CHAPTER I

We are at rest five miles behind the front. Yesterday we were relieved, and now our bellies are full of beef and haricot beans. We are satisfied and at peace. Each man has another mess-tin full for the evening, and, what is more, there is a double ration of sausage and bread. That puts a man in fine trim. We have not had such luck as this for a long time. The cook with his carroty head is begging us to eat; he beckons with his ladle to everyone that passes, and spoons him out a great dollop. He does not see how he can empty his stew-pot in time for coffee. Tjaden and Muller have produced two wash basins and had them filled up to the brim as a reserve. In Tjaden this is voracity, in Muller it is a foresight. Where Tjaden puts it all is a mystery, for he is and always will be as thin as a rake.

What's more important still is the issue of a double ration of smokes. Ten cigars, 20 cigarets and two quids of chew per man; now that is decent. I have exchanged my chewing tobacco with Katczinsky for his cigarets, which means I have 40 altogether. That's enough for a day.

It is true we have no right to this windfall. The Prussian is not so generous. We have only a miscalculation to thank for it.

Fourteen days ago we had to go up and relieve the front line. It was fairly quiet on our sector, so the quartermaster who remained in the rear had requisitioned the usual quantity of rations and provided for the full company of 150 men. But on the last day an astonishing number of English field guns opened up on us with high explosive, drumming ceaselessly on our position, so that we suffered heavily and came back only 80 strong.

Last night we moved back and settled down to get a good sleep for once; Katczinsky is right when he says it would not be such a bad war if we could only get a little more sleep. In the line we have had next to none, and 14 days is a long time at one stretch.

It was noon before the first of us crawled out of our quarters. Half an hour later every man had his mess-tin and we gathered at the cook-house, which smelt greasy and nourishing. At the head of the queue [redacted] were the hungriest—little Albert Kropp, the clearest thinker among us and therefore, the first to be lance-corporal; Muller, who still carries his school text-books with him, dreams of examinations, and during a bombardment mutters propositions in physics; Leer, who wears a full beard and has a preference for the girls from officers' brothels. And as the fourth, myself, Paul Baumer. All four are 19 years of age, and all four joined up from the same class as volunteers for the war.

Close behind us were our friends: Tjaden, a skinny lock-smith of our own age, the biggest eater of the company. He sits down to eat as thin as a grasshopper and gets up as big as a bug in the family way; Haie Westhus, of the same age, a peat-digger, who can easily hold a ration-loaf in his hand and say: Guess what I've got in my fist; then Detering, a peasant, who thinks of nothing but his farmyard and his wife, and finally Stanislaus Katczinsky, the leader of our group, shrewd, cunning, and hard-bitten, 40 years of age, with a face of the soil, blue eyes, bent shoulders, and a remarkable nose for dirty weather, good food, and soft jobs.

Our gang formed the head of the queue before the cook-house. We were growing impatient, for the cook paid no attention to us.

Finally Katczinsky called out to him: "Say, Heinrich, open up the soup-kitchen. Anyone can see the beans are done."

He shook his head sleepily: "You must all be there first." Tjaden grinned. "We are all here."

The sergeant-cook still took no notice. "That may do for you," he said. "But where are the others?"

"They won't be fed by you today. They're either in the dressing-station or pushing up daisies."

The cook was quite disconcerted as the truth dawned on him. He was staggered. "And I have cooked for 150 men—"

Kropp poked him in the ribs. "Then for once we'll have enough. Come on, begin!"

Suddenly a vision came over Tjaden. His sharp, mousey features began to shine, his eyes grew small with cunning, his jaws twitched, and he whispered hoarsely: "Man! then you've got bread for 150 men, too, eh?"

The sergeant-cook nodded, absent minded and bewildered.

Tjaden seized him by the tunic. "And sausage?"

Ginger nodded again.

Tjaden's chaps quivered. "Tobacco, too?"

"Yes, everything."

Tjaden beamed: "What a beanfeast! That's all for us! Each man gets—wait a bit—yes, practically two issues."

Then Ginger stirred himself and said: "That won't do."

Then we got excited and began to crowd around.

"Why won't that do, you old carrot?" demanded Katczinsky.

"Eighty men can't have what is meant for 150."

"We'll show you soon," growled Muller.

"I don't care about the stew, but I can only issue rations for 80 men," persisted Ginger.

Katczinsky got angry. "You might be generous for once. You haven't drawn food for 80 men. You're drawn it for the Second company. Good. Let's have it then. We are the Second company."

We began to jostle the fellow. No one felt kindly toward him, for it was his fault that the food twice came up to us in the line too late and cold. Under shell-fire he wouldn't bring his kitchen up near enough, so that our soup-carriers had to go much farther than those of the other companies. Now Buicke

TWO MEN CHECKED

Capt. Frank Hamer Leads Investigation of Oil Town Shooting

BORGER, Texas, Sept. 15. (UP)—State rangers tonight believe they know who assassinated John Holmes, pugnacious district attorney, here Friday night.

Whether or not they will be able to make an immediate arrest is doubtful, however, though they are confident that they are on the trail of the man who committed the crime, and of the man who directed it.

In an interview with Mrs. Holmes, widow of the slain man, Ranger Captains Frank Hamer and Tom Hickman today were given information as to whom she believes killed her husband. Other conferences were held by the ranger captains with District Judge E. J. Pickens, District Attorney Clifford Brawley of the adjoining district, Ray Allred, county attorney for Hutchinson county, and other officials.

Captain Hamer is busily engaged in checking the whereabouts of two men and a "borrowed" automobile in which it is believed the slayer of Holmes fled.

OFFICERS EXPECT TO MAKE ARREST

BORGER, Texas, Sept. 15. (AP)—The arrest of a suspect in the assassination of District Attorney John A. Holmes was in prospect tonight as the first definite move emerging from the welter of clues and motives seen by scores of Northwest Texas officers investigating with cold anger the ambush killing.

Mrs. Holmes, the widow, who turned from the door of her home Friday night to see the husband fall just in front of his garage with three bullet wounds, told Texas rangers she "believed" she knew who skulked in a nearby vacant building and turned a pistol on Holmes as he walked from the garage after putting up the family machine for the night.

Statement Missing

Ranger Captain Frank Hamer said he did not expect to confront and apprehend the suspect before tomorrow.

Meanwhile, investigators highly

Seven Men Charged in Slaying Of Woman Textile Mill Striker

Inquest Into North Carolina Mob Shooting, Half Complete, Is Delayed Until Next Saturday.

GASTONIA, N. C., Sept. 15. (AP)—With the coroner's inquest into the death of Mrs. Ella May Wiggins, striker, victim of an anti-communist mob only partly completed, seven men were held in bonds of $1,000 each on charges of manslaughter.

The inquest started in the Gaston county courthouse this morning and progressed most of the day. Adjournment was taken until next Saturday.

Driver Is Held

The men arrested were F. T. Morrow, driver of an automobile which collided with a truck in which 21 members of the National Textile Workers union were fleeing from a mob; Theodore Sims, Lowery Davis, and Troy Jones, who were in the car with Morrow; George Lingerfelt, driver of the truck and I. M. Sossoman, master mechanic of the Loray Cotton mill at Gastonia and Will Lunsford, a Loray mill employe.

The warrant charged that the men "did conspire, confederate and agree together to slay and did slay Ella May Wiggins."

They were released on bonds of $1,000 each signed by J. A. Baugh, general manager of the Loray mill of the Manville-Jenckes company.

Funeral Delayed

While the inquest was on it had been planned by relatives of Mrs. Wiggins to hold her funeral from the home of an aunt in the Loray mill village, but two hours before the time set the ceremony was postponed until tomorrow.

It was stated that the International Labor Defense had taken charge and would issue a statement later.

The men arrested today were accused by the solicitor as testimony in the inquest indicated their possible connection with the shooting of Mrs. Wiggins. The first arrested were Morrow and his companions. Lingerfelt, arrested at the time of the collision, was ordered held. The arrests of Sossoman and Lunsford came later. Witnesses charged Sossoman and Lunsford came on the scene shortly after Mrs. Wiggins was shot and told the men shooting that they might stop.

The accident occurred about 2 p. m. Frances, it was said, took two .38 caliber pistols from the house to the yard, where she and Ernest unloaded them. They overlooked one shell. As they were playing "Indian," Ernest, authorities were told, pulled the trigger. A shot was fired and Frances fell.

Former Iowa Park Scribe Offers Farm Board 'Sure Cure' for Farmer

CHICAGO, Sept. 15. (US)—"Let 'em declare a closed season on farmers and turn their guns on gangsters."

That was the suggestion of Seven Anderton, Denver author, when he was asked today how the West feels about prohibition and farm relief.

"It's very simple," he continued. "With prohibition agents running down gangsters, the farmer can turn his corn into corn-juice and sell it direct to the thirsty consumer, unhampered by competition with city gangsters and racketeers. This plan will put the farmer on easy street, satisfy the thirsty and rid the country of racketeers.

"I'm going East and may lay the plan before Mr. Hoover's experts when they go into a huddle."

Seven Anderton, veteran newspaper man and short story writer, formerly was connected with the Iowa Park Herald and was well known in Wichita Falls editorial rooms. The current issue of Liberty contains one of his stories.

Try Girl Third Time for Holdup

Becky Rogers to Know Her Fate Before End of Week Winds Up Trial

Girl Defendant Rests Over Sunday at Camp With Mother While Otis Lays Court Plans

NEW BRAUNFELS, Texas, Sept. 15. (UP)—Becky Rogers, whose short career has been fringed with many spectacular acts, will know this week whether she must serve a prison term for bank robbery or whether she will be set free to pick up life where she dropped it three years ago.

The long parade of expert witnesses whose testimony at her trial has pointed to mental irresponsibility, will end Monday and the defense will rest. Only four expert witnesses remain to be heard from and then the state will offer its rebuttal testimony.

Arguments Thursday

Attorneys' arguments, expected about Thursday, will conclude the celebrated court drama and then the jury of farmers and ranchmen will attempt to reach a verdict.

No trial in the history of Texas has paralleled interest that which has been underway in Judge J. W. Watson's court for one week. Every session has seen farmers in overalls, ranchmen in broad brimmed hats and mothers with babies in their arms in the front row of the little district courtroom.

And throughout the long sessions Becky has maintained the same unruffled calm, appearing not the least bit interested in the attempt of her childhood sweetheart and husband, Otis Rogers, to free her of the charge.

Only twice during the trial did Becky allow the stern expression on her face to relax. Once was when she smiled at Otis as he brought her a glass of water and the other time when she nearly laughed outright at Prosecutor Fred Blundell's effort to twist the testimony of witnesses to his liking.

Day With Mother

With her mother, Mrs. Grace Bradley, Becky spent the day resting in their cabin at Camp Giesecke, near here, while Otis sat in conference, planning the defense which is calculated to keep her out of prison for robbing the Farmers National bank at Buda in 1926.

Otis said he would rest the case tomorrow following the testimony of Dr. Livingston Anderson of Corpus Christi; Dr. W. J. Johnson, superintendent of the state hospital at San Antonio; Dr. W. A. Smith, assistant physician of the San Antonio institution, and Dr. Frederick Fink, who conducts a private clinic.

All will say Becky was insane when she dropped her school books while a student at the University of Texas and staged the now celebrated robbery.

TEXANS PLAN COTTON BOARD

Details of Council to Be Shown to Bankers

HOUSTON, Sept. 15 (AP) — Plans for a decentralized cotton cooperative producing and marketing association through which Texas cotton growers will be able to avail themselves of federal farm board aid were evolved here Sunday.

Tentatively decided upon by the Texas committee named by Gov. Dan Moody to cooperate with the federal farm board, the proposal will be submitted Monday morning by Governor Moody to 30 bankers picked last week by the executive committee of the Texas Bankers' association at Dallas.

The proposed statewide cooperative association, it was revealed here today by Lawrence Westbrook, Waco, chairman of the committee which drafted the plan, is to be known as the Texas Cotton council. Besides availing itself of the provisions of the federal farm relief act, the council will engage in a long-time program of educational effort in order to correct existing evils in the Texas cotton producing industry, it was said.

Announcement of plans for the state-wide cooperative organization was made Sunday afternoon after a day of labor here on the part of three members of the Texas committee and two consultants. Committee members were Mr. Westbrook, state Senator Julien C. Hyer of Fort Worth and L. P. Gabbard, chief of the farm and ranch division of the Texas agricultural experiment station. Counsel included Col. P. A. Weatherred of Houston and Victor H. Schoffelmayer, agricultural editor of the Dallas News, both named by Governor Moody. The other members of the committee is Dr. A. B. Cox, director of the bureau of business research of the University of Texas, who was to arrive for Monday's sessions.

As conceived by the committee, the organization will center around gin communities in Texas, these to be incorporated in county groups. District organizations will follow and all will center in a state-wide cotton council.

BOY DROWNS IN DEEP CHANNEL NEAR BRIDGE

Tragedy Closes Sunday Outing for Party Of Youngsters

GROUP HUNTS BODY

Motorboats and Dragging Hooks Employed In Night Search

Special to The Record News

CHARLIE, Texas, Sept. 15.—Homer Ferguson, 14-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Ferguson, was drowned about 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon when he encountered deep water as he was wading in a swimming pool below the Wichita river bridge two and one-half miles south of here.

The swollen river waters, high after recent rains and about 10 feet in depth where the youth went down, took young Ferguson down stream before aid could reach him, and tonight the body had not been recovered despite efforts of about 20 men equipped with boats, hooks and dragnets. Fire and police officials from Byers and Wichita Falls are here assisting the search.

Boys Wade Out

Homer had accompanied Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Barberee, their two children, Cleo and Leo, both about 14, and Martha Mozelle Currington, 10, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Currington, to the river on a Sunday afternoon outing. The young ones waded around in the shallow outskirts of the swimming pool. Homer and Leo finally started for deeper water. Mr. Barberee called his son back, and also called to Homer, warning him to stay in shallow water, but, according to witnesses, Homer called back: "I can swim," and went still further out in the stream. Then the high waters engulfed him.

Mr. Barberee said he did not plunge in to Homer's rescue because of his inability to swim, but he did rush down the bank, hoping that the current would sweep the youth in that direction. This did not happen, however, and as Mr. Barberee was running, he saw the youth go down in the water for the last time.

Boats Join Search

Authorities at Charlie were notified of the tragedy, and a search for the body was instituted immediately. From Byers a motorboat and dragnet were secured, a second dragnet was brought from Charlie, and a third was brought by Wichita Falls firemen and police. Fire Chief J. L. McClure and Police Chief Frank Burns, with several men from each of their departments, tonight were aiding the other volunteer workers in the search.

The spot being dragged for the body is 400 yards east of the Charlie-Petrolia bridge, and is

Russia Must Have More Vodka to Get Revenues

MOSCOW, Sept. 15 (US)—Simultaneously with the opening of the Moscow anti-alcohol week the commissariat of finance announces the necessity for increasing the production of vodka by 100,000,000 quarts in the coming year in order to add 120,000,000 rubles revenue to the economic budget.

From the 860,000,000 quarts produced this year the state revenue amounted to 1,000,000,000 rubles. A plan to gradually introduce prohibition by the limitation of the production of vodka proposed to cut the 1930 production by 40,000,000 quarts.

Hambone's Meditations

"ALL QUIET on the WESTERN FRONT" by ERICH MARIA REMARQUE

With full pack and rifle I have had to practice on a soft, wet, newly ploughed field until I was one lump of mud and finally collapsed.

of the First company is a much better fellow. He is as fat as a hamster in winter, but he trundles his pots when it comes to that right up to the very front line.

We were in just the right mood, and there would certainly have been a dust-up if our company commander had not appeared. He informed himself of the dispute, and only remarked: "Yes, we did have heavy losses yesterday."

He looked in the dixie. "The beans look good."

Ginger nodded. "Cooked with meat and fat."

The lieutenant looked at us. He knew what we were thinking. And he knew many other things, too, because he came to the company as a non-com, and was promoted from the ranks. He lifted the lid from the dixie again and sniffed. Then passing on he said: "Serve out the whole issue. We can do with it. And bring we a plate full too."

Ginger looked sheepish as Tjaden danced around him. "It doesn't cost you anything! One would think the quartermaster's store belonged to him! And now get on with it, you old blubber-sticker, and don't you miscount either."

"You be hanged!" spat Ginger. When things get beyond him he throws up the sponge altogether; he just goes to pieces. And as if to show that all things were now the same to him, of his own free will he shared out half a pound of synthetic honey equally among us.

Today is wonderfully good. The mail has come, and almost every man has a couple of letters.

Kropp pulls out one. "Kantorek sends you all his best wishes."

We laugh. Muller throws his cigarette away and says: "I wish he was here."

Kantorek had been our schoolmaster, an active little man in a shiny tail-coat, with a face like a brown-mouse. He was about the same size as Corporal Himmelstoss, the "Terror of Klosterberg." It is very queer that the unhappiness of the world is so often brought on by small men. They are so much more energetic and uncompromising than the big fellows. I have always taken good care to keep out of sections with small company commanders. They are mostly confounded little martinets.

During drill-time Kantorek gave us long lectures until the whole of our class went under his shepherding to the district commandant and volunteered. I can see him now, as he used to glare at us through his spectacles and say in a moving voice: "Won't you join up, comrades?"

These teachers always carry their feelings ready in their waistcoat pockets, and fetch them out at any hour of the day. But we didn't think of that then.

There was, indeed, one of us who hesitated and did not want to fall into line. That was Josef Behm, a plump, homely fellow. But he did allow himself to be persuaded, otherwise he would have been ostracised. And perhaps more of us thought as he did, but no one could very well stand out, because at that time even one's parents were ready with the word "coward"; no one had the vaguest idea what we were in for. The wisest were just the poor and simple people. They knew the war to be a misfortune, whereas people who were better off were beside themselves with joy, though they should have been much better able to judge what the consequences would be.

Katczinsky said that was a result of their upbringing. It made them stupid. And what Kat said, he had thought about.

Strange to say, Behm was one of the first to fall. He got hit in the eye during an attack, and we left him lying for dead. We couldn't bring him with us, because we had to come back helter-skelter. In the afternoon suddenly we heard him call, and saw him outside creeping towards us. He had only been knocked unconscious. Because he could not see, and was mad with pain, he failed to keep under cover, and so was shot down before anyone could go and fetch him in.

Naturally we couldn't blame Kantorek for this. Where would the world be if one brought every man to book? There were thousands of Kantoreks, all of whom were convinced that there was only one way of doing well, and that way theirs.

And that is just why they let us down so badly.

For us lads of 18 they ought to have been mediators and guides to the world of maturity, the world of work, of duty, of culture, of progress—to the future. We often made fun of them and played jokes on them, but in our hearts we trusted them. The idea of authority, which they represented, was associated in our minds with a greater insight and a manlier wisdom. But the first death we saw shattered this belief. We had to recognize that our generation was more to be trusted than theirs. They surpassed us only in phrases and in cleverness. The first bombardment showed us our mistake, and under it the world as they had taught it to us broke in pieces.

While they continued to write and talk, we saw the wounded and dying. While they taught that duty to one's country is the greatest thing, we already knew that deaththroes are stronger. But for all that we were no mutineers, no deserters, no cowards—they were very free with all these expressions. We loved our country as much as they; we went courageously into every action; but also we distinguished the false from the true, we had suddenly learned to see. And we saw that there was nothing of their world left. We were all at once terribly alone, and alone we must see it through.

Before going over to see Kemmerich we pack up his things; he will need them on the way back.

In the dressing station there is great activity; it reeks as ever of carbolic, ether and sweat. Most of us are accustomed to this in the billets, but here it makes one feel faint. We ask for Kemmerich. He lies in a large room and receives us with feeble expressions of joy and helpless agitation. While he was unconscious someone had stolen his watch.

Muller shakes his head: "I always told you that nobody should carry as good a watch as that."

Muller is rather crude and tactless, otherwise he would hold his tongue, for anybody can see that Kemmerich will never come out of this place again. Whether he finds his watch or not will make no difference. At the most one will only be able to send it to his people.

"Not so bad . . . but I have such a damned pain in my foot."

We look at his bed covering. His leg lies under a wire basket. The bed covering arches over it. I kick Muller on the shin, for he is just about to tell Kemmerich what the orderlies told us outside: that Kemmerich has lost his foot. The leg is amputated. He looks ghastly, yellow, and wan. Already the strained lines that we know so well, we have seen them now hundreds of times.

They are not so much lines as marks. Under the skin the life no longer pulses, it has already pressed out to the boundaries of the body. Death is working through from within. It already has command in the eyes. Here lies our comrade, Kemmerich, who a little while ago was roasting horseflesh with us and squatting in the shell holes. He it is still and yet it is not he any longer. His features have become uncertain and faint, like a photographic plate on which two pictures have been taken. Even his voice sounds like ashes.

I think of the time when he went away. His mother, a good, plump matron, brought him to the station. She wept continually, her face was bloated and swollen. Kemmerich felt embarrassed, for she was the least composed of all; she simply dissolved into fat and water. Then she caught sight of me and took hold of my arm again and again, and implored me to look after Franz out there. Indeed, he did have a face like a child, and such frail bones that after four weeks pack-carrying he already had flat feet. But how can a man look after anyone in the field?

"Now you will soon be going home," says Kropp. "You would have had to wait at least three or four months for your leave."

Kemmerich nods. I cannot bear to look at his hands, they are like wax. Under his nails is the dirt of the trenches, it shows through blue-black poison. It strikes me that these nails will continue to grow like long, fanastic cellar plants long after Kemmerich breathes no more. I see the picture before me. They twist themselves into corkscrews and grow and grow, and with them the hair on the decayed skull, just like grass in a good soil, just like grass, how can it be possible—

Muller leans over. "We have brought your things, Franz."

Muller does so. Kemmerich starts on again about the watch. How can one calm him without making him suspicious?

Muller reappears with a pair of airman's boots. They are fine English boots of soft, yellow leather which reach to the knee and lace all the way—they are things to be coveted.

Muller is delighted at the sight of them. He matches their soles against his own clumsy boots and says, "Will you be taking them with you, Franz?"

We all three have the same thought; even if he should get better, he would be able to use only one—they are no use to him. But as things are now it is a pity that they should stay here; the orderlies will of course grab them as soon as he is dead.

"Won't you leave them with us?" Muller repeats.

Kemmerich doesn't want to. They are his most prized possessions.

"Well, we could exchange," suggests Muller again. "Out here one can make some use of them." Still Kemmerich is not to be moved.

I tread on Muller's foot; reluctantly he puts the fine boots back again under the bed.

We talk a little more and then take our leave.

"Cheerio, Franz."

I promise him to come back in the morning. Muller talks of doing so, too. He is thinking of the lace-up boots and means to be on the spot.

Kemmerich groans. He is feverish. We get hold of an orderly outside and ask him to give Kemmerich a dose of morphia.

He refuses. "If we were to give morphia to everyone we would have to have tubs full—"

"You only attend to officers properly," says Kropp viciously.

I hastily intervene and give him a cigaret. He takes it.

"Are you usually allowed to give it, then?" I ask him.

He is annoyed. "If you don't think so, then why do you ask?"

I press a couple more cigarets into his hand. "Do us the favor—"

"Well, all right," he says.

Kropp goes in with him. He doesn't trust him and wants to see. We wait outside.

Muller returns to the subject of the boots. "They would fit me perfectly. In these boots I get blister after blister. Do you think he will last till tomorrow after drill? If he passes out in the night, we know where the boots—"

Kropp returns. "Do you think—" he asks.

"Done for," says Muller emphatically.

We go back to the huts. I think of the letter that I must write tomorrow to Kemmerich's mother. I am freezing. Muller pulls up some grass and chews it. Suddenly little Kropp throws his cigaret away, stamps on it savagely, and looking around him with a broken and distracted face, stammers, "Damned swine, the damned swine!"

We walk on for a long time. Kropp has calmed himself; we understand; he sees red, out here every man gets like that sometime.

"What has Kantorek written to you?" Muller asks him.

He laughs. "We are the Iron Youth."

We all three smile bitterly. Kropp rails; he is glad that he can speak.

Yes, that's the way they think those 100.00 Kantoreks! Iron Youth. Youth! We are none of us more than 20 years old. But young? Youth? That is long ago. We are old folk.

CHAPTER II

It is strange to think that at home in the drawer of my writing table there lies the beginning of a play called "Saul" and a bundle of poems. Many an evening I have worked over them—we all did something of the kind—but that has become so unreal to me that I cannot comprehend it any more. Our early life is cut off from the moment we came here, and that without our lifting a hand. We often try to look back on it and to find an explanation, but never quite succeed. For us young men of 20 everything is extraordinarily vague, for Kropp, Muller, Leer and me, for all of us whom Kantorek calls the "Iron Youth." All the older men are linked up with their previous life. They have wives, children, occupations and interests, they have a background which is so strong that the war cannot obliterate it. We young men of 20, however, have only our parents, and some, perhaps, a girl—that is not much, for at our age the influence of parents is at its weakest and girls have not yet got a hold over us. Besides this there was little else—some enthusiasm, a few hobbies, and our school. Beyond this our life did not extend. And of this nothing remains.

Kantorek would say that we stood on the threshold of life. And so it would seem. We had as yet taken no root. The war swept us away. For the others, the older men, it is but an interruption. They are able to think beyond it. We, however, have been gripped by it and do not know what the end may be. We know only that in some strange and melancholy way we have become a waste land. All the same, we are not often sad.

Though Muller would be delighted to have Kemmerich's boots, he is really quite as sympathetic as another who could not bear to think of such a thing for grief. He merely sees things clearly. Were Kemmerich able to make any use of the boots, then Muller would rather go barefoot over barbed wire than scheme how to get hold of them. But as it is the boots are quite inappropriate to Kemmerich's circumstances, whereas Muller can make good use of them. Kemmerich will die; it is immaterial who gets them. Why, then, should Muller not succeed to them? He has more right than a hospital orderly. When Kemmerich is dead it will be too late. Therefore Muller is already on the watch.

We have lost all sense of other considerations, because they are artificial. Only the facts are real and important for us. And good boots are scarce.

Once it was different. When we went to the district commandant to enlist, we were a class of 20 young men, many of whom had proudly shaved for the first time before going to the barracks. We had no definite plans for our future. Our thoughts of a career and occupation were as yet of too unpractical a character to furnish any scheme of life. We were still crammed full of vague ideas which gave to life, and to the war also, an ideal and almost romantic character. We were trained in the army for 10 weeks and in this time more profoundly influenced than by 10 years at school. We learned that a bright button is weightier than four volumes of Schopenhaur. At first astonished, then embittered, and finally indifferent, we recognized that what matters is not the mind but the boot brush, not intelligence but the system, not freedom but drill. We became soldiers with eagerness and enthusiasm, but they have done everything to knock that out of us. After three weeks it was no longer incomprehensible to us that a braided postman should have more authority over us than had formerly our parents, our teachers, and the whole gamut of culture from Plato to Goethe.

With our young awakened eyes we saw that the classical conception of the Fatherland held by our teachers resolved itself here into a renunciation of personality such as one would not ask of the meanest servant—salutes, springing to attention, parade marches, presenting arms, right wheel, left wheel, clicking the heels, insults and a thousand pettifogging details. We had fancied our task would be different, only to find we were to be trained for heroism as though we were circus ponies. But we soon accustomed ourselves to it. We learned in fact that some part of these things was necessary, but the rest merely show. Soldiers have a fine nose for such distinction.

By threes and fours our class was scattered over the platoons amongst Frisian fishermen, peasants, and laborers with whom we soon made friends. Kropp, Muller, Kemmerich and I went to No. 9 platoon under Corporal Himmelstoss.

He had the reputation of being the strictest disciplinarian in the camp, and was proud of it. He was a small undersized fellow with a foxy, waxed moustache, who had seen 12 years' service and was in civil life a postman. He had a special dislike for Kropp, Tjaden, Westus and me, because he sensed a quiet defiance.

I have remade his bed 14 times in one morning. Each time he had some fault to find and pulled it to pieces. I have kneaded a pair of orthopedic boots that were as hard as iron for 20 hours—with intervals of course—until they became as soft as butter and not even Himmelstoss could find anything more to do to them; under his orders I have scrubbed out the corporals' mess with a tooth-brush. Kropp and I were given the job of clearing the barrack-square of snow with a hand-broom and a dust pan, and we would have gone on till we were frozen had not a lieutenant accidentally appeared who sent us off, and hauled Himmelstoss over the coals. But the only result of this was to make Himmelstoss hate us more.

For six weeks consecutively I did guard every Sunday and was hut-orderly for the same length of time. With full pack and rifle I have had to practice on a soft, wet, newly ploughed field the "prepare to advance, advance!" and the "lie down!" until I was one lump of mud and finally collapsed. Four hours later I had to report to Himmelstoss with my clothes scrubbed clean, my hands chafed and bleeding. Together with Kropp, Westus, and Tjaden I have stood at attention in a hard frost without gloves for a quarter of an hour at a stretch, while Himmelstoss watched for the slightest movement of our bare fingers on the steel barrel of the rifle. I have run eight times from the top floor of the barracks down to the courtyard in my shirt at 2 o'clock in the morning because my drawers projected three inches beyond the edge of the stool on which one had to stack all one's things. Alongside me ran the corporal, Himmelstoss, and trod on my bare toes. At bayonet practice I had constantly to fight with Himmelstoss. With a heavy iron weapon whilst he had a handy wooden one with which he easily struck my arms till they were black and blue. Once, indeed, I became so infuriated that I ran at him blindly and gave him a mighty jab in the stomach and knocked him down. When he reported me the company commander laughed at him and told him he ought to keep his eyes open; he understood Himmelstoss, and apparently was not displeased at his discomfiture. I became a past master on the horizontal bars and strove to surpass my instructor at physical jerks;—we have trembled at the mere sound of his voice, but this runaway post horse never got the better of us.

TWENTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL PRESENTATION

NEW CADILLACS
NEW LA SALLES
NEW FLEETWOODS

A greater line of more than 50 magnificent new types and models

A Lower and Wider Price Range on All Body Styles

New Designs—Lower Racier Lines—Greater Seating Capacity—Larger Engines—More Power and Speed—Richer Finer Fisher and Fleetwood Bodies—Non-Shatterable Security-Plate Glass Standard Equipment in All Windows, Doors and Windshields—Syncro-Mesh Silent-Shift Transmission—Safety-Mechanical Four-Wheel Brakes—New Harmonized Steering System—New Recessed Instrument Panel—Every Essential Engineering and Mechanical Feature Refined Beyond all Previous Cadillac Standards

With the advent of these three superb lines of new Cadillacs, La Salles and Fleetwoods, in a lower and wider price range, the doors automatically open to admit thousands of new owners to the Cadillac family.

The market has never known cars so highly perfected or so complete in every major and minor detail. So, too, on a price comparison basis, the market has never offered so large a measure of in-built worth.

So sharp and striking is the advantage in favor of Cadillac, La Salle and Fleetwood in the performance, appearance and price alignment of this greatest of all Cadillac programs, that it amounts to the creation of a new Cadillac business and a new and vastly greater Cadillac public.

Cadillac, the world's quality standard, becomes also the price and value standard of the world by which all other car values must come to be judged.

Expressed in the fewest possible words with a full sense of their weight and importance, Cadillac promises in these three groups the greatest chassis value, the greatest body value, and the greatest gross and net monetary value known to the motor industry of the world today.

The first promise of greater chassis value can quickly be demonstrated by description, examination and part-and-quality comparison with the world's costliest cars.

It can be proved likewise by performance demonstration—revealing measures of power, speed and acceleration, transmission ease, braking certainty and riding luxury which even Cadillac-La Salle-Fleetwood have not attained before.

The second promise will reveal itself at a glance in Fisher and Fleetwood bodies so rich and beautiful that the average body appears almost tawdry by comparison.

The third promise can be verified by studying the very best that the market offers in chassis, performance and appearance and noting how far beyond this other best the Cadillacs, La Salles and Fleetwoods go in all respects.

A summing up of this comparison can have only one result—proof positive of the statement printed above and reprinted here for emphasis:

Cadillac, the world's quality standard, has become also the price and value standard of the world by which all other motor-car values must come to be judged.

Not in any one thing but in all things—in speed plus acceleration plus power plus economy plus appearance plus non-shatterable Security-Plate Glass plus Syncro-Mesh Silent-Shift Transmission plus Safety-Mechanical Four-Wheel Brakes—so unmistakably the greatest monetary value of the industry that no buyer need call upon a salesman to point it out for him.

Bread An' Jam

A Daily Illustrated Poem For Children

By Wymond Garthwaite

IS THERE A PLACE?

Is there a place, a place at all
Where people grow just tiny small?
I mean a place where people grow
An inch above the ground or so.

I'd love to find a place like that!
I'd put a few inside my hat
And take them home with me to play.

They'd be like fairies, wouldn't they?

They'd hide and seek inside my shoes
Or in my pockets if they choose.

I'd take them in the bath with me
And play it was a tiny sea.

They'd live inside my doll-house, too.
I think they'd like it there. Don't you?

And you could maybe catch a mouse
So they could ride around the house!

Oh, say, there's lots that we could do—
If only we just had a few!
Is there a place where we could go
And look for some—or don't you know?

Husbands Blame Wives for Silence Enveloping Home

Wives Are Responsible for the Great Pall of Silence That Descends on the Average Home, Cry the Husbands, Because Men Have Learned Through Bitter Experience That Their Only Refuge Lies in a Mute Inaccessibility.

Most men and women marry to get companionship. The thing that lures them into the bondage of matrimony is neither romance nor the sex appeal. What they fall for is the prospect of getting some one to whom they can talk endlessly. Somebody who will laugh at their jokes and encore their stories. Somebody who will listen with bated breath while they tell all the details of their daily lives and what they said to the boss and the boss said to them, or how they got a bargain that was marked down from $5 to $4.98. Somebody to whom they can tell all their hopes and plans and ambitions, who will extol their triumphs and blame somebody else for their failures.

That is the sort of companionship that every man and woman, who enters into the holy estate, expects to find in it, but few ever realize their fond hopes. After the honeymoon has waned, a deadly pall of silence settles down over the great majority of homes and husbands and wives have nothing to say to each other beyond a perfunctory discussion of bills and the children and the routine business of existence.

It is a rare thing to see a married couple who take any genuine pleasure in each other's society, and who can pass an enjoyable evening chatting with each other. On the contrary, drop in for a call on the average husband and wife and you will find them sitting up as mute as dummies, and it is never any trouble in any public place of amusement to pick out the married people. They are the ones who are reading the theater program through from cover to cover and apparently memorizing the menus in restaurants.

Yet these men and women are not dull nor stupid nor averse to the sound of their own voices. Many of them are brilliant conversationalists, and so the question arises: Why does the man who keeps the dinner table in a roar abroad only open his mouth to put food in it at his own table? Why does the woman who is gay and chatty and entertaining to strangers make no effort to entertain her own husband?

I have asked a number of men and women to try to solve this problem of why husbands and wives don't talk, and here are the answers that I got:

One husband said: "I don't talk much at home because I can't trust my wife's discretion. She blabs everything she hears and I dare not tell her anything of the slightest importance.

"I am awfully interested in my work and nothing would give me keener pleasure than to be able to talk it over with her, but I can't do it because she would tell every detail to her mother and her sisters and her cousins and her aunts and her dear 500 friends, and it would be all over the place by tomorrow. So I have learned to hand out a very diluted brand of domestic conversation that is interesting neither to her nor to me and we fall back upon the evening paper in place of holding a talkfest."

Another husband said: "I have learned to censor my conversation because my wife is jealous and makes scenes and puts the worst interpretation on everything I do. I would like to tell her about what a good time I had when I have been to a stag dinner and repeat to her some of the funny stories I heard, but if I did she would turn the affair into a perfect orgy and I would have to listen to a tirade against the wicked and abandoned companions I was with.

"I would like to tell her when I meet some middle-aged woman who was a friend of my boyhood and whom I took out to lunch, but I can't, because she would have a spell of hysterics over my having grown tired of her and falling in love with another woman.

"I would like to tell her about what a fine, brave young girl my private secretary is, and how I have raised her wages because she has to support an invalid mother and a lot of little brothers and sisters, but if I did I would be accused of leading the double life, so I protect myself by hiding behind a barrage of silence."

Said another husband: "I don't talk at home because I find that I can't say anything without starting something. Even my most innocent remark leads to an argument, and before I know it we are going it, hammer and tongs, and, believe me, I get plenty of fighting in my business without wanting to supplement it with a domestic scrap as soon as I go home.

"I can't correct the children without my wife violently espousing their side. I can't make a suggestion about the management of the home without her considering that I have offered her a deadly insult. She takes everything as a personal criticism, and so that makes conversation at home a too-strenuous adventure for a tired business man to engage in."

Said another man: "When I was first married I used to tell my wife everything, but it didn't take me long to find out that when I confessed to her some foolish thing I had done, or some mistake that I had made I would never hear the last of it. She would nag me about it and remind me of what a poor, weak creature I am, and what poor judgment I have.

"Once I lost a few thousand dollars in a speculation. Another time I helped out a poor, old school fellow. And for 30 years she has thrown in my teeth, every time she has wanted anything, we couldn't afford, these shining examples of how I throw away money that my poor family needs.

"Therefore, I have learned that silence at home is golden, and that what a wife doesn't know she can't nag you about."

Said another man: "I never tell my wife of any of my plans because she always pours cold water on them and croaks failure until it breaks down my morale and takes every particle of enthusiasm and confidence out of me, but I often think of how wonderful it would be if I only could talk things over with a wife who believed in me and bolstered up my confidence in myself."

How about it, wives? Do any of these caps fit your bobbed heads?

He had been a resident of Wichita Falls since 1902, when he moved here from Fort Worth as an employe of the Fort Worth and Denver railway. In 1917 he became an oil operator and in 1921 he entered the cafe business. In 1925 he, with his son, entered the drug and confectionery business and at the time of his death the two owned and operated the Yates Drug store and the Martha Washington Candy shop. He was born in Malin, Tenn., in 1875, having moved to Texas in 1898. In 1900 he married Lelia Swartz at Cleburne and soon after moved to Fort Worth.

WICHITA FIREMEN AND POLICE HELP

Eight members of the Wichita Falls police and fire departments left here at 4 o'clock Sunday afternoon with grappling hooks and ropes to aid in the search for the body of Homer Ferguson, 14, who drowned while swimming in the river near the Charlie bridge about 2 o'clock.

Fire Chief J. L. McClure, Police Chief Frank Burns, City Detectives Fred Fountain and Chris Jensen and Firemen Dick Phillips, Thurston Harvick, Vernon Grisham and Clyde Gold made up the party. Detectives Fountain and Jensen were sent to Lake Wichita to obtain the grappling hooks and ropes which are kept there for emergency use in case of drownings. They followed the others to the bridge.

The officers and firemen are experienced in such work, having been called to assist in other emergency cases in the past. M. A. Smith, postmaster at Charlie, telephoned to Wichita Falls after he had been notified of the drowning and asked that grappling hooks and persons experienced in the use of them be sent to aid in recovering the body of young Ferguson. Chief Burns immediately summoned the party, dispatched the detectives to the lake and set out for the bridge.

Rangers Given Clue to Assassin

interested yesterday in learning what became of a deathbed statement, missing from the district attorney's office, said to have implicated William J. (Whitey) Walker, alleged bad man, in the slaying of two Borger deputies sheriff for which he and two others were under indictments, appeared today to have turned toward other possibilities, perhaps later to resume the search for the paper, written by Roy Harmon, fatally wounded in an alleged bank robbery attempt.

Totally unconfirmed rumors went about in some quarters that the killing was believed to have had a "political" angle, while some spectators of the vast hunt speculated on the conference of Alex G. Mood, United States assistant district attorney, with rangers. Holmes was to have gone to Amarillo Monday to assist in the scheduled trials of 14 Borger men and women arrested on liquor charges in a "clean up" raid by rangers here in July.

Conferences Held

Whether a special grand jury would be called to inquire into the Holmes murder virtually was left to the decision of the rangers, district Judge E. J. Pickens announced after a conference with District Attorneys Clifford Brawley of Pampa and Edward W. Thomerson of Amarillo that he would not convene such a body unless the state officers advised it.

Two rather indefinite clues as to the automobile used the slayer came in. The license number of an automobile which a Borger resident had seen pass the Holmes' house several times during the day of the slaying, was given to the authorities. The second "lead" was found in the report that the killer's machine had been borrowed in Pampa.

Sartin Devotes Talk To Educational Problem

Judge B. D. Sartin, teacher of the men's Bible class of the Highland Heights Christian church, devoted his lecture-lesson Sunday morning to a plea for closer articulation between church and state, and more faithfulness in parents toward keeping children enrolled for religious education.

"While the church and state properly will continue separately in operation and control," he said, "it is necessary that they frankly recognize that in education they are dealing with the same child, who has one life, not two. The Sunday school and public school should be counterparts of the same system, so far as the child is concerned. America must come to understand that there is no education that can be complete and well balanced without a program of training the moral nature of man."

The committee on specials and premiums for the exhibition will report to the meeting Tuesday night, and will give complete instruction relative to entering show animals, it was said. Breeders will be asked Tuesday night to supply the secretary with complete lists of the animals which will be entered, this information to be used in making up an article for the national convention catalog, according to W. L. Smith, corresponding secretary.

Herbert Kaufman's

"PROFESSOR, HOW COULD YOU?"

Daily Editorial

ALL the college professors aren't turning cornstalks into billions and new opportunity, or developing alloys which keep hardening under increased heat.

While some of 'em are raising agricultural and industrial hopes, others are raising tempests in teapots.

Especially one Dr. Rogers, of Boston Tech, who blurts the opinion that America is in process of emasculation because too many women are teaching hereabouts.

Dr. Rogers attributes a general tendency toward unprecision, lack of concentration and ("whisper it gently in Gath") effeminacy to petticoat instruction.

All of which gets him into the headlines and a hornet's nest.

Various ladies, who have been showing young ideas how to shoot, take occasion to remind the gentleman that their pupils rendered due account of themselves at Beaulieu Woods and in the Argonne.

Prominent metropolitan superintendents not only dissent from his views, but insist that no other generation ever produced a higher average of able, enterprising and vigorous men, or comparably efficient young women.

Citizens-at-large will resent the attack as ungrounded and unfair.

UNDER the mixed class system that prevails throughout the United States, there can be no question as to women's greater fitness to direct grade education.

Men are not sufficiently patient or understanding to lead children through adolescence. They are temperamentally too obtuse, irritable and arbitrary for the task.

Their didactic and dictatorial attitudes repel confidence. Boys and girls instinctively cling to mental apron strings—and men don't wear them.

Dr. Rogers will find as few supporters for his theory as a certain other sensationalist, who undertakes to revive the depressing postulate that 50 years is the set limit for ability.

Sir William Osler preached that gloomy gospel in the nineties, and forthwith controverted his own dictum, by proving himself a better surgeon after middle age than he had ever been during his earlier days.

The assertion is made that brains go sterile along the forties, lose receptivity and initiative, subsist on previous inspiration and cease to create.

The truth of the matter is that success usually eases down around 50 and proceeds to enjoy its fruits and earnings.

Anyone who hasn't found his place or amassed a competence by then has manifestly made a failure of his career long before that.

But to establish definite boundaries for the expression of brilliance and capacity is just another piece of danged nonsense.

Laughter rings through Valhalla at the very thought.

Voltaire, Gladstone, Von Moltke, Tindall, Edward Everett Hale, and the late J. P. Morgan, together with Benjamin Franklin, Charles Darwin and Rudolf Virchow, offer as much testimony as Edison, Hindenburg and Taft against such a grotesque assumption.

Clemenceau, Rodin and George Bernard Shaw refute it. And so do experience and common sense.

What Wages Will Buy

THE UNITED STATES is famous as a country of high wages. Nowhere in the world do the services of even the ordinary worker command as high a sum of money as they do here. To the underpaid laborer of Europe the country looks like an El Dorado—and we have to pass stiff immigration laws to keep from being swamped by a flood of job-hunters.

Yet there is another side to the picture. If you can get a lot of money for your services here, you can also get a lot of service for your money. This country is, after all, like every other—for an amazingly small sum you can buy the very best that a man has to give, in generous measure.

About a year ago there was published a book called "On the Bottom," written by Commander Edward Ellsberg of the U. S. navy. It illustrates this point perfectly.

Commander Ellsberg was in charge of the navy's effort to raise the sunken submarine S-51, which sank off Block Island a few years ago after being rammed by a steamer. His book is the story of that job; and it tells a tale of heroism and endurance that is almost incredible.

Under him there were approximately a score of divers—navy enlisted men.

These men were drawing the regular navy rate of pay—good pay, as military service goes, but not comparable to the earnings, say, of a first-rate carpenter or mechanic in civil life. They were all volunteers for the jobs they held; the navy can't order any man below the surface against his will.

Day after day, for many weeks, these men went about the most perilous job you can imagine. Their work took them 140 feet below the surface of the water. They crawled into the sunken sub, through narrow hatches, trailing their life lines past machinery that could so easily entangle them and trap them forever; they lay on their backs, an hour at a time, to burrow through the muck of the bottom beneath the sub's hull; they dared death in its most horrible form imaginable, time after time, cheerfully and without complaint—and all for a scant three or four dollars a day!

If you want to strengthen your faith in the race, read that book. And, as you read it, reflect on this: that while the story told by Commander Ellsberg is an extreme one, it only typifies the sort of thing that happens every day in the year, in every city and town in the country.

What does an employer get when he hires a man? The mere performance of a job? Not at all. He gets his life. Uncounted millions of men are giving everything they have to jobs that yield them a bare living—giving it simply because there is something in the human heart that makes for long endurance, great bravery and unprotesting sacrifice.

The sailors who went down to the S-51 gave more than most. Yet they are only symbols of the great average. Like their fellow citizens ashore, they were doing their jobs they knew best for a few dollars a day—and putting into the doing all of the strength and courage that God gave them.

Is It the Schoolma'am's Fault?

THE reopening of the public schools this fall has caused the annual revival of one of the most ancient jokes in the country—the compassionate chuckle about the unwilling schoolboy, dragged back to the distasteful imprisonment of the school house.

It strikes us that the joke constitutes a sort of challenge to the school boards of the nation. Surely the process of educating children might be made a thing that the children would actually enjoy; anyone who has ever observed the eagerness with which youngsters go after information will agree that they really want to learn.

Perhaps they really aren't as reluctant to go back to school as our cartoonists and jokesmiths think. Our pedagogues are wiser than they were a generation ago. But if there is a widespread unwillingness on the part of children to resume their studies, it would seem that a direct criticism of the schools is implied.

A Justified Rebuke

PRESIDENT HOOVER'S stinging rebuke to the munitions lobby was both very timely and fully justified.

There is, of course, a division of opinion in this country about the wisdom of reducing our naval armaments; and, obviously any American who thinks that making concessions to get parity with the British is a mistaken move has a right to protest as long and as loudly as he is able.

But it is utterly intolerable that pressure should be put on congress by interests whose only concern is one of dollars and cents. When the munitions makers and ship-builders lobby against naval reduction, they are giving the pacifists the best argument they could ask for.

More Light Is Needed

IT IS to be hoped that the senate will begin an immediate and thorough investigation of the various charges relating to paid propaganda in connection with the government's naval building program.

Such an investigation is called for all the more urgently because of the fact that four American rear admirals stand accused of fostering "big-navy" propaganda at a time when their government was trying to reach agreement with a foreign power for naval reduction.

Both friends and foes of a large naval establishment should join in insisting upon this investigation. The disclosures made so far hint at an ugly situation, and all possible light on the matter is imperatively needed.

CHATTY—GODDESS OF CAB

By BEATRICE BURTON, Author of: "HER MAN," "HONEY LOU," "SALLY'S SHOULDERS," "MONEY LOVE," "LOVE BOUND," ETC.

COPYRIGHT 1928, CENTRAL PRESS ASS'N INC, CLEVELAND, OHIO.

READ THIS FIRST

Charlotte Chatterton, nicknamed Chatty, is a born gossip. Her mother, a widowed dressmaker, through Mrs. Van Nuys, a wealthy customer and old friend of the family, gets Chatty a position as switchboard operator at the Van Nuys offices. Chatty meets Billie Langeman, to file clerk, and Agnes Herford, private secretary to Mr. Van Nuys. Chatty falls in love with a young bond salesman, David Jordan, but when she gossips and causes Agnes to resign her position David drops Chatty. Chatty has dates with Bryant Dunning, a new salesman, who is married but says he has left his wife. Chatty has many parties at Winnie Talcott's house. Winnie is Mr. Van's new secretary.

One day Chatty overhears David talking on the phone about taking a new position at the Midas bank. Later she sees him copying names. Wishing to get even with him, and believing him stealing the bond buyers lists, Chatty tattles to Mr. Van. Mr. Van is very angry, as he has given David permission to copy the lists. Chatty has to apologize to David or leave. She leaves, and is unsuccessful in getting another position. She continues to date with Bryant Dunning, although her mother urges her not to do so.

Now Go on With the Story

CHAPTER 53

Walk, walk, walk the streets. Ache, ache, ache in the feet—and the heart.

Smile, smile, smile—with tears running down inside instead of outside the cheeks. Tears in the heart do not show through a smile.

Rebuff, rudeness, indifference, callousness—these Chatty met on every hand.

No one wanted a store girl. No one wanted a girl to address envelopes. No one, it seemed, wanted a girl for anything that Chatty could do.

To make it much worse, every morning paper seemed filled with "wanted, file clerk, reference required." "Wanted, first-class P. B. X. operator, give references."

An once before, both mother and Pud were patient with her. But they knew—even Pud knew—that things could not go on like this.

Mrs. Chatterton's sewing was spasmodic as to orders; most of her trade was among people of middle class, to whom she was attractive as a seamstress as much for her low prices as for her good work. But often they were slow in paying.

Pud's slender earnings just about kept him in clothes. Since he had stopped delivering bootleg alcohol his weekly earnings were much smaller than before.

But not even for the urgently needed money would Chatty have had him go back to the old days and the old ways.

It is impossible for any pretty girl to seek earnestly for work in a big city, and not find something. Chatty had two or three opportunities, but they were not such as she could accept. One old lady wanted a daily companion, but a part of the job was to travel with her, and Chatty felt she could not leave her mother.

Another chance she had was to act as cashier in a small and rather low-class movie; but when she thankfully told her mother she had, at last, a job—it only paid twelve dollars a week—her mother flatly forbade her to think of it.

"Too much temptation, too much exposure to the public. No, dear, keep it up and you'll find something better than that, I know—"

So the weary walk, walk, walk commenced again.

Chatty began to realize now, as never before, that she had wasted much time and effort on so-called "friends" who were of no use to her. True, Winnie would gladly have seen her friend get a job—but Winnie's only influence was with Mr. Van Nuys—and that was a closed avenue.

And Winnie's friends were not people of influential position.

George and Billie had gone away. They would be back, but not even good George had any power to find a job for a girl who couldn't furnish a reference.

The one friend who had some power and influence—David—never wanted to see her face again.

Chatty ate the gue and drank the gall of remorse, her life a failure—because she had talked too much.

One day, utterly weary and completely discouraged, Chatty dropped in an open church at noon.

It was cool and quiet, the edifice was dim and peaceful.

Chatty sat in a rear pew, just resting. Then she noted that others were coming in. Shortly, the tones of the organ stole through the still air.

Chatty was in a church which was holding a midday "comfort" service, a half hour withdrawal from the world.

The little sermon was very short; to Chatty it was very impressive.

The young minister took as his text a verse from the first epistle general of John: "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."

It was a very simple talk, but straight from the shoulder.

"To be sorry for wrong done is good," said the minister. "But to be sorry and confess it to the wronged one, is to make the sorry evident, and to remove the cause of failure from our minds."

Chatty thought it over very carefully. She had confessed to Billie—and felt much better, as far as Billie was concerned. Never had she felt so close to her mother, as after she had told that best of friends all the evils that was in her heart and from what ghastly error she had been saved by the accident.

She had felt some self-respect when she told Mr. Van Nuys she was sorry she had disgraced herself in public.

But there were other wrongs she had not confessed! And something seemed to pursue her as an evil influence, something prevented her getting a job, something was in the way of her complete rehabilitation.

Chatty began to think—dimly and with difficulty, because Chatty was not accustomed to thinking clearly of herself—that the fault must lie altogether with her. Not only in what she had one—but in what she was not now doing.

Mightily she wished for Billie, to talk it over. There was her mother, but Chatty shrank from telling her mother more about her troubles; her mother was burdened enough, with ill health, too little money, not enough work, anxiety.

"I have to fight this out for myself!" Chatty determined, sturdily.

Gradually there grew up in Chatty's mind the idea of self-sacrifice.

She had done many evil things. Reforming herself and not doing them any more, was as good as far as it went.

But it didn't go far enough.

If she was really to stand clean and clear before the world, the judgment of which is as harsh as it is, often, unfair, Chatty realized she must make what reparation she could.

It was not enough to tell Billie and her mother of the harm she had done; she must tell those she had harmed!

Chatty shrank from this conclusion as from a blow in the face. To tell Agnes she had stolen her diary? To tell Mr. Van Nuys she had tried to wreck his home? To tell Mrs. Van Nuys she had written an anonymous letter? Impossible! She'd die first!

But the idea persisted in her mind. The right idea has a way of persisting, whether we want it to or not.

Chatty was normally, naturally, a decent girl. All that was best in her had fallen a victim to her insatiable curosity about the affairs of others, her determination to be first to tell, her enjoyment of the sound of her own voice. Somewhere Chatty had read a nonsense verse:

"I love its giddy gurgle;
I love its fervent flow,
I love to wind my mouth up;
I love to hear it go!"

"That's me!" she told herself. "At least, that was Chatty—it isn't now. Oh, no, it isn't any more!"

Walk, walk, walk the streets for work.

Fight, fight, fight with the still small voice that kept repeating the young minister's text; "if we confess our sins—"

Self-assurance after self-assurance that she simply could not, dared not, seek out Agnes and tell her the terrible wrong she had done her.

With every self-assurance came the growing conviction that until she did, she would have no peace of mind.

"Reparations—reparations!" The papers were full of the "reparation problems." Nations had problems of reparations, too, it seemed. And how did nations make reparation for wrong done? By shouldering the damage, admitting the responsibility, taking the punishment!

"That's what I've got to do—take my punishment!" thought Chatty.

But it was not from inner resolve nor minister's text that the final strength came to make up her mind.

It came from a dream.

In the dream Chatty was in the church. In the pulpit stood David, dressed as the minister had been dressed.

The Health Value of Dried Vegetables

The American Indian was quite familiar with the methods of sun-drying fruits, vegetables, and meats to improve their keeping qualities. William Wood in a letter written in 1629 said that the Indians dried "gooseberries, bilberries, rasberries, treachleberries, hurtleberries and currants" which, after being dried in the sun, were but little inferior to the fresh berries sold by the grocers in England.

The early New England colonists followed in the footsteps of the Indians by preserving their food over the long winter months by drying it. Along the coast, the drying of fish became an important industry. A great impetus was given the drying of foods by the Klondyke gold rush in Alaska in 1896. There was a great demand for foods which were light enough to be transported on the back over great distances of barren country. Quantities of dried potatoes were imported from Germany, and almost over night many crude drying plants were constructed along the fertile areas of the Pacific coast.

Wars have always had a stimulating effect upon the dried food industry. During the Boer war Canada supplied the British army with quantities of a quickly prepared vegetable soup mixture. During the Franco-Prussian war of 1870 largg quantities of soup made of powdered, dried green leaf vegetables and legumes were used. The world war also provided a tremendous impetus to the dried food industry, especially in Germany, and it is believed that the large quantities of dried vegetables and potatoes in Germany explains why she was able to hold out so long in the desperate struggle without obtaining supplies from other countries. With the entry of the United States into the world war, numerous evaporating plants were established, and the United States department of agriculture spent much time and effort in experiments to perfect the scientific dehydration. As a result of many experiments it was found that where the fruit or vegetables were exposed to excessive heat the vitamins were destroyed and the salts oxidized. The foods were discolored and robbed of their finest flavors. It was found that vitamin C is destroyed by sun-drying at a moderate temperature providing the dehydrated food is quickly sealed and kept in a cool storage place.

Some foods such as spinach can be reduced in weight on a ratio of 16 to 1. One ton of apricots, if canned, would weigh about 2,500 pounds, while one ton dehydrated and packed will weigh about 350 pounds. This is an indication of the great saving in storage and transportation by the dehydrating method of preserving food.

When properly performed, dehydration is simply the removal of water and does not impair the food value of the foods. So many different foods are dehydrated that it is impossible to serve a complete dinner of these foods. For example, one might begin with a dehydrated soup mixture of pea or lentil soup, such as used by the German army. Next would be a salad of celery, lettuce and horse radish which had been soaked in water. For vegetables, one could use dehydrated corn, peas, tomatoes, string beans, beets, spinach, carrots, or asparagus, etc. If an egg dish is desired, there are powdered eggs to use. A cake would be prepared from the powdered eggs and powdered milk, and bread or crackers could be served composed largely of dried vegetable flour. Macaroni or dried beef could be used. If one desired a dessert one could use the dehydrated apricots, apples, peaches, bananas, strawberries, or even an ice cream made from powdered milk.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Drink Habit

Question: Anxious asks—"Is there anything that can be given a man, secretly that will cure him of the drink habit? I wish I could find something that would make him him dreadfully sick if he touched liquor."

Answer—There is nothing I know of which will cure the drink habit unless the drinker is really willing to be cured. It is then very simple. A fast on acid fruits will in a day or two destroy all craving for liquor. The cure is then complete if the drinker really desires a cure.

Sugar and Starch

Question: H. M. asks—"Does sugar combine well with starchy foods?"

Answer—Starchy foods should be used only with the cooked and raw non-starchy vegetables. Sugar should not be used at the same meal with starchy foods.

Exercises for Back

Question: W. G. asks—"What exercise will help a girl of 15 to straighten her back. There is a slight hump near the shoulders in the back due to bending over, reading."

Answer — All exercises which tense the muscles of the upper back will help you to straighten up and develop normally-shaped shoulders. The best exercises for this purpose are taken while lying face downward. An excellent one to take while lying in this position is to clasp the hands behind the neck and raise the head, arms and shoulders as high as possible, relaxing to the floor and raising alternately from 10 to 15 times. Do this exercise two or three times daily and others similar which tend to straighten the muscles of the upper back.

Mice and College Athletes

This column hereby announces that it has been experimenting for nearly a year in a somewhat opposite direction. To show the effect of a cheese diet on white mice, 50 college athletes have been kept in a pile of old papers in a dark closet and fed nothing but Camembert.

These 50 students, the very flower of America's undergraduate life, have been made to grow whiskers, crawl on all fours, squirm through narrow spaces and gnaw pine boards for a period of six months. Fifty other students have been allowed to play football, baseball, tennis and squash. In another 10 days the students who have been treated like mice will be taken outdoors, fed raw meat, given running trousers, inoculated with hay-fever and forced to play football.

If they still show athletic prowess the experiment will prove that what our colleges need is more cheese.

Gerald B. K.—A junior at Princeton, taken when he was young and put in a sideboard drawer with a bag of stale cookies for four months. Nights he was allowed to run wild and show his skill at leaping from pantry shelf to pantry shelf. A few weeks later he was taken out and told to try for the varsity eleven. On the first run with the ball he climbed the goal posts and started to knaw through the pigskin.

Case No. 2

Bruce F. G.—This boy was a member of the Yale polo team. He was put in a cage with some crusts of bread for three months. At the end of that time he was taken to the field and told to play polo. Just as he was about to drive a goal and win the game for Old Eli, a cat ran across the field, frightening him so he jumped off his horse and hid in a barrel.

SPUDS BEATEN IN FINAL GAME

Bettencourt Features; Gullic Bats Over .500

By LARRY DAILEY
Record News Sports Editor.

Fred Bennett and Pete Lapan of the Spudders and Randy Moore of Dallas ran neck and neck for the batting leadership of the Texas league, which closed its 1929 season yesterday. Not until official figures are compiled will the crown of swat king be definitely established, and then there is a possibility it will result in a tie.

Unofficial averages show that Moore is the leader, one point ahead of Bennett and two points in the van of Lapan. Official figures may change that reckoning, however, and a point or two would make a great difference.

How They Fared in Finals.

In yesterday's games Lapan and Moore each got one hit out of four times at bat; Bennett, like several other Wichita Falls regulars, did not play and George Blackerby of Waco, 1928 Texas league hitting leader, went hitless in three times up. This seems to definitely eliminate Blackerby from the 1929 race. Following are the unofficial averages of the leaders.

	AB.	H.	Pct.
R. Moore, Dallas	664	245	.369
Bennett, Wichita Falls	552	203	.368
Lapan, Wichita Falls	338	124	.367
Blackerby, Waco	600	219	.365

Ted Gullic, the mighty-hitting Wichita Falls outfielder who joined the Spudders about six weeks ago, continued his terrific batting pace yesterday and ended the season with a mark of .508. Gullic did not participate in a sufficient number of games to give him consideration in the league batting race. He got three hits in five times at bat yesterday. Gullic compiled his phenomenal .508 record by smacking 32 hits in 63 trips to the plate.

The Spudders closed the season with an 8 to 6 defeat at the hands of Beaumont, and will turn their attention today and tomorrow to preparing to meet the Dallas Steers in the Texas league championship playoff, which opens here Wednesday and Thursday.

With the athletes rested from their grueling pennant fight, the rookies having played the past two days, the regulars will take the field today and tomorrow to sharpen batting eyes and unlimber throwing arms.

The question of the Wichita Falls starting pitcher still is highly problematical, all of the Spudder five regular chuckers, Payne, Steengrafe, Wiltse, Messenger and White, having hurled superb ball in their last starts.

Yesterday's game was played in the fast time of an hour and eight minutes, the athletes evincing a desire to get the contest over with as speedily as possible. The Exporters won when they scored seven runs in the second inning, aided by home runs by Easterling and Burt, with Jimmy Parker pitching.

Versatile Bettencourt

The contest was featured by Larry Bettencourt playing an inning at every position. He started as pitcher and gave one run with a hit and two bases on balls.

Bettencourt threw the ball over the centerfield fence in an exhibition of marvelous throwing. In his first trial he was a trifle short but on the second peg the former St. Mary's all-American gridder pegged the pellet over the center field wall near the flag pole. The distance from the plate to center field fence is 394 feet.

Cromer and White pitched steadily after the second inning and though the Spudders hammered Grimm for 17 hits they could not make them count to win.

Gullic, Hermann and Lamb clouted three blows each to lead the attack.

As in Saturday's contest the Wichita Falls lineup was composed partly of rookies up from Abilene and Springfield.

'Great Shires' Tells of Fight

Art Victim of Blackburne's Spying, He Says

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Sept. 15. (UP)—Art Shires, scrappy first baseman of the Chicago White Sox told today details of his latest fight with Lena Blackburne, manager of the team, which may blight the young Texan's major league career.

Returning to his hotel room Friday night after talking over the radio, Shires engaged in a rough and tumble fight with Blackburne and Lou Barbour, travelling secretary of the White Sox. Shires blacked Blackburne's eye and is said to have hit Barbour several times. As a result Shires was indefinitely suspended.

The quarrel is said to have started when Blackburne attempted to quiet Shires when he found him exuberant in the latter's room. Shires denied that he was intoxicated.

He Wasn't Intoxicated

"Of course I had one or two drinks," Shires said. "That is nothing unusual with me, but I was not even ever so slightly intoxicated and have not been so during the season."

Shires said he was in his room about 11 o'clock last night when Blackburne and Barbour came in and said:

"What's coming off here, anyway?"

"Nothing," Shires said he replied, "what are you fellows getting excited about?"

Blackburne then told him that he was indefinitely suspended and had to pack up and go back to Chicago, Shires said. Shires said he protested and when they wouldn't listen to him, he ordered them out of his room.

Pushes Them Gently

"When they refused to leave, I started to push them out gentle like," Shires continued. "They resisted and then the rumpus started. Well, anyone who wants to start a battle with me can always find me willing, so I accommodated them.

"The funny part of it was when Blackburne bit Lou Barbour's thumb, thinking it was mine. Looking at Loui's thumb later I'm glad it wasn't mine."

Shires explained that he didn't take a drink until he returned from the radio station, where he talked over the air to "my public."

After the fracas, Shires left the hotel where the White Sox were stopping, and checked into another hotel. He said today he was uncertain about his future, but was confident he could win a berth on another major league team if the White Sox would trade him.

"I'm going back to Chicago first," Shires said. "I had been assigned to cover the world series for a Chicago evening newspaper, but that may be off now.

Third Fight With Lena

"My baseball career is far from over. I'll be playing baseball long after Blackburne is forgotten. He has been spying on me ever since I beat him up in Texas. Why, he even offered to be my roommate for a while so he could get the goods on me. It wasn't through any desire on his part to make friends. I'm sorry my roommate, Deacon Taitt, had to see the fight. Now they're trying to make him say a lot of things about me."

Shires said it was his third fight with Blackburne. The first took place at the White Sox training camp at Dallas, Texas.

CHICAGO, Sept. 15. (AP)—Chicago trounced Brooklyn 13 to 4, here today and moved within one victory of the National league pennant.

The Cubs can become mathematically certain if they win tomorrow or if Pittsburgh drops one of its two games with Philadelphia even if Chicago loses.

Tickets for Texas League Playoff Games Here to Go on Sale Today

Crowds of 10,000 or more are expected to watch the two opening games of the Texas league playoff, here Wednesday and Thursday. This has been indicated by the interest of fans of Wichita Falls and Dallas, and this territory.

Tickets for the two games here will be placed on sale this morning at 8 o'clock. Athletic park will be the distributing place of the tickets today with Secretary Guy Airey in personal charge.

Save for season boxes and six additional box seats allowed each box holder, all tickets will be placed on sale, from 8 to 5 o'clock. Tickets to both games only may be obtained today and tickets for single games will be on sale tomorrow at the Renfro No. 1 and Miller's Drug stores.

There are 2,800 box and reserved seats available for the games here, all of which will be placed on sale today. It will be first come, first served, and the choice seats in the stands will be obtained by those who form in line. Not a single reservation has been held, President Gardner of the Spudders said last night, in keeping with his policy of giving all the fans equal opportunity of acquiring the best seats.

Games Start at 3:30

Games here will start at 3:30 o'clock. The price of tickets:

Box seats, $1.50, reserved, $1.25; grandstand, $1; bleachers, 75 cents; children's grandstand, 60 cents; children's bleachers, 50 cents.

More than 1,000 fans from Dallas will be here to support their Steers for the games.

The special train for Dallas, where the five-game series is to be resumed Saturday, after a layoff Friday, will leave Wichita Falls at 8 o'clock Saturday morning over the Fort Worth and Denver City lines. The expense of the trip to Dallas will be $17.50 if three games are played, and proportionally lower if one or two contests are held at Dallas. That includes railroad fare, a reserved seat at the ball game and accommodations at the Baker hotel, which will be Wichita Falls headquarters.

The special will not return to Wichita Falls but the railroad tickets are good for any train returning here until midnight of Wednesday, Sept. 25.

Reservations at C. of C.

J. W. Chatham, traffic and industrial manager of the chamber of commerce, is in charge of the special train and other arrangements for the trip to Dallas. Reservations may be made at the chamber of commerce.

Despite the loss of Bud Stapleton, who will not return from his home in Connecticut, where he was called several days ago by the death of his father, the Spudders are highly optimistic over their chances to win the 1929 Texas league pennant.

The local athletes will take workouts today and tomorrow, and will share the field tomorrow with the Steers, who are expected to be here a day in advance of the opening.

The Greatest Shot

Naming the greatest shot played in the recent amateur golf chcampionship is no easy piece of work. In the first place, the matter of pressure has to be considered, and along this line two of the gamest and finest exhibitions were given by Bobby Jones and George Voigt on the 230-yard seventeenth hole. This hole calls for a long spoon shot down a narrow path that leads to a bunker guarding the green. It is nearly always played against an unfavorable cross wind that makes the shot even more difficult. Jones came to this hole 1 down and 2 to play in his match with Johnny Goodman. I think Bobby was confident that he would square the match here, as the seventeenth was the hardest par on the course.

It takes no great imagination to figure his feelings when Goodman at this point laid a full spoon shot straight on the pin, the ball stopping five or six feet from the cup.

The shock must have been explosive. But in place of weakening, Jones stepped up and hit his spoon shot straight up the gap, over the bunker, only 8 or 10 feet from the cup, and his putt for a 2 hit the center of the cup squarely and then popped out. George Voigt equaled Jones test. In fact, he beat it. Voigt was 2 up at the sixteenth against Don Moe. On the sixteenth green Moe sunk a putt of 50 feet for his 3, pulling Voigt down to a one-hole lead. And then at the seventeenth Moe followed this assault by hitting a great spoon shot 10 feet from the pin. Just as it looked as if Voigt's lead was about to be cut away he stepped up and laid his full wooden shot four feet from the cup, to get a birdie 2 and win. These two shots under pressure were among the greatest played all week.

Two Other Masterpieces

The long eighteenth hole across a corner of the Pacific brought out several masterpieces. One of the great finishes here came between Francis Ouimet and 18-year-old Lawson Little. Little was down at this point when Ouimet sliced to a bunker. Little hit a fine shot down the fairway. Ouimet was out only 50 or 60 yards. In this pinch young Little then hit a tremendous brassie shot, one of the finest shots played all week, just short of the far-away green. It was a great blow down the narrow neck running between the sea and the pines, in an effort to square the match. Ouimet them had an even harder shot; he had to play a full wooden club shot and reach the green to have his chance for a birdie 4, and the shot came off. They finished with two 4s in one of the finest matches of the championship.

It was at this same hole that Jimmy Johnston played his classic shot against Doc Willing. Johnston had cut Willing's lead to one hole in the morning round, when it looked as if he had thrown away the eighteenth by hooking his second into the Pacific. The ball was washed and sloshed back and forth by the surf as Johnston stood more than ankle deep in the ocean. He had to pick his time as the ball stopped, and this moment, as a still bigger wave was on the way, a wave that undoubtedly would have carried the ball into an unplayable stop, a watery grave. Johnston swung quickly, with less than a second to spare, and laid the ball at the edge of the green, to get his half. Pebble Beach is the type of course that lends itself to a series of remarkable shots in match play, shots that are too daring for any medal play risk.

The Dark Horse

The dark horse in the heavyweight scramble is still Victor Campolo. He has all the physical qualifications needed to win. He has it on the others in weight, speed, reach and punching power. He has still to prove how much heart and brain he carries when it comes to a hard championship test, and these happen to be two of the most important of all qualities. So far he has shown his share of both—nothing brilliant, but up to the standard of any of the others. There is a good chance that he may be the hardest of them all to get out of the way.

'Championship' Go Sought by Fugazy

NEW YORK, Sept. 15. (US)—Overtures that may lead to a match for the world's heavyweight championship between the winners of the coming Victorio Campolo-Phil Scott and Jack Sharkey-Tommy Loughran bouts were made today by Promoter Humbert J. Fugazy.

Fugazy proposed the match for the benefit of the Jewish Palestine relief fund to Samuel R. Rosoff, chairman of the finance committee. He said he made his offer with the approval of Campolo, and that he was sure that James J. Johnston, manager of Scott, would assent to anything Mr. Rosoff may arrange.

Fugazy is willing to donate the use of Ebbets field for the contest in the event the bout can be arranged for Oct. 12.

COLLEGE DAYS FOR CANYON

Tuesday Set for Entrance Examinations

Special to The Record News.

CANYON, Texas, Sept. 15.—College days will begin again at West Texas State Teachers' college on Tuesday Sept. 17, when all students who are to take entrance examination will begin their two-days' grind. It is expected that there will be 200 students who will come to Canyon early for this purpose.

September 18 and 19 will be given over to Freshman registration and orientation. Registrar D. A. Shirley has worked out the program for these two days. It is the purpose of old students who will be on the grounds, and of the faculty of the college to make the opening days of their college experience just as pleasant as possible for the 400 or more freshmen who will be away from their homes for the first time.

All enrollments will be completed by Saturday, Sept. 21, and classes will be held that day.

President J. A. Hill will have a number of new faces before him when he meets his faculty for the first time Sept. 18. Six new men and women have joined the ranks, each of them holding a higher degree than the person he succeeds.

President Hill states that he is much pleased with the constantly higher standard of preparation and experience which he has been able to get for his faculty.

DOUBTERS SEEK ETERNAL LIFE

Rev. Henry Speaks on Coming of Christ

"Doubting and unappreciative man has sought some way of eternal life without God and Christ through all the centuries, but his effort becomes more definitely a failure with the passing of every year," said Rev. Patrick Henry at the Highland Heights Christian church Sunday night in a sermon on "Why Did Christ Come Among Men?"

Rev. Henry spoke from the text found in the gospel of Luke, xix: 10, "For the Son of Man came to seek and to save that which was lost." The question always in the minds of men as to the identity and mission of a newcomer was clearly answered in the text, the speaker said.

Universal Need

Regardless of one's station in life, Rev. Henry said, he is the object of Christ's coming, and may be the recipient of His salavtion. Referring to the universal need of a Saviour, he continued:

"A blind man groping his way down the street always excites pity and sympathy, and you see scores of persons ready to lend him assistance. Yet many men are walking the streets daily, possessed of a blindness infinitely more serious and pitiful than physical blindness, needing the spirit-filled guiding hand that they may find the Great Physician."

The text of the sermon follows:

"If President Hoover a arrival in Wichita Falls should be announced in The Record News tomorrow morning, there would be one thought uppermost in the minds of everybody which would be "What' is his mission here'" and should he make no announcement at all, then the people would begin to guess and suggest until every motive possible in the whole range of human thought would be suggested. Even when some stranger calls on you in your office, you can hardly wait until you ask "What can I do for you," which is a grace ful way of asking 'What is you mission" Since it is true then that we show so much concern and interest in the coming and going of our fellowman, we should certainly be concerned in the purpose of the coming among men of the Son of God. God did not leave us in the dark about the mission of His Son, so it is not necessary for us to wonder and guess, as so frequently we do in the coming and going of men.

As clear as the rays from the noon-day sun, the announcement comes from the Word of God, that Christ came among men, that he might become their Saviour. The circumstances giving rise to the scripture quoted above, came as a result of a series of very normal human experiences. First poor and friendless Bartimeus, though he was rebuked by those about, had called on the Christ and he had healed him of his blindness; second rich and mighty Zacheus had humbled himself by climbing a tree that he might see the Christ, the result of which Christ was a guest in his home, which association resulted in Zacheus' conversion to the Christ message, the sincerity of his conversion being established by his immediate action in giving one-half of all his goods to those in need, and restoring fourfold to whom he had taken advantage of in his dealings. These two instances of conversion serve to illustrate the impartiality of Christ's favor, and gave an illuminating setting to the statement that forms our text tonight. "For the Son of Man came to seek and to save that which was lost."

Christ Came to Save

Christ came to save you tonight. It matters not what station in life you occupy, nor to what particular race of the human family you chance to belong. A blind man groping his way down the street always excites pity and sympathy, and you find scores of people who are always ready to lend them assistance, yet many met, are walking the streets every day possessed of a blindness infinitely more serious and pitiful than physical blindness; their spiritual eyes are blinded by their love for the passing things of this world, and surely they need the guiding hand of the spirit-filled life, that they might be led to the great physician, who will make them whole, if they will call upon His name.

Doubting and unappreciative man has sought some way of eternal life without God and Christ through all the centuries, but his effort grows more definitely a failure with the passing of the years, and we stand today, more definitely than at any time since God created man in His own image, in need of a great spiritual Savior who will bridge for us the chasm between time and eternity. God through Christ has anticipated just such a condition, and provided for this craving of the human heart, in sending His son. Since in Christ only we find the answer to the universal yearning within the human heart, is it not worthy that in calling upon His name, we should be willing to do the things He suggests? Though the greatest surgeon in all the world should be at our side, his skill and cunning shall mean nothing in relieving our distressing illness, until we shall submit completely to his plan and follow implicitly his every suggestion and requirement. So even will you not be fair enough tonight to recognize that in calling upon the name of the Lord, you must put yourself in that state of mind, wherein you shall be willing and even glad, to follow his every suggestion, which is revealed to you in the Bible.

The contest is on, God and the devil are bidding for your soul. The devil offers you the glamor and glitter of the passing show; he challenges you to follow him and you will find much pleasure and lots of thrills. He lied to Adam in the Garden of Eden, he lied to Christ in the season of temptation, he lied to the young woman in the house of shame, he lied to man who sits in the electric chair, he lied to the man of affairs who is in the depths of despair because his soul is sick with a selfish and sinful life, and it matters not tonight, what proposition he has made you that keeps you from accepting Christ, he is lying to you, and the tragedy of it all is that you must suffer forever the consequences of the lie. God offers you honor, virtue, righteousness, the real thrill of life to be found in unselfish service to your fellowman, salvation from your sins, and finally a share in the riches of eternity with Him. He establishes and manifests His great earnestness in your behalf by sending His son to seek you and to save you. The decision rests solely with you tonight, which bidder will you accept?

Influence of Old-Time Camp Meeting Lives Today, Martin Tells Class

In his address to the members of the men's Bible class at the Floral Heights Methodist church Sunday morning, Judge P. A. Martin paid a tribute to the old fashioned Methodist-"camp-meeting" and to its influence on the lives of the people of the South. The speaker identified the camp-meeting with the ancient "Feast of the Tabernacles" and drew a vivid picture of the customs of the old-time methodists in their frequent gatherings.

Today we have a lesson that our editors call a lesson for a teachers class and if I were teaching a class of young people I would doubtless follow the lines our editors have so kindly outlined for us, but, as it is I prefer and I think you will prefer to study the feast of tabernacles which was celebrated by the Jews just after Ezra and his assistants had finished teaching the law to the assembled Jews in the streets of Jerusalem.

According to the law of Moses the Jews were commanded each year on the 15th day of the seventh month to celebrate the feast of tabernacles in memory of the time when all of the Lord's favored people dwelt in tents in the wilderness of Judea. They were to build arbors of the green trees round about and dwell, in them for a period of eight days, beginning on a Sabbath and closing on a Sabbath, and between times they were to offer their burnt offerings and drink offerings and do no manner of regular work. It was to be a time of great rejoicing and reflection and thanksgiving to their God, as well as a time of general repentance and forgiveness of sin. It was in other words, a camp meeting.

Fond Memories

And this brings me to consider the old time Methodist camp meeting, the modern counterpart and successor of the feast of tabernacles and when I think of a camp meeting, "fond memory brings the light of other days around me" and I see again the old camp-ground at Hawkins' chapel, in the northeast part of Young county. I see again the patriarchal faces of its founders "Uncle Jim and Uncle Joe Hawkins" two brothers who settled there in an early day and were the leading spirits in the erection of the chapel and the founding of the church there. At the "full of the moon" in August of each year, they gathered around them such pioneers as W. L. Aycheart, Uncle Bob Andrews, Uncle George Shearer, J. W. Casey, and a number of others and made extensive preparations for the annual feast of tabernacles. Fat beeves were killed, tents and booths were erected, the arbor was cleaned out; fresh straw was placed in the aisles and at the "mourners' bench;" chickens were penned for slaughter; great jars of pickles, preserves and all sorts of good things to eat were brought forth from the pantries and smoke-houses and the people from far and near were invited to come. They came.

A fine grove of green trees surrounded the place; nearby pastures fed the horses; a well of good water furnished the drink. A group of Methodist preachers came and the feast was on.

Day's Program

The daily routine was first a sunrise prayer meeting; then a morning preaching service; a dinner on the ground; an afternoon service, with much singing; then as the evening sun cast lengthening shadows over the camp-ground the grove meetings were held; the men going down on the side of a branch the women on the other side in another grove of timber. They prayed and sang and frequently the shouting of one grove meeting was plainly heard in the other. When they returned to the grounds they came with tears of happiness or tears of repentance in their eyes and they all were ready for the evening service.

Then at "early candle light" the kerosene lanterns were lit at the arbor and the crowds came from far and near to hear the preaching of the gospel—and they heard it—there were no finespun theories, no attempts to be funny—no politics mentioned but those preachers said things about Jesus Christ and him crucified. They told of the doom of the sinner, too, and from somewhere in Holy Writ they dug up such ancient texts as "ye must be born again" and "except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish" and they preached just like they believed what they were saying, and while they preached "Uncle Jim and Uncle Joe" and other of their kind sat in the amen corner and said "Amen" and prayed, sometimes audibly. And then the proposition was made and people moved to the mourners' bench by the score and a something came and pervaded the atmosphere all around—something one did not feel elsewhere—something that once felt is never forgotten by the human heart and soul—something that caused the thoughtless to think and the hopeless to take courage and hope—something that brought tears of repentance to the eyes and heart-throbs to the heartless and indifferent—something that made a man think of all the mean things he had ever done and wish that he had not done them—and a great prayer welled up from hundreds of hearts and a great and good God answered it in the salvation of souls. Resolutions were formed, bad habits were abandoned and homes were made happy by the score.

What was it? "Uncle Jim and Uncle Joe" and the preachers after the night meeting was over would talk it over and they all agreed that it was the Holy Spirit bearing witness with the spirits of the faithful and moving mightily in its wonder work upon the hearts of men.

Well, the years have gone by. The good men who founded this meeting have long since passed to their reward. Their sons and their daughters and their grandchildren inhabit many different countries. So far as I have ever been informed none of their progeny have ever brought disgrace or shame upon the name. The camp-meeting is no more, but it would be hard to convince me that its influence is not still alive in the world. The Methodist feast of tabernacles, then so common all over the southland, has long since ceased to be an institution of the church. The ever-changing habits of the people have evolved new things, new customs and new methods; but those of us who enjoyed the old-fashioned camp-meeting anywhere will never forget it.

CHARGE FILED IN SHOOTING

Woman Held Under Assault to Kill Complaint

Charges of assault with intent to kill were filed Sunday against Mrs. S. A. Nichols in connection with the firing of four shots in the Nichols home on Wilson street about midnight Saturday. Mr. Nichols, at whom the shots are alleged to have been aimed, was untouched by the bullets but suffered an injury to his head from a blow with the pistol butt.

The complaint was filed against Mrs. Nichols Sunday by Mike Anglin, assistant district attorney, after she had made an oral statement. The prisoner was held under a $500 bond. She will be transferred to the county jail Monday, officials said. Nichols was released after questioning Sunday.

According to information given Mr. Anglin, Mrs. Nichols' 15-year-old daughter and two roomers were in the home at the time of the discharge of the gun. Mrs. Nichols said "they" took the pistol away from her after the shots were fired, without defining whom she meant by "they," the attorney said. One of the bullets is believed to have lodged in a passing automobile, narrowly missing its woman driver. The condition of the wound to Nichols' head was reported favorable late Sunday.

WICHITA BOY DROPS DEAD

Stroke Kills Youth On River Outing

Joe Mills, 18-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. R. Q. Mills, 301 Adams street, dropped dead about noon Sunday as he walked with three companions along the banks of Wichita river about one mile east of the city. O. L. Gibbs, justice of the peace who conducted an inquest at the scene of the boy's collapse, entered a verdict of death from natural causes, probably apoplexy. Mike Anglin, assistant district attorney, and Frank Morgan, constable, who investigated the circumstances Sunday afternoon, pronounced themselves satisfied with the results of the inquiry.

According to the story told by Erwin Roberts, Ray Kelley and J. M. Malone, young Mills' companions, the group had been running and wrestling together along the bank when Mills suddenly slumped and fell to the ground. He died within a few minutes, the boys said, failing to respond to their efforts at reviving him. He was dead, before a physician could be reached. The boys notified the Merkle Undertaking company who called Judge Gibbs and later took the body in charge.

In his investigations Sunday afternoon Mr. Morgan learned that the young man had suffered a similar attack earlier in the day as he played on the school grounds. His body bore no signs of injury, the officer reported.

Funeral plans will be announced later.
