Mrs. Mandela vows to continue activism

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Black activist Winnie Mandela appeared before a magistrate on a charge of defying government restrictions on her actions and movements, and immediately vowed to ignore the order a third time and return today to her Soweto home.

Mrs. Mandela, the wife of imprisoned black leader Nelson Mandela, was dragged from her Soweto home by police Sunday and taken to the Krugersdorp police station west of Johannesburg for being in Soweto despite a government order that allows her to live anywhere in South Africa except the Johannesburg area.

The court released Mrs. Mandela on her own recognizance after a five-minute hearing, and ordered her to appear Jan. 22 at Krugersdorp regional court outside Johannaesburg.

Mrs. Mandela left the court ringed by hundreds of chanting black supporters. "As far as I am concerned, it is a non-issue, a law that should not be obeyed by any human being" she said of the banning order that restricts where she may live and who she may see.

Mrs. Mandela's lawyer, Akbar Ayob, was asked if Mrs. Mandela would be arrested again for returning to Soweto. He said, "She may be, but I don't think so."

Previously, she had been restricted for eight years to the rural town of Brandfort, but she had ignored the order in recent months.

Mrs. Mandela was more than 90 minutes late for the court appearance. About 70 reporters waited for her to appear in the small court room, and 15 police officers and some military police also were present.

Elsewhere in South Africa today, a bomb exploded at a crowded shopping center in a resort suburb of Durban, killing at least four whites and injuring at least 25, police said.

Mrs. Mandela had been ejected at gunpoint Saturday from her residence in Soweto, the black township near Johannesburg.

She returned early Sunday and was speaking to reporters when police arrived to arrest her. She wore a bandage on her ankle to protect a bruise suffered while resisting expulsion from her home the day before.

"Are you coming or do we have to use the force we used yesterday again?" shouted a policeman, according to Vivienne Walt, a South African journalist who was speaking to Mrs. Mandela.

Mrs. Mandela shouted that she would not leave, and police again had to grab her by each arm and virtually drag her to the police car, said Elvis Phele, the boyfriend of Mrs. Mandela's daughter, Zinzi, who also was present.

Six reporters waiting outside were taken away and held briefly by police. Authorities said today that they were investigating whether charges should be filed against the six for being in Soweto without the necessary permission.

She has lived at the Mandela family home in Soweto since August, when her house and clinic in Brandfort were firebombed in an attack Mrs. Mandela blamed on security police.

Community work began with immunization clinic

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

It was one year before World War II broke out when Laverne Jones helped begin an immunization program for the children of Midland.

"We used to go down to the old community theater — about where the county library is located now — one day a week," she recalled. "We set up a little screen off to one side of the theater where there were a couple or room where the nurses gave the shots.

"We entertained the children by showing comedy movies," she added. "Abbott and Costello were their favorite."

The Immunization Clinic was organized in 1940 and later staffed by volunteers from the Children's Service League in 1964. Today, Ms. Jones continues to give her time at immunization clinics held weekly at the City County Health Department.

She recalled those early days of community volunteer work in Midland — which at the time had a population of only 10,000.

"The Children's Service League started as a group in the late 1930's dedicated to helping the underprivileged children," she said. "I think we had poorer people back then. There were people with no plumbing, electricity or water, dirt floors and we didn't have as many social welfare programs either."

She told of how the CSL started the "Clothing Room," housed in the old Heidleberg Inn.

"We started without any help," she said. "We took our funds and worked with a social worker who would find children in the schools who needed clothing and we would provide it for them."

According to the CSL records, the organization's beginnings occurred when a small group of women decided to make layettes for needy families rather than sewing for their own families when the sewing club met. Used clothing was collected and distributed to indigents. The Clothing Room was housed in various buildings after the Heidleberg, and in 1976, then located in the Courthouse Annex, was closed because it was no longer needed.

"We just didn't have all of the next-to-new shops, and garage sales weren't popular back then," added Ms. Jones.

During the years she also has dedicated time as a volunteer for the state mental hospital in Big Spring and for patients at the Veteran's Home. For her contributions she received a community service award from the Optimist Club.

Today, she continues her work, going to the clinic every Monday from 8 a.m. to noon "getting medical records, making cards out for them and taking the children to the nurses for their shots," she said.

Things have changed some, she said.

"We don't entertain the children anymore. They just show up and we give them their shots," she said. "And of course I don't like having to fight the traffic and drive so far to get to the clinic. I liked it better when Midland was smaller."

Of course some things don't change.

"High school kids fuss the most," she said. "Especially the girls. They always wonder if it's going to hurt."

Smoking once touted at AMA conventions

By SHARON COHEN

CHICAGO (AP) — Imagine a tobacco company setting up shop at a convention of doctors to extol the virtues of its cigarettes. Today, it might outrage. Decades ago, it didn't.

There were no Surgeon General's annual smoking reports. No dire warning labels on cigarette packs. No Great American Smoke-Outs.

In 1942, Camel cigarettes invited doctors at the American Medical Association's convention to "see for the first time the dramatic visualization of nicotine absorption from cigarette smoke in the human respiratory tract."

In fact, Camel ads once boasted they were the brand doctors smoked most.

In 1940, Philip Morris invited doctors to drop by its cigarette booth at a New York medical convention. Fourteen years later, Viceroy thanked 65,000 doctors who visited its exhibits at medical conventions.

The AMA and its 260,000 members have since parted company with America's tobacco producers. While 60 percent of physicians smoked in the late 1940s, today only 15 percent of doctors light up.

The AMA says it has a long record of opposing tobacco. The first issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association, in 1883, carried a report on the "pernicious" effects of smoking on children.

And in its boldest move against the health hazards of smoking, the association's policy-making House of Delegates two weeks ago called for a ban on all cigarette advertising and promotion and a tobacco-free society by the turn of the century.

But the parting of the AMA and the tobacco industry has not been without embarrassing moments, and some critics call the AMA's commitment to ending smoking halfhearted.

"It seems to me they have been foot-dragging on tobacco for 25 to 30 years," said Dr. Elizabeth Whelan, director of the American Council on Science and Health. "They have not given it the priority it deserves."

"For much of the last 17 years, they have...politely patted people on the head who were trying to raise the issue," said Dr. Alan Blum, editor of the New York State Journal of Medicine and founder of Doctors Ought to Care, a health promotion group.

To assert now they are leaders "is a bitter irony that sticks in my craw," added Blum, an AMA member whose journal has chronicled smoking advertising campaigns and the AMA's record on the issue.

AMA critics cite evidence to support their contention that the nation's largest organization of doctors has not been sufficiently aggressive in confronting one of the nation's top public health questions:

Tobacco's roots reach deep in U.S. history

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON — Hardly a year passes without Congress tinkering with the tobacco crop by changing the number of acres farmers grow, the prices they get, or the way government handles the surplus problem.

Critics sometimes view tobacco as a pampered, elite commodity that has enjoyed government support far in excess of its importance in the real world. But tobacco's roots are deep and reach far back in the American political psyche.

Tobacco was a New World crop when colonists landed in Virginia, and it helped trigger the American revolution. Tobacco even prompted a clause in the Constitution prohibiting a tax on exports, a factor that helps guide United States policy to this day.

"The settlers in Jamestown found that they could get rich pretty fast by growing tobacco and shipping it to England," Agriculture Department historian Wayne D. Rasmussen said in an interview.

"But, as so often happens, they overdid the market, and in the early 1620s there was a series of laws passed on grading ... to try to cut down the supply of tobacco going to market."

Rasmussen, who sees a parallel with many of today's farm problems, said that Virginia's colonial lawmakers didn't stop there.

"They did such things as saying that all tobacco had to be inspected and that only the top nine leaves could be picked from each plant," he said. "Then they said that no more than 1,000 plants could be raised by any one tobacco worker, trying to control quantity."

In England, tobacco was so valuable that the government controlled sales by colonial growers, saying that it could only be shipped to England. Tobacco taxes and profits grew rapidly.

"It helped bring about the American Revolution and was one of the things that helped bring about a clause in our Constitution, which says that Congress may not levy a tax on exports ... which is why we fiddle around with embargoes and things like that when it comes to controlling exports," Rasmussen said.

Christmas cards reflect community's caring

ABILENE (AP) — Larry Groner's family wanted something special for his Christmas gift this year after he was told he needs a heart transplant to live.

But they had no idea the people of Abilene would respond as they did to their special plea.

The gift Martha Groner and her two sons decided upon was Christmas cards — lots and lots of Christmas cards — from the people of Abilene.

Mrs. Groner called the Abilene Reporter-News, which publicized the request last Sunday.

On Monday, the mailman delivered about a dozen cards.

Groner, 48, who had not seen the story, thought they must be from people at McMurry College, where he has been maintenance director since retiring from the military three years ago.

By Tuesday, the mailman was delivering double handfuls of Christmas cards.

"I was stunned," Groner said. "It is not just that people are sending cards. There is genuine caring in those cards."

By Thursday, approximately 500 cards had arrived.

"God must be tired of hearing Larry Groner's name today. So many, many people have taken the time to write letters and beautiful messages about people they know who've had similar experiences and how well they are doing," Mrs. Groner said.

One handmade card and letter came from a 12-year-old girl who said she knew how bad hospitals were because she had been hospitalized three times and was scheduled to return for eye surgery.

Another came from a woman and her daughter, 21, who is waiting to have a heart and lung transplant.

Two 5-year-old girls enclosed construction-paper unicorns in their Christmas card because they knew Groner needed "magic."

Groner has suffered a series of heart attacks and, after the last one on Nov. 5, was told his only chance would be a heart transplant. He was sent home from the Veterans Administration Hospital in Dallas two weeks ago to await an opening at the VA heart center in Richmond, Va.

Aaron Parr swings on a gate at the family's goat dairy near Stony, west of Denton. The family's day starts at 6 a.m., milking the goats.

Life's fun on the farm with a 'He-Man' goat

By DON GEIGER

STONY, Texas (AP) — Jumper the goat thinks she's a dog and follows visitors and her human masters, nibbling on clothes, untying shoelaces and demanding attention.

Aaron Parr, 4, thinks he's He-Man and struts around herding goats, climbing haystacks and blasting off spaceships made of rocks.

Mary Parr, Parr's grandmother, oversees them, a menagerie of dogs and some 100 other goats. This is Parr's Stoney Road Dairy Goats, tucked unobtrusively away in the corner of a jog in a dirt road west of Denton.

Jumper, Parr and his older brother, Chris, keep Mrs. Parr and her dairy hopping.

Jumper has the run of the dairy barn, but it's not by choice. Jumper is an escape goat; she bounds over fences like a deer.

"The reason her name is Jumper is that there is no place she can't go. She's spoiled. There's no place I can keep her," Mrs. Parr said. "She thinks she's a dog. She wants people to pet her."

The younger boy, who spends days at the farm, "thinks he's He-Man or something. It's all that TV stuff," she said.

Four months ago Mrs. Parr hand milked her goats twice a day and was, she said, lagging decades behind the industry's technology. Then she bought a small machine that allows her to milk four goats at once.

"Before we got this I figured we were 75 years behind in the milk business, and now I figure we're just 50. It's very primitive, but it's very clean," she said.

Mrs. Parr's days start at 6 a.m. when she cleans the milking equipment and swings open a small door at one end of the milking room in her tin-roofed pole barn. Four goats — led by Beauty, who is temperamental and spoiled and grins when Mrs. Parr blows cigarette smoke in her face — troop up the ramp and into their places along the chute.

They munch contentedly from buckets of grain while their milk is pumped into a five-gallon can.

A few minutes and a couple gallons later the goats head back to pasture through a door at the opposite end of the barn. Four goats at a time come in. After 2½ hours Mrs. Parr and her hired hand finish the morning's milking.

Ten hours later they do it again. That's the way it is 365 days a year, "whether you want to or not," she said, "You can't just say I don't need any milk today."

"They're real affectionate, and they're real calm, and you come out here and it relaxes you," Mrs. Parr said. "If you want to be real relaxed you take five hours to milk. One thing, after you milk goats for a while, you don't want to arm wrestle with that person."

She sells most of her milk to a Dallas cheese factory, but she says many people want the goats' milk to drink for health reasons. Others "just like goats' milk," she said.

Mrs. Parr does most of her veterinary work and delivers her goats' kids.

"You have to learn to treat them yourself," she said. "If they get sick, there's not a lot of time to call the vet. They have a lot of things you just can't call a vet for.

U.S. hospitals offer hope to Afghan children

NEW YORK (AP) — Shafi-ullah trotted near a new toy truck, its radio-control box tucked under his left forearm — the one that ends in a stump.

The boy, who is 7, lost his left hand two years ago when Soviets bombed his village in Afghanistan.

He knows it was the Soviets who bombed his village near Kabul because adults tell him so. All he remembers is being outside, playing with friends, when the helicopters flew over.

"We could see the helicopters and they could see us," he said this week through an interpreter.

The 11 children he was playing with, including two of his brothers, were all under 12 years old, meaning none was old enough to be a freedom fighter. When the bombing stopped, Shafi-ullah was the only child still alive.

He was one of four Afghan bombing victims, ranging from 4 to 10 years old, who arrived in New York earlier this week before heading to Boston today for medical treatment and artificial limbs.

The approximately five-week trip is being financed by the Free Afghanistan Alliance, based in Cambridge, Mass. The group has arranged for the children to receive artificial limbs through an affiliate of Massachusetts General Hospital.

While in New York, the children stayed with Afghans, in a large white clapboard house that is a combination mosque, school and headquarters for the Afghan National Islamic Council.

They were held up by fellow refugees as examples of the Soviet Union's reputed barbarity in a conflict that has raged since 1978, after communists took control of the Afghan government and the Soviets intervened in December 1979 to install a new leader, Babrak Karmal, and put down the revolt.

"These are the living witnesses, the living evidence of the atrocities that the Russians are doing in Afghanistan," said Qadeer Nazary, secretary of the Afghan National Islamic Council. "How could they shoot small children like that?

"It's not that there are only four or five or 10 — we have got hundreds of children like this."

As he spoke, the four children sat quietly in folding chairs, their dark eyes watching the adults curiously. The youngest, Zarmena, 4, ate peanuts and hopped on and off her chair, unhampered by a left leg that ends at the knee.

The others — Shafi-ullah, Muzafar, a 10-year-old boy, and Utmarkhil, his 10-year-old niece — hid their maimed arms under a strange combination of traditional Arab robes covered by Western sweaters and jackets. Neither Utmarkhil nor Muzafar has a right hand.

"I was playing on the ground with the other children when my village was bombed," Utmarkhil said through Nazary. "I was hit, but I don't know how."

Five other children, including her older sister, were killed instantly, she said. But she remembers very little — she is not even sure how long ago it happened — and was in a coma for four days afterward, Nazary explained.

Muzafar also lost his hand while outside playing, and saw one of his brothers shot to death, he said.

Only tiny Zarmena was accompanied on this trip by a parent. The others left families behind in refugee camps in and around Peshwar, Pakistan.

Zarmena's father, Mohammed Hassan, a 29-year-old freedom fighter, held the girl in his lap as spoke of the war.

"In October 1984, our village was attacked by Russian troops at 7 o'clock in the morning," he said through Nazary. "First we were hit by rockets, later on we saw 10 helicopters and 60 tanks.

"Customarily, after the early morning prayer, the mullah of the mosque starts teaching the small children. About 40 children were in the mosque when the Russians started bombing. The mullah's head was blown off, and we couldn't find pieces of his body. Nineteen children, ages 3 to 9, were killed on the spot and the other children were seriously injured."

Hassan said the Soviets killed two of his brothers, also freedom fighters, as they tried to surrender.

He showed some washed-out photographs of a woman he said was his sister-in-law. She lay on bed, three of her four limbs bandaged stumps. The family had to leave her in Afghanistan because she was too ill to travel, he said. They do not know if she is still alive.

"The world should know what the Russians are doing in Afghanistan," Nazary said vehemently. "This so-called superpower is fighting a war with these children."

Farm bill awaits Reagan's hand to push subsidies to new high

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — The 1985 farm bill awaiting President Reagan's signature is likely to boost federal subsidy spending to record levels while it tries to buffer farmers from the cost of restoring health to U.S. exports.

Reagan planned to sign the massive, complex legislation at a ceremony in his office today, then hold a closed-circuit television news conference with farm-state reporters in an effort to demonstrate concern for agriculture's problems.

Also awaiting the president's signature was a bill designed to shore up the financially strained Farm Credit System, the $70 billion banking network that is the nation's largest farm lender.

Together with congressional efforts to cut spending and reform the tax code, the two farming bills "could be termed the agricultural recovery program to put this industry back in the business of prosperity in the years to come," Agriculture Secretary John Block said Friday in announcing the president intended to sign the measures.

The massive farm bill reauthorizes for five years a long list of programs ranging from crop price supports and income subsidies to foreign famine relief efforts, food stamps and agricultural credit, research and extension programs.

At the heart of the bill are provisions lowering federal price supports for major commodities, including wheat, corn, rice, cotton and soybeans. The action is designed to make the crops more competitive in world trade and restore U.S. market share lost in recent years to an overvalued dollar and excessive support levels.

In a gesture of concern over the badly slumping farm economy, which has been hit particularly hard in the export-dependent Midwestern grain belt, the bill replaces income lost to lower price supports with income subsidies.

While the cost of the bill's commodity sections has been estimated at $52 billion over the next three years, analysts say it is likely to go considerably higher — perhaps to $75 billion — and set new records for farm-program spending.

In addition to its crop programs, the bill makes several significant changes in current law.

It creates a new program aimed at cutting the milk industry's persistent surplus production through subsidized buy-outs of entire dairy herds. Milk producers would be enticed to go out of business by selling their cows for slaughter or export in return for a government bonus payment.

The program would be paid for by an assessment on all dairy farmers. If it does not make a sufficient dent in overproduction, price supports would be cut in future years.

The bill also establishes new soil conservation programs deemed historic by environmentalists and farm groups. Federal farm program benefits would for the first time be tied to how farmers treat their highly erodible land, with those who break out new fragile ground for planting denied all subsidies. In addition, the government would pay farmers annual rental to idle as much as 45 million acres of their most erosion-prone crop land.

And the measure establishes new initiatives aimed at increasing exports and countering trade practices regarded by the United States as unfair. U.S. farm exports, the backbone of the nation's international trade, have slipped more than 30 percent since 1980.

The farm credit legislation gives new powers to the Farm Credit Administration, the system's federal regulators, and centralizes some of the loosely linked system's finances to make aid more available to troubled member banks.

Congress may be facing fiscal chaos next session

WASHINGTON (AP) — Unprecedented balanced-budget legislation passed during the first session of the 99th Congress is seen as a prelude to "fiscal chaos" when lawmakers return next year to try to fit the dream to reality.

The longest first congressional session in five years ended Friday in acrimony over spending authorities, with lawmakers grumbling that it was going to be tough for Congress and the White House to swallow the bitter pill called the Gramm-Rudman balanced-budget amendment.

"I think this legislation is going to create a lot of frostbite and wounds and fiscal chaos next year," said Senate Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va. "I think we're in for a bad session."

"I think the first month (of 1986) is going to be the best," quipped Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan. "We won't be here."

The first session of the 99th Congress began as it ended: with arguments over the budget. Lawmakers frustrated by their inability to agree on ways of reducing federal red ink — running at a $200 billion clip annually — instead passed a landmark measure aimed at forcing a balanced budget by 1991.

BUT AS CONGRESS adjourned Friday, they were unable to come to terms on a three-year, $74 billion deficit-reduction package that had been promised by the budget that lawmakers struggled to enact last August.

"We end the year on a rather dismal note," said Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., chairman of the Senate Budget Committee.

Congress reconvenes Jan. 21, and there is general agreement that things will only get worse as Congress begins operating under the procedures of the legislation sponsored by Sens. Phil Gramm, R-Texas; Warren Rudman, R-N.H.; and Ernest Hollings, D-S.C.

The Gramm-Rudman bill requires the elimination of budget deficits through conventional legislation, or if the Congress and the White House cannot agree, through automatic spending cuts.

Gramm-Rudman calls for across-the-board cuts of as much as $11.7 billion on March 1. Meanwhile, deeper cuts likely will be necessary to hit the statutory deficit target of $144 billion for the 1987 fiscal year that begins next Oct. 1.

Supports of Gramm-Rudman say the threat of the automatic cuts will force the White House, Congress and the public to form a consensus about how best to attack deficits.

But opponents say that is fantasy. They look at the way budget deliberations have gone this year and see the worst for next year.

"NEXT YEAR IS going to be absolutely disgraceful in terms of how we deal with real problems," said Rep. David Obey, D-Wis.

"This House will be paralyzed" during the next session, Rep. Silvio O. Conte, D-Mass., said last week. "There will be chaos here in the House."

"I ask you, I ask this House, where are we going to get another $11.7 billion (in cuts) when we cannot even meet the target now," Conte said.

There will be cuts everywhere, he said. "Everything will go down the drain because this House panicked and passed Gramm-Rudman."

Domenici, however, thinks Gramm-Rudman may produce movement on the deficit issue.

"This bill may be the last real chance to get the president and the congressional leadership together next year to put together a budget that gets us to the $144 billion deficit" and puts the government on a path toward a balanced budget," Domenici said.

Domenici predicted President Reagan would have to give up his opposition to tax increases and cuts in Pentagon spending.

"I think there'll have to be some tax enhancement," Domenici added.

Said Rep. Thomas Foley, D-Wash.: "The only easy cuts in the budget are usually the phony ones, and we are through with the phony ones."

Superfund running out; environmental bills waiting

WASHINGTON (AP) — If the measure of success for Congress is the amount of legislation enacted into law, the 1985 session was a step backward for environmental protection.

The record for 1985 is clear: not one major environmental bill was sent to the White House, and when lawmakers finally went home Friday, they left behind a "Superfund" toxic waste cleanup program stalled and running out of money.

But senators, representatives and environmental lobbyists say this is not the proper yardstick for judging the yearlong efforts to intensify the nation's battle against hazardous chemicals and polluted water.

They say that although 1985 may have ended with a big zero on the scoreboard, the necessary groundwork was laid to have three major environmental bills ready for final action early in 1986.

And perhaps more importantly, they add, 1985 was the year the House and Senate served bipartisan notice that Congress, and not the Reagan administration, is setting the nation's environmental priorities and goals.

The year ended with both chambers having passed their own versions of bills to reauthorize Superfund, the Safe Drinking Water Act and the Water Quality Act, which provides money to localities for wastewater and sewage treatment plants.

Even without final action in 1985, the drinking water and water quality programs continue.

BUT SUPERFUND IS a different story. Its taxing authority expired Sept. 30, leaving the Environmental Protection Agency limping along, conserving money to pay its Superfund staff and doing only emergency cleanups.

Making its major environmental proposal early in the year, the administration called for a $5.3 billion Superfund through 1990, up from the $1.6 billion budgeted in the first five years.

The administration plan, which also proposed shifting much toxic cleanup authority from the EPA to the states, was dead on arrival. The Senate approved a $7.5 billion bill in late September. The House upped the ante to $10 billion in early December.

Both bills also seek to force the EPA to clean up toxic dumps to meet various health standards. And the House went a step further, mandating that the EPA begin cleanups at 600 dumps through 1990.

Responding to a wave of toxic leaks from chemical plants, both chambers overrode administration and industry objections and approved programs to give the public information about emissions of known or suspected cancer-causing substances.

The message in both bills was clear: Congress, upset that only a dozen or so cleanups were completed during the first five years of Superfund and that there was only limited action taken on toxic emissions, was putting the EPA on a much shorter leash.

ANOTHER ADMINISTRATION PROPOSAL was to phase out by 1990 the $2.4 billion water and sewer grant program that has been credited with helping clean up the nation's waterways.

The House and Senate, however, want to keep it going at near-current levels into the early 1990s and then replace it with a revolving loan fund to provide money to states and municipalities.

The administration also unsuccessfully opposed language in the drinking water bills that would force the EPA to set health standards for some 65 chemical contaminants — only two dozen are set now — and begin a program to protect groundwater, the source of about half the nation's drinking water.

Both chambers had passed their water bills by late July, but they were still awaiting action by House and Senate negotiators when the session ended.

A principal reason for this was a bitter fight between two House committees over Superfund that kept key members and staffers tied up for weeks and unable to meet with Senate counterparts to hammer out compromise water bills.

All three issues are scheduled to be worked on by conferees early next year, although the water bills could languish while lawmakers negotiate their differences over Superfund, especially over how to raise the taxes needed to expand the cleanup program.

EVEN WITH NOTHING new on the statute books, lawmakers are satisfied with their efforts in 1985.

House Energy and Commerce Chairman John Dingell, D-Mich., feels Congress made "substantial progress," not only on the legislative front but also in forcing EPA to take action on groundwater monitoring and writing rules to control asbestos.

Soviets see 'sign' in test postponement

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union said postponement of a U.S. hydrogen bomb test may be a sign that the White House is considering its call for a total ban on nuclear testing, but an American official said the weather was responsible.

Packing the punch of up to 150,000 tons of TNT, 10 times the power of the bomb that destroyed Hiroshima, the weapon to be exploded in Nevada has been linked to research for President Reagan's "Star Wars" program to develop space-based missile defenses.

The underground test, codenamed Goldstone, was delayed three times after originally being scheduled for last Thursday. The latest postponements came Saturday and Sunday.

Tass, reporting Sunday on the delay, noted that the Soviet Union on Aug. 6 imposed a unilateral moratorium on nuclear tests that is to run through the end of the year.

Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev has offered to prolong the ban if the United States follows suit, and the Soviets recently said they could agree to measures of on-site verification to respond to U.S. concerns that a ban is not verifiable.

"So what does the United States' decision to put off an underground nuclear explosion mean?" Tass asked. "Is it a response to the recent Soviet proposals on verification?

"If so, then the possibility to get off the ground the solution of the problem of nuclear tests assumes real outlines," Tass said. "Many would like to see in it the sign of hope that the voice of reason starts prevailing among those who are shaping the United States nuclear policy."

But in Washington, a spokesman for the Department of Energy said the explosion had been delayed because of winds blowing toward populated areas of Nevada and California.

Spokesman Chris West said a forecast indicated unfavorable weather would continue at the site 104 miles northwest of Las Vegas well into next week. Winds at Pahute Mesa, ground zero for the test, continued to blow toward Beatty, Nev., and inhabitated areas of California, he said.

The tests are not conducted if winds are blowing toward populated regions in the event radioactive gases should escape the ground. West said the weather and the Christmas holiday meant the test could not be conducted before Saturday.

Department of Energy officials have declined to confirm the test is linked to "Star Wars." But other sources say it is the fifth nuclear explosion at the Nevada test site related to the space-defense program.

The test reportedly is designed to help scientists learn how to harness and focus laser rays from a hydrogen bomb blast. The Tass account, without explicitly mentioning "Star Wars," said the test would involve a "nuclear-pumped laser."

Lasers are being investigated as a possible means to shoot down attacking missiles. The Soviet Union rejects U.S. contentions that "Star Wars" is a purely defensive program, and says the program would carry the superpower arms race into space.

Tass on Sunday also restated Moscow's proposal that both sides set up on-site verification measures and that six other nations — Argentina, Greece, India, Mexico, Tanzania and Sweden — participate in monitoring compliance with a test ban by setting up tracking stations.

"As is justly recognized by many observers, these proposals opened up practical possibilities for a mutually acceptable solution of the question of mutual moratorium," Tass said.

In a separate interview, the deputy director of Tass said the United States is reluctant to agree to a test ban because it wants to pursue its plan to develop space-based weapons, officially known as the Strategic Defense Initiative.

"It is noteworthy that the negative reaction to the Soviet peace initiative came at the time when major experiments are to be performed within the framework of the U.S. 'Star Wars' program," Yuri Romantsov was quoted as saying by the official newspaper of the Russian Republic, Sovietskaya Rossiya.

AMA —

— AMA President Harrison Rogers, who owned a part-interest in Georgia farmland, said he sold his interest this year. He said he had only seen the land once and wasn't aware that tobacco was grown on a small section of it.

— The AMA held tobacco stock as late as 1981. It sold its $1.4 million in stock, part of a $113 million pension fund in AMA members retirement plan, after the House of Delegates initially rejected a motion to divest.

— It wasn't until 1972, eight years after a landmark Surgeon General's report on the hazards of smoking, that smoking was discouraged at House of Delegate meetings. Cigarette machines were removed from the AMA's headquarters in Chicago last year.

— The AMA initially told the Federal Trade Commission warning labels on cigarette packs wouldn't do any good. It has since changed its stand, and recommended that warnings be made even more explicit.

Today, smoking is blamed for 350,000 deaths each year. It is the leading cause of preventable death in America.

As much as 30 percent of all coronary heart disease deaths and 30 percent of all cancer deaths are linked to smoking, according to the federal Office on Smoking and Health.

The 17th annual Surgeon General's report on smoking and health, released last Thursday, said cigarette smoking causes more death and disability among American workers than exposure to hazardous substances in the workplace.

Some contend real leaders in the anti-smoking movement have been groups like the American Heart Association, the American Cancer Society and the American Lung Association.

But unlike those associations, the AMA has a broad agenda concerned with doctors' fees, malpractice, research and accreditation of medical schools.

The AMA is a scientific, professional and "democratic organization," said Dr. M. Roy Schwarz, AMA assistant executive vice president for medical education and science. "It takes a while for a consensus to emerge. ... Often, we pay a price for it."

Today, the AMA "probably has the most aggressive anti-smoking policies of any health organization," Schwarz declared. AMA officials point to:

— A 32-year ban on advertising of tobacco in AMA publications.

— Congressional testimony opposing federal subsidies for tobacco growers and support of a 32-cent cigarette tax.

— A House of Delegates statement in 1964 recognizing "a significant relationship" between cigarette smoking and lung cancer and other diseases and a recognition that smoking is "a serious health hazard."

— Calls for no-smoking sections on airlines and health education programs.

— JAMA and AMA specialty journals have published more than 600 references on the subject since the late 1950s. Each of the past two years, entire issues have been devoted to the subject.

Dallas police officer Kevin Bailey gives a sobriety test to a motorist suspected of drunken driving. When tested at the jail, the man registered blood alcohol content of 0.20 percent, twice the legal limit. Dallas officials gearing up for the stream of drunken drivers.

Dallas police fight DWI season

DALLAS (AP) — A wrecked Mercury Comet in front of Dallas' Reunion Arena with the motto, "No thanks, I'm driving" is one of dozens of methods that will be used during the holidays to keep drunken drivers off the streets, police say.

In Dallas, the roads normally swell with amateur drinkers over Christmas and New Year's, Police Sgt. Guy Benningfield said. He described them as partygoers who down a drink or two too many before heading home.

"We get little old grannies. We get a lot of middle-aged and older people who've never been arrested in their lives or even had a ticket," Benningfield said.

In order to keep the over-doers from getting behind the wheel, Dallas police will rely on patrols of targeted areas — generally those near concentrations of nightclubs and those that have produced the highest number of alcohol-related accidents in the past.

But this holiday seaon, the city's authorities will have to do without roadblocks, something they say proved very effective in past years in getting drunken drivers off the roads.

The Dallas Police Department suspended use of roadblocks because of constitutional questions raised in court cases.

Benningfield said his squad could count on arresting six to 10 drunken-driving suspects every hour where a roadblock was in place. He says his squad was about one-third efficient while patrolling.

But in the nearby suburb of Richardson, officials say 10 officers will be assigned to roadblocks.

Since the last week in November, Fort Worth police have assigned 10 extra officers each night to patrol areas populated by nightclubs, said Sgt. Don Young.

The Tarrant County Holiday Ahead Committee is sponsoring free taxi rides home from 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. New Years Eve.

Police officials in El Paso and Houston said they will have special squads work extra duty on Christmas Eve and on New Year's Eve. Lt. John Ross of the Austin Police Department said six or seven officers will work overtime on New Year's Eve along East 6th Street.

CLINIC —

And some things are new.

"We don't give them polio shots anymore," she said. "The kids get a sugar cube with the medication on it now. They sure like it better."

Life, however has brought changes for Ms. Jones.

"I'm the only of the charter members still involved with the CSL," she said. "Others have moved away, are not active anymore or have died."

Ms. Jones, whose husband T.S. is deceased, recently moved from her long-time residence to the rapidly-developing Manor Park.

"It was kind of lonely out here at first," she said. "But I'm getting used to it and it's home now."

Her home includes the fruits of an interest spurred several years ago — acrylic painting. Her walls, arranged in dozens of her landscapes framed her in a reflective portrait as she talked of her children — one a professor of astrophysics at the University of Minnesota, and the other, a daughter in California.

"Who knows," she chuckled. "Maybe someday they'll read this about me and think the old gal was worth something during her life."

Tobacco farmers face hard times

By STRAT DOUTHAT

MOULTRIE, Ga. (AP) — The Broad Leaf Restaurant's recent closing was considered a dark omen in this small south Georgia town, where some of the world's best flue-cured tobacco is grown.

Like the defunct local restaurant, most of the tobacco farmers in surrounding Colquitt County, Georgia's largest broad-leaf producer, also are experiencing severe cash flow problems these days. They say a major reason for their plight is the national decline in cigarette smoking.

"I'll bet no more than a handful of Georgia's tobacco farmers made even a small profit this year, despite the fact it was a good growing year. And I know personally that a lot of them lost money," Scott Brown, a University of Georgia Agriculture Extension Service specialist, said.

Not only is the demand for tobacco steadily declining, he added, but this year's price was 10 cents a pound below 1984.

"This was the first year in ages that has happened," observed Russell Carr, 60, who has raised a crop of tobacco every year since 1946. Carr added that he didn't make any money on his 20 acres of tobacco this year.

Many tobacco farmers say they think the growing lack of demand for their product stems from the results of anti-smoking campaigns and from increasing foreign competition that has hurt the export business and has encouraged domestic companies to import cheaper tobacco from South America and Africa.

"The tobacco farmers are in the worst shape I can remember," said Bobby Miles, tobacco specialist for the state of Georgia. "Their crop allotments have been cut by half over the past 10 years, and 25 percent since 1983. Because of the reduced demand their allotments have been reduced in five of the last seven years."

As a result, he said, Georgia's tobacco production has fallen from 164 million pounds in 1974 to 82 million pounds this year. Tobacco farmers in other states are in the same boat, he added.

In North Carolina, whose farmers grow 60 percent of the tobacco in the United States, merchants dependent on farmers' business are feeling the effects of a poor crop, too.

"Tobacco for the last 30 years down here has paid 90 percent of the debts. ... Without tobacco, we might as well quit farming. We don't make any money off grain," said Clyde Reaves, who operates a fertilizer company in Mount Olive, N.C.

Reaves and his fellow merchants in Wayne County, North Carolina's ninth-largest tobacco-producing county, are bracing for tough times ahead.

"They're (the farmers) being a lot more careful with what they do have this year," said Dewayne Parvin, manager of a hardware store. Farmers usually refurbish their properties at the end of the year.

Brown said the situation is so dire in Georgia's Colquitt County that a quarter of the county's some 200 tobacco farmers are facing the prospect of foreclosure.

"The state's average price for tobacco this year was $1.71 a pound," he said. "But the average production cost per pound, including the stabilization fee, was $1.65 a pound. That left just six cents a pound for profit and the farmers need three or four times that much just to survive."

CROP —

Most of all, there was "a lot of money" in tobacco in the formative years of America and, until Eli Whitney's invention allowed the ginning of cotton, was the leading U.S. agricultural export.

There still is a lot of money in tobacco.

In 1984, according to USDA, the "farm value" of tobacco was nearly $3.2 billion. By comparison, the leading U.S. farm crop — corn — was worth an estimated $20.5 billion; soybeans, $11.4 billion; baled hay, $10.7 billion; wheat, $8.7 billion; and cotton, $3.97 billion.

According to 1978 U.S. census figures, 203,000 farms in 21 states produced tobacco. About 60 percent were located in North Carolina and Kentucky, the major tobacco states. The average farm grew less than five acres of tobacco, and about 20 percent grew less than one acre.

The United States is the world's leading exporter of tobacco, despite stiff competition in recent years. China is the leading producer, accounting for an estimated 2.3 million metric tons this year out of a world total of 6.8 million tons. The U.S. crop is estimated at 692,618 tons or 1.53 billion pounds.

The federal government got into tobacco on a grand scale in the 1930s, with marketing quotas, telling farmers how much tobacco they could sell each year, and providing price support loans.

Price support loans are dispensed to producers through their cooperative marketing associations when tobacco sale prices fall short of the support rate. Later, sometimes months or years, the association may sell the tobacco for what it an get. If the sales exceed the loans, farmers get the additional money.

Until a few years ago, if the ultimate sales of unwanted "acquisition stocks" of tobacco by the associations fell short of repaying the loans, the USDA wrote off the losses.

Beginning with the 1982 crop, however, Congress ordered that the tobacco supports be operated as a "no net-cost" program, with tobacco farmers paying assessments to make up losses.

Four sought in chopper jailbreak caught at rest area in Georgia

WOODBINE, Ga. (AP) — Four fugitives sought in a daring helicopter escape from a South Carolina prison were arrested early today in southern Georgia after a three-day, nationwide manhunt, authorities said.

The three prison escapees and a woman who allegedly helped them break out were arrested without incident at a rest area on Interstate 95 near the Georgia-Florida border, said Camden County Sheriff W.E. "Bill" Smith.

The four were identified as Joyce Bailey Mattox, 40, who is accused of hijacking a helicopter and forcing its pilot to land at Perry Correctional Institution near Pelzer, S.C.; Jesse Glenn Smith, 36, of Easley, S.C.; William Ballew, 42, of Greenville, S.C.; and convicted murderer James Rodney Leonard, 20, also of Greenville.

A guard was wounded in a shootout during the escape Thursday.

Smith said the four were captured at 3:30 a.m. when a deputy making a check at a welcome center noticed a car that a computer check showed was wanted in connection with the escape.

Deputies summoned to the rest area surrounded the car, and the occupants were ordered out, he said. The four surrendered, and deputies recovered the group's weapons — a .32-caliber pistol and some knives, the sheriff said.

The four were taken to the Camden County jail, where they were being held under heavy guard. It was expected that South Carolina authorities would come to Georgia to take the prisoners back.

The foursome had been seen about 2 a.m. Sunday at a motel in Mobile, Ala., said FBI agent Steve Tidwell. He said they stole a car from a man who stopped to aid two of the fugitives as they stood along a roadside.

The man, who was not identified, told authorities the fugitives bragged about the escape and said they wouldn't be taken alive.

A Dodge Aspen the four had driven from South Carolina apparently broke down on Interstate 10 in Mobile, and two of the fugitives flagged down the man.

The motorist drove the two to the Motel Six to meet the other two fugitives, and the four took the man's car, a light blue 1979 Pontiac Bonneville, authorities said.

Fires kill 22 across nation

Associated Press

A young mother severely burned in a futile effort to save her daughters and a nephew from a burning house was hospitalized in critical condition today, after weekend fires across the nation killed at least 22 people, authorities said.

Chicago fire officials said at least three people died in a fire that raced through a three-story apartment building shortly before midnight Sunday, leaving about 60 people homeless in near-freezing temperatures.

Lucille Short, a neighbor, said the smoke was so dense, "I couldn't see across the street. But I could hear people crying about children on the third floor."

Fire officials were still at the scene early today and further details were not available, dispatchers said.

NATION IN BRIEF

Personnel carrier poses threat to Army soldiers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Army's new personnel carrier is proving more vulnerable to attack and poses greater risks to soldiers riding in it than the service is willing to admit, sources say.

In addition to suppressing negative test data, the sources said, the Pentagon also is trying to hide a negative analysis of the tests that was done by the Air Force, the sources added.

The weapon, formally known as the Bradley Fighting Vehicle, was tested last summer to answer criticisms it was dangerous to personnel because its thin aluminum skin burns easily.

"They (the tests) showed that it's a very dangerous vehicle to be in on a battlefield, more dangerous than the Army wants to admit," said one source, speaking only on the condition he not be identified. "The Army is putting the best face on it."

Santa not on jury

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — Given the season, it did not take long for a man with a flowing white beard to be excused from jury duty in El Paso County District Court.

Eugene Ball told District Judge Matt Railey last week that he had commitments in the days ahead. Among them, parties for handicapped children where he portrays Santa Claus without aid of false whiskers.

"I can't bear the thought of depriving 200 handicapped children of Santa Claus," the judge said after consulting with attorneys in the case. "And if we keep you here, who knows what we'll get for Christmas."

Ball said thanks and added that he'd like to serve on a jury, come summer.

No snow in Anchorage

ANCHORAGE (AP) — For the first time in 35 years there may be no white Christmas in Anchorage, National Weather Service forecasters say.

A Christmas weather forecast issued over the weekend calls for continued cloudy and warm weather.

Anchorage has had a snowy Christmas every year since records about that sort of thing started being kept in 1950, said meteorologist John Hoag.

So far this year, Alaska's largest city has received about 4 inches of snow, but warm temperatures and rain have washed most of it away or turned it into ice.

The source of the warm weather is a stubborn high-pressure system anchored over the eastern Pacific Ocean, the forecasters said.

Collett's release urged

LONDON (AP) — A British official says the release of journalist Alec Collett, who was kidnapped in Beirut nine months ago, would do more for the goals of his captors than anything else.

Timothy Renton, a minister of state in the Foreign Office, reiterated Sunday that Britain would not bargain with the kidnappers for Collett's freedom.

Collett, 63, appealed to Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher in a videotape released Saturday to release Arab prisoners held in Britain so his Moslem abductors would free him.

He did not identify the prisoners, but recent Arab newspaper reports linked his kidnapping with three men convicted in London for the attempted assassination of Israeli Ambassador Shlomo Argov in June 1982.

The message sent to Beirut's independent An-Nahar newspaper was the first word from Collett since May. He was on a writing assignment for the U.N. Relief and Works Agency when gunmen kidnapped him March 25.

In a British Broadcasting Corp. radio interview, Renton expressed delight that Collett "is alive and well," but rejected any deal for his release.

Renton said Collett's release would do more for the cause of his captors than anything else.

"There is a very important sentence in the message which is that his captors want to end this issue quietly," he said.

"It is on that basis that I would like to use this opportunity to appeal to them to release Mr. Collett and the French and American hostages they are holding, because they are interested in promoting the Palestinian cause."

Collett said on the videotape that Mrs. Thatcher's Conservative government had been "irresponsible" in ignoring previous messages from his captors.

An organization calling itself the Revolutionary Organization of Socialist Moslems has claimed responsibility for kidnapping Collett.

Fearful tourists avoid Holy Land this Christmas

By ALLYN FISHER

BETHLEHEM, Occupied West Bank (AP) — A gold-laced Christmas tree stands near Manger Square and a young Palestinian dresses as Santa Claus to attract restaurant customers, but this Christmas season the tourists, scared by terrorist violence, are going elsewhere.

The number of pilgrims in the Holy Land is down about 20 percent this season because of terror attacks, Haya Fisher of the Israeli Tourism Ministry's pilgrimage division said Sunday.

Several airplanes have been hijacked this year in the Middle East, as well as the Italian cruise ship Achille Lauro. Seventeen Israelis have been killed in attacks in and near the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River, and in response the Israelis have increased security.

Police have blocked a main road leading to the square with metal barricades, and military jeeps cruised the city.

Miss Fisher attributed much of the decrease to Americans who decided not to come. "People, especially Americans, are deterred by all this violence," she told The Associated Press.

Ella May Lower of Eureka, Calif., one American who decided to come anyhow, said: "It's surprising to see soldiers all over the place. It's hard to believe there are things going on that hurt people," she said.

Standing near the towering Christmas tree next to Manger Square's police station, Wanda Vogel of Dot Lake, Alaska, said her family tried to talk her out of traveling. "I just told them that God goes wherever I go, and I'm going," she said.

Merchants in Bethlehem, a city of 50,000 people five miles south of Jerusalem, said the number of tourists is down sharply from last year.

Wahel Muammar, a 17-year-old Palestinian, put on a plastic Santa Claus outfit and rang a small brass bell, trying to attract customers to his friend's empty hamburger restaurant near Manger Square.

"I'm trying to catch them on their way out of church, but there aren't very many people around this year," Muammar said through his thick beard of white cotton.

His friend, 27-year-old Palestinian Lawrence Hanania, blamed the business slump on the Arab-Israeli conflict. "I wish people felt that the city where Jesus was born is peaceful, but we have too many political problems here," he said.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Saudi floods kill 27

JIDDA, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Flash floods killed 27 people in the northern region of Tabuk over the past week, the newspaper al-Bilad reported.

The newspaper said Sunday that Prince Abdul-Majeed bin Abdul-Aziz, governor of Tabuk, made an inspection tour of the region, where authorities distributed 3,000 tents, 5,000 blankets and food to the homeless.

Seven Saudi air force helicopters were helping officials search for an undisclosed number of missing people, the newspaper said.

There was no official estimate of how much rain fell in the desert region, but the lack of vegatation causes rainwater to rush into dry riverbeds, called wadis, which become raging torrents.

Oil depot still burning

NAPLES, Italy (AP) — A fire ignited by a gigantic explosion at an oil storage depot continued to blaze today, keeping 1,800 Neapolitans from returning to their homes and stymying investigators' efforts to determine the cause of the blast.

Four people were killed Saturday when the pre-dawn explosion ripped through a tank farm belonging to the state-owned oil company AGIP. Two workers at the depot were among the dead.

On Sunday, rescue workers recovered the bodies of the other victims, an 84-year-old woman and her 50-year-old daughter who died in their sleep when their brick home near the depot collapsed in the concussion of the blast, said Rentano Profili of the Naples municipal office.

Profili said the heat, flames and smoke were keeping investigators from approaching the 32 tanks in the depot. Radio reports today quoted officials at the scene as saying the fire, feeding on petroleum still in the tanks, could burn for eight more hours.

Up to 800 firemen, working with water hoses, battled the blaze, which sent a column of thick black smoke skyward over the Bay of Naples.

An employee of the Ministry of Civil Protection, speaking on condition he not be identified, said the fire was being kept under control, and said "there should be no danger" of another explosion.

Canadian region shaken

EDMONTON, Alberta (AP) — A strong earthquake centered in the Northwest Territories jolted parts of western Canada and was felt as far away as Alaska, officials said. Some Edmonton residents fled their homes, but no injuries were reported.

Officials at the U.S. Geological Survey in Golden, Colo., said the quake registered 6.9 on the Richter scale. Some residents of northern Alberta reported that the quake, which occured at about 10:15 p.m. MST (12:15 a.m. EST Monday), almost toppled their Christmas trees.

Knife-making not just a bladesmith's job, it's his adventure

By KELLEY SHANNON

PALESTINE, Texas (AP) — To Don Hastings, knife-making is much more than a hobby or a job. He considers himself a bladesmith — a specialist.

Hastings creates an array of hunting and decorative knives in his downtown Palestine shop using an old-fashioned anvil and coal forge. The high-quality Northeastern coal he uses is shipped in from Wisconsin.

He was one of the first three bladesmiths in the United States to create knives with Damascus steel.

"We had quite a good position there for a while," he says.

Hastings creates his Damascus steel knives with a special process believed to have been introduced to Europe in the second century by the Vikings. He uses two types of iron-based steel to help the knife retain its edge-holding ability and its strength. The pieces are forged together over the heated coal that reaches a sweltering 2,500 degrees.

Knives made of Damascus steel include about 384 layers of steel pressed together. In their finished stages, the knives have a beautiful detailed etching that represents the hundreds of layers.

Hastings says he believes knives fascinate all types of people.

"Knives seem to have a universal appeal," he says. "Anything with an edge on it."

WHEN HE EXHIBITS his work at craft shows, onlookers of all ages gather around him. "That forge is like a pied piper's flute."

Hasting's passion for knives is not a recent phenomenon. He says he's been fascinated with knives all his life and began making them during high school at the old Turbyfill Machine Shop near the Anderson County Courthouse.

As a child, Hastings visited the circus with his father and was enthralled by a knife-thrower's performance. He says he later duplicated that scene with a friend at school.

"I took it (a knife) to school with me and stood a guy up against a tree and threw it at him," Hastings says, recalling that the knife broke in the tree.

He eventually began keeping knives, and when his mother would clean out the family garage, she always seemed to unearth one of them.

The ultimate episode triggering Hastings' plunge into the world of knives was seeing the movie "The Iron Mistress," the story of Jim Bowie and the Bowie knife. After that movie, Hastings says he became obsessed with finding out everything he could about the Bowie knife.

He researched the period between the 1830s and 1850s to find out what the knife might have looked like, how it was made and anything else he could track down.

BUT HASTINGS HAD trouble locating any details about the knife. "There is not any information on it," he says.

While a student at East Texas Baptist Colege in Marshall, Texas, Hastings worked in the library. That enabled him to read all the books he could about knives. The college had a borrowing system with the University of Texas, so Hastings would often send off for a book about knives. "I'd devour it and send it back!" he says.

For several years after college, Hastings worked with a Baptist church in music and youth programs. But in 1966 he finally decided to go into the knife business. He ought a small forge and anvil and put them in his garage. "That kept my fire going. Then I was never satisfied.

"I was always looking for a better forge," Hastings says. When he and his wife would drive out into the country, he would sometimes stop at houses and offer to buy someone's furnace. Some people were stingy with their forges and wouldn't want to get rid of them because they belonged to their relatives, he says.

He eventually returned to Palestine, his hometown, and continued to make knives in an old building. Last month he moved into a new shop, where he hopes to increase his production.

"This is where I was aiming all the time," Hastings says. "I wanted to be in downtown Palestine on Main Street with my shop."

IN THE PAST, Hastings has produced about five knives a month. They take several hours to make, but those hours must be spread over days. The knives are not cheap — they start at $125.

"From there you can just about go to any price range," he says. Some bladesmiths' specialized knives have been known to sell for $1,600.

Even though the knives are expensive, Hastings says he doesn't make much money from them because it takes so long to make them. But at his new shop he has one full-time worker and a part-time worker.

"They fell out of the same tree I did, I guess," Hastings says.

He hopes to expand the shop's knife production to about 25 knives per month. The new shop will also have a retail section where prospective customers can view a standard knife selection on display.

But most knives will still have to be ordered, and the customer waiting list is from eight to 10 months. Hastings hopes to cut the waiting time in half now that he has two assistants.

Although he usually makes knife handles from pretty wood, such as maple, he has been known to use special materials for some knives.

"I use very little ivory," Hastings says. "Ivory is exotic — it's on the endangered species list. It's hard to get."

He says he has used various types of ivory including elephant and walrus.

NOT ONLY DOES Hastings make knives, but he has been instrumental in spreading information about the craft. He, along with the other two original Damascus steel bladesmiths in the United States, formed the American Bladesmith Society in 1976.

The society promotes the quality of knives and educates the public about them. The group includes about 250 members, though only about one-half are actually smiths.

Knife enthusiasts throughout the world have ordered Hastings' blades. Australians, Africans and Japanese are among those who have contacted him through national knife magazines to buy his work.

With all his interest in knives and knife-making, one would expect Hastings to be an ardent collector himself, but he is not. Says Hastings: "I don't even collect my own. I can't afford the things."

Don Hastings, knife-maker, became obsessed with finding out about the Bowie knife after seeing the movie promoted in this poster, "The Iron Mistress," the story of Jim Bowie and the Bowie knife.

Don't open 'til ...

Christmas is just around the corner and thoughts undoubtedly are on the gifts everyone is hoping to find under the tree Wednesday morning. With that in mind, it seems an opportune time to offer a Christmas "wish list" for various individuals and institutions.

President Ronald Reagan: A tax reform measure and another Teflon coating ... to deflect criticism when blame is handed out for the increase in the federal deficit while he was in office.

Vice President George Bush: An iron-clad hold on the Republican nomination for President.

Gov. Mark White: A coach's playbook on how to duck questions concerning tax increases.

Midland County Judge Bill Ahders and Precinct 2 County Commissioner C. Wallace Craig: Another term in their respective political offices. They just haven't had enough of the complaints.

Guy McCrary: C. Wallace Craig's position on the County Commissioners Court. He wants to find out if all the complaints are valid.

Midland Mayor G. Thane Akins: A seat in Congress — to see if the complaints are any different.

Precinct 4 County Commissioner Win Brown: A new jail.

Midland County: More space in the courthouse.

Midland County's taxpayers: Less talk of a jail and more talk of cutting county taxes and keeping the roads passable.

Former Gov. Bill Clements: One more opportunity to be the first — and only — Republican governor of Texas since Reconstruction.

Former Congressmen Kent Hance and Tom Loeffler: A way to spoil Clements' hopes and win the Republican nomination for governor.

The city of Midland: A way to widen Garfield without making everybody in the city mad.

Sheriff "Thumper" (Gary) Painter: More deputies, less crime in the county — and Dallas Smith's secret to fewer headaches.

City Councilman Steve Davidson and former Councilman Carroll Thomas: The mayor's chair, unlisted telephone numbers and short City Council meetings.

Midland Independent School District: Bags and bags of dollars — to make up for what the district has lost in state aid, as a result of the "penalty" for being classified a "rich" district.

Midland motorists: Fewer stop signs, red lights, traffic cops, school crossings, potholes, and more ways to sit in seat belts comfortably and keep the kids in theirs — silently.

The Midland Police Department: Scissors, scissors, scissors — because of a departmental policy change allowing facial hair on officers.

Midland and Odessa, or is it Odessa and Midland: A couple of successes from the recent effort to work together for the mutual benefit of the communities. That would be a great reason to say the people of the two cities definitely are friends.

Another View:

Nicaraguan betrayal

The ruling Sandinistas are intensifying a campaign of intimidation and repression against opposition groups, dissidents and religious organizations in Nicaragua. The evidence indicates a bald betrayal of the commitment to democracy and religious and press freedom that was made when the Somoza regime was overthrown by the Sandinistas in 1979.

Nicaraguan leaders have sought to justify their actions as a response to the U.S.-supported insurgency of the contras and as a legitimate enforcement of the law. There is no question that they are exploiting the existence of the guerrilla war to consolidate control and impose a narrow, ideological interpretation of what had been a broad-based revolution.

The repression of critics within Nicaragua may at least help sober the more romantic foreign supporters of the Sandinistas. But it may also serve to encourage the critics in the United States whose militancy already has served to help consolidate the very regime that they deplore. There has been a destructive polarization in the United States between sycophants, ready to support whatever the Sandinistas do or say, and extreme critics, who can see no good in the regime and who delight in such oversimplifications as President Reagan's characterization of the Nicaraguan president, Daniel Ortega, as a "dictator in designer glasses." Neither extreme is constructive.

Fortunately for Central America, there remains a positive alternative in the Contadora peacemaking process. It was reaffirmed Tuesday by leading Latin American foreign ministers. And a key element of the Contadora plan — the termination of all intervention, including U.S. intervention — has been reaffirmed by the newly elected president of Guatemala, Vinicio Cerezo Arevalo.

This opposition from the Latin Americans themselves has not deterred President Reagan from pushing ahead with plans for expanded support of the contras in Nicaragua. That reckless policy is separating the United States from its Latin neighbors as well as from its European allies. And the new wave of repression demonstrates how foreign intervention is allowing the Sandinistas to justify tightened control over their pathetic and impoverished nation.

But in Washington the argument prevails that Uncle Sam knows best, that the innocent Latins simply do not understand the terrible fate that awaits them should Marxism flower in Managua. That arrogance ignores the evidence that the Latin Americans understand very well the perils of intervention because of the lessons taught by previous foreign imperialist intruders — U.S. Marines among them. And it ignores the evidence that the Reagan intervention is far more likely to result in the consolidation of a Moscow ally in Central America than is the Contadora process, which lets the Latins put their own house in order.

The Sandinistas are using police-state tactics as they detain, interrogate, fingerprint and photograph hundreds of people whose worst crime is to disapprove of the way the Sandinistas are governing. And, when intimidation does not silence criticism, they expand censorship. The surest way to halt the abuses of human rights now conspicuous in Managua is to speed a settlement along the lines already drawn by the Contadora nations.

CHARLEY REESE

U.S. needs intended government

We don't need a Bicentennial Celebration of the Constitution. What we need is a Constitutional government.

You may well ask what that would be like since it's been quite awhile since anybody in Washington has paid much attention to the U.S. Constitution.

Charley Reese

A Constitutional government would not tax the labor and savings of American citizens and shovel their money into the coffers or Swiss bank accounts of foreign politicians and tyrants. No words in the Constitution could possibly be construed by any reasonable person to authorize foreign aid. Congresses have, since World War II alone, shoveled out over $300 billion of the American people's money to foreign countries.

Foreign aid is a game first hatched by J.P. Morgan, son of a British banker. The game is that Congress hands the money to foreigners who spend what's left, after graft and theft, with American businesses. A Congress obedient to the Constitution would zero that item right out of the budget.

A Constitutional government would respect the sovereignty and independence of other countries. The Constitution does not give the American government any extra-territorial jurisdiction. It is none of our business what other governments do to their own people in their own countries. Disputes between foreign governments are none of our business.

A Constitutional foreign policy would be based necessarily on protecting our interests, not anyone else's, and secondarily on strict reciprocity. In other words, the sole determining factor in our relationship with foreign governments would be whether that government was friendly or hostile toward us.

Even so, a Constitutional government would not subsidize allies or undermine enemies. The Constitutional approach is to declare war or otherwise leave them alone. Since 1945, over 100,000 Americans have died in full-scale but undeclared wars. That's unconstitutional.

President Reagan, for example, should ask for a declaration of war against Nicaragua if he thinks it threatens U.S. security. If he gets it, he should then bring the full force of our military might against it. The war would be over in two weeks and we'd be done with it. As it is, he has dilly-dallied with the CIA and the Contras for five years with still no clear-cut results. If Congress refuses to declare war on Nicaragua, then we leave them alone. The Constitution does not authorize a president to engage the United States in war overtly or covertly.

You hear people say the Constitution can't work in modern situations but that's baloney. They just don't want to obey it. With the sole exception of a surprise nuclear attack, in which a president would have only 30 minutes in which to make a decision, there are no conceivable circumstances which would preclude a president from obeying the Constitution by seeking a declaration of war from Congress.

A Constitutional government would naturally disband all covert operations by the CIA. We might as well obey the Constitution in this regard because the CIA bungles them all anyway.

Domestically, a Constitutional federal government would be lean and inexpensive dealing only with foreign affairs, interstate commerce, monetary policy, and national defense. Everything else would be handled by the states as the Constitution intended.

One reason modern Congresses have been so incompetent is that they have assumed so many tasks the Constitution does not authorize that they couldn't get their work done even if they wanted to.

More importantly a Constitutional government would end the practice of robbing Pete to reward Jake. The Constitution intended that government should bestow its blessings on the people equally and not grant favors and privileges to the few.

Read the Constitution and compare it to what is going on in Washington. You will see for yourself there is a great gulf between the Constitution and the government in Washington.

JACK ANDERSON

Recycled choppers dangerous

WASHINGTON — Helicopters pieced together from cannibalized wrecks are filling the air, with the result that many of these patchwork choppers are crashing a second, third or even fourth time, according to the Transportation Department's inspector general.

Jack Anderson

After studying 788 helicopter crashes between 1972 and 1981, the inspector general recommended over a year ago that the Federal Aviation Administration, which certifies helicopter mechanics, tighten its rules to identify the chopper cannibals. But an FAA spokesman told our associate Donald Goldberg an agency task force is still "looking into the entire problem."

Meanwhile, the stitched-together choppers continue to crash at a significantly higher rate than factory originals, according to the inspector general.

Of the 788 helicopters studied, the IG reported: "We identified 64 helicopters that, after being destroyed, were involved in another accident, with 10 of them having three or more accidents." In an additional sample of 33 choppers "that had been destroyed at least once in a crash, we found 23 had been rebuilt a total of 26 times."

Calling for a crackdown, the report stated: "Although it may not be possible to prove the rebuilding practices and documentation are fraudulent, they are unauthorized and clearly misleading to the general public."

Here are some examples cited in the report of helicopters that have risen, phoenixlike, from their scorched, twisted, and sometimes bloodstained wreckage:

— "At the request of the pilot owner, a certified mechanic rebuilt a helicopter that had been destroyed in an accident. Less than four months after the helicopter was rebuilt it was destroyed again in a crash that killed the pilot."

The tragic tale didn't end there. The report continued: "In addition, we were advised that the mechanic had acquired the helicopter again following the latest accident, by purchasing the wreckage from the insurance company. We were unable to locate the mechanic to discuss the helicopter transaction."

— Many owners of the helicopters studied first learned from the government investigators that their choppers had been rebuilt from junk, because the repair logs omitted that vital information.

In one case, a helicopter that was wrecked in a New Jersey accident in 1977 was rebuilt in Florida in 1981 and sold. "The present owner advised us that he was unaware that the aircraft had been in a serious accident .... The repair station in Florida advised him that the aircraft had only sustained a hard landing," the IG report stated.

— The military must bear some of the blame for the recycled helicopters. It sells huge quantities of surplus choppers and parts for a fraction of their original cost. These bargains are then used to rebuild junkers.

"During the period of March 1981 to March 1984, (the Defense Department) sold surplus helicopter parts with an inventory value of $72 million for about $1.8 million," the report stated. Among the purchasers were several FAA-certified repair shops.

The FAA took issue with the IG report's conclusions, claiming that many of the accidents to patchwork planes were due to other factors and could not be traced to the fact that they had been rebuilt from wrecks.

The IG report noted this objection, but pointed out that there had been a "30 percent increase in the rate of mechanical failure accidents following the rebuilding of these destroyed helicopters."

The FAA insists that more regulations won't stop those who already ignore existing rules, and accuses the insurance industry of contributing to the problem by selling wreckage instead of destroying it.

OF MEESE AND MEN: Attorney General Edwin Meese has already become one of the most outspoken holders of that office in this century, hoping his high profile will advance the conservative causes he champions. Now we're told that he's planning yet another attention-getting gambit. Our sources say Meese intends to argue a case or two in person before the Supreme Court. Historically, the attorney general has rarely appeared before the high court, leaving the chore of arguing the federal government's case to others, like the solicitor general.

MINI-EDITORIAL: At last report, former Budget Director David Stockman had completed about 1,000 pages of his much-ballyhooed book that will supposedly take readers behind the scenes at the Reagan White House. But then it turns out that more than a third of what he's written so far is about his early life and not-so-hard times. We realize Stockman is precocious, but we can't help thinking that it's a bit presumptuous to be writing one's memoirs at the age of 39.

EVANS & NOVAK

Reagan: Give Soviet freedom

WASHINGTON — President Reagan has suggested to the State Department that Mikhail Gorbachev have complete freedom to pick his own schedule during part of his visit here next summer.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Reagan, with concurrence from Secretary of State George Shultz, contends that the Soviet ruler never has been told the truth about the U.S. and really believes the standard Soviet lies. To get the truth through, says the president, give Gorbachev carte blanche to go anywhere, see anything, and talk to any person he wants for perhaps one full day.

Even a visit to an Indian reservation to hear a diatribe against the U.S., says Reagan, would show him that while criticism of the Soviet government is a crime, free speech in the U.S. is lusty, critical and real.

REPUBLICAN REBELS

In a tense session on Capitol Hill the day after the tax reform bill passed, White House chief of staff Donald T. Regan failed to convince rebellious rank-and-file House Republicans that President Reagan will veto a final version that does not meet his specifications.

Regan met with a half-dozen members of the Conservative Opportunity Society (COS) who had bitterly opposed the bill. The message given the chief of staff: We trust you, but we don't trust Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III and we positively distrust Deputy Secretary Richard G. Darman; consequently, we just don't believe any tax bill is going to be vetoed.

The meeting was set up by Rep. Jack Kemp, chairman of the House Republican Conference, to show his COS allies that the administration is sincere about improving the House bill. But the congressmen are only slightly less angry at Kemp for supporting the bill than at Baker and Darman.

MIKE DEAVER'S MAID

Michael K. Deaver, who has kept a White House pass and Oval Office access as a high-priced Washington consultant since quitting as deputy chief of staff, asked a congressman to prod the bureaucracy into making a Trinidadian housemaid available for him for the Christmas holidays.

Timothy Ryan Jr., Deaver's attorney, telephoned the office of Republican Rep. F. James Sensenbrenner Jr. of Wisconsin, a member of the House Immigration Subcommittee. Sensenbrenner's administrative assistant, John E. Schrote, served with Deaver in the White House. Ryan told Schrote it was "urgent" that the maid enter the U.S.

Schrote responded that Sensenbrenner had opposed the administration-proposed amnesty for illegal aliens and, therefore, was not in good graces of the Immigration and Naturalization Service. Schrote suggested that Deaver contact another Republican subcommitee member: Rep. Dan Lungren, from Deaver's home state of California and a supporter of the immigration bill. Lungren told us he had not been contacted by Deaver. Ryan declined comment.

SEN. UEBERROTH?

Word spread through California Republican circles last week that baseball Commissioner Peter Ueberroth will announce the week of Jan. 10 whether he will seek the Republican nomination to oppose Democratic Sen. Alan Cranston.

The word originated from a member of the official family of St. Louis Cardinals owner Gussie Busch. Since Ueberroth has repeatedly denied any interest in the Senate race, an announcement of intentions would indicate a change of heart.

The continued delay has the effect of freezing campaign funds for other possible Republican candidates. If and when Ueberroth enters, all other GOP possibilities probably would drop out and he would enter the general election campaign as a strong favorite against Cranston.

MR. STAR WARS

Star Wars enthusiast Robert Jastrow is top choice to become President Reagan's new science adviser, an appointment that would put even more intellectual and political juice behind the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI).

Dr. Jastrow, a Dartmouth College professor and founder of NASA's Institute for Space Studies, became nationally known as an advocate of SDI through his book, "How to Make Nuclear Weapons Obsolete." Although he is at the top of the science adviser's list, the final decision has yet to be made.

Also on the list to succeed George A. Keyworth is William Nierenberg, a director of the Scripps Institute of Oceanography, who is strongly pushed by ex-defense secretary Donald Rumsfeld. Keyworth favors a successor from the corporate research-and-development area, but probably will not get it.

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak are syndicated columnists for News America Syndicate.

Caretaker never down in the dumps about his stinky job

By KATHY BERDAN

BATTLE LAKE, Minn. (AP) — For a guy who's been down in the dumps for the last 13 years, Bernie Poss manages to laugh a lot.

Poss chuckles his way through a job many would consider distasteful, a job that literally stinks. The former North Dakota truck driver and farmer is the caretaker at the Battle Lake landfill.

But Poss' easy laugh can be deceiving. He handles his tasks with all the shrewdness of a businessman negotiating a big deal, staunchly refusing credit or discount rates.

"It looks like from here that it's about $3," Poss says, glancing into a trailer filled with tree branches. He stuffs the bills in his pants pocket and fills out a receipt. The money he collect pays the bills at the landfill.

Poss has his customers over a barrel — a trash barrel, if you will. Folks who use the landfill are hardly apt to take their garbage back home, but Poss has been known to refuse some refuse.

"You have to watch 'em," he says. People try to hide empty chemical containers or old tires under their trash to dispose of them at the landfill.

"You can't see it when they drive in," Poss says. But he has to watch for materials that can poison the environment. Tires, fish-cleaning residue and brush all have their own departments at the landfill.

For the most part, however, Poss says he gets along "pretty good" with the folks who frequent the landfill and the tourists who leave behind their trash souvenirs.

"I meet all kinds of people," he says. "I've been pretty lucky and met good people."

He says some days he talks more than an auctioneer, "but you've got to be able to outtalk them a little bit."

Poss' garbage kingdom is one of massive dunes of sand used to cover the trash every evening. He rules from a small red building at the bottom of the gravel road leading to the landfill.

Crowned by a straw cowboy hat and wearing bib overalls, Poss proudly points out the trappings of his castle that were once others' cast-offs. With the help of a friend, he's fixed up radios and clocks that others discounted as trash. A roll of orange carpeting stands in one corner, and a single ski pole leans against another.

Everything in the shed was left behind, Poss says.

"It just takes a little extra work. All you have to do is maybe put a screw or two in or use a little glue," he explains.

He worked out of a trailer house until about three years ago, when the Battle Lake Landfill Association built his "office."

Because the garbage is bagged, there's little unpleasant odor to contend with. A few pesky flies buzz in the windows, but Poss deftly destroys them with his handy flyswatter.

He says there's little trouble with rats at the landfill because of all the gravel surrounding the dumpsite.

"It caves in on them," he says. "They won't stay here at all."

Occasionally, Poss has to be a part-time medic when folks cut their feet on shards of glass or jagged metal edges.

"Most generally, I send them to the doctor," he says, but he's had to patch up a few. "One lady cut her wrist on a piece of tin and would've bled to death by the time she got to town."

He had thought he was going to retire when he sold his farm and moved to Battle Lake, but the man who was going to oversee the landfill got sick, "and I've been here ever since."

He worked solo at the landfill until last year when a stint in the hospital brought in a couple of part-time workers to lighten Poss' load.

Poss says people can't be judged by the garbage they haul in. But then, he doesn't look too close, he says.

He remembers when someone dumped out a new bed mattress that was still in the box. "They just tore open the corner to see what color was on the mattress," he says.

From old furniture and brush to household trash, "you get a little bit of everything out here," Poss says.

Poll respondents don't condone homosexuality

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The nation's sympathy is increasing for homosexuals, the largest group to suffer from AIDS, but most Americans strongly disapprove of homosexuality, according to a survey.

Of those surveyed in the Los Angeles Times Poll late last week, 73 percent said homosexual activity is wrong and 21 percent said it is not. The answers were virtually unchanged from a 1973 survey that asked the the public the same question.

The telephone survey of 2,308 people nationwide was conducted Dec. 5-12.

Even in big cities with large numbers of homosexuals, more people disapproved than approved of homosexuality.

In San Francisco, attitudes were most closely divided, with 49 percent saying homosexuality is wrong and 44 percent saying it is not. In Los Angeles and New York, more than 60 percent called it wrong.

Despite Americans' disapproval of homosexuality, the poll found that sympathy for homosexuals has increased.

Two years ago, when AIDS was not such a public issue, only 30 percent of the people polled said they were sympathetic to the homosexual community. That figure has risen to 41 percent. Those saying they were unsympathetic dropped from 63 percent to 52 percent in the same period.

In the big cities with large homosexual populations, clear majorities identified themselves as sympathetic: 61 percent in New York, 56 percent in San Francisco and 52 percent in Los Angeles.

Ten percent of the poll respondents identified themselves as homosexual and 5 percent said they know someone who has tested positive for AIDS antibodies, which indicate that the person has come in contact with the virus.

The poll, which has a margin of error of 3 percentage points either way, found that 50 percent were in favor of hiring homosexual men and women and 33 percent were opposed, the remainder uncertain.

Despite public sympathy for homosexuals, distaste appears to remain a prevalent attitude about homosexuals, with 89 percent saying they would be upset if their children became homosexual.

Twenty-eight percent said they believe that AIDS is God's punishment for homosexuals, with 23 percent saying AIDS victims are "getting what they deserve."

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome destroys the body's immune system, leaving the victim vulnerable to a variety of diseases. As of Monday, 15,581 AIDS cases and 8,002 deaths had been reported in the United States, according to the federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

AIDS is transmitted primarily by intimate sexual contact and the sharing of unsterilized hypodermic needles. Those at highest risk include homosexual and bisexual men and intravenous drug users.

The poll also focused on broader moral and social issues. Eight-five percent said adultery is morally wrong, 52 percent said it is not best for a man to be the sole family breadwinner, and 63 percent supported the goals of feminism.

Thirty-nine percent said they believed they live in a sick society, 55 percent disagreed with that and 70 percent said they believe morality is declining.

One in three shoplift

ATLANTA (AP) — A Georgia State University survey found that 43 percent of teen-agers ages 15 to 19 have stolen from stores. In all, one out of three children seven to 19 have swiped merchandise.

Merchants should watch out for teen-agers — boys alone and girls in groups, the study showed.

Cooler days due

From Staff and Wire Reports

Cooler temperatures are expected in the Permian Basin area early this week but Midlanders should not look for a white Christmas, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Forecasters are calling for fair skies with a low in the mid-30s tonight, warming slightly Tuesday to a high in the mid-50s. Winds will be from the north at 5 to 15 mph tonight, increasing Tuesday to 10 to 20 mph.

Cooler temperatures are expected Christmas Day as fair skies and a high in the lower 50s are forecast.

Sunday's high of 70 was 9 degrees below the record set in 1933. This morning's low was 21 degrees above the 1983 record of 9.

STATE

An area of low clouds hovered near the coast and in the Lower Rio Grande Valley before dawn. Some dense fog was noted over portions of the middle coast and far South Texas. Visibilities were reduced to near zero at McAllen and Brownsville.

A dome of moist air from the Pacific was the key feature of the state weather map early today. By 4 a.m., the front had advanced to a line from Houston to Cotulla.

Pre-dawn temperatures were mostly in the 30s and 40s behind the front, with a few readings in the 20s noted in West Texas. In Southeast Texas, readings were in the 50s and 60s. At 4 a.m., the mercury ranged from 24 at Marfa to 63 at McAllen and Corpus Christi.

No significant precipitation was reported, although a very heavy thunderstorm was spotted about 100 miles southeast of Galveston in the Gulf of Mexico.

The forecast called for fair to partly cloudy skies across most of Texas through Tuesday. Showers and thunderstorms were possible across the Lower Rio Grande Valley.

NATION

Light snow scattered from the upper Ohio Valley across the central Appalachians and New England today, as widespread fog socked in lowlands west of the Rockies and cold arctic air headed into the Plains.

Travelers' advisories for light snow and freezing drizzle were posted from southern Michigan and western New York, and for light snow ranging across eastern North Dakota.

The San Francisco 49ers kept alive their hopes of repeating as Super Bowl champions by rallying from a 13-point deficit to beat the Dallas Cowboys and sew up the final National Football League playoff berth.

"We showed some character coming back like that," said running back Roger Craig, who scored the go-ahead touchdown on a 4-yard run in Sunday's 31-16 victory on Sunday. He became the first player ever to get 1,000 yards rushing and 1,000 receiving in the same season.

"I hope we can keep that momentum going now," said Craig, who said the individual records "just happen, I guess. I knew we just had to go out there and win."

Craig finished the season with 1,050 yards rushing and 1,016 receiving. His five receptions Sunday gave him the league lead with 92, one more than Washington's Art Monk.

The victory on the final Sunday of the regular season put the 49ers in the NFC wild-card game next Sunday against the New York Giants, who clinched a spot Saturday with a 28-10 victory over Pittsburgh. The NFC East champion Cowboys will play the NFC West champion Los Angeles Rams in Anaheim, Calif., in the second round Jan. 4 or 5.

Miami clinched the AFC East title by blanking Buffalo 28-0. It was the seventh straight win for the Dolphins, who will host AFC Central champion Cleveland in the playoffs. New England and the New York Jets set up a wild-card game on Saturday with playoff-clinching victories. New England downed the Cincinnati Bengals 34-23 and the Jets beat Cleveland 37-10.

Victories by the Patriots and Jets eliminated Denver, a 27-24 winner Friday night over Seattle. The Broncos are the first 11-5 team ever to miss the playoffs. Eliminated when the 49ers beat the Cowboys was Washington, a 27-16 winner Saturday over St. Louis.

NFC Central champion Chicago became the second team — San Francisco was the first, in 1984 — to win 15 regular season games. The Bears, who will host the San Francisco-New York winner, finished with a 37-17 victory over Detroit.

For most of the first half in San Francisco, the 49ers had the look of outgoing champions.

"Little things hurt us in the frst half, just the way they did early in the season," said quarterback Joe Montana, who passed for 322 yards and two touchdowns, both to Dwight Clark.

NFL Roundup

"He was right on the money all day," Clark said of Montana. "This team has never been one to give up."

Gary Hogeboom passed for 389 yards, but Dallas was blanked in the second half by a 49er defense that had six quarterback sacks.

Dolphins 28, Bills 0

The victory left the Dolphins with a chance to have the home field advantage should the Raiders lose to the Rams. For a time this season, Miami's spot in the playoffs was up in the air.

"We got it together and played excellent when we had to play excellent," Coach Don Shula said of his team, which rallied from a 5-4 start to win seven straight games.

Bruce Hardy caught Dan Marino touchdown passes of 19 and five yards and Tony Nathan and Ron Davenport ran for touchdowns against Buffalo.

Miami has won or shared the AFC East crown 12 of the past 16 years.

Buffalo, 2-14, had two drives stall inside the Miami 5-yard line.

Patriots 34, Bengals 23

New England has a long road to travel — starting with the wild-card game on the road — but that doesn't bother defensive back Raymond Clayborn.

"I think this team can go all the way. If we get our stuff together and play the way we are capable of playing, we can win the Super Bowl," Clayborn said.

Craig James rushed for a career-high 142 yards rushing, including an 11-yard touchdown run in the fourth quarter. The Patriots, 11-5, got a 1-yard run from seldom-used Robert Weathers for the clincher as they tied a club record for victories.

Jets 37, Browns 10

New York, 11-5, won the right to host New England thanks to what running back Johnny Hector called an all-around contribution.

"That's how we win," said Hector, who scored twice on short runs. "We feel we can do anything if we play together."

Pat Leahy kicked three field goals as the Jets dropped Cleveland to an 8-8 record, the worst full-season mark ever for a playoff team.

"We're 8-8 and we'll make no apologies," Cleveland Coach Marty Schottenheimer said. "Everybody knew the rules at the beginning of the season."

Cleveland's Earnest Byner rushed for 101 yards to give him 1,002 for the season. His running mate, rookie Kevin Mack, finished the season with 1,104. They are the first tandem to exceed 1,000 rushing yards since the Pittsburgh duo of Franco Harris and Rocky Bleier in 1976.

Falcons 16, Saints 10

Gerald Riggs set an Atlanta rushing record by finishing the season with 1,719 yards to break William Andrews' mark of 1,566 set in 1983. Riggs rushed for 158 yards and one touchdown to establish an 83-yard margin over Marcus Allen of the Raiders.

The Falcons, who got three field goals from Mick Luckhurst, closed out with a 4-12 mark under Dan Henning. The Saints are 5-11.

"I have a short memory and we're 2-0 in the last two games," Henning said when asked if he would return.

Wade Phillips, who replaced his father, Bum, completed his run as interim coach of the Saints.

Chiefs 38, Chargers 34

Kansas City's Stephone Paige broke the NFL record for receiving yards in one game with 309 on just eight receptions — including scoring passes of 56 yards from Todd Blackledge and 84 from Bill Kenney.

Pokes, 49ers ready to log playoff miles

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The San Francisco 49ers, who reached Super Bowl XIX with a few short bus trips, must survive a three-week, travel-filled grind to qualify for the National Football League championship game this time.

"We don't look at our prospects for the playoffs. We've been there before. We know what it takes to win," Coach Bill Walsh said Sunday after his 49ers, the defending NFL champs, qualified for the playoffs by coming from behind to beat the Dallas Cowboys 31-16 in the final game of the regular season.

"I'm particularly proud of the way we were able to overcome all those injuries," Walsh added.

The most serious injury Sunday was to cornerback Eric Wright, who pulled a groin muscle and might be unavailable for post-season games.

The 49ers, a 15-1 division champion last year, won two playoff games at home and then traveled half an hour to Stanford Stadium for their Super Bowl triumph over the Miami Dolphins. At 10-6 this season, they're in the playoffs as a division runner-up without the possibility of a home game.

For starters, there's a cross-country trip to play the New York Giants next Sunday in the National Football Conference wild-card game. The winner goes to Chicago a week later to face the 15-1 Bears, NFC Central champion.

The 10-6 Cowboys, Eastern Division champs, will be on the road for their playoff opener Jan. 4 or 5 against the Los Angeles Rams.

"This time of year, it's not where you play that counts; it's how you play," Tony Dorsett of the Cowboys said.

The 49ers, who trailed 13-0 with four minutes left in the first half Sunday, played better than the Cowboys over the final 34 minutes. Joe Montana delivered two long touchdown passes to Dwight Clark, fullback Roger Craig ran for a TD and set an NFL precedent by reaching the 1,000-yard mark for the season in both rushing and receiving, and Jerry Rice had a 15-yard TD run to complement his 111-yard day as a receiver.

"Momentum is like that. It roils like a big ball. Dallas could feel the surge going our way," San Francisco linebacker Riki Ellison said.

Indianapolis fullback Randy McMillan goes over the Houston line as John Grimsley (59), Allen Lyday (28) and Keith Bostic (25) defend on the play.

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The Colts ended their second NFL season in Indianapolis with a victory on Sunday, still with no playoff berth in sight but nevertheless with "a lot of positive things to look at in the off-season," said Coach Rod Dowhower.

Quarterback Mike Pagel passed for three touchdowns, while Randy McMillan and Albert Bentley ran for two other scores against a vulnerable Houston defense, leading the Colts over the Oilers 34-16.

"Overall, we played a pretty gritty game and took advantage of the breaks," said Dowhower. "Now we have to do a good job of evaluating ourselves, and we have to evaluate the draft."

Both teams finished the season with 5-11 records, Indianapolis with a two-game winning streak and Houston with a losing string of four games — the last two under interim Coach Jerry Glanville. Indianapolis will get the sixth pick in the 1986 college draft; Houston will pick third.

The Colts rushed for 299 yards to just 76 for Houston, and Dowhower said the Indianapolis "offensive line did a heck of a job," despite some early injuries.

"We were down, but everyone adjusted, even though we had to switch some positions. It was one of our better efforts.

"Houston's pressure defense gave us opportunities for big plays, and we capitalized on them," Dowhower said.

"I was most pleased with the way they came together and improved," he said of the Colts. "To improve is the most important thing for anyone. We need to keep up the work ethic and attitude, and I think a lot of the improvement will take care of itself."

Indianapolis finished 4-12 last year under Frank Kush and, for the last game, interim Coach Hal Hunter.

Glanville, talking of his chances of keeping his job next season, said, "I won't make that decision. I won't be involved with that. I know no more than you do. I have no idea, so I won't comment on it. I'm not trying to evade the question."

Glanville, the Oilers' defensive coordinator, took over for the fired Hugh Campbell two weeks ago.

He said the Oilers "had our chances (against the Colts), but fumbles turned things around."

"We couldn't get it in the end zone when we had to," he said. "The bottom line was we have to do a better job."

Houston fumbled three times, losing the ball once, and had two passes intercepted by Indianapolis defenders.

"We knew the Colts were an excellent running team," Glanville said. "They never got behind and didn't have to throw the ball to catch up. That's why their running game worked so well."

The Colts, taking advantage of a Houston rushing defense that ranked 27th in the 28-team league, dominated the Oilers on the ground. McMillan, Bentley, George Wonsley and Owen Gill did the bulk of the damage with a combined total of 289 of the team's 299 rushing yards.

McMillan led the Colts with 90 yards on 18 rushes; Gill had 83 yards, including 67 on one play in the game's closing seconds; Bentley had 73 yards; and Wonsley totaled 43. The top Houston rushers were Mike Rozier with 49 yards on 19 carries and Butch Woolfolk with 22 yards on four carries.

Only the passing of Houston's Warren Moon kept the Oilers within reach. He hit 22 of 40 passes for 364 yards, including nine completions for 210 yards and a pair of touchdowns to wide receiver Drew Hill.

Moon's first touchdown pass to Hill covered 40 yards and brought Houston within seven points midway through the second quarter. Indianapolis widened the lead to 27-9 before Hill made his second scoring catch on a 14-yard play with nine minutes left in the final period.

But Pagel, who earlier completed touchdown passes of 14 and 20 yards to Pat Beach, iced the game on the next series with a 22-yard scoring pass to Oliver Williams.

Moon guided the Oilers to the Indianapolis 5 with under four minutes to go, but Preston Davis intercepted a pass in the end zone. The Oilers had one more chance to score after an Indianapolis punt was blocked by Keith Bostic at the Colts' 12, but Moon completed only one pass for four yards and Houston lost the ball on downs with just over two minutes to go.

Pats fans injured in celebration

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — Five young men celebrating after the Bengals-Patriots football game were hospitalized with electrical burns after a section of a metal goal post taken from the stadium touched a 13,200-volt wire, state police reported.

The incident was part of the rowdiness that erupted Sunday when a near-capacity crowd of 57,953 celebrated New England's 34-23 victory and the Patriots' wildcard berth in the National Football League playoffs.

"This is the worst I've ever seen it," said Trooper John F. Gillespie, who has been stationed at the Foxboro barracks for seven years.

State police said 37 people were arrested on charges ranging from drunkenness to larceny and driving under the influence of alcohol, six minor motor vehicle accidents and numerous brush fires were reported after the game.

Winnipeg survives Edmonton third-period rally, 7-5

Associated Press

The Winnipeg Jets had been grounded lately, but are beginning to show signs that they have clearance to take off in the National Hockey League.

"We've been taking our share of losses lately, so it's nice to get some wins," Ray Neufeld said after scoring two goals and setting up a third when the Jets withstood a torrid third period comeback Sunday night to beat Edmonton 7-5.

The Jets, viewed at the start of the season as a contender after finishing 43-27-10 a year ago, won its second straight game to better its mark to 12-20-4.

Winnipeg's victory came despite five assists by Edmonton defenseman Paul Coffey, which is one short of the NHL record for defenseman. Coffey has 17 points in his last five games.

Elsewhere, it was Buffalo 5, Boston 3; Washington 7, Quebec 5; Minnesota 8, New Jersey 3; Philadelphia 3, Pittsburgh 2 in overtime, and Chicago 5, Calgary 4 in overtime.

Brian Mullen scored 22 seconds into the third period to establish what appeared to be a comfortable 6-2 lead. But Neufeld collided with Grant Fuhr and sent the Edmonton goaltender to the dressing room with a facial cut. That brought on Andy Moog and suddenly the Oilers came alive.

"The last two weeks have been brutal," said Fuhr. "I'm not relaxing, not playing with confidence."

Gord Sherven at 1:17, Mark Napier at 4:45 and Wayne Gretzky at 11:23 cut Winnipeg's lead to 6-5. But it was for naught.

"You can't let a team like that get so far ahead of you," said Gretzky.

Coffey was the catalyst for the Oilers' rally. He assisted on the goals by Sherven, Napier and Gretzky and his outstanding speed and puck-handling created at least five other good scoring chances.

Edmonton outshot the Jets 14-6 after Moog's arrival and only some brilliant saves by goaltender Brian Hayward and some alert defensive plays allowed the Jets to escape with the victory.

The victory wasn't assured until Thomas Steen scored into an empty net at 19:46.

Dale Hawerchuk with two and Laurie Boschman scored Winnipeg's other goals

Gretzky also scored in the second period, and Dave Hunter scored Edmonton's other goal in the first period.

NHL Roundup

Flyers 3, Penguins 2

Murray Craven's goal at 2:12 of overtime extended Philadelphia's winning streak against Pittsburgh to four games this season. Craven fired a low shot from the right faceoff that deflected off goalie Gilles Meloche's pads into the net.

The game went to overtime beuase of a freak goal at 12:10 of the third period. Terry Ruskowski attempted a centering pass, but it struck Flyer defenseman Mark Howe's stick and entered the net.

Mario Lemieux also scored for the Penguins against Bob Froese, while Dave Brown and Ilkka Sinasalo tallied for the Flyers.

North Stars 8, Devils 3

Scott Bjugstad scored three goals and Dino Ciccarelli scored twice and set up three others to lead visiting Minnesota past New Jersey.

The Devils lost for the sixth time in their last seven games.

Bjugstad scored 55 seconds into the game after taking a pass from Ciccarelli. Steve Payne scored his first goal of the season at 9:16 on a power play when he directed Ciccarelli's pass past New Jersey goaltender Glenn Resch and into the net.

Dennis Maruk made it 3-0 at 10:18 when he pounced on a rebound from Brian Bellows' shot and put it home.

Sabres 5, Bruins 3

Buffalo's victory prevented Boston from breaking a three-way tie with Quebec and idle Montreal. The Sabres took charge on Phil Housley's power play goal in the third period.

The game-winning goal at 10:56 was set up when John Tucker sent a pass back to Housley off the faceoff. Housley's 40-foot slap shot got by Boston goalie Pat Riggin.

Housley and Tucker also set up Paul Cyr for Buffalo's tying goal in the third period as the Sabres rallied from a 3-2 deficit. Pat Hughes scored into an empty net with 16 seconds remaining.

Mike Foligno and Sean McKenna also scored for the Sabres, while Boston got goals from Ken Linseman, Dave Reid and Keith Crowder.

Capitals 7, Nordiques 5

Washington's Greg Adams recorded two goals and an assist, while Alan Haworth had a goal and set up three others.

Quebec led 4-3 entering the third period when Haworth converted his own rebound to tie the game with his 17th goal at 4:16.

Michel Goulet regained the lead for Quebec with a power-play goal at 6:16, but then Craig Laughlin, Bob Carpenter and Adams scored goals less than three minutes apart to put the game away for Washington.

Lou Franceschetti and Darren Veitch also scored for the Capitals, while Brent Ashton, Paul Gillis, Anton Stastny and Jean-Francois Sauve got the other Nordique goals.

Black Hawks 5, Flames 4

Troy Murray scored two goals, including the game-winner in overtime.

Murray took a pass from teammate Behn Wilson at 2:15 into the extra period and slipped a 15-foot shot past Calgary goal keeper Rejean Lemelin.

A 20-foot shot by Chicago's Ken Yaremchuk had tied the game at 4-4 at 11:56 of the third period.

Chicago, a winner of four straight, went ahead when Marc Bergevin scored less than two minutes into the game. But Calgary got goals from Tim Hunter and Carey Wilson before Murray tied the game at 17:37 of the first period.

Chicago goalie Murray Bannerman struck his head on the ice and complained of dizziness during the intermission. Backup goalie Bob Sauve played the rest of the game for Chicago.

Calgary, losing its fifth straight game, went ahead 4-3 with second period goals by Paul Baxter and Doug Risebrough, while Chicago was limited to only one goal by Rick Patterson.

Bullets suffer record loss

Associated Press

Ever since Jeff Ruland suffered a broken ankle on Dec. 11, Washington Bullets Coach Gene Shue has worried about the team's offense.

That fear was realized Sunday night as the Bullets equalled a National Basketball Association record for futility by scoring only 25 points in the second half en route to a 100-93 loss to the New York Knicks.

"We were not a good offensive team to start the season," Shue said, "so how can we lose a player who averages 21 points and 12 rebounds a game, and sets up easy shots with his passing?"

Although 7-foot-7 Manute Bol has averaged eight blocked shots per game since Ruland's injury, Snue called Ruland "the player we could least afford to lose ... and there isn't any replacement for him."

The Bullets didn't indicate they would fall apart so thoroughly after shooting 64 percent from the field and taking a 68-55 lead in the first half. But Shue said, "I wasn't deceived by the 68 points. I figured when the game was over, we'd be lucky to have 100."

The only other NBA games Sunday night saw Cleveland defeat Dallas 119-105 and Portland beat Denver 121-114.

The Bullets become the fourth team in NBA history to score only 25 points after intermission, tying an NBA record for the fewest points scored in a second half since the 24-second clock was started by the NBA in 1954.

Boston scored 25 points in the second half against Milwaukee on Feb. 27, 1955, St. Louis did it against Boston on Dec. 26, 1964 and Golden State did it against Boston on Feb. 14, 1978.

Jeff Malone and Cliff Robinson scored 17 points each in the first half for the Bullets, and they finished with 27 and 25, respectively. But the rest of the team managed only seven points in the second half.

"At the half, we talked about playing them nose to nose," New York Coach Hubie Brown said. "By doing that, we rushed their shots and didn't give them any second shots. I was very happy with our pressure."

Shue said it was poor offense by Washington, rather than the Knicks' defense, that caused the 25-point half.

"Nothing happened in the second half, believe me, nothing," Shue said. "We ran the same plays, took the same shots."

Pat Cummings scored six of his team-high 26 points as New York erased a 14-point deficit with a 16-0 streak in the third quarter to go ahead 75-73. Washington went 5-for-24 from the field in the period.

NBA Roundup

Cavaliers 119, Mavericks 105

World B. Free scored 32 points and Roy Hinson 26 for Cleveland against Dallas, and they totaled 19 in the third quarter to help the Cavaliers take a big lead.

Cleveland led 57-47 at halftime and the Cavaliers extended the margin to 90-73 after three quarters as Free scored 11 points and Hinson eight. The Mavericks got no closer than 11 points in the final period.

Trail Blazers 121, Nuggets 114

Denver dropped into a first-place tie with Houston in the Midwest Division as Portland's Kiki Vandeweghe matched his season high with 35 points.

The Trail Blazers raced from a 58-56 halftime deficit to a 99-80 lead in the fourth period before the Nuggets rallied to cut the lead to four on two occasions, the last at 118-114 with 47 seconds left.

Tar Heels rout The Citadel

Associated Press

Top-ranked North Carolina capped, by a 53-point margin, a successful weekend for the nation's Top Twenty college basketball teams who saw action. Considering the opposition, it was no surprise.

The Tar Heels marched all over The Citadel 104-51 at Charlotte, N.C., on Sunday to run their record to 10-0. Guards Kenny Smith and Ranzino Smith each scored 16 points and Brad Daugherty added 15 as Carolina surpassed the 100-point mark for the fourth time.

Citadel Coach Randy Nesbit, apparently a glutton for punishment, said he wouldn't mind playing Carolina again.

"Just because we didn't play well today doesn't mean that we couldn't give them a better game the next time," Besbit said after the Bulldogs, 4-3, suffered their worst loss since 1946.

Improved shooting would certainly help The Citadel, which hit only 27 percent from the field to the Tar Heels' 61 percent.

The Top Twenty games were played on Saturday, with No. 5 Georgetown's 85-70 defeat of No. 18 DePaul the only real contest.

In other games, it was No. 2 Michigan 98, Northern Michigan 76; No. 4 Syracuse 83, St. Bonaventure 64; No. 6 Kansas 89, Arkansas 78; No. 7 Georgia Tech 72, Jacksonville 53; No. 8 Oklahoma 103, New Orleans 85; No. 9 Louisiana State 91, Southern 83; No. 11 St. John's 104, Niagara 61; No. 12 Nevada-Las Vegas 82, Iona 63; No. 13 Kentucky 88, Pepperdine 56; No. 14 Alabama-Birmingham 76, Tennessee-Chattanooga 60; No. 15 Illinois 67, St. Louis 55; No. 17 Indiana 86, Iowa State 65; No. 19 Notre Dame 98, Valparaiso 54 and No. 20 Virginia Tech 76, West Virginia 69.

While Citadel took the rout in stride, first-year coach Andy Walker of Niagara wasn't pleased that St. John's Coach Lou Carnesecca left star forward Walter Berry in for the closing minutes. Berry finished with 27 points on 12-of-15 accuracy from the field.

"St. John's wanted revenge," said Walker, referring to last year's 62-59 upset by the Purple Eagles at Niagara. "They felt they had to prove something. ... I felt it was too much to keep Berry in for so long, but that's New York."

Carnesecca dismissed the criticism by saying, "Revenge — that's child's stuff."

College Roundup

Top Ten

Michigan, 10-0, continued mistreating local opponents, and now has knocked off Central Michigan, Western Michigan and Northern Michigan in a row. Richard Rellford scored 20 points, Antoine Joubert 18 and Roy Tarpley 17 to give Coach Bill Frieder his 100th victory.

Syracuse, 7-0, which hasn't left the Carrier Dome yet this season, got 17 points from Wendell Alexis and 14 from Rafael Addison. Orange Coach Jim Boeheim said, "They cut it down to eight points in the second half, and that's the closest anybody's been to us in the second half this year." Before the Bonnies, Syracuse's smallest margin of victory was 22 points over Navy.

Georgetown, 8-0, played its first ranked team in DePaul, but the result was the same as in seven previous games — a romp for the Hoyas. Reggie Williams led the way with 30 points, while freshman Rod Strickland scored 20 for the host Blue Demons, 5-1.

Ron Kellogg scored 26 points and Danny Manning 24 for Kansas, which won its 23rd in a row at home. Manning's three-point play began a 7-0 spree late in the game as the Jayhawks held off Arkansas. Williams Mills topped the Razorbacks with 22 points.

Mark Price was on target with nine of his first 11 shots from the field and finished with 22 points in Georgia Tech's win over Jacksonville for the Gator Bowl championship. It was the Yellow Jackets' seventh straight win after a season-opening loss.

Oklahoma, 9-0, had five players in double figures, led by Anthony Bowie's 27 points. Michael Porter bagged 36 points for New Orleans.

John Williams scored 23 points and Anthony Wilson 21 as LSU ran its record to 11-0 over Southern.

Second Ten

Nevada-Las Vegas, Kentucky and Alabama-Birmingham each won their own holiday tournaments.

Nevada-Las Vegas captured the Rebel Roundup after allowing Iona within 66-59 with 5:55 remaining. Anthony Jones then scored six of his 21 points during a 14-0 UNLV spurt.

Kentucky pulled away in the second half to rout Pepperdine as Kenny Walker scored 21 points and Ed Davender 16.

UAB got 21 points from James Ponder in beating Tennessee-Chattanooga. Cornelius Crank scored 20 for the Moccasins.

Ken Norman accounted for 21 points and 10 rebounds in Illinois' win over Missouri. Indiana's Daryl Thomas scored a career-high 31 points and Steve Alford got 24 against Iowa State, which was topped by Jeff Grayer's 32 points.

Notre Dame jumped to a 45-17 lead in the first half against Valparaiso and coasted. Ken Barlow led the Irish with 14 points.

Sargent claims he threw fight

CHICAGO (AP) — A bout that drew national attention to a fighter trying to make a comeback following the amputation of his right foot was thrown because of death threats, the loser says.

Boxer Francis Sargent said Saturday he intentionally lost the Dec. 14 fight to Craig Bodzianowski, who won the cruiser-weight bout on a second-round knockout even though he was wearing an artificial foot.

Sargent made the admission Saturday after Gordon Volkman, chairman of the Illinois Athletic Board, said he would call for an investigation into the bout because of questions about the way Sargent went down for the 10-count.

"I threw the fight," said Sargent, who lives in Peoria. "I got calls, about three or four, before the fight saying they'd kill me if I didn't lose. Crazy calls. I was scared."

Bodzianowski, of Tinley Park, said he believes he scored a solid knockout.

"I nailed him," Bodzianowski said. "I've seen the (fight) films, and I knocked him out."

Sargent, who is black, said the calls included vicious racial abuse, and it continued when he arrived at Alan Shepard High School in Palos Heights for the fight.

White defends no-pass, no-play to nation

DALLAS (AP) — Texas Gov. Mark White said Sunday in a nationally televised news program that the state's no-pass, no-play rule has been fair and effective and defended the controversial requirement against a lawsuit and criticism that it has made life hard for many students.

"I think that the rule is appropriate and I think it's fair," White told CBS News. "And I think you'll find that students are studying harder and are doing better. ..."

The rule, which stemmed from a sweeping school reform law, forbids students from taking part in any extracurricular activities for six weeks if they fail a single course.

"This country is in world competition and we're not in the race in many cases because of a weak educational program among our secondary schools," White said on the CBS-TV "Face the Nation" program.

"I want to make certain that we have the highest standards, and I think you'll find that the strongest support we have for it are among many of those professional athletes who are going back to get their education now," he said.

He said students are not being penalized through the rule.

"They are being encouraged to pass their courses first and then they'll be able to play," he said. "I prefer to refer to it as the 'pass-play' rule. I think that's the way we have to look at it."

Seven SWC teams post weekend wins

Associated Press

Texas Christian University's Larry Richard had been bothered throughout the week by a sore foot and sat out the first 10 minutes of Saturday night's basketball game against Drake.

He put a spark into the Horned Frog attack, and led a rally early in the second half that led TCU to a 74-59 victory.

Richard finished with 18 points and 10 rebounds.

"I actually like coming off the bench, because it gives me a chance to size up the opposition to see what I can and can't get away with," the 6-7 leaper said.

All nine Southwest Conference teams were in action Saturday, and seven escaped with victories. The only losers were Arkansas, an 89-78 victim of sixth-ranked Kansas; and Texas Tech, which lost to unbeaten Clemson on a 20-foot shot with four seconds to play.

Southern Methodist defeated East Carolina 71-62 for third place in the University of Kentucky Invitational; Houston beat Long Beach State 96-86; Rice got by Northwestern State of Louisiana, 58-53; Texas A&M defeated Southern Mississippi 81-61 for third place in the Gator Bowl basketball tournament; and Texas won its Longhorn Classic tournament by beating South Florida 60-55.

TCU allowed Drake the first two points of the second half, for a 28-25 lead, but then ran off 16 straight points to take a 41-28 lead, and Drake never got closer than nine points thereafter.

"We regrouped at the half," said TCU's Carven Holcombe, who hit five of his 14 points during the run. "We came back out and hit the boards, executed and played defense."

Southern Methodist coach Dave Bliss said his players were too exhausted to put East Carolina away.

"We were too tired. We couldn't get the transition game going to put them away," Bliss said.

SWC Roundup

Cougar center Greg Anderson scored 19 of his 25 points in the second half of Houston's victory. Guard Alvin Franklin followed with 23 points and Rickie Winslow had 21 for 5-3 Houston.

Rice's victory was its 17th in a row at home over non-conference opponents. Rice is 6-2 his season. Greg Hines scored 16 points for the Owls, including 10 second-half points, for the Owls. Terrence Cashaw added 15.

Clemson Junior Guard Larry Middleton canned a 20-foot jumper to give his team its victory over Tech's Red Raiders. Middleton's game-winning shot came eight seconds after a Gregg Crowe follow gave Tech its first lead of the night, 64-63.

Crowe also led the Raiders with eight of 31 rebounds vs. 28 for Clemson.

"We wanted to get down and take that shot against the zone," Clemson coach Cliff Ellis said. "We knew that shot would be open against the zone. That's Larry's shot. When it left his hand I knew it was good."

Kansas' Danny Manning connected on a key three-point play to start a 7-0 run late in the second half and carry the Jayhawks to victory over Arkansas.

A&M's Don Marbury scored 32 points and Winston Crite and Todd Holloway combined for 32 more for the Aggies in their tournament victory.

Ray Davis scored 17 points to lead Texas to its tournament championship victory over South Florida. The teams were tied 31-31 at the half, but three straight jumpers by Davis enabled the Longhorns to pull away.

NFL

"Some teams don't get that much in a whole game," said Paige, who broke the 40-year-old record of 303 by Jim Benton of the Cleveland Rams. "I wanted to go out with a big bang."

The Chargers, 8-8, made it close with 21 unanswered points in the fourth period. Kansas City finished 6-10.

Bears 37, Lions 17

Chicago's Walter Payton became the first player in NFL history to surpass 2,000 yards total offense in three consecutive seasons as Chicago reduced Detroit's record to 7-9. Payton rushed for 81 yards and caught four passes for 55 yards to increase his season total to 2,034.

Dennis Gentry also scored for the Bears on a 94-yard kickoff return.

Packers 20, Buccaners 17

Green Bay, with Phillip Epps and Jessie Clark scoring touchdowns, finished 8-8 for the third straight year. Tampa Bay wound up 2-14 to earn the first selection in next year's college player draft.

Eagles 37, Vikings 35

Philadelphia's Paul McFadden kicked three field goals, including a 35-yarder with 40 seconds to play, as Philadelphia, 7-9, beat Minnesota, 7-9 in the first season of Bud Grant's second tenure. Earnest Jackson of the Eagles rushed 25 times for 106 yards to give him 1,028 for the season.

Giants 28, Steelers 10

New York, 10-6, clinched its third wild-card berth in five years behind 202 yards rushing by Joe Morris, who set a single-season team record with 1,336. Morris scored three times to finish with a league-leading 21 touchdowns. Pittsburgh, 7-9, missed the playoffs for the first time in four years.

Redskins 27, Cardinals 16

George Rogers ran for 206 yards to pace Washington, which found itself in the unusual position of having to root for archrival Dallas against San Francisco. St. Louis wound up a disappointing 5-11, and that mark resulted in the firing of Coach Jim Hanifan.

Broncos 27, Seahawks 24

Seattle held a 17-0 lead before Denver rallied to defeat the Seahawks Friday night and keep alive, for a few more hours, hopes of gaining an AFC playoff spot. Rich Karlis' fourth-period field goal provided the margin in Denver's 11th win of the year. Seattle closed 8-8.

San Francisco running back Roger Craig (33) is chased by Dallas defensive tackle Randy White on his way to his double 1,000. Craig caught broke 1,000 yards in pass receptions and rushing, the first NFL player to accomplish the feat in a single season.

DALLAS

"It would have been close if we hadn't turned the ball over in the second half," Dallas Coach Tom Landry said. "There was nothing riding on this game, for us, except the homefield advantage against the Rams if they lost (tonight). That's not a whole lot of incentive, going up against the world champions."

The Cowboys kept three front-line players, quarterback Danny White, wide receiver Tony Hill and cornerback Ron Fellows, out of the game. All are recovering from injuries and expected to be sound in two weeks.

Gary Hogeboom, Sunday's starting quarterback, passed for 389 yards but was sacked six times and allowed two interceptions. The Cowboys drove 82 yards on their first possession, scoring on a 1-yard TD throw to tight end Doug Cosbie, but did the rest of their scoring on three Rafael Septien field goals.

San Francisco cornerback Dwight Hicks picked off one of Hogeboom's passes in the third period, and the 49ers drove 44 yards for the touchdown which sent them ahead 17-16.

"We were able to shut down their running game and put them in a passing situation. Our defensive line took over," Hicks said.

Mike Renfro had 164 yards receiving and rookie Karl Powe, the standin for Hill, had 127. The Cowboys netted only 60 yards rushing, 49 by Dorsett.

Craig had 72 of the 49ers' 109 yards rushing and 50 yards on receptions. With five catches, he made his season total an NFL-leading 92, one more than the Washington Redskins' Art Monk.

"He's truly a great player," Walsh said. "His record (the double 1,000) is a statement for this unique athlete."

Craig said, "I knew when I was getting close to the 1,000. I didn't want to relax when I got it. I just wanted to go out there and win."

Craig lost a fumble in the second period, just after reaching 1,000 yards rushing. But the 49ers got the ball back almost immediately, recovering a fumble by Dorsett, and drove 82 yards for their first touchdown.

"That first half seemed like a microcosm of our season. A lot of things were going wrong," offensive tackle Keith Fahnhorst said.

"That's the way it happened early in the season, in this game, too. But then we settled down," Montana said.

The 49ers were 3-4 at the lowest point of the season. Their only two losses down the stretch were 17-16 to Denver and 27-20 to the Rams.

"The 49ers knew what they had to do today, and they went out and did it," Dorsett said. "They should be tough in the playoffs."

OILERS

Pagel, who completed 14 of 22 passes for 178 yards, gave way to backup Matt Kofler after the interception by Davis. The two-game winning streak is the Colts' longest in two years.

Houston's only touchdown in the first half was set up by Willie Drewery's 22-yard punt return to the Indianapolis 43-yard line.

Woolfolk ran three yards to the 40, and Moon hit Hill on the next play for the touchdown. Punter Lee Johnson, the holder on the extra-point kick attempt, bobbled the snap and injured his right knee when he was tackled while trying to run the ball.

Except for the touchdown possession, the Oilers got inside the Colts' 45-yard line only one other time in the first half. Passes of 24 and 29 yards to Hill and 8 yards to Woolfolk helped Houston to the Indianapolis 28, and Tony Zendejas kicked a 45-yard field goal — his team record-tying 21st of the season — with three seconds left before intermission, cutting the Colts' lead to 20-9.

A 41-yard punt by the Colts' Rohn Stark, the NFL's all-time leader, had put the Oilers at their own 1-yard line on their next-to-last possession of the first half. Two plays later, a pass by Moon was intercepted at the Houston 21 by Eugene Daniel. It was Daniel's eighth of the season, the most by a Colt since Lyle Blackwood made 10 in 1977.

McMillan ran one yard to the Oilers' 20, and Pagel hit Beach on the next play for his second touchdown reception of the game.

Beach's first scoring catch, a 14-yarder midway through the first quarter, capped a 50-yard drive. Wonsley took the ball from Pagel and handed it on a reverse to wide receiver Wayne Capers, who then lateraled back to Pagel for the TD pass to Beach.

Indianapolis pushed the lead to 13-0 on its next possession, moving 88 yards in nine plays. A 35-yard pass to Capers carried the Colts to the Oilers' 16-yard line, and McMillan ran in two plays later for the touchdown, a minute into the second quarter. Raul Allegre's extra-point kick was blocked by Mike Stensrud, leaving the Colts' lead at 13-0.

Pats yes, but Browns in playoffs?

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

Pro football raconteur Don Meredith once observed that "If ifs and buts were candy and nuts, wouldn't it be a merry Christmas?"

With that kind of philosophy, Meredith would be perfect as one of the abacus operators over at the National Football League, where they have been busy calculating playoff priorities and explaining the tie-break rules.

The good folks in Colorado will just have to believe that Denver's 11-5 record isn't as playoff-worthy as New England's 11-5. And that the New York Jets' 11-5 is better than both of them.

Explaining to Bronco backers how Cleveland's 8-8 is also better may, however, take a little more doing.

And down in Washington, where they're accustomed to such activity, they might consider a fillibuster to debate the merits of the Redskins' 10-6 mark, which turned out not to be good enough for the playoffs, even though San Francisco and the New York Giants made it with the same record.

It all has to do with the NFL's tie-breaking procedure, which is simpler than Einstein's Theory of Relativity, but just barely.

The formula begins with head-to-head record, then move on to division record, conference record, common-games record, division game net points, all games net points, strength of schedule, net touchdowns, and finally, coin toss.

Eventually, all ties are broken, one way or another.

Both Denver and Washington washed out because they had poorer conference records than the teams that captured wild-card berths.

Compounding the final-weekend confusion was the Cleveland-Cincinnati-Pittsburgh tangle in the AFC Central. The tie-break formula had eliminated the Steelers before their final game even though, had they won, they would have finished at 8-8 and could have tied — in the standings if not in the tie-break priorities — with Cleveland and Cincinnati.

An 8-8 finish for all three teams was Cincinnati's only ticket to the playoffs, so the Bengals offered anti-Giant intelligence to the Steelers to help them in their task. It sounds rather fishy to be aiding a divisional rival, even though it was in Cincinnati's best interests to do so. The NFL competition committee will be pleased to learn that this bit of nefarious business did not work.

So Cleveland, 8-8, is in the playoffs, a division champion with a week off as its reward for a .500 season. And Denver, three games better than the Browns at 11-5, stays home. That will be even more ironic if the Los Angeles Raiders lose tonight against the LA Rams. Then Denver and the Raiders would finish with the same record. The Raiders, though, are division champs. For the Broncos, it's see you later.

The head-to-head tie-break criteria seems appropriate. The Raiders beat Denver twice, albeit by nothing more than a overtime field goal each time. So LA gets that edge legitimately. But what did Cleveland do better, other than have the great good sense to play in the AFC Central?

Granting automatic playoff spots to division champs is risky business. You romance mediocrity that way, with .500 teams lifted into the Super Bowl tournament by an accident of geography. And geography, remember, has not always been the NFL's strong suit, with Atlanta and New Orleans located in the NFC West and Dallas in the NFC East.

A better way to do it might be ranking the teams in terms of their won-lost records, with no concern for what division they live in. Division identification is minimal in the NFL anyway because of the cross-pollinated schedule.

For the Broncos, it's the second serious playoff disappointment in recent years. In 1981 they went 10-6 and stayed home, squeezed aside by five other teams.

IF the Broncos had only won one of those overtime games against the Raiders, IF they had not lost conference games to Miami and to an exceedingly ordinary San Diego team, IF they hadn't lost to the Rams on opening day ...

Rams, Raiders wind up regular season

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — The "Battle of Los Angeles" seems somehow to be taking on the trappings of a gentlemanly cricket match.

When the Los Angeles Raiders and Los Angeles Rams meet in tonight's National Football League showcase, there will be little at stake, and apparently no great sense of rivalry on either side.

"I think there's going to be a great element of fun just playing the game," Rams Coach John Robinson said. "It's something like a bowl game.

"Tom and I are good friends," Robinson said of Raiders' Coach Tom Flores. "I've always liked the Raiders. I've got some friends there, and they've always been winners."

"We have to approach it as just another game, even though they're closer than anyone else we play," said Flores, whose road trip will consist of a 35-mile drive down the freeway to Anaheim Stadium for the 9 p.m. EST contest.

Also taking some of the edge off the game is the fact that there's little incentive for either team, particularly not to the point of risking injuries.

The Rams already have won the NFC West title and the Raiders have clinched the AFC West, both with 11-4 records.

The last concrete incentive for the Rams was removed Sunday when Dallas lost to San Francisco, assuring the Rams the home-field in their playoff opener against the Cowboys on either Jan. 4 or Jan. 5.

The Raiders, on the other hand, could nail down the home-field advantage for the entire AFC playoffs with a victory over the Rams. The Raiders begin the playoffs the same January weekend at home against the winner of the New York Jets-New England wild-card game.

Even the matchup of two of the NFL's finest runners — the Raiders' Marcus Allen and the Rams' Eric Dickerson — may not be a true test. There's some question whether Dickerson will play, since he sat out practice late last week with a tight hamstring muscle.

Allen has some individual incentive. With 1,636 yards rushing, he goes into the final regular-season game 83 yards back of the Atlanta Falcons' Gerald Riggs in the chase for the 1985 NFL rushing title.

Dickerson, a contract holdout for the first two games this season, hasn't been able to match his record-setting 1984 campaign, when he became the NFL's all-time single-season rusher with 2,105 yards. He's gained 1,136 yards on 267 carries this year.

Robinson said of Allen, who has rushed for more than 100 yards in each of his last eight games: "I love seeing him and seeing him play. But I'll probably be tired of seeing him by about the second quarter."

Flores said of Dickerson and Allen: "I don't think they're similar in styles, but they're similar in production. Dickerson's a power runner with great speed. Marcus is more of a slasher. We use Marcus a lot differently."

The Raiders and Rams have played only four times previously, with the last meeting a 37-31 Raiders' victory in 1982 at the Los Angeles Coliseum. That was the first game between the clubs following the Rams' shift to Anaheim from the Coliseum and the Raiders' move south from Oakland.

The Rams have won just once, a 20-14 decision in 1977.

The Rams will be facing a team that has had remarkable success in Monday night games. The Raiders are 23-3-1 on Monday night, while the Rams are 12-11.

Hanifan 'should have doctorate in psychology'

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Jim Hanifan says his ordeal as coach of the St. Louis Cardinals might qualify him for another line of work.

"It was a fact that certain guys did not play up to what we thought they should or what they had in the past," Hanifan said Sunday, a day after being fired as the Cardinals completed a 5-11 season. "I should have a doctorate in psychology for the time I spent in (studying) that area."

Hanifan, 52, who was fired along with his entire staff, blamed his ouster mostly on the National Football League team's offensive futility.

"There were two areas that I think really affected us. One was that we were not able to put points on the board," Hanifan said. "We could move the football. We could not move from the 20-yard line in. I feel that permeated the rest of the team."

The second part of the breakdown lay with failures by field-goal units through much of the campaign, Hanifan added.

"When we asked for the three-pointer, we couldn't get that either. The kids were working their tails off and not getting a darn thing," he said. "You get a thing like that, and it snowballs."

Hanifan was fired two hours after a 27-16 defeat Saturday against the Washington Redskins at Busch Stadium.

"It was a shock, the quickness of it more than anything," wide receiver Clyde Duncan said. "The game was hardly over before I knew about it. Nothing's for sure in this business."

Team owner William V. Bidwill described his reasons for the firing in a terse prepared statement.

"I made the decision in the best interest of the team," Bidwell said. "Jim Hanifan is a fine man, a good football coach and a good friend. I wish Jim and his staff well in their future endeavors."

Injuries, including those which dogged All-Pro wide receiver Roy Green throughout the season, also contributed to the Cards' problems.

"From the opening game of the season, Roy was hurt," Hanifan said. "Of the 45 to 48 practices we had during the season, I think Roy was able to participate in only about three of them.

"Another guy that caught 70 (passes) for us last year and who missed eight games was (running back) Ottis Anderson."

Hanifan, a receiver himself in college at California, arrived in St. Louis a dozen years ago as part of Don Coryell's staff.

Trainor kicks Hogs to 18-17 win over Arizona State

SAN DIEGO (AP) — On Wednesday, freshman kicker Kendall Trainor was making everything in practice and an Arkansas booster asked him what he was thinking about.

Fishing, Trainor said.

The next day, Trainor wasn't as effective. So, every time the booster saw him the next 48 hours, there was the reminder: "Think about fishing."

Sunday night, with 21 seconds remaining, Trainor kicked a 37-yard field goal to give the 14th-ranked Razorbacks an 18-17 victory over Arizona State in the Holiday Bowl.

"When I went out there tonight, I was thinking about that big ole bass," Trainor said.

He started the year as a walk-on, but Hatfield made him the fourth Arkansas kicker on scholarship. After Greg Horne missed three field goals in a 15-13 loss to Texas, Trainor became the No. 1 kicker.

He said he was so nervous that he lined up 8 yards behind the center instead of the normal 6¾ yards. Jamie Lueders fielded the low snap on the field goal.

"I said, 'Say a quick prayer and relax,'" Lueders said.

"I said early in the season that I live for pressure, but I was shaking," Trainor said.

A couple of seniors, Bobby Joe Edmonds and Mark Calcagni, made the big plays on offense for the Razorbacks.

It was Calcagni, making only the second start of his career, who threw 24 yards to Edmonds on third-and-nine to set up the second Arkansas touchdown. That TD came when Calcagni lured cornerback Eric Allen to him and then pitched to Edmonds, who went 17 yards down the right sideline.

Calcagni's two-point conversion made it 15-14 with 9:37 to play but Kent Bostrum's 28-yard field goal put ASU back on top 17-15 with 5:23 remaining.

ARKANSAS STARTED from its 20 and Calcagni-to-Edmonds worked for 20 yards and a first down at the ASU 39. Eight plays later, Trainor kicked the winner.

Edmonds didn't start because he missed three practices last week after his grandmother was killed in a car accident.

"She was someone I wanted to share this with," Edmonds said. "I couldn't physically, but I know I did mentally and spiritually.

"Any individual who cared for a loved one who passed away, of course, would dedicate the game that loved one. When she died I lost my incentive for my football career last week," Edmonds said. "It took the spunk out of football for a while. But when the game lights came on, I knew I was ready to play."

"Bobby Joe Edmonds is a great football player," said Coach John Cooper, in his first year at ASU after eight years at Tulsa. "He beat us every year at Tulsa. He showed he's a fine athlete."

Edmonds, offensive player of the game, caught seven passes for 93 yards and carried seven times for 43 yards.

Cooper is 0-9 against Arkansas.

"It's not a jinx, not at all," he said. "It didn't matter who we were playing. I thought we should have won the ball game."

All-American safety David Fulcher of ASU said the game should not have come down to late field goal, commenting, "They did what they had to do at the end and we didn't."

Cooper was upset that ASU failed to connect on a pass to Paul Day inside the Arkansas 25 with three seconds remaining. When that failed, Bostrum was far short on a 59-yard attempt.

"I thought I had enough leg," Bostrum said. "It was high enough and on line. I did the best I could."

His 47-yard field goal put ASU on top 3-0 in the first quarter, but Arkansas went 80 yards in 16 plays for a 7-3 lead. Fullback Derrick Thomas covered the final 9 yards on third-and-four.

ASU HAD to settle for Bostrum's 22-yard field goal in the second quarter although the Sun Devils had a first down at the Arkansas 4. Two running plays against a defense that did not give up a rushing touchdown to a Southwest Conference opponent, and a pass knocked down by Nick Miller, forced the kick.

ASU took the lead late in the second quarter after a fourth-and-one pass by Arkansas failed at the Sun Devils' 48. From the 16, Jeff Van Raaphorst found Aaron Coxin the end zone. Van Raaphorst completed a two-point conversion pass to Vince Amoia.

Arkansas linebacker David Bazzel said he had no doubt Trainor's kick was good.

"We have had trouble with kicking for five years," he said. "Andy Upchurch and I were holding hands when he kicked it. After five years we finally got a kick when we needed it.

"When Bostrom kicked it, my heart almost stopped. It landed in the end zone. If he had made it, I would have had a heart attack."

Sweden claims second straight Davis Cup crown

MUNICH, West Germany (AP) — Australian Open champion Stefan Edberg overcame Michael Westphal 3-6, 7-5, 6-4, 6-3 Sunday to give Sweden its second consecutive Davis Cup title with a dramatic 3-2 victory over West Germany in the international team tennis competition.

Sweden retained the title it won last year over the United States. It's first Davis Cup championship came 10 years ago with a victory over Czechoslovakia, and the Swedes lost to Australia in the 1983 final.

Earlier Sunday, Wimbledon champion Boris Becker evened the score for West Germany in the five-match series at 2-2 when he defeated French Open winner Mats Wilander 6-3, 2-6, 6-3, 6-3.

Westphal, ranked 51st in the world, appeared to be taking West Germany to its first Davis Cup title when he captured the opening set against Edberg, the 19-year-old Australian Open champion who is ranked fifth in the world on the Hewlett-Packard-ATP computer.

But Edberg rallied to break Westphal's booming serve in the 12th game of the second set to level the score.

The Swede trailed again in the third set after dropping his service in the opening game, but came back to take the lead and never looked back.

Wilander put Sweden ahead on Friday by winning the opening singles against Westphal. Becker defeated Edberg to even the score, but Sweden regained the lead when Wilander and Joakim Nystrom won Saturday's doubles against Becker and Andreas Maurer.

Westphal appeared capable of creating a major upset when he broke Edberg in the sixth game to take the first set convincingly.

Edberg broke Westphal in the sixth game of the second set, but the West German immediately broke back.

Edberg saved two game points as the 12th game went to five deuces, then broke Westphal to win the set 7-5 and level the match.

The turning point of the match came in the sixth game of the third set. Edberg stretched to reach a cross-court shot by Westphal. The West German misjudged the ball and let it go by him, only to see it bounce just inside.

Westphal then dropped his service to allow Edberg to level at 3-3. The Swede, attacking Westphal's weaker second serve, broke the West German again in the 10th game to win the set.

He dominated Westphal in the fourth set, breaking the German in the eighth game and then held his own service to win the last game at love and give Sweden the title.

Westphal fired 23 aces past Edberg, but was too inconsistent in the final stages of the match to threaten the Swede. Edberg served 13 aces but was devastating at the net.

Becker gave Wilander a taste of what was to come when he served two aces in winning the opening game of the match.

Becker appeared untroubled by a hip injury he sustained in training several days ago. He received ultrasonic treatment and pain-killing tablets shortly before the match, but fired 14 aces on the fast carpet surface and looked in top shape, except in the second set.

Becker was especially effective in the last set, coming out of the locker rooms following the 10-minute break after the third set to race to a decisive 3-0 lead without dropping a point.

"I was under more pressure because I was playing for West Germany and not only for myself," Becker said after the match.

Wilander squandered two game points after being taken to deuce by Becker in the sixth game of the first set. A linesman then called a foot fault and Wilander was clearly upset as he netted a backhand after a rare rally to drop his service and give Becker a 4-2 lead.

Becker served out the set at love to take the lead.

Wilander started the second set aggressively, repeatedly charging the net for winning volleys. The Swede broke Becker for the first time in the second game of the second set when the West German star double-faulted twice in a row.

Wilander struggled in the fifth game, but saved two game points to hold his serve and take a 4-1 lead.

In the next game, Becker stumbled and fell to the ground and West Germany's non-playing team captain Wilhelm Bungert rushed onto the court, fearing that Becker might have aggravated his injury.

Becker quickly got up and held his serve, but failed to win a single point in the next two games, dropping his service at love in the eighth game as Wilander wrapped up the set 6-2 to level the match.

The West German appeared dejected and troubled as he missed several easy shots at the start of the third set. As Becker muttered to himself and shook his head, Wilander held his service to take a 1-0 lead.

A turning point for Becker came in the next game when he stretched to full length to return a stop volley by Wilander that dropped close to the net. Becker won the point and received a thunderous ovation from the capacity crowd of 13,000 at Munich's Olympic Hall.

Dollar loses

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar posted marginal losses and gains in thin trading today on European currency exchanges winding down for the holiday season. Gold opened lower but showed signs of picking up in a quiet market.

Dealers said potential gains prompted by figures showing stronger fourth-quarter U.S. economic growth were canceled out by rumors of a reduction of U.S. interest rates.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar was virtually unchanged at 202.80 yen, compared with Friday's 202.78 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at 202.88 yen.

In London, the British pound rose to $1.4258, compared with $1.4245 Friday.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Friday:

—2.5108 West German marks, down from 2.5185

—2.1128 Swiss francs, up from 2.112

—7.7035 French francs, down from 7.7275

—2.8303 Dutch guilders, down from 2.8375

—1,713 Italian lire, down from 1,717.25

—1.3946 Canadian dollars, down from 1.396

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $324.60 a troy ounce, compared with late Friday's $325.70. At midmorning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $325.75.

In Zurich, the bid price for gold was $324.80, down from $326 late Friday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell 24 cents to close at a bid $325.17.

In New York on Friday, gold rose $1.60 to close at $325.90.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $5.84 a troy ounce, down from Friday's $5.89.

Gasoline prices fall

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Plummeting wholesale gasoline prices forced a modest drop at the pump during the past two weeks, reversing a three-month trend toward higher retail prices, an oil industry analyst said Sunday.

A survey of 14,000 service stations nationwide showed retail prices fell .22 cents per gallon during the two-week period, compared with a wholesale price drop of 1.42 cents per gallon, analyst Dan Lundberg said.

Lundberg attributed domestic wholesale price decreases to plunging international crude oil prices that prompted refiners and suppliers to sell off inventories quickly in case the downward trend continues.

"In this environment, gasoline and heating oil and the products made from crude oil have been living an economic life of their own," he said.

The small drop in consumers' cost "means that the dealers have held their prices and in fact, during the past two weeks, have increased their markup by 1.2 cents (a gallon)," he said.

"They (wholesalers and retailers) are not marching quite to the same drummer."

The price decrease interrupts a three-month upward trend that began in September, Lundberg said. The increase had been brought on by federal requirements to reduce lead in gasoline by Dec. 31 from a half-gram per gallon to a tenth of a gram, he said.

Gasoline with a lower lead content is more expensive to produce.

Lundberg's latest twice-monthly survey showed the average per-gallon price at self-serve pumps was $1.09 for regular leaded, down 0.23 cent; $1.17 for regular unleaded, down 0.18 cent; and $1.29 for premium unleaded, down 0.09 cent.

At full-service pumps, which Lundberg says account for less than a quarter of the market, prices were $1.31 per gallon for regular leaded, down 0.17 cent; $1.38 for regular unleaded, down 0.16 cent; and $1.45 for premium unleaded, up 0.04 cent.

Overall, prices were $1.212 per gallon during the two weeks just ended, compared with $1.2142 during the previous two weeks, Lundberg said.

During 1985, prices rose an average of 6.51 cents per gallon, he added.

Pasta people

Ike Rocca, left, and his mother Mafalda check the homemade gnocchi at their pasta factory in Ambridge, Pa. recently. Three Rocca brothers, all unemployed steel workers, took their parents old world recipes and started their company three years ago. They are now hoping to gross close to $5 million in 1986 from their business.

Leak shuts down nuclear plant

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — A leak inside the reactor at the Rancho Seco nuclear power plant forced officials to shut it down Sunday, a plant spokesman said.

The leak, estimated at 20 gallons per minute, was discovered at 4:41 p.m., and officials declared an "unusual event."

The leak, which involved water used to cool the reactor, was confined to the reactor building and the cause was under investigation.

Personal income up

Biggest advance in seven months

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans' personal income rose 0.6 percent in November, the biggest advance in seven months, while their spending soared a sharp 0.9 percent, the government reported today.

The rise in consumer spending followed a big 1.4 percent decline in October, which had been the largest drop in spending since May 1960. The October drop was blamed on weak demand for new autos following two months of strong sales spurred by attractive cut-rate financing deals.

The November rebound was likely to lend encouragement to those looking for consumer spending to gain strength during the important Christmas selling season.

The important consumer sector accounts for two-thirds of the economy.

The 0.6 percent November income rise was the largest increase since a 0.9 percent rise in April.

The income advance reflected an increase of $6.5 billion in wages and salaries, up from a $4.5 billion October increase.

Payrolls at U.S. factories were up by $1.7 billion in November, slighlty better than October as the employment level and hourly earnings were both up. U.S. manufacturing has been weak for most of the year as domestic producers have suffered from intense foreign competition.

Wagner & Brown bid rejected by MidCon

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

MidCon Corp. has rejected a hostile $2.7 billion takeover attempt, and plans to buy back as much as 24 percent or 10 million shares of its own stock.

In announcing the board's decision, the company called the offer, by WB Partners, a partnership between Wagner and Brown of Midland, and Freeport-McMoRan, Inc., of New Orleans, hostile and highly conditional, and said the company found the tender to be "unfair and not in the best interest of MidCon or its shareholders," according to MidCon spokesman Ken Smith.

Smith added directors were told by company lawyers that the offer was of questionable legality, and totally illusory, particularly in its lack of financing.

To prevent the hostile takeover, MidCon plans to begin a swap offer for as many as seven million shares, paying $50 cash, $10 face amount of 12 3/4 percent senior subordinated notes due 1993, and $15 in an adjustable-rate convertible cumulative preferred stock. The offer includes rights to buy an additional three million shares.

Furthermore, MidCon directors instigated a poison pill defense that allows owners of a new issue of preferred stock, in the event of a merger proposal that isn't approved by MidCon directors, to convert their shares into equity of the surviving company.

The partnership of Freeport-McMoRan, Inc. and Wagner & Brown, had offered $62.50 per share for MidCon's 41.5 million shares of outstanding common stock, and $1,488.10 for each $1,000 face amount of MidCon's $100 million of 10.25 percent subordinated convertible debentures due 2009.

News last week of the offer drove MidCon stock to $63.375, but the stock slipped later in the week, to close at $61.5 on Friday.

Joel Reed, chief financial officer with Wagner and Brown, said that the company has no comment on MidCon's response until they have a chance to review the documents regarding the offer.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Texaco-Pennzoil talks postpone court action

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP) — A federal judge has indefinitely postponed action in a bid by Texaco Inc. to win court protection while it appeals the $11.1 billion judgment won by Pennzoil Co., saying that both sides were seeking to reach a settlement.

Neither side would comment Friday on the progress of negotiations toward an out-of-court settlement of the case, which arose when Getty Oil Co. dropped a merger deal with Pennzoil and was acquired by Texaco.

U.S. District Court Judge Charles Brieant Jr. continued a temporary restraining order issued earlier in the week prohibiting Pennzoil from attaching liens on Texaco property in connection with the Texas court decision that awarded Pennzoil the record damage verdict.

He said lawyers for both sides had informed him that their clients were "still having discussions with each other looking towards the amicable settlement and disposition of all the underlying litigation."

U.S. company gets Japanese phone contract

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Northern Telecom Inc. has been awarded a contract worth more than $250 million over seven years to supply a Japanese telephone network with digital switching systems, officials said.

The agreement with Nippon Telegraph & Telephone Public Corp. calls for the first shipment in 1987. The contract is to run through 1993.

The pact is the single largest supply agreement Nippon has signed with a non-Japanese company, a company spokesman said Friday.

Warnaco directors approve modified buyout

BRIDGEPORT, Conn. (AP) — Warnaco Inc. says its independent directors have approved a modified leveraged buyout of the apparel maker by a management-led investor group.

The group is offering a combination of cash and discount bonds with a total face value of $405.6 million.

Warnaco makes a wide variety of apparel, including Hathaway shirts, White Stag sportswear and Warner's intimate apparel.

Women make 64 percent of what men earn

NEW YORK (AP) — Working women now make an average 64 percent of what men earn, compared with 60 percent five years ago, according to Working Woman magazine's seventh annual salary survey.

However, the current gap is the same as it was in 1955, Working Woman said in its January editions.

The magazine also found that men earn more than women do when they are doing "women's work" — but, at the same time, women are paid more when they are in male-dominated professions.

More toys aimed at black children available

NEW YORK (AP) — Black parents seeking toys specifically created for black children had more choices than ever before this Christmas.

Among them are "Sun-Man," a black male action figure, and Huggy Bean, billed as the world's first black character doll. Also available is "Rise 'N Fly," a board game that teaches children black history and culture.

The 4.92 million black children under the age of 10 represent 16 percent of the total child population in that age group and 18.5 percent of all blacks in America, according to Olmec Corp., maker of Sun-Man.

Shareholders approve sale of Evening News

DETROIT (AP) — Shareholders in the Evening News Association have approved the sale of the media company to Gannett Co. Inc. for $717 million.

Gannett's acquisition of the ENA, which publishes The Detroit News and four other daily newspapers and owns five television stations, including WDVM in Washington, D.C., will be complete by Feb. 15, said Mike Davis, ENA spokesman, on Friday.

Heavy debt could cripple MGM as studio

LOS ANGELES — Turner Broadcasting System has suggested that its heavy borrowing to acquire the MGM-UA Entertainment Co. could cripple its ability to run MGM as a major movie studio.

In a filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission in Washington on Friday, Turner Broadcasting said that MGM's cash flow after the acquisition "would be insufficient to fund new motion picture production by MGM or debt service by Turner Broadcasting."

Stock market loses

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices dropped broadly this morning in moderate trading, and Wall Streeters linked the decline to pessimistic economic news and to corporate money managers skimming gains to improve year-end statements.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials fell 16.97 points to 1,526.03 by 12 noon EST.

The New York Stock Exchange composite index, which measures all listed issues, fell 1.15 to 120.16. The American Stock Exchange index dipped 0.73 to 243.38, reversing an initial rise.

Decliners outran gainers by more than 2-1 on the Big Board, where the volume of shares changing hands totaled 48.98 million in the morning, compared with 71.26 million in the previous session.

The Commerce Department reported today that although Americans' personal income rose 0.6 percent in November, the biggest advance in seven months, their spending soared a sharp 0.9 percent.

General Motors, a blue-chip leader, fell 1¾ to 72¼, reflecting a broad decline among automakers, steel producers, electronics firms and other manufacturers.

Pfizer stock topped the most-heavily traded list on the Big Board, dropping 3⅛ to 49⅞ on volume exceeding 1.33 million shares. Wall Street analysts called the plunge a reaction to reports from London that linked some deaths to the company's anti-arthritic drug Feldene.

Texaco fell ¼ to 30¼ on volume exceeding 693,000 shares. The country's third-largest oil company is attempting to negotiate an out-of-court settlement with Pennzoil, which has won an $11.1 billion judgment against Texaco.

Also traded heavily was Sears Roebuck, down 1¼ to 38 on 507,500 shares. The company issued a statement saying it has no present plants to repurchase Sears shares, spin off or sell major assets, or make any other major restructuring.

On Friday the Dow Jones industrial average slipped .92 to 1,543.00.

But advances outpaced declines by nearly 2 to 1 on the NYSE. Big Board volume totaled 170.27 million shares, against 130.23 million in the previous session.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Confused about withdrawal rules for Keoghs, IRAs? Try these booklets

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I run my own little business and have both a Keogh self-employed retirement plan and an individual retirement account, into which I put the maximum amounts annually. I was delighted to read in your column that "new rules" will allow me to put off making withdrawals from my Keogh and IRA until April 1 following the year in which I reach age 70 1/2. That will keep my retirement funds tax sheltered longer.

My delight turned to dismay, when my accountant said you're crazy. He states I have to start Keogh and IRA withdrawals no later than Dec. 31 of the year in which I become 70 1/2. He also disputes some of the other things you have written about Keoghs and IRAs. However, he has been wrong before.

I'm very confused about this whole subject. Where can I get straight information about Keoghs and IRAs?

A. For openers, the statement in the previous column was correct. The new withdrawal rules apply to Keogh and IRA participants who turn 70 1/2 in 1985 or later. The mailbag shows there is much confusion about withdrawal provisions and the multitudinous other rules governing IRAs and Keogh plans. So many questions on these complicated aspects keep coming in that is impossible to answer them all in this column.

Doyle

So, arrangements have been made to provide readers with the best, easy-to-understand literature I have seen on this subject.

Readers can obtain copies of booklets, "IRA Owner's Guide" and "An Updated Guide to Keoghs" by writing to Fidelity Investments, 82 Devonshire Street, Mail Zone I-36D, Boston, Mass. 02109. Mark your envelope "Attention Retirement Guides."

By using that rather complicated address, you'll be assured you won't end up on a mailing list and, as is always the case with letters to this column, your name and address will be kept confidential.

• • •

Q. I like the new arrangement through which people with individual retirement account and Keogh plan can recalculate they amount the must withdraw each year after passing age 70 1/2, based on the participant's life expectancy or the joint life expectancy of the participant and his or her beneficiary.

As you have pointed out, by doing this, a person will not outlive his or her IRA and/or Keogh plan.

But where can I find a table listing the minimum amounts that must be withdrawn each year in order to satisfy the Internal Revenue Service? I have asked at the mutual fund where I have my IRA and at the bank where my husband has his IRA and Keogh. No help!

A. You'll find the full set of individual and joint life expectancy tables on which to base those withdrawals in IRS Publication 575, "Pension and Annuity Income." Get a copy from your local IRS office.

Many IRA and Keogh plan sponsors do the minimum withdrawal calculations automatically or upon request. Others, such as the mutual fund and bank you queried, don't and leave that chore up to IRA and Keogh participants.

Do your arithmetic carefully and make sure you withdraw at least the minimum amounts required. If you under withdraw, the revenooers will hit you with tax equal to 50 percent of the amount you should have taken out.

• • •

Q. I became 70 1/2 in 1985. I know I will have to withdraw a fraction of the money in my individual retirement account by April 1, 1986. Should I figure how much I must withdraw, based on how much I have in the IRA at that time?

A. No. The annual minimum withdrawal from an IRA or Keogh plan must be calculated on the balance in the account as of Jan. 1 of the year in which the participant reaches age 70 1/2.

For you, that means Jan. 1, 1985. Divide the value of your account on that date by your life expectancy or the joint life expectancy of you and your IRA beneficiary and you'll know how much you have to take out of the account no later than next April 1.

Then, each subsequent year, do the calculation again, based on your revised life expectancy or the joint life expectancy.

Instead of socks, ties, or fluffy toys try these gifts with a financial flair

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK — Having reached the end of your wits but not of your shopping list, you might consider these practical financial products, all of which fit in an envelope, as possibilities for Christmas giving.

One drawback. A greeting card announcing the gift will have to suffice, because the gifts themselves might take weeks of processing. In each instance, however, the wait might be worth it — and might even be counted in extra value.

For the older person: a printout of Social Security benefits.

Millions of people approaching retirement consider it a tossup as to which is more difficult — the prospect of retirement itself or the job of determining what benefits will be paid.

It can be worked out, although some people claim the effort took weeks from their lives. And some of the information also can be obtained from the Social Security Administration.

But for $10 you can save some person in your family a lot of trouble, and surprise them with a remarkably detailed accounting and explanation of benefits, based on data from the Social Security people themselves.

The report includes a person's history of payments to Social Security; estimates of current benefits, including those to dependents, if disabled; retirement income for the individual and spouse; and eligibility for Medicare.

The offer is made by Benefacts Inc., which compiles employee benefit estimates for some of the nation's most prominent corporations, and which has a contract with the Social Security Administration.

The contract allows Benefacts access to individual Social Security records on receipt of a signature card.

For an order form, write to Benefacts Inc., 300 East Joppa Road, Baltimore, Maryland 21204. They will send the material to be filled out. When it is returned to them, they will search the records and provide the printout.

For the young adult homeowner: an addition to fire insurance.

With inflation having subsided, many homeowners have been lulled into the notion that they are fully insured. Many are not. At 3.5 percent inflation, for example, the $90,000 house becomes the $97,400 house in just two years.

In many areas, the cost of giving a $10,000 gift of additional home insurance isn't as high as you might believe. It might be argued that the basic insurance is costly — but the additions are less so.

In one New York suburban area the rule of thumb is $60 for each additional $10,000 of insurance. In some areas the cost might be considerably less, and in some it will be higher.

For the youngster: a savings bond, or a small number of shares in a blue-chip corporation. These are gifts that grow with the youngster.

Most banks can process your application for bonds, and some can handle your request for stocks. The price, of course, will depend on the stocks you choose. Or, if you prefer, the the recipient chooses.

Many blue-chip companies offer membership in their dividend reinvestment plans for those who own at least two shares. Thereafter, the shareowner can invest small amounts — as little as $5 — directly with the company each month or quarter. Brokerage fees are insignificant or absent altogether.

The beauty of this gift is that it grows with the youngster and with the country. It has been demonstrated that while the shares of good companies fall from time to time, they at least grow with the economy over the long term.

More chestnuts may be roasting if fungal blight is vanquished

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — The same sort of natural fungicide that lets European chestnut growers ship billions of pounds of the Christmas treat each year may help U.S. researchers revitalize groves of the majestic trees that once dominated the eastern United States.

A fungal disease known as chestnut blight wiped out an estimated 3.5 billion American chestnut trees from 1904 into the 1950s. Nearly all of the trees in the United States were devastated, except in western Michigan.

It was there that scientists found a virus that limited the effects of the disease-causing fungus, and it is that virus that now may mean the return of healthy trees where only roots remain, said Dennis W. Fulbright, associate professor of plant pathology at Michigan State University.

"We're trying to find strains that will grow in the tree, not kill it, and spread the weaker fungus," Fulbright said this week. "We're learning a whole new way of controlling plant diseases by looking at the disease-causing agent, instead of making the plant itself more resistant."

The American chestnut is a relative of the European tree that produces the nuts often roasted for holiday celebrations. Fulbright said European chestnut groves also had problems with blight, which were solved in a similar manner.

"European groves were devastated in the 1930s, '40s and '50s," he said. "But then some recovering groves were noticed in the late '50s."

In Europe, he said, nature apparently beat researchers to the punch, spreading the disease-limiting virus before scientists identified it and began using it actively.

If the current effort to stop chestnut blight succeeds, he said, the same approach may be applied to other fungus-caused plant diseases, such as Dutch elm disease and peach canker.

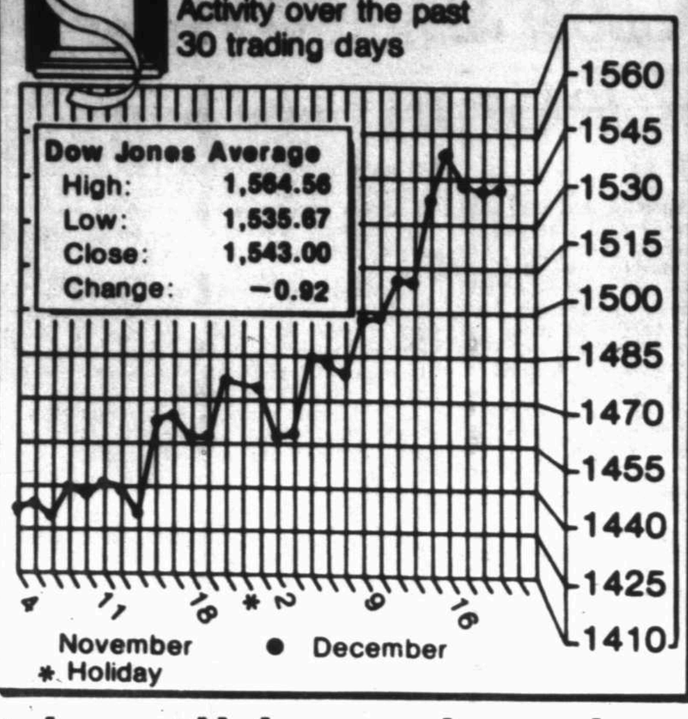
MARKET REPORT

Activity over the past 30 trading days



It's will be a lonely Christmas for bears

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — It is shaping up as a lonely Christmas for the bears of the financial world.

The past few months have been harsh times for any financial adviser or money manager who was pessimistic about the market outlook. Stock and bond prices have shown so much strength that just about everyone on Wall Street seems to see a rosy outlook for 1986.

Nevertheless, a few notable dissenters argue that the mood could change considerably in the months ahead. With no intention of dampening your holiday spirits, they are hereby given a chance to speak their piece.

"Following a four-year bull market in bonds, a 3½-year bull market in stocks, and an economic recovery that is over three years old, we believe 1986 will witness the beginning of some rough weather in both the financial markets and the economy," said Henry Gailliot, senior vice president of Federated Research Corp., a large investment management firm.

Similarly, Wright Investors Service of Bridgeport, Conn., argues: "After 3½ years and a doubling of stock prices, it is a lot to ask of this bull market to proceed through 1986 without a significant correction. The stock market is currently at an extreme of overvaluation not seen since late 1980.

"The typical bull market lifespan is around 30 months. The 1982-85 bull market, now closing in on 40 months' duration, is already one of the longest since World War II."

Lawrence Heim, publisher of an advisory letter in Portland, Ore., recently issued a report expressing concern over what he sees as a "breakdown" of commodity prices that could be the precursor of other economic and financial woes.

"I'm a bull on the stock market, in the sense that it can still go a lot higher," Heim said Friday. "But when it does finally top out, a serious decline could happen."

The market showed few signs of faltering in the past week. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials reached a new high on Monday and closed out the week at 1,543.00, up 7.79 from the previous Friday.

The New York Stock Exchange composite index rose .49 to 121.32. Big Board volume averaged 153.93 million shares a day, against 165.48 million the week before.

Before anyone writes them off as Scrooges, it should be noted that none of the pessimists cited above is totally gloomy. Heim says it is evident that government policymakers are aware of the kind of danger he sees, and have shifted to trying to stave off deflation rather than inflation.

Wright analysts say they are'ot "forecasting an economic Armageddon." The firm describes its policy as "very cautious for the short to intermediate term but positive for the longer term."

In forecasting bear markets for stocks and bonds starting in 1986, and a recession beginning in late 1986 or 1987, Gailliot contends, "this period of adversity could Se the stage for a major buying opportunity in stocks and bonds."

He says the next recession could have some important beneficial side effects in the process of reducing inflation and interest rates.

"If inflation appears to be in process of being tamed on a long term basis and interest rates have returned to levels that are normal," he concluded, "the next bull market in stocks could be the big one, because it will begin without the baggage of high interest rates."

Turner may have trouble swallowing MGM-UA

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Turner Broadcasting System has suggested that its heavy borrowing to acquire the MGM-UA Entertainment Co. could cripple its ability to run MGM as a major movie studio.

In a filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission in Washington on Friday, Turner Broadcasting said that MGM's cash flow after the acquisition "would be insufficient to fund new motion picture production by MGM or debt service by Turner Broadcasting."

The filing also said that MGM suffered "a substantial loss" for the quarter ended Nov. 30, 1985.

Turner Broadcasting's difficulties in swallowing MGM, in a $1.5 billion takeover announced in August, have been known. The filing, however, was the strongest statement yet of the challenges that Turner would face in trying to run MGM.

To raise money for the purchase, Turner has said that it was willing to sell any part of MGM except its film library. The film library was the primary reason for the acquisition because it would provide programming for Turner's superstation in Atlanta, WTBS-TV.

Turner said in the filing that if it did not sell MGM's production and distribution assets, it would run them itself. But it added, "Turner will remain in the motion picture business only if the cash flow generated from such business after the initial period is sufficient to fund future financing needs."

Because of the heavy debt assumed during the acquisition, MGM would have to rely on financing from "third parties" rather than internal funds or bank loans, the filing said. This "could result in fewer pictures being produced each year, and may restrict MGM's ability to attract successful independent producers," the statement said.

"This just focuses on how leveraged it is, and how poorly the company is doing," said Dennis I. Forst, an entertainment analyst at Seidler Amdec Securities in Los Angeles.

"The pluses it has going for it are that Turner wants to buy it badly, and Kerkorian wants to sell it badly, and Drexel says it is confident of raising the money," Forst said, adding that the deal is not a shoo-in.

Ted Turner, the chairman of Turner Broadcasting, has been the driving force behind the acquisition, while Kirk Kerkorian, the financier, has been eager to sell MGM and to buy back its United Artists subsidiary. Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. has been trying to raise the money for the deal, motivated in part by the fat fees it would collect.

MGM has been having a difficult time, and in the fiscal year ending Aug. 31 it lost $115.8 million. In the final quarter of that period, it lost $49.5 million, partly because of a legal settlement.

The new Sylvester Stallone film, "Rocky IV," was expectd to buoy earnings, but the film was released too late to have much impact on the recent period in which the SEC filing forecast a substantial loss.

John Handcock buys Sutro & Co.

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Sutro & Co., the West's oldest brokerage firm, has been sold to a subsidiary of John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co., the firm has announced.

Sutro Chief Executive Ross Cobb said Friday that the two company's operations will remain independent. The only change is that the two companies can help each other find retail customers and corporate finance clients, he said. The sale price was not disclosed.

Former Sutro employees have reported a high rate of turnover in the sales staff recently as rumors that the firm was losing money spread.

The large lighted tree provides a dramatic backdrop to the house and decorated tree in front at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Ewan, 3102 Stanolind St.

An Aggie Santa Claus spends his last few days before Christmas watching a videotaped rerun of Texas A&M's win over University of Texas. This window was designed by Mr. and Mrs. Robert Phile, 3117 Stanolind.

Jerry Mennenga/Reporter-Telegram

This scene of a bicycle rider waving to passersby decorates the house of Mr. and Mrs. Clem Roberts, 3110 Stanolind St.

Lights fantastic

"Joy" was the beginning. Then it spread to the window. This year the neighborhood joined the movement.

The 3100-3200 block of Stanolind has turned into a holiday paradise, each house decorated with a different Christmas scene. Some homeowners dressed up a window, others turned the yard or outside of the house into glowing scenes of warmth and cheer.

Leading the group is Mrs. Robert Phile, 3117 Stanolind, who put out the red garland spelling the word "joy" on a brick wall of the house and shining a light on it not long after she moved to Midland nine years ago. Two years ago, she drew attention with the Lee Rebel Santa Claus in her front window in recognition of the Rebels' first football team in the championships.

This year, it's an Aggie Santa Claus watching a videotaped rerun of A&M University's "beating" of University of Texas.

She started decorating the front window five years ago, and each year more homes on the block added to the scene. Last year, it was 25 homes out of 26, she said.

"We've got the best Christmas street in town," she would say after looking at other parts of Midland. To ensure that everyone would get into the spirit, Mrs. Pfile in November sent a letter to everyone on the block suggesting they all participate.

"We had several new people," she said, "and the regulars have given a little extra. The whole block this year is spectacular."

The Aggie window reflects her undying affinity for the school. Mrs. Pfile said her love for the school ranks second only to that of Clayton Williams. Her husband, two children, son-in-law, nephew and his wife all graduated from A&M. And her youngest son is now a student there.

For the display she took items from her Aggie bathroom, obtained an extra-large sweatshirt from the school, and set up the window so Santa would be watching the Cotton Bowl game. Her husband edited the videotape, which runs 4½ hours, and set up a small stove. Paul T. Brown of Midland loaned his Aggie band boots for Santa.

The tree is strung with "cotton balls" which her husband picked at a farm south of Midland.

Her ideas for the window come easily. "They are my only talent," said Mrs. Pfile with a laugh. "My father was a professional artist and my mother was very creative."

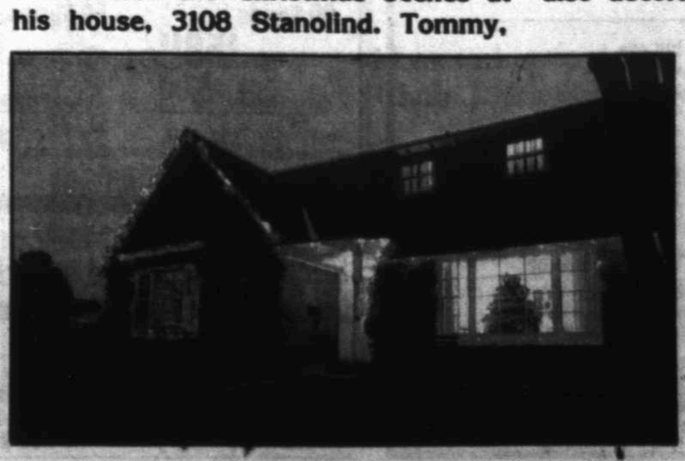
Tommy Craddick, 12, designed and constructed the Christmas scenes at his house, 3108 Stanolind. Tommy, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Craddick, also decorated the house and trees.



Mr. and Mrs. Robert Dyer, 3201 Stanolind, have the edges of their home outlined in Christmas lights with the tree forming the focal point.

Glory checks out of Shamrock Hotel

HOUSTON (AP) — Guests at the 1949 opening of the Shamrock Hotel still talk about the posh event — the fresh shamrocks shipped in from Ireland, the river of champagne and the swimming pool, touted as the world's largest.

But harder times have fallen on the hotel, a monument to the Irish that will close its doors next summer.

The Texas Medical Center last week bought the 1,100-room Shamrock from Hilton Hotels Corp. for $14.9 million. The old hotel has been ailing in recent years from falling occupancy rates.

Medical center officials say they bought the Shamrock for its land — not for the building — and will probably tear the hotel down. The Shamrock's doors will close June 30.

The Shamrock was a home away from home for numerous presidents, stars and foreign dignitaries, and oilman Glenn McCarthy, who built the hotel, says he doesn't know why anyone would want to change the huge old building.

"Edna Ferber attended everything that we had out there at the Shamrock and all the time asking questions from this one and that one and somebody else, making the story she was going to put in the 'Giant.' "
— Glenn McCarthy

"Why would anybody want to buy it for anything else but a hotel?" asked McCarthy. "We've got the finest-built building in the city of Houston there."

McCarthy, a legendary 77-year-old wildcatter, built the Shamrock for $20 million in what is now central Houston. But when the hotel first opened its doors on March 17 — St. Patrick's Day, of course — in 1949, it was considered so far from downtown that the nearby intersection did not have a traffic light.

McCarthy hasn't owned the hotel for more than 30 years — he sold it to Hilton Hotels. But most Texans still link the Shamrock to the man nicknamed "King of the Wildcatters," who was the prototype for the James Dean character in the movie "Giant," based on an Edna Ferber book.

"Edna Ferber attended everything that we had out there at the Shamrock and all the time asking questions from this one and that one and somebody else, making the story she was going to put in the 'Giant,' " McCarthy told The Houston Post. "I thought she was a perfect lady...She told a story that evidently people liked."

McCarthy recalled the days when such prominent figures as presidents Dwight Eisenhower, John F. Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson stayed at the hotel, as well as Gen. Douglas McArthur and Howard Hughes.

But to McCarthy the Shamrock was more than a hotel. It was a symbol of Houston's emergence as an internationally known city.

"It (the hotel) made us a real city," he said. "I lived in this city when it was a cowtown. I love Houston. I went to school here...I tried to learn what I could learn, and for that I was trying to pay back for what they helped me do."

Tarpon Inn celebrates centennial

PORT ARANSAS (AP) — The species of fish that lent its name to the Tarpon Inn may be scarce these days, but the inn has weathered two hurricanes, a fire and several remodelings to celebrate its 100th birthday next year.

The history of the two-story frame inn with wide porches, built to resemble a Civil War barracks, lies in the 7,000 tarpon scales that line its west wall.

"The guests pay for fame and antiquity rather than luxury," said a hotel clerk.

The tarpon scales were nailed to the walls by anglers who fished in nearby waters for the once abundant trophy. Hanging a tarpon scale with the date the fish was caught and its size became an inn tradition soon after it opened.

The best-known scales belonged to a fish caught by President Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1937. Now, few tarpon are caught in local waters.

The inn was built in 1886 by Frank Stephenson, a boat pilot and assistant lighthouse keeper.

Since then, the inn has gone through a handful of owners and has been rebuilt or renovated numerous times.

Crime sweep of past recalled in Beaumont

BEAUMONT (AP) — Twenty-five years ago, a state investigative team vowed to clean up organized crime in Beaumont and Port Arthur in what some residents say were some of Jefferson County's liveliest days.

The scandal unearthed by the probe brought the ousters of Beaumont and Port Arthur police chiefs, the sheriff and the district attorney and marked the end of an era for the county.

"It was a good time to be a lawyer. You could pick up plenty of clients," said current District Attorney James McGrath, who represented several accused gamblers at the time.

A sweep of vice arrests came in December 1960, two months after the Texas House's General Investigation Committee began investigating complaints into the way the county's grand juries were selected.

In those days the county tolerated gambling, prostitution and other forms of vice that attracted sailors and tourists, a report by the committee said.

"Operating openly, brazenly, and with impunity from law enforcement were gambling, bookmaking, prostitution, liquor law violations and narcotics traffic," the report said.

In October 1960, the committee started an inquiry into Jefferson County's problems. On Dec. 3 and 4, raids closed down a club south of Beaumont and several downtown Beaumont bookmakers in taverns and pool halls.

Beaumont Police Chief James Mulligan, saying "the lid is on," arrested three people for gaming with dominoes and closed down church-sponsored bingo games.

On Jan. 4, 1961 the committee held a hearing in Beaumont on the vice problem.

During his testimony, Sheriff Charley Meyer defended his stance toward vice law enforcement, saying, "You can't stop bookmaking."

He added, "I believe an American citizen should be allowed to enjoy his life pretty much as he pleases, unless that interferes with somebody else's life. If I enforced every law in the books, people would think I was crazy."

During the same probe, District Attorney Ramie Griffin defended prostitution as "necessary to protect our wives and daughters from rape."

The state probe uncovered payoffs of thousands of dollars to public officials who looked the other way.

Testimony and evidence in the hearing showed the police chiefs of Beaumont and Port Arthur had accumulated considerable wealth, as far as public servants go. The Port Arthur police chief had four houses, one of them fully paid for, and had received $65,000 in campaign contributions despite the face that he held an appointive, not elective, job.

Workers 'maintain' Christmas spirit

By ELIZABETH CAMPBELL

HALTOM CITY, Texas (AP) — Bent bicycle frames, old handlebars and tires will brighten Christmas for more than a dozen children, thanks to an informal Santa's workshop at a Haltom City medical center.

Two maintenance workers at Twin Oaks Medical Center adopted Santa Claus' habits and are building bicycles from donated parts to deliver to children on Christmas Eve.

Wendell Thomas and Don Wood, both of Fort Worth, said they opened their workshop to the Christmas spirit about a month and a half ago.

"The whole idea started at a meeting when one administrator said we ought to do something for Christmas other than give each other paperweights," Thomas said.

"I started thinking about it. I put out a memo asking employees for junk bicycle parts: old tires, seats, pedals, you name it," he said.

Both men said they were overwhelmed at the response. Everyone, it seemed, was willing to donate.

"Somewhere down deep inside of everybody, there is a little piece of Santa Claus," Thomas said.

When the two men aren't busy repairing heating units or unclogging hospital drains, they spend weekends end lunch breaks working to have 15 bicycles and several tricycles ready for the big day.

Like Santa, they hope to have everything finished by Christmas Eve.

Wood said it takes at least eight hours to assemble a bicycle and paint it so it will look like new.

"First you have to strip away the old paint, clean the chain, clean or replace the spokes, and put on new seats and handlebars," he said.

But the work doesn't stop there. Each bike rolls out of the workshop complete with safety reflectors, mag wheels, racing stripes and a personalized license plate that will have each child's name on it.

"Somewhere down deep inside of everybody, there is a little piece of Santa Claus."
— Wendell Thomas, maintenance man

Thomas said when he and his partner began the project, they were flooded with bike parts from employees' garages and workshops.

And Thomas organized a Thanksgiving turkey raffle to raise money to buy more bicycle parts and paint.

The spirit also extended to a Fort Worth K-mart store, where the manager has rounded up and donated handlebars, wheels, seats and tires to the effort.

Joe Figueroa, the store manager, said he liked the idea.

"Whenever they need a part or something, I try to help them out as much as I can," Figueroa said.

"You should see the place," Thomas said, referring to the maintenance workshop at the medical center. "It looks like the warehouse at White's Auto Parts or something."

Thomas said he asked the medical center workers to make suggestions on who should receive the finished bicycles.

Some will be given to the children of hospital employees who are single parents, he said. Others will be donated to The All Church Children's Home in Fort Worth.

The tricycles will be sent to the Women's Shelter in Arlington.

"We weren't expecting any publicity out of this at all," Wood said. "We just want to see a couple of smiling faces at Christmas."

Odessa man, 48, dies after car-pedestrian accident

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A car-pedestrian accident late Saturday night claimed the life of a 48-year-old man in south Odessa.

Hector V. Neito, 411 S. Lee, was pronounced dead about 12:04 a.m. Sunday at Medical Center Hospital by Ector County Peace Justice Jimmy Harris, who ordered an autopsy.

The accident occurred in the 1400 block of South Grant Avenue about 10:53 p.m. Saturday, according to police spokesman Rusty Baker.

Baker said Neito was carried about 100 feet on the hood of the car driven by 22-year-old Traci Allison Till, 3727 Andrews Highway, after being struck near the intersection of South Grant and Odessa.

Officer Bill Rushing, on patrol in the area at the time of the accident, said he slowed as he saw Neito leave the west curb of Grant Avenue and walk into the path of the northbound Till vehicle, said Baker.

According to the police accident report, Neito failed to yield the right-of-way and failed to cross the street at the crosswalk.

Baker said Rushing reported Neito walked into the path of the car and that the color of his clothing made it difficult to see him in the street.

Thrown rocks damage vehicles

From Staff Reports

Two drivers reported damage to their vehicles after rocks and gravel were thrown Sunday from an overpass on Interstate 20, the Sheriff's office reports.

Manuel Perez, of San Elizario, reported $700 worth of damage to his front windshield on the driver's side after rocks were thrown at his truck from the overpass at I-20 and Highway 80. Perez told sheriff's officers he was westbound on Highway 80 when the incident occurred about 5 a.m. Sunday.

Dema Dallefeld, of Big Spring, also reported damage to her car from rocks and gravel thrown from an overpass at the 148-mile marker on I-20. Ms. Dallefeld's 1985 Oldsmobile Toronado received $200 in damage to its front windshield and $300 in damage to its body and paint. Ms. Dallefeld told officers her car was hit after exiting an overpass about 4:45 a.m. Sunday. She told officers fog prevented her from seeing anyone on the overpass.

In other police reports, a $13,000 truck was stolen from B & L Equipment on County Road 1300, about one-eighth mile north of I-20. Ronald Ladd of B & L Equipment told Sheriff's officers the 1985 white Chevrolet truck was stolen between 8:30 p.m. Saturday and 2:56 a.m. Sunday after suspects pried a bolt from a gate.

Gunman robs Odessa Stop 'N Go

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A lone gunman held up the Stop 'N Go store at the intersection of Kermit Highway and North Golder Avenue early today and took about $58.

Police spokesman Rusty Baker said the clerk told investigating officers a man entered the store at 2459 Kermit Highway, produced a .22-caliber revolver and demanded money.

The clerk said the gunman, whom he described as being a Hispanic male, about 23 to 24 years old and 5-feet 4 inches tall, ordered him into a back room of the store. When he returned about five minutes later, the clerk told officers, the man had left the store.

The clerk said the man had brown hair, brown eyes, and was wearing a dark-colored ski cap, blue, long-sleeved shirt and khaki pants.

And she has ideas for at least the next five Christmases. "One year he's going to be a chef." Occasionally, she switches ideas in midstream, such as with the Lee Rebel Santa Claus. She was halfway through with the window following another theme when she came up with the idea, and a neighbor told her to "go for it."

Her window displays — and the increasing participation of the block — are drawing more lookers each year. "We have some good friends from the University of Texas who came by and said it was an 'all right' window," Mrs. Pfile said. She occasionally likes to show the "gig 'em" sign to passersby.

"Strangers who are Aggies stop by to say 'Thank you.' "

Although the windows have served as an artistic release for Mrs. Pfile and a way for the neighborhood spirit to spread, there's another reason why this Midland woman spends several days each year putting together her ideas.

"I'm the one getting all the pleasure," she said. "It is so much fun to do."

Smoking awareness has grown since '64

WASHINGTON (AP) — Surgeon General C. Everett Koop's report that smokers are far more likely than non-smokers to need health care continues a government trend toward increased certainty about the health risks of smoking.

Here are some samples of top federal health officials' comments over the two decades since the landmark first report on the subject by Surgeon General Luther Terry.

— In 1964, Terry stirred great controversy when he issued a report calling cigarette smoking a "health hazard (that) far outweighs all other factors" as a cause of lung diseases including cancer.

— In 1965 testimony to Congress, he was more direct, saying: "In my mind there is absolutely no question about the cause-and-effect relationship between cigarette smoking and lung cancer."

— The warning required on cigarette packs in 1966, however, said merely: "Caution: Cigarette smoking may be hazardous to your health." By 1971, that warning said: "Warning: The surgeon general has determined that cigarette smoking is dangerous to your health."

— In 1966, the surgeon general reported substantial increases in deaths from lung cancer, larynx cancer and chronic bronchitis "associated with but not clearly causally related to smoking."

— In 1967, Surgeon General William Huffman Stewart said a new study confirmed the 1964 links between smoking and disease, and his report added that smoking was a probable "cause of death from coronary heart disease."

— In 1972, Surgeon General Jesse L. Steinfeld said carbon monoxide from smokers' cigarettes could be a hazard to non-smokers in small, enclosed areas. He said that although most people might not have prolonged exposure to such a situation, "the fact that such dangerous conditions can develop should sound a warning to us."

— The 1973 surgeon general's report focused on risks to babies of women who smoke during pregnancy.

— In 1979, Surgeon General Julius Richmond called smoking "the single most important environmental factor contributing to early death." He said there was "overwhelming evidence" linking smoking to cancer, heart disease and other diseases.

— Koop, in 1982, said cigarette smoking causes 30 percent of all cancer deaths in the United States. "Cigarette smoking is clearly identified as the chief preventable cause of death in our society," he said, adding that even non-smokers should treat it as a potential public health hazard.

— In 1983, Koop emphasized risks of heart disease for smokers and declared: "The excess mortality experienced by cigarette smokers is beyond challenge."

— Finally, Koop said last year: "We can say again today, with more certainty than ever, that cigarettes are the most important individual health risk in this country, responsible for more premature deaths and disability than any other known agent."

More employers start anti-smoking push

WASHINGTON (AP) — People who smoke are 50 percent more likely to need health care than non-smokers and probably cost their employers $200 to $500 more each year, the surgeon general's annual report on smoking said this week.

Moreover, it said, studies show smokers have more accidents on the job, receive more disability payments, and are absent more often than their non-smoking colleagues.

This year's report, the 17th in the series, focuses on smoking in the workplace. Dr. C. Everett Koop, the surgeon general, said a major conclusion is that cigarette smoking represents, for the majority of American workers, "a greater cause of death and disability than their workplace environment."

It finds also that risks are reduced for individual workers in places where smoking is controlled and exposure to smoke is reduced.

Cancer and chronic lung diseases are responsible for more than a quarter of all deaths each year, Koop said, with 10 million Americans suffering from chronic lung disease.

For those who are exposed to such cancer-causing materials as asbestos or coal dust at work, smoking can create more disease than the sum of the separate exposures, the report said.

"We know that in non-asbestos-exposed populations, smoking increases the lung cancer risk approximately tenfold," Koop said. "The risk is increased more than fiftyfold if the asbestos workers also smoke.

"In other words, for those workers who both smoke and are exposed to asbestos, the risk of developing and dying from lung cancer is 5,000 percent greater than the risk for individuals who neither smoke nor are exposed."

The employee costs of smoking to employers, "as well as consideration for the welfare of their employees," have led a number of businesses to establish anti-smoking programs at the workplace, the report says. Eleven to 15 percent of American businesses, it said, provide smoking reduction programs and more plan them.

The report notes that among men, a substantially higher percentage of blue-collar workers than white-collar workers are cigarette smokers. The differences are less pronounced among women.

Nearly half the men who operate machinery smoke; the rate among professional and technical workers is 26 percent.

Blue-collar workers, male and female, began smoking earlier in life than white-collar workers and there are fewer former smokers among them. More black workers smoke than white workers and fewer quit. But white workers of both sexes are more likely to be heavy smokers, no matter what their jobs.

Other findings in the 516-page report:

— Resources for monitoring the occurrence of occupational lung diseases are not comprehensive and do not include information on cigarette smoking.

— Evidence suggests that, among coal miners, the contribution of cigarette smoking to disabling airflow obstruction in the lungs, substantially exceeds the contribution of coal dust exposure.

— "Both tobacco smoke and some industrial pollutants contain substances capable of initiating and promoting cancer and damaging the (lungs') airways....There is, therefore, an ample biologic basis for suspecting that important interactive effects between some workplace pollutants and tobacco smoke exist."

— "Cotton mill workers of both sexes who smoke have a consistently greater prevalence of bronchitis than non-smokers....At the highest dust levels, cigarette smoke was found to interact with cotton dust exposure to substantially increase the acute symptom prevalence."

Cigarette sales are slipping the the United States as health concerns increase, surveys show, leaving manufacturers scrapping for bigger shares of a static market.

Violence against newsmen curbs reporting abroad

NEW YORK (AP) — Violence directed at journalists doing their jobs nearly doubled in 1985, helping to stop the reporting that many countries do not want to see, the author of a new report says.

Leonard R. Sussman, executive director of Freedom House, a non-partisan national organization devoted to strengthening free societies, said 30 journalists were killed, 13 were taken hostage or disappeared, and 76 were beaten or otherwise injured around the world in 1985.

His organization also found 109 known detentions of journalists in 1985, compared with 72 in 1984. Last year, five journalists were held hostage, and 31 were beaten, bombed, wounded or otherwise harassed.

"It's an extraordinary record. I think overall...violence was up. Obviously, that's a pretty grim scene," Sussman said last week.

But some gains were made in reversing a trend toward licensing journalists in foreign countries, he said, and new assistance was provided for newspeople in physical danger.

He said 30 journalists — half in the Philippines — were killed in 11 countries in 1985, compared with 21 killed in 1984.

"The Philippines was an exception," Sussman said in a telephone interview. "On the one hand, there was a crackdown early in the year (with the killing of several journalists)...yet they kept coming on, being critical to the government and the terrorists.

"You usually don't have those two things in combination."

Censorship increased significantly in Liberia, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, the Philippines, South Africa, Taiwan and Zimbabwe, but was reduced in Nigeria and South Korea, the study found.

In August, Nigeria released journalists who had been jailed by the previous military ruler. In South Korea, 28 editors and reporters were reinstated after having been purged five years ago. However, at least three Korean journalists were tortured in 1985, Freedom House said.

South Africa imposed its harshest censorship in 37 years, the report said.

Poinsettia has progressed from original plant

Hearst News Service

Nothing says "Christmas" quicker or more effectively than red-colored poinsettias. Not that they're all red any more — they also are pink, white, cream and marbled, and dwarfed in size.

Today's poinsettias are scarcely recognizable as descendants of the original, leggy plants that were found growing wild in the mountains of Mexico. Franciscan missionaries found them growing around Taxco, and because they bloomed in December they began using them in their Fiesta de Santa Pesebre, a nativity procession.

Juan Blame, a botanist of the same period, found them growing on the slopes near Cuernavaca. But it wasn't until 1825 that Joel Roberts Poinsett, the first U.S. Ambassador to Mexico and an accomplished botanist, observed them and had some plants sent to his home in Greenville, S.C. Poinsett was a generous man and shared his poinsettias with friends throughout the U.S.

Poinsettias take their name from Poinsett, of course, but botanically they're Euphorbia pulcherrima, and that's how you have to look for them in garden encyclopedias.

Most poinsettia hybridizing in this country has been done by the Ecke family in Southern California. Albert Ecke, newly arrived in the U.S. from Germany via Switzerland, began farming in the Eagle Rock Valley, which is now part of Los Angeles. He sold his farm in 1906 and moved to the area now known as Hollywood. With his son Hans, he began raising fields of fresh glads, mums and poinsettias for the fresh flower market.

In 1919, after the death of Albert and Hans, Albert's second son, Paul, took over the family business. Paul Ecke, now in his 90s, is still active at the Ecke poinsettia ranch near Encinitas, and after a half-century of hybridizing is the one known as "Mr. Poinsettia." The business now is headed by his son, Paul Ecke, Jr.

The poinsettias that the Ecke family started with had smaller flowers than today's hybrids and were somewhat lanky in growth. You can still plant poinsettias directly in the garden if you have a frost-free location. But it's not likely they'll get that large or necessarily bear red flowers.

The "flowers" incidentally, do not have red petals. They have red "floral leaves" or bracts. If you look in the very center of the flowers, you'll find a solitary female flower, surrounded by male flowers, all enclosed in a structure botanists call a cyathium.

But you don't have to be a botanist to enjoy poinsettias. Just take a quick look at them before you make a purchase: the longest-lasting plants will have the little yellow and green knobs in the center just beginning to open.

Here are some ways to use poinsettias for decorations during the holidays:

• In centerpieces for dining table or sideboard. A group of several small ones will help keep the height down, if you don't want a large display. Augment your potted poinsettia with evergreen boughs, grapevine cuttings woven into a wreath, pine cones, ribbons and miniature Christmas ornaments. Combine bright red poinsettias with a red-and-white tablecloth; pink or cream varieties with a pink-light green tablecloth. Or put white poinsettias on a plain green tablecloth.

• Put poinsettias on your fern stands; add ribbon streamers and some sprigs of pine, holly or baby's breath to the pot. A string of tiny, white twinkle lights will add to the effect at night.

• You can use use all sorts of poinsettias on the fireplace mantle. If you have Christmas stockings hanging there, slip a small potted poinsettia into each one.

• Large plants make special Christmas gifts. If you're having an open house, consider ordering several dozen poinsettias to fill a shallow basket so they can be taken home by departing guests.

If you'd like some more information on growing poinsettias at home, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to POINSETTIAS, Bedding Plants, Inc., 210 Cartwright Blvd., Massapequa Park, N.Y. 11762.

Holiday decor homemade

Copley News Service

Holiday decorating can be almost as much fun as the holiday itself, especially if the entire family gets involved.

Think of a theme, make it simple (if there are no artists in the family) and get started now, so you can relax and enjoy the fruits of your labor with a home-baked sugar cookie or two — while everybody else is still frantically untangling their Christmas tree lights.

The Finkus family in Carson, Calif., is well-known for its expertise in decorating. Neighbors and fellow church members say the Finkus home is always decorated to the teeth, and always with a definite theme. And the best part is that the family makes most of the decorations — each year.

Carol Finkus is the unofficial chairman of this major family event, husband David is the support member and children Tim and Stefanie are just about as artsy-craftsy as their mom.

The secret to the success of this undertaking is letting the children do their own thing, even if they make a mess, says a very laid-back Carol, who explains that since Stefanie was 9 or 10 she's been making the Christmas morning coffee cake. Both children have also helped with the holiday baking, which includes more than 20 varieties of cookies and candies, she says.

Christmas decoration themes have varied from glitzy with sequined ornaments to Victorian with lots of velvet. "Another year we did silk roses, and last year everything was blue, lavender and fuchsia with little feathered birds as the motif," says Carol.

This year the family chose an old-fashioned theme with a childhood favorite — the teddy bear — for the motif. For a dress rehearsal of the Dec. 25 event, Stefanie baked gingerbread teddy bears to hang on the tree, next to some wooden bears and toys that have become family heirlooms. As she passes a plate of holiday cookies, Carol suggests adding an extra cupful of flour to most any gingerbread cookie recipe if they're to be hung as ornaments.

"And make the hole in the top before you bake them," she says.

More teddy bears, these freshly cast of terra-cotta clay and painted with family members' names by Carol, serve as napkin rings at a gaily decorated table, complete with Christmas tree plates.

Besides holiday decorations, Carol likes to make porcelain dolls, and since this year's theme celebrates childhood, she's dressed several in holiday clothes to sit under the tree on an antique velvet patchwork quilted tree skirt made by Carol's grandmother.

At the fireplace are stockings quilted and appliqued by Carol's mother.

When the children were young, says Carol, "we allowed them to have their own small tree, as a reward for cleaning their room. It was a great incentive," she laughs.

More traditions include a Christmas eve dinner in which the menu is from a foreign country. "This year will be Germany," says Carol, who adds that Christmas day dinner is usually an English menu, with roast beef and Yorkshire pudding. The family also has a Christmas pudding in which a shilling has been hidden.

"Everybody makes a wish, but the person who gets the coin in their pudding is supposed to have their wish come true," says Carol.

Like Carol Finkus, Kris Kurzawa and Susan McGill look forward to holiday decorating. They start long before Christmas and usually make hundreds of ornaments, for their own homes and for sale at bazaars.

Tree decorations that can also be made into refrigerator magnets are another quick trick for those who like to needlepoint or embroider. Kurzawa says to buy miniature chalkboards and tiny wooden hearts at a craft supply store to use as "frames" and then trim with pieces of ribbons and dried flowers, again using a glue gun.

Living Christmas trees become increasingly popular

Hearst News Service

The notion of decorating and enjoying a living Christmas tree that lives on in the home landscape is becoming increasingly popular as an alternative to cut and artifical trees.

"There's both value to the home landscape and a bit of sentimentality in 'growing on' a tree," according to Dr. Melvin V. Koelling, professor of forestry at Michigan State University. He is the university's contact with Michigan's huge live-Christmas-tree industry.

A live Christmas tree is one that has been dug from the field with roots intact and potted in plastic, fiber or burlap. Typically, it has been grown to be used indoors for a few days and then transplanted outside. It differs from the traditional cut Christmas tree that is severed from its life-supporting root system. While cut trees take up water inside and stay fresh, they cannot be grown on.

The best place to find a live tree is at a nursery or garden center, rather than a Christmas tree lot. Size is critical to the tree's survival. Koelling recommends limiting it to four feet or less since larger trees carry such a massive root ball that they are cumbersome and hard to handle.

Other than size, Koelling believes the other important consideration is how the tree will perform in the yard. Some trees, such as the Scotch pine, are good as cut Christmas trees but marginal as ornamental plants. Species that make good living Christmas trees because they are good indoors and out are the dwarf Alberta spruce, Colorado blue spruce and white spruce.

Yet another element critical to the tree's survival is time indoors and prepping it for outside. Koelling recommends a maximum stay indoors of 10 days; seven is better. Longer periods may either dry out the tree or make it send out new growth that will die outdoors and severely weaken the tree.

An unheated garage or shed is the tree's way station in going in and out of your home. Keep the tree there after purchase until you are ready to bring it in for decorating. And keep it there for two days after Christmas and before planting it in its permanent home.

Now is a good time to dig the tree's hole since the ground hopefully has not frozen hard. The hole should be as wide and deep as the container of the tree. Loosen the soil at the bottom so new roots can easily take hold and grow. Soil dug from the hole should be stored in the garage so it doesn't freeze before planting time. Cover the hole with straw, leaves or other mulch so it stays reasonably soft and easy to work with.

When finally planted, the tree must be taken out of its plastic or fiber container. Simply cut the sides of the container with a sharp utility knife and peel the container away. Do this at the planting site so the root ball is disturbed as little as possible. If the tree has been "potted" in burlap, leave it on. It will decompose and not hinder the root's growth.

Koelling recommends wrapping the tree in burlap or an old bed sheet after planting to reduce the moisture loss it will face in the next two months.

New sensor turns out lights in vacant rooms

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Signs saying "last one out turn out the lights" may not be necessary in the future, according to Energy User News.

The publication reports development of a new ultrasonic personnel sensor for lighting control of areas up to 1,000 square feet that can save as much as 50 percent on lighting.

The unit turns lights on and off by filling the space with ultrasonic sound waves reflected off people within the area, and when no movement is detected the lighting can be shut off within one minute.

DEAR ABBY

Cologne clouds air

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: As I write this, my head is splitting! The reason? Too much perfume and cologne. I can hardly breathe.

A fragrance is a very personal statement. I use it myself, but you can smell mine only if you get within three inches of me. My co-worker's fragrance can be smelled from five feet away, and I am not exaggerating!

I have already asked this co-worker to please tone down the stuff, and he did (yes, the offender is a "he"), but in a few days, he's back at his old level.

Waiting for it to wear off during the day doesn't help. By that time, I already have a headache. (Also, I suspect he replenishes the dose in mid-afternoon.)

If you print this, I'll bet I won't be the only one cutting it out of the newspaper. — CAN'T BREATHE

DEAR CAN'T: I'm on your side. One of the few retail businesses that haven't stunk this Christmas is the fragrance business. With so many celebrities lending their names to perfumes and colognes, the competition is stifling.

Scents make dollars, but whatever happened to communication? Tell the offender, hourly if necessary, that he or she is interfering with your right to breathe.

DEAR ABBY: What do you think of a person who would call her hostess the morning after a beautiful, carefully planned Thanksgiving dinner and say, "I was sick all night. Have any of the other guests called yet to say they were sick, too?" (She was the only one who called, so I'm sure it wasn't anything I served.)

I was hurt and insulted, Abby. I am not a sloppy cook and use only the finest and freshest ingredients. What do the etiquette books say about a situation like this? — HURT HOSTESS

DEAR HURT: To my knowledge, it's not dealt with in etiquette books. Don't judge your guest too harshly. While she may not win a prize for diplomacy, I'm sure her intentions were not to hurt or insult you.

DEAR ABBY: Please alert readers who have had hip or bone replacements that they should advise their dentists.

I was just made aware of the hazards by my own dentist. I have only a pin (or "nail") in my hip, but my dentist had me call my orthopedist for advice.

Before even a routine tooth cleaning procedure, where any bleeding may occur, it is usually advisable to begin using antibiotics. Any foreign object in the body is a prime source of infection.

Abby, please let your readers know. This was news to me. —CAROL FROM MINNEAPOLIS

DEAR CAROL: It will be news to a lot of people. Thank you for sharing.

DEAR ABBY: Please get this in before Christmas. What happened to the days when people in business gave Christmas presents to their customers to show their appreciation?

I remember when my mother used to get pretty wall calendars from her milkman, pharmacist and grocer. She had a hard time deciding which one to put up in her kitchen, they were all so beautiful.

Now, things are the other way around. All year long I patronize the same hairdresser and manicurist, and give them a nice tip to boot, then comes Christmas and I give THEM a present. I think they should be giving ME a present. — BACKWARD IN CHICAGO

(Getting married? Send for Abby's new, updated, expanded booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents) self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Flower arrangements don't have to be extravagant, author says

Associated Press

Though often considered an extravagance, flowers don't have to be, says Fleur Cowles. While florist-supplied blooms can be pricey, especially during the wintery holiday season, there are ways to have your flowers and keep your funds intact, says the well-known author, artist, editor and hostess.

To prove her point, Mrs. Cowles committed her ideas on the practical use of flowers to paper in a book, "Flower Decorations: A New Approach to Flower Arranging." The book not only offers unconventional ideas for using a few flowers in place of a large bunch, but also tells something of her life as a hostess.

In an interview, she recounted one of her favorite escapades in which flowers came to the rescue. "It was 'The Crisis of the Empty Mansion.' The stars were Victor Borge, the Danish pianist, yards of white sheeting and the contents of two flower shops."

Borge had scheduled a dinner party to show off his new mansion, but on the eve of the party, none of the new furniture had arrived.

"I hired a cook and a waiter and enough furniture to seat eight, two trestle tables, one for dining, one for serving, and rented dishes and utensils." She coped with the 50-foot living room by purchasing hundreds of yards of white sheeting which she used to swathe the full-length windows. Then she deployed the flowers.

"The flowers were massed in every conceivable container, the hideous ones we hid with others. We banked flowers around the windows and then trained rented spotlights on them," she recalled.

Shrubs: Low-cost decorations

By ED HUTCHISON
Hearst News Service

There's a wealth of plant material outside many homes that's ideal for low-cost, long-lived holiday decorating. Add to it ribbon and ornaments and the results are even more dramatic.

For indoor decorating, the idea is to use small branches of shrubs and bushes that are colorful because of their needles, bark or berries. A plant that has been in place two years or more likely has some excess growth it could lose for the sake of holiday decorating.

In trees, the pine and spruce families are excellent because of the variety in needle size and color found among the white, blue and Norway spruces and in Austrian, red and Scotch pines. Among evergreens, yews and junipers are good because they are plentiful in the home landscape, grow quickly and usually look a little shaggy from lack of regular pruning.

Some of the less common but especially colorful shrubs are the hollies (Chinese or American), bittersweet and red-barked dogwoods. The hollies, especially the Chinese, have deep, rich glossy-green year 'round leaves and red fruit in clusters. Bittersweet makes up for a lack of winter leaves with brilliant orange-red berries. The dogwood bears neither leaves or berries in the winter but has crimson-red stems.

The key to using landscape material indoors is simple. Take it easy. This is not a time to make up for months or years of neglect in regular shaping or pruning. And be realistic. Don't cut off so many branches from a newly-planted (two years or less) evergreen that it looks younger and less healthy than it is.

The fullest, most colorful growth is usually found at the tip of branches in the evergreen family of pine, spruce, yew, juniper and holly. Dogwood and bittersweet branches grow upright and can be cut almost anywhere on the stem. Snip branches from several plants, rather than just one. Maintain the roundness of other symmetry of the bush by taking branches from all sides rather than the side or back, top or bottom.

One practical use of a minimal amount of cut material is in an informal centerpiece for a table, buffet, mantle, shelf or wide windowsill. Getting the most use out of a few branches is as simple as laying down the longest pieces first, with the stem ends pointing toward the center. These are followed by next shorter stems, and finally the shortest stems, all arranged with ends facing center.

The materials needed to make a centerpiece 24 inches long by 9 inches wide would roughly encompass two multi-stemmed branches 12 inches long, four similar branches 8 inches long and eight branches 6 inches long for the center area. Shrubs and trees in virtually any landscape could easily yield this much material.

This or any similar arrangement with a collection of evergreens creates a nice blend of greens. Several solid-color glass ornaments placed throughout adds accent and gives depth to the arrangement. Narrow (one-inch wide, or less) ribbon threaded through it gives the same effect.

Fresh material brought indoors, especially evergreens, will bleed sap when warmed. Sap is sticky and difficult to remove from furniture. To avoid this, put a sheet of plastic food wrap underneath any greens going on a wooden surface.

Herbs sweeten season

Associated Press

Are you looking for some new table decoration ideas for the holidays? Consider herbal decorations. They have the advantage of tradition, but are not as common as synthetic holiday decor.

Take rosemary, for example. It's been associated with Christmas at least since the 16th century, when it was used as a strewing herb and in incense burned in churches.

Today's rosemary fanciers are just as likely to use it to decorate their homes at Christmas time. They may spray a good-sized branch of rosemary with gold or silver paint and then tie a red ribbon around it as a place decoration. Or, they may choose to display a rosemary pot plant as a table centerpiece.

Herbal wreaths are also enjoying renewed popularity.

Emelie Tolley is an authority on culinary and decorative herbs whose fascination with herbs led her to start "Living with Herbs," a bimonthly newsletter. She says rosemary is only one of many herbs being used to make interesting and unusual Christmas decorations for the home.

It's part of the trend toward living with natural things. Besides rosemary, there are also homemade potpourri, pomander balls and herbal and dried floral wreaths.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Tuesday, December 24, 1985

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Trust your instincts when faced with a difficult choice. Your intuition is excellent. Take a close look at a relationship that does not seem to be working. It may be time to cut loose and start afresh. Better financial backing is coming your way. Greater personal effort will put your career on the fast track. Give even routine tasks your special touch. A combination of creativity and reliability endear you to superiors. Avoid short-term romances. A stable marriage brings the greatest joy. CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: actress Ava Gardner, choreographer Robert Joffrey, dancer Carol Haney, journalist I.F. Stone, billionaire Howard Hughes.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A good day to put the finishing touches on special projects. Others will be happy to help out. Be diplomatic when dealing with your subordinates. Reach beyond what appears to be a limitation.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Quality is more important than ever. Let others reveal their plans before you make any suggestions. Get together with friends and family members who share your delight in this joyous season.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Most of your Christmas preparations have been completed. Relax! Almost everyone is in a festive mood this afternoon. Be discreet at an office party.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): An office party gives you an opportunity to show that you can laugh at your own foibles. Take good-natured kidding in stride.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Family life should be especially rewarding now. Choose partner with care and romance will exceed your wildest expectations! Read between the lines if something in a letter bothers you.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Teamwork is essential at both work and home. Take time to explain your wishes. Domestic squabbles can be avoided if you use more tact.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Others will welcome your leadership today. The financial picture looks brighter when you receive a Christmas bonus. Be careful not to break the bank when celebrating with loved ones!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Take stock of your finances before doing any more Christmas shopping. You do not want to start the New Year in debt. Be more attentive to romantic partner. Things go better than expected.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A friendly discussion with mate or partner will clarify a financial situation. Stick to your own neighborhood when doing last-minute shopping. An older person takes you into his or her confidence.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Remember the true meaning of Christmas and adopt a positive attitude toward a family member who tries your patience. Do not take yourself -- or others -- seriously. Spread good will wherever you go!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A Christmas Eve celebration will put you in the true holiday spirit. Keep an extra gift or two on hand. Accepting a last-minute invitation could help romance or career. Be gracious.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A family gathering will be a big success if you are sensitive to others' feelings. Get loved ones of all ages involved in the special preparations. Work on tomorrow's Christmas dinner.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1 — Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠93 ♡A9 ◇KQ6 ♣AJ10754
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	1 ♡	Dble	1 ♠

What action do you take?
A. — Certainly your club suit is rebiddable, and we wouldn't blame you greatly if you chose to rebid two clubs. However, the fact that West did not make a takeout double at his first turn suggests that partner might have something in spades. We would pass and afford him the opportunity of taking another crack at the opponents.

Q.2 — As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠K1096 ♡QJ4 ◇J872 ♣A6
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
Pass	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
1 ♠	Pass	3 ♣	Pass
3 ♡	Pass	4 ♡	Pass

What action do you take?
A. — So far, you have done nothing to suggest that you have anything more than a minimum 6 points — you have responded at the one-level and taken a simple preference to partner's first suit. It is time to reveal the true strength of your hand. Cue-bid five clubs.

Q.3 — East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQ5 ♡952 ◇AQ87 ♣982
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
Pass	Pass	1 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?
A. — Because of your three quick tricks, it might have been wiser to open the bidding even though you have only 12 points. Now you have no convenient way to show your strength. A jump to two no trump describes the strength and shape of your hand, but you don't want to take that action without a heart stopper. We suggest a temporizing bid of one diamond. Partner's rebid might clear up matters.

Q.4 — Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠8752 ♡AJ3 ◇732 ♣KJ7
The bidding has proceeded:

East	South	West	North
Pass	Pass	Pass	1 ◇
Pass	1 NT	Pass	Pass

What action do you take?
A. — Once in a while, a fool does step in where angels fear to tread. Your side has the balance of power and your hand rates to produce at least three defensive tricks against a club contract. Double. That action is super-safe: you could collect anywhere from 200 to 800 and, if the opponents do succeed at their contract, you won't have doubled them into game.

Q.5 — As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQ103 ♡K98742 ◇A ♣Q6
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	2 ◇	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	3 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?
A. — Three no trump is the lazy man's bid. Although the hand is a partial misfit, your honor cards in partner's suits could be of inestimable value, and three no trump would tend to deny values in his suits. We prefer a bid of three spades, which still leaves partner the option of playing three no trump if he so desires, and is a more encouraging bid.

Q.6 — Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠J73 ♡982 ◇8763 ♣1064
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
2 ♠	Pass	2 NT	Pass
3 ◇	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A. — There are two choices that would qualify you for exile to Siberia: pass, and three no trump. Partner's auction is forcing to game; and your stoppers in the unbid suit are not such that you should contract for no trump with any degree of confidence. You have to choose between three spades and four diamonds. Since partner certainly has at least five spades, we would opt for the former — a 10-trick contract should be easier to make than an 11-trick one, given your motley collection.

Your play to the first trick could decide the fate of the contract! A writer once remarked: "There's no such thing as a blind opening lead, only deaf opening leaders!" Coleman to be released soon

Coleman

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Gary Coleman is to be released from UCLA Medical Center this week, but may not be home in time for Christmas, a hospital spokesman said.

The 17-year-old diminutive star of television's "Diff'rent Strokes" was in good condition Sunday undergoing kidney dialysis and has been outfitted with a portable dialysis unit, said hospital spokesman Victor Mitry.

Coleman who was born with a defective bladder, has been troubled by kidney problems all his life and has had two kidney transplants.

He was admitted to the hospital on Dec. 9.

NEW YORK (AP) — Eric Sevareid is to host a one-hour television special called "Time's Man of the Year" on Sunday, Dec. 29.

A syndicated TV network of 104 stations is to broadcast the special, produced by Reeves Communications.

It is a first-ever look at how Time's editors, writers and correspondents select te Man of the Year and produce the stories for the cover package.

CHICAGO (AP) — Gregory Hines and Billy Crystal were on a city street, armed and pantless.

"There was a little old lady standing next to Hines, and she says 'Excuse me, can I get by? She didn't even notice that we were in our underwear and had guns," Crystal recalls.

So Hines escorted her across the street as they were playing a couple of undercover cops while making a movie, "Running Scared."

Hines, 39, is fresh from good reviews in "White Nights," and Crystal, 38, is doing his first movie after moving on from "Saturday Night Live."

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Doctors who implanted a mini Jarvik-7 pump in the first female recipient of an artificial heart remain concerned about her neurological and kidney functions, which they said have not improved as quickly as expected.

Mary Lund, 40, was on kidney dialysis Sunday, and X-rays failed to determine what has caused her to be slow to respond to stimulus, hospital officials said.

"Most of Mary Lund's problems are largely a function of how sick of a lady she was prior to the implant," said Abbott-Northwestern Hospital spokesman Mark Dixon.

Mrs. Lund remained in critical but stable condition Sunday, as she has been since Minneapolis Heart Institute surgeons completed the six-hour operation early Thursday. Officials at Abbott-Northwestern, where the heart institute is based, said her condition had changed little since the surgery.

When she had shown no improvement by Saturday night, doctors hooked her up to a dialysis machine to help remove her body's waste products. The procedure was performed intermittently, Dixon said.

"They are using the machine to supplement what her kidneys are doing. Her kidneys are working. They're just not working to the level they should be working," he said.

She also had reduced neurological function, but a CAT scan Sunday "failed to show blood clots, bleeding, strokes or other structural changes," according to a statement issued Sunday night by Dr. Fredarick Gobel, spokesman for the medical team that performed the implant.

Gobel also said Mrs. Lund underwent dialysis by ultrafiltration, another form of kidney dialysis in which excess body fluids are removed.

Dixon said that while there was no time schedule for Mrs. Lund's recovery, doctors feel she "should be doing better."

NEW YORK (AP) — Muppet creator Jim Henson and more than 200 of Kermit's friends plan to toast America's best-known frog next month in "The Muppets, a Celebration of 30 Years."

"Big Bird" will be there, the talents of "Miss Piggy" will be showcased and highlights from the Muppets' TV specials and early days will be shown.

Miss Piggy hinted that she and Kermit might be planning an exciting announcement, but gets indignant when pressed about her age.

"By no stretch of the imagination am I anywhere near the age of 30," she said. "I fell in love with a much older frog. I consider the matter closed."

HAYWARD, Calif. (AP) — A would-be robber was forced into the Christmas spirit when a cashier threatened to blast a large hole in him if he did not behave.

Police said the man confronted cashier Carol Sue Adams with a .45-caliber pistol and tried to take off with an evergreen without paying for it.

Ms. Adams, 27, got mad and indicated she just might shoot him with her own gun.

The two stared at each other. The bandit blanched, put his gun away, forked over $33 and departed with a seven-foot fir priced at $32.95.

In an interview Saturday, Ms. Adams admitted she was bluffing when she told the man on Thursday that she had a .357-caliber Magnun under the counter.

"I was too shocked to be scared," she said, adding she planned to keep a real gun behind her counter.

"I'm from Texas," she smiled. "Back home everybody knows how to shoot."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Tommy Thomas, whose Palomino country nightclub helped launch the careers of Linda Ronstadt, Glen Campbell and Mac Davis, died of a heart attack Sunday at his home. He was 61.

Thomas started the club in 1955 with his brother, Bill, and it became a home-away-from-home for Nashville, Tenn., country stars. The club, a rustic, neon-emblazoned structure, won the Academy of Country Music's nightclub of the year trophy 14 years in a row. It also served as the backdrop for several motion pictures.

Anti-immigrant feeling swells in Europe

By MORT ROSENBLUM
AP Special Correspondent

PARIS — When the going was good, Western Europe welcomed foreigners happy to do dirty work for modest wages. But as jobs now grow scarce and immigrant populations increase, tension is erupting into violence.

Many Europeans accuse immigrants of putting them out of work, bringing crime to their streets and polluting their cultures. Immigrants, often black or Arab, suffer growing racist attacks.

Officials and politicians who defend foreign workers clash heatedly at times with growing anti-immigrant forces.

"An immense wave of hate" menaces France, former Justice Minister Alain Peyrefitte said in a recent debate.

Two throngs of youths recently marched across France to protest racism — which frequently is equated with anti-immigrant sentiment.

A group of France's best-known writers, filmmakers, philosophers and scientists drafted a joint protest beginning: "We...condemn racist currents in France (which) dishonor our country....Each week, immigrants are molested, humiliated or murdered because they are immigrants."

IN WEST GERMANY, author Guenther Wallraff's book "At the Very Bottom," an account of his experiences in the guise of a Turkish worker, is already a best-seller.

He wrote: "I still don't know how a foreigner can digest the humiliation, the hostility and the hate. But I know now what he has to put up with, and how far the contempt of mankind can go in (Germany)."

Racial tension is electric in Britain where rioting West Indians, South Asians and other non-whites — many with British nationality — has taken three lives this year.

In Tottenham, angry youths hacked to death a white policeman, reflecting wide bitterness that nearly all British police are white, and non-whites' perceptions that often they are far from even-handed in dealing with other races.

Despite laws against discrimination, racial minorities suffer abuses from individuals. Commentators recall the warning of Enoch Powell, the British Parliament member, that "rivers of blood" would flow if immigration was not checked.

"If the English think Americans and Scots are different," said American writer Paul Theroux, who lives in London, "you can imagine what they think about Nigerians."

Even in Italy, long a source of others' immigrants, illegal Asian, African and other southern European immigrants may number a million, double the total of legal foreign workers.

"NO ONE IN his wildest dreams would have expected Italy to have a million illegal immigrants," said Carlo Ferucci, a Foreign Ministry official in Rome who drafted a proposed law to control them.

Luxembourg's foreigners make up of 26 percent of the population. In the Belgian capital, Brussels, one inhabitant in five in an immigrant.

The European Common Market says 9.2 million foreigners live legally among the 270 million inhabitants of its 10 member nations. Turks, North Africans and Yugoslavs are the most numerous.

In addition, millions of undocumented southern Europeans, Africans and Asians hover at the fringes of hard-pressed economies, growing targets of the right, left and, increasingly, the center.

Repeatedly, politicians point out that the numbers of jobless in their societies — up to 12 percent — is not far from the number of foreigners counting on jobs.

Jean-Marie Le Pen, a former Foreign Legion officer who heads the right-wing National Front in France, has placed the issue at the center of his campaign for legislative elections this coming March.

"Arab vermin out," reads a slogan scrawled on walls of Paris subway stations. Another says, "Too many bicots (a derogatory term for Arabs), I'm voting for Le Pen."

PRESIDENT FRANCOIS MITTERRAND recently declared, "Immigrants are at home here." But polls suggest up to 85 percent of Frenchmen want to see fewer foreigners in France.

Earlier this year, a 22-year-old unemployed Frenchman walked into a provincial bar and killed two Turks in a spray of gunfire. "I don't like foreigners," he told police.

French officials count 4.4 million legal immigrants in France, including 700,000 Algerians, and estimate illegal aliens at 300,000. Le Pen's figure of 6 million includes ethnic Arabs, Africans and Asians with French nationality.

"Black is black," said Jean-Marc from the French Caribbean state of Martinique, who asked not to be identified further. "My identity card is French, but when people see me, I'm a foreigner."

He, like many others interviewed in Paris and Marseille, said blacks and Arabs face serious discrimination for jobs, housing and sometimes even social benefits they are entitled to by law.

The right-wing Figaro Magazine recently published a report titled, "Will France be French in 2015?" It predicted "non-Europeans" would make up a quarter of France's population in 30 years.

Government spokesman Georgina Dufoix likened the projections to Nazi fantasies, arguing that Figaro grossly overestimated expected fertility rates and yearly influxes.

IN JUNE, THE Common Market Council agreed all 10 member nations should improve coordination and information on immigration from outside the Common Market.

Two months later, the Common Market Commission obliged member states to confer on their immigration policies, though each is free to act on its own. France, West Germany and Britain went to the European Court of Justice, claiming that mandatory consultation infringed on their independence.

Each country faces a different situation.

West Germans are torn between purifying the society and avoiding racist memories of the past. They began importing "Gastarbeiters," German for guest workers, in 1955, building to a 1982 peak of 4.7 million. Stiff controls slowed new arrivals, but 4.3 million remain.

The government abandoned as too costly a program to pay up to the equivalent of $20,000 to immigrants volunteering to go home.

Many of the foreigners were born in West Germany and know no other home. A limited number are entitled to German nationality, and many of those eligible prefer to keep their Turkish passports.

In recent years, large numbers of South Asians have sneaked into West Germany by flying to East Berlin and crossing to the West, where arrivals are not controlled.

FRANCE ABSORBED ARABS, Africans and Asians from former colonies and, by law, anyone born within French borders is entitled to citizenship. In addition, a million North Africans were brought to France to work during the boom years of the 1970s.

The government notes that three-quarters of all immigrants have lived in France at least 10 years. Still, extremists argue, they should go home.

"When you call a plumber, you don't invite him in to take over your bedroom," Le Pen said in one speech, referring to immigrant workers.

Britain also welcomed migrants from its dismembered empire — once a quarter of humanity — until overwhelming numbers forced a change. In 1983, the National Act revoked "jus soli," which still applies in France, meaning people born in Britain were no longer automatically citizens.

About 4.5 million British subjects, most of them in Hong Kong, have no right to live in Britain. The 2.2 million non-whites now living in Britain need official approval to pass their rights to their children.

Citizens of Commonwealth countries who visit Britain are at the mercy of officials at ports of entry. But, the leftist weekly New Statesman estimated recently, people from Bangladesh are 100 times more apt to be turned back than those from New Zealander.

The Netherlands, traditionally a home for the persecuted minorities and people from its former colonies, faces growing racial tension as its economy suffers.

Switzerland, not a Common Market member, has large percentages of foreign workers, and an increasingly large number of Swiss are repeating the phrase: "The boat is full."

Open borders allow brokers to smuggle illegal workers into the country. Many come through Italy over what the Swiss call the "Ho Chi Minh Trail." But authorities react harshly when offenders are caught.

Recently, 59 Zaireans were bundled onto a special plane to Zaire in Africa under such an energetic police guard that Swiss humanitarian agencies objected heatedly.

Two solitary pillars mark India border-barrier fence

RAMRAI KUTI, India (AP) — Among the rice paddies and banana trees outside this farming hamlet stands a solitary, 8-foot-high white concrete pillar. Six miles away stands a second identical post.

That is all there is of a projected 2,500-mile, $700-million barbed-wire fence intended to keep people from overcrowded Bangladesh from slipping into India's Assam state.

Bangladesh calls the project an illegal encroachment on the border zone and an insult to its national pride.

In April 1984, a tragicomic tug-of-war broke out between Indian and Bangladesh soldiers over the Ramrai Kuti pillar. Two people were killed in machine-gun battles.

Today the fence, a seven-year project, is on hold and the border is calm. Two soldiers of India's Border Security Force patrol around the pillar here, while another stands guard from a nearby watchtower.

The quarrel dates back to 1979 when native Assamese students, fearful of becoming a minority in their own state, began demanding disenfranchisement and expulsion of all Bengali-speaking Moslem migrants from Bangladesh.

Bangladesh, formerly East Pakistan, has 100 million people squeezed into an area the size of Wisconsin. Assam, a fertile tea-growing state, has 22 million people and is about a third larger than Bangladesh.

During state elections in February 1983, more than 3,600 people were killed in attacks by Assamese on Bengali voters.

Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi of India signed a peace accord with protest leaders in Amman this past August.

Under the pact, post-1971 migrants will be expelled from Assam and those who settled from 1966 to 1971 will be disenfranchised for 10 years. The accord also commits India to build its fence across four states.

The fence construction began and ended in April 1984.

After workers put up the first two pillars, Bangladesh soldiers dug trenches to undermine the columns and make them topple during monsoon rains.

On April 24, 1984, they caught on to the pillar with a rope attached to bamboo poles and tried to pull it down. Indian troops wrapped their arms around the post and kept it upright.

Both sides opened fire with machine guns. One Bangladesh soldier and an Indian laborer were killed.

Construction has stopped while both sides try to resolve the issue diplomatically.

Indian political analysts say dropping the project would significantly improve ties with Bangladesh.

President Hussein Mohammed Ershad of Bangladesh says the fence violates a 1975 agreement with India banning construction of defense structures within 150 yards of the border.

But India's home minister, Shankarrao B. Chavan, said on Oct. 31 that the project was still on. He said $210 million is budgeted in 1985-86 for the fence, roads and watchtowers.

However, in apparent expression of willingness to back off, Chavan added, "It is up to the people of Assam to think whether a barbed wire fence is necessary or not."

Many observers in both countries say the fence is a futile idea and is intended more as a symbolic gesture to appease Assamese agitators.

Critics say the money for the fence could be better spent on India's 750 million people, whose per capita income is $260 dollars a year.

But the man assigned to build the fence, Border Commissioner J.K. Barthakur, contends the project will save money in the long run.

Doctors: AIDS blood test unreliable

STATE

"What we find is that there are still high-risk people giving blood. The problem I have is that everyone is saying that it (the test) is perfect. We just don't believe the test...is that good."

— Dr. Norwood Hill, Wadley Blood Center

DALLAS (AP) — A much-touted test to screen for AIDS in donated blood is less reliable than the government claims, and the result could be an increase in the number of people who get the fatal ailment through blood transfusions, researchers warn.

In a copyright story Sunday, the Dallas Times Herald reported that some scientists say the Elisa test — described by a former Cabinet member as "the answer to the prayers of thousands of Americans" — is unable to detect AIDS during the early stages of infection.

Dr. William Haseltine of Harvard University predicts the number of AIDS cases from blood transfusions could equal or surpass the number of people who get hepatitis from blood transfusions, the newspaper reported in a copyright story.

Hepatitis is a generally non-fatal disease, while Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, which attacks the body's immune system, is regarded as usually fatal.

About 2,000 transfusion recipients get hepatitis eacy year, Haseltine estimated. Other estimates range from only a few hundred to as many as 7 percent of the 3.5 million people who receive transfusions every year.

"The problem will be at least as severe for AIDS and maybe worse," said Haseltine.

Dr. Alvin Novick, an AIDS expert at Yale, estimates that on any given day there may be 120,000 Americans infected recently enough with AIDS to test negative if they tried to donate blood.

DR. JAMES REUBEN, chief of the clinical immunology laboratory at M.D. Anderson Hospital and Tumor Institute in Houston, where prototypes of the Elisa test were studied before licensing, said that by using the more elaborate Western blot test, he has detected contaminated blood that slipped past the Elisa screen.

He declined to release figures because his study has not been published.

The Western blot test is generally considered more sensitive but is expensive and impractical for mass testing, doctors say.

In addition, researchers say the validation techniques used by manufacturers and federal licensing agencies were "biased," giving an inflated measure of the test's sensitivity to AIDS infection when it is uncertain.

Some medical experts also fear that overconfidence in the test's effectiveness will hinder efforts to discourage "high risk" blood donors and non-essential transfusions.

"A certain amount of false confidence has been put into the (Elisa) test," said Peter Mansell, head of the AIDS clinic at M.D. Anderson. "Although we can say the problem of people getting AIDS from blood transfusions will go away, I don't think that's true. We're far from out of the woods."

EXACERBATING THE PROBLEMS with the Elisa test's accuracy are the sweeping endorsements of the test by top medical and public officials, the Times Herald reported.

Former Health and Human Services Secretary Margaret Heckler said when the Food and Drug Administration licensed the test that it was "the answer to the prayers of thousands of Americans."

A statement by the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta said the test, coupled with efforts to deter possible AIDS carriers from donating blood "will virtually eliminate the risk" of AIDS transmission through blood transfusions.

In August, Dr. Norwood Hill, president of the Wadley Blood Center in Dallas, wrote to Dr. James Curran of the CDC, asking him to tone down "the degree of optimisim" the center was expressing about the Elisa test.

In response, Curran wrote that the test could miss 10 percent of the blood samples in which the antibody is present, a figure 10 times higher than the less than 1 percent quoted by the FDA's public statements, the Times Herald said.

However, Dr. John Ward, a CDC epidemiologist who has been studying the Elisa test for the past year, disputed critics' claims that the agency has overstated the effectiveness of the test.

But he said, "I'm not making the claim that every blood donor that's infected will be picked up by this test. It's a fairly young science. I'm not trying to make any apologies for it. You only have what you have."

OTHER RESEARCHERS AND blood bank operators also fear that the claims about the Elisa test is undermining earlier efforts to prevent high-risk people from donating blood in the first place.

"What we find is that there are still high-risk people giving blood," Hill said. "The problem I have is that everyone is saying that it (the test) is perfect. We just don't believe the test...is that good."

Residents scorched by high electricity rates

PORT ARTHUR (AP) — Thousands of residents of Jefferson and Orange counties, one of the state's most economically depressed areas, are waging war against Gulf States Utilities over burgeoning electricity rates.

"Our employees can't go anywhere where someone knows they work for Gulf States that something isn't said about our rates," said company spokesman Kim McMurray.

Ratepayers began seeing red last summer, when scorching temperatures increased power usage and the company's higher summer rates were going into effect.

In August 1984, the company won a $27.5 million rate hike from the PUC. In January, a long-term fuel contract expired, forcing an additional 20 percent jump in rates.

During the summer, higher rates designed to encourage conservation were in effect.

And just as winter rates were going into effect, GSU announced it would seek a 6.6 percent residential rate hike in 1986. The increase — the third in less than a year — hit Gulf States customers with the highest electric rates in Texas.

While about 275,000 Texas residential ratepayers were being billed $105.50 for every 1,000 kilowatts of power generated by Gulf States, their counterparts in Louisiana were paying $71.66.

"What's really bad (is) we're all dipping out of the same pot and they're getting it 30 percent cheaper," said Joyce Roddy, chairman of Concerned Citizens of Southeast Texas.

Gulf States serves one of the state's most economically depressed areas. Consumers also are angered over the widening gap between the rates the utility charges in Texas and those it charges in Louisiana.

Over the last few years, declining oil prices have hit Southeast Texas' petrochemical industry with plant closings and layoffs.

"People are getting hit in their breadbasket and they're angry," Ms. Roddy told the Dallas Times Herald.

In Beaumont, Port Arthur and Orange, opposition to Gulf States is widespread. And in eight cities — Port Arthur, Port Neches, Nederland, Vidor, Bridge City, Pinehurst, West Orange and Groves — proposals are pending to force Gulf States to roll back its rates to Louisiana levels.

In Vidor, Randall Langley, a telephone cable repairman, put $1,500 into a petition drive aimed at creating a regional Southeast Texas Utility Commission to replace the state Public Utility Commission in Austin. He said he already has 60,000 signatures.

Members of the Longview Jaycees inventory donations of toys and money this week after thieves broke into a storehouse and stole $3,000 worth of gifts Sunday or Monday. The toys had been intended for needy children. After the theft was publicized, area residents donated nearly $15,000, five times the original loss. From left are Tina Earley, Mary Spies, Billy Clay.

Toys for needy replace those stolen last week

LONGVIEW (AP) — Less than a week after burglars stole a stash of gifts intended for need families, nearly $15,000 has been raised in donations of toys, food and clothing for distribution before Christmas.

Members of the Longview Jaycees distributed Christmas boxes Saturday to nearly 350 families with about 1,200 children, said Tommy Thomas, Jaycees president.

"The people in this community have made this program work," said Sam Allen, chairman of the project.

"The toys that were stolen would not have been enough for the children we had on our lists. We have now been able to help even more people. There's enough to give each child a good meal and a toy or so."

Last Monday, Jaycees told police that burglars had broken into their storage facility and stolen about $3,000 in donated toys intended for poor children.

As news of the Grinch-like crime spread, contributions began flowing in. The Jaycees were beseiged with calls from private and business donors and media across the United States.

"I just can't believe the response. It's going to be a merry Christmas after all," Allen said. "These people have opened their hearts to make this a great Christmas for the underprivileged children."

The Gregg County Adult Probation Office launched a program to collect toys, money and food and that netted $2,350 from a Tyler man.

Danny Zips, a former Longview resident and Jaycee with businesses in Longview, Tyler and Shreveport, said he had heard the report on an area radio station and was "disgusted...to think that somebody could steal toys from kiddos like that after people spent so much time and effort collecting them."

Inmates cashing in on prison bingo games

ROSHARON (AP) — Inmates at a minimum-security Texas prison unit are making some extra spending money, thanks to monthly bingo games sponsored by a Knights of Columbus chapter.

The Knights say the games, held at the Ramsey III Unit for the second time last week, are so successful that they hope to start other tournaments.

"It brings inmates a lot of excitement," said Chaplain Robert Kacz, a Knight who suggested the bingo games to Ramsey III Warden Arthur Velasquez.

Once a month, several hundred Ramsey III inmates file into the prison gymnasium to try their luck. Members of the Alvin-Manvel chapter of the Knights, a Catholic men's organization, donate the money for each game and send nine volunteers to conduct them.

Ramsey III is a minimum-security unit that houses 1,173 inmates.

Almost 500 inmates participate in each bingo night, which includes 11 games, and contend for jackpots ranging from $5 to $25. Instead of cash, winners receive vouchers redeemable at the prison commissary.

The inmate who won the $25 jackpot in November had not bought anything from the commissary since he began serving his prison term three years ago because he did not have money in his account, Kacz said.

"It's nice that somebody out there thinks enough about us to come in here and do this," inmate Steven Fee told the Houston Chronicle

SMU blames Dallas for scholar shortage

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas' Republican image may be turning off distinguished educators and may be the reason Southern Methodist University is having trouble attracting star-quality professors, some faculty members say.

"Dallas is a known Republican bastion, and people in Academe have come to regard that as anti-intellectual," an SMU staff member who often deals with faculty recruiting told the Dallas Morning News.

Of its 43 distinguished chairs — prestigious teaching and research posts paying as much as $90,000 a year, plus perks — 16 are open at the state's most expensive school.

Some of the posts are new, but others have been vacant for more than three years, a fact that troubles SMU's board of trustees.

Last year, trustees began openly questioning the hiring process and told the administration to put "the highest priority" on filling distinguished chairs.

"In business, you're taught to make a quick decision," said trustee and oilman Cary M. Maguire.

"Academic people — well, by nature, they see this as a slow process.....Naturally, they want to be sure they're right. We realize that, but we need to be aggressive," he said.

But some faculty members say it is Dallas' Republican business image that turns off many distinguished educators.

"Outside the state, there's a feeling that this part of the world has yet to develop intellectually,"

Some faculty members complain the businesslike attitude may be part of the reason filling a chair is so difficult.

"Whey they say, 'Get cracking,' that just shows they think it's like hiring secretaries or winning games,'" one faculty member working to fill a chair told the Dallas Morning News.

"That board is a reflection of Dallas, entrenched with conservative business interests and athletics," said the academician, who asked not to be identified.

But Roy Herberger Jr., dean of SMU's business school, said, "There are those who get impatient with us, but they're probably right to press us a bit."

Hiring high-quality scholars takes nine months to a year under the best of circumstances, university officials say.

Maguire said he understands that time is required.

"But to get anything accomplished, in business, in anything, you've got to make a push," he said.

Trustee O. Paul Corley, a retired oil company executive, said, "We have to convey the quality of life that is Dallas, the excitement that is Dallas. Sometimes that doesn't come across from academics, because they're not out in the business world."

The university has had some recent success in recruiting from cultural centers, however.

In its first international hire, a sociologist from the London School of Economics was placed in a university chair. And William May, an ethnicist, was hired away from Georgetown University in Washington, D.C.

Officers shoot man armed with an ax

AUSTIN (AP) — Two Austin police officers have been assigned restricted duty after shooting and killing a man they said was trying to hit another man with an ax for the second time, a police spokesman said.

The officers will remain on the restricted assignment pending the completion of a routine investigation, said Sgt. Larry Walker.

Anthony Wayne Bell, 22, of Austin was pronounced dead at the scene at about 8:30 p.m. Saturday by a Breckenridge Hospital physician, said Sgt. Larry Walker.

Police officers Edmund Garza and Ramiro Olvera had been called to a disturbance in south central Austin and found Bell's brother, Michael Bargnal-Bell, with a gunshot wound to the chest, he said.

A short distance away, Bell was standing over Eugene Jones, 37, of Austin with an ax, Walker said.

White defends no-pass

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White, undaunted by attacks on the state's no-pass, no-play rule, defended the educational reform regulation on a weekend nationally televised news program.

"I think that the rule is appropriate, and I think it's fair," White said Sunday on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation" program. "I think you'll find that students are studying harder and are doing better...."

The rule was incorporated in the past year as part of sweeping school reform law. Any student failing in a class at the end of a six-week grading period is ineligible to participate in athletics or any other extracurricular activity for the next six weeks.

"This country is in world competition, and we're not in the race in many cases because of a weak educational program among our secondary schools," White said.

"I want to make certain that we have the highest standards, and I think you'll find that the strongest support we have for it are among many of those professional athletes who are going back to get their education now," he said.

He said students are not being penalized through the rule.

"They are being encouraged to pass their courses first and then they'll be able to play," he said.

Ticket company accused

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — State officials have filed a lawsuit accusing a Texas company of accepting payment for World Series baseball tickets without delivering the tickets to buyers.

The attorney general's office received four complaints from Kansas City and St. Louis fans who charged that they had paid for the tickets with either cash or credit cards but never received them, said assistant attorney general Gregory Eufinger Jr.

Trains aim to chug into dads' hearts

MOUNT CLEMENS, Mich. (AP) — With a tug at some heartstrings and a nod to nostalgia, the maker of Lionel trains is hoping to send visions of choo-choos dancing through dads' heads this Christmas.

In toy stores crowded with programmable cars and computer games, "the prime consumer really is Dad," said John Brady, director of marketing for the manufacturer that rolled out its first electric train in 1900.

"We're trying to appeal to the guy that grew up with Lionel and has kids, and is saying, 'I want my kids to enjoy what I did,'" he said.

The product has traveled far from the days when every boy's high-tech dream was a crystal radio kit and an electric train, and the price of nostalgia can reach hundreds of dollars for trains in Lionel's collector series.

Lionel, a division of the General Mills Toy Group, moved its factory to Tijuana, Mexico, in 1983 hoping "that we would enjoy better labor costs," Brady said.

But the company found that with cheap labor came quality problems.

"People who buy Lionel trains are looking for memories of childhood," Brady said. "People expect more of them than they do, say, of a GI Joe. When we went to Mexico, we had people that really didn't understand that these are pieces of art as much as they are toys."

Faced with slipping production schedules on its labor-intensive assembly line, Lionel moved back to Mount Clemens, about 30 miles north of Detroit, rehiring many of the workers it had laid off two years earlier.

The Mexico move was the second attempt to transfer Lionel train production overseas. In 1966, the factory moved to Japan but came back four years later, again because of quality problems.

Some of Lionel's 125 factory employees, represented by the United Auto Workers union, this week were building boxcars on the line at the company's new plant. It takes five people about a minute to make a boxcar, from the first assembly of parts to putting the car in its box.

That particular plastic-and-metal boxcar is part of Lionel's Burlington Northern Limited collectors edition — a dual-motor, 12-wheel-drive engine, four boxcars and a caboose selling for $375 to $400.

The materials in the Burlington Northern train cost $150 to $175, with most of the expense concentrated in the engine, Brady said.

"It's not exorbitant pricing," he said. "We obviously intend to be a profit-making organization, but we're not gouging people."

Lionel makes nearly 1 million engines, cabooses and other cars in a typical year, enough to make a toy train nearly 150 miles long. A single Lionel engine uses nearly 500 separate parts, including 100 feet of wire. The transformer used to control the engine uses 300 feet of wire.

Lionel keeps production figures for specific models secret to avoid affecting prices in the collectors' market, Brady said.

Rare pieces such as the Ladies Lionel, made in the mid-1950s with a pink engine and a baby-blue tender, are traded for more than $5,000, he said. "It's a real strange market, one we don't meddle with."

The first Lionel train was created in 1900 when Joshua Lionel Cowen put a small electric motor and a battery under a wooden flatcar, and ran it around a small circle of brass tracks.

General Mills bought the Lionel line in 1969. It is selling off the division this month, and by January, it will be part of Kenner-Parker Toys Inc., the company that makes the board game Monopoly. The old Lionel Corp. started by Cowen still exists as a New Jersey-based toy retailer.

Despite the corporate changes, Lionel's managers stress the traditions of the electric trains.

"We're really trying to tug a few heartstrings," Brady said. "There's really nothing that would replace my electric train set when I was a kid. You can talk about your GI Joes all day, but there's no comparison."

Pony Express trots cards in Wyoming

GILLETTE, Wyo. (AP) — The Christmas spirit is being delivered in the style of the Old West with a little help from modern technology.

Christmas cards are being delivered by Pony Express in bitter cold weather to awaiting residents in Gillette, Rozet and Moorcroft.

Up to 30 horses carry riders to deliver the mail using a relay system much like one used in the old days. The starting point is a tack shop east of Gillette, and delivery covers a 15-mile radius in each town.

However, hazardous road conditions prompted a little help from the invention that made the Pony Express only a page in history. Trucks and horse trailers were used to haul ponies to different points on the relay system. Each horse and rider was accompanied by a vehicle with flashing warning lights.

"The weather has been against us," said Wyoming Pony Express Association president Wendall Overfield. "It's been terribly cold," he added noting that the bone-chilling winds and enormous snow drifts were hard on both rider and animal.

But the mail must go through.

The horses were carted by trailer to locations allowing the rider to change mounts every one to five miles because of the weather, Overfield said. Because of snow drifts riders take routes along the highways where there is good footing.

The non-profit Gillette chapter of the National Pony Express Inc.'s Central Wyoming Division will use the money it charges for donations to local charities and Christmas baskets for needy families, he said.

Mail by Pony Express costs $5 to hand-deliver cards that cost $1 or a sender may choose another card to be delivered.

Girl asks to see her uncle from Siberia

CONCORD, Mass. (AP) — All 8-year-old Sonia Kowal wants for Christmas is a visit from her uncle in Siberia.

So instead of writing to Santa Claus, she sent holiday letters to President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev. She is still awaiting results.

"They might get mad," she said.

Orest Yosipovich-Salecky, 43, an industrial engineer, lives with his wife and two children in Uchta, 2,000 miles northeast of Moscow, where he has spent most of his life.

Why won't the Soviets allow him to visit the West?

"I don't know," said Sonia. "Maybe they don't want him to come because they're afraid he might stay here."

"It's not as if he is a political dissident or in any way against the state," Igor Kowal, Sonia's father, told the Wellesley Townsman. "As far as we know, he is just a normal oil engineer."

While Joseph and Maria Salecky and their other children fled after World War II to a displaced persons camp in Germany, Orest and his grandmother were among thousands of Ukrainians relocated to Siberia, where Orest grew up.

"He leads a very normal life," his sister, Irene Kowal, Sonia's mother, said in a telephone interview. "He was left with his grandmother in the Ukraine in World War II because he was too small to travel."

The family first asked the Soviets to allow a visit by Yosipovich-Salecky in 1968 when his father was dying of cancer, but relatives received no answer.

Maria Salecky tried again in 1983 and 1984, adding letters to Sens. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., and Lowell Weicker, R-Conn. Weicker sent a letter to the Soviet ambassador, Anatoly Dobrynin. But the family still received no response.

After that, Mrs. Salecky gave up. She had seen her son twice, in 1967 and 1970, in the Ukraine.

"My mother is getting old," said Irene Kowal. "If Orest came alone, his whole family would be back here in Siberia. Of course, he'd go back to them.

"I think he just wants to come, to see us, to see how we live. And yet he can't come. All we're asking is one month. Is that too much to ask?"

She said the family noted that Reagan and Gorbachev spoke at the summit meeting last month about allowing relatives in the countries to be reunited.

"If he (Gorbachev) is sincere about reuniting families and about stronger, cross-cultural ties, let's see it," she said.

Cave Without a Name 'always new'

By KERI GUTEN

BOERNE, Texas (AP) — It gets cooler and cooler with each step downward. At the bottom of the slick concrete circular stairway, the air is a constant 66 degrees in the Cave Without a Name.

"When this stairway and the gravel walkways in the cave were built in 1939, it was probably the first air-conditioned job in Texas," says straight-faced Eugene Ebell, tour guide and co-owner of this obscure cave 12 miles northeast of Boerne.

Ebell (pronounced A-bell) is a native of Sisterdale, a German immigrant community not far from this Hill Country cave. His wife, Joleen, calls him a "square-headed Dutchman" with as much affection as she calls him "honey." He's a no-nonsense man who expects his instructions to be followed precisely and delivers humorous lines during his cave narrative without a smile.

Despite his sober attitude, it's easy to see he is in love with his cave.

"The first time I went down in this cave was when it opened in 1939; I didn't think I'd end up here," Ebell, 67, says. "I never get tired of going down there. I've been giving tours for 20 years and must've been down there more than 16,000 times, and I'm still finding things I never saw before. The only thing I'm tired of is climbing all those stairs."

Mrs. Ebell used to give all the tours until a stroke in 1977 confined her to a wheelchair.

"I've been through 75 caves, and I still think ours is one of the prettiest. I really miss going down there," she says from the stone house that doubles as home and visitor center. Her ceramic figures — "souvenirs " — fill a long bar and a glass display case.

She greets visitors and answers questions about the cave. She enjoys telling how the original owners of the 170-acre property accidentally discovered the cave's opening one winter when they noticed steam rising around the edges of a big boulder. The boulder-was moved and forgotten until a goat fell down the 90-foot hole in 1927.

In 1935, three young boys with Boy Scout crookneck flashlights climbed down the hole on a makeshift ladder, broke through some rock formations, scooted through a narrow passageway and entered what is now the Gold Room, a huge room with a high ceiling and golden-colored stalagmites.

"Soon afterward news of the cave spread and a photographer from San Antonio came out to take some pictures," Mrs. Ebell recalls, pointing to framed photographs on the walls. "He was really impressed. He said, 'If I owned this property, I'd open it to the public. It's the prettiest cave I've ever seen.' "

Mrs. Ebell says they held a contest to find suitable name and the winner was a young boy who thought the cave "was so beautiful what else could you call it?" That "boy" returned bout 10 years ago with his family, Joleen says, and when the story was told he identified himself and said the $500 prize money helped put him through college.

Cave Without A Name is unique because it is 98 percent active, which means it's still growing. (Carlsbad Caverns is 1 percent active.)

"It's tempting to touch, but the rock has pores just like we do," Joleen says. "The oil in our skin seals the rock's pores, and then they can't grow any more."

During the 45-minute tour, Ebell is extremely protective of his "living" cave. He balks at the idea one visitor had of turning it into a disco.

"That was ridiculous; I set him straight real fast," he says. "You can't just turn people loose in here."

Droplets of water hanging from "soda straws" in the low ceiling must not be disturbed; glittering mineral deposits on the cave's floor cannot be touched; and delicate stone "curtains" and "draperies" on the walls must be admired from afar.

"Touch these 'tites and 'mites," Ebell says, pointing to pieces that have fallen from the cave's ceiling. "Touch any other and I'm liable to bust your arm with my flashlight."

He flicks floodlights on and off as the tour progresses and brings magnificent formations alive as visitors travel from huge room to huge room. The artificial light gives everything a majestic golden hue.

Ebell uses a powerful flashlight to home in on formations resembling a Thanksgiving turkey, white grapes, Mary and the Christ child, an atomic bomb, Flipper, an owl, a super ice cream cone, an anteater, a map of Texas and the Astrodome.

"Here are our famous bacon strips," Ebell says and shines his light on a wall full of stone "curtains" resembling lean bacon. He pauses to hit some nearby "bacon" with a wooden stick. Each formation produces a different tone. With characteristic deadpan, Ebell says "That's what you call rock music."

A highlight of the tour is where Ebell turns off most of the lights in the cave and everything is in darkness. With vision impaired, hearing becomes more acute and the sound of a babbling underground river can be heard in the distance.

Three-year-old saves mother

VILAS, N.C. (AP) — A 3-year-old girl whose mother lay injured after a Jeep wreck climbed a steep, dirt embankment and attracted the attention of a motorist to save the woman's life, officials said.

"My mind couldn't have comprehended a little girl standing beside the road in 18-degree weather," said Carl Moody of Sugar Grove, who said he nearly passed Carly Wyatt this week.

Something told him to turn around, he said.

"When we saw her, there was no sign of an accident, so we took her to a friend's, who lived close by," he said.

At the house, Moody's wife, Lennis, asked the little girl where she had come from, but she couldn't speak.

"I finally asked her, 'Did Mommy wreck?' and she nodded," Mrs. Moody said.

When they returned to where Moody found the girl, they found her mother, Patricia R. Wyatt, injured in a small stand of trees where she had been thrown from the Jeep after it plunged 150 down the embankment.

Mrs. Wyatt, 30, was taken to Watauga County Hospital with back injuries and was treated in the intensive care unit.

'Rocky Horror' theater crowd treated after tear gas bombing

CONROE (AP) — A tear gas-type cannister was tossed near a theater showing the "Rocky Horror Picture Show" early Saturday and at least 30 youngsters required medical attention, officials said.

The cannister was thrown on the sidewalk and smoke blew inside the theater as patrons were walking out after the movie, said Rodney Meadows, Conroe police spokesman.

Meadows said suspects are being sought in the 2 a.m. incident at the six-theater complex at a Conroe mall.

Medical Center Hospital nursing supervisor Pat Zinn said 30 people were treated and released after complaining of smoke inhalation and minor skin irritation.

'Christ's gift' displayed at church in Greece

SALONICA, Greece (AP) — Gold, frankincense and myrrh revered by Orthodox Christians as the gifts given to Jesus by the Three Wise Men went on display at a northern Greek church for the first time in 500 years, drawing thousands of believers.

"A stream of people trooped through the church all morning to kiss the glass surrounding the gifts," a photographer, Yiannis Kyriakides, told The Associated Press on Sunday.

The three small silver caskets from the Monastery of St. Paul on Mount Athos, each containing a gold basket holding several plum-sized pellets of dark frankincense mixed with myrrh, were displayed at the newly built church of Saints Cyril and Methodius.

According to some church histories, the gifts of the Magi were presented to the monastery in 1453 by the mother of Sultan Mehmet, who conquered Constantinople (modern Istanbul) that year.

But different versions vary by hundreds of years on when the gifts arrived in Constantinople.

Savvas Aggourides, a professor of theology at Athens University who is an expert in early church history, said some versions indicate the gifts arrived in Constantinople in the 4th century A.D., soon after the city was founded. Others say the treasures were brought in 1203 from Jerusalem to Constantinople, capital of the Byzantine empire, by order of Emperor Arcadius.

Some modern Orthodox theologians say there is no proof the treasures are genuine.

"There is no historical evidence, only mystical and devotional traditions about the gifts of the Magi. Their history comes down to us mostly from monastic traditions," said Professor George Moustakis, who teaches theology at the American College in Athens.

The Gospel of St. Matthew says the Magi presented the baby Jesus with "gifts, gold and frankincense and myrrh." The fragrant incenses frankincense and myrrh originated from a resin exuded by a rare tree in the Middle East.

The caskets arrived Sunday in Salonica under heavy guard from Mount Athos, a centuries-old autonomous monastic community where women are banned. The caskets will remain on display only until Jan. 3.

A priest at the church, Father Ioannis, said, "They're being displayed in this church to commemorate 1,100 years since the death of St. Methodius, and also the 2,300th aniversary of Salonica's founding."

"The frankincense and myrrh have combined over the centuries and now exude a very delightful smell," he added.

Saints Cyril and Methodius, both born in northern Greece, brought Christianity to the Slavs of Eastern Europe.

'Rickshaw boys' recall old life

By DONNA ANDERSON

PEKING (AP) — Guang Zenglai, an 89-year-old survivor of Imperial China, recalls his working days — 40 years of pulling rich people around Peking in a rickshaw.

He now is one of 22 residents at Peking's only home for retired "rickshaw boys," among the last remaining symbols of feudal exploitation and inequality in China. Rickhaws were banned after the communists took over in 1949.

"I had to sell my strength to support myself," Guang said in an interview. "We were the lowest of the low.

"All of my customers were bourgeois types of people or landlords and rich people. They ran roughshod over me and treated me like a beast of burden."

Some customers refused to pay extra fares for longer rides and beat him if he argued, Guang said.

"When I went to policemen for help, they sided with the rich and wouldn't believe what I told them," he said, adding that he was also bullied and beaten by policemen and soldiers.

He said the rickshaw he pulled had wooden wheels with wooden spokes and shafts like the one used by the empress dowager Cixi (T'zu Hsi) of the Qing dynasty, who ruled China from 1861 until her death in 1908 shortly before the dynasty's end.

Guang said he was the son of what the Chinese call a "kuli," a word meaning "bitter strength." It refers to an unskilled laborer and came to be known in the West as "coolie."

A retired rickshaw boy shows an old snapshot of his family, a prized possession, at a special retirement facility in Peking. A transport company runs the facility for 22 former rickshaw drivers.

His mother died when he was 5 years old and he had no formal education.

He began pulling a rickshaw in 1910 when he was 14, not long after the vehicles were introduced to China from Japan.

Another resident of the home, Chang Minzheng, 78, recalled the exhausting days and ceaseless hunger of pulling a rickshaw in Peking's chilling winters.

"I had not enough to eat and not enough to wear," Chang said. "I had to pull a rickshaw in all weather conditions. We were scorned."

Like most of the rickshaw boys, Chang had no wife. "I dared not dream to have one because I couldn't even support myself."

The communists banned rickshaws in 1949 as a remnant of feudal bondage.

"In that year, any rickshaw boy hauling a customer would be stopped by People's Liberation Army soldiers at the city gates and customers were ordered out of the cart," Guang recalled.

The rickshaw pullers then turned to pedalling pedicabs — tricycles with seats in the back for passengers. The vehicles were easier to maneuver and did not have the same negative image as rickshaws, Guang said, but he and other elderly pedicab pedallers retired in 1972 when President Nixon visited China.

"The authorities thought it was unsightly and undesirable to see a worker hauling customers by pedicab," Guang said.

In the past several years, under economic reforms allowing small private enterprise in China, pedicabs have come back.

The pedicab business under communist rule still was hard, Guang said, but "life was secure" and prices stable, in contrast to the pre-communist era of disastrous inflation.

The former ricksaw boys share tiny, crowded rooms with bare concrete floors in the retirement home. Financed by the city's West District Transport Co., the home takes in those who have no families and are unable to care for themselves, the management said.

Ringing a courtyard, the rooms are furnished with round coal stoves, simple metal cots, and rough tables on which the men put their clocks, tea cups and pictures.

At mealtime, a worker piles their bowls with rice and other food from a huge wok.

Filipinos shower Aquino with flowers during visit

BACOLOD, Philippines (AP) — Crowds showered opposition presidential candidate Corazon Aquino with flowers as she campaigned on Negros Island, where communist rebellion to the regime of President Ferdinand E. Marcos is growing.

Mrs. Aquino, who will challenge Marcos in the Feb. 7 special election, called for an end to political violence in the Philippines as she stumped Sunday on the impoverished island 300 miles south of Manila.

Some in the crowd of 20,000 people that packed Bacolod's plaza wept as Mrs. Aquino, widow of opposition leader Benigno Aquino, recalled his assassination, and how she had vowed as she kissed him in his coffin, "I will continue your struggle."

Aquino was killed in August 1983 on his return from voluntary exile in the United States. Gen. Fabian C. Ver, the armed forces chief, and 25 other men charged in connection with his slaying recently were acquitted by a Manila court.

The government says Rolando Galman, a purported communist agent, killed Aquino and then was killed himself immediately afterward by soldiers.

Negros Island was Mrs. Aquino's 13th provincial stop since campaigning began 12 days ago for the election called by Marcos to prove his 20-year regime can still muster popular support.

The island's chief industry, sugar, has suffered from depressed world prices that caused tens of thousands of Negros workers to lose their jobs. The economic problems have strengthened the communist insurgency.

Rebels killed five soldiers in an ambush in a Negros village on Dec. 5. Three days earlier, guerrillas had killed five employees of a plantation owned by millionaire Eduardo Cojuangco, a Marcos' associate and a cousin of Mrs. Aquino.

During Mrs. Aquino's motorcade through rural towns, crowds waved small flags, pelted her with flowers and reached out to shake her hand.

"Killings of Filipinos by Filipinos have to stop. Let us work together for the unity of our country," she told about 5,000 farmers.

U.S. Savings Bonds. Paying Better Than Ever.

Some things never change. But one great American tradition has changed—U.S. Savings Bonds. Now paying higher variable interest rates like money market accounts. That's the kind of change anyone can appreciate.

Just hold Savings Bonds for five years and you get the new variable interest rates. Plus, you get a guaranteed return. That means you can earn a lot more, but never less than 7½%. But some of the best things about Bonds haven't changed. The interest earned is still exempt from state and local income taxes. Still cost as little as $25. And can be purchased at almost any financial institution. Or easier yet, through the Payroll Savings Plan where you work.

Buy U.S. Savings Bonds. Like the cable car, they're another part of our proud heritage.

For the current interest rate and more information, call toll-free 1-800-US-Bonds. U.S. SAVINGS BONDS Paying Better Than Ever Variable rates apply to Bonds purchased on and after 11/1/82 and held at least 5 years. Bonds purchased before 11/1/82 earn variable rates when held beyond 10/31/87. Bonds held less than 5 years earn lower interest.
