to themselves, the consequences of it."

Realtors say dozens of properties have come on the market because the owners have died of AIDS.

"I started seeing more of them a year and a half ago, but I didn't really relate it to AIDS," said Allen James Brown, a realtor at the neighborhood's Zephyr Real Estate. "I'm seeing pictures on walls of very young people who are dying."

And buyers in the Castro are not necessarily homosexual anymore, realtors said. Families, many of whom moved out when gay gentrification of the Castro began in the '70s, are returning.

"I'm seeing families coming back," said Asten, who lives with her husband, Ernie, and two children not far from Cliff's. "There are a lot more little kids around the neighborhood."

Darren Sack, a 16-year-old hemophiliac who has been exposed to AIDS, poses with father David and mother Robin.

Boy faces AIDS, hemophilia

PLYMPTON, Mass. (AP) — Pain was Darren Sack's childhood companion.

Because his blood would not clot, he wore a hockey helmet when he was learning to walk because he was always injuring himself. Once he was hurt so severely that his father didn't recognize his grotesquely swollen head.

Darren's mother, Robin, said she "broke down and cried," when tests verified her son was among the nation's 20,000 hemophiliacs, even though she is a nurse and had grown up with a brother who also had hemophilia.

The Sacks resolved, however, that their child would lead a normal life. They persuaded teachers to treat him like anyone else and allow him to take part in sports.

Then a year ago the family learned Darren had been exposed to AIDS through one of the blood injections required to induce clotting.

"In the beginning it was scary because nobody could tell you very much about it except that it was a killer," said Mrs. Sack. "Then they say Darren has a positive antibody. At first they couldn't tell us what that meant."

The antibody combats the AIDS virus. Doctors said Darren is at low risk of getting AIDS because of his good health and because of advances in technology in making the blood plasma concentrate known as Factor 8 that hemophiliacs require.

"We hear that they're coming up with new ideas, new theories," said Mrs. Sack. "One minute everything seems fine, the next minute you get real depressed again. ... We try not to get too high and too low during those times."

Darren, 16 and a junior in high school, does not permit the threat to restrict him.

"No, I'm not going to stop taking my medicine," he said. "There's nothing I can do about it. I just do whatever I did before."

Darren went public this summer on Boston television.

"It was telling people he had hemophilia, No. 1, and then obviously this AIDS thing is No. 2," said his father, David Sack. "But many people don't know he has hemophilia. We're sort of afraid to tell some people because of the way they react, such as where he works ...

"Over the years, we educated people and people don't treat him any different. We've gone through an awful lot in school."

Sack said the family tried not to worry about the threat of AIDS, but has been disturbed at public reaction to some victims. He spoke of Ryan White, a 13-year-old hemophiliac who was barred from school in Indiana after contracting AIDS.

"It's bad enough that he has hemophilia. It's bad enough that he has AIDS," he said. "For a family to go through that is bad enough, but for them to ban him from school is just totally irresponsible."

Darren has not had such problems.

Children abandoned, isolated

Associated Press

Mothers abandon them. Playmates shun them. Schools reject them. Some doctors touch them only with rubber gloves.

They are children with AIDS — young victims of an incurable disease that savages their bodies, steals their minds and stunts their growth. Before it kills them, it breaks the hearts of those who love them.

These children are outcasts. Most aren't old enough to understand their disease. But for those who do, life moves to the dull beat of rejection and loneliness.

Thirteen-year-old Ryan White has been barred from his Indiana school. He sits alone in his bedroom, listening to his teachers and classmates by phone.

Matthew Kozup, 2½, isn't allowed to play with other children at his Virginia home. His mother hugs him, but won't kiss him. His older sister, Sarah, isn't even allowed to touch him.

And Dwight Burk has endured much of the 17 months of his painful life in a sterile hospital room in Pennsylvania.

"No one could dream for a day how bad it is," said Jeanne White, mother of Ryan White, who became ill during treatment for hemophilia.

"It's been a disaster for my family," said Susan Kozup, whose son contracted AIDS through contaminated blood. He was born too early, weighing less than 3 pounds, and the blood was meant to give him life.

"I would never want this to happen to someone else," Mrs. Kozup added. "I have so much anger in me, I could just scream."

THE NATIONAL Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta has tallied 165 cases of AIDS among American children under 13, although doctors estimate hundreds more probably have milder forms of the disease and others will develop it.

"We're just seeing the tip of the iceberg," said Dr. Andrew Urbach, a pediatrician at Children's Hospital in Pittsburgh who is treating Dwight Burk. "There have been so many exposures. With more adults getting it, there's going to be more kids getting it."

While AIDS in adults often is linked to chosen lifestyles, such as homosexuality or drug abuse, children contract AIDS passively. Most get AIDS from an infected parent. Others, such as hemophiliacs, ironically get the fatal disease while receiving life-saving treatment.

For children with AIDS, there often is little support beyond loving families and friends, if they have them.

These children "are a real disenfranchised group," said Roger Cunningham, general manager of the AIDS Medical Foundation in New York. "There really is no one speaking up for the kids. We have kids in hospitals who've never known home. They could go home, but they have no home to go to."

Some drug addict mothers have left their babies in hospitals and never returned, Cunningham said. In New York, he noted, more than a dozen infected children have no homes.

A special day care and health center is being established for AIDS youngsters and their families at the Albert Einstein Medical College Hospital in New York.

A foster care home for AIDS children is also being planned in Virginia by Dr. Elisabeth Kubler-Ross, who built an international reputation for her work with dying people.

AIDS was first identified among homosexuals, and now gay men sometimes volunteer to care for unwanted, dying youngsters.

"THEY ARE just picking them up and changing their diapers, taking them for a walk and nurturing them," said Richard Dunne, executive director of the Gay Men's Health Crisis in New York.

Slightly more than one AIDS victim in 100 is 13 or younger, and 80 percent to 90 percent of these are under 5, the CDC says. Sixty-one teen-agers are known to have AIDS.

Seven of every 10 reported pediatric cases involve children of AIDS victims or of parents described by health officials as being at increased risk of contracting AIDS, such as hemophiliacs and drug abusers.

Nearly 70 percent of AIDS children have died. That figure is higher than the 50 percent overall mortality rate, but health officials say that probably just reflects earlier detection among adults.

Children with AIDS often don't grow or mature. It's called "failure to thrive" and is comparable to weight loss in adults with the disease, said Dr. Brian Novick, assistant clinical professor of pediatrics at Albert Einstein.

Some children also won't walk or talk — and if they do, they may come to a point where they can't anymore.

That's what happened to Dwight Burk. "He's gone from standing, sitting and talking to laying," said his mother, Lauren. "That's all he does. He can't even hold his head up. ... If he reaches his arms up, if he smiles, we've accomplished something."

AIDS itself does not usually kill the victim. Sufferers, their immune systems destroyed, instead become vulnerable to infections and cancers.

ADULTS OFTEN develop Kaposi's sarcoma, a rare skin cancer. Children are more vulnerable to viral and parasitic infections.

At the heart of the problem for young AIDS sufferers is the puzzle of how they become ill.

AIDS can apparently be transmitted through the placenta during pregnancy or from exposure to infected blood during delivery, said Dr. Martha Rogers, a CDC medical epidemiologist.

In one case, doctors suspect, AIDS virus was passed on through a mother's milk. The mother had had a transfusion after delivery.

A smaller percentage of children contract AIDS from contaminated blood transfusions or hemophilia treatments.

Ms. Rogers said studies of hundreds of people living with AIDS victims have failed to indicate any transmission of the disease through daily family contact.

But some parents remain extra cautious.

Mrs. Kozup, who lives in Herndon, Va., said she doesn't kiss her son. She wears gloves when she feeds or changes Matthew. She double wraps his used diapers, doesn't put his bottle in the dishwasher and doesn't allow her son to play with other children, including his sister.

Sarah "has a brother, yet she doesn't," Mrs. Kozup said.

Matthew, who has cerebral palsy, "doesn't have very much fun out of life," she added.

The CDC has recommended most children with AIDS be allowed in class and urged school officials to protect their privacy.

Reagan pens note to boy born with AIDS

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

It was no ordinary get-well note displayed in the window of 3-year-old Michael's room at Loma Linda Medical Center near Riverside, Calif., Friday. It was a letter from the White House.

"I know that you have been very brave through some difficult times," President Reagan wrote the boy. "The people who have worked with you have been most impressed by your strength and cheerfulness."

A hospital spokesman said that Michael, the son of a drug user, was born with acquired immune deficiency syndrome. He has been in and out of the hospital and arrived for his current stay Aug. 2.

Reagan wrote that he appreciated the boy's concern about the starving children of Africa and assured him they were being helped.

It was not clear how the president knew that Michael, who is almost 4, was worrying about the children of Africa. But the boy's aunt, Carmen Gallegos, said through the hospital spokesman that her call to the White House may have had something to do with it.

When the letter from the White House arrived and was read to him Thursday, she said, his eyes widened with pleasure. He had his aunt post it so that hospital staff members couldn't miss it as they passed his room.

Dollar plummets

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar plummeted 4-5 percent against European currencies today after finance ministers of five major industrialized nations announced a program to force the value of the dollar down. Gold bullion prices soared about $10 an ounce in response.

At midmorning, the dollar was 13 pfennigs lower against the West German mark compared with Friday, 10.5 centimes lower against the Swiss franc, 42 centimes lower against the French franc and more than 6 cents lower against the British pound.

In London, the dollar was sharply lower against the British pound. It cost $1.432 to buy one pound at midmorning, more expensive than $1.3695 late Friday. At one point early today the pound was selling for $1.4475.

Other midmorning dollar rates compared with late Friday:

—2.7275 West German marks, down from 2.8595

—2.2450 Swiss francs, down from 2.3525

—8.3025 French francs, down from 8.7250

—3.0625 Dutch guilders, down from 3.2165

—1,840.00 Italian lire, down from 1,922.50

The dollar's decline against those major currencies was between 4 percent and 5 percent.

In active trading, gold bullion prices rose in response to the dollar's decline.

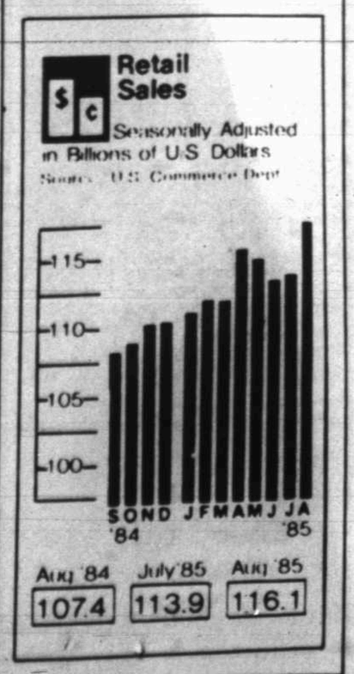

In London, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended gold price of $328.10 a troy ounce, up from $319.30 late Friday.

In Zurich, Europe's biggest bullion market, gold was selling at a bid $329.60, up from late Friday's closing bid of $319.

In Hong Kong, where trading was under way when news of the finance ministers' decision broke, gold rose the equivalent of $10.49 to close at $330.14 compared to Saturday's $319.65.

Silver bullion prices were also higher on the London market where the metal was selling at a bid $6.15 a troy ounce compared with $6.03 late Friday.

Oil overcharge settlements criticized as soft

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Energy Department is letting a Texas oil trader take home $2.7 million after-tax income a year before making him pay installments on alleged crude oil pricing overcharges, according to congressional auditors.

The General Accounting Office cited the trader's case in criticizing the department's failure to document its justification for long-term repayment schedules in settlements with several alleged violators of the former federal price controls on oil.

Through suits or settlements with more than 900 drilling, trading or refining companies, the government has won about $6 billion for alleged overcharges during the eight years oil was under a complicated maze of federal price ceilings.

The controls were instituted by former President Richard Nixon and Congress in 1973 in response to skyrocketing world oil prices. They were removed by President Reagan eight days after he took office in January 1981.

The GAO, in a report released Sunday, said its audit of 10 settlements featuring long-term repayments found unspecified interest charges sometimes being lumped into the terms to "overstate to Congress and the public the principal value of the agreements."

The report specifically criticized the settlement terms with the Texas trader, the largest single alleged violator that it audited.

The company was identified in the GAO report only as "Company F." A cross-check with Energy Department records showed it to be Langham Petroleum & Development Inc., an oil trading company based in Houston.

According to the documents, the company had a net profit before taxes of $134 million for the three years 1978 through 1980. The Energy Department alleged that $107.9 million of that net profit resulted from overpricing crude oil in violation of the federal controls.

The government settled the case with the company and its majority owner, Robert S. Langham, in April 1983 for $17.6 million, plus interest, to be paid over the following 15 years. The total value of the settlement, including interest, was put at $32 million.

But Langham personally has to make installment payments toward the settlement only when his after-tax income exceeds $2.7 million a year, an amount that the GAO said is equal to his average annual personal income from 1977 through 1980.

"The agreement with the majority owner allows him the same rate of compensation that he received during the period of his company's alleged violations of $107.9 million," the GAO said.

Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich, who requested the GAO report, complained in an accompanying letter to Energy Secretary John Herrington that the department was allowing Langham "to profit from his ill-gotten gains."

"Apparently, the DOE did not want to disturb this person's lifestyle even through it was developed through alleged illegal overcharges of customers, i.e., the public," said Dingell.

David Devane, an Energy Department spokesman, said officials would be unable to comment over the weekend on the GAO report or on Dingell's letter.

Langham, reached at his home in Houston, defended the settlement, saying he already has paid $6.8 million under it to the government and will make another $1.8 million payment in November.

He said the alleged overcharges "were temendously inflated and had no conception with reality to what people might have made."

"If you made money trading oil, you were in violation and were supposed to give it back; if you lost money on some other transaction, that was just bad business — you couldn't offset them," Langham said.

Retired Gulf official named to White House committee

By Peggy Roberson
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — Merlin Breaux has traded his office at Gulf Oil for one in the White House and is moving with his wife, Margie, from Sour Lake, Tex., to an apartment about a brisk 25-minute walk away, in the heart of the nation's capital.

Breaux was interviewed Thursday at the White House on the eve of an expected announcement that President Reagan has named him special assistant in the Office of Public Liaison.

Last Friday was his final day as vice president for industrial relations for Gulf Oil -now Chevron. At 53, he both resigned and retired. By Monday, Breaux had been handed his first White House assignment - project officer on a major public policy statement the President will deliver next Monday.

Breaux is the White House link to the business community in four areas sizzing with controversy -taxes, the federal budget, foreign trade and labor policy.

"I agonized over this a long time and finally decided to do it," Breaux said. "We don't get that many presidential appointments in East Texas."

In a White House that is trying to extend its reach to minorities, Breaux may be the only Cajun. "Yeah, I'm one of 'em," he said. He is no kin, that he knows of, to Louisiana Congressman John Breaux, a candidate for the U.S. Senate. "We might be kin 'way back there," he added.

At Gulf, Breaux negotiated the labor contacts that set the pattern for oil workers.

Business associates brought his name to the attention of White House officials.

A lifelong Democrat, he has no plans to become a Republican. "I believe I can help the President more as a Democrat," he said.

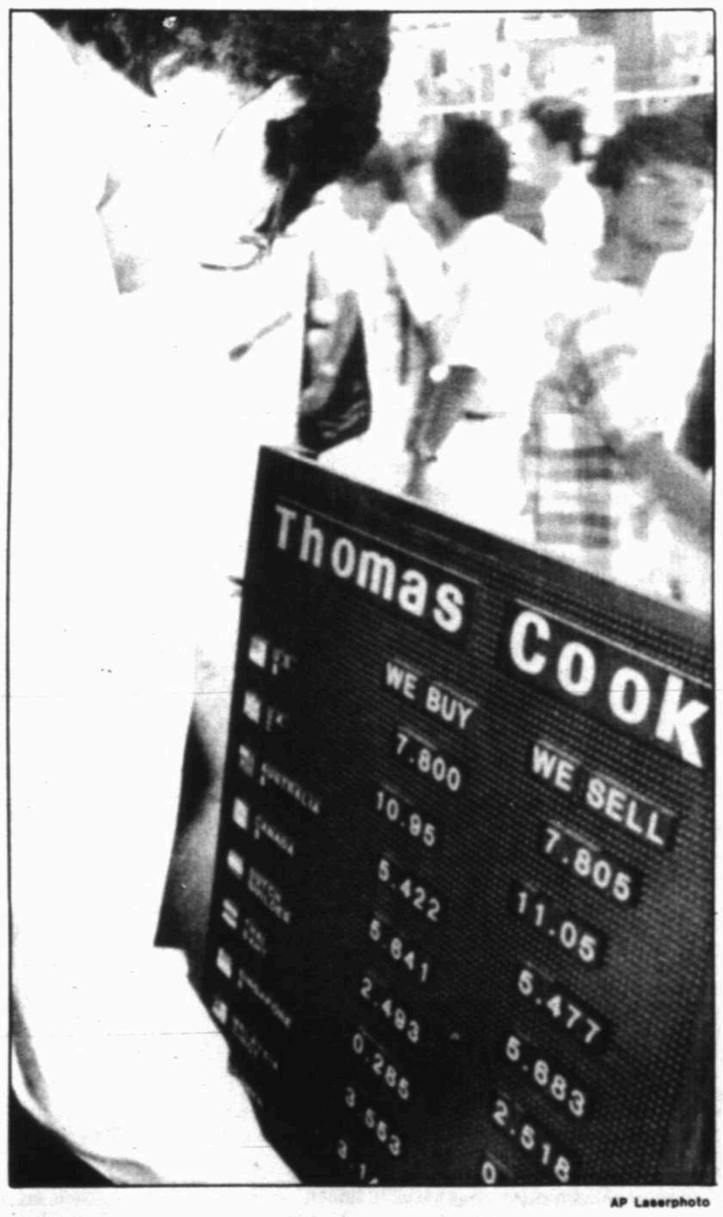

Born in Beaumont, Breaux attended South Park High School and started Lamar University on a football scholarship before he joined the Navy. He returned to Lamar expecting to become a teacher-coach. Now he is vice chairman of the university's board of regents.

To help make ends meet, Breaux took a job as a laborer at the Pure Oil refinery in Nederland and was boosted to line supervisor. "By the time I was graduated in 1958 I had eight years of experience -five of them with Pure -and they wanted to promote me," he recalled, explaining that the only teaching he did was practice teaching.

After joining Gulf, Breaux was assigned to Port Arthur, Pittsburgh and Houston before returning to Sour Lake.

Before going to Pittsburgh, he and his wife managed to care for five children -some of them small -while she earned her own degree in education at Lamar. "She helped me get my degree, and I felt like she ought to get a degree, too," Breaux said. In Pittsburgh, she taught nine years.

Today, three of the five children run a hardware store in Sour Lake. Their mother has helped them, but she is going to leave it with them and embark on an adventure in Washington.

Airline cancels its flights; files for bankruptcy

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Fort Worth Airlines has cancelled flights and filed for protection from creditors under federal bankruptcy laws.

John Y. Bonds, an attorney for the airlines, said he filed the Chapter 11 petition at 9 p.m. Sunday with Federal Bankruptcy Judge Michael McConnell.

Fort Worth Airlines operated out of Meacham Field at Fort Worth with commuter flights to Houston, Austin, San Antonio, Abilene, Oklahoma City and Tulsa and was the only airline operating out of Meacham Field.

Sheldon Srulevitch, president of the airline, said most of the 150 employees except for a few executives and maintenance personnel will be laid off during the shutdown.

Ray Haley, the airline's vice president for marketing, said the airline made its payroll Sept. 13, but he said he was not sure the company could do it again this coming Friday.

"That will depend on what the bankruptcy referee decides," Haley said.

The papers were filed only nine days after the airline's board asks cofounder Thomas King to resign as the airline's president and chief executive officer.

Board members said the move was made because of the poor financial position of the privately owned airline.

Under Chapter 11 protection, Fort Worth Air could reorganize and get back into the air much like Texas-based carriers Continental Airlines and Braniff.

Continental filed a Chapter 11 petition in 1983 and resumed operations four days later. Braniff, however, took 22 months to get back into the air after filing a Chapter 11 bankruptcy in 1982.

More information should be known on Fort Worth Air's next move in "a couple of weeks," Srulevitch said Sunday night.

The airlines recalled all four of its YS-11 turboprop planes to Fort Worth Sunday. The planes are leased from Mid Pacific Airlines in Hawaii and will remain in Fort Worth while the company tries to reorganize, Srulevitch said.

Banks may pay higher premiums

WASHINGTON (AP) — An estimated 13 percent of the nation's banks would pay higher premiums for deposit insurance under a proposal by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

Details of the risk-based premium system, a concept under discussion for several years, are spelled out in a letter from FDIC Chairman William M. Isaac to chief executives of the nation's 14,700 federally insured banks.

Risk-based premiums are among several changes being pushed by the FDIC, the agency that insures individual deposits up to $100,000 when a bank fails. Many would not require congressional action, but risk-based premiums would.

Money in the $18 billion insurance fund — up $7 billion in the last four years — comes from premiums assessed on member banks, currently one-twelfth of 1 percent of their deposits.

But because fund managers consider its size to be sufficient, 60 percent of the yearly income is rebated to banks after examination expenses and amounts paid out in connection with banks failures are subtracted.

Analyst predicts gas slide to stop

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An 11-week slide in gasoline prices should come to a halt and, in fact, spiral by 6 cents a gallon by the end of the year, an oil industry analyst says.

The forecast is based on effects of the Iraq-Iran war, rising crude oil prices, fall and winter demand for heating oil and the cost of reduconwide, the average retail price of all grades of gas, both self- and full-serve, "has fallen for the 11th consecutive week to $1.214 (per gallon), from $1.240 last July 5," Lundberg said.

During the past two weeks, the average price fell two-thirds of a cent at the retail level but nearly a full cent on the wholesale level, he said.

The performance suggests that retailers are continuing to recoup profit margins they lost between January and July, when retail gas price hikes lagged behind wholesale increases, the analyst said.

The two-week reduction in self-service gasoline prices averaged about four-fifths of a penny, twice the reduction in full-service prices.

The latest Lundberg survey found the retail price of self-serve regular leaded gas averaged $1.092 per gallon, down eight-tenths of a cent in the past two weeks. Self-service regular unleaded was $1.168, also down eight-tenths of a penny, while premium unleaded was $1.296, down nearly seven-tenths of a cent.

Full-serve regular leaded was $1.315, down nearly four-tenths of a penny; regular unleaded was $1.383, also down nearly four-tenths of a cent; and premium unleaded was $1.449, down three-tenths of a cent.

The 11-week summer slide in gas prices contradicted projections by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, which predicted pump prices would go up because of the cost of reducing lead content in leaded gas. The EPA ordered the reductions to begin after July 1.

But crude oil prices dropped during the summer months when members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countires exceeded production quotas in attempts to gain bigger shares of the market, he said.

Lundberg said oil refiners added to the price decline when they drew down their inventories.

Crude oil prices have been going up since Sept. 17, although the evidence has not shown up at the pump yet.

The Iran-Iraq war and winter heating oil demand should combine with the price-raising effects of the lead reduction to drive the price up noticeably, he said.

But it is also possible that gas prices could drop further during the next three months, Lundberg said, if OPEC nations continue to exceed production quotas.

Saudi Arabia's oil minister, Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani, recently warned other OPEC nations that if they keep exceeding production quotas, Saudi Arabia would increase its production, possibly pushing the price of crude as low as $18 a barrel from the current $27, Lundberg explained.

But the analyst says the sheik is just "rattling the cage" before an Oct. 3 OPEC meeting in Vienna. Such a drop in crude oil prices would cause international financial panic, he said.

USENCO revenues surge

USENCO, Inc., the Midland-based petroleum exploration and production company, reported revenues of $6,080,286 for the three months ended July 31. The amount compares to revenues of $635,762 for the same three months in 1984.

The company's net earnings totaled $3,362,049 for the three months, which figures to be a net earning of $.69 per share for the quarter. Earnings a year ago were $77,291, or $.016 per share.

The company attributed the gains in earnings and working capital to the purchase of Southland Royalty Co.'s interest in the Spraberry Trend Area.

Results for the nine months ended July 31 showed total revenues to be $7,964,836, up from revenues of $1,968,434 for the same period a year ago. Net earnings for the period totaled $3,876,337, or approximately $.80 per share. Revenues for the first nine months of 1984 were $1,968,434, with earnings of $363,926 or $.075 per share.

Working capital derived from operations were $5,358,674 for the first nine months of 1985, compared to $576,767 for the same period a year ago.

The $24.4 million purchase price for Southland's interests was provided by Trafalgar House Oil & Gas, Inc. USENCO received $1.5 million in cash plus an additional $1.5 million in management fees to be paid over the next 15 months as development drilling takes place. USENCO retained a 10 percent interest free of purchase cost and will be carried cost-free on all future wells drilled and completed on the properties. An active drilling program has begun with 80 development wells planned for the next 12 months. Currently two rigs are drilling, and two additional rigs will be drilling by mid-October.

The Southland purchase included working interest in 501 wells and 46,000 acres, of which 28,000 acres are undeveloped, plus royalty and mineral interest in 413 wells and 60,000 acres.

Nearly 80,000 rock, country and blues fans Sunday jammed the field of the University of Illinois Memorial Stadium in Champaign, Ill., for FarmAid, a festival to aid the nation's farmers.

Congress to focus on developing long-term U.S. agricultural policy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress will concentrate on formulating a new long-term national agriculture policy this week, with showdown votes likely in the House on the highly controversial milk and sugar price-support programs.

"This is the most important farm bill in our history," said Rep. Ron Marlenee, R-Mont., during opening debate on the massive legislation last week. "There has never been such a crisis; never has the agriculture industry in America been in such urgent need of responsible farm policy."

But Agriculture Secretary John R. Block said Sunday that the legislation pending in Congress contains "unacceptable" provisions and will need "major surgery" before it can win President Reagan's approval.

Block, appearing on NBC's "Meet the Press," said the administration wants to do "a better job of targeting" to make sure subsidies go to those farmers who need the money the most, rather than to big, high-income farms.

"The administation will be trying to do this as we work on the floors of the House and the Senate to provide major surgery to some of those bills," Block said.

"Those bills have the framework that they could work, but they have provisions that are unacceptable and they need to be stripped away, and we need to see some adjustments," Block said.

The 1985 farm bill will dominate action during a week shortened and interrupted by Wednesday's Yom Kippur holiday, but the Senate could act on "Superfund" legislation and an anti-abortion rider to an appropriations bill for the District of Columbia.

In addition, the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee will hold hearings on Tuesday to confirm James C. Miller III as President Reagan's new director of the Office of Management and Budget.

The House floor will be the first battleground for the farm bill, which has been the subject of sharp philosophical disagreements over how to best remedy agriculture's five-year slump. The full Senate is expected to begin work on its version of the bill next week.

Consumer groups, the Farm Bureau, food companies and the Reagan administration are teaming up to attack the House bill's dairy section, which would revive a system paying milk farmers to cut their production and would maintain relatively high price supports tied to farmers' costs of production.

Under the proposal written by the National Milk Producers Federation, the so-called "diversion payments" would be financed through an assessment on all producers of about 40 cents per hundred pounds of milk (about 12 gallons).

"If there is any glimmer of hope in the agriculture program, it is in the dairy area," said Rep. James Jeffords, R-Vt., arguing for the provision last week. Jeffords and other supporters argue that the policy would keep down surpluses and thus government's cost of buying up milk to prop up prices.

An alternative backed by Reagan and consumer groups will be offered by Rep. James Olin, D-Va., and House Minority Leader Robert Michel, R-Ill. The amendment would simply cut dairy price support levels beginning next year if surpluses exceed certain trigger levels.

A similar effort in 1983 failed, and the dairy lobby, which is one of the most generous congressional campaign contributors, has a long record of prevailing on legislation it supports.

Some of the same consumer interests also would like to shrink the sugar industry's subsidies, and will attempt to do so through an amendment by Reps. Tom Downey, D-N.Y., and Willis Gradison, R-Ohio.

Current sugar law guarantees producers prices for their output that are far higher than world prices. The current support level is 18 cents per pound, compared with a world price of about 4 cents.

FarmAid concert sprouts money, publicity for struggling farmers

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — Financially strapped American farmers reaped publicity from FarmAid, but the immediate cash harvest was less than $10 million from the big-name benefit concert that rocked the heartland with country, blues and rock 'n' roll.

"It went great. I'm real happy. It exceeded my expectations," Willie Nelson, the driving force behind FarmAid, told The Associated Press early today as he boarded his bus to leave the stadium after the marathon concert.

Nelson said telephone pledges during Sunday's concert totaled about $5 million, according to Walt Adams of The Nashville Network, a cable system that carried 12 hours of the concert live to 25 million subscribing households.

Another $4 million was raised before the first note sounded, through ticket sales and corporate donations. Concert organizers had said earlier they hoped to raise up to $50 million to help the nation's struggling farmers.

Concert publicists said they expected the flow of FarmAid money to continue, by telephone and mail, for weeks or even months.

An audience of more than 78,000 packed the University of Illinois football stadium, weathering hours of rain with good humor. They danced, swayed and sang along to 14 hours of music that ranged from the hard rock of the Blasters and Eddie Van Halen to the classical country of George Jones, the blues of B.B. King and the vintage '60s rockabilly of Roy Orbison.

More than 50 performers and groups donated their talents to FarmAid.

"Thank you very much for coming to the concert for America," Nelson shouted as the show began on a stage flanked by huge banners reading "Keep America Growing."

Willie Nelson

The rain began soon after the concert started, but most of the audience shrugged it off.

"A once-in-a-lifetime thing like this, how could you miss it?" said Ken Lewis of Bloomington. "What's a little rain? We'll dry out tomorrow."

The downpour stopped in time for prime-time performances.

Students, children, bikers and farmers cheered and chanted together to the music. There was square dancing on the 30 yard line, a twinkling lighter-and-match display during a Neil Young song, a sing-along to the Beach Boys' "Help Me Rhonda," and a final dazzling burst of fireworks.

Organizers and artists said the concert would make city folks more aware of problems down on the farm, but some of the fans weren't so sure they'd been enlightened.

"I really just came for the music," said Tom Woodburn of Port Byron.

During the telecast, viewers were asked to call 1-800-FARM-AID with pledges of money. The call for pledges also was carried over 156 commercial stations during three prime-time hours of the concert syndicated by TNN.

Nelson has said he hopes to use the FarmAid money for cash grants to needy farmers, legal aid, counseling and job training, a nationwide information hotline and a campaign to increase awareness of farm problems.

He said raising money is only one FarmAid goal. The other is spreading the word about the farmer's plight — reminding urbanites of their links to the nation's food producers.

"When the family farm goes, so goes the family service station down the street and the family grocery and the used-car lot," Nelson said.

At least 25 percent of the nation's farmers are in serious financial trouble, experts say.

"Do I consider FarmAid a success? Sure, look at all the press we have here," said singer Billy Joel, gesturing toward some of the hundreds of reporters on hand, the banks of television cameras and microphones.

Some of the complexities and pain of some farmers' woes seemed far away as music and thunderous applause filled the stadium, although singer John Fogerty told the audience:

"Next time you sit down to a meal remember it didn't come in a cellophane bag from Safeway, some farmer put his whole life into growing that food."

Reagan on collision course with Congress over trade measures

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, maintaining an apparent collision course with Congress, is prepared to unveil a package of trade measures designed to open more foreign markets to U.S. goods and to coax down the relative value of the dollar.

Administration officials said the president's plan, to be outlined in a speech at the White House today, would not deviate from Reagan's frequently expressed opposition to "protectionist" legislation now progressing in both the House and Senate.

And, other than a plan for a $300 million "warchest" to help subsidize selected U.S. exports, the president's speech will contain little in the way of major new legislation, said administration officials who spoke on the condition of anonymity.

That is likely to provoke new criticism in Congress, where support for import restraint legislation has been building steadily.

The president's speech will call for a new effort to stablize the value of the dollar against foreign currencies, including a call for a high-level meeting among industrial nations to discuss exchange-rate problems, the officials said.

The administration has contended all along that the nation's trade imbalance, inching toward $150 billion this year, is largely the result of an overvalued dollar on foreign currency exchanges.

Reagan's speech may also outline new procedures for intervening in currency markets to try to help bring the value of the dollar more into line with other major currencies, the officials said.

Finance ministers from the five major industrialized nations agreed on Sunday to back steps to strengthen key European currencies and the Japanese yen against the U.S. dollar.

"These measures will promote greater convergence in economic performance toward non-inflationary growth which can contribute to a strengthening of non-dollar currencies," Treasury Secretary James Baker III told a news conference in New York.

Baker did not mention whether these steps would include a more active U.S. role in buying and selling currencies, but a top administration official who spoke on the condition of anonymity said such a course had been tentatively charted in advance of the Sunday meeting.

Otherwise, the president's overhauled trade policy will include a number of proposals for strengthening existing trading laws to make it easier for the government to move in instances of unfair trading practices abroad.

And it will express a commitment to move more vigorously in negotiating with Japan and other trading partners to drop barriers to U.S. goods, the officials said.

Reagan's speech will "spell out further the president's concern that unfair trade not be allowed to impair the worldwide free trading system," said White House deputy press secretary Larry Speakes.

Here are the major elements of the administration plan, according to administration and congressional sources:

— Legislation to strengthen the hand of the U.S. trade representative in cases involving unfair trading practices by foreign nations.

— A $300 million "warchest" for the Export-Import Bank to help subsidize loan rates to selected U.S. manufacturers having difficulty selling their products abroad. The subsidy would amount to the difference between the going U.S. rates and lower rates that some foreign countries can get to help them merchandize exports.

— A strengthening of U.S. laws to provide more direct retaliation in dumping cases — where foreign goods are "dumped" on U.S. markets at prices below the cost of manufacturing the items.

— Measures to make it harder for foreign nations to find markets in this country for goods with "counterfeit" trademarks.

— A renewed push for new round of trade negotiations of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT).

— More active use of an existing program that would help subsidize U.S. agricultural exports to make them more competitive with farm products that have foreign-government subsidies — particularly from Western Europe.

Hydrants shut off, paper reports

PASSAIC, N.J. (AP) — Firefighters lost at least 10 minutes in fighting the Labor Day blaze that wiped out a quarter of this city's industrial base because 20 percent of the fire hydrants in the vicinity were shut off, a newspaper reports.

Fire Chief Kenneth Peterson said that for the past three years he has ordered 136 of the city's 680 hydrants turned off in June because of vandalism, the North Jersey Herald News said Sunday. The hydrants are turned on after Labor Day, it said.

Eleven hydrants near the site of the Sept. 2 fire were not working, the paper said.

Township hardly 'place of comfort'

EDITOR'S NOTE: Early each morning, most of South Africa's 11 million urban blacks spill out of strictly delineated townships to go to work. But at night, by law, they must go back. Here is a report on life in the black townships shaken by a year of anti-apartheid violence.

By MORT ROSENBLUM
AP Special Correspondent

DUDUZA, South Africa (AP) — In Zulu, Duduza means "place of comfort." Many residents of this black township, who have been awaiting promised sewers, electricity and piped water for 22 years, smile sardonically at the name.

"What do you expect?" said Arnold Mamadi, 32, an economics teacher who lives down the road in Tsakane, which means "be happy."

"Townships are meant as labor reserves, not places to live and be comfortable."

Conditions vary from Duduza to Soweto to Sharpeville to Guguletu, from families living six in a shack only three paces long to those in ranch-style bungalows with a Ford Sierra out front.

But each has an unmistakable stamp, a common motif of barbed wire, litter and high-powered lights that blaze all night. Police and soldiers rumble by in armored vehicles, followed by dark, sullen stares.

And, under the Group Areas Act, no urban black can settle anywhere else.

The largest and most famous black township is Soweto outside Johannesburg, with nearly two million residents, where graffiti describes the mood:

"We grow (raise) their children. They kill our children."

Or, "Communism is the answer to poverty. Violence is the answer to apartheid." Or, more simply, "Botha is sick." P.W. Botha is South Africa's president.

DUDUZA IS IN the East Rand, 40 miles east of Johannesburg. Its famous sites include the school principal's house with the township's only flush toilet. It is also the place where a white nurse who stopped on the highway May 20 was stoned to death.

Blacks were resettled here in 1963, promised all the amenities of a model township. Little has changed along its dirt roads, residents say. But the place they left, Chartertown, is now a modern mixed-race township.

Poverty is not the sole issue. A black executive wrote anonymously in Frontline magazine, a white-run newsfeatures publication that opposes apartheid: "No matter what you do during the day, regardless of what you contribute to the taxman, regardless of the position you hold, your ability to own the finest mansion in white suburbia, you must return to the ghetto at night."

More than 700 people have died in a year of anti-apartheid violence, shot by security forces, slain by blacks punishing those they consider collaborators with the white-minority government, or killed by hooligans.

South African authorities maintain that the violence is deliberately orchestrated by black extremists seeking to embarrass white leaders at a time when reforms to ease apartheid are gradually moving into place.

In interviews in eight townships, however, residents called the violence an unwelcome but almost inevitable result of the grinding misery and repeated humiliations of life in the townships.

"The trouble is money," said a 31-year-old father is Sebokeng, near Sharpeville in the Vaal Triangle, the industrial heartland south of Johannesburg. He asked to be called only Esau since he is a bootlegger, selling retail liquor bought in bulk.

"If people cannot make enough money to pay rent and feed their families, what can they do?"

ESAU RENTS a standard government concrete block house, with four tiny rooms, a tin roof, an outhouse and no electricity. He buys water, five gallons at a time, when he can hire someone to deliver it.

He can take his kids to a government clinic, but the wait can be six hours.

"But it is only surviving," he said. "My 12-year-old daughter loves music, piano, but I can do nothing. She wants to read, but there are no books. There is nothing."

Esau's neighbor, Mark, works in Johannesburg, 40 miles north. When the 6:35 a.m. train fails to show, Mark spends nearly two days' pay on a taxi. Otherwise, he may be fired. Without a job, he loses his urban permit, under present conditions, and must move to a rural "homeland," designated by the government.

For many, such situations are sheer luxury.

Moiponi Papali, her husband and four children, aged 4 to 17, share a tin box in Soweto. A double mattress takes up half the floor space. Rent is 35 rand ($14) a month out of 300 rand ($120). The rest goes for food.

Maggie Ntombi has been waiting 10 years for even that much housing. Her family, living six in a rented room, is being evicted. She was recently advised some houses were available but found 3,000 had received the same notice.

Authorities stopped building houses in the 1960s to stem new arrivals. People continued to stream in, many illegally, and built hovels in backyards. If "influx control" — the system whereby blacks need special passes to go into white areas — is abolished as expected, residents fear townships will be jammed even more.

LIFE WAS HARD enough before the new unrest and state-of-emergency regulations, residents say. Now smoke and teargas mix regularly with the acrid smog from hard coal fires used for cooking and heating.

Young blacks terrorize some townships to enforce consumer boycotts of white businesses, to seek out police informers or to extort money under the cover of political goals.

Of the young blacks, Mrs. Ntombi says: "If you go to work, you must pray to God to help you. When you come home, you must pray again. Maybe they catch a bus and fire it. If you buy in town, they throw it away. Or you must drink it. If it is bleach, or fish oil, you must drink it. But they burn the shops in Soweto. Where to go?"

From the freeway north into Johannesburg, Soweto's Diepkloof Extension is in an area of neat, colorful houses on a well-kept hillside. Two-story homes rise in wealthy new sections of the black residential area.

But the writer in Frontline noted how the black "buffer class" is caught in the middle: "Those who still believe in decency, discipline and progress...are paralyzed with fear — for there is no escape. Their skins have condemned them to the ghetto...there to be swallowed and swamped by the seething sea of bitterness as it relentlessly advances to eliminate the 'buffers' standing between it and the system."

Blacks, who work in white areas and watch television at night, know much more about how whites live than whites do about blacks. Blacks appear each morning in a massive tide from Park Station in Johannesburg or the Durban bus depot near Kingsmead cricket pitch.

At night, they disappear.

Whites prosper under black rule

By DAVID CRARY
Associated Press Writer

NAIROBI, Kenya — Life under black rule, a prospect dreaded by most South African whites, has proved prosperous and placid for many whites in Kenya and Zimbabwe, both scenes of brutal wars of independence.

Now even modest and uneven progress toward multiracial coexistence has been interpreted as a message that the wounds of racial conflict can be healed.

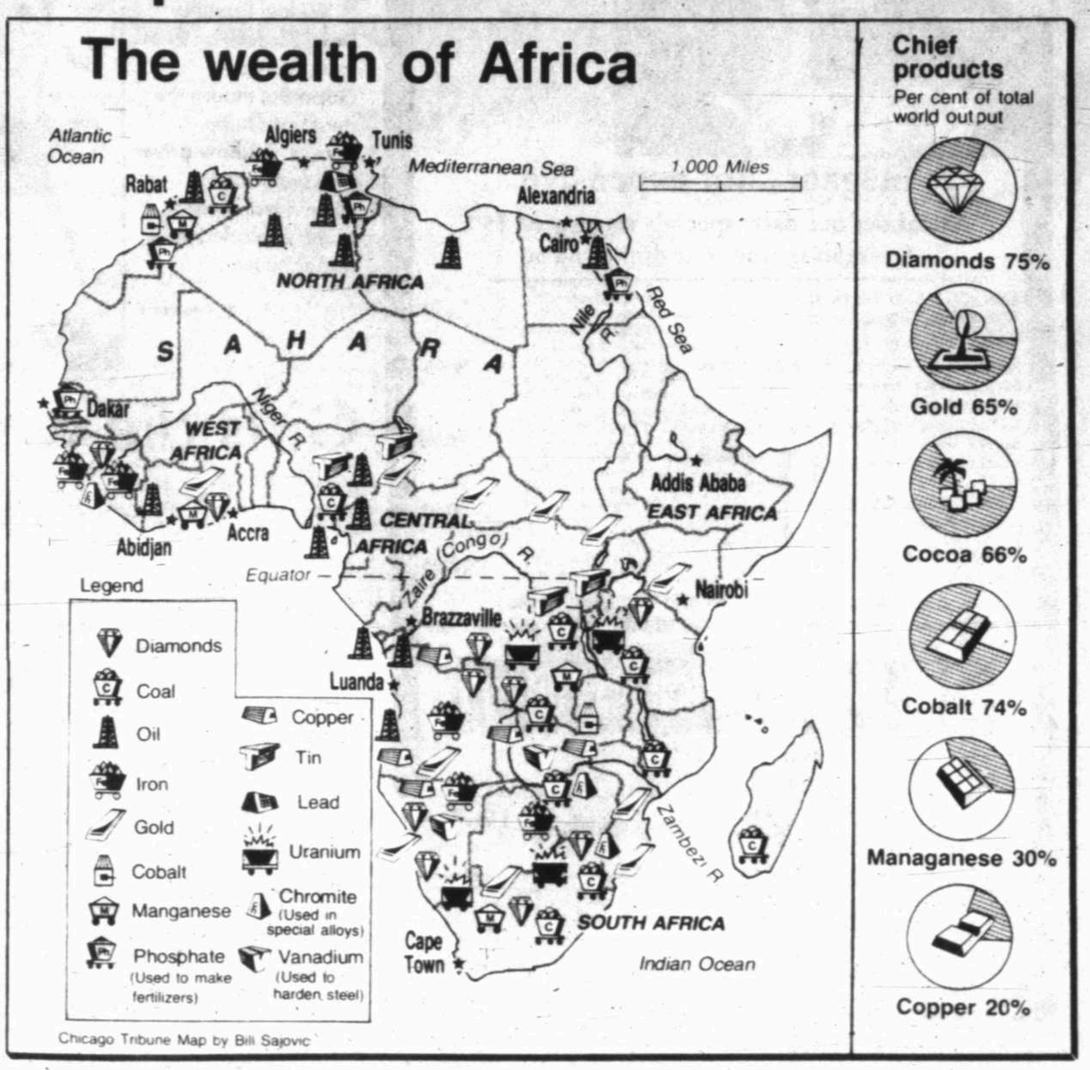

"The first lesson to be learned from Kenya is that the African doesn't hold any bitterness," says Sir Michael Blundell, an official of the British colonial government during the Mau Mau uprising of the 1950s and later a vocal advocate of Kenyan independence under a black government.

"Any European who is willing to serve the country rather than take from it is welcome under black majority rule," said Blundell, 79, who took Kenyan citizenship immediately after independence in 1963 at a time when thousands of other whites were fleeing.

Shortly before independence, Kenya's 65,000 whites, most of them Britons, dominated an estimated 8.3 million blacks.

The population is now nearly 20 million, including about 40,000 whites. The latest full census, in 1979, showed that 4,400 whites were Kenyan citizens, with the rest mostly expatriates sent to Kenya by foreign governments, international agencies and business corporations.

In Zimbabwe, a country of 8 million people, roughly 140,000 whites remain, half the peak white population in the mid-1970s.

WHEN ROBERT Mugabe led the former breakaway British colony of Rhodesia to independence as black-ruled Zimbabwe in April 1980, after nine decades of minority control and a seven-year guerrilla war, he vowed as the new prime minister to follow a policy of racial reconciliation.

Some whites who stayed, including former Prime Minister Ian Smith, criticize Mugabe's socialist theories and speak wistfully of the past. But many feel their place in Zimbabwe is secure.

Chris Andersen, the only white in Mugabe's Cabinet, told The Associated Press in an interview, "I think there is a future in Zimbabwe, particularly for whites who wish to see the country succeed and wish to make a contribution towards that end."

But Andersen, minister of state for public service, said life would be "tough for those whites who believe that they are entitled to a privileged position simply because of their color,...who have been unable to accommodate themselves to the changes that have taken place."

Most South African whites insist that their case is unique, that white rule is responsible for an advanced economy, that the dominant Afrikaner group's three-century presence in the country gives it roots far deeper than those of other white communities in Africa.

But Philip Leakey, Kenya's assistant foreign minister and the lone white in its Parliament, said South Africa's only relevant distinction is the size of the white minority. The 5 million whites comprise roughly 15 percent of the population, compared to the 4 percent which whites constituted at their peak in Zimbabwe.

"THAT DIFFERENCE should have made it easier to have a harmonious, racially integrated society, rather than more difficult," said Leakey, 36, a second-generation Kenyan and the brother of paleontologist Richard Leakey.

The relative racial harmony found today in Kenya and Zimbabwe has not come painlessly. White farmers have been killed by guerrillas and bandits in Zimbabwe, and some whites in both countries have been forced out of jobs to make room for blacks.

Also, the generally high standard of living for Kenyan and Zimbabwean whites, many of whom live on lush estates and employ several servants, is tempered somewhat by a preoccupation with security. Houses in the wealthier neighborhoods of Nairobi and Harare, the capitals of Kenya and Zimbabwe, are protected by fences, watchdogs, alarm systems and round-the-clock guards.

"One gets used to living with the minor crises, and frankly they're worth it to preserve the kind of lifestyle my family would not be able to enjoy anywhere else," said Poppy Ellis, a white Zimbabwe-born schoolteacher and mother of three children. "I've never believed that salvation for whites in this country lies across the border in South Africa."

In Zimbabwe, an average of 1,600 whites have emigrated each month since independence, although this year the average has dropped to 1,000 a month. Most settled in South Africa — "out of the frying pan into the fire," a white civil servant recently wrote to a Harare newspaper.

BUT IMMIGRATION officials say many of those emigrants have been returning as South Africa's economy deteriorates and fears mount that the racial conflict there will become bloodier than the Rhodesian war, which cost 27,000 lives, most of them blacks.

Whites have 20 seats reserved for them in Zimbabwe's 100-member Parliament and after Ian Smith and his fellow conservatives won 15 of them in June, Mugabe angrily declared that whites would face "very hard going."

But Bill Burdett-Coutts, British-born chairman of the Zimbabwe stock exchange, said he remained optimistic about the prospects for whites.

"I look to the underlying trends and not the rhetoric — what the government has actually done as opposed to what it says it might do," he said. "They have not done anything particularly socialistic up to now. There's a lot of talk, but nothing very concrete in terms of extreme radical policies."

In Zimbabwe, whites control about one-third of the farmland and provide more than half the country's food needs. In Kenya, conversely, blacks have bought more than 90 percent of the 7.5 million acres of farmland once owned by whites.

Kenya's social clubs, private schools and upper-class neighborhoods are integrated now, but few blacks can afford them.

But Blundell and Leakey said the achievements of Kenya, where some 13,000 blacks and 95 whites were killed in the Mau Mau uprising, proved the two races can build a nation together.

Both men said South Africa has the potential to form a thriving multiracial society, although they suggested that a destructive race war and an exodus by white supremacists might come first.

Leakey said South African whites should not fear the blacks' quest for a better life.

"The interest of the majority is in the best interest of the minority," he said.

Bureaucrats nibble at famine resources

EDITOR'S NOTE: Resources for fighting famine are partly consumed by bureaucrats fighting one another. Food is stolen by army commanders. Development funds are sidetracked. And a disorganized international donor community is part of the problem.

By MORT ROSENBLUM
AP Special Correspondent

ROME (AP) — After famine struck a decade ago, 340 international missions visited Upper Volta in a single year to look at food problems. People starve there today in the same remote corners where others did then.

Famine is confronted by an interlocking system of international bureaucracies, often at odds with each other, and marbled with waste, torpor and political infighting.

Effective individuals work hard under difficult conditions. But the overall result is often delay and skewed priorities. At times, attempted solutions create greater problems.

U.N. motor pools gleam with new sedans in Europe, but in El Geneina, Sudan, where refugees are scattered across trackless desert, the U.N. High Commissioner Refugees office has a single Land Rover with a bad clutch.

There was a second, but it flipped in the sand and crashed. The two vehicles were designed for the Alps, with snow tires and heavy duty heaters.

"If we cannot coordinate the agencies," said Maurice Williams, executive director of the World Food Council, "we will prolong the crisis rather than solve it."

Poor coordination hampers relief for a famine brought on largely because of disparate efforts in the past, he said. Too many different donors made modest pushes in too many directions.

Each government maintains an aid program, with its own philosophy. The European Economic Community has an additional agency in common.

Multilateral aid moves through a dozen U.N. agencies, the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development and other channels.

Hundreds of private voluntary agencies, charities and missionary societies, some worldwide and wealthy, work on their own.

"One bloody word ruins everything: prestige," said Nils Enquist, a Swedish veteran of relief operations since Biafra, now with the U.N. World Food Program. "Everyone wants to show success and take credit."

U.N. officials admit they must answer to member governments, rely on official statistics, fight for budgets and power, absorb incompetent bureaucrats under quota systems and depend on inexperienced advisers.

Similarly, Western aid officials are tied to national interests: farmers want to unload excess grain, private companies seek profits, politicians depend on aid for foreign influence.

Official aid seeks quick, measurable results.

"That's how a guy makes his career; drafting a project and showing that it worked during his two years," said a U.S. aid official. "The trouble is that development doesn't work that way."

Private agencies can work on the longer term but must preserve their access to stricken areas. As a result, they sometimes condone theft and waste as inevitable. When military leaders forbid access to victims in disputed territory, as in Ethiopia, they quietly seek backdoor solutions.

The largest U.N. agency is the Rome-based Food and Agriculture Organization, with 7,400 employees and 3,000 contract workers. It provides early warnings, technical advice and project assistance.

Two-thirds of FAO's operating budget is spent in Rome. More than half goes to salaries.

Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar named Bradford Morse, head of the U.N. Development Program, to coordinate African disaster relief.

But when Morse's team ordered seed urgently needed in Chad in June, FAO Director-General Edouard Saouma fired off a cable objecting that such agricultural matters were his province.

A Morse staff member, asking for anonymity, explained, "It was a mistake in interagency relations, maybe, but otherwise a lot of people would have died. Take your pick."

Even in harmony, agencies consume time. One U.N. offical, in a confidential report, counted 42 regional organizations, besides the U.N., in West Africa alone, with 12 early summits and 50 ministerial meetings. Every week, at least three ministers are absent from their countries for four days.

"The bureaucracies of U.N. and others are to some extent paralyzing productive work," he said.

Famine 'of human origin can yield to human remedy'

EDITOR'S NOTE: "The greatest risk is that there will be a loss of hope," warns the Worldwatch Institute in Washington. The shock of famine has triggered a new international will to respond, in Africa and elsewhere. The problem is in determining what to do.

By MORT ROSENBLUM
AP Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) — "However bleak the deteriorating situation may appear," concludes a Worldwatch Institute report on Africa, "it is of human origin and can yield to human remedy."

Remedies are available, scientists, politicians and officials say. But they require urgent attention to four aspects: relief, rehabilitation, development and trade.

With development, they say, Africa can export food. Without it, relief and rehabilitation will grow steadily more costly. Africans will suffer and die each year, even with adequate rains.

Restored terms of trade could help Africans fund their own development. A seven-ton truck cost the equivalent of 38 tons of Tanzanian sisal in 1972. A decade later, it cost 134 tons.

An early-warning system must measure not only food production but also human responses.

Governments rely on satellites that detect crop failure but do not reveal how people are responding, said Frances D'Souza of the International Disaster Institute in London. She said:

"There is as yet no understanding that if localized famine can be recognized it is entirely possible to contain it by the injection of very small amounts of food onto local markets which become stabilized," she said.

"The behavior of potential famine victims is the least fallible guide to the onset of famine," reported the Independent Commission on International Humanitarian Issues, a panel of statesmen and specialists headed by Sadruddin Aga Khan.

A country may show no overall deficit, experts say, but food seldom moves from surplus to deficit areas within African states without outside intervention.

Even with early warnings, governments have been slow to respond.

"THE NATURE OF the disaster system is that no one gives any money until someone dies," said Fred Cuny of Intertech in Dallas, a private consultant firm.

When dispatched, food aid often comes bunched, overwhelming ports and transport systems, or it comes too late, depressing farm prices and discouraging new planting.

"Governments generally ship food according to when they have the money budgeted, not according to need," explained George Simon of the World Food Program. "The result is chaotic. This gives me a job, and more staff for next year, but does not help starving people."

Political constraints must be overcome to reach the hungry. In Ethiopia and Angola, among other nations, people in rebel areas have been deprived of food. Nigeria closed its borders to Chad and denied port privileges for the Sahel.

The Aga Khan commission, along with many agencies, argues donors should force governments to allow deliveries.

"Bluntly, the U.N. should be prepared to trespass on states' rights when these are in conflict with the rights of disaster victims," the commission said.

Western officials suggest an international authority might deliver apolitical judgments on stricken regions, as health officials now do in declaring epidemics.

Food systems must be quickly rehabilitated so food aid is phased out, experts say. Farmers need seed, tools and animals early enough to plant crops.

REMOVING government restraints on farm prices spurs production in all but the most devastated regions. Zimbabwe last year allowed farmers a greater return. This year, Zimbabweans export grain.

If institutionalized, food aid amounts to a cash grant to governments who would otherwise have to buy food, economists say. It can be a needless crutch.

"When the Americans objected to India's stand on the Vietnam War and cut off food aid, India became self-sufficient," said Alain Vidal-Naquet of the World Food Council. "It was the impetus they needed."

Development is often sidetracked until after relief operations are completed.

"We have already taken too many short cuts," said Maurice Williams, WFC executive director. "The more we wait, the greater the problems we are creating."

The job is enormous. The U.N. Environment Program estimates it will cost $90 billion over 20 years to halt advancing deserts. African birthrates are over 3 percent a year, and social and religious factors resist birth control.

Repeated coups d'etat and civil strife set back development efforts.

Nonetheless, specialists say, governments must act now, when the shock of famine demonstrates the urgent need to spend money on agriculture, water supplies, transportation, education and basic services.

Aid is needed for harnessing scarce water.

BUT MUCH CAN be done with limited resources, enlisting Africans themselves.

Entrepreneurs can be helped to treat raw materials before export, increasing earnings.

And farmers can protect their own land.

In Niger, a Peace Corps volunteer began a project that has grown a 180-mile double line of trees to protect farmland. Run by CARE, it has cost less than $1 million over a decade.

Eugene Van Camfort, a Belgian whose Iles de Paix project grows rice near arid Timbuktu, Mali, explained:

"There is no secret: it is long-term aid. Anything else is pure folly. I have never seen a short-term project succeed, and this is where many of the large development agencies go wrong. You have to stay and educate the people...understand them and get them to trust you."

Girls die when bomb explodes in auto of Hindu lawmaker

AMRITSAR, India (AP) — Three girls were killed today when a bomb exploded in the car of a Hindu member of Parliament, one of seven car bombings on the last day of campaigning before the Punjab state election, police said.

Police said the girls, believed to be in their early teens, were playing outside a hotel in Batala, about 20 miles northeast of Amritsar, when a bomb exploded in the car of Sheila Dikshit, a legislator from Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi's Congress Party.

Mrs. Dikshit, another Congress Party legislator and two companions escaped injury in the bombing in northern Gurdaspur district. They were in a hotel for lunch when the explosion occurred, police said.

The United News of India reported six other explosions today in cars belonging to candidates or election workers on the last day of a campaign that had been relatively free of violence.

Sikh militants have called for a peaceful boycott of the election, but police feared that terrorists would mount attacks to frighten voters.

In an explosion in the southern district Faridkot, another militant stronghold, one child was slightly injured, UNI reported.

About 17,000 security forces have been deployed in Gurdaspur to prevent Sikh terrorist violence during Wednesday's election for 115 state assembly and 13 national Parliament seats. Campaigning is not allowed the day before the election.

Gurdaspur, a hotbed of militant Sikh unrest, has the heaviest concentration of security forces of any of the state's districts.

In all, more than 115,000 paramilitary troops, including police and border guards, have been deployed in Punjab.

In Amritsar, the Sikh holy city and a militant stronghold, a small bomb exploded under the car of a former state assembly speaker, Brij Bhushan Mehra, a Hindu, while he was campaigning in a nearby market.

Amritsar police said one Sikh was arrested at the scene and another taken into custody later.

Death toll in war between Iran, Iraq reaching one million

By DREW MIDDLETON
New York Times News Service

LONDON — Five years of fighting between Iran and Iraq have resulted in a toll of war dead that may be approaching a million, according to intelligence estimates here.

The estimates in London and in other NATO capitals range from 420,000 to 580,000 Iranian dead, with the number of Iraqi dead put at 300,000.

Western intelligence officers agree that the number of deaths from wounds is high because most major operations have been carried out in intense heat, which kills the seriously wounded.

"We must accept an ultimate casualty total higher than anything experienced in the West since World War II," a senior intelligence official said.

The Persian Gulf war started on Sept. 21, 1980. It has entered its sixth year with Iraq, inferior in numbers but superior in advanced weapons, conducting a defensive war on the ground and a savage air offensive against Iran's oil-based economy.

Ten times in the last five weeks Iraqi bombers, some armed with French-made Exocet air-to-surface missiles, have attacked the Kharg island oil terminal. Of the 14 loading jetties at the terminal, only three are now intact, according to intelligence sources.

According to information reaching officials in London, the most recent Iraqi attacks, which occurred last Thursday, did grave damage to the installations and severely damaged two tankers loading at the base.

In the wake of the attack it was learned that Iran is chartering six supertankers to shuttle crude oil from Kharg to a makeshift terminal at Sirri Island, about 350 miles to the south and out of range of Iraqi aircraft.

Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's regime in Tehran has threatened to close the narrow Strait of Hormuz to oil traffic if Iraqi bombing continues.

Although the major jetty on the eastern side of Kharg is among those that have been knocked out, intelligence sources report there are no indications that Iran has the resources or the will to block the Strait of Hormuz. One reason, these sources speculated, is the presence of a U.S. Navy squadron in the Indian Ocean and the probability that in a crisis it would be reinforced by British and French ships.

The war is now concentrated on Kharg. One source said that in view of the "horrendous" Iranian casualties in land operations, further land offensives "should be out of the question." But he and other sources conceded that the fundamentalist Shiite government in Tehran had paid scant attention to the rules of war and might throw half-trained, ill-armed Iranian infantry into further attacks against Iraqi positions.

The Iraqi army, adequately armed with Soviet weapons, began the war in triumph. Hundreds of tanks, supported by Soviet-made fighters, advanced into southwestern Iran and at one point occupied nearly 400 square miles of Iranian territory. At that point, the Iranian army was in a desperate position. An estimated 10,000 officers of the shah's army had been dismissed or jailed. The air force was short of spare parts and maintenance personnel.

In the summer of 1981 the ground fighting began to turn in Iran's favor. The invading Iraqis faced logistical difficulties. The defenders expanded their army by the hundreds of thousands, many of them children in their early teens, known as basij. Others were from the Revolutionary Guards, whose officers, new to war, seemed willing to lead attacks against the Iraqis.

The Iranian casualties were high. In 1982, according to an Iranian defector, about 5,000 basij died clearing a minefield in preparation for an attack on Bustan in southern Iran.

Similar attacks have been staged against the Iraqi port of Basra in the south and in northern sectors.

Establishment of a stalemate on the ground led President Saddam Hussein of Iraq and his military advisers to turn to an economic blockade of Iran.

Iran's resources for countering this offensive are limited. Its air force remains outnumbered and of inferior technology.

In a war of attrition, Iraq's position is growing stronger. A new pipeline recently laid to the Turkish coast is expected to increase oil exports by 50 percent. Another pipeline to the Saudi Arabian network and the Red Sea is about to go into operation.

Intelligence officers and oil experts wonder if there is an end in sight. The only one visible on the horizon, they said, would arise from the death of Khomeini and the recognition by his successors that the war cannot be won.

Newspaper says number of churches in Peking growing

PEKING (AP) — An official newspaper quoted the director of Peking's religious affairs bureau today as saying there are about 225,000 practicing Moslems, Christians and Buddhists in the Chinese capital.

Peking's 69 churches and temples, which reopened after the 1966-76 Cultural Revolution, support themselves through real estate rental, donations, bank holdings and their own businesses and schools, director Guo Ximin was quoted as saying.

The number of churches and temples will reach 80 by next year, he was quoted as saying.

In the first detailed disclosure of such figures, Guo was quoted by the official English-language China Daily as saying there are 190,000 practicing Moslems, 30,000 Roman Catholics, 5,000 Protestants and 400 Buddhists in Peking.

A fatal automobile accident occurred on August 11, 1983, on Loop 250 at approximately 10:15p.m. in the vicinity of what is now Chili's Restaurant. The car, a 1981 red Audi 5000, struck the curb and rolled into the field north of the Loop ejecting and killing the driver. Several people may have witnessed the accident and others came upon the scene shortly afterward. One passing motorist, is thought to have used his headlights to help illuminate the scene so that rescue efforts could be undertaken. If you have any knowledge of this occurrence, please call Wendy at 684-5782.

BUYERS GUIDE
IMPORTANT: Spoken promises are difficult to enforce. Ask the dealer to put all promises in writing. Keep this form.
WARRANTIES FOR THIS VEHICLE:
AS IS—NO WARRANTY
YOU WILL PAY ALL COSTS FOR ANY REPAIRS. The dealer assumes no responsibility for any repairs regardless of any oral statements about the vehicle.
WARRANTY
FULL LIMITED WARRANTY. The dealer will pay 100 % of the labor and 100 % of the parts for the covered systems that fail during the warranty period. Ask the dealer for a copy of the warranty document for a full explanation of warranty coverage, exclusions, and the dealer's repair obligations. Under state law, "implied warranties" may give you even more rights.
SYSTEMS COVERED: Engine, Cylinder Block and All Internal Parts, Cylinder Head Assemblies, Timing Case, Chain, Gears, Belt and Sprockets, Harmonic Balancer, Oil Pump, Water Pump, Transmission Case and all Internal Parts, Torque Converter, Drive Plate, Flex Plate, Fly Wheel, Bell Housing, Transaxle Case or Rear Axle Housing and all Internal Parts, Drive Shaft and Axle Shaft Assemblies and their Housings, Axle Shaft Bearings, Drive Shaft Center Bearings, Constant Velocity Joints, Universal Joints and Yokes
DURATION: All listed components are covered for 3 Months from the vehicle sale date or 3,000 miles from the vehicle's odometer reading at the time of vehicle sale (whichever comes first) after payment by the customer of the first $50 of covered repair costs for each repair visit SERVICE CONTRACT. A service contract is available at an extra charge on this vehicle. Ask for details as to coverage, deductible, price, and exclusions. If you buy a service contract within 90 days of the time of sale, state law "implied warranties" may give you additional rights.
PRE PURCHASE INSPECTION: ASK THE DEALER IF YOU MAY HAVE THIS VEHICLE INSPECTED BY YOUR MECHANIC EITHER ON OR OFF THE LOT.
SEE THE BACK OF THIS FORM for important additional information, including a list of some major defects that may occur in used motor vehicles.
