Reagan pushes for free trade, cooperation

BRASILIA, Brazil (AP) — President Reagan, in a two-pronged message to Brazilian business leaders, today denounced what he called counterfeit revolutionaries in Central America and decried restriction of free trade as "an ugly specter stalking the world."

Reagan sounded a call for economic cooperation between the United States and Brazil — one day after moving to ease the impact of U.S. sugar quotas here and provide a $1.2 billion loan to help Brazil restore its earlier economic growth.

But the president's trip to Latin America is focusing as much on East-West themes and troubled Central America as it is on the special problems of financially ailing Brazil.

In today's address, Reagan turned to a theme he used Wednesday night when he told a dinner audience, "Just as threatening as conventional armies or nuclear weapons are counterfeit revolutionaries who undermine legitimate governments and destroy sources of economic progress."

In remarks prepared for delivery to U.S. and Brazilian business leaders in Sao Paulo, Reagan said:

"There is in the world today, a counterfeit revolution, a revolution of territorial conquests, a revolution of coercion and thought control where states rule behind the barrel of a gun and erect barbed wire walls not to keep enemies out, but to keep their own people in."

A White House official said this was a reference to the Soviet Union and Cuba.

Reagan expanded on that Wednesday night, saying insurgents were armed at great expense, by a faraway power aimed at disrupting other governments and economies

"This is aggression pure and simple," he said.

"We stand firmly with the other responsible nations of the Americas in opposing those who with violence and force of arms, try to undermine economic progress and political stability" he said.

The president, on a four-nation, five-day Latin American tour, had some trouble remembering where he was and where he is going Wednesday evening when he asked his dinner companions to join him in a toast to President Joao Baptista Figueiredo "and to the people of Bolivia — that is where I am going. To the people of Brazil...."

The president, however, is not going to Bolivia, one of the poorest nations on the South American continent. His next stop, on Friday, is Bogota, Colombia.

Although the president's use of the word Bolivia could clearly be heard, the official White House transcript of his remarks substituted the word Bogota. When this was noted to White House press aides, they refused to correct the transcript, saying the president was thinking of Bogota not Bolivia.

Before flying approximately 500 miles for the speech in Sao Paulo, Reagan visited the U.S. Embassy in Brasilia, where he praised the staff for its devotion to duty and called for its help in "strengthening our relations with Brazil."

Reagan also met again with Figueiredo before setting out for Sao Paulo, the industrial center with a population of 8.5 million.

Edward M. Kennedy

Kennedy not ready to back bid

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, renouncing a bid for the White House in 1984, is fully prepared to back another contender based on the issues he would have stressed in a campaign of his own, aides say.

Aides said no endorsement is expected for some time, although any of the remaining contenders — Walter Mondale and Sens. John Glenn and Gary Hart among them — presumably would be delighted to receive Kennedy's blessing. Alan Cranston, the Senate Democratic whip, said as much, predicting, "A significant number of Kennedy supporters will now be ready to support me."

Kennedy was keeping his own counsel, refusing to name a favorite or even identify a front-runner. Cranston conceded the current lead to former vice president Mondale and said he ranks Glenn, of Ohio, next.

Others edging into the race, still unannounced, include Hart of Colorado, Morris Udall of Arizona, Sen. Ernest Hollings of South Carolina and former Florida Gov. Reubin Askew.

But one Kennedy aide said:

"He's going to look and see if these people are consistent" with the themes he would have stressed — a nuclear freeze and changed economic policies chief among them.

Another aide, also asking not to be identified, said that while the Massachusetts senator is "leaving the option open to endorse a candidate in the future," he does not have a favorite at this point. Associates who talked with Kennedy by telephone over the past few days also said he expressed no preference.

"He intends to play a major role in Democratic party politics," one aide said after Kennedy's nationally televised announcement that personal reasons dictated a decision to renounce both a candidacy and a draft for the nomination in 1984.

Although ruling out a race in 1984, the 50-year-old Kennedy said he wasn't renouncing any hopes for the White House in 1988 and beyond, and aides sought to stress his determination to remain a party leader in the interim.

Kennedy himself was providing no details on his political plans. But a key aide — all Kennedy's assistants were asking for anonymity Wednesday — hinted broadly that Kennedy might soon announce a "major domestic initiative" dealing with the economy as one way of indicating his intention to retain his voice as a party leader.

"He played a major political role in this country throughout the 1970s even though he wasn't a presidential candidate," remarked one aide.

Congregation sees surprise performance

ODESSA — Police said the congregation of the First United Pentacostal Church on East 19th Street here was somewhat aghast when a 23-year-old man entered the church during services about 7:30 p.m. Wednesday and began doing a "lewd dance" — sans even the proverbial fig leaf.

He was quickly subdued and held for police by male members of the congregation who said the man offered no explanation for his performance, which got him jailed on an indecency charge.

Administration seeks gasoline tax support

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, seeking votes for its proposed gasoline tax increase, is trying to accommodate members of Congress who want to bend parts of the plan to protect pet projects.

The 5-cent-a-gallon hike in the federal gasoline tax has strong bipartisan support. But wrangling over the plan — aimed at financing $5.5 billion worth of highway, bridge and mass transit repairs — is picking up with legislative action beginning today in the House Ways and Means Committee.

Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis said at congressional hearings this week that up to 13 states might be unable to pay the matching share — averaging 17 percent — required in federally-aided construction projects. That could make it impossible for those states to grant contracts for the repair work.

After learning of that, Rep. Barber B. Conable Jr., R-N.Y., the ranking Republican on the Ways and Means Committee, told Lewis Wednesday that the measure is "not going to be a job bill if the contracts don't get let."

The administration's response was quick and conciliatory. Later in the day, Tom Blank, a Transportation Department spokesman, said the administration is studying a proposal that would eliminate the problem for states that may be unable to meet their share of the matching funds. Under the plan, the state share of such projects would be small initially, but then rise as a state became more able to bear the cost.

Meanwhile, Rep. Bill Archer, R-Texas, another member of the Ways and Means Committee, and Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, a member of the Senate Finance Committee, have said they are unhappy that the administration proposal did not provide for the start of new rail systems, such as one sought by the city of Houston.

The administration has opposed new rail systems.

But Blank said Lewis now has notified several members of Congress that the administration will permit the start of new rail systems.

Other problems persist, however.

Several members of the Ways and Means Committee also have expressed concern that the money might not be distributed fairly.

Lewis acknowledged that 11 states get back less than $1 for every dollar they contribute to the highway fund while several states get substantially more than they pay in.

Archer, whose home state of Texas gets 76 cents for every dollar it pays in, complained "we have been kicked around for too long by these distribution formulas."

Bentsen has said he would like to see a provision in the bill mandating that a state receive at least 90 percent of the money it pays in.

In addition to increasing the gasoline tax from 4 cents to 9 cents beginning next April, the administration is proposing to change the excise taxes on tires and spare parts as well as sales taxes so that the heaviest trucks would pay higher annual taxes.

THFC reviews variety of documents

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

AUSTIN — Midland Memorial Hospital's planning documents, ranging from a scribbled interpretation of a telephone conversation to a professionally-prepared report, were among 25 exhibits entered at the Texas Health Facilities Commission hearing Wednesday.

While testimony early Wednesday morning included explanations of MMH's Five-Year Major Objectives from Oct. 1, 1982, to Sept. 30, 1987, and a rehash of MMH's state-approved behavioral health center, the remainder of Wednesday's cross-examination focused on MMH's planning documents.

The documents were petitioned by American Medical Corporation during the recent two-week certificate of need application proceedings in Austin. The Tennessee-based AMC, which owns Parkview Hospital, and MMH are opposing applicants for additional beds at the joint THFC hearing, which was to end Nov. 20.

However, both hospitals were summoned back to Austin Wednesday after a controversy cropped up during the hearings. The controversy began when attorneys for the proposed Doctors Hospital of the Permian Basin, Inc. (Parkview) asked for all of MMH's long-range planning documents, including a report prepared by TriBrook Group Inc., a management consultant firm.

AMC attorneys filed a motion Nov. 12 with the health commission requesting the suspension of MMH's application until the reports were produced. MMH produced a six-foot stack of papers Nov. 18. The hearings then recessed for Thanksgiving holiday.

MMH's certificate of need application asks for a $15.1 million, 77-bed expansion, while AMC's application calls for a $17.9 million, 110-bed full-service hospital.

AMC attorney Ace Pickens had sought to cross-examine Ray Branson, MMH president, and Don Davis, a TriBrook representative. Pickens' request was granted by the THFC.

Pickens grilled Branson during a six-hour session on the MMH planning documents. Branson was asked to identify some 25 exhibits, most of which were prepared by TriBrook as far back as 1979.

One letter, dated Feb. 16, 1982, from TriBrook staff member Jonathon Swett led to legal arguments between the hospitals' attorneys.

While Branson contended the "unsolicited letter" contained eight "statements" about the implementation of TriBrook's Strategic Long-Range Plan for MMH, Pickens claimed the "recommendations" are committed to sustain hospital competition in Midland, and "no new health providers should be allowed to interfere" with MMH's expansion plans. The letter also stated that a realistic goal for MMH would be to obtain 400-500 beds at its existing site.

Pickens requested that the "planning document" be entered as an exhibit, but Kevin Reed, MMH attorney, argued

Fighting erupts today in Lebanese mountains

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Intense fighting exploded today in Lebanon's central mountains where leftist Druse and rightist Christian militiamen battled with heavy artillery and machineguns, the rightist Voice of Lebanon radio reported.

The clashes came one day after the attempted assassination of Druse Moslem leader Walid Jumblatt, head of the Socialist Progressive Party.

In South Yemen, meanwhile, Palestine Liberation Organization chief Yasser Arafat was quoted as saying that a major battle with Israel was imminent in Lebanon's eastern Bekaa Valley.

"In a few days I shall be calling upon you to join the battle," the Kuwaiti newspaper Al-Seyassa today quoted Arafat as telling Palestinians in a refugee camp in South Yemen.

PLO guerrillas and Syrian troops are lined up against Israeli forces in the Bekaa Valley, as U.S. mediators attempt to push all foreign armies out of Lebanon.

There were no reports of casualties in Lebanon's central mountains. The radio said the fighting centered around the towns of Souk Al-Gharb and Aitat, about six miles southeast of the Lebanese capital.

Police and Jumblatt's Socialists had no comment on the report.

The radio said the exchanges started shortly after Israeli occupation forces abruptly pulled out of the two towns.

An Israeli army spokesman, Lt. Benjamin Oron, said there had been some troop movements in the area but he denied Israeli forces had withdrawn. "On the contrary, we sent more troops to prevent a flareup," he said.

Oron said he had no reports of fighting in the area.

Inmate says if he's executed, death would be God's will

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Charlie Brooks Jr. says if he is executed as scheduled next week for a Fort Worth murder, his death will be the will of God.

"If God wills that I am to be executed at 12:05 Tuesday morning then I will be executed at 12:05 Tuesday morning. But if it is not God's will that I be executed, then I will not," the Fort Worth man said Wednesday.

"Islam teaches that nothing will happen to me unless it is the will of God," said Brooks, who says he has been preparing himself for death since he became a Muslim while in prison.

His lawyers are planning to go to the U.S. Supreme Court later this week to ask for a stay of execution. A three-judge panel of the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals turned down such a request last week in Austin.

His appeals lawyer in Fort Worth, Danny Burns, said the appeal includes a contention that five potential jurors were improperly excluded from the trial because they expressed reservations about the death penalty.

The appeal also contends there was insufficient evidence to prove Brooks guilty of capital murder and that Brooks' trial lawyers failed to show mitigating evidence during the punishment phase of the trial, Burns said.

Brooks, 40, is scheduled to die before sunrise Tuesday. He would be the first man executed by lethal injection in the United States and would be the first person executed in Texas since 1964.

Brooks said Wednesday he still plans to exchange vows Friday with a Fort Worth nurse, "if God wills."

The vows, with God as a witness, will commit them "to each other in preparation for the next life," he said in an interview last week. He said that their relationship began as pen pals while he was in prison, and that he now considers her his "mate." He said she has agreed to witness the execution.

The man Brooks was convicted of murdering, used-car-lot mechanic David Gregory, was shot in the head in a motel after riding with Brooks as he test drove a car from the lot. Brooks said Gregory's hands and feet were bound when he was killed.

Brooks says he is innocent of capital murder because that charge requires that a person "knowingingly or intentionally" caused someone's death. But he adds that he has had "to carry this fact that this man no longer lives because of my involvement."

Charlie Brooks Jr.

Another man convicted in the case, Woodie Loudres, is serving a 40-year prison sentence after pleading guilty to a murder charge, Burns said.

He said that sentence was agreed to in a plea bargain after Loudres' original conviction on a capital murder charge was reversed because some potential jurors were improperly excluded after expressing reservations about the death penalty. Brooks and Loudres were tried separately.

Burns said he believes a similar question about jurors in Brooks' case is the strongest part of the condemned man's appeal.

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — NASA plans to let astronauts walk in space on the shuttle's sixth flight, trying again to test the unproven suits that failed during last month's voyage.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration announced Wednesday the sixth mission would be extended from three days to five days and a final mission schedule should be announced in two weeks.

The flight, now scheduled for late January, will be the first for the new orbiter, "Challenger."

The announcement indicated NASA is confident it can correct the failures in a pair of $2 million space suits that forced cancellation of a planned space walk during the fifth flight last month.

An investigation panel was expected to release its report about what caused the malfunctions today at a 2 p.m. CST news conference.

The report culminates an extensive, two-week investigation by a team of techicians, said Dave Alter, NASA spokesman.

But a fan in the life-support backpack system of Allens's space suit stopped working and an oxygen pressure regulator in Lenoir's suit failed, forcing NASA to scuttle the spacewalk.

A report earlier this week said Lenoir's regulator failed because it was improperly assembled and Allen's fan stopped workiing because of a broken electrical part.

NASA officials refused to confirm or deny the report.

Losing bid cost over $13 million

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements spent more than $13 million on his unsuccessful campaign for re-election — more than any previous candidate in Texas history, according to records in the secretary of state's office.

The final tab of $13.1 million for the Republican incumbent's ill-fated effort for a second term amounted to nearly $9 a vote for each of the 1.47 million ballots he got on Nov. 2.

Clements' final campaign report was filed Wednesday, a day before the deadline. It showed he raised $13.3 million, including $3 million in loans.

Gov.-elect Mark White's most recent report, filed seven days before the election, showed the successful Democratic challenger had spent $5.2 million and raised $6.4 million, including a $1.4 million loan.

White's final campaign expense report was expected later today. Candidates have until 5 p.m. to file the reports with the secretary of state. White, the state attorney general, received 1,697,527 votes, defeating Clements, the first Republican governor in Texas in 104 years, by 231,575, according to unofficial final returns.

The governor's final report left Clements, the wealthy founder of an oil drilling equipment company, as the second-highest spender among gubernatorial candidates in the nation's history.

Louis Lehrman, another Republican loser in November, spent $13.9 million in his bid to become governor of New York. Lehrman, former president of a drug store chain, took out $9.6 million in loans for the campaign.

Democrat Mario Cuomo, who beat Lehrman by 170,000 votes out of 5.1 million c st, spent $4.8 million and wound up with a campaign surplus of $1.2 million.

Rabies confirmed in Corpus Christi rat

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — A wild rat captured at a southside residence last week had rabies, the first confirmed case of the dreaded disease here in the past 15 years and only the second documented case of its type, authorities said.

The rodent bit a man who was working on his house, according to Dr. Larry Magnuson of the city-county health department.

"A fellow who was installing a light in his garage had a rat fall through his ceiling," Magnuson said Wednesday. "He grabbed it and it bit him. He brought the rat in to be examined and it was found to have rabies."

The rabies diagnosis was made by the State Health Department was confirmed by the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, according to Magnuson.

The man is undergoing a two-week series of anti-rabies shots, Magnuson said.

Dr. Kenneth Bernard of the CDC said finding a rabid rat is rare. One rat with rabies was found in South Carolina in 1980, he said.

Another CDC doctor, George Baer, said there had not been any documented cases of rabies in wild rats prior to the 1980 case.

WEATHER SUMMARY

AP Laserphoto Map

The National Weather Service forecasts showers and rain today through Friday for the Northwest and from the central Gulf to the Great Lakes. Snow is expected in the Dakotas. Central states will be cold but the East and West should have mild temperatures.

High in mid-60s forecast for Friday

It'll be freezing cold tonight but sunny and barely cool Friday, as the West Texas weather follows its fickle ways.

The temperature is to drop to the upper 20s tonight even as the sky loses much of its cloudiness. Winds are to be southwesterly at 10 to 15 mph tonight.

For Friday, the weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport predicted sunny skies, highs in the mid-60s, and westerly winds at 10 to 15 mph.

The weatherman reported a trace of rain this morning.

The high temperature Wednesday was 66 degrees, while the overnight low was 43 degrees. The record high for a Dec. 1 was 79 degrees in 1950; the record low for a Dec. 2 was 20 degrees in 1979.

House panel takes up missile debate

WASHINGTON (AP) — The MX missile, a project which has survived years of government indecision and verbal attacks by opponents, is facing a crucial test today now that the time has come to decide whether to pay for it.

The House Appropriations Committee, taking up a $230 billion Pentagon spending bill, is being asked by the chairman of its defense subcommittee to delete $988 million earmarked for the intercontinental nuclear weapon.

Both the chairman, Rep. Joseph P. Addabbo, D-N.Y., and opponents of his move — including a top presidential aide — predicted a close outcome. None, however, was willing to declare victory in advance.

As the panel began considering the measure, Addabbo told reporters, "It's very close. I think we have it by a few (votes), but with the presidents's calls and everything else, the balance may be changing in favor of th MX."

Addabbo said there has "been tremendous lobbying both by the president, secretary of defense, secretary of state; everyone from the administration has been calling every member" of the panel.

White House chief of Staff James A. Baker III, traveling with President Reagan in Brazil, said the president made three telephone calls Wednesday night to Republicans on the committee to press for a favorable vote.

But, as the vote neared, Baker said it was, "smack-dab even. The Republicans are not falling in line as quickly as we would like."

He said he expected the administration would pick up some Republican votes if it appeared they would be decisive.

Reagan, asked about the MX vote, refused to predict the outcome, saying only, "It's a most important vote."

Addabbo said Wednesday he had thought for a time that he had the votes among the 55-member committee for his proposal, but, "now I don't know."

His own lobbying efforts had been aided by various church groups and advocates of a joint U.S.-Soviet freeze on deployment of nuclear weaponry.

Pentagon officials, who declined to be identified, said based on their checks within the 55-member committee, they had "a definite chance to win."

In an indication of how seriously the administration regarded the vote, President Reagan and Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger — both thousands of miles from Washington — reportedly telephoned committee members to urge them to preserve the MX money.

Reagan was in Brazil and Weinberger was attending a NATO meeting in Brussels.

In advance of the vote, a House Republican aide said the high-level lobbying, which reportedly also involved Secretary of State George Shultz and Vice President George Bush, could be crucial because "it is hard for some members to vote against the president."

Last week, Reagan announced he had decided to base 100 of the big new weapons in closely spaced underground silos near Cheyenne, Wyo., the so-called "dense pack" plan.

The decision came nearly 14 months after the president discarded a Carter administration plan to shuttle 200 MX missiles in "shell-game" fashion among 4,600 horizonal shelters spread over a wide stretch of Western desert.

The MX program was conceived almost a decade ago, and more than 60 basing arrangements for it were studied and discarded.

Lehman: It's too late to cut Navy

WASHINGTON (AP) - Even if congressional support for increased defense spending fails to hold, it's too late to scuttle Reagan administration plans to build a 600-ship Navy, says Navy Secretary John Lehman.

"We are essentially there," Lehman said Wednesday in describing the build-up. "It's too late to stop it."

The Navy now has 514 ships and another 106 are under contract, he explained at a Brookings Institution seminar on defense spending.

With few exceptions, Congress has approved the Pentagon spending increases proposed by the administration, even though many of the weapons systems have long lead times and the final bills won't come due for several years.

Lehman said "we front-loaded" the naval increase, using the congressional defense consensus to win approval for ships, even though the costs will be stretched out over many years.

"Unless you plan to mothball every ship as soon as it comes off the line, sorry, we've got the 600-ship Navy," Lehman said.

The increase in ships is necessary to meet increased U.S. commitments and the Soviet naval build-up, Lehman said, reiterating Pentagon warnings about th size of the Russian fleet.

Lehman's prediction that congressional approval for a defense build-up will continue was offset later by a prediction from Sen. Dan Quayle, R-Ind., that increasing federal deficits will increase public pressure to cut Pentagon spending.

"I am fearful that we are beginning to lose the pro-defense consensus" that was part of the Republican electoral victory two years ago, Quayle said.

There is "a perception of the American people that some defense spending is wasteful" and members of Congress are increasingly under public pressure to cut Pentagon spending, Quayle said.

Cost overruns are a major part of eroding public support for defense increases, agreed Quayle and Rep. William Dickinson, R-Ala.

"There is a great deal of waste in the Pentagon," but there is also waste in other areas of defense spending, including executive branch decisions and congressional moves that affect the Pentagon, Dickinson said.

Richard DeLauer, undersecretary of defense for research and engineering, contended that Congress is unrealistic in the way it requires the Pentagon to report the spending progress of major weapons systems.

But Quayle argued that it is necessary, noting that in 1969, there was a 30 percent rise in the final cost of weapons from their initial bids, a gap that had grown to 196 percent by 1982.

"There's a serious problem of bidding low," Quayle said, a practice known in the defense industry as a "buy-in."

Neither rain nor snow — about five inches of it — stayed El Paso postman Billy Bowden from his appointed rounds Wednesday. Several major highways through the city were closed and schools were dismissed an hour early as a storm front dumped the early snow on the area.

Snow makes way to northern Plains; Tornadoes, winds hit Kansas, Missouri

By BETSY BROWN KRAFT
Associated Press Writer

A storm that dumped 4 feet of snow in the Rockies, closing roads and schools, swept into the northern Plains while tornadoes and high winds today wrecked homes and buildings in Missouri and Kansas.

At least 18 people were dead or missing in this week's outbreak of violent weather.

Tornadoes touched down in southern and southeastern Missouri early today, destroying or damaging 25 to 30 homes in Mountain Grove and at least two homes in rural Crawford County. At least 10 people suffered minor injuries.

Residents of Casper, Wyo., awoke this morning to find 19 inches of snow on the ground. The storm already has produced 22 inches of snow in Casper, less than 4 inches short of the all-time record for the entire month of December.

On the other hand, residents of many cities in the Midwest shed their coats and sweaters in record warm temperatures. By mid-morning, the mercury had already surpassed or tied the record for the date in cities such as Aberdeen, S.D., with 54; Grand Rapids, Mich., 61; Minneapolis, 55; and Muskegon, Mich., 58.

In Southern California, 46,700 people were still without power today after heavy wind and rain cut off power to 1.5 million electric customers Tuesday. Crews worked around the clock to clean up thousands of downed trees and secure seaside homes from additional damage from this morning's high tides.

Workers sandbagged levees in Northern California, where a broken dam resulted in $6.5 million damage to the 3,000-acre Venice Tract. More than 8,000 Northern Californians were without power Wednesday night.

In Birmingham, Ala., more than 7 inches of rain flooded streets and forced dozens of families to evacuate Wednesday. The water was receding late Wednesday, prompting flood warnings for nearby rivers.

The storm had swept in from the Pacific, ripped across California and the northern Southwest, blasted the Colorado Rockies and aimed northeast. Ahead of the storm, warm, moist air caused thunderstorms and tornadoes in the southern Plains, said Hugh Crowther of the National Weather Service in Kansas City, Mo.

In western Missouri and southeastern Kansas, out-of-season tornadoes Wednesday night toppled mobile homes, knocked down barns and killed animals. At least six people were injured. In Barton County, Mo., trees and power lines also were knocked down.

In Liberal, Mo., a house was blown into the road by a tornado, and a woman and three children were injured near Nevada, Mo., when a tornado overturned their mobile home.

Severe thunderstorms also swept across Oklahoma, flooding streets and knocking out power lines. Eastern Oklahoma City reported 1¾ inches of rain in 30 minutes and police said the hard peppery rain that came down in spurts" hit the town of Waurika.

Cars stalled in flooded streets in Norman, Okla., where 1.73 inches fell Wednesday, most of it in two hours.

As the snowstorm began heading north and east, winter-storm warnings were issued today for the northern Rockies and parts of South Dakota, Montana and Wyoming. Storm watches were posted for parts of North and South Dakota and northwestern Nebraska.

At least 13 people have been killed and five are missing in the storms since Tuesday. Nine were killed in California, two in Arizona, one in Utah and one in Alabama. Five people were missing in California, and at least 34 were injured in storm-related traffic accidents in Utah.

Up to 4 feet of snow fell on Colorado's mountains Wednesday.

that it was hearsay and should not be used to conclude finding of fact. Reed also wanted to strike the body of the letter, leaving only the letterhead to show the letter was sent.

But Gordon Hardin, THFC hearing officer, ruled that the letter be admitted to show that Branson received this "advice" on the long-range plan from Swett in the form of a letter.

Hardin asked Branson if the letter was maintained in the hospital's planning files.

"Yes," replied Branson.

"Was there any verbal discussion (between Swett and Branson) about the letter?" Hardin asked.

"We conceptualized about the long-range plan," Branson said, adding that he could not "remember what was verbalized...The letter was never entered into the long-range plan process."

Another informal "planning document" entered as an exhibit was a scribbled interpretation by Branson of a telephone conversation with "someone" at the Permian Basin Health Systems Agency.

Pickens showed Branson the penciled sheet of notebook paper, asking if the note was a result of a Sept. 8, 1982, telephone conversation with Harley Reeves, director of the PBHSA. Branson said he couldn't remember with whom he had talked, but that it was a conversation with someone at the HSA. Apparently, the notes included that there is a net need in Midland of five new medical/surgical beds and 18 obstetric beds by 1987.

In other testimony, Branson said that the 77-bed figure was based on the Tri-Brook recommendation.

Hardin asked Branson for his opinion on MMH's optimum number of beds. Branson said: "In my opinion, after reading several articles...350-400 beds could fit on the site, but that was a recommendation."

In response to questions by Reed, Branson said bed need from the Permian Basin Cancer Therapy Center, the increasing number of births and "sick" babies, are the three facets that make MMH's application unique in requesting expansion.

Branson also was questioned by Pickens on four bound volumes of the MMH governing boards' meeting minutes.

In the remainder of the hearing, Pickens began cross-examination of Davis, TriBrook member and MMH's bed need expert. Testimony included a summary of the procedure leading to the 77-bed figure for the MMH proposed expansion.

Although the cross-examination/testimony was expected to conclude by noon today, attorneys for both hospitals said it may extend to late afternoon or possibly Friday.

Accused spy has 'bewildering' career

By CHARLES CAMPBELL

TORONTO (AP) — Hugh George Hambleton's career has followed a bewildering path to the London courtroom where he is being tried on charges of spying for the Soviet Union. The defense claims he was a double agent working for France and Canada.

The 60-year-old professor served in the French Resistance in World War II, published a book on 16th century Spanish monetary ideas, worked for NATO in the late 1950s and spent most of the past 20 years teaching quietly in Quebec City.

For the past three years — since the Royal Canadian Mounted Police seized radio equipment and Soviet codebooks from his mother's home — Hambleton has cheerfully admitted to any journalist who asked that he has often slipped documents and photographs to men he thinks are Soviet agents.

He maintained publicly that all the information he passed was innocent, and Canadian authorities concluded in May 1980 that they did not have enough evidence to charge him under Canada's Official Secrets Act.

But British officials jailed Hambleton as soon as he set foot in England last summer to do research on Spain's King Alfonso XIII. The prosecution says Hambleton made a detailed confession — including an admission that he leaked more than 80 top-secret NATO documents to Soviet agents.

"I don't think of myself as a spy," Hambleton said in one of many interviews he gave after being publicly identified as a suspected spy in November 1979.

He said he never accepted payments from the Soviets, never passed on any secrets and only engaged in stealth to humor the people he was dealing with.

"The Russians are rather secretive about the way they do things," Hambleton said in a 1979 interview. "One sort of has to go along."

The son of a Canadian journalist, Hambleton was born in Ottawa on May 4, 1922. He has told reporters he served with the Free French in North Africa, the Resistance in Alsace and the Canadian Intelligence Corps in occupied Germany.

After the war, Hambleton studied at the University of Ottawa, the University of the Americas in Mexico and the Sorbonne in Paris before earning his doctorate at the University of London in 1964.

Who's Who says Hambleton is the author of a book on the petroleum industry in Latin America and another — in French — titled "Monetary Ideas in Spain from the Sixteenth to the Beginning of the Nineteenth Centuries."

He married an Italian-born woman. The couple had two sons and a daughter, and are now divorced.

News reports three years ago charged that Hambleton had been recruited to a spy ring by one Lijana Galeva and paid $31,000. The professor denied the accusations, describing Ms. Galeva as his "girlfriend," a former student at the University of Belgrade to whom he lent several thousand dollars when she was down and out in Rome.

From 1956-61, the period being focused on at the trial, Hambleton worked in NATO's economic directorate in Paris.

Since 1964, he has been a professor at Laval University in Quebec City. The head of the economics department, Gerald Leblanc, said Tuesday that Hambleton's wide-ranging expertise made him unusually valuable.

"For sure we're going to miss him because he is hard to replace," Leblanc said. The school had to hire four professors to teach the courses Hambleton was to have offered in the 1982-83 school year.

Leblanc said Hambleton is on a six-month unpaid leave of absence.

The uproar caused in Canada in November 1979 by the disclosure that Hambleton was suspected of spying was renewed six months later when the government said there would be no prosecution.

Bomb explodes at Colombian church

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP — A bomb explosion wounded one person and caused heavy damage outside a Mormon church in Bogota today, 30 hours before President Reagan was to arrive in the Colombian capital.

The church is in a government-built apartment area named Kennedy City. President John F. Kennedy inaugurated the housing complex in 1960. Kennedy had been the only U.S. president to visit Colombia.

The bomb went off at 6:30 a.m. The explosion wounded a guard. A police officer said there was heavy damage. The policeman, asking to remain anonymous, declined to give further details about the bombing.

Colombia's Communist Party said there would be an anti-Reagan demonstration today at a small plaza about eight blocks from the big Plaza Bolivar where Reagan will lay a wreath Friday at the statue of Latin American liberator Simon Bolivar.

Many walls, especially in southern Bogota where a majority of the capital's poor live, bear painted slogans of "Reagan Keep Out," "Reagan Murderer," and "Out With Reagan, Latin America's Enemy."

Waiting to file may cost

EDITOR'S NOTE: It's almost midnight, but instead of the stillness of a normal April night, there are hundreds of people lined up in cars, queuing their way up to the post office. Yes, the income tax deadline is at hand again, and there's a mad scramble to file in time. But even if these procrastinators beat the deadline, they may be cheating themselves in the long run. The following article explains how that could happen.

By JIMMY THORNTON
Copley News Service

Ed Blitz is a tax accountant, a CPA who has been bailing out taxpayers for more than 15 years. He warns that if you're waiting until the last minute to prepare your taxes, you may be costing yourself a significant sum of money. Blitz offers some advice that just might save you money on your 1982 income taxes.

Looking at your tax situation right now is particularly apropos this year since Congress has changed the laws to get more taxes from ordinary people.

"If you wait until April, it is too late to do anything about your taxes," he said, adding that you must plan your finances throughout the year and review your situation often. Blitz is president of Blitz and Cunningham, an accountancy corporation in San Diego, Calif.

If you plan ahead, you can often arrange or rearrange your finances so you reduce your tax burden.

Blitz volunteered to share other tax advice and the following random suggestions may apply to you.

PLAIN-WRAP tax shelter — This year, taxpayers can sock away $2,000 for retirement in an IRA (ask your banker or other financial adviser) and the money is exempt from current taxes. IRA, sometimes pronounced "eye-ra," is short for Individual Retirement Account. A husband and wife could stash $4,000, or any sum up to that limit.

The primary disadvantage is you can't use the money until retirement, at which time it is taxable income (but you are drawing less income when you retire and are in a smaller tax bracket, where the percentage of tax on each income dollar is less). And if you withdraw early, you will be taxed on the money at going rates and have to pay an early withdrawal penalty.

Say a working person and spouse have a joint income of about $40,000. That could easily put a large bulk of their income in the 43 percent tax bracket.

If they can afford to put $4,000 in an IRA, they will reduce their tax bill by $1,720 (this assumes they have other deductions like mortgage interest, taxes, personal exemptions and so on).

Blitz said they also earn interest on the savings and the IRS can't touch it because it goes back into the account and is exempt until withdrawn.

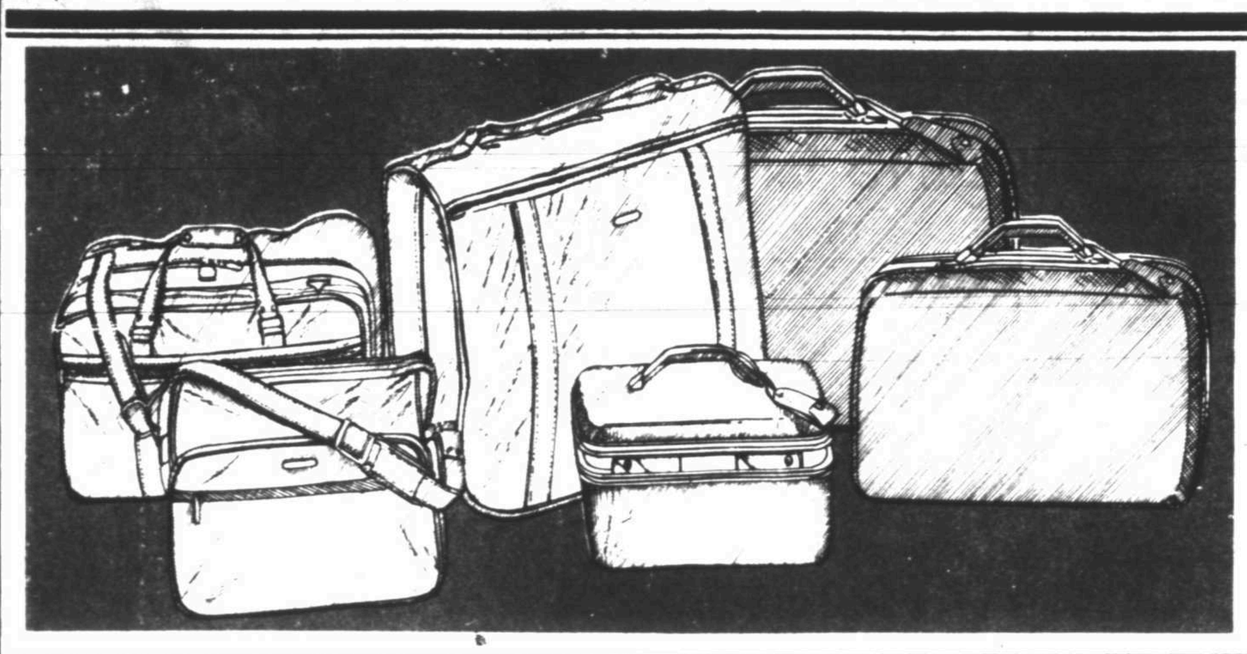

That couple would likely retire at a much lower income and might possibly fall in a 20 percent tax bracket. So the money sheltered from the 43 percent bite is taxed at only 20 cents on the dollar — as it is drawn from the account as income.

The IRA and other retirement plans became available to the public when Congress changed the tax laws affecting this year. Previously the retirement funds were reserved for the self-employed and other people not covered by a company retirement plan. New rules drawn up by Congress eliminated the restriction and made the accounts available to practically anyone earning an income.

MEDICAL expenses — If you have a lot of medical expenses, pay your bills this year if possible. Under present law, you can deduct up to $150 for medical insurance payments made in 1982, plus certain expenses — like doctor and hospital bills — that exceed 3 percent of your adjusted gross income.

(When you fill out your tax forms, you total all income, which is the adjusted gross income. Then you multiply that by 3 percent. Next you total all medical expenses. You subtract that figure from the 3 percent sum and anything over 3 percent is deducted as medical expenses.)

Many people affected by the change are unaware that Congress rewrote the rules for next year. Under the new tax law, you will no longer be able to deduct the flat $150 for insurance after this year. Starting with 1983 income, the sum must be included in expenses for overall medical treatment. So, in the preceding example where a couple's income was in the 43 percent tax bracket, the couple would lose $64.50 — that's how much more they would be paying in higher taxes.

Also in 1983, the deductible limit will be raised to 5 percent. That means you must have medical expenses — which include insurance payments — that exceed 5 percent of your adjusted gross income. So you can save by paying all the medical bills you can before Dec. 31.

STOCKS and bonds — You still have time to take action to reduce your tax on profitable issues.

For example, some of your stocks or bonds may have gained significantly in the recent bull market. However, you may have a few duds that you will lose on if sold now. By selling now and taking your losses on issues that were losers anyway, you can stand your losses next to your gains and cut the tax on the resulting reduced earnings.

However, in some instances you may find it's better to hold off on some issues. You have to look ahead at your stocks' future. If you expect a whopping gain in years to come, you may decide to hang on to the losers until then.

STUDENT money — If you have a student in college, you can benefit by giving him or her up to $10,000 without having to file a gift-tax return (up to $10,000 per person, if you have more than one).

When you give a child money, he or she does not have to pay taxes on it (you do that when you file your 1040 and related schedules). If the child invests the money — in a savings account, for instance — only the interest, or earnings, is taxed.

Blitz said this is a way of shifting part of your income from, say, a 43 percent tax bracket to a much lower bracket of perhaps 20 percent. That is, without the shift, any interest or other earnings of the money will be taxed at the higher rate.

BAD DEBTS — You cannot wait until the last minute to use a bad debt (money someone owes you) as a tax deduction. Blitz said an unpaid debt is a deduction. However, the IRS requires that before it can be written off, you must be able to prove that you made an effort to collect it. So waiting until April to make that decision would be too late.

Blitz suggested sending dunning letters by either registered or certified mail. In either case, get and keep a receipt proving the debtor got your bill. Of course, keep a copy of the letter, too.

Put tax system to work

Copley News Service

Tax accountant Ed Blitz touched on a wide range of subjects as he discussed the tax system and how you can make it work for you:

TAX PREPARERS — Blitz said tax preparers like H&R Block, those you see at department stores and independents listed in the Yellow Pages can handle a variety of tax returns. Both CPAs and lawyers can help in more sophisticated cases. If you are considering either a CPA or an attorney, note that the advantage of a CPA is that he will fill out the forms while most attorneys will advise you but leave the paperwork to you.

If you challenge a ruling before the tax court, you will probably need a lawyer. CPAs can represent you before the IRS up to but not including the tax court, Blitz said. Always discuss fees before you commit yourself.

ADVANTAGE of counsel — Having a tax consultant on call has another advantage, Blitz said. He or she can assist you in arranging your finances so that you are entitled to every tax deduction available to you. It's your right to use them.

A PLOY with auditors — If you are audited, either you or your CPA can report to the IRS office for the session, which isn't as taxing as many people fear. Blitz prefers not to accompany a client, although he does on occasion. That's because the auditor will direct all queries to the client as if the counsel weren't there.

Having your accountant or attorney go for you has a distinct advantage in allowing this ploy — the auditor will ask the representative a question and he has the advantage of saying, "I'll have to get back to my client on that." Unless the item in question is vital, the auditor is likely to forget it and go on to the next question, Blitz said. Auditors are under a good deal of pressure to settle the account without delay or extended inquiry.

SCARED straight? — Returns normally are audited within 18 months after they are filed. If you are to be audited, you will receive a notice. It explains exactly what is expected of you. You must phone a number listed in the notice and make an appointment. In one audit, a person whose files were in storage delayed the audit for a month, which gave him ample time to prepare his case.

The notice normally lists exactly what areas are being questioned. Seldom is the whole return reviewed. For example, notations will indicate that an auditor is to examine items including uniform expenses, business mileage expenses, professional publications and so on. You need only take records related to the questions. For example, if you have uniform receipts, the auditor will ask to see them, ask you why you are claiming them and she or he will tally them to see if you added correctly.

Also, the date on the receipts will be examined. If you are using canceled checks as receipts, note that auditors will routinely examine both sides of the check. If you are claiming a medical expense on the front but the check was cashed by a department store on the back, you'll have some explaining to do.

DEAR DIARY, uhhhh — Blitz said auditors are usually impressed with business-expense diaries. For example, you may buy a date calendar and each day make notes of expenses. Attach receipts. One type of entry requires special attention. Say you are declaring all the business lunches or dinners you had during the year (include the mileage to and from them).

You must list the date, name of restaurant, name of person treated, the nature of the business and the amount of the restaurant tab.

New Mexican president inaugurated

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Miguel de la Madrid opened his six-year term as Mexico's president by promising major economic changes and "new techniques" to fight widespread government graft.

De la Madrid, 47, spoke almost exclusively about domestic problems during an inaugural address Wednesday before Congress, transmitted live throughout the nation of 70 million.

The Harvard-educated economist replaced Jose Lopez Portillo, 62, who led the nation in its years of oil-powered development only to acknowledge he drove it too deeply into debt.

The new president indicated Mexicans could expect quick elimination of chaotic exchange controls for valuing the Mexican peso that forced businessmen to turn to the black market for increasingly expensive dollars.

Iraq's embassy in Thailand bombed

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — A powerful explosion shattered the Iraq Consulate in Bangkok today, killing a Thai bomb disposal expert and injuring seven other policemen, police said.

Authorities said they received a telephone call warning that a bomb had been planted at the consulate, near Bangkok's Chinatown area, and dispatched a bomb disposal unit to the mission.

They said the bomb squad, led by police Maj. Surat Sumanat was defusing the bomb when it exploded, killing the major and injuring seven of his colleagues. No other injuries were reported.

Chinese resent birth control efforts

PEKING (AP) — State Counselor Bo Yibo says women candidates fared poorly in recent local elections because people resented their efforts to enforce birth control. Most family planning workers in this nation of 1 billion are women.

Without family planning efforts over the last 10 years, China's population would be 1.1 billion, Bo wrote in the Chinese periodical Health News.

People can never be rich in material things if there are too many people needing a slice of China's economic pie, said Bo, whose rank is equivalent to vice premier.

Soviet ambassador to Romania dies

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — Soviet Ambassador Vasili I. Drozhdenko, dean of the diplomatic corps in the Romanian capital and a member of the Soviet Communist Party Central Committee, has died here. He was 58.

Informed sources said Drozhdenko died on Tuesday, apparently of a heart attack. He had represented the Soviet Union here since 1971.

Polish government bans actors' union

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — The government banned the rebellious actors' union in a move aimed at crushing the last remaining strike under martial law and cementing official control over Poland's once independent and pioneering theater.

The crackdown came Wednesday, two days after Poland's Roman Catholic primate, Archbishop Jozef Glemp, urged the actors to return to work in a surprise speech underlining the thaw in church-state relations.

The Actors' Guild has been boycotting the state radio and television services since martial law was proclaimed last Dec. 13.

U.S. jet crashes in West Germany

HAHN, West Germany (AP) — A U.S. Air Force F-16 jet crashed on landing near its West German base, but the pilot ejected safely with no injuries, the Air Force said today.

"The aircraft crashed in a wooded area and there was no collateral damage," the brief statement said.

Pilot 1st Lt. Rickie A. French, 23, of Lakeland, Fla., is assigned to the 50th Tactical Fighter Wing at Hahn Air Force Base, the statement said.

Zaire buys military aid from Israel

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Zaire's President Mobutu Sese Seku was quoted today as saying he bought $8 million worth of military aid from Israel to strengthen his elite presidential guard.

In an interview with Israel's Maariv newspaper, Mobutu was quoted as saying he refused Israel's offer of Soviet-made weapons captured from Syria and the Palestine Liberation Organization in Lebanon, "because I am not prepared to rebuild my army from the suffering of the Palestinian people."

NATO wants more defense spending

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — The Western alliance wants to widen defense spending to counter Soviet strength, but military leaders concede the first battle will be with their nations' recession-strapped budgets.

U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger suggested Wednesday the Allied countries could get more defense for their dollars by concentrating on improving conventional defenses with high-technology weaponry, a U.S. official said.

Weinberger and 14 NATO defense ministers planned to end their four-day strategy session today with a written commitment to beef up the defenses of Europe.

The leaders also prepared to call on new Soviet President Yuri V. Andropov to signal a thaw in East-West relations by making concessions at long-running negotiations to reduce conventional and nuclear forces in Europe.

NATO's highest-ranking military men Wednesday acknowledged that efforts to close a perceived gap in Soviet and NATO military strength were hampered by lack of cash.

Supreme Allied Commander Gen. Bernard W. Rogers told a private meeting of ministers he was concerned about the ability of NATO nations to meet an existing commitment to modernize conventional forces over the next six years, an official on Rogers' staff reported.

Canadian Adm. Robert H. Falls, chairman of NATO's committee of military advisers, labeled the current situation a "depression" and expressed hopes an economic turnaround would free more funds for defense.

The North Atlantic Treaty Organization countries pledged in 1978 to increase defense spending 3 percent a year beyond inflation. But NATO projections for 1982, issued Wednesday, showed how difficult a time governments are having financially.

No report on the 3 percent goal was given, but the projections said only in Britain, Norway, Turkey, Italy, the United States and Canada would the ratio of defense spending to gross national product exceed 1981 levels.

The ratio in West Germany, Luxembourg, the Netherlands will remain at last year's level, while the level in France, Greece and Portugal will go down.

Figures for Denmark, Spain and Iceland were not available.

A senior U.S. defense official who asked not to be identified said Weinberger told the ministers in a private session that scientific know-how could improve conventional defenses at potentially lower cost.

The new high-tech weapons also could do work now assigned to nuclear weapons, substituting greater accuracy and homing ability for what Falls called the "big bang," of atomic weapons.

"The idea is not to make weapons more powerful and destructive, but to make them more accuarate," Falls said.

Falls said the new non-nuclear superweapons actually could make costs go up, but he said, "If we're going to spend millions of dollars we may as well spend it on the kinds of things that will contribute the most."

German Defense Minister Manfred Woerner said he and the other representatives endorsed the high technology concept, but no specific plans or timetables for acquiring the new electronic superweapons were made.

Woerner, Weinberger and Falls cautioned that any switch in tactics toward sophisticated non-nuclear weapons would not change NATO doctrine relying on strategic nuclear forces, like the proposed MX-missile system, as the primary deterrent to war with the Soviets.

Under the long-standing NATO doctrine of flexible response, the Soviet Union has been warned that it would always face the possibility of being attacked by nuclear missiles or bombs, if it launched a conventional attack.

After 43 years, Socialist premier sworn in Spain

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Felipe Gonzalez took office today as the first Socialist premier in 43 years, beginning a "time of change" designed to revamp the economy by creating jobs for nearly a million Spaniards.

The 40-year-old Socialist Party leader also plans to call for referendums on Spain's membership in NATO and renegotiation on U.S. use of Spanish military bases.

King Juan Carlos administered the oath of office to Gonzalez at Zarzuela palace today.

Spain's first Socialist-majority Parliament gave the former labor lawyer its confirmation for a four-year term after opposition legislators questioned him through the night about his proposals on Spain's 6-month-old membership in NATO and U.S. use of military bases.

Gonzalez told legislators that Spain would not become integrated into the military structure of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

"The government is ready to freeze Spain's entry into NATO from the minute it takes office and maintains its promise to call a referendum," Gonzalez said.

"In no case will we accept that a foreign admiral can order a Spanish admiral around on Spanish territory."

He didn't set a date for the referendum.

Manuel Fraga Iribane, former cabinet minister under late Gen. Francisco Franco and head of the conservative opposition, said the new premier's plans are "so bad for the West's tranquility and also the first success for Mr. (Soviet President Yuri) Andropov."

The 7½-hour debate ended shortly after midnight (6 p.m. EST Wednesday) when the 350-seat lower house of Parliament elected Gonzalez by a vote of 207-116 with 21 abstentions.

Five deputies were absent. Parliamentary President Gregorio Peces-Darba did not vote.

Gonzalez' victory had been expected since his party holds an absolute majority in the legislature for the first time ever, with 202 seats. A simple majority — 176 votes — is needed to designate a new head of government.

The vote was required by the 1978 constitution re-establishing parliamentary democracy after Franco's death in 1975 ended almost 40 years of dictatorship.

Gonzalez is the fourth post-Franco premier.

In an open address to his rightist opponents, Gonzalez declared during the last days of his campaign: "Spain is a democracy now. They should realize that if in four years they don't like what we've done, then they can get together and vote us out. That's how they do it in the rest of Western Europe."

Gonzalez began his political career as a clandestine member of the then-outlawed Socialist Party, which swept to victory in general elections Oct. 28 with 10 million votes.

He has promised to cut the nation's 15 percent inflation rate and create 800,000 jobs over the next four years. Two million people — 16 percent of Spain's workforce — are unemployed.

Priority also will be given to Spain's relations with European neighbors, particularly Portugal and France, as well as with North Africa and Latin America, Gonzalez said.

He also has proposed getting Gibraltar back from Britain through negotiations, and said he hoped Spain would join the 10-nation European Common Market.

Kennedy's withdrawal from race could boost labor's ambitions

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON — Although many union leaders are disappointed by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's withdrawal from the 1984 campaign, the move could boost organized labor's ambition to play a major role in determining who wins the Democratic presidential nomination.

With Kennedy out of the race, Democratic aspirants are certain to step up their effort to win labor support.

AFL-CIO president Lane Kirkland has scheduled a December 1983 meeting of the leaders of some 100 unions to consider endorsing someone for the Democratic nomination.

An endorsement would require a two-thirds majority. But many Democratic politicians and labor leaders thought there was little chance anyone could get that approval so long as Kennedy and former Vice President Walter F. Mondale were in the race, both commanding significant labor support.

It may be a signal of trouble ahead for Mondale that the initial reaction of labor leaders to Kennedy's withdrawal fell far short of a strong tide toward the former vice president.

Many of the union presidents who will take part in the December 1983 meeting sounded more interested in looking at the rest of the field than in jumping on board a Mondale bandwagon.

"This certainly will be a boost for Mondale, but it's kind of early to speculate," said John Joyce, president of the bricklayers union and co-chairman of the Democratic Party's labor council.

"We're disappointed," said Joyce, an ardent Kennedy supporter.

Glenn Watts, president of the Communications Workers of America and co-chairman with Joyce of the party labor council, said, "Everyone is going to look at each one of the candidates very carefully."

Gerald F. McEntee, president of the million-member American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, said Kennedy's decision "helps not just Mondale, but helps others as well. How these potential candidates comport themselves over the next 10 months will be critically important."

Some labor leaders, who asked not to be identified, expressed interest in Ohio Sen. John Glenn as an alternative to Mondale.

But with a more conservative record on domestic issues than Mondale, Glenn could have problems with labor unless he can convince union leaders that he is the Democrats' best bet to defeat Ronald Reagan in 1984. In 1978 Glenn voted against legislation sought by labor which would have allowed a single striking union to shut down a construction project, by making it legal for other unions to honor its picket lines.

Also being mentioned is California Sen. Alan Cranston, who has strong liberal credentials.

Long before Kennedy's withdrawal, Mondale was courting labor support by telling union audiences that it was time for the United States to toughen its stand in trade negotiations with other nations, particularly Japan.

"I believe in international competition, but I'm not a sucker," Mondale told a steelworkers convention.

He jumped ahead of the rest of the Democratic field in declaring his support of so-called domestic content legislation that would require substantial fractions of imported cars to be built in the United States.

William Winpisinger, head of the machinists union and a leader of the left-wing of the labor movement, said he feared Kennedy's withdrawal would allow other union leaders "to drift to the right because there's no one like Kennedy to keep them honest."

An Analysis

Among the possible candidates for the 1984 Democratic presidential nomination still in the running following Ted Kennedy's announcement that he won't run are, from left, Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado, Sen. Alan Cranston of California, former Vice-President Walter Mondale, Sen. Ernest Hollings of South Carolina and Sen. John Glenn of Ohio.

Candidates seeking Kennedy's support

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy had hardly finished announcing he wouldn't run for president before Alan Cranston was on the telephone. The scramble among Democratic presidential hopefuls for support from the Kennedy camp was on.

Cranston, the Senate Democratic whip from California who is expected to announce his candidacy in January, said he called a number of Kennedy backers and "some of them said they were ready to go."

In the hours after Kennedy, D-Mass., announced Wednesday that he would not seek the Democratic presidential nomination, potential candidates reacted with praise for Kennedy and hope for themselves.

Rep. Morris K. Udall, D-Ariz., who ran unsuccessfully in 1976, said Kennedy's decision "forces everyone, including myself, to re-evaluate what role I might play." He said he would consider over the next few weeks whether to become an active candidate.

Former Vice President Walter F. Mondale said, "Sen. Kennedy has made a difficult and courageous decision. Every Democrat is indebted to him for the responsibility he has shown in making his intentions public at this early date."

Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, said: "Any time someone ahead of you in the polls drops out, that's a plus. We'll look at it and see how it affects us. Who knows?"

Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., said Kennedy's announcement "will have no effect on my decision whether to run for president. My decision will continue to be based on what I can offer the nation as a candidate, not on who my competition would be."

Sen. Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., who has a presidential exploratory committee in the field, said Kennedy's decision "shows that the process is extremely open."

Rep. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, said the Massachusetts senator's withdrawal "creates quite a vacuum" in Iowa, which holds the first presidential nominating caucuses. He said it put Mondale "in a favored position" to win Iowa's delegates.

Cranston said the race is "wide open', with Mondale the frontrunner, followed by Glenn. Behind them, he said, the "principal contest" is between himself and Hart.

Both Mondale, who recently campaigned for Kennedy's re-election in Massachusetts, and Sen. Paul Tsongas, D-Mass., who told reporters he talked about the presidential race with Kennedy just a few days ago, said the decision came as a surprise.

"I would have bet my bottom dollar he would have run in 1984," said Tsongas.

Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., also said he was taken by surprise.

Senators generally accepted Kennedy's statement that his decision was based on concern for his family and not on doubt that he could win.

"We misunderstood or underevaluated the personal pressures," said Tsongas.

Democrats establish convention guidelines

The guidelines were being discussed today at a meeting of the Compliance Review Commission, a party group charged with reviewing state delegate selection plans and determining if they comform with party rules adopted last spring.

The work of the 17-member commission, headed by Nancy Pelosi of California, will be watched closely by the aspirants for the presidential nomination.

That scrutiny was likely to be intensified by the scramble set off Wednesday by Kennedy's declaration that he would neither seek the nomination nor accept a draft.

Kennedy was the early front-runner, a role now expected to be assumed by former Vice President Walter F. Mondale or Ohio Sen. John Glenn.

But delegate selection rules are one of the key battlegrounds in any nomination fight. Knowledge of those rules and how to exploit them can be an important factor, particularly if the battle is close or undecided when the convention convenes.

Reagan mixing signals?

By PEGGY SIMPSON
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — President Reagan took the advice of his top Republican congressional leaders and decided against trying to accelerate next July's 10 percent tax cut to January.

At the same time, the president flatly rejected a Democratic proposal for a $5 billion job-creating measure.

The key goal now will be to "protect the cuts that are already in the law, the third year of the tax bill and indexing," Reagan said, adding that his GOP leaders had warned him Democrats would try to eliminate both if given a chance.

Only two weeks ago, Reagan said he favored the acceleration as a needed "stimulus" to the economy.

AFTER WHAT was described as an "energetic" and "spirited" tax debate that dominated today's hour-long meeting with 20 congressional leaders, however, Reagan told them, "I don't exactly see all the enthusiasm here for advancing the tax cut."

The major congressional advocates of the tax-cut speedup were Reps. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., and Trent Lott, R-Miss. Virtually the entire top GOP leadership opposed it for two reasons: that it would add $14 billion to the already fearsome $150 billion deficit and could send interest rates up again and that it would give Democrats an opening to put an income ceiling on the tax cut and try to prevent the tax indexing provision from becoming law in 1985.

IN AN IMPROMPTU news conference after the meeting, Reagan said he had signed off on the 5-cent-a-gallon gasoline tax increase to underwrite $5.5 billion in roads-and-bridge repair, sent Congress a revised version of his long-awaited urban enterprise zone plan and said he would oppose an additional $5 billion job creation bill proposed yesterday by the congressional Democratic leadership.

The president had little option but to go along with the gasoline tax after Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker and House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill last week forged a bipartisan agreement to push it through the three-week lame duck session that began yesterday.

But Reagan said the additional Democratic plan "would be self-defeating" and said "by the time they got it into place it would ignore all the things" that have improved in the economy.

SOME KEY GOP Republicans, notably Rep. Silvio Conte, R-Mass., ranking Republican on the House Appropriations Committee, said he would support the Democratic plan no matter what Reagan said "because the people have suffered long enough."

While not agreeing totally with Conte, Baker said after today's White House meeting he thought the schedule was too crowded in the lame duck session for a second jobs bill — but come January, if the economy had not improved, "I'm not going to close my mind to any (job-creating) proposal, Democratic or Republican."

House GOP Leader Bob Michel said "in three weeks' time, surely the president is not going to buy this (the Democratic plan). We want something that can pass, that we can get signed into law" and he said only the gasoline tax increase has that potential.

Michel did not rule out O'Neill's ability to get some GOP support for the Democratic initiative this month, saying, "Tip's strategy might be to try a couple of these job-creating bills, get defeated, then revive them in the new Congress to say 'see what 26 new Democrats can do.'"

Japanese crime rings move west

By R.E. THOMPSON
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Attorney General William French Smith revealed this week the United States has "substantial evidence" that Japanese organized crime is moving surreptitiously into Hawaii and Western states in a manner reminiscent of the Mafia's infiltration of America.

Japanese criminals, he said, are buying into legitimate businesses, dealing in drugs, using tourism as a cover and involving themselves in "all the activities of organized crime."

"We have substantial evidence that they are here," Smith declared.

The problem is most acute in Hawaii, he explained, but added that it also is evident "on the West Coast and beyond." The drugs involved, he said, are amphetamines.

The cabinet officer, who stopped in Japan on his recent round-the-world trip to enlist the aid of other nations in the curtailment of drug traffic, said one of the weapons the United States hopes to invoke in fighting the criminals is a proposed mutual assistance treaty with Japan.

He explained that he discussed such a treaty with Japanese leaders and anticipates that negotiations between the two nations will begin soon.

"We signed an extradition treaty with Japan in 1980 and that is working quite well," said Smith, adding that a mutual assistance treaty is necessary now because "it is important to us that we get on top of that (organized crime) problem."

Noting that "the Mafia got a foothold before we knew it", the attorney general said the government's challenge is to prevent Japanese organized crime from establishing a similar foothold.

"The drug problem," Smith said at a breakfast with reporters, "is not a domestic problem, but an international problem."

Smith, who was President Reagan's personal lawyer before becoming attorney general, pointed out that Japan has solved the domestic problem it had with the sale and use of heroin.

"They no longer have it," he said, explaining that the problem was eliminated through heavy penalties for drug usage and through educational programs.

Smith said the "number one crime problem in the United States is drugs — particularly in connection with organized crime."

Asked about drug use in the entertainment business, Smith, a former Hollywood lawyer, said "that is particularly unfortunate...because those people are role models for the young."

"Ultimately," he added, "the solution to the whole problem is to eliminate demand...and the answer has to be education."

Smith has greatly expanded the role of the Federal Bureau of Investigation in the fight against narcotics, with the assignment of 1200 agents to that task. Asked if those were enough agents to handle the jobs, he said, "You never have enough."

She'll be 'big wheel'

CLEVELAND (AP) — If the self-styled queen of the hubcaps has her way, she'll become a big wheel in the furniture and accessories business.

Marilyn Pfleger figures she has a 40,000-hubcap inventory, "give or take a few thousand."

But Mrs. Pfleger said the prospect of just selling wheel covers lacked adventure. So she began creating hubcap fashions for beds, toilet seats, clocks and birdhouses.

The stainless steel bed, which has a price tag of $5,000, is festooned with hubcaps around the bottom and on the headboard. A nightstand with wheel cover motif is offered as an accessory.

The ideas aren't big sellers yet, but she blames that on a lack of capital.

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Singer Andy Williams, director Jean-Luc Godard and auto racing's Bobby Allison celebrate this birthday with you. The gifts you receive in 1983 will come in various sizes but they will all play a positive role in shaping your destiny. Make the most of new opportunities. You gain special inspiration from a child in spring. Greater career success could depend on your switching to another job or field. Do not close any doors in a hurry. Romance will be rewarding if you can refrain from pushing too hard. Do not expect mate to make a commitment you have not yet made.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): An unexpected need to travel makes this a busy day. Changing your weekend plans will not be too difficult. Your enthusiasm is an asset.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Making a phone call at the right moment advances your career. Your intuition is on target. Mate helps you make the correct decision about a money matter.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A business storm hovers over you today. It is probably just a tempest in a teapot. Do not take threats seriously. Control your impatience with a loved one.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Career ambitions may be temporarily stalled. Sit tight and the right opportunity will appear. Take advantage of someone's offer to help.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Be wary of a financial deal where someone refuses to show you the books. It could be a sham. An old friend's endorsement opens important doors for you.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Although frustrations arise at place of employment, the promise of a weekend with your loved one makes everything fine.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Take matters into your own hands today or you will have to work at home this weekend. Family members already feel neglected.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your romantic dissatisfaction may stem from your being attracted to the wrong person. Relief has finally arrived after a long period of financial problems.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Rearrange your schedule so that others have a chance to go Christmas shopping. Anything having to do with communications is lucky for you now.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Romance results when you meet someone through mutual friends. Others try to use your private papers to advance their careers. Stop them and you win a new leadership position.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Concern for a loved one may lead you to change your plans at the last minute. Old-fashioned methods need to be reevaluated. Let your intuition be your guide.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): There could be hidden reasons for a friend or co-worker's actions. Try to get to the bottom of things. You are going to win a financial struggle soon.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	2 ♠
3 ♡	Pass	4 ♡	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Ten of ♠

Rubber bridge and duplicate are worlds apart. In the latter, you have to score as well or better than the other pairs who will be playing the same cards you do. In rubber bridge, making your contract is paramount.

The bidding was short and accurate. North was close to making a move over South's jump to three hearts, but caution prevailed and he was content with a simple raise to game.

West led the ten of clubs, and the catastrophe was soon over. South, an experienced duplicate player, won the ace of clubs and led a diamond to the jack preparatory to ruffing the trump finesse. He never did get to take it.

East ruffed the diamond and returned a low club. Fortunately for the defenders, West held the nine of clubs. That served as an entry to give his partner a second diamond ruff and to rub salt into the wound. West was able to overruff the third round of clubs with the king of trumps and give partner the third diamond ruff for down two. Very unfortunate, but only if you are playing duplicate.

The rubber bridge aficionado has no problem with the hand. He wins the ace of clubs and immediately bashes out ace of hearts and another. The defenders can take a club trick and one diamond ruff in addition to the king of trumps, but that is all for the defense. Declarer will get to discard his losing spade on the fourth diamond.

At duplicate, obviously, declarer cannot afford the safe line. He would look very silly if he made ten or eleven tricks when twelve were available by simply crossing to dummy and picking up the king of trumps via a finesse. Since that is what the rest of the field would be doing, any declarer who played safe would get a terrible score.

San Francisco may institute first benefits package for live-in lovers

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — City supervisors have recommended giving health benefits to unmarried lovers of municipal workers — a proposal initiated by homosexuals who say they are cheated out of benefits because they aren't allowed to marry.

Critics of the plan, however, complain it discriminates against family relationships by denying benefits to blood relatives such as brothers and sisters.

The Board of Supervisors voted 8-3 earlier this week to let live-ins "unrelated by blood" who share "the necessities of life" enjoy the same benefits as spouses. The measure is a recommendation to the city health trustees, who previously have disapproved of such a proposal.

Mayor Dianne Feinstein has until Dec. 9 to sign the measure, described as unprecedented for a major American city. If she does, it would go to the seven-member health board. Her spokesman, Tom Eastham, said she had no comment.

To become eligible for the benefits, unmarried couples — either homosexual or heterosexual — would have to file a sworn statement saying they are "each other's principal domestic partner."

The city now pays for the health insurance of municipal workers. The workers pay for coverage of dependents.

The proposal also would let workers take time off for the funeral of live-in lovers and allow visits in the city jail or hospital intensive care units, where only spouses are now allowed.

The supervisors had tentatively approved the plan by the same vote last week.

"It's very significant to recognize relationships outside the institution of marriage," said Gwenn Craig, president of the Harvey Milk Gay Democratic Club, an organization named for the city's first supervisor who openly admitted being a homosexual.

"People can be dependent on each other...who may not be married or cannot be married," said Ms. Craig, an administrative assistant to the sheriff.

The proposal had symbolic value in saying "our relationships are just as valid," she said.

Harry Britt, the city's only openly homosexual supervisor, said the proposal is "clearly historic legislation that recognizes changing patterns in family life in our society and also recognizes the fundamental principle that a worker is entitled to protect his or her loved ones and that it's none of the state's business to decide who should love whom."

Britt said, "The initiative is coming from the gay community. We are denied the right to be married. And as a result, we are cheated out of benefits..."

Supervisor Wendy Nelder said she voted against the plan because it was "discriminatory. The way to fight discrimination problems is not by promoting discrimination."

She proposed eliminating the words "unrelated by blood" from the measure and substituting "across the board people who live together," Ms. Nelder said. "Fathers and sons, brother and sisters ... they wouldn't get any of the benefits like health services."

Ms. Nelder said it was uncertain how many people would benefit by the proposal and how much dependent health coverage costs might rise.

Randall B. Smith, executive director of the health board, said the issue probably would be discussed in two weeks. A previous vote by the health board went against such benefits.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Career ambitions may be temporarily stalled. Sit tight and the right opportunity will appear. Take advantage of someone's offer to help.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Be wary of a financial deal where someone refuses to show you the books. It could be a sham. An old friend's endorsement opens important doors for you.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Although frustrations arise at place of employment, the promise of a weekend with your loved one makes everything fine.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Take matters into your own hands today or you will have to work at home this weekend. Family members already feel neglected.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your romantic dissatisfaction may stem from your being attracted to the wrong person. Relief has finally arrived after a long period of financial problems.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Rearrange your schedule so that others have a chance to go Christmas shopping. Anything having to do with communications is lucky for you now.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Romance results when you meet someone through mutual friends. Others try to use your private papers to advance their careers. Stop them and you win a new leadership position.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Concern for a loved one may lead you to change your plans at the last minute. Old-fashioned methods need to be reevaluated. Let your intuition be your guide.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): There could be hidden reasons for a friend or co-worker's actions. Try to get to the bottom of things. You are going to win a financial struggle soon.

Opening lead: Ten of ♠

Rubber bridge and duplicate are worlds apart. In the latter, you have to score as well or better than the other pairs who will be playing the same cards you do. In rubber bridge, making your contract is paramount.

The bidding was short and accurate. North was close to making a move over South's jump to three hearts, but caution prevailed and he was content with a simple raise to game.

West led the ten of clubs, and the catastrophe was soon over. South, an experienced duplicate player, won the ace of clubs and led a diamond to the jack preparatory to taking the trump finesse. He never did get to take it.

East ruffed the diamond and returned a low club. Fortunately for the defenders, West held the nine of clubs. That served as an entry to give his partner a second diamond ruff and to rub salt into the wound. West was able to overruff the third round of clubs with the king of trumps and give partner a third diamond ruff for down two. Very unfortunate, but only if you are playing duplicate.

The rubber bridge aficionado has no problem with the hand. He wins the ace of clubs and immediately leads out ace of hearts and another. The defenders can take a club trick and one diamond ruff in addition to the king of trumps, but that is all for the defense. Declarer will get to discard his losing spade on the fourth diamond.

At duplicate, obviously, declarer cannot afford the safe line. He would look very silly if he made ten or eleven tricks when twelve were available by simply crossing to dummy and picking up the king of trumps via a finesse. Since that is what the rest of the field would be doing, any declarer who played safe would get a terrible score.

San Francisco may institute first benefits package for live-in lovers

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — City supervisors have recommended giving health benefits to unmarried lovers of municipal workers — a proposal initiated by homosexuals who say they are cheated out of benefits because they aren't allowed to marry.

Critics of the plan, however, complain it discriminates against family relationships by denying benefits to blood relatives such as brothers and sisters.

The Board of Supervisors voted 8-3 earlier this week to let live-ins "unrelated by blood" who share "the necessities of life" enjoy the same benefits as spouses. The measure is a recommendation to the city health trustees, who previously have disapproved of such a proposal.

Mayor Dianne Feinstein has until Dec. 9 to sign the measure, described as unprecedented for a major American city. If she does, it would go to the seven-member health board. Her spokesman, Tom Eastham, said she had no comment.

To become eligible for the benefits, unmarried couples — either homosexual or heterosexual — would have to file a sworn statement saying they are "each other's principal domestic partner."

The city now pays for the health insurance of municipal workers. The workers pay for coverage of dependents.

The proposal also would let workers take time off for the funeral of live-in lovers and allow visits in the city jail or hospital intensive care units, where only spouses are now allowed.

The supervisors had tentatively approved the plan by the same vote last week.

"It's very significant to recognize relationships outside the institution of marriage," said Gwenn Craig, president of the Harvey Milk Gay Democratic Club, an organization named for the city's first supervisor who openly admitted being a homosexual.

"People can be dependent on each other...who may not be married or cannot be married," said Ms. Craig, an administrative assistant to the sheriff.

The proposal had symbolic value in saying "our relationships are just as valid," she said.

Harry Britt, the city's only openly homosexual supervisor, said the proposal is "clearly historic legislation that recognizes changing patterns in family life in our society and also recognizes the fundamental principle that a worker is entitled to protect his or her loved ones and that it's none of the state's business to decide who should love whom."

Britt said, "The initiative is coming from the gay community. We are denied the right to be married. And as a result, we are cheated out of benefits..."

Supervisor Wendy Nelder said she voted against the plan because it was "discriminatory. The way to fight discrimination problems is not by promoting discrimination."

She proposed eliminating the words "unrelated by blood" from the measure and substituting "across the board people who live together," Ms. Nelder said. "Fathers and sons, brother and sisters ... they wouldn't get any of the benefits like health services."

Ms. Nelder said it was uncertain how many people would benefit by the proposal and how much dependent health coverage costs might rise.

Randall B. Smith, executive director of the health board, said the issue probably would be discussed in two weeks. A previous vote by the health board went against such benefits.

War's horror lives

While it may be difficult for the world community to believe, there is growing evidence the Soviet Union is ignoring international agreements banning use of chemical and toxin weapons in Afghanistan and Southeast Asia.

Consequently, State Department officials have launched a massive new offensive aimed at publicizing Soviet violations and bringing about public pressure on Soviet leaders. The horrors of chemical warfare more than justify the State Department effort.

Use of chemical and biological weapons is not new. As far back as World War I, Germany introduced use of poison gases and some reference sources state almost 30 percent of all American casualties in the war were caused by use of poison gas.

But the horror caused by use of gas in World War I led to enactment of treaties banning use of such weapons — weapons considered too horrible for use by civilized nations even in war.

But since the Soviet Union invaded Afghanistan there has been increasing evidence of the use of "yellow rain," and other chemical weapons against the valiant Afghan tribesmen. Most recently, the State Department says, two Soviet gas masks were obtained in Afghanistan, one of them pulled from the head of a dead Soviet soldier. Both masks bore traces of toxins which cause blistering, nausea, vomiting and other symptoms, the department says.

Perhaps there is good reason for civilized nations to be incredulous to Soviet use of such weapons. There is a natural tendency for nations to apply standards acceptable in their homeland to others throughout the world. That would seem to be the case in this instance, at least, since only Great Britain, Canada and Thailand have joined the United States in condemning use of the weapons by the Soviet Union.

Public pressure is a great tool in effecting change. In seeking world condemnation of the Soviet Union's action in this regard, State Department official Robert Dean says, "It is not our intention to politicize this issue. It is our intention to keep the issue both before the public so long as it continues and to engage in diplomacy through which we hope to effect a change in the behavior of those states that are using these weapons."

The department further estimates more than 6,000 have died in Laos, 3,000 in Afghanistan and 1,000 in Cambodia as a direct result of Soviet use of chemical and biological weaponry since 1975. It's long past time for the world community to express outrage to the Soviet Union.

Mubarak's initiative

Egypt's President Hosni Mubarak has taken an initiative that could help to get Middle East peace negotiations off dead center. He has urged the Palestine Liberation Organization to recognize the existence of Israel as a state, something the PLO has refused to do.

Mubarak moved cautiously after Anwar el-Sadat's assassination. He has spoken favorably of the Camp David accords, but with an obvious awareness of the hostility those accords arouse in most Arab leaders.

But now the Egyptian leader has spoken out, for the first time, about the need for the PLO to recognize Israel. This Mubarak initiative is a welcome extension of that of Sadat's of five years ago, when he stood boldly before the Knesset to declare that Egypt no longer consider Israel a "make-believe" state.

Another View:

Bad news for policy

Donald Hodel, President Reagan's choice to become secretary of energy, gets high marks for the management skill he demonstrated as administrator of the Bonneville Power Administration in the Pacific Northwest and later as under secretary of interior. In technical and administrative areas, Hodel will be a marked improvement over the outgoing energy secretary, James Edwards. But in policymaking, Hodel will be worse.

Edwards was an amateur — a caretaker whose influence on national energy policy was negligible. Hodel is not like that. He knows energy, and Mr. Reagan can expect to hear a strong brief for Hodel's strong views. If Hodel's record at BPA is any indication, those views do not bode well for energy conservation or research and development of alternative sources. They do suggest continued large federal subsidies for nuclear power.

In the mid-1970s, Hodel, concerned that the Pacific Northwest would soon run short of energy, contracted with the Natural Resources Defense Council to study the region's energy future. The council found Hodel's energy-use forecasts inflated, and reported that the region could ensure ample energy at low cost through conservation. Other BPA consultants concluded the same.

Hodel ignored their recommendations. He became a prime mover behind a five plant nuclear project called the Washington Public Power Supply System, aptly nicknamed WHOOPS by detractors. Hodel used his power as regional energy czar to pressure utilities, many of them small cooperatives, to buy part of the Washington system's five nuclear plants. One tactic was to issue "notices of insufficiency" warning utilities that BPA could not ensure future delivery of energy supplies. With Hodel's backing, the WHOOPS project was launched, financed wholly by revenue bonds.

That project is now a financial disaster. Energy demand dropped substantially, while the project's cost rose from $4 billion to almost $25 billion. Two of the five nuclear plants were stopped in the middle of construction — after billions had been invested. Northwest power consumers will be years paying off the costs of the two canceled plants, from which they likely will never get a single kilowatt in return.

President Reagan is entitled to select an energy secretary whose views he shares. But the rest of us needn't be happy about it. Hodel's role in the Washington Power System and his rejection of alternative energy strategies show serious shortcomings. The Sierra Club lists them: "a conspicuous lack of foresight and judgement, hostility to energy conservation and the interests of rate-paying consumers, insensitivity to environmental concerns and resistance to citizen participation in government decisions." Hodel may be the right man for Mr. Reagan, but not for Americans who want a sound energy policy.

ART BUCHWALD

Andropov's 'honeymoon' won't last!

"What do you plan to do about Yuri Andropov?" I asked a Soviet correspondent in Washington.

Art Buchwald

"We always give a new leader of the Soviet Union a honeymoon for six months before the press goes after him," he said. "The Soviet people don't want us to be too cruel at the beginning. After all, he won an overwhelming mandate and he should be given a chance," he said.

"We do the same thing in this country," I said.

"But if Andropov doesn't fulfill his campaign promises, then the power of the Soviet media will turn against him."

"I didn't know you could do that in your country."

"We certainly can and we will. Our readers expect us to keep our Soviet leaders honest. The function of our press and television is to tell the truth about our politicians no matter what position they hold in government."

"Do you think the fact that Andropov was head of the KGB might hurt his image with the people?"

"No. You people elected a former actor as your president, and it had no effect on Reagan's image."

"But an actor is not the same as a KGB director."

"It is in the Soviet Union. Our people revere the KGB. Anyone who rises to the top is in touch with ALL the people. He can identify with the workers, and the peasants, and the people trying to scratch out a living in the cold Siberian wastes. He knows about crime, and he has dealt with subversive elements in neighboring states. The KGB is much better training ground than Warner Brothers."

"Will the social life in Moscow pick up with Andropov in the Kremlin?"

"It always does when you get a new leader. Mrs. Andropov is now working with her decorator to change the living quarters, as she's very unhappy with what Mrs. Brezhnev did. She has ordered new china for state dinners. She believes the Kremlin belongs to all the Soviet people and she wants them to be proud of it. She's also ordered new clothes because she feels that the Russians pay close attention to what the first lady of the secretary of the Communist Party wears."

"Style has always meant a lot to the Soviets," I said.

"It's good newspaper copy. But as far as we newspapermen are concerned it's what Andropov does that counts. He inherited a stagnant economy from Brezhnev and he was elected because he promised to lower the inflation rate, balance the ruble. If he can do all this before he dies he could go down as one of the greatest Soviet leaders in history. But if his economic plan doesn't work we'll be as tough on him as were were on Brezhnev."

"Do you think he can do it?"

"He's a great communicator, thanks to his days in the KGB. And he has a lot of goodwill going for him. The people want change, but he's going to have to work closely with the leaders of the Presidium to get his programs through."

"I guess he'll have to throw a few bones to the right wing of the Communist Party since they did so much work in his election," I said.

"He will. Andropov feels very strongly about prayers in school."

"Who would the schoolchildren pray to?"

"Marx and Lenin. Who else is there?"

"So we can't look for anything critical in the Soviet press about Andropov for at least six months."

"That's just about as long as the honeymoon will last. Then the Kremlin correspondents will get bored and we'll start telling it as it is."

"At which point Andropov will say you people are distorting everything he is trying to do to save the country."

"We're used to that in the Soviet Union. When the honeymoon is over every Soviet leader thinks the press is giving him a raw deal. But all Andropov can do is send us to a Gulag for 20 years and you know as well as I do, the Soviet public would never stand for that."

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Doubt postpones Vietnam unknown's burial

WASHINGTON — The honoring of Vietnam veterans and dedication of their memorial in Washington last month went a long way toward healing the psychic wounds of that war. But another controversy has arisen, marked by the bickering and backstage maneuvering that characterized the conflict and its aftermath.

Jack Anderson

This unfortunate contest, which involves well-meaning people on both sides, concerns the efforts to bury the remains of an unidentified Vietnam solider beside those of the two world wars and the Korean conflict at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington National Cemetery.

The problem is the great strides in scientific identification of remains that have been made since earlier wars. Families of men still listed as missing cling to the hope that someday their loved ones will be identified as among the bodies that are now "known but to God" despite the best efforts of the medical experts. Burial at Arlington would leave some families forever in doubt.

But some Pentagon officials want to go ahead and bury a Vietnam unknown anyway. They have four "candidates" for the honor — four sets of remains in Hawaii that they are certain will never be identified.

Leading the charge is Army Secretary John Marsh, a shavetail with the occupation forces in Germany at the end of World War II, a former Virginia congressman and a member of veterans and patriotic organizations. On June 16, Marsh drew up elaborate plans for the selection and burial of a Vietnam unknown, and submitted them in an "Action Memorandum" to Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger.

This was the suggested scenario:

— The Air Force to fly the unknown to Andrews Air Force Base outside Washington, D.C.

— The Army to take the unknown to the Capitol, where the casket would be placed in the Rotunda for 48 hours.

— The burial ceremony at Arlington to be held on Veterans Day.

Weinberger, evidently swayed by the argument that the four sets of remains were not beyond hope of identification, vetoed Marsh's plan.

But Marsh persevered. He enlisted the help of Rep. William Goodling, R-Pa., who introduced a resolution asking the White House to change is mind and expedite the honoring of a Vietnam unknown.

A Goodling aide told my associate Donald Goldberg he has been assured by the Army that the remains in Hawaii were beyond recognition. Despite lobbying from those who don't want to close the files on the unidentified bodies, Goodling is still pushing his resolution.

Meanwhile, press reports appeared to the affect that Weinberger had assured veterans' groups the ceremony was simply being delayed for a year. But Pentagon sources say Weinberger was out of the country when the reports appeared; they suspect the reports were planted to drum up support for Marsh's plan. They insist that neither the White House nor the Pentagon has any plans to go ahead with the burial.

Footnote: A spokesman for Marsh said he thought Weinberger was still waiting for a recommendation from the Army secretary. He was unaware that his boss had already made a recommendation, and that it had been turned down.

DUNNING A DICTATOR: Well aware of Pakistani President Muhammed Zia ul-Haq's richly deserved unpopularity on Capitol Hill, the State Department has been working feverishly to clean up the dictator's image before he arrives in Washington next week.

One bone of contention has already been removed. Shortly after I reported on our diplomats' quiet efforts to persuade Zia to let the widow of his old rival, Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, leave Pakistan for cancer treatment abroad, the general relented and let her go.

Now Foggy Bottom is trying to get Zia to come across with the $7 million indemnity for our embassy in Islamabad, sacked and burned by a Pakistani mob three years ago while his troops did nothing to stop it. A year ago, when I asked a Pakistani Embassy official about the $7 million, I was assured that the check was in the mail and would be received "in the next couple of days."

It wasn't though, and the State Department has been trying to collect the overdue bill ever since. Now, apparently, our diplomats have persuaded Zia that the only way to avoid an embarrassing scene when he appears before Congress is to pay up. An agreement is just about completed, according to sources.

EXECUTIVE MEMO: Insiders at the Environmental Protection Agency are disturbed by what they see as a trend toward lax enforcement of regulations governing disposal of hazardous wastes. A memo from Assistant Administrator Rita Lavelle says of the EPA's policy for the next two years: "The initial enforcement focus will be on achieving voluntary compliance through inspector notification and informal negotiations."

An EPA spokesman said the new technique will be "like getting a warning ticket on the highway." My sources aren't so sure, especially since the memo warns that any papers referring to the new strategy "should be treated as confidential budget documents" — in other words, kept from the public, even though they have no status as budget documents.

GEORGE F. WILL

Washington preparing for missile debate

WASHINGTON — The symptoms are unmistakable that Washington is entering one of its relatively lucid intervals for the MX missile debate. Seriousness has not become general, but serious people will dominate both sides of the controversy.

George F. Will

The leading critic of MX — Sen. Fritz Hollings (D-S.C.) — was a leading opponent of SALT II.

The crucial question is not whether the Minuteman force — land-based ICBMs — is vulnerable. Hollings and the administration agree that it is because a Soviet first strike could substantially destroy it. Neither is the crucial question whether a land-based component of the deterrent is valuable. Most persons agree that a strategic triad is desirable because it complicates the task of Kremlin planners, preventing them from concentrating their resources on means of degrading the effectiveness of the sea-based and airborne deterrent. And land-based forces still have (although they soon may not have) inherent advantages of control and accuracy (which makes them useful against "hardened" Soviet targets).

The crucial question is not whether we can "afford" MX. The nation can afford the price of peace, period. Anyway, even if you budget for something not yet planned — a protective overlay of ABMs (anti-ballistic missiles) — the total MX cost of perhaps $60 billion comes to $6 billion a year over a decade. If MX makes deterrence significantly more stable for such a span, it is a bargain.

The question is not in any simple sense whether the "dense-pack" basing will "work." To work means to enable a significant number of the 100 missiles to survive a Soviet strike. Each side in the MX debate will have scientists to testify about "fratricide" of incoming Soviet warheads. The "fratricide" theory is this:

MX silos will be so "hardened" that a disarming attack would require saturation by Soviet warheads; but blast effects (heat, shock, debris, etc.) would be such that Soviet attackers would need to plan an incredibly — indeed, prohibitively — complex attack sequence, with certain warheads arriving precisely as the blast effects of other warheads are just sufficiently dissipating.

Some critics of MX will say the Soviets can stage such an attack. However, many anti-defense senators and congressmen are precluded (by logic, if nothing else) from making that argument because they have long argued against new strategic programs on the ground that a Soviet first strike on existing strategic forces is prohibitively difficult.

Critics of MX will say "fratricide" can not be tested. That is true, but the existing U.S. deterrent is woven, in large measure, from untestable hypotheses about how strategic systems will work and how Soviet decision-makers will calculate in certain situations.

The more telling criticisms of MX are more specific. They are that MX's deterrent value is subject to rapid (in perhaps five years) deterioration as a result of Soviet developments (such as ground-penetrating warheads), and that even without such developments the U.S. capacity to "harden" silos sufficiently with steel and concrete is hypothetical and dubious.

The pro-MX side has an inherent advantage because deterrence is less a piling up of certainties than it is the multiplication of useful uncertainties. We can not know beyond peradventure that "hardening" or "fratricide" would work; but neither can Soviet planners enter a crisis certain that it would not.

The least crucial question is whether MX would violate what critics call "existing arms-control agreements." The critics are referring to SALT I, which has expired, and SALT II, which never came close to ratification. Still, the administration argues that MX does not violate the SALT II ban on new fixed-ICBM launchers because MX travels with its launcher. All that is new is the silo into which the launcher — a cannister — slips. This interpretation of SALT II is no more legalistic than various Soviet interpretations.

The crucial question about MX or any other strategic program is: How much enhancement of deterrence would be bought for how many years, and for how many dollars per year? Before birds sing their anthems to spring, the debate may have produced a dusty answer: more money for the missile, none for deployment.

But deployment is everything. So a few billion dollars from now, MX may be nothing. Responsible persons asking "Can't we do better than MX in 'dense pack'?" must also ask, "Can we afford to do nothing?"

The Trident submarine D-5 missile, with an accuracy comparable to that of MX, is due in 1989. The U.S. ballistic missile force (as distinct from cruise missiles) may be destined to go to sea. Then America might have a somewhat less vulnerable but also less versatile deterrent. There would be no respite from spending billions to counter Soviet measures, which would be concentrated against submarines. Come what may, there will be no escape from the dialectic of weaponry.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history:

On Dec. 2, 1804, Napoleon Bonaparte crowned himself Emperor of France.

On this date:

In 1823, President James Monroe outlined the Monroe Doctrine.

In 1942, a nuclear chain reaction was demonstrated for the first time by scientists working on a secret project in Chicago.

In 1956, Fidel Castro and his followers landed in Cuba to start their drive to overthrow the Batista government.

GOP senators forced to choose between Reagan backer, moderate

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican senators trying to fill a leadership post were forced today to choose between a loyal supporter of Ronald Reagan and a political moderate who has openly challenged the president and his policies.

Richard G. Lugar of Indiana battled incumbent Robert Packwood of Oregon for the chairmanship of the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee in an election that some Republicans believe was quietly influenced in Lugar's favor by White House political agents.

"There has been some White House meddling," Republican Sen. Warren Rudman of New Hampshire said in an interview.

His and others' suspicions have caused greater interest in the election for the two-year term as head of the committee which dispenses money to GOP senatorial candidates.

Onetime GOP presidential nominee Barry Goldwater of Arizona, who is recovering from hip surgery, asked Wednesday for permission to cast a proxy vote for Packwood. His support for the Oregonian was viewed by some as evidence that senators resent White House interference in the internal leadership contest.

Although they differ on almost everything else, Goldwater has supported Packwood's efforts in the Senate to retain legalized abortions and to block prohibitions on busing for racial desegregation.

The 51 GOP senators and three senators-elect were voting by secret ballot in the old Senate chamber of the Capitol.

Lugar's main supporter was Paul Laxalt of Nevada, who had said of Packwood's reputation as a rebel Republican, "It is my belief that if one assumes the responsibility of leadership, you have to be responsive to presidential policy."

Laxalt is one of Reagan's closest allies in the Senate. At the president's request, he agreed to become general chairman of the Republican National Committee.

Lugar has said he should be elected because Packwood has been elected chairman twice before and, "This is not a patronage function."

Of Packwood's relationship with the Republican president, Lugar said, "I would hardly describe it as a compatible relationship."

As a friend of Reagan, Lugar said, "I'd have access to the president...I would be more effective (than Packwood) in persuading the president."

One source close to Baker said the outcome would depend on Lugar's ability to persuade almost every conservative Republican in the Senate to vote against the popular Packwood.

Packwood's alienation from Reagan began earlier this year when the senator said the Republican Party under Reagan was rapidly losing any chance of broadening its appeal to include large numbers of women, blacks or Jewish voters.

Packwood also told anecdotes of meetings between Reagan and top Senate Republicans in which the president answered statements about the size of the federal budget with stories about poor people using food stamps to buy vodka.

"We just shake our heads," Packwood said of himself and other Republican leaders.

In the 98th Congress which convenes in January, there will be a 54 to 46 Republican majority. Some GOP leaders are fearful Democrats could regain control of the Senate in 1984, and view the Packwood-Lugar contest as an important factor in the outcome of that election.

If he were elected, Lugar says there would be unity between the White House, the campaign committee and the Republican National Committee in the 1984 election campaign.

Officials say diplomatic immunity protects Brazilian ambassador's son

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. officials say diplomatic immunity prevents them from prosecuting the son of Brazil's ambassador to the United States for shooting an employee of a topless bar.

Federal prosecutors, who asked anonymity, said Wednesday that an assault charge against Antonio da Silveira Jr. was dropped after a conference between the State Department and the U.S. attorney's office.

Da Silveira, whose father was in Brazil because of President Reagan's trip to Latin America, was arrested by District of Columbia police Monday night following the shooting at The Godfather, a northwest Washington nightspot.

Police charged da Silveira, a student at American University, with assault with a dangerous weapon, which carries a maximum sentence of 10 years. An embassy spokesman said da Silveira fired randomly after being attacked by bar employees.

Police said that Da Silveira initially refused to identify himself and was booked as "John Doe." A hearing commissioner ordered "Doe" held in lieu of $2,000 bond for a preliminary hearing Dec. 9.

Police said da Silveira revealed his identity Wednesday while awaiting a court appearance. They said an embassy official arrived and confirmed that he was telling the truth.

A source in the U.S. attorney's office said prosecutors were notified by the Superior Court on Wednesday that the young man was the ambassadors's son.

"We confirmed with the State Department that such a person existed and that he had diplomatic immunity," one source in the prosecutor's office said, asking that he not be identified by name. "We entered a dismissal."

State Department spokeswoman Anita Stockman said the department's protocol officials were awaiting a report from their lawyers before deciding the next move. Generally, people with diplomatic immunity may be punished only by expulsion from the country.

The son's age could not be learned immediately. An entry in the police docket that might have provided the age had been inked out.

Accounts of the incident from police and the Brazilian Embassy differed.

Cities face tough test

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Leaders of the nation's cities say they face their toughest fiscal test in a generation and must unite to convince President Reagan to increase aid to urban areas.

The strategy emerged as the agenda for 1983 at the annual convention of the National League of Cities, which closed Wednesday with a mixture of hope and despair.

Mayors of the nation's 10 most depressed cities said many of their citizens won't make it through the winter without some kind of emergency relief.

But the league's newly elected president, Mayor Charles Royer of Seattle, said he saw reason for hope.

"I sense the frustration dripping away," Royer said. "There is a change. The president is coming a little way toward us. We're coming a little way toward him, but still there is a long way to go."

Royer noted that Reagan had made major policy concessions in his speech to the league on Monday.

Reagan promised to continue a direct pipeline of federal aid to local governments, even if the amount of aid is shrinking, and he tentatively backed continuing the $4.6 billion revenue-sharing program, set to expire next year.

The league adopted a resolution on Wednesday supporting Reagan's recent proposal for an increase in the gasoline tax, with much of it to be used patching up cities.

But Reagan also told the cities not to expect quick fixes, terming short-term programs to cure the recession "Band-Aids and placebos" that would only delay recovery.

Mayor John Fedo of Duluth, Minn., speaking on behalf of leaders from the 10 most depressed cities, challenged the president.

"The patient, if we might be considered the patient, needs a transfusion during the operation, or we're all going to die on the table," he said.

Brooke Shields won't be attending University of Virginia, officials say

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — University of Virginia administrators are pouring cold water on a hot campus rumor about teen-age movie actress Brooke Shields.

Dean of admissions Jean L. Rayburn says she's not sure how the story got started, but Miss Shields definitely has not applied for a place in next year's freshman class.

"We've even checked the SAT (Scholastic Aptitude Test) scores, and she hasn't sent any to the university," the dean said.

Brooke Shields

According to Ms. Rayburn, two medical students walked into the admissions office three weeks ago and asked whether Miss Shields, the 17-year-old star of "The Blue Lagoon" and "Endless Love," had been visiting the campus.

Since then the dean's office has been deluged by inquiries.

"The rumor has grown to things like we've offered her admission, she's coming and she won't have to live in university housing the first year," Ms. Rayburn said.

Miss Shields lives in Bergen County, N.J.

M. Navratilova

Lawyer James A. Howard Sr., who represented Miss Navratilova in the transaction, put the price at between $525,000 and $550,000.

The 10-year-old house was being sold by Frank Batten, chairman of Landmark Communications and publisher of Norfolk's two daily newspapers, the Virginian-Pilot and the Ledger-Star.

Howard said the three-story, three-bedroom house would be Miss Navratilova's "principal East Coast residence" and she would probably live there with her friend and trainer, former Old Dominion University basketball star Nancy Lieberman.

Miss Navratilova, a native Czechoslovakian who defected to the West seven years ago, acquired U.S. citizenship last year. She lived in Charlottesville until moving to Dallas in August 1981.

NEW YORK (AP) — New inductees to the American Academy of Arts and Letters will be honored at ceremonies Friday, but they apparently are taking the award with a pinch of humor.

Scheduled to be admitted are economist John Kenneth Galbraith, poet Richard Eberhart, novelist Peter De Vries and short-story writer Peter Taylor. Membership is limited to 50 luminaries of the U.S. cultural scene.

Galbraith quipped that his induction will do "acute damage" to his reputation as an economist. "People will keep saying I'm a writer," he told the New York Times.

Eberhart said his wife is still telling him "that if I want to get anywhere I'll have to improve my handwriting."

"This beats megabucks," De Vries said. "I have always been strongly opposed to official honors and establishment laurels — what Emerson called 'the mercuries of approbation' — but, overnight, I have become less hidebound," he conceded.

Said Taylor: "I've been living in the literary world most of my life — it's an honor to by cited by my peers."

The four fill seats vacant since the deaths of novelist John Cheever, sculptor Jose deCreeft and poets Archibald MacLeish and Babette Deutsch. They were elected by the 250 members of the National Institute of Arts and Letters.

Was cowboy hero or troublemaker of Old West?

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — From Tom Mix to Gene Autry, Oklahomans have immortalized men in the saddle. They revel in a rugged lifestyle now blurred by nostalgia.

But after 200 years on the Prairie — and on the eve of the National Finals Rodeo — the cowboy can still stir up a dust storm of controversy.

Is he the hero or the troublemaker of the Old West?

Oklahoma City psychologist Melvyn Price claims the cowboy makes a poor hero figure. University of Oklahoma history professor William Savage says obscurity more than anything has given the cowboy unearned fame.

But Dean Krakel, director of the National Cowboy Hall of Fame, disagrees with the image of the cowboy as an unstable rabble rouser. He credits the distortion to media and academics.

"The image of a man in Oklahoma goes back to the cowboy, a guy who defeats evil but never gets what he wants. Most cowboys never got the woman in the end; they usually got a horse and rode off to the next Dodge City," Price said.

"You can spot a cowboy real easy. He wore a hat, boots and jeans. He was a loner, a survivor, a narcissist. It was just him and his six-barrel. He was scared to death of intimacy and responsibility."

But people make cowboys into heroes for the same reason they made knights in shining armor the champions of the Middle Ages — out of a need to strengthen their own identities, he said.

"Cowboys are seen as basically honest, undefeatable and chivalrous. We try to endow the cowboy with divine characteristics that we'd like to find in ourselves. We give a hero a medal out of our own need."

Modern man has not lost his need for them, Price said. He has even created heroes that don't exist.

"For that matter, E.T. was a cowboy. He saved the boys' lives and made the earth a better place to live. But in the end, he got on his 'horse' and left."

ACT claims TV ad for cereal deceptive, wants it 'crunched'

WASHINGTON (AP) — A consumer group wants to stop the Quaker Oats Co. from using a television commercial for "Cap'n Crunch" cereal that promises a chance to win an Atari Video System.

Action for Children's Television said it was filing complaints today with both the Federal Communications Commission and the Federal Trade Commission on grounds the commercial "is unfair and deceptive because it advertises a lottery and also because it is directed to young viewers, the majority of whom are too immature to understand the concept of chance."

Peggy Charren, the founder and president of ACT, said the commercial is misleading because it doesn't make clear to viewers that they have the right to participate in the game without buying a box of "Cap'n Crunch" cereal.

"Children are left with the impression that they must spend money for a chance to 'win' a prize, making the 'Cap'n Crunch' offer, in effect, a lottery," said Mrs. Charren.

"The FCC prohibits TV stations from broadcasting any lottery other than state lotteries, and the FTC has repeatedly stated that lotteries are an unfair and deceptive trade practice," she said.

Efforts to contact Quaker Oats officials for comment were unsuccessful early today because their offices had not opened in Chicago.

According to ACT, the announcer in the cereal commercial first states that "you can win one of 5,000 Atari Video Systems." He then goes on to say that "each specially marked box comes with a wallet and Crunch money bills. If one of your Crunch money bills says 'Winner,' you win."

Reagan pushes for free trade, cooperation

BRASILIA, Brazil (AP) — President Reagan, in a two-pronged message to Brazilian business leaders, today denounced what he called counterfeit revolutionaries in Central America and decried restriction of free trade as "an ugly specter stalking the world."

Reagan sounded a call for economic cooperation between the United States and Brazil — one day after moving to ease the impact of U.S. sugar quotas here and provide a $1.2 billion loan to help Brazil restore its earlier economic growth.

But the president's trip to Latin America is focusing as much on East-West themes and troubled Central America as it is on the special problems of financially ailing Brazil.

In today's address, Reagan turned to a theme he used Wednesday night when he told a dinner audience, "Just as threatening as conventional armies or nuclear weapons are counterfeit revolutionaries who undermine legitimate governments and destroy sources of economic progress."

In remarks prepared for delivery to U.S. and Brazilian business leaders in Sao Paulo, Reagan said:

"There is in the world today, a counterfeit revolution, a revolution of territorial conquests, a revolution of coercion and thought control where states rule behind the barrel of a gun and erect barbed wire walls not to keep enemies out, but to keep their own people in."

A White House official said this was a reference to the Soviet Union and Cuba.

Reagan expanded on that Wednesday night, saying insurgents were armed at great expense, by a faraway power aimed at disrupting other governments and economies

"This is aggression pure and simple," he said.

"We stand firmly with the other responsible nations of the Americas in opposing those who with violence and force of arms, try to undermine economic progress and political stability," he said.

The president, on a four-nation, five-day Latin American tour, had some trouble remembering where he was and where he is going Wednesday evening when he asked his dinner companions to join him in a toast to President Joao Baptista Figueiredo "and to the people of Bolivia — that is where I am going. To the people of Brazil...."

The president, however, is not going to Bolivia, one of the poorest nations on the South American continent. His next stop, on Friday, is Bogota, Colombia.

Although the president's use of the word Bolivia could clearly be heard, the official White House transcript of his remarks substituted the word Bogota. When this was noted to White House press aides, they refused to correct the transcript, saying the president was thinking of Bogota not Bolivia.

Before flying approximately 500 miles for the speech in Sao Paulo, Reagan visited the U.S. Embassy in Brasilia, where he praised the staff for its devotion to duty and called for its help in "strengthening our relations with Brazil."

Reagan also met again with Figueiredo before setting out for Sao Paulo, the industrial center with a population of 8.5 million.

Edward M. Kennedy

Kennedy not ready to give endorsement

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, renouncing a bid for the White House in 1984, is fully prepared to back another contender based on the issues he would have stressed in a campaign of his own, aides say.

Aides said no endorsement is expected for some time, although any of the remaining contenders — Walter Mondale and Sens. John Glenn and Gary Hart among them — presumably would be delighted to receive Kennedy's blessing. Alan Cranston, the Senate Democratic whip, said as much, predicting, "A significant number of Kennedy supporters will now be ready to support me."

Kennedy was keeping his own counsel, refusing to name a favorite or even identify a front-runner. Cranston conceded the current lead to former vice president Mondale and said he ranks Glenn, of Ohio, next.

Others edging into the race, still unannounced, include Hart of Colorado, Morris Udall of Arizona, Sen. Ernest Hollings of South Carolina and former Florida Gov. Reubin Askew.

But one Kennedy aide said:

"He's going to look and see if these people are consistent" with the themes he would have stressed — a nuclear freeze and changed economic policies chief among them.

Another aide, also asking not to be identified, said that while the Massachusetts senator is "leaving the option open to endorse a candidate in the future," he does not have a favorite at this point. Associates who talked with Kennedy by telephone over the past few days also said he expressed no preference.

"He intends to play a major role in Democratic party politics," one aide said after Kennedy's nationally televised announcement that personal reasons dictated a decision to renounce both a candidacy and a draft for the nomination in 1984.

Although ruling out a race in 1984, the 50-year-old Kennedy said he wasn't renouncing any hopes for the White House in 1988 and beyond, and aides sought to stress his determination to remain a party leader in the interim.

Kennedy himself was providing no details on his political plans. But a key aide — all Kennedy's assistants were asking for anonymity Wednesday — hinted broadly that Kennedy might soon announce a "major domestic initiative" dealing with the economy as one way of indicating his intention to retain his voice as a party leader.

"He played a major political role in this country throughout the 1970s even though he wasn't a presidential candidate," remarked one aide.

"He will have enormous influence on the Democratic party and he intends to exercise it very vigorously," said another. At the time of his withdrawal, Kennedy was the front-runner in the polls among contenders for the presidential nomination.

Presidential endorsements aside, Kennedy associates said the Massachusetts senator has decided to maximize his political muscle by retaining his political action committee, the Fund for a Democratic Majority. Kennedy will use the committee to raise funds as he participates in efforts to restore a Democratic majority in the Senate and solidify it in the House in 1984, aides say.

Administration seeks gasoline tax support

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, seeking votes for its proposed gasoline tax increase, is trying to accommodate members of Congress who want to bend parts of the plan to protect pet projects.

The 5-cent-a-gallon hike in the federal gasoline tax has strong bipartisan support. But wrangling over the plan — aimed at financing $5.5 billion worth of highway, bridge and mass transit repairs — is picking up with legislative action beginning today in the House Ways and Means Committee.

Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis said at congressional hearings this week that up to 13 states might be unable to pay the matching share — averaging 17 percent — required in federally-aided construction projects. That could make it impossible for those states to grant contracts for the repair work.

After learning of that, Rep. Barber B. Conable Jr., R-N.Y., the ranking Republican on the Ways and Means Committee, told Lewis Wednesday that the measure is "not going to be a job bill if the contracts don't get let."

The administration's response was quick and conciliatory. Later in the day, Tom Blank, a Transportation Department spokesman, said the administration is studying a proposal that would eliminate the problem for states that may be unable to meet their share of the matching funds. Under the plan, the state share of such projects would be small initially, but then rise as a state became more able to bear the cost.

Meanwhile, Rep. Bill Archer, R-Texas, another member of the Ways and Means Committee, and Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, a member of the Senate Finance Committee, have said they are unhappy that the administration proposal did not provide for the start of new rail systems, such as one sought by the city of Houston.

The administration has opposed new rail systems.

But Blank said Lewis now has notified several members of Congress that the administration will permit the start of new rail systems.

Other problems persist, however.

Several members of the Ways and Means Committee also have expressed concern that the money might not be distributed fairly.

Lewis acknowledged that 11 states get back less than $1 for every dollar they contribute to the highway fund while several states get substantially more than they pay in.

Archer, whose home state of Texas gets 76 cents for every dollar it pays in, complained "we have been kicked around for too long by these distribution formulas."

Bentsen has said he would like to see a provision in the bill mandating that a state receive at least 90 percent of the money it pays in.

In addition to increasing the gasoline tax from 4 cents to 9 cents beginning next April, the administration is proposing to change the excise taxes on tires and spare parts as well as sales taxes so that the heaviest trucks would pay higher annual taxes.

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

AUSTIN — Midland Memorial Hospital's planning documents, ranging from a scribbled interpretation of a telephone conversation to a professionally-prepared report, were among 25 exhibits entered at the Texas Health Facilities Commission hearing Wednesday.

While testimony early Wednesday morning included explanations of MMH's Five-Year Major Objectives from Oct. 1, 1982, to Sept. 30, 1987, and a rehash of MMH's state-approved behavioral health center, the remainder of Wednesday's cross-examination focused on MMH's planning documents.

The documents were petitioned by American Medical Corporation during the recent two-week certificate of need application proceedings in Austin. The Tennessee-based AMC, which owns Parkview Hospital, and MMH are opposing applicants for additional beds at the joint THFC hearing, which was to end Nov. 20.

However, both hospitals were summoned back to Austin Wednesday after a controversy cropped up during the hearings. The controversy began when attorneys for the proposed Doctors Hospital of the Permian Basin, Inc. (Parkview) asked for all of MMH's long-range planning documents, including a report prepared by TriBrook Group Inc., a management consultant firm.

AMC attorneys filed a motion Nov. 12 with the health commission requesting the suspension of MMH's application until the reports were produced. MMH produced a six-foot stack of papers Nov. 18. The hearings then recessed for Thanksgiving holiday.

MMH's certificate of need application asks for a $15.1 million, 77-bed expansion, while AMC's application calls for a $17.9 million, 110-bed full-service hospital.

AMC attorney Ace Pickens had sought to cross-examine Ray Branson, MMH president, and Don Davis, a TriBrook representative. Pickens' request was granted by the THFC.

Pickens grilled Branson during a six-hour session on the MMH planning documents. Branson was asked to identify some 25 exhibits, most of which were prepared by TriBrook as far back as 1979.

One letter, dated Feb. 16, 1982, from TriBrook staff member Jonathon Swett led to legal arguments between the hospitals' attorneys.

While Branson contended the "unsolicited letter" contained eight "statements" about the implementation of TriBrook's Strategic Long-Range Plan for MMH, Pickens claimed the "recommendations" are committed to sustain hospital competition in Midland, and "no new health providers should be allowed to interfere" with MMH's expansion plans. The letter also stated that a realistic goal for MMH would be to obtain 400-500 beds at its existing site.

Pickens requested that the "planning document" be entered as an exhibit, but Kevin Reed, MMH attorney, argued

Fighting erupts today in Lebanese mountains

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Intense fighting exploded today in Lebanon's central mountains where leftist Druse and rightist Christian militiamen battled with heavy artillery and machineguns, the rightist Voice of Lebanon radio reported.

The clashes came one day after the attempted assassination of Druse Moslem leader Walid Jumblatt, head of the Socialist Progressive Party.

In South Yemen, meanwhile, Palestine Liberation Organization chief Yasser Arafat was quoted as saying that a major battle with Israel was imminent in Lebanon's eastern Bekaa Valley.

"In a few days I shall be calling upon you to join the battle," the Kuwaiti newspaper Al-Seyassa today quoted Arafat as telling Palestinians in a refugee camp in South Yemen.

PLO guerrillas and Syrian troops are lined up against Israeli forces in the Bekaa Valley, as U.S. mediators attempt to push all foreign armies out of Lebanon.

There were no reports of casualties in Lebanon's central mountains. The radio said the fighting centered around the towns of Souk Al-Gharb and Aitat, about six miles southeast of the Lebanese capital.

Police and Jumblatt's Socialists had no comment on the report.

The radio said the exchanges started shortly after Israeli occupation forces abruptly pulled out of the two towns.

An Israeli army spokesman, Lt. Benjamin Oron, said there had been some troop movements in the area but he denied Israeli forces had withdrawn. "On the contrary, we sent more troops to prevent a flareup," he said.

Oron said he had no reports of fighting in the area.

Inmate says if he's executed, death would be God's will

Charlie Brooks Jr.

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Charlie Brooks Jr. says if he is executed as scheduled next week for a Fort Worth murder, his death will be the will of God.

"If God wills that I am to be executed at 12:05 Tuesday morning then I will be executed at 12:05 Tuesday morning. But if it is not God's will that I be executed, then I will not," the Fort Worth man said Wednesday.

"Islam teaches that nothing will happen to me unless it is the will of God," said Brooks, who says he has been preparing himself for death since he became a Muslim while in prison.

His lawyers are planning to go to the U.S. Supreme Court later this week to ask for a stay of execution. A three-judge panel of the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals turned down such a request last week in Austin.

His appeals lawyer in Fort Worth, Danny Burns, said the appeal includes a contention that five potential jurors were improperly excluded from the trial because they expressed reservations about the death penalty.

The appeal also contends there was insufficient evidence to prove Brooks guilty of capital murder and that Brooks' trial lawyers failed to show mitigating evidence during the punishment phase of the trial, Burns said.

Brooks, 40, is scheduled to die before sunrise Tuesday. He would be the first man executed by lethal injection in the United States and would be the first person executed in Texas since 1964.

Brooks said Wednesday he still plans to exchange vows Friday with a Fort Worth nurse, "if God wills."

The vows, with God as a witness, will commit them "to each other in preparation for the next life," he said in an interview last week. He said that their relationship began as pen pals while he was in prison, and that he now considers her his "mate." He said she has agreed to witness the execution.

The man Brooks was convicted of murdering, used-car-lot mechanic David Gregory, was shot in the head in a motel after riding with Brooks as he test drove a car from the lot. Brooks said Gregory's hands and feet were bound when he was killed.

Brooks says he is innocent of capital murder because that charge requires that a person "knowingingly or intentionally" caused someone's death. But he adds that he has had "to carry this fact that this man no longer lives because of my involvement."

Another man convicted in the case, Woodie Loudres, is serving a 40-year prison sentence after pleading guilty to a murder charge, Burns said.

He said that sentence was agreed to in a plea bargain after Loudres' original conviction on a capital murder charge was reversed because some potential jurors were improperly excluded after expressing reservations about the death penalty. Brooks and Loudres were tried separately.

Burns said he believes a similar question about jurors in Brooks' case is the strongest part of the condemned man's appeal.

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — NASA plans to let astronauts walk in space on the shuttle's sixth flight, trying again to test the unproven suits that failed during last month's voyage.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration announced Wednesday the sixth mission would be extended from three days to five days and a final mission schedule should be announced in two weeks.

The announcement indicated NASA is confident it can correct the failures in a pair of $2 million space suits that forced cancellation of a planned space walk during the fifth flight last month.

An investigation panel was expected to release its report about what caused the malfunctions today at a 2 p.m. CST news conference.

The report culminates an extensive, two-week investigation by a team of techicians, said Dave Alter, NASA spokesman.

But a fan in the life-support backpack system of Allens's space suit stopped working and an oxygen pressure regulator in Lenoir's suit failed, forcing NASA to scuttle the spacewalk.

A report earlier this week said Lenoir's regulator failed because it was improperly assembled and Allen's fan stopped working because of a broken electrical part.

NASA officials refused to confirm or deny the report.

Losing bid cost over $13 million

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements spent more than $13 million on his unsuccessful campaign for re-election — more than any previous candidate in Texas history, according to records in the secretary of state's office.

The final tab of $13.1 million for the Republican incumbent's ill-fated effort for a second term amounted to nearly $9 a vote for each of the 1.47 million ballots he got on Nov. 2.

Clements' final campaign report was filed Wednesday, a day before the deadline. It showed he raised $13.3 million, including $3 million in loans.

Gov.-elect Mark White's most recent report, filed seven days before the election, showed the successful Democratic challenger had spent $5.2 million and raised $6.4 million, including a $1.4 million loan.

White's final campaign expense report was expected later today. Candidates have until 5 p.m. to file the reports with the secretary of state. White, the state attorney general, received 1,697,527 votes, defeating Clements, the first Republican governor in Texas in 104 years, by 231,575, according to unofficial final returns.

The governor's final report left Clements, the wealthy founder of an oil drilling equipment company, as the second-highest spender among gubernatorial candidates in the nation's history.

Louis Lehrman, another Republican loser in November, spent $13.9 million in his bid to become governor of New York. Lehrman, former president of a drug store chain, took out $9.6 million in loans for the campaign.

Democrat Mario Cuomo, who beat Lehrman by 170,000 votes out of 5.1 million cast, spent $4.8 million and wound up with a campaign surplus of $1.2 million.

Rabies confirmed in Corpus Christi rat

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — A wild rat captured at a southside residence last week had rabies, the first confirmed case of the dreaded disease here in the past 15 years and only the second documented case of its type, authorities said.

The rodent bit a man who was working on his house, according to Dr. Larry Magnuson of the city-county health department.

"A fellow who was installing a light in his garage had a rat fall through his ceiling," Magnuson said Wednesday. "He grabbed it and it bit him. He brought the rat in to be examined and it was found to have rabies."

The rabies diagnosis was made by the State Health Department was confirmed by the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, according to Magnuson.

The man is undergoing a two-week series of anti-rabies shots, Magnuson said.

Dr. Kenneth Bernard of the CDC said finding a rabid rat is rare. One rat with rabies was found in South Carolina in 1980, he said.

Another CDC doctor, George Baer, said there had not been any documented cases of rabies in wild rats prior to the 1980 case.

Foundry, oil wells benefit each other

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

What do a foundry in Tennesee and wells in Howard County have in common?

More than you might think, for the company which made the iron castings on the pump jacks and the company which explored and developed the lease are one and the same — North American Royalties Inc.

The company's operating divisions represent two sides of the energy coin and complement each other. If the oil and gas business is down a bit, the foundry, which makes grey iron castings for the automotive industry, can pull NAR through, and vice versa.

The principal officers and directors of the Chattanooga-based corporation were honored last night by the Midland Wildcat Committee at the Petroleum Club. Midland attorney Martin Allday in on the NAR board of directors, and William P. Stewart is the Midland district manager.

Since 1947 NAR has been in the Gordon P. Street family, but the foundry division dates back to around the Civil War.

The company has been active in Texas since the 1950s. It's Midland district is the largest and most active of the company's four operating districts. Principal interests are in the Spraberry Trend, Wasson and Janice fields of Yoakum County, and 42 gas wells in Edwards County.

It is not difficult for a Tennesee company to operate in Texas, Oklahoma and Louisiana, according to president Gordon P. Street Jr., but rather, an advantage, because it keeps the company on an even keel. The fact that the majority of the company's profits come from its foundry division means that NAR doesn't have to jump every time the oil patch says jump.

"Number one, being removed from the oil patch let's us see the forest for the trees. We're not swept up in current fads. Number two, our philosophy is each division is very autonomous, in relation to how other companies operate their district offices."

In spite of being in Tennessee, NAR does not play in the Appalachian Basin. "For a company our size, we don't see the return for our investment there, that we can get elsewhere," Street explains. "That's wild country. Logistically, it's very difficult."

In fiscal 1982, which ended April 30, NAR had net sales of $111.2 million and net income of $9.5 million. Foundry sales represented $80 million of the total. Sales in the company's first quarter of fiscal 1983 were down slightly from the same quarter a year ago, but Street says both the foundry and the oil and gas division expect gradual improvements through the balance of the year.

At least half of all American-made cars, from all four car makers, have parts made at NAR's foundry — mostly brake drums, rotors and transmission castings. The company also has contracts with Volkswagen and Renault.

The foundry runs mainly on natural gas and coke — not on oil or gas found and produced by NAR, but on resources purchased from local suppliers.

Based on what he's been told and what he normally tracks in the auto industry, Street says he thinks next year will be a better one for the automotive industry.

"It will not be a great year in automotive history, but it will be better than 1982, which is a 25-year low for the industry. We've had cutbacks at the foundry, but it is probably the best foundry operation in the country. And, it's not like the industry is not making any cars. The foundry is self-supporting."

NAR enjoyed its second highest first quarter in sales and earnings for the quarter ended July 31.

There have been layoffs at the foundry, but the exploration division has maintained its fairly aggressive position.

"Nothing imposes a discipline on you more than having no business," said vice president Gordon L. Smith Jr., with the company for 35 years. "The company's success comes from very careful, close management." NAR is a public company, however, and is traded on the American Stock Exchange.

About 40 percent of NAR's oil and gas activity is for wildcats. "We'd like it to be slightly higher, but our development demands are such that we had to committ 60 percent to that," Street says.

"We're careful explorers. It's what I would call a shotgun approach. We have very specific geological prospects and we're very comfortable with our geological expertise."

Most of NAR's exploration is on trend, rather than for "rank" wildcats, he added.

Oil lease expenses were higher this past year because heavier than normal development activity left a gap the company had to fill. In fiscal '82, capital expenditures in the oil and gas division were up by 19 percent, to $25.8 million. Earlier, during the boom times, NAR pulled back from leasing activity, Street says, when leases became so expensive in dollars and net revenue interest.

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — A kind of economic suspense is building with the start of Christmas shopping, and it is more than the children wondering how generous Santa will be.

This year all economists' eyes are on holiday retail sales because many experts believe the results will show clearly whether consumers are ready and willing to spend more freely — and thereby help lead the economy out of recession.

Here are some questions and answers to help explain why the holiday sales performance is considered more critical to the economy this year than in the past:

Q. How are Christmas sales so far?

A. An Associated Press spot check last Friday, which usually is the busiest shopping day of the year, showed a heavy turnout of shoppers in most parts of the country. Retailers were optimistic that sales would surpass, at least modestly, last year's results, but they also said they did not expect a buying boom. Shoppers said they were looking harder than usual for practical gifts — and for bargain prices.

Q. Interest rates are lower now than last Christmas. Doesn't that mean people will spend more?

A. Some interest rates are lower than a year ago, but consumers have benefitted less from the decline than businesses have. The prime lending rate, which a bank quotes for a short-term business loan, is 11.5 percent compared with 16 percent a year ago. But consumers have not been so fortunate. Credit card interest rates, for example, generally are as high as a year ago. And while some consumer rates, such as those on home mortgages, have fallen, the rate on credit card purchases more directly affects retail sales.

Q. Why are economists looking at Christmas sales for signs of economic recovery?

A. In the U.S. economy, clues are crucial. And while the government's gauge of future economic activity, called the Index of Leading Indicators, has been pointing toward recovery in recent months, the evidence has been missing. The nation's industrial output has continued to fall and businesses are still cutting back on payrolls as well as major spending projects. As often occurs, that leaves the consumer to lead the way to recovery.

Q. What's holding consumers back?

A. At first glance, it would seem that people might be more than willing to spend more freely. Inflation is down to about a 5 percent annual rate — compared with 8.9 percent last year and 12.4 percent the year before — and the outlook is for continued price moderation in 1983. What's more, people's overall financial condition is judged by many economists to be usually strong. Carol Brock Kenney, an economist at the investment firm of Shearson-American Express, figures that consumers are burdened less by installment debt today than at any time in the past 30 years. But there remains a strong fear among many people that while they still are working, the recession puts their job in jeopardy.

A. Economists say it may mean financial disaster for some retailers. The Christmas season accounts for half, or more, of a year's profits for some storeowners. And even for the retailers that would survive, the implications of a weak holiday buying season would prove damaging in the longer run. That is because consumers, if unwilling to spend more freely at Christmas, may be even less unlikely to launch a spending spree in the months afterward, economists say.

'Miracle' gets good marks during test

By KINGSBURY SMITH
National Editor
The Hearst Newspapers

WASHINGTON — A government test has been completed with "positive" results on a technological "miracle" that will bring a revolutionary cost-savings and pollution-reducing breakthrough for automobiles and other oil fuel engines, according to Sherwood Webster, co-inventor of the device that promises to "revitalize" the American auto industry.

In Washington to confer with President Reagan's two top scientific advisers, Webster told the Hearst Newspapers in an exclusive interview that the government test was completed in Phoenix, Arizona, last week.

"The test was conducted by the Department of Transportation in cooperation with Chrysler Motor Company," Webster said. "A Chrysler car with the device attached was used. After the test was completed and proved positive, the car was driven Saturday by C. Boyden Gray, Vice President Bush's counsel and general counsel to the President's regulatory commission.

"Because Chrysler was the only one of the big auto manufacturers willing to cooperate with us in testing our invention, we will license Chrysler in January to be the first to use our patent. It may give them a year's edge on the other auto companies, but General Motors, Ford and all of them will have to use it.

"It will increase mileage on a gallon of gasoline by at least 20 percent, and possibly up to 30 percent.

"The test results showed that the oil consumption saving for the country if all motor vehicles now operating used the device could be 2 million barrels a day. I almost choke when I say that, but that's how the test results came out and they're certified. When this device is fully applied to aircraft engines, oil heating systems and other oil fueled systems, we will be saving many more than 2 million barrels a day.

"Boyden Gray flew to Phoenix to witness the test last week. It was kind of a secret little mission. He drove the new Chrysler with the device on it and confirmed what the test showed. I flew back to Washington with him Sunday and met Tuesday with Dr. George A. Keyworth, science adviser to the president, and a group of other scientists.

"The Phoenix test confirmed that an auto engine with our device gets more mileage power with 75 octane than high powered cars are getting with 97 octane, not to mention the 87 octane fuel that most people use.

"Our contract with the government calls for three tests. The one in Phoenix, another one to come in Denver, and the third in Texas. But it's all over as far as proving the results. The Phoenix test confirmed the conclusions of a two-year study of the invention by the Congressional Research Service of the Library of Congress. The other tests are protocol, which calls for the government and Chrysler to monitor three tests.

"When the three tests prove positive, the government, under our contract with it, must issue a statement certifying that the tests proved what we claimed the device would do. The government will probably do that the latter part of January, and then we will issue the license to Chrysler to use the little valve which causes gasoline to vaporize at low engine temperatures and to mix with incoming air. Chrysler will probably put it on their '84 model cars.

"It is a very simple device, but it's a marvel of history — almost a miracle.

"With this valve, engines will be able to use pure gasoline. No lead, no aromatics, which are carcinogenic. None of the additives which are in today's gasoline. It means much less pollution — cleaner air.

"With this valve, the auto makers can take at least half of all the pollution equipment off the cars. So engines in new cars should be at least $200 cheaper than they are now. The device calls for no change in the production line. It fits right into a hole that is already built in every engine made."

Webster said the test contract with the government ends in January, but he expects his company, the Webster-Heise Corp., will enter a new contract with the government because he has been informed the Reagan administration wishes to participate in research and development on expanded application of the device, especially for aircraft engines and other uses.

Oil marketers' president criticizes 'big oil's' ways

WASHINGTON (AP) — The president of the Texas Oil Marketers Association said today the credit card surcharge is just one method used by major oil companies to force small petroleum marketers out of business.

Bailey said the expense of honoring gasoline credit cards costs the average Texas marketer over $45,000 a year.

Bailey said refiners such as Texaco, Amoco, Exxon, Phillips, Mobil, Conoco, Cities Service, Gulf, Chevron and Kerr-McGee charge jobbers and dealers a surcharge on the companies' credit card.

Credit card surcharges have "probably been the most costly for the small businessmen we represent," Bailey said in remarks prepared for the U.S. House Subcommittee on Energy.

TOMA claims to represent over 800 independent companies who supply, own or operate chains of service stations. TOMA said the companies also supply petroleum products to the vast majority of agricultural, commercial and industrial users in Texas.

The credit card surcharge started in November 1981, Bailey said, when Texaco began assessing a 3 percent charge to all dealers or jobbers who accepted Texaco credit cards.

He said the average marketer in Texas has 14,245 credit card charges per month, and they "are trapped. They can't afford not to accept the cards, but the expense of honoring them costs the average marketer over $45,000 per year. The initial reaction of oil companies was to tell marketers and dealers to pass the cost on to the public."

In this regard, Bailey said the president of Cities Service had written TOMA on Sept. 28 saying Cities Service was "surprised by the handling of credit card charges: many are absorbing the cost instead of passing it on to the consumer. Jobbers should be more innovative and aggressive in credit charges passed through to consumers."

Bailey said "either competition or conscience won't allow the surcharge to be passed on," and only 17 percent of TOMA's members had passed on the charge to the public.

He said "discount for cash" programs such as Exxon uses is merely a "camouflage" for credit card surcharges.

Also, Bailey said, in May and June when independent marketers were experiencing shortages, "most refiners were limiting the amount of product jobbers could purchase, while allowing direct dealers to buy all they wanted — Texaco even offered its dealers a rebate program for increased sales during the shortfall."

"After 24 years in this business," Bailey told the subcommittee, "I must admit that I am shocked and dismayed at the high-handed tactics of some of the major oil companies. We estimate that 10 percent of our members have gone out of business — either through bankruptcy, mergers, or they've just closed their doors."

Building industry spending more

NEW YORK (AP) — In a new sign of recovery in the building industry, the government reports that spending on new construction rose 1.1 percent in October — the biggest increase since June.

The Commerce Department also revised Wednesday its estimate for September's construction spending to a gain of 0.9 percent from the previously reported decline of 0.2 percent. That made October the third straight month of increase.

Robert Ortner, the Commerce Department's chief economist, said he expected slower gains in building activity over the winter, but added that improvement should be greater in residential building than in commercial.

The Commerce Department said overall spending hit an annual rate of $234.9 billion.

Despite the three straight months of increase, new construction spending for the first 10 months of the year totaled just $189.9 billion, down 5 percent from the same period last year.

In October, private construction rose 0.5 percent to an annual rate of $182.9 billion. Public construction rose 3.4 percent to an annual rate of $52 billion.

Food prices up after three-month drop

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Grocery bills increased during November after three straight monthly declines, according to an Associated Press marketbasket survey which shows that higher prices for meat and eggs were to blame for much of the jump.

The AP survey covers a randomly selected list of 14 food and non-food items. The items were priced in one supermarket in each of 13 cities on March 1, 1973 and have been rechecked on or about the start of each succeeding month.

The latest survey showed that the marketbasket bill increased during November at the checklist store in eight cities, rising an average of 1.7 percent. The bill decreased in five cities, down an average of 2.2 percent. Overall, there was an average increase of two-tenths of 1 percent in the marketbasket bills last month.

During October, the marketbasket bill increased at the checklist store in only four cities and decreased in nine, for an overall drop of just under one-tenth of 1 percent. The AP survey showed the marketbasket decreased six-tenths of a percent in September and one one-hundredth of a percent in August.

Looking at prices today compared with those at the start of the year, the AP found that the marketbasket bill has increased at the checklist store in eight cities and has decreased in five. The overall average boost since the start of the year has been 3.2 percent.

Many of the bargains during the fall came at the meat counter, as retailers ran promotional specials to boost meat sales which had been lagging because of generally high prices and recession-weakened consumer demand. Industry and government economists had been predicting that the specials would not last because supplies of pork and beef have been declining, and the predictions came true in November.

The AP survey showed the price of a pound of chopped chuck, for example, increased at the checklist store in six cities last month. The price decreased in three cities and was unchanged in four cities.

Meats represented 21 percent of the items on the AP checklist, but they accounted for 31 percent of the November increases.

Egg prices also rose last month, increasing at the checklist store in seven of the cities surveyed by the AP. The price of a dozen eggs decreased in four cities and was unchanged in two.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture, which just held its annual conference on the outlook for food prices and production, is predicting that food prices alone will increase by 4.5 percent this year. That would be the smallest increase since a 3.1 percent boost in 1976. The USDA also expects a relatively small jump — between 3 percent and 6 percent — in food prices next year.

A look at the overall number of items in the AP survey showed fewer increases and decreases during November than during October. No attempt was made to weight the AP survey results according to population density or in terms of what percent of a family's actual grocery outlay each item represents.

The day of the week on which the check was made varied depending on the month. Standard brands and sizes or comparable substitutes were used and items temporarily out of stock on one of the survey dates being compared were not included in the over-all totals.

The AP did not try to compare actual prices from city to city — to say, for example, that eggs cost more in one area than another. The only comparisons were made in terms of percentages of increase or decrease — saying a particular item went up 10 percent in one city and 6 percent in another.

The items on the AP checklist were: chopped chuck, center cut pork chops, frozen orange juice concentrate, coffee, paper towels, butter, Grade-A medium white eggs, creamy peanut butter, laundry detergent, fabric softener, tomato sauce, milk, frankfurters and granulated sugar. A 15th item, chocolate chip cookies, was included on the original list, but was dropped when the manufacturer discontinued the package size used in the survey.

The cities checked were: Albuquerque, N.M., Atlanta, Boston, Chicago, Dallas, Detroit, Los Angeles, Miami, New York, Philadelphia, Providence, R.I., Salt Lake City and Seattle.

ALBUQUERQUE: The total dropped one-tenth of 1 percent, from $21.93 to $21.91. Coffee, frankfurters and sugar went up; chopped chuck, pork chops, butter, eggs, tomato sauce and milk went down; the remaining five items were unchanged.

ATLANTA: The marketbasket bill dropped 5.1 percent, from $21.39 to $20.29. Only chopped chuck and tomato sauce increased, while eggs, coffee, paper towels, butter, detergent, milk, frankfurters and sugar decreased. Pork chops, orange juice, peanut butter and fabric softener were unchanged.

BOSTON: The total rose 1.2 percent, from $19.97 to $20.21. Sugar, chopped chuck, fabric softener, eggs and tomato sauce went up; peanut butter went down. Everything else stayed the same.

CHICAGO: The bill for 12 available items went from $16.40 to $16.60, up 1.2 percent. Eggs and frankfurters were up and pork chops were down. The checklist brands and sizes of coffee and fabric softener were unavailable at the survey store. The remaining nine items were unchanged.

DALLAS: The total dropped 3.5 percent, from $21.56 to $20.81. Chopped chuck, coffee and sugar increased; peanut butter, pork chops, paper towels, milk, frankfurters and eggs decreased; the remaining five items were unchanged.

Tying yellow ribbons

Burnet fourth grade teacher Lisa Sutton hands out yellow ribbons which represented books read by students on their own time. Since the beginning of National Children's Book Week Nov. 15, the students tied a yellow ribbon 'round an old — and dead — oak tree for every 45-page book they finished at home. Wednesday, the dead branches were adorned with 123 yellow ribbons before they were untied and returned to students and the two fourth graders who read the most books were recognized.

Yellow ribbons given new meaning

Its scrawny branches may seem bare and uninspiring, but the dead oak tree that stands in the middle of Lisa Sutton's fourth grade classroom at Burnet Elementary School has led students to nurture their minds and sprout fresh ideas.

The children are expanding their knowledge by reading on their own in order to decorate the scant, skinny arms of the dead oak tree. Beginning at the first of National Children's Book Week Nov. 15, each of Ms. Sutton's students who completed reading a book have tied to the bony, brown branches bright yellow ribbons of yarn. Attached to the ribbon is a yellow piece of paper cut in the shape of an open book with the student's name, title of book, author of book and the date the book was finished written on it.

The books, which must be at least 45 pages long and accompanied by a note from a parent verifying completion, were chosen by the children and read on their own time.

According to Ms. Sutton, the ironical aspect of the project was that the children's minds would grow due to an effort to give some resemblance of life back to a deceased tree.

While the symbolic meaning of tying yellow ribbons 'round the old oak tree most likely will always be associated with the hope three years ago for a safe return of the Iranian hostages, a hope of another type originated the oak odyssey at Burnet.

"My hope was for the children to read more," Ms. Sutton said simply.

Gabe Lewis was recognized for reading the most books out of the morning class while Misty Forest received recognition from the afternoon class. Gabe completed 12 books and Misty finished 15.

The students benefited from the extra exposure to reading; the two winners received their honors and the rest of the Burnet students also came out ahead. Two books, furnished by Ms. Sutton, were donated to the school library in the names of the two winners.

To generate even more growth, for each book finished and each yellow ribbon safely secured, Ms. Sutton dished out an acorn to the student to plant at his or her home.

Meanwhile, as the child's mind grows, and the new acorn grows, the old timber, donated by Davis Garden Center and Landscaping, hasn't been cut up for kindling yet. According to Ms. Sutton, Gabe Lewis suggested continuing the reading project by "branching" in different directions.

During the holiday season, the tree looks like it still will be good "fir" something. For every book finished, a bright Christmas ornament will be made and hung on the ugly but useful branches.

MISD believes utility bills too hot to handle

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Midland and Lee High schools' September utility bills upset school board members enough to voice demands for a change during the last two regular meetings of the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees.

According to the September utility report, Lee High's bill exceeded that of it's cross-town rival by almost $5,000.

Electricity costs at Midland High nudged northward to $7,472.30, while Lee's soared somewhat further — to $12,258.55 worth of electrical expenses.

As the most frequently used building and the largest per square foot, LHS has more need and more space for cooling, heating and lighting, thus making it one of the most expensive schools in the district to operate, according to school administrators. After trustees' eyes popped at the utility report and questions were raised and answered, the board decided that other buildings which cost less to operate should be used as new centers for after-hour activities. Meanwhile, an energy management program, as well as a study of energy-saving devices, is expected to be implemented at Lee.

According to Wilson Heidelberg, director of school plant maintenance and grounds, Lee High is used more than any other school building for after-hour activities. "It is our highest-used building," Heidelberg noted. "There always is a lot of activity. Some wing is being used every night."

MISD superintendent Dr. Joseph P. Baressi Jr. said that the University of Texas of the Permian Basin conducts three or four classes a semester about two nights a week there, while the new inservice program for MISD teachers also increases the use of the building.

"The new inservice format provides a variety of inservice programs at night or on the weekends," Baressi explained. "We've done about 100 and at least half of those have been at Lee."

The convenient location of the school on West Neeley Avenue and the large parking lot attract programs to Lee, he added.

"(LEE'S COSTS are greater than Midland High's) mainly because of the building architecture and the use of the school at nights and on weekends," Heidelberg told trustees during the Nov. 23 school board meeting. He later explained that while Lee has mechanical rooms in each section of the school, Midland High, being two-story, retains heating and cooling more economically. "Lee also has more demand for electricity during the peak-use hours than does Midland," he added.

According to Sara St. Clair with the customer service department at Texas Electric Service Co., the electricity rate is determined in the same manner at both schools.

"Both schools would be billed at the same rate," she explained. "It's not so many cents per kilowatt hour. All rates are based on the exact cost in steps."

The schools in Midland are billed on a general service rate, which is the most advantageous for school accounts, she said. A customer charge, a charge for electricity demand and a charge for the kilowatt hours are included in the general service rate.

"If they (the two schools) used the same amount of electricity, their bills would be the same," Mrs. St. Clair said. However, she added, the bills vary according to the following: how many kilowatt hours are used, what the school's highest demand is and what the school's electricity needs are during TESCO's peak demand period.

THE SCHOOL'S highest demand is determined by its largest requirement for electricity during any 15-minute period. She explained that a special meter measures the 15-minute period of use at any given time and that if the next 15-minute period of time requires more electricity, the meter automatically determines that.

Another factor which determines the rate of bills is the school's largest demand for electricity that it requires during any 15-minute period of time between June and October, or TESCO's peak demand period.

She explained that from any customer's home or business, the lines running down the alley and under the ground to TESCO's generating plants must be able to fulfill the capacity needs of each customer during the peak hours for the plant.

"The rate needs to be designed so that we only charge him (a customer) what it costs us to serve him," she explained. "The idea is everything we have to do to serve him goes into the bill. We have to have enough capacity to serve him even if he only needs it 15 minutes during that peak period (between June and October)."

Mrs. St. Clair added that some accounts are more advantageous to the school district than others. "For example, they may have a vocational building on another rate," she said. "We monitor the schools all year long to see if an alternate rate would be more advantageous to them."

AND WHILE THE electricity rate at Lee may be the most advantageous for the school district, plans for an energy maintenance program will begin soon, according to Heidelberg.

"We're going to use energy-saving devices," he said. "We've already changed the roof. It used to have a gravel roof but now it has a reflecting one that looks like aluminum. There are different types of window panes that are thermal that we can install. It (an energy-saving device) does pay itself out but, up front, it's very costly.

MISD's current utility bill for September, including gas, water and electricity, is $128,310.46. During September of last year, the bill was $88,863.37. The August 1982 utility bill was $77,499.89.

Budget changes hurt Basin agency

By VINCE GIORGI

Tamra Oatman, executive director of Planned Parenthood of the Permian Basin, said that as family planning and other social services lose government money — as they have under the Reagan administration's New Federalism program — the resulting vicious circle is measureable in human suffering and despair.

Recent reductions in government funds forced the closing of Planned Parenthood clinics in McCamey and Wink, according to Ms. Oatman. Small clinics like those in Fort Stockton and Monahans are also threatened as budget cuts continue gobbling into revenues.

Since many women in need of family planning are unable to afford a doctor's services, the closing of a small town's clinic can rapidly lead to additional unwanted pregnancies, followed by a greater incidence of child abuse, later compounded by any number of related social problems, she said.

"We, like most other social service organizations, have experienced continued cutbacks over the past several years," she said. "It's a vicious circle. I don't like the fact that the people who suffer will be in the rural areas."

Planned Parenthood served about 12,000 patients in fiscal year 1982, and expects more in 1983. To stretch its already taut budget and keep small clinics operating, Planned Parenthood departed from past policy Monday and began operating Midland's family planning facility, at 307 E. Texas Ave., as a "self-sustaining clinic."

Ms. Oatman said Planned Parenthood hopes to offset the clinic's expenses by charging a $30 fee of all clinic patients. With patient fees sustaining Midland's clinic, government funds once devoted to the facility may be spread among the other eight area clinics, she explained.

Traditionally, Planned Parenthood patients pay on a sliding fee scale, with variable rates dependent on income and family size. Until recent years, an overwhelming majority of the operating funds were derived from government appropriations.

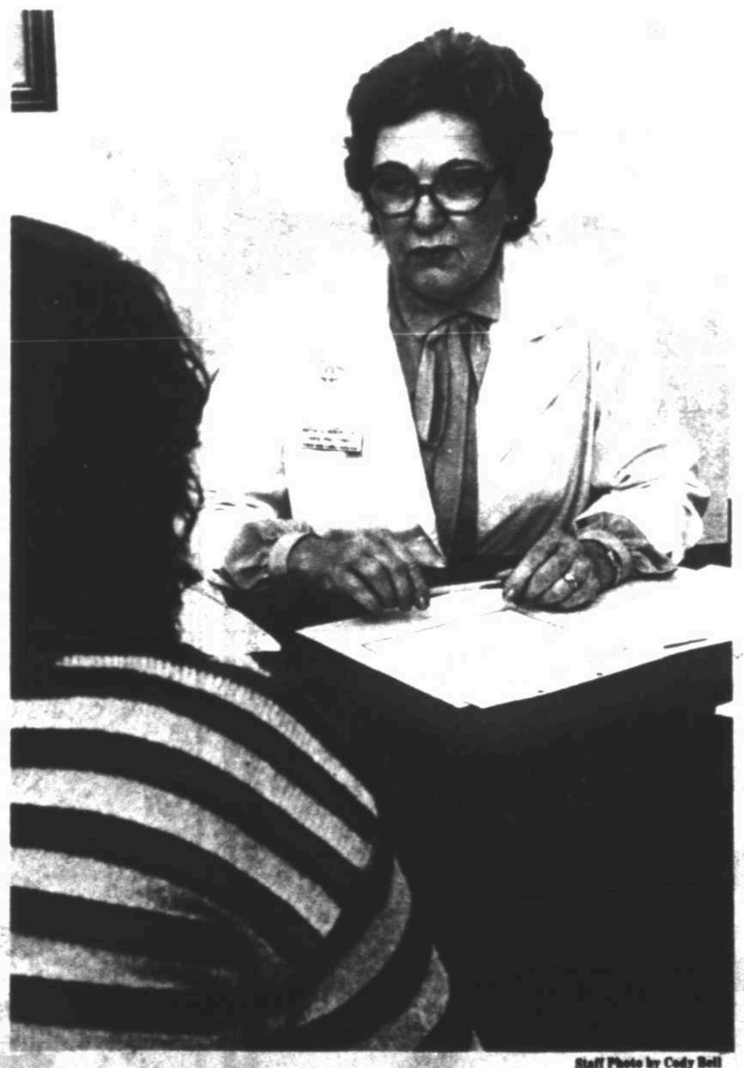

But while federal funds accounted for 72 percent of the 1982 budget, Ms. Oatman said the figure has declined to 55 percent for fiscal year 1983 and may slip further in years ahead.

After sustaining more than $200,000 in budget reductions in the past two years, Planned Parenthood's budget for 1983 sits at about $850,000, she said.

Even with the clinic closings, revenues trailed expenses, according to Ms. Oatman. "We decided the only other way to bring in that revenue is through patient fees," she said.

Despite the funding crunch, Ms. Oatman said she's optimistic about the future of Midland's self-sufficient clinic, a Planned Parenthood-owned facility.

Inmate contends his jailing illegal

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A convicted rapist who says he was coerced into pleading guilty just before a jury was to consider the evidence in his rape case 1½ years ago has filed a petition of habeas corpus in federal court in Midland contending he is illegally held in prison.

The petitioner, David Robin Pickle, 25, was sentenced to 30 years in prison by 238th State District Court Judge Vann Culp in June 1981 after he confessed to raping and committing sodomy with a young woman on March 24, 1981, in an apartment complex where his wife was the manager. Pickle admitted using a master key to open the woman's apartment door lock, then broke into her apartment by tearing away the night latch and threatened the woman with a rifle. In his statement, he said he had been drinking beer heavily that night.

In his five-point federal complaint, Pickle is alleging illegal search and seizure, violation of his constitutional rights, ineffective counsel, unlawful judgment and false indictment.

His complaint deals with David Joers, first assistant district attorney who prosecuted the case; court-appointed attorneys Sandy Torres and Gayle Newman, who represented him in the case; Judge Culp and Frank Bartlett, the Midland Police Department detective who investigated the case. Pickle refers to the detective as "Batlet" or "Bartlet."

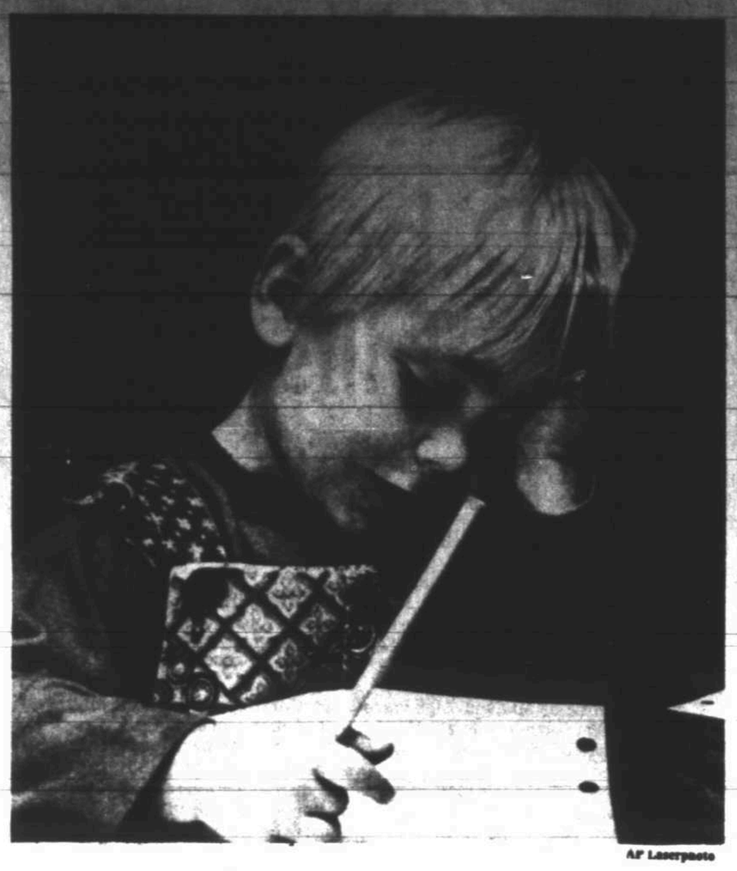

"I was forsed (sic) to plead guilty after my trial had started," Pickle says in his federal petition.

Pickle, who claims he was a victim of injustice, cites the following examples to prove his contention.

—Ineffective counsel: "My loryors (sic) Sandy Torres and Gayle Newman allowed the court to use illegaly (sic) obtained evidence against me without any objections. They also told me if I didn't cop-out, I would get 99 years in prison." Pickle claims that Torres told his mother that "I was guilty as hell...He also added that he was not doing anything to defend me."

—Illegal search and seizure: "The judge told Midland police to get a search warrant before searching my apt. (sic) but they didn't. They broke into my apt.

Beth Hartman seems to be having trouble starting her letter to Santa. It might be because the two-year-old hasn't learned to read or write yet and will probably end up having Mom or Dad do the job for her. However, Mom and Dad decided to let Beth have a go at it, and a letter with markings by the little girl is now on its way to the North Pole.

Reagan budget cutbacks mean change for agency

"I'm excited because I think it's an exciting new concept to run a self-sustaining clinic. The first two days have been great," she said. "Family planning clinics throughout the country are going to this."

For the $30 fee, a nurse practitioner performs a comprehensive physical on Midland patients. Ms. Oatman said the exam includes a pap smear and screening tests for venereal disease, anemia and diabetes. She said patients also may receive instruction in breast self-examination, pregnancy testing and information concerning birth control, adoption and abortion.

Surprisingly, Ms. Oatman said the loss of government money has some disguised blessings, partly because the fickle nature of government funding makes planning difficult. Also, federal funds carry several strings, including mandatory, multi-step education and counseling for each patient.

Emphasizing patient fees as a revenue source "gives us more control; it gives the community more control," she said. "Every patient's needs are different. When you're running your own program, you can tailor your service to the individual."

For example, return visitors to the Midland clinic could bypass much of the time-consuming counseling and allow additional time for first-time patients, she said.

Despite her optimism, Ms. Oatman said patient fees and private donations — the two sources of funding likely to replace government money — may not be enough to meet expenses.

Ms. Oatman said Reeves County and the city of Pecos recently combined to buoy the Pecos clinic. She said further help from local governments may be necessary to avert clinic closings.

In November, Planned Parenthood began monitoring the balance sheets of individual clincs. Ms. Oatman said a clinic unable to generate 40 percent of its required revenue may face extinction.

while I was out of town. They took my gun and some pictures. Then they used the gun against me in court. I proved in court it was illegal to use the gun against me because they did not have a search warrant when they broke into my apt. and took my gun. But they used the gun against me in court anyway."

—Violation of constitutional rights: Detective Bartlett violated my rights by not letting me have a loryor during questioning. He took my statement but when I got to court, he had a different statement."

—Unlawful judgment: "When I went to court, Judge Van (sic) Culp allowed the D.A. to use false and illegaly obtained evidence in his court to send me to prison. They used a gun from a (sic) illegal search and seizure and a false illegaly obtained statement...Judge Van Culp let them make a mockery of justice."

—False indictment: "I was indited (sic) for aggravated rape. They took a gun from my apt. without a search warrant and used it against me. They didn't take any spirm (sic) or blood test. There is no proof of sexual intercourse. So there couldn't have been any rape, and without any rape, the indictment is false. There are no eye witneses (sic) so the statements are heresay (sic) and heresay is not admisable (sic) in a court of law."

Pickle's case to win his freedom is to be considered by U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton, who presides over the Midland-Odessa Division of the federal court system's Western District of Texas.

AUSTIN (AP) — U.S. District Judge James Nowlin has ruled that thousands of inmates in county jails across the state are members of a class action suit against the Texas Commission on Jail Standards, the agency which enforces jail regulations.

The class action, filed in 1980, was brought by three Bell County residents who were arrested in 1977 at the Texas Blue Bonnet Club for public intoxication and disorderly conduct and taken to Bell County Jail. The plaintiffs say they were falsely arrested and the jail was substandard because the state jail commission had not used its power to clean up Texas jails.

Mary Keller, director of the Texas chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union, which filed the case, said Nowlin's ruling acknowledged the scope of issues raised in the federal suit.

"The suit is about the systematic failure of the state agency to protect inmates' rights," Ms. Keller said.

Attorney General Mark White's office opposed the class certification on the grounds that it would require evidence on 250 jails across the state while running up "horrendous" legal bills.

Sunset commission will decide officials' fate

AUSTIN (AP) — The state Sunset Advisory Commission meets today to debate whether Public Utility Commissioners should be elected rather than appointed and whether Railroad Commissioners should be appointed rather than elected.

The Sunset Commission, made up of legislators and other state officials, is assigned to review state agencies periodically and either recommend that the Legislature abolish them, make changes in the way they operate or leave them alone.

The contradictory proposals are among dozens concerning the PUC and Railroad Commission that will be considered when the Sunset Commission continues meeting.

On Wednesday, the commission could not agree on reorganization of the State Depository Board and it simply ignored innovative suggestions about insurance regulation and a proposal to make being a Texas Employment Commissioner a part-time job.

The panel failed to pass a proposal by Sunset commissioner and Supreme Court Justice Sears McGee to allow the State Board of Insurance to charge insurance companies fees to support the costs of regulating them.

A staff "issue" — not a recommendation — would abolish the state's system of setting insurance rates in favor of simply letting the market take its course. The commission ignored the idea.

The commission also declined to vote on a staff proposal that would have allowed the insurance board to penalize companies that are slow to settle claims and the panel voted down a proposal to establish a consumer information WATS line.

The Depository Board, made up of the state treasurer, banking commissioner and one gubernatorial appointee, sets the interest rate paid by banks holding state money. The Sunset Commission had two alternatives to work with Wednesday.

Under the first proposal developed by the Sunset staff, the board would be abolished and the state treasurer would handle its chores. Commission members voted 5-3 in favor of that proposal, but it takes six votes to make a recommendation to the Legislature.

The second plan would have added the comptroller and two additional appointees to the board. That plan drew a 4-4 vote, which killed it.

The commission unanimously approved a recommendation to give the depository board more flexibility in deciding where to deposit state money. Current law requires the board to put at least $5,000 in any bank willing to pay the interest rate set by board members. Over 1,400 banks now hold state money.

Board members would be allowed to restrict the state deposits to "centally located" banks, if lawmakers approve the commission proposal.

Sunset Commissioners failed, however, to approve a recommendation that would allow the board to take competitive bids for state deposits.

Tree-lighting festival set for Friday

The 15th annual Christmas tree-lighting festival will be held Friday at 7 p.m. at the Downtown Plaza Park, Wall Avenue and Loraine Street. The event is cosponsored by the Midland Parks and Recreation Department and the Midland Jaycees.

According to the Parks and Recreation Department, the tree is one of the largest man-made trees in Texas at 75 feet tall with 300 branches and 2,500 lights. It is constructed entirely of live branches cut in the national forest in Cloudcroft, N.M.

Mayor G. Thane Akins will turn the tree's lights on at about 7:05 p.m. There will be Christmas music by the Lee Freshman Band and a presentation by the drama department.

There will be free pony rides, two large fire pits to keep everyone warm, free hot chocolate and, of course, an appearance by Santa Claus.

Clayton: Tax increase possible

AUSTIN (AP) — Speaker Bill Clayton, who is leaving office in January, says the 1983 Legislature may have to adopt the first tax increase in 10 years.

DEATHS

Scott Baker

Services for Scott Baker, 10, of rural Midland will be at 10 a.m. Friday at the Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. Harold Condra, minister of the Church of God of the Union Assembly of Odessa, officiating. Burial will follow at Fairview Cemetery.

He died Monday night following a car-pedestrian accident on the south service road of Interstate 20.

He was born April 29, 1972, in Danville, Ill. He moved with his family to Midland a year ago from Hoopeston, Ill. He was a student at Henderson Elementary School.

Survivors include his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Leonard P. Baker of Midland; seven brothers, Gary Baker of Brunswick, Maine, William A. Baker of Sheldon, Ill., Bryan Baker of Milford, Ill., Jerry Joe Baker, Danny L. Baker, Mark Baker and Ralph Baker, all of Midland; six sisters, Shelly Baker and Rhonda Baker, both of Midland, Vonna Baker and Julie Baker, both of Hoopeston, Ill., and Sharon Baker and Delores Baker, both of Pekin, Ill.; and his grandfather, Sterling Baker of Hoopeston, Ill.

Lewis Moss

Services for Lewis Moss, 68, of rural Midland are pending under the direction of the Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home.

He was born May 6, 1914, in Albany. He lived his early life in Breckenridge. In the early 1930s, he moved to Midland and then resided in a number of places, including California for 11 years and Albuquerque, N.M. He returned to Midland in 1956. He married Thelma Brooks of Stamford in 1938.

Survivors include his wife of Midland; three sons, Gary Grant Moss of Abilene, Joe Moss of Malaysia, and Jerry Lynn Moss of Midland; two daughters, Sandra Lew Evans of Broken Arrow, Okla., and Joyce Snider of Midland; a brother, Travis Moss of Midland; six sisters, Agatha Lochby of Snyder, Idras Barnes of Longview, Donna Louise Dunmeyer of Oklahoma City, Okla., Pat Blew of Albany, Janie Parkhurst and LaGene Posey, both of Grand Prairie; and 11 grandchildren.

Gene Richter

ODESSA — Services for Gene Richter, 45, of Odessa and formerly of Lamesa were to be at 10 a.m. today in Hubbard-Kelly Funeral Home Chapel in Odessa. Graveside services were to be at 2 p.m. today in Lamesa Memorial Cemetery.

Richter died Tuesday in an Odessa hospital following a brief illness.

He was born March 11, 1937, in Lamesa and was married to Jan Yarborough on Aug. 18, 1978, in Ruidosa, N.M. He was an automobile mechanic and a country-western musician.

Survivors include his wife; two daughters, Connie Richter and Cindy Richter, both of Odessa; four sons, Nicky Richter of Lamesa, Glynn Richter of Alexander, Ark., Tony Richter of Odessa and Steven Richter of Denver City; his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Richter of Lamesa; a sister, Elaine Githens of Big Spring; five brothers, Billy Richter and Don Richter, both of Midland, and Bobby Richter, Charlie Richter and Leon Richter, all of Lamesa; and three grandchildren.

W.J. Watkins

Services for W.J. "Pete" Watkins, 55, of 1302 S. K St., were Wednesday at the Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. Bob Porterfield, minister of the West Kentucky Baptist Church, officiating. Burial was at Resthaven Memorial Park.

Watkins died Monday morning in a Midland hospital following an extended illness.

AUSTIN (AP) — The end of a term and illness leaves only one of three Texas employment commissioners on the job and, since he can't act alone, unemployment benefit claims are being held up at the rate of 225 a week.

"We're a week behind, and we'll be two weeks behind by the end of this week — about 450," Commissioner Kenneth Clapp said Wednesday.

Former chairman Nolan Ward's term expired Nov. 20, and Clapp said Ward chose to open a law practice rather than stay on the commission until Gov. Bill Clements appoints his successor.

Commissioner Richard Mellado had a heart attack during the commission's Nov. 9 meeting and has not returned to work.

Clapp said he had heard Clements was on the verge of appointing a new commissioner, but the governor's press secretary, Jon Ford, said Clements is not even scheduled to meet with staffers who screen appointments until next Wednesday.

Ford also mentioned that possible appointees might not be too anxious to accept a position in view of recent Senate opposition to late-hour gubernatorial appointments.

Clements, who was defeated in November, goes out of office next month.

Man held in connection with shooting

ODESSA — One man is in custody following a Wednesday night shooting incident that stemmed from an argument over a card game.

The victim, 32-year-old Joe Neil Slider of Odessa, was listed in stable condition at Medical Center Hospital this morning.

Police said he was shot once in the back during an argument with a man he had been playing cards with behind a car repair shop in the 1300 block of East 2nd Street shortly after 11 p.m.

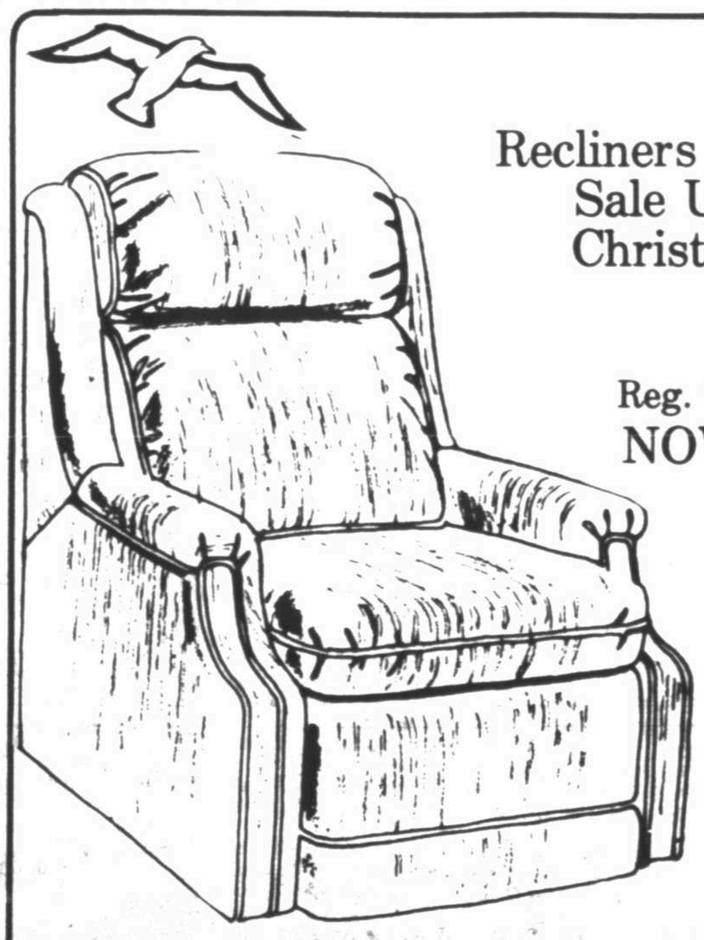

Slider ran from the scene and collapsed near the intersection of 2nd and Dixie, about a half-block from where the shooting took place. Formal charges of aggravated assault are expected to be filed against the suspect sometime today.

Centenary's Eric Woodard (52) and SMU's Jon Koncak (53) scramble for rebound as Mustangs win 76-75 squeaker at Dallas.

Chaps Classic opens tonight

It was so long ago, it almost seems like last season since the Midland College Chaparrals played their last game in Al Langford Chaparral Center.

Actually, it has been just shy of a month, but a lot has happened in the interim. Best of all, the Chaps have won six more games, giving them eight wins for the season. Worst of all, the Chaps saw their 29-game winning streak severed by Trinidad, Colo., during last week's Amarillo Classic.

As a result, MC brings a three-game streak into the three-day Chaparral Classic, which begins at 5:30 p.m. today at the Chap Center.

It's a classic rather than a tournament and the difference is that winners do not advance against winners, but the six teams involved play a set schedule. What it amounts to is three Western Junior College Conference teams (Midland, Odessa College and Howard College) playing host to three outlanders. The WJCC members figure they see enough of one another during the regular season and they'd just as soon not do any hand-tipping before meeting in games that count in WJCC standings.

Single admission tickets for each night's tripleheader are $3.25 for reserve seats. General admission is $3 per night and GA for children and high school students is $1. Season reserved seats remain on sale this week. The price is $30 each.

In tonight's action, St. Philip's meets Midland in the 7:30 p.m. game while Ranger and Odessa clash at 5:30 and Barton meets Howard at 9:30.

Friday, Howard-St. Philip's tip off at 5:30, MC plays Ranger at 7:30 and Barton faces Odessa at 9:30.

Saturday's games will begin at 4 p.m. with St. Philip's-Odessa while Howard-Ranger begins at 6 p.m. and Midland faces Barton County at 8 p.m.

MC Athletic Director Delnor Poss predicts, "there should be good games each night. Both Odessa College and Howard College recruited well this year and will be tough in the conference. St. Philip's has been improving its program each year. Barton split with the Chaps last year and they gave us fits in their tournament two weeks ago before we won by two points, 81-79."

About 80 fans will follow the Kansans to West Texas.

In their only action this week, MC opened WJCC play with a come-from-behind victory over Clarendon and will plunge into league action in earnst next week with three games, hosting New Mexico College Monday and traveling to New Mexico Military Institute Thursday and Levelland to play South Plains on Saturday.

Wildcats convince Digger, 58-45

By Associated Press

Whether playing in Louisville, Ky., or South Bend, Ind., the Kentucky basketball team has been beating up on Notre Dame for some years now.

And the beat went on Wednesday night.

Virtually toying with the Irish at Notre Dame's Athletic Convocation Center, the third-ranked Wildcats cruised to a 58-45 victory and drew this amazed response from Notre Dame Coach Digger Phelps:

"Kentucky doesn't need Sam Bowie. They're better than they were in 1978 (when the Wildcats won the NCAA championship). We played three different defenses and couldn't stop them."

BOWIE, the injured 7-foot forward on the shelf for another year, surely wasn't needed as the Wildcats wrapped up another decision over the Irish — their 25th in the last 29 games. Most of those were played on "neutral" ground in Louisville until Phelps got fed up with the situation and had the series moved back to home-and-home sites.

Derrick Hord scored 18 points to lead the Wildcats, who made 75 percent of their shots, both from the field and foul line.

"Kentucky's a very good shooting team," said Phelps.

"We shot especially well tonight," said Kentucky Coach Joe B. Hall. "I don't know what we shot in the second half but when you shoot 75 percent in the first half, you know you will win a lot of games. I thought we did a good job of keeping our composure in the hectic moments of the game. Hord played a super game. He did a good job in directing our offense."

KENTUCKY took a five-point lead at halftime, 24-19. The Wildcats then hit their first five shots of the second half, including three baskets by Jim Master, and built an 11-point lead before John Paxson led a final Notre Dame rally that fell short.

In other action involving the nation's Top Twenty teams, top-ranked Virginia defeated James Madison 51-34, No. 5 Memphis State routed St. Louis University 75-56, No. 7 Louisville belted Santa Clara 84-56, No. 11 Houston tripped Mississippi State 74-65, 12th-ranked St. John's walloped Columbia 72-45, 14th-ranked Tennessee stopped Tennessee-Chattanooga 55-49, No. 16 Arkansas defeated Texas-San Antonio 78-59 and No. 17 Marquette hammered Florida A&M 91-58.

"Our shots weren't going in, but our defense still played great," said Virginia Coach Terry Holland. "Any time you can hold the other team to that low of a production, you know your defense is doing the job."

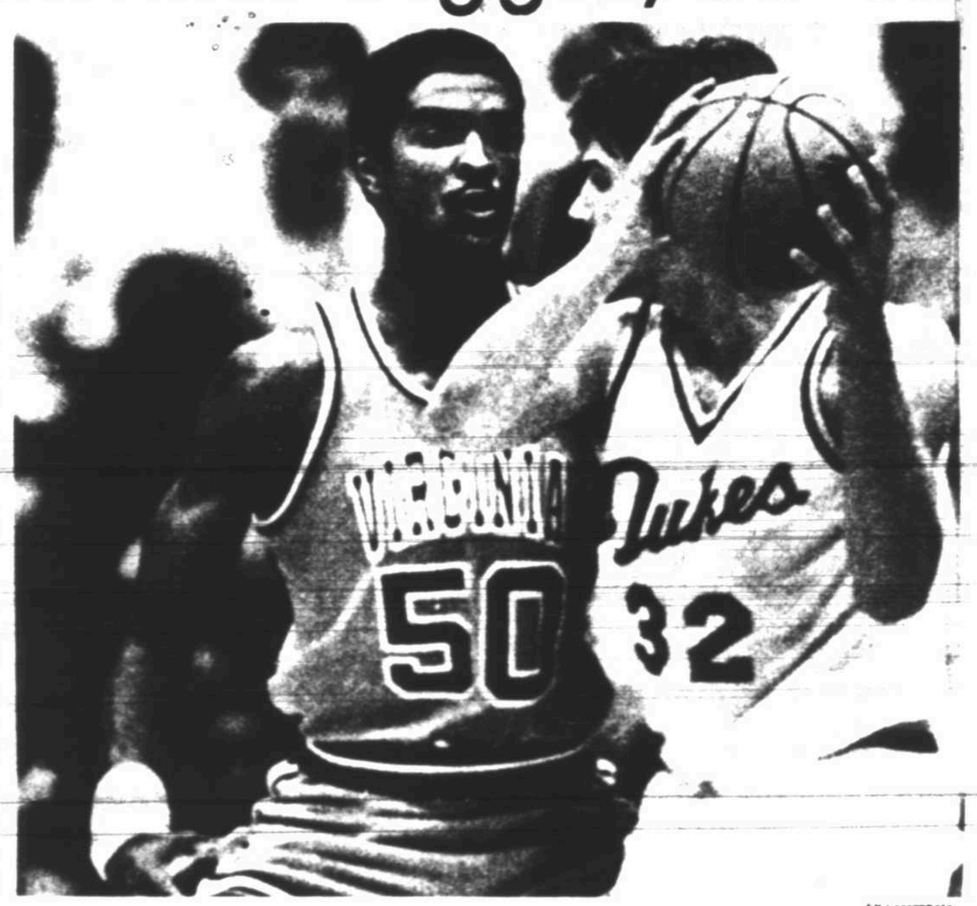

The Cavaliers held James Madison to its lowest point total since the school started its intercollegiate basketball program in 1969. The Dukes' 26.8 percent shooting standard from the floor was also their worst ever.

KEITH LEE scored 19 points and Phillip Haynes added 18 to power Memphis State over St. Louis.

After trailing 32-19 at the half, St. Louis pulled within nine at 36-27 in the first 2½ minutes of the second half. ButBaskerville Holmes scored a free throw, Lee hit a basket and Holmes scored another field goal to put the Tigers on top 41-27 and the Billikens never threatened again.

"We shot well — particularly in the first half,and we executed very good," said Memphis State Coach Dana Kirk. "Our defense was excellent. St. Louis couldn't do what they wanted to."

Rodney McCray had nine rebounds, five assists, five steals and 14 points and Lancaster Gordon scored 17 points to pace Louisville over Santa Clara. McCray and Gordon were two of six Cardinal players in double figures, while none of the Broncos managed to reach double figures.

Arkansas, Baylor, SMU post victories

By The Associated Press

Arkansas, Baylor and Southern Methodist came out victorious in the latest round of play against non-conference basketball rivals, but only after last-minute heroics in two cases and a strong second-half blitz in the third.

Jay Shakir snared the rebound on his own missed basket and scored with less than two minutes to play Wednesday night as Baylor edged Alabama-Birmingham 56-55 in Waco.

Freshman Carl Wright hit the first end of a one-and-one free throw to push the Mustangs to a 76-75 win over Centenary in Dallas.

Razorback Guard Darrell Walker scored 13 of his 20 points in the second half as Arkansas came back to defeat Texas-San Antonio 78-59 in a game played at Fayetteville.

Walker, who led all scorers, keyed the Razorback surge as Arkansas, 2-0, outscored the Roadrunners 33-12 in the first 15 minutes of the second half. He got help from Robert Brannon, who came off the bench to score 10 of his 12 points in the second half.

Texas-San Antonio led 31-29 at the half. John Stiver scored 12 to lead the Roadrunners, who fell to 1-3.

Baylor, 3-0, trailed 10-1 early in the game and 28-25 at the half. The lead changed hands 17 times in the second half before Shakir, who led Baylor with 16 points, put the Bears ahead to stay.

Alabama-Birmingham, 1-2 for the season, was led by Luellen Foster's 15 points and Anthony Gordon's 11.

Wright's winning free throw for the Mustangs, now 2-0, was set up when he drew a blocking foul from Willie Jackson.

Jackson led all scorers with 30 points. Larry Davis pulled down 12 rebounds and scored 16 for the Mustangs.

Centenary fell to 1-2 for the season.

Rams face 49ers tonight

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Vince Ferragamo takes over again as the starting quarterback for the Los Angeles Rams to perform on TV tonight against the arch-enemy San Francisco 49ers.

He takes over from Bert Jones, who started the four previous games this season after being acquired from Baltimore. Jones, suffering from an irritated nerve in his left arm, was ordered sidelined by the team physician.

San Francisco quarterback Joe Montana, who helped carry the 49ers to the Super Bowl victory early this year, hasn't been hit by the rash of injuries that struck so many of his teammates this year.

Both the Rams and 49ers have 1-3 records, and San Francisco Coach Bill Walsh terms this a "must" game for his club.

"I don't think any team can go 1-4 and make the playoffs," he said.

Coach Ray Malavasi of the Rams finally was pleased with his club's showing last Sunday in the 20-14 victory over the Kansas City Chiefs.

"We played with intensity," said the coach who last week told the media that some of Rams weren't playing to their full ability.

Although he had expected to start Jones, the Rams coach knows full well the ability of Ferragamo. The former Nebraska quarterback took over in 1979 from an injured Pat Haden and the Rams reached the Super Bowl.

Haden started the first game of the following campaign and broke a finger. Again Ferragamo took over and finished the season with the first string. He spent 1981 in Canada after a contract hassle and rejoined the Rams this year after Jones had been signed.

Ferragamo saw brief action in the fourth quarter last Sunday but didn't throw a pass. Before that, he had thrown 17 times with 11 completions and one touchdown. In 1980 he had set club records for completions with 240; passing yards, 3,199; touchdown passes, 30; and completion percentage, 59.4.

A year ago, as San Francisco surprised the league, Montana was named the most valuable player in Super Bowl XVI after the 49ers beat Cincinnati 26-21.

During the season he had completed 311 of 488 passes for 3,565 yards and 19 touchdowns with 12 interceptions. This season, he has 100 completions in 159 throws, again with a percentage over 60. Nine have gone for touchdowns and five have been intercepted.

Looking toward the 49ers, Malavasi said, "They have a better pass rush than Kansas City. They play a multiple front with three or four men up front."

Malavasi was pleased his own defense held the Chiefs' Joe Delaney to 69 net yards rushing, and also that the Rams' new middle linebacker, Jim Collins, had shown improvement. Collins, a second-year pro from Syracuse, became a regular when veteran Carl Ekern suffered a knee injury.

By JERRY CROWE-CHRIS BAKER
The Washington Post
and Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — When his top-seeded high school team was upset two seasons ago in the opening round of the California Interscholastic Federation baseball playoffs, junior pitcher Dan O'Dell was so disappointed he skipped the last month of school.

O'Dell went back to school last fall, got passing grades in four classes and played again last spring, earning All-CIF recognition.

But when most of his classmates graduated in June, O'Dell did not. Although he had remained academically eligible for sports, he had failed to earn enough credits to graduate.

O'Dell, one of the leading pitchers and hitters in Southern California last season, didn't think he needed to graduate. He expected to be drafted by a major league club. But he wasn't.

Now he's attending a junior college, trying to earn the equivalent of a high school diploma and continuing his playing career, hoping one day to get a shot at the pros.

ATHLETES LIKE O'Dell are the subject of a growing debate on whether to toughen the minimum academic standards for high school athletes.

In Los Angeles, Rita Walters, a member of the city's Board of Education, has proposed that a C grade average be made mandatory for all students in the Los Angeles Unified School District who take part in extracurricular activities. Her proposal will be put to a school board vote Monday.

Walters is critical of the academic standards for eligibility established by the CIF, which enable an athlete to play while all but flunking out of school. All the CIF requires for eligibility is four passing grades in the previous grading period. Thus, a student could get four D's and two F's and still play.

But the CIF, prompted by the growing concern of high school administrators, has begun a statewide review of its standards. It may vote on the issue as early as next February for implementation in the 1982-83 school year.

While Walters and many other educators believe that academic standards should be raised, others say an athlete who loses his eligibility will also lose his desire to stay in school. Teachers would not be able to help those who need it most.

THOSE WHO favor raising the standards argue that many athletes have lost sight of their reason for being in school, that they are placing athletics above academics. And they say that coaches, pressured to win at any cost, are encouraging athletes to do so.

They note that of the 320,000 California high school students who compete in athletics — one of every four, by CIF estimate — fewer than 5 percent earn athletic college scholarships. They say a diploma is more important than a high school athletic career.

Those who favor the status quo say that if the standards are raised, athletes may take easier classes to maintain their grade-point average and, in the long run, they will receive less education.

OUTSIDE California, there already has been some action. Here are highlights:

The Milwaukee school board, responding to pressure from several local black groups, voted last summer to raise the eligibility standard for athletes at 16 high schools to a 1.5 grade-point average, which is midway between a C and a D average. Wisconsin merely requires that a student pass three classes in the preceding semester.

The Milwaukee board also put in an attendance clause, with one unexcused absence from school making an athlete ineligible.

At the end of the first grading period two weeks ago, 498 athletes in five sports — football, cross-country, soccer, girls volleyball and girls tennis — were declared academically ineligible. A district official said more athletes will likely be ruled ineligible after the attendance clause goes into effect in December.

AND, A district survey has shown that participation in athletics has declined since the new eligibility standard went into effect. A survey before school opened showed that 1,600 of the 6,660 students who planned to go out for sports didn't meet the 1.5 grade-point average requirement.

After the 12 high schools in Rochester, N.Y., instituted an eligibility policy requiring a C average for participation in athletics three years ago, about half of all the basketball players in the district were ruled ineligible.

Sixty-one of the 123 basketball players in the district, or 49.6 percent, didn't meet the standard.

At one school alone, 18 of the 23 players on the basketball team were ruled academically ineligible.

Rochester also has citizenship and attendance clauses, under which an athlete must have an 80 percent attendance record in each class. A district spokesman said the school board is considering raising the standard to a 90 percent attendance record.

NC State's Kiffin resigns football post

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina State football coach Monte Kiffin, citing a lack of support from the school's athletic director, announced his resignation Wednesday in the "best interest" of the school.

"Quite honestly, I do not feel that the support I have received from the Athletic Department was sufficient to my needs and the needs of the football program," Kiffin said. "And further I cannot find the assurance from the Athletic Director (Willis Casey) that such support will be forthcoming in the future."

Kiffin had coached the Wolfpack for three years, but the team's inability to get beyond the 6-5 won-loss barrier placed his job in jeopardy. The 42-year-old Nebraska graduate gave up his quest for an extension of his contract after two weeks of speculation.

The end came at 2:30 p.m. Wednesday after Kiffin had met with N.C. State Chancellor Bruce R. Poulton from noon until 12:25 p.m. Poulton and Casey met for about 30 minutes, then Kiffin called a news conference to make the announcement.

Poulton said Kiffin's resignation had not been requested, but a Raleigh newspaper quoted a top official in the Wolfpack Club as saying had Kiffin been rehired, there would have been substantial reductions in the amount of money contributed to the school.

"It (the football program) would have lost support very fast," said Clifton L. Benson of Raleigh, the club's secretary-treasurer.

"I thought the football program was going down and it was definitely the football coach's fault," he said. "The team was not any better at the end of the season than the first day he came here."

Wednesday's meetings and subsequent resignation capped two weeks of speculation about Kiffin's fate. When the Wolfpack defeated Duke late in the season, it was thought to have been a turning point for Kiffin's future. Those prospects dimmed, however, when the Wolfpack dropped a 41-3 decision to Miami in its last game of the season.

While at N.C. State, Kiffin compiled a 16-17 record, including a 6-5 records in his first and third seasons.

Before he came to Raleigh, he was an assistant coach at Arkansas from 1977 to 1979. Kiffin also was assistant coach at Nebraska, where he played college football, from 1969 to 1976 and was assistant freshman coach from 1967 to 1968.

Kiffin played two years of professional football in the Canadian Football League.

Bridgers twins keep 'em guessing

By DENNIS LATTA
Albuquerque Journal

ALBUQUERQUE (AP) — When the University of New Mexico needed an athletic director three years ago, it went all the way to Tallahassee, Fla., to hire John Bridgers.

Well, he isn't really the same man, but he sure looks like him — Frank Bridgers is his name and he's John's identical twin. You have to know them well to tell them apart.

Frank has been an engineer in Albuquerque for nearly 32 years. He hahd no problems with his identity until brother John moved to town. Now, he frequently answers to John's name and for John's decisions.

But that's something the two have done for years.

Because John has been a coach most of his life, he's been a public figure. He was head coach at Baylor and coached in the pros before going to Florida State. And when Frank visited his brother, he had to put up with people thinking he was John.

However, the twins have managed to take advantage of the situation at times:

— AFTER high school, both wanted to play college football at Auburn. "We went down to Auburn for a tryout on a Saturday and they asked some of us to stay over until Monday," said John. "When Monday came, Frank was two-thirds sick and was afraid he wouldn't get another chance.

"We'd line up and block the coaches. Then we'd tackle each other and they'd have you run. About every other time, I'd take Frank's turn. The coach would stand there and watch, then he'd say, 'Those two twins block exactly alike.' It ended up that we both got four-year scholarships out of it," John said.

"One time we (Frank and his wife) got in a traffic jam and we weren't in the parking lot when the game started. While we were listening to the kickoff on the radio, this guy rolled his window down and shouted, 'It serves you right if you get beat after showing up late.'

"At one game I was up getting a hot dog at halftime. A guy came up and asked me what we were going to do in the second half. I told him we were going to throw more. And we did," Frank said.

— THE SOUTHWEST Conference usually has a preseason meeting with all the league coaches addressing the press and interest fans at a banquet. One year, John couldn't make the meeting because of a commitment. So Frank went.

He was introduced as the head coach of Baylor and no one could tell the difference.

"I had three quotes. Each team had to bring three players. Baylor had Randy Berringer. He was 6-2, 230 and could bench press 400 pounds. I told them that he was quick, fast, strong and intelligent. It takes a great coach to make a linebacker out of a kid like this.

"I said I was telling an alumnus that Charles Wilson, a fullback, was the most improved player on the squad. And the alumnus asked me where we'd sent him to learn something.

"Then I introduced Bobby Green. I said that Frank Broyles (the Arkansas coach) might remember him as the guy who caught the TD pass that beat him the year before. Actually, more of the credit belonged to Charlie Weedham. He was an official who threw a flag when we needed it," Frank said.

"Then I finished by saying that in the past I had gotten nowhere by being bashful so I was just going to say that we would be the Southwest Conference champions and then win the Cotton Bowl," Frank said. "Then I sat down."

FORTUNATELY, the emcee for the event knew it was Frank Bridgers and told the crowd. The result was a rousing round of applause.

"It's the first time an engineer has ever gotten a standing ovation from 1,200 people," said Frank.

"I bet you five people called me John during the last game," Frank said. "I really doesn't bother me at all. I've become a lot more famous since John's come to town — maybe I should say infamous."

Eligibility requirements vary from state-to-state

There was a major controversy in Rochester prior to the 1980 sectional basketball tournament when four of the five starters on the basketball team at East High were ruled ineligible under the citizenship clause after they were arrested for robbing a neighborhood store.

THE SIX public high schools in Oakland, Calif., require that a student have a 1.51 grade-point average — midway between a C and a D — to compete in athletics. The district also requires students to have a 1.51 grade-point average to graduate.

It has been in effect for about 2 1-2 years and a district spokesman said participation hasn't changed "appreciably."

"We haven't had any huge probems with it," said Aldo Nelson, commissioner of the Oakland CIF section. "Our coaches were unanimously in favor of it. We had too many kids who were good athletes but couldn't get scholarships because they didn't qualify academically. ... It still not a real strict rule."

However, most large school districts, such as New York City, Chicago, Washington D.C. and Philadelphia, don't have a grade policy for athletic eligibility.

The 100 high schools in the New York Public Schools Athletic League require only that a student pass three courses in the preceding semester to compete in sports. Thus, a student with three Ds would be eligible.

The athletic eligibility standard at the 65 high schools in Chicago is the same as New York, but grades are checked once a week. However, the director of the district's physical education department said he has recommended instituting a C average for participation in sports.

The 31 high schools in Philadelphia are allowed to set their own eligibility standards, but only one school has a tough policy.

How about Justice Bowl for 10-1ers?

NC State's Kiffin resigns football post

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina State football coach Monte Kiffin, citing a lack of support from the school's athletic director, announced his resignation Wednesday in the "best interest" of the school.

"Quite honestly, I do not feel that the support I have received from the Athletic Department was sufficient to my needs and the needs of the football program," Kiffin said. "And further I cannot find the assurance from the Athletic Director (Willis Casey) that such support will be forthcoming in the future."

Kiffin had coached the Wolfpack for three years, but the team's inability to get beyond the 6-5 won-loss barrier placed his job in jeopardy. The 42-year-old Nebraska graduate gave up his quest for an extension of his contract after two weeks of speculation.

The end came at 2:30 p.m. Wednesday after Kiffin had met with N.C. State Chancellor Bruce R. Poulton from noon until 12:25 p.m. Poulton and Casey met for about 30 minutes, then Kiffin called a news conference to make the announcement.

Poulton said Kiffin's resignation had not been requested, but a Raleigh newspaper quoted a top official in the Wolfpack Club as saying had Kiffin been rehired, there would have been substantial reductions in the amount of money contributed to the school.

"It (the football program) would have lost support very fast," said Clifton L. Benson of Raleigh, the club's secretary-treasurer.

"I thought the football program was going down and it was definitely the football coach's fault," he said. "The team was not any better at the end of the season than the first day he came here."

Wednesday's meetings and subsequent resignation capped two weeks of speculation about Kiffin's fate. When the Wolfpack defeated Duke late in the season, it was thought to have been a turning point for Kiffin's future. Those prospects dimmed, however, when the Wolfpack dropped a 41-3 decision to Miami in its last game of the season.

While at N.C. State, Kiffin compiled a 16-17 record, including a 6-5 records in his first and third seasons.

Before he came to Raleigh, he was an assistant coach at Arkansas from 1977 to 1979. Kiffin also was assistant coach at Nebraska, where he played college football, from 1969 to 1976 and was assistant freshman coach from 1967 to 1968.

Kiffin played two years of professional football in the Canadian Football League.

Bridgers twins keep 'em guessing

By DENNIS LATTA
Albuquerque Journal

ALBUQUERQUE (AP) — When the University of New Mexico needed an athletic director three years ago, it went all the way to Tallahassee, Fla., to hire John Bridgers.

Well, he isn't really the same man, but he sure looks like him — Frank Bridgers is his name and he's John's identical twin. You have to know them well to tell them apart.

Frank has been an engineer in Albuquerque for nearly 32 years. He hahd no problems with his identity until brother John moved to town. Now, he frequently answers to John's name and for John's decisions.

But that's something the two have done for years.

Because John has been a coach most of his life, he's been a public figure. He was head coach at Baylor and coached in the pros before going to Florida State. And when Frank visited his brother, he had to put up with people thinking he was John.

However, the twins have managed to take advantage of the situation at times:

— AFTER high school, both wanted to play college football at Auburn. "We went down to Auburn for a tryout on a Saturday and they asked some of us to stay over until Monday," said John. "When Monday came, Frank was two-thirds sick and was afraid he wouldn't get another chance.

"We'd line up and block the coaches. Then we'd tackle each other and they'd have you run. About every other time, I'd take Frank's turn. The coach would stand there and watch, then he'd say, 'Those two twins block exactly alike.' It ended up that we both got four-year scholarships out of it," John said.

"One time we (Frank and his wife) got in a traffic jam and we weren't in the parking lot when the game started. While we were listening to the kickoff on the radio, this guy rolled his window down and shouted, 'It serves you right if you get beat after showing up late.'

"At one game I was up getting a hot dog at halftime. A guy came up and asked me what we were going to do in the second half. I told him we were going to throw more. And we did," Frank said.

— THE SOUTHWEST Conference usually has a preseason meeting with all the league coaches addressing the press and interest fans at a banquet. One year, John couldn't make the meeting because of a commitment. So Frank went.

He was introduced as the head coach of Baylor and no one could tell the difference.

"I had three quotes. Each team had to bring three players. Baylor had Randy Berringer. He was 6-2, 230 and could bench press 400 pounds. I told them that he was quick, fast, strong and intelligent. It takes a great coach to make a linebacker out of a kid like this.

"I said I was telling an alumnus that Charles Wilson, a fullback, was the most improved player on the squad. And the alumnus asked me where we'd sent him to learn something.

"Then I introduced Bobby Green. I said that Frank Broyles (the Arkansas coach) might remember him as the guy who caught the TD pass that beat him the year before. Actually, more of the credit belonged to Charlie Weedham. He was an official who threw a flag when we needed it," Frank said.

"Then I finished by saying that in the past I had gotten nowhere by being bashful so I was just going to say that we would be the Southwest Conference champions and then win the Cotton Bowl," Frank said. "Then I sat down."

FORTUNATELY, the emcee for the event knew it was Frank Bridgers and told the crowd. The result was a rousing round of applause.

"It's the first time an engineer has ever gotten a standing ovation from 1,200 people," said Frank.

"I bet you five people called me John during the last game," Frank said. "I really doesn't bother me at all. I've become a lot more famous since John's come to town — maybe I should say infamous."

There was a major controversy in Rochester prior to the 1980 sectional basketball tournament when four of the five starters on the basketball team at East High were ruled ineligible under the citizenship clause after they were arrested for robbing a neighborhood store.

THE SIX public high schools in Oakland, Calif., require that a student have a 1.51 grade-point average — midway between a C and a D — to compete in athletics. The district also requires students to have a 1.51 grade-point average to graduate.

It has been in effect for about 2 1-2 years and a district spokesman said participation hasn't changed "appreciably."

"We haven't had any huge probems with it," said Aldo Nelson, commissioner of the Oakland CIF section. "Our coaches were unanimously in favor of it. We had too many kids who were good athletes but couldn't get scholarships because they didn't qualify academically. ... It still not a real strict rule."

However, most large school districts, such as New York City, Chicago, Washington D.C. and Philadelphia, don't have a grade policy for athletic eligibility.

The 100 high schools in the New York Public Schools Athletic League require only that a student pass three courses in the preceding semester to compete in sports. Thus, a student with three Ds would be eligible.

The athletic eligibility standard at the 65 high schools in Chicago is the same as New York, but grades are checked once a week. However, the director of the district's physical education department said he has recommended instituting a C average for participation in sports.

The 31 high schools in Philadelphia are allowed to set their own eligibility standards, but only one school has a tough policy.

Unbeaten Collins in no-win situation

An AP Sports Analysis
By DENNE H. FREEMAN

It all started when he came to Southern Methodist as a last-second choice to replace Ron Meyer after a handful of coaches had turned the head football coaching job down, including Dallas Cowboys' offensive coordinator John Mackovic.

The first thing Collins heard was what a warm bed he had inherited. There was talent under every helmet. Collins could mail in his victories.

It irritated Collins somewhat that he never got credit for having some coaching sense. When he was at Southern Mississippi, he produced teams that were tough to play. Just ask Steve Sloan at Ole Miss and Emory Bellard Mississippi State how tough.

But he kept his temper in check, for the most part, although it showed slighly before the Texas game when someone suggested to him he might be in awe of the crowd.

Collins let it be known in no uncertain terms that he been around some big games.

Then Texas A&M Coach Jackie Sherrill suggested that he would like to have Collins' talent, playing Collins.

Collins asked didn't Sherrill say before the season he would have an excellent team?

But critics sniffed at narrow victories over Texas Christian, Baylor, Houston and Texas Tech. Collins answered that this was to be expected, considering every conference team was waiting in ambush for the defending champions.

Collins added much more offense than Meyer had used, putting James and Dickerson in the same backfield, passing more, putting in trick plays when needed, etc.

But not until Collins came up with the throwback lateral across the field that produced a stunning 91-yard touchdown return against Texas Tech did he get unanimous accolades for innovation.

It seemed that as fast as Collins stopped one pressure point another one would bubble up.

For example, he was put under the gun in the Arkansas game on whether to go for the tie which put SMU in the Cotton Bowl or risk all for a two-point try and a posible national title.

Collins took the sure extra point kick for the tie. Again, he couldn't please everybody.

Here is a team that has 10 victories and a tie. Only Georgia can best that record.

If Collins' hair wasn't gray, this season would have turned it that color.

Despite all his success, Collins still has to scratch and scream for recognition.

"Nobody can justify it to me," said Collins. "We're in the top two in the country and then we get slapped in the face. It's just ridiculous."

Collins called for a change in the polls but he won't live long enough to see it.

At least he has himself a dandy little motivational tool for the Cotton Bowl against Pittsburgh.

Dilemma in Big East

Show must go on, even without TV

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Sports Writer

Pity the poor young men who play basketball for Seton Hall and Pitt. When they take the court Jan. 22 at Fitzgerald Field House in Pittsburgh, it will mark the only time this season that a Big East Conference game is played without benefit of television cameras.

In case you weren't looking, (and that's hard if get cable television), college basketball has arrived as the television sport of the '80s. There is a televised game somewhere nearly every day of the 134 days between the Hall of Fame game and the NCAA final — 245 national telecasts alone, many on cable networks; countless local and regional games.

TO THE fan, it means cold winter evenings watching tall young men in shorts jump up and down. To the college administrator, it means money, lots of it. To the coach of top-ranked teams, it means a tougher schedule — there's just too much TV money in playing top-ranked opponents to load up on East Pugwash States.

For example, Just four years ago, the prestigious Atlantic Coast Conference received $650,000 from television for an entire season's games. The ACC's television take this year is estimated at $5 million, Georgetown and Virginia will receive $700,000 for their Dec. 11 game from the Turner Broadcasting System. Then there's the Big East, just four years old, coming off a season in which three of its teams made the NCAA's final eight and with teams in five of the nation's top dozen TV markets. No less than 112 games involving Big East teams will be televised this year, including all but that Pitt-Seton Hall game of the 72 regular season league contests.

THAT'S JUST a starter. Next year, all the individual contracts between Big East schools and local outlets will have expired and the league office will handle all television deals. It's already negotiated contracts with CBS and NBC that will bring in an estimated $10 million over three years.

College basketball has always been a popular viewing pastime. NBC will carry 88 games this year, national and regional, CBS will have 27. Most major conferences have their own networks carrying at least one game regionally each week, and independent powers like Notre Dame and DePaul market their own games for television stations.

But cable has introduced a whole new factor. Turner outbid NBC and CBS for Georgetown-Virginia, also known as Ewing-Sampson and has sold it to a number of independent over-the-air stations. His network will also carry 11 other games.

ESPN WILL have 164 games, including 24 in the first two rounds of the NCAA tournament. It has contracts with most major conferences, including the Big East, ACC, Big 10, Big 8, Southeast and with individual schools, including Notre Dame, DePaul, Marquette and UCLA. This week's ESPN schedule contains Kentucky-Notre Dame and UCLA-DePaul.

USA will carry 77 games, 34 of them involving Big East teams. It also has contracts with the Big 8 and individual independents.

Few of those contracts are exclusive. That is, a game on the ACC network that includes 22 stations from Pennsylvania and Ohio to Florida, may also be on the cable nationally. But it will be blacked out on cable in the markets of commercial stations that carry it.

About a quarter of ESPN's games and 40 percent of USA's will be tape delayed, usually because their starting times clash with other games on the cable.

For the real basketball nut, of course, that's a plus. Just another game to watch into the wee hours.

NBC'S CONTINUING efforts to woo Vin Scully to team with Joe Garagiola on Game of the Week baseball telecasts almost came to fruition this week. That's almost.

NBC had a luncheon scheduled Wednesday at the Pierre Hotel to unveil Scully to the press. On Tuesday, it announced the luncheon was off, perhaps for only a week, while final details of Scully's contract were worked out.

There were similar almosts as early as last summer. Stay tuned.

King scores net upset

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — Six-time Wimbledon champion Billie Jean King of the United States was an upset winner Thursday to gain a berth in the quarterfinals of the $350,000 Marlboro Australian Open tennis tournament against American Chris Evert Lloyd.

King, 1968 Australian open winner, strong-armed seventh-seeded American Barbara Potter as she swept to a 6-4, 6-2 victory.

2-13 Rockets take heart in loss

By Associated Press

When you're 2-13 like the Houston Rockets, you look for signs of progress even in defeat.

The Rockets lost 127-96 in their first game with defending champion Los Angeles on Nov. 12, but Houston led for most of the first three quarters against the Lakers Wednesday night before losing 108-95.

"We're making great strides," said veteran guard Calvin Murphy, who scored a season-high 32 points. "The first time we played Los Angeles, we were out of it in the first five minutes. But tonight, we played 3¼ good quarters."

But Bob McAdoo scored 15 of his 19 points as the Lakers pulled away in the final period to improve their record to 14-3.

Kings 143, Bulls 122

Guard Larry Drew had 24 points and 15 assists to pace Kansas City over Chicago. Mike Woodson added 24 points and Steve Johnson 22 for the Kings.

Celtics 122, Hawks 97

Larry Bird scored 17 of his 30 points and pulled down 10 of his 15 rebounds in the first quarter to carry Boston past Atlanta. Bird had seven points during a 20-4 Celtic surge that built their lead to 35-16 late in the first period.

Bucks 125, Pacers 105

Pistons 105, Spurs 97

Detroit overcame a 13-point halftime deficit against San Antonio with a 28-6 spree in the third period that was led by John Long and Terry Tyler. George Gervin scored 28 of his 38 points in the first half to boost the Spurs into a 60-47 lead at intermission.

Sonics 131, Clippers 110

Gus Williams scored 22 points and Greg Kelser 21 as Seattle improved its NBA-best record to 15-2 with its victory over San Diego.

Nets 105, Bullets 99

Darwin Cook scored 22 points and Albert King had 15 of his 21 in the fourth quarter to lead New Jersey past Washington.

King was 6-for-6 from the field in the final period and scored eight straight points to increase the Nets' 79-76 lead to 87-76.

Knicks 101, Cavaliers 84

New York forced 30 Cleveland turnovers and Bernard King scored 25 points for the Knicks. The Cavaliers lost for the 14th time in 16 games this season.

NFL Players to delay pact vote until next week

NEW YORK (AP) — National Football League player representatives may get their second chance today to offer opinions on the proposed collective bargaining agreement, but the rest of the players won't vote on it until next week.

The Associated Press learned Wednesday that the union also is hoping to cement the agreement with a "non-admissions clause" a memorandum of understanding which the union, the owners' Management Council and the National Labor Relations Board would sign as a means of settling unfair labor practice charges filed by each side against the other.

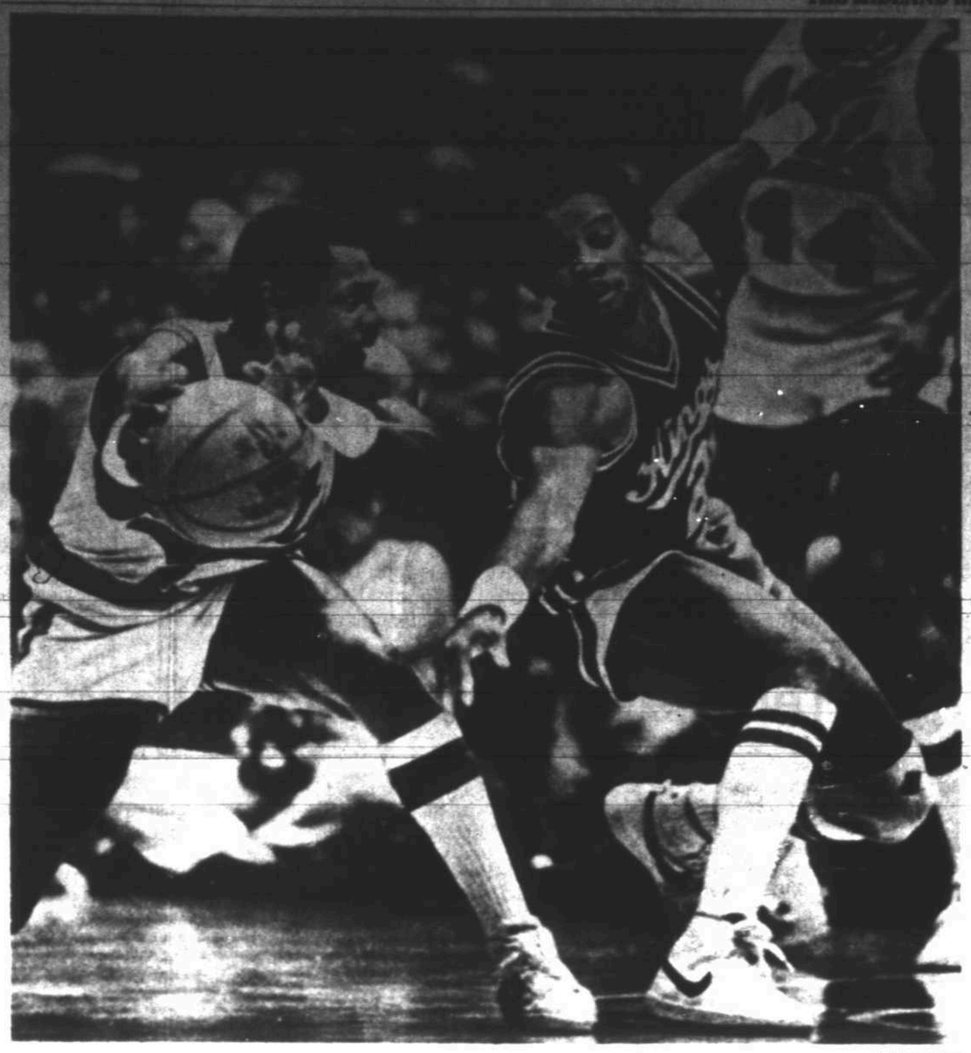

It is understood that William J. Lubbers, the NLRB's general counsel, is prepared to approve such a memorandum of understanding, which would not be a part of the collective bargaining agreement.

On Wednesday, Daniel J. Silverman, the NLRB's New York regional director, postponed until Jan. 5 at the Management Council's request a hearing before an administrative law judge on the union's unfair labor practice charges.

GARVEY SAID the union and Management Council are still discussing the "settlement of pending issues before the NLRB and before (U.S. District) Judge (John Garrett) Penn," the latter a union suit seeking to invalidate the NFL's standard player contract.

"There is no possibility that the players will vote on Friday," union chief Ed Garvey said Wednesday. "The contract will not be ready until sometime early next week." But he said the 28 player representatives "could possibly vote as early as tomorrow."

When the five-year, $1.6-billion agreement was reached Nov. 16, the player reps voted to send it along, without recommendation, to the 1,500 players who had been on strike since Sept. 21. On Nov. 17, the union began complaining about various aspects of the agreement and Garvey refused to initial certain portions.

Paterno Lions are going for 4th title

FOOTBALL—The way Joe Paterno has it figured, Penn State will be going for its fourth national football championship New Year's Night against Georgia in the Sugar Bowl, although the Lions have never been voted the title. "We won three national championships — 1968, 1969 and 1973. We just got voted out of them," although State was officially voted No. 2 each year despite perfect records. "They say you only get a ring when you win the national championship. In '73, I had my own ring made and gave it to the squad."

Paterno would just as soon determine No. 1 each by a playoff. Paterno's proposal would preserve at least part of the bowl structure. "I've always felt that after the bowls are over, you could come out with four teams and play semifinals and finals." That would result in 14-game seasons for the two finalists and 13-geme seasons for the two teams that bowed in the semifinals...

The Mizlou Network will televise five college bowl games in December on independent stations and network affiliates throughout the country, beginning with the Independence Dec. 11 and following with the Holiday, Dec. 17, the Tangerine Dec. 18, the Bluebonnet Dec. 31 and the California Dec. 18.

Jim Wacker, TCU coach, named Tom Mueller defensive coordinator of the Frogs. Mueller, a native of Cleveland, has served as a defensive coordinator and linebacker coach under Wacker at Texas Lutheran, North Dakota State and Southwest Texas State...

Yankees sign Don Baylor

BASEBALL—Don Baylor, 33, joined the Yankees after five years with the Angels and predicted better things ahead for New York as he set his sights on "pointing myself and the club in the right direction." "I know this ballclub finished fifth, but I think it's a better ballclub than that. Winning is contagious; so is losing. I think that's what happened last year."

TENNIS—Mel Purcell beat Mario Martinez 6-1, 0-6, 6-3 and Jacques Grandjean downed Rolf Gehring 6-4, 0-6, 7-5 to advance in the European Champion's

Ivan Lendl defeated John McEnroe 2-6, 7-5, 6-2 to lead Europe to a 7-5 victory over America in a three-day tournament. America did score a surprise victory, though, when Gene Mayer upset Sweden's Bjorn Borg 6-3, 4-6, 6-3...

BEYOND YOUR TELEVISION THERE'S A NEW DIMENSION IN ENTERTAINMENT.

On HBO you can enjoy first run movies, action-packed sports and a mind-boggling array of entertainment specials 24 hours a day.

TURN YOUR TV INTO A NON-STOP MOVIE THEATER. Every month, HBO brings you an array of movies and entertainment that will leave you breathless. Over 30 different movies each month. Many fresh from their initial theater release. All uncut. All without commercial interruption. And available anytime of the day or night.

Of course you'll miss some long lines. The aggravating waiting. The extravagantly expensive theater tickets. Not to mention the cost of gas. And maybe a few boxes of popcorn.

Feast your eyes on a typical month: December, 1982. You could see On Golden Pond, Taps, Modern Problems, Oliver, American Wilderness, They All Laughed, Knightriders, Buddy Buddy, Montenegro, Final Assignment. Just to name ten.

PLUG YOURSELF INTO AN ELECTRONIC SPORTS STADIUM. Hold on to your seat! Because HBO gives you front row seats to an incredible array of action-packed sporting events. Many, like championship boxing or Wimbledon tennis, you can't even get tickets for. And in between you can see everything from international figure skating to NFL football to major league baseball to gymnastic competition.

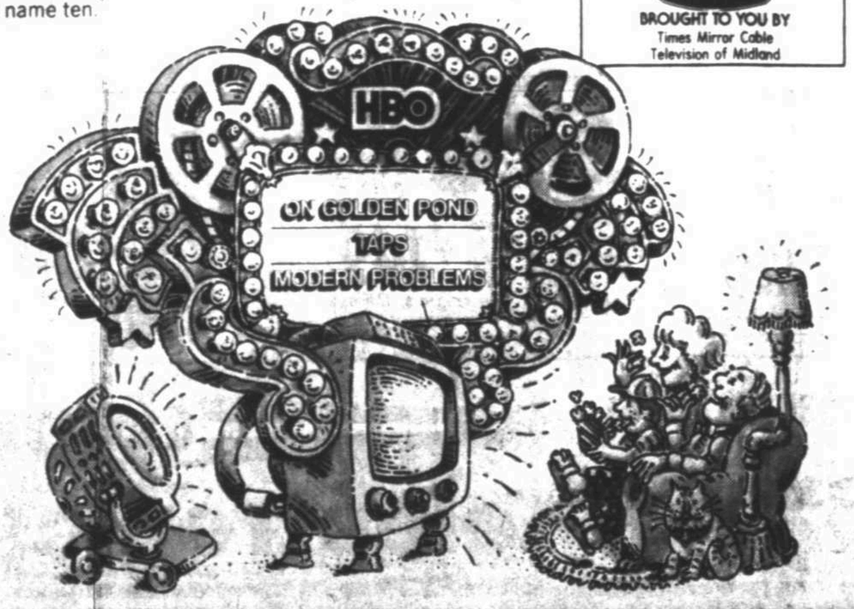

MUSIC FROM ROCK AROUND THE CLOCK TO BACH. Enter a new Dimension in music. HBO is like having the world's top performers at your fingertips. Turn on Dimension's HBO channel and tune in a Simon & Garfunkel tune.

Or a Diana Ross Las Vegas spectacular. Or Elton John, Paul McCartney, Mac Davis, or Stevie Nicks in concert. But HBO does more than rock. It's a world of special concerts like Liza Minnelli on Broadway, Johnny Cash's America, Earth, Wind & Fire, Teddy Pendergrass and Rich Little on location.

AND THE COST OF IT ALL? Calculate the cost of one night out. You'll find it costs less to enjoy Dimension℠ and HBO for one entire month! That's the latest hit movies, action-packed sporting events, a world of informative news and an array of entertainment specials. And all for the price of a night out. Today, more than ever, Dimension Cable is your finest entertainment value!

Ring victim of TV clutter

By SHIRLEY POVICH
The Washington Post
and Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — In the simpler state of the world before television, there always was clear understanding that a boxing champion was one of eight living men who was, irrefutably, the best fighter of his class. He was the best heavyweight, or light heavy or middleweight, welter or any size champion down to those perky 112-pounders who fought as flyweights.

Those uncomplicated days are gone. Now cluttering the boxing scene are 27 identified champions of assorted weights and accreditations. A few of them are authentic. Most of them are synthetic, semichamps, and the titles assigned others are plain hoked-up and contrived for purposes of commerce, meaning bigger paydays via television.

Boxing has been feeding off the network wars and the big idea is to concoct a title to please the thirsty and competing TV people who are always ready to pay more for something that connotates something, like a title at stake. Heaven forbid that it's just an ordinary fight.

SO, PRESTO! A swarm of titleholders has sprung full blown from the creative brows of promoters and their stooges, the two world boxing bodies who operate out of Mexico and Panama.

Do the networks or closed circuit TV need a title fight? Not to worry, what weight would you like? They now come in half-sizes, junior and super. Pretty soon, perhaps, infants and toddlers.

Fifteen weight divisions now exist where only eight were deemed sufficient in the past. And with the World Boxing Council and World Boxing Association loath to recognize each other's champions, 27 champions are now extant. Thirty is a maximum. It's a farce. They are titles of convenience.

It is boxing's version of gene-splicing, or cross-pollination or something, that has brought forth a champion for every need. Fooling with the weights has enabled the WBC and WBA to nearly quadruple the number of titles. It is titlehood in flower, and reminiscent of the late governor-senator Huey Long who won elections with his sloganeering of "Every man a king."

The WBC and WBA agree on only two things: that Marvin Hagler is the undisputed middleweight champ and that Sugar Ray Leonard's welterweight title is now vacant. Otherwise there could be parts of 30 titles floating around to please the networks.

The latest creation of the WBC and WBA — and naturally they have different champions again — is cruiserweight, a species formerly unknown to the trade. What is a cruiserweight? He can be loosely described as a nonheavyweight, although bigger than a light heavy. Get it?

With a fetish for disagreeing on almost everything, the WBC says a cruiserweight weighs 190 pounds. Not so, says the WBA, he weighs 195. Cruiserweight indeed. Jack Dempsey weighed 187 pounds when he won the title from Jess Willard and everybody agreed he was the heavyweight champion, nothing else.

MUCH WAS made a couple of weeks ago about Alexis Arguello trying for a fourth title when he fought Aaron Pryor for the junior welterweight crown. He already had the WBC featherweight, junior lightweight and lightweight titles and now they were comparing Arguello to the old, distinguished Henry Armstrong, an undisputed three-weight champion.

Ah, but there was a whopping difference. Armstrong was a pure champion. He didn't bother with junior titles or super weights or such. He was the legitimate champion in the feather, lightweight and welterweight divisions. And let's remember Henry went directly from featherweight to welterweight champion when as a 133-pounder he beat the 147-pound defender Barney Ross and three months later Armstrong went back to collect the 135-pound lightweight title he had overlooked for the nonce.

Under the current weight scales so dear to the boxing people and their network friends, Armstrong conceivably could have had a valid claim to five titles, not three. Let some of the modern split-weight wonders tie that.

The WBA and WBC don't even agree on what is what after splitting the weights to get their in-between champions. In WBC lingo, the WBA junior welterweight (140 pounds) is called superlightweight. WBA may deal in juniors, but WBC sees them only as supers of a lower weight class.

There were previous attempts of boxing associations to split the weights, and in 1930 the New York Boxing Board, then the dominant body in boxing, abolished all junior divisions as unnecessary. All other states followed that rule, but gradually they have come creeping back, bringing with them more divisions.

That these split-weight champs are not held in high regard seems apparent. The late editor of Ring magazine, Nat Fleisher, in his all-time ranking of the 80 best boxers, never recognized a junior title holder. In the boxing Hall of Fame, where scores of fighters are honored, only one junior champ, Jackie (Kid) Berg is rated, and he is sometimes called a special case because of his many title frustrations.

THE LUDICROUS aspects of the rankings are present. As its heavyweight champion, the WBC has the forever unbeaten Larry Holmes, who knocked out Mike Weaver in 12 rounds in 1979. So who does the WBC still recognize as heavyweight champ? Mike Weaver, naturally. The spite goes on, with the unbeaten Holmes even unable to make the WBA's top 10.

Pryor is the latest big name in boxing with his recent knockout of Arguello for the WBA title. The WBC in its latest ratings acts as if it never heard of Pryor and all his knockouts. Somebody named Leroy Haley is the WBC champ in that division, except that they call him superlightweight, not junior welter, although those weight limits are the same.

The spite between the two governing bodies also is evident in the lightweight division rankings. The WBC lists Arguello as its champ. The WBA prefers Ray (Boom Boom) Mancini as its champion, although he was knocked out by Arguello last year.

That the WBC is allied directly with the promoters was testimony of Bob Arum, heard in a lawsuit two years ago. Arum said he got preferential treatment from Jose Sulaiman, the WBC president, saying, "Whenever we wanted to get a fighter ranked in the top 10 we would talk to Sulaiman and invariably he would put the fighter in the ratings."

Arum added that in 1978 he replaced Don King as the favorite WBC promoter. But some say the rules since have changed, with Arum now the WBA's boy, and King restored to good standing in the WBC.

The WBC and WBA are both creative outfits. They create votes, they create champions and they create demichampions and semichampions. And complete confusion.

Five Tall City football players were named to the All-District 4-5A team, announced earlier this week. From left, Midland High's John Hibbitts was named to the defensive secondary and also was runnerup as MVP defensive player; defensive tackle John Denton, defensive back Kevin Taylor; wide receiver Luther Johnson and offensive guard Eric Cooper, all from Midland Lee, were picked.

Pirates sign Tenace; Atlanta lands Forster

By The Associated Press

Catcher Gene Tenace signed with Pittsburgh and pitcher Terry Forster inked with the Atlanta Braves and the next free agent to sign could be first baseman Steve Garvey.

Today, the free-agent courtship was scheduled to continue with Garvey's agent, Jerry Kapstein, traveling to San Diego to speak with the club that appears to be No. 1 on the former Los Angeles first baseman's list.

Padres President Ballard Smith said he was prepared to make an offer for the services of Garvey, who has asked for $1.5 million a year for five years.

Don Baylor, unable to come to terms with the Angels, signed a contract with the Yankees that reportedly would pay him $900,000 per year plus bonuses for five years, with an option for a fifth year.

The 33-year old slugger who was picked by six teams in the re-entry draft said Yankees owner George Steinbrenner was a "very aggressive person when it comes to talent. I really had no choice when a guy like that comes to me with a winning tradition."

Goalies under fire survive

By Associated Press

Don Beaupre and Murray Bannerman are in their third full seasons of National Hockey League goaltending duties. They've taken divergent paths in those three years, with Bannerman having problems until now and Beaupre struggling this season after two excellent campaigns.

Wednesday night, though, Bannerman and Beaupre were on the same wavelength, performing admirably in victories by their teams.

Beaupre stopped 29 shots as the Minnesota North Stars downed Detroit 4-1. Bannerman handled 44 as the Chicago Black hawks beat the Pittsburgh Penguins 4-2.

Beaupre was an all-star as a rookie in 1979-80, posting a 3.20 goals-against average. Last season, he had a 3.71 mark.

But his average has skyrocketed to 4.64 this season and Beaupre was 3-5 entering the game with Detroit.

THE NHL

He hadn't won since Nov. 2 — and he gave up six goals that night.

THE BLACK Hawks, who have the league's best record — 17-3-5 — also have two hot goaltenders. Tony Esposito has an 8-1-3 record and Bannerman is 9-2-2. They are co-No. 1, according to Coach Orval Tessier.

"He hasn't had too many bad games this season," Tessier said of Bannerman, whose first two NHL campaigns weren't particularly noteworthy, a 4.30 goals-against average followed by a 4.17. "He's been excellent."

Canadiens 2, Sabres 2

Montreal built a 2-0 edge on goals by Doug Wickenheiser and Ryan Walter. But Buffalo came back to earn a tie on third-period power-play goals by Mike Foligno and rookie Phil Housley. The Canadiens are unbeaten in their last eight games, the Sabres in their last five.

Flyers 4, Oilers 2

Bill Barber, appearing in his 800th NHL game, scored twice and set up another goal for Philadelphia. Two other veterans aided the attack. Darryl Sittler had a goal and two assists, while Bobby Clarke managed two setups.

Wayne Gretzky, the NHL's leading scorer, had two assists to extend his consecutive-game scoring streak to 27, one short of the league record, set by Montreal's Guy Lafleur.

Devils 7, Maple Leafs 3

New Jersey managed its best offensive output, including three goals in 1:50 in the second period. Rookie Jeff Larmer scored twice, as did Hector Marini, as the Devils won for the second time in three starts after an 18-game winless streak.

Kings 4, Flames 1

Marcel Dionne scored twice off 2-on-1 breaks with rookie Daryl Evans and Charlie Simmer contributed a power-play goal — Los Angeles' first in 15 attempts — in the third period.

Rangers 6, Whalers 1

Former Whaler Rob McClanahan scored twice as the Rangers broke open a close game with four goals in the third period.

Dodgers to limit season tickets

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Season ticket sales by the Los Angeles Dodgers will be limited to give individual fans a greater opportunity to attend games, the club has announced.

"We will sell only 1,500 more season seats to enable us to continue to service individual game sales for individuals, families and also group sales," ticket operations director Walter Nash said Wednesday.

Foundry, oil wells benefit each other

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

What do a foundry in Tennesee and wells in Howard County have in common?

More than you might think, for the company which made the iron castings on the pump jacks and the company which explored and developed the lease are one and the same — North American Royalties Inc.

The company's operating divisions represent two sides of the energy coin and complement each other. If the oil and gas business is down a bit, the foundry, which makes grey iron castings for the automotive industry, can pull NAR through, and vice versa.

The principal officers and directors of the Chattanooga-based corporation were honored last night by the Midland Wildcat Committee at the Petroleum Club. Midland attorney Martin Allday in on the NAR board of directors, and William P. Stewart is the Midland district manager.

Since 1947 NAR has been in the Gordon P. Street family, but the foundry division dates back to around the Civil War.

The company has been active in Texas since the 1950s. It's Midland district is the largest and most active of the company's four operating districts. Principal interests are in the Spraberry Trend, Wasson and Janice fields of Yoakum County, and 42 gas wells in Edwards County.

It is not difficult for a Tennesee company to operate in Texas, Oklahoma and Louisiana, according to president Gordon P. Street Jr., but rather, an advantage, because it keeps the company on an even keel. The fact that the majority of the company's profits come from its foundry division means that NAR doesn't have to jump every time the oil patch says jump.

"Number one, being removed from the oil patch let's us see the forest for the trees. We're not swept up in current fads. Number two, our philosophy is each division is very autonomous, in relation to how other companies operate their district offices."

In spite of being in Tennessee, NAR does not play in the Appalachian Basin. "For a company our size, we don't see the return for our investment there, that we can get elsewhere," Street explains. "That's wild country. Logistically, it's very difficult."

In fiscal 1982, which ended April 30, NAR had net sales of $111.2 million and net income of $9.5 million. Foundry sales represented $80 million of the total. Sales in the company's first quarter of fiscal 1983 were down slightly from the same quarter a year ago, but Street says both the foundry and the oil and gas division expect gradual improvements through the balance of the year.

At least half of all American-made cars, from all four car makers, have parts made at NAR's foundry — mostly brake drums, rotors and transmission castings. The company also has contracts with Volkswagen and Renault.

The foundry runs mainly on natural gas and coke — not on oil or gas found and produced by NAR, but on resources purchased from local suppliers.

Based on what he's been told and what he normally tracks in the auto industry, Street says he thinks next year will be a better one for the automotive industry.

"It will not be a great year in automotive history, but it will be better than 1982, which is a 25-year low for the industry. We've had cutbacks at the foundry, but it is probably the best foundry operation in the country. And, it's not like the industry is not making any cars. The foundry is self-supporting."

NAR enjoyed its second highest first quarter in sales and earnings for the quarter ended July 31.

There have been layoffs at the foundry, but the exploration division has maintained its fairly aggressive position.

"Nothing imposes a discipline on you more than having no business," said vice president Gordon L. Smith Jr., with the company for 35 years. "The company's success comes from very careful, close management." NAR is a public company, however, and is traded on the American Stock Exchange.

About 40 percent of NAR's oil and gas activity is for wildcats. "We'd like it to be slightly higher, but our development demands are such that we had to committ 60 percent to that," Street says.

"We're careful explorers. It's what I would call a shotgun approach. We have very specific geological prospects and we're very comfortable with our geological expertise."

Most of NAR's exploration is on trend, rather than for "rank" wildcats, he added.

Oil lease expenses were higher this past year because heavier than normal development activity left a gap the company had to fill. In fiscal '82, capital expenditures in the oil and gas division were up by 19 percent, to $25.8 million. Earlier, during the boom times, NAR pulled back from leasing activity, Street says, when leases became so expensive in dollars and net revenue interest.

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — A kind of economic suspense is building with the start of Christmas shopping, and it is more than the children wondering how generous Santa will be.

This year all economists' eyes are on holiday retail sales because many experts believe the results will show clearly whether consumers are ready and willing to spend more freely — and thereby help lead the economy out of recession.

Here are some questions and answers to help explain why the holiday sales performance is considered more critical to the economy this year than in the past:

Q. How are Christmas sales so far?

A. An Associated Press spot check last Friday, which usually is the busiest shopping day of the year, showed a heavy turnout of shoppers in most parts of the country. Retailers were optimistic that sales would surpass, at least modestly, last year's results, but they also said they did not expect a buying boom. Shoppers said they were looking harder than usual for practical gifts — and for bargain prices.

Q. Interest rates are lower now than last Christmas. Doesn't that mean people will spend more?

A. Some interest rates are lower than a year ago, but consumers have benefitted less from the decline than businesses have. The prime lending rate, which a bank quotes for a short-term business loan, is 11.5 percent compared with 16 percent a year ago. But consumers have not been so fortunate. Credit card interest rates, for example, generally are as high as a year ago. And while some consumer rates, such as those on home mortgages, have fallen, the rate on credit card purchases more directly affects retail sales.

Q. Why are economists looking at Christmas sales for signs of economic recovery?

A. In the U.S. economy, clues are crucial. And while the government's gauge of future economic activity, called the Index of Leading Indicators, has been pointing toward recovery in recent months, the evidence has been missing. The nation's industrial output has continued to fall and businesses are still cutting back on payrolls as well as major spending projects. As often occurs, that leaves the consumer to lead the way to recovery.

Q. What's holding consumers back?

A. At first glance, it would seem that people might be more than willing to spend more freely. Inflation is down to about a 5 percent annual rate — compared with 8.9 percent last year and 12.4 percent the year before — and the outlook is for continued price moderation in 1983. What's more, people's overall financial condition is judged by many economists to be usually strong. Carol Brock Kenney, an economist at the investment firm of Shearson-American Express, figures that consumers are burdened less by installment debt today than at any time in the past 30 years. But there remains a strong fear among many people that while they still are working, the recession puts their job in jeopardy.

A. Economists say it may mean financial disaster for some retailers. The Christmas season accounts for half, or more, of a year's profits for some storeowners. And even for the retailers that would survive, the implications of a weak holiday buying season would prove damaging in the longer run. That is because consumers, if unwilling to spend more freely at Christmas, may be even less unlikely to launch a spending spree in the months afterward, economists say.

'Miracle' gets good marks during test

By KINGSBURY SMITH
National Editor
The Hearst Newspapers

WASHINGTON — A government test has been completed with "positive" results on a technological "miracle" that will bring a revolutionary cost-savings and pollution-reducing breakthrough for automobiles and other oil fuel engines, according to Sherwood Webster, co-inventor of the device that promises to "revitalize" the American auto industry.

In Washington to confer with President Reagan's two top scientific advisers, Webster told the Hearst Newspapers in an exclusive interview that the government test was completed in Phoenix, Arizona, last week.

"The test was conducted by the Department of Transportation in cooperation with Chrysler Motor Company," Webster said. "A Chrysler car with the device attached was used. After the test was completed and proved positive, the car was driven Saturday by C. Boyden Gray, Vice President Bush's counsel and general counsel to the President's regulatory commission.

"Because Chrysler was the only one of the big auto manufacturers willing to cooperate with us in testing our invention, we will license Chrysler in January to be the first to use our patent. It may give them a year's edge on the other auto companies, but General Motors, Ford and all of them will have to use it.

"It will increase mileage on a gallon of gasoline by at least 20 percent, and possibly up to 30 percent.

"The test results showed that the oil consumption saving for the country if all motor vehicles now operating used the device could be 2 million barrels a day. I almost choke when I say that, but that's how the test results came out and they're certified. When this device is fully applied to aircraft engines, oil heating systems and other oil fueled systems, we will be saving many more than 2 million barrels a day.

"Boyden Gray flew to Phoenix to witness the test last week. It was kind of a secret little mission. He drove the new Chrysler with the device on it and confirmed what the test showed. I flew back to Washington with him Sunday and met Tuesday with Dr. George A. Keyworth, science adviser to the president, and a group of other scientists.

"The Phoenix test confirmed that an auto engine with our device gets more mileage power with 75 octane than high powered cars are getting with 97 octane, not to mention the 87 octane fuel that most people use.

"Our contract with the government calls for three tests. The one in Phoenix, another one to come in Denver, and the third in Texas. But it's all over as far as proving the results. The Phoenix test confirmed the conclusions of a two-year study of the invention by the Congressional Research Service of the Library of Congress. The other tests are protocol, which calls for the government and Chrysler to monitor three tests.

"When the three tests prove positive, the government, under our contract with it, must issue a statement certifying that the tests proved what we claimed the device would do. The government will probably do that the latter part of January, and then we will issue the license to Chrysler to use the little valve which causes gasoline to vaporize at low engine temperatures and to mix with incoming air. Chrysler will probably put it on their '84 model cars.

"It is a very simple device, but it's a marvel of history — almost a miracle.

"With this valve, engines will be able to use pure gasoline. No lead, no aromatics, which are carcinogenic. None of the additives which are in today's gasoline. It means much less pollution — cleaner air.

"With this valve, the auto makers can take at least half of all the pollution equipment off the cars. So engines in new cars should be at least $200 cheaper than they are now. The device calls for no change in the production line. It fits right into a hole that is already built in every engine made."

Webster said the test contract with the government ends in January, but he expects his company, the Webster-Heise Corp., will enter a new contract with the government because he has been informed the Reagan administration wishes to participate in research and development on expanded application of the device, especially for aircraft engines and other uses.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The president of the Texas Oil Marketers Association said today the credit card surcharge is just one method used by major oil companies to force small petroleum marketers out of business.

Bailey said the expense of honoring gasoline credit cards costs the average Texas marketer over $45,000 a year.

Bailey said refiners such as Texaco, Amoco, Exxon, Phillips, Mobil, Conoco, Cities Service, Gulf, Chevron and Kerr-McGee charge jobbers and dealers a surcharge on the companies' credit card.

Credit card surcharges have "probably been the most costly for the small businessmen we represent," Bailey said in remarks prepared for the U.S. House Subcommittee on Energy.

TOMA claims to represent over 800 independent companies who supply, own or operate chains of service stations. TOMA said the companies also supply petroleum products to the vast majority of agricultural, commercial and industrial users in Texas.

The credit card surcharge started in November 1981, Bailey said, when Texaco began assessing a 3 percent charge to all dealers or jobbers who accepted Texaco credit cards.

He said the average marketer in Texas has 14,245 credit card charges per month, and they "are trapped. They can't afford not to accept the cards, but the expense of honoring them costs the average marketer over $45,000 per year. The initial reaction of oil companies was to tell marketers and dealers to pass the cost on to the public."

In this regard, Bailey said the president of Cities Service had written TOMA on Sept. 28 saying Cities Service was "surprised by the handling of credit card charges: many are absorbing the cost instead of passing it on to the consumer. Jobbers should be more innovative and aggressive in credit charges passed through to consumers."

Bailey said "neither competition or conscience won't allow the surcharge to be passed on," and only 17 percent of TOMA's members had passed on the charge to the public.

He said "discount for cash" programs such as Exxon uses is merely a "camouflage" for credit card surcharges.

Also, Bailey said, in May and June when independent marketers were experiencing shortages, "most refiners were limiting the amount of product jobbers could purchase, while allowing direct dealers to buy all they wanted — Texaco even offered its dealers a rebate program for increased sales during the shortfall."

"After 24 years in this business," Bailey told the subcommittee, "I must admit that I am shocked and dismayed at the high-handed tactics of some of the major oil companies. We estimate that 10 percent of our members have gone out of business — either through bankruptcy, mergers, or they've just closed their doors."

Building industry spending more

NEW YORK (AP) — In a new sign of recovery in the building industry, the government reports that spending on new construction rose 1.1 percent in October — the biggest increase since June.

The Commerce Department also revised Wednesday its estimate for September's construction spending to a gain of 0.9 percent from the previously reported decline of 0.2 percent. That made October the third straight month of increase.

Robert Ortner, the Commerce Department's chief economist, said he expected slower gains in building activity over the winter, but added that improvement should be greater in residential building than in commercial.

The Commerce Department said overall spending hit an annual rate of $294.9 billion.

Despite the three straight months of increase, new construction spending for the first 10 months of the year totaled just $189.9 billion, down 5 percent from the same period last year.

In October, private construction rose 0.5 percent to an annual rate of $182.9 billion. Public construction rose 3.4 percent to an annual rate of $52 billion.

Food prices up after three-month drop

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Grocery bills increased during November after three straight monthly declines, according to an Associated Press marketbasket survey which shows that higher prices for meat and eggs were to blame for much of the jump.

The AP survey covers a randomly selected list of 14 food and non-food items. The items were priced in one supermarket in each of 13 cities on March 1, 1973 and have been rechecked on or about the start of each succeeding month.

The latest survey showed that the marketbasket bill increased during November at the checklist store in eight cities, rising an average of 1.7 percent. The bill decreased in five cities, down an average of 2.2 percent. Overall, there was an average increase of two-tenths of 1 percent in the marketbasket bills last month.

During October, the marketbasket bill increased at the checklist store in only four cities and decreased in nine, for an overall drop of just under one-tenth of 1 percent. The AP survey showed the marketbasket decreased six-tenths of a percent in September and one one-hundredth ofa percent in August.

Looking at prices today compared with those at the start of the year, the AP found that the marketbasket bill has increased at the checklist store in eight cities and has decreased in five. The overall average boost since the start of the year has been 3.2 percent.

Many of the bargains during the fall came at the meat counter, as retailers ran promotional specials to boost meat sales which had been lagging because of generally high prices and recession-weakened consumer demand. Industry and government economists had been predicting that the specials would not last because supplies of pork and beef have been declining, and the predictions came true in November.

The AP survey showed the price of a pound of chopped chuck, for example, increased at the checklist store in six cities last month. The price decreased in three cities and was unchanged in four cities.

Meats represented 21 percent of the items on the AP checklist, but they accounted for 31 percent of the November increases.

Egg prices also rose last month, increasing at the checklist store in seven of the cities surveyed by the AP. The price of a dozen eggs decreased in four cities and was unchanged in two.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture, which just held its annual conference on the outlook for food prices and production, is predicting that food prices alone will increase by 4.5 percent this year. That would be the smallest increase since a 3.1 percent boost in 1976. The USDA also expects a relatively small jump — between 3 percent and 6 percent — in food prices next year.

A look at the overall number of items in the AP survey showed fewer increases and decreases during November than during October. No attempt was made to weight the AP survey results according to population density or in terms of what percent of a family's actual grocery outlay each item represents.

The day of the week on which the check was made varied depending on the month. Standard brands and sizes or comparable substitutes were used and items temporarily out of stock on one of the survey dates being compared were not included in the over-all totals.

The AP did not try to compare actual prices from city to city — to say, for example, that eggs cost more in one area than another. The only comparisons were made in terms of percentages of increase or decrease — saying a particular item went up 10 percent in one city and 6 percent in another.

The items on the AP checklist were: chopped chuck, center cut pork chops, frozen orange juice concentrate, coffee, paper towels, butter, Grade-A medium white eggs, creamy peanut butter, laundry detergent, fabric softener, tomato sauce, milk, frankfurters and granulated sugar. A 15th item, chocolate chip cookies, was included on the original list, but was dropped when the manufacturer discontinued the package size used in the survey.

The cities checked were: Albuquerque, N.M., Atlanta, Boston, Chicago, Dallas, Detroit, Los Angeles, Miami, New York, Philadelphia, Providence, R.I., Salt Lake City and Seattle.

ALBUQUERQUE: The total dropped one-tenth of 1 percent, from $21.93 to $21.91. Coffee, frankfurters and sugar went up; chopped chuck, pork chops, butter, eggs, tomato sauce and milk went down; the remaining five items were unchanged.

ATLANTA: The markethasket bill dropped 5.1 percent, from $21.39 to $20.29. Only chopped chuck and tomato sauce increased, while eggs, coffee, paper towels, butter, detergent, milk, frankfurters and sugar decreased. Pork chops, orange juice, peanut butter and fabric softener were unchanged.

BOSTON: The total rose 1.2 percent, from $19.97 to $20.21. Sugar, chopped chuck, fabric softener, eggs and tomato sauce went up; peanut butter went down. Everything else stayed the same.

CHICAGO: The bill for 12 available items went from $16.40 to $16.60, up 1.2 percent. Eggs and frankfurters were up and pork chops were down. The checklist brands and sizes of coffee and fabric softener were unavailable at the survey store. The remaining nine items were unchanged.

DALLAS: The total dropped 3.5 percent, from $21.56 to $20.81. Chopped chuck, coffee and sugar increased; peanut butter, pork chops, paper towels, milk, frankfurters and eggs decreased; the remaining five items were unchanged.

Reagan administration will auction oil during future crisis

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration says it will auction oil to the highest bidders during any future energy crisis and let the marketplace determine how high the price will go.

The administration's position was outlined in a plan it submitted to Congress Wednesday detailing how it would distribute oil from government stockpiles during future energy shortages.

Critics assailed the plan, saying it could cost consumers millions of dollars in higher energy bills by doing nothing to hold down future price shocks.

Donald Hodel, selected by President Reagan to be the new energy secretary, defended the approach during his Senate confirmation hearings Wednesday, saying the very existence of the reserve — which currently holds 290 million barrels of oil — will act to hold down prices.

Asked by Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., whether the administration would consider providing financial assistance to states and individuals if oil zoomed to $70 a barrel, Hodel said:

"I would hope the Strategic Petroleum Reserve would keep us from getting to $70-a-barrel oil."

But various critics remained unconvinced, and Bradley, who supports the auction process, questioned whether the administration should consider beginning the auctions before prices start rising in the private markets.

Edwin Rothschild, a spokesman for the Citizen-Labor Energy Coalition, said the plan would benefit big oil companies with the financial resources to bid for the oil while penalizing smaller companies who might need the government supplies more.

"The plan appears to favor the largest companies who have the most to gain from bidding up the price because they can afford to buy it," Rothschild said.

Other critics of the auction process have warned that certain segments of society, such as farmers, would not be able to compete for scarce fuel supplies with industry.

Congress had ordered the allocation plan drafted after President Reagan vetoed a bill last summer that would have given him the authority to allocate private crude oil supplies and set prices in an emergency.

At the time, the administration said such authority was not needed because the Strategic Petroleum Reserve — a planned 1-billion-barrel government stockpile located in salt domes along the Gulf Coast — would cushion the shocks from any foreign cutoffs.

In the plan, the administration said it would auction at least 90 percent of the oil sold each month from the stockpile during an emergency to the highest bidders.

The energy secretary would have the right to hold back the remaining 10 percent to allocate to segments of the economy facing particular severe problems, according to the plan.

OPEC oil sales fell $25 billion in 1981

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Oil sales by the 13 members of OPEC fell more than $25 billion in 1981 as a steep decline in production more than offset an increase in prices.

The drop in oil income, which analysts believe has accelerated this year, reflects the emergence in early 1981 of a worldwide oversupply of oil — a glut that has persisted and is putting intense pressure on the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to reduce its prices.

The situation is expected to create friction when the cartel holds its regular winter meeting Dec. 19 in Vienna. Although there appears to be general agreement among the ministers that OPEC's official benchmark price of $34 a barrel must be kept, the members strongly disagree on how to combat the glut.

Nine of OPEC's 13 members had revenue declines in 1981, the cartel's news agency said Wednesday.

Guatemalan countryside remains under reign of terror, violence

By SOLL SUSSMAN
Associated Press Writer

GUATEMALA CITY — Nightclubs are full again in this capital city and downtown streets packed with evening strollers, a dramatic change from the atmosphere here eight months ago when fear and terror reigned.

But in the countryside, political violence continues to cause tremendous dislocation and death.

Six of the nation's 22 provinces — mostly in the northwestern highlands — are designated officially as "conflict areas" and are the center of the military's intensified campaign against four leftist guerrilla groups.

But government critics charge that instead of guerrillas it is Guatemala's majority Indian population that is being slaughtered in the course of army counter-insurgency tactics.

President Efrain Rios Montt — who describes himself as a born-again Christian — promised after coming to power in a March 23 coup that restoring respect for human rights here would be a major emphasis of his government.

The change in Guatemala City itself since the coup is notable.

Instead of an atmosphere marked by fear of right-wing death squads that roamed virtually at will, by night on deserted streets or even during the day, the city's former hustle has returned.

An average of 300 political killings each month was recorded in the months before the coup.

A leftist campaign of urban violence also has dropped off, apparently in a tactical decision. Windows now are being put back in the showplace Banco del Cafe building shattered by a car bomb last year.

The flow of refugees into neighboring Mexico continues. United Nations officials estimate that more than 25,000 Guatemalan refugees — mostly Indian peasants — are now in settlements in southern Mexico.

The Guatemalan government says about 250,000 people have been uprooted inside the country by the violence.

Amnesty International, the London-based human rights organization, says it has evidence that 2,600 Guatemalan Indians and peasants — many of them women and children — have been massacred by military and civil defense units since the coup.

Guatemalan government officials dismiss such claims and say the guerrillas are responsible for the killings. They point to a rebuttal by Thomas O. Enders, the U.S. assistant secretary of state for Inter-American affairs, who has argued that the blame for violence also must be placed on the guerrillas.

"Everything that is said the government has done, the government has not done," said government spokesman Rafael Escobar Arguello. "In the countryside, there is no violence except that of the guerrillas. They're the ones killing our people."

The government recently announced that a state of siege in effect since July would be extended for another 30 days because "the causes of disturbance of the social peace and public order" remain unchanged.

Rios Montt, a general and member of a California-based Protestant sect called the Church of the Word, delivers televised sermon-like messages to the country every Sunday night.

The coup that put him in power was led by young officers tired of allegedly widespread corruption and brutality in the previous military regime.

Felix Sarazua Patzan, a Cakchiquel Indian member of the Council of State formed by Rios Montt, said there also are some signs that life in the countryside has become easier since the coup.

"There is a little more security," he said. "But we can't say we're in heaven — a lot still is lacking."

Sarazua added, for example, that many teachers who had fled from the San Jose Poaquil and Santa Apolonia districts in his area of northwestern Guatemala in fear of the death squads have returned and at least 15 of 22 deserted schools are operating again.

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Individuals should practice moderation when exercising

Dear Dr. Solomon: I read your book "Stop Smoking, Lose Weight" from cover to cover. And I've read the part having to do with exercise several times. But I've got a Catch-22 question. I would like to start jogging but I'm about 30 pounds overweight. I find it hard to run and I'm afraid I'll hurt myself. How can I exercise to lose weight if my weight doesn't let me exercise? — Conrad, Flint, Mich.

Dear Conrad: Jogging is not the only exercise I discuss in my book. Some obese individuals may do better with swimming or bicycling. Furthermore, regardless of the specific exercise you eventually decide upon, bear in mind that moderation should be practiced.

Jogging as part of a program of weight control does not mean running a four-minute mile. In fact, it might not even mean running a mile at the outset. As the individual loses weight and gains strength, he will be able to do more at the same time as he becomes less vulnerable to injury.

Even before weight loss is achieved, however, it is possible to minimize the risk of injury. As I note in my book, warm-up and cool-down exercises are important. Arch supports and back supports can also lessen the risk of injury. And finally, if despite all these precautions you still experience unusual soreness or tenderness, check with your physician.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Every time a new patent medicine comes on the market, my wife adds it to our supply. We used to have aspirin in the medicine chest for headaches, but now we have aspirin and acetaminophen and our medicine chest is beginning to look like a pharmacy. Isn't aspirin still the best choice for a headache? — Harold, Oakland, Calif.

Dear Harold: Aspirin and acetaminophen are the two products most commonly prescribed for headaches, and they are about equally effective. However, individual differences in patients may suggest that one or the other be used. For example, a patient with a bleeding disorder would do better with acetaminophen, while someone with kidney disease would do better wth aspirin.

The side effects associated with the use of either product are about the same.

Dear Dr. Solomon: If a person doesn't inherit glaucoma, does that mean he's safe from ever getting it? — Seymour, New Bedford, Mass.

Dear Seymour: Heredity is not the only cause of glaucoma. It can result from a blow to the head or eye, or even from emotional upset. Glaucoma can also develop as the result of a congenital defect or it can be the result of illness, infection, or cataracts.

Equine deaths to be investigated

BROWNSBORO, Texas (AP) — U.S. Interior Secretary James Watt has authorized federal officials to spend what they need for a thorough investigation into the starvation deaths of at least 38 horses "adopted" by an East Texas rancher, a spokesman said.

John Gumert of the Bureau of Land Management also said authorities are checking out tips placing some of the missing mustangs as far away as Missouri.

"Certainly (the federal horses) are not all accounted for," Gumert said Wednesday.

Investigators believe some of the carcasses may have rotted away or may be hidden by underbrush, Gumert said.

BLM officials said 38 horses are confirmed dead.

Meanwhile, a ranch sheltering 150 of the surviving but malnourished horses has been flooded with offers to adopt the mustangs, but the ranch director says the mustangs won't be up for adoption for some time.

"The response has been tremendous," Black Beauty Ranch director Jerry Owen said. "The phone has been ringing from daylight until 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning."

Last week, officials discovered the remains of about 30 dead horses and more than 150 other horses that appeared to be starving. A lost deer hunter reported finding the carcasses in an overgrazed pasture about three miles east of Pittsburg.

"It will be awhile before these horses are ready for adoption," Owens told The Dallas Morning News. "But we can use donations of hay and money to care for them."

Three investigators from the BLM met with the U.S. attorney's office in Dallas Tuesday to discuss possible federal charges against rancher Joe Corbett, who already has been charged with a state misdemeanor offense of cruelty to animals.

Athens veterinarian John Morton said the entire herd suffers from a serious case of stomach worms.

Corbett obtained the wild horses last December under a BLM "Adopt-a-Horse" program to reduce the population of wild horses and burros on federal lands. Reports that many of the horses were starving brought about the program.

Gumert said officials were sorting the herd to determine which of the horses are federally owned and which are Corbett's personal property. Colts born to federally owned horses would belong to Corbett, he said.

Houston freeway obscenities worsen

HOUSTON (AP) — A motorist in an orange Cadillac drives along the Southwest Freeway, swerving dangerously close to other cars to try to force them off the road.

An off-duty police officer riding a motorcycle on the North Freeway was motioned to the roadside. An irate motorist pulled a pistol, fired four times into the gas tank and then told the officer he didn't like motorcycles.

A truck driver recently was in such a hurry to get somewhere that he deliberately rammed a car traveling the 55-mph speed limit. Seconds later another car in another lane was rammed from behind by another 18-wheeler.

These incidents were among innumerable other cases of freeway violence reported to police this year. In fact, police estimate, fights, assaults and shootings on this city's heavily traveled freeways have increased up to 400 percent in less than one year.

Motorists are so angry about minor traffic accidents and people pulling in front of them that they're resorting to more than just unfriendly gestures or shouting obscenities, police said. They're shooting guns or ramming each other's cars, police said.

Cows pig out on stale baked goods

"After you feed the cows some of this sweet stuff, you'll see them standing around and licking their chops just like little kids," says dairyman David Knight.

Knight buys bakery goods that are too old even for thrift stores, loads them into a truck and hauls them to his farm. He removes the wrappers and feeds the stale munchies to his dairy cattle.

He can't be bothered unwrapping individually packaged items "like Twinkies and such," so those go into a separate barrel for use by a neighboring pig farmer. The wrappers don't seem to bother porkers.

Knight figures that his bovines consume as much as three tons of baked goods each month. But he has no beef about the nutritional value of the unusual fodder.

"Hey, what's bread made of? It's made of wheat and so on, right? I can buy it a lot cheaper than I can wheat. So I'll feed the milking cows maybe three loaves a day with their regular food; it's good for them," he said.

Cranston believes he will be backed by Kennedy supporters

Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — Sen. Alan Cranston said Wednesday that he anticipates a "significant number" of Sen. Ted Kennedy's supporters now will back his 1984 Democratic presidential bid.

Cranston, the Senate minority whip, made the comment immediately following Kennedy's announcement that he would not be a candidate for the presidency in 1984.

"Kennedy and his followers among party activists will have a great deal to say about who the next Democratic nominee for president will be," Cranston said. "And they will play a substantial role in the next Democratic administration."

Based on his findings in "testing the presidential waters" in 36 states so far this year, the Califonia Democratic added, "I know that a significant number of Kennedy supporters will not be ready to support me."

Cranston also predicted that President Reagan will be defeated by the Democratic nominee, but added that Reagan also may decide not to run in 1984.

I sympathize with Sen. Kennedy over the difficult decision he has made and I admire his great devotion to his family, which I know played the key part in his decision.

It is nonsense to suggest, as I've heard some observers speculate, that Sen. Kennedy's decision was influenced in part by the expectation that the economy will improve and that Ronald Reagan thus will be difficult to defeat in 1984.

No Kennedy ever shrank from a tough fight.

I hope the economy will improve but whether it does or not, I am convinced that Ronald Reagan can be defeated in 1984. However, he too may decide not to run.

Tying yellow ribbons

Burnet fourth grade teacher Lisa Sutton hands out yellow ribbons which represented books read by students on their own time. Since the beginning of National Children's Book Week Nov. 15, the students tied a yellow ribbon 'round an old — and dead — oak tree for every 45-page book they finished at home. Wednesday, the dead branches were adorned with 123 yellow ribbons before they were untied and returned to students and the two fourth graders who read the most books were recognized.

Yellow ribbons given new meaning

Staff Writer

Its scrawny branches may seem bare and uninspiring, but the dead oak tree that stands in the middle of Lisa Sutton's fourth grade classroom at Burnet Elementary School has led students to nurture their minds and sprout fresh ideas.

The children are expanding their knowledge by reading on their own in order to decorate the scant, skinny arms of the dead oak tree. Beginning at the first of National Children's Book Week Nov. 15, each of Ms. Sutton's students who completed reading a book have tied to the bony, brown branches bright yellow ribbons of yarn. Attached to the ribbon is a yellow piece of paper cut in the shape of an open book with the student's name, title of book, author of book and the date the book was finished written on it.

The books, which must be at least 45 pages long and accompanied by a note from a parent verifying completion, were chosen by the children and read on their own time.

According to Ms. Sutton, the ironical aspect of the project was that the children's minds would grow due to an effort to give some resemblance of life back to a deceased tree.

While the symbolic meaning of tying yellow ribbons 'round the old oak tree most likely will always be associated with the hope three years ago for a safe return of the Iranian hostages, a hope of another type originated the oak odyssey at Burnet.

"My hope was for the children to read more," Ms. Sutton said simply.

And apparently her wish had a benefiting beginning as Wednesday morning a total of 123 yellow ribbons adorned the formerly forlorn tree.

Gabe Lewis was recognized for reading the most books out of the morning class while Misty Forest received recognition from the afternoon class. Gabe completed 12 books and Misty finished 15.

The students benefited from the extra exposure to reading; the two winners received their honors and the rest of the Burnet students also came out ahead. Two books, furnished by Ms. Sutton, were donated to the school library in the names of the two winners.

To generate even more growth, for each book finished and each yellow ribbon safely secured, Ms. Sutton dished out an acorn to the student to plant at his or her home.

Meanwhile, as the child's mind grows, and the new acorn grows, the old timber, donated by Davis Garden Center and Landscaping, hasn't been cut up for kindling yet. According to Ms. Sutton, Gabe Lewis suggested continuing the reading project by "branching" in different directions.

During the holiday season, the tree looks like it still will be good "fir" something. For every book finished, a bright Christmas ornament will be made and hung on the ugly but useful branches.

MISD believes utility bills too hot to handle

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Midland and Lee High schools' September utility bills upset school board members enough to voice demands for a change during the last two regular meetings of the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees.

According to the September utility report, Lee High's bill exceeded that of it's cross-town rival by almost $5,000.

Electricity costs at Midland High nudged northward to $7,472.30, while Lee's soared somewhat further — to $12,258.55 worth of electrical expenses.

As the most frequently used building and the largest per square foot, LHS has more need and more space for cooling, heating and lighting, thus making it one of the most expensive schools in the district to operate, according to school administrators. After trustees' eyes popped at the utility report and questions were raised and answered, the board decided that other buildings which cost less to operate should be used as new centers for after-hour activities. Meanwhile, an energy management program, as well as a study of energy-saving devices, is expected to be implemented at Lee.

According to Wilson Heidelberg, director of school plant maintenance and grounds, Lee High is used more than any other school building for after-hour activities. "It is our highest-used building," Heidelberg noted. "There always is a lot of activity. Some wing is being used every night."

MISD superintendent Dr. Joseph P. Baressi Jr. said that the University of Texas of the Permian Basin conducts three or four classes a semester about two nights a week there, while the new inservice program for MISD teachers also increases the use of the building.

"The new inservice format provides a variety of inservice programs at night or on the weekends," Baressi explained. "We've done about 100 and at least half of those have been at Lee."

The convenient location of the school on West Neeley Avenue and the large parking lot attract programs to Lee, he added.

"(LEE'S COSTS are greater than Midland High's) mainly because of the building architecture and the use of the school at nights and on weekends," Heidelberg told trustees during the Nov. 23 school board meeting. He later explained that while Lee has mechanical rooms in each section of the school, Midland High, being two-story, retains heating and cooling more economically. "Lee also has more demand for electricity during the peak-use hours than does Midland," he added.

According to Sara St. Clair with the customer service department at Texas Electric Service Co., the electricity rate is determined in the same manner at both schools.

"Both schools would be billed at the same rate," she explained. "It's not so many cents per kilowatt hour. All rates are based on the exact cost in steps."

The schools in Midland are billed on a general service rate, which is the most advantageous for school accounts, she said. A customer charge, a charge for electricity demand and a charge for the kilowatt hours are included in the general service rate.

"If they (the two schools) used the same amount of electricity, their bills would be the same," Mrs. St. Clair said. However, she added, the bills vary according to the following: how many kilowatt hours are used, what the school's highest demand is and what the school's electricity needs are during TESCO's peak demand period.

THE SCHOOL'S highest demand is determined by its largest requirement for electricity during any 15-minute period. She explained that a special meter measures the 15-minute period of use at any given time and that if the next 15-minute period of time requires more electricity, the meter automatically determines that.

Another factor which determines the rate of bills is the school's largest demand for electricity that it requires during any 15-minute period of time between June and October, or TESCO's peak demand period.

She explained that from any customer's home or business, the lines running down the alley and under the ground to TESCO's generating plants must be able to fulfill the capacity needs of each customer during the peak hours for the plant.

"The rate needs to be designed so that we only charge him (a customer) what it costs us to serve him," she explained. "The idea is everything we have to do to serve him goes into the bill. We have to have enough capacity to serve him even if he only needs it 15 minutes during that peak period (between June and October)."

Mrs. St. Clair added that some accounts are more advantageous to the school district than others. "For example, they may have a vocational building on another rate," she said. "We monitor the schools all year long to see if an alternate rate would be more advantageous to them."

AND WHILE THE electricity rate at Lee may be the most advantageous for the school district, plans for an energy maintenance program will begin soon, according to Heidelberg.

"We're going to use energy-saving devices," he said. "We've already changed the roof. It used to have a gravel roof but now it has a reflecting one that looks like aluminum. There are different types of window panes that are thermal that we can install. It (an energy-saving device) does pay itself out but, up front, it's very costly.

MISD's current utility bill for September, including gas, water and electricity, is $128,310.46. During September of last year, the bill was $88,863.37. The August 1982 utility bill was $77,499.89.

Budget changes hurt Basin agency

Tamra Oatman, executive director of Planned Parenthood of the Permian Basin, said that as family planning and other social services lose government money — as they have under the Reagan administration's New Federalism program — the resulting vicious circle is measureable in human suffering and despair.

Recent reductions in government funds forced the closing of Planned Parenthood clinics in McCamey and Wink, according to Ms. Oatman. Small clinics like those in Fort Stockton and Monahans are also threatened as budget cuts continue gobbling into revenues.

Since many women in need of family planning are unable to afford a doctor's services, the closing of a small town's clinic can rapidly lead to additional unwanted pregnancies, followed by a greater incidence of child abuse, later compounded by any number of related social problems, she said.

"We, like most other social service organizations, have experienced continued cutbacks over the past several years," she said. "It's a vicious circle. I don't like the fact that the people who suffer will be in the rural areas."

Planned Parenthood served about 12,000 patients in fiscal year 1982, and expects more in 1983. To stretch its already taut budget and keep small clinics operating, Planned Parenthood departed from past policy Monday and began operating Midland's family planning facility, at 307 E. Texas Ave., as a "self-sustaining clinic."

Ms. Oatman said Planned Parenthood hopes to offset the clinic's expenses by charging a $30 fee of all clinic patients. With patient fees sustaining Midland's clinic, government funds once devoted to the facility may be spread among the other eight area clinics, she explained.

Traditionally, Planned Parenthood patients pay on a sliding fee scale, with variable rates dependent on income and family size. Until recent years, an overwhelming majority of the operating funds were derived from government appropriations.

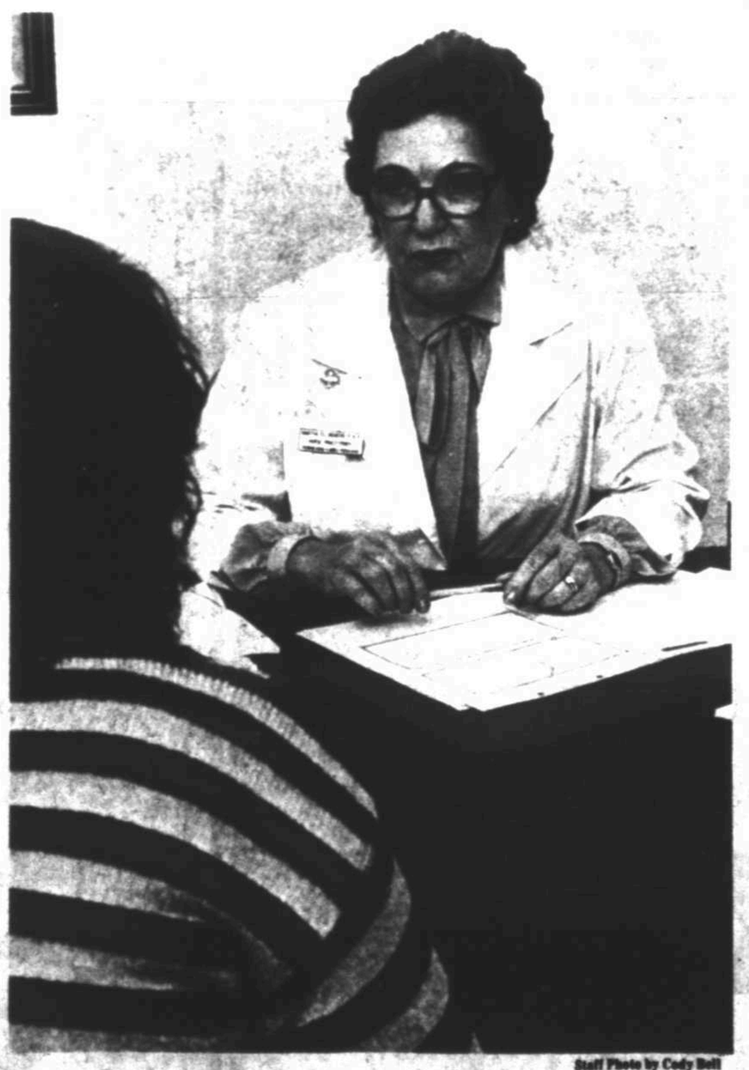

But while federal funds accounted for 72 percent of the 1982 budget, Ms. Oatman said the figure has declined to 55 percent for fiscal year 1983 and may slip further in years ahead.

After sustaining more than $200,000 in budget reductions in the past two years, Planned Parenthood's budget for 1983 sits at about $850,000, she said.

Even with the clinic closings, revenues trailed expenses, according to Ms. Oatman. "We decided the only other way to bring in that revenue is through patient fees," she said.

Despite the funding crunch, Ms. Oatman said she's optimistic about the future of Midland's self-sufficient clinic, a Planned Parenthood-owned facility.

Inmate contends his jailing illegal

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A convicted rapist who says he was coerced into pleading guilty just before a jury was to consider the evidence in his rape case 1½ years ago has filed a petition of habeas corpus in federal court in Midland contending he is illegally held in prison.

The petitioner, David Robin Pickle, 25, was sentenced to 30 years in prison by 238th State District Court Judge Vann Culp in June 1981 after he confessed to raping and committing sodomy with a young woman on March 24, 1981, in an apartment complex where his wife was the manager. Pickle admitted using a master key to open the woman's apartment door lock, then broke into her apartment by tearing away the night latch and threatened the woman with a rifle. In his statement, he said he had been drinking beer heavily that night.

In his five-point federal complaint, Pickle is alleging illegal search and seizure, violation of his constitutional rights, ineffective counsel, unlawful judgment and false indictment.

His complaint deals with David Joers, first assistant district attorney who prosecuted the case; court-appointed attorneys Sandy Torres and Gayle Newman, who represented him in the case; Judge Culp and Frank Bartlett, the Midland Police Department detective who investigated the case. Pickle refers to the detective as "Batlet" or "Bartlet."

"I was forsed (sic) to plead guilty after my trial had started," Pickle says in his federal petition.

Pickle, who claims he was a victim of injustice, cites the following examples to prove his contention.

—Ineffective counsel: "My loryors (sic) Sandy Torres and Gayle Newman allowed the court to use illegaly (sic) obtained evidence against me without any objections. They also told me if I didn't cop-out, I would get 99 years in prison." Pickle claims that Torres told his mother that "I was guilty as hell...He also added that he was not doing anything to defend me."

—Illegal search and seizure: "The judge told Midland police to get a search warrant before searching my apt. (sic) but they didn't. They broke into my apt.

Beth Hartman seems to be having trouble starting her letter to Santa. It might be because the two-year-old hasn't learned to read or write yet and will probably end up having Mom or Dad do the job for her. However, Mom and Dad decided to let Beth have a go at it, and a letter with markings by the little girl is now on its way to the North Pole.

"I'm excited because I think it's an exciting new concept to run a self-sustaining clinic. The first two days have been great," she said. "Family planning clinics throughout the country are going to this."

For the $30 fee, a nurse practitioner performs a comprehensive physical on Midland patients. Ms. Oatman said the exam includes a pap smear and screening tests for venereal disease, anemia and diabetes. She said patients also may receive instruction in breast self-examination, pregnancy testing and information concerning birth control, adoption and abortion.

Surprisingly, Ms. Oatman said the loss of government money has some disguised blessings, partly because the fickle nature of government funding makes planning difficult. Also, federal funds carry several strings, including mandatory, multi-step education and counseling for each patient.

Emphasizing patient fees as a revenue source "gives us more control; it gives the community more control," she said. "Every patient's needs are different. When you're running your own program, you can tailor your service to the individual."

For example, return visitors to the Midland clinic could bypass much of the time-consuming counseling and allow additional time for first-time patients, she said.

Despite her optimism, Ms. Oatman said patient fees and private donations — the two sources of funding likely to replace government money — may not be enough to meet expenses.

Ms. Oatman said Reeves County and the city of Pecos recently combined to buoy the Pecos clinic. She said further help from local governments may be necessary to avert clinic closings.

In November, Planned Parenthood began monitoring the balance sheets of individual clincs. Ms. Oatman said a clinic unable to generate 40 percent of its required revenue may face extinction.

Meanwhile, Midland's Planned Parenthood clinic will continue its solo test flight through the New Federalism's rarified air.

while I was out of town. They took my gun and some pictures. Then they used the gun against me in court. I proved in court it was illegal to use the gun against me because they did not have a search warrant when they broke into my apt. and took my gun. But they used the gun against me in court anyway."

—Violation of constitutional rights: Detective Bartlett violated my rights by not letting me have a loryor during questioning. He took my statement but when I got to court, he had a different statement."

—Unlawful judgment: "When I went to court, Judge Van (sic) Culp allowed the D.A. to use false and illegaly obtained evidence in his court to send me to prison. They used a gun from a (sic) illegal search and seizure and a false illegaly obtained statement...Judge Van Culp let them make a mockery of justice."

—False indictment: "I was indited (sic) for aggravated rape. They took a gun from my apt. without a search warrant and used it against me. They didn't take any spirm (sic) or blood test. There is no proof of sexual intercourse. So there couldn't have been any rape, and without any rape, the indictment is false. There are no eye witneses (sic) so the statements are heresay (sic) and heresay is not admisable (sic) in a court of law."

Pickle's case to win his freedom is to be considered by U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton, who presides over the Midland-Odessa Division of the federal court system's Western District of Texas.

AUSTIN (AP) — U.S. District Judge James Nowlin has ruled that thousands of inmates in county jails across the state are members of a class action suit against the Texas Commission on Jail Standards, the agency which enforces jail regulations.

The class action, filed in 1980, was brought by three Bell County residents who were arrested in 1977 at the Texas Blue Bonnet Club for public intoxication and disorderly conduct and taken to Bell County Jail. The plaintiffs say they were falsely arrested and the jail was substandard because the state jail commission had not used its power to clean up Texas jails.

Mary Keller, director of the Texas chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union, which filed the case, said Nowlin's ruling acknowledged the scope of issues raised in the federal suit.

"The suit is about the systematic failure of the state agency to protect inmates' rights," Ms. Keller said.

Attorney General Mark White's office opposed the class certification on the grounds that it would require evidence on 250 jails across the state while running up "horrendous" legal bills.

Sunset commission will decide officials' fate

AUSTIN (AP) — The state Sunset Advisory Commission meets today to debate whether Public Utility Commissioners should be elected rather than appointed and whether Railroad Commissioners should be appointed rather than elected.

The Sunset Commission, made up of legislators and other state officials, is assigned to review state agencies periodically and either recommend that the Legislature abolish them, make changes in the way they operate or leave them alone.

The contradictory proposals are among dozens concerning the PUC and Railroad Commission that will be considered when the Sunset Commission continues meeting.

On Wednesday, the commission could not agree on reorganization of the State Depository Board and it simply ignored innovative suggestions about insurance regulation and a proposal to make being a Texas Employment Commissioner a part-time job.

The panel failed to pass a proposal by Sunset commissioner and Supreme Court Justice Sears McGee to allow the State Board of Insurance to charge insurance companies fees to support the costs of regulating them.

A staff "issue" — not a recommendation — would abolish the state's system of setting insurance rates in favor of simply letting the market take its course. The commission ignored the idea.

The commission also declined to vote on a staff proposal that would have allowed the insurance board to penalize companies that are slow to settle claims and the panel voted down a proposal to establish a consumer information WATS line.

The Depository Board, made up of the state treasurer, banking commissioner and one gubernatorial appointee, sets the interest rate paid by banks holding state money. The Sunset Commission had two alternatives to work with Wednesday.

Under the first proposal developed by the Sunset staff, the board would be abolished and the state treasurer would handle its chores. Commission members voted 5-3 in favor of that proposal, but it takes six votes to make a recommendation to the Legislature.

The second plan would have added the comptroller and two additional appointees to the board. That plan drew a 4-4 vote, which killed it.

The commission unanimously approved a recommendation to give the depository board more flexibility in deciding where to deposit state money. Current law requires the board to put at least $5,000 in any bank willing to pay the interest rate set by board members. Over 1,400 banks now hold state money.

Board members would be allowed to restrict the state deposits to "centally located" banks, if lawmakers approve the commission proposal.

Sunset Commissioners failed, however, to approve a recommendation that would allow the board to take competitive bids for state deposits.

Tree-lighting festival set for Friday

The 15th annual Christmas tree-lighting festival will be held Friday at 7 p.m. at the Downtown Plaza Park, Wall Avenue and Loraine Street. The event is co-sponsored by the Midland Parks and Recreation Department and the Midland Jaycees.

According to the Parks and Recreation Department, the tree is one of the largest man-made trees in Texas at 75 feet tall with 300 branches and 2,500 lights. It is constructed entirely of live branches cut in the national forest in Cloudcroft, N.M.

Mayor G. Thane Akins will turn the tree's lights on at about 7:05 p.m. There will be Christmas music by the Lee Freshman Band and a presentation by the drama department.

There will be free pony rides, two large fire pits to keep everyone warm, free hot chocolate and, of course, an appearance by Santa Claus.

Clayton: Tax increase possible

Born July 8, 1908, in Laredo, she had been a resident of Midland for the past 15 years.

Survivors include her husband, Fernando Carnero of Midland; a son, Tony C. Bernall of Midland; six daughters, Corrina Vias of Perisol, Paula Rodriquez of San Jose, Calif., Manuella Flores of Stanton, and Lupe Ramirez, Chavella Ortega and Juanita Ramirez, all of Midland; and 46 grandchildren.

Wayne Waldrep

Services will be at 2:30 p.m. Saturday at the Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home chapel with Dr. Charles Lutrick, minister of First United Methodist Church, officiating. Burial will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park.

Waldrep was born July 5, 1936, in Hobbs, N.M. He spent his early life in Marfa. He attended Texas Tech University and studied pre-law and received his law degree from the University of Texas in early 1960. Prior to graduation he served as an officer in the U.S. Navy. Upon graduation, he was in private law practice in Houston and Dallas. He joined Lone Star Insurance Company of Dallas in the early 1970s in the legal department. He was president of the company at the time of his death.

Survivors include a sister, Dorothy Sisco of Casper, Wyo.; a niece, Cynde Harlan of Midland; and three nephews, Jack Waldrep Jr., David Waldrep and Jon Waldrep, all of Midland; and his grandmother, Lena Shelton of Tahoka.

Gene Richter

ODESSA — Services for Gene Richter, 45, of Odessa and formerly of Lamesa were to be at 10 a.m. today in Hubbard-Kelly Funeral Home Chapel in Odessa. Graveside services were to be at 2 p.m. today in Lamesa Memorial Cemetery.

Richter died Tuesday in an Odessa hospital following a brief illness.

He was born March 11, 1937, in Lamesa and was married to Jan Yarborough on Aug. 18, 1978, in Ruidoso, N.M. He was an automobile mechanic and a country-western musician.

Survivors include his wife; two daughters, Connie Richter and Cindy Richter, both of Odessa; four sons, Nicky Richter of Lamesa, Glynn Richter of Alexander, Ark., Tony Richter of Odessa and Steven Richter of Denver City; his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Richter of Lamesa; a sister, Elaine Githens of Big Spring; five brothers, Billy Richter and Don Richter, both of Midland, and Bobby Richter, Charlie Richter and Leon Richter, all of Lamesa; and three grandchildren.

EdgarGalle

Services for Edgar Galle, 78, of 112 W. Cuthbert will be at 4 p.m. Friday at the Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home chapel, with burial to follow in Resthaven Memorial Park.

Galle died early today in a Midland hospital following a brief illness.

He was born Oct. 5, 1904, in Seguin. He married Pauline Pringle in 1932 at Abilene. The couple lived in Jal, N.M., for five years, then moved to Midland. He was associated with the Superior Oil Co. from 1945 until his retirement in 1969. He was a member of Fort Worth and Jax Church of Christ.

Survivors include his wife of Midland; two sons, Richard Galle of Midland and John Galle of Euless; a brother, Edward Galle of Abilene; six sisters, Nettie Nunaley of Stockton, Calif., Alma Jewell of Abilene, Erna Pringle of Haskell, Bertha Waltrip and Ann Otto, both of San Jose, Calif., and Clara Adams of El Paso; and three grandchildren.

Morris Lester

Services for Morris "Red" Lester, 65, of 3209 Shandon will be at 2 p.m. Friday at the Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home chapel, with burial in Resthaven Memorial Park.

Lester died Wednesday night at his home.

He was born Oct. 30, 1917, in Vivian, La., and finished school in Loraine. He moved to Midland from Houston in 1953 and was a welder most of his life and for a number of years was a corporation pilot. He married Belle Boatright in 1959. He was a member of the First Presbyterian Church and the Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association.

Survivors include his wife of Midland; a son, Morris Wayne Lester of Dallas; three brothers, J.P. Lester of Bevens, George Lester of Houston and Sam Lester of Louisiana; two sisters, Maxine Deckard of Houston and Mary Lord of Louisiana; and three grandchildren.

Man held in connection with shooting

ODESSA — One man is in custody following a Wednesday night shooting incident that stemmed from an argument over a card game.

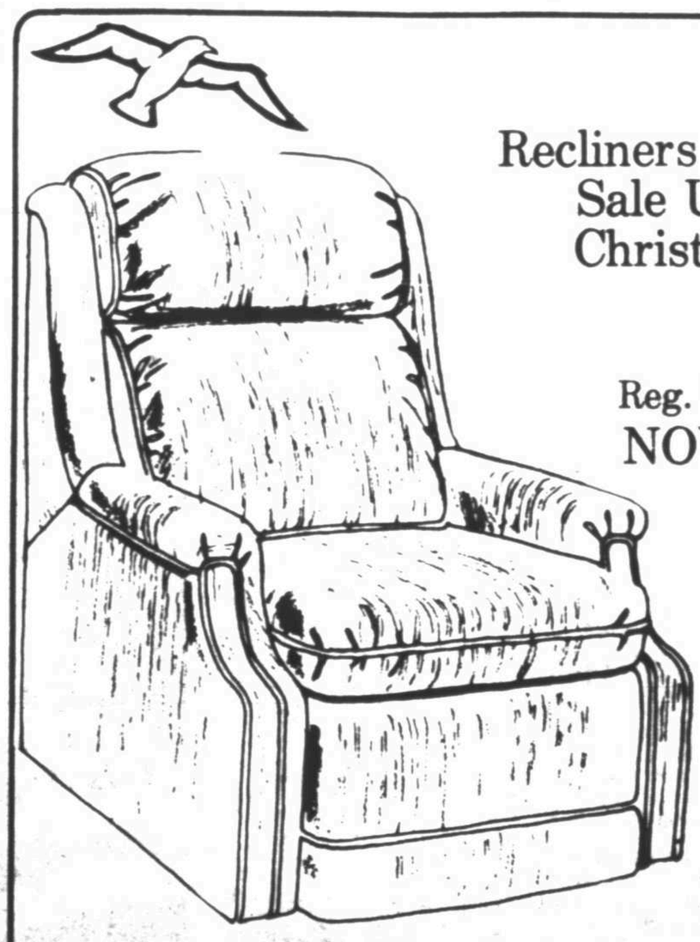

The victim, 32-year-old Joe Neil Slider of Odessa, was listed in stable condition at Medical Center Hospital this morning.

Police said he was shot once in the back during an argument with a man he had been playing cards with behind a car repair shop in the 1300 block of East 2nd Street shortly after 11 p.m.

Slider ran from the scene and collapsed near the intersection of 2nd and Dixie, about a half-block from where the shooting took place. Formal charges of aggravated assault are expected to be filed against the suspect sometime today.

Spring schedules available at UTPB

ODESSA — Class schedules for the spring semester at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin now are available in the admissions office.

About 370 classes are listed on the schedule. Registration will be from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. and from 3 to 7 p.m. Jan. 12-13 in the UTPB student lounge. Classes begin Jan. 17.

UTPB director of admissions Robert Warmann noted enrollment will be by individual time assignment. Registration materials will be mailed to students. If the materials have not been received by Jan. 3, they may be picked up in the admissions office beginning Jan. 7.

Enrollment at UTPB is open to students who have completed 60 hours of course work at any accredited community college, senior college or university. Warmann said prospective students should notify the registrars at their previous colleges to send official transcripts directly to the UTPB admissions office. An application also should be on file to avoid delays in the registration process.

Students who are not pursuing a degree but are interested in taking courses for enjoyment or for more information in a particular field should obtain special registration forms for the Encore program.

"Encore students, by law, must meet regular admissions requirements, but will not be required to take exams or complete outside assignments," Warmann said.

Midlanders named to WTS group

Lexie Latimer and Raye Sunderman, both junior business majors, are two of 13 new members selected.

Ms. Latimer is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Adam Praisnar, 1205 W. Louisiana, and Ms. Sunderman is the daughter of Dale Sunderman, 3217 Sycamore, and Marie Sunderman.

Members are selected on the basis of school spirit and scholarship.

Supporting athletics and promoting school spirit are major activities of the organization. Belles participate in a variety of special campus events and programs as well as organize support projects for the university's athletes.

This year the group is sponsoring a project to renovate the J.A. Hill Memorial Chapel on campus. Belles will raise funds to pay for minor repair work inside the chapel and landscaping.

TCU surpasses area fund-raising goal

FORT WORTH — The Texas Christian University/Permian Basin area campaign for 1982 has surpassed its goal of $68,200 by more than $33,000. A total of $102,199 was raised during the annual fund drive that began Oct. 6.

The over-the-goal total was reported by campaign director John Grimland, partner-in-charge of the Midland office of Main Hurdman, at a Nov. 17 victory party in Midland.

The Permian Basin area's 1982 goal is part of the university's overall budget-supporting goal of $2.4 million for this year's annual fund. Gift solicitations will continue through the end of the fiscal year, May 31, 1983.

Joining Grimland, a member of TCU's board of trustees, in this year's campaign were 32 volunteers. Their efforts were coordinated by Jim Lucas, who served as alumni group manager, and the Rev. Clark Floyd, minister of Midland's Memorial Christian Church and manager of the friends and parents group.

Directed at alumni, businessmen, foundations, parents of TCU students and other friends of the university, the annual fund drive seeks gifts to be used to support TCU's total academic program as they provide scholarships and financial aid to deserving students, support new programs and purchase library materials as well as essential library and teaching equipment.

The Permian Basin area campaign was coordinated by Hal Roach, TCU associate director of development/annual fund.

Rusk Elementary PTA meets Tuesday

Beginning of Wood trial ending possibly near

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A surprise alibi witness for the man accused of killing a federal judge may signal the beginning of the end of a trial so long one lawyer once joked prosecutors may have decided to let defendants serve any sentence in the courtroom.

Defense attorney Tom Sharpe Jr. appeared close today to resting his case after calling 20 witnesses over a 12-day period in an effort to bolster Charles Harrelson's contention he was in Dallas during the morning U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr. was assassinated in San Antonio.

Harrelson Wednesday ended 33 hours of testimony over seven days, contending that he was in Dallas at the time Wood was shot with a high-powered rifle outside his San Antonio townhome.

Next, the defense called the latest alibi witness, Plano, Texas, sunglasses dealer and gambler Richard Thomas. He told the jury he knocked at Harrelson's Dallas apartment between 8:30 a.m. and 9:30 a.m. the day of the killing and Harrelson answered the door.

However, on cross-examination by prosecutor John Emerson, Thomas admitted he gave several previous statements that the incident could have happened anytime from 9 a.m. to "evening" of that day.

During his testimony, Harrelson weaved for the jury a complicated scenario which closely paralled the government's theory that he was "stalking" Wood for two weeks prior to the fatal shooting.

But Harrelson said he was only involved in a "scam" with his longtime friend, George Edward "Pete" Kay, to fleece Chagra out of money by falsely claiming credit for the Wood slaying.

He claimed that he loaned Kay his wife's car, the one the government alleges he used as a getaway vehicle, and gave Kay the alleged murder weapon which Mrs. Harrelson already has been convicted of purchasing in Dallas 12 days before the killing.

The government presented telephone, parking lot and motel records to trace Harrelson's movements — calling FBI fingerprint and handwriting experts to show Harrelson used several aliases.

Harrelson countered with bank records showing he purchased a cashier's check at a Dallas bank and four alibi witness who said they saw him as early as 8:30 a.m. on the day Wood was killed. Wood was shot at about 8:30 a.m. in San Antonio — 272 miles south of Dallas.

In another move indicating the trial's end may be near, attorneys for co-defendants Jo Ann Harrelson and Elizabeth Chagra indicated they possibly could present their cases before the weekend.

However, the government — which called 83 witnesses and introduced 281 exhibits during its 23 days of testimony — still will get a chance to counter defense testimony with rebuttal witnesses.

Transfer decision up to judge

BEAUMONT (AP) — A federal district judge has been asked to renew a stay of a Department of Public Safety order transferring a trooper who sued the agency.

Attorneys for DPS trooper James W. Wade on Wednesday asked U.S. District Judge Joe Fisher to again protect the 14-year veteran from a transfer to a drivers license bureau in Dallas.

Wade, of Orange, had been ordered last week to report for duty at the bureau Wednesday. But the trooper, who filed an $18 million lawsuit against his superiors alleging harrassment, said Tuesday he would take medical leave for several days.

The motion, seeking a delay of the order, was presented to U.S. District Judge Joe Fisher by Wade.

If Fisher denies the request, Wade's attorneys must seek a stay from the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals to prevent the DPS from executing its transfer order.

Wade filed the suit last summer contending his superiors in the Department of Public Safety were conducting a campaign of harassment against him because he objected to a system of traffic ticket quotas.

The suit asks $15 million in damages for Wade and another $3 million for his wife, Neva, who the suit claims also has been victimized by harassment.

Wade said Tuesday that since he filed the suit, he has been treated "like a stepchild" by the DPS.

Instead of patrolling the highways, as he has done for 14 years, the veteran officer said he is required to sit eight hours a day in an office furnished only by a desk, a chair and a black telephone.

Stacking up suitable stocking-stuffers are, from left, seniors Jennifer Jackson, Midland High School band lieutenant, and David Grace, captain. The MHS band has been selling Texas Manor Fruitcakes for 23 years. All proceeds go for scholarship programs and travel expenses to the National Concert Contest in Tempe, Ariz., this spring. Available in three sizes, the fruitcakes can be ordered from any MHS band member by calling the band hall at 682-7367, extension 230, or by calling Bob Stokes, chairman of the project, at 683-8828.

Plainview farmer new Texas Farm Bureau president

DALLAS (AP) — S.M. True Jr., a Plainview cotton, soybean and feed grain farmer, won the presidency of the Texas Farm Bureau by ousting incumbent president Carrol G. Chaloupka of Dalhart.

True, who has was elected to the TFB board in 1975, received the nod Wednesday during the organization's convention.

Chaloupka has served as the group's president for the past eight years.

Wayne Cranfill of Hooks was elected vice president and George White was selected as secretary-treasurer.

About 1,400 delegates also completed consideration of state-related resolutions as the meeting closed Wednesday, taking a hard-line stance on water rights issues and drunken driving punishments.

The delegates supported a resolution stating that "under no circumstances" should land owners be restricted in the use of water under their land or charged a fee for the usage.

The delegates also opposed any law charging landowners for using water on their own property, along with state opposition to agrarian reforms and land-use planning.

On Tuesday, the delegates endorsed banning open containers of alcoholic beverages in motor vehicles, raising the drinking age from 19 to 21 and requiring first-time drunken driving offenders to serve at least 50 percent of their sentences.

Officials also announced Wednesday that the Texas Farm Bureau, with 306,359 member families, became the largest state farm bureau in the country, eclipsing 1981 leader Illinois.

Delegates also approved resolutions for more effective animal health and fire ant control programs.

One resolution adopted by the delegates called for "increased brucellosis research to develop improved vaccines for adult cattle and improved techniques of detection and a control or cure for brucellosis."

The convention also called for a state fire ant control program that would include aerial spraying and ground application of a "durable" chemical.

Motions to put public school employees on equal footing with state employees and to scrap current safety inspection for motor vehicles were rejected.

Alda marriage is partnership

By CAROLINE DREWES
Hearst Feature Service

SONOMA, Calif. — "I don't like to come between a husband and wife," remarks a tardy lunch guest at an old adobe house near here, taking the only remaining seat at the table, which happens to be between Alan and Arlene Alda.

And Arlene Alda looks up with a smile and says gently, "You couldn't."

For years, Arlene Alda maintained a low profile to her famous husband, but she now has stepped confidently into her own spotlight, revealing a warm, direct, multi-talented woman with no pretensions and few doubts concerning her place under the sun.

She was born in the Bronx, the daughter of a lithographer. She became a Phi Beta Kappa at Hunter College, a Fulbright Scholar, a symphony musician, a wife, a mother, an award-winning photographer. And now she is busy producing books.

Her first effort was a behind-the-scenes look at "The Four Seasons" movie company. Then came "Arlene Alda's ABC," a book of photographs in which she discovered the shapes of the alphabet in the everyday world. Her latest effort is "Sonya's Mommy Works," the first in a series of photographed stories for children dealing with real-life situations, this one concerning a little girl whose mother returns to a job outside her home.

ARLENE, WHOSE HUSBAND is one of the country's most vocal male feminists, has strength in her face and humor in her smile. She is not glamorous; she is real, the antithesis of Hollywood. At 5-feet-2, she is exactly one foot shorter than Alan, who is two years younger than she.

She gave up a promising musical career 25 years ago to be the wife of a struggling young actor who has become — by all accounts — the champion breadwinner in all television history. The Aldas have continued to live in the same white frame house in the same middle-class neighborhood in Leonia, N.J., where, Alan said, "She has an identity in the community she couldn't have in Los Angeles. Separation is better than uprooting the family." And so for seven years, he commuted home on weekends during the four months he was shooting "MASH" on the West Coast.

Arlene was assistant first clarinetist with the Houston Symphony under Leopold Stokowski when she was married. She enjoys telling the story of how she and Alan met.

"I was playing chamber music at a friend's house and he was listening and we said hello. The second time was at dinner at the same friend's house, when a rum cake she had made fell off the top of the refrigerator. Alan and I were the only guests who went out to the kitchen and got spoons and ate the cake off the floor. Music and eating — we were best friends for life."

WHAT HAS MADE the Alda marriage work? "We're both committed; that implies loyalty, consideration, giving. We have similar interests, and we like to laugh."

She says their life together is basically more private than people seem to think possible, that it is not difficult to maintain that privacy.

"We value it, and I think you accomplish that which you value. I work and he works, and after work we do what most people do — we relax. Talk about living with a celebrity! I might say, 'I haven't seen any eggplant in the market recently,' and he'll say, 'Oh, is that so?' and we'll go back to our reading. When you tolerate and enjoy that sort of quiet and feel comfortable, I think it has something to do with being comfortable with yourself."

Their three daughters are grown. Eve, 24, is working as a [illegible] consultant in psychology in Boston, while applying to graduate schools. Margot, 22, is a "struggling, unemployed actress" in Los Angeles and Beatrice, 21, is also interested in acting after graduating from college.

The Aldas now maintain a home in West Los Angeles, and when "M*A*S*H" comes to an end in mid-January, what happens next will dictate how they divide their time between coasts. By January, Arlene will also have completed the next book in her series, this one about a little boy and his father. Meanwhile, they've had a family Thanksgiving in California and will spend Christmas in the Caribbean.

Nutrition, exercise healthy in pregnancy

By GAIL ROSENBLUM
Hearst Feature Service

An overweight pregnant woman "may not look so good," but an underweight pregnant woman may be placing her fetus in a high-risk situation due to poor nutrition, says Elizabeth Noble, author of "Essential Exercises for the Childbearing Year," and director of the Maternal Child Health Center in Cambridge, Mass.

"Nutrition which emphasizes foods high in vitamins is so important in forming the baby's brain. I tell women to just eat and eat," Noble says.

The Australian-born Noble says women in our society "grow up pulling in their muscles. Our culture perpetuates the feeling that the pregnant body is ugly. But while flat lines and flat curves may sell clothing in fashion magazines, everyone and everything in nature is curved," she says.

Through pregnancy exercises, women can "tune into their body," Noble says. "Pregnancy is a natural process. It is physiological. It should be treated as normally as possible. Exercising helps pregnant women enjoy their changing body image and also strengthen their psychological sense of well-being."

Noble has seen increasing public awareness toward the importance of exercising during pregnancy. "Ten years ago, there was minimal understanding, but there have been great changes. There are so many books out now."

Two books recommended by Noble included Jane Fonda's "Work-Out for Pregnancy, Birth and Recovery," by Femmy De-Lyser, which takes a woman through her entire pregnancy, developing physical and mental fitness for labor and birth, and "You Don't Have To Get Fat to Have a Baby," by Velma Walker, which includes chapters on fitness for mothers-to-be, after-pregnancy dieting, and after-pregnancy exercises.

Noble believes that women should live in the present and not simply prepare for the few hours of labor. "Labor is not painless or easy, but exercise beforehand can put the muscles in better shape," she says.

By NINA HYDE
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

Long before there were Nautilus machines and Jane Fonda and the Cambridge Diet, women had to rely on what they put on to reshape their shapes. Sometimes, they put on odd contrivances of distortion and pain beneath their apparel. Other times, shape was built in to the structure of the garment they wore.

Now, three fashion exhibitions in New York reveal the shape women used to be in and how they got that way.

At the Fashion Institute of Technology is "The Undercover Story," with more than 600 articles of intimate apparel from the 18th century to the present, including a plain white nightgown worn by Queen Victoria and Gypsy Rose Lee's G-string. The show continues until mid-May.

Dresses by Charles Frederick Worth, the English designer who changed the shape of French fashion at the end of the 18th century, are on exhibit at the Museum of the City of New York until May 15. The outfits on exhibit were worn by his ritzy American clientele, with names such as Astor, Carnegie, Rockefeller and Vanderbilt.

THE CLOTHES of one of the least known, but perhaps most inventive, of all American designers, the late Charles James, are presented in an important, effective exhibition at the Brooklyn Museum, well worth the annoying subway or expensive taxi ride. The exhibit ends Jan. 16.

At this moment, designers in New York and Paris are on a kick to make clothes with shape. But were they to study these clothes from other eras, and the underpinning to shape them, they might consider the obvious: Despite their beauty, they are clothes that belong to another era.

IN THE EARLY 1800s, as the Fashion Institute show reveals, women slipped "busks," flat wood pieces much like classroom rulers, into channels down the front of their corsets. (Hand carving those busks as love tokens became a favorite pastime for sailors.) To fluff out the shape of sleeves, goose-down plumpers, which resemble kids' waterwings, were used inside the chemise.

Happily, those body shapers are out of fashion. So are the first corsets with stays from the Symington Corset Manufacturers in England, the petticoats and wired crinolines and the bustles worn to shape the backs of dresses. (In the 1880s you were in good shape if you could balance a tea cup on your bustle.)

Laura Sinderbrand, curator of the show and the director of the Edward C. Blum Design Laboratory at the Fashion Institute, has brought together garments from private and public collections for the exhibition, sponsored by Du Pont.

The most drastic shaping came in the 1850s with the tournure corset, which was stiffened with metal or wood and laced as tight as the muscle would allow. "Just how tight a young girl's corset would be laced depended on how ambitious her mother was," said Sinderbrand. "I'm sure that is what the attacks of vapors were all about."

At the turn of the century, women assumed a curious monobosom shape, not unlike a pigeon breast. It was easy enough to achieve with bust enhancers and ruffles. But the museum had to have special mannequins constructed to accomplish the effect properly.

BEAUTIFUL LINGERIE and sleepwear, usually seen by few other than the wearer, gets a proper public viewing at the Fashion Institute. Queen Victoria's nightgown is not only monogrammed but numbered; the numbers permitted an orderly rotation. These quite simple items contrast with the elaborate lingerie of the early 1900s, which included corsets made of brocade, lace, ruffles, rosettes and ball fringe, giving the lingerie a festooned look.

Gallery director Marty Bronson found this exhibit very difficult to mount. "If you are showing clothing, you can hide a lot underneath. And you can achieve the shape you need with dacron and foam padding. With this show, there is no place to hide."

Charles Frederick Worth preferred his American customers to all others, even European royalty. "They (queens) ask the price. American women never do. They simply say: 'Give me the best, the most beautiful, the most fashionable gown,' " Worth once said.

Those fabulous gowns Worth made for his American clients make up a dazzling costume show at the Museum of the City of New York called "The House of Worth: The Gilded Age in New York." It is an extraordinary view of French fabric at its best, as well as exceptional workmanship. Design students and women and men who like to sew will have a feast studying the construction and draping of the clothes.

THE SHOW OPENS in an 1860 room setting, appropriate in this Fifth Avenue museum that looks like one of the grand houses of the era when "ostentatious display of wealth was seen as the mantle of respectability rather than embarrassing over-indulgence," writes Joanne Olian, curator of the collection, in the museum's magazine. It includes 50 gowns from the museum's own collection.

They are in immaculate condition, a compliment to the designer, the wearers and particularly the restorers. Women who bought Worth gowns paid up to $10,000, a fabulous sum in those days, and some gowns were rarely worn twice, particularly during the time of Napoleon III and Empress Eugenie, when an imperial decree ordered that dresses should be worn to the court only once.

Worth, who was born in England, moved to Paris in 1845, selling fabric first, a far more respectable position than being a dressmaker. Eventually, his designs for Empress Eugenie heightened his influence and expanded his business so that, at one time, he had as many as 1,200 seamstresses working in his house at 7 rue de la Paix. Henry James and Edith Wharton often dressed their subjects in Worth designs.

THE WORTH SHOW documents well how Worth changed the shape of women in the Gilded Age, the period between the Civil War and World War I. He is credited with inventing the crinoline (and causing its demise). And some say he created the bustle. Whatever he designed, his followers were madly faithful to his dictates.

The show ends on a depressing note, with Worth's design for the YWCA overseas uniform in 1918. But for those who want a lasting impression of the clothes and their extravagant prices, the gift shop at the museum offers dolls dressed a la Worth for $1,400 to $2,000 each.

CHARLES JAMES was such a miserable man that if the way a client looked in a gown didn't suit him, he would recall the dress on the pretense of adjusting it and never return it. And if he didn't like what was written about him, he would besiege writer and editor with pages of wrathful prose.

In fact, one museum costume consultant was so leery of James' vengefulness, she established a policy of not exhibiting his creations rather than risk having him literally destroy the display.

So it has taken until now, five years after James' death, to have a worthy exhibition of his works. Appropriately, it is at the Brooklyn Museum, where James did some original research. That museum now owns the richest collection of James' works.

Writes Michael Botwinick, director of the Brooklyn Museum in the introduction to the publication accompanying the exhibit, "The Genius of Charles James": "It must fairly be said that this is a project that could not have been realized in James' lifetime. He was too tragically tormented by a private set of demons to have allowed such a thing to come to pass."

James has been called America's most inventive designer, classed with Madame Vionnet, Chanel and Cardin. Christian Dior credited James with inspiring the "New Look," and when Paul Poiret, the Paris couturier, saw James' designs he said, "Charles James, I pass you my crown."

JAMES CREATED dresses and coats with the eye of an architect, perfecting cuts and construction that continue to influence fashion. Both the exhibition and the book contain his remarkable architectural drawings for his fabulous evening dresses.

The women who bought his clothes, including Babe Paley, Austine Hearst, Polly Logan, Dominique de Menil, Millicent Rogers and Jennifer Jones, needed special instruction on how to wear them. Some dresses, built rigidly with the seams as girders, could literally stand on their own. When "Bootsie" Hearst went to the coronation of Edward VII in England, her James gown traveled in a black, coffin-like box.

James cared enormously about the public presentation of his clothes and usually was on hand when they were photographed. That accounts for his close association and friendship with Cecil Beaton, who documented James' work not only on film but with pen and ink as well. The James-Beaton liaison worked brilliantly for them both.

In spite of his outrageous personality, James probably was the most realistic of almost any designer. He once said, "There are not many original shapes or silhouettes — only a million variations."

JAMES WAS a perfectionist in every sense. He supposedly spent three years and $20,000 to perfect a sleeve. "My designs are not luxuries, they represent fashion research," he said.

The exhibition and the book, writes Botwinick, "(is) our bouquet to him. He, after all, fashioned the flowers; we have merely composed them into an arrangement in the hope of bringing his conception of fashion, line and color into sharper focus."

Make gifts of food for loved ones at Christmas

By TONI GRIFFIN
Copley News Service

Sometimes "I love you" just isn't enough.

Those are the times when you wish to show — in a tangible way — special feelings for someone. Food makes a wonderful gift, especially when it's something that the recipient wouldn't ordinarily buy.

The food gift ideas presented today are inspired by the coming holidays but can be used anytime of year. Choose the ingredients for the confections, baked goods and other gifts and set up a gift-making day. Later, enjoy wrapping the gifts with your lucky friends in mind.

Containers for food gifts are especially nice if they are reusable. A ribboned basket, wooden serving plate, lidded jar, decorative bottle, pretty tin — all can be dressed with ribbons, bells and festive papers to create a presentable gift.

Wrapping is almost as important as the gift, but it doesn't have to be expensive. Try covering coffee cans with fabric. Wallpaper or brown craft paper tied with colored cord make fine wrappings. Plastic wrap used for food gifts is ideal because the food shows through. Just tie with colorful yarn and add a gift card to let the recipient know who took the time to "cook up a little love."

CAPPUCCINO FUDGE

1½ cup sugar
cup evaporated milk
1 jar marshmallow creme
¼ tsp. salt

Bring ingredients to full boil. Boil 5 minutes, stirring constantly. Remove from heat and add:

12 ounces semisweet chocolate chips
1 cup nuts
1 tbsp. grated orange rind
1 tbsp. instant coffee
2 tbsps. brandy

CLASSIC TOFFEE

1 lb. butter
2½ cup sugar
8 ounces semisweet chocolate squares
2 4-ounce packages sweet cooking chocolate
8 ounces finely chopped nuts

Butter an 11x15-inch jelly roll pan. Combine butter and sugar in a heavy 1-quart pan. Cook over moderate heat, stirring hard with a wooden spoon until mixture boils. Cover and cook about 3 minutes. Remove lid and continue cooking, stirring if necessary to prevent scorching until mixture reaches 290 degrees on a candy thermometer. Immediately pour into the buttered pan and set on a flat surface to cool (about 30 minutes). Melt the chocolate in top of a double boiler. Spread ½ the chocolate on the toffee and sprinkle with ½ the nuts. Refrigerate until set. Invert on foil and repeat on second side. Cut into pieces. Makes 2½ of pounds candy.

HOLIDAY DATE NUT BREAD

2 tsps. vanilla
2 tsps. baking soda
3 cups pitted dried dates (or prunes) coarsely chopped
2 cups boiling water
2 large apples, peeled and diced
2 tsps. instant coffee
1 cup honey
2½ cups all-purpose flour
2 cups whole wheat flour
1½ cups sugar
2 cups chopped walnuts

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. In large bowl, mix eggs, vanilla, baking soda, dried fruit, boiling water, apple and coffee. Stir well. Set aside. (Can be pureed in food processor.)

Generously grease 6 1-pound empty or 4 6' small brioche molds.

Call 'Gutline' for information, aid

By MARLENE CIMONS
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — This is the annual eating season, when Americans will once again experience the painful price of overindulgence: heartburn.

It is holiday time, when rich food and drink are plentiful and many persons, even the modern and prudent, have a tough time knowing when to stop. Now they need no longer suffer alone. Help is just a phone call away.

The number to dial is (301) 652-9293. There, in the Washington suburb of Bethesda, Md., 40 physicians who specialize in gastrointestinal disorders volunteer their time and advice to anyone with a digestive problem. Anonymity is guaranteed.

The Gutline, as it is known, is a project of the American Digestive Disease Society, a nonprofit, educational organization whose officers decided three years ago that something should be done to make it easier to discuss a subject traditionally fraught with embarrassment and misconception.

"IT CAN be very distressing to talk about gas, diarrhea and constipation," said Dr. Arnold Levy, an associate clinical professor of medicine at George Washington University Medical Center and vice president of the American Digestive Disease Society.

"It's not the kind of thing that makes cocktail conversation," he said. "Some people won't even talk to their own doctors about it. So we wanted to set up an atmosphere in which the individual caller could ask any question without being embarrassed."

In November, the gutline began its fourth year of operation. In the last 12 months alone, it has received, 9,500 calls. During the holidays, the number of calls is expected to double.

"What people do during the holiday season is what they do all year round — only more of it," Levy said. "People stuff themselves. They eat too much. They eat more junk food and drink more coffee and alcohol. That stimulates stomach acid production — a key to a lot of digestive complaints."

A BIG discomfort, according to Levy, is caused by the consumption of chocolate or peppermint. "Both these substances relax a muscle valve at the lower end of the esophagus," he said. "Normally, this valve opens to allow food to drop into the stomach — and then shuts tight again to prevent acid in the stomach from washing upward into the esophagus. Chocolate and mint relax that valve — and you'll get burning, or a spasm resulting in chest pain, as a result."

So Levy advises people to stay away from chocolate and peppermint and to eat something when drinking alcohol or coffee. The food will act as a buffer to the stomach acid that those substances stimulate.

"Don't overdo it," he said. "Moderation is the key word. We don't want to spoil anyone's holiday, but don't abuse your stomach."

IF IN DOUBT, call. Until Dec. 23, the line will be open Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday between 7:30 p.m. and 9:30 p.m (EST). After New Year's, it will return to its regular schedule — open on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 7:30 p.m. to 9 p.m (EST). Or write the American Digestive Disease Society for information at 7720 Wisconsin Ave., Bethesda, Md. 20814.

Ironically, the line did not operate Thanksgiving weekend and is not scheduled to be open Christmas through New Year's, the times when sufferers might need it most. Levy acknowledged this was so but said: "You know how it is. It's hard to get doctors to work on a holiday."

Levy emphasized that the Gutline is not a "hotline" but an information service. "We've had people call up and say: 'I'm having acute abdominal pain' — and we tell them to call the nearest emergency room. What we do is give people information about their problem and advise them on what kinds of danger signals to look out for. We won't make a diagnosis in a five-minute telephone conversation."

BUT LEVY does believe the Gutline may have, in fact, saved some lives. "We've had people call with potentially very serious problems and we have urged them to seek direct medical attention," he said.

Calls have come in from all over the country, Levy said. "As far as I can tell, no one has been discouraged by the fact that we're not toll-free," he said. "Besides, I guess a $5 phone call is a lot cheaper than a $30 office visit."

Food questions given answers

By MINNIE BERNARDINO
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

Q: I noticed there is a great supply of tomatoes (large ones, too) in many markets. My question is regarding the proper way to store tomatoes. I have heard that tomatoes lose their flavor when they are refrigerated. Can you verify this?

A: Tomatoes are a warm-temperature crop, grown in the warm belts of California, Florida and Mexico. Research done by the University of California has proved that temperatures below 50 degrees destroy tomato flavor. Tomatoes stay alive and breathing, reacting to their environment even after being harvested.

If you want to develop a good old-fashioned flavor in tomatoes, keep them away from the refrigerator. Instead store them in a hanging or counter-top basket or bowl away from sunlight. However if tomatoes are getting too ripe, either use them up soon or sacrifice flavor and save them by chilling, or freezing in pureed form.

Q: I'm planning on making several miniature breads for holiday gift giving and was wondering whether there is a standard rule of thumb in determining baking time for the smaller loaves. For instance if bread is baked at 350 degrees for one hour in a standard loaf pan (8 by 4 or 9 by 5), how do I determine the time for the miniature loaf pans?

A: When substituting the smaller (6 by 3-inch) loaf pans for the larger pans, check for doneness 20 to 30 minutes before the given time for baking is up, or two-thirds to one half the baking time. There is no set rule as ingredients for different breads vary resulting in varying degrees of moistness.

Q: I have some frozen persimmon pulp that has been in my freezer for some time. Can I substitute this for banana or pumpkin in my bread, pie or cookie recipes? Should it be measure for measure or should something else be added to the recipe along with the persimmon pulp because of some chemical need or balance?

A: Pureed persimmon pulp may be substituted in recipes calling for banana or pumpkin without any foreseen texture problems since the three ingredients are quite similar in consistency. However, if the persimmon pulp is a little underripe and tart, adding a small amount of sugar might help improve the flavor and tenderness of the bread.

DEAR ABBY

Past crime, no present punishment

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I have been happily married for eight years. Just recently she informed me that when she was 16, she was gang-raped by four guys who lived in her neighborhood. She was too frightened at the time to report it to the police and too ashamed to tell her family.

She never would have told me about it, but last year we moved back to her old neighborhood and she kept running into these four guys. She said seeing them again brought back all those terrible memories, so she broke down and told me the whole story.

I was shocked because I know these four guys and see them on a regular basis. Even though it's been 12 years since this happened, is it too late now to bring charges against these guys? — ANGRY IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR ANGRY: Unfortunately, the statute of limitations has run out. In California, Penal Code 800 provides that the felony must be charged within three years after its commission — except for murder, manslaughter and embezzlement of public funds.

Your letter points up the importance of reporting a crime immediately after it has taken place.

DEAR ABBY: Please print this letter so my sister and brother will read it and see themselves.

Abby, why do grown children give their mother a check for special occasions such as Mother's Day, her birthday and Christmas? They hand it to her and say, "Here, Mom, I never know what to buy you."

Meanwhile, Mom is in a wheelchair — where she has been for the last three years — and she can't go shopping to buy anything. Mom depends on one daughter for everything. As you may have guessed, I am that daughter who is already run to death. I'm not complaining, but when someone gives her a check, I am the one who has to go to the bank to cash it and then go shopping.

What's the matter with flowers, candy, a pretty housecoat or a cake? Thanks for hearing me out. I feel better already. Sign me ... THE ONE WHO DOES EVERYTHING

DEAR ONE: There's nothing wrong with flowers, candy or a cake. But if "the pretty housecoat" is the wrong size, YOU will have to exchange it!

DEAR ABBY: I come from a family with five grown children. Recently four of us decided to have a family portrait painted to give to our parents for Christmas.

The problem is our oldest sister, Mary. She will not agree to be in the picture unless her husband is in it too. She said it is rude and selfish to leave out our husband, wives and children!

Abby, if we had everyone in the picture, it would never be complete! For example, if our unmarried sister got married, we'd have to add her husband. And if one of us has another child, we'd have to add the child, right? Our parents have only five children, and that is what we want this portrait to be. No husbands, no wives and no kids.

The five of us will probably never be together again to have this portrait made. (The artist takes photographs of the group and paints from them.)

We are all in agreement except Mary. Who do you think is right? — ANITA

DEAR ANITA: Everyone except Mary.

(You're never too old (or too young) to learn how to make friends and be popular. For Abby's booklet on Popularity, send $1 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped (37 cents) envelope to Abby, Popularity, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Wine from Romania gains new fans in United States

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

For the past six years, the vineyards of Romania have been exporting wine to the United States, to the tune of about 200,000 cases a year. It's a wonder they didn't start sooner.

The fruity wines of this East European state have not only proved pleasant to drink, they have also managed to buck competition from the wines of France, which they resemble, by keeping their prices down.

The Romanians should produce good wines. Their vineyards have been at it long enough. Archeological research shows that on the soil that is now Romania, the grapevine was first cultivated some 6,000 years ago.

Fossils of the wild vines dating back to that ancient era have been found in northeastern and western parts of the country. Vines still grow wild and produce edible grapes in the Danube Valley and along the banks of some tributaries of the great river.

Romania has turned over about 850,000 acres of its land to vineyards and produces some 1.6 million tons of grapes a year.

In order to compete successfully in the U.S. market, Romania has changed the quality of some of its exports. The Cabernet Sauvignon now resembles France's Medoc more closely and a 1980 Valea Blanc is softer and less acidic than it was.

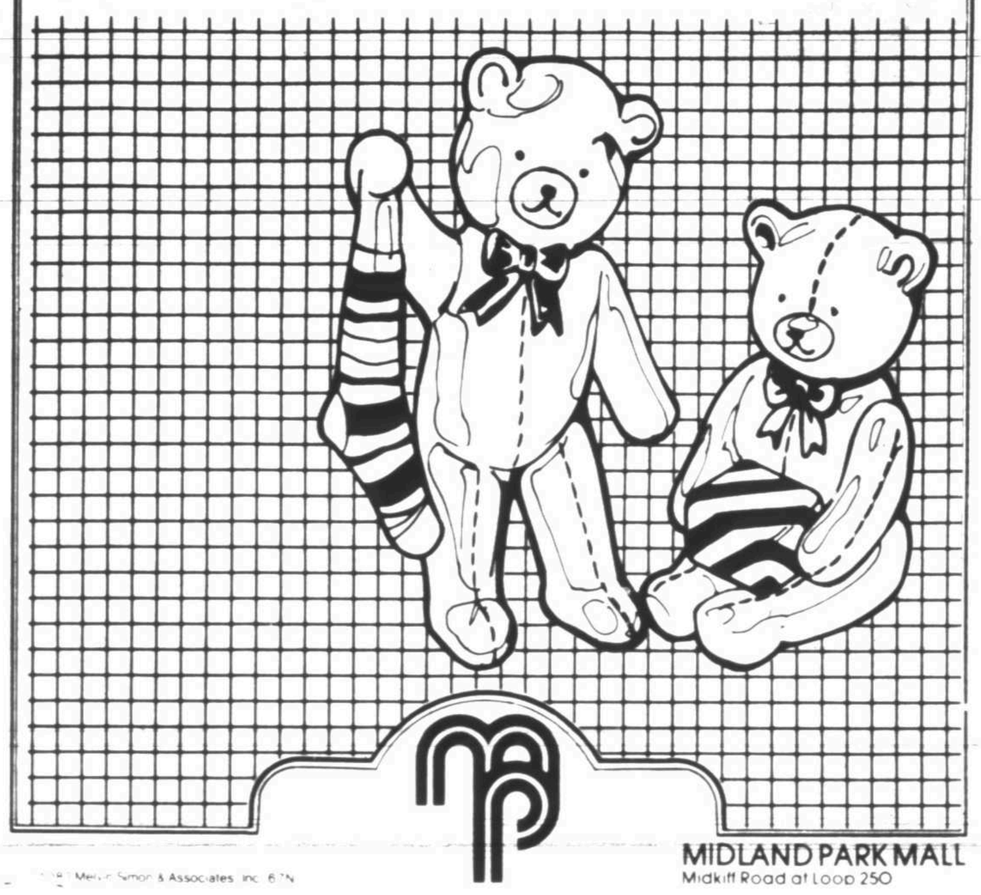

Romanian wines also shine in the kitchen as in this adaptation of the classic Vichyssoise conceived by Chef Louis Diat of New York's Ritz-Carlton Hotel.

2 tablespoons sweet butter
5 medium potatoes, peeled and sliced fine
4 cups chicken broth
1 tablespoon salt
2 cups milk
2 cups medium cream
1 cup heavy cream
½ cup Tarnave Castle Riesling

Slice white part of leeks and onion and brown lightly in butter. Add potatoes, broth and salt. Simmer 40 minutes. Crush and rub through fine strainer, then return to heat, adding milk and medium cream. Season to taste and bring to boil. Cool, and when soup is cold, add heavy cream and Riesling. Chill well before serving. Serves 8. Good with chilled Tarnave Castle Riesling.

AT WORK

By DR. ADELE SCHEELE

Q. I have been an interior decorator for my husband's company and was directly responsible for 22 home models and four offices. I took two years off to have my son and care for him. Now I'd like to work part time for the next two or three years. In this inflationary time do I dare? Or should I go back to school and complete my degree?

A. You have the luxury of choosing school as a part-time occupation. Do it. Take the next few years to study interior decorating, but don't be a regular, passive student. You have experience behind you, so don't wait for your instructors to "fill you up" as if you were an empty vessel.

Use assigned papers or projects to connect yourself with other decorators and construction companies. Find out whether you prefer residential or commercial design, and explore different styles to find your own style. Use the experience in school to open up more opportunities and networks to you.

Q. I've been a stockbroker for five years now and despite the recovering investment market, I am having a terrible time increasing my sales. I know my problem. At 54, I'm still afraid of appearing stupid in front of rich people.

A. If misery loves company, know you're not alone. To confront this fear, join a group that coaches people in speaking. Each time you make a presentation, mentally turn your fellow classmates into the scions of fortune. In real life, take stock of yourself before each call. List what you have to offer rich people who want to make more money and then recall a past success. Then dial. Practice forgetting your own ego. Try to let go your need for them to be impressed with you personally. Concentrate on what you have to offer. Think only of their needs — greater return on investments plus complimentary attention. Your job is now to give both.

If you try these plans and still choke up, then change your target client group from rich individuals to organizations — where you will sell to workers such as yourself.

Q. I am working in an industry, aerospace, that I am not interested in. I'm 22 and want another field that is more exciting, but I don't know which one. How do I find it?

A. Don't quit now because it's too soon to tell what you want. Any large corporation offers a complete internal labor market. Everything that exists in other corporations exists in some part in yours. So, look around at what goes on in your company, from manufacturing to marketing to sales and see what does capture your interest. Get yourself to work on any kind of project in that preferred area and test it out. Then get transferred.

At that point, stay for a while, develop yourself and then explore the larger profession. If it's marketing, for example, that you find more interest in, then you now have a big part of every business open to you. I find most people enjoy greater success this way rather than jumping around, from company to company, looking for something undefined.

Complusive gambling is 'invisible illness'

By MARK KRAM
Hearst Feature Service

BALTIMORE — Gambling is called the invisible illness. And although it is estimated that 61 percent of all adult Americans indulges in some form of gambling, it is impossible to determine how many suffer from gambling as an obsession.

"For many, gambling is a harmless recreational diversion," said Dr. Robert M. Politzer, director of the Johns Hopkins Compulsive Gambling Counseling Center. "But for more and more Americans, the progressive nature of the disorder may lead an individual to commit criminal acts that are contrary to his moral code and character. Available research indicates that up to 25 percent of white-collar crimes stem from gambling related activities."

According to Politzer, the average compulsive gambler is between 37 and 39 years old, married, a high school graduate with possibly some college education. He makes between $18,000 and $20,000 a year and has been gambling for 10 to 15 years. And as Politizer pointed out, much of the problem exists in lower-income environments.

"Have you ever looked at who lines up at the lottery windows? Economically deprived people," said Politzer. "You seldom hear of these people because of the amount of money involved, but the problem is no less dramatic."

Foremost for the patient's cure is an acceptance of "a state of abstinence" and a restructuring of his or her value system, Politzer said. Then, marital and family problems can be solved, careers resurrected and personal living budgets set, including provision for making restitution.

"Cure is not the word — we just try to set the problem in remission," Politzer said. "In some cases, we are talking of 35 to 40 years of ingrained behavior. The gambler needs to change his style of living. He needs a life-support system.

The nation's compulsive gamblers cost society an estimated $55 billion annually. Amassing an average debt of $92,000 on an annual income of $20,000, approximately 50 percent are consumed by legal problems and are under indictment for embezzlement, fraud or similar "white-collar" crimes.

The compulsive gambler has an attempted suicide rate that is 180 times higher than the national average. But with the exception of gamblers anonymous groups operated by the Veterans Administration in New York, Florida and Ohio, the Johns Hopkins effort is one of only a handful of programs nationally.

The program treats 60 to 70 outpatients and five in-residents a month. Among the patients whom Politzer and his staff have treated is Des Moines stockbroker Gary Lewellyn, who was convicted of misappropriating $18 million from banks in Iowa. Lewellyn was sentenced recently to four consecutive five-year terms.

"As you increase the availability of gambling," Politzer said, "you also increase the problem. As lotteries and casinos increase, so will the number of compulsive gamblers.

By the year 2050, the United States will have virtually zero population growth, according to a Census Bureau report based on 1980 census results. The preliminary report shows population rising from 230 millions in 1981 to a record 309 million in 2050.

Handicapped hope to improve surroundings in courthouses

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — Handicapped people are challenging physical obstacles to Maine's courthouses on constitutional grounds, arguing that the barriers deny their right of access to courts.

Among the plaintiffs in the class-action lawsuit filed earlier this week is a wheelchair-bound law student, Ray Gill, who had to be carried by jail inmates to his summer job on the second floor of the Somerset County Courthouse.

"Once on the second floor, I became a virtual prisoner until it was time for me to be carried down at the end of the day," Gill recalled. The Skowhegan courthouse, which has no elevator, is "an architectural nightmare," he said.

Gill, a second-year student at the University of Maine law school, says physical barriers in most Maine courthouses would restrict his ability to practice law because he would need "ready access" to the courts on a regular basis.

The Maine Association of Handicapped Persons, which filed the suit in U.S. District Court, says the complaint may be the first to challenge courthouse barriers on constitutional grounds.

"Our system of justice, a system supposedly based on the principle of equality and fairness to all, in reality discriminates on the basis of physical handicap," said Lena Muldoon, association president.

Ms. Muldoon, also confined to a wheelchair, said 13 of Maine's 17 superior courts and 24 of the 33 district courts have physical barriers that make them virtually off-limits to the handicapped.

The suit seeks to force the state to remove such barriers.

Private business not ready for satellite takeover, group says

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government cannot expect private enterprise to take over its earth-observing satellite system for at least a decade, a special Commerce Department advisory committee has concluded.

In a report published last week, the Land Remote Sensing Satellite Advisory Committee says the Reagan administration must reverse its decision to stop government funding of the program by the mid-1980's.

The land-sensing satellite system, most widely known as the Landsat system, produces those unusual high-altitude pictures that often show vegetation in false-color red. The pictures are used by scientists, oil and mineral explorers, crop forecasters, timber companies and flood controllers.

"All responses indicated that the market for land-remote sensing data was not developed to a point where commercial viability could be demonstrated within the next 10 years," the report states.

"Government funding of the space and ground segment of the land-remote sensing system will be required until 1995, and probably through the year 2000, if the United States expects to remain competitive in the international marketplace," it says.

The committee said a companion proposal to turn the government's weather satellites over to the private sector offers "only a small commercial opportunity...because the government is the almost sole user of data produced by them."

A single company might be able to operate both the land-sensing and weather satellite systems together, but such a transfer could ultimately harm future prospects for competition if the corporate operator is allowed to monopolize the data, the committee said.

The meteorological satellite system produces the maps used world-wide by professional weather forecasters that are also frequently reproduced by newspapers and on television.

There are four weather satellites and one Landsat satellite in orbit. Both systems are operated by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, an arm of the Commerce Department, and represent a total government investment of roughly $1.6 billion.

The idea of commercializing the Landsat system was first advanced by President Carter and later endorsed by the Reagan administration. Unlike the Carter administration, however, which proposed that the government operate Landsat satellites through the early 1990s to allow time for a transition, the Reagan administration has proposed to support the launch of only one more Landsat satellite.

LONDON (AP) — Twenty-year-old Jean Potter had no job, little training and even less hope when she wrote a desperate letter to Queen Elizabeth II asking the monarch to give her work.

But she had plenty of luck.

"I wrote the queen in all seriousness but never expected to be taken on," Miss Potter told The Associated Press in a telephone interview from her Bridgwater home in western England.

A Buckingham Palace spokeswoman said Miss Potter "is not the first person to be taken on in this way but the examples are rare. You could say she applied at the right time and fitted the bill."

"Inevitably, there will probably be a lot of applications for royal jobs after all the publicity this case has generated," the spokeswoman said. "But there are only 340 full-time staff at Buckingham Palace and very few permanent residents at Sandringham."

Neither Miss Potter nor the spokeswoman would disclose her salary. Miss Potter said she will share a furnished cottage on the estate with another maid. She will be on probation for the first six months.

Miss Potter left school at 16 to look for work but after four years had landed nothing but short-term jobs — in a store, a beauty salon and for the local industrial pump-making firm where her father is an accountant.

Miss Potter, whose unusual case has attracted nationwide press and television publicity, said she wrote in September asking the queen whether there were any vacancies in the royal household.

"I remember saying I was prepared to do anything but cannot recall my exact words," she said.

Jean Potter

"When the palace replied, I wasn't very encouraged. They said there were lots of people asking for jobs and a long waiting list. I thought it was just the usual answer and forgot all about it.

"Then a second letter arrived saying a job had come up in Sandringham Estate and I was asked to fill out an application form and send a recent photograph of myself," she recalled.

Eleven days ago, she received a telephone call from the palace asking her to come for an interview with the Sandringham housekeeper and the chief housekeeper at Buckingham Palace.

"They asked me what my hobbies were and what I enjoyed at school," Miss Potter said.

"Immediately after the interview, they said they would like me to start work but told me to discuss the job with my parents and think it over. But I knew straight away what I wanted and gave them my answer."

Britons anguish over their nation's security

LONDON (AP) — With an incendiary device sent to the prime minister, a drifter in the queen's bedroom and a spate of spy scandals, Britons are wondering whether their nation is doing enough to guard its leaders and its secrets.

"It's very distressing for a democracy that has a fine reputation for law, order and decency," said Conservative Party legislator Sir Bernard Braine.

After Tuesday's explosion at Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's official residence, in which her office manager was slightly injured, and the discovery of four similar devices sent to members of Parliament, Braine declared, "This is a warning that everyone in public life, from the prime minister on down, must heed."

The breach in security that allowed the explosive parcel within the walls of 10 Downing St. — Mrs. Thatcher was in an upstairs study when it went off — capped a disastrous summer and fall for Britain's security services.

On July 9, a 31-year-old jobless Londoner, Michael Fagan, gained access to Queen Elizabeth II's bedchamber at Buckingham Palace. Holding a broken ashtray in his bleeding hand, he sat talking with the monarch for 10 minutes before being led away.

Later, officials admitted an astonishing chain of human and mechanical blunders. A policeman's sighting of the intruder was ignored. So was an alarm Fagan set off. An alarm sounded by the queen herself was never heard, and she had to telephone twice before help came.

The double scandal prompted a shake-up in palace security, the doubling of its police guard and installation of barbed wire and new electronic detection systems on the grounds.

But on July 20, the queen's ceremonial guards — riding horseback along the edge of Hyde Park en route to the Changing of the Guard — were the target of an Irish Republican Army car bomb.

A little over an hour later, another IRA bomb blew apart a bandstand in another royal park, Regent's Park. The blasts killed 11 soldiers and seven horses and injured 50 people.

While Britons anguished over these events, a major new scandal was brewing for the nation's intelligence services. The services were already suffering from more than a dozen defections — many of them high-ranking — since World War II and continuing allegations of a Soviet "mole" near the top.

On July 15, a former employee of the top-secret Government Communications Headquarters in Cheltenham appeared in a courtoom in rural Hereford to be arraigned on charges of violating Britain's Official Secrets Act.

He betrayed some of the West's most closely guarded secrets — first as an employee of a Royal Air Force base in West Berlin, then while working in the key Russian language section at Cheltenham.

"How many more such cases have to unfold before somebody wakes up to the appalling danger in which the nation stands," demanded David Storey of the Conservative Monday Club, a lobby group.

Even as he spoke, two new cases were unfolding at London's historic Old Bailey Central Criminal Court.

Rhona Jane Ritchie, 30, a former first secretary at Britain's embassy in Tel Aviv, admitted slipping her lover, an Egyptian diplomat, confidential telegrams from the Foreign Office. She was given a nine-month suspended sentence.

A short time later in the same courtroom, Canadian economics professor and former NATO official Hugh George Hambleton, 60, was charged with spying for the Soviets for three decades. He pleaded innocent.

No attacker has succeeded in harming a British prime minister. But other British leaders have met death in recent years. The Irish Republican Army and its offshoot, the Irish National Liberation Army, has murdered three.

Airey Neavé, Northern Ireland parliamentary spokesman for the then-opposition Conservative Party, was killed by a car bomb at the House of Commons in March 1979. The war hero and statesman Earl Mountbatten of Burma died when a bomb destroyed his fishing boat off the Irish coast in August of that year, and the Rev. Robert Bradford, a Protestant member of Parliament, was shot to death in his Belfast district in November 1981.

Although Tuesday's explosion was believed to be the first time a device has gone off at 10 Downing St., several have been sent in recent years to the prime minister, as well as legislators from both Conservative and opposition Labor parties and even to Prince Charles, the heir to the throne.

Nation's energy expenditures down in May 1982

NEW YORK (AP) — The nation spent $23.4 billion on energy in the month of May, according to a recently released survey. This was 9.3 percent of the gross national product.

The energy-oriented weekly said this compared with $24.9 billion in May of 1981.

Mechanical heart implanted in human

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Surgeons removed the failing heart of a 61-year-old man today and implanted a polyurethane device in the first attempt to replace a human heart with a permanent mechanical substitute. Doctors called the operation a success.

Barney B. Clark "is being sustained entirely by his new heart," said University of Utah Medical Center spokesman Mark Sands as the operation neared a close.

Another spokesman, John Dwan, said he had talked with the head of the surgical team by telephone from the operating room, and the doctor "sounded very tired but very pleased."

Surgeons had experienced complications in the later hours of the operation while they were weaning Clark from a heart-lung machine and placing him entirely on the new device, said Dr. Chase Peterson.

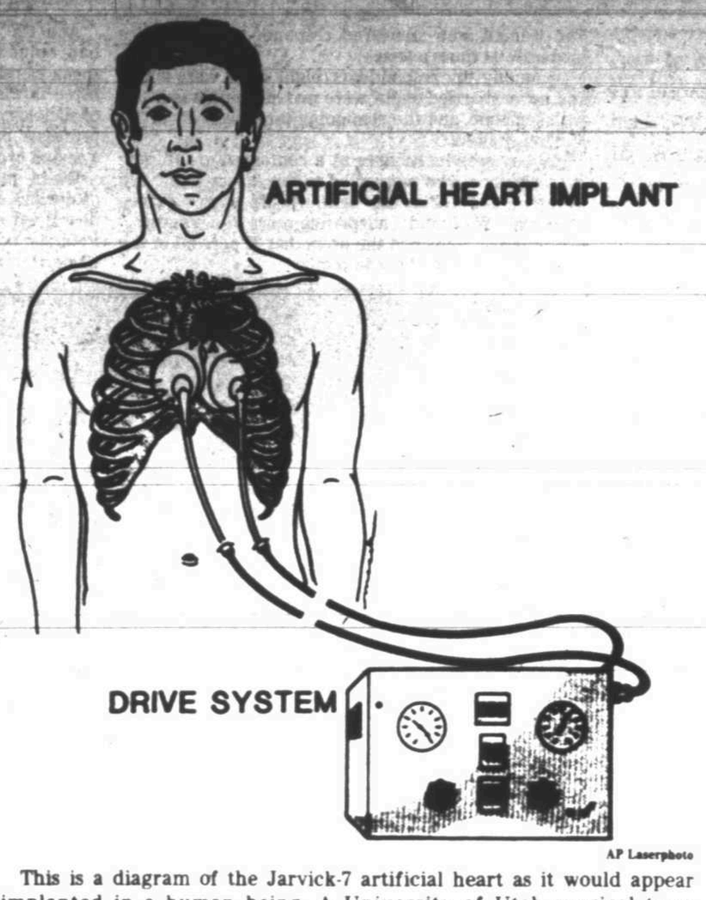

HE SAID CLARK suffered swelling from the lungs due to an earlier heart failure and there was bleeding in the chest cavity which Peterson attributed to earlier cortisone treatments. He did not say how the swelling and bleeding complicated the operation.

A hospital official who asked not to be identified said surgeons experienced problems with one of the ventricles of the mechanical heart after it was implanted. He said something — possibly tissue — impeded the flow of blood, so the ventricle was replaced.

The pioneering operation was originally planned for this morning, but doctors rushed the patient to the operating table Wednesday night when his condition deteriorated rapidly, officials said.

Clark, who suffers from incurable heart disease, was having serious irregular heart rhythms, said Peterson, university vice president of health sciences. He said doctors decided to operate while Clark's heart was still pumping adequate amounts of blood.

Clark was anesthetized 10 minutes after arriving in the operating room and the incision was made at 11:27 p.m. MST. Clark went on a heart-lung machine at midnight and his heart was removed seven minutes later.

AP Laserphoto

This is a diagram of the Jarvick-7 artificial heart as it would appear implanted in a human being. A University of Utah surgical team implanted the device in a man early this morning in Salt Lake City.

"IT WOULD BE fair to say there were some anxious moments during the surgery," Sands said. "Most of these problems were anticipated."

Asked if any of the problems during surgery were life-threatening, Sands replied, "No, I don't think so."

Sands said that eventually, Clark basically will be confined to his home but will be able to make short trips outside of it.

"We think his lifestyle will be more mobile than that of a parapelegic or quadrapelegic," he said. "We don't want to de-emphasize the fact that it is a very large unit that drives the heart."

He was on the heart by 5:30 a.m. and an acute-care team was to take over monitoring of Clark's condition, Sands said. He said the operating room was serving for a time as a recovery room.

Clark was to be moved later this morning to an intensive-care room equipped with the compressed air which drives the new heart, Sands said.

Earlier, Peterson said doctors were not certain how Clark would respond to a healthy heartbeat after living with low heart output for several months, and it was likely the doctors would start with a reduced output.

EXPLAINING THE timing of the operation, Peterson said, "We had to find that precious moment of time when we no longer could do him any harm," adding that Clark smiled when told the operation had been moved up.

Clark, a retired dentist who lives in Federal Way, Wash., a suburb south of Seattle, visited with his wife and family members Wednesday.

"I don't think he really felt it would succeed," said his son, Stephen K. Clark, 35, who remained in Seattle. "His interest in going ahead — he told this to me — was to make this contribution, whereas the only other way was to die of the disease."

The surgical team was headed by Dr. William DeVries, chief of cardiothoracic surgery at the hospital and the only surgeon allowed to perform the operation under guidelines approved by the Food and Drug Administration.

The team also included three other surgeons, an assistant to DeVries, two cardiologists, three anesthesiologists, Dr. Robert Jarvik, who invented of the Jarvik-7 heart being implanted, and Dr. Donald Olsen, a veterinarian responsible for animal experiments with the device, Peterson said.

CLARK SUFFERED from cardiomyopathy, an inoperable deterioration of the heart that affects 8,000 to 10,000 Americans. Peterson said the cause of Clark's condition was not known, but it may have been from a previous infection that spread to the heart.

Dr. Willem Kolff, head of the university's Division of Artificial Organs, said Clark was too old to meet guidelines for a human heart transplant.

"For him, it's a last chance to have an enjoyable existence," Kolff said. "A great deal depends on luck. This is a research project. Whether it goes well or ill, we will learn from it."

Artificial heart made of polymer, air hoses

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Slightly smaller and a few grams heavier than the vital organ it replaces, the Jarvik-7 artificial heart substitutes polyurethane and air hoses for the durable muscle that beats 40 million times a year.

The Jarvik-7, named after inventor Dr. Robert K. Jarvik of the University of Utah, has been tested in laboratories, in cadavers, in test animals and now, in a human being.

"It's a research project," said Dr. Willem Kolff, director of the university's Division of Artificial Organs. "Whether it goes well or ill, we will learn from it. For him, it's a last chance to have an enjoyable existence."

The $20,000 device weighs about 300 grams, compared to 280 grams for the average adult human heart. It is handmade of polyurethane, marine aluminum, nylon, artificial fibers, graphite lubricants and high-strength alloys.

The Jarvik-7 replaces the heart's ventricles — the muscular-walled pumping chambers that make up most of the organ. It has four openings, three connecting to other chambers of the heart and the fourth connecting to the pulmonary artery, which carries blood to the lungs.

The mechanical heart has two flexible diaphragms, each with a lead for a six-foot air hose connecting to a compressor that powers the heart. The air hoses exit the body just below the chest on the left side.

The diaphragms are made of four layers of polyurethane, separated by graphite lubricant. Jarvik says they are designed to match the durability of a human heart, which beats 40 million times a year. Test models are still running after the equivalent of 4½ years, he said.

The compressor is mounted on a cart and has backup systems for all crucial equipment. Jarvik said that in case of failure, the compressor carries a three-hour supply of air to run the heart.

Playboy thinks it knows country's sexual habits

Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK — Does a sex survey by 100,000 readers of Playboy Magazine have any more relevance than the question about how many angels can dance on the head of a pin? And how accurate can such a survey be, particularly when it is answered by less than 1/2 of 1 percent of the magazine's 24 million readers?

Well, Playboy certainly thinks it has its finger on the elusive G-spot of the nation's sexual habits. And as for its respondents, the magazine is quick to point out that it got a lot more answers to questions such as, "Have you ever had fantasies about being sexually molested or humiliated?" than Kinsey every did.

Most of the answers to the survey, however, went unrevealed at Playboy's press luncheon earlier this week that was supposed to have announced the cumulative replies to "The Playboy Readers' Sex Survey," a compilation of answers to 133 questions published in the January 1982 Playboy. To find out everything you ever wanted to know about the oral sex habits of Playboy readers, for example, you're going to have to read them in Playboy, and not just the January 1983 issue, climax, so to say, of this polling effort will be spun out by Playboy in alternate monthly issues for some time.

One of the most intriguing results is clear, however. Although only indirectly mentioned in Playboy's fact sheet, the magazine said that out of the 100,000 anonymous readers who responded, it tabulated only the fully-completed, legible and undamaged questionnaires of 65,396 men and 14,928 women, which means that about 20 percent of those who answered apparently couldn't cut the questionnaire's mustard when it came to responding intelligently to the questions.

— In the under-21 and 21-29 age groups, "significantly more married women are having affairs than married men."

— Fifty-eight percent of women currently under age 21 (who answered the survey) had their first sexual encounter before they were 16 years of age, as compared to 38 percent of the males of the same age group.

— Thirty-three percent of female respondents said they don't use birth control, but rely on "withdrawl or blind luck." Almost the same percent report that they have had an abortion.

— Ninety percent of the men who responded masturbate, with a median frequency of 140 times a year. The women who answered responded with a more moderate 44 times a year.

— Among the respondents, eight of 20 were single and never married; eight were married, one was living with someone, and the remaining three were divorced and living alone.

Playboy sees its readers as a contented group, sexwise. "No one who responded to the survey had a sex problem," said Playboy senior staff writer James Petersen. "We found a surprising sense of adventure." Peterson also informed the press that 33 percent of the respondents had had sex in public.

> "We found a surprising sense of adventure...We can no longer speak of this as a sexual revolution...This is a sexual evolution."

And the results seemed to confirm what Playboy had opined before the survey. "We can no longer speak of this as a sexual revolution," said Janet Lever, listed in Playboy's fact sheet as an assistant professor of sociology at Northwestern University and a visiting professor of sociology at UCLA in January. "This is a sexual evolution."

When queried about the survey's accuracy in light of the lack of input from scientific professionals, Lever described social scientists as "pretty snobby." And Petersen added, "Ten years ago, only three out of 100 medical schools offered a course in sex education."

NASA wants to bring phones to rural areas

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The National Aeronautics and Space Administration wants to bring a new portable radio telephone service to rural America via satellite.

The new service is called cellular radio, and hundreds of companies are competing to offer the service in the nation's biggest cities, beginning in 1984. New technology permits a computerized switching of calls between vehicles and local telephone networks.

But the system, as now proposed, is land-based. That makes it extremely difficult and costly to install in widely spaced rural areas, interspersed with mountains and other frequency barriers.

NASA believes cellular radio and other mobile telephone services could offer as much to rural communities as they do to the cities. So NASA officials went before the Federal Communications Commission this week in effect to ask the FCC to set the stage for a market test.

NASA wants the FCC to reserve frequencies that could be used by commercial companies to establish "a land mobile satellite service." The space agency says such a service would complement cellular radio mobile systems currently in planning, and other mobile systems already in use.

"We're simply asking the FCC not to destroy the option for future commercial land mobile satellite services," said Jerry Freibaum, a NASA program director. He said NASA has spent the last five years conducting experiments that have proved the "feasibility of using satellites" to augment land-based mobile telephone systems.

"We know it's feasible. But there's a great deal of reservation about a potential market. We happen to think that there's a great demand for this use of satellites," Freibaum said.

The FCC, acting mostly on reservations about market potential, denied a similar NASA request last year. FCC officials declined comment this week, on the ground they have not had a chance to review NASA's latest filing.

NASA officials say their primary purpose in pushing for the market test is that other countries "are moving forward to develop mobile satellite services" under frequency allowances made by 1979 World Administrative Radio Conference (WARC). "Unless the commission acts promptly to provide (frequencies) for such services, the United States' leadership role in satellite communications and in mobile communications equipment will be jeopardized," NASA said in its filing this week.

Denver's Brown Hotel has hosted rich, famous

EDITOR'S NOTE: There are few hotels with their own historian. But there's also few hotels with the fascinating history of The Brown Palace. The Colorado landmark is celebrating its 90th year.

By JENNIFER PARMELEE

Ninety years old now, The Brown Palace is marking its birthday with the same sprucing created for such celebrated guests as Teddy Roosevelt and Queen Marie of Romania and publishing a 91-page history by in-house historian Carlisle Hunt.

It has witnessed the metamorphosis of the Queen City of the Plains from a picaresque Western outpost to a thriving metropolis of almost two million people. A host to European nobility and Western mineral kings, it has survived the Silver Panic of 1893, the Great Depression and, so far, today's recession.

LIKE OTHER grand old hotels, it must constantly weigh the importance of charm versus modern convenience. And it must pay to keep that charm in good running condition — $9 million for this birthday year.

The effort has paid off. Summer bookings swelled to capacity, filling rooms that once rented for $6.50 a night and now command as much as $500 a night (more modest accommodations in the new hotel tower can be had for $80).

They come, perhaps, to savor the renowned Rocky Mountain rainbow trout, the prime rib, or the fresh raspberries served in silver goblets. Yet the curious mix of the rough-edged, open-hearted Old West and the elegance of the Old World creates an ambiance all its own.

"Over the shoulders of the young men in Brooks suits and sports jackets at the Ship Tavern, there are shadowy figures in fringed buckskins and raccoon hats with scalp knives at their belts drinking amazing quantities of Taos Lightning," a Denver Post reporter once wrote. "Only the true believers ... can see them. But they are there."

Not long ago, a prize bull was auctioned off in the middle of the lobby paneled in Mexican onyx. This summer, visitors lined the lobby's eight-tiered balconies for a glimpse of the vacationing Princess Anne, who was presented with a yellow rose on the same spot.

THE BROWN was built in 1892 by Henry C. Brown, a carpenter who made his fortune in gold and silver mines, for about $1.6 million. Today, according to hotel manager Carl Mehlman, it costs $2 million a month for operating expenses alone.

Hotel officials say it costs up to $150,000 per room to build and furnish a first-class hotel, but renovation costs about half that amount and there are the additional incentives of tax breaks, rebates and cut-rate municipal financing.

"Not everybody wants to pay $140 a night for a glass box inside a cookie-cutter project," says Barry Robinson, of Laventhol & Horwath, hotel consulting firm. "We have perceived a trend back toward more personalized, elegant service in America."

Certainly the Brown, where each of the original rooms is a different size and shape, is part of the trend. The hotel bakes its bread and cakes in an antique oven, the water is drawn from its own artesian wells and in a shop above the ninth floor, artisan Dominic Dicero hand-carves bedboards and mouldings to match their historic predecessors.

VIPs, ranging from President Eisenhower — who made the Brown his "Summer White House" — to Morris the Cat, have personalized stationery printed up for them in the Brown's basement.

ALSO UNUSUAL in an era of high mobility is that one-sixth of the Brown's 600 employees have been with the hotel for more than 20 years, says Mehlman, who has been there for 43 years.

Adding to the sense of continuity is the Brown's rich history, recalling the famous and infamous who have visited the 10-story structure of Colorado red granite and Arizona sandstone.

Legend tells of a secret tunnel between the Brown and the neighboring Navarre that allowed businessmen during the '20s to discreetly visit with prostitutes by means of a small railroad car. Historian Hunt says no trace exists today of the Brown end of the tunnel, but the tracks and train car still are intact in the basement of the Navarre — albeit ending in a solid brick wall.

Room 840 has long been a honeymooner's favorite because it boasts the Brown's only four-poster bed and has ceiling mirrors of antique glass. The saloons have been the site of many an amorous quarrel, one of them culminating in a double murder during a showdown between two lovers of an attractive, married Denver socialite.

In 1905, Teddy Roosevelt, returning from one of his bear hunts, became the first U.S. president to visit the Brown. A special dinner featuring caviar canapes and wild roast duck on toast reportedly prompted an enthusiastic Roosevelt to lead the singing of "There'll Be a Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight."

Queen Marie visited 20 years later, requiring a specially constructed passageway so she might walk from her limousine to the elevators without encountering the common folk.

TODAY, THE rich and the celebrated continue to figure among the roughly 130,000 guests who visit the Brown each year. Employees say they'll never forget the time that Zsa Zsa Gabor lost her kitten there, nor the deluge of teen-age girls when the Beatles came to stay in 1964.

"I guess we've got a place in history," Mehlman says of his establishment. "And we look forward to our next 90 years."

United Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — When they switch on their television sets these days, Alice Jenkins and Gwendolyn Paige are just as likely to get odd couplings as "The Odd Couple."

"It's on now!" Paige, a retired nurse, exclaimed after flicking on her set. "They're breathing heavy. That's all I can say. It's Johnny Holmes, and he's having sex. That's all I can say. It's XX, I guess."

Added Jenkins, a housewife, "I get hard-core pornography movies, heavy breathing, the real thing, the naked people" on both a color and black-and-white set.

Paige said the movies appear at all hours of the day and night. "I don't know where it's coming from. It's weird," she said.

Federal Communications Commission officials also couldn't explain why the porno films were picked up on Channel 3, an unassigned frequency.

"There's a possibility of cable television leakage if there's cable TV in the area," said Dan Bosque, an FCC engineer. "If the connectors on the cable are old or corroded, the signal can get out and the regular frequencies will pick it up."

Bosque said that perhaps Paige's subscription television service was "bleeding" or "leaking" onto Channel 3, but Jenkins said she doesn't have any subscription networks on her sets. In addition, at the time that Paige said the John Holmes movie was coming in, her subscription service listed the movies "Barbarella" followed by "Carnal Knowledge."

Both women said they thought the porno films somehow might be leaking from two nearby hotels that advertise adult movies. But the owner of one hotel said he doesn't have any John Holmes films in his library, while the manager of the other said he no longer shows X-rated movies.

Paige said she first noticed the films two weeks ago.

"I was flipping the dial, and I saw it," she explained. "It was a complete story, a hard-core story. They were doing everything, a whole group of them. I get all the sound, all the action and everything."

Jenkins said she'd been picking up the porno films for at least six months, but didn't know until this week that her neighbor was getting the same thing.

"Most of the time, I catch my 16-year-old son watching it," Jenkins said.

Boat accident excuses little hard to fathom

PORTSMOUTH, Va. (AP) — Some excuses that boaters use to explain away their accidents are a little hard to fathom, the Coast Guard says.

In the wake of scores of maritime mishaps, officials with the 5th Coast Guard District have set aside some of the choicest alibis from accident reports.

For example, there's The Case of the Wiggly Wake.

"The guy was all over the lake," one guileless skipper wrote on his official form. "I had to swerve a number of times before I ran over him."

Then there was The Case of The Obviously Miffed Skipper.

"The indirect cause of this accident was a little guy in a small boat with a big mouth."

Some of the propwash runs from the formal — "The other boat attempted to cut in front of me, so I, with my bow, removed his engine" — to the simplistic — "In my attempt to kill a bee, I ran into a buoy."

But Coast Guard boating safety spokesman Tony McCartney said the best of the collection may be this matter-of-fact assessment from a sorry skipper who learned about his property rights the hard way.

"Coming home," the boater said, "I docked in the wrong slip and collided with a boat I don't have."

Olympic committees earn $10 million from coin sales

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Olympic Games committees have earned more than $10 million in advance sales of federally minted Olympic coins that can be saved as collectors' items or spent as legal U.S. currency.

The first installment, delivered by the government earlier this week, was split in half, with $5 million going to the U.S. Olympic Committee and $5 million to the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee.

The proceeds, which could reach $600 million if all the coins are sold, are to underwrite training costs for U.S. athletes and help finance the 1984 summer Olympic Games in Los Angeles.

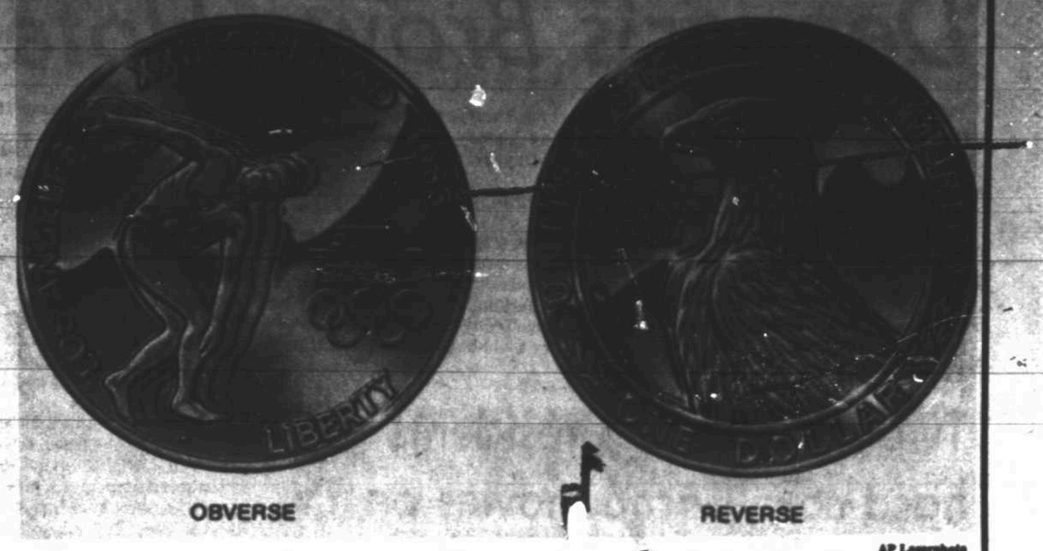

The coins have yet to be delivered, but $47.6 million in orders have arrived — leaving more than $10 million for the committees after subtracting for minting and marketing costs as well as the gold and silver content.

U.S. Treasurer Angela M. Buchanan, who presented the checks, said, "In reviewing our marketing so far, we are extraordinarily pleased with the strong support we are receiving from the American numismatic community."

However, Rep. Frank Annunzio, D-Ill., who helped push legislation authorizing the coins, has said collectors have been displeased with sketches of at least two of the three coins that will be offered.

There will be two $1 silver coins and a $10 gold coin — spendable as legal tender though the value of their silver and gold content will be much higher.

Ms. Buchanan said work continues on refining designs of the second silver dollar and the gold $10 dollar coin, with suggestions welcome.

AP Laserphoto

This is a reproduction of the 1983 Silver Dollar Olympic Coin which has grossed $47.6 million in sales over a 5-week period ending Nov. 26. Sales of the coin are now being expanded to the general public and later the coins will be marketed outside the United States.

Coupon clipper cheats

CINCINNATI (AP) — The Procter & Gamble Co. says a system that allowed an unemployed coupon-clipper to get $1,827 worth of groceries for $125 is "clearly misredemption."

David Carlisle, 42, an unemployed father of two, cashed in hundreds of coupons last week at a local store, often using coupons of different values on the same item.

The owner of the store where he collected his bonanza now says he made a mistake.

"I wish I'd checked into it. My feeling is that it's cheating the manufacturers," Robert E. Rauen, owner of the IGA store, said.

"You can't do it. It's clearly misredemption. It's wrong and inappropriate use of a coupon," said Robert Norrish, a spokesman for Procter & Gamble, the Cincinnati-based food and cleaning products manufacturer.

Norrish said companies like P&G, which uses millions of dollars worth of coupons in its advertising, reimburse retailers who return coupons but they must show they sold one item for each coupon redeemed.

Carlisle disagreed. "If it were illegal, I would not do it, nor would the IGA take the coupons," he said.

He said he has been deluged with calls from across the country asking him to disclose his system.

Carlisle said he spent months acquiring coupons. The key, he said, is that he takes one item and turns in several coupons on it, getting all or most of it for nothing. In some cases the coupons are for a few cents each. Others allow him to get two items for the price of one.

For instance, if he were buying peanut butter, he would amass coupons of different values for that item.

Carlisle said he applied one coupon for 10 cents off, one for 7 cents off, one for 35 cents off two jars, and so on, for each jar purchased.

Carlisle said that by using coupons of different values, he did not violate the "limit one coupon per purchase" rule that is printed on most coupons.

He said his system is prohibited only if coupons carry the warning "not to be used in conjunction with other coupons."

"If they don't say that, you can use them with other coupons," he said.

Rauen doubts his store will lose any money because he can show enough "proof of purchase" at his store to cover the items Carlisle bought. But he still doesn't like it.

"I just don't think it's fair. We don't believe in running an unethical business. We made one mistake and we aren't going to repeat it," Rauen said.

HILL OF LEJA, Afghanistan (AP) — From a distance it's not much to look at. Just a collection of mud houses within a walled compound. A tank at the main gate looks strangely out of place.

"We attack at three o'clock," the guerrilla leader said. Minutes later our group was still perched in a machine gun nest waiting for something to happen.

"They're late," snapped commander Sameer Gul, checking his watch. "They must be working on Afghanistan time. Pakistan is 30 minutes ahead, if you didn't know."

It turned out to be neither one nor the other. At 3:15 p.m. on Nov. 24, the tranquility of the countryside was shattered by a loud noise followed by billowing white smoke.

THE FIRST mortar round, fired from guerrillas' positions further down the hillside, had fallen short of its target. Seconds later, angles corrected and sights adjusted, a second mortar shell was fired and this time its aim was true.

Under attack was Dragey, one of a dozen Afghan military outposts strung out around Khost, a garrison town for 1,000 Afghan soldiers and 300 Soviet advisers and dependants, 30 miles west of the Pakistan border in Afghanistan's rugged Paktia province.

According to Western estimates, the Soviets are part of a 100,000-troop contingent leading the fight against Moslem Afghan guerrillas opposed to the Marxist regime headed by Babrak Karmal. The troops were sent into the country in December 1979, at the same time that Karmal came to power in what was believed to be a Kremlin-backed coup.

Afghan militia at Dragey wasted no time retaliating, but directed their artillery fire in the wrong direction in the mistaken belief their attackers were much closer.

As black smoke rose from the compound, pro-government villagers sought safety beside the tank — only to draw fire from guerrillas scattered on hilltops who were using captured Soviet-made Dashaka machine guns.

As darkness fell, the attack was still in progress although shots were spaced at one-minute intervals to conserve ammunition.

"We'll stop now. It's better they think they've defeated us rather than risk them finding out our true location... One by one we are hoping to knock out the outposts... Once that's done, we'll go for Khost. We're already managing to launch hit-and-run attacks at night."

"WE'VE ONLY got 10 days supply," said Gul, from his observation post. "We want to save it for the final assault in two weeks time."

The exchange of gunfire continued into the night, ending when an Afghan army rocket exploded in an empty farmhouse a few hundred yards from the cantonment.

"We'll stop now," the commander said. "It's better they think they've defeated us rather than risk them finding out our true location."

We then marched back to base camp, a 2½-hour walk through steep mountain passes, where Gul explained his strategy for capturing Khost, the second largest town in Paktia after Gardez, the provincial capital.

Three weeks ago another military outpost at nearby Leja was overrun after a battle that lasted 14 weeks. Gul said 150 Afghan troopers were killed and 80 injured. Guerrilla losses totaled 27 dead with 72 others wounded, he said.

"One by one we are hoping to knock out the outposts," the commander said. "Once that's done, we'll go for Khost. We're already managing to launch hit-and-run attacks at night."

TAKING KHOST will not be easy. It is located on a stretch of plain that is devoid of cover.

The surrounding hills also are held by Moslem insurgents belonging to the fundamentalist Yunis Khalis sect, which claims to have 30,000 armed fighting men in Paktia.

Gul said he has 500 men in his command and that he is confidant he can capture Khost next year if he obtains a dozen 75mm artillery pieces and ammunition for a sustained offensive.

The day after the mortar attack, two Afghan soldiers turned up at the camp, handed over their Kalashnikov automatic rifles and asked for help returning to their families in Takhar province in northern Afghanistan.

The defectors said they were from the 25th Brigade at Dragey and decided to escape since their outpost had come under assault.

ABDUL MOHAMMAD, 23, a Tadjik tribesman and Peram Gul, 30, an Uzbek, also brought nine crates of ammunition with them. They were rewarded with the equivalent of $300 each and told they first would have to be interrogated on the Pakistan side of the border before being sent home.

Groups sue over formula

WASHINGTON (AP) — Three consumer groups are preparing to sue the government, claiming that it weakened infant formula quality rules because of industry pressure.

Public Citizen's Health Research Group, which consumer advocate Ralph Nader founded, the Consumer Federation of America and the Infant Formula Nutrition Organization which calls itself Formula, filed suit Wednesday in U.S. District Court.

The suit was aimed at the Food and Drug Administration which drafted the regulations and then revised them.

"By rejecting the strong pro-infant regulations proposed by the Carter FDA, the Reagan administration has again shown that it treats the producers — in this case the infant formula manufacturers — much better than it treats potential victims, in this case infants," said Sidney Wolfe, director of the Health Research Group, said in a prepared statement.

He said the new regulations make "a mockery" out of a law Congress passed in 1980 requiring strict quality control procedures.

And he cited an internal FDA memorandum which he said showed that even agency officials believe government capitulated to the industry's wishes on the regulations.

The memorandum, dated March 8, 1982, was from FDA attorney Jeff Gibbs to FDA general counsel Thomas Scarlett.

With one exception, "the tentative final rule incorporates most changes desired by the industry. Whatever disagreement industry will have with the new rule will probably stem from the rule's not going far enough in reducing industry burdens," Gibbs' memo said.

The newer version of the regulations was outlined formally on April 5, 1982. It required the industry to test products for nutritional quality at frequent intervals during the manufacturing process, before they were shipped to stores and during the products' shelf life to make sure they contained adequate nutrients.

At the time, FDA estimated that the regulations would cost the industry $2 million in start-up costs and about $1.3 million thereafter. There are about six infant formula manufacturers in the United States who generate $550 million in business.

Congress passed a law requiring infant formula quality control procedures after a nationwide furor when two formulas were found to lack adequate levels of chloride in 1979. The formulas were Neo-Mull-Soy and Cho-Free. The absence of chloride in the diet can impair a child's growth and development and cause such reactions as muscle weakness, nausea, diarrhea and failure to thrive.

CHICAGO (AP) — There's pupcakes, liver pound cake, beef chews and steak-kidney ragout on the menu at "Famous Fido's Doggie Deli," where pampered pooches can eat high on the hog.

The deli is owned by Gloria Lissner and Bridget O'Connell, who say they'll also cater a "Bone-A-Party" — a big meal for the stay-at-home pet set.

Ten years ago, Miss Lissner opened "Happy Tails" grooming shop on the Northwest Side, where dogs can be attired in tuxedos, leopard pajamas, silk robes and custom-made suits in the clothes annex.

"I got the idea for a doggie deli when customers kept asking me for treats or food made with ingredients especially needed in a pet's diet. Something that would look good and taste good," she said. "They said they were tired of buying them hamburgers and french fries at fast-food places."

Selections are served in bowls set on little white tables, complete with napkins and a vase of flowers — or the food can be bought to go, ready-to-eat or frozen.

Also on sale are personal dog mugs, ceramic pill boxes and treat jars. Dog food resembling pieces of candy are in glass jars, country-store fashion, selling from 5 cents to 59 cents each.

Items include dog boots, dog stationery, and dog reminder notes that say: "Have you hugged your dog today?" or "It is 10 p.m. — do you know where your dog is?"

Two-pound cakes are made of liver, bone meal, flour, honey and other ingredients. Lettered on the frosting are inscriptions such as "Fido Loves Fifi."

"Business is fantastic," said Miss Lissner, 30, who has 2,000 regular customers on file for the grooming business alone. "In the last two weeks we've done several caterings, sold 50 takeouts and about 75 cakes. Next we are going to have health shakes for pregnant dogs and dietetic dinners."

All the food is homemade, Miss Lissner said.

"I have five women working most of the time preparing it in their kitchens at home," she said.

—Entrees: Shepherd's pie (baked ground beef in a casserole molded into a pastry shell of mashed potatoes); Steak and kidney ragout (bites of beef and kidney braised in a sauce); Vita Loaf (fresh ground beef blended with egg, garlic, cheese, whole wheat bread crumbs and a nutritional supplement). $2.99 each.

A "customer" at "Famous Fido's Doggie Deli" in Chicago looks over the selection in the store's meat case: pupcakes, liver pound cake, turkey a la Fido, and hickory-flavored bones, to name a few. Store owner Gloria Lissner also caters parties at the shop, where canines can be attired in tuxedos or silk robes — all on sale in the clothing annex.

The study, conducted by researchers at Baylor University Medical Center and published in today's New England Journal of Medicine, concluded that "starch blocker tablets do not inhibit the digestion and absorption of starch calories in human beings."

Added Dr. George W. Bo-Linn, who directed the study, "I am convinced that starch blocker tablets do not work the way they were advertised to work."

However, Dr. J. John Marshall, who discovered starch blockers seven years ago, said the study "does not, repeat not, show that starch blockers used as intended are ineffective."

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration said the Baylor experiment is the first controlled clinical trial of starch blockers in humans.

The claim by the pills' manufacturers was intriguing. They were supposed to interfere with the body's digestion of starch. And as a result, the body would not absorb calories from pasta, potatoes and other high-starch foods.

Last July, the FDA ordered starch blockers taken off the market until their safety and effectiveness could be proven. However, some makers are appealing that order in federal court in New York

"As a practical matter, starch blockers are still in stores all over the country," said Bruce Brown, an FDA spokesman in Washington.

So far, the FDA has seized $838,000 worth of the pills and destroyed an additional $1.6 million worth that were voluntarily given up by the makers.

In the experiment, the doctors thoroughly cleaned the digestive tracts of five healthy volunteers. Then they fed them a dinner of spaghetti, tomato sauce, bread and margarine. The meal contained 97 grams of starch and 677 calories.

Fourteen hours later, the doctors again cleaned out the people's intestines and saved all of the fecal matter. The volunteers went through this procedure twice. Each time, they took three starch blockers or look-alike placeboes.

Judge rules firm must pay

EPHRATA, Wash. (AP) — An insurance company has been ordered to compensate up to 4,000 businesses in eastern Washington because of volcanic ash damage caused by an eruption of Mount St. Helens.

Claims filed in the aftermath of the May 18, 1980, eruption ranged from $1,000 to $30,000 against the Union Pacific Insurance Co., said Jerry Moberg, an attorney representing the plaintiffs.

Grant County Superior Court Judge C.J. Merritt handed down the ruling Tuesday. Moberg said the amount of damages will be substantial. "We're talking big bucks," he said.

The insurance company argued it did not have to pay for ash damage from the eruption because the damage was not directly caused by the volcanic blast.

Judge sequesters jury in Teamsters conspiracy trial

CHICAGO (A.P.) — The judge in the Teamsters bribery-conspiracy trial says he has "complete confidence" that five jurors who got crank calls won't let it affect the case, but has sequestered the jury as a precaution.

To prevent further tampering, Marshall ordered the 12 jurors and five alternates put up at a downtown hotel, where their calls, television watching and newspaper reading will be monitored.

"Each of you has assured me that you can put this incident out of your minds. The lawyers and I have complete confidence in you," Hall told the panel. He did not reveal what the caller said, but said the man had no relation to the case.

"Call him an intermeddler, call him a crank, there are other names I would like to call him," he told the jurors, adding, "I am as positive as I can be of anything that the calls were the work of a total outsider."

Variety Clubs to host 'All Star Party' for Carol Burnett

It's called "All Star Party for Carol Burnett," and home viewers can see it Sunday on CBS following "60 Minutes." You might think that Carol is not old enough for a tribute, but neither was Burt Reynolds, last year's honoree by the Variety Clubs.

Carol's dinner-telecast raised funds for a Carol Burnett Wing for developmentally handicapped children at her alma mater, the University of California at Los Angeles.

Among the stars who turned out were Bette Davis, James Stewart, Fred Astaire, Lucille Ball, Robert Stack, Danny Thomas, Sammy Davis, Steve Allen, Jean Stapleton, Lloyd Bridges, Zsa Zsa Gabor, Keenan Wynn and Paul Henreid. There also were some more recent stars of television fame: Loretta Swit, Bonnie Franklin, Loni Anderson and Daniel J. Travanti.

These Variety Club tributes aren't like "This Is Your Life." The guest of honor knows he or she is being saluted, but producer-writer Paul Keyes (of "Laugh-In") likes to spring surprises — such as the appearance by Beverly Sills at the finale, to join in the singing of the Burnett closing theme.

"We just had breakfast last week in New York, and Beverly said she was sorry she couldn't come," said the flabbergasted comedienne.

It was seeing the great stars of the 1930s and 1940s that seemed to affect her most. "I was born in Texas, but I grew up in Hollywood. My grandmother and I were on relief, and we spent every cent on movies. We saw eight movies a week.

"I must say that I had a lot of taste," Miss Burnett said. "My favorite actor was Jimmy Stewart, who always reminded me of my dad. I wish Grandmother were here tonight to hear Jimmy sing, 'Easy to Love.' I hate to say this, but it woulda killed her."

Stewart did indeed serenade Miss Burnett with the Cole Porter song which he originally sang to Eleanor Powell in "Born to Dance" in 1936. His wife, Gloria, reported that he had been nervous all week about doing the song.

Other high moments were the salutes from Bette Davis and Lucille Ball. Miss Burnett's television sidekick, Vicki Lawrence, provided a remarkable imitation of Miss Burnett singing the song that made her famous: "I Made a Fool of Myself over John Foster Dulles."

Jack Paar remembered when she sang that song Aug. 8, 1958, on the "Tonight" show in "a broken-down theater, the Hudson, on 41st Street before an audience of winos and bag ladies."

There was a message from President Reagan, obligatory at Hollywood tributes. There also was a message from Garry Moore, on whose telelvison show Carol established her name.

"That was another surprise," Miss Burnett said afterward. "I thought they were both in school."

Puzzle contest for mansion canceled

DANIELS, W.Va. (AP) — A crossword puzzle contest with a 19-room mansion as the grand prize has been canceled because not enough people forked over the $250 entry fee, the contest promoter says.

Alexander D. "Zan" Campbell of nearby Beckley announced in September that his mansion would be given to the winner of the contest if he received 5,000 entries. But Campbell said Wednesday that too few people entered, and the escrow agent began returning hundreds of thousands of dollars in entry fees.

"The last five or six days we were deluged with entries, but we knew we were still short, so we didn't even deposit those checks," said Bill Ellis, president of the Jamon Corp., which promoted the contest.

Ellis said each entrant will get a refund "along with a copy of the correct answers to the puzzle."

He said more than 64,000 people — "groups, professors, doctors, lawyers, all kinds" — wrote to ask for entry blanks, but he would not say how many entries came back.

Campbell made millions selling used mining equipment in the mid-1970s and then fell upon hard times. Had he raised $1.25 million through the $250 entry fees, he could have paid his debt to Flat Top National Bank of Mercer County, which holds the mansion's mortgage, he said.

Court has no workable rule dealing with obscenity

Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — They don't ban movies anymore, not since movie-going stopped being the national pastime, and the guardians of our public morality have turned their attention to policing school libraries, monitoring television and, most recently, snuffing out salacious video games.

That wasn't always the case, of course. In 1915, D.W. Griffith's Civil War epic, "The Birth of a Nation," provoked riots because of its rabble-rousing account of the effects of abolition, causing it to be banned from Boston to Denver. In 1932, Howard Hughes had to battle the Hays Office, the New York state censorship board and the city of Chicago in order to exhibit "Scarface," his unapologetic study of the rise and fall of an Al Capone-like gangster. And in 1956, the city of Aurora, Ill., successfully sought an injunction preventing the exhibition of "Baby Doll," Elia Kazan's overheated drama about poor white trash, while New York's Cardinal Spellman mobilized the Legion of Decency to boycott the movie wherever it was legally shown.

But not since a theater manager in Albany, Ga., was convicted of distributing obscene material for playing "Carnal Knowledge" in 1972 has a major Hollywood production run into serious censorship problems. Although the Georgia Supreme Court upheld the conviction, the U.S. Supreme Court overturned it in 1974.

After viewing director Mike Nichol's bleak satire of male sexual obsessions, the court ruled that the movie did not "depict sexual conduct in a patently offensive way." And even though the court still contended that obscenity, which it has never been able to define to everyone's satisfaction, remains beyond the pale of the law, Hollywood reassured itself that its own productions could always claim constitutional protection.

But the line between what's protected and what's not remains a vague one. Twentieth Century-Fox, for example, didn't encounter any problems earlier this year when it released "Making Love," a middle-class homosexual drama that had been carefully tailored, out of commercial considerations, not to offend. But last month, in Norfolk, Va., police seized a print of "Taxi Zum Klo," a homosexual drama imported from Germany. While just as "serious" in its intent as "Making Love," it included far more graphic footage.

Claiming that exhibiting "Taxi Zum Klo" violated a city code outlawing obscene presentations, police served the theater with a warrant alleging that the movie depicted "a shameful, morbid interest in homosexual love affairs" which had "no serious medical, artistic or literary material and went beyond the limits of candor and social acceptability."

In "Banned Films: Movies, Censors and The First Amendment," a useful new study of the battle for freedom of the screen written by Edward De Grazia and Roger K. Newman, the authors conclude that despite all its tortured efforts to define obscenity, the Supreme Court still has not formulated a workable rule.

"Given the state of the law today," they write, "the question of whether or not a specific film is obscene can only be answered by asking if at least four members of the Court consider the question worth deciding, and, if so, would at least five Justices, after viewing the film, be prepared to take the position that the film is entitled to constitutional protection. The continuing inability even of constitutional lawyers to give any certain answers to this question is fair measure of the extent to which movies in this country are still not really free, despite the command of the First Amendment."

When movies first began, the Supreme Court wouldn't even agree that they enjoyed constitutional protection under the First Amendment. In a 1915 case brought by the producers of "The Birth of a Nation" attempting to strike down the power of city and state censorship boards, the court ruled movies did not fall under the guarantees of free speech and free press, comparing movies as "mediums of thought" to "the theater, the circus, and all other shows and spectacles, not to be regarded as part of the press of the country or as organs of public opinion."

It wasn't until 35 years later, in a case involving Roberto Rossellini's "The Miracle," banned in New York as "blasphemous," that the Supreme Court reversed itself. The opinion, written by Justice Tom C. Clark, said that "motion pictures are a significant medium for the communication of ideas" and for that reason are protected by the constitutional guarantees of freedom of speech and press. "The importance of motion pictures as an organ of public opinion is not lessened by the fact that they are designed to entertain as well as to inform," he added.

But in the same opinion, the court also said that movies did not enjoy an absolute freedom. The court refused to protect so-called obscene movies.

But how to define obscenity? In the "Fanny Hill" case in 1966, the court refined the definition further: To be obscene, a work's dominant theme had to appeal to prurient interest, it had to offend contemporary community standards, and it had to be "utterly" without redeeming social value.

But because there was almost always some expert witness willing to testify that even the most dubious book or movie had some redeeming social value, the court appeared to have opened the way for all kinds of sexually explicit material.

By 1973, it was too late to close the barn door. "Deep Throat," little more than a pornographic novelity, had proved an immensely popular hit, although the federal government spent more than $4 million unsuccessfully trying to prosecute the movie. Local governments had also discovered that instead of going through the trouble of prosecuting movies in court, they could exercise some control over pornographic movies by exercising zoning laws to curtail the spread of adult movie theaters. Obscenity laws remained on the books, but they were rarely invoked.

Hollywood is content to let the matter rest, and "Carnal Knowledge" and "Emmanuelle" are now shown unmolested on cable TV. But the battle could resume at any moment, cable TV is the most likely battleground, and when it does, the censors will still have the upper hand.

Autograph party slated for artist, writer

A COMMUNITY
"SING-IN"

All singers from Church, School, and Civic Choirs are invited to participate in this wonderful Christmas offering. Music will be available for loan at the door. (You may bring your own score.) A special section for audience and 'music lovers' too. The traditional HALLELUJAH CHORUS will conclude this special Community Sing-In.

That's why a car dealer's reputation is one of his most important products. But really, his reputation is not just made by his promises. A good reputation comes from hundreds of happy, satisfied customers...people who tell other people about being treated fairly.

When you buy a used car, you're really buying a lot more than just the steel, aluminum, and other materials that go into the construction of an automobile. You're also buying a pledge from the dealer to work for your total satisfaction.

1980 FORD PINTO 4 speed, sun roof, only $2995	1980 CHEVROLET MONTE CARLO Lots of extras - clean! $5995
