Expanded force to be considered

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan said today he will give "serious consideration" to a suggestion from the president of Lebanon that a multinational peacekeeping force be enlarged and given an expanded role in Lebanon.

While no mention was made of increasing the number of U.S. Marines, now totalling about 800 in the three-nation force, U.S. officials have not ruled this out.

Reagan met for two hours with Lebanon's new president, Amin Gemayel, and told reporters afterward they had made progress in trying to arrange the prompt withdrawal of all foreign troops from Lebanon.

However, Reagan said a date for a withdrawal had not yet been set, and a senior administration official said that while the goal is for a withdrawal by the end of the year protracted negotiations with all parties appeared likely. "We are going to have a fully charged couple of months," he said.

He said it is likely Secretary of State George P. Shultz will meet with Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir later in the week to discuss the withdrawal of Israeli, Syrian and Palestinian troops. The meeting might be held in New York.

The official, who briefed reporters on the Reagan-Gemayel meetings, which lasted two hours, said Gemayel "raised the desirability or the possibility of an expanded role and an expanded force."

"He expressed the hope that the MNF, without describing what MNF he had in mind, would stay through the withdrawal of all foreign forces."

The official, who spoke on the condition he not be named, quoted Reagan as saying in response that "we hear you; we appreciate that our troops are so well received, and you believe they are so important, and that all of these matters will have to be given serious consideration."

Speaking to reporters after their meetings ended, Reagan declared that Lebanon can count on U.S. support in rebuilding its war-shattered society.

"I reaffirm U.S. support for the sovereignty, unity, territorial integrity and freedom of Lebanon," Reagan said.

Reagan said the talks covered a full range of issues but focused "on our shared objective of a prompt withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon."

He said Gemayel "deserves all of our support as he and the people of Lebanon worked to rebuild their nation."

But Reagan also said he didn't know how soon a withdrawal of Israeli, Syrian and Palestinian troops from Lebanon can be arranged. "I would not hazard a guess," he said, although he declared it was the "immediate problem" the United States is trying to solve.

For his part, Gemayel told Reagan, "The Lebanese people deeply appreciate and will never forget your courageous and decisive effort to help bring an end to the suffering of my country."

Standing with Reagan on the White House South Lawn following their talks, Gemayel said, "We see the U.S. role as an indispensable ingredient to bring peace not only to Lebanon but also to the whole region as well."

"I am committed to the immediate removal of all foreign forces from our soil and to work hand in hand with all sectors of Lebanense society to build a nation in which all citizens have equal privileges, rights and responsibilities," he said.

Reagan has put out the word to his Mideast negotiators to press for withdrawal of all foreign troops by the end of the year. "The president has told us to get them all out as soon as possible," a senior administration official said Monday.

But the official, asking not to be identified, said, "We are going to be guided primarily by what the Lebanese think is possible."

He said a withdrawal this year "will be complicated and it will be difficult. Nevertheless, I think that it can be done quickly if the will is there on all sides."

Gemayel, 40, held two meetings with Reagan, one a working breakfast, followed by a meeting with the president and other officials in the Cabinet room. He also planned to meet separately with Secretary of State George Shultz and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger before leaving Washington tonight for Paris.

Gemayel addressed the U.N. General Assembly Monday where he demanded "the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of all non-Lebanese foreign forces from Lebanon."

CHICAGO (AP) — Investigators in the Tylenol poisoning case say they may have an "extremely significant" clue in a surveillance photo that may show a prime suspect watching one of the victims buying the tainted drug.

The photograph, made public Monday, was taken by a surveillance camera in a Chicago drug store where one of the victims, 35-year-old Paula Prince, bought a bottle of Extra-Strength Tylenol containing cyanide-tainted capsules.

In the photo, Miss Prince is standing near a checkout counter in the store. In the background, looking toward her, is a bearded man resembling Theodore Elmer Wilson, who along with his wife, Leann, was described Monday as a "prime suspect" in the case. Miss Prince later died.

Sources close to the investigation, who declined to be identified, said such a photo could be the case's first real homicide clue — an indication the culprit was interested in its outcome and its victims.

The couple is the target of a nationwide search. Authorities say Wilson has used more than a dozen other names, including James W. Lewis and Robert Richardson. He was known as Richardson in Chicago.

He faces federal charges in a $1 million extortion plot connected to the killings. His wife has been charged with using a fraudulent Social Security number in applying for a job.

Wilson was indicted in a 1978 murder in Kansas City, but the charges were dropped, officials say.

Illinois Attorney General Tyrone Fahner, heading the Tylenol poisoning task force, said the picture would be an "extremely significant" clue if the man in the picture is identified as Wilson.

"If it turns out it is, it's dramatic as hell, if you put it together with the $1 million extortion letter, the connection to the murder in Kansas City and the fact that this guy used 17 aliases," Fahner said Monday night.

"It could be a tremendous stroke of irony that the person (in the picture)...turns out to be Paula Prince and behind her it turns out to be the man who salted those capsules," Fahner said.

Investigators have other photographs that provide a clearer image of the man in the published photo, Fahner said. Experts are using computer techniques to enhance and enlarge the images, he said.

"If the photo has Wilson in it, that's big, important stuff," Fahner said. "If it turns out not to be, we're right back where we started."

Midlanders wait to see if venture can fly

From Staff and Wire Reports

Braniff International finally has a partner to help it regain its wings, but some analysts think the tentative venture with Pacific Southwest Airlines may never get off the ground.

Meanwhile, local travel agencies and the Midland aviation director — all citing a need for more airline service to the Tall City — are putting on hold their thoughts until they see if the joint venture can fly.

Braniff and PSA announced their preliminary agreement Monday, five months after fare price-cutting, soaring fuel costs and unprofitable routes forced Braniff to file for bankruptcy protection, grounding its aircraft and employees.

The new venture would fly 25 to 30 planes on as-yet unannounced routes under PSA's name, probably beginning next spring, said PSA chairman William Shimp.

A BRANIFF spokesperson in Dallas told The Midland Reporter-Telegram this morning that routes would not be disclosed until the start-up date. That could come as early as 60 days from now or as late as next spring. If the people working on the proposed joint venture know the routes, they're not disclosing them at this time, said the spokesperson.

Both PSA, the nation's 14th-largest carrier based in San Diego, and Braniff, which had been No. 8 in the country, would donate capital to the eight-year venture, that could be renewed for another eight.

But first the agreement must win approval from federal regulators, Braniff's creditors and U.S. Bankruptcy Judge John Flowers, who has supervised operations since Braniff filed for protection May 13.

The four unions that represented Braniff's 9,000 former employees also will be asked to make major wage-and-benefit concessions, PSA and Braniff said.

IN EXCHANGE, about 1,500 former Braniff employees, including about 300 pilots and 300 flight attendants, would be rehired to fly Braniff planes repainted with PSA's smile-on-the-nose logo — using some of Braniff's 411 landing slots and other ground facilities.

Col. Wilson Banks, Midland's aviation director, said, "I have no idea if it would work. They have a hard road ahead of them to make it work."

Braniff International initiated service to Midland Regional Airport in 1979, giving one-stop service at D-FW to east coast cities. Midland, said Braniff officials, had been one of their profitable lines.

When the airline folded in May, the ticket counter space at Midland was released on an oral agreement from Braniff, said Banks.

"The agreement was with Braniff Airlines. If it disappears as an entity, it would be in the hands of an attorney," Banks added. Meanwhile, the airline still holds cargo space at the Midland airport.

MUSE AIR HAS taken over the ticket counter space. But if the new PSA version of Braniff wanted to come in to Midland, Banks said there would be enough room.

Noting that "we can always use more airline service," Banks pinpointed local deficiencies as being through flights to the West Coast and more service to Dallas-Fort Worth.

Jean Heaton with Travel Time said the agents there hadn't given the proposal much thought since approval will have to come from the bankruptcy court judge. "PSA is on the West Coast like Southwest Airlines is here," she said.

Debbie Friday at Midland Travel Agency said the joint venture would be good for getting some Braniff employees back on the job. "We do need more

Local candidates gather informally

By LANA CUNNINGHAM

Faces — not issues — were the drawing cards Monday night to a local candidates reception at Energas sponsored by the Permian Basin chapter of Texas Women's Political Caucus.

It was set up to give the public a chance to meet Midlanders running for local offices. But since few of the public appeared it turned into a congenial face-to-face meeting for candidates and their opponents and a chatting session for unopposed persons.

Even for those who whiled away the time staring at their opponents, the conversation steered away from issues.

The "public" consisted primarily of members of TWPC and League of Women Voters.

Appearing at the gathering were the unopposed candidates: Vann Culp, 238th District judge; J. Scott Henderson, county attorney; Barbara Culver, 318th District judge; and Win Brown, county commissioner precinct 4. The opposing sides were Democrat Madge Wallis and Republican Vivian Wood for district clerk; Robert H. Pine and Bob Coonce (who bowed out citing an anniversary celebration in New Mexico), justice of the peace, precinct 1, place 2; Wallace Craig and Charlie Welch, county commissioner precinct 2.

Judge Culver mentioned a movement in Austin to set up election of judges on a non-partisan basis. One proposed bill calls for election of judges on a local basis, she explained. The reason, she surmised, was that more and more Republicans are being elected to those posts normally held by Democrats.

A leader in the local Republican party, she offered her predictions of outcomes on statewide races, noting that this year "we have candidates who have more than just the Republican label. I think at least half of our statewide candidates will win."

Craig, the Republican trying to unseat Democrat Charlie Welch from his two-term grip on the county commissioner's seat, said people had not discussed issues with him at the reception.

Calling himself a conservative, the former school board member said he is running only on his qualifications and does not want to get into a mud-slinging campaign, such as is going on in the gubernatorial race between Bill Clements and Mark White.

"Things ought to be positive. I'm running on my credentials only," he added.

The reception was the first major political function sponsored by the Caucus since it was formed in August. Tamara Oatman, caucus president, said the organization has about 40 members — Republican, Democrats, old, young, black, brown and white — "which is phenomenal for a new caucus," she said of the number.

"Our goal at this point is to educate women and eventually they will want to run on their own."

Women could begin to make a difference in outcome of elections, she said. At a recent caucus meeting, one of the members who is doing a phone

Alternatives explored to pipeline sanctions

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan says the United States is exploring alternatives to the anti-Soviet pipeline sanctions that have penalized U.S. manufacturers and angered America's European allies.

Reagan made his comments Monday night in a televised question-and-answer session with Republican candidates and their supporters beamed to fund-raising gatherings across the country.

"We sent representatives to Europe to talk to our allies about some other things that we believe could be more punishment to the Soviet Union than these sanctions," the president said.

"We couldn't get agreement on them," Reagan said, "but we're trying again. If we can get a better set of restrictions, other than the sanctions, we will be willing to lift those sanctions."

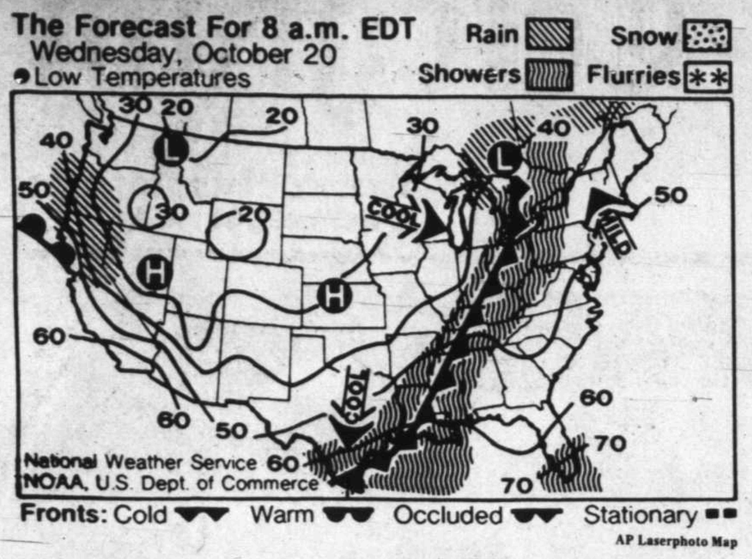
The sanctions, he said, weren't meant to be the principal means of punishing the Soviet Union for its crackdown on the Polish labor movement.

The Republican supporter from Joliet, Ill., who asked the prearranged question, posed it in the context of the harm the sanctions are doing to Caterpillar Tractor Co.

The administration's sanctions ban the sales of U.S. technology to the Soviets for construction of the natural gas pipeline to link Western Europe to the Siberian gas fields.

After Reagan expanded the sanctions to include American subsidiaries and licensees abroad, the European allies defied the U.S. measures and ordered their companies to deliver U.S.-developed technology to the Soviets.

WEATHER SUMMARY



AP Laserphoto Map

Showers are forecast Wednesday from the Gulf to the Great Lakes and for the central Pacific Coast, according to the National Weather Service. Most areas will be sunny and cool.

Cool, brisk winds forecast for area

The summertime temperatures Monday and Tuesday should give way to cool fall weather with brisk winds tonight and Wednesday, according to the National Weather Service forecast.

Tonight should be fair and colder with a low plummeting into the mid-40s and northeasterly winds at 10-15 mph. Wednesday's high should only reach the upper-60s with winds from the northeast and east at 10-15 mph.

Monday's high of 89 degrees narrowly missed the record high 90 set in 1936. The overnight low of 54 was a full 19 degrees warmer than the record low 35 set in 1966.

No precipitation in the last 24 hours leaves monthly and yearly rainfall totals at 1.01 and 12.63 inches. Sunset tonight is at 7:12 p.m. and sunrise Wednesday is at 7:56 a.m.

Deputies to guard padlocked church

LOUISVILLE, Neb. (AP) — Deputies will guard the padlocked Faith Christian Church indefinitely to enforce a court order barring the the operation of a non-certified school in the basement, the sheriff says.

Cass County Sheriff Fred Tesch said the church, the scene of a scuffle Monday between police and 85 weeping and praying protesters, will not be allowed to open, even for worship services.

However, the county prosecutor said the church will be opened for religious services Wednesday and closed again.

Tesch, three deputies and 12 Nebraska State Patrol troopers entered the church shortly after 6 a.m. Monday and told the supporters of the fundamentalist church to leave the building.

The orders were drowned out by praying and wailing from the occupants, who knelt on the floor between pews as the officers entered the church.

"I've seen a lot of anti-war demonstrations and other things," said State Patrol Capt. Raymond Syslo, a 33-year-old veteran of the patrol. "I'm not sure I've ever seen anything like this."

"I didn't expect to have the resistance at the door," Tesch said as the church was padlocked for the second time in a little more than a year. There were no injuries in the scuffle and no one was arrested.

"I would not like to see my officers or any other officers go through what we went through tonight. They always told us they were not violent people."

The sheriff said that if the church is opened for services Wednesday, "we can assume it will be a reoccurrence of this morning on a much larger scale."

Tesch said he will report what happened at the church to Cass County Attorney Ron Moravec and Cass County District Judge Raymond Case.

Moravec said he didn't want to comment on Tesch's remarks about not allowing the church to be opened for worship. He said lawyers on either side can request that the order be changed but for now, the padlocking and reopening for worship will continue indefinitely.

Tesch said he plans to meet with Case to request a change in the court order so the church cannot be reopened for worship. Case said he "probably wouldn't favor" changing his order.

"I don't feel confident about closing it down for church services," Case said. "That would be something I probably wouldn't favor, but I don't want to give a flat yes or no. I have to consider both sides."

Several supporters of the church said school classes were held elsewhere Monday and would continue to he held, but they did not disclose the location.

The pastor, the Rev. Everett Sileven, has completed half of a four-month jail sentence for defying an order to close the school. The dispute over the Faith Christian School, which refuses to use state-certified teachers, has been going on for five years.

The most recent order to padlock the church came last Thursday from Case. The judge said he could wait no longer for voluntary closure of the school and directed Tesch to padlock the church doors by Monday.

Bush completes Texas campaign trip

DALLAS (AP) — Vice President George Bush ended three days of politicking and backpatting in Texas with a rousing rally here featuring about 1,700 supporters of Texas Gov. Bill Clements.

The vice president, who has been on the road since Labor Day trying to shore up support nationally for GOP incumbents and hopefuls, repeatedly chastised Democrats for trying to handcuff Reagan and return to "the failed answers of the past."

"The president's achievements just must not be cut and that's what's at stake in a lot of these congressional elections," Bush said.

"I think the national Democratic leaders are totally devoid of any new answers as to how to solve the problems facing our country," the vice president said. "All they want to do is tear down a decent, honorable, strong president of the United States, and that is not going to work.

"These personal attacks on (Reagan's) lacking compassion really are the ones that get to me the most," Bush said. "They are unconscionable. They are untrue. They are unfair, and I pray that the people that say them know it."

Bush traveled to the West Texas town of Pecos Saturday to campaign for Pat Haggerty, a Republican candidate for Congress.

Sunday, Bush appeared in Grapevine at a $150-per-plate fund-raising dinner on behalf of Republican congressional candidate Jim Bradshaw.

Monday, the vice president addressed a meeting of the National Alliance of Business, a geophyicists group and then met with three representatives of the Hispanic group SER-Jobs For Progress before attending the Clements' $7-per-plate luncheon at a Dallas hotel.

Clements noted the importance of White House support as his tight gubernatorial race with his Democratic challenger, Attorney General Mark White, enters its final two weeks.

"This gubernatorial election will set an all-time historic record for Texas ticket-splitting, Democratic crossovers and independent voting," Clements said.

Flanked by 20 supporters including business and civic leaders, Dallas Cowboys tight end Billy Joe Dupree and an Eagle Scout, Clements said he had improved public education, cut taxes, cutdown on crime and trimmed state government.

"We are nationally renowned for our great job climate and as long as I'm governor, that's a reputation that Texas is going to keep," Clements said.

Bush likened Texas' top administrator to Reagan, and said both have boosted the pocketbooks of their constituents.

"Today we have a president, just like the governor of Texas, who offers hope, who talks about growth and opportunity and incentive and excellence," Bush said.

Bush, who has headed the administration's South Florida anti-narcotics task force, said Clements' War On Drugs legislation was a model for the nation.

"Bill Clements has signed the hardest-hitting crime package since World War II," Bush said. "It's a hallmark, it's a landmark for a country crying out for liberty."

Bush, who Clements said is a personal friend of 30 years, said Reagan's recent signing of the Job Partnership Act is a step toward easing unemployment by providing incentives for business, rather than government, to create jobs.

At the Monday morning business alliance meeting in Dallas, Bush said the record-high unemployment was "a terrible disappointment."

"The figures say the unemployment rate is 10.1 percent," Bush said.

airlines," she said.

Noting that "PSA is a well-established airline," she said success of the venture would depend upon the leadership.

FOR ANALYSTS, the question was whether the combined airline would put smiles on passengers' faces.

"This thing is something less than a lead-pipe cinch to get off the ground," said Charles H. Hanneman, an airline industry analyst with Thomson McKinnon Securities Inc. of New York.

"The outlook for the industry generally is poor, and I assume that they will be trying to fly the high-density routes, and these certainly will be highly competitive by the time they get started," said Eliot Fried, executive vice president of Shearson-American Express.

As far as travelers are concerned, there would be no difference between PSA and the joint venture, although they actually would be two separate airlines, company officials said.

While acknowledging "a lot of hurdles ahead," Braniff chairman Howard Putnam said, "all of us at Braniff are extremely pleased and enthusiastic."

Braniff's financial officer, Philip Guthrie, said Braniff had talked about the venture with some of its unions and they reacted positively. He didn't specify which unions.

HE ACKNOWLEDGED that Braniff, which owes its creditors $1 billion, had talked to eight other airlines about a joint venture and in August had "come very close" to an agreement with one unspecified airline. But the deal fell through because of labor issues, he said.

L.T. Faircloth of the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers said "there very well could be problems" with the latest agreement.

Putnam "is making some very harsh statements about wages and working conditions, and he's never talked to us at all," Faircloth told Dallas radio station KRLD.

Braniff workers "have been abused, they've been misled, they've been misguided. It's my opinion that when Mr. Putnam first came to Braniff, the people were behind him 100 percent, but I think they've lost all faith and confidence in his leadership at this time," he said.

Hanneman also said the unions could torpedo the agreement.

"PSA had a lengthy and costly pilots' strike in 1980, and this thing calls for wages and working conditions well below union scale," he said. "The Braniff people might agree to some pretty cost-efficient contracts because it's better than the unemployment line, but there might be repercussions at PSA."

"Basically, this is very tentative," Fried said of the joint venture. "I would have to adopt a wait-and-see attitude until they give us some better information on the financial operations, the routes, and the traffic they expect."

Regan says Reagan has 'right antidotes'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan says top government officials worry about the possibility of the economy sliding "into a deeper recession or even a depression." But he believes President Reagan has the "right antidotes."

Regan said concern over the recession prompted the Federal Reserve Board to loosen its grip on the nation's money supply this past summer, and it was this move that led to a decline in interest rates and the three-month surge on Wall Street.

The Fed, the nation's central bank, "is worried about the economy the same as we are," Regan said Monday in an interview with The Associated Press. "...We're (the administration) very worried because we worry about such things as unemployment. We worry about such things as having a sustained recovery in this country."

Regan said the Federal Reserve's policy-makers, who have been dampening inflation by restricting the growth of money and credit, "worry that if things don't go according to schedule, that if the recession becomes worse and goes more into a deeper recession or even a depression, that we would then have to take other steps."

"But I don't forecast that. They don't forecast that, but they have to worry about it," Regan said, noting, "I didn't say the Fed was scared. They're a difference between worry and being scared."

"They have to always look to see what else could happen. What is the worst that could happen," Regan said.

Regan said the central bank decided to let the money supply exceed the bank's growth targets for a while rather than try to force the money supply down abruptly.

"Now, why are they doing that? They are doing that because obviously they can see the condition of the economy as well as you and I can," Regan said, "and their reasoning is that if they err on the up side slightly, that isn't all that bad."

What Regan did not say was that if the Fed had decided to slow money growth to bring it back within its targets, interest rates might have gone higher and and an already fragile economy might have suffered an even more severe shock.

The bond markets "started to catch on to this in July, that the Fed was on this course," he said. "... Now, that being the case, interest rates started to come down. That's the barometer the stock market finally saw."

"The stock market is the best of the leading indicators," Regan added. "It's not infallible, but it has, on balance, predicted with a relative degree of accuracy recovery periods."

The current rally, he said, "is forecasting a very strong economy." The stock and bond market rallies continued Monday, with the Dow Jones industrial average rising 26 points to close at 1019, an 18-month high.

Many private analysts contend that the Fed's decision to loosen its grip on the money supply brought the economy back from the brink of a depression. These analysts consider the action a major shift in policy from fighting inflation to encouraging a recovery.

Fed Chairman Paul A. Volcker, however, has insisted that the bank is not changing policy but is merely making temporary adjustments for technical reasons.

Regan agreed Monday, saying: "I really don't think the Fed has changed policy."

He also rejected accusations that the Fed is playing pre-election politics with the administration by forcing interest rates down. "I don't suspect if we beat them over the head that politically they would react," he said, suggesting that the bank's motivation is based on its concern about the economy.

Asked how the administration intended to fulfill the president's pledge to help everyone who wants to work find a job, Regan said:

"The best thing the federal government can do is create the (economic) atmosphere and then let the private sector take over and do it. I don't think the federal government should get into the act of actually hiring people itself in order to make sure people are employed."

While conceding continuing concern about further economic deterioration, the treasury secretary said he personally believes the country is at the threshhold of a long-term recovery and low inflation.

Regan, who has been predicting since last winter that a recovery was imminent, said he remains optimistic that the economy would begin growing at a 3.5 percent to 4 percent annual rate this fall and sustain that expansion for several years without rekindling inflation.

If inflation stays down, he said, "and we keep the money supply in a slow, steady mode, we could prolong this recovery."

People demonstrate for alien set to die

MONTERREY, Mexico (AP) — More than 200 people demonstrated peacefully in this Nuevo Leon state capital as they started a "legal defense fund" for Ricardo Aldape Guerra, a Mexican illegal alien sentenced to die in Texas for murder.

The government newspaper El Nacional said the demonstration took place Sunday night in the Monterrey neighborhood where Guerra once lived. It quoted an uncle of the convicted man, Dagoberto Guerra Cuella, as saying he was sentenced to death because he was an undocumented worker.

"It seems that the authorities of the United States are interested in punishing a Mexican so that undocumented workers think about it and return to their country," the newspaper's Monday issue quoted the uncle as saying.

The amount collected for the legal defense fund was not immediately disclosed. The newspaper also said Guerra's family has sent President Jose Lopez Portillo a telegram appealing for his intervention, but the text was not disclosed.

A state court jury in Houston sentenced Guerra last Thursday to die by injection instead of receiving a life sentence. Guerra, 20, was convicted for shooting a police officer and a passing motorist dead on July 13 when he was stopped on a traffic violation.

The death sentence automatically is appealed under Texas law. The newspaper quoted the uncle as saying Guerrilla sold his bicycle and traveled to the United States on April 30, leaving a note behind to his parents saying he had gone to look for work.

survey for a candidate said she had noticed a difference in responses to the questions. "It used to be 'let me ask my husband,' and now the men are saying 'let me ask my wife,'" Ms. Oatman said in relating the woman's story.

On a short-term basis for Midland and Odessa, Ms. Oatman said the caucus will conduct an analysis of all women in elective and appointed offices in the two cities and put together a list of qualified women who are willing to serve on posts.

In addition, the caucus hopes to develop a coalition with other women's organizations, such as League of Women Voters, Junior League, American Association of University Women and Business & Professional Women.

"A lot of women are interested in women's issues, but they may not have the time to watch them. We want to start networking" with these women's organizations and pass on information concerning the issues out of the Caucus's Austin office, said Ms. Oatman.

FEC dismisses charge by Bentsen

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, — The Federal Election Commission has dismissed a charge by Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, that the National Conservative Political Action Committee is illegally financing the campaign of his opponent, Rep. James Collins, R-Dallas.

Bentsen last month asked the FEC to investigate reports that NCPAC has spent approximately $50,000 "in coordination and consultation with the Collins campaign" to defeat Texas' junior senator.

The Bentsen forces charged that the NCPAC money, which has been spent on anti-Bentsen campaign advertising, should be considered an illegal campaign contribution. Federal election laws do not permit a PAC to contribute more than $5,000 to any single candidate.

In its complaint filed with the FEC, the Bentsen campaign noted that NCPAC pollster Arthur Finkelstein is serving as a "campaign consultant" to the Collins campaign. NCPAC also has run a series of campaign commercials in Texas echoing Collins' attack of Bentsen's voting record.

But the FEC ruled there is no evidence that Finkelstein has worked with NCPAC on the Bentsen campaign or any other Texas race, according to FEC spokesman Fred Eiland.

The commission did report that Finkelstein was once a member of NCPAC's board of directors and has served as a pollster for the right-wing group. But the FEC noted that federal election law requires some connection between Finkelstein and NCPAC in the Bentsen campaign to prove Bentsen's charge.

Bentsen, who has made NCPAC's role in the race a campaign issue, reiterated that Collins' campaign is actually being run by the conservative group based in Washington.

"There's a loophole in the law," said Jack Devore, a Bentsen campaign spokesman. "No reasonable person can not conclude that Collins and NCPAC are one in the same."

U.S. to support democratic change

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz says the United States is prepared to devote "new tools, new energies and new focus" to help promote democratic change in communist countries.

Shultz made the pledge Monday to a gathering of more than 60 scholars and other experts attending a State Department conference on ways to foster a peaceful evolution toward democracy in Marxist societies.

The conference was winding up today with a closed-door plenary session at which the conclusions of the discussions will be summarized.

The two-day meeting is a follow-up to a June speech by President Reagan in which he disclosed his intention to make democratization of communist countries an administration goal.

Polish workers ignore strike calls

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Workers in major Polish cities, facing the threat of being jailed or seeing their plants "militarized" by the martial law regime, appear to be ignoring new calls for strikes to protest the banning of Solidarity.

Reports from officials and Western sources in Warsaw, Gdansk, Nowa Huta and Krakow said factories in those cities were running normally Monday despite underground leaflets calling on workers to stay at home.

"The people are now scared," said a worker at the Ursus tractor factory in Warsaw's Huta Warszawa steelworks.

"There is also the threat of mobilization of Ursus," he said, referring to the government's militarization last week of the Lenin shipyards in Baltic port of Gdansk following strikes there Monday and Tuesday.

Union votes on anti-Israel resolution

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Iran has challenged the United States and Britain is trying to act as peacemaker at a U.N. agency conference dominated by a politically explosive proposal to expel Israel. The British delegate predicted such a move would "wreck" the agency.

Delegates to the International Telecommunications Union were expected to vote today on the anti-Israel resolution. Western officials predicted a close ballot and an ambassador from one of the non-aligned nations said the outcome hinged on the large contingent of black African countries.

The resolution poses the first test of anti-Israel sentiment among U.N. members since Secretary of State George Shultz declared Saturday that the United States would withdraw from the U.N. General Assembly if it expelled Israel.

A vote on an Arab resolution to that effect is tentatively scheduled Monday at U.N. headquarters in New York City.

El Al directors may propose sale

TEL AIV, Israel (AP) — The board of directors of El Al said today it will recommend that the national airline be liquidated and sold to private investors if workers don't accept a management proposal for a new labor contract.

A tentative agreement between the eight El Al unions and the company was reported Monday. But El Al management spokesmen said the workers later imposed unspecified new conditions.

Gabi Salzman, a spokesman for the unions, charged that the government was behind the breakdown in negotiations.

Japan's crime rate up 7.8 percent

TOKYO (AP) — Japan's crime rate rose 7.8 percent in 1981, soaring to a new post-war record, the Justice Ministry announced today.

In its annual report on crime, the ministry said a total of 1.46 million crimes were reported to authorities last year. It reported sharp increases in bank robbery, computer fraud and juvenile violence.

An estimated 1.26 million of the reported crimes involved larceny, the highest number since 1945, it said. A total of 303,000 youths under 20 were arrested during the year, another post-war record, it said.

Attacks forecast in area of El Salvador

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Military authorities say they expect new rebel attacks in the northeast province of Morazan, where leftist guerrillas are holding at least three towns gained in major offensives launched last week.

The guerrillas' clandestine Radio Venceremos said Monday night that rebel bands stopped an advance on the towns by an estimated 4,000 government troops. But military sources denied there had been any major fighting in the remote province Monday.

Col. Lisandro Cepeda, Morazan military commander, said the army expected the guerrillas, who have been fighting the U.S.-backed government for three years, to make new assaults on other towns in the near future.

Cepeda said government troops had pushed back a rebel attempt Sunday to seize Jocoatique, a town of 7,800 people 20 miles north of San Francisco Gotera, capital of the remote province.

Reporters were not allowed north of San Francisco Gotera, and other reports of the fighting were not available.

A military spokesman, who asked not to be identified, said the guerrilla-occupied towns of Perquin, San Fernando and Torola — all near the Honduran border — lacked strategic importance and the army would not try to retake them.

The spokesman said he was sure the guerrillas would leave on their own.

"I can assure you that by Friday of this week they will have left," he said. "It's the classic pattern: they arrive, they take over a town, they destroy, and when the food is gone they leave."

The spokesman claimed the recent guerrilla offensive in Morazan was only "a propaganda move to remind the people that they are still there" following a long period in which the guerrillas had not attempted a major push.

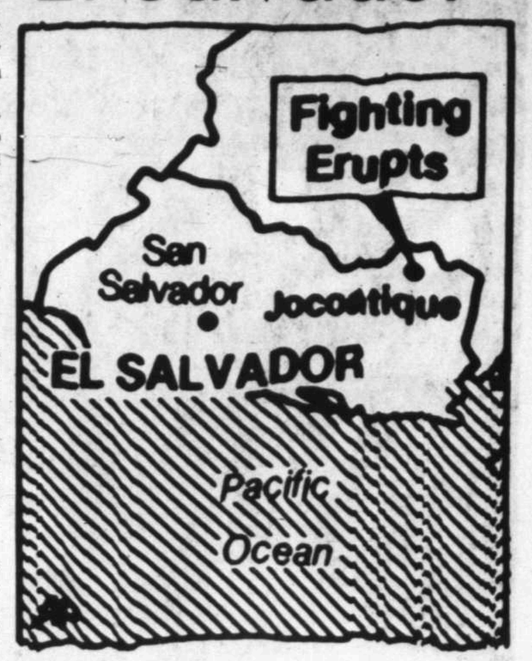
Officials have called the new rebel offensive the biggest and best-coordinated in six months.

The guerrillas took Perquin, San Fernando and Torola on Oct. 12, two days after they overran a military garrison and siezed the towns of Las Vueltas and El Jicaro in the northwestern Chalatenango province.

Las Vueltas, about 54 miles north of the capital, has about 5,000 residents, and nearby El Jicaro is a small village that does not appear in government population charts.

Radio Venceremos claimed Monday that guerrillas had stopped an army advance on Perquin, San Fernando and Torola, which have a combined population of about 13,000 and are in an area that has long been a guerrilla stronghold. It gave few details of the fighting.

The radio claimed Sunday that 189 soldiers were killed or wounded in last week's fighting, but gave no figures on guerrilla losses. The government said Saturday that 122 soldiers were killed or wounded and 153 rebels died.



Rivals expected to win seats in new Irish assembly

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — The Rev. Ian Paisley and Gerry Adams, old rivals in Northern Ireland's violent political-religious arena, are considered likely winners in an election Wednesday that is widely seen as a battle between extremists.

The new 78-member provincial assembly that will be chosen in the balloting is designed by the British to test whether Protestants and Roman Catholics can work together. It is the second such effort in eight years.

But there has been more sectarian violence in recent days, prompting authorities to step up security measures, and many political insiders believe the new legislature is doomed to collapse in Protestant-Catholic feuding.

Adams and Paisely, who are expected to win seats in the new assembly, represent the two extremes in the 13-year-old religious conflict.

Adams — chief of Sinn Fein, the political front of the outlawed Provisional Irish Republican Army — is a former guerrilla who has become the radical theorist of the nationalist movement fighting to unite Ireland after 60 years of partition.

Adams, a 33-year-old Catholic, has vowed not to take his seat, if he wins one Wednesday, as gesture of protest against British rule.

Paisley, leader of the pro-British Democratic Unionists, is the bullhorn-voiced chieftain of Protestant militants who violently oppose sharing power with Catholics. He has said he would use the new legislature to restore Protestant-majority rule — a move the British a pledged not to permit.

The election is the first contested by Sinn Fein under its own banner since the "Provos" were formed in 1969. The party is fielding 12 of the 184 candidates.

Adams and Sinn Fein seek to prove they have the support of Northern Ireland's 500,000-strong Catholic minority for the guerrilla campaign to join the province with the overwhelmingly Catholic Irish Republic.

Paisley wants to demonstrate that the Democratic Unionists, pledged to restore Protzstant rule over Northern Ireland, are the true voice of the province's 1 million Protestants and that he is their undisputed leader.

Conor Cruise O'Brien, one of Ireland's top political commentators, warned: "If the Paisleyites and the Provos were to do really well, that would signal a general drift towards civil war."

The assembly initially will have only an advisory role. But Britain's Northern Ireland secretary, James Prior, hopes to give it power over such matters as trade and education if it is shown that Protestants and Catholics can work together.

Under the British plan, London will yield legislative power to the assembly only if 70 percent of the assembly members approve, thus guaranteeing a Catholic voice.

The assembly is the latest effort by Britain to find a power-sharing formula for the province, ruled directly from London since the Protestant-controlled Parliament was suspended in 1972. An attempt to set up a power-sharing assembly in 1974 failed after Protestant militants held a 15-day general strike.

Adams and Paisley are campaigning in the militant heartlands of Ulster's divided society — Adams in the grimy back streets of west Belfast, Paisley in the Presbyterian bible belt of County Antrim.

Flanked by four police bodyguards, Paisley strides the streets of Ballymena, his power base, behind a parade of cheerleaders and bands.

Adams is more low-key as he knocks on doors drumming up votes from traditionally indifferent Catholic residents of the ghettos where he is well known.

"There's no backing off our support for the armed struggle," declared the former Provo guerrilla leader who was twice jailed by the British. "We believe the IRA has the legitimate right to resist the British occupation of this part of Ireland by physical force."

On Monday, Robert Overend Jr., son of a Protestant Ulster Unionist candidate, was slightly wounded when explosives planted along a road went off under his vehicle, police said. The elder Overend blamed the attack on the IRA, but no group claimed reponsibility.

In the border town of Newry, two gunmen escaped after bursting into a grammar school classroom and shooting Principal David Wright in front of his horrified 10- and 11-year-old pupils.

Florida congressman, Pepper, regarded by constituents with awe

MIAMI (AP) — Claude D. Pepper, is 82, white-haired, bulbous-nosed and paunchy. He wears two hearing aids, triple-focus glasses, a pacemaker in his chest and two plastic valves in his heart.

"Claude Pepper is the sexiest man in America," says Ann Lewis, political director of the Democratic National Committee. "I get more requests for him than for Robert Redford, Paul Newman and Warren Beatty combined.

"A visit by Claude Pepper is the No. 1 favor I can do for a Democratic candidate."

Pepper is the oldest member of Congress. In 1937, the same year that 26-year-old Ronald Reagan was making his first movie in Hollywood, Pepper was casting his first vote on the floor of the U.S. Senate.

Today, his re-election for an 11th House term from the Miami area is such a cinch that Pepper is spending the campaign roaming the country, denouncing President Reagan and hustling votes for scores of other Democratic candidates.

"The Republicans want to cut us off from the future," says Pepper, an unregenerate New Dealer who began his political career under Franklin D. Roosevelt.

"WE BELIEVE that the government should be the instrument of the people who legitimately deserve better," he says. "That is what we are fighting for. That's not radical. It's common sense."

Pepper estimates he will have visited no fewer than 29 states before Election Day in an effort to rouse voters against the "dogmatist" Reagan.

Back home, Pepper has seen the character of his 18th Congressional District change dramatically in the past 20 years. Where poor and middle-class Jews once were the most powerful voting bloc, the district now is a crazy quilt of ethnics and minorities.

Less than four miles from the open-air cafeterias and domino parlors of Little Havana's Calle Ocho lie the Jewish butcher shops and apartment hotels of Miami Beach. Riot-scarred Liberty City and other poor black neighborhoods are Pepper's constituents along with swankily Republican Coral Gables, former President Nixon's winter home on Key Biscayne and at least 4,000 Puerto Ricans and 2,000 Haitian-Americans.

A symbol of the district's transformation is Pepper's Republican opponent, Ricardo Nunez, 49, a businessman and politician who was the first Cuban-American presidential appointee as head of the Cuban Refugee Assistance Program.

Nunez's primary battle against Cuban-born lawyer Manuel Iglesias, 27, left Miami's Cuban community almost evenly divided, with 55.5 percent backing Nunez and 44.5 percent for his opponent, who was active in the Reagan-Bush campaign in 1980.

TONY CATARELLO, who was Nunez's campaign manager, expresses hope that "we can all work together" against Pepper. Nunez acknowledges that he faces a formidable opponent.

"He is now a monument. But Frank Church, William Fulbright — they were also monuments...before they were beaten," Nunez says.

Even if the fractured Cuban community unites behind him, Nunez believes, it will take $300,000 from the Republican Party and an alliance of conservative Cubans and "anglos" to retire Pepper.

"It all depends on the White House. It all depends on Washington," Nunez says, but so far he hasn't received "one nickel" in national GOP campaign funds.

The last time Pepper suffered defeat at the polls was in 1950. In a legendary speech before a rural audience that year, a primary opponent said Pepper's sister was a "thespian," that the senator "practiced celibacy" before marriage, and that he was a "shameless extrovert."

Photos were circulated showing Pepper, an opponent of racial discrimination, shaking hands with blacks. The liberal senator was dubbed "Red Pepper," and he lost his seat.

Pepper returned to Washington in 1962 as a House member. Since then he has become a hero to elderly voters for his impassioned defense of Social Security and his attention to the needs of his constituents.

"BRING HOME the bacon?" Pepper says, his chin bobbing. "I try to. I work hard at it, you can bet on that."

A $64 million beach restoration project in Miami Beach, the Mildred and Claude Pepper Towers in Miami and the Claude Pepper Park in North Miami all bear witness to his ability to keep federal dollars flowing into his district.

Pepper's office receives pleas from throughout the state for help in straightening out problems with Social Security and food stamps. A line forms daily at his Miami office, where Cubans seek citizenship for their relatives, law students ask for help on the bar exam and young Haitian mothers appeal their evictions when they give birth.

Pepper promises to press his fight for a national health care system "that would entitle every American to the care they need at a price they can afford," and to oppose Reagan and his economics.

The president, he says, is "not a bad man, but like someone who believes Laetrile can cure cancer. That doesn't make it happen."

Nunez claims Pepper can be defeated, but he must contend with voters who regard the congressman with something approaching awe.

"WHEN THE LORD made that man, He knew he had done good," says Charles Hadley, 72, a retired social worker.

Bickering over negative political TV ads overshadows candidates' differences on issues

WASHINGTON (AP) — The 1982 political season is marked by so many negative political campaigns that bickering over the content of TV commercials often seems to overshadow candidates' differences on the issues.

The use of filmed nuclear explosions to make points brought national attention to races in California and Washington State.

Wilson complained of "innuendo by graphics."

Seattle City Attorney Doug Jewett, running against Washington Democrat Henry Jackson for his Senate seat, has a commercial that opens with an orange cloud mushrooming above the horizon. It cuts to black-and-white photographs of Hiroshima victims, then to a photo of Jackson, and a voice says: "He has resisted the efforts of Presidents Kennedy, Nixon, Ford and Carter to curb the arms race."

JEWETT SAID his intent was to counter a commercial that showed Jackson walking on the beach, talking of eliminating nuclear arms.

The Brown commercial in California was withdrawn after one week of controversy, but campaign manager Jack Mayesh said that was the intent all along.

"Other spots took three weeks to make an impact," he said. "With that one we wanted to move in and out and get their views on the record. We couldn't get that with Brown saying 'I'm for a nuclear freeze.'"

The impact Mayesh sought was quick in coming. Wilson was outraged, former President Ford called the commercial demagoguery, and newspapers editorialized against it.

Mayesh said the flap came from opinion makers only; that a newspaper call-in poll showed 62 percent of the public was not disturbed by it.

"I didn't get votes from that spot," Mayesh said. "I got votes I think I had already. But I got the focus for one week."

The granddaddy of nuclear commercials was one that Democrats used for Lyndon Johnson in his presidential race against Sen. Barry Goldwater in 1964. The ad showed a little girl plucking petals from a daisy while a clock ticked down to zero. The next scene was of a nuclear blast. The commercial made no mention of Goldwater, but it was pulled off the air after Republicans yelled "innuendo" and "libel per se."

IN MAINE, a spokesman for Rep. David F. Emery, who is running for the Senate, was unhappy about the commercials of his opponent, incumbent Sen. George J. Mitchell.

The spokesman accused Mitchell of capitalizing on some unintentional errors Emery had made about Mitchell's record and of trying "to get the voters to think that whenever Dave Emery clears his throat or wishes an elderly lady a cheerful good morning, it's likely to be a distortion."

Even in Maine, political candidates are shelling out nearly $2 million in radio and television campaigns.

"You have to fear a negative campaign when your side stays positive, but unfortunately, negative campaigns have a history of being successful," said James Mackey, who is guiding the re-election media campaign of Gov. Joseph E. Brennan.

Secretary of State Rodney Quinn puts it more succinctly: "The method now is money and salesmanship. Money buys you the best advertising agency possible."

The National Conservative Political Action Committee is spending hundreds of thousands of dollars on negative advertising. Long before there was a challenger to Democratic Sen. Paul Sarbanes in Maryland, NCPAC was running commercials against him.

In North Dakota, Republican Gene Knorr, running for the Senate, called a radio commercial by incumbent Sen. Quentin Burdick "a new low in taste." The offending ad stated that Knorr had not lived in the state for 20 years as he claimed.

KNORR, A former Washington, D.C., lobbyist who moved back to the state in 1981, says he played a major role in operating a family farm in North Dakota even while he was working in Washington and has spent as much, if not more, time in the state than Burdick during Burdick's 22 years in the Senate.

A commercial for Republican Gov. Lamar Alexander in his re-election bid in Tennessee focuses on challenger Randy Tyree's failure to carry Knox County in the Democratic primary. "We find one of the most interesting questions about the campaign to date has been why the mayor of Knoxville lost the city of Knoxville in the primary," said Alexander's campaign press secretary.

Tyree said the Alexander people are trying to discredit him as mayor.

In Mississippi, a commercial by Sen. John C. Stennis upset challenger Haley Barbour so much he asked that it not be shown. Barbour complained the spot gave the impression Stennis still is chairman of the Armed Services Committee. When the Republicans took control of the Senate two years ago, Stennis lost his chairmanship. He is ranking Democrat on the committee.

Reagan: Don't let Democrats 'bully us' on economy issue

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a closed-circuit campaign pep talk two weeks before the Nov. 2 elections, President Reagan has told fellow Republicans not to let Democrats "bully us" on the issue of the nation's economy.

Reagan made his televised remarks via satellite Monday night to 20 Republican fund raising gatherings around the nation. He made a similar electronic campaign appearance last week.

The president told the Republicans not to be pushed around on economic issues, saying "the economy is a banner we can wave, not something to hide behind."

He also repeated his campaign theme that inflation, interest rates, taxes and government spending are down, with unemployment the only one of five economic problems that has yet to respond to administration initiatives.

The Labor Department reported Oct. 8 that the jobless rate had climbed to 10.1 percent, the highest since the Great Depression.

"For too long the economy was a locomotive that had been rolling backwards down the hill," Reagan said. "Well, we have stopped that slide, and we are once again heading upward toward better times. You can feel America's economic engines rev up again."

The facilities for the satellite transmission were made available to the Republican National Committee by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, which has an elaborate broadcasting studio near the White House.

The Rebublican National Committee and the individual campaigns picked up the cost of the telecast.

The candidates, whose campaigns helped bear the expense of the broadcast, are Andy Anderson, running for governor of Hawaii; Skip Bafalis, candidate for governor of Florida; and the following congressional candidates: Pete Collomb and Joe Wyatt of Texas, Bill Cobey of North Carolina, Paul Costello of New York, Harold Dielman of Missouri, Shirley Gissendanner of California, Thomas Hartnett of South Carolina, Joan Houchen of Washington, John LeBoutillier of New York, John Mahoney of New Jersey, Ron McNeil of Florida, Howard Nielson of Utah, George O'Brien of Illinois, Keith Pillich of New York, Ray Readington of New Jersey, Tom Trimarco of Massachusetts, Tom Weins of Colorado, Dick Winder of Georgia, Bill Royer of California and Bill Thomas of California.

East Texan still missing

SULPHUR SPRINGS (AP) — East Texas authorities continued searching for a former Braniff airline executive missing since Thursday, but said they have found scant evidence to explain his mysterious disappearance.

Law officers have found only a pair of gloves that might have belonged to Edson Emerson Beckwith, 51, of Dallas.

E.E. Beckwith

Texas Ranger Lloyd Johnston of Sulphur Springs found the gloves along Interstate 30, the major east-west thoroughfare through the area. The gloves, he said, "looked like they had blood or mud on them."

Authorities said Monday they planned to perform laboratory tests on the gloves, but say they have no evidence of a crime and are treating the disappearance as a missing person case.

But Jane Beckwith says her husband is not the type to disappear of his own accord.

"He's always been most prompt. He is a most precise man, a meticulous man," she said.

She said Beckwith, a financial consultant, was traveling west to Dallas after a Thursday business meeting in Omaha, Texas.

"He was coming home for my birthday to take me out to dinner. The people at his meeting said he wanted to leave early to pick up a birthday present for his wife," he said.

"I haven't heard of any ransom. Nothing. It's just incredible," she said.

On Sunday, Mrs. Beckwith formed a volunteer search party of neighbors to assist authorities in the East Texas hunt.

A Texas Ranger found Beckwith's car shortly before midnight Friday in Brashear, Texas, about 40 miles east of a Caddo Mills service station where a receipt showed he had purchased gasoline.

"Somebody else had to have driven (the car) back east," Mrs. Beckwith said. "There was no evidence of anything in the car. All the keys, his suitcase and coat were still there. They say there is no evidence of foul play, but obviously something went on.

"It's all very frustrating," she said. "I can't imagine. We are all just absolutely boggled."

Johnston said he found a "reliable witness" Monday morning who saw Beckwith's car Thursday evening at the spot where it was found Friday night.

"We haven't been able to trace it back farther than that yet," said Johnston, who led a search of both sides of Interstate 30 Sunday.

Johnston said another witness claimed to have seen Beckwith being forced into another car.

"But I don't put much credibility in that statement," Johnston said. "He could have just seen some kids stopping to look at the car," he said.

Mrs. Beckwith said she would not let their three children join the search.

"I didn't let them go out in case they found their father," she said.

Motorist drives on after moving body

HOUSTON (AP) — The body of a 67-year-old woman who plunged to her death from the 12th story of the Grand Hotel was moved from the street by a motorist, who then drove away, witnesses told police.

The victim, Iva Newton Altgelt of San Antonio, fell onto a busy street Monday, police said.

The motorist stopped and moved the body to a sidewalk before driving away, according to homicide detective David Preece.

"It could be called a cold act, but it might have been a humanitarian act. A car could have come along and flattened her like a beer can," said Preece.

Larry Moore, the hotel's office manager, said Ms. Altgelt was registered as a guest.

Man once afraid of testifying returns to stand for prosecution

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A man who once went to jail to avoid testifying before a grand jury investigating the murder of U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr. returns to the stand today as a key prosecution witness in the trial of three people charged in the judge's slaying.

George Edward "Pete" Kay, 40, is a friend of Charles V. Harrelson and lived for five years with Harrelson's wife, Jo Ann.

Harrelson, 44, is charged with filling a $250,000 murder contract by shooting Wood in the back here May 29, 1979. His wife is being tried for perjury and obstruction of justice.

On trial for murder conspiracy and obstruction of justice is Elizabeth Chagra, 28, wife of Jimmy Chagra, the high-rolling narcotics dealer who allegedly hired Harrelson to shoot Wood.

Chagra, 39, was scheduled for trial before Wood when the judge was killed. He will be tried separately for murder later.

Kay was jailed five days for contempt of court in March 1981 when he refused to testify before the grand jury, even after U.S. District Judge William S. Sessions granted him immunity from prosecution.

Kay contended his life had been threatened, saying his choice was "jail or death." After being jailed, however, Kay relented and testified in July 1981.

He testified Monday that he began living with the future Mrs. Harrelson, 41, in the early 1970s after meeting her at a Houston gambling game.

Kay and Mrs. Harrelson met Chagra and his late brother, Lee, while running private gambling games in El Paso in the mid-1970s, Kay testified.

Kay said he argued with Chagra, who had refused to pay him a $5,000 gambling debt. Eventually, Kay told jurors, he pulled a pistol on Chagra and forced him to give him half the money.

Later, at the insistence of Lee Chagra, whom Kay described as "maybe one of the best friends I ever had," Kay said he and Chagra met — armed with pistols — to work out their differences.

"I saw him numerous times after that," he said.

Lee Chagra was representing Kay on Oklahoma murder charges in December 1978 when Chagra was killed during a robbery. Kay later was acquitted.

Former car salesman and gambler Ron Collier testified earlier Monday he was present when Mrs. Harrelson introduced "her new husband" — Harrelson — to Jimmy Chagra in Las Vegas, Nev., in late April 1979.

Attend the oil show!

The Permian Basin Oil Show is more than an exhibition of new equipment, new services and new techniques. Ture, it is all of that. And in that sense it is a forum for oil industry firms to swap information beneficial to the entire industry.

But the show, held every two years in Odessa, generates a lot of interest for the entire West Texas area. That's because it's educational and cultural. Oil flows through the heritage of this region so deeply that it will never be depleted.

The importance of oil in the nation's overall energy picture has focused even greater attention on the oil industry in the Permian Basin, worldwide and on the politicians and bureaucrats who, to a large degree, control the life forces of this vital industry. Americans are more knowledgeable today of the industry, its economics and its impact on society.

Literally hundreds of thousands of West Texans and others will be in attendance at this year's show, which gets under way Wednesday at Ector County Coliseum. Every resident of either Midland, Odessa or surrounding area cities should make plans to attend becauuse the oil show is a celebration. It's a celebration of the men, women and machines that bring the black gold up from untold depths, who refine it into the various products that power automobiles, heat homes and help make our lives better in so many ways.

It's a celebration of the heritage of this part of Texas and of the people who had the foresight and the determination to keep trying even when the obstacles facing them and their industry seemed insurmountable.

Take time this week to attend the 1982 version of the Permian Basin Oil Show. Chances are it will make you a little more knowledgeable of the oil industry and the men and women who comprise it. If you're involved directly with the industry, you'll probably benefit from the mounds of information available at the show. In either respect, your attendance at the show could be a cultural awakening that will enhance your appreciation of the Permian Basin.

Bonanza for recruiters

During the tragic Vietnam days and for some time after that conflict, a large percentage of American youth tended to cast the military forces of this country in the role of pariah.

Some rethinking now seems to be taking place. A recent surge of volunteer enlistments in all four of the nation's armed services has boosted their recruiting programs to 103 percent of their goals. And, importantly, the recruiters affirm, the "quality is up" among the fledgling soldiers, sailors, airmen and marines.

Widespread unemployment in private industry, of course, is one major factor that is sending young men and women to the recruiting stations. But it is not the only factor. The youths seeking military careers today obviously are not motivated by the despair and desperation that sent many Dust Bowl kids into the services during the depressed 1930s.

The mood of the new recruits is positively upbeat — and pragmatic. The armed services all of a sudden appear to offer steady careers of adventure, challenge and intellectual expansion. Moreover, even an army private can collect a bigger check than by standing in an unemployment office compensation line.

Wall Street's upswing

There's no denying good news, and the stock market rally — despite President Reagan's attempt to make political hay of it — is good news indeed.

What set the stock market soaring was the Federal Reserve Board's decision the other day to ignore money-supply indicators for a while and concentrate instead on bringing down interest rates. Although the Fed is trying to minimize the significance of this change — calling it merely a temporary respite while it figures out what the money-supply indicators mean — Wall Street seems determined to read it as a harbinger of even better news to come. The hope that lower interest rates will make money available for industrial investment and consumer borrowing — and the fact that with lower interest rates alternative investments don't seem nearly so attractive — sent investors to the stock market in droves.

Actually, this signal of the business community's optimism is at least as important as the Fed's new policy. So much of economics is psychology, and so little of what makes interest rates drop or money supplies grow is within the Fed's control; when industry believes it can afford to raise funds for investment, that means as much to the economy as the Fed decisions that trigger these hopeful moods.

The trick now is to sustain the mood — past the election, past next month's predictable battery of depressing economic statistics and, equally important, past the onslaught of new borrowing (which will push interest rates back up again) and new wage demands that are sure to accompany any significant upturn.

If the Fed's burst of interest rate enthusiasm turns out to be no more than its traditional pre-election boosterism, the bottom could quickly fall out of the stock market boom. And if the Fed sticks to its new "temporary" policy for any length of time, Wall Street's good mood could still turn sour as soon as it notices that, without the Fed to depress things, the country has no anti-inflation policy.

To sustain the upbeat psychology of this period at the stock market — to make sure it develops into something more promising than a mere gambler's spree — both the president and Congress will have to act, not just try to take credit for the Fed's change of heart and Wall Street's first sign of bullishness since the Reagan administration honeymoon.

They will have to demonstrate a serious intention to keep interest rates and inflation rates down with federal spending and taxing policies that reduce the deficit and encourage wage and price moderation. They also will have to demonstrate a commitment to reindustrialization that investors and manufacturers can pin their new hopes to. They must stake out a policy of fostering productive industrial investments, controlling nonproductive business spending binges and cutting back on subsidies and other kinds of bailouts for inefficient and outdated companies.

Equally important, they will have to figure out a way to pay for these policies that is fair to the public. A policy, like that of the past two years, of holding down inflation by driving up unemployment and of paying for business investment incentives by depleting social programs is, among other things, not credible. It is too unfair for anyone to count on it lasting long enough to work.

After nearly two years of disheartening economic news, the new signs of life on Wall Street are welcome indeed. But Wall Street's positive thinking can't be sustained indefinitely on a discount rate and a prayer.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Ignoring Iran-Iraq war dangerous for U.S.

WASHINGTON — While the Reagan administration has been preoccupied with Lebanon, it has been virtually ignoring a far more important problem a few hundred miles to the east: the Iran-Iraq war.

Jack Anderson

Lebanon has little strategic importance to the United States. Iran, on the other hand, is vital to our interests. It has always served as a roadblock to Soviet expansion toward the Persian Gulf oilfields on which the Western World depends.

But the exigencies of war have endangered Iran's status as a buffer state. In his hour of need, Ayatollah Khomeini has turned to the Soviet bloc for replenishment of his war machine.

For their part, the crafty cynics in the Kremlin are perfectly willing to play both ends against the middle, furnishing arms to both Iran and Iraq. Continuing chaos in the Middle East serves Russia's purposes as effectively as a victory for one side or the other. And the longer the war goes on, the more likely it is that chaos will engulf the entire region.

The war has taken a fearful toll in lives and materiel. Even conservative intelligence estimates place the number killed at 80,000, with an additional 20,000 wounded and 45,000 taken prisoner. (The ratio of killed to wounded, the reverse of most wars, reflects the ferocity of the conflict and the primitive quality of the medical care.)

In addition, a vast amount of military hardware has been destroyed. Both countries are increasingly relying on the Soviet bloc for replacements.

When the war began two years ago, 70 percent of Iraq's equipment was Soviet-made. Last year, the Russians sent Iraq 400 T-55 tanks from Poland and 250 T-72s. Intelligence sources told my associate Dale Van Atta there are 8,000 Soviet advisers in Iraq.

Meanwhile, there have been reports of anywhere from 50 to 200 North Koreans attached to the Iranian armed forces on the Iraqi front. The Russians have encouraged both their Syrian and North Korean clients to provide Iran with armored personnel carriers, air defense systems, 130-millimeter guns and small arms.

The Soviets have also expanded their own influence in Tehran by providing military and intelligence advisers and by bolstering the Iranian communist party, Tudeh. When Khomeini finally passes from the scene, the Russians clearly intend to occupy positions of strength for the turmoil that seems sure to follow.

Israel is supplying some backdoor military aid to Iran — a shrewd move to cultivate close ties with the Iranian army, which is the most likely successor to Khomeini. Just as the United States has been beholden to Israel for most of its intelligence information out of post-shah Iran, so we may have to go begging to Israel for introductions to some new post-Khomeini military regime.

Though the United States is officially neutral in the Iran-Iraq war, as a practical matter the Reagan administration won't tilt toward Iran, both because of the residual bitterness over the American hostages and because it would outrage our moderate Arab friends like Jordan and Saudi Arabia, which are desperately afraid an Iranian victory would spread Khomeini's revolution.

Yet there is no ignoring Iran's strategic position, which far transcends that of Iraq — to say nothing of Lebanon's. Dr. Joseph Churba, the farsighted director of the Center for International Security, says the Reagan administration has "misplaced the focus of its Middle East policy on Beirut and the Palestinian issue," and explains:

"The outcome there is marginal when compared to the (Persian) Gulf, which is the epicenter of world politics. Unless we devise a policy thwarting potential Soviet predominance (there), Europe will be further neutralized and the U.S. isolated to the point of genuine jeopardy."

The Kremlin couldn't have devised a worse policy for the United States, he concluded.

LAUNDERED JUNKET: Four members of Congress, some with families and staff, tootled off to Tokyo last July to take a look at Japan's so-called bullet trains. The Japanese want to export their high-speed train technology to the United States.

Since Japanese technological competition is a sore point among American businessmen and labor unions, the legislators took pains to point out that the trip was not being paid for by the Japanese in an attempt to influence Congress. Nor were the American taxpayers paying for the junket.

The funding came from the Aspen Institute, a non-profit think tank.

But where did the Aspen Institute get the money? From the Japanese Railroad Technology Corp., a profit-seeking outfit set up in this country to promote the sale of Japanese train technology.

The Japanese used the good offices of Allen Boyd, board chairman of the U.S. High Speed Rail Corp., a company set up with Amtrak personnel and money to develop high-speed trains in this country. The company has accepted a $5 million grant from a Japanese foundation.

Boyd contacted an old friend, Joe Slater, president of the Aspen Institute, who agreed to take the money from the Japanese Railroad Technology Corp. and use it to finance the congressional trip.

The four members of Congress were Sen. David Durenberger, R-Minn., and Reps. James Florio, D-N.J., William Lehman, D-Fla., and the late Adam Benjamin Jr., D-N.Y. Spokesmen said they didn't know the Japanese were paying for the trip. Two members said they probably wouldn't have gone if they had known it.

INSIDE REPORT:

Cuomo groping for new tactics in race

WOODBURY, N.Y. — A distress signal was sounded to Nassau County Democrats on Long Island last week when their candidate for governor, Mario Cuomo, suddenly raised an exotic issue: the gold standard.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

"You know who's for the gold standard?" Cuomo asked in stand-up, night-club comic style. "Lew Lehrman, one guy in Russia, one guy in South Africa. The other two guys have cornered the market on gold." Party faithful attending the $125-a-plate dinner seemed puzzled but laughed anyway, which was more reaction than Lt. Gov. Cuomo got twice earlier in the day when he brought up gold for the first time in the campaign.

Businessman-scholar Lewis Lehrman, Republican nominee for governor, is indeed a devoted hard-money man, but he has not mentioned gold in this campaign. That Cuomo would do so in an effort to show Lehrman as a bit nutty betrays his groping for new tactics in a race far closer than it was supposed to be.

Cuomo did not get the expected upward surge from his Sept. 23 primary upset over New York City Mayor Edward Koch. Instead, all polls (including private Democratic tracking last Thursday night) show Cuomo hanging onto an insignificant 4 percentage-point lead. Financed largely out of his personal fortune, Lehrman's yearlong television blitz has established him in the public mind as a tax-cutter concerned about jobs and crime.

"I'm worried," Cuomo told the Democrats here. "We have an awful lot at stake on Nov. 2." Indeed, pioneer supply-sider Lehrman represents the best hope nationally for radical economic reform, pressing faithfully toward a tax-reduction, economic-growth model partially abandoned by Ronald Reagan. For Lehrman to win a state that long has been a citadel of bipartisan liberalism would invigorate downhearted right-wing populists nationally.

One reason Cuomo worries is that he is running below levels in the suburbs usually needed for a statewide Democratic win. His attacks on Lehrman as "the architect of Reaganomics" have little appeal in Nassau County, where unemployment is less than 5 percent thanks to generous transfusions of defense spending.

Besides, for well over a year Lehrman has not disguised his impatience with the Reagan administration's timid economic policies, leading Cuomo to charge Lehrman with espousing a "radical" form of Reaganomics. Before his speech here, Cuomo showed us a John Birch Society newspaper containing a long interview with Lehrman. In conversation with us, he three times linked Lehrman as an associate of notorious supply-siders Arthur Laffer and Jude Wanniski.

But Democratic insiders doubt New Yorkers are interested in John Birchers, supply-siders or the gold standard. Cuomo's problem in the suburbs is his intimate alliance with his party's dominant elitist wing. Democratic politicians here believe Cuomo will take a bath in Nassau — unless he can move to the center in the next two weeks.

He is trying to do that by calling himself a fiscal conservative and gingerly joining the tax-cut camp. But one Democratic operative complains: "Mario worries about what the Village Voice (the left-wing weekly) thinks about what he's going to say." To such politicians, he depends too much on the good opinion of avant garde journalists Jimmy Breslin and Jack Newfield. Advice that Cuomo must shore up his Italian heritage, even if it means brazenly-xenophobic televison commercials, has been ignored.

Instead, Cuomo harps on Lehrman's daring 40 percent New York state tax-cut proposal, the cutting edge of Lehrman's campaign, against the advice of cautious aides. The Cuomo camp was overjoyed when Republican-Conservative state Sen. John Marchi, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, last week withheld support for Lehrman because of the tax proposal.

Marchi is not alone. Establishment Republicans regard Lehrman as a bad dream from which the party will soon awake. State Controller Ned Regan, the only Republican in state office, likes the Lehrman plan no better than Marchi does. The Cuomo camp hopes Regan will get up courage to oppose it if Cuomo opens up a lead in the polls.

This is less a partisan struggle than a choice between radical change and bipartisan status quo. When asked at a press conference about Marchi's defection, Lehrman ignored the senator and declared: "I'm not running for office to uphold the failed policies of the past. I believe in change. I intend to do the things that partisan politicians have believed impossible."

After seeming in late summer to back away from tax reduction, Lehrman now has pinned everything on public desire to throw off the government's yoke. The Cuomo camp is considering a new television commercial that attacks the 40 percent tax cut. That would further clarify the choice, with broad implications for the future of national politics.

Asphalt plant points listed

To The Editor:

Regarding the Oct. 12th city council meeting in which the decision was made by the council to deny a permit for an asphalt plant outside the city of Midland, here are some points worth considering:

1. Midland County homebuyers have chosen to buy outside the city in order to avoid city ordinances and city taxes. Therefore, the only protection they have are deed restrictions, if any, when they purchase the land. Since they have chosen to buy outside the city to avoid city controls, it is absurd that they ask for the city to take action against developers who have also chosen to locate outside the city, and outside the city's jurisdiction. If the buyer chooses to buy outside the city to avoid city ordinances, taxes, etc., I say, "Let The Buyer Beware."

2. If the city of Midland loses a possible lawsuit with the developers of the asphalt plant, the city would have to pay damages. You can be sure the councilmen are not going to pay any damages out of their pockets. It will come out of the city taxpayers' pockets.

3. Finally, what about the existing cement plant near Skyview Addition? It is not far from the asphalt plant, yet there have been no outcries about it. This is inconsistent.

In my opinion, the above observations need to be taken into consideration.

Gordon G. Jennings
Midland

Is fee for real?

To The Editor:

Recently, I called Energas and asked them how much it would cost if I didn't use any gas at all for the month (of course I have an all electric home). The girl I talked to informed me it would cost me $4.46.

I placed the call at 11 a.m. on Oct. 5, 1982; by now I'm not sure what the charge is! Well, I was shocked. I asked her why the gas company charged $4.46 a month to allow customers to be attached to their gas line. The girl said it was "because we have to keep customers' names on the books and the meters have to be read anyway."

Friend, I ask you, what business do you know as an individual that can charge folks money just for being associated with them? When I come to work and don't sell anything, they don't pay me for coming into the office; they say, "Tough, go sell something." Then there is the postscript, "Life is hard!"

It was impossible for me to believe that Midland Energas was out of line on their minimum charges, so I called El Paso, Texas, our sister-on-the-border. Would you believe $1.92 is what their minimum charge is?

Larry Pitts

Crime? Bingo!

To The Editor:

Some years ago there was a riot in a jail. I believe it was in Dallas or Fort Worth. The prisoners were raising so much cain it took a Texas Ranger to put a stop to it.

The story goes that he simply marched in and told them to cease and desist, which they did. When asked later why he risked his life by going in among all those hardened criminals alone, his reply was, "Well, there was only one riot, wasn't there? One riot; one Ranger."

This story proves that we really have some bad criminals here in Midland. It took Texas Rangers (plural; more than one) to stop a gang of outlaw women and children playing bingo at the V.F.W.

Tsk! Tsk! Crime is getting out of hand here. We had better do something fast.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, Oct. 19, the 292nd day of 1982. There are 73 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Oct. 19, 1954, Britain and Egypt reached agreement on evacuating troops from the Suez Canal zone.

On this date:

In 1781, British troops under Cornwallis were defeated at Yorktown, Va., as the Revolutionary War ended.

In 1944, American troops landed in the Philippines during World War II.

In 1973, Libya halted oil shipments to the United States in a dispute over Washington's Mideast policies.

Ten years ago: Treasury Secretary George Shultz said the Nixon administration would withhold funds authorized by Congress to keep federal spending at $250 billion.

Five years ago: South Africa banned black protest groups, closed the leading black newspaper in the country and arrested the editor and other blacks in raids.

One year ago: President Reagan and French President Francois Mitterrand took part in ceremonies commemorating the 200th anniversary of the Battle of Yorktown.

Today's birthday: Columnist Jack Anderson is 60.

Thought for today: "Only parents' love can last our lives" — Robert Browning, English poet (1812-1889).

Lena Horne cancels Dallas show because of ticket-price controversy

NEW YORK (AP) — Lena Horne has canceled an upcoming engagement of her Tony Award-winning musical in Dallas to avoid being "caught in the middle" of a local racial dispute, her publicist says.

The dispute involved a charity showing of "Lena Horne: The Lady And Her Music." Tickets to the opening night show were to range from $50 to $600, with proceeds to go to "Action for Cultural Arts," which promotes arts in Dallas.

When ticket prices were announced, City Councilwoman Elsie Faye Heggens, who is black, charged that the price was a form of discrimination against blacks.

"This was to have been a charitable event," Miss Horne said in a statement released Monday by the public relations firm of Solters, Roskin and Friedman Inc.

"Charity is something which should be supported by people who can afford it...regardless of their color," Miss Horne said.

"I have had a history of being involved in controversies where words like 'racism' and 'discrimination' were used," she said. "I don't run away from controversy."

But, she added, "Ms. Heggens used my name to draw national attention to a local issue, and I was made a pawn of some local politicians. I do not want to be caught in the middle of a local dispute."

Mrs. Heggens could not be reached for comment late Monday. A man answering a telephone call to her home said she was not there.

Johnny Carson

St. Cloud Co. and Carson Productions Inc. are being sued for $15 million, Paramount attorney Terry Christensen said Monday.

The suit also seeks court orders directing the companies to turn over the skit material and barring the companies from selling them to anyone else.

Carson, initially named when the suit was filed Friday, was being removed as a defendant in an amended complaint filed at the request of Paramount, Christensen said.

The agreement, reached in September, involves "about 130 episodes of program material made up of Johnny Carson's skits — Karnak, the Mighty Carson Players, the skit material off of the 'Tonight' show," he added.

Jim Mahoney, a publicist for Carson, said Monday he would try to reach Carson's attorneys for comment, but no response was received. Mahoney said Carson would have no comment.

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Penniless pop singer Sheila Rossall, her emaciated body ravaged by allergies "to almost everything," has flown home to Bristol, England, on a chartered jet.

Miss Rossall was carried aboard the jet at Oakland International Airport on a stretcher Monday. The jet had been idle for several weeks so that no alcohol or tobacco fumes lingered.

Miss Rossall, 33, became a pop star in England in 1978 when she recorded "Love Me Just a Little Bit More," a No. 1 hit. Soon afterward she developed a syndrome which made her "allergic to the 20th century," said her physician, Dr. Joseph McGovern.

McGovern said Miss Rossall suffers seizures when exposed to hundreds of synthetic items, including printer's ink in money, plastic credit cards, newspapers, magazines, foam rubber and cleaning fluids.

Her weight, which had dropped to 52 pounds when she entered a Dallas clinic in 1981, is now "about 100 pounds," McGovern said.

"She'll survive," he said. "I think going back home will be very good for her. I hope old friends and family will help her. One of the problems here has been that she was isolated. There was nobody to watch her and help her. She requires constant attention."

Miss Rossall has signed a form promising the British government she would repay the estimated $37,000 cost of the trip, although McGovern says she is "totally broke." A "Save Sheila" fund raised $113,750 for Miss Rossall's initial treatment, but that fund is exhausted.

Miss Rossall had been living on charity in Bodega Bay, an oceanfront community 50 miles north of San Francisco. She became stranded here early last year after running out of money following treatment in Dallas. She had come to Bodega Bay for special dental work.

NEW YORK (AP) — Opera star Beverly Sills, an acclaimed soprano for nearly 30 years, has been named to the board of directors of Warner Communications Inc.

Miss Sills, who retired from opera and concert performances in 1980, has been general director of the New York City Opera for three years.

Warner Communications, posting 1981 earnings of $3.24 billion, is a diversified entertainment and communications concern, with interests in movies, recorded music and publishing. It also owns Atari Inc., the maker of video games and small computers.

The company's chairman, Steven J. Ross, said Monday that Miss Sills' "qualities of leadership, concern for others, and broad knowledge of all aspects of the arts make her a splendid addition to our board."

Miss Sills has been a director of R.H. Macy Co., the retailer, since 1980, Ross said. She also is a panelist on the National Endowment for the Arts.

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Cirrhosis doesn't always need treatment

Dear Dr. Solomon: My father says his doctor told him that he has cirrhosis but that he is not going to do anything about it. Is my father confused about what the doctor said? I'd like to know so that I could get him to another doctor if he needs treatment. — Seymour, Louisville, Ky.

Dear Seymour: Of course you always have the option of getting a second opinion, but your father's version of what his doctor told him could be completely accurate. Dr. Oliver James and his colleagues at the University of Newcastle upon Tyne, in England, report that many patients with primary biliary cirrhosis never develop overt symptoms of the disease and live out their normal lives.

Of 45 patients with the disease whom they studied, only one died within the eight- to 12-month period during which they were followed. This rate is comparable to that found in the general population.

Dear Dr. Solomon: A friend of mine was injured in an automobile accident. Although he's much better now and has even gone back to work, he is taking the kind of pills that people take who have seizures. Since he seems to be okay, why should he take pills that he doesn't need? And if he doesn't get a seizure, how does anyone know when he should stop taking the pills? — Kenneth, Staten Island, N.Y.

Dear Kenneth: Reading between the lines of your letter, I would have to assume that your friend suffered a head injury in the accident, and that his doctor has prescribed anticonvulsant medication as a precautionary measure. The aim in this case is to prevent seizures instead of waiting for them to happen.

Some physicians suggest that precautionary anticonvulsant treatment should be continued for at least two years and as many as five years under certain circumstances.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have always been nearsighted and I hated to wear glasses when I was a kid. At that time in my neighborhood, anyone who wore glasses was a sissy. Apparently my children have inherited my nearsightedness, but today at least we have contact lenses. What would you think of getting contact lenses for a third-grader, particularly one who is very active in sports? — Russell, Brooklyn, N.Y.

Dear Russell: I believe that most ophthalmologists would vote against the use of contact lenses for a child that age. You should realize that your child's eye condition is subject to change, and that the lenses would have to be changed accordingly. Moreover, eyeglasses fitted with safety lenses would serve an added purpose by protecting your youngster's eyes while he or she participated in athletic activities.

For Packy, Des Moines, Iowa: What the physical therapist told you apparently is true. Individuals who have undergone cardiac transplantation do appear to be at greater risk of coronary atherosclerosis (the deposit of fatty substances on the inner lining of the arteries.)

Dear Dr. Solomon: What makes juvenile rheumatoid arthritis "juvenile?" In other words, when and how does it start? — Joel, Virginia Beach, Va.

Dear Joel: Juvenile rheumatoid arthritis (RA) may begin in different ways. Its onset usually occurs in patients younger than 16 years of age, and four or more joints are usually involved.

According to Dr. Francis Viozzi, of the Geisinger Medical Center in Danville, Pa., acute systemic onset juvenile RA usually occurs in youngsters between one and four years of age. This form comprises about 20 percent of all juvenile RA.

A polyarticular form of the disease, which involves six or more joints, comprises from 30 to 40 percent of juvenile RA.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My father was pretty active when he was younger, but now that he's hitting 70, I think he ought to slow down. He's developed a combination of walking and jogging, and he goes out almost every day when the weather is good. Is this a good idea? At his age I'd like to see him take it easy. — Manny, Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

Dear Manny: Take it easy? For what? I encourage all my patients — and I mean ALL my patients — to exercise regardless of their age. It not only improves their physical functioning but their psychological functioning as well.

I don't know how old you are, but instead of trying to hold your father back, why not join him? Try it; you may like it!

Dear Dr. Solomon: I'd like an answer to this question before we get any snow. My wife never lets me shovel the snow off our walk because she says I could get a heart attack. Instead, she does the shoveling and I do the dishes or clean around the house to help her out. Now there's been a lot of publicity about women getting heart attacks, and I'm confused about who has to take more care. — Herman, Boston

Dear Herman: It is true that for many years the emphasis on the possibility of heart attacks was focused primarily on men. Women's role, for the most part, was supposed to be to protect their husbands.

It has since become apparent that women are vulnerable to the same risk factors as are men. These factors include an elevated cholesterol level, high blood pressurde and cigarette smoking. In fact heart attack has become the leading cause of death in women over 40 years of age in the United States.

Depending on you and your wife's age and physical condition, you might want to consider sharing the inside household chores and paying someone to shovel your walk.

For Anthony, Newark, N.J.: There is substantial evidence that cigarette smoking aggravates arteriosclerosis (hardening of the arteries). If you wait until the evidence is 100 percent absolute, you might find that you have waited a little too long.

Social Security may need borrowed funds this year

WASHINGTON (AP) — An expert on Social Security says it is likely the old age fund will have to borrow upwards of $11 billion by the end of the year to keep paying checks on time until next summer.

The Treasury Department said Monday the old age fund will have to borrow $1 billion to $2 billion shortly after Election Day to cover the Nov. 3 checks for nearly 32 million retirees and their families, and an undetermined amount in December.

Congress last December authorized the borrowing from the disability and Medicare funds on a temporary basis to keep the old age fund from running dry.

In April, Social Security's three trustees projected that the old age fund would need to borrow $7 billion to $11 billion before its borrowing authority expires on Dec. 31.

"Really, I would think that to be prudent they'd borrow on the high side to be sure they could get through the six months (through June 1983)," said Robert J. Myers, executive director of the National Commission on Social Security Reform. "I don't think Congress would fault them if they're a little on the high side."

Myers, a former deputy commissioner of Social Security said the sluggish economy has held down Social Security's payroll tax receipts and will push the borrowing close to the upper end of that range.

Treasury spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the interfund borrowing — the first in the program's history — involves nothing more than "a bookkeeping entry" after the checks go out. He stressed, "There is no danger of anyone's not receiving a check."

Myers estimated that $1 billion to $1.5 billion remained in the old age fund after September checks totaling $11.9 billion were mailed Oct. 3. That was the trust fund's lowest balance in three decades or more, he said.

Payroll tax receipts will rebuild the fund before Nov. 3, but it may still fall short of the $11.5 billion needed, Myers said.

Fitzwater said the interfund borrowing will take place "probably the first week in November between the third and the fifth. ... It will be somewhere in the range of $1 billion to $2 billion."

"We just can't say at this time" precisely how much will be borrowed, he said. "We don't know until the receipts come in."

The old age fund has been in financial trouble since 1975, when it stood at nearly $37 billion. It would have been depleted in 1980 or 1981, but Congress temporarily reallocated the payroll tax receipts to shift $9 billion from the disability to the old-age fund.

Justices to decide on seizure of U.S. assets

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court is taking a close look at a lower court's ruling that the Reagan administration claims makes U.S. corporate assets easy targets for foreign governments.

Fidel Castro's seizure of American property in Cuba following the revolution that swept him into power in 1960 sparked the lengthy legal controversy.

The justices agreed Monday to decide whether banks and trading firms run by foreign governments may be held financially liable for the seizure of U.S. corporate assets, even though they played no active role in the takeover.

The dispute arose when Bancec, a foreign bank and trading firm wholly owned by Cuba's revolutionary government, sued Citibank of New York for $193,280. Bancec claimed it was owed the money for a sugar sale.

Citibank responded by saying it should not have to pay because the Cuban revolution — of which it said Bancec was a part — illegally had seized Citibank's Cuban branch assets. Those assets were worth more than the $193,280, Citibank said.

The American bank said it should be able to "offset" the smaller amount it owed Bancec against the total amount of its assets expropriated by Castro.

The 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals disagreed, saying Bancec was not so closely aligned with the Castro revolution to be held responsible for the expropriation of Citibank assets.

Bancec, whose formal name was Banco Para El Comercio Exterior de Cuba, was dissolved shortly after filing its lawsuit in New York City in 1961. Bancec's assets were taken over by the Cuban government, Citibank said.

The Justice Department joined Citibank in attacking a lower court's ruling that such a legal shield exists for the foreign businesses.

"Governments contemplating expropriation may protect themselves from liability in American courts simply by ensuring that their instrumentalities with assets or claims in the United States do not play a 'key role' in the expropriation," government lawyers said.

They added: "The (lower court) decision provides to foreign governments contemplating expropriation a blueprint on how to insulate their instrumentalities from liability ... (in) U.S. courts."

—Left intact the convictions of two avowed Communists, Teresa Kime and Donald Bonwell, stemming from the burning of a U.S. flag in Greensboro, N.C.

—Said it will decide whether the federal government ever can be ordered to pay the legal fees of people who unsuccessfully sue over alleged non-enforcement of clean-air laws.

—Refused to reinstate an Ohio man's drug conviction, rebuffing arguments that police officers made a "reasonable, good-faith" mistake when they searched his home without a warrant.

Army ends coed boot camp due to 'physical differences'

FORT LEONARD WOOD, Mo. (AP) — Four years and 10,000 buck privates ago, the sexes received basic training together here for the first time in the Army camp's history.

That era will end Thursday, a victim of what the Army calls the undeniable physical differences between the sexes.

Most of the final 27 women to undergo basic training in otherwise all-male companies will graduate Thursday and head elsewhere for more training.

The coed program was enacted at Fort Leonard Wood and two other installations in 1978 "to try to make every soldier a soldier, no matter what their sex was," said Master Sgt. Ken Harley.

But the inability of female recruits to keep up with males on hikes, obstacle courses and other physically demanding training made the Army take a second look at the program.

Lt. Col. Robert White, a base spokesman, said one in four of the roughly 40-member platoons comprising a company was made up entirely of women during the program.

"We were turning out a good quality of soldier," White said. "We just weren't physically challenging the males."

A company's male platoons generally could complete a 10-mile march faster than its female platoon, White said. And because the slowest platoon would lead and set the pace, the entire company would be slowed.

But despite any physical limitations, female recruits usually held their own through most basic training paces, such as marksmanship, first aid and hand-to-hand combat, Harley said.

Mrs. Truman to be buried beside her feisty husband

INDEPENDENCE, Mo. (AP) — Former first lady Bess Truman, remembered as a symbol of "the basic decency of America," will be buried beside her husband on the grounds of the Harry S. Truman library.

"She was a devoted wife, a loving mother, and a gracious, unassuming first lady," President Reagan said after Mrs. Truman's death Monday. "Bess Truman embodied the basic decency of America."

The childhood sweetheart and widow of President Harry S. Truman died of congestive heart failure at her Independence home at age 97. She was the nation's oldest first lady.

"The loss is a great one to this nation, and we will miss the quiet dignity with which she devoted herself to her country, to her husband, and to her family," former President Carter said.

Funeral services were set for 11 a.m. Thursday at Trinity Episcopal Church in Independence. Attendance will be by invitation from the family.

Final plans were to be made today after the Truman's only child, Margaret Truman Daniel, 58, arrived from London.

Jim Cantrell, agent in charge of the Secret Service in Kansas City, said Monday he did not know who would be invited to the services. Reagan was to be in Omaha, Neb., on Thursday but a trip to Independence was not yet planned, a White House spokesman said.

"She knew what she wanted and stood for it," said Dr. Wallace Graham, the longtime family physician. "She was dignified without being a snob. She was kind, very soft-hearted, and...sometimes it was hard to see that because she was very direct."

Mrs. Truman became critically ill Friday when her heart began working furiously after fluids built up in her chest, Graham said. In recent years she had been plagued by arthritis, abdominal stress, a broken hip and high blood pressure.

On Sept. 2 she was rushed to the hospital with internal bleeding from an intestinal ulcer, and was released three weeks later when it was "apparent that she was terminal," Graham said.

The public knew her as Bess, but Truman, who died in 1972 at the age of 88, called her "Boss" and called her his closest adviser.

Flags across Missouri were at half-staff as news of her death spread.

Valerie LaMere, Mrs. Truman's housekeeper and companion, said she read mostly mystery stories to the first lady in her last few years, and listened as Mrs. Truman told stories of the Truman presidency.

"I talked to Mrs. Truman yesterday," Mrs. LaMere said Monday. "Every day I told her how much I loved her. I know she heard me...One day I told her I thought God had sent me to her to care for her. She's been a dear friend to me, and I'm going to miss her."

Engineers work to save church from mudslide

EL TORO, Calif. (AP) — Engineers working in a mudslide-prone area are using fabric to help rebuild a road in hopes of saving a tiny church from slipping down a mountain.

Geologist Chris Buckley calls it a "more sophisticated sandbag."

"It's a spun polyester type of fabric, or at least it's similar to polyester," Buckley said Monday in describing the material, Trevira Spunbond.

The textile was developed in Germany within the last five years, Buckley said.

Earth slippage is a common problem throughout southern California, where brush fires strip the land of cover. Heavy rains can then weaken slopes and cause massive mudslides.

In February 1980, a portion of Canyon Creek Drive washed away up to the foundation of the small Trabuco Community Church, about 50 miles southeast of Los Angeles.

The picturesque 25-member church, operated by the American Missionary Fellowship, was declared unfit for occupancy. The road also served five $350,000 homes, leaving residents with an unpaved and roundabout access.

A retaining wall was completed in May 1981 and church services were resumed. But the roadway has continued to crumble, again threatening the structure.

When residents chose to rebuild the road themselves, they hired Buckley's firm, EJM & Associates, and Danko Contractors.

George Bach, EJM president, said they decided to use the new material because of its cost and because a new retaining wall wouldn't fit.

"We had no place to work to build a retaining wall," he said. "We had our backs to the precipice. We had to do something different."

He said the fabric's $30,000 price was about one-third of what it would have cost to build another retaining wall.

Constructon began this week on the project, which Buckley said involves layering single thicknesses of the fabric between compacted soil six inches to a foot thick.

"In a way, it's a series of sandwiches of soil," he said.

Bach said the fabric is expected to last 100 years if not exposed to the sun's ultraviolet rays.

The fabric may prove a better long-term solution than a retaining wall because of its flexibility, said Danko owner Dan Kargula.

"You have to consider that since concrete is rigid and the earth is moving in this area, the wall probably would crack," he said. "This stuff moves and we think it will hold."

Bach said his firm is considering using the textile in other southern California slide areas as well.

Environmentalists sue to stop pesticide's use

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas and two other states are the target of a lawsuit designed to halt the use of a controversial pesticide to fight fire ants.

The suit, filed Monday in federal court by four environmental groups, seeks to halt aerial spraying of ferriamicide on 14 million acres of croplands and wooded areas in Texas, Mississippi and Arkansas.

The National Audubon Society, the Sierra Club, the Environmental Defense Fund and the National Wildlife Federation contend that the federal government acted improperly on Sept. 29 when it granted the three states an emergency exemption to use the pesticide.

The states contend that no adequate alternative pesticide exists to fight the spread of the ants. They are considered a pest because they bite humans and build mounds in fields, impeding farm machinery.

The suit contends that no emergency exists which would allow the Environmental Protection Agency to authorize use of ferriamicide and that 17 alternative pesticides are available for use on the ants.

Ferriamicide is manufactured by the state of Mississippi. It is made from Mirex, a chemical used against the ants for 15 years before Mississippi stopped its use in 1979 when studies showed Mirex caused cancer in laboratory animals.

Mississippi officials say ferriamicide, mixed with other ingredients, is not as dangerous as Mirex.

"EPA's permission just now to use ferriamicide without allowing public comment and despite the history of Mirex's risks has more to do with election-year politics in these states than it does with fire ant control," said Maureen Hinkle.

Reported crimes down from 1981

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of crimes reported in the first half of this year was 5 percent lower than in the first half of 1981, the first such decrease since 1978, the FBI said today.

But law enforcement officials and crime experts warned about attaching too much significance to the latest figures.

Attorney General William French Smith noted that reported crimes reached an all-time high in 1980 and remained at that level through last year.

"While this apparent reversal is encouraging, the fact that the all-time high was reached and maintained for a two-year period should be of major concern to the nation," Smith said.

Crime experts who were interviewed offered a number of possible theories to explain the downturn. But they all cautioned that the explanations were educated guesses at best.

They suggested that the decrease could be related, ironically, to higher unemployment. They also said the "aging" of the American population, increased numbers of offenders in prisons and more young people in the armed forces could be contributing to the trend.

"There are more people in the stir and fewer on the streets," said Albert D. Biderman of the private Bureau of Social Science Research. He also said that with more younger Americans in the armed forces the pool of "likely victims" of many crimes as well as likely offenders is reduced.

"It sounds like good news," he added.

FBI Director William H. Webster noted that in the first half of 1978 there was a 2 percent drop in the number of reported crimes compared to the first six months of 1977.

That was the last time the FBI's Uniform Crime Report showed a decrease for a comparable six-month period.

The latest figures listed a 3 percent decrease for violent crime and a 6 percent decline for the more numerous property crimes.

Murder was down 8 percent; robbery 7 percent and forcible rape 6 percent. Aggravated assault increased 1 percent, the only violent crime on the upswing.

Burglaries plunged 11 percent. Larceny-theft and auto theft each dipped 3 percent.

The FBI reported that there was a 9 percent drop in crime in the Northeast and North Central regions of the country; 2 percent in the South, and 3 percent in the West.

Rural areas recorded an 11 percent decline; the suburbs 8 percent; cities with more than 50,000 population 3 percent, and cities outside of metropolitan areas 6 percent.

Professor Charles Wellford of the Institute of Criminal Justice at the University of Maryland said the figures were more or less consistent with the more broadly based Justice Department statistics based on a survey of victims of crime.

"I don't think we should be surprised by" the FBI report, he said.

Stuper may interview himself

St. Louis starter is a real card in clubhouse

An AP Sports Analysis
By D. BYRON YAKE

ST. LOUIS (AP) — When Don Sutton was traded from Houston to Milwaukee on Aug. 30, it was called pennant insurance. It was really Brewer life insurance.

Sutton quickly became an anchor on a suspect pitching staff, winning five games (including the playoffs) and losing only one.

One victory clinched the division title. Another started the Brewers on a three-game comeback in the Championship Series, culminating in their winning the American League pennant.

Now it's the World Series. Sutton will be on the mound in Game 6 tonight and the Brewers can win the championship with a victory. It would be the perfect way to cap the year — a miraaccidentially.

"I think any kid who wants to be a major leaguer thinks about playing in the World Series. Ever since I was an 8 or 9-year-old I've been thinking about it. From the time I was hitting rocks until the time you were hitting with a bat, it was like I was in a World Series game.

"This is a chance to live out a dream," he said.

Sutton has been on four World Series teams before this one, but played in only three previous ones.

In 1978 with the Dodgers, he lost two games against the New York Yankees, who won the Series in six games.

He says this one tops them all because of the year he's experienced.

Sutton, 37, has 258 career wins and cle year, he calls it — for the veteran right-hander.

— A miracle because he ended up in Milwaukee after signing with Houston as a free agent.

"Houston is a collection of the greatest persons I've ever played with. They spent time and effort to build up other people." He said he had some bridges to build with his family and others and that his friends were a source of help.

— A miracle to recover from a broken kneecap that threatened to end his career.

— A miracle to be traded when he had a no-trade clause in his contract.

— A miracle "to be a part of this team."

"And now this," he said."What more can you ask for? They don't happen he says he wants to stay around the majors until he gets 300.

When he arrived in Milwaukee, General Manager Harry Dalton told him, "I know you'd like to win 300 games and I'll give you every opportunity."

Sutton, curly-haired and lean, says he's having fun in the World Series environment, with its hordes of media, where every streak, every error, every move is chronicled, where he's on display both as a pitcher and a person.

"I really don't feel any pressure," he said Monday, as he sat at a motel poolside table with several reporters."This (playing baseball) is all I really ever wanted to do. And this is the pinnacle of all I ever wanted to do."

He said the last time he recalls feeling pressure on the mound was at the All-Star Game in Yankee Stadium in 1977.

That was different, he said.

"The All-Star Game is a bunch of individuals showcasing their talents. This is a team thing. I'm part of a team effort here."

Sutton is a renegade in some ways,

Sutton may bring championship to Brewers

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Beer bottle in hand and wit at the ready, rookie pitcher John Stuper has become a clubhouse celebrity of sorts with the St. Louis Cardinals.

Stuper was named starting pitcher by Manager Whitey Herzog for Tuesday night's Game 6 of the World Series against the Milwaukee Brewers, opposing Don Sutton.

After the game, and if the Cardinals win — only if they win — Stuper will take his beer-bottle microphone in hand and the curtain will go up on the "John Cosell Show."

Stuper majored in journalism at Point Park College in Pittsburgh, wanting to become a sports writer. So, it was only natural when he began conducting bogus interviews with his teammates after games, asking the questions he thought reporters had neglected.

"As a writer in Chicago said, eventually our conversations degenerate quite a bit," Stuper said Monday at a news conference. His favorite interview, he says, is reserve shortstop Mike Ramsey. "Some of the things we start saying to Ramsey couldn't be printed in a newspaper."

The 29-year-old Stuper, 6-foot-2, blond-haired and possessed of an easy-going loquaciousness, often is joined on his show by fellow rookie pitchers Jeff Lahti and Dave LaPoint.

"I didn't dub it the 'John Cosell Show,' you know. That was LaPoint," Stuper said. "I don't even try to imitate Cosell's voice. I use my own."

Stuper, 29, began the impromptu interviews while he and his teammates waited for postgame traffic to clear before heading home.

"We were getting crowds of about 24,000 at Busch Stadium, so you couldn't just come into the locker room and take off," he said. "You'd just sit in traffic.

"Tommy Herr was my first victim. I used a beer bottle as a microphone and started interviewing him."

Stuper says he does the interviews only after victories.

"You have to use some discretion," he said. "I wouldn't want someone to start egging me on after we'd lost and I was sitting at my locker with my head down.

"You have to remernber, LaPoint, Lahti and I are rookies, and at times when you're a rookie, you have to tread a little lightly."

The Stuper-Sutton confrontation is a rematch of Game 2, won 5-4 by the Cardinals. Stuper lasted into the fifth inning, trailing 4-2, and did not get a decision. Sutton, who worked six innings, was the loser. In his outing, Stuper gave up four runs on six hits, including a Ted Simmons homer.

"I'm hoping to pitch a little better for a little longer this time," said Stuper, who hurt himself last Wednesday night with two wild pitches. "I'm the kind of pitcher that basically likes to challenge the hitters. Later on in my career, maybe, I'll learn how to nibble and pick a little bit, like (Bob) Forsch."

Stuper was converted from relief duty in the minor leagues to a starter this season for St. Louis. He was called up from Louisville, the Cards' Triple A farm

NFLPA All-Stars draw little crowd

LOS ANGELES (AP) — As far as the players were concerned, the hero of the second National Football League Players Association-sponsored all-star game wasn't in uniform. And, believe it or not, he's an owner.

San Diego quarterback Ed Luther fired a 54-yard touchdown pass with 12:29 remaining to lift the American Conference squad to a 31-27 victory over the National Conference team in the contest at the Los Angeles Coliseum.

The game was televised nationally by the Turner Broadcasting System, and afterward, TBS owner Ted Turner took all the players into one dressing room where the athletes gave him a standing ovation.

"You are the game," Turner, the who also owns baseball's Atlanta Braves and the Atlanta Hawks of the National Basketball Association, told the players. "I want you to know I'm with you all the way."

The players then began chanting "Teddy, Teddy, Teddy."

The TBS also televised the first union-sponsored all-star game in Washington, D.C., on Sunday and Turner said the network will do the same with any and all remaining contests. The third one is scheduled at Toronto next Sunday.

The contest, involving players who have been on strike for a month, was reasonably well-played. But financially speaking, the event was a disaster.

The game at the home of the Los Angeles Raiders was played before an announced crowd of 5,331. But Coliseum General Manager Jim Hardy said only 680 tickets were sold for the game.

The seating capacity for Raiders' home games is 70,000.

An announced crowd of 8,760 attended the opening game of the series at Robert F. Kennedy Stadium.

"I think this is the best system," said Seattle defensive back Kenny Easley of the all-star concept. "This shows that we can play without the owners. Naturally I wish there were a lot more fans."

Luther, who backs up Dan Fouts with the Chargers, completed 10 of 18 passes for 180 yards and two touchdowns. His TD pass to Brown gave the AFC a 31-24 lead.

The NFC drew to within four points on a 22-yard field goal by Detroit's Eddie Murray with 6:48 left, but couldn't score again.

The AFC scored earlier on a 26-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Dan Pastorini of Philadelphia to running back Joe Delaney of Kansas City; a 37-yard field goal by Kansas City's Nick Lowery; a 15-yard pass from Luther to Kansas City's Carlos Carson, and a 29-yard pass from flanker Malcolm Barnwell of the Los Angeles Raiders to tight end Todd Christensen, another member of the Raiders.

Pastorini, an NFC player, competed for the AFC squad because of its shortage of quarterbacks.

Atlanta wide receiver Floyd Hodge scored two touchdowns for the NFC, on a 12-yard pass from Chicago quarterback Vince Evans and an 8-yard pass from Detroit quarterback Eric Hipple. Atlanta linebacker Al Richardson scored the other NFC touchdown when he raced 45 yards with an interception of a Luther pass. Murray added a 40-yard field goal.

The game was billed as an AFC West against an NFC West affair, but players from all six NFL divisions took part.

Luther was named the offensive player of the game, while Denver cornerback Louis Wright was selected defensive player of the game.

Sports Illustrated looking over Chaps

The National champions are working out. And Sports Illustrated has been watching.

As a matter of fact, the champs have been working out since Sept. 2 and are getting restless.

Coach Jerry Stone's Midland College Chaparrals, reigning National Junior College basketball champions, get an opportunity to work off some of that restlessness this afternoon with their second scrimmage of the season. MC faces Wayland College at the Langford Chaparral Center. Last week, MC traveled to Alpine to face Sul Ross and Coach Stone confessed, "We weren't embarrassed."

And it's only two weeks to the start of the regular season when MC launches the defense of its national title Nov. 2 against Cisco at the Chaparral Center.

HOWEVER, FANS won't have to wait that long for a close up look at Spud, Chester, Rodney, Justin, Jerome and Chuck. A Meet the Chaps Night is scheduled for 6:30 p.m. Oct. 26, an opportunity to watch the Chaps in a scrimmage and visit with the players, take pictures, get autographs and enjoy free refreshment.

All of the Chap athletic teams will be present and introduced.

At the same time, Season Reserved Tickets, something new this year, will go on sale for the first time. Reserved tickets will provide guaranteed seating for the Chaps 11 home games and the Chaparral Classic.

Workouts this year are a far cry from last season when Stone had to count noses before every game to be sure he had enough to start. The Chaps were so short-handed at one point, Stone issued a call for volunteers.

THIS YEAR, Stone is working out a 15-player squad, nine of whom are newcomers ranging in size from 5-8 Earl Wimbush to 6-9 Ernest Harris.

Returnees include 5-6 Spud Webb, MVP in the regional last season; 6-7 Chester Smith, Rodney McChriston, 6-5 Jerome Crowe, 6-3 Chuck Robinson and 6-4 Justin Morett. McChriston, hero of the comeback win against Clarendon in the regionals, is recovering from knee surgery and will be out another two to three weeks.

SI was on campus last week to take pictures of the defending national champions in conjunction with its Basketball Preview issue.

Howard College Coach Harold Wilder also was on campus, but only briefly, "Jerry said it was a closed practice and chased me off," he said, stomping off in a huff with a camera under one arm and tape recorder under the other.

THIS YEAR'S schedule will find the Chaps play non-conference home games against Cisco and Lon Morris and opening WJCC play Nov. 29 at Clarendon. Tournaments scheduled include the Barton County Classic in Kansas (Nov. 18-20), the Amarillo Classic (Nov. 25-27), the Chaparral Classic (Dec. 2-4) and the Big Spring ABC Classic (Jan. 7-8).

Assistant Stone this year is Reggie Franklin, who is no stranger to MC fans. Reggie played for NMMI before going on to star at SMU.

The Washington Huskies held onto first place in The Associated Press college football poll for the sixth week in a row Monday, while Alabama dropped from second to seventh and Pitt climbed back into second place.

Washington, a 34-17 winner over Oregon State, received 38 of 56 first-place votes and 1,113 of a possible 1,160 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters.

While Alabama vacated the runner-up spot by losing to Tennessee 35-28, Pitt, which has been alternating between second and third place for the last six weeks after starting the season No.1, moved back to No.2. The Panthers defeated Temple 38-17 and received 17 first-place votes and 1,050 points.

The remaining first-place ballot went to Georgia, which rose from fourth to third with 974 points for defeating Vanderbilt 27-13.

Cowboys in no hurry to practice

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas Cowboys tight end Doug Cosbie said after a team meeting Monday that none of the players present would go back to practice if training camps were opened this week.

"Next week (if the National Football League Players Association strike isn't settled) we'll meet again and try to make an intelligent decision on the matter," Cosbie said.

He estimated that some 25 Cowboys were at the meeting.

"Half of my teammates were not there and that's kind of disappointing," Cosbie said.

He said some of the players like tight end Billy Joe DuPree were paying attention to their businesses.

"I don't feel badly that B.J. wasn't there...I sure understand," Cosbie said.

He admitted some of the other Cowboys just "didn't want to get up" to come to the meeting which was chaired by player representative Robert Newhouse.

"I think some of the guys feel it (the meeting) might be a waste of time," Cosbie told the weekly meeting of the Dallas-Fort Worth sports media.

Cosbie said the players wouldn't go to camp right now because "we feel we'd be going back for what we left for."

Asked if he thought negotiations between the owners and player in Maryland were "close" to a solution, Cosbie said, "We're as close as they (the owners) want it...it could be settled in one day...the owners haven't changed their stance...thy haven't chaned their offer one bit."

He said the Cowboys were not in total agreement on the wage scale which is being pushed by the union.

"I'm not saying we are all for it," said Cosbie. "Some are...some aren't...we're one of the weaker teams when it comes to being completely for the wage scale."

Mavericks business manager takes over ailing San Diego

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Paul Phipps, the new general manager of the San Diego Clippers' franchise, says he welcomes the challenge of reorganizing the shattered National Basketball Association franchise.

Hired by a "lameduck" owner under pressure from the league to sell the troubled NBA club, the 35-year-old Phipps has his work cut out.

"Some would say it was a great risk (taking the job)," said Phipps, "but I've always been a risk taker."

Phipps, business manager of the Dallas Mavericks for the past two years, was named Monday to succeed Ted Podleski, who was fired by owner Don Sterling.

The surprise announcement by Alan Rothenberg, Sterling's attorney, caught almost everyone off guard, including Podleski, who wasn't told until Monday morning.

Reporters charged Sterling with attempting to make Podleski the scapegoat in the Clippers' decline.

Sterling has been under heavy criticism from the local press and the NBA since his unsuccessful attempt to move the team to Los Angeles this year. The NBA's finance and advisory committee recommended last month that the club be removed from Sterling for "violations of the NBA constitution."

Though acknowledged as one of the wealthiest owners in the NBA, Sterling was the target of numerous lawsuits for delinquent bills. The Los Angeles attorney and real-estate investor purchased the club in May 1980 and vowed to "spend whatever it takes" to make the Clippers a contender.

Rothenberg, who has been appointed by Sterling to sell the club, praised Phipps as "one of most highly respected executives in the NBA." He added, "our obligation is to run a first class franchise."

Podleski, interviewed outside his Clipper office, said he was not bitter, but admitted being "a bit angry. I felt I could make a contribution to the city and the basketball fans. This is going to be a great franchise."

"Our obligation is to run a first class franchise," Rothenberg said.

Phipps was formerly general manager of Athletes in Action, a professional basketball program for Christian players.

A native of Pico Rivera, Calie said he would have "full authority" in the operation of the club and said he prepare by next month "an immediate and long range plan for the team and for the prospective buyers."

Because of their money problems, the Clippers have been unable to sign DePaul All-American Terry Cummings, the second player taken in the NBA draft.

Phipps said the signing of the 6-foot-10 Cummings would be "a high priority."

He added that he has assurances that "additional capital will be available" to implement his objectives.

Yount just can't get excited

One-track mind reason for success

By BILL WEURDING
Copley News Service

MILWAUKEE — Perhaps the secret behind Robin Yount's amazing success story this year has been his one-track mind.

He was pleased to hit .331 with 29 homers and 114 RBI during the regular season, but those awesome numbers hold no special meaning to him.

The 27-year-old shortstop also enjoyed one of his busiest and best years in the field, but good defensive statistics don't excite him much either.

Shucks, this is a guy who can't even get enthused over the American League's Most Valuable Player Award he's a cinch to win next month, not to mention the new car he could win should he be named the Series' most valuable player as well.

Yount addressed himself to that possibility after a big day Sunday.

"I've already got a couple cars; I don't need another one," said Yount after his four hits and two RBI sparked the Brewers to a 6-4 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals and gave Milwaukee a 3-2 lead in the World Series.

The four hits by Yount, which included a solo homer on his last trip to the plate in the seventh, duplicated his four-hit performance in Game 1. Thus, he became the first player in World Series history to have two four-hit games.

But getting his name in the record books isn't his bag either.

"I'm not out to break any records," he said. "If they come, fine, but I never give things like that much thought. All I care about is winning the World Series. That's the only goal I've ever had. It's what I've been striving for all the years I've been playing."

Yount already has been playing nine years in the big leagues, an indication of the kind of prospect he was coming out of Taft High School in Woodlawn, Calif. back in 1973. After just 64 games in the minor leagues, the Brewers made him their shortstop in 1974 at the tender age of 18, and he's been handling the job since.

"Robin and I came up the same year," recalled 29-year-old Brewer outfielder Charlie Moore, "and it's been a pleasure watching him grow as both a person and a ballplayer. He's gotten smarter and stronger each year. This year I feel he's merely put it all together and reached his peak."

That would seem to be the case, especially during this World Series. His four-hit performance Sunday was just the latest example of the roll he's been on. Overall, Yount has 11 hits in 21 at-bats in the Series for a .524 batting average, and also leads the Brewers with seven RBI.

The record for most hits in a World Series is 13, set by Bobby Richardson of the New York Yankees in 1964 and tied by Lou Brock of the Cardinals in 1968. Both those Series went the maximum seven games. Yount could match them in six with two hits Tuesday night.

In light of Yount's latest heroics, Brewer Manager Harvey Kuenn was asked if there was anything new he could say about his gifted infielder that hadn't been said before. Kuenn thought for a moment, but then gave up.

"No, I think everything's pretty well been covered," he decided. "He's the best all-around shortstop in baseball. It's as simple as that."

Yount, whose wife, Michele, is expecting their third child at any time, contributed two infield singles, a double and his first World Series home run to Milwaukee's pivotal third victory.

Now, although the Series moves back to St. Louis to be concluded on the Cardinals' home turf at Busch Stadium, history favors the Brewers. In the previous 30 best-of-seven World Series, the winner of Game 5 has gone on to claim the title 23 times.

By TOM CUSHMAN
Copley News Service

MILWAUKEE — Lauded following Game 2 by no less an authority than Tony Kubek for "perhaps the best job of managing I've ever witnessed," Whitey Herzog of the Cardinals has since experienced a free fall from grace.

Gathered at the Miller Brewing Company headquarters Saturday evening for conversation and a spot of tea, media authorities and other baseball experts censured Herzog in clubhouse language for allowing a four-run lead to evaporate earlier that day while Bruce Sutter leaned on the bullpen fence and chatted with the Brewers' Rollie Fingers, another idled genius. By so doing, they theorized, Whitey had allowed this 1982 World Series to make another of its hairpin U-turns.

Actually, the most significant play in the Series to this hour occurred in the seventh inning of Game 3, when Ted Simmons whacked a billiard shot off the County Stadium lawn and into the leg of Joaquin Andujar, who was about to deliver a Cardinal oddity, the complete game. Not only did the resulting injury leave Andujar, the most able starter on either roster, as doubtful for Game 7, it was the trigger for a series of events that have conspired to make Game 7 doubtful.

Andujar's abrupt loss forced Herzog to turn to the heart of his bullpen on Friday, thus upsetting the delicate balance of that preserve. A nine-inning victory by Joaquin was seen by the Cardinals as a key to the tournament, for Whitey had presumed that a fresh Sutter would be invaluable Saturday. Complete games by Dave LaPoint and eclipses occur at approximately the same ratio.

In the chilled early afternoon hours of Sunday, then, Herzog was interrogated at length as to why Sutter had not been asked the previous day to get the one out needed to end that seventh inning, when the Cardinals slid from a 5-1 lead into a 7-5 defeat. "Nobody can get by on a one-man bullpen," said Whitey. "Jim Kaat and Doug Bair had been doing the job for us all year. Yesterday they didn't."

I, for one, rather admired Herzog's ability to resist temptation, and thereby not disturb the pattern he had established during a lengthy season. Gene Mauch, the strategist who preceded Herzog in battle against the formidable Brewers, had been unable to do so a week earlier, shifting his rotation so that both Tommy John and Bruce Kison worked on three days' rest instead of the normal four. For his trouble, Mauch now is a spectator.

Herzog's formula calls for Sutter to rest if he exceeded 32 pitches in an appearance the previous day, and if there is heavy work ahead. This was the case Saturday. Sutter had thrown 38 times the night before after replacing Bair, who had replaced Andujar. Ahead lay Sunday, when Sutter probably would be needed to rescue Bob Forsch, a day of rest, then Games 6 and perhaps Game 7 back in St. Louis.

Alas, all of Whitey's meticulous reasoning was undone Sunday when Sutter came stomping out of the pen in the eighth inning to protect a 2-4 deficit, and discovered the Brewers have no more regard for him than for anyone else who hurls baseballs in their direction. The deficit Sutter handed back was 2-6, a telling statistic when the Cardinals themselves rallied for two in the ninth.

"I made a bunch of good pitches, and a bunch of bad pitches," said Sutter, "and when you do that against the Brewers you're in big trouble. Up and down the lineup, they're the best hitting club I've ever faced."

Nevertheless, what began as a Series in which the managers were regarded by the majority of the media as folksy, pleasant chaps, but rather harmless, has developed — on the one front — into a second-guessers' paradise. Harvey Kuenn of the Brewers still is perceived as a seat-of-the-pants leader, who begins the day by asking, "Who wants to play?" then settles back and polishes his shoes with tobacco juice while the volunteers tattoo the walls with line drives.

Meanwhile, Whitey, who grabbed the attention of the second-guessers with the Sutter decision on Saturday, is piling up demerits at a record pace. There was Lonnie Smith's unsuccessful attempt to steal third in the first inning of Game 5, which was followed by a single off the bat of Keith Hernandez. In the press box, fangs were bared.

With the Cardinals trailing 3-1 in the seventh and the first two runners aboard, Herzog had rookie David Green swing away instead of bunt. Green popped to center. An ensuing ground smash by Hernandez and single by George Hendrick would have scored two (the Cards got one) if the runners had been at second and third, and the baying of the hounds filled the Wisconsin skies.

In the ninth, with the score 6-4, two on, two out, and Ken Oberkfell, a left-hander who already had three hits for the day off left-handed pitching, due up, Herzog subsituted Gene Tenace, who swings from the right side. "I thought he might hit one out," Whitey explained.

Tenace lifted a fly ball to left.

While occasionally looking askance at their manager, the Cardinals seemed more perplexed by other developments. "If you'd told me we'd get 15 hits, I'd have said, 'We'll win the game,' said Darrell Porter. "The way they kept making those leaping, diving catches burned me up."

They are being beaten not by the blacksmiths, as they had feared, but by Paul Molitor and Robin Yount, by speed, defense, contact hitting, supposedly the Cardinals' forte.

"Great plays by them probably cost us six runs today," said Whitey Herzog.

"I knocked down one of Molitor's grounders," said Oberkfell, "and threw well enough to beat him, except that he's faster than he's supposed to be."

"Our scouting reports were all wrong," added Lonnie Smith, who brought along his skateboard and is having a grand time as usual. "They said Moore couldn't pull, and that's all he's done. They said Oglivie couldn't hit a breaking ball, which is a joke. The biggest surprise of all, though, has been Molitor's speed."

Cheerleaders ignore strike, keep practicing without pay

DALLAS (AP) — There is one team in professional football that has been practicing throughout the players' strike, and they have been doing it without pay.

These players never considered asking for a pension plan, and they work on the same wage scale — $15 per game — they received when they were created 10 years ago.

In a practice studio in a northern Dallas suburb, the Dallas Cowboy Cheerleaders have been performing almost every night since the National Football League strike began about four weeks ago.

"We don't get paid for practice even when there isn't a strike," cheerleader Robin Roberts told The Dallas Morning News. "But if we didn't practice, we wouldn't look good on the field. We don't want money; we just consider ourselves lucky to get such good training."

For three or four hours a night, the 32 leotard-clad pom pom carriers strain and sweat before only their coach and a mirror in a continuous battle to perfect the routines that helped them to worldwide fame.

"We want to look good for the Cowboys," Ms. Roberts said. "We've got to keep practicing."

Stuper learns to get ahead

club, on May 28 and posted a 9-7 record with a 3.36 ERA.

"I learned against Milwaukee the first time the importance of getting ahead of their hitters," Stuper said. "With a team like Milwaukee, with their hitters, it's imperative. You can't let them lay back on 3-0 and 3-1 pitches."

With the Cards trailing in the Series three games to two, Stuper said there was a possibility that if rain pushed the Series back a day on Tuesday, Herzog might go with ace right-hander Joaquin Andujar, who was hit on the right shin by a ground ball in Friday night's Game 3. The forecast calls for a chance of rain.

"He (Herzog) might go with Andujar, if he's healthy," Stuper said. "He's our best pitcher, him and Bobby (Forsch)."

The report on Andujar Monday was that he was responding to treatment for a contusion on the shin bone and would be ready to pitch on Wednesday if needed.

Permian takes over as No. 1

By The Associated Press

The Bryan Vikings, who struggled for two weeks with Port Arthur Jefferson to keep their No. 1 rank in Class 5A of The Associated Press Schoolboy Football Poll, have now lost it to Odessa Permian.

Permian, ranked No. 3 in recent weeks, leap-frogged second-place Port Arthur Jefferson into the driver's seat this week after Bryan was upset 14-13 by Euless Trinity, which jumped from No. 10 to No. 5.

Fort Bend Willowridge in 4A, Post in 3A, Eastland in 2A and Bremond in A all kept their No. 1 billings last week but upsets in the lower rankings have caused a major shakeup.

Permian, along with its four consecutive shut-out victories and string of 33 straight upbeaten games, gathered in 15 of the 24 first-place votes cast by an AP panel of sportswriters and sportscasters. Jeferson remained No. 2 with seven first place vote and Bryan fell to No. 6.

The Panthers have not been scored on since the third game of the season when they defeated Fort Worth Wyatt, 51-7

San Antonio Churchill, No. 5 last week, and No. 8 Gregory-Portland both fell from the unbeaten ranks in 5A with Gregory-Portland dropping out of the top 10 and Churchill sinking to ninth.

Four teams, including No. 2 ranked Brownwood, were losers in Class 4A. Brownwood was upended by Cleburne, which jumped from ninth to fifth following its 9-3 victory. Fourth ranked Waxahachie, seventh ranked Bay City and eighth ranke Sweetwater were the losers and were replaced by New Braunfels, Huntsville and Tomball following losses.

Brownwood remained in the poll at No. 10.

NFL negotiators may take recess

COCKEYSVILLE, Md. (AP) — Sources close to both sides in the 29-day-old National Football League players' strike say a cooling-off period in the talks may be called as early as tonight by mediator Sam Kagel to keep the stalled negotiations alive.

Two members of the owners' executive committee and a union source close to the talks said the recess could last for several days.

"I would expect the talks to break off Tuesday or Wednesday, with Kagel calling them back to the table within a couple of days," the union source told The Associated Press.

The two members of the owners' executive committee, who requested anonymity, agreed that a cooling-off period was in order. "I wouldn't call it breaking off; it is more like a recess," said one.

The union and Management Council have been meeting under Kagel's direction since last Tuesday. Since then, some progress has reportedly been achieved in non-economic issues. But the union's demands for a wage scale, central salary fund and percentage of the league's television revenues have barely been touched upon.

A news blackout was placed in effect by Kagel when he arrived last Tuesday and was pierced last Saturday when both sides argued over which one was stalling. On Monday night it was all but shattered when they were reduced to public name-calling in the lobby of the hotel where the talks are being conducted.

The day began with union chief Ed Garvey, union president Gene Upshaw, owners' top negotiator Jack Donlan and his aide Sargent Karch meeting without Kagel to discuss the union's proposed wage scale.

The negotiations then recessed, Garvey taking advantage of the break to return to Washington, D.C., for a conference at union headquarters with several player representatives.

The talks were supposed to resume at 7:30 p.m. But at that time the union, according to one of its spokesmen, requested a one-hour delay.

At 8:30, the union asked for another one-hour delay.

At 9:30, Kagel took matters into his own hands and put off further talks until today.

Within minutes, Donlan strolled through the hotel's lobby and was inundated by newsmen. "We waited all day for a meeting," he told them. "Obviously they had something better to do."

And Jim Miller, the Management Council's public relations director, said, "We were ready to meet at 4:30, 7:30 and 9:30 and we are still ready to meet. Time isn't a luxury."

Barely 30 minutes after Donlan's appearance, Garvey showed up. He was surrounded by the same swarm of reporters. Asked whether he was prepared to resume negotiations, Garvey replied, "We're ready to go right now." And when asked why the talks weren't, therefore, being conducted, Garvey joked: "I suspect both sides are watching the all-star game."

There weren't that may others watching it — in person, anyway. The 70,000-seat Memorial Coliseum in Los Angeles had an announced crowd of only 5,331 fans in attendance to see the American Conference West team beat the National Conference West (with a liberal sprinkling of players from other divisions on both squads) 31-27.

During the Garvey-UpshawDonlan-Karch conference, sources on both sides agreed a settlement was unlikely at this time, all but assuring that a fifth regular-season weekend of football would be wiped out.

"There is a growing feeling among the participants this is going nowhere," said a union source. And a member of the Management Council said the talks seem to be heading "not toward an agreement."

Garvey said Monday night he hoped the Management Council would change its stance on the wage scale — and insisted the union would not. "There is no possibility of us getting off the wage scale," he said.

Patriots phone players to warn them of lost wages if injured in NFLPA games

By HOWARD ULMAN

BOSTON (AP) — Telephone calls informing three New England Patriots they wouldn't be paid by the club if they were hurt in a game staged by the players' union weren't threats to persuade them to skip the contest, says Patriots' assistant general manager Patrick Sullivan.

He said Monday that the club just wanted to let the players know what they could expect if they were hurt in Sunday's game arranged by the National Football League Players' Association.

Sullivan said he called Ken Fishkin, the agent for linebacker Steve Nelson, and John Staveley, who helped negotiate the contract for center Pete Brock. His father, club owner Billy Sullivan, called quarterback Steve Grogan, he added.

Patrick Sullivan said the calls weren't intended to influence the players not to play "because I knew they would (play) anyway.

"I just wanted it to be clear in their mind that if they were injured they knew exactly where we stood on this thing."

None of the three players was hurt in the game.

The Boston Globe reported Monday that the team's owners threatened to void the guaranteed part of the players' contracts if they were hurt in Sunday's game.

"We never threatened them. We don't threaten our players," Patrick Sullivan said. "What was told to them was if there were a case of an injury and the strike was settled this week and because of that injury Steve Grogan or Pete Brock or Steve Nelson couldn't play next week, we wouldn't be responsible for paying them."

Billy Sullivan, according to his son, told Grogan, "he was disappointed in the fact that Steve had said he had a commitment to the union. My father said he thought he (Grogan) had a commitment to the Patriots and fans... and 'if you're injured where does that leave the Patriots and the fans of the Patriots?' "

Grogan refused to comment on the call from Billy Sullivan, the Globe reported, and said, "I may be able to explain it sooner or later, probably sooner."

Brock said the call "didn't really do anything to me. I was going to play and I played," according to the newspaper.

"I would not interpret anything Patrick said to me as in any way resembling a threat," Fishkin said Monday.

Of the eight Patriots in Sunday's game, only Grogan, Nelson and Brock were called, Patrick Sullivan said. The others were tight end Don Hasselbeck, the team's player representative, wide receiver Stanley Morgan, running back Mosi Tatupu, and defensive backs Mike Haynes and Raymond Clayborn.

Hasselbeck said Monday, "Why are they calling when no one else in the league is calling, and they only call certain players."

Sullivan said the three players were called because "we consider them our leaders."

Patrick Sullivan said that club officials would not punish the eight Patriots for playing Sunday.

Akers says SMU better than Sooners

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Coach Fred Akers of Texas said Monday that undefeated Southern Methodist has "all its firepower back" and is better than last year when the Mustangs won the Southwest Conference football championship with a 10-1 season record.

The only loss last year was to Texas 9-7, so this year's regionally televised game has special significance for Southern Methodist, which is 6-0 and was ranked No. 5 in the nation.

Akers told his weekly news conference he thinks Southern Methodist is better than Oklahoma.

We need VIVIAN WOOD
For District Clerk

Oct. 19

DEAR MIDLAND VOTER:

As a former employee in the Midland County District Clerk's Office, I feel obligated and qualified to answer questions concerning this office.

1. QUESTION: Why does Midland County need a new District Clerk?
ANSWER: The office is run inadequately and is not keeping up with our growing community and the demands of our Judicial process.

2. QUESTION: Why is the office inefficient?
ANSWER: One reason is the constant turnover of personnel in the office. There have been approximately 34 persons terminate their employment in the past 3½ years.

3. QUESTION: How does this turnover compare with other Midland County Offices?
ANSWER: A similar county office lost only 3 people in the same time period. In fact, our Midland County District Clerk's Office has the highest employee turnover rate of any District Clerk's Office in the major cities of West Texas.

4. QUESTION: Are there problems in the present accounting system?
ANSWER: YES! The present system closes the books five days out of every month. This restricts the flow of monies and causes delays and inconveniences to you, the taxpaper.

FOR THESE REASONS, I am urging concerned citizens to join with me in electing a qualified, experienced and effective District Clerk---

.....VIVIAN WOOD

Sincerely,
Barbara Dalton

Devils off to good start

By MIKE EMBRY
AP Sports Writer

New Jersey Coach Billy MacMillan isn't surprised by the strong start of his Devils. The team simply needed a change of scenery after last season's Rocky Mountain low.

The Devils beat the Philadelphia 3-1 Monday night to improve their National Hockey League record to 3-1-3. It's the best-ever start for the franchise, that also called Colorado and Kansas City home before moving to East Rutherford, N.J., this season.

"With this fresh place in New Jersey," MacMillan said, "the boys feel they are wanted."

The Devils, playing as the Colorado Rockies, finished 18-49-13 last year, the worst record in the NHL.

"I'm starting to believe a little bit in this team," MacMillan said. "I'm pleased. They carried their assignment to the letter. I'm surprised, but I did say before the season our team was better than their record of last season."

Right wing Bob MacMillan led the Devils with two goals in the first two periods and center Don Lever added an insurance goal in the final period.

The Flyers, 5-2, went ahead 1-0 at 3:36 of the first period when defenseman Behn Wilson backhanded a shot past Devils' goalie Glenn Resch on a power play.

MacMillan tied the game on a rebound of a shot by Dave Hutchinson and gave the Devils the lead in the second period after a shot by Aaron Broten bounced off his ankle and past Flyers' goaltender Rick St. Croix.

Lever's score came midway through the third period on a power-play goal off a rebound of a shot by MacMillan.

North Stars 4, Blues 3

Just when Blues' goalie Mike Liut thought everything was under control, Minnesota's Tom McCarthy pulled a net trick.

With two and a half minutes to play, Liut thought he was flipping the puck safely out of his zone. But it hit Minnesota's Dino Ciccarelli on the shin pad and bounced over the net.

McCarthy saw the puck, batted it out of the air and into the net to give the North Stars their winning goal. Liut couldn't believe it.

"I've never seen a play like that," he said. "We've got a good team and so do they. But they got a break tonight that nobody deserves. You just can't believe it. One minute the puck's behind the net and the next some guy bats it out of the air and into the net."

Andrews upsets Sweetwater with 24-point second half

The Andrews Mustangs didn't allow Sweetwater to run a play until they scored two touchdowns to start the second half of their District 2-4A clash.

Andrews, down 14-0 at the half, shutdown the Sweetwater attack and capitalized on four fumbles in route to a 24-14 upset victory.

Pecos (1-2) won its first conference game with a 21-0 shutout over Snyder (1-2).

The Golden Cranes are alone atop District 6-AAA. After only two weeks of conference play, Crane is the only unbeaten team while four teams are tied for second.

But the going has been tough for the team that seemed invincible in pre-district games. The avearage score in a Crane outing was 19-4, which included three shutouts. But district opponents have been taking pot-shots at the once mighty bird and the Golden Cranes have been fortunate to escape with two one-point victories. First it was Sonora, 15-14, then last week Coahoma scared the bird to the tune of 19-18. The loss left Coahoma alone in the cellar at 0-2.

Sonora handed Ballinger its second loss of the season 7-0. Both of the Bearcat losses have been shutouts. After suffering its first loss of the year two weeks ago, Ozona came back to beat Colorado City 26-21. All four teams are tied at 1-1 in district play.

In District 8-AA the beginning of league play was a revival for the top two teams.

The Stanton Buffaloes, 2-3 in pre-district games, have apparently found a new offense just in time for the beginning of conference play.

After scoring only 32 points in their first five pre-district games, Stanton beat Eldorado 29-6 to open conference play, followed by a 43-0 romp over Miles Friday. The Buffaloes' previous high was a 15-point output against Tahoka.

Regan County remained tied with Stanton for the league lead by downing Eldorado 28-15. The Owls were 0-4-1 before their first two district games.

McCamey took advantage of seven turnovers and upset the Wall Hawks 21-12. Both teams are now 1-1 in league action.

In district 6-A the Wink Wildcats beat Buena Vista 59-8 to keep their record spotless at 6-0.

Iraan gave up its first points in a district game but held on to down Rankin 10-7. Iraan stayed tied with Wink for the district lead at 3-0.

Rankin and Buena Vista fell to 1-2 in loop play along with Sanderson which dropped a 20-18 decision to Grandfalls.

With the victory Grandfalls, the surprise team in the early going, raised its record to 2-1.

Balmorhea (0-1-2) got as close as posible to winning its first game of the season with a 7-7 tie against Fort Davis (1-1-1).

After losing their first five games the Greenwood Rangers are on another streak. Greenwood made it three in a row and improved its District 7-A record to 3-1 with a 21-7 decision over Irion County. Irion County joined Water Valley, 48-20 losers to Robert Lee (1-3), in the cellar with a 0-4 mark.

Eden and Garden City set up this weeks showdown as they both posted shuouts improving their records to 4-0. Eden handed Sterling City (3-1) its first district loss 21-0 while Garden City beat Bronte (1-3) 20-0.

and his career has been followed by controversy.

When he was with the Dodgers, he had a celebrated brawl with Steve Garvey. When he arrived in Houston, he said he never wanted to go back to California. He wanted to raise his kids in the country and wear blue jeans.

Then he built a large house in California, and his welcome began to get worn out.

When the Brewers clinched the pennant, Baltimore's Jim Palmer showed a scuffed ball to home plate umpire Don Denkinger. So Denkinger took a walk to the mound to speak with Sutton. The ump told the pitcher that Palmer had showed him a scuffed ball and if he found another one there would be trouble.

Replied Sutton:

"Fine. If I find one I'll give it to you to throw out."

Play under way in MTC Fall USTA Masters play

Play got underway today in the Midland Tennis Club's 22nd annual Fall Tournament at Midland College courts. Finals in the USTA Texas Segment Masters will be held Sunday at the Racquet Club.

Today's play began at 11:30 a.m. with three singles matches to be followed by three more singles while two singles and doubles will be played after 4 p.m. A light lunch will be served at courtside for fans who wish to take in a match during their lunch hour.

The same schedule is on tap for Wednesday while Thursday, four singles are scheduled for 11:30 a.m. with four more to follow and doubles slated after that.

Friday, quarterfinals begin with three singles at 11:30 a.m. and one after 4 p.m., to be played at the same time the doubles field is narrowing.

Semifinals are 11:30 Saturday, followed by the doubles.

Admission is free to all matches.

The tournament is sponsored by the First National Bank and the prize money this year was raised from $7,500 to $10,000.

Lee JV places second

Midland Lee's Junior Varsity volleyball team took second place in the District 4-5A tournament, losing to Abilene Cooper, 12-15, 13-15 in the finals. Lee gained the finals with victories over Abilene, 15-8, 15-4 and San Angelo 15-10,8-5 and 15-6.

Tulsa may lose TL champions

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — One of Oklahoma's two professional baseball teams may lose its stadium lease if a contract dispute cannot be settled by the end of this month, officials said Monday.

"There is a possibility there may not be baseball in Tulsa next season unless things can be worked out," said John Zink, chairman of the Tulsa County Fairgrounds Trust Authority.

The authority voted Monday to file a petition seeking termination of the lease on Sutton Stadium, which is located on the fairgrounds and used by the Tulsa Drillers of the Class AA Texas League.

Financial markets continue bullish pace

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business Writer

The nation's financial markets, bouyed by the recent big dropoff in interest rates, shrugged off news that the nation's factories were working at their lowest level in 7½ years.

Interest rates in the open market continued to fall Monday as the Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks vaulted above the 1,000 mark after having slumped late last week. The widely watched index of blue-chip stocks climbed 26.12 points, to 1,019.22 — the highest level since April 27, 1981.

Bond prices added as much as $10 for every $1,000 in face value.

The Federal Reserve Board said manufacturers used just 69.1 percent of capacity in September, down 0.5 percentage point from the month before and the lowest since the 69.1 percent in March 1975. September's drop was the 12th in the last 14 months.

The figures paralleled the government's report last week that total output by factories and mines fell 0.6 percent in September.

The dropoff was particularly steep for heavy industry. The report said factory use by producers of durable goods materials slumped 1.3 percent.

Six-month savings certificates will pay less than 9 percent interest starting today, a reflection of the recent big dropoff in interest rates that has sent stock and bond markets soaring.

Under the government's formula for setting the rate on savings certificates, based on the latest auction of U.S. treasury bills, commercial banks will be limited to paying 8.73 percent while savings institutions can pay up to 8.98 percent. Both were paying 9.15 percent last week.

Savings institutions are given a quarter-point advantage whenever the government's base number for figuring the certificate rate falls below 8.5 percent.

Several manufacturing concerns reported lower earnings, or net losses, for the third business quarter.

Armco Inc., the nation's seventh-largest steel producer, reported a net loss from operations of $52 million in the quarter ended Sept. 30. It also said it expected a difficult fourth quarter because of depressed demand for steel products.

In San Francisco, Crown Zellerbach Corp., maker of paper products, reported a slight improvement in profits but said earnings remained "severely depressed" by the recession.

In other economic developments:

—Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan said in an interview with The Associated Press that top government officials worry about the possibility of the economy sliding "into a deeper recession or even a depression." But he said he believed President Reagan has the "right antidotes." Regan said concern about a possible slide in the economy was behind the Fed's recent loosening of its grip on the money supply.

—Talks broke off between Chrysler Corp. and the United Auto Workers with the company saying a strike could be "ruinous." UAW President Douglas Fraser, however, refused to rule out the possibility and called a meeting Thursday of Chrysler's bargaining council.

—Braniff International and Pacific Southwest Airlines announced a tentative plan for a joint venture that would put some Braniff planes back in the air under the PSA logo. The plan must be approved in bankruptcy court because Braniff filed for protection from its creditors in May, idling its planes and most of its 9,000 employees.

Kaufman warns of possible worldwide depression

NEW YORK (AP) — Wall Street economist Henry Kaufman warned today that the risk of worldwide depression remains as non-communist countries attempt to change course from years of inflation to a period of sustainable economic growth.

Kaufman, chief economist and managing director of the investment banking firm of Salomon Brothers Inc., said one danger is that there is no tested theory for such a transition.

"Instead, we must steer down the path of disinflation while avoiding the high cost of deflation that would spark a worldwide depression," he said.

Disinflation refers to a slowing of the rate of price increases as opposed to deflation, when prices actually fall.

Kaufman's remarks were prepared for delivery in Tokyo to an audience of government officials and corporate and financial executives. Copies of the text were made available in New York.

Obstacles to be overcome, he said, include huge international debt, instability in international financial institutions and interest rates that remain at historically high levels when adjusted for inflation.

Among his proposals was the creation of an emergency pool of funds, "exceeding perhaps $50 billion," to encourage confidence in the international financial system and indicate it will be defended.

At the same time, he called for curbs in "liberal credit practices" by lenders.

And he complained of "problems in global political leadership" without identifying individual leaders.

"These problems are wrought by the current process of change in leadership, by a narrow focus of attention on insular domestic issues, and by differences in political and economic attitudes," Kaufman said. "Our world political leadership today should recognize the urgency of focusing upon, and resolving, a precarious international financial situation."

For the United States, Kaufman repeated a call for a comprehensive program for reducing the federal budget deficit, including possible tax increases and cuts in social and military spending.

Buyers eager at auction

PARACHUTE, Colo. (AP) — Eager buyers snapped up everything from popcorn poppers to bulldozers during the first day of what could be the nation's largest garage sale — the auction of equipment from Exxon USA's ill-fated shale oil project.

Exxon officials said they raised more than $3.2 million Monday and expect the total to mount before the sale ends Wednesday. They said more than 1,000 buyers turned out.

Up for sale was equipment from the abandoned Colony Shale Oil Project not distributed to other Exxon facilities. Clothing and kitchen appliances were included, along with snowmobiles and giant excavators.

There were also pickup trucks and bulldozers, buses, mops, mounds of tire chains, water jugs, jackets and hardhats.

Officials of Parks-Davis Auctioneers Inc., the Dallas-based compnay handling the sale, said the only comparable sale in terms of attendance and numbers of items was the liquidation of the Alaskan pipeline equipment several years ago.

"We sold $14 million in 14 hours one day during that one," an auctioneer said.

Hurt by Exxon's surprise closing of the Colony project last May 2, local proprietors were enjoying busy restaurants, bars, hotel and gas stations. There were backups at the only traffic light in Parachute, located on the western slope of the Rocky Mountains 180 miles west of Denver.

Most of the prices coaxed from crowd by Parks and his roving assistants were "a bit on the high side," according to Mac McOmber of Sletten Construction Co. of Great Falls, Mont., who said he had seen generators sold for more the current prices at regular outlets.

"Some people get riled up during these things and you don't know what they'll pay," McOmber said.

Nevertheless, McOmber said, he was happy to pay $57,500 for an 18-ton hydraulic crane. The sale took only 20 seconds.

"We got a good deal," Jay Rieken, vice president of Franzen & Sons Plumbing Co. of Commerce City, said after retired owner Ivan Franzen successfully bid $200,000 for a year-old hydraulic excavator.

Short term T-bill yields remain close to low levels

WASHINGTON (AP) — Yields on short-term Treasury securities remain close to the lowest in more than two years, having risen only slightly in the latest auction.

About $5.6 billion in new three-month bills were sold Monday at an average discount rate of 7.437 percent, up from the 7.429 percent of last week.

The government also auctioned about $5.6 billion in six-month bills at an average rate of 7.762 percent, up from 7.734 percent.

Monday's yields, a measure of the cost of government borrowing from the public, were the highest since the Oct. 4 levels of 8.102 percent for three-month bills and 9.229 percent for six-month bills. But they were still not far above the June 23, 1980, levels of 7.077 percent for three-month bills and 7.108 percent for six-month bills.

The yields had been around 13 percent as recently as the first week in July but have been falling in most recent weeks along with interest rates in general.

—Savings and loan associations may pay as much as 8.98 percent interest on $10,000-minimum six-month money market certificates and commercial banks may pay 8.73 percent. Both have been at 9.15 percent for the past week.

The ceilings are based on the higher of two figures: the new discount rate on six-month T-bills or the average for such bills at the four most recent auctions — 8.48 percent in this case.

When the higher of those figures — again, 8.48 percent — is below 8.5 percent, the ceiling is that figure plus one-quarter percentage point for commercial banks or plus one-half point for savings and loans.

—Banks and S&Ls may pay as much as 7.437 percent on $7,500-minimum three-month certificates compared with last week's 7.429 percent.

—S&Ls may pay as much as 11.1 percent and commercial banks as much as 10.85 percent interest on 2½-year "small-saver" certificates.

—New tax-exempt one-year "all-savers" certificates issued by financial institutions pay 7.48 percent when held to maturity.

Strike against Chrysler may be near, Fraser says

HIGHLAND PARK, Mich. (AP) — The head of the United Auto Workers, saying a strike against Chrysler Corp. may be near, promises he won't frighten workers into staying on the job by echoing company claims that a walkout would be ruinous to the automaker.

UAW President Douglas Fraser — who had negotiated an agreement with Chrysler that was rejected by the rank-and-file — planned to huddle with key leaders today and Wednesday to develop a proposal for the special meeting of the UAW's Chrysler bargaining council on Thursday.

The breakdown in talks with the No. 3 carmaker Monday "greatly enhances" chances for a costly walkout, he said. The UAW would have to give 24 hours' notice of any strike, he said.

Chrysler, which has been plagued by financial problems for years, says a strike could be crippling to the company.

"We're not going to try to intimidate the Chrysler workers," Fraser said at a news conference. "I think the workers are intelligent enough to know what's at stake."

In the past, Fraser has called the prospect of a strike "horrifying" because of the damage it might do to Chrysler, which has struggled back from the brink of bankruptcy in the last three years.

The impasse follows rank-and-file rejection of a union-negotiated contract that promised workers future pay increases contingent on company profits, plus modest cost-of-living increases.

The tentative pact, reached Sept. 16, was rejected by a 7-3 margin earlier this month, sending the UAW back to the bargaining table Friday to demand an immediate pay increase.

Delivering Chrysler's answer Monday, Thomas Miner, Chrysler vice president of industrial relations, said "there simply is no more money available."

"We told the union that a strike of any duration at all would severely cripple us, could ruin us in a number of weeks," Miner told a news conference. "I hope they take that into consideration."

Dollar firm, gold up

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar, sustained by continued commercial demand, firmed in early foreign trading today and gold prices rose more than $8 an ounce.

Traders attributed the dollar's strength to reports of another possible round of Scandinavian currency devaluations and to the chronic weakness of other currencies in the European Monetary System.

7.1165 French francs, up from 7.1038

2.7505 Dutch guilders, up from 2.7430

1,435.50 Italian lire, up from 1,435.30

Focusing on alternatives might dent joblessness

WASHINGTON (AP) — Focusing on energy conservation and shifting the nation's focus from oil to renewable fuel resources could make a "significant" dent in unemployment, an energy analyst has predicted.

Leonard Rodberg, a professor at Queens College in New York, predicted said Monday that 2.2 million jobs could be directly created and another 4.9 million indirectly within 10 years of such policy shifts.

Promoting conservation programs such as home weatherization and spurring the development of solar, wind and other alternative energy resources would help cut the nation's 10.1 percent jobless rate, Rodberg said.

The current emphasis on oil and mineral exploration takes work away from the cities, where unemployment is worse, he said.

Rodberg, who works for his college's Center for the Biology of Natural Systems, said the world's oil reserves will be depleted within a century, so shifting to alternative energy sources might as well be accomplished as soon as possible.

"They are energy sources that can employ substantial numbers of people," he told a coalition of Northeastern and Midwestern congressmen. "It could make a significant dent in unemployment."

Conservation efforts and the use of alternative fuel sources have the added effect of saving consumers money by reducing utility bills, Rodberg argued.

He said the money saved will give consumers more to spend, thereby helping the job market grow throughout the economy.

Gulf bomber switches jails

HOUSTON (AP) - Timothy K. Justice, 30, who has admitted placing five bombs inside a Gulf Oil Chemical Co. plant near here in a $15 million extortion attempt, has been tranferred here from Durango, Colo. under an assumed name.

U.S. Atty. Dan Hedges refused to confirm the transfer but Sheriff's Major Larry Frazier said Justice was placed in an isolation unit in the county jail.

The other defendants are John McBride, 46, jailed in Durango, and Michael Allen Worth, 34, and Theodore McKinney, 45, both jailed in Phoenix, Ariz.

The four men are accused of sending letters to Gulf officials Sept. 28 after five bombs were placed inside the plant near Baytown. The FBI caught the people a week later in Colorado.

Nation's economic woes also beset farmers

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

STANTON — Cotton farmers left the farm at harvest time and gathered in town to mingle with the press corps. Then, they all went out into the field.

The farmers' mission was to give newsmen a glimpse into agriculture and its woes in these trying times. They wanted to get agriculture's message out to the public. And conservationist Alvin Riddle, who was figuring a better way to get the message across, suggested that each newsman join up with a farmer to get straight answers to questions.

"For the farmers' benefit," quipped Knott farmer T. Paul Hopper, "can we have about 10 minutes together, so we can practice our answers?"

No deal.

But theTexas Agricultural Extension Service (TAEX) agents and specialists, as well as a U.S. congressman, came up with some answers anyway. Probably not to their surprise, farmers, who often harp about the changing weather and the depressed marketplace, aren't loners in the economic slump.

The waning agriculture industry is but a symptom of the economic ill winds.

"Our country is in deep economic trouble," said farmer-congressman Charles Stenholm of Stamford in addressing more than 100 farmers, the professionals and newsmen after farmers had accompanied the media on a tour of a cotton farm, a gin and a compress on Martin County's Agricultural Appreciation Day and Media Tour on Monday.

"WHEN WE FIND the answers to one of them (problems with the country and with agriculture), we're going to find the answers to both."

Stenholm noted the economic decline of agriculture and the country, suspected a relationship and cited the "growing bankruptcy" in the 50 states. Agriculture, after all, accounts for 20 percent of the gross national product, he said. "There are no simple solutions."

But the congressman observed that one of the farmers's main goals — increased productivity — and his efficiency at his life's work is working against him. Farmers are "being too productive," Stenholm said, and the subsequent surplus of farm goods, including cotton, makes for oversupply, which drives prices downward and puts profits out of reach of the farmers. The congressman suggested that limiting their production would give farmers an active role in the now out-of-kilter supply-demand scales.

"We have to cut down on how much we are producing...to get supply in line with demand...or we are going to produce ourselves into bankruptcy."

AS IT IS widely practiced now, agriculture is on its "dying deathbed," Stenholm said.

"We (farmers) are our own worst enemy," he said following the noon barbecue in the Martin County Community Center. "And you can't blame this one on Jimmy Carter.

"At the time we're fighting the battle, we're losing the war."

In exhorting the farmers to do for themselves, Stenholm noted that there are a lot of things "we know that just ain't so." He cited a few examples:

—The middlemen are making excessive profits to the detriment of the farmers. Not so, he said. "We've been chasing the wrong rabbit. Everybody has got to make a profit. The problem is not that the middleman is making too much; the bottom man is making too little."

—The answer to agriculture's woes is solely in the free-market system. "Oh, how I wish that were so."

—A solution would be to get government out of agriculture. "Oh, I wish that were possible.

"There are solutions to our problems in our system of government. If we are wrong, we don't stay wrong very long." And with that, he noted a bumper sticker which he said he could appreciate: "Don't Re-elect Anyone."

THE CONGRESSMAN said farmers could take same advice from Gulf Oil Corp. "They no longer want to be the biggest. They want to be the best. Being biggest doesn't mean you're the best.

"What it takes to be a successful farmer — I'll tell you in two seconds — is an oil well," he, said, joking or not.

"Our whole country's got economic problems — not just the farmer. The whole world is sick.

"As farmers, we need our bankers lobbying with us. We've got lots of things in common with the oil industry; we've got something they've got: Folks don't like them, either."

In a forum of farmers following Stenholm's speech, E.D. "Wimp" Holcomb of Plains Cotton Growers Association said he agreed "wholeheartedly" with Stenholm's suggestion that farmers reduce their planted acreage to benefit from the supply-demand law by getting more for their products. Holcomb said he would rather plant 50 acres of cotton and get $1.25 a pound for his lint than plant 100 acres and get 50 cents a pound.

And a benefit in decreased cotton acreage could be crop rotation, Holcomb said.

"We all need to go to rotating our crops and build our soil back up; we all know it."

EARLIER IN THE DAY, the farmers, the newsmen and the professionals climbed aboard three yellow school buses for a four-stop field tour:

—Stop No. 1: Wayne Cook's dryland cotton farm. "We try and gather what little bit's there," Cook said. He said he might get three-quarters of a bale per acre. This year, cotton is expected to bring

New program benefits everyone in hospital community

Jane Dresser and Alan Schroeder are teaming up as counselors for a new mental health comprehensive program at Midland Memorial Hospital that will offer help to all patients. Ms. Dresser is a certified clinical psychiatrist specialist and Schroeder, a master's-prepared social worker, heads MMH's social development program.

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

As part of a comprehensive mental health program at Midland Memorial Hospital, a group therapy session was initiated for psychiatric patients, and now it will be extended to all hospitalized patients.

According to Jane Dresser, MMH's new clinical pyschiatric nurse specialist, there has been a need for a mental health program dealing with stress-related problems at MMH for all patients.

Psychiatrists, Ph.D. psychologists, master's-prepared social workers and master's-prepared certified specialists in psychiatry are the only four professional health personnel recognized by the National Institute of Mental Health to counsel patients, according to Ms. Dresser.

Alan Schroeder, who is a master's-prepared social worker and director of the MMH social service department, is co-leading the two-week-old counseling program with Ms. Dresser.

THIS PROGRAM will be extended to anyone needing to alleviate stress, including patients and families who may have anxieties or concerns about a disease or operation.

"Someone who we could counsel could be a patient with kidney failure who is put on dialysis; the patient and family may be distressed," Ms. Dresser said. "An oncology patient or a patient with diabetes may need help. We will be here to help people to learn more adaptive and comfortable ways to handle the stress in their lives."

Schroeder and Ms. Dresser are presently working with the group therapy counseling session for psychiatric patients, but they said this group will be extended to other patients.

"For example, let's take a 44-year-old man admitted to the hospital by his physician for an evaluation," Schroeder said. "The man's physical workup may result in no signs of physical ailment, but he's still a nervous wreck. He has mental stress.

"HE'S A workaholic, pushing himself 12 hours a day and neglecting his family and maybe drinking too much. His body says stop, showing signs of a physiological problem. He's got to make some decisions — less work, more time with his family, ease up on the drinking.

"We would deal with this kind of a problem in this group," Schroeder said. "We would help him to learn to relax and get back in touch with his family."

Ms. Dresser said that in the past the psychiatric patient has been isolated. She added that this program would help to get away from the negative thoughts about the "mentally disturbed," making people realize that anyone can encounter a problem, such as stress, which can be helped through counseling.

"We're not trying to duplicate any other services in the community," Ms. Dresser said. "There are no programs for in-patients. If a nurse or a physician saw that a patient was depressed — over a disease or surgery — there wasn't anybody to help the patient. Now there will be."

OTHER THAN the individual and group therapy, Ms. Dresser said she also will initiate an occupational therapy program for psychiatric patients. Occupational therapy is usually known for introducing crafts to help patients overcome a physical problem. She added that there are not any Midland programs which include occupational therapy or recreation for psychiatric patients.

She said different types of crafts can be used for psychiatric patients, just as they are used to help someone physically impaired.

"We can use crafts in different ways to build defenses when they are needed, help people organize themselves and relax if they're too organized. Also the crafts would give an outlet for anger and depression for those who do not know how to release these feelings.

"Another service is a recreation program," she added. "People with high level stress don't know how to relax. Eventually, I would like to get psychiatric patients out

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

The University Interscholastic League touches almost every aspect of Midland's high school activities, especially during the spring semester, according to Maridell Fryar, Midland Independent School District coordinator of fine arts and speech.

"We have some kind of UIL event probably every month," Mrs. Fryar said, "and in the spring there are a number of events each month. March and April are full of them."

National High School Activities Week, which runs through Sunday and is being chaired by former President Gerald Ford this year, is established to salute outstanding students who voluntarily participate in extracurricular activities, according to a release issued by the UIL.

"These activities offer experience in human relations as well as physical and emotional development," Ford said. "They are paramount to youth's total education, yet consume less than 1 percent of the school's total budget."

"A student's success in extracurricular activities is a better predictor of adult success than pre-college test scores or academic grades," said UIL director Dr. Bailey Marshall. "There also is evidence that students involved in extracurricular activities are less likely to be absent from class. The activities program is a tool to keep students in school and interested."

This year, more than 1.5 million Texas public school students will voluntarily participate in a UIL event, according to the release. The UIL estimates that one out of every two graduating seniors voluntarily participates in a UIL-sponsored event sometime during his high school career.

Although statistics on the number of MISD students participating in UIL contests were not available, Mrs. Fryar contended that a large number of students do participate in events at the district, regional and state level.

Between mandating eligibility requirements for the high school athlete to ruling on materials to be covered during speech contests, the UIL serves a necessary function.

"It is a very expensive state activities league," Mrs. Fryar explained. "Primarily it controls events that go to the state level. The whole notion is to make things equally fair between schools and while a lot of people get angry (with certain limitations set down by the UIL, such as college athletic recruitment and high school eligibility), in a state as large and diverse as Texas, we need them."

Besides athletic events, high school students participate under UIL sponsorship in what Mrs. Fryar referred to as "literary events." Those events include science, mathematics, journalism, speech and drama. Speech is divided into debate, prose, extemporaneous speaking and one-act play competitions. Journalism includes contests in feature writing, editorial writing and headline writing. English is broken down into ready-writing, or expository writing, and spelling, she explained.

Also under UIL sponsorship are music events such as choir, band and orchestra contests in marching, concert, sight reading and solo-ensemble.

UIL also sponsors competitions on the elementary and junior high school levels, although Midland's students don't participate until they reach high school, Mrs. Fryar said.

UIL records show students who take part in extracurricular activities score higher in achievement and college entrance examinations, have a much lower drop-out rate and achieve higher college grades than those who do not participate in these contests, the news release stated.

But the UIL also serves in keeping school districts with different budgets on an equal basis, Mrs. Fryar pointed out. She explained that districts that have more money could afford to have more benefits for their students, thereby moving ahead of competition from other less financially-able districts.

"(If there was no control from the UIL) we would have abuses and kids being exploited by people wanting to win," she said.

DEATHS

Isom L. Phipps

Services for Isom L. "Bud" Phipps, 68, of 311 E. Spruce Ave. will be at 2 p.m. Wednesday in the First Assembly of God Church with the Rev. W.D. Metzgar of Fairfield officiating and the Rev. 'Halftime show' is Wednesday

United Way of Midland will hold its "halftime show" Wednesday at noon on the south lawn of the downtown Midland County Courthouse.

The rally will mark the halfway point of this year's campaign and will feature free hot dogs and soft drinks, a band and another appearance by former Dallas Cowboy Cliff Harris, who was the featured speaker at the United Way's kickoff luncheon.

Big man had big jobs

William Howard Taft (1857-1930) was the first and only man to hold our two highest offices. He was president from 1909 to 1913 and chief justice of the United States from 1921 to his death. He was also very fat, weighing 325 pounds.

Council plans special meeting

A special session of the Midland City Council will be held at 11 a.m Friday in City Hall Council Chambers to handle two items.

The first calls for considering the question of issuing building permits in 349 Ranch Estates development project.

This area is included in the annexation proposal, and the council recently passed a resolution halting all construction in the annexation tracts.

Also, the council will consider entering into a transportation agreement with The First National Bank of Midland to include three additional shuttle buses under the Mid-Tran transportation program.

Farmers hurting as result of economic hard times between 48 and 52 cents per pound.

—Stop No. 2: Farmers Cooperative Cotton Gin: "We expect to gin 10,000 to 12,000 (bales this year)," said gin manager Ron Riley. "But," he said of cotton production throughout the county, "with the kind of crop we've got, that's anybody's guess." Riddle, who's the U.S. Soil Conservation Service's conservationist for Martin County, said that in 1981 the county produced about 160,000 bales of cotton. "That was a pretty good year." In 1982, however, the yield may be on 80,000 to 85,000 bales. "We had too much hail (last of May and June), and some of the fellows had to plant five times."

Near the gin, which turns out between 13 and 14 bales per hour, Jimmy Nail of Lubbock demonstrated the Telcot Computer Marketing System, which can tell the farmers the grade, staple and micronaire of the cotton, and, among other things, the market prices.

"IT GOES ON and tells the sports, general news and the weather. It's basically an information tool," Nail said. He surveyed the Telcot's tube: "Unfortuntely, you see some 'no sales.' We just have the economic situation where we don't have buyers this time — not only in the United States but throughout the world."

—Stop No. 3: West Texas Industries Compress. Here bales of cotton from the gin are compressed to "universal density" — to about half the size of gin-density cotton — for shipping and milling convenience, explained Bob Klatt, compress manager. Once compressed, up to 32,000 bales can be stored in the warehouse and another 55,000 bales can be stored in the yards.

When it rains or the sand blows, the cotton is supposed to be protected under certain standards. Farmer Hopper seemed to wonder about that. "That works about like telling your wife to do something," he said. "Give her your MasterCharge and tell her not to use it."

—Stop No. 4: Texas Electric Service Co.'s Reddy Room. There, the touring party viewed a film and color slides of cotton production and of the American Cotton Growers plant, a Littlefield textile mill which produces denim from cotton supplied by 3,500 cotton producers in 25 cooperatives. "It's the Cadillac of the world," said St. Lawrence farmer Clifford Hoelscher.

All of the mill's No. 1 denim goes to Levi Strauss & Co. for making denim products, including blue jeans. (A 480-pound bale of cotton, worth about $240 to the farmer, can yield about 330 pairs of men's jeans valued at the retail level at $3,564, or 1,217 T-shirts worth $1,716, or 180 bib overalls worth $1,834.)

St. Lawrence farmer Wilbert Braden, representative to the National Cotton Council, noted that efforts are being made to put in a farmer-owned High-Volume Instrument Classing system for classifying cotton at Abilene. "It's going to be a long, hard row." The electronic system, as opposed to the older mechanical system, will be "more consistent on your (fiber) strength," which is a critical factor to textile mills, "and also you get a little better premium for your cotton."

Cost of instrument classifying is about $1.10 per sample cut out of a bale. The older method costs 67 cents a sample. But the rub is in the system's cost — about $100,000 — per High Volume Instrument line. Farmers must bear the cost of the new system, Braden said.

Cost of farming is forcing some producers out of business, observed Hoelscher, who is executive director of the St. Lawrence Cotton Growers Association. "We're having more farm sales and liquidations than we've ever had, and the bigger you are, the more it costs to produce a bale."

That farmers are in troubled times was reaffirmed by Upton County farmer Frank Evridge. "Farmers aren't worried about making money," he said. "They're worried about surviving."

ODESSA — An 18-year-old man has been charged with murder in the Monday morning shooting death of Odessan Juan Carlos Bates.

David John Dutchover of 313 Geneva St. was in jail this morning under bonds totaling $50,000. He is charged with shooting Bates, 20, in the chest during an argument about 3:30 a.m. Monday. Witnesses told police Bates was shot with a stolen handgun the men were arguing about.

Dutchover is also charged with burglarizing the Foodway grocery store at 826 W. Clements shortly before the murder. He is alleged to have broken a window and stolen some beer from the store. He then invited several people to his house for a party, where the shooting took place, according to police.

Municipal Court Judge Otis Moore set bond of $40,000 on the murder charge and $10,000 on the burglary charge. Dutchover walked into the sheriff's office and surrendered about 7:30 a.m. Monday.

Midland attorney named to advisory committee

AUSTIN — Midland attorney Michael Williams has been appointed to the Advisory Committee for Child Support Enforcement for the Texas Department of Human Resources.

Williams joins 175 other Texas citizens who serve on the department's 11 advisory groups, assisting the Board of Human Resources and the department's staff in the delivery of human services.

"These 175 citizen-advisors render a valuable service to the department in providing their expertise and experience in helping shape the programs that assist 1.5 million Texans annually," said Frederick Rehfeldt, M.D., chairman of the Board of Human Resources, which approved the appointment.

Purpose of the advisory committee on which Williams will serve is to recommend plans and objectives and devise strategies in the agency's child support enforcement program.

In a representative month, the Department of Human Resources will locate about 500 absent parents and collect $1.2 million in child support payments through voluntary or court-ordered action.

American Heart Association awards given at workshop

The American Heart Association Texas Affiliate recognized individuals and divisions at its Permian Basin Region Leadership Workshop recently.

Dr. Brian Mohr, Midland County program chairperson, presented the awards for outstanding efforts during the 1981-82 year.

The heart and torch award was presented to Kay Bivens of Midland County and Mary Frances Harkins of Terrell County for setting new campaign records in their counties. Awards of achievement were given to Moody Conner of Andrews County, James McLeroy of Borden County and Page Eiland of Martin County.

The outstanding program was awarded to Nettie Gonzales of Pecos County for education efforts and an honorable mention was presented to Susie Wilmeth.

Recognition to those who have given five years of service included James McLeroy, Borden County; and Helen Bizzell, Richard Palmer and David Rickey, all from Howard County.

The outstanding division for the year was Andrews County. The county was judged on the basis of achievements in program, fund-raising and publicity. The county raised $12,906 in its campaign and conducted many educational programs which included CPR, high blood pressure awareness, youth education and teacher in-services.

"Bowling is excellent therapy for people who can't release their anger. This type of program is an essential aspect, if we intend to have a comprehensive program. People need ways to handle their stress other than drugs and alcohol," she said.

ALTHOUGH THE occupational and recreational therapy programs are still in the early stages of development, Ms. Dresser said because there is a need for such services, they will be successful.

Future plans include a film series for all hospitalized patients. She said patients who are not bedridden can get bored staying in the hospital for any length of time.

Along the same line, but in a more educational atmosphere, Ms. Dresser will begin a comprehensive course in psychiatric care Nov. 2 for the hospital staff and mental health professionals. It will include films on safety, medicine, theory, psychopathology and treatments.

"After the program, we hope that people will have a thorough understanding of what and why they are doing (with the psychiatric patients)," she said.

Ms. Dresser will be on call for any nursing personnel or physicians who may need her to talk to a patient.

She said reception from the patients and physicians has been positive, adding that this is an indication that an in-house psychiatric specialist was needed.

Planned 'investor-owned, for-profit' medical school may be step backward

By ALLAN PARACHINI
The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

Three Southern California men are quietly pressing forward with plans to open, perhaps as early as next September, the nation's only investor-owned, for-profit medical school.

There would be no financial aid program and students would pay cash to attend, with tuition projected at $9,300 a year. The school has no campus, no classrooms, no laboratories, no hospital training affiliations, no telephone in its own name and a faculty only on paper.

The central administration of the two hospitals with which the school claims a formal association denies there is such a relationship.

The university would offer no placement assistance to its graduates and would pointedly tell them the school might never be accredited and that they may be unable to get licenses to practice medicine in any state.

BUT DESPITE all of this, because of a loophole in California law — it is actually, state officials ruefully concede, more of a gaping void — there is apparently nothing the state Department of Public Instruction can do to prevent the so-called Orange University of Medical Sciences from opening and advertising for students.

The Board of Medical Quality Assurance, for its part, says it might be able to refuse to license graduates to practice in California, but not keep the school from operating. Despite this, officials of both state agencies also are certain the school would experience no lack of prospective students because there is a remote chance they could actually get licenses in some state, someday.

Unsuccessful medical school applicants often become so desperate for admission, top state officials say, that they will pursue even the faintest prospect. They are frequently willing to gamble on substandard schools, believing there may be a slim chance they can enter practice in this country after graduation. Those chances seldom materialize.

Orange University's declared assets amount to $57,572, including a roll-top desk, a photocopy machine, four typewriters and $3,000 worth of books described on a state application form as a "medical library." Its dean contends the school could open with $500,000 in venture capital supplied by stockholders and the cash-flow generated by the first year's tuition payments.

BUT THAT MYSTIFIED the president of the Association of American Medical Colleges, a nationally prominent federation of medical schools, who says it takes nearly a $42 million investment to start a medical school today. The figure is seen as virtually meaningless, however, because a blue-ribbon national commission recommended last year that no new schools be opened in this century and that existing schools reduce their enrollments because there already are too many physicians in the United States.

Experts on medical education are skeptical about the proposed for-profit school. They are certain, however, that if it actually opens it will be able to find more than enough applicants to fill its classes, which the school projects initially would include 40 would-be doctors a year.

The students would most likely come from among the 18,000 rejected every year by the nation's 126 accredited medical schools. Even now, those schools accept fewer than half of the persons who apply.

FOR THOSE WHO choose to enroll, Orange University, loosely based in Orange County, Calif., south of Los Angeles, would represent a nearly $40,000, all-or-nothing cash gamble. They would have to put down their money to cover tuition, with no assurance from the school that their diplomas would be anything but worthless in terms of getting into medical practice.

"The applicant has to gamble, right," said one of the school's founders, Dr. Melvin Shiffman, a surgeon in Tustin, Calif. "The (student) has to pay his money and gamble." He said that hospitals, organized medical groups and state licensure boards will someday recognize the school's credits.

The Orange County school could also mark a new symptom of what many experts see as growing ill health in medical education. The trend started to take shape about three years ago when a half dozen American entrepreneurs opened medical schools in the Caribbean catering to young, usually affluent, people who fall below admission standards for mainstream schools in this country.

State education officials fear that if the Orange University school, which now has its headquarters in Shiffman's office, actually opens, California could become the center for a virtual industry in for-profit medical education, most of which might be of questionable quality.

SHIFFMAN DOES NOT see it that way. A local officer of the politically conservative Union of American Physicians and Dentists, he says he believes the school is a sound, free-enterprise alternative to existing medical education. He says, moreover, that state governments have no business spending taxpayers' money on publicly owned medical schools.

And as for the surplus of doctors, Shiffman says he thinks government programs and regulation will drive so many private physicians out of practice that there will be more than enough patients for the graduates of his investor-owned school.

Experts from California to Washington agree that the profusion of for-profit medical schools they expect would follow the opening of the Orange University of Medical Sciences could set back the quality of American medical education more than 70 years.

It could become a return, these experts fear, to an era in which stock companies and their medical academies made the training of physicians a national scandal. The problem was not resolved until a now-famous researcher, Abraham Flexner, spent two years traveling the country, between 1908 and 1910, to document scandalous conditions in dozens of fraudulent medical schools.

Flexner's 1910 report, financed by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, remains one of the classics of U.S. medical literature. It still is often-cited in scholarly research.

THE NEW SCHOOL first came to the attention of state officials last May when Shiffman, his wife and two other principals — one a podiatrist — filed incorporation papers for the Orange State University of Medical Sciences, Inc., a for-profit concern. Later, the corporation agreed to drop the word "state" from its name to avoid the misleading impression it is a state school.

Then, several weeks ago, the school filed an application with the Department of Public Instruction's division of private postsecondary education for authorization to operate, the easiest to obtain of three levels of state licensure. Under an obscure section of the California Education Code, any institution that presents evidence that it has at least $50,000 in assets and meets a few other pro forma requirements can go into the business of awarding degrees.

That section of the law has existed for at least 30 years, but there is no record of anyone trying to use it to open a medical school, the state agency said. The problem is, said Robert Welty, a consultant in the department, that the law is so vague and so general that, with the required amount in provable assets, anyone in California can start a school to grant degrees in anything he might want.

"I know it's ridiculous, but all they have to have is $50,000 in net assets to get started, no matter what," Welty said. "If you've got it, you can start and you can teach anything and award degrees in anything.

"It's a very permissive law ... probably more permissive than any other in the country."

WELTY SAID STAFF members of the Department of Public Instruction and Board of Medical Quality Assurance will meet soon to consider their next actions on the Shiffman application. As it stands, however, the application apparently complies with the law.

Sources in the public instruction department said they may recommend changes in the Education Code to preclude the opening of the kind of school Shiffman proposes.

"This application," said one source in the agency, "may represent just the tip of the iceberg in terms of the proliferation of a huge industry, catering to people with money who can't get into medical school."

Of the three key figures in the Orange University school, only Shiffman would consent to an interview with the Los Angeles Times. Thomas J. Gibbs, said by Shiffman to be in charge of the school's business affairs, declined to be interviewed and Dr. William Tabb, the podiatrist who rounds out the trio, was unresponsive to repeated interview requests, made both by telephone and in person at Shiffman's office.

TABB APPEARS ON the roster of the school's faculty as the prospective instructor in a two-semester core sequence in human anatomy and other key courses in diagnosis and the function of the brain. But Tabb, whose resume shows a bachelor's degree in electrical engineering from the Polytechnic Institute of Brooklyn and graduation from a San Francisco podiatry college, has no degree from a U.S. medical school. He did, however, graduate from one of the new Caribbean centers, the St. Lucia Health Sciences University, in 1981.

Tabb has passed a licensure examination in California, but still cannot qualify for a license to practice medicine because he has never completed an internship, according to the Board of Medical Quality Assurance.

Asked if he thought Tabb was qualified to teach the courses listed for him in the application, however, Shiffman said plans had changed and "we wouldn't be having him teach that." Instead, Shiffman said, the school may hire a retired surgeon to teach the central anatomy course.

Still another listed prospective professor is a family physician who practices in the same building as Shiffman. That doctor, however, never completed any residency training program and is not board-certified in a specialty — two criteria that one medical education expert equated "to a high school diploma in terms of the basic, minimum things you would want to see in a full-time medical school professor."

SHIFFMAN SAID HE WAS NOT sure whose idea it was to start the school, though he thought it might have been originated by Gibbs. "The purpose (for starting the school) is for teaching students that are of the caliber of making adequate or more than adequate physicians, yet are not getting into the facilities in the U.S.," Shiffman said.

"My general feeling is that most (medical) schools in California are state schools and this one is private industry," he said. "I don't want to support (with tax money) anyone to become a doctor unless I want to do it. But we're forced, in this state, to support eight or nine state medical schools whether you want to or not."

Mrs. James W. Lacy and Jim Chase

Midlanders attend meeting

Mrs. James W. Lacy and Jim Chase of Midland attended the 37th annual meeting of the American Cancer Society, Texas Division, in Houston. Mrs. Lacy has served as treasurer of the Texas Division as well as serving as director and executive committe member of the Texas and National Boards. Chase, president, represented the Midland Unit as a voting delegate.

The theme of the meeting, attended by over 250 delegates from ACS units throughtout Texas was, "Cancer Control at the Crossroads." The theme emphasized the expansion of the Division's more comprehensive service and education programs into less populated areas of the state, with a concentration of carefully planned volunteer training.

According to Mrs. Lacy, the annual meeting is held each year to elect a new board of directors and officers; to recognize outstanding volunteer work around the state, and to formulate program plans for the coming year.

Awards were presented to winners of the First Annual Texas Media Awards to honor excellence in communications about cancer. Among those winners was Gail Burke of the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

Parkview Hospital Auxiliary holds first awards luncheon

Outgoing officers included Nelda McDuffey, president; Cathy Stump, vice-president; Susan Franks, secretary; and Margie Johnson, tresurer. Officers for 1982-83 are Cathy Stump, president; Donna Campbell, vice-president; Evelyn Bagwell, secretary; and Margie Johnson, treasurer.

The Parkview volunteers man the nourishment cart for patients and their families, deliver patient flowers and mail, assist in the Physical Therapy Department and Laboratory, assist with filing in the X-ray Department, and help the hospital keep the microfilming up to date. During the summer, the volunteers cooperated with the City of Midland's Parks and Recreation Department's youth program in providing tours of the hospital for children. Lanell Hopkins, registered nurse at Parkview and a member of the Auxiliary, conducted the tours.

Persons interested in joining the Parkview Hospital Auxiliary may obtain full information by calling 683-5491 or any of the officers. Membership dues are $10 annually and members are encouraged to work a minimum of 100 hours each year.

Persons receiving 100 hour pins included Evelyn Bagwell, 110 hours; Edna Benninger, 132 hours; Paula Beshears, 130 hours; Bernie Cox, 104 hours; Susan Franks, 100-1/2 hours; Lanell Hopkins, 107-1/2 hours; Nelda McDuffey, 251 hours; Cathy Stump, 144-1/2 hours; and Brenda Yowell, 127 hours.

Prints, drawings on view

NEW YORK (AP) — An exhibition of some 125 prints and drawings based on the work of Hendrik Goltzius (1558-1617) is on view at the Metropolitan Museum of Art through Nov. 21.

The exhibition includes engravings, woodcuts, etchings and drypoints by Goltzius himself, by those who influenced him, and by his followers.

The museum says the show "is designed to provide an insight into one of the most prolific periods in the history of printmaking — The Netherlands in the late 16th and early 17th centuries."

Pumpkin, squash are autumn, winter favorites

By PATRICK DENTON
Copley News Service

As Halloween approaches, pumpkins are very much in evidence around the country so it's an appropriate time to review the performance of pumpkin and squash plants in our backyard gardens.

Of the summer squash, I find that certain varieties seem able to muddle through even in poor seasons. One such summer squash is Gold Rush, a golden zucchini that won an All-America award in 1980. Gold Rush grows reliably into superb bushes and produces many fruits even in cold, wet weather.

Gold Rush is a most attractive fruit, straight and symmetrical, with a bright waxy golden sheen. Our family likes it best raw, sliced in salads or cut in sticks for a vegetable dip. Its delicate flavor is enhanced by the tender but crisp texture of the flesh.

The Gold Rush plants are of a manageable size too, quite space-conserving. Mine grew in about four square feet each. Grey zucchini is another tasty, early and reliable producer.

Still another outstanding early producer is Kuta squash from Park Seed (Box 31, Greenwood, S.C. 29647). Kuta was created as a dual-purpose squash, whose young green fruits can be picked when still less than 6 inches long, for eating raw or cooking. Left on the vine they will eventually turn a golden yellow and will store for a month.

Peter Pan's green-tinted and distinctly scalloped fruits grow on a conveniently compact bush. The fruits, picked small at 3 inches across or even smaller, are meaty and tasty raw, and superb lightly fried in butter.

It was wonderful to have Vegetable Spaghetti in the garden once more. These vines produced well for us this year and weren't terribly space-consuming planted next to the latest variety of corn we grew — Seneca Chief — and allowed to wander in the corn rows.

We pick the Vegetable Spaghetti at about 10 to 12 inches, cut it in half, remove the seeds and sit one half cut edge up, in the steamer to cook. When the flesh is cooked soft it is easily forked out onto a serving platter, when it may be topped with just butter, salt and pepper or your favorite pesto or tomato sauce.

Late in the spring a neighbor dropped off a beautifully grown Delicata or Sweet Potato squash plant which she had noticed at a local nursery and bought for me. It grew wonderfully well and matured several small cream fruits with dark green stripes.

A pumpkin that grows well even in poor weather and short seasons is Spirit, a 1977 All-America winner designed for areas prone to wet summers.

And now, because so many of you will be hollowing out those pumpkins for Halloween jack-o'-lanterns, here's a pumpkin pie recipe great for freezing, which has become a tradition in our household. Just mix it all up in the blender and fill uncooked pie shells with it:

PUMPKIN PIE

1½ cups cooked pumpkin
½ cup brown sugar
¼ tsp. salt
1 tsp. cinnamon
¼ tsp. cloves
¼ tsp. ginger
1 tbsp. flour
2 eggs
1½ cups milk

Freeze, then wrap. Bake frozen pie at 400 degrees for 1 hour and 20 minutes. Toast pumpkin seeds in a low oven with salt sprinkled on them for a nutritious snack.

Consumer groups' plan would eliminate tax deduction for litigation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Court dockets are overcrowded and the federal government needs money. Three consumer-oriented groups have a plan to help solve both problems.

Their solution: Take away the tax deduction allowed businesses for expenses of litigation. Backers say the proposal would save the government about $3.7 billion a year and, for big companies, almost double the cost of going to court.

Public Advocates, Inc., the League of United Latin American Citizens, and California Rural Legal Assistance outlined the plan in a letter to President Reagan.

In addition to saving money and allowing the courts to spend more time on weightier matters, they said, the proposal would "eliminate the subsidizing of one side's view by the taxpayer and end the unfairness of permitting business to deduct its litigation expenses while denying similar treatment to tenants, consumers, civil-rights, domestic-relations and auto-injury plaintiffs."

If businesses could no longer rely on the government to pick up part of the cost of fighting in court, the organizations argue, they would turn to cheaper, more-effective methods of settling disputes, such as mediation.

The three groups urged Reagan to stop efforts to trim public service legal aid, especially the Legal Services Corp., until the business deduction is wiped out.

The plan would still allow businesses to deduct legal costs for everything except litigation.

The interest charged on underpayments of federal tax will drop on Jan. 1, but several penalties aimed at tax cheats are going up.

In the tax-increase law enacted earlier this year, Congress included a series of provisions designed to bring the government an extra $32 billion over the next three years — just by forcing greater compliance with the tax laws. The most important will require withholding, starting next July 1, on most interest and dividends.

Here are some of the other compliance changes:

—The chiefly middle- and upper-income people who deliberately pad their deductions because they know chances of an audit are slim — called "playing the audit lottery" — may be subject to a new penalty of 10 percent of the tax underpayment.

—Filers of frivolous returns can be subject to a $500 penalty. Many lower-income workers in recent years have filed incomplete returns as a protest, raising such long-settled issues as whether wages are income or whether the dollar is really money.

—Anyone who fails to file a return within 60 days of the due date (including extensions) could be subject to a penalty of at least $100.

—Filing a fraudulent certificate to have wages exempt from withholding could bring a year in prison.

—Falsely claiming an exemption from withholding on interest and dividends could result in a $500 civil penalty.

The IRS already has announced that, under terms of the new law, the 20-percent interest rate charged on underpayment of taxes will drop to 16 percent on Jan. 1. But there's a catch: The 20 percent is simple interest; the 16 percent will be compounded. For those who must estimate and make tax payments quarterly, the penalty for underestimating will drop to 16 percent, but it won't be compounded.

The law taxes gambling winnings as income but allows a person who itemizes deductions to write off gambling losses up to the amount of winnings.

William Elza Umstead of Denver claimed that amounted to a tax on non-existent income. He did not list his $9,238 recreational gambling winnings as income and did not itemize his $9,540 losses. Instead, he claimed the standard deduction, subtracted his gambling losses from his winnings and came out with what he claimed was a net loss of $302, which he filed on a schedule intended for capital gains.

"Have fun," he wrote on a paper attached to his tax return and signed, "your UNincome taxpayer."

An unamused Internal Revenue Service rejected Umstead's argument and, now, so has the Tax Court. Accusing Umstad of "word games or semantic flourishes," the court imposed an extra penalty for deliberately disregarding the rules.

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Humorist Art Buchwald who won the Pulitzer Prize earlier this year, has a birthday today. Also born on his date: psychologist Dr. Joyce Brothers, Will Rogers Jr. and baseball 's Mickey Mantle and Juan Marichal. The employment outlook brightens substantially in the months ahead. Make a special point of building up your savings. Romance and marriage bring you many benefits. You find yourself in the company of interesting people. Those who return to school lay the foundation for future success. Spend more time alone with mate.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Stop vacillating! It is important to your career that you make up your mind immediately. Profits should rise in each upcoming quarter.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Request payment in advance when undertaking special projects. A last-ditch attempt to save something that looks lost will be successful. Celebrate with mate.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be lenient with someone who owes you money and is having a difficult time. Newlyweds argue over finances. Avoid becoming overly vehement when expressing your views.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Homework, inventions and a legal discovery bring you success. You have a competitor where romance is concerned. Open up new lines of communications with loved ones.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): An unconventional move could break an impasse that is hurting profits. Make some tough personal decisions. Avoid the distractions of a new romance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Higher-ups are interested in a pet project that you have been holding back. New merchandise helps a salesman sell an old product as well. Travel is a strong romantic stimulus.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Avoid wasting time fantasizing when you should be coping with reality. A lack of drive could be perilous to your career. Develop better rapport with relatives.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Squelch an urge to interfere in other people's lives. Romance or marriage is crucial to your happiness. Cultivate important contacts.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-dec. 21): Better organization will improve your job performance, impressing higher-ups. Tend to the needs of a loved one who is feeling under the weather. Heed your intuition.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Making sound investments requires help from a financial wizard. Be willing to pay for expert advice. Concentrate on platonic relationships.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Welcome opportunity to advance a pet project. Employment affairs are rewarding. A promotion or raise is a foregone conclusion.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A gift from an unknown admirer sets your heart aflutter. You are lucky at both love and work. An attractive stranger helps you in an emergency. Romance results!

Home damaged third time since 1977 by debris falling from highway

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The Gillon family, whose home sits directly beneath a highway bridge, lives in fear of falling trucks, cars and assorted debris.

It happened again Monday: A tractor-trailer crashed into the wall of the Interstate 70 bridge, raining twisted iron railings and cement chunks on the Gillons' house for the third time since 1977.

"We keep saying it will never happen again and it's just a freak accident, but this is three times now," Joyce Gillon said in a telephone interview from her home in Speers, about 20 miles southwest of here.

"It sounded like a lot of explosions and you could see sparks coming from the bridge," she said.

Mrs. Gillon was helping her 14-year-old daughter dress for school when a truck driven by John L. Boettcher, 32, of Minnesota, hit a bridge abutment and lost control, plowing into the bridge railing, police said.

"We both just looked at each other and my daughter started screaming," Mrs. Gillon said. "She thought the truck had come through the center of the house."

Boettcher, whose hometown was not immediately known, was listed in guarded condition at the Mon Valley Hospital with shoulder injuries and face lacerations.

Mrs. Gillon described the damage as "minor, this time." But in the first accident, in January 1977, debris from a truck crash on the highway above tore off the back porch, Mrs. Gillon said.

In the second mishap in September 1977, four men were killed when a truck and car collided and the falling debris damaged the front of the Gillons' house.

"Parts of the truck and car exploded into fire, and took off part of the house," she said.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	1 ♠	Pass	Pass
3 ♡	Pass	4 ♡	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♠.

Some players grab a trick as soon as it is offered. But unlike birds, a trick in hand is not always worth two in the bush!

South had a rebid problem after North's one spade bid was passed round to him. He had a choice between one no trump and a jump in hearts. Eventually he decided that it was more important to stress the quality of his suit. Naturally, the jump rebid to three hearts was not forcing, but North had more than enough to carry on to game.

West started with the king and ace of spades and East completed a peter by first playing the seven and then the five. West continued with a third spade and East ruffed to complete the defender's book. But thereafter declarer was in command.

He won the club return and used the two diamond entries to dummy to take two trump finesses. Ten tricks rolled in, and no one even noticed until much later that East had presented declarer with his contract.

It should be obvious to East that his side is unlikely to take a trick in the minor suits. Declarer has precisely nine cards in the majors, so only four in the minors. Since he must have both the ace and king of clubs for his jump rebid, those cards together with dummy's diamond honors will take care of all declarer's losers in the minors. Therefore, East must score two trump tricks if the contract is to be defeated.

That can be accomplished quite easily if East looks carefully into the position. Instead of ruffing the third spade, he should sluff a diamond! Declarer scores a spade trick, but the contract is no longer makable.

Now there is only one entry to dummy, because East can ruff the second diamond. All East has to do is take care to play the nine or ten of trumps when that suit is led from dummy, and he must get two heart tricks. The doubters among you can try it for themselves.

Charles Kiss, 51 of Omaha, Neb., is treated by Omaha Fire Department Emergency Medical Technicians. Kiss, who is disabled, plunged a 6-inch packing house boning knife into his chest while talking to a reporter in the lobby of the Omaha World-Herald because he is frustrated at not being able to find a job.

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — A man who stabbed himself in the lobby of the Omaha World-Herald building was committed for psychiatric evaluation after saying he'd like to shoot President Reagan, the newspaper reported today.

Charles Kiss, 52, of Omaha, was committed by police Monday night to the psychiatric unit at Douglas County Hospital for 48 hours.

Earlier in the day, Kiss had entered the newspaper lobby and complained he couldn't find a job or pay his bills, showing two stacks of them to a World-Herald reporter, David Thompson. Kiss then thrust a six-inch boning knife an inch deep into the left part of his chest, the reporter said.

Kiss slumped to the ground in front of the reporter, a security guard and the newspaper's metropolitan editor.

He was taken to Lutheran Medical Center, treated for the wound, and transferred to the county hospital for psychiatric evaluation.

But he declined psychiatric care and apparently did not need to be committed involuntarily at that time, said Dr. Louis Martin, director of the hospital's community mental health center.

Kiss was released from the hospital and returned home.

When a second World-Herald reporter visited him late Monday afternoon, Kiss repeatedly said he was upset that Reagan favored the rich at the expense of the poor, the newspaper reported.

Kiss said that if he had a gun he would go to Washington, D.C., and try to shoot the president, the World-Herald reported.

About 4½ hours later, police and medical officials arrived at Kiss' home to commit him to the county hospital.

Kiss will need a psychiatric and physical examination before he can go back to work for the Douglas County Social Services Department, where he has been "working off" public assistance he received for the past three months, said department director Michael Healey.

Healey said Kiss "has received substantial assistance from us in the previous months. We have been meeting his rent and utilities and he's probably received in excess of between $700 and $800 for food stamps over that period. We've also given him bus money and gas money to try to find him a job."

Before the stabbing, Kiss said he had taken his problems to welfare officials, legal aid lawyers and Social Security officials.

He held the knife to his chest and said, "I can't go on this way."

"I was trying for three or four minutes to talk him into putting it down," Thompson said. "He was somewhat distraught...but I thought it was just for show."

States lose extra unemployment compensation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Four states that are among the hardest hit by the recession will no longer be able to provide extra unemployment compensation benefits.

Government figures released Monday show that those states are among nine that failed to qualify for continuing participation in the joint federal-state program that furnishes 13 weeks of unemployment compensation checks beyond the basic 26 weeks for eligible recipients.

Among the states scheduled to lose the extended benefits program on Oct. 23 is California, where September unemployment was 10.1 percent — the same as the overall national rate of joblessness.

Other states with double-digit joblessness which no longer can make the 13-week extended benefit payments are: Arizona, 10.9; Louisiana, 11.0; and Rhode Island, 10.4.

The remaining five states listed by the Employment and Training Administration were Alaska, 8.8 percent; Montana, 8.4; Nevada, 9.8, North Carolina, 9.8 and Utah, 7.5.

Agency spokeswoman Abbie Martin noted, however, that benefits will not be confined to 26 weeks in those nine states that fell from the roster of states eligible to participate in the extended benefits program.

Under a $2.2 billion emergency supplemental unemployment compensation program authorized by Congress in August, she said, all states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands will be able to pay between six and 10 weeks of additional benefits, regardless of whether they met the trigger level to qualify for the 13-week extended benefits program.

The full 10 weeks of extra unemployment compensation payments will be made by all those states that fell from the qualifying extended benefits list on Monday.

Among the states qualifying for continued payment of the extra jobless benefits were four — Ohio, Oregon, Michigan and West Virginia — where unemployment has been at double-digit levels for months.

The other 10 states qualifying for non-stop payment of these additional benefits were: Arkansas, Idaho, Illinois, Kansas, Mississippi, New Mexico, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Washington and Wisconsin.

The key to a state's eligibility to pay the 13 weeks of additional benefits is the percentage of its labor force already drawing unemployment compensation checks.

This measure — called the Insured Unemployment Rate — must reach 5.0 percent of the labor force. For most states, there is another criterion requiring the level of joblessness in any given 13-week period to be at least 20 percent higher than the average unemployment rate during the same period in the two preceding years.

Under the two-tiered trigger formula for payment of the 13 weeks of extra benefits, 23 states had previously qualified for such payments. That figure has been reduced to 14 states and Puerto Rico.

Coast Guard calls off search for Columbians

NEW YORK (AP) — The Coast Guard, saying there was little chance of survival for four men who may have been trapped inside a Colombian military airplane that ditched in the Atlantic Ocean off New Jersey, has called off its search. A fifth crewman also was presumed drowned.

Eight of 13 men aboard the four-engine C-130 were rescued when the aircraft went into the water near a freighter on Saturday.

One of the men was presumed drowned after he was washed away while trying to cling to a wing.

Rescue efforts had focused on four others who may have been inside the partially submerged plane that finally sank Monday afternoon, said Gregory Creedon, a Coast Guampty fuel tanks, finally slid from sight at 5:11 p.m. in 12,000-foot-deep water, Creedon said.

Divers, hampered by winds and high waves, got a close look at the craft Monday morning and reported "jagged metal at the point they would have entered," making any attempted rescue too hazardous, said Johnny Ludlow, another Coast Guard spokesman.

No bodies were sighted, he said.

"The plane has a lot of ragged metal edges, the wing flaps are flapping around. We feel there would be a lot of danger in trying to put anybody near the plane," said Creedon.

The plane was en route from the Azores to Bermuda when its navigation systems failed. It ran out of fuel and was forced down about 180 miles east of Cape May, N.J.

In Halifax, Nova Scotia, Colombian Brig. Gen. Alfredo Ortega and five other survivors of the crashed transport praised the Canadian merchant ship that rescued them.

Amid the middle-class sprawl of California's Simi Valley, Hollywood has transformed grasslands into the largest sheep ranch in Australia, circa 1932, for a television miniseries based on the best-selling novel, "The Thorn Birds," by Colleen McCullogh. The 9 1/2-hour movie, to be broadcast on ABC-TV, is the story of an ambitious priest, Father Ralph de Bricassart, who befriends the matriarch of a wealthy landowning family.

Simi Valley transformed to Drogheda

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

SANTA SUSANA, Calif. — There's a little bit of magic going on in the Simi Valley, northwest of Los Angeles. On one hand are the suburbs — freshly minted tract homes with front lawns barely out of infancy. Young families on the way up.

But as you drive a little farther, suburbia disappears and you're suddenly in the middle of another country. There are grasslands and hills and narrow, winding roads that don't appear to lead anywhere. It is as though you have just said goodby to Mr. and Mrs. Ward Cleaver and said hello to...Australia.

"When you're doing a project on this scale, you have to carry more details in your head, because as you grind on, the pre-production phase just recedes into the background. But this is an exciting, once-in-a-lifetime kind of thing. And, fortunately, we've been given the time and the budget to give it some sweep. I've never believed in approaching TV as TV — the idea that it necessarily has to be less. We're shooting a story, a film. We've got a terrific cast, a terrific script, so why lessen your sights just because it's television?"

Spanning 50 years and three generations, "The Thorn Birds" is the story of an ambitious priest, Father Ralph de Bricassart, who is sent to Australia where he befriends the powerful matriarch of a wealthy landowning clan. Through the years — not to mention many twists and turns of plot — De Bricassart comes to terms with his love of God and his passion for the beautiful, spirited granddaughter of the clan, Meggie Cleary.

DARYL DUKE, talented Canadian director whose credits include "Payday," "The Silent Partner" and an Emmy-winning episode of the late, lamented "Senator" TV series, will oversee this entire nine-hour saga.

And Stan Margulies and David L. Wolper, who were responsible for "Roots," are the executive producers.

"'Thorn Birds'" was originally bought as a theatrical feature," Wolper said on the Simi location the other day. "Three directors — Herb Ross, Arthur Hiller and Peter Weir, an Australian — took a crack at it, but no one could bring it in at 2 1/2 hours. We originally had it scheduled for eight hours and had to add another hour ourselves!"

With a $20 million budget and four-month shooting schedule, Wolper and Margulies had some original thoughts about using actual Australian locations for the filming. But cost and inconvenience ruled otherwise.

"It would have been another $2 million just to transport the company to Australia," Margulies said, "plus the fact that there were no sound stages available. So when we began scouting locations here, I was struck by the fact that this area of the Simi Valley — with its untrammeled wide-open spaces — very closely resembled the New South Wales described in 'Thorn Birds.' For another part of the picture — I was in Queensland recently and was struck by the fact that it so much resembled Hawaii. So we'll be doing three weeks' work in Hawaii on our next location."

The re-creation of Drogheda was a $2 million project in itself. An Australian sheep station is a self-contained entity — almost a small town — where the nearest signs of civilization may be 40 miles away.

THE MAIN house, visible from a makeshift road that was carved out of the landscape, is what the Cleary family calls home. Befitting wealthy landowners, three large water towers are telltale signs of prosperity. So is the imported stone and the pride of the landscape — the rose garden.

"We originally brought in real rosebushes for the garden," Margulies said, "but the plants couldn't take the weather. So it's a mix of real roses and silk replicas."

Behind the house are the sheep pens — housing 500 sheep imported for the occasion. "A real sheep station will have maybe 200,000," Wolper said, "but on a 21-inch screen, 500 will look mighty impressive."

Then comes what Margulies calls "the key building in Drogheda" — the shearing shed.

"It's entirely functional," he said, "though it isn't built on the massive scale of an actual sheepshearing station. I guess you could call it a fixer-upper."

THIS DAY is the wedding of Meggie to Luke O'Neill (Bryan Browne), and things are a bit on edge around the set.

"I think everyone's a little nervous about the wedding," said Browne, the Australian actor who made his first significant splash in "Breaker Morant" and then starred on PBS' "A Town Called Alice."

"I mean...what if the marriage works? What if we really get on well?" Browne deadpans. But then the script would be in for a major overhaul. "Actually," Browne said, "I'm quite confident that this marriage doesn't have a chance."

Daryl Duke, the tall, soft-spoken director, doesn't betray any tension.

"When you're doing a project on this scale, you have to carry more details in your head," Duke said, "because as you grind on, the pre-production phase just recedes into the background.

"But this is an exciting, once-in-a-lifetime kind of thing. And, fortunately, we've been given the time and the budget to give it some sweep. I've never believed in approaching TV as TV — the idea that it necessarily has to be less. We're shooting a story, a film. We've got a terrific cast, a terrific script, so why lessen your sights just because it's television?"

WOLPER SAID that Richard Chamberlain was their only choice for the pivotal role of Father Ralph de Bricassart.

"He was absolutely the only person we had in mind. And, fortunately, he wanted to do it as much as we wanted him."

The role of Meggie, however, produced a few obstacles. "A lot of very good actresses wanted that role," Margulies said, "and it finally boiled down to two, Rachel Ward and Jane Seymour. When Rachel first came in to read, she looked terrific but her first reading wasn't that good at all. Still, we really liked her looks and the second time she came in, she knocked us out. In the end, the only difference between Jane and Rachel was that Rachel had a little more of that vulnerable quality we were looking for."

Then there's Barbara Stanwyck, making her first television appearance since the demise of "The Big Valley."

"We knew she had retired," Margulies said, "but when we thought about casting the role of Mary Carson, Stanwyck immediately came to everyone's mind. We knew we couldn't approach her if we didn't have a script. So we brought in show No. 1. She read it, liked it and wanted to see the rest of the show to make sure the quality was as good. That finally convinced her."

The nine hours of "Thorn Birds" will remain relatively faithful to the book, although some changes have been made in the translation to film, said Carmen Culver, who adapted the book.

"ESSENTIALLY, everything will be there except the World War II years," said Culver. "In terms of our central characters, those years were rather sketchy.

"But the real problem in adapting any best seller is to remain true to the book's audience, not necessarily the book itself. You have to figure out where those heartbeats are."

The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 8½% for 95% loan-to-value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 13½% for the first 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be charged at the most recent 6months Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payments 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7½% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principle exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 14.28%

Open Daily 9 am - 8 pm
The first three years payment and buyers qualifications will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 10.7.8% on a 95% loan to value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 14.3.4% for the first year of the loan. After the first year of the loan, interest will be charged at the average annual Treasury Bill rate plus 2.1.2% with no change in the loan payment. In the 4th and 5th years there will be an increase of 10% of the principal and interest payment. The 6th through 30th years of the loan will have a principal and interest payment corresponding to the percentage rate as outlined above. ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 14.735%.
