Reagan eases sanctions against Japan

U.S. not bluffing about warnings to Iran in Persian Gulf, he says

VENICE, Italy (AP) — President Reagan announced an easing of U.S. economic sanctions against Japan and said the United States is not bluffing about warnings to Iran on the Persian Gulf as allied leaders gathered amid heavy security today for the economic summit.

Answering reporters' questions about tough U.S. statements about the possible deployment of antiship missiles by Iran, said, "I haven't bluffed once since I've been here. It's just a statement of fact."

And in a gesture of harmony just before the formal opening of the 13th international summit, Reagan announced that the United States was partially lifting economic sanctions it had imposed against Japanese electronic goods.

Reagan refused to say what he would do if the Iranians deploy antiship missiles in the Persian Gulf that could threaten oil tankers. Administration officials earlier had urged Iran not to "run the risk of retaliation" by deploying the weapons, known as Silkworm missiles.

When a reporter suggested that warnings voiced by his key aides here had amounted to a threat against Tehran, the president said, "No. It's just a statement of fact."

Following a meeting Reagan held with Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone, the president said through spokesman Marlin Fitzwater that he was removing 17 percent, or $51 million, of the $300 million in penalty tariffs he imposed April 17 on Japanese computers, television sets and power tools.

Reagan's statement said the reduction of the duties is in response to some improvements made by Japan in complying with a 1986 semiconductor pricing agreemenmt.

"As we open this economic summit, one of our primary concerns must be the removal of barriers that seek to maintain trade imbalances and lead to protectionism," Reagan said in a statement announcing the move.

The Iranian navy said it would attack any military bases established in the gulf by the United States, the official Islamic Republic News Agency said today.

The agency, monitored in Nicosia, Cyprus, quoted the naval command headquarters in Tehran as saying that any use by U.S. forces of bases in the gulf would be a violation of the interests of Iran.

"We have consistently said that we support freedom of navigation in the gulf. We are not threatening anybody," national security adviser Frank Carlucci said today.

Asked what kind of response the United States is weighing in the event of an attack by Iran against ships in the gulf, Carlucci, interviewed on NBC-TV's "Today" show, replied, "I don't think it's useful to speculate on military options. We are not provoking anyone but we are prepared to defend shipping in the gulf. We are prepared to defend ourselves."

Reagan counts on missiles, tough talk at summit

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

An Analysis

VENICE, Italy (AP) — President Reagan is counting on a few hundred nuclear missiles and some tough talk aimed at Iran by his top aides to carry the day for him at the economic summit.

The missiles can be taken out of Europe and Asia now that West Germany has joined the rest of NATO in approving a tentative U.S. deal with Moscow.

The negotiators in Geneva have some work to do yet, but Reagan already is hailing the prospective treaty as historic.

Like Richard Nixon more than a decade ago, he is banking on arms control to rescue him from political misfortune.

The tough pre-summit talk is coming mostly from Reagan's two top aides, Howard Baker and Frank Carlucci, along with his press secretary, Marlin Fitzwater, and officials back home in Washington.

Cardinal rule

When this male cardinal and his mate took up residence in a Bryan home recently, they found competition from "intruders" — the birds' own reflections. They attacked the "intruders" and, according to Texas A&M professor Keith Arnold, suffer from "displacement behavior" and react as if the reflections are real.

Administration lawyer defends opinion exempting NSC from ban

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Reagan administration lawyer, testifying at the Iran-Contra hearings, today defended his 1985 legal opinion that the National Security Council was exempt from a ban on aid to the Nicaraguan rebels because it is not an intelligence agency.

"I think that was a fair conclusion then and I think it is a fair conclusion now," Bretton Sciaroni said of the opinion he wrote in his capacity as legal counsel to the president's Intelligence Oversight Board.

The 35-year-old Sciaroni said the job was his first as a lawyer, and added that he spent less than an hour with NSC officials to learn what they were doing.

Iran-Contra Affair

His appearance at the beginning of the sixth week of hearings before the joint House-Senate committees turned the nationally televised sessions into something of a debate on the so-called Boland amendment that Congress passed in 1984 to limit U.S. support for the Contras.

Under repeated questioning, Sciaroni said nothing he has learned in the past two years would cause him to change his legal opinion. But he conceded that he was never informed of wide-ranging, secret activities in support of the Contras by Lt. Col. Oliver North, then an aide on the National Security Council.

Asked whether covert support for the war in Nicaragua was an intelligence activity, Sciaroni replied tersely, "That would seem to follow."

Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., said there was a "morass of ambiguity" about what Congress actually intended when it enacted the ban. "If the Boland amendment wanted to foreclose all government funds, why didn't it say so?" he asked.

PTL employees 'scarred, bitter' but still loyal to ministry's vision

FORT MILL, S.C. (AP) — Some PTL employees say they are "scarred" and "battle-weary" from the acrimony between their old boss, Jim Bakker, and their new one, the Rev. Jerry Falwell, but most say they remain loyal to the ministry and the effort to serve God.

Despite the scandal that led to Bakker's resigning as head of PTL and has cast the financial future of the organization into doubt, the employees keep busy. There are television shows to produce, a hotel to run and grounds to keep at a ministry that costs $5.7 million a month to operate.

PTL had 1,480 employees on the payroll before laying off 200 in early May.

"Jim and Tammy have to understand they did something wrong," said Laura Whyley, who wears the bracelet of pearls and sky-blue glass that Mrs. Bakker gave her. "He just got consumed with the building of the ministry and lost his vision to minister."

Mrs. Whyley was Tammy Bakker's personal assistant in 1984, but the women haven't talked since the Bakkers resigned March 19 after he admitted to having a sexual encounter with a church secretary six years before.

"The staff has given their support to Jerry Falwell and Harry Hargrave (PTL's new chief operating officer)," Mrs. Whyley said. "I'm going to stay here, and I'm going to stand for what's right and honorable

"It hasn't been easy," she said. "This staff has been to hell and back. We are scarred. We are wounded. We are battle-weary. We have cried. We have prayed."

High court rules for Texas in dispute over Pecos water

WASHINGTON (AP) — New Mexico lost a key round in its clash with Texas over the Pecos River water today as the Supreme Court said Texas may be entitled to compensation for past violations of an agreement between the two states.

The justices, by an 8-0 vote, sent the 13-year-old legal dispute back to a "special master" for further hearings to determine whether New Mexico must pay Texas extra water or money in compensation.

The court rejected objections both New Mexico and Texas had lodged to preliminary findings that New Mexico has shortchanged Texas, depriving the Lone Star State of its fair share of Pecos water.

The justices also empowered the special master they appointed to serve as a fact-finder in the case, Charles J. Meyers, to appoint a "river master" to make sure the states from now on live up to a 1949 compact on apportionment of water from the Pecos.

New Mexico lawyers had contended that only "prospective remedies" are authorized for past violations of the compact.

But writing for the court today, Justice Byron R. White said, "We find no merit in (New Mexico's) submission that we may order only prospective relief, that is, requiring future performance of compact obligations without a remedy for past breaches."

White added, "If that were the case, New Mexico's defaults could never be remedied."

Meyers last year recommended a 340,100-acre-feet payback. New Mexico lawyers say that recommendation would work an "extreme hardship" on their state.

The dispute began in 1974, when Texas sought to "sue" New Mexico in the Supreme Court. A year later, the court agreed to hear the case even though it had not previously been aired in a lower court.

Women exercise beliefs as well as their muscles

PLANO (AP) — While women who work out to rock music are reaching for the ceiling, students of Cathy Stout's Believercise programs are stretching a lot higher.

"I feel like I have a tool to reach people, to teach people how to bless the Lord," said Mrs. Stout. "When they come to class, they have a sense of seeing Jesus somehow. Not in the mystical way, but they feel the presence of God."

Mrs. Stout founded the exercise-to-Christian-music program, that has expanded to at least 25 states since beginning in Plano five years ago.

The 31-year-old mother of two stumbled onto her Christian aerobics program when she was trying to get back into shape after the birth of her first child.

Tired of working out to rock songs with lyrics that contradicted her religious upbringing, she began exercising at home while listening to her collection of Christian records.

Believercise now has 80 instructors in the United States and 12 in New Zealand. Mrs. Stout has written more than 400 routines, produced two record albums and a videotape. The records have sold more than 100,000 copies worldwide.

The music played while the women shed pounds and praise the Lord is hardly hymnal. They work out to fast-paced music by such Christian artists as Amy Grant and Rick Riss and know the lyrics by heart.

PTL Partners say ministry 'belongs to us,' reject Falwell

DECATUR, Ga. (AP) — About 150 contributors to the PTL television ministry prayed and protested Sunday, saying they owned PTL and wanted the Rev. Jerry Falwell to step down as its leader.

"It's ours, it belongs to us. We paid for it," said Joe Haviland, president of the Association of PTL Partners, an organization formed a month ago to rally PTL's contributors to exert their influence over the organization.

The group, which held its Georgia organizational session Sunday in a suburban Atlanta church, claims 5,000 members nationwide and has announced plans to set up chapters in several states.

The group contends the estimated 517,000 people who have contributed to the ministry are the owners of PTL, which stands for Praise the Lord or People That Love.

PTL broadcasts round-the-clock religious programming via satellite and owns nearly $200 million worth of property around Fort Mill, S.C., concentrated in Heritage USA, a Christian theme park.

As part of his fund-raising, the network's founder, the Rev. Jim Bakker, offered those who would contribute $1,000 or more to PTL three nights' free stay each year in the Heritage Grand Hotel at Heritage USA. Those people were honored with the title "lifetime partners."

The association's chief legal counsel, attorney Robert G. Zanesky of Bridgeport, Conn., said the arrangement was grounds for the contributors to claim ownership. The group plans to file a lawsuit this summer in federal court in Columbia, S.C., he said.

"This was not a donation," Zanesky told the group. "You bought an interest in a hotel."

LAWYER

Rep. Edward Boland, D-Mass., awaiting his own opportunity to question Sciaroni, sat with a bemused smile on his face while Hyde had his turn.

While Republicans sought to raise doubts about the legal prohibition, Democrats introduced doubts about Sciaroni's legal qualificiations.

Under questioning by Sen. George Mitchell, a Maine Democrat who is a former federal judge, Sciaroni conceded he has never practiced law prior to his appointment to his government post in July 1984, or conducted an investigation as a lawyer. He said he was required to pass the bar exam as a prerequisite for assuming his duties.

Earlier testimony has indicated that North and others in his private Contra aid network relied on Sciaroni's legal opinion to justify their actions during the two-year ban voted by Congress. A copy of Sciaroni's opinion, missing the caption which showed who wrote it, was found in North's NSC safe.

But Sciaroni said that as far as he knew his classified legal opinion was never shown to Congress. And House majority counsel John Nields introduced a copy of a 1985 legal opinion submitted to Hyde by a Republican staff attorney on the House Intelligence Committee that flatly contradicted Sciaroni's opinion. The House Republican staff opinion, a copy of which was found in North's files, said NSC was covered by the ban.

Sciaroni said he undertook his legal research after questions were raised in the press and elsewhere about activities on behalf of the Contras by North. Sciaroni said he concluded that North's activities "as portrayed to me, did not constitute a violation" of the ban "even if it applied to the NSC staff." He said his investigation of what the NSC was doing consisted of about half an hour with the NSC legal counsel and five minutes with North, plus a review of documents.

Sciaroni said that at the time he wrote the opinion, he was not aware of some documents regarding North's involvement in the Contra effort that are now in the possession of congressional investigators. He said he was not told that the NSC was involved in an operational intelligence activity.

But the documents would not have changed his basic legal opinion, he said.

The documents included North's "Fallback Plan for the Nicaraguan Resistence," in a memo to then National Security Advisor Robert McFarlane that outlined proposals for White House involvement in arranging arms and supplies for the Contras during the congressional ban. North's 1985 memos also discussed the need to get more money for munitions from "current donors."

■ Related story — Page 7A

Other documents Sciaroni did not see reflected NSC efforts to get military aid for the Contras from third countries and outlined military strategy proposals for the rebels.

After Sciaroni, investigators intended to summon North's former secretary, Fawn Hall, later in the day to question her about any role she played in helping North shred or alter critical documents in the Iran-Contra affair.

Miss Hall, 27, was North's secretary at the National Security Council for four years, including the period when North was directing a series of covert operations aimed at selling arms to Iran in exchange for the release of American hostages in Lebanon and also providing military aid to the Contras.

In other developments:

— David C. Fischer, President Reagan's top personal aide from 1981-85, has received full immunity in return for his cooperation with Iran-Contra independent counsel Lawrence E. Walsh, The New York Times reported today. Fischer received the immunity "simply as a legal precaution," his attorney, Charles R. Work, said.

Fischer has not been charged with a crime and has denied wide knowledge of the fund-raising efforts on behalf of Nicaragua's Contra rebels. He already has provided some information to a grand jury investigating the case, the Times said.

— Hundreds of thousands of dollars may have been funneled covertly to Nicaragua's Roman Catholic church, first by the CIA and later by a network run by North, Newsweek magazine reported Sunday. The CIA originally channeled the money to the church, which opposes the ruling Sandinista regime, the magazine said in its June 15 edition. The CIA halted the flow of money in 1985 due to congressional objections, but North supplied additional funds.

USS Liberty's survivors still bitter

By DAVE SKIDMORE

WASHINGTON (AP) — The assault on a U.S. warship in the Persian Gulf last month stirs bitter memories for James M. Ennes and other survivors of an Israeli attack 20 years ago today on the USS Liberty.

On June 8, 1967, in the midst of the Middle Eastern six-day war, Israeli jets and patrol boats fired on the Liberty, an electronic intelligence gathering ship cruising in international waters off the Sinai Peninsula.

Ennes, a lieutenant on the Liberty who suffered shrapnel wounds and a broken leg, contrasts the official U.S. reaction then with the events following the May 17 Iraqi missile attack on the Stark.

Following the Stark attack, the Navy sent trained counselors to talk with the ship's surviving crewmen and flew relatives of the dead to a nationally televised memorial service where President Reagan offered condolences to each family.

After the Liberty attack, "They told us 'You can't ever talk about this, not even to your mother,'" Ennes said. "But you have to talk about things like this to get it out of your system."

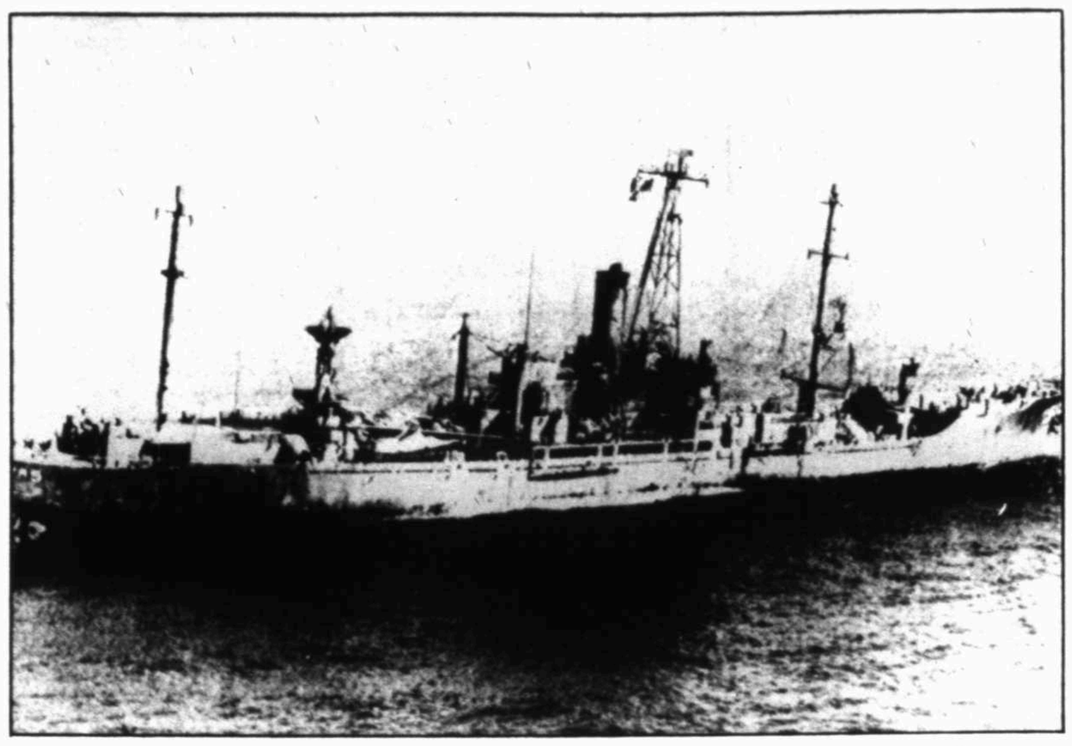
Seventy veterans of the Liberty and 130 family members gathered this weekend in a hotel near the White House to talk, grieve and remember what they say U.S. officials were all too anxious to forget.

They noted some similarities between the two incidents.

Thirty-seven men died on the Stark, 34 on the Liberty. And, like the Iraqi pilot who fired on the Stark, the Israelis who torpedoed and strafed the Liberty said it was a case of mistaken identity. In both cases, U.S. officials accepted the explanations.

But the men of the Liberty are struck more by the differences between the two incidents than by the similarities. Crewmen, along with some U.S. Navy officials, say the Liberty attack could not possibly have been a mistake, and they want a new investigation.

Retired Adm. Thomas Moorer, chief of naval operations at the time, has said he believed the Israelis attacked the ship because they were afraid it might intercept Israeli military communications revealing a planned attack the next day on neighboring Syria.



AP Laserphoto

The USS Liberty lies dead in the Mediterranean Sea on June 9, 1967, after it was attacked by Israeli planes and ships. Nearly two decades before an Iraqi missile slammed through the hull of the USS Stark in the Persian Gulf, sailors on the Liberty died in a similar seemingly mistaken attack by the friendly Mideast nation.

"There isn't a single one of us, that I know of, thinks it was an accident," said Stan White, who as electronics chief was the Liberty's senior enlisted man.

Two Israeli journalists, Hirsh Goodman and Zeev Schiff, wrote in 1984 that classified Israeli documents show the attack was a "tragic accident." They said a marker identifying the Liberty as a neutral ship was mistakenly removed from the Israeli high command's battle control map and that the Israeli planes and gunboats that attacked could discern no identification on the ship.

But White said Israeli pilots circled the Liberty before the attack and the ship flew an American flag and bore identification marks on its side.

"Sometimes the planes were so close you could look right in the cockpit and wave at the pilot and he'd wave back...Then they came back and blasted us," said White, now a quality control specialist with a cherry picker manufacturer in Huron, S.D.

Larry Weaver, an Oxford, Pa., water company maintenance worker, was in sick bay with an ear problem when he heard the rattle of machine gun fire against the bulkhead. He rushed to his general quarters post and watched as the Israelis strafed the ship, corner-to-corner.

He came out too soon from a sheltering niche and became one of 171 wounded among the 294-member crew. More than 100 pieces of shrapnel struck his hip, side, back and shoulder. Fifty pieces remain in his body. His right hand and arm are gnarled and nerve damaged.

"If the Stark was a mistake, it was a fast mistake. The Liberty was under attack for an hour and 15 minutes," said Robert Casalé, a former communications analyst, who named his Hicksville, N.Y., business — Liberty Plumbing and Heating Supply — after the ship.

"The only similarities are that they were both attacks on a surface ship by a supposedly friendly nation," said Ennes, who wrote a book, "Assault on the Liberty," which disputes the Israeli explanation.

"The Stark attack was at night and from a great distance. We were attacked in daylight when there was unlimited visibility," he said.

Retired Capt. Joseph M. Tully Jr. commanded the USS Saratoga, an aircraft carrier with the U.S. Sixth Fleet, about 400 miles away. After receiving the Liberty's distress signal, he dispatched 16 warplanes. The planes were recalled by the fleet commander and Tully said he's never learned where the order originated or why it was issued.

SUMMIT

White House chief of staff Howard Baker said today that if the Iranians deployed the antiship missiles, the United States would have "a serious serious situation on our hands."

Appearing on ABC-TV's "Good Morning America," Baker said "this whole situation can be avoided" if the Iranians do not deploy the missiles. "It's important, in my view, that the Iranians stop and think" about the consequences of escalating the threat of warfare in the gulf, he said.

Baker said that world peace and Persian Gulf security "would be best served" if the Iranians made no use of the Silkworm missiles that U.S. officials said they have purchased from China.

Amid the controversy over the Persian Gulf, there were strong suggestions that Reagan would partially lift trade sanctions against Japan. The president began his day with meetings with Italian Prime Minister Amintore Fanfani, Nakasone and West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl.

At the beginning of Reagan's meeting with Kohl, German reporters asked why the Bonn government should join in protecting Gulf shipping.

After a long, thoughtful pause, Reagan replied, "because the climate is so nice."

In Reagan's meeting with Fanfani, the leaders discussed Reagan's campaign to reduce costly subsidies to farmers and how to confront the spreading AIDS epidemic.

Besides Reagan, Nakasone and Kohl, the other summit participants were Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain, President Francois Mitterrand of France, Prime Minister Brian Mulroney of Canada and Jaques Delors, president of the European Communities Commission.

The seven summit partners had in their hands, even before starting their deliberations, a U.S. draft expressing concern over threats to shipping in the gulf.

The draft was circulated last week. A U.S. official, who demanded anonymity, said it was "normal pre-summit" procedure to provide a basis for discussion. He said the statement was not a threatening one, but simply "a general expression of concern over developments there."

After a formal welcoming ceremony tonight at the imposing Pallazzo Ducale on St. Mark's Square, the leaders will assemble with translators — but no aides — for a political discussion over dinner.

White House officials said Reagan would seek a unified position on a U.S.-Soviet proposal for the removal of hundreds of medium-range and short-range nuclear missiles in Europe and Asia.

"I think things look good," Baker said Sunday. He said he expected a consensus not only on those missiles but on long-range strategic weapons and perhaps on chemical and biological weapons.

TOUGH

They are keeping Iran guessing about whether Reagan might order a pre-emptive strike to destroy Chinese anti-ship missiles that are near deployment.

Reagan, himself, is maintaining a discreet silence.

"I haven't bluffed once since I've been here," he said at the start of his talks today.

Reagan said he was not threatening, simply stating facts.

The tough talk is calculated to deter the Iranians from using the Silkworm missiles against Kuwaiti tankers when they are put under the U.S. flag and cloaked in a pledge of U.S. protection, probably later this month.

It is also designed to build up Reagan's image as a resolute leader as he opens three days of meetings with the heads of West Germany, Britain, France, Japan, Italy and Canada.

Reagan's chances of scoring at the summit look good.

American presidents always start out with an edge since their country is the strongest of the seven.

Besides, several of Reagan's Venice partners are in tough political shape themselves. The host, Prime Minister Amintore Fanfani of Italy, is merely a caretaker as his country goes into elections June 14-15.

Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone may be out of office by late fall. British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher will stay at the summit for less than 24 hours in order to campaign for re-election Thursday. And West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl has some political problems too.

So they are not likely to hold the Iran-Contra affair against Reagan, or even to bring it up.

Congress and the American public may be a little pickier, however. The scandal has shaken Reagan's authority at home. That makes a nuclear deal with Moscow and a successful summit even more important for him.

Trying to deter Iran from attacking Persian Gulf shipping is another matter. That's where the tough talk — backed by an itchy U.S. naval presence in the gulf — comes in.

Baker, the White House chief of staff, said Sunday the United States really had no choice but to talk tough.

"It seems to me, the United States has two choices," he said on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation." "The United States can say, oh, I'm sorry about that — we were just full of bluster and didn't mean we were going to protect free transit.

"Or, the United States says, yes, you bet — you're not going to stop us and you're not going to stop other nations of the world from having freedom of the seas to transport oil from the Persian Gulf, even though Iraq and Iran are at war.

"The United States has chosen the second option," Baker concluded. "It was well thought through."

To enhance his credibility, Reagan will ask the other leaders here for help. Britain and France already have a military presence in the area. West Germany and Japan are restricted by law from venturing militarily into the area.

At a minimum, the six countries will be asked to voice their support for the U.S. campaign to protect Western oil. They also may be asked to contribute to the cost.

Will Iran be convinced?

Secretary of State George Shultz, who was trained in business to take stock in charts and graphs, is encouraged by the fact that insurance rates are up only slightly. That means the insurance companies expect Tehran to hold its fire.

But on the eve of the summit, Iranian foreign ministry spokesman Hassan Ghadiri warned anew that "the Persian Gulf is a sea deep enough for U.S. ships to be sucked to the bottom."

EXERCISE

The exercisers accompany their movements with vocal bursts of "Pour on the power!" and "The Lord says be strong!"

When Mrs. Stout calls out, "Snap to it! Do it now like the Lord commands you!" her eager pupils beam and quicken their step.

The dance movements and the music are geared to religion. As students shouted "You need a savior!" during a recent morning class, they marched forward and backward, pointing a finger in front of them and at the ceiling. In another song, they used sign language for the word "glory."

"I write the routines to minister to the Lord," Mrs. Stout said.

Through Believercise, said 28-year-old Susan McKenzie, "I've learned to shout, to sing. I can lift up my hands. This is an open expression of my love for God."

PTL

Mrs. Whyley and her husband, Bob, PTL's director of audio, said they are committed to Falwell, even as Bakker sends word he wants the ministry back and accuses Falwell of stealing PTL.

"Tammy was very generous," Mrs. Whyley said. "But she can't continue to think that she can come back to this ministry. I feel so polluted, because the whole world has been revolving around two people. I just want it all to stop. I want there to be peace."

Doug Oldham, 56, whom Bakker hired in 1985 to sing on PTL's daily TV show, and his wife, Laura, are also torn by the controversy.

Mrs. Oldham said she was with the Bakkers in California when Bakker announced their resignations. Oldham stayed at Heritage USA, helping as host of "The PTL Club" daily broadcast.

"It was kind of a tightwire," he said. "I could have lost my job."

Oldham was a soloist at Falwell's Thomas Road Baptist Church in Lynchburg, Va., for about five years in the early 1970s.

Ivory figure unearthed on Crete

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Archaeologists digging on Crete have unearthed pieces of a unique ivory-and-gold figure sculpted almost 3,500 years ago when the island's Minoan civilization reached its artistic peak.

The torso and arms from a statue of a young man that once stood 19¼ inches high were discovered last month at Palaikastro in eastern Crete.

"It's the biggest Minoan ivory carving ever found, done in a style of sculpture that's one of the highest ancient art forms," Sandy MacGillivray, the excavation's co-director, said in an interview with The Associated Press over the weekend.

"The figure probably fell from an upper floor in a fire that devastated a large public building around 1450 B.C. It definitely must have come from a shrine," added MacGillivray, assistant director at the British School of Archaeology in Athens.

Work stations with optic pens and electronic notebooks have been set up in the Longhena Library on Venice's San Giorgio Island for this week's economic summit. Members of each country's delegation will be able to communicate with their leader through these stations.

Summitry aided by high-tech wizardry

VENICE, Italy (AP) — It looks like a time warp: video screens, control panels, optic pens and electronic notebooks clicking away amid the towering, hand-crafted bookshelves and Renaissance paintings in a 17th century library on San Giorgio Island.

The summit has gone high-tech.

Eight work stations, one for representatives of each of the seven allied summit countries and one for the European Economic Community, have been set up in the Longhena Library where leaders will meet around a long oval table.

At futuristic-looking work stations, the summit leaders' assistants will be able to keep in constant, silent, contact with other aides working nearby in refurbished monastic cells.

"One of the biggest problems in a meeting like this is finding a way the people inside the conference room can pass information back and forth with those who must remain outside," said Andrea Grammatico, an account executive for the Italian computer giant, Olivetti. "And I think we came up with something that will work very well."

The multimillion-dollar information system, donated by Olivetti, uses electronic cable to link 50 personal computers, four minicomputers, 40 copying machines and 20 laser printers.

Seated at the stations will be the "sherpas" — aides whose jobs it is to make sure their heads of state have at hand information needed to reinforce their arguments at the summit table. The name is drawn from the expert mountain climbers who serve as guides on the slopes of the Himalayas.

The sherpas will keep their leaders in contact with their outside delegations, who will be situated nearby in rooms in a 300-year-old cloister that until recently housed 24 members of the Salesian order.

In addition to the standard personal computer, the work stations are equipped with a "note-pad monitor" — a video camera that transmits notes or documents from the sherpa to his delegation.

To keep assistants up to date on what is being said by the various leaders, a sherpa can take notes on a pad placed beneath the camera.

But the major innovation of the work station is its electronic notebook and optic, or "light," pen developed by Olivetti.

"The optic pen has been used in the past to make selections from computer menus by pointing at a certain section of a video screen," Grammatico says. "But I think this is the first time it is being used to write on a video screen as if it was just another piece of paper."

The sherpas will be able to write on the electronic notebooks — slanted video screens the size of a standard piece of stationery — in red, blue or green, or on a checkered, lined or plain background.

What they write with the optic pen will appear instantly on small television screens monitored by their delegations.

Pope begins third pilgrimage to Poland

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Pope John Paul II today started his third pilgrimage to his Communist homeland with a promise to serve fellow Poles, and he recalled the "joy and suffering" of the Polish people.

"Oh, land of Poland, land so sorely tried," the pontiff said in his arrival speech.

The Roman Catholic Church and the Communist leadership both hope to benefit from the seven-day tour, which for the first time will take the pontiff to Gdansk, birthplace of Solidarity.

Polish leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski said in his welcoming remarks at Warsaw's military airport he hoped the visit would lead to "strong national agreement."

He apparently referred to the nationwide calm the Communist leaders hope to foster after the turbulent era of the Solidarity free trade union movement. Solidarity was outlawed under 1981-1983 martial law and remains so.

The pope's week-long tour of eight cities will include a meeting with Lech Walesa, a Solidarity founder. It also will include the pope's second meeting this year with Jaruzelski, who led the martial law crackdown.

Roman Catholic bishops see the visit as a way to fight pessimism and passivity and consolidate spiritual values linking the people of the overwhelmingly Roman Catholic nation.

In an address to cloistered nuns in the 14th-century St. John's Cathedral in Warsaw's historic Old City, John Paul today emphasized "the Polish reality."

"You know well that this reality is difficult, full of painful tensions, full of uncertainty and human crisis, made worse by sin, which at times, is the consequence of human weakness, but not only that...," the pontiff said, his voice trailing off.

In the audience was Mother Teresa, who won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1979 for her work with the poor.

Hundreds of Poles pressed against police street barricades to hear the pope's remarks over loudspeakers.

The pope's Alitalia DC-9 jetliner arrived at 10:40 a.m. Jaruzelski and Cardinal Jozef Glemp, primate of Poland, led the official greetings.

Hundreds of thousands of people waved and cheered along the motorcade route from the airport to the city center as he passed in his "popemobile."

Young girls, many dressed in traditional costumes, carefully lined the streets with flowers. Red-and-white Polish flags, yellow-and-white Vatican flags and portraits of the pope hung from windows, sides of buildings, lamp posts.

As the pontiff got off at Visitation Church, about 60 people in the crowd unfurled Solidarity banners and chanted, "Democracy!" and "There is no freedom without Solidarity!"

The pope waved to the crowd but did not acknowledge the chanting.

Police made no attempt to break up the group.

However, a banner carried by supporters of Freedom and Peace, an illegal peace and ecology movement, was torn down by plainclothes police in a brief scuffle, according to Jacek Czaputowicz, a leader of the group.

Sri Lanka trying to win over Tamil civilians

POINT PEDRO, Sri Lanka (AP) — The Sri Lankan government is beginning another battle in the Jaffna Peninsula, this time to win the "stomachs, hearts and minds" of Tamil civilians in areas where the army recently routed Tamil rebels.

It will not be an easy task.

The country's minister for national security began the campaign in a visit to this tiny fishing village on the northern peninsula late last week.

"I have come in peace and friendship," Lalith Athulathmudali told about 50 civic leaders gathered in a school. "We are one people, one country. Your suffering is my suffering."

After delivering that message in the Tamil and Sinhala languages and English, Athulathmudali outlined the government's plans to rebuild the northeastern quarter of the peninsula, which the Sri Lankan army captured from Tamil rebels in an offensive that ended June 1.

The goal is to feed people, get the homeless housed, and re-establish basic government services, Athulathmudali said.

But there are many obstacles facing the government in what the minister called in his speech "a campaign to win the stomachs, hearts and minds" of Tamil civilians.

In interviews, many Tamils in this area 200 miles north of Colombo said they were fearful of the army presence and unsure if the government can deliver on its promises.

People also retain a loyalty to the Tamil rebels — many of them husbands, sons or brothers — who are seen as the front-line fighters for minority Tamil rights in this majority Sinhalese nation.

"We are afraid to go home," said one woman, who asked that her name be withheld. "We don't know what the army will do to us, to our daughters. We are now defenseless."

The militant Tamils say they are fighting for an independent homeland because the Sinhalese reject their language, deny them jobs and give them too little money for schools and development.

The Sinhalese, who are mainly Buddhists, make up 74 percent of the 16 million population. Tamils, mostly Hindus, make up 18 percent.

India, which has 60 million ethnic Tamils in its southern states, last week ignored Sri Lankan protests and sent food and medical supplies to rebel-controlled areas of the Jaffna Peninsula. It claimed thousands of civilians were near starvation because of the army offensive.

Sri Lanka maintained the aid was not needed, and diplomats here, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the Indian claims were exaggerated.

Hundreds of Jewish settlers clash with soldiers, refugees

New York Times News Service

BETHLEHEM, Occupied West Bank — Hundreds of Jewish settlers clashed violently Saturday night with Israeli soldiers and Palestinian refugees in a Duheishe refugee camp south of here. It was the most serious clash in recent years between the Israeli army and an extremist fringe of nationalist settlers, who the army says fired automatic weapons at refugees and soldiers trying to protect them.

The settlers, led by followers of militant right-wing politician Meir Kahane, said Sunday that they meant only to protest the wounding last Friday of the Jewish women hit by stones thrown from the refugee camp. The stoning followed a stabbing the day before of a 14-year-old Jewish boy in Hebron, another town south of here.

The settler attacks on the refugees "was an atrocity committed in Israel," said Major General Amram Mitcnah, Israeli army central commander.

He and other Israeli officers said Sunday they understood the anger and frustration of many Jewish settlers after attacks by Palestinians, but he stressed that the settler outburst was not an outpouring of anger but rather a premeditated attempt to exacerbate tensions.

"This was well planned," Mitcnah said. He blamed supporters of Kahane who live in the militant settlement of Qiryat Arba, south of Bethlehem. Members of Kahane's party make up a third of the local settlers council.

"We have no doubts that the group from Qiryat Arba started things," Mitcnah said.

Fifty to 60 settlers stormed past the chain-link fence, he said. Six settlers were arrested and others would likely be charged, Mitcnah said.

Tzvi Katzover, a settler, denied the charges. He claimed the settlers only intended to protest the "ineffective" policies of the army. Katzover said that the settlers entered the refugee camps after rocks were thrown at them.

"I certainly don't justify the settlers, but I can sympathize with their feelings about being attacked," said an army major. There have been a number of recent attacks on Jews in the West Bank, including the fatal bludgeoning of an 8-year-old boy and the fire-bomb killing of an Israeli housewife.

"But this settler disturbance was unbelievable," said the army officer. "They didn't just fire their weapons in the air, but angled them straight at the camp and the soldiers. They also attacked several soldiers and beat a few of them."

Several Israeli journalists said the attack on the refugee camp recalled images of Jewish vigilante violence aimed at Arabs.

Gondoliers unhappy about ban during Venice summit

VENICE, Italy (AP) — While seven heads of state hold summit talks this week about ways to boost their economies, Venetian gondolier Franco DeZorzi will be losing his red-striped shirt.

DeZorzi, 43, is one of 212 gondoliers who have been prohibited by security officials from plying their sleek black boats along this city's canals from five gondola stations situated near St. Mark's Square, the main tourist attraction in Venice.

"It's like you would chase all the Yellow cabs from the center of Manhattan for some security reason," DeZorzi said at a small octagonal hut at the Dogana gondolier station.

The ban, starting at sunset Sunday — on the eve of the Venice economic summit — and ending Thursday night, has prompted angry gondoliers to demand $175,000 in damages from the Italian government to compensate for lost work during the start of the busy summer tourist season.

Hostage's daughter on TV

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — American hostage Terry A. Anderson's 2-year-old daughter appeared on Lebanese television to ask his kidnappers to honor her birthday wish and release the father she has never seen.

In a one-minute video tape, the curly-haired Sulome said: "I love you, Daddy. Come to us, Daddy." Blowing out two candles on her birthday cake, she said: "Our hearts are broken. Where is Daddy?"

She also waved a picture of her father, the longest-held foreign hostage in Lebanon, and kissed it. A Lebanese announcer watching the tape appeared afterward on the screen wiping away tears.

The tape was filmed in Cyprus where Sulome lives with her mother, Madeleine.

Anderson, 39, a native of Lorain, Ohio, and chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, was kidnapped in Moslem west Beirut March 16, 1985.

It was not known whether his kidnappers allowed him to see the tape. The independent newspaper An-Nahar had published an advance notice of the special television broadcast.

Sulome was born weeks after Anderson was kidnapped by members of Islamic Jihad, or Islamic Holy War, a group believed to be made up of Shiite Moslem extremists loyal to Iran.

Diplomat still in Tehran

LONDON (AP) — Iranian authorities refused to let British diplomat Edward Chaplin and his family board a plane to leave Tehran Sunday night, the Foreign Office said.

"The problem appears to be an administrative one," the Foreign Office said in a statement.

Chaplin was one of five British diplomats ordered to leave Iran after Britain closed Iran's consulate in Manchester on Thursday and expelled five Iranian diplomats.

The British action came after Iran did not apologize for or explain why Chaplin was arrested and beaten in Tehran May 28.

The Foreign Office said Christopher MacRae, head of the British interests section at the Swedish Embassy in Tehran, and the Swedish ambassador were trying to arrange a meeting with Iran's deputy foreign minister.

"It is hoped that Mr. Chaplin and his family will be able to leave later today (Monday)," the Foreign office said.

Israel OKs envoy to U.S.

JERUSALEM (AP) — The coalition government has broken a stalemate by approving the appointment of career diplomat Moshe Arad as ambassador to the United States, an Israeli official said.

Arad, whose appointment was approved Sunday, has been serving as ambassador to Mexico. His new appointment must be approved by the U.S. government, said the official, who demanded anonymity.

Since the outgoing ambassador to the United States, Meir Rosenne, ended his term of office May 31, Prime Minister Yitzak Shamir of the rightist Likud bloc and Foreign Minister Shimon Peres of the left-centrist Labor Party had been unable to agree on a candidate for the key post.

The Romanian-born Arad, 52, immigrated to Israel in 1950 and joined the foreign service 25 years ago.

He served in the Israeli Embassy in London and the Israeli consulate in New York and was minister for information at the embassy in Washington.

101 nations discuss news

HARARE, Zimbabwe (AP) — Representatives from members of the 101-nation non-aligned movement gathered Sunday for a five-day conference that will focus on ways to reduce Third World countries' dependence on the West for news, organizers said.

The Second Conference of Ministers of Information of Non-Aligned Countries will open in Harare, the Zimbabwean capital, on Monday.

Inflation-fighter calling it quits

At the start of the decade, a congressional budget expert glumly predicted that inflation would never dip below 10 percent during the 1980s. If monetary policy had been left to Congress, he undoubtedly would have been right.

But the policies that control the nation's money supply and influence our interest rates come from the quasi-independent Federal Reserve Board. Its 6'7" chairman Paul Volcker, as imposing in his persuasive abilities as in his physical presence, refused to believe that inflation couldn't be brought under control.

A Democrat appointed by former President Jimmy Carter in 1979, the tough-minded Volcker embarked on a program that few election-conscious congressmen would have dared promote. He tightened the money supply, which sent interest rates soaring. The economy plunged into the worst recession since the Great Depression. Unemployment soared. Constituents complained. The politicians blamed Volcker.

Soon, Volcker's policies began to work. As inflation plunged, the economy began to turn around — launching a recovery that continues today despite huge federal budget deficits and turbulence in the nation's banking system. The Reagan administration took the credit. Many of Volcker's congressional critics quit carping, preferring to bask in the political glow of a stable economy.

It's unfortunate that Volcker, who has earned the respect of the American business community and foreign investors, has decided to step down in August. He leaves at a time when the United States still needs his monetary good sense and his independence. His skill in dealing with international finances will be especially missed. Foreign leaders whose countries are saddled with crippling debts had a high regard for Volcker.

Alan Greenspan, Volcker's successor, is a hard-working conservative economist who served as chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers under President Gerald Ford. He's known as a workaholic who favors the free market and government deregulation.

He has excellent credentials to become the next Federal Reserve chairman. But he will have to prove himself, both in this country and abroad. The fear is that he may react ideologically or cave in to pressures from the Reagan administration to pursue politically-motivated monetary policies.

Avoiding those pitfalls will be Greenspan's challenge.

Ike in perspective

The years have flown so swiftly that it will come as a shock to many Americans to realize the centenary of the birth of Dwight D. Eisenhower is just around the corner.

An organization called the Dwight D. Eisenhower Society, based in Gettysburg, Pa., is launching a national effort to commemorate the Oct. 14, 1890, birth in Denison, northeast of Dallas, of the World War II military leader and U.S. President.

The noted entertainer, Bob Hope, has been named national chairman of the 1990 festivities which will include a television special on Eisenhower's life. The Gettysburg group, which already is awarding college scholarships on its own, is also working with Congress on a bill to provide educational grants in the former President's name similar to the Truman scholarships.

Few Americans of this century are so deserving of the scheduled tributes. As a U.S. Army five-star general, Eisenhower led the D-Day invasion of Nazi-held Europe, later serving as U.S. Army chief of staff and commander of NATO forces in Europe. He put in a stint as president of Columbia University and capped his distinguished career by twice being elected U.S. President with large majorities.

The Eisenhower presence brought great dignity and respect to the White House and his administration marked up many achievements including the ending of the Korean War, strengthening the civil rights movement and development of the national highway system. When Eisenhower died in 1969, eight years after leaving office, a prominent journalist lamented that "Ike" probably was the most under-rated President the country has ever known.

History is finally putting the Eisenhower years in their proper perspective as an era in which Americans can take pride.

Tribute to a hero

A monument to Sgt. Alvin York of Tennessee was dedicated on Memorial Day in Chetel-Chehery, France, near the site where York, in World War I, single-handedly took on a German machine gun battalion, killing 25 Germans and taking 132 prisoners. His combat exploits might remind some of today's moviegoers of the Sylvester Stallone character, Rambo. But York was a believable, true-to-life hero.

A quiet, modest man, York shunned publicity and turned down offers to commercialize his fame. He was a conscientious objector at the beginning of America's involvement in World War I. A deeply religious man, he accepted a combat role only after long talks with his Tennessee pastor.

His accomplishment against the German unit was described by the supreme Allied commander, Marshal Foch, as "the greatest thing accomplished by any private soldier of all the armies of Europe." York was awarded the Croix de Guerre and the Medal of Honor.

After the war, he returned to a Tennessee farm. He used some of the royalties from a movie about his exploits to help finance a foundation supporting industrial training and a Bible school. He refused to endorse products or to join the lecture circuit.

But that was how heroes were expected to behave. Football players, after scoring a touchdown, dropped the ball or handed it to an official. There were no celebrations in the end zone, no waggling knees, no elaborate high fives. The individual did his job for the team and was expected to give credit to others.

Gary Cooper was an ideal choice to play the role of York in the 1941 movie "Sergeant York." Like York, Cooper was a strong, silent type. He made a career of playing heroes who were generally honest, modest and dependable.

Real heroes are often modest and self-effacing about their achievements, ready to acknowledge elements of luck and to give credit to others. Alvin York was such a man. He did his duty on the battlefield, then went home and resumed his private life in a quiet and honorable way. He was a hero in ways that the Stallone character never approached.

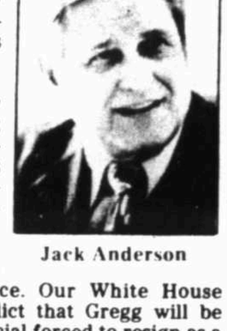
Memos implicate Bush in contra arms deal

WASHINGTON — Vice President George Bush has become deeply implicated in the Iran/contra arms scandal because of internal memos described as "very damaging" by congressional sources familiar with them.



Jack Anderson

The way things work in Washington, Bush's national security adviser, Donald Gregg, will pay the immediate price. Our White House sources predict that Gregg will be the next official forced to resign as a result of the Senate/House select committee's investigation of the arms deal.

Gregg has gone on record offering to resign, but Bush has not taken him up on it. Sources say that at least one Gregg offer to quit was perfunctory, coupled with his advice that the resignation would do more harm than good for Bush's presidential hopes.

Several White House aides, however, have urged Gregg to leave ever since his dealings with former CIA agent Felix Rodriguez came under Justice Department scrutiny late last year. Rodriguez was an integral part of the White House's clandestine aid program to the Nicaraguan contras.

Rodriguez testified at the congressional hearing about a meeting with Gregg last Aug. 8 in which the secret supply of arms to Iran was discussed. In his notes of the meeting, Gregg wrote: "A swap of weapons for $ was arranged to get aid for the contras."

Despite this clear evidence, Rodriguez swore that he had not informed Gregg of any plan to swap weapons for money to aid the contras — even though he admitted discussing every other matter alluded to in Gregg's notes.

Committee sources tell us a still-secret internal memo implicates Gregg — and by extrapolation Bush — to a much greater degree in the secret contra aid program.

Gregg denied last October that he had ever spoken with Rodriguez about the aid program, but recanted later and acknowledged the Aug. 8 discussion.

The committee is keeping a tight lid on still another memo discovered recently by its investigators. Sources tell us the memo involves Bush in the scandal much deeper than has been established so far. Bush has claimed only peripheral involvement in the arms-for-hostages transaction with Iran, and has insisted that he knew nothing of any diversion of funds to aid the contras.

Bush has been content to let President Reagan take it on the chin for the scandal, but the vice president has a credibility problem about his own involvement. He either doesn't remember certain things, or recalls them far more favorably to himself than others do.

For example, on Dec. 29, Bush was disingenuous at best or untruthful at worst in an interview with the Tower Commission's general counsel, W. Clark McFadden II. Bush provided an astonishing account of a meeting he had in Jerusalem last July 29 with Amiram Nir, counterterrorism adviser to then-Prime Minister Shimon Peres.

The meeting was held in Bush's suite at the King David Hotel from 7:35 a.m. to 8:05 a.m. A 17-paragraph memo written by Bush's chief of staff, Craig Fuller, who was there, makes it abundantly clear that the half-hour meeting dealt exclusively with the arms-for-hostages swap.

Nir "described the details of the efforts from last year through the current period to gain the release of the U.S. hostages," Fuller wrote. He added that Nir asked for a decision "as to whether the items (arms) requested would be delivered in separate shipments or whether we would continue to press for the release of the hostages prior to delivering the items in the amount agreed to previously."

Nir spoke of an agreement with the Iranians "on 4,000 units — 1,000 first and then 3,000," according to Fuller's notes. The references to "items" and "units" referred to U.S. anti-tank TOW missiles. Nir later said, according to Fuller's memo, another shipment "involved spares for (anti-aircraft) Hawks and TOWs."

Yet despite all this rich detail of what was discussed, this is how the Tower Commission described Bush's interview with its counsel: "Vice President Bush related that this discussion with Mr. Nir was generally about counterterrorism. There was no discussion of specifics of arms going to the Iranians."

SPY IN THE SKY: The Pentagon is so proud of its new super-secret spy plane, the TR-1, that it can't keep from boasting about it. Wrote Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger in a secret report to Congress: "A new era in tactical reconnaissance began with the production of the first of 35 TR-1 aircraft." The Lockheed plane is essentially a bigger, souped-up version of the U-2, the CIA plane whose existence became known when the Soviets shot one down in 1960. The one-man TR-1 has Stealth technology to foil enemy radar and can pick out moving targets up to 100 miles away. It will give "24-hour, all-weather coverage of the battlefield," Weinberger wrote.

Hisses, boos drew Reagan's anger in private

WASHINGTON — While President Reagan reacted impassively to boos and hisses that greeted his speech to an AIDS benefit at the Potomac Restaurant, he erupted in anger during his limousine ride back to the White House — suggesting the anti-testing demonstration may have backfired.

Ironically, Reagan's address (drafted by free-lancer Landon Parvin, Nancy Reagan's favorite speechwriter) took a softer line than Secretary of Education William Bennett or White House domestic policy adviser Gary Bauer. They did insert the call for "routine" testing but failed to remove Parvin's language suggesting the American public had overreacted to the AIDS scare.

Reagan's angry reaction may foretell a harder presidential line. His cautious senior staffers, in contrast, feared that the reaction at the dinner showed the testing decision was a blunder. But they were reassured by a favorable Washington Post editorial and a 96-to-0 Senate vote to require tests for immigrants.

HELMS BASHING ABRAMS

Democrats demanding the scalp of Elliott Abrams as assistant secretary of state for Latin America are joined in private by an unusual ally: Sen. Jesse Helms, the Senate's reigning Mr. Conservative and ranking Republican on the Foreign Relations Committee.

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

The Helms line is that Abrams' credibility is so low his continued presence dooms hopes of renewing aid to the contras. But Helms' dissatisfaction with Abrams began with their differences over Gen. Augusto Pinochet's military regime in Chile. Specifically, the senator blames Abrams for unsubstantiated news leaks that a Helms staffer leaked CIA secrets in Chile last year.

Helms again confronts an old antagonist, Secretary of State George Shultz. When Abrams' testimony to Iran-contra probers on Capitol Hill ended, Shultz turned off his television set and gave a raucous three cheers. His private enthusiasm matches his public endorsement.

BUSH VS. EVANGELISTS

Vice President George Bush's once budding alliance with the religious Right is wilting amid a political holy war over the threat by evangelical Christians to regular Republicans in Michigan.

Peter F. Secchia, Republican national committeeman from Michigan and an early Bush backer, was outspoken during the recent party conference in Des Moines in blasting religious interlopers. A key Bush operative referred to the Michigan situation as a "jihad."

A new report by Dr. Robert Grant, chairman of the Christian Voice political action group, warns that "a vast majority of the Religious Right will not support George Bush, when he goes around slapping what they stand for and making jokes about the Lord's name." Grant said a prime example of "Christian-bashing" was a reported quip by the vice president that a new fundamentalist organization called "LORD" stands for "Let Oral Roberts Die."

SDI POLITICS

Sen. Carl Levin and other Senate Armed Services Committee Democrats have blocked approval of a fourth star for Lt. Gen. James Abrahamson, boss of President Reagan's beloved Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI), and are using it as a bargaining lever.

Reagan sent the nomination making Abrahamson a full general to the Senate in October 1986. If not approved by October 1987, it will die.

Concessions privately demanded on SDI and other Pentagon questions by Levin have nothing at all to do with Abrahamson's competence, diligence or performance running the controversial program. But with the Democrats in firm control of the committee, the president and Republican senators are helpless.

RON KEYNOTING?

Under consideration at the White House is a proposal that the 1988 Republican National Convention be keynoted by none other than Ronald Reagan.

No incumbent president has ever delivered a national convention keynote speech. But Reagan is boosted for two reasons: first, his soothing words might be needed to heal wounds opened by the presidential nomination fight; second, scheduling the Great Communicator early in the convention would avoid unfair last-night competition for the party nominee.

No decision has been made at the White House. But the idea has strong support from Republican National Committee Co-chairman Maureen Reagan, the president's daughter.

CHARLEY REESE

People aren't going to start being peaceful

I have read a couple of peace books lately. "The Pathology of Power" by Norman Cousins and "War" by Gwynne Dyer. Despite the best of intentions, they both crash on the same premise: peace can be achieved if humans stop acting like humans.

Charley Reese

It is the standard reaction of the idealist when confronted with the horror of human reality. Somehow, someway we must, to save ourselves, become something entirely different from the beings who created the horror in the first place.

Cousins, who is certainly among the brightest and most decent of people, spends much of his book recounting the greed, incompetence, political cowardice, and irrationality which has, for sure, created a world which today orbits the sun only one bad decision and 28 minutes from self-destruction.

But after outlining the problem, then comes the hard part: a solution. Well, Cousins says in effect, people will just have to stop acting like people, they will have to recognize what they have refused to recognize for 40 years, they will have to do what they have refused to do for 40 years, they will have to become (by what magical process, he doesn't say) a mass of philosopher-citizens who who will create ideal governments willing to surrender enough sovereignty to a world government, also ideal, which will then settle all disputes peacefully by the rule of law.

Yes, and if people would just love each other, there wouldn't be any hate. If people renounced violence, there wouldn't be any violence. If people committed themselves to genuine sharing, there wouldn't be any hunger. And so on. This is the Fairy Godmother approach to human affairs. It is the conceit of the English aristocracy which believed it was so wise that it could bring the barbarian round to being a decent chap.

And from whence will these philosopher-citizens come? Neither Cousins nor Gwynne has the foggiest notion. In the Soviet Union, the people have no say in their government at all and in the United States our performance as citizens is declining, not rising. As a whole we are more irresponsible, not less; more ignorant, not more educated; and more selfish, not less so. Our political process is less, not more, likely to produce enlightened leaders. We are now reaping the harvest we sowed with a failed education system.

It is not a choice between pessimism and optimism for neither Gwynne nor Cousins is all that optimistic. Rather it is a choice between wasting our time formulating solutions based on people as they are not and never will be or working on the basis of people as they are and always have been. It is a choice between staring the horror in the face and then doing what we can to prevent it or looking at the horror and then running away to hide in our fantasies.

True, we may blow ourselves to kingdom come but we are all going to die anyway so there is no need to allow the prospect of a group exit to paralyze us with fear. True, the planet itself may be destroyed, but that is likely to happen anyway even without man's assistance. Let us not delude ourselves that we are gods who can control the destiny of the planets.

We must maintain what some people call the balance of terror, though people seem to have adjusted to living in a nuclear age just as they adjust to living on the side of a volcano or on a barrier island.

So long as the Soviet Union remains secretive, aggressive, and militaristic, not to mention adhering to a nutsy ideology like Marxism which proclaims the inevitability of war, the military balance has to be the bedrock of everything else we do.

While maintaining the capability to assure the Soviets that they can commit suicide but not our homicide, then of course we should do everything we can diplomatically, politically, and economically to convince them that war is a stupid idea, that despite their Marxist poppycock we will never shoot except in self-defense, and that so long as we respect each other's sovereignty and independence, no other issue between us is worth a war.

Congress focuses on housing program, campaign financing

NATION

By STEVEN KOMAROW

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House will take up a major housing bill and the Senate works on campaign finance reform this week, while leaders from both chambers push to complete action on a fiscal 1988 budget.

The Democratic-controlled House plans to take up a $17.3 billion housing program for next year. The bill would increase federal housing spending to cover inflation and is $6 billion above President Reagan's request for more cutbacks. It was passed by the House Banking Committee over the objection of its GOP members.

"Truthfully, we can't afford to cut housing any more," said Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas. "The bill...is not generous. At best, it will prevent the housing crisis from growing faster."

"We Democrats are trying to build housing; Mr. Reagan is trying to burn it down," said Gonzalez, chairman of the housing subcommittee, who gave the Democrats' radio address on Saturday.

Congress has not enacted a regular housing bill since Reagan took office. But with the Democrats regaining control of the Senate this year, the legislation is being moved along quickly. The Senate Banking Committee also has approved a housing bill, slightly smaller than the House version.

The House also is scheduled to debate this week a bill authorizing the government's intelligence-gathering activities for next year, and the congressional Iran-Contra hearings enter their sixth week today.

Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., is trying to find a Senate compromise on revising Senate campaign finance rules.

A bill before the Senate has provoked threats of a filibuster from GOP opponents who object strongly to provisions allowing limited public financing of Senate campaigns.

Byrd has scheduled a vote Tuesday on whether to preclude the filibuster, but even supporters of the bill concede his attempt probably will fail. Byrd has indicated he was willing to make changes in the package to make it acceptable, but he would not provide details.

Final House and Senate action on the $1 trillion fiscal 1988 budget also is possible this week — with House leaders working hard to quell opposition from the liberal wing of the party.

The chairmen of the House and Senate budget committees struck a compromise last week, but angry liberals said it went too far toward the Senate's more generous allocation for military spending.

"If the Republicans still ran the Senate and they sent us this budget, then we'd kick their (rear ends) all over town," complained Rep. George Miller, D-Calif. Because it was fellow Democrats, he said, "We're supposed to roll over and accept it."

The proposed compromise included a defense budget of $300 billion for next year. President Reagan asked for $312 billion, the Senate approved $301.5 billion, while the House voted to freeze military programs at about $289 billion.

Although the Democrats control the House 257-176, they need a united front to gain approval of the spending plan, since House Republicans will vote against anything the Democrats produce.

Miller and other liberals said the $19.5 billion in new taxes envisioned in the compromise budget should go toward reducing the deficit instead of to the military.

Even with the taxes, the compromise budget would leave about $135 billion in red ink — $27 billion above the maximum deficit level allowed under the Gramm-Rudman budget-balancing law.

Secord partner describes gun sales venture

By DAVID FOX

WASHINGTON (AP) — Retired Air Force Maj. Gen. Richard V. Secord planned to sell laser-equipped automatic weapons to "Contra-type" forces when efforts to sell them to gun collectors fell through, one of his partners in the venture says.

"There is definitely a market for the weapons," said Larry Royer, an industrial equipment liquidator from Decatur, Ill. "They're tremendous for police units or anti-terrorist units."

Royer said he and Secord joined Colorado businessman Don Marostika in forming Tri-American Arms, a marketing company. Secord and Royer also are partners with Iranian-American businessman Albert Hakim in SRH Corp., a timber-harvesting venture.

Secord and Hakim are close associates of Marine Lt. Col. Oliver L. North, a former White House aide who recruited them to handle the finances and help set up secret U.S. arms sales to Iran and a private supply network for the Contras in Nicaragua during a congressional ban on military aid to the rebels.

Although he has financial ties to both Secord and Hakim, Royer said he had nothing to do with the Iran-Contra affair.

"I am personally unaware of any link between these businesses and any plans to assist the Contras," he said in a telephone interview Friday.

Congressional investigators obtained notes Royer wrote in which the gun company's projected foreign sales included mention of Contras, but he insisted their plan was not to sell guns to the rebels.

"What I meant was Contra-type operations," Royer said. "There's a market around the world for that, even in the Philippines, South Africa."

Royer, who buys and sells used industrial equipment worldwide, was questioned May 21 by investigators from the select House and Senate committees on the Iran-Contra affair and said most of the questions involved Tri-American Arms.

He said the company originally planned to buy the guns from a manufacturer and resell them as limited-edition collector's items.

"It's a .22-caliber, rapid-fire weapon that has a laser on top of it," Royer said. "It's a very nice little weapon."

However, the domestic sales fell through because a federal law against buying automatic weapons was enacted, and Royer said Tri-American then had to look toward its second option: overseas sales.

The notes he wrote in a meeting with Secord and Marostika projected a purchase price of $250 per gun and a selling price to foreign buyers of $1,800 for each weapon.

One page listed projected first-year sales, stating: "No domestic sales projected. 1,000-1,500 — Saudi and Gulf states. 4,000 Contra."

Royer said he met Secord in 1982 while working on a project to sell planes owned by Braniff Airlines. Hakim put up the $150,000 used to finance their lumbering company, which never began operations.

He defended his friends' role in the Iran-Contra affair, saying they were helping stem the spread of communism.

"There is definitely a market for the weapons. They're tremendous for police units or anti-terrorist units. ...What I meant was Contra-type operations. There's a market around the world for that, even in the Philippines, South Africa."

New INS penalties concern farmers

By ELLIOTT MINOR

CHULA, Ga. (AP) — Many farmers who rely on migrant crop pickers say they are more concerned about new penalties for hiring illegal aliens than about recently mandated federal field sanitation standards.

Under rules that took effect this month, farmers must provide field hands with drinking water, either from fountains or disposable cups. Beginning July 30, they will have to provide toilets and hand-washing facilities.

"That's no problem," said Janis Roberson, who assists her husband, Wendell, in growing vegetables on a farm near this small south Georgia town.

Like many Georgia farmers, the Robersons already provide drinking water in coolers that are hauled to the fields on trucks. Their farm employs up to 100 migrants, who pick and pack vegetables such as collard greens and snap beans for shipment to supermarkets in Georgia and other states, she said.

"These are human beings. They do a good job for us. We're not going to treat them like animals," said Mrs. Roberson.

Growers contacted by The Associated Press said they plan to rent portable toilets and haul tanks of water into fields for hand-washing. Labor Secretary William E. Brock ordered the field sanitation standards this spring to protect the health of about 500,000 workers, many of whom are exposed to pesticides.

Migrant labor and Hispanic groups had waged a 15-year struggle for the regulations, which the American Farm Bureau Federation opposed as costly and impractical. The growers' group said most workers would not use the facilities.

Unlike the sanitation rules, the new immigration law is causing farmers to voice considerable distress.

Originally, the law would have required employers to verify the legal status of workers starting June 1. That deadline, however, has been pushed back to July 1 because of a delay in distributing forms.

Employers who fail to comply face civil and criminal penalties, including fines up to $10,000 for each illegal alien hired and jail terms up to six months.

The law offers amnesty to illegal aliens who can document that they have lived in the United States continuously since Jan. 1, 1982.

Also, illegal aliens who performed certain seasonal agricultural services for at least 90 days between May 1, 1985, and May 1, 1986, can become legal temporary residents and eventually apply for citizenship.

Rudy Underwood, legislative director of the Georgia Farm Bureau, said the U.S. Agriculture Department still has not decided what crops to include in the temporary residence program.

"It's a mess for the farmer," he said. "They're afraid to hire."

Heck Dodson, who employs 250 to 300 migrants harvesting vegetables on a farm in Ty Ty, said compliance will be difficult and time-consuming.

Dodson said he certified all of his employees this spring. "But I've just about got to the point where I feel like shutting the doors," he added.

Mrs. Roberson said she was able to qualify only 20 of her farm's employees, despite repeated phone calls and letters to Mexico requesting documents such as birth certificates.

Dodson said many growers resent having responsibility for certifying workers, and feel it would be unnecessary if the federal government had guarded the nation's borders.

"The bureaucrats in Washington are putting the burden on us," he said. "They're asking us to do something they couldn't do. We don't want to cross swords with anyone, but it's getting to the point where it's pretty frustrating."

Students test literacy of their parents

MERIDEN, Conn. (AP) — You think Cinderella is a fairy tale? You think "deaf" means a hearing problem?

Like, don't be a dweeb, OK?

It appears there are a lot of dweebs — or nerds — among the parents of the seventh-graders at John Kowalchyk's class at Washington Middle School here.

The students, organized by Peter Urban, a reporter for the Record-Journal, put together a list of 25 "fresh" terms and proper names and asked parents to identify them.

The parents' wisdom proved totally bogus.

No one passed. The average score was 32 and the top score was a lowly 56.

"They're old, out-of-style and dying," Jonathan Dudley, 13, said in explaining the poor performances.

His 34-year-old father, Bob Dudley, said, "I don't know what they're talking about." He and his wife, Joette, correctly identified half the terms on the quiz.

It all started with E.D. Hirsch's new book, "Cultural Literacy: What Every American Needs to Know."

PHILADELPHIA TODAY

John Brown, visiting in Philadelphia from Kentucky, wrote home, describing last night's party at the Morris house and providing a glimpse of the hospitality of upper class Philadelphia:

"We spent last evening with Mr. Robert Morris — whose political character you must be somewhat acquainted with. He is a large fat man, very sociable & easy in his manners.

"The party at his house consisted of about forty of both sexes; no language I am master of could convey an idea of the elegance of the entertainment. Mr. Morris' house is furnished in a stile superior to anything I have ever seen. The company being so numerous I had an opportunity of seeing all the apartments. The evening was spent at cards and the celebrated Mr. (Francis) Hopkinson gave us several pieces of music on a harpsichord of the newest invention (not every party featured a signer of the Declaration of Independence playing his own compositions on a harpsichord he had invented). Some of the ladies also played and sung.

"Rich lemonade was brot round in silver urns, and a little before supper a profusion of iced creams was served to all the company, but when supper was announced we were introduced to a table more resplendent than any I ever beheld."

CONFEDERATION TODAY

Congress again lacked a quorum.

CONVENTION TODAY

The Convention, in committee of the whole, reconsidered the provision giving the national legislature a veto over state laws "contrary to the articles of Union, or Treaties with foreign nations." Charles Pinckney (S.C.), seconded by James Madison (Va.), moved to strike the qualifying clause and thus give the legislature power to veto any state law.

Madison, James Wilson (Pa.) and John Dickinson (Del.) spoke in support of the motion. Elbridge Gerry (Mass.) and Roger Sherman (Conn.) thought it went too far, though Gerry thought Congress should have an exclusive right to issue paper money. Hugh Williamson (N.C.), Gunning Bedford (Del.) and Pierce Butler (S.C.) vehemently opposed the motion; Bedford because he viewed it as a further attack on the small states, Butler because he viewed it as against the interests of the more distant states.

The motion was defeated 3 aye (Mass., Pa. Va.), 7 no, 1 (Del.) divided.

DELEGATES TODAY

Charles Cotesworth Pinckney (S.C.) bought two 6-year-old bay geldings from Jacob Hiltzheimer. He paid 55 pounds each for them.

William Few observed his 39th birthday.

LOOKING BACK
William Few

The William Few who observed his 39th birthday 200 years ago today was one of the least active members of the Convention. He presented his credentials on May 25, was elected to the committee of 11 on preventing discrimination between ports in trade regulations on Aug. 25, signed the document on Sept. 17, and in between is absent from extant records.

He is, however, one of the more interesting delegates and the prototypical American success story.

Few was born on a tobacco farm in what is now Hartford County, Md., in 1748. His father, having lost two or three consecutive crops to frost, moved to Orange County, N.C., in 1758. At that time, Few was put to the work of a frontier farm. In 1760, a schoolmaster appeared. Before the family left Maryland, Few had been sent to a schoolmaster where, in his words, "I detested the man, the school, and the books, and spent six or eight months at that school in terror and anxiety, with very little benefit." He had better luck with the new master, from whom he received the one year of schooling he ever had.

In 1764, the family moved to a farm near Hillsboro, a county seat that had a couple of lawyers. Few learned from listening to trials and reading the few books the family could buy or borrow.

Within five or six years of the move to Hillsboro, Few's father had legal problems, and moved to Georgia, leaving William to wind up affairs in North Carolina. Not until the fall of 1776 did he move to Georgia, where he was promptly elected to the state constitutional convention. Thereafter, he served in various military and political capacities in Georgia and was twice a member of the Congress before being elected a delegate to the Convention.

In 1786, while in New York to attend Congress, he had met, courted and married Catherine Nicholson, who seems to have stayed in New York during Few's service in the Convention.

NATION IN BRIEF

Beer tax battle 'brews'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The beer industry is brewing up a mail campaign to dissuade the House Ways and Means Committee from raising the federal beer excise tax.

The Beer Institute, a trade association, has placed full-page ads in major newspapers that circulate in the home districts of the 36 members of the tax-writing panel.

"We've gotten an enormous response," said Ross Brown, an aide to Rep. Barbara B. Kennelly, D-Conn. Brown estimated that 1,000 coupons and mailgrams flowed into the office over two days.

Pair target trade deficit

WASHINGTON (AP) — A liberal Massachusetts Democrat and a conservative Utah Republican are teaming up to push legislation designed to reduce the U.S. trade deficit with China.

The proposal co-sponsored by Sens John F. Kerry, D-Mass, and Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, would help pay for Chinese workers to be trained in the United States on newly purchased U.S. products.

Humans threaten species

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rats, cockroaches and weeds would be the likely survivors following widespread human destruction of forests and other ecosystems, according to a report from an environmental research group.

The report, released over the weekend, says human damage to the environment has the potential to wipe out species on a scale not experienced since the fall of the dinosaurs.

Worldwatch Institute said that in Latin American forests alone, 15 percent to 66 percent of the estimated 92,000 plant species could be lost by the end of the century. Similarly, 12 percent to 69 percent of the bird species of the Amazon Basin could disappear as forest is cleared for farming, ranching and other development.

A tropical wave in the western of Gulf of Mexico triggered scattered showers and thunderstorms, including some with heavy rainfall, over a vast area of South Texas today.

The area covered by the scattered showers and thunderstorms included the coastal plains, Rio Grande Plains, Lower rio Grande Valley and eastern portions of the Edwards Plateau.

A trough of low pressure over New Mexico brought showers to the Trans-Pecos area.

A flood watch and a flash flood watch was in effect for extreme South Texas today because of the possibility of heavy rainfall from the thunderstorms.

Forecasts called for a flood watch and flash flood watch over extreme South Texas. There will be scattered showers and thunderstorms over most of the state through tonight.

NATION

A Midwestern cold front spawned thunderstorms today while rain was widespread in the Northeast and fair skies prevailed in the South.

The cold front stretching from the western Great Lakes region through the central High Plains produced thunderstorms along its path.

A low pressure in the southwestern Gulf of Mexico sent rain and thunderstorms into south Texas, where flash flood watches were posted due to heavy rain.

Showers and thunderstorms ranged from southern New England and New York into northeastern Pennsylvania, and from the northern Rockies into Oregon, New Mexico and northern Arizona.

High pressure cleared skies across much of the region from the Southeast and mid-Atlantic states across the Tennessee Valley and southern Mississippi Valley into Kansas and Oklahoma.

Taking it to heart

A hundred or so Midlanders are walking taller these days because they've beaten a path at Midland Park Mall that's taken them one step closer to physical fitness.

A hundred or so is how many people mall officials estimate take regular hikes on the facility's seven-tenths of a mile Walk the Mall for Heart course developed by the American Heart Association.

Sherry Tomlinson of the American Heart Association's Midland office said walking is ideal for people of all ages because it strengthens the cardiovascular system and is less stressful than other forms of exercise such as jogging.

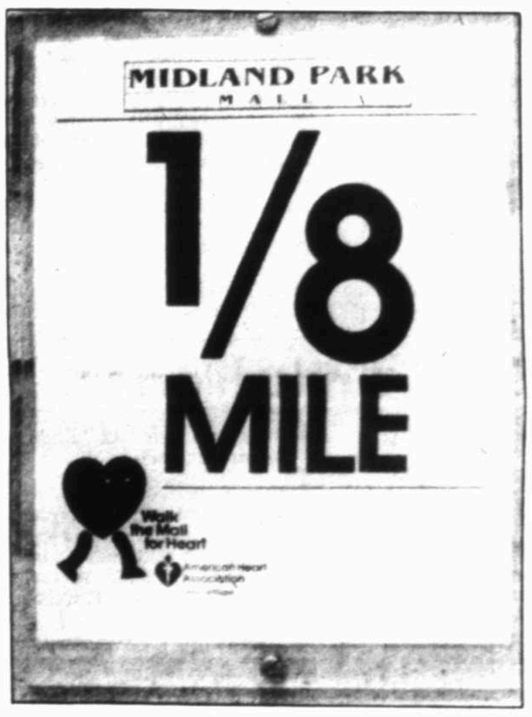
"It's not only preventative, but helps one recover from such ailments as heart attacks and strokes," she said.

Walk the Mall for Heart's advantages are many, said Ms. Tomlinson.

"The climatic conditions are ideal because it's heated in the winter and air conditioned in the summer.

"And it's secure," she added.

Unlike outdoor courses, the mall offers round-the-clock security for walkers in case they run into health problems or other risks, Ms. Tomlinson said.



Posters make it easy for mall walkers to gauge the distance they travel.

Walk the Mall for Heart has been in effect at Midland Park Mall since mid-1985, but the idea isn't unique to this area alone.

"Malls all over the country have programs for those who enjoy walking," said Midland Park Mall's Susan Jacinto. "Some even have organized clubs."

Ms. Jacinto said mall, hospital and Heart Association officials presently are working to set up a blood pressure testing center in the mall's main corridor for Midland walkers to utilize on a regular basis.

Seminars on cholesterol, diet and exercise also are on the drawing board, she added.

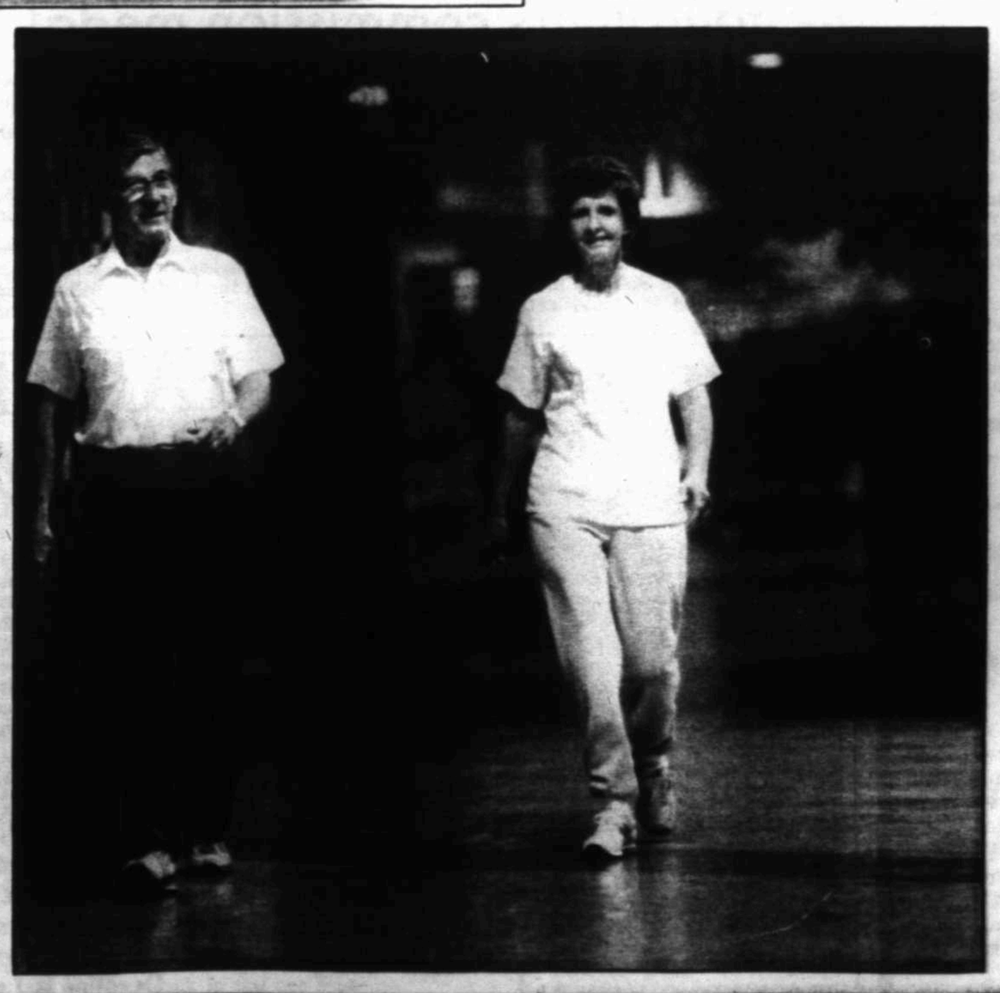
While most residents who use the mall for daily walks are older adults, Ms. Jacinto said others, including youngsters, have been spotted on the course.

"We'd like to think that this program is suited for everyone because people can move at their own pace," she said.

What Ms. Jacinto said what she enjoys most about the program is the additional traffic it generates into the mall.

"Once the word got out it seemed as though more and more people began to use the course.

"Not only is it good for us, it's also good for the community," she said.



Marcelene Burnet, above, enjoys an early-morning stroll through the mall as she passes a store employee on her way to work. Walking the mall provides the husband and wife team of Joseph and June Heinemann, near right, with some quality time together.

Two men stabbed in break-up of fight

From Staff Reports

Two men suffered stab wounds early today after they tried to break up what began as a game fight among two other men, police said.

Emilio Menchaca, 5100 N. A St., suffered multiple stab wounds and was listed in stable condition at Midland Memorial Hospital this morning, a hospital spokeswoman said. Johnny Olguin, 915 N. Dallas St., who suffered several superficial wounds, was treated and released, she said.

The two men were wounded shortly after midnight following a scuffle at 407 E. Cedar Ave. Police said the two men tried to intervene in another fight when the stabbings occurred.

Police Roundup

Police have a suspect in a shooting early Sunday that left one man in stable condition at MMH with a gunshot wound to the abdomen.

Gilbert Gutierrez, 1711 E. Spruce Ave., was listed in stable condition this morning at MMH, a spokeswoman said. Gutierrez was standing inside a closed screen door at his house about 11:50 p.m. Sunday when two rifle shots were fired at his house, one of which struck him.

The shooting erupted after an argument in front of the house, police said.

In other reports, early Sunday morning a pizza deliveryman suffered a mild concussion when he was surprised by two men who hit him over the head and stole his car.

Anthony Hillyer, a driver for Domino's Pizza, 2106 N. Big Spring, was dispatched with pizza to a residence in the 2100 block of Butternut about 12:50 a.m. Sunday, police said. He knocked on the door, but there was no answer, and police said Hillyer was then jumped by two men, one of whom hit him over the head with a broom stick handle.

A police spokesman said he did not know if the attackers had ordered the pizza.

The two men fled in his car, which was later recovered in an alley near the 1600 block of East Hemlock Avenue. An AM-FM in-dash cassette stereo valued at $200 was missing from the car when it was recovered, police said. A spokeswoman at Midland Memorial Hospital said Hillyer suffered a head laceration, a mild concussion, and was treated and released.

The suspects in the robbery were described as two Hispanic males, one five feet nine inches tall, with a stocky build, black collar-length hair, wearing a red flannel shirt. The other was described as black-haired wearing a short sleeve shirt.

INS program suffers serious funding woes

DALLAS (AP) — The amnesty program set up to grant citizenship to certain undocumented workers is facing serious funding problems because federal regulations are barring so many applicants, according to a newspaper report.

Immigration and Naturalization Service officials had planned for the amnesty program to fund itself through application fees, but it is far below the financial break-even point despite work at 107 legalization centers nationwide, the Dallas Morning News reported Sunday.

During the first month that ended Wednesday, 63,511 aliens nationwide applied for amnesty, which, if extrapolated over the yearlong program, would amount to 762,132 applications, less than half the most conservative INS estimates.

In the first month, $10.1 million in application fees was collected — which over a year translates to less than $125 million, the amount of a loan the INS requested from Congress to run the program for the first five months.

The sluggish start is aggravated by discord between voluntary agencies handling applications and the INS. Immigrant advocates are advising undocumented aliens to delay seeking amnesty until changes are made and are considering class-action lawsuits against the INS.

Lawyers and voluntary amnesty agencies are also at loggerheads with the INS over some regulations and procedures.

If narrow INS regulations remain, critics say, thousands of undocumented aliens will miss amnesty — trumpeted as a way to escape exploitation and enter the economic mainstream.

Immigrant advocates are intensifying lobbying efforts in Congress against restrictive regulations, seeking to broaden amnesty to include more aliens before the one-time program ends. They see litigation as a last-ditch option.

Many proposed INS regulations were assailed during two public comment periods earlier this year, but key provisions were intact in the final rules. Now, rules that provoked widespread criticism are weeding out thousands of potential amnesty recipients.

"I really can't understand why the INS is sitting back scratching their heads wondering why there aren't more applications when they have these nit-picky rules," said Dan Kesselbrenner, director of the National Immigration Project of the National Lawyers Guild in Boston.

"They are losing millions of dollars because people aren't applying, and people have a distrust of the INS because these rules are disqualifying people rather than trying to find a way to make them eligible," he said.

Less than 10 percent of the applications have been prepared by INS-designated agencies, perceived as a crucial link to reach the undocumented population.

The many hours needed to document cases, bureaucratic paperwork and narrow regulations have impeded progress, said Vanna Slaughter of Catholic Charities in Dallas.

"We are not panicking yet," said INS spokesman Rick Kenney in Washington, adding that applications rose substantially in late May. "We are hoping to get the appropriate funding (from Congress), and we are all along collecting fees."

"We never really hoped for any particular number of applications," he said. "Generally, the numbers are within our realm of expectation, but we had anticipated a greater number."

The INS forecasts that 8,000 amnesty applications a day — including 2,400 in the Southern Region, which includes Texas — are needed to break even financially. But the daily average nationwide after one month was 3,175 applications, including an average of 1,208 in the Southern Region.

However, response has been strong in Houston, where immigration employees are working overtime to cope with applicants.

The Houston INS office is one of the few in the country that has experienced a large number of applicants, said INS District Director Ronald Parra.

Compounding INS financial woes, Congress has stalled appropriations of $125 million through Sept. 30 and $144 million to fund the program from October to May 1988 — all to be reimbursed from application fees. Consequently, the INS is using its third-and fourth-quarter funds temporarily.

"The INS could have solved its own problem," said Gilbert P. Carrasco of the U.S. Catholic Conference. "People are afraid to come forward because of the question of confidentiality of ineligible family members."

"We are telling people not to file unless they absolutely have to," said Carrasco, whose agency is the largest voluntary network assisting amnesty applicants nationwide.

Broccoli is cauliflower?

Actually, broccoli is winter cauliflower. It's tough enough to stand mild winters and then produce heads in the spring.

Cause of Friday's house fire ruled 'arson'

From Staff Reports

Arson has been listed as the cause of a minor house fire late Friday that officials say could have been tragic, after a Molotov cocktail was thrown through the window of a residence.

According to police reports, four children, ages seven, 10, 11, and 12 were inside a house at 912 Canyon Dr. about 11:15 p.m. A beer bottle, half-filled with gasoline and topped with a paper wick, was lighted and thrown through a front window.

One of the children was directly under the window. The bomb landed upright between the window pane and venetian blinds, and did not explode.

Witnesses told police they saw a car in front of the house screech its tires and drive away quickly, reports said. Police said they plan to question several people in connection with the incident.

City's legalization center bustling

HOUSTON (AP) — Turnout initially was slow at the city's legalization center for illegal aliens seeking permanent status, but officials say they now have to turn away some potential applicants.

A crowd of illegal aliens carrying rumpled documents in folders, envelopes, plastic sacks and grocery bags starts gathering hours before the doors open at the Houston Legalization Center.

Inside, immigration employees are working overtime to help those applying for legal status, U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service District Director Ronald Parra said. The center is processing at least 300 applicants a day and still has to turn some away at the door.

"Response has been tremendous," Parra said. "We're one of the very few centers with large numbers coming in to apply for legalization."

The center will be adding an extra shift of workers so the office can extend its hours from 4:30 p.m. to about 9 p.m. to help deal with the demand, he said.

Parra credits the response to an intensive education campaign during the six months prior to the May 5 opening of the nationwide amnesty program, which allows immigrants who have lived illegally in the United States since before January 1982 to apply for legal status.

So far, the Houston office has approved 4,123 aliens for legal status. Sixty applicants, or about 1.5 percent, were denied legal status because they either lacked proper documentation or did not meet eligibility requirements.

Other parts of the country, however, have not had as much success.

"The response has been very disappointing," said Mario Moreno, head of the Washington office of the Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund.

And critics say the amnesty program is not getting the application fees anticipated because of narrow regulations that bar many from amnesty.

Moreno said some potential applicants are holding back to see whether friends of acquaintances are successful in getting amnesty, while many aliens cannot come up with the proof of eligibility. Others have not gotten enough information about the amnesty program.

But in Houston, immigration officials are trying to figure out how to accommodate the over-capacity crowds that show up at the legalization center every morning.

On Friday, as every other day, legalization officer Joseph Shassetz stood outside the center and apologized for having to send away the crowd of people who did not make it inside.

"It is just simply impossible for up to process this many applications. We are working on trying not to have to turn people away," he said.

Parra said he expects the workload in Houston to decrease after Sept 1 — the end of a grace period in which illegal aliens who intend to apply for amnesty, but haven't applied yet, may work legally. But he believes the center will still be working at or close to its 300-a-day quota.

Restaurateurs commission medal for pope

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A group of Hispanic restaurateurs hopes to donate as much as $100,000 for the restoration of San Fernando Cathedral from the sale of a medal adorned with the portrait of Pope John Paul II.

Mario Cantu, one of the founders of the International Hispanic Food & Beverage Association, said the group plans to commission 50,000 to 100,000 medals designed by local artist Chista Cantu. The gold-plated medal will have the pope's face on one side and a chalice containing ears of corn on the other.

"We just felt like we needed to get involved in the community and the pope's visit," said Cantu.

Prior to the association's first meeting Sunday afternoon, Cantu handed out information on the medal that said profits from the medal, which is expected to cost $3, will be split between the cathedral and the organization.

One dollar from each medal will be given to the church, $1 to the association, 75 cents to manufacturing and 25 cents to promotional expenses, such as packaging, he said.

The medals are expected to be available in July, Cantu said. They will be displayed and sold in restaurants around the city, he said.

Mount Elgon's elephants live underground

By JANET SUTTER
Copley News Service

It sounds like a circus freak show — the underground elephants of Mount Elgon.

But the cave-dwelling pachyderms are real and Ian Redmond, a British wildlife biologist, has spent much of his career studying these shadowy bulks of five to seven tons.

Redmond was on his way home in 1980 from Rwanda, where he and the late Dian Fossey were conducting their work with mountain gorillas, when in Nairobi he encountered friends who told him about the world's only known subterranean elephants. He learned more about them when he joined a project building a tourist path to one of Mount Elgon's caves.

Intrigued by the huge mammals, he returned year after year, actually living in the cave, observing the elephants.

THE ELEPHANTS were there seeking salt, essential to their diet. The massive creatures mine the minerals, using their tusks as chisels to dislodge the rocks with a heavy content of sodium salts.

"Troglodyte tuskers," Redmond said.

With their trunks, they move the rocks to their mouths and crunch, crunch, crunch — a practice that wears down tusks and teeth over the years.

Normally, elephants acquire salt from vegetation. But in this mountainous area, heavy rain leaches the salt from the soil. Even if salt licks were available, the elephants, because of the configuration of their tusks and trunks, could not use them.

The elephants spend a lot of time outdoors, dining on the local vegetation. But after dusk, many enter the cave, feeling their way with their trunks, like a blind man with a cane, Redmond said.

Although the elephants are huge, Redmond had difficulty hearing their approach, even though he was on a rock near the cave's entrance. Elephants naturally walk on the soft pads of their toes, rather than stomping along, and a waterfall outside the cave masked most noises.

Elephants' tough hides are sensitive enough to detect a cotton thread which Redmond tied to himself, then strung at the entrance, elephant-head high, so he would know when they were entering. The leading elephant often snapped the thread at the other end where it was attached to a wall. Redmond slept on, the elephant walked on. Usually he could hear them once inside, but missed their arrival.

EVENTUALLY, THE elephants felt comfortable enough to permit him to use his flashlight and take occasional flash pictures.

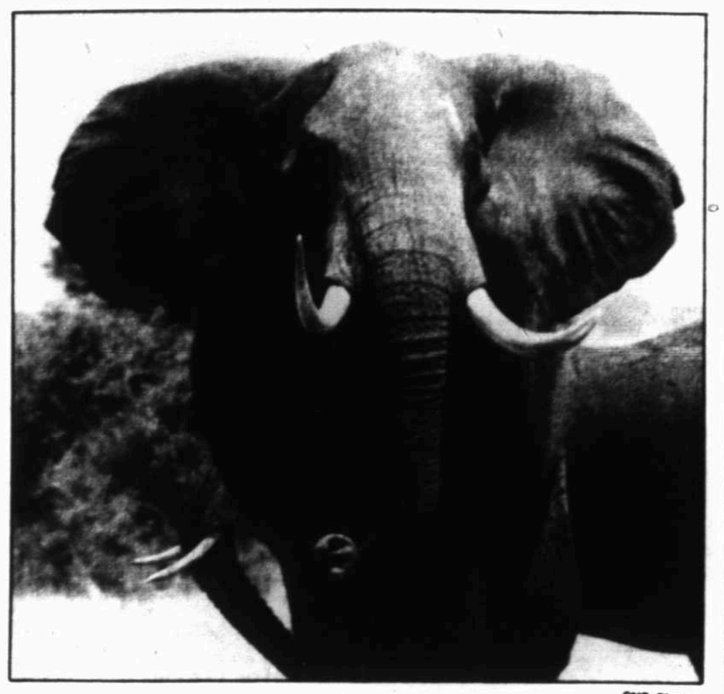
The cave, with its 85 percent humidity and 57-degree temperature, was huge — about 175 yards deep, the main chamber 20 feet high, the entrance about 45 feet wide. Because of the jumble of rock there, the elephants squeezed through a gap less than three yards, or 1½ elephants wide, Redmond said.

Redmond believes the caves were created by the elephants. Elephants elsewhere have bored into the sides of hills for salt rocks, creating overhangs. On Mount Elgon, low side chambers were dug by tribesmen, who kept cattle there around the turn of the century. But the bulk of the mining, Redmond argued, perhaps over hundreds of thousands of years, has been done by the elephants.

In these caves, rock falls occur occasionally. Redmond said one in 1982 was probably caused by an earth tremor. But over the soft, sodium-loaded rock is the roof of tough lava, which acts as a sturdy umbrella and prevents erosion due to rain.

Redmond and the elephants — he has shared the place with as many as 19 — were not alone. Fruit bats and insect bats live on the cave ceiling; when the latter left the cave at night, their flight path sometimes veered over Redmond's head. Sometimes, he held his hand up in the darkness to test the bats' ultrasonic sense. They never hit him.

REDMOND HOPES someday to put a radio collar on an elephant to possibly discover other caves in Mount Elgon and verify his theory, via pulse rates, that the elephants sleep underground. After the munching and crunching, there are long periods of silence until dawn.



CNS Photo

African elephants enjoy the outdoors.

The caves may serve as a well-needed hiding place. Ivory brings $120 a kilo on the black market. "There's been some bad poaching in the last year or so," Redmond said. "That was a shock."

He was also shocked by the discovery of the mutiliated body of Digit, a mountain gorilla studied by Redmond and Fossey. He is writing a biography of Digit, killed by poachers for his head and hands. Redmond said some tourists buy gorilla skulls as souvenirs, and the hands are shaped to form ashtrays. Some adult gorillas are killed in the capture of their babies for the wild animal trade.

Fossey, too, was killed, under mysterious circumstances on Dec. 27, 1985. Although an American scientist was convicted of the murder in absentia, Redmond believes that Fossey was hacked to death by a poacher. She directed patrols to cut poachers' snare traps and release animals.

Redmond is now one of five directors of the Digit Fund, concerned with conservation and research on the mountain gorillas. There are only about 250 in the Virunga Mountains of Rwanda, Zaire and Uganda, and about 100 more in a Uganda impenetrable forest.

The young, blond biologist is on a three-month lecture tour in the United States. With his wife Caroline, and twins, Matthew and Ben, aged 2½, he is touring the country in a motor home.

Otherwise, he is based in Bristol, England, working as a free-lance wildlife biologist and photographer, going back and forth to Africa on short trips. Increasingly, he is working with radio and television, discussing the need for wildlife research and conservation. He has served as an adviser for several natural history films.

WHEN THE twins are a little older, Redmond will consider returning to the field for longer stays, to study the underground elephants further and the creatures' salt mines.

"Africa is addictive," he said.

'Self-described osteophiles' research whale skeletons

By MATTHEW THAYER

WAILEA, Hawaii (AP) — If you're the curious type and your dog drags home a 300-pound bone, just hope it doesn't belong to a whale.

Not only will it dent your linoleum, but there's a good chance you'll never learn much about the original owner.

Unlike other species' skeletal systems, which have been cataloged and studied in depth, whale bones have been virtually ignored by the scientific community.

Researchers Brian O'Callaghan, 28, and Susan Jurasz, 24, are changing that.

O'Callaghan and Jurasz, a pair of self-described osteophiles, or "lovers of bones," are among the first to scientifically catalog a humpback whale's skeletal system. They are on the island of Maui working on a humpback skeleton that was salvaged last year by the Pacific Whale Foundation.

Their work will not end when the foundation's 38-foot skeleton is completed and put on display at the Wailea Shopping Village.

"By the time we die, we would like to document and detail every single one of the great whales," O'Callaghan says. "I tried to go back through the literature to find a complete skeleton of a humpback whale. We couldn't find one. We want to try to fill in a gap. Very little has ever been written."

If the bone your dog dragged home was from a human skeleton, an anthropologist or expert in forensic medicine could probably provide an extensive profile of the former owner.

Depending on the bone or bones found, conclusions could be drawn in areas such as age, sex, diet or even station in society. The deductions are made by cross-checking the bone's dimensions and characteristics against those of thousands of others already cataloged.

Similar studies have been made for many species.

Between the early 1800s and 1960, commercial whalers harvested some 200,000 humpback whales. Yet, it seems less than a dozen people have taken the time to study the mammal's skeletal system.

"Most of the skeletal work on whales was done during the 19th century and before," O'Callaghan says. "Given we're not taking the animals any more, unless somebody takes the opportunity now, it probably won't get done."

Jurasz' childhood was spent with whales and whale-crazy people. Her father, Dr. Charles Jurasz, was one of the pioneers of humpback research and is still considered one of the world's top four experts. He was the first to promote the idea that whales could be identified by their flukes.

"I was born and raised a whale person," she says. "When I went to college, I received a double degree in natural science and art."

While attending Lewis and Clark College in Portland, Ore., she began dating fellow student O'Callaghan. A philosophy and economics major, he claimed to have little interest in whale research. But some bone-loving groundwork had already been laid while O'Callaghan was growing up in Oregon.

"I was one of those kids on the block who would bring home the bones the dog would bury," he said. "I'd clean them up and see what they looked like. Bones, in general, have been a hobby of mine."

His interest didn't pass the amateur stage until he took a trip to Juneau, Alaska, to meet Susan's parents.

Her father had collected the skeletons of a beached humpback mother and her calf and was cleaning the bones. Something clicked in the kid who long ago had coveted muddy vestiges of T-bone steaks. Presented with bones more than 20 feet long and weighing up to 300 pounds and a chance to help clean more, O'Callaghan literally dug in.

Since that fateful summer, Brian has joined Susan in making whale research his life's work. They founded Sea Reach, a company modeled after Dr. Jurasz' Sea Search LTD.

They're also engaged.

Summers are spent on Alaskan waters researching live whales. Winters are used to study bones and complete data. This past winter, the opportunity to help the Pacific Whale Foundation prepare its humpback skeleton brought the pair to Maui.

The two are veterans of whale public relations. "We spend a lot of time talking to people," Jurasz said.

Understanding and support are two things humpback whales can use. Although humpbacks have been on the endangered list since 1973 and protected from hunting since 1966, there is concern about the population's ability to rebound. The population hovers around 6,000 now, compared with estimates of about 200,000 before the explosive harpoon era began in the 1930s.

DEAR ABBY

Little girl's plight brings tears to reader's eyes

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: After reading that letter signed "Helpless in Pittsburgh," I was in tears. I can't imagine a mother being so cruel as to take the thick eyeglasses away from her 4-year-old daughter, and tell her she doesn't want anyone to see her in them because she looked so ugly. And this happened in the cry room of a church yet! God bless you for asking "Helpless" to write again and tell you the name of the church and the priest so you could intervene in that child's behalf.

Did you ever hear from her, Abby? Please let us know. I can't get that child out of my mind. — ALYCE FORSTER, FAYETTEVILLE, N.C.

DEAR ALYCE: Yes. I heard from "Helpless" who gave me her name, address and telephone number, as well as the name of the church and the priest. I phoned the priest and he promised to make every effort to locate the mother and handle the matter personally.

DEAR ABBY: You mentioned snakes in your column, so I thought I'd send this in: When I had a home and family of four, I put a hand-lettered sign in the front-door window and another in the back-door window. Both read: PLEASE DO NOT FEED THE SNAKE!

Ours was the only house on that street that wasn't burglarized. — JOHN HALL JR., HOUSTON

P.S. We never owned a snake.

DEAR ABBY: If you thought "Appalled in Sacramento" was overreacting to her son's teacher's error in grammar, you are fortunate in your lack of experience with same. As a parent, I have conversed frequently with teachers. Your hair would curl at some of what I hear.

I once heard a first-grade teacher tell a child, "You done real good." A third-grade teacher said to me, "He really seen me comin'." Trust me, Abby. These are not isolated occurrences.

A friend who taught in New York for more than 20 years once showed me a paper another teacher had "corrected." Next to a word the teacher had marked wrong was printed: "I advice you to look this up in the dictionery." (Ironically, the child had spelled the word correctly.)

When I attended school, assignments in any subject were expected to be punctuated and spelled correctly or points were deducted. When my son was a third-grader, his teacher showed me a story he had written. I was appalled at the errors in spelling and punctuation, and said so. The teacher prosed on about the wonderful creativity and imagination the boy displayed, until I asked if my son could not have been just as creative if he had been made to write and spell correctly. Abby, if you had seen the teacher's face, you would have thought I had suggested death by slow torture!

Learning to spell and punctuate correctly did not seem to have stifled Stevenson, Whitman, Poe, Millay, Dickinson, Tennyson, Austen and a host of others who have given so much pleasure with the written word. — CAROLYN GOLD, CLEARWATER, FLA.

CONFIDENTIAL TO "PARTICULAR" IN GREENSBORO, N.C: It's OK to be fussy, but the girl who thinks no man is good enough for her could be right. (She could also be left.)

Loveable, huggable teddy bears popular with children, collectors

By LINDA ROSENKRANTZ
Copley News Service

Ask any group of people what they consider to be the most huggable inanimate object in the world and chances are a rousing majority would name the teddy bear.

From its creation in 1903, the teddy bear in all its incarnations — from Winnie-the Pooh and Paddington to Scarlet O'Beara, Kareem Abdul-Jabear and the talkative Teddy Ruxpin — has been the classic children's toy, probably unique in its appeal to both boys and girls. If anything, teddy bears are more popular now than ever, both with kids and with collectors.

The first all-teddy auction (more than 300 lots) was in London in 1985. Soon after, the world record price was set at $4,488 for a 1905 Steiff bear. Countless books have been devoted to the subject and late October saw the debut of a quarterly magazine called Teddy Bear Review containing historic lore, news of current specimens and enough other slightly anthropomorphic articles (displaying the addiction to puns that seem endemic to bear people) to please any arctophile.

Most people are aware that the popular stuffed plush toy was named after President Theodore Roosevelt. A great hunting enthusiast, Roosevelt nevertheless put sportsmanship above the sport, and when a group of hunters used dogs to corner a bear cub and then tied it to a tree for the president to shoot, he refused.

After the Washington Post printed a Clifford Berryman cartoon depicting the incident in October, 1902, the head of the Ideal Novelty and Toy Co. of Brooklyin, N.Y., wrote to the White Houe for permission to make a stuffed bear and call it Teddy's bear.

It didn't take long for Teddy's bear to become everyone's bear. By 1907, the German company, Steiff, was producing a million bears a year.

The original Ideal bear, patterned after the Berryman cartoon, was used as a souvenir giveaway during Roosevelt's second presidential campaign and is today one of the rarest and most-prized teddy bear collectibles, with a market value of about $500. In general, vintage bears, even if their fur is worn, do not come cheap. Almost any good, authentic specimen will run to several hundred dollars.

Beekeepers discover their hobby sweet source of money, honey

O'FALLON, Ill. (AP) — Jim Hendrickson isn't sure why he keeps bees. All he says is that bees are his hobby, bees make honey, and he makes a little money.

"They're fascinating," he said.

A few other people in the area are fascinated with the small insects. Although honey is not a major agricultural commodity, many hobbyists are raising bees and giving or selling the honey to friends and relatives.

"There are a lot of small producers with one to two to five colonies," said Hendrickson. "They sell a little (honey), use a lot and give some to friends."

Mike Hardimon, University of Illinois extension adviser for St. Clair County, says most county honey producers are hobbyists, although the number of hives seems to grow each year.

He said a printout listing all the county producers who had their hives inspected for pests in accordance with Illinois law had more than 200 names. One busy bee user in the county is Eckert Orchards.

The orchard rents "a whole lot of bees" for pollination of apple trees in the spring, said Larry Eckert. The orchard also buys honey from local producers for resale.

Hendrickson, vice president of the St. Clair Beekeepers Association, said the hobby took a lot of equipment to get started, but also provided a lot of satisfaction. He said the association tried to keep a roster of 200 active, dues-paying members in the area.

Hendrickson's garage is full of extractors, honey tanks, wax melters and other paraphernalia of the honey business. Six hives sit in his back yard, the maximum allowed in O'Fallon.

He worked with other beekeepers to get a city ordinance amended to allow beekeepers six hives in the city for their pollination benefits. His hives will contain anywhere from 60,000 bees on up.

A queen will lay from 2,500 to 3,000 eggs per day to keep a hive active. He re-queens, or replaces his queens, every two years.

Finding good locations for colonies away from town is getting harder and harder, he said, as much of the wild clover in the country disappears. Wild clover, dandelions and soybeans are the most important sources of nectar for bees in this area.

Hendrickson said he had worked with bees in the 1940s when he was in high school. But World War II and then various jobs interrupted his hobby until about eight years ago.

When he helped a neighbor who had a bee swarm in one of her trees then, it took seven weeks to get the swarm out of the tree, but it put him back in the bee business.

'Spruce Goose' open for tourists

LONG BEACH, Calif. (AP) - The famed "Spruce Goose," the legendary all-wood flying boat designed and produced by the late Howard Hughes, is now a popular Long Beach tourist attraction, notes Travel Agent magazine.

The gargantuan flying boat — with a 319-feet, 11-inch wingspan — was designed to transport World War II troops across the Atlantic safely above menacing Nazi U-boats but made only one test flight at about 70 feet for some 1,000 yards.

The aircraft now sits in a 700-foot diameter structure described as the world's largest clearspan aluminum dome, according to the publication.

A special viewing platform adjacent to the plane allows visitors to view the entire flight deck, cockpit and huge cargo hold. Audio-visual presentations depict the aircraft's construction, test flight and highlights of Hughes' aviation and movie careers.

Difference in Davis trials 'profound'

By MIKE COCHRAN

STATE

FORT WORTH (AP) — Ten years ago, Cullen Davis, then 43 and among the richest men in Texas, was on trial for his life. Now it is his shrinking fortune that's at stake.

The difference between the criminal trial in which Davis was acquitted and the civil wrongful death suit he now faces is profound, not unlike comparing a world championship prize fight with a back alley brawl.

Both are bloody affairs, but the rules differ substantially.

"Our judicial system makes it a hell of a lot easier to take away a man's money than his freedom," a lawyer in the Davis wrongful death trial observed last week.

"And that's probably the way it should be," he said.

In what then was the longest, costliest murder trial in Texas history, an Amarillo jury acquitted Davis of killing his 12-year-old stepdaughter during a murderous 1976 shooting spree at his remote $6 million mansion.

The defendant's ex-wife Priscilla was wounded, her boyfriend Stan Farr was killed and a young mansion visitor, Bubba Gavrel, was permanently disabled by the bewigged gunman dressed in black.

Gavrel's date that night, Beverly Bass, 18, was the only person to escape the mansion unharmed.

The three survivors testified in Amarillo that Davis was the gunman. Together, they underwent three weeks of vigorous and withering cross-examination by Houston's legal bulldog, Richard "Racehorse" Haynes.

Haynes focused his attack less on their testimony than their lifestyles, hammering away at real and imagined drug and sex parties at the mansion and a stormy extra-marital romance between Mrs. Davis and an ex-motorcycle racer.

Last week, the three told their stories again, this time without interruption by scores of objections and without the intense cross-examination by the defense.

It took one day.

Not that defense attorney Steve Sumner lacked the skill or the aggressiveness of Haynes, but the rules of evidence were different. More important, the presiding judge ruled repeatedly that the often lurid testimony in Amarillo was neither relevant nor material to the issue before his court.

A judicial gag order precluded comment by Sumner but his chagrin and frustration were apparent. It is also ironic that Sumner is being prohibited from using the fruits of his own investigation, since it was he who researched information for Haynes in Amarillo.

At the same time, Judge Claude Williams allowed testimony by a pair of expert witnesses who appeared on behalf of the plaintiffs, Mrs. Davis and her second husband, Jack Wilborn, parents of the slain girl.

Plaintiff attorneys were not at all certain that the judge would permit them to testify.

One, a former FBI agent, told jurors that a psychological profile he prepared on the mansion gunman fit Davis "to a T." The second, a criminologist, said Davis was the probable assailant.

Those expert opinions coupled with the uncluttered eyewitness accounts most likely will compel Davis to testify this week even if not called by plantiff lawyers.

He did not testify in Amarillo, and under criminal statutes, the failure to do so could not be used against him. No such safeguard exists in the current civil suits.

Making matters worse from the defendant's standpoint, plaintiff lawyers are not required to convince the jury of Davis' guilt beyond a reasonable doubt but by the less strenuous preponderance of evidence.

And 10 instead of 12 jurors can render a verdict.

Testimony in patrolman's murder to resume today

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Prosecutors were prepared to intensify their case against a policeman accused of slaying a fellow officer suspected of vigilante acts.

Farrell Tucker, 36, is charged with murder in the slaying of his best friend, Stephen R. Smith, 31, on Aug. 18, 1986.

Testimony was to resume today.

Testimony in the trial last week indicated that Smith, who was on suspension on brutality charges, had taken part in several vigilante-type slayings and allegedly planned to kill three top law enforcement officials he blamed for wrecking his career.

Former Bexar County District Attorney Sam Millsap testified that Tucker was afraid of Smith.

He also said Tucker was surprised to hear from Smith's wife, Lea, that patrolman Smith had been involved in vigilante activities.

Deputy chiefs Frank Hoyack and Robert Heuck testified that Tucker was not on duty and had gone to meet with Smith to discuss the Smiths' marital problems.

Smith allegedly planned to kill Millsap, Hoyack and Heuck and Tucker had told the officials of Smith's alleged plan.

Hoyack and Heuck said Smith was not ordered to go to the meeting.

Millsap said he first believed Tucker's story, but began doubting it a few hours after the shooting.

Prosecutors have contended that Tucker could have avoided shooting Smith by jumping out of the car.

Police reports show Tucker took with him a .45-caliber pistol and a .357 Magnum service revolver.

Tucker said Smith took the .45-caliber weapon from him and he was forced to shoot him five times with the other revolver.

SMU investigative committee invites Clements to 'sit in'

DALLAS (AP) — A committee investigating the Southern Methodist University football recruiting scandal has invited Gov. Bill Clements to attend its final interview session.

United Methodist bishops aren't saying if Clements has accepted the invitation to the session that run from today through Wednesday.

"He's given us the assurances of cooperation," said Spurgeon Dunnam III, chairman of the committee. "I'm sure it is the hope of the committee that he will be present during some part of the meeting."

Clements earlier said he would meet with the committee after the Texas Legislature's special session adjourned. The Legislature is scheduled to reconvene in special session on June 22.

The committee will begin drafting a final report about the scandal this week and present SMU's Board of Trustees with it on June 19, Dunham said. Bishops are trying to determine who knew of and approved the payments.

Clements revealed in March that, as chairman of SMU's Board of Governors in 1985, he and other SMU governors approved continued booster payments to football players with the understanding that the payments be phased out.

Members will meet again June 15 in Arkansas during an annual bishops' retreat to make final revisions before presenting the report to SMU trustees.

Clements was chairman of the Board of Governors until January. He has declined to identify the other SMU governors involved in the decision to continue payments to certain athletes despite repeated requests from trustees.

The payments, a violation of National Collegiate Athletic Association rules, occurred while SMU was on NCAA probation for improper recruiting practices.

The NCAA in February suspended SMU's football team for the 1987 season and limited it to seven road games for 1988. Strict scholarship limits prompted SMU officials to later cancel the 1988 season.

The revelations prompted the abolishment of the Board of Governors, an executive committee of the Board of Trustees that he chaired until January, and an overhaul of the school's governance structure.

The bishops' committee is also investigating the contract severance terms for former Athletic Director Bob Hitch and former football coach Bobby Collins. The pair resigned in December, a few weeks after allegations of recruiting violations that led to the latest NCAA penalties.

Haley Clark, cow calling competitor from Miami, Texas, yells her way to a championship title in the womens division of the Annual National Cow Calling Competition, held in this small Panhandle town near Amarillo.

Cow callers converge on tiny Panhandle town

MIAMI (AP) — The cattle didn't show, but thousands of people came to this tiny Panhandle town for the National Cow Calling Contest.

Most men in the 70-person contest let loose with an ear-splitting "Yeeeeeeee-haaah," or a toe-curling "Woooo-weeeh," but a few entrants in the grandmother's division bellowed out sounds that would have sent shivers up a bovine's spine.

"I don't know whether the cows are coming, but I saw an old boy in a straw hat jump up and start running," master of ceremonies Charles Bailey quipped after one such call.

The cow-calling contest in this community of 800 — two-thirds of the population of Roberts County — usually draws a good crowd, but Saturday's 39th annual competition attracted more people than usual.

"This year is a little special because everybody's come back for our 100th birthday celebration," Bailey said. "People from Guam, England and California came here for this, and they're all basically Miami people who still have relatives here.

The three judges — sprawled under a shade tree about 250 yards away from the contestants — claimed nobody has the same cow-calling style, which is why some cattle respond only to their owner's voice.

But in today's era of mechanization, where car horns and sirens signal chow time, most cows are deaf to human hollers anyway, they said.

"The majority of the old cowboys would open a pickup door, get their horse out of the trailer, go find them cattle and start hollering until the cows came home," Bailey said.

"Years ago they used to hold this down on the creek bottom and if the cattle was around, they would come running," he said.

On Saturday, it was children, not cows, who scampered through the crowd of 2,300. About 3,000 pounds of barbecued beef was consumed at the gathering, organizers said.

Earlier in the day, revelers were treated to the town's first parade to celebrate Miami's centennial.

Civil rights activists to regroup '60s style'

DALLAS (AP) — A group of activists planning to revitalize a dormant civil rights group plan to start off with civil disobedience akin to the type used in racial protests during the 1960s.

The activitsts say they are reemerging to confront a city establishment they say is indifferent to the poor.

"There's a rage here that was in other parts of the South 20 years ago. Not to recognize that rage is dangerous," said Peter Johnson, interim director of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference Dallas Chapter.

About 20 business owners, attorneys and clergy met with the Rev. E. Randel Osburn, a national conference leader, to revive the civil rights organization's Dallas chapter Saturday.

The group cited retention of public housing, strategies for economic independence and a struggle of the wealthy versus the poor in what Osburn says some would call a socialistic agenda.

"The challenge of Martin Luther King (Jr., who founded the SCLC) was to feed the hungry, clothe the naked and house them," Osburn said. "It has nothing to do with racism. It has do with economics.

"The white community is not really white or black, it is green. What we have to do is plug into the jolly green giant — the power of the people is mightier than any pen," he said.

"I don't think we're going to win this fight in the courtroom. We're going to win it in the streets," Johnson told members after outlining plans for nonviolent confrontational training and civil disobedience.

The group plans to protest the contemplated demolition of 2,600 units in the West Dallas Housing projects, and it is organizing a July 24 march through downtown Dallas to the Trinity River site where three blacks were lynched by vigilantes in 1860.

Johnson, active in the Dallas SCLC chapter in years past until he dropped out to care for his dying mother, was named interim executive director of the chapter until regular elections could be called.

The Dallas chapter withered without Johnson's leadership and attention from the national level, said Osburn, 42, the only surviving member of King's original core of protesters.

He has been arrested 68 times and hospitalized from beatings on 22 occasions in fights he characterizes along economic rather than racial lines.

King, he says, was killed after the civil rights battle had been won, but the struggle for redistribution of wealth was just beginning.

"It was the first challenge of the masses against the classes, the first campaign of the haves and have-nots," Osburn said.

"Poor people believe that they are each other's enemy by color distinctions; your own system has conspired against you in such a way that you don't even know who your enemy is," he said, citing as example the recent violence of predominantly poor and rural whites against black marchers in Forsythe County, Georgia.

STATE IN BRIEF

TDC to remain closed

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — The Texas prison system will remain closed today despite the weekend release of more than 200 inmates, a spokesman says.

For the 12th time this year, the prison system closed its doors to new inmates Friday after an inmate population count showed the system had exceeded a 95 percent of capacity limit.

Although the Texas Department of Corrections is generally closed on weekend to arrivals and releases, 224 inmates were released on parole Saturday, prison officials said.

"I think we'll be able to open on Tuesday, but we will definitely be closed on Monday," TDC spokesman Charles Brown said. No releases were planned for Sunday.

The inmate population at midnight Thursday totaled 38,505 inmates, or 95.18 percent — 74 over the legal capacity, Brown said. The prison system's head count for Friday and the weekend will not be available until sometime this afternoon.

Son held in mom's death

HOUSTON (AP) — A man charged with murder in the smothering death of his 95-year-old mother apparently was worried both he and the woman would become financial burdens on their family, police say.

George Edward Maurer, 60, remained in the Harris County Jail on Sunday in lieu of $10,000 bond in connection with the death of Josephine E. Maurer, who was suffocated Thursday afternoon as she slept in her son's apartment, police said.

Earlier that day, Maurer took his wheelchair-bound mother out of a nursing home, officials said.

Sgt. D.J. Gafford said Maurer telephoned two brothers — one in Houston and one in New York — Thursday afternoon and told them about the woman's death. One brother called police after Maurer allegedly said he was going to kill himself, Gafford said.

Ham radio operators meet

ARLINGTON (AP) — Amateur radio operators are using satellites and computers in increasing numbers in their communications hobby and nearly 5,000 visitors to the state convention got updates on the latest technology.

Do-it-yourselfers rummaged through a flea market at Texas HamCom 1987 at Arlington Saturday and Sunday while other amateur radio operators, or "hams", attended sessions on operation of the newest gear.

At one booth, Allen Brinckerhoff of Amateur Radio Satellite Corp. showed radio operators how to access Oscar 10, a communications satellite used for international communications.

South Texas farmers 'drying out'

By ALISSA SCHRAMM

Hearst News Service

SAN ANTONIO — South Texas farmers, kept out of their fields for weeks by rainy weather, began to check on crops under sunny skies Friday.

A Van De Walle Farms representative said he was "cautiously optimistic" but would not be surprised if the 120-acre potato crop is lost.

"As soon as it's dry, we'll start to pull samples," said Joe Van De Walle Jr., general manager of the fresh produce division. "I hope we haven't lost the crop."

The farms experienced similar problems last year when rain wrecked more than 100 acres of potatoes, Van De Walle said.

Jalapenos, bell peppers and other varieties of peppers are expected to be suffering from disease from standing water, Van De Walle said.

The cabbage may grow out of its poor state and most of the 250 acres of corn should pull through except for that in standing water, he said.

"Let's hope it's over," Van De Walle said of the rain.

In Kerr County, Virginia Holekamp said some wheat was beaten to the ground by rain on the land farmed by she and her husband, George.

Garden mystique keep Celts alive

By Tom McMillan
Copley News Service

BOSTON — Pat Riley of the Lakers scoffed once too often at the mystique of Boston Garden, and so the mystique rose up and mussed his hair.

Magic Johnson scoffed — "Hey, we took care of that in '85" — and so the mystique sent lead-footed Greg Kite after the Magic Man in Game 3 of the NBA Finals, and Kite blocked one of his shots.

How else to explain it? Just when we had left the Boston Celtics for dead — tired, old men creaking along on sprained ankles and fractured feet — they returned to the Garden Sunday and sipped from its fountain of youth. Larry Bird scored 30 points and Dennis Johnson had 26 as the Celtics rebounded from two lopsided losses to stun the Lakers, 109-103, and give the finals new life. LA still leads the best-of-seven series, 2-1, with Game 4 here Tuesday.

Riley, the Lakers coach, had been saying for days that the mystique was no mystique at all — that the parquet floor and the 16 championship banners served to pump up the Celtics far more than rattle the opposition. But wasn't that Byron Scott of the Lakers shooting 2-for-9 from the field, including 0-for-5 in the fourth quarter, when his three-pointers could have made a difference?

Wasn't that the old warrior, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, muffing two of his four free throws down the stretch? Wasn't that James Worthy hitting for the cycle (missed jump shot, missed free throw, missed layup, missed dunk) and shooting 6-for-18? Wasn't that A.C. Green scoring — count 'em — two points?

Yep.

THE CELTICS were fairly awesome themselves, shooting 81 percent from the field in the second quarter (17-for-21) , which explains why Riley stiffened and said, "The mystique didn't beat us today. The Celtics did." But funny things happened all around. Bird took a shot that hit the rim, bounced two feet up, and swished through the net. Dennis Johnson took a shot that hit the rim, bounced three feet up, and swished. Worthy dribbled out of bounds off his knee.

"But I don't think there's any magical secret you can point to and say, 'That's why we won it,' " said Celtic forward Kevin McHale. "We played a little better than we had in the first two games. They didn't play as well. Those first two games in L.A., maybe we were just trying to see how good they were. They took it to us and beat the hell out of us."

The Lakers won Games 1 and 2 by a combined 32 points and their fans chanted "Sweep! Sweep! Sweep!" in the 141-122 blowout at the Forum last Thursday. A sweep still seemed possible when L.A. raced to a 29-22 lead in the first quarter of Game 3 and extended it to nine points, 39-30, with four minutes gone in the second. But Bird had other ideas.

HE GOT his jumper going and scored 14 points in the second quarter alone, as the Celtics roared back to take the lead. They surged ahead for good, 56-54, when Bird hit a little fallaway over Worthy in the final minute of the first half. Boston's halftime lead was four points, 60-56, and the crowd was on its feet, stomping, chanting, "Beat L.A.! Beat L.A.!" A sign called the home court their "Garden of Even."

Tom Kite easy victor in Kemper

Associated Press

POTOMAC, Md. — Tom Kite overcame a lackluster front nine to shoot a 69—270 and capture the $700,000 Kemper Open by seven strokes. It was his biggest payday in 15 years on the PGA Tour. Chris Perry and Howard Twitty finished second 277.

Kite made four bogeys on the front nine and led Twitty by only two shots after the 10th hole. But he gradually stretched the advantage to six strokes by notching birdies on Nos. 11 and 12 and an eagle on the 524-yard par-5 13th hole. Kite all but wrapped up his first tournament title of the year when he holed a 40-foot putt to go 14-under with five holes to play. It was the largest margin of victory on the tour this year.

WILMINGTON, DEL. — Betsy King birdied three of the last four holes to pull away from the pack in the $500,000 LPGA McDonald's Championship, her third tournament victory of the year and one that made her the tour's leading money winner. King, 31, shot a 67—278, two strokes better than Japan's Ayaka Okamoto. Okamoto, who had a 72, and Cathy Morse, who ballooned to 74 over the final 18s, had enjoyed three-stroke leads as co-leaders after three rounds...

Rahal, who won the International Race of Champions round at Mid-Ohio Saturday, and Mass never led until Chip Robinson suddenly pulled his 962 onto pit road on the 112th of 129 laps in the 500-kilometer IMSA Camel GT sports car event.

Pazienza triumphs

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — Flashy Vinnie Pazienza, bleeding from cuts above and below a nearly closed left eye, rallied to earn a 15-round unamimous decision over Greg Haugen and win the IBF lightweight title. Haugen withstood Pazienza's taunts before the opening bell and in the early rounds and landed the cleaner punches until the challenger from nearby Cranston unloaded enough long-range bombs in the final two rounds to pull out the decision.

Chi Chi on top

DALLAS — Chi Chi Rodriguez won his fourth consecutive tournament Sunday, charging from three shots behind to overcome Bruce Crampton in the $200,000 Senior Players Re-Union Pro-Am with a reocrd 65—201. It was the fifth Senior Tour title of the year for Rodriguez, who earned $30,093 for his one-stroke victory over Crampton, who shot 69 on Sunday. Gary Player also shot a 65 and finished at 203, two shots back....

Three in 9th tops Midland Angels

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

A controversial call followed by a no-doubt-about-it home run were key plays in a three-run ninth inning that led El Paso to a 6-5 victory over Midland in Texas League action Sunday night.

The three-run outburst, which snapped a 3-3 tie, also returned second place to the Diablos, who fell to three games off the lead despite the victory. Wichita, playing hapless San Antonio, won a doubleheader Sunday. Midland is 3½ games back.

The controversy in the ninth inning involved Diablo Frank Mattox, who was hit by a Vinicio Cedeno pitch while trying a one-out drag bunt. After Mattox was awarded first, a five-minute discussion broke out between Midland manager Max Oliveras and the home plate umpire. To no avail. Mattox stayed on first.

"The guy who got hit was trying to bunt the ball and he was out of the batter's box," said Oliveras. "I looked in the rule book and couldn't find anything about it unless the batter makes contact with the ball. Then he's out."

El Paso manager Duffy Dyer didn't see the play the same as Oliveras.

"He wasn't out of the batter's box," said Dyer. "He tried to drag bunt, and the ball hit him in the foot."

m

WHEN OLIVERAS returned to the dugout, Diablo Lavell Freeman put a quick end to the whole situation by lofting Cedeno's first pitch over the Green Monster for a 5-3 El Paso lead.

The way Freeman smashed Cedeno's pitch made one wonder if the delay might have taken a little off his throw.

"No," said pitching coach Chuck Hernandez. "I think a good hitter hit a good pitch out of the park."

"You've got to give him, Freeman, credit," added Oliveras. "He's a good hitter."

It's easy to understand their statements. Freeman has a .411 average, 16 home runs and 48 RBI.

Jesus Alfaro followed with a single and moved to second on an Edwin Marquez passed ball. Alfaro advanced to third on a ground out and scored on Todd Brown's single.

The Angels were down but not out. Mark Doran opened the bottom of the ninth with a double to center field and Rick Adams moved him to third with a single to right.

After an Adams stolen base and a ground out that failed to advance either runner, Dyer pulled long reliever Barry Bass for ace John Miglio.

Miglio, a lefty with a 2.14 earned run average, a 4-0 record and, now, 10 saves, got lefty Doug Jennings to strike out swinging but couldn't finish the inning unscathed.

Right-handed designated hitter Mark Brouhard, the most experienced Angel with Major and Japanese League experience, put the tying run on second base with a two-RBI double to right. He advanced no farther as pinch hitter Damon Farmar struck out to end the game.

EL PASO drew first blood in the second inning when Ernie Riles connected for his second home run of the season, a solo shot to left off starter Phil Venturino.

Midland fought back in the fourth when Brouhard, who had only one extra base hit (a homer) coming into the game, led off with a triple up the middle. Brian Brady knocked him in with his third homer of the year.

Two outs later, Marquez and Mark Doran walked and Rick Adams hit an RBI single for a 3-1 lead.

WHILE MIDLAND and El Paso are busy knocking each other off, Wichita is slowly expanding its TL West lead. Time is rapidly running out. The Angels have only nine games left in this half of the season, three against the Diablos and six against the Pilots.

"Somebody's got to beat them if we keep beating each other," said Dyer. "Hopefully, San Antonio will get them."

Oliveras is looking at the first half race from a different perspective. "If we're going to win, we're going to win. If not..."

Stanford wins CWS, 9-5

Cardinal pulls off four DP's

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — The double play was an easy choice for most valuable play at the College World Series.

Stanford turned four double plays in Sunday night's 9-5 championship game victory over Oklahoma State, four more in Saturday's win over Texas and 12 in the tournament, which tied a record.

"I've never seen so many double plays," said Stanford freshman Paul Carey, named the tournament's outstanding player. "We definitely picked them up when it counted — double play after double play after double play."

Good glovework was needed to stymie Oklahoma State, which collected 13 hits and had at least two baserunners in all but one inning. The double plays involved six players and read like lottery results: 6-4-3, 3-6-1, 7-5-4 and 3-6-3.

"THAT WAS the difference in the game," Stanford Coach Mark Marquess said. "They're a great offensive team, and if we don't turn those we're in trouble."

The Cowboys stranded 11 runners against All-American Jack McDowell, 13-5, and reliever Steve Chitren.

"We had our opportunities and they fell through," said Oklahoma State's Robin Ventura, who had four hits but was erased three times on double plays.

The third-ranked Cowboys' last chance to go ahead was in the eighth, when they trailed 6-4 and their first two batters walked. Chitren came in and struck out the side.

"I've been coming in in those situations, so I'm pretty used to it," said Chitren, who earned his 13th save.

Second-ranked Stanford, 53-17, collected 15 hits against losing pitcher Pat Hope, 13-3, and two relievers. RBI doubles by Carey and Ron Witmeyer highlighted the Cardinal's four-run fifth, and three straight hits by Toi Cook, Ed Sprague and Carey sparked a three-run ninth.

Carey had three hits to finish the tournament with a .381 average, nine runs scored and seven RBI.

"A freshman going on a senior. Unbelievable," Marquess said.

Benny Castillo and Brad Beanblossom, the last two batters in Oklahoma State's lineup, hit back-to-back homers in the fourth inning to give the Cowboys a 3-2 lead.

But McDowell, chosen by the Chicago White Sox in the first round of Tuesday's draft, hung on despite an unreliable breaking ball.

"MY STUFF wasn't that great," said McDowell, who lost to Oklahoma State Thursday. "I was making good pitches when I had to. We got help with Chitren, and I needed it."

The championship was Stanford's first, and Marquess said the success surprised him.

"At one point, after our first two games in the Pac 10, we were 11-8 and 0-2 in the league," he said. "We made a great comeback."

Oklahoma State, 59-13, was in the College World Series for the seventh straight year and has failed to win the title each time.

"If death is like this, it's pretty painful," Coach Gary Ward said. "Your total goal is to win a national championship. When you come up short, it doesn't really make much difference to you that you finished second or ninth or 42nd."

Questions still remain amidst confusion

By STEVEN CRIST
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Only 4¾ lengths separated the first seven finishers in the Kentucky Derby May 2, but when six of them met again in the Belmont Stakes Saturday, the spread was 34¾ lengths, and the order of finish was scrambled. How did Bet Twice win so easily, why did Alysheba run so poorly, and what happened to the supporting cast that had kept the first two legs of the Triple Crown so close?

Those were the questions underlying the confusion that emerged from the Belmont, where Bet Twice, who had been a close second to Alysheba in the Derby and the Preakness, scored a 14-length runaway victory while Alysheba finished a distant fourth in his bid for the Triple Crown.

BET TWICE's time of 2:28 1-5 on a fast track that propelled Groovy to a time of 1:08 1-5 for six furlongs in the Roseben Handicap earlier in the day suggests that Bet Twice's margin was deceptive. Conquistador Cielo posted the same final time when he won the 1982 Belmont by 14½ lengths, but the track was two or three seconds slower that day.

Bet Twice's performance stacks up as ordinary when measured against most Belmonts. He ran a good race but nothing more, and his eight opponents all turned in dismal performances.

Bet Twice won the race in the middle stages of a race where pace made no difference. The early leaders quit cold and the stretch runners had no punch. Bet Twice ran his three half-mile splits in 0:50 1-5, 0:48 1-5 and 0:49 4-5, the kind of essentially even-paced style that wins most Belmonts. He had no trouble negotiating the distance, and everyone else did.

JACK VAN Berg, Alysheba's trainer, blamed Chris McCarron for keeping Alsyheba too far behind a moderate pace, but pace had nothing to do with Alysheba's inability to run his last half-mile any faster than 51 2-5 seconds. He was four lengths behind Bet Twice after a mile and 14¼ lengths behind him at the wire.

Watching replays of the race, Van Berg wondered why McCarron had not claimed a foul against Cryptoclearance, who hemmed in Alysheba briefly on the turn, causing the 4-5 favorite to steady briefly. The incident cost Alysheba no more than a length, but that would have been enough for him to finish second and win the $1 million Triple Crown particiation bonus, which instead went to Bet Twice.

McCarron, though, said that Laffit Pincay Jr. did nothing untoward on Cryptoclearance, and that the horse who really bothered him was Gone West, who was tiring badly in front of him and faded to finish sixth.

Van Berg continued to say flatly that the drug Lasix had nothing to do with the outcome of the Belmont, but no one can say for certain. Alysheba won the Derby and Preakness with the help of Lasix, the anti-bleeding medication that often improves performance, but could not use it in the Belmont because it is banned in New York.

VAN BERG said that Alysheba was examined after the race and that he did not bleed, but that may be beside the point. The colt, like hundreds of other non-bleeders who race with Lasix at tracks across the country every day, may have thrived on its side effects. With Lasix, Alysheba has finished first in three of four starts: without it, he is one-for-nine.

X-rays of Alsheba's legs were taken Sunday, but they revealed no injuries. Van Berg said the colt would leave Monday or Tuesday for Chicago, where Van Berg has his headquarters.

Pedigree may have played a part in the Belmont. Almost all of the Belmont starters have the breeding of milers rather than stayers, and most of the field comes from the Raise a Native sire line that is more noted for brilliance than stamina.

Gulch, who finished third, ran a strange race. Twelve days earlier, he beat older horses in the Metropolitan Handicap while running the mile in 1:34 4-5. In the Belmont, and he was 17¾ lengths behind Bet Twice after a mile in 1:38 2-5. After that virtual jog, Gulch had something left and was the only horse in the race to gain on Bet Twice in the final half-mile.

BET TWICE, who has returned to his home base at Monmouth Park in Oceanport, N.J., will make his next start in either the United Nations Handicap on the grass at Atlantic City July 15, the Haskell Handicap at Monmouth Aug. 1, or the Travers at Saratoga Aug. 22.

"We'll take four or five weeks before we decide," Bob Levy, a principal owner, said. "He might run in two of the three."

Clarence Scharbauer, whose family owns Alysheba, said that he was considering a campaign that would include the Travers, the Super Derby at Lousiana Downs in September, the Jockey Club Gold Cup at Belmont in October and the Breeders' Cup Classic at Santa Anita in November.

Cryptoclearance, who won a three-way photo from Gulch and Alysheba to finish second in the Belmont, may run again in three weeks in the St. Paul Derby at Canterbury, or wait for the Saratoga meeting. Gulch, Leo Castelli and Avies Copy are all going to be rested at least until August.

That will open up the next two months for some 3-year-olds who have been on the sidelines and, in the wake of Alysheba's defeat, are again eligible to challenge for leadership of the division. Java Gold, Temperate Sil, Demons Begone and Polish Navy are all being pointed for the Travers, and are likely to turn up in such races as the Dwyer, the Swaps, the Haskell and the Jim Dandy before that.

Lendl takes charge to top Wilander in French Open

By ROGER M. WILLIAMS
N.Y. Times News Service

PARIS — They played what seemed like three matches in one at the French Open Sunday. Mats Wilander dominated briefly, but Ivan Lendl got the better of the play in the early and late stages and captured the men's singles championship.

In gathering gloom and rain that threatened to postpone a finish until Monday, Lendl recovered from a midmatch lapse to take the title in four sets, 7-5, 6-2, 3-6, 7-6 (7-3).

This victory gave Lendl his third French championship in the last four years. In 1985, Wilander beat him in five sets.

It is the fifth Grand Slam title for a player who only a few years ago was being characterized as chronically unable to win the big ones.

Lendl recalled with relish that coming into this tournament, he was not a favorite. "They said I was not fit," he said, "that I wasn't mentally tough — Mats was tougher — that I had no confidence because I hadn't won enough matches this year."

Under those circumstances, Lendl said, "I'm proud to have pulled through."

It was a tough pull made tougher by the strange rhythms of play.

The first five games seemed like an extension of the warmup, with the players exchanging cautious groundstrokes in rallies that lasted as long as 80 shots. The looping strokes and total absence of aggressive play summoned memories of Wilander's first French final, in 1982, when he defeated Guillermo Vilas.

When Lendl suddenly picked up the pace going for winners from backcourt and taking the net at every opportunity, Wilander had no answer. A celebrated counterpuncher and much improved attacker, he neither counterpunched nor attacked. He had no real explanation for his malaise, only an after-the-fact appreciation that he should have acted sooner to shake it off.

For one thing, Wilander's tentative play hurt his serve. "In your mind, if you know you're going to play from the baseline," he said, "you don't concentrate on your serve. You don't put as much power in it."

He might have survived a lack of power if his first serve had been going in. But he was missing an unusually high percentage of first balls and Lendl began climbing all over the second one. Standing far over to play every second service return on the forehand, he hit a half-dozen of them for outright winners and as many more that set up easy volleys.

As Lendl put it, "I just took it to him."

Wilander had to do something, and he did. At 2-all in the third set,

Phillies' rookie hurls two-hitter

Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Rookie Mike Jackson came within three outs Sunday against Montreal of becoming the first Phillies pitcher to throw a no-hitter in Philadelphia this century, finishing with a two-hitter and a 3-1 victory over the Expos.

Jackson, 22, held Montreal hitless for eight innings but Tim Raines led off the ninth with a double. Raines moved to second on a wild pitch and scored on Hubie Brooks' sacrifice fly.

The Phillies have had four no-hitters since 1900, but all have been on the road. The last Phillies pitcher to throw a no-hitter in Philadelphia was Red Donahue against Boston, 5-0 in 1898.

Jackson struck out a career-high six and walked four. He started the season with the Phillies but was optioned to Maine on May 1 so he could make a start. After two starts with the minor-league team he was recalled on May 8.

Jackson made his first start for Phillies on May 12 and entered the game with an 0-3 record and an 5.00 earnded run average.

Mets 5, Pirates 4
Pirates 10, Mets 9

NEW YORK — Former Midland Cub Mike Diaz hit a three-run pinch homer and Andy Van Slyke hit a solo home run to highlight a six-run Pittsburgh eighth inning that carried the Pirates past the New York Mets in the second game of a doubleheader.

The victory snapped a 14-game losing streak against the Mets at Shea Stadium. New York won the opener in 10 innings on a two-run double by Lee Mazzilli, the 1000th hit of his career.

Astros 3, Giants 0

HOUSTON — Houston's Nolan Ryan allowed five hits and struck out a season-high 12 batters over seven innings, adding to his career major-league record, as the Astros defeated the San Francisco Giants.

Giants starter Atlee Hammaker limited the Astros to five hits in seven innings but his wild pitch in the sixth inning allowed Billy Hatcher to score from third base, giving Houston a 1-0 lead. Bill Doran's sacrifice fly and a single by rookie Chuck Jackson added two more runs in the seventh against Hammaker, 3-2.

Ryan, 3-5, who has 96 strikeouts in 73 innings this season, struck out 10 or more batters for the 166th time in his career and boosted his lifetime mark to 4,373. He did not walk a batter.

Dodgers 13, Reds 7

CINCINNATI — Mike Marshall, 4-for-5, hit two home runs and drove in five runs to pace a 17-hit Dodger attack Los Angeles trounced Cincinnati.

Los Angeles starter Bob Welch, 8-2, gave up a leadoff solo homer to Kal Daniels and a two-run homer to Dave Parker in the first inning when the Reds took a 3-2 lead. Then, he settled down before Nick Esasky hit a two-run homer in the eighth.

Cardinals 13, Cubs 9

CHICAGO — Willie McGee and Ozzie Smith each drove in four runs to pace St. Louis past Chicago. By taking three-of-four from the Cubs, the first-place Cardinals left town with a three-game lead over Chicago in the National League East.

The Cardinals took a 9-0 lead in the first four innings with McGee driving in a run in the first on a sacrifice fly, hitting a two-run homer, his fifth, in the third inning and adding a run-scoring single in the fourth.

Andre Dawson hit his 20th homer for Chicago.

Braves 13, Padres 12

ATLANTA — San Diego reliever Greg Booker walked Atlanta's Ken Oberkfell with the bases loaded to force in the winning run in the ninth inning and give the Braves a come-from-behind victory over the Padres.

The Braves overcame a nine-run deficit to take a 12-11 lead in the seventh, but the Padres tied it in the ninth on consecutive two-out singles by Marvel Wynne, Shane Mack and James Steels against reliever Gene Garber, 8-3.

Fisk sparks ChiSox to win over Angels

Associated Press

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Bill Long pitched a seven-hitter and Carlton Fisk homered twice and drove in three runs as the Chicago White Sox beat the California Angels 4-0 and salvaged the final game of their four-game series.

Long, 3-1, did not walk a batter in his second shutout of the season. He did not allow a batter past second base.

Fisk hit a two-run homer in the fourth inning, marking a team-record 13th straight game the White Sox had hit a home run. He hit a solo homer in the ninth, his sixth, off Angels starter Willie Fraser, 2-4.

Indians 12, Athletics 2

OAKLAND, Calif. — Pat Tabler drove home four runs and Tony Bernazard knocked in three as the Cleveland Indians capitalized on Oakland's season-high seven errors on the combined eight-hit pitching of Steve Carlton and Mark Huismann.

Former Midland Cub Joe Carter also supported Carlton, 4-4, with his 14th homer in the sixth inning. Carlton gave up four hits and one run through seven innings while walking four and striking out four.

Royals 9, Mariners 1

SEATTLE — Bud Black shut out Seattle on two hits for seven innings and Bo Jackson hit two home runs for Kansas City.

Jackson and Frank White each drove home three runs. Danny Tartabull hit two doubles and a triple and went 8-for-17 as Kansas City won three times in the four-game series.

Yankees 5, Brewers 3

MILWAUKEE — Claudell Washington's two-out, two-run single with the bases loaded broke a seventh-inning tie.

The victory enabled the Yankees to split the four-game series with the Brewers at County Stadium. A crowd of 52,770, the Brewers' largest of the season, watched Sunday's game and 165,180 attended the four-game series.

Twins 7, Rangers 4

MINNEAPOLIS — Randy Bush doubled home the tiebreaking run in the seventh inning Sunday, leading Minnesota.

Bush's third hit of the game drove in Al Newman, who reached on a forceout and stole second, for a 5-4 lead against Jeff Russell, 0-1. Keith Atherton, 4-1, pitched three innings for the victory.

Blue Jays 3, Orioles 2

TORONTO — Garth Iorg singled home Rance Mulliniks from second base with two outs in the bottom of the ninth inning for the Blue Jays' fifth straight victory. The Orioles have lost four straight and eight of their last nine games. Iorg singled off Mike Boddicker, 5-2. Mark Eichhorn, 7-2, got the victory.

Tigers 18, Red Sox 8

BOSTON — Matt Nokes hit two homers and drove in four runs and Chet Lemon homered and drove in four runs, leading a season-high 21-hit attack. Nokes and Tom Brookens each hit three-run homers as the Tigers won for the third straight time with their highest run total of the season.

Adams wins state amateur

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Jimmy Adams fired a 3-under-par 69 Sunday and came from seven strokes behind to win the Texas Men's Amateur Championship at The Club at Sonterra.

The Beaumont golfer claimed the title with an even-par 216 for the rain-shortened 54-hole tournament. The 69 tied the north course record set by Lauren Loyd of Kerrville.

Joe Beck took second with a 218. The Austin golfer shot a 75 on Sunday.

Chad Magee of Tyler, the first- and second-round leader, closed with an 80 to finish third with a 220.

"I hit the ball about as well as I could today," said Adams, 40. "I played well on Saturday, but on four holes I just fell asleep. I felt I had a chance to shoot a 70 on Sunday."

Adams wasted little time making his move in the final round, hitting three birdies on the front nine.

"I thought mainly I could get the second or third spot," Adams said, "but when I turned at 3-under and heard the leader was 2-over I thought I had a chance."

Adams is no stranger to the top position in this tournament. He held the lead going into the final hole of the 1978 affair, only to blow it by shooting an eight on the final hole.

On Sunday, Adams drilled a 150-yard, 5-iron shot to within five feet of the pin and birdied the hole.

GENERAL— Mayor Henry Cisneros is leading a drive for a downtown San Antonio domed sports complex that supporters tout as a lure to major league sports and revenues, but critics say could be a risky venture. Cisneros is trying to persuade voters to raise the sales tax one-half cent to pay for a downtown sports dome, which could one day house a NFL franchise. Ice skating, swimming and cycling facilities could accompany the main dome....

FOOTBALL— The Bluebonnet Bowl, which lost nearly $250,000 last year, could become extinct unless a corporate sponsor is found, executive director Ted Nance says. Nance is optimistic, but adds even the 1987 Bluebonnet Bowl could be scrapped...

NCAA— Dick Schultz, 58, a soft-spoken Iowa native and University of Virginia AD, will succeed Walter Byers as executive director of the NCAA. "Dick is a natural leader," said Jim Delany, commissioner of the Ohio Valley Conference and member a member basketball committee. "He's low-key when he chairs meetings, but everyone is aware of who's in charge. He has that capacity for giving people instruction without making them feel dominated."...

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠73 ♡AQ872 ◇954 ♣654
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ♠	Pass	1 NT	Pass
2 ♠	Dbl	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—Is partner's double for penalties or takeout? Had he wanted you to bid, he would have doubled the one spade opening. Since he did not do that, his double this time is for penalties. Pass happily. With what you can contribute to the defense, you can expect a whopping penalty.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠6 ♡A8752 ◇AQ95 ♣J108
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	2 ♣	?

What action do you take?
A.—Because of a potential misfit, it is by no means certain that your side can make game. You can turn the spade shortage to your advantage by making a penalty double. On a good day, that will earn you a bonanza. At worst, it won't be too costly even if the opponents make their doubled contract, since you won't have doubled them into game.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AK98 ♡7 ◇Q1072 ♣AQJ9
What is your opening bid?
A.—Despite the discrepancy in the quality of your minor suits, the correct opening bid is one diamond—the suit below the singleton. That preserves bidding space, and gives you the best chance of assuring that you don't miss a fit.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K6 ♡952 ◇1065 ♣AJ853
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	2 ◇	?

What do you bid now?
A.—With an ace, a king and a ruffing value, you must do something, but you cannot afford to bid three clubs since that would create a game force. Whether or not you play five-card majors, you have only one choice—a raise to two hearts.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K95 ♡AJ6 ◇93 ♣AQJ72
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 NT	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—For shame, thinking we're trying to trap you. This is really no problem. Your combined holding isn't enough for slam, even if partner is maximum, and your hand is balanced. Therefore, three no trump is the only bid that should be considered.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AJ1054 ♡Q987 ◇7 ♣K94
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
Pass	Pass	1 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—This is not a question of whether you should bid three or four hearts. As a passed hand, even four hearts may not be enough. In view of the fit, your hand revalues to a full opening bid, and we suggest a jump shift of two spades. By a passed hand, that is forcing for one round. (For those who employ them, we would also accept a splinter bid of four diamonds)

'Les Miserables', 'Fences' take top honors at 41st annual Tony Awards

James Earl Jones and Linda Lavin

NEW YORK (AP) — "Les Miserables" was the big Tony Awards winner, taking eight of Broadway's top honors, including best musical, as "Fences," August Wilson's drama of a 1950s black family, won best play and three other Tonys.

"Me and My Girl" won three Tonys on Sunday, for Robert Lindsay and Maryann Plunkett as best actor and actress in a musical, and for choreographer Gillian Gregory. Lindsay plays a Cockney scamp who discovers he's a lord, in a pre-World War II London musical finally making its debut on Broadway.

"Les Miserables," also an import from London, yielded Tonys for Alain Boublil and Claude-Michel Schonberg, who in 1979 in Paris came up with the idea of turning Victor Hugo's epic novel of social injustice into a musical. They won for best book of a musical and they and Herbert Kretzmer won best score.

Michael Maguire and Frances Ruffelle took best featured actor and actress in a musical; Trevor Nunn and John Caird won for direction, and David Hersey for lighting, all for "Les Miserables."

The 41st annual awards, nationally televised on CBS and including a tribute to the late Robert Preston, capped a season in which Broadway reversed a five-year decline in attendance.

John Napier won the Tony for costume design, the only award garnered by the $8 million musical "Starlight Express," which has rollerskaters garbed as engines and cars, for a train race.

Resonant-voiced James Earl Jones won the best actor Tony for his role as a former baseball player and head of a family in "Fences," the Pulitzer Prize-winning play. Mary Alice, who plays his wife, won for best supporting actress, and Lloyd Richards for director.

Linda Lavin, who plays the mother of the budding playwright in "Broadway Bound," won her first Tony, as best actress. "I thought of nothing else for two months," she said of her anticipation. "I missed entrances and exits."

NEW YORK (AP) — Gary Hart spent nights with Donna Rice on a yacht in Bimini and at his Washington townhouse, then turned ashen-faced and coldly ended the affair when confronted about it by reporters, according to a friend of Ms. Rice's.

In cover stories published Sunday, Ms. Rice wrote in Life magazine that "I'm not a party girl," while her friend Lynn Armandt told People magazine The Miami Herald stories of the relationship between Hart and Ms. Rice were true.

"The actual truth is that some of that back-door stuff they talked about never really happened and Donna actually stayed in Gary's townhouse Friday night," Ms. Armandt said in People.

Hart quit the presidential campaign May 8, five days after the Herald's story.

Hart denied that Ms. Rice spent the night of May 1 at his Washington townhouse, saying she left through a back door and stayed, along with Ms. Armandt, at the home of his friend William Broadhurst.

Ms. Rice, 29, on the advice of her lawyer, did not write about the relationship in her bylined Life article.

"I feel like a hunted animal," Ms. Rice said. Since the story broke, she wrote, "I have averaged less than four hours sleep a night and been under a great deal of stress. I have very bad mood swings. I'll be fine and then just start crying hysterically."

According to Ms. Armandt, a 29-year-old bikini shop owner, she spent the night of May 1 at Broadhurst's house, but Ms. Rice did not.

The next night, she said, Hart called, saying reporters were outside his house and asking her and Broadhurst to come over.

"He looked pretty shaken — he was white," Ms. Armandt said.

From then on, Hart and Ms. Rice were "finito," Ms. Armandt said. "The mission was just to get her out of there. It was very cold — not even a kiss on the cheek, which really upset Donna," said Ms. Armandt. "She just didn't understand the finality of everything."

Back at Broadhurst's, Broadhurst went over the Herald account with the women.

"It wasn't like, 'We have to get the story straight,' but he said it like, 'This is what happened,'" Ms. Armandt said.

Ms. Rice, she said, "was worried about the wrong things, like how he's going to feel about her, whether he'll call again. She wasn't worried about the realistic thing that was happening, which was this huge scandal that was exploding."

The four first got together in March, Ms. Armandt said. Ms. Rice called her to say that Hart, whom she'd met in Aspen, Colo., at a New Year's party, had invited her on a cruise. She invited Ms. Armandt along.

Aboard the yacht "Monkey Business," she said, Rice and Hart "were sitting kind of close and seemed to be having a very intimate conversation." That night, at a bar, the four got on the empty bandstand and performed "Twist and Shout."

Later that night, Ms. Armandt slept in the cabin where she and Ms. Rice had stowed their bags.

"I awoke at 7 o'clock in the morning...and I was alone," she said. "There were only three guest bedrooms, and I assume she didn't sleep with Broadhurst."

Hart and Ms. Rice have said the women slept on the yacht and the men slept on another boat.

Ms. Rice, meanwhile, wrote in Life that she works diligently as a saleswoman for Wyeth Laboratories, although she is currently on leave. Her $400-a-month Miami apartment is stocked with second-hand furniture, and she goes out about one night a week.

"How many jet-setters do you know with that lifestyle?" Ms. Rice wrote. "Contrary to popular belief, I've always kept a full-time job. I'm not a party girl."

Responding to previous reports, she said her one date with Prince Albert of Monaco was a blind date, and never dated race car driver Danny Sullivan or actor Don Johnson.

NEW YORK (AP) — Journalist Ted Koppel says he has considered leaving ABC's "Nightline" for a job in the State Department, even though a diplomatic position might require him to lie.

"I've obviously thought about this some," Koppel said in an interview in the June 15 issue of Newsweek. He said working for the government would demand ethical compromise.

"Foreign policy by definition is immoral," Koppel said. "When you represent the interests of an entire nation, you are going to take actions that for an individual would be considered immoral."

Among them, Koppel says, would be lying.

LONDON (AP) — The dollar was slightly down today as markets quieted in anticipation of the summit of Western industrial powers in Venice. Gold strengthened.

Trading also was slowed by the closure of markets in many European countries due to a public holiday.

Analysts: Recession likely by '89

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some private economists are cautioning that the transition from Paul Volcker to Alan Greenspan at the Federal Reserve will not be as smooth as that when Volcker took over in 1979.

These analysts expect higher inflation this year and say there is a greater likelihood of a recession right after the 1988 election.

Volcker wasted no time taking control of the Fed from his predecessor, G. William Miller. He moved quickly to curb the rampant inflation of the time by raising a key lending rate 10 days after he took office.

Volcker had spent four years as head of the Fed's New York regional bank, a position which allowed him to learn the arcane inner workings of monetary policy. Greenspan, who last served full-time in government as chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers in the Ford administration, will not have that advantage.

"Fed policy is likely to settle into a don't-rock-the-boat approach while Greenspan is learning the ropes," said veteran Fed watcher David M. Jones of Aubrey G. Lanston & Co., a government securities firm.

Jones said even after Greenspan takes charge, he will have to contend with supply-siders on the Fed board appointed by President Reagan who are more focused on economic growth than inflation worries.

"Whatever action the Fed takes is likely to be too little, too late, to cool off the forces which are already starting to produce higher inflation," said Jones.

Because of this belief, Jones said he was now predicting consumer prices would rise between 5.5 percent and 6 percent this year, about 1 percentage point higher than he had been forecasting with a Volcker-led Fed. Consumer prices rose just 1.1 percent last year.

David Wyss, senior financial economist at Data Resources Inc., a Lexington, Mass. forecasting firm, said he believed Volcker's departure enhanced the likelihood of a recession late next year or in 1989.

"I don't think the financial markets will have enough confidence in Dr. Greenspan to allow him to walk the narrow tightrope that will be required to keep us out of a recession," Wyss said.

Not all economists are rushing to revise their economic forecasts because of the change at the Fed, however.

Lawrence Chimerine, president of Wharton Econometrics of Bala Cynwyd, Pa., said he believes the central bank will continue to pursue the same "middle-of-the-road" policies that Volcker has been pursuing for the past two years.

"The Fed doesn't have a lot of choices right now," he said. "They can't ease credit conditions dramatically because that would cause the dollar to weaken and push up interest rates. But on the other hand, the economy isn't strong enough to tighten credit."

Volcker's tight-money policies pushed the country into two recessions, a short one in 1980 and a severe downturn in 1981-82. These efforts made him so unpopular at the time that he was given Secret Service protection, but he did succeed in conquering the high inflation which had plagued the country throughout the 1970s.

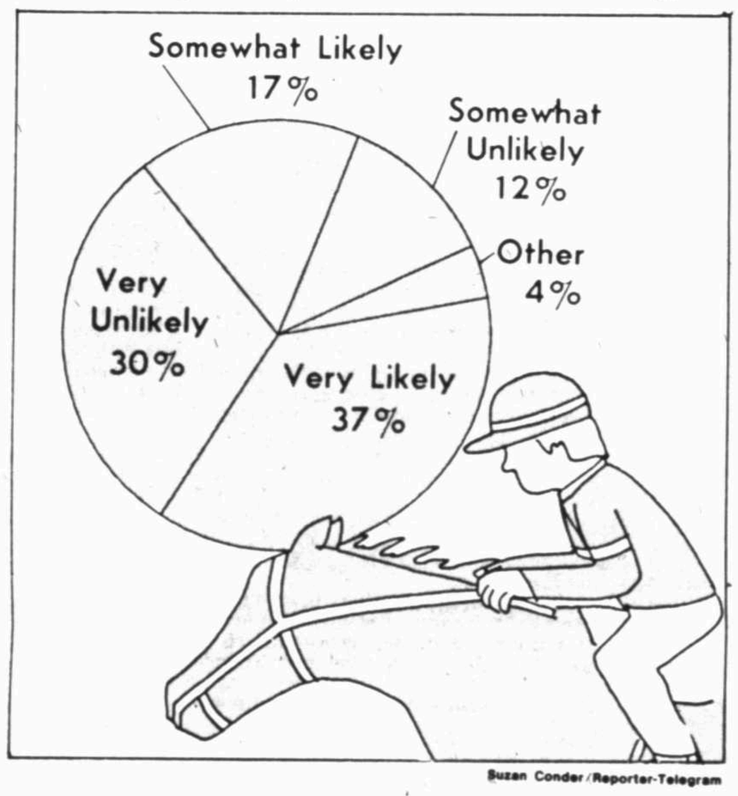
"How likely would you be to vote favorably for pari-mutuel betting"?



Buzan Conder/Reporter-Telegram

Budget cuts, betting favored balancing tools

From Staff Reports

Viable options and policy changes are urgently needed to provide predictable relief to the industries, workers, families and consumer-oriented businesses injured by the current bust cycle.

Pulse furnishes a much-needed monitoring survey of several options being considered by the State Legislature to remedy the budget deficit. Survey participants were asked how likely they would be to vote in favor of these options.

Midland respondents reacted favorably to three options, saying they would be very or somewhat likely to vote in favor of state budget cuts, a state lottery, and pari-mutuel betting.

Contrastingly, the options of a state sales tax increase and a state income tax received a public veto.

The option of state budget cuts topped out the favorable percentages at 69 percent, while a state income tax bottomed out at a mere 15 percent.

Close scrutiny of present and future trends will assist the energetic businessman in predicting and preparing for market swings and profit possibilities.

Halliburton auction draws 900 bidders

By JEFF HALL
The Duncan Banner

DUNCAN, Okla. (AP) — Standing under the hot Oklahoma sun, leaning up against International trucks or shouting out their bids, they followed the mobile auction truck as it wound its way through Halliburton's equipment yard.

For the almost 900 registered bidders, Halliburton Service's two-day equipment and truck auction — the company's 31st in the past 26 years — was drawing to a close Saturday afternoon, and it meant the list of available trucks was growing smaller and smaller.

"I've already bought one (truck) and I'm hoping to buy about four or five more," said Bob Lusk, a purchasing agent for RIC Demolition and Asbestos.

Trailing the Miller & Miller auctioneer's truck in a golf cart, Lusk said he was looking for "some heavy trucks" for RIC, a diversified equipment and storage corporation headquartered in Borger, Texas.

"We build plants and tear 'em down. We've got a 48-state trucking service, and our own supply company, which is what I'm buying them for," he said.

The equipment, trucks and cars sold at the auction were good enough, according to Halliburton officials, that the event raised more money than last year's auction, which netted Halliburton more than $3 million.

"This is the biggest auction we've ever had," said Roy Ford, purchasing manager.

"We exceeded last year by just a little bit. We had less bidders this year than last (when more than 1,400 showed up), but they were more legitimate bidders serious about buying."

Sandra Skidmore and Billy Ray Fisher were among workers manning picket lines against Bell Helicopter early this morning.

Workers reject Bell offer

FORT WORTH (AP) — United Auto Workers union members rejected a three-year contract offer Sunday and went on strike against Bell Helicopter Textron Inc.

Members of UAW Local 218 voted against the proposed contract by a 2,131 to 177 vote at Will Rogers Coliseum, said union member Sandra Skidmore. Negotiations between the workers and Bell have been ongoing since April.

The strike, beginnig at 12:01 a.m. Monday, involves all of Bell's 3,100 production and maintenance employees, said Dick Tipton, Bell spokesman. A total of 8,000 workers are employed at Bell facilities in Fort Worth and surburban Hurst, Arlington and Grand Prarie, he said.

J.J. Brichard, UAW 218 president, said he expected most of the 3,100 to participate in picketing to begin early Monday.

Facilities of Bell, which manufactures helicopters for defense and private customers, were scheduled to open at normal hours Monday and all workers were expected to show up for their normal shifts, said Edmund Szol, vice president of human resources.

Brichard said the company's proposal was "totally inadequate."

Penturbia: Nation's area of opportunity

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans are engaging in the nation's fifth major migration, turning to the smaller towns and cities and away from the metropolitan areas that have been the focus of their lives in this century, an expert in urban development says.

Penturbia, as he calls the region of new growth, is becoming the nation's area of opportunity, according to Jack Lessinger, a professor of real estate and urban development at the University of Washington in Seattle.

The shift first was noticed between 1970 and 1980, and represents a change in values, says Lessinger, as Americans move from a consuming to a conserving approach to the world.

It's a move back toward an ethic that existed many years ago, he said.

"In the 19th century, we...were a kind of society and economy interested in saving for the future and building up a vast industrial plane. We did it too well, and developed problems of overproduction," Lessinger explained in a telephone interview last week.

"As an antidote, we developed a consumption economy that put all the stress on the present rather than the future.

"Again, we went too far with that kind of economy, and as a result of the excesses of a consumer economy we have begun developing a conserving economy. It is...just beginning to manifest itself, and the penturbs are just one of the many features of the new economy," Lessinger said.

"Look for penturbia beyond the normal commuting range of the nation's central cities. It is small cities and towns, new subdivisions, homesteads, industrial and commercial districts interspersed with farms, forests, rivers and lakes," Lessinger wrote in the June edition of American Demographics, a magazine specializing in population issues.

Leading the way to this new promised land is a type of American whom Lessinger calls the "caring conserver," a person who saves and guards resources, works for preservation of air, water, buildings, parks and cultural artifacts.

His label, penturbia, is derived from the Greek word for five, because Lessinger considers the shift to be the fifth major change for America.

These conserving Americans will succeed the consumers who settled the suburbs between 1929 and 1958 in the nation's last major migration.

Before that, he contends, major national migrations included movement away from coastal cities into colonies like Vermont and the Carolinas in the 1700s; the westward movement along the Ohio and Mississippi waterways in the early 1800s; and the rapid growth of the great industrial cities in the late 19th century.

Throughout most of this century the major cities and suburbs have been the booming growth centers, Lessinger said. But now the suburbs are becoming increasingly congested, polluted and expensive, while more distant counties still provide less costly land, open spaces and more opportunities.

The new residents of penturbia will demand judicious planning to prevent runaway growth, Lessinger says. They will see the older buildings in small cities as both rich in nostalgia and less expensive than new construction.

The so-called "rural renaissance" of the 1970s is part of this process, Lessinger says.

Lessinger reports that the counties most likely to emerge as penturbia are those which grew rapidly early in the nation's history, hit a plateau between about 1850 and 1910, and then decelerated until about 1970, with particularly low growth rates between 1950 and 1970. Since then, they have grown faster than the national average.

"Counties meeting these criteria were home to only 4 percent of the 1980 population, but they are everywhere, from Shelby County in Alabama to Amador County in California," Lessinger wrote.

His report gives a few examples, but does not list all of the counties in each of the classes discussed.

In addition to primary penturbia, Lessinger says other counties will form groups he calls "secondary penturbia" and "latent penturbia."

The secondary counties have had histories similar to the primary ones, but their growth since 1970 has been less rapid.

They have strong growth potential and are heavily represented in the Mississippi Valley, he reported. Examples include counties such as Cape Girardeau, Mo., and Pike County, Miss. The group also extends to other regions, such as Grafton County, N.H.

Latent penturbia are those counties that barely grew between 1980 and 1985 but which may increase in the future as more people become caring conservers, Lessinger said.

These, he says, are counties like Caswell, N.C.; Coos, N.H., and San Miguel, N.M.

In addition to these likely growth areas, there are some "risky counties" in Lessinger's study. These, he says, include some large communities that developed in the late 19th century such as Cook County, Ill., New York and San Francisco. Also included are San Diego and some less populous areas, such as Orange County, N.Y.; Cleveland County, N.C.; Crosby County, Texas; Cimarron County, Okla.; and Aurora County, S.D.

"With land prices that are often inflated, some are destined for long-term decline. Yet others contain pockets of opportunity within broad areas of obsolescence," he writes.

Finally, there remain the suburbs, which Lessinger groups into two classes — decelerating and declining.

The decelerating suburbs are still growing, but more slowly, and include such counties a Santa Clara, Calif.; Jefferson, Colo.; and Broward, Fla.

Those already on the decline he lists as including Alameda, Calif.; Westchester, N.Y.; Mercer, N.J.; and older central cities like Oakland, Calif.

Author offers tips on keeping, finding jobs

By JAY BEAUSEIGNEUR

Hearst News Service

NEW YORK — In a world where employment security often seems every bit as unnerving as living on the San Andreas fault, John C. Crystal's voice of reason seems deceptively calm and rational.

The co-author of "Where Do I Go From Here With my Life?" with Richard N. Bolles, Crystal's 10 years of work on employment matters was made available to Bolles and provided the original inspiration and fundamentals for Bolles' "What Color Is Your Parachute?" — the all-time best-seller on obtaining and keeping the job you really want.

Crystal, now chairman of the Crystal-Barkley Corporation, a career consulting and training firm here, says that you can have the job, the career, the life you want, and there are two ways to try to do it:

"You can close your eyes and hope, or you can think it through in advance. You don't have to view it as a great endeavor. Take it a simple, obvious step at a time. Read. We are surrounded by information. The problem is that we don't always know enough, and need to learn more. Know what you'd like to do next — somebody's doing it. Everybody told Jacques Cousteau he was crazy when he started."

What about information interviewing, as innumerable job counselors and outplacement agencies advise?

"Forget it," says Crystal. "It doesn't work unless it is done right, and usually it isn't."

According to Crystal, such techniques are usually little more than clumsily disguised attempts on the part of the seeker to inverview for jobs — an easily detectable ploy.

"Real 'surveying' — and a real information interview begins by focusing on a particular interest. You know what you're interested in, probably you have 15 books on it already. If you don't know what your interests are, ask yourself which section of the newspaper you turn to first. Begin with an individual genuine interest and practice the art of gathering specific, relevant information about it. You need to do this in order to assist you in making informed decisions later. Use school or business libraries. This process has everything to do with finding work you will enjoy."

AFTER YOU'VE chosen a subject, start putting this survey technique into action. But start off easy with what Crystal calls a practice survey.

"Select a favorite hobby or pastime, but not your special one. Think of your life, not just work. Go out and survey it first. About 99 percent of our clients who do this come back walking on air — and know how to conduct a more serious survey for their work-related interests with much greater ease.

"The first step," says Crystal, "is the easiest: Deciding geographically where you want to live and work, what — if any — commuting you will tolerate, and the kind of people you want to work with.

"Then target potential organizations. If it's banking — and your choice must be a very specific area within banking — get a list of all the banks and start by eliminating the shady bankers. Cut your list of banks to 50 and start a manila folder for each bank. Find out how people who work for the company really are treated — if an executive starts screaming at a receptionist, would you really want to work there? Then cut the list to 25.

"Finally, you'll cut your list down to between six and three firms. People do get offered jobs at this stage, but you should say, 'I'm not ready.' Up to this point, you're not looking for a job. But you've discarded 175 possibilities and you've done your best to investigate each company. The competition for you now is down to three or four firms, and it's now time to go job hunting.

"Resumes are totally irrelevant. Concentrate on what the firms do that make them so attractive to you, specifically what could make them more profitable, what you could do that would be really helpful to this organization. Then present a specific business proposal to the official responsible for that activity, showing him or her precisely how you could help him or her achieve that business objective.

"The point is to teach people how to decide what they want most to do with their working lives and how to get it in spite of a horrendous employment system and the need to face constantly changing economic situations."

CRYSTAL IS adamant that traditional job hunting avenues don't work well, if at all, for anyone seeking more than just a "job."

"Ask any major company, 'How may people did you hire through want ads?' Eighty-seven percent of them never hire anyone this way. The bulk of their recommendations come from their employees and contacts. Responding to an ad is a sucker's game. Who does the hiring? The personnel department's job is to screen people out. You should only come in for an ultimate interview on employment when you can say to yourself, 'They'd be fools if they didn't hire me.'"

Crystal speaks from experience. He was a senior at Columbia University in 1941, and his first "job" during World War II was as an intelligence officer in such out-of-the-marketplace areas as North Africa. After the war, he spent a year in Austria and then decided he "had to be serious" and came home to job hunt.

Where does an "ex-spy" with seven languages turn for employment? The placement office at Columbia told him, "You are a graduate of a great university," and that was supposedly enough to open career doors. Crystal dutifully found himself answering ads, going to employment agencies, talking to recruiters, and he was offered some "crummy jobs." Time Magazine offered him a job as a beginning researcher. Another firm wanted an Italian-speaking manager, but it wasn't enough when Crystal walked in, speaking fluent Italian learned in Italy. The company irrationally insisted on having someone who had a degree in Italian.

"I started to research the American employment system and discovered that it was a tragic joke," Crystal remembers. "It's really a public health problem because it makes so many people sick."

Length of prison sentences becoming longer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal judges are cracking down harder on convicted felons, imposing sentences last year that were more than 30 percent longer than those handed down in 1979, a federal report shows.

The Justice Department's Bureau of Justice Statistics, in a report released Sunday, said the average length of federal prison sentences increased 32 percent between 1979 and 1986.

The average sentence for a drug offense was 38 percent longer last year than in 1979, while the length of a sentence for fraud was 43 percent longer.

Sentences for weapons offenses were 41 percent longer, while sentences for robbery increased 10 percent.

The report compared sentences imposed between July 1, 1978, and June 30, 1979, to sentences handed down between July 1, 1985, and June 30, 1986.

"The length of time served is related to the length of the original sentence, the nature and severity of the offense as well as offender characteristics," said Steven R. Schlesinger, director of the bureau.

Last year, 51 percent of the 40,740 people convicted of federal offenses were sentenced to prison terms, with about 73 percent receiving only prison terms rather than a combination of prison and probation.

The average prison sentence was slightly less than 5½ years, according to the report. Approximately 39 percent of those convicted received sentences of more than five years, while 16 percent were sentenced to one year or less.

On average, those convicted of homicide were sentenced to prison terms of about 16 years, excluding life sentences. The average sentence for robbery was more than 13 years.

Drug law violators, including those convicted on marijuana charges, were sentenced to an average of five years and 10 months. Excluding marijuana, the average prison sentence was six years and two months.

Thirty-seven percent of those convicted last year were sentenced to probation only and the rest paid fines or served other sentences. The average length of a straight probation sentence was nearly three years, with 33 percent sentenced to more than three years and 22 percent to one year or less.

Of the more than 24,000 offenders who left probation and parole last year, more than one in five had committed a new crime or violated the conditions for release. Sixty-two percent of those on parole and 83 percent of those on probation completed their full terms.

Revocation of parole for major new crimes in 1986 was more than twice the rate of 1979, with 15.4 percent revoked last year compared with 6.8 percent seven years ago. The number of paroles revoked peaked at 15.9 percent in 1984.

Last year, 38 percent of those who ended parole had their paroles revoked and in 15 percent of the cases they were returned to prison for major new crimes. Four percent returned for minor new violations and 19 percent for technical violations.

NOTICE OF PUBLIC HEARING

In October 1987, the School Land Board will hold an oil and gas lease sale covering state owned lands. At that time, Commissioner Mauro will offer the surface owners of mineral classified land (i.e., land subject to the Relinquishment Act) the opportunity to lease their tracts through a sealed bid procedure. If you are unsure if your land qualifies, call the Classification Clerk at (512) 463-5153.

This procedure will not negate a surface owner's agency rights. As the State's agent, the surface owner will execute the lease on terms which he priviously has indicated will be acceptable. The surface owner will be subject to all duties and obligations imposed by law.

This service is free of cost to surface owners. Bidders are required to pay a fee to defray administrative costs. For further information, contact the GLO at (512) 463-5022 or at 1700 N. Congress, Room 642, Austin, Texas 78701.
