Melanie Schmidt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Schmidt, 3101 Whittle Way, prepares a jar of sun tea — a popular drink for some Midland residents.

Midlanders 'soaking up sun' via solar-powered iced tea

By HOLLY LONGABERGER
Staff Writer

The glass jars are everywhere in Midland, sitting on patios, window ledges and the ground literally soaking up the sun.

It's sun tea, and the John Schmidt family of 3101 Whittle Way drinks a lot of the sun-drenched liquid.

Ms. Schmidt makes a gallon a day.

"My husband drinks a lot of sun tea and the family likes its taste better," she said.

To make the tea, she uses three family size bags or five to six regular size bags.

"We like our tea weak."

She then takes the tea out in the morning and retrieves it at night.

Although Ms. Schmidt said she read that sun tea needs to be in the sun for for only three to four hours, she makes it as long as the weather is warm outside and "the sun is out."

The Schmidts have been making sun tea since their move from the East Coast 10 years ago.

"I never made it back East, but I suppose you can," she added.

Collette Nicholas, a clerk at General Nutrition Center in Midland Park Mall, said since sun tea is made naturally, it is better for you than the instant teas.

"And," she said, "it just tastes better."

Many people have their own ways of making sun tea and have variations.

Some add fruit, spices or other flavors.

According to Don Goodrum of the Midland County Health Department, Midland restaurants could serve sun tea if the city or bottled water used was properly protected. But, Goodrum added, he does not believe restaurants would because of the great volume of tea they sell and the amount of time involved.

Although they do not sell sun tea, Mary Ontiveros, breakfast manager at Grandy's, 3201 Andrews Highway, said they serve a lot of iced tea.

"We make about five gallons in the morning and four gallons in the afternoon," she said.

High court to review Texaco bond ruling

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today agreed to consider forcing Texaco Inc. to post a potentially ruinous $12 billion bond while appealing a multibillion-dollar judgment won in Texas by Pennzoil Co.

The court voted to review a ruling that Texaco need only put $1 billion in security, a requirement the corporation satisfied by pledging stock in its Canadian subsidiary.

The court's decision is not expected until sometime in 1987.

A state court jury in Texas last year found that Texaco improperly interfered with Pennzoil's planned acquisition of an interest in Getty Oil Co. The jury awarded Pennzoil $11.1 billion against Texaco.

Texas, like most states, requires the losing side in such cases to post bond to protect the winning side. Texas law requires a bond posted equal to the judgment before the losing side may appeal.

But lawyers for Texaco succeeded in having U.S. District Judge Charles Brient in White Plains, N.Y., enjoin the $12 billion bond. Brient ruled that such a high bond effectively denied Texaco the right to appeal.

The 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the injunction, ruling last February that the bond required under Texas law "lacks any rational basis, since it would destroy Texaco and render its right of appeal in Texas an exercise in futility."

In seeking Supreme Court review, lawyers for Pennzoil said the case represents "an unprecedented intrusion by a federal court into ongoing court proceedings."

They added: "The logic that generated this federal intervention admits no limiting principles and can be contained only by the most arbitrary of parameters."

Lawyers for Texaco urged the justices to reject the appeal, arguing that "such a narrow and unusual case" should not win Supreme Court review.

"The posting of a mandatory $12 billion bond was impossible not just for Texaco but for any judgment debtor," Texaco's lawyers said.

Interest on the jury award continues to grow — at about $3 million a day.

Achille Lauro trial continues

GENOA, Italy (AP) — A Portuguese waiter and an Italian hairdresser who were aboard the Achille Lauro testified today that a hijacker forced them to throw overboard the body and then the wheelchair of an elderly American passenger.

The waiter then identified one defendant in court, Youssef Magied al-Molqi, as the gunman who gave them the order.

The testimony came on the fourth day of the trial in the Oct. 7-9 hijacking of the Italian liner and the shooting death of Leon Klinghoffer of New York. The court is trying 15 defendants, three of them accused as hijackers.

Speaking through an interpreter, waiter Manuel De Souza told the court that he was summoned and ordered to bring Klinghoffer, 69, in his wheelchair to the deck.

De Souza said that having done that, he was ordered to go back down to where other hostages were being held.

Minutes later, he testified, he heard shots and then was summoned again, this time to throw Klinghoffer's body into the Mediterranean off Syria.

He said that when he arrived on deck, he saw Klinghoffer, bleeding from a chest wound, already dead.

De Souza and Ferruccio Alberti, the hairdresser, heaved Klinghoffer's body into the sea and then threw overboard the wheelchair, the waiter testified.

He recalled he then went inside to wash the blood off his clothes.

When asked to identify the man who gave him the orders, De Souza turned around and pointed at Molqi in a metal-barred defendant's cage.

Alberti said he couldn't be sure which defendant was the one who ordered him to get rid of Klinghoffer's body.

Rain doesn't dampen Houston's 'hug'

HOUSTON (AP) — Thunder, lightning and a downpour failed to dampen the enthusiasm of the estimated 25,000 people who joined hands in Houston to form a 32-mile line and raise $210,000 to help the area's hungry.

"Houston could use a big hug right now," said Glen Hagenbach, 31, of Houston as he helped line up people near downtown for the Sunday "Hands Around Houston" fund-raiser. "I think all cities should do this."

The rain poured down five minutes before participants began holding hands and singing, "We Are Houston, The City's Heart and Soul."

Despite gusting winds and the thunder and lightning that accompanied the heavy rain, most of the handholders finished the song's three verses and chorus.

"I am a family man and I know what it means when my kids are hungry," said John Thomas, 47, of Texas City, before the festivities began.

Another participant, Walt Sepaniac, 26, of Houston, said the city's residents raised thousands of dollars a few years ago to help dwellers of a tent city.

"I'm here to do it again," he said.

The crowd was jovial and cooperative, shouting and posing as television and radio crews passed.

Police Sgt. Dave Staruchan said the line of people extended about 32 miles around Loop 610 with many people joining in at the last minute. Fund-raiser director Jim Topping estimated the crowd at 22,000 to 25,000.

As of 7 p.m. Saturday, Hands Around Houston had raised $200,000 in $10 tickets with another $10,000 in tickets sold early Sunday, he said. He said the final amount would not be known for a few days.

State tax writers discover you win some, lose some

THE TEXAS BUDGET CRISIS

By STEVE LEVINE

AUSTIN — The lobbyists came out in droves. Newspaper publishers, car and ship repairers, home remodelers and custom computer software manufacturers flocked to the Capitol.

They won.

Amusement park operators, cable TV groups, laundries, bowling alleys and many others also showed up.

They lost.

Trying to finance $1.3 billion a year in school reforms and highway improvements, House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Stan Schlueter waited through three long, hot weeks in June 1984 before he made his move. Seven days before the sometimes-bitter special session ended, Schlueter unveiled his tax plan.

More than half of the new money would come from broadening the sales tax base, adding many goods and services that previously had been exempted. Schlueter opposed Gov. Mark White's plan to raise the state sales tax rate from 4 percent to 5 percent, saying he wanted to save "that last penny" for the day Texas would need it to stave off an income tax.

Like the lobbyists who appeared to keep their goods and services off the tax rolls, Schlueter won some and lost some. A down-to-the-wire compromise with the Senate eliminated newspaper advertising, car and ship repairs and home remodeling, replacing that revenue with a 0.125-percent increase in the tax rate.

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby sees that special session "crack" in the sales tax exemptions and exclusions as the solution to the multi-billion-dollar revenue shortfall the Legislature will face next year. He points out that four items — education, highways, human services and prisons — eat up the bulk of the state's budget.

"They are our primary responsibilities," Hobby told the Texas Lyceum Association last month. Adding up the dollar totals for the group of businessmen, civic leaders and academicians, Hobby asked, "How many of you want to cut?"

The audience understood Hobby's point. "That is $31.6 billion and no one wants to cut-cut-cut. That brings us to a political nightmare: finding additional revenues."

For Hobby, the way out of that nightmare is by continuing what Schlueter started. He proposes adding enough goods and services to the sales tax base, excluding food and medicine, to raise enough new revenues to balance the budget. Hobby doesn't dream, however, that the lobby will stay away next year any more than it did in 1984.

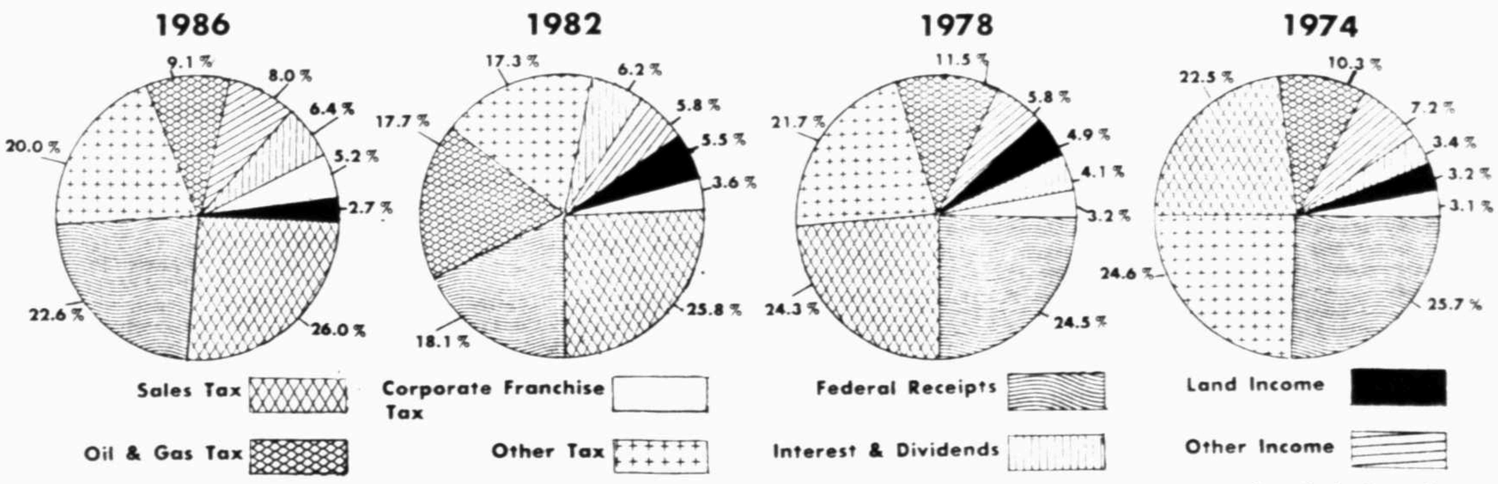

"It's never easy," he said in an interview last week.

Comptroller Bob Bullock, another advocate of sales-tax broadening, has his staff working on a report to show just how much money the state can raise. "You'd be pulling in the lawyers, of course," Bullock said. "You're pulling in the accountants. You'd be pulling in the consultants, lobbyists — that'd be interesting.

"Just about everybody you can think of." That, he explained, is the key to overcoming the individual don't-tax-me lobbyists.

Income tax talk taxes minds of most Texas legislators

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Talking about increasing taxes makes most politicians nervous, and among Texas legislators nothing pumps up the old blood pressure like the words "income tax."

Even though a graduated, 2-to-4-percent personal income tax would raise nearly $5 billion for the 1987-1988 biennium and erase the state's fiscal problem, most state leaders see little chance of that happening.

Some lawmakers are building support for a constitutional amendment to prohibit a state income tax. Their supporters include both gubernatorial candidates, Democrat Mark White and Republican Bill Clements. Other top officials, including a recently converted House Speaker Gib Lewis, call that a bad idea as well, although they won't say it won't happen.

Both White and Clements promise they will veto any income tax bill that would cross the governor's desk. But the leaders of both houses of the Legislature say neither man will have the opportunity to veto a bill that removes Texas from the list of seven states with no personal income tax.

Lewis held up two fingers, the traditional legislative sign for a "no" vote, when asked about an income tax. "You'll see a lot of things happen before you get to an income tax," he said.

"I can't conceive of an income tax," said Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, presiding officer of the Senate. "It's a basic policy in this state."

In response to a request from a state representative heading the effort to pass a constitutional prohibition against the income tax, Texas A&M University economist Melvin Greenhut prepared a report calling it "the worst of all taxes."

"Because the tax shelters, gifts and other devices provided by law are best taken advantage of by the very wealthy, the burden of the income tax falls heaviest on middle income earning people, typically the salaried employee who is working towards a better standard of living for self and family," Greenhut wrote.

"The income tax in the United States encourages leisure instead of work, excessive consumption instead of saving, excessive paper work and the proliferation of the least productive class of workers imaginable, men and women who in other employment could be of great value to the country: namely, the tax lawyers and tax accountants of the nation."

Norman Glickman, professor of urban policy at the University of Texas at Austin, argues that a state income tax would help Texas in several ways. He claims that a state's commitment to education and providing necessary services outweighs its tax burden when it comes to attracting new industry and business.

South Africa's 'emergency' to continue?

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A pro-government newspaper today reported that South Africa's nationwide state of emergency will remain in force after the expected signing this week of tough new security legislation.

Meanwhile, the government dropped treason charges against four anti-apartheid activists in Natal, and two beaches were shut in Durban because of an oil refinery bombing that caused an oil slick.

The Citizen newspaper, attributing its report to unidentified government sources, said officials felt that unrest had diminished since the June 12 emergency declaration, and that the emergency regulations should be maintained indefinitely.

The newspaper said the new security bills — one allowing detention without trial for 180 days and the other authorizing broad police powers in designated "unrest areas" — would probably be held in reserve until after the emergency was lifted.

According to the Citizen, the government was encouraged by the strengthening since June 12 of the South African currency, the rand, from less than 36 to 40 U.S. cents, as well as continued resistance by President Reagan and British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher to harsher sanctions against South Africa.

Government officials said one reason they imposed the state of emergency was because opposition to the bills in Parliament's Indian and mixed-race chambers prevented their passage in time for the June 16 anniversary of the 1976 Soweto black riots.

The emergency gives police and troops wide powers and imposes unprecedented curbs on the press. The state Bureau for Information, the only source of official information under the emergency, has reported 55 deaths in anti-apartheid and other violence since the emergency began.

In the Natal province city of Pietermaritzburg, the government today dropped all charges against four anti-apartheid activists who been on trial for treason since October, marking the total collapse of a 13-month-old case which initially involved 16 defendants.

Natal Attorney General Michael Imber gave no reason for requesting that the case be halted.

Charges were dropped against Thozimile Gqweta, president of the South African Allied Workers Union, and three other leaders of the union, Sisa Njikaleni, Sam Kikini and Isaac Ngcobo.

The four had been accused of high treason for allegedy furthering the African National Congress black guerrilla group's campaign to topple the government.

Charges against 12 other activists arrested in the case in May 1985, including top leaders of the United Democratic Front anti-apartheid coalition, were dropped in December.

In the Indian Ocean port city of Durban, two beaches remained closed today because of oil pollution caused by a bomb explosion at an oil refinery, one of three bombings in Durban late Saturday and early Sunday.

A government pollution officer, Bill Bricknell, said the sea had broken up most of the oil and it was unlikely to spread to other beaches.

No injuries were reported in the blasts, which occurred at the refinery, outside a downtown movie theater and at a chemical plant south of the city. A week earlier, three women were killed and 69 people injured in a car-bombing along Durban's seafront boulevard.

There was no claim of responsibility for the bombings.

The explosion at the refinery touched off a blaze that burned for two hours near giant fuel storage depots surrounding the complex.

Throughout the day, firefighters and conservation workers sprayed anti-pollution foam onto a slick of crude oil more than a half-mile long that seeped from a ruptured pipeline into the sea.

Waite carries letter from hunger striking detainees

LONDON (AP) — Anglican envoy Terry Waite returned from South Africa today with a letter he said was given to him by detainees on hunger strike over alleged ill treatment in prison.

"We are on hunger strike," said the letter read aloud by Waite to reporters at Heathrow Airport.

"We are not allowed basic rights such as washing and toilet paper. The food is bad. When we complain the authorities don't want to listen and we have one more right taken away. Please publish this in the newspapers for communal support," Waite read from the letter.

Waite, diplomatic aide to the Rev. Robert Runcie, archbishop of Canterbury and head of the Church of England, declined to say how he got the letter, or how many prisoners it represented.

The writer was "an educated professional black male," Waite said. "I know his name, I know his prison, but I'm not going to reveal it."

The letter ended: "Please apply for rights to visit us."

South Africa's current state of emergency, in force since June 12, allows detention without trial or access to relatives and legal counsel.

Severe curbs on journalists make it impossible to gauge the number of people detained under the nationwide emergency, but estimates by church and human rights groups outside South Africa range as high as 3,000.

Waite, who has visited Lebanon to seek the release of Westerners kidnapped in Beirut, was sent to South African by Runcie to investigate the situation of the Anglican Church under the emergency.

He said he had visited Anglican Bishop Sigisbert Ndwandwe, who he said was in detention and had had his house firebombed.

"Petrol-bombing is being used at the moment as a warning and intimidatory practice," said Waite. "The bishop is now in a local prison. They have taken away his private diary and papers. His wife is not being granted access to him."

He said he knew of seven other ministers who had been detained.

"When I tried to see people in prison I was always fobbed off with one excuse or another," Waite said.

He called Ndwandwe "a very quiet and very deeply Christian man," adding, "His wife said to me, 'it's almost better to face the death of your husband than to face this detention.' "

Waite said he knew of a church congregation that was detained in the Durban area, and that he would give details later in the day.

Asked if he had met blacks who opposed economic sanctions against South Africa to force reforms by the government, Waite replied, "Some said to me, 'We are told we could suffer under sanctions but we are suffering all the time anyway. Our suffering is incredible.' "

He said Dr. Beyers Naude, general secretary of the South African Council of Churches and a leading Afrikaner dissident, had told him, "This government will not bring in reforms without pressure. Show us any other non-violent way (other than sanctions) and we will support it."

Asked whether he had been followed during his stay, Waite replied, "I was largely ignored but I believe my telephone conversations were listened to. I was searched. (Anglican) Bishop Desmond Tutu, when he goes into Soweto, is searched. It's intimidating."

Reagan will 'wait and see' if diplomat backs summit

WASHINGTON (AP) — As President Reagan prepared to greet new Soviet Ambassador Yuri V. Dubinin, administration officials voiced caution on whether the meeting would bring any breakthrough on prospects for a summit this year.

"This will be an opportunity for a direct eye-level Soviet contact with the president if they are so prepared and so desire," White House spokesman Edward Djerejian said. "But we have had no signals. We will just have to wait and see."

Dubinin, who has returned from consultations in Moscow, was among several ambassadors formally presenting their diplomatic credentials to the president in the Oval Office today.

The scheduled meeting comes three days after the U.S. government ordered the expulsion of Col. Vladimir M. Izmaylov, a Soviet military attache who was accused of spying.

FBI officials say Izmaylov, who was arrested Thursday night in Ft. Washington, Md., following an undercover operation, was seeking sensitive defense secrets about such progams as the Strategic Defense Initiative.

Dubinin was named Soviet ambassador to the United States to succeed Anatoly Dobrynin after Dobrynin was appointed to the Communist Party Central Committee Secretariat on March 6.

Although today's meeting is a formality, there has been speculation Dubinin might bring a Soviet response to a letter Reagan wrote to Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev this month suggesting a summit planning session soon, perhaps in Europe.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze were originally scheduled to hold such a meeting in May in Washington, but the Soviets called it off after the U.S. bombing raids on Libya on April 15.

Reagan and Gorbachev agreed at their first meeting in Geneva in November to meet again in the United States this year and in the Soviet Union next year.

In a report to the newly selected Central Committee of the Communist Party in Moscow on June 16, Gorbachev said a new meeting with Reagan was possible but only if "real agreements" seemed within reach.

An administration official, speaking on condition that he not be identified, said early this month that diplomatic exchanges about a summit have been accelerated, both in Geneva and Moscow, since the president's announcement May 27 that the United States is no longer bound by the arms limits of the unratified SALT II treaty.

Last Thursday in a commencement speech at Glassboro High School in New Jersey, Reagan said he had indicated to Gorbachev "my willingness for our representatives to meet to prepare for the next summit."

"The location is unimportant," Reagan said. "What matters is that such a meeting take place in mutual earnestness so that we can make progress at the next summit."

Reagan also declared that the latest Soviet proposal in arms control talks in Geneva could, "if both sides genuinely want progress ... represent a turning point in the effort to make ours a safer and more peaceful world."

The new Soviet proposal, described in general terms by Gorbachev in his June 16 report, calls for arms limits some of which are close to those in the existing U.S. proposal, first broached in November.

The U.S. proposal, for instance, calls for an overall limit of total ballistic missiles and bombers of 1,800 for each side; the Soviets proposed 1,600.

The Soviet proposal was made after Reagan's announcement on May 27.

Texas teen-ager given 'clean bill of health' on return from Moscow

GRAPEVINE (AP) — A week after being hospitalized in the Soviet Union following a severe asthma attack, Lisa Riggs returned home to Texas where she got a hug from her mother and a clean bill of health from her family doctor.

While attending a circus in Moscow a week ago with high school classmates, the 17-year-old Irving senior stopped breathing after an asthma attack.

On Sunday, she came home, arriving in a wheelchair at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport. Carrying a red rose, she said she felt much better and her Soviet doctors had treated her well.

Lisa giggled, cried and wrapped her bruised arms around her mother as soon as she was wheeled through the doors of American Airlines customs at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport.

"I'm feeling a lot better. I'm tired," she said, after the final leg of her flight from Frankfurt, West Germany, with her father.

The silence that followed her hospitalization a week ago prompted her parents to pursue several bureaucratic channels before finally untangling the red tape that kept them from getting reports about their daughter's condition.

TAX

"If you included everybody as much as possible, ... if all of them are treated equally and uniformally, I really question whether the rest of them would let one group out," Bullock said. "I don't think it'll be that big a battle."

Over the years, the sales tax has accounted for an ever-increasing portion of the state's revenue pie, growing steadily along with user fees and interest income to replace a proportionately smaller contribution from oil and gas severance taxes. "Lobbyists" for the poor, never a particularly influential voice in the Capitol, complain that the sales tax is regressive and thus its growing importance places a heavier-and-heavier burden on those who can least afford it.

In a 1980 study, University of Missouri economist Donald Phares showed that Texans with an annual income of less than $3,000 pay 4.34 percent of that income in sales tax. But someone over the $30,000-a-year mark pays only 1.5 percent in sales tax.

Pointing out that business pays about 60 percent of the sales tax in Texas, Bullock rejected the importance of that argument.

"We're 47th or 48th in per capita taxation," he said. "We're the third most populous state. I can't hardly believe that it would be an unfair situation compared to anybody else."

Bullock believes broadening the sales tax makes sense for Texas.

He has repeatedly pointed out that oil and gas taxes, which during the boom days of the early 1980s provided as much as 18 percent of the state budget, rise and fall only with the price of oil. For lawmakers trying to provide services that keep up with inflation and a growing population, a tax that grows with neither provides little stability, he says.

About 15 percent of the state's taxes keep up with population but not inflation. They include the gasoline, alcohol and cigarette taxes, all of which the Legislature increased during the 1984 special session.

The remaining two-thirds of Texas' tax revenues do track inflation and population growth fairly well. The sales taxes and corporate franchise tax comprise the great majority of that group.

But as the state's economy changes away from an agriculture-petroleum-manufacturing base toward a more service-dominated foundation, the sales tax is not keeping up. A study Bullock prepared for the 1985 Legislature shows that applying the sales tax to a variety of personal, professional, construction and repair services could bring in nearly $550 million per year.

Taxing materials used in manufacturing would provide a whopping $3 billion per year.

House Speaker Gib Lewis calls a tax increase the "last resort" to balancing the budget after lawmakers have exhausted all possible cuts. Lewis sees sales-tax broadening as the top option if he has to move to that last resort, but he predicts legislators will turn first to legalized parimutuel wagering on horse races and perhaps a lottery as sources of state income.

In addition to the state's "take" from horse tracks, Lewis said legalized betting on the ponies will help the treasury by establishing a brand new industry Texas needs.

"That's another (General Motors) Saturn plant," he said. "It helps your farmers. It helps your low-income people, your uneducated people. It's a job system."

State Treasurer Ann Richards has another idea which, while it won't create much new revenue, could save the state about $50 million in lost interest money each year. "Almost every day this year," Ms. Richards told the Legislature in a June 9 memo, her office has had to transfer money from other state funds into the general revenue fund so that the state's main checking account will have enough money to pay its bills.

In 1984 and again last year, Ms. Richards asked lawmakers for authority to issue cash management notes. In essence she would borrow low-interest money from big banking houses to cover the cash flow problem in general revenue and leave the other funds' money in accounts that earn a higher rate of interest. If lawmakers write a balanced budget, she said, she can pay off the notes before the end of each biennium and make a little money for the Treasury through the difference in interest rates.

"Texas has already lost $20 million in potential interest income this year because money from other state funds was withdrawn to pay general revenue fund bills," she told the Legislature. "If Texas does not find another way to solve its general revenue fund cash flow problems, the state could lose as much as $100 million in interest income during the next biennium."

INCOME

"State taxes don't matter very much," Glickman told the Texas Lyceum Association last month.

Increasing the sales tax to make up a projected $2 billion deficit, Glickman maintained, would put an additional burden on the poor and strain that tax's ability to raise revenue. If the Legislature adopts an income tax, he said, it could reduce the sales tax rate and cut the state's dependence on that regressive tax.

Finally, Glickman said, business might accept an income tax because of its reliability. "Firms will not have to worry about which nuisance tax or which tax rate will be increased during the next legislative session," he said.

But Comptroller Bob Bullock said business won't lose that worry for a while at least. "The possibility of an income tax passing this Legislature is absolutely 1 in 25,000," he said.

Bullock is more concerned about the move, headed by state Rep. Bill Ceverha of Richardson, to impose a constitutional amendment prohibiting an income tax. New York bankers, Bullock said, have warned him that Texas' bond rating depends on its commitment to providing services.

Economist Bernard Weinstein of Southern Methodist University said such a constitutional amendment "would be disastrous" for Texas because it tells the bankers, "We are going to limit our fiscal capacity."

Lewis originally signed on as a charter member of Ceverha's "Texans Against a State Income Tax."

"My first knee-jerk reaction is, 'Yeah,' " Lewis said. "But really if you think it out, you really are playing havoc for the future of this state when you tie the hands of the legislators of the future trying to look for revenue to meet the needs of the state."

Hobby agreed, saying, "I don't know that it's good public policy to foreclose any options."

Ceverha, surprised by the news that Lewis had defected, said he would continue to organize his support. He rejected the argument that a constitutional amendment would limit future legislatures, saying another amendment could remove that constraint.

"If the people want it, they'll approve it," Ceverha said.

All constitutional amendments require a two-thirds vote from both houses of the Legislature and the approval of a majority of voters in a general election.

"This is much too important an issue," Ceverha said. "If we talk about putting horse racing or a lottery to a referendum, why not the much more important issue of a personal income tax?"

TRIAL

Alberti and De Souza were among 21 witnesses, including a dancer, a radio operator and another waiter, the court heard today before adjourning until Tuesday.

Alberti said he was walking on the deck when a young man with a gun forced him to throw the body into the sea.

"I saw this man and the body on the ground, and he gestured to throw him into the water. I was so afraid," Alberti said.

When the judge asked Alberti if he could recognize the hijacker in the courtroom, he shook his head.

"I never looked him in the face," Alberti said. "I only saw the blood on the ground."

Judge Lino Monteverde abruptly adjourned the trial on Friday after two of the accused hijackers shouted threats in Arabic at the prosecutor.

Before testimony resumed today, the judge told the court that Antonio Badini, a top aide to Italian Premier Bettino Craxi, would testify.

Real estate investments spell trouble for former governor

STATE

DALLAS (AP) — Former Gov. John Connally spent the past six years assembling a real estate empire across Texas and into New Mexico, but now he's selling it bit by bit to stay afloat as the Texas economy continues to slide.

"I regret that we're having to struggle like hell just to stay even," Connally, a former treasury secretary, told The Dallas Morning News in an interview published Sunday. "I don't like the fact that we're having to work 12 to 14 hours a day to try to get ourselves out of this quagmire."

From 1981 to 1985, Connally and his partner, Ben F. Barnes, a former Texas lieutenant governor, borrowed heavily and built $200 million worth of office buildings, shopping centers, houses and apartments in Texas and New Mexico.

But Texas' economic boom ended with the collapse of oil and gas prices and a soft real estate market, leaving Connally and Barnes struggling to pay, delay or refinance a debt they estimate at $170 million. At the same time, their cash flow has been cut drastically by a sharp slowdown in leasing and sales.

"It's been a hard, tough struggle," Connally said. "At least up to now, we've managed to scrape by. I think we'll continue to do so."

Beginning in 1981, the Austin-based partnership built a 14-story office building in Houston, another office complex in Austin, medical office centers in McAllen and Fort Worth, residence condominiums on South Padre Island and in Ruidoso, N.M. and a luxury subdivision in Austin.

Since January, lawsuits have been filed alleging Barnes-Connally Partnership is in default on more than $35 million in loans, the News reported. One lender, Remington Savings & Loan Association of Austin, has foreclosed on a prime acre of real estate in downtown Austin.

General Electric Credit Corp. filed a $10.9 million suit for unpaid debt, while San Antonio Savings Association has filed a suit alleging default on $19.5 million.

Creekbed cooking produces gourmet chef

ELKHART, Texas (AP) — Whether it's Beef Wellington, chicken cordon bleu or plain old Texas barbecue, Pupie is an expert on good food.

He knows how to cook it all, but not from attending any fancy chef's school. Pupie, who says he prefers to use only the single nickname by which he is known, learned his trade by experience.

For years he worked at some of the most prominent country clubs and hotels in Dallas, where he cooked gourmet dishes for the city's elite.

His unusual nickname, pronounced "poo-pee," originated with his wife, Clara Annette Robbins, who says the word means "doll" in German. She also is known affectionately as Pupie.

"If they call us anything else, they don't know who we are," he said.

The two now cater parties and run a little cafe off Highway 294 in Elkhart. The restaurant is known, of course, as Pupie's. Their customers range from neighborhood friends to doctors and bankers from nearby Palestine.

The couple decided to move back to the area after Pupie suffered from a foot injury. Originally from Redtown, Pupie said his cooking roots are here in Anderson County. "My grandmother, she was an excellent cook, and my mother," he said. "It's just kind of inherited in the family."

As a youngster Pupie did what he called "creekbed cooking." He prepared fish, frog legs and even armadillos for his family and friends.

Pupie remembered lining his grandmother's flower bed with bricks and digging a square hole to cook in. "We'd put them dillos on there," he said.

But that type of cooking soon gave way to more delicate taste treats. Pupie baked his first cherry pie at Lakeview Methodist Encampment.

"My first cherry pie was made out of Eagle Brand milk and cherries put into a pie crust," Pupie said with a laugh.

Now the desserts he and his wife prepare are as fancy as chocolate mousse, cheesecake and pudding with rum sauce.

Some of his special entrees are chicken quiche, stuffed flounder, crown roast and all types of foreign dishes. Pupie often serves several courses for specially planned meals.

While living in Dallas, Pupie not only cooked at country clubs, but he also served as food administrator for the University of Texas Health Science Center for about five years. In that position he prepared menus for Lady Bird Johnson, a UT System regent at the time.

"You had to make out three full, complete menus, and she chooses the one she wants," he said, adding that Mrs. Johnson almost always chose the simplest of the suggestions.

Pupie recalled one time the former first lady chose a ham and turkey menu. "That was the simplest thing we had on there." His wife added, "You can't beat good, simple cooking."

The couple proudly recalls that in the late 1970s they cooked for then Gov. Bill Clements at a North Texas State University function. "We had three buffet lines, and Gov. Clements came through our line."

Pupie now has returned to his native county. Five days a week he and his wife prepare lunch for Joe Baily Parker of Elkhart State Bank. Parker's favorites are chicken and dumplings and tomato soup, Pupie said.

When he first moved back home, Pupie ironically was unable to find a job as a cook in Palestine restaurants. He suspects he's overqualified.

"I told them from now on I'd put down dishwasher and get a job," he said.

Pupie said the most challenging part of his job is being versatile. "You go from country cooking to gourmet," he said, adding he doesn't have a favorite food.

"I mostly like to do my own work ... I like good fish — flounder and catfish — I like good catfish."

Pupie insists there is nothing he can't cook. "If I can buy something gourmet, I can turn around and fix it."

Even French, Spanish and German cuisine do not escape his cooking capabilities. Of Chinese chefs, he said, "They're good cooks, but I can give any of them some competition."

But Pupie said he has an advantage over some gourmet chefs who don't know how to prepare down-to-earth foods. "(If) they want some old fashioned turkey and dressing, they don't know A from Z."

Gramm boosts project that professors blast

AUSTIN (AP) — While U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm was busy boosting President Reagan's "Star Wars" project in Texas over the weekend, a group of Houston-area professors were working just as hard to blast it.

Gramm escorted Lt. Gen. James Abrahamson, director of the Strategic Defense Initiative Organization, to Texas university research sites in Austin, Houston, College Station and Lubbock in his bid to make sure Texas gets a financial hunk of the Star Wars pie.

Meanwhile in Houston, the local branch of Peace Links honored 23 scientists from Rice University and the University of Houston who have vowed not to work on SDI.

Donald Clayton, a Rice space physics professor and former department head, said Saturday that 12 of Rice's 20 professors have signed a pledge not to work on SDI because it is "technically dubious and politically unwise."

"The rest, except for one, think it is a lousy idea but didn't want to sign it (the pledge)," said Clayton, who did not identify that one professor.

But Gramm, R-Texas, said he invited Abrahamson to see what researchers in Texas could do in developing the proposed satellite defense system designed to protect the nation in event of mass attack by nuclear weapons.

He also said the "Star Wars" program offers Texas an opportunity to boost its economy and help protect the nation.

"Texans have always believed in strong national defense," he said, adding the state is already heavily involved in SDI research with $87 million spent in the state last year on the defense project.

"I have never seen a project that has more obvious technical spinoffs than this," he told a group of University of Texas researchers Saturday after a tour of off-campus research facilities.

About 12 pickets carrying anti-nuclear war placards marched outside the Balcones Center for Electromechanics in Austin.

Abrahamson, nevertheless, called it "truly exciting to see the marvelous things these people are doing and creating. But most of all it is important to see the people and see how excited they are, what they can create and just how much they believe in it."

In Lubbock, Dr. Magne "Kris" Kristiansen, director of SDI research at Texas Tech, told Gramm and Abrahamson that Tech's $3.9 million program had made some "major advances" since research began a year ago.

First lady given medal for drug abuse efforts

HOUSTON (AP) — First lady Nancy Reagan will receive the Kiwanis World Service Medal Monday at the international club's annual convention for her efforts to prevent school-age drug and alcohol abuse, officials said.

A Kiwanis Club in Pittsburgh nominated Mrs. Reagan for the award after she traveled 100,000 miles around the world in her work against drug: said Kiwanis International Presid nt Donald E. Williams of Berea, Ohio.

"She's made a tremendous impact," Williams said.

The organization has worked with Mrs. Reagan on a national billboard campaign to inform people about students using drugs, and she has also visited many school and drug rehabilitation programs, Williams said.

Youth dies in cliff fall

AUSTIN (AP) — A 19-year-old Austin man plummeted 150 feet to his death Sunday after he lost his grip on a cliff ledge at Mount Bonnell, police said.

David Lee Wells was trying to drop down to the next ledge below the cliff at the park when he lost his grip and fell about 2:30 a.m. Sunday, Greg Wise, Wells' friend, told police.

Wise, 21, said he and Wells had gone to the park after attending a Bob Dylan-Tom Petty concert Saturday night.

He said both he and Wells had been drinking but were not drunk, and that Wells had said he was climbing off the cliff and would drop down to the next tier below.

Wise said he tried to stop Wells, but that Wells would not listen. He said he saw his friend lose his grip and fall out of sight, and then heard a faint yell.

Wells was an employee of Abbott Laboratories in Austin and was a student at Austin Community College. A native of Huntsville, Ala., he lived in Austin nine years.

Two kill for pizza, $20

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Two people are in jail on murder charges in connection with the bludgeoning death of a pizza deliveryman that netted the killers only $20 and a pizza, police said.

Barnnies Dyshon Hobson, 17, was being held on $500,000 bond set by Municipal Judge Michael O'Quinn. Carol Leal, 20, was held in lieu of $100,000 bond. Both were in Bexar County Jail Sunday.

Hobson and Ms. Leal, who were arrested Saturday, are accused of killing and robbing Joseph Michael Kirk, 23, in a Friday night holdup, police said.

Homicide Sgt. Manuel Longoria said investigators believe Kirk was called to make a delivery at a residence near Ms. Leal's home and was attacked as he walked from his vehicle.

Kirk died at the scene after being hit repeatedly on the head, neck and shoulders with some kind of blunt metal object, police said.

Senate clears tax-bill amendments

By JIM LUTHER
AP Tax Writer

WASHINGTON — The Senate is clearing away a handful of minor amendments before giving what is expected to be a resounding endorsement to a landmark tax-revision plan.

And President Reagan is trying again to win House approval for military aid to Nicaraguan rebels, but his prospects are clouded by the refusal of a group of centrist Democrats to support the package.

Taxes and Contra aid will be the two major topics on Capitol Hill this week.

The tax bill, on which a final vote is scheduled Tuesday, would make what sponsors claim are the broadest changes in the income tax in at least a half-century. The bill bogged down last week when senators began attaching special amendments to the measure. A final vote would send the bill to a conference committee where numerous differences would be worked out with the version passed by the House.

Sen. Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said late last week he was sure the tax bill will pass "by an overwhelming margin."

The legislation, covering nearly 3,000 pages, seems to prove the point that many tax experts have been arguing for years: Making the tax law fair also tends to make it complex.

Sponsors of the bill claim the rate structure in the measure has been the key to keeping supporters lined up behind the measure. "The rates are the magic," Dole likes to say.

The big coalition of more than 700 corporations, trade associations, churches and other organizations crusading for the bill even calls itself 15-27-33 — for the two individual rates of 15 percent and 27 percent and the 33 percent corporate rate the bill would provide. Some Senate Finance Committee staffers sport big badges proclaiming 15-27-33.

But economists and tax authorities say the "27" part is fiction. "It's a very big sham," political scientist Norman Ornstein says.

Sen. George Mitchell, D-Maine, a Finance Committee member, says the top rate in the bill is not 27 percent but 32.4 percent.

It's another one of those complexities aimed at increasing fairness.

If the top rate for individuals really were 27 percent, the nation's richest people would get a considerably larger share of the tax cut in the bill than might be politically defensible.

Chairman Bob Packwood, R-Ore., and members of the Finance Committee settled on a solution that makes it appear that the top rate would be 27 percent. For the great majority of upper-income people, it would be. But not for all of them.

For about 80 percent of the nation's taxpayers the argument has little practical meaning, since under the bill the government would take a flat 15 percent of their taxable income — or zero for the people at the bottom of the economic scale.

Here's how the system would work, and how the "phantom" 32.4 percent rate would come about, assuming a family of two parents and two children with adjusted gross income of $200,000 (single people would be affected in a similar fashion):

If 27 percent were really the top rate under the bill, the first $29,299 of taxable income (after deductions and exemptions) would be taxed at 15 percent and everything above that at 27 percent. There are two exceptions for this high-income family:

—Once adjusted gross income exceeds $75,000, the bill would take back the taxes the family had saved from the 15 percent rate. That would be done by imposing a 5 percent surtax on income between $75,000 and $145,320, boosting the top rate for the family to 32 percent.

—On income above $145,320, the bill would take back a gradually larger portion of the family's $2,000-per-person exemptions. Once income reached $185,320, the exemptions would be zero. So, on income between $145,320 and $185,320, the tax rate would be 32.4 percent.

Above $185,320, the rate would drop back to zero — and that is what concerns Mitchell and some other liberals.

Money bill includes some pet projects

By JIM DRINKARD

WASHINGTON (AP) — Tucked away in a bill that will bring billions of dollars to government agencies that have run out of money are funds for combat boots for Haitian soldiers and for preserving New England lighthouses.

Ostensibly, the bill is needed to keep programs which have run out of money operating through the end of the fiscal year. But it also provides a convenient chance for members of Congress — primarily those on the appropriations committees — to add money for pet projects back home.

The House and Senate are scheduled to take up the supplemental spending bill this week, with the White House warning a presidential veto is likely unless the measure undergoes substantial change.

A chief White House objection is the bill's cost. While it would spend several billion dollars, no one knows for sure precisely how much because Congress is for the first time passing a spending bill under new rules of the Gramm-Rudman deficit-cutting law.

In addition to the obvious items such as farm subsidies, federally backed mortgages from the Federal Housing Administration and pay for air traffic controllers, there are a host of less-noticed ones.

One section, for example, asks that the Agriculture Department spend $200,000 on a "pilot program" to hustle migrating blackbirds past the sunflower growing regions of the upper Midwest to minimize damage to the crop.

Some Dakota farmers also would benefit to the tune of $25 million to $40 million from language letting them keep advance crop subsidies they were given this year, even though they never got around to planting their crops because of wet weather.

Other money in the bill would go to pay for things that were accidentally blown up. There is $56 million to repair the launch facility at Vandenberg Air Force Base damaged when a Titan missile blew up April 18, and $5 million to pay claims from the explosion of an Army munitions truck last year in Oklahoma.

The bill also contains more than $1 billion to pay off defaulted debts of the Great Plains coal gasification plant in North Dakota, $12 million to put up drug interdiction radar in the Bahamas and a package of aid for Haiti that includes $60,000 for combat boots.

Oklahoma State University would get $5 million to set up an international trade center, Iowa State University $11.1 million for a new soil tilth laboratory, and 10 other universities would share $55.6 million in defense research money awarded outside the normal competitive review process.

Other sections of the bill would earmark $750,000 to preserve six Massachusetts lighthouses, build a $9.4 million capitol building for the Federated States of Micronesia and keep the government from shutting down six Job Corps centers in Missouri, Oklahoma, Kentucky, Colorado, Washington and Oregon to meet Gramm-Rudman spending targets.

The Pinopolis Dam in South Carolina, which is not owned by the government, would get $8.2 million to strengthen it against earthquakes.

Many items in the Reagan administration's 13-page list of objections remain in the bill, and White House spokesman Larry Speakes has said the measure risks a presidential veto if it is not changed.

Fourth's fireworks too hot to handle?

By ROBERT BARR
Associated Press Writer

With insurance companies demanding more bucks for the bang, Morton, Ill., Madisonville, Ky., and other towns around the country have decided they can't afford fireworks for the Fourth of July.

Associated Press bureaus report that the show goes on in many other cities, but at a higher price.

"We're in the same boat as every other community," said Diane Trezenski, the city clerk in Dunkirk, N.Y., "but we refuse to give up our traditions."

The Michigan Municipal League, which offers insurance to about 200 cities, discontinued coverage for fireworks on Jan. 1.

"It's a needless liability that we don't need to be involved with," said Bob Kish, an insurance representative for the league. "On the average fourth of July we'll get eight or nine injuries and that out of about 200 cities."

The annual displays sponsored by the Madisonville Kiwanis Club and Parkway Plaza Mall were canceled because their producer, Col. Wise Fireworks Co. of Louisville, was unable to meet liability insurance requirements.

"The last time we spoke with Col. Wise, they were only going to be able to furnish a bond, not a certificate of insurance...and that's not good enough," said Doug Berry, vice president of the Kiwanis.

Cliff Wise, whose fireworks company has been in his family since 1871, said insurance premiums have more than doubled and his business is off by 25 percent.

In Morton, the village board and the Veterans of Foreign Wars post decided to cancel their annual show.

Lack of fire insurance killed the "Skyfire" show in Reno, Nev., where a hot, dry spring has made the threat of brushfires especially serious, and the Rotary Club in Sierra Vista, Ariz., canceled its show at Buena High School after the school board required $2 million in liability coverage.

Denver's celebration ends quietly

DENVER (AP) — Denver's black community ended its annual celebration of emancipation on a quiet note after two nights of violence that included the wounding of a policeman and the use of tear gas and dogs to disperse unruly crowds.

The Juneteenth celebration, which marks the day Texas slaves learned of their freedom in 1865, closed out its five-day run Sunday afternoon. Police said late Sunday that there had been no reports of trouble and a special police team armed with submachine guns had left the area.

Friday and Saturday nights were far different, with unruly crowds of youths hurling stones and bottles at police. At least 20 people were injured in fighting and bottle-throwing Friday night, and seven people were arrested in the two nights, police said.

On both nights, police hurled tear gas cannisters and used guard dogs to disperse the crowds, which police estimated at up to 1,500.

Officer Tim Pulford, 25, was shot twice in the arm Saturday night as he stood lookout atop a two-story building. He was hospitalized overnight. Another officer suffered a broken hand earlier Saturday while arresting a man armed with a gun, police said.

Early Sunday, police arrested Charles LaMar Ross, 19, at his home as a suspect in the officer's shooting. He was held for investigation of assault on a police officer, with bond set at $100,000.

The violence resulted not from racial tension, but from "individuals acting in an unorganized manner," said police Sgt. Ed Connors.

"Basically, it's just too big of a crowd and too much alcohol," said Connors. "Crowds are kind of a natural birthplace for problems anyway, whether you're talking about a football game or a big celebration."

There were some complaints from vendors and festival-goers that police overreacted in using tear gas to break up the crowds, but officials defended the police.

Soviets accuse U.S. of breaching recent Geneva summit agreement

WORLD

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet leadership on Sunday accused the United States of failing to live up to the "letter and the spirit" of last November's Geneva summit between Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev and President Reagan.

"The Soviet-U.S. summit meeting in Geneva generated the hope for an amelioration of the international situation," the Communist Party Central Committee said in a message sent to the four-day annual congress of the Socialist International which began Friday in Lima, Peru.

"Regrettably, we have not received ... an adequate response from the U.S. administration, which acts at variance with the letter and spirit of the joint Soviet-U.S. statement of Nov. 21, 1985," the official Tass news agency quoted the message as saying.

According to last year's joint statement signed at Geneva, Reagan and Gorbachev agreed "about the need to improve U.S.-Soviet relations and the international situation as a whole."

Sunday's statement also referred to the Soviet Union's moratorium on nuclear testing and Reagan's announcement earlier this month that he may abandon the second Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty, which was never ratified by the U.S. Congress. Reagan has accused Moscow of violating SALT II.

"It becomes patently obvious in the light of the U.S. administration's refusal to join the moratorium on nuclear testing and the intention to abandon further compliance with the ... (SALT II) that it embarked on the course of heightening confrontation, building up armaments without any restraint and attaining military superiority," said the statement.

Shultz says Marcos should leave

SINGAPORE (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz said today the Reagan administration wants former Philippine President Ferdinand E. Marcos to get out of the United States if he wishes to leave, but that no country has agreed to accept him.

"Marcos has on a number of occasions expressed his desire to leave the United States and we don't have any desire to have in our country people who don't want to be there," Shultz said.

"So under the circumstances we just as soon he leave, if he wants to leave," Shultz added.

Shultz made the remarks to reporters on his air force jet flying from Hong Kong to Singapore, where he was holding talks with Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew.

When Marcos first arrived in Hawaii in late February after being ousted in a civilian-military revolt, he said he and his family hoped their stay would be temporary, and that another country would invite him.

Shultz' pointed reminder to the former Philippine president of his original intention follows several weeks of pro-Marcos demonstrations in the Philippines, some of which have become violent.

Leaders in Manila have said Marcos is financing the protests and Shultz warned Marcos last week he would wear out his welcome if he used his home in exile as a base to foment disorder in the Philippines.

Panama and Singapore were initially mentioned as places Marcos might settle, but no arrangements were ever made for him to go to either place.

"There hasn't been any third country come along, and they have been reluctant (to take him back) in the Philippines, so as of the moment he is in Hawaii," Shultz said.

Officials traveling with Shultz on a five-country trip to Asia confirmed reports published in Manila that the secretary of state will announce later this week in Manila that bureaucratic roadblocks have been cleared from the granting of a $200 million installment of U.S. aid to the Philippines.

The Reagan administration pledged in April to speed up the grant, which is part of a $500 million aid package this year.

The announcement was apparently being timed for Shultz' visit to Manila so he could show something tangible to demonstrate U.S. support for Philippine President Corazon Aquino.

Shultz repeated his often expressed view that Marcos' policies over the past 20 years led to the Philippines' economic problems. Protests against unemployment stem from Marcos' economic methods, not the new government's policies, Shultz suggested.

In Singapore, Shultz' schedule called for a meeting of several hours with Lee and a dinner in his palace.

Shultz said he expected to hear complaints from officials in Singapore about moves in the United States to stem the flow of foreign goods.

"I expect I will be hit with complaints about the protected U.S. market; I usually am," said Shultz.

On two of his recent trips to Europe, Shultz was lectured by foreign leaders and businessmen, complaining their economies would be hurt by U.S. trade restrictions.

Recent passage in the House of Representatives of a sweeping set of rules to cut imports have heightened those concerns around the world.

Shultz, who opposes the bill, said the foreign complaints were "justified and they ought to keep making them and we ought to pay attention to them."

Noting that President Reagan has threatened to veto the bill if its final form resembles the house version, Shultz said, "I think the president will prevail."

He said countries critical of U.S. trade policies can defuse the situation by opening their markets wider to American goods. "As a general proposition, I think the more other countries do things to open their markets to our goods the better placed we are to argue the open trading side of the issue in the United States," he said.

Singapore and its five partners in the Association of Southeast Asian Nations had a $7.8 billion trade surplus with the United States in 1985, according to U.S. figures.

Shultz will meet foreign ministers from ASEAN countries and their key trading partners in Manila later in the week.

Officials predict AIDS to grow in Paris almost 20 times in next 30 month period

By DAVID ZINMAN

PARIS — As scientists from every continent gathered for a major conference on AIDs, a key World Health Organization official predicted that the incidence of the deadly disease in France will grow by between five times and almost 20 times in the next 30 months.

"In the whole of France we have 800 cases," said Dr. Jean Baptiste Brunet, director of the organization's collaborating center for AIDS in Europe. "But they are doubling every eight months (compared to every 13 months in the U.S.) .... If the trend remains the same, we think we will have between 4,000 and 15,000 cases at the end of 1988."

Earlier this month, U.S. public health offficers predicted a tenfold jump in cases of acquired immune deficiency syndrome in America by 1991. They said they expected totals to soar from 21,000 cases today to 270,000 in five years. About 179,000 are expected to die.

Brunet, in a telephone interview from his office, added that France was not in an unique position on the continent. "The same thing is happening everywhere (in Europe). Our figures are not very different from other European capitals."

The international science conference, which was to open Monday and run through Wednesday in the huge Palais de Congres convention center, brings together more than 2,000 people working on the AIDS problem. They include researchers, clinicians, epidemiologists, virologists, social workers, and psychologists. This is the second world AIDS meeting. The first was held in Atlanta in 1985.

In an interview before the conference opened, Dr. John Mann, the World Health Organization's global coordinator for AIDS, said the disease had now become an international health problem and "It is no longer confined to any area of the world or any one people. It is present on all continents."

Without any treatment or vaccine, Mann said, the efforts to prevent AIDS will be in education and communication."What we will need are creative approaches to achieve behavior change to reduce the risk of transmition .... It will take a lot of hard work. But we will do it because we must."

Despite the predicted explosive growth, Brunet characterized the current total of French cases as a "mild" epidemic situation. He said it was "not as serious as in the United States" because of the smaller numbers involved in this nation of 52 million.

But, said Brunet, who keeps track of AIDS cases in Europe, "There is no reason to think the situation will get better in the next few years because we don't expect to have a treatment or a vaccine. The only thing we can do is slow the trend by giving out information and implementing sanitary programs."

However, Dr. Luc Montagnier, one of the conference's organizers and a co-discoverer of the AIDS virus, said those programs were seriously lacking. For example, he said, in France many who live with people who take drugs intravenously do not realize they can get AIDS from IV drug-abusers through sexual contact.

"Since the number of cases is small, politicians don't realize how big the problem will be. So there is no big concern about AIDS. But that will change."

Brunet's office reported that a major difference between the French and U.S. AIDS experiences was that France had a lower percentage of IV drug users with AIDS — about 3 percent, compared to 17 percent in the United States.

Rosemary Ancelle, Brunet's assistant, said, "Most European countries are facing an epidemic situation," she added. "Most northern European countries present cases among homosexuals. Southern European countries, like Italy and Spain, show more cases among IV drug abusers .... We have not noted a heterosexual spread in France. But it is starting, although there are practically no cases among prostitutes."

WORLD IN BRIEF

Workers complete slab under stricken reactor

MOSCOW (AP) — Workers have finished building a concrete slab under the stricken nuclear reactor at the Chernobyl power plant three days ahead of schedule, Radio Moscow reported today.

The home service Russian-language broadcast, monitored by the British Broadcasting Corp. in London, said miners who had bored a tunnel underneath Chernobyl's No. 4 reactor have completed "a monolithic reinforced concrete slab, which is supposed to create reliable protection from below."

Soviet officials have said the slab is designed to prevent any radioactive contamination of ground water.

In the past, officials have said they planned to entomb the ruined reactor in a concrete "coffin" to seal off radiation for hundreds of years until the fuel element inside decays.

Meese talks drugs, crime

ROME (AP) — Attorney General Edwin Meese III will head the U.S. delegation at a two-day meeting, opening Monday, of the joint Italian-American working group on narcotics trafficking and organized crime.

Their talks with Italian officials will include the fight against terrorism.

Meese arrived in Rome on Sunday. Joining him will be FBI Director William Webster. Interior Minister Oscar Luigi Scalfaro heads the Italian side.

At the last session in Washington on Nov. 13, Meese and Scalfaro announced new efforts to combat terrorism. They discussed ways to share intelligence about terrorists and agreed to treat terrorists as common criminals instead of as political criminals, who are exempted from most extradition treaties.

Landslide kills travelers

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — A landslide triggered by days of heavy rain swept across a highway in southern Colombia, killing 20 travelers, civil defense officials reported Sunday.

They said the slide occurred at about 3 p.m. Saturday near the town of La Piragua, 22 miles north of the border with Ecuador.

Radio Caracol had quoted witnesses Saturday as saying as many as 200 people might have been killed. Civil defense officials in Narino state initially placed the death toll at 15 but said Sunday 20 people perished.

They said a smaller slide had blocked the highway earlier, and some people were walking across the mud-covered area and buses were stopped at both sides when the large avalanche crashed across the road, sweeping away one bus.

Explosion wounds Israeli

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — A small bomb exploded Sunday at a post office in the Mediterranean port city of Ashdod, slightly wounding a postal worker, police said.

A police spokesman said the explosives appeared to have been planted by Palestinian guerrillas. Israel army radio said police rounded up 20 Arab suspects for questioning.

Children die in Punjab

AMRITSAR, India (AP) — Terrorists believed to be Sikh extremists stabbed to death three Hindu children in Punjab Sunday and eight other people also were killed in attacks in the troubled northern state, police reported.

They said the three children were killed and two others were wounded when four men broke into a house in the southern Faridkot district.

Dealing with AIDS

In a far-reaching opinion, the U.S. Department of Justice has tentatively decided that AIDS victims are entitled to civil-rights protection. That the department chooses to define victims as "handicapped individuals" illustrates the tortuous quandary in which this mystifying disease has placed society.

It's true that persons with AIDS (the acronym for Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome) have endured a backlash of discrimination in employment, schools, and even in hospitals. But given the hazy and incomplete medical information concerning this new and deadly disease, it's understandable that an American public accustomed to absolutes has chosen to believe that AIDS victims are a public health threat.

But backlash can beget backlash. And in this age of sometimes backbreaking egalitarianism, some communities have gone to extremes to protect the rights of those afflicted with the disease. In some parts of the country, for example, governmental entities have voted to bar discrimination against AIDS sufferers in housing, employment and public accommodations.

But there are other considerations. Perhaps an AIDS victim working in a restaurant poses no health risk. But what employer or patron is really comfortable with such a situation?

Squaring public health with individual rights was the daunting task faced by Justice Department lawyers designing a federal policy regarding AIDS. They concluded that in most situations, "the disease will not present a safety or health risk that would justify exclusion, segregation or (other) discriminating treatment." Institutions guilty of such treatment would lose federal funds.

Yet, even the recent ruling will hardly quell fears about the disease, aspects of which are almost ideally geared to spark public paranoia. First, there's no cure. Second, about 75 percent of AIDS victims are homosexuals and many others are intravenous drug abusers, two groups for which there has never been great public sympathy. Third, AIDS is spreading rapidly. As of last week, there were 21,302 reported cases, of which 11,645 have proved fatal. Worse, the Public Health Service estimates that by 1991, the number of AIDS cases will jump to 270,000 with 175,000 deaths.

And, a little-known but vitally important aspect of the Justice Department decision is the burden that employed AIDS victims will eventualy place upon company health-care plans.

The lawyers at Justice have done their best with this confusing and tough situation. Officially, they've given AIDS victims a measure of relief. But the department's edict won't necessarily change American attitudes — however skewed — toward AIDS victims.

Can society avoid treating AIDS patients as pariahs without compromising public health? The problem is, nobody really knows.

Another View:
Negotiation hopes...

In view of recent events it is astonishing to find that a path to serious arms-control negotiations with Moscow may still be open. The Soviets' new proposal to reduce strategic arms is in some respects more attractive than anything that they have presented before. Some administration officials are taking it seriously. We hope that they prevail over others who dismiss it as propaganda.

The administration's own words and actions have made it hard for anybody to be sure just what its intentions are. Since President Reagan declared the 1979 SALT II treaty dead May 27, there has been a torrent of confusing and contradictory elaborations — some by the president and his official White House spokesman.

We don't know what the administration's arms-control posture actually is, and we are not sure that Reagan does. But it appears that this country will remain within the limits imposed on strategic launchers by SALT II for a few more months, despite the official repudiation of the treaty, and that the door is open a crack to tacit compliance beyond that time.

That leaves time to ponder and discuss the new Soviet plan that, as Times writer Robert C. Toth reported Tuesday, offers either modest cuts or deep cuts in existing missile forces, depending on how much Reagan will bend on his Strategic Defense Initiative — the "Star Wars" project.

One proposal would limit both nations to 8,000 nuclear warheads on 1,600 missiles or bombers, and confine work on Star Wars to the laboratory under a 15-year extension of the anti-ballistic-missile treaty that strictly limits development and deployment of missile defenses. The new plan would allow larger forces than an earlier version that would cut forces to 1,250 launchers and 6,000 warheads, but would allow no more work at all on Star Wars. But both plans remain on the table at Geneva, which suggests that negotiators could work toward middle ground. For the first time,too, Moscow has dropped its insistence that U.S. fighter-bombers based in Europe and on carriers be included in the ceiling.

Soviet officials are said to be suggesting in Geneva that details are negotiable. Their posture of sweet reason may be cynical and illusory; American diplomats must find out. Certainly a five-to-10-year moratorium on deployment or advanced developmental testing of missile defense systems should be feasible, considering the technical and financial barriers facing the president's Strategic Defense Initiative. A moratorium would buy time for more negotiations — and make it safe for both sides to proceed with cuts in offensive nuclear forces.

One problem is that the administration so far has flatly refused to consider any kind of restraint on its Star Wars program. SDI zealots within the administration are determined to push Star Wars development efforts beyond the point of no return while Reagan is still in office — and if the 1972 ABM treaty must be violated in the process, so be it. So far the president seems to agree with them.

Under those circumstances there is no hope for agreement at Geneva, and good reason to fear a new and more dangerous acceleration of the arms race that would strengthen anti-American political forces in allied countries. The president still has time to turn things around by whipping into line his hard-lining advisers who plainly and simply oppose arms control. But he doesn't have forever.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:

In 1683, William Penn signed a friendship treaty with the Lenni Lenape Indians near present-day Philadelphia.

In 1713, England's Queen Anne ordered French descendants in Nova Scotia to take an oath of allegiance to her government, or leave.

In 1868, Christopher Latham Sholes received a patent for an invention he called a "Type-Writer."

In 1938, the Civil Aeronautics Authority was established.

In 1967, the U.S. Senate voted to censure Democrat Thomas J. Dodd of Connecticut for having used campaign money for personal uses.

JACK ANDERSON

World Cup adds blemish to Mexico

WASHINGTON — Mexico's political establishment probably hoped that by playing host to the World Cup soccer series it could improve its image, but it didn't reckon with the Mexican television executives who were entrusted with this assignment.

Jack Anderson

One good question, of course, was how Mexico, with a multi-billion-dollar foreign debt that threatens to send it into bankruptcy, could afford to host the games, which were originally scheduled to be played in Colombia. Yet when Colombia dropped out because it couldn't afford the necessary expenses, Mexico was chosen.

This was arranged through the good offices of Joao Havelange, the Brazilian who heads FIFA, the federation that governs the world's most popular sport.

Mexican officials explained that the country could afford the host duties because private business would pay for it. But it was the Mexican government that paid for the two new airports that were built to satisfy FIFA requirements for the nine cities where the games were played. And it wasn't private businessmen who paid more than $25 million for the 50,000 Mexican soldiers and police who provided security for the games.

While the influx of tourists would help to offset some of these expenses, it appears that the only outfit that really cashed in on the soccer games was Televisa, the Mexican entertainment conglomerate.

And interestingly enough, Havelange, the head of FIFA, has a financial relationship with Televisa. Furthermore, Guillermo Canedo, a Mexican who is vice president of FIFA and was the chief organizer of the games, is a senior executive of Televisa.

Even this hint of scandal might not have been enough to merit the headline stories in the European press about "disaster," "armed robbery" and "racket without precedent." But what infuriated the European press was that Televisa failed so spectacularly in its attempt to transmit the soccer games to its international TV customers.

Total blackouts occurred for various periods in the United States, Brazil, Algeria, Austria, Belgium, Germany, Turkey, Switzerland, Czechoslovakia, Finland, Norway, Bulgaria, Holland, Ireland, Britain, Morocco and Nigeria.

There were other technological foul-ups laid to Televisa's incompetence:

— Transmission of the games intended for one TV channel in France went instead to its rival channel.

— One game was broadcast in German to Canadian audiences.

— Colombia got commentary in Portuguese, which is not spoken in that country. West Germany got commentary in French, and British audiences were given Spanish audio to accompany some games.

— On the opening day, only seven of the 33 countries that had paid millions for the transmission actually received it.

In addition, journalists were angry and frustrated when they had to pay $850 just to have a telephone connected — and then found out the phone often didn't work.

Television companies are still adding up the tens of thousands of dollars in phone bills necessitated by Televisa's foul-ups. They had to patch together commentary for the games when Televisa's transmission blacked out or was provided in the wrong language. Many of them are demanding their money back.

Even domestically, the soccer games were mishandled. Many of the stadiums have been half-empty, because officials set ticket prices higher than a day's wages for the average Mexican soccer fan.

It's possible that Mexican television executives can get their act together by the time the last game is played on Sunday before an estimated worldwide audience of 2 billion. But don't bet on it.

WATCH ON WASTE: To give the Army ROTC a "new image," its name has been changed to the U.S. Army ROTC Command, and the promotion will cost the taxpayers about $300,000. Some 60,000 cadets and 5,000 officers will get new 63-cent shoulder patches to sew on each uniform: four for the cadets, six for the officers. In addition, each cadet and officer will get one new regimental crest costing about $1 each. Meanwhile, the ROTC still has about $234,000 worth of the old insignia in stock. This inventory must be reduced somehow to $70,000 worth before the remaining patches can be destroyed.

MINI-EDITORIAL: The embarrassing disclosure that 14 Democratic House members visited a coal mine for $2,000 apiece — offered by the coal company — was embarrassing only because it got so much publicity. Caught with their hands out, several decided to refuse the "honorarium" or give it to charity (with a tax writeoff, presumably). But no one in Congress seems to be bothered by the basic impropriety involved: Why should a lawmaker have to be paid extra to do his job? The whole system of honoraria for government officials is so close to legal bribery that it ought to be scrapped forthwith.

EVANS & NOVAK

Ron's man Clark ambassador to U.S.S.R.

WASHINGTON — President Reagan is being urged by unofficial counselors to appoint his old friend and former national security adviser William P. Clark as ambassador to the Soviet Union instead of White House Kremlinologist John Matlock, the State Department favorite for the Moscow post.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

The President is being told that with Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin's recall to Moscow as policy chief for U.S.-Soviet affairs, Reagan must have a confidant there to explain his own thinking. But Clark is also the choice of hard-liners who have chafed at Matlock's White House track record of trying to soften criticism of the Kremlin. If Matlock is passed over for Moscow, he has told friends, he will retire.

One hitch about Clark: Nancy Reagan, under the influence of presidential aide Michael K. Deaver, cooled on him during his White House stint as too much of a hard-liner.

NANCY LIKE PAUL

The privately stated preference by Nancy Reagan for Paul Laxalt over George Bush is a major reason for concern in the vice president's camp that the senator may try for the 1988 presidential nomination.

Like her husband, the first lady is a longtime friend and admirer of Laxalt and wanted him as vice presidential running mate in 1980. That confirms apprehension by Bush backers that the president cannot even give implicit backing to the vice president to succeed him if Laxalt enters the contest.

Laxalt also would command support from Reaganites counted on by the Bush campaign. In addition, two ex-Reagan political operatives — Lyn Nofziger and Ed Rollins — are nearly certain to be in the front ranks of a Laxalt effort.

NO-RUN TEDDY

Any lingering suspicion that Sen. Edward M. Kennedy might change his mind about not running for president in 1988 will be exploded when his political action committee is at least drastically cut down or perhaps eliminated entirely.

The committee was set up as the embryo for Kennedy's '88 campaign, with veteran political organizer Paul Tully in charge. But it lost its meaning when the senator last year took himself out of presidential contention and now is a burden forcing Kennedy to attend fund-raising events around the country when he would rather concentrate on Senate business.

Tully, who worked on the Kennedy campaign for president in 1980 and Walter F. Mondale's in 1984, is looking for a new horse. Also candidates for departure are other non-Massachusetts operatives brought in after the 1984 campaign — including Texan Bob Mann and South Carolinian Bill Carrick (though Carrick may be asked to replace Mann as press secretary).

NIXON'S BLIND BLURB

Richard M. Nixon dictated a jacket blurb praising "Game Plan," Zbigniew Brzezinski's new book on the U.S.-Soviet competition, without reading it — and then wished that he had.

When the former president finally did read the book by President Jimmy Carter's national security adviser, he sent a handwritten note to Brzezinski. He told him "Game Plan" was even better than the jacket blurb he had composed sight unseen, adding he would have improved on the testimonial if he had read the book.

A footnote: The book strongly urges President Reagan to take unretraceable steps in establishing U.S. strategic doctrine. That way no liberal successor — Democrat or Republican — could undermine a realistic policy toward the Soviet Union.

JACK KEMP'S CHRISTIAN

R Rep. Jack Kemp's prospective presidential campaign has enlisted an emissary to the Christian Right by raiding the Rev. Jerry Falwell's Moral Majority organization.

Shortly after the 1984 election, Falwell signed up as a supporter of Vice President George Bush for president. But Roy Jones, his Washington representative, has opted for Kemp and soon will join his staff as a full-time emissary to the religious movement.

A footnote: Kemp edged the Rev. Pat Robertson in approval at the National Right-to-Life Convention in Denver, with Sen. Robert J. Dole running third. Robertson's Protestant evangelism did not go over so well with the heavily Catholic convention attendance.

CHARLEY REESE

For the liberals, a spoonful of tasty thought

Maybe I shouldn't reveal a trade secret, but one of the great joys I experience as a columnist is watching the outrage and indignation on the part of liberals when I occasionally give them a teaspoon of their own medicine.

Charley Reese

For 30 years I have watched American liberals engage in the most shameless demagoguery, labeling decent Americans who dared to disagree with them as racists, neo-Nazis, fascists, Bible-toting tub-thumpers, religious fanatics, Neanderthals, crackpots, McCarthyites (Joe, not Gene), far rightists, warmongers, extremists, isolationists, jingoists, chauvinist pigs and other choice no-no's.

Decent, honorable men such as Sen. Barry Goldwater, President Ronald Reagan and the Rev. Jerry Falwell all have felt the lash of the illiberal liberals whose favorite argument is character assassination.

It is an old joke among political conservatives that insofar as liberals are concerned, there are far-right Republicans but no far-left Democrats — only liberals and moderates; there are extremists on the right but none on the left; there are Nazis on the right but no communists on the left.

What gives me the most laughs is the standard pattern of the liberal response to some column in which I made an observation about liberals. It goes like this: "No one should be allowed to label people and to engage in personal attacks." Then they label me and engage in personal attacks. Their double standard applies to the First Amendment, too.

Don't get me wrong. As a columnist, I am grateful to liberals for being so pathetically obvious about their double standards and wrong-headed thought processes. When you have to crank out 156 of these things a year, anybody who provides you with a topic is a blessing.

Moreover, it's only the truth that hurts. So when liberals howl, I figure I'm right on target, and the louder they howl, the closer I am to the bull's eye.

Because I don't hide behind double standards, I welcome their response. If it's OK for me to give them hell, then it's got to be OK for them to give me hell.

Conservatives may not always be right but we generally are fair. Besides, I have a thick skin.

Indeed, it would be fine if political debate always could be conducted on the basis of reason and with civility, but in a free country in which ideologues, fanatics and demagogues can join the fray, that is not going to happen.

Moreover, we should never allow civility to pave over the truth. Truth often is very painful — unbearable to some. Yet the very justification for a free society is that if everyone is allowed to pursue truth without restrictions, then the society has the best possible shot at discovering it.

It is the totalitarian societies that always restrict debate by declaring some areas off limits to inquiry.

It's like the joke about the American and Soviet who were arguing the merits of their respective countries.

"Why, in my country," the American said, "I can stand in front of the White House with a sign that says Reagan is a warmonger and nothing will happen to me."

"Hah, we have the same freedom as you do," said the Soviet. "I too can stand in front of the Kremlin with a sign that says Reagan is a warmonger."

Some liberals seem to share the Soviets' interpretation of freedom to dissent — dissent is OK provided it is directed at conservatives and conservative ideas and policies. Directed at liberals and liberal policies, it then becomes heresy and you know what fanatics love to do with heretics.

But, dear liberals, keep those abusive cards and letters coming. In your case, any exercise of brain function is a positive sign.

Tinker leaves NBC on top, returns to TV production

ENTERTAINMENT

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Grant Tinker, who became president in 1981 of a financially failing, ratings-poor NBC and is leaving after the network reached its profit peak and won its first-ever prime-time season, says his timing is impeccable.

"In a show business sense, it's a great time to get off," the network's outgoing savior-chairman said Wednesday. "The whole thing could come crashing down, and I don't want to be part of that."

Tinker faced more than 100 television reporters in a sort of valedictory news conference and reiterated his well-known intention to bow out of the NBC job before the end of the year.

He said he has grown weary of commuting from his California home to NBC's New York headquarters, but probably would have stayed beyond his five-year contract if NBC's restoration hadn't been achieved.

"I don't feel I'm running out on anybody," he said.

Tinker said he has made recommendations about his successor, but the final decision will be up to General Electric, NBC's new owner.

Tinker, 60, said he plans to return to the business of producing television programs again. He was president of the highly regarded MTM Enterprises, makers of "Hill Street Blues" and "St. Elsewhere," before coming to NBC.

He said he won't return to MTM and will instead create a new, small-scale production entity.

One of his customers might be NBC, but he wouldn't necessarily come to his old shop first. "I'll produce for whoever asks," he said.

From Tinker's vantage point, second-ranked CBS needs his program services more, something he noted in uncharacteristically undiplomatic fashion last week. At NBC's affiliates meeting, he suggested that if CBS really believed it didn't slip in popularity last season, then it is in "worse trouble than they know."

Broderick: Member of brat pack making way to front in new film

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Among the pack of young actors who now dominate the film world, none has better credentials than Matthew Broderick.

He was, after all, star of two Neil Simon hits on Broadway, "Brighton Beach Memoirs" and "Biloxi Blues." In television he appeared in the South African drama by Athol Fugard, "Master Harold ... and the Boys." In films he has enjoyed box-office success with the suspenseful "War Games."

This summer Broderick stars in the latest John Hughes paean to those lazy, crazy high school days, "Ferris Buehller's Day Off." Paramount Pictures is providing a big push, convinced that Hughes' golden touch with young audiences will continue.

Broderick was recently here from his New York base to join with Hughes in a publicity exercise. They made a good pair: Hughes, the outgoing, overage adolescent who still wears his hair like a teen-ager; Broderick, quiet, thoughtful with sad, wise eyes in a boy's face.

Alone in his Sunset Strip hotel suite, Broderick talked about "Ferris Buehller's Day Off." He plays a brilliantly devious high schooler who fakes illness to ditch school and romp through Chicago with a few pals — Alan Ruck and Mia Sara. In the film's major scene, Broderick leaps on a parade float and blasts a rock number to the cheers of thousands.

"I was very scared," the actor admitted. "Fortunately, the sequence was carefully choreographed beforehand. We worked out all the moves by rehearsing in a little studio.

"It was shot on two Saturdays in the heart of downtown Chicago. The first day was during a real parade, and John got some very long shots. Then radio stations carried announcements inviting people to take part in 'a John Hughes movie.' The word got around fast, and 10,000 people showed up.

"For the final shot, I turned around and saw a river of people. I put my hands up at the end of the number and heard this huge roar. It was truly a unique experience. I had never worked in front of strangers before, and once I got over the scariness, it felt pretty tremendous. I can understand how rock stars feel. That kind of reaction feeds you."

At 24, Broderick's youthful face allows him to play a high schooler, but he vows that it's the last time.

"In 'Project X,' which I just finished, I played a 23-year-old," he added. "I like playing adults, and I don't want to return to high school. But then, I've said before.

"In 'Brighton Beach Memoirs,' I had a line that said I was in my 15th year. When I thought about it, I realized the character was actually 14. And I was 20 and 21 during the play."

Dallas theatergoers debate director's avant-garde drama

DALLAS (AP) — The stormy union of director Adrian Hall and a somewhat staid theater-going public has produced noisy debates over Hall's stark, avant-garde presentations of contemporary drama.

"Fool for Love," with its theme of incest, was a shocker his first season. "The Marriage of Bette and Boo," which didn't raise an eyebrow with its jokes about dead babies when it was performed in New York, also turned off Dallas theatergoers.

"Since I've been here they've dragged me across the front page again and again," he said.

A tall, spare man with lightly graying hair, Hall is known for his incisive ability to get to the nitty-gritty in a play, to present reality rather than fantasy.

He admits he was puzzled when he was first offered the job of artistic director of the Dallas Theater Center three years ago.

"Why in the world did Dallas want somebody like me? My reputation is not one exactly of affirming conservative philosophy," he said. "I'm a terribly enthusiastic, optimistic person or I would never have done this."

Nor is he shy about his goal to develop a solid ensemble repertory theater in Dallas. "It seemed to me that Dallas deserved and really needed to be part of the kind of movement that was occurring in the country," he said.

However, his first season shook up some traditional theatergoers with the production of Sam Shepard's "Fool for Love."

"It's a dangerous craft. (Bertolt) Brecht said, 'Art ain't nice.' Obviously the way it was practiced in Dallas, or what seemed to get to be the common thing, (was) that art should be nice," he said.

Next season features an as-yet unchosen work by Shakespeare, Eugene O'Neill's "A Moon for the Misbegotten" and a special adaptation of Robert Penn Warren's "All the King's Men."

However, the roster includes contemporary presentations in the same spirit as last season's "Bette and Boo." The Christopher Durang play shocked audiences with its farcical portrayal of a woman who made repeated attempts to have children despite several stillbirths.

"There were people who charged out because they felt this was making fun of the American family," Hall said.

His commitment to repertory theater and his unconventional leadership have made him a respected figure within the profession. Outside those circles, he is less well-known.

Hall, who grew up in a small town outside of Dallas, went to New York in 1955 after studying at East Texas State University, teaching high school in Galveston and working at the Pasadena Playhouse in California.

Despite the excitement of the off-Broadway movement, Hall said there was little place for serious directors at that time. So in 1964 he chose the relative obscurity of Trinity Repertory in Providence, R.I.

Although he has had opportunities for better-paying, higher-profile jobs, Hall has stayed with repertory. "It seemed to me that was my place."

In Providence, Hall's adaptation of "Eustace Chisolm and the Works" from the James Purdy novel got him fired. But the actors led a community protest in his support and the flap was resolved when the board quit and Hall appointed new members.

Hall still runs the Providence company in addition to his Dallas post. The most startling difference between New England and Dallas audiences is their attitudes toward the value of a ticket, he said.

While letting a ticket go to waste is unheard of in Providence, Hall has heard subscribers in Dallas say, 'Well, we buy the tickets. We don't have to go to the shows.' I could sell insurance if that was all that mattered, if all I wanted to do was just sell the ticket."

Despite Hall's somewhat chilly reception in Dallas, there are signs that he is finding a following. About 70 percent of last year's subscribers have registered for the 1986-87 season, the highest renewal rate in five years and 10 percent better than last year's figures, said Dallas Theater Center marketing director Adrian Stewart.

The subscription level was about 11,000 when Hall came in. About 5,000 canceled after his first season.

Although Hall believes plays should not be judged by their ability to draw audiences, he said the management is grappling with ways to reach the public.

Prince's leading lady sings praises

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Kristin Scott-Thomas, the new leading lady for rock star Prince, confesses that her first trip to the United States is scary.

"But a good kind of scary," she says.

It's not quite what one would expect of a young English woman who left home when she was 20 and managed to carve out a career on the Paris stage. She seems supremely self-composed, yet she admitted to being awe-struck on her first visit to Warner Bros., which is releasing Prince's "Under the Cherry Moon" this summer.

"Warner Bros. is such a mythical place that I was overwhelmed," she said in an interview to promote the movie. "I remember when I received my first letter marked 'Warner Bros.' I decided I was going to keep the envelop all my life. Of course, I have received many other such letters since.

"Visiting the studio was a thrill. I saw the Waltons' house. I grew up watching 'The Waltons.' I saw the stage where 'Casablanca' was made. I've never been in a studio before, and everything has been a rare experience. When I saw the Hollywood sign for the first time, it was like seeing the Eiffel Tower."

Following "Purple Rain," which grossed $80 million, Warner Bros. has high hopes for a repeat with "Under the Cherry Moon."

The new movie was a do-it-yourself project, Prince having played director as well as star. He portrays an American pianist in Europe who falls in love with a beautiful heiress.

Miss Scott-Thomas, 25, had finished a play in the provinces and returned to Paris where her agent told her, "Some people are casting an American film with Prince. Do you know him?"

She did. Her 13-year-old brother had turned her onto the rock star's music, and she had been overwhelmed by the "Purple Rain" album.

She met with the casting agent in a Paris hotel, believing she was being considered for a minor role. Later she was told Prince would like to meet her and she was summoned to the Grand Hotel.

"Here we were in this huge dining room with mirrored walls, and I was petrified," she recalled. "We talked in the usual way of a director questioning an actress. Then suddenly Prince said, 'Excuse me, I have a previous engagement,' and he left.

"My heart sank. I said to myself, 'What have I done! You had a chance to appear in an American film, and you failed. You stupid girl!' I was kicking myself under the table. Later they called me and asked, 'Would you like to audition for the lead?' I said, 'Yes — please!'"

The actress made a video test with Prince the following day, and a day later she was on her way to Nice for makeup and wardrobe tests. "I was down there for two weeks, and nobody actually told me I had been hired," she said. "After the third day's shooting, I decided I had got the part."

She talked about working with Prince and said he was very professional.

"I had never worked on a film before, so I didn't know what to expect," she said. "I found I was sucked into his world; I became a part of his vision. He is marvelous in the way that he forces you to bring out things you didn't know you were capable of — certain feelings you are uncomfortable about letting out. Working with Prince, I decided, 'Why be frightened? Go all the way.'"

Kristin Scott-Thomas was born and raised in western England in a navy officer's family that was devoted to the performing arts. She spent a year at a drama school where she learned how to teach drama. But she didn't want to be a teacher.

She wanted to learn French, though, and took a governess job with a family in Paris who encouraged her to try out for the national drama school.

It seemed impossible for a British woman to win one of 20 posts out of a field of 1,000. She did, and a busy career in the French theater followed.

Iowa town claims conga line record

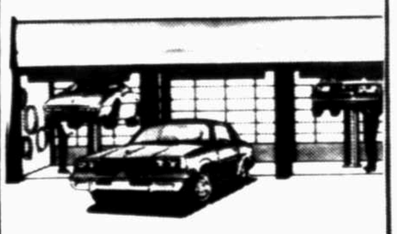

BURLINGTON, Iowa (AP) — Burlington is claiming the record for the world's longest conga line.

As part of Burlington Steamboat Days, recording group Miami Sound Machine played a 20-minute encore while 11,142 people danced the conga on the Burlington riverfront Sunday, breaking the old record of 8,659 set in England in 1982.

As throngs of people jumped into the conga line, Miami Sound Machine played its hit "Conga" until word came to the stage that the record had been broken.

Conga line coordinator Bob Shomper, radio station KBUR program director, said that verification, including photographs and newspaper clippings, will be sent to the Guinness Book of World Records.

Thunderstorms may continue

From Staff and Wire Reports

Permian Basin area residents should expect continued thunderstorms over at least the next day or two, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport. The NWS is calling for a 60 percent chance of thunderstorms tonight, with heavy rains and gusting winds possible. A 40 percent chance of storms is in the forecast for Tuesday.

Tonight, under cloudy skies, the low will be in the middle 60s with easterly winds at five to 10 mph. Mostly cloudy skies, a high in the upper 80s and southeasterly winds at five to 10 mph are called for on Tuesday.

Sunday's high of 84 was 23 degrees below the record high set for the date in 1951. This morning's low was only six degrees above the record low of 61 set for this date in 1957.

STATE

Showers and thunderstorms dumped heavy rainfall over portions of West Texas early today, prompting the National Weather Service to extend a flash flood watch over a vast area.

The area of greatest concern, forecasters said, was an area along and to the right of a line from the New Mexico border east of Guadalupe Pass and south to Farwell, east to Silverton, south through Big Spring to the Mexico border south of Sheffield and east of a Van Horn to Guadalupe Peak line.

An upper level low in Southwest Texas was expected to bring widespread rain and thunderstorms in the moist tropical airmass to the area today. The upper low was moving very slowly to the west and was expected to trigger substantial rainfall through Tuesday.

Thunderstorms continued over West Texas today.

There were also scattered thunderstorms across the Trans-Pecos to Del Rio and across the lower coastal plains. Elsewhere skies were fair to partly cloudy.

Forecasts called for a chance of showers and thunderstorms tonight, scattered to numerous showers over West Texas, scattered over Southeast Texas and the western portions of South Texas and isolated over North Texas. Elsewhere it wast to be clear to partly cloudy through tonight.

Lows tonight will be in the 60s and 70s. Highs Tuesday will be in the 80s and 90s.

Early morning temperatures were mainly in the 60s and 70s. Extremes ranged from 62 at Guadalupe Pass to 83 at Corpus Christi.

Cotton Hayes, owner of Shaolin Martial Arts, Odessa's newest karate school, looks on as John McAhon and another student practice a defensive technique that can escalate to offensive if the need arises.

McAhon's primary assignment with the Odessa Police Department is that of public information officer.

'Chrome Dome Gnome'

ODESSA — "This is the Chrome Dome Gnome ..." is the way Cpl. John McAhon often identifies himself when he calls another division within the Odessa Police Department. And everyone knows who's calling.

How did he come by the Chrome Dome Gnome appellation?

"My dad had the nickname too," McAhon, 42, says. The gnome was added by one of his fellow officers as he informed a classroom audience of brother officers that, "We will now hear from the Chrome Dome Gnome," and it stuck. "I come by the Chrome Dome honestly," he says, as he runs a hand over his bald, hair-fringed cranium. "I'm not sure about the gnome though — I've never seen one."

McAhon is a man who has many roles in the Odessa Police Department as well as in his private life.

A department training officer, he finds his black belt martial arts skills stand him in good sted in teaching use of the PR-24, the side handle baton carried by most Odessa police officers.

McAhon is one of two licensed PR-24 instructor trainers in the state of Texas. He also brings years of experience as a gunsmith to his role as department armorer. His training and work over the years as a radio news reporter-announcer help him fulfill his primary role as Odessa Police Department public information officer.

In his private life, McAhon has worked in his spare time as a karate instructor with the Tony Lopez Tae Kwon Do school and recently became affiliated with the Shaolin Martial Arts school. He also is a second degree black belt in the Tokung Moosul style of karate. He is learning the new style, having earned his black belt in the Tae Kwon Do (Moo-Duk-Kwan) style under Odessan Tom Notely. He first began studying the Koju-Sho style of karate in about 1966 while in Las Cruces, New Mexico.

McAhon is also a familiar figure at Odessa College, where he teaches the Police Systems and Practices course, a transfer curriculum developed in conjunction with the Texas Commission on Law Enforcement Officers' Standards and Education and the Texas Education Agency. The course provides a standardization of undergraduate level study for those majoring in law enforcement, with credits transferable to any upper level university in the state.

He is also a lay reader in the Episcopal Church, having been ordained at 16, the earliest age at which licensing is possible. Episcopal lay readers assist the ordained clergy in the liturgical aspects of church services and can be called upon by the bishop to preach sermons under certain circumstances.

While in Las Cruces, McAhon also had bit parts in a couple of movies in which Clint Eastwood and William Conrad appeared. He recalls being impressed with Conrad, who was the radio voice of Gunsmoke's Marshall Matt Dillon and more recently starred in the TV series Cannon.

Currently, McAhon is in rehearsal at the Globe of the Southwest for Bluebonnett Flour Radio Hour, a play set in the late 1930s being staged in conjunction with the Texas Sesquicentennial. He has the role of Daniel O. Poppy, a radio announcer in the play, which will open later this month.

McAhon was born in a small town in upstate western New York, called Wellsville, in 1944.

"It's right in the middle of the Pennsylvania oil fields stangely enough," he says. "So to speak, I've come full circle almost 2,000 miles away" living in Odessa in the heart of the Permian Basin.

In 1951, McAhon's father went back into the Army. After returning from a Korean stint, the McAhon's travels began. They were first posted to Fort Campbell, Kentucky, Washington D.C., then Fort Benning, Ga., Fort Polk, La. and to Fort Leavenworth, Kan., until 1962, when they were transferred to Stuttgart, Germany, where McAhon finished his high school education. While in high school in Germany, McAhon began working with the Armed Forces Network, handling a weekly radio show with a Top 40 format aimed mostly at high school kids.

Returning to the Unite States, McAhon's dad was stationed at Fort Slocum, N.Y., from where the family began its travels in the early 1950s. He entered the State University College in Fredonia, New York as a speech and drama major because the school did not have a course in broadcasting.

He had earlier abandoned hopes to be a music major because, he says, he couldn't pass the clarinet audition necessary to get into music school, in spite of the fact he had occupied solo chairs in high school. In addition to the clarinet, he played saxophone, oboe and bassoon.

While in college McAhon appeared in several plays, including "Mister Roberts" and Arthur Miller's "A View From the Bridge." While in college he also was involved in intercollegiate baseball and swimming, earning letters in each sport.

Please see McAHON, Page 2B

One of the several hats McAhon wears in the Odessa Police Department is that of department armorer or gunsmith.

Dallas bus driver just one big Hamm

DALLAS (AP) — They call him Charlie, and as his last name suggests, he's one big Hamm.

Take a ride on his Hop-A-Bus — the one painted pink with bunny ears atop — and your whirlwind trip around the crowded streets of downtown Dallas will be like no other.

"I tell it like it is," he says, "and I'm one big flirt."

First, he greets you with a ear-to-ear grin and a quick-witted welcome aboard.

"You're so kind, you're so pretty. If you ain't got a quarter, I got a quarter for you," he tells a female passenger boarding.

Then, he spews out history and trivia of Dallas and its landmarks — from how the city got its name to how many consulates it has — during his entire route.

"Dallas, " he says, "was named after George Milford Dallas, who was a vice president (during James K. Polk's administration). 'There, right there is a statue of his head...in the front wall of the Joske's building."

Finally, he leaves you with words of wisdom — quoting the likes of Helen Steinbeck.

" 'Let me just be your friend and live in a house on the side of the road,' " he says. " '[Go straight ahead and don't look back. Life is one word, but it's made up of three — love, care, respect.' "

Charlie Hamm, a 16-year veteran, is not your typical bus driver.

"I'm no stranger to downtown Dallas," the 56-year-old says matter-of-factly. "They don't treat me like I have poison ivy."

To some, he's a counselor or entertainer or philosopher.

To all, he's a friend.

That explains why passengers stay on his route during their entire lunch break. Or why some flag him down — not to ride, but just to say hello.

"Our encounters have been short and sweet," said Saundra Malone, a clerk for the Environmental Protection Agency who rides the bus to lunch several times a week. "He's nice and cheerful. He makes you feel comfortable.

"You get so many bus drivers who are short-tempered and rude. Charlie's not. He gives you a little extra," she said.

Hamm provides the "extras" to pay back Dallas for restoring his life after he and his family left his native New York in 1959 with only a broken-down car and "150 bucks in my pocket."

He's also showing appreciation for the many passengers who supported him when he was suspended for 10 days by Dallas Transit for an incident he doesn't like to talk about.

"Charlie had a serious problem in 1982," Hamm said. "I was hurt. But the people of Dallas picked Charlie flat off his face.

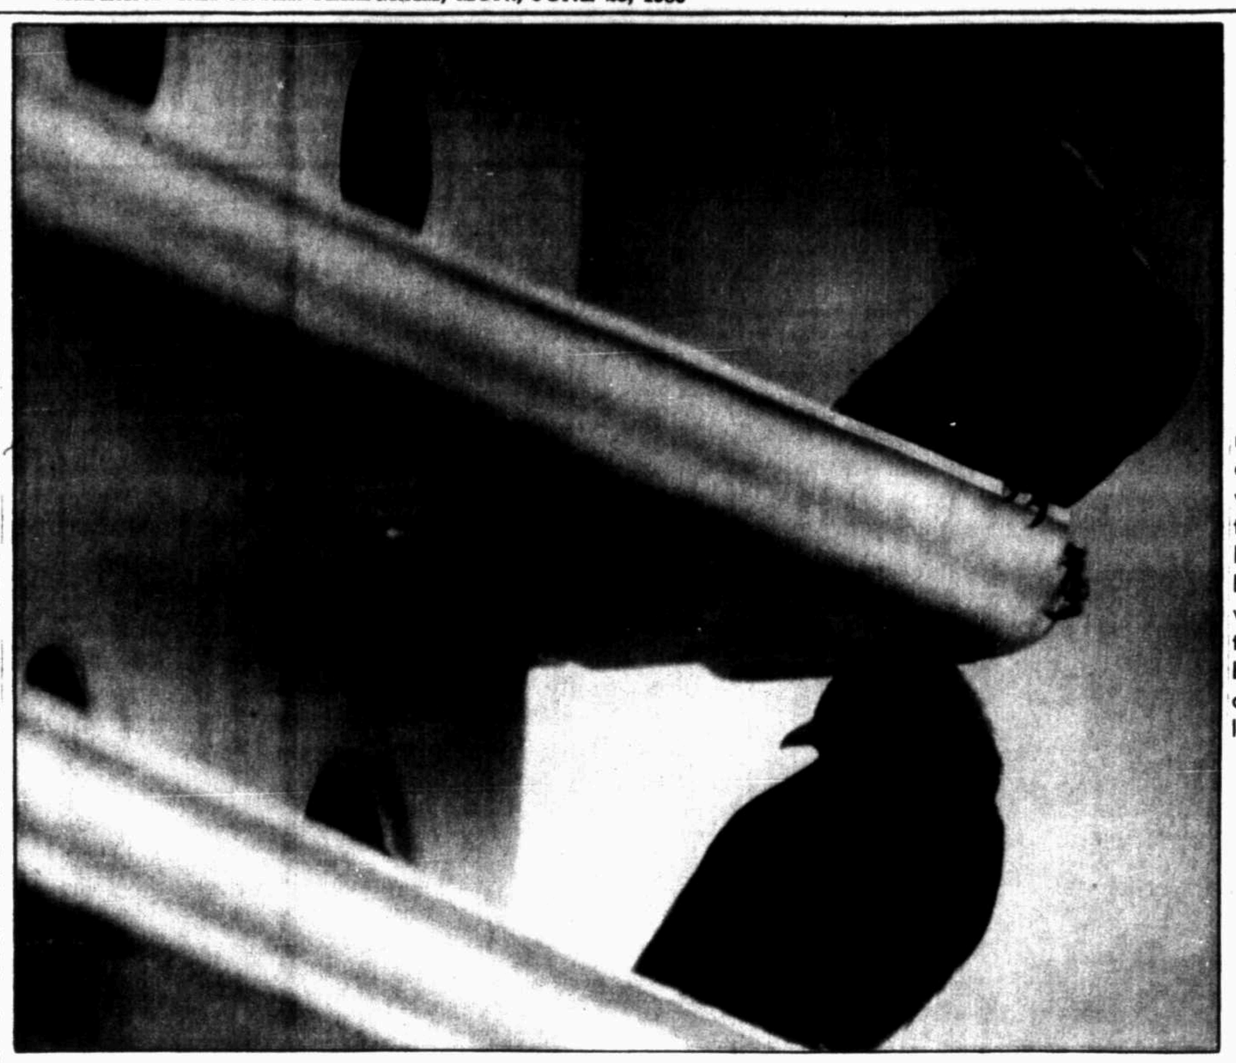

"Dallas is a city where people help people. That's the reason why Charlie has a better attitude than other drivers."

Hamm began a tradition of taking passengers to lunch when he used $140 lost and unclaimed on his bus to treat a few of them.

"I gave the bus pass (left with the money) to a little old lady," he says.

Hamm says he has no specific role as a bus operator.

"This ain't work. This is a piece of cake," he says. "I'm just a piece of the puzzle and the puzzle is Dallas. The service you render is the price you pay for the space you occupy."

Texas doctor to take Yangtze River expedition

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A Corpus Christi doctor will be making what organizers call "the last great exploration of our planet" — a 2,000-mile journey on China's challenging Yangtze River.

The trip offers overpowering rapids on an uncharted river and weather extremes ranging from sub-zero blizzards to tropical temperatures.

David Gray, an emergency room physician at Memorial Medical Center in Corpus Christi, will be team doctor for the joint Chinese and American expedition, which will be featured in National Geographic and on ABC television.

The 1986 Sino-USA Upper Yangtze River Expedition will take eight weeks. The explorers will depart July 1 from the Yangtze River's source 18,000 feet above sea level in the Tanggula Mountains on the Qinghai Tibetan Plateau in northwest China. They will travel 2,000 previously uncharted miles in rafts and kayaks to the city of Yibin in inner China.

Gray said he heard of the expedition from a friend in California, called expedition leader Ken Warren in Oregon and flew up to talk to him.

"We came to an agreement that night," said Gray. The expedition needed a doctor, and Gray saw the opportunity as "a chance to do the two things I love most...outdoor activity and practicing medicine."

There will be a river team of 12 Americans and four Chinese. It will include four cameramen, a crew of boatmen, one combination rock climber-backup boatman and a professional still photographer.

A road support team of five Americans and 10 Chinese, including two women, will resupply the rafters at seven locations.

The weather is expected to range from sub-zero temperatures to tropical conditions. There also are possibilities of intense dust storms and blizzards.

Gray said that although the area has never been charted, the explorers have a good idea of what to expect — overpowering rapids followed by peaceful stretches.

The river has a flow rate of an estimated 140,000 or more cubic feet of water per second at some points. By comparison, Texas' Guadalupe River, flowing at 5,000 cubic feet per second at flood stage, can sweep trees away, Gray said.

"There are also standing waves of 15 to 20 feet at some points in the river," he said.

Gray said the expedition leaders have spent almost eight years seeking permission for the trip, with delays mainly due to problems in dealing with the Chinese government.

The permit for the expedition was sought by Japan, France, Canada, Australia, the Cousteau Society and another American adventure company, Sobeck International Inc., according to information provided by the expedition leaders.

The expedition is "an excellent opportunity for cultural exchange between the two countries," Gray said. "The river affects about 300 million people."

The explorers expect to visit towns and villages along the way.

"Along the way, I may be treating some of the villagers who have minor ailments, things that would not require long-term treatment," Gray said.

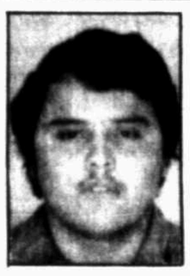

"Because we have Chinese members of the team, we should be able to communicate with the people pretty well," he said. "Many of the people still speak old dialects, so it could be a little difficult.

Gray is hopeful the expedition will help improve international relations and promote the exchange of ideas.

Many people not aware smoking ban in effect

AUSTIN (AP) — Many people are not aware that a no-smoking ordinance has been in effect in Austin for a month, a city official says.

The ban on smoking in public places has been in effect for a month, but officals say there are few signs designating smoking areas in business and offices, and that is causing problems in enforcing the new rule.

"It's amazing how many business people and office managers are unaware that a law was passed," said Laurel Schulze of the Austin-Travis County Health Department, who is in charge of enforcing the ordinance. "I'll tell them a complaint has been filed about their establishment, and some of them will ask, 'When did they vote this in?' "

The Austin City Council passed the Clean Indoor Air Ordinance last December banning smoking in all public places except for designated smoking areas. "Public places" include stores, offices, and restaurants.

Signs are supposed to be posted at entrances indicating the degree of smoking allowed inside.

The signs must indicate whether smoking is banned completely or only in designated areas. Business owners can declare their entire buildings as a smoking area if they can prove through their own polls that at least 95 percent of their customers prefer smoking.

Some restaurant managers have reported difficulty in juggling customers between their smoking and non-smoking tables.

"On heavy nights, we'll have a lot of customers waiting for non-smoking areas at the same time that we have several tables open in the smoking section," said Bob Venhuda, assistant manager of Convict Hill Restaurant. "Or we'll have smokers sitting and waiting for tables to open up in the smoking section."

Four teens killed, seven injured in stolen pickup accident

THREE RIVERS (AP) — Tragedy struck a group of 11 San Antonio teen-agers heading to the beach for a good time when the stolen pickup they were in crashed, killing four of them and injuring the other seven, officials said.

"We were just going to have a good time," Anna Martinez, 15, said by telephone from her hospital bed at Mercy Hospital in Jourdanton Sunday night. "We were all going to be together."

The 11 had piled into the 1984 Chevrolet Silverado a few hours earlier on their way to Corpus Christi beaches, DPS Trooper Robert Rhynsburger said. He said none of the teen-agers was wearing a seat belt.

After the truck drifted slightly off the pavement, the driver apparently tried to compensate, he said. But the vehicle slid sideways across both lanes of the highway, hit a ditch, rolled over several times and then slammed into the underpinnings of an overpass, the trooper said.

Gina Gallardo, 13, and Ruben Vela, 17, were pronounced dead at the scene by Justice of the Peace Jim Jones. The DPS said Louis Arispe, 18, died at 4:58 a.m. Sunday in Beeville Memorial Hospital.

The identity of the fourth fatally injured youth had not been established late Sunday. John Davila, 15, was treated for leg injuries and later released at Mercy Hospital.

Dale Hall, 17; Roman Rivas, 19; Antonio Saldana, 19, and Martinez were listed in stable condition at that hospital. Richard Garza, 18, was in undetermined condition at Southwest General Hospital in San Antonio.

Olga Castillo, 15, was in fair condition at Victoria Regional Hospital, suffering from neck and back injuries, officials said.

Panhandle town defeats liquor issue

OLTON (AP) — The idea of a revived economy wasn't enough to propel a liquor-sales issue to victory as nearly all this Panhandle town's voters turned out, the vast majority with thumbs down.

The issue lost in a 531-288 vote Saturday, and turnout was more than 95 percent with 819 votes cast, including 321 absentee ballots, Lamb County Clerk Bill Johnson said.

Jerry Meyer, organizer of the petition drive that brought about the election, had argued that liquor sales would revive this Panhandle city's depressed economy.

Meyer had estimated that Olton could support at least five liquor stores with combined annual sales of $2.4 million.

McAHON

In 1964, McAhon's parents transferred to the White Sands Missile Range at Las Cruces, N.M. A few months later McAhon, never having seen the Southwest, said to himself, "Gee, let's go out and take a look at the southwest" and he's been in this part of the country ever since.

He worked at Gibson's Discount Center in the sporting goods department while waiting to enter New Mexico State University in the fall of 1965, where he was able to utilize his involvement in firearms collecting and gunsmithing.

But, before entering college in New Mexico, he decided to get his military obligation out of the way and joined the Army. He was sworn in by his father at Fort Bliss.

He took his basic training at Fort Polk, La. and being "an Army brat" stood him in good stead. He was acting Field First Sergeant in his basic training company and was picked for special leadership training school.

However, before finishing basic training, a bout with pneumonia laid him low. He was allowed to graduate with his class rather than being recycled. McAhon was shipped to Fort Gordon, Ga., for special leadership school, but the pneumonia left him with continuing respiratory problems.

After an asthma attack left him clinically dead, he was given a medical discharge, ending the possibility he would follow in the footsteps of his father as a career military man.

McAhon returned to Las Cruces and entered college with a broadcast journalism career in mind. While attending college he working at Radio station KOBE and became involved with the county sheriff's auxiliary unit.

He began to wonder if he might like a career in law enforcement and figured the only way to find out was to jump in with both feet, so he switched his major to law enforcement and joined the Las Cruces Police Department upon graduation. He stayed there for seven and a half years.

In February 1976, he left the Las Cruces department and found his way to West Texas, taking a job with Axelson U.S.A., in Crane, where he was able to utilize his gunsmithing experience in the production and repair of subsurface pumps.

A short time later he was offered a chance to go to work for the Crane Police Department. He spent about 10 months there before realizing "this was not the type of department I wanted to be associated with."

McAhon subsequently went to work for Wooley Tool in Odessa as a machinist until he was solicited away to be supervisor of a computerized numerically controlled machine shop "where I made more money than I'd ever made before in my life, but I wasn't happy." During this time, he and his wife and two children left Crane, moved to Odessa and bought a home.

His unhappiness ultimately led him to interview with the Odessa Police Department and, Feb. 21, 1983, he went to work in the Crimes Against Persons Unit.

After about a year, Chief Alan Stewart, aware of McAhon's background, said he wanted him to work in the training division, then headed by Sgt. Sidney Lyle.

In addition to functioning as training officer, McAhon began filling periodically in for Lt. Rusty Baker, the department's public information officer. When Baker retired in February of 1986, Chief Stewart named McAhon public information officer, a position that leaves him some time to devote to his avocational interests.

Lucille and Bud Wohler pose on their dairy farm just south of Clay Center, Kan. Wohler chooses to pass up the government's offer to buy him out.

Farmer shrugs government meddling, successfuly maintains milk, beef herds

CLAY CENTER, Kan. (AP) — Bud Wohler stood with his overalls stuffed into rubber boots watching a calf suck milk from a plastic bottle through a nipple the size of his thumb.

"The last straw," he says, "would be sending that calf to slaughter. Her and about 140 other heifers.

"Makes no sense. The slaughterhouse doesn't want her. It costs as much to slaughter a little one as a big one and this one isn't worth her weight in meat."

Besides, he says, it would be cruel.

"I would have to brand a three-inch 'X' on her cheek. They say I don't have to use a hot iron but could use a 'cold brand,' whatever that is. Either way, I believe it would make it hard for her to eat."

"So," he says, "for these and other reasons, I decided to pass up this opportunity."

Myron Wohler, known as Bud to his neighbors, is not one to pass up a good deal or to let sentiment intrude unduly on efficient farming. Not out here on the plains of northeast Kansas, not in these hard times.

Like all dairymen, he routinely culls the poor producers out of his herd. "Milk the best and sell the rest." He also, as a sideline, keeps the bull calves his cows produce and raises them for the beef market.

No, Bud Wohler is a practical farmer with a sizable dairy herd — 90 cows on the milking line — and the opportunity he chooses to pass up is the government's offer to buy him out.

All he had to do was sell his whole herd at a price he felt fair and stay out of the dairy business for five years. Meanwhile, he could continue to produce anything he wanted on his 900 acres except milk.

Tempting. For a farm couple like Bud and Lucille Wohler, their children grown, themselves at an age when most couples begin to think seriously about retirement, it would seem like the chance of a lifetime.

Others apparently thought so. Nationwide, 40,000 dairy farmers jumped at the chance in the first few weeks of the program. Before the buyout ran into some legal entanglements, the Agriculture Department had accepted about 14,000 bids.

The program's aim is to reduce U.S. milk production by 12 billion pounds a year by killing or exporting 950,000 dairy cows and 600,000 heifers and calves. The program will cost $1.8 billion, part of it to be raised by assessing dairymen, like Wohler, who choose not to participate. Dairymen who participate set a price on their herds which the USDA accepts or rejects.

"In the mid-America region," Wohler says, "they accepted every bid from $22.50 on down. Only one farmer bid $22.50, a guy over in Manhattan. We figure he must have known something. The lowest bid was $3.40. So it was sort of a crapshoot."

He asked Lucille for the calculator — as important an instrument to today's farmer as a hayfork.

"That's $22.50 per thousand pounds of average production. A gallon, by the way, is 8.6 pounds. Let's see. My average is 3,000 pounds a day, times $22.50, times 365 days. That comes to $246,375. That's what that bid would net me.

"But I'd probably have bid about $15." He punched more buttons. "That would come to $164,000, still a pretty good reason for a 55-year-old dairy farmer to quit for five years and do something else. And that doesn't include what my cows and heifers would bring at the slaughterhouse."

Boys learn work, responsibility experiencing ranch herd roundup

BOYS RANCH, Texas (AP) — A chorus of bleating cattle fades as the butane torch roars to life.

As if on cue, about 15 gangly lads snap to attention and head for the sound. They turn their backs on the narrow metal gate they had diligently run 50 cattle through just minutes before and gather around an adept cowhand as he ropes the first unsuspecting calf of the day.

The hypnotic baying is broken by a writhing calf as it is dragged away from the herd and into the clearing. Instantly, three boys are upon it, wrestling, squirming and trying to twist it into submission.

"We got us a bull calf here!" a work-boss shouts, wedging his knee into the animal's neck.

A bare-chested boy clad in jeans nudges a needle behind the calf's ear and implants growth hormones. Another youth administers a quick vaccine.

The calf remains still until a white-hot iron, pulled from the metal bucket containing the butane torch, sends his right flank bursting into momentary flame.

A foghorn-like cry erupts from the animal as the work-boss pulls the brand off its smoking flank. The scent of burning hide and hair quickly blends with the pungent smell of blood as a deft-handed youth with a small knife castrates the calf.

Florescent orange fly-tags are quickly stapled to the calf's ears and it is released. The whole process takes less than two minutes.

The calf snaps to its feet, pauses for a confused moment and scampers with a wobbly gait toward the rest of the herd, leaving behind a crimson puddle, discarded tissue and matted fur in the dirt.

Less than two hours after the gritty work starts, it ends. About 40 calves, some with bloodstained flanks, still look baffled as they mill around the pen with the rest of the herd.

The boys head for the water tanks to rinse their faces and wet their parched throats.

And the bleating of cattle rises to a crescendo again as the roar of the torch is allowed to fade away, and cool.

The 400 boys who live at Cal Farley's Boy's Ranch are taught the nature of work and responsibility from the day they walk through the wrought iron gates.

But the 15 boys who participated in a recent biannual cattle roundup may have worked harder than they ever have in their lives.

At the end of the three-day roundup earlier this month, these boys and a handful of adults had herded, vaccinated, cut, culled, tagged and implanted about 300 head of cattle. These animals then provide the milk, steak and hamburger that feed the boys at the ranch.

The roundup isn't flashy or make-believe. It's structured like most other ranch activities; it's a practical learning experience that ranch officials say gives the boys a sense of stability and pride.

"Most boys never had to do anything except take out the trash before they came to Boys Ranch," said Farm and Ranch Manager John Sharp, who oversees the roundup. "It's not their fault, it's just that the work ethic is different today."

All boys who are older than 13½ are allowed full-time paying jobs on the sprawling 15,000 acre ranch, located about 40 miles northwest of Amarillo.

The youths, most of them troubled or homeless, are never bored for lack of work. When they are not in school, they can be spotted keeping the grounds well-manicured, bailing hay, maintaining heavy equipment or working in the hog farm.

And twice a year, a select few will abandon their regular jobs for three days to round up about 300 head of cattle. It's the toughest job on the ranch, the boys say, but it's a lesson in courage, dexterity and teamwork.

"You have to be alert a lot, be on your toes and keep a lookout, or you'll get stomped on," said 14-year-old Mike Thomas, the youngest roundup participant.

Mike, who has lived at Boy's Ranch for three years, broke the 2-year-old horse, "Goober" that he used to work cattle during the roundup.

"It's neat to be on top of a horse you broke yourself from when it was just as wild as it could be," he said. "I was riding down at the creek bottom all morning with him."

Perched on a pick-up truck during lunch break, which consisted of hamburgers and hotdogs cooked over an open mesquite grill, Mike said his love for animals is what made him volunteer for the roundup.

Although he was the youngest and smallest participant in this year's roundup, he was not short on courage. Throughout the afternoon, he could be seen wearing knee-high cowboy boots and a red baseball cap, injecting the calves with implants as soon as they were thrown to the ground.

Mike grew up on a farm. But 15-year-old Robbie Brethauer grew up surrounded by high-rises, ocean and palm trees in West Palm Beach, Fla.

The closest Robbie ever got to a farm animal, he said, was when his sister got a horse a few years ago. But last week, for the first time, he was in a pen with a wild-eyed calf trying to wrestle it to the ground.

And within five days, he was responsible for branding most of the cattle in the roundup.

"I was scared at first when I saw how big some of them were," Robbie said. "They act different when you're down there with them. When you're up on a horse they're scared of you. When you're in a pen, they'll charge you."

"It was embarrassing and frustrating. But it makes you even more determined. I nailed it in the nose," he said, laughing.

A.—For his jump to game at this vulnerability, partner should have a suit that will play for only one loser. Your control cards should take care of all partner's side-suit losers, so we would opt for six spades. However, if you want to give partner a bit of leeway, cue-bid five diamonds.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A ♡AKJ9 ◇109762 ♣KJ7
The bidding has proceeded:

East	South	West	North
1 ♡	Pass	1 NT	Pass

What action do you take?

A.—Now that you know the opponents do not have a refuge in the spade suit, the time has come to double. Clearly, this double is for penalties. Had you wanted to hear from partner, you would have doubled one heart for takeout.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠Q9 ♡K7 ◇AQ10952 ♣876
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	2 ◇	Dble
Pass	2 ♡	?

What do you bid now?

A.—This is a situation where partner can judge the situation better than you. He knows the approximate strength of your hand from your two-over-one response, but his opening bid can have quite a wide range. Pass, and let him decide on the best action for your side.

Q.4—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A ♡Q9873 ◇J10542 ♣93
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ♣	1 ◇	1 ♠	?

What action do you take?

A.—Since the opponents have a lot of black cards, some preemptive action is called for. We suggest four diamonds, but won't quibble with five. Four diamonds appeals more because, should partner go on to game, we think he might make it. If the opponents perservere with four spades, you will then have to decide whether to defend or bid one more.

Q.5—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠5 ♡653 ◇AQ10942 ♣852
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
Pass	Pass	1 ♠	2 ♡

What do you bid now?

A.—Just because you are a passed hand and not vulnerable does not give you the right to stick your neck out and invite the ax. There is a danger of a misfit, and bidding three diamonds might force three spades from partner; and from there on it could become bloody. Pass. If partner is strong, he will reopen.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠93 ♡KQJ10763 ◇854 ♣6
Partner opens the bidding with one diamond. What do you respond?

A.—This is no time for shilly shallying around. Bid four hearts firstly because you might make it and secondly because it is quite possible that the opponents have a playable spot in spades and preemptive action by you could keep them out of it.

Did winner 'Cash' in on family names?

JACKSON, Tenn. (AP) — Kellye Michelle Cash, a great-niece of country music star Johnny Cash, is Miss Tennessee for 1986.

Miss Cash, 21, daughter of Navy Capt. and Mrs. Roy Cash, was chosen Saturday night from among 37 contestants for the right to represent Tennessee in the Miss America Pageant in September.

For the contest she wore a green, sequin-fitted gown bought for her by Johnny Cash.

Miss Cash, a marketing and communications major at Memphis State University, also won $7,000 in scholarships.

Goldie Hawn

NEW YORK (AP) — Actress Goldie Hawn, pregnant with her third child, says she and her live-in lover, Kurt Russell, have no plans to tie the knot because "marriage is ridiculous."

"We're very happy. The child is getting the name Russell — Hawn-Russell. The kids are happy, and Kurt bought me a beautiful ring as a symbol of our love," she told Cosmopolitan magazine in an interview.

Hawn, 40, and Russell, 36, have been living together since they met while making the film "Swing Shift."

"Actually, owning a home, splitting down the middle — none of that really matters. You have to negate it and move on," said Hawn, who has been married twice. "Otherwise, what are you investing in? Concepts. But concepts are broken with the snap of a finger. That's why I think marriage is ridiculous."

Nguyen Cao Ky

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A small crowd of Vietnamese men, women and children applauded as Mayor Sidney Barthelemy and Gen. Nguyen Cao Ky, former vice president of South Vietnam, unveiled a street sign marking the new Saigon Drive.

The name has special meaning for Vietnamese people in America, Ky said at the ceremony Saturday. Saigon, the former capital of South Vietnam, was renamed Ho Chi Minh City when the communists overthrew the government in 1975.

"Though the name of the city was changed, the spirit of the city hasn't," he said.

The New Orleans Vietnamese community plans to erect on the street a $40,000 pyramid-shaped monument to those who died in the Vietnamese war.

BLOOMFIELD HILLS, Mich. (AP) — Kathryn Iacocca, eldest daughter of Chrysler Corp. chairman Lee Iacocca, drove to her wedding reception with new husband Ned Hentz in a borrowed 1931 Chrysler convertible.

Also at the wedding Saturday at St. Hugo of the Hills Roman Catholic Church in this affluent Detroit suburb were other family members, top Chrysler executives, singer Vic Damone and actress Diahann Carroll.

On Sunday, Miss Iacocca, 26, and Hentz, 28, an advertising copywriter, placed the bride's bouquet on the grave of her mother Mary, who died in 1983, then left for a honeymoon in the Dominican Republic.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Stacy Keach, trading his trench coat for a tuxedo, married a Polish actress and swept her away in a white limousine a year after finishing six months in jail on a drugs charge.

Keach, 44, star of CBS-TV's "The New Mike Hammer," married Polish actress Malgosia Tomassi Sunday during a private 30-minute church service before about 75 family and friends.

"When she came down the aisle my knees began to shake, she was so beautiful," Keach said of his bride at the reception.

The wedding took place at St. Michael's All Angels Episcopal Church in Studio City. The Rev. Weaver Stevens officiated.

Meeting Miss Tomassi, 28, changed Keach's life, he said.

Keach said last week that he was writing a book called "Christmas With Her Majesty," describing the six months he served in an English prison for possessing cocaine. He said it was "the lowest point in my life."

Keach was arrested in April 1984 and pleaded guilty to smuggling 1.3 ounces of cocaine into England. He was sentenced to nine months in Reading Prison, but was released early for good behavior.

"My whole life has turned around in terms of personal happiness," Keach said. "I'm probably the luckiest man in the world the way things have worked out."

The wedding reception was held at the Malibu Lake Mountain Club in Agoura, about 20 miles from the church. The bride and groom arrived in a white limousine.

Guests included Eddie Albert, David and Keith Carradine, Cathy Lee Crosby, Teri Garr, comedian Cheech Marin, Michele Lee, and "Mike Hammer" co-star Don Stroud.

"It's a big day for everybody," said "Mike Hammer" producer Jay Bernstein. "I don't know how they could get out of all the things they said yes to. This is going to last a lifetime."

Keach and his bride, who appeared in Polish movies, will honeymoon in Hawaii.

Keach said he hasn't taken drugs since his release, but he's had a recurring nightmare in which he's at a party and others are using drugs.

"My priorities are a lot different now," he said. "Obviously I'm not involved with drugs anymore. Now I'm involved more with my family and the people close to me."

The soft-spoken Keach, who plays tough-guy detective Hammer on television, said the experience was "very lonely, very depressing, very sad. I spent a lot of my time trying to re-evaluate my own stupidity."

After his release, CBS told Keach he faced a verdict by the American public. The network's position was that viewers would be the jury and decide whether his TV career could continue.

His first role was in the CBS movie, "Intimate Strangers," and it became the third-highest rated TV movie of the 1985-86 season. His next film, "The Return of Mickey Spillane's Mike Hammer," also played well, and then the "Mike Hammer" series, which had been on the production shelf since his arrest, was given a slot on CBS' 1986-87 schedule.

CHICAGO (AP) — Former Illinois Attorney General William J. Scott, the state's top legal officer for 12 years before being convicted of tax fraud, died Sunday, apparently of a heart attack. He was 59.

Scott, a Republican, developed a reputation as a crusader against governmental and industrial polluters and as a champion of consumer rights.

He was first elected state attorney general in 1968. He lost the 1980 Republican primary for the U.S. Senate while on trial for tax fraud.

Scott was convicted of tax evasion for under-reporting his income by $22,153 on his 1972 federal income tax returns. Prosecutors said Scott converted campaign contributions to personal use and did not report them.

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — Julius L. Greenfield, who served as chief photographer for the Akron Beacon Journal for 35 years, died Friday after suffering a heart attack. He was 77.

Spring commencements quiet

United Press International

Max, a seeing eye dog who is 15 percent wolf and 85 percent German shepherd, ambled along in the commencement procession at the State University of New York, Binghamton.

When he reached center stage, Max was given a certificate recognizing his "attendance at all classes required for a bachelor's degree." Murl Hazan Jr., the dog's blind master, got the real sheepskin.

The canine award was among the notable events in a generally quiet season of commencement rites, featuring little of the fervent protests of decades past.

Some graduates did speak out. The top issue this graduation season was apartheid, and student efforts to get their colleges to divest themselves of stock in firms doing business in South Africa.

But student sentiment was divided. For example, when "divest" proponents stood at Yale University, opponents, seemingly the majority, hissed.

At Rice University in Houston, vegetarians Jennifer Kavinsky and Sarah Duck rebelled at the prospect of being given diplomas made of sheepskin.

"Since I hadn't eaten any red meat in three years, it didn't seem right that the record of my achievements at Rice should be on a sheep's skin," Kavinsky told school officials, and Duck agreed.

Officials provided paper replacements, which could be a way to shave college expenses. Paper diplomas cost $6; sheepskin, $28.

AT THE RHODE ISLAND School of Design in Providence, R.I., graduates were handed white hard-hats with their diplomas. Last year's grads got a champagne glass. No one knows the significance of the switch, but if it means times are getting harder, departing seniors didn't show it.

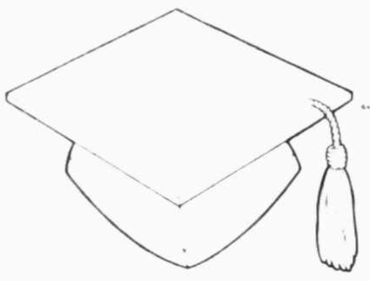

"Landscape architect graduates had ivy and wisteria dangling from their mortar boards," said a RISD (pronounced Riz-dee by locals) spokeswoman.

"Photo department grads attached streamers of slides and empty rolls of film to gowns. Flowing strands of Mylar also were attached to gowns. The standout was a gown and cap sprayed with day-glo orange."

Clothing design majors brightened the dark interior of the Providence Performing Arts Center in which graduation took place by carrying glowing light sabers of the type used in "Star Wars."

Tops of mortar boards continued to be the place to put a message.

"Hi, Mom." "Thanks, Mom," "No Nukes" and "We Need Jobs" were favorites among the estimated 1.8 million eligible to march in 1986's commencement parades at some 3,200 colleges.

At The University of Wisconsin in Madison, a Roman Catholic priest, the Rev. Bruce Ritter, threw out job offers during his commencement speech.

The founder of New York's Covenant House for runaway teenagers told graduates he would put them to work — $12 a week plus room and board and health insurance — at his place. Covenant takes in runaways and other homeless kids, many of whom are child prostitutes of both sexes.

Ritter said the job is an "opportunity to practice the corporal and spiritual works of mercy — to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, shelter the homeless."

AT THE UNIVERSITY of Hartford in Hartford, Conn., the commencement crowd listened to the creator of "The Cat in the Hat" and other wonderful tales, Theodor Seuss Geisel, Dr. Seuss himself.

"Be careful what you swallow," he told the graduates.

The phrase occurred toward the end of a short poem he read. It was titled "My Uncle Terwilliger on the Art of Eating Popovers."

"And ... as you partake of the world's bill of fare ... do a lot of spitting out the hot air ... and be careful what you swallow," Geisel said.

In Columbia, S.C., comedian Bill Cosby unzipped his academic gown, whipping it over his shoulders to make a cape. He posed proudly, showing the University of South Carolina sweat suit he wore underneath.

Terrie A. McLaughlin scored a first at the U.S. Air Force Academy. She is the first female to win "outstanding cadet" honors. The three-in-one prize recognizes overall outstanding academic, military and athletic skills.

EXCERPTS FROM commencement speeches:

■ "Young people like yourselves were demonstrating a passion about the South Africa issue," Archbishop-elect Desmond M. Tutu told the graduating class at Hunter College of New York City. "They were doing so by staging protests and sit-ins on campuses to urge the college and university authorities to divest, and they were doing this at a time when they should normally have been concerned about their examinations. I said then that they were giving us a new faith in humanity." Tutu thanked such young people "on behalf of all of us in South Africa who want to see the birth of a new society in that land."

■ "As you leave ... I hope you will care deeply about the choices those who represent you make for America; about the needs of those who lack a voice in our society; and about our national mission in a world plagued by hunger," said Marion Wright Edelman, president of the Children's Defense Fund, to the graduating class at Rutgers University, in Piscataway, N.J. "Democracy is not a spectator sport."

■ Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, at the Cornell University convocation in Ithaca, N.Y., said the single most important difference between university life and the real world is that a university "is a setting in which truth-telling is the highest value."

■ TERREL H. BELL, University of Utah professor and former U.S. Secretary of Education, told graduates of Queens College of the City University of New York that the nation appears to be disarming itself intellectually and arming itself militarily. "I know President Reagan can fight harder for education," he said. "We don't attain excellence by cutting the education budget in these crucial times and hiking the defense budget."

■ Thomas P. O'Neill, Speaker of the House of Representatives, spoke to graduates of New York University. "Unless dramatic progress is soon realized at the arms talks in Geneva, we are about to witness an expensive and threatening new chapter in U.S.-Soviet relations." O'Neill complained that the Reagan administration "has taken its foot off the brakes of nuclear arms deployment and is about to press down on the accelerator of nuclear arms production."

■ Cartoonist Garry Trudeau, at Vassar College in Poughkeepsie, N.Y., focused on the space-based weapons project known as Star Wars, reminding that that 6,500 college scientists have said they will not work on the project because it appeared to be ill-conceived and dangerous. "The actions of these scientists constitute an extraordinary repudiation of the amorality of indiscriminate weapons research. Science, since it leads to knowledge, has all too frequently led its practitioners to believe that it is inherently self-justifying, that there is nothing dangerous about splitting atoms in a moral vacuum."

Non-conformists said to spark change

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — Young non-conformists, who are the catalysts of change, hold the keys to new technologies that will spark the revitalization of manufacturing in the United States, says Peter L. Scott, head of Emhart, who told a meeting of 300 business leaders that pessimists who see manufacturing as a comparative dinosaur are overlooking the vitality of the "young people with vision, the managers (of tomorrow) who are capable of independent thought and action."

Honesty still best policy

Hearst News Service

Deceiving others may help you get ahead in the world, but when faced with personal dilemmas, honesty is still the best policy, according to new research.

Throughout human evolution — from Neanderthal men competing for mates to modern sales people trying to sell a product — the ability to deceive others has been important to survival. Most people try to persuade others that they are smarter, more skilled or more courageous than they really are. Without this belief, they would lack the confidence or support to pull through during times of hardship.

But self-deception has serious health implications, according to research findings of psychologist James W. Pennebaker of Southern Methodist University described at the annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science in Philadelphia. Several laboratory and epidemiological studies suggest that self-deception can be hazardous to your health:

■ People who are repressive, for instance, those who say they never feel the urge to yell at their boss, have a calm demeanor but show physical signs of chronic anxiety and restlessness;

■ Victims of childhood sexual or physical abuse but who deny and never confront the experience are more likely than others to suffer from cancer, hypertension, ulcers and other diseases;

■ People whose spouses suffered sudden, unexpected deaths were less likely to become ill if they admitted that they were upset and talked with others about their feelings. People whose spouses died of suicide had more societal support and hence were healthier, than people whose spouses died in auto accidents. Women, who tend to be more willing to share their feelings, were in better health than their male counterparts.

Self-deception can have political consequences as well. According to political scientist Robert Jarvis of Columbia University, the Japanese deceived themselves that they could fight and win a limited war against the United States. Indian Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru refused to believe China would use force rather than back down in border disputes that led to the Sino-Indian War.

DEAR ABBY

Invitation cup runneth over

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My husband is an ordained minister. One problem we have with people in our congregation is that we receive invitations from most parents whose children are graduating from high school and college.

In the first place, it is improper to send us invitations. In the second place, some of those families have three and four children, and since our salary is far below other professionals with equal education, we cannot afford to give gifts. (I wonder how many of these same people would have the nerve to send invitations to their doctors, lawyers, high school principals, etc.) And, Abby, it doesn't stop there, either. After college, we receive bridal shower and wedding invitations (even when my husband performs the ceremony), then come baby showers and housewarming invitations. In some situations we have spent as much as $200 per family, depending on the number of children they have.

Please print this letter in hopes that the congregations that are uneducated in this area will read this and become more knowledgeable on what is proper etiquette. Thank you. — DON'T IDENTIFY ME, PLEASE

DEAR DON'T: Unfortunately, some people view every invitation and announcement as a hint for a gift, which is not necessarily the case.

Many send their clergyperson invitations to all family celebrations seeking more to be honored with their presence than their presents.

Don't strain your budget in order to send a gift. A note or card offering congratulations and best wishes is sufficient.

DEAR ABBY: From time to time you have comments in your column regarding Secretaries Day.

I am a certified public accountant who recently led a workshop involving secretaries and their bosses. I asked secretaries what they wanted most from their bosses on Secretaries Day. Then I asked the bosses what they thought their secretaries wanted most on "their" day. There were 201 responses from secretaries, and 143 responses from their bosses.

Guess what 22 percent of the secretaries said they wanted most on their day? A day off with pay! Only 6 percent of the bosses said that that's what their secretaries wanted most.

By a large margin, 31 percent of the bosses said they thought what their secretaries wanted most on their day was praise and recognition. Only 16 percent of the secretaries said that's what they wanted most.

Concerning flowers: Only 7 percent of the secretaries said they wanted flowers. But 25 percent of the bosses said they thought their secretaries wanted flowers.

Interesting? — MARY L. CRAIG, CPA

DEAR MARY: Very. Unfortunately, what most secretaries want and what they get are vastly different. Moral: If one wants to know, one asks. But if one isn't asked, then one takes what one gets.

DEAR ABBY: I just read about the toddler who drowned in an ice chest and want to pass this along to you.

Recently, our very good friends lost a darling 14-month-old grandson. His baby sitter had strapped him into his high chair, then she went outside for a few minutes.

When she returned, she found that the baby had wiggled down and hanged himself on the strap!

As was the case with the child who fell into an ice chest that contained enough water to drown him, no one ever dreamed such a thing could happen, but it did. And as you said, "If it happened once, it could happen again." Thank you for the warning. — BONNIE FROM CARSON

Babies sensitive to body language

Hearst News Service

Babies have a built-in sensitivity to the body language of the people who care for them most, says psychologist Sandy Jones, whose books include "Crying Baby, Sleepless Nights." Jones says that babies respond strongly to a parent's moods, even when the adult doesn't think the mood is apparent.

As children grow up and become more verbal, Jones says, that sensitivity to feelings diminishes. Parents and children increasingly use language to communicate and rely less on non-verbal cues.

In the early years, Jones encourages parents to lavish those important "loving vibrations" on their babies by spending quiet time with them. Don't smother your baby with talk, she says. Most of all, be open to signals your baby sends to indicate a need for quiet time or stimulation.

Infants let their parents know they have had enough stimulation by looking or turning away. Parents should wait until the child looks back to them, a signal that the child is ready to interact again, she says.

It's important for parents to know that babies want to experience the same sensations they grew accustomed to in the womb.

"Often, newborns seem horrified," Jones says. "They feel as if they're falling continually. That's why young infants want to be held very tightly. They miss the tightness that was their security inside the womb," she said.

Pimentel, Buice combine for 2-0 shutout

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

It is the form of the new Angels that is taking shape at Angels Stadium these days, and if Sunday night's 2-0 blanking of first half champ El Paso is any indication, it may be a shape that Angels fans can look forward to.

Rafael Pimentel fired 7⅓ shutout innings at the Diablos before DeWayne Buice roared in to record the final five outs for his eighth save. It was the Texas League leading ninth shutout for Midland and it gave the revamped Angels a 2-1 record and the early lead in the second half race.

Newly arrived Al Romero supplied all the offense Pimentel and Buice would need, however, with a solo home run in the fourth inning in just his second at bat since arriving from Edmonton, the Angels Triple A club. James Randall added his 15th home run of the season in the eighth for Midland's final run.

Romero's debut in the Tall City could be ushering in a new era for Midland Angels baseball. He is the first of three newcomers expected this week. Pat Keedy, an infielder also from Edmonton should be suited up for tonight's game, and a third player, possibly infielder Tommy Coachman, should be up from Class A Palm Springs later this week.

A successful first half which saw Midland fall 1½ games short of its goal of a Western Division title, resulted in promotions to Triple A for three of its biggest producers, Mark McLemore, Billie Merriefield and Glen Walker.

Romero and the rest of the new guard will be entrusted by manager Joe Maddon with pulling the Angels that much closer to a title in the second half.

THOUGH PIMENTEL pitched brilliantly early, he needed a big assist from Buice in the eighth inning.

Buice maneuvered Pimentel out of a jam in the eighth when he got the dangerous Jesus Alfaro, .343, 59 rbi, to bounce into an inning ending double play with the bases full.

But until then, Pimentel, 5-3, was nearly untouchable, allowing just four hits through seven innings. After issuing a free pass to Brian Finley to load the bases in the second, Pimentel retired the next 10 Diablos in order. In all, he walked just two and struck out seven.

"I had trouble with my control last time against El Paso, but tonight, I felt good and walked just two," said Pimentel, who was plucked from the Brewers minor league system after spending some time in the Mexican League last season.

While Pimentel and Buice put the clamps on the heavy hitting Diablos, El Paso's Tim Crews, 4-5, was handcuffing the Angel hitters as well, spreading nine hits over eight innings.

THOUGH NOT known as a power hitter, Romero feels he could put some power numbers on the board playing in cozy Angels Stadium, and Sunday's blast could prove that out.

"I've always been a line drive hitter, but I can hit a few out. It's already $128 better than Edmonton," Romero said of his booty from the generous Angels fans.

"Personally, coming to Midland is a breath of fresh air," he added. "I didn't want to stay at Edmonton and play once a week, and playing for Joe Maddon makes all the difference in the world."

Romero was hitting just .220 with five homers in a little more than 100 at bats with the Trappers. But Maddon expects those numbers to climb with a new atmosphere and in a hitter's park like Angels Stadium.

"He's got some pop in his bat, and here he'll get a chance to play everyday, rather than be in and out of the lineup," Maddon said. "He's also a quality outfielder with a good arm."

And Keedy, who was delayed en route to Midland by a minor car accident, "he'll play third for us. He's a big guy, but agile and quick enough to play middle infield. He runs well for a big guy (6-4, 223) and has definite power potential."

ANGEL DUST: Midland took a 10-9 edge in the season series over El Paso with Sunday's win, 6-2 at home but a dismal 4-7 at Dudley Field . . . Tonight's 7:30 p.m. game will feature Midland's Vinicio Cedeno, 1-2, going against Alex Madrid, 6-4 ...The Angels were short handed by two players Sunday, with Keedy yet to arrive, another infielder on his way up and a hand injury to Brian Brady ...Randall's homer was his third off Crews this season...Doug Banning, who began the season in the starting rotation but has been continually hampered by back problems, has been activated for relief work...

Rangers, Giants nip June swoon

Associated Press

April showers have come and gone. The May flowers are but a memory. So it must be time for June swoons.

Not if you consider the San Francisco Giants and Texas Rangers, who have avoided their anticipated nosedives and instead seem to be thriving on their roles as baseball's biggest surprises.

The Rangers won their 11th straight home game Sunday, a team record, with a 5-4 triumph over the Oakland Athletics and the Giants completed a four-game sweep of the Astros with 4-2 and 3-2 victories in a Sunday doubleheader.

"The Giants played good baseball, and they deserved to win," Houston Manager Hal Lanier said after watching the Giants vault past the Astros and into first place in the National League West by 1½ games.

The victories, which came before a season-high crowd of 47,030 supercharged fans, gave San Francisco a 6-2 record against Houston in the last 12 days and set off a wild on-field celebration.

"It seemed like a World Series," Manager Roger Craig said afterward. "These guys had their adrenalin flowing. They're high as a kite."

LISTEN TO outfielder Chili Davis: "We beat 'em, we swept 'em and we earned it. It feels real good."

Last season, San Francisco dropped 15 of 18 games against Houston. This year, with the clubs almost exclusively holding down the two top spots in the West, the Giants have taken eight of 13 from Houston. The five remaining games between them are scheduled for late September and early October.

Not since Aug. 13, 1978 have the Giants been in first place this late in a season.

Veteran right-hander Mike Krukow, who in three years as a Giant has never finished above fifth place, appreciated the youthful Giants' weekend accomplishment. "Playing for first place was very important to this club. There were 47,000 people in the stands, so everybody was really keyed up."

"They feel they can beat anybody now," Craig said. "They are playing hard and they deserve to be in first place."

More Baseball on Page 2B

Despite the lost weekend, Lanier wasn't conceding anything. "Our guys have been around long enough to know it's only June. Let's see who's in first place in October."

While Houston was dropping out of first place for the first time since May 7, the Texas Rangers were approaching a month since they've been anywhere but on top.

After veteran knuckleballer Charlie Hough pitched a three-hitter Saturday night to beat Oakland 3-2, the Rangers rallied Sunday.

With young stars like Pete Incaviglia, Oddibe McDowell and pitchers Bobby Witt, Jose Guzman and Ed Correa, the Rangers are developing an exciting nucleus. And fans are responding.

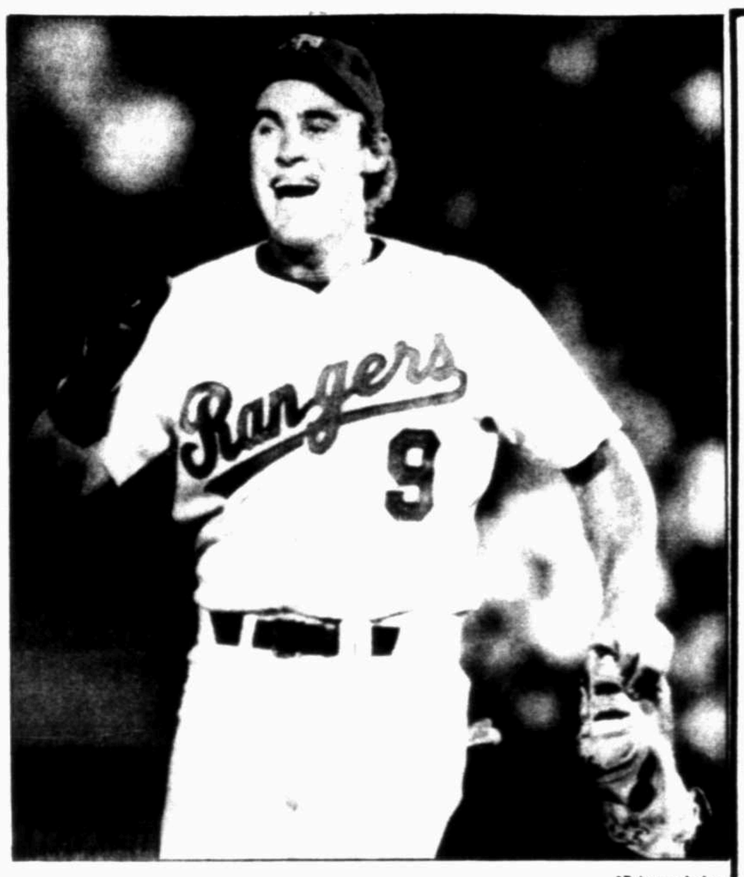

In all, more than 70,000 turned out for the two games.

HOUGH, WHO took a no-hitter into the ninth inning in his previous start, gave the fans quite a show as he improved his record to 6-3. The right-hander retired the last 12 batters he faced and struck out all three batters he faced in the ninth — including Jose Canseco, who had homered earlier, and Dave Kingman — to match his career high with nine strikeouts.

"This was a little more special after the way things ended last time out," Hough said, referring to the passed ball by Orlando Mercado which gave the Angels a 2-1 victory last Monday. "And I was really happy for Orlando because the pitches I threw in the ninth were as good as I've thrown in a long time. And he caught every one of them."

While the Rangers were adding to their home winning streak, the A's extended their own road futility string to 14 games. The A's last victory away from home came on May 23, when they beat Detroit 5-1. Overall the A's are 7-21 since then.

Texas rookie Steve Buechele also extended a personal streak Saturday night when he hit his 10th home run. All of Buechele's homers have come with the bases empty.

The joy of being in first place is reflected by Texas Ranger Pete O'Brien, top photo, and by the San Francisco Giants, bottom, after a twinbill sweep of the Houston Astros.

Beaumont's Cora to miss six weeks after stabbing

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The stabbing of Joey Cora, the San Diego Padres' No. 1 pick in the 1985 baseball draft, should put him out of play for about six weeks, a Padres' spokesman said.

Cora was stabbed early Sunday during a fight following a Texas League game. A 29-year-old man was arrested and charged with attempted murder.

The second baseman for the Beaumont Golden Gators, the Padres' Class AA farm club, was listed in fair but stable condition Sunday after undergoing surgery for two stab wounds to the stomach and arm, said a spokeswoman at Medical Center Hospital who asked not to be identified.

One man was arrested immediately after the attack and police were seeking another suspect, investigators said.

The Padres' spokesman said Cora suffered a two-inch wound in his left abdomen, and also was cut slightly in the small intestine, but that the injuries were not life-threatening.

Cora, 21, was attacked while waiting with other players to board a bus after the Gators lost to San Antonio 1-0 Saturday night, police said.

According to police Sgt. Manuel Longoria, the fight erupted from an argument involving three Beaumont players and about eight to 10 spectators. But authorities were unsure if the argument was over the game.

"It's unknown at this time, other than that some words were exchanged between the spectators and Joey Cora," Longoria said. "We don't know what the actual argument was about because the other players were at a distance and couldn't hear the original conversation."

Jose Puente, 29, of Round Rock, was arrested at the scene and formally charged Sunday with attempted murder, Longoria said. Puente was being held in the Bexar County Jail in lieu of $50,000 bond.

Another man was being sought by police Sunday, Longoria said.

Cora lives in Caguas, Puerto Rico, and played last season for Spokane, Wash., of the Northwest League. He hit .324, had three homers and 26 RBIs for Spokane.

Tway wins for third time

ATLANTA (AP) — No one could have expected a second-year professional golfer to have the kind of year Bob Tway is having.

The 27-year-old former Oklahoma State University star became the 1986 PGA Tour's first three-time winner Sunday when he shot an 8-under-par 64 to win the $500,000 Georgia-Pacific Atlanta Golf Classic by two shots over third-round leader Hal Sutton.

"I'd like to be on top in everything," Tway said. "But that's impossible to do. I'd just like to see how good I can be playing this game."

Coming from four shots back at the start of the day, Tway conquered the 7,007-yard, par-72 Atlanta Country Club course with exceptional iron play.

He placed his irons and wedges so close throughout the round that his longest birdie putt was only 10 feet on No. 9.

"I played very well today," he said. "I hit quite a few iron shots close to the hole."

The victory came in familiar surroundings.

Tway, now residing in Oklahoma, was reared in the Atlanta suburb of Marietta, located about four miles northwest of the Atlanta Country Club. He shot a 60 on the ACC layout when he visited in March.

The $90,000 first prize lifted him into second place on the money list with $446,119, trailing only Australian Greg Norman.

Norman also had a final round 64 Sunday to tie for third place, with his $24,000 check lifting his season's earnings to $482,979.

"It was one of those days when everything was going good," Tway said. "I just didn't make any mistakes."

Tway won the Andy Williams Open earlier this year and added his second career victory two weeks ago at the Westchester Classic.

The 6-foot-4, 180-pounder had birdie putts of 4 feet on No. 2 and 3 feet on No. 5 before making the turn at 33 after his birdie at 9. He was still three shots behind Sutton halfway through the round.

Tway scored from five feet or less on the 11th and 12 holes — the latter giving him a share of the lead with Sutton. He then birdied the 14th from three feet and took the lead for good with a 5-foot birdie putt on 15, which Sutton later bogeyed when he failed to sink a 5-foot par putt.

Tway's lead went to two shots when Sutton bogeyed No. 16, and Tway didn't need his two-putt tap-in birdie on the final hole.

SMU firing turns to blessing for Fry

SAN ANGELO (AP) — Hayden Fry considers his firing as head football coach at Southern Methodist in 1972 a blessing in disguise.

"I had spent 11 years at SMU and we had been respectable," Fry, who now is head coach at University of Iowa, said in an interview.

"They fired me in a year we finished second (in the Southwest Conference). It proved to me that any school could do anything it wanted to for any reason. I'll always love SMU, though."

Fry was in San Angelo recently, lecturing at the 13th annual Angelo Football Clinic on Ball Control with the Short Passing Game.

"I think a man makes his own breaks," said Fry, who quarterbacked Odessa High School to a state championship in 1946. "When I was fired at SMU, I think it helped me become a better coach. Sometimes, things happen for the better, even though you don't realize it at the time."

FROM SMU, Fry and his staff went to North Texas State, where they turned a losing program into a winning one.

"We were 9-2 and 10-1 our last two years and beat some quality teams like Houston, Tennessee and Oklahoma State."

Then in 1978, Fry left the university in Denton to coach the Iowa Hawkeyes of the Big Ten Conference. It was a big move for a coach who had grown up, played high school and college football and coached in Texas.

"It's a different environment. There are no pros to compete against. There's no big city; it's countrified like me," said Fry, a former player and assistant coach at Baylor.

"But the people up there are so similar to the ones in West Texas. They're salt-to-earth, honest, hard working people. If good things happen, they'll show their appreciation. But if they don't like you, they'll tell you that, too."

Hawkeyes fans have been showing appreciation most of the time since Fry's arrival. Iowa had gone 19 years without a winning season, but Fry has had the Hawkeyes in bowl games after five of his seven seasons at Iowa City.

FRY'S HAWKEYES have experienced the extremes in their last two bowl appearances. Favored Iowa lost to UCLA 45-28 in the 1986 Rose Bowl, sending the Big Ten to its 15th loss in the last 17 Pasadena affairs.

"We played one bad defensive game in the last three years and that was the Rose Bowl," Fry said. "UCLA played great. It's always sad to lose your last game but we were 10-1 going into the bowl game. We had a great team. We broke 26 records, some school records and some Big Ten records."

Two years ago, the Hawkeyes slaughtered Texas 55-17 in the Freedom Bowl, representing Fry's third win over the Longhorns in 14 tries.

"I've been shot at and hit so many times, any win feels good, but I'd be lying if I said there wasn't some special meaning in that win," Fry said.

"I've had some people ask me if I had gotten any critical mail from (University of) Texas people about beating them so bad. I said, 'Yeah, but most of the letters were from Aggies who were mad because we didn't score in the fourth quarter.'"

A key to Fry's popularity and success at Iowa has been a change in his coaching philosophy.

"I've really tried to have a lot of fun. If some big shot tells me you have to win or else, I don't buy that. You do the best you can. That's all you can do," he said.

"My own personality, being an ex-Marine, is to have everything in order like 1-2-3. But things are different today. Kids aren't willing to work unless you can motivate them," Fry said.

"Our top priority has been to make sure our players enjoy it. We do some things that would have been silly in my days but they're acceptable today. For instance, I let my players set their own training rules. They'll abide by their own rules better than they would mine."

After seven seasons in Iowa, Fry said he feels the Big Ten is a stronger conference from top to bottom than the SWC.

"Now, the Southwest Conference always has two or three real good teams," Fry quickly added. "But, in the Big Ten year in and year out, Northwestern, which is the only private school, is the only weak team."

THE BIG Ten has a more-physical style of football "because the kids are bigger. There's more emphasis on running, options and the Veer down here. Up there, there's more passing," he said.

With a new 10-year contract in his pocket, Fry is content on ending his coaching career in Iowa. However, there will always be a lot of Texas in him.

"When I left Texas, I knew I'd stay in college or maybe get a job in the pros. But things went so well in Iowa I wouldn't consider the pros now," said Fry, who now has spent 34 years in coaching.

Old man Niekro two-hits Twins

Younger brother Joe, 41, not as lucky

Associated Press

Veteran knuckleballer Phil Niekro got back on the winning track Sunday thanks to some magazines discovered by Cleveland pitching coach Jack Aker.

The 47-year-old Niekro pitched a two-hitter for his 304th career triumph, allowing a pair of singles in the first inning before retiring 25 of the final 26 batters as the Indians beat the Minnesota Twins 4-1.

"I found some pictures of him when he was with the Yankees," Aker said. "I found them in some small magazines. In the pictures, he was extending his arm more overhand than from the side. It's easy to lose something like that. That's why it's such a tough game. You move your thumb a half-inch the wrong way and everything goes haywire."

Niekro, winless in his previous five starts, struck out four and did not walk a batter in pitching his ninth career two-hitter. Kirby Puckett singled in the first inning, went to second on a groundout and scored when Kent Hrbek singled. The only other Twins to reach base were Gary Gaetti, who was safe on an error later in the first, and Hrbek, who was hit by a pitch with two out in the ninth.

"He threw a two-hitter against the best-hitting team in baseball," said Twins Manager Ray Miller. "We hit the ball well only a couple of times all day."

Minnesota's Mike Smithson lasted just 2⅓ innings against Cleveland, leaving after former Midland Cub Mel Hall hit a two-run homer in the third. The Indians scored in the top of the first on Andre Thornton's RBI single and went ahead 2-1 in the second on singles by Cory Snyder, Chris Bando and Tony Bernazard.

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Blue Jays 15, Yankees 1

Niekro's younger brother, 41-year-old Joe, didn't fare as well, allowing seven runs in five innings-plus as Toronto mauled New York. Tony Fernandez and Ernie Whitt both hit two-run homers and two-run doubles to highlight the Blue Jays' 16-hit attack while Jimmy Key scattered nine hits in eight innings, including Willie Randolph's first-inning homer.

The game was tied 1-1 after four innings but Willie Upshaw's two-run single sparked a four-run fifth. Toronto pounded Niekro, Bob Shirley and Ed Whitson for three runs in the sixth, four in the seventh and three in the eighth.

Royals 7, Angels 4

Steve Balboni hit a three-run homer off California's Mike Witt and rookie Scott Bankhead pitched seven strong innings as Kansas City broke a four-game skid. Balboni's 14th home run capped a four-run second inning as the Royals halted California's five-game winning streak.

Bankhead gave up five hits and four runs in seven innings-plus. He struck out seven and left after issuing his second walk to start the eighth. Bud Black gave up an RBI single to Reggie Jackson with two out in the eighth before Dan Quisenberry closed for his eighth save.

Orioles 4, Red Sox 0

Storm Davis and Don Aase combined on a three-hitter and John Shelby drove in three runs with three hits as visiting Baltimore blanked Boston. Davis took a one-hitter and 2-0 lead into the eighth but left after allowing singles to Dwight Evans and Rich Gedman. Aase got the final four outs for his major league-leading 19th save.

Shelby singled off Jeff Sellers and scored in the third inning, had an RBI single in the fifth and added a two-run single in the ninth off Steve Crawford.

White Sox 10, Mariners 4

Jim Fregosi's debut as manager of the White Sox was a rousing success as Ozzie Guillen and Bobby Bonilla drove in two runs apiece to lead Chicago past visiting Seattle. Guillen singled home two runs in a four-run second inning and also doubled and scored on a double by John Cangelosi in the sixth. Bonilla doubled two runs across in the fifth. Winner Richard Dotson pitched 6 1-3 innings.

"I don't care if it was sloppy, dirty or grubby as long as we won," said Fregosi. "There were some mistakes made, but we didn't make a lot ourselves and that's why we won.

Brewers 5, Tigers 4

Mike Felder drove in the winning run with a bases-loaded single with two out in the ninth inning to life Milwaukee over Detroit. Billy Jo Robidoux drew a leadoff walk from reliever Dave LaPoint, Ernest Riles sacrificed pinch runner Rick Manning to second and John Pacella intentionally walked Jim Gantner. One out later Rick Cerone walked, loading the bases. Willie Hernandez relieved Pacella and Felder delivered his game-winning hit.

Len Dykstra and George Foster homered in support of Ron Darling's five-hit pitching to lead New York over visiting Chicago. Dykstra's two-run homer in the third off Rick Sutcliffe broke a scoreless tie and Foster added his 11th homer in the fourth. Ron Cey homered for the Cubs.

Expos 2, Pirates 1

Vance Law's pinch-hit single in the seventh inning snapped a 1-1 tie and lifted Montreal over visiting Pittsburgh. Winner Joe Hesketh pitched seven innings and allowed nine hits, including Bill Almon's leadoff homer in the first inning. Jeff Reardon pitched the final two innings for his 17th save.

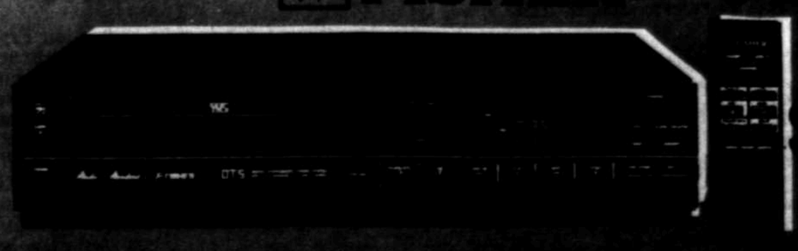

Cardinals 7, Phillies 4

Terry Pendleton's three-run double capped a five-run sixth inning that sparked visiting St. Louis over Philadelphia.

Bo Jackson shows off his Royals' uniform Saturday prior to game with California Angels.

Bo does what Bo wants

By JONATHAN VITTI
AP Sports Writer

Was it for love? Bo Jackson certainly didn't do it for money.

The winner of the Heisman Trophy and the NFL's top draft choice surprised nearly everyone Saturday when he announced in Birmingham, Ala., that he had signed a baseball contract with the Kansas City Royals.

"Life is a gamble. You've got to take gambles in life," the former Auburn running back said.

"My first love is baseball."

In case anyone thought he was kidding, he showed up at Royals Stadium in uniform Saturday night and crushed a few balls into the stands in batting practice. One landed about 460 feet away, near the center field scoreboard.

"I've been here 13 years and I've never seen anybody hit one there before," Kansas City second baseman Frank White said.

The fans and players in the stadium joined the scouts and team officials who believe Jackson can play baseball.

"We believe Bo Jackson can be a superstar in baseball. An absolute superstar," John Schuerholz, the Royals' general manager, said.

The question is: why? Why did he turn down a starting job on the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, what is said to be a much richer offer and instant stardom in exchange for lesser money and a tour of duty in the minors?

"He left millions of dollars on the table," Schuerholz said. The Royals insist Jackson's contract is no larger than any highly regarded draft choice would get: in the neighborhood of $250,000.

THE BUCCANEERS' multiyear offer of seven million guaranteed dollars towers over that.

"I made the decision from my heart," Jackson said. "I did what Bo wanted to do."

His organization-mate, Royals designated hitter Hal McRae, called it "mind-boggling."

But even with its smaller up-front money, baseball offers free-agent salaries and a potentially longer career. The average baseball salary is over $300,000. Fifty-five baseball players make over a $1 million a year.

In football, "You never know what will happen," Jackson said. "You never know which play will be your last. I couldn't put up with that."

"My knees are my bread and butter," he said. "They have never been injured and I don't feel like going under anybody's scalpel."

According to Pro Football Weekly, 70 percent of football professionals have knee surgery by age 26.

The baseball money only comes if Jackson can play. He doesn't doubt that, though.

"Baseball will work out," he said. "I sincerely believe that if I devote myself to any one sport, I will be in there in the thick of things. Time will tell."

Before Saturday, most had thought Jackson was using baseball as a bargaining lever, the way John Elway did in 1983. Elway demanded the Baltimore Colts trade him, then signed a lucrative contract with Denver.

Jackson had forfeited his college baseball eligibility when he flew to Tampa for a physical at Buccaneer expense.

A certain first-round draft choice otherwise, he was not drafted by the Royals until the fourth round because his preference for football was assumed.

"He could have been a mega-millionaire," said Richard Woods, one of Jackson's agents. "He could have had security for life. But he went with his heart.

"He did what he wanted to do and turned his back on millions and millions of dollars."

In 1982, the Los Angeles Raiders signed Marcus Allen. The NFL had no idea then how hard signing a Heisman Trophy winner could be. In succession, Herschel Walker, Mike Rozier and Doug Flutie have signed with the USFL, although Rozier has since joined the Houston Oilers.

In 1979, the Canadian Football League's Montreal Alouettes signed Tom Cousineau, the top pick in the NFL draft. It was a financial matter. The Alouettes, Cousineau's agent said, outbid the Buffalo Bills and their "take it or leave it" offer. Cousineau has since re-crossed the border and plays with the Cleveland Browns.

American football has not been so completely spurned since 1959, before the sport's "Golden Decade."

In that year, the Heisman winner was Army's Pete Dawkins, who continued on to Oxford on a Rhodes scholarship, then into military service. The second-place finisher in the Heisman voting, Randy Duncan, went first in the NFL draft but signed with the CFL.

It wasn't such a big deal when Jay Berwanger did it.

Berwanger, the first Heisman Trophy winner, was also the first No. 1 NFL draft pick, by the Philadelphia Eagles. He was traded to the Chicago Bears but never played in the NFL, choosing instead a $25-a-week job with the Feather Edge Rubber Company.

WTC wins rodeo title

BOZEMAN, Mont. (AP) — The Western Texas College men and the host Montana State University women proved to be the best at the 37th annual College National Finals Rodeo.

Both captured team championships here Saturday night before a sellout crowd of 5,383 at MSU's Brick Breeden Fieldhouse.

The Western Texas men finished the week-long rodeo with 754½ points, while West Hills College of Coalinga, Calif., was second with 508½ and Panhandle State of Oklahoma was third with 489.

The CNFR all-around cowboy was Paul Latham of Panhandle State with 498 points. The seasonal national all-around crown went to Clay Hurst of West Hills with 1,208½ points.

And in bull riding, Latham won the CNFR crown, while Jim Sharp of Odessa College took the national title.

In seven of the events, the same competitor won the CNFR and national seasonal titles.

Those winners are Gary Brogan of Boise State in bareback bronc riding, Marty Musil of Southwest Oklahoma State in steer wrestling, Frank Northcutt of College of Southern Idaho in saddle bronc, Hurst and Nolan Twisselman of Cal-Poly San Luis Obipso in team roping, Deborah Rogers of Scottsdale Community College in Arizona in breakaway roping, Meter in goat tying, and Dana McCaffety of Sam Houston State in barrel racing.

In calf roping, Glen Hutto of Sul Ross University in Texas won the CNFR title, while Johnny Hudson of Western Texas College won the national title.

The MSU women narrowly edged Sam Houston State University of Texas, 435-402.

Fregosi wins return debut

CHICAGO (AP) — Jim Fregosi says that managers can improve with some minor-league experience, just as players can.

Fregosi, who managed the California Angels from 1978-81, took over Sunday as manager of the Chicago White Sox, succeeding Tony LaRussa, who was fired Friday.

Claiming he sees no reason why the White Sox cannot immediately become competitive in the American League West, Fregosi, 44, said he was ready to return to the major leagues.

"After 3½ years in the minor leagues, I feel now that I can manage in the major leagues," Fregosi said. "I matured. I learned a lot about myself and how to handle players."

THE WHITE Sox made Fregosi's debut a success Sunday with a 10-4 victory over the Seattle Mariners.

Fregosi said it was not a difficult decision to accept the job, but "managing is tough. In 1979 we won a division title (at California), the next year we lost 90 games. I was not mature enough to handle it then. Things have changed."

Fregosi came to Chicago from Louisville Saturday night. He had managed the Louisville Redbirds, the Triple A farm club of the St. Louis Cardinals, the past three seasons, winning American Association championships the last two years.

His credentials include playing under such managers as Bill Rigney, Yogi Berra, Gil Hodges and Chuck Tanner, among others.

"You learn something from everyone," Fregosi said.

His current qualifications?

"I had 17 of the players who played with the Cardinals in the World Series last year in the minor leagues," he said.

His outlook on the White Sox?

"The team is 9½ games out, that's nothing," he said. "I don't see any reason why we can't turn things around and compete in our division."

He was hired by Ken "Hawk" Harrelson, chief of White Sox baseball operations. Fregosi was Harrelson's No. 1 choice for the job.

"It's a pleasure to be back in the major leagues, something I have looked forward to," said Fregosi. "It's an honor to be back in the American League where I managed and played."

Fregosi managed the Angels to the American League West title in 1979.

"In my first two years managing the Angels, we finished second and won the division," Fregosi said. "I thought I knew it all."

Fregosi was fired in 1981, but he balked at taking coaching jobs in the major leagues to manage in the minor leagues because "I'm my own man." He recently turned down overtures to manage Seattle, Cleveland and Pittsburgh.

"I like this opportunity to get into an organization where everybody is trying to put something together," Fregosi said. "I did not want to go to an organization that did not feel that way."

Fregosi said he felt "more qualified to manage this time. The biggest difference is that when you are a player, you think you can manage. There's a lot more to managing than what goes on between the white lines. I learned to teach in the minor leagues. A lot of it is trial and error."

FREGOSI SAID he is a "player's manager as long as the players do what I want. If not, then I become a disciplinarian. The biggest part of managing is motivation.

"When I first managed the Angels, I had a lot of players that I had played with," Fregosi said. "Everybody matures. I won't get close to the players, but I will back them."

Fregosi said he would tell the players he is starting from scratch and "I'll judge them as they play since I've arrived. The players have to work towards one thing and that is to have pride in the organization."

Fregosi said the turmoil that surrounded the club this season will have nothing to do with him as the manager.

"This is a young club, there's talent here. There's some speed, there's defense and there's power. We have to put it all together."

Fregosi, who was his own pitching coach at Louisville, will have input on the pitching staff.

"Pitching is the name of the game," he said.

A former All-Star shortstop with the California Angels, Fregosi had a 237-249 record managing the Angels. He spent 11 of his 18 major-league seasons with the Angels and also played for the New York Mets, Texas and Pittsburgh, finishing with a .265 career average.

Dollar rises

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar opened the week stronger against European currencies and the yen, boosted mainly by technical trading, dealers said Monday. Gold was little changed.

"The market is very divided on the dollar at the moment," said a dealer in Frankfurt. He said some dealers thought the dollar could move higher in the short term, while others "are going to take profits at these levels and that will weaken the dollar."

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar rose 1.80 yen to a closing 169.20 yen from Friday.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Friday:

—2.2690 West German marks, up from 2.2455

—1.8615 Swiss francs, up from 1.8463

—7.235 French francs, up from 7.1663

—2.5565 Dutch guilders, up from 2.525

—1,556.50 Italian lire, up from 1,540.50

—1.3865 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3895

In London, the British pound was quoted at $1.487, compared with $1.5007 Friday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $339.90 a troy ounce, compared with late Friday's $340. At mid-morning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $340.50.

In Zurich, the bid price was $340.40, down from $340.50 late Friday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose 65 cents to close at a bid $340.53.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $5.09 a troy ounce, down from Friday's $5.13.

Rates fall

WASHINGTON (AP) — Interest rates on short-term Treasury securities fell in Monday's auction to levels prevailing in early May.

The Treasury Department sold $7.4 billion in three-month bills at an average discount rate of 6.11 percent, down from 6.31 percent last week. Another $7.4 billion was sold in six-month bills at an average discount rate of 6.18 percent, down from 6.39 percent last week.

Talks continue in AT&T strike

Six divisions seek agreement with workers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The strike at American Telephone & Telegraph enters its fourth week today with negotiators for six AT&T divisions still trying to reach agreement with the Communications Workers of America.

"We are still bargaining," union spokeswoman Rozanne Weissman said late Sunday after a bargaining committee for 35,000 CWA members employed by AT&T's Information Systems division unanimously rejected the company's last offer. The workers install and service business telephone equipment.

Ms. Weissman said negotiators for the company and 76,000 union members who work in AT&T's Communications division, which handles primarily long-distance service, also had failed to reach an agreement on terms of a new three-year contract.

The telecommunications giant and the CWA, representing more than half of AT&T's 300,000 employees, reached a tentative agreement last Tuesday on a new national wage contract, which provides an 8 percent wage increase over the next three years.

But the pact is subject to the approval of separate accords with AT&T's six large operating divisions.

Company spokesman Herb Linnen said the company had made a good offer.

"That offer serves the interests of both the union and the company well," Linnen said in a statement. "The rejection now prolongs the strike in which the larger national issues already have been resolved and in which good progress has been made in resolving other local bargaining issues."

Neither Linnen nor Ms. Weissman would provide any details about the offer, but Linnen said earlier it represented a "crystallization of views exchanged across the table over a period of days, right up till dawn today."

Ms. Weissman said of the disagreements: "Evidently they read like a long laundry list."

The latest round of talks was held following a marathon session that began Saturday morning and lasted until just before dawn Sunday. Talks resumed later Sunday. Both sides agreed to continue negotiating after a deadline of midnight Saturday set last week.

The talks were being conducted at six bargaining tables in Somerset, N.J., with the sticking point being the provisions involving the technical, marketing and sales employees of the Information Systems division.

During the strike, AT&T has operated only 14 of its 25 factories. Supervisors, managers and more than 5,000 temporary employees have filled in for 36,000 striking long-distance operators and other union members.

But callers often have had to wait long periods to get assistance. There also was evidence AT&T was having trouble filling some installation and maintenance orders of its business customers on time.

The strike began June 1.

Analyst: gas prices headed still lower

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Gasoline prices usually start rising as the Fourth of July approaches, but this year motorists are paying under 90 cents a gallon at self-serve pumps and prices are still headed down, oil industry analyst Dan Lundberg says.

The latest twice-monthly Lundberg Survey of 17,000 gasoline stations across the country shows the average price of regular leaded gasoline at self-serve pumps, including all taxes, is now 82.95 cents per gallon. Regular unleaded is 88.70 cents per gallon and premium unleaded is 102.50 cents.

"What you are seeing now for most of the country is gasoline at or below a dollar. That is a harbinger. Instead of last summer's increases, prices are going into a pit from the May-June spike," Lundberg said Sunday.

"You have to go back to 1978 to find a price like that."

The average for all self-serve gasoline is 89.75 cents a gallon, while the overall price of gasoline at full-serve pumps for all grades is $1.1564.

The average price for all grades of gasoline will likely decline further, perhaps by 3.4 cents a gallon later this week, because refinery gate prices dropped 4.74 cents a gallon in the past few days, Lundberg said.

"That's a startling unseasonal cut on the eve of the July Fourth holiday, which usually ushers in retail and wholesale price increases," Lundberg said. "July 4th is the big season opener for the gasoline business."

The average price of gasoline has dropped 25.84 cents a gallon this year, he said. In 1985, gasoline declined 6 cents a gallon in the first quarter, but recovered by about 6.5 cents a gallon in the second quarter and continued to rise to an end-of-the-year plateau of $1.21, he said.

Weapons plant faces tough times

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — The expected loss of 75 jobs at the Pantex nuclear weapons plant between now and Oct. 1 is only one of the problems the plant faces from federal budget cuts.

The Amarillo Globe-News said in its Sunday editions that federal budget pressures are squeezing the plant's ability to meet delivery schedules of nuclear warheads for the military.

The newspaper said it obtained a heavily censored transcript of congressional hearings.

Dr. Richard L. Wagner Jr., an assistant to the secretary of defense for atomic energy, expressed his concern about the workload at Pantex during hearings earlier this year before a subcommittee of the House of Representatives Appropriations Committee.

"There is today, for the first time that I can remember in 20 years in this program, no slack between the DOE (Department of Energy) warhead production, warheads coming out the door at Pantex, and the need date for the DOD (Department of Defense) deployments," Wagner testified.

Pantex, the nation's final assembly point for nuclear weapons, is 17 miles northeast of Amarillo.

The Department of Energy is seeking a 14 percent increase in its defense budget for fiscal 1987.

Wagner goes on to intimate that there is a danger Pantex will not be able to meet nuclear weapons delivery schedules if budget pressures continue or if unforeseen circumstances develop, the Amarillo newspaper said.

His remarks are censored with the exception of his conclusion: "Those kinds of sensitivities are there, and there is no slack left to accommodate them."

The newspaper also quoted Charles Poole, who runs Pantex for the operating contractor, Mason & Hanger-Silas Mason Co., as saying he hopes the across-the-board job reductions can be made through attrition. There are 2,850 people now employed at the plant, he said.

The cutbacks are in response to the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings budget reduction act, the transcript of congressional hearings on the nuclear weapons program shows. About 1,000 people throughout the nuclear weapons complex will lose their jobs.

"It is a lean budget," Sylvester J. Foley Jr., assistant secretary for defense programs, told a House Appropriations subcommittee.

"...What you are talking about is increasing the risk," he added. "I am unwilling to accept any further risk without it being directed because I don't think our budget should be reduced any further down from where we are right now. Even at this level, I am uneasy."

Maj. Gen. George K. Withers Jr., a deputy assistant secretary for military applications, told the congressional subcommittee, the manhours needed to build and assemble a nuclear weapon are increasing.

"Nuclear weapons today are considerably more complex and sophisticated than they were a few years ago, owing to the necessity of putting in modern use control and safety features," he said.

Mergers spark new round of cola wars

COLUMBUS, Ga. (AP) — Spokesmen for Coke and Pepsi said their planned acquisitions of other soft drink companies would stimulate competition and not violate antitrust laws.

Meanwhile, industry experts predicted that the two soft drink giants' proposed mergers with other companies could mean the demise of Royal Crown Cola Co., which filed suit in U.S. District Court last week to try to stop the Coca-Cola Co. from buying Dr Pepper and Pepsico Inc. from buying Seven-Up.

"This could be the beginning of the end for them (RC)," said Gary Hemphill, editor of Beverage Industry, a trade magazine. "If these deals go through, it will make it very difficult for RC to operate."

BUSINESS BRIEFS

J-car recall expanded to other GM products

DETROIT (UPI) — General Motors Corp. says it is expanding an earlier recall to include owners of about 87,000 1985-model compact J-cars because a plastic trim part of the air cleaner could create an underhood fire.

GM said Monday that owners of the Cadillac Cimarron, Chevrolet Cavalier, Buick Skyhawk and Oldsmobile Firenza models equipped with 2.0 liter four-cylinder engines may remove the trim piece themselves or have a dealer do it.

The piece, if left loose in the engine compartment or not re-installed properly after servicing, could come in contact with the hot exhaust system and burn.

GM said it has received 13 reports of underhood fires but no accidents or injuries because of the condition.

In April 1985 GM recalled more than 34,300 1985-model Cavaliers for the same problem after receiving at least 20 reports of engine fires.

GM did not publicly announce that recall. At the time a GM spokesman said the automaker did not notify the media because "the cars had been produced so recently we knew where they all were."

Army extends LTV contract by $107 million

DALLAS (UPI) — LTV Aerospace and Defense said Monday its AM General Division assembly plant in South Bend, Ind., has received a $107 million contract extension from the Army for 5-ton trucks.

The extension is for assembly of an additional 1,109 trucks with an option for another 289, LTV said in a statement from its Dallas headquarters.

AM General has been building the vehicles, formally designated the M939A1 Series, under a 5-year, $1.6 billion contract for 22,789 vehicles.

The modification to the contract, which expires in September, calls for production on the additional vehicles to begin in November and continue into April 1987.

While the contract extension is valued at $107 million, initial Army funding will cover only the first $53.7 million, LTV said. The balance is expected to be funded later this year.

Presidential award flying Southwest's way

DALLAS (UPI) — Southwest Airlines will receive the Presidential Citation Award for Private Sector Initiatives on Wednesday at the White House.

The airline was recognized for its "Home for the Holidays" program in which it flies selected senior citizens home free of charge during the Christmas season, said Southwest Chairman Herbert D. Kelleher.

Southwest was chosen from among more than 1,500 nationwide entrants and is one of 30 businesses and associations to receive the award, Kelleher said.

Judy Christa, promotions director for the airline, and Susie Cochran, a 91-year-old Phoenix resident, will fly to Washington, D.C., to receive the award from President Reagan, Kelleher said.

The President's Citation Program for Private Sector initatives was developed in 1984 to encourage the growth of voluntary services by businesses and organizations.

City's plan to revitalize stirs controversy

MORGAN CITY, La. (AP) — Good times, Cedric LaFleur will tell you, Morgan City has had more than its share of good times in the last 50 years.

There were the shrimp years, the prosperous times following the 1934 discovery of jumbo shrimp in the Gulf of Mexico, when Morgan City became a major port full of shrimp boats and ice houses.

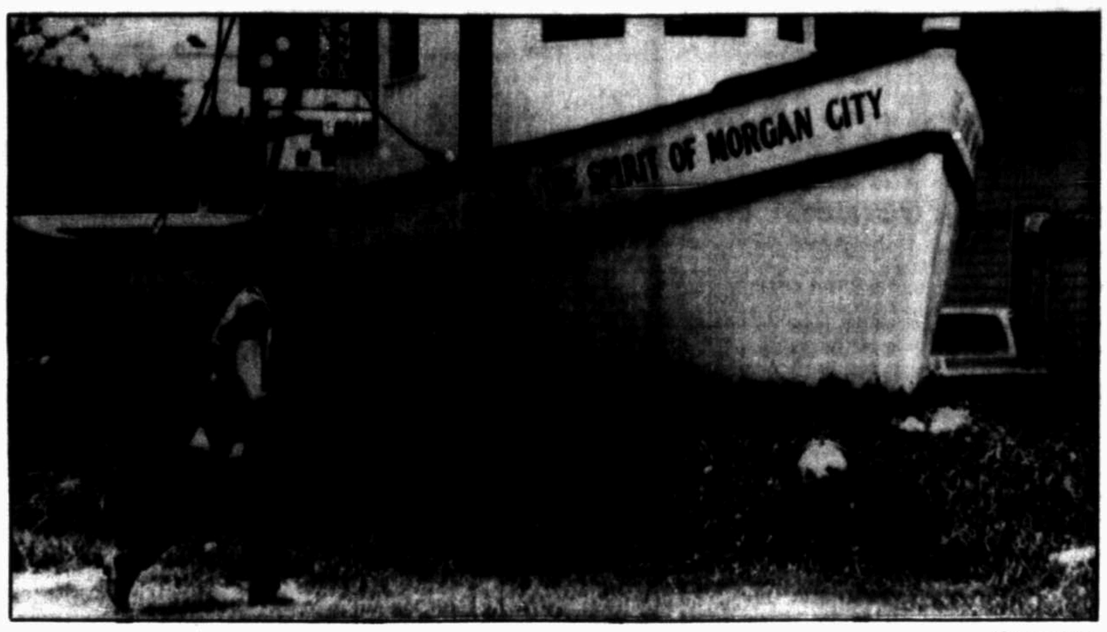

And, oh, the town's spunky Cajun mayor says, there were some carefree days in the decades after the 1947 discovery of offshore oil.

Those were the days when the mayor had to order the bars to close at 2 a.m. because workers kept reporting for work drunk silly, the days when the oil boats crowded out the shrimp boats because they made more money, and everyone had a job. Good times, indeed.

But those times went out with the $30 barrel of oil, and now the city, like so many others in the oil patch, is trying to find new ways to stay afloat.

"Compared to what we had at one time, we don't have as much. We have to make changes in our lifestyle," LaFleur said.

Morgan City's plan is to revitalize the shrimping industry by bringing a fleet of 20 Vietnamese-American shrimp boats to the public wharf. The mayor has received City Council approval of a lease arrangement at $2 per waterfront foot a month; he's also received personal threats.

A Morgan City resident passes in front of and gives a glance to the shrimp boat "The Spirit of Morgan City" located on Highway 90. Morgani City mayor Cedric LeFleur is trying to diversity the city's economy by bringing back the shrimp industry.

SOME HERE, particularly roustabouts and roughnecks bitter at losing their well-paying jobs and wild lifestyle, predict violence may accompany the Vietnamese to Morgan City, as it did in other Gulf coast towns in the past.

"There's a lot of people here who don't like it, a lot of oil people. There's going to be trouble in a few weeks here, I think," said Charlie Reid, manager of the labor pool for General Oil Field Services Inc.

"There's going to be trouble, sure. A lot of people don't want 'em here," echoed Walter Hibbard, a tattooed boat hand now unemployed and, by his own description, "one bitter ... (man)."

LaFleur, whose dairy products business has been loosely threatened with a boycott over the Vietnamese issue, believes reason will prevail over racism.

The fleet, owned by Vinaport of Bayou LaBatre Inc., based in Bayou LaBatre, Ala., will be buying supplies from Morgan City businesses, and what's good for the waterfront is good for all of Morgan City, he said.

"There's trouble with everybody. People have problems with each other whether they're Vietnamese or American or Cuban or Salvadoran," he said. "I expect everything will work out all right."

City officials have investigated Vinaport and given it a clean bill of health. But Councilwoman Edith Wadhams said she wished more time had been spent studying the situation rather than rushing into a lease.

"EVERYONE IS aware there have been problems before with the Vietnamese (shrimpers), but that was several years ago. Still, we are going into an unknown area now," she said. "It's certainly going to have an impact on this community one way or another, and I hope the impact is good."

St. Mary Parish Sheriff Huey Bourgeois doesn't anticipate trouble in Morgan City.

"The trend seems to be that the Vietnamese people police their own business," Bourgeois said. "These people who are making noise weren't shrimping before. They were in the oil fields. The Vietnamese won't be taking their jobs."

VINAPORT PRESIDENT Hien Nguyen, a Princeton University graduate who has been in the United States since 1971, says his boats, which will begin arriving here in July, should catch enough shrimp to support a processing plant — something Morgan City hasn't had for years.

"If we can get a processing plant to locate in the area, that will benefit the traditional local American fisherman as well. The ice business, the fuel business, the boat-repair business and the mechanical shops should all thrive because of what we're doing," Nguyen said.

Mrs. Wadhams said many in this city of 17,000 support the mayor as he tries to lead Morgan City through the oil crisis.

"I'm certainly aware of the fact, and appreciate the fact, that the mayor is trying to diversify the economic base here," she said. "I guess we have to do something. We're certainly interested in moving to a more stable economy."

OPEC ministers face tough meeting

NEW YORK (UPI) — OPEC's bitterly divided oil ministers are to meet this week on the Yugoslav island of Brioni in what promises to be a tough bargaining session on forging an oil production policy that will give the cartel what it considers an adequate share of the world market.

Analysts said the beleaguered Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries probably will sidestep any official decision to raise oil prices, which would be meaningless unless the group can limit its output and shrink the global oil glut.

OPEC, which failed to reach a concrete accord on curbing production and stemming the oil price collapse at two emergency sessions earlier this year, will open its regular summer meeting June 25 on the Adriatic island. Brioni was the summer residence of the late Yugoslav President Josip Broz Tito.

Analysts expect the oil ministers to focus their sights at Brioni on ensuring that the 13-nation cartel continues to produce more than the 16 million barrel-a-day ceiling that was discarded in December and to keep up pressure on non-OPEC members to reduce their output.

OPEC's share of the free world market has risen to about 38 percent from a low of 30 percent in 1985. But the cartel supplied 65 percent of the West's oil needs in 1979.

OPEC also must tackle the thorny issue of assigning new national output quotas to its members before any production lid can make a dent in the world oil surplus.

In mid-June, Kuwaiti Oil Minister Sheikh Ali Khalifa al-Sabah predicted "pending problems" faced by OPEC "could be overcome within a period not exceeding two months." He said prices could rebound to between $17 and $19 a barrel by the end of the year.

"This will be the first reasonable decision point for OPEC because its own members and non-OPEC exporters have had six months to confront what low oil prices mean and to think about the impact on their national interests," said Daniel Yergin, president of Cambridge Energy Research Associates in Cambridge, Mass.

Deep divisions within OPEC threaten to scuttle any unanimous agreement, however.

At the April meeting in Geneva, 10 of OPEC's 13 oil ministers agreed to limit the cartel's production to an average 16.7 million barrels a day for 1986 and to lower output to 16.3 million barrels daily by July 1.

But OPEC hawks Iran, Libya and Algeria angrily denounced the majority decision and still are advocating a drastic drop in production to restore oil prices to the theoretical benchmark of $28 a barrel that was scrapped in December.

OPEC officials admit the cartel's output is exceeding 17.5 million barrels a day on the eve of the Brioni meeting and less than two weeks before the July 1 deadline for an across-the-board cutback.

Non-OPEC production in the free world has fallen slightly to about 25.5 million barrels a day, but world oil supplies still outstrip demand by at least 1.5 million barrels a day.

"OPEC seems to have abandoned the July 1 production target," said Gary Ross, president of consulting activities at Petroleum Industrial Research Associates.

He said it appears OPEC decided to drop the production guidelines after a May meeting in Taif, Saudi Arabia, where five OPEC oil ministers reported on contacts with non-OPEC members who were asked to help stabilize prices by reining in their output. A communique issued after the Taif meeting said progress had been made but gave no specifics.

COLA

If the planned purchases take place, Coke and Pepsi would share more than 80 percent of the domestic soft-drink market, which is estimated to be worth $26 billion a year, against 4.6 percent for Royal Crown.

Coke and Pepsi spokesmen denied Royal Crown's claims that the proposed mergers would violate antitrust laws. In fact, the planned mergers would stimulate competition, they said.

"Our acquisition of Seven-Up is not only within the law, it is designed to stimulate competition in the beverage industry and will benefit soft drink consumers everywhere," said Pepsi spokesman Jim Griffith.

Coke spokesman Eric Riggle would not comment on the suit, but said Coke's proposed acquisition is "pro-competitive and in the best interest of the soft drink consumer."

Riggle agreed that Coke and Pepsi will garner 80 percent of the soft drink industry if the mergers are completed. But RC's prediction that the share would grow to 90-100 percent is "speculation and conjecture," he said.

The proposed mergers "really put a lock on RC," said Ian Blair, associate editor of Beverage World, another trade magazine. "It's tough already for them. When you get even more polarized, it's going to make the whole competition for shelf space even more polarized."

RC already had filed statements with the Federal Trade Commission charging anti-trust violations. A lawsuit was expected, said Blair, who quoted an RC attorney as saying, "You can either sue or you die."

The purchases would boost Pepsi's domestic market share from 28 percent to 35 percent and Coke's share from 39 percent to 46 percent, industry analysts say.

Management gets blame for thrift failures

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Louisiana, struggling with a depressed economy and high unemployment, has become the leader in the number of savings institutions liquidated this year by federal authorities.

Six of 11 closures in 1986 have been in Louisiana, but bad management, not the state's economy, is being blamed. Five of the closures came Friday.

Federal bank board officials said the institutions failed because they paid high interest rates to lure depositors and then invested the money in risky ventures.

"I don't think you can trace this to the economy," said Rebecca Speece, a spokeswoman for the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, which oversees federally insured thrifts. "These were managerial problems."

The five institutions that were closed last week — Audubon Federal Savings and Loan, New Orleans Federal Savings and Loan, Northlake Federal Savings and Loan and Crescent Federal Savings Bank in New Orleans and Community Savings and Loan in Baton Rouge — were to reopen Monday under as branches of Horizon Federal Savings and Loan Association.

The five S&Ls had a total of 22,000 accounts, said Marti Badila, another bank board spokeswoman.

More than 200 people concerned about the federal takeover kept hotline operators busy over the weekend with questions about their savings.

African warrior's descendant recaptures family history

AP Laserphoto

Historian John Fleming holds one of the photos of his family taken in the 1880s in Burke County, N.C. It is the oldest photo he has of his family, which is descended from an African lawyer named Tomashan.

EDITORS' NOTE — The unveiling of the restored Statue of Liberty is a celebration of America's immigrant history. In this portrait, a descendant of slaves traces a forebear's path to the United States and back to Africa.

By JERRY SCHWARTZ

NEW YORK (AP) — Misfortune brought an African warrior named Tamishan to the New World. He stayed only briefly but left behind a family in slavery.

Now, almost 200 years later, a descendant has rediscovered Tamishan. In doing so, John Fleming has recaptured his family's history from the slave-traders and slave-owners who plucked his ancestors from Africa.

Memories of his grandfather led Fleming, a historian and organizer of the National Afro-American Museum and Cultural Center to be built in Wilberforce, Ohio, to initiate his search for his past in the early 1970s.

"I remembered my grandfather talking about my family and an African ancestor, and I had just kept it in the back of my mind," he said in a telephone interview.

He went to the Carolinas and interviewed older relatives. He examined the notations in the family Bible, kept by an aunt. He perused state, county and local records.

And at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, in the papers of a family that once owned his ancestors, he found the story of Tamishan.

The story starts somewhere in West Africa. "He was captured in battle and was enslaved. Then, sometime in the 1780s or 1790s, he was brought to Charleston and purchased by a slave trader," Fleming said.

This entrepreneur brought Tamishan to Burke County in North Carolina. There he was sold to Waightill Avery — a lawyer, the first attorney general of North Carolina and the county's largest slave-owner.

North Carolina in 1790 had about 100,000 blacks, a quarter of the state's population and one of every eight blacks who lived in the United States. They had been brought to the colonies to work the fields; it was not a happy life, and Tamishan did not hide his displeasure.

"The story is Tamishan was very unhappy, discontented, and he was viewed as a troublemaker," Fleming said.

Tamishan apparently spoke several languages, including Arabic, and the townspeople assumed he was a Moslem. Avery was intrigued; he wrote a paper about this slave "descended of a more noble race than the Guinea negro."

But Tamishan repeatedly complained and asked to return to Africa. Finally, in about 1800, "they agreed to send him back and he agreed to exchange in his place four other slaves," Fleming said.

He was taken back to Charleston and placed on a ship for Africa. The ship's captain came to respect his intelligence and to trust him; when they arrived, the captain allowed him to go ashore alone.

Days passed before Tamishan returned with several of his people. He produced $400 worth of gold dust and gave it to the captain.

"He told the captain he could not sell his relatives into slavery," Fleming said. "The ship left him behind, and nothing more was heard of him."

But he had fathered several children in America, among them one known as "Big Alf." Alf had a son named Alfred, who had a son named Isaac. They lived on three plantations near Morganton, N.C. — Magnolia, Belvedere and Swan Pond.

Isaac, Fleming's great-grandfather, was the last to live in slavery, and when freedom came he put farm work behind him. A white foreman helping construct a state mental institution taught him how to lay brick, and he in turn taught his father.

Together, they went into business. "They built chimneys all over western North Carolina," Fleming said.

Most of the family remains in and around Morganton, and the name Alfred is still common among them. The family has prospered; Fleming's uncle is the former president of Shaw University in Raleigh, his brother is a barber, his sister works for the Tennessee Valley Authority in Knoxville.

And Fleming himself is a trained historian, working on a project to give black Americans the same sense of history he secured for himself when he encountered Tamishan.

Wolper put worst nightmare to rest

By JUDIE GLAVE

NEW YORK (AP) — It's the night of July 3. Flags snap in the breeze. Bands are playing. Fireworks lie ready to soar high overhead, to crackle and boom.

President Reagan, surrounded by dignitaries, pushes a button to light the newly restored Statue of Liberty — and nothing happens.

That was the worst nightmare of David L. Wolper, producer of the Liberty Weekend extravaganza.

Was is the key word. The lights will not fail because Wolper believes in "taking care" of his nightmares. This one was eliminated by building a $250,000 backup system he hopes will never be used.

Such caution is typical of the man destined to be crowned the king of spectaculars.

But Wolper, the man who stirred the nation with the flag-waving opening and closing ceremonies at the 1984 Los Angeles Summer Olympic, who made it look deep into its collective soul with the miniseries "Roots," seems more Everyman than Superman.

At 57, Wolper is of medium height and medium build. A nondescript beard and aviator-style glasses frame his oval face. He speaks in a quiet monotone and has an infectious chuckle.

Dressed this day in a conservative tan suit, he wears no sparkling diamonds or chains, only a plain gold pinky ring and silver watch.

He and his third wife, Gloria, forgo the Hollywood social scene, preferring evenings at home. For 25 years, the same friends have gathered at Wolper's house nearly every Saturday night to watch movies.

Perhaps it is because he is so ordinary that Wolper knows what America wants. In his 37 years as a producer, he has delivered a string of hits from his first documentary, "Race for Space," to his success at the Olympic games.

He introduced the world to Jacques Cousteau and won four Emmys for showing us "The Making of the President" and an Oscar in 1971 for "The Helstrom Chronicle."

Audiences laughed at his 1970s sitcoms "Welcome Back Kotter" and "Chico and the Man," and were riveted to miniseries like "Roots," "The Thorn Birds" and "North and South, Book 2."

Now he's out to top it all with a four-day, $10 million extravaganza to celebrate Lady Liberty's centennial, which he refers to simply as "The Weekend."

After the Olympics, Wolper said, "I was made offers to produce halftime shows at football games, new car introductions, things like that. Some millionaire in Texas even offered me money to produce his wedding. Quite a lot of money, $1 million in fact." He turned them all down.

Then Peter Ueberroth, former president of the Olympic Organizing Committee, dispatched at the behest of Liberty Restoration Committee Chairman Lee Iacocca, approached him.

"Peter came to me and said, 'You don't want to do the Statue of Liberty, do you David?' — in his typical way of selling things negatively," Wolper said. "And I said, 'As a matter of fact, I do."

Wolper admits he always had a tendency to think stupendous thoughts and jokingly attributes his "need for noise" to the fact that he grew up "between the els (elevated subway lines)" on Manhattan's West Side.

As a teen-ager Wolper was unabashedly starstruck. He once confronted his idol, Frank Sinatra, outside a local piano bar and made the singer stand still until a friend snapped a picture of the two.

That kind of persistence earned him a reputation as a first-class dealmaker, going back to his very first production: his junior prom.

He persuaded the great vaudevillian Ted Lewis ("Me and My Shadow" and "Is Everybody Happy") to perform for a nominal fee and talked the McAlpin Hotel into donating the ballroom.

His diligence and a sound philosophy about handling problems helped Wolper survive planning for "The Weekend."

"When you plan these things you say to yourself, there's going to be a problem every day," Wolper said. "When it happens...you just put out the fire when it flares up and then go on to the next one."

What about media reports that Wolper, with his West Coast mentality, didn't understand the difficulties of planning a spectacular in New York?

"The only difference between the two cities is that New York is a more political town. It's run by its politicians while Los Angeles is run by the private sector. It's just a matter of learning who you have to deal with," he said.

Sluggish ticket sales?

"We'll be sold out."

Terrorism?

"I'm not concerned...Terrorists don't go where you think they will, certainly on a weekend where there will be so much security."

But that's not to say there haven't been any annoying incidents.

Wolper was unhappy when some politicians and businessmen complained that certain ethnic groups had been neglected when the 12 Medal of Liberty winners were announced.

"It stunned me," he said. "The winners have nothing to do with ethnic groups. They were chosen for their contributions to this country, not for where they were born."

So why, with all the frustrations, would he volunteer for such a project? What's the final reward for David L. Wolper?

"The reward is not yet," he said. "I'm hoping it will be to have everybody be really happy for that one weekend...just to forget the troubles of the world and for four days feel good about America and about themselves."

Luscious Lady Liberty

Chocolate confectioners work on this four-meter high (about 13 feet) Lady Liberty made of 2.5 tons dark chocolate recently in Paris. The statue, made from an original mold by French artist Auguste Bartholdi, who made the real statue, was sold at an auction in New York City.

Liberty poem placed inside statue in 1903

Emma Lazarus

NEW YORK (AP) — New York Harbor was the first stop for millions of immigrants, and the Statue of Liberty has been a towering symbol of their new home since it was unveiled in 1886.

But it wasn't until 1903, 20 years after the words were written, that the hopes of "your tired, your poor, your huddled masses yearning to breathe free" were placed on a tablet inside the statue's pedestal.

The poem that gave the Statue of Liberty the name "Mother of Exiles" was written by Emma Lazarus, daughter of a wealthy Jewish family prominent in New York from colonial times.

She was an accomplished poet, but when she was first asked to write a poem for a book designed to raise money for the statue it seemed a topic unsuited to one who commonly dealt with more ethereal themes.

But events halfway around the world shocked her. Reports reached the United States of the pogroms that were taking the lives of so many of her co-religionists in Russia, and she became involved in relief efforts.

On Nov. 2, 1883, she wrote the poem with the closing lines that put into words the promise of the statue.

Here is the text of the full sonnet:

The New Colossus

Not like the brazen giant of Greek fame,
With conquering limbs astride from land to land,
Here at our sea-washed, sunset gates shall stand
A mighty woman with a torch, whose flame
Is the imprisoned lightning, and her name
Mother of Exiles. From her beacon-hand
Glows world-wide welcome, her mild eyes command
The air-bridged harbor that twin cities frame.
"Keep ancient lands your storied pomp," cries she
With silent lips. "Give me your tired, your poor,
Your huddled masses yearning to breathe free.
The wretched refuse of your teeming shore.
Send these, the homeless, tempest-tost to me.
I lift my lamp beside the golden door."

Columnists' parents fled persecution in Russia

EDITORS' NOTE — Most immigrants arrived at America's port cities with little but the contents of satchels or a single family trunk. But all left legacies, like the Russian-born parents of advice columnists Abigail Van Buren and Ann Landers.

By JERRY SCHWARTZ

NEW YORK (AP) — In 1905, Abraham Friedman and Rebecca Rushall were faced with the decision of a lifetime, whether to leave Russia, and there was no Dear Abby, no Ann Landers to help them make up their minds.

It would be 13 years before Rebecca gave birth to the twins who would become America's best-loved advice columnists. But first she and Abraham would join the exodus of Jews from Russia to America, the Golden Land.

"My parents came with nothing. They all came with nothing," said Pauline Phillips, known to millions of newspaper readers as Abigail van Buren.

Her sister, Eppie Lederer, is best known as Ann Landers. Their parents were not known to the public at all; they were immigrants who came from Russia, through China and finally to the American Midwest, drawn by the siren call of a better life, driven by the desire to escape czarist Russia.

The turn of the century marked the zenith of anti-Jewish violence under the czars. From the 1881 assassination of Czar Alexander II onward, Jews were subjected to mounting oppression: anti-Jewish laws, expulsion from some cities and a series of pogroms, officially condoned mob violence against Jews.

Abraham and Rebecca, engaged to be married, had even more to fear. They were 20 years old, and Friedman was a prime candidate for the draft.

One army hitch? Twenty-five years.

"As I understand it, he desperately did not want to be conscripted into the Russian army," Mrs. Phillips said.

So they left their homes in the Ukraine — he was from Kiev, she from Minsk — and made the 4,000-mile journey to the Chinese port of Harbin.

They stayed there a short time. To raise money, Friedman sold Singer sewing machines to the Chinese. Finally, they set off for America — a long trip across the Pacific, around Cape Horn and all the way to New York.

About 2.4 million Jews entered the United States from 1881 to 1924, 75 percent of them from Russia. The height of the Jewish immigration was 1904 to 1908, when 642,463 came to a country that promised religious freedom, justice and equal opportunity for all who worked hard.

Abraham and Rebecca landed at Ellis Island, passing the Statue of Liberty. "It's amazing the impact the lady of the harbor had on them. They always held her dear, all their lives," Mrs. Phillips said.

Unlike many of their fellow Jewish immigrants, they did not stay in New York, in the East or even in an urban area. They first went to Omaha, Neb., where Abraham's older brother, Ben, lived.

The Jews who went to the Midwest generally had similar ties.

"Why on Earth would they go to Minnesota? Iowa? Nebraska? I could see them staying in Brooklyn, N.Y., but why go all the way out there?" asked Mrs. Phillips. Then she answered her own question: "Because they had somebody there — a relative, a friend, someone who could help."

Abraham and Rebecca married in Omaha, then moved to Sioux City, Iowa, where another relative had a jewelry store. Soon, Abraham became a peddler, traveling the rural byways of the Midwest selling goods.

With his profits, he bought a small grocery store in Sioux City. Behind the store, he lived with his growing family — first Helen, born in 1911, then Dorothy, born in 1913, and finally twins Pauline and Eppie, born July 4, 1918.

Through hard work, the store was successful. It grew, and Friedman branched out, purchasing two theaters. Those theaters eventually became part of the Tri-State Theaters chain of Iowa, Nebraska and Minnesota.

The Friedmans took more joy, however, in the girls' education. The twins, for example, attended Morningside College in Sioux City. "Every man's dream is to educate his children," Mrs. Phillips said.

NATION IN BRIEF

Officer pursues by bus when teens take his car

NEW YORK (AP) — A police officer spotted two youths driving around in his private car, asked a city bus to take him on a pursuit and shot the two when he caught up with them, officials say.

The two teen-agers were released after treatment Sunday at a Brooklyn hospital for superficial wounds, said Bob Slovak, a spokesman for the Transit Authority.

Slovak said the Transit Authority policeman, Keith Treadway, was supposed to have been working a beat in Manhattan at the time of the shooting. He said he did not know what Treadway was doing in Brooklyn.

Treadway, on advice from his lawyer, declined to talk to police, said Slovak. Therefore, a prosecutor voided the arrests of the two teen-agers and did not charge the two with any crimes, Slovak said.

According to Slovak, the uniformed officer spotted two men driving his car Sunday afternoon, and jumped onto a city bus and asked the bus driver to follow them.

Skipping stops on its route, the bus caught up to Treadway's car. Treadway jumped from the bus, sneaked up to the car and fired at the men, who sped off, said Slovak.

A passer-by offered Treadway a ride to continue the chase, Slovak said. The officer accepted but the car took off in the wrong direction.

Meanwhile, Treadway's vehicle crashed and the two youths, with blood on their faces and shirts, ran into a subway station. Treadway arrested them there, Slovak said.

Man's clothes set on fire

MILWAUKEE (AP) — A woman angry with her boyfriend apparently doused his closet with perfume or a similar liquid and set his clothes on fire, causing a blaze that forced the evacuation of the apartment building, authorities say.

Dennis Michalowski, a battalion fire chief, said 23 people fled as smoke spread through the three-story building Sunday. There were no injuries.

Authorities said they questioned a 26-year-old woman after her boyfriend smelled smoke and discovered clothing on fire in a closet. Michalowski said investigators were told that perfume, men's cologne or some other fluid containing alcohol had been splashed on the clothing.

Firefighters said six of the building's 18 apartments were damaged. They said a preliminary damage estimate was $170,000.

The woman was scheduled to appear today in the Milwaukee County District Attorney's Office, which will consider issuing charges in the case.

MALDEN, Mass. (AP) — Scores of children were evacuated from a nearby municipal swimming pool after a live grenade wired to a timing device was found in a mailbox outside the Post Office of this Boston suburb.

Police Lt. Richard Aucoin said the rocket-type grenade was found Sunday by a postal worker preparing to collect mail from the box, and was detonated by a state police bomb expert.

Aucoin said he doubted whether the grenade would have exploded on its own because it lacked a proper detonator. He said no one claimed responsibility for planting it.

Police ordered 250 people, mostly children, evacuated from a Metropolitan District Commission swimming pool across the street from the Post Office.

Personal calls probed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Officials are studying ways of cutting down on unauthorized use of long-distance telephone calls by federal employees, including "terrorizing" workers or making them pay for the calls, a congressional aide says.

A preliminary study of five federal agencies shows about one-third of all long-distance telephone calls made by federal employees at five agencies are for personal reasons.

"The taxpayers are paying a lot for federal phone service, and the phone bill should be cut," Andrew Feinstein, staff director of the House subcommittee on civil service, said Saturday in discussing the findings. "Hundreds of millions of dollars could be saved."

The President's Council on Integrity and Efficiency ordered the inspectors general of all federal agencies to conduct the studies to determine the extent of phone system abuse.

Some things the same

NEEDHAM, Mass. (AP) — U.S. and Soviet women linked by satellite for a television program disagreed on political issues but found they had common family problems like getting husbands to help around the house.

"A working woman is an extremely busy person. We have husbands. We have children," a Soviet woman said. "I think right now this is a universal problem."

Two hundred women in Leningrad, including doctors, housewives and laborers, and 200 of their American counterparts in this Boston suburb quizzed each other for three hours Sunday on issues ranging from nuclear war to a lack of available men.

The event, billed as a "Citizens' Summit," will be televised in most major U.S. cities beginning Wednesday, producers said. Soviet national television also is expected to air the program in a one- or two-hour segment.

The first satellite summit linked men and women in Seattle and Leningrad in December.

TV talk show host Phil Donahue served as moderator in the Massachusetts studio, while Soviet commentator Vladimir Pozner was the Leningrad moderator. The women exchanged views while watching each other on large-screen monitors and listening to translators.

Helms accuses Noriega

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., accused Panama's top military official of being "the head of the biggest drug-trafficking operation in the Western Hemisphere" and hinted that he might have been involved in political killings.

Two weeks ago, The New York Times, citing U.S. intelligence documents, linked Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, the head of the Panamanian Defense Forces to drug trafficking, gun running, money laundering and the killing last September of Dr. Hugo Spadafora, a prominent critic of the Panamanian military.

Helms, appearing on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press" Sunday, was asked whether charges linking the Panamanian strongman to Spadafora's death, drug running and money laundering were true.

Reagan stand defended

WASHINGTON (AP) — A senior administration official said South Africa's state of emergency and press censorship have only heightened racial conflict, but defended President Reagan's decision not to take stronger measures against the white minority government.

"We think that what the South African government has done in recent weeks is to shoot itself in both feet," said Chester Crocker, assistant secretary of state for African affairs. The restrictions, he said, "simply get in the way of any dialogue and polarize the situation further."

"These measures of repression, which is all that they are, will not address the basic grievances and the basic problems," Crocker said Sunday on the ABC-TV program, "This Week With David Brinkley."

"What they will do is to put a buffer between our eyes and what is going on the black townships. It doesn't really fool anybody."

300 Automobiles-Domestic

New design and front-wheel-drive are featured on Oldsmobile Delta 88. Full-size interior spaciousness is retained with improved handling and fuel economy.

Olds Delta 88 remembered family

by Tom Cooper

It's an old goal. First set in 1897 by Ransom E. Olds it stated the objective of the automobile manufacturer as "...to build a carriage in as nearly a perfect manner as possible." After 88 years the company that Mr. Olds began still approaches the building of an Oldsmobile with that same dedication.

The Olsmobile Delta 88 Royale is billed by the company as "the family car that didn't forget the family." There's plenty of room for the whole crew with lots of head and leg room for 6 passengers.

Oldsmobile didn't forget dad either. Take for example the outside, it's sleeker, more attractive and more aerodynamic than ever. And dad will also like the smoothness, agility and handling ease that come with front-wheel drive, rack-and-pinion steering and four-wheel independent suspension, with automatic electronic load leveling available.

Also available are two up-graded ride systems. Level II is the Firm Ride and Handling Package and it's for drivers who want added precision, response and cornering capability. Level III is the Sport Suspension System that makes available a suspension for even higher levels of driver control and it includes special aluminum-styled wheels and larger tires.

There are also two levels of performance available under the hood. A 3.0 liter V6 with multiport fuel injection is standard and a 3.8 liter V6 with sequential port fuel injection is available. A 4 speed automatic overdrive transmission is standard with both.

The whole family should be able to benefit from new advances in acoustics which lend to a quieter more noise free ride. In addition side window defoggers are standard and Soft Ray tinted glass all around. Now add to all of this a traditionally high resale value and you have a family car that is hard to beat.

This feature appears each Monday as a reader service of the Midland Reporter-Telegram.
