Reagan expected to propose tax reform

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, who has criticized the federal income tax as an overly complex collection of loopholes, is about to propose lower rates, fewer deductions and a somewhat heavier burden on corporate America.

In advance of the president's scheduled broadcast speech Tuesday night, his aides are using the word "populism" to describe what the president has in mind. And Reagan says major reform, a key plank of his 1984 re-election platform, is now all but inevitable.

But it will be up to Congress to decide whether and when major overhaul will come and what the final product will look like. And although every poll taken shows a majority favoring "reform," people are not exactly flooding U.S. Capitol mailboxes with letters demanding change.

Reagan wants to set off such a flood with his speech and a series of campaign stops hailing a new tax system as the match that sets off a new economic revolution.

The president hopes to convince Americans that his plan will bring lower taxes for most and fairness for all — and that such a promise will create a pressure that Congress will be unable to resist.

"We propose to replace a tax system that is almost universally regarded as needlessly complicated and unfair with a simpler, fairer, more streamlined model...," he said in a preview last week.

Reform, he added, will return "us to the free-market principles that made the United States the land of opportunity and the greatest economic power in the world."

The president's plan will be less sweeping than the one outlined by his own Treasury Department last November, which would have raised corporate taxes by about 35 percent to pay for slashing individuals' aggregate share by about 8.5 percent.

Reagan's No. 1 goal is to reduce individual tax rates, continuing a process begun with the 1981 across-the-board tax reduction — the biggest in history. However, to make sure that the new rate cuts don't worsen the record budget deficit, the president will seek to further moderate the 1981 business tax reduction — the same one he credits for setting off the current non-inflationary growth of the economy.

Although the White House is closely guarding details of the final plan, sources in Congress say the proposal will almost certainly include these elements:

—Individual rates: Present law has 16 separate tax rates for single individuals and 15 for couples, ranging from 11 percent to 50 percent. The president wants to compress those into three brackets of 15 percent, 25 percent and 35 percent.

—Exemptions: A taxpayer may exempt from tax $1,040 for self, spouse and each dependent, a figure expected to rise because of inflation to $1,090 in 1986. Reagan wants to raise it to $2,000.

Two Americans among those elevated to cardinal

VATICAN CITY (AP) — New York Archbishop John J. O'Connor worried Saturday that he would trip on his cassock as he climbed the steps of St. Peter to receive the crimson hat of cardinal from Pope John Paul II.

Boston Archbishop Bernard Law felt awestruck as he waited his turn to kneel before the pontiff.

Thousands of American pilgrims and tourists among the 20,000 spectators in St. Peter's Square gave both men thunderous applause as the pope elevated 28 prelates to cardinal.

After the pageant-filled ceremony, Law said he was overwhelmed by two strong feelings as he approached John Paul for the elevation.

"The first was a very personal feeling when I saw my mother being wheeled in" in a wheelchair, said Law. "I was so happy."

"The second was standing at the foot of the steps, looking up at the Holy Father," Law recalled as he relaxed in the garden of Piazza Santa Marta, behind the basilica.

"I realized I was being called by the collaborator of Peter," the first pope, Law said. It was an "awesome" moment.

O'Connor wore the cassock of his predecessor, the late Cardinal Terence Cooke. Although he had the priestly garment tailored, he said that when the moment came to bend before the pope, "I was wondering if my cassock was too long and I might trip." He spoke with reporters at the Pontifical North American College following the ceremony.

During the ceremony, the pope told the new cardinals they might have to endure hardships, "even persecution," as they carried out their mission to the church in such nations as Marxist-led Nicaragua and Ethiopia and Communist Poland and Czechoslovakia.

O'Connor said he thought the sermon was "realistic." The pontiff, he said, was talking about "some cardinals living in daily danger of their lives, where there is repression, oppression."

He said fighting between Christians and Moslems in Lebanon was the chief topic in his conversations during his stay in Rome.

"Since the...holy father knows that I have been extremely concerned," O'Connor said, it might be "requested that I go to Lebanon on behalf of the Holy See."

Among those attending the ceremony in St. Peter's were Mayors Edward Koch of New York and Ray Flynn of Boston; Matilda Cuomo, wife of New York Gov. Mario Cuomo, and nearly 1,000 pilgrims who arrived on charter flights last week from the two cities.

Mrs. Cuomo said she brought a Steuben glass eagle, a gift from her husband, for O'Connor. Her own present was a red wicker heart filled with candy because "the hearts of all of us in New York State are with him."

Although O'Connor chose to wear the garments of his predecessor, his cardinal's pillbox-style and tasseled red hat was new.

Unlike his fellow new cardinals, O'Connor, 64, kept on the hat as the pope embraced him twice in a greeting of peace.

Among the new cardinals was the American head of the Ukrainian Catholic Church of 4.5 million followers, Cardinal Myroslav Ivan Lubachivsky, who served previously in Philadelphia.

French woman at home here

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

Her English is heavily accented, each syllable of a word is pronounced distinctly rather than slurred together in the manner of West Texas speech, but Chantal Levallois feels at home in Midland with her "family" and Mexican food after an 11-year absence.

Ms. Levallois spent her last year in high school in Midland-Odessa from 1973-74 as a foreign exchange student from France and, although she attended Permian High, stayed a few months with Dottie and Jack Fox and their daughters, Cissy and Cindy.

The bonds grew stronger over the years but neither side has had a chance to visit the other until this year. Ms. Levallois took a month-long break from her work at a Paris bank to return to Midland.

"It doesn't seem like that long ago," said Ms. Levallois during a break from her volunteer work at Midland Community Theatre, where Mrs. Fox works.

SHE WAS 17 when she arrived in West Texas, 18 when she left. And although she came to love this area, West Texas wasn't where she intended to spend that year in the United States.

Westover Hills can boast to being state's richest community

By MIKE COCHRAN
Associated Press

WESTOVER HILLS, Texas — OK, trivia buffs, the richest community in Texas per capita is: (a) Dallas' Highland Park, (b) Houston's River Oaks, (c) San Antonio's Alamo Heights, (d) Austin's Lakeway, (e) the Big Bend's Terlingua, or, (f) none of the above.

According to the goverment's latest census figures, 1981-1982, the mecca of Texas affluence is not among the state's familiar pockets of opulence, but is instead Westover Hills in Tarrant County.

A tiny slice of wooded hills and valleys west of downtown Fort Worth, Westover Hills, population 700, is the home of several members of the ultra-rich Bass family and a slew of other prosperous and prominent Texans.

There are no duplexes or high rise apartments in either "new" or "old" Westover Hills but roughly three square miles of magnificent homes and manicured grounds and a private police force to keep things quiet and secure.

Scenic Roaring Springs Road separates the old from the new and while Old Westover has more tradition, New Westover has Shady Oaks Country Club and Ben Hogan as a neighbor.

Society columnist Cissy Stewart says land is so scarce in Westover that a Dallas builder once constructed a $2 million house there on speculation, with no buyer lined up.

"How about that," she laughed. "Isn't that crazy?"

Perhaps not.

Your neighbor might be a past or present owner of the Texas Rangers baseball club, the widow of a newspaper publisher, an oil millionaire, a banker, a real estate entrepreneur or maybe even an heir to the vast Charles Tandy-Anne Windfohr Tandy estate.

The U.S Bureau of the Census says the estimated 1981 per capita income of Western Hills was $60,210, which made it the runaway winner in the big bucks sweepstakes.

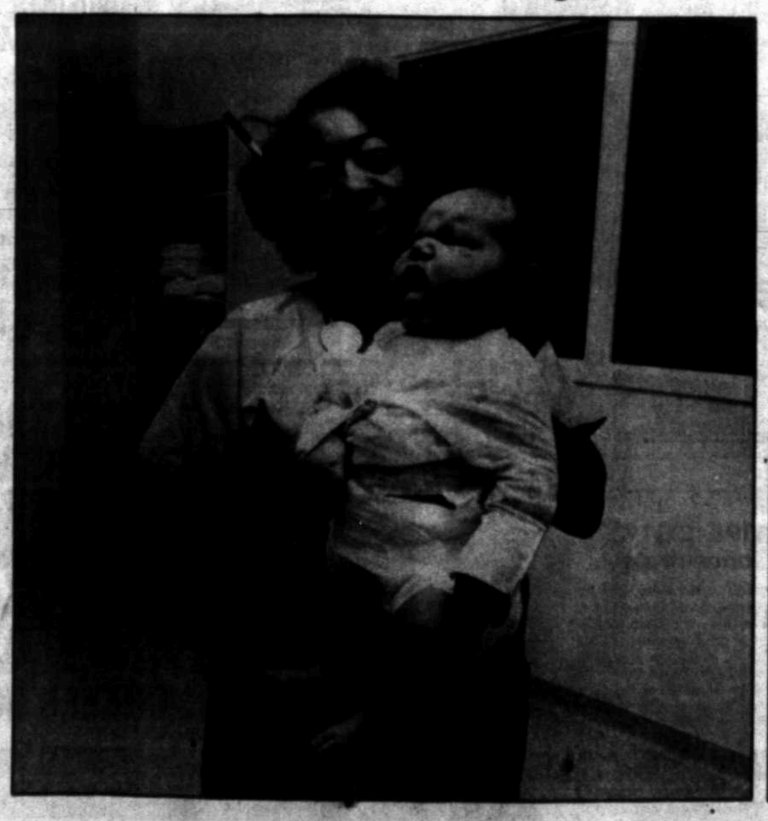

Alamo Heights residents in Bexar County struggled along on $16,665 per capita, Highland Park made do with $29,001 and Lakeway in Travis County bit the bullet with $26,169. Terlingua is a ghost town with only a phantom income.

River Oaks may be Houston's most prestigious address but it is not a governmental unit as such and therefore not among the census listings. But sister communities in Harris County trailed only Westover Hills in affluence.

Big baby!

Midland Memorial Hospital recorded its heaviest baby ever born at the hospital last week, when the son of Sylvia Melendez, 23, of Midland weighed in at 12 pounds, 8 ounces. The boy was delivered vaginally with the help of a midwife at 10:30 p.m. Wednesday and weighs 2 ounces more than the previous record-holder, a boy delivered by Caesarian section to Mr. and Mrs. Steve Haktanier of Midland, May 27, 1983.

Kuwaiti ruler's motorcade attacked

KUWAIT (AP) — A suicide attacker crashed a car bomb Saturday into the royal motorcade of the emir of Kuwait, killing himself and three other people in the explosion, but missing the ruler of this oil-rich state, officials said.

The Arab monarch, his face bruised and with plaster struck over his cuts, went on television shortly afterward to tell his subjects he was "in good health."

School officials fail to see humor in revealing episode

GRAND PRAIRIE (AP) — Somebody thought it would be a great joke to hire a stripper to "entertain" at Grand Prairie High School's graduation ceremonies — but school officials weren't a bit amused when the male dancer began to gyrate and pull his pants down.

The dancer, who was on his first day at the job, wound up spending the night in jail and irate school officials vowed to track down the students who hired him.

Shortly before 9 p.m. Thursday, as Principal Phil Farris was about to begin handing out diplomas, a young man in a three-piece suit interrupted to say he had a "special honorary award" for Vice Principal Dorothy Newton.

An assistant began playing a portable tape player and the man began "dancing provocatively to music," according to police reports.

"At first, I was fooled as well as anybody else," Farris said. "But about halfway through his routine, it dawned on me that something was fishy. At that instant, he began to pull his pants down."

Judge holds Harris County in contempt over jail guards

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal judge held Harris County officials in contempt of court for refusing his order to hire more guards for the county jail and threatened to collect $1.5 million in fines.

U.S. District Judge Carl Bue on Friday warned Harris County Commissioners and Sheriff Johnny Klevenhagen they face $10,000-a-day fines if they do not come up with a plan within the next two weeks to increase guard staffing by Nov. 7.

Bue, in a 16-page order, said the county needs to design a month-by-month plan to increase guard staffing levels by one-third at the two county jail facilties.

County Judge John Lindsay called the federally mandated court order to increase the number of jail guards "absurd" and said the county will continue to fight the ruling.

"My position is to fight it tooth and nail. If we decide not to do it, I'm ready to take the consequences," Lindsay said Friday.

Harris County Assistant District Attorney Ray Speece said Bue's order will require the hiring of about 220 jail guards at an estimated cost of $3.5 million.

Bue's order came after a hearing last week in which county officials, defendants in a 13-year-old civil rights lawsuit, testified that the detention facilities were "safe and adequate."

"The judge has taken the testimony of seven of nine inmate witnesses to make it look like the entire jail is having the same problems," Lindsay said. "The judge does not really know how our jail operates, because he's never been there."

But County Commissioner El Franco Lee said, "We have no choice but to comply with the judge's order."

RUGS OF INTRIGUE

Oriental rugs are always in fashion. No other addition to a home's decor incorporates as much color, individuality, myth and history. Oriental rugs may get their names from a geological location (Bokhara), a nomadic tribe (Tekke), their pattern or style or their function (prayer). Whatever it is called, each rug is woven in the same way. The warp and weft, either wool or cotton, are strung on a loom. Brightly colored threads of wool or silk are knotted around the individual strands of the underlying grid to form the pile and establish the pattern. Once the knotting process is finished, the pile is sheared to a uniform height. Knot counter per inch is not necessarily a particularly god criterion for judging value.

All our clients are given individualized attention at WINDOW DECOR, 30 West Industrial Loop, 685-0875. Call for free in-home consultations. We do upholstered walls, all types of window treatments and installation service and handle upholstery and wall coverings. Open: Mon. thru Fri. 8am-4:30pm.

HINT:
Although it does not affect their value, Orientals with strong geometric designs usually have a relatively low knot count.

Experts monitoring chemical blaze

EASTLAND (AP) — As about 1,500 residents remained away from their homes for a second day Saturday, experts continued monitoring a chemical blaze that erupted after a train carrying hazardous chemicals derailed and burst into flames.

A tanker car on the train carrying propane exploded only seconds after an empty water-hauling truck ran into one of four engines pulling the 99-car Missouri Pacific train on Friday.

A spokeswoman at the city's emergency command post, who refused to give her name, said the situtation remained unchanged Saturday. She declined to estimate how long it would take to douse the fire or how long it would be before residents could return home.

Authorities evacuated about 1,500 residents — almost a third of this West Texas town's population — shortly after the accident, which triggered an explosion and a bright red ball of flames that shot into the sky over Eastland.

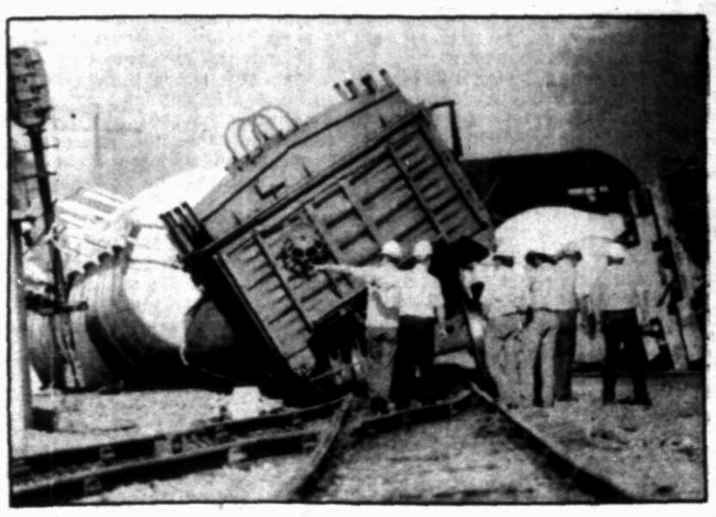

The blast shook buildings and homes miles from the accident. One pilot flying at 3,000 feet near the area said his plane was rocked by the blast.

Eastland is on Interstate 20, about 100 miles west of Fort Worth.

"I ain't seen nothing like that since Vietnam," said Jimmy Tibbs, an employee of an oil company across from the intersection of Highway 69 and the Missouri Pacific train tracks where the accident occurred.

Two abandoned houses and a barn, all 150 yards from the tracks, were destroyed by the flames.

The truck driver, Gaylon E. Nelms of Eastland, was listed in critical condition at Hendrick Medical Center in Abilene Saturday with first- and second-degree burns over 25 percent of his body, said hospital spokeswoman Jo Thompson. A total of 16 people were treated at Eastland Memorial Hospital for injuries. Five were admitted because of burns and fumes inhalation and were in stable condition Saturday.

AP Laserphoto

Railroad officials examine the derailed train in Eastland Friday afternoon. The train collided with a truck, injuring 16 local residents and forcing the evacuation of about 1,500 people.

"It's a miracle that he is alive. It's a miracle that nobody was killed," said Eastland firefighter Robert Webb, who along with firefighter Phillip Arther, pulled Nelms from the truck.

Most of the injuries resulted from the heat of the explosion, authorities said.

At least 25 cars of the train were derailed by a combination of the blast and the impact of the collision. Among those were cars carrying hydrochloric acid, hydrofluoric acid, sulfuric acid and propane.

Officials of the town of almost 5,000, fearing further explosions and possible leakage of the dangerous materials, evacuated an area about two miles east of Highway 69 to Interstate 20 and a mile in all other directions.

Mother charged with trying to kill daughter

HOUSTON (AP) — A 20-year-old mother has been charged with trying to kill her infant daughter after hospital officials used a hidden television camera to videotape her as she allegedly tried to smother the child, police say.

Sheila D. Williams of Houston was charged with attempted murder and is being held in the Harris County Jail in lieu of $5,000 bond.

Houston juvenile Sgt. Norman White said the apparent motive for the attack was Williams' desire to get attention from the hospital staff.

Doctors described Ms. Williams' actions as Munchausen's Syndrome, a condition in which a patient fakes an illness to get attention.

The incident came to the attention of police after hospital officials made the videotape. White said Williams' 8-month-old daughter, Ashley Denise, had been in Texas Childrens Hospital for about three weeks with respiratory problems.

He said doctors and nurses noticed that the child only had breathing problems when the infant was with her mother. On two occasions, he said, the baby stopped breathing but was resuscitated by the medical staff.

Lawyer admits to film deal

HOUSTON (AP) — A Kentucky lawyer testified he received $1,000 from a French film company before his client Charles Wilson Bass went to trial for capital murder, but a French photographer says the amount was at least $3,000.

Bass' lawyers are seeking a writ of habeas corpus on grounds that Bass was deprived of effective counsel. Bass, 29, has been sentenced to die for the 1979 shooting of Houston City Marshal Charles Baker in August 1979.

Attorney Bob Sanders of Covington, Ky., told state District Judge Miron A. Love on Friday he made a financial deal with Camera 1 of France to permit the firm to film a documentary about Bass.

This was to get public sympathy for Bass and enable him to provide competent counsel, Sanders testified.

With the exception of the $1,000, he said, Camera 1 reneged, and he didn't get any more money until after the trial was over. Sanders, criticized by appellate lawyer Will Gray for not bringing his bank records to Houston, said he phoned his office Thursday and learned he had been paid a total of $19,541.93 for his work in the case.

Lewis absent from debates

AUSTIN (AP) — Because he misread his calendar, House Speaker Gib Lewis was attending a high school graduation near Fort Worth while the futures of several major state agencies were being debated in a House and nerves were getting frazzled.

"We almost lost five agencies tonight, and Gib's not here," one House member complained privately while Lewis was absent Friday night.

Lewis left about 6:30 p.m., flew to Fort Worth and returned four hours later.

While he was gone, the House was involved in prolonged debate about state water regulation. Measures needed to keep other state agencies in operation also came up.

Speaker Pro Tem Hugo Berlanga, D-Corpus Christi, ran the House while Lewis was gone. Berlanga had to rule on several crucial points of order raised during the water debate. Berlanga frequently runs the House while Lewis is busy with other matters.

Senate nixes letter scrutiny

AUSTIN (AP) — The Senate voted 22-9 Saturday to allow lawmakers to prohibit scrutiny of letters they get from constituents.

The House-approved bill cleared the Senate only after sponsor Roy Blake, D-Nacogdoches, accepted amendments sought by Common Cause and other opponents of the original bill.

Blake agreed to remove provisions that would exempt from the Open Records Act opinions, advice and information from the state auditor's office, legislative council and legislative budget aides.

The measure goes back to the House for a vote on the amendments.

DWI nets man seven years

HOUSTON (AP) — A drunken driver whose vehicle veered across three lanes of traffic, struck a parked van and killed a 5-year-old girl has been handed a seven-year prison term.

Harold Edward Brenneman, a 32-year-old diesel mechanaic from Baytown, was convicted Friday of involuntary manslaughter in the November 1983 death of Misti Dawn Tremain, also of Baytown.

Prosecutor Trish Saum said the child was one of five people standing between the van and a Ford Bronco parked on the side of U.S. Highway 90 in northeast Harris County. The van had a flat tire.

The child's mother, Susan Tremain, and two men were removing the spare tire from the rear of the vehicle when Brenneman's car sturck the front of the van, driving it into the Ford.

The child's head was crushed between the bumpers of the van and the Ford and Mrs. Tremain had her leg caught between the two vehicles, Ms. Saum said.

Mrs. Tremain remains confined to a wheelchair, although she's expected to walk again, Ms. Saum said.

SAA ends Houston flights

HOUSTON (AP) — A South African Airways official says the airline will stop its service between Houston and Johannesburg on June 20.

Wayne Tilton, Houston district manager for the airline, said Friday the airline was discontinuing the weekly flight from Houston Intercontinental Airport after the U.S. Department of Transportation denied the carrier permission to continue its route.

The airline, however, will continue its flights between New York and Johannesburg, Tilton said.

FRANCE

Living in Rennes in Brittany, Ms. Levallois met a foreign exchange girl from the United States in her English class.

"Her name was Ingrid. I become good friends with her." At the end of the year when Ingrid was to return home, she suggested Ms. Levallois come to the States for a year's study. Although she thought she might get to go to Michigan — Ingrid's home state — Ms. Levallois was given what was left over at the late time she applied — West Texas.

The English she knew was the textbook language, not the regional and conversational slang. But it didn't take her long to pick up what can't be taught from textbooks.

"She spoke very well when she came," said Mrs. Fox. "She made a point of learning a new word every day. Thirty minutes after she came we knew about her entire family." That family includes two sisters and a brother. Her father, now retired, was a commercial salesman of appliances.

THE FLAT, dusty plains of West Texas was nothing like her Rennes with rolling hills. Midland and Odessa have changed some in 11 years, but not much, according to Ms. Levallois. And she's met some of the people she befriended on her first trip. While serving soft drinks at a Yucca Theatre performance one night, she excitedly rediscovered a former student friend with whom she had been in a Permian High play.

After returning to France, Ms. Levallois kept in touch with the Fox family through letters and phone calls and still calls the daughters her "sisters."

The year here served as a contrast to the French educational and business systems.

If some students thought the new Texas laws requiring a student who fails one class to be ineligible for extra-curricular activity were tough, Ms. Levallois said in France no one advances to the next grade without passing a test that covers all subjects. Nor does anyone graduate without passing a test that covers the previous several years in all subjects, not just the topics studied in the senior year.

If a student fails that "baccalaureat," the whole year must be repeated. Or the student can quit school and go to work. To attend college, a student must pass an entrance exam.

Unlike the United States where learning a foreign language isn't stressed, French students must start a second language in the equivalent of the sixth grade. Two years later, a third language is added. Ms. Levallois took English seven years and German five years.

THE FRENCH government has gone from the "right" to the "left," and many companies have been nationalized. That has taken away the spirit of competition that can be found among businesses in the United States, according to Ms. Levallois.

Because of working habits that have been many years in the making, she doubted that France will ever have the same business environment as the U.S. Employees work only a 39-hour week and "people are not interested in their work." Everyone gets five weeks for vacation and that, she said, "is too much time off."

August is the holiday month, and many small businesses shut their doors while the owners and employees take off for other parts of Europe or the seashore.

"It's a way of life for the country; it won't change," she said.

Ms. Levallois returned to France in 1974 and spent the next four years at the European Business School where she majored in international business, putting to use her mastery of English and German. When she returns June 1, she will be starting a new position with the bank Indosuez in the international commodities department.

During her 11-year absence, Cindy and Cissy have gotten married but the family ties now include the husbands.

And Ms. Levallois never lost her taste for Mexican food. On the plane from Paris to Dallas, she met a Texan who works in Paris and had located a Mexican food restaurant and passed along the address to her.

Coming into Midland from the airport she immediately spotted the sign at one of her favorite eating spots during her first visit and knew she was "home" at last. It was Taco Villa.

BOMB

The blast damaged vehicles and shattered windows in high-rise buildings on the Arabian Gulf Highway, about one mile from the U.S. Embassy compound and less than a mile from the royal palace.

The Interior Ministry said that the explosives-laden car shot out at one point along the highway, "tried to ram into the emir's motorcade, blew up and burned a number of cars."

Bystanders said the car zoomed out of a filling station, crashed into the convoy near the royal limousine, then exploded.

The car bomb driver perished in the explosion, the ministry said in a statement distributed by the official Kuwait News Agency.

Iraq blamed Iran for the assassination attempt and said it would raid several targets in the Iranian capital of Tehran in retaliation. Iraqi state radio, monitored in Bahrain, announced the decision late Saturday and said it was taken at a meeting of Iraqi leadership chaired by President Saddam Hussein.

Hours after the bombing, the sheik gave a radio and television address to his nation of 1.6 million people to show he was all right. "I wish to assure you, citizens, that I am in good health," said the emir in a firm voice. His face was visibly bruised, and plaster covered facial cuts.

A team of four doctors examined the emir, and reported that he "suffered minor hurts, caused by flying glass shards."

Sheik Jaber became the 13th emir, or head of state, of Kuwait on Dec. 31, 1977. He held several Cabinet positions in the 1950s and 1960s, before becoming heir-apparent in 1966.

Kuwait airport officials said outgoing flights were suspended after the assassination attempt as part of a dragnet.

In Beirut, an unidentified telephone caller told a Western news agency that Jihad Islami was behind the assassination attempt.

"We hope his highness the emir of Kuwait has gotten our message," said the Arabic-speaking caller two hours after the mid-morning blast. "We once again demand the release of the prisoners. Otherwise all the thrones of the gulf (region) will be shaken."

Seventeen convicted terrorists now are imprisoned in Kuwait after December 1983 bomb attacks against the U.S. and French embassies and strategic economic installations.Three of the 17 are under death sentence. The others are serving terms ranging from five years to life.

Jihad Islami issued in Beirut what it called a "final warning" on May 16, calling for a trade between four American and two French hostages it says it is holding on one hand, and the terrorists jailed in Kuwait on the other.

Jihad Islami, whose name means Islamic Holy War, warned of "catastrophic consequences" if its demands were not met.

The Kuwaiti Parliament issued a statement denouncing the assassination attempt as an "aggression on democracy, freedom and Islamic values," and demanded action against "all quarters responsible for the incident."

Guerrillas stall Shiites' attack on Beirut refugee camps

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Palestinian guerrillas pounded to a standstill a tank-led attack by Shiite Moslem forces on three Beirut refugee camps Saturday, a Palestinian spokesman reported.

Protests in the southern port city of Sidon and clashes in the Bekaa Valley meanwhile fueled fears of a nationwide Shiite-Palestinian confrontation.

Fighting raged for the sixth day straight in the Palestinian refugee camps of Sabra, Chatilla and Bourj Barajneh, and Syria consulted with other Arab states on ways to end the bloodletting.

Beirut airport, closed for two days after it was shelled, reopened Saturday afternoon. Airport officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said they were assured by both sides that the airport's perimeter would not be shelled again.

The Palestinian spokesman, who spoke with the condition that he not be identified, said Amal militiamen tried to storm Bourj Barajneh overnight behind tank fire from the 6th Brigade. He said the camp's estimated 3,000 defenders halted the thrust with sustained barrages of armor-piercing rockets and machine-gun fire.

Police said seven people were killed and 30 wounded in fighting Saturday. That raised the known toll to 358 killed and 1,601 wounded since Shiites assaulted the camps last Sunday to stop Palestinians from regaining the Lebanon power base they lost in Israel's 1982 invasion.

The Moslem Voice of the Nation radio station said fighters of Amal, the main Shiite militia, stormed and captured the Palestinian refugee camp of Jaleel outside the ancient city of Baalbek in the Syrian-controlled Bekaa Valley.

But other reports from the mainly Shiite Baalbeck said Amal fighters were kept from entering the camps by Syrian troops who were supported by tanks.

TAXES

—Standard deduction: Expected to be $2,510 in 1986 for single people and $3,710 for couples, Reagan will seek to raise them to about $2,800 and $3,800.

—Itemized deductions: Mortgage interest on the principal home would remain fully deductible. The deduction for state and local taxes would go. The itemized writeoff for charity would be retained in full but the separate charity deduction for non-itemizers is in jeopardy. Some middle- and upper-income people would lose the deduction for consumer interest.

—Fringe benefits: Most apparently would remain tax-free, meeting a demand of a key senator, Bob Packwood, R-Ore., who chairs the tax-writing Finance Committee. Only the first $10 to $20 a month that an employer pays for workers' health insurance would be taxed to the employee.

—Capital gains: Half the profit from the sale of stocks and other assets owned more than six months would be taxed; present law taxes only 40 percent. This, combined with the proposed cut in individual rates, would result in a maximum capital gains tax of 17.5 percent for the richest taxpayers, down from 20 percent.

—Minimum taxes: There is widespread feeling that these provisions, enacted to ensure that profitable firms and well-to-do individuals pay some tax regardless of how many deductions they claim, are not working. The president probably will propose to make them tougher.

—Corporate rates: The present top rate of 46 percent would be cut to 33 percent. Most of the existing scale of lower rates for small business would be retained.

—Depreciation: Liberalizing business' ability to recoup through the tax system money spent for plant and equipment was the heart of Reagan's 1981 business tax reduction. Congress and the president already have cut back the reduction twice. The president will propose taking back some more of the depreciation benefit — but not nearly as much as the November plan would have.

—Business meals: Liberals long have complained about the deduction for the "three-martini lunch." Reagan would reduce it, limiting a deduction for business meals to $10 for breakfast, $15 for lunch and $25 for dinner.

RICH

Harris County, with a 1982 population of 2,674,074, laid claim to Hunters Creek Village, $39,913; Piney Point Village, $38,871; Bunker Hill Village, $33,605; and Pearland, $31,506.

No other Texas townships exceeded the $30,000 mark.

The most affluent county in the state was sparsely populated, energy rich Loving County in far West Texas. The census bureau said the Loving population dropped from 91 to 70 between 1980 and 1982 but per capita income increased from $21,673 to $23,596.

Midland County counted a substantial number of oil and gas millionaires among its 100,000 residents in 1982 and ranked second with $12,904 per capita.

Since the oil industry slide began in 1981, and realizing the margin for error was already great, it's a safe assumption that some of the census figures would not be valid today.

And there are those who argue also that the wealth of the billionaire Bass family distorts the financial image of Westover Hills.

"There's some big-time bucks out there but the Basses have made it (the per capita income figure) swing that way," said a Fort Worth oil company executive familiar with the Westover Hills populace.

Perry Bass and two of his four sons live there, and they've contributed mightily to the Westover wealth. But their neighbors have hardly been slouches.

They've included the late Kay Kimbell (Kimbell Museum), Amon Carter Jr. (Fort Worth Star-Telegram), Charles Tandy (Tandy Corp.) and Anne Burnett Windfohr Tandy (6666s Ranch, oil).

"We're talking major mergers there," quipped the oil executive of the Tandy-Windfohr marriage that united two great Texas fortunes.

Although both died in recent years, their Westover Hills home remains a showplace of the Southwest. Designed by renowned architect I.M. Pei, the home was featured anonymously this year in Connoisseur magazine.

The Tandy heir, Anne Tandy's grandaughter, Anne Sowell, is a Westover resident.

Former Texas Rangers owner Brad Corbett lives in Westover as does current club owner Eddie Chiles.

Among the other prominent residents are Bill McKay (car dealer), Kelly Young (oil), Hayden Cutler (real estate), Jenkins Garrett (construction), Bayard Friedman (banking), Dewer Wagner (oil), Elton Hyder (real estate investments), Joe Pace (supermarkets), William Colley (groceries) and A.M. Pate Jr. (Texas Refinery Corp.).

Westover people don't talk about their neighbors but outsiders love the story of the oil millionaire and former resident who tired of his mansion and "spent a mint" remodeling.

Still unhappy, he tore the whole house down and began again from scratch.

With his new house in progress, his marriage turned sour. He wound up selling his unfinished home, which the new owner altered dramatically.

"That's the way they do things out there," said columnist Stewart. "They buy a house, tear it down and build their own house."

CARDINALS

At an evening reception in the courtyard of the Pontifical North American College, O'Connor stood for about 90 minutes on an Oriental carpet and greeted several hundred people, one by one, in a receiving line.

"I'm still numb from what happened this morning," he said later. "It's something I never anticipated in my life...It will take me a while to sort it out."

Well-wishers at the reception included from Mrs. Cuomo, who hugged him twice: William Wilson, the U.S. Ambassador to the Vatican, and Veronica Durkin of Bricktown, N.J., who met O'Connor nearly 30 years ago when he was a Navy chaplain and she was a Navy lieutenant in Washington.

At another reception, former Massachusetts Gov. John Volpe praised Law as a "genuine, sincere man, with a remarkable ability to get his message across."

The new cardinals will "take possession" of their titular churches in special Masses this week.

O'Connor's assigned church in Rome is the Basilica of Saints John and Paul, built in the late 4th century over what were believed to be the remains of the two martyrs for which it is named.

Law will take over Santa Susanna, which serves Rome's English-speaking community. But the title-taking ceremony will be in the Basilica of Santa Maria Maggiore because Santa Susanna has been closed for about a year for repairs.

Midland man in stable condition after stabbing

From Staff Reports

A 29-year-old Midland man was in stable condition in Odessa's Medical Center Hospital Saturday night after being stabbed early Saturday morning, according to a hospital spokeswoman.

Alvin Tartt, 210 N. Marshall, was treated in the emergency room of Midland Memorial Hospital after being stabbed on the street in the 2300 block of East Kentucky Avenue about 3:15 a.m., according to police reports. He later was transferred to the Odessa hospital.

In other police activity Friday, a Midland City Jail trusty walked away from the jail and escaped Friday — for about 15 minutes.

Jerry Franklin Chitwood, 26, got as far as a nearby food store before being apprehended, police said. A man had noticed Chitwood removing his white "MPD" overalls and walking away from the police station, 404 E. Texas, about 5:15 p.m. Friday, and reported him to his "employers," who collected their untrustworthy trusty before he got too far.

Gili Lopez, 1215 E. Jax, reported a Friday burglary of his home to police. A $250 watch and a $200 wedding band were taken sometime between 10 a.m. and 4:15 p.m. Entry was gained by breaking through a bathroom window on the west side of the residence, reports said.

Senate gives UT, A&M eminent domain over land

AUSTIN (AP) — The Senate voted to give regents at the University of Texas and Texas A&M the power to take over non-university land if the federal government should locate the world's largest atom-smasher in Texas.

On another vote, the Senate refused to debate a proposed constitutional amendment that would require the Legislative Budget Board and governor's office to approve the hiring of private consultants by state agencies.

Later, however, the Senate adopted an amended version of the proposal that merely states that the Legislature may require the prior approval of "the expenditure or the emergency transfer" of funds appropriated for state agencies. The measure was returned to the House on a 30-1 vote.

Sen. John Montford sponsored the House-approved bill that would give UT and A&M regents the power of eminent domain if it is needed to locate the Super-conducting Super Collider Accelerator on state-owned property.

According to Montford, D-Lubbock, so much land could be needed, the project area would lap over onto private property. Regents would need the authority to condemn that land for use in conjunction with the state land.

The atom-smasher would include a circular underground tunnel surrounded by electromagnetic field generators, and Montford was asked how much land would be required. "I'm told the diameter could be as large as 30 miles," he said.

"I think the people of West Texas" — where university land is located — "would welcome the project," Montford said.

FTC: Repeal of Blue Law would cut consumer costs

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Trade Commission favors repeal of the Texas Blue Law on the basis that it costs consumers money because it makes it harder for them to shop.

Repeal of the law, which prohibits sales of 42 kinds of goods on consecutive days of the weekend, has been passed by the Legislature and is on Gov. Mark White's desk.

In a letter to state Rep. Lee F. Jackson, R-Dallas, the commission's Dallas regional director, Jim Moseley, said the FTC has researched the question as part of its duties to investgate restraints on trade.

Moseley said the FTC believes Texans would benefit from repeal in two ways:

"First, Texas consumers would benefit from the reduction in the cost and convenience of shopping," Moseley said. "Second, Texas consumers would benefit from lower prices on the previously restricted items."

Economists call expenses incurred by the act of shopping "search costs."

"These costs are difficult to measure, but they are real," Moseley said.

The less time consumers have to shop, the more trips they have to make to look and the higher their "search costs," he said.

"Preventing consumers from shopping at certain retail establishments for one-half of the weekend has the effect of artificially increasing search costs."

Senate bid to prevent local measured phone service fails

AUSTIN (AP) — A bid to prohibit telephone companies from charging for local phone calls in a manner similar to long distance calls was defeated Saturday in the Senate.

Although the Senate voted overwhelmingly earlier this month in favor of a bill that would prohibit the so-called "local measured service" charges, Saturday's effort fell victim to end-of-the session fears.

The Legislature is scheduled to adjourn Monday, and time is running out for consideration of much legislation.

Because the House failed to take up the first Senate bill, Sen. Chet Edwards, D-Duncanville, tried again to ban local measured service by amending a bill dealing with state telephone equipment purchases.

"I voted for your bill the last time. But it could cost the state of Texas over $10 million. This is not the time to play games with $10 million," said Sen. Roy Blake, D-Nacogdoches, objecting to Edwards' amendment.

The amendment failed when senators voted 17-13 to table it.

LMS would charge for local calls based on duration, distance and time of day.

Edwards defended his amendment, saying phone company lobbyists haven't been up front with lawmakers about local measured service and that the Legislature should act quickly to stop the practice at least temporarily.

"The telephone lobbyists are talking out of both sides of their mouths," Edwards charged. He said lawmakers were told LMS would lower costs to consumers while labor leaders were told it would create additional jobs.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

Budget process like dog walking on hind legs

By BILL KIDD

AUSTIN — To paraphrase the 18th century lexicographer and wit Samuel Johnson, the legislative budget process is like a dog walking on its hind legs.

The most astonishing thing about it isn't how well it works, but that it works at all.

As the 69th Legislature entered the last week of its regular session, it was the budget which was the focus of attention for many members — as is usually, and understandably, the case.

And while House and Senate conferees were attempting to resolve their differences over the state's $37 billion two-year spending plan, Rep. Lee Jackson, R-Dallas, was urging his colleagues to approve a constitutional amendment aimed at allowing lawmakers some limited budget management powers.

One frequent complaint, from legislators, state agency officials and some taxpayer organizations, is that the current method of setting state spending for a period ending some 33 months after those expenditures are authorized isn't the best way of allocating funds.

"It's insane. Just utterly insane," says one veteran House member, who admits he'd like to see annual sessions of the Legislature for budgeting purposes.

But, he notes, the people haven't liked that idea, rejecting annual sessions when the idea has been proposed in the form of a constitutional amendment.

And it appears that annual sessions won't be occuring in Texas through any constitutional change.

It is possible, of course, for lawmakers to be called into session whenever the governor feels that's necessary — and in recent decades, it's been necessary fairly often.

One of the main objections on special sessions, however, is that they cost money (although determining just how much has been a matter of dispute over the years).

Some lawmakers will argue that special sessions, or annual sessions, on budgets are cheaper in the long run than the current two-year budgeting process.

Despite changes in recent years, such as "zero-based budgeting," and increased legislative scrutiny of agency operations, and the desire by legislators to avoid tax increases, expenditures continue to grow and charges of waste continue.

All in all, the House Appropriations Committee and Senate Finance Committee have to be given high marks for their efforts during this regular session.

No one is going to agree with all of the decisions made by those groups, or the conference committee members, in allocating funds, but the appropriations process is one which produces compromises and relative degrees of happiness and unhappiness.

Higher education is one of those areas — with concern by many lawmakers, particularly those with universities in their districts — that higher education may have been forced to take too many cuts (coupled with an increase in tuition).

State employees didn't like the small salary increases proposed by the House version, and liked even less the lack of increases proposed by the Senate version.

That list could go on and on.

The amazing thing is that given the needs of the state, given the economic crunch facing lawmakers, and given the philosophical differences among members, that anything even approaching agreement comes from the process.

But it's also obvious that the process still is extremely far removed from perfection.

AVOID SELLING PROBLEMS

Home sellers have legitimate fears. Will the home be sold in time? Will you get the price you are hoping for? Will your lifestyle and time be endangered by hordes of unqualified, curiosity seekers? Will an unqualified prospect make an offer, tie it up for months, only for the transaction to fall through?

One way to increase the chances of unpleasant things happening, is to put a For-Sale sign on your lawn and try to sell the house yourself. As a "FSBO" (For Sale By Owner), you can count on your home being an open target for any and all who want to take a peek. You'll have absolutely no control over the situation.

Selling a home should not be traumatic if you do it the professional way. Ally yourself with a professional Realtor who will show your home only to qualified buyers, capable of completing the transaction. You will be transferring the problems to your Realtor's shoulders. Also, you'll probably come out better financially. That's why over 85% of all home sellers sell through professionals. It makes sense.

Seaman turned over to FBI

ANDREWS AIR FORCE BASE, Md. (AP) — Seaman Michael Lance Walker, the younger half of an alleged father-son spy team, arrived in handcuffs from his overseas Navy post Saturday to face charges he helped give U.S. military secrets to the Soviet Union.

Walker, dressed in a white shirt and bluejeans, arrived on a Navy C-9 transport plane and was turned over to FBI agents.

He was taken in a six-car caravan to an undisclosed location to be held until a scheduled arraignment Tuesday in Baltimore before a federal magistrate.

Walker's father, John A. Walker Jr., accused of being the the key to the espionage ring, was arrested Monday and is being held in the Baltimore City Jail.

Autopsy reveals cancer

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — Cancer and natural causes — not a mistaken injection — killed Lillian Cedeno, who died 86 days after she was left paralyzed and comatose by an anti-cancer drug injected into her spine, doctors said Saturday.

An autopsy on the body of Ms. Cedeno, 21, of Schenectady, was performed Saturday morning by Dr. Jack Davies and Albany County Coroner William Loetterle III.

"The cancer had started on the right side of her face and spread throughout her body" causing massive shock and hemorrhaging, Loetterle said.

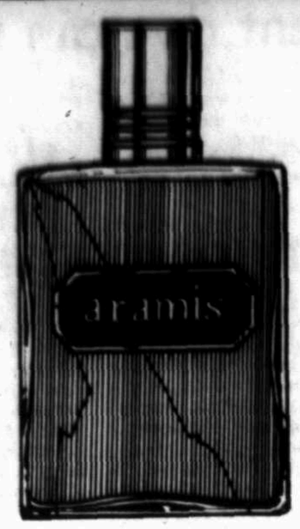

Ms. Cedeno, who gave birth three months prematurely by Caesarean section on March 16, was pronounced dead Friday by her attending physician, Dr. Gregory Harper.

MOVE houses demolished

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Bulldozers Saturday began demolishing the remains of the 61 homes destroyed by fire during a police battle with the radical group MOVE, preparing the ground for city-financed reconstruction.

As the machinery knocked down walls and removed debris, some of the 270 people left homeless by the May 13 blaze returned to the rubble of their homes to look for belongings or take photographs.

Moscow book display center of controversy

WASHINGTON (AP) — An effort to put America's best foot forward in a display of books at a Moscow fair has turned into dispute and controversy, with author Kurt Vonnegut accusing the government of attempting censorship.

"The New Right would love it if there was a literary left," says Vonnegut. "There's no literary left. I'm not a communist sympathizer. They're trying to inflame the rubes."

At issue are the choice of 300 books for display and catalog listing at the Moscow International Book Fair in September.

The Association of American Publishers had its International Freedom to Publish Committee select the books for display. That panel named a committee of authors and librarians, headed by Vonnegut, to draw up the list from books published in the last five years or so.

At first blush, the list looks anything but controversial. There's the Sears-Roebuck catalog, the Rand McNally Road Atlas, Lee Iacocca's best seller, Dr. Seuss' latest, even a book on Elvis Presley.

But the National Endowment for Democracy, a group founded by the Reagan administration to promote democratic institutions worldwide, had some complaints.

The group, which runs on federal money and provided a $50,000 grant to the publishers committee to select books for Moscow, contends the list of titles is ideologically unbalanced.

"The big mistake was getting public money," Vonnegut said in an interview. "We got a censor with it."

In his battle, however, Vonnegut's support among publishers may be eroding. AAP officials, in a letter to their critics, in effect dropped their support for their own committee, which had been defending the list of books Vonnegut and others had drawn up for display in Moscow.

The AAP asked for a meeting with National Endowment for Democracy officials. The association's president, Townsend Hoopes, said the publishers committee had been "needlessly provocative."

The dispute first arose when Carl Gershman, president of the endowment and a former aide to Jeane Kirkpatrick as U.N. ambassador, told the publishers committee their list was unbalanced.

He pointed to "The Fallacy of Star Wars" by the Union of Concerned Scientists; "The Price of Power" by Seymour Hersh, a book critical about Henry A. Kissinger; and "The Fate of the Earth," a critique of the U.S.-Soviet nuclear arms race by Jonathan Schell.

Each presents one side of a controversial issue, but no books presenting opposite views were included, Gershman said.

Gershman said he wanted more books added, saying if the list includes Hersh's book then Kissinger's memoirs ought to be included too.

But the publishers' International Freedom to Publish Committee balked. John Macrae 3rd, its chairman and editor-in-chief of Holt, Rinehart and Winston, said Gershman told him he wanted not just additions but deletions too.

United Airlines, pilots break off talks

CHICAGO (AP) — United Airlines and striking pilots, spurning a final settlement proposal by federal mediators, broke off negotiations Saturday after a 23-hour bargaining marathon failed to end the pilots' nine-day walkout against the nation's largest airline.

United, now operating about 14 percent of its normal schedule of 1,550 flights a day, immediately announced its intent to boost that to 25 percent by July 1.

No further talks were scheduled, and the federal mediators said they were withdrawing.

"There's no deal until there's a deal," Tom Germuska, a United spokesman, said in announcing that the company and the pilots had rejected the mediators' proposal for a back-to-work-agreement. A tentative agreement on wages, which had been the key issue, also was scrubbed, Germuska said.

"We were on strike yesterday...we're on strike today, and we'll continue to be on strike until all outstanding issues are handled," said Al Vazquez, a spokesman for the Air Line Pilots Association.

The back-to-work agreement, specifying terms for returning about 5,000 striking United pilots to work, had remained to be worked out after tentative settlement of the strike's basic issue — the airline's proposed two-tier pay scale.

Helen Witt, chairman of the Federal Mediation Board, said late Friday that United and the association had tentatively resolved the pay scale issue, which would pay newly hired pilots less than veterans. She did not disclose details of that agreement.

Ground crews service United Airlines jetliners Friday at Chicago's O'Hare Airport, where negotiations between the nation's largest air carrier and striking pilots continued through the night.

Early Saturday, federal mediators made a final proposal for a back-to-work agreement and said they would withdraw if it were not accepted.

"We've shot our wad," said mediator Ralph Calliander. "You get burnt up once in a while."

Germuska said the basic dispute on a back-to-work plan was the airline's wish to "protect the rights of people who worked during the strike."

No further talks were scheduled, Germuska said.

The pilots' union said United had refused to guarantee that 570 new pilots — who had been trained by the company but honored picket lines — would find their jobs waiting. The company also intended to demote management pilots who had honored the picket lines, the union said.

"United plans a major expansion after the strike, yet it wants to exact revenge on hundreds of highly qualified personnel who could contribute to the expansion," the union said in a written statement.

United spokesman Joe Hopkins responded, "This is not a question of revenge." He said the 570 newly trained pilots had been offered jobs on May 17, but they refused on the advice of the union. The airline contends ALPA cannot represent those pilots because they were never hired.

United, which has announced a reduced flight schedule through June 1, planned 209 daily flights to 41 airports Friday through Monday. It normally has a 1,550 flights a day, and the target for July 1 would be about 360 flights a day.

John Zeeman, a United executive vice president, said that even if the strike continues the airline expects to resume its full flight schedule by the first quarter of next year.

"We can bring 300 to 600 pilots per month into the airline, (even) assuming no one else will cross the picket line," Zeeman said.

Kay Lund, a United spokeswoman, said late Friday that the airline had already hired 65 pilots and that they were being trained.

Veteran counselor served 30-month tour in Vietnam

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — Vietnam veterans carrying psychological scars from their battles in Southeast Asia are comfortable talking to 74-year-old Fred Bonanno — not only did he lose a son to the Viet Cong, he served there longer as a civilian than most GIs.

"I saw the soldiers bleeding to death in the fields. Bodies just laying there. I still get flashbacks," says Bonanno, a retired psychologist whom President Reagan honored recently for five years of full-time volunteer service at the Vietnam Veteran Center here.

Bonanno helps veterans readjust to civilian life, find work, apply for benefits, further their education or ease the mental anguish that came when they returned from the battlefield to a disapproving nation.

After a career as an industrial psychologist and union mediator specializing in railroad labor relations, Bonanno joined the State Department and in April 1967, at 56, went to Vietnam as a foreign service officer shortly after learning his middle son, Fred, had been killed in action.

Although he's not specific about his duties there, Bonanno says he traveled extensively throughout Vietnam for 30 months.

"Nothing worthwhile was accomplished in Vietnam — on any level. It was disgusting," he says.

"In Vietnam, you were always alone; you were lost. When a man was killed, a single person went in to take his place. In other wars, there were always groups of men; the camaraderie was there."

Columbia retracts 10 studies

BOSTON (AP) — Ten scientific studies conducted at Columbia University are being retracted from medical journals because their results are wrong, and a committee investigating the affair said it could neither prove nor rule out "deliberate fabrication of data."

The committee, headed by a Nobel Prize winner, criticized a researcher for relying on a test for four years after doubts were raised about its accuracy. It also chastised a senior physician for listing himself as a co-author of studies in which he was not directly involved.

The controversy centers on Dr. S. Alexander Stalcup, acting head of the vasoactive mediator research lab at Columbia's College of Physicians and Surgeons, and Dr. Robert B. Mellins, chief of the pediatric pulmonary division.

The problems came to light after the first three retractions were printed in the May issue of the Journal of Clinical Investigation. The Boston-based journal published the discredited studies between 1979 and 1984.

Dr. Henrik H. Bendixen, dean of the medical school, attributed the problems in part to the "high-pressure environment" at Columbia, in New York City.

Stalcup blamed the discrepancies on a difficult test, and said no fraud was involved.

According to the committee report, Stalcup, 39, brought the test to the lab in 1975. He used it to develop a theory about how the lungs produce chemicals that regulate blood pressure, especially when they are deprived of oxygen. The research had implications for the treatment of heart attacks and lung disease.

Research by scientists at other universities conflicted with Stalcup's. However, Stalcup and his boss, Mellins, continued to produce papers through 1983 that confirmed the theory and were based, in part, on the dubious test.

Last year, Stalcup developed a new, apparently more accurate test. It refuted the results of the earlier test. When this was learned, Columbia named two committees to investigate. An internal committee was made up of faculty members, and a five-member outside committee was headed by Dr. Rosalyn Yalow of the Bronx Veterans Administration Hospital, who won the Nobel Prize in medicine in 1977.

"The external review committee could not find overt evidence for deliberate fabrication of data, although this could not be excluded," the committee wrote. "However, the committee established that Dr. Stalcup had not adequately supervised the technical staff.

"In addition, the continued publication and presentation of papers based on data of dubious certainty showed poor professional judgment. The committee found Dr. Stalcup's written and oral explanation of his actions contradictory and confusing."

The committee noted that since 1978, about half of Mellins' published papers involved the disputed work.

"Despite this deep involvement, Dr. Mellins appeared to be unaware of the problems underlying the papers he co-authored," the committee said.

SS benefits freeze has slim chance of passage

WASHINGTON (AP) — House budget negotiators are presenting a unified front for preserving next year's Social Security increases, sharply reducing chances that the Senate plan to freeze the benefits next year will survive.

In fact, while Republican senators have given the freeze only lukewarm support, House Republicans have signaled even before negotiations begin that they will oppose it.

Instead, the battle is likely to be over program eliminations and defense spending when the House-Senate conference committee begins its work after the one-week congressional Memorial Day recess. The Senate budget calls for terminating 13 programs, the House version only one.

The most President Reagan probably can expect on defense is that the conference will go along with the Senate version, which holds the rise in defense spending to the rate of inflation — a sharply lower amount than the 6 percent increase above inflation that he originally sought.

The budget passed by the House last week would freeze Pentagon spending authority at 1985 levels as part of a $56 billion deficit-reduction package for next year.

Even with that freeze, actual spending on defense in the 1986 fiscal year will be some $15 billion more than in the current fiscal year — largely because of previously appropriated funds. That compares to a $21 billion increase in actual defense spending under the Senate's version.

Reagan, who reluctantly accepted the Senate levels in a compromise with Senate Republican leaders, has been forced to make numerous concessions with Congress this year — a striking contrast to the legislative successes of his first term.

Now, Reagan and his GOP allies in Congress say they are drawing the line and will yield no further.

Still, as the House was voting to sharply restrain the president's military buildup, Reagan was forced into yet another major compromise with the Republican-led Senate last week. He agreed to limit the deployment of MX missiles to 50 instead of the 100 he had originally sought to place in Minuteman silos.

The Reagan administration, and in particular the Defense Department, has not done a very good job this year in selling its programs to Congress, said Rep. Delbert Latta, R-Ohio, who will lead the House Republican team in the budget negotiations.

"I think there has been a beating up of the president on national defense," said Latta, otherwise a strong administration supporter. "High priced toilet seats, high-price wrenches and overcharges by defense contractors...have had their impact," he said.

Still, Latta said Republicans will fight hard for the higher defense levels in the Senate-passed bills.

Sears forced to defend reliability of products

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP) — At the midway point in Maine's lawsuit against Sears, Roebuck & Co., the state is trying to prevent its own investigators from testifying and Sears has only reluctantly stipulated how long consumers can expect products to be reliable.

At issue are sales practices used at Sears stores nationwide, and both sides agree that a state court ruling could have repercussions in other states.

A finding favorable to the state "might just shame the Federal Trade Commission and other federal levels to get into it," says Deputy Attorney General Rufus E. Brown, who heads the state legal team.

Sears' chief defense lawyer, John J. O'Leary Jr., agrees, saying, "There's nothing to prevent somebody from trying to read the law in the same way."

Maine accuses the Chicago-based retail chain of using deceptive advertising for major appliances on sale to lure customers into eight Maine stores, and then pressuring shoppers to buy more expensive models.

The state, which completed its case Friday, also alleges that Sears sells service contracts that merely duplicate existing warranty coverage on its refrigerators, washing machines, televisions and other appliances.

Sears denies all six counts of the state's complaint.

O'Leary says the two "bait-and-switch" charges are not backed up by enough evidence to support more than "a one-in-a-million proposition."

"They had a grand total of 20 complaints" from among several million transactions, said O'Leary. "We will call the seven (state) investigators who in our view conducted an investigation that supports the defense," he said.

Injured pilot steers disabled plane away from boats

SAN DIEGO (AP) — A disabled U.S. Navy plane narrowly missed holiday pleasure boats Saturday as it crashed into the busy harbor, and authorities praised the critically injured pilot for staying at the controls.

"The pilot stayed in the craft avoiding nearby ships and buildings. He ejected at zero altitude on impact with the water. His chute didn't open," said San Diego fire department spokesman Mel Young.

The 30-year-old pilot was taken by helicopter to the University of California-San Diego Medical Center, where he was undergoing surgery for multiple internal injuries, Young said.

The flight officer, 25, ejected from the plane and hit the water with her parachute half open, Young said.

She was taken by Coast Guard boat and private vehicle to Balboa Hospital, where she was in stable condition with "bangs and bruises," said Harbor Police Officer Dennis Linney.

The Navy declined to release the names of the aviators.

The A-4 attack plane "landed right in the middle of about 15 pleasure boats, " said Linney, who rescued the pilot. "It's busy out there today, like every Memorial Day."

HOW THEY VOTED

House OKs budget package; Senate limits MX deployment

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Votes of area members of Congress on key issues during the week ending May 24, 1985, follow.

KEY HOUSE VOTES

House Democrats rallied behind party leaders May 23, approving their own version of a budget package that, if implemented, would cut $56 billion from the nation's deficit next year. The package, approved 258-170, maintains benefits for Social Security recipients but freezes defense spending at current levels.

The Republican-controlled Senate passed a budget plan May 10, and now both measures must go to conference, where representatives from each chamber will attempt to hammer out a compromise package. The House-Senate compromise will guide congressional committees in drafting spending bills for fiscal 1986.

Both plans are designed to reduce the federal deficit by $56 billion next year, but the Senate's proposal calls for a one-year freeze on Social Security cost-of-living alowances and an increase in defense spending to keep pace with inflation.

Supporters of the package claimed that increases in defense spending over the last four years were enough to guarantee the nation's security. Some members were enraged over recent revelations of overestimates routinely concealed within the defense budget and allegations of waste, fraud and abuse in defense contracting.

"This type of gluttonous budgeting, combined with abusive or even fraudulent conduct by defense contractors, certainly does little to inspire belief in the Pentagon's urgent warnings on the need for more defense spending," declared Rep. William J. Hughes, D-N.J.

Opponents contended that the package would only save half of the amount claimed because it failed to include instructions to House committees to force them to implement many of the budget cuts and did not discontinue low-priority federal programs. They also wanted more defense spending than provided in the Democrats' package.

Voting for the Democratic budget plan: No West Texas representatives.

Voting against: Rep. Tom Loeffler, R-Hunt; Rep. Larry Combest, R-Lubbock; Rep. Henry B. Gonzales, D-San Antonio.

KEY SENATE VOTES

In a dramatic reversal on defense policy, the Senate May 23 voted 78-20 to allow only 50 MX missiles — instead of the 100 sought by President Reagan — to be deployed in existing Minuteman silos.

The vote was described as a compromise between Reagan and Senate moderates of both parties. It was crafted to avoid a deployment cap of 40 missiles. Congress has already authorized production of 42 MX missiles, and this latest action allows production of an additional 12, for a total of 54. Fifty of the missiles would be deployed; four would be used for spares and flight tests.

The vote by the Senate does not appear to reflect dissatisfaction with the multiple-warhead MX missile itself. It indicated, however, widespread dissatisfaction with the administration's proposal to put MX missiles in old missile silos. The House is expected soon to consider 1986 spending on the MX missile.

"This (compromise) does not mean that tomorrow or next week or next month we will have a new basing mode for the MX, but it does mean that we are going to take a look," said Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., the sponsor of the amendment.

Opposition to the amendment came on the one hand from members who felt that the proposal did not go far enough in reducing the number of nuclear weapons and on the other hand from those who felt that additional missiles were needed to counter the threat posed to the United States by the Soviet Union's nuclear arsenal.

Voting for the cap on MX deployment: Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas.

Voting against: Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas.

The Senate voted 42-56 May 21 to kill an amendment intended to eliminate over $2 billion in funds to buy additional MX missiles in fiscal 1986.

Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., led supporters of the measure, who argued that deploying the MX missile in stationary silos makes them vulnerable to a surprise attack by the Soviet Union.

"I think it would be on the side of wisdom for the Senate to vote no on this amendment," said Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., carrying the banner for the opposition in the debate.

Both Texas senators, Bentsen and Gramm, voted against halting the MX program.

Pistol may be linked to attempt to kill pope

ROERMOND, Netherlands (AP) — Police have arrested a Turkish man who was carrying a pistol that may be linked to the 1981 attempt to kill Pope John Paul II, a law enforcement official said Saturday.

Public Prosecutor L. van der Laan said the suspect, who gave his name as Aslan Esmet, was arrested May 14 on a train entering the Netherlands from West Germany at the southern town of Venlo. John Paul was visiting a Dutch town only a few miles away at the time during his visit to the Netherlands, Belgium and Luxembourg.

Van der Laan said Esmet, about 25, carried a Turkish passport and a false French passport. He was armed with a 9mm pistol that may be tied to the attempt by Mehmet Ali Agca — also a Turk — to assassinate John Paul four years ago in St. Peters' Square in Rome, the prosecutor said.

The trial of five Turks and three Bulgarians charged with complicity in the plot against the pope is scheduled to open in Rome Monday. Only one Bulgarian and two Turks will be in court, however, with the others tried in absentia.

Agca, who is serving a life sentence for shooting and severely wounding the pontiff, will also be tried on a new charge of illegally importing the pistol he used in the attack.

"There are indications that there could be a connection between the weapon (Esmet carried) and the weapon used in the assassination attempt on the pope" in May 1981, said van der Laan.

He declined to elaborate, saying: "I cannnot be more specific about that,"and then added, "The suspect gave no indication of his reasons for having the pistol."

CBS television reported that the pistol, a Browning automatic similar to the one used in the attack against the pope, was one of four that authorities determined Agca had bought.

Van der Laan said Esmet was arrested on charges of illegal possession of a weapon.

Korean students end four-day siege

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — About 70 shouting students left a U.S. government facility peacefully on Sunday, abandoning a four-day-old siege aimed at protesting American support for the South Korean government.

As reporters watched, the students exited the building yelling "Down with Chun Doo-hwan!" — the South Korean president — and "Stop supporting the military regime!"

Hundreds of plainclothes and uniformed police ringed the U.S. Information Service building in downtown Seoul as the students boarded two buses reportedly headed for the hospital. The buses, manned by several plainclothes police, sped off with a police escort.

As they left the bulding through the same entrance they had entered at noon Thursday, many students sported white headbands inscribed "Down with military dictatorship."

They had staged a hunger strike until Saturday afternoon, when they accepted food from both dissident groups and the U.S. Embassy. An embassy official said sandwiches, vegetables and milk were sent in and the students "wolfed it down."

Since taking over the second-story library, the students conducted intermittent negotiations with U.S. Embassy officers, who said repeatedly that they wanted to resolve the situation "quickly and peacefully" without intervention by Korean police.

Two members of a militant student group occupying the U.S. Information Service building in downtown Seoul, South Korea, are shown Saturday beneath a placard they put up in the windows of the second-floor library. AP Laserphoto

Like other recent student demonstrations, the protest centered on the fifth anniversary of a May 18, 1980 uprising in the southern city of Kwangju. The rebellion began soon after the government declared martial law, and was put down by troops after nine days. By official count, 191 people perished. Dissidents put the toll much higher and made the crackdown a major issue in their opposition to Chun's government.

The students in the library said the United States condoned, or did not try to stop the sending of troops into Kwangju and demanded an American apology. U.S. officials say there was no U.S. involvement.

Before leaving the four-story building, the students declared they would continue to seek an apology from the United States over the Kwangju crackdown. But they said they would end their occupation of the library because continued dialogue seemed futile.

The Yonhap News Agency said the student protestors were being taken to two Seoul city hospitals, where they would be given physical examinations.

It said they later would be questioned by authorities on possible charges of violence, interference in the operation of the U.S. facility and violations of laws governing assembly. It was not immediately possible to obtain official confirmation of the agency's reports.

A source familiar with the U.S.-student talks, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the protesters sought assurance about their fate after leaving the USIS building.

Early Saturday an ambulance arrived at the building and a young woman was carried out on a stretcher and taken to a hospital.

Small boats set sail for France on Dunkirk anniversary

DOVER, England (AP) — A fleet of small boats, delayed for a day by high winds, sailed Saturday for France to mark the 45th anniversary of the World War II evacuation of British soldiers from the beaches at Dunkirk.

All of the 44 small boats took part in the May 1940 operation that plucked 338,226 men from the French shore during a nine-day mission. The British Admiralty had appealed to all private boat owners in southern England to help rescue the soldiers trapped in a 20-mile long coastal pocket by German troops who had blitzed across Belgium and northern France.

On Saturday, fireboats sprayed jets of water into the air and other boats in Dover harbor sounded their horns as the small vessels, some of them up to 70 years old, put to sea for the afternoon crossing of the English Channel.

The flotilla had planned to sail on Friday, but broadcaster Raymond Baxter, the "admiral" of the Dunkirk Little Ships Association, said high winds made the crossing impossible for most.

"We are here to honor these little ships, not to hazard them," he said.

The winds eased Saturday and the boats moved off, joined by the Royal Navy frigate HMS Active, assigned to shepherd them across some of the world's busiest sealines. Officials compared the crossing to escorting sheep across a superhighway at rush hour.

On Sunday, a Royal Air Force helicopter was to drop a wreath in the center of a circle of the boats a few miles off the French coast in a ceremony commemorating the historic evacuation.

Israeli invasion unleashed forces

By ROBERT H. REID

An Analysis

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — A week of tumult in the Middle East — fighting at Beirut camps, prisoner swaps in Israel, and a bomb attack on the ruler of Kuwait — shows the region is still feeling aftershocks from Israel's 1982 invasion of Lebanon.

Although separated by geography, all three events stem from forces set in motion by the Israeli invasion and its aftermath, and show how those forces are being felt well beyond the borders of Lebanon.

The heavy fighting between Palestinians and Shiite Moslem militias around Beirut refugee camps has brought together factions of the Palestine Liberation Organization, which had been split over PLO chairman Yasser Arafat's leadership.

The fighting has embarrassed both the Shiite Amal movement — the Palestinians' armed rivals — and the Syrian government of President Hafez Assad, while bolstering Arafat's reputation at the expense of his pro-Syrian PLO rivals.

Responsibility for Saturday's unsuccessful attempt on the life of Kuwait's emir, Sheik Jaber al-Ahmed al-Sabah, was claimed by Jihad Islami.

In Israel, Monday's controversial release of 1,150 prisoners in return for three Israeli soldiers captured in Lebanon rekindled bitter memories of the war at a time when Prime Minister Shimon Peres' government is preparing to bring the last troops home.

The Palestinian-Shiite fighting in Beirut stemmed from an attempt by Amal leader Nabih Berri to keep Arafat and the PLO from regaining their Lebanese power base destroyed in the Israeli invasion.

Berri may have assumed he had the tacit approval of the Syrians, who oppose Arafat and are as eager as the Israelis to prevent him from gaining strength in Lebanon.

But Palestinians who broke with Arafat after a May 1983 Syrian-supported revolt put aside internal differences and joined Arafat loyalists against the Shiites.

PLO gunners in the hills above Beirut, most of whom belong to anti-Arafat factions, fired long-range artillery into Shiite neighborhoods in support of fellow Palestinians.

Elsewhere in the Arab world, accounts of the fighting have been sympathetic to the Palestinians, even in nations that supported Syrian and Shiite positions.

In Libya, a Syrian ally, state news media accused Amal of trying to finish the "destruction of the Palestinian cause" which the Israelis were said to have begun in 1982.

Maj. Abdul-Salam Ahmed Jalloud, the second-ranking figure in Libya after Moammar Khadafy, sent telegrams to Lebanese leaders warning of a "historical crime" against the Palestinians and urging an end to the fighting.

Saturday's car bomb attack on the Kuwaiti ruler was claimed by Jihad Islami — Arabic for Islamic Holy War — purportedly to force the release of 17 people arrested in the December 1983 truck bombings of U.S., French and Kuwaiti interests in Kuwait.

Cultural gaps difficult to bridge

MONTERREY, Mexico (AP) — The Mexico of fiestas, Spanish words, tacos and mariachi music that most American visitors enjoy is just a drop of tequila in the complex bottle of Mexican culture.

And Americans who pack their own cultural values for a trip to Mexico invariably will be fueling the silent war that is preventing Americans and Mexicans from understanding each other, say experts studying life along the long border between the two countries.

Consider these common scenes:

An American arrives promptly at a Mexican office for an appointment. After waiting an hour, the American begins tapping his foot impatiently, glaring at the secretary and muttering words like "irresponsible" or "rude."

Two American women sit talking in a nice Mexican bar. After being propositioned repeatedly, the women storm out, ranting about the habits of Mexican men.

The Americans, said Jorge Bustamante, director of the Border Studies Center of Northern Mexico, are reacting to situations based on their own cultural values, not those of Mexico.

People on both sides of the border must realize that Mexican and American cultural differences run deeper than a Big Mac and fries versus a taco and guacamole.

In other words, visitors to Mexico must be willing to accept the whole cultural enchilada.

"We lack understanding of the two cultures on both sides of the border," said Bustamante during a visit here. His center is in Tijuana at the California border. "Americans tend to view things from their own experiences without considering the cultural values of Mexicans, and Mexicans do the same."

Americans can't understand why adult children in Mexico live with their parents while Mexicans see nursing homes for the elderly in the States as a sign of American "insensitivity."

Bustamante said, "If we make these kinds of mistakes, we cannot have rational communication."

Misunderstandings caused by cultural differences are especially troublesome along the border because, said Bustamante, "We interact with each other with increasing intensity."

Because the Mexican concept of time is different from the American, a person who arrives "late" for a meeting does not feel the need to apologize while a guest who arrives at his host's home at the apointed time for a dinner engagement might be considered rude.

In Mexico, the unescorted woman in a bar invariably will be considered promiscuous — and she will suffer the consequences.

Infighting sabotages black unity

By JAMES F. SMITH

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Moments after the end of a prayer service for peace among rival black anti-apartheid groups, youths in the crowd leaving the soccer stadium pulled three blacks from a truck and stabbed them.

The attackers, said to be wearing T-shirts of the United Democratic Front, then kidnapped Mbuzeli Dukumbana, regional leader of the Azanian People's Organization, or AZAPO, witnesses said.

Dukumbana later said the youths took him to a deserted area in a Port Elizabeth township, put a gasoline-soaked tire around his neck and were about to set him alight when a car approached and they scattered.

The prayer service was attended by an estimated 60,000 blacks, one of seven services held around the country May 12 in a clergy-led plea for black unity against white-minority rule and apartheid, the policy of racial segregation.

Spurred by the services, leaders of the Democratic Front and AZAPO pledged to stop feuding and accept their ideological differences.

But the Port Elizabeth incident raised a key question: can leaders of the two main anti-apartheid movements in South Africa control their own followers?

Monitoring groups say about 370 blacks have perished in riots since last August. Most have been killed in clashes with police. Black mobs also have attacked black officials and police viewed as collaborators with the white government.

Now black youths are attacking rival group members perceived to be following a faulty ideological course.

Four AZAPO members have died and at least 43 AZAPO homes have been firebombed in recent weeks of fighting against the Democratic Front, according to AZAPO President Ishmael Mkhabela.

The groups' dispute centers on an issue that has bedeviled black politics for three decades — the role of whites in the campaign for black rights. The Democratic Front welcomes help from all races, but AZAPO declares that only blacks can lead the struggle for their own liberation.

Mkhabela and Murphison Morobe, a senior Democratic Front member, say the white government helped foment the recent bloodshed, in part by distributing phony pamphlets containing calls by the two groups to attack each other.

"Elements other than those interested in furthering the struggle have been fanning this thing, to make it hit the headlines and divert attention from the main issue," said Morobe.

Black Anglican Bishop Desmond Tutu of Johannesburg, winner of the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize, opened the recent peace initiative and joined one of the prayer services. He told a crowd in the black township of Soweto outside Johannesburg that internal divisions play into the government's hands.

Political scientist Tom Lodge, a lecturer at the University of the Witwatersrand in Johannesburg and a recognized authority on black politics, said nine months of anti-apartheid rioting in black townships has created an atmosphere in which many conflicts, including that between AZAPO and the Democratic Front, tend to be settled violently.

South Africa scraps law banning multiracial parties

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The white-minority government said Saturday it will scrap a 17-year-old law banning people of different races from joining the same political party, but still will not give blacks the right to vote.

Chris Heunis, the minister of constitutional development and planning, said the ruling National Party, in power since 1948, will ask Parliament to abolish a 1968 law that prevents people of different racial classifications from joining the same political party.

The law prevented whites, blacks, Asians and people of mixed race from forming multiracial parties.

"Since enactment of the act, circumstances have changed drastically," Heunis said in a statement.

It said the the decision "reiterates the government's commitment to abolish unnecessary measures and to carry through the reform process aimed at the establishment of a society in which all groups have effective participation in all decision-making processes."

President P.W. Botha has said his government will take some measures to reform its policy of apartheid, or racial segregation.

South Africans are classified as black, white, Asian and "colored" — mixed-race — and blacks also are subclassified along tribal lines.

Angola wants explanation of commandos' presence

LUANDA, Angola (AP) — The government on Saturday rejected a request by South Africa for immediate negotiations on the return of a South African commando captured in Angola, and instead demanded an explanation.

"The Angolan government has no intention of discussing this question with the South Africans within the next few days," said Raimundo Sottomayor, head of the official Angop news agency.

Sottomayor, at a meeting with foreign reporters, said he was told by high-level Angolan officials that Angola has not been officially notified of South Africa's request. He quoted the officials, who he did not identify, as saying Angola "demands an explanation from South Africa for this criminal act."

The Marxist government of President Jose Eduardo dos Santos regularly divulges major policy decisions through Angop.

Wednesday night, Angop reported that Angolan troops had killed two South African soldiers and captured a third the day before in northern Cabinda Province. It said the soldiers were carrying short-wave radios, guns and mines.

The Defense Ministry said later it was believed there were nine commandos in the unit, and six escaped.

South Africa initally denied the report, then said it had lost contact with an intelligence unit operating in Angola. South African Foreign Minister R.F. Botha said Friday that he had sent a message to Angola seeking an urgent meeting to discuss the return of the captured soldier and the bodies of his slain comrades.

Botha said the soldiers were gathering intelligence on the training of black nationalist guerrillas from Namibia in Angola.

Court orders release of one Solidarity activist

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — A Warsaw district court ordered Solidarity adviser Jacek Kuron released from prison Saturday after finding him innocent of refusing to leave an illegal May Day demonstration.

The same court later upheld a three-month sentence for Solidarity activist Seweryn Jaworski, who was convicted of taking part in a separate May Day protest near the Huta Warszawa steelworks.

In its ruling, the three-judge panel said Jaworski's sentence should be upheld because he had taken part in a "socially dangerous" demonstration and he had ignored police orders to leave.

Jaworski, a 54-year-old Warsaw leader of the outlawed Solidarity union, was sentenced on May 2 by a misdemeanor court.

That court, on the same day, sentenced Kuron to three months also.

It ruled that Kuron had refused police orders to leave a May Day march that began after a Mass at the St. Stanislaw Kostka Church.

More than 15,000 Solidarity supporters took part in that peaceful demonstration, and at least 40 were arrested. Many were convicted of refusing to obey police orders to disperse and were fined and then released.

In overruling the lower court, Chief Judge Julia Zdunczyk said there was "no justification" for sentencing Kuron.

"There is no doubt that he took part in the demonstration," the court said, "but it has not been proved...that he disobeyed the police orders."

It noted the orders to disperse were given while Kuron was negotiating with police to end the march.

When the verdict was announced there were shouts of surprise from about 50 Solidarity supporters in the courtroom.

Several people rushed up to shake Kuron's hand, but police quickly escorted the smiling dissident out of the courtroom as the crowd applauded.

Kuron, 51, is a founder of the now disbanded KOR workers' rights group.

He had defended the May Day march in his testimony to the court.

"Traditionally May Day is a working peoples' holiday and does not belong to governments," he said during the hearing that lasted more than two hours.

On Thursday, Solidarity activist Hebryk Wujec was sentenced to three months in prison by a Warsaw misdemeanor court on charges of attending an illegal rally and disobeying police. He said he would appeal the decision.

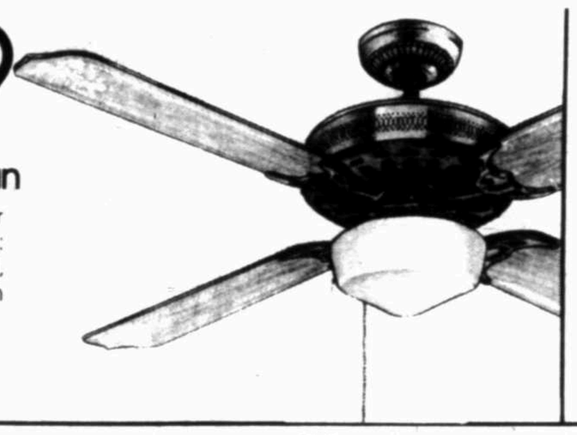

Kuron and Wujec were among the more than 600 Solidarity activists released from jail last year under the government's July amnesty program.

WORLD in brief

U.S. 'anti-spy' bill would threaten U.N., officials say

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — U.S. officials who believe Soviet spies use the United Nations as a front say the issue is clear: the spying must be stopped.

But U.N. officials say pending U.S. legislation to to restrict Soviet U.N. staffers would violate the spirit of a 38-year-old agreement that has allowed United Nations employees to move freely to and from the organization's headquarters in New York City.

The Senate Intelligence Committee approved a bill this month that would impose the same scrutiny and travel restrictions on Soviet members of the U.N. civil service that currently apply to Soviet diplomats.

A committee report, based on information from the FBI and former U.N. Ambassador Jeane J. Kirkpatrick, concludes: "Approximately one-fourth of the Soviets in the U.N. Secretariat are intelligence officers and many more are co-opted by the KGB or GRU." The KGB is Moscow's chief spy agency; the GRU is Soviet military intelligence.

The U.S. mission to the United Nations says about 300 Soviet citizens are employed by the U.N. Secretariat in New York and there is "no doubt" some are intelligence agents.

Soviets: No 'Star Wars'

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet commentators on Saturday were pessimistic about chances for agreement when the Geneva arms talks resume on May 30, and made it clear that Moscow wants U.S. space weapons research halted.

The Soviets warned that the United States could never succeed in creating an impregnable space-based defense against missiles, and pledged to match any such efforts.

The focus on "Star Wars" weapons set the stage for the second round of Geneva arms talks starting Thursday. Opening "Studio Nine," a television discussion program, commentator Leonid Zorin stressed the first round had been "difficult, very difficult...the Americans have not yet shown themselves ready to take a constructive position."

Commentator Vladlen Kuznetsov wrote that "the U.S. current posture in Geneva does not yet inspire optimism" in previewing the second round in the newspaper Rural Life (Selskaya Zhizn).

He said "the Soviet delegation will be pressing for a practical agreement within acceptable, reasonable time" and insisted any accord must link nuclear and space weapons.

Soviet striker deteriorating

MOSCOW — (LAT) The condition of a Soviet hunger striker, now in his third month of fasting in a bid to join his wife and children in the United States, has deteriorated in the last few days with signs of kidney and liver damage, his mother said Saturday.

A physician monitoring Yuri Balovlenkov has warned him that his condition is "dangerous," his mother, Katerina Petrov, said. She said analysis of his urine has revealed traces of blood, among other signs of deteriorating kidney and liver function.

The physician, a family friend who visits the Balovlenkovs' apartment regularly to check his condition, declined to speak in detail with a reporter, but she confirmed the findings of a urinalysis.

Balovlenkov, 35, completed the 61st day of his hunger strike Saturday. He has vowed to continue until Soviet authorities give him the exit visa he has sought for the last six years to join his American wife and two children in Baltimore.

Panda fund growing

PEKING (AP) - The Chinese Wildlife Protection Association has received donations from 10 million Chinese and foreigners to save famine-threatened giant pandas, the official Xinhua news agency reported Saturday.

Chinese animal lovers have given the equivalent of $754,386 and foreigners $92,000 since the fund was founded last year.

The government says 55 giant pandas have starved to death in southwest China since 1983 when arrow bamboo, their staple food, entered a rare flowering cycle and died.

Rescue workers have saved 26 starving pandas, association President Yang Zhong reported. But officials say it will take 10 years for new bamboo shoots to grow in the mountainous habitat where an estimated 1,000 giant pandas live.

China is no longer giving giant pandas to other countries because of the crisis.

Indians seize gold bars

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Customs officials seized gold bars valued at $400,000 which were hidden in diplomatic cargo addressed to an Afghan Embassy official, a customs official said Saturday.

Newspapers reported that officials Thursday found 195 gold bars weighing more than 50 pounds concealed in an air conditioner which the unidentified embassy official imported from Hong Kong.

The Hindustan Times quoted Deputy Customs Chief S.S. Bedi as saying that the embassy official was held for questioning, and that customs officers were investigating a possible gold smuggling ring.

An Afghan Embassy official declined comment, saying the embassy had not yet been informed of the incident by the government.

County forecasts

Midland, Ector, Crane, Upton, Reagan, Glasscock, Andrews, Gaines, Borden, Dawson, Howard and Martin: Today, warm, a 20 percent chance of late afternoon thunderstorms and high mid 90s. Wind south 10 to 20 mph. Sunday night, a 30 percent chance of evening thunderstorms and low mid-60s. Memorial Day, a 20 percent chance of late afternoon thunderstorms and high mid-90s.

Slim chance of storms forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

There were unconfirmed reports of a tornado touching down in West Odessa Saturday night, but Midland enjoyed a repeat of its Friday night luck, getting only some rain and minor hail while its neighbors were plagued by more severe weather.

But bad weather may find its way to the Tall City before the holiday weekend is over — there's a 20 percent chance of late afternoon thunderstorms today, a 30 percent chance for this evening and a 20 percent chance for Monday afternoon, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

The high today will be in the middle 90s, with winds from the south at 10-20 mph. Tonight's low will be in the mid-60s, and Monday's high will again be in the mid-90s.

Friday's high of 90 was 11 degrees below the record for the date of 101, set in 1953, while the overnight low of 60 was 12 degrees above the 1950 record of 48.

STATE

Thunderstorms rumbled across parts of West Texas late Saturday afternoon, while most of the rest of the state had sunny skies.

Severe thunderstorm warnings were issued early Saturday evening for Carson County and northern Armstrong County. Residents in those areas could expect hail, gusty winds, dangerous lightning and possible flooding in low-lying and flood-prone areas, the National Weather Service said.

The forecast for North Texas called for clear to partly cloudy through Monday with a slight chance of thunderstorms both days. Highs both days should reach the upper 80s and mid 90s, with lows today from 65 to 70.

In West Texas, widely scattered thunderstorms were predicted through Monday. Lows tonight should be in the 60s, with highs Monday ranging from the upper 80s to 104 in the Big Bend.

NATION

Thunderstorms brought heavy rain to southern Florida on Saturday, and scattered showers and thunderstorms were reported from northern New England to the Rocky Mountains.

The storms dumped 2.45 inches of rain on Key West, Fla., in one hour Saturday afternoon, while Miami received 1.16 inches in the same period.

Joe Ballard's sole hope for life sits only three feet from his hospital bed — a ventilator.

The robotic whirr of the machine's pump forces life-giving oxygen into a 17-year-old boy whose lungs always will be paralyzed — completely unable to function as the involuntary organs they were designed to be.

The sterile, futuristic unreality of Joe's room is hundreds of miles away from yet another life support system — the Texas Department of Human Resources in Austin.

Joe and others like him across the state who face astronomical medical expenses have found some hope in a recent funding proposal passed by the DHR, but the limits of the proposal itself continues to keep increasingly poorer parents of the handicapped in the dark and directing hospitals who treat such ventilator-dependent patients toward the red.

THE MOTHERS of children like Joe are crying out to legislators to help keep the ventilators pumping. And Joe's mother is one of them.

"It costs $400 a day to take care of Joe at home," said Ruby Ballard. "And it's costing $1,000 a day in the hospital."

Mrs. Ballard, when not maintaining vigil by her son's bedside, is calling senators, writing letters and receiving phone calls from the office of Vice President George Bush. With the steady pumping action of her son's life support system never far from her line of vision, Mrs. Ballard talks of her successes and failures.

"Joe is completely paralyzed from the neck down," she said. "He was in a car accident near Big Spring in June of 1983."

Joe's problems only began with the accident, indicated Mrs. Ballard.

"He was stabilized at Medical Center Hospital in Odessa, had his neck fused and was treated for stress ulcers during the month he was there," she said. Joe was placed on a ventilator the same day he arrived at MCH.

He then was transferred to the Texas Institute for Rehabilitation and Research in Houston where he was in the intensive care unit for more than a year.

Joe came home in August 1984 where he was able to sit in a wheelchair with a portable ventilator, said Mrs. Ballard.

Then the complications began.

"He was admitted to Women's and Children's Hospital in Odessa with a gallstone and kidney problem," she said. "One month later, he lost his left kidney. A month later — his gall bladder," said the former nursing home supervisor who tracks her son's medical history with the emotionless recall of a mother who has hope. Mrs. Ballard does not reflect long on what her son's condition was yesterday.

"After he lost the gall bladder, his blood pressure dropped 'plum to the bottom,'" she said. "He had a central line infection which is very common with these kinds of patients."

SHE ALSO remembers when Joe went blind for two days following surgery in the Houston hospital.

"We have to watch his vital signs because he has no feeling," she said.

In April, Joe experienced yet another setback — a stroke, which left him unable to talk normally.

Through sheer determination and avoidance of the unthinkable, Mrs. Ballard puts up a couragous front. "He's getting to where he can communicate," she said. "And after all this, there is no damage to the brain. He is an 'A' and 'B' student." Joe has a tutor at the hospital.

Today, Joe's condition remains a life and death question mark.

"He'll never breathe on his own," said Dr. John Bray, Joe's physician. "The prognosis for Joe is very poor. When your entire central nervous system is knocked out, everything goes haywire."

The physical problems lead to another unanswered question — paying for the medical treatment and 24-hour nursing care needed for ventilator patients like Joe.

"There are no state or federal funds for either hospital or home care for patients like Joe," said Bray. "And there is no facility in the state that will accept such patients for chronic care."

Bray estimated Joe's expenses at $600,000 for his stay at Women's and Children's hospital.

"Joe used to be covered by Cripple Children's, but that program was cut out while he was still in Houston. The Ballard's major medical coverage was used up long ago at TIRR," said Bray.

Social Security Supplemental Income (SSI) will cover Joe for 60 days in the hospital, but there must be a 60-day interim if readmitted and home care is not provided due to the family's income.

Other parents have similar stories.

"Our insurance company is saying they will cut us off after $2 million," said Odessan Lynn Booth, whose 3-year-old son Casey is semi-dependent on a ventilator. The Booths are well into their second million dollars of medical expenses for Casey who has been in and out of the hospital since birth with complications from a neuro-muscular syndrome.

White House helps Houston woman with quadriplegic son

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

Helen Clack of Houston didn't know who to call when she needed help for her quadraplegic son, Jason. So she called the White House.

Jason at 19 months old was a near-drowning victim.

"The doctors revived him, but after three months of treatment they told me to bring him home to die — that he would live six months," said the founder of a support and lobby group for parents of chronically ill children, SKIP of Texas. Sick Kids Need Involved People of Texas, is but one of several SKIP groups around the country.

"The doctors were kind enough to tell me what to look out for," she said. "His main danger was pneumonia and we had to fight to keep him alive."

The fear of not having the money to care for her child, however, scared Mrs. Clack.

"When my insurance almost ran out, I got panicky," she said. "I wondered what was available in the state of Texas and the answer was nothing. We had nothing."

Mrs. Clack called the state Medicaid department in Austin seeking help.

CENTENNIAL CHRONICLES

Two of Midland's earliest families sheep ranchers

By MARY BRAHANEY

On a January day in 1900, Z. Taylor Brown, his wife, Sarah, and their five children moved into their newly built two-story white frame house at 213 N. Weatherford St. in Midland. The children were Joe, Charles, Sarah (who was to live the longest in the house), Jenny and Paul.

Sarah, named for her mother, was then 16. Of that day she always remembered her mother's first bedroom suite, purchased in 1895. The bed, dresser and wash stand of solid oak were moved into the front bedroom upstairs. The furniture looked grander here than in the ranch house.

A handsome portrait of Taylor Brown in an oval frame hangs over the parlor mantle in the house today. Taylor Brown is listed in Midland history as one of the early sheep ranchers (1884), as the first to cultivate a field for farming (1890), and as a leader in starting a Catholic church in Midland around 1892.

Taylor Brown and his wife, Sarah Mulholland, married soon after he received two degrees from Blackburn College in Carlinville, Ill., one in engineering and one in law. Sarah accompanied her husband from "the east" to Corsicana where he practiced law and farmed.

WITH THEIR two sons and their baby daughter, Sarah, they moved to Midland county in 1884 into a small homestead on land near Midland. The nearest neighbor was miles away. The small children helped their father herd sheep. Two children, Jenny and Paul, were born on the homestead. Neighbor women came on foot or horseback to help at the time of birth.

Midland began as a sheep ranching town — H.N. Garrett brought sheep here in 1882, Taylor Brown in 1884 and John Scharbauer in 1887. Midland was established as a cattle and sheep shipping point on the Texas and Pacific Railroad in 1884.

Taylor Brown purchased a ranch in Midland County in 1894 and, like other ranchers, suffered through the famous droughts, sandstorms and freezing winters of those times. Once he gave away 47 calves to a fellow rancher during a blizzard.

The first two sheep ranchers in Midland, H.N. Garrett and Taylor Brown, built a building together at 310 N. Abilene St. (Main Street), leased as the second post office in Midland.

In the kitchen of the Weatherford house today, with old pudding molds, pie tins and dishes like those Sarah, Taylor Brown's wife, might have used, is an old recipe hand written on a scrap of paper.

Mary Brahaney received her master's of arts degree in journalism from the University of Oklahoma in 1974. She has published articles while living in Dallas and has returned to live in Midland. Her interests include films, research and family history.

SARAH BROWN could have copied such a recipe in ink and used such a recipe. The recipe tells a great deal about the life of pioneer women such as Sarah:

"Very Good Soap"
5 pounds of clean grease
1 can Lye

In an enamel bucket put 1 can Lye, 2 T. sugar, ½ cup Borax. Stir with a stick.

Then add 5 cups warm water to dissolve Lye.

When cold, pour warm grease slowly from pitcher into Lye solution. Stir constantly (not too fast). Add ½ cup amonia, 1½ cup Kerosine.

Stir all till soap looks like heavy honey.

Wring a piece of cloth out of cold water, and line box or mold. Pour all into mold.

After 24 hours cut into cakes.

The main thing is, the Lye solution must be cold, and the grease warm.

A house that stays in one family, as did the Brown-Dorsey house, accumulates characteristics known to that family. At the house on Weatherford Street, one grapevine grew so thick that it provided shade over the horse's head next to the buggy barn and hay loft. A small alcove upstairs near the bedrooms, under the eaves, was not a closet and was always called by the family, "the cat's room." Today this windowed room is to be filled with dolls and doll furniture.

While living at their ranch and in a small house in Midland before they built the Weatherford house, Sarah (the daughter), and her brothers and sister attended the first frame school house in Midland. In 1896 the red brick school building was built by public subscription in the same location. By the time Sarah was in high school there was a two-story brick building where she studied algebra, geometry, Latin, history, geography, reading and grammar.

Odessa city manager: Laying off personnel 'unnecessary'

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — City Manager John Harrison Friday said talk of laying off city personnel due to budget cuts is not only premature, but probably unnecessary.

"We're not going to lay off 24 fire fighters," Harrison said in response to comments made by Fire Chief Bill Childress concerning a reported 10 percent budget cut for the 1985-86 fiscal year.

As to references concerning an across-the-board 10 percent cut in city department budgets, Harrison said it has only been suggested the various departments look closely at their budgets and see how much can be cut to bring city expenditures in line with anticipated revenues.

The 10 percent figure is merely a "target figure," Harrison said, indicating that with fine-tuning some departments may be able to cut that much or more from their budgets.

Childress indicated earlier last week that, because the fire department is labor intensive and with about 86 percent of his budget devoted to salaries, the only way he could reduce his department's budget is to lay off 24 fire fighters. The fire department's 1984-85 budget was slightly more than $6 million.

Deputy Chief Wendell Walker said the police department's budget could almost meet a 10 percent reduction by not hiring 14 authorized certified officers and one cadet in the 1985-86 fiscal year. The police department's operating budget in the 1984-85 fiscal year is $8.7 million.

Harrison said 120 people had been added to the fire and police departments in the last three years and, while he didn't anticipate major personnel cuts, he's asking the respective chiefs to look closely at the various segments of their operations to determine if some areas may be overstaffed.

Describing the budget that will ultimately be presented to the city council for consideration as "lean and mean," Harrison said the effort to reduce city government expenditures is a result of revenues staying flat. Even though the recession has abated, construction and sales taxes have not come back up as anticipated. City expenditures, he noted, in the early years of the boom acquired a momentum that continued through the 1983-84 fiscal year. With revenues remaining flat, he said, the city has to fine tune its expenditures.

Because of this, Harrison said, the city is having to revise its methods of financing needed improvements. The council will be asked to consider a bond election to provide funds for such "bread and butter" items as drainage and street improvements as well as parks.

Other suggestions came out of a series of town hall-type meetings the council held, he said, and it will be up to the council to decide what should be included in a bond proposal.

Council member Melissa Hirsch said Friday she believes Odessans would approve a bond proposal if they felt the funds would be used for needed improvements that would benefit most people.

Picking up hitchhiker or hitching yourself can be risky

It was something I'd been warned about many times. "Don't pick up strangers," my mother, a wise woman, used to tell me. "Just read the paper. You never know what'll happen."

No, she wasn't talking about potential herpes carriers.

In this case, the subject was hitchhikers and her sermon was always the same. While it might be a nice gesture to offer a ride to a stranger in need, the risks involved are simply too great. It only takes one half-crazed Charlie Manson-type to snuff out (my words, not hers) what could be a wonderful and fulfilling life (her words, not mine).

So I did what most 19-year-olds do. I said, "Right, mom," and proceeded to pick up the first long-hair with his thumb pointed in the general direction I happened to be traveling.

There's something worldly to the young mind about picking up a hitchhiker. It has a certain charm, as though the person is going to overwhelm you with words of wisdom. It is assumed he will be a much-traveled flim-flam sort of character who will be able to relate exciting tales of his years on the road.

Unfortunately, just the opposite is usually the case. In my limited experience, hitchhikers have been border-line illiterates who possess a peculiar odor that is anything but charming. They bum cigarettes continuously and the most exciting stories they tell could double as high-powered tranquilizers. They would put the most wired individual to sleep.

Still, I feel a tinge of guilt everytime I pass one by.

Maybe it dates back to those few times I attempted to hitch a ride myself. It was back in the college days when a person is expected to do foolish things. One journey in particular sticks out in my mind.

A friend and I were going from Austin to Wichita Falls, without much luck. Most of the rides had lasted no more than 25 or 30 miles and the waits in between had seemed like an eternity. The sun was brutal. A strong wind was blowing out of the west, kicking stinging particles of dirt against our bodies. We were not happy.

We were also not picky about the rides we accepted, which turned out to be a serious miscalculation on our part.

It was mid-afternoon somewhere outside of Stephenville when that dreadful, beat-up red Dodge Dart came to a skidding halt on the side of the highway. We made our customary mad dash to the car where we joined three other young gentlemen, each of whom resembled your basic prison escapee.

The two in the front seat, the original travelers, both had longish stringy hair that appeared to have last seen shampoo about the time Lyndon Johnson was taking the oath of office. They were passing a bottle of wine back and forth.

Our partner in the backseat was your typical hippie type. He had long hair that hit him somewhere below the shoulder blades. He was a fellow-hitchhiker. Despite the scorching heat, he was clad in jeans, a flannel shirt, Army fatigue jacket and cowboy boots. He spent most of his time staring blankly into outer space.

Maybe it was the effects of the wine, but for whatever reason our driver decided to entertain us with his imitation of A.J. Foyt. Swirving noticeably, he raced the car at speeds that made our stomachs churn.

He laughed wildly, threw his head back and put his foot to the floorboard.

I looked at my friend and said, "Well, how did you enjoy life as we know it?"

"It ain't all it's cracked up to be," he replied.

As we were putting the final touches on our funeral plans, flashing red lights approached us from the rear.

A highway patrolman had come to our rescue. "I never thought I'd enjoy seeing one of those," my friend sighed, lighting one cigarette off another.

"If it'll slow this guy down I'll pay the fine," I said.

It was about this time — as the driver was arguing with the officer — that the hippie looked our way and whispered, "Are you guys holding?"

We glanced at our hands and whispered back, "Holding what?"

"Drugs."

My stomach dipped to a new low as I replied, "No. Are you?"

"Afraid so."

"Pot?"

"Nope. Heroin."

My friend rolled his eyes. "I wonder what Huntsville is like this time of the year."

"Hot and muggy," I said.

To make a long story short, the driver got a ticket, the wine was confiscated, the hippie kept his heroin and my friend and I bid a fond farewell to the others.

The moral of the story is this: If you insist on hitchhiking, keep two things in mind.

1) If you can smell the driver before you get in, don't.

2) If he is sporting a devilish grin and holding a bottle of cheap wine, smile back and say, "I'm just out here for the exercise."

Girl says mother forcing her to have abortion

HOUSTON (AP) — A 15-year-old girl, pregnant for the second time, has asked a judge to prevent her mother from forcing her to have an abortion.

But Probate Judge Jim Scanlan told the family he had no jurisdiction in the matter and urged them to solve the problem themselves.

In a court petition, the unmarried girl, now six months pregnant, said she had aborted a previous pregnancy against her wishes last October.

"I've never seen anything like it before," said Richard Schumude, who is representing the girl. He said the case began last weekend when the girl ran away from her grandmother's house where she had been living and called Life Advocates Inc., a pro-life organization which he serves as legal counsel.

"Here you have a case where a woman was subjected to force by her mother to have an abortion, leaving tremendous psychological damage," he said.

The petition said the girl "felt that she had murdered her unborn child. Her grades fell. She desired to get pregnant again."

The petition also says the girl's mother and grandmother have been pressuring the girl to get an abortion.

The pregnant girl also has filed a separate petition asking court permission to marry the 18-year-old father of the unborn child.

Pretrial hearing slated for convicted murderer

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A pretrial hearing is scheduled June 5 for 55-year-old John C. Skelton on four counts of capital solicitation of murder.

Skelton, who was convicted of capital murder and sentenced to death in July 1983 for the bomb killing of 46-year-old Joe Lee Neal, was indicted by an Ector County grand jury on charges that he allegedly attempted to hire his stepson and another man to kill two former business associates. The indictments against Skelton were handed down the same day he was sentenced to death for killing Neal.

District Judge Gene Ater, who ordered Skelton's trial moved to Fort Worth on a change of venue in September 1984, said the trial will still be in Fort Worth but it will save Ector County taxpayers money by having the pretrial hearing in Odessa.

Skelton's trial on the capital solicitation of murder charges initially was set for Nov. 12, 1984, but Ater granted a continuance because Skelton's lawyer at that time, Jim Vollers of Austin, became ill. About two months later, Vollers asked the judge to release him from the case and Skelton hired another attorney, David L. Botsford of Austin.

Vollers had also been handling Skelton's appeal of his conviction and death sentence in the Neal case. Botsford has also taken over this appeal. The Ector County District Attorney's office has requested an extension to Aug. 16 to file the state's brief with the Court of Criminal Appeals in the Skelton case.

EXPENSES

Mrs. Booth does not know how they will pay for Casey's nursing care and other medical expenses.

"WHEN THE insurance runs out, we will have to take care of him," she said. "Our bills have been averaging about $13,000 a month."

Mrs. Booth gets some help from Casey's 5-year-old sister, Carolyn.

"She can go in and give him treatments," she said. "She knows how to do chest percussions — mild beating of the chest area to prevent phlegm build-up and she can change the circuits on his respirator."

Tonya Gist, of Andrews, is in a similar situation.

"Our insurance company will only pay $1 million and it's fixing to run out," said the mother of 3-year-old Dana, who suffers from a neural form of meningitis.

"The Social Security people came by to talk with us and they said they would pay Dana $1 a month and cover 30 minutes of nursing care a week," she said. "Dana must have 24-hour nursing care.

"We filed for Cripple Children's coverage three times and were turned down all three times," she said. "The first time was because my husband made too much money. The second, because we had no other bills and the third, because they said Dana had no potential for rehabilitation."

All three mothers have one common cause — to be able to provide nursing care for their children at home.

There now appears to be some hope in the halls of Austin and it's called the 1915 Model (c) Waiver — a spinoff of similar legislation pushed through by President Reagan in 1982 after receiving letters and phone calls from Julie Beckett, an Iowa mother whose daughter, Katy was ventilator-dependent.

"As long as Katy was institutionalized, Medicaid would pick up the cost," said Sharon Boatman, director of the Texas waiver program and author of 1915(c). "But when the child went home, the family was such that it would not."

THE BECKETTS appealed to congressmen and eventually President Reagan.

"Out of that came some legislation which was only finalized March 13 that allows states to apply for a waiver to allow parents to have the child at home," said Ms. Boatman. "We're literally not counting the parent's income.

"The waiver will provide coverage for 50 children who are not eligible for Social Security disability," she said.

Model Waiver 1915 (c) was passed Thursday and will provide "the full benefits of the Texas Medicaid State Plan and additional services of case management, home health aides, personal care and nursing services...The cost of services cannot exceed the cost which would have been incurred in institutional or nursing facility placements."

The waiver will cover the children until they reach age 21 and will provide 16 hours a day of nursing care, numerous medication and food supplements.

Still, the question mark remains. With 148 people on the waiting list, the expenses pile up for the care of children like Joe Ballard.

Joe is number 142.

His wait could be speeded up, however, according to Ms. Boatman, due to his mother's recent trip to Austin where she testified along with several other Texas mothers of the chronically ill.

"Because of Mrs. Ballard's testimony, the board has asked me to look into some facts and figures and see what we can do," said Ms. Boatman. "I think it's 'coming down the hatch,' " she said. Ms. Boatman indicated there still could be an eight to 10 month wait, because the funds would have to be federally approved.

With Mrs. Ballard's determination, it appears as though Joe may have some hope to get the care he needs at home.

"I can not stand for people to be pushed behind doors and forgotton," she said. "I don't need any more walls. I will knock them down."

SKIP

"They didn't give me any encouragement at all," she said. "It was 4:30 p.m. here when I hung up the phone. It was 5:30 p.m. in Washington D.C., an hour when most governmental offices close, when I called the White House.

"The White House operator talked to me for 2½ hours," she said. "I was so upset. I could see that we were spending billions of dollars in space and to other countries and my kid lay at home dying."

Mrs. Clack said she didn't expect much from the conversation.

"I didn't expect them to help take care of my son 24 hours a day, but I didn't want my son to die."

That 2½-hour phone conversation was followed by "a year and a half conversation with Michael Batton, the White House Agent Liason.

"He was constantly writing letters for me and putting me in touch with President Reagan," she said. "The White House helped badger the state of Texas into getting a waiver written."

Mrs. Clack was referring to the Model Waiver 1915 (c), passed Thursday, which provides home health care for chronically ill children.

Today, Jason is considered a "White House kid."

"He gets Christmas cards from the president," she said.

Mrs. Clack has been a major influence behind the waiver, and has worked with parents through SKIP of Texas. She first heard of SKIP through the White House.

"They put me in touch with Karen Shannon of Maryland and Margaret Mikol of New York who had already formed support groups," she said. "The three of us formed SKIP to where there are 27 states in different levels of development today."

SKIP of Texas was formed in December 1983. While there is no SKIP locally, a Midland County woman has her own plans for chronically ill children and their families.

Ruby Ballard, mother of a ventilator-dependent son, wants to start a center for the handicapped.

"I would like have a center here that would provide a homey atmosphere, where the children could do their schoolwork and just be comfortable," she said. "The center would also be a place to live in if they had no family."

Parks will host contest for disc-catching dogs

From Staff Reports

The Midland Parks and Recreation Department will host the annual Gaines Ashley Whippet Invitational for disc-catching dogs on Saturday, at 11 a.m., in Hill Park.

"We encourage all owners who have trained their dogs to catch Frisbee discs to join the fun and compete," says Renee Robinett of the Parks and Recreation Department. "We also welcome spectators. This is a marvelous opportunity for families, sports enthusiasts, and present and potential dog owners to witness some of the fun of dog ownership and to see canine athletes in action."

The Invitational is named for the late Ashley Whippet, the three-time World Champion, celebrated canine athlete, television and film star, and is sponsored by the makers of Gaines Dog Foods because they share Americans' love of dogs.

There is no entry fee. The event is open to any dog who can catch a Frisbee disc. It is not necessary for it to have competed previously or to have a qualifying score.

A team of officials will judge the canine contestants on their catching and leaping ability. The winner will receive an official Gaines Ashley Whippet Invitational T-shirt. Each contestant will receive a specially-minted Gaines Ashley Whippet Frisbee disc and a commendation certificte.

Additional information about entering is available by contacting the Parks and Recreation Department at 300 Baldwin.

With her brothers, Sarah rode horseback to dances at neighboring ranches, sometimes 15 or 20 miles away. She met her future husband at one of these dances.

AT THE AGE of 23, Sarah married Hugh Dorsey in her home on Weatherford Street. Today, in the house, a white organdy dress draped across a trunk in an upstairs bedroom, suggests a wedding dress Sarah might have worn in 1907.

Taylor Brown gave his daughter a wedding present of a four room house on Marienfeld Street. She and her husband, a bootmaker, had seven children — Hugh, John, Joseph, Charles Allen, Annette, Mark and Edward.

When her mother died in 1923, Sarah and her family moved back to the house on Weatherford Street to be with "Papa," as her father was called. There they all enjoyed the grape arbor beside the house (restored today) and the pear and apple trees, until her children married and left home. After her father died in 1930 and her husband died in 1956, Sarah lived alone in the house for 12 years. Before she died at the age of 84, she knew the house was awarded a Texas Historical Medallion.

Sarah Brown Dorsey lies buried in her father's family plot in the original ten acres of Fairview Cemetery. Nearby is the Garrett family plot. The gravestones show that the two early sheep men's lives paralleled in many ways — H.N. Garrett was born in 1849 and Taylor Brown was born in 1850. The children of the two ranchers were among the first children to live in Midland County.

Elizabeth Garrett came to Midland in 1883 when she was 2 years old. Sarah Brown and her brothers, Joe and Charles, arrived in 1884.

Sarah, Taylor Brown's daughter, lived her life mostly in one familiar, well-loved house. Her story serves as an analogy to the story of the "hitching post" placed in front of the house by Taylor Brown. The "hitching post" also endured with the house and became a mulberry tree which still shades the house and street today.

Centennial Chronicles will appear on this page each Sunday through July 7 in observance of Midland's Centennial. The columns were contributed by local writers in cooperation with the Midland Centennial Commission.

Janeice Builta

"Vote the way you please, but please vote," admonishes Elections Administrator Janeice Builta time after time as Midlanders enter her office.

Mrs. Builta certainly sets a prime example for other voters. "I came to Texas in 1962. I couldn't vote until 1964 because you had to be in the state for one year and in the county where you would vote for the last six months. I had to wait until October 1963 to make application to vote starting in March 1964...I've voted every year in every election since then...Now if you move into Texas or any county you only have to be there 30 days to vote."

In 1962 Mrs. Builta began working as a part time deputy registrar, helping at election time. She became a full time deputy registrar on August 17, 1966. Finally, the Commissioners Court appointed Mrs. Builta as Midland County's first elections administrator to be effective January 1982. Lack of office space required that the appointment be delayed until July, 1982.

That year, the last four days of September were spent moving the office from the basement of the courthouse to the new office at 707 W. Washington. The very next week absentee voting began.

Through the years Mrs. Builta has implemented a number of practices. Whenever a naturalization ceremony is taking place at the federal building, Mrs. Builta and/or deputies are there to register the new United States citizens to vote.

Volunteer deputies, who have been to the volunteer deputy school which Mrs. Builta started, often help with registering new Midlanders.

When it comes time for the elections, Midland's election administrator is ready. "Our records are good...I know that every vote that's cast in this county is counted if it's legal."

Mrs. Builta is adamant about people voting their convictions. "I don't think it's fair to tell anyone how to vote. Even my husband doesn't know how I vote. That's my vote. That's my personal vote!"

This dedicated Midlander is commited to keeping citizens informed throughout the election process. She has made a telephone area available to the media at the elections office and has had a big total board put on one wall to track the latest precinct reports.

An unyielding belief in the voting process and a strong commitment to voters are why Janeice Builta makes a difference in Midland.

Ceiling Fans Decorate & Economize

Ceiling fans became all the rage when they hit the market several years ago and the interest is still going strong.

The reason is two-fold: ceiling fans are a decorative addition to nearly any room of a home or apartment and the use of a paddle fan can help cut energy costs.

When looking to purchase a ceiling fan, consider these facts:

- The size of the area you want the fan to cover determins what size fan to buy. A 36-inch blade span wll service rooms up to 225 square feet; a 42-inch blade span is for rooms up to 285 square feet; a 48-inch blade span covers up to 325 square feet; and a 52-inch blade span will work in a room up to 400 square feet.
- Wooden blades are higher quality than plastic blades. They also operate more quietly.
- A reversing motor helps save on heating bills. It reverses the motion of the blades, which circulates rising warm air back down toward the floor.
- The "true hang" mount feature on many paddle fans allows for a fan to hang level even when installed on a sloped ceiling.
- Research has found that a ceiling fan can save up to 40 percent of air-conditioning bills during the summer.
- A paddle fan should always clear the floor by at last eight feet. This includes the addition of light kits on the fan.
- A paddle fan is not a substitute for a portable box fan or an air conditioner. Paddle fans cannot bring cool, outside air into a room, nor can a paddle fan dehumidify like an air conditioner.

PSALMS 49

49 LISTEN, EVERYONE! HIGH and low, rich and poor, all around the world-Listen to my words, 2for they are wise and filled with insight.
3I will tell in song accompanied by harps the answer to one of life's most perplexing problems: 4There is no need to fear when times of trouble come, even though surrounded by enemies! 5They trust in their wealth and boast about how rich they are, 6yet not one of them, though rich as kings, can ransom his own brother from the penalty of sin! For God's forgiveness does not come that way. 7,8*For a soul is far too precious to be ransomed by mere earthly wealth. There is not enough of it in all the earth to buy eternal life for just one soul, to keep it out of hell.*
9Rich man! Proud man! Wise man! You must die like all the rest! You have no greater lease on life than foolish, stupid men. You must leave your wealth to others.
10You name your estates after yourselves as though your lands could be forever yours, and you could live on them eternally. 11But man with all his pomp must die like any animal. 12Such is the folly of these men, though after they die they will be quoted as having great wisdom.
13Death is the shepherd of all mankind. And "in the morning" those who are evil will be the slaves of those who are good. For the power of their wealth gone when they die; they cannot take it with them.
14But as for me, God will redeem my soul from the power of death, for he will receive me. 15So do not be dismayed when evil men grow rich and build their lovely homes. 16For when they die they carry nothing with them! Their honors will not follow them, 17Though a man calls himself happy all through his life-and the world loudly applauds success- 18yet in the end he dies like everyone else, and enters eternal darkness.
20For man with all his pomp must die like any animal.

Pharmacy Footnotes

John Davis — Don Haynes

A WEALTH OF KNOWLEDGE

A pharmacist has great knowledge about the drug that has been prescribed for you. Pharmacists are specifically trained in pharmacology. They are the health people who best understand the use, composition and effect of drugs. They also know how they were tested for strength and purity. Most pharmacists maintain patient medication profiles which list the drugs you are taking. They can alert you and your doctor to any possible dangerous interactions. Pharmacists can explain how a drug is to be taken and what side effects can be expected. They will make you aware of the possible toxicities and when the drug is contra-indicated. They also will advise you of the precautions to take while on the medication. Take the pharmacist's advice with your medication.

If you are worried about possible harmful drug interaction you should consult your local pharmacist. Here at SERVICE DRUG OF MIDLAND we are completely computerized to help you avoid just such harmful interaction and we take pleasure in answering any questions you may have. We are located at A & Schabauer in the Midland Shopping Center (682-2519) and our hours are 8-7, Mon.-Sat. Most major credit cards are accepted.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Registration scheduled for first summer term

By H.A. TUCK

Registration for the first Summer Term is set for Thursday in the Physical Education Building from 2-4 p.m. and 6-9 p.m. Those who pre-registered received time permits assigning them specific times to come for registration.

And those who haven't yet pre-registered may do so Tuesday from 7 a.m. until 5 p.m. in the Office of Student Services, Administration Buuilding.

Persons who want to register, but didn't pre-register should come to the P.E. Building between 6-7:30 p.m. and they'll be processed as quickly as possible.

First Summer Term classes begin

Since this was written while the MC men's tennis team was playing in the NJCAA tournament in Ocala, Fla., we don't know how they came out. What we do know is that coach Joe Williams and his men were one of the top teams in the nation...and one of the better Chaparral teams in several years. They've had a great season and we're very proud of their accomplishments.

• • •

Not only were the tennis teams extremely good at the sport, but they were fine students, too. In fact, tennis players posted the highest grade point bverages among all the athletes this year.

• • •

Midland high schools' graduations are set for Tuesday in the Al G. Langford Chaparral Center. This year, Lee High School grads have their ceremony at 6 p.m. and the Midland High School commencement is set for 9 p.m. There should be plenty of parking since there aren't any college classes going on. The parking areas north and east of Chap center usually have some vacancies, plus the lots for the Occupational Building and the Fine Arts Building that are nearby.

• • •

Tickets go on sale Tuesday for the four performances of Ringling Bros., Barnum & Bailey Circus at Chap center June 25 and 26. They may be purchased at the Chap Center or at Sears in either Midland or Odessa. Ringling Bros. hasn't been here in several years, so it should draw good crowds for all performances.

It's almost worth attending just to see how they fit all three rings into the building and set up all the rigging.

• • •

The new Health Sciences Building is just about finished up, but the Child Care Center that's part of it won't be operating until this fall. It was scheduled to open in June, but that's been delayed.

There are tentative plans now to have a Formal Opening of the building sometime this fall after all the equipment is installed and everything is operating.

Ex-MHS students to hold reunion July 6

From Staff Reports

Fred Middleton was chatting with some friends one day recently about how much fun it would be for everyone who went to Midland High School to get together and celebrate the Centennial.

The idea went farther than just talk. On July 6 a reunion reception will be held at the Midland Hilton from 1 to 5 p.m. for all former MHS students, ranging from those who attended in its earliest days to the most recent.

"We're trying to reach all ex-students that attended Midland High from the earliest classes on," said Midland native Marjorie Hill.

"There's a lot of people still here who went to Midland High," said Mrs. Hill, also an MHS graduate.

"We just want to get together, tell old tales and just have fun reminiscing," she added.

Although some initial plans have been made, another planning session will begin at 7 p.m. May 28 at 808 Palomino.

For additional information or people interested in helping with the planning may call Mrs. Jim (Fredda) Prince at 694-8442 or Mrs. Ike (Sue) Fitzgerald at 682-7074.

Advance reservations may be made by sending $5 per person to: Midland High Reunion, c/o Western State Bank, P.O. Box 4157, Midland, Texas, 79704. Attn: Fred Gordon Middleton. Please include your name and class year.

Also, spouses of former MHS students are invited.

No more prisons

Midland has its own problems just getting voters to go along with renovation of the county jail. Now comes word that a statewide study has recommended alternatives to prison.

That recommendation shouldn't be discarded as absurd out of hand too quickly. With taxpayers becoming more perturbed with the increasing cost of government — and that cost does include housing criminals — the suggestion has possible merit, particularly in light of the fact it could save the state $1.2 billion over the next dozen years or so.

What the study revealed wasn't pleasant by any stretch of the imagination. It found that:

— The incidence of crime will not decrease over the next 10 years.

— The state's criminal justice system already is overburdened.

— Unless alternatives to expensive prison construction are found, it will cost the state $1.2 billion a year to run its corrections system by 1995.

— Using less expensive community correctional facilities to house non-violent prisoners could save the state $1.2 billion over the next 12 years.

All that boils down — in the taxpayer's mind, at least — to a hefty increase in the cost of locking up prisoners, regardless. So many communities like Midland, already facing multi-million dollar new facilities merely to meet state requirements on holding prisoners, are reeling under the thought of even more tax burden. In that light, almost any alternative looks worth investigating.

In a sense, the study results mirror actions already taken by the Legislature to get more criminals out of the prison system faster and back to the communities. Local jails and probation departments already are feeling the impact of this trend, officials say, and the future points to more of the same, verified by this most recent study.

As is typical in this kind of scenario, there's a trade-off: Prison populations and the crime rate go hand-in-hand, to a degree at least. The more criminals sent to jail, the more jail overcrowding and, hopefully, a reduction in the crime rate. But costs go up — dramatically.

When that happens, there's a natural tendency to soften up on crime and not send so many criminals to prison. That reduces costs, but crime rates move upward again.

If this study's findings which indicate there are viable alternatives to sending more people to more prisons, can be put to good use in forging a way out of this vicious cycle, it will be well worth its cost.

Another View:

Optimism, but —

There was an upbeat mood to Thursday's meeting between President Reagan and El Salvador's President Jose Napoleon Duarte. But, while some optimism about El Salvador is justified, the severe economic and political problems still facing the country must not be underestimated.

The principal reason for Duarte's and Reagan's optimism is that things are going better on the battlefield for El Salvador's U.S.-supported government than when Duarte last visited Washington a year ago. Thanks to massive infusions of U.S. military aid and technology, the Salvadoran army has finally begun to pursue guerrilla groups more aggressively and consistently than it has in five years of warfare. The guerrillas are far from being defeated, but they are on the run. The rebels have been unable to mount any large-scale attacks since last year, and are instead focusing their military efforts on terrorist attacks against government officials and sabotage against El Salvador's shaky economy.

It is the Salvadoran economy that poses Duarte's greatest challenge at present. It is estimated that the average Salvadoran's standard of living, which was not high when the civil war began in 1979, has declined 30 percent since then. Half the country's work force is unemployed or underemployed. And the Duarte government must pay a foreign debt of almost $2 billion by exporting agricultural commodities, like coffee, whose prices are dropping.

But before Duarte can begin wrestling with El Salvador's economic problems he must negotiate peace with the rebels. His initial steps toward dialogue, taken late last year, were encouraging. They bogged down, however, just before congressional elections in which Duarte's Christian Democratic Party was challenged by right-wing parties that wanted no peace talks. Duarte supporters won the elections overwhelmingly. Yet, in spite of the political advantage that this gave him, Duarte has not renewed the dialogue. It is time for him to do so.

The war in El Salvador began because important political factions in the country decided that taking up arms was the only way to bring about social and economic reform. Most of those opposition groups are still allied with the guerrillas, providing them with legitimacy that they would not have on their own. The political estrangement that led to the civil war must be ended by bringing as many of those civilian factions as possible back into the political process to work for change peacefully. Until Duarte does so, the shooting in El Salvador will not end, and it will be impossible for him to deal with the nation's economic problems.

Honduran border now war zone

WASHINGTON — One of the worst-kept secrets in the Reagan administration's not-so-secret war against the Sandinistas in Nicaragua is that the U.S.-supported contras operate out of bases in Honduras — a nation that is technically at peace with the leftist regime in Managua.

Jack Anderson

This has resulted in some border clashes, with Sandinistas chasing contras into their Honduran sanctuaries. The Honduran army has reacted by moving the contras farther in from the border.

Our associate Jon Lee Anderson was on the scene during a recent incident. Afterward, the border area was sealed off to the press. Here's what happened:

Enroute to a contra camp on the border in a rented jeep, Anderson and his anti-Sandinista guides encountered a rush of Honduran refugees on horseback, mule and foot. They were fleeing from Arenales, a border town near the contra base at Las Vegas, where our associate was heading.

The refugees reported that a barrage of Soviet-supplied rockets had rained down on their town, followed by the appearance, in Honduras, of Sandinista troops. Contra troops were fighting the Sandinistas around Arenales, they said.

In Las Vegas, a few miles farther on, our associate was greeted with something less than enthusiasm by Enrique Bermudez Varela, military commander of the Nicaraguan Democratic Force, the main contra group.

The reason soon became clear: Bermudez said he was afraid news of the Sandinista incursion would embarrass the Hondurans and put him and his men in a tight spot.

He was also uneasy because our associate had recognized Tom Posey, head of Civilian Military Assistance, an Alabama-based paramilitary group that has been supplying and training the contras. Posey was accompanied by another young American volunteer; both were dressed for combat and armed with rifles.

"I don't want you to get the wrong idea," Bermudez explained. "We don't accept mercenaries. These people want to help, and they provide training that we can't because we have to concentrate on the fighting."

As a matter of fact, our associate later learned that Posey and the other American were indeed on a training mission. Shortly after he saw them, they went into Nicaragua to train selected contra units in the use of their recently purchased portable surface-to-air missiles. The contras planned to use them against the Sandinistas' Soviet helicopter gunships, which are expected to be deployed in the border area any day now.

The contra base at Las Vegas — on the border just inside Honduras — was almost deserted. Bermudez explained that, too. After a Sandinista rocket attack from Soviet-supplied World War II-vintage rocket launchers, Bermudez had ordered the dismantling of the Las Vegas base and dispersal of his troops along the border.

Another factor in the decision, Bermudez said, was the recent influx of materiel at the contra camp, which he didn't want the Soviet rockets to destroy. At about the time last month when Congress vetoed further aid to the contras, Bermudez said, the contras received a massive infusion of guns, ammunition and other supplies that were about equal to what they had once gotten from the CIA.

Bermudez wouldn't identify the source of the weapons and ammo, saying only, "We have some good friends." But our associate saw boxes with Korean lettering on them.

Ever optimistic, Bermudez said the new supplies would allow him to do what he had been hoping to do for a long time: infiltrate his guerrillas back across the border into Nicaragua. Last fall, the contra units had been forced to retreat back to Las Vegas because of dwindling supplies.

Lack of ammunition and supplies "grounded" about 8,000 of the estimated 15,000 contras by March, Bermudez indicated. But he and other contra commanders claimed that about 3,500 of these idled guerrillas had been equipped and sent back into Nicaragua, and said another 3,500 or so will join them soon.

By the time our associate had reached Las Vegas, the Sandinista shelling of Arenales a few miles away had ceased. The next morning, when he drove to the town, the crash of rockets could be heard, but the shelling had moved from Arenales itself to the border a short distance away.

Arenales had been deserted by its residents. Contra patrols came and went, and the 20-man Honduran army garrison busied itself digging bunkers.

Our associate learned that the day before, about 1,200 Sandinistas had crossed the border in an attack evidently intended to capture Arenales and move on to the Las Vegas base camp.

But the contras pushed the invaders back across the border, killing at least 20 in the process. As many as 30 contras died, plus three civilians in Arenales.

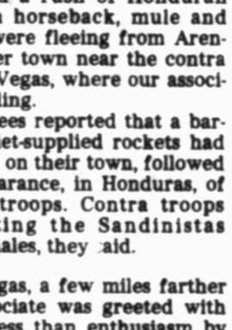

In a cruel irony, the three civilians killed were Nicaraguans who had fled across the Poteca River that marks the border, hoping to find safety in Honduras. Instead, they blundered into the rear guard of the Sandinista invading force.

GEORGE F. WILL

Court rules for private property

WASHINGTON — The Nation magazine is of stern left-wing views, and is brimful of disdain for the profit motives of capitalist civilization. Its editors no doubt feel deep pain because they must (this sad world enforces moral compromise) put a price on their product rather than give it away at newsstands, to each according to need.

George F. Will

But being an uncompromising critic of bourgeois values, The Nation never bends its knee to the totem of private property. So it was with the pleasure that comes when ideological and commercial considerations converge, that the Nation expropriated Gerald Ford's memoirs, for profit and, of course, for terribly high principle. The result was litigation and now a Supreme Court ruling more entertaining than historic, but entertaining because it illustrates the American left's knack for mashing its thumb with its own hammer.

In 1979 Time magazine was poised to publish a 7,500-word extract from Ford's forthcoming memoirs. Time had already paid $12,500 and was to pay another $12,500 upon publication. But shortly before Time's publication date, an undisclosed source provided The Nation with a manuscript of the memoirs.

The Nation rushed into print a 2,250 word article based on, and quoting 300 words from, the portion of the memoirs Time had especially wanted, dealing with Ford's pardon of Nixon. Exclusivity having been lost, Time cancelled publication plans and the second payment. Harper & Row, Ford's publisher and holder of the copyright, sued The Nation for copyright infringement.

A district court held for Harper & Row, but an appeals court reversed. It held that authors can copyright their "expression" but not facts and ideas, least of all "politically significant" facts and ideas such as those The Nation reported as news. The appeals court said copyright law should not "impede the harvest of knowledge" or "kill the activities of the press."

But the Supreme Court, divided 6-3, has reversed the appeals court's reversal, holding that to treat as acceptable what The Nation did would defeat the intent of copyright laws. That intent is to promote knowledge by guaranteeing a fair return to those who augment knowledge. The interest of book publishers and authors have here prevailed over the interests of those who publish journalism.

The Nation's editor, cloaking his professional and commercial interests in the cloth of public-spiritedness, and dressing up his defeat as a blow to the public weal, says the Court's decision allows public officials "to withhold public information, the news, for private profit," and this "undermines the public's right to know."

Note how in the hands of an editor with magazines to sell, the First Amendment becomes, in the name of freedom, an instrument of coercion. According to The Nation's editor, the First Amendment licenses him to determine that a person — at least a public person — must speak, and when.

Writing for the Court's majority, Justice Sandra Day O'Connor notes that the fundamental purpose of the First Amendment is to prevent improper restrictions on voluntary public expression of ideas. It protects the individual's right to speak when others want him to be quiet. But there is a concomitant freedom to refrain from expressing oneself until one wants to do so. The Nation denied that freedom to Ford, at a financial cost to him.

Justice William Brennan, joined by Justices Byron White and Thurgood Marshall, dissented, arguing that the Court's construction of copyright law will "stifle the broad dissemination of ideas and information that copyright is intended to nurture." The Nation's lawyer, not to be outdone in wringing apocalyptic portent from this little case, says the ruling "is basically a denial to the public of the most important information about their government unless and until it is sold to them by a former public official."

Actually, the decision was of narrow scope, turning, in part, on The Nation's use of verbatim quotations, which were not essential to The Nation's reporting of facts. But the decision constitutes a modest enhancement of a property right and a corresponding modest restriction on the right of news organizations to publish newsworthy material as quickly as they get it. Friends of property rights should send thank you notes to The Nation.

For nearly two decades, life has been like that for the American left. The left's principal accomplishment is the ascendancy, political and intellectual, of the right, which grew in

Cemetery vote can still count

It didn't get much play in the United States, but after all the trouble Ronald Reagan went to in helping his buddy Helmut Kohl with the West German election, the chancellor got clobbered in North Rhine-Westphalia.

Art Buchwald

For those of you who can remember that far back, the reason the President took his famous walk through the Bitburg cemetery was because Kohl's Christian Democrats were being threatened by Willy Brandt's hated Social Democrats. Mr. Reagan was led to believe if he stopped by Bitburg for a photo opportunity Kohl would beat the Socialists in a landslide.

As soon as I heard on the radio that Mr. Reagan's graveyard visit was for naught I called Klaus Berger, my stringer in North Rhine-Westphalia, and demanded an explanation.

Klaus said, "It was a question of Teflon failure. Reagan tried to give some of his Teflon to Kohl but it wouldn't stick."

"How could that be? Reagan's Teflon is considered the top of the line in America."

"But it's not transferable," Klaus said. "Kohl's mistake was believing all he had to do was rub shoulders in a German military cemetery with the President of the United States and he'd have Reagan's charisma. It obviously didn't work."

"How could Kohl have been so far off the mark?"

"Some political analysts in Bonn think it is because he's a dumkopf. Let's start at the beginning. Kohl came to Washington and insisted that Ronald Reagan include him in on the 40th anniversary of the end of World War II. The chancellor said that the reason his party was in so much trouble was because he wasn't allowed to participate in the anniversary of the D-Day landings at Normandy the previous year. Kohl made a very convincing argument that if it hadn't been for the Germans there would not have been a World War II in the first place.

"So Reagan, who considers Kohl a team player, said he would be happy to help beat Willy Brandt's Socialists in any way he could. To which Kohl suggested they stroll through a German military cemetery together to show the world that bygones can be bygones."

"So far so good," I said.

Klaus said, "Not necessarily. Kohl should have known you can't go into a German military cemetery without running into a Nazi tombstone. After the visit was announced the press found 49 of them. Instead of Kohl canceling, he insisted that the ceremony still take place. It was the worst political decision of his life."

"Why?"

"Because everyone had forgotten what the Nazi regime had done until the chancellor announced he and the President were going to Bitburg to forget it. Suddenly TV screens in every corner of the globe showed films of Nazi atrocities and newspapers headlined lengthy stories on war crimes committed by the German army. Instead of reconciliation, Kohl opened up every wound from the Second World War. That's why he's considered a dumkopf."

"But," I said, "according to the polls, the Germans supported the Bitburg visit."

Klaus replied, "What else could the German people say to the pollsters, other than they were for Kohl and Reagan visiting a German military cemetery? But once it was over they decided to send Kohl a message."

"Which was?"

"They don't want any more reconciliation ceremonies over World War II."

"It seems such a waste," I said. "If Kohl failed to benefit by it, Reagan surely didn't either."

"How's that?" Klaus asked.

"Well, when the President left for Europe his Teflon suit was all shiny and glittery. But when he came back from Bitburg it was scratched and tarnished. I guess the one thing everyone has learned from all this is that only in Chicago does the cemetery vote still count."

Doing what's good for us not always first priority

Bill Modisett

Voting is kind of like a visit to the dentist. You know it's a good thing to do — and important — but doing what is good for you isn't always your first priority.

More than a few concerned Midlanders have been heard voicing despair about the low voter turnout in recent elections. I have to agree, having grown up in a family in which failing to vote was held in about the same regard as not standing when the national anthem is played. In other words, Dad would ensure afterwards that you wouldn't be sitting down for quite awhile when the national anthem was played — or at any other time!

So in a way I have to agree. More people should have voted in the recent elections. But this country is changing. It's not that people aren't patriotic anymore; they are and they'll fight you if you insinuate they aren't.

I think it's more a lack of understanding of freedom's value and the desire to make certain that right to vote will be around if it's needed. A lot of times, a person really doesn't fully appreciate anything or anyone until they're gone and it's too late.

I hope that never happens in this country. But if our shores are ever invaded, I believe millions of Americans will take up arms to protect our way of life.

Summertime and the living is — HOT!

If the old country formula for predicting the weather holds true (that extremes follow extremes), this summer should be a hot one in Midland. This winter didn't really offer any long-duration cold spells, but gave us one really cold day — with the temperature plunging to minus 13, by my thermometer anyway.

So, this may not be the longest, hottest summer in the Tall City, but one day about Aug. 15 should be just about right for frying eggs (or anything else, for that matter) on the sidewalk.

Kids say the darndest things!

My 2-year-old keeps proving the old Art Linkletter standby. What he's teaching me is that kids may not ACT like they're paying any attention to what you are saying or doing, but don't think even for a minute that they're not.

If you do, they'll get you. Boy, will they.

Before you know it, they'll tell you — and everyone in hearing distance — all the words you always hoped they'd never learn.

And they'll do it in the worst places — church, the grocery store, the library, in front of grandmother.

Speaking of reading, here's a tip for all those bored with television's love for soap: Pick up a good book.

More and more surveys are pointing out, regrettably, that what a lot of us had feared is actually coming to pass. Reading is becoming a lost art and there is a corresponding lack of comprehension on the part of public school students.

That's a shame because those who don't learn to enjoy reading face difficulty throughout the remainder of their lives. Think about it — and then enjoy a good book.

We're guilty of spilling innocent babies' blood

When God was instructing the children of Israel, in Deut. 19:10, He indicated that if innocent blood was shed in the land, the blood guiltiness would be on them. Whose blood could be more innocent than that of the unborn child? Are we Christians guilty of standing idly by while 900,000 unborn, innocent children in Texas alone have had their lives taken from them since 1973?

State Sen. John Sharp and State Legislator L.B. Kubiak have sponsored an excellent bill to impose at least some regulation regarding abortion. Not many are aware that Texas is one of the few states of the union that has no laws whatsoever governing abortion. As I understand the intent of the Supreme Court in Roe vs. Wade was to stop the back alley butcher shop. In Texas, one does not have to be a doctor to perform an abortion. I understood the intent of the Supreme Court was that abortions not be performed after the age of viability. In Texas, abortions can be performed legally up to the day of delivery and, in fact, are being done. This bill has the complete support and is the number one legislative priority of Doctors for Life (3,600 physicians).

The end of the legislative session is May 27th. Time is of the essence. This excellent bill could well die if the public does not rally to its support.

It is urgent that we flood Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and your state senators, Speaker of the House Gib Lewis and your State Legislators with phone calls.

'No-pass, no-play' too harshly enforced

I have taken great interest in the much-debated "No pass, No play" rule. I hope maybe my experience with this rule can make the public more aware of how strong the rule is.

When the rule was put into effect I thought this was great. I still believe if a student makes an "F" on a report card he or she should not be allowed to participate.

However, I did not realize that before an event the grades are taken and if at that time you have any grade average below 70 you cannot participate. This is not a six-week grade; this is a grade average on one particular day.

The Midland Freshman drama students won the honor to advance to the District 24A One-Act Play Contest in Snyder. On Monday before the contest the grades were turned in and my daughter had a 69 average in one class. She is a good student in the other classes, but this particular subject is hard for her and she had failed a test that day.

I talked with the principal and he said it would have been hard for any student to pass the test when so much depended on it. You see, she knew if one student did not pass with an average of 70 or above in every class, no one would go to the contest.

She was trying very hard to pass. I know this even if no one else does because I watched her study.

The sad thing is when the report card came out she didn't fail — she passed, but yet she did not get to go to contest because one day her average in one class was below 70.

This has been quite a burden to carry — that no one could go to the contest because even though she tried very hard it wasn't hard enough.

Graduates cheated by current system

Midland, you are truly unique. The Midland Independent School District allows its high school valedictorians and salutatorians to be chosen in a fashion unlike most school districts in this country.

Instead of recognizing the two students with the highest cumulative grade point averages, the schools select their honored seniors on the basis of the students' scores on a two-day test and the students' cumulative grade point average.

The two-day test is weighed equally with the four-year grade point average. The test does not alter a person's class rank in any way: It only "helps" to determine a valedictorian and salutatorian. Therefore, it is possible (as proven this year) for a person to graduate first or second in his class and not be valedictorian or salutatorian or even vice-versa.

Try explaining that to a university or college! To weigh four years of work equally with two days of test is ridiculous. You might as well pick valedictorian/salutatorian by SAT scores. The consistency of four years of work should not even be compared to the inconsistency of two days of testing.

As a Lee High School graduate and college junior, I am embarrassed by this method of selection. The high school students of Midland are being ripped-off. Come on, Midland! Wake up and smell the coffee!

Jail expenditures entirely out of line

Perhaps there was a typographical error in a recent Reporter-Telegram?

The article stated: "On Monday the commissioners received a $57,300 bid from Southern Steel Co. of San Antonio to fabricate and install emergency door locks and releases for 16 single cells in the jail and a $10,000 bid from Midland plumber R.V. Culp to install a water closet and other restroom facilities' in a holding cell."

$3,581.25 per cell? $10,000 for a commode and other facilities?

If there are typos and misspelled words in this letter, perhaps you will know why I voted no on both propositions.

At $25 per day, these two expenditures would provide 2,692 prisoner days to ship these people elsewhere. My solution to this would be buy locks at Handy Dan and rent a Portapotti!

Loop 250 curve proves to be deadly location

As managers of Colonial Storage at 1010 N. Loop, 250 West, we are very concerned about the traffic here, as we live on premises.

For the second time in less than a year, a person has been killed here. Our fence has been run into eight times.

The last car going out of control here completely wrecked the Gilded Cage Beauty Shop, which is located right beside our buildings. There is no doubt that had it been a weekday, it would have killed everyone in the shop.

The speeders at 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. every weekday are really something to see here. The skirt was not finished on the highway south of our building and the curve in the road throws the drivers off.

If something is not done, I'm sure sooner or later someone will come through our apartment.

Readers' views on: Salary requests

Teachers didn't 'demand' raises

I am a teacher with MISD and attended the school board meeting on Tuesday, May 14th, when the Joint Salary Committee presented its proposal for 1985-86. I do not know whether Ms. Hillrichs was present at this meeting or not, however, I do know that the committee did not DEMAND anything.

Ask for, yes; request, yes! But not DEMAND! The teachers I know who attended this meeting all felt that the presentation went very smoothly. Dr. Baressi himself worked closely with this committee and commented on how cooperative everyone had been. Yes, teachers are very aware that MISD is losing a substantial amount of state revenue. That does not negate the fact that teachers continue to have needs.

Facts correct, but connotation wrong

We take strong exception to the excessive use of the word "demand" in Julie Hillrichs' article of May 15 regarding the proposal to MISD by the Joint Salary Committee. The facts were correct; the connotation was erroneous. These suggestions were presented quietly and respectfully, without the demogogic disregard for financial and legislative restraints which Ms. Hillrichs implied. The school board members and administrators willingly listened to these recommendations, which had been formulated during many hours of voluntary extracurricular labor by the committee.

The atmosphere during the presentation was one of mutual give-and-take, sharing from both sides of the table; questions, answers, and comments were exchanged with equanimity.

We fear that the general public could receive a very unfavorable impression of educators from the tone of the article. Yes, the word "demand" does have a gentler meaning "to request." However, the most generally-accepted definition presents a "peremptory insistent claim as due." Such a destructive, insolent attitude from teachers would destroy any credibility we now possess toward achieving equity in the workplace. We covet the good will and support of the public and regret any journalistic errors which might jeopardize that support.

Congressional moves to cut SDI funds shocking

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — The move in Congress to cut by one-third funds for President Reagan's research program to defend America against nuclear attack (the strategic defence initiative) is shocking.

The Senate, led by Republican Sen. Charles Grassley, of Iowa, voted earlier this month to slash the program by up to $1 billion. A House committee, led by a Wisconsin Democrat, Les Aspin, has cut an additional $200,000 from the funds requested by the president.

Warning that such drastic reductions could "starve the program to death," the Wall Street Journal said editorially this week the cuts "are not fat trimming but a surgical strike on the program's jugular."

The proposed cuts would reduce by almost half the recommended outlay of $800 million for non-nuclear air-to-air missiles, or "smart rocks," which it is believed could destroy nuclear missiles with simple kinetic (fast moving) impact. Other large chunks of money would be taken away from research on surveillance, tracking of enemy missiles, and "demonstration projects" of strategic defense components.

The Wall Street Journal doubts that reducing the federal deficit is the only objective of those who would, in effect, sabotage the nuclear defense program. It suspects the opponents want to preserve both the ABM treaty, which outlaws defensive systems, and the Mutual Assured Destruction doctrine, which envisages annihilation of the American and Russian people in event of nuclear war, even one that started by accident.

What I simply cannot understand is why these politicians in Congress fail to realize what is at stake. They seem to ignore the fact the Soviets are already ahead of us not only in anti-missile research but also in actual development of anti-satellite weapons. A new CIA report on Soviet defensive weapons technology indicates the Soviets are well in advance of U.S. anti-missile research and may be on the verge of launching a major directed-energy weapons program. Directed energy refers to beam weapons, such as laser, radio frequency and particle beams.

A Pentagon assessment of Soviet military power, issued in April, said more than 10,000 Soviet scientists and engineers are working on laser weaponry. They have reportedly built prototype ground-based laser weapons deemed capable of destroying American satellites and of being deployed by the late 1980's.

The CIA report revealed that many of the Soviet scientists who have been denouncing our research program have been engaged for years in advanced research on Soviet missile defense. One of them, Yevgeniy Velikhov, vice president of the Soviet Academy of Sciences and, according to the CIA, a "central figure" in Soviet laser and particle-beam weapons research, wrote in a Washington Post opinion article last June that strategic defense "is a dream that can't come true."

So while the Soviets are moving ahead with their own "Star Wars" programs, they try to dupe us into abandoning our efforts to develop a defense against nuclear weapons. This is typical of the duplicity Lenin urged the Communists to pursue against the Western democracies.

The Soviets accuse us of planning to "militarize" space while they are the only ones to have deployed an anti-satellite weapons system in space. Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev told visiting Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Ghandi last Tuesday that President Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative will increase the risk of nuclear war. He didn't say anything about what would happen if the Soviets succeeded in being the first to deploy an anti-missile defense system in space. Apparently, the congressional opponents of the president's research program have never thought of that possibility. But wiser statesmen have. French President Francois Mitterrand told me in Paris last year that "whoever controls the sky will rule the world."

Just imagine what would happen if the Soviets alone had a space defense system that could render our nuclear retaliatory capability ineffective. Would the Soviets refrain from imposing their will on the world, as we did when we had the atomic monopoly? You can bet they would not. What they would be telling us to do is just too awful to contemplate. Surrender, or else. Give back Alaska, or else. Get out of Europe and Asia, or else. Accept the communization of Latin America, or else.

As for the Soviet's professed opposition to defense against nuclear weapons, this is a Machiavellian twist that has come about in recent years only because of fear that we might develop a better system. As far back as 1967, then Soviet Premier Aleksei Kosygin pounded the table at the Glassboro, New Jersey, summit meeting with President Lyndon Johnson and declared: "Defensive weapons are moral, offensive weapons are immoral."

On two separate occasions at the United Nations in the 1960s, Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko argued that strategic defense could be the key to successful agreements on offensive nuclear weapons — exactly what President Reagan has been saying. Today, Mr. Gromyko argues the opposite. Guess why?

All qualifiers break 200 mph

By MIKE HARRIS
AP Motorsports Writer

INDIANAPOLIS — The speed alone is frightening — 33 cars traveling well above 200 mph around a narrow, concrete-lined track built when airplanes flew half that fast.

Now imagine people in those cars, buffeted more than ever by violent, turbulent air.

Together, they create the potential for disaster when the fastest field in auto racing history lines up for Sunday's 11 a.m. start, engines roaring and 350,000 people screaming.

What will it be like out there?

"Say you put on a helmet," said three-time winner Johnny Rutherford. "I put one hand behind the helmet, the other under your chin. Then I shake. Imagine your head in a paint mixer."

And imagine trying to see when you're being tossed around in a paint mixer.

"That's why every driver out there is going to have to use his head when they drop the green flag," said Mario Andretti, another of six former winners in the 69th edition of the world's richest and most important race.

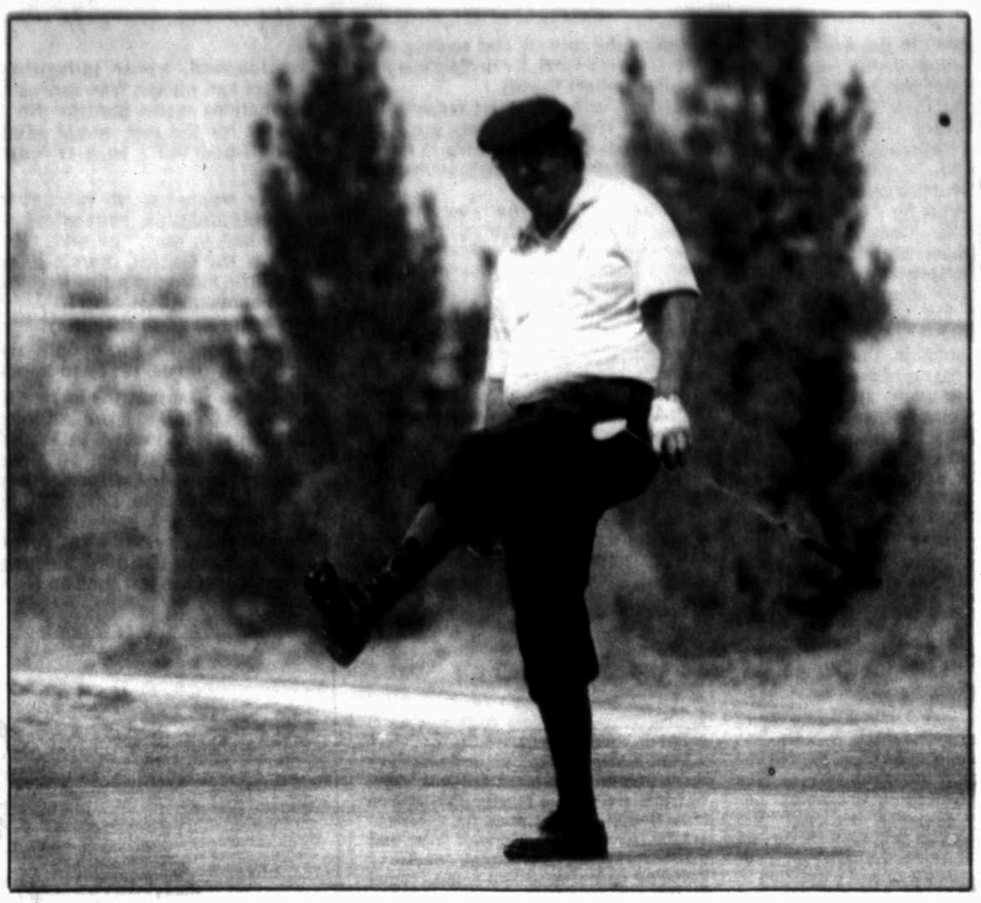

This will be the first Indy race with all 33 starters having qualified at more than 200 mph. The field average of 208.138 mph was nearly 4½ mph faster than the Indianapolis record set last year and more than 3 mph quicker than the previous racing record of 204.669 set last September at an Indy-car event at Michigan International Speedway.

Pole-winner Pancho Carter set a four-lap qualifying record of 212.583 and Scott Brayton, who will start between Carter and Bobby Rahal in the front row, established a one-lap mark of 214.199.

"These speeds are only too fast when you lose it (the car) or have a problem," said Rutherford, who will be starting his 21st Indy. "We're all professional drivers with varying amounts of experience. All of us can handle the speed."

Despite the speed, the only serious incident of the month came on May 10 when Herm Johnson suffered a broken arm and internal injuries in a crash during practice. He was released from the hospital after eight days.

SMU facing tough NCAA sanctions

DALLAS (AP) — Southern Methodist University's football program has been charged with "major violations" by the National Collegiate Athletic Association and could be hit with tough sanctions, The Dallas Morning News reported Saturday.

The News quoted an unidentified source as saying the sanctions were mailed to SMU Friday. SMU President L. Donald Schields said late Friday he didn't expect the letter until next week and would not comment further.

SMU, under investigation by the NCAA since March 1983 for alleged recruiting violations, would have 15 days after receiving the notice of the violations to accept the penalties or appeal to the NCAA Council, The News said.

"I don't think it's any secret that they're (SMU) involved in major violations," the newspaper said, quoting another unnamed source.

In cases where a school has been found in violation of NCAA rules, major infractions have resulted in a ban on televised games and bowl appearances and a reduction in scholarships. Other sanctions have included the forced dissociation of athletic boosters who recruit and promote the football program, the newspaper said.

The NCAA has been investigating possible recruitment violations in SMU's football program since 1983.

The NCAA also has investigated the role of SMU boosters in recruiting players and the financing of automobiles owned by Mustangs players.

Bob Hitch, the SMU athletic director, and football coach Bobby Collins have provisions in their contracts stipulating they can be fired if they knowingly violate NCAA rules.

If the school and the NCAA maintain their silence beyond the week of June 10-17, it can be assumed SMU has appealed, sources told the News.

Four Chaps win net titles

From Staff Reports

Coming back from an upsetting beginning in the five-day National Junior College Athletic Association tennis championships, the Midland College men's tennis team finished with a four-man entourage of national champions Saturday.

The Chaparrals, who saw their top two singles players eliminated on the first day of the tourney, finished fourth as a team, but the doubles pairs of Sean Strickling and Robert Vrij, and Brad Bailey and John McCauley came away with national titles and All-American honors for their efforts.

Tyler, Texas, Junior College came back to win the national title for the second straight year with 40 points, surpassing favorite Palm Beach, Fla., 39 points, on the final day. McLennan (Tex) was third with 33 and MC was fourth with 32 points, nosing out Abraham Baldwin Agricultural College which had 31.

"We just ran out of time," Chap coach Joe Williams said of the teams' efforts to come back. "We did indeed prove that we have two of the best doubles teams in nation. The first round losses were the ones that killed us. After the first day disappointment, the kids responded very well and did almost exactly what I thought they would after that."

Strickling and Vrij won the No. 1 doubles title with a two set victory over the team of Lagoia-Howie from McLennan JC. Baley and McCauley took three sets before sisposing of the pair of Anderson-Ballantyne of Floriday JC.

Emil Bijleveld, playing at No. 5 singles, fell in the finals to top-seeded Skip Jackson of Palm Beach (Fla).

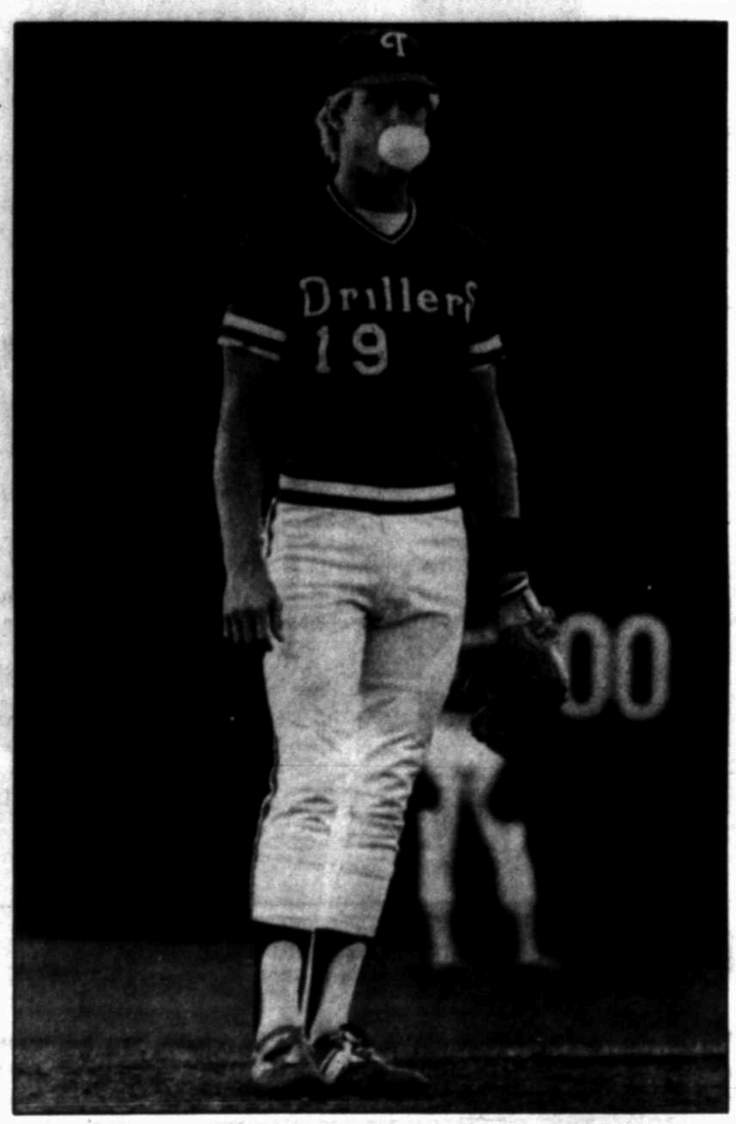

In addition to first team honors for Strikling, Vrij, Bailey and McCauley, and second team for Bijleveld, Vrij (No.3), McCauley (No. 4) and Andy Bruner (No. 6) all were honorable mention all-americans for their semifinal appearances in singles.

Bijleveld and Bruner were also named honorable mention for their semifinal showing at No. 3 doubles.

Team Results: Tyler, Tex. 40. 2. Palm Beach, Fla., 39. 3. McLennan, Tex., 33. 4. Midland College, 32. 5. Abraham Baldwin (Ga.), 31.

Singles: Emil Bijleveld (MC) lost to Skip Jackson (Palm Beach), 6-1, 6-3.

Doubles: No. 1—Sean Strickling-Robert Vrij (MC) def. Lagoia-Howie (McLennan), 7-5, 6-4. No. 2—Brad Bailey-John McCauley (MC) def. Anderson-Ballentyne (Fla. JC), 3-6, 6-3, 6-4.

Tulsa shortstop Jeff Moronko takes a breather in Saturday's Midland Angel-Tulsa Driller Texas League contest.

Angels rout Drillers, 9-3

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Walking pnuemonia catcher Dave Heath put Midland ahead for the first time with a two-run homer and the Angels' bottled lightning, Devon White, electrified the crowd of 1,570 with a daring steal of home in a seven-run seventh inning that keyed a 9-3 win over Tulsa Saturday night.

Until the eruption, it looked like the Angels and Drillers were headed for a fifth straight one-run verdict to be decided in the eighth or ninth.

Midland sent 12 batters to the plate in the big inning, collected six hits, a couple of walks and the kindly Drillers chipped in with two errors, not to mention a wild pitch.

Tulsa inched ahead 3-2 in the top of the seventh on an unearned run that nevertheless got rid of starter Bryan Price, whose only sin had been to give up a two-run homer to Jeff Moronko in the third. That set the stage for the summer avalanche.

JUAN Cruz opened the seventh with a single and Heath, who was walking around with pneumonia for 12 days on the recent road trip, jumped on starter Terry Johnson's first pitch for a home run.

That gave Midland a 4-3 lead and finished off Johnson. The Drillers used two more pitchers before getting out of the inning, the highlight of which was White's rare steal of home.

White's speed paid off in a two-out triple and then there was the steal as Kirk Killingsworth's pitch sailed inside and wild, driving Montgomery away from the plate.

"Joe (Manager Joe Maddon) called it," said White. "Reggie couldn't believe the steal sign when he saw it. The pitcher was trying to hit Reggie. He's a smart pitcher. It's the only way they could have prevented me from scoring. The pitcher saw me break, but the catcher didn't. I had the base stolen."

IT WAS the kind of insurance run Midland needed in a series like this, but it opened the flood gates for seven runs.

Montgomery, battling a slump, hit a homer, his ninth, and before the inning ended seven runs were in. Heath even collected a second hit, an rbi single, giving him three for the inning.

"I think that's the first time that, two hits in an inning, has happened to me," Heath said. "The homer (his fourth) came off a change up. He had been throwing me breaking stuff all night and I was looking for it."

Heath went on, "Price mixed his pitches well and hit spots with his fast ball. He pitched a good game."

Todd Ficher, who won Friday, came on with 2 2/3 innings of five-strikeout relief to pick up his second win.

Of the steal, Maddon said, "We had talked about the possibility of stealing home earlier. The pitcher has a very slow wind up, Reggie has been in a slump and they weren't expecting it."

Then, Reggie homered. "Something like that can pump a guy up. Maybe that's what we needed," Maddon went on.

The win not only gave Midland the series 3-2, but the season's series, 6-4, as well.

However, Shreveport's Captains, coming to Angel Stadium to begin a five-game stand at 2 p.m. today are a different story.

Tulsa may be the first place team in the East division of the Texas League, but it was Shreveport that beat Midland four out of five on the recent trip.

Texas rips Oklahoma; Lamar holds off Houston

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas pitching ace Greg Swindell struck out eight batters and walked just one as the No. 3 Longhorns defeated No. 10 Oklahoma 9-4 in the NCAA Central Regional baseball tournament Saturday.

Swindell, 17-1, went the distance, retiring the Sooners in order four times. The sophomore southpaw won a much anticipated duel with

College Baseball

Oklahoma starter Bobby Witt (7-3), who left the game in the eighth after giving up seven runs on eight hits.

Texas will play Lamar in Sunday's championship game.

Lamar's Jerald Clark nailed a three-run homer over the rightfield wall in the first inning and pitcher David Poss held Oklahoma's batters in check as the Cardinals won 7-5 and eliminated the Sooners later Saturday night.

The Cardinals tagged Oklamhoma starter Scott Hamilton for two mroe runs in the second inning before he was relieved by Jay Reynolds. Reynolds gave up two more runs before Steve Peters took over in the fifth and shut down Lamar's attack for the Sooners, 55-14.

Lamar, 35-23, won its way out of the loser's bracket earlier Saturday by eliminating Houston from the tournament, 10-9.

The Longhorns, 59-12, broke a 1-1 tie with a two-run seventh inning and put the game out of reach with a four-run eighth for a 7-1 lead. Bud Ray, Dodd Johnson and Rusty Richards opened the inning with base hits. Richard's single knocked in Ray, and Witt walked in another run before being relieved by David Johnson. Johnson walked in another run, and Robbie Byers scored on a sacrifice.

Horrors, Holmes' secret is out

Maybe it would have been better for his image if heavyweight champion Larry Holmes kept his secret on HBO. Or maybe it was a case of expecting too much from a 47-0, now "48-0" myth who really turned out to be just a man. Or perhaps, age just caught up with the 35-year-old "Ernie".

In any case, what happened when he faced The Truth in the Reno ring last week was there for all to see.

Holmes, of course, lost, but the unwritten rules of "the game" dictate that a reluctant dragon does not take the title from a champion. And, in truth, Carl Williams will never be mistaken for the Mad Bull of the Pampas, the Manassa Mauler, the Raging Bull, Gunboat, Hurricane or any of those other tags that conjure up visions of mayhem on the loose.

WILLIAMS, HOW is it Ali put it, floats like a bee and stings like a butterfly. Still, his drawing-room left jab, delivered with an almost delicate flick remindful of a daintily protuding little finger as seen when one effects sophistication by raising a cup of tea to the lips in polite company, was enough to keep Holmes at bay. And when followed by a pawing right, which apparently consitutes a flurry among today's heavyweights, even forced the champ to retreat in disorganized confusion.

Unfortunately, two punches in a row and that was it. Of course, it's easy to criticize.

After it was over, Holmes' closed optic and swollen, abused features made it quite obvious that the damage wrought did not reflect tranquil scenes depicted on the TV screen. Do you suppose someone was doing a job on Larry between rounds?

AT ANY rate, there is no inclination here to become a Paul Gallico or George Plimpton. Gallico, a former theater critic for the New York Daily News after graduating from Columbia, got into sports writing when he climbed into the ring with Jack Dempsey "just to see how it felt to get hit by a Dempsey right." Plimpton, a latter day Gallico, has made a career of sampling "Dempsey rights."

Holmes, in his early years as a prominent heavyweight often confused with Kansas City tackle Ernie Holmes, conquered that identity problem when Ernie finally retired.

But on his way to a 48-0 record, Larry has been one of the best kept secrets of the sport, in one sense. Still, he has been seen live by more people than Joe Louis, the most exciting fighter of his day, simply because Holmes' fights were carried on pay cable.

More people, however, were students of Louis fights through the medium of those newsreel fight movies.

BACK IN those days, heavyweight championship fights were eagerly awaited treats which came to the local movie house a few days after the bout. In regular speed, slow motion and repeated replays, you could see Louis' entire fights, the stalking panther and the lightning-like destructive flurries, whether the fights lasted one round or five or six rounds. Fans of the day knew Louis in a way today's fight fans couldn't even envision.

But if you think this is a treatise with the intent of flaunting Louis' superiority to a product of the Age of Stereids, you are sadly in error. You wouldn't catch me using anything as obvious as a Louis quote, as say, when confronted with a wary foe like Carl Williams, "He can run, but he can't hide."

Louis, isn't needed. Shoot, Archie Moore or Jersey Joe Walcott, even at 40 when they were still top notchers, would have left heavy handed, slow moving Holmes in some corner, a helpless, confused inert hulk.

Lakers want to keep running pace against Celtics

L.A. assistant Wohl: 'Celtics the smartest team in the world'

BOSTON (AP) — The Los Angeles Lakers want to run against Boston the way they have run over their three previous playoff opponents. What they don't want is a rerun of their previous playoffs against the Celtics.

The Lakers have faced Boston in eight National Basketball Association championship rounds, starting in 1959, most recently last year. LA's never won a series from the Celtics.

The Lakers are 11-2 in this year's postseason, but more impressive has been the ease with which they have compiled that record, averaging more than 131 points per game. In Wednesday's clincher against Denver, they scored 153.

"We like to have people looking at us from behind," Coach Pat Riley said of the Lakers' fast break attack. "The first of June seems to be the time we like to play basktball. The guys are up; they're ready. I think it's going to be a great, great series."

The Celtics, who play host to the Lakers Monday in the opener of the best-of-7 championship series, have sometimes struggled even to reach 100 points in their Eastern Conference victories over Cleveland, Detroit and Philadelphia.

The Lakers, however, know that scoring averages against uncommon opponents can be deceiving. They know that the Eastern Conference plays a tougher brand of basketball than the Western Conference and in the last three months, Los Angeles has played just two games against Eastern teams.

More important, the Lakers also know that looks and polish don't win titles. Sometimes, like last year when the Celtics outrebounded Los Angeles 52-33 in the seventh and deciding game of the title round to win their 15th championship, it's the physical, hard-working team that wins.

Lakers assistant Dave Wohl, who scouted the Celtics against the 76ers, said Boston has other attributes besides the muscle and scoring ability of Larry Bird, Kevin McHale and center Robert Parish.

"They're the smartest team in the league," Wohl said. "There are other teams that can match them in talent. But they don't beat themselves. You have to beat them.

"They don't throw away passes. They don't force things. They see mismatches and they react defensively. They are a great group of opportunists."

Wohl said Celtics guard Dennis Johnson was the difference in the Eastern Conference finals against Philadelphia.

"He was as good as Bird," he added. "He's not a great shooter or scorer, but he is a great fourth-quarter scorer."

The series will be billed by many as "The Great Grudge Match of 1985," especially for Los Angeles' guard Earvin "Magic" Johnson, whose superstar image was tarnished by the team's defeat last year.

But Johnson, whose indecision, turnovers and missed free throws in key situations made him the No. 1 scapegoat for the loss, would admit only half-heartedly to a revenge motive.

"All we wanted to do was get to the championships, regardless of who we had to play," he said. "But since it is the Celtics, there's going to be a little extra incentive because of what happened last year."

Lakers again stand in their way.

"Everywhere we go, people are lying in wait for us, ready to knock

The Celtics first met the Lakers in the NBA finals in 1959, the last year the franchise was located in Minneapolis. Boston swept them 4-0. Once the Lakers moved to California, they also lost to Boston in 1962, '63, '65, '66, '68, '69 and '84.

Four of those series went seven games, including the 1969 meeting that represents the last time an NBA team has repeated as champion.

In 1985, the Celtics are seeking to resume that "tradition" and the us off," Celtics Coach K.C. Jones says. "But that's something we expected. Everyone wants to beat the world champions. That just makes it that much harder for us."

"It's tough for a team, knowing it must have the same hunger it had the previous year and to stay at that level the whole year," said Philadelphia Coach Billy Cunningham, whose 1983 championship team failed to repeat last year. "Teams have to play with a little bit of fear."

Once that fear disappears, championship teams usually avoid change and play with what they believe is a pat hand.

"In most cases, you don't do much to change a champion," said Dennis Johnson, who played on Seattle's title club in 1979 and the Celtics last year. "Everyone else gets better around the league and you stay the same. And you've got everyone gunning for you."

The Celtics, however, are not the same team as a year ago. They traded starting guard Gerald Henderson to Seattle for a future draft choice, gambling that Danny Ainge would come through the way he has. And they signed guard Ray Williams, a player too unpredictable for any other NBA team.

In contrast, the Lakers' roster has changed little from a year ago, when Boston slowed them down and outmuscled them.

But Doug Moe, coach of the Denver team that was run over by Los Angeles in the semifinals, predicted that won't happen again.

"LA is better this year than last. No comparison," Moe said. "They are stronger physically, they're a better rebounding team, they play a stronger game, and the big plus is (guard) Byron Scott. He's a pure shooter and he lifts the whole level of their players."

Boston-Los Angeles matchups

Associated Press

Key player profiles for the National Basketball Association Championship Series between the Boston Celtics and the Los Angeles Lakers:

CENTERS

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar — Still going strong at 38, averaging 20.2 for LA in the the playoffs. Needs 62 points to pass Jerry West as the all-time leading NBA playoff scorer. Already is the league's career point leader in the regular season. Needs to hold his own on the boards against tough Boston front line.

Robert Parish — Still an underrated performer despite making All-Star team in all five seasons with the Celtics. Started slowly in playoffs, but neutralized Philadelphia's Moses Malone in Eastern Conference finals, averaging 17.4 points and 13.0 rebounds. Celtics followers call him "Chief."

FORWARDS

Larry Bird — What Bill Russell was to 1960s Boston dynasty, Larry Bird is to the Celtics of the 1980s. Won both regular-season and playoff Most Valuable Player awards in 1984 and is Boston's leading playoff scorer this year with a 26.9 average. Although he won't blame injuries to his elbow and right index finger, his shooting touch faltered against Philadelphia to 41.9 percent. Nevertheless, his steal from Andrew Toney clinched final game against Philadelphia with four seconds left.

Kevin McHale — Won award as the NBA's best sixth man for the second year in a row, but has started at forward since February injury to Cedric Maxwell. Also backs up Parish at center. Led the Celtics in scoring against the 76ers with a 21.2 average. A big factor as Boston dominated Los Angeles underneath in last year's finals.

James Worthy — Shot a phenomenal 72.1 percent from the field in Western Conference finals against Denver. Has the strength to play forward, but has the speed of a guard. Plays brilliantly on LA's fast break. Averaging 20.5 points per game in the playoffs. His quickness inside gave Boston problems inside last year, but will be remembered for poor inbounds pass at the end of regulation in Game 2 that allowed Boston to force an overtime and even the series at 1-1.

Kurt Rambis — Scores infrequently, but is the toughest Laker underneath. Throws the outlet pass well, so if he can rebound effectively, he can be an important triggerman for the fast break.

GUARDS

Earvin "Magic" Johnson — His turnovers, missed free throws and indecision in key situations put lion's share of blame on him for last season's championship series loss despite his general all-around brilliance. Became the all-time NBA playoff assist leader in final game against Denver, although he's only in his sixth pro season. Unsurpassed as the middle man on the fast break. Has unique ability to rebound and start a fast break without an outlet pass. Was MVP in playoffs when Lakers won titles in 1980 and 1982.

Byron Scott — Like Worthy, has been almost unstoppable in the playoffs, nailing long jumpers and finishing off fast breaks with equal facility. Led the Lakers in scoring against Denver with 23.4 average and hit 65.4 percent of his shots. Had some bright moments against Boston-Los Angeles series as a rookie a year ago.

Dennis Johnson — Many believe the switch of "DJ" to playing defense against Magic was the key to Boston's comeback from a 2-1 deficit last year. Undoubtedly, Magic's ability to operate with DJ guarding him will be anoher key to who will become this season's champion. Dennis has demonstrated better shooting eye all this season, capped with 18.2 average against 76ers, including team-high 23 in series-deciding fifth game.

Danny Ainge — Had his best season by far in 1984-85, shooting consistently from outside. Became a starter this season after Boston traded Gerald Henderson to Seattle. Averaged 12.2 against 76ers and made two key steals in closing minutes of deciding game. Also had some crucial offensive rebounds against Philadelphia, but will have to be very conscious of Lakers fast break.

BENCH

Bob McAdoo — No. 1 backup for Abdul-Jabbar and also plays forward. Very good outside shot for a big man. Was injured for much of last year's Championship Series, adding to Boston's advantage in muscle.

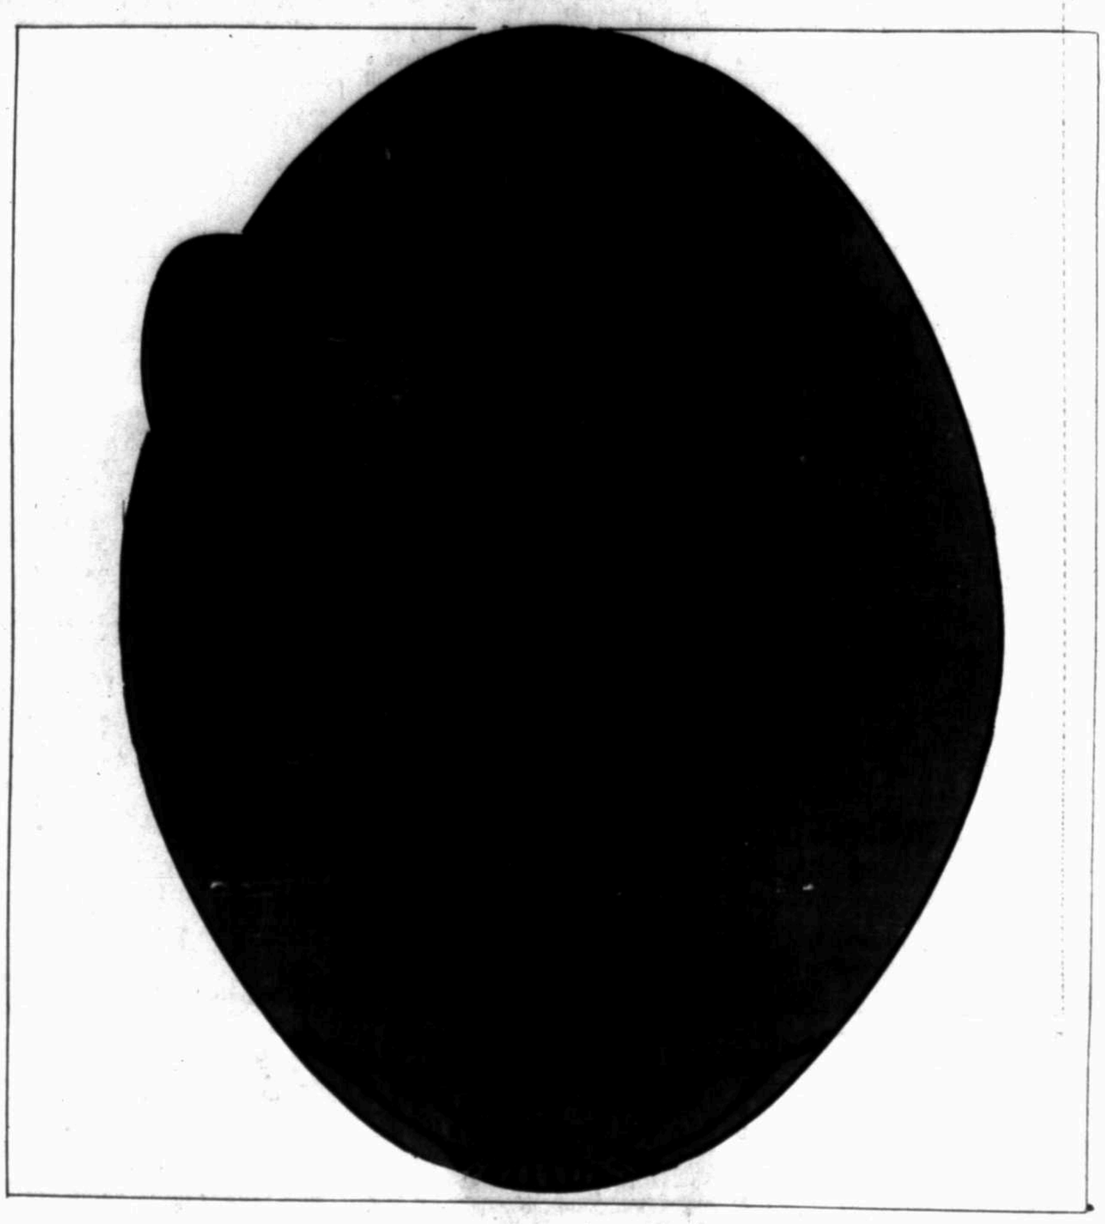

Cedric Maxwell — Considered a strong clutch performer. Won playoff MVP when Celtics beat Houston in 1981 finals. Led Boston with 24 points, eight rebounds and eight assists last year after telling teammates before Game 7, "Let me carry you on my back." Playing time and effectiveness lessened by knee surgery in February.

Michael Cooper — Favorite target of Magic Johnson's alley-oop passes and a speed merchant on the fast break. However, his main value is on defense, where he is a perennial all-league selection. Coach Pat Riley loves to put him against Bird, despite four-inch height disadvantage. Plays both forward and guard.

Ray Williams — Became Boston's No. 3 guard after late-season acquisition from New York. His history is to be a hot-cold performer, a tendency that has held up in the playoffs, but seems to have accepted his backup role after a long career as a starter.

Larry Spriggs — Spent years as the last player on the Lakers' bench, but Riley relies on him more now and could see more playing time as Los Angeles tries to neutralize Boston rebounding strengh. Burly build is similar to Philadelphia rookie Charles Barkley's.

Scott Wedman — Used to be a guard and forward, but comes in now generally to give Bird a breather. Can be very effective outside shooter off the bench. When Bird sat out one playoff game with a bad elbow, Wedman scored 30 in a loss to Cleveland.

Howard adds half inch to high jump record

HOUSTON (AP) — Jim Howard of Alvin, Texas, jumped 7 feet, 8¼ inches Saturday at the Rice University meet of Champions track meet, bettering the American high jump record of 7-8 shared by Dwight Stones and Dennis Lewis.

Howard, a 1983 graduate of Texas A&M, tried three times to clear 7-9½ but failed.

Stones set the American high jump record June 24, 1984 at Olympic trials in Los Angeles. Lewis, of Long Beach City College, hit the mark March 30 in a meet at Long Beach, Calif.

"I was planning on jumping 7-6 and then all this happens," said Howard, competing for the Pacific Coast Club. "Things happen when you least expect it. I work out at 7-6 so I have to jump higher than what I do in workouts.

"This is the best meet I've had outdoors," said Howard, who earlier this year cleared 7-8½ for an indoor best.

He cleared 7-8½ Saturday on his third and final attempt.

Howard said the records keep changing so much "I don't keep up with track. I hope nobody has tied it."

The world record is 7-10, set last year by Zhu Jianhua of China.

In other events, Rice's men's 400-meter relay team of Elliston Stinson, Terry Jones, Steven Hall and Patrick Gordon combined for a time of 39.01 seconds, the second fastest collegiate time next to Arkansas' 38.81 at the Southwest Conference track meet last week.

Olympic gold medalist Benita Fitzgerald-Brown of Nashville, Tenn., now training in Austin, Texas, went 13.29 seconds in the 100-meter hurdles for a meet record, bettering Kim Turner, formerly of Texas-El Paso, who ran it in 13.46 seconds.

In the women's 100-meter dash, Inger Peterson of Nevada-Las Vegas went 11.61, surpassing the meet record 11.66 held by Clotee Cowans of Northeast Louisiana.

In the women's 800, Delisa Walton-Floyd, training in Houston, ran in 2:03.19. The previous record was held by Angelita Lind of Puerto Rico (2:03.52.)

Rick Meyer of the University of Houston threw the discus 205 feet, 11 inches. The old men's meet discus record was held by Pat McCulla, whose mark was 197-5.

Interception record kills Memphis

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Portland tied a United States Football League record by picking off six Mike Kelley passes Saturday night, the last one to set up Tim Mazzetti's 43-yard field goal with no time remaining as the Breakers upset the Memphis Showboats 17-14.

The Breakers, who snapped a six game losing streak, also set a USFL mark by returning the interceptions for 120 yards.

The loss snapped the Showboats' four-game winning string to drop their record to 8-6. Portland is 4-10.

Memphis dominated the contest offensively but the turnovers kept Portland close.

McDowell drives in five as Rangers rip Bosox, 10-3

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Oddibe McDowell drove in five runs with a bases-loaded triple and two run-scoring singles to lead the Texas Rangers to a 10-3 victory over the Boston Red Sox Saturday night.

McDowell, playing in his seventh game since his call-up last Saturday, snapped an 0-for-17 streak with a triple off the wall in the second inning to stake the Rangers to a 4-1 lead. He was 1-for-23 coming into the game.

Mike Mason, 3-4, pitched 6 2-3 innings for the victory, walking one and striking out three. Greg Harris finished up earning his third save of the season.

Al Nipper, 1-4, gave up all the Texas runs in 4 1-3 innings. He walked six and struck out one.

Tony Armas opened the scoring with his major league-leading 13th home run to lead off the second.

The Rangers scored four times in their half of the second. Gary Ward doubled to left, took third on Jim Rice's fielding error and scored on Cliff Johnson's sacrifice fly. George Wright, Glenn Brummer and Toby Harrah drew walks and, with two outs, McDowell tripled.

The Red Sox got a run back in the third on singles by Marty Barrett, Dwight Evans and Bill Buckner.

McDowell blooped a run-scoring single down the right field line in the fourth to give Texas a 5-2 lead. The Rangers made it 6-2 in the fifth on singles by Pete O'Brien, Ward and Johnson.

The Red Sox chased Mason in the seventh when Rich Gedman and Glenn Hoffman singled and Steve Lyons walked to load the bases. Gedman scored on a passed ball by Brummer, but Evans grounded out to end the threat.

The Rangers added four in the eighth. Two scored on McDowell's single, one after an error by right-fielder Evans. O'Brien's single scored two more runs.

Blue Jays 10, Indians 7

CLEVELAND — Rance Mulliniks and Ernie Whitt drove in three runs apiece and Jesse Barfield's single snapped a seventh-inning tie as the Toronto Blue Jays won their sixth consecutive game, defeating the Cleveland Indians.

Ron Musselman, 2-0, pitched four innings of one-run relief and Jim Acker hurled the ninth for his sixth save to hand the Indians their fourth consecutive defeat. Cleveland reliever Rich Thompson, 1-2, was the loser.

Cleveland led 7-6 when George Bell blooped a double with one out in the Toronto seventh. Jeff Burroughs walked before Whitt tied the game with a single that sent pinch runner Louis Thornton to third.

Barfield hit a hard ground single through the box to score Thornton and move Whitt to third. Reliever Tom Waddell was greeted by Tony Fernandez's sacrifice fly. Whitt homered off Waddell in the ninth, his fifth of the season and second in as many games.

Cleveland took a 1-0 lead in the first inning on Toronto starter Jimmy Key's throwing error. The Blue Jays tied it in the third off Cleveland starter Don Schulze when Whitt, who tied a club record by scoring four times, reached second when shortstop Julio Franco dropped his pop fly — Franco's 14th error of the season — and scored on Damaso Garcia's single.

Franco's second home run of the season, a two-run shot, gave the Indians a 3-1 lead in the third but the Blue Jays scored four times in the fourth on RBI singles by Whitt and Fernandez and a two-run single by Mulliniks.

Joe Carter's RBI double and Chris Bando's run-scoring single in the Indians' fourth tied it 5-5 and Cleveland took a 7-5 lead in the fifth on Andre Thornton's two-run single. Toronto pulled within 7-6 in the sixth on Mulliniks' run-scoring grounder.

American League

Royals 3, White Sox 0

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Pat Sheridan drove in all the Kansas City runs as the Royals scored their first-ever runs against Tom Seaver and defeated the Chicago White Sox as Charlie Leibrandt pitched a three-hitter.

Leibrandt, 5-2, surrendered lead-off singles in the first, third and sixh innings as the Royals notched their fourth straight victory and handed Chicago its fifth loss in a row. It was the second shutout of the season for the left-hander walked one and struck out two in outdueling Seaver, 4-3, who surrendered seven hits and remained eight away from the 300-victory plateau.

Scott Fletcher, who singled in the first inning and stole second, was the only White Sox batter to get past first base.

Seaver, who pitched shutouts in his only two starts against the Royals last season after coming to the American League, was tagged for a leadoff double in the second inning by Jorge Orta. He stayed at second when Steve Balboni flied to left but Sheridan singled sharply to center and Orta scored easily, snapping a string of 19 1-3 scoreless innings against Seaver.

Angels 5, Orioles 3

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Ron Romanick scattered seven hits before needing ninth-inning help and Ruppert Jones hit a two-run homer to lead the California Angels to a victory over the Baltimore Orioles.

Romanick, 6-1, walked two and struck out five in winning for the eighth time in his last nine decisions dating back to last September. He lost his shutout bid in the ninth when Eddie Murray singled and Fred Lynn hit his eighth home run. Donnie Moore took over and recorded his 10th save but had to pitch out of a bases-loaded jam.

Romanick's scoreless duel with Dennis Martinez, 3-3, was snapped in the fourth after the Angels loaded the bases with no one out on singles by Juan Beniquez and Brian Downing and a walk to Jones. Beniquez scored as Bobby Grich grounded into a double play. With one out in the sixth, Martinez hit Downing with a pitch and Jones followed with his fifth home run of the season.

California made it 5-0 with two runs off Nate Snell in the eighth and they proved decisive. Jones walked with one out and came around on singles by Grich and Jerry Narron. Brown doubled for the second run.

After Lynn's ninth-inning homer, Moore walked Larry Sheets. He retired the next two batters but pinch hitter Wayne Gross and Lee Lacy singled to load the bases and Dwyer walked, forcing home Baltimore's third run. Moore retired Cal Ripken on a pop fly to end the game.

A's 8, Yankees 7

OAKLAND, Calif. — New York relief ace Dave Righetti walked Oakland's Steve Henderson on four pitches with the bases loaded and two out in the ninth inning and the Athletics pulled out a controversial victory over the Yankees.

Dave Kingman, who was walked intentionally to load the bases with one out, headed toward the A's dugout instead of to second base when Henderson walked. Kingman realized his mistake, dashed across the infield grass and beat the throw to second. Yankee Manager Billy Martin argued Kingman should have been ruled out for leaving the basepaths.

Righetti, 3-3, lost because of an unearned run. Carney Lansford reached first with one out when shortstop Dale Berra booted his grounder for an error and went to third on a hit by Bruce Bochte that went for a double when center fielder Rickey Henderson failed to make a shoestring catch. After Kingman was walked, Dwayne Murphy popped out for the second out, bringing up Steve Henderson.

The Yankees tied the score in the top of the ninth on Don Mattingly's RBI single off winner Jay Howell, 2-2. Mattingly was 4-for-4, including his fifth homer, and drove in four runs, giving him 38 RBIs in 39 games. Howell, who blew a chance for his 11th save, got Dave Winfield on a double-play grounder to end the ninth with runners at first and third.

Alfredo Griffin's bases-loaded triple off Righetti in the sixth inning highlighted a six-run rally that gave the A's a 7-4 lead. Griffin's triple sent Oakland ahead 6-4 and Griffin scored on a wild pitch.

Brewers 9, Twins 7

MILWAUKEE — Robin Yount stroked a two-run homer and Cecil Cooper drove in three runs, two with a triple in a decisive four-run seventh inning, as the Milwaukee Brewers defeated the Twins in the fourth straight loss for Minnesota.

Cooper's triple came off reliever Rick Lysander in the seventh inning and opened up a 5-4 game. Yount followed with a walk and Ted Simmons a run-scoring single to chase Lysander. One out later, Bobby Clark singled off Frank Eufemia for a run and a 9-4 lead.

Kirby Puckett's two-run double and Kent Hrbek's RBI single chased reliever Bob McClure in the eighth. Rollie Fingers finished up for his sixth save as the Brewers won their fifth game in six.

The Brewers scored twice off Pete Filson, 2-1, in the first when Charlie Moore singled and Yount slammed his fifth homer of the season.

Minnesota came back with a run in the second on Randy Bush's homer off Moose Haas. It was his fifth of the year.

Clark led off the Brewers' second with a double and scored on Paul Molitor's single.

Tim Teufel, Mark Salas, Puckett and Mickey Hatcher hit successive singles in the third to tie the game 3-3.

To stop Generals, forget Flutie, go after Walker

Associated Press

USFL Roundup

For Tampa Bay Coach Steve Spurrier, there's nothing complicated about stopping the New Jersey Generals. Forget about Doug Flutie and go after Herschel Walker.

"Their passing game isn't that complicated from what they've shown so far," Spurrier said. "We must contain Herschel, which we did pretty well the first two times we played them."

Tampa Bay is tied with Birmingham for first in the United States Football League's Eastern Conference with a 9-4 record and the Generals are tied with Memphis at 8-5. They both will be coming off disappointing losses when they meet Sunday in Tampa.

In other games Sunday, Arizona is at Houston and San Antonio at Baltimore.

Oakland beat Denver 31-16 Thursday night and Orlando is at Birmingham Monday night.

There are just five weeks left in the USFL regular season, a crucial time for the Bandits and Generals, both of whom would like the Eastern Conference title and the home field advantage for the playoffs. In fact, Tampa safety Marcus Quinn looks on the rest of the schedule as "a mission," in view of owner's John Bassett's decision to withdraw the team from the league next season.

"We've got a tough schedule coming up," says Walker, who leads the USFL with 1,592 yards rushing. "If we're going to be a championship team, we've got to come out on a positive note. "We have to get on a roll and take it one step at a time and shoot for the championship."

Baltimore, which won the league title last year in Philadelphia and was runner-up in the league's first season, has no illusions about home-field advantage.

Waltrip passes Gant to win Winston

HARRISBURG, N.C. (AP) — A jubilant Darrell Waltrip said Harry Gant offered little resistance when he took the lead Saturday with two laps remaining and went on to take the $200,000 winner's share in The Winston auto race.

"With 10 laps to go, Harry started smoking his tires," Waltrip said after singing "We're In The Money" in the press box.

"When I caught him he didn't put up that much of a fight. If he had, I don't know what I would have done."

Waltrip's crew, led by Jeff Hammond, built the engine to last only 100 miles but stacked it to the limit with power. As Waltrip crossed the finish line in the $500,000, 105-mile race the engine blew and smoke trailed from the car as he took his victory lap.

"I've never had an engine blow while I was winning the race," a smiling Waltrip said. "This makes up for a lot of heartache and pain this year."

With 20 laps left in the 70-lap event for last year's Winston Cup Grand National race winners at the 1.5-mile Charlotte Motor Speedway, Waltrip trailed Harry Gant by 4.16 seconds.

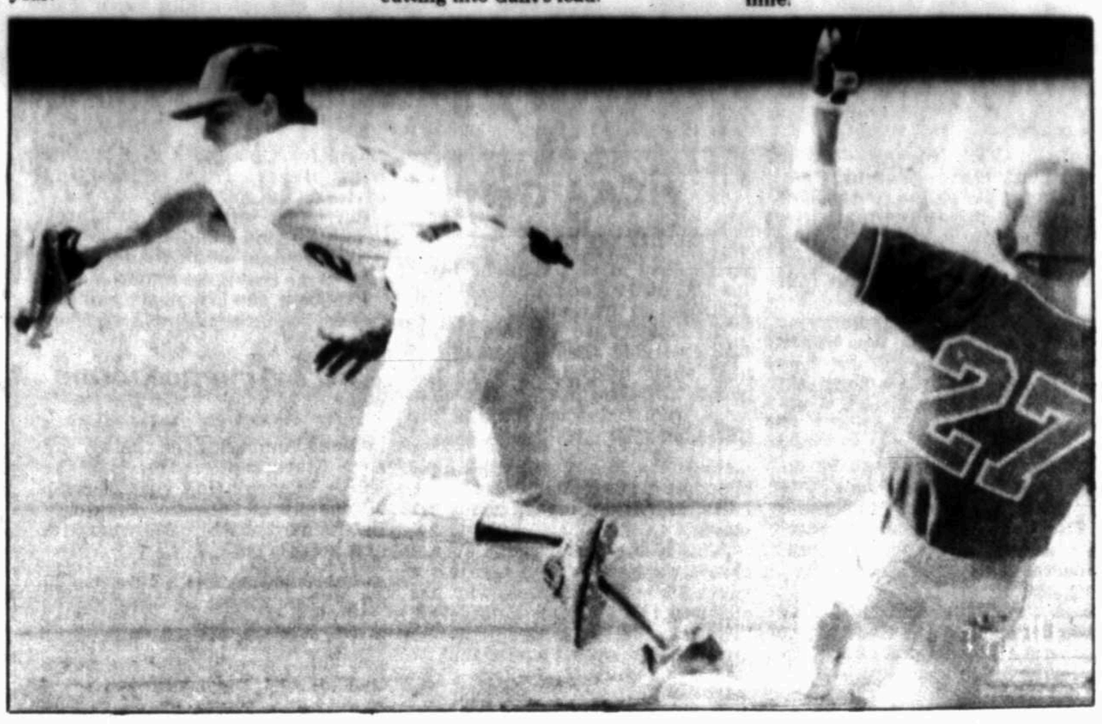

"(Car owner) Junior (Johnson) kept talking to me on the radio and said, 'What do you want, $75,000 or $200,000', and I said, 'I'm going for it.'"

Slowly but steadily, the two-time Grand National champion began cutting into Gant's lead.

With 15 laps to go, the margin was 3.42 seconds, and five laps later it stood at 2.82 seconds.

Gant held a mere two-car length advantage with two laps remaining. On lap 68 as the two streaked down the backstretch, Waltrip passed Gant's Chevrolet on the outside and held on for a .31-second victory.

Gant won $85,000, including a $10,000 bonus for leading the 55th lap, in the richest auto race per mile.

Adams-Whiteside maintain pace in RHCC Stampede

From Staff Reports

The duo of Craig Adams and Steve Whiteside showed no signs of letting up Saturday in the three-day Stampede Partnership golf tournament at Ranchland Hills Country Club.

After firing an opening round 63 Friday in the best-ball tournament that left them in a tie for the lead, the pair came right back with a 65 Saturday to show it was no fluke. The two-day total of 128 led the Championship Flight and was the lowest of the day among the 10 flights.

First-round co-leaders Bob Herell and Steve Thompson tacked a respectable 69 on their opening 63 but fell four strokes behind Adams-Whiteside.

Leading the first flight competition are Claude Mitchell and Ed Barfield with a 141, just one stroke ahead of the pair of Tommy Gibson and Don Earp.

TEXAS

After OU picked up two runs in bottom of eighth, Ray added a solo homer, and Johnson stole home in the ninth to put Texas ahead 9-3.

Oklahoma designated hitter Joe Jordan led the Sooner hitters with three hits and two RBIs.

In the Lamar-Houston game, Neil Reynolds' two-run homer in the eighth inning neutralized a furious Cougar comeback in the seventh inning.

Jerald Clark set up Reynolds' game-winning hit as he led off Lamar's half of the eighth by reaching first on pitcher Mike Walker's error.

Walker cleanly fielded Clark's grounder to the mound, then flubbed an easy throw to first for the out.

The Cougars sent 10 men to the plate in the seventh inning and scored five runs to take the lead for the first time.

Pat Hewes got two RBIs and Damon Baldwin, Mike Ingle and Benny Mota added one RBI apiece.

Houston almost regained the lead in the bottom of the ninth, when, with one man on, Mike Basso's long ball over the left field wall fell out of bounds.

Lamar, leading 1-0 after the first inning, chased Houston starter Larry Coker with a four-run second inning. Clark hit a three-run homer over the left field wall, and Davis added an RBI single to give the Cards a 5-1 lead.

Bulldog roommates to meet for title

NCAA Tennis

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — Top-ranked Mikael Pernfors and seventh-seeded George Bezecny, Georgia Bulldog teammates and roommates, won their semifinal matches Saturday to advance to Sunday's individual finals in the 101st annual NCAA tennis championships.

Pernfors, the defending singles champion, defeated third-seeded Jim Grubb of Stanford, 7-5, 6-4, while Beznecy upset fourth-seeded Todd Witsken of Southern California, 6-4, 6-4.

The last time two teammates met in the NCAA final was in 1961, when Stanford's Tim Mayotte beat Jimmy Gurfein.

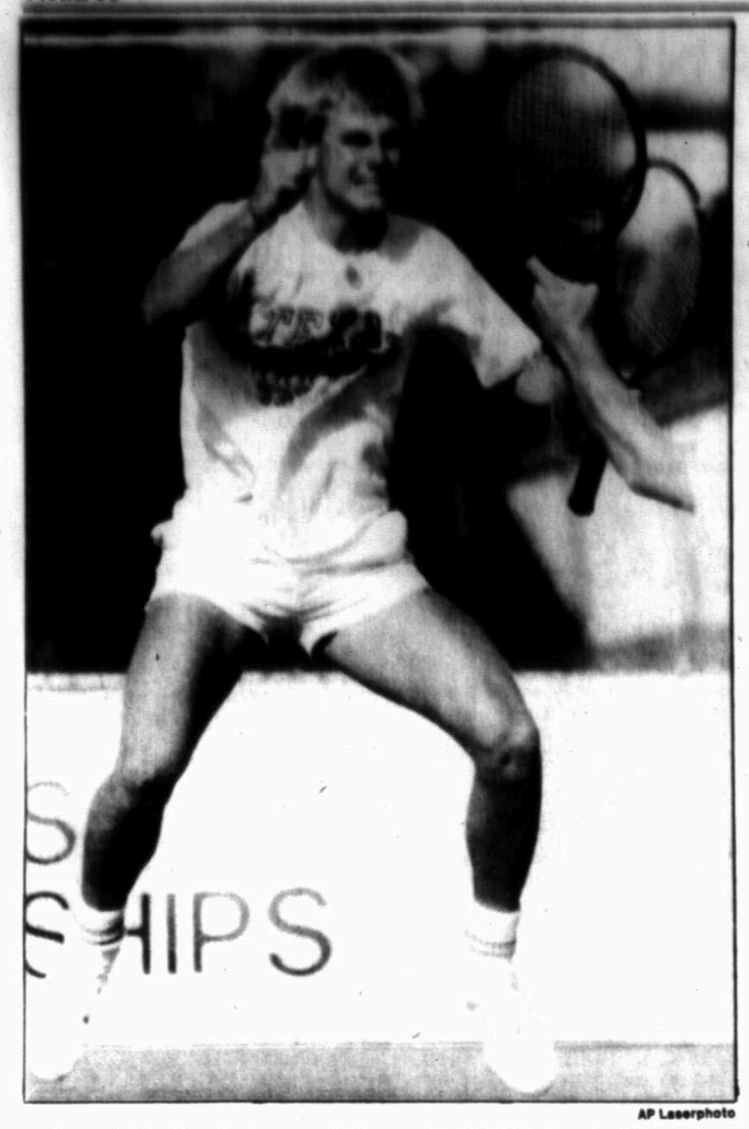

Pernfors is trying to become the first champion to repeat since 1964, when USC's Dennis Ralston won his second title. Four players have tried and failed since; three were beaten in their second finals matches by teammates.

Pernfors, a senior from Hollviksnas, Sweden, has faced Beznecy, a senior from Fort Lauderdale, Fla., twice before. Pernfors beat him 6-4, 3-6, 6-3 in the finals of the Southern Intercollegiate Championships in Athens last fall, and then beat him 6-4, 6-1 in the finals of the Rider-Rolex tournament in Louisiana.

Georgia, which won the team title last week, has a player in the singles final for just the second time. The Bulldogs are guaranteed of becoming the first team to have successive singles championships since Matt Mitchell and John McEnroe won for Stanford in 1977 and 1978.

Grabb, who struggled with soreness in his thigh during much of the year, said his injury did not bother him at all Saturday.

Pepperdine's Kelly Jones and Carlos DeLaura took a 6-3, 6-3 decision. They will meet Charles Beckman and Royce Deppe of Texas for the title Sunday. Beckman and Dappe were 6-2, 7-6 victors over No. 2 seeded Todd Witsken and Jorge Lozaon of Southern California.

Ohio State's Burroughs claims top honors

NCAA Golf

HAINES CITY, Fla. (AP) — Ohio State's Clark Burroughs sank a 2½-foot putt for par on the first playoff hole to win the individual title, while Houston swept to its 16th national crown in the team competition at the 88th annual NCAA Golf Championships Saturday.

Burroughs defeated Southern California's Sam Randolph, who blew a six-shot advantage in the last nine holes to lose a lead he had held throughout the tournament at Grenelefe Golf and Tennis Resort.

Houston, meanwhile, shot a 3-over-par 291 and held off Oklahoma State for a three-stroke victory to become the first team to repeat as champions since Wake Forest accomplished the feat in 1974 and 1975.

Marc Pendaries and Billy Ray Brown both shot 70s as Houston finished with a 72-hole total of 20-over-par 1,172. Oklahoma State, which lost the crown to Houston by a single stroke in 1984, posted a 293 to close at 1,175.

Houston started the day with a 1-stroke lead after Oklahoma State fired a third-round 289 to make up 11 strokes on the leaders.

The Cougars, led by Steve Elkington, extended their advantage to nine shots midway through the round, and then fought off a challenge from Oklahoma State in the final nine holes.

Houston's 16 national titles have all come under Coach Dave Williams, who said this may be his last season.

"This is the greatest one ever. I always wanted sweet 16, and this is sweet 16," said Williams, who has coached the Cougars since 1952. "The fat lady finally got here. She sang and left, and we won again."

Williams, 66, said the triumph was especially sweet because the Cougars had won despite being penalized two strokes in the second round for violating a rule prohibiting players from exchanging advice on the golf course.

Burroughs started the day three strokes behind Randolph, who led the individual competition after each of the first three rounds.

Randolph, the low amateur at the Masters last month, hiked his lead to six shots before faltering on the backside of the par 72, 7,100-yard Grenelefe west course.

Burroughs, who rallied with birdies on the 11th and 15th holes, calmly sank a putt for par on the extra hole, while Randolph missed a six-footer and settled for a bogey.

ASU's Ammaccapane tips women's top seed

NEW SEABURY, Mass. (AP) — Danielle Ammaccapane, 19, an Arizona State sophomore, won the NCAA Women's Golf championship by one stroke Saturday as favored Deb Richard of Florida blew up with four holes to go.

Ammaccapane shot a 2-over-par 75 for a 72-hole total of 298, six over regulation, and then sweat it out as Richard, Dottie Pepper of Furman and Jody Rosenthal of Tulsa failed in a bid to force a playoff.

Richard, the 1984 U.S. Amateur champion; Pepper, the low amateur in the 1984 U.S. Women's Open, and Rosenthal, the British Ladies Amateur champion, finished at 299 while playing in the tournament's final group.

Richard, the leader for three rounds in her amateur farewell, took a triple-bogey 8 on the 70th hole after driving into the rough and then putting her second shot into woods.

Pepper, who began the final round one stroke off the lead, also took a bogey on the 15th green. That left Richard, Pepper and Rosenthal 6-over-par for the distance — just as Ammaccapane finished 6-over for the tournament.

Wadkins wipes out Irwins' lead, goes up by one

DUBLIN, Ohio (AP) — Hale Irwin, sniffling and sneezing from a severe allergy attack, couldn't see the 15th green, but knew by the roar from the gallery what had occurred.

"I knew who was on the green at the time. People want to see a race. They don't want a four-shot lead. Put two and two together and I knew what happened," Irwin said, his face red and swollen from the allergy.

And the gallery got a race, largely as the result of Lanny Wadkins' long putt for eagle-3 on the 15th. It was the biggest blow in Wadkins' last-nine onslaught that eventually wiped out Irwin's once-commanding advantage and lifted Lanny into a one-shot lead Saturday in the third round of the Memorial tournament.

Wadkins, who put on a birdie-eagle burst on the 14th and 15th, played the back nine in 32, capped a 5-under-par 67 with a 20-foot birdie putt on the final hole and completed 54 holes in 208, eight-under par and matching the record on Jack Nicklaus' Muirfield Village Golf Club course.

"I was very patient," Wadkins said. "That's the way you have to be on this golf course. I knew I was playing well. I knew I was making some putts. My patience paid off."

Irwin, in obvious discomfort from the allergy attack — he later sought medical help — made his first bogey of the tournament on the eighth hole, added two more on the back and had to work hard to salvage a round of 73, one-over par.

A former winner of this event and a two-time U.S. Open champion, Irwin will take a 209 total into Sunday's final round of the chase for a $100,000 first prize.

Bill Kratzert, who scored eagle-3 on the 15th and birdied the last, had a round of 71 and is alone in third at 211.

Bill Rogers, a former British Open champion attempting to fight his way out of a two-year slump, had a 70 and was tied at 213 with Lon Hinkle. Hinkle shot 71 in the sunny weather.

The group at 214, six off the pace, included Canadian Dave Barr, Keith Fergus, Mark O'Meara, Scott Hoch and Roger Maltbie. Fergus had a 69, O'Meara 70, Hoch and Malbtie matched par-72 and Barr shot 74.

Nicklaus, who designed the course, founded the tournament, serves as the host and is the defending title-holder, took 74 strokes and completed three rounds at 221, five-over par.

Tom Watson, the 1984 Player of the Year but still without a victory this season, played the back nine in 40, had a 76 and was at 223.

Irwin, four shots clear of the field, five in front of Wadkins and without a bogey on his card for the first 36 holes, finally made a mistake he couldn't overcome on the eighth.

He put his tee shot in the right bunker on the par-3 hole, came out long and missed a 15-foot putt.

Wadkins, playing in front of him, birdied the eighth with a 25-footer that, he said, "broke the ice.

After a couple or pars, Irwin — so very, very steady through the first 2½ rounds, suddenly became erratic. He went birdie-bogey-birdie-bogey beginning on the 12th, ending that string with a three-putt.

Rizzo leads Corning by three

CORNING, N.Y. (AP) — Patti Rizzo used matchless putting for a 64 and a 3-stroke lead Saturday as untested Sherri Turner fell apart heading into the clubhouse and dropped into third place after three rounds of the $250,000 LPGA Corning Classic golf tournament.

Rizzo, normally mediocre on the greens, made two putts of 35 feet and two others of about 25 feet as she came from four strokes back to seize the lead from Turner, who ran into tree trouble on the last three holes for a double bogey, a bogey and another double bogey.

"I made 200 yards' worth of putts. ... Everything I looked at went in," said Rizzo, whose round was one stroke off the tournament record of 63.

Rizzo's three-round total of 15-under-par 201 bettered the tournament record by six strokes.

Turner started strong, shaving five strokes off par on the front nine, but seemed to lose her confidence near the end as she fell behind first Rizzo, then Jane Crafter of Adelaide, Australia.

"It's real strange to lead for two days and now be four strokes out of the lead," Turner said. "On this golf course, four shots is nothing. There's lots of birdies and eagles out there to be made."

Golfers continued to tear up the par-72, 6,050-yard Corning Country Club course in the Ladies Professional Golf Association event.

Crafter shot a 67 for 204 to stand three strokes behind Rizzo at 12-under par. Turner shot even-par 72 to finish at 11-under-par 205. Pat Bradley fired a 69 to end up at 10-under-par 206, five strokes off the pace.

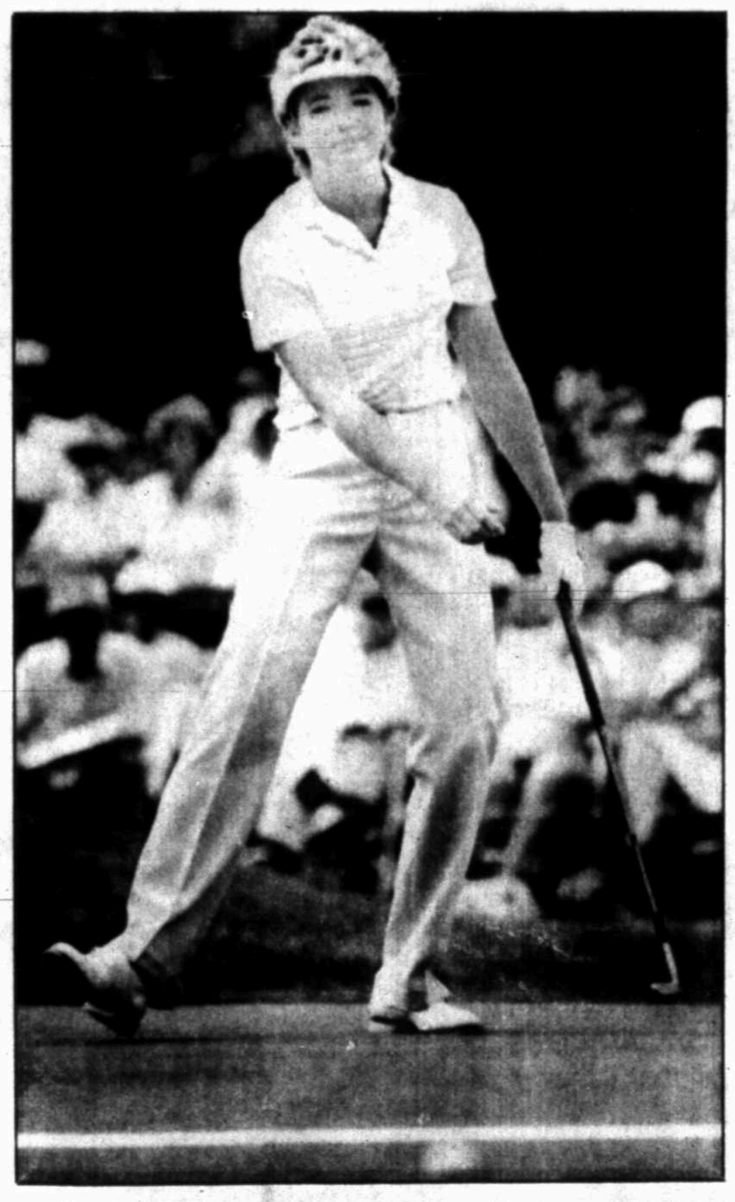

Turner ran out of gas heading into the clubhouse, hitting a tree and then missing the green on the 16th hole for a double bogey, driving near a tree and duffing the approach shot on the 17th for a bogey, and sticking her drive into a fir tree on the 18th for another double bogey.

Beth Daniel, who was second after two rounds, shot a 72 to drop into fifth place at 9-under par 207. Kathy Postlewait had a 65 for 208 and sixth place.

JoAnne Carner, the defending Corning champion, stood at 213, 3-under par.

Wind kicked up in early afternoon Saturday for the first time in the tournament, cooling the hot shooting that had broken most of the tournament's scoring records.

The cut of 2-over-par 146 after the second round tied an LPGA record and was seven strokes lower than any cut in the history of the Corning tournament, which began in 1979.

Johns Hopkins wins second straight lacrosse title

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Del Dressel scored three goals Saturday to lead a comeback that boosted Johns Hopkins to its second consecutive NCAA lacrosse championship with an 11-4 victory over Syracuse.

In a rematch of the past two finals, the Orangemen bolted to a 3-0 lead in the first 10:50, but Johns Hopkins went ahead for good with four goals in the final 2:34 of the opening period.

Syracuse's four goals were the fewest scored by one team in a championship game. Johns Hopkins captured its fifth NCAA crown in eight years with a victory margin that was the biggest in a title game since it lost to Cornell 16-8 in 1977.

Syracuse surged in front on goals by Brad Kotz, Kevin Sheehan and Fred Opie before two goals by Dressel and one each by Craig Bubier and John Krumenacker put the Bluejays in front.

Gretzky's three goals pace Oilers

EDMONTON, Alberta (AP) — Wayne Gretzky, using all of the magical skills which make him the National Hockey League's most dangerous scorer, collected three goals and an assist and set two Stanley Cup records Saturday night as the Edmonton Oilers beat the Philadelphia Flyers 4-3.

Edmonton, which hosts the next two games of the best-of-seven final round on Tuesday and Thursday nights, leads the series 2-1. The defending Stanley Cup champions, who have won 14 consecutive playoff contests at home, had to hold on as the Flyers rallied to within a goal with 5:34 remaining.

Gretzky's big night, which he began with a pair of goals in the opening 65 seconds, gave him 41 playoff points this year, surpassing his own record of 38, set in 1983. His 27 assists also are a Stanley Cup record for one year.

GRETZKY NOW stands sixth on the all-time playoff points list with 150, tying him with Stan Mikita. He is tied with Jean Beliveau for third place with 97 assists, and is just four behind Denis Potvin, the all-time leader.

Paul Coffey assisted on all four Edmonton goals, giving him the playoff assist mark for defensemen with 22. His 31 points also are the most in one year for a defenseman.

Gretzky's first goal came on one of his patented plays in which he holds the puck until the last possible moment before shooting. Jari Kurri kept the puck alive in the Philadelphia zone and fed Coffey, who returned to Kurri. Gretzky accepted Kurri's pass at the top of the right wing faceoff circle, wheeled around Flyers center Dave Poulin, faked goalie Pelle Lindbergh to the ice and put in a backhander.

JUST 15 seconds later, Coffey's pass from the right corner found Gretzky in front and he tipped it home.

Philadelphia rookie Derrick Smith scored from a scramble in front of the net only 16 seconds after that, but Gretzky got the goal back for Edmonton at 13:32. Mark Messier's perfect feed from the left point fell directly to a cutting Gretzky in front and he again faked Lindbergh to the ice before depositing a wrist shot home. It marked the first time Philadelphia had allowed an opposing player to score three goals in a game this year.

All of the first-period goals were scored in 4-on-4 skating situations.

The wild first period featured 32 shots on goal, including 20 by the Oilers, as the teams abandoned the tight-checking posture of the first two games.

THE FLYERS were lucky to escape the first period down by only two. They were shorthanded two men for 1:24 but survived as Bob Froese — who replaced Lindbergh when Ron Sutter joined Ed Hospodar in the penalty box at 17:55 — made a pair of big saves on Gretzky.

Lindbergh, who has started each of Philadelphia's 17 post-season games and had played all but one period, made 13 saves and Froese stopped all four he faced in the first period. Lindbergh started the second session, allowed Mike Krushelnyski's goal at 6:58 and departed once more, having stopped 15 of 19 shots overall. Froese finished up and blanked the Oilers the rest of the way.

Krushelnyski poked in a feed from Coffey on a power-play, with Gretzky also getting an assist.

Sipe passes Bulls to 21-7 victory over Express

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Quarterback Brian Sipe ran for one touchdown and passed for two others to guide the Jacksonville Bulls to a 21-7 victory Saturday over the Los Angeles Express in United States Footbal League play.

The Bulls capitalized on early Express mistakes for two first quarter touchdowns.

On the first play following a fumbled punt Sipe hit wide receiver Alton Alexis in the back of the end zone for the touchdown with 9:21 remaining in the first quarter.

Six plays after another fumble, Sipe crashed in from the two-yard-line for the touchdown and suffered a mild concussion. He was out for the entire second quarter, but returned in the second half.

JIM MURRAY

They don't make capitalists like they used to

Well, I see where the modern-day versions of the Knight of the Woeful Countenance, the baseball owners of America, have taken up the lance and are tilting at the windmills of change again.

Now, they've come up with a dandy: They want the union to tie their hands and make them stop tossing their money off balconies to the hired help like drunken sailors.

They remind me of one of those multiple murderers who leans over the body to scrawl a sign in lipstick on the bathroom mirror, "Help me!" Or "Catch me before I kill again!"

Can you imagine captains of industry in the United States of America having to beg unions to stop them from their own pathological overgenerosity? Feature John D. Rockefeller doing that, can you? J.P. Morgan? Commodore Vanderbilt? You think that's how Diamond Jim Brady made his millions?

I'll tell you, they don't make capitalists the way they used to. You talk about ballplayers not being what they used to be. They're throwbacks to the old models, compared to owners. Pete Rose may or may not be as good as Ty Cobb but I have to tell you that George Steinbrenner is not a patch on Branch Rickey.

Did you know that, in 1937, just after he had batted .346 with 46 homers and 167, repeat 167, runs batted in, Joe DiMaggio requested a raise? To $45,000?

The owner of that day was indignant. He told DiMag that Lou Gehrig had been with the club 13 years and he didn't make $45,000. I'll say he didn't. He made $33,000, it turned out.

Those were the days when men were men, owners were owners, and ball players were peons. You wiped your feet and took off your hat when you went to see an owner in those days.

Those were the days that Charles Comiskey paid his athletes such niggardly wages that some of them threw the World Series to get enough to feed their families. They got banned from baseball for life. Comiskey went on being known as "the noblest Roman of them all." He just made sure he didn't win any more pennants. With the wages he paid, that was easy.

You think those guys ever had to plead with unions to save them from themselves?

What would you guess Rickey paid the great Dizzy Dean the year the pitcher won 30 games and put Rickey's Cardinals in the World Series and won that for them? He got $7,500. You heard me. That's no typo.

The attitude of management in that era is pretty much summed up in an interview that Rickey granted J. Roy Stockton, recounted in the book "The Dizziest Season," put together by G.H. Fleming. "The average salary should be $6,500 for a star player," says Rickey. "And he should be able to play for eight years."

Says Stockton: "Well, Mr. Rickey, the player gives to baseball the years which, in other businesses, he would be building up his earning capacity with prospects to continue through later life. At $6,500 a year, what would he have to show for his (baseball) labors?"

Answers Rickey: "Well, out of $6,500, a man should be able to save $5,000. Then, after eight years, he should be able to retire with more than $40,000."

Now, that, you have to say, is an owner. An owners' owner. A man who not only ran the club with an iron hand but promoted thrift and frugality in his fellow man and refused to put temptation in his way. You think you needed drug tests for a guy making six grand a year and needing to save five of it? I should say not!

No, those were owners in those days. The real article. In the same book by Fleming, columnist Dan Parker weighs in with this terse graph:

"The dope is Jimmie Foxx signed for $16,000, only three grand more than he received last year. In which case, the dope is Jimmie Foxx."

Foxx had led the league the year before in homers with 48, in batting with a .346 average and in RBIs with 163. Two years previous, he had hit 58 home runs and batted .364.

You can see how ownership as a craft has deteriorated. These guys today are not owners, they're complicated philanthropists. It's not night ball and artificial surfaces and air travel that are ruining baseball, it's the owners.

Whatever happened to them? When did they turn from penny-pinching, coin-biting, dollar-hoarding plutocrats and begin to be guys emptying their vaults to banjo-hitting shortstops, .500 pitchers and over-the-hill outfielders? How did they get into the position where, today, they complain of losing $52 million a year?

They just simply stopped behaving like owners. They began to act like fans, media hypes. They began worrying about their public images.

They got very, very careless. They let the reserve clause slip – just because it was unconstitutional. You think the old-timers ever cared about the Constitution? They let things go to arbitration, then to court. Still, there was nothing in law or anywhere else that said owners had to pay a million dollars a season to mediocre pitchers, that they have to get into a price war for the services of a .230-hitting infielder, that they have to settle multimillion, multiyear contracts on guys who couldn't make their clubs in the old days, in fact, to some who can barely make them now.

It's as if a fever came over them. Their eyes glazed over, they got flecks of foam at the corners of their mouths, and they began to turn on their own best interests in their zeal to get better tables in restaurants and their names in society columns.

They're not hard-headed businessmen, they're in large part practicing egomaniacs. They want the pennant for the prestige it will bring them, not the bucks. They want it for the recognition, the White House dinners it will open up for them, the media exposure.

At free agent time, they are like kids locked up in a candy store. They gorge themselves on things that are bad for them.

Now they want the union to save them from themselves, to give them a salary cap so they can start behaving like owners again.

Branch Rickey had a salary cap. He didn't need any union to help him stop throwing his money around. Charles Comiskey's was more than a cap, it was a ski mask.

The Supreme Court ruled, years ago, that baseball wasn't a business, it was a sport. Finally, that's true.

Baseball doesn't need somebody who can break Ty Cobb's record. It needs somebody who can make a run at Comiskey's. It needs owners like it used to have.

Alas, they don't make 'em like that anymore.

Former NTS coach now Spud's rep

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Bill Blakeley, ousted as North Texas State basketball coach a few years back after six seasons and a 234-85 won-lost record, is discovering there's a better life, after all. He is acting as a player agent for NBA-bound college cagers. One of his clients is former Midland College All-America Spud Webb, who later dunked his way into the hearts of a nation as a Saturday matinee idol at North Carolina State.

Spud, of course, is subject to the NBA draft June 17, but you know no one will draft him, unless it's for the publicity value attached to having a "cute" 5-6 guard try out for the team. I guess that's one of the things that keeps some of us loyal to the college game. There's no place in the NBA for a talent like Spud's, which seems a shame.

Maybe, just maybe, Webb will make it. As you'll recall, they said Spud would never make it in the SWC...and he didn't, but some coaches are still trying to explain why ...

Sports Notes...

When major leagues hold their June draft next week, Midlanders will have an interest since Randy Velarde will be in the current talent crop. Velarde finished his career at Lubbock Christian College this spring. LCC is probably glad to see him go. It saves on the printing-publishing bill. The record books had to be rewritten with his departure.

At least eight clubs have expressed an interest in Velarde, ranging from phone contact to actual tryout. At Lee High, Randy was a shortstop-pitcher. At LCC, he made All-America at second base and shortstop and, as a senior, he might have added centerfield to the unique feat, but was forced to move back to the infield as a result of injuries to teammates...

Fair-but-foul-dept.—Can you believe that Baylor, No. 2 in the SWC baseball race, which really should carry more impact than the post-season tournament, didn't get a bid to the NCAA playoffs?

If it's any consolation to Baylor fans, Fritz Connally, the former Midland Cub and Baylor Bear, had two home runs in his first 54 at bats for the Baltimore Orioles...both grand slams...

Remember Donnie Moore, cast adrift when the Atlanta Braves signed Bruce Sutter for a sum that would have reconstructed Georgia a couple of times over after Sherman's March to the Sea? Moore signed with the California Angels and admitted he was glad to escape the big shadow in the Braves bullpen with the signing of his ex-Midland teammate. Moore had a good year out of the bullpen in 1984, but not of the epic proportions of a Sutter.

However, someone figured it up the other day. At his present pace, Moore could have 41 saves out of the California bullpen. He already had nine and is proving a life-saver for the Angels, especially in one-run games. Last time the Angels had a reliever with as many as 14 saves in a season was in 1978...

Of course, Sutter hasn't exactly been a washout for the Braves...

Chicago shortstop Chris Speir applies the tag in time to keep Houston's Bill Doran from stealing second Saturday in Chicago.

Lopes homers Cubs past Astros

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Davey Lopes called it "a game you put in your memories."

The all-around man made two sensational catches in left field and then slammed a tie-breaking two-run homer in the eighth inning Saturday to lead the Chicago Cubs to a 5-4 victory over the Houston Astros.

"I felt good at the plate and I'm seeing the ball real well," said the 38-year-old Lopes. "I was just trying to drive the ball and score Ryno (Ryne Sandberg) from second. I knew any kind of hit would score him with his speed."

Lopes crashed a 3-2 pitch from Houston reliever Mark Ross, 0-1, into the center-field seats. It was his third homer of the season and the seventh of the game, four by the Cubs.

Lopes has been used extensively by the Cubs and has played all three outfield positions this season in addition to third base. Most of his career was as a second baseman with the Los Angeles Dodgers.

"Outfield was my natural position until (Los Angeles Manager Tom) Lasorda told me the Dodgers needed middle infielders and it would benefit me and the team to become an infielder," Lopes said.

Bearing a huge scratch on his left arm from slamming into the vines on Wrigley Field's outfield wall, Lopes took an extra-base hit away from Denny Walling in the third inning and also robbed Kevin Bass in the fifth. Both times he crashed into the vines.

"I thought the vines would be a cushion," said Lopes, "but I was wrong."

The game reminded Lopes of one in which he hit three homers, a double and a single against the Cubs while with the Dodgers.

"That was in 1974," he said. "That one was extra special."

Lopes still has exceptional speed despite his age and is a base-stealing threat.

"I take good care of myself," he said. "I don't smoke and I don't drink. I work out in the off-season to keep my legs in shape. When my legs go, I go."

Sandberg singled with one out in the eighth and stole second before Lopes homered.

CHICAGO RELIEF ace Lee Smith, 2-0, was the winner, working the last two innings. He yielded a run in the ninth on a walk, Enos Cabell's single and Bill Doran's sacrifice fly. Doran went to third on Terry Puhl's double but Lopes made a running catch of Denny Walling's fly ball to end the game.

National League

The victory moved the Cubs into a first-place tie with the New York Mets in the National League East.

It was a battle of home run or nothing through the first seven innings with each team belting three solo shots before a capacity Wrigley Field crowd of 36,278.

Puhl, Bass and Jerry Mumphrey homered for the Astros while Leon Durham, Steve Lake and Ron Cey connected for the Cubs.

Puhl hit his second homer of the season in the third inning and one out later Bass hit his fifth. Bass was playing left field in place of Jose Cruz, who suffered a dislocated toe Friday.

The Cubs tied it on homers by Durham in the fourth inning, his fifth, and Lake's first in the fifth inning.

Mumphrey gave Houston a 3-2 lead when he led off the sixth with his second homer but Cey tied it again when he led off the seventh with his No. 6 homer.

Starters Scott Sanderson for Chicago and Joe Niekro for Houston each went seven innings.

Dodgers 6, Mets 2

NEW YORK — Greg Brock drove in five runs with a pair of homers and Fernando Valenzuela outpitched Dwight Gooden for the first time in three meetings as the Los Angeles Dodgers handed the New York Mets their fourth straight defeat.

Valenzuela, 5-4, who had dropped his last four decisions to the Mets, allowed six hits — two in the first and ninth innings when New York scored its runs — walked three and struck out seven.

Gooden, 6-3, gave up three runs on five hits while striking out nine in seven innings. His career record in day games is 3-7 compared to 20-5 at night.

The Mets took a 1-0 lead in the first inning when Kelvin Chapman singled with one out and scored on Keith Hernandez's double to left-center, a fly ball that was misjudged by left fielder Terry Whitfield.

Brock's first home run, his fifth of the season, came on a 1-1 pitch after Gooden issued his only walk to Pedro Guerrero leading off the fifth. The Dodgers made it 3-1 in the sixth when Steve Sax singled with one out, took second on a balk by Gooden and scored on Ken Landreaux's single.

Brock, who did not hit his first home run of the season until May 12, hammered a towering three-run homer to straightaway center field in the ninth off Doug Sisk after R.J. Reynolds and Landreaux singled off Joe Sambito. It was his fourth homer in the last three games.

The Mets scored in the bottom of the ninth on Gary Carter's single and a triple by Howard Johnson.

Expos 3, Giants 1

MONTREAL — Dan Schatzeder notched his second straight victory since joining Montreal's starting rotation and helped his own cause by driving in the winning run with a second-inning grounder as the Expos downed the San Francsico Giants.

Schatzeder, 2-0, scattered five hits in 7⅓ innings, walked one, struck out four and retired 17 consecutive batters between the second and eighth inning. Jeff Reardon came on to post his 11th save after Jose Uribe singled with one out in the Giants' eighth.

The Giants had given Jim Gott, 2-1, a 1-0 lead in the top of the second when Alex Trevino singled home David Green, who led off with a double.

The Expos scored twice in their half of the inning. Hubie Brooks led off with a single, went to third on Winningham's one-out single and scored the tying run on a single by Sal Butera. Winningham went to third on Butera's hit and scoreed when Schatzeder forced Butera at second.

Tim Wallach's leadoff homer in the fourth, his third of the season, accounted for Montreal's final run. Gott allowed seven hits before being lifted for a pinch hitter in the eighth.

Padres 4, Phillies 1

PHILADELPHIA — Unbeaten Andy Hawkins won his ninth game of the season, pitching six-hit ball in his first complete game of the year, as the San Diego Padres defeated the Philadelphia Phillies for their sixth straight victory.

Hawkins, who leads the major leagues in victories, struck out four, walked three. He has now won more games this season than he did in all of 1984, when he was 8-9.

Hawkins also executed a suicide squeeze bunt that scored Garry Templeton during a three-run second inning.

He lost his shutout in the ninth inning when Ozzie Virgil struck his fifth homer of the year, also ending 25 scoreless innings for San Diego pitchers.

Charles Hudson, 1-4, took the loss, Philadelphia's third straight defeat.

Graig Nettles walked to start the second-inning rally. An out later, he moved to second on a single by Terry Kennedy. Templeton's single scored Nettles, with Kennedy moving to third and Templeton to second on the throw. Tim Flannery's single drove in Kennedy and Templeton scored on Hawkins' suicide squeeze.

Cardinals 6, Reds 4

CINCINNATI — Tom Herr collected three hits, raising his major league-leading average to .379, and Joaquin Andujar scattered nine hits over 8⅓ innings for his eighth victory as the St. Louis Cardinals edged the Cincinnati.

Andujar, 8-1, became the third National League pitcher to record eight victories. He struck out two, giving up four walks, and yielded a two-run homer to Dave Concepcion in the sixth inning.

Ken Dayley got the last out for his fourth save.

Herr had three singles, including a two-run single that capped the Cardinals' three-run second inning.

Jack Clark put the Cardinals ahead to stay with a first inning sacrifice fly, and St. Louis chased starter Jay Tibbs, 3-7, in the second. Terry Pendleton singled, advanced on a ground out and a wild pitch and sc

Death has been on vacation at recent Indy 500s

BILL CENTER
Copley News Service

INDIANAPOLIS — Death has been on vacation, visiting some place other than the Indianapolis Motor Speedway, since 1962. Sooner or later, though, everyone here expects that another driver will die in pursuit of the most prestigious prize in motorsports. In the first 68 years of this race, 54 drivers and crewmen were killed.

"There is no way you are ever going to make a car safe on this track," said Danny Sullivan, one of the favorites to win the 69th Indy 500 Sunday. "There is no way anyone can control all the things that could happen."

Indy cars more closely resemble projectiles than the family sedan. All 33 cars in the race can cover a football field in less than a second.

"We are pushing this thing to the edge," Tom Sneva said of Indy's speed. "There is a barrier out there somewhere."

But where? Though speeds have taken a quantum leap forward, the past decade has been the safest in the history of the track.

No lives have been lost on this famed 2½-mile oval since Gordon Smiley was crushed against the wall between turns three and four during pole day time trials in 1982. The last driver to die of injuries received during the race itself was Swede Savage, in 1973, the same year in which Art Pollard died during a practice accident and a mechanic was run over during the race.

"It will happen again," Bobby Rahal said of a fatal accident. "Accidents are a part of racing...the worst part, but there is nothing you can do to eliminate them."

Officials and engineers have been working to limit the severity of accidents. The safety record of Indy cars has improved dramatically over the past decade. Stringent fuel limits and fuel cells have all but eliminated the horrific fires of the late '60s and early '70s, and driver tubs made of carbon fiber have saved the lives of a half-dozen men.

Now, however, rapidly increasing speeds may be pushing the sport back toward disaster.

Patrick Bedard hasn't raced since his near-fatal accident during last year's Indy 500. Rick Mears has spent the past eight months recuperating from extensive foot injuries suffered in a crash in Canada. Kevin Cogan, Derek Daly, John Paul Jr., Johnny Rutherford and Gordon Johncock also suffered extensive foot and leg injuries last year in accidents. Five drivers Sunday will limp to their cars.

Friday, car designers and engineers held the first of a series of meetings designed to alter rules for the 1986 season. The goal is two-fold — to slow the cars down and to increase driver safety.

"The changes might be major this time," Darrell Soppe, crew chief for Mario Andretti, said. "Last year they devised a plan to slow the cars down but gave the engineers so much advance time that they were able to build even faster cars off the restrictions.

"There is a real move afoot to cut the speeds. I don't know what will happen, but it could be major....

"One idea I've heard is to take away the aerodynamics here. That might be a blessing only on the surface. The cars will be slowed, but they won't stick to the track the way they do now. They'll slide into accidents rather than steer clear."

"To make these cars safer, we would have to make them more dangerous," Dan Gurney said. "If we slow them down, the cars will be able to use more of the track again. The more sideways movement you have on the track, the more chance of an accident."

The first qualifying laps over 200 mph were turned here by Sneva in 1978. Rules were immediately passed to cut the speeds, but by 1981 the front-runners were back over 200. The 208-mph barrier was broken in 1982, and last year Sneva pushed the qualifying record to 210.029 mph.

Along came Pancho Carter and the Buick V-6 engine this May and the qualifying record jumped to 212.583 mph. The entire 33-car field checked in at a 208.138-mph average — up 4⅛ mph from last year's record. But the spread from fastest to slowest car is just 7¾ mph. Last year it was 10 mph.

A growing number of drivers, led by Sneva, are becoming concerned with the speed.

"This has got to stop somewhere," Sneva said. "If you ask me would I rather race at 210 or 180 mph, I'm going to tell you 180."

"Getting a car around the track has become a very finite operation," Mears said. "When you come out of a turn you're aiming the car for entrance to the next turn, even on the long straight. The groove seems awfully narrow."

Indy-car drivers have never been able to draft faster cars the way drivers do in NASCAR. But now they can't even run in the same vicinity of another car because of the turbulence created by streamlining.

"It's much like wind sheer in a plane," said Don Whittington, who has also raced planes. "If you get on the wrong side of someone's turbulence, you'll be thrown into the wall. The result is cars stay as far away as possible from one another."

"You used to come up behind a car, drop low on the straight and pass," Andretti said. "Now you have to set up the guy in front of you. And at these speeds passing is very difficult."

And very dangerous.

"You don't think about the accidents," Cogan said. "But sometimes you have to reflect on them. Last year we had some bad ones. No one got killed and I don't really know why."

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Parnelli Jones won the 1963 Indianapolis 500 despite a hard charge by Jimmy Clark of Scotland in a new Lotus-Ford. Clark's car owner, Colin Chapman, tried unsuccessfully to have Jones flagged off the track for leaking oil from a cracked tank.

Eddie Sachs, one of the other drivers who supported Chapman's complaint, was hugged by Jones the day after the race.

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Jim Rathmann, runner-up in 1952, 1957 and 1959, finally won the Indianapolis 500 in 1960 in a great duel with defending champion Rodger Ward.

The lead changed a record 29 times, the last time after Ward dropped back with three laps to go because of a worn right front tire. Another worn tire cost Eddie Sachs the race the next year.

Sachs apparently had the race won but stopped for a tire change with three laps to go, giving A.J. Foyt the victory by 8.25 seconds.

INDY

Yet, drivers and design engineers generally agree that the speeds here have gone too high, with several cars running unofficial laps over 215 in practice.

With rules changes intended to slow down the cars expected to be announced any day, this is likely to be the last Indy 500 of unbridled speed — at least until the design engineers and engine builders can find new ways to generate it.

But raw speed is only one of the dangers. Another is the turbulence that is a product of the aerodynamic devices — wings, stabilizers and tunnels — that helped produce the speed records.

"I think turbulence is going to be more of a factor (this year) because the field is closer to each other (in speed)," said 1983 Indy winner Tom Sneva. "The horsepower in most of the cars is very similar and the speeds are very similar. The spread from the front to the back (1.6 seconds) is the closest it's ever been."

Among the problems caused by the turbulence is blurred vision — a very real problem when driving in traffic at more than 200 mph.

"That is happening, but it's happened for the past two to three years," Sneva explained. "It's not a whole lot different than it has been. It might be more noticeable this year to some drivers, but it's been like that in the past.

"The speeds are higher and we're depending on aerodynamics a lot more each year for stability. And when you're doing that, obviously, if you disturb the air around the vehicle, it's going to affect the way the car feels to you."

Rutherford, who will be starting from the outside of the 10th row, said, "It's the worst (turbulence) I've ever experienced in race cars. The wind sometimes is so violent, it just wants to rip your helmet right off your head. When you take that physical part and couple it with that speed, you've really got your hands full out there."

"But we've had turbulence here from day one. And it's about the same as always — pretty scary for the new guys and the old guys know how to figure it out and what to do."

Above all, at Indianapolis the start is most worrisome. That is when the potential for disaster is highest, with all the cars bunched together, accelerating past the start-finish line and funneling into what is virtually a single lane through the first of four narrow left-hand turns.

"It's going to be a good, real steady start," said Carter, whose best previous start here was on the outside of the second row. "You want to come up through the gears and keep it steady, not get a whiplash effect.

"It isn't that important to me to lead the first lap. If I can lead, I will. I'll just run my race. It's the 200th lap I want to lead, not the first."

"I'm going to start the race, obviously, with safety in mind," said Brayton, a 26-year-old whose best previous starting position in three Indy races was 26th last May.

Sneva, who has started 11 Indy 500s, was on the pole in 1984. This time, he's starting on the inside of the fifth row.

"Turbulence is certainly going to be a factor (at the start), but turbulence isn't going to bother me as much as somebody making a mistake around me, and trying to stay uninvolved in any situation that could come up," Sneva said. "We're going to have to be a lot more conservative in our start this year.

"I guess I am concerned because the cars are very close and, hopefully, everybody will be using their heads. There's a lot of electricity in the air and a lot of adrenalin flows at the start of any race, and especially at the start of Indianapolis."

Carter and Brayton are two of only three drivers in the field with cars not powered by the turbo-charged Cosworth engines that have dominated Indy-car racing for more than a decade. Both their March races have experimental Buick V6 turbocharged engines, which have been given a 50-100 horsepower advantage by the rules at Indianapolis, which are set by the sanctioning U.S. Auto Club.

The rest of the Indy-car circuit is sanctioned by the rival Championship Auto Racing Teams, which does not give the stock-block power plants the same advantage in manifold pressure.

The only other car in the field with a stock engine is a March-Chevrolet V6, driven by veteran George Snider. That car, on the inside of row 10, is one of three in the field co-owned by A.J. Foyt — Indy's only four-time winner — and Jim Gilmore.

Foyt, 50, will start his record 28th consecutive Indy from the outside of the seventh row, though for the first time in years he is not among the favorites.

The other former winners are three-time champion Al Unser, on the inside of the third row, and defending champion and two-time winner Rick Mears in the fourth row.

The field also includes six Indianapolis rookies — all of them veteran drivers in other series. They include Raul Boesel of Brazil, Arie Luyendyk of Holland, John Paul Jr., Ed Pimm, Jim Crawford of Scotland and Rich Vogler.

The foreign contingent also includes Emerson Fittipaldi of Brazil, a two-time world champion; Geoff Brabham of Australia; Roberto Guerrero of Colombia, who finished second as a rookie last May; Josele Garza of Mexico and Derek Daly of Ireland.

The race will be televised on a delayed basis by ABC Sunday night.

White House tennis tourney nets $450,000 for drug abuse fund

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hollywood stars, professional athletes and Washington political figures swatted balls on the White House tennis court Saturday to raise $450,000 for the Nancy Reagan Drug Abuse Fund.

President Reagan and his wife Nancy sat among the crowd in the second row of bleachers to watch the final match of the elegant afternoon event. It was the first such tournament to be held on the single court on the mansion's south lawn.

The Reagans clapped and laughed as actor John Forsythe and tennis pro Pam Shriver defeated Secretary of State George Shultz and tennis pro Roscoe Tanner in a tie-breaker. When Forsythe blew an easy shot, Shriver pointed across the lawn and quipped, "I think the (Washington) monument got in the way."

At the end of the afternoon's play, Mrs. Reagan presented two $50,000 checks to programs fighting youth drug abuse — Phoenix House of New York City and RAP of Washington, D.C.

"You really can't imagine how good this makes me feel and how appreciative I am to all of you," Mrs. Reagan told the crowd.

After actor Tom Selleck and model Brooke Shields presented tennis rackets to the Reagans, Mrs. Reagan looked at the president and said, "I guess we'll have to start practicing a bit, won't we?"

Besides the money donated to the two anti-drug programs, the remainder raised from corporate sponsors of the event will help set up an endowment for the fund, according to Haida Sale, a spokeswoman for the Community Foundation of Greater Washington, the event's organizer.

A hot sun beat down on the players who darted about the spruced-up court, hidden behind a fence and shrubbery on one side of the White House lawn.

Normally, only high-level Reagan administration officials are allowed to play on the court. Special stands had to be built for the 250 spectators who were invited to sip lemonade and iced tea and munch on cookies during the six exhibition games.

Actress Dina Merrill and Davis Cup star Gene Mayer paired off against Swedish Ambassador Wilhelm Wachtmeister and Los Angeles Rams quarterback Jeff Kemp in the first match, with the Merrill-Mayer team winning.

Redskins quarterback Joe Theismann and celebrity Cathy Lee Crosby, along with local sports broadcaster Glenn Brenner, acted as umpires for the match.

"Don't stray too far away from here, or you might get wrestled to the ground," Brenner joked to the crowd, with a nod to the numerous Secret Service agents posted along the fence.

Scoring was fudged for the celebrities, so that the first team to win four points won a game. Play was polite, but a few players managed occasional killer shots. Kemp earned an ovation when he jumped about the court trying to return a particularly difficult volley.

When a dispute erupted, no one bothered to argue about it — fun was the object of the game.

"Let's get some applause out there," urged 15-year-old Ricky Shroeder, the television actor of "Silver Spoons," trying to get some reaction from a sedate crowd.

Four of five Frustaci septuplets in improved state, doctors say

ORANGE, Calif. (AP) — Four of the five surviving Frustaci septuplets were in improved condition Saturday, and a heart problem caused by their premature births had cleared up in all five, doctors said.

The condition of a boy known as baby B remained unchanged, while the mother, Patricia Frustaci, remained in an intensive care unit and too weak to visit her infants, officials said.

Meanwhile, the Frustaci's obstetrician criticized a fertility clinic's decision to give the mother an ovulation hormone.

The infants were 12 weeks premature when delivered by Caesarean section Tuesday. One was stillborn; another, nicknamed Peanut, died Friday of heart and lung failure. The septuplets consisted of four boys and three girls; three boys and two girls remain.

A channel connecting the infants' pulmonary artery to the aorta failed to close immediately upon birth, as it does with full-term children.

The babies were treated with a drug named indomethacin, which by Saturday had closed the channel, said Dr. Carrie Worcester, director of newborn intensive care at Childrens Hospital of Orange County.

"The prognosis for all these babies is that they're critically stable. I don't expect any of these babies to expire in the next 24 to 48 hours," Ms. Worcester said.

"Each day that goes by I'll probably smile some more," she said.

The surviving babies still suffer from jaundice, a skin-yellowing malady caused by the liver's failure to process old red blood cells, and hyaline membrane disease, a lack of a substance that prevents air sacs in the lungs from collapsing after each breath.

On Saturday, the babies — who have not been named yet — weighed from 1-pound, 10-ounces to 1-pound, 12 ounces. Their birth weights ranged from 1-pound, 1-ounce to 1-pound, 13-ounces. Decreases in their weights were attributed to normal fluid loss.

At a separate news conference at the hospital, the Frustaci's obstetrician, Dr. Martin Feldman, questioned procedures at the Tyler Clinic.

Feldman said doctors there have not made clear to him whether they knew when they prescribed the ovulation-inducing hormone Human Chorionic Gonadotropin that Mrs. Frustaci had produced multiple follicles on her ovaries after taking the fertility drug Perganol. A follicle is the egg and its encasing cells.

"If there is a chance of a presence of a high fetal number, then you're supposed to hold off the HCG," he said, adding that Mrs. Frustaci may not have been monitored closely enough. "I think that if they were aware of the fact that she had that many follicles, then HCG should not have been given."

Feldman also had discussed the issue on Friday with the Orange County Register, which published an article about it Saturday.

Mrs. Lindbergh: I wasn't 'aviation pioneer'

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Anne Morrow Lindbergh was the nation's first licensed woman glider pilot and often flew with her husband, aviation hero Charles A. Lindbergh, helping him with navigation and communications and as copilot.

But Mrs. Lindbergh, now 78, insists that her own part in aviation history is nothing like the pioneering endeavors of such women as Sally Ride, the first American woman in space.

"I think we're not comparable," she said Friday. "I was not a pioneer in aviation. I was part of a team, with my husband, that did pioneering things."

Mrs. Lindbergh and Ms. Ride were in Minneapolis over the weekend for Lindbergh Heritage Week ceremonies commemorating Lindbergh's May 1927 nonstop flight from New York to Paris. He grew up in Little Falls, about 100 miles northwest of Minneapolis.

Other participants included Alan Shepard, first American in space, and Apollo astronauts Russell "Rusty" Schweickart and Donald "Deke" Slayton.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A Nashville law firm is suing singer Roy Orbison for about $157,000 in legal fees growing out of his suit against a music publisher.

The firm of Gracey, Maddin, Cowan & Bird said the fees stem from Orbison's $50 million 1982 lawsuit against music publisher Wesley Rose and 12 affiliated businesses. That suit, still pending, claims Rose defrauded and mismanaged Orbison over a 24-year period.

The reclusive Orbison could not be reached by telephone by reporters Friday or Saturday for comment on the suit against him. His hits during his heyday as a rock 'n' roll singer in the early 1960s include "Pretty Woman," "Only the Lonely," "Crying" and "Blue Bayou."

ROME (AP) — Italian movie director Federico Fellini presented President Sandro Pertini with a golden David di Donatello cinema award Saturday and congratulated him for his seven-year "act" or term which ends in July.

"You have to know how to play political roles don't you?" Pertini, 87, asked Fellini during the special ceremony for the Italian version of the Academy Awards.

"That's true," replied Fellini. "You have my congratulations for your act."

Pertini was honored for his support of the Italian movie industry.

Fellini, interrupting the shooting of "Ginger and Fred" in Rome, leaves for New York this week to receive a special tribute at Lincoln Center for his life's work.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A new book chronicles the rise of the four-piece country music group "Alabama" from a "bar band" to award-winning performers who have sold more than 14 million albums.

"Alabama," published this month by Contemporary Books Inc., of Chicago, was written by veteran country music reporter Edward Morris of Nashville.

The band, from Fort Payne, Ala., has been voted entertainer of the year for the past four years by the Academy of Country Music. Its single hits include "Mountain Music," "Feels So Right," "Old Flame," "The Closer You Get" and most recently "There's No Way."

SEATTLE (AP) — Former U.S. Sen. Warren Magnuson, D-Wash, is expected to receive a special prosthestic device called the "Seattle Foot" to help him resume an active life after the amputation of his right foot and ankle, his wife says.

Magnuson, 80, underwent surgery Thursday at the Veterans Administration Medical Center here because of a circulatory problem related to his diabetes, hospital spokesman Israel Rosen said.

Magnuson's wife Jermaine said he is expected to receive the artificial foot developed by his physician, Ernest Burgess. Burgess recently was honored by President Reagan for helping to develop the device, designed for active athletic amputees, for the Veterans Administration.

Magnuson was first elected to Congress in 1936. He served four terms, interrupted by eight months of Navy service in the South Pacific during World War II. He won his Senate seat in 1944 and was re-elected five times.

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) — Wolfgang Reitherman, an Oscar-winning animator who helped transform the stilted characters of early Disney cartoons into the full-dimensional figures of "Snow White" and "Sleeping Beauty," died Wednesday. He was 75.

One of the hand-picked group Walt Disney called "his nine old men," Reitherman was killed in an automobile accident.

Reddest rose of all

"Oh, my love is like a red, red rose that's newly sprung in June," wrote the poet Robert Burns nearly 200 years ago. There is no record of what rose Burns had in mind when he penned that sonnet. But if he were alive today, there is no doubt he would have been referring to "Olympiad" — which has achieved "the reddest red of any rose."

Since its introduction by Armstrong Nurseries two years ago, Olympiad has proven to be a winner with rosarians and the general public alike. It was named the official rose of the 1984 Summer Olympics and was a 1984 All-American Rose Selection of the American Rose Society, the first red hybrid tea to win the coveted award in 19 years.

And now the prize-winning Olympiad is available for planting in home gardens. Robert Stack, Rock Hudson, Eva Gabor and Fred MacMurray were among the first to add the rose to their garden landscapes.

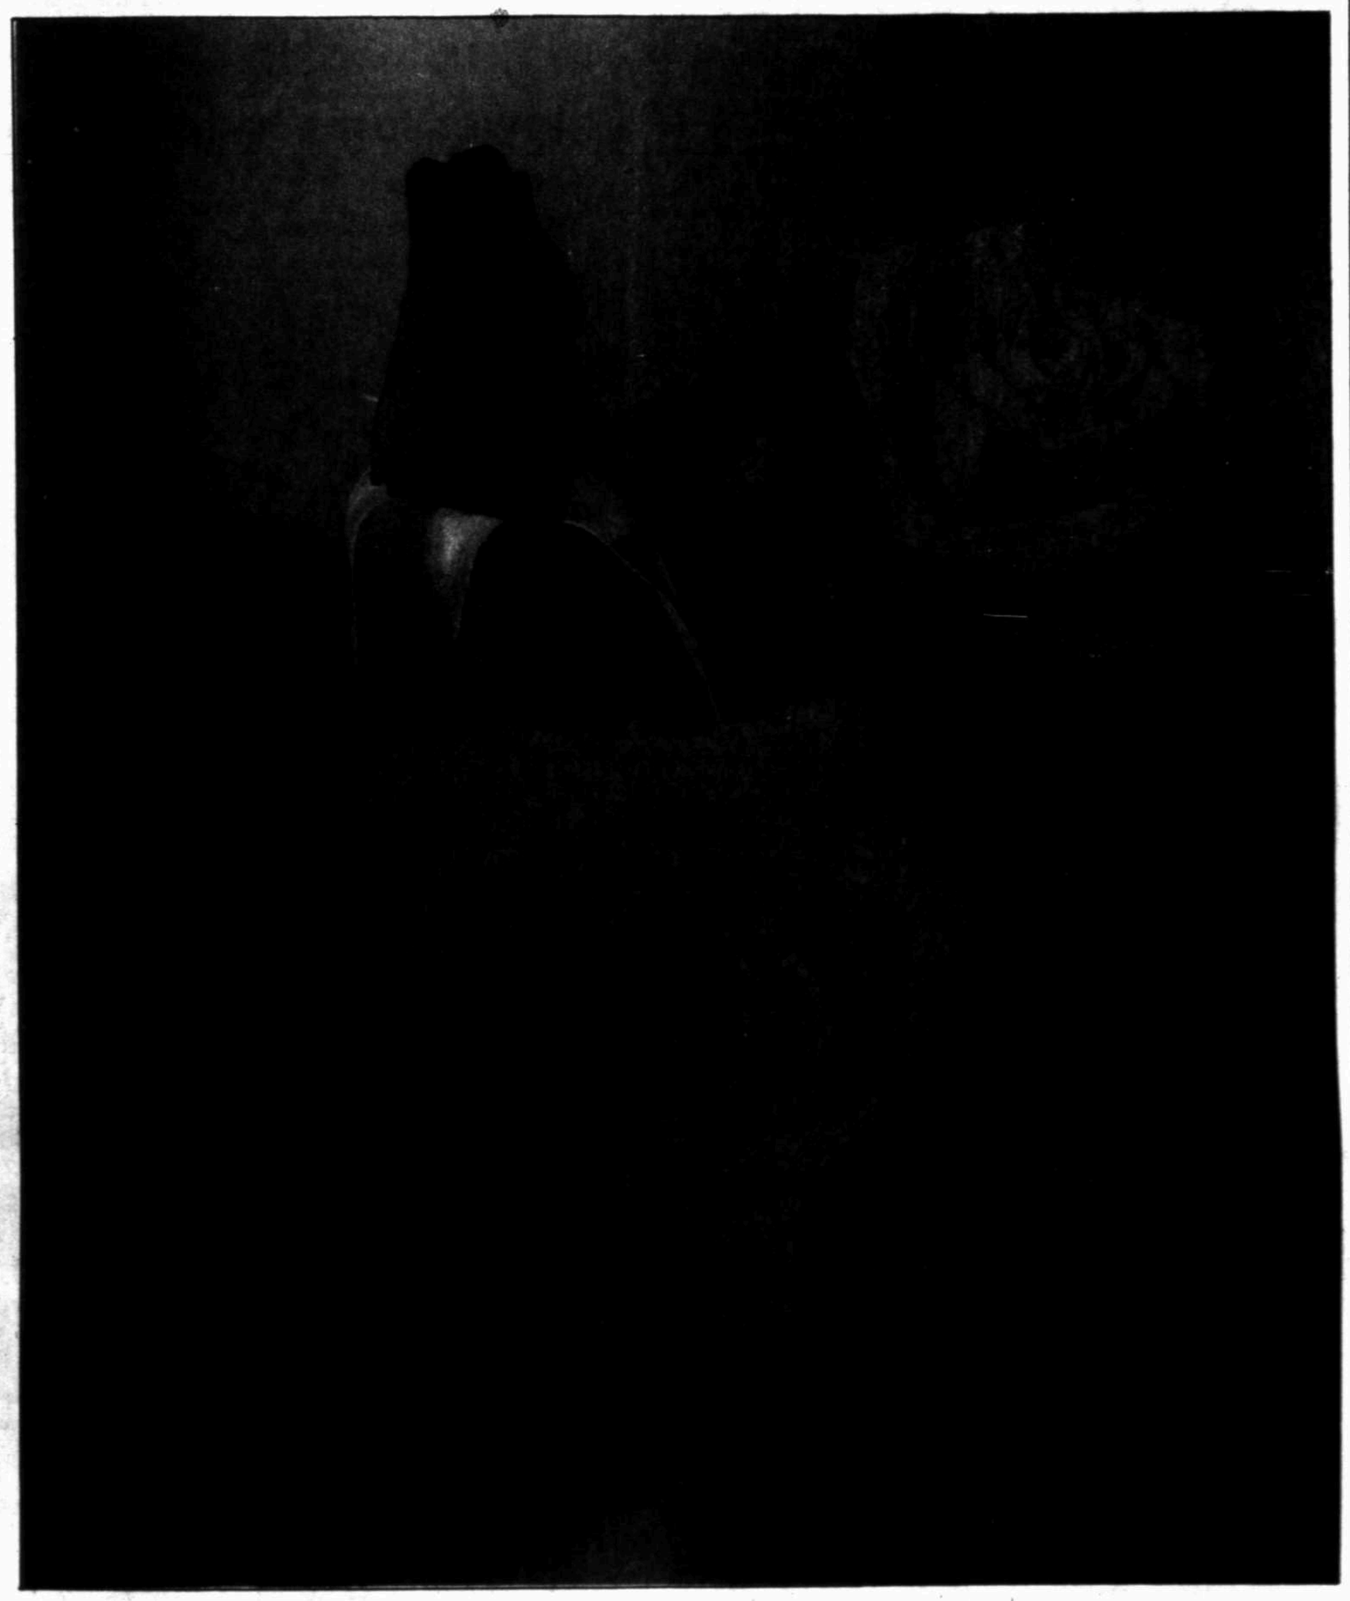

"Unmistakingly brilliant, flawlessly clear, the reddest red of any rose — a standout color that defies description!" Those are the words the ARS judging committee used to characterize Olympiad.

"It starts out red, stays red and finishes red!" the judges added. The last comment points up the fact that red hybrid tea roses generally turn a bluish purple as the blossoms begin to fade.

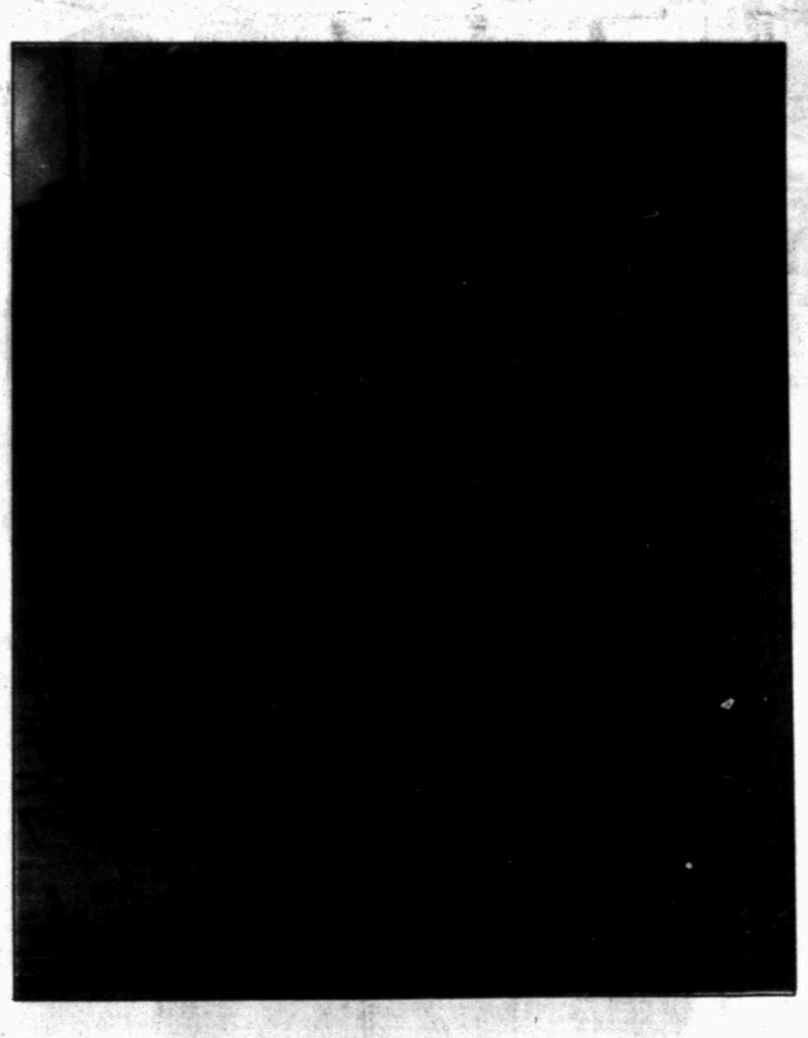

Among Olympiad's other outstanding characteristics are its resistance to disease and its adaptability to climatic changes.

Its tightly packed buds are classically urn-shaped. As each bud ufurls, it reveals 30 to 35 broad, crisply-curled petals. In full bloom, the rose measures four to five inches in diameter.

The plant grows to medium height and is bushy and well-branched. The plant stems are long and strong, and the semi-glossy foliage is thick and dark green.

Armstrong's hybrid tea rose Olymiad has been judged "the reddest red of any rose" by the American Rose Society.

Olympiad rosebushes can be planted wherever there is well-drained soil and full sunlight. Place them in shrub borders, in flower beds or in decorative containers for terrace or patio use.

Armstrong Nurseries offers these tips for successfully planting Olympiad and other bare-root rose bushes:

— Remove the plant from the package and water it down thoroughly. If it is not moist upon removal, place the plant in a tub or pail of water for four to 12 hours. If planting must be delayed, store the packaged plant in a cool, protected location.

— Remove all sprouts by breaking them off. (There are no fine roots yet. When the rootlets form, healthier new shoots will also form.) Cut the canes back to eight inches or less.

— Plant at once, or immediately following the soaking, with the bud union at normal soil level. Fill in soil around roots and water thoroughly. Do not use commercial fertilizer at planting time.

— Cover the plants with additional soil or with a mulch, mounding over the canes as much as possible. This insulates the canes until the rootlets are strong enough to push out new growth. When new sprouts have grown about two inches above the ground (two to three weeks), carefully wash this excess soil or mulch away from the plant.

— Water as often as necessary to keep the mound moist — in hot weather about two or three times a week in sandy soil.

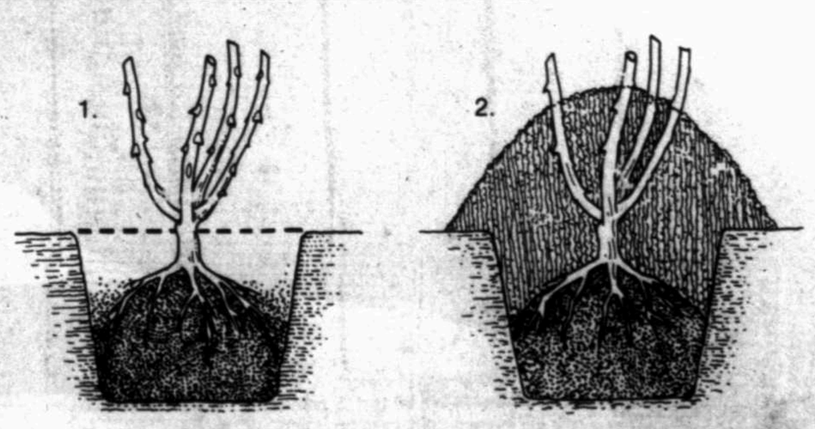

— Fertilize lightly after new shoots are four inches or more in length, and thereafter following each cycle of bloom in accordance with the fertilizer manufacturer's recommendations.

With such care the Olympiadt should have healthy new growth in about three weeks and be in bloom in eight to 10 weeks. It will rapidly attain its mature height and habit over the season.

Like Robert Burns, the red, red Olympiad rose may inspire the poet in you.

PLANTING INSTRUCTIONS

1. Cut canes to 8 inches or less. Plant roots deep enough so that the bud union is at soil level.
2. Cover the plant with enough additional soil or mulch to form a mound over the canes.

3. When new sprouts have grown 2 inches above the ground, gently wash away the mounded soil.
4. Fertilize when new shoots reach 4 inches. Continue fertilizing after each blooming cycle.

Pre-nuptial events began with a tea given by the groom's mother, along with his grandmothers, Lois (Mrs. Robert Odell) Pomrey of Monahans and Mrs. Viola Pearce of Odessa, to introduce Kim to friends and relatives. Beautiful dolls were used thorughout the Pearce home as decorations, along with baksets of orchids and baby's breath, filled with fruit, sandwiches, chocolate cream cheese and cookies.

A bridal luncheon was held at noon that day in the Garden Room of Midland Country Club, with Mrs. Liz Robinson as the hostess.

The Hawaii base will serve as a launching pad into Asia, where they will spend several months in an outreach program.

Unusual plants can entertain, educate children

Hearst News Service

A few packs of seed may be the best entertainment a parent could provide to keep youngsters happy and occupied through the long summer break from school.

The secret is not in "ordinary" seed like tomato or petunia, but in seeds of plants that are exciting to a child. Excitement is found in anything that grows fast and different. Here is a sampling of flowers and vegetables that fit this description:

The Sensitive plant is, well, ticklish. It grows about 12 inches tall. The lacy leaves are arranged on a heavy stem. It looks tough, but isn't. Touch it just once and the leaves instantly fold up and the leaf stems drops, like it was hinged to the main stem. In 30 minutes or so, it is back up, ready to drop again with the slightest brush.

Seeds should be started indoors anytime. It likes a sunny window or can be put outside in the garden when danger of frost is past. The seeds take about three weeks to sprout. Sow them on top of the soil and keep the soil moist. After sprouting, the plant grows quickly and is ticklish from the first set of leaves on.

Walking stick cabbage lets kids grow their own canes to play games with this summer. Start the seeds indoors since the plant needs an early start. By fall, it will be five to seven feet high with a woody leafless stem topped with cabbage leaves. It is not a pretty plant, but is fun for children because of the way it grows.

The stem can be stripped of its top spread of leaves and harvested this fall or left to grow in the garden next year. It is strong and light when dry. For hundreds of years it has been used in the Channel Islands to make walking sticks.

Gourds are fun because of the variety of shapes and colors produced by even a few plants. Look for seeds called "small fancy." Just one package produces small gourds in shapes resembling apples, bottles, eggs and pears. They're colorful, with lots of stripes and double colors on one fruit. "Pepo" is an excellent variety.

Easter egg radishes are great for kids because the seeds are big, sprout quickly and are ready for picking in 25 days. This variety produces edible radishes about one-inch across. "Easter egg" is a good name since one package grows red, purple, lavender, pink, rose, scarlet and white radishes.

Sunflowers can't be beat because they grow so quickly and tall. They are educational in that the seeds can be gathered for roasting or left raw for the birds. Kids enjoy watching the huge flowers track the sun as it moves across the sky. Pass up the dwarf varieties in favor of the giant growers. These include "Giganteus" and "Mammoth." There is no need to start seed indoors.

Morning glories are entertaining because they snake up trellises, utility poles and trees and have unusually deep, rich-colored blooms that come out and die in one day. Kids will enjoy watching the change in the bloom. Varieties that are excellent because of their flower color and vigor are "Pearly Gates" and "Scarlett O'Hara."

Popcorn sprouts quickly, grows easily and packs a lot of fun in harvesting and popping at the end of the season. Look for varieties that don't grow tall or need a long growing season. An excellent choice is Burpee's "Peppy Hybrid."

Many other plants are good for kids. The secret is in choosing something that is unusual and will be fun to watch grow.

Buying seeds rather than bedding plants gives parents the most choice in varieties and kids the most fun and satisfaction in watching the seed sprout, grow and mature. Many varieties now sold are set on tape that dissolves once in the garden. This is a good way to buy seeds, especially for younger children or if the seeds are especially small.

'Ground rules' can help keep lawn healthy

Hearst News Service

If your lawn could speak, about now it would be asking you, "What do you want from me this season? Am I to be lush and thick? Green now and brown in July? Or something in between?"

It's time to answer your lawn and begin — or delay — this season's feeding program that is the key to its looks and health.

Bear in mind that how you feed and water your lawn not only affects its looks but the number of hours to be spent behind a lawn mower. It is entirely possible to "program" your lawn to take care of itself for all but a few busy mowing weeks now and in September. Rather than referring to the following plans as good, better and best, let's call them programs desinged for low, medium and high maintenance. A few ground rules are in order.

Turf grasses need nitrogen more than phosphorus and potassium, the other elements in a bag of lawn food. Nitrogen is the first number in the formula. But too much nitrogen makes the top grow too fast at the expense of the roots. That's hard on the plants and your mowing patience. Nitrogen influences how the grass handles disease, hot, dry summers and foot traffic. The secret is the right amount of nitrogen at the right time.

On to the programs, as they were designed by Shawn McBurney, a turfgrass extension specialist at Michigan State Univeristy.

Low maintenance means feeding just once a year, about Sept. 1, with a formula such as 27-3-3, 18-5-9 or something similar. By then, the cool season grasses that are grown (fescues, blues) have recovered from the stress of summer's heat, meager moisture and are ready to grow again.

Low maintenance is fine for lawns 10 years and older. It assumes there will be no watering, other than rainfall. A lawn on a low schedule will likely go dormant about July 1. It will be greenish-brown and will need little mowing. Because the grass tops are not growing, it will be easy for weeds to grow big and strong. There is nothing wrong with a low maintenance schedule as long as you are prepared to deal with weeds and look at a lawn that is brown more months than it is green.

Medium maintenance is good for yards less than 10 years old because of the improved varieties of grasses being planted now. McBurney said new varieties were developed to grow a nice lawn without a lot of fussing but with attention to watering and feeding at specific times.

Medium calls for two to three feedings. The first should be now, the second about Sept. 1 and the third, a dormant feeding in late fall. The dormant feeding is especially helpful because it helps the roots grow into December and stores food for a quicker green-up next spring. Use the same fertilizer formula called for in the Low schedule.

A Medium schedule suggests there will be some watering, other than rainfall. A lawn maintained this way probably will not go dormant during the dog days of summer and will easily stand up to children playing or an occasional volleyball game. Grass and weeds will be on about an even footing. Mowing will be more frequent than on the low schedule.

High maintenance calls for four to five feedings and assumes the lawn will never go dry from lack of moisture. This means someone needs to be watching the lawn on a daily basis and water as needed, which may be as frequently as daily. A high schedule is not appropriate unless you or someone else will be home during the hot months of July and August to be certain the lawn never goes thirsty.

Using the same fertilizer formula for low and medium schedules, apply now and on June 1, and Sept. 15. Apply half-doses July 15 and Aug. 15. A Nov. 1 dormant application tops it off, but is not critical.

The high schedule demands frequent mowing and careful attention to watering.

HOW A STUDENT WHO COULDN'T LEARN TAUGHT EVERYONE AN IMPORTANT LESSON.

Matthew Francisco has a learning disability. And no matter what his parents and teachers did, his problem only worsened.

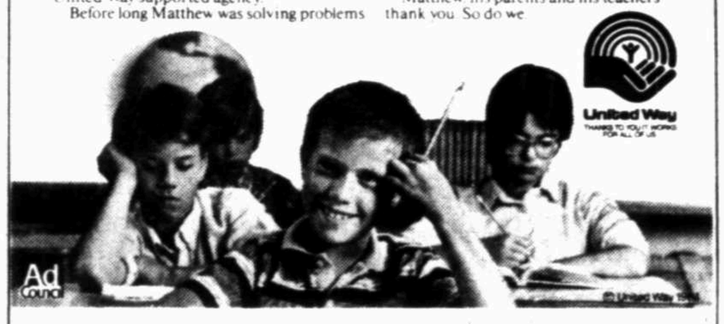

Finally Matthew's mother got in touch with the Minnesota Association for Children and Adults with Learning Disabilities, a United Way supported agency.

Before long Matthew was solving problems in school instead of just being one.

As the Franciscos can attest, United Way does a lot in your community.

And what makes it all work are generous contributions from people like yourself.

Matthew, his parents and his teachers thank you. So do we.

Americans use tons of paper

GILMAN, Vt. (AP) — Americans use almost 70 million tons of paper products annually, or almost 640 pounds per person, according to Georgia-Pacific Corp., a paper products maker.

Each ounce of paper — about six sheets of typing paper — takes two ounces of wood to make. Today, roughly 20 percent of the raw material used to manufacture paper comes from recycled waste paper.

Wedding settings sought

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The days of barefoot-in-the-park weddings may be over, but many couples still want an alternative to the traditional walk-down-the-aisle ceremonies that have taken place for generations in churches, synagogues and hotel ballrooms. They want a setting that is unusual, one that is memorable for its beauty, history, natural scenery or even sheer novelty. For couples who are looking for such a place, there are numerous choices in Philadelphia, Boston, Washington and New York City.

A popular location for weddings in Philadelphia is the Wharton Sinkler Conference Center of the University of Pennsylvania. Inspired by a 16th-century English Tudor manor, the Sutton Place estate near Guildford, the Sinkler center is made of woodwork, windows, stone, tile and paneling assembled from historic buildings in England and brought to the United States in the 1920s.

The center, in the Chestnut Hill area, can accommodate 80 people for a seated luncheon or dinner and 150 for a buffet. It can be rented by people with ties to the university, but anyone who is not a student, alumnus or faculty member can be sponsored by an alumnus. The rental for a party on a weekend day is $1,200, plus the cost of the university's caterer.

"IT IS A magnificent place," said Gino Segre, a University of Pennsylvania physics professor who was married to Bettina Hoerlin, deputy health commissioner of Philadelphia, at the Sinkler center on April 28. "The terrace and the garden with low boxwood hedges were ideal for an outdoor wedding. We had a couple of violinists and a piano playing. It was very romantic."

Also popular in Philadelphia — and completely different — is the Please Touch Museum, a playful Center City museum for children age 7 and younger. Weddings take place in the atrium on a circular ramp that connects the first and second floors. A multicolored dragon is suspended from the ceiling. The museum, which can hold up to 250 guests for a buffet dinner or luncheon, is filled with exhibitions of costumes, puppets, games and toys, all designed to be touched.

"I wanted to get married in a unique place, something I would remember and people would remember," said Lynn Marks, who was married at the museum this month to A. Clifford Pearlman. They are both lawyers. "We have been together over seven years," Miss Marks added, "and we didn't want a setting of an aisle and altar."

Renting the museum for six hours costs $500.

IN THE Boston area, a favorite wedding site is the Great House at Castle Hill, a 1927 baronial mansion that is listed in the National Register of Historic Places. Situated 35 miles north of Boston, the 59-room mansion is surrounded by hundreds of acres of landscaped gardens and overlooks Ipswich Bay and Crane's Beach. Weddings are held both inside the mansion, which is lavishly decorated with marble fireplaces and crystal chandeliers, and outdoors on the terrace and in the gardens.

"I used to go to Crane's Beach when I was in high school, and I saw this magnificent mansion high on a hill, overlooking the beach," said Mitchell Asch, a municipal bond trader who was married to Patricia Vogt, a corporate bond broker, at Castle Hill a year ago. "We had the ceremony outside, overlooking the ocean, and dinner inside the castle," said Asch. "It is a great place."

Castle Hill can accommodate up to 300 for a wedding. The cost of renting the Great House for six hours is $2,000. A wedding with 100 guests ranges from $8,000 to $10,000, including catering, orchestra, liquor, flowers and a photographer.

Another popular place in the Boston area is the carriage house on the grounds of the Codman House in Lincoln, Mass. This recently restored turn-of-the-century building is owned by the Society for the Preservation of New England Antiquities. Available May through October, it is surrounded by 16 acres of gardens, including a sunken garden that can be used for ceremonies. The space holds 65 people for a seated dinner or luncheon. The rental fee is $75 an hour.

In New York, the restaurateur Patrick O'Neal has renovated a penthouse loft near the garment district that is being used for weddings. The loft, at 236 West 26th Street, is bright and sunny, with windows facing north, south and west. It is painted pale yellow and decorated with palm trees and love seats. It also has a sophisticated sound system and an oak dance floor.

"HAVING A glimpse of the Empire State Building out of one of the windows said New York to us," said Sid Darion, whose daughter, Ellen, will be married to John Repp in the loft on Aug. 11.

Nursing changed by technology

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Will machines start replacing nurses in the nation's hospitals?

No, says Loretta C. Ford, dean of the University of Rochester School of Nursing. Instead, new technologies and new specialties offer nurses new opportunities.

For example, the new liptotripter smashes kidney stones using ultrasound, and that means no nurses will be needed to assist with surgery. But, the dean says, nurses do take the lead in insuring the patient's comfort and safety during the procedure, in communicating with the patient, his family, and other health professionals, and in follow-up procedures and patient education.

DEAR ABBY

Relatives push way into house

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: A recent letter about freeloading relatives revived a few memories. The wife and I got fed up with moving our kids out of their bedrooms to accommodate relatives, so we sent them all a form letter saying that if they intended to visit our city, to give us a little notice and we'd be glad to make reservations for them at a nearby motel.

All family members responded kindly, except my wife's sister. For three months there was total silence, then one day, Sis and "Joe" drove into our driveway and informed us that they were spending 10 days with us!

We asked if they had received our letter, and were told they had. Sis said, "We were so angry at first we couldn't see straight, but Joe got this vacation time he had to use up before the end of the year, and since we had no money for a regular vacation, we talked it over and decided to forgive your nasty letter and come for our vacation anyway."

I told them that our letter stood, and they'd have to go to a motel. Then my wife caved in and begged me to let them stay, so to make a long story short, they stayed and ate our food and drank our wine for 10 days!

What do you do with brass-headed boobs like that, and soft-as-mush wives like mine? Sign me ... MAD IN MICHIGAN

DEAR MAD: Whom are you calling "brass-headed boobs"? Surely not the couple who ignored your letter and moved in on you for 10 days! And don't call your wife "soft-as-mush" when you proved to be a tower of Jello. You caved in, your wife didn't. If you want sympathy, you'll find it in the dictionary not too far from "sucker."

DEAR ABBY: I am that most obnoxious of all creatures — a mother-in-law. I just read the letter from "Anonymous Wife," who said she was the one who handed her husband the pen to sign the Mother's Day cards, Father's Day cards, etc.

Well, I'm the one who hands your father-in-law the pen to sign those generous checks for all those special occasions such as birthdays, anniversaries and Christmas. I'm also the one who provided the funds and encouragement so your husband could have all those fancy letters behind his name, like M.S., Ph.D. and M.D.

If you object to anything, why don't you do what I did when I still had my mother-in-law? I figured that God gave me two ears — one for things to go into, and the other for things to go out of. I also had enough sense to realize that if it had not been for that good woman, I would not have had the kind, considerate man who was my husband.

Nobody's perfect, but one thing I know — there is nobody as imperfect as your mother-in-law. Just wait until you are one! — SOMEBODY'S MOTHER-IN-LAW

Prenatal test being tried

Hearst News Service

A new prenatal test that is as accurate as amniocentesis but which provides diagnosis as early as the eighth week of pregnancy is being tested in clinical trials at a dozen U.S. hospitals.

Chorionic villus sampling (CVS) permits more rapid diagnosis of many chromosonal and genetic defects and may eventually replace amniocentesis, which cannot be performed until the 16th or 17th week of pregnancy. This is good news for older women who worry about having a child with Down's Syndrome or spina bifida, as well as those whose offspring are at risk for Tay Sachs, Gaucher's, sickle-cell anemia and thalassemia.

CVS costs about the same to perform as amniocentesis — about $500. However, results to date show it is riskier, with a 5 to 10 percent chance of abortion (including the normal miscarriage rate in the 8th week of pregnancy, estimated at 3 percent to 5 percent). The risk of miscarriage with amniocentesis is about one in 400 or 500 cases. Bleeding, infection, leaking of amniotic fluid and perforated uteruses have also occurred with CVS.

"It's not for everyone," Dr. John Larsen, Jr., of George Washington University, told participants at the annual meeting of the College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists. "Will it become as safe as amniocentesis? I doubt as safe, but it may become increasingly safe."

The procedure is harder on the patient than amniocentesis, he said. In amniocentesis, to study fetal cells a needle is inserted through the abdomen into the amniotic sac and a sample of fluid is retrieved. CVS uses a plastic catheter fed through the cervix to the placenta that removes about a gram of placental tissue.

"We slide up the cervix like a knitting needle or coat hanger — what we heard about when studying (illegal) abortions," Larsen said. "It takes some vigor to suck away a sample. The deliberate poking and proding is very, very strong."

It's too soon to tell if removal of a little bit of placenta could result in lower birth weights, according to Larsen.

Workers invest in plans other than Social Security

WASHINGTON (AP) — Half of all full-time workers in commerce and industry in the United States and three-fourths of all government civilian personnel are now enrolled in retirement plans other than Social Security.

More than 50 million Americans are estimated to be enrolled in pension or profit-sharing plans that provide retirement income, according to the American Council of Life Insurance. It adds that some 168 million Americans had earnings credits for Social Security at the start of 1984, of which more than 151 million already qualify for payments when they retire.

AT WORK

Questions posed about career changes

By ADELE SCHEELE, PH.D.

Q. I am at a turning point in my career and would appreciate your assistance. I am the manager of a secretarial staff of 100 in a major law firm (current salary, $37,000). It has been challenging but I am too specialized and at a dead end. I think I should either remain in law, utilizing my human resource background or else transfer my skills to another environment or position. What is solid and logical? I am enclosing a resume to clarify my background. I read your articles and am very impressed with your advice. I hope you will be able to answer this in your column; I know of several individuals who are in the same situation.

A. Yours is an interesting dilemma to me because the answer lies inside your own heart. Here you are, an accomplished office manager, searching for a true direction. Answer the following questions and rate your responses on a 1 to 5 scale:

Do you love the law? Do you love working for lawyers? Do you get validation from your work in addition to your salary? Do you love supervising and managing others? Do you know and admire other managers in other law firms? In human resource departments? Do you know if working in HRD is more or less one-dimensional than in a law office? If this were your last year on earth, what kind of work would you choose? Whose work are you jealous of, if you can admit to such a sin?

The honest recording of answers to these questions reveals where your preferences are. Then start looking for leads to make it happen. Your letter and resume reflect that you have the talent to make such a move in another law firm, or in insurance, health care, or any other large organization. The next step is going out to sell yourself for such a position and being prepared for some rejection and some fascinating experiences — all necessary in the process of landing something that is better for you to be doing.

From your fine resume, I see that you are vitally connected to the personnel management association. Have you asked key people there for suggestions? I'd bet that they would come through with flying colors if you only said you were looking and needed their advice. I'd like to hear what you choose and wouldn't be at all surprised if you decided to leave law office management.

Q. I read your column about the security business and just had to write to you and ask where all these good-paying jobs are. I've been a security guard for two and a half years and make less than a thousand a month. I don't want to sound like I am blowing my own horn, but I am good at my job. I have yet to have a bad report from any post that I have served. I do want to change jobs now and make more money. I am enclosing my resume and hope you can give me some ideas. I am a 42-year-old woman, which might make two things to hold against me.

A. To answer your questions in order:

(1) write to Security Letter, a private monthly letter, for information on salaries and companies paying them — 160 E. 96th St., NY 10128. For information about the security field in general, write to the American Society for Industrial Security, 1655 N. Ft. Myer Drive, Suite 1200, Arlington, VA 22209.

(2) Far from being bad, learn to take pleasure in "tooting your own horn" and talk to your boss about the industry, his place in it, his networks, his future, and you'll learn a lot about yours. Also join the local chapter of ASIS and get active. That's one of the best ways to determine salary range and find job leads.

(3) Your age and sex are not disadvantages unless you think they are.

Birth control information urged

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two leading feminists marked the 25th anniversary of the birth control pill by telling doctors that patients need better information about such drugs and researchers need to look into male contraception.

The pill was "the technological underpinning of the modern feminist movement," author Betty Friedan told physicians attending the annual convention of the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists.

But she added, "I'm not sure (the researchers) were right in not giving men any role at all in birth control. Was it really right to say, 'You don't have to worry anymore?'"

"Men have a responsibility for contraception as well," activist-writer Gloria Steinem told the overflow crowd at the Washington Convention Center on Tuesday. "This has been more realized by individual sensitive men than it has by medical research funds."

Depression costs $16 billion yearly

DALLAS (AP) — Serious depression costs American society $16 billion and more than 20,000 lives a year, but some of the suffering may be reduced if vulnerable people get help before the disorder sets in, researchers say.

Divorced and separated people, the recently bereaved and children of the mentally ill are among "high risk" groups in which intervention might head off or weaken later depression, the researchers said at the annual meeting of the American Psychiatric Association in Dallas.

Currently "a person must be suffering from depression before the mental health field will deign to intervene," said Ricardo Munoz, associate psychology professor at the University of California at San Francisco.

Prevention efforts would be aimed not at the normal spells of "feeling blue" that everyone experiences, but at a much more serious condition of depression. It involves loss of pleasure and interest in life, and usually includes additional symptoms such as loss of appetite, insomnia, agitation, fatigue, guilt and suicidal thoughts.

Perhaps 3 million to 4 million adults suffer from such depression at any one time, said Dr. Alan Stoudemire, assistant professor of psychiatry at the Emory University School of Medicine in Atlanta. That represents 2 percent to 3 percent of the adult population, he said.

Depression probably accounts for more than 20,000 suicides a year, he said. "You're looking at an illness that probably kills as many people as drunk drivers do," he said.

The annual cost to society includes $2.1 billion for care of the victims, plus about $14.2 billion in lost productivity, said Richard Frank of the Johns Hopkins School of Public Health and Hygiene in Baltimore. The smaller figure is about 11 percent of total costs of care for mental illness, he said.

Depression responds to drug treatment and to non-drug psychotherapy, Stoudemire said, but only 15 percent to 25 percent of its victims are being treated for it. Most victims go to a family physician with complaints like sleep disturbances or just feeling bad, he said, and doctors who don't recognize the underlying problem end up simply treating the symptoms.

So far there's no proof that depression can be prevented, but "the whole field is just coming into its own," said Dr. Morton Silverman, chief of the Center for Prevention Research at the National Institute of Mental Health in Rockville, Md.

"We're not going to prevent all depression," because the disorder is caused by many things, he said. "We've just got to target our interventions" toward the most promising areas, he said.

A first step is to find just who is at high risk for the condition, he said. Studies have shown unusually high rates in the chronically physically ill, immigrants, people newly diagnosed with high blood pressure and close relatives of people with depression, schizophrenia and alcoholism, he said.

People who lost parents at an early age, those under extreme stress and those who have lost a job or spouse are also at higher risk, according to a paper co-authored by Stoudemire.

One intervention approach is being tested by Munoz. Since behavioral techniques have been shown effective in outpatient treatment of depression, he said, they may work in prevention.

Munoz is testing the usefulness of teaching medical outpatients, who are at higher risk for depression, the symptoms of the disorder and techniques to modify their thoughts and actions to gain control over their mood.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Pasteurized milk loses few vitamins

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have heard that when milk is pasteurized it loses a good deal of its value. Would you please let me know what this is? — Mrs. S.C., Flint, Mich.

Dear Mrs. C.: Milk undergoes only minor changes when it is pasteurized. There is some decrease in the thiamine content and in vitamin B12 and vitamin C, but these changes are insignificant and do not affect the value of milk.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My mother is 78 years of age and has a mild high blood pressure. She has been told to cut down on her use of salt and has also been given a prescription for a water pill. Isn't it ever possible that a person may be getting too little salt? — Ms. B.C., Chicago.

Dear Ms. C.: Salt depletion in elderly patients taking diuretics is rare, but it can occur.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Since there is no proof that what you call a prudent diet will prevent a person from getting cancer, wouldn't it make more sense for people to enjoy what they eat? — Mr. E.K., Silver Spring, Md.

Dear Mr. K.: There are two implications in your question that are not completely valid. First, a prudent diet may not only help reduce the risk of some cancers, it may also have a beneficial effect on other diseases, such as heart disease and diabetes.

Secondly, there is no reason why a prudent diet cannot be enjoyable. Many people who appreciate food and enjoy eating do without gravies and fried foods, and fruit can be as enjoyable a dessert as cakes and pastries.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I know that things keep changing, and I don't expect everything to be explained in simple terms of black and white. But what is the latest thinking about whether food can cause migraine headaches? Is diet really an important factor? — Lance, Tempe, Ariz.

Dear Lance: The latest thinking about an association between diet and migraine appears to be that some foods are implicated in the development of migraine in some people at some times. In other words, while diet may be a factor, it is not of overriding importance. This, at least, is the consensus of specialists in the treatment of headache who responded to a survey.

Where food or drink is a factor, it seems most likely to include chocolate, alcohol, cheese and monosodium glutamate. Citrus fruits, meats, diary products and coffee have also been implicated.

Almost three-fourths of those who participated in the survey estimated that dietary migraine occurs in from one to 20 percent of patients; two percent of the responders expressed the feeling that it occurs in from 60 to 80 percent of patients.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Several children at the school that my youngster attends came down with an outbreak of head lice. The school doctor prescribed some medicine, which I used, and it did the job. But now my sister-in-law is telling me that I should not have used it because it could be dangerous. Does she know what she's talking about? — Lil, N.Y.C.

Dear Lil: The treatment of choice for children with head lice is a drug called lindane, and I assume that this is what the physician prescribed. Like all drugs, lindane does have the potential for side effects. However, side effects are unlikely if the directions are followed.

Dr. James E. Rasmussen, of the University of Michigan Medicine School in Ann Arbor, points out that there has never been a report of any ill effects in a youngster after a single application of the medication. Problems arise when parents do not follow instructions for its use, and treat their children several times within the space of a few days.

While, as I say, lindane is the treatment of choice, there are alternatives to its use for parents who may be concerned about its possible side effects.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I just finished reading a book in which part of the story had to do with death by voodoo. I have heard before that this kind of thing can happen, and I would like to know if there is any medicine or scientific explanation of why it does. — Mrs. W.S., Elkins, Va.

Dear Mrs. S.: Dr. Henry Murphree, of the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey in Newark, explains that a person who feels trapped and helpless is at risk of dying. Voodoo witch doctors use this knowledge to kill their victims through the use of terror. If the victim is convinced that he is doomed to die, believes that he is in the power of the witch doctor, and is sufficiently terrorized by what he perceives is a hopeless situation, he may in fact die.

Dear Dr. Solomon: If a young child has crossed eyes, is it necessary to take him to a doctor or will it be corrected by itself? — Mrs. W.U., Los Angeles.

Dear Mrs. U.: Strabismus (crossed eyes) does not correct itself. I suggest that the child be examined by an ophthalmologist who can advise you on the best course of action.

For Greg, Minneapolis, Minn.: Chest pain in children usually does not signify the presence of a cardiac abnormality unless it occurs while the child is exercising and has the characteristics of angina.

Neil Solomon, M.D., is a columnist for Los Angeles Times Syndicate. If you have a medical question, write Dr. Solomon at 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon will not give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.

AT WIT'S END

Tina Turner's hair not 'fresh'

By ERMA BOMBECK

All of my life I've been a social wimp.

I laugh at jokes that aren't funny. I rave about yellow food. I compromise my own views.

If I had seen the emperor naked, I would have said, "Love that color on you. You're a Spring, aren't you?"

I'm a wimp because basically I am insecure and need to be loved.

Recently, I read where Christopher Welles, a prominent hair stylist, named Tina Turner as having the best hair style in America today. He described it as "innovative and fresh."

Croissants are fresh. Fat cheerleaders are innovative.

Tina's hair is what happens to a 45-year-old woman who has just been told by her obstetrician she is about to become a mother.

It's what happens when you clean the toaster without unplugging it.

It's what happens to Shirley MacLaine's hair in "Terms of Endearment" after a ride in a convertible with Jack Nicholson.

It's what happens when you crawl out of bed in the morning and want to die.

There's a lot of things to admire about Tina Turner. Her legs, for example. They're going to go on dancing for a good 20 years after she's gone. She sings a good song, seems like a nice lady and has endured. But somehow I don't see the women of America worshipping at the shrine of space shuttle hair.

What is really amazing to me is the double standard our kids use. Recently my son came for a visit. Something had happened to my hair. I had slept funny on it and had already used enough foam on it to land a crippled 747.

"What's wrong with your hair?" he asked.

"What's it doing?"

"It's sticking up all over your head. Jeez, Mom, you ought to do something with it. It looks strange."

"I look strange," I said. "You talk to me about my hair when you can watch Cyndi Lauper without adjusting the color on the TV set?

"You could watch the Grammys and not try to crawl into the set with a brush and comb? And as for Tina Turner's hair..."

"What's wrong with Tina Turner's hair?" he said defensively.

"It looks like she's just been on a trip with Toto and Dorothy."

"I always thought you were too insecure and had to be loved to say things like that."

I shrugged, "So maybe she has a cowlick. I'll give her that."

Exercise may cause infertility, study says

BOSTON (AP) — Exercise may be responsible for the inability of some women to become pregnant, says a study published which points out that hormonal irregularities are common among women runners.

This may make them temporarily infertile even though they appear to be having normal menstrual cycles, says the study in the New England Journal of Medicine.

"A lot of women who think they're normal when they are exercising may not be," said Dr. Gary S. Skrinar, one of the researchers.

Other studies have found links between exercise and temporary infertility by looking for outward signs of menstrual difficulty, such as mid-cycle bleeding or delayed periods.

The new research also checked for hormonal irregularities that can disrupt fertility, and it found that these are even more common among women runners.

Flu can be fatal

NEW YORK (AP) — Some 20,000 to 50,000 people die from flu and related pneumonia each year in this country, according to the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta.

This puts the flu fifth on the list of killer diseases. It is the only infectious disease in the top 10, reports Feeling Great Magazine.

The ones at greatest risk from the flu are the very young, the very old, the pregnant, heavy smokers, and the chronically ill.

STE. GENEVIEVE

The steeple of Ste. Genevieve Catholic Church can be viewed from miles away and seems to watch over the tombstones in Memorial Cemetery. The church was the center of life for the early settlers.

The dollar is up, overseas flights are packed, hotels are full. It's a perfect time to take a European vacation, all the travel agents say, except there's no room in the inn.

This could be the summer to discover what's in the back yard. With so few West Texans native to this area or even the state, a trip back to the ancestors' home grounds could be as educational and fun as a trip to France or Germany or England.

In this writer's case, it was a trip back to the family stomping grounds of several generations ago — a small town that had started on the banks of the Mississippi River. Downtown Sainte Genevieve still looks today much like it has for many generations, its old houses, church, sheriff's office and shops still retained in their original designs and shapes for tourists.

Just as Midland is looking back on its 100 years, Ste. Genevieve is celebrating its 250th year this summer with activities planned to continue throughout the year.

Located 55 miles south of St. Louis and 180 miles north of Memphis, Tenn., it is the oldest town in Missouri and west of the Mississippi. Like Midland which was settled by people who were looking for a new life, Ste. Genevieve was organized by the French who had left their home country and lived in Quebec several years before boating down the Mississippi to this point. In addition to the French taste that influenced much of the city's architecture, language and lifestyle, there still can be found traces of pre-historic mound-builder Indians, the Anglo-American frontiersmen and German immigrants.

Today, the city is known for having the largest number of 18th century French Colonial buildings in America with many clustered around the city square.

The most dominant building, not only in terms of view but also on the lives of Ste. Genevieve citizens for generations, is the Catholic Church. Built in 1880 on Duborg Square, its spire with the clocks on the four sides can be seen for miles.

A few blocks from the church, but still falling under its view, is the old Memorial Cemetery. Its gravestones, erected in no logical manner and many too worn to read, date back to the 1700s. The names tell the French history: Augustus Ste. Gemme, Marie Theresa Guibourd, Neree Auguste Valle, John Ribault, Col. Francis Valle, Mahurin Michael Amoureaux.

Many of those same names can be found on the front of the restored houses, most open for public viewing.

The Guibourd-Valle House was built in 1785 by Jacques Jean Rene Guibourd and its furnishings reflect the wealth of the family. It boasts several rooms, numerous doors and ornate mirrors, in addition to the original Louis-whatever-the-year furniture. According to the tour guide, the family paid additional taxes for each mirror, door and room.

But the feature that stands out in this house is in the attic — the original Great Norman Beams which are one of the finest examples of that type of architecture, its hand-hewn oak beams filling the large open room with a woodsy smell. Outside in the back, formal gardens with blooming flowers in a variety of colors surround the original well.

The Bolduc House in its present form was built about 1785, but it incorporated a smaller house built in 1770 on another site in Ste. Genevieve. This house, with its two large rooms separated by a central hall and surrounded by a gallery for a kitchen, is an original example of French colonial architecture in America.

Other historical places, all within walking distance downtown, include the Felix Valle house (1818), Amoureaux house (1770) and Bolduc-Lemeilleur house (1820).

One site, known as the Old Brick House, was built in 1790 and now is one of the well-known restaurants in the area.

The Catholic Church, with its colorful stained glass windows, ornate carvings and pale yellow walls, can be viewed from the inside during daylight hours, and a recording explains the building's history.

History can be found in other niches here, such as in the numerous antique shops open for business in old buildings on side streets.

Ste. Genevieve once was on the banks of the Mississippi, but after several floods was relocated to its current site on higher ground. But a road still leads directly to the mammoth river, where residents and tourists can watch the muddy water lapping at the banks.

While the small town normally retains its quiet, and quaint, atmosphere, this summer it should boom with the calendar of events planned to draw people from across the country for a taste of what it was like 250 years ago.

For June 15-16, there is a world premiere of an original drama on a Missouri history theme; June 29-10, a recreation of pioneer assembly of buckskinners, trappers and traders; July 13-14 and 20-21, role of the river in the town's history and Mississippi jazz; Aug. 10-11, Jour de Fete, annual production of one of the region's largest arts and crafts fairs; Sept. 18, tracing of history of Dixieland music with emphasis on Missouri classics; Oct. 2, live folk music, dance and narration of life in the 1880s.

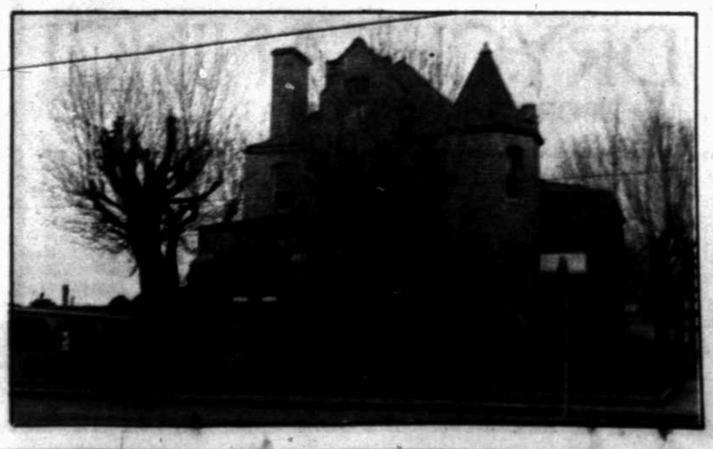

More information is available from the Tourist Information Center, South Third Street, Ste. Genevieve, Mo. 63640 or call (314) 883-5750.

A trip to Ste. Genevieve isn't the same as to Paris, France, but it can give a taste of the old country and, in some cases, a look back at the ancestors.

The muddy and mighty Mississippi River flows by the town of Ste. Genevieve, above. Weathered by more than two centuries, this tombstone, left, in the old Memorial Cemetery at Ste. Genevieve stands as a reminder of the French Canadians who settled the town. This rock house, below, reflects the architecture of an earlier time, although it doesn't date as far back as the French Canadian restored homes.

Sea voyage around Baja unusual, memorable trip

By WALTER MILLER
Copley News Service

On the afternoon of Jan. 11 the small cruise ship Pacific Northwest Explorer, under charter to Special Expeditions Inc., left San Diego on what was to be the most extraordinary of its 26 trips around the Baja California, Mexico, peninsula.

The Explorer's 66 passengers expected the unusual. Special Expeditions is a former division of Lindblad World Travel, now a separate company under direction of Sven-Olof Lindblad. The Lindblads have pioneered educational, exploratory cruises and tours.

For this voyage, passengers had been issued a reading list and a copy of Steinbeck's "Log From The Sea of Cortez," and were accompanied by a staff of five natuzalists. The vessel, 142 feet long and drawing only 7 feet, was equipped with five large rubber rafts for ferrying passengers ashore and exploring lagoons, islands and bays. There was a daily schedule of lectures and slide presentations on the flora and fauna of the peninsula and nearby islands.

THE 66 PASSENGERS, plus a ship's crew of 21 and the naturalists, boarded as strangers but were soon bonded by shared excitement, by unprecedented good fortune in hunting the whales and other wonders of the sea. This voyage was a two-week extravaganza blessed by more than the following:

— Balmy weather and calm seas until the end of the voyage at Bahia de los Angeles on the Sea of Cortez side of the peninsula.

— A cooperative colony of huge elephant seals on Cedros Island that allowed intimate contact.

— A large population of gray whales and their calves in San Ignacio Lagoon. The animals frequently approached the Explorer's fleet of rubber rafts, swimming directly under yet not upsetting them. The whales provided a thrilling show with spy-hopping, breaching, rolling and fluking.

— A village dump at San Carlos on Magdalena Bay yielding uncounted treasures for our exuberant herpetologist: Banded ground snakes, lizards, scorpions, spiders in wide variety.

— A CLOSE-UP VIEW of the awesome blue whale, believed to be the largest animal ever on Earth. It surfaced directly beside the bow of the Explorer.

— An armada of rarely seen sperm whales. This variety had been sighted on only one previous voyage, and then only two were seen. This time there were scores, their dark bodies breaking the glassy surface of the Sea of Cortez from the ship's hull to the horizon.

— Fin whales made an appearance near San Pedro Martir Island, where they were tracked in the rafts and seen at close range.

— Sea lions in vast numbers cavorted with snorkeling humans, each imitating the movements of the other at close range. These delightful playmates also frolicked around the rafts, stopping now and again to raise their heads above the surface, the better to examine these interlopers.

— Comic mating rituals staged by the blue-footed boobies on a guano-covered island.

— A large pod of killer whales swimming alongside the ship for hours, playing in the bow wave, then racing off to feed on the unfortunate stray sea lion. The whales breach and spy-hop and are tended by a giant male, its huge fin an ominous fixture a quarter mile off the stern.

— AND PERHAPS to show the deadly potential of the inland sea, a storm to close out the voyage. A cold deluge kept passengers in their cabins overnight and delayed an air departure by a day.

There is more, much more, but it must be experienced.

The voyage is not for those seeking the nightclub and lounge life of the traditional cruise ship. Quarters are tight. A small lounge with a part-time bar is more a library and meeting room, the dining room doubles as lecture hall. Food is simple but hearty and well prepared. Fresh seafood is brought aboard at various stops and is served the same day.

The crew is young, caring and eager to please. It is under the no-nonsense command of Capt. Robert Hempstead of Providence, R.I. He proudly proclaims he "came up the hawespipe" and prefers the apprentice method. The crew's respect for him is obvious. His light touch on the helm is what makes possible frequent approaches to wildlife.

Special Expeditions advises passengers to bring warm clothing, rain gear, hiking boots, bathing suits and snorkeling equipment. It is valid advice, and a wet suit makes snorkeling a bit more comfortable.

THE COMPLEX SHIPBOARD logistics of ferrying ashore, touring in rafts, scheduling a variety of hiking experiences, lectures and films are under the supervision of a handsome, strapping young man named Peter Butz of Nevada City, Calif. The imperturbable Butz, 32, took a fairly direct route to travel. Armed with a degree in economics, he donned a backpack and tramped the world. He wound up as an office worker in Lindblad's New York offices, where his good humor and enthusiasm soon found him aboard ship and aircraft arranging and leading expeditions. He now is director of field operations for Special Expeditions.

His staff of naturalists, who doubled as raft operators and baggage handlers, included: C. Allan Morgan of Tucson, Ariz., a professional wildlife photographer and lecturer on whales; free-lance botanist Linda Leigh of Tucson, who had conducted extensive field studies in Washington, Alaska and Baja California; William A. Lehnhausen of College, Alaska, an ornithologist who leads a Special Expeditions land and air tour of Alaska during the summer; geologist Stewart Aitchison of Flagstaff, Ariz., a free-lance writer and leader of Special Expeditions land tours of the Southwest, and land herpetologist Dennis Cornejo of Ithaca, N.Y., who has specialized in sea turtles, reptiles and plants of Baja California.

To obtain passports, applicants must supply two identical photos

By 'GENE BURKE
Copley News Service

Q. What are the instructions for passport pictures?

A. Two identical photographs of a passport applicant are required, taken within the past six months. They must be 2x2-inches in size, and the image size measured from the bottom of the chin to the top of the head (including hair) must be not less than 1 inch or more than 1⅜ inches.

Photographs may be in either black and white or color. They must be a clear, front view, full-face portrait, printed on thin paper with a plain, light background.

Passport Services of the Department of State welcomes photographs in which the applicant is relaxed and smiling — so smile! And when you file your application, sign both photographs on the reverse, with the signature agreeing with that on the application.

Q. I have lost my passport, but I do have a record of the number and expiration date which was in 1982. Am I eligible to renew by mail?

A. No. To be eligible to file for a new passport by mail, you must submit with the application your most recent passport, issued within the past eight years, after your 18th birthday.

You will, therefore, have to file your application for a new passport at an acceptance facility, i.e., a post office authorized to accept applications or a county clerk's office accepting them. You should re-submit your birth certificate, as well as photos, fee ($42) and an identity document.

If you wish personalized information about passport requirements, send your questions to 'Gene Burke, c/o Passport Agency, 11000 Wilshire Blvd., Room 13100, Los Angeles, Calif. 90024.

Burke is consultant to the assistant secretary for consular affairs at the State Department.

Visitors tour Aleutian Islands, one of country's remotest sections

New York Times News Service

Sweeping 1,200 miles across the northern Pacific is a chain of islands — studded with lakes, with 46 active volcanoes, with tundra-covered mountains and coastal cliffs streaked with waterfalls — that is one of the remotest outposts of the United States.

These are the Aleutian Islands, where for 15 months during World War II, the Japanese occupied Attu and Kiska, and where 50,000 American troops were based at Dutch Harbor, a target of raids by Japanese bombers.

This year, two tours of the Aleutian chain are being offered. Each originates in Anchorage and each explores the islands as far out as Dutch Harbor on Unalaska island, 1,000 miles to the southwest of Anchorage.

One is a three-day air tour, leaving Tuesdays and Thursdays from June 4 to Sept. 12, directly from Anchorage to Dutch Harbor, with sightseeing on land by troop carrier and with a side trip by restored World War II-vintage aircraft to the remote community of Akutan on a nearby island. The other is a seven-day cruise, with departures June 9 and 11, July 7 and 9, Sept. 15 and 17 and Oct. 13 and 15.

Both tours focus on war mementos on Unalaska, including downed aircraft, wrecked ships, a camp for Japanese prisoners and the remains of massive bunkers and coastal artillery emplacements. Participants in the tours will be issued dog tags and field jackets before departure from Anchorage.

The cruise-tour begins with a flight from Anchorage to Kodiak Island for two days of sightseeing before a three-day voyage along the Aleutian Peninsula and through small islands to Dutch Harbor. Calls are made at the fishing villages of Chignik, Sand Point and Cold Bay, a major World War II air station.

Return to Anchorage is by air. The cruise is priced at $1,275 a person in double occupancy. Included are air fare from Anchorage to Kodiak and from Dutch Harbor to Anchorage, accommodations on Kodiak and at Dutch Harbor, the cruise and transfers. The air tour is priced at $895, including round-trip transportation between Anchorage and Dutch Harbor.

Further information is available from Discovery Tours (Post Office Box 8800, Ketchikan, Alaska 99901; 907-225-9415 or, from within the contiguous United States, 800-544-4187).

Anniversary of WWII's end marked by travel operators

By RICHARD PAOLI
Hearst News Service

While it might seem odd to some, the 40th anniversary of the end of World War II has become big business for a few travel operators.

It is true that the battlefields of historically distant wars have been and continue to be the subject of tours. Waterloo in Belgium is an example; so are the battle sites of Vicksburg and Gettysburg from our own Civil War.

Why have the 1980s become the years for tours tied to the places and events of World War II? One of the major reasons is that the participants of that war have reached the age when they have the time, and in many cases, the money for such trips.

I do not mean to belittle the people who participated in that war, nor even those who undertake to organize tours to the battlefields. It may be that these tours are a form of personal celebration for those surviving veterans. World War II is viewed, after all, as the global conflict in which we were the "good guys." There was no political vagueness to the war: "Liberty" and "democracy" were, perhaps, easier to define 40 years ago.

But, I imagine, the 40th anniversaries of Vietnam battles such as 1968 Tet offensive and the bloody fight for Hue will not result in slick brochures inviting veterans to return for celebration. World War II provided a clear national and allied triumph; Vietnam remembered — by veterans or non-participants — brings only an unwanted feeling of agony.

While the celebration of war as the purpose of a tour still seems odd given the human desire for peace, there were — forgive the expression — some goods things which came out of World War II. One of those things is also the subject of a tour package.

The city of Southampton, England, will host a reunion next year for GI brides.

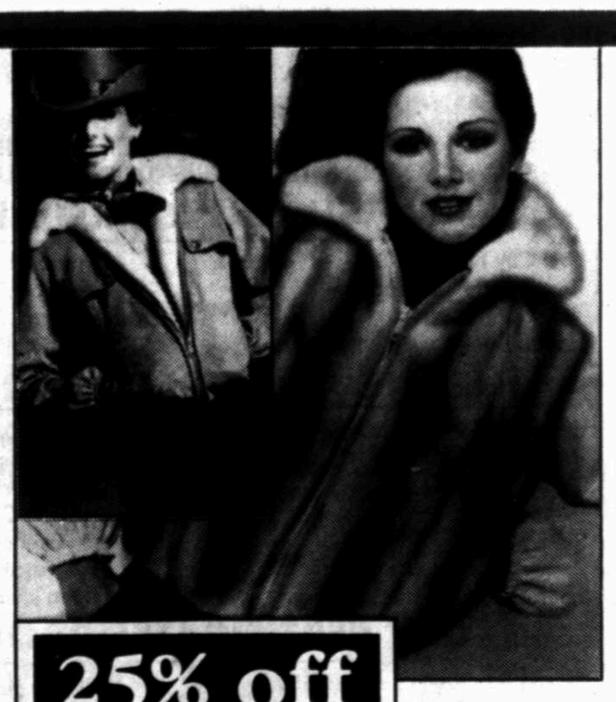

The reunion activities in Southampton are Sept. 25-29, 1986. Information about the reunion and a wide range of tours to be offered after the Southampton activities is available from the Transatlantic Brides and Parents Association, 2009 Nottingham, Pasadena, Texas, 77502, (713) 472-0055.

Ancient cobblestones pave the narrow, winding streets of Obidos. Portugal is an especially attractive European vacation spot because of the low prices that can be found for just about everything no matter what corner of this scenic land a visitor explores.

Portugal: Europe's best travel bargain

By PATRICIA JOHNSON
JaCOBY
Copley News Service

LISBON — Portugal remains as the least-expensive, least-spoiled, European vacation spot in this spring-of-the-strong-dollar.

Always the bargain basement for travelers, Portugal continues to be the leader in low-cost vacationing. Two-year-old guidebooks list the exchange rate at about 80 escudos to $1; the rate recently reached 185 escudos to $1. Even with inflation, life is very reasonable for the visitor.

Item: Dinner for two at one of Lisbon's best restaurants, Cambrinus, with drinks before dinner, a bottle of inexpensive vinho verde, a full-course meal, a special dessert and an expansive tip: 6,740 escudos or $39.41 at the time of our visit. (All these examples are based on the 171-to-$1 rate.)

Item: An evening at a fado restaurant in Lisbon, where the sad folk songs so beloved by the Portuguese are performed, includes a $5.75 cover charge plus a bottle of wine and a tip for a tab of $9.94 for two persons for a nightclub evening comparable to any U.S. big city spot.

Item: A pair of men's shoes, leather soles and uppers with leather lining, which would retail at home for $100, on sale here at $25.

Based on a two-week vacation, traveling the length of Portugal, including several days in Lisbon, a good estimate would be that costs are about one-third of a comparable holiday in the United States.

Item: A five-piece hand-painted china service for eight by an American artist, made in Portugal, priced at $385 in the states, $113 here. (Warning: Shipping the china by air collect turned out to be another $125, even though the salesclerk spoke of "about $50." Veteran travelers advise paying in advance and shipping by surface mail, which takes longer, but is much cheaper.)

Item: Lovely, hand-painted ceramic serving plates for $7, which, when available, would be about $35 in the United States.

Costs in the north of Portugal, from Lisbon to the Spanish border, appeared to be lower than those in the traditionally touristy Algarve area across the south flank of the country.

EVERYWHERE YOU GO, but especially in the north and central regions, castles and palaces have been converted into handsome low-cost hotels, pousadas, comparable to the Spanish paradores. They make travel pleasant in rural areas with no sacrifice to quality.

Item: A room for the night at the romantic Pousada do Castelo, built into the wall of a castle with a view for miles, at Obidos, a two-hour drive north of Lisbon, 4,900 escudos or $28.65.

Item: A night in a manor house, especially in the north of Portugal, for $12 per person, including a full country breakfast. These are estate houses in off-the-beaten-track areas where visitors can stay in homes with local families, learning about their traditions and attitudes.

PORTUGAL SPECIALIZES in silver and gold filigree jewelry. (By law, all gold must be 19¼ carats.) Bargains range from delicate filigree earrings for about $7 to silver-backed brushes for around $135.

In a country covered with cork oak trees, cork mats and other artifacts made of cork are very reasonable, the price depending on size and color. Natural cork is interspersed with colored cork to make agreeable patterns. About $5 buys a good set of cork table mats.

Lovely hand-painted tiles are available everywhere. They make inexpensive easy-to-carry presents that can be tucked into hand luggage.

Travel insurance may be good investment

Hearst News Service

If you want to protect your investment in your travel plans, especially if you've signed up for a tour or a trip with heavy prepayments, you might want to consider purchasing travel insurance.

If you want travel insurance, you have a choice of comprehensive package policies with broad coverage or airport flight insurance and travel accident policies that usually only cover injuries or death while on a common carrier, such as a plane, train or boat.

Some policies offer preselected combinations of coverage for a single premium; others offer each type of coverage for separate premiums. The most comprehensive packages cover losses caused by accident, illness or death; lost, stolen or damaged baggage, and cancellation or interruption of your trip. They also may include emergency medical evacuation, personal liability insurance (such as for skiing), flight insurance, a daily living allowance if you're delayed en route by circumstances beyond your control, and reimbursement to replace necessities if your baggage is delayed 24 hours. Most policies' exclusions won't affect a leisure traveler.

Here are explanations of some specific terms used in travel insurance policies:

— Cancellation and interruption: For about $5 per $100 of coverage, this is good coverage if you're making large advance deposits or if your trip arrangements, such as an APEX fare, require you to keep to specified dates.

The policy typically reimburses you for nonrefundable payments you've made if you have to cancel, delay or interrupt your trip. You also may get back any added fee for changing from double to single accommodations because your travel companion is injured or becomes ill. You're also covered if you have to leave the prearranged schedule and forfeit lodging and transportation deposits.

— Baggage insurance: You sometimes can buy this separately. The cost depends on the dollar limit and length of time. A 14-day trip with a $1,000 limit for a family would run $42 from Travel Insurance Pak and $35.25 from Mutual of Omaha. Policies often exclude items such as contact lenses, artificial teeth and limbs, money, securities, tickets, business property and bicycles (unless they're checked as luggage).

— Medical expenses: A year-round medical insurance plan already may cover you. On foreign trips, however, you probably will have to pay any costs yourself and file for reimbursement when you get home. Medicare provides no benefits outside the United States, except for limited amounts in Canada and Mexico. A regular medicare-supplement policy might be better.

What will all this protection cost you? Say you're a family of four planning a 14-day vacation and you buy a comprehensive travel package with the following coverage limits for the whole family: $100,000 accidental death and dismemberment; $20,000 emergency assistance; $10,000 medical expenses; $2,000 baggage, and $2,000 trip cancellation and interruption. The premium would come to $200.20 for Travel Guard, $215.20 for Mutual of Omaha and $231 for Travel Insurance Pak.

Here are some companies which offer various forms of travel insurance:

— Carefree Travel Insurance, ARM Coverage, P.O. Box 310, 120 Mineola Blvd., Mineola, N.Y. 11501.

— Travel Guard, Sentry Insurance Co., 1800 N. Point Dr., Stevens Point, Wis. 54481.

— Travel Insurance Pak, The Travelers Co., One Tower Square, Hartford, Conn. 06183.

— Voyageur Vac Pac, Voyageur Travel Insurance Agencies, 111 E. Busse Ave., Mount Prospect, Ill. 60056.

Savannah restored to its colonial elegance

By JACK BIESTERFELD
Copley News Service

When Gen. James Oglethorpe arrived in the future colony of Georgia from England in 1733, he set out to plan an ideal community.

He succeeded admirably.

Today, the city of Savannah, Ga., is considered one of the best preserved and most livable cities in the United States. Its tree-shaded streets are lined with stately old homes, meticulously restored to their 18th century splendor. Fountains bubble merrily in grassy squares, while horse-drawn carriages clomp-clomp slowly by.

The town is the nation's first planned city, and the area now is the largest Registered National Historic Landmark in the country. There are nearly two dozen public squares and parks in the 2½-square-mile historic district, which contains more than 1,000 restored homes.

OGLETHORPE ARRIVED Feb. 12, 1733, with 120 English colonists on the good ship Ann. His mission was to establish a colony not only to aid the poor in England and to increase imperial trade and navigation, but to set up a buffer between the Spanish in Florida and the other northern English colonies.

The general set out blocks of five symmetrical 60x90-foot lots, each facing a square. The public squares not only were used for military fortifications and drills, but as public gathering spots and markets, as well. Each colonist received a 5-acre garden plot at the fringe of the colony, while further out were 45-acre farm plots.

Savannah had its ups and downs. Its location on the Savannah River, which empties into the Atlantic Ocean, made it a booming seaport for years, sending goods to England from its farms and from trading with the Indians. Rice was a big crop until a scourge of yellow fever ravaged the city and the rice paddies had to be drained in 1820.

Eventually, it was King Cotton that brought wealth to the city, and accounts for the many exquisite mansions and prosperous houses throughout the historic district.

THE CITY WAS SAVED from certain destruction by Gen. William Sherman in the Civil War when the city fathers surrendered, and the city was given to President Lincoln as a Christmas present in 1864.

Following the collapse of cotton prices in 1895, the city fell into decline. In 1954, the city bulldozed the old city market on Ellis Square to make way for a parking garage, raising an outcry from outraged citizens. That led to the preservation movement.

First stop in Savannah should be the Savannah Visitor Center, housed in an 1860 railroad station at 301 W. Broad St. A free 15-minute slide presentation introduces visitors to the charms of the historic district. Pick up a map for a walking or driving tour of the district.

For those who would rather take a tour, there is a wide variety available. Most go in small vans with a limited number of fellow passengers. The vans stop at two or three of the historic homes for a tour, and each tour stops at different places.

ONE WAY TO TOUR the historic section is by horse-drawn carriage. Not only do the half-dozen passeners get to see the historic district, but they can see it in a fashion reminiscent of 150 years ago.

While most of the historic homes are private residences and not open to the public, there are several that offer tours. Others have been transformed into restaurants or inns where guests can spend the night in colonial splendor.

Here is a brief summary of some of the things to look for on a tour of the Savannah Historic District:

— Andrew Low House: This home on Lafayette Square was built for the cotton broker in 1848. His son, William Mackey Low, married Juliette Gordon, who founded the Girl Scouts in Savannah in 1912. A twin curving staircase leads up to the entrance to this unadorned but symmetrical three-story home.

— Juliette Gordon Low House: This home at Oglethorpe and Bull streets, built in 1820, is the birthplace of the Girl Scouts' founder, and has been restored to the period of her childhood, between 1860 and 1880. The home contains many Gordon family pieces, as well as Girl Scout memorabilia. Its round, curved porches and fenced Southern garden are trademarks of the home.

— OWENS THOMAS HOUSE: Another Regency mansion built by a cotton merchant, this 1816 house at 124 Abercorn St. features a unique bridge spanning the stairwell at the second level, as well as a columned foyer, salon and walled garden.

— Georgia Historical Society: This 1875 building at Whitaker and Gaston streets houses priceles relics and historicl documents.

— Telfair Academy of Arts and Sciences: This is Savannah's only art museum, located at 121 Barnard St., and is comprised of the Telfair mansion built in 1818, as well as a wing added in 1836. It houses Regency period rooms, decorative arts as well as a collection of paintings, porcelain and costumes.

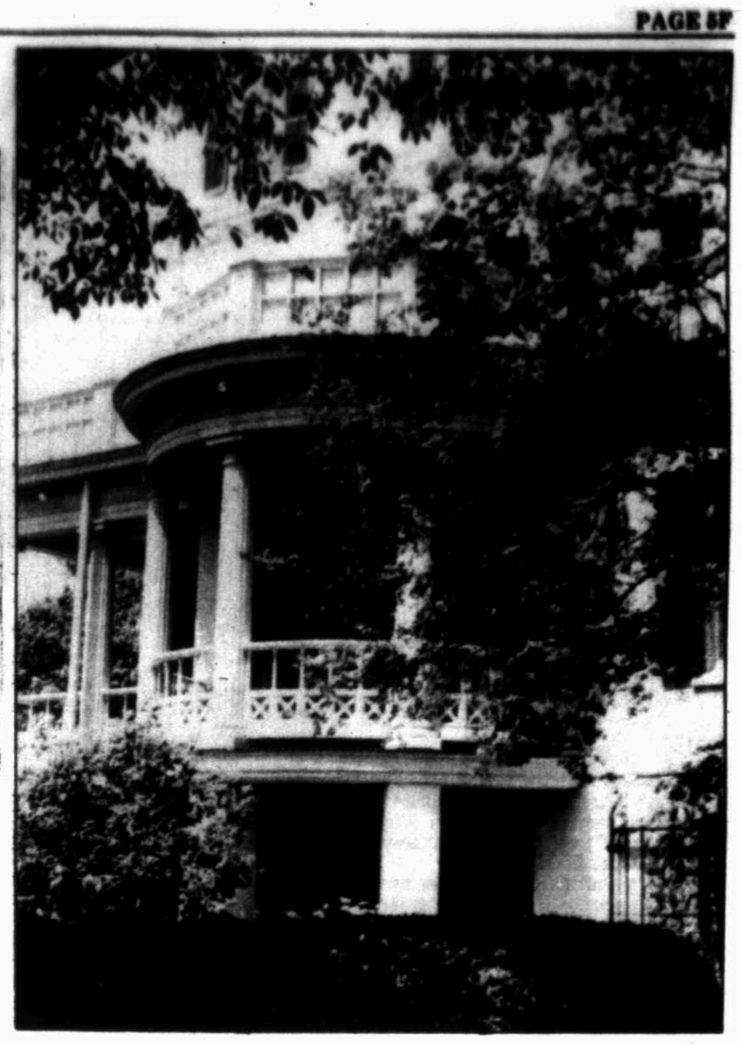

— Colonial Park Cemetery: This was the second burial ground for colonists, and graves date from the 1750s to 1780s. Included is the grave of Button Gwinnett, a signer of the Declaration of Independence.

— Historic Waterfront: A nine-block promenade has been established on the banks of the Savannah River where sailing ships once berthed. The century-old stone cotton warehouses overlooking the river have been transformed into a delightful mix of restaurants, pubs, gift shops and museums.

FOR MORE INFORMATION, contact the Savannah Convention and Visitor Bureau, 301 W. Broad St., Savannah, Ga. 31499.

One of the best ways to see the Savannah Historic District is to use the same sort of transportation used by residents 200 years ago — horse and carriage.

Two peaceful Mexican resorts no longer remote

By FERNANDO ROMERO
Copley News Service

IXTAPA-ZIHUATANEJO, Mexico — The spectacular sunsets may be ho-hum stuff to the natives, but they can bewitch those unaccustomed to the magnificence of a winter sun slowly melting into the ocean, its red glow reflecting on everyone and everything, while gentle, warm breezes bring in the starry night.

Along Zihuatanejo Bay's rim, tourists gather to enjoy the panorama and become one with the people of this region — manana is today, today is here forever. This daily ritual is part of the charm of Ixtapa-Zihuatanejo.

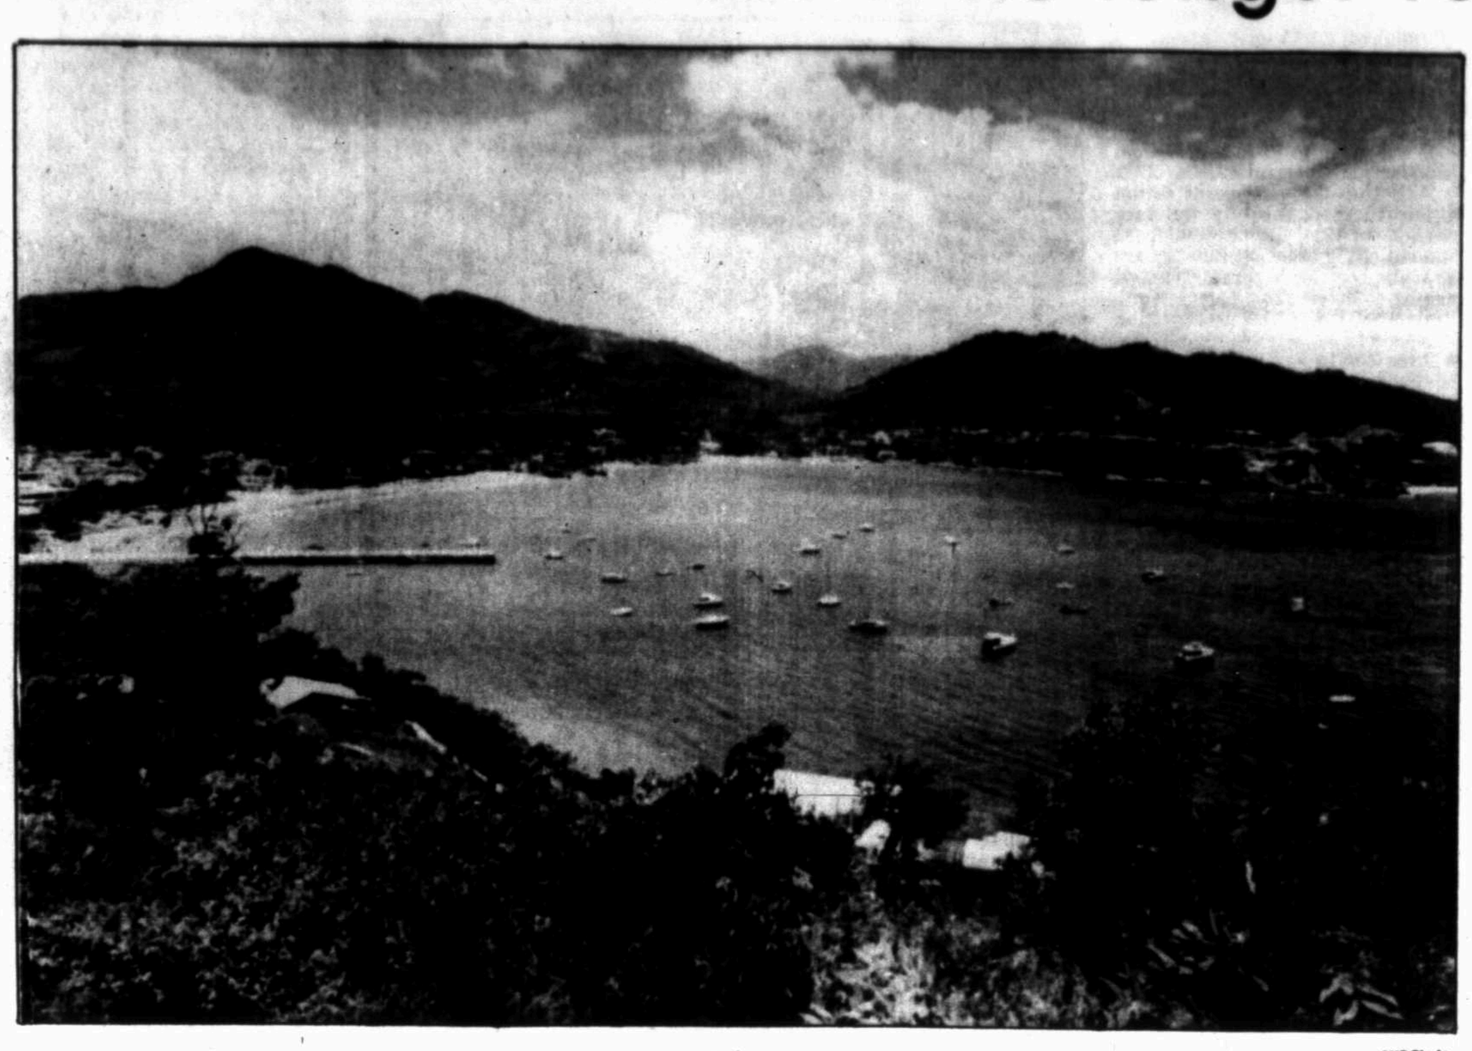

But it has not always been that way.

This beautiful region with its lush vegetation was so isolated from mainstream Mexico 20 years ago, it took nearly eight hours to get here from Acapulco — just 150 miles to the south — over a bumpy two-lane road.

As 52-year-old Jos Cruz Ruiz remembers it: "This was all hills and ocean, where people would work the land and fish in the bay for their livelihood. 'Tourist' was an unknown word around here."

Cruz, a pharmacist, no longer lives in Zihuatanejo — he has a drugstore in Acapulco now — but he still likes to visit his "garden spot" where "God comes to rest when he is tired."

Cruz knows well. He lived in Zihuatanejo most of his life and still makes the trip every other month "just to breathe the pure air and reminisce with my friends."

CNS Photo

Primitive beauty and modern luxury mingle around Zihuatanejo Bay, one of Mexico's most spectacular resort areas. This once-remote farming and fishing area has become a magnet for tourists from the United States.

PERHAPS NO OTHER resort area in Mexico is more deserving of the phrase "garden spot" than these two towns located a few miles from each other in the heart of Mexico's Gold Coast.

Although a hyphen will now link the two towns in the pages of history and geography, up until a few years ago only Zihuatanejo (zee-wah-tah-NAY-ho) existed.

Ixtapa (eex-TOP-ah) is as new as its fabulous hotels, golf course, marina, shopping center and condominiums. Its creation was a mammoth undertaking by the Mexican government, which saw in the area a natural vehicle to attract international tourism and create jobs.

It has taken almost 15 years of hard planning and work — from blasting a modern road out of the dense surrounding forest to link the region to Mexico City and the rest of the country, to the creation of an international airport and a state-of-the-art waterworks system that provides clean, drinkable water — but the region now rivals perennial vacation favorites such as Acapulco and Puerto Vallarta.

NATURE, NATURALLY, has played its part by offering some of the most beautiful beaches and scenery in the country.

The yearly temperature average of about 78 degrees — which reaches perfection (about 82 degrees) during the winter months — and the warm, turquoise waters of the Pacific and Zihuatanejo Bay bind it all together.

"Maybe there are a lot more people here today, but the beauty of this place has not changed," Cruz said. "If anything, the development over there (Ixtapa) has helped enhance it."

According to historians, Zihuatanejo once was "Zihuatlan," or land of women, because its people once were a matriarchal society. The conquering Spaniards rearranged the name and added the suffix "nejo" (meaning unimportant).

Until the early '60s, this was still an agricultural and fishing region with no more than 3,000 inhabitants. Americans who would venture to it were immediately enchanted, but the difficulty in getting here kept the masses of sun worshipers away.

Today, the area has approximately 35,000 people, most of whom work in Ixtapa as waiters, chambermaids, bellboys and other tourism-related jobs. However, it still retains the atmosphere that attracted the first American visitors.

ON ZIHUATANEJO'S main street there are the inevitable curio shops offering strident charro hats, beautifully embroidered blouses and tacky, pastel-colored T-shirts with racy messages across the chest.

However, there also are quaint little shops that cater to the locals — broom-and-bucket shops, bakeries and mom-and-pop stores that sell anything from vegetables to gardening tools to live chickens for those who like to prepare dinner from scratch.

At the end of the main street lies the town's park and beach. Here, locals gather every afternoon to comment on the latest gossip or to just watch the boys play a game of pickup basketball on a court located at the edge of the sand.

Just a 5-mile bus ride to the north lies Ixtapa, the Mexican government's master tourism development and its pride.

Here, only the word "fabulous" can serve to describe the town's quintessential natural beauty and its hotels.

AS IN ZIHUATANEJO, Ixtapa is growing by leaps and bounds — the government predicts there will be more than 16,000 hotel rooms by the end of the next decade — but the small-town atmosphere prevails.

A mirror image of Cancun, the beach resort town in southern Mexico, Ixtapa was carefully carved from the dense jungle and rough terrain to preserve its wild beauty.

Most of the hotels here have been built with the idea that they should complement the natural surroundings. Judging by the results, the mission has been accomplished so far.

One of the foremost among the town's hotels is the Camino Real Ixtapa, a massive piece of architecture overlooking its own private beach, Vista Hermosa.

Designed by renowned architect Ricardo Legorreta, Camino Real Ixtapa resembles an Aztec pyramid when viewed from the sea. Constructed on the incline of a hill, the 12-story hotel matches the topography well, and its own lush gardens superbly complement the surrounding vegetation.

LARGE OPEN SPACES within the hotel and its stark Aztec design contribute to the overall feeling of peace and beauty sought by those escaping the bustle of the Big City.

Other well-known hotel chains such as Sheraton, Holiday Inn and El Presidente have established themselves along the 1-mile Ixtapa beachfront.

A few miles offshore is Ixtapa Island, an uninhabited wonderland that will make you feel like a modern-day Robinson Crusoe. The island's north and south beaches offer some of the best snorkling around. Tour boats make the trip to the island several times a day seven days a week.

If you're planning to fly there, Western Airlines makes two daily trips from Los Angeles with stops in Mazatlan. Also, call Aeromexico or Mexicana, which make daily connecting flights.

Travel tips aid tourists to Mexico

By FERNANDO ROMERO
Copley News Service

So you have decided Ixtapa-Zihuatanejo, that land of eternal summer, is for you. Well, here are some tips to help you along.

AIRLINES

There are at least four airlines that serve this area: Western (two weekly flights Los Angeles-Mazatlan-Zihuatanejo); Aeromexico (two daily connecting flights from Tijuana, Mexico); Mexicana (check with your local travel agent) and American (check with your travel agent).

Your best bet: Aeromexico, which offers very good round-trip and hotel packages year-round.

HOTELS

This should be the easiest part of your selection process. After all, almost all hotels in either Ixtapa or Zihuatanejo offer beachfront accommodations and are rated excellent by the experts, no matter what the price.

— Hotel Camino Real Ixtapa — One of the best of the hotels in this area. Incredible beachfront vistas from almost every room. Fabulous food at each one of its four restaurants. Four pools, sundeck and little cobblestone paths that lead to lush gardens, two tennis courts (a pro is available), private beach, bars and plenty of nighttime activity at the hotel's swinging disco and bars.

For reservations, call Mexico City at (905) 545-6530.

— El Presidente Ixtapa — Almost all rooms offer a magnificent view of the Pacific. Gigantic pool surrounded by tropical gardens. Tennis courts, good restaurants, bars and shops. For reservations, call the hotel's main office in Mexico City. Phone (905) 395-0333.

— Villa Del Sol. Located in renowned Playa la Ropa. German owner. First class. Clean. Rooms a few steps from the beach. Excellent cuisine by two certified chefs. Make reservations at least one month in advance during the off-season (April to December). Phone in Zihuatanejo, 4-2239.

— Castel Palmar — For the budget-minded. A real bargain. Clean. It offers beachfront views from most of its rooms. Tennis courts, snack bar, bar, restaurant, shops.

For reservations, call Mexico City at (905) 286-3045.

— Others — Dorado Pacifico, Mexico City phone (905) 510-9660. Riviera del Sol, Mexico City phone (905) 286-3852. Sheraton, Mexico City phone (905) 525-9060. Posada Caracol, Mexico City phone (905) 533-1947.

BEACHES

El Palmar — Ixtapa's main beach. Most hotels in Ixtapa face it. About 1 mile long. Broad sand expanses. Anyone is allowed on it. Be careful with the high surf.

— Ixtapa Island Beach — You can reach the island by boat. Quaint beaches protected from the heavy surf by surrounding islands. Excellent snorkeling. Avoid the island's restaurants. Bring your own lunch.

— Playa la Ropa — In Zihuatanejo. Your best bet for a good swim and a tan session. Nearby restaurants with palm-shaded tables.

ENTERTAINMENT

La Esfera Disco — At the Camino Real Ixtapa Hotel. A wondrous night spot. Lights. All the latest hits. A must for night owls.

— Sanca — At the Sheraton. Live music, dancing.

— La Mancha — At the Hotel Aristos. Disco, occasional live shows.

— DaVinci Disco — At the Holiday Inn. The most popular spot in town. Very modern.

— Carlos and Charlie's — Past hotel row in Ixtapa. You guessed it, it is part of the famous night-club chain. Disco. Good food.

RESTAURANTS

Here, the choices are plentiful. Chances are the hotel where you will be staying has a good one. Just in case, though, here are a few to select from:

— La Esfera — Camino Real Ixtapa Hotel. The best of the best. Elegant. International cuisine.

— Azulejos — Camino Real Ixtapa Hotel. International cuisine. Terrace dining, superb breakfast buffets.

— Los Siete Mares — Holiday Inn Hotel. Absolutely delicious seafood. Impeccable service.

— Adan y Eva — On the road to Playa La Ropa. International fare, great seafood. Live music, shows. Good service. Reasonably priced.

And there it is. Buen viaje amigo y amiga.

Tourism planned for 'final frontier'

By SOLVEIG TORVIK
Hearst News Service

If you have $1 million, good health and the ultimate sense of adventure, a Seattle travel company wants to launch you into space in 1995. If that price is too steep, save your pennies until about 2005 or so, when the price is expected to drop to $50,000.

Society Expeditions, which caters to the well-to-do who can afford exotic vacations, says it is accepting names of those who are interested in becoming space tourist pioneers.

"Tourism will become the largest single industry in space during the next century," predicted company president T.C. Swartz. "We don't expect to get the casual tourist saying, 'Here's my $1 million, put me in the can and shoot me up.' It's never going to compete with Hawaii."

But he said, "It is no longer a question of, is there going to be space tourism? It's a question of when. Any place explorers have gone, tourists have eventually followed."

Swartz said he has got in touch with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and all the major aerospace firms and they have encouraged the venture, "especially since President Reagan's commercialization of space policy."

But David Garrett, a space agency spokesman, said NASA officials had not heard of Swartz's plans.

"I talked to our head of commercial programs and he has never heard from these people," Garrett told the Associated Press. The official, Isaac T. Gillam IV, has seen "no proposals nor has he received any request for a meeting, and he has no information on them," Garrett said.

Swartz cautioned that there are still economic and technical challenges to be overcome before the space trip becomes a reality.

Society Expeditions announced its plans now, he said, to get a reading of the market. Early indications are that up to 60 people would be willing and able to make the trip even at the $1 million cost, he added. People who put their names on the list will not be asked to pay any up-front money to support the venture, he said, and no reservations will be taken until the specific technology for carrying the passengers is worked out.

Swartz said one possibility is that the passengers will ride aboard the space shuttle's cargo bay in a specially-designed module equipped with windows. Another possibility is that the passengers would be taken to 35,000 feet on the back of a Boeing 747 and the module fired into space from there. This would cut costs by 80 percent, he said.

Because NASA would charge $80 million to launch the space shuttle, "the economics of the space shuttle obviously is a severe problem and that's one of the reasons we are exploring several different types of hardware at this time," Swartz said.

The trip would last three days and include 48 orbits of the earth. If NASA approves, the voyage could include a rendezvous with the space station, he said.

Passengers would have to pass mental and physical tests, such as being able to hear a whispered voice at three feet and having blood pressure of less than 160/100. Six weeks would be spent in physical training.

Swartz, who founded the 240-employee company a decade ago, said he had the idea about two years ago that a space trip was the next logical step in high-ticket tourism. His firm operates two cruise ships, the World Discoverer and Society Explorer, which travel to both poles and other remote locations.

Dreams of traveling determined by amount of income tax refund

By EVELYN KIERAN
Copley News Service

This season of finally returning income tax refunds, is the time of year for dreaming — though actually any time suffices.

Since most people consider refunds "found" money, the dreams often have to do with travel. And while you're dreaming about travel, wouldn't it be nice if you could deduct travel expenses from your income tax? That's having your cake and eating it, too.

Some eager-to-travel cake-eaters are willing to work for free — or even pay to work — on some interesting, possibly beneficial, project in the United States or some fascinating far-off land. And they are willing to use vacation time to do this. Interestingly, these people sometimes find that their contributions are tax-deductible.

An increasing number of Americans are looking into ways to enjoy the great adventures without having to pay a prohibitively steep price or to make the price tax-deductible. There are such opportunities but they are limited and some work is usually involved.

In other words, if you have a mad desire to go gorilla watching in Rwanda, trekking in Bhutan or river rafting in Chile, you are probably not going to get a tax break.

But, if you are willing to help out with a study of marine ecology or an archaeological dig, you may be able to profit from the experience.

EARTHWATCH IS A non-profit educational organization whose members sponsor field research of every sort. They include archaeologists, animal behaviorists, ecologists, architects, historians, oceanographers and scientists — scholars and investigators of every discipline. Scholars receive field grants and teams of volunteers; members have the chance to join scholars in the field.

According to Earthwatch magazine, all contributions are tax-deductible "to the extent permitted by law." The magazine, published three times a year, lists expeditions by area, discipline and date and is available with a $20 membership from the organization at 10 Juniper Road, Box 127, Belmont, Maine 02178.

Another group, The University Research Expeditions Program, invites people from all walks of life to take part in its expeditions to all parts of the world, from Belize to Sardinia, Nevada to Taiwan. Expenses for these expeditions are tax-deductible "as permitted by law."

You can obtain a catalog of available trips by writing to UREP, University of California, Desk NR, Berkeley, Calif. 94720, or by calling (415) 642-6586.

WORKING HOLIDAYS is an annual guide to short-term jobs around the world. The 250-page guide is published by the Central Bureau for Educational Visits and Exchanges in England, and distributed in North America by the Canadian Bureau for International Education, 141 Laurier Ave. West, Ottawa, Ontario, Canada K1P 5J3. Per copy price of $7.50 covers first-class mailing.

Opportunities listed — ranging from excavating Stone Age cave sites in Swaziland to building cow sheds in Italy — are for both paid and volunteer work on five continents, with special emphasis on Europe.

As for finding out if you can get a tax deduction on some or all of your expenses for a recent or upcoming trip, talk to an accountant. Rules and requirements vary a great deal. Take into consideration the primary purpose of the trip, how much time — out of the total time you were gone — you spent working and how the trip relates to your occupation. But don't be surprised if the answer to your, "May I?" questions is a flat, "No."

READERS FREQUENTLY ask me if they write an article for a newspaper, magazine or other publication, can they deduct travel expenses. The invariable answer is, "I don't know — I'm not an accountant." But I do know that the IRS will take a long look at someone who claims a $1,500 deduction against a $50 check for a published story.

The practice of deducting travel expenses on income taxes is the greatest of pastimes for thousands of American businessmen. It's also a practice closely watched by the ever-vigilant Internal Revenue Service.

"The IRS knows this is an easy target," said an accountant. "You have to keep very careful records.

"It's OK to combine business and pleasure, as long as the primary purpose of a trip is business and you can substantiate it. If you follow the rules, you're all right."

The rules require detailed written records, including receipts and diaries outlining meeting topics, that can be used to substantiate travel deductions. There are numerous court cases where apparently legitimate deductions were disallowed because the taxpayer had no written record of travel expenses.

Foreign travel is an area closely watched by the IRS, and the rules are more strict than for domestic business travel. A taxpayer must additionally be able to prove that foreign travel is "reasonable."

TRAVEL DEDUCTIONS that are rejected subject a taxpayer to a range of fines and penalties. The worst, a "negligence penalty" for deducting something obviously not allowed, requires payment on the unpaid tax, plus a monthly 5 percent penalty, up to a total interest penalty of 25 percent.

In short, you can travel and deduct — but you had better be able to document the legitimacy of your claim.

It's a lot easier to just keep dreaming.

Fading refining plagues Texas

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business-Oil Editor

Texas refiners are backed into a cornor and finding it harder to make a profit these days, and Permian Basin oil producers could find themselves in the same cornor.

Following ten years of all-out expansion in the seventies to meet growing demand, the domestic refining industry which is concentrated in Texas is now on the retreat. Since 1981 the Texas refining capacity has dropped 16.1 percent from a high of 5.3 million barrels per day in 1981 to 4.4 million in 1985, and the capacity is still dropping. That shrinking capacity, says State Comptroller, Bob Bullock, is not only going to hurt oil producers but all of Texas.

Decreasing demand for petroelum products, increased prices for crude oil and foreign competition are the factors listed in the capacity shrinkage.

No longer are the giant chemical complexes, which convert crude oil into hundreds of industrial, commercial and household products besieged by a skyrocketing demand for these products. Moreover, demand has dropped dramatically.

Total Texas refining capacity has dropped 16.1 percent from 5.3 million barrels per day in 1981 to 4.4 million barrel per day in 1984. While most of the shut downs have involved small refineries, such as the Famariss refinery at Hobbs, the crunch has taken its toll among the bigger ones too. Of the 37 refineries now idle, 13 have had less than 10,000 barrel per day capacity.

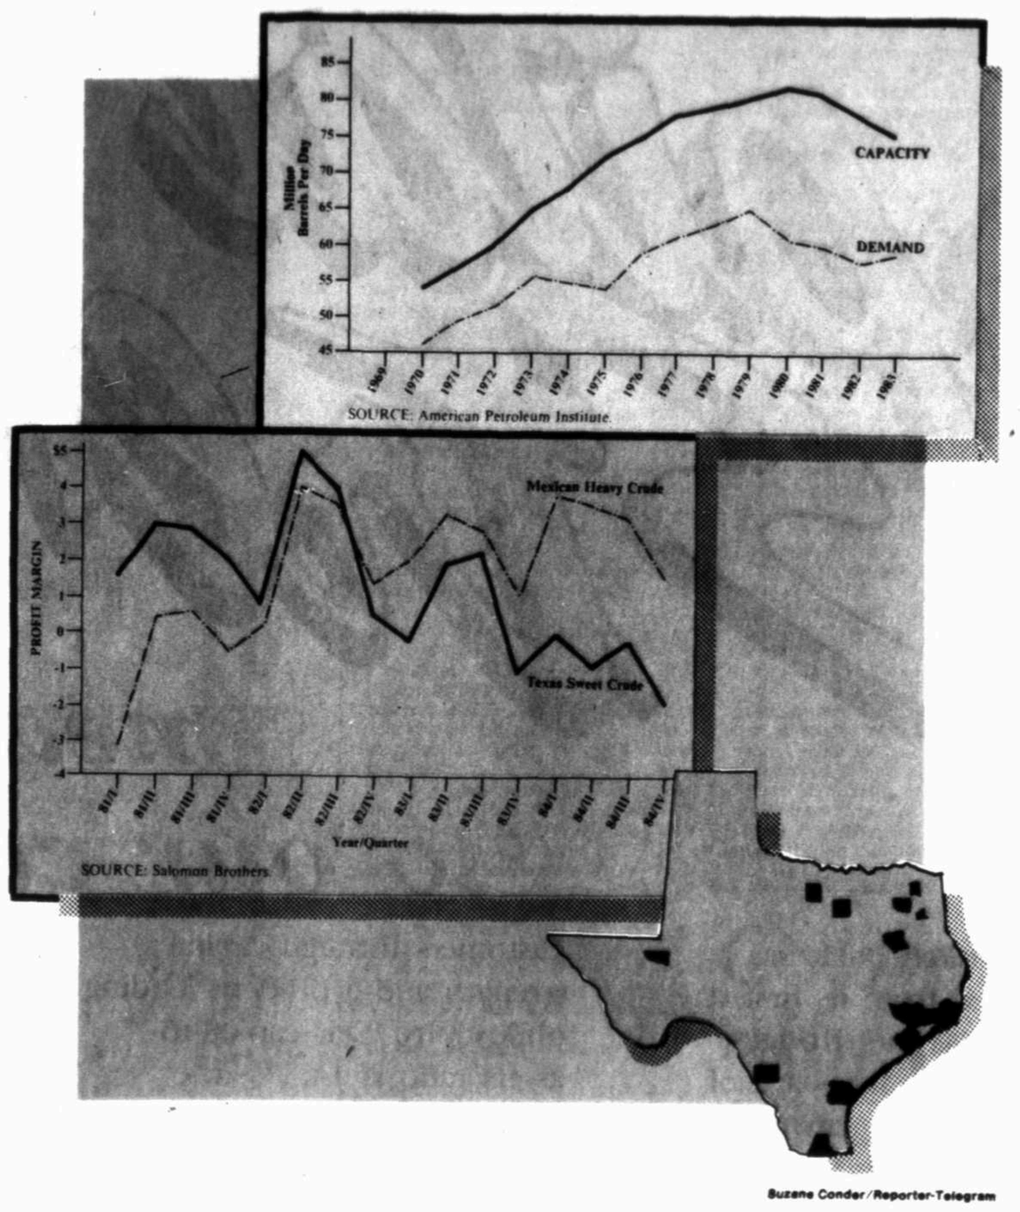

But then, there are the big ones. Dow shut down its 190,000 barrel per day Freeport, Texas operation in 1982 and was in 1984 with the closure of Texaco's 400,000 barrel per day facility at Port Arthur.

To say the least, trouble in the refining industry in Texas means trouble for Texas. In 1983 there were an estimated 40,000 refinery workers in Texas with a payroll of $1.3 billion.

That payroll is spread across many industries of the state, including many in the Permian Basin, says the Comptroller's Office.The Texas Department of Water Resources estimates the loss of one refinery job costs 13 other jobs in the state. At the same time one dollar of refinery income generates seven dollars of income in the Texas economy. That means the shut down of Texaco's Port Arthur refinery could cost the state 16,800 jobs statewide and $312 million in personal income.

Perhaps the biggest loss to the Basin comes, however, in the devaluation of crude oil. A healthy refining industry is vital to the oil producing areas of Texas says Bill Kleine, president Permian Corp., the largest crude oil purchaser in the Permian Basin: "The oil we produce in the Permian Basin has to be refined. As domestic refining capacity declines, so does the demand for domestic crude oil," said Kleine. "Also, as the refining capacity closes and moves farther away from our producing area, the less valuable it becomes." He said crude oil in Louisiana and the Gulf Coast area had been traditionally worth 25-50 cents more per barrel to the producer, because it was closer to the refinery and less transportation cost was imposed upon the barrel.

FDIC to put aircraft on auction list

By MELLA McEWEN
Business-Oil Writer

Three airplanes and a helicopter will be sold at a Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. auction Thursday, May 30 at the Western Company Hangar, Meachum Field, Fort Worth.

According to the FDIC, the Western Company is allowing the use of their facilities, but are in no other way connected with the auction.

The aircraft were owned by Fort Worth Aviation, which had loans with the former First National Bank of Midland. The FDIC is expecting to get $1.5 to $2 million in the sale.

The aircraft to be put on the block include a sixteen seat 1977 Bell Helicopter 212. The helicopter is equipped with dual controls, two blade props, a large cargo door and 90-gallon fuel capacity on each side. It is painted a bright white and is equipped for hauling oilfield crews.

A ten-seat 1979 King Air Super 200, equipped with such items as a toilet, two executive desks, dividers, a flight phone, co-pilots instruments and an electric coffee pot is also on the block. The exterior is white with red and tan stripes with tanseats with brown leather trim, brown carpet and tan sidewalls inside.

A seven-seat 1977 Lear 24F, equipped with a toilet, large cargo door, auto pilot, color radar, stereo and a storage cabinet is also included in the sale. The exterior is white with light blue and gold striping while the interior has gray-dark blue leather trim seats and tweed carpet.

The fourth plane on the block is a seven-seat 1978 Piper Cheyenne II that comes equipped with options such as a toilet, electric coffee pot, flight phone, co-pilots instruments, and color radar. The plane is painted tan with white, red and black striping and an interior of tan leather seats with brown trim and brown carpet.

The aircraft can be inspected Tuesday and Wednesday, May 28 and 29. The auction begins at noon Thursday the 30th.

Terms set by the FDIC include full payment the day of the auction, strictly cash, cashier's check, personal or company checks only with a verifiable, irrevocable bank letter of guarantee with a statement of limits. No drafts will be accepted.

The FDIC states that the goods are sold as is, without recourse.

The FDIC also reserves the right to refuse any or all bids.

All purchases must be removed from the premises before 5 p.m. Tuesday, June 4. Nothing can be moved without a paid receipt and confirmation of receipt of funds in the FDIC's bank.

The auctioneer for the sale is Mark C. Thomas & Associates of Texarkana.

General Dynamics grabs new head from ranks

New York Times News Service

Why would a man of 63 who has been No. 2 at a major corporation, who only recently finished building his retirement home, and who suffered an ulcer but is now in good health, take on the choré of heading a huge military contractor that is in poor standing with the Pentagon?

Close associates of the executive, a West Point graduate named Stanley C. Pace, think that mainly he found the prospect of becoming chief executive officer of an important corporation irresistible.

As a result, Pace will join the General Dynamics Corp., the nation's largest military contractor, on June 1 and become its chairman and chief executive by New Year's.

"He's always had a bug of wanting to be a c.e.o.," said Sidney Webb, a friend and former colleague. "He's always liked the idea of running his own show."

But Pace's son Dan, while acknowledging this could be part of the story, says that at least equally significant is a feeling by his father, rooted in his West Point education and military service, that he could "contribute not only to the country but to the defense industry." Added the younger Pace, a lawyer in Cleveland, "It sounds a little corny, but I don't think it is."

His father, now vice chairman of TRW Inc., another big contractor in better stead with the Pentagon, is looked on by those who work with him as eminently fit to take on the task of helping restore the badly tarnished reputation and Pentagon relations of General Dynamics. On Tuesday, the Navy ordered suspension of signing of all new contracts at two of that company's divisions because of "pervasive" business misconduct. The Navy also canceled two missile contracts worth $22.5 million.

The assessment of Stanley Carter Pace that comes from his colleagues is that he is a model of integrity and an excellent administrator. "He's especially orderly and thorough, and he's able to keep a lot of balls in the air at the same time," said Dr. Ruben F. Mettler, chairman of TRW. For example, Pace is serving as chairman of the National Association of Manufacturers, in addition to his TRW duties.

"I don't know anyone who is more honest, ethical and straightforward," said Webb, a former TRW vice chairman.

But equally prominent in the comments is that, while Pace is considered efficiency itself in conducting his business, he has a notable empathy for people.

Typical of the man, his son related, was that he went back to Germany some years after World War II to see the German doctors, nurses and others who ministered to him after he was injured bailing out of a B-24 bomber. He had flown as pilot and flight leader on 39 missions for the 15th Air Force, based in Italy. He rose to the rank of colonel before retiring in 1954 to join TRW.

Pace's postwar military assignments were an appropriate training ground for the business career he was to embark on with TRW, a company that brought together an enterprise long prominent in auto parts and an aerospace newcomer that spun off from a company that played a key part in directing development of the initial Air Force ballistic missiles.

While in uniform, he served in a series of logistics slots at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, culminating his military service as deputy chief of the procurement division of the Air Force Materiel Command.

At TRW, Pace worked both in the aerospace and automotive divisions, rising steadily in the corporate hierarchy. Some insiders say Pace was the chief competitor to Mettler, a key figure in the missile program, in a contest that ended with Mettler's becoming president. They remained good friends and, when Mettler became chairman, he picked Pace to succeed him. But, since Mettler is two years his junior, it was not in the cards that the top spot would ever be available for Pace.

But Dan Pace does not agree that this explains the acceptance of the General Dynamics post.

"Anybody who is successful and competitive in business would like to run his own show," the younger Pace said. "But I don't think he was driven by that. He's had opportunities in the past and he's not elected to take them.

"Equally significant," he said, "is that it's part of his training from West Point. He has a commitment to his country. In the past, he has seriously considered appointments in Washington. But the appropriate government job did not come up. I think this position with General Dynamics is in the same light."

He added, "It's fair to say that if it were the ABC Shoe Co., it would rank a little differently in his scheme of things." At TRW, Pace is earning $640,000 a year.

Currently, Pace devotes perhaps one-fifth of his time to the National Association of Manufacturers. Between 1982 and 1984, he served as chairman of the Greater Cleveland Roundtable, a group of community leaders working to create jobs and improve housing, education, education and race and management-labor relations.

New AT&T word organizer makes computer talk easier

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — A word recognizer patented this past week for American Telephone and Telegraph's Bell Laboratories, Murray Hill, N.J., is expected to make it easier to talk to computers. Patent No. 4,519,094 was granted to Michael K. Brown of the robotics principles research department and Lawrence R. Rabiner, who heads acoustics research.

The invention improves speech recognition by computers by combining analyses of vocal tract movements with word loudness. The vocal tract and loudness features of successive segments of a word are compared with a previously stored dictionary of similar features. The combination of vocal tract and loudness is intended to avoid erroneous recognition.

The system may be incorporated in personal computers for voice control or in telephones for dialing by voice. The system permits the words to be spoken by many people. It is not yet in use but is expected to have commercial applications later in supplying information to or giving orders to computers.

Patents were received this past week by two large biotechnology companies. The Cetus Corp. in Emeryville, Calif., announced a patent covering a drug potentially valuable in the treatment of various forms of cancer and infectious diseases. Patent No. 4,518,584 was granted to David F. Mark, director of molecular biology, and two associates.

Genentech Inc. of San Francisco received patent No. 4,518,526 for methods of isolating and purifying the organic compounds called proteins from host cell cultures. Kenneth C. Olson was the inventor.

A motor tricycle that carries a wheelchair and can be controlled by the handicapped occupant was patented this past week by Michael McCallum of Chicago. Patent No. 4,518,057 explains that the rider can roll his wheelchair onto a platform attached to the tricycle, raise the platform from the ground level and then steer the vehicle.

U.S. car sales up 18 percent

DETROIT — Bouncing back from an early May decline, sales of U.S.-built cars jumped 18.2 percent in the middle 10 days of this month, the auto companies reported Thursday.

The seven domestic auto manufacturers — General Motors, Ford, Chrysler, American Motors, Volkswagen of America, Honda and Nissan — sold 268,009 cars in mid-May this year, a substantial increase over the 226,797 sold in the same period in 1984.

"Sales are super good," said David Healy, an industry analyst with Drexel Burnham Lambert. He noted that the most recent sales results offset the "air pocket" in sales earlier this month when domestic sales fell 8.6 percent.

Healy said that while the 10-day sales numbers have been fluctuating a great deal lately, they average out to a steady sales pace.

Energy braintrust will keep Texas in front

Attending an oilpatch barbecue this week, I was not too surprised to hear the same names being tossed about — Hong Kong, Singapore, China, Colombia, Scotland — all standard oil field destinations where the gathering of hands had done duty or knew of someone who was doing a tour.

The swapping of tales about foreign airports and restaurants brought to mind the fact that the oil business is very much a global venture and the Permian Basin of Texas is closely tied to it.

What Detroit once was to the automobile industry, Texas still is to the oil industry, but maybe even more so. Probably no state so dominates a major worldwide industry as Texas dominates the oil and gas industry. If it is oil field...if it is API, it was probably conceived, developed or manufactured in Texas.

If you need to call an expert from the other side of the world to come and help with a drilling or production problem, more than likely his area code number is 214, 817, 713 or 915.

WHEN THE SAUDIS and other Middle East oil producers wanted to know how to conserves reserves and produce fields at a maximum efficiency rate, they did not go to the U.S. Department of Energy. They came to the Texas Railroad Commission, considered around the world as the ultimate authority and expertise in establishing maximum efficiency rates for oil fields.

In the next few years we will see droves of Chinese making their way to Texas in search of technology and tools as they seek to develop their vast petroleum resources on and offshore. Many, no doubt, will visit the Permian Basin for those requirements, and many here will probably head to the East in an effort to sell hardware and expertise, or even negotiate drilling deals. There is little doubt that Texas will be a major supplier in the opening of this new petroleum frontier, as it has been in all other frontiers.

That's why it was good to learn this week that Governor Mark White had signed a bill creating a Texas geo-technology research institute that will insure that Texas continues as the undisputed brain trust of the world in petroleum exploration, production and recovery.

LOCATED AT the Houston Area Research Center (HARC), which is based in The Woodlands, a new community north of Houston, the institute will bring together the best minds of academia, industry and government to create a brain trust of energy expertise that will have no equal. It will be under the direction of Dr. Manik Talwani, an eminent earth scientist and newly appointed Schlumberger Professor of Geophysics at Rice University.

Said Governor White: "This institution will insure Texas' position as a world leader in the energy industry and the future development of the oil and gas industry. It will become to energy research, what MCC, at Austin, is to computer science."

White said that while Texas needed to diversify its industry, it must recognize that Texas is an energy state. "The oil and gas industry was nurtured and grew up in Texas," said White, "and virtually all the technology that has made possible exploration and production from the North Slope to the North Sea is Texas' brainchild."

WHITE POINTED out that while the Geo-Technology Research Institute would be essential to keeping Texas an exporter of oil and gas technology, it would also be of great assistance in the ultimate recovery of the state's own reserves.

"The oil and gas market is soft," said White, "and it takes greater amounts of skill and technology to find and develop reserves. Yet, well into the next century, the U.S. primary fuels will be oil and gas. It is our intention that Texas be the source of much of that energy and also for the new technology that will enhance exploration and production everywhere."

Some of the projects the research center plans to pursue include development of improved exploration techniques, especially offshore; creation of new observational techniques for oil field development and making more sophisticated techniques utilized in surface geochemistry, and developing improved geoscience instrumentation.

A major project earmarked for study will be determining the geological potential of the Outer Continental Shelf, which Talwani says is virtually unexplored and where the potential is unknown. The use of remote sensing equipment on satellites is also under consideration, as well as the execution of regional geophysical surveys, such as the Artic and Antartic.

While the institute is primarily a Houston-based operation under the direction of University of Texas-Austin, Texas A&M University, University of Houston and Rice University, there is no reason not to expect some of the major field studies to take place in the Permian Basin. OIME of Odessa has already landed one major contract from HARC, and the Center has pegged a site south of Midland as a possible location for the massive Super-conducting Super-collider Accelerator.

Permian Basin Rig Count

U.S. Rig Count

Permian, U.S. counts drop sharply

Drilling activity showed its continued weakness this week as both the Permian Basin and U.S. rig counts fell sharply.

Midland County put 15 rigs to work this week, up four from last week. Ector County lost three, leaving 15 within county lines. Martin County slipped one rig, to 9. Glasscock County added three rigs, raising the total to eight.

Lea County, the most active in the Basin, held steady a second week at 25 rigs. Pecos, the second most active, slipped two to 20 rigs this week. Andrews County, also very active, fell from 23 to 17 rigs during the week.

Both Cochran and Lubbock counties were left with no activity this week, while Crosby County saw new activity after several weeks.

The rg count this week is 272. A week ago the count wis 286. A year ago the count was 333.

The state of Texas count dropped from 682 rigs last weet to 654 rigs this week. New Mexico added six rigs, jumping from 66 to 72. Oklahoma added five rigs putting 259 rigs to work this week. Louisiana fell rom 288 rigs to 275 rigs during the week.

Kansas fell from 90 rigs to 77 this week, andAlaska held steady at 16 for another week while Canada went fron 132 to 179 rigs.

For th week, the count is 1,869. A week ago the count wa 1,901. A year ago the count was 2,315.

Agriculture bill to emphasize revitalization

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON -It is now clear that whatever farm bill comes out of Congress this year will emphasize the importance of farm exports in revitalizing the lagging agriculture industry.

Farm state congressmen from both parties generally approve of the $2 billion subsidy program announced last week by the administration, but they want to write export legislation into law.

"The only thing that counts is what is passed and signed into law," said Sen. Mark Andrews, R-N.D. "Everything else is just talk."

Some members of Congress are insisting on including export legislation in the new farm bill because they fear the administration will waver in its resolve to subsidize exports to make U.S. farm products more competitive in the world market.

Under the plan announced by Agriculture Secretary John Block on May 15, the federal government will offer surplus commodities as free bonuses to U.S. exporting companies or foreign purchasers to induce them to buy more U.S. agricultural products.

The White House agreed to the export plan in a deal to win farm state votes for President Reagan's fiscal 1986 budget blueprint. Block said in a published interview that the new program "is not good policy" and that it runs counter to the administration's "free market" philosophy.

"Block didn't want it," said Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, speaking to national reporters at breakfast last Tuesday. "It was put on him by the Congress. He is a reluctant administrator." Bentsen doesn't like the way the export program was set up. He believes it should be a "high profile" program, administered by the U.S. Trade Representative.

The subsidy program is intended to target other producing nations that are believed to be heavily subsidizing agricultural exports. Bentsen said it should be a "sustained effort" with the goal of forcing the European Common Market to "seriously negotiate about agriculture and get rid of some of these subsidies" that are forcing the U.S. out of the world market.

Bentsen wants to get tough with world competitors who don't play fair. As an example, he said last year French citizens were paying 27 cents a pound for sugar made from sugar beets and the value of French farm land dedicated to sugar beet farming soared from $1,000 to $7,000 an acre.

"The French turned around and sold that sugar on the world market for 4 1/2 cents -just dumped it. That action alone cost Central America over $3 billion last year. If you want to talk about contributing to the political and economic instability of an area, that helped to do it."

The Senate Agriculture Committee has worked for the last two weeks on a section of the farm bill devoted to exports but did not complete it. The committee approved a list of "congressional findings" that emphasizes its concerns over international trade problems.

Refining

Kleine said the problem created by imported petroeium products needs to be monitored carefully. "I don't know where the limit is, or how much damage can be inflicted by foreign competition before something must be done, but it is a situation that cannot go unmonitored."

He pointed to Citgo, the refining branch of Southland Corp., as an example of a firm opting for low price imports. He said Citgo had reduced its refining capacity 40 percent, because it was cheaper for the firm to buy gasoline off the tanker. "There is a real danger with third world countries dumping petroleum products in this country," Kleine said.

How much cheaper is imported gasoline? One refinery owner in Houston recently commented: "I have a refinery that is paid for and ready to work, but I can buy gasoline off the boat cheaper than I can make it in my own refinery."

Middle East refineries are able to undercut domestic refiners, because of the cheap "finding" cost of a barrel of oil which is about $2 per barrel in Saudi Arabia, according to a recent New York Times article. Also, many of the oil producing members of OPEC are refining oil and selling gasoline to get around OPEC's strict production limits.

At a recent function in Midland, Texas Railroad Commissioner, Mack Wallace, who has long supported an import fee on petroleum products said there was no way U.S. refiners could compete against nations using "slave labor." Said Wallace: "We're not talking about free trade, we're talking about fair trade."

The dimension of foreign competition can be ascertained by examining the recent and proposed intrusion of foreign petroleum products. In 1980 the U.S. imported only 2 percent of its gasoline, in 1984 imports were 7.5 percent, increasing 15 percent in 1984 alone, according to the Comptroller's office.

A price squeeze betweensale of refined products and the cost of crude oil is another factor contributing to the refining problems. The industry experienced negative gross profit margins on high-grade crude in 1984, because of the cost of the crude. However, those refineries processing lower grade crudes with a higher sulpher content were profitable because of the lower cost of the raw product, even though refining costs were higher. Not all refineries, however, are equipped to process low-grade crudes and conversion cost is prohibitive.

If domestic refining capacity continues to shrink, the effect could soon be felt in the producing sector. Refining capacity still exceeds demand by 29 percent, and the average U.S. refinery is operating at only 80 percent of capacity.

Kleine said he did not know of any wells being shut down to date as a result of a shrinking refining capacity, but it was a situation that needed close monitoring.

Chevron will sell Gulf Canada Ltd.

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The Chevron Corp. said Thursday that it had agreed to sell its 60.2 percent stake in Gulf Canada Ltd. to Olympia & York Developments Ltd., the largest office developer in North America and a major landlord in New York City, for about $2.18 billion.

Canadian officials said they believed it to be the largest acquisition in Canadian history.

Chevron said the sale would help reduce the debt it incurred last year from its $13.3 billion acquisition of the Gulf Corp.

Olympia & York said it did not intend to make a similar offer for the remaining 40 percent of Gulf Canada's shares, a large part of which are owned by Canadians.

George M. Keller, chairman of Chevron, said: "The Canadian government's objective of increased ownership has been met. The sale of these shares will put us significantly ahead of schedule on our debt reduction program."

For the Toronto-based Olympia & York, the purchase of Gulf Canada shares represents a major foray into the energy field. Olympia & York, which holds 22.5 million square feet of Manhattan office space and is the developer of World Financial Center at Battery Park City, had no comment on the purchase, a spokesman said Thursday.

Olympia & York is a privately held company controlled by the Reichmann brothers of Toronto, neither of whom could be reached for comment Thursday.

Under the agreement, Olympia & York will purchase 112 million shares, or 49.24 percent, of Gulf Canada by July 16. The price amounts to $16.21 a share in U.S. currency, based on Thursday's exchange rate. By the same date, it will acquire an option committing it to buy the remaining 25 million shares owned by Chevron by Dec. 31.

The option price is $4.38 a share and the exercise price for the optioned shares is about $11 a share under the current exchange rate, Chevron said. But the final figures for both the shares and the options will be calculated later in light of currency values. The agreement calls for Olympia & York to pay half the amount in U.S. dollars and the balance in Canadian dollars.

On the American Stock Exchange Thursday, Gulf Canada stock fell 50 cents, to $13.625. On the New York Stock Exchange, Chevron stock rose 87.5 cents, to $36.375.

Chevron said it had informed the Canadian government that the conversion of Canadian dollars into U.S. currency "will be done in a manner designed to minimize the impact on the value of the Canadian dollar." It said the agreement is subject to its satisfaction on "certain regulatory and other matters" by June 18.

Analysts, in interviews Thursday, described Gulf Canada, an integrated oil company based in Toronto, as a well-managed concern that rebounded impressively after struggling with a severe Canadian recession and sharp reductions in that country's petroleum use in the face of rising worldwide crude prices.

Gulf Canada, the third-largest oil producer and the sixth-largest gas producer in Canada, reported a 33 percent increase in net income for the first three months of 1985, compared with the comparable period last year. Analysts said they expect sales and earnings to remain strong this year.

However, these analysts see the transaction as being most beneficial for Chevron, which has long said it wished to shed its holdings in Gulf Canada.

"This is a good deal when you consider that Chevron's management said they thought their interest in Gulf Canada was worth $2.5 billion and many analysts thought that was a pipe dream," said Ronald J. Chapman, an analyst with the Northern Trust Corp. in Chicago. "So, $2.1 billion looks like a good deal. Chevron's long-term debt to total capitalization is 49 percent. That's quite a big number when you consider that it was 16 percent in 1982."

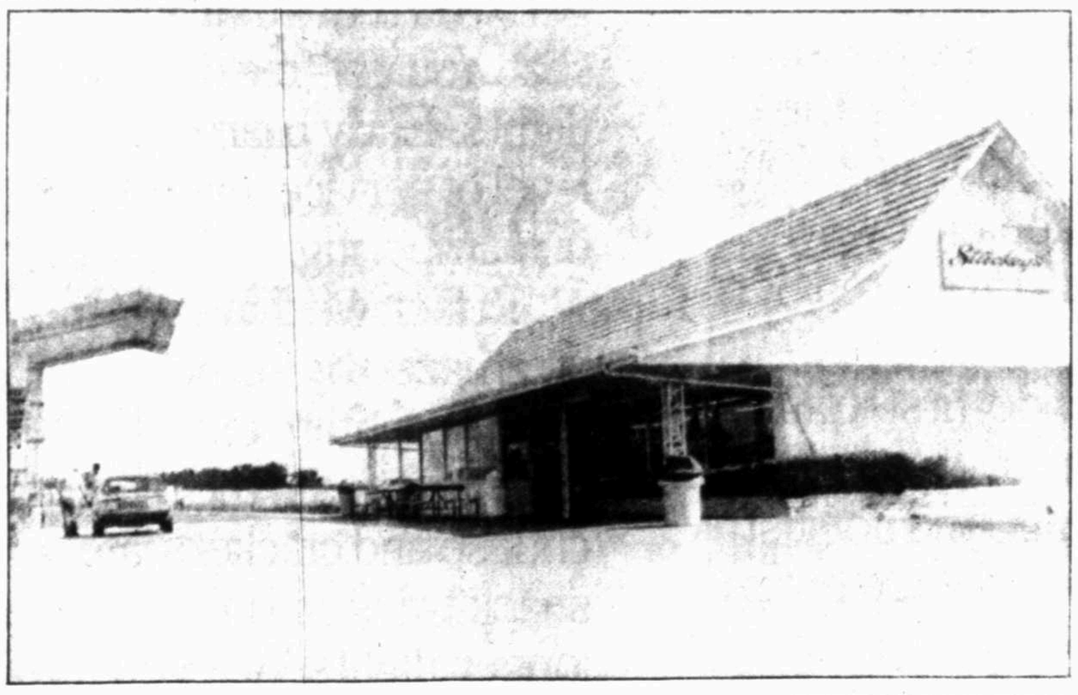

Chevron officials said the agreement would have no impact on their operations, since any outstanding contracts that may exist between the two companies would remain in force.

"Our holdings in Gulf Canada are simply stock holdings," L.S. Shushan, a company spokesman, said.

Olympia & York acquired large parcels of Manhattan real estate several years ago, when the city was on the verge of financial collapse. The company is headed by Albert and Paul Reichmann, president and senior executive vice president, respectively, Hungarian-born investors who settled in Canada. It now owns more than a dozen large office buildings in the city.

Phillips to sell Pier 66 Hotel

Phillips Petroleum Co. has anounced that it intends to sell its Pier 66 Hotel and Marina in Fort Lauderdale, Florida.

The planned sale is in keeping with Phillips objectives of selling selected assets to help reduce the $4.5 billion of new debt resulting from the recent exchange offer.

Pier 66, Fort Lauderdale's landmark hotel, has a worldwide reputation for the quality of its services and facilities.

Two-tier wages proving national issue

ANALYSIS

WASHINGTON (AP) — The bitter and costly strike by pilots against United Airlines underscores how management attempts to lower labor costs have made two-tier wage scales one of the most explosive labor-management issues of the decade.

Unions have trouble swallowing attempts to pay new employes less than is earned by present employees with the same amount of experience.

But hundreds of thousands of U.S. workers are accepting contracts calling for two-tier wages.

Deregulation, the pressure of foreign imports and non-union competition are factors that prompt employers to propose the double-wage system as a means of meeting the competition.

Leaving existing employees on a higher pay schedule while negotiating a lower scale for newly hired workers doing the same work is see by management as a way to hold down labor costs and stay competitive. Unions in many cases accept two tiers as a less-objectionable alternative to across-the-board concessions by all workers.

A study of 133 contracts re-opened for negotiation before their expiration dates shows that the ratification rate for two-tier pacts is 80 percent, says Audrey Freeman, a labor economist for the Conference Board, a non-profit economic research group. That rate is higher than for the other types of concessions management proposed, she said.

Some analysts suggest unions might be wiser to forgo two-tier scales, since they can stir resentment by lower-paid rank and filers coming into the workforce against labor leaders and fellow workers who agreed to the system. Some unions now are trying to negotiate their way out of two-tier agreements.

Under recent two-tier contracts among some 25 major collective bargaining groups, cuts for new workers range from 5 percent to 50 percent and average roughly 15 percent, says economist Miriam Goldberg of Wharton Econometrics.

The issue in the United Airlines strike is not whether to institue a two-tier scale, but how steep it should be and how long it should last.

Under management pressure to make concessions, the union has proposed a two-tier wage scale that would pay newly hired pilots as much as 25 percent less than comparably experienced existing pilots for the irst five years of employment. After that time, the two wage scales would merge.

The union says United wants to pay newly hired pilots in some cases 57 percent less than currently employed pilots. The company says the differential isn't that high, and the airline is offering current pilots an immediate 6 percent pay increase. But under United's proposal, it would take newly hired pilots 20 years to catch up to the pay of comparably experienced pilots already on the airline's payroll.

The union says its proposal would save the company $3 million to $7 million a year. But United contends the union's proposal would increase overall labor costs by $110 million a year or 18 percent and make it difficult to compete with American Airlines, its chief competitor. United says its own proposal would keep labor costs at the current levels. American negotiated its own two-tier agreement with pilots two years ago.

Last year, some 200,000 workers signed two-tier contracts, says the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics. In addition, an arbitrator handed 600,000 U.S. postal workers a two-tier agreement.

Newsprint industry wonders if price increase will hold

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — After four recent postponements of price increases, the newsprint industry is wondering whether the latest rise, scheduled for July 1, will take hold.

Newspapers had to cope with a 6.7 percent wholesale price increase last summer, and were expecting another 6.6 percent rise in January. But that failed to materialize then, and has been postponed three times since.

Newsprint producers, who usually raise prices in concert, say their reluctance is based on a number of recent developments. The growth in newsprint consumption in the United States has slowed decidedly, as newspapers' inventories have burgeoned. At the same time, overseas producers have entered the market and helped make it intensely competitive.

"There has been a lot of price discounting going on, and that will always make price increases rather iffy," said Mark S. Rogers, an analyst with Dean Witter Reynolds Inc.

It was only a year ago that North American producers of newsprint were celebrating a change in their fortunes. After years of vast overcapacity, surging costs and declining prices, newsprint consumption in the United States rebounded, jumping 9.4 percent in the first three months of 1984 and 8.1 percent for all of last year. It was the result, analysts said, of the recovery in the economy and the corresponding swell in newspaper circulation and advertising linage.

But for the first three months of this year, newsprint use increased by a more moderate 2.4 percent, according to the American Newspaper Publishers Association.

"The growth has slowed right down after a major period of growth in 1984," sid John G. Davis, group vice president of Abitibi-Price Inc., the Toronto-based company that is the world largest newsprint producer. "Ve believe the rate of growth wil continue to be much slower tha last year."

And David G. McMaster, executive vice president of the Bowater Paper Co.'s pulp nd paper group in Greenville, S.C. said: "Foreign competition is a ral concern to us, particularly with he strong dollar. The best newsprintmarket in the free world is in the United States, and overseas competitors are really coming out of the woodwork."

Indeed,the strength of the dollar has apparently altered historical newsprint supply patterns. Newsprint from Sweden, Finland and Norway, which accounted for 0.5 percent of American consumption in 1983, jumped to 1.5 percent of last year's ue. Analysts estimate that Scandinavian newsprint will make up 3 percent of American supply this year. What is more, they predict that exports from Britain, West Germany and France, typically a minuscule piece of the American market, will increase this year to about 1 percent.

Still, many North American manufacturers have continued to report healthy sales. Abitibi, which produced two million of the 27 million metric tons of newsprint used worldwide last year, said its sales increased about 4 percent in the first quarter. Bowater, one of the largest American producers, said its revenue from newsprint increased 5 percent, compared with a 17.4 percent increase in the period last year.

But buyers are not complaining, either. "It's a buyer's market and there's too much capacity to support a price increase," said William Metzfield, president of the Gannett Supply Corp., the Gannett Co. unit that buys newsprint.

Industries bury 40-year-old lesson in mass production

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

Forty years after the end of World War II, one of its most enduring lessons is being unlearned and buried.

The burial is taking place in industrial areas like Detroit, where it was learned in the first place.

Flip back ever farther in time, to the beginning of the war, when companies like General Motors Corp. were suddenly challenged to quit making passenger cars and respond to a call to arms.

Within a month, GM was making aircraft engines, pushing them out as fast as the lines would run. The Buick plant in Flint, Mich., got up to 1,000 engines a month alone and the pattern was repeated all over industrial America. From Oldsmobile: 48 million artillery rounds during the war. From Chevrolet and other GM plants, 854,000 heavy trucks.

The lesson was that mass production wins. That philosophy became ingrained as the way GM did business. Managers were judged on their ability to meet their production quotas and keep their assembly lines running on schedule. It was the corporate culture, says Alex Mair, GM vice president for technical staff groups, who heads the company's technical, engineering and design staffs. And it lasted.

"It was very, very difficult to get on the plant manager of an assembly plant, even in 1978 in GM, who was struggling to get another 10 cars out a day. ... " says Mair. It was hard to tell that manager that customers didn't like the cars because the quality wasn't good enough when customers were buying all that GM could make. It was hard to tell that to the autoworkers, when they were working overtime and Saturdays to get the cars out.

Another part of the culture grew out of America's seemingly bottomless natural resources, Mair says.

Twenty years ago, he says, Chevrolet's foundry in Saginaw, Mich., was the biggest in the world, pouring ribbons of molten iron to make automobile engine blocks.

Iron ore from the foundry came from the rich Mesabi range in Minnesota, scraped off so easily and cheaply that it was taken for granted. Engineers gave little thought to designing engines in a way that minimized the amount of shaping, machining and drilling required to finish the engine block.

In Japan, the culture was just the opposite. A nation poor in natural resources wasted nothing. Its engine blocks were cast as precisely as possible to minimize a waste of metal and the time and cost of finishing the pieces. "In Japan ... the whole mindset is, 'I'd better make the casting as near to final shape as I can get it,' " noted Mair.

The mass production culture trapped Detroit in other ways. In the 1960s, Chevrolet turned out more than one million Impalas a year and the stamping presses that punched out fenders and other body parts were designed with that in mind: heavy and durable.

Japan's auto industry started small and grew steadily. Denied the luxury of long model runs, the Japanese became masters of designing stamping presses that could rapidly be switched over from one model to another.

GM didn't need that capability in the 1960s, when customers had relatively few models to choose from. It needs it now, however, in a market overcrowded with choices, in which GM's highest production model — the Cavalier — totals 400,000 units a year or less. But GM's old presses took 50 worker-hours to switch over. Japan's took two.

Finally, GM awoke to the realization that it was no longer the leader. "Somebody had gotten better ... in the two areas that really count, quality and cost," said Mair.

GM's goal now is to lead all its rivals in using technology to produce the highest quality and the greatest production efficiency. It is a simple thing to announce a new philosophy for a company as big as General Motors, but it is a herculean job to get members of an entire bureaucracy to discard the ways they had been taught to think and work. The process of change has been under way for three or four years at GM and it isn't completed.

The same transformation is under way at National Steel Corp.'s plant on the Detroit River, a major manufacturer of sheet metal for the auto industry.

Edward Sambuchi, general manager of National's Great Lakes plant, said that the plant had always been driven by production goals — until now. "The idea was, if Pete doesn't buy it, Joe will," said Sambuchi.

Advertising: Tryout for beauty products

Hearst Feature Service

TV advertising's war on wrinkles has pitched an arsenal of creams and cleansers, moisturizers and makeup at beauty-conscious viewers, but a more dramatic product now is getting a television tryout: injections for smoothing out crow's feet and smile lines.

It's Zyderm Collagen, a protein derived from cowhides and cow bones. Unlike collagen-based cosmetics that briefly hold moisture in the skin, injectable collagen acts from within, supplementing the skin's own collagen and temporarily banishing lines etched by age, smiles or frowns.

The first-ever TV commercial for the Collagen Corp. product earlier this year featured an attractive woman pointing to her few noticeable wrinkles and saying Zyderm injections might be able to reduce them. She invited viewers to ask their dermatologists about the procedure or call a toll-free number for information. Low-key and unassuming, the 30-second spot was nonetheless unusual. Ever see injections advertised on television before?

"This isn't some shampoo that you go out and buy and use," says Maureen Brunner, Collagen's director of consumer marketing. "When you hear about this, you reflect. Yyou go to a doctor, give your medical history, get a skin test, a series of injections. We didn't know how people would react to something that said 'injection.' "

The company – so cautious about advertising that it didn't even start consumer marketing until 1983 after Zyderm had been on the market two years – tested the waters first by asking doctors' opinions on TV ads, having them preview the commercial and conducting focus groups. Encouraged by the response, Collagen executives went ahead.

The reaction to the 10-week TV experiment, which recently ended, was a jump in inquiries about the treatment, Brunner says. Before the ads ran in Houston in January and February, she estimated that only 1.5 percent of potential customers there knew about Zyderm. That number rose to 14 percent after the commercials, and nearly 1,100 people called the 800-number.

But it won't be clear for a long time just how much the most far-reaching advertising medium will boost Collagen's business. Typically, research by the Palo Alto, Calif.-based company shows, there's a 7-1/2-month delay from awareness to adoption of Zyderm by a patient. And the company then will have to determine whether TV-inspired sales justify the expense.

Six weeks of Houston air time on "Dallas," "Dynasty" and "Entertainment Tonight" – chosen because Brunner thought viewers would be most sensitive to their wrinkles while "looking at Linda Evans, Victoria Principal and Joan Collins" – plus four weeks of ads during daytime soaps, newscasts and prime-time shows in San Francisco and Denver cost Collagen $500,000. By comparison, nine months worth of space in magazines with nationwide circulation, cost $600,000.

Brunner estimates that Collagen has penetrated 4 percent of a target market that numbers 5.5 million people, mainly entertainers, Gucci-ed and Pucci-ed "status women," "emerging women" heading back into the work force and the acne-scarred of both sexes. Not surprisingly, Beverly Hills and New York have the highest concentration of Zyderm users.

Of the nation's 10,000 dermatologists and plastic surgeons, about 7,000 have been trained to administer Zyderm. The procedure is "very technique-sensitive," Brunner says, "and Zyderm can't be injected too deeply, or else it just goes away." She estimates that 3,500 of those trained inject Zyderm on a routine basis, probably weekly.

Those physicians were the first targets of Collagen's promotion efforts. For a year after Zyderm was approved by the Food and Drug Administration in 1981, Collagen concentrated on medical journal ads, direct mailings, seminars and talks at medical conferences. Only after hundreds of doctors understood the product did Collagen launch consumer marketing.

American will begin its service with three flights a day to each market. At Norfolk, American will operate two nonstop flights to and from DFW daily, and one flight which will stop in Richmond each way. At Richmond, there will be one nonstop flight to and from the DFW hub and two flights which will stop in Norfolk each way.

Lowell C. Duncan, the airline's vice president-corporate communications, said both markets have been high on the carrier's priority list for many months.

The new services will be operated with three-engine Boeing 727 jets.

American now operates more than 300 flights a day at Dallas/Fort Worth to about 90 nonstop destinations.

Japanese say they work too much

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

TOKYO — Japanese workers are beginning to agree with the rest of the world that they work too much.

Three out of four workers surveyed by the Economic Planning Agency said they would like to see their working hours reduced to the level prevailing in Western Europe and the United States.

Asked what they thought might be an appropriate level, 54 percent of them said no more than 1,800 hours a year, about 244 hours fewer than at present.

The planning agency said that in 1982, the last year for which such statistics are available, Japanese employed in manufacturing worked 2,136 hours (the equivalent of 267 eight-hour days), or more than five working weeks a year more than Americans.

The survey did not mention it, but many of the longer hours that the Japanese put in are overtime. Generally the overtime rate is 1.25 times the usual rate, compared to 1.5 times for American workers.

Bureaucratic red tape is often cited as an impediment to doing business in Japan, not only by foreigners but by Japanese themselves. Japanese producers of "long-life milk," which will not spoil at room temperature for up to months, provide an example.

Dairy farmers in the northern island of Hokkaido, far removed from major urban markets, won permission in 1977 to start producing long-life milk, which is pasteurized at higher temperatures and packaged in thicker containers than ordinary milk. They had hoped to distribute more milk to other sections of the country. But a government order has forced retailers to refrigerate long-life milk, driving up costs and frustrating the farmers' hopes. Last year, long-life milk accounted for only 1.9 percent of consumption.

Now, two years after the Health and Welfare Ministry certified that refrigeration of long-life milk is not necessary, the Agricultural Ministry has decided to eliminate the requirement.

A breakthrough for the 12 Japanese companies that produce long-life milk? Not quite.

First, the Health and Welfare Ministry must rewrite its rules to remove the refrigeration requirement. Then it must draw up new rules.

This will probably take another year or so, and even then other barriers will still be in place — a ban on imports and restrictions on increased production. Already, the Agricultural Ministry has cited what it called a need to avoid the chaos that might arise from free competition.

More than 850 companies package milk, and most of them are small family operations. They fear that larger competitors will start shipping long-life milk into their sales regions.

In addition, the Japan Consumers Federation, which argues that long-life milk is neither safe nor nutritious, and 57 other consumer groups have renewed their complaints against the product.

The federation insists that all food should be produced and sold as close as possible to its natural state. It opposes the move to lift the refrigeration requirement for fear that it will open the door to imports.

Katsumi Noda of the federation said imports might come from the United States, Canada, Australia or New Zealand, or from Shenzhen, China's special economic zone near Hong Kong.

If Japanese consumers, who are accustomed to buying refrigerated milk, change their habits, the cost of long-life milk might come down, according to Toshio Tanaka of Snow Brand Dairy Products. At present the price is 91 cents a quart, or 4 cents more than ordinary milk.

Five years from now, 95 percent of Japan's top 1,623 corporations believe, their technology will be at least equal to American technology, according to a survey by the Economic Planning Agency.

Almost a third — 32 percent — of the companies listed on the Tokyo, Osaka and Nagoya stock exchanges indicated they believe that their technology will be superior to American technology, compared to 17 percent five years ago.

Among the industries in which more than 50 percent of the companies believe that they already are superior, or will be in five years, to American competitors are shipbuilding, rubber, ceramics, precision machinery and steel. But only 13 percent of the chemical companies expressed such confidence.

The survey also uncovered a belief that the developing countries of Asia will gain on Japan in the next five years. Almost all the companies — 98 percent — said their present technology is superior to that of their Asian competitors, but only 88 percent said they will still be superior five year from now.

Anadarko completes two wells

HOUSTON (SWN) — Anadarko Production Co. has announced the completion of two successful wells in south central Louisiana, a natural gas discovery and an oil completion in a new fault block. Anadarko is the exploration and production subsidiary of Panhandle Eastern Corporation of Houston.

The gas discovery, the State Lease 8902 No. 1, tested at the rate of two million cubic feet of gas and 240 barrels of condensate per day through a 10/64-inch choke with 3,645 pounds per square inch of flowing tubing pressure from a sand below 10,700 feet.

The oil completion, the A.J. Trosclair No. 1, penetrated four productive intervals below 10,200 feet in the Anse La Butte Field, St. Martin Parish. The well flowed 264 barrels of oil and 363,000 cubic feet of gas per day through an 11/64-inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 1,004 pounds per square inch from a perforation below 11,000 feet.

Backup systems protection from loss of data

Shoot any corporate data processing manager and the chances are good that his last words will be "make a backup."

When millions of dollars of information are at stake, backup gets to be a religion and protection from data loss is a state of grace.

The hobbyist can follow the basics of good procedure without a corporate-sized budget. All it takes is a little organization. And the payoff is being able to smile when you discover that the dog has developed a taste for floppy disks or that the children spent 20 minutes learning all about the "erase" command.

Herewith CompuBug's Rules for Backup:

Keep a file of "master" disks or tapes of the programs that you use. Use these masters only to make working copies. Store the masters in a cool, dry place that's free from magnetism, dst and physical abuse. You can buy a fancy box to accomplish this at any computer store. Or you can take a cardboard box of the right size and cover the outside with aluminum foil. Make certain that the disks are stored upright and that cassette tapes are kept in the little plastic boxes you bought them in.

Every time you use your computer to store information — your checking account, say — end the session by making a backup copy on a separate disk or tape. Store that backup copy in a different place than you store the working copy. If you have a printer, run off a printed copy of the information and store it with the backup.

Label every tape or disk that you use so you won't get confused and mistake it for a blank. And if it's a disk, use a felt-tip pen and self-stick labels so you don't cause physical damage to the floppy.

When using your word-processing or spreadsheet software, take time out every now and then to store the information you've just typed. How often you do this depends on how much retyping you don't mind doing after you reconnect the electric plug that got caught in your chair.

Non-computing spouses have long known how tough it is to compete for love and attention against silicon seduction. Now in the June issue of 80 Micro (CW Communications, $4.00) comes the word that although owners of Tandy (Radio Shack) computers "tend to be married...their divorce rate is three times that of other computer owners." The magazine cites a survey done by Boston's Yankee Group. Perhaps because Tandy was one of the first to put computers in homes, more non-computing spouses have had time to yell "either that thing goes or I do." According to the same source, the alimony payoff is likely to be better if you divorce someone hooked on IBM: "(Radio Shack) Model III4 users make half as much money as IBM owners."

Polaroid Corp., wants a piece of the floppy disk action and is offering an unusual service in an effort to get you to try their disks. The deal is that if you spill coffee or otherwise smear their disk with something your computer won't process, you can ship the disk to Polaroid and they'll try to recover the data – free. A Polaroid spokesperson at 800-241-4403 explains that you'll pay the cost of getting the otherwise-useless disk to Polaroid and the company will pay the cost of getting the data recovered and shipped back to you.

Computer business may have as many failures as auto industry

Hearst Feature Service

The list of failed computers and dead businesses is now so large that industry observers have begun to compare the PC industry to the automobile industry.

In the first decade of the automobile, there were dozens of tiny garage-shop carmakers. Then, as the industry matured and manufacturing and marketing costs climbed, only three or four giants survived. The personal-computer industry is following suit.

The list of personal computers that haven't made it includes little-known systems such as the Sol, Altair, Imsai, Sorcerer, Equinox 100 and even the Superbrain. It also includes venture capital-funded high-flyers like the Osborne I and Gavilan, and ill-fated pet products of giant corporations like IBM, Xerox, Apple and Texas Instruments.

Of the dozens of personal computers that have died recently, the IBM PCjr hit the mat hardest. IBM came into the personal-computer industry dominating the mainframe computer business and with a reputation for doing no wrong. Now critics are calling PCjr IBM's Edsel.

"It had the smell of death about it," says Steven Levy, a columnist at Popular Computing magazine, who wrote one of many negative reviews aimed at IBM's entry into the home-computer market.

Levy, who incurred IBM's ire by writing that the PCjr was "brain-damaged" because of the way the system was designed, says he was surprised that the computer did as well as it did.

"When I first saw it, everyone was oohing and aahing and saying that IBM can't lose," he remembers. "I kept my mouth shut, but when I finally got my hands on the machine, I came to the conclusion that it was awful."

Levy says the PCjr should have been killed long before IBM finally put it to rest.

"I had one in my office for six months and I tried hard to use it. It was even harder to use than the IBM PC, but they said it was designed to be purchased by people who were supposed to be using their first computer."

While more than $40 million spent on advertising couldn't save the basically unpopular PCjr, other, more popular computers have been sabotaged by corporate marketing blunders.

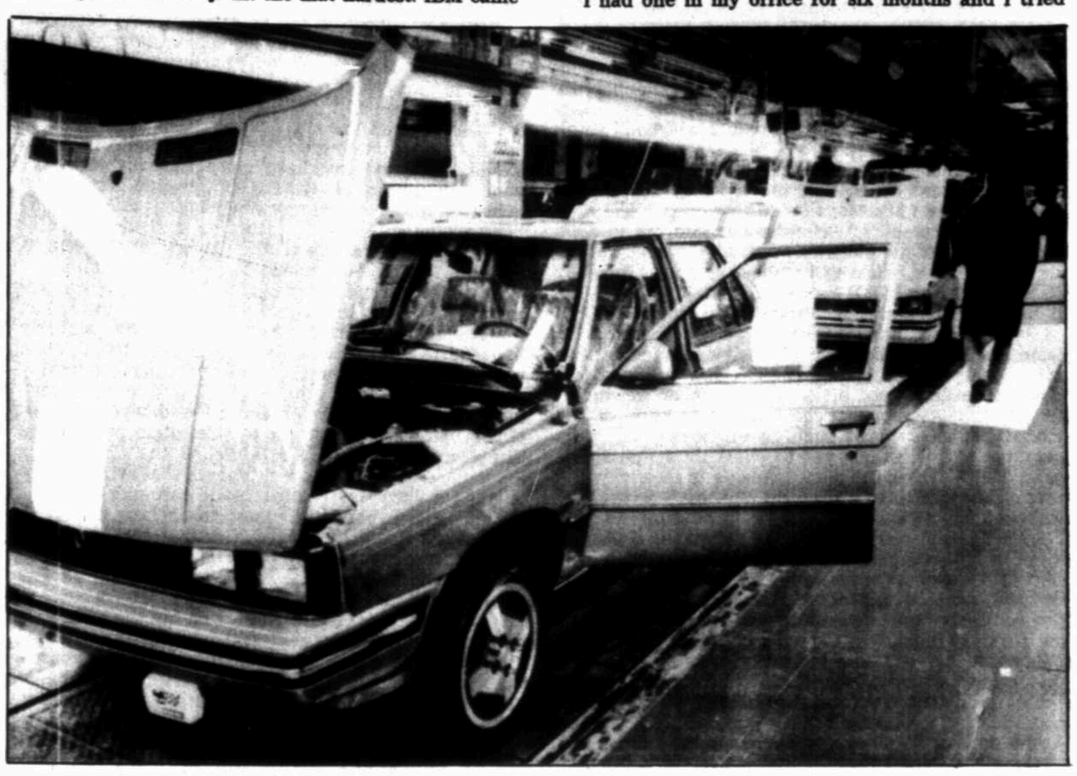

The Osborne I, the first low-cost portable personal computer, came with its own word-processing, database, spreadsheet, programming and communications software. In the space of two explosive years, Osborne became a $100 million-a-year company, then self-destructed overnight when the company first announced a new computer and then was unable to deliver it promptly.

When potential buyers heard about the improved features of the new system, they stopped buying the Osborne I in droves. The company was forced into bankruptcy before it could ship its new computer.

Personal computers can fall prey to corporate politics as well. Such was the fate of Apple's Lisa, first introduced with great fanfare and touted as "revolutionary" in 1983. Lisa was Apple's first foray into selling computers to large corporations. It was a technically advanced -- and expensive -- computer with features that were considered impressive.

While the Lisa was generally well-received by experts, it lacked the key backing of corporate Chairman Steve Jobs and took a back seat to the less-expensive Macintosh when it was introduced a year later. During the development of Lisa, Jobs had grown frustrated with that project and attached himself instead to the one that eventually designed and introduced the Macintosh.

Lisa was eventually renamed the Macintosh XL and merged into the Macintosh division at Apple. Several weeks ago, the company decided to kill the computer entirely because it was no longer profitable at its selling price.

Employers having trouble with insurance

By BILL KIDD

AUSTIN — Employers appear to be having increased problems in obtaining worker's compensation insurance coverage, based on requests to the Worker's Compensation Assigned Risk Pool for assistance.

Pool officials say the number of new policy assignments has been running between 1,000 to 2,000 monthly — but March and April brought 7,034 assignments and the trend seems to be continuing upward in May.

Those requests represent policies companies have refused to write or renew, or have cancelled.

Several reasons are being cited for the increase, including the previous writing of policies at "deviated" rates — rates other than those set by the State Board of Insurance — along with a drop in interest rates and investment income for insurers.

A "tight" reinsurance market, and increased total payroll to be covered, also are seen as contributing to the problem.

State Board of Insurance officials, particularly Chairman Lyndon Olson, have been warning that the insurance market in Texas (and the nation as a whole) is experiencing difficulties which may result in problems in obtaining coverage in various lines, including worker's compensation.

Members of the pool and the Texas Property/Casualty Guaranty Association also have adopted a joint resolution, contingent upon enactment of legislation, regarding payment of claims arising from insurer insolvencies.

The resolution is intended to eliminate an apparent conflict in the Insurance Code regarding such payments and the organizations say the resolution is a compromise to protect the interests of the public, claimants and the industry.

Banking Commissioner James L. Sexton says he's pleased with proposals by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. aimed at controlling "risk-taking" of banks, although Sexton adds implementing the proposals may require some changes.

While the FDIC hasn't put the proposals in the form of regulations, federal officials are seeking comments from the banking industry and regulators.

One proposal is to increase bank capital requirements from 6 percent to 9 percent, with another being to limit the amount uninsured depositors of failed banks would be repaid.

Sexton said the moves appear aimed at restoring "some sort of discipline . . . is to bring restrictions to bear on all banks," he adds.

FDIC officials say they're hoping to use market discipline to control bank growth, requiring an increase, over several years, in banks' ratio of capital.

A key feature reported in the plan is that the increase in capital would be through the sale of subordinated debt instruments — with the idea being that if the marketplace lacks confidence in a bank, those securities won't be sold.

American Banking Association officials have said that might work for nationally known banks, but smaller banks might have problems seling their debt.

Sexton says that he agrees having "some banks to have to go to the market and present their financial statements" in an effort to sell their debt may be helpful in controlling any speculative investments by banks — but also agrees that smaller banks culd have problems.

"Small banks might not be able to sell, even if they're good banks," Sexton said. "There's a question of whether there's a market out there."

But he adds the situation could result in "specialized firms for the marketing of subordinated debt."

Sexton also believes there has been an inequality in the treatment of large and small banks which have failed, saying "big banks, such as Continental Illinois, have been treated different."

If there is a limit on repayment of uninsured depositors, he said, "the people who put their money in big banks would be just as liable to lose it as those who put their money in small banks."

The Senate has approved legislation passed earlier by the House of Representatives, making abuse of a debit card a third-degree felong punishable by two to 10 years in prison, and a fine of up to $5,000.

HB 220 by Rep. Terral Smith, R-Austin, defines a debit card as "an indentification card, plate, coupon, book, number or any other devise allowing a designated person or bearer to communicate a request to an unmanned teller machine."

An offense would be created when a card is used without permission or after being revoked, expired or cancelled.

The bill is to take effecct September 1.

Bell Helicopter gets $20 million Cobra contract

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Bell Helicopter Textron will modify Marine AH-IT Cobra helicopters with a $20.5 million award from the U.S. Navy, House majority leader Jim Wright announced.

The award covers the engineering design, fabrication, installation and testing of a more modern and crashworthy fuel system for the Cobras, said Wright, D-Texas, on Thursday.

The twin General Electric T700-401 fuel systems will be installed in the Cobras at the company's Amarillo facility, officials said. Installation of the systems will begin in November 1986.

Texas American reports first quarter earnings up

Texas American Energy Corp. has reported a net earnings increase of 16 percent or a gain of 4 percent in consolidated revenues for the first quarter 1985, as cCare for the quarter ended March 1, 1985, reached $4,654,000, or 69 cents per common share (62 cents on a fully diluteare for the quarter ended March 1, 1985, reached $4,654,000, or 69 cents per common share (62 cents on a fully diluted basis), as compared with $4,016,000 or 56 cents per common share for the first quarter of 1984. Fully diluted earnings per hare are not applicable for 1984.

Texas American Energy's consolidation revenues for the quarter ended March 31, 1985, were $75,429,000, versus $72,400,000 for the comparable period a year earlier.

William F. Judd, president, attibuted the increase in consolidated revenues and earnings to Western Kentucky Gas Co., TAE's gas utility division serving the central and western sections of Kentucky. "The utility's operating results are weather-related and therefore are seasonal. Delivery volumes by WKG were 3 percent greater in the first quarter of 1985 than during the same 1984 period," said Judd.

Judd also commented that operating results for the oil and gas segment declined from the prior year, primarily due to increased depletion. Also certain recurring costs were incurred in the first quarter of 1985 while similar costs in 1984 were not incurred until the second quarter of that year.

Caterpillar head says 'there's no time to be a big wheel'

New York Times News Service

PEORIA, Ill. — Last summer, when Lee L. Morgan, the recently retired chairman of the Caterpillar Tractor Co., asked George A. Schaefer if he would accept the post of chairman, Schaefer requested two weeks to think it over.

For days, Schaefer, then an executive vice president, fretted about how difficult, even painful, it would be to serve as chairman of a company under siege. Caterpillar suffered $954 million in losses over the past three years and laid off almost 30,000 workers as part of a brutal cost-cutting campaign. Schaefer also worried that the demanding job would upset the tenuous balance he has created between his career and his family and community life.

Ultimately, his loyalty to Caterpillar and his reluctance to shy away from a challenge pushed him to accept the offer. But three months into the chairmanship, the 56-year-old former accountant has not laid all his doubts to rest.

"This is really no time to be a big wheel," said Schaefer, who took the wheel of the world's largest construction equipment company during an unprecedented crisis in the industry. "I wish I could believe that things have hit bottom. I'd feel better."

Since assuming his post on February 1, Schaefer has been trying to steer Caterpillar through a minefield of problems: A super-strong dollar is giving overseas rivals a 25 percent cost advantage over "Cat," as it is known in this old industrial center on the Illinois River. That financial edge is helping Japan's Komatsu Ltd., No. 2 in the industry, make its first big push into the American market. Komatsu doubled its sales here last year to about $300 million. "They're a formidable competitor," Schaefer admitted.

The mining and oil sectors haven't helped, either. The depression in those sectors has decimated demand. Furthermore, high real interest rates have domestic construction companies balking at buying new units of the familiar yellow Caterpillar tractors, loaders, graders and excavators. To make matters worse, the Third World's severe debt problems have cut those nations' demand for Cat's equipment by half.

Cat's competitors, including J.I. Case, Deere, Clark Equipment and Hitachi, are discounting deeply. Cat has been forced to discount, too. Its equipment now sells for less than it did in 1981.

WITH ALL OF THIS, Cat's 1984 revenues fell to $6.6 billion, a startling 23 percent drop from three years earlier.

It was therefore perhaps no great surprise when in the first quarter of 1985, at the start of Schaefer's stint as chairman, Cat reported a loss of $70 million. Its losses were even greater 1984's first quarter.

"Our overall guess is we can be marginally profitable in 1985," said Schaefer. "The big thing going for us is cost reduction."

In fact, Schaefer's overriding responsibility as chief executive is to oversee Caterpillar's cost-cutting efforts: paring the workforce, downsizing the company, improving manufacturing technologies and moving production offshore. Cat announced in 1982 that it would try to cut costs 22 percent by the end of 1986. Schaefer now says the company will reach that goal by the end of 1985.

And besides slashing costs, he is implementing programs he helped to design a few years ago — a venture capital subsidiary, a financial services unit and new-product development.

Schaefer's has a collegial style that has made him generally popular within the company. "He's very definitely a team player and genuinely liked by all the people here," said Peter P. Donis, currently executive vice president and Cat's president-designate. "I prefer to stay in the background and quarterback," explained Schaefer, who even refused to sit for a newspaper photograph because it might seem he was pushing himself rather than the Cat team.

ALTHOUGH THE SELF-effacing Kentucky native is hardly known outside Caterpillar, many industry observers say he will become well-known as chairman of one of the nation's most prominent heavy manufacturing companies. "People are looking to Cat to see if a heavy industrial company that has been beaten down by the strong dollar, by high labor costs, by declining demand can change enough internally and cut costs enough to turn itself around and be competitive," said Quain of Wertheim & Co..

Yet others question Cat's wisdom in tapping an accountant for the top job. "It's a manufacturing company that has seen its markets come under severe attack, so one might think that a marketing or manufacturing person would be best to steer Cat into more hospitable waters," said Andrew Silver, an analyst with Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette.

Schaefer, normally cheerful, chafed at the suggestion that he might not be up to the challenge. "I've been with the company over 34 years," he said, leaning his 5 foot, 9 inch frame forward in this chair as he made his point. "I've worked closely with engineers for 18 years."

After graduating from St. Louis University, Schaefer joined Cat in 1951. He held several auditing and accounting jobs before being named chief accountant in 1960 at the plant in San Leandro, Calif. From 1962 to 1968, he worked in Grenoble as finance and accounting manager of Caterpillar France, S.A. It was hard for him to get used to Grenoble at first, he said, but then he discovered skiing. "It's 30 minutes away from some of the best ski slopes in the world," said Schaefer, adding that after living in France, "it was almost as difficult to adjust to returning to the Midwest."

BY 1969 HE was back in Peoria, as manager of manufacturing systems development. Four years later, he was managing Cat's Decatur, Ill. plant, which makes road graders and off-highway trucks. In 1976, he became the company's vice president for financial and data processing functions. He was named executive vice president in 1981 and in 1983 made a company director. The vice chairmanship came in August 1984.

"George's earlier experiences were focused on financial functions," said Morgan, the retired chairman. "But he had several years of successful management where he was anything but a numbers cruncher. He was concerned with the broad spectrum — engineering, purchasing, employee relations. I don't think George has any blind spots."

In fact some analysts and company officials point out that a number cruncher at the top may be just the right thing for Cat's focus on cutting costs. "The only way we can compete," Schaefer has said, "is to have the best costs in the industry."

Cat has already slashed its blue-collar workforce by 40 percent, from 55,000 at the end of 1981 to to 33,000. It has also cut salaried employment from 30,000 to 23,500, a 21 percent reduction. "I get letters every day from employees who have been downgraded or laid off," Schaefer said during an interview in his unpretentious seventh-floor office at Caterpillar headquarters, adding: "It's one of the frustrating parts of the job." Often he reviews such an employee's situation personally, but he has yet to overrule a manager's decision. "We'll ask the plant manager to interview the person," he explained. "We want our people to see that we take them seriously."

Schaefer is also trying to make the strong dollar do some of the company's cost-cutting work. Nine percent of Cat's components came from abroad last year, and the company expects to raise that to 25 percent. Daewoo Heavy Industries Ltd. in South Korea is building forklift trucks that Cat sells under its own name. "We either had to find a lower cost base or get out of that business," said SchaeferW "There's no way we could produce lift trucks in the United States and compete."

And the company has closed five domestic plants and mothballed a tractor-producing plant in Davenport, Iowa, in favor of making tractors in Glasgow, Scotland and Grenoble, France. Costs at the European plants are 20 percent less than those at Davenport, said Schaefer.

BUT THE LAYOFFS AND outsourcing have not only devastated the Peoria area, where Cat is still the major employer, they have also hurt employee morale. "The workers don't feel very good about all the outsourcing" said Bill Casstevens, head of the Caterpillar negotiating committee for the United Auto Workers. "We'd like to discuss limits on it in next year's contract negotiations."

Still, at least one analyst says the cost-cutting has started to work. "They can now break even at the level of last year's sales, when they operated at roughly 53 percent of capacity," said Alexander Blanton, an analyst with Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith.

More cost-cutting would be difficult, says Schaefer. "Maybe we could get another 5 percent next year," he said, noting that future cost-paring would require hefty investment in robotics and flexible manufacturing machinery.

Cost-cutting is the cornerstone of Cat's struggle to rebuild itself, but there are other strategies in place. Asked in 1982 to take a hard look at Cat's direction, the company's business strategy conference, headed by Schaefer, made several recommendations that the company accepted last year. According to Donis, Schaefer "gave plenty of rein to all the players" at the conference, "yet he kind of orchestrated the whole thing."

At the conference's urging, Cat has set up a venture capital subsidiary that funds entrepreneurs inside and outside the company. The subsidiary has already invested in Fared Robot Systems, a Fort Worth company that develops precision manufacturing assembly systems. The money provided by Cat is an an investment, but it is also a hope that a Fared-developed system might be used by Cat to streamline production. The company has also established the Caterpillar Financial Services Corp., a subsidiary that arranges financing for hard-pressed dealers and customers.

And it has expanded its lines, too, selling hydraulic excavators made by a West German company and large lift trucks made by a Norwegian firm. And under its own brand name, the company is selling paving equipment made by the CMI Corp. of Oklahoma City. "The margins on sales are lower, but the return on investment is much higher," said Schaefer.

What's next? Soon Cat will begin marketing its "integrated tool carrier," a small excavator-like apparatus that can be put to dozens of uses. And, Schaefer says, remote control tractors and excavators, now under study at the company, may not be far off.

Economist says Houston economy reviving

DALLAS — Despite continued sluggishness in the energy industry, the Houston economy is reviving and much of the credit goes to service businesses that are surpassing the city's traditional economic leaders in producing growth, says RepublicBank Corp. Regional Economist Dr. Edward L. McClelland.

"An important feature of the current recovery in the Houston economy is that most of the growth is taking place outside the traditional areas of strength," Dr. McClelland states in the new May issue of the corporation's monthly Economic Perspective. "That suggests a significant diversification in business activity away from the goods-producing industries and towards service industries."

In the past year, 34,500 service jobs were created in Houston, compared to a rise of 4,000 in mining employment. The largest gains were in business and personal services — including finance, insurance and real estate — and government job growth ranked second as continued population increases necessitated additional workers to provide public services at the state and local levels.

At the same time, traditional pillars of Houston's economy — the energy industry, strong population growth, and healthy port activity — remain solidly in place and will play an important role in the city's future, Dr. McClelland states.

One plus side to the commercial and residential real estate picture is that high vacancy rates make Houston an inexpensive area for companies and individuals looking to relocate.

In addition, population growth continues at a healthy pace, Dr. McClelland says, with an estimated 21 percent increase in the past five years. It should expand to more than five million persons in the next 10 years, according to the Texas Department of Health, and a fast-growing market is hard for businesses to ignore.

And, the Port of Houston — the third largest in the nation — increased its volume of shipments last year and will continue to be a source of economic stability. Swings in the value of the dollar which hurt U. S. exporters do not have the same effect on American ports, which of course handle both exports and imports.

"Continued population growth and greater diversification will be the basis of near-term growth in the Houston economy," Dr. McClelland says. "The eventual recovery of the energy industry will add further to the economic health of the area.

Pizza factory owner says SBA saved his firm

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

The 1971 California earthquake cracked the walls of Pietro Vitale's Oh Boy pizza factory in Los Angeles' San Fernando Valley and would have tumbled the firm into bankruptcy, had it not been for a $400,000 loan from the Small Business Administration.

Three years later, the agency generously guaranteed a $388,000 loan to Vitale, and in 1981, when Oh Boy Corp. again teetered at the brink, the SBA came across with a $425,000 loan.

"The SBA has saved our skin again and again," says Vitale, an exuberant native of Naples, Italy.

Officials of the Reagan administration might offer a different description for Oh Boy, which has lost money in three years since 1970 and which came close three other times. They would probably describe the company as an "economic strap-hanger" — a weak firm that has been able to survive and compete only by dint of an open-handed Small Business Administration.

The administration's objections to such subsidies are a key reason that officials this year proposed to abolish the agency, an Eisenhower-era creation that was intended to stimulate business start-ups and help small firms better compete with large ones for credit.

The administration's initiative has renewed debate on whether the SBA gives a deserved lift to would-be entrepreneurs, or whether it is simply the designated welfare agency for the nation's 14 million small businesses.

While it seems unlikely that the proposal will win congressional approval in 1985, many observers believe that the issue will continue to simmer in years ahead as the Reagan administration continues efforts to pare the size of government.

Critics, including Budget Director David A. Stockman, maintain that there is no economic rationale for the SBA, since its loans go to only 2 percent of small businesses. Rather than bolstering a disadvantaged economic sector, they contend, the loans amount to gifts for a minority that are too weak to compete.

CRITICS ALSO CONTEND that the loan programs are wasteful and too easily abused, and that they have served as little more than a pork barrel for congressmen and senators who wish to dish out money to politically potent small business constituents. Legislators have used the agency in recent years to dispense loans to border-town retailers hurt by a devalued Mexican peso, tourist businesses hurt by gas-shortage scares, and even fertilizer salesmen hurt by federal regulations.

The administration has proposed to do away with the agency's programs of direct loans, guaranteed loans and disaster loans, which last year distributed $3.4 billion to 21,500 businesses. It would transfer to the Commerce Department such remaining activities as its minority aid, small-business counseling and programs for setting aside a portion of government contracts for small businesses.

Stockman says abolition would cut the deficit by $1.5 billion a year if the agency's loan portfolio is sold. Beyond cash received for the loans, a sale would save on staff and other operating expenses.

Resisting the proposal are a coalition of the program's small-business beneficiaries, a host of congressional allies and banks. The SBA's administrator, James C. Sanders, officially supports the administration's proposal but has mounted a quiet rear-guard action to preserve its autonomy.

The Reagan administration has already substantially reduced the size of the agency. Since 1980, the SBA payroll has fallen 20 percent, to 4,900 employees; in the last three years, direct loan volume has been cut 40 percent, and guaranteed loan volume 12 percent.

THE AGENCY'S LOAN programs have been accused of both waste and abuse from the beginning.

John Luke, an associate director of the General Accounting Office, the watchdog agency, says the agency's 32-year record is "replete" with examples of bad SBA loans.

They arise, he says, partly because the agency's mission is to help fledgling firms that are less credit-worthy than those that could turn to banks to raise capital. But the agency also has been too eager to pump loans out the door, "and not enough concerned with getting creditors to pay them back," Luke adds. Such practices have pushed the SBA loan default rates to a peak of of 23 percent in 1982.

Critics such as Stockman suggest that loan dollars flow most readily to "government-wise" applicants who are eager to take advantage of the SBA program's special attractions — among them, longer payback periods than are commercially available. While banks are reluctant to lend for more than three years, SBA loans average between seven and 10 years.

To be eligible for SBA money, applicants must demonstrate that their loan requests have been turned down by two banks. But those seeking SBA money say such rejections are easily obtained.

SBA officials contend that waste and abuse have diminished in the past two years under Sanders, as the agency has emphasized safe loans, and stopped judging loan officers' performance on how many loans they passed out.

Charles Herzberg, head of the SBA's business loan program, says there is no hard data yet to substantiate the claim of lower loss rates, but there are "early signs" of improvement.

He maintains also that there is now less reason for loan seekers to make phony applications for bank loans, since interest rates on direct SBA loans have been raised so that in many instances they are nearly as high as bank rates. SBA direct loans, however, continue to offer more favorable pay-back periods.

At the heart of the administration's SBA argument is its contention that the loan programs have no economic justification.

STOCKMAN TESTIFIED last month that the agency's resources are too small to help small business compete with big firms in any important way, or to finance the emergence of new industries. Only about 0.8 percent of the loans that went to high-technology industries between 1978 and 1982 were from the agency, he said.

But a large share of loans go to business sectors where competition is already fierce and start-ups frequent, such as the retail, wholesale and service sectors. Last year, they claimed 60 percent of the loan funds.

About $228 million in loans went last year to such independent professionals as doctors, lawyers, accountants and engineers, although their often-large incomes generally make them more credit-worthy and give them better access to commercial credit sources.

The loan program, Stockman argued, is also unfair to businesses that raise money on their own as it "sprays a faint mist of subsidized credit into the weakest and most prosaic nooks and crannies" of the economy.

Some SBA partisans insist small business would lose influence in the federal government if agency activities were transferred to the Commerce Deparment. "The SBA has been a good voice for small businesses," Sanders said in an interview.

American Petrofina sets quarterly dividend

DALLAS — The board of directors of American Petrofina, Inc. declared a quaterly dividend on 80 cents per share on the Class "A" and Class "B" common stock of the Company. The dividend is payable June 15, 1985, to shareholders of record at the close of business on June 4, 1985.

Texaco reports Gulf of Mexico gas strike

HOUSTON — Texaco has discovered natural gas on West Cameron Block 367, located in the Gulf of Mexico about 200 miles southwest of New Orleans.

The wildcat well, named Cuprite No. 1, tested at a daily rate of 8.5 million cubic feet of natural gas through an 18/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 3,610 pounds per square inch. The discovery was made in a Pliocene age sand through perforations from 10,244 to 10,263 feet. The well was drilled in 85 feet of water to a total depth of 11,012 feet.

The discovery is located on OCS-G5314 lease, which was acquired in Federal Offshore Lease Sale No. 72 in May of 1983. Texaco, Inc. is operator and hold a 33.33 percent in the discovery.

Gulf Publishing announces investment guide

HOUSTON — Gulf Publishing has published Laymen's Guide to Oil and Gas Investments and Royalty Income, which outlines governmental controls, oil and reserve estimates, leasing agreements and well testing. The new material in this all-new edition reflects the effect of the dramatic drop in drilling costs over the last three years, new tax deductions and write-offs, sample tax calculations, rights and royalties, conservation rules, regulations and laws, a thorough examination of lease agreement clauses, and a special section on OTC energy stock.

Marathon reports oil strike offshore Egypt

HOUSTON — Marathon Petroleum Egypt, Ltd, said that oil has been discovered in the Tawila West-1 exploratory well on the Um-Agawish concession in the southern Gulf of Suez offshore Egypt.

The well flowed 40-degree API gravity oil from two separate zones: 3,700 barrels per day on a 3/4 inch choke from 8,600 feet and 3,000 b/d on a 3/4-inch choke from 8,430 feet. A third shallower zone tested appreciable amounts of natural gas and condensate.

Pennzoil completes two Louisiana gas wells

HOUSTON — Pennzoil Co. has completed and started delivery from two 100-percent-owned natural gas wells in Terrebonne Parish, Louisiana.

The recently completed wells tested at combined rates of 16.6 million cubic feet of gas and 1,016 barrels of condensate per day.

The gas from both wells is being delivered under contract to United Gas Pipe Line Co.

Pennzoil drilled the Continental Land and Fur No. A-26 well in the Kent Bayou field to a total depth of 14,945, as a discovery and the deepest production yet for the field.

The Kent Bayou well tested 4.6 million cubic feet of gas and 233 barrels of condensate per day through and adjustable choke with 10,300 psi flowing tubing pressure. Additionally, more shallow pay exists in the wellbore for future production.

In the Deer Island field, Pennzoil made a significant extension to the Chris "I" reservoir. The Continental Land and Fur No. B-30 well tested at a rate of 12 million cubic feet of gas and 783 barrels on condensate on adjustable choke with flowing tubing pressure of 5,600 psi.

Infrared technology comes to opera, TV sets

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — When the Japanese Grand Kabuki theater company opens at the Metropolitan Opera in July, the audience will be bathed in an invisible light containing millions of bits of information.

About 1,000 people who have paid $5 each for special wireless headphones will pick up that information, hearing an English translation of songs and dialogue by the ornately costumed players with painted faces.

And this year, some television owners will be able to hear stereo sound while wearing headphones untethered to their sets. And passengers on Jet America, a California airline, can walk up and down the aisle while listening to one of 12 entertainment programs through wireless headphones supplied by the Hughes Aircraft Co.

Such pleasures are a result of advances in infrared technology by which sound and data are sent in bursts of light. The technology was first available about 10 years ago, largely to aid the hearing impaired. Now, it is being developed for general entertainment, language translation and uses in factories, offices and schools where wiring is expensive or entangling and radio frequencies are unavailable or impractical.

"What used to be a little sideline may become an important electronics market," said Horst A. Ankermann, engineering vice president of the Sennheiser Electric Corp., a Manhattan-based subsidiary of the German company and a leader in infrared technology.

The use of light — or, more properly, pulses of light and darkness — for communication is not new. American Indians sent up smoke signals, and in World War II the military sent Morse Code messages by flicking searchlights on and off from ships. More recently, infrared light, which is just outside the visible spectrum, has been used to send far more data much more quickly. The light pulses on and off tens of thousands of times a second and at certain frequencies.

In one typical infrared system, sound waves are first converted into electricity by a microphone. The electricity enters a diode — a semiconductor chip inside a glass bead. The chip emits infrared light when electrically agitated. The infrared bursts are picked up in a headset by a photocell that changes the bursts back to electricity. An amplifier converts the electricity back to sound.

Nonvisible light was chosen because visible light might be distracting. Infrared, unlike ultraviolet, is not dangerous. Although commonly associated with heat, infrared light in communications is of very low power and therefore cool. A TV infrared output emits about one watt an hour in heat — only about 1 percent of what a person gives off.

For communication within a single room, infrared light has several advantages over radio. First, radio frequencies are crowded, and it is difficult and costly to get regulatory approval. Second, infrared, being light, does not go through walls, so interference is minimal. Third, the operation of electrical equipment such as that in factories can interfere with radio, but not with infrared light.

The Controlonics Corp. of Fitchburg, Mass., is selling infrared systems to factories. John H. Turner Jr., the company's engineering vice president, said Controlonics and the Intel Corp. were showing the system to auto makers as a means for inspectors to transmit problems to a computer while a car was still on an assembly line, speeding rework. In offices, it may soon be used for noncabled communication between computers.

As with radio, portability and lack of wires are assets. Medical schools are using the system as a teaching tool. A doctor can hook a stethoscope to a portable infrared transmitter and 100 students, each with headphones, can hear the same patient's heartbeat. The doctor can roll the transmitter to different hospital rooms and repeat the process. Portable systems are also used in churches and for language translations in places ranging from courts to Walt Disney's Epcot Center.

The Hughes airline system will bring entertainment to passengers on existing narrow-body jets, in which conventional systems are too costly because each seat must be wired. Radio was ruled out because of possible interference with navigation.

So Hughes runs an infrared transmitter strip along the plane's ceiling and connects it to a conventional entertainment system. Passengers wear a three-ounce battery-operated headset that contains a receiver for digital signals. David A. Richardson, manager of Hughes's commercial avionics product line, said the equipment for a 150-seat jet costs about $50,000, comparable to a wired setup. The installation, however, is only $10,000, a third the usual cost, said Andrew J. Clayton, engineering manager for Jet America.

Jet America installed the system, called Aries, on one plane last September and is putting it in five more. "We're happy with the system," Clayton said, adding that it will be used as a marketing tool. The headsets cost $60 each. Jet America flight attendants keep track of who has them, so none have been lost, Clayton said. Delta, Ozark and Southwest said they were considering the system. One drawback is that direct sunlight, which includes infrared, can interfere with the signal, so some users may have to close their window shades.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration will try the system on the shuttle next year for communication between astronauts, according to Don E. Rhoades, an engineer at the Johnson Space Center near Houston.

North American Philips sells a TV stereo transmitter and headset for $99.95. Sennheiser's costs $277. Sears has a monaural system for $218. Prices have been dropping. "We will see a lot more of this in the next few years," said Sennheiser's Ankermann.

Technical Coatings reports first quarter loss

LUBBOCK (SWN) — Technical Coatings Inc. has announced results for the three months ended March 31.

For the first quarter of 1985, sales were $3,202,800 compared to $4,182,000 in the comparable period last year. There was an anticipated net loss of $32,200 vs. net income of $131,700, or $.02 per share, in the first quarter of 1984.

The company noted that the first quarter loss is consistent with results in previous years, with the exception of 1984 when a strong economic recovery resulted in unseasonably high volume.

Sales in the current quarter were unfavorably impacted by a downturn in the housing industry and severe inclement weather in the company's Texas markets. The loss reflects lower sales volume without an offsetting reduction in expenses.

Charles R. Horton, president, commented, "We plan to continue to broaden our marketing and distribution capabilities with the opening of new sales outlets and the enlargement of our sales force in Houston and Dallas. Based upon current levels of business and historical performance of the company, we are confident that the company's sales and earnings will rebound in the latter portion of this year, as it has done in the past."

Technical Coatings Inc. formulates, manufactures and markets architectural and industrial coatings, industrial maintenance paints which are sold to the general public, painting contractors, and industrial and commercial users, under the "TCI," "Tuffy," "Diamond," "Atlas," and "Associated" labels. The company operates five manufacturing facilities and 14 retail paint stores in Texas and Florida.

Drilling permits rise 10.4 percent

DENVER — Permits issued to drill for oil and gas in the U.S. totaled 1,773 for the week ending May 10, an increase of 10.4 percent from the 1,606 permits issued the previous week, accoring to Petroleum Information Corp.

During the same week a month ago, 1,750 permits were issued. For the same week in 1984, 2,207 permits were issued.

Permits to drill for oil and gas are monitored on a nationwide basis by PI. They are a measure of the drilling intentions of the nation's oil and gas operators.

Year-to-date, a total of 32,893 permits have been issued, a decrease of 10.9 percent from the 36,915 permits issued a year ago. New field wildcat permits issued in 1985 tota. 3,281. Other exploratory - deeper and shallower pool tests and field extensions - permits number 3,627 for the year, compared to 3,948 one year ago.

Development drilling permits show a decline of 12.1 percent compared with 1984. For the year, 25,985 permits have been issued in that category. During the same period in 1984,29,566 permits were issued.

Among the most active states for permits issued during the week were Texas with 565, Ohio with 208, Oklahoma with 205, Kentucky with 143, and Kansas with 95.

E-Systems reports net income up for second quarter

LITTLE ROCK (SWN) — Environmental Systems Co.has reported increased revenues and net income for the second quarter and six months ended April 30, 1985.

Environmental Systems earned $1.1 million, or 21 cents per share, on revenues of $11.7 million for the three months, compared with earnings of $311,000, or six cents per share, on revenues of $7.9 million for the same quarter in 1984. This represents nearly a four-fold increase in earnings on a 48 percent increase in revenues.

For the six-month period ended April 30, 1985, the company earned $2.6 million, or 49 cents per share, compared with a net loss of $71,000, or one cent per share for the same period of the prior year. Revenues of $23.4 million increased 60 percent from the $14.6 million for the 1984 six-month period. All per share figures have been adjusted for the May 15 two-for-one stock split.

H. Clay Robinson, president, attributed the improvement in both revenues and net earnings to continued growth in the incineration and transformer decommissioning business, contrasted with lower revenues and earnings in the first half of fiscal 1984 due to unscheduled downtime for maintenance at the company's El Dorado, Arkansas, incineration facility and weather-realted problems in the first quarter of fiscal 1984.

Environmental Systems Company is engaged primarily in the destruction of hazardous wastes by high temperature incineration. It also provides transformer decommissioning services. The company furnished a variety of other waste management services, including the reclamation of abandoned or problem hazardous waste sites. The company has developed and is currently marketing modular (mobile) hazardous waste incinerators. The company does not operate landfills or handle radioactive wastes.

Oklahoma City institution sets quarterly dividend

OKLAHOMA CITY (SWN) — Directors of Local Federal have declared the second consecutive quarterly dividend for the Oklahoma City-based financial institution.

James E. Woods, president and chief executive officer, announced that the dividend will be paid in the amount of 7-1/2 cents per share on June 24, 1985, to stockholders of record on June 10, 1985. Based on the 1,742,678 shares currently outstanding, the dividend would total approximately $130,700.

"Once again," said Woods, "we are able to declare a dividend because of our positive earnings trends and our strong capital position. We have recorded profits for the past seven quarters. Furthermore, Local Federal remains one of the strongest financial institutions in Oklahoma as the result of our 7.1 percent ratio of net worth to total average assets."

He added, "Our dividend of 7-1/2 cents per share for both this quarter and last quarter is equivalent to an annual dividend of 30 cents per share."

For the third quarter of fiscal 1985 ended March 31, 1985, Local Federal recorded a net income of $516,000 (30 cents per share).

Shanley Oil reports $1.8 million loss for fiscal 1984

Declining oil prices contribute to loss

DALLAS (SWN) — Shanley Oil Co. has announced that it had incurred a loss of $1,796,503 for the fiscal year ended December 31, 1984.

The majority of this loss, $1,100,000, was due to a write down of the Company's oil and gas property account, primarily as a result of declining oil and gas prices. Of the remainder of the net loss, $557,808 was attributable to the Company's on-going oil and gas operations and $138,695 was attributable to the results of operations of the Company's recently acquired subsidiary, Quick Fill.

Revenues for 1984 were $20,224,440, a 541.7 percent increase over 1983. This dramatic increase in revenues was due to the acquisition of Quick Fill which was effective on July 1, 1984.

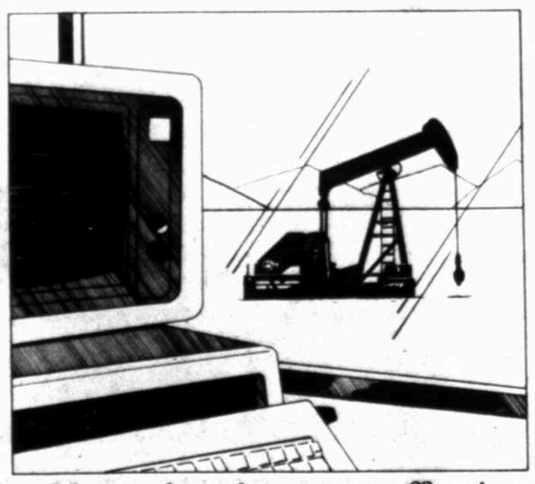

Cash Flow from operations before extraordinary items totaled $949,714 or $0.09 per share for 1984 compared to $1,075,529 or $0.13 per share for 1983.

The Company's proved reserves of crude oil increased 10.9 percent from 461,550 barrels of oil at 12/31/83 to 511,966 barrels of oil at 12/31/84. Shanley's proved reserves of natural gas decreased 8.3 percent from 6,952,301 MCF of gas at 12/31/83 to 6,377,065 MCF of gas at 12/31/84.

Neal G. McCabe, Chairman, said, "Management was pleased that the Company was able to maintain its oil and gas reserves as of December 1984 at a level approximately equal to December 1983 while substantially diversifying the Company's business into areas not affected by the relatively poor state of the oil and gas industry." McCabe noted that oil and gas production during 1984 accounted for only 16.7 percent of the Company's revenues which signals a major change in the direction of the Company's business.

Japanese research laboratory innovative environment

New York Times News Service

YOKOHAMA, Japan — All day long, researchers wander in and out of their glass-walled laboratory here, running the experiments that turn out several new inventions each day. They have no regular assigned hours and no dress code, and work on a bonus system with only modest fixed salaries. Outside, they can see what looks like a Japanese-style doghouse, complete with tiled roof and four cats, a tribute to the company president's affection for cats.

The president is Kiyoshi Inoue, an eccentric individualist. And his two companies — Japax Inc. and Inoue Japax Research — are not only unconventional, but standouts as well in an economy where freewheeling venture businesses are rare. His companies are often cited as among the few here truly engaged in high-technology research. But he is among the first to say that in Japan, the environment for venture businesses is harsh.

His assessment is echoed by many businessmen and government officials. Small businesses devoted to developing new, high-technology products face a formidable number of social and economic obstacles, they say.

Top university graduates still shrink from working for any but the largest companies and managers still frown on the mobile employee. The venture capital industry is underdeveloped and cautious. Finally, Japan's tax system and capital markets provide few incentives for potential investors.

"I am not confident about the existence of a venture boom," said Hideyuki Yamamoto,chief economist of the industrial research division of the Long Term Credit Bank of Japan, the first company to establish a venture capital business, in 1972.

Last year, the bank conducted a survey of nearly 200 venture businesses, and some of the findings were not encouraging.

Compared with American venture businesses, said Toshiaki Tanaka of the bank's industrial research division, a typical Japanese venture was more often a spin-off from an established business or the result of a traditional company switching its product line to a high-technology one. Japanese ventures also grew more slowly and achieved fewer technological breakthroughs than American companies, he added.

No one is certain how many genuine venture businessesexist here, but officials at the Ministry of International Trade and Industry say that perhaps only 300 are actually high-technology ventures.

If a company does have new technology, it has little chance of receiving money until it is two or three years old. Few of Japan's 40 or so companies involved in financing venture companies will back start-up businesses, preferring to wait for more established companies, Yamamoto said. The start-ups usually turn to family or friends.

"The venture capital business in Japan is still in the cradle," said Teiji Imahara, president of the Japan Associated Finance Company, a venture capital firm founded in 1973.

When Imahara became president of his company six years ago, he went to the United States to learn from the venture capital giants in Boston, New York and San Francisco. He believes that so far the counterparts in Japan fall short.

The government is trying to help some of the more promising venture companies. Ichiro Nakajima, a director of the research and development-oriented enterprises office of the Ministry of International Trade and Industry, said the agency was trying to encourage venture businesses by guaranteeing loans up to $400,000.

The program, begun 10 years ago, had a shaky start — 85 percent of the companies it tried to help eventually failed. Now, however, the government has learned to be more selective, and more companies have survived, Nakajima said.

Most of the companies that do well are led by strong-willed engineers who quit larger companies, such as Inoue of Japax, who left what he termed the "prison" of Mitsubishi Heavy Industries.

Melissa Gilbert...

...she's grown up on-screen

Melissa Gilbert, known to TV viewers as Laura on "Little House on the Prairie," stars in the movie "Sylvester," which was filmed near Marfa.

By KATHY LARKIN
King Features Syndicate

It's hard to believe she's been working for 17 years, but then Melissa Gilbert looks younger than her 20 years.

She got her first working papers for a baby commercial before she was 3. By age 9, she had appeared in more than 30 commercials. She literally grew up on-screen in the long-running "Little House on the Prairie" for almost a decade from age 8 to 18, playing Laura Ingalls Wilder.

She was the kid whom her mentor, series star and producer/director Michael Landon once summed up with: "She was a tiny little squirt...but, boy, was she determined to do a good job!"

Some, but not all, things have changed since then.

The grown-up Melissa Gilbert is still determined to do a good job. But that means globe-hopping. And she has a fear of flying. "Traveling is one thing and flying another," she says."Once in another city, I love exploring, and once I'm in the air, I'm fine. But I'm afraid of taking off and landing; especially when they put that 'No Smoking' sign on and strap everyone down. Still, I have to fly a lot because I must be in so many places so quickly."

In the past 12 months, Ms. Gilbert has spent over 30 percent of her time breathing deep and practicing flight control. She winged to England to visit boyfriend Rob Lowe on location, shot her movie debut, "Sylvester," in Texas and Kentucky, flew to Canada where Lowe was on another movie set and soared home to California...crossing her fingers all the way.

There were no problems in all that globe-hopping. But when she got home to California just months ago, Ms. Gilbert was diagnosed as a prime case of walking pneumonia. "I was stuck in bed for weeks," she says, shaking her head. Then she got poison oak. And sppn after came the "Sylvester" tour, which was at once exciting and exhausting.

Ms. Gilbert has been logging the times, places and miles she has traveled since February, when her movie/media promotion tour blasted off from Chicago. Before it is over, she will have zig-zagged through Atlanta, Ga.; Lexington, Ky.; New York City; Daytona Beach, Fla.; Washington, D.C.; Dallas; Houston; Kansas City; Minneapolis; Detroit and San Francisco.

Ms. Gilbert finally landed at home in the place where she feels as secure as a fledgling landing in a nest — the guest cottage behind her mother's house. It is a home divided between art deco and pure nature. Trees and plants mix with art deco wall fixtures, raw silk sofas threaded with pink and green sit on natural straw carpets, a rainbow-shaded bedroom seems perfect for a small house with a front that is window after window after window pulling the outside into Ms. Gilbert's living space.

There are skylights, too, even above the queen-sized bed near the pink and white bathroom, the one just down the hall from Ms. Gilbert's all-white kitchen.

She says, "I'm a good cook when I feel like it. But it takes me time to prepare things. I'm not a fast cook. I like to put time and effort into what I do. But I'm both great and fast at cheesecakes and omelets."

Open Ms. Gilbert's closet and you'll find clothes that are always comfortable, but sometimes switch moods. There are old well-worn clothes and "slouching-around" man-tailored fashions.

Explains Ms. Gilbert: "I really don't have a single favorite way of dressing. But I do like separates and a lot of jackets, a lot of shoes. I'm a shoe freak."

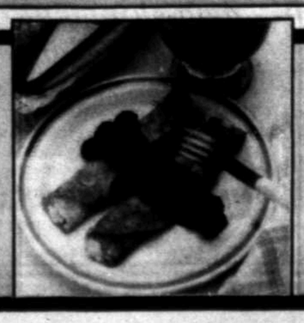

The talk suddenly changes to Rob Lowe. Of him, she says, "It's serious but fun. We don't take it too seriously, Rob and I. That is, it's a serious relationship, but not like marriage. We're not engaged at all. (We're) far too young."

BETWEEN THE LINES

Antony Hamilton

Q. Could you please tell me about Antony Hamilton of "Coverup"? How old is he, is he married, how tall is he and where is he from?

Teresa Dultt
Davenport, Iowa

A. He's 30, single, 6-2 and has "the bluest eyes you will ever see," according to an associate. He is English-born, but was adopted as a baby by an Australian couple and brought up in that country. "He definitely considers himself Australian," explains the associate. He originally trained as a dancer, became a soloist with the Australian Ballet and traveled the world with the company.

During a stint in London a few years back, however, he began to doubt whether he had the dedication necessary to maintain a career in that field. He left ballet, drifted into modeling in London and Australia, and two years ago moved into acting.

His first role was in the TV remake of "Samson and Delilah," followed by "Hercules." Ironically, he auditioned for the lead in the TV movie "The Making of a Male Model," but lost out to the actor he would later replace on "Cover Up," the late Jon-Erik Hexum.

He and Hexum also studied acting together, so he was initially uneasy about taking over the series. Now, he's just grateful for a chance to learn how to act. As we go to press, though, he's still awaiting word of whether or not the series will be picked up for next season.

Cyndi Lauper

Q. I want to know if Cyndi Lauper is ever going to make another album or if she's going to have only one?

T.D.
Springfield, Ore.
Dan Kennelly
Ontario, Canada

A. Cyndi had such enormous success with the album "She's So Unusual" — meaning a record-setting number of hit singles from it — that it may seem like the only album she'll ever have. However, she does have plans for more. According to her management company, she went into the studio last month to start recording.

She's also recorded the title song for the Steven Spielberg-produced film "Goonies," and should have one video for it, featuring her mother and various Goonies, out this month. Another video, continuing the adventures of the first, should be released along with the film next month. Besides her music ventures, she also plans to continue her wrestling.

Martin Sheen

Q. Will Martin Sheen be doing any new projects soon?

K.C.
Clarks Summit, Pa.

A. That answer is usually yes, since Sheen seems to work continually. He has an upcoming TV movie on CBS, "Zigo's Choice," the story of the New York detective who cracked the "Son of Sam" murders case. Now he is in Europe filming "Chain Reaction," a feature, with Tim Pigott-Smith (Ronald Merrick of the PBS miniseries "The Jewel in the Crown") and Frances Tomelty, Sting's ex-wife.

He was also in Nicaragua at Christmas, so there may be plans developing through his production company for a film about the conflicts in that country. Sheen is socially conscious and prefers projects that contain social themes.

Q. I'm a fan of Ken Wahl's and I really enjoyed his performance in the film "Purple Hearts." Could you tell me a little about him and whether he has any upcoming projects?

S.B.
Pensacola, Fla.
J.B.
Rock Island, Ill.

A. He's 27, from Chicago, had originally intended to become a baseball player and was working as a gas-station attendant seven years ago when he decided to move to Hollywood and become an actor. (The money and the weather, he figured, had to be better.)

He had no acting experience, no contacts and no money, but he never doubted that he'd succeed. He gave himself 18 months to pull it off, and within eight months, he did — winning the lead in the film "The Wanderers."

That led to parts in the films "Running Scared," "Fort Apache — The Bronx" (it starred one of his idols, Paul Newman), "The Soldier," "The Race for the Yankee Zephyr" and "Jinxed," in which his running feud with co-star Bette Midler was so intense that he said he could only play the love scenes by thinking of his dog. (Ms. Midler said the whole experience drove her to a breakdown.) His current project, as we go to press, is the series "Double Dare" with Billy Dee Williams.

He's married to former Penthouse Pet of the Year Corrine Alphen.

Ken Wahl

Q. Could you please tell me if Robert Redford is still making films? We really enjoy them.

Marie Close
Fredericton, N.B., Canada

A. He is, indeed. Redford has made no secret of the fact that he's thinking of making a complete switch to directing, and he's been developing a number of films to direct. (His first, you may remember, "Ordinary People," won him an Oscar.) He does have an upcoming film as an actor: "Out of Africa" co-starring Meryl Streep. It's based on Isak Dinesen's 1937 book, Ms. Streep portrays Dinesen, Redford is her lover, Dennis Finch-Hatton, and it's scheduled for release at Christmas.

Robert Redford

Q. Could you tell me if the boy who plays Bill Cosby's son on his show is his real son?

E.F. Lewis
Fairview, N.J.

A. No. There are similarities between Cosby's real and TV families, among them that both wives' names begin with "C" and there are five children, four girls and a boy. Cosby's son is Ennis Cosby and his TV son is actor Malcolm Jamal-Warner.

MELISSA

Gilbert

She adds, "I know a lot of people say actors shouldn't get involved with other actors, but as far as I'm concerned, I really like having that common denominator.

"I can remember dating a football player and having an awful time trying to explain just why I had to get up, leave him at a dinner table and talk to a magazine writer. He didn't like that at all."

She and dark-haired Lowe are somewhat alike. "We're not opposites really, but we're not exactly the same in personality. He's strong and very opinionated. We're supportive of each other. And we're a good balance. We rarely butt heads. We both love the beach and casual fun, dinner, movies, watching TV."

Ms. Gilbert, in one sense, grew up with acting. Adopted as an infant in Los Angeles when she was just a day old, she found her home and future with former actress Barbara Abeles and her then-husband the late Paul Gilbert, a comedian who made several films before his death. And Ms. Gilbert's maternal grandfather, Harry Crane, a TV comedy writer, has worked for the likes of Jackie Gleason, Dean Martin and Danny Thomas.

They are her family and she has never felt the need to search for another. "I was adopted when I was a day old. My younger brother, Jonathan (who also did a "Little House" stint), is adopted too, because my father couldn't have children. My little sister, Sarah, is the child of my mother and my stepfather. We're a family.

"And yes, I've wondered recently about my natural parents. Before that it never really occurred to me that there were other people outside my family. And in the end, that's still true. I really don't have any interest in finding them, because it just doesn't make any sense. I had the most loving, supportive disciplinary parents possible. Why mess with that?"

Her mother, insists Ms. Gilbert, is more than model, turned actress turned wife. "She's Mom. She was never a pushy stage parent. She was never around on the set anyway, because she had two other children to raise. And neither she nor anyone in my family ever pushed me into acting. She wanted me to be a doctor. I think she still does.

"My parents split when I was maybe 7 or 8, for their own reasons. But it never seemed to me like they were divorced. I didn't feel like a child of divorce. I was not pulled from side to side. Daddy was always at the house. He was always visiting. He was there when I came home from school. The only difference was that he didn't sleep in the house."

Adds Ms. Gilbert, "I was so lucky. After the divorce, my parents were somehow still friends...Mommy would take me to Daddy's shows and when Daddy got sick, she went and took care of him. He had a girl friend, but it didn't matter. I really admire them for not inflicting their differences on us children..."

She remembers her father dying. "He had his second stroke. The first time, he went to the hospital (and) the doctor said he'd never walk again. But my father rehabilitated himself and he did walk and he worked. The second stroke hit in his sleep.

"I had a real hard time at first because I thought he'd just had another stroke. Even when my mother said he passed away, it never occurred to me that meant 'Full Stop!' "

Adds Ms. Gilbert, "The actual reality of death didn't register for about 20 minutes. When it did, after that, I had a hard time being alone. I couldn't sit alone at night and I couldn't sleep. But I recovered fairly quickly.

"It still hurts. It's never a great thing to have happen. And there are times when I miss him still a lot. But although I loved my father very much, I find it harder and harder to remember..." she says, her voice trailing off.

Speaking of her stepfather, show business lawyer Harold Abeles, now divorced from her mother, Ms. Gilbert says he acted like "a stepfather," adding in an obvious effort to be fair, "He was very helpful with me in school, but we never got very close. I don't really talk about that very much. He was my little sister's father.

"...It's very hard for a little girl to accept another man coming in and taking a father's place, no matter how often he says he's not doing that. Inside, you don't believe it. He's there."

There is one undiluted hurrah for her stepfather. He and Ms. Gilbert's mother, Barbara, produced Sarah, now 10. Ask Ms. Gilbert about that and a smile as involuntary as daylight slowly spreads across her face. "Sarah is a great kid — bright, loving, warm and funny."

Leaning forward, suddenly eager, Ms. Gilbert starts to laugh. "I remember a point when Rob and I were going through a bad patch. And along comes Sarah, explaining things to me, 'I know this is hard to understand now, Melissa, but when you stand for what you believe in, people will come back to you. And you won't be cheating on yourself.' This is my baby sister!"

Brother Jonathan, the middle child who joined Ms. Gilbert on "Little House" and more than once threatened to "punch out" anyone who harmed her "just wants to be a billionaire businessman," says Ms. Gilbert.

Growing up for Ms. Gilbert — despite the "baby star" syndrome was relatively painless. She recalls just two of the 30 commercials she did: a Clorox ad in the San Diego zoo, where she gulped down (and spilled) so many raspberry sherbets that she has never tasted one since, and a Kodak spot with the late Henry Fonda. "He was so nice to all us kids; I still cherish a framed picture of that at home."

"Little House on the Prairie" was an education indoors and out. Inside, there were the snatched, but very comprehensive on-set lessons with Helen Minniear, who Ms. Gilbert calls "a great lady." Ms. Minniear tutored Ms. Gilbert from fifth grade through senior year and a cum laude degree from her traveling high school.

Meanwhile, there was another world of on-site education to study. Recalls Ms. Gilbert, "I remember seeing cattle get born and chickens lay eggs. Growing up partially in farm surroundings was wonderful."

She adds, "I never felt a loss. I didn't miss anything. I didn't miss a childhood. And I had opportunities few children have had."

Ms. Gilbert is grown up. She makes the gossip pages: flashing into the opening night of Al Pacino's "American Buffalo" with Rob Lowe two years ago, still dancing into disco spotlights with him. And she is big business.

When Ms. Gilbert turned 15, her personal manager formed Half-Pint Productions for Ms. Gilbert and her mother. The title was taken from Gilbert's nickname on the "Little House" set.

The company has so far given her five starring roles plus largely critical applause in "The Miracle Worker" (which brought her an Emmy nomination), "The Diary of Anne Frank," "Splendor in the Grass," "Choices of the Heart" and "Family Secrets."

Her portrayal of Anne Frank brought praise and a single reservation from New York Daily News critic Kay Gardella. Ms. Gilbert, she said, was "perhaps a little too strident." But the critic added, "She's a talented young actress. Bucking Joan Plowright and Maximilian Schell isn't easy. She's in with the big leaguers, but is unfaltering and comes through admirably."

With "Choices of the Heart," an NBC-TV movie focusing on Jean Donovan, the lay worker murdered with three missionary nuns in El Salvador, Gilbert ranged from age 9 to 29 and had the challenge of portraying a real person within the lifetimes of the people who knew her.

Better than an Emmy nomination was the accolade she received from Ms. Donovan's family. "The greatest review I got was from her parents. They sent me her crucifix."

In another TV special, "Splendor in the Grass," Ms. Gilbert tackled a ghost, the haunting memory of a young Natalie Wood in love with Warren Beatty. Ms. Gilbert was playing Ms. Wood's role — Deanie Loomis, the 1928 heroine who desperately wants to leave Kansas.

In retrospect, Ms. Gilbert is not so sure she did well by Deanie Loomis. "It was a challenge. I'm not sorry I made it, but I wish I'd waited a little longer. I don't think I was ready for it. Here I was playing a girl so consumed by her love for this guy that it drives her crazy and, at that point, I really didn't have anything to relate it to, because it was an emotion I hadn't felt yet.

Ms. Gilbert's latest effort, "Sylvester," the saga of a girl called Charlie, a young man and an underrated race horse christened for Sylvester Stallone, earned mixed reviews.

But Ms. Gilbert insists she liked her role playing with Richard Farnsworth and Michael Schoeffling, and she especially liked her character Charlene Railsberg, aka Charlie.

European artwork loaned to UT

AUSTIN — Four important works of European art ranging from the 15th to the 19th centuries have been placed on indefinite loan at the University of Texas Archer M. Huntington Art Gallery.

Lent by an anonymous donor, the works are from one of the most valuable corporate art collections in the world. In 1981, that same collection lent the Huntington Gallery 45 pieces of ancient Asia Minor, Etruscan, Greek, Roman, Egyptian and Celtic art.

One of the rarest items in the recent loan is an altarpiece, "The Virgin and Child, St. James and St. John the Baptist, and St. Nicholas of Bari and St. Anthony Abbot," attributed to Niccolo Di Pietro Gerini, a popular Florentine artist who was active between 1368 and 1415.

The large Gerini triptych probably came from a Florentine-area church, according to Eric McCready, director of the Huntington Gallery. He called the Italian panel painting "very rare" and said it would be useful for teaching.

"We have nothing from the 15th century," he said. "We are delighted to have the Gerini."

The altarpiece is on view in the Huntington's exhibition space on the second floor of the Harry Ransom Center.

The three other new loans may be seen on the Ransom Center's first floor. They include:

— "Let He Who Is Without Sin Cast the First Stone," a large 1741 oil painting by Sebastiano Conca, a Naples-born artist who worked in Rome. The style is that of the late Italian Baroque period.

— "In the Dunes, The Algerian Sahara," an 1880 painting by Gustave Guillaumet, a 19th century French artist known for "Orientalizing" works that depicted scenes of the Near and Middle East.

— "Ratapoil," one of Honore Daumier's rare bronze statues. The 17-inch work was done about 1890 by the French artist, who is best known as a lithographer and caricaturist.

UTPB to be offering art classes

ODESSA — The U.T. Permian Basin art department is sponsoring two courses this summer that offer learning opportunities for the accomplished artist as well as the person who is learning how to express themselves artistically.

Pam Price, associate professor of art, will be teaching "Silkscreen" and "Advanced Drawing II" Monday through Thursday during the University's first six-week session which begins June 4.

The classes can be taken for credit or under the University's "Encore" program, which allows anyone to participate in the class for no credit.

In describing the silkscreen course, Ms. Price said, "One of the more appealing features of this course is the fact that each student will learn how to construct their own silkscreen frame so at the end of the class they'll have the proper equipment to continue working in this medium on their own."

Ms. Price said the other course, "Drawing II," will be equally exciting and rewarding for advanced students as well as beginners.

"There are no prerequisites except a willingness to be creative, I would even recommend this class to business majors because we will emphasize creative problem solving.

For more information on these classes call the university.

Rocky rides again in 'Rambo'

By DAVID LEE FORREST

Forrest

This summer is bringing a new crop of cowboy movies to theater screens, but "Rambo — First Blood Part II" shows that the revival wasn't really necessary. The B-grade Western has just moved to the Far East.

"Rambo" is the sequel to Sylvester Stallone's biggest non-"Rocky" hit, "First Blood." In that 1982 movie Stallone played a Vietnam veteran who went beserk and waged a one-man war on a small town after being unjustly arrested and harassed.

Stallone's performance was the most extreme parody imaginable of that stock 1970's stereotype, the freaked-out Vietnam vet. The frightening thing about it was that the parody may not have been deliberate; Stallone seemed to be taking the role seriously.

Much of "First Blood" was also about as plausible as "Raiders of the Lost Ark." Despite this — or perhaps because of it — the movie's crisp direction and crackling action scenes made it a surprisingly big hit.

Now Stallone has brought back his ex-Green Beret character — John Rambo — and sent him back to Southeast Asia to milk the material that Chuck Norris proved profitable in his two low-budget "Missing in Action" films.

In the process, his tough, laconic Rambo character tries to make John Wayne look like a talkative wimp.

Rambo is sprung from prison by his old mentor, played by Richard Crenna, to go on a secret mission back into Vietnam to see if American MIAs are still being held prisoner there.

Rambo goes into 'Nam by himself like any proper cowboy loner would in a Western, although he does acquire an improbably pretty female sidekick along the way.

Of course, he instantly finds a bunch of POWs that for over a decade no one else has been able to prove exist.

Then he's double-crossed by an American intelligence officer, played by Charles Napier (who bears a considerable, and surely intentional, resemblence to Brian Dennehy, who played the villianous sheriff in "First Blood").

Napier gives a wildly ridiculous reason for his government-approved conspiracy. Meanwhile, Rambo, trapped in the jungle, gets mad.

After he is captured by the enemy, beaten, stripped, submerged in pool of pig excrement, covered with leeches, electrocuted, cut and burned with a white-hot knife, Rambo still has more than enough energy to wipe out a few squads of Russian soldiers and an entire army of Vietnamese troops.

Bullets, mortar shells, bombs and missles don't faze him for a second. One doubts that even kryptonite would slow down this Super Stallone.

Most of this combat is as stylized as the climactic shoot-out at the OK Corral. Rambo never runs out of bullets when he needs them; his machine gun clips are apparently virtually bottomless. For bigger jobs, there's somehow always a handy rocket launcher right next to him.

Just like the hero of any old Saturday matinee serial never got separated from his hat, Rambo keeps managing to come up with his fancy Bowie knife. Trigger was no more loyal to Roy Rogers than Rambo's knife is to him.

A screenplay this overblown has to be premediated and a clue to the culprit can be found in the film's credits. "Rambo" was co-written by James Cameron, who recently wrote and directed the witty "Terminator" starring Arnold Schwarzenegger as an equally indestructible killing machine, a performance which already seems destined to be a camp classic.

Stallone also co-wrote "Rambo" and it shows. The camera is constantly shooting extreme closeups of Stallone's big, sweaty musculature and gazing into deep into his heavy-lidded eyes.

Thankfully, Stallone didn't give himself much dialogue. Stallone probably remembers how disasterous it was when he tried to open his mouth and sing in the last year's awful "Rhinestone." Most of the few lines Rambo has, he mumbles like an inexpressive Marlon Brando imitator.

If "Rambo" proves popular, there won't be any mystery as to why. Like "First Blood," it is loaded with swift, well-choreographed action that doesn't need to be taken seriously to be enjoyed.

Actually, the only mystery about "Rambo — First Blood Part II" is why it wasn't titled either "Second Blood" or "Rocky Rides Again."

"Rambo — First Blood Part II," rated R for strong violence, is now showing at the UA Cine IV.

'Future Kill' has simplistic, violent plot

No doubt this is just what some movie fans have been waiting for — a film that reteams the man who played the psychotic hitchhiker in "The Texas Chainsaw Massacre" with the woman who played the sole survivor of that same gory cult film.

While Edwin Neal — the "Chainsaw" hitchhiker — does play a killer named Splatter and Marilyn Burns — the "Chainsaw" heroine — plays his ex-girlfriend in the new made-in-Texas movie "Future-Kill," the two films don't really have that much in common.

Instead of being a "Chainsaw" clone, "Future-Kill" is more like "Animal House" meets "The Warriors."

The movie revolves around a flamboyantly dressed sub-culture of anti-nuclear protesters, who call themselves "Mutants." Their appearance is, in fact, so New Wave-ish that they must spend considerably more time applying make-up than they could possibly devote to protesting nuclear energy.

All the Mutants — except the appropriately named Splatter — supposedly espouse pacifism, although most of them actually get quite violent early in the film.

The more straightforward Splatter's sole pleasure in life is killing people with the sharp, shiny metal accessories he wears with his black leather punk outfit, which looks like it came from the latest sequel to "Mad Max."

After introducing the Mutants, the film abruptly shifts to the occasionally funny — and completely juvenile — antics of a group of fraternity members. The frat president decides, for no particularly good reason, that it would be fun to go kidnap a Mutant.

They drive down to Mutant turf and manage to walk right up to the absolutely wrong Mutants to mess with — the group's leader and Splatter. Splatter coolly uses the confusion to waste the chief Mutant — who has annoyed the psychopath by lecturing him on nonviolence once too often — and blames the killing on the frat boys.

The rest of the movie is basically an extended chase scene about the frat's efforts to get out of Mutant territory alive.

"Future-Kill" definitely owes a great deal to Walter Hill's 1979 film "The Warriors," which was about a New York street gang trying to escape enemy turf after being accused of killing an important gang leader. Like "The Warriors," "Future-Kill" has a simplistic, violent plot leavened with a certain amount of visual style.

"Future-Kill" is otherwise a throughly home-grown product. The movie, like "Chainsaw," was shot primarily in the Austin area using local talent.

Perhaps the most enjoyable part of the movie for people who have lived in or visited Austin is trying to identify all the locations seen in the film, most of which is set along Congress Avenue, Sixth and Fourth streets.

The use of so many local — and often unprofessional — performers does cause the film to have some highly uneven acting.

The film's worst flaw, however, is its attempt to stress peaceful co-existence between people of different backgrounds. While this is a highly admirable sentiment, the pious dialogue used to make the point is so stilted that it's almost painful to hear.

On the plus side, "Future-Kill" features a lot of great music by Austin rock bands, including The Lift, the Big Boys and Max and the Makeups. While one can question the wisdom of bringing the plot to a complete halt for a two-song performance by Max and the Makeups, the bands do enliven the soundtrack.

On the whole, "Future-Kill" is not very good, but for such an obviously low-budget exploitation film, it does display an impressive amount of verve and is energetic enough to satisfy action-film buffs, except for the really seriously blood-thirsty ones, like hardcore "Chainsaw Massacre" fans.

"Future-Kill," rated R for a great deal of violence and some nudity, is now showing at the UA Cine IV.

Peter, Paul & Mary to play at Kerrville Folk Festival

KERRVILLE — While a number of newcomers are added to the roster of the Kerrville Folk Festival every year, 10 first timers are playing in 1985 including Peter Paul & Mary; and it is the family of original performers and old favorites who give the festival its warm and familiar feeling.

The 11-day festival is in its 14th year and runs through June 2 at Rod Kennedy's Quiet Valley Ranch, presented this year in association with "Texas Monthly." During the nine nights of concerts 63 performers will play for an hour or so on the Outdoor Theater stage and more than 50 of them have been there before and will play to large, loyal followings.

Original artists returning this year who played the 1972 festival, the first one, include Carolyn Hester, Allen Damron, Bill and Bonnie Hearne, Bobby Bridger, Gary P. Nunn, Bill Oliver, Robert Shaw, Peter Yarrow, Kurt Van Sickle, Ray Wylie Hubbard and Rev. Charlie Sumners, Jr.

Those joining the festival early in the '70's after the first year who are returning this year include Jerry Jeff Walker, Townes Van Zandt, Shake Russell, Rusty Wier, Nanci Griffith, Guy Clark, Marcia Ball, Lindsay Haisley and Butch Hancock.

Among others in the roster who are returning by popular demand are David Amram, Bob Gibson, Dee Moeller, Peter Rowan, Tom Paxton, Riders in the Sky and Billie Joe Shaver.

Those purchasing tickets for three or more days camp free and about 2000 fans take advantage of this cook-out, camp-out, sing-out atmosphere where singing around the campfires has become a ten year tradition.

For ticket, concert, camping or motel accommodation information, call the festival office weekdays after 10 a.m. at 1-512-257-3600, or write Folk Fest, P.O. Box 1466, Kerrville, Texas 78029.

Morning news shows may be livelier

By FRED ROTHENBERG
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Some random thoughts and tidbits about television:

With two hours to fill, with news, information and advice on their agendas and with the intense three-way competition pushing them, the networks' morning shows may be the most lively, and enterprising around.

By contrast, the evening newscasts come off as staid and stiff, despite recent attempts to include more live interviews and anchor involvement. Granted, the evening news has the different job of capsulizing the day's events — in just 22 minutes — but the three broadcasts do look very similar.

With ABC's "World News Tonight" third in the ratings, ABC would seem to have the least to lose in trying something different. ABC News President Roone Arledge would be a good bet to attempt something radical.

Arledge started "Nightline." He revitalized the Sunday news shows with "This Week With David Brinkley." And he brought stability and security to his rivals by wooing Dan Rather and Tom Brokaw, forcing CBS to commit to Rather on the "Evening News" and NBC to anoint Brokaw on the "Nightly News."

• • •

While on the subject of competition, prime time may get better next season, thanks, in part, to NBC Chairman Grant Tinker and his patience and commitment to high-quality, contemporary entertainment programming.

With NBC on the rise because of intelligent shows such as "The Cosby Show," "Cheers," "Hill Street Blues" and "Miami Vice," ABC's entertainment chief, Lewis H. Erlicht, has said NBC's way was the better way and ABC would seek programs with more credible characters.

If that's true, Tinker, and his entertainment president, Brandon Tartikoff, will have improved programming on two networks.

• • •

Tartikoff says his favorite night is Thursday with "Cosby," "Family Ties," "Cheers," "Night Court" and "Hill Street Blues."

Three years ago, NBC billed its Thursday lineup of "Fame," "Cheers," "Taxi" and "Hill Street" as "the best night of television on television" — yet that best night was not an audience favorite. Why not?

"The shows were at the wrong stage of their development to click and there wasn't the right audience flow for the night," said Tartikoff. "'Cheers' was brand new and there was nothing hot about it."

NBC picked up "Taxi" after ABC canceled it, but it didn't do much. Tartikoff believes it would work on the current Thursday schedule, but said the move paid off for NBC anyway. "It established a lot for us in the creative community," he said. "It told them what we stood for."

Ed. Weinberger, the executive producer of "Taxi," was co-creator of last season's biggest hit, "The Cosby Show."

Last week, Phyllis George of the "CBS Morning News" was conducting the best of the dawn interviews with TV's hot couple, Cathleen Crowell Webb and Gary Dotson, when she put her Gucci foot in her mouth and asked of the rape recant principals: "How about a hug?"

Crass as that remark was, Miss George's post-broadcast comments reflect her lack of journalistic sensitivity and understanding.

In an interview with The Washington Post, Miss George expressed surprise that her remark "outraged anyone," although conceding that "some of my feminist friends" may have objected to it.

Wrong, Phyllis; everybody should have been offended.

Concert to aid MHMR, girls' ranch

Hoffbrau Steaks of Midland presents the first annual "Concert in the Park," to benefit the High-Sky Girl's Ranch and the Mental Health/Mental Retardation of Midland. The Concert will be held Memorial Day at Hogan Park.

It will begin at 4 p.m. with a chili cook-off judged by local area personalities. Music by the Midland based country group "Show Down" will open the festivities. The fireworks begin at dusk with music by Ray Wylie Hubbard and the Buggs Henderson Band; both favorites in the Midland-Odessa area.

All proceeds of this event will be donated to the above charities. The High-Sky Girl's Ranch helps girls from many walks of life. The homeless, the abused, and girls with all types of family problems.

MHMR helps the community with these objectives: to promote mental health, prevent mental illness, and improve the care and treatment of the mentally ill.

Food and beverages will be served at the concert with net proceeds to be donated to these charities.

This is an opportunity for the business community of Midland and Odessa to band together for a cause that directly benefits the less fortunate citizens of the Permian Basin. Your tax deductible contribution for a block of seats at the concert will not only benefit these organizations that need our help to continue their services, but can benefit the company as well.

Corporate Sponsor will be given special recognition at the concert by area radio personalities for their help in supporting this cause.

Auditions for music competition slated

NEW YORK, N.Y. — The Carnegie Hall International American Music Competition, a major music competition designed to encourage performance of 20th century American music, holds preliminary auditions for pianists from June 13-29 in San Francisco, Chicago, New York, Boston and London. The 1985 competition is being sponsored by Carnegie Hall with funding from the Rockefeller Foundation.

The 195 preliminary applicants represent 29 states and 13 foreign countries. Chosen from the first round of auditions will be up to 12 semi-finalists to be announced on June 30 who will compete in Carnegie Recital Hall on September 23 and 24. The finals, which consist of both recital and concerto performances, will be held in two stages in Carnegie Hall on September 28 and 29.

The judges for the preliminary auditions are pianists Jerome Lowenthal, Lambert Orkis, Stephen Pruslin, Leonard Stein and Robert Taub.

The international jury for the semi-finals is: conductor and pianist Dennis Russell Davies; London Times critic Paul Griffiths; composer and pianist Vincent Persichetti; pianists Ursula Oppens, Russell Sherman and Leon Fleisher; and Gideon Rosengarten, artistic director, Saarbrucken Radio, West Germany.

The Carnegie Hall International American Music Competition, formerly known as the International American Music Competition, was established at the Kennedy Center in 1978 and moved to Carnegie Hall in 1981.

The competition, which is cyclical, had rotated annually among pianists, vocalists and violinists. The 1985 competition for pianists marks the beginning of the third competition cycle and the introduction of several changes in format. The competition will now be held during alternate years rather than annually and repertoire requirements now include performance of a concerto with orchestra in the finals.

The first prize of more than $75,000 includes a cash award of $10,000, $20,000 to be used for career development, major recitals and orchestral engagements including the premiere performances of a commissioned concerto by Ellen Taaffe Zwilich with the Detroit Symphony in Detroit and Carnegie Hall, and a limited recording contract with New World Records. The second prize carries a cash award of $5,000 and a performance in Carnegie Recital Hall, and third prize is $3,000. All semi-finalists not qualifying for the top three prizes will receive $1,500.

Selection of masterpieces on display

On display through June 2 in the Museum of the Southwest's Stables Gallery is a wide-ranging exhibit of famous works titled "Selections of American and European Masterpieces."

The exhibit includes such well-known American and European artists as Kenneth Adams, Fremont Ellis, Robert Wood, Peter Hurd, Henriette Wyeth and Michael Hurd.

Kenneth Adams, 1897-1966, was the youngest and the last member to be elected to the Taos Society of Artists, and as such was closely associated with both the "old guard" and the later arrivals to the New Mexico art scene. His works reflect a desire to clarify, rather than to distort or obscure. As a realist, he experimented with cubism and found that some of its basic tenets complimented the style he was trying to achieve.

Fremont F. Ellis, 1897-1985, was a Santa Fe artist and a true American impressionist. He was essentially a landscape painter who sought inspiration out-of-doors. His works give a special elegance and meaning to the trees, picturesque villages and rippling streams of his beloved New Mexico.

Ellis and five other Santa Fe artists founded a historic group in the twenties known as "Los Cinco Pintores", and to this day they remain the best known artist's group in the Santa Fe art community.

Robert Wood, born 1889, a favorite artist of some American art collectors was born in England, but has found America an unending source of inspiration. His landscape paintings, rugged mountain scenes, pastoral studies, and marine scenes depict his love of nature, and of the colors that abound therein. A prolific artist, he has painted constantly for sixty years, and for much of that 60 has been called by some America's most popular artist.

A family of famous painters, Peter Hurd, Henriette Wyeth, and Michael Hurd belong to an American Arts "Dynasty."

Peter Hurd, 1904-1984, studied under the great illustrator N.C. Wyeth, through whom he met Wyeth's eldest daughter, and his future wife, Henriette, already an accomplished painter. Her brother, Andrew, was also to become a famous American artist.

After 12 years of training at Chadds Ford with Wyeth, Hurd returned to his native New Mexico with Henriette and their family. There, inspired by his environment, he experimented with egg tempera and gesso, and through that media, achieved some stunning effects. Hurd's become more well-known when he was commissioned to paint the official portrait of President Lyndon Johnson for the White House collection.

Henriette Wyeth, born 1907, is considered by some one of the most important women in American art — past or present. Her works are found in major American museums and in many private collections throughout the country.

Michael Hurd, Peter and Henriette's son, lives in the Hondo Valley in southern New Mexico, and is himself, an accomplished painter well on his way to carving a place in the American art scene. His representational style is uniquely his, as can be seen in his oil and watercolor landscapes and portraits.

Other artists featured in the "Masterpieces" exhibit are: Joe Beeler, Johann Berthelsen, Gerald Cassidy, Andre Gisson, Mort Kunstler, and (Carol) Grende LaFord.

The Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., is open to the public. Hours are Tuesday through Saturday 10:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., and Sunday 2:00 to 5:00 p.m. Admission is free. For further information call the Museum, 683-2882.

'Ain't Misbehavin' ' will be presented at Yucca Theatre

A special production "Ain't Misbehavin' " will be presented Thursday through June 1 at the Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado Ave.

This Capital City Playhouse musical revue, which features the comedy and music of Fats Waller, is sponsored here by Midland Community Theatre and First City National Bank.

"This is the greatly touted musical revue that has entertained theater-goers and music lovers everywhere," said Greg Elsner, business manager for MCT. "The Austin production has received such rave reviews throughout Texas. So good is their reputation, in fact, that we just had to bring the troupe to the Permian Basin."

Tickets, priced at $8, $10 and $12, are for reserved seating. For reservations call Theatre Midland, 682-4111.

Museum exhibit focuses on Third World children

A hands-on multi-media exhibition, "Someone Like Me," is on view at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., through June 10.

The exhibit consists of 600-feet of innovative games and displays designed to educate the public about children in the developing world whose needs are not being met.

Designed by Save the Children and Columbia University's Teachers College, with a grant from the Agency for International Development, the exhibit illustrates that the world we live in is interdependent; therefore, what happens in one part of the world affects people thousands of miles away. The exhibit is also designed to show that young people can make a difference.

Museum hours are Tuesday through Saturday 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday 2-5 p.m. There is no admission charge.

Amon Carter Museum displays collection of 51 works

An exhibition of works from one of the major private collections of American art will be on view at the Amon Carter Museum through July 14.

"American Paintings, Watercolors and Drawings from the Collection of Rita and Daniel Fraad," to be shown exclusively in Fort Worth, brings together 51 works lent by the Fraads, leading collectors of American realist and impressionist art for the past 30 years. The exhibition spans a period of time from an Eastman Johnson drawing of about 1849 to Charles Sheeler's "Shaker Barns" dated 1945.

"The works in the exhibition tend toward the representational rather than the abstract, with the human figure and the American landscape as the principal subjects shown," said Linda Ayres, Amon Carter Museum Curator of Paintings and Sculpture and organizer of the exhibition.

"The Fraads do not intend the collection, which primarily dates from the 1890's through the first two decades of the 20th century, to be a survey of every American art movement. Rather, they have collected what appeals to them on an aesthetic and emotional level, and it is their individual personal taste that this exhibition embodies. I have long admired the Fraads' collection and am delighted that this selection of their finest pictures will be at the Amon Carter Museum."

Rita and Daniel Fraad began studying American art in the 1940's and purchased their first painting, Albert Pinkham Ryder's "Landscape," in 1955. With that and subsequent purchases during the late 1950's — Edward Hopper's "Houses on the Beach," "Gloucester," Winslow Homer's "Prout's Neck in Winter," Charles Hawthorne's "The Morning Coffee," Thomas Eakins' "Study for the Portrait of Emily Sartain," and Charles Demuth's "Pepper and Tomatoes" — the foundation of the collection was laid.

The collection grew rapidly in the early 1960's, when many of the objects in the exhibition were acquired: two Johnson drawings; Homer's "Green Apples" and "Sand and Sky"; paintings by Arthur B. Davies and William Merritt Chase; drawings by Joseph Stella and Jerome Myers; six works by Maurice Prendergast; John Singer Sargent's "Group with Parasols" and "Spanish Barracks"; impressionist paintings by Dennis Miller Bunker, Willard Metcalf, William Glackens, and Theodore Robinson; and Ashcan works by John Sloan, Everett Shinn, George Bellows and Robert Henri. Since the mid 1960's, the Fraads have added other works by Sargent, Bellows, Homer, Glackens and Robinson as well as John Twachtman's "Fishermen's Houses, Gloucester" and Gari Melchers' "Portrait of Mrs. George Hitchcock."

"American Paintings, Watercolors and Drawings from the Collection of Rita and Daniel Fraad" includes works by a number of American artists at the very top of their form. The Fraads' pictures present John Singer Sargent at several points in his career, from his early powerful monochromatic work in Venice, to his fluid watercolor of convalescing Spanish soldiers, and one of his later colorful inpressionist paintings. The trio of George Bellows' early pictures — "Kids," "The Knock Out," and "Shore House" — are important examples of the artist's affinity with the Ashcan School's dark palette, energetic, broad brushwork, and direct observation of commonplace subjects. Also shown in strength is the work of Homer, especially in his Houghton Farm watercolor, "Spring", and that of Prendergast, who is represented by six objects (an oil, four watercolors and a monotype) spanning approximately 20 years and chronicling his evolution in style and subject matter.

"Rita and Daniel Fraad were pioneers not only in the collecting of American art, but also in its conservation, research and documentation. Their distinguished collecton fortuitously complements the Amon Carter Museum's own holdings," said Jan Keene Muhlert, Amon Carter Museum Director. Daniel Fraad is Chief Executive Officer of Allied Maintenance Corp., which is headquartered in New York. The

In conjunction with the exhibition, a lecture program on the work of three artists, Sargent, Bellows and Prendergast, represented in Mr. and Mrs. Fraad's collection is scheduled for 10 a.m. June 8.

A lecture on Sargent will be presented by Patricia Hills, Associate Professor, Art History Department, Boston University and Adjunct Curator, Eighteenth and Nineteenth Century Art, Whitney Museum of American Art, New York.

Bellows will be the topic of the lecture by E.A. Carmean, Director, The Fort Worth Art Museum. A lecture on Prendergast will be given by Carol Clark, Maurice and Charles Prendergast Executive Fellow and Adjunct Curator of American Art, Sterling and Francine Clark Art Institute.

Reservations for the symposium are required. Seating is limited to the first 100 reservations. Write the Department of Special Programs, Amon Carter Museum, P.O. Box 2365, Fort Worth, Texas 76113.

Henry Darrow made his mark as non-hero Manolito

By DON FREEMAN
Copley News Service

"I was visiting Mexico City, after the first year of 'High Chaparral,' and the people saw me on the streets and they'd yell, 'Manolito!' And wherever I went in restaurants they wouldn't take my money. Instead they wanted my autograph..."
— Actor Henry Darrow

HOLLYWOOD — Bogart started it, no doubt. It was Humphrey Bogart, in those great old movies of his, who brought to full flower the notion of an appealing non-hero. And in the well-remembered series from the '70s called "High Chaparral," Henry Darrow played an appealing non-hero known as Manolito, a charming rogue of the Old West known in all the cantinas along the Mexican border.

It was a marvelous role, this Manolito being a fellow who would take a nip to ward off the chill of an August evening in Arizona although, to be fair, he only imbibed in weeks that included a Wednesday.

A terrific role, indeed, and it brought Darrow to the fore. And now Darrow, who gets around in the acting business, is a regular in the new ABC series, playing a cop in "Mom and Me," but he thinks back wistfully to Manolito, a part he played to the hilt.

First, it should be noted that Darrow was once Enrique Tomas Delgado, born in New York but at 13 moved with his parents back to their native Puerto Rico. He attended the University of Puerto Rico for two years before winning a government scholarship to the Pasadena (Calif.) Playhouse.

"I became Henry Darrow for a simple reason," he says. "I got tired of trying to beat out Alexandro Rey for parts. No, truthfully, as Enrique Delgado, all the parts I'd get in pictures or TV were Latins — except once...(when) I played a guy named Blackie."

He says that casting directors would see his name submitted, Delgado, and they would say, "Good actor, but the role doesn't call for a Latin." It happened with distressing frequency. So he became Henry Darrow and with his dark look of menace he was given a lot of villains to play. His favorite was Iago in a Hollywood little theater venture into "Othello."

Not long thereafter, a casting director asked Darrow if he had ever portrayed any villains. "Well, yes," Darrow said. "I played Iago."

"Iago?" the casting director said, blankly. "I must have missed that show. When is the rerun?"

Playing Iago, in fact, provided a few dabs of coloration for Darrow's subsequent characterization of Manolito. "I like Iago," he says. "Iago had a fine sense of humor. And he was all heart... nobody's perfect."

Until "High Chaparral," Darrow had parts in 75 television shows and 12 movies. He had been an actor for 12 years before he Anglicized his name. "It got very mixed up," Darrow says. "The first role I was called for when I became Henry Darrow was that of a German fellow. Then the producer took one look and said, 'Hey, Darrow, we've got a part here of a Spanish officer. Have you ever played a Latin?' "

And now back to Manolito who, Darrow says, he played with Cisco Kid overtones, a roving eye and a Mexican accent. "The Mexican people loved me for Manolito," he says. "I was visiting Mexico City, after the first year of 'High Chaparral,' and the people saw me on the streets and they'd yell, 'Manolito!' And wherever I went in restaurants they wouldn't take my money. Instead they wanted my autograph.

"Manolito Montoyo was a delicious character, a freewheeling, fun-loving Mexican cowboy, a true vaquero..But I think back to what one Mexican told me. He said, 'Look, Enrique, we know you're a Puerto Rican but we like the qualities you bring to a Mexican character on television.' "

It was a giddy time for an actor who had struggled many years for recognition. When "High Chaparral" was at its peak, a poll in Sweden named Darrow the country's second most popular man, next to the king himself. Darrow went over to Stockholm and drew an audience of 16,000 who cheered his singing and his impressions — he can still do a dandy John Wayne. In Germany they gave Darrow the Bambi, which is their version of our Emmy.

After a galloping start, "High Chaparral" reached the barn after four seasons. "We would have lasted a lot longer," Darrow says, "if they hadn't messed with my character, for one thing. Bit by bit, Manolito was diluted. They cleaned up his habits and his companions. They took a basic non-hero type and made him into some kind of anemic nothing. Why, I'll never know. They watered the hot sauce and the character went out the window."

UTPB to host music camp

A child doesn't have to be a prodigy to benefit from the U.T. Permian Basin Summer Music Camp June 10-21.

The purpose of the Summer Camp is to help students, at whatever level of skill they are, to improve their musical ability and, just as importantly, to develop their love of music," said Craig Lister, assistat professor of music at U.T. Permian Basin and Camp coordinator. "Our Summer Music Camps have really been successful in the past because students from different schools have to work together to produce beautiful music. The camp develops skill and musical proficiency while breaking down dependecy on certain teachers or groups."

Each junior high or high school student involved in the camp will participate in an hour of full-band rehearsals, an additional hour of section rehearsals followed by a full hour of supervised recreation time in the university pool, gymnasium, tennis or racquetball courts.

Cost of the Summer Music Camp is $50 for the full two-week session or $30 for either week. Although actual Camp hours are 9 a.m. to noon, students may arrive early if necessary.

Q.—Partner opened the bidding with one heart and I held:
♠AQ6542 ♡8 ◇AK6 ♣A104

I jumped shifted to two spades and we ended up in all sorts of trouble. My partner didn't like my bid, but surely with 17 HCP and a singleton my jump was textbook? Would you have responded differently? J.A.R., Hartford, CT.

A.—Once upon a time, you jump shifted on any hand where you had the required point count of 19, including distribution. By those rules, your hand definitely would qualify for a jump suit.

However, players began to realize that strength alone was not enough for a jump shift—you needed to know where you were going to play the hand. If you made a jump shift on hands where you have to probe for the best spot, you were simply wasting your own bidding space.

The modern tendency is to jump shift only when you hold one of two types of hand: 1) Hands where you have a self-sustaining suit and can play in it regardless of partner's lack of support; or 2) Two-suited hands that have a good fit for opener's suit. Points are of secondary importance.

By these standards your hand does not qualify for a jump shift. You first response should be one spade. You can jump on a later round to show your strength.

Q.—In your computer program "Charles Goren: Learning Bridge Made Easy," you teach five-card major opening bids. However, your books still teach four-card majors. Why is that? M.L. Houston, TX.

A.—The last edition of "Goren's Bridge Complete," which was published about a year before our computer course appeared, already recognized the drift toward five-card major opening bids by including a chapter on opening with five-card major suits. The next edition, due in the fall, has been completely revised as a five-card major textbook. Sic transit gloria mundi.

It would be foolish to ignore what most instructors are teaching and what more and more players are playing. Our aim is to provide the public with a complete guide to a simple, yet effective five-card major system.

Q.—How many bridge players are there in the U.S.? G.M., Atlanta, GA.

A.—My own guess would have been somewhere between 8 and 10 million. However, a recent survey conducted by ESPN claims that there are almost 18 million. I hope they are right!

UTPB offers 'Opera, Culture of Santa Fe'

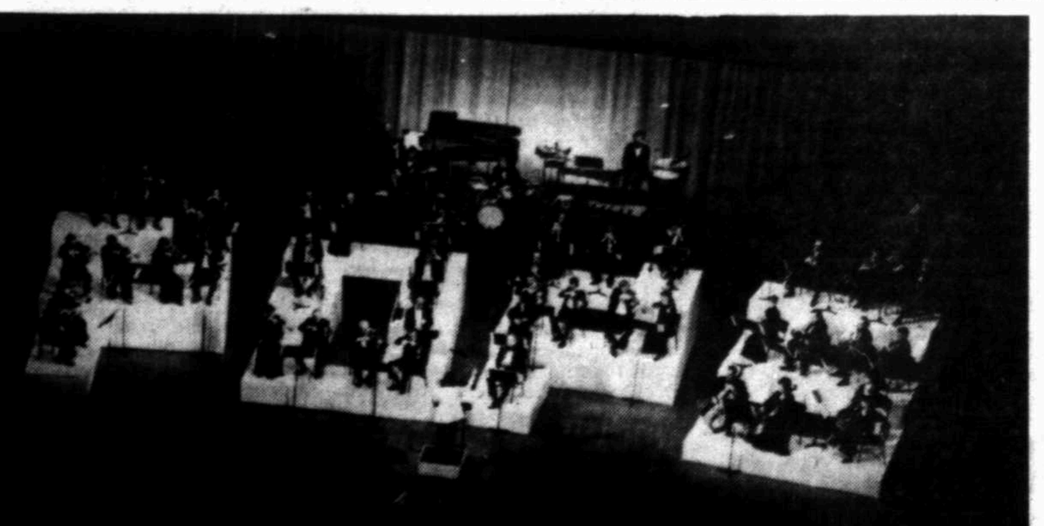

If it's fun you're looking for this summer, if it's a family adventure with a musical "overtone," if you want to learn while really enjoying yourself then "Opera And Culture Of Santa Fe," offered by the U.T. Permian Basin music department, is worth checking out.

"This course is a unique way to learn about the rich culture of the Great Southwest while experiencing two of the greatest operas ever written. It is a rare opportunity to combine the splendor of Santa Fe with the grandeur of the European Opera," said Dr. Stan Engebretson, assistant professor of music at U.T. Permian Basin and coordinator of the travel-study course.

The "Opera And Culture Of Santa Fe" Course will meet on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 6-7:50 p.m. beginning June 4 with lectures, slide programs, recordings and discussions to prepare the class for their three-day visit to Santa Fe, one of the Southwest's most colorful cities, as well as the two operas they will hear.

The class will leave Midland July 3 and return July 7. The cost of $175 per person, based on double occupancy, includes three nights accommodations in the beautiful Inn of the Governor's Hotel right in the heart of Santa Fe's plaza district as well as tickets for Mozart's "The Marriage of Figaro" and Jacques Offenbach's "Orpheus in the Underworld," a tour of historic Santa Fe and a visit to an Indian Pueblo for their July 4th celebration.

Register for Opera and Culture at Santa Fe on June 3 in the Student Lounge from 9 a.m.-1 p.m. and from 3-7 p.m. Late registration will continue through June 7. This course may be taken for full undergraduate credit or under the ENCORE program which allows anyone from the community to take a class without the pressure of a grade and without regard to their education background.

Pancakes can be fancy, plain, for breakfast, supper

By PHILOMENA CORRADENO
King Features Syndicate

Maybe every mother on the block was cooking Sunday pancakes at the same time, but I just knew, as I'd turn the corner coming from church, that that alluring aroma could be coming only from my grandmother's kitchen three-quarters of the way up Elizabeth Street in New York City.

Every summer until we were 13 or 14 my mother sent one of my brothers and me to her parents in southwestern New York State so we could breathe the good country air, or maybe just to get us out of her hair for a few weeks.

At home, occasionally our Saturday night meal was pancakes or waffles, but it was never quite the same as Sunday breakfast in Hornell, N.Y.

Maybe it was Grandma's plump, juicy sausages aromatic with fennel seed, and the butter, syrup, homemade preserves and pancakes made from scratch, just ordinary but extraordinary because they were thick and feathery light. Maybe it was because it was the one breakfast Grandpa had with us. During the week he was up and gone to his railroad job by the time we awoke.

The meal never varied, but Grandma's reference to her pancakes did: griddlecakes, hotcakes or flapjacks. That's what we'd call them. We knew nothing of crepes.

• • •

For pancakes, you can start with the convenience of a mix. on the other hand, you might want a basic recipe, like this:

BASIC PANCAKE RECIPE

1 cup unbleached unsifted flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
2 tablespoons sugar
½ teaspoon salt
½ cup milk
2 tablespoons melted butter or margarine
1 egg

Into a bowl sift together flour, baking powder, sugar and salt. Set aside. In mixing bowl combine milk, melted butter and egg. Beat lightly. Stir flour mixture all at once into milk mixture, stirring only enough to moisten all the flour. Do not beat or overmix or pancakes will be tough. And don't worry if the batter is lumpy. Batter should be the consistency of thick, heavy cream. If too thick, add a little milk; if too thin, stir in a bit of flour.

You'll get a better batter if you prepare it ahead and allow it to rest in the refrigerator for an hour or two or even overnight.

Grease pan lightly, unless you are using a non-stick pan or seasoned griddle. Over moderate heat, heat skillet or griddle. To test heat, sprinkle a few drops of water onto pan. If the pan is hot enough, the water will dance about. If water evaporates immediately, it's too hot.

Using a ¼-cup measure as a ladle, pour the batter into the pan. Cook until bubbles form then break all over the surface of the griddlecake. With spatula or pancake turner, turn cake over to brown. When steaming stops, it's ready.

• • •

Maple syrup spiced with cinnamon and dotted with chopped walnuts makes a crunchy topping.

APPLE WALNUT SYRUP

1 cup maple syrup
1 large apple, peeled and sliced
3 tablespoons butter or margarine
½ teaspoon cinnamon
Dash salt
1 cup chopped walnuts
Squeeze of lemon juice

In sauce pan combine syrup, apple, butter, cinnamon and salt. Bring slowly to boil, stirring. Reduce heat; simmer 8 minutes. Stir in nuts and lemon juice. Serve hot.

Syrup may be stored in covered container in refrigerator for several days. Reheat over low heat.

• • •

A crepe is only a delicately thin, almost lacy version of the pancake. Sweeten the batter for dessert crepes. Otherwise, omit the sweeteners. Wrap or fold them around almost any filler: vegetables, meat, fish, chicken, cheese, fruit, berries. Add a saucy topping and you've created a praiseworthy dish.

Crepes filled with flavored ricotta are briefly baked then covered with a surprising berry sauce. Canned boysenberries, blackberries or raspberries make this delicacy possible any time.

BERRY-SAUCED CREPES

4 tablespoons sugar
1 tablespoon cornstarch
1 (17-ounce) can blackberries or raspberries r 1 (16½- ounce) can boysenberries
Water
½ teaspoon grated lemon or lime peel
⅛ teaspoon almond extract
1 cup ricotta cheese
¼ teaspoon ground cinnamon
Crepes
2 teaspoons melted butter or margarine

Combine 2 tablespoons sugar and cornstarch. Drain berries; reserve syrup. Add water to reserved syrup to equal 1 cup; add to sugar mixture with ¼ teaspoon lemon peel. Cook and stir until thickened; boil 1 minute longer. Add almond extract and berries.

Combine ricotta cheese with remaining 2 tablespoons sugar, cinnamon and remaining ¼ teaspoon lemon peel. Spoon 2 tablespoons filling onto each crepe; roll up.

Place seam-side down in 12-by7½-by2-inch baking dish. Brush tops of filled crepes with butter. Bake, loosely covered, at 325 degrees for 15 minutes. Pour sauce over crepes.

• • •

CREPES

2 eggs
¾ cup milk
½ cup flour
2 teaspoons sugar
2 teaspoons melted butter or margarine
Dash salt

Combine and beat until blended. Heat a lightly greased 6- to 7-inch skillet over medium-high heat. Add 2 tablespoons batter; tilt skillet to spread batter. Cook about 30 seconds or until lightly brown; turn and cook on second side.

A cinnamony batter makes these crepes a showpiece dessert to cap an otherwise simple meal. The filling is also spiced with cinnamon and nutmeg.

SPICED PEACH CREPES

1 (8-ounce) package cream cheese, softened
1½ cups confectioners' sugar
1 (12-ounce) jar apricot preserves
2 teaspoons fresh lemon juice
½ teaspoon ground cinnamon
⅛ teaspoon ground nutmeg
3 cups peeled, pitted and sliced peaches, divided
12 Cinnamon Crepes

In a medium bowl beat cream cheese until light. Gradually stir in confectioners' sugar. Beat until smooth; set aside. In a medium sauce pan combine apricot preserves, lemon juice, cinnamon and nutmeg. Cook and stir over low heat for 2 minutes. Stir in 1 cup of the peaches; keep warm.

On each Cinnamon Crepe (recipe follows), spoon about 2 tablespoons of the cream cheese mixture down the center. Top with a few slices of the remaining 2 cups peaches. Gently roll up crepes and arrange seam side down on a serving platter. Spoon the warm sauce over all.

CINNAMON CREPES

½ cup all-purpose flour
½ teaspoon ground cinnamon
¼ teaspoon salt
2 eggs
⅔ cup milk
About 3 tablespoons vegetable oil

In a medium bowl combine flour, cinnamon and salt. In a small bowl lightly beat eggs. Stir in milk. Gradually blend egg and milk mixture into flour mixture until smooth. Stir in 1 tablespoon of the oil. Cover and refrigerate for 1 hour or more.

Brush a 6-inch crepe pan or skillet with oil; heat until hot. Add a scant 2 tablespoons of the crepe batter. Tilt pan to spread batter to cover bottom of pan completely. Cook, turning once, until light brown on both sides. Repeat.

Here is an impressive creation for lunch or brunch with a filling of eggs, ham and sliced sweet fresh cucumber pickles in a mustardy cheese sauce.

EGG-HAM-PICKLE CREPES

3 eggs
¾ cup milk
¾ cup pancake mix
2 tablespoons vegetable oil
Egg Filling and Sauce
¼ cup toasted slivered almonds for garnish

In medium-sized bowl, combine eggs, milk, pancake mix and oil. Mix until smooth; let stand 5 minutes. For each crepe, pour a scant ¼ cup batter into a hot, lightly greased 7-inch skillet, immediately tilting pan to coat bottom evenly. Cook about 45 seconds or until top looks dry. Turn and cook 20 seconds.

Stack crepes on sheets of waxed paper. Make Egg Filling and Sauce (recipe follows). To fill, spoon filling down center of each. Roll up and place on serving platter. Spoon remaining sauce over and garnish with almonds. Serve at once.

Egg Filling and Sauce:

¼ cup butter or margarine
¼ cup all-purpose flour
2½ cups milk
2 cups shredded Swiss cheese
2 teaspoons prepared mustard
4 hard-cooked eggs
1 cup slivered cooked ham
¼ cup sliced sweet fresh cucumber pickles
1 tablespoon chopped chives

In medium-sized sauce pan, melt butter over medium heat. Stir in flour until smooth and thickened. Gradually stir in milk. Cook stirring constantly, until mixture bubbles and thickens. Stir in cheese and mustard. Cook, stirring until cheese is melted. Reserve 1¼ cups. Combine eggs, ham, pickles and chives. Mix in the reserved sauce.

Here, the blintzes actually are softened flour tortillas folded over a well-flavored salmon mixture, then deep fried until golden. 8 flour tortillas
4 ounces Monterey jack cheese, cut into eight strips

Combine salmon, bread crumbs, mayonnaise, onions, parsley, lemon juice and peel and ketchup; mix well. Wrap tortillas in foil and heat at 350 degrees for 10 minutes.

Place ¼ cup salmon mixture in center of each tortilla; top with cheese strip. Fold over ends of tortilla and roll; secure with toothpicks. Deep-fry blintzes at 400 degreea a few at a time until golden; drain on paper towels.

Now for a variation on the batter crepe or pancake. Scandinavian lefse, a breakfast tradition, are made with mashed potatoes and flour for the dough, which is rolled into rounds then cooked in a skillet or griddle. Typically, they're served with butter and sugar. For these, the butter has the lively flavor of chopped pistachios and lemon.

LEFSE

½ cup butter or margarine, softened
2 tablespoons honey
1 tablespoon lemon juice
½ teaspoon grated lemon peel
¼ cup chopped shelled pistachios
Scandinavian Lefse

Beat together butter, honey, lemon juice and lemon peel until smooth. Blend in pistachios. Serve with Scandinavian Lefse. Makes ¾cup butter.

Scandanavian Lefse

2 cups cool mashed potatoes
1 to 1½ cups flour

Add flour to potatoes, mixing to form a non-sticky dough. Divide into 12 equal pieces. Roll each into an 8-inch round on floured board. Cook in heavy non-stick fry pan or griddle over medium-high heat, turning frequently, until lightly browned, about 3 minutes. Fold in quarters and serve warm. Or, wrap in foil and reheat at 200F if made ahead.

Dolls are one of world's oldest human institutions

By BEATRICE LEVIN
King Features Syndicate

The charms of dolls are everlasting. For centuries, animated dolls, with their marvelous fables, farces, stories and satire on the human condition, have fascinated adults as much as they appealed to children.

Since ancient time, dolls have been connected to images of the saints, and at Christmas, the Christ child would be displayed in a cradle with elaborately costumed figures of the Holy Family, the Magi and their followers.

In Protestant countries, the doll house replaced the creche, as can be seen in the Germanic National Museum in Nurnberg, the permanent exhibit of dolls in Reichshof, Oberbergisches Land, West Germany, and in the Eckenhagen "Haus des Gastes," where more than 5,000 dolls are displayed. In museums of Belgium and Holland, and particularly in Utrecht Central Museum, fantastic collections of doll houses fascinate those who love miniatures.

But you do not have to go to Europe to view dolls. Visitors to the Washington, D.C., Doll House and Toy Museum find a marvelous collection that appeals to young and old. The Museum of the City of New York also has an extensive collection.

Many collectors, finding their accumulations too much for their own home, have opened museums. Ken and Doris Butler of Mendota, Ill., collectors for nearly half a century, found closets and shelves overflowing, so 15 years ago they built a museum to house their dolls and antiques and named it Time Was.

In Eureka Springs, Ark., two museums exhibit dolls: Peek into the Past and Guether's. In Green Forest, Ark., there's the Antique Doll Museum.

For children, dolls provide a dream of devoted parenthood and protection from abandonment and family tragedy. The doll is one of the oldest of human institutions, common among both the most civilized and the most primitive of peoples. A poetic symbol, a token of time passed, the doll evokes history, fashion, costumes, habits, joys of another era.

A valuable doll collection is on view in Galveston, Texas, in a private museum run by Marge and Lee Trentham. Were it not for a baby doll, this fabulous collection might never have been acquired. Lee Trentham loved to collect, but Marge was not interested until a friend put a grown woman doll in a baby carriage. Marge found this strange and decided to track down a baby doll for her.

She eventually turned up a Bye-lo baby, the first of many that Marge bought. She had caught the antiquing bug, and now she has rooms full of antique and ethnic dolls, and a circus room with music and circus character dolls.

In Marshall, Texas, Clara and Francis Franks, owners of Franks Doll Museum, suggest that dolls are the number-one collector's item in the United States today. "It used to be stamps first, coins second, guns third and then dolls," Franks adds, "Thirty-five percent of doll collectors are men."

The Franks converted the garage of their turn-of-the-century home into a doll museum. About 600 dolls, from a group of German bisque dolls to a French wax mannequin, are displayed.

Cases filled with dolls line the small room. Few people can browse through the museum without spotting at least one doll that brings back childhood memories, either of a favorite doll or a birthday or Christmas celebration.

To children, dolls are friends, confidants and beloved companions. Adults who collect them like them for other reasons. Usually, dolls are given away or packed away with souvenirs of childhood. Frequently, the much-hugged and mistreated dolls are frayed and beyond repair. But when a collector acquires a china, bisque or wool doll and repairs and dresses it appropriately, it may be part of something that has become big business.

As investments or a hobby, or just for fun, dolls are priceless.

A toy museum which for many years was in the heart of Atlanta, Ga.'s Buckhead section has now moved to Orlando, Fla. An old 13-room mansion houses an international collection of toys and dolls dating from the 1800s, including domestic playthings and comic-strip characters.

The old "Street of Shops" in the Orlando collection shows a stable of horses, a window of games, a world of lithography and little girls' millinery next to the Frou-Frou shop.

Look where the grooms are!

Proof that the young American male is as interested in the dinner plate as the home plate is the fact that, in the past few years, bridal registries nationally report that more and more brides selecting silver, china and crystal patterns are accompanied by their husbands, says the Jewelry Industry Council.

It's all part of the trend toward men enjoying acting the host in their own homes, and taking up gourmet cooking, or at least the ability to prepare one or more special dishes, the experts say.

Interestingly enough, surveys show young couples are choosing fine china twice as often as casual tableware. Men, with less exposure to preconceived ideas about table setting, have more flexibility in mixing and matching patterns than women.

Men tend to select cups, silverware and glassware that "feel right" in their hand, and are particularly interested in outdoor cookware.

Bridal registry personnel help couples analyze which lifestyle they prefer, and guide them in selecting tableware to blend with their entertainment and daily living needs.

Jewelry gifts for the wedding party that special day

For brides and grooms, wedding plans include the selection of gifts for each other, their families and their close friends, and jewelry is the number one gift item exchanged on this special day

Jewelers of America (JA), the national association of retail jewelers across the country, would like to offer suggestions to the bride and groom on buying fine jewelry for the special people who are close to them.

Bridal couples often exchange gifts to commemorate their marriage, and the items they choose for each other are worn during the wedding.

The groom should take into consideration the style of his bride's wedding dress when choosing something "new" she can wear that day. For example, a strand of pearls with a scoop-neck wedding dress, a gold bracelet on a bare arm, diamond earrings, the discreetly elegant watch all complement a wedding dress.

Some gift suggestions for the bride:

- A strand of cultured pearls, choker or princess length(18");
- Sapphire or ruby earrings;
- Gold or diamond bracelet;
- Locket;
- Diamond stud earrings;
- Gold and diamond thin watch.

For the Groom:

- Cufflinks in gold with onyx are the most popular gift;
- Pocket watch with gold chain;
- Gold tie clasp;
- Belt buckle;
- Gold watch;
- Gold cigarette lighter;
- Money clip;
- Gold and diamond tie pin;
- Studs in gold or in onyx to match cuffimks.

The mother of the bride and the mother of the groom will be glowing with pride during the ceremony. For such a special occasion, many couples or adoring husbands will give them a remembrance they can wear that day:

- Double strand of cultured pearls with a diamond clasp;
- Gold and diamond necklace and bracelet set;
- Diamond and colored stone bracelet and earrings;
- Large gold and colored stone ring;
- Diamond pin.

The fathers-in-law-to-be also deserve something special:

- Cufflinks;
- Studs;
- Gold and diamond ring;
- Gold watch;
- Collar pin.

For the maid of honor, some gifts include:

- Colored stone ring;
- Pearl bracelet.

Some suggestions for bridesmaids' gifts:

- Gold chain necklace or bracelet;
- Freshwater pearl necklace or bracelet;
- Lapel pins in gold or silver;
- Colored stone earrings or pendant in bridesmaid's birthstone;
- Gold hoop earrings;
- Charms with wedding date;
- Watch in new vibrant color;
- Wall clock.

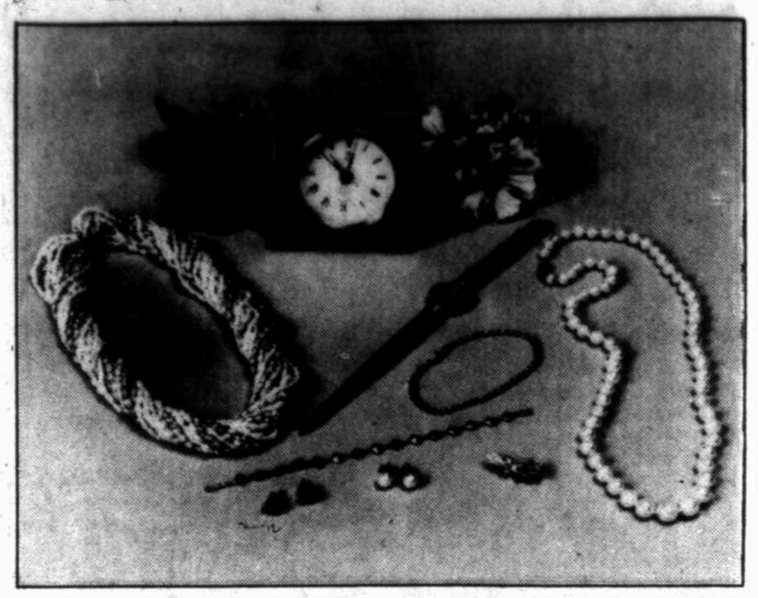

For the best man, couples can consider:

- Signet ring;
- Credit card case;
- Pocket watch.

For ushers, popular gift ideas are:

- Pen and pencil sets;
- Key chains;
- Cufflinks;
- Tie pins, or personalized tie tacks;
- Cigarette lighters;
- Collar bars;
- Gold chain or bracelet;
- Money clip;
- Mustache comb;
- Desk clock;
- Travel alarm.

For a couple's wedding gift plans, a local jeweler is the best source for advice on buying mementos of jewelry for family and friends on their wedding day. He can show a wide selection of gifts in all price ranges to suit all tastes and can provide service and convenience.

Any of the above accessory items would make wonderful gifts for the bride, maid of honor, bridesmaids or mothers of the bride and groom.

Hints for alleviating pre-wedding anxiety

As anyone who has gotten married can tell you, the months leading up to a wedding can be a time of stress as well as happiness. There's just so much to think about and do!

You need to find ceremony and reception sites, to choose just the right clothes, to make sometimes touchy decisions about who will be in your wedding, to furnish a complete home for your life after the wedding — and all this while you're having the inevitable doubts about getting married in the first place.

While wedding jitters are about as common as weddings, there are ways to make sure the anxiety doesn't get out of hand. BRIDE'S Magazine has these commonsense suggestions:

- Don't be afraid to admit you're upset. Tell your partner what's bothering you, whether it's a serious question about your relationship or a relatively trivial worry that you'll go blank when it comes time to say your vows.
- If you try to keep the stressful feelings to yourself, you'll only transfer them to something else, such as getting overly irritated at a late train, or a run in your stockings.
- Take positive action whenever possible: Sign up for a pre-marital workshop. Practice reciting your vows in front of a willing friend.
- Share the wedding responsibilities. If you're the bride, don't assume you have to do everything yourself. This idea is old-fashioned, as well as exhausting.
- Ask your fiance to join you in picking out a catering hall and registering for gifts. He can write a share of the thank-you notes, handle all the honeymoon arrangements.
- Keep a calendar of everything you have to do. This kind of master plan gives you the secure feeling that you're not forgetting something crucial.

Also gather any business cards, fabric swatches or magazine clippings you accumulate all together in one place — either a wedding planner made for this purpose or a simple manila envelope. Organization has the magical effect of reducing anxiety to a manageable level.

- Have a system for each task. Say you're doing your invitations. First, see if the task can be broken down into steps. (You have to address the envelopes, stuff them, seal them, and stamp them.) Then, decide how you'll tackle each step: How long it should take and who will do it.

Next, set a completion date (invitations should be mailed six weeks before the wedding). Finally, take action by setting a time and a place to begin.

- Pace yourself — don't plan to scout for reception sites the same day you have a report due at work. You'll make it through those pre-wedding months if you promise yourself you won't tackle more than one major job a day.
- Guard your health. Don't let a hectic schedule keep you from eating right, or often enough. You'll feel even more jittery from the weakness that results from a drop in blood sugar.

Be sure to get enough rest and exercise too. Did you know that exercise increases the body's level of norepinephrine, a substance that gives you a feeling of calmness and well-being?

If sleep eludes you at night because you have too much on your mind, try the time-tested soothers: A hot bath, warm milk or a back rub.

Quiz answers questions on being wedding guest

If the first sign of spring is the crocus, the second is just as surely the wedding invitation. Now is the time of year when any day is likely to bring an elegant envelope tucked in with your electric bill, supermarket circular and favorite magazine subscription.

So it's a good time to ask: How's your Guest-Etiquette? Take this quiz from BRIDE'S Magazine and see if you're up to the season ahead.

True or False:

1. Verbal acceptance of a wedding invitation is okay.
2. You don't have to send a gift if you don't go to the wedding.
3. You should bring the wedding present to the reception.
4. If you're dating someone, it's all right to bring him or her to the wedding.
5. A female guest shouldn't wear all-black or all-white.
6. The last person to be seated in church is the mother of the bride.
7. On the receiving line, you "congratulate" the groom, and offer "best wishes" to the bride.
8. You shouldn't leave the reception before the newlyweds do.

1. False — unless it's a very informal invitation. A formal, engraved invitation should be answered with a brief handwritten note on a double sheet of fine white note paper. If a response card is provided, use that.
2. True — If you're close to the couple, you'll probably want to send a gift, but it's not required.
3. False — Except if the gift is a check. Then you can bring it to the wedding and give it to the couple personally. Otherwise, send the gift to the bride at her home as soon as possible after you receive the invitation.
4. False — An invitation is only for those specifically mentioned. Unless it reads "and guest" or "and family," they only want you.
5. True — Although the rules are bending somewhat on this, especially since black is so fashionable right now. In general, judge what you should wear by the formality of the invitation. You can rarely go wrong in a suit and tie, for a man, and a street-length dressy party or cocktail dress, for a woman.
6. True — This is the signal that the ceremony is about to begin, so if you arrive later, stand unobtrusively at the back unless the ushers direct otherwise. It's best to try to arrive at least 10-15 minutes early.
7. True — You could cause offense if you reverse them. Other tips for negotiating the receiving line: Introduce yourself to anyone who isn't certain to know you. (Remember, the whole wedding party is in a bit of a daze by now.) Say something brief and pleasant to parents and other family members.
8. True — Although this was truer in the days when the bride and groom always left the reception early, in a shower of rice, to go directly on their honeymoon. These days, some newlyweds stay right until the end of the party, so an alternate rule might be: Don't leave until the cake has been cut and served. Remember to thank the wedding's hostess — usually the bride's mother — when you do go.

Bride and groom gift exchange has changed

The age-old custom of exchanging gifts between the soon-to-be-marrieds has changed drastically over the years. Back in colonial times, for example, Welsh and Pennsylvania Dutch couples gave each other handcrafted tokens decorated with hearts and doves.

Nowadays, however, twosomes simply make their way to the nearest department or jewelry store to pick out a gift for their loved one.

One of the most popular items opted by the groom for the bride — and vice versa — is the wristwatch. And thanks to companies like Timex, there is a wide selection to choose from.

Finely designed, yet durably executed, the watches come in all styles, all sizes, all shapes. And all are endowed with either coordinating gold- or silver-toned expansion bands, classic leather straps or black resin wristlets.

Dials display Roman or Arabic numerals, simple stick markers or digital readouts. For even more variety, day-date and calendar windows are on hand.

Also available is a multitude of mechanisms. For the traditional wedding couple, there are the manually-wound timepieces. The more contemporary bride and groom would most likely choose a water-resistant quartz analog or a multi-function quartz digital with such features as a chronograph, alarm, hourly chime and count-down timer.

Long-lasting watches for both bride and groom are sure to make every minute of their lives together a time to remember.

A traditional yet different cake

A traditional three-tiered wedding cake that is new and different. The cake has carrots, whole berry cranberry sauce, coconut and pecans.

A three-tiered wedding cake delights the many young brides and grooms who are carrot cake addicts. It has a cream cheese frosting and an extra tang in the cake thanks to the addition of whole berry cranberry sauce.

To toast the bride and groom, serve a pretty Cranberry Rose Punch, a delicious blend of fruit juices and rose wine.

Cranberry Swirled Carrot Cake

- 2-½ cups all-purpose flour
- 2 teaspoons baking soda
- 1-½ teaspoons ground cinnamon
- ½ teaspoon baking powder
- ½ teaspoon salt
- 3 large eggs
- 1 cup sugar
- ½ cup vegetable oil
- 1 can (16 ounces) Ocean Spray Whole Berry Cranberry Sauce
- 2 teaspoons vanilla extract
- 2-½ cups peeled, shredded carrots
- ½ cup sweetened shredded coconut
- ½ cup chopped pecans

Preheat oven to 350°F. Butter a 13 x 9 x 2-inch baking pan. Line bottom with wax paper and flour sides of pan. In a bowl, mix flour, baking soda, cinnamon, baking powder and salt. In another bowl, beat eggs and sugar with an electric mixer on high speed until light and fluffy. Beat in oil, ½ cup of cranberry sauce and vanilla.

Reduce speed to medium and add flour mixture, about ⅓ at a time, beating well after each addition. Fold in carrots, coconut and pecans. Spread batter evenly into prepared pan. Spoon remaining cranberry sauce on top of batter and swirl with a knife.

Bake 40 to 45 minutes or until cake tester inserted in center of cake comes out clean. Place on wire rack to cool 5 minutes. Loosen cake around edges of pan; turn out onto wire rack. Remove wax paper and let cake cool completely. When cold, wrap in plastic wrap.

Cake may be made several days ahead and stored in a cool dry place. Makes one 13 x 9 x 2-inch cake. For tiered cake, make twice.

Cream Cheese Frosting

- 1-½ cups butter or margarine
- 2 packages (8 ounces each) cream cheese
- 2 teaspoons vanilla extract
- 2 teaspoons lemon juice
- 6-½ cups confectioners' sugar

In a large bowl, beat at room temperature butter and cream cheese with an electric mixer at high speed until smooth and creamy. Beat in vanilla and lemon juice. Add sugar about 1 cup at a time, beating well after each addition until frosting is fluffy and thick enough to spread. If desired, tint the frosting used for decorating — or even to cover whole cake. Makes about 7 cups frosting, enough to frost three-tiered carrot wedding cake. Set aside 2 cups for decorating.

Decorating

1. Place one 13 x 9 x 2-inch carrot cake, upside down, on cake platter. Cut remaining cake into 9 x 5-½-inch and 4 x 5½-inch pieces.
2. First frost top and sides of bottom layer. Center the 9 x 5½-inch piece of cake on top; frost top and sides. Top with remaining 4 x 5½-inch piece of cake and frost. Smooth frosting with a metal spatula so no swirls remain.
3. Tint reserved 2 cups frosting with food color if desired to decorate cake using a star tip.
4. Refrigerate until about 3 hours before serving. Serves about 35.

Cranberry Rose Punch

- 1 can (6 ounces) frozen tangerine juice
- 1 can (6 ounces) frozen pineapple
- Ice cubes
- Orange slices
- 1 bottle (⅘ quart) rose wine, chilled
- 1 quart cranberry apple drink, chilled

In a bowl, mix frozen tangerine juice, pineapple juice and almond liquer. (Do not reconstitute.) Chill. Pour punch base into a 4-quart bowl when ready to serve. Stir in rose wine and cranberry apple drink. Add ice cubes and orange slices. Stir until well chilled and serve in punch cups. Makes about 4 quarts.†

Here come the executive brides

Here come the brides — older and more sophisticated than ever! According to bridal industry figures, of the more than 1.5 million women marrying in 1983 for the first time, one-fifth were over 25 and, of those, one-third were over 30.

Anyone who has paid attention to wedding invitations over the past few years will also realize that brides are not only older, they are also frequently executive brides. These are brides with full careers from which the celebration of marriage is a brief, yet important pause in their hectic lifestyles.

Brides in their mid-20s are more likely to be career women, and this trend peaks with brides aged 30. Both their wedding celebrations and their bridal ensembles are more sophisticated than their younger counterparts' choices, even if the older bride is marrying for the first time.

This changed picture of the American bride is not an overnight phenomenon. It is the result of social and economic changes shifting through society for the past two decades — and it is certainly making changes in the bridal fashion business.

Editor-in-Chief of Modern Bride, Cele Goldsmith Lalli, comments, "Older brides often choose lace and trains when marrying for the first time. However, the type of gown an executive woman selects is likely to be more highly styled. For bridal designers and retailers, this fine line has been a fascinating challenge."

She adds, "Today's career woman has a very different perspective concerning her wedding plans than a young woman just out of school — but she does want to look very special with just the perfect dash of tradition."

Confident shoppers

Darlene Katz, buyer of bridal gowns for the JCPenney Company, foremost retail resource for bridal attire in the U.S. today, observes, "The new brides want it all! They want their careers, their perfect wedding, a spouse and family — and they want happiness and fulfillment, beginning with the gown they select from us.

"This career bride in the throes of wedding planning is an exciting customer. Her ideas are specific and her vision is quite clear — she is a confident shopper." Ms. Katz notes that there are also many "executive brides" who are "encore," or repeat, brides.

To serve these women, JCPenney and other bridal retailers are showing a wider range of sophisticated, trend-setting choices in their new collection.

The spring, 1985, bridal fashions at Penney reflect influences from both Italian and French designers. Lustrous embroideries and fine laces are much in evidence.

Ms. Katz notes, "The bride-to-be today has an image of the traditional that is not the popular one of 'sweet, feminine, frilly' — it is more refined with emphasis on opulent fabrics, fashionable silhouettes, and attention to detail."

Fashion freedom

The popularity of the tea-length bridal dress among career brides shopping in the JCPenney Bridal Salons demonstrates a preference for the high-stepping fashion freedom of the 1920s when hems went up and up and up.

Women exulted in a new joie de vivre with classic gowns high in front and trailing in back. Necklines plunged in the back but rose demurely high across the throat.

And some of these touches are found in current bridal collections along with more variety in length than in many a season. Even veils are offered in varying lengths: Short on the sides and incredibly full and romantic in back in order to cascade down the back.

Other trends attributed to brides in their late 20s and early 30s are a preference for ivory and oyster over pure white, and the selection of attendants' dresses that are also high-styled.

Retailers and the bridal magazines agree that the spring and summer of 1985 will see a large number of carefully orchestrated weddings — and at many of these the focus will be the executive bride.

Census figures for 1982 show a record 2.5 million marriages which is a 16 percent increase over 1975. They also indicate the first decline in the divorce pattern in 20 years: 1.2 million.

The number of divorces continued to decline in '83 and the trend is holding for '84. Experts feel the increasing age and thoughtfulness of brides and their grooms is a major contributing factor.

In a recent Reader's Digest/Gallup Survey, 85 percent of those polled (1,549 adults over 18 in 300 communities), responded "yes" when asked if they would wed the same person if they could make the decision again!

Brides who are confident, self-assured and poised can still be "blushing brides." Mrs. Lalli of Modern Bride stresses, "Nothing has been taken away. If anything, the bride with her career in full-swing and with a certain maturity has access to yet another dimension of creating the perfect wedding and a wonderful memory for this most important of days."

For the bride who prefers the ballerina-length wedding dress, this sophisticated princess styled gown of poly-organza over taffeta with sweetheart re-embroidered lace trim neckline and leg-of-mutton lace sleeves is perfect.

Mine is an unchanging love,
Higher than the heights above;
Deeper than the depths beneath,
Free and faithful, strong as death.
— William Cowper

Many modern wedding customs originated in the Victorian era

For the bride and groom, their families and friends, their "big day" is one of celebration and joy. Whether the guest list is large or small, the event is sure to be remembered fondly by all participants and observers.

The mention of the word "wedding" conjures up thoughts of delicate lace, fragrant flowers, the exchange of rings and strains of "Here Comes the Bride."

Whether the bride walks down the aisle in an elaborate, long-trained gown or in more simple garb, it is certain that much deliberation has gone into deciding on the style for this special occasion. Today's couples choose to incorporate whatever elements of tradition they find meaningful.

Many of the customs associated with weddings came to the fore during the Victorian period. The tradition of the honeymoons was established, and it was during this time that wedding attendants were first identified as "maid of honor" and "best man."

At royal and society weddings, six or eight bridesmaids were necessary to help carry the elaborate train of the bride's dress. Even at less flamboyant weddings, the weight of the bride's clothes necessitated at least one attendant to help maneuver her gown, and of course she needed assistance with the pre-wedding dressing in order to accomplish the drastic corseting that was in vogue during the Victorian and Edwardian periods.

Then, as now, the maid of honor would help the bride with assembling the trousseau and planning the details of the wedding.

Bridesmaids are no longer needed to aid in the uncomfortable donning of the corset, and in most cases the bride's train trails gracefully behind her as she walks down the aisle.

Rather than serving as ladies in waiting, today's bridal attendants are chosen by the bride as special friends whom she wants to have standing with her on her momentous day.

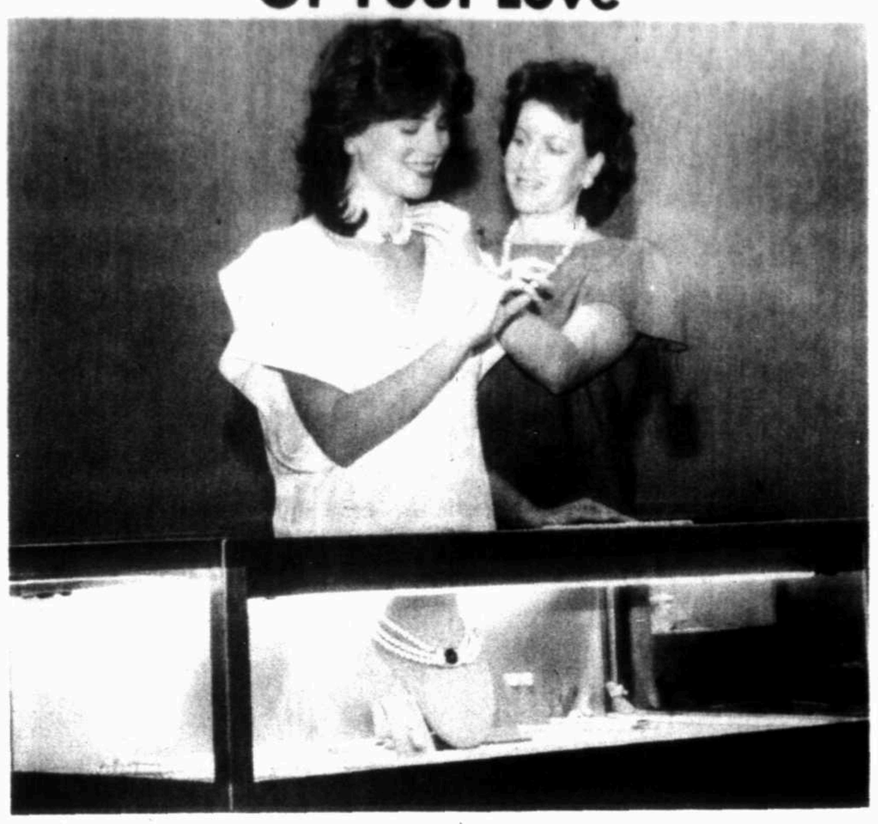

The enormous floral arrangements which sometimes threatened to dwarf the Victorian bride have given way to smaller, more refined bouquets, with the bride usually carrying an arrangement of her favorite flowers.

While elements of Victorian wedding customs are still present in modern ceremonies, they have changed and been adapted over the course of the years.

A froth of ruffles and lace creates a look of luxurious elegance in these gowns for her on that special day. Accessorize one of these lovely gowns with a smaller, more refined bouquet, complimenting it beautifully.

Marriage in U.S. and abroad

By John Sinor
Copley News Service

In any given year there are thousands of grooms standing at the altar who can't, for the life of them, recall ever popping the question.

In grade school when a girl became obviously smitten with one of the boys, we chanted, "First comes love, then comes marriage, then comes Margie with a baby carriage."

We thought it was dreadfully wicked.

The most recent lyrics I've heard on marriage are country western:

"If you want to keep the beer real cold, put it next to my ex-wife's heart."

What of marriage customs in other lands? Some are pretty weird. Some have come down to us through the years.

Ancient Greeks introduced the wedding veil to protect the bride from the evil eye of any jealous suitor.

The wedding ring came from ancient Egypt. They believed the third finger of the bride's hand had a vein that led straight to the heart.

In the Sulawesi Islands of Indochina, they long have believed that unless the groom's soul is bribed with thrown rice, it will fly away and never return.

That happens a lot in this country, rice or no rice. Newlywed Joe goes out for a pack of cigarettes and never comes back.

I used to read about it in the police reports.

There are a couple of tribes in Paraguay that believe in letting love be decided by boxing matches.

When two women of these tribes love the same man, they put on gloves made of tapir leather and slug it out. The winner gets to be the bride.

Another Greek tradition is to roll a fat baby boy on the bridal bed to assure the couple will have many healthy male children.

A tribe in India, the Lambodis, believes in moaning about marriage. The morning after the wedding, the bride is supposed to stand on the back of a bull and weep and moan about her regret at leaving her father, mother and the rest of the family.

It seems to me that this must make the groom feel pretty crummy, and I wouldn't blame him for taking a long, long walk.

Not long ago I attended the wedding of a niece, my brother's daughter.

It was pretty big and, I imagine, pretty expensive.

After the ceremony, while the official photographer and everybody else was taking pictures of the new bride and groom, my brother came by and slipped me a card. It read:

"I am the father of the bride. It may seem like no one is paying any attention to me. But don't worry. There are several businesses and financial institutions in tow that are watching my every move."

We went to the bar and I bought him a Bloody Mary and told him he'd just better hope he didn't find his daughter standing on the back of a bull the next day weeping and moaning.

Essential but creative bridal gifts are current trend in today's bridal registry

By Margaret Rosner
Copley News Service

Today, wedding showers are given for all brides, whether they're getting married for the first, second or even third time. Gone are the days when a remarriage was kept very simple and hush-hush. Now it's considered a joyful new beginning.

But if you've been invited to a "second-time" shower, you may be wondering if there isn't some difference. The original purpose of a shower was to outfit a bride with everything she'd need to set up a new household. But what do you give a woman who is older and who probably already has all the essentials plus?

"A former marriage doesn't guarantee that a bride will have everything she needs to furnish a home now," says Barbara Tober, editor in chief of Bride's magazine. General styles change, and her own lifestyle probably has changed. While years ago she may have hoped for beer mugs to pass around with pizza, now she might want crystal stemware for more formal entertaining. Her former husband might have taken a share of their possessions. Or many of her original items might simply have worn out or broken. Towels, sheets and glasses almost always are appreciated gifts.

If you want to give a traditional present, it's a good idea to find out if the bride has signed up at any wedding gift registries. The bridal consultant there will be able to tell you exactly what serving pieces your friend hopes to add to her flatware or which kitchen appliances she's lacking.

If you don't want to stick with classics, you should view a second-time shower as the perfect opportunity to use your imagination.

"Think a little more frivolous and a little more personal," suggests Tober. The kind of item you'd pass up for a first-time bride because "she needs a million things before she needs this" could be just the right gift now. Think also about going in on a group present. Since the bride doesn't need a quantity of things, you can aim for one object of very special quality.

Depending on the bride's tastes and interests, consider: something gourmet, like a coffee maker that comes with its own grinder, or a professional copper fish poacher; something high tech, such as a talking clock that says "good morning" in dulcet tones, or a computer program that will help newlyweds pay their bills and balance ther checkbooks in state-of-the-art fashion; something antique and "collectible": a colorful quilt or rug to use as a bedspread or wall hanging, a silver teapot or American stoneware. Wedding registries are popping up in unusual places like bookstores, museum shops, gourmet and liquor stores in addition to department and jewelry stores. Maybe the bride's registered at one of them.

Every bride is under some stress during the hectic days of planning a wedding. A remarrying bride often faces an extra challenge as she attempts to care for young children and hold down a demanding job at the same time. So why not give her a gift whose sole purpose is to pamper? The entire shower could follow this theme with each guest bringing either a beauty product, such as soaps, a hairbrush, fragrance or lingerie, or a service, such as a certificate for a facial, manicure or massage or a year's membership in a health spa.

Another thoughtful gift to give a second-time bride is one that puts you "at her service." You promise to perform a specific job that reflects her special situation. For example, you might commit yourself to taking care of her children during her honeymoon, to organizing a garage sale of all the things she doesn't want to bring to her new life or to helping her move. You can give this special gift of your time in the form of an IOU with a sketch representing the job to be done or a tool, such as a paintbrush, to be kept for the task.

Groom needs wedding check list

Octagonal cuff links of gold are enhanced by a round diamond.

The signet ring, matching cuff links and shield-shaped bookmark have a plain, satin-finished surface which can be engraved with a monogram, an initial or symbol.

Just as the bride has her check list for her wedding, so has the groom, reports the Jewelry Industry Council, which submits the following list to help the groom make the wedding plans go smoothly.

After Engagement

Make up your guest list and give it to your fiancee. Visit the clergyman or justice of the peace together. Discuss wedding expenses with fiancee and both sets of parents. Select your best man and ushers and invite them to participate; you will need about one usher for every 50 guests.

Six Months Before

Discuss honeymoon plans with fiancee; make transportation and accommodations arrangements. Update your passport if you plan to go abroad, and check on visas and inoculations needed.

Three Months Before

Select wedding rings with fiancee. Order wedding attire, and talk with ushers about their wedding attire. Complete plans for honeymoon; buy tickets.

One Month Before

Make arrangements for flowers for bridal bouquet, going away corsage, boutonniers for best man and ushers, and mothers' corsages. Pick up wedding rings, check engraving. Arrange lodging for out-of-town relatives and ushers.

Select bridal gift and gifts for attendants. Get legal, medical and religious documents for the wedding in order. Check that ushers have ordered their attire.

Two Weeks Before

Go with fiancee to get marriage license. Organize bachelor dinner with best man. Double check honeymoon reservations. Make sure to arrange transportation from the reception to wherever you are planning to leave on your honeymoon. Move belongings to new home.

One Week Before

Make sure best man notifies ushers of rehearsal time and place. Explain any special seating to head usher. Pack for your honeymoon and get going-away clothes ready to change into after reception. Present gifts to attendants at bachelor party.

Plan survival kit

Late in your wedding day you'll both drive off with tin cans clanking, while friends and relatives pelt your car with rice or bird seed for good luck. Alone at last!

Somehow the breakfast you both missed for pre-wedding jitters, and reception dinner missed for all the dancing and excitement of the day, begin to catch up with you. Now that the day's events have come to a close, you find yourselves hungry and relaxed for the first time all day.

Stopping at a restaurant would hardly seem magical, and even ordering room service at the hotel would be another unwanted interruption.

Ah, but you find a gaily decorated basket in your getaway car en route to the hotel. A note attached reads: "Food Is Love," and is signed by a thoughtful member of the wedding party who packed the surprise.

Makeup tips to assure bride confidence and beauty on her special day

Looking your best on your wedding day doesn't mean a trip to the ladies room every 20 minutes.

With all the kissing, crying and eating, the last thing a blushsing bride needs to worry about is wilting in the middle of the wedding festivities.

With some advanced planning and carefully chosen cosmetics, a bride can be certain of looking her prettiest on that special day.

Here are some makeup tips for that special occasion to help the bride stay confident and assured about her looks.

To keep lips "kiss-proof" and looking their best, be sure to wear a no-smear lipstick that doesn't leave traces on peoples' faces.

From sealing the vows with a kiss to kissing everyome goodbye in leaving for the honeymoon, a long-lasting, no-smear lipstick will stay on lips and keep them looking their "kissable" best.

The ceremony is a teary time for every bride, so it's important that eye makeup stays in place. Use a no-smear, waterproof mascara to prevent running or smudging.

Family and friends will be admiring the bride's wedding ring, so hands should be at their prettiest. A do-it-yourself manicure will look like the real thing if performed correctly.

Start with a base coat to make nails more resistant to breakage and to increase the longevity of the manicure; it also serves as a smooth base for polish.

Then, chip-proof polish should be applied in a color shade complimenting the bridesmaids' dresses. Two coats will give nails a smooth look and even color.

Lastly, a top coat to protect nails from unexpected chips will give nails a professionally finished look.

A powder eyeshadow rather than a creamy one is the best way to keep eyes sparkling for all those flashing cameras.

For an extra shimmering effect, add a touch of irridescent shadow. Or, a touch of blue can be added to make the whites of eyes look brighter.

The bride should remember to add a touch of blush high on her cheekbones to maintain a radiant glow. To light up the entire face, a gentle sweep of blusher can be applied to temples, earlobes, chin and the bridge of the nose. For oily and combination skin types, powder blushes are best.

Focus on advance makeup planning and selection for today's modern bride

"Today's bride may have been brought up in jeans and jogging shoes, but every woman dreams of romance and femininity on her wedding day," says Glenn Roberts, Creative Beauty Director.

"Special touches and careful planning of your beauty regimen and makeup selection will do much to achieve prettiness on that important day."

Glenn advises if you're thinking of changing or modifying makeup or hairstyle, do so well in advance and then talk with a beauty expert about new makeup colors and application procedures. This way, there are no unpleasant surprises on the important day.

It's necessary to rehearse hair and makeup with the wedding ensemble — hat or veil, dress and jewelry. If at all possible, do so in the actual light you'll appear in.

The light of a house of worship, dim and soft, contributes much to the charm and mystery of the wedding ceremony. But, this kind of lighting and the traditional white favored by most brides can "wash out" the features.

Be sure that makeup is applied equally to all parts of the face and that it is well blended. "Daytime weddings are best suited by soft, but lively pastels in light or medium shades on lips and cheeks.

"Eyes need shadow in soft, muted colors. Use a pastel pink shadow on the brow bone, a soft misty blue on the lids and a deeper shade of misty blue on the contour.

"Evening ceremonies allow for more intense color and makeup can be heightened with deeper, richer shades," advises Glenn.

Lipstick is an absolute must, of course, but with all the congratulatory kissing bound to go on, it can get easily smeared. To help color last through both ceremony and reception, touch lips with Visible Difference Lip-Fix Creme before applying lipstick.

It will also keep color from "feathering" and "bleeding out" beyond the mouth — line lips neatly with a brush or pencil first, and then fill in the center.

The look any bride should want is soft, natural and radiant. By keeping the look light and graceful with delicate soft colors, every groom will see his love at her loveliest on that special day.

Since the key to a radiant look is really healthy skin, a facial one week before the wedding is recommended. Skin and pores will be deep cleaned and the one week leeway will give any possible eruptions a chance to heal.

Remember, too, that all eyes will be on you. Being in the limelight means making sure your appearance is polished to perfection. Planning carefully and taking time to relax will help ensure that your day is a perfect one.

Romantic trends for bridesmaids' dresses

Romantic and traditional are the two biggest trends in bridesmaid dressing today. More and more bridal parties are wearing either frilly off-the-shoulder Scarlett O'Hara looks or lacy covered-up Victorians, both of which lend an aura of charm and femininity to the wedding.

The most popular fabrics are taffeta and satin while chiffon still holds its own. Pastel shades are the favorites, with pink the leader and aqua "coming on strong," according to buyer Janice Gibney of Susie's Casuals, a national chain that specializes in bridal and prom dresses.

"Bright red looks like it will be an important color as well," Ms. Gibney notes.

Lengths are generally to the floor, although there seems to be some interest in tea lengths, which end mid-calf.

Nearly as important as the dress itself are accessories. Gloves, both wrist and elbow length, are extremely popular, while hats, hoops, crinolines and jewelry all add a feminine touch.

Whatever the choice of style, shopping early is a must. To ensure that orders are met properly, Ms. Gibney suggests that the bridal party shop at least eight weeks prior to the wedding. As she says, "It's always good to choose early and be safe."

Maggie Blaney, this year's Feeling Great Woman, looks great even while working out.

Model offers no sweat beauty tips for brides

"Now that you are married, you still want to look as fit and trim as ever," advises Maggie Blaney, this year's winner of the Annual Cover Girl Search by Feeling Great, the monthly woman's magazine dedicated to helping women "feel great from the inside out."

"It's extremely important not to let your body get out of shape, even for a little while," Maggie says. "But many women tend to stop exercising when they first get married for fear of not looking their best while working out.

"There's no reason why you can't look great while keeping fit. I take care to look my best even though I'm not married. After all, you never know who you'll run into!" she laughs.

To look good when you're exercising, here are some "No Sweat Beauty Tips" from a recent article in Feeling Great.

• Wear an absorbent headband to keep perspiration from running down your face, causing makeup to streak.

• For indoor exercise, wear a tinted moisturizer instead of foundation and moisturizer. It saves time, and looks like a second skin. For outdoors, use a sunscreen as a moisturizer and put foundation over it.

• Use gel for cheek color. It's natural in appearance, and has great staying power.

• Pat face powder on gently with a clean cotton ball to help "set" makeup. Don't forget to powder eye lids too.

• Wear waterproof mascara so it won't smudge under the most strenuous circumstances. It won't even come off in the shower afterward if you're in a big hurry.

• Use a tinted lip gloss so color won't cake while you're panting.

• Pat perspiration off instead of rubbing so your face stays intact through the duration of your workout.

Men's bracelets more popular

Bracelets were once an indispensable part of every well-dressed man's attire, worn by everyone from King Tutankhamun to Shakespeare. Now that men are rediscovering their jewelry heritage, bracelets are back in a big way. Wrist chains with bold, interesting links are among the most popular styles. The identification bracelet, introduced by World War II G.I.s, continues in popularity. A modern variation is the heavy chain linked to equally bold letters spelling out a man's name or initials. New kinds of wrist action for men include cuff and bangle bracelets in shiny or textured finishes, as well as wire and clamp-on styles.

Couples marry again for love

Have you ever said to your husband or wife, "I love you so much I'd marry you all over again?" There's a way to make good on your promise: Have a reaffirmation ceremony.

Paul Newman and Joanne Woodward recently had one. So did Mr. and Mrs. William Shatner. According to Barbara Tober, Editor-in-Chief of BRIDE'S Magazine, "Across the United States, the custom of reaffirming one's wedding vows is fast becoming popular for couples who are happily married and want to say so to each other and the world."

When in particular might a couple want to rededicate their commitment to each other? Some chose a significant anniversary — maybe the fifth or the 25th.

Others mark a major event, such as the birth of a child or a child's marriage. Still others are prompted to renew their vows after they've successfully weathered a period of marital stress and decided to stay together.

To plan a reaffirmation ceremony:

• First speak to your clergyman. He will help you work out your own service, complete with readings, music, even a processional. Another option is for you to arrange an interlude for the ceremony within an anniversary or other party you'll have.

• Decide what vows you'll recite. You could repeat your marriage vows, having the clergy insert something like "renewing their promise in the presence of God." Or you could write your vows yourselves. For example, you might want to make pledges relating to patience, health, a sense of humor or ability to communicate.

• Plan a reception if you wish. It can be anything you want, from a dinner for just family to a large cocktail party. Carry out the theme by including some classic wedding touches such as champagne and a festive cake. Decorate the party area with photos from your wedding.

• Choose your outfits. The "bride" might bring her actual wedding dress out of storage for the event. Or she could shop for a new, more sophisticated look — perhaps a sleek sheath, smooth charmeuse or floaty chiffon in a "tea" or ballet length.

The "groom" could wear either a tuxedo or a business suit, depending on how formal the party will be.

Send the invitations. If you'll have a formal celebration for more than 50 guests, it's a good idea to send printed invitations. The wording would be: The honour of your presence is requested at the reaffirmation of the wedding vows of Mr. and Mrs. . . . etc.

If you and your spouse have children, by all means include them. Young children can act as flower carriers or ring bearers. Teens could usher, read a poem or scripture passage, or sing.

I have loved flowers that fade,
Within whose magic tents
Rich hues have marriage made
With sweet unmemoried scents.

— Robert Bridges

For brides: At last, the crystal facts!

When choosing or registering for wedding gifts, who doesn't think of traditional stemware? Or, the practical salad bowl? What about the elegant pitcher? Or, the beautiful wine carafe?

Because crystal is married to the wedding tradition and its inherent characteristics make it a priceless treasure for future generations, it is only right for you to learn the crystal facts before making your final choice.

When selecting crystal, be careful . . . Don't be deceived. Not everything that looks translucent, brilliant, crystalline and elegant is fine crystal.

To help you in your selection, here's a list of questions many brides often think of when choosing their crystal, but never know whom to ask. At last, Princess House, a leading manufacturer of full-lead, handblown and handcut crystal, provides you with the answers.

Q.: Are air bubbles imperfections or a sign of low-quality crystal?

A.: Absolutely not. Tiny bubbles, marks and variations are unique traits of high-quality handblown crystal. They represent the "signature" of the glassblower's finished ar:.

Q.: How can you tell if crystal is handblown or machine pressed?

A.: Handblown crystal is mouth blown, one piece at a time, and is more graceful, delicate and finer in detail than machine pressed crystal. One piece of handblown stemware may require the work of up to 18 artisans.

On the other hand, pressed crystal is heavier than handblown and its density gives the items a rich tonal ring when delicately tapped.

Q.: What's the difference between crystal and lead crystal?

A.: Crystal is a glass that contains lead oxide, a substance which gives crystal its weight and luster. High-quality crystal should contain at least 24 percent lead oxide, and is commonly called full-lead crystal.

Lead is fundamental since it enables crystal to retain its attractive qualities during the shaping process. The more lead, the brighter, the clearer and the richer the tone is.

Q.: What are the most popular crystal pieces for wedding gifts?

A.: A stemware collection is a long awaited favorite among brides. There are three basic types: The water goblet, the wine glass and the closed "tulip" champagne. Eight of each is the magical number for a complete set.

Table accessories include the salad bowl, the romantic candlesticks, the hurricane lamps, the useful pitcher and the coffee carafe.

Also, crystal dinnerware is growing in popularity. More brides are choosing it because its versatility complements any color or table decor.

Q.: Is it socially correct to turn a water goblet into a dessert dish or a pitcher into a flower vase?

A.: Yes! It is not only correct, but it shows imagination. After the excitement of the wedding is long gone and you have a chance to settle down, you will soon realize you are missing a few essential items. Use your crystal! It is more versatile, practical and durable than most people suspect.

For instance, a candlelite vase has many uses: It can be a cigarette, pencil or toothpick holder. Place it in the center of your fresh vegetable dip dish and make your carrots, celery and zucchini stand up.

With crystal there are no limitations to its use.

Q.: Should crystal be used only at night and/or for selected formal parties?

A.: Definitely not.

Your salad bowl can serve fruits and croissants in the morning, punch or potato chips at a picnic lunch, and elegantly displayed vegetables at a formal dinner. Be creative. Crystal does not have a season or a time of day.

Q.: Does weight determine the quality of crystal?

A.: Not at all. Weight doesn't say anything about the quality of crystal. You should look for the craftman's detail work and the tonal quality.

Q.: When delicately tapping the crystal, what does the bell-like ring tell us?

A.: The clearer the tone, the better the quality.

And remember: Whether formal or informal, leaded or full-lead, machine pressed or handblown, crystal will always add a magical touch to your new home.

Experiment with the unconventional. Mix and match china and crystal patterns using colors and shapes as unifying themes.

Discover new uses for pretty things. Crystal champagne flutes can make exquisite parfait glasses for mousse and other desserts.

Add special touches with accessories. A floral arrangement, fruit bowl and tapers always are appropriate. But, for more offbeat ideas think about your favorite ceramic figurines, paperweights or individual ceramic boxes filled with goodies such as nuts, after dinner candies or little flower buds.

Crystal, flowers, champagne and candles: All details of an everlasting wedding legend. Among the most popular bridal gifts are these versatile items: traditional stemware, crystal bowl, candlesticks and dinnerware place settings.

Sensible suggestions that help keep range of wedding costs under control

Like everything else in these inflationary days, getting married can be expensive. A wedding includes items such as a bridal dress, flowers and a reception, not to mention photography, music and a honeymoon trip. When you add it all up, that one special day can cost a lot.

But does it have to cost more than you can afford? According to Barbara Tober, Editor-in-Chief of BRIDE'S Magazine, it doesn't and it shouldn't. "The wonderful thing about weddings is that they can take so many different forms," she says.

How to do it

Mrs. Tober feels that no couple should miss out on a wedding because they think they can't afford it. Here are some tips for making sure that costs don't get out of hand.

• Set priorities early on. Do this by finding out what a wedding in your area actually costs and then deciding what you must have, and what you can sacrifice or spend less on.

One strategy is to go all out on one or two things that will make your wedding unique and economize on the rest.

For example, at your reception you might serve your guests a full sit-down dinner, but limit the music to a single strolling musician and choose only in-season, and therefore less expensive, flowers.

Or, for an afternoon wedding, you could scale down the meal to simple finger sandwiches but splurge on the most memorable wedding cake you can find.

• Try, whenever possible, to get the look you want without full cost. For example, the lushness of a country club garden wedding might be duplicated at much less expense in a city park.

The same basic style wedding dress can cost anywhere from a few hundred to a few thousand dollars depending on the fabric and other fine points of design.

• Start your wedding planning early. This is always a good idea, but doubly so when money is a factor, because you'll have the time to shop around and find the best prices or single package-price.

Comparison shopping tips

Don't be afraid to tell a prospective caterer, florist or whatever, that you're comparison shopping and taking bids. He may try a little harder to get your business.

• Shopping early also helps you avoid the pitfall of paying higher prices by default: You won't have to take a reception hall or a honeymoon suite that's out of your price range just because everything else is booked solid.

• Carefully read any contract you sign to avoid budget-draining rip-offs. Watch out for agreements that say they'll take care of everything. Will there really be no extra hidden costs?

Consider contingencies

Find out answers to the "what-ifs" too. What if you want the band to play another hour? A dozen more four-color prints made?

• Finally, consider reducing the burden of wedding costs by redistributing them.

It's traditional in this country for the bride's parents to foot the whole wedding bill but, according to Mrs. Tober, all signs are that this is changing toward a sharing of the expenses by the two families.

The groom's family often offers to cover specific expenses — for example, the flowers, the music and the liquor.

Or, the two families might decide that one will pay for the ceremony (flowers, church rental, limousines), and the other will pick up the reception tab.

Five steps for maintaining glow of lasting honeymoon beauty

On your honeymoon you may find yourself romping barefoot on the beach, dancing till dawn under the stars or speeding down a famous ski slope.

Whether you and your new husband prefer a warm or cold weather honeymoon, there are definite precautions and adjustments you must make in your beauty routine.

"Amidst all the fun, you'll want to look your best with make-up that doesn't smear, skin that isn't dried and flaky, and hair that is soft and manageable," says Lawrence J. McGonigle, president of Hazel Bishop Cosmetics.

Advice from the experts

The cosmetic experts at Hazel Bishop suggest these five "can't fail" tips for honeymoon beauty:

1. Be prepared! When you're packing for your honeymoon, pack a "ready-for-anything" kit. Put your make-up essentials in a special bag so you needn't worry that something important will be left behind.

And, toss a few extras into your beauty bag for emergencies and unexpected situations: Purse-size tissues, wash-up towelettes, and pretty clips for your hair.

For easy packing and carrying, purchase the smallest size possible of all items, and be sure to siphon any liquids into unbreakable, travel-size containers.

2. Protect against the sun! Sensible thinkers regard the sun as a natural enemy to beauty and health. Sun damage is progressive and unfortunately permanent.

So, if you're honeymooning in intense sun, be sure to protect your sensitive skin from the sun's harmful rays by applying a sun block.

And, the best words of advice are to sunbathe slowly. Start with a 20-minute exposure; work up gradually from there. Don't wait till you see red before you cover up! And ducking under an umbrella simply isn't enough protection. The sand reflects rays of sun so be sure to bring along a caftan or terry robe.

3. Water-proof your make-up! In a warm climate, switch to a light, water-based foundation to avoid the "shinies" on your face, and to show-off your tan.

Use a water-proof mascara to prevent a "dracula" look of dark smeared make-up around your eyes, and apply two layers of eyeshadow — it's pretty protection against burned eyelids.

Powder shadows such as Hazel Bishop's Eye Shadow Classics last longer than creamy shadows. And when worn in the sun, powder shadows remain in place without melting down your face like the creams.

And, always wear lipstick! Intense sun tends to dry your lips and cause them to chap and peel. Wearing a lipstick at all times will seal in your lips' natural moisture so they will look healthy and soft.

If you'd like a fresh, natural look for sunning on the beach or skiing down the slopes, wear Hazel Bishop Naturally Clear with Vitamin E and Sunscreen for extra protection. As your lips do not have oil producing glands, you should always make a conscious effort to keep them protected.

4. Moisturize from within and without! When you're outdoors basking in the sun or vigorously exercising, refresh and "water" your skin by spritzing yourself with a pump sprayer similar to the way you mist your plants.

Also, try to drink plenty of fluids to replenish water lost through perspiration and eat four different kinds of fruits and vegetables daily — the fresher the better.

Moisturizing a must

To help reduce peeling, moisturize all over with a rich lotion. Don't overlook back of knees, elbows, tops of feet, ears, and your neck.

5. Honeymoon hair tricks! Warm weather hairdos should be comfortable as well as attractive. Braids, pigtails and ponytails accessorized with pretty ribbons, elastics and clips are all flattering and keep your hair away from your face, leaving you cool and comfortable.

Making second marriages successful

Second time arounders. Those men and women who marry again — often find that although love may be lovelier the second time around, it can also be fraught with residual ties from the first marriage that can bring problems, reports psychologist Dr. Florence Rhyn Serlin, consultant to the Jewelry Industry Council.

Sometimes it is not so much the monumental problems the couple must face and usually make a point to surmount (such as the 'your kids, my kids' complication) but the little less important issues that cause the trouble, Dr. Serlin says.

It could be something as innocuous as household effects from a former marriage, she declares.

"That fine set of monogrammed sterling silverware may serve as mute testimony to the second-time bride that someone else was there before her — someone whom her new husband once cared for very much, and who was very important to him at that time," she observes.

For a case in point, Kathy married Tom, a widower who had lost his wife whom he had been happily married to for some dozen blissful years. Although several years had passed before he met and married Kathy following his first wife's death, there were many poignant reminders of Alice remaining in his life — not the least of which was his daughter Debbie.

Kathy could cope with old friends of Tom's who remembered Alice and spoke of her, and she even managed to win the affection and acceptance of Tom's young daughter. But it was the reality of facing daily life in an environment that reflected Alice's personality that bothered Kathy. Setting the table with the same sterling and china that the former wife had selected and used caused Kathy no little consternation.

Kathy was well aware that Tom was a sentimentalist and would balk at discarding Alice's possessions. But it was this same gentleness and sentimentality that had attracted her to Tom in the first place she realized. She couldn't very well expect him to change his basic nature over night, nor would she want him to.

"Give Tom a graceful out," the psychologist urged Kathy. The ideal solution was that Kathy carefully pack away the silverware and told Tom: "It is such a pretty set, and it is something Debbie's mother selected. I think we should set it aside for Debbie, so that when she marries, she will have something of her mother's to start off her new life."

Needless to say, Tom was touched by Kathy's sensitivity and caring, and wasn't at all put out when Kathy replaced the family silver with patterns of her own choosing. It also was an indication to Debbie that Kathy was not trying to take her mother's place, but rather wanting to preserve her memory.

What can one do in the case of the woman who marries a divorced man who for whatever reason may be still sentimental about his first wife and her possessions which he may retain?

In that case, says Dr. Serlin, it may be wiser to acknowledge the state of affairs, and discreetly put the articles in the back of the closet until time enough has elapsed so that she can build her own set of happy memories with her new husband. Then, at a later date, she can deal with discarding or giving away the items.

The best rule of thumb for the second-time spouse who wishes to replace a new mate's belongings from another marriage (and it can be a husband who wishes to get rid of his new wife's possessions from her former marriage as well) is to offer concrete rather than abstract alternatives, Dr. Serlin notes.

"You may like more modern designs, but the silver or crystal and china you have 'inherited' is very ornate or too richly embellished for your tastes. Your new husband may like the pattern or, more than likely, have come to accept it. Rather than declare flatly that you want to get rid of it, take your mate to the store and look at new designs and patterns. With the wealth of designs available today, there is sure to be one that you both can agree upon," she says.

Of course, getting rid of the furnishings of a first marriage isn't always an easy task. The mate who came with the furnishings may feel that in today's tight economy, this is no time to toss out perfectly usable items. If he or she is also sentimentally attached to the belongings, attempts to replace them may seem not only destructive, but callous.

How to resolve the problem?

Dr. Serlin suggests that you lay it on the line with your partner. Explain that having these personal reminders of your mate's close involvement with a former love and of a part of his or her life that you never shared is painful and troubling. "When you approach it in this fashion," says the psychologist, "you are flattering, not challenging your spouse."

Beautiful gifts for the wedding party

For the Maid of Honor

The Maid of Honor's gift should be somewhat more important than that of the bridesmaids. Pearl necklace or bracelet; tailored or stone set necklace, bracelet or earrings. Picture frame; novelty watch; ring.

For the Bridesmaids

The bridesmaid's gifts should all be identical. Bangle bracelet; gold or silver charm; circle pin; pendant; pearl button or stud earrings; fashion jewelry; novelty items such as bon bon dish, demitasse spoons, book mark, purse accessories.

For the Flower Girl

The flower girl's gift may be something she can use immediately or something which can be reserved for her future, more mature years. Locket; pearl pendant; birthstone ring; bracelet; gold or silver barrette.

For the Best Man

The Best Man, who is the groom's principal attendant, should receive a special gift from the groom. Gold, silver or stone set cuff links and tie tac; gold or silver cigarette case; gold or silver money clip; cigarette lighter; desk accessories.

For the Ushers

The ushers' gifts, too, should be identical. Belt buckle; gold or silver key rings; pen and pencil set; cuff links; pocket knife; mugs; bar jigger; silver letter opener; I.D. bracelet; wallet.

For the Page

A gift for the page may be immediately useful or one that can be reserved for his future use, just as the flower girl's. Birthstone ring; cuff links; brush and comb set; religious jewelry; pen and pencil set.

Honeymoons here to stay

Do couples getting married still take a honeymoon? Or is it just an old-fashioned custom that's gone the way of songs rhyming "June" with "moon?" The blissful wedding trip is more popular than ever, says BRIDE'S Magazine.

In response to a recent survey conducted by BRIDE'S, 99.3 percent of its readers said they were in the midst of planning a honeymoon.

"The wedding could be large or small, the couple rich or poor, this is one group of travelers that packs its bags no matter what," says Marcia Vickery, BRIDE'S Travel Editor.

The BRIDE'S survey shows that modern honeymooners travel further (an average of 1,817 miles) and spend more money than in former times, probably due to the fact that today's newlyweds are older and better educated.

About two-thirds travel within the United States (California, Florida and Pennsylvania are the top-ranking states), while the rest venture abroad. The typical couple stays away about eight days, although 12 percent travel for two full weeks or more.

Why is the honeymoon so indispensable? Partly because it's a tradition and, therefore, expected. But also because it's necessary.

There's a lot of stress involved in preparing for a wedding. A honeymoon gives a couple a chance to relax and wind down. It also seems to provide a needed psychological transition between being single and being married.

Beyond this, though, its purpose has changed somewhat over the years. The popular image of a honeymoon is of a special time when just-married couples go off for a "getting-to-know-you" period of total privacy.

While privacy and romance are still on the list of honeymooners' desires, new social trends — such as living together before marriage — have brought a different emphasis.

Today, fewer couples are choosing to take the sort of honeymoon where they spend a week or so alone in an isolated cabin in the woods. Instead, they prefer more action: Resorts that include sports, entertainment, gourmet food and locations that have plenty of sights to see.

What advice does BRIDE'S have for the couple planning a honeymoon?

• Be honest with each other. How do you both really want to spend your honeymoon? Hiking? Shopping? Or just lazing away on a beach?

• Make your plans early. You'll have a better chance of getting exactly the space at the time you want instead of being disappointed or having to pay more because the rooms in your price range are all taken.

• Take advantage of timing — with night-flight savings, weekday, excursion, and special fares on land and in the air. And be sure to investigate off-season travel too. Write to airline tour departments, hotel chain headquarters, and individual resorts for brochures, rate sheets, and honeymoon package details.

Count on a professional photographer to capture all the special moments at your wedding.

Advice on how to choose a wedding photographer

One very important item on your wedding checklist is hiring your professional photographer. While relatives and friends may take photographs of the occasion, you'll want to be sure an experienced professional has been contracted to capture the mood and scenes of this memorable occasion.

A professional photographer is trained to consider not only the technical aspects of your photographic needs, but is also people-oriented and knows how to photograph you with sensitivity to capture the mood and feeling of the day, without interfering with the solemnity of the ceremony or the fun of the reception.

Here are some suggestions to help you select the right photographer:

• Begin early — particularly if you are getting married in the popular months of June, July, August or December, the busiest seasons — in order to book your choice of photographers.

• "Interview" a variety of photographers. Look at samples of their work. Select a photographer whose style suits the images you'd like to capture.

• Arrange for a formal bridal portrait for the newspaper at the time of your final gown fitting.

• Don't change your hair style, or have it cut or frosted, just before taking your portrait — you want to look like you. Keep jewelry and other accessories to a minimum. Your makeup should not be excessive.

• Enlist a friend or relative to identify special friends and relatives for the photographer. At the reception, request photographs of your guests at various table groupings.

Wedding photographs do not have to be limited to your album; they have many creative uses. Here are a few suggestions:

• An album for your parents;

• Personal thank-you notes with your photograph;

• Christmas cards or gifts;

• Decor for your home.

Most professional photographers use quality Kodak film and paper and will provide you with photographic memories perfect for your wedding album, gift giving, home decor and other purposes.

Excitement and love in the air for bridal couples

Beginning a new life together is always an exciting time for most every "couple to be."

For Wanda Caldwell, Earnest Merritt, Kimberly Culvahouse Pearce and Herbert Pearce, the 1985 Bridal Section couples, the excitement is evident.

Kim and Herb exchanged their vows on May 4, 1985, at the Midland Christain Fellowship Church. Dr. Daniel Vestal of First Baptist Church of Midland and Rev. Dick Spencer of Christian Fellowship officiated the ceremony.

Serving as maid of honor was sister of the bride, Camille Culvahouse and as best man was Bradford Pearce, brother of the groom.

Kim is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Culvahouse of Midland. Parents of the groom are Mr. and Mrs. H.L. Pearce, also of Midland.

After graduating from Midland Lee High School in 1979, both Kim and Herb attended Texas Tech University in Lubbock where Herb played varsity football for two years. In 1982, Kim received a BBA in finance.

Following an exciting honeymoon in Colorado, the newlyweds are now planning careers in missionary work. As full time staff members of Youth With a Mission, an international, interdenominational Christain missionary organization, the couple will be based out of Maui, Hawaii. That home base will serve as a launching pad into Asia where they will spend three to six months in actual outreach programs.

Wanda and Earnest are native Midlanders also. Wanda, a 1979 graduate of Midland High School, received a BBA and MBA in Business Management from Angelo State University in San Angelo.

After graduating from Midland Lee High School in 1979, Earnest attended McMurry College in Abilene where he received a B.S. degree in Science.

Wanda is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R.D. Caldwell of Midland and Earnest is the son of Mr. William Merritt, Jr., and the late Mrs. Eria Merritt.

The couple is planning an evening wedding ceremony to be held August 31, 1985, at the Macedonia Baptist Church with Rev. O.J. Archie officiating.

Serving as bridal attendants will be sisters of the bride, Gloria C. Robinson, matron of honor and Marlene Caldwell, maid of honor. Serving as bridesmaids will be Janie P. Westbrook of Minneapolis, Minn.; Carolyn A. Moore of Brownwood; Regina Wortham of Garland; Deidra Swindell; Belinda Merritt, sister of the groom; Peggy Jones, cousin of the groom, all of Midland; Dana Johnson, Bryan and Dudra Butler of San Angelo. Cheneekwa Merritt, niece of the groom will serve as flower girl.

Serving as the groom's attendants will be Arthur Pertile III as best man; William Merritt III, Danny Caldwell, brothers of the bride and Ricky Johnson, all of Midland. Horace Boston, Darrell Johnson and Clyde McKenzie, all of Wichita Falls will serve as groomsmen. Also serving asgroomsmen will be Jackie Patterson of Fort Worth, Randy Tarrant of Arlington and Frank Shotlow of Houston.

Serving as ushers will be Ricky Sells of Newton; Rodney Brown of San Antonio; Michael Dupont of Killeen and Roscoe Guess of Amarillo.

After a vacation honeymoon to Padre Island, Wanda and Earnest will reside in Abilene where Earnest is a unit director of the Nelson Branch of the Abilene Boys' Club and Wanda will pursue a career in banking.

Both couples are planning active lives within their church and community by focusing on cooperation and determination to assure each partner's happiness.
