Reagan back on the road

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, hoping to build public pressure on Congress, is taking the campaign for his tax and budget cuts on the road for three speeches in six days.

The first stop was intended to be a friendly one: an address in San Antonio, Texas, today to the U.S. Jaycees, who have endorsed Reagan's economic program and are lobbying for its enactment.

A speech is scheduled Thursday in Los Angeles to the California Taxpayers' Association, followed by a weekend trip to Reagan's ranch near Santa Barbara, Calif., and an appearance on the way home Monday before the NAACP convention in Denver.

David Gergen, Reagan's new communications chief, called the Jaycees speech a "major effort to build public support."

As has become standard since the March 30 attempt on Reagan's life, tight security precautions were being taken for today's appearance.

Randy Kindy, a Jaycees spokesman, said all the expected 8,000 guests would be checked with metal detectors before entering the Henry B. Gonzales Convention Center.

In addition, Kindy said, Jaycees from Tennessee were ordered by the Secret Service to leave their muskets — part of their state organization's uniform — at home.

"Anything that resembles a weapon will be confiscated at the door," he said.

To help Reagan win support for his tax and budget cuts, Kindy said the 300,000-member group has written letters, made telephone calls and gathered petitions.

"The Jaycees were extraordinarily helpful on the budget campaign," said David Gergen, Reagan's communications chief. "They came forward voluntarily and said they would like to be helpful and I think there is a lot of affection between the president and the Jaycees, so I think that will be a very warm environment."

Reagan and his wife, Nancy, will stay at the Century Plaza Hotel in Los Angeles, where their home is on the market for $1.9 million. They fly by helicopter Friday to their ranch in the Santa Ynez Mountains.

City Council again puts airport ills in park

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Despite the overcrowded parking situation that grows more cramped each month at Midland Regional Airport, the Midland City Council put off for another three weeks making a decision on expanding the parking areas.

Meeting in a regular session Tuesday in City Hall, the council considered an updated version of the Airport Master Plan as prepared by engineers of Parkhill, Smith & Cooper, Inc. However, the panel noted that the latest figures used in the plan were 1979 numbers, and they instructed the engineers to update those figures.

Considering that one-level parking additions would force passengers to walk too far to the terminal building, the council also told the engineers to draw up plans and cost estimates for multi-level parking.

THIS MARKED the second delay imposed by the council before accepting the Master Plan. The proposal has been in the council's hands for a month. At the May 26 meeting the panel decided it needed time to read the material before voting on its acceptance.

Mayor G. Thane Akins pointed out that employment figures used for Midland County were wrong in the report. Projected for 1981 was a working force of 36,000 persons. "The last report I had listed it at 49,000," he said, referring to the theory that an increase in the number of workers means a higher use for the airport.

Related story, Page 14A

A representative of Parkhill, Smith & Cooper commented that the council several months ago asked for single level parking, which is why that was the only plan included.

"We can give you figures for two-level and three-level parking, but you never asked for it," he added.

"But I want you to tell us what we ought to be doing out there," replied Councilman Tom Sloan.

Col. Wilson Banks, director of aviation, said two-level parking "has a lot of merits and is the way to go, except maybe for the cost."

While the engineers can prepare plans and cost estimates for multi-level parking, Banks noted that much more of a delay on a decision would be hurting the airport.

"WE CAN'T WAIT much longer," he said. "Any more delays on parking and we're going to be hurting. It's getting to be critical out there."

Looking at the overall Master Plan and its projections for construction through 2000, Banks said he feels the plan "is viable and can be used 20 years down the road and beyond." If hangars and offices of various general aviation firms must be moved to allow for expansion of the terminal building, there would be no problem, he contended.

"I feel we can relocate all of general aviation at a lesser cost than putting in a new air carrier facility (terminal building)," he said. In the mid-1970s when the council was considering expansion and renovation of the airport, Banks pointed out that they considered constructing a new terminal building.

"That would have been the greatest thing in the world...would have saved me a lot of gray hairs. But when the figures were laid out on the table, the

Settlement will tax both city, residents

By ED TODD

Midlanders will be subjected to more taxes in the coming year due to a Texas Supreme Court ruling which effectively ordered the city of Midland to award $975,000 in damages to the father of a youth who was "tragically injured" in a car-pickup collision at an obstructed T-intersection in far southwest Midland in 1976.

The youth, Calvin Keith Jezek of Midland, was rendered paralyzed, comatose and suffered "irreversible brain damage" by the June 10, 1976, wreck at a "blind intersection" which, the court maintained, should have been cleared of obstruction by the city. He was 16 at time of the injury.

The Supreme Court upheld the Midland jury's Feb. 2, 1978, verdict, which found the city liable and negligent in not keeping the intersection free of overhanging and obstructing mesquite shrubs and weeds. In so doing, Texas' highest court overturned rulings by the trial court and appellate court, which had reversed the jury's decision to award damages.

Jezek died Oct. 25, 1978 — some nine months after the jury verdict and while the case was on appeal.

The near $1 million settlement may be the highest awarded by a Midland jury.

"I'm not sure it's the largest, but it's one of the largest," said Judge Perry D. Pickett, who presided over the Jezek trial in 142nd State District Court. Pickett, the court's judge for 26 years, has since retired.

THE JEZEK settlement will hike the Midland tax rate by a nickel per $100 valuation for a year's duration until the city has recouped the $716,775 it will have expended to satisfy the judgment and to keep the city solvent and operating.

The city, which operates on a $27.5 million budget, will appropriate the $716,775 from General Fund Surplus to satisfy the judgment, and will replenish the fund with tax dollars. The tax rate will be increased from 45 cents per $100 valuation at 75 percent assessment to 50 cents, but will revert to the original rate next year after the fund has been replenished. Each penny of the tax rate is tantamount to $140,000 in revenue.

The taxpayers essentially become the city's insurers.

The Court's ruling incensed the Midland City Council.

"It's ridiculous to the point it makes me want to cry," lamented Mayor G. Thane Akins, who said he couldn't understand "why the city and not the county" had to bear the burden of the settlement.

IN A JUDGMENT signed this week by Judge Pat Baskin, the city was ordered to pay the plaintiff, David L. Jezek, administrator of the estate of his son, and his lawyer, Odessa attorney Warren Heagy, $487,500 forthwith and to pay another $487,500 in payments of $32,500 per year for the next 15 years.

"Oh, it's done," the mayor sighed in apparent frustration after the City Council decided to abide by the court order. "The judgment has been made. We have no choice (but to pay), but I said that is wrong."

The mayor was adamant in his disagreement with the judgment. He suggested that the boy and not the city was a fault.

"I think the boy's responsible (for the mishap). The boy simply did not stop," the mayor said. "I feel sorry for them (the family) — the tragedy."

This is the T-intersection in far southwest Midland where Midlander Calvin Keith Jezek, then 16, was injured in 1976. His injury is costing the city of Midland almost a million dollars due to a court ruling which held that the once-cluttered intersection obstructed Jezek's view of traffic and contributed to the accident, which left him paralyzed. The youth died in 1978.

Midland Memorial Hospital will conduct its formal dedication of the Allison Permian Basin Cancer Therapy Center at 1 p.m. Saturday. The ceremonies will be under the portico north of the building, at the main entrance to the Allison Center.

The dedication is open to residents of Midland County and all surrounding counties, according to hospital officials.

The ceremonies will honor representatives of the Allison family, including the late Helon Y. Allison, who donated the original $2 million dollars in memory of her husband, James N. Allison Sr., and her son, James N. Allison Jr. The monies were used to build the two-level complex that houses the radiation treatment equipment as well as the planned chemotherapy unit.

Donations from a number of private foundations, as well as a variety of individuals, supplied the Allison Center with the latest in specialized radiation equipment for cancer treatment. The center houses 20- and 6-Million Electron Volt linear accelerators, a 75-250 KVP orthovoltage therapy unit, a therapy beam simulator and a treatment planning computor system.

The dedication will include an invocation by the Rev. Dr. Joseph Schley of St. Nicholas Episcopal Church, remarks by board representatives, the introduction of Dr. A.L. Schlichtemeier, medical director and radiation oncologist for the Allison Cancer Center, and a brief statement by Allyson Ann Allison, granddaughter of Helon Y. Allison.

The guest speaker for the event is Dr. Charles LeMaistre, president of

A city employee was electrocuted in a bizarre accident Tuesday that also killed his dog.

William Marvin Stovall, 53, a groundskeeper at Cole Park, died shortly before noon Tuesday as he attempted to shake a prairie dog out of a section of irrigation pipe. He was electrocuted when the pipe touched a 7,200-volt overhead power line.

Although Stovall was wearing heavy rubber boots that would have prevented an electrical shock, police said, his dog was beside him and leaning against his calf. The dog served as a ground and also was killed.

Stovall, of 3318 Mariana Ave., was pronounced dead at the scene by Justice of the Peace Charlie Sprayberry. He had worked for the city since March of 1980. His body was taken to Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home, where services are pending.

Western State Bank of Midland announced today that a group of 28 investors, including 13 Midland residents, has purchased a majority stock interest in the bank.

Final arrangements for sale of the bank were completed Tuesday after receiving approval for the transaction from the Texas State Banking Commission and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

The announcement was made by Eddie W. Dunn, newly elected president and chief executive officer of Western State Bank. Dunn is a 1966 graduate of Lee High School and earned a B.B.A. degree from Texas Tech University. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Berlie Dunn of Midland. It also was announced that Don Earney was elected chairman of the board of directors at the bank. Earney is also president and board chairman of Abilene National Bank. He replaces John B. Billingsley Jr., who had previously served as board chairman. Billingsley has resigned from the board of directors to pursue other business interests.

Dunn expressed great pleasure in returning to Midland and stressed that he and the new owners of Western State Bank hope to make a significant contribution to the continuing growth and prosperity of the city of Midland. Western State Bank is not affiliated with any bank holding company and owes its allegiance and support solely to the people and business community of Midland, he said.

Bush arrives in Paris to meet Mitterrand

By HARRY DUNPHY
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP) — France's first cabinet with Communist members in 34 years holds its organization meeting today amid concern in Washington and other allied capitals over the inclusion of the pro-Moscow party.

In a move to unify the political left, President Francois Mitterrand gave four non-sensitive places in the 44-member Cabinet Wednesday to the Communists. To get them, the leaders of the party accepted his Socialist government's program, including ds for the Russians to withdraw from Afghanistan and not to intervene in Poland.

The first admission of Communists to a major government of the North Atlantic Alliance was viewed in Washington as an important psychological breakthrough for the party with a potential for far-reaching consequences. There were fears that it would increase the chances of Communist admission to the government in Italy, where the party is much stronger than it is in France.

Vice President George Bush arrived in Paris today to meet with Mitterrand and told reporters he expected they would discuss "both the membership of the Cabinet and the direction of the new French government." But he told a questioner it would be "inappropriate to comment now" on the inclusion of the Communists in the Cabinet.

Opposition to Communist participation in the government of America's key allies has been a mainstay of U.S. policy since World War II. Bush was expected to convey that attitude from the Reagan administration.

Local post office to be picketed

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

Local members of American Postal Workers Union and National Association of Letter carriers will stage an "informational picketing" at the main post office from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Thursday to call attention to the unions' nationwide labor dispute with the U.S. Postal Service.

"We're picketing because William Bolger (Postmaster General of the United States) has broken the law by not negotiating with us," said Mike Middleton, editor of the APWU newspaper, "This and That." "We just want to say, 'William Bolger, negotiate with us.' "

The Postal Service, according to a union news release, has refused to bargain with national leaders of APWU and NALC although negotiations were scheduled to begin April 22. The present labor agreement, covering some 600,000 postal workers in the nation, will expire at midnight, July 20.

"This is actually just strictly an informational picket," Middleton added. "We will not interfere in any way with postal operations. What we want to get across is Mr. Bolger has broken the federal law by not negotiating with us at the bargaining table, and he's wasted a lot of valuable time. It's important to both sides that we negotiate."

Middleton said postal workers aren't necessarily seeking increased wages and bettered conditions, but rather "trying to keep what we have," including adjustments for cost of living increases.

The dispute arose when the Postmaster General announced he would not bargain with the unions until the National Labor Relations Board acted upon a Postal Service petition which questioned the "appropriate bargain-unit or units within the Postal Service" for collective bargaining purposes.

On April 30, the NLRB's regional director dismissed the Postal Service petition without hearing. The Service has since appealed the decision to the full board in Washington, D.C., which has not made a ruling in the matter.

"The United States Postal Service is by far the most productive in the world and, as postal workers, we are proud of that fact," said the news release. "However, the continual refusal of the Service to obey federal law and bargain with the authorized representatives of its empoloyees is poisoning labor-management relations. This is not only unfair to us, but it is unfair to the American public."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The government is conducting a "smear campaign" against James Hopkins, whose dramatic protest and death triggered a hunger strike by fellow Vietnam veterans, Hopkins' widow claims.

Government records show that Hopkins was not wounded in combat and did not receive two Purple Hearts and a Bronze Star for valor, as he had claimed, the Los Angeles Times reported over the weekend.

Hopkins, 32, died in an apparent suicide May 17, about two months after he allegedly crashed his Jeep through the front doors of the Wadsworth Veterans Administration Hospital and fired shots in the lobby of the West Los Angeles facility. Protesters say Hopkins was angry because he could not get a VA doctor to verify he suffered from a hearing impairment so he could rent a special telephone device.

Protesting veterans — some on a hunger strike — set up camp on the hospital's lawn for three weeks, demanding the government investigate the VA's treatment of Hopkins, conduct outside probes into all VA hospitals, examine the effects of toxic herbicides such as Agent Orange and conduct a medical screening program for all veterans to find any service-related disabilities.

The protesters said Sunday that their campaign will not be affected by the questions raised over Hopkins' war record.

"We know that Jimmy, regardless of his record, was a Vietnam veteran suffering from delayed stress and yelling for help. And he didn't get it," said Bobby Phillips, spokesman for the Los Angeles Veterans Coalition.

Suzanne Hopkins, 31, said in an interview Sunday that it was "character assassination" for the government to question her late husband's heroism and said that military records forwarded to her by the Marine Corps are incomplete and "fishy."

She claimed that various sets of military records contradict each other about where her husband of 18 months was during certain periods of time.

"There are holes in the records and sections on the pages that appear to have been covered over" and then copied, she said, pointing to one page of administrative remarks that skipped from Nov. 23, 1967 to Jan. 19, 1969.

"He pawned his Purple Hearts in Okinawa in 1968 for $5 apiece," Mrs. Hopkins said when asked if she had ever seen them.

The protesters were evicted on June 9 and moved their protest to the Faith Center in Glendale, a Los Angeles suburb, where three hunger strikers and about 15 supporters remained this weekend, Phillips said.

Settlement will boost city taxes

was not at all pleased with the ruling by the Texas Supreme Court.

"What everybody has got to realize about the lawsuit is that they (taxpayers) are going to have to reach into their own hip pocket to pay for it," Sloan said. "The Supreme Court reversed the ruling because they're a bunch of dang liberals."

WHAT THE SUPREME Court did was reverse an appellate court ruling which had held that the city was not liable for the "mere obstructions" at intersections. The appellate decision, written by Judge Stephen Preslar in 1979, affirmed a ruling by Judge Pickett of Midland's 142nd State District Court.

Pickett exercised a judge's prerogative in finding error in points of law in the jury's verdict and rendered a "take-nothing" judgment.

The court in effect made void the jury's verdict and award the damages.

The jury in 1978 found negligence on part of the city of Midland and awarded the plaintiff $1.5 million in damages. However, in setting percentages of negligence which contributed to the accident, the jury said the city was 65 percent at fault and that the youth was 35 percent to blame.

The judgment of $975,000 is 65 percent of $1.5 million.

The jury determined that the city's failure to maintain the intersection at G.Y. Lee Road and Turner Road and to clear it of obstructions was the "proximate cause of the injuries."

THE JURY ALSO determined that young Jezek, driving a compact automobile, failed to stop and in fact came to a "rolling stop" at the stem of the T intersection. After coming to a "California" stop on G.Y. Lee Road, the Jezek youth apparently eased the car farther into the unpaved intersection to determine if any traffic was coming. And that's when his car was struck at the broadside by a pickup truck driven by Robert Reyna.

Too, the jury determined that Jezek did not fail to use "due care" when he came to a "rolling stop" and entered the intersection. And in establishing responsibility, the jury also determined that the city had annexed the area of Lee and Turner Roads in 1966 and that the city was aware that the roads were city streets at time of the accident and were no longer county roads.

The council maintained that the road "was an undedicated street and wasn't on any of our plats."

That reasoning on part of the jury apparently was a factor in the trial court's decision to overturn the jury's verdict and render a take-nothing judgment.

IN UPHOLDING the court's ruling, Appellate Court Judge Preslar wrote: "If the street itself is safe, then the only danger arises from other motorists."

Supreme Court Judge Charles Barrow, however, struck down Preslar's ruling and remanded the case to the court of original jurisdiction for further proceedings.

"This dangerous obstruction," wrote Barrow, "was created by bush and weeds located on the right of way of these roads. For reasons of its own, it (city of Midland) exercised no care whatsoever to protect those who might use the roads."

That T intersection, though without a stop sign, today is cleared of weeds and mesquite and recently has been mowed even beyond the right of way.

"The city has learned its lesson," said Midland attorney Bill Smith, who was Heagy's co-counsel in the 1978 trial. "See how cleaned up it is."

THE SUPREME COURT'S 1980 ruling also set a precedent, noted Smith.

"The precedent," he said, "is that it is the city's responsibility for keeping their intersections clean" and free of obstructions to motorists.

And Mayor Akins criticized that ruling which imposes a "duty on cities to remove obstructions to view" in the traffic lanes. That Supreme Court ruling was made retroactive to cover the 1976 Jezek accident in Midland.

"This ruling places an insufferable burden on the cities of Texas and unlimited exposure to financial liability," Akins said. "Even the Supreme Court recognized this onerous burden and refused to extend it to other units of government — only cities."

Akins said that the court offered "no answers" to such questions as what constitutes obstructions at intersections and under what circumstances.

"What about parked cars? What about the overhang of trees and shurbs from adjoining properties? How far back from intersections should the view be unobstructed?" he posed rhetorically.

"How much more money should we ask from the taxpapers and how many more employees and pieces of equipment should we purchase?"

"The court, while denying it, has in effect made insurers out of the taxpayers. In my judgment, that is wrong."

AKINS NOTED that at the Midland City Council's request, the Texas Municipal League, assisted by Texas Senator W.E. "Pete" Snelson and Rep. Tom Craddick, lobbied to "correct" the Supreme Court's ruling "but unfortunately barely failed."

"We can and will try again," Akins said. "In the meantime, the cities of Texas are left with an ill defined duty that is virtually impossible to comply with."

The city of Midland is without liability insurance to protect itself from action similar to the Jezek action.

Such insurance, noted Midland City Attorney Joe Nuessle, who along with Bill Browder, was the city counsel in the case, virtually would be prohibitive in cost — up to $250,000 a year.

"It (liability insurance) would cost us about a quarter of million dollars a year," said Nuessle. "It may get to the point that we can no longer consider it (insurance) prohibitive. It may become a reality one of these days."

However costly the Jezek-Midland compromise settlement may be to Midland and to the town's taxpayers, the arrangement in one sense is an economy plan.

"We're saving a quarter of a million dollars," said Nuessle.

THE SAVINGS plan, approved by the court, works like this:

First, within a week, the city is expected to write a check of $487,500 — half the amount due — to David L. Jezek and to attorney Heagy. The attorney's share of the judgment was not revealed.

Second, and also under court order, to satisfy the balance of $487,500 due over the next 15 years, the city is to sign an annuity contract for $229,275 with Crown Life Insurance Co. of Canada. The insurance company will invest the money, and from the principal and interest, will pay the $487,500 to the plaintiff over a period of 15 years beginning Aug. 1.

The compromise agreement also foregoes interest on the judgment of $975,000. With interest, a judgment of $1.3 million could have been entered against the city, Nuessle said.

"It's a good settlement," surmised Smith, who was acting in the stead of Heagy, who was in trial in Tyler and was unavailable for comment. "It's a good settlement for the city. It's a good settlement for us."

"The city was wise to settle," said Smith. "I mean that as a bystander."

Had the city or the Jezek interests not elected to settle outright and instead opted for a new trial, then there was the "possibility that that the verdict of the jury in a new trial could be substantially less than the verdict rendered in the original trial...," noted the agreement signed by Heagy and city co-counsels Nuessle and Browder.

Weather to continue warm, sunny in Permian Basin

The afternoons will continue to be warm and sunny through Thursday, but the heat won't come close to the 100-degree level, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Tonight's forecast reads fair with a low near 70 degrees. Winds will be warm and mild, coming from the south to southeast at 10-15 mph through Thursday.

Thursday's high will push the mercury into the mid-90s.

Tuesday's high ws 92 degrees. The record high in the Permian Basin for June 24 was recorded at 102 degrees in 1972.

There were no injuries Tuesday afternoon when this 10-ton crane rolled off a semi-tractor trailer as it tried to negotiate a right turn at the intersection of Midkiff Road and the south service road of Interstate 20 about 2:50 p.m. Rickey Lee Jackson of 1307 S. Loraine St. was driving the 18-wheeler, which is owned by the Turner Trucking Co. of 1712 S. Midkiff Road. A company spokesman said it took an hour and a half to right the crane and get it off the road.

Mobile home fire blamed on a faulty water heater

A mobile home burned to the ground late Tuesday afternoon in a fire that was blamed on a faulty water heater which allowed gas to build up in the house trailer.

City firemen spent two hours at the scene and used more than 2,200 gallons of water to extinguish the blaze, which broke out shortly before 6 p.m. Tuesday at the Wallace Trailer Park, County Road 113 North and East Highway 80. The home's owners were listed as Arlene and Ernest Hernandez. Firemen said the trailer was a total loss.

A westside Midland man was injured early Tuesday night when the motorcycle he was riding collided with a car in the 4300 block of Illinois Avenue about 7:20 p.m.

Listed in serious condition at Midland Memorial Hospital this morning was Randall W. Fausett, 30, of 3209 Kessler Ave. According to police, Fausett was driving a 1981 Kawasaki east on Illinois when a 1979 Pontiac driven by 27-year-old Paula Wright, 4612 Leisure Drive, backed out of a driveway and into his path. He suffered head injuries in the crash.

In theft and burglary complaints filed with city police during the past 24 hours, Arthur Sauer, who lives in a tent in a field south of West Wall Avenue in the 2800 block, told officers he returned home about 9 p.m. Tuesday and discovered his AM-FM cassette stereo tape player had been stolen. Its value was listed at $350.

R.C. Sullivan of 1413 Ventura Drive said a diamond pendant worth $1,000 was taken in a burglary of his residence. Assorted sterling silver pieces were also gone. Entry was gained through a sliding glass door. No value was placed on the silverware.

An employee of Midway Motors reported the theft of $585 worth of tires and assorted automobile parts, including two tires, a jack and a battery.

Commission will consider motion

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Health Facilities Commission will meet at 10 a.m. Friday to consider a motion by Medical Center Hospital in Odessa for a rehearing on its application for acquisition of cancer treatment equipment.

The hospital is seeking a 6 Million Electron Volt linear accelerator.

The THFC voted to deny the application in May and recently turned down a petition for reconsideration of the application.

The meeting will be held at the THFC offices at 1600 W. 38th St. in Austin.

Council delays action on airport parking

That construction program was completed about 2½ years ago.

In other airport matters, the council redefined duties of the Airport Planning and Development Board and sold a piece of land at Air Terminal to Metro Bank for $185,000.

When the item to advertise for 10 new buses for MidTran appeared on the agenda a month ago, the council considered eliminating the public busing system. After deciding to stick with it, the council approved going out for bids at its Tuesday meeting. But the action didn't come until after Carroll Thomas questioned some of the specifications, saying he wanted to make sure the buses would be more adequate than what they already have. However, when it came to a vote, Thomas voted against the item...as he has done on almost every purchase for MidTran.

THE IDEA FOR a new Municipal Court building finally came off the drawing board when the council approved the plans and decided to advertise for bids. Andrew Hemphill with the architect firm of Nolan and Hemphill presented the drawings, which denoted a 9,400 square foot building that will include two courtrooms.

Plans also include support facilities for clerks, a temporary detention holding tank and a pneumatic tube to link with the Public Safety Building across the street on Texas Avenue from where the new court will be constructed.

Estimated cost for the building is $579,000 with parking and outside improvements to cost an additional $47,000. Total project cost is pegged at $629,000. The structure is designed to allow for a second-story addition in the future.

Bids will be opened at the July 28 meeting.

The cost to park in downtown Midland will be rising faster than the inflation rate with the council's approval of new fees.

Fred Baker, director of public works, explained the plan calls for one-hour meters in a central core area around the County Courthouse to be upped from 25 cents an hour to 50 cents an hour; those in a core around the central area will go to 25 cents an hour; and parking on the outer fringes of downtown will be $1.25 for 10-hour meters. The city will purchase 180 new meters to implement the new plan.

ALL PENNY METERS will be eliminated, he noted.

Jess Moore opposed the plan, charging the council was preferring the higher revenues these increases would bring. The 50-cent an hour meters, he said, "would be hitting people where they don't need to be hit — you're making some people pay for those who are abusing these meters."

For the past several months, the council has looked at the problem of a downtown parking space shortage and the fact that employees are plugging the meters instead of parking in a lot.

Mayor G. Thane Akins remarked that "we're trying to create a turnover for people who need the spaces to do business."

But Moore contended that "$80 a month is too high for spaces in those lots and garages."

In other action, the council decided to put in a continuous left-turn lane on A Street from north of Illinois Avenue to south of Wall Street, eliminated some truck routes from within the city limits, approved a contract with Midland Sports, Inc. for three more years at Cubs Stadium, set a temporary construction speed zone of 45 mph on State Highway 158 and decided to require plastic bags be used by commercial customers in disposing their trash.

MMH to dedicate cancer center

Dr. Charles A. LeMaistre

the University of Texas System Cancer Center, M.D. Anderson Hospital and Tumor Institute in Houston.

Dr. LeMaistre has long been an active force in the medical community in Texas. He came to Dallas as medical director of Woodlawn Hospital Chest Division in 1959. In 1965 he was named associate dean of the University of Texas Southwestern Medical School. A year later, he was appointed vice chancellor for health affairs for the University of Texas System in Austin. He was eventually named chancellor — a post which he held until 1978 when he was named president of the University of Texas System Cancer Center and president of the University Cancer Foundation.

A graduate of Cornell University Medical College, he did his internship and residency at New York Hospital. He has served on the U.S. Surgeon General's Advisory Committee on Smoking and Health for the Department of Health, Education and Welfare; is the director-at-large for the American Cancer Society; serves on the Board of Directors for the Damon Runyon-Walter Winchell Cancer Fund; and is a member of the American Society of Clinical Oncology, the Texas Hospital Association and the International Association for the Study of Lung Cancer, among other scientific and professional memberships.

In addition, he is a member of the board of directors for the Houston Chamber of Commerce, United Savings of Texas and the Houston Natural Gas Corporation.

The formal dedication of the Allison Permian Basin Cancer Therapy Center will be followed by an open house from 2 to 4 p.m. The public is cordially invited to attend both the ceremonies and the open house.

Personnel shortage hinders availability of U.S. passports

HOUSTON (AP) — Personnel shortages, the city's competitive job market and strict State Department guidelines are hindering the operations of the Houston Passport Office.

Such a situation can be frustrating, particularly for those coming from out of town to obtain passports. Recently, 24 people were waiting outside when the office opened, and by noon, the line was twice as long.

The Houston-based operation now serves Texas, Arizona and New Mexico and eventually will include Kansas, Colorado and Oklahoma.

Agent-in-charge Sylvester Jackson said the office is authorized four telephone operators, but has only one on duty. It also is authorized 26 clerks, but employs only 14.

Jackson said private industry in Houston pays much better and in many cases, throws in free parking as a bonus.

To offset such competition the government, without much success, authorized clerks to be paid as much as $1,000 a year above the normal scale, he said.

"We had a recruiter down here from Washingnton about a year ago and we advertised and they went to the schools," he said. "They stayed here a week and got three people."

Treasury securities rise

WASHINGTON (AP) — After falling for three straight weeks, yields on short-term Treasury securities have risen, according to the Treasury Department.

About $4 billion in six-month bills brought an average discount rate of 13.939 percent Monday, up from 13.356 percent a week earlier, the department said.

Approximately $4 billion in three-month bills sold for an average of 14.337 percent, compared to 13.451 percent the preceeding Monday, the department added.

As a result of the latest securities auction, beginning today banks and thrift institutions can pay up to 14.189 percent interest on $10,000 savings certificates.

Hundreds die in fighting

LONDON (AP) — Hundreds of people have died in fighting between Nanumba and Konkomba tribesmen in northern Ghana, the official Accra Radio says.

A broadcast Monday night said the fighting occurred around the town of Bimbila, 250 miles northwest of Accra, the capital. The broadcast said the cause of the feud was not known.

But an earlier broadcast on April 28 said six people had been killed in fighting that broke out after a Konkomba stabbed the soon of the chief of Bimbila and shot and killed his secretary.

LOOK WHO'S COMING

Now Paul and those with him left Paphos by ship for Turkey, landing at the port town of Perga. There John deserted them and returned to Jerusalem. But Barnabas and Paul went on to Antioch, a city in the province of Pisidia. On the Sabbath they went into the synagogue for the services. After the usual readings from the Books of Moses and from the Prophets, those in charge of the service sent them this message: "Brothers, if you have any word of instruction for us come and give it!"

So Paul stood, waved a greeting to them and began. "Men of Israel," he said, "and all others here who reverence God, (let me begin my remarks with a bit of history). The God of this nation Israel chose our ancestors and honored them in Egypt by gloriously leading them out of their slavery. And He nursed them through 40 years of wandering around in the wilderness. Then He destroyed seven nations in Canaan, and gave Israel their land as an inheritance. Judges ruled for about 450 years, and were followed by Samuel the prophet.

"Then the people begged for a king, and God gave them Saul (son of Kish), a man of the tribe of Benjamin, who reigned for 40 years. But God removed him and replaced him with David as king, a man about whom God said, 'David (son of Jesse) is a man after My own heart, for he will obey Me.'

"And it is one of King David's descendants, Jesus, who is God's promised Savior of Israel! But before He came, John the Baptist preached the need for everyone in Israel to turn from sin to God. As John was finishing his work he asked, 'Do you think I am the Messiah? No! But He is coming soon -- and in comparison with Him, I am utterly worthless.'"

A pointless revolution

But it is a fairly sure bet that Iran now has lost the one voice that even approached reason — that of Abolhassan Bani-Sadr, who was fired Monday as president of Iran.

The dismissal of Bani-Sadr is evidence of the continuing instability in the Iranian government. Bani-Sadr was the leader of moderate and leftist factions in the revolution that ousted the late Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi 2½ years ago. During the American hostage crisis, Bani-Sadr wanted to treat the hostages fairly while many voices around him cried for blood.

Ironically, it may have been that degree of moderation that led to Bani-Sadr's removal as commander-in-chief of Iran's armed forces several days ago and now his removal as Iran's first elected president. News reports from Iran have indicated repeatedly that Bani-Sadr was not liked by the militant Moslem clergy who run Iran. They made it clear they preferred a president who would take a harder line, someone more of the ilk of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

Now the radical clergy has won and, at last report, Bani-Sadr had been in hiding for about two weeks although he is still believed to be in Iran. He will probably be fortunate to escape Iran with his life, since many of his supporters have been executed by firing squads during recent days.

And what of the future of Iran and her people? It's probably safe to say that to expect anything reasonable out of Iran in the next few months — probably years — is to expect too much. The revolution that has wracked Iran since the shah fled will continue, as will the blood-letting.

Ironic though it is, the people of Iran only have traded rulers, failing to improve their lot. They merely succeeded in getting rid of the autocratic rule of the shah and in gaining the autocratic, almost dictatorial rule of the ayatollah.

They have gained nothing; they are no better off today than they were before. The Iranian revolution has been a revolution for revolution's sake.

Mayors turn moderate

The word seems to be seeping out that if every American is willing to make a few sacrifices, personally and politically, President Reagan can revive the health of the nation's economy. As the president keeps telling us, the monster called inflation needs a sacrificial effort.

The latest group to see the light is the United States Conference of Mayors. After routine resistance to any budget cuts that affect the cities of the nation, the municipal moguls have suddenly turned moderate, and sensible, and endorsed cutbacks in federal spending.

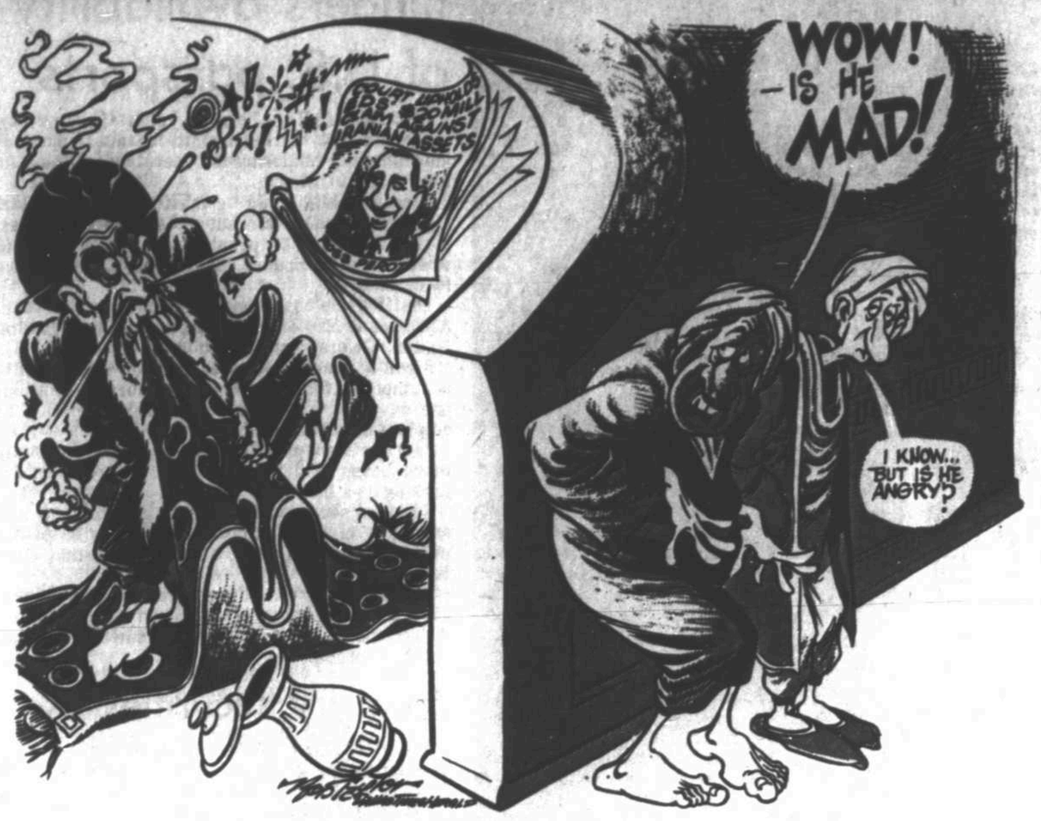
American mayors in general campaign on a promise to clip Washington for every cent they can get. It is almost traitorous even to think of rejecting a handout from Big Brother.

The mayors' initial reaction to Mr. Reagan's thrift package was cool indeed. "Tragic" was the word used by Mayor Charles Royer of Seattle, who wants more money for urban aid. Milwaukee's Mayor Henry Maier predicted the Reagan budget cuts would produce "blood in the streets." At their annual meeting in Seattle last year the mayors asked for billions more in federal aid.

This year was different. At its meeting in Louisville the Conference of Mayors did an about-face. Instead of trying to grab every nickel they could get from Washington, they decided the best way to help their cities was to help President Reagan get the nation out of its fiscal slump.

To their credit, the mayors went on record. They passed a resolution stating that President Reagan's budget cuts are a "necessary prerequisite to a healthy economy."

One of these days the mayors of America will look back on that resolution with pride. Even their constituents, to whom they talked about Washington as a sort of municipal grab bag, will be proud of the fiscal responsibility of their leaders.



WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

New San Juan courthouse lacks judges

WASHINGTON — The proverbial horse that can be led to water — but not made to drink — has its counterpart in San Juan, Puerto Rico. The federal judges have had a luxurious new courthouse waiting for them in nearby Hato Rey for five years now, but no amount of persuasion by the General Services Administration can get them to move in.

Jack Anderson

The situation would be comical but for one thing: It's costing the taxpayers literally millions of dollars. Here's the story:

GSA, the federal government's housekeeper and general factotum, decided in the early 1960s that the federal courthouse in San Juan was too old, obsolete and overcrowded to uphold the majesty of American justice in a proper manner. The solution, in time-honored bureaucratic tradition, was to build a new courthouse.

GSA spared no expense. The one-story courthouse in Hato Rey cost some $4 million. It is fully air-conditioned, with high ceilings, expensive carpeting and a lobby the size of a basketball court. One awed observer described it as looking like a Hollywood set.

An internal report by the GSA's inspector general says, "The new facility is prestigious, even luxurious, by any standards."

It is also available, and has been since 1976. But the judges have simply refused to move in. They are clearly not taken in by GSA's use of the word "prestigious." What can a bunch of GSA pencil-pushers tell a federal judge about prestige?

The trouble seems to be, as GSA sources told my associate Lucette Lagnado, that for all its decay and overcrowding, the present courthouse in Old San Juan is the judges' idea of prestigious. Apparently, it's the neighborhood: To the judges, Old San Juan is "in," Hato Rey is "out." It's that simple.

But the judges couldn't come right out and say that. So they found myriad excuses for not moving into their elegant new courthouse: It wasn't safe. No bulletproof windows. One courtroom wasn't big enough.

GSA, desperate to get the building occupied, tried to appease the judges. It installed bulletproof windows and enlarged the unacceptable courtroom at an additional cost of $350,000.

But in the ensuing years Congress had approved several more judges for Puerto Rico. Aha! You see? the judges cried. The new courthouse isn't big enough. What must be done is to renovate our old courthouse.

Incredibly, GSA agreed. It spent $622,000 to fix up the crumbling courthouse in Old San Juan. The judges had even less reason to move to Hato Rey.

So the fancy new courthouse sits largely empty to this day: Only one-third of it is occupied. Mildew flecks the unused furniture. Exterminators had to be called in to slay the termites. Part of a ceiling in what was intended to be a judge's chamber collapsed one day.

Determined to win over the recalcitrant jurists no matter how much it costs the taxpayers, GSA is now planning to sink another $2.2 million into the phantom courthouse of Hato Rey. The money will go to expand the building and presumably answer the judges' complaint that there won't be room for their new colleagues.

If approved by Congress, the proposed expansion would take five years to complete. As one disgusted official noted, this would extend the courthouse's vacancy to more than 10 years, or 20 percent of the building's useful life.

And here's the final rub: The GSA still doesn't know whether the judges will move in once the expansion is completed, though a court spokesman assured me they will.

SYNFUEL SINS: The Reagan administration has already shown its doubts about the synthetic fuels program by cutting back government subsidies. Here's one good reason:

Documents buried within the Department of Energy show that yet another synfuel project is heading for disaster. Known as H-Coal, the plant to extract synthetic crude from coal was built almost entirely with DOE funds in Ashland, Ky.

It was supposed to process from 200 to 600 tons of pulverized coal a day. But since its completion early last year, several sections of the plant have been shut down regularly because of mechanical defects.

Internal DOE documents show that costs zoomed from $178 million to $296 million. DOE enginers had little or no idea what they were doing, the report states.

In their eagerness to overcome delays, DOE officials just threw money at the project, winking at improper subcontracting practices and totally losing control of the financial arrangements.

Congress cannot evade its responsibility for this colossal waste of public funds. Like DOE, it has failed to exercise adequate oversight of the synfuels program it authorized.

WHITE HOUSE PIPELINE: President Reagan is sending out confusing smoke signals on cigarettes. Though neither he nor the first lady use the weed, they pass out special packs of Marlboros to favored guests. The presidential seal in gold stands out fine, but the surgeon general's warning is hardly readable. The cigarettes are donated, apparently in gratitude for continued tobacco subsidies.

— The president's charisma impressed Mayor Lee Alexander of Syracuse, N.Y. — but not to the point of hypnosis. "I've never seen a guy with as much charm as Reagan," said the Democratic mayor. "It's a problem. What he proposes will have stunning consequences, potentially tragic consequences for our cities."

HEMISPHERE REPORT

Time of 'golden opportunity' short for U.S. and Mexico

Presidents Ronald Reagan and Jose Lopez Portillo have done what they can to start building a new, friendly, mutually respectful relationship between the United States and Mexico.

William Giandoni

Now it is up to their diplomats, their negotiators, their congresses to work out the details.

The two presidents seem to have gotten to know each other better during their two days at Camp David and to have made a decision to work together not only for the good of their two countries but also for the nations of Central America and the Caribbean area.

That, of course, is one giant step for the better.

But what next?

Even as Lopez Portillo and Mr. Reagan were meeting, prophets of doom on both sides of the border were citing and reciting the reasons why the two countries could never come to an understanding.

Differences in Mexican and U.S. estimates of the revolutionary situation in Central America, U.S. restrictions on trade, Mexico's restrictions on tuna fishing, and illegal immigration from Mexico were probably the most serious objections raised.

It is painfully true that the list of obstacles to a better relationnhip has been growing over the years.

Why? Perhaps it is that, not since the 1940s, not since Harry S Truman and Miguel Aleman were, respectively, presidents of the United States and Mexico, have the two countries been blessed with chief executives whose terms coincided approximately and who both appeared to feel that they should make an effort to strengthen the bonds of friendship.

But back then came the Korean conflict and U.S. attention was distracted. In the last 30 years, it might be said, perhaps only during the tragically abbreviated term of President John F. Kennedy did the possibility exist of a true rapprochement.

Kennedy was an immensely popular figure in Mexico. But his Alliance for Progress plan to eliminate poverty in Latin America was not.

Mexico noted, with considerable reason, that the agrarian reform and other programs espoused by the alliance were things that the Aztec republic had been practicing for over four decades at that time.

Also, Mexico objected to the idea of having its social and economic policies dictated from Washington.

Had President Lyndon Johnson not had to concern himself with Vietnam, he probably would have endeavored to improve ties with Mexico. President Gustavo Diaz Ordaz would have been receptive.

Presidents Luis Echeverria and Richard Nixon ideologically were poles apart.

Jimmy Carter and Lopez Portillo started out right, but Carter's advisers failed him and he ended both squandering his opportunity and offending the Mexican president.

That brings us to the good beginning that Presidents Lopez Portillo and Reagan have made.

Although, to judge by the news pictures, the two men communicated through an interpreter, Mexico's highly capable Dona Italia Morayta, Mr. Reagan apparently managed to convince Lopez Portillo of his sincerity.

At any rate, Lopez Portillo, who is famed for the elegance of his insults as well as his compliments, summed up his feelings at the end of this, his latest visit to Washington by saying:

"I confess my emotion. I confess that, having spoken in this spot three times, never was I so moved.

"I had been sincere, certainly, but cautious. I had been frank, but always weighing each one of my words, because always, the relation, in one way or another, I confess, had been tense.

"Relations between neighbors of distinct condition are difficult, for one and the other. But I confess that for the first time I have felt relaxed. For the first time a president of the United States has used that generous formula of friendship, (saying) his house is my house."

And now what?

Hopefully, the joint commission to be headed by Secretary of State Alexander Haig and Mexican Foreign Minister Jorge Castaneda "to assure integrated handling of matters of common concern" will be able to resolve some or all of those problems by the end of the year, when it is to issue its report.

Before then Presidents Lopez Portillo and Reagan will meet again, October 22-23, at the 22-nation North-South conference in Cancun, Mexico, that Lopez Portillo is hosting.

The time is short. Probably not long after Cancun, Mexico will become engrossed in political campaigning for the presidential elections next July. Lopez Portillo's successor will take office Dec. 1, 1982, less than a year and a half from now.

ART BUCHWALD

"Bureau of Missing Persons, Sergeant Callahan speaking."

"I wish to report the disappearance of a kitchen appliance repairman."

Art Buchwald

"My kitchen appliance man is missing. He was here one day working on my dishwasher, and said he was going back to the shop for a part, and I haven't seen him since."

"When was that?"

"Ten days ago. The dishwasher is in my kitchen in a hundred parts and I'm worried sick."

"Did you call the shop to see if he was there?"

"He's never there when I call. His answering service says they haven't heard from him in over a week."

"Don't start crying, lady. Did you have a quarrel with him?"

"It wasn't really a quarrel. I thought the hose had broken, but he said the washer needed a new motor. He said he had been having a lot of trouble with this particular type of machine, and I'd be better off buying a new one. I said I'd rather he fix it, and he just muttered to himself as he took it apart."

"Do you have a name we can work on?"

"I never got his name. I found his company in the Yellow Pages, under '24 Hour Service — Satisfaction Guaranteed.'"

"That doesn't help us much. Did he take his tool kit with him?"

"Yes, he did. Why do you ask?"

"It sounds as though he really meant business. When a repairman packs his tool kit up it usually indicates he's running away."

"But I was so good to him. I gave him an ice-cold beer, and a turkey sandwich. I treated him just as if he were part of the family."

"Don't blame yourself, lady. A lot of repairmen take off before they finish the job. He's probably somewhere in town working on another dishwasher."

"But suppose he was in an accident and was hurt? I'd never forgive myself. My husband and I can't sleep at nights wondering if he's all right."

"We'd check the hospitals for you, lady. But it isn't easy without a name."

"Wait a minute. I think he did have a name. He made a telephone call when he was in the kitchen and identified himself to the other person as Jerry."

"At least that's something to go on. Could you give us a description of him?"

"He was about five-feet-eight, rather heavyset, and had grease all over his face and hands."

"We can't put out an all-points bulletin on that. You have to understand something. We get reports on maybe 50 runaway repairmen a day. They don't like to finish a job. They love to take things apart, but they don't like to put them back again. They don't even care if they get paid or not. We don't have the manpower to track them down, and even if we did we don't have the legal authority to send them back to your house to finish the work.

"All we can do, if we find your man, is try to persuade him to call you, and then it's up to you to talk him into coming home."

"So what you are saying is that I may never see him again?"

"I think you have to face reality. We haven't had too much luck in locating missing repairmen. Once they decide to leave an unfinished job they're rarely heard from again. The only thing you and your husband can do is hope that perhaps someday he'll come back and put your dishwasher together of his own free will. If you were as kind to him as you say you were, he might turn up at your doorstep any day."

"If you hear anything, will you let me know?"

"We'll put his name on the ticker. But don't get your hopes up. He could be in California by now working on a garbage disposal unit, under another name. If a repairman doesn't want to be found, there isn't a Missing Persons Bureau in the country that can locate him."

Demjanjuk lawyers to appeal ruling on citizenship

CLEVELAND (AP) — Attorneys for John Demjanjuk, a suburban Cleveland autoworker found to have been a Nazi death camp guard, say they'll appeal a federal court order revoking his American citizenship.

Leaders of the area's Ukrainian community, meanwhile, said Tuesday's ruling by U.S. District Judge Frank J. Battisti sets a dangerous precedent because it accepts as authentic a document supplied by the Soviet Union.

"It will be appealed. There's no doubt about it,' said defense attorney Spiros Gonakis. Neither he nor Demjanjuk, whose family shielded him at home from reporters, commented on the ruling.

Battisti ruled in favor of the Justice Department, which argued that Demjanjuk, 61, had been a Nazi death camp guard known to doomed Jewish prisoners as "Ivan the Terrible" for excessive cruelty.

The five-week civil trial that ended March 11 included testimony from five survivors of the Treblinka death camp, where Demjanjuk was accused of having helped murder the civilian prisoners. Some 1 million Jews were killed there by the Nazis.

The court denaturalized Demjanjuk for lying about his wartime activities when he applied to immigrate in 1950 and sought citizenship in 1958. He obtained a visa and came to the United States in 1952. Collaboration with the Nazis would have barred him from entering the country.

About two dozen protesters marched outside the courthouse, waving Ukrainian flags and denouncing Soviet persecution of Eastern Europeans. Zenon Krislaty of the Committee Against Use of Soviet Evidence said the trial was unfair because Battisti allowed as evidence an identification card issued to a Ukrainian named Iwan Demjanjuk at a Nazi training camp in Trawniki, Poland, in 1942.

"This document should never have been allowed," he said.

Bohdan Futey of the United Ukrainian Organizations of Greater Cleveland agreed, saying "it creates a bad precedent."

Both said the Soviets have been known to falsify documents.

Battisti said there was no proof the card was forged. The judge said Demjanjuk's citizenship must be revoked in light of prosecution testimony and a 1980 U.S. Supreme Court ruling upholding the denaturalization of Feodor Fedorenko, a Ukrainian also found to have concealed service at Treblinka.

"This court must conclude that defendant's failure to disclose his service under the German SS at Trawniki and his later service as an armed guard at Treblinka were material misrepresentations," he said.

Demjanjuk maintained he was a Soviet soldier captured by the German army in 1942 and held prisoner until the end of the war. He admitted in court he lied about some facts in order to avoid being repatriated to the Soviet Union. He said he never helped the Nazis.

Parents to sue school district

DALLAS (AP) — The Richardson Independent School District is being sued for the cost of special out-of-state schooling by the parents of a 12-year-old handicapped girl who claim their daughter's condition worsened in the district's classes.

Marico and Dina Scokin say their daughter, Davina, improved only after she was placed in the Institute of Logopedics in Wichita, Kan.

The girl has limited speaking ability and "autistic tendencies" resulting from brain damage at birth, one diagnosis says.

The $193,000 suit, being heard this week in the court of U.S. District Judge Robert W. Porter, claims the Richardson district placed Davina in a Cooperative Behavioral Center classroom that was "overcrowded and understaffed."

The suit says Davina received "no physical therapy, little occupational therapy, no reading program, little speech therapy and no work on communications skills" while at the behavioral center.

The Scokins say the district is obligated to pay for Davina's schooling because of federal and state laws that require school districts to provide "free appropriate public education in the least restrictive environment" for all handicapped children.

Mrs. Scokin said her child began to regress during the 1977-78 school year, her second at the Richardson center.

"After a week or 10 days, she began to regress very rapidly," Mrs. Scokin said. "She was getting unusually quiet from being a very hyperactive child. She would sit and stare. She would be reluctant to get into the car to go to school in the morning."

She said Davina was in a class of six supervised by a teacher and an assistant — usually a high school student with no special training.

At the time, she could not dress or wash herself and would speak only individual words without putting them into sentences, Mrs. Scokin said.

In June 1978, the Scokins decided to put Davina into the Kansas school, which charged $1,334 to $1,774 a month. Mrs. Scokin said three students were in each institute class, taught by a teacher and a college-trained aide.

Now Davina can dress herself, brush her teeth and has "learned to eat very properly like a young lady," Mrs. Scokin said. "She says small phrases."

On Sunday, her mother said, Davina told her father over the telephone: "Happy Father's day; I love you, Papa."

"Before, she could not go up and down steps, and now she runs up and down the steps. We have noticed a very big improvement. I think it's good for my child to be in a school like the school of logopedics."

Wood witness wants to be moved from jail

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — George Edward "Pete" Kay, held in contempt of court for refusing to testify in an investigation into a federal judge's murder, is upset that he is being held in Bexar County Jail instead of a federal facility.

Kay, 39, a lifelong friend of convicted hired killer Charles V. Harrelson, reportedly was disturbed Tuesday when he learned he would not be moved anytime soon from the local jail, which his attorney said was below standards and had been the site of some unusual deaths.

Kay surrendered at noon Monday to begin serving a contempt of court sentence imposed by U.S. District Judge William Sessions last week after Kay refused to answer questions in the investigation of the 1979 assassination of U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr.

Kay, who has a felony bookmaking conviction, said he feared he would be killed if he gained a reputation as an informant.

He requested that he be jailed at a Federal Correctional Institute, and not in any county jail, to ensure his protection.

But U.S. Marshal Rudy Garza said late Tuesday that he planned to leave Kay, who also goes by the nickname "Peterpottamus," in the Bexar County Jail for the time being.

"I think I'll leave him here a little while. I'm not positive how long it will be," the marshal said. "For the time being, that's my thought on it."

Alan Brown, Kay's local attorney, said that his client "doesn't like it at all" at the Bexar County Jail. "He was talking in terms of a hunger strike," Brown said.

Kay said he wanted to go to a minimum security facility at Big Spring or Seagoville, but Garza said he preferred a more secure prison at Bastrop.

Garza said the Bureau of Prisons gave permission to move Kay to a federal institute at Fort Worth, but he said would have to get a special authorization to move him from the Southern District of Texas. Garza said Fort Worth was 300 miles away and he preferred to take Kay to the facility 100 miles away at Bastrop, but he had to discuss the matter further with Bureau of Prison officials.

Kay, acquitted in the ambush killing of two men in Oklahoma in 1979, had refused during three appearances to answer grand jury questions in an investigation into the assassination of Wood. He contended that Harrelson had threatened his life and that he might be killed if he testified, although contending he had no knowledge of who shot Wood.

During his stay in San Antonio last week, Kay expressed apprehension about being placed in the Bexar County Jail, referring to a 1979 incident in which former Drug Enforcement agent Sante Bario mysteriously died while eating a peanut butter sanwich while held on a bribery charge. Brown noted the jail was the object of a federal lwsuit and that there had been other questionable deaths, one in which a prisoner allegedly was battered by jail guards.

Sessions ordered Kay jailed until he decides to answer grand jury questions, or until the current grand jury term ends. The grand jury could be disbanded after it returns indictments in the Wood case. Otherwise it is scheduled to be in session until Sept. 24, 1982.

Kay was the third witness jailed for contempt of court. Harrelson's stepdaughter, Teresa Starr Jasper, has been held at Uvalde since March 27, and Earl McLennan, an associate of convicted narcotics trafficker Jimmy Chagra, has been jailed at an undisclosed location since May 8.

Chagra and Harrelson are listed as "targets" of the grand jury investigation.

Chapman says he intended to kill

NEW YORK (AP) — Mark David Chapman, who has pleaded guilty to murdering John Lennon, said he used hollow-point bullets to make certain the attack on the ex-Beatle would be a fatal one.

In response to a question from Assistant District Attorney Allen Sullivan, Chapman said he loaded his Charter Arms pistol last December with hollow-point bullets, "to ensure John Lennon's death."

According to court records obtained Tuesday, Chapman offered no motive for the slaying in a closed-plea hearing the day before.

Lost dog rescued

HOUSTON (AP) — Neighbors in an apartment complex became upset when they realized a man wanted $50 to return a lost poodle to a blind woman.

The group said they rescued the poodle, Gidget, and chased the man away.

"I told him I would pay, even though it would have put me in great debt," said Alice Mitcham, who has been blind 14 years and who works at a Federal Building snack bar.

But Mrs. R.A. Martin and other neighbors thought otherwise.

When the man arrived with the dog, he was confronted by about 10 neighbors. Mrs. Martin said she called to Gidget and was able to grab the poodle.

Mrs. Daniel agrees to visits, custody

LIBERTY, Texas (AP) — Vickie Daniel, scheduled to go on trial in October for the murder of her husband, former Texas House Speaker Price Daniel Jr., has agreed to give former Gov. and Mrs. Price Daniel Sr. visitation rights to their two young grandsons, the attorney for the Daniel family said.

Vickie Daniel has also relinquished custody of her 12-year-old daugher, Kimberly Moore, to the girl's father, Vickie Daniel's first husband, Larry Moore, said Moore's present wife, Judy Moore.

"Vickie changed her mind out of the clear blue sky and gave us permanent custody," Mrs. Moore said. "We had been talking to her months before that and she wouldn't agree to anything."

Attorney Zeke Zbranek said the visitation rights to Marion Price IV, 1, and Franklin Baldwin, 3, include a week in June, a week in August, three days in February, three days in October and, on an every-other-year basis, three days around Easter, Thanksgiving and Christmas.

Liberty County jury awarded Vickie Daniel custody of the boys after hearing a lawsuit filed by her sister-in-law, Jean Daniel Murph, after Price Daniel Jr. was shot to death January 19 in home north of Liberty. The suit claimed that Vickie Daniel was emotionally unfit to raise the boys.

Zbranek said Vickie Daniel began receiving two or three months ago $500 a month from the Daniel estate to support the boys.

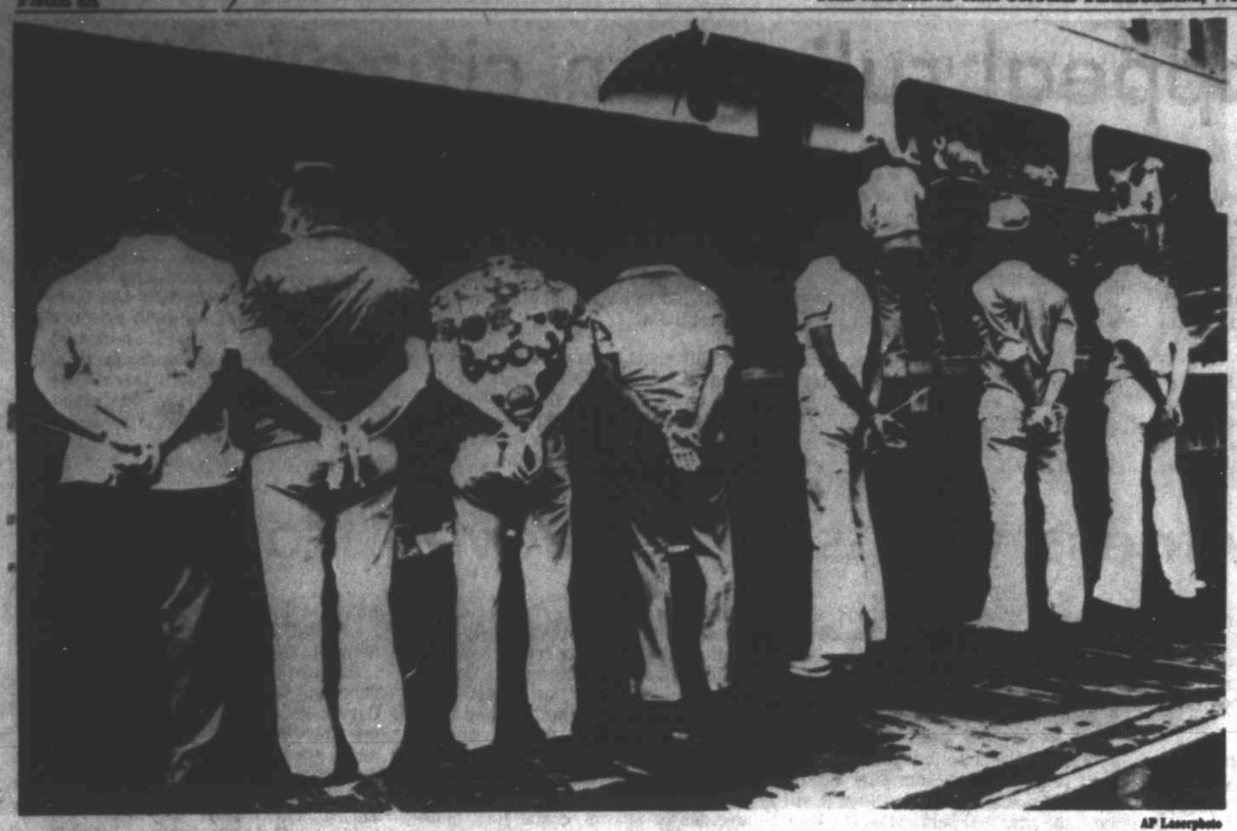
Freighter chase ends in gun fire



AP Laserphoto

Seven crewmen of the freighter Snowflake stand handcuffed near the boat, after they were turned over to the Drug Enforcement Administration Tuesday. The Snowflake was fired upon and seized by the Coast Guard cutter Steadfast following a two-day chasse through the Florida Straits.

MIAMI (AP) — U.S. Attorney Atlee Wampler says the government probably will not prosecute the master and 25 crewmen of a coastal freighter that led Coast Guardsmen on a wild, two-day high seas chase that ended when the fleeing vessel was riddled with machine-gun fire.

"We are exhausting every angle, but it looks like we won't have the statutory authority to prosecute," Wampler said after the crewmen were jailed Tuesday.

The crewmen will be turned over to the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service for deportation proceedings if the Justice Department declines to press charges, officials said.

The Coast Guard said it found three pounds of marijuana residue aboard the 551-foot freighter Break Sea, which also has several other names painted on its bow, including Snowflake and Jalapa. The ship led two Coast Guard cutters on a chase through the Florida Straits to the Yucatan Peninsula.

The 25 Colombian nationals and a Chilean were turned over to the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration at the Port of Miami.

Petty Officer Dan Waldschmidt said the frenzied 350-mile chase began early Saturday when a Coast Guard aircraft on routine patrol near the Bahamian island of Bimini spotted the Break Sea and reported it was acting suspiciously.

Bimini is a favorite spot for drug smugglers who transfer marijuana from heavily laden "mother ships" to speedboats that carry the illegal cargo to secluded areas along Florida's coastline.

Two cutters patrolling in the area, Steadfast and Cape Fox, were diverted to investigate. Steadfast, the quicker of the two, intercepted the Break Sea in the Florida Straits early Sunday and asked for registration information.

The Break Sea said it was a Panama-registered ship, but the Panamanian government told the Coast Guard the ship wasn't properly registered.

The Steadfast — nicknamed "El Tiberon Blanco" — The White Shark by drug smugglers because of its numerous seizures — pulled within 2,500 yards of the freighter and ordered it by radio to stop.

Chief Warrant Officer Paul Scotti, spokesman for the 7th Coast Guard district in Miami, said the Break Sea ignored several signal flags and sirens and tried to outrun the cutters.

As Coast Guardsmen uncovered the 210-foot cutter's hefty three-inch deck gun and displayed a .50-caliber machinegun, the Break Sea was again ordered to stop.

"We told her to heave to or we'd fire, but the vessel just kept on going," Scotti said.

The Steadfast's crew then fired three machinegun bursts over the freighter's bow, waited 10 minutes, then fired 72 shots into the ship's stern.

The ship stopped 12 minutes later, Scotti said.

Military boost heads for congressional conference

By DON WATERS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House-approved down payment on the military buildup sought by President Reagan is headed for a compromise conference with the Senate, which approved a more generous version.

The House voted 360-50 Tuesday to give the Pentagon authority to obligate an additional $2.66 billion for weapons, research and construction during the current fiscal year.

The bill is different in numerous respects from the $2.8 billion supplemental measure that cleared the Senate on April 7 and the $3 billion package submitted by the administration. But it gives the Defense Department most of what it wanted.

Among major weapons purchases, the House bill earmarks $327.5 million for more new M-1 tank, $143 million for M-60 tanks, $153.5 million for the M-2 armored fighting vehicle and $119 million for the F-A-18 air combat plane.

The House joined the Senate in setting aside $139 million to begin bringing the aircraft carrier Oriskany out of mothballs, but it split with the other chamber by including no new money for reactivating the World War II-era battleship New Jersey. Funds for the New Jersey were included in the original 1981 military authorization bill.

The House bill cut more than $100 million from the administration request for aircraft modifications and spare parts and also lopped off funds for a variety of research and development projects.

On a motion by Rep. Melvin Price, D-Ill., the Armed Services Committee chairman, the House added $24 million to replace an Air Force reconnaissance plane destroyed in a crash earlier this year.

It also approved an amendment by Rep. Bill Nichols, D-Ala., boosting the Army's authorized active-duty uniformed force this year by 4,700, to 780,000 men and women. Nichols said the additional slots were needed because of recent improvements in the Army's personnel recruiting and retention.

The Air Force, Navy and Marine Corps are authorized a total of 10,000 more troops and the Defense Department would get 27,900 more civilians.

Opposition to AWACS sale grows

By JIM ADAMS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional resistance to President Reagan's plan to sell sophisticated radar planes to Saudi Arabia is increasing, with more than half the Senate and House now opposing the deal, opponents say.

Reps. Clarence Long, D-Md., and Norman Lent, R-N.Y., called a news conference today to announce that 224 House members, six more than half the 435 members, are co-sponsoring a resolution to veto the sale.

And Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., planned to announce that 52 senators are urging Reagan in a letter to drop the sale.

The show of opposition, coming a week after Assistant Senate Republican Leader Ted Stevens of Alaska said the Senate now probably would approve the deal, was staged in an effort to head off Reagan's plan to formally propose the sale to Congress on July 8.

"In my opinion there's no way the president can get this through the House," Long said.

PACKWOOD'S LETTER indicated the Republican president also could have trouble getting the GOP-controlled Senate to approve the sale of the Advance Warning and Control System radar planes to Saudi Arabia.

Congressional veto of an arms sale requires rejection by majorities in both the House and the Senate. It never has been done.

Reagan announced in March that he intends to sell the Saudis five AWACS plus missiles and long-range fuel tanks for 62 F-15 jetfighters already on order.

Congress has 30 days to veto the sale after it is formally notified. Reagan has delayed that notification to give his aides more time to line up congressional support.

Opponents' principal arguments are that the sale would increase the Arab threat to Israel, possibly compromise secret equipment on the AWACS radar planes and reward the Saudis for rejecting U.S. Mideast peace efforts.

"THIS PROPOSAL poses a serious threat to Israel's security and raises serious questions about the security of American technological secrets," Long said in a prepared statement. "There is a real danger of our technological secrets falling into Soviet hands through theft, extortion, defection or even by accident."

"The AWACS aircraft would permit the Saudis to survey Israel's defenses, convey tactical information to Israel's other enemies and coordinate attacks with precision," Long said.

"Saudi F-15s, if equipped with additional fuel tanks and air-to-air missiles, could accurately and with little warning strike any target in Israel from any base in Saudi Arabia," he said.

The administration has argued the AWACS will not have equipment to coordinate Arab attacks on Israel — and will be no threat anyway because Israeli jets could simply shoot the slow-moving AWACS down.

The Saudis need the AWACS to defend oil fields, and they will be too far away to spy on Israel, administration officials have testified.

Indeed, they say U.S.-manned AWACS in Saudi Arabia did not detect Israel's June 7 bombing raid on Iraq's nuclear reactor, even though Israeli planes had to cross Jordan and Saudi Arabia.

Transit talks deadlocked

CHICAGO (AP) — City officials met with state officials Tuesday for another round of fruitless talks about a rescue plan for the cash-crippled Chicago-area mass transit network.

Gov. James R. Thompson told reporters Tuesday night that he disputed the figure of $600 million in aid for the financially ailing Regional Transportation Authority, a figure which Mayor Jane Byrne claims the RTA needs over the next three years.

General dead at 72

CHICAGO (AP) — Retired Brig. Gen. Henry C. Lane, a World War II Marine Corps hero who won the Distinguished Flying Cross, is dead at 72.

Lane, a pilot who won the Distinguished Flying Cross for transporting gasoline to Guadalcanal under enemy fire, died Sunday at the home of a daughter in Monroe, N.C.

He also ferried many wounded off Guadalcanal and other South Pacific islands to safety. After the war, Lane commanded the 1st Marine Aircraft Wing Service Squadron 17 in Japan. He later served as asistant to the commanding general of the Atlantic Fleet Marine Force Aircraft Command.

Formerly of Chicago, Lane had lived in Pensacola, Fla., since retiring from the Marine Corps in 1958.

San Angelo armadillo race spurs controversy

DALLAS (AP) — Armadillo racing has drawn thousands to barrooms, amusement parks and chili cook-offs in Texas. But people who go to these events don't realize that an armadillo belongs in the wild and not in an arena being yelled at, says a spokeswoman for a Dallas-based group opposed to the races.

"If you asked people if they'd like to be thrust into a noisy, smoky arena, get jumped at, kicked at, yelled at and have beer thrown on them as they're being forced to race, they'd say, 'No, I wouldn't like that,'" said Sandra Williams, vice president of Sound Animal Control.

The group claims a membership of 1,000 and used the occasion of the annual World Champion Armadillo Race in San Angelo Saturday to voice its concern for the armor-coated mammal and popular Texas symbol.

Saturday, an armadillo named "Greased Lightning" delighted trainer Carl Newsome of San Angelo by setting a world record of three seconds in the 40-foot World Champion race.

Ms. Williams says she wants to know whether anyone asked the entrant how he felt about racing.

"It's not a sport. It's not entertainment. It's just a matter of who can scare an armadillo across a line quicker."

The hard-shelled, hump-backed animals often are painted so they can be distinguished and even have been injected with drugs to spur them to victory, maintains Mrs. Williams, who admits she never has been to such a race.

Sam Lewis thinks she should attend one. As president of the World Armadillo Breeding and Racing Association, he organizes the annual race in San Angelo.

"In all probability, we're saving more armadillos through the races than we were before we had races," he says.

Mexico's nuclear future filled with controversy

By CHRISTOPHER DICKEY
The Washington Post

SANTA FE DE LA LAGUNA, Mexico — Heavy water, atomic fission and Mexico's nuclear future are alien concepts in this quiet village where Indian peasants spend most of their days working in the fields, making pots from local volcanic clays or fishing in the rich, placid waters of Lake Patzcuaro.

But this town in the state of Michoacan about 150 miles west of Mexico City is being considered as the site for a nuclear research reactor that could mark a new start for Mexico's struggling atomic energy program and, according to some, destroy this lake and its culture in the process.

The 100,000 people who live in a score of communities scattered around the shores of Patzcuaro find their way of life, their environment and the dramatically beautiful lake itself suddenly the focus of intense political passions. They are in the middle of the biggest nuclear controversy this country has ever seen.

THE FACILITY ITSELF would be rather small by today's standards: two reactors, one of less than a megawatt and one of 40 megawatts. Its backers want construction to start immediately and they say that the small unit could be in operation within months, while the larger reactor would start up within three years.

Other sites might be chosen. Patzcuaro, however, is relatively close to Mexico City and has an abundance of water, so it is technically the best, say the facility's advocates.

Emotionally and politically it may be the worst. This is because so many peasants are involved, and as a group they represent such a potent symbolic and political force in Mexican life; because this is one of the most scenic places in the nation; because of Mexico's fears, despite abundant oil, about its energy future; because of intense, sometimes defensive national pride.

In a reversal of the atomic debate elsewhere, the forces in favor of the reactor here are aligned with the political left. They are led by the militant Union of Nuclear Industry Workers (SUTIN).

"They have made it a nationalistic thing, which makes it very difficult to oppose," complained one anti-nuclear activist. "To be against it is made out to be anti-union. They say we're reactionaries."

WHEN PRO-REACTOR FORCES plan a demonstration it is billed as a march to support Mexico's energy independence and Mexico's petroleum and other mineral wealth, which has been revered since the nationalization of the oil fields 45 years ago as a precious national inheritance.

The recent discoveries of enormous petroleum reserves, potentially more than 250 billion barrels, would seem to assure an abundance of energy for several decades to come. But the Ministry of Patrimony and Industrial Development has concluded that alternatives must be sought to the current dependence on oil and gas, which according to official statistics account for 90 percent of Mexico's present domestic energy supply.

With petroleum making up two-thirds of Mexico's exports and almost half of its foreign-exchange earnings, it is simply too valuable to use at home if something else can be found to take its place.

BY 1990, MEXICO HOPES to have two commercial nuclear reactors in operation generating 2,500 megawatts of electricity, or about 1.5 percent of total domestic consumption. One, at Laguna Verde on the gulf coast, has been more than a decade in the building and should be open within the next two years. The energy plan calls for enough nuclear plants by the end of the century to generate 20,000 megawatts, although the exact number and location of the reactors has not been decided.

10,000 carpenters end strike

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — About 10,000 Northern California carpenters ended their week-long strike against homebuilders Tuesday with a tentative contract that would continue to give them every other Friday off.

Details of the pact, announced Tuesday night by the Northern California Homebuilders Conference, were not released. However, Wesley Sizoo, attorney for the 300 builders, said the "Black Friday" arrangement would continue.

The strike, involving carpenters in 46 counties, was the first in 20 years against the homebuilders.

The two-year contract is scheduled for a ratification vote Thursday night.

Joe Melchoir, the conference president, said he expected the contract would mean higher home prices because labor costs are passed on to consumers.

On June 12, carpenters reached a settlement with the Associated General Contractors of Northern California, which represents heavy construction project builders. That agreement kept the 32-hour, 40-hour alternating workweeks anad added $3.10 an hour to journeymen union carpenters' wages of $15.35 an hour. It also added various cost-of-living adjustments and fringe benefits.

Melchoir said the homebuilders' agreement is essentially the same.

Shovel in hand, one of the 800 firemen on the line runs for his life in Soda Canyon as flames spurred by high winds in 100 degree heat nearly cut of his escape. The Napa Valley fire has spread over 23,000 acres, charring an 11-mile swath through the wine country, destroying at least 65 homes.

Court hears arguments on hostage accord

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court, confronted with a July 19 deadline for transferring Iranian assets out of the United States, is being asked to decide if former President Carter had the authority to order the funds moved to gain the release of the 52 American hostages in Iran.

The nine justices were opening oral arguments today on the legality of the Iranian hostage accord, but the gripping drama that surrounded the agreement when it was sealed during the final hours of the Carter administration has dissipated.

In its place, lawyers for the government and one of many firms with claims against Iran are debating the president's power to enter into the financial end of the deal.

The justices also were to listen to lawyers for the Iranian government and that country's central bank express their support the agreement, which led to the release of hostages last Jan. 20.

After today's rare summer hearing, the high court is expected to speed up its decision to meet the accord's July 19 deadline for the transfer of several billion dollars in Iranian assets.

The agreement calls for an international tribunal with access to some of the Iranian assets, rather than U.S. courts, to decide those claims.

The nine members of the tribunal are scheduled to begin meeting at The Hague on July 1 for "organizational purposes and related matters," according to the government.

At stake is up to $4 billion in Iranian assets. The government, however, has said it is primarily interested in transferring by July 19 the approximately $2.3 billion in Iranian assets now held in U.S. banks.

The Justice Department has told the high court that failure to transfer the assets could have "potentially serious diplomatic and financial consequences" for the United States.

Several hundred American firms with claims against Iran are eager to get their money now, before the assets leave the United States. About 450 lawsuits seeking Iranian assets are now pending in U.S. courts.

The firm that persuaded the high court to hear its statutory and constitutional challenge is Dames & Moore, a Los Angeles-based engineering partnership trying to protect a $3.8 million cort judgmnt against Iran.

The justices on June 11 took the unusual step of hearing Dames & Moore's challenge before it was decided by a federal appeals court.

Dames & Moore claims it is "highly uncertain" whether the firm's claim can be brought to the international tribunal.

A number of groups and individuals — ranging from former hostage Jerry Plotkin to the Sperry Corp. — have filed their own views with the Supreme Court.

Plotkin, a private American citizen who was among the 52 hostages, asked the court to take into consideration a key part of the accord that prevents the former hostages from pursuing damage claims against Iran.

His lawyers asked the justices to "preserve the opportunity of Mr. Plotkin and other returned hostages to assert their claims at a further date."

Iranian assets under the control of U.S. citizens and firms were frozen by Carter on Nov. 14, 1979, just 10 days after the hostages were seized at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran.

Through a series of complex maneuvers, about $2.9 billion in Iranian assets went back to Iran upon execution of the agreement. Another $1.4 billion was set aside to pay American banks that lent money to Iran.

Greg Radick of Napa, Calif., searches the rubble of his house to salvage his antique watch collection after fire swept through the Napa Valley Tuesday. More than 1,000 firemen struggled to halt the wine country inferno that charred more than 23,000 acres.

Shift in wind helps firefighters contain fire

NAPA, Calif. (AP) — A shift in the wind is helping firefighters contain a 25,000-acre arson fire that has blackened the hills over the Napa Valley wine country, destroyed more than three dozen homes and injured at least 12 people.

Officials said the fire was started by incendiary devices tossed along the Silverado Trail Monday, touching off four separate fires that merged into one giant inferno.

"If the current situation continues, we may begin recalling some equipment in the morning," fire Capt. Jeremy Lord said Tuesday night. The wind direction turned against the blaze and speeds dropped to 10-15 mph from their original 50 mph.

Fire officials said 35 to 40 homes, some worth $500,000, were among 65 structures destroyed as flames roared over the tinder-dry scrub, brush and trees. No wineries were damaged, although flames briefly threatened at least one vineyard. The quality of this year's crop was not expected to be affected.

Damage to homes and property was estimated at $30 million. State Sen. Jim Neilsen, R-Woodland, who represents the area, said the Napa County Board of Supervisors would be asked to seek "local emergency" status allowing homeowners to obtain low-interest loans.

At least 12 people were injured, including three firefighters, but none was reported in serious condition.

An army of 1,600 firefighters had contained about 20 percent of the fire late Tuesday.

Using 142 fire engines, 16 air tankers and eight helicopters, the firefighters prevented the fire from spreading to the posh Silverado Country Club and 18 wineries closest to the blaze.

Al Achilles escaped with his wife and the family dog only to watch flames destroy his $250,000 home.

"I had to stay away about 100 feet because of the flames," Achilles said. "It was like a blast furnace."

"It looked like an atomic bomb had been dropped," said Maureen Grinnell, one of hundreds of people forced to flee the area.

Hundreds of deer nd other nimals perished in the flames and heat.

Authorities said the fire zone was about 11 miles long and about 5 miles wide at its widest point, shaped crudely like a hot dog with one end a few miles south of St. Helena and the other near Fairfield. The area is about 40 miles northeast of San Francisco.

The blazes were set within a 5-minute period, said Nick Fowler of the Lake Napa Ranger Unit. Officials found the incendiary devices at two of the locations where the fires started.

One man was questioned and released. No arrests were reported.

"Fires don't start in bunches," said Ed Karmec, a spokesman for the California Department of Forestry. "We normally are very suspicious when we have numerous points of origin."

The fire roared through 7,000 acres in its first hour. But while the blaze consumed 23,000 acres in its first day, the firefighters were able to check much of its advance Tuesday.

Judge denies woman damages

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — A 78-year-old Sweetwater woman who claimed she was paralyzed temporarily after receiving a swine flu vaccination has been denied any damages in a $150,000 suit she filed against the federal government.

U.S. District Judge Halbert Woodward said Tuesday Hattie Terrell's paralysis was the result of another illness and not the vaccination.

Mrs. Terrell, who received the vaccination during a nationwide campaign against swine flu in 1976, claimed she had to undergo physical therapy for paralysis after a long hospital stay.

Students pass exam

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — All 59 of the St. Mary's University Law School graduates who took the state bar exam passed it, and one of them made the highest score, the university says.

"St. Mary's achieved a total pass of all 59 students taking the rigorous exam, a rare achivement for a law school," the university announced Tuesday.

Constance Reynolds Somers, scoring 95 points out of a possible 100, made the highest score among nearly 700 bar candidates taking the test.

Mrs. Somers graduate from St. Mary's Law School in December 1980 and took the bar exam in February, outdistancing by 3 points the second highest grade of 92.

Mrs. Somers, who spoke at a recent Texas Supreme Court of Texas induction ceremony for 600 new lawyers, has joined a local law firm.

Order may be appealed

CHICAGO (AP) — Illinois insurance companies are deciding whether to appeal an order to pay $1.1 billion to 170,000 Illinois businesses in a dispute over workers' compensation premiums.

Nancy Nimz, an attorney for the insurers, said there would be no immediate decision on whether to appeal Tuesday's ruling by Circuit Court Judge James C. Murray.

The order culminated a 1979 lawsuit filed by 23 trade associations and the State Federation of Labor. The suit contested a 23.8 percent workers' compensation premium hike approved by the Illinois Department of Insurance.

Robert F. Coleman, chief attorney for the plaintiffs, said the rate rollback would return the workers' compensation premiums businesses must pay to 1977 levels.

Murray's order required that the businesses regain $750 million in compensation premiums charged since Sept. 1, 1979. He also ordered that current premiums be slashed by $360 million out of an annual total of $1.5 billion.

The judge found that state insurance officials had approved the premium hike without demanding audited data from insurers detailing increasing costs.

The businesses had argued that need for the premium increase was not properly documented. Labor joined the suit because it deemed the premiums exorbitant, said Coleman.

Roach remains can cause asthma

CHICAGO (AP) — Dead roaches can bother people just as much as live ones, an allergy specialist at Mount Sinai Hospital in Chicago says.

The remains of dead roaches can turn to dust and enter a patient's lungs, aggravating asthmatic conditions such as wheezing, coughing and choking, said Dr. Bann Kang, who has studied the roach-asthma connection for six years.

Ms. Kang said when she began practicing in Chicago she began seeing more asthma cases than during her training at the University of Michigan.

"You have to look at environmental factors. And I saw more roaches in Chicago than I did at Ann Arbor," she said in an interview published in today's editions of the Chicago Sun-Times.

Ms. Kang's research showed 60 percent of her asthma patients were sensitive to cockroach remains. Patients who inhaled toxins from roaches suffered asthma attacks, she said. And injection of the material caused rashes, Ms. Kang reported.

Victims of roach-asthma "develop the sensitivity simply by breathing. For long after the exterminator has come and gone, house dust holds the disintegrated remains of innumerable generations of the insect," she said.

Party has new leader

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — The Labor Party has a new leader to guide an effort to form a ruling coalition with the Fine Gael Party.

Michael O'Leary, 45, a former union official, was chosen Wednesday to lead the 15 Labor Party members elected June 11 to the 166-seat Dail, the Irish Parliament. A Labor Party conference Sunday is expected to give approval for talks with Fine Gael leader Garret Fitz-Gerald, whose party has 65 seats.

Prime Minister Charles J. Haughey's Fianna Fail party fell to 78 seats, short of a majority, but still hopes to form a governing coalition.

Demand for drug high

EDMONTON, Alberta (AP) — It is difficult for Jamaica to control marijuana exports so long as demand for it remains high in the United States and Canada, said Leslie Wilson, Jamaica's high commissioner to Canada.

The combination of eager buyers in the United States and Canada and willing sellers in Jamaica, where the marijuana plant grows wild, makes it "very difficult for controlling and policing," Wilson said in an interview Wednesday.

Official defecting

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Abdul Saeed Karim, an official of Ariana Afghanistan airlines, the government carrier, said today he is defecting to the side of Moslem rebels fighting the pro-Soviet Afghan government.

Karim, 38, who disclosed his plans to reporters in New Delhi just before departing for West Germany, said, "I cannot go back to Afghanistan — they would shoot me on the spot."

He said he has worked for the airline for 14½ years and has been its accounts officer in New Delhi since 1978. He said he hoped to do public relations work for a free Afghanistan.

"In Afghanistan, everybody is fighting, even in the city of Kabul, which is surrounded by Russian military," he said. "The travelers on the planes from Afghanistan, each day they tell of fighting somewhere."

LULAC urges halt of all military aid to El Salvador

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — The League of United Latin American Citizens, the nation's largest Hispanic organization, recently urged President Reagan to halt all military aid to El Salvador.

At the final session of the 100,000-member organization's national convention in Albuquerque, the delegates adopted a resolution asking the Reagan administration to immediately stop U.S. military aid to the government of El Salvador, which is being opposed by insurgents.

The LULAC resolution said that Reagan's current policy "could prove to be disastrous to the U.S."

Several of the resolutions adopted by the convention were critical of the Reagan administration. Earlier in the week, Vice President George Bush addressed the convention and urged support for the president's economic policies.

However, one resolution condemned the administration's budget-cutting plans for social service programs.

The delegates also approved resolutions criticizing the Reagan administration for its vote against an international code for baby-formula marketing, and its consideration of a "guest worker" program for Mexicans.

The convention also adopted resolutions urging legalization of the status of undocumented workers currently in the United States and development of an "oil-for-technology" economic policy with Mexico.

Outgoing LULAC President Ruben Bonilla set the convention's tone earlier in the week by decrying the "conservative syndrome" exemplified by Reagan and his policies. He urged convention delegates to "send out a ripple of hope" to others by making clear the group's opposition to those policies.

Bonilla said he was "embarrassed" by the administration's vote against the code proposed by the United Nations World Health Organization for baby-formula marketing.

The U.S. was the only country opposing the code, which was proposed because of concerns that improper use of formulas in underdeveloped countries has caused health problems for babies.

Bonilla said U.S. cooperation with the code could save the lives of millions of Spanish-speaking babies in the world "who are our brethren in language and culture."

The guest worker program being discussed by the Reagan administration would allow Mexicans to work in this country temporarily.

Bonilla has opposed the idea, saying it would take jobs away from U.S. Hispanics. He also said the Mexican workers easily could be "exploited" by being forced to accept low pay and poor working conditions.

A proposal by New York LULAC delegates supporting a "mechanism" allowing Mexican workers temporary employment and training in the United States and full protection of labor laws was defeated during debate on the resolutions Saturday.

The call for amnesty for undocumented workers currently in the United States is the major aspect of LULAC's resolution on immigration. The resolution also recommends increased U.S.-Mexico economic cooperation as "a priority step to addressing the immigration issue."

An accompanying resolution touts an "oil-for-technology" relationship with Mexico "as a vital measure to stimulate the U.S. economy, provide Mexico the technology it needs and create good U.S.-Mexico relations."

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Lactose intolerance common in school-aged children, adults

Dear Dr. Solomon: My 7-year-old son can drink a glass of milk with no ill effects; however, if he has any more at one time, he gets an upset stomach and diarrhea. When I asked the school doctor about this, he said just to limit the amount of milk my son drinks. Can you give me any more information about what the problem is and what to do about it? Is this likely to be a permanent condition, or do children eventually outgrow it? — Mrs. N.P.

Dear Mrs. P.: From this distance I can only speculate, but it appears that your son may have a condition called lactose intolerance. A person with this syndrome who drinks milk may develop cramps and diarrhea. The condition results from a deficiency of an enzyme called lactase, which breaks down lactose or milk sugar in the small intestine so that it can be digested. Lactose intolerance is most common in school-age children and adults, although it can occur in infants as well as young children.

According to Dr. John J.B. Anderson, professor of nutrition in the School of Public Health at the University of North Carolina, primary lactose intolerance is assumed to be hereditary because it only occurs in certain ethnic groups; this condition cannot be reversed. From 60 percent to 90 percent of black adults and members of other ethnic groups are lactose intolerant, compared with only 5 percent to 15 percent of white adults. However, there are relative degrees of lactase deficiency, and the majority of people are able to tolerate some milk without becoming ill.

Secondary lactose intolerance sometimes occurs after a child has had a virus infection or some other gastrointestinal disorder. In such cases the intolerance is usually of a temporary nature, and the child is once more able to drink milk when recovery is complete.

Lactose is a significant part of both animal and human milk. It furnishes about 30 percent of the calories in cow's milk, and about 40 percent in breast milk. Lactose intolerance is treated by removing foods containing lactose, such as milk and other unfermented dairy products, from the person's diet. If this becomes necessary, however, other sources of calcium should be added to the diet.

Lactose-intolerant persons can obtain the calcium they need from foods such as fermented cheeses, since the fermentation process changes the lactose in the milk so that it can be digested. Besides dairy products, sources of calcium include dark green, leafy vegetables and, to a lesser extent, sardines and salmon. Relatively significant amounts of calcium can be obtained from spinach, mustard greens, kale, collards, Brussells sprouts, broccoli, and dark cabbage.

Or you can add the enzyme, lactase, to your son's milk before he drinks it.

Council OK's purchase of irrigation equipment

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Tom Sloan has a memory like an elephant — he never forgets.

On Tuesday, the councilman remembered a clash he had last spring with a county commissioner and decided it was time to get Charlie Welch off a piece of farm land he is leasing from the city.

The council in March received from Sam Conner a 220-acre tract of land south of the city adjacent to the city's sewage effluent holding ponds and some money in exchange for a piece of city property in north Midland next to Air Park. Welch had leased that land for years from Conner, and the lease was passed on to the city.

THE CLASH between Welch and Sloan centered over the problems with water in Midland Draw and the ire it caused with county residents whose land included the draw. Welch represents that area on the county commission.

When the council met Tuesday in its regular session in City Hall and considered advertising for bids for installing underground effluent lines to serve that farm, Sloan made a motion to approve the item. However, he tacked on the restriction that the current leaseholder would have to be off that land by the end of the year.

His motion was met with silence from the council. Then Gordon Marcum II spoke up. "I just want the option of maybe keeping him."

Steve Davidson added, "You're adding fuel to the fire."

But Sloan stood his ground. "He's (Welch) uncooperative and has hurt city equipment. There's no reason for us to spend taxpayer dollars to help someone who's done all he can to hurt us."

Assistant City Manager Fred Poe explained the city would be installing the lines because skyrocketing electricity costs to use the irrigation system are hurting the farmer already under contract. E.F. "Gene" Jones farms more than 1,000 acres of alfalfa using the treated effluent.

POE SUGGESTED the city "start negotiating" with farmers for that 220 acres of city land, and that part was approved with the motion to advertise for bids.

In connection with that land, the council approved purchasing additional irrigation equipment for the farm.

In a departure from the agenda, the council presented Harry Clark with a key to the city. Mayor G. Thane Akins noted that it's unusual to give a key to someone who is leaving.

"We have used Harry over the years for a number of services, and we're going to leave the door open and give him a key in case it's locked."

Clark, who is retiring from The First National Bank at the end of June, has served as chairman of the Housing Authority and Midland Housing Finance Corporation. He also spearheaded the low-interest housing bond program in Midland.

Developer Thomas King tried for the second time to get approval for a townhouse development on a pie-shaped piece of land next to Scharbauer Drive between I and L streets. But because of opposition from nearby residents, the council rejected the plan.

At the June 9 session, King was told to reduce the number of townhouses from three to two. On Tuesday, King said one lot would be 6,873 square feet, the other would be 12,569 square feet. Concerning the townhouses, one would be 2,300 square feet and the other 1,872 square feet.

But the residents objected, saying they wanted to see only one home on that lot.

Robert Thigpin of 1609 Shell St. stuck with his former contention that a townhouse "is only a glorified apartment."

Akins refuted that statement, saying that the townhouses planned are essentially single family homes. And as the zoning now stands, "King could erect a shack on that land and it would be a single family dwelling. I wouldn't call that the highest and best use of the land."

In rejecting King's plan, the council noted they felt it would have been a good addition to the neighborhood.

ALSO BECAUSE of residents' opposition, the council denied a specific use permit to sell alcoholic beverages at Carrows Restaurant at the intersection of Garfield and Missouri streets.

Davis Ivey of Dallas said Carrows is designed as a family restaurant and would be closing at midnight. The restaurant already sells beer and wine, and those sales are low in relation to the consumption of food.

Bill Cogdell of 2005 W. Missouri Ave. supported the specific use permit, saying there is more trouble in the neighborhood caused by the 7-Eleven selling beer for off-premises consumption than comes from the restaurant.

But other neighbors and a principal of West Elementary opposed the permit. West Elementary is east of Carrows.

The council approved a plan by Sweetser Co. for an office center and multiple family district on 37-plus acres east of State Highway 349 south of its intersection with Air Park Road. Nellie Fields also was given a zoning to allow for two homes on the southeast corner of I Street and College Avenue.

Numbering of residences north of FM 868 and west of Big Spring Street was decided after homeowners asked that they all be assigned west-side numbers. The old rule of thumb had been that Main Street was the dividing line, and this would have caused some residences to be given east-side numbers, although all the houses are west of Big Spring.

Drinking beer in Hogan Park was restricted to Cubs Stadium, the picnic area and activity building. Groups of 50 or more may reserve the latter two areas but must drink beer in plastic or paper cups from a keg.

Insurance rates can go down

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

A bill signed into law last week by Gov. Bill Clements holds the promise of reducing insurance premiums for homeowners who comply with established security standards for protecting their property from burglars.

Sponsored in the House by Rep. Tom Craddick of Midland, and strongly backed by the Crime Prevention Unit of the Midland Police Department, the law provides for a reduction in the rates insurance companies charge for homeowners' protection.

To qualify, homeowners must apply to the Texas Crime Prevention Institute in San Marcos and authorize a security survey of their property, according to police officer Robert Barnes of the Midland CPU.

If the residence is found in compliance with security standards, or if the homeowner agrees to follow recommendations resulting from the survey, the state board of insurance in Austin will mandate a reduction in the insurance rate.

"We're not sure yet how much the rate will go down," said Barnes. "The board will set the reduction standards at a later date.

"Although no one can make their property 100 percent safe, our goal is to make things harder for burglars to get in and maybe they'll move on. On top of saving on their insurance, homeowners can avoid the heartache and wasted money that burglars can cause — if the security recommendations are followed."

The Midland CPU is the only agency in the area that provides — free of charge — the security checks necessary to qualify for the premium reduction, according to Barnes. Further information can be obtained by calling the CPU at 683-4281, extensions 338 and 339.

Businessman sentenced

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A federal judge has sentenced a Raleigh businessman and his former associate to prison in connection with the illegal dumping of PCB-laced oil in nine North Carolina counties.

Robert E. Ward, 57, owner of Ward Transformer Co., was given 30 months in prison and a $200,000 fine. Robert J. Burns of Jamestown, N.Y., was sentenced to 18 months in prison and five years' probation. Burns' two sons, Timothy and Randall, received five years' probation.

Midland College program approved

Midland College's program in respiratory therapy has received approval from the Joint Review Committee for Respiratory Therapy Education, which sets standards for national accreditation of schools, according to Merv Cross, director of MC's respiratory therapy program.

"We are delighted about this approval," said Cross. "It came with our first application, indicating we have a program that meets very strict standards. It's also a favorable reflection on our advisory committee, which helped establish the program, and on Midland Memorial Hospital, which has worked so closely with us on the program."

MC is accepting a limited number of students for the 12-month respiratory therapy class, which will begin with the fall semester. Deadline for submitting applications is Aug. 20.

"The field is growing rapidly," said Cross, "and there is a nationwide shortage of certified respiratory therapists. This is reflected in the demand and the extremely good starting salaries being offered to graduates. In the Permian Basin alone, there are significant numbers of openings in the respiratory therapy field."

The MC program is approved by the Veterans Administration, and a number of scholarships are available for qualified applicants. More information may be obtained by calling Cross at 684-7851, extension 258.

Marketing the 'All-American' image

By LOREN BERGER
Lifestyle Writer

Although she may not be just another cliche, Lerii Fitzhugh is working hard on putting forth the image of the "All-American Girl."

This is what the judges of the Miss Texas-America pageant to be held in Fort Worth July 8-11 will be looking for when they scrutinize 70 parading contestants, believes the 20-year-old Miss West Texas from Rankin.

Since she won that title last June, Lerii has moved to Midland — good grooming grounds for the daily preparation that is required if a woman from a town of 1,200 wants to gain state recognition.

Between working out three times a week in order to stay in good shape and reviewing current events, Lerii makes spot appearances around the city for various promotions and store openings. Flanked by a chaperone and a business manager, Lerii is instructed to keep moving and to keep smiling in the midst of graceful entrances and exits.

"I know people have general stereotypes about people like me," she says. "I don't like being called a beauty queen, but in a way that's what you are, although the title sounds so arrogant. My opinion of girls that entered beauty contests was that they thought they had something other people didn't."

Now, however, Lerii claims this isn't necessarily so. "The pageant system has changed over the years," she says. "They're wanting something more than just looks."

Women vying for the title of Miss Texas-America next month are required to compete in swimsuit and evening gown contests in addition to talent performances — Lerii's is playing the trumpet — and a brief interview where the contestants' knowledge of current events is tested.

"That's my favorite part of the competition," Lerii says. "It's when five judges have to get to know me in seven minutes."

Lerii's introduction to the beauty pageant circuit began after she won the title of the Upton County Pecan Queen in the summer of 1978 in her hometown. "After that I happened to hear about the Miss West Texas Pageant and just decided to enter," she says.

If her attempts at gaining the Miss Texas title are successful, Lerii plans to enter the Miss America Pageant in September. "I enjoy being on stage," she says. "I enjoy the exposure. The way I've been groomed, I can just go up there with the attitude that I'm going to take it as it comes."

Lerii Fitzhugh

While Lerii is concentrating on refining a friendly and simple West Texas image, she maintains a sense of humor concerning the fierce competition that sometimes prevails in beauty pageants — as for example, a recent incident where a contestant was disqualified from the Miss U.S.A. Pageant after it was discovered she had padded her swimsuit.

"I thought she had a sad excuse. Although, I can see her point if her bathing suit was too large," she says, adding it is legal to add extra padding in the Miss America competition.

Lerii, who is working toward a degree in home economics, says she will return to Texas Tech to continue her studies if she fails in the Miss Texas-America contest.

In the meantime, she's developed a steadfast allegiance to more immediate ambitions.

"I believe in the pageant and the pageant's system," she says. "It's like a hobby. You can't really blame these girls if that's what they want to do. If you consider all there is to gain, it's understandable."

Male beauty and body building contests, however, are based on less worthy considerations, according to Lerii. "As far as I can tell, they're just out there flexing their muscles. Of course, you always want to look nice, but there's much more to it than looking good."

Schools prompting pregnant teen-agers to drop out

By LOIS TIMNICK
(c) 1981, The Los Angeles Times

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — Schools, by law, can no longer expel students for being pregnant. But they often encourage pregnant teen-agers to drop out, either by ignoring them altogether or providing token programs, usually aimed at keeping their swelling stomachs out of sight, a report by the Rand Corp. says.

Research psychologist Gail Zellman, who conducted the 2½-year study of 30 schools across the country says the implications of the educational system's not-so-benign neglect are wide: about 1 million adolescents get pregnant each year, and more than half choose to keep their babies. But 80 percent drop out of school, compared with a dropout rate of 9 percent for other teen-agers.

High school dropouts are more likely to end up on welfare, and the offspring of adolescent mothers have a higher mortality rate or, if they survive, may show deficits in intelligence, school achievement and overall adjustment, statistics show.

Title IX of the 1972 Education Amendments prohibits expulsion or exclusion of pregnant students from programs, courses and extracurricular activities. Few schools, however, responded to that law "in a positive, constructive manner," Zellman says, because it did not mandate special programs.

Rand researchers intervieded 121 teen-agers and examined exiting programs in 11 school systems that were attempting to deal with the problem of pregnant dropouts.

The programs served from 24 to 350 young mothers a year, drawing from enrollments of from under 10,000 to more than 200,000, and used a variety of approaches:

Some pulled pregnant teen-agers out of regular school until their babies were born, providing courses and services in a separate physical setting. These were usually located in run-down inner-city facilities and tended to emphasize parenting and child-development courses at the expense of academic standards.

Others, which Zellman favors, tried to integrate health and child-care services into the regular school schedule right up to graduation. The system most often loses students by requiring them to transfer in and out of regular schools.

Unfortunately, Zellman conceded, the value of such programs cannot be objectively evaluated because school districts do not keep records on the number of students who drop out because of pregnancy or the number of teen-age mothers who graduate.

Nonetheless, the Rand researchers identified two exemplary programs, both of which offer special services within the school setting. One, in Newport, R.I., assigns each pregnant student a counselor who provides tutoring and helps locate community agencies for special needs during and after pregnancy.

The other, in St. Paul, Minn., is primarily oriented toward pregnancy prevention and medical care, placing medical clinics in high school and providing child care.

Most of the special programs, which cost from the same to as much as nine times the usual expenditure per pupil, are publicly funded, either through state special education funds or by individual school districts.

Critics argue that pregnancy programs are a misuse of funds that would otherwise go for handicapped or disabled students, Zellman said.

Study aimed at army women

By DON WATERS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — An Army study of the status of women in the service is intended to help military leaders use the skills of female soldiers more effectively rather than reduce their numbers, Army Secretary John O. Marsh said today.

"I don't think that the present status of wanting to look at women in the Army should be construed to be a policy that will work to the detriment of women," Marsh said at a breakfast meeting with reporters.

"On the contrary, I think this could be very helpful in enabling them to have a more useful role in the Army," he added. "This pause . . . is simply to take a look at the current situation to see how they can be most usefully employed."

Marsh said the Army is concerned that some 46 percent of women high-school graduates do not serve out their first term of enlistment — twice the attrition rate of their male counterparts. Marsh said that some women who have been serving in some "non-traditional roles" — such as intelligence, ammunition and transportation maintenance — have indicated a "desire to move back to the traditional roles."

In past years, female soldiers typically were assigned to clerical and other administrative jobs.

The Army now has more than 61,000 women in its active-duty force of 775,000, an increase of more than four times the levels of a decade ago. Marsh said the Army hopes to recruit 18,000 women this year, effectively holding the line on their numbers.

But, he said, "I do not construe this as an effort to cut back on (women in) the force. I think it's an effort . . . to more effectively utilize them in the force."

A Pentagon manpower official, William D. Clark, told a Senate hearing in February that the Army was concerned that the presence of large numbers of women in combat-support roles could harm its readiness in case of war. He said the personnel study was intended to measure that impact.

As a result, Clark said, the Army was reluctant to pursue a Defense Department target of 87,500 women in the branch by 1986.

Current law forbids women from occupying combat roles in the armed services, and there has been no serious effort in Congress or the executive branch to lift that prohibition.

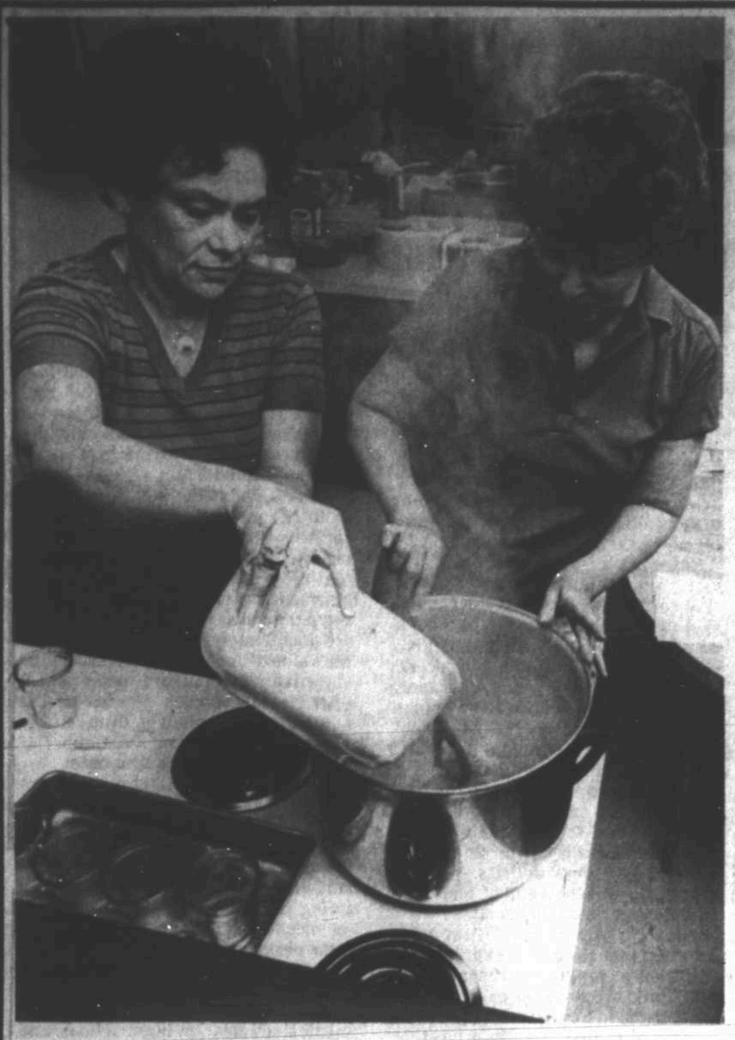
Home canning easy, rewarding



Betty Ambrose, right, homemaking teacher at Lee High School, is assisted by Charlene Gnagy in stirring apricots at the Food Preservation Seminar.

By WANDA MOUTON
Lifestyle Editor

"It's not hard and it is rewarding," says Betty Ambrose, of home canning of fruits and vegetables.

She admits that her favorite is canning of fruits—making jams, jellies and preserves.

Scene was the Food Preservation Seminar held at Lee High School. The workshop was sponsored by the Midland County Extension Office and the LHS Homemaking Department.

Instructors were Mrs. Ambrose, homemaking instructor, and Sharon Hillis, county extension agent.

"Improved methods of home canning make it more enjoyable for the homemaker to preserve the natural goodness of foods," said Mrs. Ambrose.

She said that information and recipes for canning are available free from the County Extension Agency office.

Mrs. Ambrose added that foods spoil because of the action of yeast, molds, bacteria and enzymes. In canning, the homemaker stops this action by proessing food wih heat and protecting it with an airtight seal. The processing time and temperature vary with different kinds of food.

She also explained three packing methods:

● Hot Pack. Some fruits and vegetables are heated in a pan before packing into containers for processing. This is known as precooking.

● Pack Raw and Steam. This method may be used with glass jars but is always used with tin cans. Jar lids allow venting once closed, but cans cannot vent when closed. So venting must be done before closing. Venting means heating to remove air from cans or jars. Pack raw in container, add boiling liquid and set container on rack in cooker to steam. This heats the food to 170 degrees or higher before the container is closed for processing. This method is recommended generally as retaining flavor, texture and quality to a greater extent than the precooking method.

● One-Step, Cold Pack. Pack fruit or vegetable raw in container, add boiling liquid, close jar and process. This method requires less time and may be used for certain foods when canned in glass jars and for grapefruit sections in tin cans.

PROCESSING METHODS FOR FRUITS, TOMATOES AND RHUBARB

The boiling-water-bath method is recommended for canning fruits, fruit juices tomatoes, tomato juice, rhubard and pickled vegetables. It is not recommended for any other vegetable. Water bath canners may be purchased; however, any big, clean kettle with a rack and tight-fitting lid will do if it is deep enough to hold the cans or jars upright and permit the water to boil gently one or two inches over the top of them.

HOW TO CAN FRUITS, TOMATOES AND RHUBARB

Use either the hot pack, pack raw and steam or the one-step, cold pack method of packing when canning fruits and fruits juices, tomatoes, tomato juice, rhubarb and pickled beets.

1. Wash all jars and cans in hot, soapy water and rinse well before canning. It is not necessary to sterilize jars and cans when canning.

2. Make sugar syrup for fruits or rhubarb using for liquid either water or juice extracted from some of the fruit. The proportion of sugar to liquid will depend on the natural sweetness of the fruit and personal taste.

3. Prevent discoloration of fruits such as peaches, pears, apricots and apples by using ascorbic acid tablets, citric acid, following manufacturer's direction for retaining color, using lemon juice, or packing fruit as it is peeled and adding syrup immediately.

4. Prepare and pack the tomatoes, rhubarb and each fruit according to the directions given for each.

The following steps apply only to the pack raw and steam method.

5. Place the filled containers, without lids, on a rack in boiling water in the water bath canner for steaming, allowing the water to come 2 inches below the top of the containers.

6. Place a pan with extra fruit and syrup on top of the containers. This extra fruit is to be used for refilling containers when fruit has shrunk after steaming.

7. Placae the lid on the water bath canner.

8. Count steaming time as soon as the water begins to boil. See specific fruit for the length of time to steam.

9. At the end of the steaming time, remove the lid from the canner. Leave the canner on low heat to keep it hot.

Take out one container at a time. Press the food down and work out air bubbles with a knife or spatula. Have the food just covered wih the syrup, allowing one-fourth inch headspace from the top of the syrup to the top of the can for all fruits. It may be necessary to remove or to add some food at this ime to get the correct fill.

PROCESSING IN A BOILING-WATER BATH

After packing, the fruit is ready to be processed. The following steps for processing in a water bath apply to all packing methods.

1. Wipe off the sealing surface of the container. Close according to the type of lid being used.

2. Place the closed containers of food in the water bath canner. For the one-step, cold pack in glass jars, have water in water bath canner hot but not boiling; for all other packs have water boiling. Add additional boiling water to the water bathcanner to cover the containers 1 to 2 inches; do not pour boiling water directly on glass jars.

3. Place the lid on the water bath canner.

4. Check specific fruit for the length of time to process. Count the processing time as soon as the water comes to a rolling boil. Reduce the heat but maintain a boiling teamperature.

5. At the end of the processing time, remove the containers from the water bath. Plunge the cans in cold water. Place the jars right side up on a rack far enough apart to cool quickly.

THURSDAY: Directions for canning fruits, tomatoes and rhubarb.

Mrs. Joy Butts conducted members of the Sagebrush Extension Homemakers Club on a tour of the Midland rose Garden in Crier Par, 1501 W. Texas. She gave a brief history of the garden and relared some of the future plans for it. She also drew attentin to the unique planting design and named some of the many varieties of the 1,500 plants.

Prior to the tour, the group met in Mrs. Butts' home for a business meeting.

Panic Dressing Salad

By ELISABETH BUMILLER
(c) 1981, The Washington Post

This salad is only good with Panic Dressing, developed one night when I had 24 people to feed and only a half-hour to do it. It was for a party at a friend's house. She was in charge of the main course; I had the salad.

The problem was that I'd come home too late to do anything elegant. Desperation took over. I bought 12 heads of bibb lettuce, 5 bunches of watercress, then rummaged through the refrigerator for something to throw in the dressing.

Here's what I came up with:

A lot of olive oil.
Not quite so much white- or red-wine vinegar or both.
Not quite so much white wine.
A little water.
A little orange juice.
A teaspoon or so of dijon mustard.
A pressed clove or two of garlic.
A healthy amount of curry.
A little lemon juice.
Salt.
Pepper.

I threw it all together in a big jar, tasting as I went along. I stopped concocting when I liked it.

Meanwhile, the salad itself: It's impossible to clean and dry 12 heads of bibb lettuce and 5 bunches of watercress in a hurry. So I dumped it all in the sink, rinsed it, then threw it into the washing machine and put it on the spin cycle. It worked miraculously until I tasted it: Gain detergent, left over from the last time I did the laundry. So I had to wash the lettuce again, this time using every towel in the apartment to dry it.

It still tasted a little funny, but I figured the dressing was spicy enough to cover it up. It was.

Honest.

Identical twins fly together

By CHARLES HILLINGER
(c) 1981,
The Los Angeles Times

UNITED AIRLINES FLIGHT 930 — "Do you two know each other?" the passenger in the front row inquired as the two stewardesses began moving the beverage cart down the aisle.

"She's my shadow," Kay Crabb replied, nodding toward the other stewardess.

"When did United start cloning their stewardesses?" another passenger asked.

The two flight attendants were bombarded with questions and friendly ribbing throughout the entire 70-minute Los Angeles-to-Reno flight.

"It happens all the time. And we love it," May Weiss said.

The identical 40-year-old twins have been stewardesses with United Airlines 18 years. They fly all trips together. They always have.

"We never tire of the questions and the kidding," Kay insisted.

"The cabin is quiet and full of strangers at the beginning of every flight," May said.

"But once we start pushing the beverage cart down the aisle together, the plane buzzes with chatter about sis and me," Kay added.

"Our presence relaxes people, warms them up, makes them feel more comfortable," May said.

Passengers just don't expect to see identical twins waiting on them. It's a novelty in the sky.

Kay and May are each 5 feet 5, blonde, have hazel eyes and weigh 118 pounds. They wear several rings on their fingers. They wear the same lipstick, the same fingernail polish, the same style hairdo.

The only perceptible difference is that Kay has a mole on her left cheek.

May is older — by six minutes.

After graduating from high school in Niles, Mich., the twins first worked as secretaries in Chicago, then became flight attendants.

They have flown throughout the United Airlines system for the last 18 years, always together except when one or the other took a leave to have a baby.

Kay has two daughters, Shawnah May, 8, and Stacey Kay, 5. May has a daughter, Tiffanie, 3.

They live 15 miles apart on California's Monterey Peninsula. Kay's husband, Claude Crabb, played defensive back for the Los Angeles Rams and is a builder. May's husband, Frank Weiss, is a policeman at Del Rey Oaks.

"It's a two-hour drive from our homes to the airport in San Francisco. We trade off driving," Kay explained.

"Of course, when we're flying, we're always dressed alike in our stewardess uniforms," May said.

"But when we go out together with our husbands and our children, it's uncanny. Nine times out of 10 we wear the same color dress, the same kind of outfit," Kay added.

"Kind of scary, huh?" May asked.

"But it has always been that way. In school we always got the same grades," Kay said.

Make it yours: An angel of a doll

By ELLEN APPEL
Copley News Service

Because her mother had always been an angel to her, author Barbara Marsten named her angel doll "Lillian." Lillian is an adorable, simple-to-make, pillow doll and one of the projects in Marsten's book, "Step-By-Step Dollmaking."

Doll lovers will delight in the new book, published by Van Nostrand Reinhold, with its pages of toys, dolls and pajama bags. Projects range from rag dolls to Southern beauties, with a lion tamer, Daniel Boone, and sea captain also included.

The angel doll is cotton canvas, trimmed with ribbons, eyelet ruffles and felt. A hair ribbon makes the angel feminine, while a ribbon bow tie turns the angel into a boy.

An angel doll is wonderful any time of the year. Marsten suggests making two angels, a boy and a girl, for the holidays. Here are directions for a simplified angel doll.

MATERIALS: One-half yard white cotton canvas, one-fourth yard brown cotton, black and pink felt scraps, red embroidery thread, five yards of 3-inch width eyelet trim, one yard of 1-inch width eyelet beading, one and one-fourth yard of 1-inch width red-white gingham ribbon, sewing supplies, stuffing.

PATTERNS: 1. For the body, draw a triangular shape on paper, about 7 inches wide and 13 inches high, with the third side curving outward. 2. For the face, draw an oval, about 6x8 inches. 3. For the hair, draw a 4-inch-diameter circle.

CUTTING: 1. Cut two triangles from white canvas for the body. 2. Cut one oval from white canvas for the face. 3. Cut one oval from brown fabric for the head. 4. Cut 10 circles from brown fabric for hair. 5. Cut two eyes, about one-half inch diameter, from black felt. 6. Cut two cheeks, about 1 inch diameter, from pink felt.

BODY: 1. With right sides facing stitch body sections together. Leave open 4 inches on curved edge and entire short edge. 2. Cut two one and one-half yard lengths of eyelet. 3. Form two eyelet rings by stitching together the short ends of each length. 4. Place one ring around the other ring. Lift outside ring one-half inch higher than inside ring. 5. Sew rings together at top edge with long, gathering stitches.

ASSEMBLY: 1. Pin right side of eyelet rings to right side of body at short edge. 2. Gather rings to fit body (a). Baste. 3. Turn body to wrong side. Machine stitch short edge. 4. Turn body right side out. 5. Cover seams near ruffle with eyelet beading. Stitch beading in place by hand. 6. Stuff body through 4-inch opening. 7. Close opening with tiny hem stitches.

HAIR: 1. Using double strand of thread, turn in one-fourth inch hem on each brown circle. 2. Pull thread tightly and adjust gathers to form "yo-yo's" (b). 3. Knot end of thread. 4. Pin yo-yo's to head, taking care to overlap top seam. 5. Tack in place with tiny stitches. 6. Glue on eyes and cheeks.

HEAD RUFFLE: 1. Stitch two yards of eyelet into ring. 2. Sew top edge with long, gathering stitches. 3. Gather ruffle to fit back of head. 4. Stitch eyelet to head by hand. 5. Sew head to body, hiding raw edge of ruffle.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Coffee filters to the rescue

DEAR HELOISE:

When I recently received 12 place settings of china, I was unable to locate any dividers to keep the set from becoming scratched.

I decided to improvise for the time being by using the large coffee filters I had for my quick-brew coffee maker.

They worked perfectly as they laid out flat between the plates and cupped around the salad bowls, sauce dishes, etc.

The great part was they cost about a cent apiece, whereas those made for that purpose cost much, much more. — T. Soderling

EASY HANG-UPS

Dear Heloise: I find when hanging sheets on the line, there is no need to wrestle with them outside trying to get them on the line.

Take them from the washer, fold them hem-to-hem, and put five spring-type clothespins along the edge of the hems.

Drop the sheets in the clothes basket and they're ready to hang in the breeze. — O.M.

OIL IS SO HANDY!

Dear Heloise: For all those gals and guys who want to work on their cars Saturday afternoon and go out that night, you can!

Just wash the greasy stuff off your hands with vegetable oil, rubbing it in well across the knuckles and around the base of the nails. Gets rid of those telltale black lines.

Soap and warm water remove the vegetable oil, leaving you with clean, soft skin. — Sara Pahl

FEEDING BABY

Dear Heloise: Use small plastic spoons to feed a baby who hasn't yet cut his teeth. They are much easier on tender gums.

These are great to carry along in the diaper bag for feedings away from home. Just discard after use if you want to and you won't have a messy spoon to contend with. — K.M.

JUICY IDEA

Dear Heloise: I buy small bottles of juice and put them on a lower shelf of the refrigerator for my children who can open the refrigerator door but haven't yet mastered the art of pouring. (The less expensive larger bottles can be bought to refill them.)

I was having a difficult time getting my children to drink any juices until I fixed their "very own" bottles.

Now, not only are they pleased, but I don't have to go to the kitchen to get them a drink every half hour. — Kay Morgan

OH SO CLEVER

Dear Heloise: Most of the new blenders have a special "slow-drip" glass enabling one to add oil slowly when making salad dressing at home.

Since my blender does not have this feature, I have found that a small paper cup from my bathroom dispenser fits the small top opening.

I punch a hole in the bottom with a large needle, and as the vinegar, sugar and oil mixture thickens, I punch a few more holes to let the oil flow more freely.

Afterwards, I just discard my used cup. — Ruth Barker

SEW SIMPLE

Dear Heloise: Some thread nowadays comes on plastic spools which are very lightweight. This causes problems with the tension on my sewing machine.

I've found that if I use a drinking straw to extend the small rod which holds the spool of thread, then put an empty wooden spool or a metal washer on top of my thread (after I've put it on the machine) for extra weight, it solves the problem.

You'll soon learn which size washer to use with different kinds and sizes of spools. Much easier than adjusting the tension each time. — Ruth C.

Here's how: Avoid scratching marble

By GENE GARY
Copley News Service

Q. I Have an Italian marble-top coffee table which has dull spots all over it — like something had splashed or dripped on it.

I've used several products, such as E-Z-Est marble polish, but nothing works.

When we bought our home, the table came with it, so I have no idea what was spilled on it. I would appreciate some help. — Jane S., Oceanside, Calif.

A. First wash the marble and while it is still wet apply a poultice made of abrasive cleaning powder and hot water. An abrasive powder containing a bleach is preferred.

Make into a thick paste and apply over the stains about one-half-inch thick and allow to stand for about 24 to 48 hours. Then remove the paste with wood paddles to avoid scratching the marble. Repeat the process, if necessary.

Another method is to saturate cotton batting with hydrogen peroxide and lay over the stain. Over this lay another strip of batting soaked with ammonia. Let set until entirely dry. The poultice and batting should extend a little beyond the edges of the stains.

After removing the stains, wash the marble, and, when quite dry, apply one or two coats of colorless terrazzo sealer, either the solvent type or emulsified. This coating should serve as a fair protection against future penetration of stains.

Waxing with a water wax will give further protection.

Q. Dad and I are helping our son fix up an older place. We need a solution to our problem.

This house has walls and ceilings covered with knotty pine. We would like to know what to clean knotty pine with. Panel cleaners just soak in and cost too much for all the walls that need to be cleaned.

The surface has darkened as wood does. What do you clean it with? Also what finish do you put on to preserve the wood and what do you use to fill nail and old curtain rod holes with? — Earl G., Chula Vista, Calif.

A. To clean the paneling, wash with a solution of trisodium phosphate (two-thirds cup of phosphate, one-third cup of detergent mixed in one gallon of warm water). When the surface is clean, then refinish the wood using a penetrating sealer or clear finish for wood paneling.

I know of no way to lighten the wood without stripping and bleaching the surface which would be a difficult, tedious job.

To fill the nail holes, use a putty stick. These come in different colors so that you can match the wood finish. For large holes, use plastic wood or water putty.

Q. Last year a novice painter sprayed the batt-and-board wood on our house and the surface is now checking. Is there any way to repair it before we re-paint, other than sanding? Anything beats sanding as that is one big job. — Martha B.

A. You will need either to wire brush or sand the surface if you wish a good paint job. Or you could have the surface sandblasted, which might be rather expensive.

The secret to a good paint job is proper preparation and use of a good grade paint. Good results can be obtained with a paint spray procedure, but not, however, if the paint is thinned down too much. Be alert to this caution if you plan to spray paint.

LIVING TODAY

Fiber finishes: An update of clothing industry trends

By SHARON HILLIS
County Extension Agent
Home Economics

In the late summer of 1980, we began taking a look here in Living Today at how the American consumer's wardrobe would be shaping up for the first half of the 1980s decade.

The term "investment dressing," along with "classic and traditional trends" and "value" described the direction our wardrobes would take up to 1985. Who determined this trend and what are some of the effects on industry? Let's take a look.

In the end, the American consumer determined the trend. Where? In the market place. How? Because Americans are beset by rising prices in all directions and continue to be concerned about our nation's economy. Our clothing purchases have been declining since the end of 1979. Items purchased were and are chosen for quality and expected to last for several years. In fact, in terms of current dollars, we are spending 6.4 percent ($473) annually per person for personal consumption (clothing and shoes) in 1980, as compared with 8.2 percent ($148) per person in 1960. This era has seen an increase in dollars with a decrease in percentage (down 1.8 percent) of total available income for personal consumption. Of the 1.8 percent decrease, a 1 percent drop occurred over a 15 year period, between 1960 and 1976, with the other .8 percent occuring between 1976 and 1980, again in terms of current dollars.

The American consumer had spoken and industry responded. One of the ways we can examine this response is to take an in-depth look in one area that relates to clothing — fiber finishes. Some changes are occurring here and are discussed below.

All trade names referred to here in this column are solely for the purpose of providing specific information. Mention of a trade man does not constitute a guarantee or warranty of the product of an endorsement over other products not mentioned and are utilized here for educational purposes only.

ALL COTTON DURABLE PRESS

Shirts made from fabrics treated with liquid ammonia, a process patented by Sanforized Co., have been on the market since January 1979. This process, called Sanforset, changed the molecular structure, which preshrinks the fabric and eliminates seam puckering. The Sanforset treatment is reported to improve the fabric's wear and abrasion resistance, while giving it a softer hand. Cotton's comfort and breathability are unaffected.

In April 1980, the Van Heusen Co. began selling all-cotton durable press shirts made from fabrics finished with a new resin process. These shirts are said to have similar performance characteristics to those having the Sanforset finish, plus the following advantages: Vat dyes are used, permitting a greater range of colors; shirts, white and colored can be laundered with liquid chlorine bleach; and the retail price is lower due to a reduction in manufacturing costs. An industry representative predicts all-cotton durable press shirts will be 20 percent of the market by 1982, up from 5 percent in 1980.

Bedsheets made of 100 percent cotton and treated with the Sanforset process are on the market. One sheet manufacturer is using a combination of polyester and cotton fibers to wrap eah strand of polyester in cotton during the spinning process. The polyester contributes to the wrinkle-free characteristics and the cotton is soft and pleasant next to the skin.

COMFORT STRETCH

Comfort stretch was widely promoted by Levi Strauss in its Action Slacks. These pants were made from fabric woven of all polyester filament yarns that had been woven wide and heat-set in a relaxed state to provide stretch. Mills responded to the increasing demand for stretch fabrics by adding combinations of filament and spun yarns and blends of synthetic and natural fibers, which, in some cases, contained small amounts of Lycra spandex.

Light-weight fabrics suitable for shirts and blouses were developed. Fabrics were constructed with two-way stretch. Canvas, sail-cloth, oxford cloth, gabardine, denim and corduroy became available in stretch goods.

Expanded use of stretch fabric has been utilized in 1981. Many consumers will find that stretch garments are more comfortable to wear and the retailer is finding stretch garments a feature to promote. Since stretch fabric for casual pants costs only a few cents per yard more than a similar rigid fabic, most popularly priced pants are made from stretch goods in 1981.

STAIN-LESS

A process whereby the soil release finish is built into the fiber, rather than added to the fabric, has been used by Donmoor (a boys' knitwear manufacturer) since March 1980. Independent testing laboratories found the finish durable through 50 launderings. This process has not been patented.

SHRINK-RESISTANT WOOL

Japanese spinners claim that a new process involving physical and chemical treatment of wool increases shrink resistance and improves hand and color fastness. In January 1980, this process began to be used commercially. Patent applications have been made in Japan and the United States.

HYDROPHILIC-ENHANCED NYLON OR POLYESTER

Several corporations in the United States and abroad are working on increaing the hydrophilic or moisture absorbent charateristics of nylon and polyester. These corporations are producing a new fiber with a modified nylon or polyester polymer. A patent has been awarded to one America company for hydophilic nylon wih moisture absortion characteristics similar to those of cotton.

It has long been observed that clothing is one of the major ways we define the perimeters of our being.

Labor organizers

WASHINGTON, D.C. — A growing number of women have abandoned traditional careers and are carving out new careers as labor organizers, according to a special report on women in the work place in the June issue of CWA News, the monthly newspapers of the 600,000-member Communications Workers of America (CWA).

Local union and staff organizers believe they are making things happen for women while also adding an important new dimension to the public's perception of organized labor.

CWA President Glenn Watts says female organizers have given even greater strength and credibility to the organizing efforts of CWA, a union where women are in the majority and have played a major role in building and supporting the union from its beginning in the late 1940s.

Wedding bells keep ringing

By MARGY McCAY
Associated Press Writer

NASHUA, Iowa (AP) — June may be the traditional month for weddings, but for the Rev. John Christy, every month is June.

Christy is pastor of the Little Brown Church in the Vale, where as many as a thousand wedding ceremonies are performed each year.

"Last Saturday there were 18," Christy said, leafing through his calendar. "On Valentine's Day, which was a Saturday, we had 20 weddings and one recommitment of vows. They were scheduled every half-hour."

But the Little Brown Church is more than a place to get married, said Christy. It is an historic church — made famous in song by a Chautauqua quartet called the The Weatherwax Brothers — that has held regular Sunday services since 1864.

The Little Brown Church, about two miles east of Nashua, was organized in 1855 as the First Congregational Church of Bradford, a community of about 1,000 that died when bypassed by the railroad.

The frame structure was built between 1860 and 1864, although the song associated with it — "The Church in the Wildwood" — was written in 1857 by William S. Pitts, who reportedly fell in love with the future site of the church while en route to Fredericksburg to visit his girlfriend.

Pitts later taught a singing class at the Bradford Academy, and in 1864, the song was sung for the first time in the church. But it wasn't until the four Weatherwax brothers from Charles City included the song and story of the church in their Chautauqua performances that its fame spread.

Today the church, surrounded by spirea and coniferous trees, attracts at least 150,000 visitors a year, said Christy, who has been pastor for three years.

"It was after World War I that people started to come here to be married," he said. "Last year there were 732 weddings, and there have been as many as 1,000. We've even had some third-generation weddings.

"It might appear to be an assembly line, but it's not," Christy said, producing a card from a couple he married who thanked him for a beautiful and moving ceremony.

"We try to make sure the wedding is the couple's wedding and that they're not pushed or rushed."

Tunics returning

Tunics — among the most flattering fashion silhouettes for all figure types — are making a strong comeback, says Becky Sanders, a clothing specialist.

Depending on styling, fabric, color and proportion, the tunic can make the most of any figure, the specialit adds.

Unbelted, it flatters short or long waistlines.

To add height, try a slim-lined tunic, particularly one coordinated with a matching skirt or pants — with a focal point near the face or neck. For shorter figures, a tunic that falls between the fingertips and the full hipline is a flattering proportion.

To minimize hips, include an emphasis at the neck or shoulder with shoulder pads, tucking or soft gathers in the tunic.

To appear shorter, add wide decorative belts or cummerbunds, which are a current fashion interest.

Women bodybuilders don't have to sacrifice femininity or beauty, world champion notes

By TONY KORNHEISER
(c) 1981, The Washington Post

Lisa Lyon works out with weights 2 1-2 hours per day, six days a week, but when you meet her you see that the veins in her arms don't stick out like worms marching to Pretoria, and her pecs and her lats aren't the size of Utah. She was the first World Women's Bodybuilding champion, but she can't crack a walnut with her biceps and she doesn't use testosterone so she doesn't need a shave.

The eyelashes flutter and the voice is soft, and the words come out like so: "You're not condemned to develop some gross, caricatured body just because you work out with weights ... People who get to that massive bulky state have made a conscious decision to do it. It's not something that happens overnight — you have to work hard at it. I don't want to criticize them if that's their idea of beauty; beauty is a subjective evaluation. But I don't want that. So it's a matter of stopping."

And then she strikes a pose. Not a competitive bodybuilding pose as much as a check-it-out kind of pose. No matter how you stack 105 pounds on a 5-3 frame, it isn't going to bulge like a cheap canvas bag.

"Jesus, look at me. People don't look at my body and get intimidated."

Lyon was a graduate student at UCLA (undergrad B.A., cum laude, in anthropology) when she started lifting. She says she did it to "get a little more upper-body strength," but after a while she began to see she "was creating a new esthetic and a new standard of beauty — a high-tech body." Bodybuilders work in front of mirrors, forging their fearful symmetry; they stare so much at themselves that their eyes ought to be eligible for Medicare. And the more she stared at it, the more she liked it, so she began going to Gold's Gym, the Versailles of the Beefcake Palaces, and pumping iron with a vengeance, seeking perfection.

"A lot of the men bodybuilders there resented being invaded by a woman. They thought I'd be in the way, and they thought I wasn't serious. Some, I'm sure, thought I was there to pick up guys, not weights. And some just wanted to watch me in a sexual way ... But after a while they realized that I was serious about bodybuilding, and they became very helpful, although I must admit that there was a significant amount of jealousy when the camera crews and the television stations started coming around to film me — that's why I've always been very careful to give them the respect they deserve."

Not that the acceptance came easily. There are still millions of women seeking that macrobiotic nirvana, trying to pour themselves into Calvin Klein jeans who would take one look at Lisa Lyon's lats and yelp in horror. Lyon's own mother, when she found out that her daughter was training with Arnold (That Was No Beachball, That Was My Bicep) Schwarzenegger, suggested — only half-jokingly — that Lisa change her name to avoid embarrassing the family.

But now, at 27, after five years of training and a self-help book called "Lisa Lyon's Body Magic" in which Lyon occasionally poses nude, giving the book a soft-core porn quality, Lyon is built like a jaguar, and mommy is putting the copy of Playboy for which Lisa posed on the coffee table.

"In the '50s you had women like Marilyn Monroe who were strictly sex objects," Lyon says. "In the '60s you had Twiggy, who started the undernourished, androgynous style. In the '70s there was Farrah. Now, in the '80s, health is a reality. Women are building up their bodies without sacrificing beauty or femininity ... (a recent issue of) Vogue is all about the active body. It's talking about optimum weight for health — not skinniness. I feel I represent a trend. And this isn't just some vain, vapid thing I've done. This isn't, 'Ladies, want to get in shape for the summer?' — Give me a break."

Ask Lisa how she'd like to look and she says, "Like an animal, a sleek, feline animal."

Ask her what the ultimate compliment to her look would be and she says, "If someone saw me and asked, 'What planet did SHE come from?'"

She is highly articulate, no question about that. And she has a good sense of humor, telling a radio interviewer, " ... just introduce me as one of the most talented and beautiful women on the planet, and it's an honor to sit across the table from me ... " A self-promoter of the first order, Lyon realizes that bodybuilding is not yet baseball (or even box lacrosse) in the national mindset, and that already a legion of women lifters, eating steroids and injecting testosterone, have bulked up so fast as to make her look like a Before rather than an After. "I've made my contribution," Lyon says. "I started this sport. It's not my fault other women want to take it farther."

But she knows, as far as cashing in is concerned, it's now or never. She says "a pretty girl can sell anything," but if the trend in women's bodybuilding continues the next flight of champions will look like refugees from a Lon Chaney film festival.

Then, rearticulating, "Well, you can't stop it."

Lyon says she posed for Playboy because "if I didn't do it, someone else would have, and they would have trashed her." She says she had full photo control of the layout. "The fact is, I didn't need another picture in Muscle Magazine — the people who read Playboy are the ones that need to be educated to this concept of femininity."

Lyon says she hasn't yet been challenged to fight by some bozo on a barstool who knew she was a bodybuilder. "But some guys have asked me to arm wrestle."

Could she . . .

"Deck somebody?"

Yeah.

"Probably ... But I won't be put in that situation — I just don't read, Victim."

Lisa Lyon, first World Women's Bodybuilding champion, still works out with weights daily. As her 5-foot-3, 105-pound physique attests, you don't have to bulge with muscles to be a bodybuilder.

There's comedy afoot when podiatrist steps on stage

By GEORGE W. HACKETT
Associated Press Writer

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — During the day, Dr. Tim Stivers treats patients' feet. At night, he knocks them off their feet with comedy routines.

"I'm the only podiatrist in town who makes house calls in a toe truck," Stivers said.

His supply of jokes is inexhaustible, and he will perform before an audience of one, or 100.

He's preparing for another television appearance, getting ready to distribute his fourth album and always searching for new material to add to his act.

"I pick up a lot of ideas from people coming into the office," said Stivers, who is in practice with his brother and sister. "She's the one in the dress."

He tells the one about the woman whose husband had a heart attack. Stivers inquired about his condition and was informed, "He's still hospitalized, but he's doing better, according to that electrocablegram they gave him."

Most of the tales Stivers, a native of Louisville, tells are told in dialect, apparently acquired from his early exposure to folk expressions.

His parents, both podiatrists, instilled a love for music in their two sons and daughter.

"My mother and father could both sing lead," he recalls. "My brother sang tenor, and I sang bass. My sister, Mary Rose, sang whatever the person next to her was singing."

Stivers and his brother, Pat, later joined a barbershop quartet and, on weekends, toured the United States and Canada.

About seven years ago, Stivers launched his solo act, piloting his own plane to bookings that average more than 50 a year.

His first appearance on the Bob Braun TV show was good business for Stivers. He sold 1,600 albums in the first 10 days after the syndicated Cincinnati program was aired. He is now a frequent guest.

At 46, Stivers still toys with the idea of leaving medicine and becoming a full-time stand-up comic. "At the moment, I've got the best of both worlds. And, I'm busy getting my album on the market."

It's titled "The Other Side of Ugly," and that reminded Stivers of one of his favorite stories — about the mountaineer and his son who were visiting Lexington.

They walked into a bank and watched as a big, ugly woman got on the elevator and the doors shut.

Minutes later, the doors opened, and out stepped one of the prettiest women they'd ever seen.

"Next trip," the old man said, "let's bring your maw and run her through that thing."

DEAR ABBY

Sighted eyes need opened

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am a blind woman who has recently moved to Westerly, R.I., from Florida, where I lived for many years, and I find that all people are alike.

Will you please tell your readers that just because a person happens to be blind, that doesn't mean he can't answer questions, sign his name and do any number of things for himself.

The one thing we CAN'T do is recognize people, so if sighted people would please speak first, we would appreciate it.

Please publish this, Abby. It could help a lot of people. — IRMA HAGMAN

DEAR IRMA: I will not only publish your letter, I'll add some of my own suggestions to it:

When you meet a blind person, offer your help, but don't be surprised (or hurt) if the blind person would rather do without your well-meaning help. If you aren't sure how much assistance a sightless person wants or needs, ask an expert — the person you want to help.

When you enter a room where a blind person is (or if he enters), let him know that you're there by speaking up. For openers, mention your name. And be sure to say goodbye when you leave the room.

Never grab a blind person's cane. And never pet his guide dog without first asking the master's permission. (Guide dogs are trained to protect their masters as well as guide them.)

If a blind person gives you permission to walk with him, never grab his arm. Don't "guide" him or steer him as though he were a piece of furniture. Let him take your arm.

The blind are not deaf. And please don't talk to a blind person as if he were a child or a fool. Always speak directly to him. It's amazing the number of sighted people who thoughtlessly ask the person who is with someone who's blind, "And what will he have?" Though blind, he is able to hear well, and certainly able to answer for himself.

When talking with a blind person, don't try to avoid using the words "look," "see" or "blind."

Pity is out. Many blind people have adjusted to their blindness very well. So well, in fact, that they have become teachers, musicians, machinists, secretaries, lawyers, salespeople, psychologists, writers, social workers, and even expert skaters, golfers, bowlers and swimmers. The list is endless.

I hope you see some merit in these hints. I know the blind will.

DEAR ABBY: When a wedding ceremony is being performed and the preacher says, "If anyone present knows why these two should not wed, let him speak now or forever hold his peace," and someone objects, does the wedding go on? And has anybody ever seen a wedding stopped for that reason? — URGENT IN LAKE ORTON

DEAR URGENT: If someone objects, and the bride, groom and preacher want to proceed with the wedding, the wedding goes on. And if a wedding has ever been stopped because of such an objection, I'm sure someone will write in and report the incident.

CONFIDENTIAL TO GAYLE P.: Please send me your address. I want to return Lisa's Mother's Day card you shared with me. It's a treasure I know you want to keep.

Here's the answer: Tips on roofing

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — Can you tell me what single coverage, double coverage and triple coverage mean in respect to roofing?

A. — Coverage is an approximate indication of the amount of weather protection provided by different roofing products. Roll roofings generally are considered single coverage items. Shingles are applied so that they overlap each other to a greater or lesser extent. Those whose coverage is such that nowhere is there any significant roof area with less than two or three thicknesses are termed double coverage or triple coverage, respectively.

Q. — We have an old roof made of wooden shakes. Can asphalt shingles be applied over them?

A. — Generally, no. While asphalt shingles usually can be applied over wooden shingles, most roofers say shakes should be taken off because they do not supply a smooth surface for nailing.

(A homeowner's guide to the selection of quality roofing, including an asphalt shingle color chart, can be obtained by sending 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, N.Y. 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column, but individual correspondence cannot be undertaken.)

The Whittaker brothers, Lou, left, and Jim, smile as they are greeted by friends after descending from Camp Muir on Mount Rainier to Paradise Tuesday afternoon. Both were members of the rescue party which was unable to find any of the bodies of 11 persons buried in an accident on the mountain Sunday.

Search ends for bodies of Mt. Rainier climbers

By DAVID AMMONS
Associated Press Writer

PARADISE, Wash. (AP) — The bodies of 11 climbers, entombed beneath tons of blue glacial ice on Mount Rainier, may never be recovered, search officials say.

A search party of 12 experienced mountaineers, led by twins Lou and Jim Whittaker, descended from 10,000-foot Camp Muir after deteriorating weather Tuesday prevented further efforts to locate the victims of Sunday's icefall, the nation's worst climbing accident.

"They're part of the mountain now, those people are," said search party member Cy Perkins.

Looking grim and tired, the mountaineers and Mount Rainier National Park officials said no more searches were planned.

Park Superintendent Bill Briggle said park rangers and guides will check the rubble left by the icefall at about the 11,000-foot level of the 14,410-foot peak whenever they are in the area in case melting snow reveals some bodies.

The ill-fated climbing route, the easiest and most popular way to scale Mount Rainier, probably will be reopened soon to the public, Briggle said.

The bodies of 10 novice climbers and a guide may be buried "three feet down or 70 feet," said ranger Garry Olson.

It was the worst mountain climbing acciden tn U.S. history, said Howard Stansbury, business manager of The Mountaineers, a Seattle-based outdoors club.

"It is such a vast area. I had no idea how impossible it would be to find the people. Nothing could be done," said Lou Whittaker. "It was a terrible blow. I can't really comprehend it yet."

Lou Whittaker is co-owner of Rainier Mountaineering Inc., the guide service leading the summit climb when ice chunks as big as cars roared down upon the 29-member climbing party shortly after dawn Sunday.

Specific searches no longer need warrants

By MICHAEL J. SNIFFEN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reversing a Carter administration policy, the Reagan administration will not seek court warrants before intelligence agents search property and offices controlled by foreign agents in the United States.

The Carter Justice Department adopted a policy last year of seeking warrants in such cases from the secret Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court, which approved three of them last year. But the court agreed this month with the Reagan administration that it has no authority to issue physical-search warrants.

The short-lived Carter policy was designed as a safeguard for civil liberties and the Fourth Amendment's protection against unreasonable searches.

Justice Department spokesman Tom DeCair said the new administration tested the policy because it "just wanted to clarify the procedures; it does not represent any change in the kinds of things we want to do."

And Kenneth Bass, who devised the Carter policy, said the Reagan administration's move was "not a license to run roughshod over civil liberties. Attorneys general will still consider seriously the existing case law on the Fourth Amendment before they approve searches."

The court's legal adviser, Robert Erdahl, and the House and Senate Intelligence committees had questioned the Carter policy because the court was established in 1978 only to issue warrants to obtain foreign intelligence through electronic surveillance in the United States.

The court operates entirely in secret in a locked vault on the sixth floor of the Justice Department, but this decision — the first ever released — was disclosed Tuesday by the department because there had been public debate over the policy.

The Justice Department has reported to Congress previously that the court has never denied a government request for an electronic-surveillance warrant, approving 529 since it started in May 1979.

Effectively, the court ruling ends the recent practice of seeking warrants for intelligence searches because the government has never requested them from any other court, and asserts the right of the president and the attorney general to act upon their own "inherent" authority.

But Jerry Berman, legislative counsel for the American Civil Liberties Union, said the ruling and policy change will not settle the decades-old legal debate over whether the Constitution requires warrants for such searches.

There is no law governing these searches, and the Supreme Court has never ruled on any of them. Berman said the ACLU believes it is unconstitutional to conduct them without a normal criminal warrant, which requires that the subjects be notified of the search. Some lower-court federal judges have agreed, but others have disagreed, and they have controlled the only two decisions on record.

The secret court ruling was issued June 11 by presiding Judge George L. Hart, who said the six other judges who sit on the court in rotation authorized him to say they agreed.

Bass, intelligence adviser to Attorney General Benjamin Civiletti in the Carter administration, argued that the seven judges had inherent constitutional powers to issue such search warrants.

But Attorney General William French Smith's intelligence adviser, Richard Willard, told the court in a memo that the new administration believed the court had no such jurisdiction. He told the court that "the president and, by delegation, the attorney general have constitutional authority to approve warrantless physical searches directed against foreign powers or their agents for intelligence purposes."

Analyzing the congressional debate on the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act of 1978, Hart concluded that the court was specifically denied the authority by Congress to approve physical searches. Hart added, "Obviously, where a given authority is denied, it cannot by supplied by resort to principles of inherent, implied or ancillary jurisdiction."

In an interview, Bass noted that Civiletti also asserted that the president and attorney general had inherent constitutional power to authorize the searches without warrants. But Bass said the Carter administration believed "the possibility of mistakes because of a distorted view from inside the system is greater without a review by a court outside the executive branch."

The Carter administration, backed by FBI Director William H. Webster, supported legislation last year to extend the court's jurisdiction formally to searches, but Congress did not complete action on the bill.

Approval by the president and the attorney general of intelligence searches in this country is required by a 1978 presidential executive order signed by Carter.

The Reagan administration is revising that order, and leaked, early drafts would relax intelligence-gathering restrictions instituted after the scandals of the 1960s and 1970s over FBI and CIA surveillance of Americans who dissented from government policies.

The most recent Reagan administration draft, however, still calls for review by the attorney general.

To get the court ruling, Willard applied for a warrant for the FBI to search a non-residential premises under the direction and control of a foreign power and to search the personal property of agents of the foreign power on the premises. He said the search did not involve a break-in, or black-bag job, but would be done without notifying the subjects.

Various intelligence experts said Tuesday that this could have been a search of a foreign embassy or consulate, of the offices of a corporation owned by a foreign government, or even of an office rented by foreign spies under cover. They said the search might have been conducted by a government undercover agent working in the office or by someone who was invited in on other business and took the opportunity to snoop around.

Under Willard's description, there might have been U.S. citizens whose property would be searched, because U.S. citizens can be agents of a foreign power.

Leadership may change in China's ruling group

PEKING (AP) — Communist Party Vice Chairman Li Xiannian says China's top leadership may be changed by the party's Central Committee soon but the committee is still holding preliminary meetings, diplomatic sources reported today.

The sources, who asked not to be identified, said Li told a West German delegation Tuesday the committee had not begun its formal session, or plenum. But another official told the same delegation the plenum started Saturday.

The committee's meetings are held in secret and no announcement is made until the meeting ends and its actions are made public. The Chinese Foreign Ministry, which handles questions from foreign journalists, has not responded to questions about the meeting.

Party Chairman Hua Guofeng is expected to be replaced at the meeting by General Secretary Hu Yaobang. But the conflicting reports given to the West German delegation aroused speculation that problems may have arisen.

The diplomatic sources said Li told the West Germans "some personnel changes are possible," but "this is nothing extraordinary."

In explanation, he noted France's recent election of a new head of state, President Francois Mitterrand. Political observers said the analogy appeared to confirm the impending demotion of Hua, who other diplomats have reported has already submitted his resignation.

The sources said Li also confirmed reports that an assessment of the late Mao Tse-tung to be adopted by the committee concludes that the longtime party chairman's achievements far outweighed his mistakes.

Li emphasized Mao's resistance to Soviet efforts to dominate China, including his refusal to permit the Russians to build military bases on Chinese soil, the sources said.

Columbia on schedule

COCOA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The encore mission of the space shuttle will be a "busy flight," and preparations are moving along on schedule, officials say.

National Aeronautics and Space Adminstration and Rockwell International Corp. officials, during a press briefing Tuesday, said the Columbia's turnaround flight is expected to meet its scheduled Sept. 30 launch date without complications.

Rockwell technical expert Bill Green told reporters work is progressing well on preparing the orbitor for its second mission. But he added it will be two or three years before Kennedy Space Center teams achieve their goal of a two-week turnaround time.

"It's going to be one busy flight, more of a working flight rather than a test flight," Green said. "The last flight was a drop in the bucket compared to the amount of work that (shuttle astronauts) Cmdr. Joe Engle and Dick Truly will have to do on this flight."

The Columbia's maiden voyage, more than two years behind scheduled, carried astronauts John Young and Robert Crippen on a 54-hour voyage launched from Kennedy Space Center April 12. The second mission is scheduled to total 124 hours and 55 minutes.

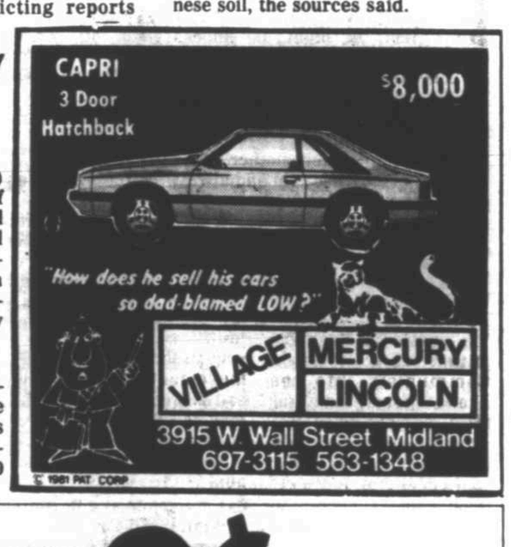
Green said the astronauts will spend about 88 hours in an upside-down position with the shuttle's cargo-bay doors open so that experimental cameras can view the Earth. They will take pictures, radar images and various measurements.

Also, the astronauts will try out a new manipulating arm provided by Canada to be used in operational missions for taking payloads out of the cargo bay.

Film industry may strike

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Directors Guild of America has announced that Jackie Cooper will head a 22-man committee to prepare for a strike that could virtually bring the film industry to a halt.

The directors have indicated they will strike June 30 unless there is agreement on a new contract for the union's 6,400 members.



Pioneer 10 drifting in space

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The battered little Pioneer 10, farther from home than any spacecraft has ever been, is moving toward a new astronomical milestone in its nine-year exploration of space.

Scientists involved in the Pioneer mission, managed by NASA's Ames Research Center at Mountain View, already have begun celebrating that the ship soon will 25 astronomical units — 2.32 billion miles — from the sun.

An astronomical unit, a yardstick used by astronomers, is about 93 million miles — the average distance from Earth to the sun. On July 26, the ship will be 25 AU from the heart of the solar system as it continues its exploration.

"This is far and away the farthest" any working spaceship has ever gone, Aaron Barnes of Ames said Tuesday. "I don't think anybody was seriously thinking it would be alive and functioning out at 25 AU. ... And now they're talking about having power for Pioneer 10 out to around 1987."

The ship was launched by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration on March 3, 1972. It became the first spacecraft to venture beyond Mars, proving a ship could safely navigate the perilous asteroid belt.

Blocking Soviets Haig's goal

By R. GREGORY NOKES

As China becomes an ever larger factor in U.S. Asian policy, the role of Taiwan, which China considers a mainland province, grows more fuzzy.

A senior official told reporters in a background briefing here Tuesday that Taiwan still has a role. He called it "a rather impregnable aircraft carrier in a vital sea lane."

The language was vague, however, and came against the background of a general awareness that Chinese leaders remain adamantly opposed to a U.S.-Taiwan military connection.

Reflecting that awareness, the official indicated he would oppose providing high-performance jet aircraft to Taiwan at the present time, even though Taiwan claims it needs them to replace its aging fleet of fighters.

Another key element of the new policy is the reaffirmation of U.S. ties to traditional allies in the region — Japan, South Korea, Thailand, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand.

Plans once announced by Carter to withdraw U.S. troops from Korea have been scrapped. Carter administration concerns over human rights abuses in both Korea and the Philippines have been removed from the top shelf of priorities.

With respect to Vietnam, which has a 200,000-man occupation force in Cambodia, officials said the administration would follow the approach of nations in the region, especially the five nations of the Association of Southest Asian Nations (ASAN) — Thailand, Singapore, Malaysia, Indonesia and the Philippines.

An Analysis

But the ASAN nations, along with Japan and New Zealand, appear to favor a much softer line toward Vietnam's involvement in Cambodia. Whether the United States will go along with a softer approach is still in doubt.

Another question mark for the U.S. Asian foreign policy is the role of Japan. The administration is clear that it wants Japan to increase its defense spending to assist in defense of the region. However, Japan has been publicly resisting, and the State Department now fears that if the administration openly keeps up pressure on Japan it could undermine the goverment there and encourage neutralist and leftist elements.

Senior officials believe the Japanese government wants to increase defense spending, but has to go slow because of domestic political considerations.

The State Department now is willing to ease up on the pressure and let the Japanese work it out in their own way.

It is one thing of course to say the administration has a new Asian policy and another to make it work. The senior official acknowledged as much in his talk with reporters and said "credibility will be on performance."

Military plot against king reported

MADRID, Spain (AP) — The government has uncovered a new military plot, apparently directed against King Juan Carlos, high police officials said today.

The king was credited with saving Spain's young democracy four months ago when he refused to lend his support to an attempt by right-wing officers to seize power.

The Interior Ministry officials, who declined to be identified, reported the arrest of three army officers and four civilians.

They did not link the plot directly to Juan Carlos, but they indicated it was timed to coincide with the celebration today of the king's saint's day. The 43-year-old monarch is to hold a formal reception tonight in the Royal Palace in downtown Madrid to mark his saint's day.

The officials said the arrests were made Tuesday by a special unit investigating right-wing violence.

An official police note early today said only that the arrests were made to investigate possible connection with the explosion June 19 of a homemade bomb that injured a young rightist as he he transported it across Madrid.

Among those under arrest, police said, was Major Ricardo Saenz de Ynestrillas. The news agency Europa Press said Ynestrillas was expected to face charges now of military rebellion, the same charge on which Lt. Col. Antonio Tejero, the Civil Guard officer who led the storming of Parliament in February, has been indicted.

Mitterrand gives priority to unity of leftist parties

PARIS (AP) — Socialist President Francois Mitterrand has brought Communists into the French government for the first time since 1947 because unity of the leftist parties is a priority matter for him — despite what conservatives at home or abroad may feel.

Mitterrand's appointment of four Communists to Premier Pierre Mauroy's 44-member Cabinet Tuesday wasn't necessary to insure adoption of his program by the new National Assembly. The Socialists won an overwhelming majority in the runoff elections Sunday and could have governed without a nod to the Communists, who lost half their seats in the assembly.

But Mitterrand has a "philosophical" desire to unify the left and provide France with the working left-right political system that has historically escaped it, sources close to him said.

And he hopes the Communists inside the government will give him less trouble than they might outside of it, the sources added. The Communists' strong influence in the French labor movement could have caused endless trouble if they had been frozen out of the Cabinet.

To doubters who suggest that Mitterrand may be somewhat beholden to the Communists, he can point to their agreement to "solidarity" with his government program. The main planks are more spending for social programs, nationalization of major industries, more taxes on top incomes and a measured pro-NATO line toward the Soviet Union.

Mitterrand succeeded in getting the pro-Moscow Communists to join in a demand that the Soviets withdraw their 85,000 troops from Afghanistan. After the Kremlin intervened there in 1979, the leaders of the French party strongly endorsed Moscow's venture.

The Communists also accepted a hands-off-Poland plank obviously addressed to the Soviet Union.

France is now the only member of the North Atlantic Alliance with Communists in its government. President Reagan's conservative administration, for one, is certain to be unhappy about that. But the joint governing agreement between the Socialists and the Communists provides that the government will "respect" France's alliances.

The Communists were last accepted in a French government after World War II when Gen. Charles de Gaulle brought them in to try to to calm strife between the left and the right. In 1947, another Socialist, Premier Paul Ramadier, threw them out when they refused to cooperate.

Some political observers think that might happen again.

Anticipating criticism from France's allies, Mauroy defiantly told a television audience Tuesday night: "The government of France is not made for foreigners. It is made for France."

Party founder dies

ROME (AP) — Senator Giuseppe Togni, one of the founders of the dominant Christian Democrat Party and minister in several postwar Italian governments, died at his Rome home Tuesday night after a long illness, his family announced today. He was 77.

Togni, a professor of labor law at Rome University, was an active leader of Roman Catholic unions and the church-backed Popular Party, which became the Christian Democrat Party.

Sickout ordered to end

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — A state workers' union has vowed to defy an order for an end to a sickout that closed liquor stores, halted the New Hampshire lottery and disrupted other state services.

Denis Parker, head of the State Employees Association, said the union will proceed with its planned three-day protest to demand higher wages as it appeals the order issued late Tuesday by the Public Employees Labor Relations Board.

The board's cease-and-desist order came at the request of state officials after 80 percent of the 9,200 workers represented by the union stayed off the job Tuesday.

Parker said the union plans to stage the sickout until Thursday, when the New Hampshire House is scheduled to consider a budget that includes a state-employee wage offer for the next two years that Parker has called "the straw that broke the camel's back."

Low back pain common complaint

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Bellhops and bank presidents say it. Steelworkers and stenographers say it. At one time or another, so does almost everybody else over age 30 — "Oh, my aching back!"

Low back pain is one of the most common and distressing complaints in the industrialized world, health experts say. It is one of the most puzzling, too.

Eight of every 10 Americans will suffer from back pain at least once during their lives. They and their insurance companies spend an estimated $14 billion a year on diagnoses, operations, rehabilitation and lost-work benefits to try to get rid of it. Yet, most of this effort will fail.

No one really knows what causes most cases of backache. And almost nobody is trying to find out.

"It's safe to say that there is no other ailment as widespread as back pain, and there is no ailment less studied and, therefore, more mysterious," says Dr. Joseph Novak, head of rehabilitation medicine at St. Francis General Hospital in Pittsburgh.

Consider the statistics:

—Currently, 75 million people in the United States suffer from back problems.

—Two million Americans cannot work because of them.

—Back injuries account for 460,000, or one in five, of the nation's work-related injuries.

—Back pain is the most expensive ailment among Americans between the ages of 30 and 60.

—Insurance companies pay $6,600 for the average back injury claim. Some cost more than $100,000.

And yet, Dr. Alf Nachemson, a Swedish doctor who is probably the leading expert on the problem, laments: "There are hardly 20 people on this earth doing real, thorough, systematic research into the cause of back pain."

One reason for this is that nobody dies from a backache.

"Low back pain is not the glamorous type of research that draws a lot of people," says Dr. Stover Snook, a Harvard psychologist who conducts back research for Liberty Mutual Insurance Co. in Boston. "It's not a life-threatening injury. It happens to be very expensive and very uncomfortable, but it's not like doing research on cancer or something exotic."

Exotic or not, a backache is miserable.

During the National Basketball Association playoffs this year, Celtics Coach Bill Fitch was suffering such back pain that he had trouble sitting on the bench for more than three minutes at a time.

"It might be described as man's most important non-life-threatening disease," says Dr. Augustus White, chief of orthopedic surgery at Beth Israel Hospital in Boston. "It's so common and has such tremendous impact on the quality of life. It can be terribly debilitating or just a damned nuisance. It can be very profoundly inconvenient and lead to a good deal of depression."

Mercifully, low back pain usually goes away by itself. Ninety percent of the victims get well within two months, no matter what their doctors do.

But for some, it is a lifelong affliction. Sometimes surgery helps, but it can also worsen the problem.

About 5 percent of back pain victims have ruptured, or slipped, discs.

Discs are rubbery shock absorbers that fit between the bony vertebrae that form the spine. As people grow older, the discs wear out and sometimes press against the spinal cord. Besides back pain, this can cause sciatica, a pain that radiates down the legs.

Disc surgery can usually relieve the sciatica, but in 60 percent of the cases, some back pain remains.

Nachemson and many other doctors maintain that American surgeons perform too many disc operations. This kind of surgery is seven times more common in the United States than in Western Europe.

If the first operation fails, there is little chance a second or third will stop the ache. Yet some people undergo a dozen or more back operations in a futile search for relief.

"Sometimes patients get into a pattern in which they complain vigorously of pain," says White. "They see doctor after doctor. Sooner or later, somebody finds a little something that looks irregular on the X-ray, or in desperation someone ends up offering them an operation. That can start a terrible saga of more surgery, more pain and more difficulty. I have known patients who have had 15 to 20 operations on their back, which is a tragedy."

Backaches are a hazard in many kinds of work. Truck drivers have them more often than anyone, but they are also common among people who do heavy lifting or have jobs in which they sit all day.

White says there is little anyone can do to avoid back pain. But "it appears that being in good physical condition protects against backache, even if the job involves lifting."

Artist commissioned to paint Lady Diana

The National Portrait Gallery in London has commissioned British painter Bryan Organ, who drew barbs for his somber painting of Prince Charles and blurred image of Princess Margaret.

The gallery said it will unveil the new work July 23, a week before 19-year-old Lady Diana is married to Charles, heir to the British throne.

Organ's large canvas of Charles, seated in a wooden chair in front of a nondescript fence, was described as "lifeless." Organ said he was "slightly disappointed" with that work after a year's effort, but added: "I don't give a damn if the public likes it or not."

His 1970 portrait of Princess Margaret, was more controversial since the right half of her face was a faded blur. One critic said it made the queen's sister look like a Tudor queen awaiting execution.

But a gallery spokesman said it had full confidence in the work of the 45-year-old artist.

"I don't think we would have commissioned him if we had not been happy with him," the spokesman said Tuesday.

Organ has not yet finished the portrait, and the gallery would not say whether Lady Diana is sitting for the painting or if it is being done from photographs. The gallery also refused to disclose how much the commission cost.

U.S. looking world over for foreign garbage dump

By JAMES SIMON
Associated Press Writer

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — American corporations are increasingly looking overseas for places to dispose of unwanted hazardous wastes, and U.S. officials and environmentalists warn that unless there are stricter rules the result may be disasters in health and foreign affairs.

"There is a worldwide search under way to find somewhere abroad that can be America's garbage bin," said Jacob Scherr, an attorney with the Natural Resources Defense Council, a Washington lobbying group.

"This is obviously not in America's best interests. The potential is good for exporting another Love Canal," he said, referring to the area of Niagara Falls, N.Y., where chemical dumping has been blamed for health problems.

Sen. Danil K. Inouye, D-Hawaii, also used the Love Canal analogy earlier this year in urging tighter restrictions on what Americans are permitted to ship overseas. Environmental damage abroad caused by the dumping of U.S. waste would "hurt our international stature and harm our foreign policy interests," the senator said.

While there are thousands of different hazardous wastes being generated by American industry, only two — polychlorinated biphenyls, or PCBs, and dioxin, one of the deadliest compounds made by man — require approval before export, according to the Environmental Protection Agency.

THE GROWING interest in shipping waste abroad is prompted in part by the lack of treatment and disposal facilities in the United States, said Richard Golob, whose World Information Systems research organization in Cambridge studies the hazardous waste problem.

"We're seeing increasing evidence of a flow of waste from here into developing countries, which usually don't have the facilities to safely handle it," said Golob.

Golob and government officials say it is impossible to tell exactly how much American waste winds up abroad. But several recent attempts to export waste have come to light.

In March, Mexican authorities jailed American expatriate Clarence Nugent on charges of importing toxic chemicals — 42 barrels of PCBs — and violating Mexican health regulations.

Nugent, 75, claims the chemicals slipped past a Mexican customs agent and his company in a trainload of 164 barrels of mercury waste destined for recovery operations at Nugent's mine in the north-central Mazapil area.

He told the Associated Press in a jail interview in Mexico City that the charges were "a big political deal. I think someone is trying to make an example out of me."

Publicity surrounding Nugent's arrest has caused Mexico's Office on Environmental Improvement to take a new look at the enforcement of a law enacted last October which closed the country's border's to chemical wastes.

ALSO, LAST YEAR Nedlog Technological Services Inc. of Arvada, Colo., which recycles waste from mines and industrial firms, tried to ship waste to Sierra Leone and reportedly was willing to pay the African nation $25 million.

Nedlog president Dr. Jim Wolf confirmed the company wanted to ship the waste. He blamed adverse publicity for making the operation "not feasible."

This year Ashvins USA of Birmingham, Ala., tried to persuade officials in the Bahamas to accept hazardous waste generated by American industry, according to B.T. Reid, a company director. The plan drew protests from environmentalists and was abandoned.

There also have been unsuccessful attempts in recent years to send hazardous leftovers from the paint industry to Haiti, highly toxic PCBs to Taiwan and South Korea, and sewage sludge to Colombia, Antigua and Brazil.

Shipping dangerous waste abroad often is not illegal — or even very difficult. Sue Patterson, international relations officer of the State Department's office of environment and health, said the federal government requires only that a company give four weeks notice before exporting hazardous materials. The United States then quickly informs the foreign country that it may soon receive a shipment of deadly cargo, she said.

Since that regulation went into effect last November, the government has received about 30 such notices, she said.

"So far there hasn't been a major problem of sending the waste to countries with no facilities," she said. "But yes, we're worried about it. Over the years, as companies have to transport their waste farther in the United States for disposal, in many cases it may be cheaper to bring it to a ship on the East Coast and just send it off some place."

Inouye wants tougher regulations. He has introduced legislation to amend the Export Administration Act of 1979 to include export limits on all waste listed by the EPA as hazardous, plus sewage sludge and residues from waste treatment plants. An exporter would have to obtain a license from the secretary of commerce, who would issue it only if the government of the importing country agreed to receive the shipment.

NOEL BROWN, director of the New York office of the United Nations Environmental Project, said the United States "should be applauded for taking the lead in tightening restrictions on hazardous waste disposal.

"But its efforts have caused a great deal of pressure on American firms to look abroad for disposal of their waste," he said.

Brown said many attempts to send American waste abroad have been to countries with virtually no modern facilities. In such cases, the United Nations uses publicity and some "quiet diplomacy" to try to kill the deal, he said.

"We cannot tell sovereign nations what to do or not to do about waste products policy," Brown said. "But we can warn them they may be opening a chemical Pandora's Box."

Opening lead: Seven of ♠.

There are a limited number of themes in the play and defense of a hand. However, they crop up in an astonishing number of disguises. This hand is from a recent World Pairs championship.

North-South were using 15-17 point no trump openings. North tried to locate a heart fit by using the Stayman Convention. When his partner denied a major, North showed an invitational hand with five hearts, but then decided to venture to game when partner denied holding three hearts.

At most tables, the opening lead was a spade. West won the king and returned the ten. No matter what the defenders did, West could never regain the lead to cash his established spades, and so declarer had all the time in the world to set up his nine tricks in the red suits.

At some tables declarer was defeated at three no trump after a spade lead, and there was little he could do about it. At one of those tables, an American pair, Mike and Kathy Cappelletti, of Alexandria, Va., were sitting East and West respectively. When a low spade was played from dummy to the first trick, Mike inserted the ten!

As the cards lie, declarer could still have made the contract by ducking the first trick. That would have denied declarer a spade trick, but it would have left the suit blocked. But that play would have been the height of folly if spades broke 5-3, for then the defenders would be able to take the first five tricks in the suit to defeat the contract before the play had even started.

So declarer won the first trick with the jack of spades, and now had to find eight fast tricks. When East got the lead with the king of diamonds, he returned the king of spades. It was a simple matter for Kathy to overtake with the ace and run her spades to defeat the contract two tricks.

YOU HAVE A HOTLINE into the headquarters of major manufacturers.

Midland is special. It has been chosen for a new consumer service — SHOPPERS' HOTLINE. SHOPPERS' HOTLINE enables you — the consumer — to talk back to manufacturers about your product preferences. By being a member of SHOPPERS' HOTLINE, you have a "say-so" about the quality of products being sold.

It's easy to be a member! We issue you a SHOPPERS' HOTLINE card with a special I.D. number. When you shop at participating stores (see below), show your card to the cashier. The cashier will enter your number into the store register and SHOPPERS' HOTLINE will electronically record your purchases with no inconvenience to you. You are never bothered about what product you purchased, or why you bought it, nor is your name divulged to manufacturers. Your purchase record is used for statistical purposes only and is strictly confidential.

How can being a member of SHOPPERS' HOTLINE influence a manufacturer? It's simple! If you like a product, you buy it. If you don't like a product, you won't buy it. Nothing speaks to a manufacturer like actual sales results. As a member of SHOPPERS' HOTLINE, you help to provide consumers — across the nation — with the quality of products that they deserve! And, as a part of SHOPPERS' HOTLINE, manufacturers will place new products on the shelves of Midland stores. As a SHOPPERS' HOTLINE member, you'll cast your vote on these new items. Your vote determines the products' future.

BUT THAT'S NOT ALL . . . each month that you participate, you could win one of over 50 PRIZES with a monthly GRAND PRIZE valued at $500 or more: a trip-for-two to California, the Carribean, Mexico; a "top-of-the-line" color T.V. or a microwave oven. Panel wants to cut 'marriage penalty,' boost IRAs

Senate Finance Committee working on 'acceptable' tax-cut bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Finance Committee has agreed to soften the "marriage penalty" imposed on many working couples and to make tax-free Individual Retirement Accounts available to all employed Americans.

The action came Tuesday as the Republican-controlled panel worked to produce a tax-cut bill acceptable to President Reagan by saving individuals and businesses $40 billion in fiscal 1982 and $240 billion the next two years.

Committee Chairman Bob Dole, R-Kan., said he hoped to complete work today or Thursday, about a week ahead of the schedule of the House Ways and Means Committee, dominated by Democrats opposed to many of the president's proposals.

The Finance Committee decided without dissent to adopt Reagan's proposal on the "marriage penalty," which often forces working couples to pay more taxes than if they were single and filing separately.

Under the approach, a couple next year would be allowed to exempt from taxation 5 percent — to a maximum $1,500 — of the earnings of the lower-paid spouse. Beginning in 1983, the exemption would be 10 percent, up to $3,000.

The committee also decided that Individual Retirement Accounts, now reserved for the self-employed and persons without company pension plans, should be expanded to the entire workforce.

Persons with company pensions would be able to deposit up to $1,000 a year in tax-free IRA accounts which cannot be touched until retirement. Workers without company plans would be able to deposit up to $2,000 annually, an increase of $500.

Expansion of IRA's, which is expected to foster savings deposits, is supported by the Reagan administration and House Democratic leaders.

On the budget-cutting front, Senate Republicans beat back attempts by outnumbered Democrats Tuesday to restore money for Social Security benefits, foster care and adoption aid to the $39.6 billion reduction package endorsed by Reagan.

Meanwhile, Democratic leaders in the House, working to keep their alternative budget-cut package intact, are trying to force congressmen into the politically distasteful position of voting on program reductions individually.

House Democratic leader Jim Wright, D-Texas, told the Rules Committee that Republicans should not be allowed to offer in a bloc their amendments to the $37.8 billion reduction package put forth by the Democratic-controlled committees.

He asked the Rules Committee, which decides how amendments can be considered on the floor, to require amendments to be offered individually, not as a package.

"I think the American people are entitled to know what we're voting on," Wright said. "I think we have the right to know what we're voting on and the right to vote it up or down."

In other congressional business Tuesday:

—The House rejected an administration-backed attempt to cut federal funds for public broadcasting from the current $220 million to $110 million, beginning in 1984.

The House appeared ready, however, to trim public broadcasting funds to $160 million in 1984, $145 million in 1985 and $130 million in 1986.

—The supplementary military appropriations bill was sent to a conference committee after the Hose approvd spending an extra $2.66 billion for research and construction in the current budge year. Te Senate has approved $2.8 billion.

—The House, moving to head off cuts in food stamp benefits, authorized spending an additional $1.7 billion on the program through Sept. 30.

—The Congressional Budget Office said the Reagan administration's proposed cuts in student loans and grants would force a family with an annual income of $25,000 and one child in college to come up with more than $2,000 a year for school expenses.

The CBO said a family with a $15,000 income would lose $1,180 in federal assistance while one with a $35,000 income would lose $1,824.

—Over administration objections, the House cut $60 million from a $2.19 billion Space Shuttle appropriation but kept alive the possibility of an unmanned mission to intercept Halley's Comet in 1986.

—Eugene V. Rostow's nomination as director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency was approved by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. The lone vote against him was cast by Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., who said Rostow is "hostile to the arms control process."

—Sen. George J. Mitchell, D-Maine, told House and Senate committees that daylight-saving time should be extended to March, April and the first week in November as a way of saving energy and reducing highway accidents and street crime.

EDITOR'S NOTE: This has the classic ingredients of an old west novel — a tall Texan, his horse and the dark of night. Except this is a story about a man and his horse and their fight against apartment complex crime.

By KRISTIN GAZLAY
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — Virgil Attaway an his quarterhorse Linc spend night after night together prowling a 400-acre stretch of rolling hills under the vast Texas sky looking for robbers, bad guys and damsels in distress.

But unlike Texans of a century ago, their job isn't getting a herd of cattle to the railhead on time.

The "herd" Attaway and his stocky steed watch for 60 hours a week is made up of an estimated 10,000 residents that live in the "Village," a 6,439-unit apartment complex that is one of Dallas' largest.

"I can come up on people and they don't even know how I got there," says the 30-year-old Attaway. "I just get off Linc and he'll stand there and wait for me."

Both Linc and Attaway are employed by Smith Protective Services Inc., who in turn are employed by Lincoln Property Company — hence the name Linc — to guard the predominately young, single Village population.

Another horse, dubbed Smitty in honor of those who help provide his oats, also wends its rounds through the 2½-square mile beat, often with Smith guard Dave Moore.

"Sometimes I'd like to get in the patrol car," Moore says, referring to frequent 100-degree plus summer days. "It's already gotten so hot."

Most often the man-and-horse team guides lost people or lets locked-out Village residents into their apartments.

Both Linc and Smitty navigate the manicured green lawns and flagstone steps that cut through the apartments' concrete corridors with easy handling, though their nature lends them more to the rough and tumble business of cutting cattle than clip-clopping down sedate sidewalks.

Nelson says he dreamed up the idea of horsing around the apartments in February 1980, when the country was saddled with rising fuel costs and the Village needed a means to effectively patrol its meandering jogging trails — practically inaccessible to a patrol car.

"We've made a pretty good savings," Nelson says, "and we're thinking of adding another horse to some other apartments."

He emphasizes that the public relations plus hasn't hurt either.

"Now officers are good guys to kids in the area. Before we just didn't have the rapport. The patrol car used to drive up and we couldn't get anything out of them," he says.

The mounted officers are equipped with radios they can use to signal backup assistance and cars often still are used to patrol the Village area.

An unmarked car is quietly effective — but results with an unmarked horse can be just as arresting.

Though riders wear law-enforcement blue Smith uniforms — complete with what Nelson calls "Smokey the Bear hats" — they can surprise a suspicious person with no lights, no engine noise, no conventional means of approach, he says.

The only mishap Nelson can recall happened in the first few months of his brainchild, when a horse tied to a flagpole broke its rope and wound up crashing through a car windshield.

The auto owner didn't have to explain it to his insurance agent. Smith Protective Services picked up the tab.

With a history of horse sense, a penchant for police work and an 8-year-old daughter who ropes top prizes at rodeos, Attaway understandably loves his work — and Linc.

"Real early in the morning, you ought to see this horse run," he says of his patrol partner. "Beautiful."

Rinaldi's win, upsets highlight Wimbledon

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Kathy Rinaldi, 14 years and three months old, Tuesday became the youngest tennis player to win a match in the 104-year history of Wimbledon, while several other seeded players fell.

THE JENSEN Beach, Fla., schoolgirl, the daughter of a dentist, defeated Sue Rollinson of South Africa 6-3, 2-6, 9-7. She played with the patience and coolness of a player twice her age.

The upsets of the opening day continued as Mark Edmondson of Australia eliminated 10th-seeded Guillermo Vilas of Argentina 6-4, 6-1, 1-6, 4-6, 6-3 in the men's singles, while three women's seeds were ousted.

Mary Lou Piatek, a 19-year-old blonde from Munster, Ind., defeated ninth-seeded Sylvia Hanika of Germany 6-4, 7-5; Pam Teeguarden eliminated fellow American Joanne Russell, seeded 16th, 6-4, 7-5, and Lucia Romanov of Romania outlasted the 15th seed, Regina Marsikova of Czechoslovakia, 5-7, 6-1, 6-3.

BUT RINALDI was the day's star.

No Wimbledon player ever had a tougher baptism of fire. In the final set of the 2½-hour match, Rollinson, a tiny 19-year-old from Johannesburg, served for victory at 6-5 and had a match point.

But Rinaldi stayed alive by outlasting her rival in a long baseline-to-baseline rally. Four games later, she hit a forehand winner to deadlock the match.

In the long history of this most famous of all tournaments, only one player was younger than Kathy. Mita Klima of Austria played in 1907 when she was 13, but she lost in the first round. So the American girl, who begins high school in September, made Wimbledon history.

SHE CAME off the court giggling with happiness and said she had enjoyed every minute of it.

"I didn't feel any pressure at all," she said. "I don't worry about that sort of thing. I just go out and hit the ball."

Hana Mandlikova of Czechoslovakia, who is halfway toward the women's Grand Slam, defied her doctor's advice to play Corinne Vanier, a 17-year-old French left-hander, and won 6-3, 7-5.

Mandlikova, the No.2 seed, said she felt no recurrences of her back injury. Doctors had told her she should rest for four weeks.

The 19-year-old Czech has already won the Australian Open title on grass and the French Open on slow clay.

TRACY AUSTIN, the No.3 seed, strolled past Jennifer Mundel of South Africa 6-0, 6-2.

Martina Navratilova, who won here in 1978 and 1979, and is seeded fourth this year, served and volleyed her way past Joyce Portman of Surfside, Fla., 6-0, 6-0.

Bubbling Andrea Jaeger, 16, of Lincolnshire, Ill., seeded fifth, had an even easier win — 6-1, 6-1 over Nerida Gregory of Australia. Last year, at age 15, she was the youngest ever to win a Wimbledon match, a distinction she lost to Rinaldi Tuesday.

Vilas' defeat by Edmondson meant that only 11 of the 16 men's seeds made the second round.

Gene Mayer, the fifth seed, withdrew before the tournament started because of a wrist injury. Fourth-seeded Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia, No.11 Victor Pecci of Paraguay and No.13 Yannick Noah of France all were defeated on Monday.

VILAS' UNIMPRESSIVE Wimbledon record dipped even lower. The Argentinian star has won all the other big titles in the Grand Slam series — the Australian, French and U.S. Opens — but has never done well in the biggest event of them all.

He reached the quarterfinals at Wimbledon in 1975 and 1976, but has since never survived more than two rounds. He missed last year's tournament through illness.

On this occasion, Edmondson's rugged power overcame Vilas' finesse. The big Australian appeared to be tiring in the fourth set and made volleying errors as Vilas came back with elegant strokes to level at two sets all.

But Edmondson's game picked up again in the final set, and he began putting pressure on his rival. Vilas fought off four break points to hold his service in the second game. Two games later, Edmondson broke him.

Midland lets one slip away

BY TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Midland's Cubs took an 8-5 lead into the ninth inning and left Cubs Stadium with a 13-8 knot on the noggin after the Amarillo Gold Sox erupted for eight runs in the final inning, sending 12 batters to the plate, to square the Texas League series at 1-1.

It was a case of the Cubs' injury-depleted hill corps finally giving out as Designated Hitter Frank Castro delivered a two-out two-run double for what proved to be the deciding runs in the ninth to make it 10-8.

However, it was first baseman Joe Lansford who delivered the blow that made it possible, a two-run homer off lefthander Craig Lefferts to tie it at 8. It was the big guy's third homer in two nights, his fourth this season in Cubs Stadium and his eighth against Midland this year.

It wouldn't be so bad if the 20-year-old from San Jose, Calif., confined his misery making to homers, but he also had a double, two singles and four rbi for the night. And for the series is a modest 7-for-9.

LEFFERTS, 6-9, had given up four runs in the fourth, but seemed within easy reach of victory going into the ninth. Aaron Cain singled and took second when the ball was misplayed in the outfield, but John Stevenson skied to right and Jerry DeSimone, who had a three-hit four rbi night, singled up the middle to make it 8-6.

That brought up Lansford, who had doubled in two runs in the third and singled in the fifth and seventh.

"He had led me off with a fastball earlier in the game," Lansford described, "So I was laying back waiting for it again on the first pitch."

Sure enough, that's what he got. Lansford pounced on it and ripped it to left-center for his 17th homer of the season.

Although it seems his bat has been raising havoc with the Cubs all season, "I have only four game-winning hits. Most of the time it's like tonight. I get the hit that ties it or makes it close, but doesn't win it."

The younger, economy-sized brother of former El Paso infielder Carney Lansford, now with the Boston Red Sox, never played ball with Carney. "He is four years older than I am."

But it probably won't be long before Joe, only a third year pro, is up in the majors and perahps making Carney a little envious. Last winter, Carney was traded by California to Boston, "He loves the park and fans in Boston, but hates the weather." As a San Diego farmhand, Joe is headed for the bigs in California, probably with a stopover in Hawaii.

Last year Lansford missed two months of the season, but still wound up with 24 homers and 95 runs batted in in the A California League and his paced hasn't slackened in the Texas League.

WITH THE wind once again blowing a mild gale to left, it was a hitter's night with six doubles rattling off the fences and five homers sailing over them.

Midland jumped in front early on Mel Hall's single and Javier Fierro's two-run homer to left in the first and five unearned runs in the second made it 7-0. But no lead is sacred in Cubs Stadium and this proved the case once again.

Tim Hamm, 7-6, survived Hall's two-run homer and Jack Upton's run-scoring double not to mention two costly errors, to pitch two-hit ball from the second inning on, surrendering an eighth inning homer to Fritz Connally that cleared the scoreboard.

Amarillo's four in the third came on Ron Tingley's ninth homer, singles by Pupura and Cain and back-to-back run producing doubles by DeSimone and Lansford. Lefferts then settled down to hold the Gold Sox to one run until the ninth with a one-walk, nine-strikeout effort before running out of gas.

That's when Manager George Enright was forced to go to his bullpen, Tim Milner and Norm Churchill, who have made eight and nine appearances, respectively, since June 9. This time the wear and tear showed. Milner came in with the score tied, two out and Dan Gausepohl, who had singled, on base. Tim didn't get anyone out, giving up a walk to Tingley, doubles to Castro and Puprua, a walk to Cain and Stevenson's two-bagger before Churchill got the final out.

Kathy Rinaldi, 14 years and three months old, became the youngest player to ever win a match in the 104 year history of Wimbledon Tuesday when she defeated Sue Rollingson of South Africa, 6-3, 2-6, 9-7.

Tower, Mid City hang on for win

Tower and Mid City scored first then had to hang on to claim victories Tuesday in the second round of the American Little League City Championship at the North Central diamonds.

In the losers bracket, Tower scored three times in the first then had to survive a two-run rally in the sixth inning to nip Western 3-2 and stay alive in the tournament. The loss knocks Western out the of double elimination tournament.

Roland Alsobrook suffered the loss for Western despite giving up only three hits. It was his early wildness that did him in. In the first inning, Alsobrook walked Bryan Shellenberger and then wild pitched him to second and third. After getting the next two batters, Alsobrook walked Joe Waters before Greg Garrett rapped an RBI single. After Mike Acosta walkd, Dan Taylor followed with a two-run single for a 3-0 Tower lead.

Joe Waters, the winning pitcher, held Western scoreless until the sixth inning. Western erupted for two runs but Waters was able to put down the rally to preserve the win.

In the other game, fans saw 23 runs, 15 hits and 19 errors as Mid City outslug Eastern 12-11 in seven innings.

Mid City jumped on Eastern starter Ted Newman for three runs in the first only to see Tommy Yorkman blast a three-run homer in the bottom of the frame to tie the game.

Mid City added four more runs in the second but Eastern pecked away with a single run in the second and three more in the third to tie the game again.

Eastern added single runs in the fourth and fifth while Mid City scored twice in the fourth as the game was even after six innings of play.

In the seventh, Mid City scored three times to take a 12-9 lead. Eastern wasn't about to give up as they tried to battle back once again. Eastern knocked winner Sterling Warren off the mound but Mike Rochard came in to put down the uprising after Eastern had scored twice.

Mid City's attack was lead by Sterling Warren who went 3-for-5 and Dorey Thompson who cracked out a double and Yorkman's homer. Eastern used a balanced attack in collecting their eight hits.

With the defeat, Eastern, who committed eights errors Wednesday, falls into the losers bracket and will face Tower in a 6 p.m. game Thursday. The losers is eliminated from the tournament.

In the other game on tap for Thursday at 6 p.m., North Central, who has been idle since pounding Western 22-2 Monday, will square off against Mid City.

Settlement or false alarms?

NEW YORK (AP) — A chance for a settlement or just another false alarm? Baseball fans awaited the answer to that question as negotiators for striking major league players and the clubowners held another session with a federal mediator today.

The newest round of on-again, off-again talks, the first since negotiations collapsed last Friday, was scheduled for 1 p.m., CDT, in New York with federal mediator Kenneth Moffett, who had ordered a Tuesday session only to cancel it three hours later.

Since Moffett said last week that he would not call new talks without some indication of movement in the stubborn positions adopted by the rival sides, that was the first question raised when the mediator's Washington, D.C., office announced the meeting for today, the 13th day of the first in-season walkout in major league history.

Do the owners have some new proposal on the sticky matter of compensation for free agents signed in the annual re-entry draft, the one and only issue in the strike thus far? Have the players come up with something they think the owners might accept?

Tradition needed at Tech says Moore

When Jerry Moore was named head coach at Texas Tech a few months ago, there were more than a few "Jerry Who?" statements floating across West Texas.

Those sounds are understandable because Tech fans seem to want somebody to identify with. Through the 1970s there were Jim Carlen, Steve Stone and Rex Dockery parading through Lubbock. Tech fans always felt that their school was a stepping stone for coaches to other "more prominent" surroundings. Stone used to joke about the Lubbock weather, often pulling a tooth brush from his pocket to show he was equiped for the Lubbock dust and sand.

THERE ARE those who say that Tech will never be a year-in and year-out threat in the Southwest Conference because they will never be able to get enough qaulity athletes to attend the United States real "Windy City".

Moore understands those feelings of Tech supporters and is making a big effort to meet as many Tech exes as he can this summer. He was part of a large Texas Tech entourage that visited Midland Tuesday at the Green Tree Country Club for the annual Tech Day Activities. More than 325 Midland Tech exes and supporters turned out for the event.

"I know how the Tech fans feel about football. They are frustrated, but they are willing to do anything for a good program. I think that's positive," Moore stated. "We need tradition at Tech and that's what I'm preaching throughout the state this summer.

"BUT I know the feeling. When I was looking for a house in Lubbock, every realtor tried to stress the resale value of the house. I got the message rather quickly."

But for the most part, Tech fans still don't know Jerry Moore and it may take a while for them to bring him under protective wings.

Still, there seems to be a "coming home" movement being established at Tech. The new president, Dr. Larry Cavazos, is a Tech graduate. Gearld Myers, the basketball coach, is also a Tech graduate. Moore is a Baylor grad, but he is Texas through and through and this is where he wants to be. He comes to Tech from North Texas State.

"For what it's worth, I wanted the Tech job and I think that's a big difference. In fact, I can stay as long as they want me to. I've played tennis and golf in the wind and that's just part of it. There is no reason why Tech can't be a great school on all fronts. If I didn't believe that, I wouldn't be here."

MOORE SEEMS to feel that the big difference from North Texas State and Tech is the SWC. "I loved North Texas, but being in the conference is the big difference. I didn't leave North Texas with any ill feelings. I know they want to be in the conference, but I don't know if that is going to happen. Win Brown of Midland is one of the regents at North Texas and I know about the work he has done for that school. But I just don't know if they will ever make (the SWC) or not. I wish they could."

While Tech skeptics were trying to decide if they like the choice of Moore or not, he was out rounding up his first Tech recruits and putting his charges through their first spring training. It is fair to say that Moore surprised more than a few people with his recruiting haul. He got started late, but most consider his gatherings above average.

"PEOPLE HAVE been kind in the things they have written and said about our recruiting. We think we did well, but you never know until they produce. But I do think some people were expecting a disaster and it sure wasn't that," Moore said.

"We had a great spring training and I think we have a chance to be a good ball team next fall. We are woefully weak in the offensive and defensive lines and we don't have any depth, but we have some kids who can play. We will have to stay away from injuries."

Moore will have four Midlanders on his squad this year. Guard Blake Feldt, tackle Herb Pearce, linebacker Jeff McGowan and newly recruited Jerry Zachery, who Tech wooed away from Texas A&M on the final conference signing date.

"I think Feldt is one of the keys to our team next year. We have switched him to guard from tackle and I think that is going to pay dividends. Blake is close to me because he came to Tech as a walk-on and won a scholarship. I'm sure his family could have sent him to any school he wanted to attend, but he came to Tech as a walk-on and has produced.

"PEARCE IS one of those great effort guys. He is not blessed with a lot of God given ability, but he is fanatical about the effort he gives. He's going to see a lot of playing time.

"Jeff McGowan has some academic problems to work out, but he should be a good player for us. He already has a lot of playing time under his belt and does a good job.

"Jerry Zachery could be a great running back for us. I don't know if he will play for us next year or not, but he could. We have a lot of running backs, but we still need to find someone who can dominate and no one like that has come forward yet. I know Jerry didn't have a lot of playing time last year with the injury he had, but I don't think it was a chance to take him. He's going to be a good player."

MOORE'S NAME may have been mentioned more last fall in the gossip columns than for his work on the field when Iowa's Haden Fry accused Moore of feeding Nebraska information about Fry's offense. Iowa was murdered by Nebraska and Fry accused Moore, his former assistant at SMU, for delivering key information to the Huskers.

"As far as that is concerned, it's all dead and buried. I don't consider Haden a friend of mine any longer and the whole thing is forgotten. Haden told the press that he tried to call me, but he didn't."

So Moore enters the 1981 season with many fans having that "wait and see" attitude. But Moore is going to the grass roots for exposure first. The hard-core will know him first and the followers will come around if the victories do. But that's not much different than at any school.

Charlies say no to Cleveland game

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — The Charleston Charlies stand to lose between $20,000 and $40,000 because the players voted not to play a regularly scheduled baseball game Thursday at Municipal Stadium in Cleveland, Charlies' owner Bob Levine says.

The Charlies, the Indians' top minor league affiliate, were to have played the Tidewater Tides, the Class AAA farm club of the New York Mets, in the International League game. Proceeds would have gone to go to the Charlies, who have lost 11 games to rainouts so far this season.

However, the Charlies' players voted by secret ballot prior to Monday night's game against Pawtucket not to play in Cleveland.

The game will now be played at Watt Powell Park here and will be telecast nationally by the USA cable TV network.

The players' decision caught Levine off-guard.

"I think it was ill-advised, short-sighted and wrong and I don't like it one damn bit," the owner said.

"The offer was made by (Indians' president) Gabe Paul to play a regularly scheduled game in Cleveland with all income to benefit Charleston. I thought it was an extremely fair and thoughtful offer. This was just an attempt by our ballclub to recoup some severe financial losses because of rainouts and I'm bitterly disappointed."

Levine said the game was not scheduled by the Indians' organization in an attempt to defy the major league players, who were in the 12th day of their strike against club owners Tuesday.

"If I thought this was an attempt to break the strike, we would not have gone to Cleveland," said Levine, who has owned the Charlies since 1971, the year they joined the International League. "When the offer was made, I talked to my attorney about whether playing in Cleveland could produce picket action by the major league players and if it did, would it have been an illegal picket. He said it would have been an illegal picket."

Charlies' general manager Carl Steinfeldt also was upset by the players' action.

"I think that this is a very selfish thing on the part of the players," said Steinfeldt. "I don't know how many more bad things can happen this year."

City board vetoes NFL Monday game

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — The National Football League and network television may call the shots in the big city, but not in this small, rural town, the home of the New England Patriots.

The three-member Board of Selectmen jolted pro football powers Tuesday night, voting unanimously against a Monday night game as scheduled at Schaefer Stadium this fall.

The selectmen routinely approved licensing of seven Sunday afternoon games. However, they balked at okaying the Patriots-Dallas Cowboys game Sept. 21 unless the start is moved up at least one hour from the customary 9 p.m. kickoff.

"THERE'S NO way the league and ABC will allow the game to be played starting at 8 p.m.," said Patrick Sullivan, the Patriots' assistant general manager who had been openly optimistic before the town meeting.

"I'm somewhat at a loss," Sullivan said "Where does this leave us? I don't know what we're going to do.

"We never remotely considered this would happen. We're just shocked."

The selectmen heard Timothy Sullivan, head of its stadium advisory committee, salute the Patriots as "good neighbors."

Howver, citing Monday night violence in past years, Sullivan and his committee sharply opposed the scheduled 9 p.m. start. Sullivan is no relation to Patrick Sullivan.

After hearing other pro and con arguments, the selectmen voted 3-0 to withhold approval unless an earlier starting time is set.

"THE PATRIOTS have been very beneficial to the town of Foxboro," said Selectman Peter Stanton. "That is not the issue. The real issue is violence. Our opposition to night games has been very well known. However, we have no control over the schdeule. The league should have known of our opposition.

Pat Sullivan said the Patriots have "looked into the possibility of an earlier start, but the league, ABC and our football partners ruled out totally any possibility of it."

He added the Patriots do have other options, such as possibilities of reschduling the game for Sunday afternoon Oct. 20, taking court action and even moving the game to another site, such as the Meadowlands in New Jersey.

Positive, upbeat image for Cubs?

Los Angeles Times

News Item: "The Chicago Tribune newspaper company buys the Chicago Cubs baseball team."

We take you now in imagination to the city room of a great newspaper where the editor and publisher, Col. Bull McMoose, has just called in his sports editor, Decimal O'Donnell. The leader speaks:

McMoose: "Des, about this headline, 'Cubs Blow It Again.' Do you suppose there's another way to look at it?"

DECIMAL: "Well, we could say 'Cubs Blow 14th In A Row' because that's what they've done."

McMoose: "No, no. I was thinking of something more upbeat. A 'Cubs Rally Falls Short' sort of thing."

Decimal: "'Rally?!' 'Fall Short?!' They fell 12 runs short! They scored one run! 'Course, I suppose in their case one run does constitute a rally. Still, a one-run rally in a 13-1 defeat is hardly the big angle on the story. I could point out that one run is the most they've scored in five games and that it matches their highest total this season?"

McMoose: "I'm not getting through to you. I was thinking of the more positive news side. Like, the news that the poor fellas are trying."

Decimal: "Well, that would be news to a lot of people, alright. Like the manager. And the pitcher. The fans. In fact, it would be news to the Cubs. They have now lost their last three games 19-0, 10-0, and 13-1."

MCMOOSE: "That's another thing, Des. Do we have to give the score? I mean, what was it the poet said, 'It's not whether you won or lost, but how you played the game?' There's too much emphasis on winning in this country."

Decimal: "Not by the Cubs. Anyway, boss, I get into how they played the game in the second paragraph."

McMoose (reading): "'The outfield played so badly, they had to stop the game three times to wipe up the blood. The left fielder set a record when he dropped two balls in a row which dropped in the exact divot marks where Dave Kingman used to drop his fly balls, proving conclusively management's contention that Kingman's presence would not be missed.'" Des, who says it was an error, anyway? Some damned effete Easterner? Where would they be without us, the heartland, hog butcher to the world?"

DECIMAL: "Well, the last time I saw Dick Young he wasn't wearing a monocle. Where they'd be without us is below .500. And they called it an error because the ball hit him in A) the glove; B) eye; C) helmet; D) shoulder; E) and F) the shoelaces. For my money he committed four errors on the same ball. Five. Because then, he threw it in the seats."

McMoose: "Technicalities! Nitpicking! Picky, picky, picky! Des, why does a baseball game have to be covered as if it was life-and-death anyway? Why can't it be covered as an art form? I mean, did Claudia Cassidy have to say who won 'Rigoletto?' Do we have to say who's leading Beethovan's Fifth? Does anybody come in late to Hamlet and say 'Who's ahead?'"

DECIMAL: "Well, a critic once wrote "Tallulah Bankhead played Shakespeare last night. Shakespeare lost.' So, I guess we could say, "The New York Mets played the Cubs last night. The Cubs lost.' Is that what you had in mind?"

McMoose: "No, no. What I was thinking about is the more constructive approach. You know, where the critic says 'The overall production was quite good, but the second act needs re-working' or 'The book was amusing, but the score was disappointing.'"

Decimal: "Well, that's the Cubs, alright. That's for sure. Downright funny, if you want to know the truth. And the score is sure as hell disappointing. In fact, it's horrifying. I suppose I could be a critic and say 'Loved him, hated them.' But, boss, this isn't a high school performance of Pinafore. These are big league ball players. And this is the most inept collection of characters ever to play this game. After all we're supposed to give the news. If you want to get some Grantland Pollyanna to cover the Cubs, you'll ruin the paper and its credibility. What are you trying to do, anyway, give the readers diabetes?"

MCMOOSE: "Des, brace yourself. We've bought the Cubs. You heard me. The old man bought the Cubs. We own the damn things."

Decimal (floored): "You're joking! The Cubs?! My God! What did they have against Chrysler? Confederate war bonds? What are they going to do next? Let me guess — The New Orleans Saints, right? The Titanic?"

McMoose: "Well, you got it. Now, ask yourself if we bought Chrysler would we go around printing every accident they had on Page One? Keep a boxscore on every wheel that came off? Print the recalls every Sunday? Tell how much better the imports were performing? Des, we're sliding into the mainstream of good old American business know how. You know what the auto companies do — they show handsomely decorated beautiful ladies in full evening gowns, shapes like Cheryl Tiegs', getting into plush interiors and velvet steering wheels of gold plated cars. Or, they show guys who have just bought their models having to fight beautiful ladies off. They showcase the product. They sex it up. It's not till after you buy it that you find out the lights don't work."

DECIMAL: "Well, the Cubbies have success with the ladies, alright, as any barkeep on Rush Street can tell you. But, boss, isn't all this a clear conflict of interest?"

McMoose: "Piffle, my dear boy! Why, my grandfather sold guns to the Indians. Gatling guns. That's just good sound business! Now, I want to organize a campaign to get behind our investment — err, ahh, I mean, behind the Cubs. I was thinking of a column called something like 'Cubs-O-Mania.' That type of thing."

Decimal: "Boss, I got a better idea. Why don't we call it 'Chicagogate?' or 'Cubs-up?' Something snappy.

Pawtucket Red Sox first baseman Dave Koza watches the ball go down the left field line for a single and the end to the longest game in baseball history. The Sox were playing the Rochester Red Wings on April 18 when the game was finally called after 32 innings and 8-hours and 7-minues of play. The game continued Thursday and ended after one inning of play.

Longest game finally ends

PAWTUCKET, R.I. (AP) — It's over.

It ended when Dave Koza reached for an outside curve and sent it on its historic course into short left field.

HIS CLEAN single with no outs and the bases loaded off Cliff Speck in the bottom of the 33rd inning Tuesday night gave the Pawtucket Red Sox a 3-2 International League victory over the Rochester Red Wings.

The decisive blow was struck just 18 minutes after the resumption of the game, which began at 8 p.m. on April 18 and was suspended at 4:07 a.m. the next day after 32 innings. The total elapsed time was eight hours, 25 minutes.

KOZA'S FIVE hits were more than anyone else had. Of the eight Pawtucket players who went all the way, he was the only one to raise his batting average, climbing from .253 to .259.

The 26-year-old first baseman, who has never been in the majors and is in his third full season with Pawtucket, also was responsible for keeping the game alive. Behind 2-1, he doubled in the bottom of the 21st and scored on Wade Boggs' double.

THE RED SOX' best pitcher, left-hander Bob Ojeda, gave up a single in the top of the 33rd to Cal Ripken, who was stranded at first base.

Steve Grilli, who was with Syracuse of the International League when the game began, hit Marty Barrett with the first pitch of the bottom of the 33rd.

On a hit-and-run, Chico Walker singled to center and Barrett streaked to third. Russ Laribee, whose ninth inning sacrifice fly had tied the game 1-1, drew an intentional walk and Speck replaced Grilli.

Ojeda, 9-5, was the winner. Grilli, 0-3, took the loss.

Barrett wondered whether his shoes, which touched home plate with the winning run, would go to the Baseball Hall of Fame, then said he "froze" when Koza hit the ball "because I didn't know how close the outfielders were playing."

Then, he said, Smith "gave up on the ball and I just trotted in. I felt good. It was a great feeling, one of the best feelings I had."

ROCHESTER MANAGER Doc Edwards didn't decide to open with Grilli until 20 minutes before the game. Jim Umbarger had thrown shutout ball for the previous 10 innings but pitched Sunday. Edwards felt that with 11 years of professional experience, Grilli would be able to handle the pressure.

The previous longest game was on June 14, 1966 when the Miami Marlins beat the St. Petersburg Cards 4-3 in a 29-inning, six-hour and 59-minute Florida State League contest.

The longest major league game was a 1-1 tie between the Brooklyn Dodgers and the Boston Braves on May 1, 1920.

BESIDES BEING the longest game in innings and time, several other pro baseball records were set in the 33-inning contest.

They included:

—At-bats by both teams, 219; by one tewm, Pawtucket, 114.

—Strikeouts against both teams, 60; against one team, Rochester 34.

—Assists by both teams, 82.

—Putouts by both teams, 195; by one team, Pawtucket, 99.

—At-bats by one player, Koza, Walker and Lee Graham, all of Pawtucket, 14.

BOWLING BEAT

Robertson dedicated series to grandfather

By Randy Isenberg

Duane Robertson was the pacesetter this past week, with a 921 four-game series, while bowling in the Dellwood Scratch Trio League on June 7. Robertson rolled his second 700-900 series in as many weeks on games of 235-259-215-212. His first three registered a meteoric 709. The significant factor is not so much Robertson's scores, but his purpose in rolling this fine set.

On Thursday, June 4, his grandfather, Homer C. Robertson of San Angelo, passed away at the age of 76. It was Duane's grandfather who started the talented Tall City kegler in the sport of ten pins when Duane was only old enough to roll the ball with two hands.

Before bowling on June 7, Duane told his teammates that he was dedicating his bowling that night to the memory of this grandfather.

Duane's grandfather bowled until his health failed a couple of years ago. At that time he was bowling in Senior Citizen Leagues. His grandmother is still an avid bowler in the league that she and Homer used to bowl in.

I think all who read this column should note that in today's world there are still those who give "meaning and purpose to human life," and to the memory of those close to use. Hats off to Duane for keeping this memory alive.

Karen Jordan was the pacesetter among the women as of June 10. While bowling in the Air Park Wednesday afternoon Ladies Scratch League, she rolled games of 256-207-204 for a 667 series. Karen was the Scratch All-Events champion in this year's Midland Women's Bowling Association Tournament.

At the Texas Youth Bowling Association Regional Tournament recently completed in El Paso, 12-year-old Bobby Gutierrez teamed with Sylvia Logue of Ft. Bliss to advance to the state finals. Bobby will be competing against other finalists from all over Texas in an effort to win the State Combination B doubles title with his partner.

Bobby, whose regular scheduled partner had to cancel at the last minute, averaged 107 this year bowling in the Air Park Saturday juniors and seniors league. His scratch totals in El Paso were 144-198-140 for a 484 series. That is 163 pins over his average. Bobby is the son of Armando Gutierez and Dena Gutierrez.

Upcoming Events

On every weekend in July, Air Park Lames will be conducting a Mixed Team Tournament.

June 27, Saturday, at 11 a.m. Air Park Lanes will be conducting a Scratch Doubles Doubles Elimination Tournament.

July 4, 11 a.m. Air Park Lanes will be conducting a Scratch Doubles Double Elimination Tournament.Association News

AP Laserphoto

Wayne B. Williams is shown during a hearing Tuesday before a state court magistrate in Atlanta. Magistrate Albert Thompson ordered Williams held for the grand jury on a charge of murder in the death of the most recent victim in a string of 28 slayings of young blacks.

ATLANTA (AP) — A grand jury will be asked within the next month to return a murder indictment against Wayne B. Williams, the free-lance photographer charged in the latest of a string of slayings of young blacks, officials say.

District Attorney Lewis Slaton said Tuesday he will ask the Fulton County grand jury to indict Williams in the strangulation death of Nathaniel Cater, 27, whose body was found in the Chattahoochee River last month.

Slaton's comments came after Magistrate Albert Thompson ruled that authorities had probable cause Sunday to arrest the 23-year-old Williams in connection with Cater's death. Thompson ordered him held for grand jury action.

Under Georgia law, a grand jury must return an indictment against a person charged with murder before the accused can go on trial.

At the state court hearing, prosecutors called three witnesses who outlined a case involving fiber evidence and a pre-dawn encounter between Williams and police on a Chattahoochee River bridge.

After the hearing, however, Mary Welcome, Williams' lawyer, characterized the state's case as "very, very weak." Another defense attorney, Tony Axam, said the state was depending on "speculation, conjecture and surmise in the newspapers."

Meanwhile, in Hampton, Va., an FBI agent who worked with Atlanta police on the case said the hairs and fibers linking Williams to Cater's slaying also were also found on the bodies of several of the 27 other victims in the string of deaths.

"He (Williams) looks pretty good for a good percentage of the killings," FBI Special Agent Supervisor John Douglas told Southern correctional officials at a conference.

The Atlanta Constitution reported today that Williams and his father went to the Fulton County Airport over the weekend. The newspaper quoted an unnamed official as saying one or both of them had talked about obtaining a plane to fly to South America.

In another development Tuesday, U.S. District Judge Orinda Evans rejected Williams' request for court orders against the news media and police officials that would have limited news coverage of the Williams investigation. She ruled Williams' arrest had invalidated many of his arguments that his privacy was being invaded.

Tuesday's hearing in the packed, heavily guarded courtroom here was the first court appearance for Williams. He did not testify.

Peterson said he found "no significant microscopic differences" between two or three green fibers found in Cater's hair and fibers found in a green carpet in Williams' bedroom.

He also said microscopic similarities were found between violet-colored fibers taken from Cater's body and fibers taken from a violet-and-green bedspread in Williams' bedroom.

Peterson also said dog hairs plucked from Williams' German shepherd were "consistent microscopically" with three or four dog hairs found on Cater's body, and "two or three fibers" police vacuumed from Williams' white station wagon matched fibers found on Cater.

The early-morning encounter May 22 between Williams and police at the Chattahoochee River was the first time Williams came to police attention. Williams was stopped near the bridge by a team of officers who were on a stakeout ordered after five of the 28 victims were found in the river.

Two days after the encounter, Cater's body was found in the river about a mile downstream.

College students admit to breaking sex law

MILWAUKEE (AP) — The law's on the books. And the "criminals" turned themselves in. But the district attorney isn't sure what to do with them.

As part of a protest against Wisconsin's fornication law, about 20 Lawrence University students gave their names to police, admitting they had violated the statute.

"I thought the law was ludicrous," said Bernard Haen, the 22-year-old leader of the student protest. "The state has no way of enforcing it."

The statements, signed by the students June 6, were turned over to the Outagamie County district attorney, who has been pondering how to handle the lawbreakers. Lawrence University is located in Appleton, about 80 miles north of here.

"The problem is, there's no established policy," explained Michael Gage, the district attorney. "I don't think there's a district attorney's office in the state with a policy on prosecuting fornication cases."

The law, which is similar to statutes in many other states, says anyone having sexual intercourse with a person other than his or her spouse is guilty of a Class A misdemeanor. It carries a maximum penalty of nine months in jail, or a $10,000 fine, or both.

A move to liberalize the statute, which legislative observers say has been on the books for "decades," met its third defeat in three years in the Wisconsin Assembly April 28. A bill to legalize sexual activity between consenting adults lost by one vote, 50-49.

The bill was sponsored at the request of a variety of church and civic groups and law enforcement officials.

"What difference is it to the government what people do in their own homes under conditions of consent?" said state Rep. David Clarenbach, one of the bill's chief supporters.

He said a survey showed more than two-thirds of Wisconsin's district attorneys favor repealing the law.

But opponents argued that passage of the bill legalizing sexual activity would lead to deterioration of social mores.

The student protest stemmed from a letter Haen wrote to the school newspaper suggesting students turn themselves in to the Appleton police department.

Haen, from Sturgeon Bay, Wis., believes "many of the people enforcing the law would have broken the same law. I think it also violates my freedom of expression and privacy."

Another protester, Susy Schultz, 22, of Oak Park, Ill., said "I'd be willing to go to jail for this.

"I called my parents after the protest and told them what was going on. My mom said I could get in trouble, but she agreed on principle."

The students have taken no further action since June 6, and neither has Gage.

"To prosecute, I have to file a complaint," he said. "I have to say when a person violated the statute, where, with whom. I just don't have enough information. All these people signed was their names, addresses and birthdates," he said.

"I'm not indifferent to charging them. The question is, should I place the burden of proof on the police department or should I just write to the protesters and ask them to give the information to the police department," Gage said.

In theory, he said he can keep the case for three years without acting on it. He refused to say whether he would take the full three years to act.

Sister, brother both killed in automobile accidents

SANDWICH, Ill. (AP) — Only last week, two years after her daughter died in an automobile accident, Carol Loux finally summoned the courage to clean out her child's room, carefully packing away the clothes and knicknacks acquired during Cathy's 17 years of life.

Mrs. Loux painted the room, and, without the family discussing the matter, her 16-year-old son, Doug, moved his things from a room he shared with his older brother.

On Sunday, the family's newly healed wounds of grief were ripped open again with a telephone call from police that began, "Do you have a child named ...?"

The call was about Doug, one of three people killed in a car-van collision just 10 miles away from where his sister was killed.

He was buried Tuesday in a grave next to Cathy's.

As she stood in the receiving line at Doug's wake Monday night, Mrs. Loux wore a blank expression, recalling the pain of finally accepting Cathy's death.

"It seems I just did this ... so recently ... not long ago," she said. She frequently looked at Doug's picture atop the closed casket.

Her husband, Don, also gazed at the picture, and he said: "It's the quiet that's the worst, the house with all those memories, all that silence."

Next to Doug's picture was a small white satin pillow with a single rosebud on top and this note:

"There is an empty place in my heart and life. It cannot be filled for it was for you. I never got the chance to tell you — but I love you and always will."

Doug's best friend and a fellow member of the wrestling team, Rick Keenan, was among the 500 mourners at the wake.

"I helped dig Doug's grave," Keenan said. "My job is to mow lawns at the cemetery, but I was mowing with Andy Stratton, who was Doug's sister's boyfriend, and he mentioned that maybe we should go over and help dig the grave."

Mississippi runoff labeled conservative-liberal battle

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Liles Williams, who campaigned for Congress on a vow to fight for Ronald Reagan's programs, says his July 7 runoff with Democrat Wayne Dowdy will be a conservative-liberal battle.

"I represent the basic conservative philosophies of the Reagan administration, and I think Mr. Dowdy basically represents the liberal philosophies supported by Speaker (Thomas P.) O'Neill," Williams said after outdistancing seven other candidates in Tuesday's balloting.

Williams, whose heavily financed campaign included strong Republican party support and the personal endorsement of the president, failed to muster the majority vote needed to avoid the runoff in the state's open-election process.

The July 7 winner will serve the 14 months remaining in the term of former Rep. Jon Hinson, a Republican, who resigned in mid-April following his arrest in a Washington men's room on an attempted sodomy charge.

Williams, 45, vice president of the electrical firm where he once worked as a warehouse hand, carried seven of the 12 counties in the district and finished strongly in the remaining five counties.

Dowdy, a lawyer, businessman and first-term mayor, was strongest in his home area of southwest Mississippi. He finished a surprising second in populous Hinds County even though two other Democrats in the eight-candidate race were from the county.

"I will ask the support of everybody," Dowdy said after earning the runoff spot. "The campaign has started all over again."

Dowdy, 38, held the endorsement of the state AFL-CIO and shared the backing of the state's largest teacher organization with another Democratic candiate, Jackson lawyer Britt Singletary. He had actively

With all 328 precincts reported in final unofficial returns, Williams had 39,557 votes, or 45 percent of the total, while Dowdy had 22,170 votes for 25 percent.

Singletary, the Democratic nominee last year in a losing effort to Hinson, had 12,535 votes, or 14 percent, while state Sen. Ed Ellington of Jackson was fourth with 11,886 votes, or 14 percent.

Of the other candidates, solar energy advocate Michael Herring, a Democrat from Jackson, had 647 votes; former Ku Klux Klan member Robert Weems of Richland, running as a Republican, had 548; E.L. McDaniel, a former Klansman from Natchez running as an independent, 438 votes, and Vicksburg motel manager Sarah A. Smith, a Republican, had 240 votes.

Budget-cutting battle continues

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democratic leaders, fighting to keep their budget-cutting package intact, are trying to maneuver the House parliamentary machinery to force congressmen into the politically distasteful position of voting on individual reductions in federal programs.

In the Senate, meanwhile, the Republican majority has been sustaining cuts in Social Security benefits, foster care and adoption aid, while turning aside attempts by outnumbered Democrats to soften a package of $39.6 billion in 1982 budget cuts embraced by President Reagan.

The Senate was continuing action on the package today, pushing toward completing consideration this week.

At the same time, the House Rules Committee was continuing deliberations on the procedures for consideration of a $37.8 billion budget-cutting package crafted by Democratic-controlled committees.

The Rules Committee decides which amendments can be considered on the floor and how they are to be considered.

House Democratic leader Jim Wright told the committee Tuesday that Republicans should be given a chance to offer their amendments to the budget bill put together by the 15 House committees earlier this month.

But he said the amendments should not be offered as a package — as Reagan wants. He said the House instead should be given a separate vote on each provision.

"I think the American people are entitled to know what we're voting on," Wright said. "I think we have the right to know what we're voting on and the right to vote it up or down."

That would put House members in the politically distasteful position of having to vote on such cuts as Social Security, Medicare, Medicaid and subsidized housing, which are included in a budget alternative offered by Reagan.

Reagan and his House allies say the package of cuts supported by House Democratic leaders is billions of dollars short of the permanent changes needed to attain a balanced budget in 1984.

To satisfy Reagan, the House package would need $5.2 billion in revisions for 1982 — and almost $20 billion over three years.

But Rep. Richard Bolling, D-Mo., the Rules Committee chairman, said Tuesday that Reagan's proposal to change the work of the House committees was "the most excessive use of presidential power to ram through changes since the excesses of President Johnson in his attempt to ram through the Great Society programs."

Bolling said Wright's suggestion would mean the administration's recommended changes "would have to stand on their own two feet."

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. called the administration's plans "a clear-cut attack on congressional prerogatives."

He said the president is "asking the Congress to sabotage fundamental programs that help the American taxpayer," adding that the American people "did not elect any president to dictate the destruction of those basic programs that have made this country great."

Reagan, meanwhile, is stepping up pressure for his budget cuts.

Reagan used a Tuesday breakfast meeting to try to persuade House Democrats who helped him win an initial budget victory last month to side with him again. And there was a Tuesday evening White House reception for House Republicans. The president also plans a series of speeches to press his case.

In the Senate, the solid Republican majority was expected to defeat attempts to significantly alter the budget package, which Senate Budget Committee Chairman Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., called the "first, critical installment of the president's economic plan."

In action Tuesday, the Senate overrode Democratic objections and agreed, in effect, by 53-45 to eliminate the $122-a-month minimum Social Security benefit. Sen. Donald W. Riegle Jr., D-Mich., had offered an amendment to retain the benefit.

Riegle said 500,000 persons over age 80 would be affected by the cut, which he called "just the first step toward a serious effort to dismantle the Social Security system."

However, Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., said the issue was not the benefit itself but the solvency of the Social Security system, which "we must preserve and protect" for all Americans.

In other action, the Senate defeated 52-46 an amendment by Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., to maintain foster care and adoption aid as independent federal programs, instead of folding them into block grants to the states. That would have cost about $80 million.

Senate Democrats seek 'all-savers' incentives

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Democrats are asking President Reagan to intervene in a dismal housing picture and come to the aid of floundering savings and loans institutions.

"The withdrawal of depository reserves in the nation's thrift institutions amounted to $28 billion in 1980 and have continued at the same pace through the first quarter of 1981," a caucus resolution said Tuesday. "This constitutes the greatest reduction of monetary reserves in the history of this country."

Sen. Lloyd Bensten of Texas told a news conference that i interest rates could be cut in half from 16 percent, Americans could pay $335 a month less on their house payment.

"With mortgage rates at 16 percent, only 5 percent of the people in this country seeking to buy their first home can afford the cost," he said.

The average home in America today costs $69,000, Bentsen said. On a 30-year mortgage, virtually the entire first year of the payment is interest, he estimated.

"The dream of owning your own home is basic in this country, but it is gone, evaporated for all but a handful of those who seek it. I wish to bring it back, and to do that we need a savings incentive that is targeted at lowering home mortgage rates," Bentsen added.

Bentsen is the second-ranking Democrat on the Senate Finance Committee, which adopted an "all-savers" incentive Monday as part of the tax cut it is considering.

The proposal would allow financial institutions to sell $1,000 savings certificates to individuals and $4,000 certificates to married couples for a one-year period ending Sept. 30, 1982. Interest earned on the certificates would be tax-free.

Bentsen said more help is needed for the savings and loan industry, which had a net loss of $28 billion in deposits last year.

"The fact is that only 40 percent of the new deposits generated by these new certificates will go to home mortgages," he said. "These incentives should be targeted better than that, to help young Americans who can't afford the cost to buy their own homes."

The Senate Democrats' resolution urged the administration to:

—Increase the national pool of funds available for savings and investment through the use of appropriate tax exemptions on interest.

Detroit voters increase taxes; City still needs financial help

DETROIT (AP) — Detroit voters have decided they're willing to pay higher taxes to fill the city's dwindling coffers, but Mayor Coleman Young admits he still has a long way to go to save the city from its worst financial crisis since the Depression.

With 99 percent of 1,222 precincts reporting, election officials said today about 64 percent of the Detroit voters casting ballots agreed in a special election to triple the city income tax paid by suburbanites who work in Detroit and raise city residents' taxes by 50 percent.

The plan won by a 159,140-to-90,381 margin, officials said.

espite the victory, Young said the city has "two major steps to take" before it escapes the threat of bankruptcy.

Under conditions set by the state Legislature, Detroit must win concessions from its employees and persuade lenders to purchase special bonds that will erase a deficit $119.6 million deficit for the fiscal year ending June 30.

If either the unions or lenders refuse to go along with the plan, the income tax increase approved Tuesday would not be implemented, leaving the city in the financial bind that led to its current deficit.

If the three-point plan is completed by Aug. 15, the state's Administrative Board will allow the income tax increase to take effect retroactive to July 1. Under the proposal, income taxes for suburbanites who work in Detroit would rise from 0.5 percent to 1.5 percent, while city residents' taxes would jump from 2 percent to 3 percent.

Gov. William Milliken said the vote was both "good news for Detroit and good news for Michigan."

Had Detroit failed to raise its taxes enough to pay its creditors, investors would have become leery of lending money to Detroit, other Michigan cities and the state, said state House Speaker Bobby Crim.

However, opponents of the tax increase predicted nothing will change, despite the overwhelming vote for the proposal.

Not everyone fleeing Love Canal

By JOHN C. GIVEN
Associated Press Writer

NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y. (AP) — Some diehard Love Canal residents, determined not to leave their homes near the former toxic-waste dump, get new neighbors soon — a state official and his family.

"It is important for people promoting a project to have faith in their product and be a part of it," explained Richard Morris, executive director of the Love Canal Revitalization Agency, whose family of four will become part of the neighborhood June 30.

"I'm not moving into what I would say is a clear and present danger," Morris added.

Located several hundred yards north of the filled-in canal that served as a dump for the Hooker Chemical Co. in the early 1950s, Morris' prospective house is within the health emergency area designated by President Carter last year. It is one of about 500 such homes the federal government has offered to buy so the owners can move elsewhere.

Morris, a state Transportation Department real-estate specialist, oversees the sales as part of his assignment to revitalize the area.

Many of the more than 200 remaining property owners are awaiting the results of geographical testing done by the federal Environmental Protection Agency last year. A state Health Department study earlier this month determined that cancer rates in the Love Canal area were not higher than cancer rates in the rest of the Niagara Falls area.

The EPA report could come next month. Morris and his wife said informal tests already have convinced them the house is safe for them and their teen-age daughters.

"We told him he was crazy. We wouldn't do it," said Eileen Matsulavage, who moved out of the dwelling with her husband and daughter in December 1978 "because the state had tested the house and found it to be contaminated. We had papers to show it. And we had an independent test showing that the levels were actually nine times higher."

Among the toxins found were benzene, toluene and trichloroethylene, she said in a telephone interview from her new Westport, Conn., home.

Mrs. Matsulavage said the family suffered medical ailments, including rectal bleeding, respiratory and vision problems and frequent nausea. Moving after doctors "told us to get the heck out of there," their medical problems hince cleared up, Mrs. Matsulavage added.

Morris noted about 50 Love Canal homeowners have decided not to move. Appraised values of the dwellings range from $7,000 to $90,000, with many of the holdouts in the more expensivenorthern S-Ttor, he said.

Some, like retiree Gordon Stewart, say they cannot find equivalent homes elsewhere with the money they've been offered. Besides, Stewart observed, his neighborhood is several blocks away from the canal.

"I wasn't worried about (the contamination). We didn't see that much evidence of sickness. But there were doubts, quite a few cases of cancer — even in my own home," he said, referring to his wife's death from the disease.

"But of these things, who knows? Even doctors can't tell.

"It's not the easiest thing to move," Stewart added, explaining he has lived in his home for 19 years. Still, he said, the EPA test results could make a difference in his final decision.

In a neat single-level home two doors away, Barbara Barone was outspoken in her determination to stay.

"We've lived here 21 years, and we have nothing to fear," she said, adding that her health and that of her husband and two grown children is "fine."

"For 21 years, we have had a garden with fabulous vegetables, apples, strawberries, grapes. We've never lost shrubs, trees — anything," she said.

MENTAL HEALTH UPDATE

Relaxation therapy used to alleviate chronic tension, anxiety

By Kenneth H. Wolf
MSSW, SP

Question: Please explain what is meant by "relaxation therapy." My sister is being treated using this method, and I am curious as to what it is and how successful it is supposed to be.

Answer: Relaxation therapy refers to the group of techniques which are being used to alleviate chronic tension and anxiety. There are a variety of different relaxation techniques. Generally, the subject is first trained in deep muscle relaxation. This involves either sitting or reclining in a comfortable position. The subject is then instructed to concentrate on breathing deeply and exhaling fully. He may be told to imagine that his breath is traveling completely to his feet and returning, or he may be told to simply count his breaths. The trainer observes the breathing and is in a position to coach the subject to make the breathing deep and rhythmic.

The next step in the process is to begin to call the subject's attention to the different muscle groups in the body. This usually begins with the feet and toes. The subject is instructed to tense each group of muscles until the trainer tells him to relax the tension. Each large muscle group is taken in turn: toes, feet, calves, thighs, lower back, upper back, etc. The trainer systematically moves the subject's concentration to the different muscle groups, always continuing to moniter the subject's breathing. Once a group of muscles has been worked with, the subject is encouraged to keep that part of his body as immobile as possible during the rest of the relaxation process. At the end of this stage of the relaxation process, the subject is usually deeply relaxed and displays rhythmic, deep breathing. Subjects have reported a sense of heaviness and peacefulness.

At this point, other techniques may be brought into play to either deepen the relaxation or to introduce into the subjects' consciousness events which the subject has previously identified as producing mild anxiety or tension.

Relaxation may be deepened by encouraging the subject to imagine a peaceful scene, such as a cabin by the lake or a sunset. The trainer describes this scene in detail, attempting to encourage the subject to use as many of the five senses (sight, sound, touch, taste, and smell) as possible in the imagination process. This technique will generally greatly increase the subject's relaxation, and the subject may indeed enter a light, hypnotic state. This technique may be practiced on a daily basis by the subject in the privacy of his own home. As such, the subject will always have it available for when he needs it.

During the deeply relaxed state, the trainer may encourage the subject to imagine different anxiety-provoking events, which the subject has previously identified. Beginning with very mildly anxious events, the subject pictures the event while in the relaxed state. He is instructed to give the trainer a signal, such as lifting a finger, when he begins to feel anxious. At that point, the trainer re-focuses the subject on the peaceful scene or on th subject's breathing until the anxiety subsides. In this fashion, the trainer proceeds to more stressful events, always being alert to the subject's signal of anxiety.

Relaxation therapy is a helpful tool in the treatment of anxiety, tension, and stress reactions. It's strongest asset seems to be that of giving the subject some sense of control over his symptoms. It certainly should not be considered a cure-all; but when used together with other approaches such as counseling or psychotherapy, it offers considerable relief to those experiencing significant stress in their lives.

'Disappeared' former publisher recalls memories of prison

By MONTE HAYES
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Unlike thousands of other Argentines seized by the military in the last five years, Jacobo Timerman, former publisher of a leading Argentine newspaper, lived to tell the tale.

Timerman's newspaper, La Opinion, had been reporting on the growing number of "disappeared" persons and urging the military regime to use legal methods to combat terrorism.

On April 15, 1977, they came for Timerman.

In his recently published book, "Prisoner Without a Name, Cell Without a Number," Timerman describes the scene:

"At dawn ... some 20 armed men in civilian clothes invade our apartment in midtown Buenos Aires. They say they are obeying orders from the Tenth Infantry Brigade of the First Army Corps .. . They blindfold me, throw me to the floor in the back of the car, cover me with the blanket, stick their feet on top of me and jam what feels like the butt of a gun against me. No one speaks."

In an interview here, the 58-year-old journalist, now a citizen of Israel, talked of torture, anti-Semitism and the rise of savagery and barbarism in Argentina, a nation still regarded by many as the most culturally advanced in Latin America.

"When a country is attacked by paranoia, there are no rational answers," he said, speaking in heavily accented, but precise English. "A man is arrested: he has a notebook with names in it. Maybe some are just acquaintances. But they are arrested. Some are killed — maybe by mistake, maybe by bored guards.

"There were 600 leftist guerrillas active in Argentina when the military took over in 1976. They killed more than 20,000 people. When they began to kill, they killed and killed and killed."

Amnesty International puts the number of disappeared at about 15,000.

For six weeks the military government would not admit it was holding Timerman. Although no official charges were ever presented against him, he was held for 2½ years — first in clandestine jails, then public prisons and finally under house arrest.

Under intense international pressure, the moderate arm of the Argentine armed forces finally decided to expel him from the country, but only after stripping him of his citizenship and confiscating all his property. On Sept. 25, 1979, the armed-forces moderates whisked him to the airport, accompanied by an escort helicopter to ward off a feared attack by rightwing military men opposed to his release.

His open admission that he was a Zionist may have saved his life, Timerman says, because his interrogators thought they had a key figure in "the world Jewish conspiracy" and wanted to save him for a show trial.

Timerman says his interrogators and a military tribunal before which he appeared were obsessed by an irrational fear of Zionism. They accused him of being involved in a Zionist plot to take over the southern Argentine region known as Patagonia and turn it into the Republic of Andinia.

He emphasizes that most of those killed in Argentina were not Jews, but says he cannot forget the hatred shown him for being a Jew. He says he will never return to Argentina to live even if the military regime is replaced by a democracy.

"The memories are so painful. I wasn't treated as a political prisoner. I was treated as a Jew."

And he harbors great bitterness for the leaders of Argentina's 400,000-strong Jewish community for their failure to speak out when he and other Jews were arrested.

"The Jewish leaders in Argentina are repeating the experience of Jewish leaders in Germany when Hitler came to power," he says. "They are trying to compromise with their enemies."

Tanks, troops deployed in troubled Yugoslav province

Inside the airport terminal, all foreigners and some Yugoslavs arriving here in the troubled province of Kosovo are directed to a small corner room where police check their papers and carefully log their arrival.

Foreigners are required to produce letters showing they have government permission to enter the province, where multipeopled Yugoslavia is facing its first regional unrest since the death of President Josip Broz Tito on May 4, 1980.

"You can use your camera," says an official assigned to accompany a group of foreign news correspondents allowed into Pristina, "but don't make pictures of people in uniform."

Uniforms, however, are almost everywhere in Pristina. More than two months after riots and violence which left at least nine people dead and more than 250 injured, Pristina is filled with with regular army troops and reservists and heavily armed police from all over Yugoslavia.

"We have prepared for the chance that something could happen, because the enemy tries various methods," says Mustafa Lakici, a member of the governing committee of Kosovo's Communist Party. The "enemy" was not further identified.

A jumbled city of mosques, ancient Balkan buildings with crumbling walls and soaring modern architectural showcases, Pristina appeared calm, orderly and quiet on one recent day's visit.

Women in the Oriental garb of the largely Moslem area pass unnoticed through modern crowds and grizzled workers lounge against two-wheeled carts they themselves pull along Pristina's streets.

Old men in the white, felt skullcaps of Kosovo's ethnic Albanian majority share sidewalks with other men in the military-style caps of its Serbian minority, and with Yugoslav army officers in green fatigues and wearing pistols.

Later, cars disappear from Marshal Tito Street as they do each evening, and young people come out by the thousands for the "corso," the ritualized evening stroll that ends the day in much of southern Yugoslavia.

Albanian student protests over food and living conditions at their university in Pristina are said here to have developed into broader Albanian nationalist demonstrations which brought confrontations with police and finally violence.

Since then, at least 442 people have been expelled from Kosovo's Communist Party on charges of either supporting or not hindering the nationalist unrest.

Almost 200 people have lost their jobs, including the head of the Kosovo party, the official in charge of its security forces and the man in charge of its schools. Officials claim anti-Yugoslav feelings were encouraged in the schools.

About 1,700 people were detained during the violence and 154 are said to be still awaiting trial.

Yugoslav officials contend that 39 different illegal organizations were involved in the unrest, including some with close ties to the Albanian government.

Although public order has been restored, bitterness and disputes still continue.

Nearly three-fourths of Kosovo's 400 journalists failed to show up recently for a meeting to discuss the province's troubles.

A Belgrade newspaper has reported that "hoodlums" attacked worshippers in Pristina's central mosque. The reporting of such an incident was significant because of the expressed concern over relations between Orthodox Christian Serbs and Moslem Albanians.

Unconfirmable reports circulate about nationalist Albanian "outlaws" in the rugged hills of Kosovo and their purported pursuit by security forces.

Federal police have conceded that a May 13 incident, reported as involving only an Albanian fugitive and his family and police, had also involved gunfire from other villagers. Four policemen and two Albanians killed in the incident are not included in official lists of those who died in the nationalist violence.

Travel to Kosovo and inside it remains carefully checked. Travelers reaching Pristina by highway say police blockades and identity checks at the Kosovo border and elsewhere in the countryside exist.

Foreign tourism in the province has been virtually written off for this summer by officials who say the ban is for safety reasons.

Deployment of troops and police in Kosovo, however, remains the bluntest and most visible response to the violence.

That Smothers look

Entertainer Tommy Smothers mugs during a recent inteview at which he talked about his past and future career in partnership with his brother, Dick, and about his own starring role in the new movie, "Thursday the 12th." Tommy describes the script, about a Canadian mountie (Smothers) on loan to solve a series of Indiana college murders, as "so far out that it has to be played seriously."

Tom Smothers—

Still crazy after all these years

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — It was bound to happen — a spoof on the avalanche of youth oriented terror movies. They're making "Thursday the 12th," with Tom Smothers as a Canadian mountie on loan to solve a series of Indiana college murders.

The United Artists release, written by young TV writers Richard Whitley and Jaime Klein and directed by Alfred Sole ("Holy Terror"), has been filming at MGM and around town. The USC campus is doubling for It Had to Be U, site of the mass killings of cheerleaders.

"When my agents sent me the script, I couldn't see it at all," says Smothers. "Then I began to see the comedy. It's so far out that it has to be played seriously."

That's the way he's doing it, even sitting down straight-faced to dinner with his horse, both occupying chairs in a hotel room. Tom's partners in the nonsense include Carol Kane and guest stars Tab Hunter, Eve Arden, Donald O'Connor and Kaye Ballard.

It had been a few years since I had seen Tommy Smothers, now 44 and no longer the perpetual adolescent. Whereas he used to ride his life and career like an uncontrolled rollercoaster, he seems different now. Assured, intent, with renewed ambition.

"Dick and I are going back to what we did 18-20 years ago," he reported as he tasted two varieties of pinot chardonnay at his favorite restaurant. "We're going out and play dates with just the bass and guitar, no orchestra. We're going to recreate the craziness that we used to do. Now we're trying to remember it."

That craziness is fondly remembered by those who first saw the Smothers Brothers at the Purple Onion in San Francisco and on "The Tonight Show."

The sibling give-and-take was a totally original kind of comedy and it soon translated into gold records and the pace-setting "Smothers Brothers Comedy Hour" on CBS-TV. Then came the press conferences and law suits and cancellation of the series. The brothers seemed to be less funny, indifferent about their careers.

Dick seemed more interested in car racing and wine bottling. Tom did some acting in theater and films. In 1976 they announced plans to end their partnership and played a "farewell appearance" at the Alladin Hotel in Las Vegas. Theirs lasted as long as most show biz retirements.

"The turning point was the Broadway show," said Tom. He referred to "I Love My Wife," which he and Dick played for two years in New York and on the road. The experience gave them both renewed enthusiasm for the performing life.

Now they are moving in all directions. Besides resuming their brother act for concerts, they filmed six hours of "Fitz and Bones," a detective comedy which Universal hopes will become a regular series. They still work separately; Dick has appeared on "Fantasy Island" and "Tales of the Unexpected."

"Dick is a fine actor," said his proud brother. "Take him away from yelling at me, and he can show a great sensitivity."

Tom added that Dick had always competed with him — "Naturally so, since he was 22 months younger. But now we are totally without competition. Dick is the most beloved person I have in my life."

Don Imus is back in the Big City

NEW YORK (AP) — For fans in places as widely separated as Cleveland, Sacramento and Palmdale, Calif., Don Imus is back in the Big City with more regular listeners than ever before and an hilarious first novel about to be published.

"I'm not filthy anymore," says Imus, morning man — for the second time — at New York's WNBC.

"I'd say things that would embarass people, including me," he says of his first go-round in New York radio, a six-year fling that ended in summary discharge and return — another one of those — to Cleveland.

"We work a lot harder now," he says, including Charles McCord, his writer-friend and the news announcer on his morning show, in the equation, "and I think the show is a lot better."

"I'd won all the awards — was Disc Jockey of the Year — and every guy in radio knew me," Imus says. "You've worked in New York, then you're fired, and you go to Cleveland — you never get back.

"When I couldn't get another job in New York, it wasn't that I wasn't any good anymore. It was because I was — to put it crudely — a jerk."

Because radio today is essentially a local medium, Imus' name may mean little or nothing to even heavy listeners outside of the cities in which he has worked — the aforementioned, plus Stockton, Calif.

Suffice it to say the audience for the morning show on WNBC more than quadrupled after his return from Cleveland in September 1979 — to an estimated 1.7 million each week. "Without a doubt," says his boss at WNBC, general manager Bob Sherman, "Don Imus has the largest audience of any disc jockey in the country."

Sherman credits Imus, a graduate of the Don Martin School of Radio and Television Arts and Sciences in Hollywood, with helping boost WNBC out of the city's broadcast boondocks.

Imus cleaned up his on-air act while at Cleveland's WHK — he was fired by WNBC in '77 — though he still may be the most outrageous character in radio. In any case, his novel, "God's Other Son: The Life and Times of the Rev. Billy Sol Hargus," certainly is no disappointment in that regard.

It's skilfully written and consistently funny — though it's not for every taste. Indeed, some will find it downright blasphemous.

The book is based on a character Imus created for his radio show.

"I could have done one of those ripoff things — 'The Rev. Hargus' Sermons' — but I'd never do that," he says.

"I understand the feeling some people have, too, that it's arrogant and presumptious of me to think I could write a novel. Well, I felt I could do it, and now we have a tremendous sequel, 'God's President.'"

Don Imus' career in radio began as an $80-a-week DJ in Palmdale, and a year later he was in Stockton, making $800 a month at KJOY. That second job didn't last long — he was fired after announcing "The Eldridge Cleaver Look-Alike Contest," with a first prize of five years in jail.

He worked at KXOA in Sacramento, then at Cleveland's WGAR, and in 1971, at the age of 31, took the job at WNBC — and quickly became the city's No. 1 DJ.

"I'd gone from $80 a week to a couple hundred thousand a year," he says, "and I couldn't handle it.

"Part of the reason people have problems — the Freddy Prinzes — is this enormous success comes so fast. In your heart, you know you don't deserve it.

"When I got fired, I went to Cleveland. In my mind, I was willing to do that," Imus says. "And now we work as hard as we do — I certainly don't feel guilty anymore."

He and McCord wrote "God's Only Son" after the show each day and on weekends, and as a result of that effort, they've been hired by Paramount Pictures to script three movies. They were at work rewriting the screenplay for "National Lampoon's Joy of Sex" when the screenwriter's strike intervened.

Despite the recent success outside of radio, Imus says he'll stick with the work for the time being.

"It's a lot of fun. You can say what you want, do what you want — it's a unique job in radio."

Guidelines found pleasing

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — A religious leader says he is moderately pleased with guidelines adopted by the School Board that allow voluntary religious activities in some school areas.

The rules, adopted Monday after a heated six-month battle, forbid school employees or community members, including clergy, from conducting the sessions.

Religious sessions would be allowed in areas where students are free to congregate, including cafeterias during lunch periods, hallways, school yards and possibly auditoriums. Areas where the sessions usually could not be held include classrooms, libraries, gymnasiums and study halls.

The issue of prayer in the 40,000-pupil school system heated up last fall when the American Civil Liberties Union questioned non-denominational "devotion" sessions being conducted by Kenmore minister Dale O. Smith before school hours at Innes Junior High.

School officials, on board lawyer John Glenn's advice, halted the sessions and similar meetings.

Moore thinks McEnroe has enough bravado

LONDON (AP) — British actor Roger Moore says he's come up with the perfect candidate to replace him in the part of James Bond, the cool and sophisticated agent of the British secret service — "super brat" tennis star John McEnroe.

"I have decided my successor should be John McEnroe," Moore quipped to reporters at a reception before the Tuesday night premiere of his latest Bond film, "For Your Eyes Only."

"He would be great. He would tell the Chief of Staff where to get off."

The American tennis star's picture was splashed across the front pages of British newspapers Tuesday after he began this year's Wimbledon championships by abusing the umpire, bending his racket over his knee and kicking it across the court.

McEnroe has been dubbed the "super brat" of the international circuit for his court tantrums.

HONG KONG (AP) — Lady Bird Johnson says she has been touring China looking for archaeological digs as a National Geographic trustee.

The 68-year-old widow of former President Lyndon B. Johnson arrived in Hong Kong Tuesday and said she planned to rest for several days before returning to her home in Austin, Texas.

Mrs. Johnson first visited Hong Kong 20 years ago.

MOUNT VERNON, Ill. (AP) — The town of Mount Vernon is planning to honor one of the more illustrious graduates of Mount Vernon Township High School July 11: United Nations Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick, class of 1944.

Rotary clubs in Mount Vernon, Mrs. Kirkpatrick's hometown, and Centralia originally planned a luncheon to honor Mrs. Kirkpatrick and Centralia native James Brady. But the plans were changed after the White House press secretary was wounded in an assassination attempt against President Reagan in March.

Members of the Brady family will be present at the Kirkpatrick luncheon.

NEW YORK (AP) — Mike Wallace, Harry Reasoner, Morley Safer and Ed Bradley will rotate on a weekly basis as anchormen for a new CBS midafternoon news program called "Up to the Minute."

The "60 Minutes" broadcast team will take turns examining topics, such as the effects of feminism on men and violence in society, in week-long segments. The program will be the first of its kind on network television.

Grace Diekhaus, producer of CBS' monthly "Magazine," which will leave the air after the August program, wll produce the new show.

CBS announced previously that Bob Keeshan, creator of the network's "Captain Kangaroo" children's show, will close the afternoon program each day with a brief commentary on parent-child relationships.

The show, beginning Sept. 28, will be broadcast Monday through Friday, 3-3:30 p.m. Central time.

Hayley Mills: She's already outgrown her Disney image

By JAMES BROWN
The Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD — Twenty years ago, when we were young and relatively innocent, Hayley Mills was the girl of most boys' adolescent dreams.

She was almsot too cute to be true — a 14-year-old bubbly blonde vision with a mischievious grin, an effervescent personality and a lovely, chirpy little British accent — all used to full advantage in such Walt Disney family classics as "Pollyanna," "The Parent Trap," "In Search of the Castaways" and "The Moon Spinners." She was "everybody's" little girl.

But as the years went by, Hayley faced the inevitable difficult transition to adult roles. She appeared with her actor-father John Mills in the film "The Truth About Spring." There was another film called "The Family Way" in which she portrayed a young bride whose husband was experiencing sexual problems. This was pretty daring material in the mid-1960s. It was even banned in Boston.

There was no doubt that Hayley Mills' image was changing. She married director Ray Boulting whom she has since divorced, started a family and limited her work to occasional film and stage appearances that wouldn't take her far from her home in England. Television?

"Well, there were two occasions when I was about to get involved in a major television project," she said. "But both times I was happily interrupted by the birth of my children. So that was the end of that."

Now 35, Mills is going about the business of reestablishing herself with American audiences.

She's starring in "The Flame Trees of Thika," a seven-part series that will begin in January on PBS' "Masterpiece Theater."

"Flame Trees" is based on Elspeth Huxley's poignant memoir about the experiences of her family, which left Edwardian England for the then virgin wilds of Kenya. It has been adapted for 'Masterpiece Theater" by John Hawkesworth of "Upstairs, Downstairs" renown. Hawkesworth produced her first film, "Tiger Bay," in 1958.

"John sent me the first draft of the script and it was one of those stories that grabs the imagination right away," Mills said. "I was intrigued by the idea of all these upper-class, aristocratic people strating a new life for themselves in Africa. And, also, I've wanted to do something good on television for a very long while."

She was here from her home in England to participate in PBS' semiannual press tour trumpeting new fall programming.

Last year, she went back to Disney Studios to participate in a TV special on the early days of animation.

"It was nice to be back," she said of the Disney visit. "So many of the people I worked with are still there. Kevin Corcoran, remember he used to be Moochie? He's a producer now!"

Her memories of the Disney days are fond ones. "They were very happy times, an absolutely wonderful atmosphere for a child to work in. Everyone knew everyone else. Everyone was close. And, of course, I have very dear memories of Walt."

Later, though, as the child became a young woman, the image on the screen began to clash with that of the real person.

News shows lead the ratings race

NEW YORK (AP) — With three news shows in the week's Top 20 — an extraordinary number in a period normally dominated by entertainment — CBS won the networks' prime-time ratings race for the fifth consecutive week, figures from the A.C. Nielsen Co. showed.

CBS' "60 Minutes," no stranger to the Top 10, finished the week ending June 21 in seventh place, with Part II in the five-part documentary series, "In Defense of America," tied for 17th, and a special edition of "Walter Cronkite's Universe" 20th.

CBS had seven other programs among the 20 highest-rated, including "M-A-S-H" in first place for the third straight week, and compiled an average rating of 13.9 to 13.5 for ABC and 12 for NBC.

The networks say that means in an average prime-time minute, 13.9 percent of the nation's TV-equipped homes were watching CBS.

The rating for "M-A-S-H" was 20.6. Nielsen says that means of all the homes in the country with television, 20.6 percent saw at least part of the program.

News shows often are among the lowest-rated prime-time offerings, but CBS held its ground with a half-dozen of them.

"In Defense of America," an hour of prime time on each of five consecutive nights, registered a rating of 16.2 for the first installment June 14 — included in the previous week's tally — and 16.8 for Part II, then fell progressively through the week.

Part III on Tuesday night was No. 33 in the ratings, with Part IV tied for 39th place and the fifth installment in 48th place.

Only two programs among the 20 most-watched — ABC's "20-20" in 12th place and "Universe" on CBS — had not been broadcast previously. Other original shows did not fare well. CBS' "Opryland Night of Stars and Future Stars" tied for 29th place, and "America's Junior Miss Pageant," also on CBS, was No. 49.

NBC had four of the five lowest rated shows, starting with "Sanford" in 61st place and followed by "NBC Reports: The Changing West," "B.J. and the Bear" and "Games People Play." Part IV of "Roots: The Next Generations," in rerun on ABC, was the week's lowest-rated program — No. 65.

House ready to vote cuts in public broadcasting funds

By TOM RAUM
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Democratic-controlled House is ready to cut government support for public broadcasting, but not as deeply as President Reagan wants.

The House was voting today on a bill that would authorize $160 million for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting in fiscal 1984, $145 million in fiscal 1985 and $130 million in 1986.

Funds for the public broadcasting corporation already have been authorized through fiscal 1983, which ends Sept. 30, 1983.

House members on Tuesday turned back an administration-backed amendment to cut government support for public broadcasting to $110 million by 1984.

That's half the current authorization of $220 million, although Congress actually appropriated only $172 million for the corporation for the current fiscal year, which ends Sept. 1.

The sponsor of the administration amendment, Rep. James M. Collins, R-Texas, said public broadcasting was hardly a major government spending priority.

"In all America today the one subject everyone has on his mind is inflation," Collins said. "Inflation is due to the fact that Congress is spending too much money."

"We're calling on people everywhere to cut back; we're calling on public broadcasting to cut back," he added. "I am proposing the Reagan budget."

But Rep. Timonthy Wirth, D-Colo., chairman of the House communications subcommittee, said the bill before the House already made sharp cuts in funds for public broadcasting.

The House also defeated by voice vote Tuesday an amendment by Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., to cut funds to $160 million a year for 1984-86.

The corporation is a private, nonprofit organization created by Congress in 1967 to distribute federal funds to public radio and television stations around the country.

The corporation's budget is acted on by Congress several years in advance in an effort to help isolate it from partisan politics.

The Senate Commerce Committee already has gone along with the Reagan administration proposal to chop federal support for public broadcasting to $110 million in fiscal 1984 and $100 million thereafter.

Tonight, Pops is McNamara's band

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Pops has been led by some of America's most famous conductors, but tonight it's McNamara's band.

Joseph McNamara, a 97-year-old former Navy bandmaster who once played under John Philip Sousa, will wave a baton from his wheelchair and conduct the orchestra in Sousa's "The Stars and Stripes Forever."

McNamara's stepdaughter and stepson-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Haig of Wellesley, bid $1,826 during the orchestra's annual Musical Marathon fundraiser for the right to conduct the orchestra.

They were outbid by $624 by NBC correspondent Jack Perkins, but when Perkins found out about McNamara he agreed to let the Spanish-American War veteran take the prize.

Perkins donated the $624 difference to the orchestra.

"I'm a little nervous," McNamara said. "I've never conducted such a large orchestra."

With the help of a tape recording, a baton and the score, McNamara has been practicing the music for weeks in his room at the Veterans Administration Hospital in Brockton, where he is the oldest patient.

McNamara's military-music career began when he enlisted in the Navy at age 14. He served during both world wars and, at age 72, the Navy sent him on a recruiting tour.

During his 80s, he was national commander of Spanish-American War Veterans.

McNamara said "Stars and Stripes Forever" was on the program when he played in a military band that Sousa once conducted in Boston. He said he remembers Sousa as "a very nice man. He wrote some good stuff."

"The Stars and Stripes Forever" was long the theme of Arthur Fiedler, who conducted the Boston Pops for 50 years until his death two years ago.

Home computer lands in slammer

By SUE MANNING
Associated Press Writer

WALLA WALLA, Wash. (AP) — Prison officials are convinced that Herman cannot commit a crime. That's why they put him in the slammer.

If that does not compute, take a closer look at Herman — the first home computer in Washington history to serve time with an inmate.

Herman wasn't allowed into Mike Briggs' minimum-security cell at Washington State Penitentiary until prison officials were convinced the 41-year-old prisoner could not program his home computer to tap the crime computer in Olympia or get past the electronic safeguards of a major bank or manufacturing company.

"Because I have a lot of time left to do (15 years) and they can't put me on work-release, they said, 'Well, let's appease him,'" explained Briggs, who is serving time for second-degree murder.

Briggs was given permission to buy a home computer and bring it in. "So I got it and named it Herman."

"Mike is a responsible inmate. I could see nothing wrong with it, so I approved it," said Superintendent James Spalding. "I would never allow one inside the walls," he said. The minimum-security building is outside the main prison walls.

"One concern was the cost and liability to the state if the thing got stolen," Spalding said. "I spent a good deal of time talking to Mike about that and he signed a release relieving the state of any liability if anything happens," he said.

In the beginning, Briggs wanted only to catalog his music — thousands of records and tapes he has collected over the years. He earns canteen money by selling cassette tapes and cleaning inmate tape recorders and "the $155 a month I make in state wages stays in my account for computer equipment," Briggs said.

Briggs figures he has $60,000 invested in his operation. With that and 44 college credits in electronics, he is trying to invent a court reporting system which would immediately transfer voices to printed transcripts.

When he arrived at the prison 16 years ago, he said he "was withdrawn. I had only a seventh grade education. I didn't care about anybody or anything."

He pushed the laundry wagon and mopped cells. "It was hard time."

When he and other inmates formed the Lifer's Club and started working with the blind — reading textbooks onto tapes — Briggs' attitude began to change.

"I like to help people, but on my own terms. I learned Braille and translated sermons for a blind preacher," he said. "It was a service and it helped him, but it benefitted me too because I got some education out of it."

Briggs believes his audio system also would make communication for the blind much easier by having a computer vocalize a typed letter.

He also is working on a device to "allow a blind person to walk without a cane and free both hands." A sonar detector built into a belt buckle would play rat-a-tat-tat on the wearer's navel, thumping faster as the person gets closer to something, Briggs said.

Briggs has other ideas he wants to develop and patent — but he's not telling anyone but Herman about those.

Cowboy star reflects on 50 years in show business

By KILEY ARMSTRONG
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — After 50 years in show business, his shiny cowboy boots walk on soft carpets in posh hotel suites. But Roy Rogers, the nation's good guy in the white hat, hasn't forgotten a childhood of yodeling in Duck Run, Ohio.

Rogers' clean-cut cowboy image and his 34-year marriage to co-star Dale Evans have survived the transition from country-western singer to movie star, from television personality to businessman.

The 69-year-old former farm boy, who worked picking peaches during the Depression and proposed to Miss Evans on horseback before a show, talks a lot about survival and traditional values.

"Money is nice, but if the whole thing fell apart today, I would survive," he says, pausing to put on his hat so he'll "look like a cowboy" when a photographer arrived at his hotel suite Monday. Rogers lives in California.

Rogers, who launched into an a cappella version of "Happy Trails" and yodeled on request, said he doesn't know why he has remained popular for 50 years.

"I don't care if you've got all the training in the world and all the good looks," he said. "Unless the public accepts you, you're not going to make it. It may be that I'm more than just a cowboy, that I'm more like a member of the family."

When Rogers was young, he wanted to be a dentist, "but we didn't have the financing." Looking back, he says, dentistry "might have been boring compared with my life."

The cowboy got his musical start in Ohio, yodeling at the age of 8 and calling square dances at age 10. "My mom and dad played guitar and mandolin in the Duck Run country district. My three sisters and I manufactured our own entertainment, singing at parties," he said.

Rogers got to California by hitchhiking in the fall of 1930 after he left his job at a Cincinnati shoe factory. After his California employer went into debt during the Depression, he lost his job hauling cement and gravel.

"I lived in one of those camps that Steinbeck wrote The Grapes of Wrath about and picked peaches," he said. "I found out years later that Steinbeck actually wrote the story in the same place we were picking peaches."

His sister convinced him to appear in an amateur show in 1931, and a few days later, he was invited to join a group called Rocky Mountaineers, "the beginning of my 50 years in show business."

Rogers was born Leonard Franklin Slye. But officials at Republic studios, where he starred in 87 musical westerns, "told me they didn't think my name sounded western enough.

"They came up with the name Rogers; that hit me just right, because I always loved Will Rogers," he said. "Then they talked about first names, and somebody mentioned 'Leroy.' I said, 'Oh, no.' When I was in school there was a kid named Leroy, and I didn't like him; he was a tattletale. So they ended up with Roy Rogers."

In more recent years, he has ventured into the marketplace, opening more than 300 fast-food restaurants.

Rogers was a widower with three children when he married Miss Evans in 1947. They did 35 films together and co-starred in the "Roy Rogers" cowboy series that ran on television for 12½ years.

Rogers and Miss Evans were "sitting on our horses before a show in Chicago when I asked her to marry me. Then we rode into the arena," and he had to wait until after the show to hear her reply.

"She had tobe a brave sol to marry anybody with three kids, one a baby. But we loved one another, and it looked like it would work out," he said. "To have a successful marriage, both sides need to give 90 percent and take 10 percent."

The couple has reared nine children, three of whom are now dead. They have 16 grandchildren and five great-grandchildren.

Autographed ruble note brings $5,000 at New York auction

By ULA ILNYTZKY
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — A ruble note signed at the 1945 Yalta Conference by Winston Churchill, Franklin D. Roosevelt and Joseph Stalin has been auctioned for $5,000 to a private collector from Minnesota.

The same collector also paid $700 for a rare letter by New York State Supreme Court Justice Joseph Force Crater, who mysteriously disappeared in 1930.

The absentee bidder at Sotheby Parke Bernet's auction Monday of Printed and Manuscript Americana was Christopher Faye of Mankato, Minn.

In a telephone interview from his home, Faye said he was thrilled to be the successful bidder of the two items because, although he collects an assortment of articles, "these are the first two autographs I ever purchased."

The ruble banknote, worth $6.50 at today's exchange rate and $10 in 1945, "is a rare 20th-century autograph" because it is believed to be the only document bearing the signatures of the three dignitaries, said Jerry E. Patterson, head of Sotheby's 84th Street Gallery for books, coins and stamps.

The autographs were obtained by Harry L. Hopkins, Roosevelt's special assistant, for his teen-age son, Robert.

In a note attached to the ruble, the young Robert said he watched from a distance as "President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill signed it (the ruble) without hesitation. Marshal Stalin balked, however, obviously baffled."

He said Roosevelt had to make up a tall tale to convince Stalin to sign the banknote:

"President Rooseelt explained to him that the 'Short Snorter Club' was made up of people who had flown the Atlantic Ocean and that it took two who had made the trip to bring in a new member.

"Marshal Stalin pointed out that he had never flown the Atlantic and therefore was not eligible to join. President Roosevelt said that he was taking it upon himself to waive that requirement in this instance. After a lengthy pause and with obvious reluctance, Marshal Stalin signed."

Norway, Denmark doing best for NATO—and themselves

By L. EDGAR PRINA
Copley News Service

OSLO, Norway — The Soviet threat to NATO's northern flank is great and growing, but the Norwegians and Danes remain confident that, with timely help from North America and Britain, the enemy "shall not pass" either to seize bases in Norway or to control the Baltic exits to the Atlantic.

Whether visiting with Norwegian troops near Kirkenes, along the border with the USSR high above the Arctic Circle, or with Danish airmen on the strategically situated island of Bornholm in the Baltic, the confidence is contagious.

An observer is immediately struck by the truism that one cannot measure a nation's defense capability simply by reading its latest military budget outlays or inventory of sophisticated weapons.

While Pentagon systems analysts might be unimpressed by the quality and quantity of their weapons and members of Congress accuse them of not carrying their fair share of the defense burden, the Norwegian and Danish military appear to be doing the most with the little they have.

Both countries have conscription and the bulk of their comparatively small armed forces is made up of draftees. The core of professionals, however, obviously has leadership and motivational qualities.

The Nordic neighbors both rely heavily on the speedy mobilization (from a few hours to one or two days) of reserves and the volunteers of well-drilled Home Guards. Thus, theirs is a total defense concept in which the whole nation takes part.

Neither the Norwegian nor Danish military forces face the serious problems of drugs, racial antagonism, desertions and functional illiteracy that beset the U.S. military services. Doubtless, the fact that the prospective "enemy" is breathing down their backs focuses their attention on the need to do their jobs well. But having said that, their understanding of why they are in uniform and of what they might be called upon to do is impressive.

Because these countries have small populations (Norway, 4 million, Denmark, 5.2 million) they cannot afford to have the best and latest in armaments. But they make do. They improvise. They adapt their "good enough" weapons to their own peculiar needs, geographies and the known threat.

The Norwegians, for example, have taken the old 20-ton M-24 Chaffee tanks (new 1943) and armed them with a new French 90mm gun.

They are delighted with the outcome. Perhaps if they could afford them, they, too, would buy the expensive new Abrams main battle tank from the United States or the potent Leopard II from the West Germans. But they are convinced the M-24 can do the job.

(The U.S. Army, in a similar move is putting new anti-aircraft guns on old M-48 tank chassis for the division air defense (DIVAD) role. Congress is approving this multibillion-dollar program, but the Navy, on the other hand, is having difficulty persuading the lawmakers to allow it to bring back its World War II battleships so they can be armed with land-attack and anti-ship cruise missiles.)

The Danish air force, which has received its first squadron of General Dynamics-built F-16 warplanes, hasn't yet been able to afford radar-directed weapons for them. But the squadron commander told a visiting group of U.S. and Canadian journalists that his pilots have developed tactics for the so-called "toss bombing" delivery he contends has been highly accurate in exercises.

In the area of manpower utilization, the commander said the Danes can maintain and support an F-16 squadron with half the personnel the U.S. Air Force assigns to the same task.

Norwegian and Danish military leaders make it plain they would need fast and formidable reinforcements in the event of a Soviet attack.

Here, much needs to be done by the United States, Canada and Britain.

For three years, the Pentagon has been talking about pre-positioning heavy equipment for a Marine brigade in Norway. Only last January was an agreement worked out. The Marines would be flown in.

Although the Trondheim area has been designated for the depots, no definite locations have been picked as yet nor has the first piece of equipment been put in place. The United States would have liked the depots located farther north, closer to the likely action in the event of war. But the Norwegians, who are skittish about provoking the Soviets, have agreed to pre-position equipment in the north for another Norwegian brigade. The only active-duty brigade in the Norwegian army is stationed in the northern part of the country.

The Canadian Air-Sea Transport (CAST) combat group, a 4,000-man light infantry force trained in mountain-arctic warfare, is the only dedicated allied ground unit for early deployment to northern Norway at this time. But unless the Canadian government acted upon strategic warning, these troops probably would not arrive until 20 days after hostilities began, because they would come by sea, under current plans. Norwegian generals think that's not good enough.

In addition to U.S. Marines and the CAST brigade, British commandos and Netherlands marines have exercised in Norway and could be committed to battle there or in Denmark.

Soviets pushing views of hard-line Polish groups

By THOMAS W. NETTER
Associated Press Writer

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — The Soviets have found another hard-line Communist group to use in their campaign against the liberal movement in the Polish Communist Party.

A statement Tuesday from a group called the Poznan Forum, reported in a dispatch from the Soviet news agency Tass, criticized the Polish government for failing to suppress "anti-socialist" activities.

"We believe such a state of affairs cannot be allowed to continue," the statement said. "It is necessary to consistently and ruthlessly implement party resolutions to back with deeds the words of the leadership."

Poznan is a city in western Poland, and Warsaw Radio said the group is headed by Jan Majerczak, director general of the Mera Automation System there. The Tass dispatch was published by Trybuna Ludu, the Polish party newspaper.

Similar statements from a group in southern Poland called the Katowice Forum have been prominently published in the Soviet press. The publication was interpreted as another warning to Polish Communist Party chief Stanislaw Kania that he was risking Soviet military intervention by not curbing the liberal reformers.

The pressure from the Soviet Union, East Germany and other orthodox Communist members of the Soviet bloc has been increasing as the special Polish party congress July 14 approaches. The congress is expected to endorse the democratization of the party, the labor reforms, the relaxation of censorship and the sweeping purges of hard-line leaders that resulted from the nationwide outburst of unrest last summer.

The Poznan group adopted a resolution calling on the party congress to "defend the party's positions and its ideological principles, achievements and unity."

Two other members of the Soviet bloc, Bulgaria and Hungary, reportedly sent special missions to Warsaw to urge a crackdown on labor and political unrest.

Bulgaria's official BTA news agency charged Tuesday that the Polish Communist Party "still cannot lead the people on an attack against the adversaries of socialism, to halt the offensive of counterrevolutionary forces."

The agency said "an increasing number of Polish citizens have been asking themselves the question which concerns Poland's allies: When will a solid barrier be put in the way of the muddy wave of counter-revolution?"

New law would allow military to help police

WASHINGTON (AP) — Legislation moving toward almost certain congressional approval would allow the armed forces to be used in fighting illegal drug traffic, breaking with a century-old tradition of keeping the military out of law enforcement.

Over objections of the Pentagon, the Senate and two House Committees have approved proposals waiving portions of the Posse Comitatus Act of 1878 which prohibits the assignment of military troops to normal police work.

Under one version from the House Armed Services Committee, soldiers, sailors and airmen could be used to make arrests and take part in search and seizure operations.

Another proposal, passed by the House Judiciary Committee, would permit military planes and helicopters and other equipment to be used in searching planes and boats making millions of dollars' worth of drug deliveries, mainly in Florida and Virginia. It also would allow military bases to be used as staging areas for operations designed to intercept drug smugglers.

A bill approved by the Senate is less sweeping, allowing only limited use of military personnel and equipment.

The Senate In a letter to a House Judiciary subcommittee, Pentagon general counsel William H. Taft IV wrote: "Law enforcement operations, particularly those involving drugs, tend to be intense, confrontational matters.

"It is unreasonable to expect that the crew of a military helicopter or armored vehicle will stand by in the midst of such an operation without assisting law enforcement officials in arrests or seizures should the situation neccesitate such action."

Taft said prohibiting military personnel from joining in arrests might "endanger the lives of law enforcement people and the military crew."

Energy can be obtained from animal manure

STEPHENVILLE, Texas (AP) — Americans might be able to solve their energy problems if they take "waste not, want not" literally and follow the advice of a Tarleton State University professor.

Dr. Edward Fulton has found a way to convert animal manure into biogas, a fuel that can be used to generate electricity or run internal combustion engines. He's demonstrating his technique to large and small farms, and says farmers may be able eventually to sell excess power to utility companies.

Biogas is 60 percent methane and 40 percent carbon dioxide. Fulton's technique uses two airless digestion systems to ferment the manure and produce the gas.

U.S. technology lagging behind

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of U.S. patents issued to foreigners has almost doubled in the last 20 years because American technology has lagged, the victim of dwindling research efforts in this country.

In 1960, about 20 percent of patents were claimed by foreigners. That climbed to about 37 percent by last year, with Japan, West Germany, England, France and Switzerland collecting the largest numbers, according to Patent Office records.

"It's a dramatic change. ... American inventions being patented are going down dramatically, and there's no indication that's changing, and foreign (patents) are going up dramatically," said Michael Blommer, executive director of the American Patent Law Association.

"It's a symptom, a clear and unmistakable symptom, that America is falling behind in new products and in products made with new processes. We're falling behind and we're falling behind regularly," Blommer said.

According to experts, a major part of the problem is the drop in research and development spending by American corporations.

"I think that the spending in American corporations for research and development is down and I think the statistics show it," Blommer said. "Fewer and fewer Americans are laboring right at the cutting edge of new things, but overseas more and more foreigners are right there at what they call the state of the art."

While the United States pours money into an ailing giant like Chrysler, he said, "in Japan and Germany they're pouring money into the most advanced industries, computers, optical scanners ... the things of the future."

Part of the problem may have been overconfidence in American technology in the past, suggested Donald Banner, a former commissioner of patents and trademarks who now heads the Intellectual Property Owners Association, a group of people who invent or create things and hold patents.

In the last 20 years American technology has slipped badly, Banner said. "We have not tried to stay up there. ... We have just assumed that we would always be doing it better than anybody else.

"In the meantime people all over the world, paricularly in Japan, as we well know, Germany and elsewhere, have been busy inventing and creating new things," he said.

That innovation is encouraged by foreign tax laws, noted Eric Hultman, general counsel for the Senate Judiciary Committee, which supervises the Patent Office.

Ralph Oman, an aide to Sen. Charles Mathias Jr., R-Md., said, "Foreigners get a great deal more in the way of economic incentive to conduct research and development, far more than we give our companies, so they're making more discoveries and therefore there are that many more they can patent in this country."

The solution, said Banner, is to encourage research, provide tax incentives and improve the patent office and the patent system in general. He said the United States is "going to have to make things which are more desirable, less expensive, better quality than anybody in the world, and if you don't do that you die."

"In other words, you can't assume that America is going to be No. 1. We're got to earn it or we're going to lose it," he said.

Besides U.S. tax laws that discourage research spending, Blommer said that many of the resources available to develop new products must be used to maneuver the products through a tangle of government regulations.

Banner noted that regulations also eat into the profitability of a product because the 17-year life of a patent keeps running even though the product may have to be tested for years before it goes on the market.

Pending legislation would correct this, he said, extending patents to compensate for time lost awaiting regulatory approval.

Banner also suggested that the Patent Office, which he termed "a disaster," be given more money and removed from the Commerce Department, which also spreads its wings over a brood of other agencies as varied as the census bureau and the weather service.

"That would say to American inventors, 'We think this whole thing is important,'" he said.

Blommer charged that the Patent Office is doing a second-rate job by not checking thoroughly enough into inventions. The agency is not computerized and does all its work on paper.

"The patents that it issues are not as reliable as they could be, as they should be, and American corporations clearly know this," Blommer said. He said some firms hesitate to spend the time and money to get patents that may be challenged in court.

The patent process, invention, is the technological seed core of the future, Banner said.

"If you don't care about growth ... a lot more people are going to be out happened to us?'

"I'll tell you what happened to us. Somebody out there, some country out there, thought technology was important and beat us again."

New lawsuit troubles empire of dairy baron

PALESTINE Texas (AP) — The financially troubled empire of cattle-leasing baron Clayton McKenzie has received another setback in the form of a multimillion lawsuit filed by a Denver, Colo. agricultural bank, a Palestine newspaper says.

McKenzie, known as a "messiah of milk producers" after he founded a $25 million rent-a-cow business, is accused in the suit of conspiring to "cheat, defraud and deceive" Wells Fargo Agricultural Credit Corp. to obtain a $6.5 million loan last January, The Palestine Herald-Press reported.

The suit names as defendants McKenzie's Quality Holstein Leasing Associates Limited Partnership, McKenzie and his wife, Sharon, and Allen Nicholas, Pat Marler, Dan Scarbrough and Matt Swift, the newspaper said.

Last week, attorneys for McKenzie, Quality Holstein Leasing, Inc. and two affiliated companies filed petitions for reorganization in a federal bankruptcy court in Dallas. McKenzie is seeking to freeze action on demands for payment filed by 180 creditors of his Anderson County enterprises.

The Wells Fargo suit was filed in April in a federal court in Denver, The Herald-Press said. The Denver bank is seeking $6.5 million in actual damages and a $30 million punitive award.

Last January, Wells Fargo loaned QHL, Inc. nearly $6.5 million to purchase dairy cows later to be leased to qualified dairy operators, the suit states. Under the credit agreement, Wells Fargo claimed security interest in all QHL accounts and rights to all rent payments on all cattle leases, the suit said.

To monitor the leases, Wells Fargo requested that QHL provide copies of all lease agreements, bills of sale, and other supporting documents.

Between January and March, QHL officers met that requirement by submitting copies of lease agreements to WF officials and attesting to signatures on leases, the suit says.

Some time after the bank began dispersing the $6.5 million loan, it began examining the lease agreements QHL made with various dairy farmers and "through either mistake, accident, fraud, theft, defalcation or other methods, funds were being diverted from QHL and certain bills of sale and leasing documents ... were false and fictitious," the suit alleges.

River bank to remain boundary

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — The states of Oklahoma and Texas have recommended to the U.S. Supreme Court that the south bank of the Red River, partially covered by Lake Texoma, should remain the boundary between them.

The court on Monday forwarded the joint Oklahoma-Texas recommendation to Denver attorney John Carver, who as "special master" in the border dispute, has scheduled an August hearing on the case.

Their recommendation runs counter to a request by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission that the boundary be shifted so that the entire lake and the Denison Dam hydroelectric plant are in Oklahoma, officials said Monday.

That would put Texas-consumed power from the installation in interstate commerce for the first time, and would make it subject to federal regulation.

The south river bank has served as the state border since a 1922 U.S. Supreme Court ruling, but the need for a new border decision was prompted several years ago by a controversy over electric-power rights.

Texas electric utilities that receive power from Denison Dam do business only within the boundaries of Texas, but if Oklahoma assumed jurisdiction over the dam, the firms would become involved in interstate commerce, placing them under FERC regulations.

Texas is the only state in the union in which major power companies are not federally regulated by FERC, because no power travels across state lines.

The FERC recommendation prompted Texas to file suit against Oklahoma in the U.S. Supreme Court, even though Oklahoma has not tried to control Denison Dam.

Leon J. Barish, assistant attorney general for Texas, said the suit was filed in an effort to lay the border question to rest.

If the Supreme Court accepts the states' recommendation, he said, it would be "the first time a definite ruling is made that the boundary is what it was prior to construction of the dam."

Reagan back on the road

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, hoping to build public pressure on Congress, is taking the campaign for his tax and budget cuts on the road for three speeches in six days.

The first stop was intended to be a friendly one: an address in San Antonio, Texas, today to the U.S. Jaycees, who have endorsed Reagan's economic program and are lobbying for its enactment.

A speech is scheduled Thursday in Los Angeles to the California Taxpayers' Association, followed by a weekend trip to Reagan's ranch near Santa Barbara, Calif., and an appearance on the way home Monday before the NAACP convention in Denver.

David Gergen, Reagan's new communications chief, called the Jaycees speech a "major effort to build public support."

As has become standard since the March 30 attempt on Reagan's life, tight security precautions were being taken for today's appearance.

Randy Kindy, a Jaycees spokesman, said all the expected 8,000 guests would be checked with metal detectors before entering the Henry B. Gonzales Convention Center.

In addition, Kindy said, Jaycees from Tennessee were ordered by the Secret Service to leave their muskets — part of their state organization's uniform — at home.

"Anything that resembles a weapon will be confiscated at the door," he said.

To help Reagan win support for his tax and budget cuts, Kindy said the 300,000-member group has written letters, made telephone calls and gathered petitions.

"The Jaycees were extraordinarily helpful on the budget campaign," said David Gergen, Reagan's communications chief. "They came forward voluntarily and said they would like to be helpful and I think there is a lot of affection between the president and the Jaycees, so I think that will be a very warm environment."

Reagan and his wife, Nancy, will stay at the Century Plaza Hotel in Los Angeles, where their home is on the market for $1.9 million. They fly by helicopter Friday to their ranch in the Santa Ynez Mountains.

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Despite the overcrowded parking situation that grows more cramped each month at Midland Regional Airport, the Midland City Council put off for another three weeks making a decision on expanding the parking areas.

Meeting in a regular session Tuesday in City Hall, the council considered an updated version of the Airport Master Plan as prepared by engineers of Parkhill, Smith & Cooper, Inc. However, the panel noted that the latest figures used in the plan were 1979 numbers, and they instructed the engineers to update those figures.

Considering that one-level parking additions would force passengers to walk too far to the terminal building, the council also told the engineers to draw up plans and cost estimates for multi-level parking.

THIS MARKED the second delay imposed by the council before accepting the Master Plan. The proposal has been in the council's hands for a month. At the May 26 meeting the panel decided it needed time to read the material before voting on its acceptance.

Mayor G. Thane Akins pointed out that employment figures used for Midland County were wrong in the report. Projected for 1981 was a working force of 36,000 persons. "The last report I had listed it at 49,000," he said, referring to the theory that an increase in the number of workers means a higher use for the airport.

A representative of Parkhill, Smith & Cooper commented that the council several months ago asked for single level parking, which is why that was the only plan included.

"We can give you figures for two-level and three-level parking, but you never asked for it," he added.

"But I want you to tell us what we ought to be doing out there," replied Councilman Tom Sloan.

Col. Wilson Banks, director of aviation, said two-level parking "has a lot of merits and is the way to go, except maybe for the cost."

While the engineers can prepare plans and cost estimates for multi-level parking, Banks noted that much more of a delay on a decision would be hurting the airport.

"WE CAN'T WAIT much longer," he said. "Any more delays on parking and we're going to be hurting. It's getting to be critical out there."

Looking at the overall Master Plan and its projections for construction through 2000, Banks said he feels the plan "is viable and can be used 20 years down the road and beyond." If hangars and offices of various general aviation firms must be moved to allow for expansion of the terminal building, there would be no problem, he contended.

"I feel we can relocate all of general aviation at a lesser cost than putting in a new air carrier facility (terminal building)," he said. In the mid-1970s when the council was considering expansion and renovation of the airport, Banks pointed out that they considered constructing a new terminal building.

"That would have been the greatest thing in the world...would have saved me a lot of gray hairs. But when the figures were laid out on the table, the cost just wasn't feasible."

That construction program was

Settlement will tax both city, residents

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midlanders will be subjected to more taxes in the coming year due to a Texas Supreme Court ruling which effectively ordered the city of Midland to award $975,000 in damages to the father of a youth who was "tragically injured" in a car-pickup collision at an obstructed T-intersection in far southwest Midland in 1976.

The youth, Calvin Keith Jezek of Midland, was rendered paralyzed, comatose and suffered "irreversible brain damage" by the June 10, 1976, wreck at a "blind intersection" which, the court maintained, should have been cleared of obstruction by the city. He was 16 at time of the injury.

The Supreme Court upheld the Midland jury's Feb. 2, 1978, verdict, which found the city liable and negligent in not keeping the intersection free of overhanging and obstructing mesquite shrubs and weeds. In so doing, Texas' highest court overturned rulings by the trial court and appellate court, which had reversed the jury's decision to award damages.

Jezek died Oct. 25, 1978 — some nine months after the jury verdict and while the case was on appeal.

The near $1 million settlement may be the highest awarded by a Midland jury.

"I'm not sure it's the largest, but it's one of the largest," said Judge Perry D. Pickett, who presided over the Jezek trial in 142nd State District Court. Pickett, the court's judge for 26 years, has since retired.

THE JEZEK settlement will hike the Midland tax rate by a nickel per $100 valuation for a year's duration until the city has recouped the $716,775 it will have expended to satisfy the judgment and to keep the city solvent and operating.

The city, which operates on a $27.5 million budget, will appropriate the $716,775 from General Fund Surplus to satisfy the judgment, and will replenish the fund with tax dollars. The tax rate will be increased from 45 cents per $100 valuation at 75 percent assessment to 50 cents, but will revert to the original rate next year after the fund has been replenished. Each penny of the tax rate is tantamount to $140,000 in revenue.

The taxpayers essentially become the city's insurers.

"It's ridiculous to the point it makes me want to cry," lamented Mayor G. Thane Akins, who said he couldn't understand "why the city and not the county" had to burden the settlement.

IN A JUDGMENT signed this week by Judge Pat Baskin, the city was ordered to pay the plaintiff, David L. Jezek, administrator of the estate of his son, and his lawyer, Odessa attorney Warren Heagy, $487,500 forthwith and to pay another $487,500 in payments of $32,500 per year for the next 15 years.

"Oh, it's done," the mayor sighed in apparent frustration after the City Council decided to abide by the court order. "The judgment has been made. We have no choice (but to pay), but I said that is wrong."

The mayor was adamant in his disagreement with the judgment. He suggested that the boy and not the city was a fault.

"I think the boy's responsible (for the mishap). The boy simply did not stop," the mayor said. "I feel sorry them (the family) — the tragedy."

This is the T-intersection in far southwest Midland where Midlander Calvin Keith Jezek, then 16, was injured in 1976. His injury is costing the city of Midland almost a million dollars due to a court ruling which held that the once-cluttered intersection obstructed Jezek's view of traffic and contributed to the accident, which left him paralyzed. The youth died in 1978.

Midland Memorial Hospital will conduct its formal dedication of the Allison Permian Basin Cancer Therapy Center at 1 p.m. Saturday. The ceremonies will be under the portico north of the building, at the main entrance to the Allison Center.

The dedication is open to residents of Midland County and all surrounding counties, according to hospital officials.

The ceremonies will honor representatives of the Allison family, including the late Helon Y. Allison, who donated the original $2 million dollars in memory of her husband, James N. Allison Sr., and her son, James N. Allison Jr. The monies were used to build the two-level complex that houses the radiation treatment equipment as well as the planned chemotherapy unit.

Donations from a number of private foundations, as well as a variety of individuals, supplied the Allison Center with the latest in specialized radiation equipment for cancer treatment. The center houses 20- and 6-Million Electron Volt linear accelerators, a 75-250 KVP orthovoltage therapy unit, a therapy beam simulator and a treatment planning computor system.

The dedication will include an invocation by the Rev. Dr. Joseph Schley of St. Nicholas Episcopal Church, remarks by board representatives, the introduction of Dr. A.L. Schlichtemeier, medical director and radiation oncologist for the Allison Cancer Center, and a brief statement by Allyson Ann Allison, granddaughter of Helon Y. Allison.

A city employee was electrocuted in a bizarre accident Tuesday that also killed his dog.

William Marvin Stovall, 53, a groundskeeper at Cole Park, died shortly before noon Tuesday as he attempted to shake a prairie dog out of a section of irrigation pipe. He was electrocuted when the pipe touched a 7,200-volt overhead power line.

Although Stovall was wearing heavy rubber boots that would have prevented an electrical shock, police said, his dog was beside him and leaning against his calf. The dog served as a ground and also was killed.

Stovall, of 3318 Mariana Ave., was pronounced dead at the scene by Justice of the Peace Charlie Sprayberry. He had worked for the city since March of 1980. His body was taken to Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home, where services are pending.

Nuclear standoff in Mideast seems 'logical'

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iraqi President Saddam Hussein has called on all "peace-loving" nations to help the Arabs acquire the atomic bombs and create an Arab-Israeli nuclear standoff like the U.S.-Soviet deterrent.

Hussein told a Cabinet meeting in Baghdad Tuesday that Israel already has nuclear weapons, the official Iraqi news service reported.

"Any country seeking peace and respecting peoples," he president said, "will have to cooperate with the Arabs one way or another to obtain an atomic bomb and face the real Israeli atomic bombs."

The Arab quest for nuclear weaponry is "a remedy to an existing situation in Israel" and applies "the same logic employed by the United States toward the Soviet Union, and the Soviet Union toward the United States," Hussein said.

"I don't believe the Soviet Union wishes to use the atomic bomb against America, nor does America use it," he said. "But both powers and others are constantly trying to improve their weapons."

Hussein's speech, which was broadcast later by Baghdad Radio, was his first public reaction to the Israeli bombing raid that destroyed Iraq's French-built nuclear reactor on June 7. Israel described the reactor attack as an act of self-defense to abort Iraqi plans to build a bomb. The reactor was nearly complete when it was destroyed.

Israel does not confirm reports that it has nuclear weapons, saying only that it will not be the first country to introduce such arms to the Middle East. Israel does not allow inspection of its two nuclear power plants.

Iraq says its reactor, which was subject to international inspection in compliance with the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, was intended only for peaceful research. But Hussein's speech focused on a defense of Arab atomic aspirations "irrespective of Iraq's intentions and capabilities."

The Iraqi leader asserted that the reasoning the Israelis offer as justification for the raid could lead to more extensive interference in Arab affairs.

The Israelis, he said, might "even force Saudi Arabia to change the course of its highways, force the Arabs to drop the courses of science, physics, mathematics and astronomy from secondary schools and college textbooks, because these are courses that give experience in a military domain."

Meanwhile, Brazil called its ambassador to Israel home Tuesday.

Bani-Sadr's arrest said near

By FAROUK NASSAR
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A member of Iran's Parliament says fugitive ex-President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr is still in the country and his arrest to stand trial is imminent.

"The police have located the area where he is hiding," said Hassan Ayat in a telephone interview Tuesday with The Associated Press in Beirut. "The chances of his early arrest are great, and he then will definitely be put on trial."

Ayat is a member of the Islamic Republican Party which controls the Majlis, the Iranian parliament, and the government. He is also close to the judicial authorities directing the hunt for the deposed president.

BANI-SADR HAS BEEN in hiding for two weeks. After the Majlis voted Sunday that he was incompetent and should be dismissed, Tehran's revolutionary prosecutor, Hojatoleslam Ali Quddosi, ordered him arrested to face charges of inciting revolt against the Islamic republic.

Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, the supreme leader of the Iranian revolutionary regime, fired the president Monday and urged him in a broadcast to surrender, repent and serve the Iranian revolution as a "writer and thinker."

Tanjug, the Yugoslav press agency, reported from Tehran that rumors persisted there that Bani-Sadr was hiding at an air force base in Hamadan, his native city in northwest Iran.

TEHRAN RADIO said the revolutionary prosecutor's office in Kermanshah, south of Hamadan, announced that the wanted man might be hiding in that part of western Iran and urged the public to arrest him.

The Iranian government radio also announced that six more Bani-Sadr supporters were executed Monday night, along with three members of the Bahai faith. Twenty-three other people linked to Bani-Sadr were reported executed Sunday after street fighting Saturday in which the Iranian government said 30 people were killed.

Pars, the official Iranian news agency, said supporters of Bani-Sadr demonstrated in several cities Monday. It said 27 were arrested for provoking riots.

Bush arrives in Paris to meet Mitterrand

By HARRY DUNPHY
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP) — France's first cabinet with Communist members in 34 years holds its organization meeting today amid concern in Washington and other allied capitals over the inclusion of the pro-Moscow party.

In a move to unify the political left, President Francois Mitterrand gave four non-sensitive places in the 44-member Cabinet Wednesday to the Communists. To get them, the leaders of the party accepted his Socialist government's program, including ds for the Russians to withdraw from Afghanistan and not to intervene in Poland.

The first admission of Communists to a major government of the North Atlantic Alliance was viewed in Washington as an important psychological breakthrough for the party with a potential for far-reaching consequences. There were fears that it would increase the chances of Communist admission to the government in Italy, where the party is much stronger than it is in France.

Vice President George Bush arrived in Paris today to meet with Mitterrand and told reporters he expected they would discuss "both the membership of the Cabinet and the direction of the new French government." But he told a questioner it would be "inappropriate to comment now" on the inclusion of the Communists in the Cabinet.

Opposition to Communist participation in the government of America's key allies has been a mainstay of U.S. policy since World War II. Bush was expected to convey that attitude from the Reagan administration.

Anticipating adverse reaction from France's allies, Premier Pierre Mauroy echoed the late President Charles de Gaulle's popular insistence on French independence and said in a television appearance: "The government of France is not made for foreigners. It is made for France."

He referred to the Communist votes that helped elect Mitterrand last month and contributed to the Socialist triumph in the second round of the assembly elections last Sunday, saying his party "decided that all who voted for the majority must be represented in the government."

Local post office to be picketed

Local members of American Postal Workers Union and National Association of Letter carriers will picket the main post office from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Thursday to call attention to the unions' nationwide labor dispute with the U.S. Postal Service.

"We're picketing because William Bolger (Postmaster General of the United States) has broken the law by not negotiating with us," said Mike Middleton, editor of the APWU newspaper, "This and That." "We just want to say, 'William Bolger, negotiate with us.' "

The Postal Service, according to a union news release, has refused to bargain with national leaders of APWU and NALC although negotiations were scheduled to begin April 22. The present labor agreement, covering some 600,000 postal workers in the nation, will expire at midnight, July 20.

The dispute arose when the Postmaster General announced he would not bargain with the unions until the National Labor Relations Board acted upon a Postal Service petition which questioned the "appropriate bargain-unit or units within the Postal Service" for collective bargaining purposes.

On April 30, the NLRB's regional director dismissed the Postal Service petition without hearing. The Service has since appealed the decision to the full board in Washington, D.C., which has not made a ruling in the matter.

"The United States Postal Service is by far the most productive in the world and, as postal workers, we are proud of that fact," said the news release. "However, the continual refusal of the Service to obey federal law and bargain with the authorized representatives of its empoloyees is poisoning labor-management relations. This is not only unfair to us, but it is unfair to the American public."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The government is conducting a "smear campaign" against James Hopkins, whose dramatic protest and death triggered a hunger strike by fellow Vietnam veterans, Hopkins' widow claims.

Government records show that Hopkins was not wounded in combat and did not receive two Purple Hearts and a Bronze Star for valor, as he had claimed, the Los Angeles Times reported over the weekend.

Hopkins, 32, died in an apparent suicide May 17, about two months after he allegedly crashed his Jeep through the front doors of the Wadsworth Veterans Administration Hospital and fired shots in the lobby of the West Los Angeles facility. Protesters say Hopkins was angry because he could not get a VA doctor to verify he suffered from a hearing impairment so he could rent a special telephone device.

Protesting veterans — some on a hunger strike — set up camp on the hospital's lawn for three weeks, demanding the government investigate the VA's treatment of Hopkins, conduct outside probes into all VA hospitals, examine the effects of toxic herbicides such as Agent Orange and conduct a medical screening program for all veterans to find any service-related disabilities.

The protesters said Sunday that their campaign will not be affected by the questions raised over Hopkins' war record.

"We know that Jimmy, regardless of his record, was a Vietnam veteran suffering from delayed stress and yelling for help. And he didn't get it," said Bobby Phillips, spokesman for the Los Angeles Veterans Coalition.

Suzanne Hopkins, 31, said in an interview Sunday that it was "character assassination" for the government to question her late husband's heroism and said that military records forwarded to her by the Marine Corps are incomplete and "fishy."

She claimed that various sets of military records contradict each other about where her husband of 18 months was during certain periods of time.

"There are holes in the records and sections on the pages that appear to have been covered over" and then copied, she said, pointing to one page of administrative remarks that skipped from Nov. 23, 1967 to Jan. 19, 1969.

"He pawned his Purple Hearts in Okinawa in 1968 for $5 apiece," Mrs. Hopkins said when asked if she had ever seen them.

The protesters were evicted on June 9 and moved their protest to the Faith Center in Glendale, a Los Angeles suburb, where three hunger strikers and about 15 supporters remained this weekend, Phillips said.

Settlement will boost city taxes

was not at all pleased with the ruling by the Texas Supreme Court.

"What everybody has got to realize about the lawsuit is that they (taxpayers) are going to have to reach into they own hip pocket to pay for it," Sloan said. "The Supreme Court reversed the ruling because they're a bunch of dang liberals."

WHAT THE SUPREME Court did was reverse an appellate court ruling which had held that the city was not liable for the "mere obstructions" at intersections. The appellate decision, written by Judge Stephen Preslar in 1979, affirmed a ruling by Trial Judge Pickett of Midland's 142nd State District Court.

Pickett exercised a judge's prerogative in finding error in points of law in the jury's verdict and rendered a "take-nothing" judgment.

The court in effect made void the jury's verdict and award of damages.

The jury in 1978 found negligence on part of the city of Midland and awarded the plaintiff $1.5 million in damages. However, in setting percentages of negligence which contributed to the accident, the jury said the city was 65 percent at fault and that the youth was 35 percent to blame.

The judgment of $975,000 is 65 percent of $1.5 million.

The jury determined that the city's failure to maintain the intersection at at G.Y. Lee Road and Turner Road and to clear it of obstructions was the "proximate cause of the injuries."

THE JURY ALSO determined that young Jezek, driving a compact automobile, failed to stop and in fact came to a "rolling stop" at the stem of the T intersection. After coming to a "California" stop on G.Y. Lee Road, the Jezek youth apparently eased the car farther into the unpaved intersection to determine if any traffic was on-coming. And that's when his car was struck at the broadside by a pickup truck driven by Robert Reyna.

Too, the jury determined that Jezek did not fail to use "due care" when he came to a "rolling stop" and entered the intersection. And in establishing responsibility, the jury also determined that the city had annexed the area of Lee and Turner Roads in 1966 and that the city was aware that the roads were city streets at time of the accident and were no longer county roads.

Though the jury recognized Jezek's failure to stop and yield the right of way was a cause of the accident, it, however, determined that such failure was not negligent.

That reasoning on part of the jury apparently was a factor in the trial court's decision to overturn the jury's verdict and render a take-nothing judgment.

IN UPHOLDING the trial court's ruling, Appellate Court Judge Preslar wrote: "If the street itself is safe, then the only danger arises from other motorists."

Supreme Court Judge Charles Barrow, however, struck down Preslar's ruling and remanded the case to the court of original jurisdiction for further proceedings.

"This dangerous obstruction," wrote Barrow, "was created by bush and weeds located on the right of way of these roads. For reasons of its own, it (city of Midland) exercised no care whatsoever to protect those who might use the roads."

That T intersection, though without a stop sign, today is cleared of weeds and mesquite and recently has been mowed even beyond the right of way.

"The city has learned it's lesson," said Midland attorney Bill Smith, who was Heagy's co-counsel in the 1978 trial. "See how cleaned up it is."

THE SUPREME COURT'S 1980 ruling also set a precedent, noted Smith.

"The precedent," he said, "is that it is the city's responsibility for keeping their intersections clean" and free of obstructions to motorists.

And Mayor Akins criticized that ruling which imposes a "duty on cities to remove obstructions to view" in the traffic lanes. That Supreme Court ruling was made retroactive to cover the 1976 Jezek accident in Midland.

"This ruling places an insufferable burden on the cities of Texas and unlimited exposure to financial liability," Akins said. "Even the Supreme Court recognized this onerous burden and refused to extend it to other units of government — only cities."

Akins said that the court offered "no answers" to such questions as what constitutes obstructions at intersections and under what circumstances.

"What about parked cars? What about the overhang of trees and shurbs from adjoining properties? How far back from intersections should the view be unobstructed?" he posed rhetorically.

"How much more money should we ask from the taxpapers and how many more employees and pieces of equipment should we purchase?"

"The court, while denying it, has in effect made insurers out of the taxpayers. In my judgment, that is wrong."

AKINS NOTED that at the Midland City Council's request, the Texas Municipal League, assisted by Texas Senator W.E. "Pete" Snelson and Rep. Tom Craddick, lobbied to "correct" the Supreme Court's ruling "but unfortunately barely failed."

"We can and will try again," Akins said. "In the meantime, the cities of Texas are left with an ill defined duty that is virtually impossible to comply with."

The city of Midland is without liability insurance to protect itself from action similar to the Jezek action.

Such insurance, noted Midland City Attorney Joe Nuessle, who along with Bill Browder, was the city counsel in the case, virtually would be prohibitive in cost — up to $250,000 a year.

"It (liability insurance) would cost us about a quarter of million dollars a year," said Nuessle. "It may get to the point that we can no longer consider it (insurance) prohibitive. It may become a reality one of these days."

However costly the Jezek-Midland compromise settlement may be to Midland and to the town's taxpayers, the arrangement in one sense is an economy plan.

"We're saving a quarter of a million dollars," said Nuessle.

First, within a week, the city is expected to write a check of $487,500 — half the amount due — to David L. Jezek and to attorney Heagy. The attorney's share of the judgment was not revealed.

Second, and also under court order, to satisfy the balance of $487,500 due over the next 15 years, the city is to sign an annuity contract for $229,275 with Crown Life Insurance Co. of Canada. The insurance company will invest the money, and from the principal and interest, will pay the $487,500 to the plaintiff over a period of 15 years beginning Aug. 1.

The compromise agreement also foregoes interest on the judgment of $975,000. With interest, a judgment of $1.3 million could have been entered against the city, Nuessle said.

"It's a good settlement," surmised Smith, who was acting in the stead of Heagy, who was in trial in Tyler and was unavailable for comment. "It's a good settlement for the city. It's a good settlement for us."

"The city was wise to settle," said Smith. "I mean that as a bystander."

Had the city or the Jezek interests not elected to settle outright and instead opted for a new trial, then there was the "possibility that that the verdict of the jury in a new trial could be substantially less than the verdict rendered in the original trial...," noted the agreement signed by Heagy and city co-counsels Nuessle and Browder.

There were no injuries Tuesday afternoon when this 10-ton crane rolled off a semi-tractor trailer as it tried to negotiate a right turn at the intersection of Midkiff Road and the south service road of Interstate 20 about 2:50 p.m. Rickey Lee Jackson of 1307 S. Loraine St. was driving the 18-wheeler, which is owned by the Turner Trucking Co. of 1712 S. Midkiff Road. A company spokesman said it took an hour and a half to right the crane and get it off the road.

Mobile home fire blamed on a faulty water heater

A mobile home burned to the ground late Tuesday afternoon in a fire that was blamed on a faulty water heater which allowed gas to build up in the house trailer.

City firemen spent two hours at the scene and used more than 2,200 gallons of water to extinguish the blaze, which broke out shortly before 6 p.m. Tuesday at the Wallace Trailer Park, County Road 113 North and East Highway 80. The home's owners were listed as Arlene and Ernest Hernandez. Firemen said the trailer was a total loss.

A westside Midland man was injured early Tuesday night when the motorcycle he was riding collided with a car in the 4300 block of Illinois Avenue about 7:20 p.m.

Listed in serious condition at Midland Memorial Hospital this morning was Randall W. Fausett, 30, of 3209 Kessler Ave. According to police, Fausett was driving a 1981 Kawasaki east on Illinois when a 1979 Pontiac driven by 27-year-old Paula Wright, 4612 Leisure Drive, backed out of a driveway and into his path. He suffered head injuries in the crash.

In theft and burglary complaints filed with city police during the past 24 hours, Arthur Sauer, who lives in a tent in a field south of West Wall Avenue in the 2800 block, told officers he returned home about 9 p.m. Tuesday and discovered his AM-FM cassette stereo tape player had been stolen. Its value was listed at $350.

R.C. Sullivan of 1413 Ventura Drive said a diamond pendant worth $1,000 was taken in a burglary of his residence. Assorted sterling silver pieces were also gone. Entry was gained through a sliding glass door. No value was placed on the silverware.

An employee of Midway Motors reported the theft of $585 worth of tires and assorted automobile parts, including two tires, a jack and a battery.

Council delays action on airport parking

completed about 2½ years ago.

In other airport matters, the council redefined duties of the Airport Planning and Development Board and sold a piece of land at Air Terminal to Metro Bank for $185,000.

When the item to advertise for 10 new buses for MidTran appeared on the agenda a month ago, the council considered eliminating the public busing system. After deciding to stick with it, the council approved going out for bids at its Tuesday meeting. But the action didn't come until after Carroll Thomas questioned some of the specifications, saying he wanted to make sure the buses would be more adequate than what they already have. However, when it came to a vote, Thomas voted against the item...as he has done on almost every purchase for MidTran.

THE IDEA FOR a new Municipal Court building finally came off the drawing board when the council approved the plans and decided to advertise for bids. Andrew Hemphill with the architect firm of Nolan and Hemphill presented the drawings, which denoted a 9,400 square foot building that will include two courtrooms.

Plans also include support facilities for clerks, a temporary detention holding tank and a pneumatic tube to link with the Public Safety Building across the street on Texas Avenue from where the new court will be constructed.

Estimated cost for the building is $579,000 with parking and outside improvements to cost an additional $47,000. Total project cost is pegged at $629,000. The structure is designed to allow for a second-story addition in the future.

Bids will be opened at the July 28 meeting.

The cost to park in downtown Midland will be rising faster than the inflation rate with the council's approval of new fees.

Fred Baker, director of public works, explained the plan calls for one-hour meters in a central core area around the County Courthouse to be upped from 25 cents an hour to 50 cents an hour; those in a core around the central area will go to 25 cents an hour; and parking on the outer fringes of downtown will be $1.25 for 10-hour meters. The city will purchase 180 new meters to implement the new plan.

ALL PENNY METERS will be eliminated, he noted.

Jess Moore opposed the plan, charging the council was preferring the higher revenues these increases would bring. The 50-cent an hour meters, he said, "would be hitting people where they don't need to be hit — you're making some people pay for those who are abusing these meters."

For the past several months, the council has looked at the problem of a downtown parking space shortage and the fact that employees are plugging the meters instead of parking in a lot.

Mayor G. Thane Akins remarked that "we're trying to create a turnover for people who need the spaces to do business."

But Moore contended that "$80 a month is too high for spaces in those lots and garages."

In other action, the council decided to put in a continuous left-turn lane on A Street from north of Illinois Avenue to south of Wall Street, eliminated some truck routes from within the city limits, approved a contract with Midland Sports, Inc. for three more years at Cubs Stadium, set a temporary construction speed zone of 45 mph on State Highway 158 and decided to require plastic bags be used by commercial customers in disposing their trash.

MMH to dedicate cancer center

the University of Texas System Cancer Center, M.D. Anderson Hospital and Tumor Institute in Houston.

Dr. LeMaistre has long been an active force in the medical community in Texas. He came to Dallas as medical director of Woodlawn Hospital Chest Division in 1959. In 1965 he was named associate dean of the University of Texas Southwestern Medical School. A year later, he was appointed vice chancellor for health affairs for the University of Texas System in Austin. He was eventually named chancellor — a post which he held until 1978 when he was named president of the University of Texas System Cancer Center and president of the University Cancer Foundation.

A graduate of Cornell University Medical College, he did his internship and residency at New York Hospital. He has served on the U.S. Surgeon General's Advisory Committee on Smoking and Health for the Department of Health, Education and Welfare; is the director-at-large for the American Cancer Society; serves on the Board of Directors for the Damon Runyon-Walter Winchell Cancer Fund; and is a member of the American Society of Clinical Oncology, the Texas Hospital Association and the International Association for the Study of Lung Cancer, among other scientific and professional memberships.

In addition, he is a member of the board of directors for the Houston Chamber of Commerce, United Savings of Texas and the Houston Natural Gas Corporation.

The formal dedication of the Allison Permian Basin Cancer Therapy Center will be followed by an open house from 2 to 4 p.m. The public is cordially invited to attend both the ceremonies and the open house.

Lactose intolerance common in school-aged children, adults

Dear Dr. Solomon: My 7-year-old son can drink a glass of milk with no ill effects; however, if he has any more at one time, he gets an upset stomach and diarrhea. When I asked the school doctor about this, he said just to limit the amount of milk my son drinks. Can you give me any more information about what the problem is and what to do about it? Is this likely to be a permanent condition, or do children eventually outgrow it? — Mrs. N.P.

Dear Mrs. P.: From this distance I can only speculate, but it appears that your son may have a condition called lactose intolerance. A person with this syndrome who drinks milk may develop cramps and diarrhea. The condition results from a deficiency of an enzyme called lactase, which breaks down lactose or milk sugar in the small intestine so that it can be digested. Lactose intolerance is most common in school-age children and adults, although it can occur in infants as well as young children.

According to Dr. John J.B. Anderson, professor of nutrition in the School of Public Health at the University of North Carolina, primary lactose intolerance is assumed to be hereditary because it only occurs in certain ethnic groups; this condition cannot be reversed. From 60 percent to 90 percent of black adults and members of other ethnic groups are lactose intolerant, compared with only 5 percent to 15 percent of white adults. However, there are relative degrees of lactase deficiency, and the majority of people are able to tolerate some milk without becoming ill.

Secondary lactose intolerance sometimes occurs after a child has had a virus infection or some other gastrointestinal disorder. In such cases the intolerance is usually of a temporary nature, and the child is once more able to drink milk when recovery is complete.

Lactose is a significant part of both animal and human milk. It furnishes about 30 percent of the calories in cow's milk, and about 40 percent in breast milk. Lactose intolerance is treated by removing foods containing lactose, such as milk and other unfermented dairy products, from the person's diet. If this becomes necessary, however, other sources of calcium should be added to the diet.

Lactose-intolerant persons can obtain the calcium they need from foods such as fermented cheeses, since the fermentation process changes the lactose in the milk so that it can be digested. Besides dairy products, sources of calcium include dark green, leafy vegetables and, to a lesser extent, sardines and salmon. Relatively significant amounts of calcium can be obtained from spinach, mustard greens, kale, collards, Brussells sprouts, broccoli, and dark cabbage.

Or you can add the enzyme, lactase, to your son's milk before he drinks it.

President Jimmy Carter makes a big splash as he fights of a "killer rabbit" with an oar on a small pond near Plains, Ga., April 21, 1979. The rabbit, which the president later guessed was fleeing in panic from a predator, actually swam toward his boat hissing menacingly, its teeth flashing and nostrils flared. Carter was not injured and reports are unclear about what became of the banzai bunny. The Associated Press obtained a copy of this photograph Monday in Washington.

Reagan to take message to three western cities

By MIKE QUALLS
Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — Irked with the slowness of Congress in dealing with tax cut proposals and faced with a tough fight with Capitol Hill Democrats over the federal budget, President Reagan will take his case directly to the people during the coming week with a mini-barnstorm of three western cities -- Los Angeles, San Antonio and Denver.

It will be the first time as president that Reagan has mounted such a personal appeal outside Washington, and his speech on Thursday in Los Angeles will mark his first public appearance in his home city since his inauguration.

Reagan will depart Washington aboard Air Force One tomorrow (Wednesday) morning and fly to San Antonio where he is to address about 2,000 delegates attending an international convention of the Junior Chamber of Commerce at a luncheon in the Hemisphere Convention Center there.

AFTER THAT ADDRESS, the president will fly on to Los Angeles, arriving at International Airport in early afternoon. He will motorcade directly to the Century Plaza Hotel, where the presidential party will remain overnight.

Tomorrow night, White House political affairs chief Lyn Nofziger is to be the guest of honor at a $150-a-ticket Los Angeles County GOP dinner to raise campaign money for next year's state legislative races.

Reagan then is to address a $50-a-plate luncheon at the Century Plaza on Thursday. About 500 persons, mostly carefully selected corporate executives and representatives of major organizations, are expected to show up for that event, which is being co-sponsored by the Los Angeles Central City Association and the California Taxpayers Association.

Reagan will fly by helicopter to his Santa Barbara-area ranch on Friday, and remain there until leaving on Monday to deliver his third speech of the tour later in the day at the Denver Hilton Hotel before about 5,000 persons attending an NAACP convention there.

THAT APPEARANCE WILL mark the president's first direct appeal to black leaders, many of whom have been among his most bitter critics, charging that blacks are not getting enough key administration appointments and maintaining that White House economic policies will primarily benefit the wealthy at the expense of the working class and needy. Blacks have been particularly unhappy about Reagan policies aimed at cutting back on social programs, which impact heavily in black communities.

Reagan, who last addressed a major gathering of black leaders early in last year's general election campaign when he spoke before an Urban League convention in New York City, defends his policies by saying that economic improvements will benefit all Americans, including blacks.

He has reacted emotionally to Democratic charges articulated by House Speaker Thomas (Tip) O'Neill, D-Mass., who charged that Reagan's economic program "is geared to the wealthy."

AT A WHITE HOUSE news conference a week ago, Reagan accused O'Neill of "sheer demagoguery" for his remarks.

Reagan spent last weekend at the presidential retreat at Camp David polishing his three speeches, which doubtless attract widespread national news media attention and are expected to set the tone for White House strategy in the coming days of the struggle with congressional Democrats over the tax cut and budget.

Reagan hinted during his news conference last week that he intented to step up White House pressure on Congress by declaring that "the people of this nation have asked for action, and they deserve it now, not somewhere down in the misty future."

The president also held out of the threat of using pressure to keep Congress in session past its Aug. 1 recess deadline if the tax cut and budget issues are no resolved by saying that not until those items are passed "can we say as elected representatives that we truly deserve a rest."

ONE OF THE CONCERNS on which Reagan is expected to place emphasis during his western tour is attempts by the Democratic-controlled House Budget Committee to, in the president's view, alter the spirit of the Gramm-Latta budget compromise adopted by Congress.

The bill emerging from the committee is about $23 billion short of the $140 billion savings Reagan wants to achieve over three years.

Army studying electronic games

ATLANTA (AP) — Instead of firing expensive rounds of ammunition at a target, tomorrow's soldiers may be zapping space monsters on video game screens as part of their training for battle.

The popular arcade games that challenge players to destroy enemy spaceships and invading aliens are "a good method to train soldiers" in hand-eye coordination, says Capt. Gary Bishop of the mechanized 24th Infantry Division at Georgia's Fort Stewart.

Bishop said Monday the Army could save thousands of dollars in live ammunition if its trainees could pick up their skills by playing the video games.

"It's expensive to put the live rounds down the range. In a test training session, we might fire 50 to 100 rounds, some of which cost up to $100 each. And the more advanced weapons have shells which cost in the thousands (of dollars)," he said.

"The Army Training Board has done some initial investigation, coordinating with Atari (a major maker of arcade and television computer games) to see if they could put some realistic controls on an existing game, exclusively for the Army's use."

Sherrell investor's dollars safe

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — The head of Sherrell Petroleum Corp. says investors' money isn't in danger — even though several investors are trying to force the firm into bankruptcy to make it account for oil and gas lease assets.

Three investors filed an application late Friday asking that the Oklahoma City firm, owned by H.L. "Lee" Sherrell, 26, be placed in involuntary bankruptcy and that an interim trustee be named to take control of its assets.

Sherrell Petroleum, its owner and two of its directors were sued by 50 investors from five states last week. The four separate federal lawsuits filed here asked for combined damages of $2.7 million, officials said Monday.

Company officials turned over some corporate records Monday to the state Securities Commission, which has asked for more records to be delivered this week.

Records in the secretary of state's office show Sherrell Petroleum's corporate state charter was suspended May 23, 1980, for failure to pay corporate rate franchise tax. The firm allegedly had been soliciting investments until late last month.

Investors and other sources told The Daily Oklahoman the company may have taken in an excess of $2 million from as many as 250 investors. Some investors recently have questioned the existence of wells the firm purportedly owned in Texas.

The bankruptcy action, filed by attorneys Harvey L. Harmon Jr., and B.J. Brockett, claims "the financial affairs of the debtor should be examined and investigated at this time."

The application also claims that the company has "purportedly closed its business and its assets are being sold or otherwise transferred or concealed."

U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Robert L. Berry has ordered that Sherrell, Mal Bucholtz, a former firm vice president and director, and Bob Cory, who at one time contemplated buying the firm, appear Wednesday for questioning.

Berry's order also makes the firm's officials furnish records of the company detailing its bank accounts, creditors, stock ledgers, income tax records for 1979 and 1980 and a description of all the firm's holdings.

Oklahoma City attorney Murray Cohen confirmed he had been asked by Sherrell Petroleum "to represent them and to clear this thing up." He said he is evaluating the case.

Earlier, Cohen had been appointed a bankruptcy trustee to take control of Shawnee entrepreneur Coy Denton Everett's two financially troubled firms, CSC Oil Co. and Freedom Energy Corp.

Contacted Monday, Sherrell said the oil company is in good shape and that he reassumed ownership from Cory. Cory allegedly had backed out because he couldn't verify Sherrell's assets.

Mexico lost nearly one-quarter of its total oil exports in May

By JUAN VASQUEZ
and
DORIS A. BYRON
(c) 1981, The Los Angeles Times

MEXICO CITY — Mexico has reportedly lost contracts for nearly one-quarter of its total oil exports in the last month and is considering a reduction in output rather than accepting cuts in the price it charges for its crude oil.

A foreign oil analyst in Mexico City said Monday that Mexico has lost contracts for 200,000 barrels of oil a day — nearly a fourth of the 827,750-barrel export production reported this spring by Pemex, the state-run petroleum monopoly. Mexican officials could not be reached for comment.

The report came as a number of nations including Algeria, Libya, Nigeria and Saudi Arabia reportedly were revaluating production levels and-or pricing in the face of a worldwide oil glut that has driven demand and prices down.

One of Mexico's latest losses came when Cie. Francaise des Petroles, a large French petroleum company, announced it would slash its Mexican imports in half, to 50,000 barrels a day, beginning July 1.

Mexican officials have said the country wants to raise prices in July but have not said by how much. The country's top oil official lost his job earlier this month after he cut oil prices from $34.50 to $30.50 a barrel in the face of worldwide glut.

Word that oil-exporting Mexico may reduce its production rather than accept sagging world oil prices came in a telex message sent by the Mexican government to a member of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries and released to wire services Monday.

The message said Mexico "is appraising the possibility of reducing planned export volumes rather than accepting recent reductions in the price of oil." The move would be consistent with OPEC policy adopted at the Cartel's recent meetings in Geneva.

The foreign oil analyst, who requested anonymity, said Mexico has no choice but to cut production in the face of dwindling demand for its crude oil.

"It's purely a response to the fact that the price is high, demand is low, and people have a hard time refining (Mexico's heavy) crude oil," he said.

The analyst said Mexico is actively seeking companies or governments to buy its petroleum exports, but without much luck. Japan recently expressed little interest in a Mexican offer to triple crude oil shipments to that country, to 300,000 barrels a day.

In Japan, a government official said a Japanese company had received an offer of Saudi Arabian light crude oil on the spot, or non-contract, market for about $31.50 a barrel, below the official Saudi government selling price of $32 a barrel.

African nations vow to keep oil prices high

ALGIERS, Algeria (AP) — Oil ministers from the African countries that charge the world's highest prices for their crude oil said today they are "determined to maintain their crude oil sales prices at current official levels."

The joint communique issued by minnisters from Nigeria, Libya, Algeria and Gabon apparently rejected pleas by oil companies, who have claimed that the African prices, which range up to $41 a barrel, are far too high.

The countries denounced "the information campaign against OPEC organized by certain oil companies, particularly through Western media."

A worldwide oversupply of oil has sent prices in spot markets, where oil not sold under long-term contract is traded, below the $32 a barrel charged by Saudi Arabia and well under the prices charged by the Africans.

The production of the African countries has been down substantially as many oil companies have refused to buy oil at the high prices. Negotiations on third-quarter prices have been going on this week, and many oil companies were hoping for concessions.

The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, meeting last month in Geneva, Switzerland, agreed to freeze prices. The four countries today "unanimously reaffirmed their determination" to abide by that decision, although some OPEC members have reduced prices.

Britain and Mexico, both major producers not members of OPEC, have cut prices but Mexico's top oil official was forced to resign and the country is now trying to regain at least part of the cut.

Explosion, fire at petroleum refinery

PASADENA, Texas (AP) — An explosion rocked a petroleum refinery on the Houston Ship Channel early today, injuring five workers and triggering a series of fires, authorities said.

About 30 fire units from neighboring communities and industrial plants stood by before firefighters from Pasadena and Crown Central Petroleum Corp. doused the blazes three hours after the 5 a.m. CDT blast.

Two of the injured were burned over about 35 percent of their boies and were transferred by helicopter to the burn unit of Hermann Hospital in Houston. Three others were reported in stable condition at Pasadena hospitals.

Crown Central officials had no comment on the incident.

Witnesses said an explosion shook the plant and was followed immediately by a fire ball that moved up the sides of a 100-foot tall processing unit.

Fires broke out in other sections of the plant, and the blazes were brought under control as pipelines carrying flammable materials were shut down, firefighters said.

Several roads in the ship channel area were blocked off and the Washburn Tunnel, linking highways on both sides of the channel, was closed for about two hours, creating giant traffic snarls for early-morning motorists.

Former inspector pleads guilty to probe charges

ABINGDON, Va. (AP) — A former federal mine inspection supervisor in Virginia has pleaded guilty to charges stemming from a multistate probe of alleged corruption involving federal mine inspectors.

Paul Edward Merritt, 43, former inspection supervisor for the Tazewell County office of the U.S. Mine Safety and Health Administration, was given Monday a two-year suspended sentence and a $7,500 fine.

U.S. District Judge Glen Williams, who sentenced Merritt during a brief hearing here, said there was no evidence Merritt did anything to compromise his job.

Rather, Williams said, evidence indicated Merritt was trying to make a job decision that resulted in a conflict of interest.

Merritt was charged in a four-count indictment returned in April with conflicts of interest for working as federal mine inspection supervisor while at the same time having a part interest in a Tazewell County coal mine.

He was accused in the indictment of lying to federal investigators in efforts to conceal his interest in the mine.

Merritt denied any wrongdoing during a brief telephone interview in April.

"There's no truth to it," he said of the conflict of interest charges.

During Monday's hearing, Merritt pleaded guilty under a plea agreement in which the government dropped conspiracy charges against him. Under the agreement, Merritt pleaded guilty to conflict of interest and making false statements.

U.S. technology lagging behind

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of U.S. patents issued to foreigners has almost doubled in the last 20 years because American technology has lagged, the victim of dwindling research efforts in this country.

In 1960, about 20 percent of patents were claimed by foreigners. That climbed to about 37 percent by last year, with Japan, West Germany, England, France and Switzerland collecting the largest numbers, according to Patent Office records.

"It's a dramatic change. ... American inventions being patented are going down dramatically, and there's no indication that's changing, and foreign (patents) are going up dramatically," said Michael Blommer, executive director of the American Patent Law Association.

"It's a symptom, a clear and unmistakable symptom, that America is falling behind in new products and in products made with new processes. We're falling behind and we're falling behind regularly," Blommer said.

According to experts, a major part of the problem is the drop in research and development spending by American corporations.

"I think that the spending in American corporations for research and development is down and I think the statistics show it," Blommer said. "Fewer and fewer Americans are laboring right at the cutting edge of new things, but overseas more and more foreigners are right there at what they call the state of the art."

While the United States pours money into an ailing giant like Chrysler, he said, "in Japan and Germany they're pouring money into the most advanced industries, computers, optical scanners ... the things of the future."

Part of the problem may have been overconfidence in American technology in the past, suggested Donald Banner, a former commissioner of patents and trademarks who now heads the Intellectual Property Owners Association, a group of people who invent or create things and hold patents.

In the last 20 years American technology has slipped badly, Banner said. "We have not tried to stay up there. ... We have just assumed that we would always be doing it better than anybody else.

"In the meantime people all over the world, paricularly in Japan, as we well know, Germany and elsewhere, have been busy inventing and creating new things," he said.

That innovation is encouraged by foreign tax laws, noted Eric Hultman, general counsel for the Senate Judiciary Committee, which supervises the Patent Office.

Ralph Oman, an aide to Sen. Charles Mathias Jr., R-Md., said, "Foreigners get a great deal more in the way of economic incentive to conduct research and development, far more than we give our companies, so they're making more discoveries and therefore there are that many more they can patent in this country."

The solution, said Banner, is to encourage research, provide tax incentives and improve the patent office and the patent system in general. He said the United States is "going to have to make things which are more desirable, less expensive, better quality than anybody in the world, and if you don't do that you die."

"In other words, you can't assume that America is going to be No. 1. We're got to earn it or we're going to lose it," he said.

Besides U.S. tax laws that discourage research spending, Blommer said that many of the resources available to develop new products must be used to maneuver the products through a tangle of government regulations.

Banner noted that regulations also eat into the profitability of a product because the 17-year life of a patent keeps running even though the product may have to be tested for years before it goes on the market.

Pending legislation would correct this, he said, extending patents to compensate for time lost awaiting regulatory approval.

Banner also suggested that the Patent Office, which he termed "a disaster," be given more money and removed from the Commerce Department, which also spreads its wings over a brood of other agencies as varied as the census bureau and the weather service.

"That would say to American inventors, 'We think this whole thing is important,'" he said.

Blommer charged that the Patent Office is doing a second-rate job by not checking thoroughly enough into inventions. The agency is not computerized and does all its work on paper.

"The patents that it issues are not as reliable as they could be, as they should be, and American corporations clearly know this," Blommer said. He said some firms hesitate to spend the time and money to get patents that may be challenged in court.

The patent process, invention, is the technological seed core of the future, Banner said.

"If you don't care about growth ... a lot more people are going to be out happened to us?'

"I'll tell you what happened to us. Somebody out there, some country out there, thought technology was important and beat us again."

New lawsuit troubles empire of dairy baron

PALESTINE Texas (AP) — The financially troubled empire of cattle-leasing baron Clayton McKenzie has received another setback in the form of a multimillion lawsuit filed by a Denver, Colo. agricultural bank, a Palestine newspaper says.

McKenzie, known as a "messiah of milk producers" after he founded a $25 million rent-a-cow business, is accused in the suit of conspiring to "cheat, defraud and deceive" Wells Fargo Agricultural Credit Corp. to obtain a $6.5 million loan last January, The Palestine Herald-Press reported.

The suit names as defendants McKenzie's Quality Holstein Leasing Associates Limited Partnership, McKenzie and his wife, Sharon, and Allen Nicholas, Pat Marler, Dan Scarbrough and Matt Swift, the newspaper said.

Last week, attorneys for McKenzie, Quality Holstein Leasing, Inc. and two affiliated companies filed petitions for reorganization in a federal bankruptcy court in Dallas. McKenzie is seeking to freeze action on demands for payment filed by 180 creditors of his Anderson County enterprises.

The Wells Fargo suit was filed in April in a federal court in Denver, The Herald-Press said. The Denver bank is seeking $6.5 million in actual damages and a $30 million punitive award.

Last January, Wells Fargo loaned QHL, Inc. nearly $6.5 million to purchase dairy cows later to be leased to qualified dairy operators, the suit states. Under the credit agreement, Wells Fargo claimed security interest in all QHL accounts and rights to all rent payments on all cattle leases, the suit said.

To monitor the leases, Wells Fargo requested that QHL provide copies of all lease agreements, bills of sale, and other supporting documents.

Between January and March, QHL officers met that requirement by submitting copies of lease agreements to WF officials and attesting to signatures on leases, the suit says.

Some time after the bank began dispersing the $6.5 million loan, it began examining the lease agreements QHL made with various dairy farmers and "through either mistake, accident, fraud, theft, defalcation or other methods, funds were being diverted from QHL and certain bills of sale and leasing documents ... were false and fictitious," the suit alleges.

River bank to remain boundary

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — The states of Oklahoma and Texas have recommended to the U.S. Supreme Court that the south bank of the Red River, partially covered by Lake Texoma, should remain the boundary between them.

The court on Monday forwarded the joint Oklahoma-Texas recommendation to Denver attorney John Carver, who as "special master" in the border dispute, has scheduled an August hearing on the case.

Their recommendation runs counter to a request by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission that the boundary be shifted so that the entire lake and the Denison Dam hydroelectric plant are in Oklahoma, officials said Monday.

That would put Texas-consumed power from the installation in interstate commerce for the first time, and would make it subject to federal regulation.

The high court agreed last year to settle arguments over the location of the Oklahoma-Texas border near Denison Dam.

The south river bank has served as the state border since a 1922 U.S. Supreme Court ruling, but the need for a new border decision was prompted several years ago by a controversy over electric-power rights.

Texas electric utilities that receive power from Denison Dam do business only within the boundaries of Texas, but if Oklahoma assumed jurisdiction over the dam, the firms would become involved in interstate commerce, placing them under FERC regulations.

Texas is the only state in the union in which major power companies are not federally regulated by FERC, because no power travels across state lines.

The FERC recommendation prompted Texas to file suit against Oklahoma in the U.S. Supreme Court, even though Oklahoma has not tried to control Denison Dam.

Leon J. Barish, assistant attorney general for Texas, said the suit was filed in an effort to lay the border question to rest.

If the Supreme Court accepts the states' recommendation, he said, it would be "the first time a definite ruling is made that the boundary is what it was prior to construction of the dam."
