Filings end

Two for mayor, one for council

HERALD STAFF REPORT

The Big Spring city elections will feature a showdown between incumbent Cotton Mize and Maxwell Green in the mayoral race; but the District II city council position will be uncontested.

After Tim Blackshear filed on March 12 for the only city council position available, no other local resident filed for the May 6 election. The filing deadline was Wednesday.

D.W. Overman announced in late February he would not seek re-election to his District II council seat.

In announcing that he would seek re-election, Mize said he felt an obligation to complete the changes and projects he initiated during his first term.

"We've made a lot of changes and have streamlined city government and staff," Mize said.

Positive accomplishments cited by Mize during his term as Mayor include:

- The successful out of court settlement of a Big Spring firefighters' lawsuit.
- The finance department's receiving a Certificate of Achievement award for excellence in financial reporting.
- The reinstatement of a fulltime fire marshal.
- Establishment of a code enforcement officer position to improve city services.

Brooks will run once more

HERALD STAFF REPORT

Bill Brooks, a two-term member of the Big Spring Independent School District's board of trustees, has filed for re-election to the board.

Brooks was the last of six local residents to file for the May 6 election, which will fill three at-large school board seats. The filing deadline was 4:30 p.m. Wednesday.

Current trustees Dan Wise, director of Crossroads Recovery at Scenic Mountain Medical Center, and Al Valdes, who is retired from Cosden Oil and Chemical company, have also filed for re-election to the board.

The other candidates are Bobby Baker, director of purchasing for Scenic Mountain and a former Hillcrest Christian School trustee; Raul Marquez, manager of a local radio and television service and president of the local League of United Latin American Citizens chapter; and John Webb, social work director of the Veterans Administration Hospital and Howard County Tax Appraisal District board member.

The three candidates receiving the most votes will be sworn into office May 11.

Of the seven seats on the school board, four represent local districts and three are at-large.

Which comes first: Chicken or SSC funds?

By JENNIFER DIXON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The question of funding for the superconducting super collider is not unlike the adage: Which came first, the chicken or the egg?

Congress wants a solid financial commitment from foreign countries before moving ahead with the $4.6 billion super collider, but foreign countries want Congress to take the first step.

Rep. Tom Bevill, chairman of the House Appropriations subcommittee on energy and water development, said Wednesday: "They are going to have to put their name on the line. We like to talk in specific terms and Congress likes to hear specific figures. I don't like to be vague about it."

But Energy Secretary James D. Watkins said foreign countries are waiting for Congress show its commitment to building the high-energy physics project in Texas before they chip in.

Watkins complained it's a "chicken and egg situation this year" and testified Wednesday that everyone "is looking for the next person to make the next commitment."

India is the only country that has signed a cost-sharing agreement and will provide $50 million.

Bevill, D-Ala., countered there won't be much incentive for other countries to participate once the United States takes on the funding.

When Congress agreed to spend $100 million on the super collider last year, "that's getting pretty serious, that's pretty committed," Bevill told Watkins.

Asking Congress to approve the project without knowing exactly how much is coming from non-federal sources is "asking for trouble," Bevill said.

The Energy Department is proposing $1.8 billion toward the cost come from non-federal sources, including $1 billion from the state of Texas.

But even Texas is not willing to begin spending its share if Congress is not committed to construction, and wants a refund clause in case the federal government backs out.

President Bush has proposed a $250 million appropriation for next fiscal year, including $160 million for construction. Congress restricted last year's appropriation to research and development.

The DOE has chosen a site near Waxahachie for the super collider, a 53-mile underground tunnel in which beams of protons would smash into each other with 20 times the energy of today's most powerful accelerators.

US appeal to the PLO considered

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

WASHINGTON — U.S. officials are sorting through the views expressed in four hours of discussion with the Palestine Liberation Organization in which the PLO was urged to ease tensions in Israeli-held territory.

Assessing Wednesday's meeting in Tunisia between U.S. Ambassador Robert H. Pelletreau Jr. and Yasser Abed-Rabbo of the PLO, State Department officials were unable to draw any immediate conclusions.

"There was no definitive answer," said one official, who spoke on condition of anonymity. He said the two sides must analyze the four-hour discussion and meet again at a date to be determined.

Secretary of State James A. Baker III hopes the meeting will be a springboard to eventual peace talks and immediate "confidence-building" measures on the West Bank and in Gaza where a Palestinian uprising helped propel the United States into dealing with the PLO.

"The idea is to try to move toward dialogue and away from fighting with some practical steps," the official said. But, beyond that, "the idea is to keep in mind there are ultimate goals."

"Basically, now is the time for considering each other's views for future discussion," the official added.

In the meeting, Pelletreau, under instruction from Baker, asked the PLO not to stand in the way of Palestinians on the West Bank and in Gaza who might be willing to Poet's point: 'Hey world — I was here'

By LYNN HAYES
Staff Writer

A desire to leave his mark on the world has led Big Spring native David Payne to having poetry published.

An aspiring poet since attending Big Spring High School, his first published poem titled, "The Blue Knight," was featured in the American Poetry Anthology in 1986, and was inspired by and dedicated to Howard County Sheriff's Deputy Ed Covington, whom David met while Covington served as a Big Spring police officer.

The two became friends when Covington investigated a burglary at David's home in 1985. Covington's actions and professional attitude prompted David to write the following:

*He stands straight and tall,
enforcing the law,
looking out for one and all.
He stands on the side of justice, fighting for that which is right.
They call him the Blue Knight.
He recalled writing his very first poem.*

"I was in 10th or 11th grade and the teacher told us to write a poem while in class. I saw a picture of a mountain hanging in the classroom and decided to write about it," he said.

Impressed by what he read, David's teacher told him his work was good enough to be published.

After researching book covers for publishing companies, David decided to enter poetry contests.

After entering "The Blue Knight" in the American Poetry Association's contest in the summer of 1986, David was notified that contest officials wanted to publish his work.

"It thrilled me," he proudly said. To add to his excitement, David also was told he was a nominee for the title of "Best New Poet."

He submitted three more poems to be considered for publication. "Oh Listen" was chosen and was published in the APA's book of "Best New Poets of 1986."

David's poems were also published in Howard College's yearbook in 1987. He received honorable mention for his poem "The Fate of the Laura Lye."

David estimates he has written 60 poems and one short story.

Realizing he won't profit from his writings until he publishes a book containing his own original material, he says it doesn't matter because he enjoys writing.

"I enjoy poetry. I enjoy literature," he said.

Through poetry, David expresses himself and expresses the feelings of others.

"I express my feelings and express how others feel about me," he said. "I express how I perceive others and how they perceive me."

In 1988, David received the Golden Poet Award for his poem "When We First Met," published in New American Poetry Anthology.

The award, the highest honor that World of Poetry bestows on a poet, is to poets what the Academy Award is to actors, according to officials from the World of Poetry.

David is inspired for all his works, and says he writes with inspiration from God.

The Challenger explosion inspired David to write a poem, titled

Snakes, hunters on alert

27th annual roundup begins

HERALD STAFF REPORT

In spite of easter weekend, organizers of the 27th Annual Rattlesnake Roundup expect a crowd of faithful fans of the slitherers at the Howard County Fair Barns Saturday and Sunday.

"It's Easter weekend, everybody is out of town and in town. We'll take it and see what what happens," said Ray Alexander, vice president of the American Business Club. The event has been sponsored by AMBUCS and Coors for the last eight years.

Alexander said he's not sure what crowds will be like for this year's event; crowds last year were between 2,500-3,000, he said.

This year's roundup will offer snake fans plenty to see, Alexander said. "We have the Mi Mo Jo Snake People — they're going to be putting on hourly demonstrations; (a man) milking snakes and using the venom for scientific research and (people) selling fried rattlesnakes," he said.

The event will also have a competition for snakes in the categories of most pounds brought in, heaviest snake and most rattles, he said.

The rattlesnake roundup had 6,400 pounds of snake last year; Alexander said he's not sure they will be able to exceed that record amount this year, but that they will try.

Alexander said the buying of snakes begins Friday at noon, but that the roundup opens to the public at 10 a.m. Saturday. The snake roundup is from 10 a.m. until 7 p.m. Saturday and from noon until 6 p.m. Sunday.

Alexander said he encourages people to "come by and help us tame these things."

Senate passes bill giving free tuition to children of public school teachers

AUSTIN (AP) — The children of public school teachers would receive free college tuition under a bill passed by the Texas Senate.

Sen. Chet Edwards said Wednesday that free tuition for teachers' children would provide an incentive for instructors to continue teaching and help solve the statewide teachers shortage.

Under the bill, tuition grants could be provided to children of teachers who have taught in the state's public schools for at least eight years. The teacher would have to continue teaching while the child is in college in order to continue receiving the grant.

"I think this is the type of new idea we have to try," said Edwards, D-Duncanville.

Other lawmakers questioned the proposal, which would cost about $5.8 million per year.

"Where do we draw the line?" said Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock. "I just wonder if we're not opening the door here, to other groups who would want free tuition for their children," he said.

Sen. John Leedom, R-Dallas, said the proposal was unfair because a teacher's child who may not be prepared for college would get free tuition, while many academically able students cannot enter college because of economic problems.

But Edwards said teachers deserve free college tuition for their children because they are low paid and have few benefits. And, Edwards said, the program would help the state by ensuring experienced teachers remain in the system.

"There are a lot of groups out there who need some frills and fringes," said Montford. He asked Edwards if he could amend the bill to include free tuition for children of all state employees. "If we're going to load it up, let's do it right," Montford said.

But Edwards said his bill was designed to only "address the shortage of teachers in the classroom." The Senate passed the bill 23-5 and it was forwarded to the House.

In other business, the Senate approved a measure that would require local school districts to notify parents of students who are taught by uncertified teachers.

Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, said his bill would get parents more involved in the education system.

But Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, said the bill would punish many rural school districts that cannot attract or afford certified teachers in all subjects.

The notification would cause parents to descend on the school board, Sims said.

"I certainly hope so," Parker said.

Other bills approved by the Senate include legislation that would create an optional state holiday on Feb. 2, the anniversary date of the signing of the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, which ended the Mexican-American War of 1848, and would designate Pan American University at Brownsville an upper-level educational institution.

Ex-D.A. to defend Hampton

DALLAS (AP) — Attorneys defending state District Judge Jack Hampton, who may face a hearing before the State Commission on Judicial Conduct over remarks he made about homosexual victims of teen-ager convicted of murder in his court, say his comments were taken out of context.

Hampton will be defended by former longtime Dallas County District Attorney Henry Wade and three other prominent Dallas lawyers, who say Hampton never intended the comments he made to a Dallas Times Herald reporter to be published.

Wade and the other lawyers — former U.S. Attorney James Rolfe and civil attorneys Clifton Hutchinson and David S. Kidder — have filed a formal response to charges against Hampton brought by the Times Herald reporter today. In that response, the lawyers say the commission "should not punish or penalize Hampton for his personal literary inadequacies and his public relations indiscretions."

Hampton came under fire for saying in December that he sentenced a convicted killer to 30 years instead of life in part because he believed the two homosexual murder victims were soliciting sex.

After hearing evidence in connection with the judge's comments and the furor they created, the state commission questioned Hampton and then last month asked the Texas Supreme Court to appoint a special master to hear complaints against the judge. The master has not been appointed.

Observers hope for gas decontrol

HOUSTON (AP) — Energy industry groups and Washington observers say 1989 may be the year that Congress finally removes the last remnants of the 35-year-old system of controls on the price of natural gas at the wellhead.

The last sticking point appears to be the effective date of decontrol.

Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee, and Rep. Phil Sharp, D-Ind., head of the panel's subcommittee on energy and power, have signaled their willingness to support removal of the remaining price controls, which cover about 25 percent of the natural gas produced in the United States.

And, producers, pipeline companies and major consumers of natural gas have agreed on the ultimate goal of decontrol.

"I think the time is here substantively and politically (for decontrol)," said Sharp, a leader on natural gas issues among the representatives of the industrial Midwest told the Houston Chronicle's Washington bureau. "It no longer can be viewed from the consumer point of view as a benefit."

"The roadblocks are crumbling because of the changing marketplace," said Rep. W.J. "Billy" Tauzin, D-La., a leader of the producing states' Democrats on Sharp's subcommittee.

Companies once bought and sold natural gas under long-term contracts between producers and pipelines and pipelines and consumers, where purchasers often dealt with a single supplier. Today, the market has become a more competitive one in which producers and consumers make their own deals and the pipelines provide transportation of the gas for a price.

Tauzin said the architects of price controls long believed that the controls were economically beneficial. But with falling gas prices and changes in the regulation of pipelines, the market is no longer the same.

As a result, the earlier supporters of controls now see them as unnecessary or, in some cases, detrimental to their economic interests, he said.

"The control system is increasingly irrelevant," Sharp said. "But it does have impact on investment and which resources are developed. It has created inefficiencies in the system."

Price controls were first imposed on interstate sales of natural gas in 1954, and many producers responded by continuing to sell all of their gas within the unregulated intrastate markets in producing states. After the frigid winter of 1977-78 revealed shortages in the interstate market, but not within the producing states, Congress extended the controls to the intrastate markets.

What evolved was a complex set of regulations that set different prices for newly developed gas fields, old gas fields, onshore gas, offshore gas, gas from deep wells, gas in tight-sand formations and dozens of other categories.

Park Service halts Texas study

To the applause of residents in the Davis Mountains, the National Park Service has canceled a study to assess the possibility of making the area a national park or scenic parkway.

About a quarter of Jeff Davis County's population turned out at a meeting in Fort Davis two weeks ago to voice their vehement opposition to the creation of a national park or interference of the federal government of any kind.

U.S. Rep. Ron Coleman, D-Texas, then asked the park service to discontinue the study. Ironically, Coleman had requested the $100,000 study at the behest of four unidentified property owners in the Davis Mountains.

The $100,000 Congress allocated for the study was deposited instead in the Interior Department's general management fund, Coleman spokesman John Jackley said.

Jane Crittendon, whose family has owned the Moore Ranch near Valentine for three generations, said: "I'm very happy to hear that. We're just waiting to see the decision in writing."

The Davis Mountains, with some of the most scenic territory in Texas, are home to scores of ranches, many of which are in the fourth or fifth generation of ownership by the same families.

At the March 9 meeting in Fort Davis, ranch owners said they feared the federal government would create a national park or scenic parkway, ruining their ranching way of life and bringing herds of littering tourists.

The study area included 1.4 million acres constituting most of Jeff Davis County and portions of Reeves, Brewster, Presidio and Pecos counties.

Injured Marines go to burn unit

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A team of specialists from Brooke Army Medical Center's burn unit will return with some of the U.S. servicemen injured in the crash of a U.S. Marine helicopter in South Korea, officials said.

The medical team will be transporting 12 to 14 injured men from South Korea, said BAMC spokesman Bob Clark.

"Many of the injured had other injuries than burns," said Clark. "We sent one of our teams over there with 14 people, evaluated the patients and have determined that this number will come back to the burn unit."

The BAMC team included four doctors, two nurses, two respiratory technicians and six medical technicians. They were sent to Seoul, where some of the injured were sent to the 121st Evacuation Hospital.

"We are expecting the injured Marines very late tomorrow night or very early Friday morning," Clark said. "We can't get any closer than that until they pass onto the (U.S.) coast."

A Sikorsky CH-53D Sea Stallion helicopter crashed Monday in a mountainous region near the southeastern port of Pohang, killing 19 Marines and injuring about 16. It was the second fatal U.S. helicopter crash in South Korea in four days.

Military officials said both copters were participating in the annual "Team Spirit" military exercises, which include about 200,000 U.S. and South Korean troops.

Military authorities said nine of the 16 remained in "very serious" condition with burns, broken bones and internal injuries.

Texans say elections were fair

AUSTIN (AP) — Two Texas members of the U.S. delegation that observed the Sunday election in El Salvador said the process was fair, and they praised those who voted in the face of intimidation.

"The conclusion that the team reached... was that the election was fair and free, and we salute the Salvadoran people for their courage," Beryl Milburn of Austin said Wednesday.

State Sen. Frank Tejeda, D-San Antonio, added, "Certainly this was the first step on the road to democracy." He emphasized the delegation was there to observe the process, not try to influence the outcome of the election.

Although he said guerrilla activities kept voter turnout lower than expected, Tejeda maintained he was impressed with those who "in spite of threats and intimidation, violence and death, still went to the polls."

There has been congressional concern over U.S. policy in El Salvador. Alfredo Cristiani of the ARENA party, which is accused of having connections with rightist death squads, was elected Sunday.

Dallas approves drug testing

DALLAS (AP) — The City Council approved mandatory drug tests for city employees, but, after nearly an hour's worth of debate, did not extend the policy to themselves.

Instead, the council on Wednesday approved an amendment asking council members to take voluntary drug tests.

"I have smoked, snorted, sneezed, drank — just about everything," said councilman Al Lipscomb. "I have abused drugs, alcohol, et al. Let's show some leadership and be the first to take the test."

Lipscomb wanted council members tested for drugs before city employees. His amendment, however, was defeated 8-3.

The drug policy for city employees takes effect Oct. 1 and stipulates that all people applying for "safety sensitive" positions — such as driver, mechanic and maintenance worker — must take drug and alcohol tests to be hired. About two-thirds of city jobs fall under the policy.

In addition, an employee would be asked to take drug or alcohol tests if two supervisors determined that there was "reasonable suspicion" that the employee was using drugs or alcohol.

Border Patrol: Drug seizures up

LAS CRUCES, N.M. (AP) — The Border Patrol sector encompassing New Mexico and West Texas has confiscated $162 million worth of drugs since October, more than the total for the past three years combined.

The sector has made 774 seizures, Border Patrol spokesman Doug Mosier said.

Agents seized about $58 million worth of drugs last fiscal year, $30 million in 1987 and $8 million in 1986 for a total of about $146 million, Mosier said.

He attributed the increase in seizures to several factors.

"First of all, there have been more attempts to bring narcotics into the U.S.," he said, "and we are also beefing up manpower."

Mosier said 80 of the 220 new agent positions to be added to the El Paso sector have been filled.

The Patrol's canine corps also has helped, he said. Of the $162 million seized since October, the drug-sniffing dogs are responsible for $97 million, Mosier said.

Agents also are using a high-technology helicopter to conduct nighttime observations along the border, he said.

"We're just trying to do everything humanly possible to try and stop the flow of drugs in this country," Mosier said.

The Border Patrol checkpoint, near Las Cruces on Interstate 10, also has also seen an increase during the same time span.

Las Cruces agents confiscated more than $61 million worth of drugs in 48 seizures for the first half of fiscal 1989, Mosier said. The total value of the amount of drugs confiscated in 1988 was only $2.3 million in 104 seizures.

"The loads (smugglers) are trying to get through are getting bigger," he said. "And that's not just happening at the Las Cruces checkpoint but at every station."

Gramm to help rural hospitals

LEVELLAND (AP) — Sen. Phil Gramm pledged to work to whittle the disparity in Medicare reimbursement between urban and rural hospitals, calling rural health care U.S. medicine's No. 1 problem.

"We're going to have to reduce and hopefully eliminate the differential in payment between what we pay providers in urban areas and what we pay them for health care in a rural setting," Gramm said Wednesday on a tour of a hospital here.

Nine rural hospitals closed last year in Texas, and another two have shut down this year. Hospital officials say the reduced reimbursement for Medicare treatment given to rural facilities relative to urban hospitals makes it tough to survive.

Both urban and rural taxpayers can benefit from improved rural health care, said the senator.

"Providing primary health care where people live in the rural areas is actually cheaper," he said.

Gramm praised the urban-rural cooperation demonstrated at Methodist Hospital of Levelland. Six months ago, Hockley County purchased the struggling facility and leased it to Lubbock Methodist Hospital System to manage and operate.

"What we're seeing here is a reaching out from the urban area to preserve and increase the quality of health care in our rural areas," he said.

The 78-bed hospital about 25 miles west of Lubbock had been owned by Summit Hospital Corp. but was in danger of closing last year due to low occupancy. Hockley County commissioners held a referendum election in Aug. 1988 in which 92 percent of voters approved a $1.9 million bond issue to purchase the hospital from Summit.

Congress calls for more control of D.C.

WASHINGTON (AP) — A congressman added to the widespread pressure to end a wave of drug trafficking and violence in the nation's capital by calling for the federal government to take over public safety in the District of Columbia.

Rep. Stan Parris, R-Va., says he will introduce legislation that would authorize President Bush to appoint a National Capital Public Safety Director responsible for managing the district's police and fire departments, emergency ambulance service, and corrections system for a five-year period.

"The situation in our nation's capital is clearly out of control," Parris said Wednesday in a statement. "The drug dealers are perpetuating their bloody carnage with impunity, since they know there is little that will be done to them."

Parris' proposal was the second from Congress in less than a week, and it came as the drug-related crime spree in the nation's capital has gained new attention.

Last Thursday, Sen. Warren

Rudman, R-N.H., touched off a furor by suggesting a "federal constabulary" might need to be created to help slow the city's record murder rate. Sen. Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., said he would endorse such legislation.

Last year, a record 372 people were killed in the district, and police blame 60 percent of those killings on drugs. That total, and the highest per-capita murder rate of any city in the country, gave Washington the distinction of "Murder Capital of America."

Through Wednesday, 119 murders had occurred in the district during 1989, roughly twice as many as in the comparable period in 1988.

Parris' Northern Virginia district includes the city-run Lorton Corrections Facility. Despite his plans for stepped-up law enforcement, Parris says he is opposed to any expansion at that 3,800-acre jail facility.

John C. White, Mayor Marion Barry's spokesman, said Barry has not seen Parris' bill and will not comment until he reads it.

Filings reported in FISD, CISD elections

Three candidates have filed for the Coahoma school board race, and two have filed for the Forsan school board election.

Coahoma trustees Jim Wright and Jimmy Sterling have filed for re-election, and Kenneth Fryrear has also filed for the CISD election.

prove the appearance of Big Spring.

Mize's opponent in the mayoral race, Maxwell Green, a vocal critic of a tax increase proposed by the council last year, has said he was seeking the position of mayor "to pull the community together and get them working together for a common cause."

Green and his son-in-law, Glenn Fillingim, are partners in an accounting firm Green founded here in 1967.

Green has said he advocates the attraction of new industry to Big Spring, but added it is important to satisfy the people who currently live here.

"I will work hard for all the people in the community and no one will be excluded," he said.

Green recently held a news conference in which he attacked city officials' management of resources.

The city council has proposed transferring the deed for the Figure 7 Tennis Center to the Big Spring Independent School

Wright and Sterling have both served one three-year term. All seven of the CISD school board positions are at-large positions.

In Forsan, Jim Alexander and Jack Howard, both current Forsan school board trustees, have filed for re-election.

District. City officials have said the city does not have resources to adequately maintain the center.

But Green said the city does have the money to maintain the courts.

Green contends the city is in "a good financial situation" and with proper budgeting and scheduling of work, the courts could have been maintained.

Public Works Director Tom Decell, however, refuted Green's comments saying, "... the budget did not have the monies in it for the repairs that were needed at the tennis center."

Blackshear lost a close race for the District II council position to Overman in 1986.

The owner of two local businesses, Blackshear's Rentals and Earthco Construction, Blackshear cited his support for providing quality police and fire protection — along with maintaining streets and utilities — in announcing his candidacy.

"I feel like I have a knowledge of heavy equipment that may prove useful in the city's plans, he said.

positions. Brooks said he carefully considered whether he would run for re-election.

"I've served for six years, and I was kind of toying with the idea of not running and letting someone else serve this time," Brooks said.

Asked which current school issues were of particular importance to him, Brooks said he was concerned with "the day-to-day operation of the schools."

"It's very important to get all we can for the tax dollars we have to spend," he said.

As a former Big Spring school teacher and former board president, Brooks said his background "helps to understand both sides of the questions."

Brooks, a home designer, is the owner of the Design Place.

Police beat

The Big Spring Police Department reported the following incidents:

• A man who resides in the 2100 block of Montecello reported that burglars stole more than $1,100 in VCRs, tapes, a stereo turntable and currency from his residence.

• Rip Griffin's, north U.S. Highway 87 and Interstate 20, reported the theft of $80 in diesel fuel from the store.

• A woman who resides in the 1200 block of Montecello reported that burglars stole $400 in stereo equipment from her residence.

• Rip Griffin's, north U.S. Highway 87 and Interstate 20, reported the theft of $80 in diesel fuel from the store.

Protests get blessing of church

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Police arrested scores of anti-abortion protesters today on a suburban clinic, the first target of an Easter season offensive undertaken with a blessing from the head of the nation's biggest Roman Catholic archdiocese.

Members of Operation Rescue sang "Jesus loves the little children, all little children of the world," as they were dragged away from the Family Planning Association clinic in Cypress, 20 miles from Los Angeles. The arrests brought cheers from counter-demonstrators, who had chanted: "Not the church, not the state, women will decide our fate."

The anti-abortion protesters went limp as police dressed in helmets and protective face shields carried them away. Others crawled up to the clinic on hands and knees to continue the blockades.

Operation Rescue said it expected up to 2,500 people to protest today at targeted clinics, with most

House to vote on wage bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Legislation to increase the minimum wage moved closer to a House vote after a largely partisan debate, with supporters arguing help for the working poor was long overdue and opponents saying too big of a boost would hurt those it is designed to help.

"We are not arguing against an increase in the minimum wage, our concern is the size of the increase," Rep. William Goodling, R-Pa., said Tuesday during debate on a bill that would raise the minimum wage to $4.65 by 1992.

The House was scheduled to vote on the measure today after considering amendments, including one that would scale back the bill's final target to $4.55 an hour and add a provision allowing employers to pay new entrants into the job market a sub-minimum wage for 60 days.

That amendment has the support of both the House leadership and the sponsors of the legislation and should pass easily while a second proposed change to be offered by Republicans was expected to fail.

The Republican amendment, which has the support of a handful of Democrats, would substitute for the House bill President Bush's proposal to raise the minimum wage to $4.25 an hour by 1992 provided employers could pay new hires $3.35 an hour for six months regardless of their past job experience.

Bush has insisted his offer is his last and appears to have the votes to sustain a veto.

Democrats supporting the bill, however, said the changes they would make through the amendment today represent considerable concessions and called on the president to compromise as well. Joining that effort was a Republican congressman who helped draft the amendment, Rep. Thomas J. Ridge of Pennsylvania.

"Inflexibility will not serve the interest of the minimum wage worker," said Ridge.

Several Democrats asserted they had compromised too much already and blamed Republicans for blocking attempts to raise the minimum, which has been $3.35 an hour since 1981.

"We ought to be ashamed of having this long period of no realization of the need to have an improvement in the minimum wage," said Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas.

A similar bill is pending in the Senate, where floor debate is expected in early April. That measure, sponsored by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., would raise the minimum wage to $4.65 an hour by 1992.

Commissioners search for new Senior Citizens Center director

By BRADLEY WORRELL

Staff Writer

County Commissioners may hold a special session next week to appoint a replacement for the resigning director of the senior citizens center, County Auditor Jackie Olson said Wednesday.

Commissioners held a special executive session on Monday to talk with the center's resigning director, Carolyn McCarty, and to discuss finding a possible replacement, County Judge John Coffee said.

"We didn't take any action, it was just an informational meeting," Coffee said.

Coffee said McCarty did "an extremely competent job" in her role as the center's director. He said the commissioners want to find a replacement as soon as possible to allow McCarty to have time to adequately train her successor.

Three people have submitted resumes to the auditor's office for the director's post, and a few others still have applications out, Olson said. She said that since she has informed the Texas Employment Commission of the opening and an advertisement for the job has appeared in the Big Spring Herald she expects more applicants.

Applications will be accepted until 5 p.m., Monday. Olson expects county commissioners to hold a special session next Thursday or Friday to approve one of the applicants.

She said she does not think commissioners will be ready to appoint a successor in Monday's regularly scheduled court meeting because it will not allow enough time to consider all of the applicants, she said.

An advertisement for the job in the Herald said the job requirements for the position include: being able to prepare and work with a budget, have book-keeping skills, be able to supervise programs, oversee records kept by the staff and organize recreational programs for the Senior Citizens Center.

The current director, Carolyn McCarty, stressed that the person who takes her job should have a love for elderly people.

McCarty, the director of the center for the last nine years, is resigning from the position to return to her native home of North Carolina, she said.

talk to Israel.

The U.S. side stressed "the need to get inhabitants on the ground involved" in steps toward peace, the official said.

Pelletreau made those points without going into much detail on the measures. But Baker's aim is known to include an easing of the 15-month Palestinian rebellion in exchange for Israel's release of Arabs detained in the violence, which has taken a death toll of more than 400 civilians.

"It's a two-way street in this respect," the official said.

While Baker wants to begin the peace process in small steps, he has told Congress his goal is a dialogue between Israel and Palestinians — or the PLO, if that is the only "meaningful" form of negotiations.

He also told the House Foreign Affairs Committee on Tuesday that Israel should trade land for peace "as a solution to the problems in the Middle East."

Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir declines to negotiate with the PLO and holds it responsible for continuing terrorist attacks against his country. Shamir will be here early next month for talks with Baker and President Bush.

Abed-Rabbo, the head of the PLO delegation, is second-in-command of the Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine.

The faction was accused by Israel last month of sending guerillas on an infiltration mission despite Chairman Yasser Arafat's renunciation of terrorism last December. The guerrillas were intercepted in southern Lebanon, across Israel's border.

The U.S. government, in its "Terrorist Group Profiles," described the Democratic Front, which is headed by Naif Hawatmeh, as Marxist-Leninist and pro-Soviet in policy. It has "repeatedly affirmed its hostility and resistance to U.S. policy in the region" and carried out bombings and grenade attacks against Israel, the document said.

In December, Hawatmeh called for an escalation of the Palestinian uprising against Israeli control.

U.S. needs new high tech

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen is worried about HDTV's and so should you. The acronym stands for high definition television, which is supposed to dramatically improve picture quality.

It is also expected to revolutionize the electronics industry much like color television did in the 1950s. A lot could be riding on this revolution.

In 20 years, industry analysts expect sales of HDTV's to reach an astounding $40 billion worldwide and as much as $11 billion in this country alone.

The figures sound promising until you consider that Germany and Japan have the lead in developing this new technology. Unless this country can catch up, "the lid could very well be nailed shut on America's $370-billion-a-year electronics industry and the 2.54 million jobs it creates," Bentsen said.

A group of 16 American electronics firms recently got together and announced plans to cooperate in research to develop the HDTV. That's good news. And Bentsen proposes that Congress find ways to help the electronics industry help itself. If American electronics firms in the past had devoted more energy to research and less to short-term market share, and if the government had found ways to encourage that research with tax incentives, this country wouldn't be worried about trade imbalance and loss of American jobs today.

Corpus Christi Caller-Times

More than rhetoric

Lee Atwater, chairman of the Republican National Committee, may have learned a valuable political lesson the past few days: It will take a lot more than promises and symbolic gestures to lure blacks into his political party.

Atwater resigned recently from his position on the board of trustees at Howard University, a predominantly black college in Washington, D.C., where students staged a 1960s-style takeover of the school administration building to protest Atwater's place on the board.

The new RNC boss has made a concerted effort to say that the GOP wants more blacks. Atwater has criticized in very harsh terms the election of a former Ku Klux Klansman to the Louisiana Legislature, vowing to expel the new lawmaker from the Republican Party. As for the symbolism, he played some blues with B.B. King at President Bush's inauguration.

Atwater's pledge to pursue the inclusions at the GOP, however, apparently hasn't softened the anger many black Americans harbor toward him for his role as George Bush's 1988 campaign manager. Atwater made furloughed murderer Willie Horton a major campaign issue against Democratic nominee Michael Dukakis. Many civil rights leaders thought the advertisements were racist, since Horton is black.

Moreover, the Republican Party's historical showing among black voters has been very low. Dukakis outpolled Bush about 9-to-1 among blacks in 1988.

Despite the setback at Howard University, Atwater has vowed to continue his outreach to blacks. He should. But he also should understand that it will take far more than words to win the hearts of a constituency.

Wrong way to skin Cat

Radio talk show host Tom Leykis of KFI-AM in Los Angeles has gained much publicity through notably fatuous behavior.

This piece of folly demonstrated abysmal failure to grasp the principle of free expression, though Leykis conspicuously benefits by that freedom in his work. He demeaned it with a goonish act of destruction.

A bit of background is necessary. The popular musician Cat Stevens, who became a Muslim convert a decade ago and changed his name to Yusuf Islam, appears to have endorsed the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's fanatical death sentence pronounced against Salman Rushdie because of his novel "The Satanic Verses."

This disturbed Leykis. It disturbs us, too. But Leykis chose to respond by getting together a batch of Cat Stevens records and tapes and crunching them with a steamroller. The message, he said, was, "We do not endorse murder. We endorse the right of the American people to read, think and say whatever they want to."

Great. But those fine words were rejected the next moment when the man who spoke them ceremoniously destroyed records and tapes that, as much as books or films or newspapers or works of art do, exemplified intellectual freedom.

That is categorically the wrong way to go about it. As Leykis may by now have realized, trashing products of thought and art in the name of freedom perverts and undermines that freedom.

Historic efforts against drugs

By JESSE TREVINO

Last week, the Bush administration took two steps in the war on drugs — historic steps in the event of either failure or success. First, the administration announced a temporary ban on the importation of automatic assault rifles — weapons that have little place in civilized society. Then, Mr. Bush's new drug czar, William J. Bennett, publicly committed himself to showcasing the fight against drugs in the nation's capital.

In spite of fears that the importation ban is merely a cosmetic whitewash — a public gesture that will lend Mr. Bush an aura of evenhandedness in the event of future presidential opposition to gun regulation — the ban is an inchstep away from the National Rifle Association, the all-powerful gun lobby of which Mr. Bush is a card-carrying member. The ban could also be a first step towards solving one of the most confounding aspects of drug enforcement: the fact that drug dealers often have more powerful weapons than the police.

Strong support for the gun import ban came from an unexpected source. William Bennett, along with Oliver North one of the most popular figures on the conservative speaking circuit.

Support for gun regulation from a man like Bennett, called from a conservative ideologue by some, is much more significant than George Bush's support, which may or may not have real substance to it.

By going against the popular conservative grain, of which he has been considered part and parcel, and by risking the wrath of his ideological soulmates, Mr. Bennett has demonstrated an awareness of just how serious the drug problem is. He has also demonstrated a willingness to take unpopular positions which may even conflict with his personal beliefs in order to solve a problem. Among politicians this is indeed a welcome if not unheard of step. To these assets, Bennett adds still more: an insightful plan of attack and a recognition of the desperate need for a tangible success in the war on drugs. By publicly pledging to clean up Washington, D.C., Bennett essentially laid it all on the line. On the one hand, Washington is probably the best bet for a localized victory over drugs. On the other hand, if Bennett fails in the district, he can hang it up; if he can't get the drug problem in Washington under control, he will not be able to do it anywhere.

Bennett has selected a rather compact area in which to stage his pilot programs which, if successful, will be replicated across the country.

Better to take on the drug lords and addicts in the confines of Washington than in the vastness of the Los Angeles Basin and its confederation of gangs.

With the immense resources of the federal government — so immediately available, Bennett should have available money and manpower to battle the problem in this limited target area.

In addition, the district will be an excellent testing ground because it typifies to a tragic extent one of the environments that breeds drug use and trafficking. Poverty and hopelessness have given Washington's drug culture the kind of fermenting ground that makes fighting the problem all the more complex, all the more difficult.

Most poor people by far do not use drugs. But among those who do, the problem is more open. The crime necessary to satisfy a drug habit spills quickly onto the streets in a poverty-torn neighborhood. Athletes and entertainers don't have to steal to support their habits, and the upper middle class user who sneaks into the office restroom every few hours often can hem and haw an additional line of credit from his bank for an additional line of credit. In the end, middle and upper class abusers may be more difficult to identify and deal with.

Sadly, most people would let the issue of drugs slide by were it not for the crime involved. Thus, Bennett's efforts must inevitably concentrate on the drug problem among the poor, and in Washington poor usually means black.

Race relations being what they are in Washington, a city whose black mayor is already under a cloud of drug-related suspicion, charges of racism are sure to arise.

But drugs are not a poor or a black problem. Drugs are a national problem. It just happens that the first area seriously targeted happens to be predominantly black.

Given the advantages of Bennett's plan, civil libertarians should prudently restrain from pouncing on what may be considered unfair racial application of anti-drug efforts.

If Bennett can fend off likely critics and if President Bush follows Bennett's apparent example of separating private affection for guns from public policy, there may yet be hope for the war on drugs.

Trevino is an Austin American-Statesman columnist and member of the editorial board.

Finally, good news about cows

By JOHN YOUNG

Waco Tribune-Herald

WACO (AP) — It was high time that we got some good news about cows.

The year 1989 is little more than two months old, and already it's been a miserable year for cows. Not since Rocky has American beef taken such a pummeling.

First, we started the year off with the story of the European Economic Community's refusal to buy American meat that had been beefed up with steroids. Personally, I thought Europe was overreacting.

There's a possibility that steroid use is rampant among our cattle, but I doubt it. I've yet to see an American steer match Canadian Ben Johnson's time in the 100 meters. Neither have I seen one hoist barbells with the ease of a Romanian weightlifter.

If there's steroid use by our cows, it couldn't possibly be a serious health problem to consumers. Now, if we start exporting prime cuts from the carcasses of deranged Big 8 linemen, the Europeans should be advised to grill their steaks a few extra minutes.

The European demand for steroid-free cattle seems unreasonable. The last thing we want is for American farmers to have to sample their herds. You tell a 1,000-pound Hereford to hit that little bitty Dixie Cup.

But while the steroids story was a terrible affront to cattle, the real kick in the rump came from a Colorado State University professor who said cows are partially to blame for the greenhouse effect.

You read it here first. The agricultural scientist blamed the cattle population for pumping millions of gallons of methane into the atmosphere. He called it flatulence. He didn't even have the decency to tell us what he meant by that.

So what are we supposed to do about this so-called dilemma? Do we start feeding them Rolaid's?

All Mr. Colorado State University could offer was to feed the cattle an antibiotic to kill the intestinal microorganisms that supposedly cause Earth's distress. (We have no evidence of the cows' distress.)

As I said, with all this cow-bashing, it was high time for some good news about our four-legged institutions, they who feed Texas' economy so stoically, make our cream, fertilize our pastures and give cowboys something to call themselves. (Would it have been America's Team as the Dallas Horseboys?)

The good news? Oh, yes. The good news.

It turns out that in Imperial, Calif., a utility company is using that which makes the grass grow to make that which makes air conditioners hum: electricity.

The Mesquite Lake Resource Recovery Project, 110 miles east of San Diego, provides enough juice to electrify 20,000 homes using the fruits of area feedlots, where 250,000 cows do what comes naturally. And no, Mr. Colorado State, we aren't talking about methane. The folks in Imperial are cashing in their cow chips.

It's the first commercial power plant that burns only cattle dung.

A 36-year-old environmentalist attorney named Will Parish left his job in San Francisco to form National Energy Associates Inc. In launching his Imperial plant in 1987 he says he found his fortune as an "entrepreneur." (Nobody said eco-comedy was pretty.)

This story should put dollar signs in the eyes of all Texans. The bottom fell out of oil. Real estate is the pits. Microchips have yet to be a salvation. Now cow chips can be. And I mean now, right now, before we are in the grips of a European or Middle East cow-chip cartel.

Manure is one of Texas' more renewable resources. All you need is a cow, a field and a shovel. Texas has plenty of all three. It needs to start shoveling.

This development not only gives us a means to generate new power and wealth, it gives reason for cows to hold their heads and tails up high again. It also gives the Texas Legislature a reason to get busy.

I would suggest that lawmakers assign a select committee to explore the energy applications of fertilizer right now. They won't have to look far. Our statehouse is presumed to be ankle deep in it on any given day.

Bush faces U.S. drug problem

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush says religious faith and family togetherness are the best antidotes to the drug threat in America.

During visits in Pennsylvania with Amish and Mennonite leaders and young people, Bush wove much of his philosophy about proper lifestyles into discussions surrounding drug abuse.

The president listened sympathetically Wednesday as Mennonite leader Elmer Burkholder wondered aloud whether his 4-year-old son would "be able to say no, to maintain his values."

Bush, who traveled to southeastern Pennsylvania as part of his anti-drug campaign, called the religious and tradition-minded Amish and Mennonites of the area "a shining example of what family and faith can do."

Bush reiterated his contention that prayer should be restored in public schools. He also said that while "we want to preserve freedom of expression," he believes much of today's popular music has "really bad lyrics."

Sitting around a table in a classroom of an old, simple one-story Amish school, the president listened as his hosts talked of the increasing pressures brought to bear on young people.

The Amish and Mennonite leaders told Bush that their relative success in child-rearing came from their deep-rooted family and religious values.

Bush marveled at how they had kept drugs away from their doorsteps. He told the Amish and Mennonite leaders to keep "the moral underpinnings of your community, and hopefully others will see your example."

Officials: Air pollution increases

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal officials and environmental groups are calling for stronger laws to control toxic air pollutants in light of a government report showing that at least 2.4 billion pounds of deadly chemicals are released into the air each year.

"The magnitude of this problem far exceeds our worst fears," declared Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., after he made a report public Wednesday that provided the first nationwide glimpse into the volume of toxic pollutants released by chemical plants and other industrial sources.

The report covered 328 chemicals or chemical groups including 60 agents the government has identified as causing cancer. Among the chemicals are phosgene, used as a nerve gas in World War I, and methyl isocyanate, which killed more than 2,000 people in Bhopal, India, in 1984.

Spokesmen for the chemical industry, which accounted for about a third of the total volume of toxic pollutants cited in the report, said it is misleading to link the raw figures to health risk because they do not take into account actual exposure or concentration.

They said the emissions are legal and take place within the restrictions of various state and federal permits.

Taxpayers may apply for refund

WASHINGTON (AP) — Taxpayers whose 1985 federal refunds were shortchanged or lost because they forgot to subtract taxes already withheld have only 25 days to file a claim with the IRS.

After April 15, the refunds will be lost forever.

The Internal Revenue Service on Wednesday outlined a procedure for filing such refund claims, one day after acknowledging that an old policy had prohibited IRS employees from notifying taxpayers who neglected to take a credit for withheld taxes.

The agency indicated that most people who got squeezed by the old policy probably were taxpayers who in 1985 received lump-sum pension payments from which some taxes were withheld. Most such payments were reported to the taxpayer and the IRS on Form 1099R.

"Taxpayers should review their 1985 returns, especially if tax withholding was reported on a Form 1099," the IRS said Wednesday. "If taxpayers find that they have not claimed all their withholding for 1985 they should file a special claim."

The IRS also announced that after additional review, it will issue instructions on how to apply for refunds that were not made for the same reason on returns filed in 1987.

Bipartisan group faults plane deal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican and Democratic members of Congress are criticizing the FSX fighter plane deal with Japan despite President Bush's support for the joint venture.

"The FSX agreement is a bad deal for America and for American workers," Sen. Alfonse M. D'Amato, R-N.Y., who has emerged as a leading critic of the pending U.S.-Japan agreement, said Wednesday.

The deal is expected to be sent to Capitol Hill within the next few days. It could be blocked if both the Senate and the House pass resolutions of disapproval within 30 days of being formally notified of the agreement.

The president, however, could then veto the congressional action, with a two-thirds majority required to override the veto.

Bush said Tuesday that he has decided to endorse the deal, but with modifications to help safeguard U.S. technology and to assure that American industry has a share in the plane's production.

Under the agreement signed late last year, St. Louis-based General Dynamics would join with Japan's Mitsubishi Heavy Industries to co-develop and co-produce the FSX as an advanced version of the U.S. F-16 fighter.

Proponents argue the agreement represents the best deal the United States could negotiate in the face of Japanese opposition to buying F-16s directly from this country. They say the deal will promote exchanges of technology while helping U.S. industry.

Critics contend the arrangement amounts to a giveaway of advanced technology that Japan may use to help propel its civilian aircraft industry into head-to-head competition with the United States in the world market. They say Tokyo should purchase American-made planes to help offset the $50 billion U.S. trade deficit with Japan.

"We're giving them $7 billion worth of F-16 technology, in return for about $420 million in development work," D'Amato said.

D'Amato said he was asking the General Accounting Office to examine the current level of development of composite wing technology and active phased-array radar.

FSX proponents say the United States will benefit from Japanese developments in those areas.

West asked to reopen embassies

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — The government has appealed to the United States and other western countries to reopen their embassies, saying the country has not become a "bloodbath" after the Soviet withdrawal as had been feared.

A Foreign Ministry statement containing the appeal was read to foreign reporters on Wednesday. Ministry spokesman Mohammed Nabi Amani said it would be delivered to the United Nations.

The United States and 11 other western nations closed their embassies in January and February as the Red Army completed its withdrawal after nine years of helping the Marxist Kabul regime fight U.S.-supported Moslem guerrillas.

The insurgents began fighting after a Communist coup in April 1978. Speaking to a group of about 20 foreign journalists, Amani repeated official allegations that closing the embassies was a propaganda maneuver designed to undermine the Kabul government and boost guerrilla morale.

Amani, whose remarks were translated by aides from Dari into English, said the embassies were closed "on a pretext of insecurity and they were saying after the Soviet withdrawal, Afghanistan will change to a bloodbath. The last 40 days have demonstrated that this was not correct."

The ministry statement specifically asked the United States, as a guarantor of the U.N.-sponsored agreement under which the Soviets withdrew, to reopen its embassy.

Reports: Hijacking threatened

LONDON (AP) — American military personnel, diplomats and their families have been warned of a possible plan by Palestinian extremists to hijack a U.S. airliner in Europe on Easter weekend, British news media reported today.

The London tabloid the Daily Express said the possible hijack threat was detailed in a Friday-dated secret memorandum from the U.S. Federal Aviation Administration and that it had been given a copy.

The British domestic news agency Press Association quoted an unnamed FAA spokesman in Washington as saying the alert was sent out to American airlines and airports worldwide.

The news agency quoted the spokesman as saying the alert "is very, very urgent. It is coded 'information credible though not confirmed from a reliable source', but I can't go into details."

The Daily Express said: "American military personnel and diplomats and their families have been told of the threat, which centers on U.S. airlines. They were advised to alter routine plans to return home from Europe for Easter."

Another British tabloid, Today, said the FAA warning was issued after a plot was discovered by agents who infiltrated terrorist cells in Europe. It gave no other details.

Boat people collide with tanker

TOKYO (AP) — About 130 Vietnamese boat people apparently drowned after a Japanese tanker collided with their overloaded 30-foot boat in the South China Sea, Japanese officials reported today.

Authorities said first reports of the March 8 accident did not emerge until Monday, when 35 survivors of the accident on the high seas between Vietnam and Malaysia arrived in the port of Yokohama.

The refugees said their wooden ship was carrying 165 people when it struck the propeller of the 239,000-ton Japanese tanker Nissei-Marui, said Nagasaki refugee center official Masanami Nakatsukasa. The boat had left Long An in southern Vietnam for Malaysia on March 4, he said.

Nakatsukasa quoted the survivors as saying their boat overturned and sank after it hit the propeller of the tanker while trying to approach the Japanese ship for help.

Many passengers were seasick and suffering from a lack of fresh water after four days at sea, Nakatsukasa quoted them as saying.

The refugee boat somehow overturned when the tanker's captain, Yasuo Kawamura, stopped his ship and prepared ladders to let the refugees come on board, said Hiroshi Hattori.

Steinberg to be sentenced; Nussbaum still recovering

KATONAH, N.Y. (AP) — As her former companion, Joel Steinberg, awaits sentencing in the death of their illegally adopted daughter, Hedda Nussbaum is preparing to leave a psychiatric hospital and rebuild her life.

Since November 1987, doctors have worked to repair physical and mental wounds she said she incurred during the 11 years she shared a New York City apartment with Steinberg, a disbarred lawyer.

She underwent surgery for physical injuries and was kept for a time in a locked unit with the criminally insane.

Now, "she's about ready to go out on her own," said Dr. Samuel Klagsbrun, executive medical director of Four Winds Hospital in suburban Westchester County, where she has been living since March 1988.

"We're doing discharge planning for her now," he said. "There are details to work out."

The actual release could occur within a month, but Klagsbrun said she must still decide how to resume her life, including where she will live and what kind of job she wants.

He said Ms. Nussbaum was not available for an interview.

"Right now, release depends on the practical matters," said Klagsbrun. "She has to look for some work to support herself, just like the rest of us."

Ms. Nussbaum had worked as a children's book editor, a job from which she was fired after repeatedly missing work. She has a $3.6 million civil lawsuit pending against Steinberg.

At first, Ms. Nussbaum was charged along with Steinberg in the beating death of 6-year-old Lisa Steinberg in November 1987.

At the time, Ms. Nussbaum's lips were split and swollen, her broken nose had an ulcer on the bridge and a clump of hair appeared to have been snatched from her head. She was bruised and wounds on her legs were badly ulcerated and infected. She walked with a stoop and her hair was matted and gray.

Charges against her were dropped when prosecutors determined she was too physically and mentally incapacitated to be responsible for the girl's death.

Ms. Nussbaum, 46, testified under immunity as the star prosecution witness in Steinberg's trial, during which defense attorneys contended she was responsible for Lisa's fatal beating.

A jury convicted Steinberg in January of manslaughter, rejecting a murder charge because, as one juror said, Ms. Nussbaum could have saved Lisa's life.

Steinberg's sentencing is Friday. He could receive a maximum prison term of eight to 25 years.

During the past year, Ms. Nussbaum has undergone individual and group therapy, psychodrama therapy and what Klagsbrun called "expressive therapy."

Jesus dies at the 'Place of the Skulls'

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the second part of a three-story Easter series about Jesus and the role of the military in his arrest and crucifixion, based on Scripture, historical sources and ancient non-canonical Christian writings.

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

Shortly before dawn, the centurion Longinus began buckling on his gear. A courier had brought word of an early morning execution. It smelled of a rush job, apparently timed before the fractious holiday crowds clogged the streets.

Some sort of trial was already nearing its conclusion in the governor's atrium at the fort. The prisoner, Jesus, a hill-country Jew who captivated the multitudes, had been arrested by a Roman patrol only last midnight.

Longinus had been tapped to finish the business. An orderly fastened the padded bronze greaves around his lower legs and tightened the thongs holding the protective leather cuirass on his chest.

He slipped on the felt-cushioned bronze shoulder pieces, called "heart guards," and drew on his helmet, with its lined cheek pieces, hinged visor and decorative crest.

His name isn't specified in Scripture, but ancient writings identify him as Longinus. Scripture makes clear that his role in Jesus' final hours keenly troubled him.

But for the moment, it only seemed puzzling that the military governor, Pontius Pilate, would be conducting a trial at such an early hour, after the prisoner had been shuffled about through the night among Pilate; the high priest, Caiaphas; the Galilean puppet, Herod, and now Pilate again.

Longinus had heard reports of the stir this fellow Jesus caused, the throngs he attracted. His popularity with ordinary people left both local and Roman authorities apprehensive about how to curb him. "They feared the people," Scripture says. "They did not find anything they could do, for all the people hung upon his words."

But Pilate, a master of ruthless artifice, and Caiaphas, his tractable, Rome-sanctioned high priest, had maneuvered to avoid a public outcry by acting between midnight and the edge of day.

Longinus recalled the scene a week ago when the Galilean rode into the city to cheers of an ecstatic throng. "Hosanna!" they cried, meaning "Save us!" They waved leafy branches, spreading fronds and garments in front of him.

"Son of David! Blessed be he who comes in the name of the Lord, even the King of Israel! Hosanna in the highest!"

Next day, Roman sentries in turrets of the fort overlooking the was deeply troubled by the event. This drawing illustrates the second story in a three-part Easter series, "The Military and Jesus."

temple square had watched Jesus' onslaught on the commerce there, swinging a braided whip, overturning money-changing tables and merchants' booths, driving out dealers, tourists and guards alike.

"My house shall be called a house of prayer, but you have made it a den of robbers," he thundered.

The Roman historian Polybius wrote:

"Centurions are required not to be bold and adventurous so much as good leaders of steady and prudent mind, not prone to take the offensive or start fighting wantonly, but able when overwhelmed and hard-pressed to stand fast and die at their posts."

Scholars believe four Roman legions were stationed in the Judean-Galilean province at that time, the 3rd, 6th, 10th and 12th, each with about 6,000 men at full strength. Each legion included a cavalry wing, siege weapons, camels for carrying supplies, slingers, archers and other infantry soldiers. Most were mercenary auxiliaries recruited from Thrace, Syria, Gaul, Germany and other imperial provinces.

Pilate kept the bulk of his forces at his headquarters in the coastal city of Caesarea. But he regularly brought reinforcement to Jerusalem for the Jewish Passover, when the annual influx of pilgrims turned the city into a tinder-box of turmoil and clamor against the colonial yoke.

Longinus left his quarters and strode to the guardhouse where his detail loitered with their legionary ensign, crucifixion tools and spears, the iron points topping wooden shafts.

The sound of a flogging floated out from the guardroom, the crack of the bone-tipped flagellum mingling with the whoops of soldiers as they roughed up a prisoner, taunting him as king, slapping him about.

Shortly, three condemned culprits were jostled into the yard, one of them, Jesus, badly mauled, lacerated and bleeding, a circle of thorns jammed on his head.

Longinus winced, but his martial demeanor returned automatically. He was a professional. An adjutant brought from Pilate's chambers the execution tags to be hung around the prisoners' necks.

"Two of them were simply stamped 'thief,' but the third verdict, for treason, was written out in Pilate's scrawl for Jesus, 'King of the Jews.'"

Pilate as procurator held the "jus gladii," full powers of criminal justice. Only he in this restive province could impose capital punishment. He did so regularly, a common fate for resistant Jews. For a quarter-century, their landscape had been spiny with crosses.

Longinus aligned his detail with the prisoners, each carrying a heavy crossbeam, and moved them off through the Jerusalem streets. Onlookers trailed the procession, shoving, gawking curiously, as temple subordinates scoffed and some women wept over the maimed, weakened Jesus.

He kept falling under the heavy beam, and Longinus brusquely conscripted a muscular African onlooker to carry it.

When they reached the execution site, Golgotha, "Place of the Skulls," it was still early, only the third hour, 9 a.m., says the earliest account in Mark. The prisoners were bound to the crossbeams, thick nails pounded through their wrists. Once the beams were hoisted by pulleys to the uprights, the convicts' feet were nailed to the posts.

The tortuous ordeal stretched on: the shooting bursts of pain, the convulsions, the straining upward to breathe, the massive cramps, the writhing limbs. The temple claque jeered, women sobbed, the thieves screamed and raved. Jesus exhibited stoic grit: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

At the foot of the cross, soldiers threw dice for Jesus' robe. Longinus allowed it. It was a Roman rule: to the executioner belonged the "spoils."

At noon, the sky darkened, thunder crashed and a shuddering earthquake rent the ground. The overcast continued until the ninth hour when Jesus cried loudly, "Father, into thy hands I commit my spirit!"

He had died in only six hours. Usually, crucifixion took about 12. A spearman ran him through to make sure he was dead.

Longinus looked up at him as the sun broke through and a bird chirped.

"Certainly this man was innocent," he murmured. "Truly this man was a son of God!"

Gin manager presents program

The Mary Jane Club met recently at the home of Lusara Wegner, with Shelley Choate as co-hostess.

Ten members answered roll call with "How Agriculture Affects My Life." Sherry Brooks was welcomed as a new member.

In keeping with this year's theme, "Women in Business," Lory Jeffcoat, manager of Luther Gin, presented the program "A Gem at the Gin."

Jeffcoat served as the gin's bookkeeper for many years, and following the death of her husband, she was asked to accept the position he had held as gin manager.

She noted that working with farmers to obtain the best finished product from the cotton was very satisfying and enjoyable. She stressed that customer satisfaction was her ultimate goal.

Working 16 to 18 hours per day during ginning season, Jeffcoat said her job was stressful.

The next meeting will be April 13 with Juanita Stonerook and Frances Mason as hostesses.

NARVRE hosts meeting, supper

National Association of Retired and Veteran Railway Employees Inc. met recently for a potluck supper and business meeting. Mrs. Claudia McCreary, president, presided.

Hope for OCD sufferers

DEAR ABBY: You were right to tell Count Dracula that compulsive counting is fairly common. Some people are always counting something — the number of stairs they go up or down, the number of posts in a fence, cars on the highway, light bulbs in a sign, etc. It can be harmless, or carried to the point where a person thinks he's going insane. Doctors call it "Obsessive Compulsive Behavior Disorder" or "OCD."

An estimated one in every 40 men, women and children has some form of OCD. I know, because I am an OCD sufferer. For years I thought I was the only person in the world who couldn't stop counting everything.

The good news is that doctors now realize that OCD is a PHYSICAL illness — and there is medication that can bring it under control.

Three years ago, many of us who were being treated in the Yale Clinic OCD program in New Haven, Conn., formed an organization to educate and offer support to the estimated 5 million OCD sufferers throughout the country. Today, this national non-profit OCD Foundation offers advice, information, newsletters, referrals to treatment centers and "phone pals" to OCD sufferers and their families in all 50 states.

Dear Abby

It's not just a compulsion to count; it includes saving things until there is no more space to accommodate the collection, and the uncontrollable habit of pulling one's own hair or eyelashes out. The list goes on and on.

Thank you, Abby, for giving this hidden disorder national exposure so those who have it will not feel so alone and can seek the help they need to control this disorder. — FRAN SYDNEY, NEW HAVEN

DEAR FRAN: Thank you for providing me with this information so I could publicize it. Those who are interested may write to The OCD Foundation, P.O. Box 9573, New Haven, Conn. 06535. This is a non-profit group, so please enclose a long, self-addressed, stamped (25 cents) envelope.

Mary Martin takes flight as 'Peter Pan'

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES — From the age of 5, when she soared off the garage in Weatherford and broke her collarbone, Mary Martin knew that she was destined to fly.

She would later become a high-flying legend of the theater, familiar to millions of Americans as "Peter Pan," the impish boy of Sir James Barrie's play who flies

Wendy and her brothers to Never-Never Land.

Martin flies again Friday in the first telecast of "Peter Pan" by NBC in 16 years.

"I'm so thrilled they're bringing it back," said Martin. "It's for children. Mothers today grew up with it and many are having parties to watch it."

Martin first played "Peter Pan" on Broadway in 1954. By then she was already the empress of the musical. She'd been a star since her show-stopping number, "My Heart Belongs to Daddy" in "Leave It to Me" in 1938. She was Nurse Nellie Forbush in "South Pacific" and Maria in "The Sound of Music."

But to a new generation she is probably better known as the real-life mother of Larry Hagman, who plays J.R. Ewing on CBS' "Dallas."

Her first NBC "Peter Pan" telecast was live in 1955, and she won an Emmy. She appeared live again in 1956. She made the taped version for a 1960 broadcast and it was telecast again in 1963, 1966 and 1973.

It also stars Cyril Ritchard as Capt. Hook and Mr. Darling, Maureen Bailey, Margalo Gilmore, Sondra Lee, Joe E. Marks, Jacqueline Mayro and Norman Shelley. Lynn Fontanne narrates.

"The last time I flew as 'Peter Pan' was in 1984 at Davies Symphony Hall in San Francisco," she said. "It was a benefit performance for the trauma center at San Francisco General Hospital. They saved our lives after the accident."

In a 1982 taxi-van accident, Martin, Janet Gaynor and Gaynor's husband, Paul Gardner, were severely injured, and Ben Washer, Martin's manager, was killed.

"I flew three stories high. I was 70 years old. I wore the original costume and flying harness. The auditorium was pitch black and they had laser lights. All you heard was the little voice of Tinker Bell. Then I was in a purple light flying through fairy dust."

New series combines shows

TORONTO (AP) — Yes, they've heard the jokes about "men-something" on the set of the new television series "Men."

But cast and crew alike say viewers of the new ABC series, premiering Saturday, are not in for another dose of yuppie whining that ABC's hit "thirtysomething" has been accused of.

"It's the time to look at the male point of view of life," executive producer and director Peter Werner said in an interview. "It's time to consider what's going on inside a man's life and psyche."

The new series is inspired not by "thirtysomething" but the "About Men" column in The New York Times Magazine and its wry, unconventional looks at what it means to be male in modern times.

ABC is giving the one-hour drama series a spring tryout.

Werner calls the idea of making the series "a combination of inspiration and logic."

He said the four most popular genres in television are shows about doctors, police officers, lawyers and reporters.

So, the four long-time friends in "Men" are surgeon Steven, newspaper columnist Paul, lawyer Charlie and cop Thomas. Thomas dies in the pilot. His younger brother Danny, also a cop, then is taken into the group.

They live in Baltimore because, the pony-tailed Werner said, that's the kind of place where you could believe four guys who knew each other in high school still might hang out together.

"These are men whose work in the world makes it a slightly better place," he said.

The producer said his own experience includes the first year of "Moonlighting" when it was a fresh, quirky voice on television, and that's what he is aiming for here.

Werner said humor definitely will play a part in the show.

"The biggest danger is taking yourself too seriously," he said.

The creator and other executive producer is Steve Brown, who was involved in "Cagney & Lacey."

Although enough movies and television shows have been made in Toronto to earn it the nickname "Hollywood North," locally based Atlantis Films believes this is the first time a Canadian company is producing a prime-time series directly for a U.S. network.

Canadian actor Saul Rubinek, who plays the newspaper columnist, said the show won't be simply four guys sitting around talking.

"It won't be boring," he said, on a break from filming a party scene. "You may like it, or hate it, but that's one thing I can promise you. It's not going to be boring."

He also said, despite the four guys' professions, that it won't simply revolve from cop show to surgeon show to lawyer show to reporter show.

"It's about how these men react to their work and each other," said the talkative Rubinek, who recently wrote a well-received book about his immigrant parents. "I know this show is not developed cynically."

He said the subject matter will be men in their roles as brother, son, husband, friend and lover, so there will be plenty of territory to cover.

Asked if most shows aren't already about men, Rubinek said men generally have been shown on television as pretty types, dumb types, fantasy macho figures or eccentrics.

Rubinek is the only Canadian actor among the principals, but, he joked, "I'm paid too much to feel Canadian."

Nelson schedules concert

AUSTIN (AP) — Former President Jimmy Carter and singer Willie Nelson are scheduled to join forces April 2 for the Riverbend Baptist Church's 10th anniversary.

The church will have a gospel reunion to benefit Habitat for Humanity, an ecumenical organization devoted to building single-family houses at cost, involving the residents in construction and arranging for families to repay to cost at no interest.

Carter and his wife, Rosalyn, are Habitat for Humanity volunteers.

The program, slated for Austin's Palmer Auditorium, will include remarks by Carter and gospel music by Nelson, the church's pastor, the Rev. Gerald Mann, said Friday.

Also scheduled to attend are former first lady Lady Bird Johnson, former congresswoman Barbara Jordan, and former University of Texas football coach Darrell Royal.

Mann said 90 percent of the money raised at the benefit will be used to build homes in Austin, with the remainder used for similar projects in foreign countries.

Dick quits

Dick Clark is surrounded by young fans while reading messages from fans during a television broadcast of "American Bandstand" in 1958. Clark, the ageless rock 'n' roll emcee whose television show gave teenagers everything from the jitterbug to Madonna, said Wednesday he is leaving the show after 33 years as host.

Jackie Olson, County Auditor, will receive applications for the position of Senior Citizens Center Director until March 27, 1989 at 5:00 P.M.

Applications will be accepted in the Office of County Auditor, Second Floor of the Courthouse, Big Spring, Tx.

Job requirements include: prepare and work with a budget, bookkeeping, supervise programs, staff, and volunteers, oversee records kept by staff, and organize recreational programs for the Senior Citizens Center.

The job requires a mature person who enjoys working with senior citizens and report to the Howard County Commissioners' Court.

Mustangs club Steers

By MARCELLINO CHAVEZ
For the Herald

The district opener between the Big Spring Steers and arch-rival Andrews Mustangs was postponed due to snowy weather Tuesday, but got underway Wednesday at Steer Field with the visitors taking a 10-0 win.

"Playing a top team and giving up five unearned runs, and also committing four errors will not win any ballgames. We have to be mentally ready to play when we're up against teams like Snyder, Andrews or Monahans," said Steer baseball coach John Velasquez.

He added "The only good thing about the outcome of this game is that we played them early in the season and we can improve and get our composure back. We still have 13 more games left, and we are not going to quit at this point."

Andrews ace Brent Leffingwell went five complete innings, allowing two hits, walked four and stranded four. Teammate Kelly Cornejo relieved Leffingwell in the bottom of the sixth inning allowing only one hit to end any Steer threat.

The Mustangs pounced early on the home team as they took advantage of starter Neal Mayfield in the first inning with one hit, aided by two Steer miscues which gave the Mustangs a 2-0 lead.

The Steers could not make anything happen as Leffingwell retired the first three batters. In the top of the second inning, Andrews David Emiliano singled up the middle scoring Eric Hammack and Clay Gidney to extend their lead 4-0. Jason Graham doubled to center field adding two more runs as the Mustangs began to take control of the contest. Freddy Rodriguez snagged a line drive stepped on second base completing a double play, catching the baserunner

Rozelle announces retirement

PALM DESERT, Calif. (AP) — For NFL owners, finding a successor to Pete Rozelle is like a boxing fan trying to determine who will succeed Mike Tyson as heavyweight champion. There just don't seem to be any leading candidates.

"We have to turn over every stone," said Edward DeBartolo Jr., owner of the San Francisco 49ers, after Rozelle's shocking announcement Wednesday that he is retiring three years before his contract expires.

"This guy isn't coming into any day at the beach. This man will be succeeding a legend."

The first and most obvious name that surfaced was Jack Kemp, the former NFL quarterback, congressman and now Secretary of Housing.

But there are others who might fit the description set forth by Tex Schramm, president of the Dallas Cowboys, and seconded by other owners: a man in his 40s or early 50s, knowledgeable about the NFL and communications.

Among them: — Paul Tagliabue, a former Georgetown basketball player who is now a lawyer with Covington and Burling, the prestigious Washington law firm. Tagliabue has represented the NFL before Congress and has been deeply involved in two major lawsuits — the antitrust suit filed against the league by the USFL and the current antitrust suit filed by the players union at the end of the 1987 strike.

— Neal Pilson, the president of CBS Sports, who has worked closely with the league for a decade. Several owners were impressed with Pilson's testimony during the USFL trial.

— Joe Bailey, Dallas' vice president for administration. Bailey is a former North Carolina quarterback and Cowboys ballboy who is considered to have Schramm's knowledge of football without the abrasiveness that has antagonized some owners toward the Cowboys president.

Other, more speculative candidates, might include former Dallas running back Calvin Hill, a Yale graduate and member of the Baltimore Orioles' board of directors; Bob Wallace, general counsel to the Phoenix Cardinals and a former Yale running back; and Bill Walsh, who stepped down as San Francisco coach after winning his third Super Bowl in January.

Hill and Wallace are black — earlier this week Rozelle strongly urged the owners to hire more minority employees.

Schramm, whose role with the Cowboys is likely to be diminished with the sale of the team to Arkansas oil man Jimmy Jones, said he wasn't interested. But Schramm hedged when asked if he might be interested in taking the job on an interim basis.

"I'm older than Pete," the 68-year-old Schramm said of the

AL West no longer the worst

By BEN WALKER
AP Sports Writer

The talent in the American League is getting better. So are the teams, sort of.

Jose Canseco, Kirby Puckett, Mark McGwire, Ruben Sierra and Wally Joyner are the kinds of players who rule the West these days. Jim Abbott, Ken Griffey Jr. and Robin Ventura are on the way.

Added up, the West is no longer the Worst.

"Back in the 70s, when we were winning and winning, we didn't feel there was all that much competition," said George Brett, entering his 17th season with Kansas City. "Now, you have better better teams, but maybe not quite the depth they have in the East."

Oakland Athletics Jose Canseco and the Bash Bunch took over first place on April 20 and stayed there with a division-record 104 victories. By adding free agent Mike Moore to the league's best staff, the Athletics should remain on top.

Moore, 66-96 lifetime with Seattle, is curious. His winning percentage was worse than his team in Joe Canseco of the Oakland Athletics, last year's league's Most Valuable Player, is expected to lead the Athletics to a second consecutive NL West crown.

Seattle, but he may excel with a winning team.

Dave Stewart, a two-time 20-game winner who has not gotten the attention he deserves, Bob Welch (17-9) and Storm Davis (16-7) have spots in the rotation and Todd Burns (8-2) and Curt Young (11-8) will get some chances.

Dennis Eckersley highlights a bullpen that led the majors with 64 saves. Eckersley got 45 saves (in 54 chances) and four more in the playoffs, but will be remembered for Kirk Gibson's home run.

Canseco became baseball's first 40-40 player and 27 of his 42 homers either tied the score or put Oakland ahead. Canseco, Mark McGwire (32 home runs, 99 runs batted in) and good-glove shortstop Walt Weiss are the last three AL rookies of the year, but the lineage might end this season unless outfielder Felix Jose breaks into the lineup.

Dave Henderson (.304, 24 HR, 94 RBI) and Carney Lansford (.279, 29 stolen bases) supply more offense and All-Star MVP Terry Steinbach led the league by throwing out 43.5

Defending champion ousted

STORRS, Conn. (AP) — Basketball crowds mean different things to different people.

Connecticut has used its home field house crowd to advantage, winning 26 straight games there.

Wednesday night, Alabama-Birmingham made the hostile

NIT

UConn crowd work for it in an 85-79 NIT quarterfinal victory over the defending champion Huskies.

"It was a great crowd. What a phenomenal atmosphere," said UAB coach Gene Bartow.

Sophomore swingman Andy Kennedy, who led the Blazers with 22 points, including a half-dozen 3-pointers, agreed.

The Huskies took an early lead, but six straight points by Reginald Turner and a three-pointer by Kennedy gave the Blazers a 29-25 edge with 9:45 to go in the first half.

UConn led only twice after that, 33-31 and 38-37. By halftime, UAB was in front, 45-41.

The Blazers gradually increased the margin to 66-55 with 9:28 left on another Kennedy three-pointer.

UConn, 18-13, tried to come back, but every time they did, the Blazers responded.

"Every time they made a big run at us, we got a big basket. If they got a steal, we got a steal right back," said Kennedy.

"This is probably the best we've played in many ways," said Bartow.

UConn got within 79-76 with 57 seconds left on a three-pointer by John Gwynn, but Kennedy hit two free throws and Dylan Howard and Alan Ogg followed with two more foul shots each to seal the win.

Turner finished with 18 points while Ogg and Howard had 11 each for the Blazers, 21-11. Ogg blocked seven shots while Barry Bearden led the Blazers in rebounding with eight and assists with nine.

Cliff Robinson had 23 points and eight rebounds for the Huskies while Phil Gamble hit six-of-seven three-pointers and finished with 20.

Michigan State 70, Villanova 63 VILLANOVA, Pa. (AP) — Villanova's physical game took its toll — on the home team — and put Steve Smith in a place he just couldn't miss: the free-throw line.

Now Michigan State is headed for the National Invitation Tournament semifinals after a 70-63 victory over the Wildcats Wednesday night.

"We concentrated tonight," said Smith, a 6-foot-6 sophomore who carried the Spartans down the stretch with 22 of his career-high 34 points coming in the second half.

"Having fun, shooting free throws and playing defense, it really came together."

Smith nearly doubled his 17.6 average for the season, and has now scored at a 26-point clip in three NIT games.

The win was the fourth in a row and sixth in the last eight games for Michigan State, 18-13, which next plays Monday at New York's Madison Square Garden.

Villanova ends its season at 18-16.

percent of potential base stealers.

Kansas City Royals
The Royals, a team that relies on pitching, have traded away Danny Jackson, David Cone and Melido Perez in the last two years. Still, Kansas City showed a one-game improvement to 84-77.

Mark Gubicza (20-8), Bret Saberhagen (14-16), Charlie Leibrandt (13-12) and Floyd Banner (12-13) are in the rotation. Rookie Tom Gordon, who started in Class A and worked his way up to the majors — striking out 281 along the way — may also join.

George Brett (.306, 24 HR, 103

RBI) and an All-Star for 13 straight seasons, Kevin Seitzer (.304), Danny Tartabull (26 HR, 102 RBI) and Willie Wilson (35 SB) give Kansas City some big names on offense. But the Royals' on-base percentage was eighth at .321, hurt by Wilson at .289 with only 22 walks in 628 plate appearances.

Catcher Bob Boone became just the second free agent ever to leave another team to join the Royals (Jerry Terrell was the other). Boone, at 41, is expected to handle the pitching staff well and he batted a career-high .295, including .333 when the count reached 0-2.

Frank White, 38, committed a career-low four errors and Kurt Stillwell settled the shortstop problem. Seitzer made 26 errors and led AL third basemen in miscues for the second straight season.

Minnesota Twins

The Twins proved they were of a fluke, making a six-game improvement and winning 91 times, two more than AL East champion Boston. That's a valid comparison — don't forget, AL teams play a balanced schedule with almost equal games against each division.

Cy Young winner Frank Viola (24-7, 2.64 ERA) has been baseball's best left-hander for five years. Unheralded Allan Anderson (16-9, 2.45 ERA) held off Ted Higuera to win the ERA title after Manager Tom Kelly scratched him from his last scheduled start. Shane Rawley (8-16) was acquired from Philadelphia for Tom Herr and Fred Toliver and Les Straker will compete for the final spot.

Jeff Reardon saved a career-high 42 games, but his fastball may not overpower hitters much longer. Juan Berenguer (8-4) and Keith Atherton (7-5) are setup men.

The Twins are the best-fielding team in the majors and they can hit, too.

Rozelle

63-year-old Rozelle. "But the league is No. 1 with me. If there is anything I could do to help, I would."

Less likely are two who were hot candidates half-a-dozen years ago but whose luster has dimmed because of their involvement in the NFL's recent legal and labor troubles: Michael McCaskey, president of the Chicago Bears and nephew of George Halas, one of the league's founders, and Jack Donlan, executive director of the NFL Management Council.

The new commissioner will be picked by a committee headed by Wellington Mara of the New York Giants and Lamar Hunt of the Kansas City Chiefs, president of the AFC and NFL, respectively. Three more members will be named today.

Several owners, led by Art Modell of the Cleveland Browns, suggested a two-headed job — a commissioner to handle marketing, television and other public aspects, and a president to handle the football operations and perhaps legal matters.

In any case, it will take 19 of the 28 owners to elect the new commissioner — two-thirds of the teams. That's not always easy. Most other policy matters need three-quarters, or 21.

In 1960, when Rozelle was elected, it took 11 days and 23 ballots to decide on the then little-known general manager of the Los Angeles Rams.

It was the two thirds requirement that got Rozelle his job in 1960, when the owners were choosing a successor to the late Bert Bell in Miami Beach.

As Mara recalled, Marshall Leahy, the league counsel, had seven votes early but couldn't get the eighth as the days and ballots rolled on. Finally, he said, the late Art Rooney Sr., Dan's father, said "we've got to settle it."

So Mara, Dan Reeves of the Los Angeles Rams and Paul Brown, then the owner of the Cleveland Browns and now the president of the Cincinnati Bengals, came up with two names — Brown himself and Vince Lombardi, then coach of the Green Bay Packers.

Brown turned it down "and Dan said 'it's got to be Pete,' Mara recalled.

He and Reeves told Rozelle, then 33, and advised him to stay in his hotel room. Then they went back and told the other owners "it's Rozelle." All seemed to accept it, although Frank McNamee, the owner of the Philadelphia Eagles, wanted to know:

"Who's Rozelle?"

Steers

by surprise ending the Mustang rally. Andrews held a commanding 6-0 lead.

Mayfield threw eight pitches in the third inning as he put down the first three batters he faced. The Steers could do no better themselves, they were also retired in order. Michael Hilario was caught stealing second base after reaching base on a walk given up by Leffingwell.

The fourth inning was also non-productive for both teams as Andrews' Emiliano was picked off by Steer catcher Mike Calvio, a super toss that ended the Mustang side.

In the Steers' half of the inning, Hilario tapped down a perfect punt to start things moving in the fourth. But Robert Perez hit into a double play that stopped any Steer scoring.

Mayfield gave up two hits and a double to start the fifth inning. Graham failed to score after teammate Sid Mihecoly slammed a double, because he (Graham) failed to touch second base thus, being nullified a run. Michael Hernandez's score was valid though, giving the Mustangs a 7-0 lead.

Coach Velasquez pulled Mayfield and replaced him with Tim Guiterrez. Guiterrez retired the side but not until the Mustangs were able to get another run across home plate. The run was charged to Mayfield.

Leffingwell struck out the first Steer he faced in the bottom of the fifth, but walked the next three batters as the home team managed to build up a threat with the bases loaded. The Andrews ace put on reserve any notion of a Steer score as he fanned the next two batters to pull out of the jam, and the Steers could not capitalize on a golden opportunity.

Andrews scored two more runs in the sixth as errors managed to plague the young Steer team. Perez had a single in the bottom of the sixth, but they Steers were no match for the powerhouse team from Andrews.

Andrews, ranked number four in the state, improves its record to 8-3, while Big Spring drop to 5-7 for the season. The Steers will play Tuesday in Snyder 7 p.m.

WP — Leffingwell. LP — Mayfield. Andrews — 10 runs 10 hits 1 error 1 LOB. Big Spring — 0 runs 2 hits 6 errors 2 LOB. Stolen Bases Andrews (4); Big Spring 0.

Weather

High pressure systems along the New England coast and the Southwest brought fair weather to much of the western, central and northeastern parts of the nation this morning.

Elsewhere, an area of low pressure moving across the northern Gulf of Mexico spread rain across much of the eastern Gulf Coast region, the Tennessee Valley and the southern Atlantic Coast states.

Thunderstorms dumped up to an inch of rain across portions of northern Florida. One to 2 inches of snow were expected over the northern mountains of North Carolina.

The difference in air pressure between the high off the New England coast and the low over the northern Gulf of Mexico produced strong northeast winds along the North Carolina coast.

Snow was widely scattered over the northern Rockies and Upper Michigan, where an inch fell at Sault Saint Marie.

Today's forecast called for showers and thunderstorms from Alabama across to the southern Atlantic Coast and Florida; rain mixed with snow in western Montana; and light snow in northeast Minnesota and northwest Wisconsin.

Highs were predicted to be in the 30s from northern Minnesota to Upper Michigan and across northern Maine; 40s and 50s from much of the Atlantic Coast across the Ohio and Tennessee valleys and the Great Lakes.

Jeanne Dixon's Horoscope

FRIDAY, MARCH 24, 1989

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE:

shortstop Gary Templeton, magician Harry Houdini, designer Bob Mackie, actor Steve McQueen, writer Malcolm Muggeridge.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Problems will develop if you let success go to your head. Relinquish unrealistic expectations. Tempers could flare over money issues. Creative ideas can be turned into a new source of income. Think bold!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Wise counsel comes to you from an unexpected source. Helpful friends continue to enrich your life. Use your contacts but do not exploit them. Show mate how appreciative you can be.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Postpone asking special favors from an influential person. Making a small sacrifice will restore domestic harmony. An acquaintance could have an idea that will aid your career. Be a good listener.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You are entering a period of increased productivity and prosperity. Your skills and stamina let you make great strides forward. Develop a source that needs a little priming. Repay favors in kind.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your memory could play tricks on you today; do not rely on it! Write down details and directions. A telephone conversation may provide a clue to an associate's irritable mood. Listen sympathetically.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Meet family responsibilities with a more enthusiastic attitude. A breakdown in transportation or communication could occur. Social activities give you a chance to get outdoors.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your housekeeping methods may need an overhaul. New appliances could make your home more comfortable and easier to maintain. Your relationship with a close friend intensifies. Be careful what you reveal.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Stick to routine methods at work and exercise special care around machinery. A friend lends a helping hand when you are pressed for time. Plan inexpensive entertainment for the weekend. Focus on romance.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Heed the advice of a quietly successful friend. This person really does have your best interests at heart. A conservative approach is safest today. Mate has interesting ideas. Listen attentively.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A conflict between your financial needs and a desire for amusement could arise at a critical moment. Make a logical decision, not an emotional one, where a relationship is concerned. Think ahead.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Creative endeavors could mean extra dollars for your hungry piggy bank. Write overdue letters. Someone at a distance is eager to hear the latest news. Double-check all details. Accuracy is essential.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Discuss your work concerns with mate or partner. They could make valuable suggestions. A visitor from another shore will boost your spirits in the afternoon or evening. Give as good as you get.
