Heat scorches temperature record

Floodwaters continue to threaten South

Associated Press

Flood waters kept hundreds from their homes today in three Southern states, and a storm packing 90 mph wind raced across Texas, uprooting trees and chasing Shakespearean actors from an outdoor stage in Dallas moments before it collapsed.

The storm system developed in Okalahoma, bolted across Texas and moved into Louisiana and Mississippi early today, blowing down power lines, spinning off tornadoes and causing lightning-sparked fires.

Power outages affected 100,000 customers in the Dallas-Fort Worth area alone, and at least 30,000 were still without power this morning.

"This is the worst storm damage in Dallas since the 1979 ice storm," said Dick Ramsey, a spokesman for Texas Utilities.

In Minnesota and South Dakota, thunderstorms developing ahead of a cold front Sunday night produced severe weather, including tornadoes.

At Dyess Air Force Base in Abilene, Texas, a concert billed as the Event of the Decade ended in chaos as the storm dumped heavy rain and hail on thousands of spectators.

"It turned this place from a dust bowl into a mud bowl," said Sgt. Bob Matson. "The hail was marble-sized for 20 minutes. It didn't matter where you were, there was no protection."

112-degree figure not likely today

Yikes. it was hot Sunday.

It was the kind of hot that makes nasal membranes sting with every inhalation, rugged prairie lizards take to their holes and fair-skinned homebodies think twice about venturing outside, even to grab the Sunday newspaper.

It was Midland's hottest day in recorded history.

At 4:15 p.m. the temperature hit 112 degrees, beating the all-time record of 109 set on June 29, 1946, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

The record tied five other U.S. cities for hottest spot in the nation Sunday, NWS reported. Other contenders for meteorological bragging rights were Lajitas; Laughlin, Nev.; and Buckeye, Coolidge and Phoenix, Ariz.

Sunday's high temperature also waxed the 104 record for this date set in 1964.

Midland fire officials this morning looked forward with dread to the combustible combination of throat-choking weather conditions and July Fourth firecracker merrymaking out among the powder-keg scrub brushes.

Supreme Court ruling will limit abortions

WASHINGTON (AP) — A deeply divided Supreme Court today provided states with new authority to limit a woman's right to abortion. The court, ruling on one of the most contentious issues of the decade, stopped short of reversing its 1973 decision legalizing abortion.

In a series of votes, many of them 5-4, the justices restored key provisions of a Missouri law that a lower court had invalidated for unduly interfering with the constitutional right to abortion. Significantly, the court appeared to invite further challenges to its 1973 decision, prompting an angry dissent from its author, Justice Harry A. Blackmun, but exultation from anti-abortion activists.

"We are smiling. We are thumbs up all the way," said John Willke, president of the National Right to Life Committee.

In his dissenting opinion, Blackmun said, "For today, at least, the law of abortion stands undisturbed. For today, the women of this nation will retain the liberty to control their destinies. But the signs are evident and very ominous, and a chill wind blows."

In today's decision, the justices restored several Missouri abortion regulations. Overall, the effect was to allow Missouri to restrict the use of public money, medical personnel or facilities in performing abortion procedures.

One ruling requires doctors to determine, when possible, whether a fetus at least 20 weeks old is capable of surviving outside the womb, by testing lung capacity and conducting other tests.

The ruling will affect women far beyond Missouri because other states now may follow Missouri's lead.

A majority of the justices said they were unwilling, in this case, to overturn or even reconsider the court's landmark, 16-year-old decision in Roe vs. Wade. Sandra Day O'Connor, a swing vote for the majority in many of today's decisions, was among those who declined to tackle the 1973 case.

Four members of the court — Rehnquist and Justices Byron R. White, Antonin Scalia and Anthony M. Kennedy — appeared ready to scrap Roe vs. Wade, but only Scalia said the 1973 ruling should be overturned outright.

Today's decision said a declaration in Missouri law that "the life of each human being begins at conception" is not unconstitutional because it carries no enforceable restrictions on abortion.

Specifically, the court said:

- Missouri, and other states as well, may ban the use of tax money for "encouraging or counseling" women to have abortions not necessary to save their lives.
- States may ban any public employee — doctor, nurse or other health care provider — from performing or assisting an abortion not necessary to save a woman's life.
- States may ban the use of any public hospital or other facility for performing abortions not necessary to save life.

Reaction across the nation was swift.

"This is an outrage," said Judith Widdecombe, founder of Reproductive Health Services, the abortion clinic in Missouri that was party to the case. "There's a movement in this country that will not tolerate this. It will become our Vietnam of the 1990s."

Midland men share views on controversial decision

Local officials on both sides of the abortion issue called this morning's Supreme Court ruling a triumph for pro-life activists.

The Supreme Court today gave states more power to restrict abortions, limiting women's right to an abortion.

"This is a clear victory," said Mark Mosely, Midland coordinator for West Texans for Life. "We feel the Supreme Court has issued a decision favoring life."

But Mosely said anti-abortionists' work has only begun, with many state legislative hurdles to leap.

"We're urging pro-lifers to contact their legislators to ask them to introduce and push for the passage of pro-life bills," Mosely said.

Supreme Court justices, in a split vote, refused to overturn the 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision which legalized abortions.

Scot Northern, president of Planned Parenthood of West Texas, said the justices have significantly chipped away at the 16-year-old ruling and women's rights.

"I'm disappointed," Northern said. "It did not uphold that much of Roe vs. Wade. It also attacks the constitutional right to privacy. It's really a crime."

Gromyko dies at 79

MOSCOW (AP) — Andrei A. Gromyko, the tough-negotiating former foreign minister who survived five Kremlin leadership changes and weathered the dramatic turns of East-West relations in a half-century of public life, has died at age 79.

Soviet news reports said the grim-faced Gromkyo, who oversaw Soviet foreign policy for 28 years, died Sunday.

The cause of death was not announced, but a Foreign Ministry spokesman said Friday that Gromyko had been hospitalized after surgery for a vascular problem — heart or circulatory system — that was not further identified.

President Mikhail S. Gorbachev announced the death to the Supreme Soviet legislature today.

"The deputies at the session, with a minute of silence, paid homage to the memory of the outstanding government and party leader," Radio Moscow said.

The official Tass news agency said Gromyko was "one of the major Soviet diplomats and statesmen of the senior generation" and added that the country "lost one of its most prominent leaders."

There was no immediate announcement of funeral plans.

As a diplomat, ambassador and foreign minister, Gromyko helped forge the Soviet-American World War II alliance, joined in drafting the U.N. Charter and sat in on superpower talks that shaped the face of the modern world.

City begins expanding senior centers

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

City officials think senior citizens' programs need room to grow and are forging ahead with expansion plans despite a failed 1988 bond referendum which would have guaranteed the necessary funding.

They also hope additional state funding can be secured to subsidize the meatiest of program expenses — nutrition.

Expansion of the city of Midland's two senior centers will be financed with tax dollars and possibly local and state foundation grants.

Currently, seniors meet in southeast Midland meet at Hollowell Baptist Church and in southwest Midland at the Delano Center.

City Council last week authorized Parks and Recreation Director George Logan to apply for grants that would subsidize construction of a new senior center in southeast Midland.

Final lease negotiations also are underway with managers of Dellwood Mall to secure a replacement facility for the current southwest Midland senior center.

Voters last year nixed a $400,000 referendum that would have guaranteed tax revenue to pay for most of the the expansion and construction plans.

But citizen opposition to the plans hasn't negated the need for more room, officials agree.

"Even though the bond issue was defeated, we still need to provide adequate space to effectively serve the needs of our seniors in the city of Midland," Logan said.

Steve Edwards, executive director of Community and Senior Services of Midland, estimates that 12 percent of the population in Midland is over age 65.

Projections call for doubling the size of the Delano facility with the leasing of the Dellwood space.

The city should secure the five-year lease at the Dellwood Mall for $3-$5 a square foot — about $50,000 a year, Edwards said.

Court rejects Parker case appeal

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals has rejected convicted kidnapper Kenneth Wayne Parker's appeal, refuting arguments that sensational pre-trial publicity affected jurors at his Midland trial. A three-judge panel of the court, in a unanimous decision released today, also disagreed with defense arguments that another man kidnapped June Gilkerson.

The man who led the prosecution team against Parker said the decision — which also upheld his consecutive life sentences — was expected.

"I am pleased, but not surprised," said Assistant U.S. Attorney Wayne Speck of San Antonio. "I fully expected that it would be affirmed."

Assistant U.S. Attorney Tom Beery, who assisted in the prosecution, reviewed the opinion this morning in his Midland office at the federal courthouse.

"I think this ought to conclude the case," Beery said. Tom Morgan, Parker's court-appointed attorney who represented him at trial and handled the appeal, could ask for a hearing before the entire panel of judges on the 5th Circuit, or could ask that the U.S. Supreme Court hear the case, the prosecutor said.

"The chances are slim to none, really of that," Beery noted. "Especially getting it up to the Supreme Court.

Accidents on Texas roads claim 19 lives

Associated Press

At least 19 people perished on Texas roadways during the long the Fourth of July holiday weekend, authorities said.

State officials estimate 52 people will die on Texas roads before the extended holiday period ends at midnight Tuesday. The holiday traffic death count began at 6 p.m. Friday.

Bridget Lyons, 8, of Quinlan, Texas was killed about 11:15 a.m. Sunday near Greenville as she tried to cross Farm Road 513, two miles south of Interstate 30, with her brother and sister. She was pronounced dead at Citizens General Hospital in Greenville.

A two-vehicle, head-on collision 19 miles south of Pampa on Texas Highway 70 about 4:15 a.m. Sunday killed one man and left two people injured. The Department of Public Safety refused to release names of the dead or injured, but a funeral home identified the victim as James King, 35.

Julie Steele, 7, of Austin died at 2:40 p.m. Sunday in a hospital from injuries she suffered Saturday afternoon when the jeep in which she was riding collided with a pickup truck on Ranch Road 3238, near Austin. Authorities said the jeep ran off the right side of the road and overcorrected into the oncoming lane. The child and her mother, Deborah Kay Steele, 35, were passengers in the jeep.

A 50-year-old Irving woman died when the car she was driving collided with an 18-wheeler on State Highway 198, about four miles south of Gun Barrel City in Henderson County about noon on Sunday. Her name was withheld.

Investigators said it appeared the truck swerved into the lane for oncoming traffic after coming up on a vehicle turning right.

Authorities said at least three of the collisions were hit-and-run accidents. One of them occurred early Sunday when a Plainview man died as he was struck by a vehicle as he walked along Interstate 27 in Plainview about 2:30 a.m. His name also was withheld because of a new law that allows authorities to withhold names of possible felony victims.

A 47-year-old San Angelo woman identified by police and a justice of the peace as Rosa Fernandez Basaldua died Friday night when the car she was riding in failed to negotiate a curve and struck a fence. The driver fled the scene.

A 32-year-old Oakwood man was killed early Saturday when she was struck by a car that did not stop. The accident occurred about 4.8 miles south of Oakwood on Farm-to-Market 542 in Leon County. The man's name was not released by authorities.

A 50-year-old Sudan, Texas, man was killed when his car was hit broadside in an accident at 4:37 p.m. Saturday, Riordan said. The two-vehicle collision occured at the intersection of Farm-to-Market 298 and Farm-To-Market 1731 in Bailey County about 15 miles south of Muleshoe.

A pickup truck traveling on Farm-to-Market 1731 struck the dead man's car on the driver's side.

HEAT

"With all this heat and dry weather and the wind, it's like a tinderbox out there," Midland Fire Marshal Jerry Petree said this morning.

Petree said the Midland Fire Department responded to 35 grass fires over the weekend and expects more as Independence Day celebrations begin.

"We have a truck out on one (prairie fire) right now," he said late this morning. "It doesn't take anything to get them started."

An NWS spokesman said the culprit behind Sunday's hot weather was strong, upper-level high-pressure ridge. The ridge allowed temperatures in the mid-level atmosphere, between 5,000 and 15,000 feet, to rise from their usual 50s to into the high 60s.

Today's temperatures were expected to be over the century mark but not as hot as Sunday, the spokesman said.

The area should see some relief from the intense heat by tonight, with the forecast calling for a low of 70 with mostly fair skies, a less than 20 percent chance of rain and 5 to 15 mph east winds, NWS said. The holiday will be mostly sunny with a high in the mid-90s and 5 to 15 mph southeast winds.

Sunday's temperatures were so intense that not even Texas Utilities Electric representatives were rooting for it so electricity consumption would rise.

"I don't like it near that hot," said Ernie Barbee, a customer operations manager. When it reaches that kind of temperature in some places that puts a strain on our station, but we're geared to handle the extreme circumstances."

REACTION

The pro-choice supporter said economically disadvantaged women will suffer the most from the decision. "They can't use the public facilities," he said.

Northern also criticized Midland and Odessa school districts for not offering sex education classes. Both districts offer some sex education information as part of their health curricula, both do not have specific courses on the subject.

"The only way you can stop the abortions is through more comprehensive sex education," he said.

Northern pointed out that West Texas usually has a higher teen pregnancy rate than other parts of the state. "I know in Midland, Odessa and Pecos it's a big problem," he said.

The court also said it plans to review two other abortion cases during its next term, which begins in October. One of the cases is from Illinois; the other from Ohio.

Mosely contended that the U.S. Constitution has no provisions allowing abortion.

"We should not deal with the definition of life," Mosely said. "It's too precious a thing."

PARKER

Morgan was out of town and could not be reached for comment on the decision.

"That is strictly up to him," Speck said of the likelihood of a further appeal by Morgan. "There are very few cases that are reversed beyond this point, percentage-wise, but that is up to him."

Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre acted as special prosecutor at Parker's four-day trial in Midland a year ago.

"I am very pleased with the affirmance. I think it was proper under the facts and circumstances of the case," Schorre said. "The defendant is certainly deserving of that punishment."

No state charges will be filed in connection with Ms. Gilkerson's disappearance unless new evidence is discovered, Schorre said.

"At this point there does not appear to be sufficient evidence that would warrant us filing a homicide case," the district attorney said. "To date, we have no affirmative evidence as to the location of the body ... hopefully, Mr. Parker will cooperate at some time in the future and help recover her body so we can provide for a decent burial."

"I am glad to see it upheld," said deputy Midland police chief Ron Aaron, who supervised the investigation into the Gilkerson disappearance. "And no, it is not a closed case. We still want to find her and find out ultimately what happened."

Parker, 43, a Midland native who was highly decorated for action during the Vietnam War, is serving his sentences at the U.S. Penitentiary in Leavenworth, Kan. The former firefighter and public library maintenance worker will be eligible for parole in February 1998.

Parker was convicted a year ago in Midland federal court of plotting to kidnap Ms. Gilkerson, 24, and Susan Lindsay, now 26. According to testimony at his trial, Parker and David Alderink, 23, planned to abduct Ms. Lindsay from her Rockdale home and sell her into prostitution in Mexico. When that scheme failed, Ms. Gilkerson was picked as a substitute victim, Alderink testified.

On Nov. 8, 1986, on a road in northwest Midland County, Parker met Alderink and the woman. According to Alderink, Parker handcuffed her, taped her mouth and eyes, placed a sleeping bag over her and placed her in the bed of his pickup truck. According to investigators, she has not been seen since.

The three-judge panel rejected Morgan's assertion that publicity — the case was described as the biggest in the history of Midland police — made a fair trial in Midland impossible. The court agreed the case received a great deal of publicity.

"Exposure to pre-trial publicity, however, does not necessarily destroy a juror's impartiality," the opinion says. "Parker has documented that this case received extensive pre-trial publicity. However, he has not demonstrated that this publicity was in excess of the sensationalism inherent in the crime or that pervasive community prejudice resulted from this publicity."

The court went even further, and said juror questioning by U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton was sufficient to uncover any prejudice against Parker.

The court concluded on the venue question: "Parker has not demonstrated that his right to a fair trial has been abridged."

Morgan also argued that another man, Alderink's friend Allen Hattaway, was the prime suspect in the disappearance. The attorney argued Bunton erred when he ruled jurors could not hear testimony concerning Hattaway.

"Parker argues that its exclusion was improper. He argues that the testimony should be admissible because of its potential to assist the accused," the court's opinion states. "The link between Hattaway and June Gilkerson's disappearance was tangential at best. The Government has effectively discredited this alleged link. For example, the government points out that Hattaway offered money in order to obtain sexual favors for himself; no mention of prostitution was suggested."

The court found "troublesome" Speck's reference for jurors to Ms. Gilkerson being given the "death penalty," but said the error was not unfair to Parker and did not merit reversal.

"Reference to June Gilkerson's death interjected a highly inflammatory element," the court said. "However, because Alderink testified that Parker wrote and showed Alderink a note stating that Gilkerson had been cremated, there was some evidence in the record that June Gilkerson's kidnapping had culminated in her death."

The court also found that there were two conspiracies, and that the two consecutive life sentences ordered by Bunton were proper under the circumstances.

"The district court was faced with the task of sentencing a defendant convicted of uniquely heinous and cruel crimes," the opinion states. "The sentence imposed was not inappropriate."

Some religious displays still permissible

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court ruled today that some government-sponsored religious displays are permissible as long as they do not have "the effect of promoting or endorsing religious beliefs."

By a 5-4 vote, the court said displaying a Christmas nativity scene inside the Allegheny County Courthouse in Pittsburgh violates constitutionally required separation of church and state because it appears to endorse Christian principles.

But the court unanimously permitted a Hanukkah menorah on the front steps of the city-county building in Pittsburgh.

The court said the menorah, a nine-candle candelabra used during the celebration of the Jewish holiday Hanukkah, does not appear to endorse Judaism because of its "particular physical setting."

The menorah display includes a Christmas tree and a sign saluting liberty. The court said the inclusion of the tree and sign give the overall display a secular purpose, the court said.

While the justices were split sharply in declaring the Nativity scene unconstitutional, the court substantially upheld its long-used test for determining when the wall between church and state is breached.

Justice Harry A. Blackmun wrote for the court and was joined in striking down the Nativity scene by Justices William J. Brennan, Thurgood Marshall, John Paul Stevens and Sandra Day O'Connor.

Justice Anthony M. Kennedy, participating in his first church-state case since joining the court in 1988, dissented in voting to permit the Nativity scene.

The other dissenters were Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Byron R. White and Antonin Scalia.

STORMS

Texas, Louisiana and their neighbors have endured over a week of heavy rain left by Tropical Storm Allison. One Louisiana town got nearly 29 inches in less than a week.

Flooding kept at least 500 people from their homes in southeast Texas and 200 in Mississippi. About 700 homes in Louisiana remained flooded and the weather service said the flooding could ontinue for two weeks.

Allison and its aftermath were blamed for four deaths in Texas and three in Louisiana. The body of a Mississippi teen-ager who had gone swimming in a swollen creek was recovered Sunday near Natchez. Officials today searched for a missing companion.

Sunday night's storm was not related to Allison, said Hugh Crowther of the National Weather Service in Kansas City, Mo. The remnants of Allison moved into Indiana, Kentucky and Ohio.

Today's forecast was for scattered showers and thunderstorms in Texas, with heavier showers and thunderstorms in Louisiana and Mississippi, Crowther said.

In Oklahoma City, a house caught fire Sunday after it was struck by lightning, causing $65,000 damage. High winds blew over a mobile home in Ponca City, Okla., and downed some power lines and trees.

When the storm reached Abilene, concert-goers were still waiting to hear the headliners, Alabama and the Charlie Daniels Band. But officials canceled the concert when the storm hit.

Several people were taken to the hospital, for hail injuries and because of the heat, but officials said the injuries were minor.

John Val Lynch of Sweetwater, Texas, said he felt shortchanged, pointing out the tickets had read "come rain or shine."

"We just got ripped off," he said. "I spent about $100, and I don't see anybody giving me my money back."

Maj. Mary Beth Kilgore said the performers didn't want to risk damaging their instruments or equipment. She said Alabama would honor the tickets at the group's Wichita Falls concert on July 4 or refunds would be offered.

East of Abilene, a performance at the Shakespeare Festival of Dallas came to an abrupt end as officials evacuated 1,000 patrons minutes before the stage collapsed under 90 mph winds. No one was injured.

Steve Player, of the festival's board of directors, said performers had just started "Two Men of Verona-Texas," a jazzed-up version of Shakespeare's play, when the storm moved in.

About 30 trees were uprooted and the 40-foot scaffolding holding lighting and sound equipment wilted under the winds. Cast and crew huddled backstage as the set collapsed around them.

"We're very thankful we got the patrons out," Player said. "We're lucky we just got soaked."

Near-record flooding in Liberty, 45 miles northeast of Houston, kept about 500 residents out of their homes and further threatened low-lying areas, even though sunny skies prevailed in southeast Texas on Sunday.

Soggy residents of lowlands along the Trinity River should see the high waters subside later this week, emergency officials said.

In Mississippi's Bolivar County, more than 100 homes were flooded Saturday when the area received 5.3 inches of rain. People were traveling in canoes in parts of Cleveland, said Joe Springer, a resident of the Mississippi town.

"I've been sitting ... with my grandchildren and as far as I can see it's water on the street both east and west," he said. "You've never seen so many kids out using the streets for a swimming pool."

Officials in northern and central Louisiana reported at least three tornadoes. A home in Alexandria was damaged and business destroyed in Deville.

Rising water chewed away at an earthen dam in Louisiana's Winn Parish, but civil defense director Steve Robertson today said officials believed the levee would hold.

A dam break could flood several more homes and delay drainage of others, Robertson said.

GROMYKO

Gromyko survived several purges and outlasted Soviet leaders Nikita Khrushchev, Leonid I. Brezhnev, Yuri V. Andropov and Kostantin U. Chernenko. He served as Soviet ambassador to the United States, Britain and the United Nations, which he helped found.

Tass once said he took part in "the most important foreign political developments of our time."

After Gorbachev rose to power in March 1985 and revamped the leadership, Gromyko was gradually eased into retirement.

He was replaced as foreign minister that summer by Eduard A. Shevardnadze, a newcomer to foreign affairs, and named to the then largely ceremonial post of president.

He stepped down from the Communist Party's ruling Politburo Sept. 30 and was replaced as president by Gorbachev a day later. In April, Gromyko lost his last post, membership in the policy-making Central Committee.

Gromyko ended his career gracefully, unlike many other Soviet officials who were abruptly stripped of posts and written out of official history books as new Kremlin chiefs came on board.

He maintained a large measure of official respect even though some of the foreign policy decisions made during his tenure — such as the 1979 intervention in Afghanistan — were condemned.

Archie Brown, a Soviet affairs specialist at Oxford University in Britain, said today that Gromyko will be remembered "as a fairly formidable figure and certainly as an operator and as a survivor."

ABORT

Sue Roselle, executive director of Women's Health Services Inc. of Pittsburgh, a non-profit clinic which does about 7,000 abortions per year, reported, "The telephones are ringing off the hook.

"Women are saying, 'I want my abortion now before they change the law.'"

Texas lawyer Sarah Weddington, who won the Roe vs. Wade case and said she feels "wrung out" now, said today's decision will have little impact on the availability of abortion immediately.

"...It will have no practical implication until state legislatures pass new laws," she said.

SENIORS

The new center at Dellwood will have the capacity for a crafts room, a pool table room, a small library and a multi-purpose room.

The proposed new center in southeast Midland, which will be located near Washington Park, will have 6,200 square-feet with room for additions in three directions.

Buses will run between the two centers to shuttle seniors interested in programs offered at the other facility.

Should Logan's foundation grant requests come up short of the $300,000 needed to build the new southeast facility, he will recommend the city pay the difference, he said.

The majority of costs of running the senior centers comes from the daily meals offered for free or for a small donation, the men agreed.

"Over half the seniors come to the centers for lunch. A lot of these people are widows and widowers. This is the only meal they'll eat that day. No one is turned away."

At Delano, about 50 seniors are fed daily, while another 50 are fed daily at Hollowell the two days a week it is open.

Meals cost about $3 each. State "Title III" funding pays for about half the meal costs at Delano. The city has been picking up meal costs at Hollowell.

Remaining nutrition expenses are covered by donations, charity subsidies and Community Development Block Grant grants.

Edwards hopes to obtain Title III funds for the new southeast center, he added.

"The new centers say a lot to the seniors of Midland that they are important."

Latin American imports rise modestly

Between 1983 and 1987, total U. S. imports from Latin America rose modestly, from $43.2 billion to $48.9 billion, but the share of manufacturers now represents 46.4 percent of the total, according to the Inter-American Development Bank.

European beachgoers now needled by discarded syringes

By MAGGIE JACKSON

LONDON (AP) — Beaches from the chic Riviera to the English Channel are beginning to be hit by the same blight that reached American shores last summer — syringes.

The needle refuse dropped by drug users on European shores hasn't been as putrid as the waste and blood — some of it AIDS-infected — that washed up on the East Coast.

No one for example is reported to have contracted any disease from the needles but French, British and Spanish children have been pricked. And as the number of discarded needles increases, concern is growing over what a British newspaper calls the "syringe peril."

"We're very concerned for children. Children are going to be digging in the sand far more than adults," said Peter Green, medical officer for the south coast district of Torbay, where five people have been treated the last month for needle injuries.

"The syringes have been found near what looked like burned-out fires, and from what we deduce these are from late night drug parties," Green said. "These people are high-risk. ... We regard their equipment as potentially dangerous."

In neighboring Exmouth district, five needles were found in the last month although no one has been hurt.

European officials see no cause for panic or closing beaches. They are counting on public vigilance and extra cleaning.

Torbay authorities asked owners of metal detectors for help, while one French mayor hopes to keep addicts from nighttime forays onto the sand.

Brian Hayes, a painter who was scratched by a needle on a Devon beach near Salcombe, agrees that beaches should remain open.

"It's not a question of scaremongering," he says, explaining why he called a local radio station to tell of his plight. "People have to be careful where they sit and step. If I can sit on one, anyone can."

On the French Riviera, a 7-year-old boy was pricked in fashionable Cannes and a 3-year-old girl was hurt at Cap D'Ail in June. Another child was injured several months ago on a Spanish beach.

Manuel Carballo, a physician from the Geneva-based World Health Organization's Global Program on AIDS, partly blames changes in drug-taking methods.

"If you are seeing more drug-injecting equipment disposed of casually, it is because there are more drug injectors around doing this," Carballo said. "Injecting, as opposed to smoking, chewing or sniffing, has increased."

Although no needles have turned up on Italian beaches, they litter some streets. In 1988, Milan sanitation workers collected up to 4,000 syringes a day.

Carballo said the availability of syringes reflects the greater use of disposable medical equipment, a factor in the appearance of medical waste off American shores.

He and others say that hepatitis B, with a virus more hardy than the HIV virus associated with acquired immune deficiency syndrome, is probably the more likely menace from the needles, although nothing can be ruled out.

In response to the problem, early morning cleaners in Cannes and other Riviera cities were asked to redouble their efforts. Some workers were given special gloves or pincers.

"We recommend that people use sandals or beach shoes," said Green.

He said that if pricked, people are sent to a hospital for a serum and vaccination against hepatitis B.

Mayor Jacques Medecin of Nice promised to try to dislodge those who sleep or party on beaches. "We're looking how to do it," he said. "It could be by spraying water on them all night."

But catching them may prove as difficult as finding needles in the sand, say officials.

"If people are caught doing this, we can prosecute them," said Devon County spokesman Brian Brady, referring to a 1974 pollution act that calls for up to five years in prison and unlimited fines for those who dispose of pharmaceutical waste illegally.

"It's catching them that's the difficulty," Brady said.

Nine-year-old New York youngster wages her own war against crack

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Moved by the addiction of a favorite uncle, a 9-year-old is conducting a one-child war against crack.

Working closely with her father, Atiya Easterling began sketching out an anti-drug message in words and pictures.

At first it was simply a notion, then a poster.

Recently, her intentions have been translated into dozens of T-shirts bearing a crack pipe snapped in half, along with the words "Believe the hype. Put down the pipe."

Perhaps, she said, the pen will prove mightier than the pipe.

"I looked at things and wanted to help the nation," said the third-grader, who attends Public School 176 in Queens. "I hope people get the message."

Already, Atiya has worn her T-shirts to school, where she says both her teachers and classmates doubted, at first, that a child could do very much to fight New York City's crack epidemic.

Hundreds of thousands of people, mostly young, are smoking crack — a potent cocaine derivative — and are stumbling into a nether world of despair and decay, city drug treatment experts say.

Because the use of crack is becoming more pervasive across the nation, Atiya's parents, Darrell and Barbara Easterling, say they are planning to have the T-shirts sold across the country by civic leaders and organizations.

"We have to try to stop this disease that is killing our people," said Easterling, who is a real-estate broker and former athlete.

In somber tones, he described how his family had to endure the sight of his younger brother, once weighing more than 200 pounds, waste away in a haze of crack smoke.

"I didn't think it was right," Atiya said of her uncle's longtime addiction and how it caused her to see him less and less.

"I knew there had to be something I could do. I thought maybe this would give him more confidence."

Atiya, slight and almond eyed, said her uncle has seen her T-shirts and has promised to try to work harder to break his addiction.

In the meantime, he has urged her to continue her one-child campaign against crack, she says.

"Every little thing does help," said Christopher Policano, a spokesman for New York's Phoenix House, a drug-treatment program.

Group devoted to emperor worship stirs debate in Japan

By MARY GANZ
Hearst News Service

TOKYO — It reads like a list of Japan's rich and famous, a roster of old-guard industrialists who built the companies that dominate world markets.

But this is no power-lunch group gathered to discuss the next stage in Japan's economic miracle. This is a club formed to hearken back to ancient traditions.

It's called the "Showa Emperor Worshipers Society." At the inaugural meeting recently, organizers bowed to an oversize portrait of the late Emperor Hirohito, mounted above the stage beside Japan's sun flag.

One of them, Toshiro Masuda, read the names of some of the charter members, holding the list stiffly at arm's length and shouting the words in tones oddly like those of the right-wing ideologues who cruise Tokyo city streets in sound trucks.

"The reason we asked so many famous people is that Japan is so prosperous, and we feel we will be able to conduct our business well with their help," Masuda said.

Among the organizers are former prime ministers Zenko Suzuki and Takeo Fukuda, and Toyota Chairman Eiji Toyoda.

"We want to appeal to the soul of all Japanese, except Communists," Masuda said.

The group's objective is to build a Showa memorial hall in Hachioji, near the tomb for the late emperor, who died Jan. 7 at the age of 87.

The death of Emperor Hirohito, known posthumously as Showa, touched off intense debate in Japan about whether to include Shinto rituals at his state funeral.

Some people argued that Shinto, Japan's shamanistic religion which in prewar days was centered on emperor worship, was inappropriate for a state funeral under Japan's post-war constitution, which ended state sponsorship of the religion.

The controversy is due for rekindling in 1990, when the time comes for formal enthronement of the new emperor, Akihito.

Some of the traditional rituals are strongly Shinto, especially one called the daijosai, in which the new emperor is said to enter the body of the Sun Goddess Amaterasu and be reborn as a god.

President Bumpei Otsuki, honorary president of the Japan Federation of Employers, said the group has no wish to return to the early Showa-era nationalism that led to Japan's disastrous defeat in World War II.

"What we are doing is not trying to be isolated in the world," he said. "In the mind of the emperor there was a wish for world peace. We want to spread that idea."

Kuniko Inoguchi, a political scientist from Sophia University, was surprised to learn about the group. She said it goes against the spirit of the new era that began when Akihito became emperor.

During the postwar American occupation, Hirohito had declared to the people of Japan that he was not a god, she noted.

"The imperial system as of now should not be a target of worship," she said. "It should be a symbol of community, family relations, harmonious human relations and respect."

She said, however, that she would not object to a memorial museum on the order of presidential libraries in the United States.

"But it should be a place for study, not for worship," Inoguchi said. "The Showa period should be studied vigorously by future generations, in order never to repeat it."

Japan's English might as well be Greek

By JANICE FUHRMAN

TOKYO (AP) — Sushi chef Yasutoshi Eda says he spends $2,000 a year on twice-weekly English lessons because "I want to more enjoy using English."

Like most Japanese, Eda took six years of English in school, but to little avail.

"When I was high school student, I don't like English," he says. "English time was sleeping time, I thought."

Now he is one of the hundreds of thousands of Japanese who study English at commercial language schools. Alert and talkative in class, he plans to use the language on vacations abroad.

"But my heart still pounds," says Eda, 27, "when I have to speak English."

With an education system admired worldwide, why can't Japan produce more people adept at English?

Because, critics say, there's too much emphasis on rigorous high school and college entrance exams and too little on conversational skills. Thus, the system creates students who read Shakespeare in the classroom but can't greet their English teachers on the street.

"As long as the examination system stays the same — and it's not likely to change soon — English education will not be geared toward communication," says Hideko Midorikawa, who has taught English at public high schools for 23 years.

"It's already too late by the time they come to high school," she says. "They're ashamed of being unable to speak."

The way English is taught is so misguided that it has a negative value for students, says Professor Gregory Clark of Tokyo's Sophia University. "It would be much better if most Japanese students did not learn a word of English in schools rather than be subjected to the mental damage that the present system creates."

Some examples of instructional sentences in public school texts: "My neck looked as if it were a piece of twisted bread," and "He moved my head in such a way that it hung from the counter."

And "English proverbs" from another public school text: "Love me little and love me long," and "Great cry and little wool."

And there are many misleading uses of English in Japan, such as a "Let's kiosk" sign on a magazine stand, or the ubiquitous "I feel Coke" on TV commercials, billboards and shopping bags.

Things are changing.

Five years ago the Ministry of Education, recognizing that students are deficient in verbal skills, issued guidelines that stress speaking.

Two vehicles race up the Los Angeles River during recent filming of a chase scene for a cable TV movie. Their route may soon be the next freeway system for Los Angeles.

California's flood channels may help with traffic flow

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Traffic here has gotten so bad that officials are discussing using the 500 miles of flood control channels as part-time freeways.

Promoters think Los Angeles County's concrete waterways are a congestion reliever. Detractors say if you see aqua, duck.

It's an idea that has surfaced from time to time during the past 20 years, always to be scuttled because of better options, says Jim Sims, director of transportation programs for the county transportation department.

"Now, we're at the point that we may be running out of attractive alternatives. And we may be at the point where we could live with something we can't use all the time," Sims said.

"In the past it hasn't been shown to be feasible," said Kathy Delegal, spokeswoman for the county's Department of Public Works, which maintains the channels. But traffic congestion has worsened, so "it should be looked at again," she said. "We're open-minded."

All agree that traffic in Los Angeles County is on the brink of busting through its barriers. Of the 10 busiest freeway interchanges in the United States, six are in the county and two are in neighboring Orange County, according to the state Department of Transportation.

The nation's busiest interchange is the West Los Angeles junction of the Santa Monica and San Diego freeways, used by about 513,000 vehicles daily.

The Los Angeles County Transportation Commission's newly approved budget includes $100,000 for a feasibility study on channel conversions. The study is to be completed early next year and will focus only on engineering and hydrology.

Environmental concerns, safety and other barriers would be considered if the engineering feasibility is positive, Sims said. For example, the impact of an oil or diesel fuel spill on the harbor most be reviewed.

HUD funds available to 'friends'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Several months after floods devastated West Virginia in November 1985 and left thousands homeless, the state's senators pleaded with the Department of Housing and Urban Development for federal housing money. The answer was no.

At the same time, Nevada Sen. Paul Laxalt, President Reagan's close friend, sought funds to upgrade aging apartments in Reno. The answer was yes.

The contrast is instructive of the way HUD was run during the Reagan administration. If you were well-connected to the president or had friends in high administration posts, HUD funds were generally available. But not even the Senate Democratic leader, Robert Byrd, could shake loose money to help homeless flood victims in his home state of West Virginia.

"The November flood devastation greatly exacerbated" the already-existing need for housing help, Byrd wrote.

West Virginia's junior senator, Democrat Jay Rockefeller, reminded HUD of its responsibilities to no avail. "As you know, all funds and units provided by the Congress for your agency's programs are intended to be distributed on a fair share basis," he wrote June 5, 1986. HUD Secretary Samuel R. Pierce responded that fair share distribution was no longer the rule.

Laxalt wrote on June 16, 1986, seeking money for "owners of multi-family rental properties to upgrade older apartments." A month later, Pierce provided funding for 100 apartments; in October, another 150 units were approved.

A parade of lawmakers has leaned on HUD for federal funds to send back home as an easy way to win support from constituents. Some fared better than others in an Associated Press review of requests sent to HUD between 1984 and 1987.

While many of the HUD replies carried Pierce's signature, they actually were signed by a machineat the instruction of Deborah Gore Dean, a special assistant to Pierce who emerged as one of the most powerful people in the department even though her position carried little official authority.

Ms. Dean is at the center of a congressional investigation of alleged influence-peddling at the department, where former HUD officials or well-connected and highly paid Republican consultants steered scarce federal funds to housing projects they owned or represented.

Congressional correspondence to the HUD office from 1984 to 1987 showed legislators requesting funds for housing projects that ranged from homes for battered women to owners of multi-family rental properties.

A 1987 Virginia request serves as a typical example of how Congress members were involved.

Steve Smith, commanding officer of The Salvation Army in Alexandria, Va., sent a letter Feb. 10, 1987, to Sen. Paul Trible, R-Va., saying that approval of HUD funds would "make it possible for over 300 low-income families to remain in Arlandria (an Alexandria neighborhood) and provide labor for low-income paying positions in restaurants, stores, (for) office and blue collar workers."

Trible, in turn, wrote to Pierce asking for the funds. Pierce responded that "every consideration" would be given to the request.

Democratic Rep. Frederick Boucher of Virginia asked HUD in 1985 to approve a proposal by B&W Associates of Radford, Va., to rehabilitate 152 housing units for the elderly in Altoona, Pa. The housing secretary responded with a three-paragraph letter saying "we regret to inform you that it is unlikely that it will be funded this year."

In contrast, Sen. William L. Armstrong, R-Colo., received funding for proposals that included a project for handicapped tenants in Greeley, Colo.

Even some Republicans had trouble at times winning funds.

In 1985, Republican Pennsylvania Sen. John Heinz wrote to Pierce complaining about the handling of his state's requests.

Pierce replied, "It is unfortunate that only 12 units could be allocated to Pennsylvania in fiscal year 1985; however, consideration had to be given to areas which received little or no funding in prior fiscal years." Pierce noted that money was available for 5,000 units nationwide.

Heinz resubmitted his request in January 1986, and was told in a letter that 10,000 units were available for that fiscal year and his request would be considered.

Most of Pierce's letters to the Congress members cited the lack of available funding as the reason for rejections.

HUD cookie jar should be closed

Many Americans must be sickened by the stories of greed and corruption that are emerging from the ongoing federal Department of Housing and Urban Development investigation.

At a time when state and local officials are overwhelmed in dealing with the problems of the homeless, we are treated to a scandal in which the federal agency that has the primary role in housing issues has been turned into a giant cookie jar into which an odd assortment of political hangers-on have apparently dipped their sticky fingers.

Little is heard from Samuel Pierce, the top HUD official who presided over the agency during the time when much of the alleged theft and other activities were taking place, other than to blame his chief aide at that time for not doing a better job of keeping track of things.

Another former cabinet member, one-time Secretary of the Interior James Watt, collected $400,000 in fees in return, according to Time magazine, for "making a few phone calls to Pierce and his aides." Watt told a congressional committee, "I'm not here to defend the system."

And we have Marilyn Louise Harrell, a private escrow agent dubbed "Robin HUD" by the media, who confessed at a congressional hearing that she stole $5.5 million in HUD funds, but gave much of the money to the poor. Isn't that special?

At this point, nobody can say for certain just how bad things are. For example, investigators thought that $7.2 million in HUD funds administered by the Denver office were missing. Now all but $1 million has been found, but sloppy record keeping still has left many questions unanswered.

The only hopeful sign in this mess has been the forthrightness and honesty of Jack Kemp, the current HUD chief, who has pledged an all-out drive to clean up the department.

As the investigation unfolds, those persons who are thought to have broke the law should be prosecuted. Department employees who mismanaged their jobs should be fired. Congress, which has failed to provide the proper legislative oversight to this important department, should do so. Where there are gaps in the law, they should be filled by quick congressional action. Kemp is absolutely correct in cracking down hard on all who profited illegally and unfairly as a result of their dealings with HUD.

Stuck in the muck

Although Lee Atwater's pit-bull approach to politics has won him high praise among many of the Republican Party faithful, it has made him a liability to the GOP in general and the Bush administration in particular. Two recent incidents show the abrasive Mr. Atwater, who masterminded George Bush's dramatic comeback victory last November, to be ill-suited as chairman of the Republican National Committee.

Several weeks ago, Mr. Atwater approved by phone the sleazy memorandum insinuating that newly installed House Speaker Tom Foley is a homosexual. After persuading President Bush that he had not personally seen the vicious hit piece before it was released, he promised to be more careful in the future. Whereupon he proceeded to embarrass the party with an inflammatory, partisan speech during last week's conference of mayors in Charleston, S.C.

In both instances, Mr. Atwater was quick to attribute most of the heavy fallout to spiteful Democrats who are still smarting over his pivotal role in demolishing Gov. Michael Dukakis's presidential candidacy. Yet, this disingenuous response ignores the problems that Atwater's scorched-earth tactics pose for Republicans.

There is a fine line between being a politically adept gunslinger, which party chieftains are supposed to be, and a self-indulgent mudslinger — a crucial distinction Mr. Atwater fails to grasp. To the contrary, he seizes upon every opportunity to smear Democratic opponents, no matter what the negative consequences.

For example, the day after the scurrilous Foley memorandum was drafted and distributed by Mark Goodin, his former aide and protege, Mr. Atwater defiantly defended it as "no big deal." His facile assessment changed abruptly when Republican leaders, led by the President, denounced this as the dirty trick it was. As a consequence, Mr. Atwater promptly conceded that it was indeed in bad taste and accepted Mr. Goodin's "resignation."

Given Mr. Atwater's relentless instinct for the Democratic jugular, it's difficult to take him at his word that he meant Speaker Foley no harm. This, after all, is the same man, who after being accused in 1980 by a Democratic congressional candidate of planting stories about his electroshock therapy as a teen-ager, said he would not respond to allegations made by someone who had been "hooked up to jumper cables."

Mr. Atwater's rationalizations notwithstanding, he must be held strictly accountable for the despicable Foley memorandum. As party chairman, he helps to set the moral tone for Republican campaigns. Rep. Mickey Edwards, R-Okla., said it best, "if you run a sleazy campaign...to build a majority by trashing the other side, it has a tremendous potential to backfire."

So long as the Atwater-smear syndrome pervades the Republican National Committee, the GOP will have forfeited the high ground that the Democrats' ethical problems had given it. Republicans are, accordingly, increasingly vulnerable to a voter backlash against the smear strategy. And so long as Lee Atwater is chairman, the Republican Party will be stuck in the muck. If he doesn't have the good sense to resign for the good of the party, President Bush should show him the door.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, July 3, the 184th day of 1989. There are 181 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On July 3, 1863, the three-day Civil War Battle of Gettysburg, Pa., ended in a major victory for the North as Confederate troops retreated. Some 7,000 men are believed to have died in the battle. President Abraham Lincoln dedicated a national cemetery at the battlefield the following November.

On this date:

In 1608, the city of Quebec was founded by Samuel de Champlain.

In 1775, Gen. George Washington took command of the Continental Army at Cambridge, Mass.

In 1890, Idaho became the 43rd state of the Union.

In 1898, the U.S. Navy defeated a Spanish fleet in the harbor at Santiago, Cuba, during the Spanish-American War.

In 1930, Congress created the Veterans Administration.

In 1950, American and North Korean forces clashed for the first time in the Korean War.

In 1962, Algeria gained independence after 132 years of French rule.

'Split-sourcing' could boost arsenal

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon has a weapon that can deliver substantially more payload at cheaper prices, a prospect that should strike fear in the hearts of Soviet generals. But the ones sweating are U.S. defense contractors.

Jack Anderson

"Split sourcing," government jargon for competition, is actually the weapon, and it represents one of the most overdue Pentagon procurement reforms. Because split-sourcing threatens the trough at which defense contractors have been feeding for decades, the military establishment is likely to keep it in mothballs.

That's scandalous because even the threat of split sourcing produces wonderous results, such as cheaper weapons with no reduction in quality and performance. For example, the price for Texas Instruments' HARM anti-radiation missiles plummeted from $1 million to $400,000 when the specter of split sourcing was raised.

Lockheed Corp. builds the Cadillac of military transport planes, the C-130. Yet one of the Pentagon's biggest lemons, the disastrous C-5 transport, rolled off the same company's production lines. What's the difference? Lockheed is the sole supplier of the C-5 and has little incentive to be competitive. But many companies make planes equal to the C-130, so Lockheed knows there is a price for poor quality.

Ford Aerospace builds the best heat-seeking, air-to-air missile in the world: the Sidewinder. That's no coincidence because Ford knows Raytheon is also in the Sidewinder business — and is vying with Ford for future contracts.

It shouldn't require a rocket scientist to absorb these lessons. However, when the moment arrived for the military to build the Sgt. York anti-aircraft gun, Ford Aerospace received a sole source contract. Former Defense Secretary Casper Weinberger ordered the Sgt. York program junked in 1985 after the military squandered $1.8 billion on 65 useless copies.

Consumer watchdog Ralph Nader catalogs these and 36 other misfiring weapons systems in an upcoming report, entitled "Defective Defense: How the Pentagon Buys Weapons That Do Not Work." Our associate Stewart Harris saw an advance copy which calls for the creation of a professional, independent "procurement corps." Weapons buyers from each military service would be replaced by civilians working outside the Defense Department.

The current system creates inherent conflicts. Weapons buyers find their career ambition pitted against their consciences. Stepping on the wrong toes can be professional suicide. Reformers are pushing for civilians to replace military careerists, who are easier prey.

Any procurement corps would need more than independence; the system must also allow for the accurate testing of weapons. Hardly a weapon exists that has not been tested under conditions designed to put it in the best light, according to procurement sources. Numerous allegations about skewed testing have been leveled at the Bradley Fighting Vehicle, a troop transport and reconnaissance vehicle. During armor tests, Army officials used smaller shells against the Bradley than those it would encounter on the battlefield. Furthermore, the shots were fired at angles to minimize damage and slant the results.

A final area for reform should center on what most people demand before buying a $10 toaster: a warranty. The Pentagon has refused to demand a simple warranty even though Congress has ordered them to do so.

POLITICAL RAINMAKER — Amid great fanfare, Secretary of Agriculture Clayton Yeutter returned to the farm in May, traveling to drought-ravaged Iowa and Nebraska.

It's clear Yeutter went more as a political rainmaker than the kind that farmers need.

During his Nebraska tour, Yeutter attended three Republican fund-raisers in as many cities. He raised over $15,000 for Nebraska's Republican Party in one day, a day that was ostensibly devoted to the drought crisis. In fact, the only farm he visited was a small one in Elwood, Neb., and he only stayed for an hour.

The same held true in Iowa. In a move smacking of politics, Yeutter excluded Democrats from his activities. After protests from Iowa's Democratic congressional delegation, Yeutter extended a belated invitation, only to throw salt in the wound by delegating a staffer from Sen. Charles Grassley's, R-Iowa, office to offer the invitation.

While Yeutter is out hustling dollars for political causes, he has told farmers not to look to the federal government for help.

MINI-ED — Every American accused of a crime, regardless of guilt or innocence, deserves legal representation. That's a cornerstone of American jurisprudence. Has it also become true that every white-collar criminal or every mismanaged corporation deserves a friendly certified public accountant? Scanning the wreckage of the $150 billion savings and loan crisis, one finds that only months before several spectacular collapses occurred, the institution had received a clean bill of health from its auditor. A segment of the accounting profession is culpable for what has become the financial scam of the century.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

What flag symbolizes cannot be burned

My father died in 1970 at the age of 58. He was a veteran of both World War II and Korea.

His Army service record included a battlefield commission, the Bronze Star for Valor and three Purple Hearts.

Lewis Grizzard

He had reached the rank of captain when the Army deemed him unfit for further duty and denied him any benefits.

The years of combat had left him a human wreckage. Some men can cope with fear, death and dying.

Others can't. My father was in the latter category.

When he returned from Korea he began to drink heavily, cried a lot and lost sleep when jolted awake by his nightmares. He lost his wife and son in 1953.

When he died 17 years later, penniless, we had to make all the funeral arrangements. An elderly brother and sister and me were all the family he had left.

What I wanted more than anything else was an American flag to drape over his coffin. I figured he deserved at least that.

He had fought under that flag, and he had fought for it.

I had to go out and buy a flag. I forget now where I got it or how much it cost, but I got myself a flag.

I buried my father in his hometown of Snellville, Ga. The local chapter of the Veterans of Foreign Wars included a few of my dad's old friends and probably a few of his drinking buddies.

The VFW sent over an honor guard, of sorts, to the funeral. They all wore their VFW caps.

I held up pretty well during the first part of the funeral. I loved my father and was, and forever will be, proud of what he did for his country despite the fact it is my opinion his country didn't do all it could have for him.

At the funeral a man sang a song. The preacher said some words. At the gravesite there was another prayer. When it was over a couple of the guys from the VFW took the flag off my dad's coffin, folded it with great care, and then handed it to me.

Ninety percent of the tears I cried over my father's death came gushing out in the next three minutes.

I have a number of photographs of my father on the walls of my house. I have his Bronze Star and his Purple Hearts framed, and they hang on the wall, too.

I keep the flag that draped his coffin in the corner of the room I use for my office.

I can't explain the feeling I have for that flag. It symbolizes all that was good and great about my father, and it is a reminder that freedom can demand a harsh tariff.

Now, the Supreme Court of the United States has ruled it is not unlawful to burn the American flag. It says, by a 5-4 vote, the right to burn the American flag comes under the right of free speech.

"People must be as free to burn the flag as they are to wave it," said some liberal fool from the Center of Constitutional Rights.

Why are we constantly bending to satisfy the pukeheads in this country? If they want to burn a flag, let them go burn the Chinese flag, which is a symbol of oppression, the denial of basic human rights, and a government that spills the blood of its own people.

When somebody burns an American flag he or she is also burning and desecrating the flag that sits in the corner of my office.

All I have left now is the right to hate such a bastard.

My consolation is even the Supreme Court can't touch that.

Lewis Grizzard is a columnist for Cowles Syndicate.

CHARLEY REESE

Court now showing its supreme stupidity

The Supreme Court decision that burning the American flag as a protest is a legitimate form of speech protected by the First Amendment is just plain stupid.

Charley Reese

Any lingering doubts that a law school diploma certifies neither intelligence nor common sense should be dispelled by the foolishness of the ruling.

No one in Texas, where the case originated, was attempting to stifle the demonstrator's criticism of Ronald Reagan. Desecrating a flag has nothing to do with free speech.

Following the convoluted logic of these five bonehead justices may we now conclude that actions, so long as they are done as a form of protest, are protected by the First Amendment?

Indeed, the assassin's bullet is an expression of an opinion. So, too, is the burning of crosses on people's lawns and the desecration of synagogues. Only a blockhead lawyer in late 20th century America would confuse freedom of expression with criminal actions.

Furthermore this ruling is only another instance of the usurpation of power by recent Supreme Courts that have decided that every conceivable activity is a constitutional issue and therefore a useful device for five lawyers in Washington to nullify the work of 50 legislatures and frequently that of the Congress to boot.

We are to blame, of course, for accepting this usurpation. The Constitution provides that Congress may limit the jurisidiction of the federal courts. It would take the election of a majority with sand in their craws, however, to accomplish this. If necessary, we could repeal the 14th Amendment, which the court uses as an excuse to federalize all human activity and to, in effect, appoint itself the surpreme, unelected ruling oligarchy of America. Again, it would take a braver bunch than now inhabits the Hill.

In the meantime, however, the rest of us should take the same attitude toward the Supreme Court as one of our greatest presidents, Andrew Jackson. The court ruled that Old Hickory could not do what he intended to do. Jackson observed that it was their ruling and they could enforce if they could and then went ahead and did what he wanted to do.

The idea that a Supreme Court decision in a particular case becomes the supreme law of the land is a relatively recent one. Abraham Lincoln argued against the proposition, correctly pointing out that if this is the case, then America is not a democracy but a country ruled by an unelected oligarchy in power for life.

It matters not whether the court's majority is conservative or liberal; judicial activism whereby judges appointed for life take it upon themselves to legislate — and in recent years — even to administer state functions like prison systems or school districts should not be tolerated. That was never the intention of the Constitution. That's no different than living under a monarchy.

Well, if five lawyers are to render 50 governments impotent to protect a symbol for which more than a million people have died, then we the people will just have to protect it ourselves. It is strange reasoning only possible in a lawyer's skull that people must be prepared to die in defense of a flag on foreign soil but may not protect it in their own homeland.

I feel about America the same way a Mexican feels about Mexico. One of the most admirable traits of the Mexican people is that while they may despise each other and each other's politics, they all love Mexico.

Try to burn a Mexican flag and the nearest bystanders will fill you so full of lead your corpse will have to be disposed of in a junkyard.

In the meantime, we should campaign to close all law schools until at least 400,000 of the present 600,000 lawyers retire, die, are murdered by their clients, emigrate or are deported. Else, a future Gibbon will say the decline and fall of America came about from an excess of lawyers.

Charley Reese is a columnist for King Features Syndicate.

NATION in brief

Teens use heads for flag protests

MESA, Ariz. (AP) — Four teenagers are using their heads as a visual protest against the U.S. Supreme Court's decision to allow flag burning as a form of political protest.

Arens

The four, all military-bound, had a barber sculpt Old Glory, stars and letters into their flattop haircuts.

"I've been in the ROTC for three years, and with the flag burning they've been doing, it goes against many things I've learned," said 17-year-old Bob Arens, who will join the Army next month.

"If you're going to burn your flag, you're going to burn your freedoms, too."

Joining Arens were fellow ROTC members Michael Revel, 18, Brian "Biff" Mitchell, 16, and Bill Hancotte, 18. They all said that flag burning should not have First Amendment protection.

"The flag is our national symbol and should be treated with respect," said Mitchell, who went home with a large star on the left side of his head.

"Getting the haircut was kind of a patriotic thing to do."

Crowe praised by Bush

KENNEBUNKPORT, Maine (AP) — President Bush is getting the jump on the Fourth of July by treating his neighbors to a fireworks display tonight, during a holiday trip marked by a marathon of sporting activities.

"I'm tired," Bush, 65, confessed after a day of jogging, tennis, swimming, fishing, golf and then more fishing on Sunday.

Meanwhile, the vacation White House today was anxiously awaiting fireworks of another sort from the Supreme Court.

Fitzwater said a statement would be issued in Bush's behalf if the court issued a ruling today on whether it will allow states to limit or outlaw the right to abortion.

Bush said Sunday he regretted the decision of Adm. William J. Crowe to step down as chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff in September.

"Very candidly, I'd like to have had him stay," Bush told reporters on the golf course. "He did an outstanding job and is doing an outstanding job."

Crowe announced his decision Sunday on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press."

Baker en route to Japan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State James A. Baker III is heading for Japan and talks with officials from other nations on a proposed $2 billion-a-year aid and investment package for the Philippines.

Baker was leaving this morning for Tokyo to discuss the five-year aid program, which is designed to help the Philippines' young democracy overcome economic backwardness and a determined leftist guerrilla movement.

The program envisions $1 billion a year in economic aid from a variety of donors over the next five years, plus a similar amount in private investment.

The United States is seeking $200 million from Congress as its contribution to the program. Combined with other programs, the administration is asking a total of $658.6 million for the Philippines for the next fiscal year.

Representatives from the European Economic Community, Canada, Australia and other nations also are attending the meeting, which is being convened by the World Bank.

Imelda marks birthday

HONOLULU (AP) — Ousted Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos fulfilled his wife's wish that he live to see her 60th birthday but remained in critical condition with massive organ failure.

"I thank Ferdinand for this beautiful gift, his great strength of spirit, that strength will help me carry this burden," Imelda Marcos said on her birthday Sunday, after a Roman Catholic Mass at the couple's home-in-exile.

Marcos, 71, was battling widespread infection and was being kept alive by machines at St. Francis Medical Center, where he has been hospitalized since January.

The hospital said his condition essentially was unchanged since a failed transplanted kidney was removed Thursday. Aides said Marcos' fever had subsided and that while lapsing in and out of consciousness he seemed to recognize his wife.

Roundups conducted

MIAMI (AP) — One thousand officers from the Florida Panhandle to the Keys arrested 2,000 people on charges of using or dealing crack, and police in Los Angeles arrested more than 400 people in anti-gang sweeps.

Many of the Florida suspects were nabbed by undercover officers posing as dealers, while others were captured in raids and dramatic foot chases.

Many also were back on the street within hours.

After the 48-hour roundup ended early Sunday, officers counted 2,076 arrests. In addition to the arrests, they seized 3,500 rocks of crack cocaine, 327 vehicles, more than $55,000 in cash, nearly 10 pounds of powdered cocaine and 50 firearms.

Rev. George Stallings

Priest holds black Catholic service

WASHINGTON (AP) — The founder of the new African American Catholic Congregation says he will adhere to Catholic teachings on issues such as abortion and priest celibacy while incorporating African and southern black religious traditions.

The Rev. George A. Stallings celebrated the Imani Temple's first service on Sunday before about 2,000 people at Howard University Law School.

Stallings said he created the church because he believes the establishment Catholic church had failed to meet the spiritual and cultural needs of blacks. Imani means "faith" in Swahili.

But Cardinal James A. Hickey of Washington has condemned Stallings' plans for the new church, which were announced two weeks ago, and forbade Stallings to celebrate mass.

"In spite of his claims to the contrary, Father Stallings' action is a serious step toward separating himself from the Roman Catholic Church," Hickey said recently in a statement.

Stallings has said that he has been fired by Hickey as evangelist for the archdiocese.

Sunday's service began with an entrance procession that included one participant wearing "dreadlocks" and others who shook bells and used rattles traditionally used in African ceremonies.

The ceremony included Catholic prayers and liturgy, along with words borrowed from African and Southern black revival traditions. Black representatives of other faiths, including Baptists and Muslims, attended to show support for Stallings' move.

At one point, Stallings chanted, "We can't wait. How much longer does the Roman Catholic Church need?"

Stallings, in an interview broadcast on WRC television on Sunday, said he plans to abide by Catholic dealings on issues such as abortion, birth control and celibacy for priests.

But Stallings said, "just because we will follow the church teaching does not mean we won't challenge. Laws are not good when they bind and constrict men and women."

He said his Imani Temple church will allow women to serve in various church ceremonies although they will not be ordained as priests.

But Stallings said the Roman Catholic church will inevitably lose black members if strict bans on abortion and premarital sex are not loosened. Some blacks also believe celibacy for priests should be optional, he said.

Stallings, a convert to Catholicism, attracted national attention as pastor of St. Teresa of Avila parish in southeast Washington when he began to incorporate into the traditional mass the gospel music and preaching and worship styles familiar to many blacks.

In 12 years at St. Teresa's, membership increased from 200 to 2,000, Stallings said. There are about 80,000 black Catholics in the Washington archdiocese.

Stallings said he has not been formally excommunicated by Hickey. "The church can't throw me out, and even if they do throw me out, I have my own opinion ... they have theirs," he said.

Excommunication is a term "used by the powerful to threaten the powerless," Stallings said.

Plans for Europe in 1992 stir protest in French Caribbean

FORT-DE-FRANCE, Martinique (AP) — Western Europe's move toward a single trading market by the end of 1992 has raised some concern on Martinique and Guadeloupe, French islands 4,500 miles from Paris.

A fear is that the elimination of trade barriers within the 12-nation European Economic Community will trigger an invasion of wealthy land speculators and jobless immigrants that could threaten the islands' Caribbean identity.

On May 1, Labor Day, hundreds of trade unionists poured into the streets of Fort-de-France, Martinique's capital, to voice their concern over the "dangers of European integration," as one official put it.

Protesters maintained that removing tariffs on European goods coming into Martinique will stifle local production and the unrestricted circulation of capital will make it easier for Europeans to buy land and businesses on the island.

Emmanuel Ibene, co-leader of the Guadeloupean Communist Party, said, "A new status is being imposed on us, and nobody has asked our opinion."

Guadeloupe and Martinique, about 150 miles apart halfway down the arc of the Lesser Antilles, are French overseas departments. They are as much a part of France as Hawaii is of the United States.

Bakeries, Parisian accents, compact Citroen cars, cyclists wearing flashy racing tights training on picturesque rural roads all resemble France.

Many "metropolitans," as the European French are called, own small shops and restaurants on the two islands. European drifters peddle jewelry on street corners or sing and play guitars at sidewalk cafes.

With 500,000 resettled French West Indians, France itself is influenced by Caribbean culture. Every islander has relatives or friends in France, and their music, "zouk," similar to calypso, has millions of fans.

Being French, the islands are part of the European Economic Community. Air travelers arriving here line up under customs signs that read in French "non-EEC citizens" and "EEC citizens." The latter need no passports.

A single European market with no travel, employment or residency restrictions would open the floodgates to immigration, opponents say.

"There are 23 million unemployed in Europe; it only takes half a million to immigrate here and we're finished," said Claude Makouke, leader of the small separatist Popular Union for the Liberation of Guadeloupe.

"The danger for Guadeloupe of remaining French is our cultural disappearance through intermixing with Europeans," Makouke said. "For us, 1992 is the 'coup de grace.'"

Most of the 680,000 residents of Martinique and Guadeloupe are of African descent, with a sprinkling of East Indians and Europeans.

Not everybody is opposed to a single European market. The regional assemblies of both islands favor the idea.

"Every Martiniquan should plant a banana tree for Europe, because the market is there," said Pierre Petit, leader of the island's rightists and mayor of the mountain town of Morne Rouge. "Europe is what we need to lift us out of our torpor."

French West Indians enjoy a high standard of living, receiving free health care and generous unemployment benefits. But 25 percent of the work force is unemployed and 30 percent have government jobs. The French state is the main source of income, followed by banana exports and tourism.

"People think that in 1992 we're going to see fleets of 747s flying in here packed with wealthy West Germans coming to buy up all the business," said Pierre-Luc St. Yves, a Credit Martiniquais Bank manager. "We're already part of the EEC. The Germans could have come long ago."

Yet, many islanders are alarmed at the quantity of farm land bought by European investors to build villas and hotels. They also fear the abolition in 1992 of a special tax on goods imported from France. Towns here draw 50 percent of their revenues from the tax.

Support for integration with France dates to the French Revolution of 1789. Newly freed slaves saw alliance with the revolutionary government in Paris as a weapon against the local elite.

Residents of Martinique, Guadeloupe and French Guiana, France's other overseas department, on the northern shoulder of South America, vote in French elections and elect deputies and senators to the National Assembly in Paris.

Philippine province 'forgotten'

By ROBERT H. REID

BASCO, Philippines (AP) — The jail in this windswept provincial capital is empty, except for a rusting bicycle stored in one cell and potted plants in the other.

"There are crimes here, but only small crimes," said Sgt. Clementi Cantor, chief of the two-man police force in Basco, capital of Batanes, the forgotten province of the Philippines.

This year, Sgt. Cantor has investigated three "crimes" — domestic disputes and fights between neighbors. None was serious enough for the courts.

Only 23 crimes were reported in the entire province last year. The most serious, a murder committed by a soldier, was the first killing reported in 20 years.

"We've had judges come to hear cases and they say it's like a vacation in the Bahamas," said Tess Castillejos, executive secretary to the mayor.

The low crime rate is one of many features that make Batanes, the smallest, most northerly and least developed province, unique in the violence-plagued Philippines.

Its 15,000 people, known as Ivatans, live in quiet isolation. They fish and raise crops and cattle on 10 small islands about 250 miles) north of Manila and only 140 miles south of Taiwan.

Few outsiders venture to Batanes, whose lush green fields, mist-shrouded hills and villages on rocky cliffs make it look more like the Welsh coast than the tropics.

Telephones? Forget it. The radiotelephone link was cut last year when communist rebels blew up a relay station on Luzon, the main Philippine island.

Batanes is not perfect.

It has the highest rate of alcohol consumption in the Philippines. Per capita income is only 416 pesos ($19.80) a month, so many of the brightest youngsters leave after high school in search of opportunity.

"We need government investments in cattle, fishing, garlic and root crops and to improve the seaport so our young people can find jobs here," said the provincial governor, Telesforo Castillejos.

"Most provinces have an overpopulation, problem but our growth has been almost nill because of emigration."

Typhoons and and other storms batter the islands frequently and Ivatans live in square, fortress-like stone houses for protection from them, but there are no communist rebels, no armed gangs and no beggars.

Internal combustion engines do not pollute the air in Basco, a town of 6,000 people. All Batanes has only 120 motor vehicles and two-thirds are motorcycles.

If roosters crowing can be called noise pollution, it is the most common form.

Lt. Col. Jesus Poblete, provincial military commander, said "I don't feel very busy here."

His major challenge is the occasional Taiwanese fishing vessel encroaching on Philippine waters. Otherwise, he said, "All we do is run, train and have meetings. I don't have much to do."

"I think it's the perpetual serenity which we don't find in the metropolitan areas that keeps people here," said Tess Castillejos, an in-law of the governor and native of Batanes who returned with her husband after several years in Manila.

"In Manila, I spent the whole day taking my children to and from school and driving to stores. Here, I kiss them in the morning and they come home in the afternoon. I can walk everywhere."

Because of frequent storms in the Balintang Channel, commercial ships do not run regular services between Batanes and Luzon, 140 miles to the south.

Most supplies come on LST landing craft, which the Philippine navy uses extensively for inter-island traffic.

They reach Batanes about every three months. One ran aground in the harbor during a storm last year and its hulk is still there, quietly rusting.

Philippine Air Lines provides the main link with the world, a daily flight often canceled because of bad weather.

A siren heralds the plane's arrival and scores of townspeople usually go to meet it, since the airport is within walking distance of downtown Basco.

There is no television and residents can pick up Philippine state radio for only a few hours a day on a relay from Tuguegarao, 200 miles south.

That hardly matters because only a few hundred homes in Basco can receive the part-time electricity.

We're Good at Making You Look Great!

1020 ANDREWS HWY. 699-5054

At 5 a.m. Teresa Garcia, already two hours into her day, wipes off the counter outside her kitchen.

Left, the skilled hands of Mrs. Garcia roll up to 600 buriitos a day. Below, Lupe Pena counts the burritos.

BURRITO BONANZA

Each weekday morning, before anyone in any office has had the chance to bellow, "The burrito lady's here!" Midland restaurateur Teresa Garcia has been up for five hours literally and figuratively rolling in the dough.

As has been the practice for the past 26 years, Ms. Garcia has slapped the steak and hamburger meat on the grill first; eggs are scrambled later so they don't "dry out."

By 10 a.m. each weekday morning, the 600 breakfast burritos she and helper Vickie Esquivel have cooked, rolled, wrapped and sold at $1.05 a pop are in the stomachs of everyone from attorneys to service station workers.

"Everybody knows me. They call me 'The Burrito Lady,'" said Ms. Garcia, whose simple operation last year cleared an estimated $100,000.

Unlike other breakfast burrito establishments in Midland, Ms. Garcia's delivers — "rain or snow" — to businesses each morning in addition to selling them at the 10-by-15 foot Garcia's Drive-Thru restaurant in east Midland.

Ms. Esquivel, one of four delivery ladies, hops into her pickup at 8 a.m. armed with about 150 burritos in a foil-covered box. By 10 a.m. she is usually sold out, often before she's made all 15 stops on her rounds.

"When I sell out and have to miss someone, I usually go there first the next day. They are glad to see me."

Adds Juanita Rodriguez, Ms. Garcia's sister who doubles as a delivery lady: "Sometimes they whistle at me to pull over because they know my car.

"If we don't deliver there one day, they call. Teresa knows when we're not working," Ms. Rodriguez mused.

HUD program overcharged by $1 billion, paper says

DALLAS (AP) — A program administered by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, already beset by charges of favoritism in consulting fees, was overcharged $1 billion by developers and mortgage companies over the last decade, a newspaper reported Sunday.

The money came through 15-year apartment renovation and subsidy contracts, The Dallas Morning News reported in a copyright story, citing records and interviews with agency officials.

HUD Inspector General Paul Adams said the $1 billion estimate was conservative.

"It is a reasonable figure that does not factor in inflation" and annual rent increases, he said. "If that were factored in, the amount would have to go up."

He said the overcharges occurred primarily because local and federal housing officials routinely calculated rents of the 15-year contracts based on inflated mortgages and ineligible costs submitted by developers and mortgage companies. The contracts are part of the agency's Section 8 Moderate Rehabilitation program, launched in 1979 to encourage renovation of moderately run-down apartment buildings.

One HUD study indicates overpayments could top $2 billion and Adams' most recent audit detailed a national pattern of overcharges during the last five years.

HUD Secretary Jack Kemp has ordered a review of the contracts covering more than 35,000 apartments funded since 1984. HUD auditors found an average overcharge of $11,544 per apartment, or about $413 million.

"Secretary Kemp believes there have been overcharges and that this is a national problem that needs to be looked at on a national scale," said Mary Brunette, an aide to Kemp.

Kemp's review does not include 90,000 apartments for which taxpayers were overcharged an additional $563 million, audit records show. Those apartments were part of the first five years of the rehabilitation program.

The agency has been under fire since April, when Adams released documents that showed how a small group of HUD officials steered contracts to developers, who, in turn, paid hundreds of thousands of dollars in consulting fees to former Reagan administration officials and other prominent Republicans.

Kemp canceled all 1989 contracts in the program and then initiated strict new guidelines to eliminate favoritism.

The Dallas newspaper listed several examples of renovation projects where developers overcharged the federal agency. Among them:

- The conversion of a Worcester, Mass., mill into 39 apartments for low income families at a cost of $80,000 per apartment.
- The conversion of a Lynn, Mass., school into low-income housing at a cost of $60,000 per apartment.
- A $19.8 million renovation of a Las Vegas apartment complex that auditors said included almost $5 million in "excessive" payments.

Stephenville celebrates 100 years — again

By HOLDEN LEWIS

STEPHENVILLE (AP) — For the second time in 35 years, Stephenville is celebrating its 100th anniversary.

Last time, in 1954, city leaders organized a centennial celebration celebrating the days when developer John M. Stephen and Texas revolutionary figure George Erath platted the streets of the nascent city 60 miles southwest of Fort Worth.

This year, they're celebrating the 100th anniversary of Stephenville's incorporation, which transformed it from a town into a city.

"We don't call this (year's celebration) the centennial," said Billy Mobley, head of the chamber of commerce and one of about 30 organizers of the celebration.

"We already had what we called the centennial, to celebrate the founding of the town. That's caused some problems. Some people weren't happy we were having another 100-year celebration, because they were instrumental in organizing the first one."

But any misgivings are bound to be dispelled when the celebration begins Tuesday, as 12,000 people are expected to attend the annual parade and Fourth of July fun fair. A summerlong series of events ends Sept. 12 with a citywide fish fry and closing ceremony, probably at a newly improved corner of Century Park.

Also planned on various weekends are a 100-mile bike race, an old-fashioned country fair, an auto show, a softball tournament, a rodeo, a Labor Day musical celebration and the state's annual 6-man football all-star game and coaches clinic.

Bob Self, co-chairman of the 100th Anniversary Committee, poses above the Erath County Courthouse in downtown Stephenville recently. Stephenville is celebrating the 100th anniversary of its incorporation.

Stephen and Erath arrived at the rolling hills near Bosque Creek in the mid-1850s and began platting Stephenville in the mid-1850s, said Clinton Cox, who helped organize the 1954 centennial.

There is little record of what went on for the next 35 years. The state granted Stephenville incorporation as a city Aug. 6, 1889, and the first City Council meeting was Sept. 13 of that year..

Bob Self, a City Council member who proposed this year's festival and is co-chairman of the organizing committee, said he thought it made more sense to celebrate the city's 100th anniversary this summer rather than in 1954.

"When we celebrate July 4, we're not celebrating the Pilgrims' landing here, we're celebrating the establishment of the government," he said.

Self hopes to attract lots of tourists and create community cohesiveness with the festivities. Pamphlets have been printed and will be distributed at the Texas Tourist Bureau stations at the state's major highway entry points. Bumper stickers, coffee mugs, T-shirts, buttons and pens emblazoned with the 100-year anniversary logo are being sold all over town.

Mobley, Self and celebration committee co-chair Maxine Dameron all say they believe it's a good place to raise a family.

Self grew up in Stephenville, served in the Air Force from 1968 to 1980 and returned that year to run the family boot shop after his father died.

"Aside from the fact that it's home, we still have the small community atmosphere where you see people you know all the time," he said. "But we're enough of a city that just about everything you want is available."

Stephenville has grown to a population of 15,500 and has added industry to supplement Erath County's peanut and dairy industries. Tarleton State University, with an enrollment of about 5,000, sits near factories where abrasives, auto parts and clothing are made.

Brooks still proud of civil rights vote

BEAUMONT (AP) — Rep. Jack Brooks of Beaumont said he looks back with pride on the vote he cast 25 years ago that helped pass the historic Civil Rights Act.

Brooks was one of five Texas Congressmen who voted for the act.

"I'm just as proud of that vote as any," the Texas Democrat told the Beaumont Enterprise. "Not because it was political or popular, but because it was the right thing to do."

On July 2, 1964, three days after Brooks and eight other southern congressmen helped pass it, the Civil Rights Act was signed into law by President Lyndon Johnson.

Many historians regard it as the most significant piece of civil rights legislation enacted since the Reconstruction period following the Civil War, according to Ralph Wooster, associate vice president and dean of faculties at Lamar University in Beaumont.

The law prohibits discrimination by race, color, religion and national origin in areas such as public transportation, voter registration and education, and it prohibits discrimination by gender in employment.

An entire generation has grown up since those barriers began crumbling.

There were things in many Texas towns and cities and throughout the South that made the landmark law necessary, Brooks and other officials recall.

There were separate water fountains, even in courthouses, for whites and "coloreds"; there were segregated lunch counters and eating areas; restaurant serving windows "around back" for blacks; and signs in buses.

Former Beaumont Mayor Jimmie Cokinos recalls the signs in the buses kept getting pushed back, and with them the black passengers, as whites filled up the buses.

But by 1964, he and others said, such signs of the times were changing.

"Beaumont was very fortunate to have people on both sides who didn't want bad feelings or mobs," observed Jack Moore, mayor of Beaumont from 1962 to 1968. "The whole process of accepting desegregation was very smooth."

The Civil Rights Act had "a hell of an impact on me," Cokinos said, detailing how, when Lamar was integrated in 1956, he became the target of mob violence and two bombings.

Angry whites, many of them industrial workers fearing for their economic security, picketed the campus and blocked entrances. They harassed white students who crossed the picket line, searched cars and tried to prevent black students from attending classes.

At one point, according to Cokinos, a fight erupted when a taxi carrying a black student tried to drive past the pickets. The student was beaten, the driver was injured, and the cab was damaged. Cokinos, without City Council backing, ordered the police to quell the disturbance. They made 12 arrests.

A couple of days later, he said, a bomb exploded at the door of the church where he is a member. There were no injuries. A 24-hour police guard was placed at his house, and he checked his car daily for explosives.

Later, in an apparent mistake, the house behind him was bombed.

The dozen picketers who were arrested sued Cokinos for $1 million each, but the cases were dismissed after being transferred to federal court.

Workers build screens to shade Treaty Oak

AUSTIN (AP) — The historic Treaty Oak, whose canopy has provided friendly shade during the dog days of summer, will itself soon be shaded by screens erected by workers battling to save the herbicide-poisoned tree.

"The whole plan of attack is to try and minimize the stress on the tree," said Paul Roberts, an environmental specialist with the Austin Parks and Recreation Department.

City parks employees today began placing 65-foot poles on the east and west sides of the 400-year-old Treaty Oak.

Later this week they will put 40-foot screens beside the approximately 65-foot tree. The screens will be placed about 10 feet off the ground.

"There is tender foliage up there. It would be real easy to fry it," Roberts said.

"We're coming into a real stressful period for the tree. We can expect upper 90s, 100 degrees for the next two months," he said. Roberts said the screens will reduce the sunlight hitting the tree by about 50 percent to 60 percent.

Treaty Oak is fighting for survival after being poisoned with the herbicide Velpar in what police say was a ritual act. Police have charged Paul Stedman Cullen, 45, of Elroy, with poisoning the tree.

Workers also are replacing soil that was excavated around the tree to a depth of about 30 inches.

Along with trying to reduce sunlight hitting Treaty Oak, 12 sprinkler heads have been placed in the canopy and shoot water on the tree about five minutes every hour, Roberts said.

Latest test results on Treaty Oak indicate that a higher level of Velpar than first suspected was used to poison the tree.

The tree has been linked for centuries with magic and occult ceremonies intended to enhance one's power, according to a published report.

Comanche and Tejas Indians regarded Austin's landmark tree with "superstitious reverence," contending that tea made from its acorns had the power to return straying lovers or protect warriors.

Ceremonies, dances and other rituals were said to be held under its branches, and the traditions of the tree continued even after Stephen F. Austin brought the first Anglo settlers to Central Texas, the Austin American-Statesman reported.

Sgt. John Jones, the investigator in charge of the case, said he would not discuss the type of ritual believed to have been performed by Cullen because that would "be inflammatory" and he thought police "shouldn't inflame passions any more."

Upton County sheriff's deputy killed in accident

From Staff Reports

An Upton County sheriff's deputy responding to a call was killed Sunday afternoon after he lost control of his patrol car and was thrown from his vehicle, the Department of Public Safety reported.

Jerry Austin Register, 41, of McCamey, was pronounced dead at McCamey Hospital by Justice of the Peace Joy Moody, DPS reports said.

The accident occurred just before 5 p.m. Sunday, just south of McCamey on FM 305.

Register, who was alone in his patrol car, a four-door 1988 Ford sedan, was northbound on 305 when he attempted to pass a vehicle stopped in the southbound traffic lane. The other vehicle, a 1988 four-door sedan driven by Frances Montes Franco of Crane, had its left turn signal on, according to reports.

Register attempted to pass the Franco vehicle on the left, but clipped the front bumper. Register's vehicle left the roadway and struck a dirt embankment, and Register was thrown out through the right side window, the DPS reported.

The deputy was not wearing a safety belt, according to reports.

BURRITO

"Over the past several years, we've probably ordered about 20-30 a day," said Tom Taylor, a Marathon Oil Co. landman. "We usually phone in orders every day.

"They're just very good burritos. They're one dollar and a nickel and it beats getting junk out of a machine," said Taylor, who fancies the steak and cheese variety because they're "nice and spicy."

Assistant Midland County District Attorney Ralph Petty leaves money with the receptionist on mornings he must appear in court so he doesn't miss his daily potato and steak burrito.

Typical of the corporate public address systems throughout Midland each morning, the message "The burrito lady's here!" echoes through the halls of Starline Printing each day at 8 a.m. sharp.

Starline employee Dan Duree says the burrito's spicy taste "wakes him up" in the morning.

"And besides, they come right up to your door."

Weekly, the business consumes 200 pounds of steak, 75 pounds of hamburger, 960 eggs, 150 pounds of potatoes and 3,000 tortillas. Ms. Garcia's best seller is the steak, potato and cheese burrito.

Other varieties include steak and chili; hamburger, chili and cheese; egg and sausage; bacon and egg; steak, egg and cheese; potato and sausage; and beans and sausage, though Ms. Garcia will make special orders.

"But I don't like it when people order potato, hamburger and steak. It messes up the burrito because there's too much in it to roll.

"And I like to roll my own burritos."

At the age of 13, Ms. Garcia's Puerto Rican-born father grew weary of the fact she didn't do anything while he was in the fields near Midland picking cotton, she said.

She turned her efforts toward homemade tortilla-making and another of her nine sisters began making tamales.

The burrito enterprise didn't arise until 16 years later when Ms. Garcia's daughter needed help raising money for a contest at their Catholic church.

Ms. Garcia made burritos, her daughter won first prize and the title, Queen of Our Lady of Guadalupe Church, and a profitable business was born.

In addition to the breakfast trade, Ms. Garcia enjoys business from hunters, fishermen and parents of former Midlanders who've since gone to college and miss the burritos, she said.

The limited parking outside Garcia's Drive-Thru usually is packed as 8 a.m. nears each day.

City of Midland equipment operator Tony Brazell has trouble finding a place to park the muddied backhoe in which he drives to the stand many mornings a week.

"Most of the guys from the city of Midland come here. Where else can you get a $1 burrito?"

Ms. Garcia, who estimates she's made more than one million burritos in her lifetime, but who only eats refried bean burrito occasionally, sold 1,000 burritos in a single morning during the oil boom.

"That's when everybody was working.

"People who buy the burritos say, 'Where are we going to send you this year?' "

Ms. Garcia's hot profits have financed vacations to Hawaii, Cancun, Canada, Acapulco, New York City, Las Vegas and Mexico City, she said.

Although the number of working and burrito-eating Midlanders since the oil boom has decreased, the estimated $100,000-a-year profit is a far cry from the days 26 years ago when she served traditional American fast food items and sold only 60 burritos a day for 60-cents.

"I used to make hamburgers and french fries, but the smell of Crisco oil made me sick."

Midlander injured in freak mishap

From Staff Reports

A 19-year-old Midland man was critically injured in a freak accident caused by the accidental ignition of a pack of firecrackers, the Department of Public Safety reported.

Steve Thomas suffered head injuries, a fracturd leg, and second-degree burns to both arms. He was listed today in critical condition at Midland Memorial Hospital, spokeswoman Sue Ristom said.

The accident occurred at 7:50 p.m. Sunday on Rice Avenue, just south of Brown Street in northwest Midland County.

According to the DPS, Thomas was in a car when a firecracker was thrown out of the window. When the fireworks blew back into the car and ignited others, Thomas bolted from the car and was struck by a 1984 Dodge Charger driven by Curtis Barr of Odessa. Barr was unable to see Thomas because of the smoke from the fireworks, according to the DPS.

American pianist Van Cliburn performs at a charity concert in Moscow's Tchaikovsky Concert Hall Sunday. All box-office earnings from the concert were to be turned over to the Soviet Cultural Foundation.

Cliburn draws bravos with Moscow concert

MOSCOW (AP) — American pianist Van Cliburn drew bravos and even screams when he repeated the spectacular performance of Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1, which launched his career three decades ago.

President Mikhail S. Gorbachev and his wife, Raisa, joined in the standing ovation Sunday night in Tchaikovsky Hall and later expressed their enjoyment privately in a 35-minute meeting backstage with Cliburn.

Before playing, Cliburn told the 1,500 people packed into the hall, "For 31 years, I have felt like I had two homes. I will soon be asking permission from your distinguished President Gorbachev to buy an apartment in Moscow."

"I will be coming for much-needed visits for my music, for my soul, to Russia and to Moscow."

Cliburn, 54, of Fort Worth, Texas, said the Soviet leader told him he would help arrange the apartment.

Sunday was Cliburn's third public performance in 11 years. He came out of retirement to play for the Gorbachevs at the White House in 1987. He was to play tonight at the Tchaikovsky Conservatory, on the same stage where he won the Tchaikovsky Competition for young pianists in 1958.

In addition to the Tchaikovsky, Cliburn performed Liszt's Piano Concerto No. 1, a Debussy prelude and the Schumann-Liszt Widmung.

"He played like a god," said Dallas Morning News critic John Ardoin, who flew to Moscow to review the performance. "I don't see how anyone under this pressure and much emotion could play like he did."

> "He played like a god. I don't see how anyone under this pressure and much emotion could play like he did."
>
> — Dallas Morning News critic John Ardoin, in Moscow

As is typical in the Soviet Union, the concert hall had no air conditioning and the heat was oppressive. Enthusiastic fans crowded the aisles while hundreds more waited outside for a glimpse of Cliburn.

One of those in the audience was Nake Flock, who said she heard Cliburn play in Moscow in 1958, when he won the Tchaikovsky Competition for young pianists with his performance of the Tchaikovsky concerto.

Ms. Flock said she flew to Moscow from her home in Leipzig, East Germany, and paid $46.50 for a concert ticket that had a face value of $3.41.

"His technique hasn't changed," said Ms. Flock, the mother of a piano student at the Tchaikovsky Conservatory. "But he has become more impulsive, more sentimental."

Some 20 players in the Moscow Philharmonic Orchestra backing him were members of the same ensemble 31 years ago that accompanied him on the night he won the Tchaikovsky Competition.

UCC to decide leader, headquarters' location

FORT WORTH (AP) — Delegates representing the 1.8 million-member United Church of Christ were divided over new leadership and whether to move the denomination's headquarters as votes on the issues were scheduled today.

The 703 representatives at the UCC's 17th General Synod hoped to decide whether to combine its national offices — now scattered in three New York City locations — into a single New York location or move them to Cleveland.

The UCC, considered one of the most liberal of the mainline churches, may also elect the first woman president of major Protestant group.

The Rev. Yvonne Delk of Union City, N.J., opposes the Rev. Paul H. Sherry of Chicago on the election ballot today. Both have extensive backgrounds in the denomination, with Sherry rising from local pastorates and Ms. Delk from the UCC's national bodies.

The president of the UCC is the denomination's senior minister, chief executive and its official representative in ecumenical relations. While the president has no doctrinal or authoritarian power over the denomination's members, the position is widely viewed as an important theological platform.

Sherry was nominated by a 15-member committee which interviewed 46 candidates, including Ms. Delk, who was nominated from the synod floor Friday.

Her nomination was expected by many, but the division over a headquarters location surprised some leaders, who expected the synod to handily approve a study committee's recommendation of Cleveland.

At issue is whether the cost savings available in Cleveland are worth losing some ecumenical ties in New York.

"Most people feel that there are some compelling arguments on either side," said the Rev. Reiss Potterveld, senior minister at Congregational Church of Northridge, Calif., near Los Angeles.

Critics say a move from New York would diminish the UCC's standing in the ecumenical community.

"This church has a historic and strong involvement in the ecumenical movement," Potterveld said. "This move will put certain hardships on that. Both committees recognize that. It (ecumenism) is part of our heritage and will continue to be part of our future."

But not all agree the UCC's ecumenical efforts are best served in New York, and supporters of the move to Cleveland say it would save millions in rent and other costs and bridge a symbolic gap between the national and local church.

Presbyterian and Lutheran denominations involved in mergers also have moved from the city in recent years.

Potterveld chaired the 33-member synod committee that set up today's decision by endorsing the Cleveland proposal 21-10 with two abstentions.

The UCC's last national meeting, in 1987, rejected a recommendation to move the headquarters to St. Louis, ordering the formation of a study committee instead.

But UCC leaders say another deferral is unlikely, in part because the debate has lasted so long. Ten years ago, a landlord's decision and the New York rental market forced the denomination to split its offices, said Evan Golder of the UCC Office of Communication.

No poll of the full delegation had been taken on the issue. But a proposal also before the synod would scrap the committees' recommendation and move two of the New York UCC offices to the third office at the Interchurch Center, which houses 65 church and other non-profit organizations.

The Ohio delegation, more than 70 people, is the synod's largest, and its leaders have lobbied hard for a move to Cleveland, particularly among large delegations from nearby states.

The denomination formed in the 1957 merger of the Congregational Christian Churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Church.

What appears at first glance to be a pair of sea monsters is really John Rayes and his son Napolean as they play in the seaweed accumulated on the beach in Galveston.

'You can't fight Mother Nature' about seaweed

GALVESTON (AP) — Seaweed continues to pile up on many coastal beaches, bothering swimmers in the Gulf of Mexico and puzzling some marine botanists.

Tons of seaweed have washed ashore on beaches from the Padre Island National Seashore below Corpus Christi to Holly Beach, La., and beyond on the Gulf of Mexico Coast.

The seaweed assault began in early-to-mid May and, although it may have tapered off some, hasn't quit yet.

"It's a losing battle," said Thomas Garza, a Mustang Island State Park ranger. "You can't fight Mother Nature.

"It's keeping three dump trucks busy," Garza said. "They've been doing the same thing the last three or four weeks. Nueces County's doing the same thing on their beaches."

In Galveston, high tides from Tropical Storm Allison last week helped by pushing most of the seaweed from the surf line into parking areas at R.A. Apffel and Stewart Beach parks. Storm tides also pushed the seaweed toward the back of the narrower western beaches but left most of the rotting material lying on the sand in front of the dune line.

But small new deposits have since showed up and officials fear what seaweed the storm might have carried back out to sea will wash ashore again.

The seaweed is sargassum, or brown algae, that grows in a calm part of the mid-Atlantic Ocean.

There are many theories as to why the seaweed has come ashore in such large amounts, with some guessing that storms and other weather conditions in the past year are to blame.

"It's pure speculation, ranging from sun spots to the greenhouse effect," said Bill Wardel, a Texas A&M University-Galveston marine botanist.

"If I had to guess, I'd guess that there's a slightly unusual current pattern that's bringing more of the seaweed into the Gulf and more of it into this part of the Gulf," he said.

Rooftop burglar suspected in Houston jewelry heists

HOUSTON (AP) — Several jewelry collections owned by residents of the city's most exclusive neighborhoods have been stolen by a group that apparently uses stolen address books and society columns to select victims, police say.

A slender, rooftop burglar and his companions are believed to have burglarized several homes of wealthy Houstonians over the last year and a half.

"The thing about it is almost everyone one of these (homes) has an alarm, and not once has a suspect been caught in the house," Houston police Sgt. Floyd Harmon said. "They're good and they're fast."

About 55 break-ins apparently have been committed by the ring, which some people call the "skylight burglars." Many of the heists occurred in River Oaks, where some have lost jewelry collections worth up to $500,000.

Police believe a slender, agile young man breaks into the attic through the roof — sometimes through a skylight and sometimes through an air conditioning duct. He disables the alarm system, which is usually routed through the attic.

He may kick out the sheet rock in the ceiling and drop directly into the room with the jewelry. He then opens a door or window to let in his companions.

Watch group blasts INS for rights violations

DALLAS (AP) — Dubbing themselves the Rio Grande Valley Watch, a group of attorneys, educators and clergymen has called for a halt to what it terms human rights violations against Central American refugees held in South Texas.

The 22 Dallas-area residents issued a report Sunday on their recent trip to detention centers along the United States-Mexico border operated or subcontracted by the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Among their recommendations is the suggestion that a congressional investigation be conducted before further funds are put toward the agency's refugee policy.

In addition to criticizing government policies, the watch group also said the American Red Cross' role in operating refugee shelters in contract agreement with the Justice Department is "a major departure from traditional neutrality" for the agency.

During its visit to South Texas, the group inspected facilities, discussed operating rules with officials, interviewed refugees and lawyers and observed immigration court proceedings, according to a prepared statement.

The INS refugee policy created earlier this year requires Central American refugees to stay in detention camps along the border and have their cases decided the same day.

The group claims that a significant number of refugees with legitimate claims for political asylum are being labeled as "economic migrants" by the INS.

"This harsh policy treats Central American refugees as criminals, and the detention itself discourages bona fide refugees from seeking asylum," said Joe W. "Chip" Pitts III, a spokesman for the Rio Grande Valley Watch.

Also in its report, the group says the majority of Central American detainees are not receiving legal representation and that shelters restrict access to documents refugees might need to prepare legal cases.

An immigration service spokesperson did not immediately return a call this morning from The Associated Press.

Thousands of demonstrators shouting "Shame, Britain! Shame!" protest the arrival of British Foreign Home Secretary Geoffrey Howe Sunday in Hong Kong. The Hong Kong residents were denouncing Britain's refusal to give them refuge when the colony reverts to Chinese rule in 1997.

U.S. protests Chinese army attack

BEIJING (AP) — The U.S. Embassy filed a protest today over what it called a premeditated army attack on apartments of American diplomats and other foreigners last month.

The protest is likely to further worsen relations already made tense by U.S. criticism of China's crackdown on unarmed pro-democracy protesters.

Also today, two Taiwanese reporters said a colleague was taken away by security forces after he reportedly met with fugitive student leader Wang Dan. The reporters said they feared Wang also was arrested.

The evening television news reported five people have been arrested, including three students, allegedly for stealing a submachine gun from an army vehicle during the first days of the crackdown. Four other people turned themselves in for stealing army guns and were released, the report said.

U.S. Embassy spokesman Sheridan Bell said Charge d'Affaires Raymond Burghardt delivered the protest note to the Foreign Ministry, which did not respond immediately.

Chinese soldiers fired into Jianguomenwai apartment compound on June 6, a day after the State Department said the U.S. Embassy had given refuge to two Chinese dissidents, Fang Lizhi and his wife, Li Shuxian.

A U.S. Embassy report charged the shooting was premeditated but did not link it to China's anger over U.S. protection of Fang and Li.

The United States filed one protest shortly after the shooting. The new protest challenges for the first time the Chinese account that soldiers were responding to sniper fire from within the apartment compound.

At the time, Radio Beijing said one soldier was killed and three were injured, and plainclothes officers who went into the compound brought out a Chinese man they claimed was the sniper.

No witnesses reported seeing Chinese soldiers hit, however.

The U.S. report said the arrest appeared to have been staged. It also said the soldiers fired not only from the ground but from a building across the street, where they had taken up positions the day before.

A diplomat from another Western country, speaking on condition of anonymity, confirmed that some bullets were fired from the opposite building and whizzed over the heads of children playing in the foreigners' apartments. No one was hurt, but most foreigners evacuated the compound later that day.

"There is no doubt, in this embassy's opinion, that certain apartments were deliberately targeted," the U.S. report said.

It said one U.S. defense attache's apartment was hit by 18 bullets. Ten other U.S. diplomats' apartments also were hit, as were apartments of other nationals such as Spaniards.

Shortly after the shooting, the European Economic Community asked the Chinese government for an explanation, but received no response.

China has agreed to pay for damage caused by the shooting.

The Bush administration, in other responses to the Chinese crackdown, has criticized it and cut off military aid.

Wang, a history student at Beijing University, was a leader of seven weeks of student-led protests in Beijing for a freer society. He went underground after the army crushed the protests on June 3-4, killing hundreds of unarmed civilians.

Wang's name appeared on a list of 21 students wanted by police.

Antonio Jiang, a reporter for Taiwan's Journalist Weekly, said security officials searched Taiwan Independence Morning Post reporter Huang Teh-Pei's hotel room at 3 a.m. today.

Police grabbed him as he left his hotel just before noon and pushed him into an unmarked car.

Huang reported that he met with Wang Sunday and was driving in the Post's car when they realized they were being followed, according to Jiang. Huang got out, and the driver left with Wang. The driver has not returned, Jiang said.

Beijing police and the city government Foreign Affairs Office said they did not know if Wang was arrested. Jiang said police denied any knowledge about Huang.

Taiwan government spokesman Shaw Yu-ming urged Beijing to expel Huang, as it has Western reporters who interviewed pro-democracy students.

Chinese guards stationed outside the U.S. and Australian embassies, who normally carry only revolvers, were armed today with long-barreled automatic pistols and wore military helmets for a third straight day. Extra uniformed and plainclothes guards also were posted.

The guards refused to explain their new gear, which may be linked to the presence of Fang and Li at the U.S. Embassy and unconfirmed reports the Australians also were sheltering fugitives.

British official rejects pleas from Hong Kong

HONG KONG (AP) — Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe of Britain today rejected appeals from many of the colony's people that Britain offer them refuge from Communist China, and denied his stance was racist.

As Howe concluded a luncheon speech outlining Britain's position, protesters unfurled a banner inside the hall that read, "Shame on the Thatcher government."

"This ... speech is insulting the intelligence of Hong Kong Chinese. We protest and we walk out!" shouted Lee Wing Tat, an elected community leader who left the hall with about eight other demonstrators.

Such angry public outbursts are very rare in this British colony on China's southern coast. They underscored how bitterly many of Hong Kong's 5.7 million people feel toward London's refusal to grant them the right to live in Britain.

Hong Kong residents have demanded that right since China violently swept pro-democracy protesters from Beijing's Tiananmen Square last month and launched a widespread crackdown on dissent.

Under a 1984 British-Chinese pact, Hong Kong reverts to Chinese control in 1997. China guaranteed that Hong Kong can keep its capitalist system and democratic freedoms for 50 years after the turnover and exercise substantial autonomy.

Although more than 3 million Hong Kong Chinese are eligible for British passports, they are not allowed to live in Britain. Howe made clear that this policy will not fundamentally change.

"The plain fact is that there is simply no way that the British government could grant to several million people the right to come and live in Britain," he told about 250 community leaders.

"It dismays me that some have suggested that this is a matter of race. It is nothing of the sort," he added. "It is a practical problem on an enormous scale" that would test Britain's capacity in housing, employment and transportation, he said.

Howe indicated some Hong Kong Chinese who have provided valuable service to the colony would be allowed to settle in Britain, but he gave no details.

He also said Britain would indeed open its doors to Hong Kong residents and mobilize the international community to do the same "if things did go catastrophically wrong" in the territory.

Britain is considering speeding up a program of local democratic reform and drafting a bill of rights for the colony.

Howe also expressed concern about a clause in the post-1997 constitution that China is drafting for Hong Kong. The clause would allow Beijing authorities to declare a state of emergency in the territory.

Howe was in Hong Kong on a three-day mission to gauge Hong Kong opinion in the wake of the Chinese crackdown.

While expressing disgust with the Chinese government's hard line, Howe said the 1984 agreement to return Hong Kong to China remains valid.

"The events of recent weeks don't make that treaty any less binding," he said. "They do make its strict observance all the more necessary."

Howe claimed that China, with its huge economic stake in the colony, remains committed to keeping the territory prosperous and stable.

Nepal's trees fall after fuel cutoff

KATMANDU, Nepal (NYT) — Since the end of March, when a trade dispute with India cut off most fuel deliveries to this landlocked kingdom, Nepal has lost at least 59,300 acres of forest land and is continuing to cut trees for firewood at the rate of nearly 600 acres daily, the Nepalese government spokesman said Sunday.

"We expect this to have a serious environmental and ecological impact," said the spokesman, Radhe Shyam Bista, "not only for Nepal, but also for Bangladesh and India."

Hundreds of truckloads of firewood are being brought to Katmandu and other towns each week to substitute for the kerosene or liquefied petroleum gas normally used for cooking.

Cambodia finally becoming nation of hope, change

Hun Sen holds pivotal place

By DENIS D. GRAY

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) — A dedicated communist who lost an eye fighting for the Khmer Rouge in the Indochina War, Prime Minister Hun Sen has emerged as a key figure in resolving Cambodia's civil war.

Once dismissed by the West as a puppet of the Vietnamese, Hun Sen is preparing to run a country that Vietnam promises will be free of all its troops by Sept. 30.

In the meantime he has stepped up negotiations with Cambodian resistance leader Prince Norodom Sihanouk and others to end a guerrilla war that is sapping the country's limited resources and energy.

One of world's youngest government heads, the 38-year-old Hun Sen has impressed diplomats and Western aid officials in Phnom Penh.

"He began as a country boy. Now, he's by far the most intelligent of the lot," said a senior Soviet diplomat in Phnom Penh.

When this correspondent first interviewed Hun Sen in 1980, his responses were straight down the Marxist line, and he appeared to have a poor grasp of issues.

The Hun Sen of today is said to have picked up an impressive range of knowledge through late-night study, foreign trips and daily staff briefings. Aides say he is progressing well in the English, French and Vietnamese languages.

He has also picked up on politicking, driving his own car to villages, listening to farmers' grievances and berating ineffective officials on frequent inspection tours. He takes time out to play soccer and volleyball on civil service teams.

Hun Sen may well be preparing for an election or at least a popularity contest with Sihanouk, who said in May he might return to Phnom Penh.

The prime minister appears to realize that he himself is handicapped.

Despite his association with the hated Khmer Rouge, Sihanouk still commands widespread affection. Especially among older Cambodians, he remains a father figure who presided over an era of peace before his ouster by pro-West Cambodians in 1970 and the apocalyptic events that precipitated.

Hun Sen, on the other hand, fought with the Khmer Rouge in the war against U.S.-backed Cambodians and remains a communist in a land where the ideology was implemented with extreme brutality.

He has said, however, that communist ideology doesn't sit well with most Cambodians.

Thus, Hun Sen has been the key proponent of economic and political liberalization and Western aid officials say he gets things done in a government rife with inefficiency and corruption. He has maintained a clean image and appears to live modestly.

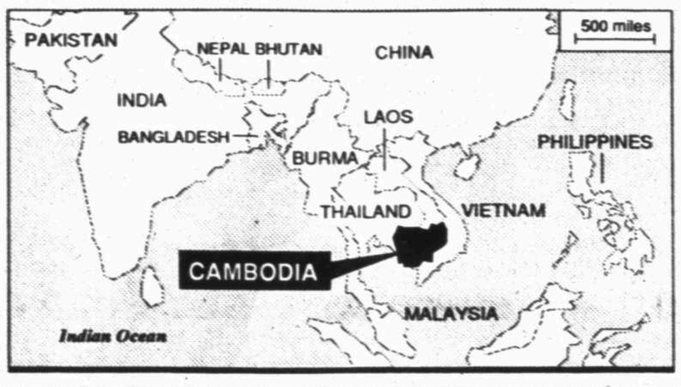
Land:
A 69,898 square-mile area in southeast Asia, about the size of Missouri, bordering Thailand, Laos and Vietnam.

People:
8.0 million; 93% are Khmer, 4% are Vietnamese and 3% are Chinese. Khmer is the main language.

Religion:
About 88% practice Buddhism, with minorities adhering to Islam and Christianity.

History:
Cambodia's golden age came between the 9th and 13th centuries. France colonized Cambodia in 1863. Before independence in 1953, Cambodia was under French control. It became a Communist republic in April 1975, when the Chinese-backed Khmer Rouge took control. About two million Cambodians died from Khmer executions, famine and unrest before the U.S.S.R.-backed Vietnamese invaded in 1978, taking control in 1979. Since then Vietnamese and Cambodian government forces have been battling a coalition of guerillas who include the Khmer Rouge and two non-communist groups.



AP

EDITOR'S NOTE: One of the three nations seized by communist forces in the Indochina War, Cambodia plummeted into even greater turmoil and death in what was supposed to an era of reconstruction. An AP correspondent who has kept watch on Cambodia from Thailand in all those years finds things are beginning to change now for Cambodians.

By DENIS D. GRAY

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) — "No more revolution," a communist government official shouted over the din of live American rock music. "And no more curfew. We can dance until morning."

Such euphoria is strikingly new in Cambodia, and so is the fact that anyone would express it so openly to a visiting Western journalist. Just a few months ago it would have been politically dangerous to do so, and dancing until dawn would have been impossible because of a decade-long curfew that had closed down the Cambodian capital at night.

But 1989 brought a series of major reforms, along with efforts to end a civil war with anti-government guerrillas, that have changed the rules and the mood in Cambodia, which has been under the rule of various communist factions since the end of the Indochina War in 1975.

A hunger for consumer goods, a mini construction boom and dancing fever at Phnom Penh's growing number of nightclubs appear to be symptoms of hope that Cambodia's long agony is nearly over.

The freer speech seems to reflect a shift to liberalism among the motley mix of revolutionaries and technocrats who have run the country since the Vietnamese invaded 10 years ago and ousted the Khmer Rouge faction that had turned the country into a killing ground where perhaps a million people were killed or died of government-imposed hardship.

These days Phnom Penh's central market, originally planned for state ownership, is a haggling, colorful and prospering arena of free enterprise. Along Ok Nha Sou St., thousands of motorbikes that failed road inspection tests in Singapore have been shipped in, repaired and snapped up by customers paying as much as $600 in gold.

A marked improvement is evident in residential buildings, the result, said Vice Mayor Roth Sarin, of a recent ordinance allowing private ownership of property in a city which has grown from a ghost town at the end of the Khmer Rouge era to 300,000 people in 1981 and nearly a million today.

Led by the 38-year-old Prime Minister Hun Sen, the Marxist government has also given farmers ownership of their land, declared Buddhism the state religion and abolished the death penalty. It has promised to allow opposition political parties, something neighboring Vietnam and most other communist countries still reject.

"If we (the Communist Party) lose in general elections we will be ready to step aside. We are ready to play the democratic game," newspaper editor Khieu Khanharith said in an interview. "How can one party pretend to represent all strata of society? How can a Leninist party represent Buddhist monks?"

Government officials say the impetus for change comes from many quarters.

The Phnom Penh government hopes its liberal posture will woo back resistance leader Prince Norodom Sihanouk, Cambodia's leader until he was overthrown by pro-West Cambodians in 1970. The return of Sihanouk would likely gain Cambodia both international recognition and badly needed foreign aid and at the same time weaken the Khmer Rouge, with whom Sihanouk is linked in an anti-government guerrilla alliance.

With Vietnam promising to pull all its troops out of Cambodia by Sept. 30, the Phnom Penh leaders will need determined support from the population to face the still potent Khmer Rouge and their leader, Pol Pot, who led the postwar reign of terror.

Communism, Hun Sen has said, does not go well with most Cambodians, but liberal reforms do.

"We're Dealin' Your Way"

Designer's fun flying objects are identifiable

DELRAY BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Art Johnson has turned his career as pilot into a fulltime hobby as designer, builder and flyer of radio-controlled model aircraft.

He isn't just any pilot. He flew fighter planes for the Air Force for 30 years before he retired in 1971.

His models aren't just any models, either. He has a flying doghouse and a witch that he frequently sends zooming at rooftop level on a homemade, broom-like contraption.

"There's a personal accomplishment and satisfaction of flying something you've built," says Johnson, 69. "But it's not as easy as it looks. I could teach someone to fly a full-sized aircraft easier than a model."

Several scale-model planes Johnson built over the years show the detail in which he has reproduced some of the military aircraft he's flown.

An F-100, more than 5 feet long, has retractable landing gear, drop wing tanks and a drag chute to slow the craft on landing — all controlled by radio.

Johnson, a three-time national scale-model champion, now competes with a B-26 bomber like those he flew in 65 combat missions over Europe in World War II. The model took five years to build, has a 9-foot wingspan and is powered by two four-cycle engines.

It has remote throttle, rudder and aileron (wing flap) control. Johnson can also turn on landing lights, open bomb-bay doors and release during flight bombs resembling the ones he dropped over Italy and southern France.

In need of an additional challenge, Johnson became interested in unorthodox flying objects and in 1975 formed the Florida Air Show Team. The 12 hobbyists put on air shows at area parks for the public and for charitable organizations.

Among the flying machines this group has produced are a magic carpet, scale model race cars, an American flag, a lawn mower, a highway road sign and Johnson's witch, a perennial crowd pleaser.

With a section of black umbrella as airfoil, the plastic foam crone rides astraddle a balsa shaft. What appears to be the broom straw serves as ailerons and rudder.

"I copied the rag wing that was tested by NASA in the late 1950s," says Johnson, a retired colonel. "It's the start of all hang gliders.

"Getting the balance so the witch would fly was tricky, but I was lucky the first time. Every time I've tried to improve the flying witch, it only made it worse."

Johnson's flying doghouse with Snoopy, the comic character, on top seems to defy the principles of flight until Johnson explains the simplicity of his design.

The overhang on the doghouse roof and its base serve as the craft's wings as it flies tilted slightly upward. The doghouse's flight and maneuvers are controlled by Johnson's hand-held transmitter.

With small wheels beneath, Johnson can make Snoopy and his doghouse take off or land like a real aircraft. A club member usually sends "Red Baron" aloft in a radio controlled World War I triplane and the two engage in a dogfight at an altitude of 50 feet.

Weller answers health, decorating questions on ABC's 'Home'

ENTERTAINMENT

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Want to know what smoked rattlesnake tastes like? How to lower your cholesterol level? How to patch wallpaper? Robb Weller is your man.

Weller is co-host of ABC's "Home," a daytime forum for ideas, suggestions and hints that can be applied to viewers' lives.

"I'm probably a lot healthier than I was because 'Home' has changed my eating habits," said Weller. "The only problem with being the host of a show like this is you turn into a pain in the neck to your friends. Instead of talking in sentences, you talk in household hints. You go to a friend's house and tell him how to make a quick fix on torn wallpaper with toothpaste or fill a nail hole with paint mixed with a little cornstarch.

"On the show, I might talk about the benefits of rock garlic. I've eaten everything they bring on the show to make people healthy, from raw nasturtiums to smoked rattlesnake. It tastes like smoked chicken. In fact, everything tastes like smoked chicken except smoked chicken, which tastes like fajita."

Weller is quick to add, however, that you shouldn't get the idea that "Home" is all household hints.

"It's so versatile that it's difficult to talk about," he said. "It's not like 'Oprah' or 'Donahue,' with one host and one topic each day. There are seven aspects of 'Home' each day. It can be hints, cooking, medicine, emotional help, home decoration, or a wide variety of things."

Weller, who is also co-anchor of the syndicated "Entertainment This Week," has been the host of "Home" since its debut last year. The show has a rotating system of co-hosts who appear with Weller.

In addition, "Home" also has a staff of experts on such topics as home decorating, arts and crafts, food, carpentry, leisure and recreation, money-saving tips, car repair, home repair, picking movies for children and human-interest stories.

"This is a research-driven show," said Weller. "Viewers contribute an enormous amount to the show. They make suggestions and tell us who they want to see on the show. We have a program that's not particularly high in the ratings but attracts a lot of women in the 18-49 age category. We get 35,000 requests a week for our newsletter, which costs $1."

Weller grew up in Tacoma, Wash., and attended the University of Washington. He was a yell leader at athletic events.

Lewis tries for comeback through movie

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — The drugs, booze, divorces and deaths may have softened the cockiness just a bit, but pioneer rocker Jerry Lee Lewis still has plenty left as he tries for a recording comeback spurred by a new movie on his tumultuous life.

"I'm as good as I ever was, if not better," Lewis said about recent performances and his soundtrack for the movie "Great Balls of Fire," starring Dennis Quaid.

The soundtrack demonstrates that Lewis still knows how to rock 'n' roll, with remakes of such classics as "Whole Lotta Shakin' Goin' On" and "Great Balls of Fire."

As for the movie itself, Lewis said he enjoyed Quaid's acting but didn't give too many points to accuracy. "This is a movie, and it needs to be accepted as just a movie."

Initially, there was talk that Quaid, who has his own band, would perform at least some of the songs in the movie. Lewis had to audition to get the job.

"All the way on the plane he was saying, 'This is ridiculous. Jerry Lee auditioning for himself.' But he pulled it off great," said his former manager, Jerry Schilling.

Schilling is also creative projects manager for the Graceland Division of Elvis Presley Enterprises. He and Lewis parted this year after Lewis was quoted in print as calling Presley a dummy who wasted his talent.

"Jerry Lee says some things that can be very damaging. A lot of times, he's striking out at himself," Schilling said.

Lewis wants to record again — if he can do it his way.

With his pumpin' piano and wild stage antics, Lewis was at the top of the rock world in the late 1950s.

Presley, then the undisputed king of rock 'n' roll, had been drafted into the Army, and Lewis was regarded as a possible contender for Presley's crown. But his rocket to fame, launched by records cut at the old Sun Studio in Memphis, was deflected by a scandal over his marriage to 13-year-old cousin Myra Brown.

"It totally destroyed his career," said the former Mrs. Lewis, now Myra Williams. "He went from making $10,000 a night to $200 a night. That's starvation wages when you're trying to travel on the road and pay a band."

Lewis, then 22, was advised to keep the marriage quiet, but he insisted on showing off his young bride on a concert tour to England. Lewis knew the marriage would upset people, but he didn't care. The reaction, however, was stronger than expected. "It didn't quite go like I thought it was going to go," he said.

"Jerry has been headstrong all his life," Williams said. "You just couldn't tell him anything. You couldn't stop him from doing anything."

Now married to a real estate broker in Atlanta, Williams wrote the book on which the movie is based.

At 53, Lewis has been on the road all of his life, sometimes playing 200 or more dates a year. And though he's had long dry spells between records, and often found himself snarled by tangled finances and business squabbles, his stage show has kept its fire.

His recording career, which peaked in the 1950s, blossomed again in the late '70s with such country hits as "Middle-Age Crazy" and "I'm Gonna Find It Where I Can." He did well in the early '80s with "39 and Holding" and "Over the Rainbow," then took a break from recording to concentrate on live shows.

"I just got so tired and bogged down with that country style, slow-singing, beer-drinking type music. I just had to kind of get out of it," he said. "It's great music, don't get me wrong. But I like to rock 'n' roll."

Lewis has made hundreds of thousands of dollars over his career, but he likes his money in cash and has tastes that run to flashy jewelry and fancy cars rather than ledger books. He filed for bankruptcy last year and hasn't had a hit record in quite a while. He told the bankruptcy court he will make about $200,000 from "Great Balls of Fire."

Jerry Lee Lewis entertains at a party held at the Hotel Peabody in Memphis for the opening of the movie "Great Balls of Fire," starring Dennis Quaid.

Dogged by the Internal Revenue Service, he's had trouble getting concert dates. The worst may be over, thanks to the movie and to efforts begun in 1987 to clean up his image with promoters.

Lewis recently completed a three-week stint in Las Vegas and headlined two large concerts in California and Colorado. But those jobs would have been closed to him two years ago.

"I tried to get him in Las Vegas for six months, and they literally laughed at me," Schilling said. "Evidently, there was some bad past history with Jerry Lee in Vegas."

Bad history has always been with Lewis, and he hasn't been bashful about letting people know that he acts how he likes, when he likes.

"Jerry Lee is a rebel. He's not some namby-pamby," said his sister, Linda Gail Stefanow. "I think he's a lot more of a hero than people realize. He wouldn't be Jerry Lee Lewis if he had lived his life differently."

Lewis, the first cousin and boyhood companion of TV evangelist Jimmy Swaggart, quit school at 16 and briefly tried preaching and selling sewing machines before focusing on rock 'n' roll.

He has had six wives. His fourth wife, Jaren, drowned in a swimming pool in 1982 while suing for divorce; his fifth wife, Shawn, 23 years his junior, died of an apparent drug overdose in 1983. Within a year, Lewis married his sixth wife, Kerrie, 21, who filed for divorce in 1986, accusing him of roughing her up and infidelity. Lewis countersued, but both petitions were dropped. The Lewises live with their 2-year-old son, Jerry Lee III, near Nesbit, Miss.

Lewis has bounced in and out of courtrooms throughout his life, suing or being sued over busted concert dates, troubled romances and other entanglements.

He also has a history of alcohol and drug abuse, and in 1986, according to a former road manager, checked himself out of a detox program because he didn't like making his own bed.

In 1976, Lewis was detained by police after ramming his Lincoln Continental into the front gates of Presley's Memphis residence, Graceland, while armed with a .38-caliber pistol. Admitting he had been drinking heavily, Lewis told police he was called to Graceland because Presley was depressed and wanted to talk.

Presley never commented publicly on the gate-ramming escapade, but Shilling, who was a member of Presley's entourage for 11 years, said the two performers were never close friends.

"You don't call Jerry Lee if you're depressed," Schilling said.

The son of a one-time bootlegger, Lewis was born in Ferriday, La., and taught himself to play the piano as a child. His early plans were to become a piano-playing preacher, and he gave a brief try at attending a fundamentalist bible college in Texas following his first marriage, at age 16.

Lewis' third marriage, to Myra, set off cries from parents across the country that it was irrefutable evidence of the dangers of rock 'n' roll. But marrying young was nothing new to Lewis' family. His sister Frankie Lee married at 12, and Gail, who has been married seven times, first wed at 14.

"I think we're oversexed," said Gail Stefanow, who toured as a backup singer with her brother for 15 years.

Spike Lee proves himself again with 'Do the Right Thing'

By BOB THOMAS

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Filmmaker Spike Lee is looking for the day when he no longer has to sell himself to the movie industry like some new kid on the block.

"Each time out is another struggle, another battle, another war," he said. "I don't think it should be like that, but each time I have to prove myself again."

So far, Lee is winning the war. His second movie, "She's Gotta Have It," won him the Cannes Film Festival prize for best new director. His third, "School Daze," was Columbia Pictures' biggest moneymaker of 1988, grossing $14.5 million.

Lee's first film was "Joe's Bed-Stuy Barbershop: We Cut Heads" in 1982. It was his thesis work at New York University Film School, and won the student Academy Award from the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

The latest movie from Lee's 40 Acres and a Mule Filmworks is "Do the Right Thing," which went into release Friday with rave reviews and a warm reception at Cannes where it lost the festival prize to the American film "Sex, Lies and Videotape."

"Even though we were robbed and didn't win any awards, we had a great time," Lee said. "It was a positive experience.

"It was a test of the power of the film that the French audience would get it through subtitles. Some of the slang couldn't be translated. But the overall message about racism and how we've got to live together hit home.

"Racism is not just an American thing. It's all over the world."

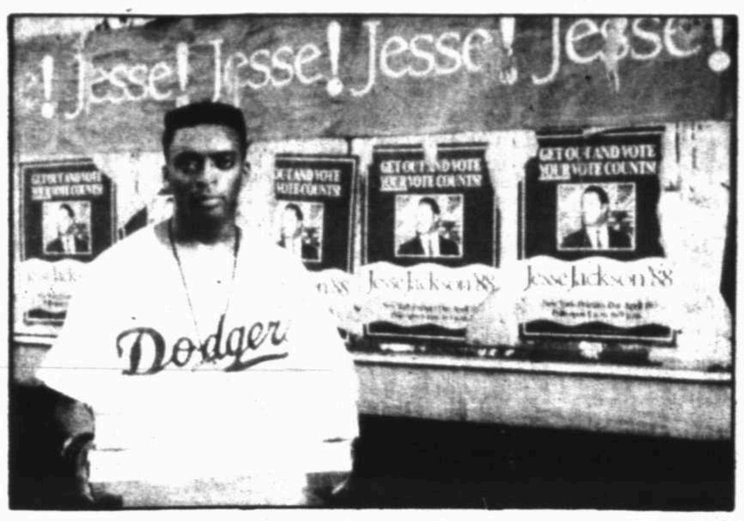
"Do the Right Thing" takes place during a sweltering summer in and around Sal's Famous Pizza, run by an Italian (Danny Aiello) in a lower-middle-class neighborhood in the predominantly black Bedford-Stuyvesant section of Brooklyn. Tensions of family, race, friendship and love run high.

Tensions between Sal's hothead and racist son, Vito, and an angry black, Radio Raheem, lead to the Raheem's murder by police and the destruction of the pizza parlor.

The theme for the movie's title comes from a speech made by the late black activist Malcolm X in December 1964: "Racism is a human problem and a crime that is absolutely so ghastly that a person who is fighting racism is well within his rights to fight against it by any means necessary until it is eliminated."

The 32-year-old Lee has been touching nerves ever since his first major film, "She's Gotta Have It," which chronicled the life and times of a sexually independent and liberated young woman. It made a lot of men — and some women — mad.

"That was the hardest film I've done," says Lee, who wrote, directed and co-starred in the off-beat movie as a manic, bike-riding suitor. "It cost $175,000, and it almost killed us to get it." Besides the Cannes festival prize, the film also earned Lee the Los Angeles Film Critics' new generation award.



AP Laserphoto

Controversy-minded filmmaker Spike Lee, in character, delivers pizza during a scene from his latest venture, "Do The Right Thing," a Universal Pictures' release centered around an Italian pizza parlor in a black Brooklyn neighborhood.

Using his student Oscar as a credential, Lee had tried to make a movie about bicycle messengers but ran into the barriers of financing and distribution. But Lee had a vision and the tenacity to follow it.

"I knew that Steven Spielberg wasn't calling me, George Lucas wasn't calling my house, or any of the studios," he said. "If I was to become a filmmaker, I would have to do it myself. Once I showed my talent, it'd be out there. The first step I had to take myself."

"She's Gotta Have It" grossed $8 million for Island Pictures, impressing David Puttnam, then head of Columbia Pictures. He commissioned "School Daze," a musical satire of fraternity life at a black campus.

"That was an easy sell," Lee said. But the $6.5 million movie got caught in the crossfire of corporate politics. Puttnam was ousted as Columbia's boss and new leadership gave the movie little promotion.

"To be honest, I really carried that film on my back. I was doing Michael Jordan work," Lee said, referring to the star player of the Chicago Bulls.

With a chilly reception from Columbia, he took his third film to Paramount Pictures. The relationship was pleasant until the studio wanted "a more Walt Disneyesque type of 'We Are the World' ending," Lee said. "I would rather had shot my own self first."

Universal gave him a go-ahead.

Born in Atlanta, Lee was raised in Brooklyn by a jazz musician father (bassist Bill Lee writes his son's film scores) and a mother who taught art. He attended Morehouse College as an undergraduate, and then went to NYU.

Lee is confident that "Do the Right Thing" will repeat his previous successes: "With the movies that are coming out this summer, I think there is definite space for our film. People are going to see 'Ghostbusters,' they've already seen 'Indiana' and they're looking forward, myself included, to 'Batman.' We have the most important, the most widely discussed and hotly debated film."

Like most lovers of the cinema, he's critical of the quality of Hollywood movies.

"It's the same old, tired, Hollywood formulaic school of filmmaking," he said. "They have no respect for the audience's intelligence. In the first 10 minutes you can always tell where the film is going, every step of the way. I just don't understand it.

"In my film, there are no heroes. We don't put any white hats or black hats on anybody. We're always two steps ahead of the audience, so they can't anticipate what's going to happen."

Lee's movies have centered on aspects of black culture, but he sees himself making many kinds of films.

"The first two were predominately black films because that's where they took place. 'Do the Right Thing' is about racism and New York City. Because of the many ethnic groups that live there, it could not be only a black cast."

Lee has appeared in his three theatrical films, but not necessarily because of his own choosing.

"I really do not enjoy acting," he said. "I do not consider myself an actor. By being in my films, it makes it easier to get them made. When I negotiate with a studio, there are three things they ask: 'What's it about?' 'What does it cost?' and, 'Spike, are you in it?'

"If I'm not in it, I would not be able to play hard in the game of negotiation."

Bedford-Stuyvesant resident recalls movie-making magic

NEW YORK (AP) — A grim abandoned building now stands on Stuyvesant Avenue, the defining boulevard of Brooklyn's historic Bedford-Stuyvesant, where Sal's Famous Pizzeria squeezed racial tensions to a tragic head in Spike Lee's explosive new movie, "Do the Right Thing."

The Korean grocery that faced Sal's across the street is also gone, removed from the lot of Constance Newkirk, one of the neighborhood's senior residents.

She stood before her home on the corner of Quincy Street and Stuyvesant Avenue one recent sunny day, reminiscing about the brief upheaval last May when the celebrated filmmaker and his crew invaded the area with its movie magic.

"I got to know quite a few of them," Newkirk said. "I wanted to know what was going on. I met Spike and the fellows that were building. They had to take measurements for my house, corners, windows and everything.

"They built the pizza parlor across the street. They had all the equipment, anything you would need to make pizza. They came in big trucks, brand new ovens, ice machines, soda fountains, Tiffany lights, pictures, the whole works."

Lee, whose award-winning thesis work for New York University Film School also took place in Bedford-Stuyvesant, chose one of the nation's oldest black communities as the location for "Do the Right Thing."

The action takes place during a sweltering summer in and around Sal's Famous Pizza, run by an Italian (Danny Aiello) in a lower-middle-class section of Brooklyn's largely black Bedford-Stuyvesant. Tensions of family, race, friendship and love run high. Tensions between Sal's hothead and racist son, Vito, and an angry black, Radio Raheem, lead to the Raheem's murder by police and the destruction of the pizza parlor.

Bedford-Stuyvesant's reputation has fallen on bad times in recent years, but in fact, this most populous of urban black communities contains some of New York City's most ornate brownstones, some of them designated landmarks.

Many of the dwellings have been owned by middle-class black families for generations. And affluent black professionals live close to some of the city's toughest blocks.

Newkirk has seen her neighborhood change dramatically, remembering the lush trees that once lined the block and the lovely gaslights that turned on at dusk. But hard economic times and drugs have affected her community; a crack house on the block was closed before production on the film started.

Still, Newkirk, who has lived in the same house for more than 50 years, can not recall any incident like the race riot that comes at the end of "Do the Right Thing."

"It's a peaceful neighborhood, definitely, considering with the crack and everything," she said. "On the whole, this place is pretty quiet — no robberies or shootings. We have very little trouble."

During all the years Newkirk has lived on Stuyvesant Avenue, Edward Alexis Connors has been her neighbor. He proudly described Newkirk's home as a local landmark, built more than a century ago, and agreed that the block is a peaceful one, with little trouble from kids or police.

> "It's a peaceful neighborhood, definitely, considering with the crack and everything. On the whole, this place is pretty quiet — no robberies or shootings. We have very little trouble."
> — Constance Newkirk, neighborhood resident

"We make it peaceful," Connors said. "We don't turn the other cheek. We had some static but we handled it. We have a good police force and an excellent fire force."

The nearest pizzeria, C&M Pizza, is a few blocks away on Broadway, a heavily commercial street. Matt, the store's owner for 12 years, is a Hispanic who has never experienced the troubles with local black kids as Sal did in "Do the Right Thing."

In the movie, a black nationalist named Buggin Out (Giancarlo Esposito) incites a violent confrontation when he demands that Sal include famous blacks on his "wall of fame" instead of the Italian-Americans whose photographs paper the wall. Sal refuses, insisting that it's his pizzeria and he's Italian.

"You get a hard time any place you go, but I've had no racial problems," said Matt, who asked that his last name not be used.

"You get crack dealers, but who doesn't? I don't allow that in here. They go out in the street."

Jo Rob Turner, 31, and Justice Carter, 29, have lived in Bedford-Stuyvesant most of their lives. They sipped Cokes and talked about their neighborhood while sitting at a table at C&M.

"Blacks, Puerto Ricans and Orientals hang out together," Turner said. "There are a lot of interracial couples, more than in the '60s and the '70s.

"White folks come here without being bothered. You notice? It's not something that happens every single day, but ain't you walkin' lovely?"

"The media makes it more extreme," Carter said. "Everybody seems OK. You don't see that much racial stuff as before. Everybody's trying to get along. There's been a lot of acceptance of minorities."

The neighborhood in Lee's movie consists of blacks, Hispanics, Italians, Koreans and a white bike-riding "urban pioneer" played by John Savage.

Carter and Turner agreed that crack is Bedford-Stuyvesant's greatest problem.

"Crack has altered lives in phenomenal ways," Turner said. "That is the worst, baddest drug that ever hit the market. I've seen kids, 11 or 12 years old, eating out of vials of crack."

"The first time you take that puff, you're off to a race," said Carter, who talked of the absence of drugs in the movie. "The story was about racism, and that was going to sell."

Turner said "Do the Right Thing" could help outsiders understand life in Bedford-Stuyvesant, but quickly added that a film can never replace first-hand knowledge.

"That's a blessing and a curse," he said. "A blessing because some of the things that we've encountered, we can't believe we actually got through it.

"But it also makes you blind to one side. There's book knowledge and street knowledge and you've got to walk the streets.

"You've got to want to know, and that's the only way to better understanding."

Like the weather, Angels are hot, hot, hot

Midland downs Wichita, 2-1, runs second-half record to 13-3

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Midland nipped Wichita and Andy Benes, 2-1, in the sauna that was Angel Stadium in Sunday's twilight game. And rookie outfielder Chris Graves could sleep soundly for his role in the win — but he probably didn't.

After the seventh inning, if Graves slept at all, he would have tossed all night with nightmares of the error that enabled the Wranglers to tie the game 1-1.

The Brenham, Texas, native who joined the Angels from Palm Springs at the Texas League first/second half break, tripled in the eighth and scored on Scott Cerny's sacrifice fly to go from goat to hero, but after that kind of ride from the doldrums to Cloud 9, who could sleep?

Graves was charged with an error on a pop up that fell two feet off the infield skin, waving off second baseman Scott Cerny, who was camped under the ball in the seventh inning. Graves never reached the ball.

It was a dreadful faux pas that enabled Tom LaVasseur to score on the two-out pop up to tie the score at 1-1 from second base. The horns looked like a perfect fit for Graves. You just don't give Benes that kind of break and expect to tell about it.

Graves never knew how close he was to the infield.

"I was playing close and I had it all the way, then the wind grabbed it and pulled it in, Graves said, reliving the horror. "I never heard Cerny calling for the ball."

The run came off David Graybill, who had relieved lefthander Frank DiMichele at the start of the seventh. DiMichele left the game with a three-hitter going and a 1-0 lead, thanks to a fifth inning single by Reed Peters and a double off the green monster in center, which came within a foot of going out, by catcher John Orton.

"I was down, but the team kept me up," said Graves, who led off the eighth. "I had heard how good he was and had been swinging at a lot of pitches." In his first three at bats Graves took just one ball.

"So I took the first pitch high and when he came in with the fast ball I swung."

The whistler would have been tough to corral in any case, but it took a high hop past first baseman Steve Hendricks and scooted down the line into the corner. With his 4.4 40-yard and 6.3 60-yard football speed, Graves wound up at third, none out.

Cerny then lifted a fly to short center. The run was far from home.

"(Charles) Hilleman was playing in and had the wind behind him. I knew it would be close," said Graves. It wasn't. The throw was off target and Graves' head-first dust storm at the plate really wasn't necessary.

When Graybill walked the lead off batter in the ninth, Jeff Richardson came out of the bullpen to get Bob Curnow on a fly to right. Then Hillemann's soft liner, labeled trouble, was snagged by a leaping Cerny at second and turned into a game ending double play.

So the Angels, with games left tonight and Tuesday at 7 p.m., made it four straight over the first half Texas League winners and increased their West Division to lead to six games.

They also squared their season's series with Benes, 8-4, who shut out the Angels in his first two starts against them. Benes, baseball's No. 1 draft pick a year ago, went the rout and pitched a five-hitter, but whiffed only six while throwing an 88 mph fastball.

Most of the Angels agreed, he wasn't the Benes they had seen earlier.

Fittipaldi races to another crown

By MIKE HARRIS

CLEVELAND (AP) — Emerson Fittipaldi has seemingly turned back the clock.

Seventeen years ago, at age 25, the Brazilian was dazzling the Formula One circuit with his exploits, including five victories — three of them in a row — and the first of his two season driving championships.

Now 42, Fittipaldi is doing all his driving in North America and he is not going sedately into the twilight of his career.

"It's a very nice feeling to be where we are now," the smiling Fittipaldi said Sunday after winning the Cleveland Grand Prix, his third straight Indy-car victory and his fourth victory in five starts.

"This kind of thing has happened only once before, in 1972 when I was driving for Lotus and I won three straight Grand Prix's, too," Fittipaldi said.

The latest victory was a runaway as he beat second-place Mario Andretti to the finish line by 16.95 seconds even after slowing over the last 10 laps to conserve fuel.

It appeared the only driver who could seriously challenge Fittipaldi was pole-winner Michael Andretti, who led the first 26 laps. But Michael's hopes of victory ended when he and Mario, his father and teammate, banged together during a pit stop.

Michael was leaving his pit when Mario, the defending Cleveland champion, moved past him into his own pit. The younger driver hesitated momentarily and the two Lola-Chevrolets bumped together, with Michael's car sustaining a broken tierod in the steering mechanism.

"I guess we have some communications problem," Michael said. "It cost us the chance for the win. After that, the car was good enough for me to fight for third place, but it was not a winning car."

Later, it was not a running car as electrical problems forced the younger Andretti out of the race after 61 laps.

Chang's game looking good

Wimbledon

By BARRY LORGE
Copley News Service

LONDON — Even before he won last month's French Open at age 17 and became an instant international celebrity, Michael Chang had an invitation to play in a pro-celebrity tournament next weekend in Monte Carlo with Princess Caroline and the royal family of Monaco. He probably will make it, but now that he is into the second week of Wimbledon, who knows? Maybe, just maybe, he will be playing on Centre Court of the All England Lawn Tennis & Croquet Club, hobnobbing instead with the royal family of Britain.

Monday, in the round of 16, Chang plays Tim Mayotte, who has been a Wimbledon semifinalist once and quarterfinalist four other times. If he were to win that match, Chang probably would face another serve-and-volleyer, defending champion Stefan Edberg, whom Chang beat in the five-set French final.

What seemed only days ago like another impossible dream is at least imaginable now, if still implausible.

Pancho Segura, the shrewd old pro at La Costa who worked with Chang when he was a promising junior growing up near the Carlsbad, Calif., resort, doesn't buy the conventional wisdom — that the kid's quicksilver game lacks the punishing serve-and-volley power to adjust to fast Wimbledon grass the way it did to the slow Parisian clay that was almost equally foreign.

"Grass is obviously not his best surface, but I think he is the type of long shot who could win Wimbledon," predicted Segura. "If he can win three or four matches, watch him. He has the concentration of a champion. If he thinks he can beat you, he'll beat you — on grass or anything.

"He is so quick, so shifty, with such good fundamentals and balance, he can adapt to any surface. And mentally, he is so strong, he doesn't care where he is. He can be in California or Hong Kong or at Wimbledon, the only thing he knows is the score, where he's hitting the ball from, and what the strengths and weaknesses of his opponent are. That's a champion."

Chang may be the quickest player since Bjorn Borg, who was bred a clay-court baseliner but developed the attacking game to win Wimbledon five years running. He also has an intuitive grasp of tactics to beat a particular opponent and cold-blooded concentration on court reminiscent of the great Swede.

The way the 5-foot-8, 135-pound Chang got aggressive after losing the first set to Haitian Ronald Agenor on Friday and to 6-foot-5½-inch Dutchman Michiel Schapers on Saturday belied his lack of grass-court experience. He lost in the second round last year, and has only played or practiced on the game's vanishing original surface about four weeks in his life, but he makes up in brains and hustle what he lacks in upper-body brawn and muscle.

"He just has to go and do what his instincts tell him," said Joe Chang, who taught his son tennis and remains his trusted tutor.

Joe, who works as a chemist in Orange County, Calif., flew overnight Thursday and arrived at the All England Club in time to catch the last four games of Michael's victory over Agenor, which he turned around by rushing the net. Saturday, the calm, controlled chemist and his cool, composed son were both at times uncharacteristically demonstrative as Michael's instincts carried him to a 4-6, 6-3, 7-5, 7-5 triumph that was as uneven as the chill breeze that swirled around Court 1.

Moody wins second major

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.
New York Times News Service

LIGONIER, Pa. — Orville Moody, who has made the long-shafted putter and the pendulum swing his instruments for success, won the 10th annual U.S. Senior Open Sunday as the USGA was thinking about outlawing that putter or the pendulum swing.

Orville Moody

But the U.S. Golf Association, which conducts the Senior Open, could do nothing to prevent the man they call "Sarge" from rolling in putt after putt with the big weapon at Laurel Valley Golf Club as he won the most important golf title for men 50 years old and over by two shots over Frank Beard.

Referring to possible outlawing of the long putter, Moody said, "I'm not going to worry about it until they do."

Then he was asked, if the USGA did bar that putter, would that bring him back to the field. Moddy said, "I imagine it would put me at the back end of the field."

The 55-year-old Moody became the fourth man to win both the U.S. Open championship and the Senior Open as he shot two-under-par 70 for nine-under 279.

Arnold Palmer, Gary Player and Doug Sanders are the others who have won both Opens.

Moody won the 1969 U.S. Open title for his only victory when he played the young man's regular PGA Tour.

Beard, who has been a Senior Tour pro only since his 50th birthday last May 1, carded par 72 Sunday to finish as runner-up.

It was strictly a two-man race, almost match play, throughout this final round as no other player in the field made any move to threaten Moody or Beard.

Dale Douglass, winner of the 1986 Senior Open, finished in a tie with the newest member of the senior tour, Jim Dent, as they ended up five shots behind Moody.

Player, who won the last two Senior Opens, was never in the fight from the start and ended tied for ninth at 287.

Palmer, who was the host of this tournament at Laurel Valley, never came close to a par round and finished with 312.

OSU to name new coach today

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Randy Ayers will become the first black head basketball coach in Ohio State University history when he is named today to succeed Gary Williams, according to a published report.

Ayers, who served as an assistant under Williams, will become the Buckeye's 11th coach and only the fourth black head basketball coach in Big Ten Conference history, according to reports in today's editions of The Columbus Dispatch.

Williams resigned in June to become the head basketball coach at Maryland, his alma mater.

Athletic Director Jim Jones said this morning there likely would be an announcement in mid-afternoon, but he would not confirm the selection of Ayers.

"I've not put in any candidates or taken any out," Jones said.

Throughout the search and interviewing, Jones has maintained a policy of not commenting publicly on any candidate.

The Dispatch reported that a source close to the three-week search said Ayers, 33, a graduate of Miami of Ohio University, was chosen over Arkansas coach Nolan Richardson and former Tennessee coach Don DeVoe.

Richardson announced Sunday he had withdrawn his name from consideration for the job. Richardson said he made his decision when he compared the comforts of Fayetteville, Ark., to the big city living that would come with a job in Columbus.

Richardson was one of the front-runners for the job after two other candidates — Jim Crews of Evansville and Lon Kruger of Kansas State — withdrew from contention Friday.

Richardson, who could have doubled his salary package at Arkansas by going with Ohio State's reported $500,000 deal, had said money was one of many factors to be considered.

McCumber wins Western

By JOE MOOSHIL

OAK BROOK, Ill. (AP) — Mark McCumber made a routine 4 on the first playoff hole today to win the $1 million Western Open when Peter Jacobsen missed a two-foot putt.

The sudden-death playoff was put over to today when darkness prevented a playoff Sunday after the tournament had been delayed 3½ hours because of rain.

McCumber earned the top prize of $180,000 and Jacobsen took second money of $108,000.

It was McCumber's seventh tour victory while Jacobsen took another bitter defeat in the Western. Last year Jacobsen led until the final hole when he took a double-bogey on No. 18 and lost to Jim Benepe by one shot.

Milwaukee's Robin Yount slams his 2,500th career hit, a two-run single Sunday in New York. Yount, who drove in five runs, was 3-for-4, including a home run, in the 10-2 Brewers' win.

Mitchell strikes again in Giants' victory

Associated Press

Kevin Mitchell not only keeps hitting home runs, he keeps hitting important ones.

"That's as big a home run as I've hit all year," Mitchell said after his two-run homer capped a three-run rally in the eighth inning Sunday and gave the San Francisco Giants a 4-3 victory over the Chicago Cubs.

"It was clutch," Mitchell said. "We really needed this win. Maybe this will be the spark that gets us going."

With the Giants trailing 3-1, pinch-hitter Greg Litton led off with a single off Rick Sutcliffe, 9-6. Litton was forced at second by Brett Butler, who advanced to third on a stolen base and catcher Damon Berryhill's throwing error.

One out later, Will Clark hit an RBI single and Mitchell hit Sutcliffe's next pitch over the fence in right.

"Sutcliffe was pitching me away all day," Mitchell said. "It surprised me because the wind was blowing that way. I knew I had a shot the moment I hit it."

Jeff Brantley, 2-0, pitched three innings of one-hit relief and Steve Bedrosian pitched a perfect ninth for his 12th save. Six of his saves have come for the Giants, who acquired him from Philadelphia two weeks ago.

NL Roundup

Padres 5, Cardinals 2

Bruce Hurst pitched his fourth complete game and triggered a four-run third inning with his second major-league hit. He entered the game 1-for-35.

Marvell Wynne helped San Diego take advantage of first baseman Pedro Guerrero's error by hitting a three-run double off Jose DeLeon, 8-8.

Expos 13, Astros 2

Bryn Smith drove in four of Montreal's season-high 13 runs with a three-run double in a six-run second and an RBI single in a four-run third. The Expos had 19 hits and led 10-0 after three innings.

Tom Foley had four hits and drove in three runs and Dave Martinez and Mike Fitzgerald had

Mets 7, Reds 2

Howard Johnson hit his 22nd home run and doubled twice as the Mets won for only the second time in six games.

Sid Fernandez, 6-2, allowed five hits in 7 2-3 innings to win his second straight start after five consecutive no-decisions. Don Aase finished with two-hit relief.

Dodgers 3, Pirates 2

Jose Gonzalez drove in all three runs with his first homer since Sept. 29, 1986, and a run-scoring double. On Saturday, his ninth-inning single beat the Pirates 1-0.

John Tudor, making his second start since off-season elbow surgery, left after three innings and 42 pitches because of shoulder soreness. John Wetteland, 2-0, allowed one run in three innings and Jay Howell, the fifth Dodgers pitcher, got two outs for his 15th save.

Braves 3, Phillies 1

Lonnie Smith raised his average to .336 with three hits and John Smoltz, 10-6, pitched a five-hitter for his fourth complete game, his third against the Phillies.

Viola, Twins get best of California

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

Must've seemed like old times at the Metrodome — Frank Viola and Bert Blyleven pitching well and the Minnesota Twins winning.

This time, though, it was Viola vs. Blyleven as the Twins beat the California Angels 2-1.

Viola, scheduled to pitch on Tuesday, asked Manager Tom Kelly to move him up so he could face his former teammate.

"Bert is a real close friend and to be able to go up against him is an honor," Viola said. "I learned a lot from him while he was here."

Blyleven, traded to the Angels in the off-season, said Viola, "showed how much it meant to him the way he wanted to ball on three days' rest. He pitched an outstanding game."

Blyleven, facing the Twins for the first time this season, pitched seven shutout innings and left with a slightly stiff shoulder.

Viola, 7-8, pitched a four-hitter. He struck out seven and did not walk a batter in his fifth complete game.

Viola's streak of 17 scoreless innings ended when Wally Joyner had an RBI grounder in the first. Viola retired 21 of the next 22 batters.

Blyleven gave up six hits, struck out five and walked one. Rich Monteleone, 2-1, took over to start the eighth and doubles by Al Newman and Kirby Puckett tied the score.

Bob McClure relieved and walked Kent Hrbek. Willie Fraser replaced McClure and Gary Gaetti's single scored the go-ahead run.

Athletics 11, Indians 3

Rickey Henderson opened the game with a home run, the 37th leadoff homer of his career, and Oakland went on to romp in Cleveland.

Dave Parker homered and drove in four runs and Jamie Quirk also homered as the Athletics got 15 hits. Henderson had three hits and scored three times as Oakland completed a three-game sweep.

Tigers 7, Orioles 3

Lou Whitaker hit a three-run homer and Detroit took advantage of an error to win at Baltimore.

The last-place Tigers won for the fourth time in six games. The Orioles, still leading the AL East by 5½ games, have lost six of nine.

With the score tied at 3 in the Tigers' sixth, Chet Lemon reached base on third baseman Craig Worthington's error and scored on Mike Heath's double. The Orioles have allowed just 12 unearned runs, the fewest in the majors.

Brewers 10, Yankees 2

Robin Yount reached the 2,500-hit mark, going 3-for-4 and driving in five runs to lead Milwaukee over New York.

Yount hit a solo homer in the fourth inning and added two-run singles in the fifth and sixth. The visiting Brewers ended a three-game losing streak and stopped the Yankees' three-game winning string.

Yount got to 2,500 hits at 33 years and 10 months. Ty Cobb, Rogers Hornsby, Hank Aaron and Mel Ott are the only younger players to get there.

Red Sox 4, Blue Jays 1

Danny Heep hit Boston's first pinch-homer in two years, a three-run drive in the 11th inning that lifted the Red Sox over Toronto for their season-high fourth straight victory.

Kevin Romine went 5-for-5, including a two-out single in the 11th. Rich Gedman followed with a single off David Wells, 2-4, and Heep homered against Tom Henke.

Heep hit his first home run since Aug. 17, 1986, with the New York Mets. The last pinch-hit home run by Boston came on June 1, 1987, by Mike Greenwell.

White Sox 7, Royals 3

Harold Baines homered, drove in four runs and moved into second place on Chicago's all-time RBI list in a victory over Kansas City.

Baines moved past Minnie Minoso and now trails only Luke Appling, who had 1,116 RBIs.

EMERSON

A similar pit incident last month at Milwaukee cost both Andrettis and Mario, also a former Formula One champion, said, "It looks like our timing is quite off. ... He was in front when he came in, but both here and Milwaukee, for some reason or another, there was a hesitation. It looked like he was going, then not going.

"We'll have to set up a policy. It's happened twice and it won't happen again."

Fittipaldi took the lead from Rick Mears in the pits on lap 27 and never again trailed in the 80-lap, 198.4-mile event at Burke Lakefront Airport.

The rough 2.48-mile, 12-turn circuit laid out on concrete runways and taxiways took a toll on the 28-car field, but Fittipaldi's Penske PC18-Chevrolet didn't miss a beat.

"I always compare motor racing to a Swiss watch," he said. "If a little piece is missing, the time is off. The Patrick Racing team's work is a Swiss watch.

"Between myself and our team engineer, Morris Nunn, there is very good communications. ... He understands what I am telling him at the track and what the car is doing and he keeps improving it.

"Jim McGee (the team manager) and the whole crew are working very hard and doing a very good job," Fittipaldi said. "In the last practice session (Saturday), I felt the engine was a little down on power. It was a new engine, but they trusted me and changed that engine. They worked until late at night and it paid off."

Fittipaldi built his season points lead over Mears to 107-80 after the seventh of 15 CART-PPG events.

ANGELS

"He's a little short on velocity," appraised Angel pitching coach Gary Ruby, "but he's still great. They just aren't scoring any runs for him. He was shutout in his last start."

ANGEL NOTES: Scott Lewis, 8-7, goes for Midland against Steve Loubier, 1-1, tonight ... With temperatures in the 112 degree vicinity, depending on the media source, GM Bill Davidson declared it "Heat Appreciation Night," with free admissions and from the eighth inning on, free liquid refreshment ... Gary DiSarcina saw his nine-game hitting streak end ... Dave Hollins had three hits for the Wranglers, but the big offensive gun for the Wranglers, showing what kind of a game it was, was shortstop Tom LaVasseur with four walks to go 0-for-0. TUESDAY, JULY 4, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Wait a while longer before making a final decision about a relationship. Expanded communications and travel will open important doors. You develop an interest in sports that surprises everyone who knows you. Your persistence and competitive spirit sends your stock soaring at school or work. Nothing seems to keep you down! Aim for the top.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: "Grand Old Flag" composer George M. Cohan, jazz great Louis Armstrong, President Calvin Coolidge, twin advice columnists "Dear Abby" and "Ann Landers," Astros manager Hal Lanier, movie mogul Louis B. Mayer, actress Eva Marie Saint, playwright Neil Simon, composer Stephen Foster.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): An excellent time to get better organized. Family members can be coaxed into helping. Avoid setting off fireworks. Enlarge your field of knowledge and finding a job will be much easier.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Some soul-searching will be good for both you and your relationships. Your willingness to stand up for someone's rights will be rewarded. A holiday picnic appeals to family members of all ages.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): An appropriate time for spiritual and patriotic pursuits. Depend on your own resources and you will get where you want to be. Children and a parade make this an especially exciting holiday.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your success could arouse jealousy. Take it in stride and you will emerge an even bigger winner. Try to squeeze in an afternoon nap if you will be out late tonight.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do not let someone's snide remarks get under your skin. Getting better organized will let you vacation with a clear conscience. Limit the number of hot dogs you eat at a picnic.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Celebrate this special holiday in a calm but joyous way. Gather your family and friends around you. You benefit from setting aside time for meditation. Carry travelers checks for emergencies while out of town.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Those seeking fresh inspiration are likely to find it at a family picnic or fireworks display. Love blooms when you open your heart. Forget past grievances with partner and plan for the future.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Free your mind by letting go of old doubts. Taking on new responsibilities will boost your income. Choose friends and partners who share or appreciate your artistic tastes. Joint endeavors will prosper.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may want to take a major gamble; be sure you have a definite plan. Stop worrying about financial security and enjoy your family today. You can get back to business tomorrow.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Someone shows you things that will change your beliefs. The strain of making an emotional adjustment will disappear sooner than you think. Celebrate the birth of Independence! Youngsters benefit from a history lesson.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): An age difference is not as critical to a relationship's success as being intellectual equals. Put work aside and devote this Fourth of July to family fun. Wear something red, white and blue.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be alert to new employment and romantic opportunities this week. Although travel may be an important part of your plan, partner may not be thrilled about it. Emphasize the long-term benefits involved.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K72 ♡KQ876 ◇QJ9 ♣63
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
1 NT	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—No number of hearts fits the bill. A rebid of two hearts shows a weaker hand with a six-card heart suit, while a jump to three hearts should show a good six-card suit with invitational values. The correct action is to invite game by bidding two no trump.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A8 ♡AQ1053 ◇AJ984 ♣5
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
1 ♠	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—While a bid of two diamonds, the fourth suit, would be forcing, it does not do this hand justice. Partner could easily have a three-card fit for one of the red suits, putting this hand in the slam zone. Jump to three diamonds.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠J10642 ♡Q9 ◇J843 ♣J7
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
3 ◇	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—A miserable collection has been improved somewhat by your holdings in partner's suits. While you might have passed initially, now you are forced to bid. Your most likely game is in hearts, so a false preference to three hearts gets the nod over a raise to four diamonds.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠73 ♡87 ◇KQ10952 ♣652
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Dbl	?

What action do you take?
A.—Here you have no problem—bid two diamonds, which does not show any great strength after the takeout double, but does promise a reasonable six-card suit. A more difficult poser would have arisen had East passed: Does your hand rate a 1 NT response followed by three diamonds should partner bid again? We think yes, but only just.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠83 ♡AK1062 ◇AQ63 ♣96
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	1 NT

What action do you take?
A.—You have a minimum opening bid with no fit for partner's suit. There is a textbook way to describe this hand after an overcall—pass.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AKJ93 ♡AKJ7 ◇K102 ♣6
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 NT	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—If there's a fit, you are in slam territory. However, don't bid any more than three hearts now—you might need the bidding room to investigate various possibilities. A jump to four hearts would promise a five-card suit in addition to extra values.

Hefner wedding cuts will air on cable

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Don't fret if you didn't get an invitation to the weekend wedding of Playboy publisher Hugh Hefner and Kimberley Conrad. Taped highlights will be shown this month on the cable Playboy Channel.

Hefner

Hefner, 63, and Miss Conrad, 26, 1988's Playmate of the Year, exchanged vows during an outdoor ceremony Saturday at the Playboy mansion.

The 30-minute, non-denominational ceremony took place in front of the wishing well where Hefner proposed to Miss Conrad. About 200 guests, including actors Bill Cosby and Tony Curtis, were on hand when Hefner tied the knot.

Hefner's brother, Keith, was the best man. Miss Conrad's sister, Resa Miller, served as matron of honor and her father, Robert, escorted her down a long, white carpet.

The guests included former playmate Shannon Tweed and her rock star husband, Gene Simmons, and actors Dick Van Patten, Robert Culp and Don Adams.

The newlyweds planned to honeymoon at the mansion. When asked how long, Ms. Turner said "probably a lifetime."

Hefner passed on holding the traditional bachelor party before the wedding, and Playboy spokesman Bill Farley quoted him as saying: "Bachelor party? I've had a bachelor party for 30 years, why do I need one now?"

The news media were not invited to the event. A half-hour of taped highlights of the wedding will be shown on the cable Playboy Channel's pay-per-view service July 15.

Hefner was married once before, for 10 years to Millie Williams, and they had two children — Christie, 36, and David, 34.

NEW YORK (AP) — Broadway producer Harold Prince, who unveils his production of Mozart's "Don Giovanni" this week, once preferred operas to Broadway musicals.

Prince

Prince, 61, said he's been going to the Metropolitan Opera since about 1936.

"My grandmother had box seats every other Tuesday," he said in an interview published Sunday in The New York Times. "The first thing I ever saw was 'Rigoletto,' and the abduction scene was done on casters. Even at the age of 6 or 7 I think I sensed that something was wrong there. But as far as opera itself was concerned, I was enthralled."

He also listened to the opera on Saturday afternoon radio broadcasts, setting up a stage with his tin soldiers as described by the announcer.

"Then while the opera played I would move the soldiers and nurses around — the women were always nurses, that's all they made — and act out the story," he said.

He kept up his attendance through the war years. "I like opera a lot. I didn't like Broadway muscials. Some people might say 'it shows.' "

Prince directed his first opera in 1976. His production of "Don Giovanni" opens the New York City Opera on Thursday night. He's scheduled to make his Met debut next years.

Prince won Tony awards in 1988 for his direction of the New York-production of "The Phantom of the Opera," and "The Pajama Game" in 1954, which he co-produced.

NEW YORK (AP) — People troubled by society's problems should stop complaining and start cooperating with those trying to overcome the woes, first lady Barbara Bush says.

"Today you can no longer say, 'The drug problem worries me' or 'Crime worries me' or 'Illiteracy worries me.' If it worries you, then you've got to do something about it," Mrs. Bush said in this week's Newsweek.

Americans must engage in volunteer work if the country is to solve the problems troubling it, Mrs. Bush said. The rewards for such work are immediately gratifying, she added.

"You see yourself feeding the hungry, nurturing the poor," she said.

The first lady suggested one other thing for improving the nation's quality of life: education.

"The truth is that having a more literate America will help almost everything," said Mrs. Bush.

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Director Franklin J. Schaffner, whose 1970 movie "Patton" won best picture and six other Oscars, has died. He was 69.

Schaffner

Schaffner, who during a four-decade career also directed such popular films as "Planet of the Apes" and "Papillon," died of cancer Sunday at his Santa Monica home.

He had just completed "Welcome Home" for Columbia Pictures, said publicist Michael Roth.

"Patton" star George C. Scott refused to accept the Oscar he won for best actor for his portrayal of the World War II Gen. George S. Patton, saying the awards demeaned the profession.

But Schaffner, who won best director for the movie, said, "I will gladly accept any honors from the academy."

Schaffner received 28 Academy Award nominations.

He also was producer and past president of the Directors Guild of America.

His television career included more than 150 live CBS plays for programs including "Studio One" and "Ford Theatre."

He won Emmy awards for directing in 1954, 1955 and 1962, and directed the first six episodes of "The Defenders," a television courtroom drama that began in 1961 and starred E.G. Marshall and Robert Reed.

Schaffner was born in Tokyo to Protestant missionaries. He was raised in Lancaster, Pa., and graduated from Franklin & Marshall College in Pennsylvania.

He had planned to study law, but joined the Navy during World War II, serving four years as a lieutenant.

As a news and public affairs director for CBS after the war, he covered events that ranged from Brooklyn Dodgers baseball games in 1948 to the national election conventions of 1948 and 1952.

He directed such TV series as "Person To Person" for Edward R. Murrow and Jacqueline Kennedy's "A Tour Of The White House."

Schaffner's first full-length film feature was "The Stripper," released in 1962 and starring Gypsy Rose Lee and Joanne Woodward.

His 1973 "Papillon" starred Steve McQueen and Dustin Hoffman; the 1968 science fiction film "Planet of the Apes," starred Charlton Heston and Roddy McDowall. He also directed "The Boys from Brazil," 1978, with Gregory Peck.

His other films included Gore Vidal's "The Best Man," 1964, starring Henry Fonda; "The War Lord," 1965; "The Double Man," 1968; "Nicholas And Alexandra," 1971; "Islands In The Stream," 1977; "Sphinx," 1981; "Yes, Giorgio," 1982; and "Lionheart," in 1987.

Texas CPA's endorse privitization

DALLAS (SWN) — CPAs across Texas believe in the concept of privatization, according to a recent survey in which 88 percent of the CPAs responding agree with privatization and expect its increased acceptance at all levels of government in the 1990s. An overwhelming 74 percent of respondents also think that privatization's primary strength would be its promotion of government efficiency.

Privatization is the practice of private companies providing services or facilities traditionally provided by government. According to the survey, prisons and jails would benefit the most and are the most likely to be privatized in the next 10 years. Solid waste collection/disposal, public housing, and mass transit services follow.

"Although government efficiency is the greatest benefit from privatization, using private companies also benefits taxpayers by saving them money and providing better service delivery," said Claude R. Wilson Jr., TSCPA president.

On the downside, over 40 percent of the responding CPAs cite the loss of accountability to the government and the public as a primary weakness of privatization, while more than one-third said corruption was another potential problem. Yet, nearly a quarter of the respondents saw no major drawbacks in the concept itself.

More than one-third of responding CPAs see contracting with a private firm to provide government services as the most effective form of privatization. However, before this concept can be pursued, several obstacles

Producers wary of volatile oil prices

DALLAS (AP) — U.S. oil producers are so wary of volatile prices that are taking a cautious approach to development, planning for the short-term based on available cash.

The decidedly conservative attitude can be good for a company, but not necessarily the nation, said members of The Dallas Morning News Energy Board during their semiannual meeting.

"We just have very little confidence," said Ron Haddock, president and chief executive officer of Dallas-based Petrofina Inc.

Domestic producers are unlikely to be encouraged to reverse the output slide despite the relative strength and stability in the oil market this year. The board, comprised of nine oil company chiefs and economists, said the unanticipated collapse of prices in 1986 followed by fluctuations in 1987 and 1988 taught hard lessons to producers.

"There is very little long-range planning being done in this country — and I really can't blame people who used to take risks for saying, 'We're not going to do it anymore,'" said Merle L. Borchelt, chairman and chief executive officer of Central and South West Corp.

In addition, independent oil companies have little faith in the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to keep prices down.

"The countries involved (in OPEC) will do what's best for their constituencies," said C.H. Moore, partner at KPMG Peat Marwick Main & Co. in Dallas. "There are just too many vested interests in the group ... and it will do nothing but put pressure on the U.S."

That pressure will create a largely cash-driven U.S. oil industry, said Charles Blackburn, chairman and chief executive officer of Maxus Energy Corp.

"For the bulk of producers, activity is a function of liquidity," Blackburn said.

Oil tankers register far-flung connections

N.Y. Times News Service

LONDON — The tanker that spilled oil into Narragansett Bay last month after hitting a reef off the Rhode Island coast was made in Greece, registered in Liberia, insured by a Bermuda-based group managed from London and owned by a Greek shipping magnate.

Such are the far-flung connections of the World Prodigy, according to Lloyd's Register and maritime insurers.

And the Greek tanker is typical of the international shipping industry, a freewheeling arena subject to national laws and supranational standards, but mainly governed by market forces.

The highly competitive shipping business is only recently showing signs of coming out of a deep 15-year recession. Shipowners scour the globe for the most efficient, lowest-cost method of operation.

The three oil spills in American waters during a 12-hour span that began June 23 have clearly heightened concerns about the safety standards of oil-carrying tankers.

The spills came just two months after the Exxon Valdez leaked 11 million gallons of crude oil off the Alaskan coast. One industry executive described the Alaska spill as "our Three Mile Island."

The recent rash of tanker mishaps underlines the environmental and economic risks of transporting huge quantities of crude oil on the high seas.

And the issue that will increasingly be examined by shippers and national governments is whether or not the current blend of market forces and regulatory oversight is sufficient to protect the environment.

The latest incidents will also strengthen the case of critics who have long argued that international shipowners have too often undermined maritime safety in the pursuit of cost-cutting shortcuts, ranging from keeping aging tanker fleets in service to registering ships in Liberia, Panama and other regulatory havens that permit unlimited use of low-cost labor from Third World nations.

To be sure, the three accidents appear to have been caused by lapses of individual ship captains, rather than by aged vessels or by companies known as slipshod operators.

The Greek tanker, built in 1986, hit a reef, spilling about 420,000 gallons of oil after going off course.

In Texas, a barge leaked about 250,000 gallons of oil when it collided with a cargo ship.

And a Uruguayan tanker, Presidente Rivera, spilled roughly 800,000 gallons of oil into the Delaware River after straying from its shipping lane and hitting a rock.

Moreover, industry analysts and environmental experts caution that it is important to keep the current accidents and the criticisms of the tanker industry in perspective.

From 1977 to 1988, there were an average of six to seven spills each year of more than 10,000 gallons of oil in American waters, according to World Information Systems, a pollution monitoring consultancy.

Over the same period, oil tankers shipped roughly 240 billion gallons of oil a year through American coastal waters.

Pickens not surprised by Japanese reception

DALLAS (AP) — T. Boone Pickens Jr., in an article he wrote for the Sunday edition of a Dallas newspaper, said he was not surprised at the cool reception Japanese businessmen gave him last week.

Koito Manufacturing Co. rejected an attempt by the Amarillo oilman to gain three seats on its board of directors. Pickens' Boone Co. is the largest shareholder in the Tokyo-based company with 20.2 percent of the manufacturer's stock.

Pickens

"I believe my experience symbolizes, in many ways, U.S.-Japanese trade relations on a much broader scale," Pickens wrote in a bylined front page article for the Dallas Times Herald.

"It certainly underscores that the U.S.-Japan trade relationship is not a two-way street."

Koito's second-largest shareholder, Toyota Motor Corp. — which is seen as the real power behind Koito — has placed three directors there.

Pickens wrote he went to Tokyo to press for shareholder rights and "was given a stiff arm."

The action didn't surprise him because the Koito board in April rejected his request for representation.

"The fact is that Japan Inc. does not want an outsider observing its system from the inside. And apparently it will do anything — even if it defies common sense — to prevent open access to Japan's financial markets," Pickens wrote.

The fact that Boone Co. acquired its stake from a well-known Japanese raider, Kitaro Watanabe, raised Koito's suspicion of Pickens. But Pickens said the company has no need for suspicion.

"Common sense dictates that Boone Co., Koito's largest shareholder, should also be entitled to three seats," he said in the Times Herald article. "But common sense is not having the upper hand in this whole affair — or, for that matter, in much of present-day corporate Japan."

He compared Japan's corporate climate to the point American business was at 100 years ago, the time of huge cartels.

"At the turn of the century, we began to break up those trusts and open our markets to everyone who wished to participate. The trust-busting unleashed America's entrepreneurs and proved to be a great boon to the country."

Pickens said he wonders whether Japan is ready for "the world economy of the 21st century."

He said the Japanese, despite success and high productivity, have a low standard of living. Free enterprise, with its promise of a higher standard of living, will demand changes in the company's corporate climate, Pickens said.

"While the Japanese people have done remarkably well in recent times, if they do not make serious attempts to open their closed economy, their continued economic prosperity will undoubtedly suffer — if not of stagnation from within, perhaps of retaliation from without," he said.

Friday oil prices finished mixed

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil futures prices finished mixed Friday in quiet dealings ahead of the July Fourth holiday.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, the contract for August delivery of West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark grade of U.S. crude oil, rose 1 cent to settle at $20.27 a barrel. The contract rose 23 cents on Thursday.

Among refined products, the July contract for wholesale unleaded gasoline lost 1.61 cents to close at 59.91 cents a gallon.

The July contract for wholesale home heating oil lost 0.10 cent to settle at 49.35 cents a gallon, but longer-term contracts gained some ground.

"There was very little activity," noted Bob Baker, senior energy analyst at Prudential-Bache Securities Inc.

He attributed the gain in gasoline prices to a "settling down" of fears sparked by consumer groups that predicted long lines and higher prices at the pump this summer.

Dollar lower in European trading

LONDON (AP) — The dollar was lower in busy European trading this morning, pulled down by local elections in Tokyo and expectations that the U.S. Federal Reserve will soon ease its monetary policy, currency dealers said.

Gold prices rose as much as $4.50 an ounce.

Dealers said the dollar was under heavy selling pressure due to profit-taking on reports Japan's governing Liberal Democratic Party suffered setbacks in Tokyo metropolitan elections and on expectations that the U.S. economy is slowing which could lead to lower U.S. interest rates.

They said that while results from the Tokyo elections were coming in as expected, many used the occasion to sell dollars and take profits.

"There's a lot of pressure on the Fed," added Manfred Totzauer, vice president at Citibank in Frankfurt. "They've got to ease if the American economy is weakening."

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $375.20 a troy ounce, compared with late Friday's $371.75. At midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $375.40.

In Zurich, the bid price was $375.50, up from $371.00 late Friday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose $1.73 to close at a bid $375.93.

Silver was quoted in London at a bid price of $5.21 a troy ounce, up from Friday's $5.14.

Stock prices final very slow week

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices closed out their worst week in more than 15 months with another loss Friday in selling blamed on spreading recession worries.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials slumped 18.21 to 2,440.06, stretching its loss for the week to 91.81 points.

That marked the biggest weekly drop for the average since it tumbled 108.42 points March 21-25, 1988.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 7 to 5 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 641 up, 900 down and 442 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 170.49 million shares, against 167.10 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 201.62 million shares.

The market has been under pressure since the government reported Wednesday that the index of leading economic indicators posted a larger-than-expected 1.2 percent decline in May.

More evidence of a dropoff in business activity came Friday morning with the news of a 2.5 percent drop in new factory orders in the same month.

Until recently, Wall Street has been welcoming news of slower growth in hopes of a "soft landing" that would allow for reduced inflation and lower interest rates without much harm to corporate profits.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

U.S. CORPORATIONS doing business in China express confidence in the country's long-term economic prospects, despite the violent suppression of protests. It remains unclear whether companies that do not already have Chinese operations will be willing to make in vestments in coming years.

SPAIN'S BANKS are preparing to survive the stiff competition that will follow the creation of a unified European market in 1992. The result has been a flurry of activity, including mergers, board shake-ups, corporate reorganizations, exchanges of shares with foreign banks and the expansion of domestic branches.

MINNETONKA'S BOARD agreed to sell the company to Chesebrough-Pond's, a unit of Unilever, for $376.2 million. The deal would unite three of the top "prestige fragrance" brands: Calvin Klein's Obsession and Eternity, and Elizabeth Taylor's Passion.

CARLTON COMMUNICATIONS has become a leader in the lucrative television-support business. The British company now supplies everything from stage props to sophisticated special-effects equipment. Its customers include Hollywood movie studios, TV networks, individual stations and advertisers.

THE TV NETWORKS have sold more commercial time in advance for next season than ever before. The gains were attributed to increased automobile advertising and renewed confidence in the medium's ability to sell.

COMPUTER NOTES

What to do with a big spreadsheet

In my office we have been using Lotus 1-2-3 version 2.1a on a couple of IBM PC-XT compatibles for some time. And our applications seem to continue to grow. The problem that we are encountering is that towards the end of the fiscal year some of our spreadsheets get so large that it takes them forever to recalculate. We really don't have the funds right now to upgrade to more high-powered equipment, but we need to do something. What can you suggest?

Sever

Being unfamiliar with your exact application I can only offer a few ideas; I'm going to assume that you use manual recalculation rather than automatic. If not then that change alone will produce seemingly miraculous increases in operator efficiency. Since your version of Lotus is more recent than 2.0, I recommend that you install 8087 math coprocessors in your PC-XT compatibles.

These chips are available for under $200.00 (for an 8088 or 8086 CPU) and can usually be installed in just a few minutes by a qualified technician. Your Lotus will recognize the chip immediately if it is properly installed and you should see significant perfomance increases particularly in large spreadsheets or spreadsheets with numerous algebraic or trigonometric formulas. Second, if the perfomance increase is less than you require, you might look at methods for reducing the number of calculations that must be done for every recalculation.

Remember that the spreadsheet recalculates every cell every time you recalculate. If some of these calculations can be transferred to other spreadsheets throughout the year, as in working on a three month spreadsheet with a balance foreward from the previous quarter, you can save yourself much pencil-twirling time. You can always merge the quarterly spreadsheets back into one giant if necessary, but working with smaller files is much easier and faster. Please be aware that not all software will recognize and use the 8087 automatically, and some software will not use it at all. Consult your software manuals for this information.

Will you explain what is meant by BACKGROUND PROCESSING?

You are aware that in many modern software applications the computer spends a great deal of time waiting. For instance no one that I know of can type as fast as a wordprocessing program can accept characters. BACKGROUND processing techniques have been developed over the years to allow computer users to make use of this wasted processor time. A good example of a BACKGROUND processing program is the PRINT command that comes with MS-DOS. The user can issue this command to PRINT a file and then while the file is being printed will be able to execute some other software. It should be noted that using the BACKGROUND will usually slowdown the FOREGROUND processing, but this is very often not a problem. There is a lot of software written to work in unattended mode, like the PRINT command, very often it will execute in the BACKGROUND.

We have recently upgraded our office system from a PC-AT running PC-DOS to a Compaq 386 running Unix System V. We have a huge investment in new software and we really like it, but we are having a lot of trouble remembering the utility commands and all the options that we want. Can you recommend something?

Were I you, I believe I would create a small directory of shell scripts that will perform the utilities that you want. A shell script is much the same as an MS-DOS or PC-DOS batch file. So with a good reference, a familiarity with the DOS commands you want to duplicate and some patience you should be able to create a small library of DOS commands. You will want to include the new directory in your path statement in your logon file (.profile). For example, the DOS command DIR /W could be duplicated with a shell script with the following line: ls -C After a while you will find the Unix system much more powerful than the DOS system. The difficulty that most people encounter when they migrate from DOS to Unix is that DOS is not case sensitive whereas Unix is. If you've overcome this problem you are well on your way with Unix.

Continental sparks new airline air fare war

HOUSTON (AP) — Continental Airlines sparked a price war with at least one other carrier with its announcement of a special $76 one-way fare designed to attract business after the July Fourth holiday.

Continental's fare, called the "Spirit of 76," is being offered on all of the carrier's flights in the mainland U.S. where seats are available for trips beginning Thursday, Friday or Saturday.

"Business travel will be light for the airline industry during the sale period because the Independence Day holiday falls near the middle of the week," a Continental spokesman said Sunday. "This sale permits travelers to obtain a terrific deal while allowing Continental to sell unused seat inventory during an off-peak period."

Houston-based Continental said bookings for Tuesday, Wednesday and next Sunday were "extremely good."

United Airlines spokesman Joseph Hopkins said Sunday that the Chicago-based carrier also is offering low-cost fares.

"United Airlines will match their fare in all markets where we compete with Continental Airlines," Hopkins said. "The only exception is where Continental competes with United Express." United Express is United's commuter partner.

Continental's sale fare requires no advance purchase, but it must be bought within 24 hours of the time the reservation is made. Travelers may return as early as next Sunday, or they can stay as long as they like.

Continental said that in most markets, the fare is the lowest offered in years.

For example, Continental's lowest, advance-purchase fare from Denver to Newark, N.J., currently is $149, compared to the new $76 fare. Other lowest, advance purchase one-way fares are $179 from Miami to San Francisco; $149 from Houston to Boston; and $169 from Seattle to Atlanta.

A family of four traveling round-trip between Boston and Los Angeles could save up to $744 compared with the lowest fares currently available. Continental's new fare would be $608 for the round trip, compared with $1,352 for the same travel on a regular discount tickets.

Tickets are nonrefundable, Continental said. The carrier estimated that more than 200,000 seats on its mainland U.S. system are available for trips beginning Thursday, Friday or Saturday.

Coal scrubbers reduce the emissions that cause acid rain

Coal-fired electric plants emit large amounts of sulfur dioxide – a key component of acid rain. An important device used to control these emissions is the flue gas desulfurization unit, commonly known as the "coal scrubber." After coal is burned, the exhaust is sprayed with neutralizing compounds, reducing emissions of damaging sulfur dioxide (SO_2). Scrubbers can remove as much as 90 percent of SO_2 emissions. About 100 of these large and highly complex units are in operation in the U.S.

HOW A COAL SCRUBBER WORKS

Coal is burned in the furnace (1) and the exhaust is pulled by fans through a precipitator (2) which removes fly ash. The damper moves the gases to the scrubber spray tower (3) where SO_2 is removed from the exhaust by chemical sprays. Clean gases then leave the stack (4).

Clean coal technology under way

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Two experimental generating systems being developed in coal country could be among the answers to President Bush's call for a 50-percent cut in sulfur dioxide emissions by the turn of the century.

The Tennessee Valley Authority is working on a process called Atmospheric Fluidized Bed Combustion, or AFBC, while the University of Tennessee Space Institute is focusing on technology called magnetohydrodynamics, MHD.

AFBC works by mixing limestone into the coal that is burned as fuel. The calcium in the limestone mixes with sulfur in the coal to form calcium sulfate, a heavier material that settles and can be drained off the bottom.

MHD burns finely ground coal at very high temperatures, adds a conductive agent to the resulting gas and passes it through a powerful magnetic field. The field produces an electric current, and the still-hot gas can be run through a conventional boiler to generate more power.

"In essence, you get more power out of the same pound of coal," said Joel Muehlhauser, director of the program, which has spent $68 million in Department of Energy money since 1977 and was given another $11.4 million through 1990.

While MHD is cleaner and more efficient than most conventional methods, it has drawbacks, including the stress on materials from the temperatures and the corrosiveness of the gas after a conductor has been added.

TVA ran a 20 megawatt pilot plant using AFBC from 1982 until last year, testing it for 20,000 hours. In October, it opened a commercial-scale generator at its Shawnee plant near Paducah, Ky.

It "is not quite as efficient as a conventional plant with no pollution control equipment on it," said Arnold Manaker, a TVA engineer. "It's like an automobile. They get more power without all the converters on them."

But it is cleaner. The pilot plant burns coal with 4 percent sulfur and has emissions equivalent to a regular plant using 1 percent sulfur coal, which costs nearly twice as much, he said.

Mexico counting on debt pact

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico wants to hold out for the maximum reduction in its towering foreign debt in talks with banks but at the same time needs an agreement soon to be able to promote economic growth and stability.

For Mexico, what is at stake in the negotiations under way in New York goes beyond how much the country can save in payments on its $107.4 billion foreign debt, the second highest in the developing world after Brazil's.

If banks balk at what Mexico considers a good agreement, the government's alternatives are to accept less favorable terms or suspend payments to try to force more concessions, something considered a last resort.

Mexico went into the talks seeking a 55 percent reduction in the prinicipal it owes commercial banks and has come down to 45 percent, sources close to the talks say. The committee representing more than 500 creditor banks has offered 22 percent and is moving toward 30 percent.

"It's not a matter of being able to pay, it's being able to grow," said Jonathan Heath of MACRO Asesoria Economica, a consulting firm.

The government wants to reduce the payments from 7 percent to 2 percent of the gross domestic product.

During the six years after the end of the oil boom in 1982, the country averaged virtually no economic growth. Workers' salaries buy only half as much as they did. Since he took office Dec. 1, President Carlos Salinas de Gortari has emphasized renegotiation of the foreign debt as an important part, but not the entire solution, to the economic crisis.

In a recent interview with executives and members of The Associated Press, Salinas said negotiations were going more slowly than he would have liked. He said they were likely to take weeks and perhaps even months more.

"There's not much time because the social demands are there. At the same time it's a very complicated negotiation," he said.

If Mexico reaches its goals on reduction of principal, fresh funds and other results of the negotiations, the nation hopes to save about $7 billion a year on interest and principal payments. Without an agreement, it would spend an estimated $16 billion this year.

More than as a source for financing projects, the government is counting on the agreement to stimulate the private investment needed to shake the economy out of stagnation. Its target is 6 percent growth by 1994.

To reduce capital flight during the prolonged negotiations, the government has held interest rates high. Even so, some analysts say, some money has trickled out.

When it became apparent that its July target for an agreement wouldn't be met, an 18-month-old anti-inflation agreement with labor, the private sector and farmers was renewed early to calm anxiety. It includes a continuation of the one-peso-a-day devaluation rate through March 1990.

A favorable agreement would help protect the currency against further devaluation, reduce the need for government borrowing and thereby free up the credit for others.

Eastern Airlines triples flights, adds 22 cities

MIAMI (AP) — Eastern Airlines nearly tripled its number of flights Sunday as part of its plan to come back as a leaner, more viable airline, a spokesman said.

Eastern increased its daily flights to 225 from 80, serving 49 cities instead of 27. The move was in line with a rebuilding plan the carrier has submitted to the bankruptcy court.

"Everything is going as planned — we're right on target to come back strong," said Eastern spokesman Robin Matell, who added that Sunday's schedule represents about 30 percent of what the rebuilt Eastern will become.

By December, Eastern plans to reach its goal of 800 flights a day serving 77 cities, Matell said.

The announcement provoked a demonstration by about 300 striking Eastern employees and supporters in San Francisco.

"The message we've put out is that Eastern is starting to fly again without its unions, trying to give the public the impression the strike is over," said Dennis Hitchcock, a spokesman for Local 1781 of International Association of Machinists, one of the three unions on strike against the airline.

Eastern operated 1,040 daily flights to 102 cities and had 30,000 employees before a massive strike of its machinists and pilots unions March 4.

Currently, Eastern is operating with about 8,000 employees, including 300 pilots who did not honor the strike and 150 new pilots who have been trained since recruiting began after the strike. Another 550 pilots are in training and a recruiting drive is still under way, Matell said.

Air Line Pilots Association spokesman L.D. Williams said Eastern's decision to increase its flights is unsafe because of the shortage of qualified pilots.

"They're not able to get enough qualified people to replace us and they're not going to be around for the amount of time it takes to do that," Williams said. "They have lowered their standards. They are desperate for pilots."

Matell said passenger traffic on the new flights introduced Sunday has been very strong.

"We've been offering comeback fares, real bargains, and the public has been gobbling them up," the spokesman said.

One-way prices start at $119 on the newly restored flight between Atlanta and San Francisco, $118 between Miami and Boston, $99 between Miami and New York La Guardia and $89 between Atlanta and New York. Those flights require a three-day advance purchase and are fully refundable, Matell said.

In Houston, meanwhile, Continental Airlines on Sunday announced $76 one-way fares on U.S. flights for three days following the Fourth of July holiday. United Airlines plans to match the offer, said United spokesman Joseph Hopkins.

Continental's fare will be offered on all mainland U.S. flights where seats are available for trips beginning Thursday, Friday or Saturday, said a spokesman for the airline, which is owned by Eastern's parent, Texas Air Corp.

Eastern has not yet decided whether to match Continental's $76 fare for the three-day period, Matell said.

TANKERS

"In spite of these spills, the tanker industry has done remarkably well over all in transporting oil in U.S. waters," said Richard Golob, president of World Information Systems in Cambridge, Mass.

"It is, after all, very much in the interest of the oil companies and the shippers to prevent oil spills. They hurt both the environment and the spiller."

The World Prodigy is part of the shipping empire controlled by Stavros Spyros Niarchos, according to Lloyd's Registry. Shipping veterans say the Niarchos ships have had an excellent reputation and safety record in the past.

"Niarchos is generally thought to be one of the better tanker operators," said one European ship captain, who asked not to be identified.

Still, there are steps the industry could take to make spills less likely or less damaging when they do occur.

But the big moves would be expensive, driving up the cost of imported oil, which could mean consumers would pay substantially higher prices for gasoline and fuel oil.

must be diminished, including resistance by public officials, unions, and public employees.

Responding CPAs expect local governments to be the primary users of privatization. The CPAs' average response projects local governments achieving an 11.3 percent privatization level by the year 2000 compared to states at 9.8 percent and federal sectors at 8.5 percent.

The survey also addressed other methods to improve financial management within the federal government. Respondents call for stiffer penalties for government employees and private contractors whjo misspend taxpayers' dollars; holding controllers of federal agencies responsible for the agency's financial management; and mandatory annually audited, comprehensive financial statements for government agencies.

"Although privatization is an appropriate solution for the problem of government inefficiency, it does not solve all governmental spending problems," said Wilson. "Two keys to management, efficiency and accountability, must be brought to government if we are to effectively address the situation."

The current CPA Poll measures responses of 600 members of the Texas Society of CPAs from a random sample.

Americans take to roads — on bikes

By JOE MAXWELL
Copley News Service

With the warmth of the season, the childlike urge to peddle a two-wheeler through the neighborhood may besiege you.

If so, give in.

Biking is capturing new converts all over.

Nationwide, there are more than 88 million Americans who ride bicycles, according to the Chicago Area Bicycle Dealers Associaton. And statistics from the Biking Federation of America show the number of adults who ride regularly has jumped more than 70 percent in the last five years.

As a source of recreation, biking provides great aerobic exercise with minimal jarring of the joints. As a source of mental escape, serious cycling junkies find little to compare to an encounter with the 12-speed bike.

Yes, 12-speed — and 18-speed. The old 10-speed bike model is an almost obsolete notion, though it is still possible to buy one along with a three-speed or single-gear bike, if you look hard enough.

Times have changed drastically — and for the better — in the biking industry over the last several years.

Gone are the days of the one-size, one-gear and one-make-fits-all contraptions such as the nostalgic Western Flyer.

Aspiring bikers now have a host of options from which to choose, with bike prices ranging from $100 in department stores to a whopping $4,000 for custom-made models.

THE INDUSTRY has grown, with several Japanese companies pressing the traditional European makers for a hefty hunk of the biking business. Several American companies, led by Trek and including Schwinn and Huffy, are racing to keep pace.

The industry is rapidly developing lighter, stronger frames and better shifting systems.

Already an assortment of aluminum and alloy frames is available, as well as a blend of materials called "chromolloy," which is also used in airplanes.

New component systems — which include a bike's brakes, derailleur system and shifting mechanism — are being developed by Shimano, Campagnolo and Sun Tour.

Index shifting, a recent development, helps the biker move from one gear to another with accuracy, removing the guesswork that has frustrated novice bikers for years. It can be purchased on bikes $250 and up.

Biking has also become a source of self-expression in the late '80s, with manufacturers producing colorful and sporty frames and clothing.

And while the tried-and-true racing and touring models remain popular, a new genre of bike developed in California in the '70s — the all-terrain bike — is competing for a hefty portion of total sales.

Compared to the more familiar racing and touring styles, ATBs are more comfortable.

Features such as wider tires and seats, upright handlebars and gears mounted just next to the thumbs for easy accessibility provide for a smooth ride. Unlike the racing or touring bikes, ATBs, as the name implies, are designed primarily for off-road use.

REGARDLESS OF the model chosen, a novice biker doesn't have to trade in his car to afford a new bike.

With the range of choices available, the key, says Pat Murphy, president of the CABDA, is to "buy the one that will fill your wants and needs.

"If five miles is going to be your limit for a quarter-hour ride after supper, there are bikes to fill that need."

Chain stores such as K mart and Sears offer basic touring and ATBs between $100 and $250. For the bi-weekly biker, prone to loop the block once on an outing, this may be all that is needed.

Drawbacks, however, are the bike's heavy steel frames and often inferior gear mechanisms — two of the most important features on a bike.

Unlike the newer alloy models, the heavier steel frames bend too much — and the more bend in the bike's frame, the more energy you expend peddling it. That means less enjoyment, and, without caution, could mean risking injury.

Looking for the right bike dealer is much like shopping for a car; it can amount to choosing a biking home. The dealer you buy from now will in the future become a source of advice, maintenance and supplies.

For those reasons, Murphy suggests thinking as carefully about whom to buy from as what you buy.

You should be comfortable with the dealer's personality, his selection and his ability to provide service and answer questions after the deal.

REGARDLESS OF where you buy your bike or what style you purchase, Murphy says one biking rule prevails: "This should be a treat and not a treatment."

That means making sure the bike fits properly.

When mounted on the bike, your legs should be almost fully extended on the pedals, with only a slight bend in the knee. Too much or too little bend can lead to knee problems.

The seat should be level, not tilted backward or forward, and set about 2 inches higher than the bike's front stem, which holds the handlebars in place.

The stem length should be adjusted to allow for a slight bend in the elbows when gripping the handlebars. This avoids back problems.

Fort Davis wins national award

From Staff Reports

Fort Davis National Historic Site was selected by a 31-member blue ribbon panel as one of 103 national winners in the 1988 Take Pride in America Awards. The honor was announced by Secretary of the Interior Manuel Lujan.

Members of the selection panel included Lujan, Secretary of Education Lauro Cavazos and Agriculture Secretary Clayton Youtter, and was chaired by First Lady Barbara Bush. The focus of the nomination was the recently completed Enlisted Men's Barracks restoration project.

Fort Davis National Historic Site competed with 190 finalist and was the only Federal Agency category winner. The national award ceremony is being planned for mid-summer in Washington, D.C.

The Take Pride in America Awards Program is sponsored by U.S. Department of Interior and recognizes individuals and public and private groups that conduct outstanding stewardship actions or awareness on behalf of public lands. The barracks restoration, co-sponsored by the Friends of Fort Davis, was largely paid for by donated funds and involved hundreds of individuals and groups volunteering hours toward the completion of the project.

"The Enlisted Men's barracks will always serve as a fine example of the exceptional efforts put forth by both the staff and the Friends of Fort Davis. The Take Pride in America award joins many of the other honors we have received this year to acknowledge those combined efforts," said Kevin G. Cheri, superintendent. "We are proud and happy to share this award with the community of Fort Davis and to all our many supporters."

Other winners from Texas included the Boating Trades Association of Texas from Austin, the Mobil Exploration and Producing U.S. Inc. of Dallas, the Brazos County 4-H Clubs of Bryan, Walter and Jo Oliver of Graham, and Elizabeth Warner of Waco.

Kitchen best place for toddler talk

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Adults have long enjoyed food and conversation, and now there's some evidence that the combination works well for children just learning to talk.

Lucia French, an early-learning expert at the University of Rochester, is studying the conversations of tiny talkers and has found that young children do some of their best conversing in the kitchen.

"Conversational skills are crucial to a child's later success in school and society," says French, an associate professor at the university's Graduate School of Education and Human Development.

After observing many conversations between young children in preschool settings, French and fellow researchers noticed that in all cases the longest and most complex conversations took place in the kitchen corner rather than in other play areas.

Even children who had not yet learned to talk had extensive nonverbal interactions in the kitchen corner, where they exchanged plates and mimed eating, she found.

"Often, their first words were an attempt to name imaginary food that they pretended was on the plate," she says, "or what they wanted to have on the plate. The 2½-year-olds used language to describe more complex kitchen activities such as preparing and serving pancakes."

The reason that kitchen settings stimulate conversation appears to be simple: Preparing and eating food is an activity familiar to every child, and the kitchen setting gives children something in common to talk about.

Dry pet food is hazardous to toddlers

New York Times News Service

Dry pet food can be a hazard when children are part of the household, particularly those at the toddler and crawling stage.

Nibbling on food left out for cats ar i dogs can cause penicillin poisoning.

Researchers at the University of Nebraska said that an 11-month-old girl whose mother said she had eaten dry cat food on at least 11 occasions probably died from the penicillin in the food.

A report in The American Journal of Cardiology noted that the penicillin level in the cat food was 600 times higher than federal limits for human food.

Keep children away from pet dishes, and put the food out only at feeding time.

Form strong bonds

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Researchers believe children who form strong bonds with their families during infancy will make more friends and be happier in adult life.

Encouraging an infant to express feelings improves the odds of growing up well adjusted. When the baby expresses feelings by smiling or crying, for example, your response gets results. Also, by your action, the infant can count on family members always being there when needed.

This communicating and participating in enduring relationships helps to build confidence in the infant and results in good social adjustment, says a Minnesota psychologist.

Normal childhood behavior can seem strange to parents

By JANE CLIFFORD
Copley News Service

CNS Graphic

There's an old saying — "The best child is a sleeping child."

It's not known whether that phrase was coined by a parent or some chic single in a restaurant sitting perilously close to a "diner-in-training," flinging rice in every direction.

But even adults who don't watch "Sesame Street" every morning do know what it's like to want to strangle a mouthy teen-ager, permanently remove the whining mechanism in a 5-year-old or construct a steel cage for an overactive toddler.

Dr. Paul Keith laughs at this litany of examples. He's medical director of the Child and Adolescent Center at Alvarado Parkway Institute in San Diego.

"This is all very normal behavior for children at the different developmental stages," he says.

Wonderful!

So, Dr. Keith, you're an expert on what makes children tick. Would you please remind us grownups what to expect year to year and how to handle it?

Like the sweet baby girl who's grown up to be a bossy 5-year-old, informing you: "I don't like broccoli, so make me some creamed corn or I won't eat dinner."

THE ADULT response, no doubt, would be a unanimous vote for starvation. After all, that would avoid her maturing into a silly 8-year-old whose antics in public make you wish there still were a vaudeville she could run away to. Or the 11-year-old daughter who's applying more makeup than you've ever worn. Or the son who just loved his bath as a baby and now considers "shower" the dirtiest word in the English language.

All of this is nothing, of course, compared to the "P word." It's hard to say what part of puberty is more fun — the sullen attitude or the funeral-parlor fashion statement and purple hair. Or maybe it's the looks that ooze embarrassment at the fact that you exist, or the alleged music cranked up loud enough for you to hear while the headphones are on his ears.

Keith is still laughing, still saying how all these behaviors are annoying but quite normal. You want to argue with him but he does have credibility — he has been through much of this with his own children.

OK, fine. So how does he handle it? Mostly, he says, by keeping his sense of humor and by being aware of the normal ways children act at different ages.

■ AGES 2 TO 3. The active, the inquisitive, the aggressive. They no longer see themselves as one in being with their parents, and their most recognizable behavior is the characteristic "No!"

"This is not defiance," Keith says. "They're saying, 'I want to do things on my own because I can.' Avoid confrontations (because you can't win), don't set too many limits, allow them to explore, help them satisfy their curiosity. Make the house safe for them (and for your things you don't want destroyed)."

■ AGES 4 TO 5. This period is distinguished by aggressiveness, nightmares and fears of burglars. What goes bump in the night is usually the child on the way to the parents' bedroom.

"Some of this is delaying tactics. Set limits. Tell the child you'll sit with him for a few minutes (in his bed). This reassures the child that he can handle things. If you let him into your bed, you're saying the fears are real."

■ AGES 6 TO 7. This is the age of "protective lying," trying to avoid the consequences of behavior. Parents worry that their children (who are lying to their faces about the broken crystal vase or the stolen candy bar) have no scruples.

"It's just the opposite. The kid has internalized the parents' values, knows he broke the rules and he feels bad. He lies because he doesn't want his parents disappointed. You know he lied. Don't berate him about it. Make him take the stolen item back to the store (or pay for what he broke). Don't humiliate him, but make him clear on the consequences of his behavior."

■ AGES 8 TO 10. They're concerned about rules and follow them.

"These are fairly quiet years with few problems — as long as the family is OK."

■ AGES 11 TO 12. Welcome to preadolescence. Now the "fun" begins. Girls are aware of their changing bodies. Boys are growing increasingly rowdy and a little difficult to discipline. Boys hate girls.

In a word, says Keith, "Relax." (You need to conserve your strength.)

■ AGES 13 TO 14. This is early adolescence (yes, that means there's a late adolescence in your future). More body changes and more preoccupation with those changes. It's the age of impaired judgment — acting on impulse, reaching for an adult role.

"Set limits," Keith says, "but don't get in battles you can't win. Be firm, be fair and, above all, be consistent (even when you're too tired and have the urge to give in). They need you as a boundary to push against. In the absence of it, they get frightened."

■ AGES 15 TO 16. More of the same but add sexual activity. Clothes are more of an issue. So is independence from parents. Whatever adults consider in, teens rule out.

The byword for parents is patience. And it helps to recall everything you've learned up to this point.

"The toughest job for parents is to be somewhat abused by their children," Keith says. His advice: There's safety in numbers. Find other parents in the same situation, with kids the same age.

That's what Keith did. The parents in his neighborhood all got together to discuss the rules of their individual households, the concerns about their kids. Then they came to a consensus on a variety of parenting issues and formed a loosely united front. The result is no one's kids can get away with much in any of the homes on their street.

Just before you decide to run away from home, your kids reach 17 or 18. Then, Keith says, "they begin to become decent people. They talk to you."

Communication all along the way is key, he believes, whether it's between parent and child or parent and parent (talking to yourself in despair doesn't count).

Be involved with your children, be available, be supportive — "and not just when it's convenient for your own schedule," he says.

One way to do that is to meet at mealtime. If the family sits down together at dinner, Keith says that's one of the best times for parents to hear what's happening in their children's lives and to help them sort out their difficulties.

And remember, there's a reward for parents who do all they can to make sure kids progress successfully through childhood: They grow up and go away.

Parents encourage children's reading habits for summer

CHICAGO (AP) — In June, kids see summer as grownups see Fridays — full of anticipation.

Yet, as Robert L. Baseman observes, summer can be too much of a good thing. Sun, fun and leisure lose their allure along about the third week of July.

No wonder, then, that librarians report a big increase in reading among children during July and August, says Baseman, president of the Britannica Learning Centers. This is a subsidiary of Encyclopaedia Britannica and teaches basic and advanced reading and other supplemental skills at learning centers across the country.

"The amount of time spent in leisure reading is distinctly related to children's reading comprehension, ability to spell and size of their vocabulary and overall reading ability," he says. "Summer reading not only can keep skills sharp but add to them."

Baseman offers suggestions to help parents enhance their young children's reading skills during summer doldrums.

■ Discuss the products you buy at the supermarket and ask your children to help find coupons for them in the newspaper. At the supermarket, give them part of your shopping list let them to find the items on the shelves. Also have them read to you instructions and labels on the packages.

■ Let children help plan family outings and vacations by looking through brochures and travel guides. They can also practice their reading on maps, roads and street signs — even on menus when you stop to eat.

■ Ask your child to find the movie pages of the newspaper by looking at the index. Then select a movie together and look for its playing schedule. Use the TV section of the newspaper or a TV guide to select programs for viewing.

■ Children enjoy receiving and writing letters. Summer is a good time for writing to relatives and establishing pen pals. If your child is very young, he could dictate messages or stories to you. The process of reading and writing is learned that way, too.

■ Write notes to your children regarding everyday events at home. They'll love it. For example, "Jason, please put the garbage cans back in the garage this afternoon," or "Marie, you did a great job cleaning up your room. Thanks. Mom." Encourage your children to write notes to you as well.

■ Hobbies and games, from airplane models and kites to sewing kits and ant farms, come with assembly and care instructions. Make your children responsible for reading and understanding them. Also have them read the directions for board games and ask them to explain the game to you.

■ Show your children how to follow the events of their favorite teams and players through reading the sports pages of newspapers.

DEAR ABBY

Fathers skip out on child support payments

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am writing on behalf of a large group of children who had no father to honor on Father's Day. Their fathers are not dead; they are "deadbeats" who make up the 2 million absent parents nationwide (95 percent of whom are fathers) who don't pay their child support.

The following statistics are appalling, and paint a picture of a social problem that has reached crisis proportions:

■ Fifty percent of fathers do not pay their child support — leaving $3.7 billion unpaid each year.

■ If the trend continues, over one out of four children born today will be a welfare recipient at some time before they reach the age of 18.

■ Affluent fathers are just as likely to not pay their court-ordered support as fathers earning less than $10,000 a year.

■ As an attorney, and the founder of the Center for Enforcement of Family Support, I've seen the effect that non-payment has on children. Tragically, non-payment is all too often accompanied by a breakdown in the father/child relationship. — DENNIS A. COHEN, LOS ANGELES

DEAR MR. COHEN: You have made an important contribution to this column. On behalf of more than 2 million children whose fathers have failed them (financially), thank you for writing.

DEAR ABBY: Since my husband and I divorced five years ago, legal debts and other expenses have kept me on the brink of bankruptcy.

Six months ago, I took a new job as a secretary, and I need to know what I can say to my co-workers when they invite me to join them for lunch at nearby restaurants. I've already told them that it is only rarely (once a month at the most) that I can afford to eat out. I've had to explain my circumstances because they know approximately what my salary is, and they can't understand why I can't afford expensive lunches. I am tired of having to trot out these circumstances, and I don't want them taking pity on me and "treating" me when I know I can't reciprocate. If I merely say I'm having financial problems, they may think I don't know how to handle money.

The same thing happened on my last job, and I ended up being the "office poor person." People don't understand why I'm driving a 21-year-old car. They don't understand why I don't go to the doctor when I should, or why I live in the neighborhood I live in, and so on.

I like all my co-workers and hate to cut them off when they ask questions. I don't want them to think I have something to hide, or that I don't trust them enough to be open with them.

Please tell me how to handle this. — THE OFFICE POOR PERSON

DEAR O.P.P.: Since you've already told your co-workers that you can't afford to lunch with them daily, it's not necessary to explain further.

As for "explaining" why you are driving a 21-year-old car and aren't going to the doctor when you should, it's no concern of theirs, so don't beat yourself up trying to justify it.

If they continue to invite you to join them for lunch daily, hold your head high, and respond with a firm but friendly, "Not today, thank you — perhaps another time."

CONFIDENTIAL TO R.H. IN BOZEMAN, MONT.: Don't ever ask anyone to buy you a present. It's usually much cheaper to buy it yourself.

Most teen-agers do not know the facts about drugs, AIDS, how to prevent unwanted pregnancy and how to handle the pain of growing up. It's all in Abby's new, updated, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send your name and address, clearly printed, plus check or money order for $3.50 ($4 in Canada) to: Dear Abby's Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. Postage and handling are included.

Governing party of Japan suffers election setback

TOKYO (AP) — The governing Liberal Democrats, reeling from financial and sex scandals, suffered a setback in Tokyo elections viewed as a barometer for national elections later this month, official results showed today.

Of 128 seats in the Tokyo Metropolitan Assembly, the party won 43 seats, a loss of 20, in Sunday's vote and the Japan Socialist Party increased its representation from 12 to 29 seats, according to the Tokyo Board of Elections.

Also winning seats were seven independent candidates backed by the Socialists, the country's largest opposition party.

Opposition parties now hold a combined majority of 85 seats in the Tokyo assembly. In the outgoing 127-member assembly, they together held just one more seat than the Liberal Democrats.

The Komei (Clean Government) Party won 26 seats, the Japan Communist Party 14 seats, and the Democratic Socialist Party three seats. Four minor parties had one seat each, and independent candidates not backed by the Socialists captured two seats.

Prime Minister Sousuke Uno, plagued by allegations he has kept a number of paid mistresses, blamed an unpopular sales tax imposed April 1 for the Liberal Democrats' setback.

Uno, the party president, did not stump for Liberal Democrats at the request of the Tokyo branch of the party.

A senior governing party official in Tokyo, Shigeru Kasuya, told the NHK television network that the party's losses were partly due to skepticism about the Liberal Democrats' campaign promise to consider doing away with the tax.

He said Tokyo residents were suspicious of the party's "true intention."

Chief Cabinet Secretary Masajuro Shiokawa said voter "distrust in politics" led to the Liberal Democrats' losses, adding that the government will do its best to achieve political reforms and regain public confidence.

Japan Socialist Party chairwoman Takako Doi told NHK, "Our party's gains are a result of anger against the current political situation."

Prominent in the opposition's campaign were criticisms of the Liberal Democrats for the new 3 percent tax, the broad Recruit influence-peddling scandal, and Uno's alleged extramarital affairs.

News reports have cast doubt on whether Uno, premier for only one month, will be in office by July 14 for the Paris summit of industrial nations.

Ruling party keeps mayor's seat in Juarez

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) — The ruling party appeared today to have retained the mayor's seat of this border city of 1.2 million in an election that the main opposition party says was ruined by fraud.

With 367 of 398 precincts counted, Jesus "Chuy" Macias of the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party, or PRI, was leading Hector Mejia of the National Action Party, or PAN, 65,827 votes to 51,733.

Neither mayoral candidate made a public appearance Sunday night, and turnout seemed light — an estimated 20 percent of approximately 400,000 registered voters.

"These were tranquil elections," said Arturo Mendariz, a member of the PRI leadership committee in Chihuahua state. "This was an open and clear process."

But PAN spokesman Jesus Hernandez bitterly accused the ruling party of committing vote fraud.

No. 88-034911, 295th JUDICIAL DISTRICT COURT OF HARRIS COUNTY, TEXAS

NOTICE OF PENDENCY OF CLASS ACTION AND PROPOSED SETTLEMENT

TO ALL PRESENT OR FORMER EMPLOYEES OF THE REXENE CORPORATION, A DELAWARE CORPORATION, REXENE PRODUCTS COMPANY, A DELAWARE CORPORATION, (FORMERLY KNOWN AS EL PASO PRODUCTS COMPANY, INCLUDING ITS PREDECESSOR, A TEXAS CORPORATION), OR ANY OF THEIR DIRECT OR INDIRECT SUBSIDIARIES (COLLECTIVELY, THE "COMPANY") WHOSE DESIGNATED EMPLOYMENT LEVEL AT ANY TIME FROM JANUARY 1, 1984 THROUGH APRIL 13, 1988, INCLUSIVE, WAS GRADE 9 OR BELOW (THE "CLASS");

Your rights may be affected by a lawsuit pending in the 295th Judicial District Court of Harris County, Texas, William Moore, et al. v. El Paso Products Company, et al., Civil Action No. 88-034911 (the "Class Action Lawsuit"), and a proposed settlement of the Class Action Lawsuit. The three named plaintiffs, Messrs. William Moore, Michael Gibson and Richard Siler, are the designated Class Representatives (the "Class Representatives"). Class Counsel are Ronald G. Franklin and Gregory N. Jones of Hill, Parker, Franklin, Cardwell & Jones of Houston, Texas, and Jacks C. Nickens and Justin M. Campbell III of Miller, Bristow & Brown also of Houston, Texas (the "Class Counsel"). The Class Representatives, Class Counsel and all but two of the Defendants have agreed to the proposed settlement, and they recommend that all Class members accept the proposed settlement.

William Moore, Michael Gibson, and Richard Siler commenced the Class Action lawsuit on behalf of themselves and the other members of the Class on June 16, 1988. The defendants are Rexene Corporation, El Paso Products Company (now known as Rexene Products Company), Ellen W. Noel as Independent Executrix of the Estate of W. D. Noel, deceased, O. R. Clements, John B. Mason, Bobby E. Seltz, Val G. Bennett, Patrick E. Munn, Andrew J. Smith, Werner F. Goeckel, Miller C. Hawkins, and Fred S. Valles. The plaintiffs allege that the individual defendants, on behalf of themselves and the Company, in an effort to induce the Class to contribute their labor to the Company and join them in the struggle to save the Company, promised the Class stock ownership in the Company. The Class alleges that the defendants misrepresented their intent, failed to satisfy their promises, and made other fraudulent misrepresentations and omissions through which they obtained the benefits of the Class' commitment to the Company and profited at the expense of the Class.

Defendants deny the Class's allegations of wrongdoing in all respects. They deny having made any misrepresentations or material omissions, and they affirmatively contend that the Company was employee-owned and that they satisfied any obligations to the employees by establishing a Stock Bonus Plan pursuant to which all participants shared in the ownership of the Company.

On June 8, 1989, the Court determined that this lawsuit should be maintained as a class action on behalf of all present and former employees of the Rexene Corporation, Rexene Products Company, formerly known as El Paso Products Company (including its predecessor, a Texas corporation) or any of their direct or indirect subsidiaries whose designated employment level at any time from January 1, 1984 through April 13, 1988, inclusive, was grade 9 or below. The court has preliminarily approved a settlement between the Class and the settling defendants. If you are a member of the Class, you may be entitled to a portion of the Settlement Fund. Also, if you are a member of the Class, you have the right to exclude yourself from the Class or to object to the settlement. In either event, you will be required to mail certain information to the Committee of Counsel.

Persons who have been identified as possible members of the Class are being advised by mail of their rights with respect to the lawsuit. This Notice is being published because some Class members may not receive the mailed notice either because they have not been identified as members of the Class or the mailing information is inaccurate or otherwise incorrect. If you are (or may be) a member of the Class but do not receive individual notice of your rights by June 30, 1989, you should notify immediately the Committee of Counsel, Rexene Products Company Litigation, P.O. Box 53353, Houston, Texas 77010, giving your correct name, telephone number, current address and social security number. You will then be mailed a more detailed explanation of your rights in this litigation and be placed on the mailing list for any future notifications regarding this suit.

A hearing for final approval of the settlement is scheduled in the 295th Judicial District Court of Harris County, Texas, on August 2, 1989, 8:00 a.m. If you have not received notice by mail, you should notify the Committee of Counsel immediately at the address listed above. To exclude yourself from the Class or object to the settlement, you must do so in writing and mail your exclusion request or objection to the Committee of Counsel postmarked no later than July 26, 1989, or you may forfeit and lose forever valuable rights.
