School Trustees Study 'Conservative' Budget

By JEFF SOUTH
Avalanche-Journal Staff

SUPERINTENDENT Ed Irons says it's a conservative budget, and school trustees may be about to prove him right. They spent five hours Monday studying the $47.8 million fiscal plan — and deleting nothing.

School board president Charles Waters nevertheless said he has "high hopes" for a tax cut. He said his colleagues may "take steps in that direction" when they reconvene today for another work session.

Waters said he has "a few ideas" for trimming proposed expenditures. He said the school board simply may order Irons to reduce the budget by a fixed amount or percentage.

Tax Reduction Indicated
But even without such a slash, Irons' budget seems to hold promises for tax reduction. For one thing, it contains surpluses of $2.5 million in the general fund and $2.6 million in the debt-service account.

School trustees may decide to rebate some of this money to taxpayers via a tax cut. For every $1 million the "carryover balances" can be reduced, the school district's tax rate could be lowered eight cents from its present $1.58 per $100 valuation.

Bus Expenses Faced
A major increase in Irons' proposed budget is for implementation of the Lubbock Independent School District's court-ordered integration plan. For example, cost of bus operations is projected to increase from about $215,000 to about $275,000.

Part of this is offset, however, by a $90,000 reduction in school aide salaries (bus drivers will double as aides) and a $50,000 increase in state transportation funds.

Integration is by no means the only budget increase proposed for the coming year.

The proposed budget includes:
—Salary increases of about seven percent. Most of the pay raise (4.5 percent) would come from the state. Irons has suggested that local funds be used to supplement state funds another 2.5 percent.

—Twenty-two additional classroom teachers. This would allow the district to lower its pupil-teacher ratios to 24.5-to-1 at the elementary level and 21.8-to-1 at the secondary level. Also, the added personnel would enable the district to initiate ate eighth-grade reading programs at six junior high schools.

Additional Counselors
—Two additional counselors. With reorganization of present staff, the district will be able to place fulltime counselors in 13 elementary schools to aid children with learning disabilities.

Irons said the district's overall proposed budget increase amounts to 6.3 percent — much less than in previous years. He said this was accomplished by trimming personnel in such areas as special education aides.

State-set minimum salaries are being raised slightly. That fact, coupled with teachers' advancing a step on the experience ladder, will yield salary increases of $370 to about $700.

In addition to the state salaries, the

Begin Offers Sadat Sinai In 'Tradeoff' 'Not Single Grain Of Sand' Otherwise

JERUSALEM (AP) — Prime Minister Menachem Begin told parliament Monday that Israel will not give Egypt "a single grain of sand" in the occupied Sinai as a one-way peace gesture, but he would propose a tradeoff the next time the two countries sit down to bargain.

Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan, also speaking to parliament, gave the most specific statement yet of Israel's negotiating intent for the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, saying the Israelis are prepared eventually to negotiate sovereignty over the territories.

No-Confidence Motion
The two spoke in an often-chaotic, seven-hour foreign-policy debate that foreshadowed a rough session when the opposition Labor Party introduces a motion of no-confidence against Begin's government later this week.

Former Foreign Minister Yigal Alon voiced Labor's call to Begin: "Resign and return to serve your country in the opposition!"

Begin said in his speech, "I shall not do it. I was elected. The people gave me their support."

The legislators voted 68-37 along party lines to accept Dayan's foreign-policy report. Begin's comfortable parliamentary majority is also expected to defeat the no-confidence move.

"We want negotiations for a complete peace, treaties with all our neighbors," Begin said, "but if that is impossible because of our neighbors, we are prepared to discuss relations of peace."

Area-By-Area Peace
Begin said a tradeoff could lead to "peaceful relations in a certain area and then we could continue in other areas on a basis of mutuality."

The Cabinet on Sunday rejected Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's call for return to Egyptian control of two areas of the Sinai Peninsula — the town of El Arish and biblical Mount Sinai — as a goodwill gesture.

"We shall not give even a single grain of the sands of the Sinai desert as a gift," Begin told Parliament.

But he said Israel would have a "certain proposal," which he did not describe, for an exchange for El Arish and Mount Sinai. The Israeli press speculated Begin may propose Egyptian recognition of Israeli settlements and military airfields in Sinai in return for the two areas.

U.S. Proposes Talks
Egypt has refused past suggestions for temporary, partial or new interim agreements. Israel's next chance to raise the idea would come if Egypt agrees to an American proposal for talks next month at a U.S.-manned electronic warning post in the Sinai mountain passes.

The main obstacle to a Mideast peace is not Sinai, however, but the West Bank and Gaza Strip, areas Israel considers vital to her security.

Dayan said if Israel's proposal for limited self-rule for the Palestinian populations of those areas is accepted, "Israel is prepared ... to discuss after five years the question of the sovereignty over Judea and Samaria (the West Bank) and the Gaza Strip."

Previously Israel had said only that it would discuss "the nature of future relations" between Israel and the West Bank-Gaza. The liberal Haaretz newspaper took the new mention of sovereignty as an indication of "formulation flexibility" designed for American consumption as much as Egyptian.

Vance To Appear
Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance is expected in the Middle East in the first week of August. His roving mediator, Ambassador Alfred Atherton, already is shuttling among Mideast capitals, arriving in Beirut today.

Oklahomans To Search Mount Ararat For Ark

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Four Oklahomans, led by a grade school principal and Baptist minister, left Oklahoma City Monday in search of Noah's Ark.

Pat Frost of Kingfisher, the principal and preacher, said he is convinced his group will find the Biblical boat on which Noah and his animals, according to the Book of Genesis, spent 40 days and 40 nights.

"I'm just 100 percent convinced that the ark of Noah is there and that we will find it," Frost said. "Since 1950 there have been 186 actual sightings and we believe the conditions are right so that we'll find it this time."

Frost believes the ark has been buried under several hundred feet of ice at the 14,000-foot level of Mount Ararat in Turkey. He said the "conditions" he mentioned included warm enough weather to melt some of the ice covering the ark.

From time to time, Frost said, the ice melts and part of the ark is exposed, leading to the reported sightings.

"We'll be taking along a movie camera, and we're going to film it inside and out," Frost added.

Accompanying Frost on the trip are Earl Hall, a YMCA official from Enid; Bobby Jones, a Muskogee plumber, and Ernest Cooper, a Muskogee farmer. They plan to use two Turkish residents as guides.

The four have $12,000 saved up for the trip. Frost said his group plans to start climbing the 17,000-foot mountain July 27 and remain there for "seven, eight, nine days — whatever."

Indicted Lamesa JP Suspended From Office Without Pay

By PAT TEAGUE

Avalanche-Journal Staff

EMBATTLED Richard Don Nelson, Dawson County's 33-year-old justice of the peace, has been suspended from office without pay by the State Commission on Judicial Conduct.

On July 13 a Dawson County grand jury returned four indictments against the Lamesa justice who is scheduled to begin his second term in office in January.

Nelson was indicted on one count of misapplication of public funds and three counts of burglary.

Free On $8,000 Bond
Currently free after posting $8,000 in total bonds, Nelson was arrested June 28 in connection with the alleged theft of more than $5,000 worth of merchandise from Amos Supply, a general purpose store in Lamesa.

The indictments allege that Nelson burglarized the store twice, on April 20 and again on June 27. He also is charged with the June 27 burglary of the Dick Amos residence.

A fourth indictment was brought against Nelson for allegedly misapplying March 16 "a thing of value belonging to the government...public funds, to wit, U.S. currency that had come into his possession by virtue of his employment."

County auditor Donald H. Stephens has confiscated Nelson's books and records and is conducting a ticket by ticket audit, with the assistance of the firm of Matthews and Mathews.

No Appeal Available
Maurice Pipkin, director of the State Commission on Judicial Conduct, said from Brownsville Monday he knew of no appeal open to Nelson, who will remain suspended without pay pending the outcome of criminal proceedings.

Pipkin said the commission is "empowered" by the state constitution to take such action and the statute "doesn't provide for any appeal. We simply employ the tools of our trade," he said.

He noted that the action against Nelson is the "first time we've employed that particular sanction."

On Nov. 8 last year the commission was given the authority to "suspend with or without pay any state judge indicted in state or federal court pending the outcome of those indictments."

If acquitted of the charges against him, Nelson would be eligible to collect back pay, Pipkin said.

The commission, made up of two district judges, two appellate judges, two lawyers and four laymen, meets in closed session in Austin.

Storms Roll Over Part Of Region

By ESTHER LONGORIA
Avalanche-Journal Staff

ISOLATED thundershowers rolled across southern portions of the area late Monday bringing just a touch of soothing relief to heat-weary South Plains residents.

Skies should be partly cloudy today with a high temperature in the low 90s and a low overnight near 68. Winds are expected to be southwesterly 10 to 15 mph.

Areas Barely Dampened

According to area weather watchers, Monday's pleasant showers barely dampened the region. Observers in Jayton, Brownfield, Seagraves, Denver City, Welch, Plains and Post said grounds remain parched.

However, an observer in Tahoka said a trace of rain had fallen in the county Monday.

The National Weather Service Monday reported the heaviest activity in Yoakum County, northeast of Plains; in Terry County, southeast of Brownfield; and in Kent County near Jayton.

Showers Move Westward

However, by 8:35 p.m. Monday, most of the spotty showers had moved westward, and the NWS reported only two thundershowers on the South Plains — one just to the north of Levelland and another northeast of Denver City.

Precipitation from the scattered showers was predicted to be a quarter of an inch or less.

Although some sections of the South Plains received moisture Monday, Lubbock was not so lucky as it remained dry and warm under partly skies.

Seventy-degree temperatures cooled heat-weary Lubbockites Monday morning, but by afternoon the heat was once again making its presence known as the mercury climbed to the mid 80s.

No precipitation is expected for the area through Saturday as high pressure builds to bring warm, dry weather to the South Plains.

The extended outlook for West Texas through Saturday calls for fair skies with highs near 90 and lows in the upper 60s.

Scattered showers also fell on other portions of the state late Monday and most of the activity was confined to South Texas and the coastal sections; rainfall amounts were generally light.

Wichita Falls and Laredo Monday shared the state's high temperature at 98 degrees.

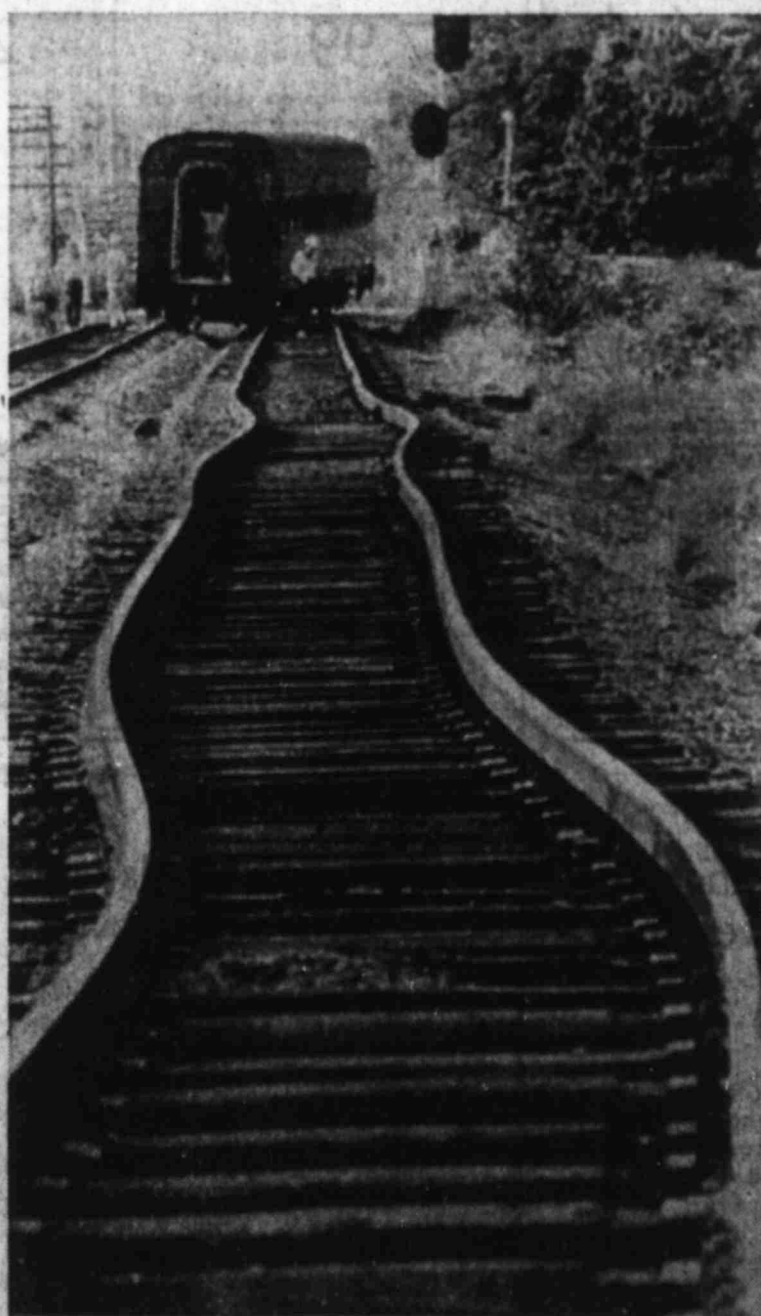

Building Collapse In Cairo Kills 42

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — A five-story apartment building in one of Cairo's teeming central slums collapsed Monday, knocking down parts of two adjacent buildings and killing at least 42 persons, officials said.

Fourteen people were hospitalized, officials reported. But scores of rescue workers searched through the rubble for more victims as bulldozers and trucks cleared away the debris. Officials at the scene said the casualty count was expected to grow.

City officials had designated the building for demolition three months ago, but residents would not leave. They are believed to have resisted eviction orders because low-rent apartments are scarce and they had nowhere else to go.

Police said 50 persons lived in the building, but unofficial estimates put the number at more than 100. Witnesses said the brick apartment house collapsed about 6 a.m. while most residents were in bed.

HEAT BUCKLES TRACKS—Extreme heat Sunday caused these railroad tracks near Asbury Park, N.J., to buckle, resulting in the derailment of the passenger car in the background. Temperatures rose into the 90s along Conrail's north Jersey coastline at Spring Lake Heights. (AP Laserphoto)

Senate Okays Extension Of Plan To Aid Elderly

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate on Monday approved a $2 billion two-year extension of a program for elderly Americans that includes more meals-on-wheels for shut-ins and part-time jobs for those

Steakhouse Slayings Re-Enacted

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — The events surrounding the slaying of six employees of a steakhouse were re-enacted late Sunday, exactly one week after their bodies were found in a meat locker.

Police Chief Tom Heggy said the re-enactment by customers and employees of the restaurant was staged at 11 p.m. Sunday, the time the slayings were discovered a week earlier.

"We had tried hypnosis and gotten some additional good information that way, and set up the re-enactment last night with a similar purpose in mind," Heggy said.

"We didn't get all that much, but there were some small details that witnesses remembered and we are trying to piece them together," the chief said.

Among those participating in the re-enactment were Mike Click, the restaurant manager who discovered the bodies; several teen-age friends of the victims and some people who drove by the building and saw cars.

"We tried to set everything up just like it was a week ago when the people were killed out there, and then run through the events step by step, letting the witnesses tell us what they had seen and what they thought had happened," Heggy said.

The chief also said a public plea issued last Thursday for a "mystery witness" to come forward under guarantee of protection and collection of reward money has failed to generate hoped-for results.

A police spokesman said, meanwhile, that although the possibility can't be ruled out at present, there are "no obvious links" between the mass slayings of the steakhouse employees and the killings of a Texas family in southern Oklahoma June 22.

Diabetes Group Plans 'Roast' Of Dirk West

After years of lampooning Lubbockites, their football teams and alma maters, through his cartoon characters, Lubbock's Mayor-Cartoonist Dirk West is scheduled to be on the receiving end when the Lubbock Chapter of the American Diabetes Association sponsors a Dirk West Roast next month.

The roast is set for Monday, August 14, at 8 p.m. at the Cold Water Country building.

A group of Lubbock citizens will take over the task of "roasting" the mayor. Cost for the evening, which includes the Roast, dinner, champagne and a dance, is $50 per couple with the Diabetes Association sharing in the proceeds.

Roastmaster for the event will be Bill McAlister. Also on the program will be Carolyn Jordan, Carroll McDonald, Jay McClure, Jim Sexton, and David Virak, each roasting and toasting the mayor. Roy Bass and Jay Harris also are scheduled to add their comments, Leslie Thurman, Miss Lubbock, and Janis Geddes, will provide special music. Don Caldwell's orchestra will play for the dance.

Tickets are available, the sponsors announced, at the Cold Water VIP room, Malouf's downtown store and Hemphill-Wells South Plains Mall location.

JET FIGHTER CRASHES
MOENCHENGLADBACH, West Germany (AP) — A British jet fighter crashed in this suburb of the central German city of Beverungen today and hit a building, killing both crew members, and police said two children also may have died. "The Phantom was assigned to 92 Squadron based at RAF Wildenrath base," a spokesman for the British Army on the Rhine said. "It crashed at 9:32 a.m. local (4:32 a.m. EDT) and both crew members were killed." He declined to identify the two flyers pending notification of next of kin.

needing employment.

The vote was 82-2, despite a warning from HEW Secretary Joseph A. Califano Jr. that $225 million especially earmarked for meals for the homebound elderly is an "unacceptable increase" in the federal budget.

The vote to increase the meal-on-wheels financing was 59 to 29.

The bill now goes to conference to iron out differences with the House-passed version.

The Senate legislation authorizes $475 million in fiscal year 1979 and $545 million in fiscal 1980 for all nutritional meals for the elderly and the handicapped. This includes meals served directly to the shut-ins at home and to those at group centers, such as churches or community centers.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., who lead the fight to increase the nutritional program, said his amendment would finance 215,000 meals daily to elderly shut-ins during fiscal 1979 and 258,000 in 1980.

Currently, he said, 72,000 meals are being served daily to the homebound.

"There are from three to four million people who have a need for meals-on-wheels," said Kennedy. Unless more federal money is directed into this area, he added, some of those elderly might be forced into nursing homes.

But Sen. Tom Eagleton, D-Mo., agreeing with Califano, argued, "We would like to spend more money on the elderly. We don't want to seem callous. But there are limits to the budget."

The bill would appropriate $650 million to provide 64,157 jobs in fiscal year 1979 and 70,807 jobs in fiscal 1980. Most of the slots will be in community services.

The Senate adopted an amendment by Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., to spend 1 percent of the new money on getting parttime jobs for the elderly in the private sector.

Other programs funded though grants to states would include transportation, legal and home health services.

The bill also authorizes a White House Conference on Aging in 1981 to focus on the problems which the elderly face.

Union Chief Pleads Innocent

NEW YORK (AP) — Saying the prosecution's case will "not hold water," the head of the United Paperworkers International Union pleaded innocent Monday to charges he embezzled $360,000 from his union and used some of it to try to derail a federal probe.

"When our day in court comes, our innocence will be proven," said Joseph Tonelli, in a statement issued jointly with union treasurer Henry Segal after the two pleaded innocent to the charges in U.S. District Court in Brooklyn on Monday.

"We are not guilty of any wrongdoing and look forward to our day of vindication. Meanwhile, the work of the union will go forward," the statement said.

Two others, Joseph Yglesias, a union representative, and George Carroll, an aide to New York Assembly Speaker Stanley Steingut, pleaded innocent with Tonelli and Segal to the charges of diverting union money and trying to divert a grand jury inquiry into the embezzlement.

A fifth defendant, Anthony Loiacono, vice president of the union's Local 318, was scheduled to enter a plea later Monday.

Because prosecutors said they expect to call Yglesias as a witness during Tonelli's trial, U.S. District Judge Jack Weinstein scheduled trial for Yglesias on Oct. 4, one month earlier than the Nov. 6 date set for Tonelli, Segal and Carroll.

A federal grand jury in Brooklyn last week charged that Tonelli and Segal hired two Atlanta lawyers, both described as personal friends of U.S. Attorney General Griffin Bell, to intervene with officials of the Justice Department on their behalf. One of the two attorneys had been named to the Georgia Court of Appeals by then-Gov. Jimmy Carter.

The grand jury charged that Tonelli and Segal sought to sidetrack a grand jury inquiry into the diversion of some $360,000 in union money to them and to Carroll, Loiacono and Yglesias.

Tonelli, 70, is currently serving his ninth term as president of the 300,000-member paperworkers union. He is a vice president of the AFL-CIO's International Executive Council and has been a friend of popes, presidents and governors.

AN EDITORIAL:

Summit Ghosts Haunt Carter

THE DANGERS inherent in widely-heralded summit meetings came home to haunt President Carter and some of his aides the past week.

On the eve of the Bonn conference on economic affairs, much ado was made of the fact that the President would be going to the meeting, armed with progress on a comprehensive energy program and other means of fighting inflation in the U.S.

In turn, the President was to exact some concessions from the West Germans and Japanese, primarily an agreement to allow somewhat faster growth in their own economies.

ON THE WAY to the conference, some very unfunny things happened.

Sec. of State Vance was to meet with Russian Amb. Andrei Gromyko for a session on getting SALT talks off dead center. In Moscow, the Russians were drawing the curtain on trials of two dissidents.

And in the wings, the always talkative U.S. Amb. to the UN Andrew Young was telling a Paris newspaper that really there wasn't all that much difference, apparently, between us and Russia. We also had "political prisoners" by the hundreds in American jails.

Meanwhile, back in Congress, efforts to push through a portion of Mr. Carter's energy package ran into problems and were delayed.

AN EDITORIAL:

Whoever Saves May Lose It

WHETHER THE fact Americans are saving more of their disposable personal income so far this year is good news depends very much upon what lies a short piece down the economic road.

As The Conference Board analyzes the current situation in a report released this week, increased savings are a sign not of increased prosperity, but of public concern over continuing inflation and what it could lead to.

CB debunks as "a fallacy" the theory that rising prices spur the public to heavier buying in desperate hopes of beating even higher prices to come.

"THE VAST majority of households hunker down, seeking to offset erosion of real income by curbing spending and salting away as much as they can as a hedge against economic uncertainty," CB contends.

"But more savings mean less spending on consumer goods, and a consequent depressing effect on the retail sector of the economy."

That effect, thinly disguised by inflation, already is apparent. For example, government figures show supermarket sales for the first half of this year up 9 percent over 1977, but with virtually the entire increase attrib-

AT THE CONFERENCE itself, Mr. Carter fared somewhat better. After a well-publicized trip to West Berlin, the President and leaders of West Germany, France, Britain and Japan got down to business.

When it was all over, Mr. Carter claimed that he had gained concessions from the Germans and Japan to help make things easier on the U.S. He in turn pledged to push his energy legislation and use his executive powers to cut down on foreign oil imports, at the same time seeking to raise domestic oil and gas prices to world levels in the early 1980s.

IT ALL SOUNDED impressive, and to the point that there was a very general agreement, it was. However, the truth of the matter is that no major deals were made, no concrete and binding arrangements signed.

In the final analysis, what Mr. Carter, Congress and the American people do will say much more to the other Free World nations than what we say. Too, leaders of the other Big Four know that in the U.S. it is Congress which will have the final say on most of the things the President pledged.

In brief, while dealing from a position of strength as head of the world's most viable democracy, the fact that he thus far has been unable to "put it all together" back home left the President in a precarious—if not at times embarrassing—position despite the hoopla attendant to the summit session.

The sales picture is better in a few areas—most notably autos and department stores. But overall, retailers are getting less of consumers' disposable income this year, i.e., 53 percent compared to 54 percent in 1977, and that is even before adjustment for inflated dollars.

Consumer caution is one more contribution to an uneasiness that is spreading among economists. Few are yet predicting a full-fledged recession.

But few also see much prospect of preventing economic growth from slowing and inflation from accelerating in the year ahead.

ONE PREDICTION, from The Conference Board again, sees the gross national product after adjustment for inflation rising only 3.3 percent next year, down from this year's 3.8 percent.

Prices, meanwhile, are expected to rise by 6.7 percent, edging up from this year's 6.6 percent inflationary rate.

The word from Washington is that the administration is now focusing on inflation, rather than unemployment, as the top economic problem. And not a fraction of a percentage point too soon.

ART BUCHWALD:

Uhh, Is This The Party To Whom I'm Speaking

MARTHA'S VINEYARD, Mass.—What I did on my summer vacation:

I was a telephone answering service. Only people who have children between the ages of 14 and 30 will appreciate what an important function I performed.

I always started after dinner as soon as my daughter Jennifer asked, "Can I use the car?"

"WHAT TIME will you be back?" I asked.

"Not late. If Debbie calls tell her I went with Tony over to Mike's, and if she doesn't get us there we'll be at David Crohan's Bar in Oak Bluffs."

"I gotcha," I said, writing it down.

Half an hour later the phone rang. "Is Jenny there?"

"Is this Debbie?" I asked.

"No, it's Sarah. And she was supposed to meet me at the Cafe du Port in Vineyard Haven," she said.

"Well, she went with Tony over to Mike's."

"Which Mike?"

"She didn't say which Mike. Is there more than one?"

"There are three. If she calls back tell her I went to the party at Ben's."

"The party at Ben's. I've got it."

FIFTEEN MINUTES later the phone rang again. It was Ben who wanted to tell Jenny about the party.

I explained that she was with Tony at Mike's, but was going to David Crohan's Bar.

"Well, if Angel calls," Ben said, "Tell him I need ice and wine."

"Why would Angel call?" I asked.

"To find out where Tony went."

"I gotcha," I said, writing it down. "Tell Jenny about your party and Angel about bringing ice and wine. Do you have any message for Debbie?"

"Who's Debbie?" Ben asked.

"I DON'T KNOW, but she's supposed to call Jenny and I'm to tell her she's with Tony and they went over to Mike's and then they're going to David Crohan's Bar."

"Well, don't tell Debbie about the party because I don't know how many people will be with her."

"My lips are sealed," I promised.

I got into a hot tub when the phone rang again.

The party on the other end asked for Jenny.

"Who's calling?"

"Gordon Manning."

"You can find her at Mike's, David Crohan's Bar or Ben's party, depending how lucky you are."

"I'm calling from New Hampshire."

"That's too bad. There're lots of great things going on here," I told him.

"WELL, WILL YOU tell Jenny I'm coming down on Tuesday and ask her to leave my beach pass with Ellen in Edgartown? But tell her not to tell Betsy I'm coming. You got that?"

"Of course I've got it. You think I'm a dummy? Listen, I have to get off the phone because I'm expecting a call from either Debbie or Angel or the police in Chilmark depending on how lucky I am."

I started to worry about why Debbie or Angel hadn't called. I was watching Johnny Carson when the phone rang again.

It was Jenny. "We didn't go to David Crohan's. We're at the Phillip's in Lambert's Cove."

"Now you tell me," I said angrily.

"Everybody's trying to find you with the exception of Debbie, who never called."

"SHE'S WITH US," Jenny replied.

"And where the hell's Angel?" I wanted to know.

"He went back to Boston."

"Do you realize Ben was counting on him to bring the ice and wine to his party? Why didn't you call me?"

"I couldn't get to a phone. Who else called?"

"Naval headquarters. They told me to tell you to report back to your ship immediately."

"Dad, are you drunk?"

"Not yet, but by the time you get home I will be."

ROWLAND EVANS & ROBERT NOVAK:

Piper Pay Pinches

WASHINGTON—A fatal flaw in President Carter's energy program was revealed last month in Denver when a federal bureaucrat halted construction of two coal-fired power plants, badly needed in the Pacific Northwest, because they violated the purest air standards on an Indian reservation.

Alan Merson, regional administrator for the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), refused to issue a long-pending construction permit for Colstrip Plants 3 and 4 in Montana.

The reason: Merson's computer model predicted that, thanks to changes in wind, the power plants would on "numerous" occasions violate the high standard of air quality established for the nearby Northern Cheyenne Indian Reservation.

Unless overruled by federal court, this one decision wipes out a $1.4 billion complex intended to triple the power output for Montana, Washington and Oregon.

HENRY J. TAYLOR:

Cash But No Check

PRESIDENT CARTER spends our taxpayers' money like daisies—"Love me, love my car"—as if there were no bottom to the barrel. He does so behind the scenes. But where is the money coming from?

Kings always controlled the money. While they had the money, they had the country. The Romans felt that a tributum, a tax, was only for slaves to pay and unbecoming to free men.

Augustus Caesar was annoyed that he had no constitutional right to tax Italy or manipulate the moneybags. Frustrated and outraged by this, he reportedly trapped the opposing senators in a log and hacked them to pieces. Augustus seized control of Rome's treasury.

WHEN JULIUS Caesar crossed Rubicon and captured Rome, the first thing he took was the money.

Short, swarthy, pocked-faced barbarian Attila, king of the Huns, fought Sept. 21, 451 A.D. at Chalons, France, the bloodiest battle in the whole annals of mankind. On that single day more than 200,000 men were killed. For 20 years Attila ruled from Russia's Caspian Sea to the Rhine. He seized each treasury—and took the money.

Charlemagne, king of the Franks, conquered nearly all Western Europe. Each country had a treasury and Charlemagne seized each treasury and ended up controlling the money.

Norsemen from the Baltic, carrying their boats from river to river, descended south through all of Russia. They attacked Constantinople and the advance column headed straight for the Ottoman treasury.

FINALLY, ALONG came the American colonies. We intend to be a free and independent people here. But said Alexander Hamilton looking over his shoulder at British King George III: "Whoever controls the peoples' substance controls their lives."

Thus our Congress, not President Carter or any president, was entrusted the authority to decide taxation and how the revenue from taxpayers should be spent.

SOME PRESIDENTIAL blank-check authority is needed. But much is not. To save himself, President Carter should resist such loose responsibility.

His own wisdom should warn him that the American people face profound dangers whenever incredible sums pass into the unfettered control of any man.

This highly personal approach to the taxpayers' money tempts human nature too far.

It is not only politically dangerous, but morally destructive to President Carter and to the American people.

More—much more—of the people's earnings and substance must be returned to other control.

This is not a partisan question. Personalities, including the President's personality, are not involved.

The principle is a basic token of American government as fundamental as the Great Seal of the United States. We have created a sovereign-like power in our land.

ENERGY DEPARTMENT officials in Washington agree with utility executives that this poses a severe power crisis for the Pacific Northwest by the mid-1980s.

But Secretary of Energy James Schlesinger is powerless to prevent this.

He is hamstrung by a combination of overly restrictive environmental laws passed by Congress and overly restrictive environmental bureaucrats appointed by the President.

Nor has Carter exerted himself to control the regulatory process.

Yet it is making a mockery of his avowed program of using coal and nuclear reactors as substitutes for imported oil.

Utility executives plead they simply cannot get past the EPA and the Clean Air Act to build coal-fired plants.

EVEN WORSE IS the way arcane licensing regulations block nuclear power, most recently in the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) decision to halt construction of the Seabrook, N.H., reactor.

The Colstrip decision is a classic. It suggests the legal-bureaucratic labyrinth through which American businessmen must walk, quite often without reaching their goal.

The six power companies cooperating in the venture had argued that because two new plants were integrated with existing Colstrip Plants 1 and 2, they needed no new federal permit—an argument supported by a federal district judge.

EPA disagreed, appealed the ruling, and in the meantime ordered the utilities to apply for permits.

Montana state approval, meanwhile, was granted after lengthy proceedings.

In June 1976, just one month before the utilities filed for the federal permit, the Northern Cheyenne Indian Reservation's tribal council asked for a Class I air purity designation—cleaner than city dwellers ever dream about.

EPA set aside the power plant application until it could study the Indians' proposal. It was approved last August, upgrading the previous Class II designation that would have proved no problem for the power plants.

EPA HEARINGS centered around rival computer studies about how many air purity violations could occur.

At one point, a permit acceptance was officially stamped but could not be signed by administrator Merson. His final decision June 12 refused permission.

Merson dismissed computer studies by Montana Power Co. showing there would be no more than four clean air violations in five years, citing rival studies predicting "numerous" violations.

While "mindful of (the) importance and widespread support for the plants," Merson showed where his priorities lie: "The inescapable fact is those units would violate air quality on the (Indian) reservation."

"It is 100 percent political," one utility executive told us. "There is a conspiracy against the power companies to bring the nation to its knees."

"By worrying about how the wind blows three or four times a year, the Northwest will be crippled by the mid 1980s."

WITHOUT SUBSCRIBING to any conspiracy theory, a high Energy Department official said of this EPA ruling:

"The people of the Northwest are going to have to pay the piper in 15 years." That view is fully shared by one politically influential Northwesterner: Sen. Henry M. Jackson of Washington, chairman of the Senate Energy Committee.

Scoop Jackson has never worked harder than this past year in his uphill climb for an energy bill containing a modest element of conservation.

But he has always been troubled about the lack of emphasis on new energy sources, especially coal and nuclear, that he knows must accompany conservation.

What the EPA bureaucrat did in Denver only deepens Jackson's gloom.

The Brighter Side

VIRGINIA PAYETTE:

Bleep It To Me...

NOW THAT THE fuss has died down and the Supreme Court has banned those "seven dirty words" from the networks, I have a confession to make: I don't know seven dirty words. Well, that's not exactly true.

I suppose I do know seven that I consider objectionable enough not to use in what my mother used to call "polite society." But I don't know WHICH seven words the Supreme Court justices found so obscene they were forthwith, by Constitutional decree, to be banned from general broadcasting on radio and television.

SURE, I CAN THINK of three or four, the same tired, old, garden-variety ones you hear whenever you venture into the movies or the theater or the ice cream parlor where the high-school kids hang out.

And I suppose the list includes the dreary, four-letter variety that's sprinkled across the pages of all the latest novels. But that doesn't count up to seven. The Anglo-Saxon scholars were some help.

They've been having fun titillating us with what they call "the Latinate synonyms" of the banned seven, and I recognized some of them, all right. I had to look up "micturition," though. And even Webster's didn't clue me in on what an "incestuous male issue" might be.

IT'S NOT THAT I'M prudish about frank intercourse (the talking kind) or that I've never been exposed to some pretty salty language in my time. Spend enough years in the city room of a metropolitan newspaper and you hear plenty.

I even picked up one of the choicer ones the year I was a den mother for a Cub Scout troop. That was one set of seven-year-olds who were clean only in thought and deed.

Not only that, I did my time as the mother of a teen-ager boy, and that's supposed to cover just about anything. The only trouble is teen-agers lack any vestige of originality in their attempts at obscenity. They tend to use the same old words over and over, with the result that an eavesdropping adult hardly ever gets to learn anything new.

Besides, all that was 10 years ago, when some of those words were still considered unspeakable in front of the old lady.

THINGS HAVE CHANGED some since then. I have been known to give a grandmotherly gulp when one of the little ladies repeats a word she's picked up from the big kids on the school bus.

Even the sandbox set is on to the new frankness. The two-year-old in our backyard has started to experiment with a few choice ones, and I would like to be able to report that she uses them in all innocence, guilelessly repeating what she hears from the boys on the jungle gym. But I can't.

The truth is, she uses those words with the precise aplomb of a Marine sergeant, and we are busily working on "Oh, my gosh" as an acceptable substitute.

DISTRESSING AS ALL this is, it's not very educational. Because when it comes to swearing, her range of sophistication falls way short of the dirty seven.

And her older sisters, who are momentarily fascinated with the medical definition for various bodily parts, know better than to drop an Anglo-Saxon goodie into any general family discussion.

The accepted wisdom, in crises like this, is to exert a certain amount of parental deafness. When that doesn't work, what you do is sit the culprit down and explain what those four-letter favorites really mean in plain English.

At least that's what the kid shrinks were telling us in my child-guidance period, back there when I was struggling to mold a big-mouthed Cub Scout into a "responsible member of society."

SO I BACKED HIM into a corner and translated his forbidden vocabulary (all three words of it) into the everyday bodily functions it described. He was crestfallen. "That," he said in disgust, "is dumb."

Precisely, says I smugly, figuring I'd handled that problem neatly. He didn't use those words again for four days. Now he's a man of the world, and I bet anything he could rattle off those seven offending words without blinking. But it's not exactly the kind of thing a mother can ask her son, now, is it?

I did ask Old Dad. He didn't know either. (At least he SAID he didn't.) So I guess I'll have to languish in middle-aged ignorance.

BUT I CAN TELL you one thing: There are a couple of words I wish the Supreme Court, in its infinite wisdom of things obscene, would ban from radio, TV, movies, books and all general conversation. They are:

"Y'know" and "like." As in, "Like, y'know, he was like far out, y'know?"

Given a daily diet of that, I think I'd prefer those naughty Anglo-Saxonisms. Whatever they are.

Joe Robbins Back In County Republican Fold

By SYLVIA TEAGUE
Avalanche-Journal Staff

A Grand Canyon-sized chasm between District 75-A State Rep. Joe Robbins and Lubbock County Republicans appears to have been bridged.

After asking Robbins less than a year ago not to run again as a Republican, the

Doctorate Marks Tech Milestone

The College of Business Administration at Texas Tech University has marked a milestone with the school's 100th Doctor of Business Administration degree being awarded to Rajesh (Tony) Kakar.

The first D.B.A. was awarded at Texas Tech in 1968. Approximately 10 degrees each year have been presented since then.

Kakar's degree was in business statistics with minors in accounting and production management. He has accepted a faculty position at Arizona State University and will begin teaching management science and statistics there this summer.

While at Texas Tech he taught courses in the College of Business. He also worked as a research assistant in the department of agricultural sciences, where he was a computer consultant.

Kakar received the master's degree from the University of Delhi in 1972, and the master's of science in statistics from Texas Tech in 1976.

county Republican executive committee recently passed a resolution supporting the full slate of GOP candidates "without exception."

Robbins is the Republican candidate for state senate and will face E.L. Short in the general election.

The resolution passed by the executive committee is directed at publicity surrounding Robbins' problems with the executive committee, as well as at rumors that former Republican gubernatorial candidate Jim Granberry will replace Robbins as the state senate candidate.

Last September local Republicans became distressed with Robbins' announcement that he was drafting legislation to create a state income tax. Party embarrassment over Robbins' arrest for public drunkenness in Austin in 1976 and Robbins' seemingly pro-Equal Rights Amendment stance rubbed salt in the party's wound.

The executive committee issued a statement saying Robbins' views on a state income tax "are not the views of the Lubbock County GOP" and encouraged the television broadcaster "not to run as a Republican in the next election."

However, since that lines of communication have been opened between Robbins and local Republicans and the state representative has become more responsive to his party's philosophy.

The executive committee, composed of all county precinct chairmen, has a somewhat different membership now than the executive committee which censured Robbins last fall.

Bill Deal voted with the rest of the committee to disavow Robbins, but he was a strong supporter of the resolution passed recently backing all GOP candidates.

Why the change of heart?

Deal compared Robbins' censure to disciplining an employee. "It doesn't mean you can't change your mind," he said.

Just as an employee is corrected, then he begins doing what the employer wants, Robbins has begun representing the Republican Party, Deal said.

"Joe realizes he was wrong," he said, adding the move to censure the legislator "got the point across."

"It was the right thing to do at the time," Deal said. "The executive committee felt it had to make Joe responsible to what we stand for."

Deal said Robbins is "doing a very responsible job in Austin" and said the party is communicating with Robbins better than at the time of the disavowal.

The "vast majority" of Lubbock County Republicans will support the entire slate of GOP candidates, including Robbins, Deal predicted. However, he admitted there remains a minority which is "opposed to Joe's election."

Deal said another reason for the committee's resolution of support is "talk around that Joe is just filling a spot on the ballot for Jim Granberry."

"That's not true," Deal said. "Granberry was one of the most vocal spokesmen for the resolution."

"Granberry had the opportunity to run and he didn't," Deal said.

County GOP Chairman Ruth Schiermeyer said the resolution "shows the party's strong, united support behind all candidates."

"Joe is very strongly working with us and we're very strongly working with him," she said.

"He's making an effort to represent the feelings of the party."

The resolution supports "the outstanding slate of Republican candidates in the November elections" and states the GOP candidates "more accurately reflects the conservative mood of our citizens than do the liberal beliefs of their Democrat opponents."

FRAUD TRIAL SWITCHED
BOSTON (AP) — Alan Abrahams, accused of bilking investors dealing with his now-defunct commodities firm, Lloyd Carr Co., will go on trial in San Antonio on a charge of lying to a Boston judge. U.S. District Court Judge Andrew A. Caffrey ordered the trial of the former commodities options dealer switched from Boston to San Antonio because "sensational" publicity in the press has "made it impossible for Abrahams to receive a fair trial anywhere" in the Northeast. No date was set for a hearing.

Police Officers Become Targets In Two City Assault Incidents

Attempts at moderating a civil dispute Monday went out the window as one Lubbock policeman became the target instead of the investigator of a city man's fury.

In one of two attacks on police officers Monday, a city lawyer said he was investigating a domestic disturbance in the 6300-block of 25th Street when a man pulled a knife and began waving the weapon at him.

The incident began about 4:05 p.m. when a 24th Street resident told police the knife-wielding man had her furniture inside his home and had threatened to "kill the first person that came through that door."

On investigating, the man told the officer he had bought the furniture from the woman but had not been given a receipt or bill of sale. When the officer told him to contact a lawyer, he said, the man indicated he wouldn't give up "without a fight" and pulled the knife from his pocket.

After a 15-minute standoff in which the officer drew his revolver, the man finally dropped the knife and was arrested for aggravated assault on a police officer.

But, earlier Monday, another city policeman didn't get away from his harrowing experience as easily.

Just after midnight, police said, the officer patrolling the 700-block of East Broadway noticed a brown 1969 Cadillac without a proper inspection sticker.

The officer said he pulled the vehicle over and asked the 41-year-old woman driver for her driver's license. Reports indicate the woman presented the requested material but pulled it back before the officer could get her license number.

When he asked again, and she refused to give him the license, the officer said he told her he would have to arrest her for failure to identify herself.

With that, he said, she became enraged and kicked him in the groin.

After a short struggle to get the woman handcuffed that eventually required the aid of another officer, the policeman said a nearby store owner came to assist.

The owner tried to help handcuff the woman, the officer said, but just when the man put her arm behind her back, she grabbed him in the groin area and refused to let go.

After the woman eventually was handcuffed, another scuffle ensued before she finally was booked into Lubbock County Jail on charges of aggravated assault on a police officer, failure to identify and resisting arrest.

Officers who weren't being attacked, meanwhile, were seeking two Mexican-American men suspected of trying to rape a 24-year-old Amarillo woman.

The woman said she and her husband had car trouble in the area of 19th Street and Avenue Q about 12:15 a.m. Monday when two men stopped to assist.

The men carried her spouse to an area near 4th Street and Avenue A and ordered him out of the vehicle, she told police, and then returned to the disabled car for her.

After convincing the woman that her husband was waiting at a car rental firm for her, the woman said she went with the men.

She said she was driven to an area near North Quaker Avenue and Clovis Road and told, "We've got plans for you."

One man took a .38-caliber revolver from her purse, she said, and threatened her before the second man persuaded him to let her go.

A 23-year-old Elkhart Avenue resident told officers Monday a man she met in an elevator at the Human Development Center at 1201 Texas Ave. Saturday robbed her of $300.

The woman said the black man, about 28-to-35-years-old, asked if she knew where he could buy drugs. When she said no, he showed her a knife and a pistol in his clothing and grabbed her arm.

She said the man drove her to a club near 10th Street and Avenue C and then to Buffalo Lakes where he tried to undress her. After a struggle, she said, the man gave up and drove to Mackenzie Park about 8 p.m.

Telling her he had to go home, she said he fled on foot with about $300 taken from her purse.

Benjamin Hinojosa of 3221 Duke St. told police he was walking in the area near Erskine Street and Gary Avenue about 11:10 p.m. Sunday when a vehicle pulled up beside him and an unknown man shot him in the leg. He was treated and later released from the Health Sciences Center Hospital.

Joe Earat of the Twin Lakes Golf Course at 6001 19th St. told police someone removed $150 in food and money from the course shop before 8:30 a.m. Monday.

Thomas Sappington of Multi-Ad at 1427 N. Gary Ave. told officers someone took an adding machine and several calculators from that firm between Friday and Monday.

Clarence Priestly of Bozeman Elementary School reported the theft of $60 in candy and money from a coin-operated machine there about 7 p.m. Friday.

R.L. Jent of 2640 34th St. told police someone removed $3,000 worth of musical instruments from his firm, Jent's House of Music, between 3:15 a.m. and 3:30 a.m. Sunday.

Sara Prott of 2123-B 10th St. reported the theft of a $250 typewriter, a bicycle and a $70 guitar from her home during the weekend.

A 19-year-old Lubbock man and his 17-year-old wife remained in Lubbock County Jail Monday after police recovered about six ounces and 30 plants of suspected marijuana at an eastside residence Sunday.

Officers secured a search warrant for the house after they received information that the young man allegedly was in possession of a stolen gun.

In recently reported property crimes, whoever broke a car window with a rock Sunday at the rear of 2421 Broadway reportedly made off with $1,000 cash, according to victim Francis Savage.

Texas Historian, Newspaperman Dies

AUSTIN (AP) — Roy Grimes, a historian and longtime newspaperman for several papers, died Monday at the age of 70.

Grimes had been hospitalized for the past seven weeks. A friend said he had numerous medical problems and died of kidney failure.

He was a descendant of Jesse Grimes, signer of the Texas Declaration of Independence.

Grimes compiled a history of Victoria County — "300 Years in Victoria County" — and wrote a story on the Goliad massacre and a series of articles on Texas as governors that was widely published.

Grimes was born in Port Arthur and began his newspaper career on the San Antonio Express in 1928. Several years later he went to the Houston Post and became city editor and the paper's Austin correspondent.

After serving in World War II, he was Austin correspondent for the Express, a writer for Long News Service, editor of the Cuero Record and editor of the editorial page for the Victoria Advocate.

For several years Grimes was director of public relations for the Republican Party of Texas. At the time of his death, Grimes was administrative assistant to Sen. William T. Moore, D-Bryan.

He is survived by his wife, two sons and four grandchildren.

Budget Boost Expected

Not counting some $2 million in expenditures for the new $3.6 million Lubbock County Jail, the preliminary 1979 county budget is about $450,000 over the budget this year.

Most of the increase is from a 6-percent across-the-board salary increase that the commissioners are considering for county employees.

The commissioners will spend about $3.1 million on the new jail next year and will receive only about $1 million in federal revenue sharing money to pay for it, a revised budget summary released by County Auditor Dale Gallimore Monday showed.

He said after the day-long regular meeting and budget hearings that money will be transferred from the general fund to the revenue sharing fund temporarily to meet the construction expense. Then revenue sharing funds will be transferred back to the general fund in 1980, Gallimore said.

After its first revision, the 1979 budget shows $8,325,442 in revenues and $10,253,939 in expenditures with the jail expense and the salary increases.

The first budget prepared by Gallimore two weeks ago estimated year-end cash balances of $5.8 million this year and $5.85 million next year. He said Monday that new projected balances for the county public treasury had not been computed.

The budget this calendar year is for $7,949,627.

Notable among the new budget facts are the inclusion of an $18,000-per-year office administrator that Criminal District Attorney-elect John T. Montford asked as an addition to his staff and about half of the salary increases that Sheriff C.H. "Choc" Blanchard asked for his subordinates.

The budget gives raises of about $50 per month to deputies when Blanchard asked an average raise of $100.

The commissioners worked through the revised document Monday afternoon after handling their regular meeting agenda Monday morning.

Department heads are scheduled to begin appearing before the court in mid-August to discuss the budget deliberations. Laundry equipment for the new county jail will be re-bid because the low bidder asked a change in the contract conditions, the commissioners decided in the morning session.

Project engineer Arnold Maeker told the commissioners that Pellerin Laundry Machinery Co. of Kenner, La., asked him last week if it could order and have the county pay for the $26,081 in equipment now and store it in Louisiana until it is needed in the expected 18-month project.

The commissioners decided to tell the company its bid bond will be forfeited if a signed contract is not received this week, and Maeker said he was told the contract would not be signed as it is because of an expected price increase in the equipment prior to the contracted delivery date.

Maeker said the only other bid was not made strictly according to specifications and that at least one well-known company was unable to meet the bid deadline when the first bids were taken.

The engineer noted that the electrical, mechanical and construction contracts were signed last week and said the Roanoke Iron & Bridge Co. one for jail cells and other detention equipment should be received from Virginia this week.

In other business, county purchasing agent Bill Crutcher told the court that typewriters offered the county on a low bid last month were found unacceptable by the tax assessor-collector.

Russell Hardin, tax assessor-collector, asked when the bids were opened to test the typewriters before the bid was accepted. He said typewriters taken on previous low bids had not been acceptable. Bill Nelson, his chief deputy, was in the courtroom before the 10 a.m. meeting started, but Crutcher informed the commissioners of what the office had decided.

Neither Hardin nor Nelson was in the room when the commissioners approved a motion by Commissioner Alton Brazell to "reject all bids on the recommendation of the tax office."

The court approved a Plains Detox Center application to the Criminal Justice Council for a $123,000 grant.

Center board member Jim Kimmel said the Lubbock County was opened April 24 with private donations because of complications in getting state money, but that he recently was informed that money had become available.

Kimmel emphasized that the original conditions of the county sponsoring a grant — the money being handled by the Mental Health-Mental Retardation Center and no present or future obligation being incurred by the county — would be maintained.

Since April, he said, the 2507 Amherst center has met its $7,000-per-month expenses with about $5,000 in private donations and the rest in patient fees.

He said 132 persons have been treated for alcoholism there.

When the one-time emergency grant runs out, Kimmel said, the Texas Council on Alcoholism, which he serves as an advisory board member, probably will be a funding source.

He explained that the county is technically involved because the state council prefers to make its grants to a government entity.

Ammonia gas was first noticed scientifically in 1315 by Majorcan philosopher Raymond Lully (1232-1315), who was stoned to death by the townsfolk of Parma for his discovery.

HOLLYWOOD UPI — Ed Winter is a name the average viewer sees but doesn't remember in the credits of television shows.

His face, too, will strike a spark of recognition. But name and face are rarely, if ever, put together on screen and fail to register at all off-screen.

Winter has had good roles in "Eleanor and Franklin," "Lou Grant," "Police Woman" and "Barnaby Jones." If Ed is remembered by viewers, they probably associate him with his recurring role as the CIA's Colonel Flagg in the "M-A-S-H" series and as Congressman McCallum in "Soap."

Winter and his family moved to Hollywood from New York six years ago after he had achieved a reputation on Broadway, winning Tony nominations for his performances in "Cabaret" and "Promises, Promises."

He had regular roles in two situation comedies, "Karen" and "Adams' Rib," neither of which were outstanding successes.

Not long ago, Winter, a handsome, muscular man in his 30's, thought the unknown barrier had arrived. He was cast to costar with Donna Mills in an hour-long dramatic series, "Woman On the Run."

Unhappily, the pilot never sold and Ed Winter returned to playing heavies in dramatic shows and comedy in episodic sitcoms.

Last season he appeared in two episodes of "Project U.F.O." Jack Webb's new series on the U.S. Air Force's Project Blue Book which investigates reported cases of flying saucer sightings.

Winter made a favorable impression on Webb, who decided to juggle the cast of his series for its second season. It was decided that William Jordan, who played Maj. Jake Gattlin, would be happier doing something else.

Webb wanted to lighten up the Air Force brass and add a little humor, he retained Caskey Swain who plays Sgt. Harry Fitz. He cast Winter as Capt. Ben Ryan, a Vietnam air ace and an astrophysicist.

At last, Ed Winter has achieved a primary goal. He will be seen next season on prime-time as the star of his own show.

"It's taken me six years to reach this milestone," Winter said wryly. His Broadway reputation meant nothing to TV producers and network executives. "Now, at least for a while, I won't be a second banana."

The change of attitudes toward Ed has been dramatic. As a guest on other shows and as a featured player in a series, he was treated courteously on the set but no one went overboard when Ed reported for work each day.

It's different when you're the star of a show. Producers, directors, fellow actors and stagehands are aware that their bread and butter is riding on the ability of the star to draw viewers.

The star, too, generally sets the mood on a set, hypes the atmosphere and is the rallying point for the entire company. That's the position in which Winter now finds himself. And he likes it.

"Starring in a show makes a big difference in your position in the business," he said. "Of course there's a monumental difference monetarily. But you're treated differently too."

"You have a lot more work and responsibility. You never stop. So the people on the set try to do a little something to make your life easier. I don't mean to imply that you automatically become a big shot. But it's nice to see that everyone is pulling for me."

'Chance to Change' Draws Gossett To TV Role

LOS ANGELES (AP) — His best friends walk past without recognizing him. On the stage he has to be pointed out to visitors searching vainly for him.

He is Louis Gossett Jr., and his familiar bald pate known to viewers of "Roots" and "The Deep" is hidden beneath a hairpiece.

Not only that. He's wearing a swallowtail coat, a starched shirt, high collar and white gloves for his role as Mercer, the houseman, in the NBC miniseries "Backstairs at the White House."

"I've got to go through 51 years of changes and hairpieces and makeup," said Gossett. He is 37 when the drama begins and 88 when it ends in 1961.

Actually, he is 88 when it begins, because he and Leslie Uggams, who plays White House maid Lillian Rogers Parks, introduce the series as another president, John F. Kennedy, prepares to move into the executive mansion.

The eight-hour miniseries, now being filmed by Ed Friendly Productions, is based on Mrs. Parks' book recalling the presidential families during the 51 years when her mother, Maggie Rogers, and then she were White House maids.

No date has been set for airing.

"I took the role because of the chance to age," Gossett said during a lunch break in his tiny dressing room trailer parked outside the stage. "No one will know who I am in the beginning. They'll have to put a sign on me with my name on it."

"The role appealed to me. I'll do anything I can to keep from being typecast. Even a small part if it offers something different. I had my choice of playing Mays, the doorman, or Mercer. Mays has a death scene, but Mercer gets to age."

Robert Hooks, a former colleague of Gossett's from the Negro Ensemble Theatre, plays Mays.

Gossett, 44, also aged from 45 to 70 in his Emmy-winning role of Fiddler in ABC's "Roots."

"I started growing bald at 18 and it was difficult for me to get cast being young and having a receding hairline. So I had to play a lot of crazies. Then my face caught up with me," Gossett said.

It was for the movie "River Niger" that he shaved his head. He has kept it shaved since then.

"That was the first time my friends didn't recognize me," he said. "I figured maybe the producers didn't know me either. I re-introduced myself to the producers and that's when I began to get significant roles."

Gossett had starred on Broadway, but in Hollywood he had his share of guest starring roles on such TV series as "The Mod Squad," "The Partridge Family," "Bonanza," "Police Story" and "The Rockford Files." In the latter, he and Isaac Hayes played a pair of black detectives in what was hoped would be a spin-off series. It did not sell. Gossett was also a regular on the ABC series "The Rebels."

He also starred in such movies as "Travels With My Aunt," "Skin Game," "The Landlord," "The Choirboys," "The Deep," and the four-hour TV movie "To Kill a Cop." He also starred in "Sidekicks," a pilot based on "Skin Game." In all, he's made seven pilots.

After "Backstairs at the White House,"

Gossett makes his film directing debut with "Stomping at the Savoy." It tells the story of four young girls from the South who come to New York in 1930, find work as domestics, and live out their dreams at the Savoy.

He hasn't done any episodic television in a while. "I haven't had to, but I don't have any blue blood in me," he said. "I'd do it again if I had to. But I like to do quality work and it's hard to do that in episodic television."

Frisbees Introduced To Visiting Chinese

MINNEAPOLIS (UPI) — If relaxation under China's present leadership progresses, Frisbees may yet sail over the Great Wall.

And they'll bear the stamp of the great heartlands of America.

The 50 members of the Performing Arts Company of the People's Republic of China arrived in Minneapolis over the weekend for the third stop on a triumphal American tour after New York and Washington. Los Angeles and San Francisco are next.

Amidst the two programs presented in four appearances at Northrup Auditorium the Chinese were entertained Monday at an old-fashioned farm picnic at the Tartan Park Recreation Center at Lake Elmo in suburban St. Paul.

There were Boston baked beans, barbecued chicken, ice cream on a stick, cooked vegetables soft drinks and beer. And, since every American picnic features games, the visiting Chinese were presented with Frisbees.

The Frisbees were lettered in English and Chinese: "Friendship Through Cultural Exchange" which could startle a fisherman on Lake Elmo or an unsuspecting Chinese farmer.

The host for the picnic was Jomm Marshall, a sandy-haired Englishman, who is China Affairs Manager for the 3M Company, the only Twin Cities-headquartered concern doing business in China to create such a position.

Marshall has traveled in China 10 times within the last four years. While he only smiles at the thought of Frisbees clearing the Great Wall, he has noted great changes in the world's most populous nation.

"There is much greater flexibility and communicativeness since the passing of the 'Gang of Four,'" he said. The purged Gang of Four is the Chinese term for the group headed by the late Chairman Mao Tse-tung's widow.

"There is slightly less uniformity," he said. "There is more color in dress although still restrained by our standards. Hairdos are a bit more individualistic, and they are really promoting tourism and contact with visitors from the outside."

East Germans Bluff Way Across Border

BERLIN (AP) — Three East German medical students bluffed their way across the wall into West Berlin by using home-tailored uniforms and a car bearing phony military plates, the West Berlin Human Rights Society said in a rare report on escape methods Monday.

The report said two of the students, men dressed in clothing resembling the camouflage outfits worn by East German border guards, used the car to approach the wall. The third student, a woman, hid in the trunk. After the deception allowed them to reach a secluded spot along the wall, they assembled three ladders and scaled the 11-foot barrier, the report said.

GARBAGE TRUCKS ROLL—A former San Antonio garbage man, one of more than 140 to be fired after a walkout over wages, pickets while a garbage truck rolls out Monday past police guards. San Antonio Officials Hire New Garbagemen

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — City officials hired 106 new garbagemen Monday as the first replacements for the more than 140 fired after a walkout over wages. Meanwhile, 76 non-striking garbagemen, less than one-third of the normal workforce, began partial trash pickups.

The situation remained relatively peaceful, as only a few rock-throwing incidents were reported. One man was arrested Monday morning for throwing a rock at a garbage truck.

At City Hall, City Councilman Rudy Ortiz called for the resignation of City Manager Tom Huebner, who promptly fired 106 of the city's 313 garbagemen on Saturday.

ing Monday in Amman for talks with King Hussein and Jordanian government officials.

Vance is trying to get Israel and Egypt to send their foreign and defense ministers to the proposed talks in Sinai in about two weeks.

Begin's Likud-bloc government had internal problems as well Monday. Commerce Minister Yigal Hurvitz tendered his resignation in protest a supplementary budget proposal he considered too inflationary.

Begin and other Likud leaders were trying to smooth over the dispute between Hurvitz and Finance Minister Simcha Ehrlich and to get the commerce minister to rescind his resignation.

Strikers Dismissed By Postal Service

By The Associated Press

Postal Service officials announced on Monday the dismissal of 122 striking postal employees in New Jersey and California, and union officials warned of an escalation of the four-day wildcat strike by workers unhappy with a new nationwide contract proposal.

School Board Studies New Budget Plans

Lubbock district pays teachers $500 to $1,000 more. Irons has suggested raising these "local increments" — possibly $200 to $300 — to provide teacher pay raises of about seven percent overall.

Teachers themselves have asked for much larger increases. Waters said he believes the superintendent's suggestion is "reasonable."

Irons called his proposal a "very, very minimal raise."

Teachers who have reached the top of the experience ladder would get state-mandated increases of only about $130 if the school board doesn't pitch in any local funds.

MARIJUANA SEIZED

SANDWICH, Mass. (AP) — Police seized 18 to 20 tons of marijuana and arrested four people in a raid Monday morning at the Canal Fish Market warehouse here, authorities said.

urday after the workers walked off their jobs in a wage dispute.

Approximately 35 other workers showed up for work Monday, but refused to go on their routes, saying they feared for their safety. Officials said those workers were fired. More than 20 still face disciplinary action for supporting the strike on Saturday.

About 15 of the city's 35 dog catchers walked out Monday, but strikers did not garner expected strike support from street department workers, brush collectors and airport maintenance employees. Three landfill workers also refused to work, officials said.

Huebner, who runs the nation's 10th largest city, has said he will fire any city employee who walks off the job. Such strikes by public employees are illegal under Texas law.

Firings "Irresponsible" Ortiz called the mass firings "irresponsible" and "deplorable" and said he would ask the council to fire Huebner. But he admitted, "I don't pretend to have the necessary six votes. I just want it on the record."

"Huebner's actions were anti-labor and show his total disregard for the welfare of the city's work force and community," added Ortiz. "This series of actions by the manager indicates gross incompetence and inefficiency."

More than 200 prospective garbagemen lined up outside City Hall on Monday morning to apply for the openings. Personnel spokesman John R. Kaznowski said two dozen applicants were there before the office opened.

"We already have 106 ready for tomorrow and could get 50 or 60 more if we need to," he said Monday.

The depleted work crews, promised police protection, if necessary, picked up garbage on the city's south side. Many worked other routes on overtime. Residents of the city's north side were asked to take their garbage to the landfill or to three public parks, where trucks were stationed. Garbage was last collected on Friday.

Garbage Crews Taunted Garbage crews were taunted by about 60 pickets outside one service center. The angry members of the San Antonio Refuse Collectors Association set up pickets at City Hall and at the city's other two service centers.

"The garbage will start stacking up, but it's not real bad now. It depends on how fast we can bring the new people on," said Public Works Director Frank Kiolbassa. Huebner has estimated it will take two to four weeks for the situation to return to normal.

Residents of this city of 800,000, where temperatures have hovered near 100, pay $1.50 per month for a thrice-weekly garbage pickup. The city council hiked that last week to $3.

The council also voted to give all city employees a 6 percent wage hike. But the garbage workers, who staged a two-day walkout in May over wages and working conditions, were asking for a 9.3 percent increase.

San Antonio garbagemen earn an average of $759 per month. The starting salary for a garbage collector is $3.15 per hour, while a new driver gets $3.28 per hour.

FLAGS FLY AT STATE CAPITOL—As the temperature passed the 90-degree mark Monday, only a few flags belonging to some 40 migrant farm workers were visible outside the Texas State Capitol in Austin. The group vowed to maintain a vigil at the capitol until Gov. Dolph Briscoe agrees to meet with them. (AP Laserphoto)

Carter Warns Aides Against Drugs Use

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter told his White House staff Monday that his aides must avoid marijuana and other illegal drugs or "seek employment elsewhere."

The president said he wanted this understood by all White House employees "in no uncertain terms."

Carter's directive, in a memo to the 11 members of his senior staff, followed a statement last week by Dr. Peter Bourne, his resigned drug policy adviser, that there was a "high incidence" of marijuana use among White House employees and occasional use of cocaine.

"I expect every member of the White House staff to obey the law," Carter wrote. "Whether you agree with the law or whether or not others obey the law is totally irrelevant. You will obey it, or you will seek employment elsewhere."

"No Uncertain Terms" The president instructed his top aides to "convey my feelings directly and in no uncertain terms to every member of your staff."

In an apparent reference to Bourne's statement, Carter began the memo by asserting, "I am deeply concerned over recent reports that some members of the White House staff are using illegal drugs."

Jody Powell, the White House press secretary, said Carter's order was relayed to a senior staff meeting Monday morning by Hamilton Jordan, the president's principal assistant.

Asked if an inquiry was being conducted to ascertain whether Bourne's statement was well-founded, Powell said, "I know of no reasonable way to conduct an investigation."

All Federal Employees Included In response to another question, Powell said Carter's attitude toward observance of the law applies to all federal employees, although "he would be inclined to be most strict about members of his own staff."

Carter is on record as favoring the repeal by states of criminal penalties for the possession of small amounts of marijuana for personal use. He does not favor legalization of the drug, however.

The press secretary expressed regret that he made statements to Washington Star reporters during the weekend without specifying they were not intended for publication. He said he should have chosen his words with greater care in any case.

The Star quoted Powell as suggesting Washington is awash with reporters who use marijuana and who are now displaying hypocrisy by searching out evidence of drug use by White House employees.

"Witch Hunt" Charged "It takes on the character of a witch hunt," Powell was quoted as saying. After saying his comments to the Star were "inappropriate to have been said in a situation that would allow for publication," Powell continued:

"The president, I might add, made it clear to me this morning that he did not want the impression conveyed that either he or I felt that whatever standard of conduct might be observed by members of the press or any other institution, that that justified such standards of behavior in the White House."

Asked if he had ever smoked marijuana or used illicit drugs, Powell said he would, as a matter of principle, not respond although his silence "could be misinterpreted."

Meanwhile, House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. said he won't tolerate any marijuana smoking in his office.

O'Neill was asked by reporters whether he thought it proper for members of the White House staff to use marijuana or cocaine.

He responded by saying that he tells his employees and interns, "Under no circumstances is there to be pot; anybody found with pot in my office goes out the door."

He added: "I don't set the standards for the White House; I only set the standards for my own employees."

He added: "I don't set the standards for the White House; I only set the standards for my own employees."

Wine-Tasting Festival Finally Goes On Wagon

LOS GATOS, Calif. (AP) — The Los Gatos Annual Wine-Tasting Festival has gone on the wagon. This year it's the Los Gatos Culture Festival, and anyone caught even sipping Chablis will be fined $35.

"It never was wine-tasting. It was wholesale consumption," Los Gatos Police Sgt. Roger McLain said of the festivals that were held here for the past eight years.

"Got Bombed Out Of Their Minds" McLain said the nearly 10,000 persons who attended the festival in past years stood elbow-to-elbow in the town plaza, soaked up the sun and the wine supplied free by the nearby Paul Masson winery and got "bombed right out of their minds."

When that wine ran out, the revelers stumbled toward the liquor stores and filled the 83 bars and liquor-serving restaurants in this town of 26,000, nestled in the midst of the Santa Cruz mountains wine country 50 miles south of San Francisco.

"The people would be arm-in-arm and the bars were wall-to-wall people and they'd spill onto the streets and so would the booze," McLain recalled. Every year the reports of overturned cars, drunken brawls and vandalism increased.

Topped Even Santa Claus Parade The heady festival, however, was popular and profitable to local merchants — more so than even the town's annual Santa Claus parade. So for years residents just grumbled about it.

But in the most recent election, voters dumped two incumbents from the town council.

One of them, Tom Ferrito, a 36-year-old lawyer, said he had nothing against drinking per se, but figured the town had become "too touristy" and the festival "too much of a good thing for others and too much of a bad thing for those who live here."

He persuaded the council to impose such stiff regulations on the local Chamber of Commerce, which has always sponsored the festival, that the chamber backed out.

"They wanted us to pay for all the town's services, the extra police and clean-up for the entire weekend, even though the wine-tasting lasted only three hours," said Jack Welch, executive director of the chamber. "It wasn't fair, it wasn't right, so we said forget it."

Town Manager Bill Avery said this year's festival on Aug. 26 is being sponsored by community groups and will include "food booths, art shows, craft booths and music."

Welch, meanwhile, resigned last week from the Chamber to be hospitality director at Paul Masson vineyards.

Attempt Due Today To Alter Lab Orbit

HOUSTON (UPI) — Controllers today plan to use new data about Skylab's behavior to streamline the space station's orbit in hopes of keeping it in flight until a space shuttle crew can boost it higher or destroy it.

"Everything's on schedule," Johnson Space Center spokesman Bob Gordon said Monday of what would be the third Skylab streamlining in six weeks.

An attempt last week to right the 84-ton space station was aborted after an onboard computer unexpectedly spent one-fifth of remaining thruster fuel to correct an unpredicted attitude deviation.

The setback — the latest of several in a save-Skylab mission that began June 11 — prompted an intensive weekend series of ground computer simulations to clarify how Skylab can and will behave in orbit.

The multimillion-dollar save-Skylab effort is intended to prevent duplication of the fate of a Russian satellite that unpredictably dropped from orbit and disintegrated last winter, scattering debris over northern Canada.

NASA is trying to overcome a time squeeze between faster-than-expected deterioration of Skylab's 240-mile-high orbit and delays in development of the space shuttle, now scheduled for test or orbit in mid-1979.

JSC Director Chris Kraft has said success is unlikely, but NASA will keep trying to control Skylab until nothing further can be done. NASA Skylab coordinator Robert Aller is more optimistic, calling chances "good."

In any event, Kraft has said Skylab debris probably will not threaten inhabited areas because 80 percent of its orbit is over water.

Since June 11, JSC flight controllers have battled to keep Skylab in a "minimal drag" attitude, minimizing the resistance of the faint outer fringes of the outer atmosphere which tends to slow it down.

Complete Inventory Of Hale County Records Published

DENTON (Special) — A complete inventory of Hale County records has been published for the first time by the Texas County Records Inventory Project headquartered on the campus of North Texas State University.

Hale County is the 37th county to be inventoried in the ongoing series produced by the statewide county records project.

The inventory was conducted under the local supervision of Dr. Gwin Morris, former chairman of the department of history at Wayland Baptist College and now academic dean of East Texas Baptist College in Marshall.

Additional copies of the Hale County inventory may be purchased from the Local Records Division, Texas State Archives, Box 12927, Capitol Station, Austin, 78711.

Three times since the mission started, Skylab has wobbled out of "minimal drag" attitude. The first two times, flight controllers righted the craft within a few hours. The last wobble, started July 10, continues.

Scientists today plan to use gyroscopes, which spin rapidly like tops to take and hold assigned positions, and fuel-short attitude control thrusters, which shoot jets of nitrogen sort of like rockets, to reorient Skylab.

Officials blame many of their problems on Skylab's unmanned mode, new computer programs and old equipment on a spacecraft that has drifted since it was last manned in 1974.

Film Industry Crime Search Given Assist

LOS ANGELES (AP) — District Attorney John Van de Kamp said Monday his search for crime in the movie industry is being aided by callers — some of them anonymous — who have phoned in some 60 tips on unreported kickbacks, embezzlements and related white-collar crimes.

"A lot of people felt pent up and wanted to tell their stories," Van de Kamp said. "This is a town that likes to talk, and you get some wild stories."

He said all reports are being investigated. Most frequent are reports of alleged movie industry kickbacks and drug use in the record business, he said, adding that among those reporting record industry abuses was a nationally known singer who came to his office.

Cooperation Pledged Van de Kamp's comments came after he met for more than an hour with Jack Valenti, president of the Motion Picture Producers Association. Valenti pledged the cooperation of the 10 studios in his organization but said Van de Kamp's entertainment task force is unnecessary.

"If there is something amiss, it ought to be revealed," Valenti said. "I merely disagree with the district attorney's methods. I don't believe you need such a well publicized task force."

In a response, Van de Kamp said: "If I thought the motion picture industry was cleaning up its act, we wouldn't be doing what we're doing."

Van de Kamp's probe was spurred by three recent cases: the theft of $40,000 from Columbia Pictures by former studio chief David Begelman; alleged embezzlement of $275,000 by an accountant at the Screen Gems division of Columbia and the loss of $1 million in mishandled accounts at DeLuxe Filmfab, a subsidiary of 20th Century Fox.

In the Begelman case, Columbia refused to press charges. In the DeLuxe case, Van de Kamp learned of the matter from a newspaper story about a civil suit filed in the matter.

'Team Man' Quality Aids Caldwell Rise At Ford

DETROIT (AP) — If his predecessor at Ford Motor Co. sired the sporty Mustang, Philip Caldwell is linked with the mini-compact Fiesta.

But Caldwell, heir-apparent to the top operating post at Ford, is a "team man" who rejects the notion that any one man can father a new car.

"No one person has the right to claim a history of a car," Caldwell once told a reporter in a thinly-veiled reference to Lee A. Iacocca, the Mustang man he beat to the top.

Therein lies part of the reason Caldwell, 58, vaulted over Iacocca to become vice chairman and second-in-command at the world's second-largest automaker.

A low-profile man with a strong background in finance, he is personally a direct opposite of the brash, aggressive Iacocca, a sales man. Company insiders say Caldwell doesn't raise hackles like Iacocca.

That quality should make Caldwell more compatible with Henry Ford II, the chairman and chief executive officer who runs the company with a strong hand. Personal friction with Ford reportedly led to Iacocca's fall.

"The difference is in personality," said a Ford source who asked to remain anonymous. "Caldwell is cool, calm, collected. He's known as the type who keeps everything under control."

Ford officials would not comment on a Detroit News report that Caldwell would be named Iacocca's successor as company president. But the source called it logical, since Caldwell is already filling the role and has two higher titles as well.

"It doesn't matter what the hell they call him," the source said.

Caldwell's ascension in April 1977 laid the groundwork for the sudden firing of Iacocca on July 13. Caldwell was named to a new three-man ruling body with Iacocca and Ford. Both men answered to Ford, but Caldwell was made more equal than Iacocca. In June, Caldwell became deputy chief executive officer and vice chairman and Iacocca was told to report to him.

Caldwell is expected to replace Henry Ford as chief executive officer in 1980. Henry plans to remain chairman until 1982, when his brother, William Clay Ford, is expected to replace him on the board.

The top-level shuffle is seen as a way to keep the family atop the company. But Caldwell, not William Clay Ford, would run the day-to-day operations.

After Caldwell and William Clay Ford would come Edsel Ford II, 29, Henry's only son, who is now second-in-charge of Ford of Australia and is being openly groomed for both his father's current posts.

A Harvard Business School graduate, Caldwell is described by colleagues as fitting the General Motors mold — a grey-suited management man who is unlike the more colorful executives associated with Ford Motor.

While Iacocca was flying high atop the key Ford Division, Caldwell was laboring as head of truck operations, then Ford's Philco subsidiary and finally its overseas operations.

New York Times Reporter Cited For Contempt In Dr. X Case

HACKENSACK, N.J. (AP) — New York Times reporter Myron A. Farber was sentenced to at least six months in prison and jailed Monday for refusing to turn over his files in the Dr. X murder case. His attorneys immediately asked a state appeals court to stay the sentence. Superior Court Judge Theodore W. Trautwein found Farber and the Times guilty of civil and criminal contempt.

On the civil contempt, he fined the Times $5,000 a day until it complies with the order and fined Farber $1,000. On criminal contempt charges, Trautwein fined the Times $100,000 and Farber $1,000.

In addition, Farber was ordered sent to jail until he complies with the judge's order to turn over his notes. For his earlier refusal to comply he was ordered to serve a six-month jail term, which Trautwein said would begin after Farber surrendered his notes.

Farber was led to the Bergen County jail annex next to the courtroom here by Sheriff Joseph F. Job. The sheriff stopped court attendants from handcuffing him. Attorneys for Farber and the New York Times went to the Appellate Division of Superior Court in Newark to appeal the convictions. Farber's 1975 investigation of a mysterious series of deaths at Riverdel Hospital and his subsequent articles led Bergen County authorities to renew their inquiry into the deaths.

Dr. Mario Jascalevich, who was referred to in Farber's initial articles only as "Dr. X," was charged with murdering five hospital patients. His trial, now in its 22nd week, was recessed Monday.

If convicted, Jascalevich faces a maximum term of five consecutive life sentences.

Jascalevich's attorneys say Farber's notes are essential to the defense. As a result, the trial judge, William J. Arnold, ordered Farber to surrender the notes, saying he would review them confidentially to determine if they should be given to the defense.

"The issue, I believe, is the right of the public to be informed through its press in accordance with the first amendment of the United States Constitution," Farber told a packed courtroom before sentencing.

"If I give up my files, I will have undermined my professional integrity and diminish the credibility of my colleagues," he said. "And, most important, I will have given notice that the nation's premier newspaper is no longer available to the those men and women who would seek it out — or who would respond to it — to talk freely and without fear."

The reporter said there was nothing in his files that would establish Jascalevich's guilt or innocence. The Times' staff attorney, Russell Lewis, said the newspaper approves of the position Farber has taken in the case. Arthur Ochs Sulzberger, publisher of The Times, said, "The Times will of course support Myron Farber as he maintains the confidentiality of his sources. This is what a free press is all about. And if Judge Trautwein decrees that The Times is to pay $5,000 a day for this privilege, so be it. Bad law doesn't last very long."

Officials To Discuss City's Infant Death Rate

By ROBERT M. COCKRUM
Avalanche-Journal Staff

A group of health officials and doctors will meet today to determine their next moves in an effort to stem the high, if not rising, tide of infant deaths in the Lubbock area.

Dr. Marjorie K. Orr, the city health department director who is busy fighting just to keep what she has in the wake of a city taxpayer revolt, says the need for expanded medical care for children up to a year old is critical.

The infant mortality rate in Lubbock is almost 21 per 1,000 live births.

"That's a baby dying every two and one-half weeks, and that is not necessary," said Dr. Orr.

The state average is 14.7 deaths for every 1,000 births, and that is Dr. Orr's minimum goal through a well-child clinic in the health department.

Because the Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) has designated the Lubbock area as a "pocket" much above national levels, there is a possibility of federal help.

Representatives of the state health department, the Texas Tech University School of Medicine and others will meet today to check the possibility of financing the battle against infant mortality with HEW funds. Grants of $300,000 and $500,000 may be available, according to Dr. Orr.

"It would come down to us through the state health department," she said. "In any event, I don't believe HEW would see a program as stopping at the city limits or county line."

Federal money or not, Dr. Orr is looking for a commitment from Lubbock citizens and the city government.

The preliminary budget first proposed by City Manager Larry Cunningham placed health department funding at $688,271. His recent list of potential budget cuts reduces the total to $688,094.

"That's just unacceptable," said Dr. Orr. The cuts would leave her available funds $200,000 lower than current spending levels.

"Our city facilities are less than a third of what they should be now," she said. "That would put us at $1.99 per capita for public health. We're already at $3.50, among the lowest in the state."

Dr. Orr, a pediatrician who practiced many years in Midland before receiving her degree in public health from Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, said Texas, in general, is 20 years behind the rest of the nation in public health programs.

"I guess it's a matter of never wanting it," she said in assessing Lubbock's lack of what she considers a well-rounded department.

Just as the state moved to improve public health care on a regional basis, she believes it could move toward imposing standards at the municipal level.

Dr. Orr ticks off the list of her department's shortcomings: public health education, none; crippled children's services, inadequate; child health, none; non-infectious disease detection, none; and basic epidemiological services, none.

When it comes to environmental health, she scans the programs related to water, food, waste control, general sanitation, and then her eyes touch "Vector Control."

"Boy, do we ever have 'vector control,'" she said. While she considers the control of mosquitoes, flies and rodents as necessary, Dr. Orr sees the Lubbock emphasis far out of proportion to the problem. Of the current $888,891 budget for the department, approximately $200,000 goes to vector control, according to Dennis Percifull, Dr. Orr's immediate superior as head of public services.

"You're comparing apples and oranges," he said, when asked if there should not be a reordering of priorities with an infant mortality rate so high. "Reducing infant mortality is a high priority, and when disease-carrying mosquitoes are found, then vector control is high (on the priority list)."

Dr. Orr bristles at a reporter's suggestion that her pediatric background makes her more sensitive to child health and less caring about vector control.

"When 21 babies die that wouldn't have, it doesn't matter whether I'm a pediatrician or not. I'm not the only one concerned," she said. She cited last week's weather-related death of a one-month-old baby as a preventable occurrence. The child died of dehydration.

"Waco, about the same size as Lubbock, spends $15,000 on vector control," she said. "If everything else in this department were up to the attention given flies and mosquitoes, we wouldn't have any problems."

In the preliminary budget, almost $81,000 is set aside for the well-child clinic and the necessary laboratory services. It could be one of the first items lopped off, should taxpayer pressure end with that result.

"Everybody is so afraid it's going to cost them a dime," said Dr. Orr, explaining that programs at the public health level eventually pay for themselves.

"The cost falls back on all of us in terms of insurance or taxes," she said. "It costs $13,000 a year for a student at the state school. Perhaps one of the reasons the child was defective and needs that state care is because of little or no prenatal care or attention after his birth."

Dr. Orr said too often the public confuses patients coming to her department with welfare cases.

"They're not welfare," she said. "They're the working people who cannot afford medical care. But these people need to be motivated and educated."

She said a public health nurse, "who is much more than a hospital nurse," can save the taxpayers and the individuals involved thousands of dollars and succeed where medical specialists in big university hospitals cannot.

"They're too high up there," Dr. Orr said. "You need someone on a very personal level who interviews, intervenes, reinforces and leads by the hand."

Environmental Cleanup Efforts Gain Backing

By LOUIS HARRIS

For the first time in recent years Americans are less critical about the efforts of both the government and the private sector to clean up air and water pollution.

Here are the key findings of a recent Harris Survey of 1,567 adults nationwide about the public's reaction to the way various parts of government are handling environmental problems:

—Local government's anti-pollution programs are now rated 48-44 percent negative. This is significantly better, however, than the 55-37 percent negative rating of 1976.

—The job that state government is doing in cleaning up the environment is now rated 50-42 percent negative. This is an improvement from the 53-38 percent negative rating two years ago.

—The federal government's programs to clean up air and water pollution are given a 52-40 percent negative score. However, only two years ago, Americans were 56-37 percent negative on these programs.

—Congress is rated 57-27 percent negative on environmental matters, but this is slightly better than the 62-25 percent negative rating the House and Senate received in 1976.

The same movement toward somewhat improved ratings is apparent in judgments about the way business is handling environmental problems.

Although a substantial 57-33 majority of Americans gives large industrial plants a negative rating on insulating programs to curb air and water pollution, back in 1976 a higher 61-29 percent majority was negative on this point.

By 52-35 percent, a majority still gives small industrial plants a negative rating on handling environmental matters. But this is an improvement over the 58-30 percent negative rating of 1976.

Electric utilities companies are rated 49-33 percent negative on their efforts to curb air and water pollution. But this is somewhat better than the 53-36 percent negative marks just two years back.

Two groups are judged positively for their efforts to clean up the environment.

By 53-34 percent, a majority gives a positive rating to environmental protection groups. Two years ago, the environmentalists received a slightly higher rating of 57-35 percent positive.

Consumer groups are rated 48-36 percent positive on their ecological activity, an improvement over their 45-41 percent positive showing back in 1976.

This year the Harris Survey also asked for evaluations of the environmental efforts of two new categories. Both came up with low ratings from the public.

Individual consumers are rated 58-33 percent negative on their efforts to help curb air and water pollution. In effect, the public is highly critical of itself for not doing what it can to control pollution.

Business in general is given 54-34 percent negative marks on environmental activity, quite comparable to the marks assigned both big and small industrial plants.

However negative they seem, the results of this survey indicate that people are increasingly optimistic that there will be a turnaround in the quality of the environment in the next few years. They seem to believe that the tough environmental control programs that have been put into effect over the past decade are beginning to work. At a time when Americans tend to be constantly critical of the business and government establishment, their positive reaction to efforts on pollution control must be viewed as significant development.

in writing before he appears before the Senate nominations subcommittee.

Hardeman, 75, is scheduled to appear Tuesday, but chairman Peyton McKnight said his appearance would be postponed until Schwartz is satisfied with the affidavit he has requested from Hardeman.

Hardeman made enemies during his 21 years in the Senate, 1947-68, and Schwartz was one of them.

Schwartz said he has asked Hardeman to explain why he refused to disqualify himself in a recent commission hearing and also to answer questions about his residence.

He said Hardeman should not accept his appointment to the commission because he lives in Austin but claims to be a resident of San Angelo.

Schwartz said Hardeman's claim that his legal residence is in Tom Green County (San Angelo) "should come as a terrible shock to his family and the voters who ran him out of office."

Hardeman lost a re-election bid in 1968 to W.E. "Pete" Snelson of Midland.

In 1969 Hardeman was reported next in line for appointment by Gov. Preston Smith as secretary of state. After protests arose, however, Smith named him to the state insurance board.

When it became apparent he could not be confirmed, he was appointed executive director of the Texas Water Rights Commission, a job not subject to confirmation. In 1971 Smith appointed Hardeman as a member of the commission, and he was confirmed by the Senate in July 1972, with Schwartz voting "no."

After that term expired Feb. 1, 1975, Gov. Dolph Briscoe let Hardeman stay on the job without formal reappointment, presumably to permit him to escape further consideration by the Senate.

School Trustees Split On Election Suit

By JEFF SOUTH
Avalanche-Journal Staff

The most important debate on the suit challenging the Lubbock Independent School District at-large election system may take place not in a courtroom, but in the board room of the district's administration building.

According to interviews, the school board may well be divided over how to respond to the class action, filed in federal court by eight minority voters late Friday. Some board members say they agree in principle with the plaintiffs.

So before school trustees start defending themselves, they must reach a consensus on the issue of at-large vs. single-member district elections.

School board president Charles Waters said he hopes to call his colleagues into an executive session soon to discuss the litigation with attorneys. "I honestly don't know how the board might want to manage this lawsuit," Waters said.

He said there seem to be "four or five alternatives. We need to know how each board member stands."

For example, Lynn Stafford — who was elected to the board in April — said she stands by her campaign statements favoring a combination of the two election systems.

(The current system is at-large, meaning citywide voting with no residency restrictions. Under a single-member district system, certain seats on the school board would be designated for particular geographic areas of the city.)

Mrs. Stafford noted that the city already is divided into five high school attendance zones. "I still believe that having one school board member from each high school attendance area, and two members elected at large, would be a fair way to represent the city," she said.

Friday's suit, similar to one pending against the Lubbock City Council for the past two years, contends that at-large citywide voting dilutes the strength of minorities and handicaps them in getting representation on the school board.

Jose Ramirez, elected to the board in 1974 and currently serving as board secretary, said he would "tend to agree" with the plaintiffs.

"Ordinarily it is difficult for a Mexican-American to get elected at-large," he said. "From that standpoint, it is a single-member district system is needed" in ensuring full representation of all segments of the city on the board.

At the same time, however, Ramirez sees drawbacks in such a "ward system." Under the system, school board members may be looking out only for their own zones, instead of for the school district as a whole.

"My reaction is this: I don't particularly care for the ward system as such. But I can see some arguments for it that may outweigh the disadvantages," Ramirez said.

School board vice president Monte Hasle said that in terms of minority representation on the board, single-member districts may have no advantages over the current system.

He noted that the Lubbock school system has had and still has minority-group members on its governing board. Joan Ervin, a black, served on the board from 1970 to 1978; Ramirez's term won't be up until 1980.

Mrs. Ervin was defeated in her bid for re-election by Mrs. Stafford.

School trustee Giles M. "Ruddy" Forbes said he also favors the existing at-large system. The present system ensures that school trustees have a "citywide perspective" on issues, he said.

Waters himself said, "I don't have any objections personally to single-member districts." But he noted that "We've proven under the existing plurality system of voting that minority candidates can be elected."

"Under the present system, the community has shown it will support and elect competent, qualified, dedicated citizens, whatever their race."

As a whole, the school district's population is estimated at 61 percent white, 27 percent Mexican-American and 12 percent black. The current school board has six whites and one Mexican-American.

The board isn't scheduled to hold another election until April, 1980.

Radiation's Low Level Risk Minor But Continuous

By The Associated Press

We can't taste or touch it. We often can't see or hear it. Some of it is good for us and some isn't. We live with it, day after day, and we don't really know what it does to us.

"It" is radiation.

Radiation from the sun, from X-rays, from microwave ovens, from television sets and even from our bodies.

Radiation found in nature and radiation created by man.

Radiation that cures and radiation that kills.

Most Americans never come in contact with the amount of radiation we associate with mushroom-shaped clouds or nuclear reactors. What we face instead is a low level that poses a minor, but continual, risk.

How much radiation is around us? "Short of wearing a radiation badge there is no way of determining what level you've been exposed to," said Allan McGowan of the Scientists Institute for Public Information.

Radiation is defined as energy moving through space as invisible waves. The frequency of the waves determines their effect on man.

"We're always surrounded by radiation energy," said Dr. Solomon Michaelson of the University of Rochester Medical Center. "Heat and light are examples. They can be very beneficial."

What, then, makes some radiation dangerous? The key factor, according to McGowan, is its ability to penetrate the body, to enter "the molecular structure and cause damage."

Radiation from the infrared and ultraviolet rays of the sun can be particularly dangerous because "you're absorbing it in the surface layer of skin," Michaelson said.

There are two types of radiation: ionizing and non-ionizing. Ionizing radiation creates electrically charged ions which can disrupt body processes and cause death. Nuclear weapons produce ionizing radiation; so do X-rays and some television sets.

Non-ionizing radiation — from microwaves, light and sound — does not produce ions. It can, however, disrupt body processes. Too much generally causes sickness, not death, but massive doses can be fatal.

How much is too much? "We do not know definitely whether there is an amount of radiation below which injurious effects will not occur," says the Food and Drug Administration.

Winborn Gregory, a health physicist and Michaelson's colleague at the Rochester, N.Y., facility, said that radiation carries a risk "just like walking down the street does," but adds that the risk should not be overstated.

"Any increase in exposure to radiation increases the chance that something will happen," said McGowan. How much exposure to the sun, for example, is absolutely safe? "No exposure," he said.

Dr. Sidney Wolfe, head of the Health Research Group, a public-interest organization associated with Ralph Nader, notes that the "degree to which good research has been done to identify dangers from different types of radiation varies widely."

The FDA's Bureau of Radiological Health is responsible for measuring the biological effects from all types of radiation exposure. It is responsible for enforcing safety standards for products like television sets and microwave ovens.

The bureau says adverse effects from ionizing radiation are directly related to the amount involved. "In the case of non-ionizing radiation, the relationship between amount and effect is not known."

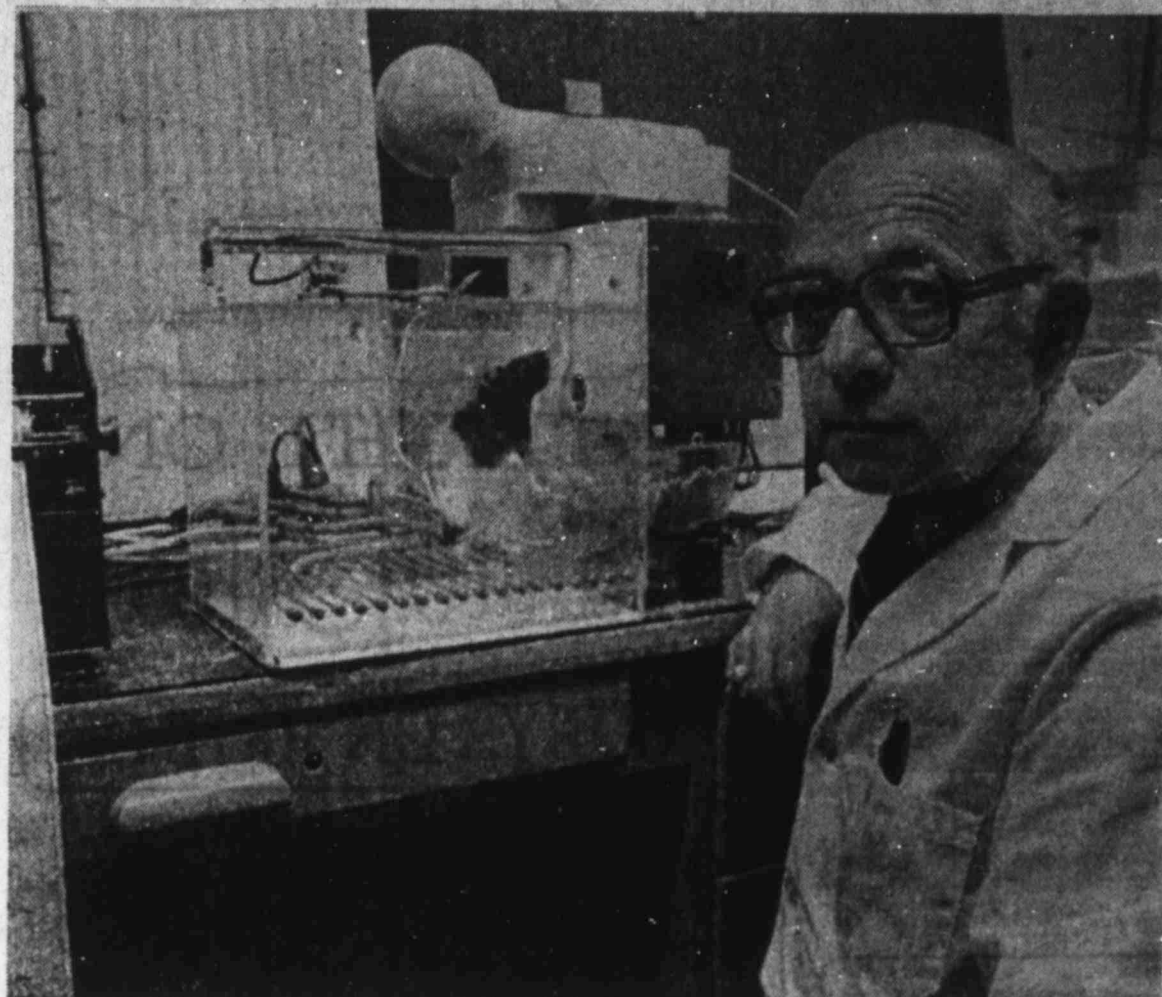

Emissions of ionizing radiation are measured in roentgens. When scientists talk about danger levels, however, they talk about "rems," which measure the amount of radiation energy absorbed per unit of body mass. Federal regulations now set 5 rems per year as the maximum dose for people who work with ionizing radiation. There have been proposals to cut the limit to half a rem a year.

Gregory said the average American gets 100 to 120 millirems a year from natural background radiation. (There are 1,000 millirems in a rem.) This includes radiation from elements in the earth, from outer space and even from substances like potassium 40 in our bodies. The levels vary with elevation and area.

The dose from nuclear power plants is even lower — three one-thousandths of a millirem for the average person, Gregory said.

Medical and dental X-rays account for 80 to 90 percent of the man-made radiation we face. The skin-level dose from a dental X-ray is about 200 millirems, but the amount absorbed by the body is 10 to 20 millirems, Wolfe said. A chest X-ray might result in a body dose of 10 to 30 millirems.

Assuming a 10-millirem level, you would have to have 500 X-rays in a year before you received the bodily dose allowed by the government for people like nuclear power plant workers. You should, however, avoid X-rays you don't need and, said Wolfe, you should ask your doctor or dentist when the machine was last inspected for possible leakage and whether it passed the test.

Phone Firms Refused Cable TV Waiver

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Communications Commission refused Monday to give small rural telephone companies a free hand in providing subscribers with cable television service they couldn't get otherwise.

However, the FCC proposed to change its rules to establish a population density below which telephone companies would be relieved of proving that independent cable TV operations are infeasible.

FCC rules now prohibit telephone companies from furnishing cable TV within their service area either directly or indirectly.

However, individual waivers may be granted on a showing that in a given community cable service could not exist without being affiliated with the local phone company.

The National Telephone Cooperative Association had petitioned the FCC for a general waiver of the rules to permit small telephone companies — those with 25 or fewer subscribers per route mile — to offer cable TV in rural areas where the services would not otherwise be economically feasible.

The association, representing predominantly rural cooperative telephone companies throughout the nation, contended that a general waiver would encourage small telephone companies to undertake the long-range planning necessary to provide cable to rural areas while preserving the opportunity for individual protests.

James Earl Ray Asks Ambassador For Help

PETROS, Tenn. (AP) — James Earl Ray says he is one of the "political prisoners" Andrew Young had in mind, and he wants the United Nations ambassador to help him win a new trial for the killing of Martin Luther King Jr.

Ray sent a letter to Young after meeting Friday at Brushy Mountain State Penitentiary with four congressmen on the House Assassinations Committee.

"Since Memphis is a lot closer than Moscow, I ask you to meet with President Carter and ask him to request that I be given a new trial," Ray wrote. "Those trials in Moscow may be unfair and completely political but at least the defendants there have a trial. For 10 years, that is all that I have asked for."

Young recently aroused the ire of Carter and many of the nation's political leaders when he said the United States has hundreds of its own political prisoners.

Young later said he did not mean to imply a similarity between the level of political freedom in Russia and the United States.

Young was one of King's aides and was with him at the Lorraine Motel in Memphis when the civil rights leader was killed by a rifle shot on April 4, 1968, during a municipal garbage strike.

In exchange for a 99-year prison term rather than the death penalty, Ray pleaded guilty in 1969 to killing King. But three days later, Ray tried to withdraw the plea and has been trying ever since to win a new trial.

What Teacher Mary Lou Wise learned:

'Losing weight at Pat Walker's is fun'

So begins a letter from the vivacious Ms. Wise, who teaches second-grade pupils. She continues:

"Before going to Pat Walker's, I just ate without thinking. My eating habits have changed, thanks to the program. I know now how to eat the foods I enjoy without having ever to look again at the 65½ inches and 37½ pounds I have lost."

Now that she weighs 113 pounds, it has been self-rewarding to shop for a size 9 instead of a 16, she adds.

A PAT WALKER exclusive SYMMETRICON, found only at Pat Walker's is the passive exercise equipment that safely and gently firms and tones body tissue, simultaneously improving your circulation and helping to correct your posture. Treatments are given in complete privacy, of course, and you can wear your regular street clothes. You reduce safely — but effectively — as your measurements go down just where they need to do so.

Tune In Tomorrow

By JON-MICHAEL REED
NEW YORK — ABC's "Ryan's Hope" will soon lose another original cast member. Less than half of the debuting cast members will remain on the serial after Malcolm Groome departs from his role as Pat Ryan at the end of this month.

Malcolm's performances on "RH" have always been finely tuned. His delivery was straightforwardly understated with a wonderful combination of affecting melancholy and tender humor. Groome was born in Greensboro, N. C., and is a graduate of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. "RH" fans were generally unaware that Malcolm is an accomplished singer and dancer as well as actor. He appeared in the Broadway version of "Grease" and several off-Broadway rock musicals before landing the role of intern Pat on "RH." Groome hopes to expand his career into nighttime TV and films after leaving the soap opera.

Inheriting the role in early August will be serial newcomer John Blazo. Another "RH" replacement is Megan McCracken, who has taken over the role of Nancy Feldman, previously portrayed by Lisa Sutton.

NEWCOMERS To "Days of Our Lives" include Elizabeth Brooks as the new singer at Doug's Place and Stephen Schmetzer as Steve Olson, Julie's brother who had been living off-screen in Paris almost from the day the serial debuted in 1965.

THE CHARACTER of Rick Ludlow on "Another World" is slated to cause romantic confusion for Marianne Randolph, and Scott Palmer has been cast as the young charmer.

"LOVE OF LIFE" has recently added a slew of new characters. Among the latest is Jake Turner as Zachary Bly, a friend of Elliott Hampton Lang, played by Ted Leplat. "LOL" is 25-year-old bachelor Jake's first regular serial role, although he once had a bit part on "Ryan's Hope." Speaking of Elliott, his wife Betsy will finally return on the "LOL" scene next week. Actress Elizabeth Kemp had prior off-Broadway commitments, so this time around Betsy will be portrayed by Margo McKenna.

BOB HOVER, who last played Brian Ellison on "As the World Turns" and before that had been one of the Russ Matthews on "Another World," surfaced briefly on "All My Children" as Adrian Shepherd, Ellen's former husband and teenager Devon's dad.

THE MAILBAG:

Did Gary Frank, who plays Willie Lawrence on nighttime's "Family," ever appear on a soap? I vaguely remember him from one of the afternoon dramas. — T. K., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Yes, Gary, who was born in Spokane, Wa., and grew up in southern California, landed the role of bedridden patient Mark Simpson on "General Hospital" in the summer of 1973. Mark was a would-be suicide case who received therapy from Drs. Taylor and Webber. The role only lasted a few months, then Gary went on to appear in the short-lived nighttime series, "Sons and Daughters," before being cast as Willie. The actor met his wife on the set of "Family." She was a production assistant and they were wed two years ago.

Has the young actress who plays Margo on "Days of Our Lives" appeared on other serials? — B.L., Worcester, Mass.

Actress Suzanne Zenor is making her serial debut on "DOOL." But she did appear in the movie version of Woody Allen's "Play It Again Sam," in which she was featured as the braless, disco-bouncing blonde that Woody swore he'd sell his mother to the Arabs for.

Is it possible to get the actors and actresses on "The Doctors" to speak up so you can hear what they are saying? I have to turn up the volume control but when the commercials come on the TV blasts me out of my seat. And I'd like very much to hear what they are saying. — L.H., Winston-Salem, N. C.

That's understandable. Your complaint has been forwarded to the show's producer and duly noted. Tune in tomorrow to see if the situation has changed.

(Send your questions about soap operas to "Tune In Tomorrow" in care of this newspaper. Questions cannot be answered personally but those of general interest will be answered in future columns.)

It took expert South about 30 seconds to play the six-notrump contract. Twenty of them went for analysis of the diamond suit. South saw that he needed four diamond tricks. He rose with dummy's king of spades, led a diamond to his hand, dropped West's singleton queen and claimed his slam with two tricks in each manor suit and four in each minor.

"How did you see my singleton queen?" asked

West. "I guess I had better really hold my cards back."

"I didn't see anything at all," replied South. "I just made the safety play to insure four diamond tricks against anything except a 5-0 break. If I had been in seven I would have played my jack and been down two at that contract."

Look this hand over. Suppose that either East or West held four diamonds to the queen. South would have returned to dummy with a club and then led a diamond toward his jack. If East held the rest of the diamonds he would score his queen, but that would be all. If West held four diamonds East would show out. The jack would force the queen and the 10 would be finessed later.

Suppose the suit broke 3-2.

There would be one and just one diamond loser.

ANN LANDERS

Dear Ann Landers: How does one protect oneself against a liar? Please don't tell me to avoid her. I would like nothing better, but it isn't possible. This person is part of a longtime social circle as well as a relative. Our paths cross constantly.

She is especially dangerous because her stories have a quality of believability that is fantastic. She always manages to hook some half-truths onto her lies. She also exaggerates a great deal. It's impossible to tell where the truth ends and the lie begins. I marvel at the way she can get facts twisted up so things can never be untangled.

This woman has caused me quite a lot of trouble and many sleepless nights. What can I do about it? — Defenseless and Frustrated

Dear D. and F.: People who lie eventually reveal themselves. They can get away with it for only so long and then their credibility falls apart.

Your best protection against a liar is

TO YOUR GOOD HEALTH

BY DR. GEORGE C. THOSTESON

Dear Dr. Thosteson: My doctor told me X-rays show I have a little emphysema and should quit smoking. I did.

Then I went to another doctor and he told me there is no way you can tell if a person has emphysema by X-rays. He said you could X-ray a person dying from emphysema and it wouldn't show. A friend who works in a hospital asked an X-ray man about this and he said, sure you can tell by X-rays. Who am I to believe? I would like to know if I have it or not. — Mrs. A.L.W.

It is difficult to diagnose emphysema from a casual X-ray examination unless the disease has progressed considerably. A skilled radiologist might be able to because of his years of examining healthy and diseased lungs. Any emphysema obvious from X-ray would be more advanced than mild. Fancier techniques, such as bronchoscope or tomography (cross-sectional X-ray), are more reliable indicators. So are lung function (breathing) tests that determine how well gases are being exchanged across the lung sacs (alveoli).

Emphysema is difficult to distinguish from bronchitis in X-rays. Anyway, the important thing is that irregularities were found and you did quit smoking, the chief cause of most lung disorders. Your emphysema can be confirmed if X-rays raised suspicions. For your own peace of mind have this done.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: I have hypoglycemia that was diagnosed after a six-hour glucose tolerance test. I am currently on the high-protein, low-carbohydrate diet, getting six small meals a day with protein at each meal. I still feel anxious, nervous and irritable at times. About how long should it take to arrest this condition? — M.L.

The effects of the diet should be fairly rapid, i.e., as soon as the blood sugar gets up to normal and levels off there. Diet is not always the whole story. Anxiety can produce a low blood sugar state. So stop watching for the "pot to boil," an adage that has much truth when applied to medicine.

It's well you had diagnosis from the complex blood sugar test. A test later on will tell if the diet is helping produce better blood sugar levels. If it is not, then your doctors might begin looking to the source of insulin production that is keeping the level low. So for now, try to eliminate anxiety and expect the best of the diet plan. See my booklet, "Help for Hypoglycemia," for answers to your other questions. Send 50 cents and a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Dr. Thosteson, P.O. Box 11210, Chicago, Ill. 60611. Enclose a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope and 35 cents.

self-addressed envelope to Dr. Thosteson, P.O. Box 11210, Chicago, Ill. 60611.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: How many calories a day does a baby need through the first year of life? Is breast milk sufficient to supply this need? — Mrs. P.F.

The average infant requires from 60 to 75 calories a day for each pound of body weight in the first six months. But even though the baby doubles his birthweight during the first year, his calorie-per-pound needs actually are less in the second six months. Breast milk from healthy mothers is sufficient to supply these needs. To be on the safe side most doctors prescribe supplements of vitamin A and of iron.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: To help settle a family argument, can you tell us if an autopsy would show the presence and location of a blood clot? — Mrs. D.W.

An autopsy will reveal a blood clot in the heart, lung, brain, kidneys or the arms and legs.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: When can a nursing mother expect to resume menstruation? My baby is six months old and I intend to continue breastfeeding until he is about a year old, along with solid foods. I also wonder if the perineal ring becomes more elastic over time after an episiotomy. — Mrs. N.R.

Menstruation can be expected four to six weeks after delivery. If you are nursing it might take longer, often until nursing has stopped. The episiotomy is a small incision made to enlarge the vaginal opening to make the birth easier. The scar might tend to be rigid, but in time this should relax.

Emphysema can be controlled. To learn how to live with this serious lung problem, write for a copy of Dr. Thosteson's booklet, "How to Control Emphysema," P.O. Box 11210, Chicago, Ill. 60611. Enclose a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope and 35 cents.

Hints from Heloise

DEAR HELOISE:

I have a hint that I used recently when I was invited to a grocery shower.

I put several articles in a box and then discovered that I didn't have gift wrapping paper for a shower.

Know what I thought of?

I used plain white tissue paper. Then I cut out several coupons from magazines and taped the coupons on the top and sides of the box.

Instead of a bow, I used a recipe card with a favorite recipe written on it.

I thought the coupons would be very appropriate as this was a grocery shower and the cents-off coupons could save the bride a few pennies when she goes shopping. — Quincine Brown

DEAR HELOISE:

Our family likes crackers — all varieties. I keep them in a plastic container. After a few additions to the container I have lots of crumbs and small pieces that keep getting passed over.

These go into my blender and into crumbs. They make a very flavorful coating for fish, chicken or any meat. — Ita

Retraction Deadline Issued By Soviets

MOSCOW (AP) — The New York Times and Baltimore Sun have until Aug. 2 to publish retractions of articles by two reporters who were found by a Moscow court to have slandered Soviet television. Soviet legal sources said Monday. The newspapers have said they will not issue retractions in the case.

The judgment against reporters Craig R. Whitney of the Times and Harold Phipps of the Sun was made July 18 by a Moscow City Court judge, who gave the papers five days to publish retractions either in their own pages or in the Soviet press.

But the sources explained that Judge Lev Almazov's ruling is not effective until next Saturday, allowing for a standard 10-day period for filing appeals, and that the deadline for the retractions would then come five days after that, Aug. 2.

If they are not published by then, the court may impose a fine of 50 rubles a day — $73 — on each reporter, up to a maximum of 300 rubles, $438. The court also has ordered the correspondents to pay between them court costs totaling $3,342.

The case stemmed from articles by Whitney and Phipps in which they quoted friends and relatives of an imprisoned dissident as questioning the authenticity of a televised confession the man made.

Almazov held that the two reporters had "crudely slandered" the Soviet television system. Whitney and Phipps refused to take part in the court proceeding, arguing that it was "tantamount to censorship."

The managing editor of the Times, Seymour Topping, said Monday the newspaper had no public reaction to the news of the deadline. He said the Times was sticking by its previous statement, that there would be no retraction.

He said the Times was not prepared to announce yet whether it would appeal the judgment, or whether it would pay the court costs or fines.

Immediately after the verdict, Baltimore Sunpapers Publisher Donald H. Patterson said his paper would be willing to pay the fee levied for court costs.

The first private pension plan for a college was introduced in 1892 when Columbia University adopted a plan providing a pension for professors with at least 15 years of service at age 65, according to the American Council of Life Insurance.

Lawyer Discusses Student 'Pirating'

AUSTIN (AP) — Newton Gresham of the Texas College Coordinating Board said Monday one of the board's highest priorities is to try to stop colleges from attempting to steal students from one another.

This "pirating" of students comes when a college sets up an off-campus program in a city that already has a school that could offer the program. Gresham told the Senate nominations subcommittee.

"We discourage them from actively advertising for or soliciting students," said Gresham, a Houston lawyer.

"There is not a perfect answer to it," he said, "and it is a problem at this time."

Sen. A.R. Schwartz, D-Galveston, said he understood that the University of Houston, for example, was trying to offer courses that Texas A&M could offer in Galveston.

Schwartz said, however, the coordinating board "has done a great deal to make the schools pull in their horns."

"It is one of the highest priorities the board has right now," said Gresham.

African Nations End Summit Conference

KHARTOUM, Sudan (AP) — African nations, wrenched by ideological and ethnic differences and wracked by territorial wars, wound up their 15th major summit conference last week with the dream of unity as elusive as ever.

One delegate to the Organization of African Unity meeting in the Sudan capital reflected that the late Kwame Nkrumah, one of its founding fathers, would have been "deeply saddened" by the spectacle of an independent Africa divided and squabbling.

It was Nkrumah, first president of Ghana and first African leader to win independence from a colonial power, who told the inaugural 1963 meeting of the African-Arab club:

"If we are to remain free, if we are to enjoy the full benefits of Africa's enormous wealth, we must unite to plan our total defense and the full exploitation of our human and material resources in the interests of all our people."

Fifteen years later, feuds between member states and failures to resolve Africa's most burning issues of poverty, ignorance and disease highlighted the OAU summit.

The 34 African leaders who attended this year's conference failed to settle conflicts involving Ethiopia and secessionist guerrillas in the northern Eritrea and southeast Ogaden regions. Nor did they resolve anti-government wars by rebels in Angola and Chad or the fighting between Algeria-backed Polisario guerrilla and Mauritania and Morocco over the disputed former Spanish Sahara.

United Nations Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim, in an address to the 49-nation body, pointed out that while many states were producing less food per person than at independence 83 million of the continent's 400 million people were struggling to survive below the breadline.

At the same time, he said, conflicts had created more than 4 million L.T. Gen. Olu-segun Obasanjo, the Nigerian head-of-state, asserted that Africa's problems "are about sustenance, education, health and about shelter."

The Nigerian leader called for "massive economic assistance...not military hardware for self destruction or stale ideological slogans that have no relevance for Africans."

Agostinho Neto, president of Marxist Angola, also urged the OAU to turn its attention more toward economic independence.

"Today Africa appears to be an inert body from which every culture picks its piece," he said, in an indisguised reference to continuing foreign controls over Africa's trade and influence in governments.

He urged the OAU to plan industrialization to tap the abundant wealth of energy and mineral resources traditionally sold to the developed world at prices uncontrolled by African states.

The dominant issue at the summit, however, was over foreign military intervention which resulted in what Uganda's President Idi Amin called "hot words" and drew battlelines between moderate and radical African states.

The moderates defended the 14,000-man French military presence in many of France's poor former colonies while the radicals justified the retention of 40,000 Cuban troops and hundreds of Soviet military advisers in war-torn Marxist states such as Angola and Ethiopia.

Congo Foreign Minister Theophile Obenga castigated those African countries which contributed troops to the French-sponsored peacekeeping force in Zaire after the May invasion of the mineral-rich Shaba province by Angola-based Zaire rebels.

Such actions, he said, constituted "high treason and a flagrant violation of the OAU charter." The charter forbids interference in the internal affairs of member nations.

Moscow and Havana also came under fire from anti-Communist African leaders.

Somali President Mohammed Siad Barre lashed out at the Cubans for acting as "proxies for the Soviet Union," branding Moscow a "highly active participant in the scramble for the recolonization of Africa."

Nigeria, acknowledging that Soviet and Cuban intervention was originally invited by certain African states, also warned them not to overstay their welcome in Africa.

The differences were irreconcilable. In the end, a compromise summit declaration accommodating conflicting views supported the "inalienable right" of African states to seek military help from any source and called for the closure of foreign military bases and an end to military pacts with powers outside the continent.

The summit also reflected its impotence in decisively resolving long-standing disputes between member states by referring such issues to special committees for mediation.

Thus, even as the 15th summit broke up for another year confrontations and conflicts remained unended between at least eight member states.

As at all previous OAU conferences, the summit was wholly united on one point — its determination to bring back majority rule to South Africa, South-West Africa and Rhodesia.

But, overall, the only real evidence of the unity that Nkrumah once passionately spoke of were the symbolic flags of the 49 member nations fluttering side by side outside the Chinese-built Friendship Hall where the conference was held.

Guerrillas Attack Capital Of Rhodesia

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (AP) — Black nationalist guerrillas and Rhodesian security forces clashed in the capital of Salisbury at the weekend for the first time in six years of war, leaving three insurgents dead and two wounded, police reported Monday.

At least one black civilian was wounded in three shootouts in segregated black suburbs within eight miles of the central district, according to a statement which that an official three-day censorship ban on the incidents.

Previously, clashes have been reported in Rhodesia's second-largest city of Bulawayo and beyond 20 miles of Salisbury between government forces and guerrillas seeking to topple the four-month bi-racial administration.

The first clash was Friday night, according to the police statement, when one guerrilla was seriously wounded after attempting to rob a beer hall in the black township of Mufakose.

The guerrilla opened fire with an automatic weapon when police arrived. The Shangara beer hall was badly damaged in the ensuing battle, police said.

Police said three guerrillas "traced" to a house in the Highlands township in follow-up operations were shot dead after they hurled grenades at police who surrounded the house. Reporters visiting the scene found windows and the back door were shattered, about 2,000 bullets appeared to have peppered the building and the concrete floor was gouged by apparent grenade blasts.

Early Saturday afternoon, another guerrilla and a black lookout were wounded in the third shootout at a Highlands beer hall, police said.

"Police opened fire when the terrorist attempted to throw a grenade at them," the statement said of the third incident.

Police said they seized a quantity of arms and ammunition manufactured in Communist countries in the townships.

By DIANA PAGE
BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (UPI) — It's chock full of proteins, has vitamins too, and if you haven't tried krill yet — just wait.

The 13 nations of the Antarctic Treaty, including the United States, are presently meeting in Buenos Aires to try to lay down some rules for the marine resources before the exploitation of southern oceans gets out of hand.

The tiny cousin of the shrimp, found mainly in the icy waters off the Antarctic, has been living in a Krill's paradise. His traditional enemy, the whale, has all but disappeared, and except for the danger of an occasional seal or hungry penguin, the krill just floats along in masses nibbling on plankton in the southern oceans.

But this rich source of protein couldn't escape the notice of the greatest predator — man.

The Norwegians named it. The Japanese will catch 22,000 tons of it this year. The Russians are racing the Japanese to develop a marketable krill product and already are using it as an additive to cheese and butter. The Poles make a paste, too. The Chileans have concocted "krill sticks" to replace fish sticks. The West Germans also are well into research on the possibilities.

But the delegates to the consultative Antarctic conference didn't come to Buenos Aires looking for cheap krills. With unusual foresight, the Antarctic treaty nations decided during a London meeting last year to call a special conference to draw up a convention to conserve live marine resources while allowing rational use.

The International Whaling Convention set a precedent for cooperation in this area, but only after the whale was in danger of extinction.

The Antarctic Seal Convention went into effect this March, six years after it was drawn up to protect a growing colony of seals which were almost wiped out by hunters at the turn of the century.

The krill was merely an object of scientific curiosity until the 1970's, and despite all the countries doing research on its utilization, there are a number of problems that stand between the krill and the world's dining room tables.

Krill deteriorate very quickly when removed from Antarctic waters and normal refrigeration processes may not be safe enough. Their shells are harder than shrimps. Having to remove the shell either in the factory or the kitchen may be an obstacle. Finally the Antarctic climate is inhospitable and the fishing season is short.

There is no firm figure of how much krill exists in the southern oceans.

Estimates of the possible harvest run from double the world's fish catch of 60 million tons down to a mere 10 million tons.

Krill are blissfully ignorant of the 60th parallel in waters claimed by individual nations. The scientists want a marine resources convention that would treat the ecosystem as one.

This means looking at krill not just as a resource but as part of a cycle, as food for whales as well as men. It means recognizing that national boundaries must be flexible — with or without 200-mile fishing territories — to include the whole habitat of the ecosystem in order to conserve the resources.

If the 13 countries can agree to a draft convention by July 29, then it will have to be formally agreed on at still another meeting to be held this year. Other nations would be invited to participate. The final result could be a major step for conservation.

PUBLIC TRANSPORTATION
AUSTIN (AP) — The state highway commission has asked the federal Urban Mass Transportation Administration to approve a $2.2 million public transportation program for Laredo. The commission directed its staff Monday to notify the administration that $279,000 in state funds is available if the administration approves the city's request for a $1.7 million federal grant. The city is to pay $150,000. The money is to be used for buying 14 new air-conditioned buses and equipment to maintain the buses.

State Department Eyes Bolivian Regime

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department said Monday that U.S. relations with Bolivia are under review following that country's abortive attempt to return to democratic rule.

Department spokesman Hodding Carter said the administration is withholding any judgments about the future of U.S. relations with Bolivia "pending a clarification" of the new regime's intentions.

He expressed hope that the regime, under Gen. Juan Pereda Asbun, "will preserve the earlier gains in individual human rights and move quickly to re-establish a genuine process of democratic political development that meets the legitimate aspirations of the Bolivian people."

Carter said relations between the two countries have not been suspended but that they were under review, a diplomatic term that suggests U.S. dissatisfaction with last week's events.

In July 9 presidential elections, Pereda had led the vote count, but the National Electoral Court, citing widespread allegations of fraud, decided to scrap the results and hold new elections.

However, Pereda's supporters staged an uprising that led to the resignation of seven-year President Hugo Banzer.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I am 29, single and will earn $18,000 this year. I invest $300 to $350 a month. Part goes into an individual retirement account (IRA) at the rate of $1,500 a year. The rest goes into a tax-exempt, managed, municipal bond fund.

My broker says the bond fund is a good program for me, because the tax-free dividends will become more beneficial as my income increases. Should I continue with it or do something else with my money?

A. To begin with, I think you're some kind of a wonder — socking away $3,600 to $4,200 a year on an $18,000 salary. Congratulations. And continue with the IRA. The money you're putting there reduces your tax bite and will be tax-sheltered until you start taking it out — most likely after retirement.

At the rate you're going, you should have a very comfortable retirement — for the simple reason that you started early in life.

The tax-free interest from that municipal bond mutual fund will be advantageous to you when your income rises to the point where you will be in about the 31 percent income tax bracket. People in lower tax brackets — and you seem to be among them — can do better by investing in taxable but higher-yielding investments.

For a single person, the 31 percent federal tax levy is on "taxable" income in excess of $16,200 and up to $18,200. You remove $1,500 from the Internal Revenue Service's clutches each year by putting it into your IRA. After your personal exemption and what ever deductions you can take, your taxable income now must be below where the 31 percent tax bite begins.

So, based on the information you supply, tax-exempt income situations don't seem to be right for you — at least, not yet. Also, straight income-producing investments provide no protection against inflation. A young person should put a fair chunk of his money into things that it is hoped will grow in dollar value in the years ahead.

Q. I need help investing what was left to me in savings and insurance when my husband died in April. I am 61 and receive $836 a month from pension and Social Security. My health costs are paid for and my home, worth at least $70,000, is mortgage-free.

So far, I have put $12,375 with an insurance company at 6 percent interest, $37,500 into insured savings certificates and $44,500 in passbook savings. How can I invest this money and how can I find a reliable adviser?

A. By taking your time. Your husband left you financially independent. You don't have to rush into things. Visit a number of banks and brokerage houses and explain your problem. Listen to suggestions and take notes but don't make any commitments until you have "made the rounds."

I wish I could give you a pat formula for picking an adviser. But I can't, because none exists. My recommendations for your particular situation would be to keep about $5,000 in passbook savings, $20,000 to $30,000 in savings certificates and the rest in quality dividend-paying common stocks — heavily tilted toward utilities.

But, under no circumstances, should you put a bundle of money into the stock market at one time. Do it slow and easy — spaced out over a year or two or even longer.

Q. You advise people to subscribe to the automatic dividend reinvestment plan many companies make available to their stockholders. You seem to overlook the considerable bookkeeping involved. If a person reinvests dividends four times a year for 20 years, he will have 80 bookkeeping entries. Wouldn't it be more practical to save up and buy, say, 20 shares at a time — even after paying a small commission?

A. Not in my book. One of the beauties of a dividend reinvestment plan is that it is done automatically. The investor gets a confirmation slip after each transaction. That slip should be saved for record keeping purposes — as should all confirmation slips. No big thing.

Tearful Martin Hangs 'Em Up As NY Manager

KANSAS CITY (AP) — Billy Martin, weeping openly and with disappointment and grief, resigned under pressure Monday as manager of the New York Yankees and was immediately replaced by Bob Lemon.

Martin's resignation, which came after his Sunday night tirade against team owner George Steinbrenner, ended almost three seasons of controversy.

"Billy needed to resign for health reasons, but I couldn't let any employee of the Yankees say things like that about the front office," said Yankee president Al Rosen.

Although Martin denied making the slurring remarks, Rosen said, "I'm absolutely satisfied that Billy made the comment."

"We have had concern for Billy's physical and mental—I shouldn't say mental—well-being," the Yankee president said. Rosen said he felt that Martin's health led up to the remarks about Steinbrenner.

Third base coach Dick Howser ran the team in Monday night's contest against the Kansas City Royals and Lemon, who had been replaced as manager of the Chicago White Sox on June 29, is expected to take over the club in time for tonight's game here.

Martin announced his resignation with a brief statement at the Crown Center Hotel, saying: "There will be no questions before or after or forever, because I'm a Yankee and Yankees don't throw stones."

The move came with the Yankees, world champions one year ago, in third place in the American League East, 10 games behind the Boston Red Sox.

But it wasn't their spot in the standings that proved Martin's undoing. It was a remark he reportedly made at Chicago's O'Hare International Airport Sunday night as the team waited for its flight to Kansas City. Martin unleashed a tirade to newsmen against Reggie Jackson, the $2.9-million outfielder who had just rejoined the club after a five-day suspension occasioned by Jackson's defying Martin's instructions.

Then, according to Murray Chass of the New York Times and Henry Hecht of the New York Post — the only writers with Martin at the time — the manager said: "They (Steinbrenner and Jackson) deserve each other. One's a born liar and the other's convicted."

The remark referred to Steinbrenner's guilty plea in 1971 concerning a $25,000 contribution to President Nixon's reelection campaign. Steinbrenner pleaded guilty to giving a false explanation of the contribution and of coercing his employees to do the same. He was suspended from baseball for two years by Commissioner Bowie Kuhn after the incident, although the sentence was later reduced to 16 months.

Martin denied making the remark Monday but both Chass and Hecht told The Associated Press they were absolutely certain he did make it.

Steinbrenner was shocked when told of Martin's statement. "It's hard to believe he said those things," said the Yankee owner by phone from Tampa, Fla. "My only question is, 'Had he been drinking?'"

Chass and Hecht said Martin was not drunk. "He was in control," said Hecht.

Martin attempted to read a brief statement at the hotel but was overcome by emotion and could not finish. He said: "I owe it to my health to resign. I'm sorry about some things that were printed. I did not say them. I want to thank my coaches, the players and the news media for everything. . . . then wracked by grief, he was led away by Cedric Tallis, the Yankees' general manager.

There have been rumors that Martin is suffering from a liver ailment but he has denied them.

Martin previously managed at Minnesota, Detroit and Texas and was fired from all three posts, not for a lack of success on the field but due to stormy relations with the front office.

Steinbrenner, speaking from Tampa, said the Yankees would honor the remaining time on Martin's contract. Martin is reportedly being paid $80,000 this season and $60,000 next.

"We have never worked better together than we have the last two or three weeks," Steinbrenner said of Martin. "On learning of the Chicago thing I was shocked. You could have knocked me over."

"The events that have transpired in the last hours have little significance when compared to a man's concern for his own well-being. These things along with his family are far more important than the game of baseball."

"I am grateful to Billy for his contributions as manager of the Yankees. He brought us a championship. His apologies over the recent incident are accepted with no further comment necessary. I think Billy knows of our concern for the well-being of his family and himself. We wish him good luck."

Team president Al Rosen, who flew here Monday after talking with Steinbrenner, was grim after Martin's tearful farewell.

"As you can imagine, this was all a matter of grave concern to all of us," said Rosen. "I think it was pretty obvious that Billy was very emotional about all of this."

Rosen indicated Martin's health was a major factor. "Billy looks very tired and, at times, very haggard. We are going through a tough season, and when your manager gets to feeling bad, when your manager says his doctor told him he has a spot on his liver and . . . This is a tougher season for us because we're world champions anyway."

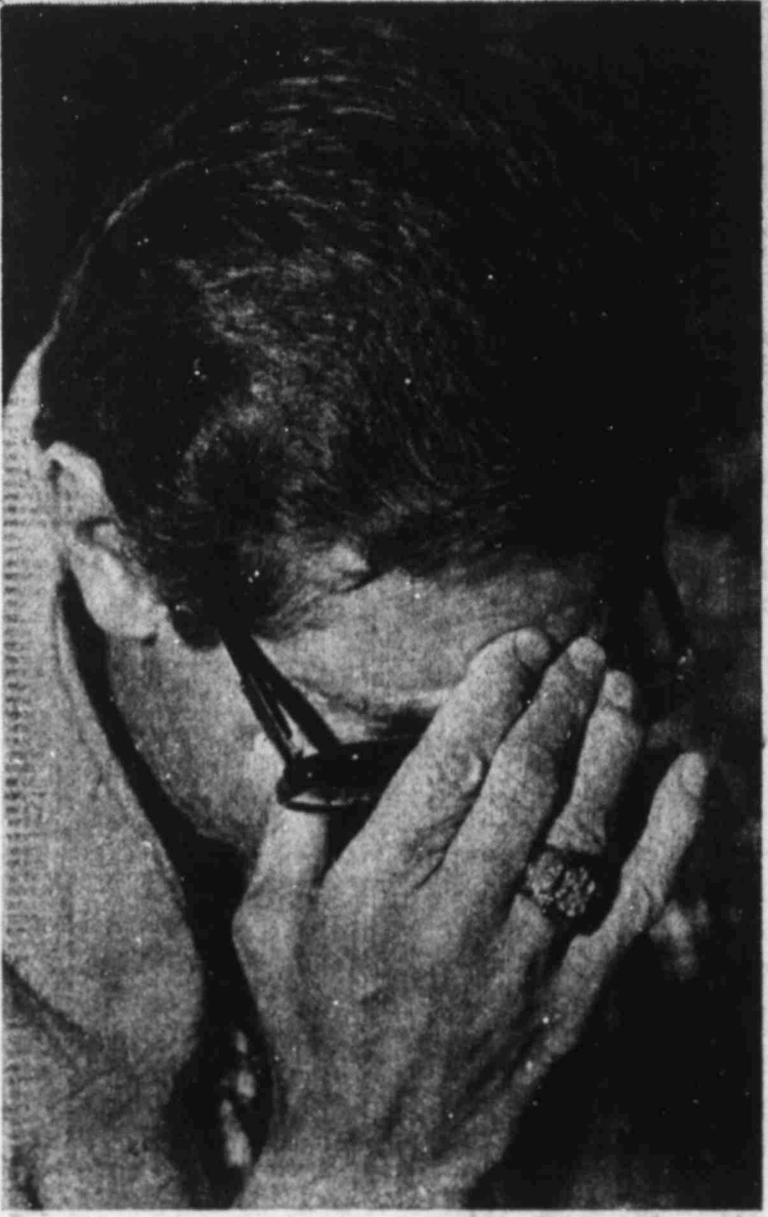

Rosen described the day's events as "a few very trying hours for us. We wish Billy well. We also wish ourselves well."

Martin's latest blowup was prompted by the return of Jackson to the team Sunday in Chicago. Jackson was suspended for intentionally ignoring Martin's order to swing away in the 10th inning of a game against Kansas City on July 17 in New York. Jackson attempted to bunt and failed.

Upon his return, Jackson, who did not play, declined to apologize, insisting the best strategy was to bunt.

Martin, apparently incensed at what he felt was Jackson's failure to be contrite, blasted his outfielder after the game.

"If Reggie doesn't shut his mouth, he won't play!" Martin bellowed. "I don't care what George says! He can replace me right now if he doesn't like it!"

TEARFUL ENDING — New York Yankees manager Billy Martin bows his head and covers his face as he begins to sob at an impromptu press conference called Monday to announce that he had resigned. On his finger is the World Championship ring which he earned as manager last year. (AP Laserphoto)

Rose Ties Hit Record

NEW YORK (AP) — Responding to the chants of a once-hostile Shea Stadium crowd, Cincinnati's Pete Rose tied the modern National League record hitting streak of 37 consecutive games Monday night, stroking a pair of singles in the Reds' 5-3 victory over the New York Mets.

Hitless in his first three at-bats, Rose came to the plate with one out in the seventh inning.

"I hit the ball solidly two times, but straight in the air," he said. "I thought I'd have one more at bat after that. I wasn't worried."

After a crowd of more than 30,000, including Commissioner Bowie Kuhn, gave him a standing ovation and chanted, "Let's Go Pete," Rose bunted foul on the first pitch.

"After that bunt, Lenny (Randle, New York's third baseman), was close enough to shake my hand," Rose said.

The next pitch was wide and then Rose slashed a single to left, tying the record set 33 years ago by Tommy Holmes with the old Boston Braves.

The crowd cheered loudly for the Cincinnati star.

"I couldn't believe that chanting," said Rose. "It was quite a feeling inside. I wish I could have called time and shaken hands with each one of them."

Five years ago, the same Shea Stadium fans had pelted Rose with debris and booed him after he was involved in a fight with then-Met shortstop Bud Harrelson during the NL playoffs.

"Nah, those weren't the same fans who threw the bottles in 1973," said Rose. "They all retired."

After Rose's streak-tying single, the ball was returned to Met first baseman Willie Montanez, who flipped it to the Cincinnati star. Rose turned it over to first base coach Ron Plaza as the fans continued to roar.

"Willie told me to take off my hat or 'we'll be here all day'. When I did, they just cheered louder."

Rose's milestone hit came against former teammate Pat Zachry, who left the game later in the inning. When he reached the dugout, Zachry kicked the dust in disgust and suffered contusions of his left foot. He left the ballpark on crutches and will be X-rayed this morning.

Rose added a second hit in the ninth, smacking a first-pitch single into left field off reliever Skip Lockwood. A moment later, he trotted home in front of Mike Lum, whose two-run homer provided the winning runs in the Reds' 5-3 victory.

Rose said that he had changed bats after making out his first three times at bat against Zachry — two of them fly balls to center fielder Lee Mazzilli and the other one a force play grounder to Worststop Tim O.

"I just went to a newer bat. I used it in batting practice so I decided to take it up there," Rose said.

The decision paid off with the streak-stretching single that put Rose's name in the record book alongside that of Holmes.

Rose goes for No. 38 tonight against Mets right-hander Craig Swan. If he makes it, he will have the fifth longest hit streak in major league baseball history. The next target will be the 40-game streak of Ty Cobb set in 1911.

The 37-year-old Rose, in his 16th major league season, is enjoying one of the most memorable years of his career.

Along with joining the elite 3,000-hit club, Rose moved into 10th place on the all-time hit list, passing Cap Anson's total of 3,081 earlier this month. Paul Waner is ninth with 3,152 hits. Ty Cobb holds the major league mark of 4,191.

Other National League hitting streaks that Rose already has surpassed include 33 games by Rogers Hornsby in 1922 and 31-game spurts by Willie Davis in 1969 and Rico Carty in 1970.

"Records are part of the game," Rose has said. "You accumulate records if you play long enough and hit long enough. But you can't set too many of them just playing 10 years."

In June, 1977, Rose broke Frankie Frisch's record of 2,880 hits by a switch-hitter.

After establishing the switch-hitting mark, Rose noted: "The one thing in this world, the one thing in baseball that I can be No. 1 at, is this thing — the thing I have worked hardest at."

When Rose hit in his 21st game, he set another National League mark for most consecutive game hitting streaks over 20 games. He now has five.

The closest call Rose had during the streak came last Wednesday in Philadelphia when he was hitless in his first three at-bats and walked in the eighth inning. The Reds proceeded to send six more batters to the plate in the eighth inning and Rose dropped a perfect bunt down the third base line with two outs in the ninth to keep the streak alive.

Rose has some other records in mind also, namely Stan Musial's NL hit mark of 3,630.

Rose has had one four-hit game, four three-hit games and 10 two-hit games during his streak. He went into Monday night's game with the Mets batting .371 in the 36 games. For the season he was hitting .305.

Rose, nicknamed "Charlie Hustle" for the aggressive way he plays baseball, had a .311 lifetime batting average going into the 1978 season. His .311 average last season marked the 12th time in 13 years that Rose has been over the .300 mark. And it was the ninth time that the Cincinnati native had 200 or more hits in a season, a performance that equaled Cobb's all-time major league mark.

Rose was named the National League's Rookie of the Year in 1963, the league's Most Valuable Player in 1973 and the World Series MVP in 1975. He has won three batting championships, hitting as high as .348 in 1969, and has been named to the NL's All-Star team 11 times, starting at four different positions.

RESPONSE — Cincinnati's Pete Rose tips his hat while shaking the gloved hand of New York Mets first baseman Willie Montanez after getting a single in the seventh inning of Monday night's game. The hit tied the consecutive-game hitting record of 37 games set by Tommy Holmes in 1945. The umpire behind the two is Joe West. (AP Laserphoto)

HOUSTON (AP) — Bailey Marshall says the University Interscholastic League's rule that prevents schoolboy football and basketball stars from participating in summer camps probably is the toughest in the nation.

Pearson Set To Return To Cowboys

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Preston Pearson said Monday he has renegotiated his contract with the Dallas Cowboys and will rejoin the team for the 1978 season.

Pearson, an NFL veteran of 11 seasons who yielded a starting backfield position to rookie sensation Tony Dorsett, said he and vice president Gil Brandt worked out the final details of his new pact Friday, but said he will sign the contract later.

"It's a signed contract, yet it's not a signed contract," he said. "It is the actual original contract I signed a few years ago. I'm just putting my trust and faith in their (Cowboy management's) word, and I don't anticipate any problems at all. What they say is fact, and I can count on it being in the contract."

"I've gotten assurances from Mr. Brandt and several other people in the organization who work in the negotiating aspects that I won't have any problems. So I don't guess I have any reason not to trust them."

Last spring, Pearson indicated he would call it quits in the NFL after unsuccessful attempts to get a new contract. But he never went public with the announcement, a decision that made his decision to stay less surprising.

league that is the governing body for extracurricular activities in state supported public schools in Texas.

Marshall is expected to be in federal court here Wednesday when U.S. District Judge Finis Cowan is to hear final arguments in the Greg Kite case.

Kite, a 6-11 basketball player at Houston Madison, brought suit against the UIL rule keeping him from attending a summer camp.

Marshall says no other state has a rule just like that of the UIL.

"I'd say of the 50 states, there are probably 50 different sets of rules in regards to summer camps," he said in an interview with the Houston Chronicle.

"I do not know of any, although there are some, that have no restrictions whatsoever on summer camps. So really what we're talking about is the degree of restriction. Texas' is probably the toughest. I would imagine."

Marshall said the big thing in the dispute is a difference in philosophy in terms of what the UIL program is for.

"You've got the pros and all they're thinking about is money and you've got the college coaches and they're thinking about money and recruits," he said.

"And you've got the good youngsters, and he wants to do well. And then you've got this other 75, 80 percent. They want to learn and play some ball. Our rules and regulations are made for the 80 percent, not the upper 10 percent or whatever, not to make professional players."

"Our rules are not made to make college players. We're happy and glad when they make those things. That's all fine and good. But we try to protect the rights, the educational values of our programs, for the majority of our youngsters."

Rams Ready To Name Anaheim As New Home

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — The Los Angeles Rams, who have played in the Los Angeles Coliseum since 1946, say they will announce formally today "the intention to move to Anaheim Stadium" for the 1980 season.

The National Football League team's owner, Carroll Rosenbloom, was to present details of the move at a 1 p.m. CDT news conference at Anaheim Stadium.

In a brief notice, Rams publicity director Jerry Wilcox said that the moving plans depend on Anaheim City Council approving the agreement later today. The City Council has a 4 p.m. meeting scheduled.

To get the Rams, Anaheim Stadium reportedly will undertake an $80-100 million remodeling by 1980. The stadium now seats up to 44,000 for its current major tenant, the California Angels American League baseball club. It is expected the expansion would boost seating for football to about 72,000, Anaheim officials have said.

Meanwhile, Coliseum officials had already begun moves of their own, to assure that pro football stays in the stadium, even if the Rams leave. Coliseum officials said they would go to Congress and probably to court to assure that the NFL could not bar another team from locating in the nation's third largest city.

Against an appropriate backdrop of 72,000 empty seats in the Coliseum, it was announced that the Los Angeles Coliseum Commission plans a challenge of the NFL's 75-mile territorial protection rule. The Coliseum and Anaheim Stadium are just 35 miles apart, so league owners would have to waive the rule to allow another team in the Los Angeles area.

Coliseum Commission president William R. Robertson said Rep. Yvonne Burke, D-Calif., would have legislation introduced in Congress to "help us in the event of an antitrust suit" against the NFL dealing with the 75-mile rule.

"We think it is almost obscene that the city of Los Angeles and the County of Los Angeles look like they're going to be without a pro (football) team unless we get into action," Robertson said.

County Supervisor Kenneth Hahn, also a Coliseum commission vice president, told a Coliseum news conference that officials would continue efforts to obtain $9 million in federal funds, available under a 1965 act, to make improvements in the Coliseum.

The Coliseum once held 102,368 fans for a Rams game against the San Francisco 49ers in 1957. Since then seating for football has been reduced to 72,000.

Hahn said there is a slight possibility that something might happen in the next two years to ruin the Rams-Anaheim marriage. He said such things as revenue bonds, voter disenchantment and freeway access might present roadblocks for Anaheim officials and Rosenbloom.

"I would welcome him back like a prodigal son," Hahn said of the Rams owner. But the Coliseum officials conceded their obvious course is to woo another team and not think about retaining the Rams.

Hahn declared the Rams' move to neighboring Orange County "could turn out to be a lemon. I've talked to a lot of people who say they are going to remain Los Angeles fans."

With the planned addition of 10,000 parking places and other improvements, "I say this Coliseum is still the best stadium in America" and would be an attractive new home for one of several existing NFL teams. Early this month Hahn sent a letter exploring the chance of the Oakland Raiders moving to Los Angeles. Hahn said he has not had a reply from the Raiders' managing general partner, Al Davis.

The Coliseum, built in centerpiece for the 1932 Olympic Games, also is the home field for the University of Southern California and UCLA football teams.

Proceeding with improvements is a step that has to be taken regardless of what the Rams decide for the end of their Coliseum lease, Robertson said. He added that the commission also has been promised $12-15 million for other improvements, with that money available shortly after a contract is completed awarding the 1984 Olympic Games to Los Angeles.

"We have an obligation to our other tenants, and to any prospective pro team that might relocate here, to make the improvements," he added.

Bengals Build Special Padding For Anderson

WILMINGTON, Ohio (AP) — Cincinnati Bengals quarterback Ken Anderson has been fitted with a 14-inch thigh board, more than an inch thick, to prevent a recurrence of the injury that bothered him last football season.

The aid was designed especially for Anderson by the Wilson Sporting Goods Co. Special pants had to be designed for the pad and Anderson has received four pairs for practice, four pairs for games.

"Something else might get hurt on me this year, but not my thigh," said Anderson, who has been a key factor in the Bengals' fortunes since he took over the starting job in 1972.

Anderson and Bengals equipment manager Tom Gray met with a Wilson engineer in Chicago and discussed specifications for the pad. A week ago, they went to the company's factory where a thigh board was produced from a feather-weight composition, dipped and fitted to Anderson.

"It's a combination of a regular thigh pad and part of a baseball shin guard to make it longer," Anderson said.

"It's just about as light as a regular thigh pad. It doesn't restrict me one bit."

'Skins Ship Top Returner To Los Angeles

CARLEISLE, Pa. (AP) — The Washington Redskins have traded their premier punt and kick returner, Eddie Brown, to the Los Angeles Rams for immediate offensive help and near future draft choices, the National Football League team announced Monday.

The Redskins gave up Brown, a five-year veteran who played in last year's All-Pro game, and a late-round 1981 draft choice for guard Donnie Hickman, tackle Jeff Williams, an undisclosed draft pick in 1979 and two selections in 1980.

A Redskins spokesman said the Rams did not want to disclose whether the draft picks they are giving up are high, medium or low.

Brown, an eighth-round selection by Cleveland in 1974, came to the Redskins after the third game of the 1975 season for the $100 waiver price.

Last year, Brown set a league record for punt returns with 57 for 452 yards, a 7.9 yard average, and returned 34 kickoffs for 852 yards, a 25.1-yard average. Hickman, a fifth-round pick by the Rams from Southern Cal in 1977, spent the entire season on the injured reserve list. Williams, also selected on the fifth round from Rhode Island, played in one NFL game last year before being injured and going on injured reserve status.

Redskins general manager Bobby Beathard told reporters, "We hate to get rid of a player of Eddie's caliber but we can strengthen our team both now and in the future."

Laub Grabs Bowling Lead

AMARILLO (AP) — Nine-time PBA champion Larry Laub won all eight of his match games Monday and took a 21-pin lead, going into Monday night's final round of the $60,000 Amarillo Open professional bowling tournament.

The San Francisco bowler moved from third place to second with games of 200, 210 and 213, then took the lead with a 248 against Paul Moser of Medford, Mass. He finished with 221, 198, 203 and 201 for 1,694, averaging 212 a game.

His total pinfall, with eight games remaining in the quest for the $6,000 top prize, was 7,529.

Mike Durbin of Chagrin Falls, Ohio, leader after Sunday night's round, dipped as low as ninth during Monday afternoon's fifth round, but he finished 233, 228, 244 and 290 to regain second place.

Haley, Fairley Martinez Claim 'Stars' Honors

Competition in the women's division of Lubbock SuperStars gets under way at Maxey Park next Sunday.

All the women's divisions will in the last day of the second annual SuperStars event. The events begin at 2 p.m.

The men's competition concluded last weekend with Chuck Haley winning first place in the 37-39 age group. He edged Tommy Patterson by half a point. Patterson finished second with 50 points and Lynn Lafon was third with 49.5 points.

John Martinez grabbed first place in the 40-42 age group with 64 points, followed by Don Pirkle with 61.

In the 43-and-over bracket, Jerry Fairley was first with 54.5 points. Mike Higgins finished second with 52.5 and Gene Coppin with 44 points was third.

Kiner Contact Injures Two Oiler Backs

SAN ANGELO (AP) — In a single practice session, bodily contact with Houston Oilers linebacker Steve Kiner sidelined runningbacks Anthony Davis and Rob Carpenter.

But Kiner, a five-year veteran is offering no apologies.

"I'm sorry they're hurt but I don't feel like I need to apologize," Kiner said. "I didn't try to hurt them. Sometimes these freak things happen. I've never in my career tried to hurt anybody."

Kiner says he plays aggressively. "I was taught to play that way," he said. "That's my strength, but I'm not over-aggressive. I'm not a dirty player."

Carpenter suffered only a knot on his head and a slight headache but Davis, acquired from Tampa during the off season, suffered a broken fibula in the left leg and may not be ready to play before midseason.

Both incidents occurred during routine offense-defense drills in which the defenders are instructed to do everything but actually tackle the runners.

Eddie Biles, Oiler defensive coordinator, says defenders are supposed to be in position to make a tackle before backing down.

"It's his responsibility to break down and the runningback's responsibility to avoid," Biles said. "Sometimes one or the other doesn't and you have a collision. That's what happened Friday."

And Kiner says he lost his temper a bit when Carpenter tried to break his stronghold and keep running.

The Davis encounter, Kiner said, was different.

"Anthony is really shifty and he started jittersbugging," Kiner said.

Hollis Tries To Avoid Spotlight

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Hollis Stacy — the youngest woman to win two consecutive U.S. Women's Open championships — doesn't crave the spotlight which has followed rookie Nancy Lopez around the Ladies Professional Golf Association circuit this season. "Hollis doesn't like to be crowded. She wouldn't like the publicity Nancy Lopez is getting," said Tillie Stacey, who was as busy as her golfing daughter during last week's U.S. Open here. Mrs. Stacey spent 10 hours a day working for the U.S. Golf Association, while the 24-year-old Miss Stacy spent five hours a day defending her title.

Miss Stacy sank a four-foot putt on the final hole Sunday to capture the tournament with a 289 total, 1 stroke ahead of JoAnne Carner and Sally Little.

In winning the $15,000 first prize, she boosted her year's earnings to $65,500. "She does her thing, and I do mine," said Mrs. Stacy, of Hollis, who is the fourth of 10 children. "Hollis is very independent."

"I'm going to have a shirt made for her with a No. 4 on it. Not No. 1. She's my No. 4 child."

The teasing between mother and daughter works both ways. "Even when I'm two fairways over, and I think she doesn't see me, she will give a little taunting wave," Mrs. Stacy said. "Then I could kill her because she's not concentrating on her game."

Duncan Promoted By Sooners

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — Oklahoma University's head football coach Barry Switzer today formally announced a replacement for his former assistant head football coach Larry Laccwell.

Switzer said offensive line coach Donnie Duncan has been moved to the assistant's spot. Switzer called the move a "natural" one and said Duncan was "an excellent coach and recruiter."

Earlier, Laccwell resigned to go into private business, and it was later learned he made the decision after having an argument with Switzer.

Switzer also said former OU linebacker Charlie Sadler has been named to share in the offensive line coaching duties with Duncan on a part-time basis.

Ali Claims Spinks Used 'Black Bottle'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Muhammad Ali claims that Leon Spinks took Ali's heavyweight title away by using a drug from "a little black bottle" during their fight last Feb. 15, according to a Washington Star.

In its Monday editions, the Star quoted Ali as saying "I had that guy almost out in the 14th round. Then, wham! He's drinking out of that bottle between rounds and he comes out smoking."

Ali said he has checked films of the fight hundreds of times. "Those guys in his corner are asking him how he feels between rounds and then he's sipping from this little black bottle," Ali was quoted as saying by J.D. Bethea in a banner sports-page article.

Bethea, who visited Ali in his hotel room Sunday, said that some of Ali's own advisers in the room appeared stunned by the allegation.

The Star said Spinks' trainer, Sam Solomon, also in Washington over the weekend, refused to comment, and Spinks himself could not be reached.

But Ali's trainer, Angelo Dundee, was less assertive about the allegation when contacted at his home in Miami, the Star said. "I can't really say what was in the bottle," Dundee said. "It could have been honey and brandy or something... but I do know that a fighter is not supposed to have anything but water between rounds."

The Star said Ali was aware that he cannot prove the allegation, but quoted him as saying "that isn't the point. I don't have to prove it. I know it."

"Hell, Spinks couldn't even stand up after the fight. That's what happens when that stuff wears off. But what's important to me is that even if there is an investigation and nothing is proved, the athletic commission in New Orleans (site of the next match) will still be on the lookout for anything funny," Ali said.

Spinks will defend his World Boxing Association title against Ali Sept. 15 in the Superdome in New Orleans.

Reds' Pilot 'Satisfied' With Hearing

NEW YORK (AP) — Cincinnati Reds manager Sparky Anderson said he met Monday with National League president Chub Feeney regarding the manager's recent fine, and he indicated he was satisfied with the result.

Before the meeting, Anderson had said he was upset with his $250 fine for an ejection from a recent baseball game while Los Angeles Dodgers pitcher Don Sutton was only reprimanded after his recent ejection.

"Nothing really happened at the meeting," Anderson said. "We discussed it, sure. He has the right to fine me but I have the right to ask about it."

Sutton was ejected by umpire Doug Harvey from a game against the St. Louis Cardinals for pitching baseballs that Harvey said had been defaced.

"They have left Doug (Harvey) out in the cold and without a jacket," Anderson said.

Anderson had said earlier that if he was not satisfied with the result of his meeting with Feeney he would formally protest the fine. He was asked what was the result of the meeting.

"It's nothing different than has happened every other time I've been fined," said Anderson. "I can't understand why everybody is making such a big deal about it."

Anderson had said he thought the fine was excessive for a first-offender. The manager was ejected last week by umpire Dutch Rennert over a call at first base.

"Usually there is a warning on your first ejection, especially since I didn't curse the man. Then, if it happens again, they nail you with $250," Anderson said.

Upon receiving word of his fine, Anderson wired Feeney a telegram that said, "No way."

"Feeney quoted some rule in his wire. I don't know, rule X4922, or something," Anderson said. "Well, I wonder what rule he used on Sutton. No fine? What did they ask him to leave the game for, because baseball needs more publicity? I don't think so."
