Hearings begin for civil rights nominees

WASHINGTON (AP) — Three of President Reagan's nominees to the Civil Rights Commission faced a Senate confirmation hearing today amid criticism from civil rights organizations and action by the administration to enhance its position among minorities.

The three nominees, and 32 other witnesses, were testifying before a Senate Judiciary Committee hearing chaired by Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C.

The new nominees, all white, are:

—Morris B. Abram, 64, of New York, a lawyer and former president of Brandeis University. He would succeed Mary Frances Berry, a black who was assistant secrtary of education in the Carter administration.

—John H. Bunzel, 59, senior research fellow at Stanford University's Hoover Institution and former president of San Jose State University in California. He would succeed Blandina Cardenas Ramirez, a Hispanic educator from San Antonio, Texas, who was appointed by Carter.

—Robert H. Destro, 32, assistant professor at Catholic University's Columbus Law School. He would succeed Rabbi Murray Saltzman of Baltimore, who was appointed by President Ford.

If the nominees, all Democrats, win Senate confirmation Reagan will have replaced all but one of the commission's six members since he took office. That lone holdover would be Jill Ruckelshaus, wife of William Ruckelshaus, head of the Environmental Protection Agency.

The commission, which must be bipartisan by law, monitors the impact of federal laws and policies on discrimination based on race, color, religion, sex, national origin, age or handicap. It investigates voting rights complaints and collects civil rights information.

After announcing the nominations May 25, Reagan was criticized by major civil rights groups for replacing the current commission members with conservatives who share his opposition to racial quotas and school busing.

"More 140 national organizations oppose the set of nominations," said Ralph G. Neas, executive director of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights. "The critical issue is not the qualifications of the nominees or their positions on particular issues. Rather, the deep concern is to prevent the president from subverting the commission's historic independence and integrity."

The leadership conference issued a statement saying that since establishment of the commission more than 25 years ago, every president has sought "to preserve the commission's unique independence by maintaining its continuity to such an extent that no president until this administration has replaced any commissioners.

"President Reagan has shattered this essential practice and tradition," the conference said. "In attempting to fire five of the six commissioners, he seeks to transform the commission from an independent agency to an instrument of presidential policy.

"This unprecedented threat to the integrity and viability of the commission must be resisted and overcome," the conference said.

In a related action, the Civil Rights Commission on Tuesday criticized Reagan's proposed cuts in school aid, saying they come "at a particularly inopportune time."

The commission, in a unanimous report, declared: "Many of the educational programs slated for cuts are those that have met with success in improving the quality of education for the neglected and the disadvantaged."

Principals to be named

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN
Staff Writer

Midland Independent School District board of trustees will hold a special meeting 8:30 a.m. Friday to name the new principals to Midland and Lee high schools. Jack Stone, who was formerly principal at MHS, has been appointed director of staff development. Lee High's principal, Dr. Joe Smith, resigned last month.

In other action Tuesday, trustees approved plans for seven additional classrooms at Rusk Elementary School, finalized the district's eligibility requirements for students involved in extracurricular activities, heard a survey of 1982 honor graduates and revised provisions for temporary leaves of absence.

Last month the board approved a policy which put on probation any student participating in extracurricular activities who received two or more F's during a six-week grading period. If grades were not improved at the end of the probationary period the student would become ineligible for school-related activities. Tuesday, trustees voted to regard an unsatisfactory grade received in a course taken pass-fail as an 'F' for eligibility.

"We need to have some consequence for taking a class and not making any effort and just failing," insisted Dr. Joe Baressi, superintendent of schools.

Trustee Ann Page cast the only opposing vote. In an earlier meeting she said the purpose of the pass-fail grading method was to allow students to take desired electives they may not otherwise try because of the consequences of a poor grade. An unsatisfactory grade received in such a course does not affect a student's grade point average.

The board also heard results of a follow-up survey of 1982 honor graduates of the MISD. Of the 62 graduates, 47 responded to the questionnaire. All of them were attending college fulltime, and 42 said they felt high school helped prepare them.

"I think the information we received speaks well of our program," Baressi said. The college grade point average of the students ranged from 2.0 to 4.0, while the mean was 3.3.

Highly-rated high school courses included math, English and science, while free enterprise and health were the two subjects listed as least helpful. Several of those responding said they wished they had taken classes in calculus, physics, vocabulary development and computer math.

Of the comments received, the most troublesome to board members were statements that high school had not sufficiently trained students in study skills.

"We will be taking a look at that and discussing it with our high school staffs," said Assistant Superintendent Duane Moore. "This is a small sample so we have to be careful about making assumptions."

"I think it is shown through this survey that college-bound students are not taught how to study," Trustee Joe Golding said. "I would suggest an elective course on how to study."

In other action, the board approved plans to build seven additional classrooms at Rusk Elementary at a cost of $463,000. It had turned down three earlier proposals including a new library and locker facilities as too costly. The project will leave $152,000 in the classroom fund of the 1982 bond issue. With the completion of Rusk, 13 of the 20 classrooms allotted will have been built.

Trustees unanimously approved on first reading new classifications of temporary leave. The measure would grant pregnancy and parental leaves of absence. Pregnancy had been included under temporary disability leave.

"The basic change here is that a doctor does not have to certify the pregnancy condition as a threat to the mother," Baressi explained. Previously, a teacher could not get leave unless her pregnancy was diagnosed as disabling.

Parental leave would be granted parents of newborn children, either natural or adopted, and would apply to the father as well as the mother. "Let's hear it for male equality!" exclaimed Golding.

Under personnel items, the board approved the promotion of Maridell Fryer to director of secondary education. She also will continue to coordinate language arts, speech and fine arts. Patricia Alexander's title was changed to coordinator of Gifted Education in Midland and supervisor of Carver Cultural Center. Her previous title had been coordinator of the GEM program.

Suit filed in police dog mauling

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

A civil suit has been lodged in connection with the police dog mauling of a church custodian last spring.

Filed Tuesday by the law firm of Torres and Shackelford, the suit names the City of Midland, Chief of Police Wayne Gideon and four police officers as defendants.

The officers are Richard Edens, J.B. Luckie, Alan Inmon and Ed Nicks.

The plaintiff is 31-year-old Raul Paredez, a custodian at First United Methodist Church, 305 N. Baird St.

Paradez suffered arm and facial injuries in the attack and one of his ears had to be reattached during surgery at Midland Memorial Hospital.

The incident occurred when a police dog was turned loose to search for a burglary suspect in the darkened church about 2:30 a.m. on April 6.

Police said they spotted a man disappear on foot near the large, two-story building and sent the dog in to conduct a room-by-room search after an outside door was found ajar and no one responded to their command to come out.

Paredez, who had keys to the church and apparently had been sleeping there after a falling-out with relatives, was in an upstairs mop closet when police opened the door of the small room and the dog entered it.

Police said the door, which opens inward, suddenly slammed shut with Paredez and the dog on one side and them on the other.

The dog's handler, officer Edens, said he at once called for the animal to "break" and that when he was finally able to enter the room he found the dog standing over "but not biting" Paredez.

Edens, who holds a master's certificate in dog trining, said it took him "five to seven" seconds to push his way into the closet because Paredez apparently was pinned against the door.

Edens said he then pulled the dog into the hallway and put him at heel. He later told Chief Gideon that he didn't have any trouble getting the dog to mind him.

The suit, however, contends "the dog is a vicious animal with dangerous propensities." It "is uncontrollable, does not obey commands" and is "dangerously unfit for use as a police dog.

"Defendants Edens, Inmon and Luckie, either intentionally or negligently, failed to intervene to stop the attack until after Plaintiff suffered grave and disabling injuries.

"Defendants Gideon, Edens, Luckie, Inmon and Nicks, under color of state law, custom or usage, separately and in concert are personally responsible for the deprivation of Plaintiff's constitutional rights."

But an April 15 grand jury investigation concluded there were "no indications that criminal prosecution of any party concerned would be in order.

"Moreover, (we are) of the opinion that the K-9 Unit should be continued as an arm of law enforcement, and that the unit should be enlarged as available funds permit."

Police charged Paredez with burglary, but the complaint was later dropped when church officials refused to press charges.

Although the suit does not specify the amount of damages sought, Paredez' attorneys recently asked the city for $85,000 as compensation for his injuries and expenses. The request was denied.

Responding to the suit, which was filed in State District Judge Vann Culp's court, Gideon said:

"Let me say that it's our policy not to comment on pending litigation. But it is our clear and definite position that this case is absolutely one of no liability whatsoever from any realistic standpoint.

"We enthusiastically welcome our day in court for the full trial of this case on its merits, when the complete presentation of all actual occurences and the facts will be offered into evidence."

Chilean streets patrolled as protests continue

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Police and troops patrolled Chile's two largest cities today after a teen-age girl was killed and riot squads arrested 565 people in violent, noisy demonstrations against the 10-year-old military government.

President Gen. Augusto Pinochet tried to quash the third "Day of National Protest" in three months with an 8 p.m-to-midnight curfew in Santiago and Concepcion, but his security forces failed keep hundreds of young anti-government rioters off the streets of working class districts.

The nighttime disorders capped a day of turbulent protests at four universities and two courthouses, organized by Christian Democratic, Socialist and Communist leaders protesting high unemployment and a crackdown that has put Pinochet's top political and labor foes in jail.

Military authorities announced the one-night curfew at midday. It was the first army attempt to suppress the two-month-old protest movement, the first sustained political challenge to Pinochet since the 67-year-old general seized power a decade ago.

However, troops sent to enforce the curfew left the burden of confrontation to police armed with automatic weapons, tear-gas, clubs, protective helmets and plastic shields. Chilean press reports based on police and unofficial counts tallied 565 arrests in Santiago and other cities.

The curfew kept more demonstrators indoors than during similar protests by hundreds of thousands of Chileans on May 11 and June 14. But the noise they made Tuesday night by banging pots and the tin ceilings of their slum hovels sounded louder and was heard in more neighborhoods, rich and poor. Church bells joined the protest in some working class areas.

As the din persisted for more than two hours, bands of youths erected flaming barricades of old tires at bridges and hundreds of intersections in outlying areas of the capital, then hurled rocks and gasoline bombs at police who retaliated with tear gas and gunfire aimed upward.

Police said Isabel Sanhueza, a 19-year-old student, was shot dead outside her home in southwest Santiago during the curfew.The death brought to six the number killed in the three nationwide one-day demonstrations so far.

Tuesday night's disorders were in Santiago and three working class suburbs of Concepcion.

Americans pray for Nicaragua

By GARNDER SELBY

From Our Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Her head wrapped in a pink-patterned bandana, her skin the clay brown of nearby corn fields, 75-year-old Maria Garcia Lopez cried out at the loss of her three grown sons.

Speaking to an American church member visiting the Nicaraguan border village of Jalapa, the wrinkled peasant said her sons had been killed during a break in planting by U.S.-backed guerrillas crossing from Honduras.

"Ask President Reagan if he has any children, and if he loves them," she said. "If he does, he will understand our grief and sorrow at the loss of our children."

The women spoke as more than 150 Americans, representing churches in 31 states, gathered for a dawn-to-noon peace vigil in a village dotted by makeshift bunkers and foxholes. Her tape-recorded plea was played Monday to a news conference by members of the Carolina Interfaith Task Force on Central America, which favors cutting all covert aid to anti-Nicaraguan forces trained in Honduras. Judith Abernathy of San Antonio accompanied the group but did not attend Monday's conference here.

Led by a former anti-Vietnam War activist, the Rev. William Sloan Coffin of Riverside Church in New york, the group held two vigils in Jalapa last week and faced a stony reception from Anthony Quainton, the U.S. ambassador to Nicaragua.

Quantain told the church members that the conflict between "Contra" guerrillas, supported by U.S. dollars, and the ruling Sandinista government of Nicaragua eas "too complex" to be resolved by cutting off aid, church members said Monday.

The reagan administration has repeatedly said that covert aid is needed tointerdict arms being funneled from Cuba and other Communist satellites throughNicaragua to the rebels in El Salvador. At least $19 million eas approved for arms interdiction by Congress in April, while a total of $50 million has been approved in the last year for covert operations, Washington study groups estimate.

On July 19, the House is expected to vote on a bill by Rep. Clement Zabloki, D-Wisconsin, and Rep. Edward Boland, D-Massachusetts, that would cut off covert aid for the rest of the fiscal year, through September 30.

Coffin said that in the group's visits to two villages along the border, they found no evidence of foreign arms being shipped through the area.

"I think the only secret left in this not-so secret war that the Reagan administration is waging," Coffin said, "...is its purpose."

Joe Moran of the Carolina group - whose delegation included Judith Abernathy of San Antonio - said church representatives were frustrated by the U.S. ambassador's repetition of "complex" in response to their queries.

"There was nothing complex when Mrs. Grace Gyori of Chicago stood up and held aloft a piece of shrapnel that had been fired into Nicaragua from the U.S.-backed forces in Honduras," Moran said. "There's nothing complex about that."

Moran said that the U.S. Christian community is rapidly turning away from the support of the government.

Nothing that the Honduras-based guerrillas had fired upon women and children, Moran said, "The Christian community in the United States says this is not moral."

The Carolina task force plans to establish a permanent vigil group in Jalapa in September. American church representatives could visit for periods of two weeks to a month in groups of 20 or less, said Sister Evelyn Mattern of the North Carolina Council of Churches.

Soldiers ambushed in San Vicente

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — A military spokesman says leftist rebels killed four soldiers and wounded five in an ambush in San Vicente province, where the army claimed a month ago that it had driven out guerrilla forces.

The military spokesman, who asked not to be identified for security reasons, said the rebels staged the ambush Monday night near Apastepeque, 37 miles east of San Salvador, and killed a lieutenant and three soldiers. He said another lieutenant and four soldiers were wounded.

It was the most costly rebel attack since the army claimed in early June that it had swept the agriculturally rich eastern province clean of guerrillas. About 6,000 Salvadoran soldiers took part in the operation.

With money and technical help from the U.S. Agency for International Development, the U.S.-backed government then began resettling abandoned villages and getting people back to work in a pacification program similar to one conducted by American forces in Vietnam.

The military spokesman also said guerrillas dynamited five power lines Monday along the northern highway, 17 miles north of San Salvador, blacking out much of Chalatenango province where about 200,000 people live.

The rebels set up a roadblock a few miles north of the site of the attack, stopping vehicles and demanding payment of "war taxes" from motorists until Tuesday morning when an army patrol chased them away, the spokesman said.

Guerrillas have made frequent attacks in recent months on the highway linkin San Salvador with the Honduran borler, in an attempt to isolcte Suchitoto, a city on Lake Suchitlan near two hydroelectric dams that supply half of the country's electricity.

The rebels have bombed and dynamited the nation's power grid at least 30 times this year. The attacks, together with blowing up bridges, blocking roads and burning farm warehouses, are part of their effort to wreck El Salvador's economy.

In another development, Napoleon Duarte, chairman of the Christian Democratic Party in El Salvador, today ended a visit to West Germany with an appeal to the Bonn government and other estern European countries for economic and political suppozt.

House Democrats quiz front-runners

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Democrats, flexing their new muscles in selection of the party's presidential nominee, are asking the front-runners for their views on the arms race, the economy and how to get elected.

Former Vice President Walter F. Mondale and Sen. John Glenn of Ohio go before the House Democratic Caucus today for 20-minute speeches and 40 minutes of questioning behind closed doors.

Other candidates will be quizzed later this month.

The caucus decided on the meetings, the first since the early 19th century, after party rules were changed to make three-fifths of House Democrats unpledged delegates to the nominating convention.

Rep. Gillis Long of Louisiana, caucus chairman, said each candidate was given a number of questions to discuss in his opening remarks, including:

"How do you credit President Reagan's assertion that economic recovery is under way and how would you wage a campaign against him in 1984 if the signs of recovery are less ambiguous than they are now?

"What would you do to reverse the arms race, lessen tensions with the Soviet Union, and maintain hemispheric security?

"Do you think that what it takes to be nominated is at odds with what it takes to win in the general election?"

Although Mondale ranks first and Glenn second among the Democratic presidential hopefuls in most public opinion polls and other soundings, Long said the order of appearance of the candidates was determined by lot.

Sen. Ernest Hollings of South Carolina and former Florida Gov. Reubin Askew will be questioned on July 20 and Sens. Alan Cranston of California and Gary Hart of Colorado on July 27.

"No endorsement is sought or will be given by the caucus," Long said. Some of its members have already made endorsements on their own.

Mondale spokesman Richard Moe said the former vice president's campaign staff has not kept track of how many House members have endorsed him.

Ten House Democrats from California endorsed Mondale in a "Dear Fritz" letter on May 13.

Louise Swartzwalder, an aide to Glenn, said most House Democrats from Ohio back Glenn and Rep. C. Robin Britt, D-N.C., is on his national steering committee. "There are obviously others who are leaning our way but have not announced it," she said.

Cranston spokesman John Russonello said Cranston has the endorsement of 13 Democratic members of the California delegation and of Rep. William Lehman, D-Fla.

Kathy Bushkin, Hart's press secretary, said Hart is endorsed by all three Democratic House members from Colorado and by Reps. Martin Frost of Texas and Richard Lehman of California.

Man dies in Odessa shooting

ODESSA — One man is dead, another in critical condition and a third in custody following a shooting here early Tuesday night.

Dead is Charlie Ernest Baker, 46, of 201 Carver. He was shot in the neck and chest and his body taken to the Hubbard-Kelly Funeral Home.

In critical condition at Medical Center Hospital with a gunshot wound to the neck is 51-year-old Paul L. Perry, also of 201 Carver.

Jailed under bonds totaling $20,000 set by Municipal Court Judge Otis Moore, according to police, was 67-year-old Willie Holbert of 403 Wabash. He is charged with murder and attempted murder.

Police said the shooting occurred during an argument between the men at the Carver Street address about 6:35 p.m. Tuseday. No details of the argument were immediately available.

Ector County Justice of the Peace J.P. Hungerford has ordered an autopsy and a .22 caliber revolver was recovered, said police.

No charges filed in shooting

ODESSA — No charges have been filed in connection with a shooting incident here late Tuesday night that hospitalized an Odessa man.

In critical condition at Medical Center Hospital today, according to police, is Cruz Sanchez, no age available, of 1411 S. Texas. He was shot once in the center of the forehead with a .25 caliber automatic pistol.

A 25-year-old woman of the same address told police the gun discharged accidentally as she was showing it to Sanchez. The bullet lodged in the back of his skull.

Although no charges were filed, police said the case is being prepared for presentation to the grand jury.

Subsidized rental units may increase to 171

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midland's federally-subsidized rental units, now pegged at 62, may be increased to 171.

Rick Nunez, director of the federal program in Midland, said 218 heads of households have applied for the rent-subsidy program. "We're applying for about half of that," he said.

Funding for the program will almost triple the estimated $200,000 which funds the 62 units, including apartments and houses, Nunez indicated.

He said the 218 requests were cut in half, since many applicants in the meantime may either move elsewhere, locate other housing or lose interest in the program.

"We'll pay all or part of their rent," Nunez said. "It just depends."

The basic federal guidelines call for the tenant to pay 30 percent of his gross income toward rent payment. Such income, Nunez said, includes unemployment checks and welfare payments. If there's no income, the government will pay the full amount of rental payments, he said.

"Many are working," he said of the renters, and "have some type of income. Many of them are unemployed."

Nunez said the government will provide rent subsidy on units which rent for no more than $215 per month for one-bedroom housing, $254 for a two-bedroom, and $294 for a three-bedroom unit. The rent sum allowed by the government includes utility bills, he said.

"It's hard to find a unit for that amount," he admitted.

However, such low-rent housing is available, particularly since the oil boom has receded, unemployment has increased and the influx of job-seeking transients has moved on.

Today, more owners of rental housing are searching for tenants and are dropping rental prices. Before, they could ask for relatively high rent and turn aside prospective renters.

"Now, the landlords all of a sudden like the (rent-subsidy) program" since the downturn in the economy, noted Midland County Commissioner Durward Wright.

Said Nunez: "The oil boom went down, and a lot of people have been moving from Midland."

Immunity ruling raises questions on sex crimes

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — A court ruling that shielded an accused rapist from prosecution because he reported the offense himself could help other sex offenders avoid punishment, a prosecutor says.

Eugene Howland, 39, of Tamworth, is immune from prosecution under a 1979 law that bars legal action against people who make "good faith" efforts to report suspected abuses of children, according to a ruling by New Hampshire Superior Court Judge Louis Wyman.

Howland was arrested and charged with rape after he told state welfare officials he had sex with a 12-year-old girl. The charge was dismissed by Wyman on June 29.

Carroll County Attorney William Paine, who said the girl is a member of Howland's household, plans to appeal the dismissal of the rape charge to the state Supreme Court. Wyman must approve the appeal.

Paine said he disagreed with Wyman's ruling but said it was "intellectually" justified, based on the statute. He questioned the language of the law, and said the decision could help other offenders avoid prosecution.

"(Sex offenders are) dependent personalities and I think you'll find you may get a lot of them coming in and reporting," Paine said. "They can walk in, confess and walk out without any kinds of controls on them.... I think they should be in some kind of jail."

Deanna Crawford, of the Rape & Assault Committee of the Nashua Area, blasted Wyman's decision as illogical and "scary because it's setting a precedent."

She said the ruling clearly violated the legislature's intent in passing the law.

"A layman could understand that (the child abuse law) is not there to protect the offender. It's there to protect the concerned teacher or the neighbor, somebody who suspects that a child may be being abused," said Ms. Crawford. "There's no logic behind Judge Wyman's ruling in this case."

Ms. Crawford also said Wyman should have sent the question to the Supreme Court, if possible, before ruling on Howland's dismissal motion.

State Police Corporal Paul Schwatka said Howland was charged with rape after he admitted having sex with a young girl. He was charged under a law that bars sex with children under 13, an offense punishable by up to 15 years in prison.

Howland, who recently moved to New Hampshire from Maine, faces a similar charge in Maine, said Hazel Dillingham of the Oxford County district attorney's office.

Gallows at London prison await ruling on punishment

LONDON (AP) — Gallows in full working order stand ready for use in London's Wandsworth Prison, awaiting the outcome of the House of Commons debate tonight on whether to recommend reviving the hangman's noose for murderers after a 14-year ban on capital punishment.

Prison governors, judges, religious leaders — even an ex-hangman — have spoken against restoration, but Conservative Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and four-fifths of the British public say they want it back.

Voting is expected to be close on a Conservative motion advocating restoration of the death penalty and amendments specifying six categories of murder: by terrorists, of police, of prison officers, by shooting or explosives, during robbery or theft, and "other offenses of murder."

British courts would start imposing death sentences again only if one or more of the category motions is adopted tonight and a formal Act of Parliament were passed separately at a later date to repeal the 1969 abolition.

The vote will be on free, non-party lines with each member of the 650-seat House deciding individually according to conscience. This means the ballot is not a vote of confidence for Mrs. Thatcher's governing Conservatives.

The Commons debate starts at 3:30 p.m. (10:30 a.m. EDT) but the final outcome is not expected to be known until late tonight.

The issue has stirred strong feelings nationwide. Opponents of restoration argue a return to hanging would push Britain back into an age of barbarity. Supporters claim execution is the only way to deter a mounting wave of armed crime and terrorism.

The debate was underscored by the killings of four soldiers in Northern Ireland today, which police sources blamed on Irish Republican Army guerrillas.

The IRA, which is fighting to drive the British out of Northern Ireland and unite the province with Ireland, has said it favors restoration of the death penalty because it would make martyrs out of guerrillas convicted of murder.

No Western European country now uses the death penalty in peacetime, although it is on the books in 38 of the 50 U.S. states.

The U.S. murder rate is nine times the British rate of 1.1 person per 100,000, but Britain is catching up. London police reported almost 700,000 violent offenses in the capital last year, compared with 400,000 in 1972.

It will be the fifth time the Commons has voted on the death penalty issue since 1974. On each previous vote a majority of lawmakers opposed restoration.

This time, death-penalty supporters hope law-and-order hardliners among the 101 new Conservative Members of Parliament who helped boost Mrs. Thatcher's Commons majority to 144 in the June 9 elections will swing the vote their way.

The gallows in Wandsworth Prison, complete with trapdoor and crossbeam for the hangman's noose, has been kept in working order.

Woman prays for neighborhood

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Carlotta Garcia speaks in prayer.

Even the simplest explanation becomes an expression of faith, leaving her heavy arms raised, her open palms and dark, moist eyes turned toward heaven.

Her intensity, reflected in a face rich with Indian heritage, comes from age, but also from an unfulfilled childhood dream of being a nun.

Now 80, Ms. Garcia has at last been given her mission: To help revitalize the neighborhood she has lived in since 1913.

SHE EMBRACES the opportunity with gusto, bringing the faith, dedication and determination she had saved for so long for the religious life of which she had dreamed.

"This neighborhood is my mission now," Ms. Garcia said, clasping her hands tightly in her lap. "I pray a lot for this neighborhood. I want it to be beautiful again and prosperous again for the generations to come."

Called Avenida Guadalupe, the neighborhood is a near west side community that once was the hub of Mexican-American cultural and entertainment activity in San Antonio.

Now, the neighborhood is run down, a product of a decaying process that began during the Depression, when businesses folded and houses were abandoned.

"You never used to have to tell peple where this neighborhood was, but now I have to draw maps," said Ernie Olivares, director and development coordinator for the Avenida Guadalupe Association, an incorporated group of neighborhood residents and businessmen dedicated to revitalization of the area.

THE ASSOCIATION has been working since 1979 to put the neighborhood back on the city map.

Progress can be seen in the new facade of Our Lady of Guadalupe Church, a structure only 10 years younger than Ms. Garcia, who is one of its most devoted parishioners and lives in a small, un-air conditioned apartment on church property.

"The church is so beautiful now. Soon the rest of the neighborhood will be that way," she said, pointing to a scale model of the Plaza Guadalupe.

Government and private funds have ensured slow-but-sure progress for the urban renewal project. But there are still battles to be fought, Olivares said.

"That's why people like Carlotta Garcia are so important," he said. "She and others like her are the heart of the project.

Standing in from of Our Lady of Guadalupe Church in San Antonio, Carlotta Garcia hopes her prayers for urban renewal of the area are answered. Ms. Garcia has lead a drive to revitalize the neighborhood.

"CARLOTTA TALKS about how successful, beautiful and friendly the neighborhood was," Olivares said. "She perpetuates the dream by letting the younger people know they come from a neighborhood that was and still is important to the city."

On Christmas Day 1913, at age 11, Ms. Garcia came to Avenida Guadalupe from Monterrey, Mexico.

She graduated from Brackenridge High School in 1927, one of only a handful of Hispanics admitted to the city's two high schools.

"I wanted to be a nun very much when I was young, but my parents asked me to wait and take care of them until they died before I went into a convent," she said. "Well, they died when I was 40 and I thought I was too old then."

So Ms. Garcia stayed in the neighborhood in her parents' house, volunteering at church and working as a seamstress.

FROM THAT street corner alone, she's seen the neighborhood at its best and at its worst.

"This was a very happy, prosperous neighborhood years ago," she said, pointing to buildings fallen into misuse.

"The streets used to be muddy, but everything was in better condition then. There were many businesses and people were friendlier," she said. "I would like to see the neighborhood that way again.

"I may not be alive when it happens," she said, tears coming quickly to hes eyes, "but I would like to know God has heard my words and moved people to act from their hearts."

Two men indicted on murder charges

HOUSTON (AP) — Two men suspected of taking part in stabbing four men to death have been indicted by a Harris County grand jury on four counts each of capital murder.

Richard James Wilkerson, 19, and Kenneth Ray Ransom, 20, were indicted Tuesday in the July 1 slayings of four employees at Houston's Malibu Grand Prix, a popular amusement center.

Punishment for capital murder conviction is life in prison or death by lethal injection.

The third suspect in the case, James Edward Randall, 16, has not been charged in the murders because he is a juvenile. The district attorney's office plans to ask a judge in August to certify Randall as an adult so he can be charged.

Also on Tuesday, funeral services were held for two of the slain men, who were brothers.

Oralia Pequeno, the mother of Arnold, 18, and Joerene Pequeno, 19, did not know of the deaths until Saturday, when she returned home from a vacation in Mexico.

Mrs. Pequeno had never before taken a vacation because she did not want to leave her sons, said her brother, Carlos Flores. She took the news "real hard," he said.

Houston Police Department investigators tried unsuccessfully to locate Mrs. Pequeno on her vacation, said detectivve Jim Montero.

The other victims in the slayings were Anil Varughese, 18, of Missouri City, and Rod Harris, 23, of Houston.

White fields questions from radio listeners

AUSTIN (AP) — During an hour on the phone with Austin radio listeners, Gov. Mark White explained his education policies and defended his house and boat but referred an immigration query to the White House.

The governor's personal possessions came up in questions from a woman who reached White on KLBJ-AM radio. She recalled White's trip earlier this year to a shanty on the banks of a downtown Austin creek. He led reporters to the site to show them poverty near the Capitol.

"At that time you owned a home in West Lake Hills," the questioner said. "I was wondering, if you really were so concerned why you didn't offer your home to those people to use?"

White replied, "Quite frankly, I wish I could give a house to every person who needs a home. I don't think that's possible."

After taking office, White sold the house.

The same woman wanted to know about "No Chance," a 31-foot sailboat partially owned by White. The caller said to White "recently you received a gift of a $48,000 boat from Lowell Lebermann and another friend of his, and do you think that is ethically correct?"

"No Chance" was not a gift, said White, who bought it with Austin businessman Lebermann and gubernatorial aide Pike Powers.

"I didn't receive a gift of a boat. I own one-third of that boat along with my two partners. I owe the one-third. I haven't paid for it yet," the governor said.

After the hour of calls, one Austinite said White did a better job of fielding citizens' questions than former Gov. Bill Clements.

Alleged extortionist transferred from jail

HOUSTON (AP) — A man awaiting trial on charges of trying to extort $15 million from Gulf Chemical Co. by planting bombs at a refinery will be moved from a county jail to a federal facility after his lawyer called the jail "nearly unfit for habitation," a federal judge ruled.

Theodore Duane McKinney, a diabetic, won a transfer to the Bastrop Federal Correctional Institute from the Harris County Rehabilitation Center. McKinney, 45, is one of five Durango, Colo., residents indicted in a 12-count indictment stemming from the September bombing of the Baytown refinery.

The ruling of U.S. District Judge Gabrielle McDonald said the facility in Harris County, in Humble north of Houston, "lacks ordinary amenities afforded to federal prisoners confined for long periods of time." McKinney had no opportunity to exercise outside his cell and had no access to reading material or telephones, she said.

Solidarity writer recalls past life in Poland, future in U.S.

By the Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

PASADENA, Calif. — Glimpsing a life to which she can never return, Anya Cwiecek watched the television broadcasts with fascination and sadness as Pope John Paul II stirred her native Poland, 6,300 miles away.

A journalist and member of Poland's now-banned Solidarity labor union, she was in the thick of it two years ago. She reported for one of the Solidarity newspapers, Odrodzenie (Rebirth), interviewed Solidarity leader Lech Walesa and tried to outwit the censors.

Then martial law dropped over her country like a dark cloud. One cold January night three men pounded on her door and took her to prison. Six months later she was released, but she was left without money, a job or prospects unless she wanted to become a police informer. So she took the only way out, coming to America as a political refugee.

At least 1,300 others like Cwiecek have come to the United States, and their numbers increase each week. These Polish dissidents fill the latest places in a line stretching over three centuries. Once more, the casualties of European revolutionary struggles come to America, where they start over and relive old battles.

With an acquaintance acting as interpreter, Cwiecek, sitting in her kitchen here recently, spoke in quick bursts of Polish. She wore a purple smock and displayed a California tan, but she said her adjustment to life here has been difficult, particularly with her homeland still in turmoil.

Coming to the United States "was a very difficult decision for me to make, and I thought about it for six months," she said. Cwiecek said she wanted to continue to work for Solidarity, but the union had gone underground by the time she was arrested. Her record as a political prisoner made it impossible for her to resume a journalistic career or teach. She could not even find a place to live. She had been declared persona non grata, and her country's government encouraged her to leave. The United States was willing to accept her and other Solidarity activists and martial law detainees as political refugees. But that meant leaving her parents, brothers, sisters and friends.

There also were the old memories of Solidarity's golden hours, in 1980 and 1981, when many Poles thought they might elect their own leaders and rid the country of an oppressive bureaucracy.

"That was a very beautiful, and a very, very difficult time," Cwiecek said. Solidarity pushed for every possible advantage, and Polish government officials, though not entirely unsympathetic, desperately tried to rein it in before the resulting disorder swept them out of power. Fear of chaos finally led to martial law, but even that was not enough to discourage many activists initially.

"At the beginning, very few people wanted to leave the country," Cwiecek said. "But then more people were blackmailed and threatened and dismissed from work."

On Jan. 11, 1982, the night of Cwiecek's arrest, she had forgotten to check the streets outside her apartment building. A neighbor warned her that strangers were looking for her. Suddenly they were pounding on her door. "Three gentlemen," said her interpreter, Polish-born veterinarian Robert Zielinski.

"No, no," she corrected him. "Three gorillas."

She was sent to a former resort on the northeastern coast at Goldap. The 400 women dissidents held there called the place "the golden cage." Good food and recreation were available. The government proudly escorted Red Cross visitors through the place.

But this was no more than a tolerable day-to-day life, with no chance to plan or dream, Cwiecek said. Cwiecek turned her back on it and came here, to live on $300 a month from the Pasadena Church of the Brethren, financial aid that will expire in September. This is part of a support system helping more than 350 Polish refugees that was set up by by the Protestant service organization, the Church World Service.

Robert Earhart, pastor of the Pasadena church, called Cwiecek "extremely bright and vibrant." Like most of the Polish refugees and other political dissidents who have come here over the centuries, she represents the most energetic of her country's young and middle-aged intellectuals and professionals. Her English is developing quickly, Earhart said, and "we're not too concerned about her ability to make a go of it here."

Cwiecek said she thinks she made the right decision to leave Poland. "When I receive letters from my friends, in each letter is a line. Each one says, 'I don't see any future in Poland.' "

Plague does not mean death

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP) — New Mexico has led the nation in cases of the plague, the disease once called the "black death," since it first appeared in the state in 1949, and a state health official says it probably will never be eradicated.

"There no place in the world that once plague has established itself it has been eliminated," says Dr. Jonathan Mann, state epidemiologist with the Health and Environment Department.

But he adds: "Hopefully, the more that's learned about it, the more we'll be able to restrict it."

State health officials say there have been fewer deaths from human plague in the past several years because of efforts to educate the medical community and the public.

"It's a dasease tat we respect But atSs ngt a disease that we fear$'S Mann said. "There have been some cases caught so early in recent years that they (the victims) haven't had to be hospitalized.

"We've gone some years without a single death."

Since 1949, the plague has struck 120 people in New Mexico, killing about one in five. Mann says most of the deaths have resulted from a "failure on the victim's part to come to medical attention."

Mann notes that the disease, which wiped out one-quarter of Europe's population in the Middle Ages, has been reported only in Western states, and about two-thirds of those cases are in New Mexico. He said other states tat ave had human plague cases ifcdude Arirofa$ Cadifornia, Colorado, Nevada, Oregon, Utah and Wyoming.

So far this year, six New Mexicans have contracted the disease, two since Memorial Day. All have survived.

American, Braniff strike up a deal

Bankrupt airline may get $6.5 million

FORT WORTH (AP) — American Airlines and its former arch-rival, grounded Braniff International, have asked a federal bankruptcy judge to approve a settlement under which both carriers would drop all current and potential claims against each other.

The proposal, filed in U.S. Bankruptcy Court here Tuesday, calls for American to make a cash payment of $6.5 million to Braniff and drop out of all further bankruptcy proceedings involving Braniff.

U.S. Bankruptcy Judge John Flowers scheduled a July 23 hearing to consider the proposal.

The airlines issued a joint statement saying the agreement "will settle all controversies between the parties including claims and counter claims arising out of the bankruptcy proceedings."

American and Braniff officials also said in the statement that the agreement also will "provide for establishment of normal commercial relations between American and the Braniff successor contemplated by Braniff's plan of reorganization."

Under Braniff's plan, the Hyatt Corporation will invest $70 million in putting 30 Braniff planes in the air and 2,000 former employees back to work.

Meanwhile, the reorganization proposal received the approval Tuesday of Braniff's 3,000 secured bondholders, who hold about $100 million of the airline's $1 billion debt.

"We are recommending it," said bondholders spokesman Anthony Walsh, who had been critical of the plan.

But Hyatt Chairman Jay Pritzker, who met with Walsh and others for several hours in bankruptcy court late Tuesday, expressed little optimism about the agreement.

"Until tomorrow we won't know," said Pritzker, referring to a court hearing set for today to consider Braniff's financial disclosure statement.

For travelers, the American-Braniff agreement means the two airlines will accept each others tickets and will provide joint fares on connecting flights, officials said.

American also agreed to buy, over the next five years, "certain spare parts from Braniff."

David Bonderman, a Braniff bankruptcy lawyer, said the cash payment "will be very helpful to us" and would be invested in flying operations.

American officials declined to say why the airline agreed to the deal.

Before Braniff grounded its fleet and filed for protection from its creditors in May 1981, the two airlines engaged in fare wars.

For more than a year, Braniff attorneys had been planning a civil lawsuit seeking "hundreds of millions of dollars" in damages from American, according to court papers.

Braniff said it was reserving the right to seek damages from American in connection with charges that American engaged in illegal tactics that contributed to the demise of Braniff.

The U.S. Justice Department, responding to Braniff's charges of dirty tricks, conducted its own investigation and filed a civil lawsuit against American and its president, Robert L. Crandall, claiming American tried to monopolize the Dallas-Fort Worth air market.

American has denied any wrongdoing.

The agreement between the airlines will not affect the government's suit, according to a Justice Department spokesman.

As a Braniff creditor, American had accused Braniff of not proceeding quickly with a reorganization plan. Bonderman said the agreement will prevent American from taking any further part in the bankruptcy proceedings.

Attorneys worked through the night to amend the reorganization statement to reflect the new deal struck with Braniff's bondholders. The plan must be approved by 80,000 Braniff creditors, as well as Flowers.

"We still don't know where we are," Pritzker said Tuesday as he left the courthouse. "This thing is so complicated. When you've got one (group) nailed down, the other moves. It's obvious progress has been made but whether there will be any finalityis very difficult to know."

Matthew Mertcalfe, a member of the court-appointed bondholders committee, said money set aside for the bondholders would come from Hyatt and Braniff's secured bank and insurance company lenders who are owed about $367 million.

The agreement means the bondholders will drop all action it has taken to block the Hyatt plan, Mertcalfe said.

Prison inmate stabbed to death

ROSHARON (AP) — A prison inmate serving a 15-year sentence for robbery and attempted murder has been killed in a fight with another prisoner, a spokesman said Tuesday.

Cecil George, 34, was the second Texas prison inmate killed this week and the sixth this year, spokesman Charles Brown said. Marvin Ridley, 25, was killed Sunday at the TDC's Darrington unit.

Brown said George was stabbed to death Monday evening with a homemade knife in TDC's Ramsey II unit. Brown said officials had a suspect in George's killing but said no charges have been filed.

Jail inmates face hearings

EL PASO (AP) — Ten ringleaders accused of inciting the Friday night riot at the El Paso County Jail will face disciplinary hearings later this week, officials say.

Chief Dep. Clay Collier said the 10 inmates most responsible for igniting the riot will face a hearing Thursday. The 10 have been segregated in the new jail, where they and 600 other inmates were moved Sunday, he said.

The inmates could face charges of attempted murder, aggravated assault and criminal mischief, Sheriff Mike Davis said. Punishments could include solitary confinement, he said.

Record wheat crop expected

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas wheat producers may have the second largest crop in the state's history, the Texas Crop and Livestock Reporting Service said Tuesday.

The near record crop, based on July 1 conditions, calls for 156.4 million bushels, up nine percent next year.

Oat production was estimated at 24 million bushels, more than double a year ago, while the Texas barley crop is estimated at 2.3 million bushels, up 45 percent.

Brucellosis regulations adopted

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Animal Health Commission says it has responded to the Legislature's instructions by adopting state regulations which would conform to federal brucellosis requirements.

The commission said Tuesday it recently adopted regulations which would allow more freedom in moving herds of cattle.

The agency also said it recently voted to make it easier to establish that a herd is free of brucellosis, a highly contagious cattle disease.

White appoints court justice

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White announced the appointment Tuesday of Floyd Shumpert of Terrell as justice of the 5th Court of Appeals.

Shumpert, a 66-year-old lawyer, will replace former state Rep. Bob Maloney of Dallas, whose appointment was rejected by the Senate.

White also appointed Wandene Coughran of Abilene to the board of the Texas School for the Blind and Evelyn Porter of San Antonio to the Texas Board on Aging.

Teacher retires after 38 years in schools

ABILENE (AP) — After figuring the difference in his paycheck, Paul Rogers' decision was easy.

Rogers, 60, had not been able to decide whether to retire from his 38-year career as an educator, when a little calculating revealed that he would only take home an extra $6 each month by working next year.

The board of education accepted his retirement Monday.

"After 38 years, it's time to relax for a while," Rogers said.

Once deductions are taken out of his paycheck, Rogers said, his net pay is only a few dollars above the amount he will receive drawing teacher retirement benefits. His salary for the past school year was $32,126.

He noted, however, that he will have to purchase hospitalization insurance once he is off the school district's payroll.

Rogers has been principal of Taylor Elementary School for nine years. He previously taught and coached in Farmersville and Breckenridge and was an elementary school principal in Ranger and at two other Abilene schools.

"I'll be happy just growing green beans and tomatoes," he said.

Thailand Communinists suffer serious setbacks

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Internal struggles and a government "open arms" policy have brought thousands of guerrillas down from the hilltops and out of the jungles in an exodus authorities say has spelled doom for Thailand's once potent communist insurgency.

"Today there is no more revolutionary war in Thailand. Maybe they have come to a desperate end," Maj. Gen. Laporn Siripalka, one of the country's top anti-communist strategists, said in an interview.

The regional news magazine "Asiaweek" recently described developments in Thailand's 18-year-old bush war as "communism's first defeat since Malaya," referring to Britain's 1950s anti-communist campaign in what is now Malaysia.

The country's Internal Security Operations Command or ISOC says the number of communist fighters has been slashed to an estimated 3,000 from some 11,000 in 1978 when the Communist Party of Thailand (CPT) was riding a wave of confidence.

Just three years earlier, Saigon, Phnom Penh and Vientiane had fallen to communist forces — and some were predicting that Bangkok would be next. In addition, a rightist backlash in Thailand had sent thousands of bright, energetic students into the arms of the CPT.

But two reform-minded prime ministers — Gen. Kriangsak Chomanan and Gen. Prem Tinsulanonda, who holds the post today — changed things.

A general amnesty was issued to all Communist Party members and sympathizers, replacing heavy-handed and sometimes brutal military operations, described by one defector as "using an elephant to crush a grasshopper."

The mass defections began last year and are continuing. The ISOC says from Dec. 1, 1982, to June 9 of this year, nearly 5,000 insurgents and supporters have taken advantage of the amnesty, which includes initial financial and other support from the government.

Laporn, the ISOC's psychological warfare chief, says the strategy will continue until the Communist Party is eradicated.

But sporadic fighting is expected to continue in remote parts of the country and from time to time larger scale military operations will probably be mounted, especially in Thailand's southern peninsula where the ISOC estimates some 1,600 fighters are still entrenched.

But Laporn and others say they will root out any attempts by the Communist Party to establish urban bases and will monitor possible efforts by the Vietnamese to replace Peking as the champion of Thailand's revolutionary cause.

Thai officials say their government's policy was the key factor in this decimation of the communist ranks, but some defectors believe the internal collapse of the Maoist branch of the Communist Party was more important. They say it refused to change with the times.

Young Pioneers grow up to be Communist members

MOSCOW (AP) — The Young Pioneers, who have given American schoolgirl Samantha Smith a rousing welcome in the Crimea, is an organization of 25 million children taking the first step toward Communist Party membership.

Samantha Smith, an 11-year-old from Manchester, Maine, is visiting the Soviet Union at the invitation of Communist Party leader and President Yuri V. Andropov. The invitation was extended in a reply to a letter she wrote expressing concern about the possibility of nuclear war.

On Saturday, the day after her arrival in the Soviet Union, she went to the Young Pioneers' showcase camp on the Black Sea for a five-day stay. The camp, Artek, was built in 1925 and has grown into a sprawling complex of dormitories, recreation and education facilities capable of accommodating 4,500 youngsters at a time. About 27,000 visit it yearly.

The Young Pioneers was founded in May 1922, five years after the Bolsheviks overthrew the Russian czar and established a Communist government under Vladimir Lenin. Lenin's wife and revolutionary companion, Nadezhda Krupskaya, often taught at Artek.

The Young Pioneers' stated aim is "to bring up children in the spirit of internationalism and loyalty to their Socialist motherland, the cause of Lenin and the Communist Party."

Soviet schoolchildren and Young Pioneers are told about the Soviet boy who in 1932, told authorities that his father was aiding peasants fleeing Stalin's forced collectivation.

The boy, Pavlik Morozov, is said to have told a court, "I accuse my father not as his son but as a Pioneer."

Morozov, 13 at the time, is portrayed as a martyr for the Communist cause. He was killed by his grandfather and an older cousin, who in turn were executed.

The newspaper of the Young Communist League, or Komsommol, said last year — the 50th anniversary of Morozov's death — that the boy was a legend who helps youngsters learn that often there are difficult decisions to be made in life.

After World War II, the Young Pioneers were mobilized in the reconstruction effort, helping in such ways as collecting paper and scrap metal.

Service doing hefty business

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — They're more sensuous. They're more womanly. To some men, they're even more of a challenge.

That's why a dating service for big women is doing a hefty business, according to Mary Taylor, owner of La Grande Personne. And she said about half her 400 clients are slender men.

"Of course, a lot of men won't look twice at large women, but a lot of men admire them. They find them more sensuous," Ms. Taylor said.

"There is a certain breed of man who thinks if a woman is a challenge, a big woman is a bigger challenge," said Linda MacDonagh, 35, a client with a size 22 figure.

While 99 percent of female members are 20 to 100 pounds overweight, 95 percent of the men are normal weight, Ms. Taylor said.

One male client, Ken Mayer, 36, who carries 180 pounds on a 5-11 frame, had his own reasons for being attracted to larger women. "I find them more appealing from a purely physical point of view. They are more womanly," he said.

Rep. Donald Albosta, D-Mich., left, chairs a session of a House Post Office and Civil Service subcommittee investigating possible 1980 political espionage, alongside Rep. Daniel B. Crane, R-Ill., center, and Rep. Ben Gilman, R-N.Y., Tuesday on Capitol Hill in Washington.

White House doesn't know exactly what's in campaign files

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House is reluctant to open the 1980 Reagan campaign files to congressional investigators because presidential aides do not know exactly what they contain, a source close to the probe says.

"They're in the throes of trying to decide what to do," the source said. "These things haven't been indexed or catalogued. They don't know exactly what's in the files.

"There could be some disparaging material in them — nobody knows," added the source, a Republican who spoke only on condition that he not be identified.

There are more than 500 feet of Reagan campaign documents at the Hoover Institution at Stanford University, according to the source.

Meanwhile, direct communications were opened Tuesday between the White House and the House subcommittee investigating how the Reagan campaign obtained White House debate briefing documents prepared for then-President Carter.

A subcommittee source said the White House was displaying a willingness to negotiate.

At issue is a request by the panel's chairman, Rep. Donald Albosta, D-Mich., for subcommittee investigators to have direct access to the files.

The White House has said that Albosta will receive copies of any Carter material found in the California files by the FBI as part of its formal criminal investigation.

ALBOSTA SAID Tuesday, however, that this is unacceptable and threatened to move to subpoena the documents if access is not granted by their trustees — President Reagan and two of his top White House aides.

The chairman had given the White House until Tuesday to grant access, but a subcommittee source said the deadline is being extended on a "day-to-day" basis while the two sides talk.

The communications were established in a phone conversation between White House counsel Fred Fielding and James Hamilton, a former assistant chief counsel to the Senate Watergate committee who is working informally with the Albosta panel.

"Direct contact has been made with Fielding, and Fielding is willing to negotiate," said the subcommittee source, who asked not to be identified.

"The way is there," the source continued. "Whether the White House can come up with a negotiating position, we don't know. We don't want to be confrontational and abuse the subpoena power, but when needed the chairman will seek to use it."

Fielding declined to detail his discussion with Hamilton, who was considered likely to be named a special counsel to head the Albosta investigation.

BEFORE THE Fielding-Hamilton contact was made, deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes told reporters he did not think the House panel would be granted full access to the campaign files.

Albosta says he wants access because "we have a different purpose than the FBI has. Theirs is of a criminal nature and ours is a legislative nature. We are looking for a lot more material, perhaps, than they would be interested in."

A White House source, who spoke only on condition he not be identified, said that if the subcommittee gains access to the complete Reagan files, the files of other presidential candidates should be opened as well.

This sentiment was echoed by Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., as he left a White House meeting Tuesday between Reagan and GOP congressional leaders.

New immigration bill's chances of passage bleaker than ever

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — While chances for passage of a new immigration bill in Congress look bleaker than ever, Mexican border immigration problems are mounting, according to a spokesman inside the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Fears were expressed that new terms of the bill will encourage another wave of illegal entries.

The House Judiciary committee has so far been unable even to get a hearing in the House Rules committee so sponsors can get a rule, a requirement before the bill can be taken to the floor for debate and a vote.

Meanwhile, several congressmen, concerned with the bill, are infuriated at the bureaucratic, in-house tricks which are keeping them from getting copies of the amendments added by three committees other than the parent committee, House Judiciary. The committees are Education and Labor, Energy and Commerce and Agriculture.

A spokesman for the Agriculture committee said that copies could not be seen of its amendments "because they went like hot cakes and there are no more."

But Rep. Sam Hall, D-Texas, a lawyer on the Judiciary committee, who is opposed to the bill largely because of its amnesty provisions for resident illegal aliens, is complaining loudly about not getting a chance to see the amendments.

There is one more unique ruling. Instead of the three committees sending their amendments back to the Judiciary committee for incorporation into the language, each committee is sending its amendments to the House Rules committee separately.

With these problems, predictions are rife in Congress that the bill, which has already passed the Senate, will never make it through the House.

One of the proposed provisions which is least popular among Border Patrol agents is permitting farmers to pick their own laborers from illegal aliens already available in this country and then to continue hiring them for three years.

The first year the farmer can hire 100 percent of his alleged needs. This number would be reduced by one third the second year, with a further reduction in the third year and with no hires the fourth year. A Border Patrol agent who would not be quoted by name said this will mean that "half the unemployed persons in Mexico who would like to come to the U.S. to make this home will come in here with the expectation of getting a job under this bill."

Already, illegal aliens are coming in at the rate of 40 percent more this year than last, INS officials said.

This comes at a time when the White House and Justice Department did not ask for a single new agent or inspector to protect the border, he pointed out.

Civil rights leaders attack Reagan plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan wants to put new enforcement strength into the now toothless federal fair housing laws, but civil rights leaders lost no time in attacking his plan.

The president sent Congress draft legislation on Tuesday that would provide the machinery for enforcing the act, which so far has relied almost totally on the power of persuasion or legal actions taken independently by the victims of discrimination.

Following by one day the administration's first school desegregation suit, the announcement brought immediate skepticism from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which is holding its annual convention in New Orleans, and from the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, the country's largest civil rights coalition.

Thomas I. Atkins, general counsel of the NAACP, said the administration's civil rights enforcement has been "ineffective, reluctant, and, at times, almost insulting" and questioned the timing of the announcement on housing.

"While the NAACP and the president did not coordinate their schedules, it came out that way," Atkins said. "I'm sure the president knows we are meeting. The vice president is coming Friday and this will give him something good to say."

Ralph Neas, executive director of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, said the Reagan proposals for fair housing enforcement are "dangerously weak" and said most major civil rights groups favor a rival bill pending in Congress with about 40 sponsors.

The Reagan plan would continue to use the Department of Housing and Urban Development as a clearing house for complaints and chief negotiator of voluntary settlements. Enforcement would remain with the Justice Department.

The big addition in the Reagan bill is a provision that allows HUD to refer cases to the attorney general for prosecution if conciliation efforts fail. Under current law, the Justice Department can go to court only in cases of widespread and systematic discrimination, not in defense of individual victims.

The Reagan package also would provide fines up to $50,000 for first offenses and $100,000 for repeaters. It would extend the statute of limitations for private actions to two years and allow court relief while conciliations are being worked out.

The bill would provide incentives for more private suits by allowing courts to make losing parties in such cases pay the lawyers' fees.

Bipartisan bills pending in Congress would create administrative law judges within HUD, who could investigate complaints and issue rulings. Landlords or real estate agents dissatisfied with the result could appeal to a special panel or to the courts.

The administration says its judicial approach is quicker because all tough cases would wind up in the courts. But supporters of the administrative law judge approach say it would produce quick rulings, which, although they might be appealed, would in most cases be resolved faster than lawsuits that might last for years.

"All major civil rights statutes are enforced administratively by the federal agencies that are responsible for them," Neas said. "Only the Department of Housing and Urban Development has no effective enforcement responsibilities, and we want to give the same type of responsibility to HUD so that they can enforce the fair housing laws."

Federal government joins Hyatt probe

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The federal government is joining an investigation to determine if criminal laws were violated during construction of the Hyatt Regency hotel, or in litigation after two suspended walkways collapsed in its lobby, a U.S. attorney said Tuesday.

"In the civil suit, allegations were made that, if true, would suggest violations of state and federal laws," U.S. Attorney Robert Ulrich said in announcing the government was joining a Jackson County investigation.

"The allegations and the significance of the occurrence require that we at least make a preliminary investigation to see if there have been violations of law," Ulrich said. "It is apparent that a cooperative effort is the most efficient and expeditious approach to take."

The July 17, 1981, collapse of the second-floor and fourth-floor walkways killed 114 people and injured more than 200 others.

Much of the litigation stemming from the collapse has been settled. About 40 cases remain in state court to determine compensatory damages for victims or their relatives.

An investigation by the National Bureau of Standards concluded the collapse was caused by a flaw in the design of the skywalks.

Criminal negligence in the hotel's construction and perjury and contempt during the preparation of civil cases were alleged in the litigation of a federal class action stemming from the disaster. The suit was settled and would not necessarily have shown any criminal violations had it gone to trial.

Ulrich and Jackson County Prosecutor Albert Riederer declined to comment on the direction of the investigation. Riederer said he expected the investigation to be completed by late this year.

In its Wednesday editions, The Kansas City Times quoted unidentified officials as saying the inquiry would focus on possible violations of the Missouri manslaughter statute, state bribery laws and state obstruction of justice laws.

Senate will get crack at jobs bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Republican-controlled Senate is getting a crack at a politically attractive, $1.5 billion jobs creation bill much favored by governors and other local politicans and much opposed by the administration.

The measure cleared the House Tuesday on a 306-113 count in which about a third of the chamber's Republicans crossed over to vote for the Democrat-backed bill.

It would allocate $500 million a year for the next three years in grants to local governments for public works jobs and a system of revolving loan funds that could be tapped by private firms.

The measure is patterned after the Economic Development Administration, which is being dropped, but emphasizes attracting private matching funds and long-range planning. The new program would be administered by the secretary of commerce.

Not only do such programs provide a reservoir of cash for local officials eager to find ways to finance their projects, it gives lawmakers at the national level a way to demonstrate how they back legislation that provides visible benefits.

Army plans to expand border drug surveillance

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The Army is planning to expand extensively its Mexican border drug surveillance, cooperating with the Department of Justice, U.S. congressmen and the Defense Department confirmed here Monday.

Rep. Ronald Coleman, D-Texas, said El Paso, New Orleans and San Diego will be headquarters for this operation.

Many more helicopters from military bases will be used. In addition, there will be ground crew surveillance using radar in an effort to stop the large numbers of illegal aircraft crossing the border from Mexico into the Southwest and West.

The stepped up operations were outlined at the House Government Operations sub-committee hearing on narcotics at El Paso last week when John W. Shannon, deputy under secretary of the Army, testified.

At the Pentagon Monday, officials confirmed that "under new legislation passed by Congress permitting the military to cooperate with civilian agencies in law enforcement, we plan to work with 12 task forces in the Justice Depatment in carrying out expansive drug detection and seizure."

The ground surveillance will be comparable to the aircraft spotters in early World War II days when civilians went out to look for enemy planes.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Thursday, July 14, 1983

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Feminist Emmeline Pankhurst and folk singer Woody Guthrie were born on this date. Also sharing your birthday: former President Gerald Ford, director Ingmar Bergman, NBC-TV commentator John Chancellor and author Isaac Bashevis Singer. Success in the months ahead depends on your willingness to venture into new areas. An economic situation turns in your favor. Go ahead and take a calculated risk. A more tolerant attitude will improve your relations with your peers.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A good day to ask for loans and favors. An older person gives your career or pet project a boost. Family businesses do surprisingly well. A platonic relationship intensifies.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Although subtlety has its uses, be direct when reminding others about important dates. The news regarding jointly-held funds is promising. Tread carefully in romance. Partner may be having doubts.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Pay more attention to body language when dealing with shy or difficult people. Call an old friend you may have neglected recently. Procrastination could result in your losing out on a good thing.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your ability to adapt to other people's moods brings you new rewards today. Couples who work together may find that separate vacations rejuvenate their relationship. Send packages to children away at camp.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do not let someone's arrogance fool you—it is all a front. Discuss spending habits with partner. A budget revision will relieve domestic tension. An out-of-towner brightens your evening.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A windfall makes your spirits soar. Put money in the bank for emergencies. You make an excellent impression on higher-ups when you fill in for someone on vacation or sick leave.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Certain decisions are difficult to make but could be essential for progress. Do not let your friends' problems intrude on the work day. Spend the late afternoon or evening in quiet pastimes.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Minor problems may complicate your morning, but by afternoon, you feel optimistic again. Although a sudden business trip causes some inconvenience, it will swell profits. You enjoy the change of scenery.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Look for ways to distribute your ideas or services to a larger audience. Outside activities could interfere with work. Exercise greater self-discipline. Continue to keep a close eye on your money.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your past efforts begin to pay off. Prominent people are very supportive now. Proceed with confidence where a creative project is concerned. An innovative financial program could bring lasting benefits.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Travel is indicated for many of you. A new relationship blossoms. Plan what you want to say about a contract or job opportunity. A fund-raising campaign or community project attracts widespread interest.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A conflict develops between your business and domestic responsibilities. Compromise is your best solution. Part-time employment may be the answer to a temporary cash shortage. Seek family members' cooperation.

Cable helping public TV

NEW YORK (AP) — As William Shakespeare, a frequent contributor to public television, might have put it: cable TV came to bury PBS, not to raise it.

But the effect has been just the opposite. PBS has benefited greatly from cable, which was supposed to make public television as extinct as some of the animal species it chronicles.

For one thing, whenever cable enters a community, it improves the quality of the signal on the PBS channel. Nearly two-thirds of PBS' 300 stations are on the fuzzy UHF band. But, when an area is cabled, PBS automatically gets on the multichannel box with the same clear picture as ABC, CBS and NBC, the cable services and the pay channels.

In addition, research by A.C. Nielsen Co. shows that homes with cable watch more public television than non-cabled households. PBS viewing is 29 percent higher in pay-cable homes, 17 percent higher in basic-cable homes.

"We are thriving in a cable environment," says Larry Grossman, president of the Public Broadcasting Service. "Cable, which was supposed to bury us, has been a boon to us."

In its early utopian stage, cable enthusiasts gushed that the new technology was going to be television's salvation, doing everything except cure the common cold. With great fanfare and lofty intentions, several cable programmers staked out the same high-brow audience as PBS. But CBS Cable lost $30 million in less than a year and The Entertainment Channel, with a minuscule 45,000 subscribers, fell off the cable boat soon after.

Now PBS is negotiating with both defunct services for programs that were never broadcast.

While these services failed, and, incidentally, the commercial networks' share of the audience also was declining, PBS was attracting more viewers than ever before. Nearly 53 percent of all TV households — 44 million homes — watched public television in an average week this past season.

Without the commercial networks' million-dollar budgets for promotion and hype, PBS is grabbing viewers with one thing only: quality programs. While typical network fare has ghosts, genies, car chases and adolescent sexual hijinks, PBS offers intelligent, important shows unique in television.

Italy's Benito Garozzo is recognized as perhaps the greatest card player in the game today. Here's an example of his wizardry from the Common Market Championships.

The bidding is typical of his latest methods. One club was forcing, one heart was either natural or showed three controls, two hearts showed at least five spades and five clubs, three clubs showed three spades and fewer clubs, three diamonds was a spade asking bid, three hearts was negative, four clubs was a cue-bid and four spades signed off. (It took us only half an hour to grasp all this after it was written out for us.) As a result, Garozzo became declarer at four spades from the "wrong" hand. (It is seldom wrong to have Garozzo declaring.)

Garozzo won the ace of hearts, overtook the queen of diamonds with the king and sluffed a heart from dummy on the ace of diamonds. The two of trumps was covered by the jack, queen and ace. East returned a heart for declarer to ruff on the table. The queen-ace of clubs and a club ruff reduced the hand to this position:

Declarer cashed the jack of diamonds, discarding a club from dummy, then ruffed the jack of hearts. Now the king of clubs was led, and whether West ruffed high or low, he could score only one trump trick!

Lawyer: 'Sex tapes' stolen by reporter

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — A lawyer who first claimed to have "sex tapes" of model Vicki Morgan and high government officials, then said they were stolen by a reporter, should get "out of the press conference and into a court of law," a prosecutor says.

In a bizarre twist to the tale of the elusive videotapes, Beverly Hills attorney Robert K. Steinberg claimed Tuesday that the purported tapes were stolen by a reporter he refused to name. Hours later, he was ordered to produce them in court — or face a contempt citation unless he explains to a judge's satisfaction what happened to them.

Chief Deputy District Attorney Jim Bascue, whose office subpoenaed the tapes as possible evidence in Miss Morgan's murder, said that apart from Steinberg's statements, there is no evidence they exist.

"I think the threshold question is the very existence of the tapes, and secondly the alleged theft of the tapes, and I think it's about time that we get Mr. Steinberg out of the press conference and into a court of law to talk to a judge about these matters," Bascue said after a day of confusing statements about the tapes.

Attorney Robert K. Steinberg

"I THINK the average citizen on the street would be suspicious of the existence of these tapes," Bascue added.

Steinberg had claimed Monday that the tapes showed six men — including the late millionaire Alfred Bloomingdale, a congressman, two appointed administration officials and two prominent businessmen.

They supposedly were shown in sex acts with four women. Steinberg claimed Miss Morgan, 30, who was found beaten to death last week, appears on the tapes only with Bloomingdale, a friend of President Reagan who died of cancer Aug. 20.

Miss Morgan had filed a $10 million "palimony" lawsuit against Bloomingdale shortly before his death, claiming they had been lovers for 12 years. Most of the suit was dismissed.

After declining comment on the tapes' disappearance for most of the day Tuesday, a clearly nervous Steinberg finally spoke with a crowd of reporters who chased him to his car after he left his office.

"Someone from the press corps went into my library this morning and took those tapes," Steinberg said. "We know which one it was, and it's under investigation." He declined to identify any individual.

STEINBERT SAID HE would respond to the subpoena and "I hope to bring them (the tapes)."

The New York Times today quoted Steinberg as saying Los Angeles Times reporter David Johnston had "access to the tapes." Johnston, told of the report, called it "a bald-faced lie. I have never seen or had access to any purported tapes."

Steinberg also said he believed Washington columnist Jack Anderson may have access to the tapes. In a statement released by a spokesman later, Anderson said he was in touch with people who claim to have seen the tapes but said he was "not sure at this moment that they actually exist." He declined further comment.

Steinberg said earlier he got the tapes from a woman he did not know who said they might be useful in defending Marvin Pancoast, 33, on charges of murdering Miss Morgan.

Authorities had telephoned Steinberg on Tuesday morning to inquire about viewing the tapes. A few hours later Steinberg called back to say they had disappeared from a gym bag where he had left them. Beverly Hills police visited his office later to investigate the reported theft.

Steinberg, who had said he would destroy the tapes unless President Reagan wished to see them, also telephoned White House counsel Fred Fielding in Washington on Tuesday to say the tapes were missing, deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said.

THE SUBPOENA ORDERED Steinberg to bring the tapes to Van Nuys Municipal Court on July 25, when Pancoast is to be arraigned. Police say Pancoast has admitted killing Miss Morgan in the Studio City apartment they were sharing.

Steinberg said he received the tapes after visiting Pancoast in jail Saturday and agreeing to represent him temporarily. Arthur Barens, Pancoast's lawyer, said Steinberg never represented Pancoast.

Meanwhile, the Boston Herald reported today that although Steinberg's resume, provided by his office, listed him as an associate dean and professor at the law school of Northrop University in Inglewood, Calif., the school's dean said he had never heard of him.

Trench would take 'stomach' of town

CENTRALIA, Pa. (AP) — A proposal for digging a 450-foot-deep trench to stop a 21-year-old mine fire smoldering below this coal town would force scores of people to relocate and could mean the end of the town itself, residents say.

In a long-awaited report Tuesday on how to stop the fire, engineers suggested digging a giant ditch — 3,700 feet long and 450 feet deep — through the town to cut off the spread of the underground blaze.

Three smaller trenches also would be needed to stem the fire in other directions. The plan would force relocation of 80 homes and cost $103.5 million, according to the study prepared for the federal Office of Surface Mining.

"If they dig that trench, it's bye-bye Centralia," said Herb Price, 34, a resident of the town of 1,000 people. "It'll take the whole stomach out of the town."

But if nothing is done, the report said, the fire could grow to nearly 20 times its present size, burning 3,700 acres underneath all of Centralia and the nearby villages of Byrnesville and Germantown.

The land under the northeastern Pennsylvania communities, heavily mined for anthracite since the last century, is honeycombed with tunnels and shafts in which the fire has been burning since 1962.

The blaze spread into the mines from a dump fire and has defeated county, state and federal attempts to contain it. In recent years a boy was nearly killed when he fell into a hot, smoky hole, and 30 families whose homes were threatened by gases have been moved.

Team to seek profile of killer

CHICAGO (AP) — Investigators of last fall's seven unsolved Tylenol murders have regrouped to seek a psychological profile of the killer, and behavioral experts say traditional police methods "probably won't produce results."

On Tuesday, a new team of state and FBI agents was formed to take a "fresh look" at the deaths, caused by cyanide-laced capsules of Extra-Strength Tylenol. The taintings had no known motives and ended as quickly as they began.

"Renewal of public interest might produce nothing," said an official who did not want his named used. "On the other hand, it could provide the one element needed to crack the case."

Man sentenced for mail fraud

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Saying that a man awaiting trial for allegedly trying to extort money in the Tylenol poisonings "will prey on society" if released, a judge sentenced him to 10 years in prison in an unrelated case.

James W. Lewis, 36, received the sentence Tuesday on mail fraud charges stemming from a scheme to obtain credit cards by using information from clients of his tax preparation service in Kansas City in 1981. Lewis' lawyer said an appeal would be filed.

In another case, Lewis is accused of trying to extort $1 million from the makers of Extra-Strength Tylenol after the 1982 cyanide poisonings in the Chicago area.

Officials probe plant explosion

LAPLACE, La. (AP) — Officials at a chemical plant were trying to find out what caused a storage tank explosion that injured 21 workers and forced evacuation of hundreds more.

Fire burned out of control for an hour Tuesday at Du Pont Co.'s Pontchartrain Works on Tuesday, officials said. William Cobb, a company spokesman, said at least 15 workers were hurt seriously enough to be hospitalized.

Feminist's ex-husband ordered to testify at Louisiana hearing

CARSON CITY, Nev. (AP) — Feminist Ginny Foat's ex-husband and accuser has been ordered to testify this month at a Louisiana hearing where she will seek to have a murder charge dismissed.

John Sidote, a Nevada prison inmate, was ordered Tuesday to attend the hearing scheduled July 21 in Gretna, La.

Ms. Foat, 42, president of the California chapter of the National Organization for Women, was indicted on charges of robbing and fatally beating an Argentine businessman near New Orleans in 1965.

Claiming she did not get a speedy trial, she says Louisiana authorities could have charged her in 1977 when she faced another murder charge in Nevada. That was dropped when Sidote, who said he and his wife committed two murders, refused to testify.

Promoter to begin prison term

LOS ANGELES (AP) — More than two years after being convicted of conspiring to embezzle $21.3 million, a boxing promoter must begin serving a 10-year prison sentence next month, a judge says.

Harold J. Rossfields Smith, 39, is to start serving the sentence Aug. 8, U.S. District Judge Consuelo B. Marshall ordered Monday.

Smith and co-defendant Sammie Marshall, a former Wells Fargo Bank employee, were convicted in January 1982 of diverting bank funds to pay boxing purses through Muhammad Ali Professional Sports Inc.

Lunar walker forsakes space shuttle for paint brushes

HOUSTON (AP) — Alan L. Bean gazed out on the gray, desolate expanse of the moon more than a decade ago, saw his footprints in the lunar dust and longed for his brush, palette and canvas.

"If I had it to do over again, I'd take some acrylics and do the first painting on the moon," said Bean, the fourth of 12 men to walk on the moon. "Before the mission we were so busy thinking of all the technical things that had to be done, it never dawned on me."

Now the walls of the former astronaut's condominium-studio are lined with outer space art, paintings he created from the memory of his unique perspective.

Almost 14 years have passed since Bean and fellow astronaut Charles Conrad left their tracks on the Ocean of Storms during the Apollo 12 mission, the second moon landing, in November, 1969.

What Bean thought and felt during his 31 hours on the moon inspired him to resign from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and take up his brushes. He abandoned a $50,000-a-year salary and the chance to fly the space shuttle to follow his dream of painting moonscapes.

"I want to be the Remington of the Space Age," the 51-year-old retired Navy captain said.

"I am painting what, at least in my mind, is the most important heritage of our generation, the thing that will be remembered 100 years from now," he said. "History is with me. And if I make it quality art and tell the stories of Apollo, of man's first adventure off the planet, I will fill a need."

When astronauts retire, Bean said, they usually choose professions paralleling what they have done at NASA for years. His announcement that he was leaving the astronaut corps in June 1981 to become an artist shocked many co-workers.

Those who already had creative interests in writing, painting or music thought it was pretty gutsy, he said.

"But those who were the engineering test pilots 100 percent really didn't, and probably still don't, understand," said Bean. "They'd shake their heads and say, 'Yeah, he's about the right age for a mid-life crisis.'"

Bean began studying watercolor and drawing while a test pilot in 1962. But he never thought of painting moonscapes until a neighbor mentioned the idea.

"I kind of laughed at the suggestion because I didn't think space applied to fine art," Bean said. "Then I realized I had studied space for 18 years and that was what I knew best — space suits, rockets and (moon) dirt, not flowers, landscapes and trees."

He admits he had a few reservations about his extreme career change, fearing an experience similar to that of famed Western artist Frederic Remington.

"At his first show, some 100 years ago, Remington sold only a few of the 100 pieces. He became so discouraged that he didn't paint for a couple of years," Bean said.

"People in New York and Boston must have thought his paintings were interesting, but they probably didn't want Indians or buffaloes on their walls. Now they're masterpieces.

"I worried that people would look at my paintings and say, 'Gee, they're interesting and really sort of pretty but who wants space suits and moon rocks hanging on the wall,'" he said.

One hundred years from now, Bean predicted, people will love his work. "The next few weeks I'm not so sure about."

But if his first exhibition in May in his hometown of Fort Worth was any indication, Bean may avoid Remington's early experience.

The astronaut-artist sold 15 of 21 paintings at $4,000 to $12,500 each. "Everything with a flag and an astronaut sold within 20 minutes," he said.

He is planning another show sometime next year.

Bean approaches painting with the same intensity that enabled him to excel in the fierce competition among astronauts and to log 1,671 hours in space aboard Apollo 12 and the 59-day Skylab 2 mission.

He produces about one painting a month, spending six hours a day before his easel and several days a month at the Johnson Space Center studying the intricate structure of spacecraft and space suits.

The detail, he insists, is "unobtrusive, but it's there so it's got to be right."

Behind makeup, baggy pants, there's daring

ROSEBURG, Ore. (AP) — Felix Cooper was 25 when he turned his heels on a life of cotton picking in Pelican, La., and headed toward the setting sun to become a cowboy. That was in 1937.

Now, a mild stroke has compounded a stiffness born of several decades of fighting bulls in the rodeo ring. But Cooper holds his head with dignity: He is a man who went home to Louisiana having fulfilled his dream of a life as a rodeo clown.

Cooper, 71, and about 30 other rodeo clowns who lived to retire from their dangerous trade gathered in Roseburg recently to reminisce and swap stories in what has become a triennial event.

The reunions are organized by Karl Doering of Roseburg, a former rodeo cowboy who decided 10 years ago that "bull fighters," as rodeo clowns prefer to be known, deserved more recognition.

"These guys had put out so much and saved so many lives for not very many bucks and not many thanks, and I thought it was about time somebody said thanks," said the 53-year-old Doering, who retired as a rodeo clown in 1976.

To a casual spectator, rodeo clowns don't appear much different from the posturing pranksters featured in circus acts. But rodeo fans know that beneath the makeup and baggy trousers are men whose competence is measured by their speed, agility and daring.

Their main job is to keep angry bulls from turning on their riders after the cowboys are tossed off. It's a hazardous assignment that leaves most clowns with a long litany of injuries to recite by the end of their careers.

Orvall Mann, 64, of Stilwell, Okla., who is known in the rodeo circuit simply as "Stilwell Shorty," broke his left leg four times during a 25-year career. Don "Wooden Box" Bentley, 73, of Smartville, Calif., quit the rodeo when his partner's leg was gored by a bull and was forced to have it amputated.

"The rodeo clown today is more of a bull fighter than a comedian, and if you hire out to fight bulls, you better be tough," said Doering. "But the really good ones are the ones versatile enough to do both."

Unlike most rodeo cowboys who compete for prize money, rodeo clowns are hired by individual rodeos per day or per event. Some work as many 50 rodeos a year, scattered all over the country, but mostly in the West, Doering said. Nationwide, there are about 60 rodeo clowns working at any one time.

Today, the best bull fighters an make up to $100,000 a year and a good one can make a sound living. But it wasn't always true.

"I used to work and save money nine months of the year so I could go rodeoing for three," said Bentley, who retired in 1941. "Sometimes I'd make $50 a day, but you were lucky if you got work twice a month."

Cooper, one of the first black men to become a rodeo clown, said fighting prejudice in his early years was as tough as fighting bulls.

In 1937, the year he became a cowboy, Cooper was not even allowed to buy a ticket to the rodeo in Fort Worth, Texas. Ten years later, he went back as a rodeo clown.

Scientists theorize intense radiation doomed dinosaurs

Copley News Service

An unusually strong storm of neutron particles from outer space may have triggered the extinction of the world's dinosaurs some 65 million years ago, according to a new theory of a scientist at the Scripps Institution of Oceanography in La Jolla, Calif.

The theory, the latest in a long line of possible explanations for the demise of the giant reptiles, suggests that intense radiation caused widespread death on the planet, particularly among animals and plants requiring large amounts of calcium and sodium from sea water.

The bombardment also would have affected land animals that laid eggs with large amounts of calcium, such as dinosaurs.

Indeed, fossil remains of dinosaur eggs recently uncovered in China show their shells had been getting progressively thinner shortly before their extinction, suggesting they weren't getting enough calcium to harden them.

"It seems to be a simple way to explain what happened," said Dr. A. Aristides Yayanos, a marine biologist at Scripps and author of the new theory being published in a recent edition of Nature, a British science journal. "I'm really excited about it. I think it will prove to be a viable path. But we've been fooled before."

Yayanos, who specializes in deep sea biology and biophysics, became intrigued with the dinosaur extinction problem after he read an article detailing which species of animals and plants died out at the end of the Cretaceous geologic period about 65 million years ago.

The list, compiled in 1979, showed that about 90 percent of all marine life became extinct at that time, while only half of the fresh water species were destroyed.

Yayanos speculated that a large shower of neutrons, atomic particles with no electrical charge, reacting with calcium and sodium in seawater could be an answer to the mystery. The deadly radioactive products could then be incorporated in the bones and egg shells of sea life, wiping them out.

On land, the irradiated elements also would be incorporated in the bones of animals through the air, water or plants.

An appropriate neutron source, he further reasoned, could come from a large exploding star, some large burst of energy near the center of the galaxy, or an unusual activity on the sun.

To test his hypothesis, Yayanos calculated what types of radioactive products could be formed in seawater, fresh water and plants from a wide range of neutron bursts.

His calculations showed that a large storm of neutrons, roughly nine times the amount that hits the earth today, would produce large amounts of radioactive calcium, sulfur and phosphorus in seawater. In fresh water however, only small amounts of these potentially harmful elements would be formed.

Yayanos then rechecked his list of surviving and extinct organisms.

He found that small sea creatures with no calcium, such as diatoms and silicon-containing organisms, came through the period virtually unharmed. Meanwhile, those animal species that required calcium to maintain life generally failed to get through.

"I was excited," Yayanos said, recalling when his calculations were finished. "I was bouncing off the walls."

The Scripps researcher knows there are questions posed by his theory. For example, do neutron rays penetrate ocean water enough to be incorporated in its elements?

Also, his theory fails to account for another phenomenon that occurred about the same time of the death of the dinosaurs, the abnormally large quantities of iridium found in sediments laid down at the end of the Cretaceous period.

Some scientists suggest this carpet of iridium and the dinosaurs' downfall resulted from a cataclysmic event such as an asteroid or comet striking the Earth and releasing it into the atmosphere. Others have suggested volcanic explosions on the moon as a source for this element.

But Yayanos said that little is known or understood about the biochemistry, weathering or solubility of iridium. Besides, he argues, the asteroid theory can't explain why only certain organisms died out. His theory does.

"It's really a peculiar area of science," he concedes. "But I think it's a fun, fascinating problem. It's something where you can get a nice idea, and plug away at it."

Regaining trust

Thirteen sites in Texas, Arkansas and Louisiana earlier identified as having the "potential for the presence of dioxin" are getting a second look by the Dallas regional office of the Environmental Protection Agency.

All the sites are being restudied for potential health hazards, say EPA officials, because of the widely publicized contamination at Times Beach, Mo., and Love Canal. EPA officials are to be commended for launching this subsequent investigation.

Dioxin, the most deadly manmade substance known, is a very real danger for millions of Americans who may not even realize it is threatening their lives and their homes. Yet a 1980 report by the EPA lists hundreds of sites in 33 states where dioxin may have been produced or dumped.

Roger Meacham, a public affairs specialist for the EPA in the Dallas regional office, said the new study of Texas sites — most in the industrial region between Houston and Beaumont — is intended to determine the level of contamination, if any. He said the EPA's "action level" is one part per billion.

That's a minute amount, but scientific studies on dioxin reveal that it takes only one-millionth of a gram to kill a guinea pig. Dioxin, a byproduct of the manufacturing of herbicides, is contained in Agent Orange, the defoliant used in Vietnam during the war. And, like the experience with Agent Orange, medical problems stemming from dioxin contamination may not show up for 20 to 40 years.

Scandals have rocked the EPA in recent months, shattering public trust in the agency and its administrators. But inherent in the dioxin "scare" is the opportunity for the agency to do exactly what it was designed to do — protect the environment and, thus, American lives.

The agency appears to be reapproaching its duty in the proper manner: Aggressively pursuing protection of the environment. It should continue to do so and to keep the public fully informed of developments. That's the best way for the agency to regain its public trust — and the public to regain confidence that its best interests are truly being represented.

Think before talking

Sometimes it's better to think before you start talking.

A recent Associated Press item reported that teachers are upset over proposals that good teachers be paid more money. "The National Education Association," AP writes, "argues that merit-pay plans reward only a small segment of teachers."

We think lots of teachers would qualify for merit bonuses, but far be it from us to argue with the NEA.

Another View:

Choose its destiny

With scarcely a word criticizing the United States, a Nicaraguan patriot nevertheless makes clear how grievously the Reagan administration errs in dealing with his country. The patriot is Arturo Cruz, an original member of that remarkable amalgam of bankers, Marxists, business leaders and guerrillas who overthrew the Somoza dictatorship three years ago.

Cruz speaks in anguish. Nicaragua, he writes in Foreign Affairs magazine, is in the grip of totalitarian trends that "seem to have wiped out the democratic and pluralistic ideal which, in 1979, united all Nicaraguan advocates of freedom." Cruz also speaks from experience. After the Sandinista victory he was head of the central bank, then a member of the governing junta, then ambassador to the United States. Eventually he resigned from the government in despair.

Yet Cruz speaks now of many top Sandinistas as he spoke of them in Managua in early 1981: with admiration and respect, tempered by concern about their intolerance. Now he worries too about uncritical attitudes by some groups and countries outside Nicaragua. "Unconditional support (for the Nicaraguan government) whether for reasons of idealism or partisanship, risks taking my country on a round trip; from the past to the past."

The ticket to that trip is called counterrevolution. No doubt, uncritical support of the Sandinistas incites some of it, but surely the main cause is the violent opposition. And the principal sponsor of that violent enterprise — ticket-seller, conductor and chief engineer — is the U.S. government. Administration backing of the counterrevolutionaries, or "contras", is no longer a secret. The ostensible reason is to prevent Nicaraguan aid to Salvadoran rebels. But the amount of such aid is apparently slight and the evidence of it regularly contradicted. The clearer evidence is the administration's antipathy for leftist governments.

But consider the alternative backed by the United States. Although the contras are a diverse lot, their most prominent military leaders are former members of the Somoza National Guard. Cruz calls them "civic cadavers who have been resurrected" by the excesses of Nicaragua's government. Serious as those excesses may be, they are no worse than the dictatorship that would almost surely result if the contras were to succeed. Then Nicaragua's trip from the past to the past would be complete.

The contras have little chance of winning unless the United States misconstrues the Nicaraguan struggle as a test of American will — an idea that President Reagan too often has suggested. "If we cannot defend ourselves there (in Central America)," he said in April, "we cannot prevail elsewhere." But the question is not whether "we" can prevail. The question is what destiny Nicaraguans and others in central America choose for themselves. Cruz thinks the Nicaraguan government is on a self-destructive course. Whether or not his prediction is correct, the United States has no business trying to determine the outcome.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Soviets invite economic warfare

WASHINGTON — In an earlier column, I described the "low-risk, low-cost, low-profile" offensive that the Soviet Union is directing against the United States. There is a way to fight back.

Jack Anderson

The Kremlin is harboring drug smugglers, subsidizing terrorists and training revolutionaries who are then unleashed against the West. The purpose is to destabilize the Western governments, with the United States as the ultimate target.

But if the United States is vulnerable to drugs and terrorism, the Soviet Union also has its soft underbelly. The Soviet economy is foundering; its Marxist system has been unable to produce sufficient food and consumer goods; and the ruble won't buy much these days.

This has already reduced Soviet influence around the world. Declares a secret CIA report dug up by my associate Dale Van Atta: "In the third world, Moscow's hard currency assistance to communist clients has become more restrained."

In other words, left-leaning countries need hard currency — a commodity which the Soviets are running short of. They can't even afford to keep their allies supplied with arms.

Here's an excerpt from another secret report: "The USSR will be even less willing than before to undertake major assistance efforts similar to those carried out in the past for Cuba and Vietnam."

And still another excerpt: "(The Soviet Union) is encountering growing economic difficulties, which will make it more difficult to increase its imports from the West in the future. The outlook for most Soviet exports, including oil, is not favorable."

The bottom line is this: The Soviet system is highly vulnerable to economic warfare. The Soviet economy is already in distress; it can be crippled; dollar diplomacy might work after all.

By applying economic pressure, the Western alliance might convince the Kremlin to stop supporting revolutionaries, terrorists and drug smugglers. An agreement to end this subterranean warfare might ultimately lead to disarmament and detente.

Here are a few economic squeeze plays that, in my journalist's presumption, I believe could bring the Kremlin to terms:

1. — The Western powers could push the Soviets over the edge economically simply by shutting off credit. This would reduce the hard currency that the Soviets need to produce the arms that have had such a destabilizing effect on the world.

2. — The United States has the economic power to break up OPEC and drive down the price of oil. This would hurt the Soviet Union, which must sell oil for the hard currency it needs.

3. — The Soviets also need to sell natural gas to Western Europe to earn more hard currency. By refusing to buy the gas and to help with the pipeline, the European nations could bring the Soviets to the bargaining table.

4. — The United States should continue to sell as much grain to Russia as the Soviets are willing to buy. This costs the Kremlin precious hard currency that otherwise could be spent on arms.

5. — The United States could wage a covert trade war against the Kremlin, undercutting Soviet prices, raising Soviet bids and dumping products to depress Soviet markets.

These moves would throw the Soviet economy into a tailspin and leave the Kremlin with no choice but to cut back on military spending and aggressive moves. Then Yuri Andropov might become more amenable to negotiating a real detente and might call off the terrorists and revolutionaries.

POLITICAL POTPOURRI: When a national magazine recently reported that Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., had spent $200 of campaign funds to take a Dale Carnegie course, the senator was outraged. It wasn't just that it was a staffer who, in fact, had taken the course; it was the suggestion that Simpson needed lessons in winning friends and influencing people. In fact, for years, one of the senator's favorite little jokes had been: "I used to have a lot of trouble remembering names until I took the Sam Carnegie course."

— Actor Cliff Robertson, who once portrayed a young John F. Kennedy in the movies, campaigned for Rep. Morris Udall, D-Ariz., in 1976. Udall announced that he's not in the running for president in 1984, but Robertson said he'll be waiting in the wings in case Udall changes his mind or if, "by some miracle," a deadlocked convention produces a Udall nomination.

— Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., whose brother Jack drew hoots of laughter when he referred to "Cuber" and "Lay-oss," ran into a different pronunciation problem at a Democratic fund-raiser the other day. He joked that Kenneth Adelman was confirmed as disarmament chief "because President Reagan had threatened to nominate Darth Varder" — meaning Darth Vader, the "Star Wars" villain. "In the Congressional Record, they let you clear these things up," said Kennedy.

HEMISPHERE REPORT

D.C. changing Latin offensive

WASHINGTON — Some U.S. and other politicians now seem to realize that they have been backing the wrong side in Central America.

William Giandoni

Now more and more have started talking in terms of long-term solutions to Central America's economic and social problems, of mini-Marshall Plans, of an updated Alliance for Progress that might bear fruit in decades or so.

Sens. Henry Jackson, D-Washington, and Charles Mathias, R-Md., Reps. Tom Kemp, R-N.Y., Michael Barnes, D-Md., who is chairman of the House Western Hemisphere Affairs subcommittee, and House Majority Leader Jim Wright who talks of a new alliance, all have spoken recently in favor of aid programs of one sort or another.

No one has said they are trying to disassociate themselves from the liberal group that has made President Reagan's Central American policy a partisan political issue. But some of them either overtly opposed the president's efforts to prevent further communist conquests of power in Latin America or, by their long silence, seemed to acquiesce to the opposition.

Americans, or North Americans, as the neighbors to the south prefer it, are not the only ones who now seem to be trying to divert attention from their recent actions or inaction.

For example, Spain's prime minister, Felipe Gonzalez, one of the early backers of the Sandinistas in Nicaragua in their violent struggle to overthrow the Somoza dynasty, now talks of a peaceful solution to Central American conflicts.

As he passed through Washington, having earlier made a five-nation tour around the Caribbean without visiting Nicaragua or the other Central American nations, Gonzalez was vague in his public statements on the region and its problems.

As he is the Socialist International's recognized specialist on Latin America, Gonzalez was asked how it is that the European-based Socialist group had come down so emphatically on the side of the Sandinistas in Nicaragua. And what is more, why they refused to change their stance despite the complaints of Costa Rican socialists — President Luis Alberto Monge and his National Liberation Party — that the Sandinistas are imposing communism on Nicaragua and are waging "war without frontiers" in Central America.

Gonzalez heard the question put in English, listened to an interpreter translate it into Spanish and then replied in Spanish.

What the European socialists think or say does not concern him much, Gonzalez said. That is why he places more emphasis on the support that British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, French President Francois Mitterrand and West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl voiced for the efforts of "the Contadora Group" to bring peace to Central America. The still-to-be proposed solution of the Contadora Group, made up of Panama, Mexico, Colombia and Venezuela, goes beyond the political ideology of each party, each group in power, Gonzalez said.

Then he said he understands the anguish of the Costa Ricans. They have no armed forces and consider themselves defenseless against the Sandinistas who, although he did not mention it, have the largest army in Central America, thanks to the support Cuba and the Soviet Union give them.

None of that explained the European socialists' disinclination to heed the advice and complaints of the moderates among their Latin counterparts.

But Gonzalez changed the subject by calling attention to the threat he perceives in "the Southern Cone," presumably Argentina, Brazil, Chile and Uruguay, all of which are under right-wing military control.

The Southern Cone, blessed with a sufficiency of human and natural resources, will grow 20 times in economic terms by the year 2000, but no one knows what will happen there unless a method of sharing the wealth among the different sectors of the population is found, Gonzalez said.

"If there is no stable democracy in the major part or all of the countries of the continent," Gonzalez said, "we can imagine the quantity of terrible conflicts between the great deprived masses and the groups of oligarchs who have everything, and besides, try to control all power in their hands."

That is an inaccurate characterization of the Southern Cone countries, as millions of Spanish and other European immigrants who have found a better life and even fortune there could attest.

Clearly, though, Gonzalez, like many others who have been championing the Sandinista cause in Central America, would prefer to divert attention from the war without frontiers being waged from Nicaragua to more distant times and places.

"A 30- to 50-year vision of building democracy, increasing economic opportunity and reinforcing human rights for the peoples of Central America is praiseworthy," a retired U.S. businessman with Latin American experience commented. "The only trouble is that the battle on the isthmus will be over long before the year 2013."

Undesirable attitude

To The Editor:

I was more than a little upset over your article on June 28 about "bad judgment" in handling rabies case. Constable Tom McGinnis' attitude is little to be desired.

I am one of those so-called city dwellers who moved to the country. I do not appreciate his remarks on who I am or where I live. He says a skunk will walk off in a pasture and die. But how many animals will that skunk infect with rabies on the way, so goes another case. And tell me Mr. McGinnis, what about the nine confirmed rabies cases in the city? Where did those skunks come from? The county.

I know as well as anyone, you can't kill or capture every skunk in the county for numerous reasons. But I also know that I don't want one of my children to be a statistic on Mr. McGinnis' list of rabies cases.

I'm sorry, Mr. McGinnis that your job seems to be such a burden. If we city dwellers turned country can't depend on your help, who can we depend on?

Above all, remember our next election year.

Billie Pierce
Midland

Shocking!

To The Editor:

In Tuesday's account of the Midland Cubs-El Paso Diablos Monday night game, Sports Editor Ted Battles had some rather sarcastic remarks about the weather bureau. According to Mr. Battles, the weather bureau wouldn't know bad weather if they saw it. Perhaps Mr. Battles should stick to his own field, but then he did suggest in Sunday's paper that the National League All Stars had no competition in the then up-coming game, didn't he? Ah well.

For Mr. Battles' information the decision to cancel the fireworks' display was based on the observations of a number of trained and experienced weather spotters who were in contact by radio with the weather bureau. At the time the decision was made, I was observing cloud-to-cloud lightning over downtown Midland and frequent cloud-to-ground lightning just outside the city. Ten minutes later that cell had rained itself out.

The next time Mr. Battles sees Lee Trevino he might ask about the advisability of using one's body as a lightning rod.

Banks Campbell
Midland

Unfair action

To The Editor:

I am puzzled, over a situation in our Midland schools. Last spring, when a vacancy occurred at West Elementary School for the position of principal, our own teachers and assistant principals were overlooked in favor of giving this important job to the wife of Duane Moore. Mr. Moore is our new assistant superintendent.

Mrs. Moore, I understand, is still not qualified to teach in Texas, since they moved from out-of-state. How, then, is she qualified to be a principal? I could probably understand her being given a teaching job, with the understanding that she work toward certification. I do not understand her being given the job of principal when we have well qualified people here who should have been promoted to this job. Did the school board approve of this situation? Do we no longer promote from within?

I feel it must be very demoralizing to teachers and assistant principals to have such a very unfair action taken.

Mrs. L.M. Hembree
Midland

Safe move

To The Editor:

In regard to Ted Battles' article concerning the postponement of the July 4th fireworks at Cub Stadium, I certainly hope that Mr. Battles would not have preferred to see a headline reading "Several Injured at Cub Stadium by Hail and Lightning." With a severe thunderstorm dumping golfball-size hail and producing winds in excess of 50 mph just 10 miles southeast of Midland and moving northwest, Mr. Schammel certainly made the right decision after consulting with the weather service.

With over 3,700 people at Cub Stadium that night, the potential for injury and damage was great. Fortunately, this thunderstorm dissipated before reaching northeast Midland, and no damage was done.

I would much rather see the weather service blamed for postponement of the fireworks than be held responsible for not reacting to the situation and permitting needless injuries to loyal Cub fans and perhaps Ted Battles himself.

Irish terrorism continues

Restoration of death penalty debated

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Four Ulster Defense Regiment soldiers were killed and one seriously wounded today when IRA guerrillas detonated a powerful landmine under a convoy on a remote country road in Northern Ireland, police said.

Later, police said the naked bodies of two Roman Catholics, both shot through the head, were found today in a car near Crossmaglen, an Irish Republican Army stronghold in South Armagh on the border with the Irish Republic. Police sources who asked not to be identified said the men were believed to have been executed by the guerrillas as suspected informers.

The killings came only hours before the British Parliament was scheduled to vote on restoring the death penalty for terrorist slayings and other categories of murder.

The landmine explosion hurled the army vehicle into the air, blew down telephone poles and blasted a hole 40 feet wide and 15 feet deep in the main road from Belfast to Omagh near the village of Ballygawley, 40 miles southwest of Belfast. The four part-time soldiers who died were part of a convoy on its way to training camp.

The Ulster Defense Regiment is a locally recruited, predominantly Protestant unit of the British army. IRA guerrillas have killed at least 135 men and women of the UDR, most of them in ambushes while they were off duty, since the regiment was formed in 1970.

The Provisional Irish Republican Army's Tyrone Brigade claimed responsibility for the ambush in coded telephone calls to Belfast news organizations.

It claimed the Ulster Defense Regiment was a "sectarian force" whose members "torture, murder and harass our people."

"For this, a number of them have paid the price of the British government's Ulsterization policy," the IRA statement added.

Police spokesman Jim Boyd said guerrillas hidden on a nearby hill detonated the landmine by remote control under the last vehicle in a five-truck convoy.

British troops, backed by helicopters, swept into the area in a major dragnet for the guerrillas, and men from the convoy joined the hunt.

Hanging was abolished Britain in 1966, but Parliament has rejected bringing back the noose five times since 1974. However, law-and-order sentiments are running high, and vote due tonight was expected to be close.

Security authorities have feared the IRA or the INLA would stage a major attack to push legislators towards supporting the reintroduction of capital punishment for terrorist killings.

The organizations are said to believe that bringing back the rope could be of propaganda value to them by creating martyrs out of IRA members executed for waging their so-called war of liberation to end British rule in Northern Ireland.

Simmering racial tension heats up French summer

By GREG MacARTHUR
Associated Press Writer

PARIS — With temperatures in the 90s across France, the simmering tension between North African immigrants and working-class whites who share crowded public housing projects has exploded in violence.

A 48-year-old man was charged Tuesday with voluntary homicide in the death of a 9-year-old North African boy who was shot from the window of a housing complex near Paris while setting off firecrackers to celebrate the end of the Moslem holy month, Ramadan.

The formal charge was filed less than 24 hours after another man was arrested for shooting and wounding a 19-year-old North African from his public housing project window south of Lyon because the youth was "making too much noise" in the courtyard below.

Hunting rifles were used in both attacks, which are certain to add to the growing concern over racial conflict in this country. Both victims were North African Arabs and their assailants were blue collar whites — one a railroad security guard and the other a 50-year-old textile worker.

The incidents also have prompted examination of a seldom-debated issue in France — gun control.

Handguns in this country are hard to come by, and only crimes committed by hard-core professionals tend to involve pistols.

But France, with a long tradition of hunting, has never made purchase of rifles unusually difficult.

The government television network Antenne 2, in a special report on the problem Tuesday night, estimated there are about 12 million .22-caliber long-barreled rifles in the country.

That does not take into account the millions of shotguns and collectors' firearms that are not subject to strict restrictions or registration.

But the overriding concern is racial tension. The millions of legal and illegal immigrants in France, many of them from former French colonies in north and west Africa, have become the targets of extreme right propaganda, which aims to blame them for France's high unemployment rate.

Immigration and crime in the streets — problems often linked together in France — were major campaign issues during nationwide municipal elections last March in which the governing Socialists lost some ground.

The public housing projects themselves are being blamed, in part, for the latest incidents.

Several Paris newspapers have blamed the "malaise" of crowded public housing life for creating a climate of violence.

But the violence is not limited to the housing complexes.

On Tuesday afternoon near Marseille, about 30 North African youths ranging in ages from 15 to 20 attacked the supervisor of a public swimming pool with chairs after he banned one of their friends from the pool for two months in connection with an alleged theft, police said.

The official suffered head injuries and was hospitalized.

Ecuadorean crash kills Americans

QUITO, Ecuador (AP) — U.S. consular officials say five Americans including a family of three were among the 119 people killed in an Ecuadorean jetliner that crashed into a Andean mountain pass known as the "Valley of Death."

Troops recovered the last bodies from the wreckage of the Boeing 737 on Tuesday as investigators searched debris for the voice and flight recorders, seeking a clue to Ecuador's worst airline disaster.

The U.S. consulate identified the American victims as Joseph, Leonard and Nelly Kelly, a New York family; Roger Thompson of Maryland and Jesus Guevara Molina, a naturalized citizen from Washington, D.C.

Eight other foreigners — a British couple, five Colombians and a Spaniard — also were reported aboard the plane that crashed into an Andean mountain 250 miles south of Quito on Monday.

Witnesses said the tail of the plane hit a mountain as the pilot tried to regain altitude while coming through the "Valley of Death" to land at Cuenca after a 37-minute flight from Quito.

Six airliners have crashed in the narrow valley since 1964 while approaching the 9,000-foot-high provincial capital.

A Cuenca radio station reported that some witnesses said the aircraft exploded before it crashed, leading to talk of sabotage, but it retracted the report.

Chad's insurgents fleeing northward

N'DJAMENA, Chad (AP) — The government claims Libyan-backed insurgents are fleeing northward to escape advancing troops who it says recaptured Chad's largest eastern city, seized heavy weapons and blunted the rebellion.

"We've certainly had difficulties, but we are now masters of the terrain," Information Minister Soumalia Mahamat said Tuesday in N'Djamena, the capital 400 miles southeast of Abeche, which he said loyalist forces retook after a fierce fight with rebels of former President Goukouni Oueddei.

Mahamat said Abeche, the eastern anchor of the east-west supply route between N'Djamena and President Hissene Habre's allies in neighboring Sudan, "is entirely and completely under government control."

Independent confirmation of the claims was not possible because the government will not permit foreign reporters to visit the battlefront.

It was Habre's second claim of victory over the rebels since Monday, when officials said loyalist troops had routed insurgents from Oum Chalouba and Kalait, 150 miles north of Abeche. Foreign Minister Idriss Miskine told reporters the tide of war had turned.

Miskine has been visiting French officials in Paris to request they send French troops to France's former central African colony. He left for China today.

Wider Mexican probe advised

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Government opponents in Congress say a fraud investigation of the former director of the state oil monopoly should be followed by a wider probe of official Mexican corruption.

Congress held a special session Tuesday to appoint two committees to deal with the investigation of Sen. Jorge Diaz Serrano, who was director of the Pemex oil monopoly from 1976 to 1981 under former President Jose Lopez Portillo.

Legislators named a 21-member committee to oversee the Diaz Serrano case and any similar cases which develop. Four of the members will form another committee to decide whether his congressional immunity should be lifted.

More foodstuffs to be shipped

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, D.C. — U.S.Ambassador to Mexico John Gavin conferred here Monday with President Reagan and other officias, winning assurances of additional large shipments of food to the hungry people of Mexico.

The White House would not divulge details of the conversations but Gavin announced on television he was shopping for more food. Most of the food will be shipped across Texas to San Antonio and Laredo then to Mexico.

A White Hose spokesman said $1.7 billion of food stuffs is being provided from the U.S. Commodity Credit Corporation, this fiscal year.

Mouse darkens Nakasone's day

TOKYO (AP) — A tiny mouse penetrated the inner sanctum of the Japanese government today, throwing the official residence of Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone into darkness with a ill-fated attack on its electric power system.

Security forces were put on emergency alert while electricians searched for the source of a short circuit that blacked out Nakasone's residence and office, a 54-year-old structure that was a target of two pre-war coup attempts.

A residence official said the power outage occurred shortly after 8:00 a.m. and continued for about 50 minutes.

The invader was found to be a four-inch mouse. Its charred body was found on top of a shorted electric wire in a basement power room, killed by 6,600 volts of electricity, the residence official said.

Three Koreans arrested as spies

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Three Koreans have been arrested on charges they spied for North Korea after agents of that communist country recruited them in Japan and Libya, the government said today.

Kim Kwang-ho, 30, was accused of collecting industrial information on South Korean construction companies in Libya while working there as an air-conditioning technician in 1982, said the government's Agency for National Security Planning.

After returning to South Korea, Kim continued spying by gathering information about an annual U.S.-Korean military exercise, the agency said.

Higher tobacco taxes, ban urged

WINNIPEG, Manitoba (AP) — Delegates at an international conference on smoking are being urged to lobby for higher tobacco taxes and a ban on cigarette advertising as part of a campaign to create a smoking-free world by the year 2000.

"Without active political involvement, we shall not realize our goal," Dr. Kjell Bjartveit of Norway said Tuesday at the fifth World Conference on Smoking and Health. About 900 delegates from 80 countries are attending the week-long gathering, which ends Friday.

Bjartveit said tough legislation is the only way to eliminate smoking.He cited the Norwegian Tobacco Act, which went into effect in 1975 and bans all cigarette advertising.

Chinese-British talks conclude

PEKING (AP) — Britain and China concluded a "useful and constructive" second day of talks today on the future of Hong Kong, which China wants placed under its control when Britain's lease over most of the colony expires in 1997.

Talks will resume in Peking July 25, the statement said. No details were given on the talks that began Tuesday.

China's Communist government has asserted it intends to recover sovereignty over Hong Kong when the British lease expires. Uncertainty over how China plans to administer the 404-square-mile colony has led to widespread fear among Hong Kong's 5 million residents and depressed its free-market economy.

'Scouts in exile' also participate

By MARIO FOX
Associated Press Writer

KANANASKIS COUNTRY, Alberta — Scouting as most of the world knows it does not exist behind the Iron Curtain, but that hasn't kept teen-agers with roots in Armenia, Estonia, Lithuania and Hungary from participating in the 15th World Jamboree.

They came to the international gathering, the first of its kind in eight years, as part of contingents from Canada, the United States and France. But they have sought to maintain their own national identities, and that has left world scouting leaders uneasy.

"A group of exiles — say from Eastern Europe — are in fact citizens of the countries in which they reside," Patrick McLaughlin of Glasgow, Scotland, the European regional executive of the World Scout Bureau, said Tuesday.

"As a world conference, we can only recognize one organization from each country," he said.

Remigijus Belzinskas, who heads a troop of scouts of Lithuanian heritage in Cleveland, Ohio, said, "I'm no rabble-rouser. I am proud to be an American, but I am also proud of being a Lithuanian, and I would have loved to have brought my own troop here."

He instead accompanied an Ohio contingent to the jamboree.

Some officials of exile groups from Estonia, Hungary, Latvia, Poland and the Ukraine have formed their own unit, Associated International Scout and Guide Organizations.

An Armenian Scout in exile, Ara Hampartsoumian of Montreal, Quebec, learns to shoot from Stuart Hehr, Alberta Fish and Game Department, during an activity on the trap shooting range at the 15th International Scout Jamboree in Alberta, Quebec.

The exile group distributed a flyer at the jamboree which accused the World Bureau of refusing to recognize the organization "contrary to the principles of international scouting and brotherhood."

"It's unfair for them to say we are blocking them," McLaughlin said. "The question is one of scouting, not a political one. If we stated a view toward the Soviet bloc, the world organization would be exceeding its competence."

"We are mixing politics and scouting," said Ants Evard, who leads an Estonian troop in the Toronto area, "and this is an apolitical organization."

Ed Ozols, a spokesman for a Latvian-exile troop in Toronto, said the World Scouting Conference will consider the question of exile scouts at its meeting in Dearborn, Mich., next week.

But, he added, "Third World countries run things...and the Russians have a lot of influence with them."

The only exception to the rule is the world organization's recognition of Armenian scouts living in France, McLaughlin said. He said Lord Baden-Powell, scouting's founder, gave the Armenians a charter in 1929.

"We cannot talk about returning to a free Armenia as a scout — it is a personal feeling," said Donable Dian Myriati, 17, of Lyon, France.

Twenty-five Armenians from France are camped across a narrow path from a site that is the jamboree home for 18 Estonians and four Hungarians from the Toronto area. The scouts' parents or grandparents came from countries now under Soviet dominance.

Panossian Zadig, 20, of Paris said, "The reason the world council recognizes us is we are Armenians trying to be scouts, instead of scouts trying to be Armenians."

Girl pledges continued friendship with Soviets

YALTA, U.S.S.R. (AP) — Samantha Smith says she will "remain friends across the sea" with the Young Pioneers of the Crimean youth camp where she spent four days at the invitation of Soviet President Yuri V. Andropov.

"I love you, Artek," the 11-year-old American girl told some 400 campers to loud applause during a farewell ceremony Tuesday night.

"My stay at sea camp in Artek has been wonderful, very wonderful," she said in a speech translated into Russian for the campers. "I shall miss my new international friends. But we will remain friends across the sea. Let our countries be friends too. Someday I hope to return."

The farewell speech was written by her father, Arthur, who said his daughter "went speechless" at a welcome dinner last Saturday night.

Samantha then used a microphone to join the other children in a chorus of the Russian song "Always Young."

As the Manchester, Maine, girl left the small arena by the Black Sea, she was bathed by television klieg lights, surrounded by photographers and deluged with presents from fellow campers.

The gifts included a costume doll, a furry bear, and a piece of campfire wood from a pile then lighted by the side of the arena.

Midland ends losing streak

JACKSON, Miss. — Darryl Banks and Bill Johnson teamed up to pitch a four-hit shutout as the Midland Cubs ended an eight-game losing streak with a 2-0 win over the Jackson Mets in Texas League play Tuesday night.

Midland pushed over both its runs in the eighth inning to hand Calvin Schiraldi, the MVP in leading Texas to the NCAA College World Series title, his second defeat in three decisions.

Against Banks and Johnson, the Mets advanced only two runners as far as second base. Johnson, 3-2, relieved Banks in the seventh and notched the win.

A.J. Hill, who got his first hit in 13 at bats in the series, beat out a dribbler to the right side to open the eighth. Jay Loviglio sacrificed the runner to second and then Bill Hatcher delivered his fourth straight single of the night to plate the run.

Tom Lombarski followed with a hit that moved Hatcher to third as John Semperini came on to pitch.Hatcher scored on a throwing error on Mike Anicich's grounder to third.

Billy Beane reached second for the Mets in the fifth on a single and ground out. In the seventh, it was also Beane who advancing to second after reaching first base on a two-oout error by Lombarski at first. Mike Bishop singled to left and Johnson came out of the bullpen to get the final out on a force play.

ELSEWHERE IN the Texas League, San Antonio and Arkansas staged ninth-inning rallies to post come-from-behind victories.

Dale Holman hit a homer before Tom Byers walked in with the winning run as the Dodgers beat Shreveport 5-4 Tuesday night.

Arkansas scored four runs, including two on Gotay Mills' double, to edge Beaumont 5-4.

El Paso beat Tulsa 7-4.

Holman's pinch-hit homer knotted the game at 4-4. Losing pitcher John Violette, 4-3, let the game get away when he issued a bases-loaded walk to Byers.

Jody Johnston, 4-5, picked up the win for San Antonio.

Mills led the Arkansas charge with a two-run double that scored Barry Sayler and Rod Booker.

Sayler reached base on an error, one of three by the Golden Gators in the final inning. Mills scored the tying run on a wild throw to home. Luis Ojeda got the winning run when a throw to first bounced into right field.

Dan Purpura and John Kruk led Beaumont's offense.

Purpura scored twice, on a single by center fielder James Steels and Kruk's eighth homer of the year. The fourth run came in the seventh when shortstop Ozzie Guillen scored on a sacrifice fly by Kruk.

Terry Clark, 4-3, won in relief for Arkansas. The loser was Marty Kain, 2-3.

Jim Paciorek, Joe Henderson, Garrett Nego and Mike Felder had RBI singles during El Paso's four-run fourth inning.

Kevin Buckley hit a two-run homer for Tulsa in the first. Jim Foyt also homered for the Drillers.

Tim Crews, 5-5, was the winning pitcher. Jerry Johnson, 2-2, took the loss.

Phillies move back out front in East

By The Associated Press

The topsy-turvy National League East has taken another twist, and this time the Philadelphia Phillies are back on top.

The Phillies, who led the division for most of May, regained first place Tuesday night by sweeping a twi-night doubleheader from the Atlanta Braves.

Philadelphia won the opener in solid fashion 4-1 but then had to rally for three runs in the bottom of the ninth inning to take the second game 7-6.

Catcher Ozzie Virgil, whose throwing error had let Atlanta go ahead in the eighth inning of the nightcap, raced home with the winning run when Braves second baseman Glenn Hubbard threw away a potential inning-ending, double-play relay.

"e're starting to get some breaks now, and we'll take them," said Philadelphia's Pete Rose. "It was really a team effort. We're playing a lot of guys, and everybody is contributing."

In other NL games, Cincinnati downed New York 6-2, Houston overtook Montreal 7-5, Sa Diego topped Chicago 5-3, Los Angeles beat St. Louis 3-1 and Pittsburgh took San Francisco 6-2.

The Philadelphia sweep, coupled with Montreal's loss, put the Phillies one game ahead of the Expos, who had been in first since mid-June. St. Louis, which has led the division for most of the season, is now two games back.

National League

Atlanta reliever Steve Bedrosian, 5-3, took a 6-4 lead into the ninth inning of the second game and got one out before walking Mike Schmidt. Von Hayes singled Schmidt to second and Virgil drove in one run with a check-swing double.

Greg Gross was then intentionally walked, loading the bases. Reserve Larry Milbourne then hit a slow hopper to shortstop Rafael Ramirez, who flipped the ball to Hubbard as Hayes scored the tying run. But Hubbard's relay to get Milbourne sailed past Chris Chambliss, allowing Virgil to score.

In the opener, John Denny, 7-5, allowed three hits in seven innings and Garry Maddox tripled in two runs. Denny lowered his earned run average to 2.17, second in the NL to San Francisco's Atlee Hammaker. Al Holland pitched the final two innings, striking out five, for his eighth save.

"We've got a much stronger bench this year than last year and it's really showing," said Philadelphia Manager Pat Corrales, who was ejected in the first inning of the second game for protesting balls and strikes. "It was a good effort all night from everybody."

Reds 6, Mets 2

Cincinnati Manager Russ Nixon, while declining to discuss specifics, said the Reds' game with New York was an important one for Frank Pastore.

The right-hander had not won since April 17 and had a seven-game losing streak. Nixon did not directly say it, but a bad outing may have sent Pastore back to the minors.

Pastore responded with eight strong innings and relievers Ben Hayes and Bill Scherrer got out of ninth-inning trouble. Pastore, 3-8, struck out six, walked two and allowed Danny Heep's pinch-homer in the eighth, his fifth home run of the season and third as a pinch hitter.

Dan Driessen's single broke a scoreless tie in the fourth inning and his three-run homer, his sixth of the season, made it 4-0 in the sixth against Mike Torrez, 5-10.

Astros 7, Expos 5

Phil Garner, Jose Cruz, Ray Knight and George Bjorkman singled in fifth-inning runs as Houston bunched six hits to overtake Montreal.

The Astros trailed 5-3 when Terry Puhl led off the fifth with a double, moved to third on Dickie Thon's single and scored on Garner's hit. A wild pitch advanced the runners and Cruz singled home Thon. Knight and Bjorkman followed with singles.

Padres 5, Cubs 3

San Diego managed to score all of its runs in the sixth inning as Sixto Lezcano's three-run homer keyed the uprising.

Chicago's Dickie Noles, 2-5, was sailing along with a two-hitter and a 3-0 lead when the Padres went to work in the sixth. Lezcano's sixth homer followed an RBI single by Terry Kennedy and was later followed by Juan Bonilla's run-scoring single off reliever Mike Proly.

Eric Show, 9-5, pitched a five-hitter, struck out eight and walked none in his fourth complete game of the season.

Ron Cey's 11th homer gave the Cubs a 1-0 lead in the second.

Dodgers 3, Cardinals 1

Dusty Baker, unaccustomed to prolonged slumps, seems to be working his way out of his first-half doldrums.

Baker singled in the tying run in the fourth inning and then crashed a two-run homer, his 11th, in the sixth inning to pace Los Angeles.

Baker was batting just .231 at the All-Star break, but has gone 9-for-17 with three homers and nine RBI in the five games since then. On Monday night, he had four hits, including two home runs, in the Dodgers' victory over St. Louis.

Bob Welch, 7-8, who pitched into the eighth inning, and Steve Howe finished up for his 10th save.

Pirates 6, Giants 2

Jason Thompson's two-run double keyed a three-run sixth inning that broke a 1-1 tie. He had a run-scoring groundout as Pittsburgh added two insurance runs in the ninth.

Lee Tunnell, 3-3, allowed five hits in 5 2-3 innings and Cecilio Guante went the rest of the way for his second save.

Bill Laskey, 10-8, left after Thompson's double.

1896 — Philadelphia's Ed Delahanty hit four home runs and a single, but Chicago won 9-8.

1934 — Babe Ruth hit his 700th home run to lead the New York Yankees to a 4-2 victory over the Detroit Tigers. Teammate Lou Gehrig left the game in the first inning with a case of lumbago, but returned the next day for one at bat to keep his record consecutive game playing streak intact.

1938 — Johnny Mize of the St. Louis Cardinals hit three home runs in a game for the first time in his career. His record of five three-homer games still stands.

1960 — Willie Mays, Eddie Matthews, Stan Musial and Ken Boyer homered to power the National League to a 6-0 victory over the American League at Yankee Stadium in the second All-Star Game of the season.

1963 — Early Wynn registered his 300th and last lifetime major league victory, pitching the five innings of Cleveland's 7-4 triumph over the Kansas City A's.

1965 — The National League took the lead over the American League for the first time since the All-Star series began, winning 6-5 at Metropolitan Stadium in Bloomington, Minn., for its 18th victory.

Elway receives attention from press at Bronco camp

GREELEY, Colo. (AP) — Million-dollar quarterback John Elway reported to the Denver Broncos' training camp with 87 other rookies and free agents — and myriad media.

"If it gets too bad, we'll just have to cut it back," Elway said of the press attention he received Tuesday, after he completed a series of offensive drills that included several 40-yard dashes.

"There was a time when I would have liked to have asked the cameras to stop clicking when I was dying after the 40s," he said. "I was covering my face."

Among the media following Elway was a team from the NBC-TV show "Monitor," which filmed Elway not only working out but also unloading his car and putting food on his dinner plate.

ELWAY BECAME the highest-paid player in the National Football League when he signed a contract that reportedly pays him $5 million for five years. The highly touted Stanford quarterback went to the Broncos in a trade that sent Denver's first-round draft pick, offensive lineman Chris Hinton, to Baltimore.

Elway weighed in at 206½ pounds Tuesday and was declared in good health by team doctors. He and the other rookies had on-field testing including timed 40-yard dashes, weight lifting, vertical and horizontal jumping.

Veteran players are slated to report the the camp at the University of Northern Colorado practice fields on Sunday.

Elway said he wants to play for him as much as anyone else: "I just don't want to find myself trying to live up to everybody's expectations.

"I have confidence in myself, but if I have a good game, I don't want people to think it was just an average game," he said.

Broncos Coach Dan Reeves and team owner Edgar Kaiser Jr. are hoping Elway's passing arm will change the fortunes of the Broncos, coming off a dismal 2-7 season.

Meanwhile, all the media attention was bringing Elway extra attention from the other rookies in camp.

"They keep saying, 'come over here and stand by me,'" Elway said.

Cable TV makes Chicago, Atlanta home in Midland

With cable TV bringing the Cubs and Braves to Midland, it's no longer a mystery why baseball's network ratings aren't all that impressive. Compared to the NFL ratings, those of baseball are rather puny.

WGN and TBS have established Chicago and Atlanta as "home" teams for Tall City fans, who find it takes special preparations to attend a baseball game at Arlington, 300 miles, or Houston, 500. It's just not something you up and do on the spur of the moment.

BASEBALL IS different than football in that virtually every major league team has its own radio and TV network, and the income it generates. The fan rapport with the local team is quickly established. In lieu of a local team, Midland has the Braves and Cubs.

If the majority of fans react the way I do, unless it's the Red Sox out of Fenway or maybe the Rangers, the network telecast can't compete, even if Vin Scully is doing the game...now Red Barber, that might be another story.

I'm going to watch the team I've been watching every day, the one I've been suffering with through the slumps and rejoicing with when things are going good.

Apparently, this reaction is so common in the major markets, that the networks are not above demanding "protection" or "relief" for such as the Monday night Game of the Week by prohibiting local telecasts in direct competition.

LAST YEAR was a most opportune time for the introduction of the Braves into the Midland market. The team broke from the barrier with that season-opening winning streak and quickly won an audience. By mid-summer, Midland was a hotbed of Braves baseball. Whenever the team played a long night game on the West Coast, the sports desk would be deluged the next morning with "How did it come out?" phone inquiries.

This year the Cubs were introduced to Midland and at the season's start, I didn't really expect the Cubs to be capable of competing with the Braves for viewing interest. They were nice to have available, but, the reaction was, "so what."

For one thing, Chicago was a non-contender and for another Harry Caray was doing the games. As a long time Cub fan, it was hard to view Harry as anything but the enemy. I remember years ago picking up St. Louis games on KMOX at night and developing a healthy loathing for Harry.

It seemed every time the Cards played the Cubs, Harry would make some outrageous prediction such as "Here it is the bottom of the ninth. We're behind 9-5, but I think we can pull it out." What really hurt was that more often than not the Cards would indeed rally to win.

So a season of Harry Caray sounded more like a treatment than a treat.

ODDLY ENOUGH, I find myself watching the Cubs as much as the Braves, maybe more, even when the games are in conflict. And, surprisingly, I don't hold any grudges from the past against Harry, who with Steve Stone, handle the games. Steve is informative. Harry suffers like a genuine fan to the point of being critical of the guys he was lauding the day before.

Part of the attraction is the handful of ex-Midland Cubs on the Chicago roster. Part of it is watching a game in Wrigley. And part of it is the fact that the Cubs are making a run at first, off and on. But even when the team was in the early season doldrums, I watched.

THE GAMES were usually close and exciting even when the Cubs were losing. It was easy to become irritated at some of the incompetents playing in deference to some of the kids developed in Midland.

Then, too, maybe it was a perverse enjoyment of watching the suffering on those cold, windy spring days.

I hadn't enjoyed anything so much since the good ol' days when Detroit and Green Bay played their annual Thanksgiving Day game in Briggs Stadium, when snow was as much a part of the day's tradition as the turkey.

Bannister pitches White Sox to 8-0 win over Indians

By The Associated Press

Floyd Bannister's words were almost as hard to follow as his pitches.

The left-hander had been a major disappointment since singing a lucrative free-agent contract with the Chicago White Sox last December. But Tuesday night he finally came around, pitching a five-hitter for his first shutout of the season, an 8-0 rout of the Cleveland Indians in Chicago.

When pressed for an explanation, Bannister said, "It's hard to describe, but it has to do with a timing sequence and working on gaining consistency with every pitch."

Bannister's translator was catcher Carlton Fisk, who hit two homers and drove in three runs.

"He was fantastic," Fisk said. "Not many balls were hit hard at all and he mixed his pitches real well."

Despite the shutout, in which he struck out eight and walked three in hurling his second complete game, Bannister's record is only 4-9 with a 4.36 earned run average.

"Management has been good and I have appreciated their support," he said. "I've gotten a lot of help from the front office and Tony (Manager LaRussa). I know I can help this club immensely. It's important for me to go out and pitch well. I just want to make my contribution to this club."

Bannister said he attributes his bad start "to not getting my breaking balls over and not mixing my pitches well." And concerning the criticism that has come his way, he said: "It has bothered me to a certain extent, but I've tried to use it to my advantage. All I want to do is go out every five days and keep us in the ballgame. I want to go out and pitch aggressively."

American League

Blue Jays 9, Royals 6

At Kansas City, Willie Upshaw rapped a tie-breaking two-run single in Toronto's three-run eighth inning as the Blue Jays, only unbeaten team in the majors since the All-Star break, posted their fifth straight victory. Cliff Johnson drew a leadoff walk in the eighth off Steve Renko and KC relief ace Dan Quisenberry saw Jorge Orta beat out a chopper in front of the plate and Lloyd Moseby beat out a bunt to load the bases. Upshaw then rapped a grounder into right field for an 8-6 lead and Alfredo Griffin added an RBI grounder.

The Blue Jays built a 6-0 lead on home runs by Barry Bonnell in the first inning and George Bell, Buck Martinez and Dave Collins in the fourth. Willie Aikens hit a solo homer and George Brett a three-run shot as the Royals caught up.

Brewers 9, Rangers 2

At Arlington, Cecil Cooper drove in three runs, Ed Romero had four hits and Chuck Porter scattered seven hits for his first major league victory. Cooper capped a three-run fifth inning with a two-run double as Milwaukee pounded out 18 hits. With the score tied 1-1, Jim Gantner started the Brewers' fifth with a ground-rule double off loser Frank Tanana. He went to third when Paul Molitor was safe on an error by first baseman Pete O'Brien and scored on a single by Romero. Cooper's double made it 4-1 and the Brewers went on to win for the 11th time in 15 games.

Tigers 5, Angels 4

At Detroit, Wayne Krenchicki, a .125 hitter, doubled off Mike Witt with two out in the bottom of the 14th inning, scoring Chet Lemon from first base and breaking a tie that existed since the eighth inning when pinch hitter John Grubb's single scored Lemon from second. Fred Lynn's three-run homer in the sixth gave California a 4-2 lead but Detroit made it 4-3 in the sixth on Lou Whitaker's RBI single.

Orioles 3, A's 1

At Baltimore, Allan Ramirez, making his first appearance since being recalled from the minors, blanked Oakland on four hits over eight innings and Eddie Murray hit a two-run homer. Ramirez outdueled Gorman Heimueller, who allowed four hits and one run until the eighth inning of his major league debut when Cal Ripken Jr. walked and Murray hit his 15th home run.

Ramirez lost his shutout bid when Rickey Henderson homered to start the ninth. Rick Peters singled and Tim Stoddard relieved Ramirez. Bill Almon doubled Peters to third on Stoddard's first pitch, but Davey Lopes struck out, Carney Lansford grounded out and Dwayne Murphy flied out.

Yankees 4, Twins 3

At Minneapolis, Dave Winfield's second RBI single and Jerry Mumphrey's two-run, two-out single accounted for three runs in New York's eighth-inning rally. Mat Keough of the Yankees flirted wit a no-hitter for six innings before th Twins scored three unearned run in the seventh.

A walk and Graig Nettles' infield hit started the Yankees' comeback against Frank Viola. Dave Winfield greeted Rick Lysander with an RBI single. Two outs later, Ron Davis walked pinch hitter Steve Kemp to load the bases and Mumphrey rapped a 3-2 pitch through the middle for the tying and winning runs.

Mariners 3, Red Sox 2

At Boston, Bryan Clark, primarily a long reliever, scattered seven hits in 7 1-3 innings and rookie Spike Owen scored once and drove in the winning run. Bill Caudill finished up to earn his 16th save. Trailing 2-1, Seattle went ahead with two runs in the fifth against Mike Brown. With one out, Jamie Allen singled and went to third on Orlando Mercado's double. John Moses' single scored Allen to it and Mercado scored the go-ahead run as Owen grounded out.

Dickerson ends speculation, signs with Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES (AP) — For a while it seemed the Los Angeles Express was intent on snatching All-American running back Eric Dickerson from the Los Angeles Rams and put another big name on a United States Football League roster.

Express co-owner Bill Daniels flew Dickerson, the Ram's top pick in the National Football League draft, into town on Monday amid speculation that the USFL hoped to repeat the success it had in convincing 1982 Heisman Trophy winner Herschel Walker to sign with New Jersey.

The flight, however, simply saved the Rams the cost of bringing Dickerson out themselves.

"That's part of our new fiscal management," said Rams Coach John Robinson after the NFL club signed Dickerson to a four-year contract late Tuesday.

Terms of the pact were not revealed, but the Rams' last offer reportedly was a $2.1 million, four-year package with a signing bonus.

"I have always felt Eric Dickerson was a Ram since the day we drafted him," said Rams owner Georgia Frontiere, in a statement from London. "I have the utmost confidence in our negotiating team. I have been in daily communication with our people and today (Tuesday) I spoke with both Eric and his agent (attorney Jack Mills). He is a fine young man and an outstanding football player who should be valuable part of our team."

EXPRESS CO—OWNER Alan Harmon took the news in a positive light.

"The fact that he gave us serious consideration is a compliment to the Express and the USFL and I think it's indicative of the progress we've made in less than a year."

Harmon said, however, that despite giving it "our best shot" it became "quite apparent that Eric's intentions were to sign with the Rams."

"He's a great player, an intelligent player," said Robinson, who would have had a huge hole in his backfield had the Rams been unable to come to terms with Dickerson.

The Rams traded Wendell Tyler to the San Francisco 49ers to make room for Dickerson and gave the Houston Oilers two fourth-round draft picks to move from third to second position in the first round of the draft.

Simon still wearing Tour de France yellow

FLEURANCE, France (AP) — Frenchman Pascal Simon, fractured shoulder blade and all, went into the 12th leg of the Tour de France cycling race still wearing the yellow jersey and leading the event.

Simon fell at the 28-mile point of Wednesday's leg and had to seek medical treatment several times before his 61st-place finish, which was two minutes, six seconds behind compatriot Regis Clere.

Clere took the 11th leg, a 110-mile dash through southwestern France from Bagneres-de-Luchon to Fleurance. Currently in 53rd place in the standings, he finished Tuesday in four hours, 27 minutes, six seconds — three seconds faster than fellow Frenchman Christian Jourdan and five seconds ahead of Dutchman Frits Priard.

French riders held the top three spots in the overall standings after two riders pulled out, reducing the original field of 140 to 113. Simon remained in first place with a time of 53.03:15. Laurent Fignon was in second place, 4:22 behind Simon, while Jean-Rene Bernaudeau held third place, 5:34 back.

Shortly after Tuesday's leg ended, race organizers said Dutch star Joop Zoetemelk and French rider Jean-Francois Rodriquez had failed drug tests but would be allowed to continue in the tour.

Zoetemelk, the 1980 Tour de France champion, was given a drug test after the second leg that concluded July 3 in Fontaine-au-Pire, race officials said. They said Rodriquez was tested for drugs after the end of the third leg in Roubaix.

Traces of the hormone known as nandrolone were found, officials reported.

The officials said both riders requested a second analysis, which confirmed the first tests. They each were fined $470 and given 10 minutes of penalty time in the tour's overall standings. In addition, both riders were declassified to last place in the leg that immediately preceded their drug tests.

With his 10-minute penalty, Zoetemelk was in 28th place, 19:46 behind Simon. Rodriquez, with his penalty, was in 68th place, 46:52 behind.

Today's course leg is a 158-mile course between Fleurance and Roquefort-sur-Soulzon. The tour ends in Paris on July 24 after a 2,300-mile journey around France.

Cougars, Wildcats televised on Jan. 22

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — NCAA Tournament finalist Houston will visit Kentucky Jan. 22 for a nationally televised basketball game that CBS-TV said would precede the network's coverage of pro football's Super Bowl, UK sports information director Russell Rice said Tuesday.

Houston, which lost the NCAA title game to North Carolina State, and Kentucky, a finalist in the NCAA Mideast Regional, will play in 23,000-seat Rupp Arena during a break in Kentucky's Southeastern Conference schedule.

Rice said that Kentucky will open its season Nov. 22 with an exhibition game against the Soviet national team, with the regular season starting four days later against Louisville.

The Wildcats will host Indiana Dec. 3 and will visit Kansas Dec. 10 before the UK Invitational Tournament Dec. 16-17. Kentucky will meet Wyoming and Brigham Young will play Virginia Commonwealth in first-round games.

Soviet [illegible]mates fly home with [illegible]iver Shlibashvili

EDMONTON, [illegible] critically ill Soviet diver Sergei Shlibashvili remained [illegible] while his teammates flew home Tuesday after dominating the XII World University Games.

Despite 59 gold medals and 115 total medals to only 12 golds and 54 total for the United States, the poorest American showing ever in this meet, the Soviets left Edmonton with heavy hearts, aware of Shlibashvili's condition.

Games officials had all but given up hope for the Soviet diver, who remained unconscious for a fourth day. Shlibashvili suffered multiple head injuries when he struck the back of his head on the wooden platform Saturday in the 10-meter platform compulsories.

"Nothing can be done for the boy, he's dying," said Dr. Primo Nebiolo, president of the governing International Federation of University Sports.

A spokesman for the University of Alberta Hospital Tuesday listed the diver in critical, but stable condition.

Don Carlson, the Canadian government liason officer for the University Games, said the athlete's widowed mother was flying to Edmonton Tuesday to be at her son's beside. Two Soviet officals, one physican and one interpreter, had their visas extended to remain with Shlibashvili.

MEANWHILE, U.S. Olympic committee officials grimaced over the Americans' lowest gold medal output since entering this competition for the first time since 1965.

The United States won 14 golds at its first attempt 18 years ago.

"It shows what we have to do. The world is going ahead fast," said Bob Paul of the USOC, one of the American officials for the 10-day meet here that concluded Monday night.

Diver Greg Louganis, the reigning world champion and women's sprinter Randy Givens were the lone double gold medal winners for the United States. American swimmer Bruce Hayes was the most decorated individual in any of the 10 sports here, but he won only one gold.

"We were disapppointed with diving since we had four world gold medalists here. They were just not sharp here," Paul said. Louganis' two titles were the only diving championships for the touted Americans.

However, the USOC official was happpy with the performance of the American sprinters. Givens won the women's 200 meters and took second in the 100. The U.S. men and women captured both 400 relay championships.

"We showed the world how to run relays," Paul said.

Women's basketball with a championship victory over Romania, was another bright chapter for the Americans.

"There is no question are girls gave Romania a lesson in the second half," he said of the last 20 minutes of the title game in which the Americans outscored the Europeans 47-19 en route to an 83-61 triumph.

The U.S men's basketball team, a heavy favorite, settled for a bronze medal after losing to Canada in the semifinals.

"Three of our guys likely will make our Olympic team. The team was disappointing. The Canadians whipped us badly," Paul said.

Fun Run scheduled for Saturday morning

The 10 kilometer and two-mile Fun Run for the benefit of Big Brothers Big Sisters will begin at 7 a.m. Saturday from the Midlander Health Club and Racquet Club, 225 Corporate Drive.

Three first aid stations are planned for the route of the run, which will get a police escort start from the Midlander and follow an A Street, Neely Street course, looping back to the Midlander.

San Antonio to hire coach in 30 days

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — San Antonio's new United States Football League team — announced at a news conference attended by four state senators, Texas' attorney general and the league's commissioner — should have a coach within 30 days, investors say.

That's not all that's left to be done before the USFL's fifth expansion team, secured with $6 million from South Texas rancher Clinton Manges, begins play in 1984.

Among other things, the investment group still must modify Alamo Stadium, come up with a name for the team, come up with a team and hire a staff.

USFL Commissioner Chet Simmons flew into town to make the official announcement Monday night to a cheering crowd of about 1,200 that included a marching band, some authentic mariachi players and most of the city's leaders.

Manges and his investment group, South Texas Sports Inc., had prematurely announced the awarding of the franchise almost three months ago.

Simmons said the official word was slowed by "the paperwork and all the financial stuff that has to be done."

"We have to do checks on the people putting up the money and get a two-thirds vote from the rest of the league," he said. "That all takes time."

South Texas Sports will conduct a contest to name the football team.

Many of the club's players are expected to be culled from the San Antonio Bulls, a member of the minor-league American Football Association.

The success of San Antonio's other pro team, the Spurs of the National Basketball Association, made the city an attractive spot for a USFL franchise, Simmons said.

"We looked at what was done here with the Spurs," he said. "We were told, 'Don't turn your back on what you might consider the smaller cities.'

"The San Diego, San Antonio, Jacksonville and (Tulsa) Oklahoma franchises will end up being very significant franchises because we own the market," he said.

The USFL will add one more team by Aug. 1, with Seattle, Memphis and New Orleans the most likely, Simmons said.

South Texas Sports has leased Alamo Stadium from the San Antonio Independent School District and agreed to make more than $2 million in improvements — including increasing the seating capacity from 23,700 to 32,029, installing artificial turf, and putting in a new scoreboard and lighting system.

The group also will pick up the tab for parking improvements, including the purchase of land for additional parking.

Former Texas A&I football coach Gil Steinke was named executive vice president of the San Antonio team, and could be head coach, Manges said.

Hot weather hinders Dallas' first day of full-scale practice

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Temperatures more typical of Texas than California confronted the Dallas Cowboys Tuesday during their first day of full-scale practice.

The heat took its toll, forcing first-round draft pick Jim Jeffcoat and 10th-round pick Dan Taylor to sit out the afternoon drills after suffering dehydration from the morning exercises.

Meanwhile, second year fullback George Peoples left the afternoon drill with a "tight hamstring," according to a Cowboy spokeswoman.

Tight credit pinches White House

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Opposition continued to mount Tuesday to any tightening of credit conditions by the Federal Reserve as its policy-making group, the Federal Open Market Committee, began a two-day session to consider just that.

When reports were published last week quoting Federal Reserves officials saying that the FOMC would decide at this meeting to tighten its monetary policy, the White House announced its opposition, particularly to any increase in the Fed's 8 1-2 percent discount rate — the interest that the central bank charges on loans to financial institutions.

In those reports, the Fed sources indicated that a discount rate increase likely would be one of the steps taken soon, if not initially.

Deputy White House Press Secretary Larry Speakes reiterated that opposition Tuesday, declaring, "We do not want any interest rate increase." Asked whether his comments could be taken as an instruction to the Fed, Speakes said, "No, that is a viewpoint. The Fed is independent, and we respect its independence." After a Republican congressional leadership meeting at the White House, Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., said Congress also strongly opposes higher rates and will make that clear to Federal Reserve Board Chairman Paul A. Volcker at his confirmation hearing Thursday.

"We do not want to see the interest rates go back up," Percy told reporters. "Economic recovery that is underway now must be sustained and carried forward."

A number of financial analysts predicted Tuesday that this strong opposition from the White House and elsewhere could preclude any increase in the discount rate for some time. Nevertheless, the analysts noted that the Fed can tighten credit conditions without moving the discount rate, so that market interest rates rise and help slow the recent rapid growth of the money supply.

At the meeting, which concludes Wednesday, the FOMC will reaffirm or change money growth targets for this year and set tentative targets for 1984.

Chippers don't complain

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

An industry trade group for U.S. semiconductor manufacturers, which was on the verge of filing a formal trade complaint against Japan, announced Tuesday that it has postponed any action because of progress in talks between Japan and the United States.

The Semiconductor Industry Association, based in San Jose, Calif., canceled a special meeting for Wednesday at which the association's board was to have voted on asking the U.S. government to move against Japanese chip makers for alleged unfair trade practices.

The prospective complaint, which argues that Japan protects and subsidizes its semiconductor industry, would ask President Reagan, under a little-used section of the 1974 Trade Act, to force Japan to expand its market for U.S. semiconductor products.

"Our primary concern continues to be the (United States') stagnant or decaying market share in Japan," said Warren Davis, the association's vice president for government affairs.

"Our petition is ready and waiting, but we are willing to wait as long as the Japanese show signs of genuine commitment to concrete measures which would facilitate increased sales of American semiconductors in their market."

The decision to postpone the special board meeting, association officials said, was based on favorable results from three days of meetings last week between U.S. and Japanese government officials in Washington, D.C., who had established a high-technology working group earlier this year.

Rock picking up pieces

By The Los Angeles Times Washington Post News Service

In a surprise consolidation move that it said will save $50 million a year, directors of Prudential Insurance Co. of America approved plans Tuesday to lay off 1,700 employees nationwide.

Of these, 950 will be dropped at the company's western regional office in the Los Angeles area, where workers learned the layoff news at a meeting Tuesday morning. "Even the guy reading the announcement had bulging eyes," one employee said. "It was a complete surprise."

The job loss in California will occur over 18 months as Prudential consolidates insurance administration in Minneapolis, slimming the western office to a purely marketing operation, the company announcement said. The office will add some sales territory from the Houston office, which along with regional offices in Boston, Chicago, Merrillville, Ind., and South Plainfield and Woodbridge, N.J., "will be reduced substantially," the announcement said.

Regional headquarters will be consolidated in the Los Angeles area, Philadelphia, Jacksonville and Minneapolis, and corporate headquarters will remain in Newark.

Moneywatchers foresee revival

PARIS (AP) — Western economists said today the industrialized West finally is reviving from a protracted recession but warned that without more private investment in factories and equipment the recovery will collapse after 1984.

The prediction was part of a semi-annual outlook on prospects for Western economies over the next 18 months by the 24-nation Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development.

If the latest outlook proves accurate, it would benefit President Reagan, who faces elections in 1984. There are others in the West, notably former West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, however, who believe the current recovery could collapse before the U.S. presidential elections.

At a news conference, Sylvia Ostry, head of the organization's Economics and Statistics Department, said there were doubts about how strong the recovery would be and whether it would last.

Though the upturn in economic activity in the United States is visible, Mrs. Ostry said the same is not true elsewhere.

Britons saying America wrong

LONDON (AP) — British Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe flew to Washington today in a bid to roll back U.S. trade restrictions on European steel and other products.

A British official quoted by the Times of London promised there would be "no public tub thumping" from Howe but added, "When we think the Americans are wrong we are not afraid of telling them."

One of Howe's expected targets was the order issued by President Reagan last week imposing tariffs and import quotas on specialized steel.

Reagan acted to cushion American suppliers from foreign competition. British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, normally a strong supporter of Reagan, denounced the order.

The state-owned British Steel Corp. has been hard hit by falling demand caused by world recession. On Tuesday, its chairman, Ian MacGregor, said in his annual report that it lost $591 million during the fiscal year ending March 31.

British commentators have warned that Reagan's steel order and other U.S. trade restrictions could spark a trans-Atlantic trade war.

Card dealer scores

NEW YORK — In a transaction valued at more than $1 billion, American Express Co. once again displayed its voracious appetite for acquisitions in the financial services field by agreeing Tuesday to purchase most of the assets of Alleghany Corp., whose chief subsidiary is a large insurance and mutual fund organization.

With the acquisition, to be paid for by issuing 15.25 million of its own shares, American Express will take control of New York-based Alleghany's Investors Diversified Services unit, which has a sales force of 4,100 who have proven particularly adept at selling investment products door-to-door to upper middle-income people.

The move represents an effort by American Express to pierce the market of 35 million households who make between $30,000 and $65,000 a year.

American Express' major brokerage unit, Shearson-American Express, traditionally has aimed for individuals making a minimum of $50,000 — a market of 5 million households.

"We see IDS as a unique franchise to what we call the 'mass-class' market for financial services," American Express President Sanford I. Weill said.

Whether Minneapolis-based IDS has a unique niche is a matter of dispute, but competitors and outside observers generally consider American Express' strategy a good one. George Ball, chief executive of Prudential-Bache Securities, called it an "intelligent move" that would increase American Express' "representation in the middle-income market."

IDS manages pools of money for institutional investors in addition to 14 public mutual funds. At the end of last year, it owned and managed assets worth $15.3 billion.

Basketweavers hit by explosion

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Liberal arts majors are in a position to take advantage of an explosion in computer careers, but many engineering graduates are being passed over by America's slumping basic industries, a survey of recent graduates shows.

"The students who have suffered the most are chemical and civil engineers and mechanical engineers to some degree," said Dennis Ryan, director of placement services and counseling at Carnegie-Mellon University. "Those who seem to have a good, lively job market are electrical engineers and computer science people. It's been very characteristic of certain industries.

"The decline in engineering offers is pretty widespread nationwide. It has focused principally on the basic industries: chemicals, petroleum, automotive and metals. That's been counterbalanced by a pretty strong job market in the high technology fields, especially aerospace and computers," he said Tuesday.

A survey of May Carnegie-Mellon graduates with bachelor's degrees showed job offers rose 20 percent over 1982 for liberal arts majors and plunged 40 percent for engineering majors, Ryan said. The school had more than 300 graduates.

The turnaround has meant the most for students from computer-oriented colleges such as Carnegie-Mellon, where computer science and statistics are required courses for liberal arts majors, he said.

Mattel appoints four new chiefs

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

HAWTHORNE, Calif. — Mattel Inc. named four new top managers Tuesday to its electronics division, which reported a quarterly loss last May, and this month dismissed 206 persons as a result of sagging sales and price cuts in the markets for home computers and video games.

The toys and games company said Joshua W. Denham, electronics division president, will be replaced by William Mack Morris, formerly president of Mattel's diversified companies division. Denham, who had been with the electronics unit since its development began in 1976, will remain as a consultant.

In other appointments, James W. Buddle, vice president of corporate development for Mattel Inc., will become the unit's senior vice president, finance and planning; Terrence E. Valeski will become senior vice president, marketing and sales, and Jeffrey A. Rochlis, president of Mattel Technology Enterprises, will continue in that post as the unit is incorporated into the electronics unit.

Mattel's video game and home-computer products have suffered in their competition with Coleco Industries Inc., Atari Inc. and Texas Instruments Corp., and some analysts have speculated that Mattel may choose to bow out of the market altogether.

But a spokesman for the company denied that such a plan was under consideration. "We are aware of these comments and we are continuing in the same direction," spokesman Spencer Boise said. "We're committed to the market."

Reverend turns wood into works of art

MARSHALL (AP) — It's not art for art's sake, but art for God's sake.

With a block of wood, a simple pocketknife and a "God-given gift," the Rev. Philip Andrews carves himself a niche in this East Texas town.

Philips, 63 years old but still with the hands of someone half that age, is a wood-carver extraordinaire.

"I've been doing this craft practically all my life," said Andrews. "I started when I was 6, and I made most of the toys we had when we were growing up.

"I take nothing — just some wood — and I make something. I'd say it's a God-given talent."

Andrews turns clothespins into miniature rocking chairs and popsicle sticks into tiny pocketbooks.

And now he's working on what he says is the whittler's greatest challenge — carving a continuous link chain from a single block of wood no more than an inch and one-quarter across.

"This is the last art in carving — making a chain. When you can do that, you can say you've mastered it," he said.

Andrews retired as a pastor a year ago, although he still preaches on occasion. He now spends much of his time in nearby Longview at the Good Shepard Medical Center, where his wife receives kidney dialysis treatment.

"I bring along my work to pass some of the time at the hospital," he said. "I always have several projects going, including the chain.

"But you can't work continuously on a chain because you'll crack up."

Andrews says he carves functional things — a mahogony bed, a white pine magazine rack or a door for his house — for himself. Some of his pieces he donates to schools, or sells.

Some are "for God because he gave me this talent," he said. Andrews is making a pulpit for one local church.

And some are for art — like the chain.

"I don't sell chains," Andrews said. "I made one small one earlier and gave it to my brother. You never let a chain go."

The second chain is the ultimate one, he said. When completed, it will have 42 links the same size as links in eel chain used to bind logs. Sixteen are completed.

"I started it early this year, but I often have to put it down for awhile," he said.

"You know, it takes a sharp eye and a steady hand to make a chain. You can't make even a little mistake, because then it would be ruined."

He has a set of carving tools, but prefers the steel blade of a pocketknife he found in his attic. "You just can't beat these old pocketknives," he said.

He cowers from no project. "I say that anything that can be made out of wood, I believe I can make it."

And he never draws plans for his projects — even the small statues of dignitaries that have been displayed here at an art exhibit.

"I just rely on my God-given talent, and some creative thinking. I don't put nothing on paper. I have it in mind and then I just do it, and it comes out as I imagined."

He also imagines that he'll never quit carving.

"I guess I can't quit preaching, and I can't quit the wood either," he said. "I'll continue to work with the wood until these hands get too old."

Cataracts to become problem

Cataracts are expected to become even more prevalent with the general increase in life expectancy. In the developing countries the estimated total of 13 million people who are blind due to cataracts may swell to 30 million by the year 2000 unless efficient, full-scale treatment programs reach all rural areas.

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Patients taking diuretics don't need potassium supplement

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have been taking a water pill along with potassium for high blood pressure. I moved recently and the new doctor I went to stopped the potassium. I don't like to take anything I don't need, but I do want to take what I do need. My question is: Do you think I need the potassium? — Wallace, Terre Haute, Ind.

Dear Wallace: Whether or not you require a potassium supplement will have to be decided by your physician. I can tell you in general, however, that potassium supplementation is not needed in every case where a hypertensive patient is taking a diuretic. In fact, Dr. Leonard B. Berman, a Caliornia physician, says that practically no such patient requires additional potassium since the normal potassium level will generally be maintained.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I know all too well the importance of diet for a person with diabetes, but how important is the schedule of meals? On weekends, in particular, I'm rather haphazard about when I eat or how often I eat, even though I watch what I eat. Is there anything wrong with following an unstructured schedule like this? — Jimmy, Moline, Ill.

Dear Jimmy: A diabetic who is insulin dependent should have meals on schedule in order to enhance control of blood glucose levels. How often such a person eats and when that person eats should be related to his or her activity level and general lifestyle, as well as the insulin schedule.

A diabetic who is noninsulin dependent does not have to be as concerned about the frequency and timing of meals. However, the amount and kinds of food eaten are of course very important.

Dear Dr. Solomon: What is your opinion of sports for teen-agers who have a heart condition? Can you give me any general guidelines that would be suitable for a parent to follow? I realize that this would not take the place of medical supervision by a doctor, but would give me some idea of what might be done and what should be prohibited? — Mr. T.Y., San Francisco, Calif.

Dear Mr. Y.: A distinction should first be made between competitive sports and exercise. Dr. Michael Freed, of Harvard Medical School in Boston, points out that competitive sports generally should be avoided by adolescents with such conditions as congestive heart failure. Even hypertension may be sufficient reason to restrict such competition.

However, an exercise program may provide the teen-ager with a heart condition with both physical and psychological benefits. Walking is an excellent exercise for almost everyone, and many patients are able to progess to jogging. As you suggest in your letter, medical supervision is important during participation in any such program.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I had a bad case of acne when I was in my teens, and I still have some of the scars on my face. I've heard that there are certain injections than can be used to eliminate such scars, and I would appreciate any information about them. — Mr. T.Y., Lincoln, Neb.

Dear Mr. Y.: You appear to be referring to collagen implants, which are being use to correct conditions such as acne and surgical scars, among others. The injections have been found to be effective in most cases, but the treatment is not permanent and patients may have to return for additional treatments at six-month or one-year intervals.

Dr. Neil A. Swanson of the University of Michigan Medical School in Ann Arbor reports that only a small percentage of patients who have had the treatments experienced side effects. Many of these were of a minor nature and usually resolved without treatment. In brief, collagen implants appear to be safe and effective, but generally of a temporary nature.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My father has been told that he has Parkinson's disease. Can you tell me in general what the chances are for a cure? — Murray, Salem, Mass.

Dear Murray: Parkinson's disease can often be greatly improved through the use of drugs, but that does not mean that the underlying disease has been cured. The main symptoms of Parkinson's disease are slowness of movement, tremor (an involuntary quivering), rigidity and poor balance. Some patients may have only one or two of these symptoms. Drug therapy can alleviate these symptoms without curing the disease.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I know what hypertension is, but what is meant by renal hypertension? — Mrs. T.Y. New York City

Dear Mrs. Y.: Renal hypertension is high blood pressure which may be due to a narrowing of the renal artery or arteries. Such narrowing in a blood vessel is called a stenosis.

Dear Dr. Solomon: At what age would you say that a pregnant woman should be definitely have a test to see if she has a Down's syndrome baby? If a woman does have such a test, can the test itself cause the woman to lose the baby? — Mrs. J.A., Miami Beach, Fla.

Dear Mrs. A.: Many obstetricians set age 35 as the point at which amniocentesis for chromosomal analysis should be done. However, this does not means that it should never be performed in younger women. Since women under age 35 have many more pregnancies than do women above that age, there are more babies with Down's syndrome born to the younger women.

The risk of fetal loss associated with amniocentesis is estimated at one-half of one percent.

Ham will be on board shuttle mission

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — A crewmember of the ninth space shuttle mission will talk to "ham" radio operators as he circles the globe next fall, space agency officials say.

But the conversations with Owen Garriott, a scientist on the mission, will be made brief by the speed of the orbiter.

The space shuttle orbits the entire Earth once about every 80 minutes, which means a ham radio operator will only be in contact with Garriott for a few minutes at a time.

The astronaut will be transmitting only about an hour a day, during selected times.

Astronauts on the Spacelab flight will work shifts of 12 hours on and 12 off, and Garriott will use his ham radio unit only during his leisure time.

"I look forward with great enthusiasm to brief conversations with as many of my fellow hams around the world as our work schedule will permit," he said.

Garriott, a ham operator since his youth, will use a five-watt hand-held transmitter. That will be strong enough to reach receivers within a line-of-sight of the shuttle, officials said.

Transmissions will be in the range of 145.51 to 145.770 megahertz FM, and reception in the range of 144.910 to 145.470 megahertz FM. Garriott's call sign is W5LFL.

The ninth mission will be the first for the Spacelab, an international scientific research facility. The Spacelab is housed in a module that is carried in the cargo bay of the space shuttle Columbia.

Garriott will operate his ham radio unit from the flight deck of the shuttle using the standard astronaut headset. The transceiver, operated by battery, will be connected to a special printed-circuit antenna placed in a window of the crew compartment.

Ham radio operator organizations have long hoped for a amateur transceiver aboard a manned, orbiting U.S. spacecraft.

There was an effort to put a transceiver aboard the Skylab craft in the 1970s.

NBC hits home run with All-Stars

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Home runs struck out reruns as NBC's broadcast of the baseball All-Star game topped the competition in the latest television ratings, easily outdistancing ABC's "Hart to Hart."

An estimated 17.9 million households tuned in baseball's midsummer classic, 2.2 million more than watched "Hart to Hart," which ran second for the week ending July 11.

The All-Star game and four other Top 10 shows pushed NBC to the top of the ratings compiled by the A.C. Nielsen Co. for the week, although the network also had the three lowest-rated shows.

The American League savored its own victory July 6, beating the National League 13-3 to win its first All-Star game since 1971.

Ratings for the first full week of summer reruns showed NBC with an overall rating of 12.7. CBS had a 12.0 rating and ABC trailed at 11.4. The networks say this means that during an average prime-time minute, 12.7 percent of the nation's television sets were tuned to NBC. Each ratings point represents 833,000 homes.

NBC scored third with "The A-Team," a midseason replacement about a group of freelance mercenaries, and fifth with the detective show "Remington Steele."

Rounding out the top five was CBS's "The Jeffersons," which was rated fourth.

Other NBC programs in the Top 10 were No. 9 "Hill Street Blues" and the Sunday night broadcast of the first part of the movie "Alcatraz," which tied for sixth place with CBS's "Simon and Simon."

NBC's "Major League All-Star Preview" was ranked 18th.

Besides "Hart to Hart," ABC's only other program in the Top 10 was the news magazine show "20-20," in eighth place. CBS's "Magnum, P.I.," held the No. 10 position.

The lowest-rated show was NBC's news magazine show "Monitor," down from the third-worst spot the previous week. Other shows at the bottom, in descending order, were ABC's "Monday Night Baseball Preview," ABC's "Ripley's Believe It or Not," NBC's "NBC Reports — Central America" and NBC's "Voyagers!"

Here are the week's Top 20 programs:

1. "Major League All-Star Game," NBC, a rating of 21.5 or 17.9 million households.
2. "Hart to Hart," ABC, 18.9 or 15.7 million.
3. "The A-Team," NBC, 18.0 or 15 million.
4. "The Jeffersons," CBS, 16.5 or 13.7 million.
5. "Remington Steele," NBC, 16.4 or 13.6 million.
6. Tie: "Simon & Simon," CBS, and "Alcatraz, Part 1," NBC movie, both 16.2 or 13.5 million.
8. "20-20," ABC, 16.0 or 13.3 million.
9. "Hill Street Blues," NBC, 15.9 or 13.2 million.
10. "Magnum, P.I.," CBS, 15.6 or 13 million.
11. "Trapper John, M.D.," CBS, 15.5 or 12.9 million.
12. "Reunion," CBS movie, 15.2 or 12.7 million.
13. "60 Minutes," CBS, 15.0 or 12.5 million.
14. "Knight Rider," NBC, 14.8 or 12.3 million.
15. "Three's Company," ABC, 14.5 or 12.1 million.
16. "One Day at a Time," CBS, 14.0 or 11.7 million.
17. "9 to 5," ABC, 13.9 or 11.6 million.
18. "Major League All-Star Preview," NBC, 13.5 or 11.2 million.
19. "Falcon Crest," CBS, 13.4 or 11.1 million.
20. "The Love Boat," ABC, 13.0 or 10.8 million.

John Ethan Wayne finds it tough following in father's footsteps

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Film actor John Ethan Wayne says he's finding it tough to be the son of a legend.

Wayne

The 21-year-old son of the late film star John Wayne says he "was kinda mad" at first when he learned his screen credit for the film "Escape From El Diablo" would identify him by his full name.

"It sounds as if I'm trying to cash in," he said. "I wanted to be known as Ethan Wayne, but they tell me John Ethan Wayne is better.

"What it means, I guess, is that I'll have to work doubly hard to prove myself."

"Escape From El Diablo" — in which Wayne plays an American who gets involved with a group of American youths seeking excitement in Mexico, will mark the young Wayne's first starring role when it opens in August. He previously worked on "The Blues Brothers" and had a small role in a horror film named "The Butcher, Baker and Candlestick Maker."

He and older brothers Patrick and Michael say they may tour with Neil Simon's play, "Come Blow Your Horn."

"Patrick and I would be in the play and Michael would produce. We're looking for a director now," he said.

CARSON CITY, Nev. (AP) — Las Vegas pop star Wayne Newton, who is being bandied about as a possible Republican gubernatorial contender in Nevada, says he's not tough enough for politics.

Newton, 41, interviewed Tuesday on the "CBS Morning News," said, "I don't think I'm tough enough to be a politician. I'm a little too thin-skinned...I don't like the bureaucracy of it all."

Newton said he was approached last week by Republican officials about running as a GOP gubernatorial candidate in 1986 "but it's not something I'm interested in."

Democrat Dick Bryan is now serving his first term as governor, after defeating Republican incumbent Bob List, a friend of Newton's, last year.

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Gov. Bill Clinton took a six-hour break from affairs of state to gut chickens and turkeys at a Campbells Soup Co. factory — and his constituents loved it.

Clinton, a 36-year-old Democrat, reported for work at the factory Monday along with the rest of the eviscerating shift. He removed the entrails from several turkeys, weighed chicken livers, carved chicken breasts and packaged Campbells Soup's "Plump and Juicy" product line.

"I think it was an enlightening experience for him," said Richard Bailey, plant manager. He said both the governor and plant employees responded enthusiastically to the visit.

Clinton said later the visit to the plant was part of a new program in which he plans to spend time working with factory employees at least once each month.

Asked what the workers thought of his visit, Clinton said the reaction was "overwhelmingly positive, especially after the people see I'm really there to get a feel for their jobs and to talk to them."

Rostow

NEW YORK (AP) — Eugene V. Rostow, a legal light to two presidents and a distinguished professor at Yale Law School, will be heading to the Big Apple to become dean of New York Law School.

Rostow, the 69-year-old Sterling Professor of Law at Yale, will take up his New York duties on Jan. 1, the school announced Tuesday.

Rostow was formerly director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency under President Reagan and served as undersecretary of state for political affairs under President Johnson.

In a statement issued by the school, Rostow said he is dedicated to the proposition "that the most theoretical, intellectually demanding and philosophical kind of training for lawyers is also the most practical."

Rostow has been on the faculty at Yale Law School since 1938 and was dean there from 1955 to 1965. He has written several books including "Is Law Dead?" and "The Ideal In Law."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Mort Sahl's acid political wit and anti-establishment barbs made him a favorite on college campuses in the 1960s. He's still as razor-edged as ever as he jokes these days about the new "flabby" liberalism.

"Their big crusade was to make Martin Luther King's (the slain civil rights leader) birthday a holiday," says Sahl. "Now there's a big crusade. Then all the blacks who have no jobs anyway can get the day off."

The 56-year-old comic is celebrating his 30th year in show business this month at the Westwood Playhouse. He's also working on a new TV show.

Sahl's attacks on liberals doesn't mean he's soft on conservatives. He can slam both at once, as he does when discussing the Moral Majority's role in the last presidential election.

"If the liberals had got up and said, 'Where do you come off talking about morality? We have our own morality,' the Republicans would have retreated to their original position, which was greed."

He does give President Reagan credit for his sense of humor. He said he once told Reagan to his face, "'If you ran unopposed, you'd be defeated.' He liked it. Those guys around him are always worried the king is going to be angry, but he's secure in that area."

Candidates should utilize humor in the 1984 presidential election, says Sahl, who draws his material from newspapers and television. He points out that some golden opportunities for satire have been missed in the past.

"When Reagan said, 'I'm going to drive the Mafia out of business,' somebody should have said, 'Why not? You drove everybody else out of business.'"

Sahl grew up in Los Angeles, where he initially wanted to write comedy rather than perform it.

"I wanted to be a writer and I couldn't find anybody who understood the material, so I did it," he said. "I was kind of a loner. I never fitted in with theater groups or that sort of thing."

He made his debut as a stand-up comic in 1953 at San Francisco's famed hungry i nightclub.

He's made about a dozen comedy albums, which he says trace "an American history — you can chart Nixon all through them."

Among the comedians he admired in his early years were the late Fred Allen, Herb Shriner and Henry Morgan, he said.

He dislikes comics who ignore major political and social developments to joke about drugs and sex, and who spike their acts with swear words.

Marine Band concert inspirational

By KINGSBURY SMITH
National Editor, Hearst Newspapers

WASHINGTON — One of the most inspirational events in Washington this summer was a concert in celebration of the 185th anniversary of the United States Marine Band.

Attended by President Reagan and General P. X. Kelley, the new Marine Corps commandant, the celebration was held in the packed Concert Hall of the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts.

For over three hours, with a brief intermission, the U.S. Marine Band, under the direction of recently promoted Col. John R. Bourgeois, played America's most patriotic music, including such famous marching tunes of John Philip Sousa as Semper Fidelis, the Liberty Bell, Looking Upward, and The Stars and Stripes Forever.

As the stirring cadence of rolling drums and whistling fifes ended some of the exhilarating renditions, the president and nearly 2500 spectators, including many excited Marine children, rose to applaud and cheer. Seldom since the end of World War II has Washington witnessed such a patriotically stimulating event.

When the tall, handsome, much decorated and extremely popular General Kelley, who led a Marine battalion and later the 1st Marine Regiment into combat in Vietnam, stood up to acknowledge a musical tribute to him as a hero and new commandant, he seemed to personify the perfection of patriotism, dedication to country and pride that symbolizes the tradition of the Marine Corps.

President Reagan, who also attended the change of command ceremony July 1 when General Kelley replaced retiring General Robert H. Barrow, has shown a special fondness for the Marines since he became commander-in-chief of the military services. Several members of his Cabinet, including Secretary of State George Shultz and Treasury Secretary Donald Regan, are ex-Marine officers.

The first Marine band was heard in the cobbled streets of Philadelphia in 1775 when with drums and fifes it was recruiting volunteers for the American revolutionary army. Three years later President John Adams signed into law an Act of Congress establishing the United States Marine Band. It performed for President Thomas Jefferson's inauguration, after which he proclaimed it "The President's Own." Since then the band has played at every presidential inauguration.

In April, 1949, Winston Churchill addressed the Massachusetts Institute of Technology's Mid-Century Convocation in Boston. As he was about to leave the platform following his address, he turned to the audience and declared he would like to "ask one favor." He requested that the Marine Band play one more number, The Marines' Hymn. To the delight of the audience and the band, Churchill sang all the words to each verse.

Federal judge OKs $138 million in settlements from 1980 MGM fire

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — A federal judge has approved settlements totaling $138 million for the remaining plaintiffs in a 1980 fire at the MGM Grand Hotel that killed 84 people and injured hundreds more.

U.S. District Judge Louis C. Bechtle of Philadelphia, who was appointed to handle lawsuits by the 1,357 remaining plaintiffs, on Tuesday approved the division of the total paid by 40 defendants, including $75 million from the hotel itself.

The smallest award under the plan approved by Bechtle was for $5,000, while the largest was $9 million.

Twenty death cases and approximately 2,000 personal injury and property damage claims were previously settled for $30 million, according to court records.

A total of 118 defendants were originally named in the complex flood of lawsuits stemming from the Nov. 21, 1980, fire. Sixty defendants have now settled, 21 have been dismissed and 37 have not settled.

The plaintiffs will share in any additional settlements or judgments that may be obtained from the 37 remaining defendants. A federal court trial against several of those defendants, scheduled to begin last Monday in Las Vegas, has been delayed until the fall.

Worms turn for con man

CHICAGO (AP) — A federal judge has sentenced a businessman to three years in prison and ordered him to repay $243,000 to more than 70 victims of a get-rich-quick scheme based on breeding earthworms.

U.S. District Judge Nicholas J. Bua also included a $2,000 fine in imposing the sentence Tuesday on Loyie Sims.

"There is no question in my mind that if Mr. Sims isn't placed behind bars, he will engage in this kind of conduct in the future," said Bua. "His past has demonstrated a pattern of conduct which shows he is a con man."

Sims pleaded guilty May 24 to charges of mail fraud and interstate travel to further a fraud in connection with the scheme, under which investors paid a minimum of $845 to World Wide Worms Inc. for a four-tub unit of earthworms.

The company, which operated between December 1977 and April 1979, told buyers that the worms would multiply and then be re-purchased by World Wide and sold for a variety of uses.

Sims' sons, Michael and David, and a third man, James R. Wolfe, also have been charged in the case and are awaiting trial.

In Nepal, too many people, too few trees

KATMANDU, Nepal (AP) — For the tourist, the trekker, the mountaineer, the photographer, the bargain-hunter or the bird-watcher, Nepal is a dreamland.

For the political scientist, the economist, the environmentalist, the aid distributor, the doctor, the family planner, the health worker, the social worker or the forester, Nepal is more of a nightmare.

Beautiful Nepal — a landlocked kingdom, inhabited by friendly and gentle people — is in trouble.

Visitors look in awe at the grandeur of eight of the world's 10 highest mountains, the water roaring down wild rivers, the beauty of late spring snow on the scarlet rhododendron forests, and the donkey trains with their music of the tinkling bells coming down from the hills.

Tourists marvel at the ancient culture and ceremony and Hindu and Buddhist temples, and the skills of farmers who cultivate terraces reaching from valleys seemingly to the sky.

THE DETERMINATION of the nation is exemplified in the fact that it keeps its clocks 10 minutes ahead of big neighbor India's in a deliberate state of independence.

But some visitors these days worry that behind the beauty and romance lie the makings of a tragedy.

The essence of the problem is too many people and too few trees.

Statistics on paper seem gloomy enough: a population of 18 million that is outstripping agricultural production and growing at 2.6 percent a year, a per capita annual income of $110, an average life expectancy of 46 years and a literacy rate of only 23 percent.

Visitors also are depressed to see leprosy and blindness, children suffering from malnutrition, the lack of basic hygiene, the rubbish littering the streets.

But there also is the basic self-help reading-and-writing night school for adults held in a cowshed by candlelight on the outskirts of Katmandu — with the cows still in occupancy.

Worst of all, in many eyes, is the cutting down of trees.

Wood is all most Nepalese have for cooking and heating, and more and more people are going high into the rhododendron forests to get it.

Trekkers in the Annapurna Mountains frequently see 60-foot, 200-year-old Rhododendron trees — bearing Nepal's national flower — come crashing down, despite a decree of King Birendra that only dead wood is to be taken.

FELLING OF THE TREES results in more erosion each year, more topsoil disappearing from the hills where it is needed for agriculture, bigger landslides when the monsoon arrives, smaller crops, greater malnutrition and more dependence on the outside world.

Still, Finance Minister Yadav Prashad Pant claims "reasonable development" of the economy over the past two years with a gross domestic production growth rate of 3.81 percent in fiscal 1981-82, and 5.6 percent the year before.

The gross domestic product — the sum of all Nepal's goods and services produced — is expected to decline 1.3 percent this year because of a 16 percent drop in rice production due to drought that has plagued the subcontinent, and to the international economic recession.

However, the finance minister maintains the recent 30 percent increase in wheat production is evidence of an improved agriculture, and that "next year will be better" if the weather cooperates and the global economy recovers.

One of Nepal's main concerns is that it is surrounded by India on three sides — China is on the North — and thus is unavoidably dependent to an uncomfortable degree on its Indian neighbor.

Eighty percent of Nepal's trade was with India a decade ago. "Now we have come down to 50 percent only," Pant said.

Nepal and India have yet to agree on joint efforts to harness the key rivers among Nepal's 6,000 streams, however. This would benefit both countries through flood control, irrigation and hydroelectricity.

The bargaining is stalemated over a $3.6 billion project in the Karnali Basin in west Nepal. Katmandu sees India merely as the consumer of the 3,600 megawatts of power it would generate, but New Delhi wants a hand in running the project.

'White Tribe' once fought for rights

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — Before they came to power 35 years ago, the Afrikaners — South Africa's "White Tribe" — were caught in the same kind of struggle for political rights as the nation's black majority is now.

Clues to the uncertainty with which this group of 2.7 million whites still deals with the country's 21 million blacks may lie in the struggle that brought them to power under the banner of the National Party in 1948.

A small band of Calvinist pioneers of Dutch, French and German descent triumphed over the wilderness and African tribes in the last century. When the country's fabulously rich gold and diamond fields put them in the path of British imperialism, they fought the Empire to a standstill.

The majority of Afrikaner casualties were the women and children who died in the world's first concentration camps. After the Anglo-Boer War of 1899-1902, the Afrikaners were known as the "Dirty Dutch," and English-descended whites got the best jobs.

The National Party used the solid backing of Afrikaners, 58 percent of the white population, to take power with a pledge to never allow its people to become second-class citizens again.

Afrikaners who remember the struggle can't avoid being uncomfortable about the suppression of blacks now, says Piet Cillie, chairman of the main Afrikaans-language newspaper group.

Afrikaners are even more sensitive about the country's 2.7 million voteless mixed-race people, many descended from liaisons between Afrikaners and other races.

"We mounted the tiger when we fought for control of our destiny," said Cillie, a confidante of Prime Minister P.W. Botha. "We know we can't be a permanent oppressor of the blacks."

Breyten Breytenbach, the Afrikaners' leading poet, has said from exile in France that his people's beloved Afrikaans language is dead, fit only for tombstones.

In an interview, Cillie interpreted Breytenbach's remark as a lament that a once-revolutionary language — which developed from 17th-century Dutch — had now become a tool of oppression and must become again a force for change.

That may already have started.

In "Magersfontein, oh Magersfontein," a prize-winning novel that was initially banned, Etienne Le Roux tells of an English motion picture company's attempt to make a movie about one of the Afrikaner's biggest victories in the Boer War.

Fewer rabies cases expected during warmer months

When a pet or person is exposed to rabies, the suspected animal's brain must be intact to test for rabies. Patti Armstrong, veterinary technician at the Midland Animal Control, packs a potential rabid skunk's head to be tested in Austin.

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Although rabid skunks infested the Midland area in record numbers this year, authorities say there should be fewer wild-animal rabies cases during the warmer months.

"They've dropped off," said Jim Johnson, zoonosis technician at the Texas Department of Health. "Probably the primary reason is because of the weather. It's dry and hot and the animals don't seem to travel as far, but nobody knows for sure."

Since January, Midland's rabies cases reached epizootic — epidemic levels in animals — proportions with 33 rabid animals reported to the state health department. Thirteen of those were found in the city and 20 in the county, Johnson said.

The Midland area, dubbed a "hot spot" because of an increase of reported rabid wild animals, has had 31 rabid skunks, one rabid horse and a rabid cat this year. According to the Midland Animal Control, there were eight cases reported in 1982 and only two were confirmed in 1981. Statewide, 796 cases were reported in 1982, and through mid-June of this year, the number is up 20 percent from last year.

The zoonosis control at the TDH deals with any disease transmitted from animal to man. This department is responsible for a 32-county area, region 2 and 12. In region 12, which includes Midland, there has been 78 rabid animals reported this year, compared with 44 cases in both regions last year.

Midland's Constable Tom McGinnis, in charge of domestic animal control in the county and who reports rabid animals to the state, said "14 specimens were sent to Austin in June, but only three proved to be positive."

Dalton Byerly, director of the animal control and who also reports rabid animals found within the city, noted that these three rabid cases were a "definite decline compared with the numbers reported in March and April."

Animal control employee Rice Zachery Freeman said when a dog is bitten on the hind leg by a rabid animal, the virus takes time to develop.

"It (virus) travels up the body to the spinal cord," she explained. "Then to the brain, on to the salivary glands and then the rest of the body. It can take anywhere from five days to 18 months for the disease to show, depending on where the animal was bitten."

For this reason, Ms. Zachery Freeman and Byerly both said "it is extremely important to report all animal bites," as required by state law.

The last positive rabid case occurred July 3, and the frequency of the numbers are expected to decline.

Johnson said because skunks breed during the spring months, they are noticed more. He attributed a mild winter and an ample food supply as factors in the unusual number of rabid cases occurring this year.

"Also you have media coverage," he said. "People are aware more and the animals are being reported. Years past, a rancher who saw a skunk in the daytime would just shoot it."

Because rabies is endemic, or constantly present in West Texas, Johnson said "there are a lot of susceptible animals out there." He added that although there is a noticeable decline in the number or wild-animal rabies, people should still have their pets vaccinated.

Bids will be sought for police department computers

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

The police department stood one channel closer to tuning into television screens daily and the fire department shifted into third gear on higher charges Tuesday after gaining approval from the Midland City Council.

During a regular meeting in City Hall Council Chambers, the panel agreed to seek bids on a computerized system for the police department, which eventually will hook up with the municipal court.

Estimated cost, said Police Chief Wayne Gideon, is $700,000. Midland's system would be a combination of the best in other systems, such as Plano and Garland, where local city officials observed their computers.

The first part would be installed in the dispatch room. Gideon said Plano's dispatch room is quiet, each dispatcher having her own system of computers and a headset.

These consoles would cost about $100,000, he said. Garland's is programmed where anyone's record can be punched up on the screen in a matter of seconds. Such a system would eliminate manpower time. He mentioned that drawings of apartment complexes and numbering of the units could be placed on a computer. If an officer was answering a call to one of the units and didn't know where it was in the complex, the dispatcher could find it on the screen and relay it to the officer.

City Manager James Brown said they had started with a computer expert over a year ago to study what was needed. After deciding what type of programming the department wanted, they looked at what kind of equipment could do it.

Gideon said a computer system could check the license of a car that has been stopped by an officer. The computer would list the car's owner and any previous violations — all before the officer leaves his car to talk with the driver.

Councilman David Godfrey said he didn't have any problem with the system "or the fact that it's needed, but it's the money." He suggested paying for it over a period of years.

The Public Safety Building which houses the police department is being remodeled to include the vacated space left by the municipal court and Central Fire Department when they moved. "We have never had the space to proceed with this," said Gideon of the computer system.

The fire department will be reverting to transferring persons on a non-emergency basis but the price for all users of the ambulance service will be going up.

The council approved raising the base rate from $50 to $65 and adding $1.50 per mile when going outside the city limits.

Deputy Fire Chief James Roberts said his department was prompted to study what other cities were charging when a firm handling only non-emergency transfers announced it was going out of business. Such runs entail taking a person from a nursing home to a doctor's office, waiting and then returning the patient.

"If we get it up in line with the rest of the world," Roberts said of the charges, "maybe someone will come in and do the transfers. Our people don't like to do transfers. The ambulance business will never make money. Everyone is paying their share, but people using it should pay more."

Calls for the non-emergency service will be handled on a first come, first served basis.

"This part of the world probably has the lowest rates for ambulance service," he added.

Although the council told Roberts to institute the new rates, the panel failed to commit itself to hiring an architect for a classroom and drill tower for the fire department.

Roberts said Jim Shelton of Odessa was drawing up that city's plans for similar facilities and his plan for Midland called for $527,000. The city had passed a bond issue in April 1982 for the practice field and allotted $500,000 for it.

Councilman Gordon Marcum II told Roberts to negotiate with the architect to see if he will accept a flat fee or 5 percent, rather than 7, of the project.

"Why don't we hire our own architect," asked Godfrey. "We generate enough business every year; we could pay one a salary."

But the mayor appeared pessimistic the city could find one willing to work for them full-time. "We can't hire an engineer," said G. Thane Akins, referring to a slot for a traffic engineer that has gone empty for months.

Three school zones to get flashing lights

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

As the city giveth, so can it taketh away, and especially in the case of flashing lights for school zones.

A school zone study by the city's Traffic Department that was adopted Tuesday by the City Council means three sites will be getting flashing lights and two will have them removed.

Public Works Director Fred Baker said the flashing lights will be removed at Neely and Lanham and Wall and M streets. They will be installed at Ward and Moss, 3700 Cuthbert Avenue and Illinois and Stoneybrook streets. The study also recommended adding a school crossing with a sign at Jackson and Indiana avenues, a school crossing and a sign for speed reduction at Lamesa and Spruce street.

An earlier study had recommended flashing lights at Garfield and Cuthbert, Maxwell and Midkiff. Baker said the number of students crossing at those spots is low and installing the lights will be delayed.

In other action, the city delayed decisions on a veterinary clinic, bonding requirements for developers and development of two parks.

Susie Chandler, 1603 Manor Court, was asking the council for a specific use permit for a veterinary clinic in a strip shopping center at Illinois Avenue and east of Midland Drive.

She pointed out the zoning already allowed a pet store. And residents in back of the proposed clinic could legally have four dogs and four cats. "My clinic won't be any noisier than that." Ms. Chandler would keep 10 cages and animals would be kept overnight only if they need to be hospitalized.

But residents south of the site objected, citing problems with an adjacent laundromat and inability to get the entire tract fenced.

After listening to complaints of several residents, John Williams, owner of the building, said, "I'm the one who wears the black hat" and offered to correct the problems caused by his property. He noted he owns only a few feet of the open space behind the laundromat, and the fencing would have to be done by that owner.

Laser surgery results in less pain, bleeding

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

The laser beam that slices open bodies before the surrounding masked faces seemed to transform the operating room into a scene from a science fiction movie.

But the $29,000 carbon dioxide laser, used in its fifth surgery at Parkview Hospital Tuesday morning, doesn't frighten patients.

When they ask to see the substitute scalpel, there seems to be a little disappointment, according to a salesman for Sharplan Laser Industries, distributor of Parkview's laser. "They're surprised. It's just a little orange box."

The salesman, who requested his name not be used, explained that while his company has sold surgical lasers to hospitals in El Paso, Lubbock, Amarillo and Albuquerque, N.M., Parkview's Sharplan 720 is the first in the Permian Basin.

According to Dr. Luis Montaldo, who has performed gynecological surgeries with the laser, the 25-watt infrared beam instantly boils water within the cells of abnormal tissue. The fluid in the cells turns into steam, the cell explodes and fragments burn up. Because bacteria and other microorganisms also burn up, the area is sterilized.

The laser's incisions are precise to within one millimeter, according to Montaldo.

Advantages of laser surgery, because of its precision, include reduced swelling, pain and scarring following surgery, said Montaldo. Also, because the laser seals small blood vessels as it cuts through them, heavy bleeding is often eliminated. This makes laser surgery advantageous for operations on hemophiliacs or other surgeries involving heavy bleeding.

The laser, or "light amplification by stimulated emission of radiation," was developed during the late 1950s and early 1960s, according to data distributed by Parkview. It has been used for medical purposes for more than 12 years.

Besides gynecological surgeries — which include removal of lesions and tumors, infertility surgery and treatment for early herpes — Parkview plans to use the laser in ear, nose and throat surgeries. Also, plastic surgeons and dermotologists may use the laser in treating warts, moles and other skin conditions. Tatoos also may be removed using the laser.

Dr. Luis Montaldo uses a laser to cut scarred tissue blocking the fallopian tubes of a Midland woman Tuesday morning.

Because there is no electrical interference as there is with electrocautery, or using an electric current to chemically burn tissue, the laser may be used on patients with pacemakers. The heart and brain may be monitored during surgery because of the absence of electrical interference.

According to more information provided by Parkview, the laser won't damage other cells during brain surgery because of its preciseness.

While doctors who use the laser praise its effectiveness, other Midland doctors say they feel the laser is comparable to traditional methods.

But there may be economical advantages, according to Suzan Smith, Parkview public relations director.

Houston man against Volcker reappointment

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

The country may see a collapse of the banking system if Paul Volcker is confirmed for a second term as chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, a Houston man said Tuesday in Midland.

Harry Schlanger

Representing the southwest region of the National Democratic Policy Committee, Harry Schlanger said the Midland news conference was one of 35 planned throughout the nation to join factions in opposing Volcker's reappointment.

Volcker goes before the Senate Banking Committee Thursday on his reappointment, which was announced recently by President Reagan.

But Schlanger, who is considering running for the U.S. Senate against Republican John Tower, contended the recent upswing in the economic figures was a manipulation by Volcker, whom he termed "The Loan Assassin."

"We're on the verge of a banking collapse," said the Ohio native. "We feel the president was forced into accepting Volcker."

The rise in housing starts is being funded by government money, such as Fanny Mae, and thus is a false figure. "The steel industry is on its back. The farm sector is collapsing. We're losing 1-2,000 family farmers a year. There's been a 37 percent drop in exports to Latin America. There's a collapse of trade with Third World countries."

Standing outside at City Hall under the state and national flags, Schlanger said the unemployment figures have been "doctored," by adding the employed military to it.

And the banks are holding billions of dollars in paper in debt from these Third World countries which can't pay on their notes.

"Volcker intends to use the U.S. Treasury to buy up the bad paper," he said, adding the Fed chairman wants to restructure the U.S. banking system, allowing only a few national banks. Under this theory, banks such as Chase Manhatten would open offices in Midland, and the smaller banks eventually would fold or go under the wings of the larger.

New magistrate appointed for local division

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Darrell F. Smith, Midland lawyer, has been appointed U.S. magistrate for the six-county Midland-Odessa Division of the federal court system's Western District of Texas.

Darrell F. Smith

Smith, 40, succeeds 32-year-old J. Michael Cunningham, whose four-year term expires Sunday.

He will serve under U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton, presiding judge of the Midland-Odessa and Pecos Divisions of the Western District.

"I consider it a privilege to have the opportunity to serve under one of the ablest jurists in the country," Smith said of Bunton.

He will be sworn into office at 9 a.m. Monday in the courtroom of the George Mahon Federal Building in Midland.

"I enjoyed the experience," Cunningham said of his tenure, "and really am the first magistrate in Midland who has served a full, four-year term. That has given some stability to the office and that is what they wanted when they appointed me (in 1979). I'm sure Darrell Smith will continue that situation."

Smith will be sixth part-time magistrate to serve the division since 1974.

"It's been a real honor to serve," Cunningham said. "I've enjoyed the experience. It's been real good."

The job is salaried at $8,528 per year.

Cunningham, who was 28 when he was recommended for magistrate by Judge John H. Wood Jr. and was appointed by Judge D.W. Suttle, said he was "one of the youngest magistrates in the United States." Since Cunningham's appointment, the minimum age a lawyer can be appointed a magistrate is 30. Wood was assassinated in San Antonio in 1979, and Suttle has taken senior status in the judgeship.

"It's a job with a lot of responsibility," Cunningham said. "It's a real honor."

The magistrate's job is comparable to that of "justice of the peace and county judge," he said.

The magistrate's role includes hearing federal misdemeanor cases, setting bail at the initial appearances of those accused of both misdemeanor and felony offenses, reviewing habeas corpus motions by prisoners and making recommendations to the judge, holding arraignments and holding hearing on illegal aliens.

MISD's teachers' hopes for raises are dashed

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN
Staff Writer

The final hope of a payraise for Midland teachers vanished Tuesday when the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees approved a salary schedule nearly identical to last year's.

Base salary for teachers remained the same while another step was added to the top of the schedule, raising the maximum pay a teacher can receive.

Instructors will receive increases varying from 3.33 percent to 4.65 percent of last year's salary. The additional year with the district will move them up to the next step on the schedule.

Base pay for a beginning teacher with a bachelor's degree is still $14,665, with a master's it is $15,682 and with 30 additional credit hours it is $16,182. Maximum levels are $29,833 (after 23 years with the district), $32,272 and $32,772 (after 25 years). Midland teachers earn from 32 to 50 percent more than the minimum required by the state.

Earlier this year the teachers' salary committee asked the board to pass on any increase voted by the state legislature, but no state funds were approved. It also requested a local increase of 6.65 percent — funds the district no longer pays into Social Security.

No action was taken on an added benefit, pending notification of how much tax revenue MISD can expect. The proposal would call for the district to match an employee's contributions to an annuity, up to 3 percent of his gross salary. The program could pay up to $100,000 to an employee after 20 years, said Superintendent of Schools Dr. Joe Baressi.

Next year's salary schedules for secretaries and educational aides also will have an additional top step with a 3.71 percent raise. And the hourly rates for maintenance and custodial workers will increase an average of 40 cents at the top levels, with raises not to exceed 4.5 percent.

In related financial matters, trustees discussed the proposed 1983-84 budget of $50.6 million, a 10.6 percent increase over last year. The budget reflects a per student cost of nearly $3,000. However, the board agreed there would not be more than a 3 percent increase in the effective tax rate. If the tax rate is increased more than 3 percent a public hearing must be called.

Salaries make up nearly three-fourths of the total budget. Of the $50.6 million budgeted for 1983-84, more than $37 million is for salaries. Last year's total budget was $45.8 million, with nearly $34 million for wages.

Because of increased enrollment, higher average daily attendance (ADA) figures and the opening of two new schools, an additional 26 teaching and administrative positions were created. The district will hire 1,718 fulltime employees.

Business manager Don Furgeson said he did not anticipate a deficit for the 1982-83 budget, although there is currently a $1 million shortfall.

Even though enrollment grew by 1,275 students and 37 additional teachers had to be hired, Furgeson said the state would make up the difference. The state pays schools a certain amount based on its ADA figures, and Furgeson anticipates the refund will cover the shortfall.

Authorities expect fewer cases of rabies

"During the fall months we might see a pick up (in rabies cases)," he said. "In the warmer months, like now, the skunks are more stressed and not wandering as much. They're just staying put and dying.

"But everybody should get their pets vaccinated, especially in the rural areas," Johnson added. "But also in the city. They (rabid skunks) are coming into the city. I want to stress the importance of vaccinating cats. You can't restrain cats like you can dogs. But even those people who keep their dogs restrained need to vaccinate them. Wild animals can come up in the yard."

According to a 1982 article in "Pet News," Dr. William Winkler, who heads up the rabies division at the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta, said "the dog rabies problem has been brought down to fairly small numbers, but at the same time, everyone seems to have neglected the problem in cats."

As a result, rabies in cats led dog cases by 20 percent in 1981, Winkler said.

There are three types of rabies. Byerly said people seem to associate rabies with the first type — mad dog — or fierce rabies, which causes the animal to become aggressive and appear to be afraid of water. But dumb rabies, which are often seen in cats, show the specific symptom of slack jaw, or the mouth hanging open. The third type, atypical rabies, also often has partial paralysis as one symptom.

Commonly transmitted by the bite of a rabid animal, rabies is a virus that attacks the nervous system and leads inevitably to an agonizing death. There is no cure and only one means of prevention — vaccination — which until three years ago meant up to 23 painful shots in the stomach, often with dangerous side effects.

Byerly, who has been exposed twice and bitten twice by rabid animals has received the "old type" of rabies vaccinations three times. Byerly, McGinnis and all employees of city/county animal control now take a preventive rabies vaccine.

The animal control director noted that the danger in the original injections were from allergic reactions. People died — not from rabies, but the shots. Today there is a human diploid cell injection which is less risky.

Johnson said 14 Midland persons have received the series of five human diploid cell injections this year, costing each victim $500 or $7,000 total.

Three school zones to get flashing lights

But confusion arose over what set of covenants was in effect, and the council deferred a decision until July 26.

Max Richardson with West Texas Consultants asked for bonding waivers for two clients involved in developing North Midkiff Park Addition and Garfield Plaza Addition.

Both subdivisions are large developments and putting in utilities will take large sums of money. Both clients are new to the developing business, according to Richardson, and are having problems getting bonded.

This bond assures the city the developer will proceed with installing utilities and streets, getting the land ready to be developed. If the developer fails, the bond goes to the city and that money is used for installing utilities.

Richardson also noted the city has set a time limit of one year for the utilities to be installed.

"I'm more concerned that it won't be put in and the lots then will be sold to people who will expect the city to do it," said Mayor G. Thane Akins.

Richard Hennessy, director of planning and community development, suggested the clients develop the land in phases rather than at one time and the costs would be less for bonding.

The council deferred a decision, wanting time to get recommendations from the "development community."

Bids for developing three new parks came in above the estimates, and the council decided to wait on a decision. Parks and Recreation Director Wayne Kohout suggested dropping Crestgate Park and developing the two sites adjacent to schools — Quanah Parker and Santa Rita.

Several companies owning pipelines that need to be moved from an effluent pond area cited prices higher than the city thought was reasonable. Utilities Director John Lowe was told to get bids on the work and then offer those companies that amount for them to do it. If the companies refuse, the city can accept a bid and hire an outside contractor.

In addition, the council authorized going out for bids on land preparation and construction of a reservoir in Section 12. This will be a lined pond that will hold the city's treated effluent until needed for irrigation. It is part of a $20 million sewage disposal system under construction.

Amendments for the zoning code to permit private elementary and secondary schools to be operating in all use districts was approved. The changes call for a minimum of two acres and 100 students.

New magistrate appointed for local division

"It's a catch-all position," especially in larger towns, such as San Antonio, where the magistrate's cases also include such federal offenses as drunkenness, assault, traffic violations and probable-cause hearings.

"It doesn't take a great deal of time (in Midland)," said Cunningham, "but one of the problems you have is to be available."

The magistrate "helps the district judge in taking some of the pressures, in taking some of the load, off in minor matters," he said.

Smith was among others who applied for the magistrate's position.

The magistrate nominee was recommended to Bunton by a seven-member Merit Selection Panel, appointed by Bunton. In turn, the judge made a recommendation to the panel of six presiding judges serving the expansive Western District, which spans from the San Antonio-Austin-Waco area westward to El Paso. Those judges are Chief Judge William S. Sessions, Fred Shannon, and H.F. Garcia, all of San Antonio; Harry Lee Hudspeth of El Paso; James R. Nowlin of Austin, and Bunton, who serves Midland-Odessa, Pecos and Waco Divisions.

Smith, a native of Freer in Duval County, is a 1965 English-major graduate of Texas A&M University, earned the doctor of jurisprudence (JD) from Baylor University in 1968, and in 1977 was granted an associate degree in applied science in petroleum technology from Midland College.

Smith, a lieutenant commander in the U.S. Naval Reserves and chairman of the Midland County Democratic Party, has practiced law in Midland since 1974.

Cunningham, whose hometown is Midland, is a 1969 graduate of Midland High School, earned the bachelor's degree in history and government from the University of Texas at Austin in 1973, and was granted the law degree in 1976 from the University of Houston.

He has practiced law in Midland since 1977.

Magistrates who have served the Midland-Odessa Division since the mid-1970s include Noel D. Cason, Woodrow W. "Woody" Weir, Don E. Williams, James A. Bobo and Cunningham.

The Midland-Odessa Division takes in counties of Andrews, Crane, Ector, Martin, Midland and Upton.

"What happens if the national banks don't want to fund local businesses," Schlanger said.

The committee doesn't have the name of anyone to substitute for Volcker. Instead, he said, they want to see the Fed come until control of Congress.

Organized in 1980 at the National Democratic Convention when they felt Jimmy Carter couldn't win the presidential race, Schlanger said the group isn't anti-Reagan. In fact, it supported the president's defensive weapons program.

"We consider ourselves the American system of going back to Alexander Hamilton's idea: wealth of system."

NDPC proposes a long-term, low-interest credit to go into production with an interest rate of 4 percent.

Also helping to revitalize industry would be high technology. "We oppose the idea of a freeze on technology. We should be employing science to solve these problems."

Schlanger is bureau chief of Executive Intelligence Review, a financial magazine.

Of his possible senate race, Schlanger said Bob Krueger, who has announced he is running, "has nothing to offer," and former governor Dolph Briscoe "doesn't really understand the issues."

Laser surgery beneficial

She cited shorter hospital stays and healing periods because of the laser's preciseness. Also, savings on blood costs and elimination of problems from some blood transfusions are realized because of the reduction in blood loss.

Often, there is less need for analgesics, or drugs to reduce pain, because there is less damage to surrounding tissue, she said.

Montaldo, who attended classes on the new method at the University of California and Women's Hospital of Texas, a branch of the Baylor University Medical College, was assisted by the salesman in conducting a three-day inservice on the laser for nurses last week.

Avocados have been popular for centuries

Copley News Service

When Hernando Cortez entered Mexico in the 16th century, he discovered a wealth of treasures including gold, jewels, a sophisticated political system and a fascinating new fruit — the avocado.

This delicious native of the Americas can boast of a long history as well as a delicate, nutty flavor and rich, buttery texture.

There is evidence that the people of Mexico and Guatemala enjoyed the avocado back in the third century B.C., using it both for cooking and cosmetic applications. The golden-green spheres were introduced to California by Spanish missionaries in the 18th century and were planted in Florida in 1833.

In the Warner Bros. movie "Oh, God!" the deity confesses that he goofed once when creating the world: He made the avocado seed too big!

If that is to be considered a flaw, it may well be the avocado's only one. One of nature's most "nutrient-dense" fruits, the avocado provides significant amounts of vitamins A, C and E, along with folic acid, niacin, thiamin and riboflavin. In addition, it is low in sodium and cholesterol.

The avocado's smooth, creamy texture is a dead giveaway of its high oil content. However, since it is mostly unsaturated oil, these distinctive fruits can be enjoyed in moderation by those on low-fat diets.

Creative cool salads fun, simple

(See RECIPES, Page 5C)

When the temperature soars, it's time for easy, refreshing meals. Cool and colorful main dish salads are ideal. Quick and easy to prepare, attractive entree salads spark the appetite and refresh the palate. Best of all, much of the preparation can be completed well in advance of serving.

With a bit of inspiration and inventiveness, a memorable main even salad can be created in short order. All it takes is an eye to ingredient combinations that are nutritious and varied in color, flavor, texture and shape. When it comes to greens, try iceburge lettuce alternatives such as leaf, romaine, Boston or bibb lettuce. Spinach, Chinese cabbage and watercress provide a pleasing change of pace as well. Vegetables and fruit offer the opportunity for easy salad creativity. Fresh, canned, frozen, raw or cooked, they can be chopped, sliced, shredded or cut into any number of creative looks. Always keep compatible flavors in mind, but don't hestitate to experiment with new combinations.

A salad masterpiece deserves a delicious dressing to blend and highlight flavors.

Some surprisingly uncomplicated salads can be made by attractively arranging ingredients on a platter and allowing everyone to create their own meal. California Club Salad is a tasty example that takes just minutes to prepare. A hearty variation of Hollywood's Brown Derby restaurant's famous Cobb Salad, it boasts chicken, hard-cooked eggs and crisp bacon with tomato and avacado atop a bed of shredded lettuce. Serve it with dressing.

When a special luncheon or supper is on the agenda, Polynesian Luncheon Salad provides the entree with ease and style. It combines chopped cooked chicken with summer's best strawberries, grapes and pineapple in a lightly gingered dressing with an unexpected dash of pepper. Serve it with panache in pineapple shells or on individual salad plates.

With croissants, crusty French rolls or date-nut bread and soft cream cheese, it's an easy warm weather refresher.

BETTER BUSINESS

Company's flimsy fans stir complaints

By LINDA TRUITT

Last summer the Panama Ceiling Fan Company, Perth Amboy, N.J., advertised a ceiling fan for only $29.95 plus $9.95 shipping, describing it as "a stunning reproduction of the $360 top-of-the-line American classic."

But, as the Better Business Bureau discovered, the fan's flimsy blades were turned by a tiny noisy motor. The "hand stained mahogany blades" were mahogany-stained plywood similar to balsa wood; the "brass tone construction" and the "brilliant authentic grillwork" were plastic with a brass-like finish; and, rather "circulating thousands of cubic feet of air," the fan barely put out a breeze.

This spring ads have appeared for C.M. Electronics, Farmingdale, N.Y., for a "52-inch Circulating Fan" for $29.95 plus $9.95 shipping, described as "so much like the $360 top-of-the-line American Classic, we dare you to tell us the difference."

According to the Better Business Bureau of New York, Panama Ceiling Fan Company was a tradestyle and C.M. Electronics is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Sheldon Friedlich Marketing, New York and New Jersey. The company also does business under numerous other names including Creative Marketing and Ann Potter, and offers a variety of novelty and household items by mail.

Complaints received by the BBB against the company allege delay in delivery, non-delivery or the delivery of damaged merchandise. Although the company usually responds to complaints presented to it by the BBB, Sheldon Friedlich Marketing has an unsatisfactory record due to a pattern of failure to eliminate the cause of customer complaints.

On July 9, 1982, the company entered into a Consent Judgment with the United States Postal Service. Without admitting any violation of the law, the company agreed refrain from a advertising a number of products they were selling through the mail (including fans), and among other things, to make changes in the way they handle and process mail orders to ensure customers receive their products on time and also receive refunds.

Two of the officers of the firm have also been associated with other mail-order companies which have been the subject of many comaplaints and law enforcement action including Inflation Fighters Kit and Shoppers Boutique.

In December 1982, Sheldon Friedlich Marketing filed a petition for reorganization under Chapter 11 of the federal bankruptcy code. The company has been authorized by the court to operate its business and manage its property as a "debtor-in-possession." The firm currently owes millions of dollars to creditors including approximately 160,000 consumers who sent money for a "Panama Ceiling Fan" or one of the firm's numerous novelty and household items.

Under federal bankruptcy law, the company may not send merchandise or refunds to customers whose orders were placed before the filing of the Chapter 11 petition. Consumers who ordered before December 12, 1982, and who now have a complaint should file a proof of claim form with U.S. Bankruptcy Court, 40 Foley Square, Room 230, New York, N.Y. 10007, Docket P82-B-12286-JG.

The BBB has been advised by counsel for the firm that until authorized to do so by the bankruptcy court, the firm will not make refunds or deliveries to consumers as required by the July, 1982, Consent Judgment.

Complaints arising out of mail order transaction following the company's petition for Chapter 11 reorganization should be sent to: Inspector in Charge, U.S. Postal Service, P.O. Box 509, Newark, N.J. 07101.

Microwave magic simple to use

Copley News Service

Almost anyone can operate a TV set, but how many of us know how it works? It's the same with the microwave oven. So here are a few basics to get you acquainted with the workings of microwave magic.

First, where do the microwaves come from? They're generated from a magnetron vacuum tube inside the oven. This tube converts electrical current into the high-frequency microwaves which heat your food. In most ovens, the microwaves enter from the top, and are circulated and distributed by a fan.

Since they are reflected by metal, the microwaves bounce and ricochet why you must not use metal containers for cooking. Use instead utensils made from glass, pottery, paper and most plastics. These materials allow microwaves to pass through, reaching the food. The microwaves are then absorbed by the moisture, sugar or fat in the food, causing its molecules to vibrate rapidly. This in turn generates the heat.

Texans develop new type of rice

Hearst Feature Service

Something new is growing in the fields of Texas. It looks like rice. It smells like popcorn as it cooks. It has a faintly nutty flavor. And it's called Texmati.

A cross between Texas long-grain and basmati rice from India and Pakistan, Texmati has the best characteristics of both and is prepared in less time than either. There are no additives or preservatives in Texmati, and it comes polished (white) and unpolished (natural or brown).

Unlike most rice, which must be stirred with a fork and fluffed after cooking to keep it from sticking, Texmati seems naturally fluffy — hot or cold. Straight from the pan, it has strength of character even without a dressing. And its flavor lasts through refrigeration into the next day.

As a pilaf, baked in broth with onions and nuts, it couldn't be better. And when baked slowly with milk, Texmati put other rice puddings to shame.

Texans have been talking about this new rice since 1968, when Dr. L.E. Crane, manager of Chocolate Bayou Co.'s research department, started working with the two strains — basmati and Texas long grain. By 1970, he had developed the hybrid; by 1976, it was growing commercially and named. Texans has been eating it up since 1977.

The reason it isn't found everywhere is its price.

Cheese kin to wine

Cheese has been described as "milk's leap to immortality" and as the food most resembling wine. The reason for this is that cheese, like wine, is a "preserve" and bears the same relationship to milk as wine bears to grapes.

Since it forms a graceful cup when cut in half, the avocado is a natural "dish" for chicken and seafood salads, cottage cheese and marinated mushrooms.

Avocado...

Authorities agree that the best avocado to buy is a solid, firm one, and the best time to buy it is several days before you need it. The ripe avocados that are available in most markets have been picked over and pressed to the point of bruising.

Firm avocados will ripen at room temperature, out of the sunlight, in three or four days. Impatient cooks can hurry the process by putting the fruits in a brown paper bag, perforated with small holes. This speeds the ripening process by.

GUACAMOLE

4 ripe avocados
1 tsp. lemon juice
1 garlic clove, chopped finely
½ large onion, chopped
½ cup tomatoes, peeled and chopped
2 tsps. canned jalapeno chiles, chopped
2 tsps. fresh, chopped cilantro

Peel avocados; cut in half to remove seed, and slice in small pieces. Mash he lemon juice with avocados either with a fork or in the blender Blend the other ingredients with the avocados. Serve over fresh lettuce leaves.

Cook, stirring constantly, until mixture is slightly thickened, about 5 minutes. Remove from heat, stir in lemon juice and salt; cool.

When mixture is cold and begins to thicken, beat egg whites with cream of tartar to soft peaks.

Gradually beat in beat in remaining 4 tablespoons sugar to make a stiff meringue. With the same beater beat cream to soft peaks. Fold cream, then meringue, into cooled peach mixture and turn into cooled shell.

Chicken, peaches unusual dish

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

If you are interested in trying an unusual combination of flavors, this recipe for Chicken with Fresh Peaches may attract you.

The chicken is marinated in an oriental-style sauce, then sprinkled with four different spices and baked. Fresh peches and water chesnuts go into the pan shortly before the chicken is ready. Rice complements the dish.

CHICKEN WITH FRESH PEACHES

¼ cup soy sauce
¼ cup water
½ cup chopped (medium-fine) onion
1½ teaspoons finely chopped fresh ginger
1 large clove garlic, finely chopped
3½-pound frying chicken, cut up
¼ teaspoon anise seed, crushed
¼ teaspoon ground allspice
½ teaspoon ground cloves
2 large fresh peaches, quartered
8-ounce can water chesnuts, drained and sliced

In a 3-quart rectangular baking dish (3½ by 8¾ by 1¾ inches) stir together soy sauce, water, onion, ginger and garlic; add chicken in a single layer; marinate 2 or 3 hours, turning several times.

Turn chicken skin side up; stir together anise, allspice, cinnamon and cloves; sprinkle over chicken. Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven 50 minutes, basting several times; add peaches and water chestnuts.

Bake until chicken is tender and peaches are heated through — 10 minutes longer. Serve with rice. Makes 4 servings.

Peaches Arabella

Quick and easy to make just before serving.

Peel and slice enough peaches to make 4 servings; fold in sugar to taste. Beat 1 large egg white until stiff; gradually beat in 1½ tablespoons sugar. Beat ½ cup heavy cream until stiff. Beat ¼ cup plain yogurt slightly; fold in egg white and then cream; top peaches with the mixture. — (AP)

Campfire breakfast pita is the perfect eye-opener for campsite appetites. It's a great taste combination of fried eggs, hot ham and cheese.

Campfire pita breakfast eye-opener

Campfire ham and eggs are a variation on a theme when combined in pita bread. The bread is cut in half, stuffed with ham and cheese slices and wrapped in heavy duty alumimum foil for carrying in a cooler to the campsite.

At breakfast time the foil-wrapped sandwiches are heated over hot embers. The foil packet aids in melting cheese and steaming the bread. While the sandwiches are heating, camptrs can fry their eggs in a frying pan and then pop the eggs in the heated sandwiches.

CAMPFIRE BREAKFAST PITA

1 pita or pocket bread, cut in half
2 slices cooked ham
2 slices American cheese
1 tablespoon vegetable oil or shortening
2 eggs

Place 1 slice of ham and 1 slice of cheese in each pita half. Place pita halves in center of a sheet of foil. Wrap large enough to permit adequate wrapping. Bring 2 sides of foil up over food.

Fold down loosely in a series of locked folds allowing for heat circulation and expansion. Fold short ends up and over again; crimp to seal. Place packet in hot embers or on grill rack over embers. Cook 5 minutes or until heated through, turning once with long handled tongs.

While pita is cooking, heat oil in pan. Break eggs into pan. Cook 5 to 10 minutes or until desired doneness, pricking yolk halfway through cooking time and flipping eggs. Add eggs to ham and cheese pita. Makes 2 servings.

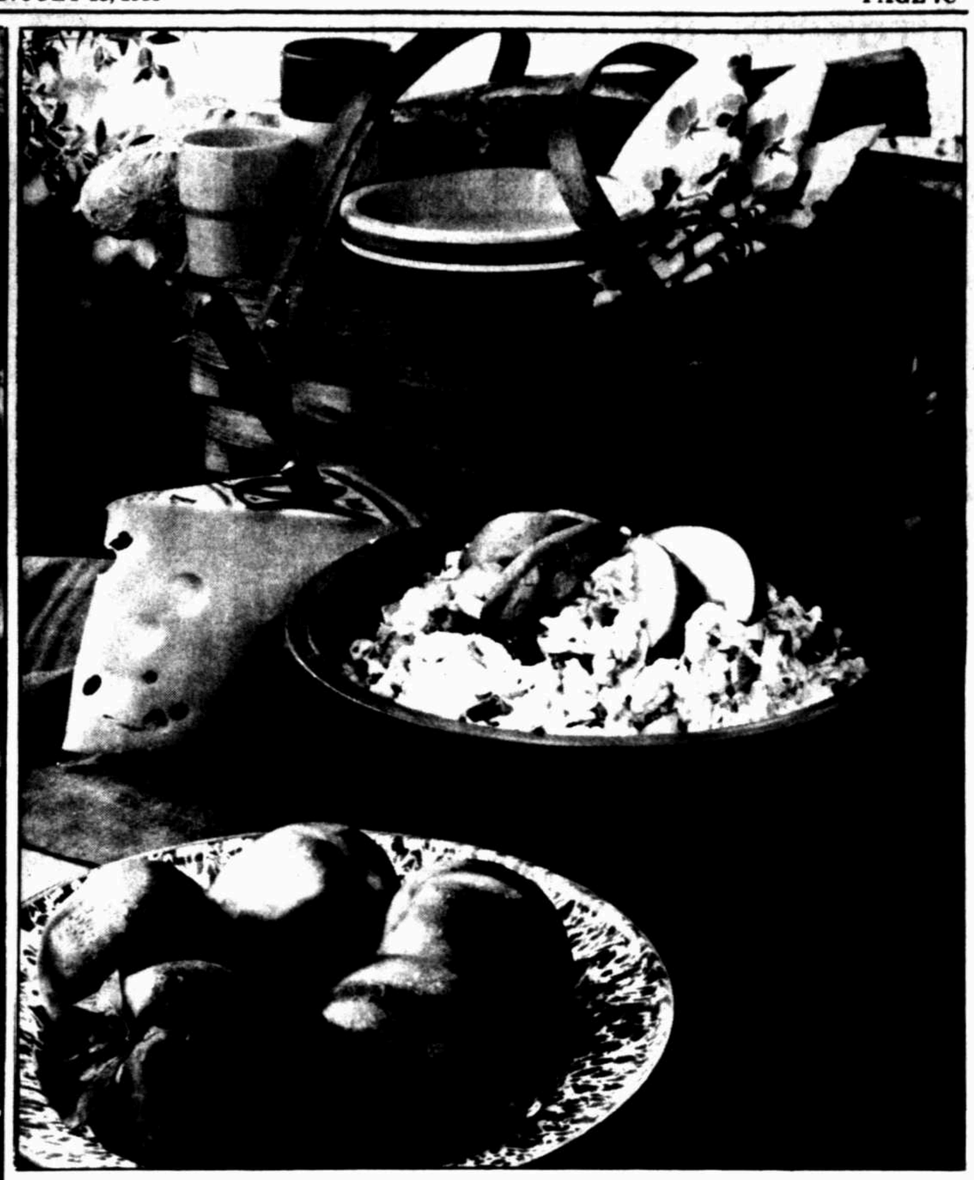
Some other campfire recipes you might want to try are: English muffin pizzas and popcorn.

ENGLISH MUFFIN PIZZAS

Split and toast English muffins. Spread each muffin half with tomato sauce and sprinkle with oregano and shredded cheese. Place on griddle and cook over hot embers 15 minutes or until cheese is melted.

POPCORN

Place 3 tablespoons popping corn and 1 tablespoon oil in center of a double thickness of foil. Bundle wrap and place on metal rack three inches over hot embers. Heat 10-15 minutes using long handled tongs, shake occasionally, or until popping stops. Top with salt or grated Parmesan cheese.



Fresh nectarines and fusilli pasta are combined in a simple Nectarine-Pasta Picnic Salad.

Nectarines go on picnic in pasta

Why not try a glistening pasta salad for picnic or barbecue? For the past few years, pastas served al dente with unusual and delicate sauces have been sweeping American restaurants. Nectarine-Pasta Picnic Salad combines the corkscrew-shaped fusilli pasta with chopped fresh nectarines in an herb-flavored sour cream dressing.

There are better than 100 fresh California nectarine varieties to enjoy during the summer months. Whichever nectarine you buy, select well-formed fruit with a creamy yellow background without any green at the stem end.

Fresh nectarines may be canned, frozen, dried or preserved in jams, jellies, preserves and conserves.

Nectarines are particularly well suited for cooking because their fuzzless skin need notbe peeled and they maintain their flavor and texture during heating. However, for Nectarine-Pasta Picnic Salad, the fruit is chopped into the salad au naturel.

NECTARINE-PASTA PICNIC SALAD

3 to 5 fresh nectarines
1 cup sour cream
¼ cup chopped onion
1½ teaspoons tarragon
½ teaspoon thyme
¾ teaspoon salt
3 cups cooked corkscrew noodles
½ cup sliced water chestnuts or sliced radishes

Coarsely chop enough nectarines to measure 3 cups. Blend sour cream, onion, tarragon, thyme and salt; mix in nectarines, noodles and water chestnuts. Chill. Garnish with extra nectarine slices, if desired. Makes 5 cups.

Strawberries give twist to flavorful vinaigrette

Say summer and think salads. Now that the warm weather is here, it's time to indulge in the abundance of garden-fresh produce available in the market. And with favorite seasonal ingredients so plentiful and economical, now is an ideal time to tempt tastebuds with new and exciting flavor variations.

One idea that's becoming popular is salad dressings made with fruit vinegars. Unfortunately the cost of commercial fruit vinegars can be prohibitive for many cooks. But you can still enjoy this new flavor sensation at a fraction of the cost by making your own with fresh fruit and ordinary vinegars.

SUMMER FRUITS WITH STRAWBERRY VINAIGRETTE

2 pints fresh strawberries, washed and stemmed
½ cup red wine vinegar
½ cup white vinegar
⅔ cup salad oil
2 teaspoons sugar
2 teaspoons ground ginger dash salt
lettuce leaves
6 chicken breast halves, skinned, boned and cooked
1 cup fresh fruit in season such as blueberries, grapes, peaches, plums

In bowl crush 1 pint strawberries with a fork or potato masher. Stir in vinegars, cover and refrigerate overnight. Strain, pressing firmly on the solids to extract as much liquid as possible. There should be about 1¼ cups. Discard solids.

Whisk together ⅓ cup strawberry vinegar with oil, sugar, ginger and salt. Store remaining vinegar in covered container in refrigerator. Halve remaining pint berries and arrange on lettuce-lined plates with chicken and fruits.

Makes 6 servings.

Give summer salads a new twist by lacing dressings with fruit vinegars made quickly and economically at home with fresh fruit and ordinary vinegars.

Pea salad traditional

GREEN PEA SALAD

A new version of an old American favorite.

10-ounce package tiny green peas
2 or 3 large ribs celery, thinly sliced
1 large (7 ounces) red Delicious apple, unpeeled and diced (¼ inch) make about 1¾ cups
1 cup diced (1¼-inch) cheddar cheese
1 or 2 medium scallions, thinly sliced (3 tablespoons)
4 tablespoons salad oil
2 tablespoons cider vinegar
Lettuce
2 hard-cooked eggs
Mayonnaise and yogurt

Cook peas according to package directions; drain and cool.

Toss with celery, scallion, apple, cheese, oil and vinegar; cover tightly and chill.

Serve on lettuce and garnish with egg. Whisk together equal parts of mayonnaise and yogurt until blended and serve with the salad.

Makes 6 servings.

DEAR ABBY

Trucking couple needs lighter load

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My husband is a long-distance truck driver. When he's home he eats constantly. He doesn't like to eat alone, so I have to eat with him. In addition to the meals I make, he brings home treats like fried chicken, ribs, pizza, etc. He loves ice cream and puts away a quart at one sitting. (I can imagine what he eats when he's on the road!)

In the five years we've been married, he's gained 80 pounds and I've gained 70. I never say anything about his belly, but he says plenty about mine. When he's watching TV he snacks on potato chips and drinks beer. His eating drives me to drink. (Wine. More calories.)

I love to dance, but he doesn't take me anywhere anymore because he's ashamed of the way I look. Now he's threatening to dump me. I'm so far gone (fat), dieting is out of the question. I dream about being thin again.

What should I do? -- BEING DUMPED IN IOWA

DEAR BEING DUMPED: Begin by seeing your physician for a thorough checkup. Then locate the nearest Overeaters Anonymous chapter and attend a meeting. (I've attended some, and have found the group to be incredibly loving, caring and understanding.) You need support and encouragement from people who have been where you are now. Please go. Get yourself in shape, then go to work on your husband. And if he doesn't follow suit and shape up, you might want to dump HIM!

DEAR ABBY: Recently I met an interesting professional man at a party. (I'm a woman in the same profession.) We hit it off rather well and he asked for my phone number. A few days later he called and asked me to have "a drink" with him that evening. I declined, saying I had an invitation for cocktails and dinner.

Abby, it's been years since I accepted a date for "a drink only," but I still remember how humiliated I felt, sitting in a cocktail lounge, nursing a drink and hoping the guy would decide I was worth a dinner too.

Please give me a snappy reply to let a man know that I think "a drink only" invitation is tacky and insulting and I'd rather not hear from him again. - NOT THAT NEEDY

DEAR NOT: Why bother with a snappy reply? Just tell the man how you feel about "a drink only" invitation.

DEAR ABBY: I am going to give your readers (if you print this) some information I paid a psychiatrist $15,000 for -- not to mention the hours I put in on his couch.

I was a "respectable" married woman, married 18 years. I had great kids and a terrific husband - a handsome, successful businessman, admired by all who knew him. I'm sure he never cheated on me.

My problem? I cheated on him with so many men in the last 15 years, I can't count them.

So, Dear Abby, please tell husbands and wives everywhere that if their spouse is cheating on them, they aren't necessarily looking for sex. They may be starved for affection. I was. Sign me ... HAPPILY DIVORCED IN NEVADA

A guard stands on top of the Orange County jail in Goshen, N.Y., last week as the town prepares for the Brink's robbery trial. Residents of this quiet town are grumbling as the trial opens.

Brink's trial threatens small town

GOSHEN, N.Y. (AP) — The mayor still sells horseshoes from behind the counter of his family's hardware store, and the rumor mill at Howell's Luncheonette beats the telephone by a country mile.

Police Chief Frederick Walker patrols the streets himself, keeping watch over the "the cats, dogs and people," as he puts it. There's only one traffic light, and some folks don't think that's needed.

But in the land of Goshen, named after the Biblical land of plenty, the denizens are grumbling as the Brink's trial — with its '60s radicals and its accusations of terrorism — invades the bucolic splendor.

"I think people feel like it was dumped on them. Nobody had anything to say about it," said Mayor Steve Hopkins as he supervised deliveries at his hardware store — like many buildings here, well into its second century.

The village's 4,874 residents didn't pay much attention to the Brink's case until last December, when pretrial publicity prompted an appellate court to move the trial from nearby Rockland County to Goshen, Orange County's seat.

"People have been walking down that street for years. Now all of a sudden they're stopping people and you've got to show an i.d. People don't like it. They're scared."
— John Friedrich, manager of Goshen luncheonette

BUT WITH jury selection for three of the defendants set to begin Monday, the case is very much on people's minds as scores of attorneys, reporters and spectators settle in for the long, hot summer.

Two police officers and a Brink's guard were killed in the $1.6 million holdup of a Brink's armored car on Oct. 20, 1981, at a Nanuet shopping mall and in the ensuing shootout at a police roadblock in Nyack.

The FBI suspects the heist was pulled off by a "family" of terrorists, and some of the six defendants are self-styled revolutionaries who advocate setting up a separate black nation in the United States by force.

Their presence in the county jail, their frequent trips down the street for court appearances at the Surrogate's Court building and anticipated demonstrations by their supporters has left Goshen looking like an armed camp.

Sheriff's deputies have been posted on the jail rooftop since the prisoners arrived last month, and their conspicuous weaponry has made residents nervous.

When the prisoners are transported to the two-story courthouse, traffic stops, the road is closed and a cavalcade of police cars races by, sirens squealing. A guard dog stands watch outside the courthouse.

SOME PEOPLE think things have gone too far. There was an outcry when the sheriff wanted to turn the village's ballfield into a helicopter base for additional security. A compromise was worked out so ball-playing can continue.

Villagers were outraged when overzealous deputies followed area residents, asked others for identification and tried to stop one woman who parked her car next to the courthouse in order to attend church across the street.

"People have been walking down that street for years," said John Friedrich, who runs Howell's Luncheonette on West Main Street. "Now all of a sudden they're stopping people and you've got to show an i.d. People don't like it. They're scared."

Friedrich is on top of most developments in the Brink's case. The sheriff, police chief and attorneys wander by most days, and Brink's chit-chat is routine. Rumors begin, thrive and end at Howell's.

Unlike some entrepreneurs — eagerly renting out office space to the news media and other newcomers — Friedrich is not looking for extra business.

"ALL OF A sudden, 50 or 100 people are in town needing a place to eat," he said. "What am I going to do with my regulars? It's just going to be aggravating."

The national spotlight may be a headache, but it is not unprecedented for Goshen, which gained fame as the home of the Hambletonian Stake, one of harness racing's most prestigious races.

The race, which left the village in 1956, drew thousands to the Good Time Park in an annual pilgrimage each August for 26 years.

"The ice cream parlors were packed," remembers Philip Pines, director of the village's racing museum. "Downtown nights in Goshen were so jammed you couldn't walk the streets. An orchestra played music so people could dance in the streets."

Good Time has since closed, but Historic Track — a half-mile oval behind the Surrogate Courthouse — is still used. And Goshen retains an unabashed pride in its history that is tinged with nostalgia for the vanished era.

A SIGN MARKS the huge oak that shaded the grazing place of Imported Messenger, who sired hundreds of trotters. Another marks where President Ulysses S. Grant "watched the trotters...from the barn in the rear."

There are other historic markers, war monuments which encircle Harriman Square, the perfectly manicured village green.

Founded in 1714, Goshen is itself a monument to small-town America. Gingerbread Victorian wood-frame houses and Greek-revival office buildings mingle with spires from Goshen's seven churches and one synagogue.

There is no need for highrises in this 2½-mile-square village surrounded by gently rolling hills, silos, horse farms and onion patches.

"It's an ideal village to raise a family," said Walker, police chief for 23 years. There have been only two homicides in two decades, and most arrests are for misdemeanors.

The mayor believes Goshen's placid life won't be threatened, but Walker is not so sure. While the sheriff's department is handling the overall security, Walker's 12-member police force must manage the extra traffic the trial draws.

WALKER IS worried about whether his officers will still have time, for example, to visit elderly people who don't check in each day to say they're well. And will villagers, who routinely wave and stop for police cars, maintain their good will throughout a trial that may last a year?

Walker played down those questions as he picked over a salad at Howell's, where an old spinet with broken keys leaned against the wall and fans offered relief from the 90-degree-plus temperatures outside.

"It's a typical summer's day in a typical quiet town," he said, sipping some iced tea. "These people are more concerned with their barbeques, their picnics and going up to the lakes."

But after a pause, he added, "I hope it doesn't leave any scars."

Proxmire: No free lunch

By TOM RAUM

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., a vocal critic of excessive government spending, is sponsoring a bill he playfully has entitled the "No Free Lunch Act of 1983."

It would require government officials to pay much higher prices for the meals they eat in top-level government dining rooms — approximating what they might pay in Washington's finest restaurants for the same meal.

Proxmire says he's not talking about your run-of-the mill government cafeterias, but the classy executive dining rooms found in most executive agencies.

For instance, he claims it costs the Pentagon $450,000 a year to operate dining rooms for the secretary of defense and the heads of the Army, Navy and Air Force. Other federal agencies spend between $50,000 and $100,000 a year running similar dining rooms, he says.

"As might be expected, the prices charged for the meals did not come anywhere near covering the costs of providing those meals," Proxmire said. "In fiscal 1981, it cost about $2.9 million to operate these dining rooms while the revenues collected from those who ate there barely topped $500,000. The taxpayer paid the $2.4 million difference."

His proposal would make it a legal requirement that governmental dining rooms break even. He said he would apply the same rule to congressional restaurants — although these already come closer to matching receipts with expenses than do their executive-agency counterparts.

Proxmire's bill is not the only piece of legislation on the congressional agenda with a fanciful title.

Rep. Andrew Jacobs, D-Ind., is the House champ of such measures. His latest effort — a piece of legislation that would sharply cut tax-supported office expenses paid for ex-presidents — bears this title:"The Former Presidential Enough is Enough and Taxpayer's Relief Act of 1983."

• • •

Sen. Russell Long, D-La., ranking Democrat on the Senate Finance Committee, has long balked at bills with unusual titles. But he's found little support from colleagues for his efforts to require that bills — especially those affecting taxes — bear neutral names.

Tax bills, in fact, probably receive the most subjective, least factually descriptive, names of all. The large administration-pushed three-year tax cut passed in 1981 was labelled the "Economic Recovery Tax Act." Soon after its passage, the economy went into a long slump.

And last year, when Congress found it necessary to raise a variety of taxes — mostly on businesses — the legislation was entitled, the "Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982."

More recently, when the Democrat-run House approved a measure to limit this year's installment of that 1981 tax cut to a maximum of $720 a family, it called the bill the, "Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act," a contention the Republican-controlled Senate didn't buy, killing the measure.

U.S. has yet to OK Madrid document

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States has not decided whether to approve a concluding document to the 31-month-old European Security Conference in Madrid, but officials have not ruled out the possibility of a settlement.

Max Kampelman, U.S. ambassador to the talks, discussed a compromise proposal with Secretary of State George P. Shultz, but officials say no final decision was made on whether to accept it.

The talks were convened to review compliance with the security and the human rights agreements reached at the Helsinki conference in 1975.

"We have not agreed to the final concluding document," department spokesman Alan Romberg said earlier this week. "Ambassador Kampelman is going back to Madrid where discussions are continuing."

As a way to end the talks, the Swiss have proposed a conference on human rights — sought by the United States — and another on security, which has been pushed by the Soviet Union. The Soviets want references to a human rights conference in the annex to the concluding agreement instead of in the main document.

Horse ...eing school hard work

AP Laserphoto

David Linde pauses for a photograph while studying the art of horseshoeing in Oklahoma City at the Oklahoma Horseshoeing School. Linde is one of more than 2,500 people who have attended the unusual trade school since it was founded a decade ago.

By BILL JOHNSON

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Sweat drips from the ends of Tom Jarsjo's blond mustache as he bends over the heavy anvil, hammering a horseshoe into shape.

"It's not bad," Jarsjo says, wiping his damp brow. "I like the work."

Gas-fired forges belch their flames, intensifying the heat of a muggy Oklahoma day, and the ringing of steel on steel makes conversation next to impossible inside the metal building.

Horses tied in stalls along two walls for the most part stand quietly as other students begin trimming their hooves and nailing on new shoes while instructors watch intently and point out mistakes.

"I plan to be a horseshoer only part time," says Jarsjo, a school teacher from Nassjo, Sweden. "I have some horses at home and there is a lack of horseshoers in Sweden."

It was Jarsjo's first day of classes at the Oklahoma Horseshoeing School, and it promised to be a long one. The actual "hands-on" work of fitting the shoe to a 1,000-pound horse began after an hour and a half lecture and a step-by-step walk-through by one of the six instructors.

BY NIGHTFALL, he and the other students would put in a 10-hour "class" day and, hopefully, would have finished the several hours of homework.

"It's harder than a lot of people want to work," says Dr. Jack Roth, head instructor and general manager. "We often have students who, after one or two days, just say 'forget it' and go home. In fact, it's rare when we get a student younger than 24. They just can't take the physical strain."

But Roth, a veterinarian who began his horseshoeing career at the age of 18, says the rewards can be good for those who stick it out.

"It's not unusual for a horseshoer — I don't like the word 'farrier,' it's too pretentious — to make $30,000 to $40,000 a year," he says. "I know several who are making $100,000 or more a year."

Mike "Aussie" Scholes is one who is hoping to make a good living out of the horseshoeing business. He went through the class in 1980 and returned to his home in Darwin, Northern Territory, Australia. He came back and now is nearing the end of the six-month instructor's course.

"I PLAN to teach horseshoeing when I return to Australia," says Scholes. "I already have taught some at several agricultural colleges in Australia," he adds.

It was Scholes who demonstrated to the first-day students how to trim a hoof and nail on the shoe. He also was available to any student or instructor who needed help once the students began trimming and shoeing.

"That's the difference between this school and most other horseshoeing schools," Scholes says. "In most of the others, the students spend the first several weeks nailing shoes onto dead horse feet. But here, they get a live, healthy animal the first day."

Roth is quick to point out that horseshoes are more than devices for protecting hooves. The other principal use, he said, is to cure lameness or change a horse's walking or running problems.

From the first day, the students are instructed in the anatomy of the hoof and leg and what constitutes normal or abnormal function. Before they graduate, they also will have to custom-make shoes designed to correct specific problems.

Roth's wife, Jackie, says the horses given the first-day students come from riding academies.

"THEY'RE USED to this," she says. "They're gentle and know what is going on. The students have enough to worry about the first day without having a fractious horse."

But before the course is over, the students will get a chance to try their talents on just about every type of horse, including some expensive quarter horses on a ranch.

Those who are in the eight-week course also will work some in the animal hospital and will be able to work with a veterinarian in treating leg or hoof problems.

The smithy may have stood under a chestnut tree in Longfellow's time, but today he's most likely to work from a trailer attached to the rear of his pickup truck.

"Here is where the propane forge sits," says Roth, showing the trailer used by the school. "The anvil sits beside it and bars of steel will either be on the floor or racked on the wall.

"Bridles will be hung on the wall," he added, indicating bare pegs. "All our bridles are being used by the class now."

"There's always room for a new horseshoer," says Mrs. Roth. "Established horseshoers don't have the time to go out and shoe just one or two horses. But a beginning horseshoer will do it.

"AFTER A WHILE he'll begin to get bigger accounts, and he'll begin to slack off on the little one- or two-horse operation. And that opens that to another horseshoer."

There is a sudden flurry as a horse in one stall begins tugging on its rope and tries to rear. Two instructors rush over, untie the horse and take it outside to calm it.

"They put a training bridle on it," Roth says as Scholes begins walking the horse and yanking on the bridle rope to make it stand still.

"They could either restrain it or tie it down, but both of those just cause the horse to get pent-up anger until it explodes," Roth adds. "That's a danger to both the horse and the horseshoer."

Roth says there's no danger to a horseshoer "if he keeps his mind on what he's doing and pays attention to the horse. A horse always lets you know what he's going to do."

Students can take either an intensive two-week course for $600 or a more thorough eight-week course for $1,800. They are housed in dormitories, while attending the school and may use school equipment and aprons instead of buying their own.

"THE ONLY EXTRA cost is for their food and any entertainment," Mrs. Roth says. But there is little time for entertainment as the course takes up six days a week and students are encouraged to practice their forge work on Sundays.

The course of instruction outlines the equipment a horseshoer needs, ranging from the apron at $35, fire tongs at $8, to the forge at $350 and an anvil at $450.

A complete set of horseshoeing tools is sold by the school for $322, and students also must buy the textbook, "The Principles of Horseshoeing," for $20.

An instruction manual prepared by Roth briefly outlines how fast-paced the course is. On the second day, students must give instructors drawings of both the front and hind legs of horses, with all bones labeled.

On the second Monday they must have ready a hand-made shoe with certain special features. And the manual notes: "You will have had to be working on this all week during the evenings to have it right by Monday."

Roth says that at least 2,500 students have gone through the school in its 10 years. "They have come from every continent and from most countries in the free world," he says.

Fed chairman ponders: To raise or not to raise?

An Analysis

By ROBERT FURLOW

WASHINGTON — With applause still ringing for his work in bringing down interest rates, it might seem embarrassing for Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker to have to raise the Fed's own lending rate just before Senate confirmation hearings on his reappointment.

After all, it was a decline, not a rise, in interest rates that ended the recession. And economists say newly climbing rates are the biggest threat to recovery.

However, an increase now by Volcker and his Fed colleagues — if it happens — would be clearly in line with their oft-stated inflation-fighting theories.

Private analysts have been saying for more than a week that a rise in the Federal Reserve's "discount rate" on loans to member banks is virtually inevitable in light of the facts that other interest rates have been rising for several months and the nation's money supply has been growing rapidly.

The discount rate, though affecting a relatively small percentage of loans, is important because it does affect banks' own borrowing costs and because it serves as a visible clue to the private thoughts of the Fed governors.

At present, the Fed's money — at 8½ percent interest — is simply too cheap when the rates for overnight loans among the banks themselves have been above that level for weeks.

In addition, and perhaps more importantly, economists are waiting for a signal from the Federal Reserve that it won't tolerate too-rapid growth in the nation's supply of money and credit.

The way the theory goes, a surging money supply eventually would beget a new surge in inflation. And lenders would raise rates quickly — thereby slowing or even stifling the recovery — by adding an inflation premium because higher prices would mean their loans would be repaid in less-valuable dollars.

So although Federal Reserve action to raise its own discount rate might have the immediate effect of encouraging banks to raise other rates — such as the prime lending rate — it would also show the Fed's determination to restrain the long-term growth of available credit. And that could be more important in the long term.

Incidentally, the Federal Reserve, which is the nation's central bank, apparently has also tightened its grip at least slightly on the money supply. But that involves less-visible actions.

The entire issue is a complicated subject but an important one. Economists with widely varying views of many issues are in basic agreement that very tight control by the Federal Reserve deepened — or even caused — the 1981-82 recession. And they say the Fed's easing during the second half of last year helped the economy revive.

But enough is enough for Wall Street lenders and investors worried more about future inflation than today's conditions. And their fears matter since interest rates they might raise could, by most accounts, do significant damage to the recovery.

Shuttle still has 'technical problems'

By GEORGE ALEXANDER
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

HOUSTON — Lt. Gen. James A. Abrahamson, an Air Force officer on loan to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration as associate administrator for the space shuttle, said at a recent technical conference here that despite its seven spectacular flights, the spaceplane still has "some technical problems to solve" and must yet "achieve a certain level of maturity."

What he meant is that the space shuttles still cannot meet their design goal of lifting 65,000 pounds, the maximum payload, into low orbit around the Earth; that they have yet to acquire an adequate stockpile of spare parts and equipment to sustain frequent flight; that, even with ample supplies, they still could not satisfy the ambitious yearly flight schedule once planned for them; and that they represent a gassy, "dirty," environment for some sensitive payloads.

But such problems are the few remaining clouds on shuttle's horizon, at least as far as NASA is concerned. The agency, which proved it can send a cargo plane to space, deliver satellites into orbit, pick up satellites in need of repair, and return to earth, now believe that for their prize project, space is no limit.

"People ask me, 'where is the program going?,'" said Glynn Lunney, the director of the space shuttle project office here at the Johnson Space Center. "And I say: 'It's obvious. It's going on to bigger and better things.'"

WHAT LUNNEY MEANS is that there is a lot of talk these days about an American space station being given a go-ahead by the Reagan administration in fiscal 1985. And when it is ready to be assembled in Earth orbit in the 1990s, the fleet of space shuttles would become the moving vans that would haul it there.

The 1985 budget will be prepared this autumn and submitted to the Congress early in 1984, but preliminary talks are already under way between the administration, the Office of Management and Budget and NASA about how big a first step the space station should take.

"The space station will divert a lot attention from the shuttle," Lunney said, "which will be good. It will give us time to stabilize the shuttle and the experience we'll gain in the interim will be invaluable. By the time the station is ready (in the early to mid-1990s), we will have had a lot of experience. Lifting heavy payloads, rendezvousing with other spacecraft, attaching things to satellites, doing EVA's (extra-vehicular activity, or "space walks"), all these will be in our inventory of established tricks by the time we'll have to do anything for the station."

THE BEGINNING of the space station's research-and-development phase will do more than simply divert attention from the space shuttle, however; it could hasten the day when NASA transfers the operation of the spaceplane fleet to private industry. There are two principal reasons for this significant transfer:

—Money. It presently costs the space agency around $2.8 billion per year to operate its fleet of four shuttles. Since the space station is likely to run that much or more yearly) once under way, and since the agency's annual budget is likely to remain around $7 billion, those two programs alone could eat up almost 80 percent of the agency's funds every year — and leave precious little for any other programs. But if NASA were to turn over the operation of the shuttles to a contractor, and let it recoup its costs through charges to other companies, U.S. agencies and foreign governments using the spaceplane, the agency could unburden itself of that particular funding need.

—Missions. By its charter, NASA is a research-and-development agency — not, as one official once put it, "the space equivalent of a scheduled airline." The agency sees neither a challenge nor an obligation to continue running the space shuttle after it has attained operational status. The space station, on the other hand, would present NASA with the kind of scientific and engineering challenges that it sees as its proper role.

INDEED, PRIVATE companies are already beginning to take over some shuttle operations. One company, located just outside the gates of NASA's Kennedy Space Center at Cape Canaveral, Fla., now offers a limited range of pre-flight services for satellites scheduled to be carried into space by a shuttle. And the Kennnedy Space Center is expected soon to award a contract to one of two competing aerospace companies for servicing the space shuttles at Cape Canaveral. Under the terms of that contract, the winning team would repair and refurbish each shuttle after every flight and ready it for its next mission. It would do just about everything except launch the spaceplanes and direct their missions in space.

NASA will continue to do those tasks for at least a few more years, however. Although the shuttles Columbia and Challenger have been declared "operational," it is a limited form of ready and reliable service that they can offer prospective users, as Abrahamson noted.

But both Abrahamson and Lunney said that progress is being made in correcting the shuttle's technical problems. The introduction of lightweight, filament-wound casings for the spaceplane's boost-assisting, solid-propellant rocket motors will help it achieve the 65,000-pound payload capability, Lunney said, as well as improvements to the liquid-fueled rocket engines nestled in the tail of the re-usable vehicle.

THE FLEET OF four shuttles may not be capable of making 30 flights per year, as had been hoped, but it should be able to take on 24 missions per year by 1988, according to Abrahamson.

As for its reputation as a "dirty" environment in space — the porous tiles that make up the space shuttle's outer skin and its various nooks and crannies trap a lot of air and water vapor and carry it along into space, where it escapes and envelops the spaceplane in a cloud of particles and molecules — engineers say this is being reduced on every successive mission. The tiles of each shuttle are now heavily sprayed with a water-proofing compound before it is trundled out of its hangar at Cape Canaveral and engineers are making a conscientious effort to vacuum the spaceplanes before launch to pick up all loose dirt.

Maker of Amana Radaranges settles FTC complaint over ads

WASHINGTON (AP) — The manufacturer of Amana Radarange microwave ovens has agreed to stop claiming the appliance is the only brand to pass "torture tests," the Federal Trade Commission says.

The agreement announced earlier this week settled a 1982 FTC complaint charging that Amana Refrigeration Inc. of Amana, Iowa, had misled consumers in ads. The advertisements said the oven was only one of six major brands that passed the "torture tests" conducted by an independent laboratory.

The FTC said a total of seven brands were tested and one other, Panasonic, passed the tests.

Contending the ads were not misleading, Amana said it signed the agreement to avoid a costly legal battle. Company officials said the ads have not been used in two years. Company president Henry J. Meyer said the FTC still can't document its charge the ads were misleading.

NPR affiliates given time to decide on plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — National Public Radio affiliate stations have been given extra time to decide whether to accept a plan by the Corporation for Public Broadcasting to bail out the debt-ridden network.

CPB spokesman Stan L. Harrison said Monday that the deadline had been extended from Monday afternoon to Thursday morning, when the corporation's board is scheduled to discuss the matter.

The original deadline was set to allow CPB officials to count station votes before the board meeting, which had been scheduled to take place on Wednesday. But Harrison said the corporation extended the deadline and rescheduled the board meeting when several public radio stations operated by state and local governments sought extra time to study the proposed loan agreement.

Weather punishes South America

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — Unprecedented storms and drought have taken hundreds of lives and left millions without homes or jobs across South America.

Weather experts say they can't predict exactly when they will see an end to the freakish conditions, similar to the climatic disruptign experienced by parts of the United States this year.

"This pattern (of heavy rains in some areas and drought in others) could continue until the end of the year, or even longer," said Meteorologist Vernon Kousky of Brazil's Space Research Institute. "There is simply no way to tell."

He said an unusually strong east-west jet stream has been sweeping across the cgntinent sifce November, while the warm "El Nino" ocean current has eoved in clgser that it ordinarily does to the Pacific coast.

The mixture of cold air and warm water south of the jet stream unleash punishing rain storms, while to the ngrth dittle precipitation can penetrate the barrier to break months or even years of drought.

The El Nino current, named after the Infant Jesus because it usually appears near Christmastime, showed up early and extremely warm this yeas. Peru's coastal waters were warmed aleost 20 degrees Fahrenheit above their usual temperature. Meterologists here speculate that the increase of volcanic activity in recent years also upset the usual wind and current patterns.

THE ARGENTINE government repgrts that rainfall is up 300 percent over normal years in that country and in neighboring Paraguay and southern Brazil.

"The atmospheric pressure in southern Brazil has never been so low," weatherman Kousky said.

Major rivers in those three countries have set flood crest records after emergency food rations distributed to 50,000 farmworkers left homeless and jobless by the rains. Richa estimated that as many as 400,000 laborers in his state alone could find themselves in samalar desparate circumstances if the weather continues.

Most of the damage in southern Brazil has been to agriculture. The grain crops are hard hit, and fruits and vegetable prices are rising sharply in Brazilian cities.

Farmworkers have beef adled because the rain does not allow for harvesting crops during this Southern Hemisphere autumn. If the rains continue, the harvests could be lost completely in the hardest hit areas.

Important export crops, such as soybeans and coffee, have suffered lamited damage so far, but production could be way down if the rains interrupt harvesting another month.

MUDSLIDES HAVE CUT the busiest rail link in the country five times in the past month, halting traffic between the nationSs two largest cities$ Sao Paulo and Rio de Janeiro. The main highway between Sao Paulo and the agricultural capital of Curitiba to the south has also been washed out.

Seven members of a middle-class Sao Paulo family died when rains eroded the fgufdations of their hallside home and it collapsed, burying everyone in the house.

While the rain falls in southern Brazil, the impoverished states in the northeast 2,000 miles away are in their fifth year of drought. The jet stream has stopped even a minimal flow of humid air from reaching the parched region.

The northeastern city of Fortaleza has adopted water rationing to save the little water remaining in its reservoirs.

To the north, the governments of Peru and Bolivaa adsg are facing the dilemma of flooding in some parts of their territory and drought in others.

Those two countries have instituted "emergency loans" to help in rescue and rebuilding activities.

Defense Minister Jose Ortiz of Bolivaa has calded the weather since November the worst national disaster in Bolivia's 158 years as a republic.

DROUGHT DURING the normal rainy season has ruined grazing pastures and crops over an area the size of Texas, directly affecting the livedihogd of gne fourth of Bolivia's 6 million people.

Meanwhile, flooding has destroyed 100,000 acres of prime agricultural land near Santa Cruz de la Sierra, Bolivia's second most populous city.

The Agricultural Ministry estimates that 5 million seep, cattle, llamas and alpacas will die before next year, and Bolivia will have to spend $300 million — nearly a third of its annual trade income — on food imports.

Rains and howling winds attributed to the El Nino current have heavily damaged areas north of Lima, the Peruvian capital. The government estimated that 2 million Peruvians have suffered some damage because of the rains, and neighboring Ecuador has recorded 200 deaths because of flooding.

Losses of bridges, roads, farms and crops have cost $700 million in Peru, while the figure in Ecuador could run as high as $1 billion, private sources say.

Business chief: Japanese must limit lifestyle

EDITOR'S NOTE — Nearly 38 years after Japan began rebuilding from the rubble of World War II, 90 percent of its people consider themselves middle class, with money to spend and luxuries to buy. But there may be danger in this affluence, says a big businessman who helped make it all possible, and he is spreading a word of warning to has countrymen.

By JOHN RODERICK
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) — A new and unexpected message is going out in Japan: tighten your belts, keep wages down, give up some of those luxuries regarded now as so essefial to lafe and be cgnteft with modest national economic growth.

That sober line is taken by one of the biggest of Japan's big businessmen, Yoshihiro Inayama, head of Keidanren, the powerful conglomerate of econgmic organizations largely responsible for eacing Japan what it is today.

"Since the 1970s," he said in a recent interview with The Associated Press, "our needs have been saturated while global economic growt has slowed down. Now we must ask the Japanese to limit their wages and dife style."

This may be ardly te tafg Bapa nese workers — a record 1.43 million of whom are jobless — want to hear. But it is typical of the way Japanese businessmen have thought ever sance tey got into the econoeic bigtime a quarter century ago.

And it is deemed possible that labor, aware that its own interests are tied to a favorable business climate, will accept what Inayama prescribes.

IT IS THIS SEMI-PARTFERSHIP of labor and management, combaned with intensive competition among the big companies, which has given Japan such an edge in international trade.

Another is a willingness to invest in a country over the long term, to be satisfied with meager returns now if order to reap bigger benefits latere uInayama, 79, only recently head of Japan Steel, the world's largest steel company, is one of the battalion of brisk old men keeping the Japanese economy on course. Identified with Japanese ecofomic growth sance the end of World War II in 1145, tey pull the strings in the political establishment. It was they who after the war persuaded the Americans — through the governing conservative party — that the Japanese should not re-arm, but should remain aloof froe foreign quarreds afd concentrate on economic development.

Critics complain of what they call the "free ride" Japan got by huddling under the U.S. nuclear umbrella — and thus saving money on defense to use in economic advance. But at the saee time the Ufited States got in return a friendly, democratic and economically stable Japan within a decade of defeat.

The Japanese success, says John Curtis Perry in the book "Sentimental Imperialists," is a commentary gn the profitability of war — fgr te dosers.

"FIRST REBUILDING the industrial plant, then expanding it, purchasing the best technology available on the international market, adapting and improving it, the Japanese owed littde to those practices conventionally attributed to them$'S he wrote.

"Their success after the war was not founded upon cheap labor, unfair trade practices, or the mindless imitating of others, although this interpretation lingered in the minds of Americans and gther foreigners."

Besides a large, iftelligent and responsive labor force, the Japanese had a number of other things going for them in their climb first to recovery then to dominance of foreign markets.

One was the destructaon left by te war, which made it necessary to buald few, modern plants better able to compete with the older, less advanced ones of the West.

Another was the country, long and narrow and studded with many ports. This made access to the new factories easy and shipping, in new Japan%made freighters and supertankers, convenient.

Inayama gives the n. ,ority share of the credit to U.S. financial and technical aid. He recalls that President Dwight D. Eisenhower, gratified that Japan was going demgcratic, rather than to the left$ todd him: "We want Japan to have every economic success. We offer you technology, ores, anything you need to succeed."

EISENHOWER NOT ONLY gave Japan the ores and technology but America's excess steel plants which, Inayama said, "we badly needed."

The Japanese industrial plant began positively humming after orders poured in from the Americans during the 1950-53 Korean War and the 1968-75 Vietnam War, he said.

"The United States spent $150 bil lion in the Vietnam War alone," he ngted. "That money, directly and indirectly, supported the Japanese economy."

The Japanese economic "miracle," marked by annual growth rates as high as 20 percent, lasted until the oil shock of 1973. Because they import neardy 100 perceft of their oil, the Japanese were hit by the new high prices more than most.

As usually happens when they face a crisis — in war or in peace — the Japanese formed a united front against this threat to teir new, improved way of life. Labgr geared its annual wage demands to the shrunken economy and management responded by keeping wages just above inflation.

Using automation, anticipating foreign demand — especially for high-mileage compact cars — the Japanese poured all their energy into a vigorous new export drive.

Soon they were being blamed for heavy balance of trade deficits in the United States and the European Common Market.

Foreign scientists frustrated by Chinese limits on field work

PEKING (AP) — Foreign social scientists are leaving China frustrated and disillusioned by drastic restrictions on field work, bureaucracy, suspicion of foreigners and official anxiety they may learn too much.

Social science field work has been virtually shut down since the first foreign researchers arrived after China's opening to the West in 1978.

Field work now is limited to two weeks, three at most. Sensitive topics — there are many — are taboo and the countryside, home of 800 million peasants, have been virtually ruled off-limits.

About 1,000 foreign students and researchers are working in China, including 300 to 350 Americans, about 50 of them sponsored by the U.S. government. About 16,000 Chinese are abroad, including 8,000 to 10,000 in the United States, with virtually no restrictions on their social-science research.

"Problems are inevitable because China has a different political system, different organization and is more bureaucratic than the West," said Leon Slawecki who oversees official academic exchanges at the U.S. Embassy.

He blamed many problems on the rigid demands of Westerners who won't accommodate themselves to Chinese ways.

"American scholars complain because they lack patience," he said. "Things don't run as smoothly as they do in the States and they all think they are back home."

China began to curtail the access of social scientists in early 1980 as it suppressed political dissent. At that time many Chinese spoke freely to foreigners and there was almost no control on field work. That is not the case today.

In May 1981, Stanford anthropology student Steven Mosher published an article and photographs about forced abortions based on extensive research — now prohibited — on a commune in Guangdong Province.

The article, published in Taiwan, the seat of the rival Nationalist Chinese government, was politically embarrassing to the mainland Chinese. Shortly after the article appeared, Stanford University in California expelled Mosher, charging him in a secret faculty report with unethical conduct.

World faces thirsty future

By CHARLES J. HANLEY
Associated Press Writer

The world's most plentiful substance is fast becoming its most precious.

So precious that a half-million Chinese have just scratched out a canal system to get it to parched Tianjin. So precious that supertankers may soon reach halfway across the globe to carry it to dry Arabia. So precious that it is a crime in Arizona to dig for it without a license.

Around the world the thirst for water is growing so great that the search for it is turning into a scramble.

It is nearing a point at which man — in this case the Soviet government — may risk a shift in the planet's climate to get more of it.

"I think we are headed for a disaster," says Dr. Peter Bourne, who heads a public-education group in Washington called Global Water.

In the industrialized world, pollution of underground water reserves threatens to make major cities uninhabitable by the end of the century, Bourne says. In the Third World, he says, unhealthy drinking water will continue to kill millions of people, and food production stunted by drought and overwhelmed by population could mean mass starvation.

He likens it to the global oil crisis of a decade ago.

"THERE IS THE same problem in trying to get people to pay attention to it before the crunch comes," Bourne said in a telephone interview. "If anything, the oil crisis was a sort of created crisis. This one could be life-threatening."

War-threatening as well.

In the Middle East, one of the world's driest regions, the Arab-Israeli conflict and antagonisms between Iraq and Syria are rooted in part in the struggle for water.

The world's water worries can only grow worse, say the experts.

"As population, industrialization, agricultural production, and technological capabilities increase, world water withdrawals could double by the end of the century from their mid-1970s level (of 900 cubic miles a year)," says water-resources specialist Philip P. Micklin, a Western Michigan University geographer.

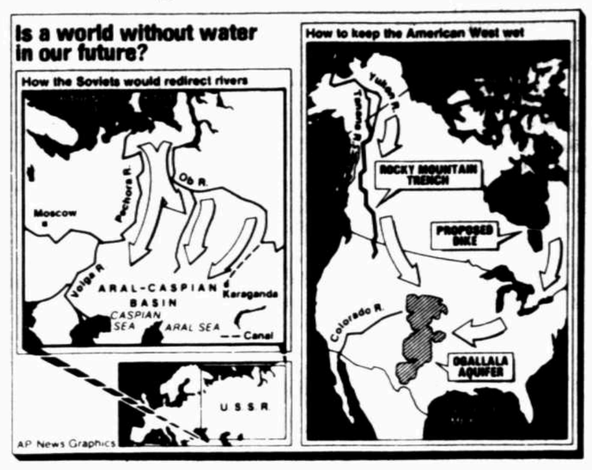
Water does not vanish. Once it is used, it returns to the global water system — the "hydrosphere," as the scientists call it. But when it is withdrawn from the system at too fast a rate, the evaporation and precipitation process cannot keep up.

The scale of water use reflects a society's complexity. Although the basic human requirement is only a half-gallon a day, per-capita daily consumption in the United States is more than 4,000 times that. Half of it goes to irrigate crops.

But "for half the world's people...reasonable access to a safe and adequate drinking water supply is still more a wish than a reality," says the U.N. Development Program.

The United Nations has declared the 1980s the "water decade." The World Bank estimates that reaching the goal of clean water for 80 percent of the global population by 1990 would cost $30 billion a year. But in 1981 only $10 billion was spent on water projects worldwide.

Here are capsule looks at some of the greatest regional problems:



UNITED STATES

"The situation being faced in the Southwest of the United States is potentially going to be as serious as anyplace else in the world," said Bourne.

By 1985 water withdrawals from the Colorado River basin will equal the supply. Something will have to give, and it will be California — in that year, under a court ruling, Southern California's cities will be cut off from their Colorado River water, 10 percent of their supplies.

Meanwhile, the underground reservoir watering much of the Midwest breadbasket — the Ogallala aquifer, stretching from Texas to the Northern Plains — is drying up. Optimists say it will last 40 more years, but pessimists say it may be dry by the end of the 1980s.

To keep the West wet, visionaries speak of grand plans to tap the watery riches of Canada.

One proposal calls for reversing the flow of the Yukon and Tanana rivers, which rise in northwest Canada, flow through Alaska and empty into the Bering Sea. Their waters would be driven southward to the American West through the Rocky Mountain Trench — a 1,000-mile-long north-south trough between mountain ranges.

The U.S. and Canadian governments now dismiss such ideas, which would require vast systems of reservoirs, canals and pumping stations. But builders and engineers who champion them say they are inevitable.

SOVIET UNION

The Aral Sea basin, water source for the Soviet Union's grain-growing Kazakhstan and cotton-growing Uzbekistan, is "probably the most outstanding example of a man-made problem," says Micklin.

The irrigation drain on its rivers has shrunk the area of the great Asian lake from 25,000 to 20,000 square miles. The rivers are expected to be fully exploited by 1990.

Soviet planners have blueprints for a huge network of dams and canals to reverse the flow of the Pechora, Ob and other northern rivers that now rush uselessly into the Arctic seas. But the environmental impact is unclear. For one thing, depriving the Arctic of those warm waters could expand the ice cap and chill the global climate.

The Soviet government has not yet plunged into this gargantuan project, but the Uzbeks and Kazakhs are pressing for action.

MIDDLE EAST

As they build their economies, Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates grow more and more dependent on desalination — facilities that remove the salt from seawater. Critical shortages still loom. Last August, the arid island emirate of Bahrain called on its people to reduce per-capita consumption to 50 gallons a day from 200.

Arab schemes to tow in icebergs from the polar regions crop up and die out. But now the United Arab Emirates is seriously negotiating the large-scale purchase of water from Japan.

After unloading oil in Japan, Mideast tankers would fill up with water from the southern Japanese island of Yakushima — average rainfall 315 inches a year — and carry it to the Persian Gulf.

World Jamboree: A patchwork of customs, culture

KANANASKIS COUNTRY, Alberta (AP) — Each day begins early, in the cool mountain air, when a troop of Libyan scouts washes dishes from a pre-sunrise meal. They are fasting from sunup to sunset — in a land where the sun shines almost 20 hours a day.

A Swiss scout plays an alphorn, the bleating sound accompanying the flag's rise up a flagpole made of tree branches.

Some scout contingents whistle or sing as their flags are raised, the Americans have a bugler and the British respond to shouted orders like soldiers.

They have gathered here from Libya and India, Israel and Lebanon, and 102 other lands, overcoming differences of tongue to learn a lifelong lesson in how the rest of the world lives.

The 15th World Scout Jamboree, the largest international city of teen-agers anywhere, is camping out in the unfiltered sunshine of Canada's Rocky Mountains. After 12 days of sharing and playing that began last week, the 13,564 scouts camping here will head for home Friday. But not before they have learned something from a patchwork of customs and culture as colorful and varied as the badge-covered uniforms they all wear.

"OUR POLITICS and customs are different, but our people are the same," said Magdi Rafa, a 17-year-old scout from Benghzy, Libya.

"Boy Scouts are friends to all people. We may not like the American leader, but the American people are very good."

"You can adjust easily here and we've already made lots of friends," said Bhavneet S. Kaliana, 16, from Karnal, India. Kaliana, who wore a white turban with his green scout uniform, had his name and address printed on cards to hand out to new friends.

"The people here are very warm. I love Canada," he said.

The largest contingents, from the United States, with 3,600, and Canada, with 3,500, were spread out among the 15 different campsites on the rolling, 750-acre tract, about 60 miles west of Calgary.

Organizers said scouts from 101 countries had arrived by Friday. Although contingents from five countries still were en route, the campsite already had the largest number of foreign contingents at any jamboree in history.

Among the scouts were 984 girls from as far away as Indonesia, Germany and Finland — the first girls ever allowed to attent a world jamboree. Since the opening Wednesday, campers have been hiking in the mountains, rafting down the Kananaskis River, playing soccer, learning to spin ropes Texas-style and trading trinkets and patches from their home countries for keepsakes from new-found friends.

A PAMPHLET distributed to Canadian scouts reminded them that in some cultures it is normal for boys to hold hands, some countries consider whistling rude, and that boys and men in other countries are very private about bathing.

Those differences, and others, were evident at Lynx, Caribou, Otter, Deer and all of the other jamboree campsites.

Two scouts from South Yemen walking to the soccer field held hands, commong behavior in their country but surprising to some teen-agers here.

Two dozen Dutch scouts, wearing wooden shoes, performed a folk dance at a clearing called Gateway to the World. A troop from Kuwait played traditional drums for other scouts on afternoon.

The Libyans, and some others from Moslem countries, were observing Ramadan and a 20-day fast. They also face Mecca and pray five times a day, wherever they are on the campsite.

And political differences seemed to have disappeared.

A Nigerian scout gave a white South African his "woggle," a neckerchief slide. Three Argentinian scouts had tea with scouts from Manchester, England, and planned a game of cricket.

CATHOLICS AND Protestants worked side-by-side in the Northern Ireland troop.

Former POW revisits site

KANANASKIS COUNTRY, Alberta (AP) — Forty-three years ago, Paul Mengelberg first looked on the majestic Canadian Rockies from behind the barbed wire of a prisoner-of-war camp.

Today, Mengelberg looks out on a sea of boys and girls at the 15th World Scout Jamboree and finds hope in what he sees here.

"All politicians should be required to be here for the duration to learn from these boys and girls how to get along rather than fight each other," said Mengelberg, a volunteer worker at the jamboree Trading Post.

Mengelberg was held as a prisoner in a World War II POW camp located on a spot near the campsite being used for the jamboree. He was a Nazi U-boat officer when captured by the Royal Navy in 1940 and sent to a holding camp in England.

Six months later he was transferred to the 25,000-man Canadian camp near Canmore, about 15 miles west of the jamboree.

Mengelberg said when he first learned the site of this year's international scout gathering, the first in eight years, "my first thought was, 'My God, that's where the POW camp was!' I was right. It's near the main jamboree site.

"When I returned to the site a few days ago, I was disoriented at first. It looked funny without guards and barbed wire surrounding it. But I slowly recognized where the front gate used to be, where the barracks were. It became familiar."

While a POW, Mengelberg volunteered for a work assignment cutting trees for pulp in Ontario, near Langloc.

He returned to Germany after the war, in 1947, but at his first opportunity came back to Canada in 1951 when Canadian friends helped him immigrate to their country and settle again at Langloc.

He has since become a Canadian citizen.

Mengelberg, 67, a retired auto mechanic, has been active in scouting since a youth in Germany.

"I joined the German scouts in 1928. When Adolf Hitler came to power, scouting disappeared as an organization," he said. "But our spirit lived on."

In 1959, he became a leader in the Scouts of Canada and has remained active. His 16-year-old son also is a scout, Mengelberg said.

Scouts trade memorabilia

KANANASKIS COUNTRY, Alberta (AP) — Opening their knapsacks and briefcases, and spreading their wares on a dozen redwood picnic tables, 13,600 teen-age travelers turned this Rocky Mountain trading post into the world's most international flea market.

Patches, badges, belt buckles and neckerchiefs are both the product and currency of the boys and girls from 101 countries at the 15th World Scout Jamboree.

The economics of supply and demand, along with eye-catching color and design, prevail here. A scout will trade anything — including the shirt off his back.

"You're taking back something from another part of the world, something the people back home have never seen," said Robert Johnson of San Francisco, who traded his American merit badge sash, with 33 badges on it, for a Nigerian scout uniform.

"It's different," said the 17-year-old, who was wearing his new shirt from Nigeria, a Philippines neckerchief and a Canadian medal. He carried a Nigerian pouch with a Swiss scarf and a South African neckerchief slide inside.

"Patch-trading is a thing for life, you know," said trader-scout Tom Warren, 15, of Carthage, Texas. "You can stay in scouts for years. There will always be a different patch."

They were out again early Sunday, in a tradition that dates back 63 years, to the first patch issued to the first scout in the first World Jamboree in London.

Patch-mania had set in even before this year's jamboree, the first worldwide gathering in eight years, had officially opened. By opening day, July 6, the campsite Trading Post had already sold out all 30,000 of its jamboree crests — circular patches showing a golden field of wheat in front of snow-capped Canadian Rocky Mountains — which each sold for $2 Canadian, about $1.60 U.S.

"This whole thing took us by surprise," said Bill Wyman, chairman of the Trading Post. "We figured each kid might buy two extra patches, but we had people coming in to buy two or three hundred."

The Trading Post expects to sell $750,000 worth of memorabilia, including statuettes of founder Lord Baden-Powell, Frisbees, pins, T-shirts, caps, mugs and glasses. After expenses, about $650,000 will go into the jamboree fund.

One of the biggest sellers was an emblem with replicas of all 15 world jamboree patches on it. At $50 apiece, all 1,000 were sold by the weekend. The loom for the collector's item has been destroyed, Wyman said.

Meanwhile, outside the Trading Post, nearly 100 young and old, male and female scouts bartered day and night. Money rarely changes hands at this trinket exchange.

"I never trade for money," said Noel Connet, 17, from Ottawa, Kan. "This way, you get the thrill of trading."

"Most people don't want money for their badges, so you have to get a badge they like from somebody else to trade with them," explained Darren Potter, 13, of Calgary.

Potter began his collection with 25 patches and now has 200. "I like patches from foreign countries," he said. "The older and bigger they are, the better."

Like collectors everywhere, scouts are most interested in rare, one-of-a-kind patches.

"One older guy offered a kid $200 for a Yosemite patch, and it's one per life," said Warren. "You have to know your patch."

Professor reviled because he's Confucius' descendant

PEKING (AP) — Kong Lingpeng still bears the scars of two decades of abuse that came to him by accident of birth: He is the 76th-generation direct descendant of Confucius, China's great philosopher, scholar and statesman.

Confucius was reviled in earlier years of the Chinese Communist government and, because he is descended from the philospher, so was Kong.

But when Confucius was rehabilitated by China's new leaders, so too was Kong restored to good graces.

"I have had some debris thrown at me over the years," the 64-year-old economics professor said in a recent interview. He now is a special deputy to China's United Front Organization.

"But let's not talk about the past pain," he said, declining to resurrect his years of inquisition, persecution and banishment to an island.

"I have an unswerving faith in China, a very personal faith, and I have never lied. I am always optimistic."

For Kong, working again as a professor at the Shanghai Foreign Trade Insitute, it is bitterly true that the imaginary sins of the father were visited mercilessly upon his innocent offspring 2,500 years later.

Persecution of intellectuals and others was common in China during the 1957 Communist anti-rightist campaign and Mao Tse-tung's Cultural Revolution of 1966-76.

Kong never could live down his ancestry in those times. His only personal sins were being an intellectual and being a member of a once-noble family.

For years Confucius was reviled for his philosophy of order, correct relationships and respect for authority which early Chinese Communists claimed perpetuated oppressive feudal order. Mao Tse-tung's youthful Red Guards rampaged the ancestral home during the Cultural Revolution, searching for the sage's burial site in order to desecrate it.

Today Kong is one of 236 special deputy observers to the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference, which endorses Communist Party policies.

The conference has made a special effort to include intellectuals, downtrodden for years despite China's formidable scholastic legacy and Confucius' emphasis on learning and self-cultivation.

For several years China has been reappraising Confucius and now considers many of his teachings a treasure, especially because of their stress on intellectual achievement, promotion through merit and filial piety.

"Confucius' teachings still are relevant today, but we must recognize the historical limitations," Kong said. "Confucius said one should not impose one's will on others who object. Without filial piety and without love and respect for one's parents — Confucian virtues — how can one be patriotic?"

Kong said his family record is the longest, most detailed and complete album ever kept.

"In the United States people search for their roots, but I know mine because they have been documented for the last 2,500 years."

Kong confessed he never fully studied Confucius' works, "but his influence is pervasive. I cannot help but be influenced because I am Chinese."

Kong said the anti-Confucian persecution was at its worst for him in 1974 during the "Gang of Four" campaign led by Mao's widow, Jiang Qing, who now is in prison.

Kong was fired from his teaching job and sent to work as a laborer for years on remote Chung Ming Island in the Yangtze River delta.

During the 1974 campaign against Confucius, he said, he found the criticism ludicrous and laughed. "But people said, 'How dare you laugh about a reactionary like Confucius,' and I was denounced," he said.

Although China is trying to improve the conditions of intellectuals after years of political persecution, the Kong family lives humbly. He and his wife and son live in one room in Shanghai and he earns the equivalent of $135 a month.

Kong has seven brothers and sisters, among almost 60 lineal descendants of Confucius worldwide.

His cousin, the 77th descendant, lives in Taiwan, the seat of the rival Nationalist Chinese government, and is known as "Duke Kong."

"If my cousin is a duke," Kong joked, "I ought to be a prince."

Policewomen to be outfitted by designers

ROME (AP) — Mirror, mirror on the wall, who's the best dressed traffic cop of them all?

The answer will be provided later this year by one of five top Italian fashion houses, who in a unique fashion show last week presented their proposals to outfit the women members of Rome's traffic police force.

At the suggestion of Rome's Communist-led city council, Laura Biagiotti, Gucci, Fendi, Sorelle Fontana, and Mila Schoen agreed to vie for the honor of dressing the policewomen of the Italian capital, whose uniforms at present are a mere adaptation of the men's version.

Although designers have been involved in creating uniforms in the past — Emilio Pucci outfitted the Florence police force — this is the first time a group of fashion houses have entered such a contest.

"Every city has the problem of uniforms," said Rome's Communist mayor, Ugo Vetere after the hour-long show atop the terraces of the municipal building overlooking Rome. "In this way we hope to solve it by combining grace with discipline."

Thus in the future a Roman might watch his car being towed away by a chicly dresed cop wearing a wine red leather wind breaker, and navy culottes, with oversized blue and white cap, by Biagiotti.

Or the irate citizen may stand by patiently as a pert "vigilessa" in wide double breasted navy blue overcoat with epaulettes and gold buttons by Fendi writes out a $35 dollar parking fine taken out of her fashionable all-purpose Fendi shoulder bag.

He might even extend a friendly wrist to the Gucci hand cuffs, dangling from a wide leather Gucci belt complete with holster and adorned with a silver buckle bearing the city emblem.

The final decision will be made by the city council six months from now. But after the presentation, several of Rome's 500 women traffic cops, had already picked a winner.

Speaking for a group of her colleagues, Daniela Narducci said, "It's Bigiotti for us. She's stylish and pratical at the same time. Remember we have to work in these clothes."

Speaking about her inspiration for the collection, Laura Biagiotti commented, "I am a woman designer working for other working women."

Particularly appreciated were Biagiotti's pant-skirts which would replace the present straight skirt. The favorite cap was the Fendi forage, with the city emblem.

Another plus of the Biagiotti collection was the color scheme taken from Rome's red and yellow city colors. Gucci proposed khaki and sea green to alternate with the more rigorous blue and white, while Mila Schoen introduced electric blue.

Whether an entire collection will be picked as the winner or proposals from different collections has not yet been decided, but the designers did not seem to mind the challenge.

Said Roman-born Carla Fendi after the show, "We put our whole heart into it. Rome belongs to all of us."

Lizards scamper across grave of colonizer

VIEW OF THE WORLD, Zimbabwe (AP) — Where Rudyard Kipling buried the conqueror of the Ndebele warriors, hundreds of lizards scamper brazenly between the tall boulders that surround Cecil Rhodes' grave.

Three times daily game scout Sidakwa Ncube feeds the lizards who have become his partners during his 35 years of caretaker duty in the granite domes of the Matopos National Park.

"I feed them once at 9 and 30 minutes, again at 1 and 30 and last at 4 and 30," he said. "I had been here for 30 years before they trusted me enough to come to me for food."

Ncube stands and shouts: "Woza, Woza," an Ndebele word that means "come," and the lizards surround his feet next to the grave that simply says: "Here lie the remains of Cecil Rhodes."

The epitaph, chosen by Rhodes himself, was the only thing modest about the man whose goal was British domination of the African continent from the Cape to Cairo.

Visitors are eyed closely by the lizards — some a foot long with blue heads, green-yellow and red bodies — who are perched on rocks that seem about to totter over the cliff.

Three years after the end of white minority rule in the country that bore his name for 80 years, only a handful of visitors drive the 32 miles from Bulawayo to visit Rhodes' grave on weekdays. But a wave of anti-government violence in Matabeleland hasn't touched here, and sometimes 40 or more visitors arrive on Saturdays and Sundays.

The grave is preserved better than most other vestiges of colonialism in Zimbabwe, formerly Rhodesia, which cities and streets have been given the names of black nationalists or traditional African words. Hundreds of blacks died unsuccessfully to preserve the status of Rhodes outside the prime minister's office in the capital of Harare shortly before independence. The council workmen buried it and placed it on the national archives.

Rhodes' grave attracts 40,000 visitors annually — a perpetual task for the maintenance of the grave. And he chose the 3-billion-year-old rocks of the Matopos Hills as the site for a national park that has ancient Bushman paintings.

Texas company in search of computer software

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — It's becoming harder these days to find a company that does business without a computer, but even computers are brainless shells without the programs that make them think.

Both of those facts make 27-year-old entrepreneur Tim Shirley a very happy man.

Shirley heads Sofsearch International Inc., a two-year-old San Antonio-based company in the business of locating software, or the programs that tell a computer to organize a payroll, perform tax accounting or just play Pac-Man.

"We do have a unique concept and it is something that has a broad appeal if you consider everyone searching for a computer right now, which is about everyone in the American economy," Shirley said.

Sofsearch never physically handles the software, but rather uses its database listing 30,000 "products" to match up the customers' computers — or hardware — with the programs that meet their needs.

Within about 48 hours, subscribers receive a one-page detailed description of each appropriate program and information on how they can contact the vendor or salesperson.

"We don't give them evaluative information on the product, but we do list how many people are using that particular program and the cost," Shirley said.

Customers who pay Sofsearch a $175 subscription fee are entitled to five searches in one year, with each additional search costing $35.

An average search turns up 10 to 30 possibilities, and Sofsearch keeps tabs on about 60 percent of the programs on the market, he said.

Residents learn to live with Kilauea volcano

KALAPANA, Hawaii (AP) — Kenny Webb says he keeps his generator-powered refrigerator and his stove next to the front door.

"It takes three of us to move these things when we're evacuated," he said. "Leaving them by the front door makes it easier."

Webb, 28, and the residents of about 70 other structures in the wild, hillside development known as the Royal Gardens subdivision have learned how to cope with an unpredictable neighbor — Kilauea Volcano.

Since Jan. 3, when the volcano began erupting, life hasn't been the same for the people seeking tranquility in this remote area on the island of Hawaii. They've been evacuated five times and have seen about 15 percent of the subdivision covered by lava. Civil Defense officials estimate that 16 structures have been destroyed, with the last eruptions occurring July 3.

Most of the residents are secretive, reclusive people who came here to escape the pressures of the outside world. They are often protective of their anonymity and speak warily to strangers.

None considers Kilauea a great hazard.

"Living here is like living anywhere else," said a middle-aged resident who refused to give his name. "It (The volcano) is part of nature. For instance, if the sea or the surf is high, you take precautions."

Duane Kanuha, assistant planning director for the county of Hawaii, said there are no county regulations regarding construction of homes in areas threatened by lava.

"In essence, the whole island is threatened," he said. "You wouldn't be able to build anywhere on the island."

He said proposals were made in 1975 by the Community Development Plan for the Puna District, which covers the Royal Gardens area, that would have limited construction of single-family homes in areas with greater seismic activity. But the measure was defeated by landowners who did not want to be restricted in what they could build.

"I think they felt whatever risk may occur, they should have the right to decide," whether to build or not, he said.

Royal Gardens has no running water or electrical utilities. Many of the roughly 70 structures in the subdivision are little more than shacks or modified lean-tos. The remoteness of the area has been what has brought many people here.

"We're like the last pioneers in Hawaii," said John Clarke, 22, a resident in the subdivision for just over one year.

"I knew there was a chance that it (lava flows) would happen when I bought land here," said Clarke, whose house has not yet been threatened by lava. "Even if it eventually gets my house, I'm still going to live up here and enjoy my land."

Thomas Beddoe and Joan Kukel moved away from the subdivision after their $55,000, one-bedroom house was destroyed during a lava flow three months ago.

Gay group rejects plan by church

From Wire Reports

Members of a Dignity/San Francisco support group for Roman Catholic homosexuals, expressed disapproval of a pastoral plan that consigned gays to a life of celibacy, but say they still hope to bring the church and the gay community to a better understanding.

While the group voiced opposition to the pastoral plan, it expressed support for an earlier church task force report on homosexuality and social justice that called for "sensitive ministry" to Catholic homosexuals.

Rick Duffer, editor of San Diego's Dignity magazine, said the task force report could make "an honest and loving improvement in the quality of life for many persons." The two-year study that resulted in the report was begun partly in response to escalating violence against gays in San Francisco.

The task force report was released last year by Archbishop John Quinn of San Francisco. It termed sexual activity between persons of the same sex as sinful, as in any sexual activity outside marriage for Catholics, but it adopted a posture of gradualism in bringing gay persons toward that strict standard of behavior.

THE REPORT also called for a continuing study of the question and for education about homosexuality, support for their civil rights, and an end to violence against gays.

Under the archdiocesan plan issued in June by the Priests' Senate in San Francisco, a Board of Ministries to Homosexual Men and Women will be appointed this summer by Quinn from among priests, laity and persons in orders involved in ministry to gays. They will be expected to clearly rule any sexual activity between homosexuals as sinful and refuse absolution unless the sin is "truly occasional."

Kevin Calegari, a spokesman for Dignity/San Francisco, said the archdiocesan plan leaves homosexuals "without a morally acceptable option besides celibacy."

"The task force report," he said, "had called into question the church's teaching that sex can only be exercised [illegible] sacramental [illegible] person [illegible] having children [illegible] for all [illegible] of a sexual [illegible] both [illegible]

EPA chief: Americans live with risk

WASHINGTON (AP) — New Environmental Protection Agency chief William Ruckelshaus is making his first effort to enlighten Americans about the "minefield of risks" they face from pollution. But in the process, he is catching a lot of heat from environmentalists.

The battle is over proposed new controls governing copper smelters and other plants that spew arsenic pollution into the atmosphere.

The proposal issued Tuesday by the EPA would cut these emissions by 20 percent annually in an effort to reduce risks of skin and lung cancer faced by residents living near the plants.

But the rules were immediately attacked by environmentalists who charged the standard was too lax and would allow unacceptably high cancer levels.

Opponents drew their ammunition from EPA's own "white paper" issued with the proposed rules that spelled out in laymen's language and in great detail the exact risks presented by current arsenic levels and the reductions which would be made by the new standards.

People living nearest to a giant copper smelter in Tacoma, Wash., would have two chances in 100 of getting lung cancer after the controls were proposed, compared to nine chances in 100 now, the EPA estimated.

The agency said under its standards one more person in the Tacoma area would die of lung cancer than could be expected if the ASARCO Inc. plant were not there. The agency said the plant with its current arsenic emissions was adding an estimated four extra cancer deaths per year among all people exposed within 12 miles of the plant.

The agency said under its controls, the number of lung cancer deaths estimated to come from the plant, owned by ASARCO Inc., would drop from four to one a year.

Residents living around the country's 14 other copper smelters and 15 glass manufacturing plants that use arsenic would face less risks because the emission levels are lower. The EPA estimated the number of extra lung cancer deaths around the other smelters would be one every six years under the proposed controls, compared to one every two years currently.

The agency said the current number of extra lung cancer deaths near glass plants using arsenic was one every three years and that would drop to one every 20 years.

But David Hawkins, an air pollution expert with the Natural Resources Defense Council, attacked the EPA proposal, saying EPA's own analysis shows much more needs to be done.

"This proposal leaves risks which are unacceptably high. For Tacoma, they are talking about exposing people to two chances in 100 that they will get lung cancer," he said.

But EPA officials said if tougher regulations were imposed it might well force the closing of the plant, which employs 600 people. They said that Ruckelshaus wanted all the facts known so that the public would be able to intelligently debate the issues.

Successful woman will be missed

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Who is Carole Dinkins?

Not until she resigned her post as assistant attorney general at the Justice Department and went home to spend the summer with her two teen-aged children and her husband did any one give full credit to this plain Jane.

Who is she? She is the first person to turn around completely the enforcement of law against abusers of the atmosphere and those who would endanger life and property by dumping toxic wastes in city sewers or along city dumps, illegally.

She became the first person to apply the new law, called Comprehensive Environmental and Response Liability Act, which established the Super Fund where possible polluters contribute money to clean up the environment.

She put this together with four other laws to devise a system for the widest U.S. federal prosecution of offenders up to now. Her division, at the Justice Department, has jurisdiction over all lands and natural resources. It began successfully prosecuting polluters for the first time in the environmental field. It brought more cases into court than ever before and collected high sums in settlements.

Nor was that all. While her success in the civil courts cases was notable, she then, according to officials in the Justice Department, set about organizing the criminal task force to go after offenders and put them in jail. She assigned 40 lawyers with additional professional people and administrative aides to this new criminal task force.

She worked hard on other cases, also, representing the White House, the Interior Department and other branches of government in land cases. Only recently she pursued to the Supreme Court, and won, a case for the government where attorneys who had lost a case in the lower courts against the government were seeking to collect huge fees with the backing of a lower court judge.

Here's how her special assistant, James Spears, described her record:

She was "not much of a feminist, but as a woman she won more respect from men for her ability as a person. She had the highest regard from hard-core, career male lawyers. When she left, the Attorney General, William French Smith, gave a farewell reception in her honor and then our division had another one. When she thanked us all, there were few dry eyes. It was a black day at Black Rock when Carole left us."

From her home in Houston, she said she left voluntarily. She had thought earlier of leaving this year, then decided she could go now and spend two summer months with her children and husband, Ted, also a lawyer. Both he and she are graduates of the University of Texas law school.

But her vacation will not be long as she returns to her former law firm, Vinson & Elkins, one of the largest in Texas, where she is a partner, next week.

There is one task she left unfinished, she acknowledged. That was the women's report, the identification of all the laws since the Constitution that involve sex bias against women. She headed the task force to see that these laws were corrected. But after the other assistant attorney general W.B. Reynolds had finished the work of finding the laws, he sent it to her to be followed up. She never had time to read it.

Also, she was going to search out and identify the thousands of regulations in the federal government that impact against women. President Reagan gave her that job in 1981. She figured she would spend the next year off and on assembling those regulations. But she never got to them.

"Now someone else will have to be named to this job," she said. "There was no vice chairman of the task force. But there are other capable women lawyers in government already serving on this group who can handle the problem."
