Gasoline prices

LOS ANGELES — Retail gasoline prices dipped almost a third of a cent overall during the past two weeks but rose slightly on the East and West coasts, an industry analyst said Sunday. Nationwide, the average cost was 119.22 cents per gallon on Friday, down .28 cents from Oct. 9, Trilby Lundberg said. The Lundberg Survey canvasses about 12,000 gas stations. Gasoline prices at self-service stations, including taxes, were 113.52 cents per gallon for regular unleaded; 122.98 for mid-grade unleaded; 130.96 for premium unleaded; and 115.34 for leaded, Ms. Lundberg said. Full-serve prices were 139.45 cents for regular unleaded; 146.22 for medium grade; 154.21 for premium unleaded; and 149.05 for leaded.

Roger Miller dies

LOS ANGELES — Roger Miller, the Grammy-winning singer-songwriter best known for his folksy 1960s country hit "King of the Road," died Sunday. He was 56. Miller died at 5 a.m. Sunday at Century City Hospital, according to a statement released by his manager, Stan Moress of Nashville, Tenn. Miller had said in January that he was undergoing radiation treatment for a cancerous tumor below his vocal cords. Miller rose to fame in the 1960s with a string of songs that became hits on both the pop and country music charts. He won 11 Grammys during 1964 and 1965. Miller is survived by his third wife, Mary, and seven children.

Deer kills owner

BRIDGE CITY — A 43-year-old Bridge City man was killed over the weekend when his pet deer gouged him to death with his antlers, officials said. C.J. "Butch" Johansson, 43, of Bridge City was pronounced dead shortly after 2 p.m. Saturday by Orange County Justice of the Peace Sherry Smith. Johansson had owned the buck for a long time. He was in the pen with the deer and its doe when the animal attacked him with its antlers, police said.

Murphy's baby

RADNOR, Pa. (AP) — Television's "Murphy Brown" has found a name for her infant son, and just in time for the November "sweeps" period. Candice Bergen's character will name the baby after her late mother, Avery Brown, TV Guide reported in its Oct. 31 issue. The episode will air Nov. 9, which falls during the November ratings sweeps. Avery Brown was portrayed by Colleen Dewhurst, who died last year.

Race is in homestretch

Perot makes his first personal appearance

■ Dallas billionaire accuses Republicans of 'dirty tricks.'

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The presidential race is tightening as it enters its last full week, Democrats and Republicans agreed Sunday, but Democratic strategists said Bill Clinton is holding a comfortable lead.

Both candidates, their running mates and even Ross Perot spread out to campaign across the country as the campaign went into its final stretch.

Perot made his first in-person campaign appearance since re-entering the presidential race in July, first in New Jersey, then in Pennsylvania. In Flemington, N.J., he cast himself as more responsible than his opponents after insisting character was irrelevant in the campaign.

"If you are going into combat and you could take any of the three of us, who would you want on your side? If you were taken hostage in a foreign country, which one of the candidates do you think would come in and get you? ... Which one would you lend money to? Which one ... as young men would you want your daughter to marry?" he said to cheers and uproarious laughter.

His foray onto the campaign trail came as polls showed his support growing to near 20 percent, but also as he made new accusations about the extent of so-called dirty tricks by Republicans.

Clinton toured Michigan, gingerly beginning to criticize Perot as the latest polls showed Clinton's lead narrowing from the 15 points he's enjoyed for several weeks.

An ABC poll of 1,130 likely voters interviewed Oct. 22-24 showed Clinton with 44 percent to Bush's 34 percent and Perot's 17 percent. The poll had a margin of error of 3.5 percentage points.

Clinton's campaign chairman, Mickey Kantor, interviewed from Little Rock, Ark., on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press," said, "Bill Clinton's lead has stayed solid ... In all the key states, Clinton has solid leads."

Bush's campaign chairman, Robert M. Teeter, said on

Number of crimes reported to police down, FBI says

■ Criminal justice experts surprised by number of reported murders and forcible rapes.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The amount of crime reported to police declined 2 percent in the first half of 1992 compared to the same period the previous year, the FBI said Sunday.

Some criminal justice experts expressed surprise at the drop, particularly a dip in the number of murders.

By contrast the number of reported forcible rapes increased in the FBI survey. Some experts suggested that women, in the wake of the Anita Hill-Clarence Thomas sex harassment case, may be more willing to report rapes.

Violent crime reported to law enforcement agencies increased 3 percent compared with the same period last year, while property crime dropped 3 percent, the FBI said.

Since the volume of property crimes is far greater than the number of violent crimes, the overall crime rate was down.

About 16,000 law enforcement agencies nationwide contribute information to the FBI crime index. The agency did not provide a state-by-state breakdown. All figures in the report compared the first six months of 1992 to the first half of 1991.

FBI officials noted that the timing of the report is routine and coincidentally was released about a week before the presidential election.

A similar report — showing an increase in crime — was released by the FBI at this time last year.

Some regard the FBI figures as less reliable than a report due out soon from the Justice Department based on a household survey that is not limited to crime reported to police.

It is believed that less than 40 percent of major crimes are reported to police.

The FBI report showed a 3 percent drop in the number of

U.S. stops food airlift after bullet hits plane

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — An American plane delivering food to the starving in the central town of Baidoa was struck by a bullet on Sunday, and the United States suspended its airlift.

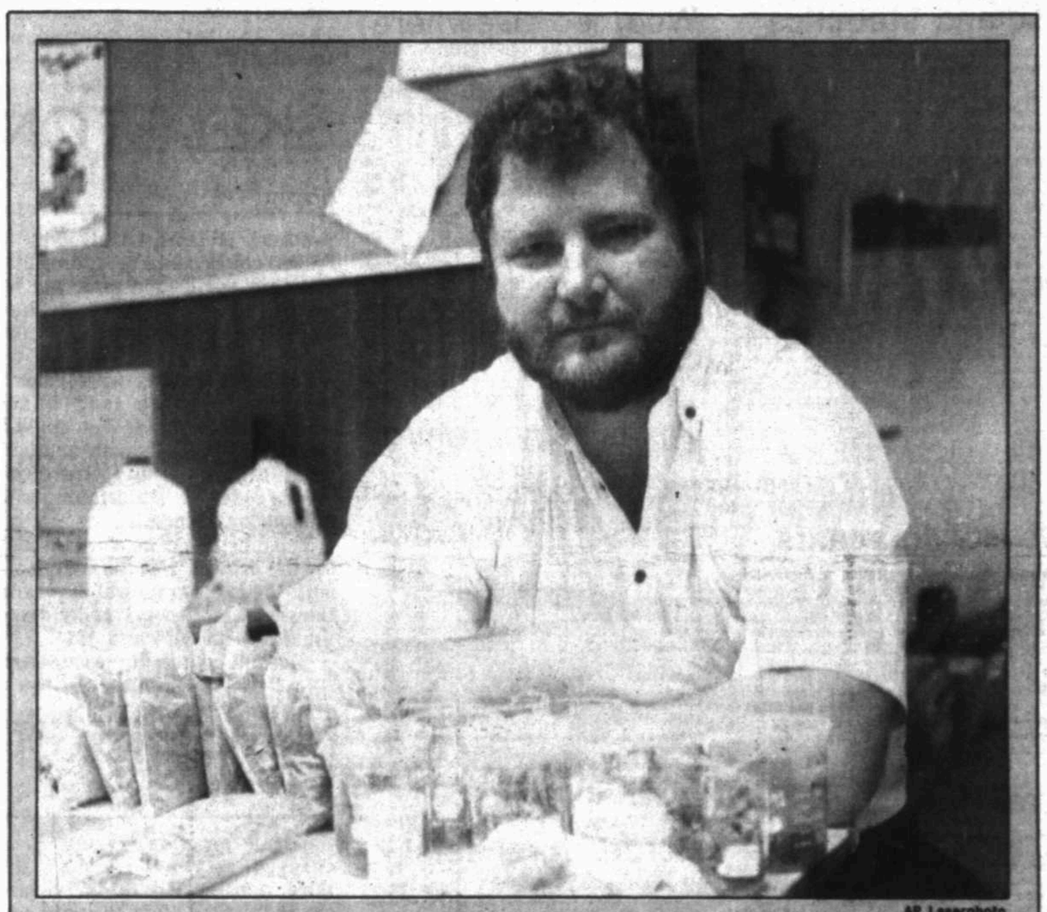

An American spokesman said workers did not know who had fired on the cargo plane.

Relief agencies are caring for an estimated 80,000 people in Baidoa, which is among the towns hardest hit by Somalia's famine. However, relief officials say the situation has improved with increased deliveries of food, and the daily death toll has dropped from a high of about 350 to 70.

Drought and war have killed more than 100,000 people in Somalia this year, and another 2 million are on the verge of starvation.

Clan warfare and banditry have periodically forced the suspension of international food airlifts, underscoring the difficulties relief workers face. As much as half the nearly 200,000 tons of relief supplies delivered to Somalia this year has been looted.

Geologist Curtis R. McKinney of Kampsville, Ill., has been examining fragments of the Midland Woman skeleton to uncover clues about its age. Using a revamped technique, McKinney has determined the bones are about 11,600 years old.

'Midland Woman' is oldest American, geologist says

■ Using revised technique, a researcher says the skeletal remains found in Midland County in 1953 are about 11,600 years old.

Associated Press

DALLAS — Not much was left of the Midland Woman, but a geologist has used a revamped technique to confirm that she was the oldest American — ever.

Like a modern-day Sherlock Holmes, Curtis R. McKinney examined fragments of a skull, ribs and other bones from a site near Midland to find clues to their ages.

Using a technique called alpha spectrometry, which calculates age based on the ratio between uranium 234 and thorium 230, McKinney concluded the remains are about 11,600 years old.

McKinney plans to present his findings today at The Geological Society of America's annual meeting in Cincinnati.

Michael B. Collins, a research fellow at the Texas Archeological Research Laboratory at the University of Texas, welcomed continued research on the Midland Woman, but cautioned against easy acceptance of McKinney's conclusion.

While Collins said the dating "is not an unreasonable age," the difference of a 1,000 years one way or another could be significant.

"We've had claims of human skeletons having been dated at 20,000 and 70,000 and other ages like that based on one line of evidence or another and they end up not being corroberated, or being refuted by later and more advanced techniques," Collins said.

"There's a lot more to be done to verify this age determination," he said.

Poll gives Williamson lead over Guerrero

DALLAS (AP) — Democrat Lena Guerrero and Republican Barry Williamson are reacting predictably to a weekend poll by a Washington-based opinion research firm that showed Williamson has a commanding lead going into the final 10 days of their race for a seat on the Texas Railroad Commission.

The poll, taken Oct. 18-22, gave Williamson 51 percent of the support to 37 percent for Ms. Guerrero, with 9 percent undecided.

"Our campaign has focused on creating jobs and putting Texans back to work. This poll confirms that our positive message has struck a chord with Texas voters," Williamson said.

Ms. Guerrero reacted to the poll data with aplomb.

"There's a lot of different polls. We've got some that have us even in the race, and the poll that's most important is the one on Election Day," she said.

WEATHER SUMMARY
High should reach 80s

Staff report

Today's forecast calls for mostly sunny skies, with a high in the lower 80s and southwest to west winds 10-15 mph, turning north at 10-20 mph by afternoon. Tonight should be clear with a low in the mid-40s, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tuesday should be clear with a high in the mid-70s.

After an overnight low of 50, Sunday's high reached 84, compared to the record high for that date of 90 set in 1950. The record low was 34 set in 1955.

STATE

A cool front had all but disappeared over Texas on Sunday, as evident by temperatures that soared to record high levels for the date in some cities.

Temperatures hit 93 degrees Sunday in Waco, the warmest Oct. 25 in history. The day before, the high of 89 matched the previous high for the date. Austin, at 91, tied its record high for the date.

Abundant sunshine and southern winds pushed highs into the 80s across the state.

The mercury would have reached even higher readings Sunday "if clouds not moved in and limited the excess solar radiation," a spokesman for the National Weather Service office in Fort Worth said..

The lowest maximum for North and East Texas was 85 in Longview.

Balmy, summer-like conditions also were reported in West Texas and South Texas.

But scattered thunderstorms are possible today, the weather service said. Highs should reach into the 90s again in portions of Texas, with lows in the 50s and 60s.

NATION

Crisp autumn temperatures prevailed over most of the nation on Sunday, although it was hot and dry across Texas, where temperature records for the date fell.

Light snow and rain dotted parts of the Northeast. Patches of rain covered the West, where temperatures in the Sierra Nevada dipped into the 20s.

Most of the nation had calm skies, with no serious thunderstorms or threats of serious winter weather. No record cold temperatures were reported.

By midday, snow had dusted south-central New York state and northern Vermont. Rainshowers extended over eastern New England and parts of Nevada.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

KENNEDY: Image has been battered

so that the little girl will think it has been sampled by bunnies.

Public relations? Or the new Ted Kennedy?

A cynic might suspect the former. But it certainly is fitting with the new image Ted Kennedy projects — placid, content, husband, father, family man.

The change has largely been noticed since his marriage to Victoria Reggie three months ago.

"I don't think there's any question that my relationship with Vicki has had a very profound, welcome, happy impact on my life," Kennedy says. He calls their marriage "an emotional time of security and love and a time of stability and commitment."

It was a sentiment the senator would share with 14 journalists the couple had invited to his family's historic Cape Cod compound one at a time over four days. The result: a barrage of overwhelmingly favorable stories about a man who has endured some of the worst publicity of any politician.

"It's a honeymoon, both personally and politically," said Tobe Berkovitz, professor of mass communications and public relations at Boston University. "Right now, the press is playing patty-cakes with him."

"He tends to take a megadose of bashing periodically about what are seen as his character flaws, but he's a politician who has a superb staff who very effectively try to reverse the spin, and they have done that," Berkovitz said.

The couple said their marathon of interviews came in response to dozens of requests from journalists, but most of the reporters said their invitations popped up unsolicited.

"This wasn't happenstance," said Kevin Carragee, a professor of communications at Boston College who specializes in media coverage of politics. "It was carefully thought out to reconstitute his image. They recognized he has a problem nationally and in the state about his image, and this wasn't just something that resulted from requests for interviews."

Whatever the intent, Kennedy's new wife, a 38-year-old attorney from Louisiana with two young children, was a charmer. And she acknowledged that their marriage could be a political advantage for her 60-year-old husband.

"If it is, that's great," she said. "It's certainly not why we went into this."

But timing can be everything.

The senator's image was so badly battered in the last year by the rape trial of his nephew, William Kennedy Smith, that colleagues made disparaging remarks about him on the Senate floor. A new book by a former aide alleges Kennedy used cocaine with his own children and was a womanizer, charges Kennedy calls "outrageous." The aide, Richard Burke, resigned from the senator's staff after suffering a nervous breakdown.

Unlike his fire-and-brimstone speeches of past conventions, Kennedy delivered only a low-key address at this year's Democratic National Convention following a tribute to his slain brother, Robert. And though he says he will be active in Bill Clinton's campaign for president, Clinton campaign press secretary Dee Dee Myers says no high-profile role is planned.

Even the new Mrs. Kennedy is slightly touched by scandal. Her father, retired Judge Edmund Reggie, was convicted Sept. 26 of defrauding a Louisiana savings and loan.

The senator blames most of the negative publicity on his political opponents.

"It's been heading my way for a long period of time," said Kennedy, who is likely to face a fight for re-election in 1994, possibly from popular Republican Gov. William F. Weld.

Negative stories "have taken a toll, and the Republicans believe they have a far better chance at securing that seat than ever before," Carragee said.

On the other hand, "It might also be very well that you see a new image because there's a new life there," said Charles Royer, director of the Institute of Politics at Harvard's John F. Kennedy School of Government.

"He's just gotten married," Royer said. "He's obviously very happy."

Kennedy had lost weight and clearly was in good humor as he and his wife entertained questions in the home of his mother, Rose, now 102.

The couple spoke from matching armchairs underneath a portrait of the famous PT-109 that was commanded by his brother. The room is filled with mementos of the family legacy, including a photograph of the senator with his first wife, Joan Bennett Kennedy.

The walls are papered with such pictures, taken in the United States and England, where Kennedy's father was U.S. ambassador. Many show the brothers who have died in war, plane crashes and by assassins' bullets. Nearby are framed, black-bordered notices marking the deaths of John F. and Robert F. Kennedy. A press aide sits to one side.

The "fact that these interviews were conducted at the compound indicate that his staff and he are quite aware of that reservoir of good will,' Carragee said.

Whether he's a different man, said Kennedy, "is really up to peoples' perceptions. It's really up to them."

The criticism "goes with the territory," the new Mrs. Kennedy said. "I just focus on how he really is."

She said she intends to be "as available as possible" to help her husband's re-election bid. A lawyer with the Washington, D.C. firm of Keck, Mahin & Cate, she spent much of the summer accompanying Kennedy on visits around Massachusetts and has registered to vote in the state.

Kennedy and Reggie knew each other's families for years, but were reintroduced at her parent's 40th wedding anniversary and were married in a private ceremony in Virginia July 3.

His wife portrays the senator as a model father to her children by her first marriage — Curran, 9, and Caroline, 6.

"He's the flame and they're the little moths to the flame," she said of Kennedy, who had three children with his former wife.

The interview had been billed as non-political, but the new Mrs. Kennedy had one item to address, left over from the GOP convention — the business of making Bill Clinton's wife Hillary an issue in the presidential race.

That "is purely a diversionary tactic to avoid addressing the real problems of this country, to avoid discussing the economy, health care, other things that impact real family values," Mrs. Kennedy said.

"I don't think," she said, "a wife should be an issue."

SKELETON: Geologist measures uranium, thorium

(From 1A)

Southern Methodist University in Dallas, confirmed the dating that was first performed after the remains' 1953 discovery. It had placed the age at more than 10,000 years.

But those results were controversial, since the sand dunes where the Midland Woman was found had eroded, with artifacts from higher — and therefore more recent — strata falling into the skeletal remains.

McKinney said he got the idea for the project from John Rosholt, with the U.S. Geological Survey in Denver, who had originally dated the bones in 1955 and 1956.

"Rosholt could not measure uranium 234. But I could with the improved techniques and the result was slightly different," said McKinney, 42, who used a $30,000 grant for the new study.

Believed to have been about 30 years old when she died, the woman was buried in what geologists called a "blowout" between sand dunes about six miles southwest of Midland. Amateur archaeologist Keith Glasscock of Pampa, Texas, discovered the remains in June 1953.

McKinney's findings place the Midland Woman among the Clovis Culture, which existed more than 11,000 years ago. Spear points from the culture, known as the "mammoth hunters", have been found with mammoth and mastodon skeletons.

"As far as I know, this is the oldest skeleton in the Americas," McKinney said. "There are a number dated between 10,000 and 11,000 years old, but this is the only one over 11,000 years."

Scientists believe several other archaeological sites in North America are up to 30,000 years old, but none have skeletal remains. The oldest modern human skeletons in the world are estimated to be around 35,000 years old and have been discovered in Western Europe and the Middle East.

"People argued that the (Midland) skeleton was not as old as the geologic layers said it was," said McKinney, who began his tests four years ago. "I was expecting to get ages of 9,000 or 8,000 years. But all the numbers falling over 11,000 years showed me this was a representation of the Clovis Culture."

Now director of geologic research at the Center for American Archeology in Kampsville, Ill, McKinney said he would publish his research later in a scientific journal.

McKinney's oral presentation, entitled "The Midland Woman: the Oldest American," will be given at the GSA's archaeological geology session.

"I wanted to call it 'Dating the Midland Woman,' but somebody talked me out of it," he said.

RACE: Perot has excellent chance, aide says the same program, "Things have changed very rapidly since the third debate. We think we are ahead in about 12 to 14 states and ... a lot of them are tied."

(From 1A)

Bush began a nine-day race to the finish line, accompanied by chief of staff James A. Baker III, who had been plotting strategy from Washington. He criticized Arkansas' crime record under Clinton's leadership before a group of police chiefs.

Clinton's running mate Al Gore campaigned Sunday in Atlanta with Mayor Maynard Jackson and Rep. John Lewis, making the rounds of black churches. With a close race in Georgia, Clinton needs the support of the state's large black electorate to win its 13 electoral votes.

Perot said at his campaign rallies, and in interviews with CBS' "60 Minutes" and the Boston Herald that the GOP had used computer imaging to doctor a photo of his daughter, Carolyn, and that Republicans planned to disrupt Carolyn's August wedding.

Perot also contends that the Bush campaign intended to wiretap his Dallas business office. Perot provided no names to back up his allegations.

Bush spokesman Marlin Fitzwater responded: "It's preposterous. There's simply nothing to it. ... It never happened. There haven't been any dirty tricks against Ross Perot. This business about his daughter is just crazy and he's been told that and he knows that."

As Perot hit the campaign trail, he and his aides underscored that they're in the race to win. And while Democrats and Republicans insisted he wouldn't, they paid him more attention than he's had in months.

Perot's coordinator, Orson Swindle, said on NBC, "I think we have an excellent chance of winning this thing. Mr. Perot becomes more credible with each passing day. We are going to see a very tight three-way race."

Teeter, asked whether Perot's gains were helping Bush, said that "with a three-way race, it tends to make things more volatile, it tends to make decision-making later, both of which I think do work to our advantage."

CRIME: Figures show decrease, FBI reports

(From 1A)

reported murders, a 1 percent decrease in robberies, a 4 percent rise in forcible rapes and a 6 percent jump in aggravated assaults.

Alfred Blumstein, dean of the school of urban and public affairs at Carnegie Mellon University in Pittsburgh, said he is surprised by the decline in the number of murders.

He said he has heard reports that murders committed by people who were strangers to their victims may be increasing, while the number of murders among acquaintances is declining.

"But I don't have a good explanation," he said. "I must say, it surprises me."

By contrast, said Blumstein, a reported dip in property crimes is easier to understand. There are fewer people nationally in the 15- to 19-year-old age group that accounts for most of the crimes.

The FBI — which does not break down statistics by age group — said burglary dropped 4 percent, larceny-theft 3 percent and car theft 2 percent. Arson increased 6 percent, the only rise among property crimes.

University of Massachusetts professor Jeff Sedgwick said, "Some of the figures are the exact opposite of what I would have expected."

Particularly surprising is the drop in murders, he said, since usually more murders are committed by older felons, and the change in demographics does not easily account for the dip.

"We need to be focusing on explanations other than demographics," Sedgwick said. But he did not offer any immediate theories.

The rise in reported rapes makes more sense, he said. "In a year that's seen the Anita Hill case" and other highly publicized rape allegations, he said, "more women are willing to come forward."

Ms. Hill is a law professor who accused Clarence Thomas of sexual harassment at explosive Senate Judiciary Committee hearings last year on his nomination to the Supreme Court. Thomas vehemently denied the charges and was confirmed to the court.

The latest FBI index also showed that only in the West was there an increase in reported crime — up 2 percent. Crime dropped 5 percent in the Midwest, 4 percent in the Northeast and 3 percent in the South.

Also, the index showed a drop of 6 percent in crime in cities with population of more than 1 million. Suburban county law enforcement agencies reported a 1 percent decline, and rural counties a 4 percent decline.

FOOD: Bullet hits fuel tank of military C-130

(From 1A)

It was the second time a U.S. plane was hit by gunfire since the Americans began their emergency airlift of food on Aug. 21. Another C-130 was hit by a stray bullet on Sept. 18 in the western town of Belet Huen, causing a two-week suspension of U.S. flights to that town.

In the last week, a German relief plane was hit by a bullet at Mogadishu's airport, and on Saturday two planes for the International Committee of the Red Cross were fired on in the southern port of Kismayu.

In Sunday's incident, the U.S. plane was making the second of 12 flights planned for Baidoa, said Army Lt. Col. Robert Donnelly, the spokesman for the American operation, based in Kenya's coastal city of Mombasa.

Donnelly said the military C-130 Hercules was shot as it approached Baidoa's airstrip on Sunday morning.

"One bullet hit the aircraft," said Donnelly, 43, of Suffern, N.Y. "We don't know how many shots were fired or where the bullet was fired from."

He said the bullet hit the right external fuel tank and it was only discovered when a crew member looked out a window and saw fuel leaking. No one was hurt, and the plane returned to Mombasa.

The remaining 10 flights were suspended, with some diverted to Hoddur, 80 miles to the north.

Donnelly said there was no apparent increase in tensions in Baidoa, which has been a center of relief work since international efforts stepped up three months ago.

"But one thing that characterizes all of the places we fly into is volatility," he said. "One minute it can be calm, and 15 minutes later there can be a firefight."

Since starting their airlift, the United States has delivered close to 11,000 tons of food. Fourteen C-130s and about 600 military personnel are stationed in Mombasa to run the relief operation.

In addition to the United States, other nations running airlifts to the hungry are Canada, Germany, France and Belgium.

Meanwhile, the United Nations has begun helping some Somalis leave refugee-clogged towns in Kenya and resume farming in their nearly deserted villages, an official said.

About 800 Somalis have returned in the past week, and 5,000 more have indicated an interest in going, Panos Moumtzis, spokesman for the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees, said in Nairobi, Kenya.

The numbers are small considering the number living in the settlements — as many as 60,000 in Mandera and 18,000 in El Wak. More than 400,000 Somalis have fled to Kenya in the past 18 months.

Moumtzis said the expatriates were given transportation back to their villages and provided with food and seeds for planting.

POLL: Williamson leads Guerrero by 14 percent conducted the poll on behalf of several different Texas media outlets, said 593 registered Texans who said they are likely to vote in the race were interviewed by telephone Oct. 18, 20, 21 and 22 from a random statewide sample.

(From 1A)

The poll was made public on Sunday.

The firm said the error due to sampling could be plus or minus 4.3 percentage points.

Ms. Guerrero got a favorable rating from 22 percent of those surveyed. However, 41 percent rated her unfavorably. Williamson showed a 25 percent favorable rating and only 17 percent unfavorable.

Ms. Guerrero is a former Austin legislator who resigned recently from a gubernatorial appointment to the commission after admitting she lied about having completed college as an honors graduate.

She apologized for her deceptions, but continued campaigning for the commission.

The poll showed Williamson to be an overwhelming choice among Republicans and Anglos. Ms. Guerrero fared best among Democrats, Hispanics and blacks. She was favored by 58 percent of the Hispanics, to 28 percent for Williamson.

The poll said Williamson had the support of 82 percent of Republicans surveyed, while Ms. Guerrero had the backing of 69 percent of Democrats polled.

Ms. Guerrero's unfavorable rating in Texas (41 percent) was listed as second only to that of Vice Presidential Dan Quayle.

U.S. Embassy evacuates in Tajikistan

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Embassy in Tajikistan was evacuated Sunday as street fighting raged in the capital city of Dushanbe, the State Department said.

The "increasingly volatile security situation" was blamed for the temporary departure of embassy personnel, press officer Julie Reside said in a statement released shortly after the evacuation.

Ambassador Stanley Escudero and other embassy officials will return to Dushanbe as soon as security allows, Reside said, adding that the evacuation does not affect diplomatic relations between the United States and Tajikistan.

Escudero told the State Department on Saturday that there had been heavy fighting, including tank and machine-gun fire, around the hotel that houses the embassy and its staff.

The fighting intensified after rebels supporting ousted President Rakhmon Nabiyev seized key government buildings. Details of the takeover in the former Soviet republic were sketchy. ITAR-Tass and the Interfax news agency reported an unknown number of casualties in fighting between rebels and Tajik government troops.

Tajikistan, an impoverished nation of 5.1 million, has been wracked by civil strife since spring. According to Tajik estimates, thousands have been killed.

Pope beatifies 122 from Spanish Civil War

VATICAN CITY — Pope John Paul II on Sunday beatified 122 seminarians, priests and other religious Spaniards who died for their faith during the Spanish Civil War, declaring them inspiration for today's troubled priesthood.

Beatification is the last formal step in the process toward sainthood in the Roman Catholic church.

The Spaniards died in 1936 during anti-Catholic violence. That year Catholic priests and lay people were killed by the thousands in Republican-held territory.

Of those beatified Sunday, 51 were priests and seminarians at the Caretian missionary seminary in Barbastro in Aragon. Most were men in their early 20s, on the verge of ordination, when they were shot in groups of five.

China, Russia cooperate on Mars mission

BEIJING — Chinese and Russian scientists are preparing for a joint mission to explore Mars and look for signs of life, an official report said Sunday.

For the past two years, scientists from the Chinese Academy of Sciences have been working with the Russian Academy of Sciences researching and making high-altitude sounding balloons for detecting cosmic rays and studying space environment, the official Xinhua News Agency reported.

Yuri Sergeevich Osipov, the president of the Russian academy, was quoted as saying they were preparing to launch a spacecraft in 1994 that will orbit Mars and collect data. A second launch in 1996 will land on the planet to explore its climate and geology and search for signs of life.

The project has been dubbed Mars-96.

France, Italy and the United States also are working on the project, but Osipov did not give details of their work.

Guerrilla bomb kills 5 in south Lebanon

RASHAYA, Lebanon — Muslim guerrillas bombed an Israeli military convoy Sunday, killing five soldiers and wounding at least five in the bloodiest attack against Israel in south Lebanon in two years, authorities said.

The Islamic Resistance, the military wing of the pro-Iranian Hezbollah, claimed responsibility for the attack in a statement broadcast by its radio station, Voice of Islam.

The bombing followed a surge in Arab-Israeli violence as the seventh round of Middle East peace talks was under way in Washington.

Seven soldiers were wounded in the blast in the village of Ahmadiyeh on the northern edge of Israel's self-designated security zone, according to security sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

In Jerusalem, the Israeli army confirmed the attack and fatalities, but said only five soldiers were injured. The report was delayed for nine hours military censors while the army notified relatives of the slain soldiers.

Campaign winds up for Canada's referendum

TORONTO (AP) — All referendum advertising was banned on Sunday, the last day Canadians had to ponder their vote on a complex package of constitutional reforms aimed at holding this sometimes fractious country together.

The Elections Department said 18.5 million people were eligible to vote in the nonbinding referendum today that asks this singular question: "Do you agree that the constitution of Canada should be renewed on the basis of the agreement reached on Aug. 28, 1992?"

That agreement was negotiated by federal, provincial and native officials over a period of months and signed by Prime Minister Brian Mulroney and the premiers of all 10 provinces in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island.

Though a myriad of polls indicate the referendum will fail in Quebec, British Columbia and probably some of the Western provinces, Mulroney maintained his private polls showed differently.

"The 'undecideds' are going to resolve this matter," the prime minister said to conclude a grueling campaign for the "Yes" side. He said they would resolve it "in the interests of the children and grandchildren."

"When they're spending some time over the weekend thinking about (October) 26th, I ask them to take a little time to think about the 27th, and all the 27ths thereafter."

The key parts of the complicated Charlottetown agreement recognize the French-speaking province of Quebec as a "distinct society;" guarantee Quebec 25 percent of the House of Commons permanently; and give each province equal representation in the Senate.

Others provisions of the accord would grant the provinces additional jurisdiction; change the process for amending the constitution; and recognize the right of aboriginals to self-government.

Quebec, with 6.9 million of Canada's 26 million people, feels its French language, culture and institutions are threatened with absorption into the Anglophone sea that surrounds them in North America. Quebeckers want to be recognized a special case, with special powers to protect their way of life.

Western provinces, on the other hand, long have felt underrepresented in Ottawa, where the more populous eastern provinces dominate the House and the Senate. Senate reform has been a key issue for the west.

The "Yes" forces poured the last of their money into the advertising campaign Saturday. One of the ads showed Quebec separatist leaders Jacques Parizeau and Lucien Bouchard laughing. The ad says: "The reason they are smiling is ... they think you'll vote 'No' too."

There is no immediate danger of Quebec secession from Canada. Premier Robert Bourassa, who signed the Charlottetown accord and campaigned in favor of the agreement, remains in power for two more years. He does not have to call a provincial election before 1994.

Parizeau, leader of the separatist Parti Quebecois and an avowed backer of independence, says he plans to win that election and within eight to 10 months will hold a referendum in the province on sovereignty.

The Charlottetown agreement must be approved by Parliament and all 10 provinces before it can go into effect.

But Mulroney has said if the deal fails in any one province in the referendum, it is dead. He said it would be morally unacceptable" for governments to go ahead with the agreement in the face of rejection by the voters.

Turmoil causes many whites to flee South Africa

By Tom Cohen
Associated Press writer

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Inside the house that is no longer hers, with the "sold" sign out front, Glenda Holding explained that she and her family were moving to England out of fear.

"You're so scared, you have to live with locked doors and security gates and dogs," she said softly as her daughter Ashleigh, 20 months old, played on the carpet.

Thousands of whites, from doctors to farmers to artists, are either planning to leave South Africa or considering it as the country tries to end decades of apartheid in favor of multiracial rule.

As reasons, they cite political uncertainty, a crumbling economy, increasing crime and violence. The underlying message is that they believe black rule is imminent and will destroy the country and their way of life.

Some political leaders say the nation will become more stable when blacks are included in the government, which could happen next year. But South Africa's 5 million whites, accustomed to being coddled under apartheid, are facing growing hardship because of high inflation and unemployment.

Many whites point to Zimbabwe, the northern neighbor once known as Rhodesia that became a black-ruled republic in 1980, after seven years of bush war. Zimbabwe's economy has collapsed under a government accused of corruption and mismanagement.

"If Zimbabwe was still Rhodesia, I'd go back," said Hank Hankinson, who moved from there to South Africa in 1977. "We eventually folded up because of the economy. It wasn't politics; it wasn't the war; it was the economy."

Almost half the white population left in the late 1970s and in the first two years of independent Zimbabwe.

South African leaders express concern about white professionals leaving, but say they doubt the drain will equal that from Zimbabwe.

Doctors and other professionals are heading to the United States, Canada, England or other English-speaking Western nations.

Some white farmers contemplate moving to black-ruled Zambia, where the new government offers such incentives for foreign investors as customs exemptions on imported equipment and full retention of export earnings.

Chris Pretorius of the Home Ministry said it does not keep accurate figures on emigrants, but that the number appears to be increasing slightly. He added, howver, that the emigration rate was well below the mid-1980s, when the government imposed a state of emergency.

Many whites are trying to get second nationalities, just in case.

The British Embassy said the number of passports issued to people living in South Africa has increased this year. A spokesman said there are about 250,000 holders of British passports in South Africa.

Hendrik de Pagter, second secretary in the Canadian Embassy's visa department, said 750 people emigrated to Canada last year and he expects about 900 this year.

"What they say is, they want peacefulness and relative stability," de Pagter said.

Officials at other embassies say more people are asking about emigration visas, but that does not always translate to an increase in emigrants because of lengthy waiting periods and restrictions.

Mrs. Holding, 27, said she wants to go shopping without fear of being robbed or abducted. She has never been the victim of violent crime but fears the worst in a nation where 14,693 murders were reported last year.

"If you didn't hear all these terrible stories and watch the news, you'd never know there was trouble here," she said. "You get so scared."

Other reasons poured out: an "outrageous" cost of living, declining quality of education, expensive health care, poor benefits for the elderly.

Her husband, Chris, a concert trombonist, said he found political uncertainty the most frightening element.

He predicted the African National Congress, the nation's leading black organization, will win South Africa's next election and take over the government with its allies in the South African Communist Party.

"It's not the ANC we don't like, it's the Communists," Holding said. "We don't want to live under communism."

Because he holds a British passport and his wife has a Dutch passport, they will avoid restrictions when they move to England with his

Syria holds key to Mideast peace in 2nd year of talks

By Ed Blanche
Associated Press writer

DAMASCUS, Syria — The Arabs have a saying: "There can be no Middle East war without Egypt and no peace without Syria."

That was never so apt as it is now, with the U.S.-sponsored Middle East peace process approaching its second year.

Increasingly, the negotiations between Israel and Syria, its most implacable foe for 44 years, are progressing in a way that no one would have thought possible a year ago.

This has raised hopes that maybe, just maybe, an end to one of the world's most intractable conflicts could be within reach — possibly less than what all the parties want, but workable and binding.

Privately, Syrian officials say President Hafez Assad, whose harsh Baath Party regime has been built around the struggle against Israel and recovering the Golan Heights captured in 1967, understands that he must adapt to the new world order.

But not at any price and not by breaking Arab ranks as Egypt did when it signed a peace treaty with Israel in 1979.

"Syria wants a just, honorable and durable settlement — but the Golan is as Syrian as New Jersey is American and there can be no equivocation on that," said Mohammed Aziz Shukri, dean of Damascus University's law school and a respected expert in international law.

"The Israelis can't have their cake and eat it too. They can't have Peace and Land. Conquest is an international crime and Israel cannot be rewarded for conquest.

"If they say they're willing to withdraw 10 kilometers (6 miles) on the Golan for a peace treaty, they're dreaming. They can go to hell," Shukri said.

London's International Institute for Strategic Studies has characterized the talks as "the most complex peace effort since Versailles" after World War I.

To be sure, the peace process could take years.

But the fact that the Syrians, as well as the Palestinians, so Jordanians and Lebanese, have been sitting down face-to-face with long-reviled — and still hated — foes for a year has irrevocably altered the fundamentals of the Arab-Israeli conflict.

When the talks began in Madrid Oct. 30, 1991, the Syrians and Israelis hurled insults at each other.

Now, with hard-line Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir out of office and succeeded by the pragmatic Yitzhak Rabin, both sides appear to be preparing for some hard-nosed horse-trading.

The seventh round of talks began in Washington last Wednesday.

The Syrians have dropped their insistence that nothing of substance can be discussed until Israel withdraws from the territories captured in 1967.

They now say an Israeli commitment to the principle of withdrawal will suffice to get negotiations rolling.

Bush attempting to open airways

British Airways and USAir. Lufthansa and Continental. KLM and Northwest. Since July, European airlines have been lining up to combine operations with weak U.S. carriers. If the "mergers" go through, which is far from certain, Americans can expect lower fares and better service.

But there's more at stake than domestic air fares. The sudden rash of proposals reflects the first tangible fruits of a shrewd administration strategy to pry open closed European airline markets. If the strategy pays off, powerful carriers would for the first time be allowed to go head-to-head on international air routes. That would be great news for travelers everywhere.

The Bush administration has fought for "open skies" treaties giving European and U.S. carriers unfettered access to each other's airports. But the Europeans refused, fearing that their bloated national carriers were no match for low-cost behemoths like American and United.

In July, however, the United States boldly signed an open-skies treaty with the Netherlands. Looked at narrowly, the treaty appears lopsided. The Dutch gain access to the huge American market; the U.S. gains access to one tiny country. But then came a chain reaction. KLM, the Dutch carrier, proposed joining forces with Northwest. And to keep pace other European carriers began to seek U.S. partners.

Bargaining power shifted toward the U.S. The British government, fearful that KLM would take business from British Airways, may now be willing to negotiate a version of open skies. Ditto the German government on behalf of Lufthansa.

Nothing assures complete "open skies." But there's hope. The European Community has begun discussions for negotiating aviation rights with the U.S. as a bloc. That could lead to reciprocal access.

American Airlines and United remain skeptical and oppose the British Airways-USAir bid unless it's substantially altered. British Air, they point out, would not only enter U.S. markets but also gain unfair advantage over its U.S. rivals.

For example, British Air and USAir would be allowed to "code share," in effect giving passengers who first board USAir and then switch to British Air the impression that they've remained on the same airline — a huge marketing advantage. But the administration can be expected to demand offsetting British concessions.

Unable to negotiate open skies with all of Europe, the administration has embarked on a piecemeal process as a crowbar against individual countries. The strategy isn't pretty. But it's a daring attempt to give travelers on both sides of the Atlantic something to cheer about.

Glenn's ties to Keating may haunt him

WASHINGTON – Even senators with the right stuff can fall in with the wrong people.

That's the lesson painfully learned by Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, whose past relationship with S&L kingpin Charles H. Keating is threatening to capsize the former astronaut's political career.

Anderson

In retrospect, Glenn's current nightmare traces back to his disastrous run for the White House in 1984, which left his presidential campaign with a debt of $3 million. The debt ultimately drove him into the arms of deep-pocketed fund raisers like Keating, who is currently in prison for state securities fraud.

While Keating's ghost has come back to haunt Glenn, who describes this as "the worst year and a half" of his life, Republicans are relishing a rare political opportunity to beat an incumbent who has won three consecutive landslides.

"In Ohio we have a happy coincidence in that we have our best challenger race being run by Mike DeWine," says one top Republican strategist. "If there ever was a guy who's been a political disappointment, it's been John Glenn. And so there it will help the president and the president can't win without carrying Ohio."

Glenn first met Keating in the 1970s when the S&L giant was a Cincinnati financier. Keating's mentor, Carl Linder, raised money for Glenn's campaign, and Keating would occasionally meet Glenn at cocktail parties and swap aviator stories. Their relationship jelled in 1984, when Glenn wrote or cosigned five letters to bank regulators on behalf of Keating, asking that rules that would have reined in high-fliers like Keating be postponed.

A year later, Keating paid a courtesy visit to Glenn's Washington office. Bursting with charm and compassion, Keating told Glenn's wife, Annie, that her husband was a real American hero. By the time he left Glenn's office, Keating had volunteered to raise $200,000 in the next two years for Glenn's political action committee.

Annie's eyes filled with tears at Keating's announcement, and she put her arms around Keating as she explained how demeaning fund raising was for her husband.

Glenn has raised $1.7 million so far in his race to beat back a challenge from pesky Ohio Lt. Gov. Mike DeWine. Glenn, however, has raised only $5.25 this year toward retiring the $3 million debt.

For DeWine, Glenn's red ink and his relationship with Keating has been like a political banquet. In one successful campaign ploy, DeWine contributed $600 toward Glenn's leftover debt.

But the former Marine is returning DeWine's fire, making the Buckeye State brawl one of the most closely watched races this election. When Dewine first made the "contribution," a Glenn spokesman said, "Given (DeWine's) experience at the house bank, we're afraid (the checks) will bounce." The comment came in reference to the former congressman's 31 bounced checks totaling more than $13,000 at the House bank. Glenn is also criticizing the more than $40,000 in speaking fees DeWine has accepted from various interest groups.

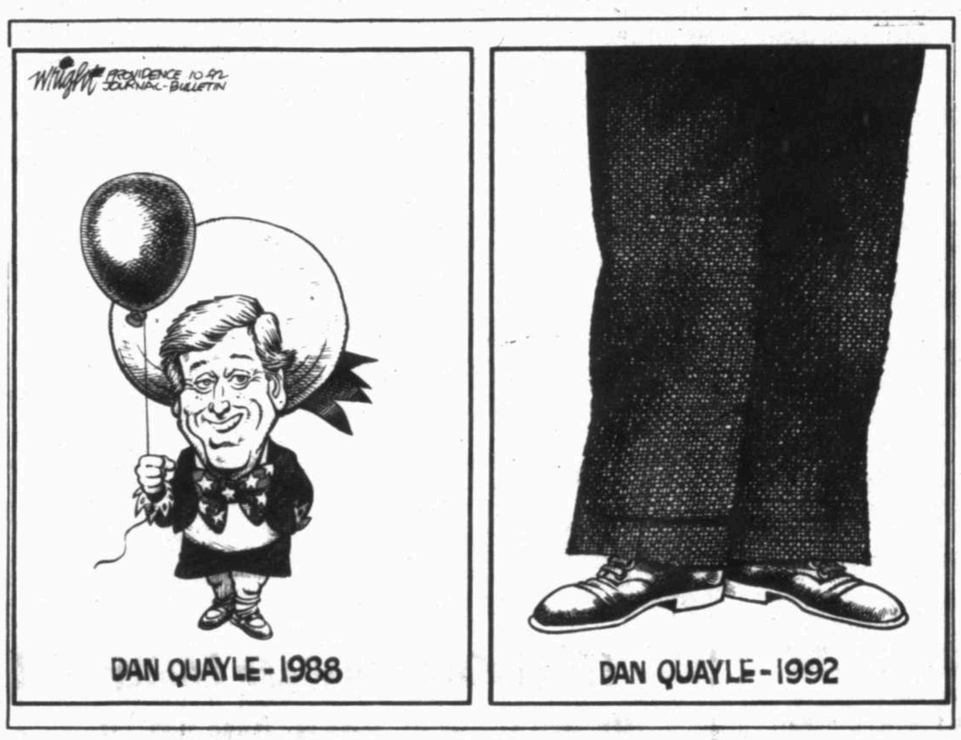

Ironically, Glenn might not be fighting for his political life if his own Democratic colleagues had put partisan politics aside. The Senate Ethics Committee's Special Counsel, Bob Bennett, recommended in September 1990 that Glenn and Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., be cut loose from the Keating Five after finding a lack of wrong-doing on their part. Glenn and McCain would have been spared the public pillorying that took place during nationally televised hearings had Bennett's advice been accepted.

But Ethics Committee sources told us that Senate Democrats lobbied for the ethics panel to override Bennett. McCain was the only Republican out of the five senators, so the Democrats feared that without McCain's attachment, it would become an all-Democratic scandal, and a future campaign issue for the GOP.

THE FOWLER ACCOUNT – It's not uncommon for members of Congress to be held accountable for their speeches and voting records – but now one member has had his feet put to the fire over a deposition he once gave in a 1986 child-support lawsuit.

His Republican challenger is hammering him over the flap, but House officials say they probably will not be able to sort through the records from Fowler's old account until after election day.

CHARLEY REESE

American made ... not

Trust is one of the glues that hold societies together. When that trust is eroded by repeated lying and deception, everything gets more difficult. Thus, there are pragmatic, as well as moral, reasons for insisting on honesty in communications.

Reese

One of the key elements of our economic problems that we have to cope with is the moving "off-shore" of manufacturing jobs. If American-based multi-nationals want to avoid a negative political backlash, then they'd better start leveling with the American people.

Most of you will remember how Lee Iacocca wrapped himself in the American flag in his television commercials promoting Chrysler products. You all remember Mr. Iacocca's often public complaints about Japanese competition.

Well, here's a list of Mr. Iacocca's products and the site of their final assembly, published by the Buy America Foundation: Dodge Caravan, Canada; Dodge Colt, Japan; Dodge Monaco, Canada; Dodge Shadow Convertible, some in Mexico; Dodge Stealth, Japan; Plymouth Colt, Japan; Plymouth Colt Vista, Japan; Plymouth Voyager, Canada; Chrysler LeBaron Coupe, Mexico (some); Chrysler LeBaron Sedan, Mexico; Dodge Ram pickups club cab models, Mexico; Ram Van, Caravan CV, and Ram Wagon, mostly Canada; and Ram Charger, Mexico.

In other words, if you wanted to help out American workers, and decided to buy American, you would if you bought these products actually be buying Mexican-, Canadian- or Japanese-assembled products.

Now, if anyone knows an occasion where Mr. Iacocca has gone before the American people and explained Chrysler's reasons for locating so much of its work overseas, I'd appreciate hearing about it. I'm not saying he hasn't done it. I'm just saying that the impression I have, which I'm sure a majority of Americans share, from all his televised advertisements and publicized speeches, is that he has appealed to Americans' patriotic instincts and indulged in unadulterated Japan-bashing.

Chrysler, of course, isn't the only American-label car manufacturer that actually sells imports under American brand labels. Both Ford and GM also do it.

Nor am I at this time arguing against off-shore production. The only point I want to make is that we cannot solve our economic problems if both politicians and private business executives refuse to level with us.

There is no point in politicians and business executives reciting the mantra of re-training if the jobs are all in another country. There is no point in politicians and business executives indulging in a near-racist Japan-bashing when in fact they are in bed with Japanese manufacturers. There is no point in Americans trying to buy Americans when the labels lie or the country of origin is printed so small you can't find it.

When people do not speak honestly and factually to us about issues, we are correct to infer that they intend to do us harm. There is no reason to lie about something that would be beneficial or neutral.

My own level of trust has been seriously eroded. One of several reasons I don't support the so-called North American Free Trade Treaty is that I don't believe the people who support it are telling the truth. Even the name is misleading. We already have free trade with Canada.

Charley Reese's column is distributed by King Features Syndicate.

Man defends cat's rights

There has been somewhat of an uproar over the use of cats in the training of medical personnel in Midland. I feel that I must correct some misconceptions.

The particular class for which the cats were used is called Pediatric Advanced Life Support (PALS). It is an approved American Heart Association course and has been taught in other areas of the state and country for a number of years. Since there are not statistically a large number of emergencies involving children, especially newborns, some method of learning endotracheal intubation is essential (since endotracheal intubation is the most reliable method for securing a pathway for oxygen to the lungs). We do have simulation models for babies, but it is really not like the real thing. What very closely resembles the anatomy of the airway of a small child is a cat. So, rather than wait around for the opportunity to practice the skill of intubation on a real human in an emergency situation the use of cats has been deemed a viable substitute.

To be absolutely certain that no harm comes to the animals, a licensed veterarian is present at all times to administer the anesthesia, to supervise the techniques being used, and to assume the responsibility for complete recovery of the cats from the anesthesia. No harm comes to the animals and they completely recover to be euthanized by the proper authorities. I would allow my own cat to be used for this procedure!

The use of animals in medical research has been ongoing for decades. There are incidences in which these animals are subjected to painful, debilitating processes; infliction of wounds, exposure to nerve gases, putting eyes out, etc. I am an animal lover and protest this use especially when anesthesia is not used. However, the animals used in our controlled environments all survive without injury.

In the case of endotracheal intubation for adult patients, medical students, respiratory therapy students, paramedic students, nurse anesthetist students, etc., all use living human patients in the surgical setting to perform, under the close supervision of a physician, this procedure. These patients survive and, lo and behold, have no scarring or any other injury afterwards!

So this procedure is safe, leaves no injuries, and more importantly, gives realistic practice to those of us who may one day be performing this skill on your baby.

Mauro's policy angers UT grad

Garry Mauro recently criticized Bush for lack of a national energy policy and even blamed him for the poor results of recent University of Texas lease sales. However, a little analysis would yield plenty of company for Bush to share the blame with. It has been over 20 years and four presidents since the Arab oil embargo. It has been over a year and a half since Bush introduced his energy bill and only now has the Democratic Congress passed it and then only after watering it down so much as to make it useless.

The State of Texas also shares some of the blame. While other states passed moratoriums on severance taxes for new wells as far back as 1986, Texas only about a year ago passed any kind of severance tax relief and then only for new secondary recovery projects, none for the expansion of existing projects and none for new drilling. While other states have lowered regulatory fees for the oil and gas industry, Texas — under the leadership of Ann Richards — has increased them significantly.

As for the University of Texas lease sales, while other states and most private mineral owners have long since decreased the amount of royalty they reserve in their leases, Garry Mauro has held tightly to the University's outrageously high royalty and, only a little over a year ago, provided for a very limited reduction in royalty on University of Texas leases and then only for limited time periods. It was also Garry Mauro who in 1987, after the oil industry had one of its hardest years in history and was still struggling, changed the University of Texas lease sales over to a sealed bid system designed to drive up the amount paid for lease bonuses.

If Garry Mauro wants to find blame for the poor results of University of Texas lease sales he should start with himself and then look around at some of his fellow Democrats.

Man wary of Democrats

What's going to happen if the Democrats win in November? Last time the Democrats were in, Jimmy Carter gave away the Panama Canal. What'll it be this time: Guam, Puerto Rico, Alaska, Hawaii?

Maybe the Virgin Islands (the environmentalists will probably blame the Republicans for the conspicuous absence of the eponymous natives). Sometimes even the voters don't get to participate in the giveaway programs.

Man wants commissioners out

When times are tough, people usually try to stand together. But it seems that we have people in office that have been there way too long. Every person on the Midland County Commissioners Court and that great judge should have never been put there in the first place.

I just think of how much of my taxes are being wasted by these five people; it makes me sick. They need to get out and make a living the old-fashion way, by working for it. I am tired of paying the one that takes care of Greenwood, (you know where it is, east of Midland). And if I can find a monkey to take his place, I am. That commissioner is coming out this time.

The people on the commissioners court have been there so long they are just like their furniture, all they do or think of is Gary Painter. All they have talked about for the past two years is Gary Painter. Let him do his job.

We can get someone else to do each of the commissioner's and judge's jobs very easy. Gary Painter is a professional man who knows his job. And those on the commissioners court don't even have the qualifications to sit at the same table with Painter. Some of them could come out of office this time if the voters will only use their heads and go vote. The people at Greenwood have had a belly full of Guy McCrary (Precinct 2 commissioner) and he will be coming out at the end of this term.

The people of Midland and Midland County should think about this before they vote next time. The taxes they save will be their own.

Those on the commissioners court need to think about one thing: Gary Painter could do all of their jobs at one time better than them, but the commissioners and judge don't have the least idea of how to do Painter's job.

■ Astronauts measure ozone, test toilet

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Columbia's astronauts measured ozone in Earth's upper atmosphere and tested a new toilet as the space shuttle whizzed around the world for a fourth day Sunday.

Canadian spaceman Steven MacLean was floating on air in more ways than one.

"By the way, there are celebrations in the streets of Toronto," Mission Control informed the astronauts shortly after they were awakened. "Steve's going to collect on a few bets today."

MacLean had bet his American crewmates that the Toronto Blue Jays would win the World Series. They did.

"I can't understand why the others were so quiet," NASA flight director Bob Castle deadpanned, referring to the five U.S. astronauts aboard Columbia. At least two of them were rooting for the Atlanta Braves.

The astronauts spent much of Sunday working on Canadian experiments, including atmospheric measurements. They aimed monitors at the rising and setting sun to gauge the concentrations of ozone, oxygen and nitrogen compounds, and aerosols in the stratosphere.

Pilot Michael Baker reported that the 12 rats aboard Columbia were doing well. Half the rats were injected before the flight with an experimental drug for treating osteoporosis, a bone-thinning disease striking mostly women. The other six rats are untreated and serving as controls.

"It's incredible how many different people are doing different things up here," said shuttle commander James Wetherbee.

Astronaut Tamara Jernigan completed more tests on heat pipes that were spun to simulate the motion of revolving satellites. Unlike traditional spacecraft radiators, these pipes have no mechanical parts and instead rely on fluid evaporation to dispel excess heat.

In an experiment involving other innovative equipment, the crew tested a new toilet intended to replace the much-maligned bathroom — waste collection system, or WCS, in NASA jargon — currently on the shuttle. They flushed water from the galley through the new urinal, videotaping the action and beaming it to engineers on the ground.

Only the urinal portion of the new toilet is flying aboard Columbia, the part that has caused the most trouble on the old system. The new urinal is hooked to the mid-deck lavatory, and the five-man, one-woman crew can choose between the old and new systems.

■ Bush OKs 3 percent COLA for disabled vets

BILLINGS, Mont. — President Bush on Sunday signed into law a bill providing a 3 percent cost-of-living increase for the 2.2 million veterans receiving benefits for service-related disabilities.

The increase, effective Dec. 1, matches the adjustment that Social Security beneficiaries and veteran pensioners will receive.

In addition to veterans, the 3 percent boost will be provided to about 313,000 surviving spouses and children of veterans.

■ PACs favor incumbents over challengers

WASHINGTON — Special interest groups have donated nine times more political action committee money to Senate incumbents than their respective challengers, a campaign watchdog group's analysis shows.

Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., was the Senate's top PAC fund-raiser with $1.79 million through Sept. 30 while Sen. Thomas Daschle, D-S.D., was a close second at $1.77 million, Common Cause said.

In all, PACS gave $32.65 million through Sept. 30 to the 28 incumbents running for re-election compared to just $3.72 million to the 29 challengers in those races, the group said.

The 9-to-1 gap is more than double the 4-to-1 margin in PAC fund-raising in the 1990 Senate races, Common Cause said.

"The anti-incumbent mood of the country doesn't appear to have penetrated the world of Washington-based special interest PACs," Common Cause President Fred Wertheimer said.

PACs, which collect donations from individual members of their sponsoring group then direct aggregate amounts to candidates, are the main avenue through which special interest groups and businesses donate to congressional races. They can give $5,000 per candidate per election.

In all, 19 Senate incumbents each raised $1 million or more from PACs in the 1992 election cycle, the group said. No challenger made the $1 million threshold.

■ Mayberry gas station gets new life

BRADFORD, Ohio — Gomer and Goober aren't around, but the station where they pumped gas on television's "Andy Griffith Show" seems to be waiting for them in rural western Ohio.

Bob Scheib took a shed attached to his barn and turned it into a replica of the station seen on the 1960s comedy series about a small-town sheriff and his friends in Mayberry, N.C.

The trappings of Scheib's station are nearly identical to the ones on the show. Overhead is a sign reading "Wally's Service." Two pumps offer Acme Gas, a thermometer near the door says "Chew Mail Pouch Tobacco," and there's a cigarette machine on the porch.

Inside, fan belts and cans of motor oil share space with videotapes of the series and other memorabilia. One corner is a mock-up of Floyd's barbershop.

"I can remember watching the show with my mom and grandma when I was real little," Scheib said. "Now my kids like the show. It's still funny after watching it over and over."

The series ran for eight years on CBS before folding in 1968, but it is still seen in syndication.

Study: Parents want better schools, not choice

WASHINGTON (AP) — Most American parents would rather see improvements to their neighborhood public schools than choose another for their children to attend, says a new report.

The study, released over the weekend by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, criticizes the idea of school choice, the linchpin of President Bush's education package. The president's proposal, which included $1,000 vouchers to disadvantaged parents who want to send their children to different schools, was rejected earlier this month by Congress.

Educators said they expect Bush to resurrect his school choice proposal if he is re-elected, despite the foundation's findings.

"It's a high priority for the conservative wing of the (Republican) party," said Willis Hawley, director of Vanderbilt University's Center for Education and Development Policy.

They also said the Bush administration will shift its choice efforts to the state level, citing administration involvement in the choice debate in California and in Colorado, where voters will decide a statewide choice referendum next month.

"This is an administration that says the best decision is made at the state level," said Arthur Fege, director of governmental relations for the National Parent-Teacher Association.

The bulk of parents — 70 percent — say they wouldn't transfer their children to another school if given a choice, and 82 percent say the best way to improve public education is to strengthen every school, instead of encouraging competition between a select few, the study found.

"What it does suggest is that the push for school choice appears to be coming more from theoreticians and politicians than from parents," the study said.

The Bush administration put a positive spin on the Carnegie results, citing as "astonishing" the 28 percent of parents who would like to send their children to other schools, public or private.

"More astonishing is Carnegie's view that this is only mild support for giving these families more choices of schools," said Education Secretary Lamar Alexander. "Would the Berlin Wall still be a good idea if only 28 percent of East Germans wanted out?"

Thirteen state legislatures have adopted choice plans, and 21 others have considered them, the study said. Minnesota instituted the first program in 1987; laws offering choice are scheduled to take effect in Michigan and Ohio next year.

The foundation's report was based on interviews, visits to school districts, and surveys of more than 1,000 parents in six states with choice programs: Arkansas, Iowa, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Nebraska and Washington.

It found that, in states with school choice, only 2 percent of parents participate, and most do so for non-academic reasons, such as safety concerns or smaller class sizes. By a 2-to-1 margin, parents opposed vouchers for private school.

The study compared district-wide and statewide choice programs and one private school choice program. It discounted choice as a key means of improving public education, and recommended creating "a national strategy for renewal that affirms the neighborhood school tradition.

The study also said:

■ Choice works better for the most economically and educationally advantaged families.

■ Student achievement and school renewal efforts are largely unaffected by private school choice.

■ Statewide choice programs widen the gap between rich and poor districts.

Waste dumps threaten birds

OREGON, Ohio (AP) — Warren Klatt was walking home when he saw a Canada goose coated with oil near a closed waste dump.

After catching the bird and trying in vain with a friend's help to clean it, Klatt found out it was covered with cancer-causing polychlorinated biphenyls — PCBs.

The goose had to be killed, and Klatt and his friend were treated at a hospital for possible contamination.

"We just thought it was oil. But it wouldn't come off," Klatt said. "I thought I was doing the right thing."

Wildlife advocates say hundreds of thousands of migratory birds across the United States die each year from contamination in open hazardous waste dumps and oily waste pits.

The birds are attracted to the water, then ingest the poisonous substances as they try to clean themselves.

"Very small amounts of oil and other hazardous chemicals can kill them outright or ruin their reproduction," said Melinda Taylor, a former lawyer for the Audobon Society.

More than 30 geese contaminated after landing in one of seven waste lagoons at Commercial Oil Services near Toledo have been put to death in the past month by authorities.

Daniel LeClair, a special agent with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, said covers will be placed over the lagoons to prevent birds from landing in them.

More than 200,000 Canada geese fly over the area. Bald eagles also nest nearby, LeClair said.

Commercial Oil closed in 1985, leaving behind about 900 drums containing hazardous wastes, the waste lagoons and 30,000 gallons of solvents in 20 tanks.

The waste dump is on the Environmental Protection Agency's Superfund list, identifying it as among the worst polluted sites in the country. The cleanup could cost $36 million.

Twenty-five companies that used the dump have agreed to spend millions of dollars to prevent the lagoons from overflowing. The companies are paying for the lagoon covers.

Environmentalists say the problem is even worse in oil producing states such as Texas and Oklahoma, where ponds are tained with the byproducts of oil and gas production.

GOP dirty tricks forced withdrawal, Ross Perot says

WASHINGTON (NYT) — Ross Perot on Sunday accused President Bush's campaign of planning an extraordinary series of "dirty tricks" — from doctoring photographs to wiretapping his office to disrupting his daughter's wedding — that ultimately led him to drop out of the presidential race last July.

There is no evidence that such a smear effort was ever carried out, and Perot gave no proof of his allegations, made in separate interviews, one published Sunday in The Boston Herald, and the other broadcast Sunday night on the CBS News program "60 Minutes." Marlin Fitzwater, the White House spokesman, dismissed the allegations.

But Perot, revealing no names, described at length what sounded more like a shadowy underworld of Republicans than a campaign for the presidency. "I couldn't believe that anyone representing the president of the United States would stoop to these lows," he said.

Science teacher experiments on TV

CHICAGO (AP) — Lee Marek doesn't worry about bombing when he appears as the wacky guest scientist on "Late Night with David Letterman." He's always got his day job — teaching high school chemistry.

Marek, a teacher for almost 20 years, has brought to national television such memorable experiments as the slime cannon and the foam shredder. Not all of them work, but Marek says it's not always his fault.

"You go in there with maybe 10 demonstrations," he said. "They keep changing their mind every 10 minutes about what you're going to do just so you can fit in the time slot."

Marek, 47, has appeared on Letterman's show five times since the entertainer's staff read about his group called Weird Science — five teachers from different schools who perform science shows.

"We kind of do the MTV of science demonstrations," Marek said. "We've got videos. We've got audios. We've got songs to turn people on to science. . . . We show that science can be fun."

On a recent program Marek shot plastic foam through a shredder, producing a static electrical charge that was supposed to send the foam spraying onto the studio audience. But much of the foam ended up clinging to Letterman.

"They wouldn't let me rehearse," protested Marek. "I didn't know they had big fans directed at the stage. So, instead of blowing it into the audience, it blew all over the camera people and Letterman."

'We've got videos. We've got audios. We've got songs to turn people on to science. . . . We show that science can be fun.'

— Teacher Lee Marek

How did Marek escape the foam storm? "I saw it coming."

Another experiment involved a cannon that launched slime — guar gum mixed with Borax — 40 feet into the air.

Marek, honored by the National Science Foundation as Illinois' outstanding science teacher in 1986, routinely performs for his students at Naperville North High School.

"He's just really good at relating to us," said a former student, 16-year-old Albert Hwang. "So, he makes it more fun by throwing in lots of jokes and puns so that when the test time comes around, we'll be able to remember."

Marek says moving back and forth between the classroom and a nationally televised show is no problem for him.

Soft pretzels: 'Perfect munch'

■ Philadelphia's Pretzel Museum claims the City of Brotherly Love is the pretzel capitol of the country.

By Lee Linder
Associated Press writer

PHILADELPHIA — There are baldies and there are salties. They come with or without mustard — except in Philadelphia, where it's mostly with.

It is the soft pretzel, consumed by the thousands each day in the City of Brotherly Love and coveted in other cities by those willing to pay to have them shipped.

Sometimes they're a snack, sometimes more.

"They're like a meal and often substitute for lunch," says Sandy Brinkos, a legal secretary from Lansdale. "They fill you up and taste just great."

There's even a pretzel museum and it claims Philadelphia to be the pretzel capital of the country. But there are no numbers to support that contention, even from the bakeries themselves.

The city's 16 pretzel bakeries — all family owned — won't let anyone in on the secret of exactly how many pretzels they each make per day, but their guesstimates range upwards of 65 million a year.

Soft pretzels are eight to 10 inches long and made of flour, water, yeast and vegetable shortening with a soda-based glaze topped with thick grains of salt. The claim is that they are low in fat with hardly any cholesterol. For those watching salt intake, some bakeries make no-salt "baldies."

"A perfect munch," said Joe Sidorick, co-owner of Philadelphia Soft Pretzels, the source of 60,000-plus soft pretzels daily and considered the largest of the bakeries.

"While most spread mustard over the salty top there are some people who smear it with cream cheese, like a bagel," Sidorick said.

The pretzels contain no preservatives and generally are not wrapped. Some are machine twisted, others are formed by hand. For freshness, they are baked at night and sold during the day on street corners, in schools, outside factories.

By day's end, they are too hard to eat, but can be revived once by sprinkling water on them.

Wholesale, soft pretzels go to a vender for about 12 cents each, who usually sells them to the public for a quarter or 30 cents, although they can bring as much as 40 cents at a few locations.

"I get calls from Phoenix, from California, from Florida, lots of other places, asking us to ship a few dozen here, a few dozen there," said Sidorick. "And a lot of people, visiting here, will take a bunch home."

There is a frozen variety, made in nearby Pennsauken, N.J., which can be found in supermarket freezers all across the country.

Norma Conley, a partner in the Pretzel Museum in south Philadelphia, said soft pretzels go back to the early days of Christianity.

They were brought to America by German immigrants who settled first in the Lancaster area, which today is the heart of the nation's hard pretzel industry.

"Soft pretzels came before the hard variety, which were created by a fluke when a batch of the soft stuff was accidentally left unattended in a cold oven and hardened, or so the story goes," Conley said.

The soft pretzels came to Philadelphia around 1900 and Conley said "it's an industry that's been growing ever since.

"Children learned to eat them at a young age, and the kids grew up and passed the love of soft pretzels to their children and grandchildren, and so the industry keeps growing."

That has been true even during the latest recession.

"Despite tough times people still eat pretzels because they are cheap," Sidorick said.

Edy Young, a professional baker from San Francisco, concocted this recipe for soft pretzels. It is published in "Real Beer and Good Eats" (Alfred A. Knopf, $23), by Bruce Aidells and Denis Kelly.

1 package (1 ounce) active dry yeast
1½ cups warm milk, about 110 degrees
1 tablespoon sugar
3½ to 4 cups all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon salt
2 quarts water
2 tablespoons baking soda
1 egg, lightly beaten with 2 tablespoons water
coarse salt

In a large measuring cup mix the yeast with the milk and sugar. Let yeast proof for 10 minutes. Place 3½ cups flour and the salt in a food processor bowl. Insert metal blade. With motor running, pour yeast mixture through feeder tube. Pulse intermittently until dough forms a ball and cleans the sides of the bowl. If the dough is too sticky, add a bit more flour, pulsing intermittently.

Turn dough into oiled bowl, cover and put in a warm place. Let dough rise to double in size, about one hour.

Punch down the dough and divide into 20 pieces. Hand roll each piece into a 20-inch-long rope. To form a pretzel, make a large loop using aobut two-thirds of the length. Twist the ends around each other once, pick the joined ends up, and place firmly down on the top of the loop, forming a pretzel shape.

Place pretzel on a lightly floured surface and let rise about 30 minutes, until almost double in size.

Make remaining pretzels in the same manner.

Meanwhile, preheat oven to 400 degrees. In a large deep skillet bring the water and baking soda to a simmer. Place two or three pretzels at a time in the water and simmer 30 seconds on each side. Flip pretzels gently. Remove and drain on a rack.

Place pretzels on a cookie sheet covered with baking parchment, being sure to keep the original top sides up. Brush each pretzel with some of the egg wash, and spring lightly with coarse salt.

Bake 18 to 20 minutes, until nicely browned. Serve warm.

DEAR ABBY

Man's indifference to vacation may be a message

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I have recently come into a large sum of money (six figures). Now for my problem: I've been planning a two-month vacation for my boyfriend and me. I'm 37 and he's 35. I have told him that I would be willing to pay for airfare to and accommodations in the south of France. All he would have to do is save enough for his spending money.

Van Buren

Abby, he has shown very little interest in this trip, so I went ahead and made all the reservations for plane and hotel accommodations to Paris, where we will rent a car and drive to Nice.

It seems every time I mention this trip, he complains about the hassle of passports, booster shots, etc. I can't understand his attitude. We have gone together for four years and could never afford a trip out of the country before, and now that I'm giving him the opportunity, he seems bored with it all.

Am I wasting my time? Should I continue with these plans or forget the whole thing? Who in his right mind wouldn't jump at the chance for a free 'rip? What do you think, Abby? — UPSET IN VANCOUVER, B.C.

DEAR UPSET: I think you're not getting the message. For whatever reason, your boyfriend is much less interested in foreign travel than you are. You could save yourself a rude awakening (and a lot of money) if you went without him. Why don't you consider it? You will soon find out if he's the man for you — or just a four-year habit.

DEAR ABBY: My family and I live in an upper middle-class residential neighborhood. Upon returning home from work today, I noticed that some prankster had thrown an egg at my front door. The same thing happened several years ago around Halloween. At that time, my housekeeper actually saw the kid throw it.

We confronted the parents and were not too surprised when they jumped to their child's defense. They even accused my housekeeper of having lied when she said she had seen the boy throw it!

Since there was no eyewitness to today's event, I can't make baseless accusations, although, I must admit, I have my suspicions. I suppose I should be grateful that the egg could be scrubbed off, although I was tired and irritable.

I know worse stunts could have been pulled, but I hope that if kids read your column (I know mine do), they will realize how poorly such stunts reflect on themselves and their upbringing. — EGGED ON IN OVERLAND PARK, KAN.

DEAR EGGED ON: I see nothing amusing about defacing property. If this happens again, call the parents of the child you suspect and share your feelings. And if that doesn't put a stop to it, talk to your local police. They might like to keep a file on the youngster while the crimes are still "petty."

DEAR ABBY: A reader signed "Cooking With Alcohol" wrote: "I baked a Southern Comfort Cake that contained ½ cup Southern Comfort (80 percent proof alcohol) in the mix and ¼ cup in the glaze . . ."

Abby, it can be 80 percent or 80 proof, but it can't be both!

Proof is twice the percentage of alcohol. Thus 80 proof is 40 percent alcohol. If Southern Comfort were 80 percent alcohol, it would be 160 proof. — STEPHEN DEAN, FRESNO

DEAR STEPHEN: Thank you for educating me. Thus far, you and Ralph Beaman of Boothwyn, Pa., are the only readers who corrected the error.

Abigail Van Buren's column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

Too doggone cold for hounds in Antartica, Australians say

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — Each bitterly cold winter morning, workers at Mawson station in Antarctica trudge outside to dig their sled dogs out of the overnight snow and feed them.

It is a chore the Australians won't have much longer, but they are not giving it up willingly.

The hard-working huskies, a staple of expeditions since polar exploration began, are being phased out because of environmental concerns and advances in technology.

"It's a sad thing that they're going," Al Rooke, communications officer and a dog handler in his spare time, said by telephone from Mawson. "It's the end of a long era and tradition. Most of us have become quite attached to the critters."

Only Australia, Britain and Argentina still keep dogs at their Antarctic bases. All agreed last year to end the canine presence by April 1, 1994.

Other countries with claims on sections of Antarctica expressed worry about the possible introduction of disease by the dogs and what might happen if some escaped and attacked penguin colonies.

Britain has decided to let its 19 huskies live out their lives at Rothera, one of its five Antarctic bases, even if that violates the deadline, said Bernard Moran, spokesman for the British Antarctic Survey.

Argentina's Defense Department plans to transfer its dogs, about 14, to border police in the Andes.

Australia will send the youngest 19 dogs to the Outward Bound school and Wintergreen winter lodge at Ely, Minn., and probably will let the older seven live out their lives at Mawson.

Affection for the huskies runs deep among the polar crews, particularly in the long winters.

Base personnel "get a great deal of comfort from having the dogs around," Moran said. "They feed them, play with them, take care of them. It's like having children around."

Dog photographs and blood-line charts hold places of honor in the Mawson bar. Some men spend their spare time each Tuesday evening working on new harnesses or handling other maintenance work for the dogs.

"A lot of guys will just hitch up a team and go for a run," said Rooke, 40, the Mawson communications officer. "The dogs love it. As soon as they see the harness come out of the shed, the noise is awful."

Huskies, which trace their roots to Greenland, have been at Mawson since the base was established in 1954. The barrel-chested dogs weigh about 90 pounds each and a team of nine can pull half a ton of cargo.

The introduction of motorized sleds, trucks with tank-like treads and other all-terrain vehicles has led to a feeling in some quarters that dogs are outdated, but many polar hands disagree.

"It's generally accepted that dogs have a sense about the danger of thin ice; they can hear it cracking," Rooke said. "With the noise of a vehicle, sometimes the first you know about water is when you're in it."

Rod Ledingham, who drove dogs for a British expedition in the 1960s and was on the Australian government committee on what to do with the Mawson huskies, believes the dogs should stay.

Rooke and fellow handler David Pottage will spend the first winter in Minnesota with the dogs to get them adjusted.

Clean Air Act put on hold in Houston

HOUSTON (AP) — Auto-emission inspections designed to help curb air pollution in the nation's most congested areas are being delayed in Texas until January 1995, further postponing the effects of the Clean Air Act, environmentalists say.

The Texas Air Control Board, designing the program to comply with the federal Clean Air Act, first discussed launching the new inspections on Jan. 1, 1994, for all 1968-model and newer vehicles fueled by gasoline.

Later, the board proposed a start-up date six months later. Now, state officials say the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has told them informally that they probably will be allowed to delay the new program until Jan. 1, 1995.

In addition, EPA officials have indicated the state may start the program with 30 percent of the affected vehicles and phasing in the rest during the year.

Kirk Watson, chairman of the Air Control Board, said he "would support some sort of phase-in," if that is allowed by federal regulations to be published on Nov. 6.

The other Texas metropolitan areas where the program is being planned are Dallas-Fort Worth, Beaumont-Port Arthur and El Paso. The Houston area — Harris and seven other counties — would have the most stringent tests.

Bordertown pays price on free trade pact

By Eduardo Montes
Associated Press Writer

LAREDO — The border's gotten busier since the United States, Mexico and Canada began negotiating a free trade agreement.

That has meant more trucks crossing between Laredo and Nuevo Laredo, Mexico, more retail chain stores across town, vigorous industrial development and more jobs.

"So as far as we're concerned we've already seen the increased growth that trade brings," said City Manager Peter Vargas, who connects his city's growth to Mexico's liberalization of trade laws.

The feeling in many border towns is that the North American Free Trade Agreement will accelerate business activity.

But not everyone agrees, and poverty and joblessness run high in Laredo.

"What's the boom?" asked a disgruntled Jose Valdez, executive director of the Community Action Agency, a social services organization. "There is a boom in international trade and it's not affecting the local people."

Economic indicators — from bank growth to building permits — seem to show Laredo in an upward spiral. Webb County Clerk Henry Flores called it "a tremendous very, very steep trajectory."

Growth has been particularly keen in import-export businesses and trucking, areas expected to grow if legislators in Mexico, the United States and Canada approve the trade pact.

But as Valdez noted, that doesn't seem to have translated into an economic boon for many residents of Laredo and surrounding Webb County.

Unemployment hovers around 9 percent, according to the Texas Employment Commission.

Only the retail sales industry has really created jobs for the abundance of low-skilled workers in the city, and then at wages so low that many still live in or near poverty, according to social service organizations.

"Well, I submit to you that's it better to have a low-paying job than no job at all," Vargas said.

Valdez conceded that point. "Those jobs are helping," he said. "I'm sure they're helping somebody. But overall, this community is pretty bad."

According to the Texas Department of Human Services, 71,701 residents of Webb County lived below the poverty level in 1991. That's 52 percent of the population.

A recent study concluded that Laredo ranks as the second worst city in the nation in the percentage of children living in poverty.

DHS caseloads have been climbing steadily in recent months. Requests for everything from Aid to Families with Dependent Children to Medicaid to food stamps has gone up, said Jesus Lopez, program manager for the department's client self support services.

"We have practically saturated the market here in terms of providing assistance," he said.

Lopez offered several explanations.

"The main reason I can think of is the low wages that are paid in Laredo. Practically everyone is paid the minimum wage or less," he said. "A lot of people are moving into Laredo because of the economic boom and they're not able to find jobs because they lack the necessary skills."

Another reason is that the population has consistently outpaced job growth.

Klan begins campaign to oust mayor

VIDOR, Texas (AP) — Ku Klux Klan members say they are mounting a recall election campaign to drive the city's mayor from office.

A Klan leader informed a crowd of about 200 people Saturday of the plan to remove Vidor Mayor Ruth Wood, who has backed a federal plan to desegregate an all-white housing complex in Vidor.

White Camelia Grand Dragon Charles Lee told those attending a rally in Raymond Gould Park he thinks Ms. Wood does not represent the majority of the people in the city.

"The mayor should at least represent the interest of the people who elected her. This is insulting," Lee said. "For the mayor of Vidor to say we (the Klan) are unwelcome and that the city doesn't want this image, it's insulting. ... We need to show white people have political power in this city."

Vidor traditionally has been a center of Klan activity in Texas.

Vidor, an all-white town of 10,000, is about five miles northeast of Beaumont, which has about 125,000 residents with a significant black population.

Ms. Wood has said she doesn't believe groups such as the Klan have any political power in the city.

Dollar gains

NEW YORK — The dollar rose Friday against most major currencies amid a bullish market swept up in rumors about interest rates.

In New York, the dollar settled at 121.60 Japanese yen, up from 120.725 yen late Thursday.

At the close in New York, the pound fetched $1.6225, down from $1.6260 late Thursday.

Market rises

NEW YORK — Stock prices eked out a small gain in a drifting session Friday, encouraged by talk of a possible strengthening in the economy.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 6.76 points to 3,207.64, finishing the week with a net gain of 33.23 points.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 10 to 9 on the New York Stock Exchange.

The Nasdaq composite index edged up .18 to 597.30. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index dropped .27 to 374.24.

State incomes

WASHINGTON — Rocky Mountain states and other parts of the American heartland are weathering economic hard times better than the once-booming East and West coasts, the government said.

With some exceptions, states that flourished during the "bicoastal economy" of the 1980s now are struggling the most to shake off the recession's grip, according to personal income data published Thursday by the Commerce Department.

Interest rate gap may hurt banks

■ Gain from low interest rates is temporary, analyst says.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Federal regulators are on the lookout for the next threat to the nation's banks now that a three-year wave of commercial real estate losses appears to be receding.

Ironically, they are finding it in the very same conditions that led to higher bank profits this year: the wide gap between long-term and short-term interest rates.

Banks are paying as little as 3 percent on passbook savings accounts and collecting more than double that on long-term mortgages and securities. That leads to profits. But when interest rates rise and banks are forced to pay out more on deposits, those profits can disappear and even turn into losses.

"The gain from low interest rates is temporary," said Santa Fe, N.M., consultant Roger J. Vaughan, co-author of a new study warning of rising bank failures. "If interest rates rise, then all of the gains can be wiped out overnight."

As President Bush and senior administration officials reassure the public, top regulators are quietly advising banks to protect themselves against an inevitable increase in interest rates.

A new round of interest-rate related losses, coming on top of the commercial real estate problems, could push up the failure rate and increase the chances taxpayers will have to bail out the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

So far this year the banking news has been good. From January through June, banks earned record profits of $15.7 billion, up from $10.2 billion a year ago. But about three-quarters of the improvement can be attributed to the spread between long and short rates, now at a 20-year high, according to the FDIC.

The risky strategy of profiting from interest-rate differentials is called lending long and borrowing short. It means lending money for a long period at a fixed rate, such as a 30-year mortgage, and financing that loan with funds borrowed for a short time, such as a 90-day certificate of deposit.

Short-term rates skyrocketed above 20 percent in the early 1980s. S&Ls were stuck with low-rate mortgages from the 1970s, but had to pay increasingly higher rates on their deposits. It was the first step in a decade-long debacle.

Now many banks have increased their home-mortgage portfolio. And they're also buying interest-rate sensitive mortgage-backed securities and Treasury notes and bonds.

According to the FDIC, banks' securities holdings soared 17.2 percent over the past year to $553 billion at the end of June. Lending declined 2.2 percent.

But a rise in interest rates would lead to a drop in the value of the securities. Banks would then be in the position of keeping the securities and forgoing lucrative lending opportunities or selling the securities at a loss to raise cash for lending.

Stephen R. Steinbrink, acting comptroller of the currency, told bankers at their annual convention this month: "If you don't take the necessary precautions now, you could find yourself caught in an interest rate squeeze."

Timothy Ryan, director of the Office of Thrift Supervision, said he is more worried now about interest-rate risk in commercial banks than in savings institutions.

The thrift office believes that only about 80 of the nation's 2,000 S&Ls would have serious problems if rates rose suddenly. But, far less is known about commercial banks, Ryan said.

Bankers argue though that it's a mistake to be too conservative. By avoiding all interest rate risk, you also avoid profits that add to an institution's capital cushion.

"If loan demand does not exist, banks have got limited options on what they can do," said Walter V. Shipley, president of Chemical Banking Corp.

Government may sue TWA's Icahn

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government may resort to suing Trans World Airlines owner Carl Icahn to cover more than $1 billion in pension payments to retired employees of the troubled company, the head of a federal agency said Sunday.

The Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp. has told Icahn he must fully finance a $1.2 billion gap in pension plans for retired TWA pilots and machinists or face lawsuits that could wipe out his fortune, said James B. Lockhart III. Lockhart's agency — he is its executive director — insures workers' retirement funds.

Icahn, one of the wealthiest men in America, owns more than 80 percent of TWA and a several other companies.

The airline earlier this year sought protection from creditors in bankruptcy court but still must pay employee pension benefits.

Icahn's personal financial statement showed a net worth of $989 million in August.

"He has a large net worth and we intend to go after that," said Lockhart.

Jacka to speak at WTGS meeting

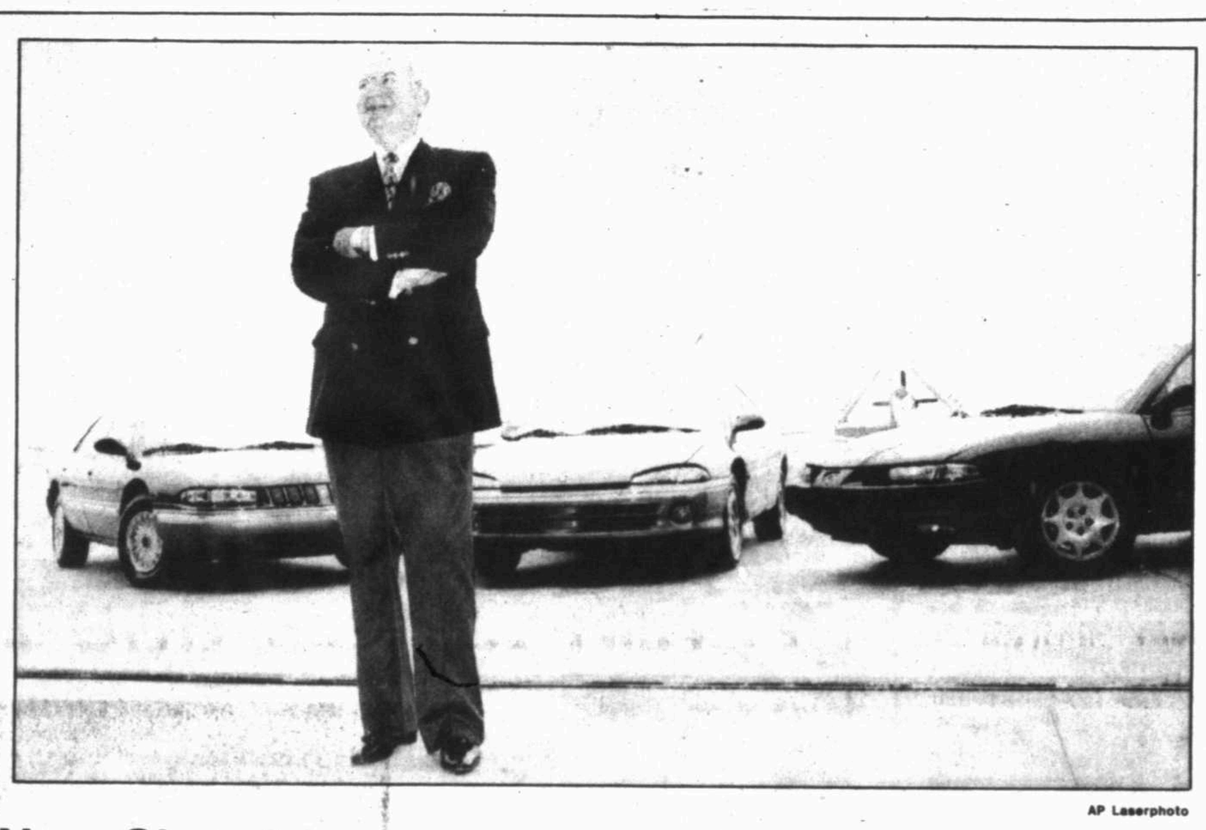

Staff report

Alonzo D. Jacka will be the guest speaker at Tuesday's meeting of the West Texas Geological Society. The meeting will be held at Midland Center beginning at 11:30 a.m.

Jacka, who holds a doctorate from Rice University and has been a member of the Geosciences faculty at Texas Tech University since 1959, is to discuss "A Textural Classification of Shales and Some Observations on Shale Diagenesis."

Based predominantly on petrographic analysis, a textural classification of shales is proposed and examples of each category will be given during the presentation.

Jacka has conducted research on siliciclastic depositional environments in the Rocky Mountains, Permian Basin and Gulf Coast. In addition to sandstones and carbonates, he has developed a research interest in shales.

Keating's federal trial to begin Wednesday

LOS ANGELES (AP) — In final maneuvers before Charles H Keating Jr.'s federal fraud trial, his lawyer will urge a judge today to rule that Keating's previous legal troubles can't be used as evidence.

Jury selection begins Wednesday.

Keating's lawyer, Stephen C. Neal, maintains his client will be found innocent if the jury focuses on relevant evidence alone.

"I expect them to spend a lot of time trying tangential stuff such as salaries and airplanes, rather than what is charged in the indictment," he said.

For their part, prosecutors want to exclude evidence of misconduct and faulty administration by state and federal regulators. Keating contends regulators' vindictiveness hounded him to ruin.

The failure of Keating's Lincoln Savings cost taxpayers an estimated $2.6 billion. The government claims he looted the S&L through its parent company, American Continental Corp.

Keating was convicted of 17 state counts of misleading small investors about the safety of the American Continental junk bonds for which many Lincoln depositors traded their insured accounts. The bonds became worthless when his empire fell in April 1989.

Some investors said they were told the bonds were insured.

That state conviction, which brought a 10-year sentence, is among the events from Keating's checkered past that Neal wants ruled inadmissible as evidence.

The federal charges describe additional schemes allegedly designed to plunder Lincoln to fund jet-set lifestyles for Keating, his family and associates.

They say he created sham profits through phony land sales, had Lincoln make what in effect were interest-free loans to its parent company, and looted the companies during their final months through fraudulent loans to himself and his son.

All told, Keating faces 73 counts of conspiracy, racketeering, bankruptcy fraud, wire fraud, bank fraud, interstate transportation of stolen property and misapplication of federally insured funds.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Many factors affect taxes on stock sale

By Bill Doyle

Q: I have one stock I have held on to the past 12 years. Now, I would like to cash in. How much capital gains tax will I have to pay? And when do I pay that tax?

Doyle

A: You get "that depends" replies to both queries.

Just when you'll have to settle up with the Internal Revenue Service depends on your modified adjusted gross income — AGI, for short — and some other complications those dunderheads in Congress slipped into the nation's tax code for 1992. Hang on for that.

The size of the tax bite depends on the amount of profit you realize when you sell, as well as your income tax bracket. We'll take that first:

When you sell a stock or any other capital asset, the difference between the price at which you purchased or otherwise acquired the asset is either a capital gain or capital loss. Since you have owned the stock for 12 years and mention capital gains, we'll assume you will sell at a profit, taxable as a capital gain.

If you are in the 15 or 28 percent federal income tax bracket, net long-term capital gains, on assets held more than one year, are taxed at the same rate as your other taxable income.

However, if you are in the 31 percent bracket, the tax on your long-term capital gains is 28 percent.

You pay capital gains tax either when you file your annual income tax return on April 15 following the year in which you realized the profit or when you make estimated income tax payments.

Anyone who would owe the IRS $500 or more must pay estimated tax quarterly — on April 15, June 15, Sept. 15 and Jan. 15 — under threat of penalty.

Until this year, you were excused from paying additional estimated tax if the total amount you pay through withholding and estimated payments equaled 100 percent of your previous year's total tax or 90 percent of your current year's tax.

But our overpaid members of Congress fouled things up by eliminating that "safe harbor" for any taxpayer (other than a farmer or fisherman) who made estimated tax payments or was charged an estimated tax penalty for any of the prior three years and has adjusted gross income greater than $75,000 ($37,500 for married folks filing separate returns) and whose modified AGI has increased by $40,000 ($20,000 for married separate filers).

If you make a bundle of profit when you sell that stock before this year is out, you will be required to pay the estimated tax on Jan. 15.

Q: I know my adjusted gross income is the bottom line on Page One of my annual federal income tax return. But what in the world is my "modified AGI," which is used to determine if I must pay additional estimated tax this year?

A: In never-ending tinkering with the Internal Revenue Code, Congress has made adjusted AGI different for different situations.

For this purpose, "modified AGI" means your AGI without including any profit from the sale of your principal residence or "gain from casualty, theft, condemnation or any other involuntary conversion required to be shown on your current year's return."

As with many complications in the tax code, that could make your eyes glaze over — driving you up the wall and into the arms of professional tax-return preparers.

Q: I have about 1,000 shares of stock in a major food chain for which I worked years ago. I obtained the shares through an employee stock purchase plan.

The total value of my stock now is approximately $50,000 and I want to sell. How do I find out the amount I paid, in order to know my profit and pay the correct capital gains tax?

A: If you didn't keep a record of the prices you paid, as you should have, your best bet is to ask the company's personnel office if it can provide a record of those prices.

If that fails, you can estimate your cost — based on the market prices of that stock at the times you made your purchases. Then say a few prayers the IRS doesn't question the return you file the year in which you sell the stock.

The winners qualify for the Rolex National Indoor Intercollegiate Championships, Feb. 4-7, 1993 in Minneapolis. That event is the third leg of the Collegiate Grand Slam and features the top Division I players in the country.

The Rolex National Small College Championships pitted players from NCAA Division II, Division III, NAIA and Junior Colleges against one another.

Sitepu was the NAIA Rolex champion, while Ludvigova was the Division II champion.

Emmitt raids LA party

Smith rushes for three TDs in Dallas' 28-13 win

By John Nadel
AP Sports Writer

LOS ANGELES — Emmitt Smith and the Dallas defense ruined the day for the largest crowd of the NFL season.

Smith rushed for 152 yards and three touchdowns Sunday as the Cowboys maintained their one-game lead in the NFC East with a 28-13 victory over the Los Angeles Raiders.

Smith, who carried 29 times, scored on a 6-yard run in the first quarter, a 4-yarder in the third period which put the Cowboys (6-1) ahead for good, and a 26-yarder with 3:26 left in the game.

"This was not my best day, but it will do," Smith said. "These were the biggest holes I've had to run through all year. We were able to mix the run and pass well today."

The Raiders (3-5), cheered on by a crowd of 91,505 at the Los Angeles Coliseum, had won their previous three games, but they didn't have enough offense to make it four in a row.

The Cowboys held them to just two first downs and 60 yards of total offense in the second half. The Raiders finished with 12 first downs and 165 yards of total offense.

"The key to our team is our defense is playing well and not allowing the other team to convert on third down," Smith said.

The Raiders didn't convert a third down in eight opportunities.

"We kept pressure on them all day long," Cowboys defensive tackle Tony Casillas said. "We were confident all day. We knew we could dominate them."

Smith's second touchdown run capped a 75-yard, five-play drive and made it 14-13. It came immediately after the Raiders had gone ahead 13-7.

Big play of the Cowboys' march was a 52-yard pass from Troy Aikman to Alvin Harper to the Los Angeles 21-yard line.

The Cowboys, playing on grass for the first time this season, extended their lead to 21-13 on a 3-yard run by Aikman with 10:06 left in the game, capping a 64-yard, 12-play march, and held the Raiders in check thereafter.

In fact, Los Angeles didn't cross midfield after a 31-yard pass from Todd Marinovich to Willie Gault had given the Raiders their 13-7 lead just 4:18 into the third quarter.

The Los Angeles touchdown came two plays after Tim Brown returned Mike Saxon's 29-yard punt 29 yards to the Dallas 33-yard line.

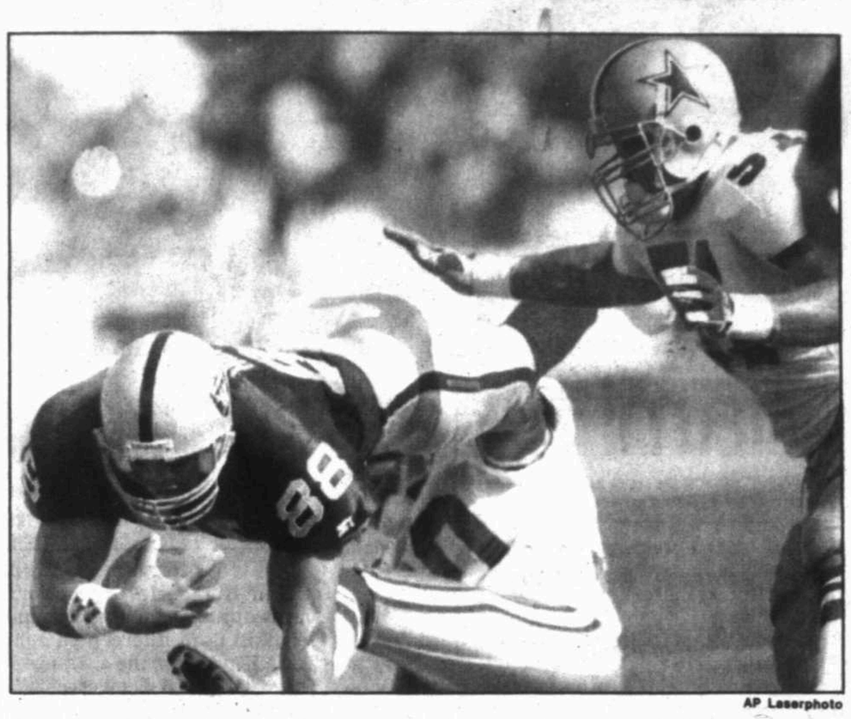

Smith gained 74 yards on 13 carries in the first half and 78 yards on 16 carries in the second half.

"I compared him to (Buffalo's Thurman) Thomas, but Smith is a lot stronger," Raiders safety Ronnie Lott said. "Dallas executed their offense great today."

Aikman completed 16 of 25 passes for 234 yards without being intercepted. He was sacked five times — twice each by Howie Long and Aaron Wallace.

"Being able to win on the road against the Raiders — they have an extremely talented team — that says something for our team," Cowboys coach Jimmy Johnson said. "We were worried to no end coming into this game because of the way they played the last three weeks.

Miami inched ahead of Washington by one point to take sole possession of first place in Sunday's Associated Press college football poll.

The Hurricanes and Huskies tied for the top spot last week, but Miami broke the deadlock after beating Virginia Tech 43-23 Saturday. Washington also improved to 7-0 with a 31-7 win over Pacific.

Although Miami received three more first-place votes than Washington (32-29), the Hurricanes lead by only one point (1,517-1,516) because three voters placed them third. Washington was third on one ballot.

After an early season filled with disappointments and speculation by critics that now-injured freshman quarterback Shea Morenz should replace starter Peter Gardere, the Texas Longhorns finally shook the controversy long enough to crack into the poll at No. 25 following a wild, 45-38 win over Houston. North Carolina was the only other new team to crack the Top 25, emerging at 22.

Miami has a larger lead in the USA Today-CNN coaches' poll, where the Hurricanes increased their cushion from one to 17 points. The coaches gave Miami a 37-22 edge in first-place votes.

Adams content with life on PGA Tour

Another year, another $170,000 or so for Midland native John Adams.

Adams, a 1972 graduate of Midland Lee and one of the least recognizable faces on the PGA Tour, just completed his 15th season on the circuit with a 38th place finish at the Disney Classic two weekends ago.

Patterson

His total winnings of $173,069 this year placed him 86th on the 1992 PGA money list. Pocket change for guys like Fred Couples, Davis Love III and John Cook — all of whom were made millionaires by sports' most elite fraternity this year. But to Adams, who now lives in Scottsdale, Ariz., his winnings are more than enough to satisfy him, his wife and two kids.

"Every year, it seems I have a couple of chances at winning a tournament," Adams said. "This year I was leading the Byron Nelson Classic going into the last day, but I shot a poor Sunday. I've had my chances this year. I was close in Atlanta and Boston."

And he was close a month ago in the Nevada desert, where he finished the five-day Las Vegas Invitational at 22-under par, good for a third-place tie and a sizable chunk of pocket change. The $62,400 he won for his efforts in Vegas accounted for more than a third of his total winnings this year.

"I played good at the end of the year," Adams noted. "I played awfully bad all year long, though. About the last eight weeks, I had a remarkable stretch of golf going."

At the Disney Classic, Adams' 38th place finish was indicative of how he sometimes struggles on Sundays. After Saturday's round, he was tied for 17th.

Early in October, Adams finished in the middle of the pack in the Southern Open, but had stood just five strokes back (2-under par) at the midway point.

In September, at the B.C. Open in Endicott, N.Y., Adams finished tied for 13th, and at the Hardees Classic, also in September, Adams finished tied for 32nd after opening in a tie for fifth after one round.

"I don't know what it's going to take (to win a tournament)," Adams said. "I've been doing it so long I'm certainly capable of doing it. They say if you give yourself enough chances that one day you'll stumble into something. I'm just waiting to stumble."

One source he credits for his turnaround late in the season is a visit paid by his coach, Jim Flick. Flick one of the golf world's most renowned instructors, "put some thoughts in my head and that was probably my turnaround."

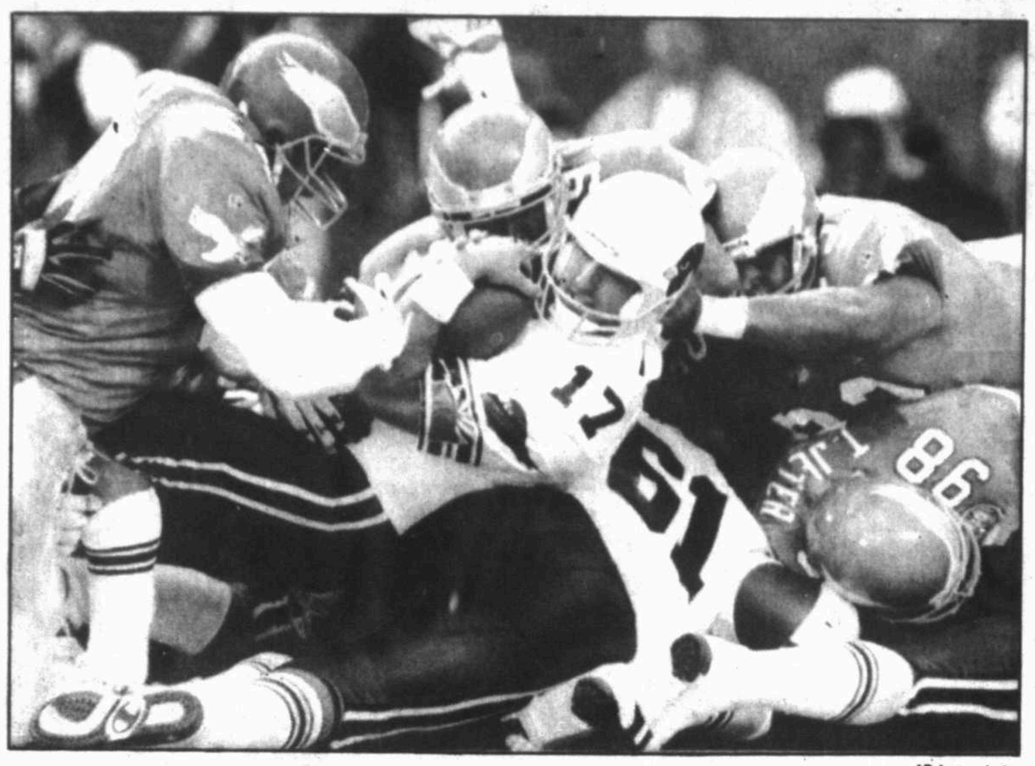

Of the 31 tournaments Adams played in 1992, he made the cut 17 times, including the last eight straight to close his season.

A seasoned tour player at 38, even Adams still marvels at the lengthy drives of second-year player John Daly. Adams, who finished second to Daly in driving distance this year (283.4-275.8 yards) likes to tell a story about Daly's long stick.

"We had a driving contest sponsored by the Canadian Open this year," Adams recalled. "There were 10 of us. I out-hit the field by 15 yards, and then John came up and out-hit me by 29 yards. That's just incredible."

Miami loses first game

Associated Press

While much was expected of Steve Emtman after the Indianapolis Colts made him the first pick in the NFL draft, nobody could have figured on this.

Here he was standing on his own 10-yard line as Miami quarterback Dan Marino tried to throw a decisive touchdown pass on the final play of Sunday's game. He did, but it was Emtman who scored.

"I just got my hands up. It hit my hands and stuck," Emtman said. "Next thing I knew, I was running."

He didn't stop until he reached the Miami end zone, giving the Colts a 31-20 victory that spoiled the Dolphins' status as the league's only unbeaten team.

Emtman's score came on a fourth-and-goal play at the Colts' 7-yard line. Taking the snap with 17 seconds left, Marino drilled a pass toward the end zone, but the 290-pound defensive end — standing just 5 yards in front of the quarterback — caught it and lumbered 90 yards down the left sideline.

"I thought he'd fall down, but he kept going," Colts linebacker Jeff Herrod said.

The Dolphins were not disheartened by the loss.

"There are a whole lot of other players who wish they were 6-1," tight end Keith Jackson said. "Only the media have been writing that this could be the team that would go 19-0."

Elsewhere in the NFL, it was Washington 15, Minnesota 13; Chicago 30, Green Bay 10; Houston 26, Cincinnati 10; Detroit 38, Tampa Bay 7; Philadelphia 7, Phoenix 3, the New York Giants 23, Seattle 10, San Diego 24, Denver 21; Dallas 28, the Los Angeles Raiders 13, and Cleveland 19, New England 17.

Buffalo is at the New York Jets on Monday night.

Marino threw two touchdown passes, a 48-yarder to Mark Duper and a 12-yarder to Tony Martin for a 20-17 lead with 6:01 remaining.

Redskins 15, Vikings 13

Chip Lohmiller was right at home in the Metrodome and perfect on five field goals — the last a 49-yarder with 1:09 remaining — as Washington (5-2) beat Minnesota (5-2). Lohmiller kicked collegiately in the stadium for the University of Minnesota.

The Metrodome also is a home on the road for the Redskins, who are 4-0 there — including a Super Bowl victory over Buffalo in January.

Lohmiller had to overcome some distractions.

"I had to buy 55 tickets," he said. "My whole family is here."

Eagles 7, Cardinals 3

Randall Cunningham's 40-yard touchdown pass to Calvin Williams in the second period was Philadelphia's only score, but it was the defense that saved the day for the Eagles (5-2).

They recovered three fumbles and intercepted a pass. But a goal-line stand in the second period was the showpiece. Because of Philadelphia penalties, Phoenix (1-6) was unable to score despite seven shots from inside the 3.

"What you saw out there was, I think, the best defense I've ever seen," Philadelphia coach Rich Kotite said. "It was magnificent."

Chargers 24, Broncos 21

Stan Humphries threw for a career-high 349 yards and two touchdowns and scored one himself, Gill Byrd intercepted John Elway twice and Tony Blaylock made a game-saving pickoff as San Diego (3-4) beat Denver (5-3).

Byrd, whose nine interceptions of Elway are the the most by any player, set up a touchdown and field goal with his thefts. Blaylock intercepted Elway in the end zone with 3:10 to go.

Bears 30, Packers 10

Jim Harbaugh matched a 28-year-old club record of 13 straight completions while leading Chicago (4-3) over Green Bay (2-5).

Harbaugh's string tied the record set by Rudy Bukich over two games in 1964 and it included a 4-yard touchdown pass to Keith Jennings. The passing game also set up two of Kevin Butler's three field goals.

"I didn't know it until after the game," Harbaugh said of the streak.

Sterling Sharpe caught nine passes for 144 yards and a touchdown for the Packers.

Lions 38, Bucs 7

Rodney Peete threw two touchdown passes, and Barry Sanders rushed for a season-high 122 yards and two touchdowns as the previously punchless Lions and broke a four-game losing streak.

Peete threw touchdown passes of 29 yards to Willie Green and 63 yards to Herman Moore on the Lions' first two possessions, and Sanders broke loose on a 55-yard TD run for Detroit (2-5). The Lions had a season-high 400 yards while handing Tampa Bay (3-4) its fourth loss in five games.

Giants 23, Seahawks 10

Jeff Hostetler scrambled 7 yards for a touchdown and hit Ed McCaffrey on a 7-yard TD pass in the third quarter to rally New York (3-4).

The loss was the fifth straight for Seattle (1-7), which scored for the first time in three games and got its first touchdown in 223 minutes, 14 seconds dating to a 17-6 loss to San Diego on Oct. 4.

Browns 19, Patriots 17

Cleveland (4-3) recovered four second-half fumbles in New England territory, and Scott Galbraith scored on a 6-yard pass from Mike Tomczak with 31 seconds left. Matt Stover had four field goals for the Browns.

Linebacker Mike Johnson forced and recovered a fumble by quarterback Hugh Millen at the New England 40 with 3:54 left to set up the winning drive.

Despite losing, New England (0-7) scored two touchdowns. The Browns had not allowed a touchdown in their previous three games.

Steelers 27, Chiefs 3

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Kansas City Chiefs should be glad that one lesson Bill Cowher learned as a protege of Marty Schottenheimer was how to win graciously.

Cowher, who spent seven years with Schottenheimer in Cleveland and Kansas City, is now the head coach at Pittsburgh and he led the underdog Steelers to a 26-3 victory of Schottenheimer's Chiefs on Sunday night in a teacher-student reunion that shocked and quieted a crowd of 76,175.

DALLAS: Aikman runs for score

(From 1C)

"We are happy to be 6-1 and we're ready to head back to Dallas."

The Cowboys host the Philadelphia Eagles (5-2) next Sunday. The Eagles handed the Cowboys their only loss earlier this month, beating them 31-7 in Philadelphia.

Marinovich struggled, completing only eight of 23 passes for 117 yards without being intercepted and was sacked three times. He was relieved by Jay Schroeder after Smith's third scoring run.

"We just didn't play well as a team in the second half," Marinovich said. "We had opportunities. There were passes I missed. We had the game under control in the first half and then let it slip away."

The Raiders, who entered the game having scored only 14 first-quarter points in their previous seven games, took a 6-0 lead by driving 83 yards on 11 plays after receiving the opening kickoff. Marcus Allen scored the touchdown on a 1-yard run.

The conversion attempt was aborted when holder Jeff Gossett was unable to handle a low snap from center Dan Turk and placekicker Jeff Jaeger's desperation pass was incomplete.

The Cowboys responded by moving 80 yards on 14 plays to take a 7-6 lead, scoring on Smith's 6-yard run. The Raiders hadn't allowed a touchdown in their 10 previous quarters.

The defenses then took over, with neither team posing a scoring threat during the rest of the first half.

"We had a great opening drive," Raiders coach Art Shell said. "Then it seemed we got a little satisfied. That hurt. Sometimes things come so easy for you and you think it's going to be that way for you the whole game. Even though Dallas came right back, we did not step it up."

Regarding Marinovich's tough day, Shell said, "It was a combination of his inexperience and the strong Dallas defense. Todd is learning on the job."

The loss left the Raiders two games out of first place in the AFC West at the midway point of their season.

"I don't want to get involved in how many wins we need to make the playoffs," Shell said. "We will get our share of wins."

OILERS: Moon throws for 342 yards

(From 1C)

victory Sunday over struggling Cincinnati.

The Oilers (5-2), who lost in the final minute to Denver a week ago, got off to a sluggish start but their defense got the wakeup call and shut out the Bengals in the second half.

Cincinnati (2-5) lost its fifth straight game and extended its Astrodome losing streak to eight in a row.

Slaughter, who signed with the Oilers on Sept. 29, caught four passes for 68 yards and also returned punts for the Oilers.

"I was this far from blowing up," Slaughter said of his first half bench time. "I was begging myself to be patient. Up to that point, I was thinking nothing would happen. I was so frustrated I was saying 'when will I get a chance to get in there.'

"Today I started feeling more like a part of the team."

Cincinnati's secondary preferred to have Slaughter on the bench.

"He (Slaughter) adds depth to their offense," cornerback Eric Thomas said. "The last time we played them we knew he wouldn't play. This time, there's no doubt he's a big threat. He was a big threat at Cleveland and he's a big threat here."

The defense held Cincinnati to 10 total yards in the second half, limiting Boomer Esiason to 139 passing yards and Harold Green was the Bengals' leading rusher with 38 yards.

"At the half, we felt it was a pride factor," safety Marcus Robertson said. "We gave up so many yards and we were tied. The first defensive series (in the second half) we broke the huddle with more pride. When we play like that we're almost unbeatable."

Cincinnati, a 17-point underdog, fought the Oilers to a 10-10 halftime standoff on Esiason's 17-yard touchdown pass to Brian Brennan and a 24-yard field goal by Jim Breech, who had his 186-game scoring streak snapped on Monday night.

Warren Moon completed a 30-yard touchdown pass to Ernest Givins and Al Del Greco had a 27-yard field goal for the halftime deadlock.

But Houston's defense came alive in the second half and Moon got the Oilers' offense moving for two more touchdowns and the victory.

Moon, who completed 27 of 40 passes for 342 yards, took the Oilers 85 yards, ending when White followed guard Doug Dawson's block into the end zone as the Oilers took the lead for good with 13:48 elapsed in the third quarter.

Floyd wins Senior Classic

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Raymond Floyd rolled in four straight birdies en route to a 9-under-par 62 Sunday and a tournament-record victory in the $600,000 Senior Classic.

Floyd's three-day total of 195 was 18-under-par, five better than the tournament record of 13-under 200 set last year by John Brodie.

"I can't tell you how ecstatic I am with my putting," said Floyd, a 50-year-old Senior Tour rookie.

Kyle Petty dominates at NC Motor Speedway

Associated Press

AC Delco 500

ROCKINGHAM, N.C. — Kyle Petty steamrolled the field Sunday in the AC Delco 500 NASCAR stock car race, leading 484 of 492 laps at North Carolina Motor Speedway.

The 32-year-old Petty, who started from the pole, did have to fend off a brief challenge from Ernie Irvan late in the race after the only two caution flags brought the front-running Petty back toward the second-place car.

But he was equal to the task, pulling away over the final 20 laps on the 1.014-mile oval and driving his Pontiac Grand Prix across the finish line .97 seconds — about six car-lengths — ahead of Irvan's Chevrolet Lumina in a record-setting performance.

He averaged 130.748 mph, breaking the track record of 127.292 mph set by Davey Allison last fall.

That effort gave Petty, a third-generation NASCAR star, his second victory of the season, the sixth of his career and certainly the most dominating.

"I took off at the beginning," Petty explained. "Halfway through the race, Ernie came back on me, but then we evened out again. We were timing Ernie and Mark (Saturday) and thought they were going to be awful tough, but I guess we were a whole lot better than we thought we were going to be yesterday."

"Kyle really got the handle on this racetrack," Irvan said. "We came close to what we wanted to do, but not quit. I had plenty of opportunities if I could catch him to catch him, but I couldn't do it.

"I kept wondering how I was going to pass him if I did catch him. We were both running the same groove. But I didn't have enought to get there anyway."

Ricky Rudd wound up third, a lap behind the winner, followed by series point-leader Bill Elliott, Sterling Marlin, Harry Gant and Brett Bodine.

Price wins Texas Open in playoff

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Nick Price was presented with a victory he didn't expect Sunday when Steve Elkington missed a little 3-foot putt in a playoff for the title in the Texas Open.

"It never entered my mind he might miss it," Price said. "I was pulling on my glove and going to the next tee. I was stunned."

Elkington, who will be Price's partner in an unofficial team competition later this year, was shocked, but quickly regained his composure after the 3-putt bogey on the second extra hole.

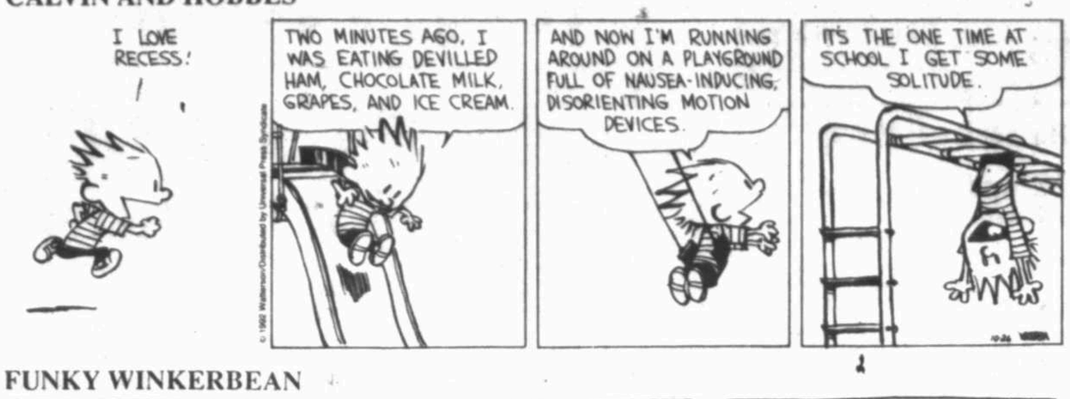

"That's what golf is and that's what makes it dramatic," he said.

The victory was the second of the year for Price, the PGA champion, and enabled him to become pro golf's fourth $1 million winner of the season.

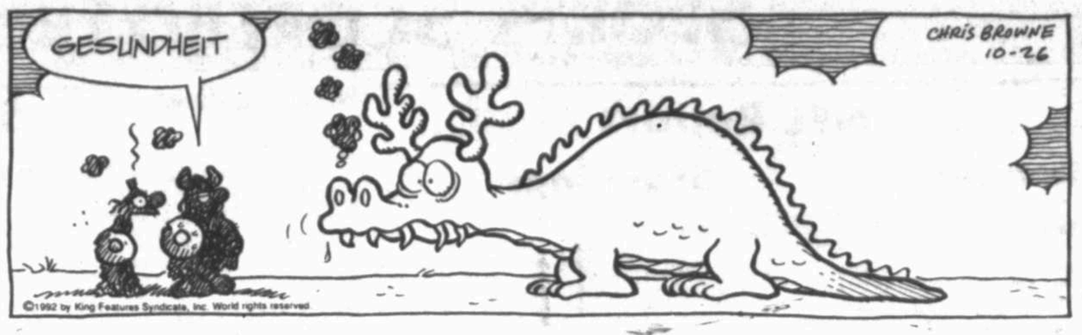

But the fifth victory of Price's career on the American tour, was worth $162,000 from the total purse of $900,000 and enabled him to join Fred Couples, Davis Love III and John Cook as $1 million winners this year.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1992

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: A mystery is finally cleared up to your satisfaction. As the winter holidays approach, members of the opposite sex find you especially attractive. Your powers of persuasion win you a promotion or raise early in 1993. Children turn their lives around in a positive way next spring. Devoting more time to your mate should ensure domestic tranquillity during the summer months. August and September prove lucky for both romance and socializing.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: singer great Mahalia Jackson, actor Bob Hoskins, actress Jaclyn Smith, Hillary Clinton.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Open the communication lines to relatives, monied people and those who share your goals. You can make your savings grow through savvy business maneuvers.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Someone who starts a legal action may have hidden motives. Get expert advice before you respond. Let reason be your guide. A hasty financial decision could bring lasting regrets.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Concentration can be difficult if there are constant interruptions. Handle routine work with extra care. Promises made lightly are too easily broken. Romance looks terrific.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Diplomacy helps you win influential people over to your way of thinking. Travel, educational pursuits and other activities designed to widen your horizons are highlighted this afternoon.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): There could be a temporary lack of support and harmony today. Go about your business and let others do their own thing. By evening, everyone will be in a much better mood.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You may not be able to escape from problems at home, but you can put them aside. Focus your attention on friends and group activities. A business or romantic quandary tests your maturity.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 Oct. 22): A travel or communication snag could upset you. After reviewing your options, you will see your way clearly. An alternative plan could work out even better than the original one.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): The forecast is outstanding for your personal relationships. Cultivate new friendships while you also strengthen longtime alliances. Artistic pursuits can be highly lucrative this coming winter.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Organizations, friends or kin give a pet project their stamp of approval. No goal is out of reach — you have the backing you need to work wonders.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Avoid being a stay-at-home now. Plug into the main social stream and you could end up center-stage. Social and business groups welcome you. Your confident attitude leads to success.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): In both word and deed, you will be in the power seat today. VIPs give a creative project the green light. You are able to say what needs to be said without causing enmity.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Information of a fresh nature is in the spotlight. A professional's opinion could be involved. Stay on top of details, appointments and phone calls — a financial windfall is possible.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK10875 ♡AJ93 ◇62 ♣8
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 NT	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—You are in slam territory, but not necessarily in spades. North could easily have a four-card heart suit on this auction, and you shouldn't overlook this possibility. Bid three hearts.

Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQ7 ♡AKQ ◇KJ654 ♣43
Partner opens the bidding with one club. What do you respond?
A.—We have written time and again that there are two criteria for a jump shift: either a self-sufficient suit of your own or an excellent fit for partner's suit. This hand meets neither, so for the moment be content with a response of one diamond. You can catch up later.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQ10 ♡A96 ◇QJ9 ♣8752
Partner opens the bidding with one spade. What do you respond?
A.—You have a balanced hand of 13 points, and that meets the textbook requirements for a jump response of two no trump. There's no need to look for any other bid, even playing five-card majors! You can always support spades later if partner shows an unbalanced hand.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠8653 ♡K643 ◇64 ♣Q95
Partner opens the bidding with one club. What do you respond?
A.—You do not have much, but your hand is just worth a response. By revaluing the queen in partner's suit upward and adding a point for the doubleton, it qualifies for a bid of one heart—barely.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠942 ♡A8 ◇7432 ♣J109
Partner opens the bidding with a demand bid of two diamonds. What do you respond?
A.—Despite a side ace and four-card support for partner's suit, we don't think your holding quite measures up to a positive response. Bid two no trump; you can become aggressive later.

Q.6—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A109 ♡AQJ10854 ◇95 ♣3
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	2 ◇	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—The message you want to get across to partner is that your suit is good enough to play opposite a void! The way to do that is to jump to four hearts. Three hearts would be an error—it promises more in the way of high cards than you hold, and suggests alternative contracts might be available.

Bill Cosby: Media wrongly portrayed L.A. riot looters

LOS ANGELES — Bill Cosby told students at Occidental College that the media wrongly portrayed looters during the spring Los Angeles riots as bad people.

Cosby

"What were the riots about? What was the looting about?" the comedian asked Friday while picking up an honorary doctorate. "It's about us and the fact that we have not followed up on our commitment."

Cosby, 55, said the looting reminded him of an incident when he was growing up in a poor part of Philadelphia. He and friends were in a crowd that stormed a movie theater after a rumor of a free show, he said.

"People will steal," Cosby said. "And if it's free and they have a chance, they will take."

He challenged the students to fight society's inequities rather than just work on their careers.

ROCHESTER, N.Y. — Audrey Hepburn says she's not in retirement and would make another movie if the right opportunity came along.

Hepburn

"I'd love it — why not?" the film star said Saturday while picking up the George Eastman Award for Distinguished Contribution to the Art of Film.

Past recipients include Fred Astaire, Greta Garbo, Jimmy Stewart and Lauren Bacall.

Hepburn, who starred in "My Fair Lady," "Roman Holiday," and "Breakfast at Tiffany's," stopped making films in 1965 when her oldest son started school.

She made an appearance in Stephen Spielberg's film "Always" in 1989.

"I didn't make that many movies, but I was terribly happy making all of them," Hepburn said. "I never retired."

But Hepburn said any film work would have to fit into her busy schedule as a Goodwill Ambassador for UNICEF. She recently returned from a trip to Somalia for the international children's agency.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Grand Ole Opry humorist Minnie Pearl wept when she saw an advance screening of a cable TV special in her honor, her husband says.

The 2½-hour show, "Hats Off to Minnie: America Honors Minnie Pearl," will be broadcast tonight on The Nashville Network.

"It made Minnie cry because every one of those people came to the show because of their love of her, people from all over the country," her husband, Henry Cannon, said last week.

Pearl, who turned 80 Sunday, suffered a stroke in the summer of 1991 and has not performed publicly since. She has been largely bedridden and has not regained mobility on her left side.

The tribute, hosted by Barbara Mandrell, features Pee Wee Herman, Jim Nabors, Amy Grant, Vince Gill and Reba McEntire.

TEMPE, Ariz. — The rap group Public Enemy, which attacked Arizona in song for rescinding its Martin Luther King Jr. holiday, cut short a performance as a form of protest.

Opening for the Irish rock group U2 on Saturday night, Public Enemy performed the controversial "By The Time I Get To Arizona" and one other song before leaving the Sun Devil Stadium stage.

"We're only 10 days away from the vote and hopefully, when you vote the Martin Luther King holiday in, we can come back and play for you," lead rapper Chuck D told the crowd of about 50,000.

"But right now, we're under protest and we're not going to do our usual songs."

Arizona is the only state without some form of a paid King holiday.

Former Gov. Bruce Babbitt created a King holiday in 1986, but his successor, Evan Mecham, rescinded it in 1987.

Arizona voters rejected a King Day proposal in 1990. A new proposition on the Nov. 3 ballot would create a paid Martin Luther King-Civil Rights Day.

"I wish you luck and I pray Martin Luther King will have his day in this state," U2 lead singer Bono said at the end of the show.

NEW YORK — After two weeks of steady bashing, Sinead O'Connor got some support Sunday from a loosely knit group that tore up pictures of Pope John Paul II in front of St. Patrick's Cathedral.

Calling themselves the "Sinead Brigade," about a dozen women and several men from different activist groups held a brief protest outside the church as Cardinal John J. O'Connor said Mass inside.

Many posed wearing Sinead masks.

Two weeks ago, the Irish singer tore up a picture of the pope on "Saturday Night Live." She said she wanted to draw attention to child abuse, which she believes stems in part from the teachings of the Catholic Church.

Armchair managing can begin

■ Forget the mundane happenings of winter baseball, it's time to start critiquing the decisions made in the just-completed World Series.

By Ben Walker
AP Baseball Writer

ATLANTA — If you are worrying that the business of baseball is all you'll hear about from now on, relax.

Because following another World Series full of one-run games, questionable calls and big and little heroes, there will be more to talk about during the winter than free agency, franchises and a possible lockout.

As in, did Atlanta manager Bobby Cox leave in Charlie Leibrandt too long Saturday night — early Sunday morning, actually — in the 11th inning of Game 6?

Or, should the Braves have taken a big risk and tried to score Lonnie Smith with the winning run in the ninth when Candy Maldonado threw high and wide to the plate?

How about the designated hitter in the World Series, or the lack of one? The rule left Ron Gant's bat on the Braves bench, but wound up with Toronto pitcher Jimmy Key batting for the first time in his career in a key spot?

And, how about Otis Nixon's bunt?

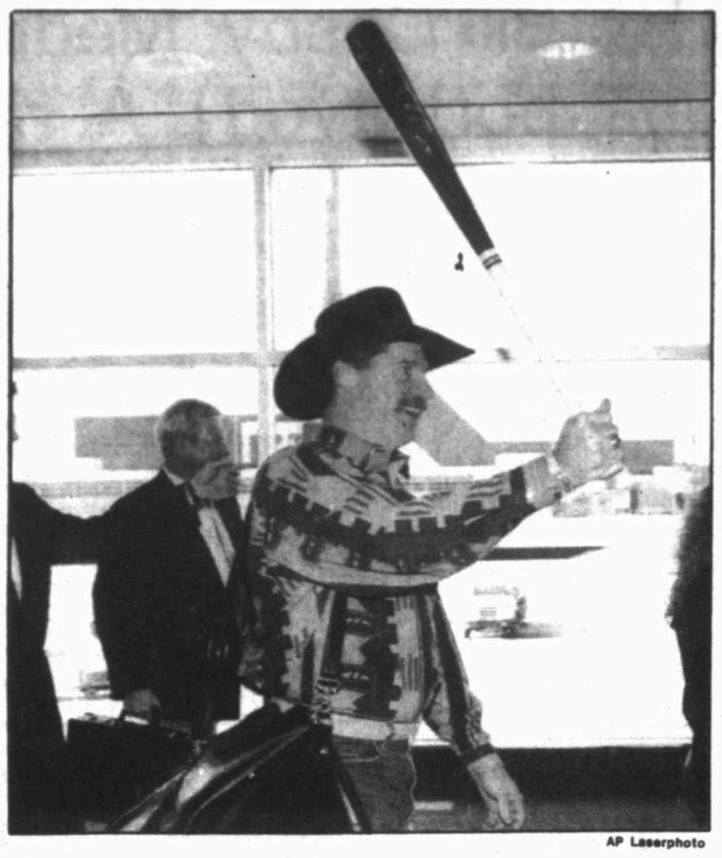

Yes or no, stop or go, these are the kinds of discussions that keep the game going. More so, sometimes, than the main issue in the World Series, even after it's all over — which team is better?

To the Toronto Blue Jays, there's no doubt following the 4-3 victory in 11 innings in Game 6 that brought the championship to Canada for the first time.

While their fans celebrated behind the third-base dugout by waving Canadian flags and doing the Braves' tomahawk chop with hockey sticks, the Blue Jays were back in the clubhouse, imitating Atlanta's war chant and shaking champagne bottles.

"We really didn't want to go to Game 7," Dave Winfield said. "We used everything we had just to hold them off in their ballpark with all their fans."

It was Winfield's two-out, two-run double in the 11th that won the game, although the Blue Jays almost blew it twice.

AP Laserphoto

Toronto pitcher Jack Morris walks through the Toronto airport waving a flag and mocking the Atlanta Braves' chopping motion.

They took a 2-1 lead into the ninth, along with a pair of streaks — Toronto relievers had pitched 15 1-3 scoreless innings in the Series, and had not blown a save chance since July 24.

But down to their last strike, just as they were in the playoffs, the Braves bounced back. Nixon singled with two outs through the hole on the left side, the same place Francisco Cabrera got his two-out, two-run single in the ninth of Game 7 to beat Pittsburgh.

Maldonado, who had nearly misplayed a line drive by Cabrera a batter earlier, charged Nixon's hit and uncorked a wild throw home. The heave hit the backstop on fly, staying in play by just a few feet, and for an instant, it looked like Lonnie Smith might have a chance to score, too.

The Blue Jays, however, scrambled around, with MVP catcher Pat Borders retrieving the ball and makeshift first baseman Joe Carter covering the plate.

When Gant, who replaced Deion Sanders late in the game, flied out, it went to extra innings. Home teams had won the last 10 extra-inning games in the World Series since Oakland beat the Mets at Shea Stadium in 1973, the Braves hoped to saddle Toronto with consecutive losses for the first time since Aug. 28-29.

In the 11th, with both teams short on players, Key led off and fouled out. Earlier in the week, when Toronto pitchers took batting practice at the SkyDome, Key used an aluminum bat and hit a few balls into the second deck in left. He got two good cuts against Leibrandt, too, although had nothing to show for it.

Blue Jays manager Cito Gaston, who has been severely second-guessed ever since he took over the team in May 1989, made the decision to leave Key in the game, rather than pinch hit.

"We were running short of pitchers at that time. Eichhorn could give me a couple, (Mike) Timlin could give me a couple," Gaston said. "Thank you, Dave Winfield."

Later in the 11th, it came down to Winfield vs. Leibrandt, both looking for redemption.

Winfield, who was 4 for 21 in the Series at that point, still was hounded by his 1 for 22 performance in the 1981 World Series. Leibrandt, making his first appearance in this Series, was still haunted by the home run pitch he threw to Kirby Puckett in the 11th inning of Game 6 last year, which led to Minnesota's comeback and eventual championship.

Jeff Reardon was warming up, but he had given up game-winning hits in two games this week. Winfield was just 1 for 13 lifetime against Reardon, and was 16 for 53 (.302) with four homers against Leibrandt.

Reardon, however, has not been sharp. So Cox let the left-handed Leibrandt face Winfield, rather than go with the numbers and the righty-righty matchup.

With the runners going from first and second on a 3-2 pitch, Winfield hit a grounder past third baseman Terry Pendleton. The Blue Jays immediately sprung out of the dugout to celebrate, while Leibrandt took a frustrated swipe at the ground.

"It was just one measley hit, but the biggest one I've ever got," said Winfield, among the career leaders in many of baseball's big categories.

The Braves made one last bid, putting runners at second and third with one out in the 11th after an error by shortstop Alfredo Griffin. After Brian Hunter's RBI grounder, up came Nixon with the tying runner on third and two outs.

Timlin, the Midland native who graduated from Midland High in 1984, relieved and the Blue Jays met in the middle of the diamond, warning each other that Nixon might bunt. Nixon did on an 0-1 pitch, and Timlin fielded the ball to the left of mound and calmy made the play for the final out.

The victory set off a wild celebration, both in Atlanta and back in Toronto, where 45,000 people paid $3 each to charity to watch the game inside the SkyDome on the JumboTron board. The win also let the Blue Jays lose the loser's label they had worn for so long.

"The only time I was worried was in the 11th, after the error," Blue Jays general manager Pat Gillick said. "After that happened, I started to think, 'maybe it's not meant to be.'"

Series great, but what of the future ...

By Ronald Blum
AP Sports Writer

ATLANTA — There are 116 days until pitchers and catchers report. Or are there?

After another glorious end to a summer in the sun, baseball now enters another period of doom and gloom. Owners claim they're going broke but refuse to show their books. Players leave their teams in search of bigger bucks, filing for free agency starts Monday. Television networks say fewer fans are watching.

No one knows whether the Giants will play in St. Petersburg or San Francisco next year. There's the expansion draft, when Florida and Colorado will pluck established veterans to stock their rosters. There's no commissioner and the National League president wants out as fast as he can.

And, hanging above it all, is management's threat to reopen the collective bargaining agreement and maybe lock out spring training again.

It almost makes Toronto's World Series victory seem ancient.

"We have been assuming for more than a year that they will reopen and take a hard line," players association head Donald Fehr said Sunday. "We are still assuming that."

The deal agreed to in March 1990 expires on Dec. 31, 1993, but either side can reopen by this Dec. 11. The Major League Baseball Players Association has said it doesn't intend to reopen, but Milwaukee Brewers owner Bud Selig, the chairman of the Player Relations Committee, says management is examining all its options.

"It's obvious that there's a Dec. 11 deadline," deputy commissioner Steve Greenberg said Sunday. "Beyond that, I don't know. I don't think anyone knows. It's got to be decided in the next 50 days. There's a lot of meetings going on among the clubs and the PRC."

PRC president Richard Ravitch, hired by Selig to negotiate with the union after once heading New York City's transit system, declined to comment Sunday on the status of management's decision-making. Management officials, speaking on the condition of anonymity, said several clubs were clearly in favor of a reopener and a lockout, and others were clearly opposed.

Jerry Reinsdorf of the Chicago White Sox, the most influential owner, said in September that a lockout shouldn't be attempted unless 21 clubs support it, and that he would favor a lockout of perhaps an entire season if it would get the union to agree to a revenue-sharing system similar to the NBA's.

"The game has enormous economic problems, and they have to be examined," Selig said in September. Yet management refuses to back up its claims with facts.

But before that's even considered, owners must first decide the fate of the Giants. A San Francisco delegation is scheduled to meet Tuesday with the ownership committee, and a final decision is expected by the first week of November.

By then, there will be a record number of free agents. A total of 166 players were potentially eligible as of Sunday, including 10 with club options for 1993 and 35 who will find out by Thursday if they are offered salary arbitration or let go.

The available market includes some of the top stars: Kirby Puckett, Barry Bonds, Joe Carter, Ruben Sierra, Wade Boggs, Mark McGwire, Greg Maddux, Doug Drabek and David Cone.

Toronto must decide whether to offer arbitration to Dave Winfield and Candy Maldonado, and Atlanta must make a similar decision with Jeff Reardon. Oakland has 14 potential free agents, assuming it offers arbitration to Mike Moore.

The filing period ends Nov. 9, and teams must submit their 15-man protected lists the following day. The Marlins and Rockies will then prepare for the Nov. 17 draft, when they should be able to stock the strongest expansion rosters ever.

While they'll know who their teams are, the rest of baseball is unlikely to know the identity of the next commissioner until next spring or summer. Selig has said a search won't begin until the restructing committee makes its recommendations later this year.

A search already is on to replace NL president Bill White, who feels frustrated and doesn't want reelection. The restructuring committee and the television committee are examining possible changes in division formats.

ESPN has opted for a $13 million buyout rather than its $250 million option for 1993 and 1994. CBS has said its $1.057 billion, four-year deal was a mistake, and all three networks say the price will go down, prompting owners to predict a decline in the average salary, which broke $1 million for the first time this year.

"Baseball does have a lot of problems," agent Tom Reich said Sunday, "but nothing that approaches the disarray our country is in. These are problems that can be worked out in spite of many protestations to the contrary. Regardless of what is being said, I will bet everything short of my daughter that there will not be a lockout this year. Management can't afford it this year. Maybe next year."

TIMLIN: Midland native wants repeat in '93 Series

(From 1C)

first time in the game's history.

Toronto in six games was the final tally. Every game the Jays' won they did so by just one run. Arguably one of the biggest heroes — at least in these parts — was Timlin, who former MHS coach Tim Whalen said once upon a time didn't even want to pitch. Timlin preferred first base or the outfield instead.

So what does the man credited with the Series-winning save do to celebrate after returning to Toronto?

"We're just going to pack," Timlin said from his in-season home in Canada Sunday night. "We'll go to the parade tomorrow and then head home (to Florida)."

Never one to let the excitement affect him adversely, Timlin talked like Sunday was just another day.

"Oh, it's sunk in a little bit," he said of his Game 6 accomplishment. "It's kind of hard to comprehend you're the World Champions. But you've got to act normal."

As for being such an integral part of that championship, it's clear Timlin is not overemphasizing his importance in the outcome.

"I didn't ever think I'd be in that situation, at least not this early in my career," he said. "Apparently I was, and I'm glad I was.

"I don't really expect anything to be different. I went out and played golf after we lost the (American League Championship) series last year. Nothing's really changed. The only thing that'll change is I'm getting married in November, and I'll be happy then. We're going to be doing some traveling, putting our house together."

Armchair managers during Saturday's deciding game wondered just why Gaston lifted Jimmy Key in favor of Timlin when Key was doing an adequate job. Even Timlin's mother, Sharon, was a little on edge at the time.

"I just thought, 'Golly, why are you putting my kid on the mound when there's so much pressure?'" Ms. Timlin said.

"My mom's pretty happy," Timlin added. "She was happier today (Sunday) than last night when I talked to her after the game. Even my fiancee was really nervous. I was just glad I got to pitch. I wanted to get in and do something, I had only thrown one inning."

Timlin said he had brief chats with former MHS teammate Mike Stanton, who pitched in four of the six Series games for Atlanta and who was credited with a save in Game 3. When he was pulled with two outs in the bottom of the ninth Saturday, Stanton had not been scored upon in 18⅔ consecutive post-season innings.

But the real story was Timlin, an unassuming sort who will probably forever shy away from publicity and controversy. When Timlin's agent called him Sunday to congratulate him, the subject of money never even came up, although, by every right, now's the time for Timlin to be hinting he might like a little pay boost.

Shrugging his shoulders, Timlin said there's only one way to go out and top what he and his Toronto teammates did Saturday night.

"Go back out and do it again," he said.
