It's still winter — in Midland and the Midwest

Cold winds contribute icy overcoat

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

After a week of wondering if winter weather would hit the Permian Basin as it had elsewhere in the state earlier in the week, Midlanders have no doubt now.

Thanks to Mother Nature and the layer of ice she spread over the Tall City, hazardous driving conditions resulted in some 50 minor accidents in the area during a 24-hour period ending at 6 a.m. today, according to the Midland Police Department. Also, the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport reported a new record low temperature for Midland this morning.

All Midland public and private schools were closed today, as well as many in area towns. Lamesa and Big Spring schools were to open late, while only Odessa, Andrews, Crane and Garden City were continuing their usual schedules.

Midland County Courthouse and the county library were closed due to slick roads and icy conditions. No classes were held at Midland College and many local day care centers also were closed.

Several commercial flights had taken off early this morning, but no air carrier arrivals had been made at Midland Regional Airport, probably due to worse conditions at other terminals, according to Col. Wilson Banks. Only one airline in Midland had canceled a flight by press time this morning.

"The runways are quite slippery and the braking is quite poor," Banks said this morning. "Of course, it (cancellation of flights) is up to the discretion of the airlines."

According to a spokesman for the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation in Odessa, "the roads are slick everywhere.

"We've had reports of ice as far down as Fort Stockton."

Sanding of bridges and major intersections began early this morning.

The NWS was calling for continued cloudiness tonight with a slight chance of freezing drizzle mixed with snow. Snow accumulations of less that one inch and glaze forming on streets and highways will cause hazardous driving conditions.

It will be a little colder tonight, turning partly cloudy and warmer on Saturday. The low tonight is expected to drop into the lower teens, with the high on Saturday climbing into the middle 30s.

Winds will be northeasterly at 10-15 mph tonight, becoming easterly to southeasterly at 10-15 mph on Saturday. Probability of precipitation is 20 percent tonight and Saturday.

This morning's low of 11 degrees set a new record for the date. The previous record was 15 degrees, set in 1979. Thursday's high of 26 was 52 degrees colder than the record high of 78, set in 1951.

Freezing rain and snow was reported in portions of North Texas, the Panhandle and as far south as the San Angelo area today as a cold front pushed its way southward.

A similar scrape

Like most Midlanders, Pat Mahaney had to scrape her away through a thick coating of ice on her windshield before she could drive to work downtown. The ice and snow moved into Midland Thursday afternoon and continued most of the night, making driving conditions extremely hazardous. Relief is expected Saturday with warmer temperatures. Mrs. Mahaney, who moved to Midland a year ago from Spearman in the Panhandle, says she likes the cold weather.

New front sweeps snow into nation

By The Associated Press

A new cold front brought the Rockies weather fit only for skiing and put the Midwest on warning for another onslaught of subzero cold and snow.

The storm dumped new snow over the northern Rockies today and the band was heading toward the upper Plains to the northern Great Lakes.

Moisture rising off the Great Salt Lake wafted and froze into snow that sprinkled the northerwestern corner of Utah, the National Weather Service said. Up to 15 inches of new snow fell on the Alti ski resort east of Salt Lake City, and a fresh blanket of powder covered storm-buffeted Illinois.

Winds whipping to 80 mph as recorded by the University of Utah sent the wind-chill factor to 50 below in Bountiful in northern Utah.

At least death was blamed on the latest cold wave. Authorities in Lawton, Okla., today found the frozen body of an 85-year-old woman who wandered away from a nursing home clad only in a thin nightgown.

Every major weather recording station in Montana had double-digit readings of below zero by Thursday night. The readings did not include windchill, which is factored by combining temperatures and wind velocity.

The weather service said the upper Plains could expect the freeze to last at least through the end of the week.

Renewed storms have left two feet of fresh snow over parts of Missouri and residents were told to brace for more. The heaviest snowfall was in a band from Kansas City to an area between Hanibal and St. Louis.

High Frontier project would escalate U.S. defense

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

A former director of the U.S. Defense Intelligence Agency unveiled a plan Thursday night that would literally place the United States defense system above that of the Soviets. Not only would the project be less costly than current defense plans, including the MX missile, but it could be in place in two years.

Retired Lt. Gen. Daniel O. Graham released the elementary ideas behind his High Frontier project to a sparse group at Midland Country Cub. Also being sponsored by the Texas Policy Institute was retired Brig. Gen. Albion "Al" Knight, who has spent 30 years in the research, development, operation and strategic policy of nuclear weapons.

Not only would the plan place the defense system in outer space, but it would open up a new frontier for industrial uses, including drug manufacturing, according to Graham.

Noting that the High Frontier project had been kept out of the news until today, Graham said he began the project by gathering $250,000 and technical minds. After several months of study, the conclusion came down to the fact that placing missiles on satellites could eliminate Soviet rockets on their way to hitting another country. It was not only feasible, but would put the U.S. ahead in the defense game, without a huge expenditure by the American taxpayers.

"It's not just a wild-eyed dream of two army generals. We made sure the aerospace industry has had a good look at it."

"The projectiles would strike the Soviet missiles on the rise. Any nuclear fallout will fall back on the Soviets."

ALTHOUGH BOTH former military men support President Reagan on many issues, both disagreed with his handling of defense.

In trying to match the Soviets on their defense machinery output, the U.S. is playing a "tail-chase" game, said Graham.

"We're not churning out weapons systems; the Soviet union is," he said, citing studies which show that while the U.S. is producing 400 tanks a year, the Soviet Union is manufacturing 4,400. And Knight noted that "missiles are coming out of the USSR like sausages."

And to make a tank requires "cast turrets," which Graham said can't be produced without help from the Japanese or Germans.

But the U.S. holds a distinct advantage over the Soviet Union, and that is in "miniaturization," according to Graham. "The most serious problem in space is how much it costs you to put something out there." With miniaturization techniques perfected by Texas Instruments, the U.S. is way ahead in this game, he added.

BASICALLY, THE principle calls for placing non-nuclear missiles on satellites in space. When the Soviet Union launches a rocket, it must go up into space before it heads downward to the target, explained Knight. These U.S. missiles would destroy the Soviet rocket on its way up into space, or on its way down.

Cost of putting such a system into operation is estimated at $13 billion, said Knight. This falls short, in comparison, to what he listed as the $60 to $80 billion needed to put the MX pro-

Decision on parking garage revenue bonds again delayed

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Midland will have to wait longer than expected to find out whether the Texas Industrial Commission will approve $13 million in tax-exempt industrial revenue bonds for a parking facility downtown.

Last week, TIC reported that the application by Midland Development Corp. had been received but that it could not be acted upon because the corporation didn't include the required $1,500 filing fee.

This week, TIC reported it doesn't even have the application.

TIC staff members met Thursday to consider the application — and found out the application hasn't been sent by attorneys Vinson & Elkins.

Or rather, the application had been sent — but was not supposed to have been sent.

What occurred, TIC spokesperson Cheryl Rummel says, is that a courier picked up the wrong application from the law office and took it to the TIC.

The attorneys, she says, "didn't intend to send it over," which is why the application never arrived with the check.

So the application has now gone back to the attorneys.

"Technically," Rummel says, "we never received it."

County's first case of rabies this year confirmed in skunk

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

The unusual death of a skunk along South Midkiff Road late last week has led to the first confirmed case of rabies in Midland County in 1982.

The confirmation came Tuesday from the State Department of Health in Austin following examination of the animal's head.

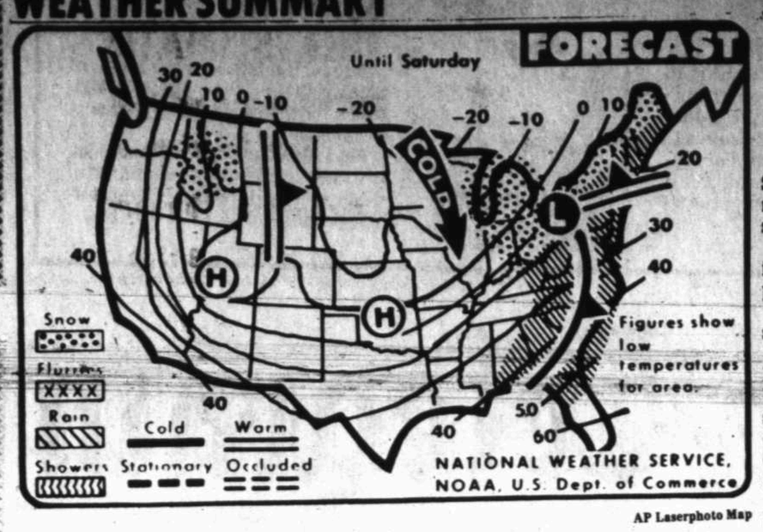

Veterinarian Greg Adkins was contacted last week by a man and his wife who live on South Midkiff approximately four miles south of Interstate 20 after they feared the skunk may have been rabid. The woman, said Adkins, had discovered the animal in their barn and noted its unusual lack of fear toward her. When her husband went out to shoot it, he said, he found the creature had walked about two feet and died.

Adkins said when he couldn't see any sign of external injury, he decided to send the animal's head to Austin for tests, since the couple are running cattle and horses on their land. Officials found a "very positive case of rabies," he said.

The last time any residents of Midland County had to be treated for exposure to rabies was in late September and early October, said public health nurse Helen Steck of Midland County Health Department. Five persons received treatment, all stemming from a rabid fox in the Midkiff area which

Senate restricts judges' authority to bus

By BILL PETERSON
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — In its first test on controversial social issues this year, the Senate Thursday overwhelmingly approved legislation that would severely restrict the authority of federal judges to order busing to desegregate public schools.

The measure, approved 58-38, would prohibit courts from ordering the busing of students more than five miles or 15 minutes from their homes for the purpose of integration.

It includes a retroactive provision that could lead to the overturning of scores of existing court-ordered busing plans around the nation.

The amendment, sponsored by Sens. Bennett Johnston, D-La., and Jesse Helms, R-N.C., is the most stringent anti-busing legislation ever approved by either chamber of Congress. It also would prohibit the Justice Department from pursuing any school integration plan that involves busing.

The vote marked the opening round of what is expected to be a series of confrontations this year over the so-called conservative social issues, such as abortion, school prayer and the death penalty.

But it is unclear whether the anti-busing amendment, which is attached to a Justice Department authorization bill, will ever become law.

A small band of opponents, led by Sen. Lowell Weicker, R-Conn., vowed to continue delaying tactics to prevent final passage of the measure which they maintain is a blantantly unconstitutional attempt by Congress to infringe on the powers of the judiciary.

Weicker Thursday charged that the amendment is part of an "absolute rout" of America's commitment to civil rights during the Reagan era. "There is no end to this mischief once it starts," he said.

Weicker, who has been filibustering against busing since June, pounded his fists rapidly on his desk, and declared the bill "will not become law... The constitution of this country is going to be exactly the same on Dec. 31, 1982, as it is today."

Speaking before an almost empty Senate chamber, he heatedly added that it was time his colleages "show your face not your butt to the world."

Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., said he had opposed busing in Detroit, but he believes it has worked in some other areas. "I dislike busing, but I like the Constitution even more," he added.

Johnston, the only senator to speak on behalf of the amendment, accused critics of trying to obscure debate by talking about "courage and the Constitution" instead of busing.

"There is a reason my opponents don't defend busing," he declared. "There is no evidence to support it."

"Long distance busing is a leach on the educational system of this country," Johnston added moments later. "Public support for education is gone with long distance busing."

The Louisana Democrat said the amendment would "improve education" and aid integration efforts. "Basically, the neighborhood school system works the best."

The amendment was supported by 20 Democrats and 38 Republicans. Twenty-five Democrats and 13 Republicans, most from the northeastern and midwestern states, voted against it.

"The people prevailed," Helms said after the vote. A final vote on the authorization bill is expected next week, although Weicker claimed he has prepared 300 amendments to further delay action.

The House last year approved a less stringent amendment to the same authorization bill which would prohibit the Justice Department from entering any action that would require the busing of any child beyond a neighborhood school.

Under the Senate amendment, the Justice Department is authorized to go into court to overturn any existing busing plan where students are bused more than the proposed limit of five miles or 15 minutes from their home. To do so, however, the attorney general would first have to receive a written complaint from parents in affected areas.

This could call into question scores of existing court-ordered busing p ns. School officials Thursday contended that any effort to overturn these p ns would disrupt schools and reopen wounds long thought healed.

Man holds hostages in hospital

By LES SEAGO
Associated Press Writer

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — A man whose son died of leukemia in 1980 while under the care of a prominent cancer specialist held the doctor and two others hostage today, one day after walking into a hospital with a large-caliber pistol.

Dr. Paul Bowman, an expert on leukemia, was taken hostage with a nurse and a psychologist in an examination room Thursday afternoon.

Jean Claude Goulet, about 35, seized the hostages while most of the hospital employees were attending ceremonies marking the founding of St. Jude Children's Research Hospital 20 years ago by entertainer Danny Thomas, authorities said.

"He's been smoking a marijuana cigarette," police Chief Inspector A. L. Williams said early today. "He's calm now. He's sort of mellow."

Hospital spokesman Jerry Chipman said Goulet's 8-year-old son, Robert, died of leukemia in December 1980 after being treated at St. Jude.

Police and hospital officials said Goulet was a Canadian native who now lives in LaPlace, La., about 25 miles west of New Orleans. Goulet's ex-wife, Phyllis Goulet, who lives at Wapakoneta, Ohio, with two other children, was called to Memphis.

Mrs. Goulet said she tried to warn Bowman, her son's favorite doctor, when her ex-husband became depressed on the anniversary of the boy's death while visiting the family during the Christmas holidays. She said she was never able to reach Bowman and then quit trying the next day when her ex-husband got over his depression.

"He didn't like St. Jude," she said. "He doesn't like anything anymore."

The hostages in addition to Bowman, chief of the hospital's leukemia service, were identified as nurse Jean Marie Cox and psychologist Joe Cummings. A fourth hostage, Dr. George Marten, 64, a psychiatrist, was released about five hours after being taken prisoner.

Hospital employees said the ordeal began Thursday afternoon when most of the workers were attending the anniversary ceremonies.

Thomas founded the hospital to fulfill a pledge he made to his patron saint when his career became successful. The hospital specializes in research into catastrophic diseases of children, particularly leukemia.

Jane McNeeley, an employee of the hospital's chemical laboratory, said Goulet entered the hospital, pulled a large-caliber pistol and forced a secretary to have Bowman and the others paged.

The gunman forced the four into Marten's examining room, a windowless 8-by-8-foot cubicle on the first floor of the hospital.

Police tactical squad officers armed with shotguns and wearing flak jackets cleared that wing of the hospital. The first floor houses an out-patient clinic that was crowded with patients just a few hours before Goulet's arrival.

But hospital employees said only a few patients were present when Goulet took his hostages, and none was close to the room where the gunman was barricaded.

Williams said Goulet was calm, although occasionally irrational. He said his officers were talking with the gunman on a telephone.

Guns stolen from car, Curtis Mathes

In relatively light criminal activity reported to police during the past 24 hours, Vicente Villarrea Jr. of 3908 Pleasant said someone broke a window on his vechicle Thursday and took three guns worth $525.

And an employee of the Curtis Mathes store in the Imperial Shopping Center told officers seven guns of undetermined value were stolen from the store sometime in mid-January.

Fire of undetermined origin destroyed two rooms and a garage of the Olivia Sellers residence, CR-160 and FM 1788, about 5 a.m. Thursday. Five fire department units responded to the call and spent more than two hours on the scene.

Shortly before 9 a.m. Thursday, a fire caused by a child playing with a cigarette lighter did moderate damage to the living room carpet in the home of Albert Salias home, 609 E. Cuthbert.

County's first case of rabies this year confirmed in skunk infected family pets, she said.

Adkins warned landowners to be on guard against further outbreaks of rabies. "It is common not only in dogs and cats, but even more so in horses and cattle, and it would be a good idea for people in that area (South Midkiff Road) who have not had their horses and cattle vaccinated to do so," he said.

The veterinarian added that the most rabies-prone period of the year is approaching, and that any unusual behavior by a wild animal is cause for concern. "There are two forms of rabies," he explained. "An animal doesn't have to be chasing after someone or foaming at the mouth, because there's a form called dumb rabies, in which the animal's just lying around and not showing fear of humans."

Adkins said persons especially should keep an eye on skunks. "They are known carriers, and people ought to be careful if they run into them," he said.

Project would escalate missile system

gram on the tracks.

In light of the receding economy and high deficit, Knight illustrated this idea as making more sense than the MX missile or even B-1 bomber. "You can't reduce taxes and the deficit and increase defense at the same time."

Added Knight: "The way we've been doing it (defense) won't work. This is a way of survival with freedom."

Graham noted the idea isn't new, but has been suggested as far back as World War II. One scientist working on the High Frontier project also worked on the Manhattan Project during the war, said Graham, and the man produced a document which revealed the idea had been presented to the Germans. It resurfaced during the late 1970s, Graham added.

"IT'S NOT JUST a wild-eyed dream of two army generals," said Knight. "We made sure the aerospace industry has had a good look at it. One company was skeptical at first, but they studied it and said not only would it work, but it would work better than we thought."

Few new parts would have to be manufactured, said Knight. "It would be an engineering job of taking things out and putting them together for a different use. A sensor would be the primary new part to be manufactured.

"You can put it into space today without inventing anything. The projectiles would strike the Soviet missiles on the rise. Any nuclear fallout will fall back on the Soviets," said Graham.

Currently, the U.S. falls behind the Soviets in defense. Graham said that NORAD used to be the major headquarters for defense in the country. "It has been reduced to a subordinate chunk of the forces. It's no longer truly operative."

Maintenance of these satellites would involve a small plane similar to a Lear jet, which is being tested at Edwards Air Force Base in California, according to Knight.

He explained the small aircraft can be launched into space "from the belly of a 747 in flight. It can go out to the moon and back and land on the ground. This thing is fast. A mission would cost less than $1 million." And if the government doesn't want to get involved, Knight said, "there is some commercial interest in this."

THE PLAN, essentially, would get the U.S. out of the Soviet blackmail, the men agreed.

But stronger defense wouldn't be the only outcome of the High Frontier project.

Graham, in hiring "the best talent in the country" to work on the project, came across a Dr. Peter Glasser. "He introduced another aspect — there's enormous industrial potential in space. It would open up a whole other industry as big or bigger than the aviation industry. By 1990, it will be a bigger industry in revenues than the auto industry.

"A new frontier has opened," Graham said.

Continuing, he noted that while space can solve the military aspects, "it opens up a potential for industry that is the essence of High Frontier."

Already, Johnson & Johnson is investigating how space can aid in drug production for several reasons, according to Graham.

In the first place, space is a vacuum, "and it's expensive to create a vacuum on earth." Space also is germ-free and "you don't worry about polluting rivers. Heat can be released into the unlimited void of space," he added.

Clem Barnes, who arranged the meeting in Midland, mentioned that "metallurgical applications in space are limitless. Space adds a whole new technology to metallurgy."

DESPITE THE space program in the 1960s, Graham contended that, "So far, we haven't really been serious about space. There's been nothing to expand the military or industrial uses. Now it's time to move on and exploit what we've done."

The defense plan, said Knight, has been presented in theory to high officials at the Pentagon and to Alexander Haig, secretary of defense. All were interested, he noted, but wanted further studies to prove the theory...thus the High Frontier project.

The two men who have spent their lives studying the military and defense of the country are taking their plan to the people in an effort to gather grassroots support. The major kickoff comes tonight and Saturday with a conference at Galveston. Sponsored by the Texas Policy Institute, the talks will center on "The Defense of America: From Assured Destruction to Assured Survival."

Speakers will include U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C.; U.S. Rep. James Santini, R-Nev.; George Strake, Republican candidate for state lieutenant governor; Knight; Graham; David O. Sullivan, former CIA security analyst; Gen. Allen Slay, USAF (ret.), former chief of staff of the U.S. 8th Army in Korea.

The Texas Policy Institute, based in Houston, was organized to build an agenda of ideas from experts and outside the muddle of Washington, D.C., according to Knight. These ideas, in turn, will be given to President Reagan.

Midland police don't kid around

Midland police weren't kidding when they said they'd vigorously enforce the state's new automobile liability insurance law.

In the month of January alone, police issued 366 tickets to motorists who allegedly failed to comply with the law, which calls for minimum liability coverage and went into effect Jan. 1.

At a state-prescribed fine of $75 for first offenders, the 366 tickets have generated a potential of $27,450 for city coffers. A second offense calls for a $200 fine, while the cost of liability insurance for most drivers is about $150.

Instructor says he was threatened, beaten

SAN DIEGO (AP) — A junior Marine Corps drill instructor said he was threatened and beaten unconscious after identifying the instructor who allegedly kicked a swimming recruit.

Sgt. Daniel G. O'Leary testified Thursday at a pretrial hearing that after identifying Gunnery Sgt. Rudy Rodriguez he was beaten by four men at a local club frequented by off-duty Marines.

The incident occurred Aug. 27, the day Rodriguez was accused of not acting quickly enough to save a recruit from drowning.

Rodriguez was cleared of a manslaughter charge in previous investigations in the death of Pvt. Randall Christian of Dallas during the tests that day at the Marine Corps Recruit Depot.

O'Leary told Lt. Col. C.R. Strichter, who will decide if a court-martial is warranted, that he saw Rodriguez break the water with his foot in kicking a private as he swam toward the bulkhead.

'Starbird' postponed due to weather

Tonight's performance of "Starbird," a one-act fantasy opera presented by the Texas Opera Theatre, has been postponed due to bad weather.

The performance may be rescheduled, according a spokesman for Midland College, which is sponsoring the TOT workshop this week.

Congress greets Stockman with chilly reaction

Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Budget Director David A. Stockman took President Reagan's New Federalism to Congress for the first time Thursday and met with a chilly reaction, with hostile Democrats and nervous Republicans both worrying that some states would lose money on the deal.

Stockman failed to dispel fears that particularly some industrial states with high welfare benefits would eventually come up short under the major shifting of social programs prescribed in the Reagan plan.

Stockman, who testified before the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, was making his own first formal appearance in Congress since the furor last fall over his remarks in an Atlantic magazine interview and he took some lumps about that episode during the questioning.

Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, cited the Atlantic magazine article, by Washington Post assistant managing editor William Greider, which said that an Office of Management and Budget computer had been rigged to present a more favorable view of the impact of Reagan's first budget. "We found out (in the article) that we were willfully misled," Glenn said.

Stocman said Greider had misunderstood that part of the interviews with him. "There is no central computer at OMB that I could tinker with," he said. "It would take a bureaucratic Houdini to do that. The notion that anyone was misled or deceived or that anything was rigged is utterly without foundation."

Though Stockman's New Federalism testimony came only a week after Reagan laid out his plan, it appeared the administration is in no great hurry to send a specific proposal for the complex reordering of federal-state responsibilities to Capitol Hill. Administration sources said the full legislative program will probably be proposed to Congress in April or May.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Herpes infection usually calls for Caesarean

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have had herpes since I was 15 years old. Now I'm 19 and pregnant. Could my baby get herpes from me? M.L., Charlotte.

Dear M.L.: There is a possibility that your baby could be affected if you have a herpes infection of the genital area during delivery. For that reason, many women experiencing such infections at the end of their pregnancies have Caesarean sections. I would recommend that you discuss this condition with your obstetrician and work along with him to insure the safety of your baby.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have been attending an aerobic dance class for several months. Now I believe that I may be pregnant, but haven't seen an obstetrician yet. If I am pregnant, does that mean I have to give up the aerobic dancing? Frances, Miami Beach.

Dear Frances: Aerobic dancing does not seem to be harmful to most pregnant women, but that does not mean that all pregnant women can safely participate in such a program. If you are pregnant, your obstetrician will be able to advise you on the best course of action in your particular case. Some pregnant women find it difficult to continue exercise because of the amount of weight they gain. In general, however, aerobic exercise is not contra-indicated. Dr. David A. Leaf, Portland, Ore., found that one group of more than 60 pregnant women who exercised for one hour three times a week showed a substantial increase in their work capacities when compared with a control group of nonpregnant women who did not exercise.

Babies born to mothers who exercise show no significant differences when compared with babies born to mothers who do not exercise. Morever, mothers who exercise seem to have shorter periods of labor.

Dear Dr. Solomon: A friend of mine who is studying in London writes me that, when a woman is charged with a crime, the law there may take into account the fact that the crime occurred during the woman's menstrual period — in other words, that whatever she did was due to her period. From a medical standpoint, it doesn't seem to make sense. Have you heard of this? Ruth, Montgomery, Ala.

Dear Ruth: I understand that British courts do attach some weight to what is referred to as the "premenstrual syndrome." I am also informed that the condition is not recognized as a mitigating factor in courts in the United States.

Dr. Katharina Dalton, of University College Hospital in London, discussed the premenstrual syndrome in a speech she gave in the United States. She described it as characterized by low blood progesterone levels, and maintained that it causes bizarre and violent behavior in some women, especially when they've gone without eating for extended periods of time.

Dr. Dalton supported her theory by noting that almost one-half of more than 150 women who were incarcerated had been found to have committed their crimes either shortly before or during their menstrual periods. However, even if the premenstrual syndrome did account for antisocial behavior, it would be very difficult to prove.

Real property taxes due when paid

This is the fifth in a series of tax tip articles sponsored as a public service by the Texas Society of Certified Public Accountants.

Q. If I sell some real property on an installment sale and don't receive all of the sales price in the year of sale, when are the income taxes due?

A. Taxpayers may enjoy an important tax advantage when selling real property or with an occasional sale of personal property. The gross profit from the sale is included in taxable income only as the payments are received. Thus, the income taxes are due only as the income is received.

To qualify for this favorable tax treatment, part or even all of the sales price must be received after the year of sale. There is no minimum selling price. Additionally, the old rule limiting receipts to a maximum of 30 percent of the sales price in the year of sale has been revised. The current rule permits receipt of any percentage of the sales price in the year of sale as long as any part of the sales price is received after the year of sale.

The recognition of income an installment sale as the payments are received is mandatory. However, if it is determined that it would be better to recognize all the income in the year of sale even though part of the sales price is to be received after the year of sale, an election may be made to recognize all of the income immediately.

The installment sales rules apply only to gains. Losses must be recognized in the year of sale.

For more information on this and other income tax questions, attend the "You and Your Income Tax" class sponsored by the Permian Basin Chapter of the Texas Society of Certified Public Accountants. The class, scheduled for Thursday from 6:30 to 10 p.m., is presented as a public service.

Classes will be held at Midland College in the Allison Fine Arts Building. A $2 per person fee will be charged. To register mail $2 and your name and address to Taxpayer Education, P.O. Box 151, Midland, Texas 79702 before Feb. 8. Pre-registration is encouraged, but walk-ins will be accepted.

A 1979 file photo of the Consumers Power Company's Palisades Nuclear Plant near South Raven, Mich. The plant was the scene of a hydrogen gas explosion Thursday afternoon. The explosion occurred in the non-nuclear part of the plant and there was no radiation leak. Early reports said only one person, Robert Sherman 33, of South Haven was hospitalized with injuries.

'Freak accident' damages nuclear power plant

COVERT, Mich. (AP) — A hydrogen gas explosion that blew out the windows and doors of a portion of a nuclear power plant and seriously injured an electrician in a "freak accident" will keep the plant closed for several weeks, the utility says.

The explosion Thursday occurred in an area separated from the nuclear reactor at the trouble-plagued Palisades plant and no radiation was released, Consumers Power Co. said.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission will not investigate the blast because it took place "in conventional power plant equipment which has nothing to do with the nuclear side," said Jan Strasma, the NRC spokesman in Chicago. "It's basically a company problem."

Consumers did not say exactly when the plant would reopen, only that it would be several weeks.

The accident occurred in the early afternoon. The plant was not in operation because, earlier that morning, a valve in the cooling tower malfunctioned and a water pump "tripped off," shutting down the reactor, Consumers spokesman Kelly Farr said.

The hydrogen ignited and blew up after the gas leaked from an electrical generator, said Bruce Jorgensen, the NRC's resident inspector at the plant.

It was not immediately known what caused the leak or what ignited the gas, Jorgensen said. He said it could have been touched off by a spark from equipment that provides a magnetic field enabling the hydrogen gas-cooled generator to produce electricity.

The plant is on Lake Michigan about 160 miles west of Detroit.

The windows and doors of a steel "tent-like enclosure" that covers the generator blew out and caused a fire that plant workers estinguished, said Sgt. Jim Carol of the Michigan State Police.

Debris ruptured a line that supplies cooling water to the magnetic equipment and some spilled into the lower level of the building, causing two of the four pumps that provide cooling water to the reactor to shut off, Strasma said. He said there are backup systems that can take over the reactor pumping.

Robert Sherman, 33, of South Haven, was hospitalized in serious condition Thursday night in Kalamazoo with broken bones and lung bruises, officials said.

"That was kind of a freak accident ... Our employee Sherman was on his lunch hour and happened to be walking by when there was a hydrogen leak. The door (that was blown out) pinned him against the wall," said Burl Fenner, the controller for Sherman's company, Newkirk Electrical Associates Inc. of Muskegon.

Palisades has been plagued by problems since it was built in 1971.

The day before the blast, plant officials declared an "unusual event" when a malfunctioning indicator showed a water tank to contain less than the federally required amount of water, Farr said. The tank, which holds 280,000 gallons for emergency cooling of the reactor, actually was filled to the proper level and the event was over within 67 minutes, he said.

Inmates stab racist Franklin

By WILLIAM C. REMPEL
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

CHICAGO — Avowed white racist and convicted sniper killer Joseph Paul Franklin was recovering Thursday from multiple stab wounds inflicted by fellow inmates at the federal penitentiary in Marion, Ill.

Authorities told the Los Angeles Times that the attack was racially motivated.

Franklin, who is serving life sentences for the killing of two black youths in Salt Lake City, is considered the prime suspect in the 1980 sniper wounding of former National Urban League President Vernon Jordan Jr. in Fort Wayne, Ind. The one-time member of the Ku Klux Klan and the American Nazi Party is also suspected of a series of sniper attacks on blacks across the country.

The FBI, which is investigating the prison assault, disclosed only limited details. Franklin was stabbed 15 times in the neck and abdomen shortly after dinner Wednesday night, only three days after being transferred to the Penitentiary in southern Illinois from a federal detention facility in Missouri, according to agent Bob Grooms.

A crude, homemade, ice pick-type weapon was recovered and investigators have one suspect, the agent said, refusing to identify the inmate by name or race.

But another law-enforcement official who asked not to be identified gave this account to the Times:

After dinner, when the cell doors were open, allowing inmates to mingle in a common area or move from cell to cell, Franklin was lured into one of the neighboring cells. He reportedly was accompanied there by friends, but they were overpowered. They said the attack "was racially motivated" and well-planned.

Ten racially motivated sniper killings have been attributed to Franklin, 31, by authorities in several states. The killings occurred during a 10-month period in 1979 and 1980. Last fall Franklin was convicted of killing the two Salt Lake City youths.

Last fall he received life sentences in both federal and state courts following convictions for murder and civil-rights violations in the sniper killings of the Salt Lake City youths.

The Alabama native still faces prosecution in Indianapolis and Oklahoma City, where formal murder charges are pending, and is under investigation in Johnstown, Pa., and Cincinnati for sniper killings of blacks.

Prosecution: Williams dislikes poor blacks

By LEE MAY
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

ATLANTA — After calling more than 100 witnesses in 19 days, prosecutors in the Wayne B. Williams murder trial rested their case Thursday with testimony that portrayed the 23-year-old black defendant as a habitual liar who disliked poor blacks so much that he was driven to kill them.

The prosecution's strongest attempt so far to establish race and economic level as a motive came as ambulance driver Bobby Toland, who is white, testified that Williams, a freelance photographer and self-styled music promoter, seemed to be "ashamed of lower class blacks."

On one occasion, Toland testified, Williams, who sometimes photographed accidents, asked "Had I ever considered how many blacks could be eliminated by doing away with (just) one male child."

Toland said that Williams had statistics on reproduction among black males and projections on population, and that discussions with Williams made him uncomfortable.

In an emotional end to the day's proceedings, Sharon Blakely, a music promoter who said she knew and liked Williams, reinforced earlier testimony about Williams' contempt for poor black youngsters and concluded that "I really feel that Wayne Williams killed somebody. And I'm sorry."

Blakely, whose husband also testified Thursday, said that after Williams became a murder suspect she asked him whether he would confess if enough evidence were presented against him. She testified that Williams answered yes.

Williams, arrested last June 21, is on trial for the murders of Nathaniel Cater, 27, and Jimmy Ray Payne, 21, two of the last three young blacks among 28 whose deaths are being investigated by a special police and FBI task force.

Prosecutors contend that Williams killed Cater and Payne as part of a "pattern" that fits other killings on the list. Other victims on that list share the characteristics of poverty, street wisdom and intense desire to earn cash, the prosecution claims. Their quest for fast money made them vulnerable to being lured into danger, prosecutors have argued.

But it was not until recently that the prosecution added a motive to its argument.

After introducing the issue of homosexuality, through several witnesses who testified that the defendant offered them money to commit homosexual acts, the prosecution added the race factor.

And knowing that their case is circumstantial, prosecutors, through their final witnesses, leaned heavily on that factor, hoping that the preponderence of such testimony would weigh in their favor.

Eustis Blakely, an electrical engineer who runs a jewelry store with his wife Sharon, testified that he, like his wife, was fond of Williams. But he also recalled that Williams showed great contempt for poor black children, to whom he referred as "grunchins" and "dropshots."

Throughout the six-week-old trial, the prosecution has also attempted to prove that Williams is a liar. That effort was aided by Blakely's testimony Thursday that Williams told him he flew jet planes for the Air Force Reserve.

Blakely, who said he himself has been a pilot, said he knew that the bespectacled Williams' vision would not allow him to be a pilot, but he often did not challenge Williams' stories. "I don't think he liked to be challenged and proven wrong," said Blakely, adding "he was an enigma."

Such testimony is part of what the defense must weigh in deciding whether to put Williams in the witness chair. If he does testify, the prosecution likely will attempt to show conflicts in stories he has told to investigators.

It is also possible that prosecutors will confront Williams with statements he made during his press conference on last June 4. A tape of that conference has been played for the jury.

Asked by reporters then what he thought of the string of killings that plagued this city over a two-year period, Williams said some of the city's youth were "just running around in the streets wild...

"That's not giving anybody a license to kill, but you're opening yourself up for all kinds of things. I just feel some of these parents just need to tighten up and get strict on these kids."

Debt-ridden Laker Air out of business

By JEFF BRADLEY
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Sir Freddie Laker, knighted for his pioneering low-cost flights across the Atlantic, said today his Laker Airways was out of business because of insurmountable debts of more than $350 million.

Flights were turned back and passengers were stranded. Tears flowed from Laker staff, proudly wearing the airline's crimson and black uniforms, at Gatwick Airport south of London.

"It's hit everyone mate — like a smack in the mouth," said one counter attendant among the 2,500 Laker employees who will join the 3 million already jobless in Britain, 12.7 percent of the work force.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, who recommended Laker for knighthood and often cited him as a shining example of how free enterprise triumphs, was "sad" after hearing of the collapse, a spokesman at 10 Downing St. said.

A Laker flight that had left Manchester for Tenerife just before the morning announcement turned around and returned to England.

TWO HUNDRED other Manchester passengers were stopped from boarding a Laker jet for Miami and had to return duty-free goods bought only minutes earlier.

At Laker's main ticket office outside London's Victoria train station, manager Mike Bridges read the following notice to stunned passengers:

"We are now in the hands of the official receiver. Until we have had some instruction from the official receiver, we cannot trade."

Bridges said he was "shattered" by the news.

Passengers who had reserved package vacations on Laker will get their money back because they are covered by a government-backed bond, the British Trade Department said.

But scheduled passengers on no-frills Skytrain flights and other Laker flights will have to apply to the official bankruptcy receiver for refunds, which could be a lengthy process.

Passengers due to fly Laker from New York, Los Angeles, Miami and Tampa, Fla. will have to find their own way home.

Laker's New York-London fare was $135 when he introduced his Skytrain service in 1977 — half the cheapest rate elsewhere. Before he went bust the fare was still among the cheapest — $168.

The airline's statement said, "Sir Freddie would like to thank the enormous support he has received from the public over the years, and hopes that with the demise of his airline the benefits gained for the ordinary traveler will not be lost."

It said the Clydsedale Bank was asked to appoint a receiver and manager to take over the line's financial affairs.

THE ANNOUNCEMENT ended months of speculation about the future of Laker Airways, which last year accounted for 25 percent of all air traffic between Britain and the United States.

As recently as Tuesday, Laker had said, "I am flying high and I couldn't be more confident about the future...My financial problems are over."

He said he had raised $111 million with McDonnell Douglas Finance Corp. and the Clydesdale Bank of Scotland to reschedule repayment of loans to a consortium of 13 British banks and the American Export-Import Bank.

But observers said questions about the financing plan arose in the U.S. and British financial communities.

"Events took a sudden and dramatic turn" on Wednesday and it became evident that the airline could not continue in business, the company's statement said, without elaboration.

Sir Freddie, 59, formed Laker Airways in September 1977 and his cheap-flight fleet of Skytrain jetliners gained quick popularity. But like other airlines, Laker was badly hit by the worldwide recession in air travel.

He owes the equivalent of $126.91 million to the British bank consortium and $226.4 million to the Export-Import Bank, which is backed by the U.S. government.

Laker ran up the debt purchasing his fleet of European- and American-made jetliners.

He claims his troubles stem from the strengthening of the dollar against the British pound as well as increased advertising and operating costs.

Laker's statement said it was decided that arrangements with McDonnell Douglas were "not considered adequate by others" to meet the anticipated requirements of the company over the next few months, although Laker strongly disagreed with that view.

"However, as the holiday season approaches Laker is vitally concerned that there is no risk whatsoever that passengers are stranded as a result of the airline's collapse in the summer months."

The statement said the airline is "mindful of the views of others and recognized that it must act in a totally responsible way. Accordingly, it is with the utmost regret that Laker has requested Clydesdale Bank to appoint a receiver and manager."

Turkish praise U.S. actions in catching official's assassin

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — Services were held in this capital city today for Kemal Arikan, the consul general who was slain by two suspected Armenian terrorists last week in Los Angeles.

Hundreds of mourners, including Premier Bulend Ulusu and members of his Cabinet, gathered in front of the Foreign Ministry to pay their last respects to the slain veteran diplomat in a civil ceremony.

Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, speaking in front of the flag-draped casket, praised the American authorities "for taking the most effective measures in catching and bringing to justice" Arikan's killer.

Los Angeles police have arrested a 19-year-old Armenian, Harry Sassounian, in connection with the killing and are searching for a second suspect.

Turkmen said Arikan's murder was part of a "well-organized and strongly supported international terrorist assault."

Assassins claiming to belong to Armenian terrorist organizations have killed 21 Turkish officials, four of them ambassadors, in Western Europe, the United States and Australia in the last nine years.

Reagan applauds Dozier at White House meeting

By LEE LESCAZE
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — President Reagan welcomed Brig. Gen. James L. Dozier home from 42 days of captivity Thursday at the annual National Prayer Breakfast, where he also spoke out on abortion and school prayer and paid tribute to God for saving his life last March 30.

"Welcome home, soldier," Reagan said, paying tribute to the gallantry of the Army general, who was seized by Italian Red Brigade terrorists in Verona on Dec. 17.

Then the oldest man ever to enter the presidency noted that his 71st birthday is coming up Saturday and joked that many Biblical figures were active when much older. Moses was 80 when God called upon him, and Abraham, who was 100 when Isaac was born, lived to be 175, the president said. "Just imagine if he had put $2,000 a year into his IRA account," Reagan said.

He went on to tell the crowd of about 3,000 people at the Washington Hilton that there are trying moments in men's lives which God carries them through.

He and Dozier each have had such a moment, the president said, referring to the attempt on his life outside the same hotel and Dozier's kidnapping.

Reagan went on to back prayer in schools and attack abortions, speaking out on two social issues that critical conservatives say he has given only lukewarm support.

"God, the source of our knowledge, has been expelled from the classroom," Reagan said. "He gives us his greatest blessing, life, and yet many would condone the taking of innocent life."

After breakfast, Dozier rode with the president in a motorcade to the White House, where they posed for cameras in the Oval Office.

The 50-year-old general then held a news conference at the Pentagon, his last public appearance before two days of medical tests at Walter Reed, more debriefing and about two weeks of leave with his wife, Judith.

At the Pentagon, Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger introduced Dozier as an officer who "brought the greatest credit to the uniform."

"At a time when the country sorely needs heroes," Weinberger said, "Gen. Dozier is a genuine hero."

In unemotional words, as though he were giving a briefing on a less personal and dramatic episode, Dozier described how an apartment housed a blue, cabana-style tent in which he was held chained to a cot in one half while a guard kept watch from a chair in the other half.

He said he learned that he was being tried by a "people's court" when he read a copy of Time his captors brought him.

Firefighters battle a blaze at the Broadway Hotel in Shawnee, Okla., for nine hours in frigid temperatures that hovered in the teens. Six people were pulled from the rubble after the second story of the hotel collapsed, sending the first floor crashing into the basement.

Hotel collapses in fire; Six people die in blaze

By TIM TUMLIN
Associated Press Writer

SHAWNEE, Okla. (AP) — Rescue workers who pulled six charred bodies from a basement after a hotel collapsed in 90-foot flames say they do not expect to find more victims.

Firefighters worked for nine hours Thursday to douse the flames before they were able to search the two-story brick building. Assistant City Fire Marshal James Wyatt said the hotel did not have fire or smoke alarms.

State medical examiners in Oklahoma City were to begin confirming the victims' identities today through dental records.

Searchers first looked for nine people, but after finding six bodies during the day, they were confident they had found all the victims.

Fifteen people fled, some down a fire escape and at least one out a window and onto the roof of an adjoining building.

The hotel was one of the last low-rent residences in the Shawnee area and often attracted transients and the elderly who could not afford better housing, Police Capt. Joe LaHue said.

Jim Brown, fire marshal for the city of about 25,000 residents, said the blaze apparently started early Thursday in a room near the middle of the 23-room hotel, which occupied the building's second story.

"I don't think they will ever find out how the fire began because any evidence was destroyed in the blaze," Brown said. No indication of arson was found, he said.

Damage to the hotel and two adjoining buildings also destroyed is expected to exceed $1 million, said civil defense director Ron McCalip said.

LaHue said he was confident the fire victims were either permanent residents of the hotel or transient workers with temporary employment in Shawnee, which is about 35 miles east of Oklahoma City.

McCalip said searchers ended operations about 9 p.m. Thursday, as snow flurries fell in the 10-degree night.

He had said it would be difficult to find bodies because the floors and all their contents had fallen into the basement. Tons of water poured onto the blaze by firefighters in the sub-freezing temperatures formed a murky lake about 8 feet deep in the basement.

In addition to the hotel, two other buildings were destroyed. They housed the Demco Printing Co., Pierre's Cleaners and Carolyn Harris Realtor.

Black prisoner testifies to torture by police

By BRIAN O'SHEA
Associated Press Writer

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — A black prisoner says that when he was about to be tortured with a cattle prod during police questioning about a crime, the town's top law enforcement officer was present but left the room so he wouldn't have to witness it.

Michael Anthony Tartt, 25, testified in U.S. District Court here Thursday that he was tortured for more than two hours with a cattle prod, a hypodermic needle and a handgun.

Tartt said Max Williams, the public safety commissioner for the suburb of Bessemer, watched vice squad officers Lt. Douglas Acker and Sgt. Thomas Lamar Cruce conduct the interrogation but then left.

"He said he wanted to leave before the prayer meeting started," Tartt said. "Prayer meeting" was the term allegedly used by the Bessemer police to refer to torture sessions against blacks.

The testimony came in the fourth day of the federal trial of Williams, Acker, Cruce, Officer Stephen Crump and state liquor agent Robert Bassett, who are charged with conspiracy to deprive six young black prisoners of their civil rights while in custody.

Federal prosecutors have charged that Williams knew and approved of the alleged torture.

The officials, all of whom are white, were indicted four months ago.

Tartt is serving 12 years in the Jefferson County Jail for three 4-year convictions on burglary and stolen property charges.

Like prisoner Anthony Carter, who testified Wednesday, Tartt said he "begged them (officers) to stop" the torture. "I told them I would tell them anything they wanted to know," he said.

The three officers also are accused of beating prisoners.

Tartt told the all-white jury that officers arrested him on a burglary charge. At City Hall, he said, Acker slapped him, saying "he was tired of me lying to him. He took the (cattle) prod out of his desk and asked me if I knew what it was. I didn't.

"At first he made me lay my hands flush on the desk and applied it to my finger tips."

Tartt said Acker shocked him "all over my body, down between my legs, my chest."

He said he begged Acker to stop, but Acker "just laughed and smirked. He had sort of a grin on his face ... He said, 'You're not telling me the truth. You're not telling me what I want to hear.'"

Cruce, Tartt said, threatened to inject a purplish-brown fluid he called "truth serum" into his buttocks, at one point sticking him with the hypodermic.

"He stuck me in the butt with it. I was screaming out. I was crying. I was afraid," Tartt said. "Then he asked if I would tell the truth and I said I would."

Under questioning by defense lawyers, Tartt said he had bruises all over his body and other injuries, but did not seek medical attention.

Under examination by Assistant U.S. Attorney Henry Frohsin, Tartt said he confessed to the burglary under interrogation "because I was beat up. I was scared. I was hurt."

Defense lawyer Mike Bolin asked him later why he told an FBI agent and a federal grand jury that he had given a false confession. "I didn't want to be charged," he said.

Clark feels appeal of creation-science decision futile

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — The official who tried and failed to defend Arkansas' creation-science law in court says he will await the fate of a similar law in Louisiana before deciding whether to appeal.

Steve Clark, the state attorney general, announced his decision Thursday, saying an appeal right now would be futile, but the Louisiana law, which is worded differently, may end up being a guide to a renewed effort here.

"There will be a better day and a better time on this issue," Clark said at a news conference.

The Arkansas law, passed by the Legislature and signed by Gov. Frank White, was struck down Jan. 5 by U.S. District Judge William Overton, who said it violated constitutional guarantees of separation of church and state.

It would have required public schools, beginning in the fall, to teach the creation theory of the origin of the universe if evolution was taught.

"We stood more to lose through appealing than we did by backing off and allowing Louisiana to have its day," said the Rev. Roy McLaughlin, leader of the Moral Majority in Arkansas.

But former state Sen. Jim Holsted, D-North Little Rock, the bill's sponsor, said he wanted the state to appeal and said it could have won. Holsted claimed Clark didn't favor the bill to start with.

Clark said the Louisiana law, itself the subject of two lawsuits, would be easier to defend because portions objectionable to the court here had been eliminated.

The American Civil Liberties Union, representing 23 plaintiffs, challenged the law as violating separation of church and state, and said it was too vague and infringed on academic freedom.

Creationists believe the universe came into existence from nothingness about 6,000 years ago. Although creationists usually assign the act of creation to God, the law forbade the use of religious writings or instruction in religion.

Whodunit may finally be solved

By SUZAN NIGHTINGALE
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Elizabeth Short always wore black clothes, and ultimately, died amid blacker secrets.

They called her the "Black Dalhia."

She died 35 years ago, and she remains as enigmatic as on that morning when newspaper headlines screamed about "THE MANIACAL WEREWOLF KILLER" who tortured the 22-year-old brunette, abandoning her hacked torso in a grassy lot here. The cut-in-half corpse was found Jan. 15, 1947.

No motive, no weapon, no killer have ever been found.

But John Gilmore — who was the 13-year-old son of a Los Angeles cop at the time of the murder — believes he has solved the crime that has stumped police for three decades.

After 13 years of research, the author of books about Charles Manson ("The Garbage People") and Charles Schmidt ("The Tucson Murders") is convinced the killer is alive and running a bar in Nevada.

ALTHOUGH HE IS willing to release composite drawings of his prime suspect, Gilmore won't reveal the man's name, calling him instead, "Mr. Jones." Gilmore's key source is "Mr. Smith," who knew both Jones and Elizabeth Short.

"According to Smith, Jones told him he'd done it," Gilmore says. "My source said he sat in the hotel room and drank an entire bottle of whiskey and told him in great detail what he'd done."

According to Gilmore, Jones was connected with two deaths in Chicago before he came to Los Angeles and "did jobs" for people. After holding Short against her will in a rented house, he murdered her in a fit of frustrated jealousy.

The Black Dahlia is a murder 40 people have confessed to.

But Gilmore, who has talked to "a couple of hundred" people in his 13-year quest, is convinced he has finally pieced the story together. So certain is he of his findings that he took his evidence to the Los Angeles Police Department several weeks ago.

Gilmore's version of the murder is different from the "EXOTIC BLACK DAHLIA" of the day's screaming headlines. "Beth," as he calls her, was a diffident girl, sickly as a child, a secretive loner who naively relied on men for mobility and money.

"People say this is the story of a girl who came to Hollywood to be a star and wound up being a prostitute, but that's not really the case," Gilmore says.

CONTRARY TO THE prostitute theory, Gilmore says, Elizabeth Short declined men's sexual overtures. Smith, in fact, is the only man Gilmore has found who she was intimate with — a factor he believes is the key to her murder.

"She went out with a lot of different guys, but it was like a little game. They would have a nice dinner and then she'd want to dance. She loved the idea of romance. Then they'd want to go to bed but she wouldn't.

"She always had a thing about how she had to be at her sister's, at her family's in the morning, that's why she can't go tonight. Instead, she'd take your card or your number and say, 'I really need some money, too, you know. Do you think you could loan me about $20? Because I have to catch this bus to go see my sister.'"

Although she had been engaged to a Flying Tiger pilot who was killed in China, she told the men she met that they had married — and then embellished the story by inventing a non-existent baby who had also died.

Although the gap in the Black Dahlia case has always been the five "missing days" between Jan. 9, when Elizabeth Short was last seen at the Biltmore Hotel, and Jan. 15, when her bloodless body was found on Norton Avenue, Gilmore says he has placed her on the 14th.

On Jan. 14, she and Jones traveled from an apartment in Hollywood to the Roosevelt Hotel, where he picked up a key to a house here at 33rd and Trinity.

"It was an old two-story, long, narrow, brown wood house, and the owners rented it out. This is the house where he killed her."

IN GILMORE'S re-creation, Jones was angered by Elizabeth Short's behavior and her refusal to give in to his advances — especially since Jones knew she had aleady been intimate with Smith. The two quarreled about a phone call she wanted to make and, when she insisted on leaving the wooden house, an incensed Jones beat her and raped her, and ultimately killed her. In his frenzy to dispose of the body, Jones cut the body in half.

Panicked, Jones wrapped each part of Elizabeth Short in curtains from the house, wrapped the entire bundle in an oilskin tablecloth and loaded the body in his car. In the early morning hours of Jan. 15, Jones drove a few short blocks and dumped the body, and Elizabeth Short achieved in death the notoriety she had only fantasized about in life.

Jailed activist found hanged

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A young white doctor and labor union activist being held by South African Security Police was found dead in his cell, a spokesman for the minister of police said today.

The spokesman, who refused to give any details, said Neil Aggett was found hanging in the cell Thursday night.

According to the Institute of Race Relations, 46 people have died while in Security Police custody since 1963, but Aggett was the first white.

Aggett was detained last November, along with more than a dozen leading trade unionists, labor law experts and students, under the terrorism act, which allows detainees to be held incommunicado.

He was an organizer of the African Food and Canning Workers unions.

About six members of the Parents Support Committee, an organization of relatives of detainees, met at Security Police headquarters this morning, demanding to see those being held without charge.

About 130 people are believed to be in Security Police custody under laws that allow such detentions indefinitely, without charges and without access to lawyers or families.

"His hanging is one more scar on the already discredited security legislation, which is used to intimidate and detain opponents of government policy," said a statement issued by Federation of South African Trade Unions.

"The responsibility for such deaths in detention rests squarely with the police. No amount of explanation or public relations work can absolve them," said Phiroshaw Camay, the general secretary of the Council of Unions of South Africa.

Butter might go same way as cheese

By BOB FICK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Faced with mammoth stockpiles of surplus dairy products, the federal government wants to give away some of its butter like it's been disposing of surplus cheese.

"It's our intention to relieve our stocks of some of the older supplies," said John Bode, the Agriculture Department's deputy assistant secretary for food and consumer services.

On a test basis, the department is agreeing to distribute 40,000 pounds of surplus butter to needy persons in a 10-county area around Waterloo, Iowa. The project was proposed by two Iowa Republicans — Rep. Cooper Evans and Sen. Charles Grassley.

"They came in and asked; it seemed like a good idea and we agreed," Bode said.

If public response is good and no hitches develop, the free distribution program will be expanded nationwide, he said.

In December, President Reagan authorized the free distribution of 30 million pounds of cheese to the nation's poor to ease the building dairy stockpile.

Although American consumption of dairy products has not increased, dairymen have been producing milk at a record pace, forcing the government to acquire nearly 13 billion pounds of cheese, butter and nonfat dry milk to keep market prices at levels required by law. Cost to the government: $2 million.

Congress has frozen milk price supports at their 1980 level to get dairy farmers to cut back production, but so far they have yet to respond.

Bode said the butter distribution is being tried out in a small area first because, unlike with cheese, there are special distribution problems.

"Our butter is stored in 60 pound blocks, and the butter must be kept at a very low temperature," Bode said. "Because of that it is more difficult to handle than the processed cheese. That's why we were hesitant."

A spokesman for Evans said the butter would be repackaged in chunks of one or two pounds each.

The government disposed of about half its stock of surplus butter last summer in a sale to New Zealand, a major dairy product exporter. The sale drew criticism because of the low price the U.S. received and because New Zealand was given the right to veto any proposed government butter sales on the international market for the next year.

Watt aides will not talk with liberals

By WILLIAM KRONHOLM
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Escalating his battle with Congress, Interior Secretary James G. Watt has barred meetings between department officials and aides of two sometimes hostile congressional oversight committees.

Rep. John F. Seiberling, D-Ohio, released letters from Watt and Interior Undersecretary Donald Hodel on Thursday outlining the policy. Seiberling called it "alarming and unprecedented" because it denies Congress access to needed information.

Seiberling, chairman of the House Interior subcommittee on public lands and national parks, noted that the department already has refused to conduct briefings for his panel's staff to help prepare for hearings.

Watt also refused staff meetings to Rep. Toby Moffett, D-Conn., chairman of the House Government Operations subcommittee on natural resources. Moffett's and Seiberling's subcommittees have been among the harshest in Congress in their criticism of Watt's policies.

Such meetings to collect facts and refine points that might be at issue have preceded formal hearings traditionally. The congressional staff then briefs members of Congress, often drafting questions for the congressmen to ask.

Seiberling said a 1972 Supreme Court decision recognized that congressional staff members are "so critical to members' performance as to render the staff almost 'alter egos' of the members themselves." The court decision also said that role includes preparing for hearings.

But in his hand-written letter to Seiberling, Watt said "needless conflict will arise" if the staff meetings are permitted.

"My Washington experiences have convinced me that the public interest and members of Congress are better served if most, if not all, inquiries and oversight investigations are carried out in formal, on-the-record hearings," Watt told the chairman.

Hodel, in refusing Seiberling's request for staff meetings, said, "We do not feel it is appropriate to do the congressional staff work for oversight hearings."

Hodel said the hearings themselves are "the proper forum to answer policy and technical questions the committee members may have ... rather than in private, informal meetings among staff."

In his letter to Moffett, Watt said: "We do not believe it is good constitutional government to have your staff randomly roaming through our offices and files."

The department's letters said its staff would testify at congressional hearings, would answer written queries from congressmen and would meet with members of Congress themselves.

Interior Department spokesman Andrew Newman noted those provisions and Watt's promise in the letter of "a relationship of cooperation and openness," adding, "I certainly interpret it to mean that we want to cooperate."

Department spokesman Tom DeRocco, said Watt's letters "did not preclude staff-to-staff contact" and denied any intent to discriminate against hostile subcommittees.

He said Watt merely believed that oversight hearings — the general review of departmental functions — should be conducted with executives of the department, not lower-ranking bureaucrats.

However, a ban on oversight briefings does not seem to extend to the Republican-controlled Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, a panel much friendlier to Watt and having similar oversight functions.

Todd Neuenschwander, an aide to committee chairman Sen. James A. McClure, R-Idaho, said he was taken aback by the question of such a ban because "it's never even been raised. The staff people meet with Interior people all the time. I don't think there's been any problem at all."

Seiberling said the policy "appears to be a deliberate attempt to thwart our subcommittee's efforts to conduct effective oversight by denying us a major means of gaining access to the information we need."

He also said it may conflict with federal law governing government employees rights to communicate with Congress.

That law provides that "the right of employees, individually or collectively ... to furnish information to either house of Congress, or to a committee or member thereof, may not be interfered with or denied."

Seiberling said Watt's policy "appears to be based on a total misunderstanding or a studied disregard of both the law and tradition.

"Whatever may be his reasons for adopting such a position, he has created an issue beyond partisanship, since it constitutes a denial to Congress of the means to effectively exercise its ... constitutional responsibilities," Seiberling said.

Watt's relationship with Congress hardly has been smooth, particularly in the case of the environmentalist-oriented House Interior Committee and its subcommittees. Watt's appearances before those panels have been marked by stinging denunciations and bitter debate.

Alarmed by Watt's pro-development views, the committee voted last year to prohibit the interior secretary from issuing oil drilling leases in three Montana wilderness areas.

Production was gained through natural perforations between, 16,168 and 16,666 feet.

It was drilled to 21,867 feet and plugged back to 17,036 feet with 5 1/2 inch liner set at 19,400 feet.

The site is in section 92, block 33, H&TC survey.

Raymond International enters billion dollar club

HOUSTON (SWN) — Raymond International Inc. said its 1981 net income more than doubled that of 1980, revenues exceeded $1 billion for the first time in the company's history and the company attained a record year end backlog.

The company estimates net income of $15.8 million, or $2.65 per share for the fiscal year ended December 31, 1981. This compares with net income of $6.1 million, or $1.23 per share, for fiscal 1980. Revenues for 1981 were $1.1 billion, up dramatically over the $653 million recorded in 1980.

"We are very pleased with the 1981 results, especially the record revenues of $1 billion. This is a good indication of Raymond's current level of activity," said Henry F. LeMieux, chairman and chief executive officer.

Raymond International is a worldwide heavy construction and engineering company with projects underway in about 40 countries. The company operates mainly through three subsidiaries, Raymond International Builders, Kaiser Engineers, and Raymond Offshore Constructors.

For the fourth quarter, net income is estimated to be $4.8 million, or 79 cents per share, compared with net income of $3.2 million, or 58 cents per share, for the same period of 1980. Fourth quarter revenues were $401 million and $181 million for 1981 and 1980, respectively.

These results are based on preliminary unaudited figures. The company is providing for 1981 taxes at a rate of 38 percent, the same rate as fiscal 1980.

At December 31, 1981 backlog stood at $3.8 billion compared with $3.5 billion at the end of 1980. Major subsidiary backlog figures show Raymond Builders at $306 million compared with the 1980 year-end backlog of $249 million. Kaiser Engineers' 1981 backlog was $3.3 billion compared with $3.1 billion at the end of 1980. Raymond Offshore showed a dramatic backlog increase during 1981, from $100 million at the start of the year to $190 million at year end.

In 1981, the company spent a record $52 million on capital programs, largest of which was the $35 million purchase of Sirius III, a self-propelled crane ship with a 2,000-ton lift capacity. This vessel arrived in the Gulf of Mexico in May to replace the Polaris, now working in Australia. Another $17 million of capital was spent on refurbishment and to buy other equipment.

In further comment LeMieux said, "Economic and marketplace uncertainties make 1982 earnings levels very difficult to analyze, and we may be higher or lower than 1981 depending on the length and breadth of the recession. At this early date, it appears that 1982 earnings should approximate those of 1981."

LeMieux added: "We believe that the most successful companies in our industry over the next years, regardless of cyclical swings, will be those that: (1. have large, quality backlogs; (2. identify new markets early and enter them aggressively; (3. implement new marketing strategies and methods; (4. and manage operations and prospects better than the competition."

A month of birthdays

Many Americans prefer that their birthdays be forgotten. They remind us of the inevitability of advancing years. It is different with figures of history who have made lasting contributions to the welfare of the land, for remembrance of their anniversaries can inspire later generations to greater heights.

Last month the nation celebrated the 100th anniversary of the birth of Franklin D. Roosevelt. By remembering him we learned anew some of the lessons of cheerful leadership, the value of political compromise, and the art of getting the people of the world to unite in time of crisis.

February's calendar is adorned by other men of greatness, each of whom left an indelible mark on history.

February 22 is the most familiar. Every school child knows that is the day to remember the "Father of his Country, a General Washington who won a war without the weapons we have today, a President Washington who could not lean on helpful precedents.

Abraham Lincoln was a man who rose to the occasion of national tragedy in an unforgettable manner. On Feb. 12 we salute a self-made man who as president saved his country from a division that would have been disastrous.

This month of notable anniversaries also includes the name of Horace Greeley, who was born Feb. 3, 1811. The founder of the New York Tribuine in 1841 set examples of journalistic excellence that remain as guidelines nearly a century and a half later. Although he did not invent "Go West Young Man," he repeated the refrain in a manner to make a genuine contribution to America's westward movement. By supporting President Lincoln at times, and criticizing him at others, he established the role of the press as both an ally and friendly adversary of government.

All three of these men, Washington, Lincoln and Greeley, were directly or indirectly involved in wars fought for good causes. All three practiced politics for the good of all the people, and each raised banners of selfless leadership to which future generations may repair. Their anniversaries make February one of history's special months.

Chilling wind over China

This long, cold winter has penetrated diplomatic relations between the United States and the People's Republic of China. The chilling effect started with a dispute over the amount of military aid Washington should make available to Taiwan, and then blew into other areas.

In the past few days each side has registered another complaint against the other.

In Peking, officials have continued to press for a cessation of American arms sales to Taipei, although they have modified their stand by suggesting they would agree to a later time limit rather than immediate action. But they are still adamantly opposed to U.S. help for the off-shore Chinese, and complain about being kept in the dark by Washington.

In Washington, complaints have been expressed that Peking is dragging its feet in protesting against communist aggression in Poland. The assistant secretary of state for East Asian and Pacific Affairs, John H. Holdridge, told the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee that on a recent visit to Communist China he could not persuade them to budge on the Polish issue.

To make matters more difficult for Mr. Holdridge, he was criticized from two directions by the senators. Some resented not being told in advance by the State Department about sales of additional F-5E planes to Taiwan. Others accused Mr. Holdridge and the State Department of yielding to pressure from Peking by deciding not to sell Taiwan the more advanced fighter plane, the F-5G. All of which leaves problems unresolved and tempers strained.

When Washington and Peking renewed diplomatic relations after a substantial hiatus, the diplomatic term commonly used for the act was "normalization." Perhaps that was a more literal description than we assumed at the time. Judging from recent events, the wintry chill over China's ties with the U.S. will be the "normal" state of affairs for some time.

The Country Parson

"Folks tend to settle upon religious beliefs that will not disturb their comforts too much."

CHARLEY REESE
Free society must teach best concepts

A child is born with a clean slate. A baby doesn't know if he is male or female, black or white, Communist or capitalist, Republican or Democrat, saint or sinner. All of these are concepts which must be taught.

Charley Reese

True, in the case of sex and race, the baby has certain physical characteristics. Even so, the meaning people attach to these characteristics has to be taught, and the learning process begins immediately.

A child learns from his own observations, from his parents, from his peers, from school, and from information media. The human brain is a magnificent information processor with remarkable ability to receive, store and recall information. Making sense out of that information, however, is a technique which must be taught.

The point of the obvious is that it does matter very much what teachers tell children, what textbooks tell them, what other books they read, what television programs and movies they watch, because all of these systems are sending messages to the human brain.

If we want children who are patriotic, we must teach them patriotism; if we want children who respect the life and property of others, we must teach them ethics; if we want children who support the U.S. Constitution, then we must teach them its virtues. It is foolish to the point of idiocy to expect that these virtues will be acquired by some magic process. It is irresponsible in the extreme to turn over children's minds to anyone who walks in off the street and claims a right of access.

Communism, better than most totalitarian systems, recognizes the old Biblical warning that as the twig is bent so grows the tree. Communists make no bones about controlling the education process from birth to death.

A free society, however, faces a more difficult task. While we want to perpetuate those concepts and values we cherish, we want also to guarantee that there is always a free flow of ideas.

We can achieve both goals if we do not allow ourselves to be duped by the enemies of freedom into interpreting free speech as an unrestricted license and if we do not buy into the false concept that every single issue remains unresolved and open to question.

Some issues have been settled. Freedom is preferable to slavery. Man's rights come from God, not the state. Judeo-Christian ethics create a lawful, workable society and situational ethics create chaos. Capitalism works and Marxism doesn't. Our Constitutional governent is better than any other so far devised by man. We should have the courage to demand that all public education reflects these decisions which a majority of Americans have made.

No one would tolerate driver's education which put a youngster into an automobile with the assertion: "Find out for yourself which driving techniques are safe and which ones will get you killed or crippled." Yet, incredibly, some educators advocate precisely that in the realm of moral, political and economic concepts.

There is no room for such perverted neutrality in a public classroom. As individuals, we have the responsibility to provide our children with the best information we have. In public terms, we have the responsibility to provide children with the best information a majority of our people have agreed upon. By no stretch of common sense are we obligated to provide a minority viewpoint unrestricted access to the minds of our children.

In a free society, we don't destroy that minority viewpoint. We leave it alone. In the adult world, ideas can compete on their own merits and people are free to choose or reject them as they please. But when it comes to children, we recognize that it is our responsibility to teach them the basic concepts on which our society is founded, and to provide them with the tools to reason logically so that when they become adults, they can deal with dissenting opinions and often conflicting information. Our goal should be to do all that is in our power to assure that our children do not have to waste their lives re-learning what millions have already learned the hard way.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

U.S. could lose top South Pole position

WASHINGTON — In a development that gives literal meaning to the phrase "cold war," President Reagan's intelligence advisers have warned that the Soviet Union may take the top position at the bottom of the world.

Jack Anderson

A classified report, now under review by the National Security Council, warns that the United States is in danger of losing its leading role at the South Pole — just when decades of investment might begin to pay off.

If the United States loses its foothold in Antarctica by default, it would be a historical irony — a reversal of the way we acquired Alaska in 1867 from a Russian government that couldn't see the potential value of that inhospitable icebox.

In 1959, the 12 nations with interest in Antarctica signed a treaty that suspended territorial claims for 30 years and reserved the continent for peaceful research. The treaty has been observed scrupulously ever since — probably because no nation thought a scientific laboratory in the world's most hostile environment was worth quarreling over.

But that attitude has changed now. In recent years, the scientific research — mostly by Americans and Russians acting independently — has revealed that there's a lot more to Antarctica than penguins and paralyzing cold. The continent could be another Alaska in the value of its natural resources.

For example, Antarctica has been found to have huge beds of krill, a shrimplike species that may well be the world's richest marine protein resource — an important consideration for a country like the Soviet Union, whose agriculture routinely fails to meet the demands of its huge population.

Antarctica also is known to have oil under all that ice; some experts suspect it has more than Alaska. And scientific studies indicate that minerals are abundant.

My associate Dale Van Atta, just back from a personal inspection of Antarctica, has seen top-secret CIA and National Security Agency reports and an exhaustive review by a 14-agency Antarctic Policy Group. These documents note that the Soviet presence on the frozen continent has increased greatly in recent years. The Russians now have eight bases in Antarctica to our four — though the U.S. scientists are still ahead of the Soviets in research.

Part of the U.S. preeminence is due to the Amundsen-Scott South Pole Station, the American base that sits right on the spot where six nations' territorial claims meet. But the policy group expressed concern that the U.S. presence will diminish, despite the long-standing presidential order that the United States will maintain an "active and influential presence" in Antarctica.

"Continuing decline of the U.S. presence and level of effort in Antarctica will force the abandonment of the prestigious South Pole station to probable occupation by the U.S.S.R.," the group has warned.

The ease with which the Russians could take over the South Pole if we abandon it was made clear in February 1961, when a Soviet aircraft — an IL-14 equipped with skis — flew 12 Soviet scientists from their base at Druzhnaya and landed at the U.S. base. This and other developments, the policy group warned, may have given the Russians a new "mobility, flexibility and reach..."

One confidential document said that the U.S. program's budget is already "dangerously close to a level that will force a choice between a mere presence and a low-visibility but quality research program."

Should the United States be reduced to a "mere presence," the advisers warned, it would forfeit its influential role in "determining the political and economic future of this continent, its surrounding oceans and its continental shelf." The vacuum would be filed, no doubt, by the Soviet Union.

REAGAN RELAXES: President Reagan relaxed with a bipartisan group in House Speaker Tip O'Neill's chambers before giving his first State of the Union address — "opening night," Reagan called it. The president entertained O'Neill's staff by reciting Irish poetry and telling Irish dialect jokes.

When one of the speaker's aides told Reagan, "This is the room where we plot against you," the president laughed and said: "Not after six" — a reference to O'Neill's well-known observation that everyone gets along on Capitol Hill after 6 p.m.

The bipartisan spirit extended to the showing of the Democrats' response to the State of the Union address. Republicans and Democrats shared popcorn during the show.

PAPER, PAPER EVERYWHERE: The Small Business Administration has long been the target of complaints by businessmen who are outraged at the amount of paperwork the agency requires. If it's any comfort, the SBA is just as hard on its own employees.

The administrator's office just ordered headquarters employees to prepare a file copy of all their correspondence. That's in addition to the copy for the executive secretariat and the copy for the special assistant to the administrator — and, presumably, the original for the addressee.

Not only that, but the file copy must be designated either "policy" or "routine," and categorized further as External, Central Office, Regional Office or District Office. No wonder federal workers use the telephone whenever they can.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, Feb. 5, the 36th day of 1982. There are 329 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Feb. 5, 1945, U.S. troops under Gen. Douglas MacArthur entered Manila in the Philippines in World War II.

On this date:

In 1811, the insanity of England's King George III necessitated the British Regency Act, whereby the Prince of Wales became Prince Regent.

In 1974, United Nations troops moved into the area east of the Suez Canal, which would serve as the buffer between Israeli and Egyptian forces.

And in 1976, an earthquake in Guatemala took almost 23,000 lives.

Ten years ago, thousands of Roman Catholics traveled to Newry in Northern Ireland prior to protest the policies of the British Army and the province's Protestant-dominated government.

Five years ago, Indian Prime Minister Indira Gandhi spoke in New Delhi as she opened her re-election campaign.

One year ago, in a broadcast address, President Reagan sought support for major reductions in spending and taxes and said the U.S. was in "the worst economic mess since the Great Depression."

Today's birthday: Baseball Hall-of-Famer Hank Aaron is 48.

Thought For Today: Revenge does us more harm, than the injury itself. — John Lubbock, English astronomer-mathematician (1803-1865).

INSIDE REPORT:

Senior aides finagling to undercut budget, defense plans

WASHINGTON — Quiet talks have started between senior White House staffers and Republican congressional leaders aimed at reducing defense spending below President Reagan's still-secret new budget, a backstairs campaign somewhat similar to the failed effort of senior presidential aides to change Reagan's mind on taxes.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Shrouded moves made so far to shake the president's determination included a last-minute Oval Office appeal by budget director David Stockman. Pentagon exemption from across-the-board budget cuts, he argued, must end. When that failed, the president was persuaded to delete a paragraph in the State of the Union address amplifying his pledge for "a strong national defense"; it could be included in a future message, he was told.

At work here is the familiar syndrome of the Reagan White House. When defeated internally by a stubborn president convinced of his rectitude, White House aides journey afield for allies in their campaign to break down the boss's resistance.

In their campaign to commit Reagan to tax increases he repeatedly rejected, senior aides led by chief of staff James Baker III leaked premature "decisions" that turned out to be inaccurate (leading The New York Times to report on Jan. 21 that Reagan "has decided" to ask for higher excise taxes).

The game of decision-by-leak not only embarrassed, seasoned, conscientious, reporters; it failed to change Reagan's mind. But the new alliance of White House defense-cutters and congressional Republicans of similar persuasion has a far greater chance to succeed, even though success would come at the expense of Ronald Reagan.

What brings success within reach is the torrid mix of an election-year Congress charged with a new round of domestic budget cuts in a major recession while facing a probable deficit far higher than the $90 billion to be disclosed in Reagan's new budget.

"Reagan can't cut the budget this year and raise defense spending at the same time," we were told by a Reaganite loyalist who stayed with the president last year on both budget cuts and higher defense spending. A similar, though somewhat veiled, expression was sent privately to the president in a Dec. 9 letter signed by all 16 freshman Republican senators: the "Reagan class" of 1980, which includes some of the most conservative Reaganites in the Senate.

The letter pressed Reagan to deepen his program for general budget-cutting and offered niggardly support for his higher defense spending "only at a rate that can be justified by meeting the most stringent test of serving undeniable national security needs."

The first draft of the letter was much more pointed. It said that defense spending could not be divorced from limits imposed on the rest of the government. The change was agreed to only to get the signatures of Sens. Steve Symms and Jeremiah Denton, leaders of the pro-defense bloc.

Instead of attempting to meet this threat to the defense budget head on, White House aides are manifesting an itch to take advantage of it. Both Baker and Stockman have privately told Sen. Pete Domenici, hard-driving chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, that they agree with his basic budget premise. Domenici believes that the fate of Reagan's drive to cut domestic spending is tied directly to Pentagon cuts.

Senate insiders told us that Stockman has given strong hints to Domenici that the administration will accept the senator's proposal to reduce Reagan's 7 percent increase in defense spending (slightly higher than the current fiscal year) to 5 percent. That would cut only $5.5 billion from the new, $257 billion authorization bill for the year starting next Oct. 1. But it would slow future defense spending drastically, by $42.5 billion in 1986 below Reagan's budget projections.

Late last August, when Reagan was preparing his second-round budget cuts for Congress, Domenici wanted the White House to approve a $30 billion cut for defense spending, a figure Baker then announced to the press as the agreed target. Reagan disowned the figure and later settled for a small fraction.

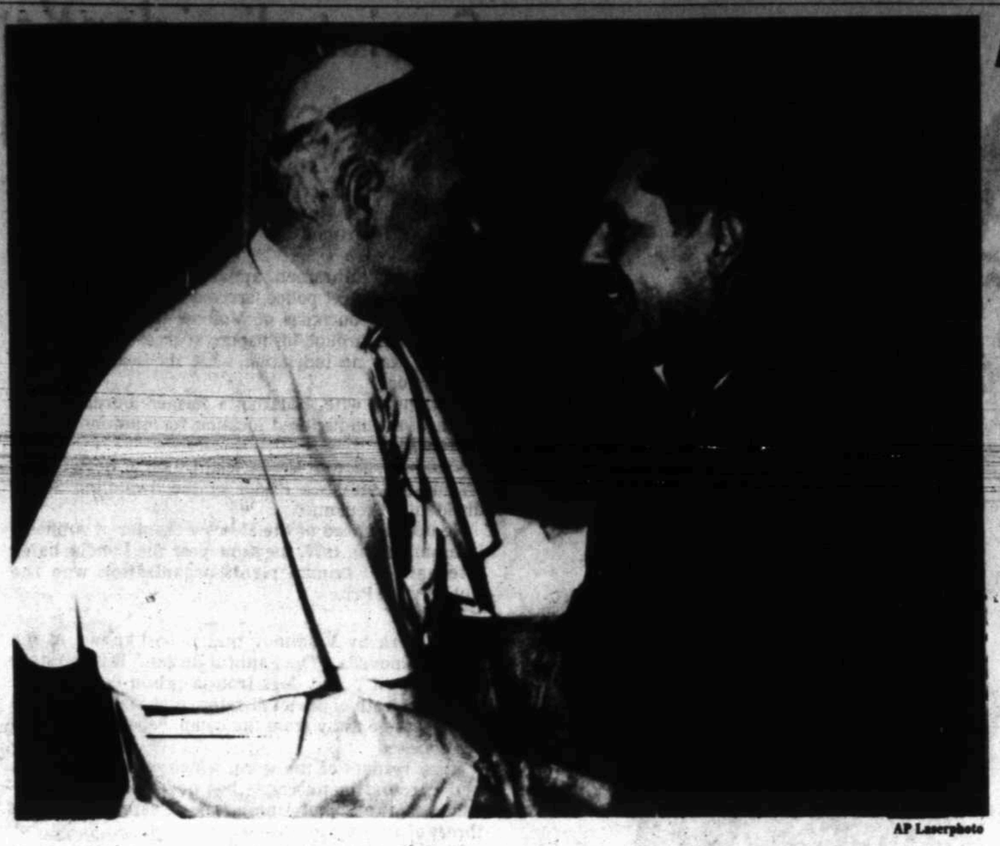

It is doubtful to say the least that the president is even dimly aware that top aides are jiggering with his defense budget. Reagan puts high value on his pledge toward rapid American rearmament, believing it essential to convince both U.S. allies and the Soviets that the U.S. is on a steady course.

Whether a majority in Congress can be found to support domestic cuts and defense hikes is admittedly a big question. But the answer will not be in doubt if senior aides, no matter how honorably motivated and no matter how convinced of their political realism, cut a deal before the battle starts.

Mubarak's parting words encouraging

WASHINGTON — Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak, whose remarks at the White House Wednesday seemed to dim U.S. hopes for early progress toward Mideast peace, made a more positive gesture toward President Reagan Thursday by publicly endorsing the Camp David peace process for the first time since he arrived here.

Following a second day of White House meetings between the two leaders, Mubarak bid farewell to his host by declaring: "We are determined to pursue our peace efforts until a comprehensive settlement is reached according to the Camp David accords."

That was in marked contrast to Wednesday's arrival ceremony, where Mubarak raised eyebrows with his failure to mention the 1979 Camp David agreements — the cornerstone of U.S. efforts to resolve the Arab-Israeli dispute — and instead put his emphasis on calling for self-determination and "a national entity" for the Palestinian people.

His remarks then were taken as a deliberate signal that Egypt's priorities do not include an early resolution of its 20-month negotiations with Israel over an autonomy agreement for the 1.8 million Palestinian inhabitants of Israeli-occupied territories.

The United States had been put on notice earlier that Mubarak, who became president following the murder of Anwar Sadat last October, wants to take a go-slow approach to the autonomy talks while he concentrates on other goals, such as Egypt's internal problems and a reconciliation with the rest of the Arab world.

Nevertheless, U.S. officials, who have been seeking to put the best face on the frustration of their hopes for a breakthrough on autonomy, appeared to have been taken aback by Mubarak's emphasis on phrases such as "self-determination" and "a national entity." Such terms are regarded in Israel as code words for creation of a Palestinian state in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, and Israel has insisted it will not pursue any autonomy negotiations aimed at such a predetermined outcome.

Thursday, however, Mubarak softened his tone sufficiently to join Reagan in pledging Egypt's continued cooperation with the U.S.-sponsored peace process. Despite the warm rhetoric exchanged by the two presidents, it was clear, though, that Washington now concedes there is little liklihood of any dramatic progress in the near future.

Even Reagan seemed to admit that when he said they had agreed to continue pursuing "a declaration of principles, which is the best means of making tangible progress toward a solution of the Palestinian problem." That was a tacit acknowledgment that the autonomy talks have made no progress since they were resumed in September after a long delay.

But, while Thursday's exchange was essentially cosmetic, U.S. officials appeared relieved at Mubarak's shift toward rhetoric indicating he wants to preserve Egypt's close ties with the United States and is not publicly distancing himself from the Camp David accords.

Some sources suggested the difference could be explained, in part, by the fact that Mubarak's remarks Wednesday were transmitted by television satellite to Egypt. That was not the case Thursday when he was speaking to what the sources called "an American rather than an Arab audience."

The sources also said Mubarak's initial coolness may have been a bargaining chip aimed at strengthening his hand in bidding for greater U.S. economic and military assistance. The administration plans to ask Congress to grant Egypt $1.3 billion in military aid for the coming fiscal year, and Mubarak, who Thursday called the meetings here "very fruitful," appeared to be pleased at the outcome of the aid discussions.

Poles tell pope of home situation

By DON A. SCHANCHE
Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

ROME — Pope John Paul II held what a Vatican source called "extremely delicate" talks with Polish Archbishop Jozef Glemp Thursday in an apparent effort to chart the course of church policy concerning the martial-law government of Poland.

Glemp, the Roman Catholic primate of Poland, and two fellow Polish prelates went into conference with the pontiff shortly after their arrival in Rome early Thursday, the first time since martial law was declared in Poland Dec. 13 that the troubled country's senior Roman Catholic churchmen had visited the Vatican.

"The talks are extremely delicate," a member of the Polish delegation said. "There is no lack of matters to be discussed."

Glemp and his colleagues — Cardinal Franciszek Macharski, archbishop of Krakow, where the pope served before his elevation to the papacy, and Archbishop Henryk Romangulbinowiczi, of Wroclaw, which has been the scene of clashes and protest actions despite martial law — declined to speak to reporters. But church sources said their visit, which will last about a week, has three aims:

—To seek the pope's guidance on whether to toughen or modify the so-far firm stance of the Polish Catholic clergy in its relations with the martial-law government. Glemp, who leads the church in overwhelmingly Catholic Poland, has been criticized by some of his colleagues for being too moderating to church sources.

Although there is no apparent difference among the Polish bishops on the goal of seeing martial law ended and civil rights restored in Poland, there are differences in strategy and tactics that Glemp apparently hopes the Pope will help to resolve, the sources said.

—To give the pontiff a detailed picture of what is happening in Poland. The sources noted that communications since martial law was imposed have been sporadic, largely confined to telex messages and messages carried by a few priests traveling between the Vatican and Warsaw.

"They have a lot to talk about; not only the status of the church but the state of the people, the status of Lech Walesa and many other things, including economic conditions," said a Polish priest assigned to the Vatican.

Walesa is the leader of the suspended Solidarity independent trade union. He has been under detention since martial law was imposed, despite church efforts to take him under its responsibility.

—To begin making plans for the papal visit to Poland in August, the 600th anniversary of the Black Madonna of Czestochowa, the country's most revered Catholic shrine. Such a trip, if taken, would have major consequences in Poland. John Paul's previous visit to his native Poland, in June 1979, has been credited by many observers with inspiring the strikes and protests that led to the Polish reform movement and the foundation of Solidarity in 1980.

Although some Vatican sources said it is unlikely that the pope will visit Poland in August if martial law is still in force, some church figures reportedly are urging that he go through with the trip — if only to put the military government in a position in which it would either have to refuse to receive him or risk letting him be a rallying point for the people.

The pope will leave Feb. 12 on a seven-day trip to Nigeria and three other African countries. It will be his first trip abroad since he was shot by a would-be assassin last year.

Report tells of U.S.-requested infections

TOKYO (AP) — The U.S. occupation force in Japan after World War II ordered a government agency and university researchers to conduct bacteriological experiments on convicts, a major newspaper reported today.

The Public Health and Welfare Bureau of the U.S. General Occupation Headquarters requested the Japanese Health and Welfare Ministry and Tokyo National University in November 1946 to inject Japanese medical students with typhus bacteria for medical tests, Mainichi Shimbun reported in a front-page article.

Quoting an unnamed former top official in the Health and Welfare Ministry, the Mainichi report said:

Officials of the ministry and of the university protested the request from Brig. Gen. C.F. Sams, saying the injections violated basic human rights and could be fatal. The general then ordered the researchers to use criminals awaiting capital punishment.

Israel announces decision to build own fighter plane

By NORMAN KEMPSTER
The Washington Post-Los Angeles Times News Service

JERUSALEM — Israel decided Thursday to build its second home-produced warplane, the Lavie fighter-bomber, following months of debate over whether the nation's strapped economy could afford it.

The Defense Ministry announced that the aircraft will be built with the help of an American company that will provide technical assistance. The announcement said the plane will be powered by an engine built in Israel under license from the U.S. firm Pratt and Whitney.

"Conditions of partnership with the American companies will be determined after negotiation with those firms," the Defense Ministry said, indicating that the project could still fall through if no agreement is reached with either McDonnell Douglas or General Dynamics.

Israeli sources said the Lavie would be a derivative of either the McDonnell Douglas F-15 or the General Dynamics F-16. U.S.-built versions of those planes are the premier aircraft of the Israeli air force.

Lavie — the name means "lion" in Hebrew — has been on the drawing board since Ezer Weizman was Israeli's defense minister two years ago. It is designed to replace the aging Kfir — the name means "lion cub" — in the Israeli arsenal.

The Kfir, Israel's first aircraft project, was a near copy of the French Mirage, then the mainstay of the Israeli air force.

Because the Kfir used U.S.-build General Electric engines, Israel was prohibited by U.S. law from selling the aircraft to other countries without U.S. approval. Presumably, the plan to use American components in the Lavie would encounter the same restrictions if Israel wanted to sell the plane to Taiwan or some other country.

An Israeli team left for the United States on Wednesday to discuss the project with General Dynamics and McDonnell Douglas.

Unless there are complications, a prototype of the Lavie could be flying in 1985. Production-line models are expected to join the air force by 1988 or 1989.

The defense Ministry has been anxious to go ahead with the project but the decision was delayed by budgetary considerations. Presumably, Israel could buy regular production-line models of the F-15 or F-16 aircraft cheaper from the U.S. manufacturers.

But Defense Ministry sources said Israel wanted to develop its own plane so it could keep a few secrets about its operation. Saudi Arabia also is buying the F-15, and a number of countries have purchased the F-16, so Israel's potential adversaries are familiar with the capabilities of both planes.

Even with the Lavie, however, the Israeli Air Force will continue to depend heavily on U.S.-made F-15, F-16 and older F-4 aircraft.

Hunger striker wants to return to embassy

MOSCOW (AP) — A Soviet woman Pentecostalist, who was hospitalized after a month-long hunger strike at the U.S. Embassy, is hoping to rejoin other family members still in the American compound.

"I would like to go back to the embassy, although I know that is against Soviet law," Lydia Vashchenko told The Associated Press Thursday from her bed at Moscow's Botkin hospital.

The 30-year-old woman said she would try to go back to the embassy after she is released from the hospital or journey to her hometown of Chernogorsk in Siberia to visit 10 other brothers and sisters.

"I hope the other children will be able to visit me. I haven't seen them in 3½ years. It's a long time," she said. "If they don't visit me here, I may go out there. Otherwise, I will try to go back to the embassy."

Miss Vashchenko and her 52-year-old mother began a hunger strike over the Christmas holidays to protest what they claimed was a lack of U.S. government pressure on the Soviets to grant them exit visas.

The two are among seven members of the fundamentalist Christian Pentecostalist sect who have been living under humanitarian refuge in the U.S. Embassy since June 1978.

Miss Vashchenko was taken to the hospital last Saturday by U.S. diplomats after her condition deteriorated. Embassy officials said they requested, but received no assurances from the Soviets, that she would be permitted to return to the embassy.

Soviet security forces generally limit access to foreign missions to Soviet citizens with written authorization from either Soviet or American officials.

Presumably, Miss Vaschenko would be given a U.S. invitation to return to the compound, but there is no guarantee the Soviet police guards outside the door would permit her to enter.

Article 39 of the Soviet constitution could theoretically be used by authorities to prevent her return. It states:

"Enjoyment by citizens of their rights and freedoms must not be to the detriment of the interests of society or the state, or infringe on the rights of other citizens."

Miss Vashchenko, staying in a hospital room with five other Soviet women, said she thought she would be ready to leave the hospital "after three days," but she said she had not discussed her release with Soviet doctors.

"I now think that the American government, and President Reagan, have done all they can to ask the Soviets to let us leave," Miss Vashchenko said.

She said she broke her hunger strike at lunch Monday when she ate pureed meat and potatoes. "I thought I had proved my point. I had kept on the hunger strike for 30 days, protesting that neither the American nor the Soviet government wanted to resolve the case."

Doctors began to feed her intravenously on Saturday night, a few hours after she entered the hospital, and she had a sip of broth, Miss Vashchenko said.

"When I first got here, they said they would not let me die, that they would feed me through tubes in my veins or down my throat," she added.

Lydia Vashchenko, who, along with her mother, had been on a hunger strike since December, talked to reporters from her bed in Moscow's Botkin Hospital Thursday. Ms. Vashchenko hopes to either return to the embassy or visit the rest of her family in her hometown of Chernogorsk after her release from the hospital.

Soviet dissident's wife taken away

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet plainclothes police today searched the apartment of dissident novelist and Moscow Amnesty International leader Giorgi N. Vladimov, and then took his wife away for questioning, sources said.

The plainclothesmen, apparently members of the Soviet KGB secret police, arrived at Vladimov's apartment on the outskirts of Moscow this morning and began going through his papers, sources said.

There was no indication what the searchers were looking for.

Vladimov's wife, Natasha, a former journalist, was taken to an undisclosed location for questioning, the sources said.

Vladimov, 52, quit the official Union of Soviet Writers in 1977 and is a leader of the dwindling Soviet dissident movement.

He became head of the Moscow chapter of Amnesty International in 1977, the same year the London-based international human rights organization won the Nobel Peace Prize.

The work by Vladimov that is best-known in the West is a novella, "The Faithful Ruslan." It is the story of a pack of guard dogs from a prison camp closed after the death of Soviet dictator Josef Stalin. The dogs refused to go away from the camp, believing it would be reopened.

Many readers of the work, which was circulated in underground manuscripts but never officially published in the Soviet Union, saw it as depicting the threat of a return to Stalinist terror.

Vladimov has said he believes the government of President Leonid I. Brezhnev has curtailed much of the liberalism introduced by Stalin's successor, Nikita Khrushchev.

Seven-year court battle ends with Hunt owing oil company

LONDON (AP) — Texas millionaire Nelson Bunker Hunt has been ordered to pay the equivalent of $31.6 million to British Petroleum after losing a seven-year court battle with the British oil giant over profits from a Libyan oil field.

The Law Lords, Britain's highest appeals court, Thursday dismissed Hunt's appeal of a lower court ruling in favor of BP.

Lawyers said legal costs could add another $5.5 million to Hunt's tab.

Lord Brandon, announcing the Law Lords' ruling, said that in 1957, Libya's then ruling monarchy granted Hunt a 50-year oil exploration and extraction concession in the desert 310 miles south of Tobruk.

Hunt did not have the resources, equipment, practical knowledge or experience to develop the concession on his own, Brandon said.

In 1960, he concluded an agreement with BP in which the company agreed to explore, develop and operate the concession at its own expense and its own exploratory risk. The accord included a complicated arrangement for sharing any oil produced.

The venture was successful and oil was extracted from the field in 1967.

A year later, in September 1968, Col. Moammar Khadafy led a military coup that toppled the Libyan monarchy and installed a fiercly nationalistic Islamic regime.

In December 1971, Khadafy began carrying out his pledge to nationalize foreign oil companies. He expropriated BP's half of the joint concession in what was seen as a political move against Britain, a major shareholder in the oil company. Hunt's share of the concession was expropriated 2½ years later.

Brandon said both BP and Hunt claimed and received compensation from Libya, but it was unrealistically low.

In 1975 BP sued Hunt under Britain's 1943 Law Reform Act, alleging that the company's contract was frustrated by the expropriation. The suit sought payment from Hunt for benefits he received from BP's efforts before expropriation.

Brandon said Hunt argued that the contract inferred that BP was to take all the risk of a failure of the venture through political, as well as physical, circumstances.

But Brandon said Hunt's argument had a fatal defect. There was nothing in the contract, or the surrounding circumstances, to indicate that when the parties made the agreement they contemplated any political risk, he said.

Confidence vote seems to be in Schmidt's favor

By ROBERT H. REID
Associated Press Writer

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, facing mounting political and economic problems, goes into today's parliamentary vote of confidence with assurances of a majority in his favor.

Schmidt asked for the vote last Wednesday to end bickering in his ruling coalition about his $17 billion plan to fight unemployment and bolster the economy.

It is only the second time since West Germany emerged from World War II that the government has asked for a vote of confidence.

Schmidt needs to receive only a simple majority in the 497-member lower house, the Bundestag. The members of Schmidt's Social Democratic Party and its coalition partner, the Free Democrats, gave Schmidt their backing Wednesday. But observers said they were watching for signs of defections.

Schmidt's coalition commands 269 votes, but a sizeable number of defections or abstentions could be seen as a major blow to his prestige.

If Schmidt were to lose, he could ask federal President Karl Carstens to dissolve Parliament within 21 days and hold new elections. The Bundestag could, however, elect a new chancellor by a majority vote in advance of the 21-day deadline.

Schmidt said he called the vote to prove his government enjoys solid support in Parliament and the general electorate at a time when the chancellor is coming under increasing attack from the left for his pro-NATO arms policy.

"My purpose is wanting above all to make it clear outside the parties and Parliament that this government is based on a secure majority," Schmidt told reporters last Wednesday.

Unemployment has been growing in West Germany at the fastest pace in the 10-nation Common Market.

Essay contest winners honored at DAR meeting

Winners of the American Essay Contest were presented as honored guests at the February meeting and tea of the Lt. William Brewer Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Mrs. Aubrey Linne, chairman of American History Month, discussed the essay contest. Essay winners were Kathy MacDonald, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd MacDonald; Ginny Graham, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gerald H. Graham; Stirling Warren, son of Mr. and Mrs. Johnny R. Warren, and Amanda Russell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Russell. All are students at Hillander School.

After medals and certificates were presented to each winner, they read their winning essays to the group. Miss MacDonald and Miss Graham both wrote about Thomas Alva Edison, while Warren's essay dealt with Henry Wadsworth Longfellow and Miss Russell wrote on Chester William Nimitz.

Mrs. John Fitzgerald, National Defense chairman, presented a report from a speech given by Sen. Packwood of Oregon to the U.S. Senate regarding the rapid population growth in the U.S. She stated that the present population of 229,666,351 is increasing at the rate of one person every six seconds. She also reported on an article by U.S. Sen. Charles Mathias Jr. of Maryland regarding ethnic groups and their influence on the U.S.'s foreign policy.

Special guests included the parents of the essay winners. Mrs. Frank Bell was accepted as a new member from a DAR chapter in Rockwall.

Mrs. Gordon Walker, chapter regent, presided. Hostesses were Mrs. Frank E. Ittner, Mrs. Clarence Percy, Mrs. E.M. Watkins and Mrs. C. Ed Pritchard.

Young cyclists add own touch to their helmets

LINTHICUM, Md. (AP) — The search for individualism by the nation's young people is going to their heads.

Many motorcyclists who refuse to wear helmets are more concerned with their sense of identity than protecting their heads when they ride, according to a study by the University of Illinois for the Motorcycle Safety Foundation, a non-profit organization dedicated to reducing motorcycle accidents and injuries.

Other attitudes revealed by the study indicate that there is no particular "type" of rider who is or is not a helmet wearer, although the younger, less informed motorcyclists are less inclined to wear them. Many riders refuse to wear helmets because they are "uncomfortable and inconvenient." But concern with being an "individual" while riding apparently overrides safety considerations for those motorcyclists polled who said they usually didn't wear helmets.

However, large numbers of the motorcyclists who do wear helmets, particularly the young riders, are turning to a new means of demonstrating their individuality — with stripes.

"Youngsters all over the country are custom-striping just about everything they can get their hands on: vans, boats, bikes — why not motorcycle helmets?" says Charles Hartman, president of the Motorcycle Safety Foundation.

"Where a biker might not wear his helmet because of the safety factor only, he might put a customized one on because he looks sharper and is admired by his peers," says Hartman.

To encourage cyclists' interest in customizing their helmets — and subsequently increase voly
Oating a hlmet. Amongthem:

—Helmets should never be painted or varnished, as this could damage them and make them useless in case of accident.

—All decorations should be done with tapes and decals.

—Before decorating, helmets should be cleaned with soap and dried thoroughly.

—Helmets to be decorated should be at room temperature and all decorating should be done indoors in a warm room.

Caviar tempter

Affordable American caviar

By WANDA MOUTON
Lifestyle Editor

A special occasion properly calls for something different and exciting to eat, and so it was Thursday at the preview party of the Museum of the Southwest's new showing.

The exhibit is titled "Design and Innovation" and features Midlander Jim Hall's race cars.

Alan McLean, manager of Butler's Pantry, who handled the party and food arrangements for the event, took this opportunity to introduce to Midland the new "Golden Caviar" which is taking New York and California by storm, according to food editors, gourmet chefs and caviar lovers.

Dafne and Mats Engstrom of San Francisco, formerly of Denmark, uncovered this superb caviar while exploring other marketable seafood products. It can be gotten from whitefish of Midwest American rivers.

In appearance, they are tempting, looking like glistening golden pearls, but the real delight is in the eating.

In a telephone interview from San Francisco, Mrs. Engstrom said that "the Golden Caviar has been on the market since November, 1980, when it was launched in the bigger cities of New York, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Washington, D.C.

"There are many reasons for its popularity," she said. "First of all, I believe because it is American. Secondly, while there are many caviars on the market, there are really only a limited volume of excellent quality caviar, such as the Russian variety."

Also, one of the chief suppliers of fine caviar, Iran, stopped exporting after the ouster of the Shah. Prices then skyrocketed.

"This caviar is fresh, it is beautiful and it is wonderful," she said. "The cost is about a tenth of the Russian Caviar, another reason for its growing popularity. In addition, it is available and pretty to look at."

"And the constant remarks I get are 'I never liked caviar before. This is the first time I have liked it and it doesn't taste salty,'" she said.

She advised that "it behaves very nicely if you put it on a sandwich."

Mrs. Engstrom added that one of the most important things to remember is that the Golden Caviar must be kept at 32 degrees, frozen until the day you intend to use it.

The Engstroms are owners of California Sunshine Inc.

Mrs. Engstrom favors her caviar with just bread and lemon when it is accompanied by vodka. However, she puts butter or sour cream on the bread when she drinks champagne or white wine with the caviar.

McLean advises serving it on plain brown toast.

Following are a couple of their recommended recipes and suggestions for using Golden Caviar:

CAVIAR SAUCE

4 oz. Golden caviar
1/2 cup oil
1/2 cup sour cream
2 tablespoons chopped chives
2 teaspoons ketchup
1 tsp. mixed ground peppercorns (black, white, pink and green)
2 tablespoons vodka

Whisk Golden Caviar in a bowl for two minutes.

Make a mayonnaise by adding oil very gradually (drop by drop) to the caviar while whisking.

Add the sour cream and other ingredients.

EASY WAYS WITH CAVIAR

-Tossed with butter, cream, mixed peppercorns into buckwheat noodles, or any kind of fres pasta.
-topping omelets, or folded into an omelet.
-using as a salt substitute ina wine sauce with fish.
-garnishing fish.
-on toast.
-with blinis, or crepes.
-on artichoke hearts.
-on oysters.
-in half an avocado.

Use detergent to clean red bricks

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. —The red bricks around my fireplace are turning gray. How can I clean them?

A. —Use detergent and water. Muriatic acid and water, half and half, will work on bricks that resist ordinary cleaning, but this is only a last-ditch solution. If it is necessary, wear gloves and take all the precautions necessary when working with a strong chemical. Before using the muriatic acid solution, see whether your hardware store or home center carries a product made for cleaning fireplace bricks.

Q. — I have a small table which was stripped and then had several coats of tung oil applied. I would prefer to have a slightly darker finish on it. Is there any stain I could apply or would the tung oil prevent any penetration of color?

A. —Tung oil itself is a good finish, but is not a surface coating like varnish or lacquer. Presuming you do not want to apply more tung oil, sanding the wood is likely to take off most of the tung oil that might interfere with an even stain. But to be certain, after sanding the wood and removing the grit particles, apply a coat of shellac, thinned 50 percent with denatured alcohol. When it is thoroughly dry, use the stain. When you have the proper shade and it is completely dry (wait a day or two), put on another coat of the diluted shellac. If you are satisfied with the way it looks, shellac can be the final finish. If not, use a varnish that is compatible with shellac. The label of the varnKnside there is thin plaster and wallpaper. The wind comes in through the bricks and around the baseboards. Have you any information on how to stop the wind from coming through?

A. — Not enough details to give you a precise reply. Do you mean you can feel the wind on the inside or is it merely that the walls are cold? Don't you have any insulation in the walls? If not, that's your first priority. In any event, do the joints in the brick walls need mortar? Are there spaces in the foundation that require patching? This is one of those cases where you simply must find where the air is coming through and do something about blocking the passage of that air.

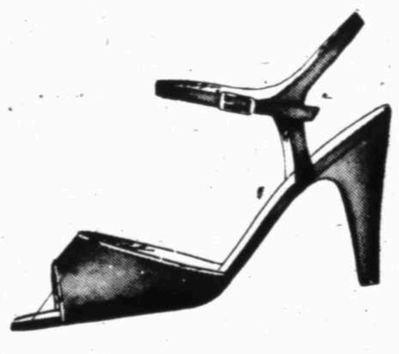

Q. —You recently told someone about how to prevent the nozzle of a paint spray can getting clogged by turning the can upside down after using it, then spraying a few seconds while it is in that position. That may work most of the time, but here's a method that we find works all of the time. Pull off the nozzle and put it in a jar with paint thinner. Leave it there until ready to use again. Been doing this for years.

A. Thanks.

Q. — Some years ago I put a clear lacquer on the top of my fruitwood dresser to protect the finish. It is beginning to peel off in several spots. I would like to remove it and restore the dresser back to what it is was originally. Can you help?

A. —Wonder what finish you were trying to protect, since lacquer can make varnish and other finishes curl up and peel. To correct the problem, put lacquer thinner on the top of the dresser and see whether it softens it enough to scrape off the loose finish. If not, you will have to use one of the removers, following the instructions on the container, especially on what to use to wash off the residue when the job is completed.

Nike shoe business is off and running

By THOMAS LIPPMAN
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — At a bankruptcy sale in Puerto Rico last week, auctioneers sold off the manufacturing equipment of Brooks Shoe Co., which little more than a year ago was making a profit as the third-largest running shoe company in the nation.

On the same day, in a handsomely furnished office on Capitol Hill, Philip H. Knight, president of Nike Inc., talked expansively of his company's future, of its bold leap into the European shoe market and the start of production in four factories in China.

Nike exploded from $28.7 million in annual sales in 1977 to $457.7 million last year and recently scored first in the nation in Forbes magazine's annual survey of major corporations' return on investment. Already the biggest athletic footwear company in the United States, Nike has opened a factory in Ireland to challenge world leader Adidas in Europe.

"We think we can compete with Adidas," said Knight, who has brought in former Secretary of Transportation Neil Goldschmidt as Nike's international marketing director. "It's a natural market for us."

Nike and Brooks represent the extremes of the volatile athletic shoe industry, an industry that grew from nothing to megabucks in about five years and now is entering a new phase of expansion, competition and shakeout of the weaker entries.

THE RUNNING SHOE BUSINESS is no longer of interest only to athletes and insiders of the jogging craze. With annual sales in the United States alone of well over $1 billion, it has attracted the attention of Wall Street analysts, federal regulators and the business press, who watched several recent developments that seem sure to restructure the industry:

— Wolverine World Wide Inc., a Michigan firm best known as the manufacturer of Hush Puppies, has acquired the Brooks name, trademarks and patents, and will begin delivery of its new Brooks line to retailers next month.

— Allied Corp., the giant chemical conglomerate, put its Converse shoe subsidiary up for sale. Converse, which produces 12 million pairs of sports shoes a year and is the leader in basketball footwear, is profitable, but Allied said it no longer wants to be in the consumer products business.

— Running shoes, which before the big jogging boom were designed by runners in a kind of cottage industry, are now being designed by engineers and aerospace technicians, and prices are rising accordingly. New Balance, of Allston, Mass., one of the smaller companies, recently introduced a model called the 990, at a suggested retail price of $99.50.

— Following Nike's lead, several smaller running shoe companies have begun marketing apparel. Prominent runners who are technically amateurs, such as Bill Rodgers and Frank Shorter, have developed their own lines of athletic gear.

— Nike, which has imported most of its shoes from Taiwan and South Korea, has begun production at four factories in China. Up to now these have been lower-priced shoes that did not bear the Nike swoosh-stripe trademark, but Knight said the quality is now high enough that the China-made shoes can be marketed under the Nike brand.

Beyond these shifts, the industry is going through a period of uncertainty as the Federal Trade Commission, which subpoenaed documents from nearly all companies late in 1980, conducts a wide-ranging inquiry into competitive practices in the industry.

The FTC has filed no official complaints and has not even opened a public dossier on the case. The FTC has confirmed that its Cleveland office is conducting "an investigation, the purpose of which is to determine whether any person may have violated any provision of the laws administered by the commission," but it has rejected Freedom of Information Act requests for further information.

Also clouding the picture are several pending lawsuits that show, if nothing else, that the fraternity of running does not extend to cooperative business relationships.

NIKE SUED THE RUBBER Manufacturers Association and seven other shoe companies, including Brooks, in an antitrust case, claiming that they had conspired to persuade the U.S. Customs service to impose additional duties on Nike's imported shoes.

Brooks countersued, charging Nike with illegally attempting to monopolize the industry. In that case, Brooks embarrassed Nike by showing that prominent athletes, including Mark Moseley of the Redskins and Mike Schmidt of the Philadelphia Phillies, had altered other makers' shoes to make them look like Nikes.

Judge Dudley Bonsal of U.S. District Court in New York barred Nike from "authorizing, permitting or causing" any professional athlete to "doctor" another maker's shoes with the Nike trademark. The clear implication was that the athletes were receiving compensation from Nike to wear its shoes but preferred shoes of other companies.

Runner's World magazine sued Nike for libel after Nike withdrew its advertising, claiming that the magazine slanted its annual shoe ratings survey to favor Brooks at Nike's expense.

WITH A CIRCULATION THAT peaked at more than 400,000, the magazine has influenced especially inexperienced runners in their shoe selection. The five-star or highest rating it gave the Brooks Vantage model in 1977 propelled that company from a small firm operating out of a warehouse in Hanover, Pa., into the third-largest domestic running shoe company.

In 1978, Brooks reported a profit of $1 million on sales of $14 million, behind only Nike and Adidas in the United States. Sales more than doubled in 1979 and by 1980 the company had sales of $43 million and profits of $4.1 million.

The rapid growth in demand forced the company into a dramatic increase in production, and quality control problems developed almost immediately. Runners swore at the company as often as they swore by it.

Shoes were delivered to retailers without tongues or with the wrong number of eyelets. Nylon uppers frayed. As many as 30 percent of all shoes produced by Brooks, compared with less than 1 percent for Nike, were returned by retailers, causing a severe cash drain.

Brooks also strained its resources by an attempt to diversify that was apparently financed out of operating revenues. Brooks undertook a major expansion into tennis shoes and apparel, signing Jimmy Connors to a $125,000 a year promotion contract and buying the GUTS (General Universal Training Supplies) apparel line.

In addition, Brooks was plagued by a bitter feud between its two top officers, brothers-in-law Jay Goldenberg and Jerry Turner, which divided the loyalties of the company's managers.

"You either worked for Jay or you worked for Jerry, but you never saw the two of them talking. Each side thought the other side was incompetent," said one former employee. In fact, the two executives went for six months without saying anything more than hello to each other when passing in the hall, said the former employee.

Although sales continued to soar, profits peaked, then declined, and last year Brooks lost $1.4 million. For the first quarter of its 1982 fiscal year, Brooks sales, which had reached $53 million a year in 1981, were only $8.5 million, and the company showed a loss of $4 million.

IN ADDITION, THE COMPANY was so heavily in debt after scrapping 50,000 pairs of defective shoes that in August the Puerto Rico Power and Energy Authority said Brooks' Puerto Rico plant owed an electric bill of $183,885.44 and had made no payments in eight months.

The plant is owned by the Puerto Rican government. Its equipment, which included modern shoe molding and sewing machinery, belonged to Brooks. It was all sold at auction last week, but the auctioneer declined to say how much money was raised.

Brooks executives refused to discuss the company's demise.

"They grew so quickly they just got out of control," said Thomas D. Gleason, president of Wolverine World Wide. To acquire the Brooks name and the right to manufacture shoes bearing Brooks trademarks, Wolverine World Wide paid $1.25 million, plus a percentage of sales for three years. Wolverine will collect Brooks' accounts receivable and take a percentage of the revenue.

There are no firm figures on market share of the overall sports shoe business. Nike's Knight calls the available numbers "pitiful." According to Sports Marketing and Retail Technology, an industry newsletter known as the SMART report, Nike has 48 percent to 60 percent of the market among "serious" runners, those who log 20 or more miles a week. Adidas has 20 percent to 25 percent and Brooks still has about 14 percent.

There is another whole market among joggers, school children, and others who wear running shoes because they are fashionable. Nike, unlike Brooks, has diversified its product line to capture some of that market, as well as the market for "court shoes," used in tennis or basketball.

As of 1981, according to Nike officials, 34 percent of the company's sales were running shoes, 38 percent court shoes, 15 percent children's footwear, 8 percent apparel and 4 percent field-sports and leisure shoes. The figures for running shoes were down sharply from the previous year, those for other products up correspondingly.

Knight said in an interview that the leisure-wear and sports-shoe business is still "on an upward trend" and will continue to grow because "it is health related." Nike intends to continue its corporate growth, he said, by expanding into new markets abroad, where it will take on entrenched competitors, and by continuing to diversify its line of domestic products.

Investors evidently share some of Knight's confidence about Nike's future. The company's stock, traded over the counter, was selling at about $28 a share last week, up from $19 last summer.

IN GOING AFTER THE European market, Nike is taking on entrenched, dominant competiton, Adidas and Puma. Adidas especially is one of the first brand names known to — and demanded by — European children. Adidas' domination, however, is largely in soccer shoes, and Nike feels it can penetrate the growing European market for running shoes.

By establishing a factory in Ireland, Nike is able to ship shoes to Britain and the continent without paying import duties. The plant, which has a monthly capacity of 40,000 pairs of shoes, went into operation late last year.

Knight, co-founder of the company with Bill Bowerman, his former track coach at the University of Oregon, said in the firm's first annual report to stockholders that the formation of its Nike International subsidiary, headed by Goldschmidt, "highlights an all-out effort to increase our worldwide market share." How far that can go is not clear, because as Knight acknowledged with a grin, his record as a business prognosticator does not equal his record as a shoemaker.

"In 1976," he said, "we said that by 1981 we could be at $30 million" in annual sales. "It's gone better than anyone forecast."

DEAR ABBY

Husband may cause broken friendship

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I were invited to dinner by a childhood friend of mine. We wanted our husbands to meet. The invitation was extended after I had called and invited them to our home for dinner. She insisted that we come to their home first, saying they would come to ours next time.

Abby, the evening was a total disaster! Immediately following dinner, her husband picked up a magazine, read a little, then promptly fell asleep.

My friend kept making excuses. ("He's tired.") The three of us carried on a conversation as best we could. It was very embarrassing. My friend and I talked about "old times," while my husband just listened. I felt sorry for him.

As soon as it was proper for us to depart, we said our goodbyes, and our hostess woke up her husband to see us to the door. He never once apologized for his rude behavior. I felt sorry for my friend, who had gone to a lot of trouble preparing a delicious dinner.

Naturally my husband and I were appalled by this incident. Do you think we did the right thing by staying while the host slept? Or should we have departed as soon as he fell asleep?

Should we invite this couple to our home? My main concern is preserving the friendship that my friend and I have maintained for 27 years. — PERPLEXED

DEAR PERPLEXED: There is a possibility that your friend's husband has a health problem. Ask her. In any case, do not subject yourselves (or them) to another such evening. If you want to preserve the friendship, do both husbands a favor and meet your friend for lunch.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 44-year-old divorced father of a daughter, 18, and a son, 19. We live together in a three-bedroom apartment and share expenses equally.

I feel uncomfortable when my daughter has her boyfriend sleep with her, which is practically every night.

I have explained my feelings to her, but she says since she is paying her share of the rent, she will do as she pleases, and if I don't like it, I can look the other way.

I love my daughter, but I think she and her boyfriend should find another place to live if living together is their thing.

Is my thinking old-fashioned for the 1980s? — ALLENTOWN PAPA

DEAR PAPA: No. Don't look the other way — look for another apartment. Or tell your daughter to.

DEAR ABBY: You're supposed to know everything, so maybe you can tell me why nobody wants to use those pretty little guest towels people have in their homes.

I have had the same half-dozen guest towels displayed in my powder room for months on end, and I have had many guests, but not one guest towel has been used. Instead guests choose to dry their hands with Kleenex, toilet paper, the bath towel, the bathmat and even the curtains, while the guest towels remain untouched. Why? — PERPLEXED

DEAR PERPLEXED? It probably has something to do with your guests' early training. ("Save the guest towels for 'company.")

Handicap doesn't hinder reporter

By MARK R. CHELLGREN
Associated Press Writer

MADISONVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Like many newspaper reporters, Garth Gamblin has trouble with spelling.

"I spell worse than a second grader," he admits. Other than that, he considers himself "just another working newsperson."

Gamblin, a full-time reporter for The Messenger in Madisonville since April, covers the court beat, Hopkins County government, agriculture and a couple of nearby small communities. All in all, pretty standard work for any reporter on a small daily.

But there is something special about Gamblin. He has suffered cerebral palsy since birth. His speech is slurred and indistinct. He walks with a pronounced limp, which makes it seem as if he is struggling on a rolling ship.

He also has a quick, dry wit, boundless curiosity and an intense love for his fellow man.

Gamblin, 42, began writing a weekly column for The Messenger in 1964. He was not paid, but did receive a $25 Christmas bonus that year.

With the bonus came the message that he would begin receiving $5 for each column. His journalism career wasn't exactly off and running, but it was moving.

By 1970, he began regular coverage of city council meetings in Earlington for the paper. During that time, he also owned a bookstore in Earlington.

Early in 1981, Tom Clinton, editor of The Messenger, had a staffer on leave and needed someone to fill in.

"There was some apprehension, both with the staff and myself," Clinton remembers. "We wondered about his communication problems.

"For the first few days, everybody was ill at ease, including Garth," Clinton says. "But he has proved to me and everybody else that he would do a good job."

In April, Gamblin was made a full-time reporter.

Like most reporters, Gamblin has had his share of disputes with officials. There was the former Earlington mayor, for instance, who tried to bar him from city council meetings.

Hopkins County officials and others with whom he works no longer look upon Gamblin as a special case. He receives the same treatment accorded other reporters, which isn't always friendly.

On occasions when he does have trouble communicating with someone, other reporters on the staff are happy to help.

Frankly, Gamblin doesn't understand what all the commotion is about.

"I know other handicapped people that have done far greater things than I have," he says. His best work, he says, includes a series of stories on handicapped people in Hopkins County.

There are, of course, problems. Gamblin complains that news releases received by the paper are unimaginative, hardly a localized problem.

Clinton says Gamblin has a job as long as he wants one, and continues his good work.

In the meantime, Gamblin drives his own car, writes his stories and lives at home with his parents.

"I could live alone," he says, "but I don't like the housekeeping."

Book offers advice

Why are pears and avocados sold when they're still hard? Why are some tomatoes tasteless? How can you cook dry beans so they won't cause flatulence.

Ask the people who produce the food.

Mitzi Ayala, a California rice farmer, asked the people who produce the food, collecting tips from a variety of farmers. Their advice and favorite recipes appear in "The Farmer's Cookbook" (Harbor Press, $15).

Pears are sold green because they become mushy and grainy if left to ripen on the tree, according to grower Mark Faye. They will ripen in several days at room temperature.

Avocados should be bought when still hard, says a grower. Let avocados ripen at room temperature, out of the sunlight, for three or four days or until slightly soft. The process can be hurried by wrapping them in foil or in a paper bag. Once ripe, avocados can be refrigerated for up to 10 days.

A bean farmer explains that the U.S. Department of Agriculture has isolated factors in beans that cause flatulence. Beans contain carbohydrates which humans can't digest. If dry beans are soaked for 24 hours and the water is thrown away (don't use it to cook the beans), 90 percent of these carbohydrates are eliminated.

As for tomatoes, "The Farmer's Cookbook" sidesteps the issue. Commercial tomatoes are bred to withstand mechanical picking and the rigors of shipping. They are not the same variety grown in home gardens.

The tomato growers say commercial tomatoes are rendered tasteless by refrigeration. Because they are a tropical plant, they become mushy and flavorless if chilled.

Woman rabbi uses story telling to entertain

By ANN JAPENGA
The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post
News Service

LOS ANGELES — The old men and women of the Israel Levin Center had finished their lunch and were ready to be entertained. Lynn Gottlieb stood in the middle of the room. With long brown hair, huaraches and tunic she looked like a boardwalk minstrel.

"Where's the rabbi?" someone whispered.

"Is this the rabbi's wife?"

With a wave of her arms, Gottlieb commanded quiet. Then, she invited her audience to enter the past:

"A long time ago when there was darkness as far as you could see...." In a hypnotic singsong chant, she went on to tell the story of Lilith, the woman who preceded Eve.

The first man and woman, she sang, squabbled because "Lilith danced in a circle and Adam danced in a straight line." When Adam failed to bend, Lilith left for the wilderness, never to return. Then God tried again and came up with the more docile Eve.

When the tale was over, some men in the room disagreed with Rabbi Gottlieb's interpretation of Lilith as a heroine, not a witch as often is told in Jewish folklore.

But as the old women filed out of the center onto the rainy boardwalk, they agreed they preferred that version of the story and wondered why they never had heard it that way before.

"I like to be revolutionary," Gottlieb later said in an oceanfront coffeehouse in the Venice area. This 32-year-old storytelling rabbi — who calls her services gigs, makes house calls and dabbles in healings and exorcisms — tries to challenge people's beliefs about what a religious figure should be.

She also challenges them to re-create the old stories. "People's attitude is that the tales are somehow not ours to refashion and retell," she said.

Borrowing from 5,000 years of biblical storytelling and using as her cast of characters biblical men and women, Gottlieb examines "the stories that socialized us as women," and retells them with her own unique interpretation. In this business, she said, she's allowed to invent her own stories, too.

Gottlieb travels to universities, churches, synagogues, professional women's associations, Girl Scout groups and storytelling conferences throughout the United States, Canada and Israel, unraveling "a collective account of the state of feminism, Judaism, the world and New York City."

When she's not on the road, Gottlieb serves a congregation of about 150 (15 are not Jewish) at home in New York City.

Gottlieb cut her storytelling teeth during the eight years she served New York's deaf Jewish congregation. It was there, she said, she discovered what people want from a rabbi and so she learned the stories that would ease members of her congregation through life-cycle changes. As Gottlieb tells it, Jacob's struggle with the angel becomes a parable of the struggle for identity. Other stories deal with first encounters with danger and passion, relationships between nations and families.

Working with the deaf congregation, she also developed a stylized mime that she puts to use in her performances.

Gottlieb said she never had a bat mitzvah — unless you count the time she played the wicked witch in an eighth-grade production of "The Wizard of Oz."

Gottlieb's mother was a puppeteer. When her mother founded the Civic Little Theater in Allentown, Pa., where she grew up, Gottlieb became enthralled with acting.

Gottlieb's mother encouraged her to try out for the part of the witch rather than the more popular role of Dorothy. "Leading ladies — Dorothy, the good little girl — were not exciting to her. The more interesting expression of women's power lay in the wicked witch," Gottlieb said.

For the witch's role, G ottlieb got to tease her hair "and learn to shriek and melt." Years later, when she found that Jewish wom en were taught to fear the seductress, Lilith, who was said to steal unborn children, she recast the tale in light of her mother's fascination with powerful w omen who are considered evil.

When she was in the ninth grade, Gottlieb decided she would become a rabbi. Then during college she became "an avid ath eist — I was not interested in organized religion." S he laughed and added, "I'm still not."

After spending a year in rabbinical studies at Hebrew Union College in New York City, Gottlieb felt she wasn't learning the skills that would enable her best to serve a congregation. She began to study with an Orthodox rabbi.

But he refused to ordain her. "He wasn't brave enough," Gottlieb said.

Gottlieb had two strikes against her. For one thing she was female, and there are at present only about 40 women rabbis in the country. For another, she wasn't much like the rabbis turned out of universities. They may be full of academic training but they have little knowledge of singing, dancing and storytelling — crafts that Gottlieb believes should be the rabbi's staples.

To supplement her on-the-job training with the deaf congregation, Gottlieb spent six years reading thousands of story collections in Hebrew. She pored over the Bible, the Talmud, Hasidic texts, codes and law books, archeological studies and mystical literature.

After eight years of study, she was, she said, ordained by two New York Reform rabbis.

In 1976, she founded a theater troupe, Bat Kol, with two other women and they began telling stories. Once when Gottlieb was telling the tale of Lea and Rachel, a melody came into her mind. From that time on, she sang her stories rather than talking them and "the work just exploded," she said.

In her travels, Gottlieb has encountered others who are trying to resurrect dancing, singing and storytelling. Small groups of Jews called havurot are meeting around the country to pray in "a lively manner," she said.

While the grass roots welcomes her almost everywhere she goes, Gottlieb said, traditionalists sometimes disrupt her ceremonies.

For example, she once visited a New York City synagogue where she was the first woman ever to sit on the pulpit. The men started shouting at her to step down. The service came to a halt. Then a woman in the congregation stood and said: "I made those Torah curtains and now you say you won't let her sit on the bema (pulpit)." And she walked out.

Another part of Gottlieb's work is creating life-cycle ceremonies. Now and then, children apprentice to her. She teaches them chanting and dreamwork. At the end of the adolescent's apprenticeship, the student and the rabbi embark together on a wilderness journey, culminating in the building of a type of sweat hut the American Indians used for purification.

As an introduction to Jewish culture for young children, Gottlieb creates naming ceremonies for their birthdays, often going to the homes of members of her congregation for the purpose.

Two families share dog

PLYMOUTH, Mass. (AP) — Judges often order parents to share custody of children.

But this is a story about a dog, and how two families, both claiming to own the 14-year-old mongrel, are going to have to share "Teddy," — or is it "Ginger?"

On Tuesday, Judge Augustus Wagner ruled that for the month of February, William and Susan Graham of Duxbury will own the dog they know as "Teddy."

Then in March, the dog will go Kathleen and Stanley Kroll's home in Pembroke, about 10 miles from Duxbury, where "Teddy" will change into "Ginger."

After that, every other month, each family will have "Ginger" — or is it "Teddy?" — under their roofs.

Mrs. Graham said she was satisfied with the ruling. But an irate Mrs. Kroll said she would probably appeal.

"I'll have to read the entire decision first, but I can't believe such a ludicrous decision was made," Mrs. Kroll said. "It isn't a matter of custody, It's a matter of ownership.

"It's my dog," she said.

But Mrs. Graham said the dog, a collie-shepherd mix, really belonged to her family. "It's funny. We used to own a dog; now I guess we own half of a dog," she said. "But we're happy with the judge's decision."

Wagner cited the "extraordinary powers of a judge in such unusual circumstances" in awarding custody of the dog to both families. He said the dog's limited life span — it is already the human equivalent of about 100 years old — influenced his decision.

It all started 3½ years ago, when "Teddy" disappeared from the Grahams' home shortly after they moved to Duxbury from Scituate.

About the same time, Mrs. Kroll found an injured, collarless dog in the shrubs of her home.

She said she tried to find the dog's owner, but that failed.

"Ginger" became part of the Kroll family.

Eventually, the Grahams tracked down the lost dog and recently took him home.

What to do with(out) agreement?

By WILLIAM GIANDONI
Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — Remember the Kennedy-Khrushchev agreement of October 1962 that ended the Cuban missile crisis?

Apparently, there wasn't one.

At least there was no single piece of paper to which both President John F. Kennedy and Soviet Chairman Nikita Khrushchev, or their representatives, put their signatures, State Department and other sources now say.

Rather there was an exchange of ten messages about Cuba between the two heads of state. Under terms of those messages, the Soviet leader agreed to dismantle missiles and other weapons Kennedy had termed "offensive" and evacuate them from Cuba, and the U.S. president agreed to lift the naval quarantine of Cuba and "to give assurances against an invasion of Cuba."

But beyond that, there wasn't much.

Certainly nothing that would justify the United States today, nearly 20 years later, invoking the 1962 "accord" or "agreement" in protest of massive Soviet arms shipments to Cuba.

U.S. government spokesmen have been complaining increasingly that the Soviets shipped Cuba some 63,000 metric tons (70,000 net tons) of military equipment in 1981.

THE RECENT detection of "another squadron" of Soviet MiG-23 Floggers, the most sophisticated combat aircraft in the Caribbean basin "at this time," according to Secretary of State Alexander Haig, has heightened U.S. concern over Cuba.

The 27 MiG-23 Floggers that Cuba has had for several years are of two different types. Twelve are MiG-23BM Flogger Fs in a ground-attack fighter squadron, and 15 are Flogger Es in an interceptor squadron. Technically, the interceptors and fighters are "defensive" weapons, as are the other 148 combat planes in the Cuban air force, all of which are Soviet-supplied MiGs.

What particularly troubles the United States is the fact that MiG-23 Floggers can be modified into a bomber version known as the MiG-27.

If the Floggers were modified and made bombers, they would become "offensive" weapons and, the impression has been — and apparently still is — widespread enough that the United States would be able to charge the Soviet Union with violation of the Kennedy-Khrushchev understanding.

State Department spokesman Alan Romberg was questioned repeatedly Wednesday about possible Soviet violations of "the 1962 agreement." The most that he would say was that he understands it was "not a single piece of paper."

A MEMBER of the Senate Foreign Relations committee staff told Copley News Service that "to the best of my knowledge, there is no formal, signed agreement."

That discovery apparently came as a surprise to the Reagan administration.

There have been published reports that Mr. Reagan was planning a major speech on Cuban and Soviet intervention in Central America and the Caribbean and that he was going to accuse the Soviet Union of violating the 1962 agreement banning transfer of offensive weapons to Cuba.

It seems to be the case though, that the Kennedy-Khrushchev understanding that removed the immediate threat — the Soviet missiles — from Cuba in 1962 was embodied in the exchange of the 10 messages between the two.

And Khrushchev never promised not to go on arming Cuba.

In fact, in his last letter on the missile crisis, written Oct. 28, 1962, he informed Kennedy that, although Moscow was announcing "the dismantling and evacuation of the above-mentioned means (sic) from Cuba, in doing so we, at the same time, want the Cuban people to be sure that we are with them and are not relieving ourselves of the responsibility of rendering assistance to the Cuban people."

Ships warned about Nicaraguan waters

WASHINGTON — The State Department has warned American commercial ship captains to steer clear of Nicaraguan ports and waters in the Caribbean until further notice.

"Special Warning No. 57," dated Feb. 1 and transmitted by the Defense Mapping Agency to U.S. ship operators and owners and naval commands, noted that the Nicaraguan government had restricted travel to the Eastern portion of the country and said:

"There have been cases of foreign flag vessels seized by Nicaraguan authorities and released after a few days. U.S. embassy and consular access to detained U.S. citizens (stopped while they were traveling inside the country) has been difficult and subject to delays."

The junta that rules Nicaragua is dominated by Marxist-oriented Sandinistas who have close ties to Communist Cuba. A number of Nicaraguans reportedly are taking pilot training in Soviet-dominated Eastern Europe and deliveries of Soviet-built warplanes to Nicaragua are expected at any time by U.S. intelligence officials.

According to a State Department spokesman, a Guatemalan ship was reported shot at, boarded and brought into port by a Nicaraguan gunboat last Christmas Eve. "The Guatemalan captain asserted that his ship was in international waters at the time while the Nicaraguans contend it was in their territorial waters," he said. "Nicaragua claims a 200-mile-wide territorial sea."

There were also a couple of cases involving private yachts seized by the Nicaraguans, the spokesman said. The crews and passengers were released after a number of days.

"But what precipitated the warning to mariners was the announcement by the Nicaraguan government Jan. 25 that the entire department (province) of Zelaya, along the Eastern Atlantic seaboard, was a military restricted zone," he said.

The Newspaper BIBLE

SHALL I OBEY THE LAW OR NOT?

Obey the government, for God is the one who has put it there. There is no government anywhere that God has not placed in power. So those who refuse to obey the laws of the land are refusing to obey God, and punishment will follow.

For the policeman does not frighten people who are doing right; but those doing evil will always fear him. So if you don't want to be afraid, keep the laws and you will get along well. The policeman is sent by God to help you. But if you are doing something wrong, of course you should be afraid, for he will have you punished. He is sent by God for that very purpose.

Obey the laws, then, for two reasons: first, to keep from being punished, and second, just because you know you should.

Pay your taxes too, for these same two reasons. For government workers need to be paid so that they can keep on doing God's work, serving you.

Pay everyone whatever he ought to have: pay your taxes and import duties gladly, obey those over you, and give honor and respect to all those to whom it is due. Pay all your debts except the debt of love for others--never finish paying that! For if you love them, you will be obeying all of God's laws, fulfilling all His requirements.

Critical subcommittees denied briefings

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two congressional subcommittees that have been critical of Interior Secretary James G. Watt are being denied Interior Department briefings.

But several committees with friendlier relations with Watt say their briefings are continuing.

Watt has refused to allow department staffers to meet with the staffs of the House Interior subcommittee on public lands and national parks and the House Government Operations subcommittee on natural resources.

Both panels are charged by law with overseeing how well the department implements acts of Congress and both frequently have been critical of Watt's policies.

Committee aides and members say the lack of information will severely hamper their ability to ensure that Watt is complying with congressional intent.

"Mr. Watt's got 10,000 employees in the National Park Service to provide him with information," said an aide to Rep. John F. Seiberling, D-Ohio. "The chairman of this subcommittee has two staffers to provide him with information."

Seiberling, chairman of the Interior subcommittee, released letters from Watt and Interior Undersecretary Donald Hodel on Thursday that said department personnel would testify at formal congressional hearings, answer written queries from congressmen and meet with members of Congress themselves.

But Watt said "needless conflict will arise" if staff meetings are permitted on oversight functions.

Watt said "The public interest and members of Congress are better served if most, if not all, inquiries and oversight investigations are carried out in formal, on-the-record hearings."

In a letter to Rep. Toby Moffett, D-Conn., chairman of the Government Operations panel, Watt said he was concerned "that your staff and maybe mine are trying to create conflicts where there is no conflict."

Seiberling said Watt had assured him the policy would be applied "right across-the-board."

His head bowed by a driving snow, a mail carrier trudges Wednesday along his route in a western St. Louis neighborhood. Snowfall of 3 to 6 inches dotted the area, adding to the up to 24 inches that had fallen on the metropolitan area four days earlier.

Government predicts further firings of federal employees

By MIKE CAUSEY
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Federal agencies fired almost as many people during the last 90 days of 1981, when the Reagan economic program began to take hold, than they did during the previous 12 months.

The Office of Personnel Management says that 4,148 civil servants were fired between Oct. 1 and Dec. 31. Data from the Federal Government Service Task Force shows that 4,727 U.S. employees were victims of RIFs (reductions in force) during the 1981 fiscal year from Oct. 1, 1980, one month before President Reagan's election, to Sept. 30, 1981.

Data collected by the OPM (an arm of the White House) and the task force (a bipartisan congressional unit) are often at odds because they use different methods. However, both groups predict that further firings are likely in the months ahead.

OPM, for example, expects that at least 3,366 workers will lose their jobs by the end of March. The task force, headed by Rep. Michael Barnes, D-Md., says the number of RIF actions could be double the OPM prediction.

The task force counts all nondisciplinary firings — including those made for reorganization purposes. OPM limits its count to layoffs that are triggered by Reagan economic programs. Whichever version you use, it shows that once-fireproof federal workers are getting burned in near record numbers.

OPM says that during the last three months of 1981, 2,996 Health and Human Services employees (mostly in Public Health Service hospitals) were fired but that 1,800 of them were immediately hired by state and local government units.

The Labor Department fired 401 people, Agriculture 298, ACTION agency 205 and the Consumer Product Safety Commission 90 people during the last three months of 1981. Commerce fired 44, Transportation 41, Environmental Protection Agency 71 and the Federal Labor Relations Authority two people.

Some agencies, facing a 16 percent spending reduction, are asking Congress for some relief. But two major operations, the Office of Personnel Management and General Services Administration, have not asked to be let off the budget hook. Both will have RIFs and furloughs.

Parts of Commerce, Interior, Transportation and HHS plan layoffs and-or furloughs. The Treasury Department is seeking partial exemption from budget cuts.

• • •

The Reagan administration wants to continue flexible work-hour programs in government — but with more management control.

The three-year alternate work schedule test authorized by Congress expires next month. Hearings are under way on permanent legislation to allow agencies to let employees work stretched-out (no overtime) days to qualify for four-day weeks.

Administration officials want the program limited to jobs where it is cost-effective and has proven beneficial to the public. Many supervisors dislike the program (most of them are not under it), claiming it benefits workers a lot more than it does the mission of their agency.

Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., says the Office of Personnel Management didn't turn in a required alternate work schedule progress report on time. She says it is now proposing "crippling amendments" for what she believes is a very successful program.

The National Federation of Federal Employes says surveys it has made show that workers like the flexible schedules, and that improved morale and productivity make it worthwhile to taxpayers.

Houston police make drug bust

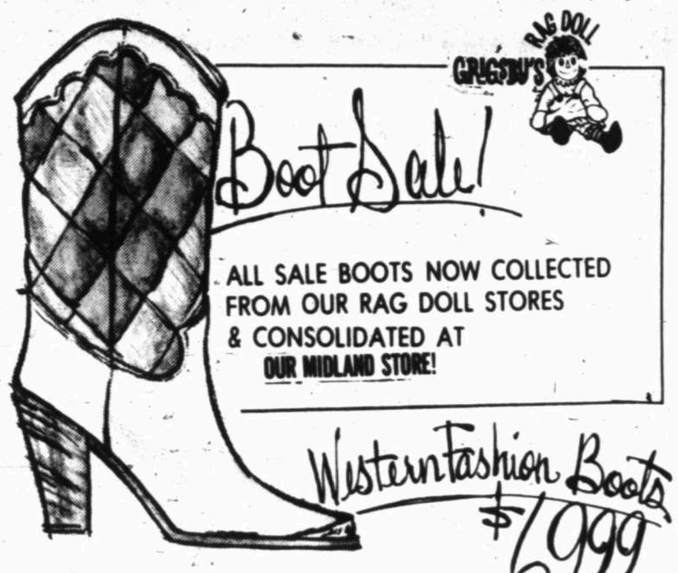

HOUSTON (AP) — Narcotics officers seized 3,500 prescription diet pills in a package arriving at Houston Intercontinental Airport from Los Angeles and arrested two women when they accepted the pills from an undercover agent posing as a deliveryman.

The women, ages 25 and 30, were being held in City Jail Thursday pending charges of drug possession. The preludin tablets, contained in three bags which were shipped to Houston via air frieght in one package, were being held as evidence.

Los Angeles police tipped Houston officials that a shipment of the pills would be arriving here from California at 6 p.m. Wednesday, Officer J.M. Castillo said.

Castillo said he and other narcotics officers confiscated the tablets when they arrived and that he, posing as a delivery man, took the pills to an apartment in north Houston, where Los Angeles police said they were destined.

The officer delivered the pills at 11:30 p.m. to one of two women at the residence. About five minutes later, he said, the two women left the apartment and were arrested.

Bay of Pigs may have led Kennedy to tape talks

By JOE QUINLAN
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — President Kennedy's decision to tape White House conversations secretly was influenced by staff members who denied their roles in planning the failed Bay of Pigs invasion, two close Kennedy aides speculate.

Kennedy

"I think it had something to do with why he set the thing up," Evelyn Lincoln, Kennedy's personal secretary, said this morning in an interview on NBC's "Today" show.

Mrs. Lincoln repeated, however, that it was Kennedy's sense of history that was the primary reason for installing a system to allow recording of meetings and telephone conversations.

"All we did during the time we worked with him was to record everything we possibly could so he could have them for his memoirs after he left the White House," she said Thursday night in an interview on the ABC News program "Nightline."

"In July of 1962 (when the taping started), was when the Cuban crisis was starting and he wanted to record that," she said on "Today," referring to Kennedy's showdown with the Soviet Union over missiles in Cuba.

On Thursday, after the extent of Kennedy's White House tapes was revealed, the John F. Kennedy Library, where the recordings are housed, released a 29-page index of names of scores of people whose talks with the 35th president were secretly recorded.

Some of those who were recorded in telephone conversations or personal chats with Kennedy said they were outraged. Others said they didn't care.

Pierre Salinger, Kennedy's press secretary, theorized the system was begun after the unsuccessful invasion of Cuba in 1961 because Kennedy "was quite outraged at this effort of people disassociating themselves from something that they had been centrally involved in."

"And I think that may have been a motivation for the starting of tapes ... so that he could have an accurate record when he sat down and wrote his view," Salinger said. The former press secretary, now a correspondent for ABC News, said he was unaware of the tapes until the Kennedy family announced their existence in 1973.

Mrs. Lincoln said Kennedy never listened to the tapes, and that she placed them in a safe in a locked White House room. She said she had the only key and was the only one who knew the safe's combination.

Sen. Russell B. Long, D-La., one of those whose conversations with the late president were recorded secretly, said: "I consider it highly improper for anyone to record the conversation of a friend without informing the friend that a recording is being made."

Former Secretary of State Dean Rusk disagreed, saying: "I don't understand what all the shooting is about."

"I didn't mind if the whole world heard what I had to say," said former Mississippi Gov. Ross R. Barnett, recalling many telephone conversations with Kennedy during the forced integration of the University of Mississippi.

Kennedy's defense secretary, Robert S. McNamara, agreed with Rusk.

"It doesn't bother me one way or another," McNamara told The New York Times. "I never said a thing to him I wasn't willing to stand by."

But Frederick G. Dutton, an assistant secretary of state under Kennedy, said he was "bothered."

The Times quoted Dutton as saying, "I don't think presidents have more rights to invade privacy than anyone else."

Johnson's tapes may yet reveal variety of secrets

By DAN BALZ
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

AUSTIN, Texas — It may be 40 years before historians and journalists can get at the tape recordings that Lyndon Johnson made during his White House years, but based on records kept during his presidency and transcripts of several of his earlier taped conversations, there is a treasure of Johnson lore yet to be opened.

It has been known for some years that Johnson had many of his Oval Office phone conversations recorded and that he taped some meetings in the Cabinet Room during his presidency.

But Johnson's habit of recording conversations, like that of other presidents, may be more extensive than is generally believed. Public records at the president's library suggest that at certain stages of his presidency nearly every telephone call in and out of the Oval Office was recorded, unless it was on one of Johnson's many private lines. How many of those recordings still exist is not known.

An examination of certain presidential logs kept in June and July 1964 shows that Johnson recorded conversations with former FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, Secretary of State Dean Rusk, former House Speaker John McCormack, Rep. Carl Albert, Clare Booth Luce, civil rights leaders Roy Wilkins and Whitney Young, Averill Harriman, Sens. Mike Mansfield, James Eastland, George Smathers and Clinton Anderson, Secretary of Labor Luther Hodges, budget director Kermit Gordon and various White House aides.

The library's public files already contain transcripts of telephone conversations Johnson had with other political figures during the pre-presidential years. Some of these are based on shorthand notes taken by a secretary listening to the conversation.

These pre-presidential transcripts, however, are not organized into one file, so no one knows just how many there are.

At least three are known. One is between Vice President Johnson and Theodore Sorensen, an aide to President Kennedy, on June 3, 1963. If it is indicative of other tapes, the profile of Lyndon Johnson described by aides for so many years will someday be available to the general public.

"So much of the essence of the man came across in personal conversations and was not committed to paper that historians will find any transcript of some interest," said Harry Middleton, director of the LBJ library.

In the June 1963 conversation with Sorensen, the contents of which have been previously disclosed, Johnson poured out his frustrations over the way the White House was handling Kennedy's civil rights program.

"...you haven't done your homework on public sentiment, on legislative leaders, on the opposition party or on the legislation itself," Johnson tells Sorensen.

He urges the White House not to send up the civil rights bill until other parts of Kennedy's legislative program have been acted upon. "I'd move my children on through the line and get them down in the storm cellar and get it locked...and then I'd make my attack," Johnson says.

"If I were Kennedy I wouldn't let them (Republicans) call my signals, Johnson says at another point. "I'd pass my program, make them stand up and vote for it. While I was doing that I'd go into the South a time or two myself.... I think I know one thing, that the Negroes are tired of this patient stuff and tired of this piecemeal stuff and what they want more than anything else is not an executive order or legislation, they want a moral commitment that he's behind them."

Another transcript reveals a Jan. 11, 1955, phone call between Johnson, then Senate majority leader, and Sen. Estes Kefauver, who wanted an assignment to the Democratic Policy Committee in the Senate. Johnson tells him the job is going to someone else.

"I have never had the particular feeling that when I called up my first team and the chips were down that Kefauver felt he ought to be identified and ought to be on that team," Johnson tells Kefauver.

"I will let my hair down on this point, Lyndon," Kefauver replies. "Honestly, you never have given me a break since you have been the leader."

Transcripts from these early days may not be completely accurate.

NEW YORK (AP) — The distinction between art and reality is apparently getting harder for TV audiences to distinguish. When a non-working telephone number flashed on the screen as part of ABC's movie "Pray TV" Monday night, an estimated 15,000 people tried to call it.

In the drama, Ned Beatty, playing a television evangelist, said: "If you have a problem of any kind — financial, medical, spiritual — call the number you now see on the bottom of your screen and let us help you to be born again by the spirit of God."

The toll-free number, 800-555-6864, is a "vacant code," which the telephone company assigned to ABC for the movie. It is one of many numbers not in operation, which, when called, gets a computerized response:

"We're sorry. Your call cannot be completed as dialed. Please check the number and dial again, or ask your operator to help you."

Harry Schoepe, the telephone company's staff supervisor for TV network operations, said normally a total of about 300 calls an hour reach nonexistent numbers. But from 9-10 p.m. EST, during the time when the fictitious preacher made his appeal, 10,000 calls to vacant numbers were received. In the next two hours 5,000 came in.

ABC spokesman Tom Mackin said the network didn't consider putting a disclaimer on the screen to coincide with the phony number. "It was clearly a drama," he said. "But we might consider doing it in the future.

Schoepe said that this wasn't the first time a fictitious phone number was inundated by calls because of television. He said comedian Pat Paulsen made a request for support for his presidential bid several years ago and more than 15,000 calls were then made to vacant code numbers.

Army program at LHS

The Army's expanding apprenticeship program and its value to Midland young people in preparing for future civilian jobs will be the subject of a special presentation at Lee High School, Feb. 10, and at Midland High School, Feb. 11.

Paul Barbour, education services specialist from the Fort Bliss Army Education Center, will talk to high school students about how the Army encourages soldiers working in certain civilian-related jobs to certify their training and work experience with the U.S. Department of Labor's Bureau of Apprenticeship and Training.

According to Barbour, who has worked with Army education programs for 15 years, the apprenticeship program is designed to encourage civilian employers to formally recognize skills, training and experience gained in the Army. When the soldiers complete their program, they will not only have work experience behind them but an apprenticeship certificate as well, making former soldiers more competitive with civilians in the trade.

Soldiers in approximately 150 military occupational specialties can become apprentices in about 75 civilian trades while they're on active duty.

Sgt. 1st Class Ed Chambers, local Army recruiter in Midland, will be on hand to answer students' questions about the Army during the clinic.

Company recalling corned beef product as precaution

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Connecticut company is voluntarily recalling some of its cooked corned beef after laboratory tests confirmed the presence of salmonella, a food poisoning organism, the Agriculture Department says.

No illnesses as a result of eating the meat have been reported, officials said.

Donald L. Houston, administrator of the department's Food Safety and Inspection Service, said the salmonella was discovered in a routine inspection of Mosey's Corned Beef Inc., Bloomfield, Conn.

Houston said the "precautionary recall" was initiated because some 130,000 pounds of the potentially contaminated product have been distributed to delicatessens and similar retail outlets over a wide area.

Distribution, he said, was made to outlets in Connecticut, Delaware, District of Columbia, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, South Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Texas, Virginia and Vermont.

Kodak presents disc film

NEW YORK (AP) — Eastman Kodak Co. has introduced a new camera and film system which uses a 15-exposure film disc it calls the biggest innovation in amateur photography in two decades.

The three "shirt pocket" cameras, ranging in price from $67.95 to $142.95, represent a "substantial leap forward" in automation, use a film able to respond to wide variations in light and have a flash unit that recycles in barely more than 1 second, said Kodak Chairman Walter A. Fallon.

"This means that users can take pictures practically as fast as they can press the shutter release...," he said. And the results will be successful in previously "marginal or difficult picture-taking situations," he said.

The key to the system, said Kodak, is its 15-exposure film disc and a lens system it describes as near the "theoretical limits of perfection" for a fixed-focus camera. A film disc will cost $3.19.

Fallon said the disc cameras and film, to be available in May, should reduce the chance of underexposure by one-half, "camera shake that results in blurry pictures to less than 2 percent.

Sodium contents listed

CAMDEN, N.J. (AP) — Starting next month, the Campbell Soup Co. will list the sodium levels of its soups and broths on the products' labels, the company says.

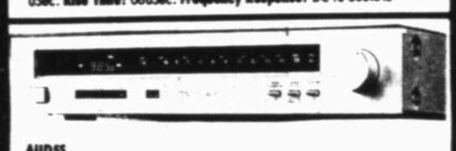

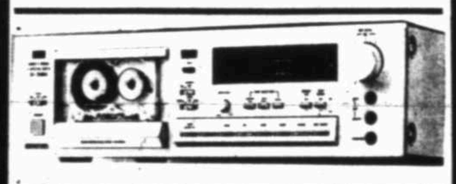

Scott Rombach, public relations manager for the firm, said Wednesday the new nutrition information would be an aid to those on salt-restricted diets.

He said the action was voluntary and noted there was "no direct pressure" to change the labeling. He added, however, that the federal Food and Drug Administration has advised businesses to consider such labeling.

At the same time the new labels, indicating the number of milligrams of sodium in the products, appear, the firm also will be offering a line of low-sodium soups, Rombach said.

The next Herschel Walker...

He's known as Marcus Dupree

By BLACKIE SHERROD
The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

DALLAS – An item in this very space last summer gave you fair warning. The next Herschel Walker is entitled Marcus Dupree and he is hangered at Philadelphia, Miss., was the exclusive report, at least in this precinct.

He is approximately nine feet altitude, can play catch-weights with a John Deere tractor and has several times outrun a goosed jackrabbit over plowed ground. He is agile enough to win the longhorse at the Los Angeles Olympics and has just finished translating Pliny The Elder from the original Latin. This information was made available by our man Jim Roden, who keeps the eye of an eagle on high school prospects in the Southland, lest they escape the tentacles of his beloved Alabama.

Later, on Nov. 29 it was to the very day, we reported somewhat breathlessly that the next Herschel Walker had narrowed his college choices down to Mississippi State, Southern Miss, Alabama, Pittsburgh, UCLA, Georgia, Ohio State, Texas, LSU, Michigan, Oklahoma, Jackson State and the Tampa Bay Buccaneers. Supposedly this eliminated Hofstra and East Texas State.

THIS WEEK, several citizens of Philadelphia, Miss., mounted the platform and announced that Marcus Dupree would soon be tethered at the University of Texas.

Marcus' mama followed up with a semi-disclaimer; obviously she was a bit irked at hearing the announcement on the airwaves, rather than from her own parlor.

An uncle was said to be strongly in favor of a college other than Texas. But the lad's coach and principal and Texas recruiters seem convinced the catch is in the net. At Austin, they were preparing to light the orange tower. Herschel Walkers do not grow on trees these days.

Anyways, if perchance the young Mr. Dupree does pledge the Longhorns on Wednesday next, the official betrothing date, he will become the most heralded out-of-stater to enter this province.

In former years, Jim Bertelsen left Wisconsin's icy banks for Texas and Jam Jones quit Ohio for the Longhorns, and eons ago, Gib Dawson was imported from Douglas, Ariz. Nearly as this memory can stretch those would be Texas' "biggest names" from outside the state. The Forty Acres, like other campi withmn the Southwest Conference, has been peopled by local talent. In fact, Darrell Royal used to point proudly to the fact that his Longhorn rosters were home grown. Why, he had more Texas lads on his squad, he could claim, than Oklahoma did.

OF COURSE, in these days of restrictive scholarships, more and more coaches are recruiting nationally instead of provincially. They are being more selective in their courtships because there is greater and costlier margin for error.

Certainly every major power in the country was involved in pursuit of Mr. Marcus Dupree. After closer examination, the Mississippi halfback turns out to be 6-3 and 218 pounds and capable of sprinting the 40-yard standard anywhere from 4.4 to 4.6, which would put him in the Tony Dorsett heat. His numbers boggle: 87 touchdowns in four seasons, eight yards every time he runs.

Of course, numbers are easy to come by when you are bigger and faster than the competition. But then Philadelphia, Miss., is about three times the size of Wrightsville, Ga., the spawning ground of the original Herschel Walker. There were those scouts who looked askance at Walker's competition and wondered if that pedigree would stand up against major college tackling. The fact that Walker turned out so gloriously focused even more attention on Dupree.

"MORE COLLEGE coaches visited Mississippi this year than in all the previous years put together," was the estimate of Gil Brandt, the Cowboy headhunter. "This boy is really something." The Cowboys, incidentally, already have a file on Marcus Dupree. End in the youngster's possession is an autographed picture of Cowboy end Billy Joe DuPree, a distant cousin. (The Cowboys also had a file on Billy Joe, from the time he was 16 and 6-6 and a football and basketball stickout at Monroe, La.)

Billy Joe's alma mater, Michigan State, tried to get the Dallas veteran to recruit his cousin for the Spartans. He refused, just as he turned down another request to speak favorably of Oklahoma to the boy. "I would never recommend a school to a boy that age," said DuPree. "It has to be his own decision."

There is a growing audience for rating of high school prospects across the nation. There are several of these rating systems in publication, Parade Magazine, Scholastic Magazine, Coach & Athlete, Joe Terranova, etc.

Lee girls keep cage hopes alive

By MIKE CRUVER
R-T Sports Writer

Midland Lee kept its faint hopes of a girls District 5-5A title smouldering Thursday as the Rebels came alive in the second half to defeat Abilene Cooper, 66-46, at the Midland Lee gym. The victory evens the Rebels district mark at 2-2 while the Cougars slip to 1-3 in second half play. Overall, Lee is 19-9 while Cooper is 11-5.

Rozenna McCabe connected on two of her first three shots as Lee jumped to an early 6-2 lead. Cooper retaliated to teke its only led of the contest at, 7-6, when Carla Sheldon nailed a left-handed jumper from 20 feet out.

McCABE sent the Rebels back on top when she grabbed Suzanne McGaha's missed shot and put it back in to give Lee an 8-7 advantage. Shun Harris and Yshun King followed with goals as Lee stretched its lead to 14-7 before the Cougs responded with four points just before the end of the quarter.

The Rebs extended their margin to 20-13 in the first four minutes of the second quarter only to watch as the resilient Cougars trimmed the deficit to 20-19 with three minutes left in the half.

Lee answered the challenge with a six-point spurt to take a 29-23 intermission edge.

Cooper's hopes for an upset disintegrated in the third period when Lee streaked for eight points to take a commanding 37-23 lead.

COOPER COACH Pat Pennick said, "We took some wild shots during the first few minutes of the third quarter and Lee took advantage of it."

Renee Bryant and Tracy Scott hit back-to-back buckets as the Cougars attempted to rally, trailing 37-27. But that was as close as the Cougars ever got.

Pennick said, "Their (Lee's) guards were just too quick for us. They were just taking the ball away from us on the dribble all the time. They are so small and super quick."

Lee Coach Shirley Stephenson agreed, "All of our guards played well. Ludres Duran and YoYo Goodley have been doing a fine job all year and when we have to go to the bench, we have been getting excellent play."

McCabe's 16 points led the Rebels while King pitched in 14 and McGaha another 10. Lee's third leading scorer, Maude Akins, was late getting to the game and scored only four points in four minutes playing time.

Carla Sheldon's 12 points, eight in the first half, topped Cooper. Angela Riggins pumped in 10 to join Sheldon in double figures.

Midland College's Spud Webb (10) tries to dribble around NMMI's Reed Mulliken (42) and Antony Collins in WJCC action at Chap Center.

Chaps turn it on in stretch to beat NMMI

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

After commenting before the game, "This is the game I'm worried about. Not Tuesday's game with Amarillo," Coach Jerry Stone looked like a true prophet with 10 minutes left to play at the Chaparral Center Thursday night.

MC was under pressure as its 42-31 lead dwindled to 51-48 and the typical scare-you-to-death Chaparral finish loomed in prospect.

This time, however, with Spud Webb, Lance McCain and Rodney McChristion supplying the scoring impetus, MC roared to a 90-64 win over New Mexico Military Institute in the Western Junior College Conference race to move into sole possession of first after New Mexico Junior College beat Amarillo College, 103-94 at Hobbs Thursday.

THE CHAPS, winning their 12th in a row to raise their season's to 20-5, boosted their WJCC record to 11-1 to set up Monday's showdown battle Monday in Amarillo with the Badgers, 10-2.

And while the Chaps' victory was by a comfortable margin, it was the last shot of the game that stole the show.

Guarded closely at midcourt, McChriston somehow whirled and, like an outfielder taking a line drive off the fence and pegging toward the plate, whirled and fired toward the basket as the buzzer went off. It went in...and what made it all the more remarkable, Rodney was fouled on the play.

After the game, the Memphis, Tenn., freshman was nowhere to be seen in the locker room. In lieu of a convenient phone booth, he was dressing in a locker. He went along with the foolish question, "Yea, I was trying to throw it in the balcony," he replied sheepishly.

"Just call him 'Rodny McNasty'", teammates chided. "That shot was a combination of Sleepy Floyd and U.S. Reed."

"The name is McChriston...M-c-C-h-r-i:..." Rodney began, blushing under the kidding.

BUT EARLY in the game, it appeared to be a case of the Chaps looking ahead and not showing the Broncos from Roswell, N.M., the proper respect, as Stone feared.

Coming off a Monday night win over South Plains, the 10-15 Broncos seemed intent on making it two in a row. NMMI led 27-24 with five minutes left in the first half before MC reeled off an 11-2 spurt to take a 35-29 lead at half.

Webb, who had been fighting the flu in Monday's win over NMJC, played like he was still under-the-weather, going 0-for-5 in the first half, but he responded to lead the last half charge with 19 points.

Puntus Wilson and McCain each had, 6-6 Chester Smith 13 and McChriston 10.

PERHAPS the key to win was the job Wilson did on J.C. Baty in the first half and Smith did in the second half, holding the Broncos' leading scorer to four points.

"Puntus is playing good all-around basketball," said Stone, and the statistics confirm that. His 10 rebounds ranked second to Smith's 12. Webb chipped in with 10 assists.

The guy who gave the Chaps the most trouble was Brian Huffhines, a 6-1 sophomore from Santa Fe, who came off the bench to sink eight of nine from the field to propel the Broncos to that 27-24 first half lead. And after NMMI fell behind in the second half by 11, it was Huffhines, back-dooring the Chaps to distraction, ignited the rally that brought them within three of the Chaps.

IT WAS Webb and Wilson who Chaps' fueled the game-winning surge. Webb converted a pair of free throws, Wilson hit a 15-footer, Webb added two more free throws, Wilson a bucket from inside and Webb a jumper to make it 61-48. From there, McCain and McChristion joined Webb in finishing off the Broncos, who, in case you worried, stayed over in Midland rather than make the trip back to Roswell. They play Howard in Big Spring Saturday night. On an earlier trip, the NMMI bus was broadsided by a pick up coming off a ramp on the way to a game in Amarillo. Fortunately, no one was hurt, 'But if we had been traveling in vans like we did last year, it would have been bad," Coach Ben Ledbetter said.

After going 0-for-the-first half, Webb was six of nine from the field in the second and converted seven of nine free throws. McCain, two-for-seven the first half, finished with four straight buckets and six straight free throws. McChriston was five of six from the field and Smith had 11 point first half before concentrating on defense and the boards in the second half.

Weather delays Midland, Lee games for a night

District 5-5A basketball teams seem to like a touch of the dramatic this season and will go to any lengths to achieve it. Like tonight when both the Midland-Abilene and Lee-Cooper games were called off until Saturday because of icy high way conditions that has made travel perilous between the two cities

The Abilene-MHS game at Chaparral Center will tip off at 7 p.m. and the JV game starts at 5:15 p.m. Lee will be at Cooper with the same starting times.

The first half race went down to the final night of play with four teams still in the running. When the dust had settled and the chase was over, three teams were still alive, Midland High, Midland Lee and Abilene High, so they shared the title.

But the 5-5A wasn't satisfied with making it a four-team race, it had to go and make it more confusing by adding three more teams to the eligible list, San Angelo, Odessa Permian and Big Spring.

After two games of the second half race, those seven teams are fighting hard to gain position for the final stretch. San Angelo, after defeating Lee 68-63 Tuesday night, is currently out front with a one-game lead with six teams running neck-and-neck (all 1-1) trying to catch up

So far, the only team that seems to be out of the running is Odessa High. The Bronchos suffered losses in both games and are trailing the pack at 0-2.

With six teams tied for second place, there will at least by a change in the standings.

MIDLAND HIGH and Abilene High are two of the teams that want to remain near the top of the heap, but one must fall back as the two square off at Chaparral Center at 7 p.m. Saturday.

The Bulldogs are coming off a Tuesday victory over Big Spring, 71-61, while the Eagles posted a 73-48 win over Odessa Permian.

In the first meeting of the two teams, the Eagles built up a 61-50 lead by the end of the third quarter and seemed well on their way toward victory. They did end up winning the game, but not before the Bulldogs rallied in the fourth quarter to tie the game at 72 at the end of regulation. AHS outscored MHS 4-2 in the overtime period for a 76-74 victory.

Since that first meeting, MHS has gotten a lot stronger with four players taking control of the scoring and the wave attack putting on tremendous pressure on defense.

Preston Robertson, like he has since the beginning of the season, is leading the Purple Pack in scoring with an 18.7 average while Don Sharnowski and Raymond Parker are scoring at 13.7 and 13.2 clicks. Jim Gunnels has come to life in 5-5A plays and has upped his average to 9.2, the highest its been all season.

MIDLAND LEE had a good game against a resurgent Abilene Cooper basketball team in their first meeting of the 5-5A season. The Rebels posted a 55-44 victory over the previously unbeaten (in league play) Cougars.

Going into the game, Cooper was riding a two game winning streak and was in the process of completely turning around it's program. The Cougars had won only two games against 14 losses in pre-district play and was looked at as the laugher of the season. But they proved that not to be true.

Lee should find it a little more difficult to handle the Cougars this time around since the game will be played on Cooper's home court. But neither team should be lax since both have hopes of keeping up in the chase for the 5-5A second half crown. Both teams are 1-1 in second half play and a win is a must with San Angelo up by a 2-0 count.

The Rebels will be throwing the scoring attack of Andre Van Buren, 16.7, Alvin Dunson, 16.2, Randy Pepper, 8.8, Barry Blackwell, 7.8 and Kenneth Brown, 7.6 at the Cougars.

ELSEWHERE IN the 5-5A, league-leading San Angelo will be on the road to face winless Odessa High. The Bobcats can really put on the pressure with a victory over the Bronchos.

Odessa Permian will travel to Big Spring to play the born-again Steers. Permian and Big Spring are both in the hunt behind San Angelo and neither can afford a set-back at this date.

Former LA King winger Paul Mulvey and fiancee Kerri Reynolds wait in checkout counter in market as he rides out exile in New Haven, Conn., area, far from the swirling storm.

Refusal to fight causes NHL crisis

Mulvey creates furor in heirarchy

By DAVE KINDRED
Washington Post News Service

Man bites dog is always hot news, and so Paul Mulvey is much on the minds of hockey fans these days. Here is a hockey player who wouldn't fight. Who knows why? Videots scrambling eggs during "Good Morning, America" the other day heard Mulvey say it was the first time he'd ever been ordered to fight and he simply refused. "I'm a human being," he said in another interview.

Heaven only knows if hockey can survive such scandal. The National Hockey League is on shaky ground already. It has no national television contract and in some cities it is locked in serious war against, cross my heart, indoor soccer. Now comes Paul Mulvey saying he's a human being. When it rains, it pours.

At least the NHL has taken action against Mulvey's coach, Don Perry, suspending him Wednesday for 15 days and fining the Los Angeles Kings $5,000. The team had waived Mulvey a week after he refused to go fetch for Perry. The Kings say they were going to drop Mulvey, anyway, because he is "a marginal player," to quote the general manager, George Maguire. The refusal to fight in a game Jan. 24 only expedited the move, they said.

IF LASSIE burned down an orphanage, it would be no more shocking than Paul Mulvey sitting out a fight. At 6 feet 4 and 220 pounds, Mulvey is loved for his body. His short time with the Washington Capitals is memorable for the tunnel through his dentures, wide as outdoors. For every knuckle sandwich he delivered, he ate one.

Which is, of course, what hockey is all about. Any innocent who stumbles into a building with an ice pond at the bottom of the hill soon grasps the fundamentals of hockey. Guys carrying tree limbs play bumper-car while chasing a frozen rock. They get mad because the rock won't go anywhere near where they want it to. They take out their frustrations on somebody's teeth, occasionally using the tree limbs as toothpicks, but mostly they are content witl blindside collisions and rabbit punches.

The officials stand and wait for the boys to get tired of throwing punches. In wimp sports, referees stop fights, but in hockey, where men are men and your ticket to heaven is validated only after 500 stitches, the officials stand and wait for the magic moment when blood congeals on the pond. This is hockey.

Hockey's history is full of those sweet spots in time when vertebrae snap in rat-a-tat-tat rhythm. One week after Mulvey said no to Perry's demand that he join in a fight the inspirational movie "Slap Shot" on TV lifted hearts all over America. The movie heroes were guys who couldn't win because they were too nice. At the coach's insistence, they became high-sticking goons. Victories flowed like arterial blood.

"OLD BLOOD and Guts" is the title of a Sport magazine piece of 20 years ago. The nickname belonged to one of hockey's greatest players, Eddie Shore. Here's what an anthology's introduction said of the old Boston Bruin: "In his long hockey career, Shore accumulated a total of 978 stitches on his scarred body. He had his nose broken 14 times, his jaw shattered five times, all his teeth lost in combat. He came close to losing his left ear and both his eyes. He took punishment, but he gave it out, too. He was a man."

Space prohibits a listing of Shore's accomplishments, but the magazine recounts the most famous, the time Eddie obliterated Ace Bailey. On Dec. 12, 1933, Shore's work was so pure it remains a lodestar for all hockey players, resistant even to the shame of Mulvey.

Eddie Shore was mad at Red Horner, who had bumper-carred him. "Shore picked himself up and, raging, went after Horner," the magazine said. "Mistaking Ace Bailey for Horner, Eddie flew down the ice and hit Bailey from the rear, slamming into him at full speed. Bailey went down. His head hit the ice and the crack could be heard all over the arena. For 19 minutes, Bailey lay unconscious while doctors worked frantically over him."

BRAIN SURGERY saved Bailey. Shore was suspended a couple of months. Bailey later would excuse Eddie, saying, "We didn't see each other coming."

Oh, sweet song of the frozen pond, how you move us. Poor Ace Bailey knew he had done wrong when he asked that his eyes be placed in the front of his head. You can't blame Eddie for that, no more than you can blame the Los Angeles coach, Don Perry, for ordering Paul Mulvey off the bench and into the fisticuffs last week.

"He was asking me to get a couple of more games in suspensions," Mulvey said of Perry, who was quoted in the Los Angeles Times. "That's not a hockey player ... I'm a human being, and I stuck up for my rights as a person."

Still, you can't blame Don Perry for trying to keep hockey the stirring game it has been from Eddie Shore's time to the glory-gory days of Dave Schultz. By ordering Mulvey into the fight, Perry would keep hockey free of the nice-guy taint that is ruinous at the box office.

TWO YEARS ago, in a minor-league playoff game in Milwaukee, a Saginaw player named John Gibson circled an injured Milwaukee man, Carey Hayworth, who was slumped face down on the frozen pond.

Gibson occasionally would stop his circling to pick up Hayworth's head and punch his face.

This he did three times, circling between stops, while, perhaps spellbound by the majesty of what they saw, the officials stood and waited.

A man who watched film of this great moment in hockey said, "Each time Gibson dropped Hayworth's head back on the ice, you could see the pool of blood increasing."

Milwaukee forfeited the playoffs rather than play another game against Saginaw.

The Saginaw coach was Don Perry.

Vion, Cathomen win Alpine ski gold medals

SCHLADMING, Austria (AP) — Michel Vion of France won the gold medal today in the men's combined competition at the World Alpine Skiing Championships following a victory in the downhill event by Conradin Cathomen of Switzerland.

Cathomen, who was not in contention for a combined medal, was timed in 1 minute, 44.43 seconds. Todd Brooker of Canada was second in the downhill, followed by Michale Mair of Italy.

Peter Luescher, who won the combined silver medal, shared fourth place in the downhill with Austrian Helmut Hoeflehner.

Anton Steiner of Austria won the combined bronze medal.

Vion, who finished ninth in the downhill, won the medal with 12.64 combined points, Luescher had 18.08 and Steiner 20.48.

"It is a big surprise for me," Vion said. "I thought I could place among the first three, but I didn't think I could win.

"I took all the risks," he explained. "I am very satisfied with myself, my companions and my coaches. It is my first and only big international success."

The 23-year-old skiier said he believed that his victory would be a tremendous boost for the French team, which had not won a gold medal since Jean-Claude Killy took one home in 1968.

Vion, who spoke through an intrerpreter, suggested that the current system of running the combined — a slalom and a downhill event — has no great future.

He said in the future the giant slalom might be included again to make the overall winner the best all-around skier in all three events.

The result was a big disappointment for the Austrians. Steiner and Wolfram Ortner, who finished fourth in the combined with 20.69 points, were first and second respectively in the slalom leg of the combined event.

HORSE RACING— Nashua, who raced three years and became a millionaire thoroughbred, was humanely destroyed outside his stall in "Nashua Motel" at Spendthrift Farm at Lexington, Ky. The 30-year-old horse was suffering from complications resulting from old age. Nashua earned $1,102,865 in three years of racing in the mid-1950s. He lost the 1955 Kentucky Derby to Swaps but bounced back and captured the Preakness and Belmont. The Derby loss to Swaps prompted the famous match race later that summer at Washington Park in Chicago, which Nashua won by 6½ lengths. Among his produce were Shuvee, champion handicap mare; Producer, a champion filly in France; and Beidale Ball, the only American-bred horse to win the Melbourne Cup.

Stewards canceled the remainder of Aqueduct's program after the first two races because of slippery track conditions.

Hogs, Horns in showdown

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Arkansas Coach Eddie Sutton said Thursday there are several keys to Saturday night's Southwest Conference showdown between his 14th-ranked Razorbacks and 12th-ranked Texas.

"We have to be able to attack their matchup zone," Sutton said at a news conference. "TCU is the only other team in the league that uses that defense and they don't play it nearly as well as Texas does.

"We have to play great defense. In the first game against them, we didn't do that. We made a mistake by pressing them and spreading our defense. They got us down early and had a phenomenal shooting night. We don't need any 80-point games. I'm sure both teams will be a little more conservative. We have to take good shots and we can't let them beat us on the offensive boards."

TEXAS BEAT Arkansas 87-73 in Austin earlier this year, but lost three in a row after Mike Wacker was injured. The Longhorns broke that losing streak by beating Southern Methodist University on Wednesday night.

Arkansas leads the SWC at 6-2. Texas, Texas A&M and TCU are tied at 6-3.

"I thought before the season that three losses would win the league," Sutton said. "Now it looks like four will do it and the way things are going five might even get a tie."

Sutton said he believed the Razorbacks would benefit from a week-long layoff. Arkansas has not played since losing to Wake Forest 49-48 on Sunday in Little Rock.

"Now, starting Saturday, we've got five games in nine days and they're all gut checks," he said.

THE LONGHORNS' 6-foot-10 LaSalle Thompson scored 32 points, including 12 of 14 from the field, and pulled down 13 rebounds the first time the two teams played.

"I always wonder how come LaSalle Thompson plays so well against us when his field goal percentage in conference games is less than 50 percent," Sutton said.

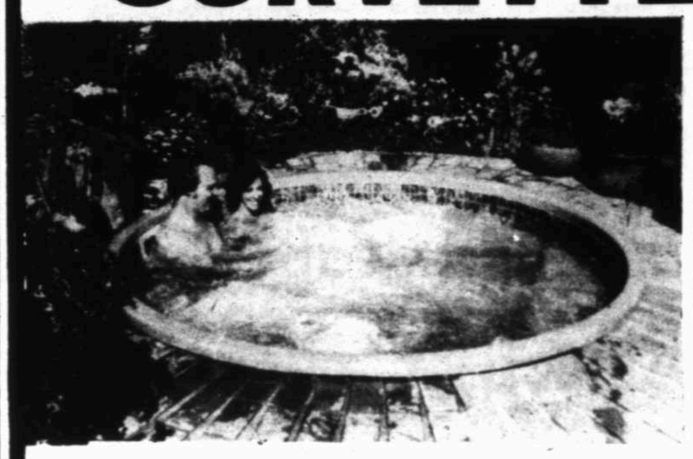

Fred Trenkle, who scouted the Longhorns, said Wacker didn't contribute much against the Razorbacks. "Virdell Howland and LaSalle Thompson and Denard Holmes did most of the damage so they're playing the same guys that hurt us at Austin," Trenkle said. "Howland and Holmes are great baseline players. Texas is the best baseline shooting team we face all year. We have to neutralize LaSalle."

Lopes not ready for trade

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Second baseman Davey Lopes has denied giving the Los Angeles Dodgers verbal permission to trade him to any of the other 11 National League teams as well as the Oakland A's of the American League, it was reported today in the Los Angeles Times.

The South Bay Daily Breeze had reported in its Thursday editions that Lopes had given the Dodgers such permission.

Blue Jays invite hurler to camp

TORONTO (AP) — The Toronto Blues Jays say they will invite pitcher Mark Lemongello to their minor league spring training camp.

Lemongello, 26, is free on a $10,000 bond after being arrested in Florida on charges of kidnapping and armed robbery involving two of his cousins, Mike and Pete Lemongello.

"He called us from his home in Mesa, Ariz.," Pat Gillick, vice president of the American League baseball club said Thursday at the team's preseason media luncheon. "He asked us for a tryout.

"We said we would be interested if he could solve his police problem."

Lemongello pitched for the Blue Jays in 1979, recording a 1-9 record before being sent down to the team's Class AAA farm club, the Syracuse Chiefs of the International League. He closed the season with the Chiefs by winning three straight games and two more in the playoffs.

He was traded to Chicago Cubs of the National League during spring training in 1980, but was dropped by the Cubs and was out of baseball last season.

Last month, Lemongello and Manny Seoane, former pitcher with Philadelphia Phillies and Chicago Cubs, were charged with kidnapping Lemongello's cousins Jan.15 and forcing them to withdraw money from their bank. Florida police said the action was the culmination of a dispute between Lemongello and his cousins concerning a finder's fee for a construction job the cousins were doing for Houston Astros' pitcher Joe Sambito, a former Lemongello teammate.

Players understand deaf coach

By JILL BARNES
Hackensack Record

HASBROUCK HEIGHTS, N.J. (AP) — Basketball coach Jeff Turner looks at faces in the stands to find out whether they are rooting for his Hasbrouck Heights High School girls' squad. He can't hear the cheers or the jeers.

Turner is totally deaf in his left ear, and is helped slightly by a hearing aid in his right ear.

During his own playing days, Turner relied on his teammates' little tricks to let him know what plays the coach wanted to use.

"They would move past me, tugging my shirt or pushing me in a certain direction," Turner said. "The rest of the game is just common sense. I feel I really accomplished something playing basketball. I gained respect from the other kids, and they didn't think of me as a weirdo. I was one of them."

Turner started his own coaching career, on a boys' junior varsity team, three years ago after graduating from Rutgers University. Pete LaBarbiera, athletic director at Hasbrouck Heights, was well acquainted with the difficulties of being deaf when he hired Turner.

"My mother had a hearing problem which has since been corrected," said LaBarbiera, "so I was familiar with the situation. We judge Jeff on his basketball ability, not his handicap. It hasn't been a problem. He communicates well with the girls, and he has a lot to offer us."

It took time for the girls to adjust to their new coach, who has a slight speech impediment, but reads lips and uses sign language.

"If you said something to him and weren't looking right at him, he wouldn't understand you," said senior Kathy Moroney. "Sometimes you have to wave at him or pull his shirt to get his attention."

Besides coaching the girls' team, Turner plays on the Hudson Valley basketball team for the deaf, which has played in national tournaments against teams from California, Texas and North Carolina. He also teaches the deaf at Passaic County Tech in Wayne.

"It's a great experience and a tremendous help to me in coaching."

Kingdome is safe, says study

SEATTLE (AP) — The Kingdome's ramp railings are safe, even though two teenagers fell to their deaths from them in recent months, says a King County study released Thursday.

Independent studies by two consultants agree the domed stadium's railings protect "prudent" people, said King County Executive Randy Revelle.

The railings are concrete walls that border walkways circling the outside of the stadium.

William Brady Wales III, 17, of Seattle, died after falling while walking on the railings on Dec. 4. His father is suing the county for $1 million, contending the railings were negligently designed so people are not prevented from climbing them.

Pamela Lynn Melville, 16, of Renton, fell to her death last Oct. 15. Witnesses said she was sitting on a railing and apparently lost her balance.

NHL goes on scoring binge

An AP Sports Analysis
By BARRY WILNER

The National Hockey League has released its official statistics for the first half of the season and, not surprisingly, scoring is at its highest level since 1943-44.

Led by the incredible scoring feats of Wayne Gretzky, NHL players were putting an average of 8.03 goals a game on the board. Gretzky's Edmonton Oilers led the NHL with 229 goals for 40 games, 41 goals more than the previous midseason high, set by the 1970-71 Boston Bruins. The Bruins wound up with 399 goals that season, still an NHL mark, though the Oilers entered tonight's game against Montreal with 297 markers and should easily break the Bruins' mark.

The Oilers also are the most accurate shooting team in hockey, hitting on 16.9 percent of their attempts. Gretzky, however, was only fifth in individual accuracy with a 28.6 percentage. Boston's Rick Middleton was tops with 30.5, trailed by two Montreal rookies, Mark Hunter (30.3) and Craig Laughlin (29.4).

For the fourth straight season, Los Angeles' Marcel Dionne had taken the most shots on goal. The high-scoring center had shot 191 times, connecting on 27 for a 14.1 percentage.

Gretzky was second to Dionne in shots with 175, followed by Detroit defenseman Willie Huber with 167.

The Quebec Nordiques had the most productive power play, registering 51 goals with a manpower advantage in 166 attempts for a 30.7 percentage. Philadelphia was second at 30 percent, 45-for-150.

The best penalty killers were the Minnesota North Stars, who successfully held off the opposition's power play 84.8 percent of the time, giving up 23 goals in 151 shorthanded situations.

The North Stars and New York Islanders — the two teams which battled for the Stanley Cup last May — each had nine shorthanded goals, one more than Chicago.

The Montreal Canadiens had the best defensive record in the NHL over the first 40 games, earning goalies Denis Herron, Richard Sevigny and Rick Wamsley $250 apiece.

A major reason that the Canadiens remained a bastion of defense in a world of increased goal-scoring was the defensemen Brian Engblom and Rod Langway. Engblom and Langway were runaway leaders in the league's plus-minus statistics — a player gets a plus when he is on the ice for a goal scored by his team at even strength and a minus when the opposition scores. Engblom stood at plus 49 and Langway at plus-47.

Engblom's midseason rating was the highest in five years. Teammate Larry Robinson registered a plus-62, the all-time high, at midseason in 1976-77. The highest full season rating was Bobby Orr's plus 124 in 1970-71.

Gretzky and the Islanders' Mike Bossy tied for third at plus-36.

Buckingham finds, as in painting, sometimes medium is the message

By MARY CAMPBELL
AP Newsfeatures Writer

From the time Stevie Nicks and Lindsey Buckingham joined Fleetwood Mac, in early 1975, until the group finished its tour in support of its album "Tusk," in October 1980, there hadn't been a real vacation.

So they decided to take eight months off, Buckingham says, "for a long period of rest and to redefine our individuality." From that time came solo projects: Mick Fleetwood's "The Visitor," recorded in Ghana, and Stevie Nicks' "Bella Donna." Christine McVie started a project. Guitarist Buckingham made his first solo album, "Law and Order," for Asylum.

He wrote eight of the 11 songs, sings all the leads and most of the backup vocals and plays all the instruments except drums and bass on "Trouble."

The album went to No. 34 on the best-selling charts on Jan. 9 and 16. "Trouble," the first single, went to No. 8 on Jan. 23 and 30. The next single will be "It Was I."

Mick Fleetwood drummed on "Trouble" and Buckingham used four seconds of his work and made a tape loop, which repeats. Buckingham did drum fills and cymbal crashes. George Hawkins played bass.

Buckingham, who enjoys working in the studio more than being on the road, says that making an album is something like painting a picture.

"You get as close as you can to what's in your head. You have to let the work lead you sometimes. A painter will paint something he didn't expect to do. It'll change the whole painting. He'll have to go with it. If you're exerting your ego totally over the work, the work is probably going to suffer."

Fleetwood Mac works that way, too, Buckingham says, which is why the group is notorious for taking a long time in the studio — "though we're not as bad as the Eagles.

"We don't have a specific formula for doing things. We leave ourselves open to try things. If one person brings up an idea, we will usually try it. Sometimes we'll work on it a couple of day. Sometimes the things you're the surest will work, don't."

When his father died in 1973, Buckingham's mother kept his collection of 78 rpm records. At Christmas 1980, Buckingham felt it was time to listen to them, possibly to receive some influences for the solo album he was about to start.

"I didn't want to do a swing album. I didn't want to be that literal. I wanted to put some of the freshness, lightness and romantic feel swing has into a rock 'n' roll or pop aspect."

Buckingham wrote "Love from Here, Love from There" with the idea of making it a sort of Mexican Dixieland number, taking the roles cornet, clarinet and trombone once played and recreating them on guitars, with a raucous drum sound.

He learned "September Song" from a Frank Sinatra-Tommy Dorsey record. "The idea was to do it something like Elvis Presley might have done it, very rocked up."

From the end of January to the middle of April 1981, Buckingham would get up at 9 a.m. every day, eat breakfast and go to a small rented studio in Burbank for 10 hours of work.

Then in April, Fleetwood Mac assembled in France to work on its next album.

"Everyone had continually worked for the good of the whole. Then, having done something specifically for ourselves in the time off, the contrast was certainly there. It made me appreciate the band more. It was fun to get back and work with musicians again. The break helped everyone; we got along really well in the studio."

Buckingham and producer Richard Dashut then finished "Law and Order."

The problem with concerts, Buckingham says, is doing sets over and over. "The repetitiousness can become like a Chinese water torture. There's always something new to work on in the studio. I've moved into a new house and I'll have a studio there. My girlfriend Carol says she'll probably have to slide meals under the door."

Buckingham and Stevie met in a rock group after high school. He says, "We got involved romantically about the time the band was breaking up. I was about 20. I'm 32 now."

They made an album, "Buckingham Nicks," in 1973 for Polydor. "We watched it sort of go down the drain. It took us a while to pick ourselves up from the disappointment of that." When Fleetwood Mac asked them to join, they were making demonstration reccords in San Fernando Valley, with a specific direction in mind for their music. So they didn't jump at the offer, but they decided to take it.

"Obviously it was the right thing to do. Stevie and I are very nasal. Christine is very airy. The three singers created a nice sound."

At the time Fleetwood Mac made "Rumors," John and Christine McVie were breaking up and so were Buckingham and Miss Nicks.

'Chariots of Fire' to open at Midland movie theater

Two runners are sprinting along a cold, wintery beach. Thus begins "Chariots of Fire," a British film dealing with the 1924 Olympics.

This movie opened the 19th New York Film Festival, as one critic said, "in a blaze of glory" this past September.

"Chariots of Fire" opens today at Midland Park Mall Cinema. It has already received rave reviews from many critics, including:

Rona Barrett, Today Show, NBC-TV — "A gutsy, emotional movie about what it really takes to be a hero. One of the finest films or this year or any year."

Guy Flatly, Cosmopolitan Magazine — "Cheers for 'Chariots.' If Oscars were bestowed now 'Chariots of Fire' would surely whiz home a winner."

Rex Reed, syndicated columnist — "A masterpiece. The film's overwhelming impact will touch and affect you."

Judith Crist, Saturday Review — "A stunning film. An inspiring story of aspiration and accomplishment."

Directed by Hugh Hudson, "Chariots" is about two British runners in the 1924 Olympics. One is the son of a poor Lithuanian Jewish immigrant who prospered in England and the other is the son of Scottish missionaries in China.

Special tickets, priced at $2.50, may be purchased at Ski Skeller, Foot Action at Midland Park Mall, Sonshine Corner and Rudd Christian Bookstore. These tickets are good for all performances except those held after 5:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday.

The movie is being sponsored locally by the "Chariots of Fire" Committee. For more information call Chris Davis at 683-9137.

Magic weathers Westhead storm

An AP Sports Analysis
By WILLIAM R. BARNARD

Earvin "Magic" Johnson, his image scarred three months ago by a messy coaching change on the Los Angeles Lakers, is still smiling his way through the basketball season.

"AS LONG as I'm smiling, it means I'm having fun on the court," said Johnson, whose wide, infectious grin is as much of a trademark as his nickname. "The Lakers are moving and we're exciting."

The fact that Johnson believed the team wasn't moving and exciting led him to speak out bitterly after a loss to Utah Nov. 18, saying he would rather be traded than play a half-court offense with the Lakers.

The next day, Coach Paul Westhead was gone, and Johnson's 25-year, $25 million contract with Los Angeles naturally led people to believe that the man who performs with sleight of hand on the court had made the coach disappear with a flick of his tongue.

"If I had known they were going to fire the coach, I wouldn't have said anything at the time I did," said Johnson. "But I had to say something about the situation. When we move the ball, teams have trouble defending against us; when we don't it's a lot easier for them."

SINCE PAT Riley took over as coach, and a speedup offense replaced the slowdown setup under Westhead, the Lakers have gone on to post a 31-14 record, third-best in the National Basketball Association behind Boston Celtics.

In addition to his 19-point scoring average and nine rebound norm per game, Johnson is second in the NBA in assists and first in steals. He is the only player in the game who has proven himself at each position — forward, guard and center.

But the signs that his popularity have taken a nosedive are unmistakeable. He was a distant fifth in fans voting for an All-Star starting berth, boos often overpower cheers and there were reports he would be dropped from 7-Up television commercials.

LAST SUNDAY, when he was introduced as an All-Star substitute to the crowd at the New Jersey Meadowlands arena, he was the only player who was booed loudly.

"All the residual effects (of the Westhead incident) haven't worn off, but in Los Angeles he is being cheered more than ever," Riley says. "People still get on him in other places. But when you are probably the most celebrated marquee name in the game and live your life in a fishbowl every day, you can expect some negative publicity."

Riley said he doesn't know the full story of the Westhead-Johnson dispute , except "it was a classic example of bad timing." by Johnson.

Johnson says the recent reports that 7-Up had dropped him were untrue. He said he had talked with representatives from the compay since the reports came out and they assured him he would make more commercials.

"Everything about me gets written up big," Magic says. "I don't know how the report got started."

Cubs sign 6 more

CHICAGO (AP) — The Chicago Cubs announced the signing of six more players Thursday which brings to 23 the number under contract for the 1982 season.

The six, all signed to one-year contracts, were catcher Jody Davis, pitchers Mike Griffin and Dickie Noles, infielders Scott Fletcher and Pat Tabler and outfielder Mel Hall. Fletcher and Hall played for the Midland, Texas League, Cubs.

Dupree rates near top

DUPREE rates near the top in all lists. Parade's poll places a California halfback ahead of the Mississippi prize. Kevin Willhite, the Sacramento youth in question, announced this week that he was bound for Washington. Willhite has approximately the same numbers of Dupree (33 tds in two seasons, 8.2 yard average) against stronger competition. At 6-0 and 195, he is the state 200-meter champ.

There is natural doubt of such attempts to rank schoolboy jocks, because of the absence of a common yardstick, common opponents. You izable, as in Buck Belue, John Fourcade, Scott Tinsley, Donnie Little, Rod Pegues.

At running backs, there were high school hotshots like Butch Wolfolk, Jam Jones, Chris Jones, Rod Tate. Marcus Allen, this year's Heisman Trophy winner, was listed as a defensive back, a position he played slightly less than two days before being switched to tailback by USC Coach John Robinson. The lists seem dotted with too many bull's-eyes to be blind shots.

Shealy contract extended

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — The University of Richmond says it has extended the contract of football coach Dal Shealy, who brought the Spiders back to life after a winless season in 1979.

The school declined to give any details on the contract agreement.

Shealy was hired in December 1979 after a season in which the Spiders went 0-11. In two seasons under Shealy, the Spiders have compiled records of 5-6 in 1980 and 4-7 in 1981.

"All of us at the university are proud of the job he has done and proud of the manner in which he has done it," said UR Athletic Director Chuck Boone.

"I feel certain our football program under Coach Shealy's leadership will continue to be successful and add to the quality of life at the University of Richmond," said Dr. E. Bruce Heilman, school president.

A native of South Carolina, the 43-year-old Shealy came to Richmond from the Iowa State staff. He also served as assistant coach at Tennessee

THE PUTTING GREEN

Controversy missing link in golf's development

An AP Sports Analysis
By BOB GREEN

David Graham offered the observation almost as an after-thought while discussing his career ambitions, goals and hopes.

"It's too late now. And it's not in my character in any event," the thoughtful Graham observed, "but, in my earlier years, I might have wished that I'd been more colorful, more controversial."

Those are qualities of which golf has been in relatively short supply.

Happily, the game has come up with "color" — that difficult-to-define attribute that largely applies to the ability to attract attention — at precisely the right time. Arnold Palmer and Lee Trevino came on the golf scene at the exact moment the game needed them for its development. It has, perhaps, had its share of color. But certainly no more than its share.

Controversy is something else. Golf, at least when compared with other major professional sports, largely has been lacking in controversy. There have been incidents, of course, and a handful of outspoken, boat-rocking characters — Dave Hill and Tommy Bolt come to mind — but, generally speaking, golf has not produced the series of attention-getting controversies that seem to be common in other sports.

In the last 12 months there has been the baseball strike, Kenny Stabler's reported gambling connection, the Indianapolis 500 flap, the tantrums of Jimmy Connors and John McEnroe.

Golf offers, well, what? George Burns' criticism of the course and officials at the U.S. Open?

And before that? There are only a scattering in recent years. There was Tom Kite's candid criticism of slow play when he was on camera and on the air and didn't know it. There was Tom Watson's advice to Lee Trevino — in violation of the rules — at the Tournament of Champions. There was the famous Hinkle-tree affair in Toledo, more farcial than controversial.

IT IS a tribute to the game — to the character and nature of the game — and to the players and administrators of golf at the professional tournament level that it has avoided major controversy.

Whether that has been a positive factor in the development of public interest in the sport is another matter. To those of the every-knock-is-a-boost school of thought, the relative lack of controversy is a deficit.

Golf, however, has made its way without such questionable benefits.

Its appeal has been built on the timely appearance of its leading players.

And the game has been so very fortunate that it's leaders, its top players, have been the men of character and charisma that they are.

WHEN professional tournament golf first began to reach the masses through television in the 1950s, there appeared Arnold Palmer, non-controversial but deeply appealing, still perhaps the most popular figure the game has ever known.

"Everybody who plays the game out here should give him 10 percent of their earnings," one old pro said. "Without Arnold — if Arnold hadn't come along at the right time and if he hadn't been Arnold — they'd still be playing for $50,000."

When his game began to slide, there was Jack Nicklaus, the greatest player the game has known and the perfect figurehead for golf, a man and a gentleman. His demeanor and pronouncements were, without exception, proper and correct. His Germanic lack of humor was more than offset by irreverent wit of Trevino.

AND NOW, as their skills erode, a new generation of leadership emerges, Tom Watson and Tom Kite, Buck Rogers and Bruce Lietzke and Ben Crenshaw.

They're cut from the same cloth. They are dedicated to the game and its principles. They are the young men of character and humor. They are in the line of succession of golf's leadership. They are not controversial. But the game continues to be lucky in its leadership, It is lucky to have them.

James Bozeman...states his case.

Bozeman denies charges

By MELISSA JOHNSON

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Players are never forced to play or practice when they say they can't perform, Florida State basketball Coach Joe Williams told a special university committee that is investigating mistreatment charges by a former player.

"I don't let my players practice or play if they're hurt," said Williams, in his fourth season at FSU. "But at the same time, I expect them to be in therapy if they can't practice or play."

The five-member committee was formed to collect information on allegations by senior James Bozeman, a preseason All-Metro Conference selection who quit the team in December.

Bozeman later alleged he had been forced to play in the Florida Four tournament with a severe ankle injury.

Williams announced that the 6-foot-5 guard, who averaged 7.7 points during his first three years at FSU, had left the squad because of "personal problems" and an "accumulation of physical injuries (past and present)."

The coach's statement to the press infuriated Bozeman and the former player wrote a Jan. 4 letter to Athletic Director C.W. "Hootie" Ingram asking for a retraction.

Much of the questioning in Thursday's public hearing centered around Williams' statements about why Bozeman quit.

The coach admitted he regretted characterizing Bozeman's reasons for quitting as "personal problems."

"We asked him if he had any problems and he said his problems were personal," said Williams, who added that players often quit after citing personal reasons they don't want to discuss.

Bozeman's letter also leveled charges of academic irregularities in the program and said some players received money from coaches when playing well.

The Tallahassee native repeated the charges at a New York news conference co-sponsored earlier this week by the Center for Athletes' Rights and Education and by Sports for People. Bozeman charged that injuries were disagnosed and treated and incorrectly, althetes' grades were doctored, players received money from coaches and a woman was used to try to recruit a high school player.

Williams denied all the charges, and added that he is still uncomfortable discussing the situation since Bozeman aired his complaints.

"That's the problem. Sometimes I feel uncomfortable because I'm not sure what he's saying, what the charges really are," Williams said.

He told the committee he had always been a "people person" who was close to his players. The coach said he had no idea Bozeman was dissatisfied with the team until the middle of December when he failed to attend therapy after being injured.

Conigliaro still unconscious

BOSTON (AP) — Former Boston Red Sox outfielder Tony Conigiliaro remained unconscious and in stable condition today nearly a month after suffering a severe heart attack, a hospital spokesman said.

Although Conigliaro's heart condition has improved, there has been no change in his neurological condition since Jan. 9, said Martin Bander, the spokesman for Massachusetts General Hospital.

Conigliaro, 37, was stricken Jan. 9 as he was being driven to Logan International Airport by his brother, Billy, who brought him to Massachusetts General.

NCAA Division I upped to 93 by Utah State

MISSION, Kan. (AP) — The classification of Utah State as Division I in football competition for 1982 raises the number of schools in that category to 93.

After Thursday's ruling by the NCAA classification committee 89 schools remained classified Division I-AA and five schools were still under review by the committee.

On Tuesday, the NCAA announced a new list of Division I-A and Division I-AA schools in accordance with a special football restructuring session in December.

To qualify for play among Division I-A, or major football, members, a school must meet three criteria:

—Sponsor at least eight varsity sports, including football.

—Play at least 60 percent of its games against Division I-A schools.

—Have averaged more than 17,000 paid attendance at home games for the past four years, or play in a stadium that contains at least 30,000 seats and have averaged 17,000 paid home attendance for at least one of the past four years.

A school still may be classified Division I-A despite failing to meet those criteria if it is in a conference in which at least six teams play football and more than half are Division I-A schools.

If a school meets only the first two criteria, it may still be a Division I-A team if it has averaged 20,000 paid attendance in all games for a four-year period, with at least four home games a year.

The classification of Utah State leaves the Pacific Coast Athletic Association with three schools in Division I-A, three in Division I-AA and one unclassified.

Abilene's late rally whips Pack

ABILENE—Abilene High outscored Midland High 18-7 in the final quarter to beat the Midland High girls, 52-44, in District 5-5A second half girls basketball action here Tuesday night.

It was the first loss in four second half starts for Coach Jan Young's Bulldogs while Abilene was reeling off its fourth straight win.

Midland took a 36-34 lead into the final quarter and trailed 46-44 with only one minute and 50 seconds left after Missy Larrimore hit two shots.

Abilene sewed it up when Tracy Hubbard converted to baskets to make it 52-44. The Eagles outscored Midland 12-2 in a three-minute stretch to take a 46-40 lead with 2:39 to play.

Janice Littlefield's 15 points led Midland while Tracy Hubbard with 23 points and Sonya Roberts with another 20 provided the winning impetus for the Abilene girls.

Lee girls win

"WE PLAYED well, The girls coming off the bench in the final quarter did an outstanding job" Stephenson said. "One of the toughest jobs for a basketball coach is finding playing time for all the players. You have players who never miss a practice and then only get to play a few seconds. I wish the games were longer so I could play more girls longer."

The Rebel reserves made their presence felt in the final quarter. Jackie Belden came in and played heads up defense, along with Missy Dwyer, Francis Gavia, and Susan Gilles. Gava scratched the scorebook with a single free throw while Dwyner hit a 15-foot baseline jumper earlier.

Lee's reserves more than held their own, outscoring the Cougars 19-13 in the final eight minutes.

Concerning the district race, Stephenson said, "We don't control our own destiny. We need help. San Angelo is a good team, but they must play Abilene, Midland, and Permian and those are all tough games."

There was no JV game.

Gloves change delayed

NEW YORK (AP) — The rule requiring use of mandatory thumbless gloves in all professional boxing matches in New York State was amended Thursday by the New York State Athletic Commission.

Jack Prenderville, chairman of the three-member commission, said in a statement Thursday that because of many requests by fighters, seconds and maanagers for additional time to get used to the gloves, "The full mandatory use of the thumbless gloves is postponed until May 15, 1982.

"Up until that time boxers competing in four and six-round bouts will use the thumbless gloves. Boxers competing in eight and 10-round bouts will have to petition the commission either by telephone or letter for a temporary waiver on the use of the gloves."

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Saturday, February 6, 1982

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: President Ronald Reagan celebrates his 71st birthday today. Joint financial enterprises will produce especially favorable results this year. Other people may be surprised by your taking a course of action quite different from what they expected. Remain true to your principles! Your confidence will convince your associates to follow where you lead. Romance keeps you on your toes but will be very rewarding. A glamorous future awaits those who are willing to make an all-out effort. Generous and personable, you have many friends and admirers. Be careful not to let others take advantage of your good nature. Put loans in writing.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): This rather slow-moving day offers you a change of pace from the hustle and bustle at your place of employment. Self-improvement activities boost your confidence.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your faith is restored when a friend intervenes in your behalf. Writers should go to their typewriters and produce copy that will excite their publishers. The time is right!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A good day for focusing on both your budget and an older relative's needs. Social activities will be especially pleasant if they take place close to home.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Public entertainment is part of today's plan. Steer clear of controversial subjects, especially if you have house guests. Disregard any gossip that you might hear. Consider the source!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Self-improvement activities, research projects hold special appeal now. Get together with someone who shares your interests. Visit a museum or art gallery as part of a small group.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A sensitive day for financial affairs. Postpone doing business or an important partner may pull out. You need to play a waiting game. Keep entertainment expenses within limits.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Forget about always doing things "by the book." A relaxed attitude will impress attractive member of opposite sex. Loved one's change of heart means you can stop worrying about personal problems.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Personal matters deserve top priority today. A meeting with an attractive new friend will put new thoughts of romance in your head! Be careful not to go overboard with entertainment expenditures.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Secure financing before investing any more money in a partnership or business. Love flounders unless you develop better lines of communication. Steer clear of controversy.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your negotiations are successful. An investment windfall is possible. Others may try to divert your attention from friend's needs. Listen to your conscience.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Do not question loved one's sincerity. A last-minute business trip may cause confusion. Use your sense of humor to make an important point. Friend may waste your time talking on phone.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Act immediately on a new business opportunity. It may not be available to you much longer! A former employer will realize that he needs you. Do not turn a deaf ear.

The bidding:

1 ♠	Pass	2 ♠	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♠.

Pessimists make good bridge players. They worry about what might go wrong and often find solutions for the problems they might encounter.

West took advantage of the vulnerability to make a shapely double. But that did not prevent North-South from bidding smoothly to their best contract. Notice that North responded correctly, as though there had been no intervention.

West took two club tricks and then shifted to the queen of hearts. Declarer won the ace in dummy, and the contract looked like a shoo-in. But two high spades in hand revealed the 4-1 break. It looked as if all declarer had to do was cash his high diamonds and ruff a diamond in dummy to assure the contract. He could then draw trumps and claim the rest of the tricks.

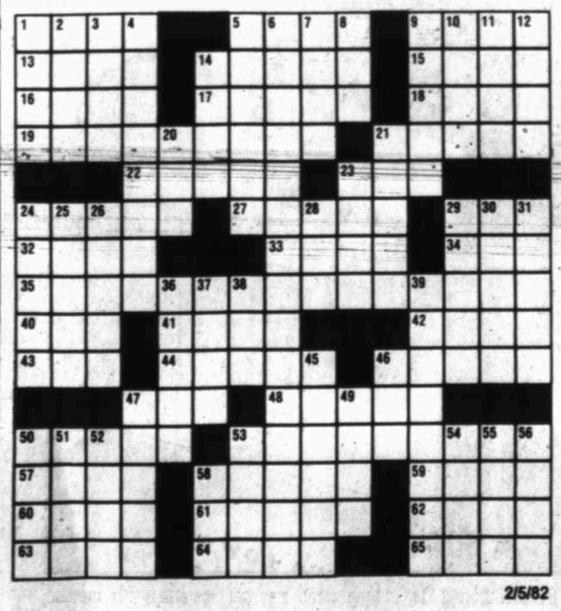

That would be well and good if the diamonds split 3-2, but the double made it quite likely that that would not be the case. Declarer cashed the king of diamonds, and West's jack confirmed his fears. Now if declarer continued with his second high diamond, West would ruff and force declarer with a heart, and declarer would lose control of the hand.

Declarer's solution was most elegant. He continued with the ten of diamonds! It would not help West to ruff, so he discarded a club. East won the queen and made the best return of a heart. But declarer ruffed and simply continued to lead high diamonds. West could ruff whenever he pleased, but declarer would overruff with dummy's queen, return to his hand with a trump, drawing West's last trump in the process, and the rest of the tricks were his. The defenders could score only two clubs and a diamond.

Aerodynamically styled for flights around town.

For 1982, our Accord hatchbacks and Sedan are larger and more luxurious than ever before.

Yet for all their increased length, width and interior space, their fuel efficiency has improved.

Thanks to major changes in aerodynamic styling, resulting in more than a 14 percent reduction in wind resistance. As well as refinements of the Accord's lively 1751cc engine.

Take one out for a test flight soon.
