U.S. military adviser to El Salvador slain

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — The deputy commander of U.S. military advisers in El Salvador was shot in the head four times and killed while he sat alone in his car near a San Salvador university, the first U.S. adviser slain in this nation's civil war.

Navy Cmdr. Albert A. Schaufelberger was killed Wednesday evening, U.S. Embassy spokesman Don Hamilton said. He was in charge of security for the American advisers assigned to assist the Salvadoran military in its fight against leftist rebels.

Neither Hamilton nor President Alvaro Magana's spokesman Francisco Jose Guerrero, who announced the slaying, would speculate on who the killer or killers were.

Schaufelberger had replaced the double-plate bulletproof glass windows in his Malibu with ordinary glass recently because the car's air conditioner did not work and "he did not like baking inside," said a friend who asked not to be identified.

The car, like most U.S. government-owned vehicles here, came equipped with the special windows, which could not be rolled down.

Schaufelberger is the first American adviser slain in El Salvador. Another adviser, Special Forces Sgt. J. Stanley Thomas, was wounded by rebel fire while flying in a helicopter above Usulutan province in early February.

Thomas was shot in the leg, but his wound was not serious.

The first group of advisers, numbering 55, was dispatched by the Reagan administration in March 1981. Since then the administration has observed a self-imposed limit of 55 on the number of advisers.

Hamilton said Schaufelberger, dressed in plain clothes, was killed when he went to the Central American University in a western suburb of the capital about 6:30 p.m. to pick up a friend.

As he was waiting in the university parking lot, a car pulled up behind his green Malibu and four shots were fired from the vehicle, striking Schaufelberger in the head, Hamilton said.

He said a passerby placed the officer in his car and rushed him to the Military Hospital, but he was pronounced dead on arrival.

Hamilton said his account was based on reports from witnesses and information gathered by other embassy officials.

A night watchman at the university gave a different version.

The watchman, who identified himself as Roberto Alfaro, said the officer apparently parked along the one-way street that runs through the university.

After he was shot, he drove about 20 feet before the vehicle jumped the curb and smashed into a parked car, Alfaro said, showing an Associated Press reporter broken glass and the tire marks he said were made by the victim's car.

The shooting occurred after dark when hundreds of students were leaving class and heading home. The street was congested with vehicles and pedestrians, Alfaro said.

Hamilton would not comment on whether security procedures would be increased.

"We try to be careful all the time," he said.

Hamilton said Schaufelberger usually did not wear his uniform after working hours.

He also said authorities have not determined what kind of gun was used to kill Schaufelberger.

"President Magana has expressed his concern, offered his condolences and promised a thorough investigation," Hamilton said.

In Washington, Pentagon spokesman Air Force Capt. Jerry Sexton confirmed the victim's identity, calling him a Navy representative to the U.S. "El Salvador military group."

'Return' engagement

Midland High School seniors Mark Taylor, left, and Steve Baskin headed the line for "Return of the Jedi" tickets by about 10:30 a.m. Wednesday. Cassandra Bell, in hat, and Carolyn Mitchell watch as the two while away the wait playing chess. By 3:30 p.m., the line for tickets wound halfway around UA Cine 4.

Movie-goers returning for 'Return of the Jedi'

Can Han Solo possibly thaw? Will he escape from Jabba the Hutt's gruesome claw? Might virtuous Princess Leia show even the slightest moral flaw? Will Luke Skywalker finally learn that Darth Vader is his long-lost pa?

Like the Millenium Falcon in a meteor storm, these questions and more bounced to and fro inside people's heads as they queued in front of the UA Cine 4 Wednesday to catch the opening of "Return of the Jedi," the final, $32.5 million installment in George Lucas's "Star Wars" trilogy.

By 2:45 p.m., more than 1½ hours before the 4:30 p.m. showing, Midland High School seniors Mark Taylor, 17, and Steve Baskin, 18, sat comfortably ensconced at the head of the line, hunkered over a chess board.

Baskin said he and Taylor made a hasty exit from high school graduation practice at Chaparral Center and were first on the scene at 10:30 a.m. to line up for the $4.50 tickets.

"It's like getting addicted to something, you have to keep coming back," explained Traci Martin, 19, dressed in black for the show and wearing an Imperial guard cap over her long hair.

John Dennett, record reviewer for Midland High's newspaper, interrupted his "Kensington" board game to critique "Jedi," which he previewed during a midnight showing for the press Tuesday.

Like most good critics, Dennett chose his words carefully so as not to disclose the plot to those around him.

"It was real good. It was awfully good," said Dennett. "Everything that should have happened did."

Dennett, who claims to have paid to see the original "Star Wars" 17 times, said Lucas has captured an entire generation with his continuing space adventure.

"I think he's deliberately doing it that way," Dennett said. "The story has transcended just being a movie. It's almost a modern legend."

John Deuel, an 18-year-old Lee High School senior, predicted "Jedi" will also transcend box office history. "I think it's going to be a record," said Deuel. "I think it will beat 'E.T.' "

Len Schmidt, UA Cine manager, agreed with Deuel's prediction.

"Definitely, definitely," said Schmidt, when asked whether "Jedi" will surpass the $400 million in box office receipts garnered by the ever-loving extraterrestrial.

"We started six months ago working on promotions," Schmidt said. "It's the basics, getting ready for the biggest rush you've seen in your life."

Schmidt said he's stocked more than a ton of popcorn, plenty of soft drinks and stacked nacho chips to the ceiling in anticipation of record attendance.

He said two projectors have been "interlocked" so the movie can be shown simultaneously in separate theaters with a combined seating capacity of 730.

Schmidt said Darth Vader is expected to arrive Saturday — either by helicopter or Mustang convertible — to distribute prizes as part of promotion for the film.

Baskin, Taylor and Dennett were typical of the "teen-age tint" coloring the front portion of the growing line. But as the line extended to about 200 and stretched halfway [illegible] the theater by 3:30 p.m., the crowd's demographics broadened as kids of all ages shifted from foot to foot in anticipation.

When asked whether she wouldn't rather have waited a few weeks to see "Revenge of the Jedi" and avoid the long lines and crowds, 38-year-old Darla Alexander smiled and answered in typical, "Star Wars" fan fashion.

"I guarantee you," she said, "I'll be here again after the lines have gone down."

Japanese quake, tidal wave kill more than 20 persons

AKITA, Japan (AP) — A severe earthquake followed by tidal waves killed at least 23 people, injured 54 and left 68 missing along a 180-mile stretch of coastline in northwest Japan today, police reported.

Most of the dead were believed swallowed up by waves that crashed against the coast at heights up to 20 feet. In Tokyo, 280 miles south of the stricken area, upper stories of office buildings swayed noticeably.

The Central Meteorological Agency said the quake, with an epicenter in the Japan Sea west of the main island of Honshu, had a magnitude of 7.7 on the Richter scale.

The South Korean Central Meteorological Office issued a tidal wave warning along the nation's eastern coast, across the Japan Sea from Akita, where waves were as high as 10 feet.

Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone declared a state of emergency to coordinate relief efforts in the rural fishing and farming area as reports came in on what appeared to be the worst quake to hit the region in 44 years.

The National Police Agency said a group of about 50 people, including more than 40 children on a school excursion, were caught in a wave that struck the coast of the Oga Peninsula, near the city of Akita, the state capital.

Police in Akita said one student in the group, which reportedly was having a picnic on the beach, was killed. The others were rescued, according to news reports. Police also reported 14 dead throughout the prefecture, most of them fishermen or construction workers along the beaches.

The national daily Asahi Shimbun quoted Tsuyoshi Tsuruga, an agricultural cooperative worker in Oga, as saying a wave "rising to a height I have never before seen," crashed down on the group. "All the children screamed and most of them were swept away."

Toshiharu Hosoi, an official at a coastal Oga aquarium, said a Swiss woman, unofficially identified as Magdalena Brandenberger, 38, from Zurich, was found dead after failing to reach the safety of a rock as the waves "of five or six meters approached at a speed much faster than we expected."

Reports conflicted on the size of the tsunami. The Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) said it measured six feet at Oga, and as high as nine feet in southern Hokkaido.

Meteorological agency spokesman Toshiaki Yasuda said those estimates were "reasonable" but that its own measurements at several fixed coastal stations showed waves up to three feet high. The agency measures the deviation of a wave from the norm, he said.

NHK reported fires burning at an oil refinery and a thermal power plant in Akita, a city of 200,000, and other fires in Hirosaki city, north of Akita.

Kyodo News Service said three oil storage tanks had been ruptured at Niigata, another major city 160 miles south of Akita. Some structural damage and broken roads and sidewalks were reported in many parts of the area. Numerous highways were closed and train service was interrupted.

The police said three workmen were swept away while working on sea barriers at Aomori, at the northern tip of Honshu, and one person was killed by a collapsing wall in Akita city, 80 miles farther south. Several people were reported missing at the southern end of Hokkaido, across the strait from Aomori.

Chamber names Billingsley executive vice president

By DAVID C. SODAMANN
Business-Energy Editor

Grant Billingsley, longtime chamber employee, was named executive vice president of the Midland Chamber of Commerce during the board of directors meeting Wednesday afternoon. The appointment becomes effective June 15.

Billingsley

Billingsley will replace Paul Harvel, who will be moving to Amarillo to head up the Chamber of Commerce there.

The board's decision was made during a brief, closed executive session. When the meeting was reopened to the public, Bill Ortloff, a chamber director, explained the board had acted on a motion to accepted Harvel's resignation, with regrets, and expressed its appreciation for his efforts during his tenure in Midland.

That motion carried "17 to 2," said Larry Bell, chamber president, alluding to the board's reluctance to let Harvel leave.

Bell then announced Billingsley's appointment. The decision to promote Billingsley was unanimous, Bell said.

"I'm very excited about the opportunity and I can promise you I will do my best to justify the support and faith you've shown in me," Billingsley told the board.

Harvel said, "I had not applied for a job; was not looking for one. It knocked on my door three or four different times and the last time I accepted. If I did not fully feel confident in the staff we have and the program we have and confidence Grant could run the organization...I would not have considered that opportunity. But it didn't bother me the least, because I know the Midland chamber is in good hands. I think you've got the best chamber manager you've ever had, including myself."

Billingsley began his career in 1975 as public relations director of the Midland chamber. In March 1978 he was named manager of the economic development department and in March 1982 was promoted to general manager of the chamber.

Billingsley is a 1975 graduate of the University of Oklahoma. He has completed a six-year program at the United States Chamber of Commerce Institute for Organizational Management. He also completed the Basic Industrial Development Course at Texas A&M University and the Economic Development Institute at OU.

He is a member of the Southern Industrial Development Council, The American Economic Development Council and is a director of the Texas Industrial Development Council. In 1982 he became a certified industrial developer as recognized by the American Economic Development Council.

The board also:

—Heard an education committee report on a graduate level free enterprise education program for Midland teachers the chamber is supporting.

—Heard reports dealing with the highway committee, the status of the Leadership Midland program and recent real estate sales trends here. Overall, sales in April were down.

—Heard a report on a Brown Bag Lecture Series to be conducted this summer, jointly sponsored by the chamber and the Permian Basin Graduate Center.

—Heard a report from Midland County Juge Bill Ahders, who outlined the county commission's interest in building a new jail with a 250-prisoner capacity and adjoining vegetable garden, which would give prisoners work to do and help defray the cost of feeding inmates.

—Heard an economic development report by Grant Billingsley, the last Billingsley will give in his present role as head of the chamber's economic development department.

Nurse held in Odessa jail in child-death investigation

KERRVILLE, Texas (AP) — A nurse charged with killing a toddler and injuring six other children with injections of a powerful muscle relaxant will be given a "close look" in the investigation of 122 infant deaths in San Antonio, authorities said.

Genene Jones, 32, a licensed vocational nurse, was being held today at the Ector County Jail in Odessa on charges that she administered such injections while she worked for a pediatrician, authorities said.

A Kerr County grand jury indicted Ms. Jones on Wednesday on charges of causing the death of 15-month-old Chelsea Ann McClellan on Sept. 17 and causing serious seizures among six children ranging in age from 1 month to 7 years. The charges were the first in a nine-month probe by the district attorney.

Ms. Jones also has appeared before a San Antonio grand jury looking into 122 infant deaths at the pediatric intensive care unit at Medical Center Hospital from 1978 to early 1982, Bexar County Assistant District Attorney Nick Rothe said.

Ms. Jones was employed at the county-operated hospital during that period. She has denied any wrongdoing.

"I didn't kill any children," she told reporters in March, her only public comment.

A Texas Ranger arrested Ms. Jones on Wednesday night at a relative's house, according to Kerr County District Attorney Ron Sutton.

She was being held today on bonds totaling $225,000, said Sheriff's Capt. Carl Watters.

Sutton said his nine-month investigation was hampered by the unusual nature of the "bizarre-type crimes" alleged in the indictment.

"You try to understand why someone would try to injure a child," he said. "You don't expect to find that in a medical environment."

Ms. Jones' attorney, William Chenault of San Antonio, could not be reached for comment. A woman who answered the phone at his home said he would be out of town until Sunday.

Midland gets miniature rainfall

Midland, which is suffering from a dearth of rainfall, got enough moisture from darkened skies Wednesday afternoon just to settle the dust.

"It rained about half an inch in spots," said Hoot Leonard, a cotton farmer who manages the Midland Farmers Co-operative gin. "Still," he said, "it's not enough for a planting rain."

Ideally, Midland area cotton farmers prefer to plant in mid-May if there's enough underground moisture to get a crop started. Since the land was dry and the usually heavy April and May rains didn't fall, farmers had no choice but to wait until a "planting rain" moistened the soil enough for the seeds to sprout and take root.

"There's still hope," Leonard said in referring to the weatherman's forecast for additional rains today and Friday. Farmers can wait as late as early June before planting but then they're taking a chance of an early fall freeze, which could ruin the crop.

Offering hopes for more rain is the weatherman's calling for partly cloudy skies tonight and a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms.

The weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport gauged 0.27 inch of rain fell Wednesday. The rainfall brings the year's total to 1.94 inches.

In the area, a tornado was reported near Rankin by a Department of Public Safety trooper, but not confirmed. No damage was reported.

Low temperature forecast for tonight is in the low 60s. Winds are to be southeasterly at 5 to 10 mph.

For Friday, the weatherman is calling for partly cloudy skies, warmer temperatures and a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms. The high Friday is to be in the mid-90s. Winds are to be southerly at 5-15 mph.

Wednesday's high temperature was 88 degrees, which was far from tying the record high of 101 degrees for the date in 1953. The overnight low was 58, while the record low for the date was 48 degrees in 1950.

Mississippians keep fingers in sandbag dikes

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — As George Sanders sat on his sandbag levee and gazed at the rust-colored Pearl River floodwaters surrounding — but not quite reaching — his home, he realized he and his family had battled the river and won.

The water fanned out across neighboring yards, spilling into carports and under doors of abandoned homes in northeast Jackson. Occasionally, a fishing boat or canoe passed by, ignoring a stop sign that told of a street somewhere below.

Sanders' determination and ingenuity saved his house from the floodwaters, but some of his neighbors were not as lucky, despite around-the-clock sandbagging since Monday.

"My house did flood, but the sandbags are keeping a lot of the water out and that has saved us a tremendous amount of grief," said George Warriner, who lives next door to the Sanders.

The Pearl River, overflowing from heavy rains last week, pushed to 39.5 feet before cresting Wednesday. The river, 11.5 feet above flood stage, sent water into more than 900 homes and businesses and forced 6,000 people to evacuate.

City officials estimated the damage at nearly $23 million, and said it may be several days before evacuees can return to their homes. Elsewhere in Mississippi, flooded rivers have displaced about 1,200 residents in Vicksburg and hundreds of others in scattered areas.

"We had five feet of water in this house in the Easter 1979 flood and my wife decided Monday morning that we would fight this one, so we got with our neighbors and did just that," Sanders said Wednesday.

The neighbors organized, gathered materials to construct sandbag levees, and worked side-by-side from Monday morning until the task was completed at nightfall. Reinforcements in the form of a small army of high school teen-agers and friends from dry areas pitched in.

"We've all gone from one house to the next," said Sanders' wife, Mildred. "We would work at our house, then go down and do everything we could to help someone else."

Warriner and his wife, Peggy, used pumps, mops and brooms to battle about 2 inches of water that had seeped through their levee and into their house during the night.

Despite hours without sleep, the Warriners still managed a smile as they sloshed across their submerged lawn and past a fishing boat docked in a neighbor's driveway to check on the Sanders' levee.

"Last night, when we finally gave in, I'd say we had 40 people in the house," Warriner said. "They were manning pumps, pushing mops and brooms and even using their hands to try and keep the water out."

Gloria Hirn, whose levee also failed, said her family kept busy during the night trying unsuccessfully to fight back the floodwaters inside her house.

Sanders said he thinks the reason his house stayed dry was a system he devised to pump water from behind his small levee before it reached the home, something his neighbors had not done.

Senate settles MX basing issue

Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — The Senate ended a decade-long fight over how to deploy the MX missile, voting 59-39 Wednesday to approve basing 100 of the powerful new rockets in reinforced Minuteman silos in Nebraska and Wyoming.

But while the bipartisan vote gave President Reagan a temporary victory in his fight to modernize the nation's land-based nuclear-armed missile force, it leaves in doubt whether Congress will approve the $22 billion to build and deploy MX. That issue will be debated when Congress comes back to work after the Memorial Day recess and takes up the first-year procurement funds for MX.

The Senate vote, following by one day the 239-186 approval in the House, provides the congressional acceptance of the MX basing mode that was required to release $625 million for engineering and design of the basing system and for a flight test of the missile.

As in the House debate, the MX was praised by its supporters as an essential step to improve the strategic missile force and to persuade the Soviet Union to negotiate a mutual reduction in nuclear missiles, and it was condemned by its opponents as a useless weapon that will trigger another dangerous cycle in the arms race.

The Senate Republican leadership urged the members to give the president the MX as a powerful "bargaining chip" in upcoming nuclear arms reduction talks.

"Without the credibility that a first-class nuclear defense affords this nation, the arms control efforts that we stand behind will simply not be productive," said Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan.

But Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., said the same arguments were presented 10 years ago when Congress aproved deployment of multiple warhead missiles and instead of getting arms reductions it led to more deadly Soviet missiles.

But what may have carried the day was the argument put forth by Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., at the close of his detailed support for MX. Nunn warned his colleagues that "the likely political results of killing the MX" would be a breakdown in arms control negotiations which the Reagan administration would blame on those who voted against the missile.

"If this becomes the dominant theme of the 1984 campaign, our nation would be continuing a pattern of disarray in our arms control efforts," Nunn said. "Can we build a bipartisan approach to arms control that has continuity if the MX is killed? I seriously doubt it."

Nunn was one of 12 Democrats — all from the South and West — who voted for the MX basing resolution. Six moderate Republicans, mostly from the Northeast, joined 33 Democrats in voting against it.

Three of the four Democratic presidential candidates in the Senate argued and voted against the MX, virtually ensuring the weapon system will be an issue in next year's presidential contest if, as expected, Mr. Reagan runs for re-election.

Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., who has made nuclear disarmament a major theme of his campaign, said "the most tangible result of proceeding with the MX is to fuel the recklessly dangerous and costly arms race."

Rejecting the supporters' argument that approval of MX is necessary to get arms control talks going, Cranston said, "It is a cruel hoax to try to sell a weapons system that has no military or strategic justification as an arms control effort."

Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, who is normally more hawkish on defense issues than the other Democratic presidential candidates, warned the Senate that "SALT is dead if we pass the president's MX program."

The second Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty (SALT II) negotiated by former President Jimmy Carter but never ratified by the Senate, restricts the United States and the Soviet Union to deploy only one major nuclear missile system, Glenn reminded them. But, the MX basing decision includes plans to develop a small, highly mobile single-warhead missile, called Midgetman, to follow the 10-warhead MX.

By agreeing to build two missiles, Glenn said, the administration will be defying SALT II even though it has agreed to abide by it.

Several of the MX supporters pointed out that SALT II would expire in 1985, before the Midgetman would be developed.

The third presidential candidate, Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., said the basing mode being accepted "puts the most attractive target in the most vulnerable location," will divert money and effort from development of a less vulnerable mobile missile and "is a certain step toward nuclear war."

After the resolution passed, Hart said "the war on the MX has not been won, it is far from over."

Sen. Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., the remaining presidential candidate in the Senate, was not present for the MX vote but he too is an opponent of the missile.

Reagan encourages U.S.-Soviet reduction of nuclear weapons

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, praising congressional approval of the nuclear-tipped MX missile, says the Soviet Union and the United States should take a "first giant step" toward reducing nuclear arms levels when the two superpowers resume talks next month.

Reagan's invitation to the Soviets on Wednesday came hours after the Senate voted 59-39 to free the Pentagon to spend $625 million to develop and test the MX. A day earlier, the House granted similar approval by a 239-186 margin.

The victory is in sharp contrast to a White House defeat on the MX last December, when Congress refused to permit the Pentagon to go ahead with procurement of the first five of the 100 planned MX weapons.

The House will vote again on the MX resolution today because of a technicality. The version which passed the Senate carries a different number than the House resolution. They must be exactly the same.

Reagan's MX victory came from a combination of the traditional reluctance of Congress to vote against major defense programs backed by the White House and renewed pledges by Reagan to work harder for nuclear arms control.

The president promised to review the U.S. proposals before the Strategic Arms Reduction Talks reopen June 8 in Geneva. The negotiations, aimed at reducing long-range nuclear weapons, are separate from a second set of arms control talks between the two superpowers aimed at reducing atomic arms in Europe.

"I salute Republican and Democratic members of the House and Senate who have made a decisive, historic contribution to our nation's security," Reagan said in a statement.

"I urge the Soviets to join us at Geneva in taking that first giant step: an equitable and verifiable agreement that substantially reduces the level of nuclear arsenals on both sides," Reagan said.

Reagan has publicly endorsed the findings of a White House commission that recommended putting 100 MX weapons into existing Minuteman silos near Cheyenne, Wyo., along with development of a small, single-warhead missile and a new direction in U.S. arms control that aims at limiting warheads rather than launchers.

MX critics argued that Reagan wasn't committed to arms control, that he only wanted the new missile. They also said it made no sense to put a new weapon into Minuteman silos that the Pentagon admits would be vulnerable to a Soviet first strike.

But missile supporters said the MX is needed to force Soviet concessions.

"If we are going to do anything about arms control, we have to go ahead with the MX," said Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash.

"By killing MX, you make it much less feasible that we can reach an agreement limiting warheads," warned Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga.

Civil rights groups criticize Reagan's personnel changes

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is being criticized by major civil rights groups after replacing three members of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission with conservatives who share his opposition to racial quotas and school busing.

The nominees, meeting with reporters at the White House on Wednesday, emphasized their independence repeatedly.

But Rabbi Murray Saltzman, who was dismissed from the commission, said, "I'm saddened and grieved and even on the verge of outrage in terms of what the administration is doing to the commission."

Thomas I. Atkins, acting executive director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said the move was a vindictive attempt to "purge from the government ... people who have a commitment to effective civil rights enforcement and protection."

No one at the White House would say for the record why Reagan made the move. One White House aide, who spoke only on condition that he not be named, said: "He just wanted fresh blood there. Clearly, the president chose them because they are distinguished and because he feels comfortable with them."

If the nominees, all Democrats, win Senate confirmation, Reagan will have replaced all but one of the commission's six members since he took office.

The lone holdover would be Jill Ruckelshaus, wife of William Ruckelshaus, the president's new Environmental Protection Agency administrator.

Reagan attempted to replace several commissioners last year, including Mrs. Ruckelshaus, who was appointed by President Carter. But the Senate refused to confirm the nominations.

The new nominees, all white, are:

—Morris B. Abram, 64, of New York, a lawyer and former president of Brandeis University. He would succeed Mary Frances Berry, a black who was assistant secretary of education in the Carter administration.

—John H. Bunzel, 59, senior research fellow at Stanford University's Hoover Institution and former president of San Jose State University in California. He would succeed Blandina Cardenas Ramirez, a Hispanic educator from San Antonio, Texas, appointed by Carter.

—Robert A. Destro, 32, assistant professor at Catholic University's Columbus Law School. He would succeed Rabbi Saltzman of Baltimore, who was appointed by President Ford. Destro was nominated by Reagan last year but was never confirmed by the Senate.

In a telephone interview, Saltzman said Reagan's action was a "really unprecedented invasion of the integrity of the commission" because of "the assumption that the commission should reflect the political ideology of the president."

Economy puts Tigua Indian tribe in serious doubt

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — It has been nearly seven years since one Tigua Indian married another. For a tribe already diluted by three centuries of close ties and marriages to non-Indians, the rarity of Tigua weddings is ominous.

Eva Candelaria, who lives at the Tigua housing project in the El Paso suburb of Ysleta, says Margie Munoz and Arturo Gomez were the last Tiguas to intermarry. She can't remember another Tigua wedding in the past decade.

Now, "everybody's marrying Mexicans," Mrs. Candelaria said.

To Mrs. Candelaria and other Tiguas, the tribe's future is in serious doubt. The threat is not immediate - 687 Tiguas are certified by the tribe with bloodlines of at least one-eighth Tigua, the minimum required for certification.

But most of the full-blood and half-blood Tiguas are elderly members of the tribe. Many of their children and grandchildren have married non-Indians.

"It seems we are fading away, and we feel bad about it because there are no more Indians," said Mrs. Candelaria, a 42-year-old mother of three. "I don't know what's going to happen to (the reservation) because all the kids are leaving.

"I take my tribe and my people very seriously, and I wish they would stay and help their people."

Before the federal government declared the Tiguas a tribe in 1968 - one of two recognized tribes in Texas - high unemployment and poverty were harsh facts of life that immobilized but unified the small Tigua enclave in Ysleta's barrio.

The Alabama-Coushattas tribe near Livingston in southeast Texas is the second Indian group to be officially recognized by the state.

Recognition of the Tiguas led to the construction of a 113-unit housing project, commercial businesses at the reservation and an emphasis on education — new facts of life that spell opportunity, particularly for younger tribe members.

Those opportunities added irony and fuel to many Tiguas' fears. For the tribe to continue both legally and culturally, Tiguas must marry Tiguas.

"Ours is the only marriage in the tribe that I can think of," said Margie Munoz Gomez, 38, a one-eighth Tigua who didn't know of her Indian ancestry until after the tribe's recognition.

Several years later, she took a job at the Tigua Cultural Center where she met Arturo Gomez, her husband-to-be who is three-quarters Tigua. Mrs. Gomez has had one daughter by her present husband, and five children by a previous marriage.

"Eventually, the tribe is going to be wiped out because not very many Indians marry into the tribe," she said.

Festival brings cities together

JESSUP, Pa. (AP) — The St. Ubaldo Race of the Saints originated eight centuries ago in Gubbio, Italy, and it now has a second home in this northeastern Pennsylvania coal town.

The festival, in which three teams of men shoulder heavy platforms and dash through narrow, crowd-lined streets, honors St. Ubaldo, the bishop who saved Gubbio from pillaging hordes in the 12th century.

Immigrants who left their homeland to toil in the anthracite mines near Scranton have duplicated the festival here, forming a cultural bridge that spans nearly 4,500 miles.

"The knot has been tied. We are sister cities," says Carole Coccodrilli, 42, an organizer of the sponsoring St. Ubaldo Society.

"We are preserving a tradition. My mother and father came from Gubbio. That's where my roots, my heritage are," she adds. "It's cemented new ties, created new friends and allowed families to find their families."

THE CULTURAL bond led to the start of the "Gubbio Express," an air excursion that Miss Coccodrilli organized in 1977 to take 142 Americans to Italy. Contingents from Jessup and Gubbio now make visits to each other's festival in alternating years.

In addition, the children of Gubbio gave miniature gift statues to Jessup children, who hold their own race the day after the adult festival.

Ubaldo became a saint in 1192, 30 years after his death, because he persuaded the invading Frederick I to spare his town in Italy's lush green region.

Because the barbarians had sacked neighboring villages, Ubaldo's intercession was considered a miracle. Townspeople honored him by parading his statue through the streets.

THE FESTIVAL evolved into a race involving the wealthy who carried St. Ubaldo and contingents hoisting statues of St. George, who represents middle class merchants, and St. Anthony, who represents peasant farmers.

In the late 1800s, a number of Gubbio residents came to America and settled here. They held the festival from 1910 through 1952, when it died out because interest waned.

But the race was revived in 1976 as part of the town's 100th birthday and America's bicentennial. It has been held on Memorial Day weekend ever since, with crowds more than doubling the town's population of 4,500.

"All these fellows came from Gubbio to work in the mines," says Guerino Renzini, an officer in the St. Ubaldo Society.

"That tradition was in their hearts. You might say it came over on the boat with their luggage. They never forgot that. And they got the whole thing going.

"It brings everybody together. Everybody's Italian for the weekend. Everybody eats sausage and peppers. And I get to be a little kid again," says Renzini.

A new generation of racers is perpetuating the event.

White: Legislators making poor excuses

AUSTIN (AP) — Lawmakers can complain about not having enough time, or enough information, but they are only making poor excuses for not raising taxes to fund a pay hike for teachers, Gov. Mark White says.

"They have the time if they had the inclination. They will give you a whole list of excuses — we were too late, it was too difficult — but those are merely excuses for their failure to take action," White said at his regular weekly news conference Wednesday.

White's proposals died in a House committee Monday night, and now there are only five days left in the session. But White, who hinted Tuesday at the possibility of a special session, said he has still not given up hope to get his plan passed during the regular session.

"I think there's still time available. If they want to, they can," White said.

In the House, Speaker Gib Lewis said, "I guess I'll have to say again — there isn't (time). My stand has been from the first — I'm opposed to any tax bill."

Rep. Stan Schlueter, D-Killeen, chairman of the committee that voted against the tax package, has said he was willing to work with White on a tax bill if the governor calls a special session.

"I'm delighted to have his support," White said. "I don't know why we have to wait. Now is the time to act."

White said he had met with House leaders Monday before revealing his latest plan to hike taxes, and tried to mold his plan to their desires, only to see the plan fail a few hours later in Schlueter's committee.

House rejects move to change DWI legislation

AUSTIN (AP) — The House has rejected a move to change a provision of a DWI bill making a person automatically guilty if he scores a certain level on a blood alcohol test — despite warnings the provision may be unconstitutional.

The resolution failed 45-89 Wednesday night.

The Senate passed 16-14 the resolution directing a House-Senate conference committee on the DWI bill to change the section covering intoxilyzer tests, but the House's rejection means that the panel cannot change the provision in either version of the bill.

Sen. Bob Glasgow, D-Stephenville, who is a former prosecutor, said the bill, sponsored in the Senate by Bill Sarpalius, D-Hereford, changes current law to make a person automatically guilty if he scores 0.1 percent on an intoxilyzer test, which measures blood alcohol content.

Glasgow said under current law, a person is presumed to have been drunk if he scores 0.1 percent, but he can still present witnesses to rebut the test results when his case goes to trial.

The bill's House sponsor, Rep. Terral Smith, successfully argued that the resolution would weaken the measure.

But Glasgow said in the Senate that the proposed change would mean the accused is determined to be guilty before a trial.

"I think DWI penalties need to be raised," said Glasgow, "but I think this provision is abusive and I can't morally support it."

Glasgow said he would vote for the DWI bill even if the provision is not changed, however.

Sarpalius argued that his bill is no different from DWI laws in 34 other states and that "per se" guilt has been upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court.

"Whether or not it is constitutional, I don't think is the question," said Sarpalius.

Glasgow said because the "per se" guilt provision was in both the House and Senate measures, the conference committee cannot change it

Texas rancher testifies he spent $26,000 on horses

MARSHALL (AP) — Charges that an East Texas rancher mistreated wild horses obtained through a federal relocation program were considered by a jury for about an hour before the panel was ordered to return today.

Joe Corbett, of Pittsburg, testified Wednesday that he spent about $26,000 caring for the animals and was unaware of their poor health until a sheriff appeared at his home with an arrest warrant.

Corbett is charged with inhumane treatment and abandonment of three wild horses he obtained through the Bureau of Land Management "Adopt-a-Horse" program.

Testifying in his own defense Wednesday, Corbett said the horses, relocated from Nevada, did not adapt well to the East Texas climate, despite his investment of about $26,000 in their transportation, feeding and medical care.

Corbett said he did not provide hay for the horses because they had access to about 2,300 acres of ungrazed bottom land near his 238-acre ranch.

House passes $550 million water package

AUSTIN (AP) — A $550 million package of water bonds for local water development, conservation and flood control projects has been approved by the House, which added a provision under which the state would guarantee local water bonds.

Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, amended a Senate-passed proposed constitutional amendment that would have established $300 million in new water bonds to finance projects.

Craddick's amendment added a $250 million program under which local water bonds would be backed by the state.

Both measures were part of a Senate-approved water "package," parts of which have been held up in Craddick's House Natural Resources Committee.

Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, a sponsor of the package, had charged that Craddick had held up passage of important parts of the package because Montford led the fight to bust the college board appointment of Ernest Angelo of Midland.

Craddick said there are not enough votes to get the measures, including a controversial bill to guarantee preservation of coastal estuaries, out of the committee.

Rep. John Gavin, D-Wichita Falls, who carried the Senate water bond measure on the floor of the House, accepted Craddick's floor amendment to the Senate measure.

"The water package seems to be in terrible, terrible shape," he said. "If they (the Senate) concur, at least a little more of the package will be in place."

Gavin said he did not think the compromise would be accepted by the Senate "until and if the entire package is put back together."

The gulf estuaries bill was designed to aid passage of the constitutional amendments which must be approved by Texas voters.

Previous water amendments have fared poorly in the Gulf Coast area because of concern that upstream reservoirs would damage production of shellfish in the coast estuaries.

The bill would have guaranteed that projects funded under the package would not adversely affect estuaries.

Border's problems listed, analyzed

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The list of economic woes of those living along the Mexican border has been broadened considerably as a result of conferences held in the Lower Rio Grande Valley in recent days by Sen. John G. Tower, R., Texas and Under Secretary of Commerce Robert Dederick, Tower's office disclosed Wednesday.

Dederick heads the Southwest Border States Working group, commissioned by the White House to look into the effects on U.S. citizens of devaluation of the Mexican peso. He plans another trip to the border soon. Eventually he will go the full length of the border to California. He must report to the White House by June 20.

Tower's office said, in addition to the plight of local business men, Dederick will study the livestock industry, the bridge owners and operators, the shrimp industry of the Gulf of Mexico, the flood ways and water distribution, and the need for school buildings.

Meanwhile, the House Small Business committee has run into a printing jam in Congress because of the large number of bills introduced. It has written an Omnibus bill to provide direct loans at lower interest to businessmen but so far has not been able to get its report printed. Border citizens are eager to get their hands on this report.

The bill shows that loans will be available in border states for economic opportunity, energy, pollution, minority small business, and general business. Immediate participation loans will be offered as well as guaranteed loans.

Debt limit increased

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate has given final congressional approval to legislation increasing the national debt limit to nearly $1.4 trillion, allowing the government to borrow another $99 billion through the end of September to pay its bills.

By a 51-41 vote Wednesday evening, the Senate agreed to a version of the bill the House passed last week on a voice vote and sent the measure to President Reagan. His signature is expected soon.

Passage of the legislation cleared the way for Congress to leave town today for a Memorial Day recess. The House will return June 1 and the Senate will return June 6.

While there was virtually no debate on the issue of raising the debt limit, final Senate action came only after Republican leaders who control the chamber assured Democrats that there would be an opportunity next month to vote on limiting the personal income tax rate cut scheduled for this summer.

Without such assurances, Democrats threatened to try to change the measure or attach complicating amendments.

But they agreed to give up their efforts after House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., assured them the Democratic-controlled House will approve legislation next month limiting the income tax cut.

Democrats have virtualy abandoned their bid to repeal the tax cut, and now are concentrating their efforts on capping its benefits to upper-income taxpayers, both as a means of reducing federal deficits and of stressing their claim that Reagan's tax cut program is unfair to middle and lower-income taxpayers.

Senate Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia said O'Neill told him the House bill would probably limit an individual's tax break to $700, a level that would affect a one wage-earner family of four with an income above $45,000.

The Reagan administration requested the debt limit increase saying the current ceiling of $1.29 trillion will be reached at the end of the month. Wednesday's daily Treasury statement showed the debt at $1,288,945,000,000 — just 0.08 percent under the limit.

Treasury officials said the requested increase in the debt limit to $1.389 trillion will be enough to meet government borrowing needs through the end of the fiscal year, Sept. 30.

Without an increase, the government would be left without borrowing authority and face defaulting on its securities. In addition, there would be disruptions in other obligations, such as Social Security benefit checks and the federal payroll.

Candy given to needy

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Life may be a little sweeter for the city's poor during the next few days.

Raiston Purina company has donated 1,800 cases of malted milk balls to the Someone Cares Mission, which distributes donated food to the destitute each day.

Rev. Dan Tobey, who runs the downtown mission, said the candy, sold commercially as Whoppers, had been purchased by the St. Louis-based feed conglomerate for a promotion. But the company still had two 40-foot truckloads remaining at the end of the campaign and donated it to Tobey's operation on Tuesday.

State asked to inspect tunnels

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post New Service

WASHINGTON — The National Transportation Safety Board, citing three drivers as the probable cause of last year's fiery Caldecott Tunnel disaster in Oakland, today urged California to ban passing or lane changes in all road tunnels in the state.

The federal board, issuing its final report on the April 7, 1982 tragedy which claimed seven lives, also recommended that the California Department of Transportation conduct extensive safety inspections at all highway tunnels throughout the state.

It also endorsed banning the movement of hazardous materials through vehicular tunnels "where the relative risks of the tunnel route are higher than alternate routes."

In recommending that the state outlaw switching lanes inside a tunnel, the panel said that 13 of the 39 accidents within the tunnel between 1979 and 1981 involved vechiles changing lanes.

It also noted that most other states bar such driving practices.

The board, while disagreeing with the California Highway Patrol in reconstructing events inside the Caldecott tunnel on the night of the accident, blamed "a combination of events involving" three drivers as the probable cause of the tragedy.

Janice Ferris, 34, of San Leandro lost control of her Honda as she headed west into the tunnel between Oakland and Orinda. "Erratic driving by the intoxicated driver" was blamed for creating an obstacle inside the major artery.

The "inattention of the truckdriver ... caused his rig to hit the car," the board concluded about the actions of Melvyn Metzker, 45, of Sacramento, who was driving a gasoline truck.

John Dykes, 54, of Oakland was criticized for the handling of his A.C. Transit bus. The panel said he tried to pass the gasoline truck "too rapidly" and was unable to avoid the stalled car.

Ferris and Dykes both died in the disaster. Metzker was able to escape before his burning gas truck sent a fireball through the tunnel, killing motorists blocked by the wreckage. The board also criticized safety procedures and equipment at the tunnel.

"Had this tunnel been equipped with internal television monitors and with traffic signals at the entrance and in the tunnel, the tunnel operator could have activated warning signs to halt the bus and the tank truck before they collided with the Honda," the report concluded.

"In the absence of traffic surveillance and communication equipment, the tunnel crew was hampered in obtaining information and was unable to provide warnings or advice to motorists during the critical three minutes following the accident."

After the accident, other drivers continued to enter the tunnel, unaware of what had happened. The exploding fireball from the tanker did not occur until some three minutes after the initial crash.

The findings only will provide further ammunition for at least eight lawsuits that have been filed by numerous litigants.

The recommendations by the federal safety board include urging the state to:

–"Prohibit passing and lane changes in vehicular tunnels in California."

–Evaluate and revise equipment requirements and emergency procedures at the tunnel "to provide early warning of an emergency to motorists in the event of a life-threatening emergency."

–"Develop a state-wide emergency response plan and train tunnel employes in all phases of emergency operations, including smoke and toxic fumes management and immediate emergency response notification." It called for practice drills at such sites.

–Provide "easily identificable exit markings" in the Caldecott tunnel.

–In conjunction with local authorities "survey all vehicular tunnels and upgrade, where necessary, tunnel traffic controls, communication systems, firefighting equipment and towing capabilities.

One board member, G.H. Patrick Bursley, agreed with the recommendations but issued a dissenting statement which expanded upon the on the probable cause.

World Economic Summit...frugal

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — When the White House set about creating an international economic summit conference it wanted to show world leaders "what makes us different" — so it eliminated pomp and ceremony and set a tone that is distinctly American, if not downright frugal.

That's why White House officials searching for a meeting site chose Williamsburg, a 284-year-old time capsule of what this land was like when it made the historic shift from colonies of Britain to United States of America.

After the opulence of Versailles, where the French staged the 1982 summit to the grumbles of their taxpayers, the Reagan administration wanted to hold down costs for this one.

And President Reagan said he wanted to get these annual meetings of the world's leading industrial nations back to basics, with more time for heads of government to talk.

All three of these goals blend in Williamsburg, a clapboard and brick village where George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Patrick Henry, James Madison, John Marshall and other famous men learned their politics and played midwife to a new nation.

Like the founding fathers, the heads of seven nations and the European Common Market will ride in horse-drawn carriages, stroll dusty streets from business to luncheon, relax in fine gardens, breathe fresh mown hay on the morning breeze, live in ancient houses and sit on antique chairs.

"It gives them a little touch of our history," said Michael McManus, the chief summit planner. "Williamsburg gives us an idea of where we came from. It's a statement of this country and its basic principles and what makes us different from some other countries in the world."

Basically, the leaders of Great Britain, France, Canada, Japan, Italy, West Germany and the Common Market will be immersed in democracy, simplicity and Americana from the moment they join Reagan here on Saturday for the three-day meeting.

The austerity of the event won't match those who once denounced taxation without representation on these same grounds, but McManus hopes to hold costs to the taxpayer to under $7 million, $1 million less than the French are thought to have spent a year ago.

Frills and corners have been cut everywhere. The government is renting the entire historic area for 3½ days, but the contract is at least $500,000 less than what it will cost the Colonial Williamsburg Foundation to give up the income from the 7,000 tourists it would get daily on a Memorial Day weekend.

In return, the foundation hopes the worldwide news coverage will attract more foreign visitors. Currently, it draws about 50,000 foreigners a year.

The Reagan administration also is holding down costs in much the same way it redecorated the White House — by inducing private contributions with the lure of future tax deductions.

Gifts from the private sector, estimated to be worth at least $1 million, include more than 2,000 pounds of chicken for the press center commissary, unlimited beer from three breweries, free soda pop, almonds, hazel nuts and pistachios from California, peanuts from Virginia, hot dogs, hamburgers and ice cream.

Reagan is taking the modesty and frugality theme to new lengths. For example, the big state dinner will be informal with guests in business suits. No elaborate entertainment is planned for the weekend, only dinner music.

Even the diplomatic gifts which President and Mrs. Reagan will give their official guests may set new standards for restraint. Instead of the handwrought silver pieces the Reagans took to Europe on their trip to the summit last year, the visiting heads of government will receive commercially produced porcelain bowls engraved with Williamsburg scenes, better in quality perhaps but the same in spirit as those tourists buy here by the hundreds.

"They don't want anything that appears the least bit elaborate," said one Williamsburg official, who didn't want his name used but who expressed disdain at White House aversion to using some of the facility's finer offerings.

"They wouldn't even use our carriage for the arrival ceremony," this official grumbled. "They are using our landau," an open vehicle as opposed to the stately closed carriage.

Most of the official residences are relatively modest clapboard structures, occupied in their prime by ministers, merchants and other ordinary townsmen.

As for Reagan's goal of informality and frankness, Williamsburg could not be better. Most meeting places are within easy amble of each guest's quarters.

For the first time ever, there will be at least one meeting where only the eight world leaders will be present. Even the translators will be in other rooms working through electronic links.

The routine also provides an unusual amount of free time. All the colonial craftsmen and women who weave, spin, hammer and mill for ordinary tourists will be on hand to perform for heads of state.

Man wants all marbles

LONDON (AP) — Greece Culture Minister Melina Mercouri ended a four-day visit to London by pleading with the British government to give back the Elgin Marbles, Greece's renowned 5th century B.C. sculptures.

"This is our history, this is our soul," she said Wednesday after she inspected the white marble relics in the British Museum. They were taken from the Parthenon in Athens by the 7th earl of Elgin between 1801 and 1812.

"You must understand us," she said. "You must love us. We have fought with you in the second war. Give them back and we will be proud of you. Give them back and they will be in good hands."

At times appearing near tears as she ran her fingers over the sculptures, Miss Mercouri called on the British government to make a "sentimental gesture ... a political gesture," by returning the statues.

They depict scores of charging horsemen and include a frieze showing a procession in honor of the goddess Athena.

Miss Mercouri reiterated that the Greek government would not formally request the return of the marbles until after the June 9 British general election.

Munich workers choose their year, hours

MUNICH, West Germany (AP) — The West German department store Ludwig Beck am Rathauseck has taken the concept of flexible working hours one step beyond — to flexiyears.

The result is a radical new approach to work schedules allowing employees to work pretty much when they please during a year as long as they put in an agreed upon minimum number of hours.

Store managers say the system works well. Sales by the staff of 800 increased an average of 9 percent when the system was implemented in 1978. The next year sales went up 6 percent, the store said.

The program is known in-house as the Individual Working Time system.

Helga Ranacher, who runs the program at Beck's, said it was developed after a store study comparing the frequency of customer visits to the availability of sales personnel.

"We soon discovered our entire staff was in the store at 8:30 a.m., but there were no customers," she said.

Since the introduction of individual working time, Miss Ranacher said, employee attendance is generally highest during the time of peak customer visits.

Since the store pays a premium on sales in addition to basic salary, most clerks want to be in the store during rush hours.

"Most employees who used to work the legal limit of 173 hours a month and who cut their working hours to 160 managed to maintain their income by increasing sales and premiums," Miss Ranacher said.

The system works like this: a contract is drawn between the store and employee, stipulating the minimum number of hours to be worked each year.

Actual working time is arranged by each department on a weekly basis. Each employee has a time account controlled by a computer that operates like a bank account.

"It can be overdrawn or stuffed with extra hours," Miss Ranacher said. But salaries remain the same regardless of the number of hours worked.

Some employees accumulate enough credit hours to take a three-month vacation. Others work only a few hours each day to supplement the family income.

All personnel are required to be on duty during the Christmas holiday sales.

An interesting side effect is that the number of full-time employees has dropped from 65 percent to 35 percent since the program began.

Beck employee Erwin Bauer, 52, said he decided to cut his working hours to 120 a month when the new system came into effect.

"Now I can do a lot of things other people envy me for before the pension shock at age 65," he said.

Miss Ranacher said that since the system allows employees to use one to two hours per month — depending on total working time — for personal business, absenteeism also has dropped.

The time off can come in handy in West Germany, where businesses close early during the week, have half days on Saturdays and are closed on Sunday.

The flexiyear concept has proved especially helpful to women trying to work and run households.

"If it weren't for IAZ (Individual Working time) I couldn't work at all because I have to take care of my 6-year-old son," said Susanne Kuerzinger, who has been at Beck's since 1981.

Unions, however, are opposed to the system, contending it is only a device to save money for the store owners. Unions also see the system as potentially dangerous to plans by some trade unions to press for a 35-hour work week next year.

Even so, flexiyears is firmly entrenched at Beck's. When employees were asked after a year whether they wanted to do away with the system, "there was a storm of protest," Miss Ranacher said.

The woman executive said flexiyears will be introduced at the firm's New York branch, Beck's of Munich on Fifth Avenue, later this year.

Money authorized for missiles

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House is sending the Senate legislation that authorizes more money for the Pershing 2 nuclear missile and the food stamp program but less money for senators on the speechmaking circuit.

Also contained in the $4.8 billion supplemental appropriations bill passed 309-92 Wednesday by the House are a moratorium on coal leases by the Interior Department, $49 million to restore the Capitol's long-deteriorating West Front and $12 million for stepped-up federal health research on AIDS — acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Opponents of the Pershing 2 mustered more words than support in their unsuccessful effort to strip the bill of $453.6 million that will allow continued production of the intermediate-range missile the Reagan administration plans to begin deploying in West Germany in December.

The money represented funds that Congress denied last December after the initial two test flights failed. Since then, the Pershing 2 has been successfully tested eight times.

The supplemental appropriations bill for the year ending Sept. 30 contains $359 million less than President Reagan requested. The bulk of the money — almost $3 billion — is targeted for mandatory federal programs that would otherwise run out of funds by the end of fiscal 1983.

These appropriations include $1.03 billion for food stamps; $615 million for unemployment insurance; $342 for federal employee retirement; and $186 million for victims of black lung disease.

The item expected to have the toughest time in the Senate has nothing to do with the federal budget but a lot to do with the budgets of individual senators.

The House approved language that would limit a senator's outside earnings from speechmaking and writing to 30 percent of the annual Senate salary of $60,662. The House, whose members are paid $69,800 a year, has such a limit.

In a congressional deal last year, the House took a pay raise and the Senate opted instead to have no limit on outside earnings from so-called honoraria — usually $1,000 or $2,000 for speaking to business and labor groups.

The House Democratic Study Group says that the average senator last year collected $27,500 in honoraria, compared to $5,900 for the average representative.

There was no House debate Wednesday on the honoraria issue, but members spent two hours talking about something that has plagued Congress for two decades — how to save the Capitol's West Front, the only part of the original building still visible from the outside.

Reversing the House Appropriations Committee, the House voted 325-86 to spend $49 million to restore the crumbling sandstone blocks on the West Front. The committee had urged a $71 million plan to encase the West Front with a new marble wing containing space for offices and a members-only restaurant.

The House vote for restoration means the West Front will probably get the attention lawmakers have been urging since 1962. Previously, the House and Senate have deadlocked over the problem, with the Senate opposing House efforts to extend, rather than restore, the front.

In a reaction to last year's selling of coal leases by Interior Secretary James Watt, the House approved language prohibiting any more such sales through Sept. 30.

Congressional analysts have charged that the auctions in Montana and Wyoming brought the Treasure $100 million less than the coal reserves are worth and will allow mining interests to reap "windfall profits." The Interior Department has disputed these charges.

The moratorium, if accepted by the Senate, would affect at least one coal sale — the Fort Union tract along the Montana-North Dakota border.

Plan provides incentives for teachers

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — "Not one state system pays one public school teacher one penny more for doing a good job of teaching," said Gov. Lamar Alexander as he described Tennessee's controversial plan to provide monetary rewards for outstanding teachers.

The proposal, called the "Master Teacher" program, is part of Alexander's 10-point plan to improve public education and rid it, as he asserts, of "too much mediocrity." The plan would be supported by an increase in Tennessee's sales tax.

Under the plan, the state would give all teachers a 20 percent salary increase over the 42 month period beginning next January. Tenured teachers would get an additonal $1,000 increase.

Those teachers who are selected, on the basis of outstanding performance, to become "Senior Teachers" or "Master Teachers" would get $1,000 to $6,000 more each year and would sign 10, 11 or 12-month contracts so that they could participate in special educational projects in the off months.

Basically, the program would provide special money incentives for teachers based on their work in the classroom and not just on seniority.

"If they teach well," said Alexander, "they will get a lot more money."

Although the program is opposed by the powerful National Education Association, Lamar told a group of reporters, the American Federation of Teachers is taking a serious look at it. He said, "we've turned our schools over to the teachers' union more than we ought to."

In addition, he said, he anticipates that next year "as many as a dozen governors" will advance some kind of system to reward public school teachers on the basis of merit.

Among the governors who have taken the leadership in trying to improve education, he explained, are James Hunt, D-N.C., Pierre du Pont, R-Del., Scottt Matheson, D-Utah, and Charles Robb, D-Va. William Winter, D-Miss, has also attracted considerable notice for his crusade to improve that state's dismal education record.

Alexander, a Republican, also suggested that President Reagan meet with the nation's governors to discuss the crisis in public education, which has been defined in a series of recent reports, including one commissioned by Reagan himself.

One of the reports, prepared by the 20th Century Fund, proposed the "Master Teacher" program.

Although he is opposed to further federal involvement in educational matters, Alexander said that for about $5 billion in federal aid the "Master Teacher" program could be adopted in every state.

Alexander said he has no quarrel with Reagan's proposal to abolish the federal Department of Education, but explained that he is opposed to the president's call for tuition tax credits for parents who send their youngsters to private schools.

The tuition tax credit plan, he contended, "sends a wrong signal at a time when we're trying to improve public education."

'Reagan wants civil rights advice'

Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — President Reagan wants new people on the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights because its advice to him has not been relevant "to the mood of the country," commission Chairman Clarence M. Pendleton Jr. said Tuesday.

The White House has run into opposition among civil rights groups and their supporters in Congress by planning to replace three of the panel's six members. Two others, including Pendleton, were named to the commission by Mr. Reagan a year ago.

The commission was created 26 years ago by Congress to study civil rights problems and recommend solutions to Congress and the White House. Its members serve at the pleasure of the president.

Expected to be nominated within days are Morris Abram, a New York City lawyer and former president of Brandeis University; John Bunzel, a senior research fellow at Stanford University's Hoover Institution on War, Revolution and Peace; and Robert A. Destro, assistant professor at Catholic University Law School in Washington D.C.

Their presence on the commission, Pendleton believes, would give him a working majority capable of directing the panel's studies toward areas that have been neglected by the commission.

Court limits inmate's lawsuits

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — The federal court in Oregon has limited to six the number of lawsuits it will accept without fee from prison inmate Harry Franklin, a convicted burglar.

U.S. District Judge James Burns dismissed Wednesday 61 suits filed by the inmate, whom he likened to the boy who cried "wolf."

Among the suits dismissed was one in which Franklin contended the sprinkling of prison lawns made it difficult for him to find a dry place to lie down.

"A litigant like Franklin who inundates the court with a sea of senseless solipsisms should not be surprised if he suffers the same fate as the boy who cried 'wolf.'" Burns said.

Food smuggler faces 22 years

NEW YORK (AP) — Two longshoremen convicted of smuggling $15,000 worth of gourmet foods from the Queen Elizabeth II ocean liner face up to 22 years in prison and $35,000 in fines, says a prosecutor.

Edward J. Foley, 54, of Red Bank, N.J., and John J. Edler, 47, of North Bergen, N.J., were found guilty Tuesday of smuggling Russian caviar, lobster tails, Alaska king crab meat and other delicacies from the liner, said Assistant U.S. Attorney Peter B. Sobol.

The two men were caught with the food last Nov. 14 after they returned to a deserted pier where they had been loading and unloading the liner earlier in the day. They face sentencing June 29, Sobol said.

Baby sitter to plead innocent

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — A baby sitter will plead innocent to a charge of second-degree murder in the death of a 7½-month-old boy whose liver was transplanted into an Illinois girl, her lawyer said.

Donna Marie Catiller, 24, was released on $25,000 bond and ordered to stay with her parents after her indictment Wednesday.

Mrs. Catiller was arrested May 10 and charged with the murder of Daniel Sakellarios, whose liver was transplanted into 11-month-old Amy Hardin. The police report alleged she killed Daniel "in a fit of anger" by slamming his head on a kitchen table.

"The grand jury has really only heard one side," said the woman's lawyer, Jeffery Talley.

Indian people receive victory

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A federal judge's decision to permanently block the U.S. Forest Service from completing a road through a sacred Indian area of Six Rivers National Forest is a "fantastic victory for Indian people," says a tribal member.

"We've been celebrating," said Christopher Peters, a Yurok, one of four tribes that said the road would interfere with their worship.

U.S. District Judge Stanley Weigel on Wednesday ruled construction would violate the First Amendment religious rights of the Indian tribes, as well as the National Environmental Protection Act, the Wilderness Act and other laws.

States want to ban together

CLEVELAND (AP) — Leaders of Great Lakes states have agreed that their states should band together to seek tourist dollars, instead of trying to lure industries from one another.

Governors from Indiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Ohio and Wisconsin and the lieutenant governor of Illinois adopted a resolution forming a task force to determine whether regional promotion of the Great Lakes area is feasible.

"We ought to be talking about a joint effort to promote recreation," Wisconsin Gov. Anthony Earl said during a two-day Great Lakes Governors Economic Summit which concluded Wednesday. "Surely we've not achieved our full potential."

Tax cuts don't help everyone

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal tax cuts don't help the average taxpayer because they are being offset by increases in state and local levies forced by the continued recession, the chairman of the nation's governors say.

"I would not be surprised if the net effect on most taxpayers was a wash with local tax increases offsetting federal decreases," Gov. Scott Matheson told a Brookings Institution budget conference on Wednesday.

Man wants book taken from shelf

MIAMI (AP) — A Dade County commissioner does not want to kill the goose that laid the golden egg, but would like to see one version of that story removed from library shelves because he says it is anti-Semitic.

"This is a personal slur against me as a Jew and the entire ethnic Jewish community," Barry Schreiber said, referring to the untitled nursery rhyme of the goose that laid the golden egg.

Schreiber has asked that the edition be removed from the Metro-Dade Public Library. He said he objects to these lines in a 1975 reprint of "Mother Goose Nursery Rhymes," illustrated by the late Arthur Rackham:

"Jack sold his gold egg
"To a rogue of a Jew,
"Who cheated him out of
"The half of his due."

The verse continues with events after Jack sold the golden egg and went "a-courting":

"The Jew and the squire
"Came behind his back
"And began to belabor
"The sides of poor Jack."

Jack loses the golden egg in the sea, but gets it back again.

"The Jew got the goose
"Which he vowed he would kill,
"Resolving at once
"His pockets to fill."

"The words just jump off the paper," Schreiber said Tuesday. "Any child who reads that will get an interpretation that a Jew is cast in a negative light as money-hungry."

Schreiber sent a memo to County Manager Merrett Stierheim asking that the book be removed from circulation.

"We will be in touch with the library director. We will tell him to review this matter and report back immediately," said Dewey Knight, an assistant county manager.

Anne Boegen, the library's coordinator of children's books, said the verse is contained only in one of several versions of Mother Goose on library shelves.

Democrats want to sue Republican group

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democrats are threatening to sue the Republican National Committee if the GOP goes ahead with plans to flood a Democratic Party telethon with calls defending President Reagan and his policies.

"The scheme you have undertaken is regretably reminiscent of Watergate-era dirty tricks," Democratic Party Chairman Charles T. Manatt said Wednesday in a letter to Frank Fahrenkopf, the Republican Party chairman.

"The charge we have attempted to organize, to clog the phones and delay or somehow defeat their telethon is totally false," Fahrenkopf said in a speech at the National Press Club. The GOP chairman spoke shortly after receiving Manatt's letter.

What touched off the telethon flap was a cablegram Fahrenkopf sent last week to Republican contributors which said: "Urgently need your personal help to combat Democrat smear campaign aimed at President Reagan and entire Republican Party."

The cablegram urged supporters of the president to watch the 17-hour telethon that begins Saturday night and runs until Sunday afternoon and use the toll-free telephone numbers flashed on the screen to call in and "tell them what you think of their unfair attacks on our party."

Fahrenkopf said he hoped the appeal would generate "a spontaneous outpouring of Americans who want to let the Democrats know how they feel."

Comparing the effort to Watergate, said Fahrenkopf was "not only unforgivable, but in bad taste and perhaps an insult to all of us."

Manatt wrote that, "We intend to hold the Republican National Committee, its officers and its members fully responsible for all additional expenses we incur and any damages to the telethon effort which result from your cablegram."

The Democratic Party chairman referred to "the possibility of litigation" and asked Fahrenkopf to preserve "all documents, memoranda, notes and correspondence" pertaining to the GOP counterattack.

Mortimer writes for TV

NEW YORK (AP) — John Mortimer, famous British playwright and novelist, doesn't watch much American television, but he does like "Hill Street Blues." He also appreciates the fact that the NBC series is done without network interference.

As any writer for American TV will say, once the multilayered network bureaucracy finishes modifying a work, it might be unrecognizable. That doesn't happen to the classy "Hill Street Blues" because the producers extracted a hands-off guarantee in return for working for NBC.

And television butchery can't happen to Mortimer, whose "Rumpole of the Bailey" mystery series and "Brideshead Revisited" adaptation were seen on public television. Both programs were produced in England, and a new set of "Rumpole" stories will be shown here next year.

"Nobody can change one word," says Mortimer, whose TV work recently was screened at New York's Museum of Broadcasting. "I'm sure directors find it a bit frustrating."

Mortimer doesn't say this out of arrogance but with a proprietary interest in his words. "My works are literary and depend on dialogue," he says. "They're immutable for TV. The sounds have a certain rhythm in your head — and you're either born with that ability or not.

"The great secret," he adds, "is working with people who will treat you well."

In England, writers have more say in the television adaptation of their work, including casting. Mortimer has even more influence because he's successful enough to demand total control. This contrasts with his brief and unhappy experience in Hollywood on his screenplay for "John and Mary," a theatrical film starring Dustin Hoffman.

"I don't like that people can change things without knowing the characters, and I object to the idea that people can write in group meetings," says Mortimer. "It's ludicrous to think that five people can sit down together and produce a work of art."

Mortimer, whose autobiographical "A Voyage Round My Father" will be seen on the syndicated Mobil Showcase Network in early 1984, says his writing skill was nurtured by reading poetry and prose to his father, a barrister who became blind late in life. "When I ran out of things to read to him, I wrote them."

Opening lead: King of ♠.

There are many card combinations we recognize and tend to play automatically. That can be an expensive pastime.

The bidding was normal. West's one-level overcall is beyond reproach and North certainly had the values to introduce his suit at the two-level. The final contract was eminently sound.

West attacked with three rounds of spades, declarer ruffing the last. Since West was long in spades, it seemed likely that he would be the one to be short in hearts. So declarer continued with the ace of hearts and a heart to the king. That would have allowed him to pick up the trump suit via a finesse had East started with four to the jack. Unfortunately, it was West who held the four trumps, and the contract could no longer be made. He had to rely on the club finesse, and when that lost declarer still had to concede a trump trick for down one.

Had South's ten of trumps been a low card instead, he would probably have spotted the winning line. South can afford to lose a trump trick in addition to two spades as long as he can bring in the diamond suit.

With that in mind, there is a simple way to handle the trump situation. Declarer should cash the ace-queen of hearts. If both defenders follow, declarer draws the last trump and then runs five diamond tricks and the ace of clubs to score an overtrick.

When East shows out on the second trump, declarer abandons that suit and starts to run the diamonds immediately, sluffing clubs from his hand should West refuse to ruff. West can ruff whenever he pleases, but he cannot harm declarer. South can win any return (he ruffs a spade in hand), draw the last trump by crossing to the king and at the same time provide himself with the entry to dummy to cash the remaining diamonds to dispose of his club losers.

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? Worth an apple

With President Reagan bemoaning the plight of public education and Gov. Mark White trying to sell Texans on the idea that higher salaries is one way to obtain and retain qualified teachers, the topic of how Midland's students are performing academically seems to have taken a back seat.

Well now the word is out and it's encouraging. Results of the California Achievement Test show Midland students improving every year.

In fact, said Superintendent Dr. Joseph P. Baressi, "Without exception, in every grade level and in every subtest, we have equaled or bettered last year's test." Midland students actually scored higher than the national norms.

The name of the game in the classroom is improvement. What the California Achievement Test score results tell Midland Independent School District officials — and what they should tell all Midlanders — is that the city's young people are being properly prepared for what undoubtedly will be a challenging future. Students who took the test this year did as good as or better than the ones who took it last year and that's been the trend for awhile. It's the kind of trend we want to see continue.

When you look at public education across the nation you realize President Reagan is correct. Education as a whole faces difficult times ahead. But in Midland youngsters are being taught properly and it shows up in test results. That doesn't mean the quality of local education cannot be improved; there's always room for improvement.

But these test results certainly qualify local teachers and school officials for an apple. Good job!

Williamsburg's eve

On the eve of the Williamsburg summit meeting of leaders of seven free world nations over the Memorial Day weekend, the American economy is a center of interest for the six other participating nations. What happens here has much to do with fiscal developments in Canada, Great Britain, West Germany, France, Italy and Japan.

Leaders in those lands know as well as we do that our nation's economy perennially has been a political football. The party in power inevitably loses no opportunity to take credit for positive developments. Just as routinely the party out of power blames the administration for all the soft spots.

It has been that way much of the time during the 18-month recession, and during the past few months of recovery. Initially the recovery was greeted with much skepticism from Democrats as well as within the Republican party. In recent weeks, however, two noticeable trends have underscored the firmness of the foundation of that recovery.

(1) — More and more economists, on both sides of the political fence, are agreeing that there are solid signs of an upturn. (2) — Fewer and fewer critics are using the disparaging term, "Reaganomics," to ridicule the success of the administration's efforts.

One of the latest upbeat utterances has come from the president of the National Association of Business Economists, an organization of 300 members that has just completed a survey. Taking notes of that survey, Edgar R. Fiedler, an economist at New York's nonprofit Conference Board, said:

"Evidence of optimism is found in company reports of rising demand, employment, capital investments and profit margins."

What he is saying, based on the central theme of the survey by the business economists, is that the recovery is now looking brighter and broader than it did at the first of the year. That is good news for us as well as the six other nations about to convene in Williamsburg, for the economic destinies of all seven are intertwined.

Another View:

Just throwing money

If throwing money at education had been a formula that worked, public schools in the District of Columbia would rank among the best in the nation.

Although it has the country's fourth highest cost (with an average annual per-pupil expenditure of $3,070), the District of Columbia school system is embarrassed because only 54.6 percent of the potential graduates in the class of 1981 received diplomas. Most of the remaining 43.4 percent were dropouts. That puts the system in last place behind all 50 states, according to the National Center for Education Statistics.

Following the scathing report by the President's Commission on Excellence in Education, Congress appears ready to throw more money at the problem even though that approach has failed. For more than 15 years, Congress increased funding for public education while standardized test scores and academic performance dipped.

Two bills pending in Congress seek to provide funds to train new math and science teachers. The Heritage Foundation points out that Congress is going through a futile exercise.

Capitol Hill is searching for competent teachers from a pool of increasingly incompetent education majors. It also is pushing ahead blindly by continuing to fund and enforce federal mandates that have crippled education in the first place.

"Taxpayer funds should not be given to those responsible for America's present education predicament," it is argued by Eileen Gardner, a foundation analyst. "Rather, Congress should correct the basic faults of the education system."

The presidential panel avoided accusing anyone of wrecking the public school system. However, another report by the 20th Century Fund heaps the blame on the federal government, the federal courts and the National Education Association.

The NEA, the giant union that represents more than 80 percent of the country's teachers, appears to give a higher priority to political power than to quality education, the Heritage report charges. The NEA consistently has opposed any steps proposed to measure teacher effectiveness and provide financial rewards to those who excel.

If public education is to get back on the right track, all sides — the schools, Congress and NEA — will have to mend their errant ways that brought about their downfall.

ART BUCHWALD

Get career that'll make bank proud!

"Mr. Robert Parrish, Magna Cum Laude, will please step forward ... I now present you with your Bachelor of Arts degree."

"Thank you, sir."

(Applause from graduating class of Millard Fillmore University.)

"Mr. Parrish, may I have a word with you?"

"I don't believe I know you."

"I'm from the First National Thomas Jefferson Bank. According to our records you borrowed $25,890 to complete your education at 17 percent interest. We were wondering when you were going to start paying us back."

Art Buchwald

"I haven't even taken off my robe yet. Can't we talk about this tomorrow?"

"We don't know where we'll find you tomorrow. That's why the bank is now sending our people to graduations. We thought we could work out a schedule of payments. Do you have a job, Mr. Parrish?"

"No, I don't have a job."

"What kind of a position were you planning to look for?"

"I'm going to be a social worker."

"Are you trying to tell me that you believe you can pay back $25,890 plus 17 percent interest on a social worker's salary?"

"That's what I studied for. I always wanted to do something to help my fellow men and women."

"The bank considers it out of the question. It would take you 20 years to pay back your student loan."

"But the country needs social workers. There are a lot of people out there hurting and in trouble. I know the pay is lousy but there are other things in life besides making a lot of money."

"I am sure there is a need for your profession. But why not let the people who don't owe student loans pursue it?"

"What do you want me to do?"

"Join a large corporation. I'm certain with your scholastic record you could be earning $75,000 a year in no time."

"I don't want to work for a large corporation. If I did I would have gone to business school."

"If you knew you were going to be a social worker why did you apply for a student loan?"

"Because I couldn't afford to go to college without one. No one asked me when I applied for the money what I intended to be when I graduated."

"We assumed that you would go into something that paid well, so you could honor your loan. It was your duty to level with us, so we would know from the start you were a bad risk."

"Well, it's too late now. I spent the money on my education and I'm going to devote my life to social work. I'll pay you back when I can."

"I think you ought to know, Mr. Parrish, that student loans are guaranteed by the U.S. government and they are taking a very harsh view of people who are not making good on them."

"What you're saying is the government is only interested in students who are going to make enough money to pay back their loans? What happens to the kids who want to be teachers and nurses, or work in the inner cities? America needs them, too."

"Possibly, but that isn't our concern, is it? We loaned you the money in good faith. If I go back to the bank and tell them that you're going into social work, we'll have to report it to Washington, and the next thing you know, you will be dealing with the FBI. Please, for your sake, reconsider what you want to do for a living. I understand, if you play your cards right, you can rise very fast in the telephone company."

"No dice. The bank is stuck with a social worker whether you people like it or not."

"If that's your last word, Mr. Parrish, you'll have to excuse me. I see a graduate over there who owes us $24,000 and wants to become a church minister. That's the last straw."

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

High-technology sales an issue

WASHINGTON — A secret debate is raging at the highest levels of the Reagan administration. It points up the classic contradictions in recent Republican policies: the desire to promote American business interests vs. the demands of a Rock-of-Gibraltar defense posture.

Jack Anderson

The debate concerns the sale of high-technology equipment to mainland China. Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige and the president's science adviser, George Keyworth, favor an expansion of this trade. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and his Under Secretary for policy, Dr. Fred Ikle, don't want to sell the Chinese any technology of potential military value.

The Chinese, of course, are seeking as much high-tech stuff as they can buy, and complain that the administration isn't cooperating. Sources tell me the Chinese have already been allowed to buy scientific technology that has enhanced their military capability.

Under secret presidential directives, the Chinese communists cannot buy nuclear weapons and delivery systems, electronic and anti-submarine warfare technology or goods that will help them in intelligence gathering.

Baldrige and Keyworth, both of whom have just returned from China, seem determined to let the Peking regime buy as much as it wants in those vital areas.

Secret White House documents govern the present China trade policy. They are considered highly sensitive because of the peculiar nature of U.S.-Chinese relations, but my associate Dale Van Atta has obtained the most important ones.

The "Presidential Directive on Export Control Policy to China," issued on June 4, 1981, focused on so-called dual-use exports — items that are ostensibly intended for peaceful purposes but which can also be used by the military. The directive was intended to allow the sale of technology to China "at significantly higher technical levels than previously, albeit somewhat below those approved for other friendly non-allied nations."

The directive laid out the formula to govern such sales: two times the level of exports to the Soviet Union before its invasion of Afghanistan, when high-tech exports were banned.

But the "two-times" formula was regarded by the business community as not only inexact but too restrictive for the kinds of high-tech goods their Chinese customer was clamoring for. They found a sympathetic listener in Baldrige.

The result was a secret presidential memorandum of May 6, 1982, signed for the president by his national security adviser, William Clark, titled, "Export Policy for the People's Republic of China."

"The President expects prompt and full implementation of his more liberal export-control policy, since we do not want to send mixed signals to the Chinese regarding our intent," Clark wrote. And he conceded that the two-times rule had been difficult to apply.

So Clark laid down four rules to clarify the new policy:

— High-tech exports should be "at technical levels significantly above those for the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe... (which would) imply the presumption of acceptable national security risk."

— The two-times formula should be interpreted to mean approval for any sale "unless circumstances apply which entail major risks to national security, i.e. exports which would make a direct and demonstrable contribution to Chinese capabilities" in the forbidden military areas.

— If the Pentagon or CIA recommend denial of an export license, "lower risk substitutes will be suggested, where feasible."

— The licensing process must be speeded up.

Baldrige wasn't satisfied. He wanted to be able to OK sale of some things within the forbidden areas — and to set a formula higher than the two-times rule. He suggested sales of anything in any amount "except where the export poses a major risk to U.S. national security."

The Pentagon is obviously nervous about the "major risk" yardstick, and Baldrige hasn't won out — yet.

UNDER THE DOME: Sen. Peter Wilson, R-Calif., had this comment on the movie "Tootsie," which features Dustin Hoffman playing a woman: "The rest of the country thinks it's just a good movie, but in San Francisco it's considered to be a documentary."

— Members of Congress can buy Capitol Historical Society calendars for 57 cents apiece, instead of the $1.50 tourists pay. They ordered more than a million this year — 1,000 for each senator and 2,500 for each member of the House. Cost to the taxpayers for the "discount" purchase: $648,375.

GEORGE F. WILL

Inertia threatening ship of state

WASHINGTON — When Sen. William Armstrong (R-Colo.) first glimpsed the housing bill emerging from the committee on which he sits, he may have been frozen, like Lot's wife who, glancing back at Sodom, became a pillar of salt. But soon Armstrong was like Horatio at the bridge, filling 200 column inches of the Congressional Record with rhetorical roadblocks to the bill.

George F. Will

The bill, he says, creates seven new programs and adds billions to prospective deficits — as though $1.2 trillion over five years is not enough. It is less than two-thirds as expensive as the housing bill from the House of Representatives, but would be a reckless addition to an almost unnoticed mountain of federal commitments.

Thirteen million Americans are already receiving federal housing assistance, which concerns nearly 5.7 million housing units. Now the Senate bill calls for outlays of $11.9 billion above the president's five-year request, and that figure radically understates real expenditures.

For example, the bill would institute housing vouchers. While it calls for funds for 80,000 persons, it stipulates criteria by which many millions of persons are eligible. This is guaranteed to generate political pressure for funding sufficient to serve all eligible persons. After all, only randomness, not justice, can govern the allocation of a benefit among 80,000 of many millions of eligible persons. So the voucher system would have a potential for exponential growth comparable to that of the food-stamp program.

The bill would provide rental rehabilitation and development grants, many of which could go to non-needy persons. It would provide mortgage-default assistance, again not tightly targeted to the needy. By raising subsidy levels, the bill would increase by $1.3 billion annually the cost of subsidizing the current number of units. The bill would do nothing to correct the wage practices that allowed the Chicago housing authority to pay, in one ten-month period, 216 elevator mechanics overtime — in addition to regular pay — of $3 million. One person, who must never have slept, collected $80,000 in overtime.

Since 1937, $363 billion has been committed — note that word — to federal subsidization of housing. Ninety percent of that has been obligated in the last eight years. And all but $90 billion remains to be spent. That is, the government has obligated itself to spend $263 billion over the next 40 years — and that is without a new bill enriching the menu.

And there is more to the iceberg toward which we are steaming. The $263 billion does not include the value of tax advantages often associated with housing programs, or the funding that will be needed to finance deficits in housing projects already provided.

According to the administration's budget assumptions, the government will acquire commitments for another $25.9 billion in spending for another 234,000 housing units. This, by the way, is in addition to the additional $22 billion for 212,000 units coming from the Farmers Home Administration.

With that in mind, note this: In Reagan's first year — the year of the Reagan Revolution, AKA the Reagan Terror — 52 percent of total budget savings came from housing programs. But Armstrong says that housing outlays have increased under Reagan, will continue to increase, and will include one million additional subsidized units during Reagan's first term.

From whence did this bill come? From places ruled by Republicans. Most of the bill consists of administration proposals. (The administration can truthfully say that some of its new programs — for example, the vouchers — would replace more expensive programs.) And the Republican leaders of the Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee cannot saddle and bridle all Republican members.

The chairman of the housing subcommittee is John Tower (R-Tex.), who only looks even slightly liberal when standing next to the chairman of the full committee, Jake Garn (R-Utah), who is about as conservative as you would expect the person to be who is senior senator from the state that gave Reagan his highest percentage. Indeed, under Garn the committee has achieved larger proportionate reductions in its area of responsibility than any other authorizing committee of Congress. But such committee members as John Heinz (R-Pa.), Alfonse D'Amato (R-N.Y.) and Paula Hawkins (R-Fla.) have large urban constituencies and hence do not vote as conservatively as they talk.

The Senate housing bill is a timely reminder of four things: how overblown is the rhetoric — not least Ronald Reagan's rhetoric — about the "Reagan Revolution"; how unlike monoliths our parties still are; how heavily the future has been mortgaged by past undertakings; and how, as with an ocean liner, there is much momentum to the ship of state. Ask not what siren song is luring the ship toward the rocks. There is no song, only inertia.

Striking civil guard police stage a protest on the roof of police communications headquarters in Lima, Peru. A three-day state of emergency has been declared.

Emergency order issued in Lima

LIMA, Peru (AP) — President Fernando Belaunde has declared a three-day state of emergency in Lima and ordered troops into the streets to prevent looting as thousands of paramilitary civil guard police went on strike.

The striking guards demanded higher pay, shorter working hours and restoration of the death penalty for anyone killing a policeman.

The national radio broadcast the president's emergency order Wednesday, saying civil rights were suspended, including freedom from search and seizure without a warrant. The order is effective in Lima and the adjoining port of Callao.

The government said it took the action because normal police service had been affected by some "undisciplined" civil guards.

Shortly after the announcement, pedestrians disappeared from Lima's downtown streets and some shops closed early.

"There's no guarantee of protection now," said the owner of a restaurant near the presidential palace.

There were no reports of the strike spreading beyond the capital, where traffic police joined the walkout just before the evening rush hour.

Interior Minister Luis Percovich told reporters the strike was confined to one guard station adjoining the national police headquarters which was taken over by the strikers, but a spokesman for the contingent of guards at that post said two other branches — National Police and the Republican Guard — were supporting the strike.

Reports from various guard posts put the number of guardsmen on strike at more than 7,000. The guard has 42,000 members nationwide.

Troops in armored personnel carriers took up positions near Lima shopping centers to prevent looting, and other units were reported moving into the capital from the armored division headquarters.

The interior minister appealed to the strikers to return to work "to show their loe for their fatherland, institutions and responsibility to society," and warned that "this lack of discipline will be treated by each police force command."

He said he was willing to talk with a delegation of strikers about their grievances in his office.

A spokesman for the strikers said they were earning about $35 a month, and leaflets passed out by some strikers demanded that pay be increased up to $411 per month. Percovich told reporters the government was studying the idea of changing the basic salary of the guards to $150 monthly, the total amount now received with all fringe benefits.

Some guards said they want their work day of 10 to 12 hours reduced, "more humane treatment" from their officers and restoration of the death penalty — abolished by Belaunde — for anyone killing a policeman.

The strikers also contended the government is sending young guardsmen with only six months of training to fight leftist guerrillas in Ayacucho state of southern Peru. More than 1,000 people have been killed since Belaunde ordered troops there last Dec. 29.

The state of emergency suspending civil rights began shortly after midday Wednesday, 12 hours after the civil guards refused to go on duty.

Syria says war would 'cost dearly'

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Syria said today it would never support the Lebanese-Israeli troop-withdrawal pact despite pressure from moderate Arabs and warned Israel that a new war would "cost the aggressors very dearly."

The Beirut independent newspaper An-Nahar said the Lebanese government has been warned of possible attempts to assassinate President Amin Gemayel to rekindle civil conflicts that could lead to partitioning Lebanon.

Syria's position on the withdrawal accord was outlined by government-controlled newspapers a day after Syrian warplanes fired missiles at Israeli jets over Lebanon for the first time since last summer's war.

Syrian President Hafez Assad's Soviet-backed government issued no comment on the Israeli communique reporting the aerial encounter Wednesday or a Lebanese police claim that a ground-to-air Syrian missile downed a pilotless Israeli reconnaissance drone in east Lebanon's Bekaa Valley.

Israel has denied the Lebanese report. But the Israeli military command said the Syrian attack on the jets was "the most serious in a chain of worsening Syrian violations."

Israeli media said today that the Syrian-Israeli cease-fire line in Lebanon was "very tense" following the aerial encounter, but that analysts did not think Syria was about to launch a full-scale war.

Israeli anxiety was evident from the prominent publicity given to reports from Washington that Syria was preparing a large-scale maneuver near the Golan Heights, which Israel captured from Syria in 1967 and annexed in 1981. The reports said Soviet personnel would take part in the exercise.

The Syrian al-Baath newspaper of Assad's ruling Socialist Baath Party said in an editorial broadcast over state radio in Damascus that Syria would not give in to pressures to change its position on the U.S.-sponsored withdrawal accord.

Moderate Arab states such as Jordan and Egypt support the pact, and Saudi Arabia reportedly has been pressuring Syria to relax its hard stand. The accord does not become effective without agreement from Syria and the Palestine Liberation Organization to withdraw their forces from Lebanon.

"Syria will not back down ... It is prepared to shoulder the responsibility of its position," al-Baath said.

"Those who are laboring under the illusion that they can find a way out of their impasse through military aggression must understand this aggression will not be a picnic or a limited battle," it said. "It will be an all-out conflict that will cost the aggressors very dearly."

The editorial coincided with a reiteration by Assad that Syria would withdraw its 40,000 troops from Lebanon only when Israel pulls out its estimated 25,000-man occupation army unconditionally.

Syrian state radio said Assad made this assertion to former Lebanese Prime Minister Rashid Karami during a meeting in Damascus Wednesday to discuss ways of blocking the May 17 withdrawal accord between Lebanon and Israel.

Karami, a Moslem, is one of the most influential Lebanese politicians in Syrian-controlled north Lebanon.

An-Nahar said the reported threat to assassinate Gemayel was based on information from "important arab and international quarters," but it did not name them.

"The safety of government leaders, especially the president, is threatened," wrote columnist Sarkis Naoum, known to be close to Gemayel. "This threat comes from those who reject Lebanon and want to partition it and dominate it."

Syria contends the Israeli-Lebanese agreement violates Lebanese sovereignty because it would allow Israeli troops to help patrol a security zone in southern Lebanon. The Syrians also claim the pact endangers their security and wrecks Arab solidarity against Israel.

Purple Heart medals awarded to five wounded peacekeepers

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Gen. Robert H. Barrow, commandant of the U.S. Marine Corps, pinned Purple Heart medals on five wounded Marine peacekeepers today and praised the contingent for a "magnificent performance."

The four-star general, dressed in a green camouflage uniform, spoke to a group of about 200 leathernecks after the medal ceremony on the tarmac of a parking lot near the Marine command post at Beirut's international airport.

"Your presence is in part symbolic of our country's interest and will, clear evidence that we are here to help this beleaguered nation of Lebanon re-establish itself so it can express its sovereignty over the entire country," said Barrow, who arrived from Washington on a military transport plane.

Barrow, speaking to the Marines as they kneeled and stood in a circle around him, said that they had support at home for their mission and that initial doubts had been overcome about their presence in Lebanon.

"While others were expressing anxiety on the way Marines would perform in Beirut, I knew you would do just as you have done," said Barrow.

The commandant, who is retiring after 41 years in the Marine Corps, told the troops he had come "to tell you on the eve of my departing how much your contribution has meant to what our country is trying to do."

Barrow has been Marine commandant since July 1, 1979, and served in World War II, Korea and Vietnam.

He said he had "come out to express my admiration for your magnificent performance. What you have done here far outweighs your numbers."

Barrow exchanged salutes with the troops and then got in a jeep and toured Marine positions. He returns to Washington Friday.

Soviets desert U.S. Embassy building project

MOSCOW (AP) — About 300 Soviet workers have walked off the job at the new U.S. Embassy construction site, halting the $120 million project that already has been plagued with persistent delays.

American supervisors said the workers abandoned the sprawling project Monday to protest alleged health dangers from X-rays used to check for structural flaws in the eight-story office building, the central structure in the heavily guarded complex.

Marine guards at the site confirmed the Soviets had stopped work Monday and said four Soviet women supervisors wearing red arm bands were stationed at the main gate to prevent workers from entering the project. Later, the guards said, some workers were allowed in to remove tools, trucks and bulldozers.

The site is 300 yards long and 150 yards wide, directly behind the current embassy building, a converted 10-story yellow stucco apartment block on Moscow's busy Ring Boulevard.

Embassy spokesman Rick Ruth confirmed the walkout began Monday and said it was a dispute over terms of a contract. Ruth said he could not elaborate because of the delicate nature of the dispute.

"As far as we are concerned, there are no health hazards at the site," the spokesman said.

The Soviet agency responsible for providing workers for the project could not be reached immediately for comment.

American supervisors, however, said they did not expect the Soviet workers to return until June 20 when the X-ray inspection of the support columns is completed.

"It's nothing but politics," said one of the Americans, asking to remain anonymous. "There's more radiation coming from the sun than there is from that equipment," said another.

Soviet diplomats have already moved into a new complex in Washington, as provided by a reciprocal agreement.

The walkout was the most recent in a series of snags that have delayed the project. There have been frequent complaints about difficulties with Soviet construction workers.

Action on aid to Nicaragua stalled in Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Foreign Affairs Committee, which last week appeared ready to call for a halt to undercover U.S. aid to Nicaraguan rebels, is now bogged down in inconclusive talks about a compromise with President Reagan on the issue.

"We are a long way from reaching an agreement," Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., said after a round of discussions with fellow Democrats on the committee Wednesday.

Hamilton said he would continue negotiations with his colleagues for at least a day or two before reporting back to Thomas O. Enders, assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs.

Enders outlined an administration proposal for a compromise to Hamilton at a meeting on Monday, committee sources said.

"We are talking all kinds of ideas at this point," Hamilton said. But he added, "The basic concept is that the Congress would have the right to disapprove the covert action at some point of time and in some manner."

When and how this right would be exercised was unclear, and different versions of the agreement drew different responses.

Rep. Clement Zablocki, D-Wis., chairman of the committee, said a draft that he saw, giving the president two chances to justify the covert action before Congress could finally veto it, "is not satisfactory to me."

On the other hand, Rep. Michael Barnes, D-Md., chairman of the subcommittee on inter-American affairs, said, "From what I see of the so-called compromise so far, it seems very unlikely that the administration would buy it."

And Rep. Gerry E. Studds, D-Mass., said, "I would be astonished if something on that subject could be agreeable both to President Reagan and to a majority of the members on our side."

Before the compromise was proposed the committee was considering a plan by Zablocki and Rep. Edward Boland, D-Mass., chairman of the House Intelligence Committee, calling for an end to covert action in Nicaragua.

The Zablocki-Boland plan would substitute $80 million in aid to friendly Central American governments to help them halt the arms that the administration charges are flowing through leftist-ruled Nicaragua to left-wing guerrillas in El Salvador.

This proposal was approved May 3 by a party-line vote of the Intelligence Committee and was expected to be endorsed by a similar vote in the Foreign Affairs panel when it met on May 19.

Action was delayed by an argument over whether to consider the matter in open session, as Republicans wanted, or in closed session as favored by the Democrats. Democrats said the debate would have to involve classified data, and Republicans replied this was a "smokescreen" to avoid public scrutiny.

The issue is a politically sensitive one. Reagan, in an address to a joint session of Congress April 27, called for a bipartisan effort to halt communist advances in Central America and asked, "Who among us would wish to bear responsibility for failing to meet our shared obligation?"

"My belief is the administration doesn't want a party-line vote," said Hamilton. "Neither do we. We would prefer to work it out on a bipartisan basis."

Rep. Dante Fascell, D-Fla., said he, too, favored a bipartisan approach, but Studds said, "I am sick of that word.

Rescuers still searching Nile for survivors of ferry sinking

ABU SIMBEL, Egypt (AP) — Helicopters, police boats and scuba divers combed the mucky Nile River today, looking for hundreds of missing passengers from a ferry that sank and drowned at least 48 people in the crocodile-infested water.

The ferry caught fire and burned Wednesday near this southern Egyptian town, forcing the 627 people aboard to dive overboard, scramble for life jackets or go down with the boat. Most were Sudanese and Egyptians.

Those who dodged the crocodiles and made it ashore risked getting stung by poisonous scorpions that infested the shore of Lake Nasser, an artificially enlarged stretch of the Nile about 150 miles south of the winter resort Aswan. The ferry sank about 700 yards from the western shore.

Gen. Mohammed Youssef Ahmed, chief of the rescue operation, told reporters late Wednesday that more than 300 people survived, and 48 drowned bodies had been found. He said several other bodies were found severely burned, but he could not provide figures. The rest of the passengers remained unaccounted for.

Snipers kill Irish policeman

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Snipers killed a policeman guarding a security barrier early today, and in separate attack a gunman critically wounded a Roman Catholic milkman in a Protestant neighborhood, police said.

No group claimed responsibility for either attack. The police killing, however, was similar to other slayings claimed by the outlawed Irish Republican Army or one of its factions.

Police said without elaboration the other shooting also appeared to be sectarian-motivated. The 34-year-old milkman, who was not immediately identified, was shot while talking to the owner of a newspaper and magazine store in North Belfast.

Labor leaders ease demands

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Labor leaders have halved their demands for 50 percent wage increases to compensate for inflation and canceled a May 30 strike deadline, responding to an appeal by President Miguel de la Madrid.

The Mexican Labor Federation said Wednesday it telegrammed the new orders to its 21 affiliates, setting the new bargaining minimum at 25 percent.

Union leaders softened demands after de la Madrid made a nationwide appeal last week. The president also asked businessmen to settle for less profits.

De la Madrid said that Mexico's economic crisis, its worst in half a century, will take another three years of sacrifice and hard times before recovery sets in.

Walesa ordered to appear

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Police in Gdansk have ordered Lech Walesa to appear after his shift ends at the Lenin shipyards Friday, and the leader of the outlawed Solidarity union says he does not know why.

"The summons doesn't say what it is all about, but they usually don't summon people after working hours if it is a routine questioning," Walesa said Wednesday by telephone after he received the order.

Police have summoned the shipyard electrician repeatedly since the government freed him from martial-law internment last November.

Former Libyan monarch dies

King Idris

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Former King Idris of Libya, who created his nation by merging North African three provinces and later was overthrown by Moammar Khadafy, will be buried in the Moslem holy city of Medina, the Middle East News Agency said today.

Idris, who died in a Cairo hospital Wednesday at age 93, ruled Libya from 1951 until he was overthrown by Khadafy in a military coup in September 1969.

He had been in hospital since May 16 for treatment of old age ailments.The agency said his body was flown by a special Egyptian plane to the Saudi Arabian city where the Prophet Mohammed is buried more than 14 centuries ago.

A grandson of the founder of the Senussi Moslem sect, Idris was a descendant of the Prophet Mohammed.The agency said Idris wanted to be interred at Medina.

Koreans begin hunger strike

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Nineteen supporters of Kim Young-sam today were reported to have begun a hunger strike to demonstrate backing for the opposition political leader.

Sources said those taking part in the protest were angry that authorities had moved Kim forcibly Wednesday from his home to a Seoul hospital. Kim had begun a hunger strike on May 18 to support his call for democratic reforms.

The sources said the 19 taking part in the sympathy fast included 11 former legislators.

Five labeled communist spies

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — A government agency today announced the arrest of five South Koreans on charges of spying for communist North Korea.

The Agency for National Security Planning, formerly the Korean Central Intelligency Agency, said the five suspects had collected information on military installations and industrial plants in the south for Pyongyang since 1978.

They were arrested early this year, after being recruited by North Korean agents in Japan and Macao, an overseas territory in southeast China.

Baldrige returns from China

PEKING (AP) — U.S. Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige left for home today after announcing President Reagan has agreed to increase the flow of high technology to China within 60 days.

Baldrige told a news conference Wednesday that Reagan has issued new orders that China, which has complained bitterly about export controls, now receive higher technology more quickly than before.

Mel Hall's R&R means runs for Midland

Cubs extend losing streak, drop opener, 9-3, to Caps

BY TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

When it comes to Rest and Recreation or Rehabilitation, Midland isn't Hawaii, but as far as Mel Hall is concerned, it'll do just fine.

The one-time Midland Cub who is now with the Chicago Cubs was sent to Midland on an hour's notice Wednesday for five days to work his way back into shape.

John Cox of the Chicago front office called Mel and asked, "Hey, can you be on a plane to Midland in an hour?"

"He looks like he had never been away," said Manager Tom Harmon after Mel collected three hits in five trips after arriving late Wednesday afternoon. Hall indicated he hadn't lost his touch the first time up when he hit a 3-2 pitch over the centerfield fence.

"It didn't go over the doubledeck fence, but it would have if it had been straight away," Harmon said.

DESPITE HALL'S heroics, the Cubs lost their fourth straight, 9-3, to Shreveport in the opener of a six game series.

The series resumes tonight with a doubleheader at 6:30 p.m. Ron Richardson, 1-3, and Ray Soff, 2-0, will pitch for Midland.

It was again the big inning that did in the Cubs. This time it came against Darryl Banks, 6-3, who has been the staff's stopper all year. Darryl afflicted by an unseemly seige of wildness, never got out of the first inning, surrendering six runs as Rob Deer delivered a two-run single and Jesse Reid a two-run double in the rally.

Jim Gerlach came in to hold the Captains until the sixth when Sean Toerner hit a solo homer to left and, after a double by Bryan Snyder, Rob Reed one over the scoreboard in left, his 12th homer of the year. That made it 9-1.

"Banks just didn't have it tonight," Harmon said. "He couldn't get it together."

"Gerlach did a good job, although I had to stretch him out longer than I would have liked with a doubleheader coming up tomorrow," said Harmon. "And Tim Millner was getting his knuckler over, which made his fastball more effective."

Tim pitched one-hit ball for 3 2/3 innings.

SHREVEPORT'S Benjie Biggus notched his fifth win in six decisions, although five minutes before game time he was in the locker room getting ready to dress. The Captains thought it was a 7:30 p.m. game and were still on the field limbering up in leisurely fashion when they were reminded game time was five minutes away.

It didn't bother Benjie, who really scattered 10 hits. Only in the sixth when a walk, triple by Trey Brooks and single by Don Hyman did Midland manage more than one hit an inning.

"It seemed like we had people on base every inning," Harmon said.

HALL, WHO batted .319 with 24 homers for Midland in 1981 and batted .326 with 32 homers at Iowa last year, is ticketed to start for the Cubs in Chicago Monday, but Midland will get five days out of him.

"No, it didn't bother me to come back to Midland. It's better for me since I have a few days to get back my timing," Hall, who has had five days of batting practice, said. Mel suffered a muscle pull and then broke his thumb diving for a fly ball against Cincinnati and has been sidelined for a month after getting off to a good start in the National League.

"I don't feel I've lost any momemtum. I'll be back to where I was within a week or two and I will have missed all that bad weather," the 22-year-old from Port Byron, N.Y., declares.

"We open a 15-game homestand Monday" and Hall is looking forward to it. "Day baseball? Hey, I love Wrigley Field. The park was made for me."

Mel indicated as much right from the start. Called up to Chicago in 1981 after a banner season in Midland, Hall debuted with a home run. As a day time ball player, he carries a .283 average in his limited 34 game major league career. However, if Mel lives up to the expectations of GM Dallas Green, that will soon become a drop in the bucket.

Martin accused of fighting again

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Billy Martin, the fiery manager of the New York Yankees, is embroiled in yet another controversy. He maintains he's done nothing to deserve it.

A man who said he just wanted to buy Martin a beer claims that he was struck by the Yankee skipper and roughed up by Dom Scala, New York's bullpen catcher.

But the version of Martin and Scala as to what happened early Wednesday morning, a couple of hours after the Yankees had suffered a 7-6, 10-inning loss to the California Angels, was totally different.

Police said Wednesday that no charges have been filed, but that they are continuing their investigation of the incident that occurred at the Anaheim Hyatt Hotel bar.

Robin Olson, 27, of El Toro, Calif., filed a report with police alleging that he was hit in the face by Martin.

Olson also claimed that Scala banged his head to the floor several times in rapid succession while holding him by the hair.

"I told the police I didn't even touch the guy," Martin said after the Yankees' 7-1 loss to California Wednesday night. "The guy came up four or five times and wouldn't leave us alone and one of the coaches (Scala) collared him.

"Nothing happened as far as I'm concerned. The guy was just looking for publicity. He came behind me and it seemed like he threw something at me. We called the security guards and they threw the guy out of the place."

Scala said, "In a nutshell, I was trying to prevent an altercation. I would have done it for anybody on the team. The guy was hassling him (Martin) for about 20 minutes and he (Olson) was shouting obscenities. I didn't hit him or anything."

Olson gave The Associated Press his version of what happened nearly 24 hours later.

"I went over and I bought him a beer," he said. "I'm a real happy-go-lucky type person. I asked the bartender if he had Lite beer. I was excited, here was my opportunity to meet him. I thought it was going to be really nice."

Olson said he went over to Martin, who has appeared in several Lite beer commercials, and handed him the beer. Then, Olson said, Martin called him an abusive name, said something obscene about the beer and told him to get away from him in a profane manner.

"My bubble was just burst," said Olson. "I went back and asked him why he called me that name, what had I done. And he called me that again as I walked away.

"When I went to leave, I told him that I wasn't what he had called me. He motioned his friend (Scala), who grabbed me by the arm and walked me outside. He told me if I didn't leave him (Martin) alone he would take care of me.

"I walked back over to tell him (Martin) I was sorry. I tapped him on the shoulder, just to get his attention, I was behind him. He got on his knees to turn around in the booth, grabbed me and ripped my shirt at the collar and then took a swing at me.

"When he hit me it grazed me on the right cheek. At the same time Dom grabbed my hair and pulled me down to the floor and banged my head to the floor about 15 times."

Olson, who said he is involved with "real estate and finance," maintained he was not intoxicated, that he had three drinks at Anaheim Stadium during the game and one more at the hotel several hours later, at the time of the incident.

"I was sober, that wasn't what the problem was, the problem was the guy (Martin) was insulting."

Jack Jewell, 62, the security chief of the hotel, said he did not know if Martin had hit Olson.

"All I know is that I got the call on it about 1:35 a.m. and that there was a fight, so I went into the bar to take care of it," Jewell said.

Braves walk plank against Pirates

National league record set by the 'Pitts' staff

By The Associated Press

The Atlanta Braves walked all over Pittsburgh. They couldn't help it. The Pirates' pitchers wouldn't let them hit the ball.

Jim Bibby and Jimmy Winn helped put the Pirates in the record book Wednesday, issuing a record-tying seven consecutive walks in the third inning of the Braves' 6-0 victory.

"That never happened to me before," said Pirates Manager Chuck Tanner. "They were just trying to throw strikes. They weren't trying to walk them. That just shows you that everything happens in baseball."

But not necessarily very often. Joe Torre, the Braves' manager, poking fun at Rube Walker, his pitching coach, offered: "1909's the last I remember — and Rube caught it."

It was, in fact, 1909, when Washington's pitchers walked seven consecutive Chicago White Sox. The National League record for successive passes was six. It happened five times, most recently in 1944 when the New York Giants were the recipients of the Brooklyn Dodgers' wildness.

"I'm sure happy I was on this side as opposed to the other side," Torre observed.

Bibby started the Braves' string of two-out, third-inning passes by walking Dale Murphy, Bob Horner, Bob Watson and Glenn Hubbard. Winn then took over and walked Bruce Benedict, pitcher Craig McMurtry and Brett Butler before a second reliever, Larry Niemann, got Rafael Ramirez for the final out of the inning.

"I haven't seen anything like that except in Little League," said Watson, adding quickly: "I'm not saying they were Little League pitchers."

Bibby wasn't in a talkative mood, but Winn said: "I was just trying to pitch. I might have been trying to aim it a little bit. I couldn't throw a strike."

National League Roundup

Dodgers 6, Phillies 1

The Phillies got a run for a change, but that didn't change the outcome. They lost their fifth in a row as Burt Hooton and Dave Stewart of the Dodgers combined on a six-hitter.

The only hit that hurt was Gary Matthews' two-out homer in the eighth inning. It halted the Los Angeles pitchers' shutout string at 35 innings and the Philadelphia batters' scoreless streak at 42 2-3 innings.

Giants 7, Mets 6

Johnnie LeMaster's three-run homer in the fourth inning and Jack Clark's decisive solo shot in the seventh carried the Giants past the Mets, saddling Neil Allen with his first loss as a starting pitcher. Dave Kingman and George Foster homered for New York.

In the seventh inning, San Francisco Manager Frankl Robinson and his pitcher, Jim Barr, got into a shouting match on the field. Robinson started toward the mound to replace Barr. Instead of waiting for Robinson, Barr walked toward the dugout and flipped the ball toward his manager, who promptly grabbed the pitcher by the arm and spun him back to the mound, precipitating the argument.

Astros 1, Cubs 0

Mike Madden allowed one hit over six innings in his first big-league start and three relievers Frank LaCorte, Frank DiPino and Bill Dawley — preserved the shutout of the Cubs.

The Astros' only run came in the second inning on a passed ball by Chicago catcher Jody Davis after Ray Knight had doubled and taken third on a grounder.

Expos 2, Padres 0

Montreal's Steve Rogers pitched a seven-hitter for his sixth consecutive victory, his sixth complete game and his third shutout this season.

Chris Speier and Bryan Little hit RBI singles in the bottom of the sixth. In the top of the inning, right fielder Warren Cromartie fired a strike to the plate to nail Alan Wiggins of the Padres, trying to score from second on Juan Bonilla's single.

Cards 7, Reds 2

John Stuper survived early wildness and went on to pitch a five-hitter against Cincinnati for his second complete game. Ken Oberkfell had three hits and Darrell Porter a two-run homer for the Cardinals.

Some s'wish' Wilkes didn't have bad habit

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Some years ago, sitting in the press box at Dodger Stadium, I was leafing through a Sports Illustrated instructional book on the art of hitting. I carefully noted all the correct procedures, where to place your feet, how to hold the bat, where to slide your hips, the whole story on how to bat .350 in the big leagues.

And, then, I looked up at the guy at bat. He was doing everything wrong. He crouched. His feet were too close together. His hands were locked. He had the bat where he could never get it around on a hard slider and he seemed to be peering at the pitcher from a forest of arms and elbows.

The bat was held out there like a Roman candle. He was a sucker for a changeup. A patsy. He'd break his knees trying to get at a low curve. I felt sorry for him.

The hitter was Stan Musial.

I BRING THIS up because if you had a book on how to shoot free throws, how to throw in a 15-foot jumper, what to do with your wrists on a fallaway, you would have to look at No. 52 on the Los Angeles Lakers and close your eyes or bang yourself on the side of the head. You'd want to groan "No, no! Not that way! You'll never draw iron! You'll never get a shot off in this league!"

The shooter is Jamaal Wilkes. He's gotten a lot of shots off in this league. How about 12,000 of them? Fifty-three percent of them went in. Some years, 80 percent of his free throws went in.

"Silk," they call him because he hardly even rustles coming down the floor in basketball. His game plan is total invisibility. He doesn't attack, he infiltrates.

But, look at him now, as he draws back for a bank shot. The ball goes back up over his head in a figure eight. He positions it behind his right ear as if he were holding a bone back from a leaping dog. He seems to be trying to stuff it down his uniform in back of his neck. He flicks it off his ear like a guy brushing off a fly. Swish! Basket, Wilkes!

OBSERVE HIM on the foul line. No one is harassing him here. No sleight-of-hand is needed. He can adopt the standard pose of the classic foul shooter. Bend the knees slightly, hold the ball out in front of you, a slight mambo and then release the ball to the hoop. Not Jamaal. He winds the ball back behind his head, his tongue sometimes peeks out with effort — and he squirts the ball toward the basket. It's like watching an Indian firing a gun under the belly of his horse. To do it at all is remarkable. To do it accurately is uncanny.

Orthodoxy, of course, is for the mediocre. Some great golfers hack at the ball with a hook in the swing that makes hustlers reach for their wallets. Henry Aaron hit off the wrong foot in baseball. Bobby Layne threw a football like a brick. Joe Kapp threw it like a shot duck. Dempsey led with his right. Musial coiled. Juan Marichal kicked his leg so high he almost fell over backward.

Jamaal Wilkes picked up his "bad" habit on the playgrounds as a kid. "I was taller than the other kids but not as strong. Not as old. If I held the ball out in front of me, they would take it away. I had to find some way to get rid of that basketball where they couldn't block it."

HE DEVISED his method of squirting the ball out from behind his ear like toothpaste from a tube. The trajectory of his baskets were like a Rube Goldberg design. Start basketball from Point A (the lobe of the ear), move it to Point B (the top of the head), maneuver it to Point C (the backboard) where it will activate a glass of water, Point D, which will make it drop through the basket, Point E.

The nice thing about it is, it's almost indefensible from the front — as the kids in the playground found out. The bad thing about it is, it sends coaches into shock. Playground coaches, high school coaches, finally, the great John Wooden himself spent hours trying to teach Wilkes the "right" way.

"They tried everything," laughed Wilkes. "It was like they caught me using somebody else's toothbrush."

It was more as if they found a gunfighter who insisted on twirling his firearm in a quick-draw shootout. They figured that, by the time Jamaal got the ball wrapped around his ear, Calvin Murphy or someone would have it halfway down the floor on the way to the other basket.

"RICK BARRY even tried to show me how to foul-shoot from between the legs like he does," Wilkes said, grinning. "But I always go back to sling-shotting it. It's comfortable."

It's also effective. Jamaal's 12,628 regular-season points put him on a ladder with the giants of the game. Coaches have long since given up trying to get him to shoot the ball the way Dr. Naismith recommended.

I mean, you let Henry Aaron bat off any foot he wants to. You let Dempsey start a punch any way he feels comfortable. You don't tell Stan Musial to stand up straight and you let Hemingway fool around with grammar any way he thinks best.

I forget who the Milwaukee player was one night when I asked him, didn't he think it was strange no coach had broken Jamaal of his bad habits of shooting off his ear. "No," he said honestly. "But I sure wish they had."

Ross stands out amoung new peers

CHICAGO (AP) — Kevin Ross, the 24-year-old college basketball player who returned to grammar school to learn to read and write, said Wednesday that he will finish his college education if it "takes 10 years."

Ross was the speaker at his graduation ceremony from Marva Collins' Westside Preparatory School, and his speech exhorted his fellow students to "relight the candle of excellence."

"The way the kids motivated me, I tell them to motiovate others," said Ross before the ceremony.

He said he hopes to finish his education at Roosevelt College or the University of Illinois-Chicago and then possibly go on to teach.

The former Creighton University basketball player has sold the movie rights to his life story — telling how he received his first high school diploma from Wyandotte High School in Kansas City, Kan., and went on to play college basketball, but never learned to read and write. He is also writing a book about his experiences.

Former college basketball player Kevin Ross, center, in a classroom at Chicago's Westside Prepatory School.

"I'm still working on the first chapter," said the 6-foot-9-inch Ross, dressed in a blue pinstripe suit amid a crowd of 11 14-year-old fellow graduates.

"I'm very proud of the progress Kevin has made," said Collins, who took a leave of absence from her classroom work this year and taught Ross privately.

"The children love him so," said Collins. "He's a terrific father figure. One said yesterday, 'Kevin, can I go with you?' He said, 'I don't know where I'm going.' The kid said, 'I don't care, I want to go where you are.'"

Collins said she is now getting inquiries on behalf of students outside of Chicago who may be in the same situation as Ross was.

Ross remains bitter about an educational system that can "pass" promising athletes through high school and college although they lack the most basic language and math skills.

His deficient education might have remained his secret were it not for a knee injury his senior year in 1982. Because of the injury, Creighton tried to take away his scholarship, he said, and added that the university offered to get him into a vocational school, a police academy, or on a basketball team overseas.

But he demanded the education and publicly disclosed his lack of skills.

Midland's Pardee may coach in USFL

HOUSTON (AP) — The managing general partner of the Houston Gamblers says he hopes to have an announcement "in the very near future" about whether former Washington Redskins coach Jack Pardee will coach the new pro football franchise.

Jerry Argovitz said Pardee and owners of the United States Football League club held one of several meetings Wednesday and expected to talk again today.

"We feel very positive at this moment and hopefully something in the very near future will come about," Argovitz said.

But he refused to say specifically what was discussed with Pardee, who was named National Football League coach of the year in 1979.

"We've talked a lot of philosophy, we've talked a lot about the future of the new league," Argovitz said. "We've had some very positive talks. He's not only an outstanding coach, he's an outstanding man."

Pardee, the former head coach of the NFL Washington Redskins and Chicago Bears, had said direct communication with the owners will be important in his decision of whether to accept the job.

"I never want to be in a coaching situation where someone is between me and the owner," Pardee said. "My talks with the Gamblers are only preliminary.

"But if I get back into coaching, I'll want to be able to discuss any problems with the owner. If a coach can't do that, little problems become monumental."

Pardee was fired as the Redskins coach in 1980 following a change in ownership.

McEnroe maintains his 'ugly American' image

PARIS (AP) — John McEnroe has kept his "bad boy of tennis" reputation intact with his debut at the 53rd edition of the French Open tennis tournament.

Seeded second at this $1.3 million Grand Slam event, McEnroe returned to the court today for his second-round match against Givaldo Barbosa, a 29-year-old Brazilian ranked 117th in the world.

The match comes after McEnroe's tumultuous opening encounter Wednesday against Ben Testerman, a tall 22-year-old from Knoxville, Tenn. McEnroe shouted obscenities at linesmen, slammed balls and kicked a photographer's camera before defeating the 22-year-old Testerman 3-6, 6-1, 6-2, 6-7, 6-2.

He was fined $350 for "ball abuse" and was officially warned about exceeding a 30-second time limit between points.

"I don't think I deserved the fine," the 24-year-old McEnroe said.

The New York resident decided to enter the French Open at the last minute despite a doctor's warning that his participation could aggravate a shoulder injury and hurt his chances at Wimbledon, which begins June 20 — two weeks after this event ends.

A three-time U.S. Open and one-time Wimbledon champion, McEnroe has never captured the singles on the slow red clay courts at Roland Garros Stadium.

"I prefer to play on other surfaces but I want to show that I can play on this one," he said. "Maybe this year, or certainly sometime, I want to prove it."

McEnroe is seeded to meet Jimmy Connors in the $93,900 title match June 5. Connors easily moved into the third round Wednesday with a 6-4, 6-4, 6-3 victory over Australian Paul McNamee. It was the second consecutive straight-set victory for Connors, the 30-year-old top seed who got a day of rest today.

Among the women Wednesday, Americans Martina Navratilova and Chris Evert Lloyd, the top two seeds, both cruised to straight-set victories.

Navratilova, the 26-year-old defending champion, only lost two games in her second-round 6-1, 6-1 victory over Czechoslovakia's Katerina Skronska.

Turner accuses agent in death of Atlanta's GM

ATLANTA (AP) — Atlanta Braves owner Ted Turner said again Wednesday he believes sports agent Bucky Woy was responsible for the death of Braves General Manager Bill Lucas.

"He as much as pulled the trigger of the gun, almost," Turner testified during the trial of Woy's $17 million libel suit against him.

"I really do not believe Bucky Woy intended to kill Bill Lucas ... He probably didn't know he was causing it (Lucas' death) ... I didn't ever say he was guilty of murder," Turner told a U.S. District Court jury.

Woy, agent for Braves third baseman Bob Horner, alleges Turner defamed his character and interfered with his business relationship with Horner when he first made the remarks during bitter contract negotiations in 1979.

A four-man, two-woman jury was selected Monday for the trial before Judge Horace Ward.

Lucas died of a massive brain hemorrhage and cardiac arrest May 5, 1979, during the time he was negotiating Horner's contract with Woy.

Turner said he made the remarks because he was angry at Woy.

"I'd probably have shouted it out from the top of the roof if there had been anybody to listen," Turner said.

He admitted repeatedly during cross examination he had told newsmen Woy had "killed" Lucas and that he thought Woy was guilty of manslaughter.

He testified he had grown tired of Woy's "blackmail and intimidation." He described the agent as an "unscrupulous person" who had caused Lucas "an incredible amount of personal stress and strain" during the negotiations.

Turner said the blackmail allegation grew out of threats he said Woy made.

He said Woy threatened that if Turner did not give Horner — who joined the Braves in 1978 and hit .266 in 89 games — a $1 million contract for three years beginning in 1979, "I'm going to go to the press and make life miserable for you. It's going to cost you more than a million dollars."

ESPN telecast understated Super Bowl

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Sports Writer

Ah, the understated British.

ESPN carried the F.A. Cup soccer final — Great Britain's Super Bowl — last Saturday, complete with BBC announcers and picture. Any resemblance to an American football telecast is purely coincidental.

British sportscasters rarely raise their voices or dramatize. They don't promote upcoming BBC telecasts. In fact, they often keep their mouths shut, allowing the only audio to come from the fans, whose non-stop singing and chanting are part of the ambience of British soccer.

The F.A. Cup voice was John Mottson, who usually limited himself to naming the player with the ball — "Robson ... Wilkins ... Whiteside..." Analyst Jimmy Hill spoke only when he had something important to say.

The closest thing to verbal excitement came on a goal by Manchester United's Ray Wilkins. "Ray Wilkins, one of the most likeable men in the game, scores a quite brilliant goal," Mottson said quietly, adding, "A moment of inspiration for Wilkins, who has always had a lovely technique."

The British use half a dozen cameras — two on the sidelines for play-by-play; one behind each goal and two at ground level for color and replays. By comparison, NBC used 20 cameras at last year's Super Bowl.

Yet the British missed nothing and managed replays of key plays from several angles; by contrast, the final touchdown in last year's Super Bowl was partially obstructed because one play-by-play camera was positioned too low.

There was little color in the BBC telecast — although cameras caught what appeared to be a royal face or two in the crowd along with a woman described as the girlfriend of Jimmy Melia, the Brighton coach.

There was one other difference. No commercials. The BBC carries none and ESPN ran its spots only before the game and at halftime. That one you know you'll never see here — the advertisers will never stand for it.

CBS AND golf just don't seem to be made for each other.

Two weeks ago, the network cut away from a sudden death playoff in the Colonial Invitational and went to "60 Minutes." There was a predictable outcry. The network's answer — policy, which translated means "60 Minutes" brings in a lot more revenue than golf.

Having been burned, the network stayed on last Sunday for the finish of the Atlanta Classic and missed four minutes and 26 seconds (and 18 points) of the first game of the National Basketball Association finals. Which didn't sit well with the NBA and some of its fans.

Based on tee-off times, CBS anticipated the Atlanta tournament would end by 3:15 EDT with basketball coming on at 3:30. If there were sudden-death, CBS would update golf during basketball.

Golf also precedes the NBA the next two Sundays, which means there's a good chance for a repeat. The only sure thing is that someone will complain.

ABC WILL carry the Indianapolis 500 Sunday. But by the time it goes on the air — at 9 p.m. EDT — the race will have been over for five to six hours.

That's not the network's doing — race organizers won't sell live rights to over-the-air television, leaving ABC with tape delay or nothing.

So ABC is determined to take advantage of the delay to show all aspects of the race, not just cars going around in a circle. To do that, it's making a major effort.

The network has more 200 people working on the race. There will be two producers, three directors, 250 tapes, 24 cameras, possibly including cameras in a car or two. When the show goes on the air, network spokespeople say, editors will still be editing tape to be shown at the end of the show.

U.S. rolls, 78-46

HALIFAX, Nova Scotia (AP) — The United States team continued its brilliant play Wednesday at the Gold Cup world wheelchair basketball championships, defeating West Germany 78-46, for their fourth straight victory.

The surprising Swedish team also remained undefeated, winning its third game, a 66-52 decision over Australia.

In other games, France defeated Canada 56-54, Israel downed Britain 77-42 and Japan beat Belgium 66-59.

David Efferson paced the U.S. with 16 points.

Minnesota 'two' much for Orioles

By The Associated Press

When the Minnesota Twins come to Baltimore, they usually turn into birdseed for the Orioles. This time, however, they only added to the Birds' recent attack of indigestion.

Kent Hrbek drove in four of Minnesota's six runs in the first two innings as the Twins defeated Baltimore 7-4 Wednesday night to complete a three-game sweep and pin the Orioles with their sixth straight defeat. Except for a one-game stop in 1968, it was the Twins' first sweep in 51 series in Memorial Stadium since the Minnesota franchise started in 1961.

"The sweep has usually been the other way around," said John Castino, who has been with the Twins longer than any other player. "Any time you win three straight you get excited, especially against the Orioles. They're a great team."

Hrbek laced a two-run single in the first inning following a single by Bobby Mitchell and a double by Castino and his two-run double finished Dennis Martinez, 3-8, in the Twins' four-run second, which also included an RBI single by Bobby Mitchell and a run-scoring double by Gary Gaetti, who had three hits and extended his hitting streak to 17 games. Ken Schrom, 3-0, allowed seven hits before being relieved in the eighth by Ron Davis, who recorded his seventh save.

When the Twins recorded the final out, pitcher Bobby Castillo rushed from the clubhouse with a broom.

"I'm glad to be a part of it," said Castillo, "so I just went out and cleaned a path in the runway. When you win, you have fun."

Before this series, the Orioles had won 13 of their last 14 home games against the Twins and were 20-4 overall since July 21, 1980.

Red Sox 2, White Sox 0

At Chicago, Reid Nichols rapped a two-run single with two out in the ninth inning and Bruce Hurst pitched a three-hitter for his first major league shutout. Hurst walked two, struck out six and retired the final 13 White Sox batters.

Brewers 7, A's 6

At Oakland, Cecil Cooper smacked a two-run homer and Robin Yount slammed a two-run triple. Cooper capped a three-run third inning with his seventh homer after Jim Gantner tripled and Ned Yost singled.

Tigers 6, Blue Jays 2

At Toronto, Kirk Gibson hit his first home run of the season, a two-run inside-the-park shot in the first inning, and Detroit went on to snap the Blue Jays' five-game winning streak. The loss dropped Toronto into a first-place tie with Boston in the AL East.

Mariners 2, Indians 1

Pat Putnam's two-run homer broke up a pitching duel between Seattle's Jim Beattie and Cleveland's Juan Eichelberger. Putnam delivered his two-run shot into the second deck in right with two out in the fourth inning for his sixth homer of the season after Jamie Allen led off with a walk.

Chet Lemon of the Detroit Tigers is tagged out as he slides between the legs of Toronto shortstop Alfredo Griffin.

Angels 7, Yankees 1

At Anaheim, Tommy John scattered nine hits against his former team and Ellis Valentine and Bobby Grich homered. It was John's first appearance as an Angel against the team that traded him to California last Aug. 31. The veteran lefthander, who turned 40 on Sunday, struck out two and walked one in recording the 241st triumph.

Royals 5, Rangers 2

At Kansas City, Bud Black, just up from the minors, blanked Texas on four hits for seven innings and Joe Simpson belted a two-run triple. Black allowed two more hits in the eighth before giving way to Dan Quisenberry, who posted his 10th save. George Brett's 11th homer gave the Royals a 1-0 lead in the first inning against Danny Darwin.

Rockets offer Heinsohn ulcers

HOUSTON (AP) — Former Boston Celtics coach Tom Heinsohn left town saying the Houston Rockets offered him only a chance to get ulcers by coaching that team, the worst in the National Basketball Association last season.

Heinsohn and his attorney, Phil McLaughlin of Boston, met with Rockets owner Charlie Thomas and team president and general manager Ray Patterson Wednesday.

The Rockets officials emerged from the meeting saying talks had ended and other coaching prospects would be considered.

Heinsohn said the Rockets failed to offer him what he was looking for — a chance to be the highest paid coach in the NBA.

The Rockets' offer was "far shy of what the top guy is making. They closed the door," Heinsohn said. He said the offer asked that he cut his "living standard to come in here and coach Ralph Sampson and maybe get ulcers."

The Rockets won the right to draft the 7-foot-4 Virginia center in a coin flip with the Indiana Pacers.

"The Houston Rockets made Tom Heinsohn an outstanding offer and he chose to turn it down," Patterson said.

The Rockets reportedly offered Heinsohn a four-year contract worth $250,000 per year.

But Heinsohn had previously warned club officials that he would not leave his New England connections, which include thriving insurance and real estate investments, and his job as a commentator with the Mutual Radio Network without a substantial financial incentive.

San Antonio loses 6-2 in TL

By The Associated Press

Rod Booker's two-run double in the eighth inning pushed the Arkansas Travelers to a 6-2 win over San Antonio in Texas League play.

In other TL contests Wednesday night, Jackson downed El Paso 9-2 and Beaumont scorched Tulsa 10-6.

Booker knocked in Gotay Mills and Mike Harris, both of whom singled. Earlier in the inning, catcher Randy Hunt singled and scored on a wild pitch.

The Travelers other three runs came in the seventh, when second baseman Terry Pendleton singled in Mills, on base with an infield hit. Harris, who had bunted to get on base, scored on an error. Pendleton scored when left fielder Mike Salas doubled to right field.

Coach denies knowledge of wrong doing

By The Associated Press

The NCAA's charges against the University of Arizona that resulted in football sanctions included allegations that former Coach Tony Mason promised at least one player airline trips, living expenses and travel money. In its final confidential report given to Arizona President Henry Koffler last week, only four of the NCAA's original allegations were dismissed, though the university had maintained that some were either partially or completely incorrect. Last week th NCAA banned the Wildcat football program from postseason bowl participation for two years, through the 1984 season, and prohibited television appearances during 1984 and 1985. At his civil trial, Mason admitted giving and lending money to numerous players and otherwise offering them aid that he said he didn't know was prohibited by the NCAA...

The third knuckle on heavyweight Gerry Cooney's left hand is badly swollen, and he is worried. Cooney, scheduled to fight Phillip Brown June 18 in his first fight since losing to WBC champion Larry Holmes last June 11, said, "I've been going through pain the last few weeks. But I'll fight."...

WEST TEXAS OUTDOORS

Old Whitney is in prime

By RODNEY RIEHLE

Although over 40 years old, Lake Whitney is still in its prime as a bass lake. A recent survey showed Whitney has developed as a striped bass hotspot.

Texas Parks and Wildlife Dept. biologist Ken Sellers says one of the reasons for the lake's productivity is a good forage bass consisting of threadfin and gizzard shad and small sunfish.

"About 44 per cent of fishermen interviewed were fishing for stripers," said Sellers. "The fish are doing well, but reproduction in the lake has been poor in the last couple of years, so some additional stocking may be necessary."

Sellers said the lake has a high standing crop of channel catfish and flathead cats numbers are increasing...

Amistad Reservoir at Del Rio also is supplying plenty of fast action in the striped bass area with three guided parties reporting more than 400 pounds of stripers one morning. Several went over 20 pounds. Oversized surface poppers and floating shad-colored crankbaits got most of the action...

A fishing tournament at Toledo Bend Reservoir was one of those best-kept-secrets, but for 200 East Texas youngsters, it was a roaring success.

Youngsters 4-to-14 participated in a Take-A-Kid-Bream-Fishing tournament in which a bass club and parents provided the boats which left the docks at 8 a.m. and returned at noon with more than 1,300 pounds of bluegills...

CRAPPIE fishermen are taking home full creels at Lake Thomas while white and striped bass are the center of Lake Spence attention.

Crappie were taking jigs and minnows in three to five feet while a few yellow cats were being taken on trotlines. Some white base were being taken on trolling lines.

At Spence, several of the stripers were in the 10 to 20 pound range as well as 4-7 pound range black bass.

Laura McDonald, Midland, took a 4-2 black while Allen Moore, Andrews, landed a 3 3/4 pound black on a purple worm while Robert K. Williams, Gail, took a 21-pound striper on a white bomber jig...

FISHING tournaments brought 150 bass anglers to Oak Creek last week. J.L. Strancer, Abilene, won the Sweetwater tournament with two fishing going seven pounds 12 ounces. Watt Staats of Colorado City won the big bass at 6-11 while Tommy Hood won the Snyder tournament with a 4-7 bass.

Dale Ruby, Colorado City, caught two lunkers from Oak Creek three weeks agoa, 8-14 and 7-9. Ronnie Stewart, Pecos, landed a 10½ yellow cat on rod and reel.

CARLSBAD CAVERNS National Park begins its summer schedule Saturday. The park visitor center will open at 7 a.m. (MST) and the cavern itself will be open to visitors at 7:30 a.m.

Electronically guided cave trips, in which each individual group is provided with a radio-type interpretive devise, will be available continuously during the day, with complete three-mile walk-in tours closing at 4:30 p.m. and Big Room trips closing at 7:30 p.m. Bat flight programs begin nightly at sunset.

Primitive lantern trips through the New Cave, located in the park's Slaughter Canyon area, will be offered on a daily basis starting Saturday. The trips require reservations (505 785 2232).

IN THE WILD

Penn to protect wilderness

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The Western Pennsylvania Conservancy set out 50 years ago to put public parks in a smoky city. Today it is putting the public's name on some of the best wilderness in the nation's fourth largest state.

"There's a deep, ingrained interest on the part of Pennsylvanians for protecting the best of their lands," conservancy president John Oliver said.

Since it was founded in 1932 as the Greater Pittsburgh Parks Association, the private, nonprofit organization has acquired more than 85,000 acres of forest, fields and waterways. It has sold nearly all of it at cost to the state or federal government for public recreation in a state which has 1.3 million licensed hunters, 1.1 million licensed fishermen and uncounted other nature-lovers.

"It's an urban state for sure, but the rural areas are as scenic and wild as you will find anywhere ... and there's a tremendous amount of interest in keeping it that way," Oliver said in a recent interview.

PENNSYLVANIA has nearly 12 million people and lies in the midst of the industrialized East, yet roughly 60 percent of its 44,800 square miles are forested.

The conservancy, with 15 permanent employees, has an annual budget of about $500,000 and maintains a revolving land acquisition fund of several million dollars.

The organization is dwarfed by the 33-year-old Nature Conservancy, which has protected about 2 million acres in 50 states and maintains a preservation fund of about $30 million. But the WPC is the leading group of its kind in Pennsylvania, Oliver said.

Raising funds is a perpetual chore, but a new concern for the conservancy is an attitude in the state Legislature that Pennsylvania has enough public land in its 1.9 million acres of state forest, 1.2 million acres of game lands and 300,000 acres comprising about 100 state parks.

"Some of the legislators feel there is too much public land in Pennsylvania," Oliver said. "I don't agree because it's becoming more difficult every year to find places to explore. There's more land being posted and more land being developed every year."

With no more federal matching funds to encourage state agencies to acquire land for public use, "the Game Commission is the only game in town," he said.

THE CONSERVANCY helps stretch the commission's $3 million annual land acquisition budget. Private landowners can sometimes get tax breaks by dealing with a non-profit organization, and the conservancy can close a deal quickly.

"We can really operate on a moment's notice," said Oliver, who brought skills in economics, political science and real estate to the conservancy 12 years ago.

Dues from 9,300 members help raise the money needed to buy land, but private foundations, especially those operated by the Mellon and Scaife families, "have been the keystone of our existence," Oliver said.

Fire still burning in Trevino

DUBLIN, Ohio (AP) - Lee Trevino, on the move again, says this could be the week.

"This could be it, right here," Trevino said before a final practice round over the 7,116 yards of rolling Ohio countryside that make up the Muirfield Village Golf Club course, site of the $400,000 Memorial Tournament that begins Thursday.

"There's still a spark left in the fireplace," Trevino said.

"It's just a matter of finding the right wood to put on it, the right kind of wood.

"This could be the week, right here. Maybe I can get that right wood this week and get the fire going again."

Trevino hasn't won in more than a year. Last season he had to have surgery to correct a back problem, a problem so severe he considered retirement. Television commitments have cut into his time and delayed his progress.

"It's coming along," he said. "I'm playing better all the time. I probably won't ever play as good as I once did, but it's getting better."

His bid for a comeback will be made in the face of one of the strongest fields of the season.

Chief among them are the host, Jack Nicklaus, who has had a puzzling and inconsistent record so far this season, defending champion Ray Floyd and Tom Watson.

Strangely enough, none have won this year.

Nicklaus has led in the first round of two of his last three starts and was among the leaders in the other. Those good starts, however, have been wasted by poor second-round performances that have sent him plunging back into the pack.

"I just can't seem to put together a sustained effort, and that's not like me," Nicklaus said.

Watson, too, is looking for improvement with the defense of his U.S. Open championship less than a month away.

"No excuses," he said. "I've just had a lousy year."

Lanny Wadkins, however, has had an excellent season. He's taken two titles, tops the year's money-winners with more than $200,000 and figures to be a strong contender for the $72,000 first place check here.

Other prime challengers include Calvin Peete, a winner last week, along with Gil Morgan, Ben Crenshaw, Bill Rogers, Tom Kite, Keith Fergus, David Graham, Hal Sutton, Johnny Miller and Hal Sutton.

Also included in the 98-man invitational field are two of Nicklaus' old friends and golfing foes, South African Gary Player and Arnold Palmer.

Bruce Lietzke, suffering from back problems, withdrew Wednesday.

Portions of the final two rounds Saturday and Sunday will be televised nationally by CBS.

Noel inducted into Texas Business Hall of Fame

By JIM PRESNELL
Business-Energy Writer

ODESSA — William D. Noel, one of the Permian Basin's most successful energy pioneers, will receive a new award — induction in the Texas Business Hall of Fame — Friday in Houston.

"It's difficult to find the right words to express my appreciation and thanks to the 29 directors of the foundation, who made this selection," Noel said Wednesday.

"I was certainly pleased and honored to be included in such an eminent group as they have selected for this inauguration of the Texas Business Hall of Fame."

Noel continued; "I've been very fortunate to have been associated with wonderful people, and partners. It has made most of my business experience a real pleasure, and rewarding."

Noel was installed earlier this month in the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum's Hall of Fame.

Retired chairman of El Paso Products Co., and a former board member of El Paso Companies, he is still active as director of many large business concerns. He left El Paso recently to work on his independent oil and gas production and his investment interests.

Noel and partner Earl Rodman Sr. spent years getting backers — then built the world's largest inland petrochemical complex in Odessa.

A local bank executive said this week, "In my opinion, Bill and Ellen Noel have done more for the continued betterment and improvement of this community and the Permian Basin than anybody else I know of."

Noel started from scratch. Though he is hugely successful — and, some say, tremendously powerful — he is one of the nicest people one could meet.

"He has grace and dignity," said Lady Bird Johnson last week.

"He was a friend of Lyndon's and I am proud to say he's an inherited friend of mine," said the former First Lady. "He really is a many-faceted man. I think of him as a sage, wise businessman — yet creative and daring.

"He has much public responsibility. He's a financial backer of the remarkable Globe Theater you all have there, and of the John Ben-Sheppard Presidential Library. He is involved in everything that goes on in you all's corner of the world," said Mrs. Johnson from her Austin LBJ Library office. "I have known him well — fondly, and with admiration."

Quiet, humble, and plain speaking, Noel is the subject of unceasing praise from friends — and from business associates, who describe him as a total gentleman.

Senator Lloyd Bentsen (D-TX) said of the man, "I've known Bill Noel for a long time, and I'm proud to claim him as a friend. If Bill tells you he'll do something, you can put that job down as done.

"His list of accomplishments, of contributions to his community, and to our state and our nation, is lengthy," Bentsen said.

Recently elected to halls of fame by two organizations, it would be an understatement to say Noel is well-known.

He is now a member of the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum's Hall of Fame, as well as the Texas Business Hall of Fame, which was recently founded by a non-profit organization of business leaders in Texas.

Texas Business magazine lent its name to the honoring group and is doing much promotion and fanfare related to the event.

Texas Commerce Bank-Odessa is one of many banks around the state Noel and Rodman helped establish: They were principal stockholders in the San Angelo National Bank and in Citizens National Bank, Lubbock. They also were part of First National Bank, San Antonio.

They were founding members of the Permian Bank & Trust, which was later sold to Louis Rochester.

Derrell Henry served as president and chief executive for the bank Noel founded in Odessa. Formerly American Bank — founded in 1956 — its organizers and controlling stockholders were Noel and Rodman. In 1981, the bank became part of Texas Commerce Bancshares.

"It was my pleasure to be an associate and employee of Mr. Noel. He is the finest of gentlemen," Henry said recently.

"It was my privilege to be CEO of our bank for 23 years;" he continued. "It was very challenging." Henry said he admires Bill Noel because of his "Dedication to his profession, his treatment of others, and his concern for the betterment of not only his community — but all the areas over which he has some influence.

"All of us (in the Permian Basin) are going through some very trying experiences," Henry said, "because we don't know when this thing is going to turn around," referring to the oil business slowdown.

The challenges of these times seem made-to-order for someone as smart and inventive as Bill Noel.

Business magazine promotes itself, event

Jack Martin, president and publisher of Texas Business magazine, will present the awards for his idea, the Texas Business Hall of Fame, in Houston Friday.

Emcee and speaker will be Walter Cronkite. Proceeds from the event will go to a scholarship fund for graduate business students in Texas, and to establish a permanent location for the Texas Business Hall of Fame.

The nine businessmen selected to inaugurate this hall of fame include one local man — William D. Noel, a Permian Basin oilman and entrepreneur.

Publisher Martin was in Midland for a press conference recently, announcing the list of honorees.

"Our magazine is now read by the real leaders of this state — the people who rule it," he said.

"The subscription list is like a golden "Who's Who" of Texas," Martin noted.

Obviously, Martin has faith in his publication. But he says it is "far more than a magazine." Martin and editor Brux Austin are involved statewide in politics and special events relating to business. They are committed to making the venture a Texas Institution on the order of Levi's and boots.

Texas Business demonstrates this with wide gestures — actions like its recent establishment of a non-profit foundation to promote the "Texas Business Hall of Fame," which is a brand-new type of recognition available to top Texas businessmen.

The charter of the Texas Business Hall of Fame says the foundation wants to promote business education and publicize the activities of Texas businessmen. Especially considered will be community-serving deeds of the business community.

Including Noel, the list of inaugural members for the Texas Business Hall of Fame is impressive. Among them are: Jesse H. Jones, late publisher/owner of the Houston Chronicle; L.F. McCollum, retired chairman and CEO for Conoco; and George and Herman Brown, both deceased, founders of Brown & Root Construction.

Also honored are: Erik Jonsson, one of Texas Instruments' founders; Charles Tandy, deceased, chairman and CEO for Tandy Corp. (the Radio Shack company); Arthur Temple Jr., vice-chairman for Time Inc.; and Robert Kleberg Jr., deceased, manager of the near one-million acre King Ranch in South Texas.

The transplanted publisher — who intends to become inseparable from Texas — said his magazine is one some might see as new to the scene.

"The magazine had been in hiding for 6½ years. I was brought down from New York — where I launched other publications — to make this work.

"Over two years, we have increased editorial quality and refined the look of our magazine. Circulation has jumped from 28,000 to 54,000. And we have 50 percent more pages of advertising.

Another of Texas Business' non-magazine activities is the Texas Lyceum, an executives' forum held each year to examine how businesses can seek solutions to the problems they have in common.

The most recent Lyceum was sold out, with 600 businessmen turning out and featured speeches delivered by John Connally and Henry Kissinger.

Martin said that Texas Business is the largest regional business magazine in the U.S., by circulation. It now carries about 25 pages a month of lucrative national advertising.

Bell may toll for inflation

By ARELO SEDERBERG
Hearst Feature Service

We've been playing the inflation game in America almost since World War II, but right now we just might be in the fourth quarter. And perhaps the two-minute warning has sounded.

This view is held by many experts these days, despite the recent explosions in money supply. Others, citing the fat federal deficits and the possibility we might have to bail out bank loans to less developed nations, remain staunchly inflationistic.

One leading disinflationist, A. Gary Shilling, is almost certain the game is over. If he is right, it has powerful ramifications on your personal finances. Shilling, a Wall Street economic consulting expert, has written (with Kiril Sokoloff) a landmark book on the subject for McGraw-Hill, "Is Inflation Ending? Are You Ready?" His answer: Yes, it's ending; no, most are not ready.

"The end of inflation (on a secular, long-term basis) is like a drunk after a three-day bender," he said. "It is very painful, at least at first."

America — like the drunk to his booze — is conditioned to inflation. We've stood in line to buy houses and gold; we've bid against each other for collectibles such as Oriental rugs and paintings. We've become accustomed to wage increases. We haven't saved; we've spent. And we've borrowed, believing we could pay back in cheaper dollars.

That's probably over for a decade or so, Shilling believes. He cites this evidence: Oil prices are coming down. Unions and workers no longer are so greedy. Savings are on the rise. And there are signs that Americans are sick of giant federal deficits. The real rate of interest is still high, which discourages speculation. The strong U.S. dollar overseas keeps pressure on domestic manufacturers to compete with foreigners. And, finally, there is the widespread trend to deregulation, lowering prices through competition.

"I'd say the bloom definitely is off the rose in real estate," Shilling says. "As a major investment vehicle in the future, I simply do not see it. And if you no longer can make a killing in owning, you'll rent. Also, tangibles – collectibles – have seen their day."

How about gold? Shilling isn't sure. It could see further upside action despite the end of inflation, he points out, because gold is not only a hedge against inflation but also a hedge against political instability. And the death of inflation causes political instability.

Shilling isn't saying that prices will decline, that we'll have deflation (although that might occur for some periods in the disinflation cycle). He is saying that inflation could be cut to 2 percent to 3 percent a year.

Even if inflation is not ending, he says that it is certain that the nation is in a period of transition. No longer will it be three to four years of boom, followed by a nine-month or year-long readjustment, or recession. The business cycle already has contracted to two years of up, one down. And it seems apparent that recoveries no longer are "classical." In this recovery, interest rates and unemployment are remaining high.

Will the recovery breed inflation, even if on a temporary basis? Shilling thinks not. First, he doesn't believe the economy will be as strong as other advisers think, with once-burned consumers cautious about purchasing. Second, that strong overseas greenback will continue to sting the foreign sector. Third, more spending controls on the federal budget will be enacted than most observers anticipate.

In Shilling's mind, it adds up to lengthy disinflation. Who will be the winners and the losers if he is correct? Here's a rundown:

Winners: Those living on fixed incomes, those with low debt and high savings, renters, quality stocks and bonds, American-made autos.

Losers: Real estate and commodity brokers, collectibles of all sorts, OPEC, non-OPEC oil exporters, producers of farm equipment, investors in hotels, shopping centers and office buildings.

During the sobering-up period, we may even experience something economists will call depression, Shilling thinks. It won't be like the Great Depression of the 1930s, however, but it might be something greater than the post-war recessions.

Vaughn: U.S. is prepared

SEATTLE — The invisible hand of the marketplace has proven to be a mightier protector against oil shortages than the strongarm grip of government, says the federal watchdog on the nation's energy supplies.

Removal of price controls has curbed oil imports far more effectively than the mandatory restraints imposed by the Carter administration, said William Vaughn, assistant secretary of the Department of Energy. Vaughn is responsible for energy preparedness.

"The best energy and consumer protection this government can provide is to let oil producers produce under free market conditions," said Vaughn in a speech presented yesterday at the mid-year meeting of the Independent Petroleum Association of America.

The removal of price controls, more than any other factor, has contributed to the oil glut and a subsequent decline in oil prices, Vaughn said. Instead of clumsy federal intervention, the marketplace efficiently allocated supplies to where they are needed most, he said.

Removing controls from natural gas prices would have the same positive effect as deregulation of oil, Vaughn said. "Consumers are paying more than they might in a free market," he said of natural gas prices.

President Reagan has asked Congress to remove all controls from the natural gas market over the next three years. Under the Reagan plan, consumer price increases would be limited to the rate of inflation until 1986, and then all price controls would be removed.

Vaughn said he was optimistic that Congress will lift controls on natural gas. He conceded, however, that legislation enacted by Congress probably will be substantially different than the bill proposed by the White House.

Vaughn also pushed for pipeline deregulation, but said that curbs against monopolistic activity must be retained.

Although domestic oil production has only slightly increased, the nation in recent years has become far less vunerable to disruption of energy supplies, Vaughn said.

In 1977, the nation looked overseas to meet 46 percent of its energy needs, Vaughn said. Most of the oil imports came from Arab nations belonging to OPEC.

'Miss Ellie' will miss first Dallas episode

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Barbara Bel Geddes, the genteel matriarch Miss Ellie of the scheming Ewing family on CBS' "Dallas," will miss the first few episodes when the hit series returns in the fall.

Miss Bel Geddes, 60, suffered a heart attack and underwent bypass surgery last March.

"Barbara is recovering nicely, but we'll keep her out of the first few shows for next fall so as not to tax her," says executive producer Philip Capice.

"Since the writers had already conveniently sent her away quite by accident, they're not faced with having to write her out of those segments."

Capice was referring to the cliffhanger that ended the past season. Sue Ellen Ewing and her son, John Ross, were trapped in the burning South Fork ranch home. Miss Ellie went away with Clayton Farlow.

Singer admits he was 'a little hambone'

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Joe Bonsall of the Oak Ridge Boys made his performing debut at the age of 6 on the "Horn and Hardart Hour," an amateur television program in his hometown, Philadelphia, Pa.

"I didn't win," Bonsall says in a recent telephone interview. "I used to love singing as a little kid. I was a...little hambone. I was getting up in front of everybody and singing all the time."

Pausing, he adds, "You get two people together and say, 'Hey Joe, sing us a song.' And I'll pop up and sing it for you."

The Oak Ridge Boys, with special guest Michael Murphey, will be onstage today at 8 p.m. at Ector County Coliseum. Tickets, priced at $11 for reserved seating, may be purchased at the door.

For Bonsall, an important aspect of being a member of the highly successful Oak Ridge Boys is putting "back some of what was being given to us." Thus six years ago the Oaks became involved in the national campaign for prevention of child abuse.

The reason for this choice was simple. "We all love children and we all found the child abuse problem in this country to be something that needed some work done on it."

They decided to stage a show — Stars for Children, Dallas.

Joe Bonsall

"WE THOUGHT THAT if we got enough sponsors, the sponsorship money would be the gravy that we could put to the cause because the show would probably break even."

The annual concert has "grown into a much bigger thing than we ever thought that it would....This coming year we're probably going to raise a half a million dollars.

"We are not only into child abuse awareness, such as the public service spots,...but we are also involved in several child abuse centers that we have had built through the efforts of Stars for Children.

"Our philosophy about it is pretty simple; it's a matter of children's rights...And a child has a right to be just that, a child and not have to worry about the pressures that an adult has to worry about."

The desire to contribute is reflected in the Oaks' philosophy on life.

"The Oak Ridge Boys' philosophy is you can affect people in any one of three ways, either positively, negatively or not at all...We would like to — at least, for the most part — affect them in a positive way and give people something they can take home with them every night."

THE OAK RIDGE Boys have been on the top since moving from gospel to country in 1977. The group has cut nine gold albums (one platinum and one double platium) since then.

"All I ever wanted to do was just to sing in a good quartet. I achieved that years ago."

Reflecting back Bonsall says, "As the years by you do make new goals for yourself, but I do remember...

"When I got into my early teens, right around 12, 13 years old, I started really getting interested in singing. And I was really into Elvis Presley, like everybody was.

"I was going to be a big rock star someday, or something like that. I used to do the whole bit — get in my old bedroom there, put the mop handle up and sing in front of the mirror, while I was lip singing Elvis Presley or whoever I happened to play. I did that all the time, figuring someday I'd get to do this onstage.

"This is what I wanted to do for a living," Bonsall says. "I had no doubt about it... I didn't know how I was going to go about it, or what, but that's what I wanted to do."

BESIDES, BONSALL says, "When I got in high school I realized very quickly I didn't have the talent to play major league ball. I couldn't hit the outside breaking pitch at all and a hot grounder still made me a little squeamish, so I realized that wasn't going to be my life's work. And I didn't have enough meat on me to play football. I went out for the high school football team and got killed.

"So I joined the choir. And it was a unique experience for me. The choir was a group called the Ambassadors of Song, which were voted one of the top high school choirs in the country, and we toured Europe one summer. I got a lot of experience there.

When Bonsall got out of high school he started a gospel quartet called the Faith Four "which was me and two other guys and my sister. We sang parttime for about three years.

"When I was 19 — I'd gotton to know a lot of the fulltime gospel singing groups of the day — I joined a group called the Keystone Quartet and Richard Sterban (then 24), our present day bass singer supreme, was in that group."

AFTER SINGING TOGETHER for eight years, Bonsall says, "We were struggling...Richard at that point had three little boys, and we weren't making a good enough living.

"He had an offer from J.D. Sumner and The Stamps Quartet...He went and backed Elvis for about a year and a half and then he joined the Oak Ridge Boys.

"During that period while Richard was with The Stamps, our little Keystone group got to be a pretty well known gospel group...I was managing the group and we were promoting gospel shows. To me the best gospel group in the world was the Oak Ridge Boys.

"They were it...The Keystone group used to promote the Oak Ridge Boys up across New York state and that's how I got to know them real well.

"A year after Richard went with them, when they needed a singer it almost seemed natural that they would come to me because we had been so close and my voice kind of fit in with theirs."

Bonsall joined the group in 1973, "rejoining my good old buddy Richard."

Pausing, Bonsall said, "I still feel very, very lucky because there's people all over the city of Nashville that worked just as hard as I've ever worked and they're not getting anywhere.

"Whatever that is that makes it happen for you...when you look at the big picture, I have to feel...that I've really been blessed."

Performance art stirs controversy

IRVINE, Calif. (AP) — A University of California student takes a bullet in his arm. Another piles grocery refuse on the floor of a campus gallery. A man and woman strip, slather red clay on their bodies and stage a rape attempt in an air-conditioning shaft.

It's art — performance art.

And UC-Irvine students have been in the vanguard of the movement, which blossomed in the early 1900s in Europe but sprang up here just 15 years ago.

"Performance art, historically, is an offshoot of visual arts," UC-Irvine instructor Suzanne Lacy said in a recent interview. "It's a painter or sculptor who decided they wanted to do something they couldn't do on canvas or a piece of stone.

"They wanted to use their bodies or perhaps use other ideas that words or movements or sounds, combined with those things, would help relate."

Actor denies he's workaholic

By FRANK TORREZ
Hearst Feature Service

Robert Guillaume denies he's a workaholic. Yes, there are the 22 episodes a year of "Benson" for ABC, a new three-picture deal with 20th Century-Fox that calls for remakes of the 1950's "Mr. Belvedere" movie series, frequent concert appearances, plans for a fourth TV movie with Gary Coleman and perhaps even a stage play in the fall.

But a workaholic? Absolutely not.

"I find work stimulating and leisure time boring," he explains. "I've just returned from a concert performance in Valley Forge. There was plenty of time between rehearsals and show time to relax and be a tourist. It's just that, most of the time, I would rather be working."

Since his movie, concert and nightclub careers are blossoming, a classically trained singer, he combines music and comedy in his personal appearances, why endure the weekly grind of a TV series?

"TV gives you the stability of having a home base," Guillaume says. "It's like working for a post office, you generally know where you're going to be from day to day. As a black actor, I'm especially lucky to have that, because working gives you credibility in the industry.

"I love the character of Benson; he's a man of the people, someone who is aware of the problems in society and someone who is straightforward. After four seasons, Benson has moved closer to the idealized image I have for him, but there's still room for expansion. Next season, I would like to move the character even more in that direction. We're still talking about how to go about doing that."

Since Guillaume worries sometimes about being stereotyped as Benson, he takes on other roles "as often as possible." Thus, the "Mr. Belvedere" movies. "Nothing beats a good character," he says, in explaining why the original scripts, with some modificiations, will be used instead of complete rewrites. "It worked then, it should work again," he says. The series will begin with "Sitting Pretty," and production is likely to begin this summer.

Oscar winner choosy about scripts

LOS ANGELES (AP) — What happens to an actor who finds himself the star of an Oscar-winning movie?

"Suddenly, you are not being turned down by the same people who turned you down a few months before," says Ben Cross, who played the Olympic runner, Harold Abrahams, in "Chariots of Fire."

But he's able to turn down the same producers who had rejected him.

He was sent the script of one of the TV movies on Prince Charles and Princess Diana. "I opened the script and the first thing I read was, 'Diana (to the Queen, peevishly)...' I closed the script and sent it back."

Cross also declined a part in the "Thorn Birds" miniseries and the part of the murderer of actress-model Dorothy Stratton in Bob Fosse's movie, "Star 80." The English actor earlier refused to audition at the Royal Shakespeare Company for the role of Sky Masterson in "Guys and Dolls."

"They wanted to be sure I could play an American," he said. "Since I had already played Americans in three London musicals, 'Chicago,' 'I Love My Wife' and 'I'm Getting My Act Together and Taking It on the Road,' I didn't feel I had to audition."

Having trained at the Royal Academy of Dramatic Arts and the Royal Shakespeare Company, Cross figures he has paid his dues. The projects he has held out for have been plums: "The Flame Trees of Thika," the Kenya adventure with Hayley Mills and "The Citadel," a six-hour adaptation of the A.J. Cronin novel, which will also be appearing on PBS.

Cross paid a visit here after completing another long project, "The Far Pavilions," a six-hour version of M.M. Kaye's epic of India. It was filmed in India and Wales and will be seen by subscribers to Home Box Office early next year. The cast includes Amy Irving, Omar Sharif, John Gielgud, Christopher Lee and Rossano Brazzi.

Now 35, with strong features and close-cropped black hair, Cross was one of scores of English actors who were considered for the two leading roles in "Chariots of Fire."

"They had been looking at actors for about 10 weeks when I tried out," he said. "I did an acting test before a video camera and I also did some running on a track. I've never been particularly athletic, but they weren't too concerned about that. Flat feet might have disqualified me, that's all."

The filmmakers chose Cross, even though at 32 he would be playing a young man from 19 to 24. He and co-star Ian Charleson were to train twice a week for six weeks before filming started.

"But I was so terrified that I worked out seven days a week," he said.

The intial reaction to "Chariots of Fire" in England was tepid, he recalled: "The critics were patronizing, calling it shallow and superficial. I guess they tried not to be jingoistic. Not until America took 'Chariots' to its bosom and it was reimported to England did the public really respond."

'Works by Women' on display through Tuesday

The Gihon Foundation art collection, "Works by Women," is on display at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., through Tuesday.

Bette C. Graham, inventor of Liquid Paper correction fluid, established the Gihon Foundation in 1978 in a desire to contribute to the cultural, spiritual and intellectual development of society and acknowledge the role women play in that development.

The Gihon art collection, 15 works by 13 women exhibited in the Museum of the Southwest's Stables Gallery, was assembled by Ms. Graham to showcase outstanding women artists. The collection contains works by major American artists who have notably influenced the development of artistic expression in America. Art work by Georgia O'Keffe, Nancy Graves, Mary Cassatt and former Midlander Nancy Chambers is included in the exhibit.

In addition, the 17th annual Southwestern Area Art Show is on display through Aug. 14 and Mexican Folk Retablos until June 19.

Museum hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday-Saturday and 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday. There is no charge to view this or any exhibit at the museum.

Julia Child chef, undercover agent?

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — Julia Child is well known as the woman who has sent millions of Americans into their kitchens to try their hand at gourmet cooking.

Less known is that "The French Chef" has a cloak-and-dagger past.

"I served with the OSS in Ceylon and China during World War II," she said during a break from taping her newest cooking show for PBS, "Dinner at Julia's."

Miss Child started out in Washington with the OSS, the Office of Strategic Services, the precedessor of the Central Intelligence Agency.

"I hoped to be a spy but I had no qualifications," she said. "I worked in the files."

Police monitor shoppers

DALLAS (AP) — Customers at a shopping center in a northside suburb will soon be under the watchful eyes of police who will never have to leave their chairs to catch an unwary shoplifter.

University Park police chief David Beidelman said that Snider Plaza will become the nation's first shopping center to be equipped with a closed-circuit television surveillance system. The equipment is scheduled to be installed in the next two weeks, he said.

Police will install six video cameras that will scan rooftops, storefronts and parking lots on the 55-year-old retail center. The system has been planned for the past two years, Beidelman said.

"Right now, it's an experimental project totally," he said. "It should be about six months before we know whether it is successful as a crime prevention tool."

Television screens will be set up in a room at the police station and monitored by an officer 24 hours a day, he said.

Beidelman said the same number of police officers will patrol the shopping area until the department determines whether the surveillance system is effective.

Several signs will be placed prominently around the center's 40 businesses, warning that the area is under surveillance, he said.

The project is expected to cost $36,000, he said, with about 75 percent being paid with money received this spring from the Texas Department of Criminal Justice.

Despite the sophisticated attempt to fight crime in Snider Plaza, the four-block area is relatively safe, officials said. In 1982, there were two business burglaries, three robberies, 22 thefts and 31 reports of suspicious persons in the shopping center.

Fred Lee, a police specialist with the criminal justice department in Austin, said that a similar system was tried in Miami several years ago, but it was mobile and not as sophisticated.

"We've done extensive research into video surveillance, and I believe University Park's is the first of its type in the United States," he said.

Reagan awards medal

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan awarded a National Medal of Science to Dr. F. Albert Cotton of Texas A&M University earlier this week.

Cotton, who was honored for his work in inorganic chemistry, was one of 12 researchers to receive such awards in a White House ceremony.

"It feels wonderful," he said. "This is pretty good company to be in."

Cotton discovered quadruple and other multiple bonds among metal atoms and has written 700 scientific papers and four books. He joined the Texas A&M faculty in 1972.

Hearings on ERA begin

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate holds the first hearing in 10 years on the Equal Rights Amendment today, with opponents and proponents already gearing up for battle.

Chairman Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, of the Senate Judiciary subcommittee on the Constitution, said both sides of the issue will be asked to testify during several hearing sessions.

Not-so-dry run

Volunteer weather spotter Banks Campbell checks out clouds.

Area's weather spotter volunteers familiar with threatening situations

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

It was around 4 p.m. when some of the area's weather spotters climbed into their pickups and cars and headed out into the country Wednesday.

More than likely, they already had tuned into their radios. Some, like Banks Campbell, had been stepping out of the office during the afternoon to gaze at the gloomy skies.

"The conditions are very right for severe thunderstorms," Campbell, a Midland geologist, said as he headed west on Andrews Highway. "There's a lot of humidity and it's quite hot."

Passing the carnival on Cuthbert, with it's bright Ferris wheel sticking into the overcast sky, he remarked on the lightning the night before.

Through the windshield of the pickup, the gray mass blanketing the dusky streets lined with fast-food restaurants seemed unthreatening.

"We're under the overhanging front part of the cell," Campbell said. "We're kinda flying blind."

That is a part of this volunteer job.

WHILE THE THOUGHT of riding into the violence of a dark storm contributes to the addiction of these amateur ham radio operators, they realize it isn't always a threatening situation. Still, one always could develop.

Spotter Wayne Williams of Odessa climbed into his position in front of the radar at the National Weather Service station at Midland Regional Aiport.

A report of thunderstorms north and east of Andrews in Gaines County was all he had to report.

"I'm heading to (Farm-to-Market) 1788 on Andrews," Campbell said into the microphone. "We are, incidentally, beginning to pick up some steady rain here on the west side of Midland."

"I'll mark your location," Williams said.

John radioed in from Midland Air Park, Tom called in from Odessa. Another said he was in Midland and someone else called in.

"Everybody just stand by," Williams said. "Don't get excited just yet. Appreciate you checking in."

The spotters pretty much pick out their own locations, Campbell explained. If something develops where nobody is, the operator at NWS — Williams, in this case — directs someone to check it out.

Campbell headed north on FM 1788.

"I KNOW where the cell is 'cause I've been watching it move," he explained. "Like chips floating on a river, all the cells are moving in the same direction.

"What we're looking at now is rain," he said, looking up into the gray sky. Motioning toward the northwest, he said, "You can see some forms over there."

Someone radioed in from downtown Odessa. Another one called from the parking lot of a cafeteria in Midland.

"I just heard of some hail in Odessa," the voice said. "Just checking to see if it had been confirmed."

Negative.

Williams called Campbell. "Just got a report from a probably young person of a funnel northwest of Midland."

"Negative," Campbell replied, scanning the dark vertical streaks on the horizon. "Probably just a rain shaft — there are a lot of them."

Campbell continued heading toward a "hot spot," an area getting intensive readings on the radio.

The impulses sent out by the radar bounce off solids such as liquid moisture, water droplets or hail, Campbell explained. When a lot of impulses are received, the area is termed a "hot spot."

The gray mass looked nothing like the diagram of a severe thunderstorm cloud or tornado printed on the bottom of the area map Campbell studied.

"I've been looking at these things for so long," he explained as he pointed out the mild movements in the overcast sky. "I've worked outside most of my life and had to tell a great deal about them.

"ABOUT FIVE or six years ago, I started going to the spotter training seminars," he said. The bug bit him.

The clouds slowly slid by overhead and Campbell turned south. Traveling under the trailing clouds, he described them as "scud" and "benign looking."

"They're just the back part of the cloud we came through," he said. "Sometimes they'll stretch out for 150 miles away from the storm. Don't see any danger at all."

Standing outside his pickup on the wet highway, Campbell watched the rainstorm move southeast.

Back at the NWS station, the atmosphere was relaxed.

Weather service specialist Jack Nunan sat in front of the green glow in the dark radar room. He punched in a button marked "6" to find the most severe thunderstorms. One by one, he marked the bright spots on the ANR scope and turned to two other screens to get the intensity and height of the storms.

One was up around Seminole and moving slowly.

Chuck Nichols, another weather service specialist, wandered in with a grin on his face. "Somebody stumbled out of a bar in Rankin and seen tornados between Rankin and Big Lake," he said.

Nunan marked the area and checked the radar.

"NO CLOUDS," he said. "Sorry."

The men laughed.

According to Bob Cooper, weather service specialist, they were operating on an emergency generator. Even when the rainy weather doesn't look threatening, they switch over to the generator because of the likelihood of lightning striking an antenna, he said.

Nunan whirled around in his chair.

"These are the fellows that make our work easier," he said, pointing at Campbell and Williams. "They deserve a heck of a lot of praise."

Back outside, the clouds were gone. Campbell climbed into his pickup and headed back to Midland.

"Never can tell if it's gonna be a dry run or not," he said, smiling apologetically.

Premenstrual Syndrome affects millions of women

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Every woman in the room was familiar with the subject.

Most of the 35 women agreed they were affected by the disease which now has a name.

Premenstrual Syndrome is estimated to affect 5.5 million American women to one degree or another.

Two registered nurses — Nancy Metzger and Cindy Dear — were in Midland Wednesday night at the Central YMCA to let these women know they can be "productive 31 days each month."

The nurses, representing the Premenstrual Syndrome Program in Houston, discussed symptoms of PMS.

PMS has been victimized by negative publicity in the media, with sufferers being categorized as crazy, according to Ms. Dear.

"There's a lot of misinformation about this disease," she said, adding that it is absolutely not a psychological disorder, a defective personality, absence of will, a legal loophole, learned behavior or figment of women's collective imagination.

"IT IS A REAL physiological, definable and treatable disorder," Ms. Dear said. "It is a wide variety of symptoms which regularly recur in the same phase of each menstrual cycle followed by a symptom-free phase in each cycle."

According to Ms. Dear, there are more than 150 symptoms associated with PMS with the most common complaints — headaches, bloating, breast swelling and tenderness, acne, fatigue, clumsiness and food binging or cravings. Often more devastating are the emotional symptoms, including mood swings, anger, depression, irritability, lack of concentration and the real fear of losing control.

Timing of symptoms is important in the diagnosis. Ms. Dear said some women begin having symptoms about one week before menstruation. Others report that they have symptoms at ovulation, ceasing until a week or so before menses at which time the symptoms return. Another group has continuing symptoms from the time of ovulation up to menses. Most women experience relief within 24 to 36 hours following menses.

Ms. Dear said about 40 percent of menstrual women are affected by PMS and 5 percent of these women are severely symptomatic.

"I ESTIMATE that 26,383 women in the Midland/Odessa area have PMS to some degree, and 5,276 women have severe PMS.

"You may have a little bit of breast tenderness or skin problems and you can live with that, but the 5 percent of women who have severe PMS have rage," she said. "They can't live with that, especially if they're in a rage and they're afraid they might hurt someone — like their children."

PMS has been called the "mid-thirties syndrome" because it is most likely to become severe in that age range.

Ms. Dear said a major hormonal change usually correlates with the time of onset and/or increased severity. The changes include puberty, cessation of menses, taking or going off the birth control pill, pregnancy and/or stopping breast feeding. Also, many women report a continued or increased discomfort following a tubal ligation, hysterectomy or oophorectomy (removal of ovaries), Ms. Dear added.

While the cause of PMS is unknown, it is thought to be a malfunction of the hormone-regulating system in the brain.

"This would explain why women can continue to have symptoms even after hysterectomy and oophorectomy when they are no longer menstruating," she said.

Although many physicians still doubt that PMS exists, Ms. Metzger said individual physicians are beginning to treat women with this condition. There's also the PMS clinic, where Ms. Dear and Ms. Metzger work.

"THIS CENTER offers a thorough PMS evaluation and, when appropriate, diagnosis and treatment of PMS," Ms. Metzger said.

Landowners hold key to soil conservation

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The effectiveness of the U.S. Soil Conservation Service to prevent erosion and enrich the land for generations to come depends on the total efforts of private landowners, U.S. Department of Agriculture official Richard D. Siegel said in Midland Wednesday.

Siegel, the USDA's deputy assistant secretary for natural resources and environment, stopped here on a tour of West Texas farm and ranch land. He met with about 35 ranchers and SCS agents in the Midland Hilton.

"The federal programs can be only as effective as the private landowners want it to be," Siegel said. "It takes two to tango."

Siegel said he is optimistic that "we can do the job" in effecting conservation.

In Texas, Siegel said the SCS has concentrated efforts to curb blackland erosion in East Texas by advocating conservation tillage. SCS technicians are urging farmers to leave crop residue on the ground to retain soil moisture, to build up the humus and to prevent erosion.

The SCS also has concentrated efforts in the state's arid areas.

"We have the problem of brush which continue to sap vital water supplies from the range lands," said Siegel, a 43-year-old Washington, D.C., lawyer, who was appointed to the USDA post in 1981 by the Reagan administration.

Richard D. Siegel

Brush control is vitally needed, he said, to keep and to develop high-quality grasses on the range lands.

But he cautioned that loss of grasses could mean the loss of "fragile soil" which erodes easily — unless protected by hardy grasses — in occasional torrential downpours.

Irate school trustee rebuts 'inaccuracies'

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

An irate school trustee charged Tuesday that HBF Corporation President Larry Bell's statements published last week in The Midland Reporter-Telegram are inaccurate.

During a discussion at a regular meeting of the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees, Ron Britton rebutted Bell's remarks.

"I'm so pleased Mr. Bell has been elected to the school board so he can make these decisions," Britton said sarcastically.

Bell isn't, but he does serve as president of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, a position that some feel conflicts with a development that could benefit HBF and Odessa school taxpayers while reducing tax revenues for the Midland Independent School District.

According to Britton, Bell's figures on the loss of some 4,000 acres in far west Midland County are off.

An area consisting of about 2,000 acres of HBF's Mission Dorado development, 500 acres of the Ridgewood Subdivision and 1,500 acres of the 35,000-40,000 acre Faudree-Parks Ranch is seeking annexation from MISD into the Ector County Independent School District. In Midland County and MISD, much of the area is or will be annexed into the City of Odessa, Bell said.

Child care center receives donations

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The Taylor Park Child Care Center was enriched by $3,000 in scholarship funds Wednesday with donations from the Corporate Child Development Fund for Texas, the First City Bancorporation of Texas and First City National Bank of Midland.

Of the funds, $2,000 came from the Bancorporation and the Corporate Fund. Midland's First City National Bank donated an additional $1,000.

The contributions will be used to provide partial scholarships to low- and moderate-income families needing child care. The scholarships will pay 25 percent of the fee for those families meeting the scholarship's income guidlines. The center's weekly fees are $50 for infants and $42 for children 18 months of age or older.

Florida company mailing fake bills

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

Businesses in West Texas and around the country will be getting less than they pay for — absolutely nothing, in fact — if they pay invoices being distributed through the mail by a Florida company called Copyfax, Inc.

Linda Truitt, president of the Better Business Bureau of the Permian Basin, said the company is attempting to bilk businesses by mailing them fictitious bills in the hope that they'll submit payment with no questions asked.

Ms. Truitt said the BBB has received four written and 10 verbal complaints from Midland and Odessa businesses which have never done business with Copyfax, yet received bills in the mail during the past several days.

"We've received enough of these inquiries to know the business is a fraud," she said. "We're trying to warn businesses to be careful and not to pay this."

Ms. Truitt said the invoices have all been dated May 16 and all make reference to a mysterious account item dated April 8, identified only as "P805195" with a balance due of $162.33.

She said it is illegal to mail a document which resembles a bill, invoice or statement but is actually a solicitation. Such solicitations must bear a disclaimer informing the recipient that they are under no obligation to pay unless they accept the item offered. The Copyfax invoices bear no such disclaimer.

The Miami-area BBB reports having received inquiries about identical Copyfax invoices from Virginia, Alabama, Montana, Kansas, Ohio and Texas during the last week.

Miami's BBB has been unable to locate Copyfax and Miami-area phone directories do not have a listing for the business.

Ms. Truitt said many companies — especially those with loose accounting procedures — become confused about "do we actually owe this company money or not."

She said many Permian Basin businesses might have been duped by such a fake billing amid the breakneck activity common during oil boom periods. When business is slow, she said, companies tend to monitor their disbursements more closely.

"It's sad to think that perhaps last year this company might have made a lot more money," she said.

According to Postal Service estimates, mail fraud schemes net more than $500 million annually. Ms. Truitt said the BBB is treating the Copyfax invoices as a mail fraud scam and forwarding complaints to the postal inspector in Memphis, Tenn.

The BBB asks that anyone receiving the Copyfax invoices notify the BBB office.

"If you have a problem with PMS, it's not always easy to diagnose," she said. "Chronic disorders can intensify during your period. There are no blood tests that can accurately test the progesterone level, which is thought to be lacking at this time."

Progesterone — a steroid carried by the blood to the uterus — plays a major role in the menstrual cycle during ovulation.

After testing to rule out thyroid, glucose tolerence and prolactin abnormalities, the clinic will do a psychological evaluation. Additionally, Ms. Metzger said the clinic requires women to chart their cycles, temperature, weight and symptoms for two months.

"We may be able to say, 'yes you have PMS, yes progesterone will help,' but it won't help severe clinical depression — that's why we need the psychological tests. We think it's important that PMS is not a catchall for chronic conditions that get worse during the period. PMS is a real thing, but it must be diagnosed accurately or it won't be cured."

The cure is progesterone. However, the drug is not approved by the Federal Food and Drug Administration and is only attainable through a physician and a pharmacist who can prepare it.

"This is not an artificial drug," Ms. Metzger said. "It's not a synthetic. It's progesterone — the natural hormone.

"It is not used in the body the same way progesterine, the synthetic form is used," she added. "At the clinic we can prescribe the level to be used. It is given in a suppository form and is very expensive, but if you have PMS, it's worth it."

Along with the progesterone, Ms. Metzger said the clinic suggests six small meals be eaten instead of three during PMS. Also, there should be a reduction of sugar, sodium, caffeine, dairy products and alcohol with a balance of fat, protein, carbohydrates and vitamins.

The clinic offers free education sessions once a month. For more information call 713-661-6644.

World War II planes to fly

BRECKENRIDGE — About 100 World War II airplanes will be flying into the Stephens County Airport in Breckenridge on Memorial Day this Sunday for the fifth annual air show sponsored by the Big Iron Squadron of the Confederate Air Force's West Texas Wing.

The show, scheduled for 1 p.m., will feature warbirds such as the B-17 Flying Fortress, the B-25 Mitchell and A-26 bombers, Marine Corps and Navy Corsairs, Wildcats and Bearcats and U.S. Army Air Corps P-51 and P-40 fighters.

The three-hour show will depict famous World War II battles.

CAF Cols. Howard Pardue and Bill Arnott, co-chairmen of the show, will be flying several of the aircraft.

Pilots participating in the show will be flying in from many points in Texas and from Canada, California, Wyoming, Oklahoma and New Mexico.

The CAF is a patriotic organization formed to acquire, restore, maintain and fly World War II aircraft as a flying museum to depict the American military aviation heritage.

The show is open to the public.

Landowners hold key to conservation of soil

Today, Siegel was to meet in Lubbock with members of the Underground Water Conservation District. In the High and South Plains, farmers and ranchers are concerned about the Ogallala Aquifer, which is being depleted in large measure by irrigation. More water is being pumped from the aquifer, which serves much of the Midwest, than is being returned to the water formation by natural processes.

The SCS is seeking a more "efficient use of water," Siegel said.

Siegel is the first high-ranking, secretary-level SCS official to visit Midland since the mid-1970s.

"We're especially honored to have Siegel take time out of the highly responsible job that he has to do," said Gary Westmoreland, Texas state resource conservationist, "and to see the conservation programs...carried out by farmers and ranchers" across Texas.

Midland officials ask residents to avoid unnecessary water usage

With heavy water usage and two broken pumps causing low water pressure throughout the city, Midland officials asked residents Wednesday to avoid unnecessary water usage until the situation can be corrected.

The city announced that water usage has hovered near the 35 million gallon per day mark recently. At the same time two large water pumps at Paul Davis Well Field are broken down.

City officials asked the Midland Independent School District, Midland College and the Parks and Recreation Department to limit their water use in an attempt to curb the possibility of a water shortage.

The city announced Wednesday that it can maintain the 35 million gallon per day rate, but encouraged residents to avoid unnecessary watering that might push daily water consumption past 35 million gallons.

The two pumps are expected to be repaired next week and city officials requested residents' cooperation in limiting water usage until then.

Southwestern Bell to refund money

Beginning Wednesday, Southwestern Bell's Texas customers should see credits on their bills reflecting about $31.2 million in refunds.

The refunds are the difference between bonded rates implemented Nov. 9, 1982, and those approved by the Public Utility Commission's final order in the company's 1982 rate request. The order became effective Jan. 11, 1983, according to Sam Ogletree.

"The amount of refund varies among cities according to size," he said, "but for most of Texas the one-time refund should fall between $5.20 and $6.30 for a single-party residence line."

Ogletree said amounts credited are refunds on local service, some number services such as Directory Assistance, business non-recurring charges, and taxes. The credits include 13.7 percent simple annual interest on bonded revenues exceeding the PUC-approved amount. Interest totals about $2 million statewide on the disallowed revenues held from Nov. 9 through May.

Southwestern Bell plans to complete the refund process by mid-June. Customers who have terminated service since Nov. 9 should receive checks for their refunds.

Lightning blamed for two area fires

Lightning was blamed for two fires Wednesday, one of which heavily damaged a portion of a two-story, wood frame home owned by George Vann at 6410 Sequoia.

Firemen responding to that call at 4:20 p.m. spent 40 minutes extinguishing the blaze, which occurred in insulation material.

Shortly after 4:30 p.m., firemen were called to 2403 S. Midkiff Road, where a tin building had been hit by lightning. No damage was reported.

According to Britton, Bell based the amount of revenue dollars to be lost by MISD on tax valuations set three years ago. County property will be re-evaluated by the tax appraisal district's office this year, Britton said.

According to Bell, the 2,000 acres of HBF land that MISD would lose would bring in about $114,000 worth of revenue.

"I know that currently the majority of the HBF property is on the tax rolls at $9 an acre," Britton said, adding the land fell under the Agriculture Exemption Act.

"But some has sold for $2,500 an acre," he said.

Britton later explained that while acreage priced at $9 would make the "tax benefit (for MISD) minimum," he said the price and value will rise with the next valuation made by the tax appraisal district.

"It's probably gonna be propped up to $2,000 an acre," Britton said.

"It's the school board's belief, or at least mine, that it is not at all unrealistic that within five years the land will be worth $25,000 an acre (when the property develops)," Britton said. He added usually there are two to three lots per acre and a price of $12,500 per lot is "quite conservative."

Britton explained that $25,000 multiplied by 4,000 acres would give the area a valuation of $100 million. With a tax rate of 7.5 cents per $100 valuation, taxes would be roughly a quarter of a million dollars, he said.

That figure is far from the $114,000 estimate made by Bell — but it also is based on estimates of future valuations.

Bell said MISD pays about $1,400 in local funds to educate it's students. Based on the 80 students living in the area, about $112,000 worth of expense would be eliminated if the students were in ECISD, he said.

According to Don Furgeson, MISD business manager, that's a close figure. Actually, Furgeson said, total cost of education per student is $2,848. Forty percent of that total comes from state funds while 4 percent is federally financed. Furgeson said $1,594 in local funds is spent per student.

Bell also noted the cost of running buses into the area would be eliminated. Actual transportation costs were unavailable Wednesday.

While Bell said a loss of $114,000 in tax revenues and a loss of at least $112,000 in expenses make the situation a "break-even deal," Britton said it doesn't.

"With the development of (the area), I don't think it's realistic the land will be valued at $25,000 an acre," Britton told trustees, adding valuation would increase as houses are built.

"You're talking about 77½ percent that is three-quarters of a million dollars in taxes that this district would lose.

"I would love to build a school out there and have three-quarters of a million dollars out there in revenues," Britton said. "I don't think it's a break-even deal."

Bell said the development of Mission Dorado could take up to 20 years.

Child care center receives donations

Corporate Fund Executive Director Bruce H. Esterline said the contributions will help in the effort to make child care "affordable and have quality" at the same time. He said Taylor Park Child Care Center "is a model the community should be proud of."

The 12,000-square-foot center, which opened April 4 at Goode Street and Griffin Avenue, is part of Midland County's $1.6 million federal community development program. The center was built for about $350,000 from federal grants and from additional funds, totaling $70,000, from the city of Midland and from Midland County.

"This is a quality program for all the community," said Debora Phillips, the center's executive director, "and not simply babysitting."

The Corporate Fund, which is funded by 36 Texas corporations, annually contributes $150,000 to $200,000 to child-care centers in Texas. Basis for business support of child care is that society ultimately will benefit from quality child care, Esterline said.

The center affords care for children while the parents are at work, Esterline said. And quality child care will convert to better education for the children, to better grades, and, ultimately, to good jobs and more production, which benefit business and society.

"It's a business investment both in the short- and long-haul," said Esterline, who is headquartered in Austin.

The Corporate Fund was founded about four years ago as a public-private sector partnership by the Levi Strauss Foundation and the Texas Department of Human Resources.

The $3,000 in checks were presented to David Mims, treasurer of the Midland Child Care Corp. which operates the child care center, by Esterline and Bill Franklin, president of First City National Bank of Midland.

"First City National is very pleased to combine our resources with those of our parent organization (the Bancorporation) in such a way that our local community benefits," Franklin said.

The Bancoporation, one of Corporate Fund's 36 sponsors, is a 61-member statewide bank holding company headquartered in Houston.

"We want to thank the First City organization for their support to the center," said Manuel Carrasco, president of the child care's board of directors. "These grants will enable us to provide scholarships to at least 20 families in Midland."

While Taylor Park Child Care Center develops, it needs donations of toys, craft supplies, landscaping work, furnishings, and playground materials, said Ms. Phillips. She may be telephoned at 687-2330 for information on donations and on the scholarship program.

The center, which has a capacity for 140 children, currently has about 70 in the program.

MISD board approves bids for remodeling

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

A reduced bid for the remodeling of the Midland High School office area and bids on cash registers and athletic materials were approved by Midland Independent School District trustees Tuesday afternoon.

Also accepted was a contract concerning advanced refunding of bonds and a depository bid for school funds.

Action on a bid submitted by Area Builders, Inc., for the MHS office remodeling was tabled at the last meeting. According to Trustee Ron Britton, the board's architectural committee had not had a chance to review the proposal.

Trustees were told Tuesday that following a lengthy meeting where several cuts were made, the job still will cost more than the $127,000 originally estimated.

Including the need for a new air conditioning system and an alternate bid for the renovation of windows, the bid submitted by Area Builders May 12 was $207,800.

According to Britton, the elimination of a new air conditioning system would reduce the price by $27,000. However, he added, cost of future repairs and bills would probably equal that amount.

He reminded trustees the renovation is being made on a building constructed in 1928.

Costs were reduced by eliminating smaller items and Britton said the architectural committee recommended approval of the new bid, with the following specifications:

The number of light fixtures was reduced in the new and existing areas for the amount of $1,350. Storage closet, door and frame revisions reduced costs $859 and a change in the carpet allowance deducted $3,980 from the price.

Trustees approved the bid of $201,611, which includes the remodeling of windows.

In other action, trustees awarded a bid for a two-year depository contract to Texas American Bank. According to Don Furgeson, business manager, for the first time in 20 years more than one bank submitted a bid. Texas American Bank outbid Western State Bank.

A contract with Kidder, Peabody & Co., Inc., was approved allowing for a computer study to determine if advanced refunding of bonded indebtedness would be an advantage to the school district.

According to Dr. Joseph Baressi, superintendent, under the newly approved Senate Bill 1096, municipal agencies may receive a refund of their bonded indebtedness entered into when rates were higher. Baressi said such action could result in a savings of $15 million and a change in the rate from 15 percent to 10 percent.

Bids for five electronic cash registers, two of which will be placed at the new Quanah Parker and Santa Rita elementary schools, were awarded to Odessa Cash Register for $5,575. The registers can compute the time-consuming job of figuring out breakfasts costs, reduced and free lunches.

Also, bids for athletic equipment were awarded to Oshman's Athetic Goods in Fort Worth, Taylor Sporting Goods in Midland and Angelo Sporting Goods. The items include equipment and apparel.

A bid for resurfacing three tennis courts at Alamo Junior High School for $12,000 was tabled.

A request made by the Human Relations Council to rent a classroom at the De Zavala Annex was denied because the room would not be available until after the date needed by the HRC. A request for the use of Carver Cultural Center for a religious musical during the Juneteenth celebration was granted. The musical will be held at 2:30 p.m. June 19. Gospel singing from various churches and community choirs and a speaker are included in the program.

Texan asks Reagan to postpone cattle quarantine

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Rep. Bill Patman, D., Ganado, asked President Ronald Reagan Wednesday to postpone any quarantine of Texas cattle from June 1 until January 1.

Meanwhile, the White House confirmed that the President had been given a "paper" advising him that the problem existed and that the Agriculture department planned to quarantine the Texas cattle. The purpose is to control the possible existence and spread of brucellosis.

Agriculture Secretary John Block sent the paper to the President with an explanation that the Department felt it would have no choice but to keep the Texas breeder cattle out of interstate commerce unless the Texas legislature adopts a law setting forth authority for state and federal inspectors to go on ranches and vaccinate and test cattle before they enter interstate commerce.

Only breeder stock is involved. The other cattle may still go to feeder lots and be shipped for beef into the national market.

In fact, any cattle that test positive for brucellosis after getting the live vaccine and are killed may still be shipped into interstate commerce and eaten without fear, says C.W. McMillan, assistant secretary of Agriculture.

The White House, in an obvious move to avoid queries and responsibility in the quarantine problem, suggested that further inquiries on the subject be directed to the Department of Agriculture.

The Patman letter was taken to the White House Thursday. The President is so involved in briefings for the economic summit in Williamsburg (which will take place this weekend) that many domestic matters are being diverted from his desk to staffers. However, Patman has already released information about his letter which could become known to the President through the press.

Those who oppose the brucellosis control program as presently administered, claiming that it is a subsidy for big cattle and dairy herd owners, claim to have the votes to keep the Texas senate from passing compliance legislation. The vote must come before the legislature quits next Monday.

Texan against new personnel rules

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The large numbers of civil service employes in San Antonio and South Texas could be seriously affected by new regulations proposed by the Office of Personnel Management which Rep. Solomon Ortiz, D., Corpus Christi seeks to block.

He is co-sponsoring legislation with Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D., Colo., chairman of the House civil service subcommittee, who serves with Ortiz on the House Armed Services committee.

The new provisions would affect most seriously veterans' preference, pay increases and labor management regulations.

Ortiz said "the proposed regulations represent a major policy change in the way federal workers are managed by shifting more authority to OPM to make and implement policy," said Ortiz.

"They run counter to a number of clear congressional decisions in the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, which was passed largely to give agency managers the tools to better manage their own workers.

"These proposals are nothing but another slap at federal workers," Ortiz said. "Our civil servants have born the brunt of budget cutbacks and layoffs long enough. I'll fight any move by the Administration to threaten the stability of our federal workforce.

Senate OKs vehicle-fee hike

AUSTIN (AP) — Senators voted 27-2 Wednesday to allow county commissioners to impose an extra vehicle registration fee not to exceed $5.

Summer soup: Refreshing change

Copley News Service

The winter months usually are thought of as the traditional time for soups, a good hearty broth or a thick chowder being a warm and rejuvenating balm after the chilliness out-of-doors.

While this is certainly true, soups should not be neglected as a wonderful hot weather pick-me-up. Summer soups, served chilled, make a light and easy meal on sultry summer days. Served with a loaf of crusty bread, a simple fresh tossed salad and an iced drink, these soups are a refreshingly cool menu idea.

Wen cooking or steaming vegetables, always remember to save the liquid which can later be used as vegetable broth in many recipes, especially soups. Don't, however, save water from cabbage or broccoli, as their flavors are too strong and will overpower your soup. Also good to save for broth is the mineral-rich water which has been used to soak beans.

If you don't have a blender, a good sieve can be used to prepare the Cold Cucumber and Iced Cream of Carrot soups.

With summer fast approaching, even non-vegetarians will find these cool, meatless concoctions a refreshing change from heavier fare.

4 cups vegetable broth
1 cup plain yogurt
2 tbsps. lemon juice
Dash paprika
2 tsps. chopped fresh dill, or ½ tsp. dried
⅛ tsp. pepper, freshly ground

In small pan, saute diced onion in butter, set aside. Bring broth to a boil in medium-sized pot, add cucumbers and simmer over low heat for 10 minutes. Add sauteed onions to broth. Puree in blender, or force soup through a sieve until smooth. Let cool, then blend in yogurt, lemon juice and seasonings. Chill well before serving. Serves 6.

DEAR ABBY
Gifts intended as encouragement

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: A friend whose family is divided on this asked me to write. It seems that her nephew was scheduled to graduate from high school, but he got into trouble with the law (an old habit of his) and was sentenced to six months in the county jail. However, he is being allowed to do his homework in jail in order to complete the needed credits and get his diploma.

His mother went ahead and mailed his graduation invitations and announcements to family and friends knowing he wouldn't be able to attend his own graduation. My friend thought this was a tacky thing for the mother to do. Of course, those who received graduation invitations and announcements felt obligated to send a gift.

What do you think about this? – NO TOWN OR NAME, PLEASE

DEAR NO TOWN: I think it's to the boy's credit that he chose to graduate instead of dropping out. Having that diploma will make it easier for him to shape up and stay out of trouble. Don't assume that relatives and friends sent gifts because they felt obligated. It could be their way of saying, "Congratulations for graduating anyway. Now we expect better things from you. Don't let us down."

DEAR ABBY: My wife is physically handicapped and needs help in the bathroom. When we go out, which is often, I assist her in the ladies' room.

Should I take her to the men's or ladies' restroom?

We won't cut back on our outings regardless of what people say or think. – MINNESOTAN

DEAR MINNESOTAN: I posed that question to "June," at the Westside Community for Independent Living in Los Angeles. Her reply: "No problem. The man should ask a woman to please go into the ladies' room first and tell whoever is occupying it (if indeed someone is) that a woman who needs assistance from her husband will be coming in. Most people are very understanding and cooperative."

DEAR ABBY: A mother-in-law was upset because her daughter-in-law never made a home-cooked meal for her – instead she always entertained in a restaurant. You said:

"Some people just can't handle entertaining at home. The very thought of it is so upsetting, they don't even want to make the effort, so accept the restaurant dinners with good grace, and don't let it bother you."

Thanks, Abby. No one else understood. But you did. I, too, am petrified at the thought of entertaining at home. Even when my married children are coming for dinner, I can't sleep for three days ahead of time; I wake up at 4 a.m. in a panic, simply terrified!

Books, courses, friends or family can't help me. I can't help being this way. I've fought it for 40 years, and I'm only 60. – MRS. B., ALABASTER, ALA.

DEAR MRS. B: If misery loves company, take comfort in the knowledge that you have a lot of company.

DEAR ABBY: Is there anything "improper" about having the mother of the bride escort her daughter down the aisle?

My father will be a guest at my wedding, but he and my mother have been divorced since I was a small child and my mother raised me alone. – SENTIMENTAL

DEAR SENTIMENTAL: Improper? No way. Discuss this with the clergyperson who will perform the ceremony, and good luck.

(Getting married? Whether you want a formal church wedding or a simple, "do-you-own-thing" ceremony, get Abby's new booklet. Send $1 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped (37 cents) envelope to: Abby's Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

AT WIT'S END
What is 'quality' of time?

BY ERMA BOMBECK

As usual, the conversation between the women turned to motherhood. We must have chewed it around 15 or 20 minutes before we hit a dead air pocket.

Rising to the challenge of filling up the silence, I announced with authority, "Well, it's not the quantity of time one spends with one's children – it's the quality."

I could have been swept into the White House on those words. Everyone nodded in agreement. (One woman even picked up my luncheon check.)

In truth, I hadn't the foggiest notion what I had just said.

What is the "quality of time"? Have I ever had it? Would I know it if I did?

Is it the time when you set your child down and say something meaningful like, "You can level with your mother. How do you really feel about George Bush?"

Is it the confrontation speech where you begin, "You know your father and I have always loved you" and end with "Clean out this cage or take a walk!"

Is it a character-building moment when you make a child take back a candy bar and confess to the manager that he stole it?

The quality of time has become an interesting phrase.

It was conceived about the time a lot of women began to work outside the home. Somehow it took the edge off the guilt. Despite the fact mothers have become of age and realize that all good mothers don't necessarily stay home and all bad mothers don't necessarily go out to work, the cliche has remained with us.

I think if you spread an infinite amount of love to your children you can get by with a lot of honesty. You can tell them you're tired and don't want to listen to them take three hours to tell you the plot of a two-hour movie. You can tell them you're busy but if they have a problem you can make time for it. And I'm a big believer in talking at a time when they don't want to talk. That's when they need it the most.

Conclusion: I still don't know what quality of time means.

Jasperware best known Wedgwood

By JAMES G. McCOLLAM
Member, Antique Appraisers Assoc. of America

Q: I have a soup plate with "Wedgwood" and the letters "H," "H" and "X." impressed.

I would like to know its origin and vintage. It is most certainly very old and unlike any other Wedgwood I have seen.

A: This was made in Etruria, England, in 1869 (indicated by the "X"). It would be worth about $75 to $100.

Wedgwood made about every conceivable type of ceramics — lusterware, bone china, majolica and, of course, jasperware for which Wedgwood is best-known.

Q: What can you tell me about my Ithaca calendar clock?

It has a walnut case, black dials, etched-glass pendulum, with time and strike.

A: This was made in the late 19th century and is one of the really choice collectible clocks.

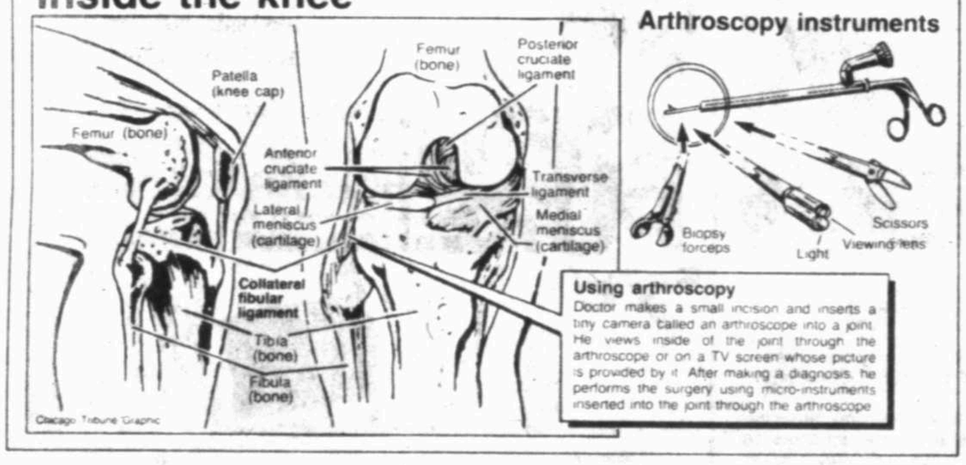
The current selling price is in the $3,500 range.

Q: I have a little pitcher marked "Avon" as shown in the sketch. I don't understand how the Avon Co. could package any of their products in a pitcher.

I know that Avon bottles are collectible. What about this?

A: There never were any cosmetics in your little pitcher. It was made by the Avon Pottery in Cincinnati, Ohio.

Inside the knee



New knee surgery method leads to speedy recovery

Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — John Unterkofler had his knee operated on at Little Company of Mary Hospital at noon April 28. About four hours later he was home.

Three days later, the 27-year-old suburban Lomita man was back at work, walking with the help of a knee brace.

Ten years ago, the surgery to repair his torn cartilage would have meant four days in the hospital, two weeks off his feet and at least a month of rehabilitation before returning to work.

"I woke up out of the anesthesia about 3:30 p.m. or so and they wheeled me away," Unterkofler said. "When I got home, I got out of the car and walked into the house. I was quite surprised."

What made the difference for Unterkofler was a relatively new but widely accepted surgical technique called video arthroscopy.

Unlike conventional operations, the procedure does not involve cutting the knee open to repair damaged cartilage or remove foreign objects.

"The main advantage is that it gets people on their feet a lot quicker," said Dr. Stephen Lombardo, who treats athletes for the Rams, Dodgers, Angels, Lakers and Kings.

"They are in and out of the hospital within 24 hours. Rehabilitation is shorter. The patient is more comfortable."

The procedure can be likened to surgical Pac-Man, in that the physician views a magnified picture of the knee joint on a television screen.

The joint is filled with a saline solution to separate the bones. Then a slim stainless-steel shaft fitted with a lens system is inserted through a small incision and connected to a television camera.

To perform the operation, the surgeon places tiny shavers and cutters inside the knee through another small incision. Watching the television screen, he manipulates the tools and removes the damaged section of cartilage.

From the patient's point of view, video arthroscopy is a relatively minor procedure, but from the surgeon's perspective it is an intricate and delicate operation requiring keen hand-eye coordination.

"It's tricky to learn," said Dr. John Stratton, chief of surgery at Little Company of Mary. "Everything is magnified and things are distorted. You really need to get the angle of the instruments right before you cut."

The technique is applied to the most common knee problems — torn cartilage, the removal of loose tissue in the joint or smoothing the inside of the kneecap. It is not used for fractures, joint replacements, tendinitis or ligament injuries.

Although the operation itself is more expensive, the entire procedure costs less than conventional surgery because only one day is spent in the hospital and the patient can return to work sooner.

Physicians like arthroscopy because the risk is less and it allows them to see nearly 100 percent of the joint, compared to 25 percent using open surgery. It also gives them a choice of completely removing the cartilage.

However, Stratton said the surgery is not for everyone. Some knee joints have tight-fitting bones or irregular contours, making it difficult, if not impossible, to use the tools.

Dr. Norman Sprague III, a close colleague of the physician who developed arthroscopy as a surgical method, also said the technique is so cost-effective it may have a built-in problem.

"It is so convenient there is some concern it may be used too much," he said. "It may be performed in needless cases even if we are able to treat without surgery."

And because the surgery is relatively new, little is known about the long-term consequences.

"While most orthopedists are doing it now, the jury is still out on the long-term effects of the technique," Lombardo said. "We've got five, 10, 15 years yet to go to find out."

One of the concerns is that the joint might become inflamed sometime after surgery. Another is that cartilage weakened by having a torn section removed could tear again. The latter isn't a concern with conventional surgery because surgeons usually remove the entire cartilage if it is damaged.

But doctors believe the risk of complications with arthroscopy is probably less, and certainly not greater, than that associated with conventional knee surgery.

The original arthroscope was developed in Japan in the 1920s as a means of looking inside the knee. But it was not a practical tool and had a tendency to break off inside the knee joint.

It was not until 1957, when Dr. Masaki Watanabi refined the scope, that it became widely accepted for diagnostic work. The first surgeries were performed in the early 1970s by the late Dr. Richard O'Conner of Covina, Calif.

Summer mountain home offers carefree style

By JAMES McALEXANDER
Copley News Service

This carefree-style three-bedroom home is adaptable to a wide variety of environments but takes best advantage of a wooded view site, or wherever the owner wants to ease the distinction between indoor and outdoor living.

A wood deck frames the striking exterior, dramatizing a full wall of windows that stretches to a summit at the cathedral ceiling of the large living area.

A large masonry fireplace is situated in such a way that its warmth and charm are shared by both the living area and the kitchen. Both loft to a second-floor balcony.

Appliances are arranged in a step-saving manner, with good space for work counters. Next door is a walk-through utility room that leads to the outside deck. In addition to the washer, dryer and deep sink, it has space for pantry needs and outdoor sports equipment.

A guest closet is located near the main entrance.

Downstairs, but apart from family activities in the living area, are two bedrooms. A full bath is at the base of the central stairway, between the general activity area and the bedrooms.

Upstairs, a third bedroom can be used as a quiet and private retreat. There is also extensive storage space upstairs.

Redecorating without waste

By BETTY W. KINSER
Copley News Service

One does not know the meaning of inconvenience until all one's bedroom furniture is in the middle of the room under drop cloths. The only way to find clean underwear is to burrow under the drop cloths and feel one's way to the dresser — hoping it is the right dresser and the right underwear!

Redecorating is fun. I love it. But it does have its disadvantages. One being that you cannot do it all in one day — or even one week. Another is that you tend to want to throw away everything and have all new in its place.

Not necessary.

When looking over a room for a potential face-lift, look at what you can keep, not what you want to throw out.

For instance, curtains. Make new ones? Not if they are still in good condition and will work into your new color scheme.

Or, if the curtains have to go, how about the bedspread. Those things don't come cheap. Make new throw pillows and perhaps a new bed ruffle and you have a brand-new look at a third the cost.

When to make new, when to go with what you have?

First, consider the condition. Is it worn, faded, frayed, limp or otherwise tired? Replace it. Against the newness of the rest of your room it will look even worse.

But if the color is right and the condition is good and it doesn't compromise your decor, go with it. The money you save can be used for new lamps or rugs or a painting for the wall.

If you choose new, should you buy or make it yourself? That's easy to figure. Balance the cost of the fabric, notions and your time against the price of the same thing new. Only you can determine whether or not it is a wise savings.

REMOVATRON

Because sometimes even nature makes mistakes. The sudden appearance of unwanted facial hair can be embarrasing. Now thanks to Removatron-the new no needle, painless method-there's an effective way to get rid of unwanted facial and body hair from the first treatment on. The Removatron method is safe and effective even on sensitive parts of the body and uses only electronic tweezers that never touch your skin. You won't feel a thing . . . you can even nap during treatment. Best yet, you can even apply make-up immediately after treatment.

Planned parenthood: And baby makes two

Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — Planned parenthood is taking on new meaning for some women. They're not waiting for Mr. Right and marriage before having a baby.

In fact, some women are choosing to be artificially inseminated to avoid any possible future involvement with the men who will father their children.

Others are choosing men they like or admire as their children's fathers, and they may or may not tell the men involved.

But they're all bound together by an overwhelming desire to have children and by the pressure they feel because most of their child-bearing years are behind them.

"I've wanted a baby for 10 years," says Mary, who is 35, single and obviously pregnant. Although she was having a relationship with the man who fathered her child, she didn't want to marry him simply to fulfill her desire for motherhood. And she has no plans to tell him that he's going to be a father this summer.

"I don't think he would be pleased. If I had asked him, I don't think he would have said yes.

"If, biologically, I could have waited until age 50 to have a baby, then I would have waited. But I felt I'd waited as long as I could."

Last year, Diane, then 34, also felt the pressure to become pregnant before it was too late. Even though she'd just broken up with a man, she decided it was the year to get pregnant. And she did. Diane's son, Eric, is 6 months old, and she says she's never been happier.

"I wound up getting pregnant by someone I liked, but I didn't actually plan it. In a way it was strange because I didn't actually take the responsibility of trying to get pregnant, but I would have gotten pregnant that year anyway."

Diane has told Eric's father that her child is his son, but she also told him she wants to raise the boy alone. And he accepts her decision.

"I thought about not telling him, but I didn't want to do that to my son. I had to make sure it would be OK for Eric to contact his father in the future if Eric wants to. I just wanted to do this by myself."

Diane and Mary found support for their non-conventional approach to motherhood at the Alternative Parenting Network in Los Angeles. Members include both heterosexual and lesbian women who want to have children without marriage.

The idea for the network came from Fae Pannor, a therapist, who in her private practice was seeing single women who desperately wanted to have children. They were telling her, "I'm getting to be 35, 36, 37 and I really want to have a baby. If I haven't found Mr. Right, I'll have a baby anyway."

Still, Pannor was surprised when 25 women showed up at the first meeting of the network in March 1982.

"I couldn't believe all those women had the same plans."

At monthly meetings, the women discuss financial preparations a single mother should make before becoming pregnant, as well as pros and cons of insemination, or using a "donor."

"It's an expensive little venture," says a woman who has had to quit her job because of complications with her pregnancy. She cautions prospective mothers to read the fine print on their insurance policies before becoming pregnant and suggests buying disability insurance, especially if they are self-employed.

One woman admits she's decided to wait until she's married before having a baby. "It's just too much of a responsibility for me to undertake alone," she says.

Another says she's canceled two appointments with her doctor to be artificially inseminated. But another woman is elated; she was inseminated the day before.

The network is a safe place to explore the possibility of being a single mother, says Pannor. "It gives women the opportunity to explore their own motivation and to be able to see that it may not be the best thing for them at this time," she says.

Decisions are not made lightly. The women talk about who will be the father of their child if they don't choose to be artificially inseminated. They worry about what to tell their child when he is old enough to ask about his father. And they wonder how their families, friends and employers will accept their decision.

Ellen, 32, who hopes to become pregnant soon by artificial insemination, and her partner, Martha, 40, plan to co-parent Ellen's child. They plan to share total responsibility for the child, just like any two-parent family, says Martha.

"Even though Ellen will be the biological mother, I would not want to be in the same household and not have the ability to love and to discipline the child," says Martha.

The couple chose artificial insemination to avoid the possibility that the biological father would ever want to become involved in their child's life. They cite an instance in which a woman they know was impregnated by a friend who later sued for joint custody.

Artificial insemination can be expensive. The charge for a vial of sperm is about $55. "Ideally, we need two or three vials each time," says Ellen. To save money she inseminates herself.

AIDS not a threat to general population

WASHINGTON (AP) — AIDS, the disease which makes the human body prey to infections by erasing its immune system, strikes several new victims each day but doesn't threaten the general population, the government says.

Dr. Edward N. Brandt Jr., the assistant secretary for health and head of the federal Public Health Service, said Tuesday that nearly 40 percent of the 1,450 American victims diagnosed with the disease have died.

They remain primarily in certain sectors of the population. About 71 percent have been homosexual or bisexual men with multiple sexual partners, 17 percent have been intravenous drug abusers, 5 percent have been Haitian and one percent have been hemophiliacs.

Prepare for trips, ready supplies

By ANNE JONES
Copley News Service

It's time to reactivate the family recreational vehicle in preparation for another season of outdoor fun. If the whole family pitches in, you can get your rig ready for the road in one afternoon.

The camping experts at Kampgrounds of America, offer these tips to make the job easier:

— Visually inspect the unit's holding tank discharge pipe to make sure the cap is closed tightly.

— Flush all drains with clean water to remove antifreeze in the drain traps.

— Drain the antifreeze from the fresh water (potable tank). If you use a clean container to catch the antifreeze, you can use it again when you store your vehicle. Close the drain after the tank is drained.

— Repeat the process of filling and draining the freshwater tank a few times to remove all the antifreeze. Then close the valve and fill with enough water to flush both the hot and cold water lines.

— Reconnect the electrical lead or replace the fuse, if you took it out of the unit's water pump or pressurization pump.

— Make sure all faucets are turned off.

— If your vehicle has a compressor, turn it on to pressurize the water system. If you have a direct "on demand" water pump, all you have to do is turn it on.

— Starting with the cold water part of your system, open each faucet a little, one at a time, and let the water run until it flows clear. Repeat the process for the hot water side of the system, including any shower faucets your vehicle has. Use all the water in the tank for the flushing process. (Many RV owners bypass the unit's hot water tank during the winterization process to avoid having to fill the tank with antifreeze.)

— Disconnect the bypass line and reconnect your hot and cold water lines. Make sure the drain faucet left open during winter is tightly closed. If you didn't use the bypass method, you'll have to completely drain and flush your hot water tank.

— Replace the auxiliary and engine starting batteries if they were removed for storage. Check fluid levels and make sure all terminal connections are clean. Spray with anti-corrosion lubricant and check all cables and boxes. Then, test all electrical components.

— Be cautious when starting your RV engine for the first time after a long storage period. Check oil, transmission fluid and coolant levels before starting the engine. When you start the engine, don't rev it up. The engine should be allowed to idle for several minutes to avoid serious internal damage.

Now all you have to do is complete your tuneup, check the tires, wash your vehicle and you're ready for the road.

If boating is your hobby, take care to check out the trailer as well as your boat before setting off on vacation.

"One of the most common problems boaters have with their trailers is wheel bearing failure caused by corrosion," says John Adams, an engineer at the ball- and roller-bearing group at Federal-Mogul Corp.

"Trailers frequently sit for long periods of time and then have to perform at highway speeds, usually in hot weather," he explains. "By the time the boater arrives at his destination, the trailer wheels, bearings and seals are heated up to their normal operating temperature and then are submerged in cold water when the boat is launched."

That rapid change in temperature causes a pressure change in the wheel cavity which can draw water past the wheel seals where it contaminates the grease and begins corroding the bearings.

The solution is simple. Inspect and lubricate regularly to avoid wheel bearing problems. A monthly inspection during boating season, which includes packing the bearing with grease and checking the seals for cuts and wear, should keep your trailer wheels in good operating condition.

If you don't feel comfortable doing your own maintenance, either have a professional do it for you or ask for advice and assistance. Once you learn to care for your wheel bearing and seals, you'll find that it's easy to keep your trailer in good shape for safer traveling.

Edgecombe house spacious split-level

By JAMES McALEXANDER
Copley News Service

The Edgecombe is a spacious split-level home for those looking for more than "the usual" to build on a sloping lot.

Skylights accent the variances in roof level, as well as giving natural illumination to the sheltered entry. The home makes generous use of windows, both for setting mood and to allow as much light and view as possible even on cloudy days.

A good view is also the consideration in planning the levels: The bedroom wing is on the main level, with the living areas a few steps up for better vantage. The large living room gains additional visual space as the dining room is separated from it by a "half-wall' rather than being a completely separate room. Both rooms have full walls of windows. Floor-to-ceiling bookshelves and a built-in wood box flank a masonry fireplace.

Extra working space and a corner sink with a view make the U-shaped kitchen more than just a convenient place to prepare meals. Neither full-scale canning in the fall nor extensive entertaining would tax this kitchen! An added feature is the attractive nook for sunny breakfasts. Space is allowed here for a 5-foot-long built-in china closet.

Added storage space is provided throughout the home. The hallway on the main level holds another bookshelf section, linen closet and closet for guest use. An indoor utility opens to this bedroom hall and serves as a mud-room entrance from the back yard. It is adjacent to a spacious bathroom, compartmentalized for use by more than one person at a time. There are two comfortable-sized bedrooms.

The master suite is an elegant private getaway. Corner window seats create an atmosphere for peaceful daydreaming, reading or talking. The dressing area — with long vanity and walk-in closet — has a private bath that contains a second vanity, commode and shower large enough to share.

The lower level of the Edgecombe is made up of a two-car garage and a large party or game room with its own entrance and its own access to the patio for summer entertaining. There is a half-bath, closet and plenty of space for a pool table, eletric train set, or even a home office or guest room.

For more information on the Edgecombe (108-03), send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Designer Homes, Landmark Designs, P.O. Box 2832 CN, Eugene, OR 97402. Designers, architects and readers with plans they would like to see featured also are invited to contact Landmark.

Hints on stretching space

Q. My husband and I recently bought a second home to use for short vacations and weekend trips.

The house has one medium-size main room which I want to serve as living room, dining room and kitchen , one bedroom and one bathroom.

Because it is small, I have to make each inch count. Please give us some suggestions on how to plan for just the two of us.— R.B.

A. It is possible to create a compact yet workable kitchen along one wall — lining up an apartment-size stove and refrigerator with sink and dishwasher.Don't forget to plan for shelves and/or cabinets for storage.

I've seen similar kitchens created which have foldable doors that can be pulled across to close off the kitchen .

Reader's advice for sewing with silk

By BETTY W. KINSER
Copley News Service

No matter what the sewing problem, there seems to be a friend out there ready and willing to help.

Here is one in answer to my frustrating problem of working with sheer, sheer silk.

Dear Mrs. Kinser: I've just finished reading your column in our local paper. The subject was your experience in making a silk blouse.

I make my living sewing custom silk and polyester fabric blouses for shops in Tyler, Dallas and Houston. I have been sewing for the past 45 years and, after reading of your experience, it seems to me you made it more difficult than it needed to be.

In cutting silk fabric, I use heavy weights to hold the pattern on the fabric. These weights look like the tips on canes, are filled with lead andhave felt bottoms.

I cut with Wiss scalloping shears to prevent fraying. This eliminates the need for French or fancy seam finishes.

I use the very lightweight iron-on type interfacing, applying it with my steam iron set on high. My "Iron Safe" Teflon-coated shoe on the iron prevents scorching.

Opponents of Energy Secretary James Watt left little doubts about their feelings when they placed this sign, reading "Burn WATT not Coal" high among the rocks of Zion National Park in southwest Utah. Professional climbers were being called in to retrieve the sign, 120 feet up a 300-foot cliff.

Expert climbers remove anti-Watt sign from cliff

ZION NATIONAL PARK, Utah (AP) — Two expert climbers visiting friends in the area scaled a sandstone cliff in this southwestern Utah park and removed a sign critical of Interior Secretary James Watt.

The sign, about 200 feet up a 300-foot cliff near Weeping Rock, was removed Tuesday, said park Superintendent Harry Grafe.

The nylon banner, reading, "Burn Watt, Not Coal," had been mounted on boards and wired and wedged into a crevice on the cliff, he said.

Three National Park Service employees spent about eight hours on the cliff Monday, but were unable to reach the 10-by-20-foot sign.

The sign was put up sometime prior to Watt's trip to the park Sunday. Officials said the interior secretary saw it and had been concerned for the safety of the people who would have to remove it.

The park service climbing team tried unsuccessfully to traverse the unstable cliff face to the crevice.

Man prefers horses to people

ARIVACA, Ariz. (AP) — John Frye is a man on horseback heading for Montana and a dream of building a new home in a new town without a name.

The 44-year-old miner and saloon keeper says he's had more than enough of people and highways.

Gathering his two sons, a friend and a string of pack animals, Frye mounted up Monday for the long, hot ride. He expects to reach Montana in something under three months.

"It was time to do something else," he said of his decision to leave this hamlet on the northern edge of the Coronado National Forest about 10 miles from Arizona's border with Mexico.

Making the move on horseback is a matter of "just the challenge of the thing," he said during his first trail break — the Cow Palace Saloon in Amado, about 20 miles further north but next door to bustling Interstate 19.

"My Dad and I were going to take a trip to South America on horses, but I was always too busy," Frye said. "Next thing you know, he dies, and we can't go. So I'm taking my boys and we're going."

Frye's destination is Livingston, Mont. — a ride of about 1,200 miles.

"This trip on the horses is going to clear our heads," he said. "Then, when we get to Montana, me and the boys are going to build a town, build it from scratch.

"We've got a little money, and we've got some land there. We're going to start felling timber and building this fall. We're going to build cabins. But the first thing we're going to build is a church where everybody can come in and be comfortable. It's going to be a church with a pool table and a dance floor."

Frye and his sons, Rick, 24, and Rocky, 16, and family friend Scott McKenzie, 24, said they were well prepared for the journey.

"In a way, it's going to be real civilized," Frye said. "We're going to travel 15, maybe 20 miles a day. We're going to stop for fishing when we want to. We're going to stop at bars.

"We'll have three pack horses and two pack mules. We'll carry ice and beer and whiskey and Yukon Jack (Canadian whiskey liqueur). We've got our bedrolls. We've got food and pots and pans. We're going to be real comfortable.

"We'll try to cut away from the highways. We want to stay away from people if we can. We've seen all the people we need for a while.

"We'll have to go into a town every once in a while to get a little grain for the horses and, while we're at it, get a little ice and beer for ourselves. But most of the time we'll be camping out."

Frye said the group plans to ride north to Tucson, past Oracle, through the Apache Reservation, northeast into Colorado, on to Jackson Hole, Wyo., then into Montana.

"Maps? We don't need them," Frye said.

Drowning threatens even the most experienced swimmers

Copley News Service

CHICAGO — What would you do if a boat you were in tipped over and you were unexpectedly thrown into the water?

Each year from 6,000 to 8,000 people drown, many from just this kind of accident. "Survival Swimming: To Save a Life," a film produced by the Encyclopaedia Britannica Educational Corp., points out that the possibility of drowning threatens even the most experienced swimmer. Just knowing how to swim may not be enough in a sudden emergency.

There are several typical water emergencies: an early morning fisherman tips over his small boat in the icy waters of a lake; a young surfer is pulled far out from the shore by ocean currents; a fully dressed hiker stumbles into a fast-flowing river, and a sailboat passenger falls overboard on the open sea unobserved by his companions.

What should they have learned before these emergencies happened?

The first rule is to stay calm. The second rule is to remember that you can float. It may not be easy if you are fully clothed, but unless the water is extremely choppy, you can stay afloat. Third, immediately start to tread water. Fourth, remember that the clothes you are wearing can help keep you alive.

Here are some specifics:

1. TREADING WATER — To tread water maintain your head barely above the water's surface and move your legs in a slow, pedaling motion. Keep your legs as relaxed as possible. Try not to exert too much energy. Rest as frequently as possible. Don't try to keep your entire body out of the water. It is not necessary.

2. ARM STROKES — By keeping your arms moving you can maintain your head above water. Again the idea is not to waste energy but to stroke easily and gently. The sidestroke and the breaststroke are the most useful as they do not require the swimmer to lift his legs or arms above the water's surface.

3. FLOATING — The survival float is perhaps the most important element in survival swimming. It is used when you must remain in the water for a long time. Float on your back. Relax your arms and legs, float with your head slightly submerged, use a gentle kick and a downward thrust of your arms. The survival stroke takes less energy than any other stroke, according to the Britannica experts.

4. CLOTHING — Many people fail to realize that clothing can be used as flotation devices. A windbreaker, for instance, can be turned into a makeshift life vest. Since most wet cloth can hold air, just filling the jacket with air then holding it closed at the waist and neck will create a floating aid. To trap air, zip windbreaker up the front, tie at the neck and arms, sweep through the air and bring down quickly on the water, trapping air inside. Tie at waist.

Pants, too, can serve as a buoy. First, remove shoes and pants. To do this, float like a jelly fish with no tension in the body, head and arms down. Slowly slip off your shoes and pants. Tie knots in the ends of the pant legs. Fill the garment with air, and hold it closed at the waistband. While wet clothing is heavy out of water, learn how to use it while you are still in the water. It may save your life.

What should have been done at the time of the four water emergencies listed earlier?

The fisherman who overturned his boat stays calm. He clings to his boat, which is still floating, and signals for help.

Refugees cast in 'King and I' roles

BELLEVUE, Wash. (AP) — Many performers in a church production of "The King and I" had never seen a play before. But the actors — most of them refugees from Southeast Asia — have "blossomed" in the musical, set in what is now Laos and Thailand, a producer says.

"I don't think it's ever been done before. It's been the most rewarding experience I've ever had," Diane Hart, who produced the show with her husband, John, said Thursday.

"The people have blossomed so much in the show. They tend to be shy and withdrawn and this has drawn them out," she added. "They're naturals, just wonderful."

The five months spent in rehearsal gave the 88 cast members — 66 of them refugees from Cambodia, Laos or Vietnam — the chance to get to know one another despite their different languages and lingering distrust from centuries of conflict.

Many of the costumes are clothes that the actors brought with them, packed away for arduous trips through refugee camps to the United States, said Mrs. Hart. Many other costumes were sewn by refugee mothers of youngsters in the play.

The Rogers and Hammerstein musical is the story of Anna, an English woman who goes to Siam as governess to the king's many children, which actually occurred 150 years ago.

The Harts took 30 of the players to nearby Seattle recently to see their first play — Yul Brynner in the title role of the road production of "The King and I."

Other refugees flocked to the Hart house to watch the play time and again on a video tape machine. "They'd never seen a play and kept asking if it was true and if Yul Brynner was the real king, and why he was bald," Mrs. Hart said.

Performances of the musical — three were held last weekend, and three more will be held this weekend at the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Bellevue — give non-Asians the chance to get to know the refugees and see them shine in a musical that is both Asian and American.

Mrs. Hart said she is pleased that in many ways the production is authentic.

The 26 dancers, for example, are Southeast Asian teen-agers taught by Khammeng Prachansery of Laos. Ms. Prachansery had never seen a western musical, so she worked with church member Wendy Amendola in choreographing the "Uncle Tom's Cabin" dance scene. But, says Mrs. Hart, "when they dance for us, the way they hold their hands, the way they move, is the way it's supposed to be. In the Hollywood movie, it's all Americans."

The children in the cast speak English, but most of the adults don't — which made rehearsals a four-language procedure.

The language problem is also why non-Asians appear in several Asian roles. The King is played by Nico Snel, Seattle Philharmonic conductor, and his No. 1 wife, Lady Thiang, is played by Claudia Smart.

However, Mo Ti Pham, who plays Tuptim, a young girl brought from Burma as a present for the king, is Vietnamese and for 14 years was a nun in that country.

14-year-old turns computer critic

DALLAS (AP) — If you've ever wondered whether a $30 video game cartridge would have enough aliens to shoot down, goblins to munch or treasure to find, just ask software critic Chris Barker.

The 14-year-old computer whiz believes he's on the cutting edge of a new profession — reviewing video games for consumers.

"It's kind of like reviewing a movie," says Chris. "But you pay considerably more for a computer game and don't necessarily have as much fun."

Chris' new career was launched at a software store where he was showing people how to play computer games. He caught the attention of the editor of a local software advertising magazine who worked at the store and who asked him to review new adventure games for the publication.

"We were impressed with Chris' mannerisms and his use of large words for his age," said Doug Stone, editor of Softworld.

Chris received a discount on the adventure games he reviewed in return for his work.

The magazine recently stopped publishing, but Chris is thinking about reviewing software — the instructions that tell a computer how to perform a specific function — for other local computer publications.

Smith, Meese assist on book

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorney General William French Smith and presidential counselor Edwin Meese are among contributors to a New Right group's book which advocates sweeping anti-crime proposals, some of which go beyond administration policy.

Smith would bar state prisoners from using the writ of habeas corpus to have federal courts review the legality of their convictions, although the administration has only proposed limitations on that right.

Steven Schlesinger, new chief of the Justice Department's Bureau of Justice Statistics, calls for abolition of the exclusionary rule, which bans illegally gathered evidence from trials, and criticizes the administration's proposed modification of the rule.

The book, "Criminal Justice Reform, a Blueprint," is to be unveiled Tuesday at a luncheon at which Meese will speak. The book is the second in a conservative campaign led by Paul M. Weyrich, president of the Free Congress Research and Education Foundation, which produced both volumes.

In November 1981, the foundation published "A Blueprint for Judicial Reform," a collection of essays advocating sharp restrictions on the power of federal judges, particularly over social issues like segregation, abortion and school prayer.

The new collection is billed as a blueprint for "a major restructuring of our criminal justice system." It says that its 18 authors, including administration officials, senators and academics, are expressing only their personal views.

The contributors advocate tougher sentences for drug crimes; a federal pornography statute; wider use of the death penalty, illegally gathered evidence, and pre-trial preventive detention; and restrictions on gun controls, convicts' appeals and citizens' ability to obtain government documents through the Freedom of Information Act.

In his chapter on habeas corpus, a order requiring that a prisoner be brought before a court to determine the legality of the sentence, Smith writes: "The availability of habeas corpus to state prisoners...has little or no value in avoiding injustices or ensuring that the federal rights of criminal defendants are respected." It does, however, overcrowd federal courts, Smith says.

He argues that this appeal right was expanded in the 1950s when "the criminal justice systems of many states were subverted by the effects of state-enforced racial segregation." But Smith says, "these conditions no longer exist. Institutionalized racism has fallen" because of federal civil rights laws and Supreme Court decisions.

As a practical matter, Smith says, abolishing the right to federal review of state convictions is not likely to be achieved soon. Meantime, he backs the administration's proposal to limit the time for such appeals to one year after conviction.

Schlesinger, a former politics professor at Catholic University, argues for replacing the exclusionary rule with a review board of citizens, judges and law officers to discipline officers who violate the law in gathering evidence. He also advocates allowing victims of illegal searches to sue for damages from the government which employed the law officer.

The Reagan administration has proposed amending the rule to allow use of illegally gathered evidence if the officer acted in a good-faith belief the seizure was legal. Schlesinger says the Reagan proposal "provides little or no deterrence for violations deemed by the courts to be in good faith" and "puts a substantial premium on the ignorance of law enforcement officers."

Media might influence medical decisions for transplant patients

Hearst Feature Service

Concern is growing over the media "star" treatment given children in need of liver transplants amid reports that such coverage may be unduly influencing medical decisions and the selection of patients.

Some new details of 13-month-old Brandon Hall's battle with liver disease is a case in point.

The Mississippi boy remains in "extremely critical condition" after receiving a second liver transplant at LeBonheur Childrens Medical Center in Memphis, Tenn.

National media attention focused on Brandon when his mother carried the dying boy to a Congressional hearing on donor organ procurement problems.

He was rushed from the hearing room back to Memphis when word reached the family that a long-sought liver had finally been found.

However, two heart stoppages during that first transplant damaged Brandon's entire circulatory systems and notably his lungs.

The lack of oxygenation and a blockage in the main blood vessel feeding the new liver soon destroyed the organ.

What has been less well reported is that although the second liver was implanted, doctors seriously questioned the wisdom of doing so.

"The medical team caring for Brandon raised the issue very seriously and held much discussion about it," according to John Donica, spokesman for the team and LeBonheur hospital.

"The boy's lungs were already damaged and he had to be artificially ventillated a long time, doing further injury."

That raised the possibility that his lungs were so compromised that a second transplant would be wasted effort.

The scarcity of donor livers and the long waiting list for transplants further complicated the issue.

Only four medical centers perform liver transplants in the U.S. and the American Liver Foundation estimates there are 100 adults and children who urgently need them at present.

"The medical and transplant teams carefully evaluated Brandon's chances with a second liver and decided he could not only make it but could keep going after he got out of critical care," Donica said.

Brandon is not the first to have more than one transplant. The University of Pittsburgh transplant center has done 17 double transplants and one triple, half of these in children.

Sheep, koalas feeling the hard times

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post New Service

SYDNEY, Australia — Two of Australia's most renowned animals are feeling the hard times.

The onset of winter Down Under brings the prospect of millions of chilly, or frustrated, sheep. A strike by shearers over the width of a comb means the sheep have too much wool to mate and will be out in the cold when they do get sheared.

Meanwhile, the country's cuddly koala bears — which are not really bears at all and may not be so cuddly — have never been so insulted. The minister of tourism, seeking to widen the image of what makes Australia attractive, dismissed the koala, saying it is "flea-ridden, it piddles on you, it stinks and it scratches."

The difficulties of Australia's 132 million sheep stem from a strike by up to 20,000 shearers.

In one of those labor disputes that baffle non-Australians and that even many of the initiated find absurd, the shearers went on strike two months ago to protest the use of wide combs on shears.

It seems that the thousands of New Zealanders working in Australia have introduced a steel comb that is 13 millimeters (about half an inch) wider than the standard size agreed between woolgrowers and the shearers of the Australian Workers' Union.

The shearers get paid per sheep shorn, and they presumably can shear more sheep in the same amount of time with a wider comb. But they feel that eventually wider combs might cost some jobs, and they are determined to enforce use of the union-stipulated size.

This is not only bad news for Australia's $2 billion-a-year wool industry; it is also hard on the sheep. As a result of the strike at the height of the shearing season, many of them are getting quite woolly. Hence the difficulty in mating.

And even if they do manage it, many ewes may not survive the rigors of lambing because of the heavy load of wool they are carrying, sheep owners warn. Many lambs, too, may die from being unable to suckle, the owners say.

Analyst kills himself

ARLINGTON, Va. (AP) — The death of a former Pentagon intelligence analyst who was charged with selling secrets to Libya has been ruled a suicide by police in this Washington suburb.

Arlington County police said Tuesday that Waldo H. Dubberstein, 75, died of an apparently self-inflicted gunshot. "All the evidence available at this time supports that classification," said police spokesman Thomas Bell.

Dubberstein's body was found in the basement of an apartment building on April 29 several hours after he failed to appear in U.S. District Court in Alexandra. He was scheduled to plead guilty charges he sold the secret information about the Middle East to Edwin P. Wilson and Libyan intelligence agents.

Wilson, a former agent for the Central Intelligence Agency, has been convicted of smuggling explosives and other weapons to Libya.

Bell said Dubberstein's body did not contain any traces of drugs or alcohol. "All other lab tests support the suicide ruling," he said.

'Teacher Terrorizer' wave of the future?

Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Young Jesse Chang's design for a "Teacher Terrorizer" of the future had a certain brutal simplicity to it.

"When your teacher (or any teacher) gets you in trouble," his explanation read, "push the start button and a giant grabber-claw comes out and tears up the teacher, limb by limb."

"I think it's nice the kids feel free enough," laughed Watson Omohundro, the teacher in question. Omohundro was on hand at Futureworld Expo '83 in the Los Angeles Convention Center to explain the designs which his third-, fourth- and fifth-graders had come up with for their exhibit.

"It's a joke," Omohundro added quickly. "Jesse's really a good student."

But entrepreneurs Bill Lieberg, 24, and Todd Mills, 35, are serious about their Expo. They staged it to show the general public what might be in store for them in the future.

"We want to create a positive visualization of the future," Mills said. "We're trying to show people the best that technology has to offer. We're hoping to create here an experience of the 21st century."

Mills and Lieberg expect up to 150,000 visitors at the four-day Futureworld.

Renowned philosopher, author and futurist Buckminster Fuller appeared Thursday to sign copies of his books.

"Technology has progressed to such an extent that we can significantly improve the standard of living for everybody in the world," said the 88-year-old Fuller.

How much has it progressed?

The Ford Motor Co. displayed two automobiles of the future — the sleek, futuristic Probe IV passenger car, aerodynamically designed for both speed and fuel efficiency, and the Continental Concept 100. The latter's standard features include an onboard computer which, when linked with a "transit navigation satellite," pinpoint the car's location on maps that flash across a screen in the dashboard.

Although that model is not now in production, some of the electronic features will be featured in 1984-85 models of the Continental Mark 7.

Robots were everywhere, although most served merely as attention-getting devices. Only at the "cosmic kabobs" and "constellation chicken" stands did they actually perform a function: serving drinks.

Along with the latest in high technology — personal computers, video systems, and lasers — the Expo includes some marginally offbeat future shocks.

For instance, there's a chair "that hugs you back" — a long, pliable tube that can be molded around the body; Bionic Muscle Toning, which electrically stimulates muscles to produce "any body you want," and, oh, yes, something green and organic called "Brain Food."

Former Vice President Walter Mondale, a Democratic candidate for president, displays the perch he caught on frozen Pontook Reservoir in New Hampshire in January.

State politicians herald primary

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — As the nation's leadoff presidential primary gets closer, New Hampshire politicians herald the civic value of the one-on-one politicking it produces. They also await its more tangible benefits: money, influence, patronage and political advantage.

"It's very subtle," said former Gov. Hugh Gregg, a veteran campaign organizer. "You can go down to Washington on any legislative matter, and as soon as they find out you're from New Hampshire, they say, 'How's the political situation up there?' They give you recognition. They give you status."

They also give jobs. Politicians from both parties say New Hampshire primary campaign workers have been landing administration posts since former Gov. Sherman Adams became assistant to President Eisenhower three decades ago.

"After your candidate wins, there is a wonderful patronage system that falls into place," said Executive Councilor Dudley Dudley, the state's top Democrat and one of five elected state officials who advise and act with the governor on state matters. "I'm not saying those people aren't well-qualified. It's just a way for them to make their abilities known."

WHAT NEW Hampshire gives Washington in bureaucrats, it gains in business. The state expects more than $10 million directly from the 1984 primary, and millions more from tourism spurred by all the free advertising.

"Let's say you show a picture of Walter Mondale fishing on Lake Umbagog. That gets national attention," said George Gilman, commissioner of economic development. "People see it and say, 'Hey, let's take a drive up there.'"

"Obviously it's known around town that there are a lot of New Hampshire people down here. That's how you get here — if you work on a political campaign."
Carroll Jones, former state GOP chairman

Mondale and the other five Democratic candidates should lead the spending spree between now and the primary in February. Each is alloted about $391,000 in the state, or nearly $3 per New Hampshire Democrat.

The candidates also attract money for state politicians. Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, for example, attended a fund-raiser for the late Gov. Hugh Gallen in November 1981, 16 months before announcing his run for president. Last year, Vice President George Bush helped raise $160,000 for John Sununu, who went on to unseat Gallen.

STATE POLITICIANS benefit as well from the networks that presidential candidates leave behind. "You can use somebody else's money to put your own organization in place," said Rep. Bruce Rounds, House Republican leader. "And you get the benefit of the organization whether it won or not."

Further, campaign workers with their own political aspirations learn from sophisticated voter analyses done for the presidential contenders. "It's the polling results that you have access to," said Carroll Jones, former state GOP chairman. "You learn a lot things that could help you down the road."

Jones, an assistant commissioner of the General Services Administration, is among the most recent crop of New Hampshire political activists to land federal jobs. Others include his boss, GSA Administrator Gerald Carmen, a leader of President Reagan's New Hampshire campaign in 1980; and Max Hugel, a Reagan backer who became deputy director of the Central Intelligence Agency, later to resign amid allegations of improper stock deals, which he denied.

"OBVIOUSLY IT'S known around town that there are a lot of New Hampshire people down here," said Jones, who reeled off a half-dozen names. "That's how you get here — if you work on a political campaign."

It's worked as well for Democrats. Ellis Woodward went from Jimmy Carter's New Hampshire campaign to work in Carter's White House. William Shaheen, husband of Carter worker Jeanne Shaheen, became state U.S. attorney. Bernard Boutin worked in John Kennedy's 1960 campaign and went on to head the GSA and the Small Business Administration.

"People have a way of showing what they can do. They become close to the candidate," said Boutin. "There's a lot to that."

The precedent dates to Adams, who as governor in 1949 signed a law making the New Hampshire primary a preference contest in which voters could choose invididual candidates, rather than just convention delegates. Adams backed Eisenhower in the next primary; Eisenhower won and Adams became his assistant, later to resign after being accused of accepting improper gifts.

ADAMS NOTED that people from other states also land administration jobs, and said all appointees must prove their qualifications. "I don't see that many Yankees walking up and down Pennsylvania Avenue," he said. "If you have an advantage, it's something you have to work at."

State politicians say New Hampshire has earned clout because of its ability to pick, or make, a winner. They note that no loser in the New Hampshire preference primary has gone on to win the presidency.

While the primary brings influence to the state, they said, it also benefits the nation because of the scrutiny of candidates it allows and because of the momentum it can give little-known candidates.

"I don't claim the New Hampshire primary is perfect by any means," said Richard Upton, a former House speaker who wrote the 1949 law. "Everything is good or bad by comparision, and this works pretty well."

Dilemmas face Reagan at summit

By JAMES GERSTENZANG

An Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — As he heads for the 18th-century village of Williamsburg, Va., to talk about the world's 20th century economic problems, President Reagan is leaving behind a series of dilemmas and seeming policy contradictions. But, each could follow him to the economic summit conference there.

While he is planning to focus on exchange rates, inflation, interest rates, and unemployment, the president will be forced by the six other heads of state to also discuss the United States' deficit problem, which he said at the last summit a year ago would be licked in coming years.

But the deficit has grown to $200 billion, by some estimates, and could go higher during the period he said it would be in balance.

Which brings us to dilemma No. 1: The president said last week that "deficit-spending represents one of the most alarming dangers to our republic and to the prosperity of our people."

However, the president has shown no interest in giving ground on two areas in which he could tackle this threat to the nation: by raising taxes or limiting the scope of pending tax cuts — or by cutting the defense budget increase below the approximately 7.5 percent raise he has accepted after originally seeking a 10 percent increase.

Reagan's advisers have little doubt that the allies will want to talk to him about the deficit, because they feel it is responsible for continuing high interest rates and the strength of the dollar at the expense of their currencies.

Dilemma No. 2: Reagan is ready to release for shipment to Israel 75 F-16 jet fighters. He held up the shipment last year in the wake of the Israeli invasion of Lebanon. The announcement of their release was seen as a signal of U.S. support after Israel signed an agreement with Lebanon, although the Israeli troops will remain there until Syrian and Palestine Liberation Organization forces are withdrawn.

The dilemma is this: On March 31 in a speech to the World Affairs Council in Beverly Hills, Calif., the president said that while the Israeli forces "are in the position of occupying another country that now has asked them to leave, we are forbidden by law to release those planes. It's as simple as the other forces returning to their own countries and letting Lebanon be Lebanon."

While the Middle East is not on the agenda for the three formal summit meetings on Sunday and Monday, it is a likely topic for discussion at the informal lunches and dinners Reagan will have with the leaders of Britain, Canada, France, Germany, Italy and Japan.

Dilemma No. 3: One of the steps Reagan took after the imposition of martial law in Poland was to limit U.S. trade with the Soviet Union. In December 1981, he suspended talks for a long-term grain sale agreement. But on April 22, he offered to resume the negotiations. The U.S. Agriculture Department announced last week that the Soviets said they would return to the bargaining table.

The president said at a news conference last week that he had disagreed with the use of grain as a single economic weapon and had lifted an embargo imposed.

She is a four-year honor band member and a two-year Symphony Deb.

The scholarship is awarded to students who plan to pursue a nursing career.

Reagan proposes measures to avoid likelihood of accidental nuclear war

WASHINGTON (AP) — An upgrading of the U.S.-Soviet "hotline" and new communications links between the superpowers have been proposed by President Reagan to reduce the likelihood of an accidental nuclear war.

Reagan's proposals, made earlier this week during a White House ceremony, included a new communications link for quick exchange of military data to help the two nations avoid misunderstanding during a crisis.

Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., one of four senators who attended the ceremony in the Rose Garden, said Reagan's proposals could lead "to an early summit meeting. That's the real meaning of this." The U.S.-Soviet summit could take place whether or not there has been progress in arms control talks, Jackson said.

One proposal called for linking the State Department and the Soviet Embassy in Washington with high-speed data transmission systems. A similar line would be installed in Moscow between the Soviet foreign ministry and the U.S. Embassy, Reagan said.

"I endorse the proposal not because I see an increasing risk of nuclear incidents — I do not — but because I believe that it is prudent to have in place the means to facilitate international communications should the unthinkable happen," Reagan said.

"I encourage the Soviet Union to carefully examine these proposals," he said.

Intelligence not affected

Dear Dr. Solomon: Can you explain how a person with cerebral palsy can go to college? — Vinnie, Chicago

Solomon

Dear Vinnie: I am not certain what the implication of your question is. If you are suggesting that people with cerebral palsy are not intelligent enough to go to college, you are way off the mark. Many of these patients have the intellectual capacity to do the work; what they often lack, however, is the ability to express themselves because they do not have complete control of their muscle movements.

It is welcome news that advances in technology during the last few years are permitting an increasing number of patients whose speech is difficult to understand to communicate in various other ways.

Dear Dr. Solomon: At the age of 45 I am just recovering from a case of mumps. I don't plan to become a father again but I have heard that mumps can cause a man to become sterile. Is this true? — Daivd, Phoenix, Ariz.

Dear David: About 20 percent of men who develop mumps will experience some degree of orchitis (inflammation of the testes). This rarely occurs in boys before puberty, so they do not suffer any permanent damage. However, Dr. Herbert S. Kupperman, of the New York University Medical Center, says that mumps orchitis that occurs after puberty may cause sterility.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I rather regularly read your column and generally feel that it is a helpful thing to the lay people who read it wishing to become more informed. I have to note one article that I find of concern, and that is specifically the one you have written on low back problems. I think this generality in a statement that "the bottom line is that those treated by physiotherapy appear to be more satisfied than those treated by physicians." In my years at the Back Clinic at UCLA where we were involved with training young orthopedists in the treatment of back problems, I found one of the biggest difficulties was in enabling them to distinguish the different problems that are present in lower lumbar entities. All too often, the theroy that "a back is a back is a back" prevailed. Unfortunately, when people read an article such as this in what they consider an authoritative column, it further enhances their belief, certainly in the lay public, that "a back is a back is a back." As a physician whose nonsurgical and surgical practice involves a predominance of spinal problems, it is very important that one distinguish between the different entities that cause people to seek medical care. The treatment is totally different in cases of extruded discs and foot drops, which incidentally are reasonably common general abnormalities of the lumbar spine with long-standing instability and simple cases of low back pain with no significant orthopedic or neurological findings other than tenderness and spasm. I am sure when you think about it that you are well aware of what the implications of this are and though the overall generalities probably prevail in most cases, it is very difficult to treat patients whose "friend just had the same problem" as theirs. Please do not interpret my comments as being destructive. — John F. McGonigle, M.D., Santa Monica, Calif.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column).

Orthodontist keeps Mississippi practice afloat

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Dr. Julius Ratliff realized his orthodontic patients wouldn't let a mere flood prevent them from having their braces removed.

So Ratliff got into the ferry business, boating his patients between his marooned dental office and dry land during the second-worst flood in Jackson history.

"I'd have swam over there if I had to," said Deacon Irby of Durant behind his new glistening, non-metallic smile.

Ratliff's office was about six inches above the floodwaters on Tuesday. So his son Jerry became boat captain, his daughter Jo Ann scheduled excursions, and his office manager Laurie Holland unloaded passengers at what became a door-step-dock at the office.

"Today I've answered the phone, made appointments and received boats," Ms. Holland said as another patient went ashore. "Everybody wants to be out in this and this way they can do it legitimately and not be called a sightseer."

Besides, she said, patients must visit Ratliff monthly for dental care. Under current watery conditions, a missed appointment might not be rescheduled.

"They're used to coming once a month — rain, flood or shine," Ms. Holland said.

Birds 'take off' on building program

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

Mulligan's Stew

RIDGEFIELD, Conn. — The economic indicators just released by Washington find instant verification around here. Housing starts are definitely up.

The robins are building a nest in the evergreen tree just outside the kitchen window. Mrs. Robin ingeniously uses her rump and tail feathers to measure and tamp down the foundation.

The sparrows are refurbishing a high rise, multifamily dwelling erected years ago for some purple martins who were supposed to eat up all the mosquitoes but never took occupancy.

A noisy construction gang of six blue jays is putting up a nest in the white lilac near our front door and brawling with the robins over building supplies. The jays go swooping by in impressive flight formations, making the screaming, high pitched radio wave sound that used to introduce R.K.O. Pictures. Quite often they're in full retreat from a pair of robins chasing them off from the pile of dead grass left behind by the lawn mower. The grass, evidently, is prime construction material in this housing boom, as all the birds seem to go by with a beakful.

I'm always amazed at how much straw and twigs a fat robin can balance in its jaws and still get airborne.

The much larger mourning doves are building a most fragile nest in the crook of a sparsely limbed conifer, exposed to the wind and the rain and all predators, like our neighbor's cat who has been watching their labors with a smug, patient smile from the protective shadows of the forsythia bushes.

The catbirds are busy putting up a maternity wing in the low weeds just beyond the woodpile, carrying away dead chips from my woodax to coat with mud and saliva for the foundation.

Busiest of all is a tiny, brown house wren who is refurbishing an abandoned bird box with a keyhole-sized opening hanging from the lowest limbs of an old purple lilac tree beside the porch — or deck as it is fashionably called hereabouts. I'm amazed that she can zoom in full flight right into that minusculer aperture without knocking herself silly. Occasionally, though, she does pause on the pencil-thick peg that serves for a perch to rearrange the load of dead grass sticking from her beak like the stubble of a teen-ager's beard. Nothing seems to slow or frighten her, neither the angry arguments between the jays and the robins, nor the rattle of my typewriter, just a few feet away, on sunny days when I choose to work outdoors and impress the neighbors.

There are a couple of cowbirds scouting out these building lots, probably waiting for other species of bird to build their nests so they can move in uninvited and lay their eggs. The British cuckoo has the same free loading instincts. Some birds like the yellow warblers retaliate by building another floor to the nest over the cowbirds eggs, often several until an impromptu apartment house rises in violation of zoning regulations. That doesn't embarrass the cowbirds one bit. As soon as they lay their eggs, they take off, leaving the original tenants the job of sitting and hatching and raising the orphans. The melody of birdland echoes then with the sad song of child abandonment, but the warblers and the other surrogate parents don't seem to mind. They raise the cowbird young like their own and help push them out of the three- or four-story nest when the time comes for them to fly.

The starlings stand by in their silky black ensembles like slum lords ready to dispossess the weak.

Nobody in birddom pulls that kind of housing scam on the orioles. They keep out interloping maternity cases by building their nests in long pouches that look like pool table pockets dangling from the tall branches. I hadn't seen one in years, not since I was in Boy Scout camp in the Catskills, until I spotted one down by our small lake the other day. A couple of preschoolers were eyeballing it but keeping their distance, probably mistaking it for a hornet's nest. Not far away a stern-necked white swan was patrolling in determined glide patterns, like a soldier on guard duty, just offshore from a patch of high weeds where his mate was hunkered down on an insubstantial nest of rocks and wet leaves. Even the gabbling gaggle of Canada geese did not dare to horn in or beak in on their turf.

Last spring a family of chimney swifts seemed to prefer our television antenna to the chimney, probably because we kept a fire going well into May. It played havoc with our reception, but now that we've switched to cable they seem to have found better accommodations elsewhere.

My wife encourages all these new housing starts by leaving bits of yarn, string, cotton wool and straw from the Christmas creche about the yard as building supplies. I can't seem to find my favorite Aran Islands cableknit fisherman's sweater. I wonder if she's sent it to one of her relatives in Ireland from whence it came or whether it's feathering the nest of some of our feathered friends out back.

If I see a baby blue jay go by in a turtleneck, I'll know.

Oh well, they can use it. Blue jays are born naked, without the soft down or slight suggestion of fuzzy feathers adorning other newborn chicks. Hence the expression, naked as a jay.

Speaking of housing starts, my wife wants to know when I'm going to get started on that new shed to house the garbage cans. I wonder what dirty bird whispered that thought in her ear. Nature is to be admired, not emulated.

Dinosaur recording called 'inconclusive'

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — A recording made in a remote African jungle captured the roars of a previously unknown, dinosaur-like creature, an adventurer says. But at least one expert said the evidence is inconclusive.

Herman A. Regusters, an adventurer-engineer who made the recording and claims to have seen the creature, contends the animal looks very much like a dinosaur and may be 35 feet long.

Regusters said he and other members of a 1981 expedition to the Republic of the Congo's swampy and nearly inaccessible Lake Tele saw the creature a total of five times in 32 days. Regusters is associated with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Jet Propulsion Laboratory, which is not involved in the project.

He insisted he saw "an animal I can't identify (and) the only thing I can conclude at this point" is that it is a relic species — something similar to a dinosaur.

Since Abilene's wet, tiny Texas town no longer wild

IMPACT, Texas (AP) — City Marshal Jack Tidwell gently thumps the steering wheel and eyes the cars passing by. He hasn't made an arrest in more than a year, but he's not complaining.

"It's real quiet now and that's the way I like it," he says, still gazing through the windshield. "A few years ago this might have been too routine, too dull, but I prefer that now."

Tidwell, 62, thin and wiry with close-cropped gray hair, is the law in Impact, population 54 and declining.

"We've got," the marshal says, "a comparably quiet town."

But Impact hasn't always been tranquil.

Tidwell can recall cars double parked along the main thoroughfare and clouds of dust raised by the rush of traffic.

For nearly 16 years this tiny town bordering Abilene on the north flourished as the only source of legal carry-out liquor for an estimated 200,000 people living within 40 miles.

The city's two package stores and beer market dispensed upward of $4 million annually in merchandise.

"IT ALWAYS amazed us," says Mayor Dallas Perkins, gesturing at his wife, Nancy, "that without a street light, without any traffic control, that all those people could come out here...and there would never be a traffic jam and there would never be an accident."

The streets of Impact have been nearly deserted for more than four years now since Abilene went wet and pre-empted Impact's reason for being.

Within six months of the start of liquor sales in Abilene, sales in Impact plunged 70 percent and two of the three retail businesses closed.

Tax revenues dipped correspondingly and the population, once estimated at 225, has plummeted 75 percent. The homes, formerly numbering about 70, are fewer than three dozen mostly aging frame structures with sagging beams, cracked foundations and rusting grillwork.

The five-member City Council, Impact's sole remaining local governmental body, meets once every three months.

Even then, says Mrs. Perkins, city secretary since 1961 and a council member since 1962, "we have a hard time finding anything to do." The only businesses open are Pinkie's package store and a beer distributorship.

THE STEEL hulks that once housed booming enterprises now stand empty in the commercial district along Impact Drive.

"There was never any reason for anyone to spend more than about five minutes in Impact," Perkins says. "They picked up what they wanted and went back to where they came from."

Perkins, a former advertising man who now claims not to have an occupation, is the only mayor Impact has had.

A sign welcomes motorists to Impact, Texas, a small town that borders the northern edge of Abilene. The boarded-up building once housed a liquor store, Impact's reason for being. The city incorporated in 1960, and later voted to go wet, making the town the only legal carry-out source of liquor within 40 miles for 16 years. Now that Abilene has legalized the sale of package liquor, Impact has little reason to remain an incorporated entity.

It is not, he admits, a time-consuming job.

"There used to be a few things — housekeeping chores — that needed to be taken care of, but they have just dwindled down to nothing," he says. "There's just not anything to it."

The Perkinses are the first family of Impact. Others have lived there longer, but it was they who conceived the city as a liquor outlet and plodded through years of legal maneuverings to bring it to fruition.

It also was Perkins who, on Dec. 22, 1962, bought the first fifth of liquor legally sold in Taylor County in more than half a century. West Texans had greeted the temperance movement with open arms long before it became a national force.

IN ABILENE, the ink was barely dry on the city charter when prohibitionists began a crusade to close the saloons and, so they thought, put an end to such social problems as crime, poverty, immorality, insanity and corruption.

It was a short campaign. On June 2, 1902 — nearly two decades before prohibition went into effect nationally — Taylor County voted out liquor.

The 18th Amendment was repealed in 1933 and Texas legalized the sale of beer and wine shortly thereafter, but Taylor Country residents continued to protect their dryness with the same zealousness they had accepted it with.

It was not a great deal of enthusiasm, then, that met Perkins' petition to incorporate the 2 million square-foot city of Impact in February 1960. One Abilene city father found the idea of liquor sales so repugnant that he suggested the city close its streets leading to the area.

The Perkinses moved to Impact in 1959 when it had no paved streets, no water or sewer service and few residents.

Their 20-acre lot had at one been a turkey farm. Legend has it that the notion of incorporation and liquor sales was conceived during a party when Perkins was asked yet another time what he intended for the property.

SUDDENLY, IT flashed into his mind: If Impact was incorporated, his wife, an unsuccessful candidate for the Abilene City Council, could be elected to city office. Persuading their neighbors to vote for liquor in the community wasn't difficult.

Sales tax rebates, they were told, would pave their streets, provide lights around their homes and pay for the desperately needed water and sewer service.

Now 58, Perkins' crew cut has given way to a longer style, combed straight back from his forehead and matching the gray in his beard. Sitting in the living room of his modern Spanish-style home on Impact Drive, he initially is reluctant to talk about the past.

"It's been so long ago," he says after a long pause, "that you forget about the unpleasant things that might have happened or things that were frustrating at the time."

Before liquor went on sale in Impact, Perkins had to overcome a lengthy and almost Byzantine barrage of legal action brought by the city of Abilene that was aimed at keeping Impact unincorporated and legally dry.

Between Feb. 13, 1960, the day Impact residents voted to incorporate, and liquor sales commenced, nearly three years passed and two Texas Supreme Court decisions had been handed down.

'Down under' researcher runs Temple station

TEMPLE, Texas (AP) — Paper cups and flower pots in a south Temple garage hold the future of Australian agriculture.

Australian entomologist Dr. Bill Palmer runs a field station in Temple of the Alan Fletcher Research Station based in Sherwood, Queensland, Australia.

Palmer collects hundreds of North American insects — most of them from Texas — and feeds them to Australian weeds to see if the bugs will kill the pesky plants. Australia operates similar stations in Brazil, India and Mexico.

"Temple is our main effort in North America," Palmer said.

His enclosed garage serves as his research station and laboratory while his backyard contains his greenhouse.

Australia supports his project with $150,000, and the station will remain in Temple until at least 1985. Palmer said he hopes the station will be funded for longer, maybe up to 12 years.

Another researcher, Bill Woods, working with the Queensland, West Australian and Northern Territory Department of Agriculture, arrived in Temple this month to assist Palmer.

"There were several other places we could have gone, College Station and Mississippi, for instance. But Temple seemed just the right place," Palmer said.

He needed to be near the Blackland Research Center with its quarantine station and researchers. Temple is centrally located and a good place to live while he collects and raises specimens, he said.

Australia has received the best and worst from North Amrica. Weeds, whether imported intentionally as ornamental flowering plants or accidently shipped with seeds and grains, have flourished in Australia's moderate climate.

So now Australians are returning to North America to see if any insects are natural enemies of these weeds.

Rantana, probably exported to Australia accidently with south Louisiana cottonseed, has taken over the eastern Australian states and has become a major problem.

"It grows along water courses and dams so that cattle can't get to the water,"Woods said. "When ranchers try to round up cattle, it cuts the horses' legs to pieces. The only way to get cattle out of a field with Rantana is to round them up by helicpoter."

Animals won't graze on Rantana; farmers can't harvest it. Palmer and Woods are looking for an insect that will chew the stem, root or seed and kill the plant.

The idea searching for answers on another continent has proven successful. Millions of acres once were infested with prickly pears that wreaked havoc on the Australian cattle business. Field stations in the 1930s were set up in Uvalde and in South America. After much experimentation, Cactoblastis larvae, discovered in Argentina, was found to control the prickly pear.

"The prickly pear was reduced to a small amount. After the prickly pear was reduced, the Cactoblastis also reduced its number, so that we have a low number of each," Woods said. "That's what we're looking for. We don't expect to eradicate the problem totally, but we do hope reduce the numbers greatly."

Palmer and Woods hope they can repeat another success like the prickly pear and the Cactoblastis: After the cacti were gone, the Cactoblastis numbers were reduced.

Bill would let tax fund construction

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Legislation by Rep. Ernestine Glossbrenner, D-Alice, may allow counties with fewer than 15,000 inhabitants and without a hospital district to impose a 1 percent sales tax to construct and operate a county hospital.

Glossbrenner said 30 counties would qualify under the bill, including Andrews, Brewster, Crane, Crockett, Culberson, Pecos, Sterling, Ward and Winkler counties.

The House gave quick preliminary approval to HB 289 with no apparent opposition. Glossbrenner noted that "it's hard to give up any part of the sales tax," but said that exceptions have been made to allow funding of transit authorities in metropolitan areas.

County commissioners would be able to call an election through a majority motion by the commissioners, or on petition by 20 percent of the voters in the last county-wide election.

Repeal of the tax would be by the same procedure.

Sale of natural gas and electricity for residential use would be exempt unless specifically included in the order calling the election.

Glossbrenner says the measure would provide relief to small-county hospitals.

English family 'walking statistic'

By BERNARD D. KAPLAN
Hearst European Bureau

LONDON — The Burton family jokingly call themselves a "walking statistic" who illustrate Britain's vast 3.5 million, or about 12 per cent, unemployment problem.

Of the four adult Burtons, only 43-year-old Linda has a regular job as a clerk. Husband Sid was laid off by a trucking company where he was office manager five months ago and has been out of work since. Neither of their sons, both in their twenties, has held a steady job since 1981.

According to the opposition Labor Party, fighting to throw out Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative government in next month's election, the Burtons are victims of "thatcherism," a ruthless brand of neo-capitalism imposed by a neanderthal politician who makes President Ronald Reagan look like a compassionate bleeding heart.

By that calculation, the Burton family should be an odds-on bet to vote Labor in the June 9 parliamentary elections. But three of them, Linda, Sid and elder son Larry, actually say that they plan to vote for the Conservative candidate in East Lewisham, the lower middle-class area of London where they live. Only 23-year-old Bruce thinks he "might" support the Labor Party man.

SID EXPLAINED that he was for Mrs. Thatcher because of her economic policies, not despite them. This was true, he added, although he agrees he may have been harmed by their initial consequences.

"I'm disappointed by what she's achieved up to now," he said. "I never expected my sons and I would be on the dole after four years of her government. But she needs more time. Not a blank check, just more time. This country was headed for hell in a wheelbarrow before she took over. If she can't save it, nobody else can, that's for certain."

Linda and Sid claim they aren't anomalies. "I know plenty of people around here who are hard-up but intend voting with Mrs. Thatcher," Linda said. "They don't really see much alternative."

The Burtons illustrate not only their country's disheartening economic crisis but also the surprising political corollary that seems to go hand-in-glove with it. Despite a bone-rattling industrial shake-out that has occurred since the Thatcher government came to power in 1979, almost tripling unemployment and leading to the near-demise of whole sectors like steel and shipbuilding, the prime minister and her party have a big lead in the polls. They are overwhelmingly favored to win a parliamentary majority next month. If they do, Mrs. Thatcher will be the first Conservative Party leader in this century to win two consecutive terms in office.

THE UPTURN of national self-confidence produced by last year's victorious Falklands war has been of enduring benefit to her. So has ideological in-fighting in the Labor Party which has resulted in it falling under the sway of what is known here as the hard left.

Also, the personality of Labor's leader, 69-year-old Michael Foot, who looks, sounds and frequently acts like the proverbial absent-minded professor, could not have been devised to show off Mrs. Thatcher's leadership qualities to greater advantage.

But the Burtons clearly demonstrate the existence of an additional factor pointing toward a Thatcher victory. It is simply that ordinary working people who, at least in the short term can be said to have suffered under her government, appear to a surprising extent to be sticking with her.

LARRY BURTON, 25, an architectural draftsman who couldn't find a job in the midst of a construction slump here and is now training to be a computer software specialist, said that "as far as I'm concerned Mrs. Thatcher has won the intellectual argument. Labor ran out of ideas years ago. But that doesn't mean giving her an indefinite writ. If she doesn't get things put right during her next term of office, I'll never vote for the Tories again."

His mother sees it a little differently. "She's the only politician in my time who has absolutely stuck to her guns," she said.

Andropov watching, waiting for events to unfold

By V.H. KRULAK
Copley News Service

An Opinion

Quiet as a mouse. That would seem to be the posture today of Yuri Andropov, the Soviet strong man. There is a time to move and a time to watch. This is a time to watch. Andropov believes, because events may already be unfolding in a design altogether favorable to the Kremlin.

His 35,000 rearmed and willing Syrian client forces are ensuring that there will be no peace in Lebanon, a sad fact underscored by the presence there of at least 12,000 PLO fighters who are growing more active by the day. And all Andropov has to do is watch.

While he catches the turmoil in Lebanon he must also have a satisfied eye on the Western Hemisphere.

He cannot fail to be mindful of the words of his master, Lenin, who prophesied that the Americans would themselves provide the rope by which they would ultimately be hanged.

First the U.S. House passed a resolution urging a freeze in the development, manufacture and deployment of nuclear weapons, something the Soviet Union has endorsed enthusiastically, since a freeze would institutionalize the existing Soviet nuclear superiority and preclude the deployment to Europe this autumn of U.S. Pershing II and ground-launched cruise missiles.

And the action of the House was fortified by a 150-page statement by some 239 Roman Catholic bishops calling for "immediate bilateral agreements to halt the testing, production and deployment of nuclear weapons systems."

Indeed, a time for Andropov just to sit and watch.

To watch the U.S. Congress try to handcuff our effort to provide covert aid to anti-Sandinista forces in Nicaragua.

To watch the ludicrous display by a congressional oversight committee demanding an active role in the PLANNING of covert operations as if, under those conditions, the operations could ever be covert.

To watch a congressional committee reduce from $110 million to $50 million the moneys proposed by the president for military training and material for a Salvadoran people who are fighting OUR battle in Central America.

A time for him to watch while partisan politics erodes the president's efforts to redress 10 years of deterioration in our defenses.

It is, indeed, a time for Andropov to watch, and with some satisfaction, because a lot of things appear to be going his way.

But they are not ALL going his way and, with just a little more effort on our part, he could end up with several acute cases of stomach cramps.

He has the burden of supporting a 100,000-man expeditionary force in Afghanistan, struggling to cope with the hostility of 9 million Afghans and as many as 35,000 resolute guerrilla freedom fighters who want no part of a Soviet occupation. Arms to the guerrillas — ammunition, radios, dollars — will make an already costly Soviet Afghan adventure even more costly.

Rich Little wants presidents to make good impression

Rich Little

NEW YORK (AP) — Impressionist Rich Little says his favorite candidate for president will always be one with a good voice, because "I live in fear of the country having a president I can't 'do.'"

The Ottawa-born comedian joked was honored Wednesday by the Canadian Club of New York. As Little stepped behind the podium, he couldn't resist "doing" a familiar voice.

"It's impossible to stand behind a podium without doing Reagan," he said. "Before I start speaking, I'd like to say something," he said in a voice sounding like the president's.

The 44-year-old entertainer, who was known for his impressions of former President Nixon, said he tries not to be attached to any one character exclusively.

"I don't want to be impeached from show business," he explained.

Little entertained reporters for an hour, answering questions in familiar voices, including those of Jack Benny, George Burns, Jack Nicholson, John Houseman, Jimmy Stewart and John F. Kennedy, along with a voice in keeping with the occasion, that of Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau.

Little said the pinnacle of his career will be when someone imitates his own voice.

Club president Joseph Keeley Jr. presented Little with the second annual Maple Leaf Distinguished Arts and Letters Award, a 10-pound hexagonally shape crystal piece designed by Tiffany's.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Thomas Reilly, star of television's "CHiPs" series, was ordered to participate in a drug education program after pleading no contest to driving under the influence of alcohol and drugs, a city attorney says.

Charges of driving without a license and possessing a controlled drug without a prescription were dropped against the 23-year-old Reilly in exchange for his plea to the driving charge, said Deputy City Attorney Ellen Sarmiento. She would not identify the drug.

Reilly played California Highway Patrol Officer Bobby "Hot Dog" Nelson, replacing Larry Wilcox as Erik Estrada's partner on "CHiPs" last fall. He also also was fined $390 by Municipal Court Judge Elva Soper, Ms. Sarmiento said Wednesday, and his driver's license was restricted for 90 days.

Ms. Sarmiento said Reilly was stopped by Los Angeles police last Dec. 21 for driving erratically.

"CHiPs" was canceled by NBC this month after six seasons.

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Queen Elizabeth II of England and her husband Prince Philip were greeted with pomp and circumstance as they arrived on the royal yacht Britannia for a four-day state visit.

The 5,000-ton vessel, escorted by the frigate HMS Minerva and four Swedish torpedo boats, was met with a 21-gun salute as a score of jetfighters thundered overhead.

The visit is the royal couple's second to this neutral, ancient monarchy whose king is a distant relative of the British queen.

The first was in 1956, in connection with the Equestrian Olympic competition here, when the queen had ruled only a few years and Sweden's present king Carl Gustaf was a lad of 10.

On Wednesday, the British monarch conferred on him the noble and ancient royal Order of the Garter, Britain's most distinguished order.

TOKYO (AP) — Ryotara Azuma, former member of the International Olympic Committee and two-time governor of Tokyo, died of pneumonia in a Tokyo hospital today, his doctors said.

After the end of World War II, Azuma served with the Health and Welfare Ministry and was a liaison with the Allied Occupation Forces headed by U.S. General Douglas MacArthur.

In 1947, he became chairman of the Japan Amateur Sports Association. He is credited with getting Japan back into international amateur sports competition after the war and was elected a member of the International Olympic Committee in 1950.

Azuma was elected in 1959 as governor of Tokyo and served two four-year terms, serving as governor when the Olympic Games were held for the first time in Asia in 1964.

Stolen lemur returned to zoo in good health

Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES – Tana, a rare 5½-week old primate stolen from her cage at the Los Angeles Zoo, was returned early today in good health.

Carl Flores, 19, returned the baby ruffed lemur to zoo officials telling them he bought the primate from an unidentified man in a park in Burbank, said zoo director Warren Thomas.

Los Angeles Police Detective Cecil Mixon said Flores had two versions of how he obtained the primate.

At first, Flores told Mixon he was talking to a man in the park. He said he had seen him before but didn't know his name. The man allegedly asked him if he would like to buy a baby monkey, Mixon said. Flores said yes and returned to the park the next day to buy the animal.

In the second version Flores told Mixon he was walking through the park last night when he was approached by a stranger who offered to sell him the primate on the spot for $150. Flores said he decided to buy the animal as a present for his girlfriend and paid the man $50.

When he returned home, however, Flores said he heard radio reports that a primate had been stolen from the zoo and might die if not quickly returned to its mother.

Flores said he kept the baby lemur at his home overnight feeding her a piece of banana and a strawberry. He described today how his cat and her newborn kittens ran and hid every time the lemur hissed at them.

"It sounds suspicious (that Flores had two versions of how he obtained the animal)," Mixon said. "There is the possibility he either knows who the fellow is he bought the monkey from or he could possibly have been involved (in the theft). There is no evidence to prove it either way so we can only take him at his word," Mixon said.

Concert given for Fortas

WASHINGTON (AP) — Violinist Isaac Stern and pianist Eugene Istomin performed a benefit concert Wednesday night for the late Abe Fortas, the former Supreme Court justice who helped build the theater in which Stern and Istomin played.

The selection of three Beethoven sonatas for piano and violin was staged at the Kennedy Center's newest auditorium, the 500-seat Terrace Theater, designed to present chamber music concerts in the intimacy and acoustic purity of a small hall.

Fortas, who died last year at the age of 71, was himself an amateur violinst and a longtime patron of music.

Kennedy Center Chairman Roger L. Stevens announced that the Abe Fortas Memorial Fund is more than halfway toward its goal of raising $1 million for a permanent endowment to support the Fortas Chamber Music Series at the Terrace Theater. The series is scheduled to begin next season with five concerts.

Neither Stern nor Istomin spoke at the $125-a-seat benefit for the fund, but both men were old friends of the Washington lawyer who was named to the Supreme Court by President Johnson in 1965.

Stern, Istomin and cellist Leonard Rose once gave Fortas a 200-year-old Guidantus violin, which he used to play for friends who came to his Georgetown home on Sunday evenings to hear the "Stricly No Refund Quartet."

Masterpieces revealed

WASHINGTON (AP) — A century-old painting of writer Robert Louis Stevenson by portraitist John Singer Sargent, which experts say had never been shown publicly in the United States, is now on view at the National Gallery of Art.

Stevenson, the Scot who wrote "Treasure Island," and his American wife Fanny, were painted in England by Sargent, an American. But the official catalogue says:

"...In this exhibition (it) takes its rightful place among the great French paintings of the 19th century."

Stevenson himself thought it ought not to be shown.

"It is, I think, excellent, but is too eccentric to be exhibited," he wrote to a friend. "I am at one extreme corner: my wife in this wild dress, and looking like a ghost at the extreme other end... All this is touched in lovely, with that witty touch of Sargent's: but of course it looks damn queer as a whole."

Now it belongs to one of the greatest collections of modern French and American paintings still in private hands, being shown at the National Gallery of Art until Oct. 2. The collection is the property of Betsey Cushing Whitney, widow of John Hay "Jock" Whitney, former publisher of the New York Herald-Tribune and the International Herald-Tribune, who was also President Eisenhower's ambassador to Britain.

Lizards find home in Ohio

CINCINNATI (AP) — Biologist Daniel Gist doesn't need to travel to Europe to capture and study a rare species of wall lizard. He goes across town, to an area known as East End.

The gray-and-brown lizards, known to exist elsewhere only in the lowlands of Europe and in some sections of Philadelphia, apparently result from a boy's trip to Switzerland 30 years ago.

The 12-year-old stepson of Federated Department Stores executive Fred Lazarus III captured a pair of wall lizards while touring Europe three decades ago, and set them loose to eat mosquitoes in the family's yard, said Gist, of the University of Cincinnati.

They adapted well, ate their fill of mosquitoes and spread throughout the neighborhoods, Gist said.

"Our estimate is one lizard per square yard in some areas," said Gist. "That's about 3,000 to 4,000 per acre."

"There are a lot of old buildings, a lot of old retaining walls, a lot of south-facing walls with numerous cracks," he said. "The area they've occupied is similar to their native habitat."

Since 1979, Gist has made at least one trip every two weeks to catch and study the lizards. Because they are so small and quick, Gist has to snare them with a noose on the end of a fishing rod.

"It sure is fun to watch them," said Bertha Branch, who lives in the area the lizards have made their home. "They get up on a wall and fight and chase each other, just like a bunch of kittens. We just sit up here and watch them sometimes."

WHY BMW CHOSE TO CHANGE THE "QUINTESSENTIAL SPORTS SEDAN."
BMW does not annually reinvent the automobile. Instead they periodically refine it.
So after six years the sedan Car and Driver nominated "the quintessential sports sedan"—the BMW 320i—has evolved into a new car: the 318i. A machine with a totally redesigned, fully independent suspension system, new aerodynamics, new technology, and a new fuel injection system that delivers even greater torque.
Contact us for an exhilarating test drive of the BMW 318i. THE ULTIMATE DRIVING MACHINE.
