Fund formation could change herbicide fight

NEW YORK (AP) — An agreement by seven chemical companies to create a $180 million fund for Vietnam veterans who claim they were injured by Agent Orange could shift the focus of the long legal battle over the herbicide to the U.S. government.

Attorneys for the chemical companies and for the plaintiffs — veterans, their wives and children — reserved the right to sue the government after announcing their agreement Monday.

"I hope the president of the United States directs the Veterans Administration to honor the claims of the Vietnam combat veterans and recognizes that chemical bullets are just as deadly as lead bullets — they just take longer to kill," said attorney Victor J. Yannacone Jr., who helped organize the class-action suit.

The Veterans Administration has not acknowledged service-connected disabilities resulting from Agent Orange and has made no disability payments on Agent Orange claims.

Veterans' lawyers called the agreement the largest settlement ever in a products liability suit, but it must still be approved by U.S. District Judge Jack B. Weinstein. Initial reaction among veterans was mixed, and some voiced anger that the companies would avoid a trial.

"It's pretty disgusting. It's just a copout. This thing has got to go to court so the public can see what has happened," said veteran Mike Mullings of the Oklahoma Agent Orange Outreach Committee.

But Yannacone, who left the suit because of a dispute, "The veterans have won the final battle of the Vietnam War."

Weinstein said he would hold a public hearing before approving the settlement for veterans to air their views.

Agent Orange settlement 'surprising'

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Vietnam War veteran Roger Stinson today said the $180 million agreement by seven chemical companies to set up a fund for veterans injured by the defoliant Agent Orange "caught us completely by surprise."

"It came completely out of the blue," Stinson, 34, has been leading the cause for Midland-area veterans to get compensation for Agent Orange-related illness and for recognition that their sickness is real and not faked and not just an excuse for laziness.

He called the fund "such a piddling amount."

"I have absolutely no idea how this thing is going to be distributed (if the agreement is upheld)," Stinson said. In Midland alone, approximately 120 Vietnam War veterans are adversely affected by Agent Orange. He estimated that 350 Midland-Odessa area veterans are suffering ill effects — including rashes, diarrhea, mental lapses, a "weird" cancer, loss of stability — of Agent Orange.

"We weren't expecting a settlement, honestly. We knew we were going to win; the facts were too prevalent."

He said veterans, such as those in his group, United Vietnam

Roger Stinson

Veterans Organization, and the Veterans of Foreign War, AmVets, Disabled American Veterans, and Vietnam Veterans of America, "are still looking at years of settlement."

"We're real curious how the Veterans Administration is going to react." Although the VA has treated symptoms of Agent Orange, it does not recognize Agent Orange as a disability-induced factor of war. "They've been saying 'there's nothing wrong with you guys.'"

"They have to treat us for our symptoms, but they can't treat us for Agent Orange."

Stinson said many veterans suffering side effects of Agent Orange have medical bills in excess of $20,000.

Many veterans, such as Stinson, a former schoolteacher and accountant, are unable to work full-time. "They (the veterans) need money to supplement their income." The veterans, who expect to live not much beyond 50, want security for their families and, in cases, funds to start independent businesses. Most veterans find it difficult to work for others due to the high incident of absenteeism caused by illness.

As did other veterans, Stinson, a U.S. Army paramedic who served on a reconnaissance team in the war, said he had expected the case against the chemical companies to go to trial.

Boy escapes kidnapper as friend pleads for life

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — An 11-year-old boy escaped from his kidnapper and ran five miles across the desert for help after listening to a 12-year-old friend plead for his life and say how much he loved his parents before being killed, according to police.

The partially clad body of Michael Perry was found Monday morning in the Tortolita Mountains following a massive search.

William Castaneda, who had been released from state prison in December, was arrested and charged with first-degree murder Monday.

The two boys were abducted from a street in downtown Tucson around noon Sunday while sightseeing after competing in a chess tournament, police said. Both were sexually molested before being taken to the desert foothills about 20 miles north-west of the city, police said.

Deputy Pima County Attorney David Lawrence described the ordeal of the 11-year-old boy, who was not identified, during a Superior Court hearing Monday. The dead youth's mother burst into tears in the back of the courtroom while Lawrence spoke.

After listening to Lawrence's account, Pima County Judge Pro Tempore Margaret Maxwell ordered the 40-year-old Castaneda held without bond on charges of first-degree murder, kidnapping and sexual assault.

Lawrence said the state would be "unquestionably asking for the death penalty" in the case.

Police said the boy escaped as a man was tying his pleading friend to a tree and ran five miles through the desert before finding two men on an outing in an area called Wild Burro Canyon. After listening to the boy's story, the men took him to a police station.

Castaneda was arrested in the area about a half hour before

Perry's body was found by searchers. The suspect's pickup truck got stuck in the sand and he called a friend to help him free it, police said.

The suspect's friend, who was not identified, was stopped at a roadblock as he drove into the area and provided information which led police to Castaneda, Tucson Police Sgt. Ron Ives said.

Castaneda was released from state prison in December after serving 10 years of a 40- to 60-year sentence for pleading guilty to burglary, assault with a deadly weapon and lewd and lascivious acts involving a Tucson housewife whose home he had broken into, authorities said.

Barry Wilson, Perry's physical education teacher at Secrist Middle School in Tucson, said the slain youth "was quiet, very easygoing. In class he participated ... he was always smiling."

Krueger won't ask recount, leaves race to Hance, Doggett

AUSTIN (AP) — Conservative U.S. Rep. Kent Hance and liberal state Sen. Lloyd Doggett apparently will meet in a runoff election June 2 to determine the Democratic U.S. Senate nominee.

Former congressman Bob Krueger, conceding that his middle-of-the-road philosophy had pulled in too few votes, decided Monday not to seek a statewide recount after finishing 1,161 votes out of the running.

Although Krueger said he would ask for computer and machine vote verification, he said he doubts the outcome will change.

"Barring a very unexpected turn of the numbers, it's going to be Hance and Doggett," said Krueger, who in 1978 lost the Senate race to Republican Sen. John Tower by just over 12,000 votes.

Hance said he was ready for the race, and an aide said Doggett also was prepared for the runoff.

"We feel like we're in good shape. We'll be in the process of trying to raise enough money to run a media (advertising) campaign," Hance said. "Clearly, Hance is a hard campaigner. But so is Lloyd Doggett. We think we'll win," said Doggett spokesman Richard Paul.

Results tabulated by the secretary of state's office changed from Sunday to Monday, and they shifted more during rechecking on Monday afternoon. But none of the tabulations changed the order of the finishing.

Out of some 1.46 million votes cast, the latest unofficial final results showed Hance first with 455,837 votes or 31.25 percent. Doggett was second with 454,761 votes or 31.18 percent, and Krueger garnered 453,600 votes, or 31.10 percent.

Sheriff Smith won't comment on demotions

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Sheriff Dallas Smith this morning responded with a terse "no comment" to questions about a major reshuffling of key personnel after his defeat to former deputy Gary Painter in Saturday's Republican primary.

On Monday, Chief Deputy George Thompson was demoted to sergeant and Capt. Patrick Fuller was demoted to patrol deputy. Thompson's monthly salary will be cut by $250, while Fuller's pay will be reduced by $400 a month.

Neither Thompson nor Fuller would comment. But courthouse sources say their demotions resulted from vindictiveness on Smith's part over their friendship with Painter, who pulled 60 percent of the primary vote to Smith's 40 percent.

Smith attributed the demotions to "job performance." He would not elaborate.

A 1982 State Attorney General's opinion calls for public disclosure of "all factual details about the incident which gave rise to disciplinary action" taken against public employees.

Shown a copy of the opinion, Smith smiled and said: "Sue me."

Smith also would not comment on rumors he sought to have an investigator for District Attorney Vern Martin fired because the investigator, Robert Settles, publicly supported Painter in the election.

Settles refused to confirm or deny the rumors. Martin would not comment, other than to say: "I have no plans to make any personnel changes in this office."

Chief Jailor Bennie Cureton was promoted to Thompson's position as chief deputy, while Lt. Tommy Jones was promoted to captain and will assume Fuller's job.

In addition, Sgt. Luis E. Romero was promoted to lieutenant. Last month, Romero testified in a federal civil rights case that he participated in the beating of four inmates at the El Paso county jail after a failed escape attempt on March 21, 1981.

"Since I saw others (jailers) doing it, I did it myself," Romero said in testimony in U.S. District Judge Harry Lee Hudspeth's court.

Weather

Fair tonight with lows in low 50s; southwesterly winds at 5-10 mph. Details on Page 2A.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Rain for New England and the Pacific Northwest, snow for the Great Lakes and showers in Florida are forecast through Wednesday by the National Weather Service.

Overnight low ties record set in 1938

From Staff and Wire Reports

If you thought it was a bit colder than normal this morning, you were right — the overnight low of 41 tied the record low for the date, set in 1938, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Things will be back to normal tonight and Wednesday, with overnight lows in the low 50s and afternoon highs in the upper 80s. Winds will be coming from the southwest at 5-10 mph tonight, and from the west at 10-20 mph Wednesday.

Monday's high of 82 was well below the 1947 record of 100.

STATE

Gale winds estimated at more than 50 mph hit the Texas coast early today, and an historic ship narrowly averted serious damage when a massive dry dock broke free of its moorings, blew across Galveston Bay and smashed into the vessel.

Galveston's restored 1877 sailing ship Elissa was struck by a 548-foot dry dock that had been moved from Houston and towed into Galveston Bay by several harbor tugs only two weeks ago.

The huge dry dock snapped its mooring line at Todd Shipyards on Pelican Island shortly after 1 a.m. Tuesday in a driving rainstorm, drifted about one-fourth mile across the ship channel, and slammed into the pier and the rear of the Elissa.

Severe thunderstorms buffeted Southeast Texas near midnight, pounding numerous cities with hail as large as golf balls.

The National Weather Service recorded 1.73 inches of rain at Jefferson County Airport, near Beaumont, at 1 a.m., with rain still coming down.

Rainfall amounts across East Texas lakes and in Southeast Texas from storms Monday afternoon and night ranged from about one-half inch to 2.4 inches at Chireno.

Hail the size of golf balls was reported at Zavalla in eastern Nacogdoches County at 8:50 p.m. Hail covered the ground in Rosevine in western Sabine County about 7:30 p.m. Hail an inch in diameter was reported in southern Beaumont about 11:30 p.m.

However, the rain was welcomed by many, despite the hail, since only 1.03 inches of rain fell in the Beaumont area in the month of April.

Flash flood watches were issued Monday night for much of Southeast Texas.

NATION

The eastern half of the nation was gripped today by scattered violent thunderstorms that have unleashed dozens of tornadoes across the South and forced more than 1,000 people from their homes as 6-inch rainfalls pushed rivers over their banks.

Some of the areas hardest hit by raging floodwaters were in West Virginia and Kentucky. About 1,000 people were forced from their homes in Pike County, Kentucky, authorities said. And in Williamson, W. Va., the word went out Monday night that its 5,000 residents should head for higher

Reagan honors nation's volunteers

WASHINGTON (AP) — A one-time bank robber and a nature lover who persuaded White House guests to flap their arms like birds are among 19 people and groups to receive volunteer awards from President Reagan.

"God bless you all for reaffirming what this country is all about," Reagan said Monday as he presented the awards in the East Room of the White House.

Elizabeth Cooper Terwilliger, a plump, grey-haired nature instructor in Marin County, Calif., schools, was the hit of the program, getting the audience and the president to imitate an array of birds ranging from the vulture to the great blue heron.

She gave Reagan a kiss after he flapped his arms up and down and in circular motions. The audience laughed and applauded.

Through personal appearances and nature movies called "Tripping with Terwilliger," she brings her ecology message to more than one million students each year in the San Francisco Bay area.

Nathan Glenn Williams, who spent nearly 20 years behind bars for a criminal career that began as a child, was honored for work on behalf of convicts and their families and in combating alcohol and drug abuse among teenagers.

Williams, 68, of Seattle spent nearly 11 years in Alcatraz for bank robberies. He is credited now with arranging transportation for 15,000 women and children to visit family members in Washington state prisons.

Award recipients were chosen from among 2,500 nominations. The program began three years ago to stress Reagan's promotion of volunteerism.

'surprised'

More importantly, the veterans wanted their integrity proven in a court of law to the American people.

"Hopefully, this will help the veterans clear themselves of faking illnesses or imagining them."

A trial, he said, would have "validated" the veterans' claims. "The veterans want to prove to the country they were not faking it; they are not liars. They were sick; it's important."

By ARTHUR ALLEN
Associated Press Writer

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — Jose Napoleon Duarte, who claims victory in the presidential runoff here, has struggled for more than two decades to be elected to that office.

He was on the verge of succeeding in 1972, only to have the military throw him into jail and then out of the country following his apparent election victory. In 1980, he was named head of the ruling military-civilian junta, but resigned when conservatives took control of the national assembly in 1982.

Now, confident that official vote-counting will confirm his claim of victory in Sunday's runoff, Duarte says he will take rigorous steps to promote peace and justice in strife-torn El Salvador.

The candidate of the moderate Christian Democratic Party has promised to eliminate right-wing death squads, assert firm control over the army, and open the way for a dialogue with leftist rebels to end 4½ years of civil war.

His opponent, Roberto d'Aubuisson of the ultraconservative Republican Nationalist Alliance, said Monday he would not concede until official results are known. That could be several more days.

Duarte, 58, attended the University of Notre Dame in South Bend, Ind., and began his political career 23 years ago when he and eight other men founded El Salvador's Christian Democratic Party.

In 1972, he ran for president as the candidate of a coalition that included the Communist Party. His running mate was Guillermo Ungo, now the president of the leftist guerrillas' political ally, the Democratic Revolutionary Front.

Duarte apparently won the 1972 election but the government stopped the vote count. He was arrested, tortured and exiled shortly afterward following an aborted coup by Duarte sympathizers.

Duarte fled to Venezuela, where he remained until 1979, when he returned to join the Christian Democratic-military junta that ran El Salvador from 1980 to 1982. He stepped down when his party failed to win a majority in March 1982 Constituent Assembly elections.

During his years in the junta, Duarte never fully gained the confidence of the armed forces. To this day there is suspicion about his leadership, although officially the army says it will accept him.

"People (commanders) think he's a little wild and unpredictable, and they are worried what he could try to do to the armed forces," one Duarte sympathizer in the high command said. "But not to the extent of staging a coup."

Duarte told Western reporters last week his most important mission is to reconcile the rival forces that have polarized during the civil war. Insisting he will not "negotiate with anyone whose guns are on the table," Duarte said he doubted he would be sitting down for talks with rebels soon although he and the guerrillas have expressed interest in a political solution.

On the other hand, he said, while rightist violence may continue, conservative business leaders can be convinced that he means to include them in his plans for economic revival.

"The force of the far-right subversion is their belief in the lies that they've heard during the campaign," Duarte said. "Once they realize I am not a communist, and that this is not a vengeful government, they will calm down."

Duarte says he plans to establish firm control over the clannish officer corps. "The army can not be a republic within a republic," he said. "We live in one society."

One of his toughest tasks is the elimination of the death squads. He said he will set up an "action commission" to prosecute the squads and investigate some of the more notable crimes — such as the March 1980 assassination of Archbishop Oscar Arnulfo Romero.

Duarte acknowledges his job will be dangerous because of animosity towards him by both right-wing and left-wing extremists.

"I can't pretend that I'm not afraid," Duarte said. "But my life has been a permanent risk. I take the necessary precautions, but I'm at peace with myself."

Protests mar Panamanian ballot counting

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Supporters of the two main presidential candidates clashed outside the building where votes were being counted in the closely contested election. Authorities said at least one person was killed and 50 injured.

The violence, which included gunfire and fire-bombs, broke out Monday afternoon outside the national legislative palace, where thousands of supporters of the military-backed governing party and the main opposition coalition had gathered.

The two rivals, opposition candidate Arnulfo Arias and official candidate Nicolas Ardito Barletta, had assured their supporters of victory, based on unofficial vote counts by their own parties.

Inside the palace, gunshots could be heard as election officials counted ballots, and at one point a group of armed men forced way into that section of the building. One of them shouted a pro-Barletta slogan and the group then dashed away.

The vote counting finally was suspended Monday night as shooting continued outside. Election officials said they would resume counting today.

There was concern, however, that there were not sufficient security measures to guard uncounted ballots inside the palace during the night-long recess.

As the crowd was gathering Monday outside the palace, located in a poor section of the downtown area, witnesses heard a shot ring out from somewhere in the direction of the group supporting Ardito Barletta.

Sporadic gunfire and the booms of Molotov cocktails were heard for about an hour, when a handful of gunmen in civilian clothes forced their way through a side entrance of the palace and into the area where the vote count continued.

The apparent leader of the gunmen, brandishing an Israeli-made automatic weapon, shouted "Long live Nicky Barletta, Long live the 11 of October movement!" before disappearing with his men down one of the palace's interior passageways.

Oct. 11 is the date of the military coup that forced Arias out of the presidency in 1968. He was elected to the presidency three times and each time was overthrown by the military.

Arias, 82, was last elected in 1968, but the national guard ousted him in a coup directed by Gen. Omar Torrijos, who was killed in a plane crash in 1981. Subsequent changes in the government were dominated by the armed forces.

Sunday's election was the first direct presidential balloting since 1968. The high command of the military, led by Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, has made it clear it does not like Arias, but Noriega has said the results will be respected.

The new president will take over Oct. 11 for a five-year term.

Both candidates are considered friendly toward the United States, which has more than 9,000 military personnel here, and each has pledged not to change the status of U.S. military installations.

Witnesses said scores of uniformed security force officials inside the palace stood by passively Monday when the gunmen forced their way inside.

One of the gunmen, a husky man wearing a baseball cap with the colors of the governing Revolutionary Democratic Party, approached two news photographers and stripped them of their camera gear, smashing it to the ground before carrying it off with them.

Capt. Manuel Gonzalez, head of the security forces inside the palace, failed to explain how the gunmen managed to break inside the palace with no resistance from his men.

He also offered no explanation of how shooting continued sporadically for hours with no sign of uniformed troops sent in to try to stop it.

"What happens in the world outside is beyond my responsibility," said the captain.

Veterans' attorneys said that with interest accruing on the companies' payments, the fund should pay out more than $250 million within six years, and additional cash will be kept to cover claims arising in the next 25 years.

Details on payouts have yet to be worked out, but would cover any Vietnam veteran demonstrating ill effects attributed to Agent Orange.

Lawyers for the veterans said it may take two to six years before victims collect. Dissatisfied veterans may sue on their own, but would have to opt out of the settlement.

The suit began six years ago and maintained that the herbicide caused a wide range of problems including cancer, liver and nerve disease, emotional disorders and birth defects.

Although a defendant in the suit, the government was not a party to the settlement. A Justice Department spokesman, Brad Marman, declined comment on the agreement Monday.

While Romero was not named in the suit, two former El Paso County deputies were convicted May 2 of a misdemeanor count of violating the civil rights of one prisoner. Sentencing is set for June 18.

Smith acknowledged knowing about Romero's role in the El Paso case at the time he hired Romero, but he declined comment on the matter.

Clergyman kidnapped in Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Three kidnappers today overpowered an American clergyman on a west Beirut street, forcing him into a car and speeding off, police reported.

A police spokesman identified the minister as Benjamin Weir, 60, pastor of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). He has been living in Lebanon for 30 years, serving with the National Evangelical Synod of Syria and Lebanon.

U.S. Embassy sources confirmed the abduction, but gave no further information.

A spokesman for the Presbyterian Church in New York said Weir was born in Salt Lake City, Utah, and raised in Berkeley, Calif.

Weir is the fourth American to disappear or be kidnapped in the Moslem half of the city since anti-government Moslem militias wrested it from the Lebanese army in February.

Police Lt. Achraf Rifi said Weir was walking with his wife, Carol, in a narrow lane in the Manara residential neighborhood of west Beirut when the abduction occurred.

Three assailants jumped out of a white Peugeot 504 that had no license plate, overpowered Weir, forced him into the car and sped off, Rifi said.

"We have no clues to their identity," Rifi said.

The wife rushed to a police station and reported the abduction, police said.

Initial police accounts said the assailants all were unarmed. Rifi did not specify whether any guns were involved.

One police source, who declined to be identified, said witnesses told police that Weir resisted the attackers and was beaten on the head with pistol butts before being forced into the kidnappers' car.

The Rev. Salim Sahyoni, executive secretary of the National Evangelical Synod of Syria and Lebanon, said he was appealing to all parties in west Beirut to take "all the necessary steps" to secure Weir's release.

Texas' presidential caucus system comes under attack

AUSTIN (AP) — The caucus system that gave Walter Mondale a big Texas win is under attack from within and without.

Presidential contender Jesse Jackson, with his Texas campaigners citing "irregularities and rule violations," wants a federal investigation.

State Democratic Executive Committee member Mel Phillips of Amarillo wants to scrap the system he said left Texans confused.

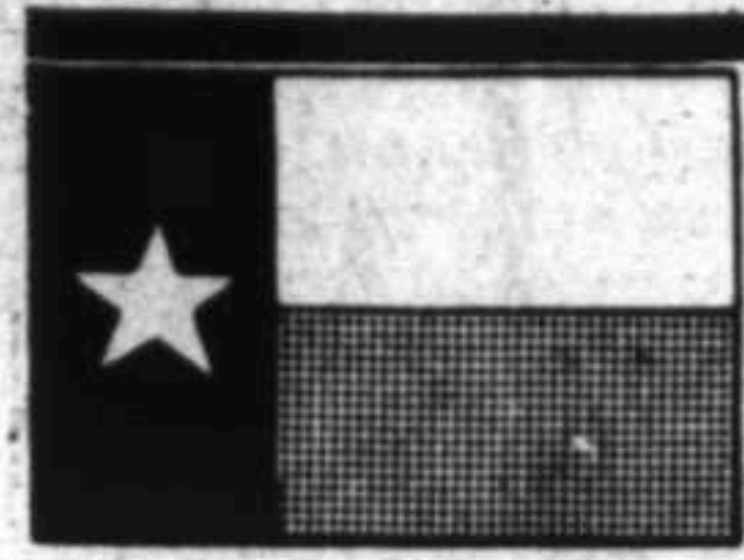

"They thought they were going in to vote," Phillips said Monday. "They didn't realize they were going to a caucus. They found a caucus and didn't know what a caucus was."

"IF THE PRIMARY system is good enough for congressional, state representative and county sheriff races, it's good enough for president," he added.

Phillips plans to ask the state Democratic committee at its May 17 meeting to approve a resolution calling for a binding presidential primary in 1988. The system can only be changed by the Legislature, but many lawmakers take their election law cues from state party officials.

With reports complete from about 61 percent of the more than 6,500 caucuses, the Democratic Party said Mondale had drawn 50 percent of the support, Sen. Gary Hart had 27 percent and the Rev. Jesse Jackson picked up 16.4 percent. The uncommitted total was 6.5 percent. Final totals will not be available until Friday, party Chairman Bob Slagle said Monday.

State Rep. Al Edwards of Houston said the Jackson camp is ready to complain now. Edwards, Jackson's Texas chairman, said, "Irregularities and rule violations were widespread...including sign-ins taken before the precinct caucuses convened, refusals to allow sign-ins and removals of Jackson delegates' names."

state

Edwards said the U.S. Justice Department would be asked to investigate.

PHILLIPS' COMPLAINT is that the inflexible system barred participation by anyone who was working at 7:15 p.m. when the caucuses started.

"The thing that is wrong with it is that if someone works at 7:15 or for any reason can't be at the caucus at 7:15, they are effectively denied any voice in the selection of the nominee for president," Phillips said.

And Democrats who caucused found that volume of support can be directly proportionate to volume of voice, he said.

"Unless you are an extrovert, it is a very intimidating process," he

"They thought they were going in to vote. They didn't realize they were going to a caucus. They found a caucus and didn't know what a caucus was...If the primary system is good enough for congressional, state representative and county sheriff races, it's good enough for president."

— Mel Phillips, State Democratic Executive Committee said. Dallas County Democratic Chairman Mike McKool said caucus confusion runs deep.

"IT'S NOT just that the voters couldn't understand it. The election judges and precinct chairmen don't understand it either," he said.

Texas Democratic Chairman Bob Slagle of Sherman has spent hours defending the system, which he says is an effective way to keep Republicans out of the Democratic candidate selection process.

He said a state study of the 1982 Democratic primary showed a heavy turnout of non-Democrats.

"In other words, 31.4 percent of 1982 Democratic primary participants did not regard themselves as Democrats," Slagle said.

Insurance agent critical of banks being allowed to sell insurance

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Insurance companies will be virtually forced out of business if banks are allowed to sell property and casualty insurance, the president of the Independent Insurance Agents of Texas says.

"We are an economy based on credit, protected by insurance. If the lender also sells property and casualty insurance, you can bet, the borrower is going to get the message about where to buy insurance," DeValse Cox of Wichita Falls said Monday.

Cox, in a speech to the annual conference of Professional Insurance Women, said if banks are allowed to sell and underwrite insurance, "A few bank holding company giants would corner most of the markets."

"Because, when banks sell property and casualty insurance, the financial consumer — from the homeowner to the corporation president — can throw his or her financial freedom of choice out the window."

Cox said that is not the only problem with banks selling insurance.

"When banks sell insurance, a uniform, national regulatory program of some sort is going to evolve. Allowing banks to sell insurance is a guaranteed route to a new federal bureaucracy and a devastating loss of control over our own financial affairs and destiny," he said.

Cox said independent insurance agents have "stopped the banks" in Congress for six years, but next year big bank holding companies "are going to Austin to try to win the same game in the Texas Legislature."

Girl still missing after two years

ABILENE (AP) — Federal officials say they are seeking a couple wanted for questioning in the disappearance of a Breckenridge girl who has been missing for more than two years.

"Someone who knew the family was involved," said FBI agent Bill Weishaupt, who is investigating the disappearance of Ryan Nicole Burton.

The girl, who would be 5 years old now, was taken from her crib on Sept. 6, 1981, when her parents were not at home.

Weishaupt said Dr. Richard Garver, a San Antonio psychiatrist, conducted hypnosis sessions in Dallas in April and witnesses gave descriptions of a couple.

Weishaupt said witnesses gave descriptions of a man identified as John Morris, 25 to 31 years old, and an unidentified woman in her 20s.

He said the FBI has released composite pictures of the man and woman, produced through descriptions given by the witnesses, whom he would not identify.

Weishaupt, who said no charges had been filed in the case, said he believes the child is alive.

The FBI confirmed that the child spent about two weeks in a day-care center in Mesquite in July 1982, he said.

Workers at the center said the child was left and picked up alternately by a man and a woman, he said.

"She (the child) appeared to be in fairly good condition — that's physically. She did not appear to have been physically abused," he said.

Weishaupt said the child's parents, Bud and Helen Burton, had been shown the composite pictures of the couple but could not identify them.

The FBI is seeking the public's assistance in identifying and locating the couple, he said. He said the man identified as Morris has been seen driving a red 1977 Ford Mustang, possibly with Colorado license plates, and described as thin, about 5-11, with long, straight, dark brown hair.

The woman is described as being about 5-6, 120 pounds, with long straight dark blonde hair, he said.

The child is blonde with blue eyes and has two chipped front teeth, he said.

Woman dies from injuries received in wreck

MONAHANS (AP) — Authorities say a 28-year-old woman has died of injuries she received in a head-on collision that killed two other people and injured six.

Linda Tigner of Odessa died Monday morning at Odessa Medical Center, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Dale Funnell, 31, and Angie Tigner, 8, both of Odessa, were pronounced dead at the scene, Police Chief David Mills said.

He said a preliminary investigation of Sunday night's accident indicated that Funnell's car was in the wrong lane when it collided head-on with a vehicle driven by Yasbah White, 34, of Monahans.

Mrs. White is in stable condition in Midland Memorial Hospital with multiple fractures, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Two passengers in Mrs. White's car, Melinda White, 12, and Kerri White, 10, were in stable condition at Ward Memorial Hospital, a spokeswoman said.

Three passengers in Funnell's car were hospitalized at Odessa Medical Center Hospital. Tanya Tigner, 10, was in stable condition with facial injuries; and Elnora Funnell, 47, and Lewis Funnell, 56, were in critical condition with head injuries, said a hospital spokeswoman.

DILLARD'S WELCOMES THE AMERICAN EXPRESS CARD

Long route ahead before Agent Orange victims collect

NEW YORK (AP) — Vietnam veterans and their relatives from across the nation will have a strong voice in deciding how to divide $180 million in compensation for injuries from Agent Orange, their lawyers said.

But it may take two to six years before some of the victims collect from the huge superfund the chemicals have set aside to cover the Agent Orange claims, the lawyers said Monday.

And the final say will belong to U.S. District Judge Jack B. Weinstein of Brooklyn, who helped bring about a settlement between the veterans and seven chemical companies just before trial began.

The suit blamed Agent Orange — a jungle defoliant widely used by American forces in Vietnam — for a wide range of ailments, including cancer, skin disorders, miscarriages in the veterans' wives and birth defects in their children.

The settlement provides that the $180 million begin earning interest for the veterans on Monday at the prime rate, currently 12 percent. It will take about a month, however, for the money to be turned over to plaintiffs' attorneys, who then will invest it in Treasury bills, according to Gene Locks, a lawyer for the plaintiffs.

Sometime in the future, though no date has been announced, Weinstein will schedule a public hearing at which veterans can testify on whether the settlement is fair and adequate. Either at that hearing or at a later one, Locks said, Weinstein also will hear proposals from the veterans' lawyers on how to divide the money.

David Dean, the lead counsel for the plaintiffs, said the lawyers will follow the veterans' instructions in dividing the money.

Some of it will go for attorneys' fees, to lawyers have worked for up to five years on the case and have never received a penny. None would estimate what the plaintiffs' legal bill will be.

Then a claim system will have to be established. Veterans or relatives of veterans who were in areas where Agent Orange was used will be able to demonstrate that they subsequently suffered ill effects.

Families gather after settlement

NEW YORK (AP) — For Dan Ford, who sued the makers of Agent Orange because he believes the herbicide gave him cancer, a $180 million settlement means he can continue seeking treatments — even though doctors told him his case is hopeless.

For Maureen Ryan, whose 13-year-old daughter Kerry has undergone eight major operations to treat 22 birth defects, the settlement means "the chemical companies are saying she suffered her injuries in Vietnam, many years before she was born."

Seven chemical companies that manufactured Agent Orange reached a tentative out-of-court settlement Monday in a class-action suit with thousands of Vietnam veterans.

The agreement, under which the companies will pay $180 million into a fund for veterans' claims, was announced Monday just before jury selection for the trial was to have started in U.S. District Court in Brooklyn.

Four of the five families chosen as representative plaintiffs in the suit gathered outside a Brooklyn brownstone Monday after the settlement was announced to talk about the cancers, miscarriages and birth defects they blame on the compound, which was used to destroy forests which sheltered Viet Cong guerrillas.

"I felt all along the chemical companies were wrong. They owed me an apology. Today they apologized," said Ford, 35, of Temperance, Mich. He attended the news conference with his wife, Christina.

Ford, an Army veteran who served in Vietnam in 1968 and 1969, said he has twice undergone surgery for the cancer in his leg. He also has twice endured chemotherapy and radiation treatments, even though doctors told him "there is no more they can do for me."

He called Monday "the greatest day of my life, even greater than the day I came home from Vietnam."

Ford said the settlement will allow him to continue to seek treatment. "New research is being done," he said.

Mrs. Ryan stroked Kerry's hair as she talked to reporters about the suit her husband Michael and daughter endured more than five years ago because "Kerry was not an act of God, she was an act of Dow Chemical." Dow was one of the defendants in the suit.

Kerry, whose 22 birth defects

Agent Orange victims Kerry Ryan, 13, of Stony Brook, Long Island, left, and Chad Jordan, 13, and his brother, Michael 11, both of Austin, Texas, talk to reporters in New York's borough of Brooklyn Monday. A tentative settlement was reached Monday between seven chemical companies and 15,000 Vietnam veterans in a class-action lawsuit against the firms which produced the defoliant.

included a hole in her heart and missing bones and nerves, sat in a wheelchair and played with Chad Jordan, 13, and Michael Jordan, 11, each born with a deformed arm after their father returned from Vietnam.

Mrs. Ryan, of Stony Brook, N.Y., said the settlement means her daughter will be "offered the same dignity as Vietnam veterans."

Under terms of the proposed agreement, the chemical companies did not admit any liability for illnesses the veterans claim were caused by Agent Orange, which contained the highly toxic chemical dioxin.

Veterans exposed to the compound said they suffered cancer, liver and nerve damage, skin rashes and emotional difficulties, and their children suffered birth defects.

The settlement came more than five years after the original suit was filed. About 15,000 veterans already have sued, and up to 130,000 have placed their names on an Agent Orange registry.

Details of the agreement are still to be worked out and none of the plaintiffs knew how much money they would receive.

Dan Jordan, of Austin, Texas, said "respect" meant more to him than the money. Jordan said he suffered "a myriad of problems and no doctor could tell me what it was" after he returned from Vietnam in 1969. His wife suffered a miscarriage, then their two sons were born with deformities. They blamed Agent Orange exposure.

"The fact that they were so eager to settle out of court can leave no doubt in the American public's mind as to liability and guilt," Jordan said.

Many veterans interviewed across the country Monday said they were unhappy with the settlement because it let the chemical companies off the hook.

Questions answered about Agent Orange

WASHINGTON (AP) — Agent Orange has been controversial ever since the Air Force started spraying it over the jungles of Vietnam in 1962 — an operation the Pentagon says saved the lives of thousands of American GIs who would have been subject to ambushes.

Here are some questions and answers on Agent Orange.

Q. What is it?

A. It is a half-and-half mixture of two plant-killing compounds, 2,4,5-T and 2,4-D, that contains dioxin, a toxic substance that is a contaminant that occurs in the production of 2,4,5-T. A Veterans Administration doctor, A. Betty Fischmann, calls dioxin "the most toxic chemical ever synthesized by man." It is the same substance which caused the government to evacuate Times Beach, Mo. when dioxin was discovered in oil sprayed on the roads to control dust.

Q. Why is it called Agent Orange?

A. It was shipped to Vietnam in orange-striped barrels. GIs gave it that name.

Remembering past

Nineteenth Century Scottish poet, historian and anthropologist Andrew Lang once wrote, "The little present must not be allowed to elbow the great past out of view."

That thought now is being echoed in the words of Robert Chambers, writing in the UN publication Development Forum. In fact, the people of today should not overlook the unique knowledge and experience of the world's rural people as society rushes forward.

The knowledge of the world's rural people, he says, often is superior to that of outsiders who attempt to change them.

"Examples of their superior wisdom can be found in their preference for mixed cropping, their knowledge of the environment, their fine abilities to observe and discriminate which can provide more accurate data on which to act, and their inventive agricultural experiments," notes Chambers.

Oftentimes the "outside world" tends to view the world's poor rural people as inferior in knowledge, lazy, stupid and responsible for their poverty. Not necessarily so, says Chambers.

"Case studies show that rural people are of necessity normally tough, hard-working, ingenious and resilient," he says. They have to be.

Chambers' words add new dimension to the thought that the world today doesn't need contact with the past. As Andrew Lang noted, the "little" present shouldn't cause us to lose touch with our "great past."

Move over Pizarro

For more than 90 years a mummified corpse, proclaimed to be that of Francisco Pizarro, the Spanish explorer, has been on display in Lima, Peru.

Why the Peruvians should so honor Pizarro is a little hard to fathom. Pizarro was a ruthless adventurer who savagely defeated the ancient Incas in 1532 and then proceeded to loot the country of its riches and art.

In any event, the Peruvians have been displaying the wrong corpse. University of Missouri anthropologists, with the aid of a nuclear reactor, have determined that a skull and a few bones found in a crypt in the Lima Cathedral are those of the real Francisco Pizarro. The honored mummy will have to move over.

The cathedral find was made by workmen in 1977. The skull was in, it turns out, an accurately labeled lead box alongside another receptacle containing more bones. The grisly collection was shipped to the University of Missouri for analysis.

Legend has it that Pizarro was killed by a faction of his troops in a quarrel over the spoils of the conquest. It was said a sword was driven under his chin and into his skull. The University of Missouri team, aided by the latest detection devices, discovered that is exactly what happened. The scars were all there.

It is one of the few instances in which 20th Century science and nuclear devices have certified a legend instead of scouting it.

Another View:

Reagan's China trip

Ronald Reagan is president of the United States. He also is a politician facing re-election. And although the president sometimes spoke more as politician than as president during his China trip, the visit was a net gain for America.

Reagan, on his departure for home, told newsmen that the trip raised U.S.-China relations to a "new plateau." Xinhua, the official Chinese news agency, called the Reagan visit "a significant step forward" in relations between the two countries.

The U.S.-China summit produced no dramatic breakthroughs, but none had been expected. The points of disagreement were underscored, if anything, but nobody had really expected the American president to abandon his support of Taiwan, for example, or the Chinese to fail to register their unhappiness over this fact.

The much-publicized "censorship" of Reagan's remarks extolling democracy, individual enterprise and the religious faith of the American people was much ado about very little. The president had a right to say what he did, and the Chinese had a right to divine that he was speaking more to the American electorate than to his Chinese audience. In any event nobody should be surprised that a totalitarian communist government prevented a visiting politician from using its radio and TV networks to challenge its ideology.

Much more questionable was Reagan's persistence in trying to draw the Chinese into at least verbal support of an anti-Soviet alliance. Fortunately for the United States, the Chinese — whose assessment of the Soviet role in the world is actually far more baleful than our own — refused to play the game.

If the Chinese had swallowed the hook and accepted the idea of a U.S.-China crusade against Soviet evil-doing, the resulting Russian paranoia might have ended the possibility of better U.S.-Soviet relations for years to come. That is not in the American interest.

The fact remains that the trip did represent a maturing of the U.S.-China relationship. In effect both nations agreed to disagree on some matters, but to move forward where their national interests converge.

The two countries signed a tax treaty that will make it easier for U.S. companies to do business in China. A nuclear agreement opens the way for U.S. sales that could run into the billions of dollars. The United States and China will exchange trade delegations in coming weeks, and Peking will send a military delegation to Washington to discuss possible purchase of U.S. defensive weaponry.

As Reagan said, his visit marked an improvement in relations between the world's most populous country and its most technologically advanced. That is indeed a fact of major significance.

Marcos ready to rig elections

WASHINGTON — While the Reagan administration has derided the "free elections" scheduled by the Sandinista regime in Nicaragua, it has been strangely silent about a similar charade being staged next Monday by President Ferdinand Marcos in the Philippines.

It was only after presidential prod-ding by the U.S. Embassy that Marcos agreed to hold national assembly elections. He evidently was persuaded that a display of democracy in action might erase at least some of the stain on his dictatorial regime that resulted from the murder of opposition leader Benigno Aquino last year.

But Marcos has a problem. Truly free elections might well return an anti-Marcos legislature. To avoid this embarrassment, Marcos has taken steps to rig the vote in favor of candidates loyal to him.

First, he sought to dignify the elections with the appearance of non-partisan legitimacy. The process would be overseen, he announced, by a special election commission, called COMELEC. It was supposed to have nine independent members.

But until recently there were only five commission members — all certifiable Marcos cronies. After more pressure from the embassy, Marcos added two more members — one independent and another Marcos minion.

"The commission is a joke," a State Department source told me associate Lucette Lagnado.

But it's a bad joke, and the Filipinos aren't laughing. The commission's farcical show of concern over honest elections was illustrated by the way it dealt with the voter registration lists.

From bitter experience, opposition leaders charged that the voter rolls were padded. So with much fanfare, the commission announced a massive voter "re-registration" campaign. Election boards were to compile new, supposedly honest, lists of eligible voters.

But Marcos would not permit the opposition to participate in the re-registration drive in the majority of electoral districts. As added insurance, Marcos will be allowed to name 17 members of the assembly himself. This means the elections are stacked in Marcos' favor.

The solidly pro-Marcos legislature, apparently seeking an international stamp of approval on the charade, invited foreign observers to monitor next week's election process. Nine countries, including the United States and Japan, were asked to send poll watchers.

Seven countries (the United Kingdom, France, West Germany, Canada, Australia, the Netherlands and Belgium) quickly declined to lend credibility to the Marcos brand of democracy. The United States and Japan stalled.

Opposition leaders hold out little hope of truly free, untainted balloting next week. Some have called for a boycott — which would probably be OK with Marcos. He could explain to his nagging critics at the American embassy that at least he tried. What more can they ask?

CITIZENS WATCH: For more than 30 years, retired Air Force Master Sgt. Leon Beck has been waging a lonely battle with Pentagon bureaucrats. He is trying to win belated recognition for a valiant band of World War II servicemen — those who were taken prisoner by the Japanese in the Philippines but escaped to fight again as guerrillas. Incredible as it seems, these unsung heroes have been denied the modest bonus Congress awarded the men who languished in prisoner-of-war camps till the end of the war.

Beck was taken prisoner at the fall of Bataan in early 1942, and survived the infamous death march to the Cabanatuan prison camp. He managed to escape after 12 days and joined a group of GIs under the command of Col. Gyles M. Merrill. The guerrillas operated a radio, helped coordinate the rescue of downed Navy pilots and engaged in other resistance activities until liberation three years later.

But when Congress authorized bonuses for POWs who had survived their ordeal, Beck and his buddies didn't qualify. Beck is more interested in the "moral question" than in the $2,500 or so he has been seeking in lieu of the POW bonus.

"We were told our whole military career that the only moral thing to do was to make every effort to escape and resist your captors," he explained. Yet one Pentagon desk jockey actually rejected Beck's claim on grounds that he couldn't produce written orders authorizing him to escape.

POLITICAL POTPOURRI: In March, Reagan-Bush '84 refunded $54,273 to contributors who had given more than the law allows. Among the overgenerous were former Rep. Millicent Fenwick, R-N.J. ($1,000), and Rep. Manuel Lujan, R-N.M. ($250). Ambassador to Austria Helene von Damm got her entire $500 contribution back, because political appointees aren't allowed to kick in to a campaign.

— Another federal election rule led to this explanatory editor's note in First Monday, the Republican National Committee's magazine: "You won't see First Monday specifically endorsing the candidacy of Ronald Reagan or any other Republican candidate this year." Such an endorsement might be construed as a campaign contribution, a rule the editor said is "pretty silly."

— The Reagan-Bush campaign picked up $65,000 in White House bills in March as politically related expenses. One item was $32.45 in food costs, listed as "Man-In-Flight," for Vice President Bush's trip through the South. An official said this was a typo. It should have read, "MAW-In-Flight," for the Military Air Wing food served on Bush's plane.

Clark 'rarin' to go' for Reagan

WASHINGTON — Before the presidential campaign is even fully under way, Republican conservatives are plotting to control a second Reagan term by moving Interior Secretary William Clark back to the White House early next year as chief of staff.

Clark, indubitably Ronald Reagan's oldest political and personal ally, appeared to signal his own interest in returning to the White House with this private pledge to the president: Use me as much as you possibly can in your campaign; I'm rarin' to go!

That word from the former California Supreme Court justice looked to Reagan's political aides like an announcement of boredom now that Clark has removed interior from the line of political fire. White House chief of staff James Baker III, not beloved of conservative Reaganites, would like a Cabinet post, not another four years in the White House.

The governor has disappointed some supporters by moving a little to the right to counter Helms. But national Democratic strategists believe Hunt has no hope if he lets Helms brand him as a liberal.

FOILING BEIJING'S CENSORS

The Voice of America foiled at least part of the Chinese decision to censor President Reagan's criticism of the Soviet Union by transmitting the president's speech in full during the Voice's regular 12-hour-a-day Chinese broadcasting.

Although the Voice cannot reach the estimated several hundred million Chinese video watchers who might have been expected to hear Reagan's censored speech on the single, national TV network, it has an audience of at least 20 million, possibly far higher.

Communist China does not try to jam Voice broadcasts or, as far as the U.S. knows, discourage listening. Reagan ordered aides to downplay their anger at the last-minute Chinese censorship — which, in fact, may have benefited his election-year political gains from the trip.

HELMS FORGES AHEAD
New Republican polls show that conservative Republican Sen. Jesse Helms has forged 5 percentage points ahead of Democratic Gov. Jim Hunt in the torrid North Carolina Senate race, an election Democrats must win to have any chance for recapturing Senate control in 1984.

Helms has been steadily gaining ground on Hunt since late 1982 polls showed him trailing by over 20 percentage points. His latest burst followed a new batch of television commercials picturing Hunt as a liberal.

The governor has disappointed some supporters by moving a little to the right to counter Helms. But national Democratic strategists believe Hunt has no hope if he lets Helms brand him as a liberal.

HAY FOR MONDALE
Behind the unexpected endorsement of Walter Mondale by Texas

Democratic feteat Jess Hay just before Saturday's (May 5) Texas presidential caucuses was the making of a deal to help Sen. John Glenn retire his towering $3.0 million campaign debt.

Hay, a money-raising wizard who backed Glenn early and hard, had entertained former President Jimmy Carter as his weekend guest in Dallas not long before the caucuses. Carter drew on his friendship with Hay to encourage his Mondale endorsement, hinting at help by both Mondale and himself on paying off Glenn's debt.

Hay decided to go along with Carter despite his close friendship with Sen. Gary Hart, on grounds that even if Hart did unexpectedly well in the Texas caucuses, he had no chance to win the nomination.

SHULTZ'S CHANGE
For the first time since the calamitous failure of his Lebanese policy, Secretary of State George Shultz is sporting an air of self-confidence and optimism that convinces his top aides that he wants to remain in office for a second term.

That view is concurred in by the top-level Secretariat, the small group of anonymous officials that runs the Secretary's diplomatic and housekeeping office.

One reason: the political success, in Shultz's view, of the president's state visit to China. But Shultz's wife, Obie, still wants to take the man she loves out of the Washington maelstrom and into a line of work that will give them more time together. If Shultz does not stay, UN Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick is the hottest long-shot successor.

CHARLEY REESE

Immoral system real crime

Aid isn't enough, a mother of eight complained to a group of politicians recently. The proper response — which was not given — would have been: eight children is too many.

This 28-year-old woman has eight children and no husbands. She was lobbying for an increase in welfare payments.

One of the women politicians predictably clucked, "This is a woman's issue."

In a pig's eye, it is. Men, as well as women, pay the taxes which provide the welfare payments to women who receive Aid to Families with Dependent Children. Unless this woman has made a scientific breakthrough and kept it a secret, men are still required to produce children.

Somewhere out there are one or more fathers whose children are being supported by the taxpayers whose representatives are being lobbied by the mother who has presumably spent 72 months of her life being pregnant without discovering how she gets that way.

I make that presumption because surely if she voluntarily and knowingly gave birth to eight children and released the fathers from any responsibility, she would not have the gall to complain that more responsible citizens are stingy with their gifts to total strangers.

Sexual reproduction in humans is not a complex and difficult process to understand. There are numerous cheap and effective contraceptives on drug store shelves. And there is always chastity, not to mention the old-fashioned institution of marriage.

In short, the stork did not make an unprovoked and surprise raid on this woman's house and dump eight babies in her lap.

The question liberals always try to evade is responsibility. Who is responsible for these eight children? The mother? The father or fathers? The taxpayers? The United States Government?

I submit that she and the father or fathers are responsible. I submit that it is immoral to levy the burden of their children on the backs of mothers and fathers who do take responsibility for their own children and who work hard to provide for them.

Welfare payments do not come from the government. The government has no money. It must first take money from those who earn it before it can give to those who have not.

Since she claims the right to demand that we support her children, we have the right to ask: Why should we? If she says it is our Christian duty, let us remind her that we already gave at the office and at church. Let us remind her also that the Christian testament has something to say about sexual conduct as well as charity.

If she argues that unless we support her children, they will become criminals, let us reply that we do not respond to threats. Given a choice between paying extortion or hiring police, we prefer to hire police.

We must end this immoral system which robs the worker and gives to the shirker. We must stop politicians from plundering the responsible to buy the votes of the irresponsible.

We are not hard-hearted; we are just tired of being ripped off. We are willing to support the children — but not her. If she can't provide for her children, let us then build orphanages, but let us end this vicious system which allows unscrupulous people to produce children just to collect public subsidies. It is in reality a form of child abuse created and subsidized by the welfare state.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, May 8, the 129th day of 1984. There are 237 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: On May 8, 1884 — 100 years ago — the 33rd president of the United States, Harry Truman, was born near Lamar, Mo.

On this date: In 1541, the Spanish explorer Hernando de Soto discovered the Mississippi River.

In 1878, centerfielder Paul Hines of the Providence Grays made an unassisted triple play in a National League game against the Boston Red Caps.

In 1914, a joint resolution of Congress established the second Sunday of May as Mother's Day.

In 1945, President Truman announced in a radio broadcast that World War II had ended in Europe. In 1958, Vice President Richard Nixon was stoned, shoved, booed and spat upon by anti-American demonstrators in Lima, Peru.

In 1964, on his 80th birthday, former President Truman addressed the Senate.

Hart needs victory in industrial state

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

Walter Mondale is looking for victories in four more states today as Gary Hart mounts what could be a last stand and begins talk of at least affecting the Democratic Party's platform if not winning its presidential nomination.

Gary Hart

Democrats in Ohio, Indiana, Maryland and North Carolina are voting today to allocate 368 national convention delegates, and Mondale was hoping for a sweep to deliver what could be the final blow to Hart's nomination chances.

Hart entered today's big round of primaries after picking up a win Monday night in his home state of Colorado. Hart easily outdistanced his rivals in the precinct caucuses where 43 delegates were at stake.

With 963 precincts reporting, or about 37 percent, Hart had 3,744 to Mondale's 426. The uncommitted vote totaled 144, and the Rev. Jesse Jackson had 144.

But Hart was desperate for a victory today, particularly in Ohio, the last opportunity to prove he can win a major industrial state.

Hart lost by a wide margin to Mondale in delegate-rich Texas on Saturday, and his own campaign manager, Oliver Henkel, said a week ago that a win in Texas or Ohio was a must if the Colorado senator was to overtake Mondale.

Jackson, meanwhile, was concentrating today on North Carolina. Jackson has spent much time in the state and particularly in its 2nd Congressional District, where Jackson has tried to help black candidate Kenneth Spaulding unseat first-term Democrat Tim Wainwright.

Campaigning in Cleveland on Monday, Hart insisted he still expects to win the nomination but raised the issue of the Democratic platform. He said he expects his ideas on retooling the economy to become a part of it.

"The race is not just about whether Gary Hart is the next president of the United States but whether the Democratic Party and this nation can get itself back together and get through a very difficult period," he said.

"The issue is not whether I press to have my ideas on the platform, but whether the policies will reflect the new direction of the party."

Hart unleashed a vigorous new attack on Mondale over the issue of labor union political action committee money contributed to Mondale's candidacy and Mondale's delay in repaying it.

Mondale has agreed to refund the money, but he said in Cleveland on Monday that he doesn't have the cash in the bank now to make the refund. And Mondale spokeswoman Maxine Isaacs said the campaign was discussing repayment plans with the Federal Election Commission.

"To say he doesn't have it is outrageous," Hart said. Mondale, he said, "ought to be able to pick up the phone and call his campaign treasurer and say, 'Write a check and send the money back.'"

A sweep today wouldn't give Mondale enough delegates to secure the nomination. But winning just half the delegates would put him within about 400 of the 1,967 delegates needed to win the nomination as he heads into the final round of primaries June 5 when nearly 500 are at stake.

It is mathematically impossible for Hart to win enough delegates in advance for a first ballot victory. His hope is to finish the primary season strongly and create a stampede among the 600 or so unpledged delegates.

Teacher sentenced for manslaughter

DEDHAM, Mass. (AP) — Former professor William H. Douglas, who avoided being tried for murder in the sledgehammer killing of his 21-year-old lover, was sentenced to the maximum 18 to 20 years in prison for manslaughter.

"Manslaughter it may be, but it's about as close to murder as you can get," Norfolk County prosecutor John Kivian said Monday in arguing for the maximum sentence for Douglas, 42.

Douglas, who taught anatomy at Tufts University, pleaded guilty April 27 to manslaughter in the death of Robin Benedict, a graphic artist who prosecutors say led a double life as a prostitute. She was last seen alive March 5, 1983, and her body has never been found.

Leader wants school reopened

RENO, Nev. (AP) — Arguing that "the people who allegedly did these things are out of the picture," the head of a parent-teacher group urged reopening a school where two officials allegedly molested pupils.

Ruben Babayan, the school's owner, and employee Manouchehr Rashidi surrendered Monday and were being held for a preliminary hearing May 22 on 15 counts of sexually assaulting eight children, ages 4 and 5. A third suspect was being sought.

Authorities closed the Montessori preschool Friday. But Judy Sturgis, president of the parent-teacher association, said parents were "solidly behind reopening the school."

Pastor travels on horseback

MENA, Ark. (AP) — When the Rev. Denzil Gilbert got off his horse after 12 days of riding from church to church, he had spoken to 745 people at 13 meetings and had ridden in almost every weather imaginable.

The statistics aren't so unusual for a circuit rider. It's the circuit rider that is unusual in today's times. Gilbert took to the trail recently as part of the bicentennial celebration of Methodism in America and got a quick taste of what his forefathers experienced.

Nuns may get opportunity to vote

HOLYOKE, Mass. (AP) — The "evolution" of women's roles in society could now extend to the 1,800 nuns of the once silent Trappist order, which is considering giving women members the power to vote on the order's rules, a spokesman says.

The Trappists, who dropped their silence rule in the 1960s, are holding their general chapter meeting here this month — the first time in 900 years the Roman Catholic order has met outside Europe.

The Rev. Flavian Burns predicted that in updating the order's constitution to meet new church laws adopted last year, the 88 monks and 29 nuns at the meeting would "be moving along" on giving the nuns the power to vote at future general chapter meetings. The sessions are held every three or four years.

De Lorean's attorney still questions agent

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An FBI agent, the first witness to testify against John Z. De Lorean, enters his fourth week on the witness stand with the automaker's attorney saying he still has a few more questions.

The testimony of agent Benedict Tisa has been under siege during seven days of fierce cross-examination in De Lorean's drug trafficking trial. Tisa has been accused by the defense of lying and, several times, he has tried to retract statements he made under oath.

"I have some things in my hip pocket left for Mr. Tisa," attorney Howard Weitzman said. The questioning was to resume today.

Tisa, one of the lead actors in an elaborate government "sting" operation in the De Lorean case in 1982, portrayed a shady banker offering a drug deal to De Lorean, who was desperate to raise money for his failing car company.

As the defense attorney dissected Tisa's story of the "sting," these disclosures were made:

— Tisa may have destroyed some of his rough notes on the case, a revelation which led to a dismissal motion still pending on grounds of destroying evidence.

— Tisa conceded that he informed FBI headquarters that De Lorean had a history of drug dealing without bothering to check out whether the tip from an informant was true. It turned out to be false.

— Tisa said he decided to combine the cases of De Lorean and drug dealer William Morgan Hetrick before the two men had ever met, leading to charges that he was attempting to create a conspiracy where none existed. Tisa denied this.

— He admitted that he never checked on whether collateral turned over by De Lorean to pay for the alleged drug deal was worth anything. The defense says it was worthless.

— On Friday, Tisa said he was convinced from the day he first spoke to De Lorean that the automaker intended to get involved in a drug deal. Later, he retracted that comment, saying he did not want to give the impression that his mind was made up about De Lorean's guilt before the investigation concluded.

The agent also admitted it was he, not De Lorean, who first brought up the subject of drugs in conversations.

De Lorean, 59, charged with conspiring to distribute $24 million worth of cocaine, was arrested Oct. 19, 1982. He could face 72 years in prison if convicted on all counts.

Jurors listened intently and took notes as Tisa testified. U.S. District Judge Robert Takasugi, concerned about the length of the cross-examination, told the witness to keep his answers short and to the point.

"You don't want to make a career of testifying here," the judge said.

Spear-carrying tribesmen, dancers greet pope

MOUNT HAGEN, Papua New Guinea (AP) — Spear-carrying tribesmen and bare-breasted dancers cheered Pope John Paul II today as he came to a golf course carved out of the jungle highlands and celebrated Mass for 200,000 natives.

"Mi laikum yu Papi (I love you, Pope)," the crowds chanted in pidgin English. They toasted the pontiff by singing "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow" and "Happy Birthday."

John Paul turns 64 on May 18. Days of torrential rains made the island waterlogged, but the sun broke out when the pope came to Mount Hagen to say Mass, in pidgin English, on a soggy golf course. Tribesmen, most of them barefoot, stood in as much as 10 inches of mud.

John Paul slipped as he was getting off his open white limousine but kept his balance and did not fall.

The two-engine Fokker-28 jet that brought John Paul to this highland town from Port Moresby developed an electrical fault in the unit that supplies power to the craft's lighting and air conditioning while on the ground, said spokesmen for the Vatican and the airline, Air Niugini. They said the problem did not jeopardize the pope's safety.

After the exuberant display by the natives in Mount Hagen, the pope went back to Port Moresby. Police reported a brief security scare there when officers thought they saw a suspicious-looking youth on a hill behind a church where the pope was blessing schoolchildren. A burly policeman was used as a human shield for the pope, but a search of the hillside turned up no suspect.

In Port Moresby, the pope urged bishops and priests to fight polygamy, alcoholism and what he said were other "moral and social evils" threatening family life in the Pacific Islands.

Alcoholism, linked by some islanders to violence and tribal fighting, is considered a major problem in Papua New Guinea. Sale of alcohol was forbidden until 20 years ago. During the pope's visit to Mount Hagen, all bars and liquor stores were closed by authorities, who said they hoped the closure would help prevent violence.

Natives traveled for days, some of them for weeks, through jungle and cloud-capped mountains to this town, 5,500 feet above sea level, to attend the "sing sing" in honor of the pope.

Fearing that excitement during the pope's four-hour visit might cause simmering tribal feuds to boil over, the government banned warriors of the primitive highlands from bringing their bows and arrows to the gathering.

Hundreds of warriors, however, clutched ceremonial spears and axes as they cheered on the pope.

At least two groups of tribesmen from remote villages dragged 30-foot-high crosses to the Mass to get the pope's blessing. They will drag the crucifixes home to erect them in their villages.

Government of Solomon Islands cancels photographer's credentials

HONIARA, Solomon Islands (AP) — The government, imposing tough security measures for Pope John Paul II's one-day visit, today canceled the accreditation of an Associated Press photographer and ordered him to leave the country.

Neil Ulevich, who won a Pulitzer Prize in 1977 for his pictures of student riots in Thailand, had flown to Honiara from Papua New Guinea on a commercial flight Sunday to make photo arrangements for the papal visit. He was given less than two hours notice to leave, and left Honiara on a flight that departed this morning.

Ulevich, the AP photo editor in Peking, had been admitted by immigration officials after brief questioning. No reason was given for the decision to cancel his visa and accreditation, but the immigration officials said the order came from the prime minister's office.

Last Friday, the government revoked the accreditation of dozens of reporters and photographers who were scheduled to fly to these South Pacific Islands on Wednesday to cover the pope's tour. It said it would allow only a small group of journalists accompanying the pontiff to enter the country.

Prime Minister Solomon Mamaloni's government said it had learned that terrorists posing as journalists might use the pope's visit as a way to come here.

John Paul is to arrive Wednesday morning and return that evening to Port Moresby, Papua New Guinea. The pontiff flew to Port Moresby on Monday from Seoul, South Korea, which was the first major stop on his 11-day Asian tour.

Security measures that had been taken over the weekend were strengthened because of an alleged Libyan plot to seize the British Embassy.

U.S., Honduras, El Salvador end exercises

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — The United States, El Salvador and Honduras have completed naval exercises designed to improve cooperation among pro-American countries in the region and cut off arms supply routes to leftist rebels in El Salvador.

In Nicaragua, the leftist Sandinista government said it would send a complaint today to the U.N. International Maritime Organization in London about the U.S. mining of its ports.

Also in Nicaragua, opposition parties on Monday criticized a government announcement which said the presidential campaign would only last two months. Opposition spokesmen said they need more time to express their views and complained that restrictions on freedom of the press and assembly were not lifted.

The joint naval maneuvers, which began two weeks ago, took place in the Gulf of Fonseca, on the Pacific coast about 85 miles from Tegucigalpa.

The three countries issued a joint statement saying the exercises "concluded successfully and in accordance with the plans that were made."

Two U.S. warships — the destroyer USS Deyo and the guided missile frigate USS Reid — participated in the maneuvers along with an undisclosed number of Honduran and Salvadoran patrol boats.

Col. James Strachan, a U.S. military spokesman, said the American ships provided the Hondurans and the Salvadorans with information about vessels suspected of carrying supplies to Salvadoran rebels.

He said the U.S. ships did not help intercept any suspicious boats. He did not say whether any boats actually were stopped by the Hondurans and the Salvadorans.

The Reagan administration and its Central American allies maintain the leftist government in Nicaragua is supplying insurgents trying to topple U.S.-backed El Salvador. Pentagon officials have said one of the purposes of the naval exercises was to deter arms shipments to the rebels.

Nicaragua, Honduras and El Salvador have coastlines along the Gulf of Fonseca.

Nicaragua's Foreign Ministry said Foreign Minister Miguel D'Escoto will send a letter to the U.N. International Maritime Organization complaining about the role of the Central Intelligence Agency in mining Nicaragua's ports.

The CIA planned and directed the planting of the explosive devices, but U.S. officials say the mining has stopped. The Nicaraguan government says it has been able to deactivate only 18 of 600 mines estimated to be in several ports.

Daniel Ortega, head of the Sandinista junta in Nicaragua, met with Regis Debray, adviser to French President Francois Mitterrand, to ask that the French "give a speedy answer to the Nicaraguan request for technical and material help in sweeping the mines," the Foreign Ministry said.

The French government last month offered to help Nicaragua deactivate the mines, but made it clear it did not want to be the only country taking part in the effort. About a dozen ships from various countries — including the Soviet Union and Japan — were damaged earlier this spring by the mines.

Luis Vega Miranda, secretary general of Nicaragua's Social Christian Party, criticized the Supreme Electoral Council for not including in its Saturday announcement a proposal to lift a two-year-old state of emergency law restricting freedom of the press and assembly.

Mavericks face difficult task

Dallas loses Mark Aguirre for tonight

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Even at full strength, the Dallas Mavericks would face a most difficult task at the Forum tonight. And they might not be at full strength.

High-scoring forward Mark Aguirre was listed as questionable Monday for tonight's fifth game of the National Basketball Association playoff series between the Mavericks and the Los Angeles Lakers.

A VICTORY by the Lakers would end the best-of-seven Western Conference semifinal series. It would also be no surprise, considering Los Angeles won the first two games of the series at the Forum by a combined total of 59 points.

Aguirre traveled from Texas to California with the Mavericks Monday, but didn't practice. A spokesperson for the team said his status for tonight wouldn't be known until shortly before tipoff time, which is 10 p.m. CDT.

Aguirre, who averaged 29.5 points per game during the regular season, scored 34 points during the Mavericks' 122-115 overtime loss to the Lakers Sunday that gave Los Angeles a 3-1 lead in the series.

However, Aguirre was held scoreless in the fourth quarter and left the game for good when he suffered a badly bruised right hip. He was injured while diving for a loose ball with 54 seconds remaining in regulation play.

"Looks like we lost one of our cannons," said Dallas guard Rolando Blackman, the Mavericks' second-leading scorer. "We'll just have to load up as best we can if Mark can't play."

THE TEAMS might be deadlocked at 2-2 entering tonight's game had it not been for a huge blunder by rookie Dallas guard Derek Harper.

The Mavericks tied the game at 108-108 on a driving left-handed shot by center Pat Cummings with 31 seconds to go in the fourth quarter. Cummings was fouled on the play, but missed the free throw, leaving the score tied.

However, Harper thought Cummings made the free throw, giving his team a 109-108 lead.

After Los Angeles center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar missed a shot with about 10 seconds left, Rolando Blackman rebounded and passed the ball upcourt to Dale Ellis.

Ellis got the ball to Harper with five seconds to go, plenty of time for Dallas to set up a potential game-winning shot. But Harper, a 22-year-old first-year player from Illinois, dribbled away the final seconds.

INSTEAD OF the game being over and Dallas winning, as Harper thought, the teams had to play a five-minute overtime period.

The Mavericks scored the first four points of the overtime period, but the Lakers then rattled off the next 10 to take command.

Abdul-Jabbar, who scored 33 points and grabbed 11 rebounds, said the Mavericks are in a very difficult position.

"We're going to make it very tough for them," he said. "It isn't over till it's over, but we'll just see what happens."

Said Michael Cooper of the Lakers: "They've got a long, uphill road to travel." A spokesman for the Lakers said Monday afternoon that starting Los Angeles forward Jamaal Wilkes might play tonight for the first time since the playoffs began.

WILKES, 31 and in his 10th NBA season, missed the three Los Angeles playoff games with Kansas City and the four so far with Dallas because of an intestinal infection.

Wilkes, who averaged 17.3 points per game during the regular season, rejoined the Lakers last week and was in uniform in Dallas, but didn't play.

If a sixth game is necessary, it will be played at Dallas Thursday night. If a seventh game is needed, it will be played at the Forum Saturday afternoon.

Coin flip postponed as NBA investigates

NEW YORK (AP) — The National Basketball Association has called a May 17 hearing to investigate allegations that the Houston Rockets and Portland Trail Blazers illegally contacted college stars Patrick Ewing and Akeem Olatunji.

In the meantime, the NBA postponed Thursday's coin flip that will determine which of the two teams will pick first in the June 19 draft.

Both teams denied any violation of NBA rules, which say teams may not contact prospective draftees more than 45 days before the draft.

Ewing, of national champion Georgetown, has elected to stay at the school for his senior season. Olatunji, a junior at Houston, has announced his intent to bypass his final collegiate year to turn professional.

Georgetown beat Houston 84-75 for the national championship April 2 at Seattle.

Last month, the New York Post reported that Portland had made proposals to both players. At the time, club president and principal owner, Larry Weinberg, said in a statement that "no member of the Portland Trail Blazers has made an offer to or been in touch with either Akeem Olatunji or Patrick Ewing or their agents, if they have any."

Stu Inman, Portland general manager, said he assumed the Post story helped prompt NBA Commissioner David Stern's investigation. "We have a new commissioner, and he may be overreacting," Inman said. "I don't know."

Rockets General Manager Ray Patterson said his team "has not violated any NBA by-laws, that's all I know. There have been a lot of rumors circulating, and I think the commissioner did a good thing to clear the air."

The NBA refused to say whether it first heard of the allegations from the colleges or the pro teams.

Houston earned the dubious privilege of participating in the coin flip by finishing with the worst record in the Western Conference, 21-53.

A&M's Randy Matson among Fame hopefuls

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Former Olympic champions Randy Matson and Madeline Manning Mims are among the ten athletes, coaches and trainers vying for positions in the National Track and Field Hall of Fame this year.

The Athletics Congress announced Monday that nearly 600 ballots have been mailed this month to members of Track and Field Writers of America, TAC officials, Hall of Fame members and various track and field champions.

The three candidates who receive the most votes will be inducted into the hall when it reopens in Indianapolis in September.

If the three do not include a coach or contributor, the candidate from that category with the most votes will also be inducted.

The candidates are: —Harold Connolly, a Somerville, Mass. native and four-time Olympian, who won a Gold Medal at the 1960 Olympics for the hammer throw.

—Matson of Kilgore, Texas, who went to high school in Pampa, Texas, to college at Texas A&M, and who broke several world shot put records and won a Gold Medal in the 1968 Olympics.

—Joe McCluskey, a South Manchester, Conn. native and a middle distance star of the 1930s, who won a steeplechase Bronze Medal in 1932.

—Mims of Cleveland, Ohio, who was the first female American middle distance star of world-class calibre. She was a 1968 gold medalist at 800 meters.

—The late Tony Russo, a Highland Falls, N.Y. native, who was to have coordinated trainer services at the 1984 Olympics.

—The late Martin Sheridan, a native of Ireland, who received nine Olympic medals in 1904, 1906 and 1908 for the United States.

—The late Morgan Taylor, a Sioux City, S.D. native who won medals in three Olympics in the 1920s and 1930s in the intermediate hurdles.

—John Thomas, a Boston, Mass. native who won two medals in high jumping at Olympics in the 1950s and 1960s.

—Bud Winter, a San Jose State University coach, who has instructed three Olympic champions.

—Joe Yancey, a New York Pioneer Club coach, who has instructed 18 Olympians.

The deadline for ballots is June 1, with installation of the inductees scheduled at the Hoosier Dome in September.

Utah Jazz coach Frank Layden shows the enthusiasm that earned him NBA Coach of the Year honors. He led his Jazz into the playoffs for the first time in the 10-year history of the franchise.

Jazz' Frank Layden named NBA's top coach

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — At the outset of the 1983-84 National Basketball Association, Frank Layden of the Utah Jazz seemed a most unlikely candidate for the league's coach of the year award.

But Layden, after leading the Jazz to the Midwest Division championship and into the playoffs for the first time in the club's existence, on Monday achieved the distinction he once considered unattainable.

"I remember being at the Waldorf in New York last year when (Milwaukee Coach) Don Nelson got the award," Layden recalled. "He was going up to the podium to get the trophy and I said to myself, 'What a tremendous feeling it must be.'"

"I never thought it would be possible. I'm 52 and the life expectancy in America is 76. I never thought I'd live long enough to get this award," he said.

Layden received 54 of 76 votes cast by sports writers and broadcasters nationwide to win the honor.

Detroit's Chuck Daly was second in the balloting with 12 votes, followed by New York's Hubie Brown with five, Boston's K.C. Jones with three and Dick Motta of Dallas and Jack Ramsay of Portland with one vote apiece.

Layden learned of his selection Monday morning at his Salt Lake City home, before he and the Jazz prepared for playoff game No. 5 tonight against the Phoenix Suns. The Suns lead the best-of-seven Western Conference semifinal series 3-1.

The tribute, however, didn't accord Layden lofty status at his home.

"I thought it was humorous that when I got the call from the NBA office this morning, five minutes later my wife, Barbara, told me to take the garbage out," Layden joked. "That brought me back to earth."

Layden's reputation during his first 1 1/2 seasons with the Jazz was more that of a humorist than strategist, as his team struggled to 25-57 and 30-52 records.

Many pre-season publications figured the Jazz would follow the pattern of its often forgettable past and again fall below 500.

"He's done the job," Dantley said. "The Jazz has never won and we've won this year."

Brackens gives history lesson

A year ago Midland Lee's Marc Brackens gave himself up for the good of the team. Today he is all smiles — and state bound.

Brackens doesn't play baseball where giving yourself up is a daily practice. Brackens runs track — and runs very well, thank you. Giving yourself up in track can be an ego buster.

But things have turned out well for the Rebel speed merchant since that decision of a year ago. To refresh minds, Brackens qualified for the Region 1 400 meters a year ago as a sophomore.

He scratched himself from that event to give Lee another fresh runner in the 1600-meter relay. The move paid off as Lee earned a state berth in the 1600 relay.

THIS YEAR Brackens won the District 4-5A championship in the 400 and got his chance Saturday in Lubbock to compete in his first region 400 race, finishing second with a career best 47.89. It was his first race under 48 seconds.

He again ran a leg on Lee's 1600 relay and that team is also headed for Austin Saturday for the Class 5A state finals.

After winning district, Brackens noted, "Last year I wasn't disappointed at not getting to run in the quarter because I knew my chances were not all that good of going to state. We had a better chance in the relay and I was fresh for that race. However, I would be disappointed if I don't get to run this year because I feel I have a chance in the regionals."

Lee track coach Sam Volpe felt the same way. "Marc will run the 400 at regionals. He has a good chance of going to state and he didn't a year ago."

But even when Brackens got his chance, he had to beat a torturous mental game to earn his state berth.

Just prior to the starting gun going off, Brackens' starting blocks slipped on him, making it look as if the Reb had jumped the gun. Fortunately, officials saw what happened and let Brackens run. However, the youngster had to wait five minutes for a ruling to be made.

WHEN ALL was said and done, Brackens was allowed to run. He would not say that the anxious moments could have cost him a trip to state.

"It blew my concentration. It wiped me out mentally," he said. "But who is to say that it hurt me. I ran a 47.8, a time I thought I wasn't capable of doing."

The concentration must have returned quickly. He ran a great 400, finishing only behind region favorite Pat Dingler of Fort Worth Western Hills. He also brought Lee's relay team from fourth to second with a 46.9 split on his anchor run in the 1600 relay. Now he is state bound in two events.

Volpe was pleased with the performance of Brackens, but felt that Marc did what he was capable of doing.

"When you compete in track, you have to perform under all sorts of obstacles. Marc found that out Saturday," said Volpe. "He realized that he was still alive (after the ruling) and still had that shot to perform. You have to perform like that if you want to compete and I guess he did."

And now it's time for Lee junior Walter Jones to take note of this history lesson.

IT WAS Jones who gave himself up for the good of the team Saturday. He had qualified for the 200 meters, but scratched himself from that event to give Lee a fresh third relay leg. He too is going to Austin for the second year in a row after a 48.4 relay leg.

The sprints were very strong in 1984. Jones is a class runner, but he didn't stand a good chance at earning a state berth in the 200. And Lee needed all the fresh legs they could find to hustle out a state relay berth.

As a senior, Jones could be the class of the sprint field in 1985. Maybe he won't have to give himself up again. Brackens' history lesson says that all who are patient usually find glory in the end.

It's been a lesson worth watching, one we will watch for one more year.

Perez shakes jail term, suspension for first victory

By The Associated Press

One down, 19 to go. Pascual Perez has returned to action after three months in jail and an on-again, off-again suspension for drug possession, posting his first pitching victory of the year for the Atlanta Braves.

"Now I need only 19 more to win 20," Perez says.

Perez pitched 5 1/2 innings Tuesday in a sometimes rocky outing, allowing five runs on seven hits, but the Braves slugged out an 8-6 victory over Philadelphia.

"He doesn't show the effects of no spring training," said Manager Joe Torre, whose Braves have won three in a row.

NL Roundup

Perez actually made his first start on May 2 against San Diego, but that game was rained out after three innings.

Perez spent three months in jail in his homeland, the Dominican Republic, before being convicted of a misdemeanor charge of possession of cocaine and released. Commissioner Bowie Kuhn suspended the pitcher until May 16, but after Perez filed a union grievance, the suspension was lifted by an arbitrator.

"I feel I'm in good condition," the 27-year-old Perez said. "But I haven't pitched in a long time and need to get my control."

Atlanta scored four of its runs in the second inning, erasing a 1-0 Philadelphia lead. Dale Murphy, who hit his seventh homer, and Claudell Washington each drove in two runs for the Braves.

Expos 4, Astros 1

Steve Rogers worked 5 1/2 innings, allowing just three hits before leaving with a blister, and snapped a 1-1 tie with an RBI double in the Montreal fifth. Andre Dawson later hit a two-run single in the inning to give the Expos a three-run lead over Houston.

Terry Francona, who has seven hits in his last 10 at-bats, started the Expos' fifth with a triple. One out later, Rogers doubled off Joe Niekro, scoring Francona. Miguel Dilone singled, sending Rogers to third, and, one out later, Niekro hit Tim Lincecum with a pitch to load the bases. Dawson then grounded a single past shortstop, driving in two more runs.

Enos Cabell provided Houston with its only run, hitting his second homer of the year in the fourth inning.

Reds 11, Mets 2

Cincinnati handed the Mets their third straight loss, backing Mario Soto to his third straight win with 16 hits. The hits included eighth-inning homers by Duane Walker and Wayne Krenchicki, giving the Reds a 10-1 lead.

Tom Foley had three singles and two RBI for Cincinnati, and Dan Driessen added an RBI with two doubles and a single.

Soto, 4-1, all owed five hits in seven innings, striking out five. The Reds victimized Mets right-hander Tim Lincecum, 1-3, for four runs on six hits in 2 2/3 innings.

Cardinals 5, Dodgers 1

Darrell Porter hit a three-run homer and a run-scoring single, breaking out of a 1-for-14 slump, as St. Louis ended a three-game losing streak. Porter's homer, No. 5 on the season, came during a four-run second inning against Dodgers left-hander Rick Honeycutt, who lost for the first time in five decisions.

Dave LaPoint pitched for St. Louis until walked by Mike Marshall to start the sixth and giving up a double to Candy Maldonado.

Cubs 10, Giants 7

Leon Durham hit his fourth home run in four games, a three-run shot to spark a seven-run second inning as the Cubs ended San Francisco's four-game winning streak. Chuck Rainey took a one-hit shutout into the seventh inning when the Giants chased him with five runs.

Steve Lake also homered for the Cubs, to open Chicago's big inning. Bob Dernier tripled home a run, Ryne Sandberg had an RBI single and Durham followed with his sixth homer of the year. Lake capped the rally with an RBI double.

Jack Clark homered in the eighth, his fifth, for San Francisco.

Chicago White Sox' Julio Cruz scores as Milwaukee Brewers' catcher Jim Sundberg tries in vain to make the tag at the plate.

Cruz scored on a triple to right field by Rudy Law, but the Brewers won the game, 7-3.

Detroit Tigers taking no prisoners

By The Associated Press

The Detroit Tigers are taking no prisoners this year.

"How can it get any better than this?" said Chet Lemon, the hottest hitter on the hottest team in baseball, after helping the runaway Tigers crush the Kansas City Royals 10-3 Monday night.

The victory extended the Tigers' road record to an incredible 12-0 and their overall mark in the American League East to 23-4.

"I don't know what tomorrow will bring," said Tiger Manager Sparky Anderson, "but for now we are playing super. It's hard to contain our lineup. From top to bottom, we don't lose a thing. We keep coming at people whether it's with our leadoff guy or our No. 9 guy. We're playing with the same confidence we left spring training with."

Lemon knocked in three runs in the Tigers' latest victory, while Darrell Evans unloaded a two-run homer.

Juan Berenguer, 2-1, struck out two and gave up six hits through 6 1/2 innings as the Royals lost their 10th game in 12 starts. Rookie Mark Gubicza struck out six of the first nine batters he faced but wound up with a third loss in three decisions.

AL Roundup

"That young kid really throws great," Lemon said of the hard-throwing rookie. "He has an exceptional fastball. It took a second time round to adjust and know how hard he was really throwing."

The Royals' slump is reaching dangerous proportions. The once-dominant team of the American League West is only two games out of the cellar.

"When you're not scoring runs, everyone wants to jump on you," said Manager Dick Howser. "We're just going to have to do whatever it takes — get several well pitched games and figure a way to score some runs or just outscore some teams for a few days."

Yankees 5, Indians 2

Don Mattingly and Steve Kemp hit New York's first home runs in 11 games while Shane Rawley allowed one hit in five innings, leading New York over visiting Cleveland.

Rawley, 1-2, who failed to last more than two innings in two of his three previous starts, walked five, struck out four and allowed only Carmen Castillo's second-inning single in his five-inning stint.

Curt Brown and Jay Howell finished up with Howell going the final 2 1/2 innings for his first save.

The victory was only the Yankees' third in their last 12 outings while Cleveland suffered its fourth straight setback and eighth in nine games.

"I started swinging the bat a little better in Milwaukee over the weekend," Kemp said. "Right now, I feel good."

Brewers 7, White Sox 3

In Chicago, Jim Sundberg and Ted Simmons each clubbed two-run homers to carry Milwaukee over the White Sox.

The Brewers' power display was a welcome change for winner Jaime Cocanower, 1-4, who had received only seven runs in his previous five starts this year. Cocanower gave up six hits, struck out two and walked one in seven innings before giving way to Rollie Fingers.

"This is the first game this year that I've really hit the ball," said Simmons. "I haven't hit a ball like that in a long time. Last year, probably. But you never really know."

Twins 11, Angels 1

In Anaheim, Gary Gaetti and Houston Jimenez each knocked in three runs and Mike Smithson scattered six hits as Minnesota defeated California.

Smithson, 4-3, walked two and struck out six in completing his third game of the season. The strikeouts gave him 38 for the year, second in the American League to Bert Blyleven's 43 with Cleveland.

Gaetti hit a three-run homer off reliever Frank LaCorte in the seventh to give the Twins a 6-1 lead at that point, and Minnesota added five insurance runs in the ninth, two on a single by Mickey Hatcher.

"I feel I can get any right-handed batter out in the American League," Smithson said. "California has a good balanced lineup but if I take care with the lefties, I'm confident of handling the righties."

A's 6, Mariners 5

In Oakland, Bruce Bochte singled with one out in the ninth inning to score Joe Morgan from third base and lead the A's over Seattle.

Morgan drew a walk from Roy Thomas, 2-1 to open the A's ninth and then stole his second base of the game. He went to third on a single by pinch-hitter Garry Hancock. Bochte got the game-winning hit off reliever Mike Stanton after Carney Lansford flied to left.

The winning pitcher was former Seattle relief ace Bill Caudill, 4-0, who pitched the final 2 1/2 innings. He has also six saves for the A's, who have won 16 games.

Drugs: Baseball's thorn

By Andrew Ross
Hearst Feature Service

Analysis

Major league baseball team owners are expected to vote later this month on a plan aimed at providing a consistent policy toward the growing number of players linked to drug-related activities, a group that now includes Oakland A's pitcher Mike Norris.

It's a controversy that has sent ripples of embarrassment through big league stadiums across the country and prompted league officials to mete out tough punitive measures while promising help to those who want it.

Last December, baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn sounded a stern warning as he imposed the stiffest penalties in baseball history against four players from both leagues who had been linked to drug use.

"As a sport, we have been very fortunate the problems with illegal drugs have not been epidemic," Kuhn said. "Nonetheless, we recognize that our players are models for young people and must behave accordingly. We have continually warned every one in baseball that we cannot and will not tolerate illegal drug use."

Just last week, distressed by the reversal of two suspensions he had ordered in less than a month, Kuhn said, "One thing you can be sure of, we're not going to sit back and let the problem fester."

According to Roy Eisenhardt, the A's owner, the league's newly-proposed drug policies would distinguish between players criminally involved with narcotics and those who acknowledge their drug dependency and seek help to break the habit. Those who come forward, he said, would be given a 75-day amnesty period in which to end their dependency. Those who don't — and are caught — would face unspecified but harsh consequences.

In one of the most widely reported baseball-related drug cases, four members of the 1983 Kansas City Royals pleaded guilty to misdemeanor cocaine possession charges last October during an investigation of cocaine drug traffic in a Kansas suburb. All were sentenced to three-month prison terms.

In what was termed a strong message to players, Kuhn suspended Willie Wilson — the only member remaining with the Royals — and Willie Aikens and Jerry Martin from professional baseball for one year without pay. The fourth was former Oakland A's and San Francisco Giants pitcher Vida Blue, a Cy Young award winner who is no longer in baseball.

But then, on challenges by the Major League Baseball Players Association, an arbitrator last month ordered Wilson, Martin, now of the New York Mets, and Aikens, now of the Toronto Blue Jays, reinstated by May 16. Kuhn agreed, provided they undergo periodic urinalysis and drug rehabilitation and participate in community service for two years.

Kuhn also reinstated Atlanta Braves pitcher Pascual Perez, whom he suspended after the ballplayer was convicted of cocaine possession in the Dominican Republic on March 23.

The reinstatements brought a strong reaction from Jim Hawkins, lawyer for suspended Los Angeles Dodgers pitcher Steve Howe. Kuhn suspended Howe, who has admitted his continuing drug problem and sought rehabilitation but faced no criminal charges, for a year. Howe also was fined $54,000.

"There is a clear differentiation of treatment of the criminal conviction cases and the purely medical rehabilitation case of Steve Howe," said Hawkins last month. He pointed out that while Perez, Aikens, Wilson and Martin are eligible to play from May 16 on, his client won't be eligible until next season.

Guidelines on the use of drugs by players will be useful in the future if a weekend news report is any indication: The day before Norris was arrested in Oakland, the Milwaukee Sentinel said a former drug runner was quoted in court documents as naming five professional baseball players as 1981 customers of an accused cocaine dealer. The newspaper identified them as pitcher Mike Caldwell and third baseman Paul Molitor of the Milwaukee Brewers; pitcher Len Barker of the Atlanta Braves, then with Cleveland.

Polite prelims come to halt

NEW YORK (AP) — Now that the polite preliminaries have been concluded, the heavyweights take center court today at the West Side Tennis Club in the $500,000 Mercedes Tournament of Champions.

Defending champion John McEnroe, who is seeded second because of a quirk in the Nixdorf Computer rankings, will take on South Africa's Derek Tarr in a second round match, followed by 1980 T of C winner, sixth-seeded Vitas Gerulaitis, who is paired against fellow American Terry Moor.

Also seeing his first action in this eight-day tournament on the famed Har-Tru courts at Forest Hills will be fourth-seeded Jimmy Arias, whose opponent is Bruce Manson.

On Monday, Peter Fleming, who with McEnroe is top-seeded in doubles, captured the $10,000 Mercedes Challenge, a "last-chance" event, to grab the last spot in the T of C. Fleming stopped Lloyd Bourne 6-3, 6-1 and was scheduled to play Rodney Harmon in a first-round match today.

Fleming, who is ranked 24th in the world but had failed to win a tournament until the Mercedes Challenge — the T of C is a unique champions-only event — has been the star attraction the last three days, playing all four of his matches on center court.

Wednesday, May 9, 1984

YOUR BIRTHDAY TO-DAY: Actor Albert Finney, Glenda Jackson, "60 Minutes" star Mike Wallace, tennis Hank Snow, golfer Betty Jameson, California Angel Ron Jackson and St. Louis Cardinals pitcher John Stuper celebrate birthdays today. Also born on this date: abolitionist John Brown, dramatist Sir James Barrie and industrialist Henry Kaiser. Creative endeavors bring great career and financial gains. Stand your ground at place of employment. A Leo lends unexpected help. Your long-term goals come into sharper focus.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You have the magic touch in business. Financial negotiations go brilliantly. Do not allow your impatience to ruin a collaboration with an attractive member of the opposite sex.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): New developments or information aid a joint financial venture. Some foreign travel is indicated. Romantic ties come under close scrutiny. You may want a new partner. Be kind but firm.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21): Following some unconventional advice could be costly. Mate or partner is your strongest ally. Domestic matters demand a lot of time and energy. Social encounters are best postponed.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Work goes smoothly now, thanks to the intervention of a close ally. Be supportive of your loved ones. Their success can affect your fortunes, too. Give credit where it is due.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Important negotiations take place today. You receive some great career or financial news. Others may misunderstand if you seem aloof at work. Look for new outlets for your creative talents.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Welcome a golden opportunity to increase your financial security. Only seek advice from experts and trusted allies. Domestic tension lessens following a friendly chat with mate or family member.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Changes are in the wind. Attention to detail is the key to greater success. Do not let grumbling co-workers distract you from your goals. Keep secret negotiations to yourself.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You are delighted to return to the mainstream following a period of experimentation or exploration. Get ready to make new commitments and form a partnership. You seek and find interesting new friends.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Unity is the key to greater progress at work. Be realistic when deciding how much to tackle today. Tie up any loose financial ends. You may need additional insurance coverage.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Devote more time to your work. Higher-ups are appraising your efforts. Communicate with someone who appreciates your ideas. Originality counts big with influential friend. Romance is pleasant but uneventful.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Look for opportunities to increase your income. Real estate ventures prove highly profitable. Devote more time to correspondence. Carefully-worded letters can often take the place of expensive travel.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Someone influential helps your search for a new career. Consult a Capricorn about a delicate personal matter. Creative and romantic thoughts dominate late this afternoon.

Artist focused on PBS

NEW YORK (AP) — In one long, marvelous, almost spiritual scene toward the end of "de Kooning on de Kooning" on public television, the 80-year-old artist is shown at work in his Long Island studio, and the intensity of his effort almost defies description.

Still, actor Dustin Hoffman tries: "We... watch spellbound as he paints with deceptive ease, slashing paint onto his canvas, stepping back to look at the result, stepping forward to stab again."

"He's never satisfied with his work." Hoffman introduces the five films in a new series called "Strokes of Genius," starting tonight with "Jackson Pollock: Portrait." "de Kooning on de Kooning" is the third show, May 22.

Rarely in the brief, introductory segments, does Hoffman remove his hands from his pockets.

In describing de Kooning's artistic technique, he does.

"Strokes of Genius," produced by Courtney Sale Ross, examines the lives and work of five seminal practitioners of modern American art. After the Pollock film, the series continues May 15 with "Franz Kline Remembered" and "Arshile Gorky," and concludes May 29 with "David Smith: Steel into Sculpture."

Mrs. Ross, a Texan who studied art and ran a gallery in Dallas at the age of 21, turned to filmmaking in the late '70s, after putting together an exhibition, "New York: The State of Art," at the request of then-Gov. Hugh Carey.

Her first film, "The Big Picture," was a documentary of that show. She completed work on the de Kooning film in 1980, and only recently finished the Pollock documentary, which premiered at the Ziegfeld Theater in New York City in late April.

Steven Spielberg ("Jaws," "Raiders of the Lost Ark") directed Hoffman ("Tootsie") in the host segments in a classic exercise in cinematic overkill.

The Dutch-born de Kooning is the only one of the five still living, and he took Mrs. Ross, Hoffman, Spielberg and a film crew into his studio with some reluctance.

The artist and his wife, Elaine, spoke with Mrs. Ross for the film (the only one in which the producer appears), but it is the studio scene that sets "de Kooning on de Kooning" apart.

"He got so involved in doing the painting," Mrs. Ross says, "that he just forgot the camera was there. Watch the muscles in his face, the concentration."

"He walks back and forth, back and forth," she continues. "The painting appears to be finished, and then he will step up to it and, whoosh, change the whole thing."

The bidding:
 West North East South
 1 ♥ 1 NT Pass 2 ♥
 Dble Pass Pass Pass!
 Opening lead: King of ♣.

We have always taken with a pinch of salt some of the wonders of Texas that have been described to us. However, this one, from the recent North American Championships held in San Antonio, Texas, can be attested to by four players at least!

South intended his bid of two hearts as a game force and a probe for a spade fit. What caused him to pass two hearts doubled is something of a mystery. Most likely he thought that his partner had to have better hearts when he passed the double, and he felt that his outside strength would be enough to guarantee eight tricks.

What's more, we can't fault his analysis. For we have yet to find a way to defeat the contract!

Let's suppose that West leads a trump — as good an attack as any. Declarer wins and simply fires back a trump. All West will score is four trump tricks and the ace of diamonds. Declarer must be careful though to use the king of clubs and a high spade as entries to his hand to lead twice toward the king-queen of diamonds, to prevent West from scoring the queen of spades.

Now we don't want you to go around trying to play a 3-2 fit whenever you have enough points for game and are doubled at a low level. Sometimes you will find an opposing distribution where the enemy gets a side suit going and you can't come to enough tricks.

Also, if you do find a way to defeat the contract, don't bother to write and let us know. We much prefer the story as it is — we will be able to tell it for years to come.

Rig fire kills one, injures three

LAHOMA, Okla. (AP) — An oil well blew out and exploded in flames Monday, killing one worker and trapping another high on the rig for 3½ hours while flames seared his back, authorities said.

A county coroner sent to the scene because of the death helped treat the trapped worker's burns and crushed leg until he could be freed.

The explosion, which injured three other workers, occurred about 8 a.m. and was caused by a buildup of natural gas pressure. It blew a plug out of the well, striking a spark on the steel derrick that ignited the gas.

The fire burned hoses on the rig truck on the ground, releasing hydraulic fluid that fed the flames.

Killed in the explosion was Sam Smith, 31, of Enid, said Garfield County Medical Examiner Dr. Ron Martin.

James Bibbee, 30, was working on the rig 80 feet off the ground when the explosion collapsed the platform beneath him. Several lengths of drill pipe stacked against the tower fell on him, pinning his leg.

Firefighters climbed the tower, which was still hot from the flames, to try to free him, but failed.

Martin who had been summoned because of Smith's death, said at the scene, "I can't help this man (Smith), but I may be able to help that man up there."

He then donned a safety line, climbed a long fire ladder, and treated the injured man until bulldozers braced the swaying tower and a crane pulled the stack of pipe off Bibbee's leg.

Bibbee suffered third-degree burns to back and head and a crushed left leg. He was listed in critical condition in the Oklahoma City Baptist Burn Center.

Larry Don Fisher, 31, of Hennessey, was listed in stable condition at Bass Memorial Baptist Hospital with first- and second-degree burns. Two other workers were treated for minor injuries and released.

Roy Clingman, an employee of Harper Oil of Hennessey, said crews from Big Red and Angleton Tool Co. were working at the Munkres No. 3 well four miles south of Lahoma when it blew.

Oilfield worker James Bibbee, 30, Hennessey, Okla., was working 50 feet up on a drilling rig when it exploded Monday morning. Drill pipe fell on him, pinning him, while flames seared his back. Almost four hours later he was able to aid rescue workers free his leg and get him down. Dr. Ron Martin, county medical examiner holds him in place while Carter Durham guides a crane to pull the pipe away from the trapped foot. Bibbee was listed in critical condition in the Oklahoma City Baptist Burn Center.

Permian ups oil price

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business-Oil Editor

Permian Corp. announced today that it was raising its posted crude oil price $1 per barrel to meet the growing demand for West Texas, sour crude.

Permian's current price is $28 per barrel for West Texas crude less two cents for each degree gravity under 40 degrees API.

The new posted price will be $29 for 40 degrees API and above, but a penalty of 1.5 cents per 1/10 degree API under 40 degrees will be deducted to 33.4 degrees API, and a flat price of $28 will be paid for oil under that mark.

Permian's price differs from the posted price of other crude buyers that it sets a bottom price of $28 for lower gravity oil. The gravity penalty stops at 33.4 degrees.

Permian said it was raising its posted price to meet the competition and growing need for West Texas and New Mexico sour crude.

Snyder bank reopens

SNYDER, Texas (AP) — First National Bank Snyder, the sixth West Texas bank to be declared insolvent in recent months, has reopened under new ownership and new management as American State Bank of Snyder.

Executives of the failed bank were replaced by executives of American State Financial Corp., a Lubbock-based holding company that purchased the failed bank's assets a few hours after the First National was declared insolvent Friday because of bad loans.

"The rest of the staff will remain the same," said Eddie Johnson, a former vice president of the holding company and now president of the new bank, which opened Monday.

"We expect a short transition period but we will try to keep everything the same for right now. All existing First National Bank checks will be honored," he said.

Snyder is 70 miles southeast of Lubbock. Banks in Abilene, Midland, Odessa, Lubbock and Brownfield also have failed in recent months, all because of bad loans, according to the U.S. Comptroller of the Currency.

Johnson said the senior vice president and all eight officers of the failed bank have been replaced by six holding company officers.

He said the new bank has been capitalized at $1.25 million.

Johnson said a mixture of bad loans — ranching, farming and energy — figured in First National's demise. He declined comment on the bank's management.

Dean DeBuck, a spokesman for the comptroller's office, said that the bank was ordered closed Friday by H. Joe Selby, senior deputy comptroller for bank supervision. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. was appointed receiver.

"The lack of available funds to meet depositor demands coupled with substantial loan losses led to the insolvency," said DeBuck.

A few hours after the bank closed, American State submitted a bid of $682,000, the highest of four offers, said Alan Whitney, a spokesman for the FDIC.

Short-term T-Bills up

WASHINGTON (AP) — Yields on short-term Treasury securities has risen for a second straight week, hitting the highest levels since 1982, officials say.

In Monday's auctions, the government sold $8 billion in new T-bills — half in three-month bills at an average discount rate of 9.99 percent, up from 9.88 percent, and half in six-month bills at an average discount rate of 10.27 percent, up from 9.88 percent.

Monday's yields were the highest since the Aug. 9, 1982 levels of 10.025 percent for three-month bills and 10.94 percent for six-month bills.

The new discount rates understate the actual return to investors — 10.39 percent for three-month bills and 10.98 percent for six-month bills.

The government normally sells more than $12 billion in new T-bills each Monday, but the total has been reduced the past several weeks as the federal debt nears the legal limit of $1.49 trillion.

Small business proves to be personal test

SMALL BUSINESS PROFILE

By JULIE FAUBEL
Business-Oil Writer

When she opened her business almost five years ago, Sharla Kimbrough was testing herself.

"I had been playing with the idea of owning my own business for several years and I wanted to see if that's really what I wanted to do or if I was just another bored housewife," she explained.

Five years later, Ms. Kimbrough, owner of the Art Attack, located in the Imperial Shopping Center at Midkiff and Wadley, found out she wasn't bored. And on the one day her shop is closed, she is busy getting caught up with the week's work.

Before venturing out into the business world Ms. Kimbrough, who is an artist specializing in modern art, had done some framing in her home for her own creations. She had often received encouragement from friends and family. When she finally decided to take the plunge she opened her first shop on Big Spring in 1979. Two years later she moved to her present location.

Ms. Kimbrough admits she works slowly, however, she's afraid she would not do as good a job if she tried to work any faster. "I take framing very seriously. I want to make sure every fingerprint is off that frame before it goes out," she added.

Her husband, who is a dentist, a small business himself, was very supportive, of her new career. Because they both operate small businesses, their schedules are very compatible and they have the same commitment to their work. "My husband thinks it's wonderful, he only wishes I didn't work all the time."

However, she said, "It's not too difficult to take time off when there's something I really need to do."

The independence of being on her own is what she likes best. In addition, she has discovered that to remain so requires some extra effort to keep on top of her changing industry. "I stay up on the current ideas through continuing education courses in framing."

The most challenging aspects of her work is to constantly improve on the quality of her work and to regiment herself to get her paperwork done.

Kimbrough said that not anyone would be happy being a framer. "Framing usually selects the person, rather than the person selecting framing."

If she were to do a commercial jingle about her future plans for her business it would be borrowed from an old tune. "I don't want to set the world on fire, I just want to start a flame in your heart."

Kimbrough said her business is personal service. "If I make one person happy at a time then I'm doing a good job."

Kimbrough believes there is room enough for a career and a family in her life. Her 11-year-old son joins her in the afternoons to help with chores around the business.

The most gratifying indication of customer's confidence in her work, she said, is when they bring something in and simply say "please do this and call me when it's ready."

Like her contemporaries, Kimbrough too feels a responsibility to give back something to the community. Because, "If not for the community, I wouldn't be here."

Museum sets deadline for Hall of Fame

K.M. Jastrow, Midland oil operator and chairman of the Petroleum Museum's Hall of Fame Committee, has announced that Wednesday, August 1, will be the deadline for submitting names for election to the Petroleum Hall of Fame.

Persons wanting to propose names for election should request guidelines from the museum office at 1500 Interstate 20 West, Midland, or by calling 915-683-4403. Biographical information, newspaper clippings and other necessary information must also be submitted by the deadline.

According to Jastrow, "A candidate shall have made outstanding contributions to the petroleum industry or shall have served as a worthy example to those in the petroleum industry, providing strength of character and achievement for the inspiration of present and future generations."

Museum by-laws limit the number that can be elected in any year to no more than four. Elections cannot be held more often than every two years. Names offered before, but not nominated, can be considered two additional times. More than 20 names will be brought up again for study this year in addition to new names offered between now and August 1.

The late Frank T. Pickrell of El Paso was the initial Hall of Fame honoree in April 1968. Pickrell pioneered the development of the petroleum industry in the Permian Basin by drilling the Santa Rita No. 1, discovery well on The University of Texas lands in Reagan County.

Since that year, 60 persons have been elected to the Petroleum Hall of Fame. "Each has distinguished himself in significant accomplishments and is deserving of this high honor," said Jastrow. Those persons elected next fall will be honored at a commemorative dinner in the spring of 1985.

Last year's honorees were Robert O. Anderson, Roswell, New Mexico, chairman and Chief Executive Officer of Atlantic Richfield; the late Prentice F. Brown, Midland and Lubbock, Director and Vice President of Honolulu Oil (now Standard of Indianak); and the late Eric P. Haliburton, Duncan, Okla., founder of The Halliburton Co. Lea County well finals for 1,026 barrels

Business-Oil Editor

The street talk has been singing the praises of Cities Service for the past few days, following the completion of its No.1 State 'DW' in Lea County.

This wildcat completed for 1026 bopd and 819 Mcfd on a 24/64 choke through perforations at 8803-8884 ft. It is located 1980 ft. from south line and 1650 ft. from east line of Section 12, Township 18-S, Range 33-E.

The discovery was made in the notoriously unpredictable Bone Springs formation, where risk is high not only in wildcatting but in reservoir development as well. Porosity stringers throughout the pay section determine the quality of the well.

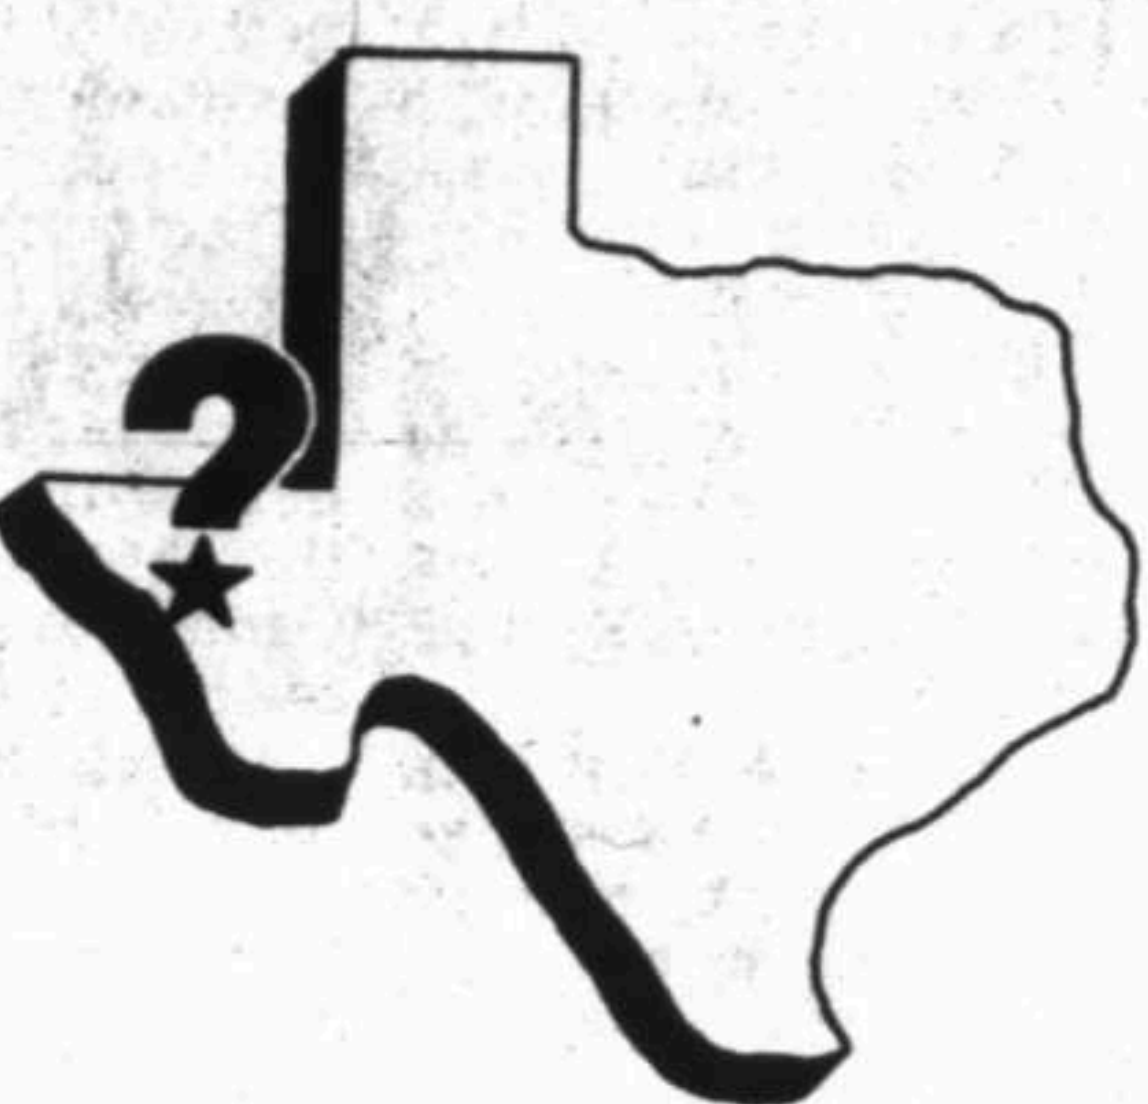

Cities Service is in the process of drilling another well one section to the west of the discovery well and Gulf is drilling still another section away. Cities Service believes it is on trend with production in the E-K multipay field three miles to the south.

Drilling was executed primarily on well control, supported by some seismic work, according to Cities Service.

Exploration Manager, Jim Niehaus, feels Cities Service will probably get at least two or three more development wells out of the discovery, plus maybe additional wells to be drilled on the trend.

"I don't expect it will be any big play in the area," said Niehaus, "but it should receive some interest."

As for the strength of the reservoir, he predicts the No.1 State 'DW' will hold up.

Reporter-Telegram Graphic: Matt Holten

Rank wildcat to be drilled in El Paso County

We have it on very good authority that a rank wildcat test for hydrocarbons will be drilled by Chevron, 30 miles west of El Paso in El Paso County near Interstate 10. Surveying for the well is now in progress and the well should spud within the next two months. This could be one of the rankiest wildcats drilled this year. We will keep you posted.

Clayton Williams finals significant wildcat

The Rocky Mountain Division of Clayton W. Williams, Jr., Midland, has completed a highly significant wildcat in Montana.

The No.11 Sanvick, located in southwest quarter of northwest quarter, Section 11, T 31-N, Range 44-E, finished on pump for 99 bopd and 24 bwpd from the Charles 'D' zone at 5,962 ft. Today the well was reported making 120 bopd and a little water.

The well is located three miles north of production in the Lustre field, a new area of interest on the western side of the Williston Basin. The Lustre field was discovered by Exxon in 1982 and since then the area has drawn the attention of a number of operators including Williams, Monsanto and Anadarko. Williams has approximately 40,000 acres in the area on trend with the Lustre field.

The discovery well is northeast of a dry hole drilled by Clayton Williams, Jr. "We just went the wrong way," said Tom Moore, Williams exploration manager. "This time we went the right way. This well was just too tight. This well was a total surprise to us."

Williams anticipates more development drilling predicated on the discovery well, and probably more drilling on the trend. Exxon and Anadarko are currently drilling in the area.

Blalock adds another strong producer

Strong producers are becoming the legacy of the Blalock Lake, SE (Wolfcamp) field in Glasscock County. BTA Oil Producers has completed its No.1 8102 JV-P Calverly flowing 218 bopd 41.8 API, 207 Mcfd, and 193 bwpd on a 24/64 in. choke. The 8230 ft. test was plugged back to 8150 and completed in perforations from 8046-8072 ft. following treatment with 250 gals. acid. The well is located 680 ft. from west and south lines of Section 36, Block 35, T-35, T&P survey, six miles southeast of Garden City.

Wildcat completed in Tom Green County

Morrow Resources Inc., Odessa, has completed its No.1 Schwartz, located 467 ft. from south and east lines of Section 56, Mason Perry Subdivision No. 2 of Collins Ranch, 5 miles northeast of Carlsbad, flowing 16 bopd and 11 bwpd on a 13/64 in. choke from perforations at 5030-5128 ft.

Seven new wildcats

staked in six counties

Seven new wildcats have been staked in Garza, Kent, Concho, Sutton, Chavez and Eddy counties. No deep wildcats are included. See Wildcat listing for details.

Judge makes ruling in ENSTAR's favor

HOUSTON — ENSTAR Corp. has announced that Vice Chancellor Joseph J. Longobardi of the Court of Chancery in Wilmington, Del., has ruled in ENSTAR's favor in the suit Huffington et. al. vs. ENSTAR Corp. et. al. Vice Chancellor Longobardi upheld ENSTAR's decision to hold its annual meeting on June 21, 1984.

In making this ruling, Vice Chancellor Longobardi said, "This court is loath to intervene in the internal management of a corporation unless and until a plaintiff can make a case that the exercise of corporate governance, otherwise proper, is used as a tool to frustrate the legitimate rights of its stockholders. In this case," the court is not convinced that the plaintiffs have carried that burden."

ENSTAR chairman O. Charles Honig stated, "We are gratified that the judgment of ENSTAR's board has been upheld in court as we expected it would be. Our success in Delaware will allow us to proceed with our primary mission of finding a buyer or buyers for the company or its assets. If Huffington would cease creating distractions from this effort, ENSTAR's shareholders will be far better served."

Tennessee Gas Pipeline Co. settles suits

HOUSTON — Tennessee Gas Pipeline Co. (TGP) has announced that it has signed an agreement with the Louisiana Land and Exploration Co. (LL&E) to dismiss litigation resulting from TGP's emergency gas purchase policy (EGPP).

Proceedings between Tennessee Gas and LL&E have also been withdrawn at the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

This is the fourth settlement to be reached by Tennessee Gas with parties that brought suit against it in connection, with the EGPP. The other three settlements were with Moore McCormack Oil & Gas Corp., Sanchez-O'Brien Oil & Gas Corp., and Burmont Co. and Pel-Tex Oil Co., Inc.

The company says that the settlements are consistent with the terms and provisions and the general philosophy of the emergency gas purchase policy, including take or pay reductions.

Tennessee Gas Pipeline Co. is a major operating division of Tenneco Inc.

Quartet Energy's name change official

TORONTO — Quartet Energy Resources Ltd. reports that its previously announced change of name to OILTEX International Ltd. has now been completed. The new name reflects the company's emphasis on exploration and development in Texas as well as Australasia.

Midlanders can be proud of schools, MHS principal says

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN
Staff Writer

Alumni from as far back as the 1920s came to Midland and Lee high schools Monday night. But they weren't there to look back. Rather, they joined parents, faculty, students and other citizens to look at the future of public education in Midland.

Showcase '84 was an evening of demonstrations, discussions and displays focusing on student achievement and quality of education in Midland high schools. Several hundred people attended.

"When we compare Midland Senior High School to others, the news is good," Principal Dr. Phillip Peregrine said in a welcome address. "The proof of the exceptional nature of Midland Senior High School is present every day in every classroom."

He mentioned statistics to prove his point:

—Local Scholastic Aptitude Test scores are up, while statewide they are declining and nationwide remain the same.

—Midland's average SAT score is 929, compared to 866 for the state and 893 for the nation.

—California Achievement Test scores were higher in every category.

—At MHS, 37 seniors will graduate with grade point averages of 4.0 or above on a 4.0 scale.

"When we compare our schools to others, the news is good. Though many U.S. schools have been eroded by a rising tide of mediocrity, Midland's public schools are an exception. Midlanders can continue to take justified pride in their public schools," Peregrine said.

Faculty discussed current high school programs and the impact new state regulations will have on them. Dennis Stratton, chairman of social studies at MHS, said he thinks Midland will continue to require three credits in social studies even though state requirements, which cut back on student electives, call for only 2½ credits.

"We're really pushing to maintain this. This will make us a leader in social studies in Texas," he said.

Foreign language chairman Kerry Davis lauded new guidelines requiring college-preparatory students to take two years of foreign language. "We're becoming a part of a very international society. Travel opportunities are greatly expanding," he said. Many jobs and many universities have foreign language requirements.

Students in band, choir, drama, speech and debate and choreography gave performances. Exhibits included student work in numerous areas including art, drafting, electronics, photography, health, home economics, industrial arts and vocational classes.

The philosophy class decided if Mohammed couldn't come to the mountain, they'd bring the wise man to the mountain to MHS. A wise man (or in this case, a woman) in a box answered deep philosophical questions for visitors. It was sort of like Philosopher in a Drum.

One soul-searcher queried, "What is the meaning of life?" Replied the sage, "You live. You die. That's about it."

MC music program crescendoes

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN
Staff Writer

Two years ago Midland College hired Ron Franklin to come in one day a week and give private music lessons to 15 students.

Today MC offers a two-year degree in commercial music. Franklin is a full-time instructor and part-timer Jerry Tubb is expected to be hired full time next year. The men work with six performing bands, teach courses in commercial music and instrumental techniques and instruct 38 students.

Franklin, who started "with zilch," now has $8,000 worth of equipment and a recording studio constructed over Christmas break.

With donated materials, Franklin, Tubb and architect major John Amos converted a classroom and storage room into a studio. They carpeted the walls, installed acoustical tile, knocked a hole in one wall and put in a triple-paned window and looped hundreds of multi-colored carpet squares on the ceiling.

Total construction cost was less than $400, Franklin said. It would have cost the college thousands of dollars to hire someone to do the work.

The recording studio is for educational and not commercial purposes, Franklin said. It is used for classes and for recording the college's rock, country and jazz bands.

As the vibrations from the music of a heavy metal band shook the walls, Franklin talked about his plans for expanding the commercial music program. And his dreams seemed to swell larger than the deafening sounds trying to escape the studio.

"This is just the start of the facilities we hope to have," Franklin said. "The first thing we plan to do is upgrade the equipment we have got. We want to increase the quality and the amount of equipment so it's a full-fledged eight-track studio. As the program grows and we get more students we hope to add a full-blown professional 24-track studio at a later date."

He said he hopes to get a video production facility as well. His students are already working with the radio-television department to produce a music video.

He hopes to expand the commercial music program to include a degree program in audio/video technology. He is developing a curriculum and budget and is seeking approval of college officials and the Texas Education Association.

He is gathering information to draw up a needs analysis and student interest survey. "MC, as far as we know, is behind it if we can show there's a job market and student interest, which I think we can," he said. "Right now, I think it will happen."

After offering an introductory course this summer, Franklin hopes to begin the program next fall.

Officials crack down on gambling

ODESSA — Carnivals across Texas are finding law enforcement less cooperative since the beginning of a statewide crackdown on the operation of what state law calls gambling devices.

Since the Department of Public Safety started enforcing 3 years ago a law prohibiting the operation of "treasure chest" machines and other games "which award tokens redeemable for prizes," long-running carnivals — such as the one raided recently in Odessa — have been finding business a little more risky.

Joe Murphy of the Austin office of the Department of Public Safety said Monday that 10-15 carnivals like the one run in Odessa by Heart of America Amusements have been the object of organized enforcement efforts.

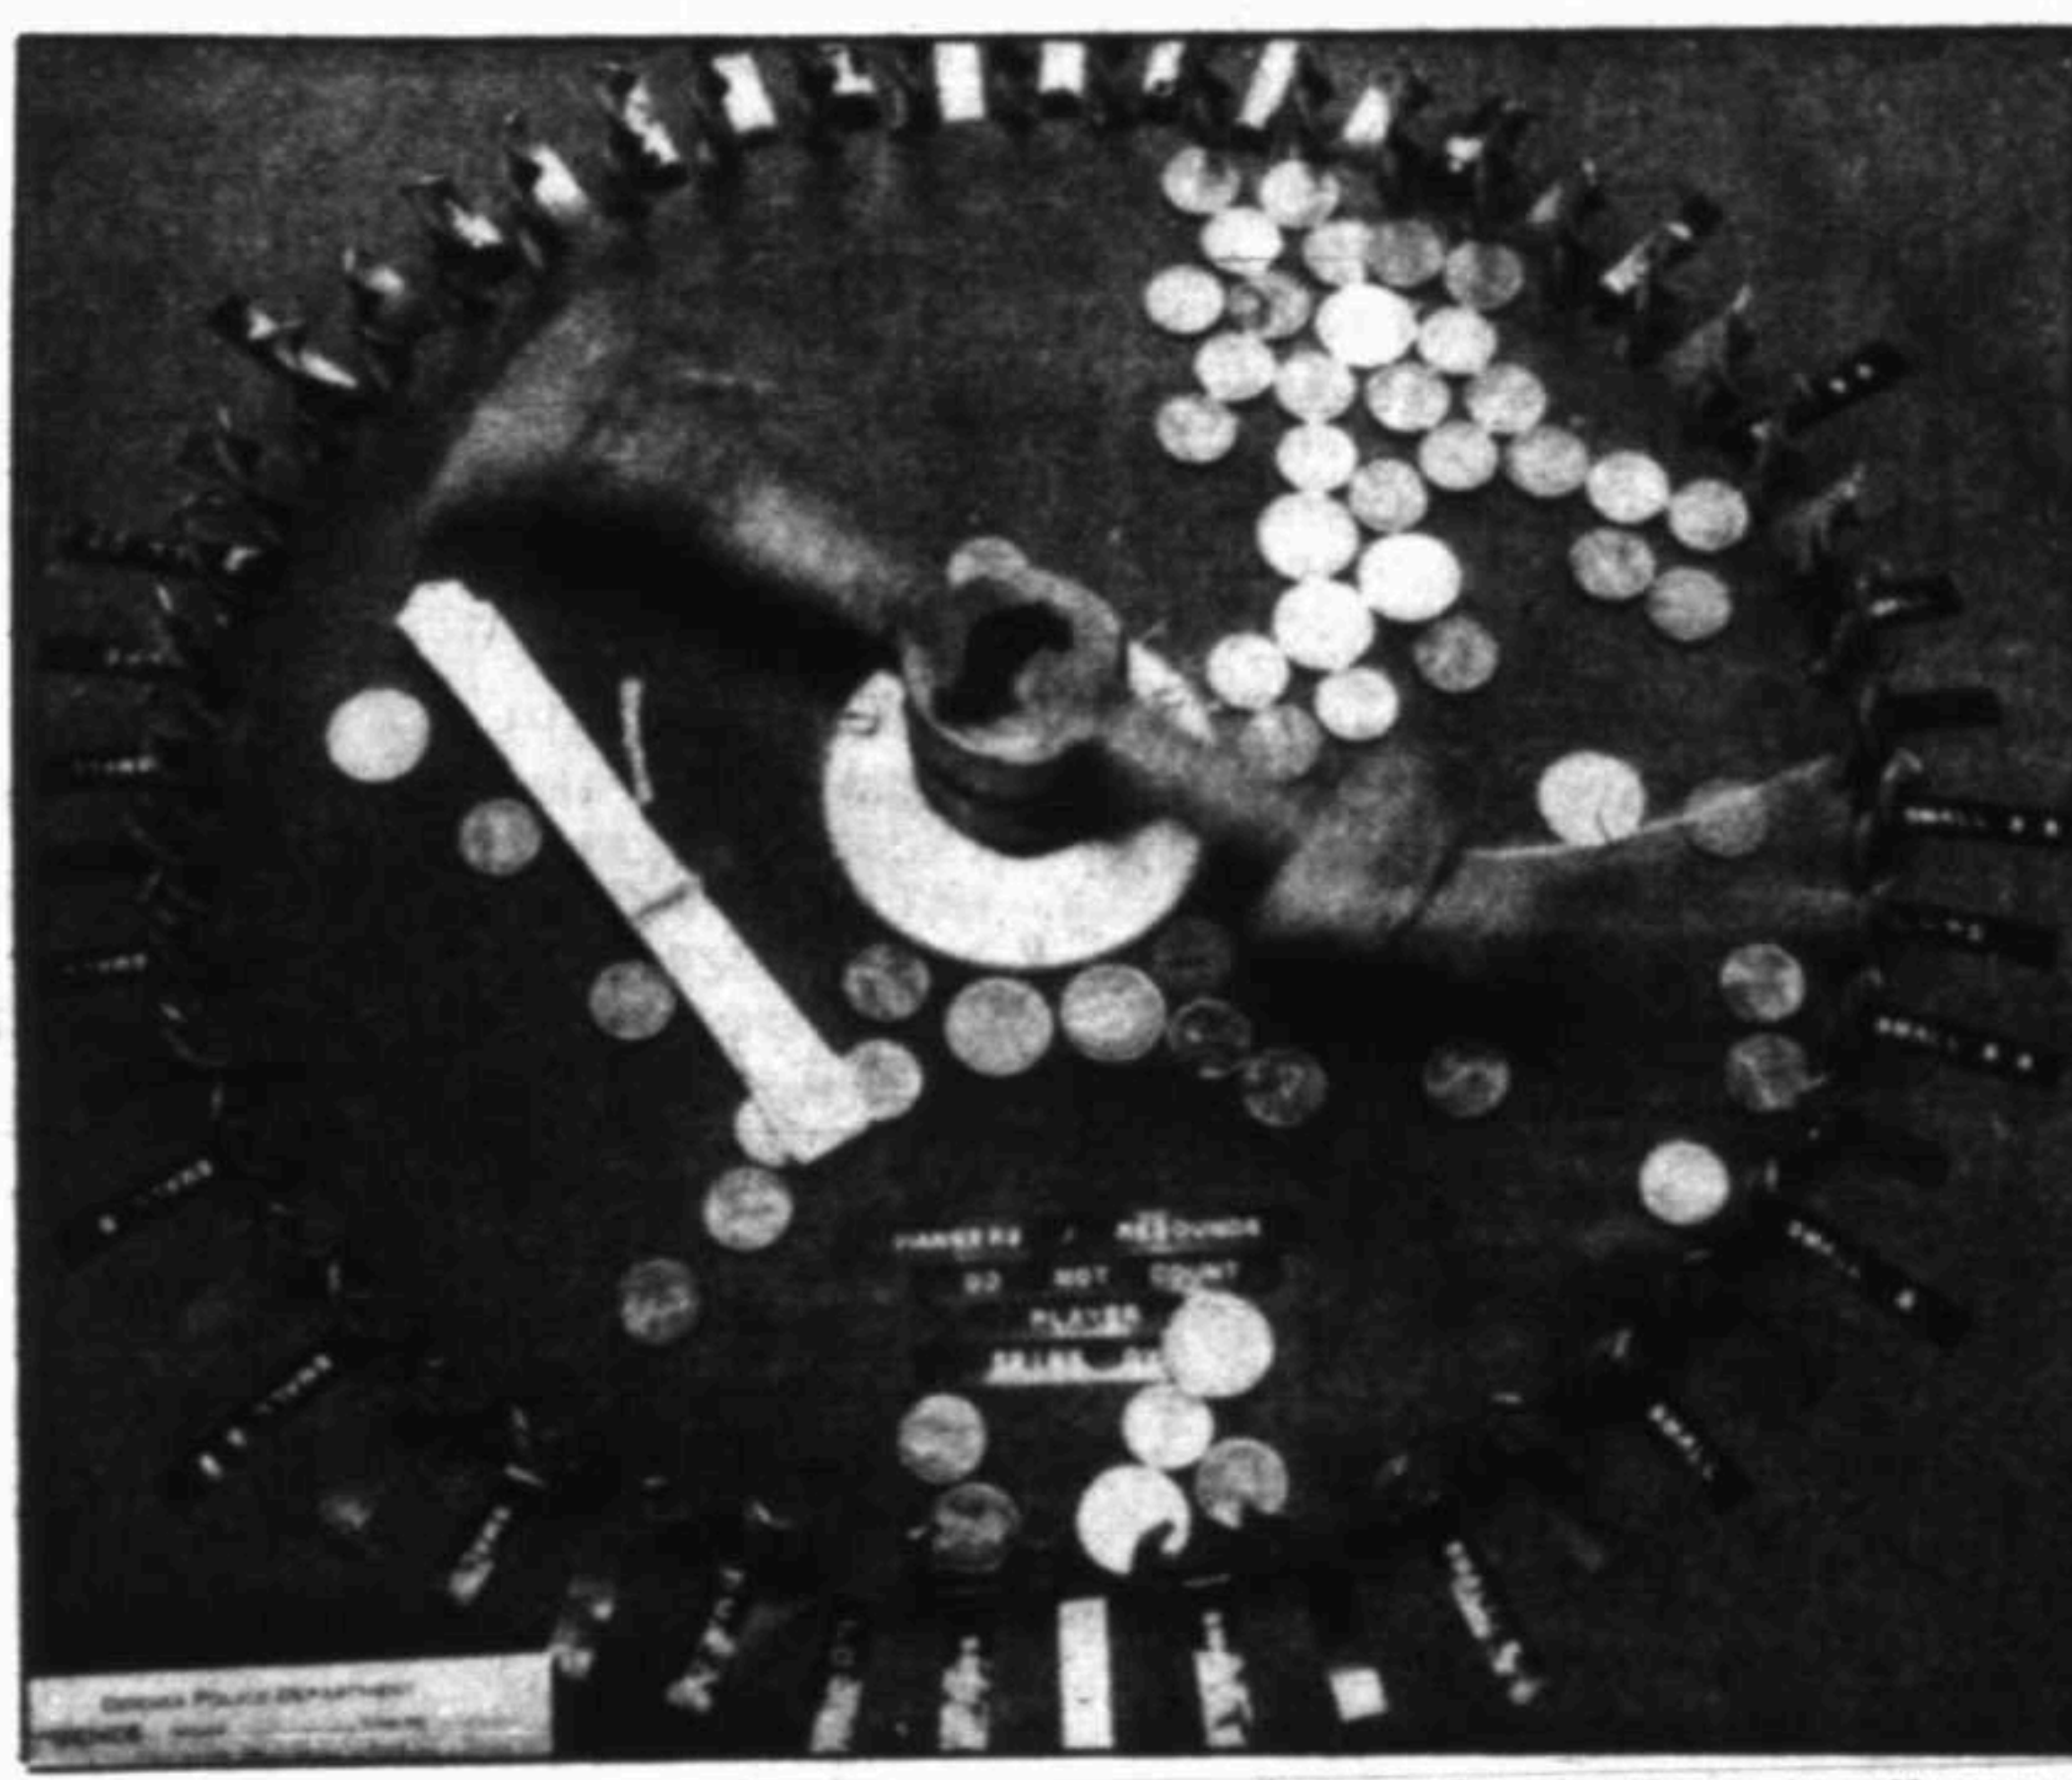

"Police as a whole have been kind of lax in enforcement of these statutes," said Murphy. "It's something (carnival owners) have been doing all along without anyone messing with them."

Odessa attorney Dave Smith, who is representing the owner and eight employees in Ector County, said, "Frankly, I'm surprised they'd come in and make an arrest like that."

Technically, the nine were not arrested. They were taken into custody, but later released pending consideration of the charges by the county grand jury.

Smith claimed the carnival centered in Pasadena, Texas, has been operating for 25 years, 10 in Odessa, without this kind of trouble.

While the state laws have been in place, an attorney's general's opinion rendered on April 12, 1978 outlines in legal language restrictions on "coin games which award tokens redeemable for prizes" and definitively sets out "treasure chest" machines as gambling devices prohibited under Texas law.

The wheels of fortune have turned against operators of this and other similar "pleasure machines" that have been the object of a statewide crackdown by the Department of Public Safety and local law enforcement officers.

"Anything designed as a penny fall is very similar to the treasure chest," explained Twana Benner, acting executive director of the Amusement Machine Commission of Texas.

The commission regulates the amusement machine industry: issuing licenses, tax stickers and certificates legalizing ownership of the machines. But Ms. Benner explained this does not make them legal to operate.

"They need to check with local authorities first," she said.

While Smith said the Odessa carnival had been running the machines for 10 years with no trouble, Odessa Police Lt. Rusty Baker explained the raid followed complaints by a local man that he had lost $3,000 on the games.

Along with the nine people taken into custody, 10 machines were confiscated — including seven "penny fall" devices, one dice lay-out board and two "wheels of fortune" — and remain behind locked doors at the Odessa police building. Also $3,300 was taken into custody.

"We've pretty well forewarned them," said Murphy, who added the DPS has met with several state associations dealing with the machines to advise them of the potential for illegality.

"They know the law as well as we do," he suggested.

Murphy said DPS has increased efforts, working with local law enforcement, as priorities have shifted. He explained that the ability of his agency to get better control of other types of more serious crimes has freed them to turn their attention to the "pleasure machines."

Also, "We've had some complaints from citizens and things," he said.

While the Odessa police chose not to arrest the alleged violators, Murphy said in many cases arrests are made along with seizure of the machines.

Monetary loss from the money seized is not that great, said Murphy, compared to loss of the use of the machines.

DPS will continue its crackdown "until carnivals start policing themselves and get these illegal machines out," he said.

Gramm thanks his Permian Basin supporters

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

"If Ted Kennedy and Tip O'Neill were unhappy that I was on the Republican ballot, think how unhappy they'll be when I become Texas' next senator," a confident Phil Gramm said during a brief news conference at Midland Air Terminal Monday.

Gramm, fresh from his runaway victory in Saturday's Republican primary, was in town to thank Permian Basin residents for their strong support. He captured 70 percent of the vote in Midland County.

"I expected a tough campaign," said Gramm. "My opponents spent a lot of money. But I garnered 73 percent of the vote (statewide). It's clearly a strong vote of confidence. We kicked their fanny."

Gramm's opponents in the primary were Hank C. Grover, Rob Mosbacher and U.S. Rep. Ron Paul. In November, he'll face the winner of the June 2 Democratic runoff between State Senator Lloyd Doggett and U.S. Rep. Kent Hance for the U.S. Senate seat being vacated by John Tower.

Noting the slim majority Republicans hold in the Senate, Gramm said: "If a Democrat wins in November, Kennedy has a chance of being Senate majority leader."

Gramm, a Democrat-turned-Republican, said he was running on his record as U.S. representative and promised to conduct "a positive campaign in November, as I did in the primary. I'm asking the people of Texas for the opportunity to provide even greater service by making me their senator."

Gramm added that "it doesn't matter" who his opponent is in November and said he'll meet with President Reagan next week to coordinate the Texas campaign. "I'll do all in my power to re-elect Ronald Reagan and preserve the Republican majority in the Senate."

No human being can be a perfect '10'

She started a revolution. Her retirement signals the end of an era. It began with the sports world, which she stood on its collective jockstrap.

Only 14 years old, this little girl surpassed the best in the ultimate athletic competition, the Olympic Games. Her tiny, prim figure accomplished that which none other had before.

When the judges awarded Nadia Comaneci a perfect score — all "10's" — the entire world noticed.

Relatively unknown, she was not exactly favored against the likes of Olga Korbut and the Russian billed as the "Best Woman Gymnast in the World" at that time — Ludmilla Tourischeva.

She went on to post seven perfect scores in the games at Montreal in 1976. In the process she caught the fancy of the masses.

It was something about a 5 foot, 88 pound girl in pigtails beating the world's best at their own game. Olga was visibly upset — crying when her measly 9.9's were not enough — while Ludmilla seemed distracted and never got untracked.

But more than that, she had been judged as perfect. No one had ever scored a "10." During the Olympics she explained to an interviewer that she was unfazed by her accomplishments. After all, she'd scored "10" 19 times before.

At the time, I recall being a little upset about the whole matter.

First off, if someone gets a perfect score, what's left? I mean that's as high as they go, right?

Success in athletics, particularly in individual sports like gymnastics, is based on the will to surpass what has already been done. Once a person has perfected the undertaking, it's time to look for a new game.

But as everyone knows, her successes failed to take the charge out of gymnasts around the world. They're flocking to mats, balancing ever more daringly on beams, and swinging dizzily from uneven parallel bars in greater and greater numbers — at least partially due to the added awareness of the sport that came with this cool little Romanian girl's exploits.

Granted, the judging at these competitions is highly political. Having Olga beaten by a 14-year-old with a teddy bear probably appealed to more than one judge.

But a perfect score.

I mean, let's be serious. Perfect is a word a lot like a journalistic term bandied about a lot by media types — objective. Just as no human can be "objective" in the purest sense of not having an opinion, no one can be perfect.

The key word here is human. A human has faults. We've all claimed under pressure, "I'm only human" or "Nobody's perfect."

And these judges were making this 14-year-old girl inhuman; at least that's how I understood it.

After Nadia was declared perfect, things got a bit crazy.

Funny man-movie star Dudley Moore got totally out of hand, chasing what he considered a "10" around the world.

Bo Derek, mind or no mind, took over for Nadia as what a "10" should be. I wonder if those judges might have reconsidered if they'd only foreseen these developments. Let's not even talk about Bo grappling with a monkey. I guess even "10's" can wrestle with their more primal instincts.

Marketing moguls picked up on the craze. Certain products were to be perceived as the last step to faultlessness. Now they tell you to forget about being a 10, they're going to make you an 11.

The repercussions of all this are even more than I'd imagined.

It could be the end of the numerical system as we know it.

It's already been weakened by these assaults on previously sacred rating systems. Forget gymnastics, diving and the other sports still clinging to the 1-10 thing.

If someone doesn't put a stop to all this, my friends and I will be forced to develop what has been honed to a sophisticated rating system in its own right.

On Spring Break weekends during college, cards were used to rank the sun-tanned talent. More commonly, different numbers of fingers were raised depending on the judges' tastes. When things got hectic or the judges too lazy, verbal renderings such as "Definitely an 8," "9.5 material" or "if she'd only lose a few pounds she could be a 6" were used as a last resort.

I was always adamant in protecting the high side of the scale and nimble to find that subtle imperfection that dropped the rating to 9.95.

After all, a perfect human is really not a human at all.

Even Nadia, now 22 and sans teddy bear, is showing her imperfection these days. At the announcement of her retirement May 6 — ironically she plans to take up judging — she broke down and cried right in the middle of her speech.

So much nicer than perfection, don't you agree?

Midlanders can be proud of schools, MHS principal says

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN
Staff Writer

Alumni from as far back as the 1920s came to Midland and Lee high schools Monday night. But they weren't there to look back. Rather, they joined parents, faculty, students and other citizens to look at the future of public education in Midland.

Showcase '84 was an evening of demonstrations, discussions and displays focusing on student achievement and quality of education in Midland high schools. Several hundred people attended.

"When we compare Midland Senior High School to others, the news is good," Principal Dr. Phillip Peregrine said in a welcome address. "The proof of the exceptional nature of Midland Senior High School is present every day in every classroom."

He mentioned statistics to prove his point:

—Local Scholastic Aptitude Test scores are up, while statewide they are declining and nationwide remain the same.

—Midland's average SAT score is 929, compared to 868 for the state and 883 for the nation.

—California Achievement Test scores were higher in every category.

—At MHS, 37 seniors will graduate with grade point averages of 4.0 or above on a 4.0 scale.

"When we compare our schools to others, the news is good. Though many U.S. schools have been eroded by a rising tide of mediocrity, Midland's public schools are an exception. Midlanders can continue to take justified pride in their public schools," Peregrine said.

Faculty discussed current high school programs and the impact new state regulations will have on them. Dennis Stratton, chairman of social studies at MHS, said he thinks Midland will continue to require three credits in social studies even though state requirements, which cut back on student electives, call for only 2½ credits.

"We're really pushing to maintain this. This will make us a leader in social studies in Texas," he said.

Foreign language chairman Kerry Davis lauded new guidelines requiring college-preparatory students to take two years of foreign language. "We're becoming a part of a very international society. Travel opportunities are greatly expanding. He said many jobs and many universities have foreign language requirements."

Students in band, choir, drama, speech and debate and choreography gave performances. Exhibits included student work in numerous areas including art, drafting, electronics, photography, health, home economics, industrial arts and vocational classes.

The philosophy class decided if Mohammed couldn't come to the mountain, they'd bring the wise hermit from the mountaintop to MHS. A wise man (or in this case, a woman) in a box answered deep philosophical questions for visitors. It was sort of like Philosopher in a Drum.

One soul-searcher queried, "What is the meaning of life?" Replied the sage, "You live. You die. That's about it."

MC music program crescendoes

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN
Staff Writer

Two years ago Midland College hired Ron Franklin to come in one day a week and give private music lessons to 15 students.

Today MC offers a two-year degree in commercial music. Franklin is a full-time instructor and part-timer Jerry Tubb is expected to be hired full time next year. The men work with six performing bands, teach courses in commercial music and instrumental techniques and instruct 38 students.

Franklin, who started "with zilch," now has $8,000 worth of equipment and a recording studio constructed over Christmas break.

With donated materials, Franklin, Tubb and architect major John Amos converted a classroom and storage room into a studio. They carpeted the walls, installed acoustical tile, knocked a hole in one wall and put in a triple-paned window and looped hundreds of multi-colored carpet squares on the ceiling.

Total construction cost was less than $400, Franklin said. It would have cost the college thousands of dollars to hire someone to do the work.

The recording studio is for educational and not commercial purposes, Franklin said. It is used for classes and for recording the college's rock, country and jazz bands.

As the vibrations from the music of a heavy metal band shook the walls, Franklin talked about his plans for expanding the commercial music program. And his dreams seemed to swell larger than the deafening sounds trying to escape the studio.

"This is just the start of the facilities we hope to have," Franklin said. "The first thing we plan to do is upgrade the equipment we have got. We want to increase the quality and the amount of equipment so it's a full-fledged eight-track studio. As the program grows and we get more students we hope to add a full-blown professional 24-track studio at a later date."

He said he hopes to get a video production facility as well. His students are already working with the radio-television department to produce a music video.

He hopes to expand the commercial music program to include a degree program in audio/video technology. He is developing a curriculum and budget and is seeking approval of college officials and the Texas Education Association.

He is gathering information to draw up a needs

analysis and student interest survey. "MC, as far as we know, is behind it if we can show there's a job market and student interest, which I think we can," he said. "Right now, I think it will happen."

After offering an introductory course this summer, Franklin hopes to begin the program next fall.

Officials crack down on gambling

ODESSA — Carnivals across Texas are finding law enforcement less cooperative since the beginning of a statewide crackdown on the operation of what state law calls gambling devices.

Since the Department of Public Safety started enforcing 3 years ago a law prohibiting the operation of "treasure chest" machines and other games "which award tokens redeemable for prizes," long-running carnivals — such as the one raided recently in Odessa — have been finding business a little more risky.

Joe Murphy of the Austin office of the Department of Public Safety said Monday that 10-15 carnivals like the one run in Odessa by Heart of America Amusements have been the object of organized enforcement efforts.

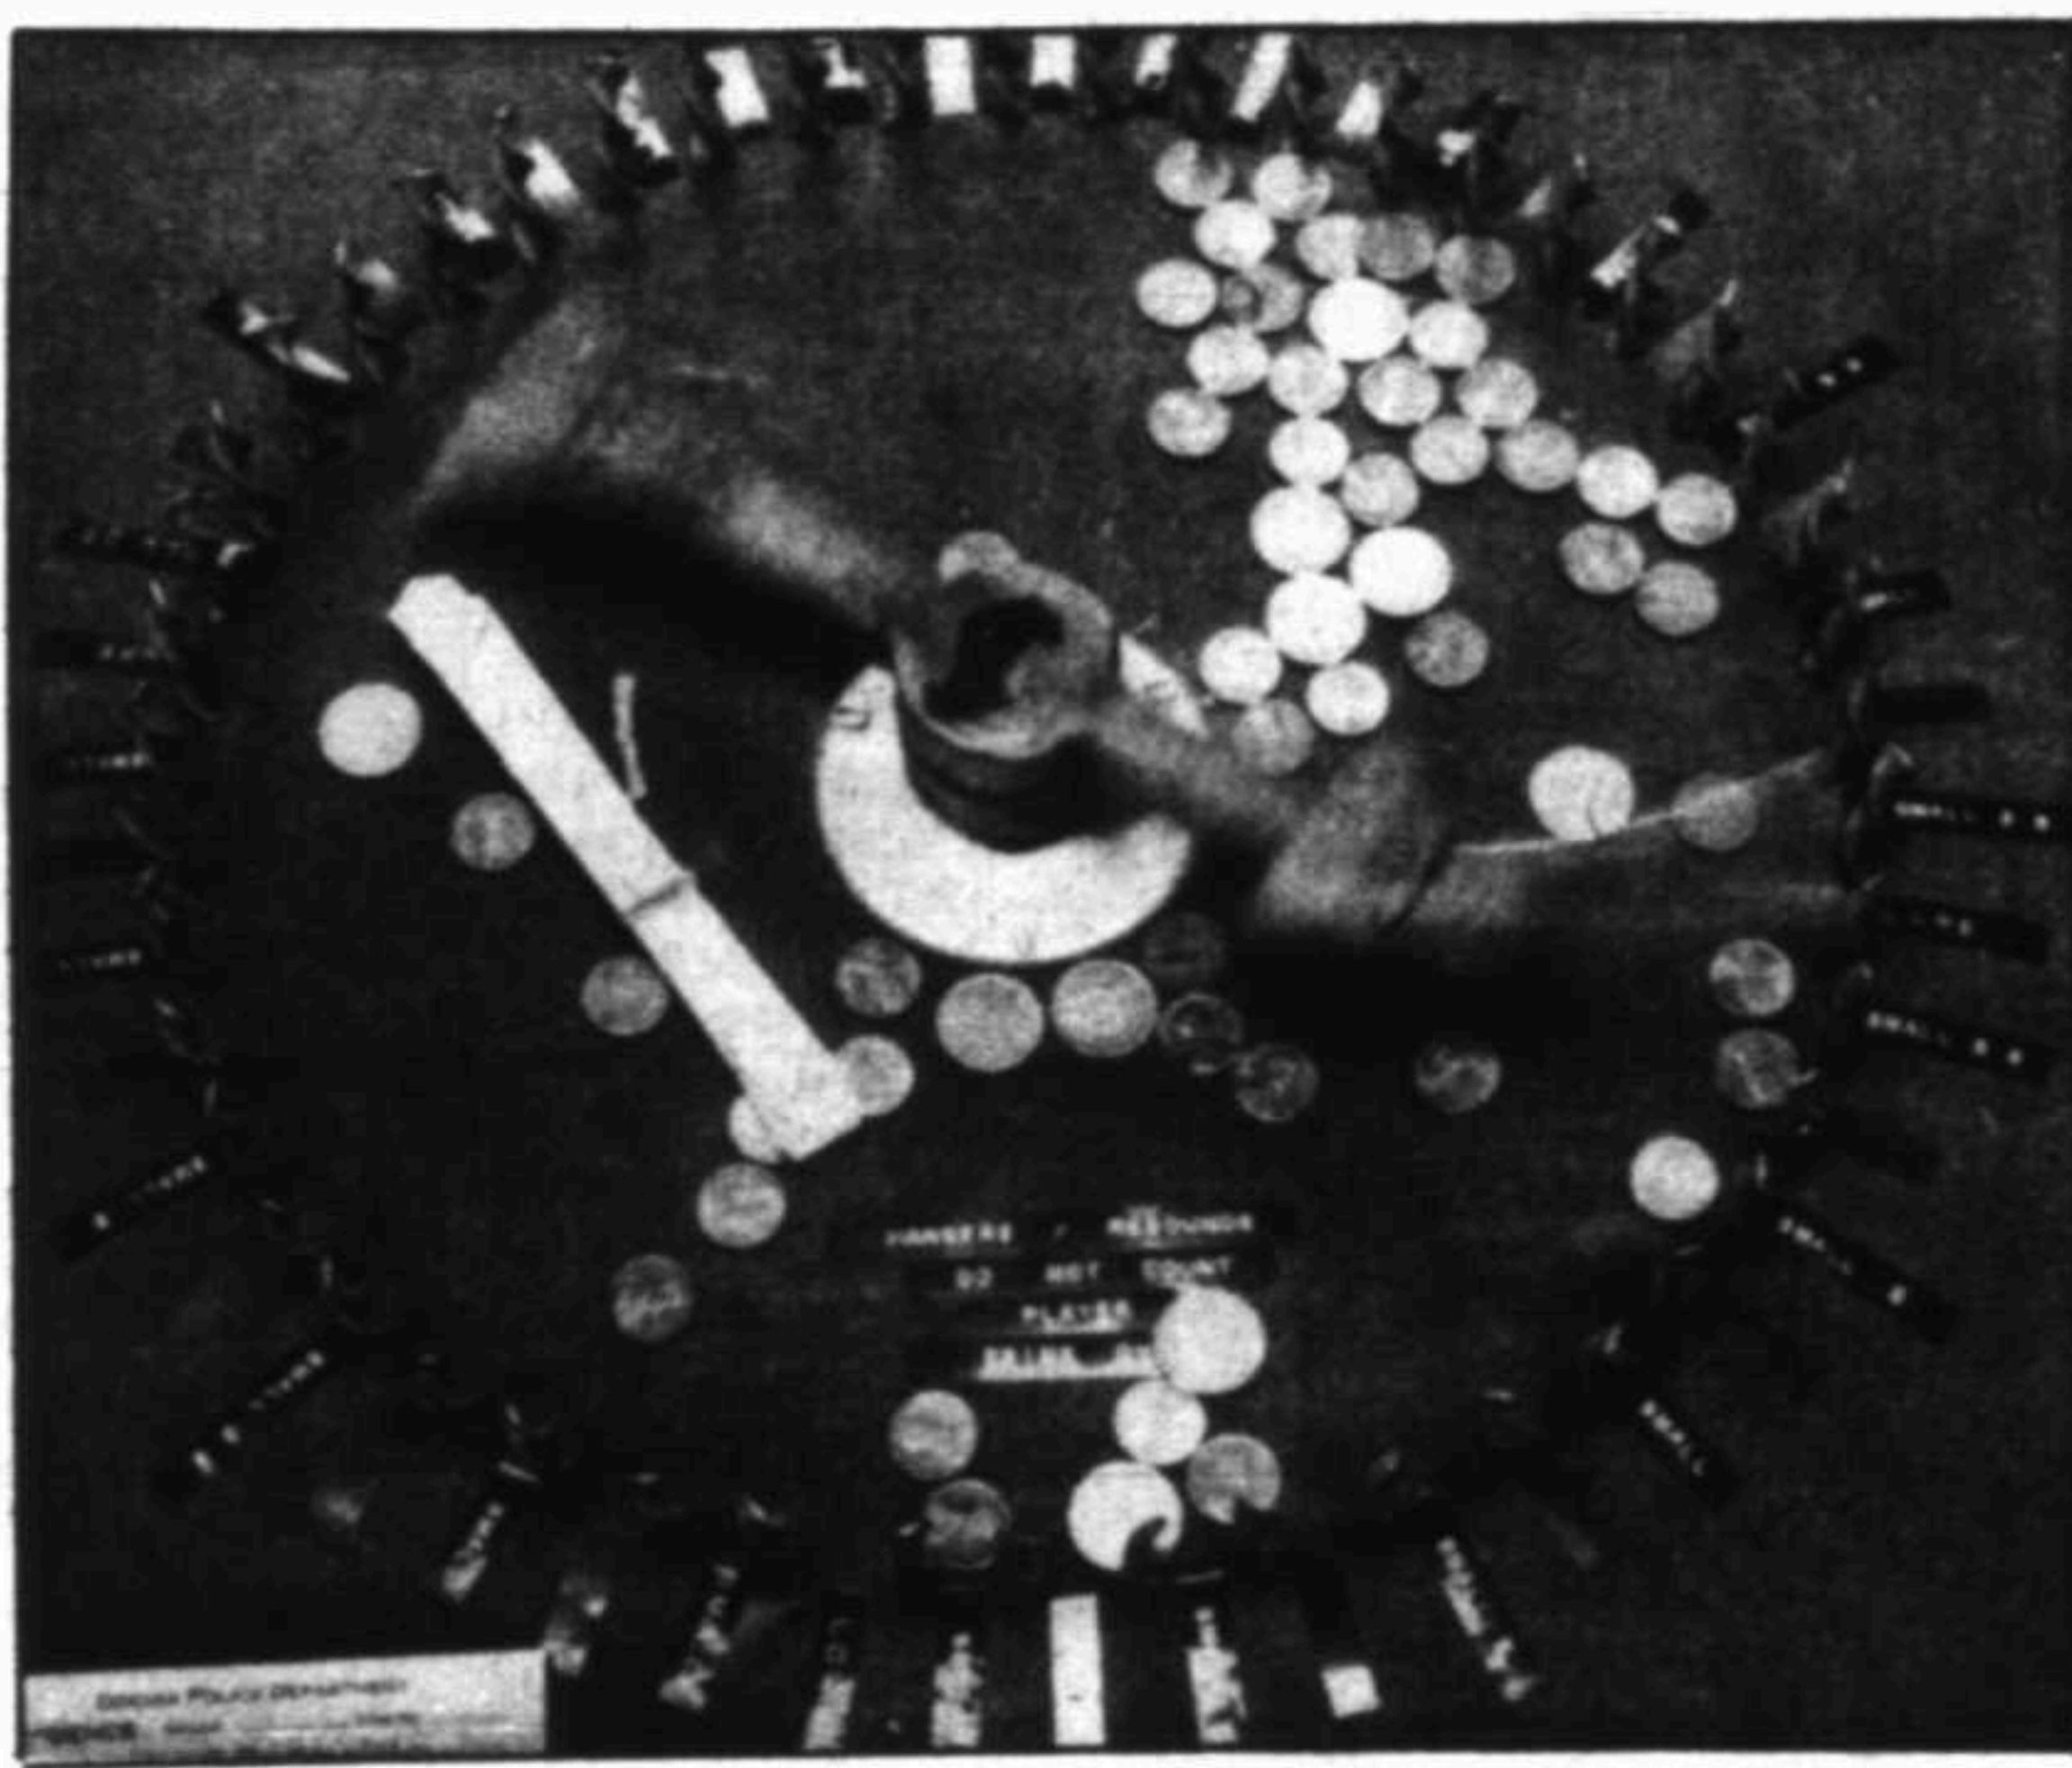

"Police as a whole have been kind of lax in enforcement of these statutes," said Murphy. "It's something (carnival owners) have been doing all along without anyone messing with them."

Odessa attorney Dave Smith, who is representing the owner and eight employees in Ector County, said, "Frankly, I'm surprised they'd come in and make an arrest like that."

Technically, the nine were not arrested. They were taken into custody, but later released pending consideration of the charges by the county grand jury.

Smith claimed the carnival centered in Pasadena, Texas, has been operating for 25 years, 10 in Odessa, without this kind of trouble.

While the state laws have been in place, an attorney's general's opinion rendered on April 12, 1978 outlines in legal language restrictions on "coin games which award tokens redeemable for prizes" and defining sets out "treasure chest" machines as gambling devices prohibited under Texas law.

The wheels of fortune have turned against operators of this and other similar "pleasure machines" that have been the object of a statewide crackdown by the Department of Public Safety and local law enforcement officers.

"Anything designed as penny fall is very similar to the treasure chest," explained Twana Benner, acting executive director of the Amusement Machine Commission of Texas.

The commission regulates the amusement machine industry: issuing licenses, tax stickers and certificates legalizing ownership of the machines. But Ms. Benner explained this does not make them legal to operate.

"They need to check with local authorities first," she said.

While Smith said the Odessa carnival had been running the machines for 10 years with no trouble, Odessa Police Lt. Rusty Baker explained the raid followed complaints by a local man that he had lost $3,000 on the games.

Along with the nine people taken into custody, 10 machines were confiscated — including seven "penny fall" devices, one dice lay-out board and two "wheels of fortune" — and remain behind locked doors at the Odessa police building. Also $3,300 was taken into custody.

"We've pretty well forewarned them," said Murphy, who added the DPS has met with several state associations dealing with the machines to advise them of the potential for illegality.

"They know the law as well as we do," he suggested.

Murphy said DPS has increased efforts, working with local law enforcement, as priorities have shifted. He explained that the ability of his agency to get better control of other types of more serious crimes has freed them to turn their attention to the "pleasure machines."

Also, "We've had some complaints from citizens and things," he said.

While the Odessa police chose not to arrest the alleged violators, Murphy said in many cases arrests are made along with seizure of the machines.

Monetary loss from the money seized is not that great, said Murphy, compared to loss of the use of the machines.

DPS will continue its crackdown "Until carnivals start policing themselves and get these illegal machines out," he said.

Gramm thanks his Permian Basin supporters

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

"If Ted Kennedy and Tip O'Neill were unhappy that I was on the Republican ballot, think how unhappy they'll be when I become Texas' next senator," a confident Phil Gramm said during a brief news conference at Midland Air Terminal Monday.

Gramm, fresh from his runaway victory in Saturday's Republican primary, was in town to thank Permian Basin residents for their strong support. He captured 70 percent of the vote in Midland County.

"I expected a tough campaign," said Gramm. "My opponents spent a lot of money. But I garnered 73 percent of the vote (statewide). It's clearly a strong vote of confidence. We kicked their fanny."

Gramm's opponents in the primary were Hank C. Grover, Rob Mosbacher and U.S. Rep. Ron Paul. In November, he'll face the winner of the June 2 Democratic runoff between State Senator Lloyd Doggett and U.S. Rep. Kent Hance for the U.S. Senate seat being vacated by John Tower.

Noting the slim majority Republicans hold in the Senate, Gramm said, "If a Democrat wins in November, Kennedy has a chance of being Senate majority leader."

Gramm, a Democrat-turned-Republican, said he was running on his record as U.S. representative and promised to conduct "a positive campaign in November, as I did in the primary. I'm asking the people of Texas for the opportunity to provide even greater service by making me their senator."

Gramm added that "it doesn't matter" who his opponent is in November and said he'll meet with President Reagan next week to coordinate the Texas campaign: "I'll do all in my power to re-elect Ronald Reagan and preserve the Republican majority in the Senate."

No human being can be a perfect '10'

She started a revolution. Her retirement signals the end of an era. It began with the sports world, which she stood on its collective jockstrap.

Only 14 years old, this little girl surpassed the best in the ultimate athletic competition, the Olympic Games. Her tiny, prim figure accomplished that which none other had before.

When the judges awarded Nadia Comaneci a perfect score — all "10s" — the entire world noticed.

Relatively unknown, she was not exactly favored against the likes of Olga Korbut and the Russian billed as the "Best Woman Gymnast in the World" at that time — Ludmilla Tourischeva.

She went on to post seven perfect scores in the games at Montreal in 1976. In the process she caught the fancy of the masses.

It was something about a 5 foot, 88 pound girl in pigtails beating the world's best at their own game. Olga was visibly upset — crying when her measly 9.9's were not enough — while Ludmilla seemed distracted and never got untracked.

But more than that, she had been judged as perfect. No one had ever scored a "10." During the Olympics she explained to an interviewer that she was unfazed by her accomplishments. After all, she'd scored "10" 19 times before.

At the time, I recall being a little upset about the whole matter.

First off, if someone gets a perfect score, what's left? I mean that's as high as they go, right?

Success in athletics, particularly in individual sports like gymnastics, is based on the will to surpass what has already been done. Once a person has perfected the undertaking, it's time to look for a new game.

But as everyone knows, her successes failed to take the charge out of gymnasts around the world. They're flocking to mats, balancing ever more daringly on beams, and swinging dizzily from uneven parallel bars in greater and greater numbers — at least partially due to the added awareness of the sport that came with this cool little Romanian girl's exploits.

Granted, the judging at these competitions is highly political. Having Olga beaten by a 14-year-old with a teddy bear probably appealed to more than one judge.

But a perfect score. I mean, let's be serious.

Perfect is a word a lot like a journalistic term bantered about a lot by media types — objective. Just as no human can be "objective" in the purest sense of not having an opinion, no one can be perfect.

The key word here is human. A human has faults. We've all claimed under pressure, "I'm only human" or "Nobody's perfect."

And these judges were making this 14-year-old girl inhuman; at least that's how I understood it.

After Nadia was declared perfect, things got a bit crazy.

Funny man-movie star Dudley Moore got totally out of hand, chasing what he considered a "10" around the world.

Bo Derek, mind or no mind, took over for Nadia as what a "10" should be. I wonder if those judges might have reconsidered if they'd only foreseen these developments. Let's not even talk about Bo grappling with a monkey. I guess even "10s" can wrestle with their more primal instincts.

Marketing moguls picked up on the craze. Certain products were to be perceived as the last step to faultlessness. Now they tell you to forget about being a 10, they're going to make you an 11.

The repercussions of all this are even more than I'd imagined.

It could be the end of the numerical system as we know it.

It's already been weakened by these assaults on previously sacred rating systems. Forget gymnastics, diving and the other sports still clinging to the 1-10 thing.

If someone doesn't put a stop to all this, my friends and I will be forced to develop what has been honed to a sophisticated rating system in its own right.

On Spring Break weekends during college, cards were used to rank the sun-tanned talent. More commonly, different numbers of fingers were raised depending on the judges' tastes. When things got hectic or the judges too lazy, verbal renderings such as "Definitely an 8," "9.5 material" or "if she'd only lose a few pounds she could be a 6" were used as a last resort.

I was always adamant in protecting the high side of the scale and nimble to find that subtle imperfection that dropped the rating to 9.95.

After all, a perfect human is really not a human at all.

Even Nadia, now 22 and sans teddy bear, is showing her imperfection these days. At the announcement of her retirement May 6 — ironically she plans to take up judging — she broke down and cried right in the middle of her speech.

So much nicer than perfection, don't you agree.

Aliens testify to terrorism, torture in El Salvador

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — Two Salvadorans testified in the trial of a church worker charged with conspiracy to transport illegal aliens that they sought refuge in the United States because of terrorism in El Salvador.

Brenda Sanchez-Galan, 20, and Mauricio Valle, 23, were arrested by Border Patrol agents Feb. 17 when a car owned by the Catholic diocese and driven by nun Dianne Muhlenkamp of Fort Wayne, Ind., was stopped on a rural South Texas road.

Stacey Lynn Merkt, of Colorado Springs, Colo., and a reporter for the Dallas Times Herald were also in the car.

Ms. Merkt, Sister Dianne and the reporter, Jack Fischer, were charged with conspiracy to transport the two Salvadorans. Sister Dianne agreed to testify for the prosecution in exchange for a year's probation, although prosecutors said later she would not be called.

Fischer, who said he was working on a story at the time of the arrest, was not indicted.

Ms. Merkt, who was expected to testify in her own defense today, faces 15 years in jail if convicted.

The Salvadorans were found in contempt of court by U.S. District Judge J. Lee Smith last week and were jailed over the weekend for refusing to testify for the prosecution in Ms. Merkt's trial.

The two Salvadorans were released when they agreed to testify for the defense Monday. They were questioned by federal prosecutors on cross-examination.

Speaking through translators, both Salvadorans said they witnessed the death of family and friends at the hands of military forces before coming to the United States to seek political asylum.

Supporters of the sanctuary movement contend that for political reasons, the Reagan administration is cracking down on church workers aiding Salvadoran refugees. The government denies the charges and says the Salvadorans are economic refugees, not entitled to political asylum, and that anyone who transports them is breaking the law.

The sanctuary movement, which has been compared to the "underground railroad" of the 1800s, contends the Salvadorans are seeking safety from terrorism, not a higher income, and should be allowed to seek political asylum.

Mrs. Sanchez-Galan, tears streaming down her cheeks, told jurors that she witnessed the slaughter of a group of teen-age boys who were trying to protect women and children from military police.

She said she had taken cover in a downtown San Salvador parking garage after a bus she was riding home from school "got caught in crossfire."

The garage was filled with women, small children and elderly civilians who moved to the back of the building as guns appeared at the front door, she said.

"The young men stayed up front to protect us. The authorities of the government came all the way to the door. They came there shooting... and several of the men in the front died... and the ones that fell there were shattered into pieces," she said, sobbing and holding her face in her hands.

"They fell on top of us and my (school) uniform was covered with their blood."

She said when she "saw how innocent people had given their lives, how they had gone to the front to save the lives of those in the back... it was from there that I felt I should give myself completely to helping people do Christian work."

During cross-examination, Assistant U.S. Attorney Robert Guerra challenged the credibility of Mrs. Sanchez-Galan's testimony.

She told him she lied to investigators about her name, age, address and specifics about her journey to the United States to protect her family and church members back home.

Mrs. Sanchez-Galan and Valle worked in a Lutheran Church-sponsored displaced persons camp in San Salvador, until several of their co-workers were abducted and tortured, they said.

One of the co-workers killed was Mrs. Sanchez-Galan's closest girlfriend who was pregnant at the time authorities shot her, cut her into three pieces and left her unformed

Judge Vela stopped her from telling jurors about other instances of violence that prompted her to leave.

She said she would have stayed in El Salvador to work in the camp despite the danger "if it weren't for my (18-month-old) daughter."

"I was looking for refuge for her that's why I came to this place... because I've seen the way they take children and kill them," she said.

Agents interrogated both Salvadorans in the Rio Grande City and McAllen offices for three days, refusing to let them speak to an attorney, the Salvadorans said. Both Salvadorans said American authorities reminded them of Salvadoran police and both said they feared they would be shot.

Valle said his father and sister committed suicide because of continuing pressure and fear.

Shortly before he fled his country, Valle was kidnapped, blindfolded, handcuffed and threatened with decapitation, he said.

Teen threatens murder, bailiff says

HOUSTON (AP) — A teen-ager who was convicted of capital murder in the robbery-slaying of a prominent Houston attorney threatened to kill everyone in the courtroom and "make it look worse than the Charlie Manson murders," a court bailiff testified.

A defense attorney said his client believed some prosecution witnesses had lied and "expressed some desire to get them for that."

Rodney Wayne Davis, 18, was found guilty last week in the May 10, 1983, robbery and shooting death of attorney Sam Lucas Jr., 63, outside a fashionable restaurant.

The same eight-man, four-woman jury now must decide whether Davis should spend the rest of his life behind bars or to die by a deadly combination of drugs.

Court bailiff Ross Tinch testified Monday that he noticed an "attitude change" in Davis after testimony started in the punishment phase of the trial. Davis later had an "outburst" in a holding cell near the courtroom, Tinch said.

"He was very agitated," Tinch said. "Rodney said all those peckerwoods (had) been told what to say by the district attorney."

When he was told to calm down, Davis cursed and accused Tinch of telling a prosecutor of some of Davis' problems in the Harris County Jail, the bailiff said.

When he was taking Davis to the jail later, Tinch said, the teen-ager threatened to kill him and other courtroom spectators.

According to police, Ellis was shot five times in the chest with a 22-caliber pistol during a domestic quarrel at the Baird Street address about 12:15 a.m. Monday.

Fired nurse's attorney files appeal

DALLAS (AP) — The attorney for Billye Jean Myrick says he has filed an appeal for the nurse-dispatcher after the city manager's office upheld her dismissal for delaying an ambulance to a dying woman.

Assistant City Manager Richard Knight upheld the previous decision against Ms. Myrick and her former supervisor, Donald Greene.

The nurse was fired by the Dallas Fire Department on March 16 for not sending an ambulance immediately, and Greene was demoted from captain to lieutenant over the Jan. 5 incident.

"It didn't surprise me because I didn't expect that much out of the decision to begin with," Ms. Myrick's attorney, Roger Joyner, told the Dallas Morning News. "It's difficult to ask someone to look at his own system and say it fouled up."

Joyner said he has filed an appeal with the three-member Civil Service Trial Board, composed of one member each from the City Council, the Civil Service Board and a specially appointed Civil Service panel.

Ms. Myrick was fired after a departmental investigation into the incident involving Larry Boff, who had requested an ambulance for his 60-year-old stepmother, Lillian Boff, who was having trouble breathing.

Boff repeatedly asked for the ambulance to be dispatched, but Ms. Myrick argued with him and insisted on speaking to the woman, even though Boff said his stepmother was too sick to get on the telephone.

Greene then broke in on the conversation and told Boff to answer Ms. Myrick's questions and warned him against cursing, according to a tape-recording of the call.

Boff hung up the phone a few minutes later and, after a second call, an ambulance was dispatched. When paramedics arrived, the woman was dead.

Ms. Myrick was cited for five violations of city and fire department rules and Greene was cited for violations of three departmental regulations, Knight said.

Knight informed Greene and Ms. Myrick of the decisions through letters on Monday.

Greene violated policy by not completing the call once he took over, officials said.

In a letter to Greene, Knight said, "As hearing officer I would further add that your conduct seriously impaired the mission of the fire department. Your lack of affirmative action and sound judgment more than justifies the actions taken by (Fire Chief Dodd Miller) in this case."

"While your defense alleges absence of clear procedures, your experience in the department in general and your experience in the alarms office in particular clearly indicate reprehensible behavior which clouds the integrity of the Fire Department emergency service."

Judge rules INS' private prisons for aliens illegal

HOUSTON (AP) — A U.S. District Court judge ruled Monday that it is unconstitutional for the Immigration and Naturalization Service to permit illegal aliens to be detained in private prisons operated by a contracted security service.

U.S. District Judge John V. Singleton made the ruling on a lawsuit filed by the American Civil Liberties Union in behalf of 26 Columbian aliens who were held here in a fortified motel patrolled by hired guards. The lawsuit contended that one of the aliens died while in such detention and that others suffered injuries.

Singleton ruled, in effect, that the illegal aliens are entitled to the same constitutional protection that is afforded American citizens.

"The court has found that the plaintiff's constitutional rights to due process were deprived when the INS ordered detention, but failed to assure they were detained in a facility that due process dictates," Singleton ruled.

The Columbian aliens were stowaways discovered by the INS in 1981 on a Columbia vessel. The agency ordered the Columbian government to detain the aliens. The Columbian government, in turn, hired a private agency, Danner, Inc., to imprison the aliens. The aliens were held in a Houston motel that had been fortified with barbed wire-topped metal fences.

The lawsuit was filed in November, 1981, and all of the surviving plaintiffs have since returned to Columbia, but ACLU officials said similar arrangements have been permitted for other aliens, including some in other states.

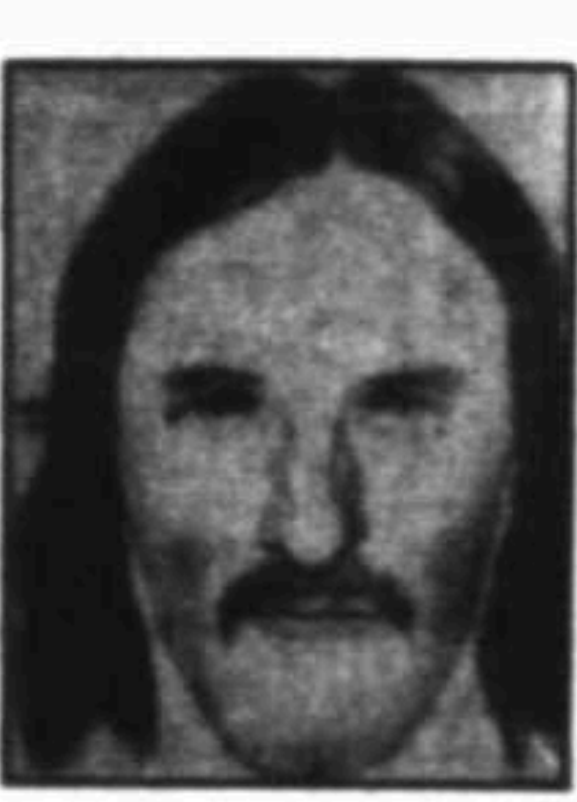

The private detention, said Singleton in a written opinion, deprived the aliens of "the most fundamental rights: life and liberty."

The judge said that Congress intended that the detention of any aliens would be in appropriate facilities.

"Congress intended the agency to furnish suitable facilities which comply with minimum due process standards," Singleton wrote. "Detention is a power reserved to the government and is an exclusive prerogative of the state."

Authorities seeking information on burglar

Odessa Crime Stoppers is seeking information this week about an unusual residential burglary.

Police sketch of suspect

Odessa police were called to a westside Odessa nursing home early in the morning on April 12, where nurses told the officers that a man had been seen inside one of the rooms. He had removed a window screen and opened a window to gain entry. Surprised by nurses making their rounds, the burglar jumped through the open window and fled.

He was described as a white male, about 18, 5-feet 11-inches, 150 pounds, with blonde shoulder-length hair and a blonde moustache. He was last seen wearing a faded black tank top, jeans and tennis shoes. A cap was dropped at the scene which is believed to have been the burglar's.

Odessa Crime Stoppers will pay a $1,000 cash reward for information leading to the arrest and grand jury indictment of the burglar. Crime Stoppers pays cash rewards for information leading to indictments of felony offenders. Call Crime Stoppers at 694-TIPS or in Odessa, 333-TIPS. All callers can remain anonymous.

Elderly will receive insurance policy refunds

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — About 2,500 elderly Texans, including some in Midland, will be eligible for between $7-$10 million in refunds for certain insurance policies bought from a Colorado company which Attorney General Jim Mattox has charged with deceptive selling practices.

"The magnitude of this case could be far larger," Mattox said. An agreed judgment with Academy Life Insurance Co., a Colorado firm doing business in Texas, was reached last week. The company must pay $125,000 in civil penalties to the state, $50,000 in attorneys' fees and investigative costs and costs of the refund program.

The refund program only involves consumers who bought the ECP-95 plan (Estate Conservation Plan), Mattox said, explaining that insurance agents led consumers to believe their estates would be consumed in estate taxes upon death. Consumers who bought the policy were not told that state and federal laws on estate taxes include exemptions which often protect small estates, he said.

The case also involves the Dallas-based Jack Amason Agency, which Mattox said was responsible for hiring and training the insurance agents who sold the policy for Academy Life Insurance Co.

"The marketing of this policy was under the direct supervision of an independent sales organization which specialized in this particular policy," Alvin Clemens, president of the Academy Insurance Group, Inc., of Valley Forge, Pa., said in a prepared statement. "Our relationship with this agency has been terminated."

Mattox said between three and 20 other insurance companies which operate in Texas are being investigated for similar practices. "We think this to be a very grave matter," he said, unwilling to speculate if other refund programs will need to be established.

The attorney general's office will be mailing notices to consumers who purchased the ECP-95 plan, and policyholders will have 21 days to request refunds by filling out an enclosed card and returning it to an Austin accounting firm. Academy Life Insurance Co. will be notified about consumers who request their money back and will issue refunds within 30 days after being contacted, Mattox said.

Policy holders wishing to continue their policies may do so.

"Academy's goal for 16 years has been to satisfy the specific needs of our more than 400,000 customers in 44 states and the District of Columbia," Clemens said. "We regret that an incomplete explanation by an independent marketing organization could have caused some customers to purchase the Estate Conservation Plan."

Clemens confirmed the company will offer a full refund option to consumers in Texas who bought the ECP-95 plan if they did not fully understand the policy when it was purchased.

Mattox noted the final judgment, filed Friday in state district court in Travis County, permanently enjoins the defendants from marketing or selling the ECP-95 policy in Texas, and from selling any insurance product in the state not approved by the State Board of Insurance.

"This reflects a get-tough attitude for the State Board of Insurance," said Mattox, adding it is the first such case referred by SBI commissioner Tom Bond under a provision in the Texas Insurance Code concerning unfair competition and unfair practices.

"Commissioner Bond and his staff recognized that something was amiss here," he said. "I am looking forward to working with them on more such cases."

Mannish shapes okay for some, not all designers

AP Laserphoto

FASHION

NEW YORK (AP) — Oversized, mannish shapes in women's fashions may be the rage for fall, but some designers have had enough of it. They're sticking to clothes that are strictly feminine.

It's a welcome change. There's no reason to hide in a man-tailored greatcoat if you prefer to show off your figure.

Big names like Calvin Klein, Halston and Perry Ellis will be heard from this week. But there are some important highlights from those who unveiled their fall and winter lines last week.

There are Anne Klein's mannish clutch overcoats, and Blassport's giant checks are real head-turners.

Mrs. H. Winter, on the other hand, likes ladylike dressing. And Adele Simpson has a nubby plum coat with camel sleeve and lapel insets that is a knockout.

Designers like Willi Smith are going street-urchin baggy for fall.

Others, like Bill Blass, have fun with the mannish look, while Mollie Parnis and Miss Simpson, favorites of the over-30 set, are staying clear of menswear.

WILLIWEAR: Bold color combinations, mixed patterns, complicated cuts and exaggerated shapes. Nubby flecked ribbed sweaters with drop shoulders and long sleeves nicely teamed with tweed circle skirts and slim skirts with front and back double pleats. Bag-lady looking vests and jumpuits offered as well as set of dreadful sheared, long-hair rabbit coats in lavender, pink and vanilla.

ADELE SIMPSON: Houndstooth skirts, suits, dresses, along with beautiful plaids, especially in forest green and red with matching cardigan and scarf. Snappy long jacket in bright green and black windowpane plaid with reverse lapels. A deep purple long gown with back closure studded with black buttons. Smashing big coats, especially the nubby plum with camel raglan inset sleeves and lapels.

MOLLIE PARNIS: Unimaginative daywear in the form of little wool jersey dresses that sought to be different with dropped waists but succeeded only in being drab. Better are the silk jacquard dresses for evening, especially with back cowl drape and hip blouses. Shortie blue and silver beaded evening dress with tiered metallic fringe at the hem. Especially clever beaded evening jacket in giant houndstooth.

MICHAEL VOLLBRACHT: American Indian geometric coats, accented with sequins, fur and tassels are mainstay of the collection. Red and black primitive cats and set of thermal skirts and pants were offered for the sporty look. Eveningwear included chiffon "Brahma" harem pants and saris and specially treated black rubber gowns, topped with sequins and Spanish lace.

ILIE WACS: Traditional single- and double-breasted coats offered with deep pockets and occasional belts in fall charcoals, clarets and herringbone weaves. Suits also traditional in plaids and a striped Chesterfield. Evening coats were elegant in royal blue velvet and black satin trench styles.

MARY McFADDEN: Uses her signature pleats successfully in eveningwear and less in daytime styles that are busy and at times garish. She offers Ottoman box coats with leaf-patterned blouses and straight skirts and several knicker outfits for day. By night, pleats are elegantly used in jeweled and braided designs. Taffeta bubble skirts with brocade jackets also were nice.

CAROLINA HERRERA: Takes one style — small puffed shoulder with inverted pleats and back kick pleats in skirts and gowns and uses it again and again. Wonderful fabrics — jerseys, velvets and satin. Daywear included sassy tiger prints and rich paisleys in dresses and blouses. Eveningwear sedately elegant in one-shouldered, back-sculpted designs, dripping in sequin detail.

HANAE MORI: A four-star collection with beaded and pearl irises on lush cashmere sweaters in celadon, claret, teal and black. Dazzling Chinese red evening gown in chiffon with off-shoulder tiered capelet, an ivory satin wedding gown with pointy butterfly sleeves, mandarin collar and rows of pearl belting. Exotic scarves, with rich metallic gold embroidery. Kimonos in brilliant fuchsia and heliotrope were translated in tuxedo-style pajama wrap.

BLASSPORT: Gold lame evening ensembles cleverly done in menswear patterns like houndstooth, gien plaid and checks. Updated sweatshirt look, with ribbed cable knits topping high-waisted full drawstring trousers or rubbery hot red parachute pants. Cranberry long-ribbed turtleneck sweater dress.

BOB MACKIE: African theme used in set of Nubian-profile knit sweaters with wide-legged cropped pants. Orange-flecked tweeds, trimmed in lush fox and lynx used in suits. Nighttime styles dazzling in signature bugle-beaded and sequin-studded gowns accented with dyed ostrich feathers in capes and hems. Shimmering, waxy-cellophane gowns in flower print were a nice change.

BILL HAIRE: Kaleidoscopic colors of turquoise, fuchsia, chartreuse and scarlet mark mannish yet softly tailored collection of pleated skirts, boxy and blouson jackets and pleated-peplum kilt suits. Sweaters were a big part of the collection, in ribbed crews and cardigans, checkboard mohairs with tromp l'oeil scarves and jeweled Icelandic ski sweaters with satin skirts and trousers for night.

ALBERT NIPON: Collection tinged with touch of the Roaring '20s with drop-waisted skirts and gowns, accented with long beads and flapper caps. Signature tiny tucks and pleats nicely used in printed dot and checked dresses. A stunning flower-print was used in billowy silk skirt and drop-waist styles. Tiny scalloped hems and sequined-studded lace used in basic black eveningwear.

MRS. H. WINTER: Tri-color and stripes for coats and dresses, but the coats were the knockouts here. Piping and edging were the customary trim. New coat shapes had dropped waists and hint of flared skirts. A long camel coat with stand-up sleeves and piping was very smart. "Winter" red was a bit washed out and gloomy.

ANNE KLEIN: Mannish clutch overcoats, skirts with English riding styles, wraps and sarongs; pants in loose and riding styles and lots of sweaters in four-pocket cardigans, cable-knits and turtlenecks. Woodsy colors of hunter green, orange-red, and softer hues of blush, sage and fawn wonderful for autumn. Evening collection falls short with gold lurex sweaters.

ALEXANDER JULIAN: Shetland sweaters, coats and suits offered in a stylish collection that also includes batik suits, classic navy jumpers with colorful Julian ties, and double and single-breasted geometric suits with slim skirts. A pair of reversible, camel hair-alpaca-cashmere blanket coats, striped on one side and windowpane checked on the other, were standouts.

Consider his taste in buying man's clothing, expert urges

NEW YORK (AP) — A woman who buys clothing for a man should purchase it in the color and style he likes rather than buy something she thinks will look good on him, advises an expert in the field.

"Many women are color and style blind when they buy for males," says Marvin A. Blumenfeld, president of a merchandising consulting firm that represents more than 250 men's stores around the country.

"They think that men's clothing for the most part is too conservative and traditional and lacks imagination. They believe that the average man has not developed the discerning eye for color and style in fashion that a woman has."

Blumenfeld, head of April-Marcus Inc., says that this preconceived notion on the part of women is the major reason that men return so many of the gifts they receive from the opposite sex.

"What women fail to realize," says Blumenfeld, "is that every person regardless of sex has a very good idea of what color and style looks best on him or her. When you tell a man who feels most comfortable in a white shirt that he should wear pink or yellow ones because they'll 'liven up his staid appearance' he'll not only disagree but he'll probably get annoyed because he's in effect being told that he doesn't know how to dress."

Blumenfeld says that a woman who attempts to get her man to dress differently has taken on a difficult assignment.

Men's hemlines head downward this fall

By The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — Designers are fiddling with hemlines again — not women's but men's.

Men's coats are heading for a fall next fall, with hems anywhere from well below the knee to the bottom of the calf. No one expects the long coat for a man to bring on the outrage that came with the introduction of the midcoat for women in the 1970s. But acceptance is likely to be slow and timid.

The long, long coat was the hit of the menswear collections recently in Paris and then among the group of more than 60 men's clothing, sportswear and accessories companies called the Designers' Collective, which displayed wares for next fall to store buyers not long ago in New York.

But long coats are not the only menswear news these days. While men's strictly-for-business (or government-office) clothing has changed little in several seasons, sportswear and separates, which are sometimes worn to the office as well, are breaking out of the popular classic mold. It's all part of the easy, oversized shape and cut, increasingly popular with designers of womenswear, that kids have scouted out and started wearing from thrift shops. And it reflects the strong influence of Japanese design, which is often formless and unfitted as well.

Other changes ahead in menswear include:

- The color brown as successor to all the black clothing.
- The oversized blazer as a successor to the blouson, which almost everyone now owns.
- Trousers that are cut full and usually pleated.
- Full tops and overshirts cut with dolman sleeves and square armholes.
- Supersized sweaters, often with a ski-sweater look.
- Boxer shorts as underwear, sleepwear or sportswear.
- Shoes that have the comfort of sneakers or running shoes.

The long coat, which was replaced by the chopped-off car coat length in the 1950s and in recent years by blouson jackets, has stayed popular in Europe in traditional loden coat and raincoat styles. This spring a smattering of long raincoats appeared in stores, but the big push will start for fall.

"I love them. They are wildly practical," says Chip Tolbert, fashion director of the Men's Fashion Association, which represents 450 menswear manufacturers. "It makes sense to me that it keeps you from having wet trousers from the knee down. And obviously long winter coats offer more warmth." He pegs the demise of the long coat to the increased popularity of the car, inspiring the car coat, which he calls "one of the worst-looking fashions ever done."

Robert Beauchamp, fashion director of Gentlemen's Quarterly, says he started wearing one of the long coats this winter, a long camel-hair coat by Perry Ellis, "and it certainly started a lot of conversation." Beauchamp thinks the appeal is in tune with the desire for "everything big and oversized, a direct influence of the Japanese, who make everything one-size-fits-all."

According to Gregg DeVaney, fashion director of Neiman-Marcus, "the oversized everything, including the coat, was the hit of the European collections. It comes from what the kids are wearing on the street and it reflects the kind of comfort that we expect from the clothes we wear on weekends that we want in the rest of our clothes."

DeVaney doesn't expect the American market to accept the 52-inch-length coat that cuts off below the calf, the fashionable length for men in Europe. But he does think this market may accept styles that are 50 inches long. That's the length he wears himself, he says.

The best coats from European or American designers are in lofty fabrics and therefore not heavy, have deep armholes and are belted to give a blousy look, says DeVaney, demonstrating the effect with a pale tweed coat from Gianfranco Ruffini at the Designers' Collective.

"I think that somewhere deep in our heads we yearn for the 1930s. We like to believe it was post-Crash and life was simpler and that elegance was clearly stated and established by Scott and Zelda and Hollywood," says Robert L. Green, menswear authority and creative consultant to MGM. "Those long coats on short people make them look shorter but for taller people they give a feeling of elegance."

Green admits that he has a long coat that he wears only to board meetings. It gives a sense of dignity and responsibility, he says with a smile. "Long raincoats always look like new money. Long woolen coats allow you to pass for old ..."

DEAR ABBY

Mom ponders approaching sexually active teen

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I have discovered without a doubt that "Rick," our 16-year-old son, is having sex with his girlfriend. She's also 16. They are both honor students and all-around "good kids."

We have a normal, stable family life. My husband and I have always spent a lot of time with our children and have stressed the importance of taking responsibility for one's own actions. In my opinion, sexual relations are not for those who cannot support themselves or any children that might come along as a result of an accidental pregnancy.

What is a sensible approach? Should I confront Rick alone? I suppose I should tell my husband, but I dread seeing the disappointment on his face. He has always been so proud of Rick.

I'm too close to the situation to make a wise decision. Please give me some guidelines. -- HEARTSICK MOM

DEAR MOM: Tell your husband. Rick is his son, too. You and your husband should have a frank talk with Rick and his girlfriend and tell them what you "know."

You could limit the time they spend together, but please don't forbid them to see each other again because "love" will find a way.

Since accidental pregnancy is a very real possibility, be sure that Rick and his girlfriend know everything they need to know about contraception, but don't give them the impression that you think sex for 16-year-olds is OK. Let them know that in your opinion, it is NOT OK, and that you positively disapprove.

DEAR ABBY: My neighbor has two enormous dogs that she keeps in her house most of the time, but when she lets them out to do their business, they head straight for my lawn and unload like a pair of elephants! We had some angry words about this two years ago and haven't spoken since. I called the police department to complain and I also called the dog pound, but nothing was done about it.

I am going through the menopause, and when I get nervous, my blood pressure shoots up. I'm afraid I'll have a stroke if something isn't done soon.

I would hate to kill those dogs, but I just can't let them take over my property.

If you have any ideas, please let me know soon. -- DOG-TIRED IN PENNSYLVANIA

DEAR DOG-TIRED: The dogs are not to blame, so please don't take it out on them. You don't say where you live, but in most communities, your neighbor would be in violation of the law and can be fined.

Call your police again and register a formal complaint. Be sure to give your name so the police will have a record of your complaint. If nothing is done, buy a "pooper scooper" (most hardware stores have them), and after the dogs have "decorated" your lawn, scoop the mess up and deposit it on your neighbor's lawn.

Short of fencing in your property, which is costly, the above suggestion seems the most humane.

DEAR ABBY: I have been a flight attendant for a major airline for 16 years. I have seen a lot of unusual things happen, but I am sick to death of the number of mothers breast-feeding their walking, talking, very large children! It doesn't even matter where they are sitting; they just do it right in front of everyone! (I'm not talking about women from another culture, either.)

I object because I, as a flight attendant, am forced to interact with the mother-child situation as I am conducting my beverage, cocktail and meal service.

I don't care what people do in their own homes, but please, mothers, on an airplane, take your child to the lavatory or feed your child BEFORE you get on the plane. -- COFFEE, TEA OR WATER -- NO MILK, PLEASE!

(If you put off writing letters because you don't know what to say, send for Abby's complete booklet on letter-writing. Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 (this includes postage) to: Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

AT WIT'S END

Young voting cliques getting much attention

By ERMA BOMBECK

The generic name for a demographic clique of voters who are getting a lot of attention these days is "YUPPIES."

Broken down, there's the YUMPS (Young Upwardly Mobile), the YAPS (Young Aspiring), the GUPS (Gay Urban), the PUPS (Pregnant Urban) and the YUPS (Young Urban).

They're young. They're bipartisan. And they're a generation that has a history of defying establishment.

Before all the cute names are gone, I'd like to focus attention on an older group... the LUMPS (Life-giving, Unselfish, Middle-class, Parent, Survivors) who spawned the YUPPIES.

We're the ones responsible for giving birth to 77 million YUPPIES between 1946-1964. Someone once described them as the "pig in the python," a bulge that moved through society causing indignation all the way.

From the beginning, the Baby

Boomers set up their own society -- from high school protests to attitude changes about family, lifestyle, marriage and work ethics. They lived in their own youth ghettos, had their own costumes, their own hair and their own music.

The LUMPS are going through an interesting time as we sit back and wonder what we have spawned. (And occasionally spurned.) There isn't a day goes by that we don't learn more about our offspring.

We now find out the YUPPIES, who are now 20 to 38 years old, are getting down to dealing with their real estate inheritance... the United States. They are driven careerists who own a Volvo, work out regularly and drink designer water. They have yogurt and a wheel of Brie in their refrigerators and live by charge cards. They plan an apartment and one child (both self-cleaning). They can make a difference in presidential elections.

Every generation fights for its dream. The LUMPS were no different. We married early, had babies, wore practical polyester, paid cash, fertilized grass, washed our own cars and waited for the Christmas savings check. We accepted 20-year house payments, 40-year marriages and 30 years on the same job without question.

Then we discovered no one wanted to emulate us. No one wanted to inherit the fruits of our labor. No one wanted to profit from our experience.

I don't mean to imply the LUMPS are on "automatic pilot," but by sheer numbers the baby boomers have come to power. It will be interesting to see how they fare when they can no longer eat the Brie in our refrigerators, use our charge cards to put gas into our Volvos which they borrowed until interest rates went down.

Local 'Ugliest Bartender' raises $3,000

By DAVID LEE FORREST
Lifestyle Writer

Al Langford Jr. has been named the "Ugliest Bartender" in Midland. To earn this dubious-sounding title, he helped raise more than $3,000 to aid multiple sclerosis patients.

The "ugly" theme of the Ugliest Bartender Contest comes from the acronym "Understanding, Generous, Loveable You," according to its sponsor, the Permian Basin Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society.

Bartenders were elected by bar patrons donating money to the MS Society, with each 25¢ equaling one vote for their favorite bartender. Local establishments also sponsored special fundraising events, including pie throws, dunk tanks and dance contests, to collect votes for their bartender.

Langford said he faced a lot of friendly kidding from co-workers and customers about being the ugliest bartender in town during his campaign for the title, but he enjoyed the attention.

"I'm kind of glad it's over," Langford said. "The D.J.s really rubbed it in."

"I don't think of myself as too ugly, so it didn't bother me," he said. "I loved it."

"The campaign was our most successful yet, earning a combined total of $37,000 to aid local multiple sclerosis patients and research for a cure or treatment," said Ted North, MS Society chapter chairman.

According to Judy Dixon, executive director of the local MS Society chapter, 60 percent of the money raised is spent locally to help 150 area residents afflicted with MS. The remainder goes to the national organization to be used for research on the disease.

The MS Society's funding comes entirely from voluntary contributions, she added.

More than 60 local bars and restaurants participated in the event. Katie's Westside Lounge in Odessa raised the most money of the participating bars in the Permian Basin. That bar "got ugly" enough to raise $5,632.83.

Midland's five Ugliest Bartenders and the amounts they raised were:

- Al Langford Jr. of Harrigans, $3,062.85.
- Bob Doggett of Last Tycoon, $1,906.
- Celinda Beene of Wall Street Bar and Grill, $1,511.50.
- Bruce Fisher of The Bar, $532.75.
- John Murphy of The Basin, $439.79.

Introduction to the page

The Business/Industry page is published by the Midland Reporter-Telegram as a service to the businesses of the Permian Basin.

Three pages are devoted each week to the Business/Industry pages (B/I): a double page spread on Sunday and one page on Tuesday.

The advertisements seen on these pages are directly related to the stories and photographs. Through a six month (26 weeks) or a three month (13 weeks) contract, businesses are given constant exposure to the literate public.

The stories and photos complement the advertisements, giving the reader an in-depth view of the business. The reader is exposed to specific details and pertinent information not otherwise found on a small advertisement.

Midland houses between 3,500 and 4,000 businesses, reports the Midland Chamber of Commerce. With this amount of competition, constant exposure each week, for 26 or 13 consecutive weeks, can only promote interest to help the prospective business.

The businesses of the Permian Basin are as fascinating as they are numerous. Currently, the B/I pages are used by a wide variety of businesses that can provide many of the essential tasks that you desire.

Any and all businesses are encouraged to join the Midland Reporter-Telegram's Business/Industry pages, regardless of the nature of the business. All businesses, corporate or independent, are invited to consider this opportunity.

For further information, contact the Advertising Department of the Reporter-Telegram at (915) 682-5311. The staff will be happy to quote prices and discuss potential story material. Call 682-5311 and let the Business/Industry pages work for you.

Sondheim musical gets most nominations

NEW YORK (AP) — "Sunday in the Park with George," the Stephen Sondheim musical which opened to mixed reviews, has captured 10 Tony award nominations, one more than its closest rival, "La Cage aux folles," the season's biggest musical hit.

Both are in contention for best musical of the year after nominations for Broadway's top honor were announced Monday. Tom Stoppard's play "The Real Thing" and two other best-musical candidates, "The Tap Dance Kid" and "Baby," also did well, receiving seven nominations each.

A surprise was the lack of nominations for "Death of a Salesman," including none for its star, Dustin Hoffman. The critically acclaimed revival of the Arthur Miller classic received only one nomination — as outstanding revival.

"Sunday in the Park with George," suggested by Georges Seurat's pointillist masterpiece, "A Sunday Afternoon on the Island of La Grande Jatte," received mixed reviews from critics when it opened last month. "La Cage aux folles," about an aging homosexual couple and their family complications, is based on a French farce which later became a popular movie.

Besides "The Real Thing," nominees in the best-play category include David Mamet's Pulitzer Prize-winner, "Glengarry Glen Ross," Michael Frayn's hit British comedy, "Noises Off," and Joanna Glass' "Play Memory," which expired after a run of less than one week.

Three English stars — Rex Harrison in "Heartbreak House," Jeremy Irons in "The Real Thing" and Ian McKellen in his one-man show "Acting Shakespeare" — and newcomer Calvin Levels, the troubled college student in "Open Admissions," were nominated for best actor in a play.

Rosemary Harris, Harrison's co-star in "Heartbreak House," and Glenn Close, Irons' partner in "The Real Thing," earned best actress nominations, as did Kate Nelligan in a revival of "A Moon for the Misbegotten" and Linda

Hunt, who plays agent Audrey Wood in Arthur Kopit's "End of the World."

Double nominations for acting occurred in three musicals and one play. Chita Rivera and Liza Minnelli, as a battling mother and daughter in "The Rink," will compete against Rhetta Hughes of "Amen Corner" and Bernadette Peters in "Sunday in the Park with George" for best actress in a musical.

In the best actor-musical category, George Hearn and Gene Barry, the homosexual couple in "La Cage aux folles," face Ron Moody, Fagin in the original London production of "Oliver!" and Mandy Patinkin in "Sunday in the Park with George."

Hinton Battle and Samuel Wright of "The Tap Dance Kid" received featured actor-musical nominations as did Stephen Geofreys, the teenage telegraph messenger in "The Human Comedy" and Todd Graff, one of the expectant fathers in "Baby."

Robert Prosky and Joe Mantegna, two of the unscrupulous salesmen in "Glengarry Glen Ross," are two of the contenders in the featured actor-play category. Their competition: Philip Bosco, "Heartbreak House," and Douglas Seale, "Noises Off."

Dana Ivey could win two Tonys. She's nominated as featured actress in a play, "Heartbreak House," and featured actress in a musical, "Sunday in the Park with George." Her musical competition includes Martine Allard, "The Tap Dance Kid," Liz Callaway, "Baby," and Lila Kedrova, "Zorba." In the play category, she's up against Christine Baranski, "The Real Thing," Jo Henderson, "Play Memory," and Deborah Rush, "Noises Off."

Besides "Salesman," other nominees for best revival include "Heartbreak House," "A Moon for the Misbegotten," and "American Buffalo."

For best director of a play, the nominees are Mike Nichols, "The Real Thing," Michael Blakemore, "Noises Off," Gregory Mosher, "Glengarry Glen Ross," and David Leveaux, "A Moon for the Misbegotten."

Paper's columnist writes with conviction

CARSON CITY, Nev. (AP) — When Gerald Crane started writing his weekly newspaper column, he had two big handicaps. English was his worst subject, and he was doing a 35-year stretch for bank robbery and kidnapping.

A year later, still in prison but his writing considerably improved, the 32-year-old high school dropout beat out five competitors to be honored as the best local columnist in a daily newspaper in Nevada.

Crane said Monday he was not upset he couldn't attend a Nevada State Press Association convention to pick up his award last weekend. "I've had a grin on my face from ear to ear for the past couple of days," he added.

"I was really surprised," he said. "I didn't even know I had been entered in the contest."

Crane gets $15 a week for his "Being There" column written in his Northern Nevada Correctional Center dormitory and run every Monday for the past year in the Nevada Appeal of Carson City.

"I'm absolutely tickled about this," said Dave Osborn, the newspaper's general manager. Osborn said he encouraged Crane to write a regular column after noticing his work in a prison newsletter.

Vern Housewright, the state's prison director, said he too was "pleased" by the award because "it's not often inmates in prison are recognized."

Housewright said, however, that he has "some problems on occasion with some of the things he says in the articles."

Crane also was praised by one of his favorite columnists, Cory Farley of the Reno Gazette-Journal.

"He's in jail and wants to be a columnist? Obviously the rehabilitation process isn't working," Farley said.

Crane, who has been criticized by prison administrators and convicts alike for his views, hopes to be able to get more papers to run his column.

The column runs with a disclaimer that says it has not been approved by prison administrators, Osborn said.

The contest's judges said Crane "writes with conviction (no pun intended) of his subject matter. He tells us about prison life, and, in a sense, what it takes to survive there, both socially and politically...He has something to say, and he tells it like it is."

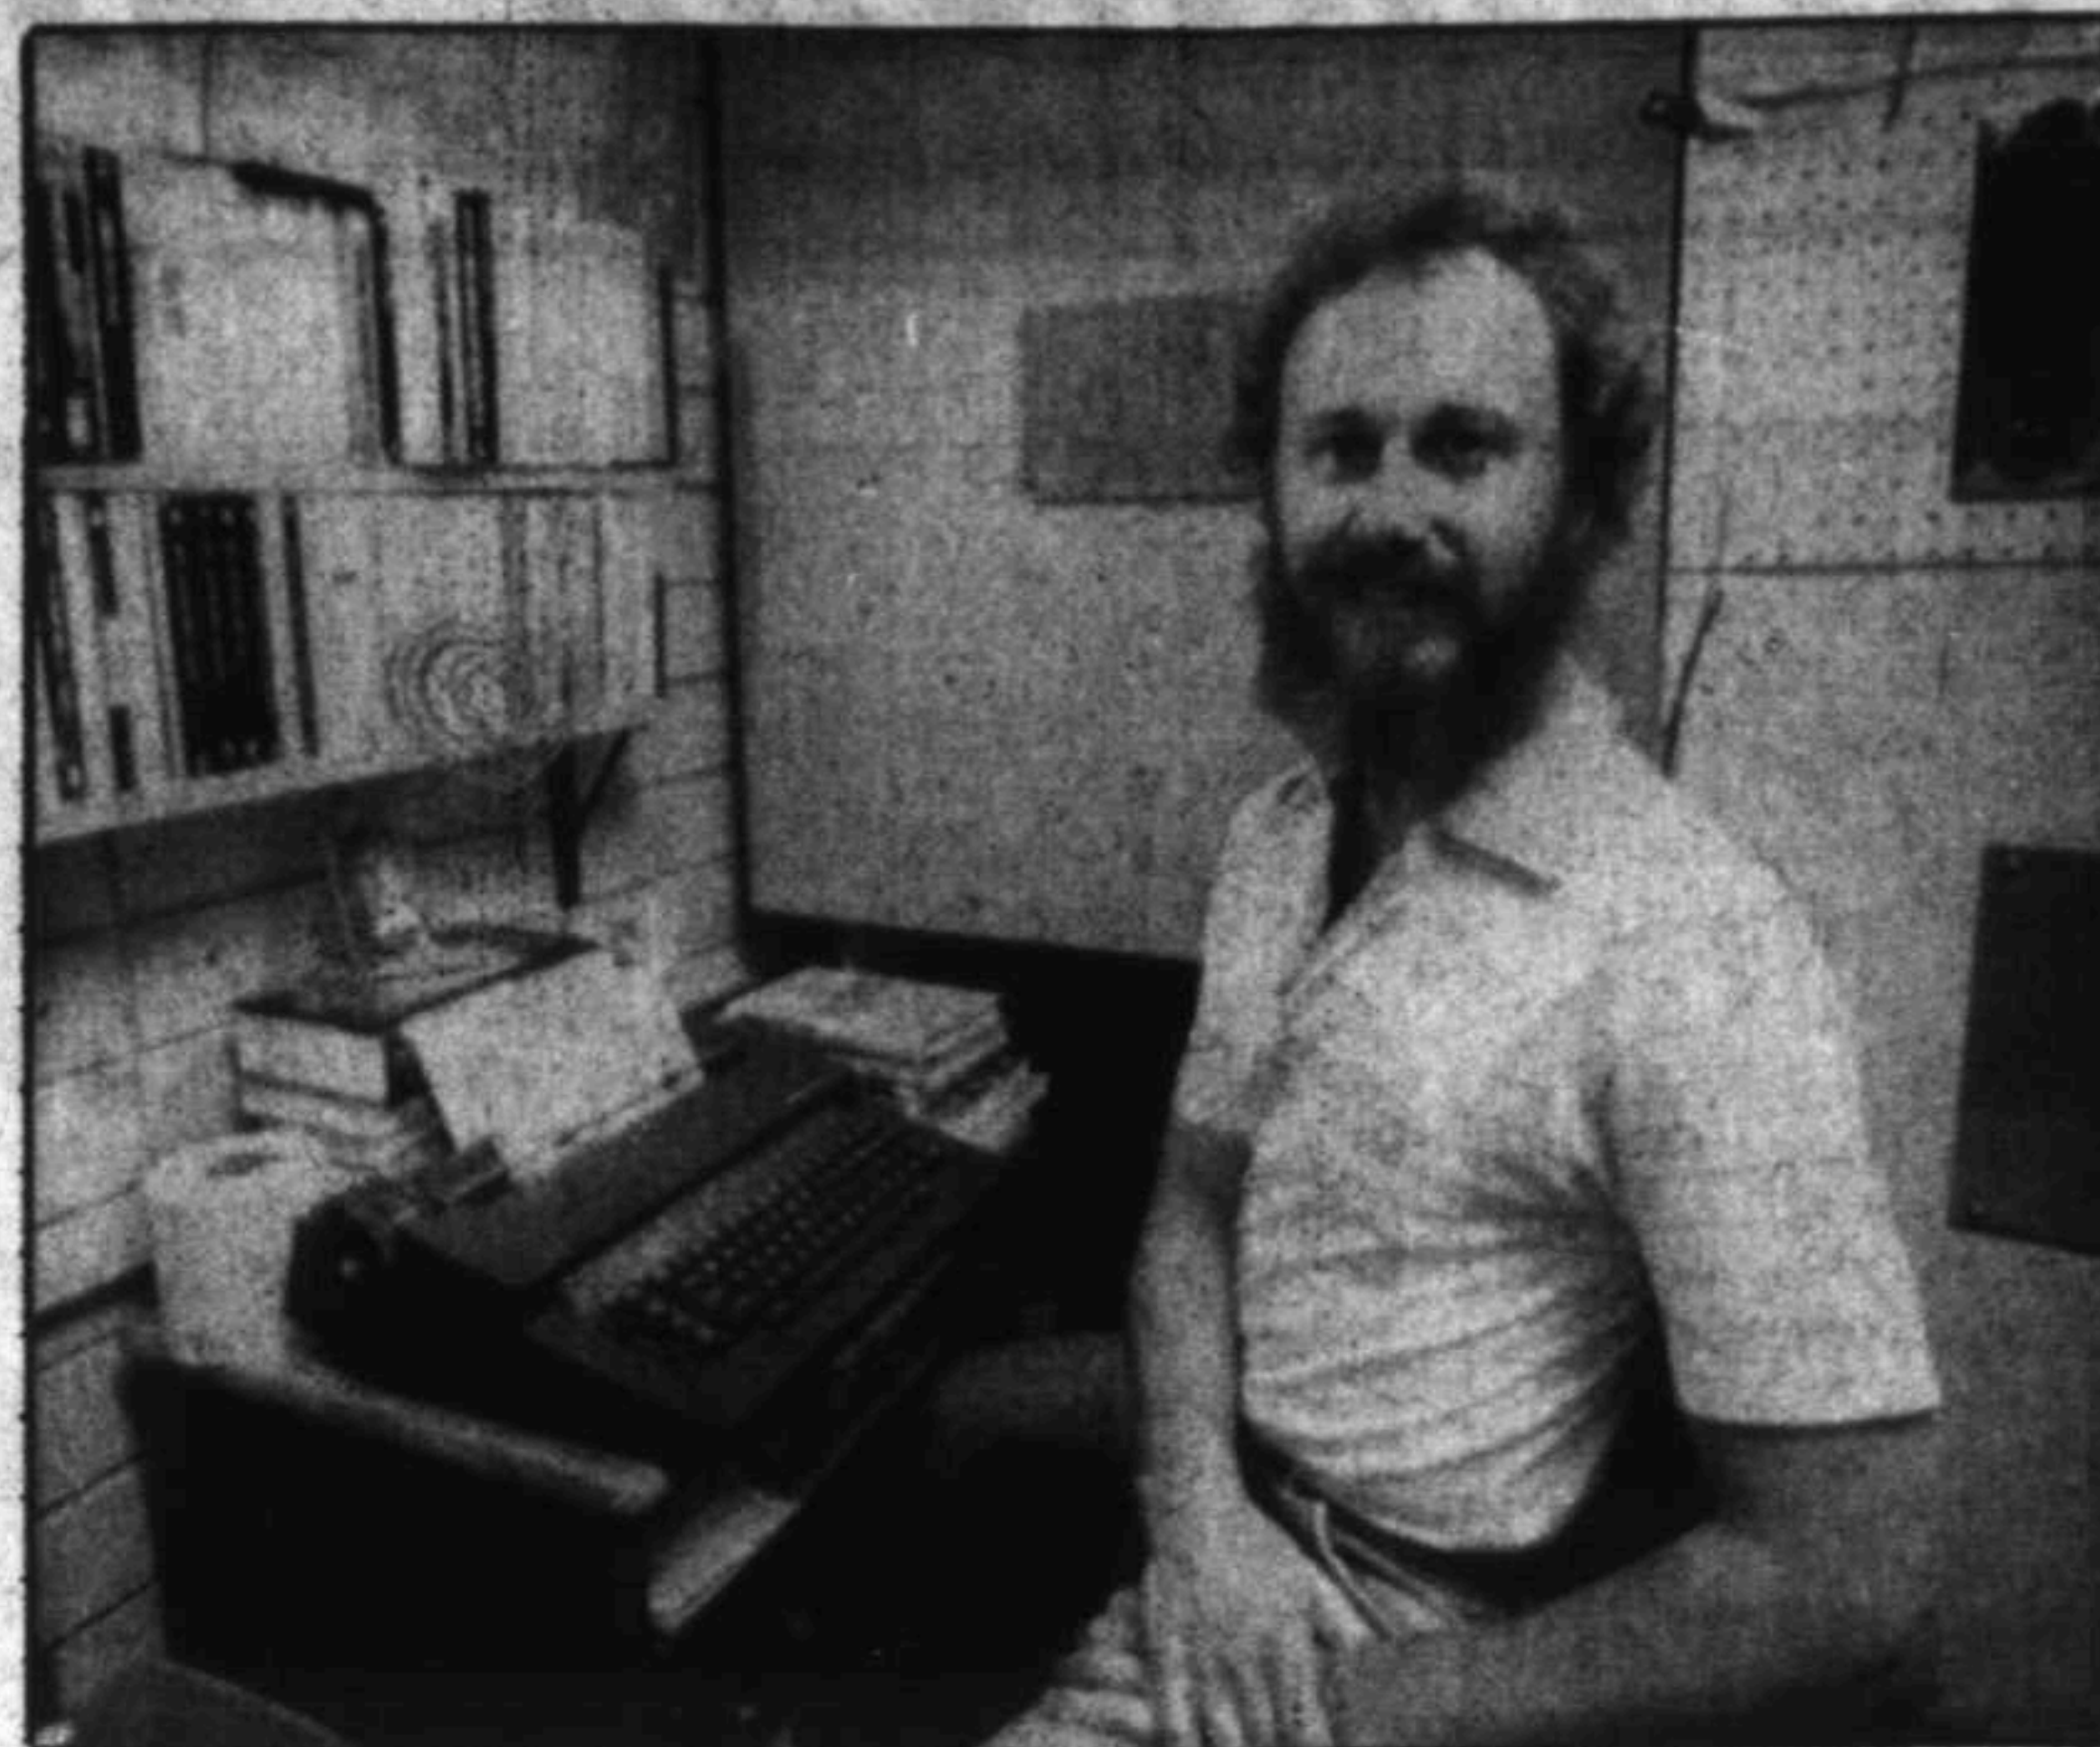

"I'm just trying to get people to get along with people, and to see the prison community as not separate from the outside community," Crane said. "We're all part of it. We're just separated by this fence."

Although Crane said he is trying to debunk the "ultra-cool, mysterious image" of prison inmates, he understands why that image persists.

"Otherwise, what would you have?" he said. "A dope in prison for breaking the law."

Crane has served nearly nine years behind bars for the October 1975 kidnapping of the wife of a local bank manager and for attempting to rob the bank.

into the bank. The woman escaped and called police, who arrested Crane inside the bank.

Crane, who has since remarried while in prison, grew up in Marin County, Calif., where he was first arrested as a teen-ager after taking some dynamite from a rock quarry.

He pleaded guilty to bank robbery and kidnapping and got a 35-year term. Since then, he has been paroled from the 10-year sentence for robbery and is now serving time on the 25-year sentence imposed for the kidnapping charge.

Renovated Museum of Modern Art reopens

MOMA 'comes of age as art treasure house'

NEW YORK (AP) — The Museum of Modern Art has reopened after a $55 million renovation and expansion that more than doubled exhibition space for its peerless collection, ranging from van Gogh's "Starry Night" to a helicopter.

The museum, whose paintings and sculpture shocked some Americans when first displayed 55 years ago, "has come of age as one of the great art treasure houses of the world," said William Paley, chairman of its board of trustees, at Monday's dedication of the new galleries.

Mayor Edward I. Koch called the museum "the single greatest attraction in the city today, for its residents and its visitors."

In 1929, when the museum opened in rented office space, people accustomed to traditional art regarded modern art with contempt or bewilderment. A tree, they said, should look like a tree.

In 1939 the museum moved to its present midtown home, which closed Jan. 4 for its final stage of renovation. It reopened with a four-story, greenhouse-like structure in the rear that houses a new set of escalators, giving riders a fine view of the repaved and replanted Sculpture Garden and its works by Rodin and Picasso.

The largest part of the expansion was construction of a new west wing, which will provide about 46,500 square feet of new gallery space, plus a new auditorium. The wing is topped by an apartment building tower not owned by the museum.

The expansion brought the museum's gallery space to 87,000 square feet, pushing it past such museums as the Tate Gallery in London and the East Wing of the National Gallery in Washington, D.C.

Before the museum reopens to the public May 17, more than 30,000 invited guests — members, officials, artists, donors, critics — will visit.

Although museum officials said Monday they would continue to display and purchase the work of new, younger artists, the museum's popularity and reputation is now based on its masterpieces.

Monthly supper club created to ease racial tensions marks anniversary

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — A monthly supper club created to help ease racial tensions in this city attracted more than 30 diners to its first anniversary meeting as guests shared a cake sent by the group's anonymous host, "Jack Smith."

"Jack Smith" was the name used by the person who sent out anonymous invitations to the May 4, 1983, charter meeting of the Friendly Supper Club. The club has only one rule: Those attending are asked to bring a guest of a different race.

Although there were no revelations about their host's identity at Monday's "Dutch treat" dinner at a Montgomery cafeteria, "Smith" delivered a message and the cake with the help of two club regulars.

Johnnie Rebecca Carr, 73, found a chocolate cake trimmed with white icing and emblazoned with a "1" and "Congratulations Friendly Supper Club" on her front porch Monday morning with instructions to take it to the dinner.

"Anybody that's my friend I like to know who they are. But since Jack Smith has been such a good friend, I'm not going to worry about who he is," she said.

"People still ask who he is," said Bill Stephens, a Montgomery attorney who has served as "Smith's" spokesman on several occasions. Stephens said up to 175 people have come to the meetings in the past but that attendance has dwindled recently.

Stephens, who is white, said he found "Smith's" message thanking the group for attending the supper on his doorstep Monday. Stephens read it to the group at the dinner.

In the message, "Smith" said he was breaking his silence to reiterate the supper club's goal "to foster communication among us."

"Our numbers are small but I feel we set a powerful example. If anyone is still wondering about my identity, that is not important," the message said.

Mrs. Carr, who is black, agreed that the supper club was a symbol of the progress made in overcoming racial tensions.

Moby Dart makes pointed statement

CARBONDALE, Ill. (AP) — When Moby Dick turns into Moby Dart and Darth Vader becomes Dart Vader, just remember it's all part of a sharp art show, Objects D'Art.

"It's a rather informal exhibit," said Evert Johnson, the amused curator at the University Museum of Southern Illinois University. "It's all kind of tongue-in-cheek."

The display of dart-art was the idea of metalsmith graduate student

H. Chares Schwarz. Metalsmiths, glassblowers and blacksmiths were invited to participate in the exhibit, which was scheduled to end today but became so popular it may continue a few more days.

The more than 90 Objects D'Art are made of glass, wood, aluminum, magnesium, steel, paper, bronze, peacock feathers, cork, rope, hair, bamboo, silicone, cloth — and the list goes on.

The darts' names are as varied as their components. There are, for example, the Winged Narwhale Dart, the Spiral Nebulous dart, and the Reliquary of St. Leoparini, who, the exhibit declares, is "the patron saint of the snail darter."

Among the more popular items is the Moby Dart, which Johnson said was a full-scale hand-forged metal harpoon.

Italian quake injures 80 people; Thousands spend night outside

ROME (AP) — Three people were reported killed and at least 80 injured when an earthquake jolted central and southern Italy. Many panicked residents stayed outdoors today as aftershocks rumbled through the coast and mountains.

The powerful first quake, which struck Monday evening, hit hardest in a sparsely populated mountain area of Abruzzi, a region east of Rome.

Several thousand people throughout the region spent the night outside, reluctant to go back into their homes because they feared the weakened structures would collapse.

Fifteen of the injured were in a church when they were struck by falling masonry, the Interior Ministry said.

Tall buildings in Rome swayed during the quake, which was felt for at least three minutes in the capital Monday evening. The tremor rattled furniture, sent apartment dwellers running into the streets in the Laurentino section but caused no injuries, reports said.

The quake struck at 7:50 p.m. The U.S. Geological Survey in Golden, Colo., said the quake was measured at 5.7 on the Richter scale and Uppsala University Seismological Institution in Sweden put it at 6.4.

Near Naples, the quake triggered a landslide that closed a highway. Telephone lines were knocked out throughout the south, Italy's less developed part.

Cracks spread on several buildings near the epicenter.

This morning's aftershocks shook towns, villages and cities in a belt crossing Italy from Naples, on the southwest coast, to Abruzzi. No injuries but much panic were reported in the latest earthquakes.

State-run RAI radio said a 40-year-old farmer was killed in Caserta, near Naples, when his tractor rolled on top of him during the quake Monday, and an 87-year-old woman died of a heart attack in Alfedena, an Abruzzi village which was one of the hardest-hit places. RAI gave no details of the third death.

RAI radio, quoting civil defense officials, said that more than 25 people were injured near the epicenter, mostly from falling plaster and eaves. It added that 15 people were injured in Campobasso, 110 miles southeast of Rome, and 40 in the Frosinone area, 45 miles southeast of the capital.

Among those injured in the Frosinone area were the 15 churchgoers, in the tiny village of Cervaro.

Epicenter of the quake was put at San Donato Val Comino, 70 miles southeast of Rome. Reports said 8,000 people spent the night outside in the town.

The open-ended Richter scale measures ground motion. A quake measuring 5 can do considerable damage; one of 6-point strength, severe damage.

In Rome, National Geophysics Institute said the quake measured 8 on the 12-point Mercalli scale, which gauges the intensity of the tremor at a specific spot.

The quake was felt as far north as Perugia, 105 miles northeast of Rome, and throughout most of the south, civil defense officials said.

Also rattled by the quake was the Umbria region, where tremors on April 29 damaged art works in Assisi, Gubbio and Perugia.

Deaths of 749 American GIs recalled as 'darkest secret'

LONDON (AP) — As the 40th anniversary of D-Day draws near, the English have been recalling the invasion's "darkest secret," the night German torpedo boats slipped into a fog-shrouded bay on the English Channel coast and torpedoed three landing craft practicing for the Normandy assault.

At least 749 American GIs were killed, more than the number who died five weeks later in the real invasion when their units stormed ashore on Utah Beach.

So disastrous was the attack that Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, the Allied commander, ordered it kept secret. The victims were buried in mass graves, and their families didn't learn the truth until after the war.

It was just past midnight on April 28, 1944, when the convoy of landing craft chugged slowly into Lyme Bay on the Devon coast.

On board were soldiers of the U.S. 4th Division, mostly engineers, shifting heavy backpacks and peering into the pre-dawn mist. The target, Slapton Sands, had been chosen for its resemblance to Utah Beach.

At about 1:30 a.m., two flotillas of German E-boats, as the torpedo boats were known, charged into the bay and loosed a string of torpedoes at the convoy. As the E-boats turned and fled, there were flashes, booms and shouts.

Three landing craft were hit. Two sank.

"At least 1,000 yards astern of us, you could see a jeep flying through the air," recalls Manny Reuben, a U.S. Navy signalman on one of the ships.

"You could see black dots that we knew were men just on the fringe of it. It was just like hell, like every sailor's nightmare."

Those who weren't killed in the explosions drowned under the weight of their equipment or burned to death as flaming gasoline poured over the water.

"As it got lighter, we saw the most horrible sight," Reuben said. "As far as you could see out in the sea, there were men floating — dead bodies."

U.S. Army records show at least 749 men were lost, but the researcher who filed them said they "may be incomplete."

Gordon Harrison, in his 1951 official U.S. Army history of D-Day, "Cross-Channel Attack," said the Exercise Tiger fiasco was "particularly critical in view of the general shortage of landing craft."

"Gen. Eisenhower reported to the combined chiefs of staff that the sinkings reduced the LSTs (landing craft) surplus to nothing."

But because of the secrecy — so strict that survivors were held in an isolation camp — the Germans didn't know how deadly they'd been.

Hans Schirren, one of the E-boat commanders, learned only this year, when a British television company researching a documentary contacted him. He declined to be interviewed, but wrote: "To my utter surprise, I have learned now from you about 750 lives lost that night in Lyme Bay. Please allow me to say I feel very sad about the heavy losses."

The documentary, "Sands of Silence," aired on Britain's Independent Television network, called Exercise Tiger "an astounding catalogue of incompetence and misunderstandings."

The exercise was conducted with live ammunition. One ammo truck exploded, killing 50 GIs. Two young schoolboys were killed when they found a grenade and pulled the pin.

Gemayel travels to north Lebanon to court Maronite Christian leader

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — President Amin Gemayel traveled to Syrian-controlled northern Lebanon today in an effort to bring the last major holdout into a national coalition government intended to end the country's civil war.

State and privately owned radio stations said Gemayel met with former President Suleiman Franjeh immediately after his arrival by helicopter at the Summar Jbel army barracks in the northern province of Batroun.

Franjeh, the most powerful Maronite Catholic leader in the north, had resented the appointment of his Greek Orthodox son-in-law, Abdullah Rassi, to represent him as interior minister in the new national unity Cabinet. Franjeh had wanted to be represented by a Maronite.

Rassi consequently refused to take up his post in the half-Christian, half-Muslim Cabinet under Syrian-backed Prime Minister Rashid Karami.

Gemayel's move came the day after a breakthrough ended the week-long deadlock over Shiite Moslem demands for a greater role in handling the Israeli occupation of southern Lebanon.

Gemayel issued a presidential decree Monday naming Shiite opposition leader Nabih Berri as minister of state for southern Lebanon and reconstruction in addition to his original post as minister of justice, electricity and water resources.

"What is important now is to carry Lebanon into a new stage, that of liberating its land, reuniting it and its people and rebuilding it on the basis of justice and equality," Berri told a news conference at which he announced his agreement to serve in the government.

As he spoke, his followers in Amal, the main Shiite militia, fired automatic rifles and machine guns into the air in a half-hour celebration of Berri's appointment.

Later in the night, Christian and Moslem gunners duelled sporadically with mortars and rocket-propelled grenades along the "green line" that separates Christian east Beirut from the mostly Moslem western sector.

Police said two people were killed and 22 wounded in fighting during the 24 hours that ended at daybreak today, when hostilities tapered off.

Local radio stations said Karami's Cabinet was expected to hold its first regular session Wednesday and would concentrate on reopening traffic between Beirut's two sectors as well as the airport and port.

Druse opposition leader Walid

Jumblatt, whose Syrian-equipped militia teamed with Amal in the latest civil war fighting against Christian forces, had already said he would serve in the Cabinet if Berri joined it.

In Israel, Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir was quoted Monday as telling a newspaper that his country might soon pull its troops back from their present positions in south Lebanon. But he did not set a date.

"I think we are truly moving toward arrangements that will make it possible for us to remove the Israel defense forces from Lebanon," Shamir was quoted as telling the newspaper Yediot Aharonot.

Shamir said the arrangements would have to be made with elements in the local population, with Israeli-backed militia units there and indirectly with the Lebanese government, the newspaper said.

"What is delaying our departure is the lack of security agreements which will allow this," he was quoted as saying. Israel says it invaded Lebanon and continues to hold territory there to protect its northern border from Palestinian guerrilla infiltration.

Israeli troops are entrenched along the Awali River, 22 miles south of Beirut.

Peking student receives

PEKING (AP) — A high school student who stole 31 cultural relics and bashed a policeman with an iron bar during a robbery has been sentenced to death in Hunan province, the official news agency Xinhua reported today.

Xinhua said Xu Fandi was sentenced Monday but the Changsha Intermediate People's Court suspended the execution for two years because he was under 18 when he committed the crimes last October.

In China's penal system, people under 18 who commit capital crimes often get suspended-death sentences, which are later usually commuted to life imprisonment.

Xinhua said Xu broke into the Hunan Provincial Museum last October, smashed seven showcases and stole relics from a collection of burial objects from the Han Dynasty (206 B.C.-220 A.D.).

"He also struck a guard with an iron bar during a robbery at the Changsha Friendship Store a week later," it said.

REGINA, Saskatchewan (AP) — Former provincial energy minister Colin Thatcher has been charged with the murder 15 months ago of his former wife, JoAnn Wilson.

Thatcher, 45, entered no plea Monday and was ordered held in custody until a bail hearing next week. He was arrested earlier in the day at his home in Moose Jaw, 45 miles west of here.

Mrs. Wilson was beaten and shot to death in February 1983 in the garage of the home she shared with Tony Wilson, a steel company executive she married in 1979 after divorcing Thatcher, to whom she was married for 17 years.

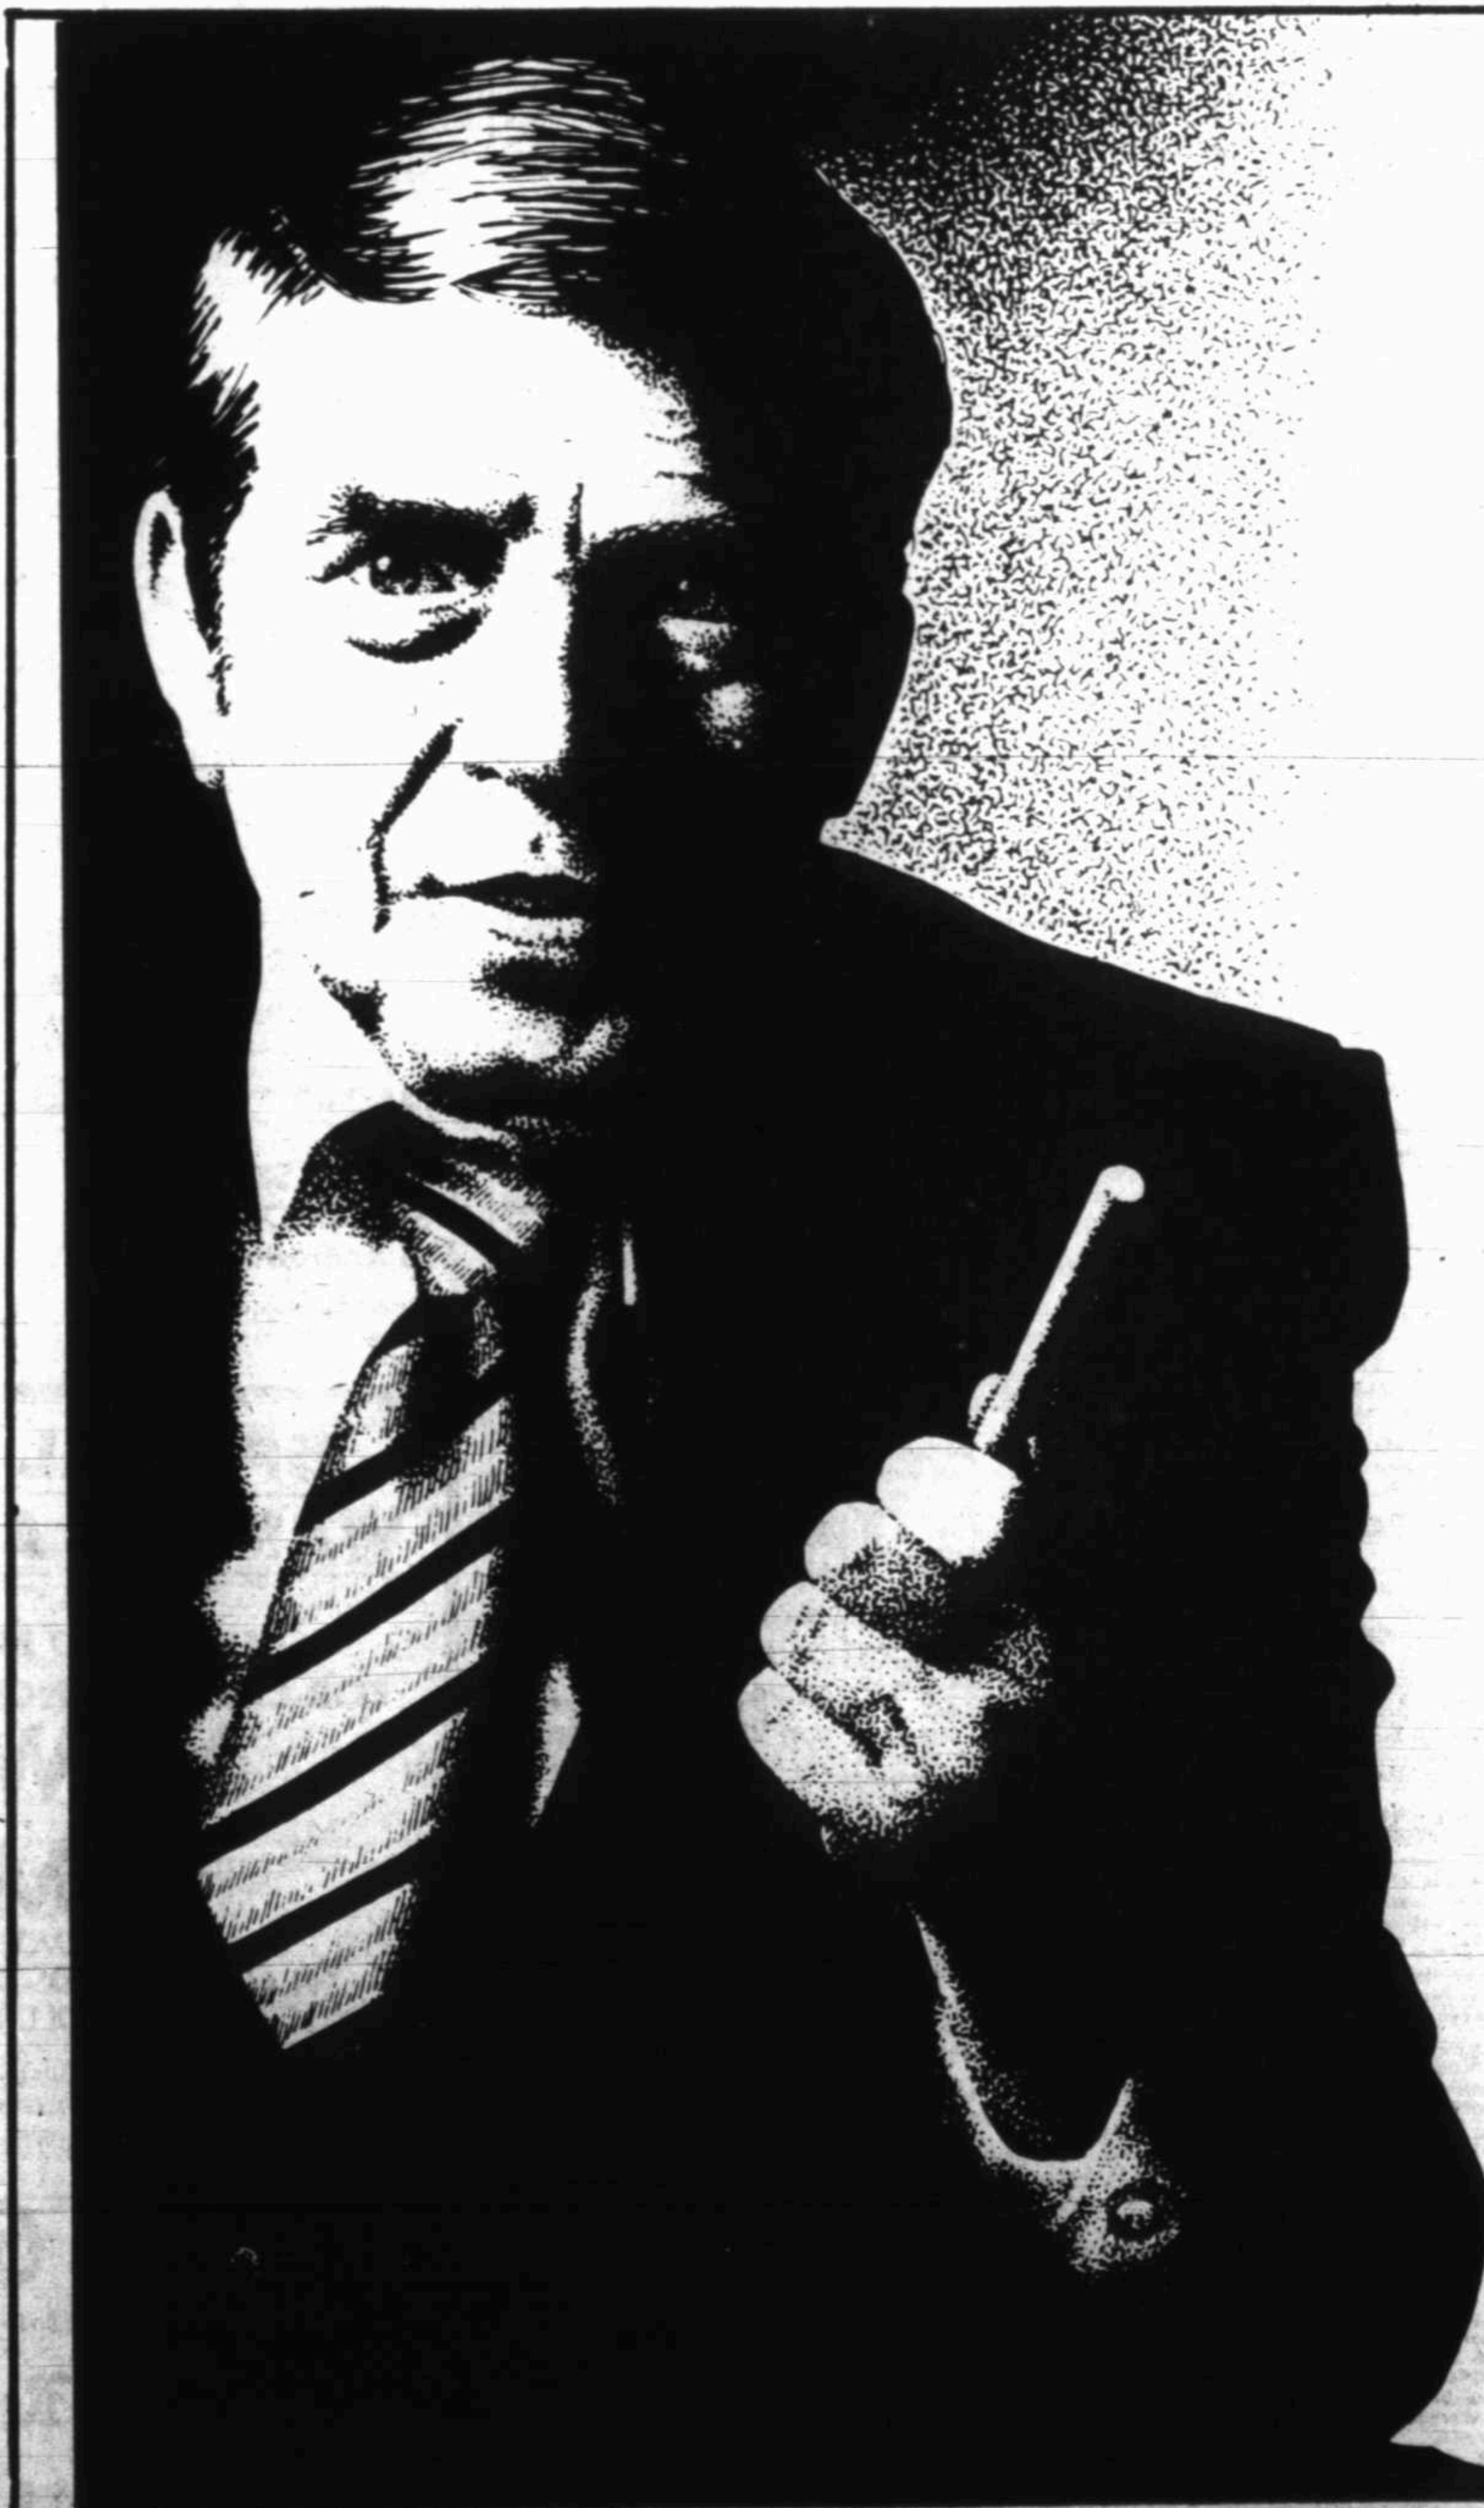

The divorce led to a custody battle for the Thatchers' three children. Thatcher was granted custody of his eldest son while JoAnn received custody of a second son and daughter.

Thatcher, son of former Saskatchewan Premier Ross Thatcher, resigned as provincial energy minister four days before his former wife's death. He remained a member of the Saskatchewan legislature.

Guerrillas hurt in shoot-out

LIMA (AP) — Police say civil guardsmen wounded two suspected members of a Maoist guerrilla group in a shoot-out in front of U.S. Ambassador David Jordan's residence.

The gunfire broke out when civil guards protecting the ambassador's home stopped two men in a red Datsun automobile for a documents check Sunday, police sources said.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

It's possible to work 'in'

Dear Dr. Solomon: I like to work out regularly but there are times when the weather is too bad to go outdoors. Would you have any suggestions for exercises that can be done indoors? — Jamie, Springfield, Ill.

Dear Jamie: Skipping or jumping rope is an inexpensive method of working out indoors. Using a stationary bicycle is another effective means of staying in shape.

Aerobic dancing, which seems to appeal primarily to women, is offered by a number of community centers. Just make certain that you sign up for one that is appropriate for your age and proficiency — beginner, intermediate, or advanced.

Dear Dr. Solomon: In one of your columns you wrote that if a child is in an accident and the spleen is injured, the doctors try to save the spleen because it helps prevent infection. Does the spleen also prevent infection in adults, and do doctors try to save it in adults the same way as they do for children? — Stewart, Salt Lake City, Utah.

Dear Stewart: The risk of infection following the loss of the spleen is increased in adults as well as in children, but apparently not to the same extent.

Preservation of the spleen in adults seems to be receiving increased attention. In one study of 36 adults who suffered injury to the spleen, 18 had surgery to repair it. None of the patients died and there were no complications. The researchers conclude that preservation of the spleen in adults should be attempted whenever possible.

Dear Dr. Solomon: There has been a lot of talk about some kinds of cancer running in families, and I suppose that means that it may be inherited. But is there any form of cancer that doctors can say with certainty is directly inherited? — Kim, San Antonio, Texas.

Dear Kim: A condition known as retinoblastoma may be inherited. If it is inherited, it generally occurs during early childhood. A non-inherited form of the disease usually occurs at a later age. Some kinds of breast cancer, colon cancer, and brain cancer are also believed to be inherited.

Other cancers, such as stomach cancer, seem to have a hereditary component. However, the fact that some cancers appear to run in families may simply mean that the family members are exposed to a common cause.

Most cancers are the product of both heredity and environmental factors. For example, an individual with a tendency to skin cancer may never develop the disease if he or she is careful to protect the skin through the use of appropriate clothing and sun screens.

For Ms. E.H., Bakersfield, Calif.: Heredity does play a part in the development of varicose veins. If both parents have the disorder, it is likely that their children will also have it.

Treatment of varicose veins ranges from counseling only to surgery.

Methodists toughen stand on abortion

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

BALTIMORE — The United Methodist Church has toughened its stand against abortion, condoning it only in cases of "tragic conflicts" between the life of the fetus and that of the mother.

The change, made by a small but significant linking of phrases in the church's Book of Discipline, came Monday at the quadrennial governing conference of the nation's second-largest Protestant body.

Many local congregations had petitioned the church for a firmer position on abortion. Representatives of the 9.4-million-member denomination earlier Monday voted down a motion to abandon the church's condemnation of homosexual practice.

The conference said homosexuals are "persons of sacred worth" entitled to human and civil rights and ministerial care, but "we do not condone the practice of homosexuality and consider this practice incompatible with Christian teaching."

In modifying the church's position on abortion, the Rev. Joseph C. Sprague of Marion, Ohio, called it a "very tactical movement of language" to qualify the previous support for the option of abortion.

"We are deeply committed to the sanctity of unborn human life," said Sprague, who headed the committee proposing the change. But there are "extreme situations where life conflicts with life and abortion is justified."

The change approved by the conferees says "our belief in the sanctity of unborn human life makes us reluctant to approve abortion," but "we are equally bound to respect" the mother's life.

The modified phrasing then adds that "we recognize tragic conflicts of life with life that may justify abortion, and in such cases support" that legal option.

Previously, the expression of support was not explicitly connected with the "tragic conflicts" situation.

Several delegates sought to add sharper objections to the growing number of abortion since the 1973 Supreme Court decision allowing it.

However, the delegates voted down any further changes.

Several other Protestant churches recently have stiffened their stands on abortion. The Southern Baptists, the nation's largest Protestant body, have come out firmly against it except in cases of rape, incest or to save the mother's life.

In other action Monday, the delegates ordered the use of sexually "inclusive language" about God in the development of Sunday school curricula, other teaching material and in guidance of ministerial candidates.

The conference advised dropping male pronouns such as "he" and "him" in references to God, with various scriptural names substituted, but avoiding terms that imply only male characteristics such as "king."

No words can actually "express the full majesty and mystery of the living God," the report said, adding that more inclusive imagery "can expand our understanding of God."

Amendments upholding the use of "Our Father" in the Lord's Prayer and baptizing in the traditional names of "Father, Son and Holy Spirit" also were approved by the delegates.

If you're worried about your old air conditioning system keeping your family cool next summer, think of Ruud instead.

No matter how large or small your home is, we have a Ruud Air Conditioning System that will do the job. And if inside space is a problem, we have self-contained models that work from outside your house. And we have different sized models to meet a variety of cooling requirements.

When you think of air conditioning, think of us. Ruud is air conditioning. Call us soon for a free estimate.
