FORT BRAGG, N.C. — An Army paratrooper who claimed his fellow soldiers called him crazy and pulled pranks on him was convicted of premeditated murder Tuesday for killing an officer in a sniper attack on his own unit during morning calisthenics. The court-martial jury that convicted Sgt. William Kreutzer then began hearing evidence on whether to sentence him to death.

Board votes to keep MISD open for lunch

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Midland High School campuses will stay open for lunch. A school board vote to keep sophomores on campus for a one-year trial period failed, with only two trustees — Dianne Anderson and Jackie Hamilton — in favor of making the change.

Ms. Anderson had requested the issue be put on the agenda for a vote, citing safety reasons and increased traffic hazards during the lunch hours.

Midland Police Chief Richard Czech presented statistics indicating crime and traffic accidents increased slightly for a period of time during the noon hour. He showed charts that indicated a rise in juvenile crime slightly before school, and slightly after school, with the greatest increase evident after school ends for the day.

Midland school board trustee James Fuller questioned the statistics. He said they were too general.

Some parents and students agreed. They said the statistics didn't indicate if juveniles involved in crimes or traffic accidents were in school, were truants or dropouts. They said that students who have dropped out of school shouldn't be included in statistics being used to demonstrate teen-agers off campus for lunch were involved in crimes.

"When there are more students on the streets, there are more crimes," Czech said.

"How many of those accidents were fender benders and how many were minimal injuries?" said Walker Moody, Midland High School Student Council vice president.

He said that 16-year-olds were also new drivers. He also commented on remarks made about stu-

Explosion devastates mall in Brazil killing at least 44

SAO PAULO, Brazil (AP) — An explosion ripped through a shopping mall on the outskirts of Sao Paulo at lunchtime Tuesday, killing 44 people. More than 100 others were injured.

Twenty-seven bodies were pulled from the rubble, and 17 others died at or en route to the hospital, said Sao Paulo state police Col. Isaias Mascarenhas, who headed the rescue operation.

Mascarenhas said workers expected to find more bodies under the debris.

By Tuesday evening, spotlights were erected around the mall, and rescue workers used tractors, trucks and bulldozers to clear some of the debris.

"We're using lanterns, sensors and dogs, but so far we haven't found anyone alive," said Lt. Col. Edson Alves Domingues of the Sao Paulo fire department. "The chances of anyone still

Company hopes to build compressed natural gas refueling stations in basin

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

Pinnacle CNG Systems of Midland, an affiliate of Wagner & Brown, is proposing to build up to three public CNG (compressed natural gas) refueling stations in the Midland-Odessa area if a sufficient base load can be established.

Three sites under consideration are located on U.S. Highway 80 in East Midland, on U.S. Highway 80 between Midland and Midland International Airport, and in west Odessa. Drew Diggins, who presented the plan Tuesday at the Petroleum Club, said with natural gas selling for 77 cents a gallon and tax credits of between $2,000 and $50,000 available from the federal government, there was a strong economic case to be made for the use of CNG in the Permian Basin.

Diggins said a CNG vehicle using 2,400 gallons a year could save $19,437 over a 15-year period.

West Texas heat drains soldiers training for chemical warfare, sends 4 to hospital

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

The West Texas heat drained about 40 soldiers who were training at Midland International Airport Tuesday, sending four to the emergency room and prompting the Red Cross to make a sports drink delivery.

The soldiers — with the 171st Air Refueling Wing of the Air National Guard — were outfitted for a training exercise simulating chemical warfare.

"Some people neglected to drink as much water as they should have," Col. William Boardley said.

Although bottled water was stacked high at the training facility and soldiers were drinking one to two quarts an hour, wearing the heavy "ground crew ensemble" coupled with high temperatures led to heat-related stress.

"There were about four to five who had to have IVs and we sent to the hospital," said Lt. Col. Sid Jackson, flight surgeon.

The trauma coordinator at Memorial Hospital and Medical Center subsequently notified the American Red Cross about the situation.

"We came out here with ice, cups and sports drinks. We unloaded them so they could have something to treat these guys," said Janet Cross, director of emergency services for the West Texas Area American Red Cross.

The relief organization donated 600 cans of 15.5 ounce drinks and 10 20-pound bags of ice.

Bomb rips through Moscow subway, kills 4

MOSCOW (AP) — A bomb ripped through a Moscow subway car Tuesday night, killing four people and injuring 12 in a blast that sets an ominous tone for Russia's fiercely contested presidential election this weekend.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility, but authorities' suspicions fell on anti-government forces and on Chechen separatist rebels who repeatedly have threatened terrorist acts in large Russian cities.

Heavily armed troops and police ringed the Tuskaya subway station, about 3 miles south of the Kremlin, after the 9:15 p.m. blast. The bomb exploded as the train, heading southbound, approached the station, officials said.

Workers evacuated the passengers in thick smoke, and paramedics rushed the victims on stretchers to waiting ambulances. Three of the injured were reported in serious condition.

A 4-year-old boy traveling with his father was one of the injured, said Moscow Mayor Yuri Luzhkov, whose running-mate in city elections and an aide were hurt in a bombing last week that some called an attempt to disrupt Sunday's vote.

The impact Tuesday's blast will have on the elections is hard to predict. President Boris Yeltsin's opponents can cite it as further evidence of spiraling violence and the authorities' lack of control in post-Soviet times.

Yeltsin and his allies are likely to counter that it is proof anti-reform forces are stirring up civil war for fear they will lose the election.

Yeltsin's administration has worked hard to arrange a peace in Chechnya to win votes from Russians disgruntled with the protracted conflict, which has killed about 40 Russian troops in the last two weeks alone.

An angry and pale-looking Mayor Luzhkov, and other authorities, said the subway bombing may have been carried out by Chechen rebels or by someone wishing to disrupt the election.

"It was a most barbaric and cruel act which could only be hatched by bandits, beasts or a group connected with the elections," Luzhkov said. "This appalling terrorist act is another link in a chain."

Victims of the subway bombing were badly burned, a doctor told television reporters. A pound of TNT had been attached to the underside of a seat in a car that was about one-third full, the mayor said.

Two women and a man died instantly, and another man died later in a hospital, Luzhkov told reporters after emerging from the underground site.

Authorities immediately closed the station and shut the train line, one of nine on Moscow's subway system. The system is the world's busiest but is not generally crowded in the later evening.

Police have beefed up security throughout Moscow since the war in the breakaway republic of Chechnya began in December 1994. Thousands more troops have been deployed in recent weeks to guard against election-related unrest.

Negotiators signed a preliminary deal Monday to start withdrawing Russian troops from Chechnya, but a convoy of Chechen negotiators returning to their capital was bombed Tuesday, injuring seven people and casting doubt on the plan.

Last winter, Chechen guerrilla commander Shamil Basayev planted a small radioactive container in a Moscow park to demonstrate the rebels' ability to carry out terrorist attacks in the capital.

The separatists carried out bloody hostage-takings last June and this past January but have not claimed responsibility for any bombings.

Former U.S. senator takes seat to lead N. Ireland negotiations; hard-liners storm out BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Protestant hard-liners stormed out of Northern Ireland's peace negotiations early today when former U.S. Sen. George Mitchell took his seat to lead the negotiations.

Pro-British Protestants opposed to American involvement in the search for a peace settlement here had refused to accept Mitchell, the British and Irish governments' nominee, since the talks opened early Monday.

But the British government said Ireland's largest Protestant party agreed to a compromise after a marathon haggling session. Their support was crucial to Mitchell's formal appointment, and the compromise is believed to include provisions for an ongoing review of Mitchell's powers.

In a statement, Mitchell pledged that he and the Canadian and Finnish leaders of other parts of talks, would "meet our responsibilities in a totally fair and impartial manner."

Addressing his critics among the Protestant negotiators, Mitchell said: "We recognize that it is you who must make the decisions on which these proceedings will advance. We will do all we appropriately can to be of assistance."

When Mitchell — who had been confined for two days to his office before the politicians' approval — took his seat, a dozen politicians from two other Protestant unionist parties retreated in protest.

"Mitchell has been forced on us. The Ulster Unionists agreed to a cowardly document with the governments. They've agreed to make Mitchell the overlord for the talks," said an upset Ian Paisley Jr., a negotiator for the Democratic Unionist Party led by his father.

Paisley's party and a smaller Protestant party, the United Kingdom Unionists, immediately pulled out, leaving only their own note-taker behind. Paisley Jr. said he wasn't sure what their party would do when negotiations continue later Wednesday.

Some Protestants oppose Mitchell, a former U.S. Senate majority leader from Maine, because of his close association with the policies of the Clinton Administration. The president has personally offered a hand to Gerry Adams, leader of the Protestants' enemy, the IRA-allied Sinn Fein party.

Sinn Fein has been barred from the negotiations because the Irish Republican Army has refused to renew the cease-fire it broke in February with a deadly truck bomb in London's Docklands.

The aim of the talks is to strike a compromise on governing Northern Ireland — one that will secure an end to the violence in which 3,200 people have been killed since 1969.

Most Protestant leaders insist that Northern Ireland stay linked with Britain. Roman Catholics demand an end to British rule, failing that, stronger ties to the rest of Ireland, which won independence in 1921 and is predominantly Catholic.

WEATHER WATCH

Today to be sunny, hot, near 100

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for mostly sunny skies and hot with a high near 100 and winds from the south to southeast at 10-20 mph, according to the National Weather Service.

Tonight's forecast calls for fair skies with a low between 65 and 70. Thursday is expected to be mostly sunny skies and hot with a high near 100.

The high for Tuesday was 98, compared to the record high for that date of 104, set in 1959.

Tuesday's low was 69, compared to the record low of 51 set in 1975.

STATE

Sunshine and high temperatures prevailed Tuesday across Texas. Only Southeast Texas and the Lower Rio Grande Valley had cloudy skies.

Winds were light and southerly with speeds up to 10 mph in West Texas and 5 mph everywhere else.

Readings peaked in the 80s and 90s, ranging at 4 p.m. from 83 degrees at Wichita Falls in North Texas to 99 degrees at Laredo in South Texas. A severe thunderstorm watch was posted Tuesday afternoon for much of the Texas Panhandle, where the air was moist and unstable.

The forecast for North Texas is for today to be partly cloudy with highs in the low to mid 90s. There's a slight chance of thunderstorms in the southeast. Tonight will be partly cloudy with a slight chance of thunderstorms in the southeast. Lows will be near 70.

South Texas will have mostly sunny skies and high humidities today. Highs in the 90s. Lows will be in the upper 60s to lower 70s.

Forecasters said West Texas will have sunny days and partly to mostly cloudy nights through Thursday. Highs will be mostly from the 90s to near 100 except for 80s over the southwest mountains and near 110 along the Rio Grande. Lows in the 60s and 70s.

NATION

Thunderstorms were scattered across the eastern third of the nation Tuesday. The heaviest rain fell over Florida and parts of the mid Atlantic states, with up to 4 inches falling in the Carolinas.

New Bern, N.C., measured 4.01 inches of rain in the 24 hours up to 8 a.m. Other amounts included 2.12 inches at Jacksonville, N.C.; 2.02 at Cherry Point, N.C.; 1.74 at Homestead, Fla., and 1.45 at Sarasota, Fla.

Heavy rain also was likely in southern Indiana and Illinois, and there was a possibility of strong thunderstorms all along the East Coast.

The wet weather developed in the counterclockwise circulation around a low-pressure area centered over the Great Lakes.

Wisconsin had dense fog during the night as the low pulled moist air across the cool water of Lake Michigan. Visibility was a quarter of a mile or less during the morning over eastern Wisconsin, and some flights were canceled or delayed at Milwaukee's Mitchell International Airport. Fog was less severe to the south around the Chicago area.

In the West, an area of low pressure created a chance for scattered showers and thunderstorms over northern and eastern New Mexico, and over southern Colorado.

Showers and thunderstorms also were possible across parts of Idaho, Montana and northern Utah.

Elsewhere, an early morning thunderstorm over the southwestern corner of Nebraska dropped inch-wide hail around the town of Champion. Rainfall was light.

Tuesday's temperatures around the Lower 48 states ranged from a morning low of 32 at Eureka, Nev., to an early afternoon reading of 99 at Needles and Palm Springs, Calif. The highest heat index, the rating based on temperature and humidity, was 109 at Key West, Fla., and McAllen.

Bush to push for parental consent for abortions, disagrees with Dole

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. George W. Bush disagrees with Bob Dole's move to revise the GOP's anti-abortion plank — although he won't fight him on it — and he wants a new state law to require girls to get parental consent for abortions.

"I think it's very important for the Republican Party to be viewed as the pro-life party," Bush said Tuesday.

He said he opposes abortion except to protect the life of the mother or when a pregnancy is the result of rape or incest.

Dole, the GOP's presumed presidential nominee, said Monday the Republican platform's anti-abortion plank should make it clear the party is tolerant of disagreement.

Dole aides previously had said a statement recognizing differing views would go instead into the platform's preamble, where it would carry less weight.

"I don't think we ought to single out abortion as the only place in which there will be some differing opinions," Bush said. "But he's the leader. ... He believes this is important for his election, and I believe good Republicans ought to fall in line behind the leader."

Bush, already tapped by Dole to be temporary co-chairman of the GOP National Convention, said he also will play a prominent role in Dole's Texas campaign, "more than likely" as chairman.

Looking toward the 1997 legislative session, Bush said he'll work for a state law to require minor daughters to get their parents' consent before having abortions.

"I believe one, it will reduce the number of abortions in our society; and two, as a parent, I believe that parents ought to be involved in the operations of their minors whether it be pierced ears, appendicitis or abortion," said Bush, who has twin daughters.

He said that in cases in which the minor seeking an abortion was abused or neglected by her parents, a third party such as a judge could make the decision on behalf of the parent.

A bill by Sen. Florence Shapiro, R-Plano, that would have required parental notification — not consent — passed a Senate committee last year. But it didn't have the necessary two-thirds vote in the Senate to be brought up for consideration.

Pauline Cashion of the Texas Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League said her group opposes such legislation because young women who can't confide in their parents may see an illegal abortion as their only alternative.

"We absolutely support young women involving their parents in their decision," Ms. Cashion said, but added, "To make this a legislative mandate only puts young women at risk."

Texas Democrats favor abortion rights, saying in a position paper that they "have faith in our people to make sound, healthy decisions for ourselves and our families ... without the fear of unwarranted governmental intrusion into our privacy."

If a parental consent bill reaches the Legislature, Democratic Party spokeswoman Anne Marie Kilday said, individual Democratic lawmakers "would have to see the legislation and make their own moral decision about that."

In a related development, Dole's campaign included GOP elected officials among its nominees for voting delegates to the Republican National Convention.

That action comes despite social conservative leaders' concerns that politicians would be vulnerable to pressure to change anti-abortion platform language or to vote for a vice presidential nominee who favors abortion rights.

LUNCH: Board votes against closed campuses

dents having an opportunity to drink or take drugs during lunch.

"Most students eat lunch during lunch," he said. "A small segment of students, 2 percent, are ruining their lives by using illegal substances. Why punish 98 percent?"

Moody said trustees should be concentrating on more important issues, such as getting another school bond proposal together instead of "wasting time on trivial things."

"This is not trivial," Ms. Anderson countered. "And it's not about taking away your lunch. It's about your safety."

"Safety could be improved ... and if tardies are stacked up, those students should not be allowed to leave early for lunch," said MHS Senior Class President Jon Stephenson, speaking of an early-release program. "Letting people out for lunch could also be staggered, with one group leaving 15 minutes later than another," he said.

He said crowding students into the cafeteria would increase discipline problems.

Fellow student Jackie Chou agreed. The honors student said having a closed campus at Goddard Junior High School did not prevent fights. "I saw Goddard kids pushed through windows," she said. "I was late getting back to class due to fights."

Miss Chou said many students rely on the lunch hour to make up work and tests and attend tutoring sessions. "Closing campuses is extreme. Having teachers monitor halls and hiring more security guards is too much. MISD has many other places to spend money," she said.

One MHS teacher said students are late coming back to class after lunch, and tardies and absences contribute to failures.

Teacher and Texas Classroom Teachers Association President Jo Hayes said the action item should be tabled until school principals were available to sit down and work out the logistics and costs of closing the campuses.

Former school board trustee Gary Willis said that when he was a trustee he was originally in favor of closing campuses, but was swayed by public sentiment and voted to keep campuses open.

"Does the open campus degrade staff's ability to maintain a high level of quality and safety in the learning environment? If yes, then you need to give serious thought to changing the open-campus policy."

Willis said he didn't hear anything new on the issue since it came up in 1993.

MISD Superintendent Joseph Barelli Jr. said a majority of students behaved well. He said if the board chose to close campuses, it should consider allowing junior and senior privileges. "Those who behave should have chances for lunch privileges."

Barelli said law enforcement and school administrators should catch students abusing the open lunch policy.

"In a free society you don't punish the many for the few," he said.

He said he was speaking for himself and not the board.

Fuller said he objected to closing the campuses. "The privilege is in place. We need to identify those being irresponsible," he said.

He said he also was concerned about closed campuses where "a certain amount of learning is not taking place."

Ms. Hamilton said residents who live near Midland High complain of trash thrown from car windows at lunch time.

Other students said alcohol is available on closed campuses, so closing campuses wouldn't solve the problem.

Resident Randy Turner said people speaking on both sides of the issue made good points. "But our kids grow up and have to be prepared for life beyond high school," he said. "Part of being responsible is going to lunch, driving a car, and arriving back on time ... I don't think your concerns will be addressed by closing campuses."

Ms. Anderson said passing laws requiring the wearing of seat belts was unpopular but was done so for the good of the population.

"We are in charge of students' safety and well being ... we're just waiting for something horrible to happen. It's going to take a fatality or serious accident to change things."

Ms. Anderson made a motion to close both high school campuses for a one-year trial period. The motion died for the lack of a second.

Ms. Hamilton then made a motion to close campuses starting with the sophomore year.

Fuller said neither motion took into account the need to study the issue. "You're making motions to put into place something we haven't studied," he said that previous surveys contained data pertinent to 1993.

Ms. Hamilton's motion failed 2-5.

In other action, trustees voted to uphold the student code of conduct approved at a previous meeting. Although some students and parents requested the board reconsider raising the length of pants and skirts to more than 3 1/2 inches above the knee, the board voted to make that length district policy.

Parents said that because of current styles, it is difficult to find shorts that long, especially for tall students.

"We don't run our schools to fit the fashion world," Ms. Hamilton said.

It was noted that teachers, in an effort of self-policing, are developing their own dress code.

"I think in a professional environment teachers should not wear shorts," Ms. Anderson said.

However, Carver Center teacher Lisa Sutton said teachers in classrooms with younger pupils often have to sit on the floor, have youngsters sitting on the floor looking up at them, or have to squeeze into tiny chairs. "I would not be comfortable doing that in a dress or a skirt," she said.

Trustees also heard a report on California Achievement Test scores.

FALL: Liquor commercials pop up on Texas stations computer communications makes less of a distinction between types of advertising. Also, the beer and wine industries advertise on radio and television, why not spirits?

"As a matter of fairness, our industry strongly believes that we should not be discriminated against, nor should we discriminate against ourselves," Fred Meister, president and chief executive of DISCUS, said in a statement.

In March, Seagram ran a 30-second message during an equestrian event on the Prime Sports Networks chain. Unlike the Texas advertisements, the company felt that message fell within the original DISCUS guidelines, said spokeswoman Bevin Gove.

Texas is one of the best markets for Crown Royal which has had increasing sales. Seagram sold 1.8 million cases of Crown Royal last year, up from 880,000 in 1990, according to M. Shanken Communications.

"It seemed like a natural fit," Ms. Gove said.

Also, Frank T. Smith, who owns KRIS-TV in Corpus Christi was supportive of the idea.

Smith said he feels liquor advertising has always been successful for print media. So, he tested his community's reaction to liquor advertising years ago during a Baptist Convention in the coastal city.

He asked some liquor stores to advertise brand names and prices, then ran the spots to see whether he would get any complaints.

"I ran those ads everywhere, at all times, including during the Saturday morning kids' shows," he said. "I got less than 20 calls and most of them were not complaints, but people thinking it was illegal."

In the ad currently running nightly on KRIS between 9 p.m. and 10 p.m., a doberman puppy enters carrying an obedience school diploma. A second puppy enters carrying a bottle of Crown

Royal as the voice over says "Valedictorian."

No complaints have come in so far.

"Although I'm sure when the news media gets done with it someone will call me thinking I've done something wrong," Smith said.

Mothers Against Drunk Driving, based in Irving, is waiting to see what the advertising portrays before making any waves.

"We have not yet taken a stand that says the alcohol industry should not advertise, but we have said they should be careful in how they do it," said national president Katherine Prescott.

Leah Brock, a spokeswoman for the National Council on Alcoholism and Drug Dependence, said the group is very concerned about the effect the ads will have on children.

"There has been a lot of information indicating that several animals used in beer advertising are more recognized by children,"

Ms. Brock said.

Seagram's decision did cause a stir in Washington.

"There's been sort of a compact between the government and the liquor industry over time, that has led to this voluntary ban," said Steve Jennings, an aide to Sen. Ron Wyden, D-Ore. "I guess that social contract is now busted — too bad."

Bonnie Jansen, a spokeswoman for the Federal Trade Commission, which monitors ads' truthfulness, said: "The agency is watching, and we will hold those advertisers to the same standard that applies to everyone — that the ads are not deceptive."

The Food and Drug Administration, which is pushing to regulate tobacco ads targeted at young people, had no comment, said spokesman Jim O'Hara.

Federal law does ban TV ads for smokeless tobacco and cigarettes.

BLAST: Explosion at mall leaves 44 dead alive are minimal."

The Plaza Shopping Center in the suburb of Osasco, about 10 miles west of Sao Paulo, was built barely a year ago, but Mascarenhas said there was no suspicion of faulty workmanship.

Authorities said the cause of the explosion was unknown.

Today marks a Brazilian holiday equivalent to Valentine's Day and many stores were busy with people shopping for gifts. As many as 2,000 shoppers were believed to be in the center, which has 200 stores and three movie theaters, mall superintendent David Rocha said.

Severino Pedro, who owns a store next to the mall, said the entire block trembled as if an earthquake had struck.

"Right after that, hundreds of people came running out of the mall. Many of them were screaming," he said.

The explosion, which occurred just after noon, had enough force to blow out part of two concrete walls and collapse part of the second story — which serves as a parking lot for 700 cars.

"All of a sudden, the wall started falling on top of the passenger side of the car," said 19-year-old Rosangela Alves dos Santos, who was driving up a parking lot ramp at the time.

"I don't know how I, my aunt and my sister managed to get out, but we did," she said. "It was a miracle."

Police, firemen and army soldiers cordoned off the block, as ambulances ferried scores of injured shoppers to hospitals. Many were taken to Sao Paulo as local emergency wards filled up.

Mounds of concrete and twisted metal air vents were visible through two gaping holes in the outside walls.

A crowd gathered to watch rescue efforts. Some held up cardboard signs urging people to give blood. Trucks passed in the street, using loudspeakers to call on pharmacies to donate medicine to hospitals.

State Health Department spokeswoman Carla Terra said more than 100 victims were treated at a local emergency room. About 50 of the most seriously injured were flown by helicopter to Sao Paulo.

Outside, surgical gloves discarded by ambulance workers littered the ground like latex leaves. People wandered up to examine the lists taped to the hospital walls, with names and injuries of those treated.

Ismael Torquato silently pored over the list, looking for the name of his 17-year-old daughter Alicia. When he found it, with the notation "exposed fracture of tibia," he sighed deeply and closed his eyes.

"Thank God, she's alive," he said.

Dr. Maria do Socorro Ionta said the hospital was deluged with offers of food, milk, blankets and help to care for victims.

"The outpouring of solidarity has been overwhelming," she said. "The hospital really was not prepared for a tragedy this big."

CNG: Company seeks to build refueling stations

(From 1A)

"That's like getting a free pick-up every 15 years."

He said that natural gas vehicles are safer and require less maintenance than gasoline-fueled vehicles, while delivering the same power and range.

"Bi-fuel vehicles, natural gas and gasoline, actually have more range than single-fueled vehicles because a nine-gallon CNG tank will increase the range of a vehicle by 135 miles," he said.

Making his case to an audience made up mostly of fleet operators, Diggins said Pinnacle was prepared to offer a complete fleet data management system that would provide area operators a 15-year contract on fuel, conversion expertise and a maintenance program.

He said that CNG vehicles can be driven up to 7,000 miles between oil changes, compared to 3,000 miles for gasoline fuel vehicles.

In the past, the primary complaint from CNG operators has been the length of time required to fill vehicles. Pinnacle, however, has developed a patented, super-charged compressor that allows vehicles with 10-gallon tanks to be refueled in little more than one minute.

"In a stopwatch test, we were able to fill 11 trucks in 15 minutes, bringing CNG refueling on a par with gasoline," Diggins said.

To date, the company has installed the patented system at three sites. At a field site near Sterling City, 30 pickups and trucks are fueled with 217 gallons a day. United Parcel in San Ramon, Calif., uses the system to fuel 104 delivery vans, which burn approximately 1,200 gallons a day. And a bus company, Durham Transportation in San Marcos, uses it to service 23 62-passenger buses.

Diggins estimated that sales of approximately 10,000 gallons of fuel a month would be needed to open and maintain a CNG fuel station.

"If we could get 75 vehicles, using six gallons per day we could do it."

The computerized stations would not be a lock card operation, but would record the vehicle identification number, and keep track of the gallons used by the vehicle.

In addition to using natural gas fuel for economic, safety, environmental and other reasons, Jack Brown, a principal in Pinnacle, said CNG makes sense from a national security standpoint.

"Anyone who thinks we are going to be safe in the Middle East for the next 15 years, let me see your hand," Brown said.

He said that natural gas is abundant in the United States and that the nation's two neighbors — Mexico and Canada — also are blessed with abundant natural gas supplies.

He said the Permian Basin should be leading the way on CNG.

"It is up to us here in the Permian Basin to show the rest of the world how to use CNG. If we don't use it ourselves, how can we expect anyone else to use it?"

she said. "They didn't have any sports drinks to replace the fluids that they needed," Ms. Cross said.

But dehydration is sometimes part of the training experience.

And Jackson speaks from experience. He wore the full suit under 120 degree temperatures while in Desert Storm.

"It's hotter than blue blazes and you sweat. I had to pour water out of my boots," he said. "I've been to the point where you can't even walk up a small grade you're so weak."

Maj. Gary Jeffries, legal officer, vouched for the sometimes debilitating effects of wearing the protective outfits. "But it keeps you alive and that's why we have to be used to wearing it in the heat," he said.

Meanwhile, the soldiers — about 720 from the Pittsburgh, Pa., area — will continue training here another two days. Triple-digit temperatures were forecasted for today by the National Weather Service in Midland.

Yeltsin, young reformers join forces in final days before election

MOSCOW (AP) — Not long ago, Boris Yeltsin was sacking the last of the young reformers who had designed and run Russia's post-Soviet economy.

Now, in the final, frantic days ahead of Sunday's presidential election, Yeltsin and many of those young mavericks are working together again, apparently driven by a common realization: None of them has anywhere else to go.

When Communists and ultranationalists won a majority of seats in parliament in December, Yeltsin responded by firing longtime reformist allies like privatization chief Anatoly Chubais and Chief of Staff Sergei Filatov.

He blasted them for "mistakes" and — in a clear bid for the Communist electorate — said ordinary Russians' interests had been neglected.

Yeltsin adopted tougher language in speeches against the West, slowed the rate of selling off state properties and cracked down on Chechen separatists, bombing a village where Chechen gunmen were holding hostages.

"Mr. Yeltsin's first reaction was to be more like the Communists," said Michael McFaul, an analyst at the Carnegie Center, an independent Moscow think tank.

Reformers had already grown disenchanted with Yeltsin, accusing him of authoritarianism, tolerating corruption and waging a bungled war in Chechnya. Yeltsin's moves only confirmed their distrust.

But the break with reformers did little to improve Yeltsin's standing in the polls, and the president soon changed tactics: "Don't be like the Communists and (ultranationalist Vladimir) Zhirinovskiy, but consolidate the democrats, No. 1," McFaul said, describing Yeltsin's strategy. "And once you consolidate them, then prove you are the candidate of stability and not instability."

Some of the reformers Yeltsin had sacked — including Chubais and Filatov — have now taken on key roles in his reelection campaign. Former Finance Minister Boris Fyodorov, who ran against the pro-Yeltsin party in December, appears as Yeltsin's representative on TV debates. Yeltsin's strategy of focusing on reformers appears to be working. His poll ratings have risen from single digits when his campaign started in February, to his current standing as front-runner.

"Reform" for many Russians remains a dirty word, a synonym for crime and corruption, for enriching a few at the expense of the many, for the collapse of the Soviet Union. Bickering reform parties belly flopped in parliamentary elections in 1993 and 1995.

Yeltsin tries to keep his distance from the pain of reforms, still blaming the ambitious young reformers for mistakes and saying he'll follow a more moderate course. He terrifies reformist allies with daily spending promises along the campaign trail.

Yet the president's broad, anti-Communist platform keeps many reform-minded Russians on board, and his emphasis has been on wooing them — especially young voters — rather than hard-liners.

Among the young, reform-minded politicians who have found their way back to Yeltsin are Gov. Boris Nemtsov of Nizhny-Novgorod and former deputy premier Sergei Shakhrai.

Even Yegor Gaidar has reluctantly thrown his support behind the president. Gaidar, the architect of Yeltsin's early reforms and a former prime minister, leads a bloc that has bombed at the ballot box but remains a key reformist voice.

Scientists face opposition to worldwide gene hunt

By Charles Hanley
Associated Press

The pieces are infinitesimal, the puzzle as big as history itself. And scientists are ready to solve it — to mount a worldwide gene hunt, from Africa's jungles to remote Pacific islands, to finally trace the story of man.

If only man would cooperate.

Under the ambitious plan, called the Human Genome Diversity Project, researchers would compare genes from hundreds of ethnic groups in order to map relationships, track prehistoric human migrations, and perhaps make medical discoveries.

But American Indian, Australian aborigine and other indigenous groups have mobilized against the proposal, suspicious of commercial exploitation, worried that findings might undermine land claims and troubled by scary scenarios — the suggestion, for example, that someone could use their DNA to customize biological weapons to turn against them.

"What we're looking at are the most vulnerable people becoming victimized by science and commercial interests," said Debra Harry, a Nevada Indian activist.

The opposition has had an impact. In Paris, UNESCO has shied away from endorsing the project. In Washington, agencies that might underwrite the $5-million-a-year cost are wary.

"No major funds have been committed to it because of the controversy that arose," said Amar Bhat of the National Institutes of Health.

The controversy now rests with a 16-member committee at the U.S. National Academy of Sciences. The group will meet periodically in the coming months before reporting on the plan's scientific value and ethical safeguards.

The Diversity Project differs from the better-known Human Genome Project, the huge endeavor that regularly makes headlines by finding links between diseases and genes — those inherited bits of DNA in our cells whose chemical code determines each body's characteristics.

One by one, 100,000 or so genes, collectively known as the human genome, are being blueprinted by the $200-million-a-year "HGP." But everyone's genome is minutely different from everyone else's, so scientists are developing only a composite of broadly shared DNA, using samples from a handful of North Americans and Europeans.

The Diversity Project, on the other hand, would focus on the minute differences and reach out to every corner of the globe.

The plan, conceived by international geneticists led by Stanford University's Luigi Luca Cavalli-Sforza, would coordinate independent gene-sampling projects already under way.

Organizers say it will take at least five years to collect blood or other DNA samples from perhaps 500 ethnic groups, with a focus on isolated populations.

Because a New Guinea forest tribe, for example, has few, if any, outsiders' variant genes in its makeup, tribe members have relatively consistent genomes — making them easier to compare to other groups in search of patterns.

Patterns would enable geneticists to find family ties between groups — to reconstruct human genealogy. That could help answer a key question of anthropology: Did modern man evolve in Africa and then migrate, or did he evolve on other continents, too?

Geneticists also hold out the prospect that they may discover clues to disease susceptibility or immunity.

"We firmly believe this project could be one of the most important scientific efforts of its era," said Cavalli-Sforza.

Mark Weiss, program director for physical anthropology at the National Science Foundation in Washington, described the project as "a splendid opportunity ... to gain tremendous insight into human population history, human adaptation, biomedical ques-

Bush should sign ban on fireworks

When it's as dry as it currently is in Texas, it only makes good sense to not only ban outside burning but also any activity that might start an unintentional outdoor fire.

That's what Midland County commissioners are doing in asking Gov. George W. Bush to ban fireworks in Midland County until the drought ends. While such a ban will not ensure that no grassfire gets started, it will certainly eliminate one possible way such a blaze could start.

Outside burning was outlawed by commissioners in late February and since that time the Midland region has only received a sprinkling of rain. In fact, this area is so far behind in rainfall for the past year that what range grass has grown is far shorter and sparser than normal.

That may be a kind of blessing in disguise, point out some local ranchers, because if a heavy covering of tall grass was present with the extremely dry conditions, this area would literally be a major grass-fire waiting to happen. And those of us who have lived in this region for a number of years and know from experience what kind of damage can result from a major range-fire, want to prevent that from happening if at all possible.

Residents of this county need to adopt Midland County Judge Jeff Norwood's opinion about fireworks as long as this drought continues. Norwood says he does not believe there is a "safe" place for fireworks presently. Neither do we. The city fireworks display, conducted by professionals and attended by firefighters, is an exception.

Gov. Bush should sign the Midland County commissioners' request outlawing the possession or igniting of fireworks in Midland County until this drought is over.

Heavy drug traffic grows along border

EL PASO — As the power of Mexico's No. 1 drug lord, Amado Carrillo Fuentes, grows by the day, so does the size of his shipments across this border, according to U.S. intelligence sources.

The Ciudad Juarez-El Paso drug smuggling corridor here has been called "Carrillo's Crossing" because more drugs come across this vulnerable spot than at any other port of entry in the country.

Carrillo is so feared that several years ago, a multi-agency anti-drug task force called the El Paso Intelligence Center had to move its headquarters from the city to a local Army base, Fort Bliss. Carrillo's people had been discovered tailing EPIC officials, and tapping their car phones and home phones.

Believed to be in his early 40s, Carrillo heads what has been dubbed the Juarez Cartel — but that only gives a hint of his power. He is also chief of what Drug Enforcement Administration analysts call the Federation — an informal alliance of several major Mexican drug trafficking cartels that Carrillo put together. Once at each other's throats, several of the drug lords agreed with Carrillo that by working together they could reduce the turf wars that often evolved into bloody feuds.

Some DEA sources speculate that Carrillo resolved to form the Federation, which is organized along the lines of the powerful Cali cartel of Colombia, after surviving an assassination attempt at a popular Mexico City seafood restaurant in 1993.

Eleven men wielding machine guns opened fire, killing three of his bodyguards, an architect they apparently thought was Carrillo and another innocent bystander. In the melee, Carrillo and his family hid under a restaurant table, and then escaped without injury.

Carrillo came out of that situation resolved to end this kind of factional turf battle. As he consolidated his power, he won the confidence of the Cali cartel for his coolness and intelligence. They began directing more of their cocaine shipments to him, trusting Carrillo to get them into the United States safely.

An idea of just how much narcotics Carrillo is moving came last November, when U.S. intelligence tracked the flights of two French-built Caravelle jets from Colombia to Carrillo's territory in Mexico. Informants revealed that those two shipments alone contained 25 tons of cocaine — with an estimated street value of $500 million.

A former Mexican counter-narcotics official, who asked not to be named and is hiding in the United States, explained to our associate Dale Van Atta that Carrillo is making billions of dollars in profits because of the markup value of the drugs once he gets them across the border.

On a sheet of paper, he drew a map from Colombia to the United States, writing down the jump in price of cocaine the further it moved north. "Let's say the wholesale price of a kilo of cocaine is $4,000 in Colombia or Guatemala. By the time it gets to Veracruz 1/8th Mexico 3/8, it is $8,000 per kilo. In Matamoros 1/8th further north 3/8, it is $12,000 a kilo.

"When it gets into Houston, Texas, the wholesale price is $16,000 a kilo. That's a 300 percent jump just from Colombia. And the retail price — the street sale price — will be four or five times that, maybe $100,000 a kilo.

"The price of the drugs is correlated to the risk, as you can see," he added. "The biggest part of the money is not for the producer, or even the transporter, but it is in the consumer country — the U.S. So the middlemen, the intermediaries, make the big money, and the biggest of them is Carrillo."

The DEA figures that 70 percent of all illegal drugs entering the United States comes from Mexico. And they recognize that it is impossible to stop the majority of this coming across our 2,000-mile border.

Consider that in 1994 alone, the U.S. Customs Service counted 232 million people crossing legally into the United States. They came in 82.3 million cars and 2.8 million trucks. Not all of them can be checked for drugs, as there is not enough manpower or time. If they checked even every third vehicle, the backup at the border would stretch for miles, and legitimate trade between the United States and Mexico would come to a screeching halt.

On the other hand, as a recent State Department report put it, "No country in the world poses a more immediate narcotics threat to the United States than does Mexico."

Among law enforcement officials in Texas, there is no doubt who is most responsible for that threat.

Leary left wake of ruin behind him throughout life

Timothy Leary, the former professor-turned drug promoter who encouraged young people to plunge headlong into the drug culture of the 1960s, was neither a role model nor a profound scholar. Dying does not make him either.

In an offensive display of self-centeredness, Leary set up a home page on the World Wide Web to call attention to his battle with cancer, which ended (May 31). Leary offered little but devastation to the lives he touched throughout his time on Earth. It was ludicrous for anyone to suggest that his final act in this life would have any general significance.

Leary's personal legacy includes five marriages. One of his wives and a daughter committed suicide. A son was estranged.

His wider legacy includes the lives that were destroyed because people believed him when he said that drugs were good. He crashed through life without regard for the damage he might do to himself and others.

A Web page? Ridiculous. This was not a man with pearls of wisdom to share with the public. Rather, he was a dangerous fruitcake, a testament to what happens when tested values are replaced with "if it feels good, do it."

FBI should be ashamed of themselves

WASHINGTON — Overlooked in the scandal of Travelgate has been the failure of FBI Director Louis Freeh to protect the confidential files of citizens from political snoops. Say what you like about J. Edgar Hoover — he never let the bureau become a doormat for White House aides.

Safire

The background: when President Clinton claimed "executive privilege" to keep 3,000 embarrassing documents from investigators, Congress threatened White House Counsel Jack Quinn with criminal contempt. To avoid jail, he forked over a thousand of the least damning documents.

One of them illuminates why Clinton has been stonewalling for years on the rest of the subpoenaed files. It is a requisition to the "FBI Liaison," ostensibly from then-White House Counsel Bernard Nussbaum, for the confidential files on Billy Ray Dale, the travel office employee who had been fired seven months earlier to make room for a Clinton cousin. The FBI disgorged 22 letters and reports on Ray alone; he was then besmeared by White House officials in the press, unjustly prosecuted and financially ruined, before being acquitted by a jury in two hours.

The requisition for the confidential FBI files was unsigned. The name typed on it was Bernard Nussbaum, but Nussbaum now says he had "absolutely no knowledge" of such a request, and would presumably swear to that. The reason given on the fraudulent requisition was "access" — as if Ray were trying to get back into the White House, which was untrue.

That was the tip of the iceberg. Despite "executive privilege," Congressman William Clinger learned that as many as 341 such fraudulent, unsigned requests for confidential files and name checks were sent under the Nussbaum typed name to FBI headquarters. Apparently the snoop was a Clinton political appointee who preferred anonymity.

The cover story peddled by Clinton aides is that this was a "routine" updating of White House files by a stupid clerk that just happened to focus on holdover Republicans, as well as other Republican political suspects — including a former secretary of state whose aides once improperly snooped into Clinton passport files. Clinton's lawyers claim that the fraudulently obtained FBI dossiers were put in a White House vault and nobody looked at them.

What's being done in response to the most egregious invasion of privacy of U.S. citizens in a generation? Not much. President Clinton says he's sorry, but continues to stonewall on 2,000 documents; the independent counsel adds this mess to his Travelgate list; and the FBI announces a "thorough" investigation by its in-house counsel, who will rebuke some low-level agent and absolve the boss.

Not good enough. After FBI agents were jerked around to provide political cover for Clinton patronage moves in 1993, Attorney General Reno and Freeh promised strict scrutiny of White House requests. They failed abysmally to keep citizens' confidential files safe from politicians' eyes.

Think of it: Unverified slanders and gossip tidbits in your FBI file have been vulnerable to an unsigned form letter from a political partisan hiding behind another person's name. Under Freeh, the anti-encryption zealot hand-picked by the man whose name was used on the phony requisitions, the Justice Department's most confidential file room has become a walk-in closet for White House pals.

Nobody at Freeh's unbuttoned FBI bothered to ask: What individual wants this and for what lawful purpose? Can any anonymous bureaucrat requisition, rifle through and remove confidential records? How come not one agent was required by bureau policy to ask why not even initials appeared on hundreds of requests to check up on Republicans?

What a scandalously sloppy way to run a police agency. To entrust the investigation of this unprecedented hemorrhage of FBI confidentiality to the same easily manipulated Justice Department invites a whitewash.

Summer civil libertarians shade their eyes when personal privacy is invaded by political allies, but this top-level failure to resist an abuse of power dismays FBI agents in the field. When Clintonites send over for the file on me, Director Freeh, don't buy their baloney about "seeks access" — I won't be going to the White House picnic this summer.

Today is Wednesday, June 12, the 164th day of 1996. There are 202 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History: On June 12, 1939, the National Baseball Hall of Fame and Museum was dedicated in Cooperstown, N.Y., on the 100th anniversary of the day Abner Doubleday supposedly invented the sport.

On this date: In 1665, England installed a municipal government in New York, formerly the Dutch settlement of New Amsterdam.

In 1776, Virginia's colonial legislature became the first to adopt a Bill of Rights.

In 1838, the Iowa Territory was organized.

In 1898, Philippine nationalists declared independence from Spain.

In 1937, the Soviet Union executed eight army leaders as a purge under Josef Stalin continued.

In 1963, civil rights leader Medgar Evers was fatally shot in front of his home in Jackson, Miss.

In 1967, the U.S. Supreme Court struck down state laws prohibiting interracial marriages.

In 1971, Tricia Nixon and Edward F. Cox were married in the White House Rose Garden.

In 1979, 26-year-old cyclist Bryan Allen flew the man-powered Gossamer Albatross across the English Channel.

In 1981, major-league baseball players began a 49-day strike over the issue of free-agent compensation. (The season did not resume until August 10.)

In 1987, President Reagan publicly challenged Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev to "tear down" the Berlin Wall.

In 1994, Nicole Brown Simpson and Ronald Goldman were slashed to death outside her Los Angeles home; O.J. Simpson was later acquitted of the killings.

Ten years ago: South Africa declared a national state of emergency, giving virtually unlimited power to security forces and severely restricting news coverage of unrest.

Five years ago: Russians went to the polls to elect Boris N. Yeltsin president of their republic. The Mount Pinatubo volcano in the Philippines began erupting. The Chicago Bulls won their first NBA championship, defeating the Los Angeles Lakers four games to one.

One year ago: The Supreme Court dealt a potentially crippling blow to federal affirmative action programs, ruling Congress was limited by the same strict standards as states in offering special help to minorities. Rescued Air Force Captain Scott O'Grady was treated to lunch at the White House and a hero's welcome at the Pentagon.

Gas is getting so expensive you'll need loan

I drove to the gas station the other day. The man asked, "How much gas do you want?"

I looked at my bank book and replied, "How about five gallons?"

The man said, "What do you plan to put up as collateral?"

"How about my car?" I asked.

"Everybody who comes in here wants to put up his car as collateral."

"But I need gas badly. This thing won't run without it."

"You should have thought of that when you bought it."

"Will you give me five gallons for this Rolex watch?"

"All my customers try to give me Rolex watches. For gas, I want cash."

"Why is the gas so expensive?" I wanted to know.

"Because the refineries can't produce enough to satisfy consumer demand."

"Why not?"

"Because if they satisfied the demand, the price of gas would go down again. Gasoline producers have to eat, too."

"Maybe I could afford three gallons if you make sure not to spill any when you put it in the tank."

"Okay, but I want the money in advance. Lots of people ask me to put the gas in the tank, and when they can't pay for it I have to siphon it out. It's tough on my lungs."

I handed him the key to my tank.

He inserted the nozzle, I watched as the needle slowly rose on the dashboard, and I heard the joyous sound of "gurgles, gurgles."

"Your car sure likes gas," the man said.

"It has ever since I bought it," I confessed. "But in the old days when gouging was reasonable I thought nothing of putting in a half-tank and whizzing around the Beltway without a care in the world. Now I think twice about going to the Dairy Queen. Will you check the oil and wash the windshield?"

"For a lousy $100 worth of gas? You drivers are always looking for something for nothing."

Dole says goodbye to Senate, begins new chapter on campaign trail

WASHINGTON (AP) — He took one lingering look back in time. Then he moved on.

With a final wave, Bob Dole strode out the golden-edged doors of the Senate chamber one last time as a legislator Tuesday and into a new public life.

Moving from thunderous applause on the Senate steps to the buzz of phones in a no-frills campaign headquarters, Dole began in earnest his campaign for the presidency.

His valedictory speech was resolutely collegial at this most political of times.

"The Bible tells us that to everything there is a season," he said with a long, choking pause. "I think my season in the Senate is about to come to an end."

"But the season before me makes this moment far less the closing of one chapter than the opening of another."

After 35 years in Congress, he was still a "work in progress," as he called the Senate he loved and the nation he wants to lead.

"It's been a great ride," he said, adding in classic Dole fashion, "A few bumps along the way."

As he worked the Senate halls — shaking hands and posing for pictures with every tourist and worker he passed — Dole uttered not a word in his speech about the coming presidential election that jarred him loose from his Senate moorings.

For their part, senators sang his praises, offered pats and hugs and named a balcony after him — the one where Dole liked to retreat, look out on the Washington mall, and cut some deals.

"Big letters or neon?" Dole wondered, picturing his name in lights.

Dole then delivered himself back into politics, moving from the polished wood of the Senate halls to the metal folding chairs and banners of his campaign headquarters a few blocks away. On Wednesday, he embarks on a eight-city, three-day "heartland tour."

Dole's Senate work had become a burden in his uphill campaign against President Clinton. The partisanship that had bogged him down evaporated for his departure.

In suburban Los Angeles, Clinton saluted Dole for his more than

'It's been a great ride. A few bumps along the way.'

— Sen. Bob Dole, in his farewell speech to Congress three decades in Congress.

"Even though I am about to begin a rather vigorous campaign with Senator Dole, I would like to ask all of you, including those of you who are my supporters, to just take a moment and wish him well," Clinton said to a community college crowd. "I think we ought to give him a hand."

The two also talked by phone and wished each other well.

"We talked about things we'd done together," Dole said.

Dole came to Washington in January 1961, the cusp of the Kennedy era, on a day when "Are You Lonesome Tonight?" by Elvis Presley was No. 1 on the charts, Camelot was a month old, the United States cut diplomatic ties with Cuba and the federal budget showed a surplus.

The Kansan veered between biting partisanship and savvy conciliation during a career of four terms in the House and five elections to the Senate.

But his final Senate address, typical of his whirlwind last day, ditched politics and dwelled on the grace notes and achievements of his time, speaking as if he were in a small room with just the boys.

"We're like America," he said of the Senate. "We're still a work in progress."

"I would no more distance myself from the Senate than I would from the United States of America itself."

The occasion left Democratic Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan of New York, with whom Dole worked to restore the solvency of Social Security, feeling empty.

"There has been no such event like it in my 20 years (in Washington)," he said on the steps of the Capitol. "When Bob Dole was in the Senate, you knew certain things wouldn't happen. Now I'm not so sure."

Dole, his wife and daughter left the Capitol by the broad Senate steps as hundreds of well-wishers, staff and members of Congress broke into applause and cheers.

Throughout the emotional day, Dole tried to maintain a sense of levity. His first words walking out of the chamber with tears in his eyes were: "Time to eat."

Dole paid a final visit to his Senate office across the street from the Capitol, where staff told him people had been calling all morning suggesting running mates — including themselves.

"Did you take down their names?" he asked. "Their bank accounts?"

Dole ad libbed most of his 40-minute speech to the chamber, a retrospective on battles won with help — more often than not — from the other side.

Dole's longtime aide, Sheila Burke, sat next to him, red-faced and busy with tissues. She offered to share when the senators and packed gallery gave his wife, Elizabeth, and daughter, Robin, a standing ovation, but he declined.

The ovation for Dole went on for eight minutes, rising anew when he would look up and wave. But that was all, suddenly, in the past.

"After 2 o'clock today," Dole said, "when somebody calls me about bringing up their amendment, I'll say it's all right with me, bring it up any time you want."

Kevorkian, newly acquitted, takes part in 29th assisted suicide

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP) — Less than a month after his latest court victory, Dr. Jack Kevorkian took part in the suicide of a 69-year-old stroke-ridden widow who checked herself out of a nursing home in New Jersey to seek his help.

The death of Ruth Neuman was the 29th suicide Kevorkian has acknowledged assisting since 1990. She died by inhaling carbon monoxide.

"Dr. Kevorkian along with other physicians were present at the time that Ruth Neuman ended her life of extreme torment and suffering as a result of various debilitating and ultimately fatal diseases," Kevorkian's lawyer, Geoffrey Fieger, said Tuesday.

Mrs. Neuman had been treated for uterine cancer, had diabetes and degenerative back disease, and was partially paralyzed from one in a series of strokes, Fieger said. He would not say exactly when or where she committed suicide.

Jury finds paratrooper guilty in sniper attack

FORT BRAGG, N.C. (AP) — An Army paratrooper who claimed his fellow soldiers called him crazy and pulled pranks on him was convicted of premeditated murder Tuesday for killing an officer in a sniper attack on his own unit during morning calisthenics.

The court-martial jury that convicted Sgt. William Kreutzer then began hearing evidence on whether to sentence him to death. Defense attorneys read a statement in which Kreutzer tried to explain why he did it.

"My reasons then don't make good sense now," the statement read. "I wanted to send a message to the chain of command that had forgotten the welfare of the common soldier."

"I don't know why I thought my actions would accomplish this. ... I'm truly sorry for the damage I caused."

Also at the sentencing hearing, one of the 18 soldiers wounded in the attack Oct. 27 testified from a wheelchair because he was paralyzed from the waist down by a bullet fired by Kreutzer.

"There's nothing that I can do on my own anymore," said Chief Warrant Officer Abraham Castillo, a former helicopter pilot. "Somebody has to be with me at all times. ... I can barely hold an eating utensil."

Any execution would be by lethal injection. The last time the Army executed a soldier was in 1961.

The jury deliberated for slightly less than two hours before finding Kreutzer guilty of premeditated murder in the death of Maj. Stephen Badger. Kreutzer was also convicted on attempted murder charges for each of the 18 fellow members of the 82nd Airborne Division who were wounded as 1,300 members of the elite unit set out on a four-mile run before daybreak.

The shooting took place as the soldiers stood in formation in a small athletic field illuminated by eight banks of lights. The shots, marked by muzzle flashes and tracer rounds, came out of the darkness from a foxhole on the edge of the woods.

Kreutzer, 27, of Clinton, Md., had pleaded guilty to Badger's murder before the court-martial. But prosecutors refused to accept the plea, deciding to seek the death penalty by proving premeditation.

Kreutzer's lawyers contended he was under stress and suffering from a personality disorder.

Kreutzer, who loved guns and had no social life, also was called names like "Crazy Kreutzer" and "Silence of the Lambs," said defense attorney Capt. Stephen Stokes.

Prosecutor Capt. Paul Barden said Kreutzer loaded his magazine the night before the attack with hollow-point and tracer bullets for his AR-15, the civilian version of the M-16, so he could aim easily in the morning fog and cause great pain.

The defense rested late Tuesday afternoon after calling five witnesses and submitting statements on Kreutzer's behalf from five other people. Jurors were scheduled to begin deliberations on Kreutzer's sentence Wednesday.

Bill Gates helps finance world-class DNA lab

By Gina Kolata
N.Y. Times Service

The University of Washington has jumped into the DNA sequencing business in a big way, building a world-class center to study the exact order of the chemicals that make up human DNA. And the seed money, the $12 million that has allowed the university to lure the stars of science to its campus? It came from Bill Gates, chairman of the Microsoft Corp.

Experts on sequencing, the term for determining the order of a gene's building blocks, say that the connection is not surprising. In the last few years, it has become increasingly clear that the Human Genome Project, the plan to sequence human DNA and map the position of human genes, would have to turn into a project in computer science and in engineering such things as robots to do laboratory work. So computer scientists who used to spend their days devising clever methods for speeding up solutions to classic mathematical problems are now figuring out how to speed up the processing of data on DNA sequences.

"We've always known that the day would come when engineering would play a critical role" in the human genome project, said Dr. David Botstein, referring to the invasion of computer engineers and programmers into biology laboratories. "That day has arrived," he added.

The influx has not come without some resistance from biologists dismayed at the prospect of having their own subject wrested away from them, Botstein said. At first, he said, "biologists viewed it with considerable alarm and, on the part of some people, quite vocal distaste about the necessity of making it that way." But most have become resigned to the situation, Botstein said. These biologists hope, some would say in vain, that once the computer experts have processed all the information in the genome, they will go back where they came from and let biologists resume the study of life.

One of the computer scientists is in fact a biologist who spent years learning the computer side of the business. Dr. Eric Green, chief of the Genome Technology Branch at the National Center for Human Genome Research in Bethesda, Md., said, "I was drawn in for the engineering challenge."

Since he is, in fact, a biologist, albeit one with a strong computer science bent, some of his colleagues have looked askance at his current technical focus. Green said, "Some academics would say, 'You're not doing real science. You're not doing real biology.'"

Seemingly overnight, the technology became so sophisticated that the major academic players, selected a few months ago for what Botstein calls the "heavy duty sequencing," are at just six centers in the United States and four outside the country. The work has become so specialized that "it's getting very late for new start-ups," said Dr. Maynard V. Olson, a biologist on the team at the University of Washington in Seattle.

Computer scientists say that it takes a full-time commitment to remain a player in this field. Dr. James Orlin, a professor of operations research at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, said that he had recently dropped out of the project after three years of work because he could not devote all his efforts to it. "To succeed in this area," Orlin said, "you have to devote yourself to it more or less full time."

Although biologists are still calling the shots, some see an entirely new field of science emerging as the processing of biological data becomes the domain of computer experts.

"We still do frame the problems and define the areas," said Dr. Leroy Hood, a biologist who heads the molecular biotechnology department at the University of Washington and who personally interested Gates in the project. But Hood added, "As computer scientists come in knowing more and more about biology, they will chart their own course. Once they get into it, we don't tell them what to do or where to go. They just take off."

Hood said that it had been hard for some computer scientists to appreciate the complex nature of biological problems and the creative effort it takes to solve them. When he first approached computer scientists for help, he said, they were arrogant and somewhat dismissive.

"Computer scientists would say, 'I can solve your problem — just tell me what it is,'" Hood said. But then, he said, they would come back with a solution to an idealized problem with all the wrinkles removed, which had little to do with reality. Computer scientists, Hood said, "aren't worth anything unless they really learn the biology."

Meteors shower Earth with trillions of little diamonds

By William J. Broad
N.Y. Times Service

Speeding rocks from space that have slammed into Earth periodically over the ages are usually seen as agents of destruction and death, begetting global palls of dust that block sunlight, disrupt the climate and do in creatures like the dinosaurs.

But it turns out that the same upheavals that blast craters in solid granite and spew tons of incandescent rock into the sky also have a tendency to produce diamonds, trillions of them, more than any crook ever dreamed of.

Alas for gem lovers and investment bankers, most of the impact diamonds are microscopic. But some are larger — the size of match heads or peanuts — and are considered good enough for industrial use, if not jewelry.

But over all, experts say, the discovery is likely to be more of a boon for understanding Earth's cataclysmic past than for commercial diamond mining. That history is important because periodic strikes from space are thought to have repeatedly shaped life's evolution, killing off some species and making room for others. Yet such violent episodes tend to be surrounded by mystery and debate.

Scientists have now found diamonds in more than a half-dozen impact zones around the globe and are hunting for other places where the enormous heats and pressures of cosmic collisions have turned plain old carbon into the hardest substance known to humans. To date, it appears that no crater examined for diamonds has failed to reveal them.

"The question is whether diamond is going to be a ubiquitous phase in the ejecta," Dr. Peter S. Fiske, a planetary scientist at the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory in California, said in an interview. "It's just a question of going to look at these other craters."

The American Geophysical Union, the world's largest professional group devoted to earth studies, based in Washington, recently held its first meeting on impact diamonds and mineralogy, which Fiske helped organize.

The rocks of old craters, experts say, probably hide thousands and perhaps millions of tons of diamonds. The rub is getting them. Candidate rocks can be very deep, buried over the eons by such geological processes as erosion and sedimentation.

And even when in hand, raw rocks have to sit for weeks and months in caustic baths that slowly eat away softer rock with deadly cocktails of nitric, hydrochloric, perchloric and sulfuric acids, among other nasty substances. But the residue is pure diamond.

Western experts say that the Russians have investigated mining impact craters for diamonds in remote parts of Siberia and that Western companies are quietly conducting similar studies.

"It may be that a lot of craters have diamonds," Dr. Richard A. F. Grieve, a geophysicist at the Geological Survey of Canada who is a leading crater-identification expert, said in an interview. "You never know, in the right place they might be commercial grade."

One company, Grieve added, is now looking for gemstones in a North American crater. "They don't think it's commercial, but they don't want to get caught with their pants down," he said, adding that he was not allowed to disclose the company's name.

The world's largest known crater, named Sudbury after a nearby town, is a giant scar some 155-miles across in Ontario, Canada.

Earth's face is marred by 150 or so authenticated impact craters. More are added at the rate of up to five a year as geologists find new evidence of collision fury. But some candidates repeatedly fail to make the list. The problem is knowing how to distinguish the scars of cosmic impacts from those made by volcanoes and earthquakes and gentler processes like sedimentation and glacial action.

Dole's planned 'tolerance plank' sparks debate

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bob Dole's latest proposal to adjust the GOP's anti-abortion plank drew harsh criticism from abortion foes Tuesday and even the chairman of the Republican platform committee expressed reservations.

As Dole bid farewell to the Senate, his plan to attach a "declaration of tolerance" to the party's anti-abortion plank was derided as "morally absurd" by Pat Buchanan, his conservative primary challenger.

"We must never tolerate the idea that falsehoods are equal to truth, that wrong is equal to right, that ideas that are morally objectionable should be accorded the same respect as ideas that are morally sound," Buchanan said.

Dole apparently won a truce last week by reaffirming his opposition to abortion while his aides were saying any language expressing tolerance for different viewpoints would be placed in the platform's preamble.

But on Monday, Dole insisted a statement to make it clear "we're tolerant" should go directly into the anti-abortion plank.

Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., the platform committee chairman, noted on CNN the Dole camp's previous offer to refer to tolerance in the preamble.

"I much prefer that to his latter formulation, so we're going to have a long talk — all of us — and work this out," said Hyde, whose staunch anti-abortion record reassured conservatives when Dole named him to the convention post.

Telephone calls to Dole's campaign were not immediately returned.

Several GOP governors who have been threatening to fight the party's anti-abortion plank praised Dole's modified position.

California Gov. Pete Wilson said inclusive language would be meaningless if it were relegated to the preamble, and a spokesman for Gov. William Weld of Massachusetts called Dole's overture "a starting point."

Midland teens go on trial in mall burglary-murder case

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Two Midland teens are on trial on charges of delinquency for felony murder for their alleged part in a burglary at the Midland Park Mall that led to the death of Marco Antonio Sanchez on Oct. 25, 1996.

Rafael Carlos Carillo and Antonio Salazar, both 16, are alleged to have broken into a back door at Beall's department store, setting off silent alarms and bringing police Cpl. Jim White to the scene.

A Midland grand jury later determined that a crowbar-wielding Sanchez attacked White and that the injured

White was justified in firing the shot that killed Sanchez.

The youths are being charged with felony murder under state statutes that hold accomplices responsible for a death that occurs during the commission of a felony, said Assistant County Attorney Danna Gallegos who is prosecuting the case with Midland County Attorney Mark Dettman.

"If you are engaged in felony conduct and a death results, you are liable," Ms. Gallegos said.

Failing a conviction on this charge, attorneys for the prosecution are also charging the defendants with the lesser included offenses of burglary of a building and aggravated assault, she said.

County Court-at-Law Judge Al Wolvord is presiding over the trial that began Tuesday. It was moved to the 142nd District Courtroom to better accommodate the 12 jurors and one alternate who will decide the case, a court official said.

One of the highlights of Tuesday's testimony was the playing of taped police radio transmissions on the night of Sanchez's death.

On the tape the voice of the police dispatcher, who was directing White to the site of the triggered alarm, can be heard. White can be heard advising the dispatcher that a rear door was indeed open and that panes of glass had been broken out.

As the tape was played for the jury, Dettman paused the condensed tape to provide accurate time lapses between radio transmissions.

It is during one of these lapses that the attack occurred. As Dettman restarted the tape recorder, an agitated White can be heard saying, "Need the supervisor and an ambulance ... shots fired, one down."

White was able to keep one of the young accomplices detained, but the other fled and was later arrested several blocks away.

The tape indicates that calls were made to the dispatcher in an attempt to

City Council OKs $140,000 for police mobile substation

Members also discuss distribution of federal block grant funds.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Money was allocated to purchase a mobile police substation and preliminary distribution of federal block grant funds was discussed by the City Council Tuesday.

Authorization of $140,000 for a mobile police substation — postponed from the last council meeting because of cost concerns — was approved. That money will be coupled with $36,000 in seized drug dollars to pay for the station on wheels.

The substation will be able to drive into neighborhoods — and stay a day or a few weeks — to deal with specific problems, police said. The unit could also be used for community policing, to assist Drug Abuse Resistance Education officers and be called out during disasters.

Originally, officials expected to budget $140,000 for the vehicle. But the price tag presented to the council was about $176,000.

As a result, several council members raised concerns about the cost of amenities — including a $1,000 sound system and a $605 refrigerator — for the mobile substation.

Instead of cutting some of the costs — which police officials defended as needed for operations and durability — Police Chief Richard Czech offered to make up the difference using the department's seizure funds.

After the funding was worked out, council member Dale Brown asked the staff to consider purchasing some of the extras independently to save money.

In other council business, preliminary allocations of federal Community Development Block Grant funds were discussed in preparation for a June 25 public hearing on the proposed projects.

The city of Midland has been awarded $1,371,000 in CDBG funds for the upcoming fiscal year, which begins Oct. 1. In addition, the city has $26,288 that is available for distribution from a canceled program.

CDBG allocations must meet one of three objectives: benefit low- to moderate-income residents, prevent or eliminate slum and blight or address urgent community development needs.

The bulk of allocations historically are for street paving, park improvements and housing programs. These projects are generally city-initiated. Non-profit agencies can apply for a portion of the grant — up to 15 percent — for social service programs that meet CDBG requirements.

Preliminary allocations are: Midland YMCA's Prime Time After School Program, $20,000; Midland YMCA's Summer Child Care Program, $20,000; Camp Fire's After School Care, $10,000; Community and Senior Services' Southeast Midland Senior Nutrition Program, $55,000; Casa de Amigos' Home Cleaning Program for the elderly and disabled, $17,500; the city's lot clearing program, $32,500; Midland Neighborhood Housing Services' Homeownership Incentive Program, $50,000; Midland Fire Department.

The case involves about a dozen people accused of defrauding several financial institutions in a scheme to obtain money by submitting false information in connection with the financing of mobile home purchases.

The charges stem from incidents beginning in November 1986 up to February 1990, according to court documents.

On trial now are Max Waylan Cain, Billy Wayne Cox Jr., Mason Booth Long, Alice Marie Barber, Sammie Davis, Darrell "Paul" Freeman, Gene Trout, James "Mike" Caldwell, Tammy Denise Morrow, Larry Wayne Meinzer and Patrick "Rick" Malmstrom.

According to the indictment, Cain was the vice president of several savings and loans in Midland and Odessa and was in charge of mobile home lending.

Martin County asks Bush to prohibit fireworks' sale, use

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

STANTON — Fireworks in rural Martin County, which is predominantly farm and ranch land, will be banned during the drought when Gov. George W. Bush signs an executive order prohibiting the sale, possession and use of fireworks.

"We are in a unique drought situation," Martin County Judge Bob Deavenport said Tuesday following an emergency session of the Commissioners' Court, which unanimously voted to request the ban.

"I think it is a very drastic step, and I am afraid that this is one time it is necessary," Deavenport said.

He said that the court opted not to adopt a provision for a "safe place" to shoot off fireworks for July 4 because of the pervasive dry conditions.

In Midland, the Commissioners' Court on Monday passed a similar resolution to prevent wildfires, particularly during Independence Day celebrations.

In addition to the fireworks-ban proposal, Martin County commissioners reinstated its ban on open burning.

"We had it, but whenever we got the snow (in early April), we let it lapse," Deavenport said. "But we've reinstated that."

Officials release three men held in black church fires

GREENVILLE (AP) — Three men who were questioned in fires deliberately set at two black churches were released without charges Tuesday. Police Chief Barry Paris said, citing a lack of evidence.

"A decision was made by all participating agencies to release all three individuals pending further investigation," Paris said. "At this point, no charges will be filed concerning the fires at the local churches."

"The investigation is not going away. ... We will go however long it takes to bring this case to closure."

The fires at New Light House of Prayer and the Church of the Living God, about a mile away, have been ruled arson, said Steven Steele of the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

Word of the three men's release came shortly after 30 people, including members of the New Black Panther Party, traveled from Dallas to tour the burned churches.

"We've come to Greenville to serve notice that we will not tolerate the burning of black churches," Khalid Muhammad, a former Nation of Islam spokesman, told those gathered at the New Light church, some of whom tossed shotguns. "We will not allow racist Ku Klux Klan, skinheads, Aryan brotherhoods, any of the paramilitary, right-wing, white organizations to terrorize black churches."

"We will stand up all across America. We will set up patrols all across the country," he added. "You catch a cracker lighting a torch to any black church, or any property of black people, we are to send them to the cemetery."

Paris said while the visitors to his city of 23,000 had a right to voice their opinion, he was bothered by some of the language.

"The racial epithets, the slurs. I hate to see anybody in our country feel they have to resort to violence," he said.

The police chief said he's received numerous calls from black residents, including some ministers, saying they don't want the Black Panthers in Greenville.

The Rev. Houston McLendon of Bethlehem Baptist Church said he doesn't believe the com-

MOBILE: Closing arguments may end today

(From 1B)

Cox owned several franchises of the business, and Long was his partner in charge of setup, delivery and service of the mobile homes.

Ms. Barber and several other defendants were salespeople or managers with the businesses, according to court records.

The numerous defense attorneys began their closing arguments Monday afternoon. Court officials said they anticipate the closing arguments to conclude this morning.

Defense attorney Sam Bayless, arguing on behalf of Cain, told the jury that Cain did not intentionally commit fraud and the government must prove he did it intentionally.

He also said that much of the testimony against Cain was "bought and paid for" by the government from witnesses who are criminals or were co-defendants in the same case.

"These people were testifying to save their hides," he said.

More than a dozen other people have already entered guilty pleas in the case and the investigation is ongoing, according to FBI Supervisor Tom Kirspeel.

The indictment alleged that the defendants fraudulently obtained or attempted to obtain money from the savings and loans by submitting false documents and information in connection with customers' purchases and financing.

Among the false information were credit applications, sales contracts, inflated down payment figures, inflated purchase prices, inflated income of the borrowers, employment history and payment sources.

The trial started April 8 in federal Judge Royal Furgeson's court.

Ralph Powell Ranch team earns high-point title at annual Rodeo

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

The Ralph Powell Ranch rodeo team from Midland and Balmorhea was the high-point team among 10 ranch teams Saturday during the ninth annual Midland Ranch Rodeo.

The Powell Ranch "took first place in wild-cow milking, team sorting and double mugging," said J.P. "Pat" McDaniel, chairman of the Midland Ranch Rodeo Association.

The five-member Powell team scored 42 out of 50 possible points in the five-event rodeo: wild-cow milking, team sorting, double mugging, steer doctoring, and calf-branding. Team leader was Shirley Naff Newcomb. On her team were cowboys Dirk Ratzlaff, Bo Douthitt, James Garlick and Ralph Powell.

The Powell Ranch took third place in calf-branding, which was won by the Dean Ranch team whose leader was Rocky Dean. Competing with Dean were Jim Phillips, Shawn Adams, Rusty Adams and Bobby Boyd.

The Yarbrough Ranches team, led by Jason Latimer, was first in steer doctoring. Others on the Yarbrough team were Steve Beach, Will Conner, Will Latimer and George Anderson.

The 1996 Ranch Rodeo teams were the Dean Ranch, the J&K Munsell Ranch, the Lazy Z Ranch, the Long X Cattle Company, the NT Ranch, the Powell Ranch, the Reynolds Ranch, Scharbauer Ranches, the Triple Seven Ranch and Yarbrough Ranches.

In the ranch rodeo's chuckwagon competition, Panhandle ranchers Ken and Sue Cunningham of the C Bar C Ranch won a series of first-place awards among chuckwagon camps by winning the high-point wagon, the most authentic camp, the best dessert, the best bread and the best meat (chicken-fried steak).

FIRES: Black Panthers talk to residents of Greenville

(From 1B)

munity needs the outside assistance.

"For the Black Panthers to show up and show more racial hatred, nah," he said.

Police said they had some evidence but not enough to file charges or continue holding the three men, who were arrested early Monday on unrelated charges in a car matching the description of one seen in the driveway of the New Light church shortly before the fire.

Paris wouldn't comment on the evidence. Mark Gross, 22, pleaded no contest Monday for failure to show a driver's license and making alcohol available to minors. Juan Fernando Avila and Bradley Blankenship, both 18, pleaded guilty to a minor in possession of alcohol charge.

Gross' mother, Juanita Gross, said her son told her he and the other two men were at the New Light church around the time of the fire but believes he didn't set the blaze.

"I always believed he didn't do it," she said after learning of her son's release. "He went to a Christian school. He's real friendly. He'll meet anyone. He's got a lot of black friends."

Steele said the three have been eliminated as suspects in the fire that did moderate damage to the Church of the Living God, which was reported three hours after the men were taken into custody.

"We obviously know they weren't involved in that" because of the timing, he said.

Officials also were investigating two other racially tinged incidents involving the initials "KKK" that occurred in the same 24-hour period as the two fires. In one incident, vandals carved "KKK" into one of the greens at a local golf course. The Ku Klux Klan initials also were spray-painted onto a wall at a car wash that was burglarized.

"We can't say it was a conspiracy. It could be coincidental," Steele said. Still, he added, "It's far too early to say it's not a conspiracy."

Also Tuesday, the ATF was investigating a Monday night fire that destroyed a vacant, one-story frame house located a few blocks from the New Light church, which burned Sunday night.

Steele said the ATF sent agents to examine the damage and to see if there is a possible connection to the recent incidents.

Federal officials have talked to a variety of people from "local troublemakers to juveniles running the streets at nights," Steele said.

"We've received phone calls, anonymous phone calls that there could be skinheads responsible," he said. "We've been told there are skinheads in Greenville."

The two fires bring the number of burned black churches in the South to more than 30 in the last year and a half.

Paul Coggins, U.S. Attorney for Texas' Northern District, said he met Tuesday with agents from the FBI and ATF about the fires. He also said he or a representative from his office planned to travel to Washington on Thursday to meet with other prosecutors whose districts have had churches burned.

"We're going to stay at this as long as it takes to determine what happened," Coggins said.

Victims' rights groups use case to rail against mandatory release

HOUSTON (AP) — Victims' rights advocates say serial killer Coral Eugene Watts "should be the poster boy" for their campaign to abolish the state's mandatory prison release law.

Watts has been in prison since 1982 after confessing to the murders of 12 women in Texas and one in Michigan in exchange for a burglary conviction and a 60-year prison term.

Some think Watts could be responsible for as many as 100 slayings in various states. Watts is scheduled for release in 2004, but authorities say it's unlikely that will happen.

Nonetheless, Houston victims' rights advocate Andy Kahan said Monday that Watts' case serves as a reminder of what will happen if mandatory release laws are not changed.

Victims' families have lobbied for years to have the mandatory release laws abolished, and to have the change made retroactive.

Watts "should be the poster boy" for that campaign, Kahan said. The mandatory release law was enacted in 1977 to relieve overcrowding in Texas prisons, and at first applied only to nonviolent criminals. As the prison population grew, some violent criminals became eligible.

Governor unveils tracking system for Texas parolees

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. George W. Bush has set up a net he says will help round up the most likely suspects in local crimes.

Bush on Tuesday unveiled the FUGINET, a computer system with detailed information about every person paroled from Texas prisons.

"FUGINET tightens the law enforcement web around those who would violate our laws and threaten our children," Bush said. The new system was announced in remarks prepared for a news conference at the Tarrant County Sheriff's Department in Fort Worth.

"The names, addresses and histories of thousands of parole violators and registered sex offenders will literally be at law enforcement's fingertips," the governor

Law enforcement officers now can look up criminal histories for people they suspect of crimes through a Department of Public Safety database.

But Karen Hughes, a spokeswoman for Bush, said the FUGINET system will have information only on parolees and will contain more information about them, including photos.

She also said law enforcement officers will be able to search the database by the type of crime and can find parolees in the area who were convicted of similar crimes.

"It gives law enforcement officials instant access to information that could save lives," Bush said.

By the end of the year, the governor said the new database will contain information on 15,000 parole violators, and will eventually contain information on all parolees.

There's currently information in the system on 3,000 parole violators. Bush said they were convicted of some of the most serious crimes.

Federal judge refuses to amend his order to send public housing to Dallas suburbs

DALLAS (AP) — A federal judge refused Tuesday to amend his order that told HUD to ask largely white, middle-class suburbs to accept new public housing and investigate those that don't for possible civil rights violations.

Suburban lawmakers and communities in Dallas County have been in an uproar since U.S. District Judge Jerry Buchmeyer issued the order in April.

But local housing activists and some Dallas officials argue it's time for Dallas County's suburban areas to shoulder a share of the burden. The suburbs are home to almost half the county's population, but only one-fourth of its subsidized housing.

Caught in the middle were Housing Secretary Henry Cisneros and his agency, who must tiptoe through a racial, economic and political considerations.

Cisneros tried to get the judge to amend the order.

Cisneros urged creation of a nonprofit regional entity, a "free-standing, third-party mechanism," that would respond to the plaintiffs involved in Buchmeyer's April ruling.

The Department of Housing and Urban Development filed a motion asking Buchmeyer to stay key sections of his order. In particular, HUD opposed a provision compelling the agency to investigate communities that fail to accept new subsidized housing.

Some said Cisneros was backing down from the order, or giving in to political pressures when his agency filed the motion. They said Cisneros' action came only after House Majority Leader Dick Armey, R-Irving, and fellow Rep. Sam Johnson, R-Dallas, criticized Buchmeyer and summoned Cisneros twice to Capitol Hill to vent their complaints.

Cisneros said he and his agency may be at fault for what may appear to have been an about-face because, when they filed the order, they didn't explain their action.

But the housing secretary said after the April ruling that his agency already had concluded that the ruling's sweeping nature "went beyond what was needed." He said his proposal was a better way to end the public housing fight.

Buchmeyer rejected most of Cisneros' plan, agreeing however to accept HUD's plan to use vouchers to provide subsidized housing to some eligible recipients.

Buchmeyer refused to soften his stance that HUD would have to launch investigations under the Fair Housing Act and Civil Rights Act against suburban communities which refuse to enter into partnerships with the Dallas Housing Authority, said Mindy Tucker, a spokeswoman for Johnson's office.

The judge said he would rule later on a demand that HUD provide air-conditioning and 24-hour security in its housing projects — something HUD said it isn't compelled to do anywhere else in the country.

Cisneros, in a prepared statement, said the judge "appears to have clarified the intent of his original order in ways which bring it more in line with the department's position."

"Specifically, the judge has agreed to consider HUD's proposal for the creation of a region-wide housing counseling program to provide housing opportunities for Dallas residents," Cisneros said. "The judge indicated that the department would be allowed to submit a schedule for improvements to Dallas Housing Authority developments that fulfills the intent of the judge's order but recognizes the department's current funding limitations."

Cisneros said he had not yet decided whether to appeal the judge's ruling.

Bush tells task force on 'faith-based' community service to eliminate barriers to charity work

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas should set minimum standards for charitable programs, then get out of the way so they can help the needy, Gov. George W. Bush told his task force on "faith-based" community service.

"My charge to you today is to make sure that there is an environment in Texas that fosters efforts by faith-based and other service organizations to meet the needs of our Texans who are in crisis," Bush said Tuesday.

The task force — which includes pastors and representatives of religion-based groups such as the Salvation Army — will make recommendations to Bush and the 1997 Legislature.

Bush suggested that task force members consider their own experiences, talk to other groups and review state laws and regulations.

"There are many loving and caring Texans who want to help others ... but to be successful, they need an environment that's free of government red tape and roadblocks," he said.

"The state must ensure basic

health and safety standards, but it must not be so process-oriented that we stifle programs of good will."

Bush said he is convinced that local charities, churches, synagogues and service groups "can help assure that every Texan who needs child care can find it; where every Texan who needs a job or wants a job can find one; and every Texan can find the training necessary to free that person from dependency upon government."

State Comptroller John Sharp, a Democrat seen as a possible candidate in the 1998 governor's race, has his own program designed to organize civic clubs, churches and businesses to help welfare recipients find jobs.

The Republican governor said the two efforts aren't in competition, and he called Sharp's a good one.

"I'm glad others have recognized that the state is not the sole provider of compassion ... I welcome anybody. What I don't welcome is the politicization of the issue. No one's playing one-upmanship on this. At least I'm not. I'm worried about people's hearts and people's souls in the state of Texas," Bush said.

Asked whether he believed Sharp was playing political one-upmanship, Bush said no.

"I think he cares about people's lives. I know the people he's encouraging to be involved care about people's lives, and that is just terrific," Bush said.

Harris County bans fireworks for holiday

HOUSTON (AP) — Parched Harris County on Tuesday banned most fireworks in unincorporated areas for the 10-day span that includes the July Fourth holiday.

The county, suffering from extreme drought like the rest of the state, has had almost 2,000 grass fires and other nonstructural blazes already this year.

County commissioners granted a fire marshal's request that they use the Texas Disaster Act of 1975 to ban the sale and use of Class C fireworks in unincorporated areas from June 24 through July 4.

The ban includes all fireworks except controlled displays like traditional public fireworks shows held on holidays.

Texas Pyrotechnic Association lobbyist Mike French, who failed in his attempt to block the ban, complained that commissioners were overreacting to the drought.

"The fires are no higher this year than they were last year," he said.

Prices slump

New York — Crude oil futures fell on growing concern that surging production combined with limited oil sales by Iraq will cause a surplus during the second half of the year.

Crude oil for July delivery fell 19 cents to $20.06 a barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange. Local crude purchasers lowered their posted price 25 cents to $18.50 a barrel. July natural gas for delivery at the Henry Hub in Louisiana rose 3.5 cents to $2.425 for each million British thermal units.

On Friday, the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries raised its output ceiling to 25.033 million barrels a day from 24.52 million barrels a day. The increase reflected in part the 800,000 barrels a day Iraq plans to export during a six-month period under a United Nations "oil-for-aid" plan.

While traders didn't expect OPEC's other members to agree on production cuts to make room for the Iraqi crude, concern is mounting that the decision may create a glut of oil.

OPEC is pumping a 16-year high of more than 26 million barrels a day, 1.5 million more than the International Energy Agency predicts the world will require from OPEC during the second half. And output from the rest of the world, led by the North Sea, is expected to reach records of 43.8 million and 45.3 million barrels a day during the next two quarters, the IEA said.

Crude prices pared steeper losses after a standoff in Iraq between U.N. weapons inspectors and Iraqi guards, traders said. A U.N. spokesman confirmed a standoff occurred as the monitors tried to inspect a facility.

Dollar weakens

NEW YORK — The dollar rose against the yen Tuesday, deriving strength from falling Japanese interest rates and tame U.S. inflation data. But late-day profit-taking helped send the dollar mostly lower against other currencies.

In late New York trading, the dollar was quoted at 109.43 Japanese yen, up from 109.00 late Monday.

The dollar also was changing hands in New York at 1.5347 German marks, down from 1.5350.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Monday: 1.2645 Swiss francs, down from 1.2669; 5.1980 French francs, down from 5.1995; 1,549.60 Italian lire, down from 1,550.00; and 1.3655 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3634.

The British pound was quoted at $1.5350, up from $1.5345.

Markets slip

NEW YORK — Stocks turned mostly lower with bonds Tuesday as enthusiasm about an encouraging inflation report proved fleeting amid uncertainties over upcoming economic data.

The Dow Jones industrial average fell 19.21 to 5,668.66, retreating from an early advance of nearly 41 points.

Most broad-market measures also turned negative as bonds shed early gains inspired by news that wholesale prices fell in May.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by a slim margin on the New York Stock Exchange, where volume totaled 401.0 million shares, up sharply from Monday's anemic pace before the PPI report.

The NYSE's composite index fell 0.62 to 359.55, the Standard & Poor's 500-stock index fell 1.19 to 670.97, and the American Stock Exchange's market value index fell 1.91 to 597.57.

The technology-heavy Nasdaq composite index rose 0.72 to 1,230.76 as several industry bellwethers posted gains.

Texas towns wise with tax incentives

By Juan B. Elizondo Jr.
Associated Press

AUSTIN — Local governments in Texas are using tax incentives wisely to keep growing companies in place and to attract new ones, state lawmakers were told Tuesday.

While tax incentives raise controversy because they cost taxpayers money, they are being properly used as an economic development tool, said two professors from Baylor University.

"Tax abatement is a very important item on the menu of incentives available," said Dr. Thomas Kelly, an economics professor. "It doesn't appear that residents are being gouged."

Incentives include tax abatements, or exemptions from property taxes; and tax increment financing, which uses some of the taxes paid by a new or expanding company to help pay bonds purchased for related infrastructure improvements.

Texas local governments gave up about $161.8 million in property taxes last year. No estimate was available for tax dollars that went into TIF agreements.

Taxing authorities use incentives to keep growing companies in place and to lure new businesses. Many opponents say other factors, such as the local cost of living, transportation facilities and other taxes, are more important to attracting companies.

But some acknowledge that if other cities and counties vying for a companies' new warehouse or headquarters offer tax breaks, Texas cities and counties might feel pressure to offer incentives as well.

The state offers some tax incentives, but most come from local authorities.

"Everybody is stuck in a situation where they may all know that other things are more important, but no one wants to be first to let go" of the incentives, said Dick Lavine, a policy analyst for the Center for Public Policy Priorities, a policy research group.

Sen. David Sibley, R-Waco and chairman of the Senate Economic Development Committee, said if his panel had found that local authorities were misusing incentives, he would have moved to curtail or get rid of them.

Sibley

But he said he is satisfied that is not happening.

"We found that they were in fact using taxpayers' money rationally," Sibley said, adding that there is no basis to argue that money is being wasted.

Dr. James Henderson, another Baylor economics professor, said while tax incentives aren't being misused, there is not enough information available to determine whether too much is being spent on them.

He said that in general, local authorities are paying more for jobs considered more valuable and less for jobs ranked as less valuable.

The committee adopted a series of proposals that would require more reporting from local authorities to the state so that further analysis could be done. Those proposals need legislative approval next year before they could take effect.

Wholesale prices follow lower energy prices

By Martin Crutsinger
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Wholesale inflation retreated a bit in May as energy prices declined after two months of troubling gains.

The good inflation news failed to cheer financial markets for long as many private economists continued to warn that a Federal Reserve interest rate increase was still likely next month.

The Labor Department reported Tuesday that its producer price index declined 0.1 percent last month, a better-than-expected showing that initially triggered a rally in both stock and bond prices.

However, the Dow Jones industrial average, which was up nearly 41 points in morning trading, gave up all of those gains and closed down 19.21 to 5,668.66. After an initial surge, demand for the 30-year Treasury bond fell, pushing the yield back up to 7.12 percent, unchanged from Monday when it had climbed to the highest level in more than a year.

Many private analysts said financial markets remained extremely jittery despite the good inflation news, fearing that faster-than-expected growth will force the central bank to hike rates when they next meet on July 23.

"You can't do much better than we have been doing on the (producer price index), but that doesn't stop the Fed from worrying about inflation. They are focused on wages, and wages are starting to creep up," said Cynthia Latta, an economist at DRI-McGraw Hill Inc.

The government was scheduled to report the closely watched consumer price figure on Wednesday. In advance, economists were predicting moderation at the retail level as well, reflecting lower energy prices. Many forecast a 0.3 percent rise in consumer prices in May, down from a 0.4 percent April advance.

Not all analysts agreed that the Fed will begin raising interest rates in July, which would be the first increase since February 1995.

Bruce Steinberg, economist at Merrill Lynch in New York, said the benign producer price report "supports our minority view that the Fed will not tighten policy" next month.

Wholesale prices so far this year have been rising at an annual rate of 2.2 percent, little changed from a 2.1 percent increase for the first five months of 1995.

President Clinton, obviously hoping to avoid rising interest rates in an election year, told reporters last week that despite a big jump in employment last month, he had seen "no evidence of inflation."

For May, energy prices at the wholesale level fell 0.6 percent. The cost of home heating plunged 7.3 percent and gasoline prices, which had been rising sharply in the past two months, held steady in May.

Many analysts said they expected even better news on energy in coming months, reflecting the fact that crude oil prices have been coming down with the prospect of increased supplies on the Food prices were well-behaved for the second straight month in May, showing no change following a decline of 0.3 percent in April.

Excluding the volatile energy and food sectors, the underlying inflation rate showed no change in May and would have actually fallen had it not been for a huge 3.2 percent jump in tobacco prices, the biggest rise in this category since a 5 percent increase in December 1993.

The price of passenger cars was also up in May, rising 0.3 percent, the biggest increase since a 0.4 percent advance last December.

BANK ONE PAYMENT SERVICES L.L.C. has opened an office serving the West Texas area.

Phyllis Hogan said her company — formerly First Data Processing — sets up credit card and debit card accounts for businesses and can provide electronic data systems and machinery for electronic payment. She said the company is affiliated with Bank One but is an independent company.

Another service Ms. Hogan provides is a procurement card for area oil businesses. Chevron, for example, will be going to a procurement card system in July, she said. This means that vendors selling goods to Chevron must be set up to process Chevron's card in order to work with Chevron. Ms. Hogan said a number of businesses are turning to these procurement cards because they receive better receipts and the vendor gets his money faster. Hogan can be reached at 520-4596.

Just opened in Oak Ridge Square beneath the flags is THE BEACH snowcone stand.

First-time businessman Spencer Beal said his stand serves 40 established flavors and 20 new flavors and offers curbside service where the customer parks and the stand operator comes out and serves him. Walk-up service is also available. A shaded table is available as are several benches for customers who want to enjoy snowcones on the premises.

Hours are noon to 10 p.m. seven days a week.

Midland Park Mall will host a sports card show Friday, Saturday and Sunday during mall hours.

Also, the Midland Westside Lions Club will operate a gift wrapping booth for Father's Day presents Friday and Saturday.

Myers interim AD

LUBBOCK — Gerald Myers, associate athletic director at Texas Tech University, on Tuesday was named interim athletic director to replace Robert Bockrath, who resigned to become AD at Alabama.
Myers served as Tech's men basketball coach for 20 years, posting a 326-261 record, the best winning percentage in school history.
A native of Borger, he was Tech's first All-Southwest Conference athlete in any sport, gaining that honor in 1958 on the basketball court.
Bockrath will remain at Tech through June 21.

Boxing reform

WASHINGTON — After four decades of toying with boxing reform, Congress is finally on the verge of doing something to regulate the disjointed and corruption-prone sport.
But not much.
"This bill doesn't go far enough," said Rep. Matthew Martinez, D-Calif., echoing a refrain Tuesday of other Congressmen, boxing officials and former heavyweight champion Tim Witherspoon.
Two House subcommittees held hearings on the Professional Boxing Safety Act. The act's major plank is designed to prevent boxers from fighting in one state after being suspended in another.
Boxers would be required to obtain identification cards, and states would be required to report fight results and suspensions within 48 hours of a bout.
"It is a routine procedure for a fighter to get knocked out in New York and go to Philadelphia the next week and get knocked out under a different name, go to Atlanta the next week and then Las Vegas, because the promoters have to make the undercards," said Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., testifying before the committee.
The Senate version of the bill, passed last year, also provides for a series of minimal medical standards — a licensed physician at ringside, physical examinations before a fight, an on-call ambulance during a fight and insurance for both fighters — most of which are already mandated by most states.
Boxing is currently regulated by individual state-run boxing commissions, each with its own rules on everything from medical standards to scoring and judging systems.

Diablos down Angels

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

Midland's Eddie Christian had his best night as an Angel at Christensen Stadium Tuesday night, but unfortunately, the rest of the M-Angels had few answers for El Paso pitcher Jeff D'Amico.
D'Amico hurled his third complete game of the season, defeating the Angels 5-3 and two of those runs were on Christian's solo bombs to right and left center.
The Diablos moved to within two games of Texas League West leader Wichita with the win as the Wranglers fell to red-hot San Antonio. There are only five games left in the first half race and Midland's un-magic number for first half elimination remains at one as the Angels are now in sole possession of last place in the West, five games in back of Wichita.

And the "streak" continues for Midland. Christensen Stadium has been a rude host to the Angels, who have now lost nine consecutive games at home.
However, the reason for the loss No. 9 Tuesday was D'Amico, who retired 17 of 18 Midland batters in one stretch. The only thorn was Christian, who blasted deep home runs off of D'Amico in the first and third innings.
"It wasn't the first time I've had two homers in a game (as a pro)," Christian said, "but he (D'Amico) pitched a great game. I'm not a home run hitter. It was just one of those things that happens."
D'Amico won for only the third time in seven decisions this year, but if he stays healthy, he has a bright future ahead of him. Coming into the season, D'Amico owned a 13-3 pro record with a 2.39 ERA. But he missed the 1993 season with a shin fracture and sore elbow and had elbow surgery during the 1994 season.

"Everything feels good right now," D'Amico said. "I've been pitching pretty good. Tonight, the change-up worked for me and that pitch helped keep them off my fast-ball."
D'Amico faced the minimum number of Angels in five of his nine innings. Christian got three of the six hits D'Amico gave up and scored all three Angel runs. It seemed like no one else showed up on the offensive side of the ball even though centerfielder Bo Ortiz made

Judge refuses to throw out Irvin drug indictment

Associated Press

DALLAS — A judge on Tuesday refused to throw out Michael Irvin's indictment on felony drug possession.
The charges stem from a raid at a motel where the Dallas Cowboys All-Pro receiver was celebrating his birthday.

Defense attorney Don Godwin pleaded for state District Judge Manny Alvarez to throw out the indictment against Irvin and two topless dancers because the grand jury was improperly selected.
Alvarez rejected that argument but granted the defense seven other evidentiary and procedural motions, allowing the defense access to defendants' statements to law officers and access to crime scene photos and other evidence.

But a lengthy hearing on defense attorneys' motion to keep out evidence of the drugs seized in the raid will resume at 9 a.m. Wednesday.
"What we believe the law requires is that Michael Irvin be put on notice of what he specifically is charged with and on what specific date," said Godwin, arguing that an approximate offense date flawed the indictment.
By alleging possession of cocaine and marijuana, "on or about March 4," Godwin contended the indictment violated the law.

But prosecutor Mike Gillett said, "everybody in Dallas knows what we are talking about here."
Alvarez dismissed defense arguments that prosecutors failed to get individual responses from prospective grand jurors on questions required by state law, DENVER — Years of frustration melted away as Colorado sports fans finally got what they have waited so long for, a pro championship.

"I've been waiting 25 years for this. It's a dream come true!" shouted Mike May from his perch atop a white limousine cruising downtown Denver's Larimer Street.
Tens of thousands of celebrants flooded downtown Denver late Sunday night after the Colorado Avalanche won the Stanley Cup with a triple-overtime 1-0 victory over the Florida Panthers. Pedestrians in the street and heavy Patrick Roy and John Vanbiesbrouck played on and on, well past midnight, stopping every shot from every angle in one of the biggest games of their long careers.

Then, after 118 shots, the seemingly impossible happened.
The 119th — low and hard through a screen in front of Vanbiesbrouck — finally got through and Colorado won its Stanley Cup. Florida lost no respect.

Sinking Sonics want to escape Chicago broom

So how do the Seattle Sonics, embarrassed by a 22-point blowout in Game 3, keep from being swept by the Chicago Bulls in the NBA Finals Wednesday night?

UIL changes not sitting well with coaches

By Chip Brown
Associated Press

AUSTIN — The Texas Legislature's effort to give local control to school districts has coaches and school administrators outraged over the number of teams a student-athlete can play on during a season.
The University Interscholastic League's policy committee on athletics Tuesday held its annual hearing on proposed rule changes, which include adding wrestling for boys and pole vault in track for girls.
But the meeting was dominated by complaints that the Legislature's revision of the state education code stripped the UIL's ability to regulate a student's participation in non-school sanctioned sports.

The problem, the coaches said, is that students are now free to participate on a non-school team while also participating on a school team. As a result, students are overexerting and getting lured onto teams that lack adequate training and supervision, the officials said.
In one instance, students on a high school basketball team have been invited to leave their school team to travel to Europe and play foreign competition during their school season next year.
In another instance, a father disgruntled about the coach of his daughter's basketball team pulled his daughter off the team and recruited several other girls off the team to form their own team and play games against UIL competition, which is allowed.

"Some enterprising individuals who are either making a profit off of non-school leagues or who get angry at a school coach and pull their youngster from a school team are forming their own teams to play during the school season," said Bonnie Northcutt, policy director for the UIL.
Lucky Gamble, of the Alto Independent School District, said two members of his school's baseball team were recruited onto a team that also includes college players in Nacogdoches.
He said Alto's star pitcher was called on to pitch two 9-inning games for the non-school team just before pitching for the school in the regional finals of the state playoffs. Alto lost the game by one run and barely missed reaching the state tournament.

Limo driver: Blades threatened to get gun

Associated Press

PORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — The limousine driver who took brothers Brian and Bennie Blades and their cousin, Charles Blades, out partying last July 4th says that after arguing, Brian threatened to get a gun and shoot Bennie.

Brian Blades said he was going to show (Bennie). He was going to get his gun and shoot him. He went in the direction of his town house, driver Mike Asher testified this morning.

Brian and Bennie Blades both play in the NFL. Asher's testimony began the second day of Brian Blades' manslaughter trial for the fatal shooting that night of his cousin.

He said the tensions began when the group went to Bennie Blades' home, where Bennie's ex-girlfriend waited angrily to discuss where their daughter would spend the rest of the holiday weekend.

Brian's peace-keeping efforts were rebuffed by Bennie. Brian then became angry and made the statement about getting a gun, Asher said. He noted that Brian Blades appeared to be talking to himself, or to no one in particular, when he made that statement.

Charles Blades, though, did appear to be drunk when he followed Brian to his nearby home in an attempt to make peace between the brothers.

"He couldn't really talk, but it didn't stop him from trying," Asher said of Charles Blades, who died of a single gunshot wound suffered a short time later in a scuffle with Brian over a handgun.

On Monday, the first day of testimony in Blades' manslaughter trial, the 911 emergency tape that captured the football player's cry for help after his cousin's fatal shooting silenced the Broward County courtroom.

"I need you to come right now. I need you to come now," Blades screamed, his voice hoarse with emotion, as the tape was played Monday.

Then the Seattle Seahawks receiver began to cry, his head bowed, jurors watching. Circuit Judge Susan Lebow sent jurors out of the room and called a five-minute recess.

A police officer testified that as she reached the scene in the early morning hours of July 5, 1995, Blades was shouting out again and again: "Why, Why, Why, Why?"

DALLAS — More than three years after former Dallas Cowboys punter Colton Ridgway was found dead in his home, investigators say they can prove he was killed through a murder-for-hire scheme.

Kenneth A. Bicking III, 35, was in custody of Florida officials on Monday awaiting an extradition hearing to face a Dallas County charge for the capital murder of Ridgway, who was a punter and kicker for the Cowboys in 1965.

"I believe we'll be able to show that this was a murder-for-hire," said Norman Kinne, Dallas Coun-on questions required by state law, including information on any felony convictions.

Judge John Creuzot presided over the grand jury's monthly deliberations that resulted in the indictments of Irvin, Jasmine Jennifer Nabwangu and Angela Renee Beck.

"We are not suggesting that Judge Creuzot did anything knowingly to violate Michael Irvin's rights," Godwin said. "But some things were done, we believe your honor, that were outside of the law."

During testimony, Irvin — wearing a green suit and sporting dark sunglasses — glanced sideways at Godwin and other defense attorneys, Kevin Clancy and Royce West, seated at his table.

Irvin's trial will begin June 24. Irvin, 30, former teammate Alfredo Roberts and both women were found in an Irving motel room with drugs, police said after a March 4 raid. A Dallas County grand jury on April 1 indicted the Irvin and the women on cocaine and marijuana possession charges.

The U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service also has begun deportation proceedings against Nabwangu, who is a citizen of Canada. The agency contends the 21-year-old violated the terms of her tourist visa by becoming a dancer at a Dallas topless club.

Murder-for-hire scheme uncovered in Ridgway case ty's first assistant district attorney. "It's our belief that this was the triggerman."

Bicking was arrested Friday at his brother's home in Fort Lauderdale, Fla. for the May 13, 1993, shooting death of Ridgway. The 54-year-old ex-football player was shot nine times shortly after returning home from dinner with his wife, Joan.

"At that time, we had no suspects — nothing," University Park police and fire Chief Robert O. Dixon said Monday. "It was very unusual."

Dixon said he could not further comment on the case or on Bicking's arrest because the investigation and legal proceedings are ongoing.

Kinne, however, said, "Without using names, I'll say that there are at least two other suspects."

The Ridgways, who had nearly divorced several times, arrived home around 10:30 p.m. in separate cars on the night of his death.

Ridgway entered the house through the front door, while Mrs. Ridgway said she went up the back stairs of their duplex and found him shot.

Her daughters by a previous marriage had alleged in a lawsuit that their mother had a hand in their stepfather's killing. That case was settled out of court.

Mrs. Ridgway has adamantly denied allegations that she was involved.

A grand jury later declined to indict Mrs. Ridgway, who was the beneficiary of two life insurance policies totaling more than $600,000.

Since then, the case has remained unsolved.

"We've been real busy investigating this case," Dixon said. "I'd hesitate to say we've been working on it every day, but nearly that often. We've been very active following lead after lead after lead to get where we are today."

CLASSIC: Pair combine for 119 saves and swept the Panthers in the best-of-7 series 4-0.

(From 1C)

"You cannot look at the scoreboard or what the other guy does on the other side," Roy said. "If he's tough to beat, you've got to make yourself also tough to beat."

Roy stopped all 63 shots he faced, grabbing powerful blasts with his glove, stopping sliding pucks with outstretched pads and even knocking one out of midair with his stick.

Vanbiesbrouck was equally spectacular in turning aside 55. And there was little he could do on the 56th, Krupp's winner.

"He tied it up and it seemed to come through a pair of legs or close to them," Vanbiesbrouck said. "I got the tip of my pad on it and it went in. What can you say?"

The fans filling Miami Arena knew what to say. First, they threw plastic rats on the ice, now a Miami Arena ritual.

Then they chanted, "Beezer, Beezer, Beezer" as the goalie's teammates surrounded him for more than a minute in his crease. He then skated to Roy and they talked briefly, two warriors with mutual admiration.

"He was pretty anxious to grab the Cup. I was kind of anxious to get out of there," Vanbiesbrouck said. "Basically, all I could say was congratulations, you deserved it."

Roy's 2.78 regular-season goals against average was only 12th best in the NHL, but he has always been an excellent playoff goalie.

He won two other Stanley Cups with Montreal in 1986 and 1993 and was named playoff MVP both times. He has won eight straight finals games, two shy of the record of Ken Dryden, another former Montreal goalie.

The Canadiens traded Roy on Dec. 6, four days after he was left in for nine goals in an 11-1 loss to Detroit and told team president Ronald Corey he wouldn't play for Montreal again. Roy doubted he would have been traded if his new team hadn't moved from Quebec after last season.

"I don't want to jab anybody in Montreal," he said. "It's all over."

Vanbiesbrouck was in eight playoffs for the New York Rangers and was the first player taken by Florida in the 1993 expansion draft. His 2.68 goals against average was only the eighth best this season.

In this year's playoffs, Roy played all but one minute of the 22 games, allowing just 51 goals with three shutouts. He was a key as Colorado eliminated Vancouver and Chicago then upset Detroit, which had set a league record with 62 wins.

Vanbiesbrouck missed just 60 minutes of his 22 games and had only one lapse in the finals when he allowed four goals in the first period of an 8-1 rout in Game 2.

But he played well in the opening 3-1 loss and a 3-2 setback in Game 3. He, and Roy, were at their best in the deciding game, a classic confrontation worthy of a championship series.

"I never thought anybody was ever going to score," said Joe Sakic, who was named playoff MVP for his 18 goals, one shy of the single-season record. He had a hand in the winning goal, winning a faceoff and getting the puck to Krupp.

Vanbiesbrouck didn't get much offensive support from a team whose surprising roll to the finals was built on tenacious defense. Florida was outscored 15-4 in the series.

"Beezer made some unbelievable saves out there," Roy said. "It had to be a goal like it happened — a screen shot and a perfect shot."

Unfortunately for Vanbiesbrouck, he was facing Roy, who was just as focused and just as brilliant.

DENVER: 6 a.m. crowd greets team traffic produced instant gridlock and a cacophony of honking horns, shouting and cheering.

The party turned ugly around 1:15 a.m., when police used tear gas, Mace and batons to disperse about 3,000 unruly revelers who set fire to newspapers, climbed lamp posts and overturned benches. Police detective John Wyckoff said 15 arrests were made. Three people were hospitalized with minor injuries.

The team wasted little time in Miami after the game ended, returning to Denver on a charter flight that arrived at Denver International Airport at 6:20 a.m. About 1,000 fans greeted the players.

Team captain Joe Sakic emerged from the plane holding the 34-pound Stanley Cup aloft. Sakic, the MVP of the finals, paraded up and down the stairs to the plane waving the cup before the cheering fans, most of whom stayed up all night to witness their team's arrival.

The crowd cheered continuously for nearly 10 minutes waving signs that said "Thank you Quebec" and "The best." The Avalanche moved last year from Quebec, where they were the Nordiques.

One by one, the weary-looking players and their guests walked down the stairs to applause. Among them was Denver mayor Wellington Webb, wearing a dark blazer with an Avalanche jersey underneath.

"I've been here since 5 a.m. I just celebrated all night, last night, and I had to come here and show the guys how much we support them," said Tim Ellis. "I'd wait all day for a chance to see this."

Colorado sports fans have waited a long time for one of their professional sports teams to bring home a title, and it was the new kid on the block — the Avalanche, which has been in Denver less than a year — that got the job done. The Denver Broncos have been to the Super Bowl four times, but lost every game. The Colorado Rockies and Denver Nuggets have made the playoffs, but never advanced to the finals.

"It's a great sports state, a great sports town," Gov. Roy Romer said. "I hope it triggers several other (championships)."

The celebrating got out of hand on Larimer Street, however. Revelers climbed lamp posts, bent street signs and threw benches. Then they started a bonfire with newspapers and leaped through the flames.

"It was OK and then a few people gave us a little bit of a bruised eye," Wyckoff said.

For the most part, revelers were well-behaved but boisterous. "We're here to celebrate the victory of the century. Stanley Cup, baby," yelled Steve Hicks.

UMass administrators meet

AMHERST, Mass. (AP) — University of Massachusetts administrators met Tuesday to discuss allegations that former center Marcus Camby accepted gifts from agents while playing for the Minutemen.

The university expects to finish its investigation by the end of the summer and submit a report to the NCAA.

Camby, 22, who entered the NBA draft after winning college player of the year honors last season and helping lead UMass to its first Final Four appearance, has admitted accepting cash from one agent and jewelry that another agent bought.

The 6-foot-11 center is expected to be among the top three picks on June 26. The first pick will receive a three-year contract worth $9.1 million.

Accepting such inducements from prospective agents is against NCAA rules and could result in penalties against UMass. Camby faces no sanctions.

Four UMass administrators met Tuesday with Atlantic 10 commissioner Linda Bruno to discuss procedures for an internal investigation. They decided what kind of information they needed and agreed to interview as many people as possible, associate chancellor Susan Pearson said.

"We are committed to doing a thorough review to determine if anything inappropriate has occurred and, if so, how the university can improve its procedures and programs to guard against similar cases in the future," said Pearson, chairwoman of the group.

Meanwhile, Connecticut prosecutors are investigating whether Hartford lawyer-agent Wesley Spears threatened to blackmail Camby into signing with him. Spears allegedly planned to disclose that Camby accepted two pieces of jewelry worth $5,300.

Camby admits accepting the jewelry, but he said it was given to him by two friends, who only later told him Spears had paid for it.

Camby also has said he took "a couple thousand" dollars before his junior season.

Pepperdine baseball coach heading to Mississippi

Associated Press

JACKSON, Miss. — Pepperdine University coach Pat Harrison will be named Wednesday as the new baseball coach at the University of Mississippi.

Ole Miss officials refused Tuesday to confirm the selection of Harrison to replace Don Kessinger, but Pepperdine announced the move in a news release Harrison's resignation from the Malibu, Calif., school.

"We are disappointed to lose a coach of Pat's caliber, as he was a tremendous addition to our staff the last two years," Pepperdine athletic director Wayne Wright said in the release. "Pat possesses outstanding character and integrity, and he will be a positive asset to the University of Mississippi."

Calls placed by The Associated Press to Harrison's office on the Pepperdine campus were not returned Tuesday.

Muster rebounds at Queen's Club

Associated Press

LONDON — Clay-court master Thomas Muster won his first grass-court tournament match Tuesday, overcoming Guillaume Raoux of France 6-7 (5-7), 7-5, 7-6 (7-2) to reach the third round of the $700,000 Queen's tournament.

Determined to silence critics who brand him as only a clay-court specialist, the top-seeded Austrian used the same tactics on grass that he employs on his favorite surface.

His groundstrokes were as effective as always, his passes down the line invariably found their mark, and he even indulged in a little serve and volley as a concession to the surface.

With no breaks of serve in the first set, Muster netted a forehand at 5-3 in the tiebreak as Raoux recovered from 3-5 to 7-5. The Frenchman also ran up a 4-1 lead in the second set before Muster rallied to level the match at one set apiece.

With Raoux constantly complaining about the light in the final set, the battle went to another tiebreak, which Muster claimed 7-2.

"I really enjoyed playing," Muster said after the 2-hour, 32-minute marathon. "I missed a chance in the first set, but turned it around and played a good tiebreak at the end."

Although he won two grass-court matches in Davis Cup play in February, Muster's only other grass-court experience has been at Wimbledon, where he has lost all of his matches.

Second-seeded Boris Becker came safely through his first test since a thigh injury forced him to miss the French Open. The German beat qualifier Chris Haggard of South Africa 6-4, 6-2 in a second-round match.

"At this stage I can say that everything is perfect," Becker said, referring to his fitness. "It took a good two weeks of treatment in Munich, and I've been hitting balls for 10 days since. It's very good to be back on grass."

Sixth-seeded Todd Martin came through his second-round match with fellow American Jared Palmer, winning 6-2, 6-3, while David Wheaton moved past Australian Michael Tebbutt 7-6 (7-4), 6-4.

In first-round play, No. 9 Guy Forget of France defeated Chris Wilkinson of Britain 6-2, 7-6 (7-1), but two other seeds were not as lucky.

Tim Henman of Britain defeated No. 16 Javier Frana of Argentina 6-7 (7-9), 6-4, 6-4 and American Steve Bryan got the best of No. 11 Daniel Vacek of the Czech Republic 6-1, 7-5.

Vacek won the doubles title last week in the French Open with Yevgeny Kafelnikov, who also went on to take the singles title.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 12, 1996

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Analyze your strengths. Are you making the best possible use of your talents? Consult experts if uncertain. Discussing your options with someone who has been helpful in the past lets you put things into proper perspective. Giving in to the "herd instinct" would be a big mistake. Strike out in a different direction. A new group of friends will provide you with the intellectual stimulation you thrive on. Others are eager to reveal what they know. Nurture an important relationship.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DAY: musician Chick Corea, novelist Rona Jaffe, actress Ally Sheedy, actor Timothy Busfield.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Romance has you walking on air. You feel invincible! Do not abuse your authority or privileges. If someone issues a warning, take it seriously. Face-to-face confrontations are best avoided.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): It is better to meet trouble head-on than to look the other way. Neither understate or exaggerate when making a claim for financial damages. Others are counting on your good judgment.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): It may not be possible to stick to your normal routine today. A favorite activity or pastime may have to be postponed. Meet someone's hostility with poise and a romance will continue to blossom.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Avoid passing judgment on someone until you have studied all the factors involved. By recognizing your limitations, you will widen your horizons. Unexpected profits are part of the picture.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Litigation can be embarrassing as well as costly. Someone may make a clever suggestion. Weigh all of your options before making a final decision. Concentrate on worthwhile endeavors related to your career or business.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Off-the-record conferences can be beneficial. Do not be in a rush to reveal your plans or intentions. Someone at work could make a romantic overture.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A better-than-ever-average day lies ahead. Regular business, theatrical experiments and scientific research are on the favored list. Be serious, not grim, about romance.

(For your personalized daily Jeanne Dixon horoscope, based on your own date of birth, call 1-900-988-7788. Your phone company will bill you 99 cents a minute.)

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): The emphasis today is on tightening the reins and closing a gap. Personal matters merit attention but not worry. Move slowly to avoid making careless errors.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): New benefits result from past efforts. This should give you fresh incentive! Long-range plans show even greater promise than anticipated. Your romantic partner could be in a difficult mood.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Fresh progress is possible, thanks to your resourcefulness. Initiative will be rewarded. Give credit where it is due. Your colleagues will remember your honesty.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): An overly easygoing attitude or lack of punctuality could cause trouble. Avoid repeating the gossip you hear; it could come back to haunt you.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): The emphasis today is on fair play. Do everything according to the book. New friends show you ways to keep entertainment costs down. Simple tasty meals are as welcome as expensive delicacies. Limit the guest list.

The bidding:
 EAST SOUTH WEST NORTH
 3♠ 4♥ 4NT 5♠
 Pass Pass Pass Pass

Opening lead: Two of ♠

Beware of playing reflexively at the table, especially if, in the process, you are following one of those bromides that do not always apply to specific circumstances. West was caught napping on this deal, and it proved expensive. With no intention of defending four hearts, West decided to muddy the waters by bidding four no trump to ask for aces. East's pass over the double showed one. East made a Lightner double of six hearts to request an unusual lead, but West chose to ignore partner's request and start a spade.

Declarer ruffed, drew trumps in three rounds and cashed the ace and king of clubs. Next came the five of diamonds and a careless West followed with the four. Warned by the double that East was void in diamonds, declarer played the two from dummy and, as expected won the trick. With the ruffing finesse in clubs taking care of a losing diamond, declarer was able to hold the diamond losers to one and the slam rolled home. Note that if West covers the first diamond lead with the six, declarer must concede two diamond tricks for down one.

Would a low diamond lead have defeated the contract? No. Declarer plays low from dummy and the same position as above arises, except that declarer can ruff two diamonds on the table. Even the king of diamonds is to no avail. Although East ruffs away the ace, declarer can dispose of one diamond loser by setting up a club and two can be ruffed in dummy!

The moral: When the distribution is wild, bid one more rather than defend. A six-spade sacrifice by East-West would have been cheap by comparison.

Vincent Canby gives up starring role as chief critic, stays on as featured player

NEW YORK — Vincent Canby is giving up his starring role, but he's staying on as a featured player.

The 71-year-old New York Times mainstay is giving up the chief theater critic job he's held since December 1994. He'll return to his previous post as Sunday theater critic.

Canby will be succeeded by Ben Brantley, a Times theater critic since 1993. Brantley previously worked as a staff writer for The New Yorker and Vanity Fair and as a film critic for Elle magazine.

Canby will be bumping Margo Jefferson from the Sunday job. Jefferson, a 1995 Pulitzer Prize winner for criticism, will write on a wider range of cultural topics.

LOS ANGELES — Ted Koppel says he's happy at ABC and doesn't plan to bolt the network when his contract runs out in September. But that doesn't mean he won't. The longtime "Nightline" anchorman said, if other networks want to talk, he's listening.

"I've had a lot of people call me to say they want to talk to me," Koppel said in Tuesday's Los Angeles Times. "I'm going to say to them, 'Dazzle me with your creativity.'"

Koppel, 56, said he loves a challenge and thinks it would be foolish not to listen to new proposals.

"I'm not sending any signal at all," he said. "I'm going to tell (ABC News President) Roone (Arledge) the same thing."

NEW YORK — The man who took the famous subway grate picture of Marilyn Monroe says a book publisher got it hot.

Sam Shaw filed a federal lawsuit Monday against Rizzoli International Publications, saying the company had no right to use the picture in "Marilyn Monroe, The Life, The Myth," which was published in January.

"I'm getting mad," Shaw said. "I love working but I'm getting exasperated and angry at all the stealing that's going on."

The photo, which shows Monroe with her white dress billowing around her thighs, was taken in 1954 during filming of "The Seven Year Itch." Shaw was in

He wants Rizzoli to stop selling the book and pay $100,000 for each copyright infringement.

"They're also using a picture of myself," Shaw said. "Never paid me. Never asked permission. I had to buy the book myself for $65."

A message left with Rizzoli was not returned on Monday.

NEW YORK — Jordan's King Hussein can add a legal degree to his list of titles.

Hussein was awarded an honorary law degree by New York University for his dedication to democracy and efforts to bring peace to the Middle East.

"King Hussein has been an inspiring voice in the forums of the world during difficult times," said University President L. Jay Oliva at a ceremony and dinner Monday.

Hussein was accompanied by his American-born wife, Queen Noor, and other members of his family. His 15-year-old son Prince Hashem received an NYU jacket.

LOS ANGELES — A judge rescinded an arrest warrant for infamous lip-syncher Robert Pilatus when the erstwhile half of Milli Vanilli turned up at a drug-treatment facility.

The 31-year-old had been ordered to remain at one treatment center for six months as part of his sentence for assaulting a woman. The arrest warrant was issued when he disappeared from the facility last week.

The judge withdrew the warrant Monday after Pilatus' attorney said his client had checked into another rehabilitation clinic, said Mike Qualls, a spokesman for the city attorney.

Pilatus and Fabrice Morvan were stripped of the best new artist Grammy Award in 1990 following revelations that they never sang a note on their best-selling recording, "Girl, You Know It's True."

In 1990, Pilatus was arrested in Los Angeles for investigation of sexual battery for allegedly touching a 25-year-old woman. He was sent to drug rehabilitation April 15.

The next year he was hospitalized after an apparent suicide attempt when he took pills and straddled a hotel's ninth-floor balcony rail.

Rockies withstand Astros

Associated Press

DENVER — Pinch-hitter Trenidad Hubbard snapped an eighth-inning tie with an RBI single, and Vinny Castilla hit a three-run homer in the Colorado Rockies' 7-5 defeat of the Houston Astros on Tuesday night.

With the score tied 5-5, Anthony Young (2-3) walked Walt Weiss and Jayhawk Owens with one out in the eighth. Xavier Hernandez replaced Young, and Hubbard greeted him with a single to center on the first pitch.

Garvin Alston (1-0) pitched two-thirds of inning for his first major-league win. Bruce Ruffin pitched the ninth for his ninth save.

Pirates 7, Giants 2
SAN FRANCISCO — Nelson Liriano hit a two-run triple as Pittsburgh rocked San Francisco Giants for five runs in the sixth inning, beating the Giants, and have won nine of their last 10 games.

Denny Neagle (8-2) won his third straight start, allowing six hits and two runs in 5 2-3 innings.

Giants starter Oswaldo Fernandez (3-6) appeared steady through the first five innings, allowing only three hits. No Pittsburgh batter was able to get past first base during the span.

Expos capitalized on second baseman Ralph Milliard's throwing error in the seventh inning to rally for a victory over Florida.

With Montreal trailing 2-1, Darin Fletcher and Cliff Floyd hit one-out singles off Kevin Brown (4-5). Pinch-hitter Sherman Olando hit a potential double-play ball to short, but Milliard couldn't complete the play, throwing the ball past first and into the Expos' dugout, allowing Fletcher to score and sending Olando to second.

Tim Scott (2-1), who relieved in the seventh and pitched one-third of an inning, got the win.

Cubs 9, Phillies 2
PHILADELPHIA — Scott Bullitt went 5-for-5 with four RBIs and Ryne Sandberg hit a bases-loaded triple as Chicago handed Philadelphia its sixth consecutive loss.

Mike Campbell (1-0), brought up earlier in the day from Triple-A Iowa, was impressive in his Cubs debut. He left the game after stumbling while rounding first base after he singled in the eighth, his second hit of the game.

Braves 4, Mets 3, 13 innings
NEW YORK — Tony Graffanino, inserted into the game as a pinch-runner in the ninth inning, hit a sacrifice fly in the 13th, lifting Atlanta over New York.

Chipper Jones opened the inning with a double off the left-field wall, and Fred McGriff was intentionally walked. Tom Glavine, pinch-hitting for winning pitcher Pedro Borbon (1-0), singled while attempting to sacrifice, loading the bases. Graffanino then followed with a fly to left field, scoring Jones.

Borbon pitched 1 1-3 innings for the victory. Terrell Wade, the sixth pitcher used by Atlanta, pitched the 13th for his first save as the Braves snapped New York's three-game winning streak.

Reds owner Marge Schott is expected to reply to an edict from baseball's executive council to give up day-to-day control of the team or face possible suspension.

MLB council expects reply from Schott

By Murray Chass

N.Y. Times News Service

Major League Baseball's executive council is expected to learn Wednesday whether Marge

Schott will voluntarily relinquish operation of the Cincinnati Reds or subject himself to a suspension of possibly two years.

The council, at a meeting last Wednesday, set Wednesday as the deadline for Schott to agree to step aside as the Reds' managing partner or be suspended for violating the terms of her season-long suspension in 1993.

As of the close of business Tuesday, people familiar with the matter said, it was unclear what Schott would do.

They said lawyers for baseball and the Reds' owner were still going back and forth in their negotiations.

The council, which is made up of four owners in each league and the two league presidents and presided over by Milwaukee's Bud Selig, will hold a telephone conference call Wednesday, and an announcement could be made late Wednesday or Thursday.

Brewers pound out 20 hits in 14-4 rout

Associated Press

ARLINGTON, — John Jaha had four hits and four RBIs and Milwaukee starter Ben McDonald survived a shaky outing as the Brewers pounded out 20 hits to beat Texas 14-4

Tuesday night, snapping the Rangers' four-game winning streak.

McDonald (6-3) improved his career mark against Texas to 6-1 despite giving up five hits in the first two innings, escaping with only one run.

The Brewers battered Rangers starter Ken Hill (7-5) for a career-high nine runs over 3 2-3 innings, inflating his ERA from 2.94 to 3.65.

McDonald lasted 5 2-3 innings and allowed 12 hits and four runs, including a two-run homer by Rene Gonzales and an RBI single by Ivan Rodriguez in the sixth that capped the scoring.

Dave Nilsson added three RBIs for the Brewers, who have beaten the Rangers in three of the last five meetings.

Yankees 7, Blue Jays 2
TORONTO — Andy Pettitte allowed eight hits over 6 2-3 innings Tuesday night to become the American League's second 10-game winner as New York continued their domination over Toronto.

The Yankees have won seven straight at SkyDome and 16 of their last 17 overall against the struggling Blue Jays, who have lost six straight.

Pettitte (10-3) gave up four runs, struck out four and walked one to join Cleveland's Charles Nagy as the league's 10-game winners.

After Jacob Brumfield singled with two outs in the second, Pettitte didn't allow another hit until Toronto got three in a row in the sixth, including a two-out, RBI double by Alex Gonzalez that trimmed the Yankees' lead to 5-4.

Ruben Sierra restored New York's two-run lead with an RBI groundout in the seventh.

John Wetteland pitched the ninth for his 16th save.

Red Sox 9, White Sox 2
CHICAGO — Vaughn Eshelman stifled Chicago's potent offense on six hits over seven innings and Mike Stanley homered to cap a seven-run seventh as Boston Red Sox beat Chicago.

The loss ended a 10-game home winning streak for the White Sox, who lost for just the fourth time in 23 games overall.

Orioles 12, Tigers 9
DETROIT — Rocky Coppinger won his major league debut and Cal Ripken had three hits and three RBIs as Baltimore stopped a four-game losing streak with a victory over Detroit.

Ripken, Chris Hoiles and Mike Devereaux homered for Baltimore, which got two-run singles from Rafael Palmeiro, Brady Anderson and Manny Alexander to pace a 15-hit attack.

Mariners 18, Twins 8
MINNEAPOLIS — Dan Wilson had a career-high five hits and Seattle set a team record with 24 as the Mariners ruined the return of Rick Aguilera from the disabled list with a thrashing of Minnesota.

Aguilera gave up 10 runs over three innings as the Mariners built an 11-0 lead.

The Twins' career saves leader, Aguilera had his attempted transition from closer to starter slowed by tendinitis in his right forearm. After two stints on the disabled list, he was making only his second start of the season.

Aguilera (0-1) faced nine batters in the first inning at Seattle, the best-hitting road team in the majors with a .315 average, took a 5-0 lead.

two great defensive plays as did Aaron Guiel at third and Christian in left.

El Paso got to Midland starter Kyle Abbott (1-2) for four runs in the fifth inning to put the game away. Bobby Hughes had two doubles to drive in three runs for the Diablos while Brad Seitzer homered for the second game in a row, a leadoff shot to open the fatal fifth.

Seitzer was glad to see his team produce some runs for D'Amico.

"This is the first time we've gotten him (D'Amico) some runs," Seitzer said. "He's been great for us. He's the type of pitcher who has one or two bad pitches a game instead of one or two bad innings."

D'Amico walked only one Angel and has given up only 11 walks in 80 innings this year.

Still, the Angels can't crack the Christensen Stadium "streak," and Christian has no pat answer for it.

"Given the effort that is being put forth, there is no reason for it (losing nine in a row at home)," Christian said. "It's just one of those things we have to fight through. When the club got off to the good start in this stadium, no one was asking why we were winning at home. We've just got to keep coming out and fighting it. It's just one of those things that happens."

ANGEL DUST: One reason Midland lost Tuesday was that hitters in the four through seven slots were a combined 0-for-14 at the plate... Christian came into the game hitting just .213 in his last 18 games... Leon Glenn's six-game hitting streak went by the boards with an 0-for-4 night... Willard Brown has been moved out of the Angels' starting rotation and replaced by Anthony Chavez, who will start Saturday. Brown made his first relief appearance Tuesday with a perfect 1-2-3 ninth... Big news came from El Paso Tuesday as Diablos owner Jim Paul sold the club to Idaho businessmen Bill Pereira and Peter Gray for an undisclosed amount. The sale becomes effective Oct. 1....

For Braves, it ain't over 'til the Vizcaino sings

By Claire Smith

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — The nascent rivalry between the Mets and the Braves, it seems, was all in the eye of the beholder just one day after the two National League East teams dusted off brushback pitches and did angry war dances full of pushing, shoving and wolfing on Monday night.

Steve Avery, the Braves' pitcher who admittedly was smarting over the 11 runs he allowed the Mets in his last two starts against New York, denied that evil purposes caused him to plow a pitch into Jose Vizcaino's knee in the fourth inning of the Mets' 8-3 victory Monday.

"I just made a pitch inside, got a little too far inside and ended up hitting him," Avery said Tuesday night before the two teams met again at Shea Stadium.

"I don't think this is something that needs to boil up into a huge head-hunting contest, with our hitters and their hitters thinking they're going to be hit. In my mind, it should be over."

Vizcaino doesn't think so. The Mets' second baseman, hobbled and out of the lineup Tuesday night because of a badly bruised left knee, vehemently disagreed, his emotions running hotter than his hitting.

"It's not over," Vizcaino said. "It's going to end when I get him back. I don't want my teammates doing it. I want to do it myself. That was dirty. Everybody who saw it knows it was dirty. He was playing with my career."

Rockies, Braves in winner's final

The Northern Rockies and Northern Braves reached the Winner's Bracket final of the Joe Mowles Memorial Tournament with victories Monday.

The Northern Rockies got a strong performance from Patrick Smart in the 5-4 win over the Mid-City Pirates. Smart picked up the win on the mound and hit a double for the Rockies. The Pirates got home run swings from Nathan Spencer and Brandon South.

In the other National League Winner's Bracket semifinal, the Northern Braves defeated the Mid-City Angels 3-2. Daniel Stern pitched the Braves to the win. The Angels' Ryan Owen had a double, the game's only extra-base hit.

In Loser's Bracket action, The Rangers eliminated the Dodgers 8-3 in a battle of North Central teams. Kelley Brashear was the winning pitcher for the Rangers, who got home run blasts from Eric Giebel and a double from Matt Elder. Chase Stoltz had a double for the Dodgers.

Another battle of North Central teams saw the Angels stay alive with a 16-15 win over the Astros. Mark Shatzer was the winning pitcher of record for the Angels. Brady Stanford and Patrick Thomason had doubles as did Nathan Chambers and Brandon Shelton.

The Northern Giants got out the big sticks and defeated the Mid-City Cubs 11-2. Justin Stevens had a huge game for the Giants with a home run bomb, a double and win on the mound. Nick Hand and Michael Langer also hit doubles for the Giants.

The Western White Sox downed the Tower Braves 7-2. The White Sox got two-baggers from John Hendrix, Corey Green, Ross Abel and Roy Anderson. The Braves got a double from Josh Caruth. Rudy Garza picked up the win for the White Sox.

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — The West Texas Heat 144 Under fast-pitch softball team placed second this past weekend in a tournament here.

The heat won six games and lost two including the final 4-2 to the Tuscan Roadrunners. The Heat, 24-15 for the season, have won a tournament in Oklahoma City and placed third in Midland.

The Heat defeated the Santa Fe Angels (12-0), the Roswell Wild Roses (19-4), Las Cruces Rockies (16-0), Tuscan Alley Cats (8-7), Farmington Bandits (6-2) and the Phoenix Quicksilver (8-0).

The team members are Yvette Diaz, Jennifer Bryant, Kelly Dumas, Sarah Dzubinski, Lori Hutton, Kristin Harris, Kristi Heard, Lindsay Mills, Tiffany Robinson, Megan Valle and Amanda Walker. The coaches are Keith Mills, Pete Bryant and Denny Walker.

on it. "I think in hindsight if we get swept, that's how we'll be remembered," said Wally Walker, the team president and general manager. "So I think it's important for us to get a win."

Game 4 against the Bulls will match the Sonics' pride — or what's left of it — against Chicago's talent.

If the Sonics are blown out again as they were in their 108-86 defeat Sunday, the outcome could determine which free agents return next season.

Win or lose, the Sonics will try hard to keep All-Star point guard Gary Payton and his backcourt mate, Hersey Hawkins.

Free agents Sam Perkins, Frank Brickowski, Steve Scheffler and Johnson may be different stories. Askew has the option to be a free agent or return for the final year of his contract.

"I think a lot depends on tomorrow night's game," McMillan said. "I think if we get swept in this series, then they're going to look at things a little differently than if the series went seven games."

The Sonics bounced back to win two straight games in Sacramento after losing Game 2 in Seattle. They lost two in a row to Utah before winning Game 7 for the Western Conference title to get into the NBA Finals for the first time in 17 years.

Can they come back one more time in a series that they're convinced the Bulls are going to win?

Karl said he thinks the Sonics team that set a franchise record with 64 regular-season victories can take the series back to Chicago. For that to happen, Seattle would have to win Games 4 and 5.

"I think everyone who evaluated this series at the start thought we could win two out of three at home," Karl said. "I still think we're capable of doing that."

Michael Jordan and Scottie Pippen will try and get the Bulls their fourth NBA title in the past six year in Game 4 tonight against Seattle.

The Sonics may have a new starting center Wednesday night. Karl said he might start the soon-to-be-35 Perkins instead of Johnson, who played only three minutes in Game 3. Johnson and Askew, who played just 10 minutes in Game 3, are unhappy at Karl.

"My position is to play my best players and keep them on the court as much as possible," Karl said. "I hope they respect my position."

'Big Sombrero' now Houlihan

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Tampa Stadium, the unique-shaped venue that NFL fans affectionately refer to as "The Big Sombrero," is getting another name.

The 29-year-old home of football's Tampa Bay Buccaneers and soccer's Tampa Bay Mutiny will be renamed Houlihan's Stadium after a restaurant chain run by Bucs owner Malcolm Glazer.

"The name change will probably happen sometime in August," said Mickey Farrell, who manages the stadium for the Tampa Sports Authority.

Glazer indicated last fall that he would exercise the right he has to rename the stadium under terms of his lease with the sports authority. Nevertheless, the impending change caught some officials off guard because they had not spoken directly with the Bucs about the matter in months.

Under the Bucs' lease, tickets to other events at the stadium, including Mutiny soccer games, will have to reflect the Houlihan's name instead of the city's.

Mayor Dick Greco, who learned of the change this week, questioned the timing with Hillsborough County residents set to vote on a tax to fund a new stadium for the Bucs on Sept. 3.

"If you're asking if it's popular, I don't think it's something people are going to be real happy about," Greco said.

Houlihan's is a Kansas City-based chain that does not have any restaurants in the Tampa Bay area. It only had two in Florida last fall when it was announced that the chain had a $10 million deal with the Bucs to rename the stadium.

UIL: Wrestling considered to be added

(From 1C)

games," Gamble said. "That non-school league may have ended up costing all our kids the chance to reach the state tournament."

"The real concern, however, is that the other league had undue influences at their practices like beer and a lot of swearing," Gamble said.

Local school boards can make rules prohibiting their students from playing on non-school teams during the school season.

But UIL Athletic Director Charles Breithaupt said many school boards are reluctant to do that.

"They fear that if their district prevents kids from playing on other teams and another school district doesn't, that other school district will have an advantage," he said.

Ms. Northcutt said the coaches want a rule to rectify the situation, and the UIL is studying whether that's possible under the new law.

"The new rule would say, 'Your school team can't play any team that has students who would be eligible under UIL rules,' in other words, school-age youngsters," she said. "The details would have to be worked out."

Before the law took effect, the UIL had a rule prohibiting students from playing on non-school teams during their school season.

"When you have a non-school coach who is not an educator in charge of the non-school teams trying to whip everyone else, that person isn't prone to consider the educational concerns of students," Ms. Northcutt said.

In a related matter, state Rep.

Ric Williamson, R-Weatherford, pleaded with the UIL committee to allow school districts to hire part-time coaches who are not under contract as teachers at the school.

Currently, coaches double as educators and are not permitted to coach or teach their student-athletes during the off-season.

Williamson said hiring part-time coaches outside of the school would allow for more expertise in a particular sport and provide an opportunity for youngsters to receive coaching during the off-season. He said often an educator is handed the reigns of a sports program, such as soccer, without knowing anything about the sport.

Breithaupt said he disagreed. By having coaches under contract as teachers, the school has more control over the situation, he said.

The proposed rule changes that are expected to be voted on Wednesday by the UIL's Standing Committee on Athletics include:

— Mandating two-out-of-three game series in the baseball playoffs unless coaches from each team agree to play just one game. Currently, the teams play one game unless the coaches agree to play two-out-of-three.

— Adding wrestling as a UIL-sanctioned sport. Currently, wrestling is governed by the Texas Interscholastic Wrestling Association. There are approximately 124 schools (105 of them public), which participate in wrestling under the TIWA.

— Adding pole vault for girls. Linda Brigham of Clifton Independent School District, said, "The future is there. It's going to be a scholarship sport and I would like to see Texas women get the chance to compete."

DEAR ABBY

Hospital's oversight nearly cancels organ donor's wish

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My loving, vibrant 68-year-old mother suffered a massive stroke in January.

When the doctor told us there was nothing they could do, we told him and the emergency room staff that she wanted to be an organ donor. When Mother was alive, she frequently stressed how much it would mean to her to help others in this way.

As Mother lingered in a coma in the intensive care unit, her nurse called us, suggesting we return to the hospital to say our final good-byes. Her blood pressure was falling quickly and death could be imminent.

When we arrived, I asked the attending nurse how the organ donation process works. He stared at me blankly and was surprised to hear Mother was an organ donor. They immediately started administering medication to sustain her organs.

I'm grateful I spoke up before she passed away and her organs were no longer viable.

Thankfully, five people benefited from her liver, corneas and kidneys. Her heart and lungs are being used for medical studies.

The local organ bank told me that this is a common oversight in hospitals, and one they are trying hard to remedy with hospital staff members.

I hope others learn from my experience and make sure that organ donation is carried out for their loved ones. It takes more than just checking the organ donor box on your driver's license to ensure the gift of life to others. —KERRY ZICKERT, CLARENDON HILLS, ILL.

DEAR KERRY: Thank you for an important letter and for wanting to alert families of prospective organ donors about your experience. Although the number of potential organ donors remains about the same, the demand for organs continues to grow.

It's a tragedy when organs, which can mean the difference between life and death, are lost because of a lack of communication between families and health-care professionals.

DEAR ABBY: My husband, "Arthur," and I have been married 31 years and have a 1-year-old daughter.

My problem may seem minor, but it is extremely frustrating. Every night after dinner, Arthur lies down on the couch to watch television. He then falls asleep. About 2 or 3 a.m., he comes upstairs and crawls into bed with me. Abby, we never cuddle or fall asleep together. I'm very hurt that we don't spend any time alone at the end of the day like most married couples.

I have discussed my feelings with Arthur many times. He understands that it upsets me but says he can't go to bed as early as I do. He says he really enjoys watching TV and the "dozing off" feeling is relaxing for him. I'm at the point of wanting to lock him out of the bedroom so he can watch TV and sleep on the couch all night. What do you advise? —SLEEPING ALONE IN MINNESOTA

DEAR SLEEPING ALONE: Buy a small television set for the bedroom, with earphones for Arthur. Get yourself some earplugs and a sleep mask, if necessary. Then Arthur can enjoy dozing off in front of the TV, and you will have him in bed next to you.

If he objects to this solution, television may not be the only problem in your marriage. Consider counseling.

For everything you need to know about wedding planning, order "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send a business-sized, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054-0447. (Postage is included.)

Southern Fried Chicken flavored sandwich meat still just deli meat

By Linda Anderson

Tell you what, in the supermarket these days, the products, they are a' changing. The choices are never simple any more, which isn't necessarily a bad thing, but it sure can be confusing.

Bryan, the company that has a whole line of sandwich meats, has a new one called Southern Fried Chicken. Wait a minute, you say — how can fried chicken become a round slice of sandwich meat? That's what I wanted to find out, so I bought a package.

A six-slice, six-serving package (I couldn't find the number of ounces in the package listed anywhere on the label) cost $2.19.

According to nutrition label information, one slice contains 30 calories with 10 of them from fat, which means the southern fried chicken sandwich meat falls within the American Heart Association's suggested guidelines of having no more than one-third calories from fat. Remember, this is "Southern Fried Chicken," which isn't known as a low-fat food, so that should tell you that some finagling has been done.

In fact, according to advertising on the label, the meat is "97 percent fat free." (I'm not sure how companies figure that percentage, but that's what the label says.)

More label advertising goes like this: "The Flavor of the South" is much more than just words, it's a commitment. We make sure that Bryan lunchmeat provides consistent, dependable quality and superior flavor. And our new line of lunchmeat caters specifically to your southern tastes. So try all of our new southern flavors — you'll know you're getting the best."

OK, that all sounds flowery and fine, but nowhere on the label is the company's address listed. How do we know they are really a Southern company? And if not, what makes them experts on "southern tastes?" Makes me wonder...

The taste test was about what we expected. The young taste-tester took one look at the sandwich meat and said it would probably taste just like other deli meats. Then she took one bite and said, "Yup, deli meat."

When I sampled it, I could taste something that was reminiscent of real southern fried chicken, but I couldn't quite put my finger on it — something about crispies and floury gravy.

But, like the young taste-tester said, it's still just deli meat. Besides, if you want southern fried chicken, nothing beats the real thing.

Price listed is from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.

COOK: Woman shares soul-satisfying recipes

(From 1D)

Summer in the City, Thursday evening at Midland Center.

The following are some of Mrs. Foster's favorite, soul-satisfying recipes:

SHRIMP CASSEROLE

1 pound cleaned shrimp
2 ribs celery, chopped
1 small onion, chopped
1 small green pepper, chopped
1 can cream of mushroom soup
10 to 12 ounces Cheddar cheese
2 cups rice, cooked
1 stick margarine

Clean shrimp. Melt margarine in large skillet and saute onion, celery and pepper until onion is clear. Add shrimp sprinkled with small amount of red pepper and cook until shrimp turns pink. Remove enough liquid from shrimp (about 3 tablespoons) to add to 2 tablespoons flour or cornstarch to make paste. Add paste to shrimp mixture and cook until thickened. Remove from heat. Add soup. In 9x13-inch casserole (or smaller), layer the shrimp mixture; sprinkle with 1/2 cheese and cover with all the rice. Pour remaining shrimp mixture over rice. Top with remaining cheese and bake at 350 degrees for 30 to 40 minutes.

NOTE: Mrs. Foster said this recipe was given to her when she worked with Phillips Petroleum, by a former co-worker whose wife made a batch for him to take to the office. It's one of her very favorite dishes.

Toll-free line offers callers grilling tips

Associated Press

The Weber Grill Watch Survey, commissioned annually by Weber-Stephen Products Co., has tracked Americans' grilling habits since 1989. Not surprisingly, July Fourth is the most popular grilling holiday (81 percent), with Memorial Day polling in at 66 percent.
For a second year, Weber-Stephen is sponsoring a toll-free telephone number, staffed by home economists, to answer home cook's grilling questions. The telephone line, 1-(800)-474-5568, is open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. (CT) Monday through Friday. The telephone line will be open through Sept. 2.

Weber-Stephen has these safety guidelines for grilling:
■ Read the owner's manual before using a barbecue grill.
■ All manufacturers of charcoal and gas grills have specific instruction manuals and warnings as to proper use. Follow these instructions and pay close attention to the warnings as failure to do so can result in damage to property and serious personal injury or death.
■ Do not lean over a barbecue grill when igniting.
■ When lighting a gas grill, the lid should always be open.
■ Keep children and pets a safe distance from a hot grill.
■ Gas or charcoal grills are not to be used indoors; they are outdoor cooking appliances.
■ Every time a refilled LP tank is re-connected to the barbecue, the connections should be checked for leaks.

Consumers who call the Weber Grill-Line will receive a free recipe book, "More Backyard Barbecue Basics: Volume II."

WHAT'S COOKING?

Woman says soul food satisfies

By Linda Anderson

Mary Foster of Midland believes in keeping active. Not only is she a licensed vocational nurse, working with an agency that sends her where she is needed, but she is the owner of Club Nuevoo, 211 S. Lee, where she cooks and serves such dishes as enchiladas and barbecue. Then, when she has some spare time, she sews and sells women's clothing. The sewing, she said, is "just a hobby."

But the cooking is a fact of life. Although her restaurant is only open on weekends, she spends time reading cookbooks and deciding on recipes. In fact, most of her reading time is spent with cookbooks. "I'd rather read a cookbook than a ... catalogue," she laughed, admitting she — and her cookbooks, so she can compare notes — can often be found in front of the television set when PBS cooking shows are on.

And she does have her favorites. "I love soul food that satisfies my insides," Mrs. Foster said. "Fast food is OK, but ... I don't get satisfied."

"I like greens, cornbread, beans. I'm not much of a meat eater but I like all kinds of vegetables seasoned really well."

Soul food, Mrs. Foster said is "food to soothe the soul; satisfies your taste buds. It's comfort food. It's hard to describe soul food because you get such a wonderful feeling of, 'oh my taste buds are satisfied.'"

"Did you ever eat anything and think 'that's not what I wanted'? When you eat soul food, you can say, 'yeah, this is it!'"

Soul food and other home-grown delights will be celebrated in "Soul of the City," this week's

Freshman Republicans revolt against GOP budget blueprint

WASHINGTON (AP) — Freshmen and conservative Republicans in the House revolted Tuesday against a GOP plan to balance the budget in six years because it would permit a temporary deficit increase.

Republican leaders canceled a vote scheduled Tuesday and said they weren't sure they could muster enough Republican support by Wednesday to pass the plan, which represents a compromise between versions passed separately in May by the House and Senate.

"We don't need a lot of 'no' votes in order to sink the bill," said Budget Committee Chairman John Kasich, R-Ohio.

In a sometimes testy two-hour, closed-door meeting in an unair-conditioned room, GOP leaders tried to persuade the rebellious members to accept the budget. Senate Majority Whip Trent Lott, R-Miss., crossed the Capitol to warn House members that reopening the agreement could jeopardize its passage in the Senate or result in a budget plan even less to their liking.

"There's no easy way to do it," he said. "Deeper defense cuts or reduce the tax cut, that's the only way I could see."

But several House freshmen and conservatives said they were concerned that the deficit under the plan would rise to $153 billion in fiscal 1997 and then dip only to $147 billion in 1998.

"We want the deficit to go down

■ For updates on the presidential race, call Cityline at 560-2400, enter category 6204 year to year," said Rep. Sam Brownback, R-Kan., a freshman leader.

The red ink in both 1997 and 1998 would represent an increase over the 1996 deficit. The Congressional Budget Office projects it at $144 billion, but has said it could drop as low as $130 billion.

The budget resolution is more of an outline than a detailed spending plan. It does not carry the full force of law and isn't sent to Clinton for signature.

Child deaths: Violence rises as accidents continue to fall

N.Y. Times News Service

Dramatically fewer children are dying of accidental injuries than in the past, but many more are dying violent deaths, according to new research.

One report, in the current issue of Pediatrics, shows that from 1978 to 1991 the use of safety devices like car seats saved thousands of children's lives, while homicides and suicides increased.

Another study, published in the current issue of The Journal of the American Medical Association, reports that 105 children died violently in or near secondary schools from 1992 to 1994. This is the first nationwide study of violent death in schools, the authors say.

"We need to face the fact that we're solving some of the causes of childhood injury but not others," said Dr. David C. Grossman, co-author of the report in Pediatrics and co-director of the Harborview Injury Prevention and Research Center in Seattle.

Grossman and a colleague at the center, Dr. Frederick P. Rivara, examined government data on injury-related deaths to those 19 and younger from 1978 to 1991. They found that the total incidence of fatal injuries dropped by 26 percent during this period, to 21,367 from 28,905. Deaths caused by accidents, like automobile crashes, drowning and household fires, dropped by 39 percent, to 14,510 from 23,649. Much of the credit was given to the increased use of children's auto seats, seat belts, protective fences around backyard swimming pools and smoke detectors.

But the incidence of death from nonaccidental injuries rose by 47 percent, the researchers found. In particular, there was a 67 percent increase in homicides and a 17 percent increase in suicides, with 4,805 youths dying from these causes in 1991. Nearly all the increase was in deaths from gunshot, the researchers wrote.

"We know that prevention works in injury control, but more is possible," Grossman said. With better prevention, the study concluded, it would be possible to save the lives of 6,640 more children each year.

In the current issue of The Journal of the American Medical Association researchers from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta reported that violent deaths in and around schools were more common than had been thought.

The researchers' finding that 105 such deaths occurred at secondary schools from 1992 to 1994 was based on information in electronic databases from news organizations and reports from the U.S. Department of Education and the National School Safety Center. The details were confirmed by local press sources, police or school officials.

Sixty-one percent of the deaths were homicides, 19 percent were suicides and 77 percent involved guns, according to the report. Most of the victims as well as the assailants were black or Hispanic boys about 16 years old. More than 90 percent involved one or more of the following: an argument, gang-related activity, drugs or attempted robbery.

Both of the new reports concluded that a significant portion of violent injuries and deaths to children and teen-agers could be prevented by restricting their access to guns. Grossman's study cites research that indicates that having a gun in the house increases the risk of suicide among teen-agers and young adults tenfold and the risk of homicide threefold.

Mark Benenson, president of the National Foundations for Firearms Education, a group that is opposed to gun control, disputes the evidence of such a strong connection between guns and violence. "Criminologists say that if firearms weren't there, the homicides would be committed with other weapons," he said. "We're coping out by talking about guns when we should be talking about drugs, poverty and other problems that contribute to violent behavior."

Mercy says the disease-control agency is looking for preventive measures "that are politically and socially acceptable" to people on both sides of the gun-control debate.
