Gary Painter: 'I have done my job'

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

With elections next spring and a high-profile international arms sting under his belt, where is Gary Painter heading?

Nowhere, says the Midland County sheriff; he likes it just fine right were he is.

And he hopes the sting operation that netted a Portuguese national's arrest for allegedly facilitating a missile parts sale to Iran won't hurt his chances next May.

"This was not a grandstand play trying to get votes," the 40-year-old Painter said in an extended interview Friday. "That was not intended.

"If I'm going to do that it will be something that will have a more positive note."

And elicit criticism the action has, with barbs coming from both County Commissioner Winfree Brown and County Judge Bill Ahders.

"I'd like to know what jurisdiction he has," said Ahders Saturday. "If there's only federal jurisdiction, I'd like to know about it."

Said Brown: "This Gary Painter is a county sheriff. He looks after the problems in Midland County, and you don't extend that authority.

"This should have been a federal operation. I've got fairly strong opinions on that," he said.

Both Brown and Ahders were concerned about the costs of the operation.

"This was done with taxpayers' money," observed Brown. "They (lawmen) sought it out and brought it into the county. That I don't think is a wise use of taxpayers' money."

Painter said the entire operation cost "maybe" $500 for long distance phone calls and materials to build crates.

The use of reserve deputies in the sting — undercover agents integral to its completion — also drew fire from Brown.

"If you check the record, you'll find I voted against reserve deputies a little over a year ago," said Brown. "I was afraid of us being entagled.

"I wondered if we wouldn't get involved in something we shouldn't, and I wonder if the chickens didn't come home to roost on that this time," he said.

Brown said he thought the commissioners had a verbal understanding with Painter that the reservists would be confined to a narrow job description — one that would preclude involvement in Iranian arms stings.

For his part, Painter remains convinced that "I have done my job," he said.

"A crime is a crime, whether it be public intoxication or murder," he said. "The only difference is the penalty range. It's still a violation of the law.

"British arms dealers in London made contact with our people," Painter pointed out. "They are the ones who had made the initial phone call and said, 'Hey, we've got some people in Iran who need some arms. They need them desperately and we're looking for them."

'Sting' draws both praise, protest

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter received some criticism but mostly praise for his handling of a sting operation earlier this week that landed a man accused of facilitating an Iran arms buy in jail.

In a survey of 20 shoppers at Midland Park Mall Saturday, 13 said they heartily endorsed the sheriff's nabbing of a suspected envoy of the Iranian government.

Four said they approved of Painter's action, but added they wished the sheriff had worked with federal officials to catch bigger fish in the sting that led to the arrest of 47-year-old Victor Fonseca, of Lisbon, Portugal.

Three people said the sheriff should attend to more local matters.

U.S. Customs and some local officals are questioning the Wednesday sting, but many shoppers Saturday praised the prompt action.

"If somebody doesn't take initiative when they see an opportunity, it's not going to do anything but get worse," said Raymond Nicholas, 2507 Camarie Ave., a geologist.

Nicholas added that, "Nobody else seems to be doing anything about it, although it was brought to their attention."

Norma Hild, a homemaker, said the result of the sting operation is the only thing that matters — not the procedures.

"It's great. If the man deserved to be arrested, I don't care how they went about it," she said.

Romeo Tagle, of rural Midland, said the sheriff's action helped preserve democracy.

"If we can keep stuff like this going, we can still be a free country."

Tagle, who works for a pipeline company, added that, "I don't want to be under anybody. I was born a free citizen and I want to stay one."

Phillip Wilshire, a petroleum engineer from Tyler, observed that sometimes it takes a local effort to get results.

Tankers clear area where Bridgeton hit

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — The supertanker Bridgeton and three other reflagged Kuwaiti tankers left Kuwait under U.S. escort Saturday and safely cleared Persian Gulf waters where the Bridgeton hit a mine last month, sources said.

As darkness fell, a ship reported sighting the convoy steaming slowly in a long line off the Saudi Arabian coast 200 miles south of Kuwait, said Brent Sadler, a reporter for the British Independent Television News network aboard another craft at the Saudi oil port of Ras Tanura.

The U.S.-registered tankers left Kuwait hours after three other U.S.-escorted tankers docked safely in Kuwait. They were escorted by the same American warships, the destroyer Kidd and the frigates Hawes and Klakring.

In other developments:

—Iraq said 40 of its warplanes bombed the key Iranian petrochemical complex at Bandar Khomeini in the neck of the gulf, and Iran said its jets raided Iraqi factories.

—The Washington Post reported Saturday that Saudi Arabia agreed to let carrier-based U.S. combat planes in the gulf land in Saudi territory for refueling and other logistical support.

The 401,382-ton Bridgeton had hit a mine July 24 as it passed an island base of Iranian Revolutionary Guards 170 miles southeast of Kuwait. The other tankers were the 81,283-ton Sea Isle City, the 79,999-ton Ocean City and the 46,723-ton Gas King, a liquefied gas carrier.

The Pentagon said the tankers left early Saturday without incident and that no unusual Iranian air or naval activity was reported nearby.

Sadler, who spoke to The Associated Press by ship-to-shore radio, said the other ship reported seeing eight or nine ships off Saudi Arabia. That indicated more warships may have joined the convoy, possibly adding the USS Guadalcanal with its eight mine-sweeping helicopters.

The convoy is the fifth one-way transit of the gulf since the Reagan administration's escort operation began last month.

In all, 11 Kuwaiti tankers are to be given U.S. flags to afford them U.S. protection. Both Iran and Iraq have attacked foreign ships in their 7-year-old war. Iran has targeted Kuwait, which it regards as an ally of Iraq.

The Democrats on the House Armed Services subcommittees on investigations and defense policy said Saturday the United States should go ahead with the program despite what they called a lack of long-range planning.

The Democrats said the operation was driven more by a desire to limit Soviet influence than by the goal of protecting freedom of the seas. Republicans dissented, saying the report was too critical of the White House.

A heavy haze hung over the northern gulf. One shipping executive said he had a vessel in the area but the captain was reluctant to pass on information by radio.

"The U.S. Navy wants it all secret, and that's fine by us," said a salvage executive with tugboats throughout the gulf.

Erle Wright, vice chairman of the West End Heritage Committee, stands in front of his grandmother's former home in the West End Addition. Wright and 25 other committee members are hoping to create the city's first heritage district.

Committee fights for heritage

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Two decades ago, Erle Wright reveled with buddies around his grandmother's stuccoed, Spanish-styled home and his family's house in one of Midland's older neighborhoods.

Today, the 27-year-old trained city planner and vice chairman of the West End Heritage Committee — along with 25 other residents — is trying to preserve his childhood neighborhood by asking the City Council to create Midland's first zoned heritage district west of downtown.

"Both of my grandparents had homes in this area. I grew up here," said Wright last week. "Personally, it's important to me to see that something in my hometown gets preserved."

The organization's members, who banded together in February, hope to begin by the end of October developing a heritage zone proposal with the city's planning staff, Wright said. Council members could consider the heritage zoning request as early as the end of the year, he added.

Zoning the area into a heritage district is a proposal contained in the city's recently developed Centennial Comprehensive Plan, a master development devised to guide the city's growth into the year 2000.

Planning and Development Director Richard Hennessy said the heritage district proposal, "Seems to be a good idea consistent with the city's intent of protecting the neighborhoods."

The "heritage" classification would allow residents to draft code enforcement rules to "encourage" the area to remain residentially oriented and preserve the architectural character of the homes, some of which were built as early as the 1920s, Wright said.

Plunge in oil prices linked to 'unhealthy market'

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil prices have smashed below the $19 barrier to hit their lowest level in more than three months.

"The market is in a very unhealthy situation," said Andrew Lebow, an analyst at the Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc. securities firm.

"First, sentiment is bearish. Second, there's frustration with OPEC's production, which is over 19 million barrels a day, compared with their quota of 16.6 million; and third, naval tensions in the Persian Gulf have moderated," he said. "The market is losing some confidence here."

Contracts for October delivery of West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark U.S. crude, settled at $18.90 per 42-gallon barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange Friday.

That was down 52 cents from Thursday's final price for the September contract, which expired, leaving October as the new "near-month" contract.

The last time crude settled below $19 a barrel was on May 4, when it closed at $18.92 a barrel.

Refined oil products also closed lower Friday.

Contracts for delivery in September of wholesale unleaded gasoline closed at 49.73 cents a gallon, down 0.68 cent from Thursday, while September wholesale heating oil fell 0.47 cent a gallon to 49.84 cents.

Overall, the results marked a startling plunge.

Compared with the previous Friday, near-month crude oil lost $1.67 a barrel; unleaded gasoline lost 3.40 cents a gallon and heating oil lost 3.74 cents a gallon.

Crude had peaked at $22.39 a barrel on July 17. On Monday, it plunged 74 cents to $19.83 a barrel — the first time the near-month contract had closed below $20 since June 25, when it settled at $19.64 a barrel.

As trading opened, some prices moved a bit higher.

"But then came news that the third round of convoys had docked safely at in Kuwait," said James Steel, an analyst at Refco Inc. Commodities. "We began moving lower on that."

The news reaffirmed a belief among traders that fears of a possible confrontation in the Persian Gulf had been overdone.

In recent weeks, those worries had driven prices higher, as traders bought oil in anticipation of a possible cutoff of supplies. Now, the same traders continued to unload those contracts as worries about OPEC's overproduction spread.

Steel said Friday's selling accelerated on a report that Ferdinand Santos Alvite, the oil minister of Ecuador, an OPEC member, had "accused OPEC of producing 18.6 million barrels a day, not 16.6 million.

"So there was a piece of tangible evidence (on overproduction), which was all that was needed to sell the market off again — which is exactly what they did," he said.

Gorbachev schedules meetings with Reagan, U.N. panel

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev plans to visit the U.N. General Assembly and meet with President Reagan next month, according to a published report.

Reagan and Gorbachev could use the meeting as a summit to sign an arms pact if Moscow and Washington can reach an agreemeent in stalled talks on banning short-and medium-range nuclear missiles, The Los Angeles Times reported in its Sunday editions.

However, if no consensus is reached by late September, Gorbachev is prepared to come to Washington on a lower-level working visit to personally negotiate an agreement with Reagan, the newspaper said.

In Washington, a highly placed U.S. official disputed the report.

The official, speaking on condition of anonymity, told The Associated Press he knew of no direct notification by the Soviets that Gorbachev planned to attend the U.N. meeting.

The official conceded, however, that there was speculation within the Reagan administration that Gorbachev might indeed make a last-minute decision to attend the session, and that such a step would cause concern to American policymakers.

The official noted a precedent for quick decisions by Gorbachev to seek a summit. Last year, Gorbachev requested a meeting with Reagan only weeks before the two leaders met in Reykjavik, Iceland in October.

The official said the United States does not particularly want to hold a summit unless it results in an agreement to eliminate intermediate nuclear forces and if Gorbachev arrives in New York in September negotiations on a pact might not be completed.

Speculation within the administration about the Gorbachev visit has been heightened by the Soviet leader's inclination to travel more widely and on shorter notice than any of his Kremlin predecessors.

Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze is scheduled to meet in Washington with Secretary of State George Shultz on Sept. 15-17, and officials on both sides have expressed hope that the meetings will produce a compromise that would ensure a summit.

Under terms both sides are said to have accepted, Gorbachev would extend his stay to about 10 days if an agreement is reached on intermediate nuclear forces, the Los Angeles Times report said.

Gorbachev's tentative itinerary includes a visit to California, where he would stay as a guest at the president's ranch near Santa Barbara, the newspaper reported.

Soviet officials have asked, and the United States has agreed, to allow Gorbachev to visit an aircraft assembly plant in Southern California and Silicon Valley near San Francisco, the center of U.S. semiconductor and computer research and manufacturing that is normally off-limits to the Soviets.

Baptist pastor's search for woman not over yet

HOUSTON (AP) — A Baptist minister who traveled to the southern African nation of Malawi to meet a woman released this week by kidnappers has found his search for her is not yet over.

The Rev. Dr. James DeLoach arrived in Malawi Saturday expecting Kindra Bryan of Houston to be waiting for him after being freed Tuesday by guerillas in Mozambique, but learned that Miss Bryan and the others who were kidnapped with her flew to Zimbabwe to see friends.

Bob Ferguson, an aide to U.S. Rep. Jack Fields, R-Humble, said Miss Bryan and her companions were held incommunicado in the country's capital of Harare for two hours of interrogation by Zimbabwe security forces.

"The State Department was saying everything was fine, so they did not send an escort with them," Ferguson said. "When the plane landed (in Harare), the Zimbabwe security force took her away for interrogation."

Ferguson said when Fields' office learned of the incident, a protest was telephoned to Zimbabwe's ambassador to the United States and to the U.S. ambassador in Harare.

"A couple of hours later, the (Zimbabwe) minister of security released her and said it was all only their way of welcoming (the group) to Harare," Ferguson said.

Ferguson said Ambassador James W. Rawlings took Miss Bryan to his home.

DeLoach now is deciding how to continue his journey to meet Miss Bryan, who attended Houston's Second Baptist Church where he preaches, saying he still feels he has a commitment to her parents to meet up with her.

He said he does not understand why the State Department representative in Lilongwe apparently did not tell Miss Bryan that Deloache was on his way.

Miss Bryan, 27, was walked out of Mozambique into Malawi early Tuesday by the pro-Western guerrillas who kidnapped her from a rural mission in that country May 13.

"On the very day she began walking out, there was a special prayer vigil for her at Second Baptist Church," DeLoach said.

DeLoach previously had journeyed to Malawi, which borders Mozambique in southern Africa, shortly after the kidnapping.

Enrollment drop forces Bishop to halve budget

DALLAS (AP) — A drop in projected enrollment coupled with the need to trim costs at financially troubled Bishop College has forced school officials to cut the budget nearly in half.

The college's interim Board of Trustees also said Friday they will seek an extension to submit a financial reorganization plan to a bankruptcy court.

Bishop lost its accreditation with the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools last December because of its financial troubles.

The board approved a $3.6 million operating budget for the 1987-88 school year based on an enrollment of about 400 students, officials announced at a news conference.

That compares to an enrollment of 942 students last fall and a budget of $6.1 million. However, officials said almost one third of those students were behind in their tuition payments and were not allowed to sign up for the semester beginning Sept. 1.

The 1987-88 budget is 41 percent less than last year's spending plan, requiring a reduction in staff and other cost-saving measures, said interim President Levi Watkins.

The number of teachers will be reduced from 48 to about 28 and the college will contract out for some services, such as security, that had been handled by employees, he said.

The school also will drop football and close some buildings.

"We wanted to assure ourselves that if we opened our doors this fall we would be able to keep them open through June," said William J. Shaw, interim board president. "We are satisfied that we will be able to do so."

The school filed for protection from creditors under Chapter 11 of the U.S. bankruptcy code on April 30 because of $12.6 million in debts. Bishop College had 120 days from that date to submit a financial reorganization plan, but the board has authorized attorneys to seek a 120-day extension of the deadline, citing the complex nature of the college's finances.

The board also voted unanimously to ask Watkins to remain during the financial reorganization and until the board selects a permanent president from among two dozen candidates who had applied by last week's deadline, Shaw said. Watkins has indicated he is not a candidate for the job.

In a related move, the board agreed to reduce the number of trustees from 40 to 18 members. The trustees will take over in late fall from the interim board, which has been restructuring the school's governing system.

Tower, wife ask court to certify divorce

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Sen. John Tower and his wife, Lilla, have settled their divorce case and will ask a court to certify the agreement next month, a Superior Court spokesman said Friday.

"They settled the division of property," said Paul Bridenhagen, law clerk for Judge Sylvia Bacon. He could not provide any details on the agreement.

A source close to Tower told the Houston Chronicle that the settlement will involve some alimony to Mrs. Tower, but less than she requested.

"He did not take a thing from her but the right to walk out the door," the unidentified source said.

Bridenhagen said attorneys for the Towers will present the settlement to Ms. Bacon early next month for official certification of the divorce. If the divorce is granted based on the settlement, details of the agreement could be kept secret if the parties request that, he said.

After filing for divorce in June 1986, Mrs. Tower filed court papers alleging "marital misconduct" by the former senator, who chaired a panel named by President Ronald Reagan to investigate the Iran-Contra affair.

Tower's lawyer in the divorce case, Kenneth Lyons, and Mrs. Tower's attorney, David Povich, had told Ms. Bacon a month ago they were making progress toward settling the divorce out of court.

Woman says she waved gun to 'make point,' not kill man

HOUSTON (AP) — A Beaumont socialite said she waved a gun at a former family ranch employee to "make a point," but the gun accidentally went off, mortally wounding the man.

Rosine McFaddin Wilson is on trial for murder in connection with the Aug. 18, 1986, death of Joe Perkins, a 56-year-old caretaker of the Wilsons' 4,480-acre ranch near Port Arthur. The case is expected to go to the jury Monday.

The trial was moved to Houston due to extensive pretrial publicity in Jefferson County, where the prominent family is one of the largest landowners in the Beaumont area.

Mrs. Wilson said she went to the ranch to see why her husband had not returned home after going there himself to confirm the dismissed Perkins and his wife had moved off the property.

When she arrived at nightfall, she saw Perkins locking the ranch's front gate, and feared something might have happened to her husband, she testified.

She said she remained in her car, and asked Perkins, who was sitting in a borrowed pickup truck, whether he had done anything to her husband. She said she displayed the gun to show Perkins she wasn't helpless, but the gun discharged.

"Did you intend to pull the trigger?" asked Jefferson County District Attorney Paul McWilliams.

"No sir," Mrs. Wilson replied.

Final arguments in the case are scheduled Monday before the case goes to the 11-member jury. State District Judge Larry Gist presided over the trial.

During breaks in her testimony, Mrs. Wilson's husband, Will E. Wilson, hugged and provided her reassurance. He is former chairman of the First City National Bank of Beaumont.

Judges named for Delta lawsuits

DALLAS (AP) — A federal judge nominated seven former state judges to help settle damage lawsuits surrounding the 1985 crash of a Delta jetliner at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport.

Three of the retired judges will conduct settlement conferences to trim the number of cases headed for an Oct. 5 trial in U.S. District Court in Fort Worth.

The trial is to determine who caused the Aug. 2, 1985 crash of Delta Flight 191, which killed 137 people.

More than 50 lawsuits seeking punitive damages have been filed against Delta Air Lines, federal traffic controllers and National Weather Service officials.

U.S. District Judge David O. Belew Jr. will hear a case that is the consolidation of those lawsuits.

Belew said the former judges will be allowed to make recommendations and "encourage realistic compromise settlement evaluations" during conferences which begin Sept. 3.

PAINTER

Painter said he offered the information to the U.S. Customs Service last May, but was rebuffed.

And not until July did he find out why, he said. At a meeting that month of law enforcement officials, Customs Office administrators told him in no uncertain terms that the reason was the two undercover agents working the case, Ron Tucker and Gary Howard.

The pair had filed suit against the federal government to recover $1.4 million in expenditures in a different authorized sting operation.

Painter stands by the two, who he first met in the mid-1970s when he worked as Presidio County's chief deputy in Marfa. Tucker and Howard at that time were working as federal agents themselves, and the trio worked a plethora of border smuggling cases.

Painter cited Tucker and Howard's experience and expertise as assets to Midland County. "They're danged good boys," said the sheriff. "They're invited to my house anytime they want to and they know that."

The Customs Office rejection was nonetheless the second Painter received from federales after offering tips, he said.

The first came last year after Painter uncovered information on terrorist camps training Libyan, Cuban and Colombian nationals south of the Mexican border, he said.

He relayed the information to U.S. State Department and FBI agents, and acknowledged feeling "chastised" and "hurt" after no action was taken on.

"Here's a fellow law enforcement agency coming down on me for doing something that I thought was right," he said.

"And I felt like their impression of me was that here's an old country hick sheriff, that he don't know what he's doing — he's playing out of his league."

That assessment is not one shared by the sheriff.

"I don't know how we can be — we're enforcing the law," he said. "If the violation is there, your obligated, under the oath that you took and under the laws of the state of Texas, and you pursue it wherever it takes you."

Painter said his strongest reservation about the case remains the amount of news coverage it generated — starting first with Wednesday's national broadcast from ABC News.

That happenstance was the result of Howard and Tucker's actions last month as the news agency interviewed the pair for a story about their suit, Painter said.

What eventually emerged was an agreement that ABC would have exclusive access to the story — a bona fide scoop — in return for video tapes of the arrest.

Sophisticated electronic equipment that only the network could provide, a kind that could film clearly actions in a darkened airplane hangar, were set up, and two crews converged on Midland weeks before the arrest to collect other footage, Painter said.

"It bothered me — and it still does — that the network came in," said Painter. "They didn't notify their affiliate. We asked them, 'You know, y'all get on Channel 2 (KMID-TV),' and they said, 'No, we don't want them to know we're here,' "

With the national news broadcast and Painter's Nightline appearance on the same network later that night, news hounds from state-circulating newspapers also converged on Midland, but he remains surprised by the attention, he said.

"I was not prepared that this thing would go as far as it did. I did not expect the enormity of it."

He acknowledged that trying the case will be difficult because of venue considerations: a jury that has not seen the coverage may be hard to find.

"The implications that this thing has are going to create a problem for the judge that hears it, and I don't envy him that position, or any jury that hears it," said Painter.

But he relishes an opportunity to present the case to an inquiring grand jury, which District Attorney Al Schorre said may meet as soon as Wednesday.

Said Painter: "I want somebody in the civilian sector to hear and decide whether we made the right choice or not.

"I would like to share what actually occurred with individuals that have the capacity to say you did good or you did bad.

"And there's no doubt in my mind that I could prove that what occurred had to occur. The man had to be arrested."

The man, Victor Fonseca, 47, of Lisbon, Portugal, remains in the Midland County Jail in lieu of $500,000 bond and has been undergoing interrogation since his arrest.

And the election?

County Commissioner Brown asserted that Painter is "scared to death he's going to have an opponent."

In fact, the commissioner has heard two names mentioned as potential foes, but declined to name them.

Painter himself said he was "scared to death that after the good wears off there's going to be a lot of negative mudslinging."

The sheriff is no stranger to controversial elections. In 1984, he took a case all the way to the Texas Supreme Court to get on the ballot and won.

Crux of the case was then-Midland Republican Party chairman Bill Shaner's unavailability — he was out of town — when Painter decided on a late-hour filing.

But the question of re-election next year remained in perspective for the sheriff.

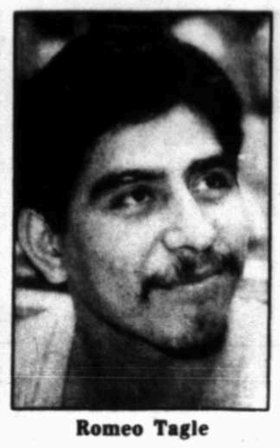

"It's how the public perceives the way I perform as to whether or not I'm re-elected," he said.

"I am perfectly satisfied right where I am," said Painter. "I love the people in Midland. They're good people — law-abiding people for the most part — and they're very supportive of law enforcement."

And reflecting on the start of his term in 1985, he said "I never dreamed for one minute it would come to this."

"It's been my experience with the federal government that sometimes they are slow to respond. This guy saw an opportunity to prevent further crime in the future," Wilshire said.

Denise Cope asked, "Why give the feds a chance to screw it up?"

Her husband, Richard Cope, said Painter typified the West Texas spirit of getting things done.

"This part of the country is what it is because people know how to do things themselves," Cope said. The couple, from Toronto, Ont., Canada, were visiting relatives in Odessa.

Retha Reed, of rural Midland, said, "Had he not stepped in and done it at that moment, everyone may have missed it.

"In the long run, as long as arms are sold, somebody's going to be hurt by it" she said.

Some people said they were glad the sting resulted in an arrest of a man suspected of trying to assist in a missile parts sale to the Iranians, but they wished Painter had worked with federal officials.

While customs officials were notified about the operation in May, they declined to get involved because "everything was in the hypothetical," Charles Conroy, a Houston-based Customs employee told the Reporter Telegram Friday.

Geologist Stan Ballard, 4502 Parkhurst Drive, said, "He should have contacted the FBI because they could have landed bigger fish."

Ballard said, "He (Fonseca) is nothing but a small fish. The people that hired him set him up like a small fish and sheltered themselves."

He added, "It was a little bit too much of cowboy frontier justice."

Ed Ashbridge, a Chevron mechanic of Odessa, said, "At first I thought he could have went further and accomplished more if the FBI had taken care of it.

"But I feel that it was his decision to make whether he wanted to pursue it or give it to someone else," Ashbridge added.

However, others questioned said the sheriff should stick to local affairs.

"Honestly, I think Gary's got enough to do to take care of Midland County," said Terry Blair, a Texas Utilities employee from Lamesa.

Louis Mazzullo, a Midland geologist, said "He should have consulted the FBI. Definitely it's a little bit out of his jurisdicition."

Craig Abbott, a Permian High School student from Odessa, said he feared the sheriff's actions might focus the baleful eye of Iranian terrorists on the Permian Basin.

"He's messing with the Iranian government. I think it might bring terrorists over here," Abbott said.

HERITAGE

The West End Addition is roughly bounded by Wall Avenue on the north, Garfield Street on the west and U.S. Highway 80 on the south. The eastern boundary is still undetermined, with proposals from G through B streets being considered, Wright said.

While residents are trying to achieve the change in zoning, they also have been organizing to fend off commercial encroachments and requests for zoning changes on the neighborhood's boundaries.

The group has had several successes preventing those changes, which were proposed by businessmen trying to grow into the neighborhood, Wright said.

In fact, repelling alterations proposed for the neighborhood — including stopping a city proposal to make Missouri Avenue a one way street and reinstating stop signs removed from several intersections — helped the residents form into one of the few organized neighborhood associations in Midland, Wright said.

Uniquely surrounded by commercial zoning, the residents, "have always found themselves responding to some intrusion," Wright said.

He added, "Residents realized they have to take an active role in the neighborhood, otherwise they will be left at the mercy of developing pressures."

But not everyone is enamored of the group. Front Street businessman, Dale McMurry, whose request to build a warehouse on some lots north of his business — Murphy's Automotive Paint Products, 2308 W. Front St. — was rejected by the City Council, considers the organization a "vigilante group."

Although McMurry's business, west of Garfield, is not inside the West End Addition, Wright said district members opposed the zone change fearing it would set a "precedent" for changes along the commercial zoning boundary of Front Street.

McMurry said he agrees with the group's efforts at preserving the neighborhood and insists he was attempting to inject some "progress" into the area.

"I have no objection to them preserving the integrity. I felt what I was going to do would upgrade the areas and show development was taking place. I was proposing a neat attractive looking building with shrubs around it," McMurry said, who added he felt like he had been "raked over the coals" by the group and city staff during the public hearings on his zone change request.

But residents haven't always been victorious in attempts to stabilize their neighborhood. Early this summer the group lost a fight to keep West Elementary School, 2101 W. Missouri Ave., open.

The Midland Independent School District board voted in June to send former West pupils to Houston Elementary School, 2000 W. Louisiana Ave., despite a residential study indicating enough pre-school children lived in the West End Addition to fill up three classrooms, Wright said.

The school's closing might deter young, "fixer-upper" couples — the kind of residents the district is hoping to attract — from moving in, Wright said.

Midland Independent School District's communications coordinator, Becky Ferguson, said a committee has been formed — with membership including two representatives from the West End Heritage Committee — to study future uses for the school that would involve school age children.

She added that the school building will remain open with several administrative offices based there.

Residents have also become nervous over "rumors" that banks are beginning to "redline" the neighborhood — that is, refuse to grant improvement or home loans because of perceived declining residential vitality — Wright said.

But despite the transfer of students out of the neighborhood and the "red lining" rumors, Wright believes the City Council is beginning pay more attention to preserving neighborhoods, he said.

"The City Council is beginning to respond to neighborhoods, and you're beginning to see the district council members address the needs of neighborhoods," he said.

The group hopes its efforts at zoning the west end into a heritage district will help the area persevere when developing pressures build up during the next boom, Wright said.

"Hopefully we're beginning to see a need to turn around and save Midland's past."

GORBACHEV

Gorbachev also would visit farms and industrial food processing plants in California's Central Valley and would probably tour Disneyland. In 1959, the late Soviet leader Nikita S. Khrushchev was barred from the amusement park on grounds of security.

In the event that no final arms agreement is reached, Soviet officials have indicated that Gorbachev would shorten his stay in the United States and confine it to New York and Washington, the Times said.

Gorbachev has said publicly several times that he has no intention of coming to the United States as a "tourist," but would come only to conclude a substantive arms agreement.

However, U.S. officials have long considered it plausible that the Soviet leader would use the annual September opening of the General Assembly as an opportunity for a visit that carried little risk to his prestige, should the two sides fail to reach an arms agreement.

Gorbachev's acceptance in July of a U.S. proposal to eliminate two categories of missiles around the world, which has come to be known as the "global double-zero" option, marked a major step toward conclusion of an arms agreement that has been the subject of negotiations since 1981.

The agreement under discussion in Geneva would ban missiles with ranges of 300 miles to 3,000 miles, including the Soviet Union's medium-range SS-20 missiles and the United States' ground-launched cruise and Pershing 2 missiles in Western Europe that have been at issue from the beginning of the Geneva talks.

Soviet and American observers generally agree that both leaders are eager for a substantive summit for domestic political reasons as much as anything.

No specific date has been set for Gorbachev's trip, and the Soviets have indicated that it could slip to early October, according to the officials who spoke to the newspaper on condition of anonymity.

Titanic treasure to tour world

PARIS (AP) — The treasure being lifted from the Titanic will tour the world, appear on television and be kept together in a collection for posterity, expedition organizers said.

For the first time since this Titanic expedition began July 21, the French coordinators revealed last week some of their plans for recouping the multimillion-dollar cost of the high-tech salvage operation.

U.S. officials who want to see the Titanic left inviolate as a memorial have criticized the operation. They note that 1,513 people drowned when the White Star liner hit an iceberg and sank on its maiden voyage from Southampton, England to New York, on April 14-15, 1912.

But the project is not a European plundering of an American-British grave, said Robert Chappaz, chairman of the French marine company Taurus International and spokesman for the expedition.

"All the financing is coming from North America," Chappaz said. "The people involved have decided that as long as the expedition is at sea they don't want to make a big show."

He said the only European investor is Swiss millionaire Carlos Piaget, who lives in New York. Piaget coordinated fund-raising for the 20 backers, registered in Britain as Ocean Research and Exploration Ltd., Chappaz said.

He added that a news conference Tuesday in New York would provide more details and that some photos would be released.

"I feel pretty sure that the public of the United States will support this mission once we have adquately informed them," Chappaz said.

He repeated the expedition's promise that none of the Titanic artifacts would be sold.

In Saturday's religion section, it was reported that the Mount Calvary Missionary Baptist Church would host the 73rd annual session of the progressive West Texas Missionary Baptist Association and its Auxiliaries Monday through Thursday.

That was incorrect. The session already has been held.

Is Wright Reagan's patsy or peacemaker?

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — House Speaker Jim Wright is enjoying a tantalizing vision of his name in history books as a peacemaker if the initiative he engineered with President Reagan somehow emerges as the catalyst that brings democracy to Nicaragua and peace to Central America.

For the moment, the Reagan-Wright plan, which ignited a rhetorical conflagration within the Republican conservative camp, has been superseded by a proposal initiated by five Central American countries.

But whether or not the Reagan-Wright plan becomes the blueprint for settlement, Wright — simply by proposing it in cooperation with the president — underscored his goal of placing his own stamp on the office he has held since January. He also emphasized the contrast between his style and that of his predecessor, Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill, D-Mass., who spent six years at war with Reagan over how to deal with Marxist Nicaragua.

Wright's action is reminiscent of the efforts made repeatedly by his fellow Texas Democrats, Speaker Sam Rayburn and then-Senate Majority Leader Lyndon Johnson, to work harmoniously with a Republican president, Dwight D. Eisenhower, on critical foreign policy matters in the 1950s.

Like Rayburn and Johnson, Wright is an activist who runs the House with an iron hand and advocates bipartisanship in foreign policy.

The 64-year-old Wright, like the gambler in Kenny Rogers' song, usually "knows when to hold 'em and knows when to fold 'em." But he took enormous political risks in joining with the White House to produce the Reagan-Wright peace plan announced Aug. 5.

"Many of us told him he was risking his speakership," said Democratic Whip Tony Coelho, in a telephone interview from his district in California.

Most of the Democrats that Coelho consulted feared they were being set up by the White House to send more money to the counter-revolutionaries, called Contras, if the Sandinista government in Nicaragua rejected the plan.

House Speaker Jim Wright

Continuing aid to the Contras after the current Sept. 30 cutoff date would enrage the Democrats' liberal wing and guarantee that Wright would be opposed in the election for speaker of the 101st Congress in January 1989.

Coelho said he reminded Wright that the Reagan administration earlier had "lied to him and made fun of him," and warned that "in being a centrist he was falling into a trap."

According to Coelho, Wright replied that risk-taking was an essential element in leadership. He said if the administration was willing to get started on a negotiated peace he ought to help make it work.

Some members of Congress who have worked diligently on Central American problems grumbled about being left out of the planning process, according to congressional aides. "They weren't really angry," said one staffer, "it was more an attitude of 'where did this come from and why weren't we a party to it?'"

But Rep. Dave McCurdy, D-Okla., a moderate who heads a group of swing-vote members interested in a negotiated peace in Central America, said of the speaker: "He truly believes in a bipartisan foreign policy."

Wright started the year with a sure-footed attitude and an ambitious and controversial agenda.

Many of his colleagues groaned when, after being elected speaker by the Democratic Caucus, Wright suggested a delay in the scheduled tax cut for the wealthiest taxpayers as a means of increasing revenues to reduce the federal deficit. But by midyear, both the House and Senate had approved a budget resolution calling for $19 billion in new taxes. O'Neill had refused to consider a tax hike until the president requested it.

High on Wright's agenda were issues Democrats cared about — clean water, highway funding, aid to the homeless and a trade bill to curb foreign imports and open new overseas markets to American goods. Prodded by Wright, the House produced margins of victory that assured overrides of presidential vetoes on all of those bills.

So far, Democrats of all stripes applaud Wright's leadership style, but they say it is too early to make a firm judgment on whether he will go down in history as a great speaker. In recent interviews, several approved of his ability to "make the trains run on time."

While Republicans approve of Wright's administrative ability, some say he is acting as a brake on the Democrats' quest for new ideas.

"On every tactical level, Wright is doing a superb job," said Rep. Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., one of the conservatives' most prolific and outspoken idea men, in an interview with Congressional Quarterly. "The problem for Democrats is that, faced with a temporary Republican disarray, they are reverting to the party of Jimmy Carter — higher taxes, more spending, weaker defense and big labor bills."

Wright's accomplishments so far appear to have shielded him from lasting damage to his prestige from the controversy over his intervention with federal banking regulators on behalf of three Texans — including a key political supporter — involved with failing savings and loan institutions. Wright said he was only looking out for his constituents; action he considered his congressional duty.

But the speaker's critics contend that he was using the prestige of his office in a crude maneuver to keep federal regulators off his friends' backs.

Politicians on both the left and right now are asking if Wright bested Reagan in the political game on the peace plan. Two days after the Reagan-Wright initiative was unveiled, the presidents of five Central American nations, including Nicaragua, signed their own, similar peace accord and Wright immediately endorsed it.

But White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said that "both plans are operative" and "we don't favor one over the other."

The Contras, who first said they approved of the Central American blueprint, now are voicing worries about the possibility that aid from the United States will be cut off before the Nicaraguan government has initiated the reforms specified in the plan.

Wright said through a spokesman he is fully aware of enormous conflicts between the five countries, including Nicaragua, but is convinced that they can be overcome through serious negotiations.

Reagan has pledged his administration to a political, not military, solution in Central America. When the administration's new point man on contra aid, former Texas Republican Rep. Tom Loeffler, visited Wright on July 22, he renewed that pledge.

Loeffler, according to a witness, said the administration could not count enough votes to send another infusion of cash to the Contras and was ready to consider a negotiated settlement of the Nicaraguan conflict.

FBI to investigate police shooting of Dallas man

DALLAS (AP) — The FBI will investigate the police shooting of an 81-year-old crime watch volunteer to see whether officers violated his civil rights.

The probe is the latest development in the debate over the city's controversial deadly force policy.

A spokeswoman for U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese said Friday the FBI will conduct the investigation to determine whether two police officers violated the civil rights of David Horton.

Police said they would cooperate with the investigation.

"We don't expect they'd find any problems with it (the shooting) and of course the department will cooperate fully with federal authorities," said police department spokesman Ed Spencer.

Police said Horton was shot May 18 after he pointed a rifle at two offices answering a disturbance call at his apartment complex in South Dallas. Police said he ignored their order to lower the weapon and fired twice. Police believe Horton, a crime watch volunteer, had gone to the apartment parking lot to investigate what he thought was an attempted car theft.

The shooting, which heightened concern over the Dallas Police Department's use of deadly force, occurred shortly after a congressional committee held a hearing in Dallas on the police department's policy.

Last month, a grand jury declined to indict officers John Nichols and Donald Moten in the Horton shooting.

Wallet containing $1,100 returned to Texas tourist

SWEET HOME, Ore. (AP) — An 18-year-old Sweet Home woman received a $20 reward for returning a Texas woman's wallet with more than $1,100 in cash inside, police said.

Shani Fuller found the wallet belonging to Christine Baker of Fort Worth, Texas, after Ms. Baker had stopped at a Sweet Home bank and left her wallet atop her car before driving away, according to Steve Young, a spokesman for the Sweet Home police.

Young said Ms. Fuller took the wallet to the Sweet Home police station, where Ms. Baker arrived a short time later.

Police gave Ms. Baker her wallet, which contained $1,139, and she gave Ms. Fuller a $20 reward, Young said.

Ms. Fuller said she had gone to the bank to get her checking account in order before leaving to start college at the University of Southern California.

"Actually, I didn't really want to pick it up, but I thought I probably should," Ms. Fuller said.

Ex-cop sentenced to life

SAN ANGELO (AP) — A former police sergeant who said he shot his friend by accident after a quarrel flared up was sentenced to life in prison.

William R. Freeman, 40, was convicted of murder Thursday in the April 13 slaying of Don Hazelwood, 39. The jury assessed punishment about two hours after reaching the guilty verdict.

Freeman and Hazelwood were friends and had worked on drug investigations together. Hazelwood worked for a short time as a Tom Green County jailer and later worked for the Pecos County Sheriff's Office and Monahans Police Department.

Prosecutor Dick Alcala said Freeman shot Hazelwood in his sleep and called the killing a cold execution.

Criminal charges unlikely

HOUSTON (AP) — A fired police sergeant is unlikely to face criminal charges for his alleged unjustified use of a stun gun on a suspected traffic violator, authorities said.

Sgt. David E. Borchers, 37, was terminated last week after an Internal Affairs Division probe concluded he used a Taser stun gun unnecessarily on Leonard D. Martin, 29.

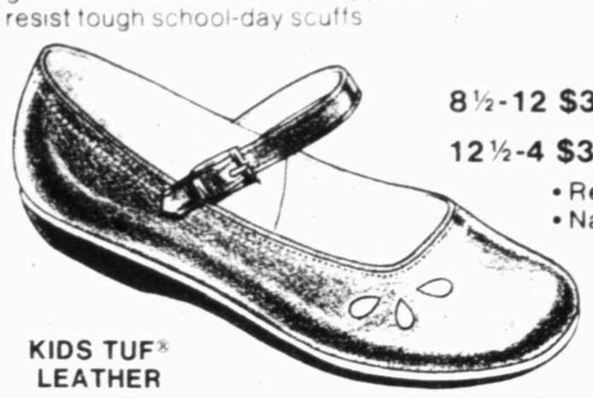

Martin's vehicle was pulled over Feb. 19 in a routine traffic stop. He became involved in a noisy disagreement with police, kicking in the interior of a police car and striking an officer, and Borchers was called to the scene, according to Houston Police Chief Lee Brown.

Martin had calmed down when hit with the stun gun by Borchers, who allegedly then said "This is better than sex," Chief Brown said.

Dole moves to restrict airspace near airports

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — U.S. Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole Saturday announced a plan to make the skies safer by restricting airspace around busy airports and requiring installation of anti-collision devices in airplanes.

The Federal Aviation Administration is planning soon to propose new rules to create nine new Terminal Control Areas, or TCAs, to increase the number of airports protected by restricted airspace and impose stricter requirements for pilots.

The FAA also has issued a proposal to require the installation in commercial aircraft of a traffic alert and collision avoidance system, called the TCAS II. The system was first proposed in September 1986 by FAA Administrator Donald Engen.

In addition, Mrs. Dole has directed FAA Administrator Allan McArtor to review the possibility of requiring all aircraft seating more than 10 people to install traffic alert equipment.

Mrs. Dole said the proposals were not a result of the Aug. 16 crash of a Northwest Airlines jet in Detroit.

"It's been a matter of several years. That's not something that's occurred because of the crash," Mrs. Dole said. "This is something that's been in the works."

Speaking at a news conference in Charlotte, Mrs. Dole said no official findings had been released yet for the cause of the Northwest crash.

She said it would be irresponsible to comment on the investigation until the National Transportation Safety Board finished its investigation.

Rep. Robert Wise, D-W.Va., a member of the House Government Operations subcommittee on transportation, said Mrs. Dole's proposals were "a first step but they certainly did not go far enough by any means."

The main problem of mid-air collisions and near misses "quite frankly is that the FAA doesn't have enough people," Wise said.

There are 2,600 fewer air traffic controllers now than there were in 1981 although the number of flights has increased dramatically, he said.

William E. Jackman, a spokesman for the Air Transport Association of America, which represents U.S. scheduled air carriers, echoed Wise's comments, calling the proposals "a step in the right direction."

He said the airlines petitioned the transportation department for similar action two years ago.

Like Wise, Jackman called for more air traffic controllers.

"At least a thousand more," he said.

Concern about aerial crashes has heightened amid an increase this year in the number of near-collision reports filed by pilots.

Last wreckage of jet cleared from roadway

DETROIT (AP) — The last wreckage of Northwest Flight 255 was cleared away Saturday from a road where the jet crashed and killed at least 156 people, while hearses removed most of the remaining bodies from a temporary morgue at the airport.

Investigators were still searching for clues to the cause of last Sunday's disaster at Detroit Metropolitan Airport, where a McDonnell Douglas MD-80 crashed in flames on a highway shortly after takeoff.

Saturday, some workers raked the crash site while others sand-blasted a bridge and replaced guardrails. Before Middlebelt Road is opened later this week, workers will reseed a scorched embankment and repair the road surface so traffic will not be slowed by gawkers looking for evidence of the crash, said Wayne County Sheriff's Capt. Donald Smith.

The lone survivor, 4-year-old Cecilia Cichan, remained in serious but stable condition Saturday at the University of Michigan Medical Center's burn unit, said medical center spokesman John Turck.

Cecilia hasn't been told about the crash or the deaths of her parents and brother. Her family and counselors are "concerned about some of her initial reactions, how they're going to talk with Cecilia when she regains a constant state of consciousness," Turck said.

"A lot will be driven by how she is reacting in general. She is mostly sleeping and unconscious," he said.

Federal investigators said they expect to stay in Detroit a few more days to examine the wreckage, which is being assembled in a hangar at the airport.

Parts of the aircraft will be sent to Washington and the plane's two engines will be shipped to East Hartford, Conn., for further inspection by the manufacturer, Pratt & Whitney Co., officials said.

The plane carried 155 people en route to Phoenix, Ariz., and southern California.

After using an unusually long stretch of runway, it lifted off nose high, then struck a parking lot light tower 2,700 feet from the end of the runway, hit the top of a car rental agency building and showered an intersection, including vehicles driving through, with exploding debris.

TWA jet lands safely with one set of wheels up

BELLEVILLE, Ill. (AP) — A TWA jetliner with a stuck landing gear was diverted Saturday from a St. Louis airport to nearby Scott Air Force Base, where it landed safely with one set of wheels up.

Airline officials said the pilot tried to shake the gear loose by dipping the plane sharply, a maneuver one passenger said prompted screams from others on board.

The TWA Boeing 767 made a safe landing on two of its three landing gear and skidded down the runway on its right engine, said Air Force Col. Tom Diamond, deputy base commander at Scott.

It was one of two planes forced to make emergency landings Saturday due to landing gear problems. A Midway Airlines DC-9 landed safely at Chicago's Midway airport shortly after takeoff when it could not retract its landing gear.

Those aboard used emergency chutes on both sides of the plane after it landed, Diamond said. The most serious injury among the 169 passengers and 12 crew members on the TWA flight was a broken or sprained ankle suffered by one man.

The jetliner, Flight 756, was traveling from San Francisco to Lambert-St. Louis International Airport, said TWA reservation agent Alberta Coleman.

UMC lesbian minister to fight ouster

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — A United Methodist Church trial starts Monday for a lesbian minister who is battling her dismissal by challenging church law that says homosexuality is incompatible with Christian teaching.

"That's a pretty broad statement to make," said the Rev. Rose Mary Denman. "If church law said homosexuality is incompatible with current United Methodist teaching, then I wouldn't have a leg to stand on."

The law was refined in 1984 at the quadrennial United Methodist general conference to make explicit the ban against ordination or appointment of homosexual ministers.

At the time, Ms. Denman had not accepted that she was a lesbian and supported the ban, telling her superiors she might even leave the denomination if homosexuals were allowed to become pastors.

Ms. Denman, 40, says she went from "blatant, raw, fear-filled homophobia" to acceptance of her own lesbianism in a matter of months. She confided this to her superior, Bishop George Bashore of Boston, and the church granted her two one-year leaves from her two parishes in Conway, N.H. She moved to Portland, Maine, with her lover, the ex-wife of a minister.

Ms. Denman plans to transfer in November to the Unitarian Universalist Association, which she finds more accepting of her lifestyle, and she sought a third leave to cover the period until then.

United Methodist law allows up to five consecutive leaves, but the church's Board of Ordained Ministry denied her another leave.

Then the church's New Hampshire annual conference ordered a trial on whether to defrock Ms. Denman. The trial, with a jury of 13 ministers, starts Monday in Durham.

In a telephone interview last week, Ms. Denman said she is fighting her ouster on principle. The United Universalist Association has told her that, barring other complications, she will be accepted as a minister.

Pickup lurches into crowd, kills two

BOSTON (AP) — A decorated pickup truck carrying people in a religious parade lurched forward Saturday into a group of marchers, killing a pregnant woman and a girl and injuring at least 29 people, including a baby.

The accident occurred during the Children and Youth Christian Parade near Blackstone Park in the city's South End as about 2,000 horrified spectators looked on, said police spokeswoman Jane Sheehan.

"Some people were crying, some of them were screaming and some people were trying to grab the kids," said Abiezer Ayuso, 19, who witnessed the accident. "There was quite a bit of blood."

"It was like a whole church in front of that truck," said his 18-year-old sister, Betzabe.

The driver of the truck, identified as the Rev. Etanislao Gonzales, has not been charged in the accident, officials said.

The parade was made up of mostly young people from various Christian youth groups, many of them Hispanic, who had spent the day in singing songs and preaching, said residents of the area.

The truck, near the end of the parade, was decorated with paper flowers and carrying several people and a live tree, witnesses said.

When marchers and spectators realized that the truck was surging forward, they started pushing people out of the way, Abiezer Ayuso said.

He said he saw one young woman get pushed out of the way only to fall back under the truck's wheels.

NATION IN BRIEF

MacDonald wants new trial

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Convicted murderer Jeffrey MacDonald, whose $15 million lawsuit against "Fatal Vision" author Joe McGinnis ran into a mistrial when the jury deadlocked, says he'd like to see a new trial begin immediately.

However, MacDonald's attorney said there may be reasons to settle the breach-of-contract suit out of court after hearing comments Friday from the bitterly divided jury.

The forewoman said that even if the six jurors had been able to agree in the federal civil trial, MacDonald would have won no more than $90,000 in royalties on the book, which detailed his conviction in the grisly 1970 murders of his pregnant wife and two small daughters.

The $90,000 was placed in escrow when the suit was filed, but was far less than the amount MacDonald claimed he was due.

It cost him an estimated $250,000 to bring the case to court, and his lawyer, Gary Bostwick, indicated the jurors' comments would weigh heavily in future consideration of a settlement.

Anti-abortionist wants Bork

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chief organizer of an anti-abortion rally at the Washington Monument Saturday strongly urged the confirmation of federal Judge Robert H. Bork to the Supreme Court.

"I think it would be wonderful if this man would be appointed," said Melody Green, director of Americans Against Abortion, based in Lindale, Texas.

Bork, a judge of the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in the District of Columbia, is known for his conservative views and his disagreement with the Roe vs. Wade decision legalizing abortion.

"I believe that President Reagan was very wise in nominating this man...Not only in the area of pro-life, but in many areas...there would be changes that would be effected," she told a news conference preceding a five-hour rally featuring a score of speakers, prayer and Christian musicians.

Anti-Contra protesters held

ARLINGTON HEIGHTS, Ill. (AP) — More than 60 demonstrators, protesting U.S. support of the Nicarguan Contra rebels, scaled a barbed-wire fence outside a military base Saturday and landed in jail, authorities said.

The protesters were among an estimated 400 people who marched in a four-hour demonstration that turned ugly as marchers heaved mannequins and wooden coffins over a fence surrounding the Arlington Heights Army Reserve Base, officials said.

Protestors also fastened anti-war banners to the 8-foot fence.

Falwell ministry billed PTL for solicitation letters

LYNCHBURG, Va. (AP) — The Rev. Jerry Falwell used his Old Time Gospel Hour ministry to prepare letters pleading for contributions to the PTL ministry and billed PTL hundreds of thousands of dollars, his spokesman confirmed.

"In essence we are loaning PTL the money just to get the mailing out the door, and then when money begins to be received, Old Time Gospel Hour will be paid back for cost of postage and materials," said Falwell spokesman Mark DeMoss. "We have done that several times so far."

He defended the practice as "just good business," saying the Lynchburg mailings are quicker and cheaper than work done at PTL, which is undergoing reorganization in federal bankruptcy court.

DeMoss said the mailings were done in Lynchburg, at cost, because PTL did not have the money for postage and envelopes.

Ray Valentino, who headed the PTL mailroom for 20 months until he was laid off July 17, disputed DeMoss' statement.

"We knew we could do the mailing cheaper than Falwell," Valentino said. "We were denied that opportunity."

Bypassing PTL's direct-mail staff and equipment near Charlotte, N.C., Falwell sometimes used private vendors — including a Lynchburg advertising agency owned by his brother-in-law, Sam K. Pate — to help with the mailings, the Roanoke Times & World-News reported Saturday.

The letters were trucked from Lynchburg to Charlotte, N.C., for mailing so they would bear postmarks from that city.

DeMoss acknowledged that Falwell's ministry was aided by outside vendors that included Pate in preparing the PTL mailings. He said neither Falwell nor Pate profited from the transactions.

Contacted by telephone at his Lynchburg office, Pate refused to discuss his dealings with Falwell.

1787 Constitution Daybook

Associated Press

Tuesday, Aug. 23, 1787
PHILADELPHIA TODAY

Today was clear, warm, and reasonably pleasant.

Thomas Clifford reported to the Board of Managers of the Philadelphia Dispensary that the Dispensary had moved to a house he had rented on Chestnut Street belonging to John Guest. This private charity, which had just opened its door in 1786, provided emergency room and out-patient treatment by Philadelphia's leading doctors. In 1787, the Dispensary treated 1,647 patients. No other American city provided this kind of free medical care.

CONFEDERATION TODAY

David Ross, of Maryland, joined the four full delegates and the five single delegates who had attended yesterday. Even with Ross, at least three additional delegates were needed to form a quorum so Congress could meet.

CONVENTION TODAY

The Convention considered giving Congress the power "to make laws for organizing, arming & disciplining the militia, and for governing such parts of them as may be employed in that service of the U.S., reserving to the states respectively, the appointment of the officers, and authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed."

Roger Sherman (Conn.) moved to strike the last clause as unnecessary; the states already had it. Oliver Ellsworth (Conn.) disagreed. He also feared that "disciplining" was so broad as to include all power over the militia. Rufus King (Mass.) explained the committee's intent, and Sherman withdrew his motion.

Elbridge Gerry (Mass.) was almost hysterical in his opposition. To give Congress such power reduced the states to drill sergeants. He'd rather see the citizens of Massachusetts disarmed than subjected to the central government. (One wonders if he remembered this speech in 1812. In that year, Gov. Caleb Strong of Massachusetts refused a request from the administration in which Gerry was about to become vice president to place a part of the state militia in federal service.) After much more debate, the proposal was accepted.

At Charles Pinckney's urging, a prohibition on government officers accepting foreign titles and gifts was passed.

Article VIII, which contained the provision that the acts of Congress made in pursuance of the Constitution and all treaties made under the authority of the United States shall be to supreme law of the several states, was passed without debate.

Article IX, Section 1, giving the Senate power to make treaties and appoint Ambassadors and Judges, was taken up. Robert Morris (Pa.) opposed having the Senate appoint officers; it was too numerous, subject to cabal and devoid of responsibility. Besides, if the Senate were to try judges on impeachment, it certainly shouldn't be able to fill the very vacancies created by impeachment. James Wilson (Pa.) agreed. The article was postponed.

DELEGATES TODAY

William Samuel Johnson dined at his boarding house and went for a walk.

George Washington dined, drank tea and spent the evening at the Morrises.

Benjamin Franklin met with the state's Supreme Executive Council.

William Paterson wrote from New Brunswick to Oliver Ellsworth. The letter bypassed Ellsworth as he left Philadelphia today for home.

LOOKING BACK
A Dreaded Return

William Paterson and Oliver Ellsworth had been friends since Ellsworth's days at Princeton in 1764-66, so Paterson's letter of this day was unusually informal:

"Dear Sir,

"What are the Convention about? When will they rise? Will they agree upon a system energetick and effectual, or will they break up without doing anything to the Purpose? Full of Disputation and noisy as the wind, it is said, that you are afraid of the very windows, and have a man planted under them to prevent the Secrets and doings from flying out. The Business, however, is detailed. I hope you will not have as much Altercation upon the detail, as there was in Settling the Principles of the systems. If you should, Patridge himself, if Patridge was alive, wuld not be able to foretell the time of your rising. I wish you much speed, and that you may be full of good works; the first mainly for my own Sake, for I dread going down again to Philada.

"My compliments to all your fellow-laborers under the same roof.

"Adieu and Adieu
"Wm. Paterson"

Paterson and Ellsworth, as members of the Judiciary Committee of the United States Senate, would write the law which set up the federal court system, and would serve together on the Supreme Court of the United States.

Gourd of destiny squashes tradition

KEENE, N.H. (AP) — They came to praise zucchini, to be sure, but also to unload zucchini at a festival on Saturday in honor of that most prolific vegetable.

"Zucchini: Gourd of Destiny," was the theme of the sixth annual event at the Keene State College campus.

At least 500 people braved the rain for events such as the zucchini peel off, the zucchini look-alike contest, motorized zucchini, longest bicycle jump over a zucchini, best dressed zucchini, best matched zucchini and best zucchini rock video.

The festival began with a big parade, led by a Keene couple married at the festival last year.

This year, Harry Wolhandler and Peg Monahan of Keene led a ceremony to christen their 3-month-old daughter Jeannie "Zucchini."

Little Jeannie, who was smaller than some of the zucchinis at the festival, rode in the parade in a carriage shaped like a zucchini.

Korean worker killed by tear gas canister

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Riot police fought shipyard workers storming a hotel in search of company bosses Saturday, and a worker hit by fragments from a tear gas canister became the first fatality in a month of national labor unrest.

Striking ground workers at Seoul's airport delayed flights for up to an hour, and striking bus drivers in the capital disrupted rush hour traffic.

Lee Suk-kyu, 22, was among 500 striking workers from Daewoo Shipbuilding and Machinery Ltd. who formed an advance group and marched on the hotel near the shipyard in Koje, said the Hankook Ilbo, a leading national daily.

The demonstration in the southern coastal city began after talks aimed at ending the strike against the big shipyard broke down.

Followed by 2,500 workers, the advance group battled 1,300 riot police who fired tear gas and closed in from three sides, the paper said. The workers countered by throwing rocks.

Lee and 20 other workers were injured in the 50-minute clash, the paper said. It said Lee fell to the ground, bleeding from the chest.

"When he arrived at the hospital, he was already dead" after tear gas canister fragments penetrated his lung, Dr. Lee Doo-young was quoted as saying.

Workers armed with rocks and steel pipes set fire to two cars and smashed hundreds of windows of company apartments and dormitories, news reports said. About 100 workers bypassed the police lines and ransacked the Okpo Tourist Hotel room by room in an unsuccessful effort to find their company president and other managers, the reports said.

A 50-year-old Japanese man broke his back in a jump from his third-floor hotel room during the melee, the reports said.

A 50-year-old Japanese man broke his back in a jump from his third-floor hotel room during the melee, the reports said. His identity was not immediately available.

The strikes were the latest in a wave of labor unrest that has swept South Korea since President Chun Doo-hwan agreed last month to democratic reforms, including greater labor freedom. The Labor Ministry said protests were under way Saturday at 553 workplaces around the country.

Daewoo shipbuilding, South Korea's No.2 shipyard, has been paralyzed since workers walked off their jobs last week, demanding pay raises and improved working conditions.

The company said Friday said it had to shut down the shipyard indefinitely because the workers refused a labor-management agreement reached in a series of talks. Another round of talks on Saturday also broke down.

Management offered a raise of $18 a month, but the strikers sought to double that figure. Daewoo's 15,000 workers make $192 to $387 a month, depending on the length of their service and the level of their skills.

Daewoo, like other shipyards in Korea, currently is in deep financial trouble because of a prolonged global shipbuilding recession. Daewoo officials said the strike would cost them $3 million a month.

In Seoul, about 1,000 ground workers at Kimpo International Airport went on strike, delaying incoming and outgoing flights for up to five hours, airport officials said.

The workers demanded a 50 percent pay increase and a new labor union independent of company and government control, the officials said.

One official, who demanded not to be identified, said the ground workers make an average of $290 a month plus an annual bonus of 400 percent of the monthly salary.

The strike affected 87 international, 69 domestic and 17 cargo flights on Saturday, the officials said.

Office workers and temporary workers were called in to work as cleaners and food suppliers, the officials said. Some in-flight meals were airlifted from Taipei and Tokyo.

Parts of Seoul's morning rush hour traffic were disrupted when drivers for 380 of the city's 5,400 buses halted operations, spurning an 11 percent wage increase agreement reached earlier.

Unions attack apartheid's economic base

By LAURINDA KEYS

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — In their unprecedented strike against South Africa's major industry, black miners are challenging the economic basis of apartheid, demanding a greater share of the wealth they produce.

The walkout, called two weeks ago, is the biggest legal strike in South Africa's history. A bold move, made against a background of massive black unemployment in a depressed economy, it showed the growing power and confidence of black trade unions.

The unions' recent success in uniting and mobilizing black workers in the struggle for economic and political power is just what the white-led government feared in the years it prohibited independent black unions.

The unions were finally legalized in 1979, but were barred from political activity. They have ignored that prohibition despite warnings from the government that it would crack down on any opposition outside Parliament — where the black majority of 25.6 million has no representation under South Africa's apartheid system of racial segregation.

"Everything is political in this country," Cyril Ramaphosa, general secretary of the National Union of Mineworkers, said at the outset of the strike, which he says involves 340,000 miners at 45 major gold and coal mines.

The mineworkers are part of a federation of black labor organizations that has adopted a political platform branding apartheid and capitalism as twin evils and calling for redistribution of the wealth controlled by 5 million whites.

AP Laserphoto

Striking gold miners fired by Anglo American Corp., South Africa's largest mining firm, leave company property in Welkom, Orange Free State, Friday to collect their pay and return home.

Some apartheid laws have softened, but black mineworkers still must live apart from their families; they have no pensions, and no hazard pay for the most dangerous jobs in the deepest, hottest and richest mines in the world.

Their demands to change these conditions and increase average pay by 30 percent are political issues in a country where blacks were regarded for decades as merely a transient work force without rights.

Bobby Godsell, industrial relations manager for the biggest gold producer, Anglo American Corp., said the wage increases of 15 to 23.4 percent the company imposed last month are fair.

This argument is rejected by union officials who know that the profits of the South African-owned mining giant increased 409 percent in the past eight years, while miners' pay rose just 85 percent over a decade.

The company reported earning a $501 million profit in the latest fiscal year and paying its black miners an average $9.50 a day.

"It is clear that the demand for a fair share of the profit goes beyond a simple wage demand," said the New Nation, a left-wing weekly newspaper published by the Catholic Bishops Council.

"It threatens the basis of the political and economic system that makes it possible to pay low wages and generate super profits. And bosses are unlikely to leave the threat to such a system unchallenged."

Mineworkers account for half of the 700,000-member Congress of South African Trade Unions (COSATU), which in 20 months has become the biggest labor coalition in the country's history.

The congress has organized three national job actions of more than 1 million workers each. Now, in taking on the mining companies, the black unionists are striking at South Africa's economic heart, since minerals accounted for 70 percent of South Africa's material exports in 1986.

Officials of COSATU promised that if mineworkers were hurt by police, it would "almost certainly" call sympathy strikes in other industries. Since then, about 300 miners have been injured in clashes.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Women march in Panama

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — At least 20,000 women dressed in white marched peacefully through the capital Saturday demanding the reopening of newspapers and radio stations closed during weeks of anti-government protests.

No uniformed police or soldiers were seen as the women marched 5 miles along the main downtown commercial street, preceded and followed by hundreds of cars whose drivers honked horns constantly.

Organizers claimed there were as many as 100,000 marchers but journalists estimated the number was about 20,000.

The demonstration was organized by the Civic Crusade, a coalition of 192 business, labor, professional and student groups that has been leading the protests against President Eric Arturo Delvalle's military-dominated government.

Waving white handkerchiefs adopted by the Civic Crusade as a protest symbol, the women chanted anti-government slogans and carried signs with such messages as "Open La Prensa" and "I Want a Legitimate and Decent Government For My Children."

Ryan won't rest with mom

LONDON (AP) — Michael Ryan, the gun-loving loner who became Britain's worst mass murderer, won't be buried with the doting mother he killed and "almost certainly" won't be buried in the town he devastated, his family said Saturday.

Several relatives of his victims had expressed dismay that Ryan might be buried in the same graveyard as some of the 16 people he killed in Wednesday's shooting spree. The massacre occurred in the small country town of Hungerford about 60 miles west of London.

"We all feel strongly about this and do not want the idea of Ryan still staying in Hungerford," Susan Lavisher, a relative of one of the 13 people wounded in the rampage, told The Times of London.

David Fairbrass, a cousin of Ryan and a family spokesman, said: "It is distressing for the people of Hungerford to think that he might be buried there, we understand that. We have not really decided where he will be buried, but it will almost certainly not be in Hungerford out of respect to the people who live there."

Iran, Iraq resume air raids

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iran and Iraq announced air raids on each other's industrial and military installations Saturday in an intensified air war that raised fears of a new "war of the cities."

Iranian warplanes bombed targets in northern and southern Iraq, said the official Islamic Republic News Agency, monitored in Nicosia.

About 40 Iraqi fighter-bombers carried out a "devastating raid" on a petrochemical plant in Bandar Khomeini port in Iran, according to a military communique reported by the official Iraqi News Agency, also monitored in Nicosia.

No casualty figures were immediately available. Verification of claims from either side in the 7-year-old Iran-Iraq war is rarely possible because they do not as a rule allow foreign correspondents to the front.

Rain could cool Basin

From Staff and Wire Reports

There is a slight likelihood of raindrops falling to cool down today's predicted hot afternoon.

The weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport are forecasting a 20 percent chance of mainly afternoon thunderstorms today and Monday. The high temperature both days is to be around 90 degrees.

Winds are forecast mostly southeasterly at 5 to 15 mph today. The low temperature tonight is to be near 70 degrees.

Saturday's high temperature was 93 degrees, and the record high for an Aug. 22 is 103 degrees in 1965. The overnight low was 67 degrees, and the record low for an Aug. 23 is 61 degrees in 1961.

STATE

The late summer pattern of hot and dry weather persisted in Texas Saturday afternoon. A high pressure cell remained entrenched over the state, but a weak cold front managed to slip into the Panhandle near Amarillo.

Scattered showers and thunderstorms dampened parts of the Big Bend National Park. Those showers stretched across the mountains into southern New Mexico. Skies were partly cloudy over the rest of Texas.

Winds in the Panhandle had shifted to a northerly direction behind the cold front. South to southwest winds breezed across the rest of the state. Winds generally blew at speeds of 5 mph to 15 mph.

Saturday afternoon temperatures were in the 80s over the western mountainous region, while the rest of state had readings mostly in the 90s. The late afternoon extremes ranged from 86 degrees at Marfa to 100 degrees at Cotulla.

NATION

A cold front pushed into the Ohio Valley and central Plains on Saturday, bringing much lower temperatures and touching off occasionally heavy rain.

Early afternoon temperatures behind the front were 20 to 40 degrees lower than Friday across Nebraska and western Iowa through the plains of Kansas, Colorado, Wyoming and South Dakota. Highs were near 60 over the northern Great Lakes.

South of the front, the air was very humid and temperatures were in the low to middle 90s. Paducah, Ky., reached a record-tying 99 degrees by early afternoon.

The cold front brought showers and thundershowers in its wake during the morning.

ALL STARS to shine

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

An ALL STAR game of a different sort will be played in Midland this week.

Beginning Tuesday, 1,000 students from Midland and Lee Freshman and Senior high schools will enter into their respective gymnasiums and — if all goes as scheduled — exit two days later sans negative habits.

The gymnasium retreats — scheduled for Aug. 25-27 at Midland and Aug. 28-30 at Lee high school — are the hallmark of the nationwide ALL STAR program — described by one of its officials, Linda Welch, as a "positive peer leadership program."

ALL STAR stands for Activity Leadership Laboratories — Students Teaming Around.

Students "with leadership potential" who'll be in grades eight, nine, 10 and 11, were recruited in early summer for the program, Midland Independent School District Superintendent Joe Baressi said last week.

"We wanted to be sure we got an accurate cross-section," Baressi explained, of the 1,000 students.

"We take in students, faculty, administration and parents. Our concept is that young people can develop standards of behavior that will positively affect their environment," Ms. Welch, director of ALL STAR development, said in a telephone interview from San Antonio last week.

The program was developed "a number of years ago" at the request of the federal government, Ms. Welch explained.

"They asked the five regional training centers of the U.S. Department of Education to develop a substance abuse prevention program to take into the schools," she said.

A grant from Trinity University in San Antonio, where the southwest regional training center is located, got the ALL STAR program off the ground, and that Hill Country city has remained its headquarters since, she said.

Water ruling hasn't washed away problem

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

The ordinance — enacted to stem the flow of excessive water from lawn sprinklers into the streets — was passed to save water and alleviate street deterioration from pooling water.

During the almost one year since its enactment, the city's nuisance water ordinance whose teeth are fines of up to $200 for allowing excess water to flow into city streets haven't displayed much bite.

Because most people have been correcting problems after measure-requited first notice, no fines have been issued under the law approved by the City Council last summer, said Planning and Development Director Richard Hennessy.

The ordinance — enacted to stem the flow of excessive water from lawn sprinklers into the streets — was passed to save water and alleviate street deterioration from pooling water, Hennessy said.

Code enforcement officer Warren Cloyd said of the ordinance, "It's been a limited success. There's still an awful lot of water in the streets but that's unavoidable because of the type of drainage in Midland."

Business or private gardeners found to be dumping lots of water in streets through a sprinkler system are given two notices before a complaint is filed in municipal court, where they are fined by a judge, Cloyd said.

Since June, 89 first notices and nine second notices have been issued. So far this summer, only two violators are scheduled to be taken to municipal court after receiving a third warning, Cloyd said.

Sloppy sprinklers are usually traced as the cause of the excess water by a code enforcement officer who begins patrolling main streets from 6 a.m. to 7 a.m. in the summer. The targets of his early morning rounds are gardeners who allow water to flow into the streets.

"Just because they water at night will not exempt them. By going out early in the morning we're able to catch more of them because we're able to find the source," Cloyd warned.

The office also responds to complaints called in by neighbors about excessive water. However, some neighbors have been overzealous in their attempts to curb water flowing into the streets, he said.

"We're not looking for a small puddle that runs over the curb. We're interested in the ones where water runs for a considerable distance and gathers in intersections," Cloyd explained.

Businesses and apartment complexes are the worst offenders under the ordinance, Cloyd said.

"These offices and apartment complexes can put out a lot of water in a short period of time," he said.

City parks also came under criticism last summer for allowing their sprinklers to dump water into the streets.

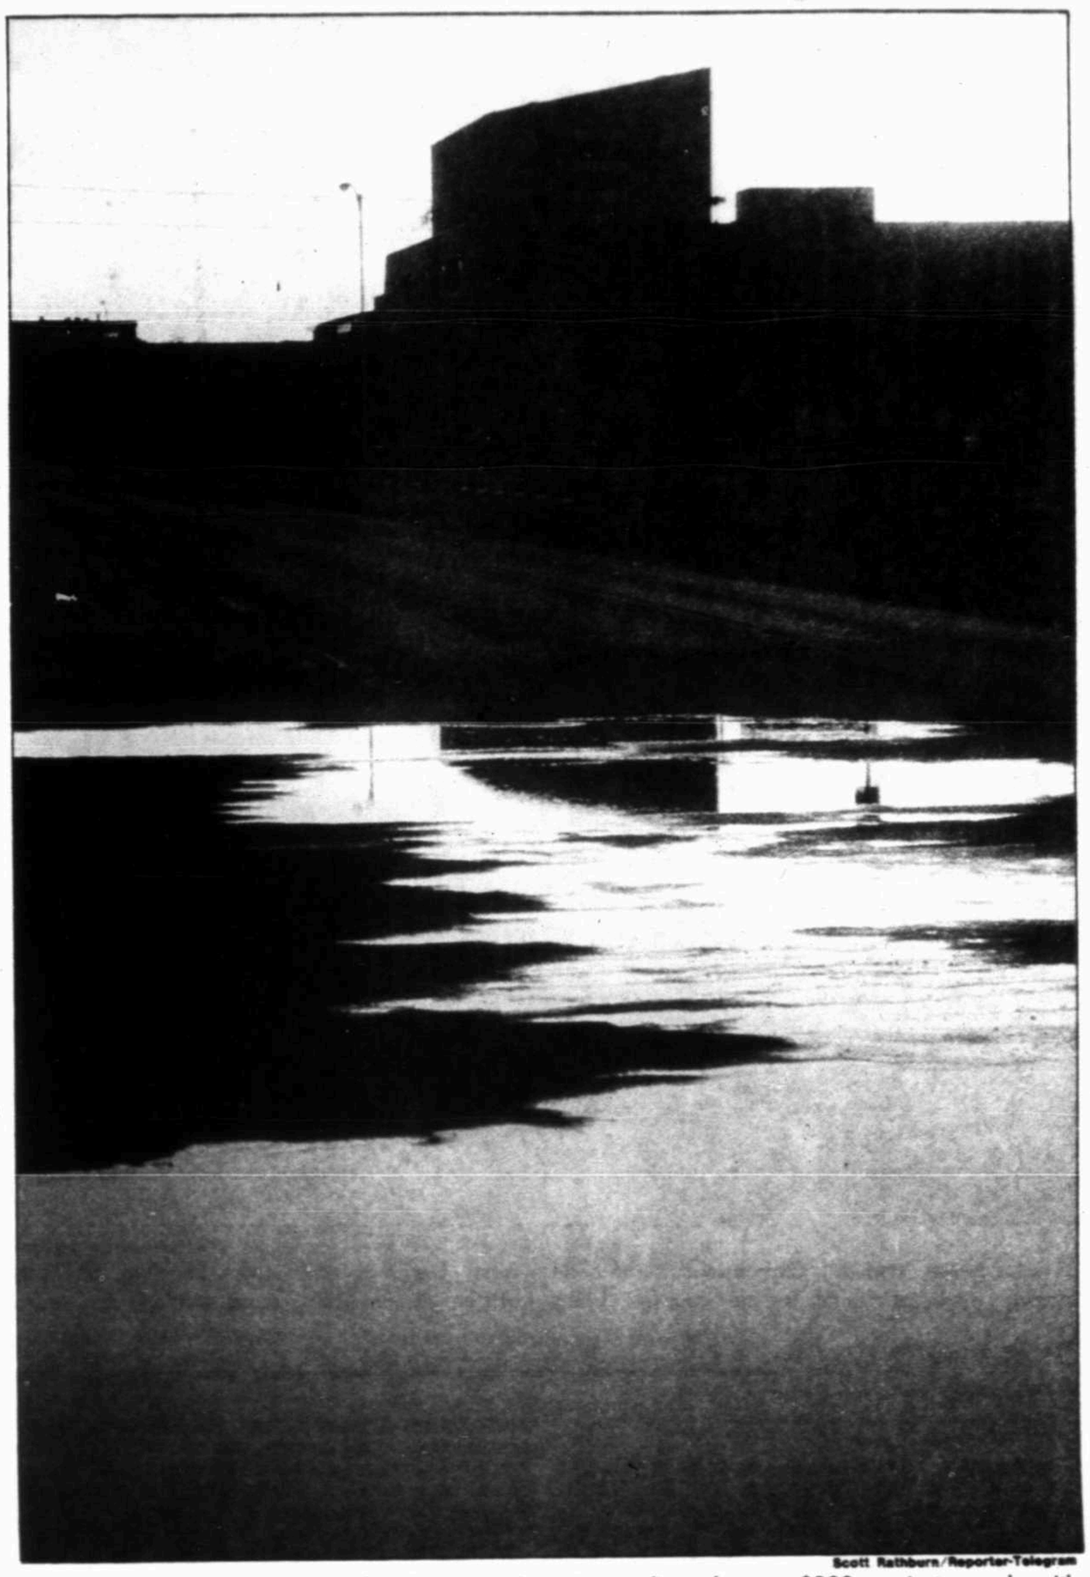

Community Services Director George Logan said all park sprinkler heads were moved back from curb sides last summer to prevent watering in the streets.

The Parks and Recreation Department also is watering for less time — twice a night — instead of all at once to allow the water more time to percolate into the ground, Logan said.

Having sprinkler heads moved away from the street or digging trenches around the curb lines are suggestions given to violaters, Cloyd said.

Overall, most people comply when they receive a notice, however some complexes had been adamant about the need to keep their lawns green no matter how much water flows into the street, he said.

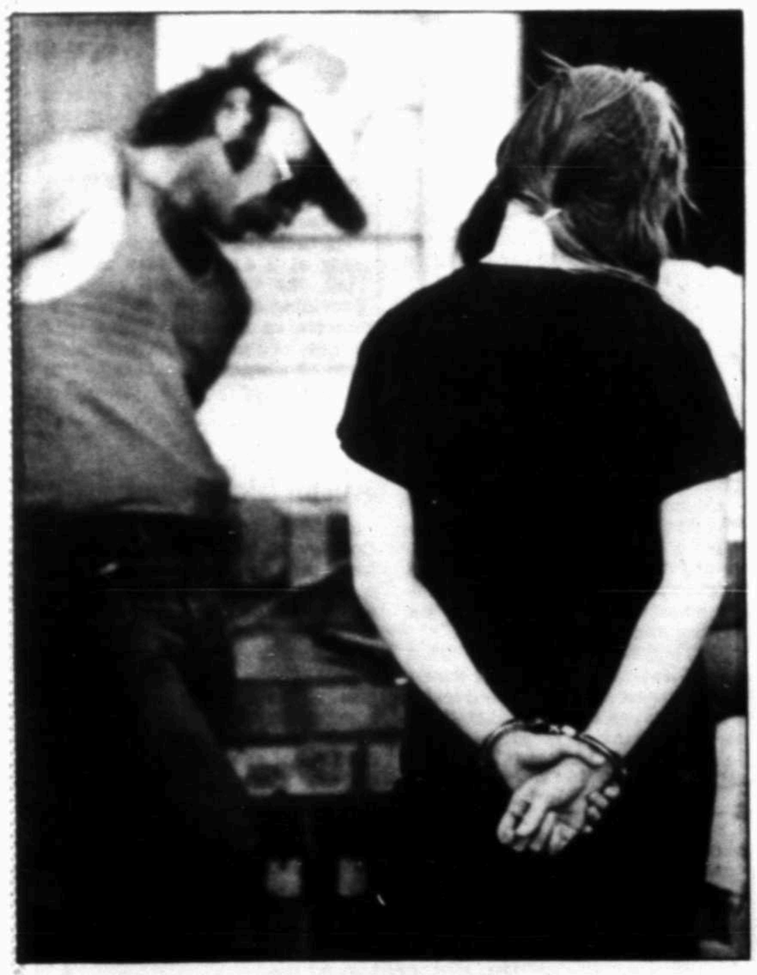

Officials say it will take time, but once the number of notices the department issues drops, the education of the public will be complete.

Scott Rathburn/Reporter-Telegram

City officials have not yet fined any Midlanders under a year-old nuisance water ordinance. The measures allows municipal judges to levy a fine of up to $200 against people with sloppy sprinkler habits that cause large amounts of water to collect in streets.

Local drug bust proceeds in orderly fashion

Mike Johnson, 31, and Ruth Longanecker Johnson, 21, left, stand outside the home at 606 Devonian Drive where they were arrested on drug charges Thursday. Det. Sgt. Mike Reed, top, notes evidence found in the suspects' vehicle, and joins Det. Rick Villey, above, to search the suspects' living room after a warrant arrived.

It's Thursday, Aug. 20, just past 5:30 p.m. Outside a second-floor classroom at the Midland Police Department, the sun shines blindingly bright and the temperature still swelters above 100 degrees.

"We're tailing these people that just left Midland," the narcotics detective who is conducting the briefing tells the 20 or so gathered officers.

He points to two of nine names written on a chalkboard. "The plan is to pick up two people with a load of dope."

Six of the nine will be rounded up in time for the evening news.

Uniformed officers, district attorney investigators, and plainclothes detectives take turns paying close attention to the briefing officer — an undercover agent who requests anonymity because he might be recognized on the job.

Voices and the static crackling of a police radio fill the room, as teams of officers discuss their particular targets.

"We've got six cars to seize," he said, offering the following directions to his teams: "When we make the arrests, if it's parked in the drive, or parked in the street, we impound it."

The officers hear physical descriptions of the suspects and learn most are in their late teens or 20s. Almost all work at fast food restaurants.

After a few minutes, Deputy Police Chief Billy Ray, Chief Richard Czech, Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre, and other plainclothes detectives join the briefing.

"They are trying to get dope (marijuana) over here from Odessa," the briefing officer tells the group. "I don't know how much, but it might be 10 pounds."

After Schorre offers last-minute instructions about searches and seizure legalities, one team of officers leave the building. Two other teams leave shortly after that.

At 6:50 p.m., one team returns with two suspects in custody.

Council will hold hearing at auditorium

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

For the first time in years, city officials are moving an annual public budget hearing from council chambers to the Midland Center because they expect a large turnout on controversial budget cuts calling for the closing of two fire stations, said City Manager Fred Poe last Friday.

The hearing is set for 5 p.m. Tuesday, he said.

"This is just one of those sensitive issues, and it's going to draw the people out," he predicted of the council's decision early this summer to close two north Midland fire stations.

Only 50 people can be seated in council chambers at City Hall, located at Loraine Street and Illinois Avenue, while 100 folding chairs will be set up at the city-run convention center at 105 N. Main St, Poe said.

On Thursday, Poe received petitions with 3,000 signatures of residents opposing the Aug. 1 closing of a station at 405 E. Solomon Lane and the expected shut down of the fire house at 6005 N. Midland Drive.

On July 1, the City Council proposed closing the stations to chop $460,000 off a $2 million budget deficit.

Faye Lehenbauer, who lives in an annexed rural area north of Midland, began a city-wide petition drive six weeks ago to stop the closings.

She said she delivered the petitions Thursday to City Hall asking the council to reconsider the closings.

"What we've tired to do is make the total public aware that it's not just the north part of the city that's going to suffer, it's going to be the whole city," said Mrs. Lehenbauer.

She added that changing the council's mind Tuesday is going to depend on a large turnout.

"The only way it's going to make an impact is if we have a bunch of people show up — 500 to 600 people. They (the council) might possibly sit down and think about it again," she said.

Mrs. Lehenbauer is among five rural north Midland residents who say they will try to "disannex" from the city if the Solomon Lane station remains closed.

The residents contend they only agreed to a 1983 annexation — and resulting city taxes — after being promised service from the nearby Solomon Lane station.

More rambling thoughts from a semi-tangled brain in desperate need of a fifth cup of coffee:

— It seems the old saying, "Flying doesn't bother me; it's the crashing that causes me concern," is becoming more and more relevant these days.

— So are these words I overheard the other day, "If flying is so safe, why is the first word you see at an airport, 'terminal'?"

— Smartest thing my mother ever told me was, "As you grow older, lots of people will tell you they love you and not mean it."

— Most overrated thing my mother ever told me was, "Always wear clean underwear. You might be in a wreck." If I'm involved in an accident, and the doctor gets down to my underwear, the last thing I'm going to be worried about is his opinion of my dress habits.

— Best quote I've heard about golf in a long time was Willie Nelson saying, "Par is anything you want it to be. For instance, this hole here is a par 47, and I birdied the sucker yesterday."

— Has anyone heard from Fawn Hall lately?

— The older you get, the harder it is to stay out half the night and still be fresh the next morning at work.

— Why does that surprise me?

— Why won't people just admit the money is very important? That's no crime. As long as it doesn't turn you into an evil person, what's the big deal?

— Can you believe the recent rash of freeway shootings in Los Angeles? It's crazy. I know how frustrating driving can be, but if those of us in Midland can handle the half-crazed drivers we have here without reaching for a gun, then so should they. It is just a matter of practicing self-discipline.

DRUGS

The operation now focuses on two suspects who live in west Midland. The two suspects, 21-year-old Ruth Longanecker Johnson, and Mike Johnson, 31, have been indicted for delivery of marijuana. Ms. Johnson also has been indicted for delivery of psilocybin, the hallucinogen contained in some mushrooms.

Since they already have been indicted, police arrest the pair as they return to their house at 606 Devonian Drive, but must wait for search warrants to enter the premises.

"I think it's running pretty smoothly," Cpl. Jim White, police spokesman, says on his way to meet the arresting officers. "If you had them all located, you could hit them at once. But they are moving."

By this time, jailers have booked a third suspect.

At 7:35 p.m., officers at the house are waiting for the delivery of a signed search warrant, the suspects already in custody.

Ms. Johnson, a woman with long, red hair, is wearing black pants and a black T-shirt. She leans against an evaporative cooler at the head of the driveway.

Sitting nearby on three stacked cinder blocks is her husband, who holds his head down.

Two detectives, Rick Gilley and Chris Becker, stand near each of them.

Just after 8 p.m., Sgt. Ed Nicks arrives at the house with the warrant, signed by Justice of the Peace Robert Pine.

At 8:09 p.m., the suspects are shown the warrants and officers enter the house through a side door.

A couch is searched first, then end tables and cardboard boxes. At 8:14 p.m., Det. Sgt. Mike Reed finds one small baggie of mushrooms, and two others of marijuana. Several hand-held scales also are found, and each piece of evidence is cataloged and photographed by Officer Harry Herrington.

More evidence is found, including a vinyl bag containing five syringes, spoons believed to be used for "cooking" cocaine or heroine before injection, and cotton swabs — all hidden out of sight.

"I've never been on a narcotics raid where the stuff was readily available," Chief Ray, head of the detective division, comments as the search progresses.

At 8:27 p.m., a maroon velour Crown Royal bourbon bag is found hanging from the outside of a space heater near the couch. White, who searches the bag, finds a pipe and more "cooker" spoons inside.

By 8:45, it's almost dusk and the search is about over. The Johnsons are still waiting, alternately sitting and standing near the house, still watched by detectives, still handcuffed.

"People don't realize how time-consuming this kind of thing really is," White said. "They don't show this part on TV."

The next day, the undercover briefing officer said, "I thought it went well with every arrest. We didn't get a felony amount of marijuana, but the mushrooms were a felony."

Three more arrests are reported late Friday, but that number is "just a drop in the bucket," the officer said.

"We get a tremendous amount of information, but we aren't able to follow up on all of it. We just don't have the people," he said. "So we try and take the most serious cases first."

STARS

At the program's inception, a survey was delivered to San Antonio teachers and parents asking them to identify the most intense pressures that teens face, Ms. Welch said.

"Just how important is the Gucci bag?," one survey response questioned rhetorically, while other respondents bewailed the presence of "cliques," "inappropriate displays of affection," vandalism, truancy and teen pregnancy, Ms. Welch said.

Baressi, 44, citing the need for a program of ALL STAR's capability, reflected on his growing up.

"I never had heard the word "marijuana" until I was in college. The kids are living in a faster-paced world and are exposed to a variety of social problems earlier.

"There's a lot out there for kids to make decisions about," the superintendent said.

Both Ms. Welch and Baressi stressed that the ALL STAR program teaches participants to take control of and responsibility for their own actions and to be positive role models for younger students.

The drug problem at Midland schools is typical of any school system, Baressi said, and alcohol also is a problem because it is "readily available and socially acceptable."

However, the ALL STAR trainers or "the A-Team" don't preach against anything per se, but instead stress the need for the teens to possess a high sense of self-esteem and take conscious responsibility for their actions, Ms. Welch said.

"Through this they realize they don't need to escape through drugs or alcohol," she said.

At least one Midland teacher — Sam Manning, president of the Midland Federation of Teachers — said there is no "quick fix" to the problem of quelling drug abuse.

"If we had taken measures and looked at ourselves in the mirror of social acknowledgment years ago, we wouldn't need the ALL STAR program today.

"Adults will have to start managing their own lifestyles in a more positive manner" Manning said last week.

Manning, a psychology, government and philosophy teacher at Lee High School, said, "We ignored this problem in Midland for over a decade. We've always had drugs in Midland," Manning said.

"I think it says that the adult community has ignored the problem for so long that now something has to be done. We are now trying to compensate for what was done 15 years ago.

"People cross their fingers and hope it will go away. It's not a phase, it's a social malaise," the philosophy teacher continued.

Ms. Welch said she saw Midland as a "unique opportunity" for the ALL STAR program because "we don't always get to work with rival high schools."

"We are going to attempt to break down the rivalry and will come back to the football game (between Midland and Lee) this fall to see how we did," she said.

Training the students will be members of the A-Team, which includes James Kazen, director of the program; Walter Hollins, director of training for the program; Wali Jones, a member of the NBA's "greatest team," the 1967 world champion Philadelphia 76ers; Willie Mitchell, a former all-pro defensive back for the Kansas City Chiefs and Stanley Schofield, who served as track coach of the 1976 Olympic team.

Where once peer pressure only occasionally caused teenagers to make decisions that endangered their health and futures, now peer pressure frequently encourages young people to make poor choices which could permanently and negatively impact the rest of their lives, said MISD spokeswoman Becky Ferguson.

The ALL STAR program will counter that situation, the adults hope.

Hance among potential appointees to TRC post

DALLAS (AP) — Kent Hance, who switched from the Democratic Party to the GOP in 1985, is in line for an appointment to the Texas Railroad Commission, associates of Gov. Bill Clements say.

Hance, 44, said he met with Clements earlier this week and, "the only thing he said was to think about it and see if you want to be considered."

He said he has not been offered the job.

James Huffines, the governor's appointments secretary, also said Hance has not been offered the post, but confirmed that Hance is one of four people on "our short list that we are seriously contemplating."

Also on the short list are former Republican state legislation Ed Emmett of Kingwood and Milton Fox of Houston, Huffines said. Both men ran unsuccessfully for a seat on the three-member commission in 1986.

"We've had lots of calls on his behalf, but Mr. Hance has not indicated whether he is interested," Huffines told the Dallas Morning News.

Hance, a former Democratic congressman from Lubbock, said he would discuss the appointment with his family and friends this weekend and let the governor know early next week if he is interested.

The post became open after Democratic Railroad Commissioner Mack Wallace announced his resignation last week.

Since Wallace's resignation, the governor's office has received several suggestions about a replacement.

Clements' appointee would have to stand for election in 1988 to fill Wallace's term, which ends in 1990.

Huffines and George Bayoud, Clements' executive assistant, said the governor is looking for someone who will be a strong Republican candidate in 1988.

"The governor wants someone who is sure they will run in 1988 and be a legitimate candidate," Huffines said.

Hance sought the Democratic nomination for U.S. Senate in 1984 and was edged out by Lloyd Doggett. Republican Phil Gramm won in the general election.

In 1985, Hance switched to the Republican party and ran for the gubernatorial nomination, finishing third behind Clements and former U.S. Rep. Tom Loeffler of Hunt.

Hance and Loeffler campaigned for Clements in his race against Democratic former Gov. Mark White.

Huffines and Bayoud said they hope to be able to announce an appointee soon, possibly by Monday.

Judge rejects unfairness claim

WACO (AP) — Accusations by an Austin school trustee that a federal judge appeared to act unfairly in refusing to block a new student assignment plan are untrue, the judge decided.

School trustee Abel Ruiz had claimed that U.S. District Judge Walter Smith's comments, attitude and conduct — including what Ruiz described as fraternization with school district attorneys in a courthouse hallway last week — raised "a question of fairness of the court."

Attorneys for both the Austin Independent School District and the plaintiffs in the desegregation suit against the school district disagreed with Ruiz and said Friday there was no reason for Smith to remove himself from the case.

Ruiz did not attend Friday's hearing. He sent Smith a telegram saying he could not attend the hearing because of "circumstances beyond my control."

After deciding there was no evidence for him to remove himself from the case, Smith filed a 26-page opinion that explained the ruling he made after a hearing last week.

CITY

Despite some public opposition, City Council members have said the decision to close down the two stations makes economic sense because the trucks were running on only half the calls of the city's seven other fire houses.

Along with the fire station closings the council will solicit public input Tuesday night about the proposed tax rate hike from 39.88 cents per $100 valuation to 43.54 cents.

The increase is about 9 percent more than the current tax rate and 3 percent above the 42.28 cent effective rate that budgeteers calculate would bring in the same amount of revenue to the city as last year.

In their regular meeting beginning at 9 a.m. Tuesday at City Hall, the council will consider providing alternatives to funeral escorts, an amendment to a wild animal ordinance and the selection of a health-dental-life health program for city employees.

Central Texas artist's watercolors depict life of Amish

By CARL HOOVER

HEWITT, Texas (AP) — In the den of illustrator Vern Herschberger's Central Texas home hangs a quiet world far removed from the hustle and bustle of big-city life.

It's populated by hard-working farmers, horse-drawn buggies and simple pleasures: It's the world of the Amish, drawn from Herschberger's memories of life in Arnold, Ill.

Herschberger, an illustrator for Dr. Wayman Spence and Medco Services Inc., has recreated Amish life in a series of seven watercolor paintings that eventually will be made into a series of posters.

While he is not Amish — his family left the Amish and became Mennonites in 1957 — Herschberger lived in the Amish community of Arnold for much of his life and is well-acquainted with their way of life.

The Amish are a conservative Christian sect of German descent known for their clannishness and refusal to embrace a 20th-century lifestyle, a choice made most visible in the horsedrawn buggies Amish use for transportation.

They also are known for their industriousness, piety, dependability and honesty — qualities respected and envied by many non-Amish people, Herschberger said.

That interest draws many non-Amish people, Herschberger said.

"Some like the primitive art style ... Others like the American feel to them. And some like the traditional values and slow-paced lifestyle the Amish represent," he said.

Herschberger started the series several years ago almost as an afterthought while in Arnold. Friends praised his initial painting, "Montag," (Monday) and encouraged him to make a poster of it to sell to Arnold's sizeable tourist traffic.

He tried it and was surprised at the strong response. That encouraged him to finish the series, a painting for each day of the week.

The cost of a full-color poster printing has kept him to only two posters to date — which he says will be sold at The Framery in Waco — but he plans to complete the poster series as finances allow.

Each day of the week in his Amish series represents traditional activities within the Amish community. On Monday, the characters in his farm scene are haying, hanging out laundry, attending school or threshing.

A barn-raising is pictured in "Tuesday," and a Belgian farm horse auction in "Thursday." "Saturday" is a populated floor-plan of an Amish farmhouse whose family members are engaged in cleaning house, tending the garden or playing.

And "Sunday" shows the Amish assembling for worship, a long line of buggies lined up outside the church while elders move wooden pews into the building.

One painting, "Friday," shows a somber side of Amish life: a funeral attended by much of the community. "I really struggled about this one," he said. "I finally put it in because I believe death is a part of life, too."

The graveyard detailed in the painting is the cemetery where his grandparents and a brother are buried, he said.

The seasons also pass through the Amish paintings, from spring planting, summer haying and fall harvesting to winter socializing around the skating pond.

Details in the scenes are drawn from Herschberger's experience. "That red barn back there is my grandparents' farm," he said, pointing to a building in the background of one painting. "And if you follow this road here, you'll get to the schoolhouse where I used to attend classes."

Herschberger grew up speaking Pennsylvania Dutch, a pidgin German spoken by many Amish, and learned English in school. While the restrictive environment of the Amish and Mennonite communities chafed many young people, he split with his family only when it came to occupational choice.

"You were supposed to be a farmer. My tendencies all went into the creative field," he said.

His first art lessons were by correspondence course from a school known for its "You Can Draw" advertisements found in magazines and matchbook covers.

That start eventually evolved into art studies in Colorado and at Sheridan College in Ontario, Canada. He also became heavily involved in animation and built a career from several free-lance projects, working out of his home in Arnold.

While there, Herschberger also designed a logo for the Arnold Chamber of Commerce that incorporated a horse-and-buggy, Amish hat and lady's bonnet. That came before his painting and poster work.

"My biggest concern was what kind of reaction the Amish would have. I was amazed that they accepted it as well as they did. But, then, there's nothing derogatory about them in any of these paintings," he said.

Austin plans celebration

AUSTIN (AP) — Mayor Frank Cooksey will ask the city council's help in establishing a 14-member commission to plan celebrations for the 150th anniversary of the city's founding.

Cooksey said Friday he and the six other council members each will choose two members for the commission.

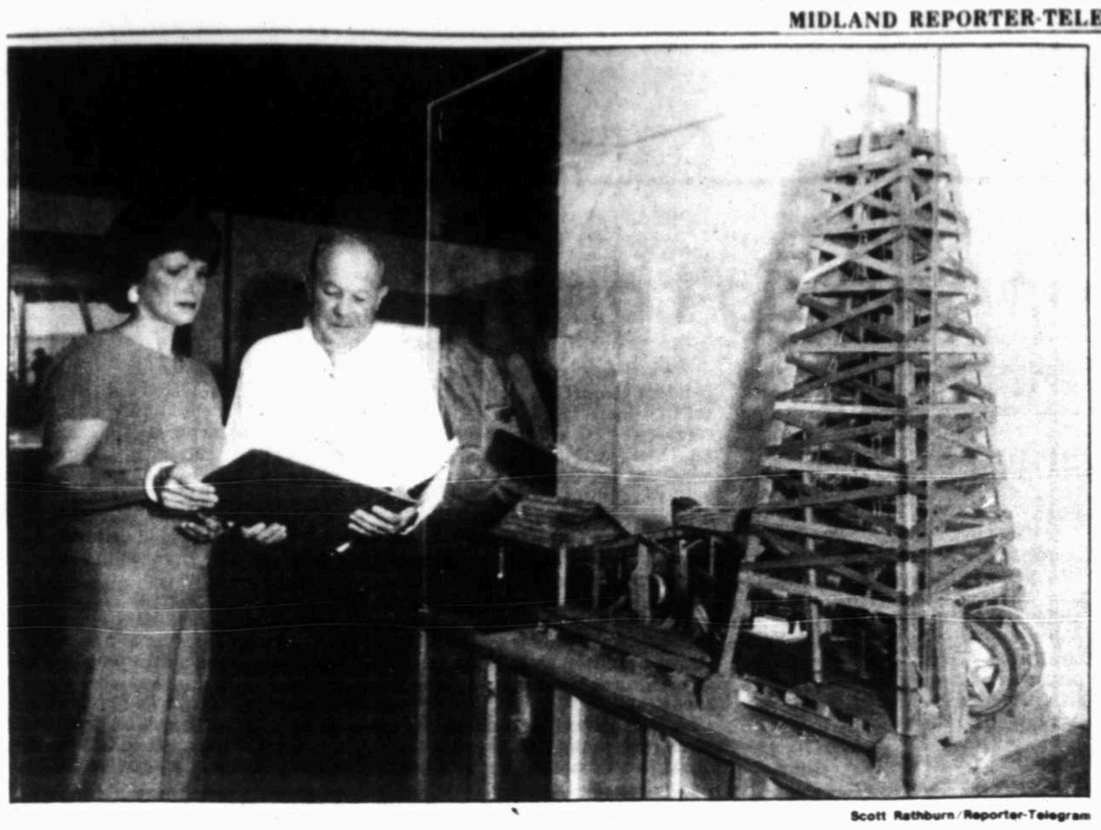

The city was founded in 1839. Celebrations of the founding will begin in 1989.

Jane Phares and Robert Stine bone up on facts about the Petroleum Museum. The museum is planning a class for docents, volunteer tour guides for the museum's exhibits.

Museum to train new docents

From Staff Reports

The Petroleum Museum is offering a class for docents.

Docents are volunteer tour guides for the museum's exhibits.

The class will meet weekly for eight weeks beginning Thursday, Sept. 10.

Hours will be 9 a.m. to noon. It will combine lectures, discussions, films and practice tours in the museum.

Docents will lead over 6,000 students through the museum in the coming school year.

Another 1,000 adults, including many foreign visitors and dignitaries, will also be guided by the museum docents.

Docents are members of the Santa Rita club, the service and social organization of the Petroleum Museum.

In addition to leading tours, the Santa Rita club volunteers work at the Museum's Gift Shop and Admissions Desk, in the Library and Archives, with exhibits and collections and as representatives in community projects.

Volunteers may also choose to join the museum's "Puppeteers," the school outreach programs or many other areas of individual interest.

The museum offers Santa Rita volunteers gift shop discounts and member privileges for museum events.

The club sponsors social gatherings for its members, also, including the Santa Margarita Party set for September.

Membership in the Santa Rita Club is open to everyone.

Interested persons should call the museum at 683-4403 for more information about the Santa Rita and for an invitation to a "docent coffee" set for Thursday, Aug. 27, in the home of Sally Whiteley.

Community development program helps provide suitable housing

By LYN MILLER

The community development program was begun to aid in the development of viable urban communities by providing decent housing and a suitable living environment, as well as expanding economic opportunities, principally for persons of low and moderate incomes.

In March of 1986, the Planning Division of the city's Planning and Development Department was assigned the responsibility for the general administration of the Community Development (CD) Program for Midland.

The CD program, which depends on federal grant dollars from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), is utilized in an area of the city which meets the criteria for the use of these funds.

The target area is, generally, south of Wadley, west of Fairgrounds, north of Interstate 20, east of Cotton Flat Road, north of Highway 80, east of Midland Drive, south of Illinois Street and east of Big Spring Street.

Since 1981, streets in over 70 neighborhood blocks have been paved, 207 low income owner-occupied homes have been rehabilitated, improvements made in 10 city parks — with the development of the Martin Luther King, Jr. Park — bridge and drainage improvements made at Midland Draw and Fairgrounds Road, and the construction of playground equipment at the Taylor Park Child Care Center has been accomplished.

A current project includes the construction of a bridge and the extension of Scharbauer Drive to connect with Hemlock Avenue to complete an additional major east-west street in east Midland. The street should be open to traffic within one month.

Agencies that have received CD funding for projects are the Freewill Foster Home, the Black Advisory Council, Clean Midland, the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women, Citywide Community Services for the Aged and the Police Security Lock and Door project.

CD dollars also pay for the Planning Division's administrative involvement in preparing applications and following the guidelines set forth by HUD for the projects, as well as assuring that program performance is in accordance with federal regulations.

Steps involved in the preparation of an application include a notification to the public by the planning staff, the soliciting of project proposals, preparation of reports on proposals and citizen input, public hearings, the evaluation of the eligibility of the project proposals, publication of the proposed use of CD funds (as determined by the city council) and the preparation of the final application, including the housing assistance plan.

The application determines, in broad terms, how the city council intends to use or distribute the CD grant funds.

Upon receipt of approval of the CD application from HUD, the planning staff works with the individual project managers to get each project under way, performing an environmental impact assessment, guiding them through the steps necessary to obtain a contract with the city to meet the CD requirements of HUD.

Monitoring the performance of a program is an ongoing activity of the planning staff, as well as documentation of all aspects of the project for the purpose of verifying compliance of requirements.

Periodic reports are prepared regarding the status of the project, expenditure of the funds through contracts and compliance with regulations.

While citizen participation is encouraged throughout the Community Development program, it is particularly desired in the application process which typically begins during mid-spring.

Allocation of Community Development Block Grant funds has been recently completed by the city council for the 1987-88 program year.

In order to better inform the public of the CD program, the planning staff has prepared a pamplet which explains the program in greater detail.

For a copy of the pamplet or to ask questions regarding the CD program, call the planning staff at 683-4281, Ext. 408.

'Selling' energy policy necessary

There were plenty of differing views offered during the annual meeting this week in Midland of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association concerning how to formulate a national energy policy.

U.S. Reps. Beau Boulter, Larry Combest, John Bryant and Joe Skeen each offered good suggestions relating to how a policy should be fashioned that will both ensure the energy security of the nation and meet the needs of the domestic petroleum industry. The suggestions included repeal of the onerous Windfall Profits Tax, restoration of the percentage depletion allowance to 27.5 percent, stabilizing oil pricing, and increasing incentives for drilling. Without a doubt, those suggestions all have merit and, as the congressmen noted, each faces a varying chance of failure in this or most other sessions of Congress. There is one hard fact those of us in the heart of the "oil patch" must face and accept: when it comes to pushing the cause for the petroleum industry and its importance to our national security, it's a lonesome battle.

The Permian Basin Petroleum Association has for years been at the forefront of the battle, of course, and doubtless will remain there in coming years. But the PBPA should not have to bear all the burden. In the counties of West Texas and Southeastern New Mexico that comprise the vast oilfield called the Permian Basin, there are literally hundreds of thousands of individuals with the expertise and the enthusiasm to take the case for a realistic and meaningful national energy policy to the halls of Congress. It is there that the battle will be fought and if patriotic and wise heads do not prevail, it's reasonable to assume that selfish and unwise heads will, and America's fate will remain tied to foreign countries.

Perhaps those in the Permian Basin won't be able to get all that they seek in a national energy policy, but if we do not act in this regard the members of Congress may come to believe that by our silence we have no interest in the future of energy or the United States. Of course, that is absurd.

But how do we begin? Some individuals and groups already have, but for all those who are concerned and committed in the Permian Basin, there are thousands more who only give "lip service" to their allegiance for the oil industry.

Petroleum associations can make a valid point to Congress. But they need the strength of thousands. Bud Scoggins, president of the Independent Petroleum Association of America, drew a parallel this week here. Said Scoggins, if a person holds a fistful of sand in his hand and lets it trickle through onto his foot, it's hardly noticeable. But if that same person fills a bucket with sand and drops it on his foot, it gets his attention. Good point.

Obviously a good first step is to support the Permian Basin Petroleum Association and Independent Petroleum Association of America. Ironically, many retail businesses in this area that rely almost entirely for their income on the petroleum industry are not association members. Then, those who have not already made their concerns known to U.S. Reps. Combest or Lamar Smith should do so. Next, writing to representatives and senators who hold opposing views can assist in changing their minds. And lastly, but importantly, the effort for a national energy policy would be best attempted while a "friendly" administration is in place. Ronald Reagan's is a good starting point.

As Congressman Skeen noted this week in Midland, "The challenge is selling our story in a body of 435 talkers and very few listeners."

Maybe there simply haven't been enough of us "talking" to convince them.

Democratic moves

The South Korean government, which two months ago made a public commitment to democracy, now enlarges the commitment by supporting economic fairness. Applause is in order for both acts; the two go hand in hand.

Since Chun Doo Hwan's government agreed to opposition demands on elections, Korean workers have carried on a wave of strikes. These reflect discontent that labor has not shared fairly in Korea's economic boom.

The Chun government has not only refrained from crushing the unrest, as it surely would have done before this year, but now has also endorsed some of the workers' economic demands, even while it warns against violent demonstrations. Hyundai, one of the companies struck, now has agreed to the government's suggestion for recognizing an independent union, and its workers have returned to their jobs. The government's new course is as wise as it is novel.

The military government may have many motives for acting progressively. It did not want the workers still on strike and in the streets when students return to their classes next month. A combination of radical students demanding rapid change and workers pressing for economic rights could be explosive. Add to that the growing demand by the Korean middle classes for a say in how the country is run and the government would have faced political overload.

There's already severe strain on the political system, even if the government cajoles the workers into going back to their plants soon. All the critical decisions are made by a handful of overextended military men and technocrats, none of them accustomed to compromise.

This small leadership group faces one big challenge after another, beyond the students and workers. Seoul is negotiating with North Korea about participating in the Olympics next year, a matter of enormous importance to all Koreans. Opposition leaders are quarreling among themselves and with the government over the form of the future administration.

South Korea will be sorely tested by each of these issues, and the United States will have to exercise great care to avoid adding to the difficulties. Washington needs to continue nurturing the march toward democracy. It has legitimate gripes against Korean exports: the artificially low value of the won gives Korea strong trade advantages. But forbearance is in order.

Seoul's recent decisions deserve positive response. Showing sympathy for workers' reasonable demands and for the public's political aspirations indicates that, at last, South Korea's leadership seems to understand democracy.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, Aug. 23, the 235th day of 1987. There are 130 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

Sixty years ago, in the early morning hours of Aug. 23, 1927, Italian-born anarchists Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti were executed in Boston for the murders of two men during a 1920 payroll robbery. The case had drawn widespread controversy, with many convinced that Sacco and Vanzetti had been convicted for their political beliefs.

In 1754, French King Louis XVI was born at Versailles.

JACK ANDERSON

Foreign contracting concerns military

WASHINGTON — In World War II the United States was, in Franklin Roosevelt's memorable phrase, the "arsenal of democracy," the industrial and technological giant whose miracles of production ensured the ultimate defeat of the German and Japanese war machines.

Jack Anderson

Today there is growing concern among military strategists over the U.S. ability to perform a similar role if the situation demands. They're afraid the increasing number of defense contracts awarded to foreign companies will erode the U.S. industrial base that enabled the country to turn out planes, tanks and other materiel at a rate never seen before or since.

In fact, the Pentagon already depends on foreign suppliers for many vital parts. Ninety percent of all military ball bearings smaller than 30 millimeters are imported, as are 80 percent of the armed forces' semiconductors. Even 2 percent of the precision components for U.S. guided missiles are supplied by foreign firms, while almost all the military's steel nuts and bolts come from foreign manufacturers — some of whom sell the Pentagon substandard bolts counterfeited to look like the genuine article.

We are becoming increasingly dependent on foreign sources for critical raw materials, which could conceivably be cut off in wartime. Vital military materials that are mostly imported include asbestos, chromium, manganese, mercury, mica, nickel, potassium, titanium and zinc.

Rep. Mary Rose Oakar, D-Ohio, chairwoman of the House subcommittee on economic stabilization, has expressed concern that despite the massive defense buildup under the Reagan administration, the United States does not have the industrial capacity to meet the Pentagon's needs.

At first glance, the amount of defense contracting by foreign companies doesn't seem all that dangerous: almost $9 billion out of $136 billion in 1986. But that compares to $5.4 billion in defense contracts awarded to foreign bidders in 1980.

And the problem of U.S. industrial readiness is compounded by the corresponding drop in U.S. military sales to other countries — from $14.8 billion in 1980 to $7.1 billion last year. The plant capacity represented by arms exports is important because it could be transformed to production for U.S. armed forces in the event of war.

Retired Gen. Richard Thompson, former commander of the Army Materiel Command, shares the opinion that the United States lacks an adequate industrial base for defense purposes. He points out that because modern weapons are so sophisticated, it would take a long time to convert peacetime plants to military needs. Thompson is also concerned with the movement of the U.S. economy from manufacturing to service-oriented industries, which have little or no military potential.

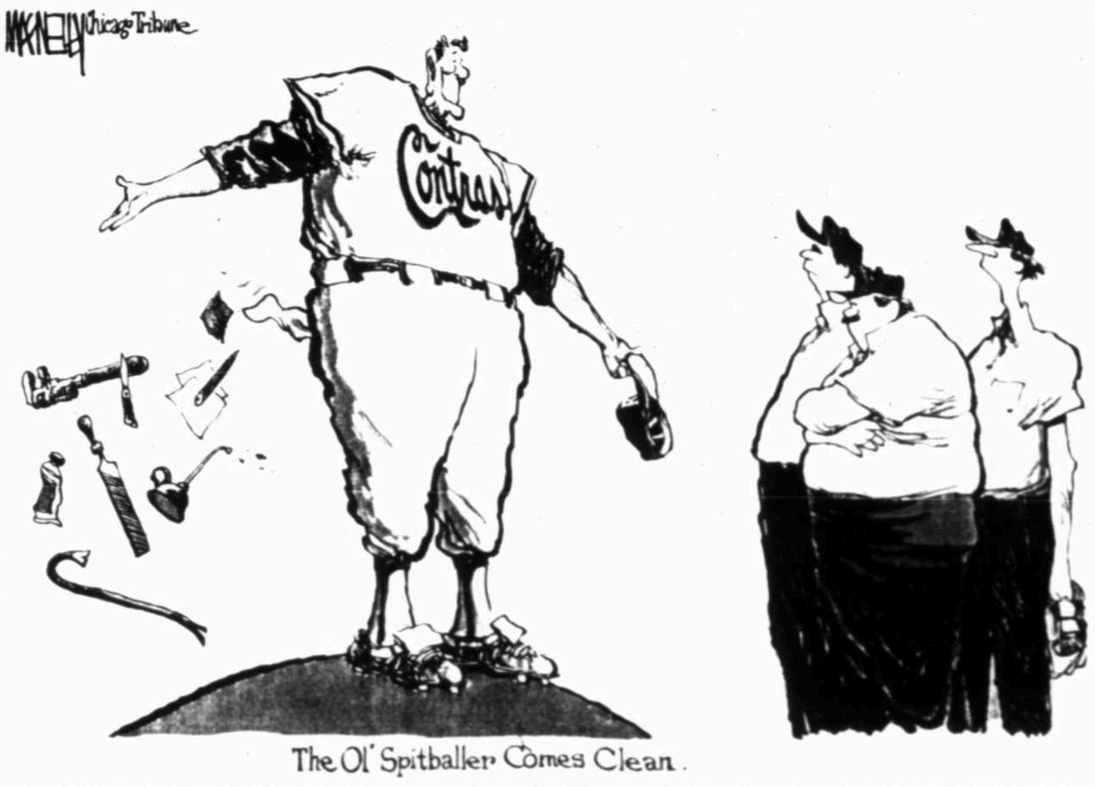

A production expert in the Pentagon, John Mittino, has described another facet of the problem, writing: "Many key industries, essential to expanded production in a national emergency, have encountered serious problems as a result of global competition. These problems of ... diminished technological and manufacturing capability have not been limited to smokestack industry, but have struck high-technology industry as well, with semiconductors being a notable example."

And William Phillips, of the National Council to Preserve the U.S. Defense Industrial Base, a group set up to publicize the need for a stronger defense industry, points to recent high-tech security breaches by America's allies as evidence of the folly of relying on other countries in vital defense matters.

What can be done? Rep. Dick Durbin, D-Ill., came up with one answer.

Durbin successfully lobbied the Pentagon, with the result that now at least half of the Army's tank wheels must be supplied by U.S. manufacturers.

Nation readying for political 'near-miss'

WASHINGTON — This department has been inundated with mail fulminating about near-misses. Not the frequency of dangerously close calls in the sky, brought to the front burner by the invasion of President Reagan's helicopter space by some flying voter, but about the illogical name given to such activity.

William Safire

Don't call them near-misses, these sticklers for terminological exactitude insist; the almost-accidents are complete misses, on the ancient theory that any miss is as good as a mile. Call them by their right name, as the Federal Aviation Administration does: near-collisions. They demand that I, as a language maven, point out that a near-miss can only denote a girl entering puberty.

This filet of solecism is fried in this political space today to introduce the decline of political passion. The near-miss letter-writers are not really angry; they are mock-serious, enjoying the pose of defending the English language from Philistines of sloppy usage.

In the same way, a lot of the old zip has gone out of the public discourse. Examples:

We castigate President Reagan for his softness on the hostage ransom, and hawks are dismayed at his recent confusion about contra support, but the general attitude is that he is a decent fellow who means well. God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb, and Reagan must have had something to do with the economic boom he presides over.

We chastise the Casey-Poindexter-North appeasement ring that brought disgrace to the Reagan administration, and some of us want prosecutors to set an example that will prevent future adventurism behind a president's back, but no Watergate bloodlust is felt.

Liberals silently brood at the unwillingness to reduce the deficit by raising taxes, and conservatives less silently mutter about the need to reduce the deficit by cutting expenditures, but the concern is less emotional than cerebral, and jousting about a constitutional convention to bring off a balanced budget amendment causes loud snoring in civics classes.

Each side of the single-issue set, ordinarily on the verge of genuine anger, seems eager to make a direct-mail stimulant out of the Bork nomination, but the judge is not cooperating in presenting himself as a turn-back-the-clock villain, and even organized labor is embarrassed at trying to work up class hatred over a class act.

The foreign policy establishment thunders against open-ended involvement in the Persian Gulf, but too many of its doves want to protect our Arab friends and too many of its hawks do not want to be drawn in by pure Russophobia, and in the resulting cognitive dissonance the complainants are reduced to wishing that the administration would explain a muddy mess with impossible clarity.

What happened to the 60s fear of Goldwater and loafing of Johnson? Where is the 70s hatred of Nixon and disgust at Agnew and contempt of Carter? Happily, all gone. Not even Castro or Gadhafi generate the same juices; only the Ayatollah is left, and he has to issue a decree to get a rousing "day of hatred" observed.

Americans are better off without the hatreds and burning resentments of the recent past, and politics is a nicer place without the ads hominem of negative campaigning. But there is a world of difference between destructive anger and productive passion, and here comes a pitch for an overturn of the fashionably cool and a turning up of the heat.

We are only six months away from presidential primaries. The Democrats, with the Kennedy wing atrophied and the Nunn wing unsprouted, offer little in the way of new ideas or colorful banners: the muted, not-too-expensive liberalism of the Dukakis-Simon-Jackson crowd has only a smidgen more passion than the neoliberal, family-cheering protectionism of the Gephardt-Cuomo bunch.

From Republicans, we hear only the cries of hawks who say they will keep us out of war, and the squabbling of supply-siders about how many tax cuts can dance on the head of the Fed; they sport appropriate scowls, but so far attract only mock-serious support.

Each party needs a passionate partisan willing to stop papering over policy differences in the name of unity. Only the excitement of ideology — controversial ideas in a plan of action — will infuse each party with the message to win the slugfest ahead.

Summon up the blood and stretch the nostril wide; the next president will be the anti-consensus candidate who stirs up adversaries and arrests the decline of passion. All the rest will complain of their near-misses with destiny.

Today it's Burgville — tomorrow the world!

NEW YORK — Too poor for New York, we moved to Burgville. It is not a suburb. It is not an exurb. Despite its name, it is not even a burg. It used to be a burg, but since it was attacked a few years ago by earth-moving equipment and occupied by squadrons of $30,000 German cars, its burgness has died.

Russell Baker

I call it an urboid. Whatever it's called, Burgville is now held up as a sad example of what can happen to a burg that sells its burgright for a mess of asphalt. People in Round Hill, an unruined town on the mountain to the west, now have bumper stickers that say, "Don't Let Them Burgville Round Hill."

That's Round Hill's way of saying it likes being undevastated, unasphalted and unaccustomed to the throaty "Achtung" of high-class Teutonic exhaust pipes, and would like to remain so.

Round Hill's chances don't look good. I base this judgment on the phenomenon of "bumper-sticker lag." If my observations are correct, bumper stickers run about two years behind the bankers, lawyers, contractors and land speculators whose income depends on turning rustic America into a land of urboids.

For instance, just last year Burgville cars were bearing bumper stickers that said, "Don't Let Them Fairfax Burgville." Fairfax was a whole county east of here, down near Washington, which the earth-movers and asphalters were then finishing off.

Toward the end, Burgville people could see the results on the eastern horizon, the scariest being a superurboid called Tyson's Corner: all automobiles, bad air, dehumanized people containers, asphalt, Molech worship, treelessness, humdrum stores galore and spiritual boredom, not to mention 117 restaurants serving thawed food.

Looking down the highway on a clear day toward the awful Fairfaxed ruins, you saw Tyson's Corner on the horizon and thought of Godzilla headed straight up the pike for beautiful, charming, lovely, old Burgville.

That's when the bumper stickers appeared that said, "Don't let them Fairfax Burgville."

This should have been the signal to all who knew about bumper-sticker lag that the jig was up, that the groundwork for Fairfaxing Burgville was too far advanced to be stopped, even by a citizenry inflamed enough to resort to bumper stickers.

So it's funny and sad now to see bumper stickers pleading, "Don't Let Them Burgville Round Hill." It can only mean that it's all over for poor old Round Hill.

Out beyond Round Hill lie West Virginia, Pittsburgh and the great state of Ohio. It is easy to imagine the fall of the dominoes being recorded in a western march of bumper stickers:

"Don't Let Them Round Hill West Virginia,"

"Don't Let Them West Virginia Pittsburgh,"

"Don't Let Them Pittsburgh The Great State Of Ohio."

Why is the game always over by the time bumper stickers go on? Because urboid dwellers have faulty intelligence networks, underpaid lawyers and no instinct for the whereabouts of a politician's jugular.

What urboid dwellers do best is go to public meetings and scowl angrily. In Burgville we spend most of our lives in public meetings, scowling. We scowl in meetings of the Planning Commission, the Zoning Commission, the Preservation Commission, the Devastation Commission, the Buildability Commission, the Inevitability Commission and the Commission on Commissions, to cite just a few.

Upon learning that the Eternal Greenery Development Corporation has not only quietly made a deal to cut down Birnam Wood, level the surrounding mountain and on the resulting plain of mud erect 637 units of tract housing, each with its private personalized cesspool, we paste "Don't Let Them Fairfax Birnam Wood" on our bumpers and go to scowl en masse at platoons of commissioners.

Only to find that it's all over but the scowling. The lawyer for Eternal Greenery produces the crusher. Papers. Everything in order. All in conformity with this and that. Bureaucratic niceties and necessities all settled months and months ago. The law, the law, good urboid dwellers, above all the sanctity of law. Government of laws, you know. Not of scowlers.

After lifetimes of Fairfaxing poor old Fairfax, these lawyers have seen so many scowlers, read so many pathetic bumper stickers, filed so many right papers so often, explained the law to so many commissions. Thinking that mere urboid scowlers can ever deflect these veteran champions of Eternal Greenery from the swift completion of their appointed Fairfaxings — it is to weep at one's own foolishness.

Today Burgville, tomorrow the world.

We, as 'custodians of land,' must fight to preserve it

Modisett

During the 1800s, a group of hunters and trappers returned to civilization after a trip that took them through the Yellowstone region. Their accounts of what they had seen there amazed people. So much so, in fact, that in 1870 Gen. Henry D. Washburn went back to the site to check the reports. That visit made history for the national parks system.

Washburn and his men, the story goes, spent four weeks exploring on horseback. Then they camped near the Madison River and sat around their campfires far into the night discussing what they had seen — geysers, boiling hot springs, canyons, waterfalls. They, too, were amazed by the beauty and awesome grandeur they had viewed. But there was a division of sorts over what should be the result. Some of the men wanted to develop the region into private resorts. Others were interested in lumbering operations and mining.

Finally a man named Cornelius Hedges, who was a judge in Montana, proposed that the region be preserved as a national park. In that way it would benefit all people for all time, he argued. Hedges was a convincing man. I'm glad that he was because his suggestion on that evening in 1870 means that today millions of Americans and foreign visitors can see the same wonders in their natural state that Washburn, Hedges and the others saw more than a century ago. Those wonders truly have been saved for all Americans, as they should have been, and marked the beginning of the national park system.

Earlier this year, President Reagan joined the list of great Americans who have set aside natural wonders for future generations when he authorized creation of Great Basin National Park in east-central Nevada. The 77,000-acre wilderness contains 13,000-foot mountain ranges, windy scrubland, limestone caverns, and pristine mountain lakes fed by the southern-most glacier in the United States.

Without a doubt Reagan's move is a wise one, just as creation of Yellowstone National Park was a truly profound act. To leave such natural wonders to spoilage or private utilization would be unthinkable.

The real "hero" in the Great Basin story, though, is William Penn Mott Jr., who at 77 years of age serves as director of the National Park Service. He first attempted to get the Great Basin designated as a national park half a century ago. His perseverance now has paid off for generations of Americans to come.

If you travel this land you will see wonders that can be seen nowhere else on earth. Each of us is a custodian of this land and as such has a duty to fight for preserving that part of it that is unique and awe-inspiring.

It's not a matter of being a conservationist or anti-industry advocate; rather it's a matter of simple intelligence. Use up or destroy the beauty that exists in this land and it will never be here to inspire those who come after us. To do that would constitute a tragedy for all time.

Prisoners' rights seem to precede taxpayers'

If you're in a good mood, don't read this. We pay the government to protect our freedom and look out for our best interest, right? Wrong! The part about "we pay" is correct, the rest is a disaster. Let's look at our criminal justice system, for example.

In the State of Texas, what used to be a good self-supported prison system has become a joke thanks to the federal government. I can rape your women, murder your children, steal and destroy your property, but it's unconstitutional to make me work while I am in prison or make me grow my own food. At the same time, the victim has to work and pay taxes for my upkeep.

Facts and figures for 1986 in Texas show that 43 percent of the people sent to prison end up getting out, committing a crime or breaking parole, and going back to prison. Three meals a day, televisions in each cell block, personal radios, clean clothes, and they do not have to work if they don't want to! No wonder almost half of them go back.

It costs the taxpayer $25 per prisoner per day. That is $9,125 per year. Texas has an average of 38,300 inmates — that comes to $349,487,500 per year (that's over $349 million). Why doesn't the State of Texas tell the federal government to go to hell? We need shovels, hoes, balls and chains, and seeds for crops. If we cut our cost per inmate by 15 percent and number of inmates by 25 percent, we would save over $136 million per year with safer neighborhoods. Thirty-seven percent of state prisoners are violent criminals and the average time served is only 6.43 years.

The federal government has over 43,400 prisoners at a cost of $36 per inmate per day. That comes to over $570 million per year. The federal government operates seven prisons in Texas. These inmates have access to a law library, educational programs, book mobile, televisions for every 30 prisoners, pool tables, miniature golf, tennis courts, baseball, video games, table tennis, cards, monopoly, chess, checkers, etc. We couldn't find anyone in the federal government who could tell us how many of these prisoners end up going back after release. They were probably ashamed to!

Obviously, in someone's mind the rights of a convicted prisoner are more important than the rights of a hard-working taxpayer. Are the same idiots who created this mess, the people who are fighting for gun control and other infringements on honest taxpayers' civil rights, or is that another group? We need a ball and chain prison system with a goal of punishment and reform. We need a government with a system of goals instead of tasks.

Why are barbarians allowed to shame us?

Those Shiites, under the leadership of the Ayatollah Khomeini, have the entire Western World running in circles. Many foreign policy analysts in Washington think we have to re-think our military options. Somebody is always trying to study our options as a cop-out. Capt. David Bolton of the British government-funded Royal Services Insitute for Defense Studies says putting a military presence by the U.S. in the gulf to deter the Iranian's actions is a mistake. Instead of a show of force, he counsels a gradual withdrawal of the U.S. warships "while quiet diplomacy U.S. allies seeks an international way out."(sic)

Mr. Gary Sick, an Iran expert (oh?), says the U.N. offers a forum for low-profile and private discussion of the issue. Edward Luttwak, a military historian, says "The incredible feature of the gulf at the moment is how the U.S. is standing virtually alone. ...The whole lesson of history teaches the necessity of achieving consensus, at home and abroad." He may have something there. Be it remembered that from 1933 to 1939, Britain stood alone while a madman's iron booted legions trampled over the cobblestones of Europe. Sometime about 1937, one Neville Chamberlain, then British Prime Minister, stepped out of an airplane in London and waiving a piece of paper, foolishly proclaimed, "there will be peace in our time." This after an appeasement conference with the aforesaid madman, one Schicklegruber, also known as Adolph Hitler. Shortly thereafter this same madman raped Czechoslovakia, marched into Poland, and you know the rest.

Must this happen all over again? How long will the Western world put up with the affrontery of these people and their mad Ayatollah? Why must the greatness of the United States of America be shamed by a nation of barbarians? Confer and confer and study options, fiddle dee and fiddle dum. Something more drastic needs be done. The Western world can stop it now, or it can pay more dearly later.

Let's stop federal funding of abortions

Your article concerning federal funding of abortions through Planned Parenthood left out many important facts. In the article, Planned Parenthood's Gloria Munson asserted that they are "pro-choice" but denied being pro-abortion. Let's look at the facts according to Planned Parenthood Federation of America's own "Annual Report 1984" and their "Bylaws and Policies" publication.

Planned Parenthood operates the nation's largest chain of abortion facilities. Forty-four of Planned Parenthood's 186 affiliates currently perform abortions at over 50 separate locations. Some affiliates even perform late-term abortions. Planned Parenthood affiliates have been doing abortions since 1970 and doctors on their payroll performed 86,947 abortions in 1984 alone.

During that year Planned Parenthood received approximately $17.4 million from performing abortions. Planned Parenthood affiliates that do not perform abortions refer their clients (including minors without parental consent) to abortionists such as our four in Odessa. Every Planned Parenthood affiliate must pay dues to the national office which applies the funds to pro-abortion advertising, lobbying efforts and legal action to promote abortion-on-demand, undercut parental rights and seek more federal funding.

Planned Parenthood has been at the core of every abortion case that has reached the Supreme Court. Abortion is their livelihood, they protect it jealously. To say Planned Parenthood it not pro-abortion is to say that McDonalds restaurants are vegetarian.

Yes, Mr. Reagan, let's stop federal funding of abortions. If $180,000 per year of federal money is truly available to help problem pregnancies in West Texas, then let's use it for that. Let's help the mother through her time of need instead of offering her a cheap, easy, unloving way out. Let's stop killing babies.

We appreciate those who make area great

The good-hearted people of West Texas make living here a uniquely satisfying experience.

This was demonstrated again when our radiator boiled over on the highway near Midland on a recent Saturday afternoon. Several people stopped to help immediately, including Dallas Smith of your city; his expertise and infinite patience enabled us to get the car to a safe parking place.

Another who stopped to help was Jim George, a former Midlander now living in San Angelo. He graciously drove my wife and me, plus our daughter and her two small children, to a car dealer in Midland, and then all the way back to San Angelo. I wish I had the name of another man driving a Texaco truck so that we might thank him properly.

We were told that your former sheriff, Dallas Smith, is known for performing similar services for other perfect strangers stranded on the road. We express our appreciation to Dallas and the other fine West Texans who make our area a great place to live.

We need sheriff who worries about local law

On Aug. 19th and 20th, I watched the national television networks show how inept our local sheriff is when it comes to "nabbing" those international arms merchants.

I suggest that the citizens of Midland County demand that Sheriff Painter go on to bigger and better things so we may elect someone who will worry more about local law enforcement rather than getting his name in the national news. This action would benefit the long-range goals of both the residents of the county and Gary Painter.

Administration's backing away from peace proposal signifies old pattern

Wicker

NEW YORK — No one should be surprised that the Reagan administration is backing away from the new Central American peace plan, since President Reagan has never wanted a negotiated settlement on any terms but his own. This time, however, he has good reason to think anew.

Unfortunately, the old pattern seems to be holding. Since the so-called Arias plan was agreed to by the five Central American governments:

— Philip Habib, the president's special negotiator, resigned abruptly, apparently because he favored — with Secretary of State Shultz's support — the direct U.S.-Nicaraguan talks Reagan still rejects.

— Senior U.S. representatives in Central America were told by Elliott Abrams to inform the five governments of Washington's misgivings about the agreement, based on its fear that Nicaragua will not abide by it. Abrams is the assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs.

— Some administration officials are saying the peace plan cannot work unless the United States' aid to the Contras in Nicaragua is continued even after a cease-fire is reached. The president himself said in his weekly radio broadcast that U.S. support for the Contras would have to continue at least until a cease-fire takes place.

The latter point may be fatal. The Sandinistas insist that as long as the United States supports the Contras, they'll be forced by military necessity to impose the "emergency measures" they agreed under the Arias plan to dismantle. Already they have said that if the aid continues, they cannot take these steps toward "democratization."

Thus, for the administration to continue the aid is sure to be seen in Latin America as proof that Reagan does not want a settlement, preferring instead to prolong the Nicaraguan civil war until the Sandinistas are overthrown. Already, Washington has a long record of thwarting peace negotiations — for example:

— In a secret background paper prepared for a National Security Council briefing on Oct. 30, 1984, participants were told: "We have trumped the latest Nicaraguan/Mexican efforts to rush signature of an unsatisfactory Contadora agreement...We have effectively blocked Contadora group efforts to impose the second draft of the Revised Contadora Act..."

— In a note of Nov. 23, 1984, only some phrases of which have been declassified, Robert McFarlane, then national security adviser, was informed by his deputy, Vice Adm. John Poindexter (apparently in a list of things to be done): "Continue active negotiations but agree on no treaty and agree to work out some way to support the Contras either directly or indirectly. Withhold true objectives from staffs."

— Abrams, at a 1985 chiefs of mission conference in Panama from Sept. 8 to 10, made this among other points in a classified briefing paper: "We need to develop an active diplomacy now to head off efforts at Latin solidarity aimed against the U.S. and our allies, whether they are sponsored by the support group, the Cubans or the Nicaraguans..."

That kind of underhanded diplomacy does not encourage belief that the administration now genuinely wants a negotiated settlement. And the president's right-wing supporters, alarmed by even tentative consideration of the Arias agreement, already are bringing heavy pressures against "abandonment" of the Contras.

But the Contras represent a policy that has failed militarily on the ground in Nicaragua and that may not prevail politically in a showdown congressional vote. Therefore the Arias plan ought to be welcome to Reagan, as an alternative offering the "democratization" of Nicaragua he claims to want, and promising the united moral pressures of the region and the hemisphere against the Soviet military base he claims to fear.

To develop that alternative, the president needs to lend unequivocal support to completion of the regional agreement, including direct talks with the Sandinistas if need be. That's the best way to advance legitimate U.S. security interests in Central America, and the best hope of assuring measures to verify Nicaragua's compliance with its part of the bargain.

Aid to the Contras obviously has no place in such an effort. Philip Habib does. Halting the one and bringing back the other would put Reagan squarely where he most needs to be — behind the Arias plan.

Danger of appeasement lies in Central American peace plan

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST, JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

SAN SIMEON — There now appears serious danger of a Munich-type appeasement settlement in Central America that will leave the pro-Soviet Nicaraguan Sandinista regime in power.

That danger lies in the peace plan hastily adopted by the five Central American leaders, including Nicaragua's Marxist dictator Daniel Ortega. This scheme has side-tracked the bipartisan peace plan jointly proposed by President Reagan and the House of Representatives democratic leader James Wright.

The Central American plan was adopted within three days after the bipartisan American plan was announced. President Ortega agreed to it literally in a jiffy because it was far more favorable to him than the American plan. It would allow him to remain in power through 1990, enable him to continue to receive Cuban and Soviet military aid until then, while U.S. aid to the freedom fighters would be cut off in 90 days. It provides no participation for leaders of the Contra resistance movement in peace negotiations.

The American plan called for an immediate cease-fire, an end to foreign military aid and agreement by Sept. 30 on a timetable for holding free elections. The Central American plan calls for a cease-fire, specific steps to democratize the political process in all five Central American countries, including freedom to organize and demonstrate politically, guarantees of press freedom, and the lifting of state-of-siege laws, with all these conditions to be fulfilled within the next 75 days. However, Ortega would not have to hold elections until 1990.

Why the presidents of Costa Rica, Honduras, El Salvador and Guatemala would conclude such an appeasement pact with the Nicaraguan communist regime is beyond me. Apparently they are prepared to sacrifice the freedom movement in Nicaragua in the naive hope that the Ortega communist regime will allow itself to be voted out of power in 1990 and the Soviet-Cuban bloc will stop exporting revolution to Central America.

The tip-off as to how good the Soviet-Cuban bloc thinks the Central American plan is for its interests came quickly when Ortega flew to Havana and obtained Castro's swift endorsement of it. A joint Castro-Ortega communique said "Cuba expressed full support" for the "highly-positive new event in the history of the region."

Does any reasonable person believe that Castro and Ortega intend to abandon a communist beachhead in Central America? No wonder Republican presidential candidate Jack Kemp called the Central American peace plan a "dead end for freedom." New York Times columnist William Safire called it a "surrender" which would enable the Ortega regime to continue getting Soviet military aid through 1990 while "the resistance we abandoned will be ruthlessly crushed."

No wonder President Reagan is wary of this plan although willing to see whether it can be modified to assure that a peace settlement will be, as he has said, "consistent with the interests of the U.S. and the interests of those fighting for freedom in Nicaragua." I am confident he will not commit our country to any peace plan that does not provide such assurances.

With this brief report, I am signing off early as this is my last holiday week at San Simeon.

From Staff Reports

Midland College is offering a new computer class during the fall semester.

It's "Special Topics: UNIX and C." UNIX is a widely-used operating system available on a number of different computers, from large mainframes to small personal computers.

The course is listed as CISM 2307. It will meet on Thursdays from 5:30-8:30 p.m. It was not listed in the fall course bulletin, but is being added to the curriculum because of demand.

Those interested in enrolling should have at least two programming language courses or have prior business experience in programming with high-level languages such as COBOL, Fortran, or Pascal.

Inquiries about the course should be made to instructor Bruce Elsom at 685-4664.

Midland College's fall registration is scheduled on Tuesday and Wednesday.

Those who didn't pre-register should come to the Physical Education Building on Wednesday between 6-7:30 p.m. to be processed.

They also can late register starting Monday, Aug. 31.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Midland College this week to conclude its fall semester registration

By H.A. TUCK

This week includes two days of official enrollment for those who are going to take credit courses this fall.

Registration takes place in the Physical Education Building on Tuesday and Wednesday.

Tuesday's hours are 9 a.m.-1 p.m. and 4:30-8 p.m. and Wednesday's are 10 a.m.-1 p.m. and 4:30-8 p.m.

Only those who pre-registered and have time permits are allowed to register until the last two hours of the second day. Persons who didn't pre-register can be registered from 6-8 p.m. Wednesday.

Fall classes begin on Monday, Aug. 31, and late registration also starts that day. Those who register late must pay an additional fee of $5.

• • •

Faculty members return Monday. The week begins with the traditional Presidents' Breakfast at 8:30 a.m. Monday in the Student Center for all fulltime employees. Remainder of the morning includes a general faculty meeting and forum on "Midland College and The Community." Panelists incude MC Board member Kenneth Peeler, speaking for elected officials; Nancy Anguish, talking on arts in the community; Midland Plice Chief Richard Czech; and Sam Flores and Alan McDaniel, speaking as private citizens.

Another portion of the faculty training includes a panel on "Alcohol and Drug Abuse Awareness," presented by staff personnel from Clearview Hospital.

Dr. Deana Lusk served as chairman for the faculty's Professional Development program. Other members were: Dr. Joe Blumentritt, Dr. Jerry Jones, Dr. Sylvia Major, Dr. Will Morris, and Joseph Nye.

• • •

The only Continuing Education class being held this week is the Real Estate Examination Review. This class meets Friday from 7-10 p.m. and Saturday from 8 a.m.-6 p.m. Fee for the class is $60.

Persons interested should register this week in the Continuing Education Office, Administration Building. Hours are 8 a.m.- 5 p.m.

• • •

New vehicle parking permits are being issued this fall and it ends one of MC's first advertising efforts, one which lasted 12 years. The familiar parking permit decals on the rear windows will vanish...partly because of technology!

Seems too many of the vehicle nowadays have rear window defrosters and/or heavily tinted, reflective rear windows.

The defrosters won't work if decals are placed over their wires and the stickers don't show through some of the new dark glass.

Also, over the years fulltime employees sold their vehicles, but their stickers had no expiration date.

This allowed non-employees who bought these vehicles to park in faculty spaces when they came on campus.

So the new stickers will be located near the state inspection sticker on the front windshield in the future and all of them will have expiration dates.

Students will get dated stickers and part-time instructors will have temporary stickers.

• • •

Based on pre-registration the past three weeks, the fall semester enrollment record of 3,683 enrolled last fall is likely to be destroyed.

The count when pre-registration ended Thursday was several hundred above the 1986 count. But that doesn't mean MC won't have a place for you.

Plans all during the summer have been geared toward handling 4,000 students this fall.

Many classes will be filled to capacity, but additional sections are being added wherever possible. Some classes will be limited, mainly due to classroom sizes and lab facilities.

• • •

One of the big changes this fall is in the orientation and early testing for new students. This is being done to assist students before classes begin, getting them better acquainted with the college's traditions and expectations.

Early testing is being used extensively to assure that students are placed at the proper level in English and math courses. Some entering students aren't properly equipped to handle these basic classes, so levelling classes and extensive labs are used to help students get acclimated and headed in the right direction from the very first day.

Career planning also is being emphasized, especially for those who plan on transferring to a university in a couple of years.

• • •

What this means for you is that Midland College may be growing, but it still places major emphasis on the individual student. It means you can get the best possible education without leaving the area; costs are extremely low; and you'll be treated as an individual rather than just a number.

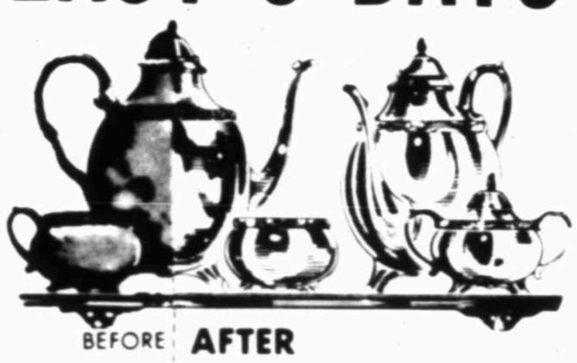

• • •

"The Oakridge Boys" are coming to Chaparral Center. Mike Stevens, Chap Center manager, has just gotten everything firmed up for their appearance here on Thursday, Oct. 1. Tickets go on sale Monday at Chaparral Center, Endless Horizons in Midland and Odessa, and at Harold's Electronics.

Beaumont woman opens 'little teacher store' offering elementary school supplies

BEAUMONT (AP) — As a teacher in Wisconsin, Jackie Guillory always knew where she could find supplies for her elementary school classes.

"In Wisconsin, there are little teacher stores everywhere," Mrs. Guillory says. "They were little houses that were transformed into these nice little shops and you could get just about everything you needed there."

A former teacher at St. Anne Tri-Parish School, Mrs. Guillory quit teaching about two years ago after the birth of her daughter.

"I tried to teach part time, but that just didn't work out with a baby who stayed awake all the time," Mrs. Guillory says. "I stayed home a year and felt like I needed something to do and I'd thought about opening a retail shop."

A year of thought, along with support and guidance from her husband led to the School Stop.

"I also called the store in Wisconsin where I used to shop to find out how to get started," Mrs. Guillory says.

"We did most of the work ourselves. I washed, scrubbed and painted the outside. We tore out walls and put walls up in different places and laid the carpet ourselves. About the only thing we didn't do ourselves was having the building leveled."

The result turned into a brightly lit and colorful store where teachers and parents can purchase educational materials, including toys, workbooks, flashcards and computer software. The educational supply store, in a converted house, opened about 10 weeks ago.

Teachers can also purchase books to help them prepare their students for the Texas Educational Assessment of Minimum Skills test

Permian Basin High School finds new location

From Staff Reports

Permian Basin High School in Midland is moving to a new location, according to the school's administrator, Bryan Parnell.

As of this Wednesday, the school will be occupying the entire first floor of the former Word Sherrill Building at 401 W. Wadley, directly across the street from ClayDesta National Bank.

The move will allow time for the school to be ready for the first day of classes on Sept. 8.

For the past six years, PBHS has leased a suite of rooms on the second floor of a building at 3100 N. "A" St.

PBHS is the only private, fully-accredited, non-sectarian high school in Midland.

Serving students from grades 7-12, the school features a one-teacher, one-student teaching method and supervised study labs.

Students attend classes three hours per day, four days per week, Monday through Thursday. Fridays are used for science labs, off-campus educational field trips, the making up of all absences, yearbook staff meetings and student council meeting on "as needed basis."

Two subjects of one and one-half hours each meet on Monday and Wednesday while two other subjects are held in a like manner on Tuesday and Thursday.

Each of the classes are divided into two 45-minute segments. A one-to-one class is followed by a 45-minute supervised study period where the students get immediate reinforcement with the homework assignment, Parnell said.

The school is sanctioned by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools and received the highest rating possible from SACS this past spring in its "Five-Year Review," Parnell said.

PBHS offers all the basics and required courses from grades 7-12 in English, math, science and social studies. Additionally, computer training, Spanish, French, German and typing are offered as electives.

According to Parnell, the school strives to maintain a quiet, "almost serene atmosphere" in which the students study. "We take enormous pride in the accomplishment of some of our students, who, for whatever reasons, did not show good academic accomplishment prior to enrolling at PBHS," he added.

The school is enrolling students daily for the fall semester. For an appointment, call 683-4448.

Actor 'ashamed' of film on IRA

NEW YORK (AP) — Actor Mickey Rourke is distancing himself from his soon-to-be released movie about former IRA member Martin Fallon, saying he is "disappointed and ashamed of it."

Rourke, in a telephone interview with Irish America Magazine, said the American producers of the film, "A Prayer for the Dying," turned his character into a one-dimensional caricature.

The 34-year-old New York native, whose ancestors came from Ireland, said he worked long and hard to prepare for the part of Fallon, a disillusioned Irish Republican Army member who became embroiled in the assassination of an English gangster. Rourke said he even hired a native from Belfast to act as his technical adviser.

"He lived with me for four months. I really had to work on the accent. It's a kind of sing-song," Rourke told the magazine. "But I really wanted my character to sound like a Belfast man."

The first day of shooting, Rourke said he knew the producers were not interested in any real portrayal.

"My opening line had the word father in it. I said it the way a Belfast man would say it. (Producer Sam) Goldwyn's man on the set, Larry Jackson, went crazy. He said that no one in America would understand me.... After that the making of the film became a nightmare."

Rourke said the parts where he tried to explain Fallon's motivation were edited out.

Goldwyn defended the movie, due for release in September, saying, "Mickey Rourke doesn't know what he's talking about; he hasn't seen the final cut." Goldwyn told Irish America the final cut was "a big improvement."

NEW YORK (AP) — Actor Kevin Marcum, who played a lead role in the Broadway hit "Cats" and died just before he was to take over the lead role in "Les Miserables," was killed by cocaine, says the city's chief medical examiner.

Marcum's death last month was caused by "acute cocaine intoxication," Ellen Borakove, a spokeswoman for Dr. Elliot Gross, said Friday. She declined to say how much cocaine was found in Marcum's body.

Marcum, 31, was found dead in his apartment July 20, two days after he had called in sick for work at the Broadway Theater, where "Les Miserables" is playing.

Police said at the time that there were no signs of notes, pills or drugs in the apartment.

Marcum formerly appeared as the feline named Old Deuteronomy in "Cats."

NEW YORK (AP) — Andrew Lloyd Webber and Harold Prince, two of the most successful names on Broadway, say they will form a new theatrical production company to produce plays and musicals.

The company, as yet unnamed, will have the option to produce all future Lloyd Webber productions in the United States, according to a statement released Friday by Peter Brown, a spokesman for the composer.

Lloyd Webber currently has two big musicals running in New York — "Cats," which begins its sixth year on Broadway in October, and "Starlight Express," a lavish $8 million roller-skating musical.

His newest musical, "The Phantom of the Opera," a huge hit in London, opens in New York in January. It was directed in England by Prince, who will repeat that assignment on Broadway.

Grant given to Meals on Wheels

From Staff Reports

The Midland chapter of Fraternal Order of Eagles has presented a $1,000 grant to the Midland Senior Citizens' Meals on Wheels program.

The grant was presented through the F.O.E. Golden Eagle Fund.

The organization has given support to national programs, such as the Golden Eagle Fund, through which grants are made to charitable organizations engaged in a project benefitting the aged.

The organization initiated the "Golden Eagle Program" in 1974. Its goal is to add "years to life and life to years" of senior citizens in the following three ways:

— by sponsoring and supporting legislation that will permit the aged to live in dignity and have self-respect.

— by establishing within the local Eagle units Retired Eagle Activities Clubs to permit older Eagles and their families to participate in programs of their choosing and to offer their aid and counsel to younger Eagle leaders in the management of the club facilities.

— by establishing the Golden Eagle Fund to raise and distribute funds for gerontological research.

AIDS victims in this state program must also cope with prison life

CLUTE, Texas (AP) — As a physician overseeing an AIDS program in the Texas prisons, Dr. Vonda G. Reeves sees some major differences with other AIDS programs.

The support network of family and friends that sometimes exists for AIDS victims on the outside does not exist behind bars, she said.

And confidentiality has more importance in prison, she said. Most AIDS-infected inmates are in the general population and are targeted for abuse if their illness is revealed.

"They are basically ostracized by other prisoners, subject to ridicule and harassment," Reeves told the Brazosport Facts newspaper.

Some AIDS patients end up in protective custody, high security cells for dangerous or threatened inmates, because of abuse.

"You lose a lot of privileges in that situation," Reeves said.

Concerned about their housing situation and the way other inmates will treat them if they have AIDS, some inmates will not even be tested, she said.

About 128 TDC inmates are known to have the AIDS virus, but Reeves said it is possible there are more who have not been tested.

She said she'd like to see that change but would support mandatory testing only "if we had something to offer."

"I think that mandatory testing must serve a purpose," she said. "As it stands now, there is no cure for the disease."

Education is a big part of the program, which she said is in its infancy.

Many inmates' low education level makes it hard to teach them about the disease and how it is transmitted.

Reeves said she places herself in the role of caretaker. It is important not to allow judgment or morality to enter into the job. Attitudes toward homosexuality and intravenous drug use cannot play a part.

"You do get involved with all of your patients to some degree," she said. "I don't think it's any different with AIDS patients."

Reeves took the job as director of TDC's AIDS program because she was bored as staff physician at the Darrington Unit, a post she still holds.

Since Gov. Bill Clements called for mandatory testing of inmates, the job has required a lot of office work as she examines the cost of a mandatory program.

"The average AIDS patient has more invasive procedures done than any other hospital patient," Reeves said, estimating the cost of treating an AIDS patient at between $50,000 and $150,000.

"That's going to be the real crusher — money," Reeves said.

North Texas mayor built trolley

"I have about a thousand dollars in the project. I even have enough track to go all the way to the fire station."

"I didn't ask anybody anything. I just drew and planned and studied up at night until I figured how to make the trolley out of iron and wood."

— Jim Penton, trolley creator

ROSSTON (AP) — With the chug-a-chug of a train engine, the little trolley shuffles along the track.

Jim Penton, 72-year-old creator of the first and only open air trolley in North Texas, is also the mayor of this Cooke County town, population 35.

There is no whistle and no smoke, but there is an inspiration. Even his wife was dubious when he began building the trolley in January of 1985.

"She thought I was crazy," Penton said, "but a radio station had a slogan about that time that said, 'Don't let anyone deter you from what you want to do, just do it.' I did, and by January my project was complete."

"When the trolley first started running on this 500 feet of track on my estate, it wasn't with real energy, but with horse or mule strength," he said.

Moving his arms in a circular fashion as if to show the speed of the trolley, Penton demonstrated his point. "That was slow, just too slow. The kids kept complaining."

The idea of building a trolley came to him as a young serviceman assigned to Alaska's Aleutian Islands.

"The Japanese had a handmade railroad in 1943, with two-foot (wide) track and they would run Model A engines on it," he said.

After the war, Penton joined the National Model Railroaders Association and has remained active for 30 years. Penton even met his wife in 1958 on a train en route from Denver to Des Moines.

Finally, in retirement, he built the trolley.

"I have about a thousand dollars in the project," Penton said. Pointing to a building a block down the road, he explained, "I even have enough track to go all the way to the fire station."

Penton said he enjoyed building the trolley and thinks it's a big attraction here.

"I didn't ask anybody anything," he said, hitting the wooden table with his fist. "I just drew and planned and studied up at night until I figured how to make the trolley out of iron and wood."

He is especially proud of the turntables (devices for turning the train) which require precise fittings and balance. It's good work, he said, for a man who never reached the ninth grade.

Penton beams while preparing his trolley for passengers. As the conductor, he boards the children of Rosston on his invention and stamps their pink tickets. Then, he announces heartily, "All Aboard," and off they go. With a soft squeak, the trolley halts at You Flag Station and the children dismount so Penton can turn the trolley for its return trip.

"When the children returned to their parents I heard some of the kids say they thought it went about five miles per hour," Penton said, "and they were really thrilled."

"It's a masterpiece in northern Texas," the proud conductor concluded with a nod. "It's just a masterpiece."

Nuclear project begins loading fuel for testing

BAY CITY (AP) — The South Texas Nuclear Project began loading nuclear fuel Saturday to prepare for low-level testing before going fully on line.

Loading is expected to take five to 10 days as 193 fuel bundles are each maneuvered into place in the nuclear reactor vessel, said Graham Painter, spokesman for Houston Lighting & Power Co.

"Things are going well, they have practiced for several months with dummy fuel bundles," said Painter. "They're happy to have something to do."

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission on Friday issued the South Texas Nuclear Project a license to operate up to a level of 5 percent.

The license was approved by the NRC staff and signed by Thomas E. Murley, director of the NRC's office of nuclear reactor regulation, said Joe Gilliland, NRC spokesman in Arlington, Texas.

Gilliland said the license was for fuel loading and operation up to 5 percent of power at the $5.5 billion plant, he said.

"There are a certain number of tests they have to do at 5 percent, we observe those tests," he said.

"We concluded earlier this week in the regional office that they had improved their security program to a level that we judged was adequate to authorize them for (low level) fuel loading," he said.

Houston Lighting & Power, managing partner of the project, was happy with the development, spokeswoman Geri Konigsberg said.

"We are very pleased but that would be our only comment," she said.

Ms. Konigsberg said the license is only for the plant's Unit One. The schedule of the plant's second unit was about 1½ years behind the first.

Improvements made at the plant included some reorganization, more training and additional contingency drills, said Gilliland.

"They showed some progress in some additional drills," he said.

In July, intruders taking part in a drill managed to reach a control room at the plant near Bay City, thus delaying NRC approval to load fuel, HL&P officials have said.

"We were satisfied they had reached at least a level adequate for low level fuel loading license," Gilliland said Friday.

HL&P officials have committed to make some more improvements, he said.

After the tests are conducted at the 5 percent level, a presentation will be made on the results to the full NRC commission, he said.

Other partners of the plant, located in Matagorda County about 90 miles southwest of Houston, include the cities of Austin and San Antonio and Central Power & Light Co. of Corpus Christi.

You can rely on these people to lend direction to your community hospital.

They're dedicated professionals who serve on the governing boards at Midland Memorial Hospital. Providing the leadership for responsible financial planning. Meeting the challenges of health care management. Working together to ensure the availability of medicine's latest technologies to our community.

"For 40 years, the Board of Governors has been raising funds for Midland Memorial. That's one of our primary functions. In the last seven years, the Governors have raised more than $6 million. But it's the spirit of teamwork we share with the other governing bodies that helps us realize our goals."

K.M. Jastrow, Chairman,
Board of Governors

"The Trustees' responsibility to the hospital is clear, but certainly not simple: to govern day-to-day operation, to ensure the hospital is properly managed, and to provide quality care at a reasonable cost. We volunteer our time, talents, and energies to make sure that the citizens of Midland receive excellent medical care."

Betty Sumner, Chairman,
Board of Trustees

"Midland Memorial Hospital is tax-assisted, not tax-supported. To keep your hospital taxes as low as possible, we use tax revenues only for indigent care. That's why our tax rate is one of the lowest in the state. Like other community hospitals, we depend on room and service charges to buy supplies and pay salaries. With the commitment of dedicated individuals, our community will continue to receive the medical care it needs and deserves."

P&S Fills Gap in Midland Healthcare

The implementation of the full time cardiac surgery program at Physicians and Surgeons Hospital has made it possible to introduce another new service to Midland. This new service is the offering of thoracic and lung surgery. Prior to this time, Midlanders who required this type of surgery were forced to go out of town to receive the service.

Physicians and Surgeons Hospital Executive Director Richard C. Liley said, "Several physicians have told me that the lack of these services presented a serious gap in Midland healthcare that has existed for as long as they can remember." Now that these services are available, there is no need for Midlanders to endure the inconvenience and extra expense of having this type of surgery performed in other cities.

The thoracic and lung surgery program is the latest addition to the "medical firsts" brought to Midland by P & S Hospital. Other services introduced to Midland include:

- The first Cardiac Catheterization Laboratory in Midland;
- The first balloon angioplasty program;
- The first intra-coronary infusion of Streptokinase into a blood vessel to reverse a heart attack while it is still in progress; and
- The first Midland hospital to introduce upgraded food services to patients by employing a fully-trained chef.

According to Liley, "Our aggressiveness as a provider of healthcare has been extremely beneficial in allowing Midland area residents the choice of receiving modern and state-of-the-art healthcare right here where they live - in Midland, Texas."

Progress Notes In Medicine

By TULSI DYAL SINGH, M.D.

TIMING THE FLU VACCINE

The influenza vaccine for this winter will be available soon, and judging from previous years you may start seeing ads inviting you to come and get it by next month.

However, the Centers for Disease Control recommend that the optimum time to get the flu vaccine is during the month of November. If you get it too early, the protective antibody levels may decline substantially by the time the flu virus hits.

On the other hand, if you get it too late, exposure may have already occurred, and you may not have had enough time to develop the antibodies that the vaccine is intended to produce.

LASERPROBE FOR CLOGGED ARTERIES

The FDA has approved the release of a new laser to treat obstructed arteries. The Laserprobe is passed through the skin into the obstructed blood vessel and directed to the point of obstruction. The laser heats the probe to 400 degrees C, and this vaporizes the obstruction creating a channel into which an inflatable balloon catheter is introduced. The balloon can then be inflated to further dilate the artery - balloon angioplasty.

The instrument permits the use of balloon catheters in two new clinical situations: when arteries are completely blocked with fatty deposits, or when the obstruction contains hard calcium deposits. You will recall that if the obstruction was due to a soft blood clot, the channel would have been created by enzymes delivered to the clot with the enzyme biologically dissolving a channel through the clot for the balloon catheter.

Dr. P.V. Patel and Dr. Ravi Patel have done several balloon angioplasties in the Cath Lab at Physicians and Surgeons Hospital here in Midland.

NEW DRUG FOR ENDOMETRIOSIS

A recent article in the British Medical Journal reported on the study of an investigational drug for endometriosis. The drug called Gestrinone was considered to be effective treatment based on a comparison between patients treated with the drug and those treated with an inactive placebo. The authors were impressed with the efficacy of this drug and recommended that it be used to treat all patients with endometriosis.

Of course, the way it works is that there will be more trials by other groups to see if the claim is true, using larger samples of patients over longer periods of time, and if so with what side effects. At any rate, the study and the claims seem to be valid and overall it appears to be a promising drug for the treatment of endometriosis.

PEDIALYTE RS NOW REHYDRALYTE

Peadialyte RS is now called Rehydralyte. The oral electrolyte solution is for infants and children who are mildly dehydrated from acute diarrhea.

HOW MUCH SHOULD I WEIGH?

A much asked question. I have a simple formula that I learned years ago that I use as a rough guide.

For males you take 106 pounds for the first 5 feet and add another 6 pounds for every inch of height over 5 feet; so that an adult male of 5 feet 10 inches should weigh 166 pounds. For females, take 100 pounds for the first 5 feet, and add 5 pounds for each inch over 5 feet. An adult female of 5 feet 6 inches should weigh 130 pounds.

Remember, these are rough guides and will vary depending on bone structure and body conformation. However, it is an easy calculation to use as a starting point.

Century Marker Reached

Another milestone has been reached at Physicians and Surgeons Hospital. The medical staff membership has reached the century mark.

P&S Hospital began operations on Dec. 20, 1985. From that point to the present, interest in the hospital by area physicians has been remarkable, as evidenced by this achievement.

The average age of the medical staff is 41, and 67 percent of the medical staff are board certified within their area of specialization, which is well above national averages for comparable-sized facilities.

Medical specialties represented include cardiology, thoracic surgery, cardiovascular surgery, anesthesiology, ophthalmology, dermatology, podiatry, orthopedic surgery, sports medicine, gynecology, otolaryngology, neurology, psychology, urology, gastroenterology, endocrinology, pathology, radiology, nephrology, plastic surgery, hematology, internal medicine and family practice.

Sports Clinic Kicks Off Again

The first of September will bring not only the opening of the season for football and other athletic sports, but also will kick off the third successive year of the Sports Medicine Clinic operated by Dr. Jerry Cochran and Dr. Lowell Templer.

The Sports Medicine Clinic is held Saturday mornings at the Midland Orthopedic Clinic. The need for such a clinic became obvious about three years ago, said Dr. Cochran, when he began receiving numerous phone calls at home on Friday nights concerning injuries suffered by area athletes.

Dr. Cochran, who has been in Midland six years, is director of sports medicine for the Midland Angels baseball team and is sports consultant for The Midlander health club, The Body Shop and The Fitness Connection., He also serves as orthopedic consultant for several area high schools and is the team physician for VDS Racing.

Dr. Templer, who has been in Midland four years, is Dr. Cochran's associate in the Orthopedic Clinic. Both are board certified in orthopedics. Dr. Templer concentrates on general orthopedics and major joint replacement with an interest in sports medicine while Dr Cochran focuses on sports medicine in his practice.

In previous years, Dr. Cochran was involved in orthopedics in Central America. He currently works with the Shriners to refer children from West Texas and Eastern New Mexico who need the Shriners' specialized orthopedic services.

"Most of the sophisticated sports medicine done in this country today is performed by board certified orthopedic surgeons who have specialized in sports medicine," said Dr. Cochran. "They do not see general orthopedic problems; they concentrate on sports medicine."

Hospital Endorses MOHRE Project

Physicians and Surgeons Hospital has endorsed the Midland-Odessa Health and Retirement Endeavor (MOHRE) project along with a donation of $1,000.

MOHRE is a joint economic development project involving the Midland Chamber of Commerce, Greater Odessa Chamber of Commerce and the Private Industry Council. Its purpose is to promote Midland and Odessa as a retirement area and to see it grow into another major industry in the area's economy.

Retired citizens have stable incomes and they spend money in the community in which they live, according to a MOHRE spokesman.

Advantages cited by MOHRE are the area's warm and sunny climate, abundant housing, friendly people, relaxed atmosphere, little traffic in comparison to metropolitan areas, a regional airport and expanding healthcare and retirement facilities.

Cookie Wetendorf, project coordinator, said MOHRE is trying to gain endorsements from the area's healthcare and retirement facilities and local physicians.

Aneurysms Require Surgery

By Dr. N. RAO
General, Vascular Surgery

Growing older can bring a multitude of health problems and an abdominal aortic aneurysm is one of them.

An aneurysm is a dilation, or expansion, of part or all of the abdominal aorta. The wall of the aorta is weakened, caused by the pressure inside the arteries and by degenerative process or the aging process. As a result, the vessel will balloon out.

These dilations can rupture, causing hemorraging and death. Therefore, the ideal therapy is elective surgical repair in all cases before the rupture occurs. Continuing efforts toward earlier diagnosis have undoubtedly contributed to the lower incidences of ruptured aneurysms and death.

WHAT IS THE INCIDENCE OF ANEURYSM?

Abdominal aortic aneurysms are found in 2 to 4 percent of patients over the age of 60. The average age of those undergoing surgery for aneurysms is about 65. About 20 percent of the patients who have aneurysms also suffer from co-existent diseases that include gallstones, prostatic enlargements, diabetes, chronic obstructive lung disease, hypertension, heart disease, cerebrovascular disease and other diseases associated with vascular problems, such as obstruction to the leg vessels and kidney vessels. It also is common to find coronary vascular disease associated with aneurysms. Therefore, elderly patients have multiple risk factors and these should be balanced against the benefits of surgery.

DIAGNOSING THE ABDOMINAL ANEURYSM

Aneurysms can be diagnosed two ways: one is by the presence of a palpable pulsating mass on physical examination, and the second is on a plain X-ray in which the line of calcium will show the lateral projections. In questionable cases, an aneurysm can be confirmed by ultra-sonography.

The measurement of the aneurysm size is very important in its management.

WHY SHOULD WE OPERATE ON ANEURYSMS?

The untreated aneurysm carries a high incidence of serious complications, including rupture, or propagation of clots and blockage of the blood vessels in the lower extremities.

The risk of rupture based on the size of the aneurysm, survival rates of untreated aneurysms, the patient's age, the presence or absence of symptoms and presence of multiple risk factors from associated medical conditions should be considered when surgery is an option.

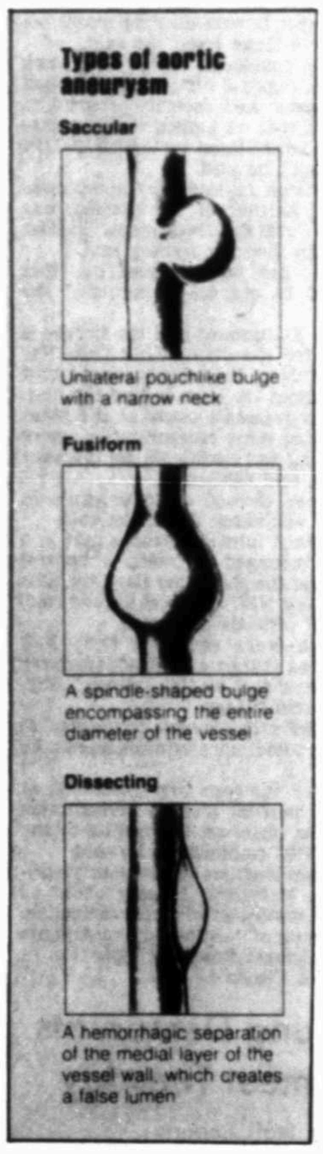

Aneurysms 3 to 6 centimeters in diameter can grow half a centimeter a year. An average of 28 percent of the aneurysms do rupture. The mortality rate in patients with untreated ruptured aneurysms is almost 100 percent. Hence, the size of the aneurysm has a dominant effect on the rupture rate.

The mean rupture rate of an aneurysm smaller than 5 centimeters appears to be about 5 percent. Aneurysms between 5 and 6 centimeters have a mean rupture rate of 16 percent. But the rate goes up to 76 percent if the aneurysm is 7 centimeters or larger. Thus, there is a sharp and dramatic increase in the risk of rupture when an aneurysm attains the size of 6 centimeters. And sometimes aneurysms less than 4 centimenters can rupture, especially in a patient with accelerated hypertension.

Associated medical conditions such as malignancy, renal failure, severe chronic obstructive lung disease and severe cardiac failure may make the risk of elective aneurysm repair overwhelming or impose an obligatory limitation on life expectancy of two years or less. Then, an operation should generally be deferred.

All other patients, regardless of age, should consider elective repair of the aneurysm, especially if the aneurysm is symptomatic or greater than 6 centimeters in diameter. In general, younger patients with asymptomatic aneurysms should undergo surgery. For older patients with a small asymptomatic aneurysm and multiple risk factors, it would be appropriate to follow the size of the aneurysm with sonograms.

Special consideration should be given to patients over the age of 80 who have an aortic aneurysm. Until recently, the operation was not recommended unless the aneurysm became symptomatic or ruptured and the patient was free of other serious diseases. But recently it has been emphasized that the physiological, rather than the chronological age of the patient, acceptable longterm survival and satisfactory quality of life following surgery should be taken into consideration.

The night was sponsored by the Hospital to promote camaraderie among people who work together each day on saving lives and helping patients in their healing process. This was a chance to relate with each other in a more relaxed atmosphere.

A nursing shortage has become apparent nationwide, according to Dr. Eileen Piwetz, chairman of Midland College's Health Sciences Division. By 1990, she said, it is predicted there will be 600,000 vacant nursing positions.

"The majority of our students need financial assistance," she said. The college's two-year R.N. program is intensive and there is no time for the student to work part-time.

The application and screening process is being handled by Midland College. A committee at Physicians and Surgeons Hospital will give final approval.

"Our students are so in need. We're excited to get two more scholarships to fund their education," Dr. Piwetz said.

'87 Angels set marks for future

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

Whether the 1987 Midland Angels will be remembered as the first team since 1982 to bring a Texas League title of any kind to Midland is something that will be decided in the final week of the season.

One thing that seems perfectly clear already, however, is that this year's model of Angel has brought record-setting individuals to Angel Stadium this season.

No less than four franchise records are in danger of being tied or broken by current Angels as they chase El Paso for the second half Western Division title.

One record has already fallen, while another has been tied. Others could soon follow.

Fireballing reliever Bryan Harvey notched his 19th save of the season Saturday night, but had already salted away the Midland record a week earlier with No. 17 breaking the mark Todd Fischer set in 1985. Now, with seven games left, Harvey threatens to put that mark on the upper shelf for safekeeping.

"That just means I'm doing my job, that's what I was sent here to do," said Harvey, the undrafted North Carolinian. "I'm not doing this for personal records, but it's nice when they come. I just hope we can keep winning in the last week and I get a couple more."

Harvey squeezed his record-setting numbers around a two-week stay on the disabled list to open the season and a 19-day call-up to the parent California team in June.

Marty Reed's 13 wins leave him one shy of the team mark of 14 set by Lubbock's Donnie Moore back in 1975. Reed, a left-hander, should get one more shot at tying the mark later this week in Wichita.

On the hitter's side of the ledger, first baseman Stan Holmes has already tied the club home run record with 30, set just a season ago by Kevin King. Now the burly slugger has a full week to set a new standard.

"I'm just thankful to get a chance to play every day and learn under the great instructors they have here in the Angel system," said Holmes, who was traded from the Twins just prior to the season. "It's nice to hit home runs, but I'm just trying to help us win some games."

Holmes, who hit 37 homers in the Cal League a few years back, is one of two Angels to go over the 100 RBI mark with 103 thus far, his third 100-plus RBI season in seven years of pro ball.

A pair of Angel sluggers, Doug Jennings and Joe Redfield also have a chance to break the home run mark, with 28 homers each, and are still in hot pursuit of Holmes and the 30-homer barrier.

Redfield, who is chasing records in five offensive categories, leads the team with 105 RBI, but will need to close with a rush to catch all-time leader Tom Lombarski's 119.

Rebels, Bulldogs survive hot first week of practice

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

It's a question that Johnny Carson might ask. "Just how hot was it this week?"

For the answer, just ask any Midland High or Midland Lee football player. After all, they were testing the demon August sun twice a day as preparation began for their Sept. 4 openers.

The two squads began practice in shorts and helmets last Monday, donned full pads Friday and each held a squad scrimmage Saturday.

Things won't get any easier this week as the two teams ready themselves for the first outside competition of the year Friday when Lee travels to Ozona for an unusual 11 a.m. meeting with Del Rio and MHS travels to Pecos for a 7 p.m. scrimmage.

In addition, Lee will hold its annual "Meet the Rebels" rally at 7 p.m. Tuesday, an event always open to the public. Midland High will not hold the usual "Super Dog Night" this year, but will have a special Booster Club meeting to meet the team on Tuesday, Sept. 1.

MHS COACH Doug McCutchen had mixed reviews about his Bulldogs during the first week.

"Some of our kids reported in good shape, but a number of them didn't. That was a little disappointing," said McCutchen. "That means some of them were paying an awful price in this heat.

"We told them we would get them in shape, and that we are doing. The good part is that all the kids have been willing to work hard and do what we ask of them. I think we might be a little behind where we would like to be since we lost six kids who have moved away and could have played for us this year. That makes you lose a lot of what was gained in spring training."

McCutchen is still concerned about his lack of depth in the offense.

"There is no question that we are a little thin on offense by trying to go with players one way this year, but we still feel like we will be better off by trying it. We have a chance to be a pretty decent defensive team."

LEE COACH Earl Miller thought his squad retained a great deal from spring training.

"We've got a lot of people back and that experience has allowed us to be a little ahead of where we were last year," said Miller. "The kids reported in good shape overall and have displayed good work habits in a hot environment. Since we have some experience, we've been able to work harder on the kicking game and we don't usually do much of that this early."

But Miller says there are things the Rebs need to improve on.

"We need real improvement with our linebackers and they're going to work hard this week. We also seemed to have a problem with the technique of tackling last spring and we haven't been able to work on that without pads the first week, but we're certainly going to work on it this week."

So it looks like the Bulldogs and Rebels are at least a few days away from the fun of fall.

Jennings leads Angels to 6-4 win over Dodgers

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

After watching Doug Jennings swing in batting practice, California Angels roving batting coach Joe Madden predicted he'd knock in six runs Saturday night, so the Angel outfielder's performance has to rate in the "disappointing" category.

Jennings knocked in only four runs with two doubles and his 28th home run as Midland battled from behind again to beat San Antonio's Dodgers, 6-4, in Texas League West action at Angel Stadium.

Jennings was robbed of a another hit when second baseman Jose Mota slid on his chest to glove his drive up the middle and start a double play.

"Bill Geivett made it easy," said Jennings. "He was always on base."

Jennings doubled home Geivett in the third to give Midland a 1-0 lead. In the fifth he doubled again, this time scoring Mark Doran to make it a 2-2 game.

Then, with Midland trailing 3-2 in the seventh, he hit a towering two-out homer over the wall in center with Geivett, who had doubled, on second. It was like the two were playing in a sandlot pick up game. "You get on and I'll knock you in."

Actually, Jennings was scheduled to bat sixth in the batting order. "With a lefthander going, I normally drop Doug to sixth and move Carrasco into the second spot," explained Midland Manager Max Oliveras. "Only I forgot and when I saw what I had done on the lineup card, I said the heck with it."

SO JENNINGS, the only lefthander in the lineup, gave Erik Sonberg, 2-6, the most trouble.

"Sonberg pitched a great game," said Oliveras. "He kept us off balance with his change, which made his fast ball more effective."

Six of Midland's hits were the infield variety.

Midland also got outstanding pitching from Chris Collins, six hits in seven innings, and lefthander Vance Lovelace has never been any faster than in his 1⅓ inning stint.

A single off the end of the bat and a looper, neither ball hit with authority, in the ninth nevertheless brought in ace closer Bryan Harvey to face Jeff Brown, who had already knocked in three runs. His two run homer in the fifth was his fifth of the season and third in three nights at Angel Stadium.

The catcher reportedly had asked for asylum preparatory to defecting to Angel Stadium, but found out the Angels take to the road to close out the season after the Dodger series.

Brown reached on a run-scoring error, but Harvey got Juan Bustabad on a final out rap back to the box.

Midland holds a 2-1 edge in the crucial series going into tonight's 6 p.m. game, the next to last home game of the season.

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Midland first baseman Stan Holmes can't catch up with a ground ball shot between first and second in the third inning of Saturday's game against San Antonio.

FOR JENNINGS, the TL's player for the month of June, it's a case of getting back in the groove. "For about three weeks I was in a slump. I just lost my concentration, but I feel it's all coming together."

Goals? "Yes, I set some at the end of April. The 28 homers puts me just a couple behind my goal. The 99 RBIs, to be honest, I forgot to set any RBI goals."

Although Midland is 2-1 over the Dodgers. Every game has been a battle and both Harvey and Jennings feel that's good news.

"They've made changes. They just aren't the same club they were last time we faced them. They are playing good ball," Harvey said.

"I think they can give El Paso trouble in that final series. They have the kind of singles hitting team that can beat the Diablos in San Antonio. It's not a home run park like El Paso," Jennings said.

Bet Twice defeats Alysheba, again; Both lose

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y. (AP) — Bet Twice beat Alysheba in the Travers Saturday, but both of them were thoroughly whipped by Java Gold.

The expected duel between Alysheba, owned by Midlanders Dorothy Scharbauer and daughter Pamela and winner of the Kentucky Derby and Preakness, and Bet Twice, winner of the Belmont Stakes and Haskell Invitational Handicap, never materialized on a sloppy Saratoga track.

Both colts' jockeys said they could not handle the track made sloppy by a morning rain. It also began raining again seven minutes before the Travers started.

Java Gold won $673,800 from a purse of $1,123,000 with a two-length victory over Cryptoclearance.

Bet Twice, who was second with a quarter of a mile remaining in the 1¼-mile race, finished fifth, 12¼ lengths behind the winner. Alysheba finished sixth, his best position of the race, 20¼ lengths back.

"I wanted it to be a fast track because then you have a true test for all the horses," said winning trainer Mack Miller, who was inducted into the Hall of Fame two weeks ago. "But I knew he handled an off-track well, and I thought about that, too."

Winning jockey Pat Day said he thought the sloppy track "might have been detrimental to some horses in the race."

But Day reminded reporters at a postrace news conference that he had said before the race that he would not change places with any other jockey in the Travers.

"I knew this horse would run a good race," said Day, who also won the Travers with Play Fellow in 1983.

However, some of Java Gold's backers in a crowd of 45,055 must have wondered about the colt with a half mile remaining. He was last in the nine-horse field.

"I wasn't concerned about how far back he was," Day said. Java Gold was about 15 lengths behind leader Temperate Sil at that point.

"I just wanted him to settle in and make my run at the five-sixteenths pole," Day said.

Miller said Day "was so great, so patient. He never got unnerved."

Day moved Java Gold into sixth place with a quarter of a mile to go, and he was third behind Cryptoclearance and Polish Navy an eighth of a mile from the wire. Then, he stormed into the lead with about 70 yards remaining and won in 2:02.

Java Gold, who missed the Triple Crown races when a virus interupted his training, paid $8.40, $5.40 and $3.80 for his fifth victory in six starts this year. He boosted his career bankroll to $1,220,352 on a record of eight wins, two seconds and a third in 13 starts. Two weeks ago, he won the Whitney Handicap and now is the third horse in 25 years to win both the Whitney and the Travers.

The others were Java Gold's sire, Key To The Mint, in 1972, and Alysheba's sire, Alydar, in 1978.

It was the fourth Travers victory for Java Gold's owner, Paul Mellon. He won with Quadrangle in 1964, Arts and Letters in 1969 and Key To The Mint in 1972.

As for his next start, Miller said, "I think he'll go in the Marlboro (Sept. 21 at Belmont Park). We'll skip the Woodward (Sept. 5) and give the horse and me a rest."

Cryptoclearance, ridden by Angel Cordero, returned $6.40 and $3.80.

Cowboys, Oilers find formula for pre-season wins

Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Tony Dorsett rushed for 50 yards and a touchdown in the opening nine minutes of play, and the Dallas Cowboys came back from a shutout defeat in their NFL pre-season opener to beat the San Francisco 49ers 13-3 Saturday night.

Dorsett, who played only in the first quarter, gained 17 and 24 yards on two runs in the 70-yard touchdown drive and scored on a 2-yard run. On the 24-yard play, he bounced away from a pack of defenders after it appeared he was stopped for no gain.

Dorsett and starting fullback Timmy Newsome both left the game early because of bruised leg muscles. Two other Dallas running backs and two wide receivers went out later with minor injuries.

The Cowboys, beaten 29-0 by San Diego a week earlier, gained 166 yards in the first period against San Francisco, with quarterback Danny White passing for 92. Roger Ruzek, one of the team's many candidates for the placekicking job, made a 38-yard field goal in the first period and a 24-yarder in the final period.

Ray Wersching kicked a 28-yard field goal in the second period for San Francisco's only points. The 49ers, now 2-1 in exhibition play, were ragged offensively through most of the game.

Houston 16, New Orleans 13

NEW ORLEANS — Tony Zendejas kicked three field goals and Warren Moon passed for a touchdown as the Houston Oilers blew a lead, then rallied in the fourth quarter to beat New Orleans.

Zendejas' field goals were from 23 yards and 34 yards in the second quarter and 52 yards, longest of his three-year career, in the fourth quarter.

Moon's touchdown pass to Drew Hill capped the game's opening series. Moon completed six of eight pass attempts for 32 yards on the 64-yard march, and Mike Rozier rushed five times for 22 yards.

Rozier and Moon played only the first two series, as Houston went to its reserves and rookies midway through the second quarter.

Third-round draft choice Cody Carlson relieved Moon and finished with nine completions on 20 attempts for 71 yards.

Redskins 33, Packers 0

MADISON, Wis. — Reserve quarterbacks Doug Williams and Mark Rypien each passed for a touchdown and Green Bay threw five first-half interceptions to help Washington to an easy victory.

Williams, who took over for Jay Schroeder after the Redskins held a 17-0 lead, hit Derek Holloway on a 47-yard scoring pass with less than a minute to go before halftime.

Bears 50, Steelers 14

CHICAGO — Starting quarterback Mike Tomczak completed a pair of first-half touchdown passes as the favored Chicago Bears rolled over Pittsburgh.

Tomczak, fighting for the No. 1 job, which is open because of Jim McMahon's shoulder surgery, threw a 31-yard touchdown pass to Willie Gault in the first quarter and connected on an 8-yard touchdown pass with Tim Wrightman in the second quarter.

Playing one third of the game with Doug Flutie and also sharing time with rookie Jim Harbaugh, Tomczak completed 8 of 9 passes for 134 yards.

Bucs 29, Jets 27

TAMPA, Fla. — Steve DeBerg threw a 7-yard touchdown pass to a leaping Phil Freeman with 3:38 to play to give Tampa Bay a 29-27 victory over the New York Jets in a NFL exhibition game.

The victory was the first in the preseason for the Bucs since 1985.

Jets starter Ken O'Brien tossed touchdown passes of 3 yards to Kurt Sohn and 1 yard to Jojo Townsell.

Lions 23, Bengals 9

PONTIAC, Mich. — Detroit's Eddie Murray kicked three field goals and backup quarterback Joe Ferguson tossed a 42-yard touchdown pass to rookie Gary Lee as the Detroits beat Cincinnati.

Bobby Watkins returned a fumble 81 yards and Murray hit from 35, 29 and 48 yards, staking the Lions to a 16-9 lead after three quarters.

Ferguson and Lee hooked up with 5:47 remaining as the Lions and Bengals evened their preseason records at 1-1.

Giants 24, Browns 10

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Backup quarterback Jeff Rutledge, enjoying a perfect night, broke a 10-10 tie with a 24-yard touchdown pass to Ottis Anderson, then added a 15-yarder to Solomon Miller as the Super Bowl champion New York Giants beat Cleveland for their second straight exhibition victory.

Rutledge, who threw two interceptions in his first three passes against New England last week, completed all seven of his passes for 108 yards this time.

Chiefs 13, Falcons 10

KANSAS CITY — Nick Lowery kicked a 48-yard field goal with 12 seconds left to give the Kansas City Chiefs a 13-10 NFL exhibition victory over the Atlanta Falcons Saturday night.

Quarterback Todd Blackledge scrambled 20 yards and 8 yards on successive plays before Michael Clemons ran 10 yards to put the Chiefs into position for Lowery's winning kick.

Vikings 37, Colts 13

MINNEAPOLIS — Wade Wilson passed for 283 yards, including a tie-breaking 53-yard "Hail Mary" touchdown pass to Buster Rhymes at the end of the first half, leading Minnesota over Indianapolis.

The Colts, 1-1 in the preseason, lost for the first time under Coach Ron Meyer, who took over an 0-13 team last December and guided the team to three season-ending victories.

Cardinals 28, Seahawks 21

ST. LOUIS — Neil Lomax combined with Roy Green on a 26-yard touchdown pass play and Stump Mitchell ran for two scores, leading St. Louis over Seattle.

Lomax, making his second straight strong early appearance, completed 12 of 19 passes for 101 yards and one interception. Mitchell, meanwhile, spearheaded a St. Louis first half that included three touchdown drives with scoring runs of 6 and 3 yards.

Bills 7, Raiders 3

LOS ANGELES — Frank Reich threw a 5-yard touchdown pass to Bob Williams with 28 seconds remaining to give the Buffalo victory over the Los Angeles Raiders.

The Bills drove 80 yards on 13 plays for the only touchdown of the game after cornerback John Armstrong intercepted a pass by Ed Luther of the Raiders in the Buffalo end zone with 3:42 remaining.

The Bills opted not to play first-string quarterback Jim Kelly, who was "being rested," according to a club spokesman.

Earnhardt runs to easy Busch win

BRISTOL, Tenn. (AP) — Dale Earnhardt overpowered the rest of the field Saturday night to win the Busch 500 NASCAR stock car race at Bristol International Raceway.

Earnhardt, who already had a runaway lead in the Winston Cup point standings coming into the race, ran off to his ninth victory in 19 starts this season.

The two-time Winston Cup champion led 414 of the 500 laps on Bristol's .533-mile, high-banked oval.

There was a series of minor accidents in the race. Among them, Phil Parsons and Jimmy Means both spun, Dave Marcis and Harry Gant banged together, Midland's Bobby Hillin Jr. tangled with Geoff Bodine, Ken Schrader hit the second-turn wall, three-time Winston Cup champion Darrell Waltrip hit the fourth turn wall while running fourth on lap 250.

"Put Eichorn and that sinker and Scott May in that San Antonio park and they are tough," agrees Oliveras.

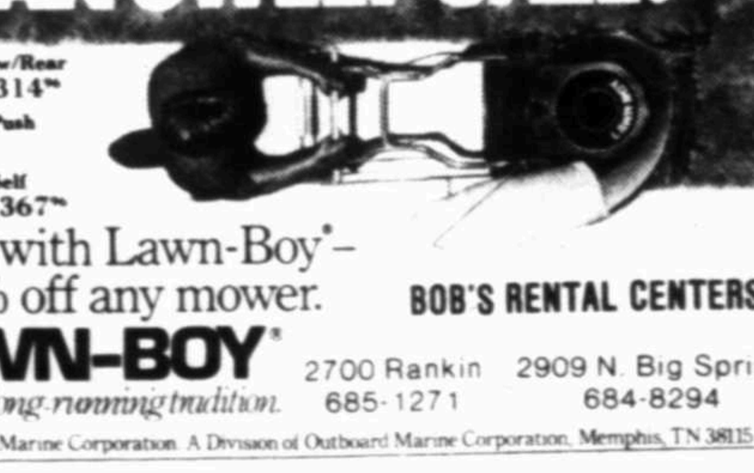

While the Angels are at Wichita the final week to play the first half winners, El Paso finishes at San Antonio.

HALO HOOPS— Mike Romanovsky, 8-6, goes for the Angels tonight...Geivett, Carrasco and Jennings all had three-hit games....Jeff Schaefer, the ex-Angel, was called up to Albuquerque and Manny Francois, his replacement at short, made a sensational play to rob Carrasco and start a twin-killing in the fourth-...Before Jennings' homer, Geivett fought off a 3-2 count and finally got the pitch he wanted and doubled.

Cubans strike gold at Pan Am Games

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Cubans hit Americans hard on the baseball field and in the boxing ring, dominating the gold-medal chase Saturday at the Pan American Games.

The Cuban baseball team won its fifth successive Pan Am crown with a 13-9 victory over the United States, hitting three long home runs and rallying from two- and three-run deficits. The victory avenged a 6-4 loss to the Americans last Saturday — a loss that snapped Cuba's 37-game Pan Am winning streak.

"The Cubans are the best specimens I've ever seen in baseball," Coach Ron Fraser said.

Cuban boxers beat two more Americans for a pair of gold medals and won five golds out of six available in the ring Saturday.

The United States swept the all-around women's gymnastics medals. Sabrina Mar surprised national champion Kristie Phillips for the gold. Phillips took the silver and Kelly Garrison-Steves got the bronze.

The American water polo team was more successful with the Cubans, beating them 6-4 for the gold medal.

Cuba, boosted by seven golds on the next-to-last day of the 16-day games, passed Canada for second place in the overall medals count.

The United States led with 350 medals, including 160 gold, 113 silver and 77 bronze. Cuba had 164 medals through 11 finals Saturday, with 69 gold. Canada was four medals behind Cuba.

Forfeited medals offically were reawarded, with the silver medal won by Bill Green of Torrance, Calif., given to an Argentine.

Green insisted that his test was inaccurate because he never took a banned substance.

BASEBALL

The U.S. team had nursed a 9-8 lead provided by Ed Sprague's leadoff homer in the fifth. But an error by second baseman Ty Griffin, the hero of the earlier win over Cuba, helped the Cubans load the bases in the eighth. Victor Mesa then singled in two runs off relief ace Cris Carpenter and the Cubans added three more in the ninth.

The Americans led 2-0 in the first inning when a severe thunderstorm caused a one-hour delay. When action resumed, Cuba jumped ahead 5-2 in the third. Orestes Kindelan hit a two-run homer and Luis Casanova had a solo shot in the rally.

Back came the Americans with a five-run fourth. Griffin doubled in the first two runs of the inning, Mike Fiore singled in another, Ted Wood's squeeze bunt produced another and Scott Servais finished the comeback with an RBI single.

But the Cubans weren't through playing long ball. Omar Linares had a two-run homer and Casanova got his second solo home run of the game in the fifth.

The United States qualified for the 1988 Olympics by winning the silver.

BOXING

Juan Lemus and Manuel Martinez outpointed U.S. boxers Kenneth Gould and Michael Collins in the finals. The victories gave Cuba a 9-2 record in ring matchups with the United States, although U.S. Coach Roosevelt Sanders thought his fighters deserved better.

In addition to Cuba's five victories, Puerto Rico's Luis Rolon beat Michael Carbajal of Phoenix for the 106-pound title.

Along with Lemus and Martinez, the Cuban winners were heavyweight Felix Savon, Angel Espinosa at 165 pounds and Julio Gonzales at 132.

GYMNASTICS

Mar, 17, of Monterey Park, Calif., scored a record 77.975 points. She became the first American woman to win the Pan Am gold since Ann Carr in 1975.

Norman bogies 18, falls into tie for first

OAK BROOK, Ill. (AP) — Greg Norman's bogey on the last hole Saturday cost him sole possession of the lead after the first round of the rain-delayed Western Open golf tournament.

Norman was alone at four under par until he made bogey from a fairway bunker on the last hole of a layout contrived from pieces of two golf courses.

His 69 dropped him back into a seven-way tie for the top for this tournament that has been delayed by floods and thunderstorms, cut to a 54-hole format and forced to spread itself over portions of two golf courses.

"We're just lucky to be able to play golf. There's a lot of folks out there with no houses," Norman said of the floods that inundated the western suburbs of Chicago and put the Butler National Golf Club course under five feet of water early in the week.

The course was restored to playable condition Thursday night, but another thunderstorm struck and again delayed the start.

The storm also left some low-lying holes unfit for play. Tournament officials arranged for the use of nine holes at an adjacent course, the Oak Brook Golf Club.

Those nine holes formed the front side and nine more at Butler made up the back of the course being played. The holes at Butler, and the order they were played, were: 11, 12, 3, 4, 13, 14, 15, 16 and 17.

"The greens are much slower at Oak Brook, so it requires some adjustment when you go from one course to the other," said Willie Wood, one of those tied with Norman at 69.

"But then," Wood added, "the whole week has been an adjustment."

Tom Watson and Ben Crenshaw had to adjust to the fact that they shot 73s, just four off the pace and are through for the week, the victims of an 18-hole cut.

Norman shared the top spot with Bob Tway, Bobby Wadkins, Wood, Andy Dillard, Ed Dougherty and Mike Donald.

Defending champion Tom Kite and Hal Sutton were in a large group at 70, two under par on the half-and-half course.

U.S. Open champion Scott Simpson had a 71, and PGA champion Larry Nelson matched the qualifying score at 72.

Lopez, Daniel knotted for Atlantic Classic lead

GALLOWAY TOWNSHIP, N.J. (AP) — Nancy Lopez rolled in an eight-foot birdie putt on the 18th hole and tied Beth Daniel for the lead after two rounds of the $225,000 Atlantic City Classic on Saturday.

Defending champion and first-round leader Juli Inkster blew a three-stroke advantage on the back nine and was one shot behind Lopez and Daniel heading into the final 18 holes.

Lopez, who has won just once this year, had five birdies and three bogeys in shooting her second consecutive 2-under-par 69 for a 4-under-par 138 total.

"I feel very good about my position," the 30-year-old Lopez said. "The way I am hitting the ball, I'm anxious to go out and play tomorrow."

Daniel, who is just emerging from a year-long slump, probably feels the same way. She sank two chip shots and holed a wedge from 57 yards as part of a 4-under-par 67, the best round of the day.

Daniel finished tied for second with Lopez just two weeks ago at the Henredon Classic in North Carolina, her best finish of the year. Before that, the year had been a struggle.

"The way I have turned my game around the past month is unbelievable," said Daniel. "A lot of people were coming up to me and saying 'What's wrong?' all year. I was thinking about going home for the year."

Inkster looked like she was going to run away with the tournament.

O'Meara tops Batley field by one

SOUTHPORT, England (AP) — American Mark O'Meara edged closer to his first European title Saturday when he shot a third-round 70 to maintain a one-stroke lead in the $224,000 Lawrence Batley European PGA tournament.

The former U.S. amateur champion, who set a course record on Friday with a 64, shot three birdies in his first seven holes and finished the round two-under-par at 205.

Right behind was England's Carl Mason, whose 65 was the best round of a day interrupted for 45 minutes by a raging thunderstorm.

The 34-year-old former British youth champion moved into a share of second place at 206 with Irishman David Feherty.

Feherty had a chance to lead outright but three-putted three times, all of them from two feet. Mason, who has not won in Europe after 14 years as a professional, needed only 23 putts.

Ireland's Eamonn Darcy did his Ryder Cup prospects no harm with a blemish-free round of 66, including four birdies and an eagle at the sixth. Darcy last played in the competition in 1971.

Starling drops Breland in 11th to claim crown

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Marlon Starling knocked out Mark Breland in the 11th round and captured the former Olympic hero's World Boxing Association welterweight title Saturday.

Starling hit Breland with three straight rights in Breland's corner and then put him to the canvas with a left hook with 1:38 left in the 11th round.

Breland tried to get up but was unable to regain his feet as he suffered his first professional loss in 19 fights.

"I knew I was going to get him in the late rounds," Starling said. "I thought I was behind on all the cards."

Starling, known by the nickname "The Magic Man," is now 42-4 with 26 knockouts.

Breland was ahead on all three judges cards when he was knocked down — 97-92, 96-91 and 99-89.

"I thought I was winning the fight," Breland said. "I got hit in the side and I felt the pain."

There were no other knockdowns and neither fighter was in serious trouble until the 11th.

Both boxers used their jabs in the early rounds, with the 6-foot-2 Breland trying to keep the more aggressive Starling off him.

Breland went to the body well early and was throwing more punches and more combinations. Starling worked the body and also was surprisingly effective with his jab.

Starling also pushed Breland around in the ring, shoving him to the canvas several times. Referee Tony Perez took a point away from the challenger in the sixth.

Starling, of Hartford, Conn., also was bleeding from the mouth and nose in the sixth after he was hit by several Breland jabs.

As the fight went on, Breland appeared to be throwing more punches, but they were not as strong as they had been.

It was the first title fight in South Carolina and the second bout for Breland in Columbia, whose parents live nearby. On October 22, the yet-to-be-crowned champion knocked out Ralph Twining in the first round. After the bout, Breland walked around the ring wearing a University of South Carolina football jersey and said he wanted to return to the city for another fight.

Davis, 10, already a national champion

From Staff Reports

Midland's John Wesley Davis, 10, recently won the 200 meter title in the 1987 National Final of the Hershey's National Track and Field Youth Program, held at Henry Hershey Field in Hershey, Penn.

Davis' winning time was 28.2 seconds in the national meet that is sponsored by the Hershey food corporation in cooperation with the National track and field Hall of Fame, President's Council on Physical Fitness and Sports and National Recreation and Parks Association state agencies.

Davis was one of six boys to qualify for the national meet from Texas. To earn his chance at the national 200 championship, Davis qualified for Texas' state meet by winning the region title in San Angelo. He won the state crown in the 200 in Austin. He also placed second in the region and state meets in the 100.

Davis, known by family and friends as B.J., competes locally for the Tall City Christian Track Club, which was formed by Rev. Farris Strambler, who is also head coach of the team. Rev. Strambler is assisted by Terry Leflar.

RECORDS—

Jennings, the only lefty among the offensive trio, is on target to break the .334 recorded by Karl Pagel of the 1977 Midland Cubs. Jennings is hot on the trail at .344 and is among the club's all-time leaders in hits with 153, but probably out of reach of Mel Hall's 170 in 1984. He also shouldgo over 100 RBI by the end of the season, he has 99.

These records may not all fall as the Angels conclude their home season with games tonight and Monday against San Antonio and then with a five-game trip to Wichita. But the thrill of the chase has already brought 131,275 through the turnstiles in 1987, setting yet another record in a season of records.

Bass homers in 11th to lift Astros past Cubs, 5-4

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Kevin Bass hit a home run with one out in the top of the 11th inning Saturday to lift the Houston Astros to a 5-4 victory over the Chicago Cubs.

Bass' homer, his 13th of the year, came off loser Frank DiPino, 3-3, and gave Houston its eighth win in its last nine games.

Larry Andersen, 8-4, pitched two scoreless innings for the win after relieving starter Mike Scott in the ninth. Scott pitched eight innings, allowing nine hits and four runs, including Andre Dawson's game-tying solo homer in the bottom of the eighth. It was Dawson's 41st home run of the year and fifth in his last three games.

Anderson pitched two scoreless innings, allowing one hit. Dave Smith pitched the bottom of the 11th for his 21st save.

RBI singles by Bill Doran and Alan Ashby had given the Astros a 4-3 lead in the top of the eighth before Dawson led off the bottom of the inning with a shot over the center field fence.

Houston took a 1-0 lead in the first when Doran's RBI double scored Billy Hatcher from first base. The Astros increased their lead to 2-0 in the second when Craig Reynolds doubled and scored on a single by starting pitcher Mike Scott.

Phillies 2, Dodgers 0

PHILADELPHIA — Mike Maddux pitched five-hit ball over seven innings and Luis Aguayo's groundout scored Von Hayes with the tie-breaking run in the seventh as Philadelphia defeated Los Angeles.

Maddux, 1-0, activated Saturday after being recalled from Maine of the International League, walked none and struck out three. Mike Jackson pitched 1 1-3 innings, Jeff Calhoun got one out in the ninth and Kent Tekulve got the last two outs for his third save.

It was the 13th time this season the Dodgers have been shut out.

National League

Padres 8, Mets 3

NEW YORK — John Kruk and Randy Ready homered to lead San Diego past New York.

Kruk went 3-for-3 with a solo home run and sacrifice fly and scored twice before leaving in the seventh inning with a strained right thigh. Ready hit a solo homer and double and scored two runs.

Mark Davis, 7-6, pitched four innings of two-hit relief for the victory. He entered in the third inning after Dave Magadan's leadoff line-drive single struck starter Ed Whitson on the right hand. Whitson was forced to leave the game with bruised fingers.

Braves 10, Pirates 3

ATLANTA — Glenn Hubbard's two-run double ignited Atlanta's eight-run fifth inning as the Braves beat Pittsburgh to give giving rookie right-hander Tom Glavine his first major-league victory.

Glavine, 1-1, and Pittsburgh starter Bob Walk, 5-2, were locked in a scoreless duel when Ozzie Virgil led off the Braves' fifth with a walk and went to second on a single by Jeff Blauser. Hubbard then singled to center, scoring both runners.

Before the inning was over, the Braves sent 12 batters to the plate against three pitchers and got seven of their 14 hits.

Glavine allowed seven hits in 7 1-3 innings, while walking one. He had a shutout until Mike Diaz opened the sixth with his 13th home run. Jim Acker finished the game for Atlanta.

Cardinals 9, Reds 7

CINCINNATI — Terry Pendleton's two-out, bases-loaded triple in the seventh inning gave St. Louis a come-from-behind victory over Cincinnati.

The Cardinals, who trailed 7-1 after four innings, were down 7-5 entering the seventh, but singles by John Morris and Vince Coleman off Tom Hume and Ozzie Smith's RBI single off Rob Murphy, 6-5, cut the deficit to one run.

Coleman was caught stealing and Tommy Herr struck out, but Jack Clark was walked intentionally and Willie McGee also walked, loading the bases, before Pendleton cleared the bases with his triple to center.

Expos 5, Giants 4

MONTRTEAL — Tim Raines' triple with none out in the 10th inning scored Mitch Webster from first base to give Montreal a victory over San Francisco.

Webster led off the inning with a single off Craig Lefferts, 3-5, and Raines followed with a drive that fell in front of a diving Chili Davis in right field.

Tim Burke, 5-0, pitched two innings in relief for the victory. Despite the loss, the Giants remained in first place in the National League West by one half-game over Houston.

The Expos tied the score 4-4 with two outs in the bottom of the ninth when pinch-hitter Vance Law's infield single off pitcher Scott Garrelts's glove scored Andres Galarraga from third.

Rangers hold on, win 8-6

Incaviglia hits three-run homer

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Pete Incaviglia hit a three-run homer Saturday night as the Texas Rangers outlasted the Chicago White Sox 8-6.

Incaviglia's homer, a 431-foot shot to center off loser Dave LaPoint, 2-1, capped a four-run inning that gave the Rangers a 5-3 lead. Singles by Jerry Browne, Bob Brower and Scott Fletcher and third baseman Donnie Hill's throwing error on Fletcher's bunt single made it 3-2. After Ruben Sierra struck out, Incaviglia connected for his 23rd homer of the year.

Knuckleballer Charlie Hough, 14-8, allowed 10 hits and six runs in seven innings before Mitch Williams pitched the last two innings, striking out four, for his third save.

Tigers 8, Indians 6

CLEVELAND — Lou Whitaker hit a three-run homer and Mike Henneman pitched 4 1-3 innings of two-hit relief as Detroit defeated Cleveland.

Henneman, 9-1, allowed one run, striking out four and walking two in relief of starter Jeff Robinson, as the first-place Tigers won for the ninth time in their last 12 games. Willie Hernandez got one out in the ninth and Eric King the final two outs for his eighth save.

Scott Bailes, 6-6, took the loss, allowing five runs, two earned, in the first 2⅓ innings.

Bill Madlock put the Tigers ahead 1-0 in the first inning with his 12th home run and Detroit scored three unearned runs in the second.

Jim Morrison walked and Tom Brookens reached first base when third baseman Brook Jacoby made a throwing error. After the second out, Whitaker hit his 14th homer.

Athletics 6, Yankees 0

OAKLAND, Calif. — Gene Nelson allowed four hits in 6⅓ innings to gain his first victory as a starter in nearly two years to lead Oakland to a victory over New York.

Nelson, 6-3, struck out five and walked none in his third start of the season. He had spent most of the year in middle relief but has thrown 12⅓ scoreless innings in his last two starts. Nelson last won as a starter on Sept. 23, 1983, at California.

Dennis Lamp and Greg Cadaret and Dennis Eckersley followed Nelson with 2⅓ innings of shutout relief. Eckersley came on with the bases loaded in the ninth and struck out pinch hitter Ron Kittle and got Mike Easler to hit into a game-ending double play.

Oakland pulled to within two games of AL West leader Minnesota.

American League

Red Sox 6, Twins 5

BOSTON — Wade Boggs hit his 21st home run with two out in the seventh inning, lifting Boston to a victory over Minnesota.

Rookie Mike Greenwell and Dave Henderson also hit solo homers as the Red Sox handed Minnesota's AL West leaders their fifth loss in a row.

Boggs hit an 0-1 pitch off Les Straker, 6-8, into the Boston bullpen in right-center for his homer after the Twins had pulled into a 5-5 tie on a three-run homer by Gary Gaetti in the seventh.

Boston starter Bob Stanley allowed only two runs, one unearned, in six innings before needing relief help from Calvin Schiraldi with runners on first and second and none out in the seventh.

Royals 8, Brewers 7

MILWAUKEE — Milwaukee's Paul Molitor extended his hitting streak to 37 games, but Kansas City's Jamie Quirk drove in five runs with a grand slam and an RBI single in the eighth inning to give the Royals a victory over the Brewers.

Molitor, who celebrated his 31st birthday Saturday, opened the bottom of the first with a sharp single to right field off Kansas City starter Bret Saberhagen on a 2-2 pitch, earning a standing ovation from the crowd of 37,740. His 37-game streak ties him with Tommy Holmes for the fifth-longest in major-league history and is the longest in American League history since Joe DiMaggio set the major-league mark at 56 games in 1941.

Molitor was picked off first after his single, but later walked in the third inning, grounded out in the fifth and singled in a run in the seventh, when the Brewers scored three times to tie the score at 7-7, and grounded out in the ninth. He is hitting .423, 66-for-156, during his streak.

But the Royals regained the lead in the eighth when Thad Bosley led off with a single off loser Mark Knudson, 3-4. Ray Burris relieved Knudson, and pinch-runner Bo Jackson stole second and went to third on catcher B.J. Surhoff's throwing error. One out later, Steve Balboni walked before Quirk's single scored Jackson.

Jerry Don Gleaton, 3-4, got the win despite allowing a game-tying single by Greg Brock in the seventh.

Blue Jays 2, Angels 0

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Rance Mullinks broke up a scoreless duel with a two-run homer in the seventh inning as Toronto stayed in a virtual tie for first place in the AL East with a victory over California.

The win kept the Blue Jays .002 behind Detroit, which beat Cleveland 8-6.

Rookie Jose Nunez, a last-minute substitute for scheduled starter Jimmy Key, blanked California on two hits for 6⅔ innings. Nunez, 2-1, walked three and struck out five before being relieved by Tom Henke after walking Doug DeCinces with two outs in the seventh.

Henke blanked the Angels the rest of the way for his league-leading 30th save, striking out six and allowing one hit. Jack Howell's leadoff double in the ninth. He has converted his last 17 save opportunities.

Lee Rebels fall from AP penthouse

From Staff and Wire Reports

Midland Lee's football Rebels haven't even played a game and they've already gone from the Penthouse to the Outhouse, according to The Associated Press.

In a pre-season football poll picked by sports writers at the Texas High School Coaches Association meeting this summer, Lee was named the No. 2 5A team in the state. But the first AP poll has ignored Lee all together in its Top 10. In fact, for the first time this decade, the AP 5A Top 10 doesn't even include a team from District 4-5A.

The Aldine MacArthur Generals, whose defense shut out seven opponents last season, including three teams in the playoffs, will start the 1987 season as the top-ranked team in Class 5A of the Texas AP preseason poll.

The Generals, who lost to finalist La Marque in the 1986 quarter-finals, are joined by Jasper in 4A, Cuero in 3A, Refugio in 2A and Bremond in A atop the preseason rankings.

"We haven't won a game yet, but if we can stay healthy we are capable of beating anybody on our schedule," MacArthur Coach Bob Alpert said. "But if we don't stay hungry, anybody can beat us."

The Generals' defense returns eight starters from last year's stingy group, including highly regarded defensive end Joe Green and linebacker Anthony Curl.

"They are the two best players I've coached at those positions but we're not a team of two super-stars," Alpert said. "Our defense is effective because of our team concept."

Running back Donny Ford will add punch to the offense.

"Our defense gets a lot of talk but I think we'll be able to move the ball this season," Alpert said.

Fort Bend Willowridge, sidetracked in the second round of last year's playoffs, is ranked No. 2 in 5A and Plano, the defending champion is third.

Jasper, which lost to eventual 4A champion West Orange Stark, got 14 first place votes for a commanding 187 points over runnerup Gregory Portland with 117.

Odessa College profits big from Mustangs' loss

DALLAS (AP) — Larry Johnson, one of the all-time top basketball recruits at Southern Methodist, said Saturday night he will attend Odessa College rather than enroll at SMU and sit out a year.

Johnson, a Parade and McDonald's All-American from Dallas Skyline, will be eligible to play for the Wranglers this season, but cannot transfer to a four-year school for two years.

"I really wanted to go to SMU, but since I'd have to sit out a year I decided to do something else," Johnson said.

Johnson signed with the Mustangs in November, but began to reconsider when school officials questioned an increase in his Scholastic Aptitude Test scores.

Johnson says he took the test twice, but the Educational Testing Service canceled the second score when questions arose about its validity. Johnson declined to retake the test, saying he studied and "had nothing to prove by taking it again."

Johnson's score on the second test was higher than 700, which would have made him eligible immediately under NCAA Proposition 48 minimum academic requirements if it had been accepted. But new SMU president A. Kenneth Pye informed Johnson on Wednesday he would have to be admitted based on his first score, which was less than 700, making him ineligible his first year.

Giants' Nelson suffering from Hodgkin's Disease

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — The New York Giants confirmed Saturday night that Karl Nelson, their starting right offensive tackle, is suffering from Hodgkin's Disease, a cancer of the lymphatic system.

The announcement was made by Dr. Russell Warren, the Giants' team physician, who said tests on Nelson that disclosed the malignancy had shown it to be of a type that has a successful outcome of "90 to 95 percent."

Warren said he thought it was possible that Nelson, a fourth-year NFL player from Iowa State who had started 55 straight games, could resume his career after treatment.

THE ONLY THING WORSE THAN SETTLING FOR LESS IS PAYING MORE FOR IT.

$1,000 MORE THAN A VOLVO.* $2,000 MORE THAN A VOLVO.*

There are a lot of cars that cost more than a Volvo.

But few, if any, are worth as much. Especially when you consider everything a Volvo has to offer.

Like a three-year limited warranty that puts no limit on mileage. An eight-year limited warranty against corrosion. And a comprehensive roadside assistance plan called "On Call."™

Not to mention Volvo's legendary reputation for safety and durability.

So if you're in the market for a new car, test drive a Volvo 240 sedan or wagon (or, for that matter, any of our 700 series cars).

You'll find there's only one thing better than not settling for less.

And that's not paying more for it.

POW!

This week's featured home is vibrant — designed for the active family.

Four bedrooms and two living areas give you plenty of space in this well-designed home, but you needn't worry that you'll feel cut off. Open space and room entrances designed for maximum viewing make you feel warm and comfortable. A part of the family group, no matter what room you are in.

Please see DANGER, Page 2D

A bay window with plantation shutters regulates the light in the formal dining room.

The master bath features luxurious his and her baths, where this elegant tub area is waiting to take you away!

Attention to detail is evident throughout this house, built by Lee Brown four years ago and still occupied by the original owners.

A loft overlooking the living area is perfect for a billiards room (as it is presently being used) or den. It features a large closet and full bath.

The living area is complete with cathedral ceiling and fireplace. Light oak paneling and plantation shutters match the ceiling beams and a wet bar is conveniently placed in one corner of the room.

The present owners had local designer Rusty Freeman decorate the entire home, and extensive use of brass accessories beautifully accents this room. Chocolate-colored carpeting throughout the house is contrasted with dark wood furniture and a collection of Asian art.

On to the "country kitchen," where a fireplace and built-in glass door buffet initiate the many amenities, one can immediately see the quality workmanship that went into the building of this home.

Kitchen appliances include grill cooktop (completely dishwasher safe), compactor, self-cleaning oven, microwave and dishwasher. This is a kitchen any cook would appreciate, set up for efficiency and designed to avoid wasted effort.

Endless amounts of cabinet space begin in this room and continue throughout the house.

A large bay window, complete with window seat, lets the light in and plantation shutters complete this idyllic scene.

Another bay window with seat is featured in the formal dining room.

The first bedroom is being used as a library by the present owners. Built-in floor-to-ceiling bookcases make this a reader's paradise.

Yet another bay window with plantation shutters makes this room as light or dark as you want it to be. A cut-out ceiling add height and a touch of elegance to this room.

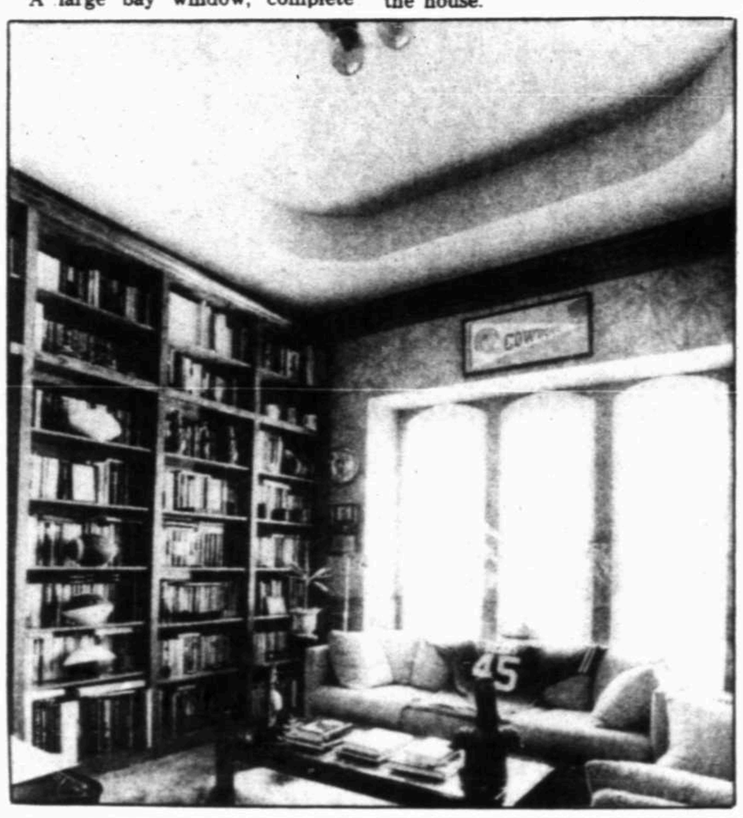

A large antique doll collection is showcased in another bedroom with glass-fronted shelves. Collectors take note; this special feature is truly unique.

The master bedroom, with vaulted ceiling, is spacious and has its own entrance to the back patio area.

Luxurious his and hers baths include walk-in closets and a large shower, accessible from either side. An elegant tub area with three-sided windows (and non-transparent glass) will definitely take you away!

Outside, the home has spectacular landscaping, a curving drive and a two-car garage in the alley. A 30' "green-belt" is the perfect place for those afternoon football games and ensures privacy.

This approximately 3,700 square foot home on Castleford is listed by Langston-Monarch for $235,000. Showings are by appointment only. Non-smokers please note: due to allergies, no one has ever smoked in the house.

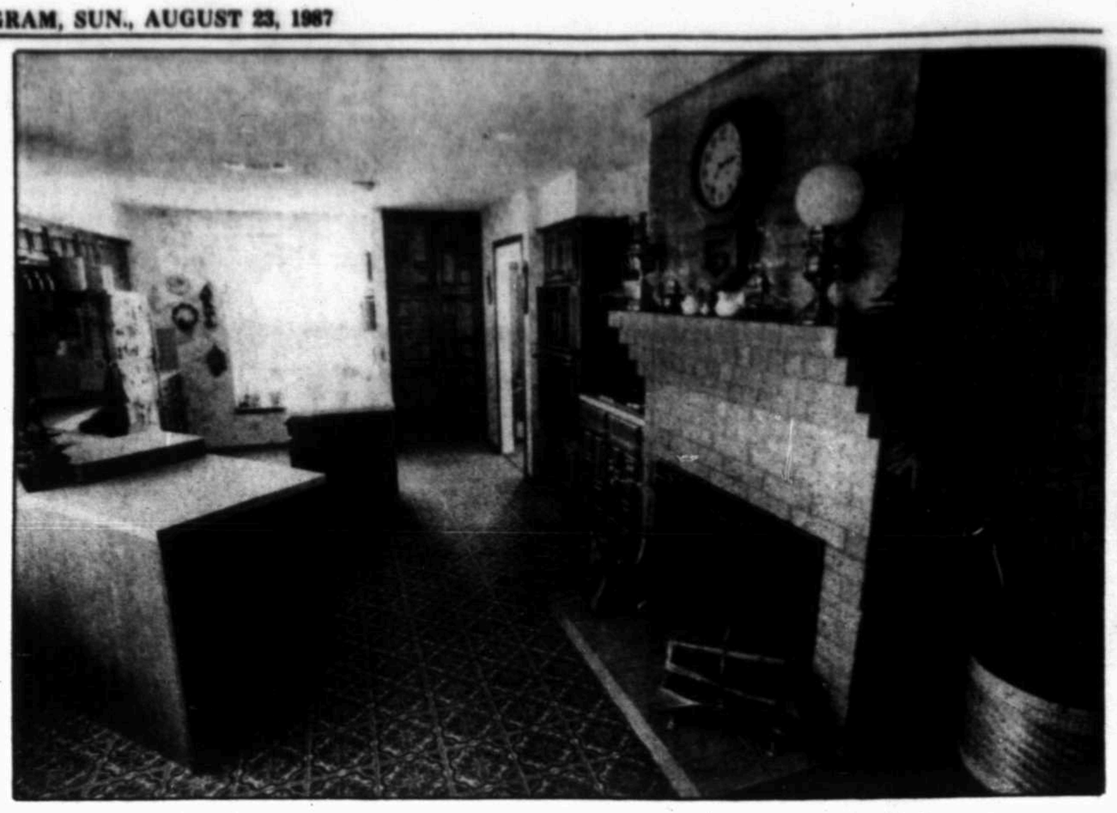

This week's featured home comes complete with a "country kitchen," pictured at right. A fireplace and built-in glass door buffet, bay window and lots of space make this a cook's dream kitchen.

The first bedroom, shown below, is being used as a library by the present owners. Built-in floor-to-ceiling bookcases make this a reader's paradise.

Football memorabilia, including a Roger Staubach signature, decorate this room.

Homestyles: Americans enjoy a new ease of living

By CAMERON BARRY

With the busy schedules most of us keep to, it's no wonder that our favorite place to spend free time is at home. Current market research indicates that more Americans prefer the comforts of home to going out.

Home is where the heart is, and so many other things we love - family, friends, our favorite books and treasures and best of all, a big, cozy bed to sink into at the end of the day.

The bedroom, probably the best place to escape the stresses of an average day, is quickly becoming the most important room in the house.

Televisions, VCRs, even stereo systems, have found their way into the bedroom, along with more traditional furnishings and accessories.

Like the rest of the house, however, the bedroom of the '80s is more relaxed and sophisticated , in keeping with major lifestyle trends.

More women are working outside the home than ever before, and the average household reflects this change.

Dual income families may have more money to spend on home furnishings, but they certainly have less time to clean, shop, mow the lawn or make the bed.

Kitchen equipment, cleaning products, furniture and even bedding have become easier to sue and to care for, and many of these new products - from food processors to down comforters - are also much more attractive than their predecessors.

Most of the major shelter magazines are showing home decorated in a sophisticated but easy style that is distinctly American - with a European flair.

Our country prints have blossomed into English chintz, and classical architecture, with marble and weathered copper abounding, is the latest important influence on home design.

Back in the bedroom, witness the rise of the down comforter, a staple of European bedding for centuries. Cool in summer, warm in winter, these natural wonders are both practical and luxurious.

Equally important, down comforters make bed-making much less of a chore - no more tucking and folding sheets, bedspreads and blankets.

Comforter covers, another European tradition, are becoming popular in America as well. Attractive and versatile, a comforter cover will keep your comforter clean and fresh - just as a pillowcase protects your pillow.

Secure home during summer vacation

Several basic summer vacation home security techniques are widely known. These include stopping newspaper deliver and using light timers to give the appearance of an occupied home.

These are positive steps, but they don't actually protect homes or their valuable contents. Several factors contribute to the effectiveness of electronic security systmes, according to a spokesman for one of the nation's largest home security companies.

"Obviously, intruders are frightened away by the noise of burglar alarms. Home security systems like ours notify the police if there is a disturbance.

"Beyond that, very few burglars are professional, so most deliberately avoid homes with electronic security," the company official continued.

"Only three percent of the nation's homes have burglar alarms. So, give the huge number of unprotected homes, burglars are very inclined not to bother those with security systems."

Get house 'in shape' for prospective buyers

The most advantageous sales technique a seller can use is to make certain his property is in tip-top shape before it is place on the market. According to the Midland Board of Realtors and the National Association of Realtors, it is much easier to win over prospective buyers who walk through a well-kept yard and into a sparkling clean home.

For a seller, giving buyers a good first impression can mean the difference between choosing from several purchase offers or struggling to attract one nibble.

Preparing a home to be shown does not necessitate a complete, costly makeover, but minor repairs and major cleaning may cut marketing time and add to the seller's net profit from the sale.

The Midland Board of Realtors offers the following selling tips:

— Paint the front door if it needs painting; if it doesn't, at least clean the door. An unsightly entry gives the home a strike even before the buyer has looked inside.

— Remove all smudges from the walls. if they look dingy, give them a coat of neutral, light-colored paint.

— Clean the floors, vacuum the carpets. If the carpet is dirty or stained, have it cleaned. If the carpet has irremovable pet odors, have it replaced. Leaving it in "as is" condition could give the entire home a "worn-out" look.

— Make sure the closets are tidy, not overflowing with junk. Free of clutter, they will seem more spacious.

— Open the curtains and turn on the lights. Put 75-watt bulbs in the light fixtures and lamps. Touring a well-lit home is far more appealing to prospective buyers than trying to squint their way through dark, gloomy rooms. In fact, they may wonder if the seller is trying to hide problems in the darkness.

— Don't try to cover up defects from buyers or from real estate agents showing the home. If a major fault exists that you don't intend to correct, call it to the agent's attention. Otherwise, you could later be held liable by the buyer for repairing the defect and the resulting problems. If the prospective buyer likes everything else, the fault might not be perceived as a serious drawback. Your forthrightness will be appreciated.

— Scrub, polish and tidy up as though you were expecting guests. You don't want the home shown with unmade beds, dirty dishes in the sink or a ring around the bath tub.

— If possible, take the children - and pets - and leave before prospects comes with a real estate agent to view the home. Generally, people will not take their time looking if the seller is on their heel touting the home's amenities.

— If you or other family members won't be there, but the pet will, make certain the pet is secured, perhaps outside or in the garage, so it will not bother prospective buyers.

— If it is impossible for you to leave before a showing, refrain from following the buyers around. Don't try to sell the furniture as well as the house, unless you are including it in the sale price. Comments such as "I'm selling the sofa at a yard sale next week", tend to take away from the purpose of the showing.

—Finally, let your real estate agent do the negotiating. A professional does not have an emotional attachment to the home, and likely is more capable of reasoning with the buyer. In doing so, the agent can knowledgeably discuss price, terms, possession and other factors on your behalf.

Expert answers variety of questions

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — We were discussing the cost of electricity. One person said a room air conditioner used more electricity than most other household items, but the counter argument was that it did not use as much electricity as a refrigerator or a freezer or a combination of both. Who was right?

A. — Obviously, the question cannot be answered accurately without knowing the sizes of the appliances. Generally, assuming the items are of average size, a refrigerator or a freezer or a combination uses more electricity than a room air conditioner, which in turn uses more electrical energy than a dishwasher or vacuum cleaner or even a television set. Remember, too, that electrical costs vary widely in different sections of the country.

Q. — I have some gluing to do in wood that will be used outdoors. Is there a special kind of waterproof glue?

A. — Yes. There are several kinds. The best known is a resorcinol glue. It comes in two parts, which are mixed just before using. The glued parts should be kept together for at least 24 hours, preferably with the aid of clamps.

Q. — I will be using varnish for the first time. What should I thin it with?

A. — Turpentine or any paint thinner.

Q. — Why do house builders use gypsum board instead of plaster? I have been told plaster is much stronger.

A. — Gypsum board is widely used by do-it-yourselfers as well as builders because it is cheaper than plaster. It can be obtained with a white paper surface or in all kinds of designs and patterns.

Q. — I plan to do some ceramic tile work. How do I cut the tiles to fit around obstructions?

A. — Buy or rent what is called a tile nipper. If it doesn't come with instructions, ask the dealer to show you how to score the tile before making a cut.

Q. — We have a house that is 85 years old. We would like to make some alterations to utilize passive solar heating. Originally, we wanted to try active solar heating, but found the cost too high for our budget. Will passive solar heating work in an old house?

A. — In passive solar heating, the house is built to take advantage of the sun's rays. In an older house, too many architectural changes are necessary to achieve good results, although some changes will help in an area of the country which does not get too cold. Generally, converting an old house into one utilizing passive solar energy is not practical, not to mention the high price of doing it.

Q. — I have been told to use shellac as a primer on an old wall just before putting up wallpaper. Is this correct?

A. — Yes. Shellac, as well as other primers, including thinned paint, can be used successfully.

Replace washer to get rid of drips

A leaky faucet left unrepaired can be as annoying as the Chinese water torture. It needn't be. In most cases, a leaky faucet is about as easy to repair as changing a light bulb. Chances are all that's needed is to replace the washer.

If the leak is in the hot water line, it can waste fuel - a considerable amount if the leak is ignored.

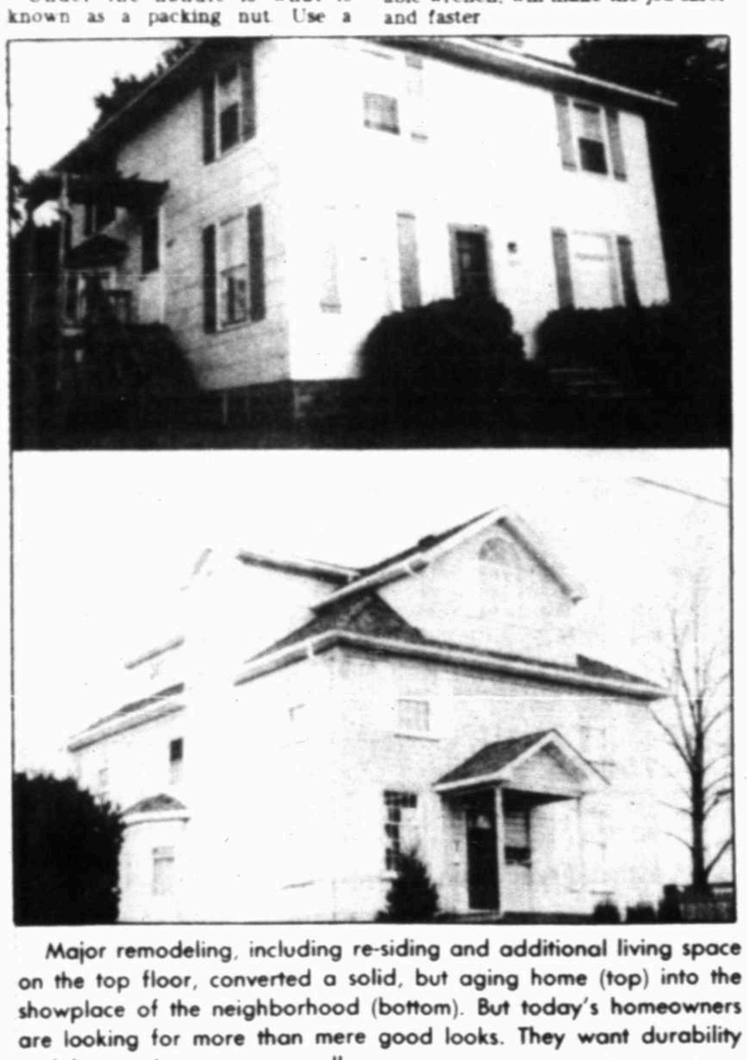

To replace the washer, unscrew or pry up the decorative cap on the top of the handle. The screw for removing the handle is underneath. Remove the screw and take off the handle. You may have to wiggle the handle back and forth a few times to loosen it from its seat.

Under the handle is what is known as a packing nut. Use a wrench to turn the packing nut it a counterclockwise direction until the entire assembly can be lifted out. On the bottom of the assembly is a screw that holds the washer in position.

Remove both the screw and the washer. Replace the washer with one that is exactly the same size. Then, attach the bottom screw and return the assembly into the fitting. Reattach the handle, the top screw and the cap.

Finally, turn on the valve under the sink and the Chinese torture should be over.

Using the correct tools, including a screwdriver and crescent adjustable wrench, will make the job safer and faster.

Major remodeling, including re-siding and additional living space on the top floor, converted a solid, but aging home (top) into the showplace of the neighborhood (bottom). But today's homeowners are looking for more than mere good looks. They want durability and low maintenance as well.

Home remodeling rings up a $91-billion dollar tune

It's easy to see why low maintenance building products are so much in favor when you consider how much money American homeowners spend each year on remodeling.

Expenditures for upkeep and improvements are expected to total more than $91-billion this year, according to remodeling industry estimates. This is about six percent more than 1986's $86-billion and considerably higher than the $80-billion spent on remodeling in 1985.

Though such record outlays suggest a concerted effort to upgrade the nation's housing stock, they also show consumer desire to replace older products with their technologically advanced contemporary counterparts.

Re-siding is a good example. It remains popular as a home improvement project. More than 1.7 million homes are expected to be re-sided this year, according to remodeling industry estimates.

Solid vinyl siding, especially, as won the approval of consumers. Not only does it eliminate the cost, time and bother of painting every few years, says the Vinyl Siding Institute, it will not dent, rust, pit or corrode, and scratches won't impair its appearance. About the only maintenance is an occasional washing to keep it new looking for years.

In addition to durability and easy care, vinyl siding comes in a wide range of colors to blend or contrast with other exterior color elements in a home. Available in various designs and textures, vinyl siding is suitable for most architectural styles and has matching accessories such as fascia, gutters, downspouts, shutters, soffits and other trim for additional low maintenance protection.

The product — a wood preservative that is an approved replacement for creosote.

Manufacturer's claim — that this preservative meets all Environmental Protection Agency requirements as a replacement for creosote, which now can be sold only for professional application ... that it protects wood against decay ... that it protects fence posts, railroad ties and other wood products ... that it does not need an applicator's permit for use ... that it is effective for wood in contact with soil and water ... and that it has been proven in independent tests to meet or exceed creosote for protection against fungus, rot, mildew and insects ... that its black color decorates as well as preserves the wood to which it is applied.

The product — Heat-shrinkable tubes and wire caps.

Manufacturer's claim — That they are an acceptable alternative to electrical tape for indoor wire splices ... that the tubes are designed to shrink to one-half their original diameter when heated to form a tight electrical connection ... that the connection is strong, flame-retardant and flexible ... that the splices are waterproof ... that they can be used outdoors as well as indoors for automotive, underground and pool wiring tasks, and to install outdoor lighting and sprinkler systems ... that the heat-shrinkable wire caps are an alternative to screw-on wire nuts ... that they form a tight, waterproof electrical connection and make a permanent, rigid, flame-retardant wire splice ... that they are non-toxic and will not loosen from vibration, unscrew or fall off.

The product — A lacquer combining nitrocellulose with urethane.

Manufacturer's claim — That this lacquer mixes the time-honored qualities of nitrocellulose lacquers with the strength and resilience of urethane ... that it provides outstanding resistance to abrasions, marring and water marks ... that it also resists heat and scratches and even chemical spills, including nail polish remover ... that it is easily applied, air dries rapidly and requires no costly post-cure equipment ... and that the finish is not only beautiful, but long-lasting.

Nicaragua sings '60s refrain to U.S.: Give peace a chance

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — Nicaragua called on America Saturday to "give peace a chance," following the creation of a 15-member committee of Latin American nations to verify fulfillment of a Central American peace plan.

"Nicaragua is totally committed" to the plan, Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Miguel D'Escoto said. "It remains to be seen what types of pressures the United States will be exerting on some people in order for them not to comply, but we hope...the Reagan administration will give peace a chance in Central America."

The five Central American foreign ministers met with representatives from the eight Contadora and Contadora support groups of Latin American nations for the first day of talks Saturday that were scheduled to resume Sunday.

D'Escoto said continued U.S. aid to Nicaraguan rebels, known as Contras, would make realization of the peace plan "very difficult."

"We are not trying to isolate the United States despite the fact that they have acted the way they have acted in Latin America and, at this moment, against Nicaragua," D'Escoto said. "Everyone in Latin America and certainly Nicaragua wants to have good relations with the United States."

Foreign Minister Ricardo Acevedo of El Salvador said the verification committee will be the "spinal column" of the peace plan, signed Aug. 7 in Guatemala City by the presidents of the five Central American nations — El Salvador, Nicaragua, Honduras, Guatemala and Costa Rica.

The peace plan calls for cease-fires, an end to foreign aid to the Nicaraguan rebels and leftist guerrillas in El Salvador, general amnesties and democratization in the region.

Alfonso Cabrera, Guatemala's foreign minister, said Nicaraguan rebel leader Alfonso Robelo had agreed to ask the United States to put on stand-by any new aid packages to his guerrillas. The move by the U.S.-backed rebels was seen as an effort to encourage Nicaragua's left-wing Sandinista government to carry out democratic reforms in line with the peace plan.

"We do not fear that Nicaragua's acceptance of democratization is a tactical move. I think that we are all acting in good faith," Cabrera said.

The Sandinistas have refused to hold direct talks with the Contras, saying they will only negotiate with the United States, which is providing $100 million in aid to the rebels.

D'Escoto said "pressures from the North (the United States) are trying to frustrate this accord." He did not say, however, if the Sandinistas would change their position and negotiate with the Contras or if Nicaragua would include the Contras in a general amnesty.

"Since the North is so powerful we want the United States to accept the fact that we are not their backyard and that we are nations as free and sovereign as they are," D'Escoto added.

Foreign Minister Ricardo Acevedo of El Salvador insisted that leftist rebels in El Salvador must start a dialogue with his government "using the Guatemala plan as a point of reference and the framework for negotiations."

The Salvadoran rebels have said they would enter negotiations with the government but have not accepted all of the provision of the Guatemala peace plan.

Each government is responsible for negotiations with the rebel groups operating in its country.

The foreign ministers said the committee's immediate task will be to create teams of observers from neutral countries to check progress in demilitarizing the region by a Nov. 7 deadline.

Cabrera said the verification committee can also consider the possibility of calling in an international peace-keeping force, a measure which is not included in the peace plan.

The committee will also have a key role in overseeing the democratization processes scheduled to begin Nov. 7 that includes scheduling elections and allowing press freedom.

"We are all conscious of the difficulties that must be sorted out and the challenges that must be confronted to consolidate peace in Central America," said Foreign Minister Simon Alberto Consalvi of Venezuela in his welcoming speech at the opening session.

The committee includes the five Central American nations, the four nations making up the Contadora Group and four in the Contadora Support Group, and one representative each from the Organization of American States and the United Nations.

Sandinistas unlikely to meet with U.S.-backed Contras

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The left-wing Sandinista government gave no indication Saturday that it would to change its long-held position and meet directly with U.S.-backed Nicaraguan rebels.

During his weekly Face the People meeting, President Daniel Ortega said the United States is continuing to support the rebels, known as Contras, despite efforts by Central American leaders to bring a cease-fire to the 5-year-old civil war. He has stated that because of the U.S. aid, his government will negotiate with the United States but not with the rebels.

On Friday, six Contra leaders at a meeting in El Salvador said they would be willing to talk with the Sandinistas but insisted they would not lay down their arms until Nicaragua is on an "irreversible path to democracy."

Also Saturday, the pro-government newspaper El Nuevo Diario said it will suspend publication indefinitely as of Sunday because of technical problems and a lack of supplies.

The closing of the privately owned El Nuevo Diario will leave Nicaragua with only one newspaper, Barricada, the official voice of the ruling Sandinista National Liberation Front. The government in June 1986 shut down the opposition newspaper La Prensa.

The Contras' offer to meet with Ortega's government came after the rebel leaders met with President Jose Napoleon Durate of El Salvador in that nation's capital of San Salvador.

Duarte suggested that the Contras and leftist Salvadoran guerrillas hold separate but simultaneous talks Sept. 15 with the governments they are fighting.

The Salvadoran guerrillas, who have been waging their own civil war since 1979, agreed earlier to the proposal.

The goal is to put cease-fires into effect by Nov. 7 under a peace plan signed Aug. 7 in Guatemala City by Ortega, Duarte and the presidents of the three other Central American nations — Guatemala, Costa Rica and Honduras.

During the Face the People meeting, Ortega said, "We are waiting for some gesture of the United States to endorse and respect the accords signed by the presidents in Guatemala."

He also said the resignation of Philip Habib as President Reagan's special Central American envoy means "the United States is not interested in the negotiations."

Ortega said Reagan's continuing endorsement of the Contras also means the United States has no intention of stopping aid to the rebels.

While not specifically rejecting the Contras' call for direct talks, Ortega's comments were viewed here as a reaffirmation of the government's position that it would talk to the United States but not with the rebels.

During a meeting with representatives of the Commission of Non-Aligned Countries on Friday,

Contra leader Alfonso Robelo

Ortega said, "We invite the Reagan administration to talk without any types of conditions."

Nicaraguan government continues to endorse the peace plan and has hinted that it may lift some of restrictions on civil liberties before Nov. 7 as a show of good will.

El Nuevo Diario was founded March 19, 1980, by former workers of La Prensa who left that publication in a political split.

In a page one headline, the newspaper reported the suspension, saying it would not publish "until a date that we are not capable of setting."

"Our inventories and our machines have been giving out for many months, by using up the first and serious failures of the second," it said.

Later, the newspaper's assistant director, Danilo Aguirre, said El Nuevo Diario could resume publication Monday if it gets help from the government.

Sources at the newspaper, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said El Nuevo Diario was losing the equivalent of $300,000 a day. The paper has a staff of about 300 and lists its circulation at around 100,000.

Guatemala names rights ombudsman

GUATEMALA CITY, Guatemala (AP) — An 80-year-old lawyer has assumed the delicate task of being the first human rights ombudsman in Guatemala, where political killings and disappearances have been common for years.

Gonzalo Menendez de la Riva was named to the post by Congress. He was sworn in last week for a five-year term in a Guatemala City ceremony attended by President Vinicio Cerezo and high officials of his administration.

The new Guatemalan constitution, which went into effect Jan. 14, 1986, following Cerezo's inauguration as Guatemala's first civilian president since 1970, created the job and gives the official broad responsibilities.

They include investigating complaints of human rights violations; investigating and reporting behavior by officials that is harmful to the interests of individuals; recommending changes in administrative behavior; publicly denouncing actions that violate constitutional rights; and initiating legal or administrative procedures in "pertinent cases."

It also says that the person who holds the job is to be available every day and at all hours.

Menendez de la Riva is a respected, independent lawyer who is a former member of the Supreme Electoral Tribunal and a former Supreme Court justice. Some criticism has arisen, however, of choosing a man his age for what would appear to be such a demanding post.

But Congress could find only one other candidate for the post, a reflection of Guatemala's human rights history. Newspapers carried numerous stories quoting lawyers and other potential candidates as saying they weren't interested.

Menendez de la Riva is in a tenuous position. If he goes too far, he could irritate the military and the country's far right. If he does little, he could fuel criticisms by human rights groups that the Cerezo administration is not doing enough about human rights violations.

Judges and lawyers, particularly those in cases involving labor, human rights or anything that the far right considers even faintly liberal, have been among the main targets of political killings in Guatemala. Union activists, peasant leaders, teachers, university students and other professionals have also been targets.

An estimated 100,000 people have been killed in political violence between the left and right in Guatemala since 1964, according to some human rights organizations.

The Mutual Support Group, an organization of relatives of people who are missing, estimates there have been 40,000 politically related disappearances in the past 20 years.

In 1981 and 1982, during an wide-scale army campaign to put down a leftist insurgency, political killings averaged at least 300 a month, jumping as high as 500 in some months, the group said. The country became an international pariah and lost most of its foreign aid.

The Guatemalan government gave up U.S. military aid in 1977 rather than agree to improve human rights. The military denies responsibility for the abuses.

But many people have claimed in recent years that they or other witnesses saw their relatives abducted by security forces.

ACHES and GAINS

If you're unfit and have finally decided to exercise, but the thought of suffering through (literally) gut-wrenching pain doing sit-ups, or bouncing on your feet until your calf muscles scream with agony, relax.

The old axiom, "No pain, no gain," and Jane Fonda's exhortations to "go for the burn" are considered antiquated ideas in the fast-developing fitness world.

Doctors and fitness experts agree, that safe and effective workouts should feature non-sadistic routines with adequate warm-up and cool-down periods — at least 10-20 minutes of toning exercises.

A WHOLE new field of aerobic exercises — low impact and non-impact aerobics — which emphasize less impact on the feet and less rapid stretching and quick motions have arrived. And none too soon, according to a recent study by the National Injury Foundation which reported a 43 percent injury rate among aerobics students and a 76 percent injury rate among aerobic instructors.

"Now that aerobics has been around for 10 years, we have the data to show what the effects on the body actually are," said Randi Cole, a certified aerobics instructor, CPR instructor, and fitness trainer and consultant at The Midlander.

"No pain, no gain is a lie," Ms. Cole said. "Pain is your body's mechanism for telling you there is a serious problem."

Low-impact aerobics require the practitioner to keep one foot on the floor at all times while non-impact aerobics requires both feet to remain on the floor at all times.

HOWEVER, THE non-impact concept contradicts the idea of aerobics according to Ms. Cole. "Non-impact basically means not landing with the entire force of your body on your feet. Aerobics means "with oxygen," she said. "But by keeping both feet on the floor, it's almost impossible to get enough oxygen to get the heart rate up. The movements are not strenuous enough."

Ms. Cole suggests low-impact aerobics for a safe, effective workout. "Non-impact aerobics, which include bicycling, swimming and rowing, are good as pre-aerobic exercises or exercises for the unfit.

"However, to get the full benefit of an aerobic exercise without the impact of landing with the full force of the body on the feet, low-impact aerobics is best," she said.

MS. COLE said that in low-impact aerobics, bouncing and jumping on the balls of the feet are exchanged for exaggerated arm and upper body movements. "Also, once the heart rate is up," Ms. Cole said, "it can be kept up by employing weights."

"In low-impact aerobics, the emphasis is on getting the heart rate up to the training range by using the big muscle groups — especially in the legs — rather than using the momentum of jumping," according to Tara Mardis, a certified low-impact aerobics instructor at the Body Shop for Women.

Nicaragua sings '60s refrain to U.S.: Give peace a chance

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — Nicaragua called on America Saturday to "give peace a chance," following the creation of a 15-member committee of Latin American nations to verify fulfillment of a Central American peace plan.

"Nicaragua is totally committed" to the plan, Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Miguel D'Escoto said. "It remains to be seen what types of pressures the United States will be exerting on some people in order for them not to comply, but we hope...the Reagan administration will give peace a chance in Central America."

The five Central American foreign ministers met with representatives from the eight Contadora and Contadora support groups of Latin American nations for the first day of talks Saturday that were scheduled to resume Sunday.

D'Escoto said continued U.S. aid to Nicaraguan rebels, known as Contras, would make realization of the peace plan "very difficult."

"We are not trying to isolate the United States despite the fact that they have acted the way they have acted in Latin America and, at this moment, against Nicaragua," D'Escoto said. "Everyone in Latin America and certainly Nicaragua wants to have good relations with the United States."

Foreign Minister Ricardo Acevedo of El Salvador said the verification committee will be the "spinal column" of the peace plan, signed Aug. 7 in Guatemala City by the presidents of the five Central American nations — El Salvador, Nicaragua, Honduras, Guatemala and Costa Rica.

The peace plan calls for cease-fires, an end to foreign aid to the Nicaraguan rebels and leftist guerrillas in El Salvador, general amnesties and democratization in the region.

Alfonso Cabrera, Guatemala's foreign minister, said Nicaraguan rebel leader Alfonso Robelo had agreed to ask the United States to put on stand-by any new aid packages to his guerrillas. The move by the U.S.-backed rebels was seen as an effort to encourage Nicaragua's left-wing Sandinista government to carry out democratic reforms in line with the peace plan.

"We do not fear that Nicaragua's acceptance of democratization is a tactical move. I think that we are all acting in good faith," Cabrera said.

The Sandinistas have refused to hold direct talks with the Contras, saying they will only negotiate with the United States, which is providing $100 million in aid to the rebels.

D'Escoto said "pressures from the North (the United States) are trying to frustrate this accord." He did not say, however, if the Sandinistas would change their position and negotiate with the Contras or if Nicaragua would include the Contras in a general amnesty.

"Since the North is so powerful we want the United States to accept the fact that we are not their backyard and that we are nations as free and sovereign as they are," D'Escoto added.

Foreign Minister Ricardo Acevedo of El Salvador insisted that leftist rebels in El Salvador must start a dialogue with his government "using the Guatemala plan as a point of reference and the framework for negotiations."

The Salvadoran rebels have said they would enter negotiations with the government but have not accepted all of the provision of the Guatemala peace plan.

Each government is responsible for negotiations with the rebel groups operating in its country.

The foreign ministers said the committee's immediate task will be to create teams of observers from neutral countries to check progress in demilitarizing the region by a Nov. 7 deadline.

Cabrera said the verification committee can also consider the possibility of calling in an international peace-keeping force, a measure which is not included in the peace plan.

The committee will also have a key role in overseeing the democratization processes scheduled to begin Nov. 7 that includes scheduling elections and allowing press freedom.

"We are all conscious of the difficulties that must be sorted out and the challenges that must be confronted to consolidate peace in Central America," said Foreign Minister Simon Alberto Consalvi of Venezuela in his welcoming speech at the opening session.

The committee includes the five Central American nations, the four nations making up the Contadora Group and four in the Contadora Support Group, and one representative each from the Organization of American States and the United Nations.

Sandinistas unlikely to meet with U.S.-backed Contras

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The left-wing Sandinista government gave no indication Saturday that it would to change its long-held position and meet directly with U.S.-backed Nicaraguan rebels.

During his weekly Face the People meeting, President Daniel Ortega said the United States is continuing to support the rebels, known as Contras, despite efforts by Central American leaders to bring a cease-fire to the 5-year-old civil war. He has stated that because of the U.S. aid, his government will negotiate with the United States but not with the rebels.

On Friday, six Contra leaders at a meeting in El Salvador said they would be willing to talk with the Sandinistas but insisted they would not lay down their arms until Nicaragua is on an "irreversible path to democracy."

Also Saturday, the pro-government newspaper El Nuevo Diario said it will suspend publication indefinitely as of Sunday because of technical problems and a lack of supplies.

The closing of the privately owned El Nuevo Diario will leave Nicaragua with only one newspaper, Barricada, the official voice of the ruling Sandinista National Liberation Front. The government in June 1986 shut down the opposition newspaper La Prensa.

The Contras' offer to meet with Ortega's government came after the rebel leaders met with President Jose Napoleon Durate of El Salvador in that nation's capital of San Salvador.

Duarte suggested that the Contras and leftist Salvadoran guerrillas hold separate but simultaneous talks Sept. 15 with the governments they are fighting.

The Salvadoran guerrillas, who have been waging their own civil war since 1979, agreed earlier to the proposal.

The goal is to put cease-fires into effect by Nov. 7 under a peace plan signed Aug. 7 in Guatemala City by Ortega, Duarte and the presidents of the three other Central American nations — Guatemala, Costa Rica and Honduras.

During the Face the People meeting, Ortega said, "We are waiting for some gesture of the United States to endorse and respect the accords signed by the presidents in Guatemala."

He also said the resignation of Philip Habib as President Reagan's special Central American envoy means "the United States is not interested in the negotiations."

Ortega said Reagan's continuing endorsement of the Contras also means the United States has no intention of stopping aid to the rebels.

While not specifically rejecting the Contras' call for direct talks, Ortega's comments were viewed here as a reaffirmation of the government's position that it would talk to the United States but not with the rebels.

During a meeting with representatives of the Commission of Non-Aligned Countries on Friday, Ortega said, "We invite the Reagan administration to talk without any types of conditions."

Contra leader Alfonso Robelo

Nicaraguan government continues to endorse the peace plan and has hinted that it may lift some of restrictions on civil liberties before Nov. 7 as a show of good will.

El Nuevo Diario was founded March 19, 1980, by former workers of La Prensa who left that publication in a political split.

In a page one headline, the newspaper reported the suspension, saying it would not publish "until a date that we are not capable of setting."

"Our inventories and our machines have been giving out for many months, by using up the first and serious failures of the second," it said.

Later, the newspaper's assistant director, Danilo Aguirre, said El Nuevo Diario could resume publication Monday if it gets help from the government.

Sources at the newspaper, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said El Nuevo Diario was losing the equivalent of $300,000 a day. The paper has a staff of about 300 and lists its circulation at around 100,000.

Guatemala names rights ombudsman

GUATEMALA CITY, Guatemala (AP) — An 80-year-old lawyer has assumed the delicate task of being the first human rights ombudsman in Guatemala, where political killings and disappearances have been common for years.

Gonzalo Menendez de la Riva was named to the post by Congress. He was sworn in last week for a five-year term in a Guatemala City ceremony attended by President Vinicio Cerezo and high officials of his administration.

The new Guatemalan constitution, which went into effect Jan. 14, 1986, following Cerezo's inauguration as Guatemala's first civilian president since 1970, created the job and gives the official broad responsibilities.

They include investigating complaints of human rights violations; investigating and reporting behavior by officials that is harmful to the interests of individuals; recommending changes in administrative behavior; publicly denouncing actions that violate constitutional rights; and initiating legal or administrative procedures in "pertinent cases."

It also says that the person who holds the job is to be available every day and at all hours.

Menendez de la Riva is a respected, independent lawyer who is a former member of the Supreme Electoral Tribunal and a former Supreme Court justice. Some criticism has arisen, however, of choosing a man his age for what would appear to be such a demanding post.

But Congress could find only one other candidate for the post, a reflection of Guatemala's human rights history. Newspapers carried numerous stories quoting lawyers and other potential candidates as saying they weren't interested.

Menendez de la Riva is in a tenuous position. If he goes too far, he could irritate the military and the country's far right. If he does little, he could fuel criticisms by human rights groups that the Cerezo administration is not doing enough about human rights violations.

Judges and lawyers, particularly those in cases involving labor, human rights or anything that the far right considers even faintly liberal, have been among the main targets of political killings in Guatemala. Union activists, peasant leaders, teachers, university students and other professionals have also been targets.

An estimated 100,000 people have been killed in political violence between the left and right in Guatemala since 1954, according to some human rights organizations.

The Mutual Support Group, an organization of relatives of people who are missing, estimates there have been 40,000 politically related disappearances in the past 20 years.

In 1981 and 1982, during an wide-scale army campaign to put down a leftist insurgency, political killings averaged at least 300 a month, jumping as high as 500 in some months, the group said. The country became an international pariah and lost most of its foreign aid.

The Guatemalan government gave up U.S. military aid in 1977 rather than agree to improve human rights. The military denies responsibility for the abuses.

But many people have claimed in recent years that they or other witnesses saw their relatives abducted by security forces.

ACHES and GAINS

If you're unfit and have finally decided to exercise, but the thought of suffering through (literally) gut-wrenching pain doing sit-ups, or bouncing on your feet until your calf muscles scream with agony, relax.

The old axiom, "No pain, no gain," and Jane Fonda's exhortations to "go for the burn" are considered antiquated ideas in the fast-developing fitness world.

Doctors and fitness experts agree, that safe and effective workouts should feature non-sadistic routines with adequate warm-up and cool-down periods — at least 10-20 minutes of toning exercises.

A WHOLE new field of aerobic exercises — low impact and non-impact aerobics — which emphasize less impact on the feet and less rapid stretching and quick motions have arrived. And none too soon, according to a recent study by the National Injury Foundation which reported a 43 percent injury rate among aerobics students and a 76 percent injury rate among aerobic instructors.

"Now that aerobics has been around for 10 years, we have the data to show what the effects on the body actually are," said Randi Cole, a certified aerobics instructor, CPR instructor, and fitness trainer and consultant at The Midlander.

"No pain, no gain is a lie," Ms. Cole said. "Pain is your body's mechanism for telling you there is a serious problem."

Low-impact aerobics require the practitioner to keep one foot on the floor at all times while non-impact aerobics requires both feet to remain on the floor at all times.

HOWEVER, THE non-impact concept contradicts the idea of aerobics according to Ms. Cole. "Non-impact basically means not landing with the entire force of your body on your feet. Aerobics means "with oxygen," she said. "But by keeping both feet on the floor, it's almost impossible to get enough oxygen to get the heart rate up. The movements are not strenuous enough."

Ms. Cole suggests low-impact aerobics for a safe, effective workout. "Non-impact aerobics, which include bicycling, swimming and rowing, are good as pre-aerobic exercises or exercises for the unfit.

"However, to get the full benefit of an aerobic exercise without the impact of landing with the full force of the body on the feet, low-impact aerobics is best," she said.

MS. COLE said that in low-impact aerobics, bouncing and jumping on the balls of the feet are exchanged for exaggerated arm and upper body movements. "Also, once the heart rate is up," Ms. Cole said, "it can be kept up by employing weights."

"In low-impact aerobics, the emphasis is on getting the heart rate up to the training range by using the big muscle groups — especially in the legs — rather than using the momentum of jumping," according to Tara Mardis, a certified low-impact aerobics instructor at the Body Shop for Women.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

While Midland women are always generous with their time and money when it comes to benefits, it was especially gratifying to see the large turnout on a hot summer weekend afternoon for the Ci Omega Alumnae Association's seventh annual style show and brunch.

The ballroom of the Petroleum Club was filled to capacity for the occasion, and held on a Saturday, it gave many of the city's career women an opportunity to attend. Red helium balloons anchored to baskets carried out the "Up with Midland" theme, and the background piano music of Shirley King added a further upbeat note to the proceedings, which benefitted the Developmental Disabilities Center.

Fashions from local merchants were featured, and as Natalie Lake, chairman for the second consecutive year, pointed out, "It's really not necessary to fly out of Midland to buy clothes." She guaranteed that every woman present would find at least one outfit during the run of the show she would want.

Among those seen enjoying the benefit were Edna (Mrs. William H.) Pryor, who entertained two tables of friends, including her granddaughter, Kathy (Mrs. Trent) Timberlake; Douthea (Mrs. Bill) Shaner with her daughter-in-law, Michelle (Mrs. Russell) Shaner of Fort Worth; Carol Ann (Mrs. Lynn) Hunt and daughter Kippy; Kathryn (Mrs. Max) Crunk, Genevieve (Mrs. Harry) Libby, Sue (Mrs. Ed) Harris and Melanie (Mrs. Kent) Johnston.

KIMBERLY PORTELE, who became the bride of Donald Perryman Saturday in St. Ann's Catholic Church, was honored with several festive parties prior to her wedding day.

A miscellaneous shower was given by Hazel (Mrs. Vernon) Reichle at the Reichle residence, and a display shower was held at the home of Marie Bellomy. Co-hostesses for the latter party were Sara (Mrs. Cooper) Robbins, Ruth (Mrs. Cyrus) Gallick, Onie Dell McNeese, Doris Bruce and Lynn (Mrs. Darryl) James.

The couple were honored by the groom's mother, Irene Perryman, at the rehearsal dinner Friday at La Bodega Restaurant. Mary Jo (Mrs. Charles) King entertained with a bridal luncheon Saturday at Ranchland Hills Country Club.

The bride's mother, Evelyn Portele, hostessed the wedding reception at the Plaza Club.

SALLY KELLY recently returned from Washington, D.C., where she visited her son, Robert, who was working there this summer with the "George Bush for President" campaign. He has since returned to TCU for his senior year.

Sally and Robert attended the Bush Staff picnic, and Sally enjoyed a visit with former Midlanders Vice President Bush and his son, George. Sally relates it also was a fun experience to be seated at a table next to Nancy Reagan at Mr. K's Chinese Restaurant.

Among other highlights were a private tour of the West Wing of the White House, and tours of the Capitol, the FBI Building, the Smithsonian, and the awe-inspiring Vietnam Veterans Memorial. Sally also enjoyed a visit to George Washington's home, Mount Vernon, and Arlington National Cemetary.

Attending services at the Shrine of the Immaculate Conception, the largest Catholic church in the U.S., and a performance of the musical, "I Do, I Do," at a dinner-theatre in Alexandria, Va., were also among the high points of the week's trip.

ANN ALSTON and Eric Spencer, who were united in marriage Saturday in Austin's First United Methodist Church, were honored at a series of prenuptial parties in Midland, Sweetwater, Austin and Houston. Eric is the son of Midlanders Sharon and Dick Spencer.

The party whirl began in Midland with a brunch to introduce Ann to friends of the groom's family. It was hosted by Eric's mother, Sharon, his sister-in-law, Angela (Mrs. Greg) Spencer, and his grandmothers, Kay Moore and Maxine Spencer, in Sharon's home.

A Christian book shower was held at the home of Judy (Mrs. Charles) Golden. Co-hostesses were Betty (Mrs. Joe) Gilmer, Jessie (Mrs. Dean) Rowe, Jeanne (Mrs. Howell) Pardue and Linda (Mrs. Joe) Fussell.

The home of Roberta (Mrs. Charles) Fraser was the setting for a wedding display shower. Assisting in hostessing were Linda (Mrs. Johnnie) Brown, Cathy (Mrs. Allan) Cunningham, Barbara (Mrs. Carles) Gibson, Alice (Mrs. Don) McCombs, Wilma (Mrs. Kem) Merren, Paula (Mrs. Carl) Ramsey, Sue (Mrs. Larry) Scoggin, Chris (Mrs. Louis) Valdez and Ellen (Mrs. Bob) West.

A "Honey-Do" party was given for Eric by Joe Gilmer and his son, Mark Gilmer.

The groom's parents hosted the rehearsal dinner Friday evening at The Capital Club in Austin. Following the dinner, a bachelor party was hosted by the groom's brother and best man, Greg Spencer. The party was held on the Lone Star River boat as it cruised Austin's Town Lake.

Ann's grandmothers, Frances Alston and Alice Whitefield of Sweetwater, hosted the bridesmaids luncheon Saturday at the home of the bride's parents, Rita and Gary Alston. The wedding reception was held at The University of Texas Alumni Center.

Eric's parents are hosting a brunch today at the Embassy Suites Hotel for the Midland wedding guests.

AEROBICS

Ms. Cole said injuries occur when overzealous exercisers or instructors perform high-impact aerobics more than three times a week. "That is why the injury rate is so high for instructors. Many practice aerobics five days a week," she said.

At the health club where Ms. Cole is affiliated, instructors are aware of the danger of teaching high-impact aerobics and alternate teaching high-impact aerobics with low impact aerobics classes.

"Everyone should vary their exercise program," Ms. Mardis said. "After a year of doing high-impact aerobics, switching to a low-impact program will be more beneficial than continuing with the high-impact program. Different muscles will be used."

Also, statistics are beginning to show that low-impact aerobics are better altogether than high-impact aerobics. "More moderate, low-level training for a longer duration of time is better for fat-burning and training than high-level training for short durations," said Roni Perry, a certified instructor and low-impact aerobics teacher at Central YMCA.

"It's also much easier to sustain exercise for longer periods of time at the moderate levels of training," she said, "but low-impact aerobics does not mean low-intensity. Some of our most advanced people are in the low-impact class."

Ms. Perry said the low-impact classes are being modified into two levels — beginning and upper — and more props are being employed in workouts. "We are using hand weights and tubes (elastic bands) to add resistance and increase the heart rate," she said.

Ms. Mardis said that the health club where she works just began scheduling low-impact aerobics this past year. "We had so many requests for the class that I went out-of-town to take the continuing add hours to become certified in low-impact aerobics," she said.

Consumer awareness has brought about the demand for low-impact aerobic classes, according to Ms. Cole. "People are taking responsibility for their health and demanding safer, effective fitness programs," she said.

"Aerobic instruction used to be a monologue," Ms. Cole said. "People could put on a video tape or stand behind an instructor who never looked at them, and just follow along with the instructions.

"Now aerobics has advanced from a monologue to a dialogue, with the students and teacher communicating," Ms. Cole added. "A result of this dialogue is that the teacher is aware of individual peculiarities and can modify exercises for those who can't, or shouldn't, do certain exercises."

For those who took-up low-impact aerobics to avoid the occupational hazards of leg, knee, and ankle injuries, the bad news is that now more upper body injuries, including upper back and shoulders, are being reported.

Jerry L. Cochran, M.D., AAOS, FACS, certified American Board of Orthopedic Surgery, of Midland, said he doesn't officially recognize a difference between low- and high-impact aerobics. "We are still dealing with the same forces of gravity," he said.

"The whole philosophy of aerobics was designed to get the breathing up to the 70 percent maximum pulse rate by exercising the large muscle groups, arms and legs, which are still exercised by low-impact aerobics. The possibility of injury still exists."

A recent study of 3,000 instructors, published in "Women's Sports and Fitness," found an injury rate in low-impact aerobics as high as those for regular aerobics — only the injuries are different.

"In fact," according to Dr. Jean Rosenbaum, inventor of the artificial pacemaker and director of the American Aerobics Association (AAA), "I don't think low-impact aerobics is best for everybody, especially for very fit people. But it is easier on the joints of the 27 percent of the American population who are 50 or older."

But even with a high rate of injury, Cochran said the benefits of most aerobic exercises outweigh the risks.

"There's no doubt that the increased ability to burn oxygen is beneficial to overall health. Exercise also improves the complexion and keeps you younger. Age does not cause deterioration of the body as much as poor diet and lack of exercise causes deterioration — or what we call aging."

Rosenbaum agrees with the importance of health benefits from aerobics. "There's a substantial effect on mental problems, too. Depression and anxiety states lessen because of the discharge of endorphins, a sort of natural morphine in the brain, once we get up to an aerobic level."

This may be why people say they feel better when they take aerobics classes. "People often take aerobics because they want to look better," Ms. Cole said. "However, they continue taking the classes because they say they feel better."

AAA studies have also shown that aerobics have beneficial effects on high blood pressure, osteoporosis, heart disease and menstrual cramps, among other conditions.

Cochran cites the most important factor in preventing injury is the surface used for exercise. "Forget about exercising on hardwood floors. Exercise on a carpet with a pad under it and wear proper shoes," he said. "Shoes should be replaced on the average of every 6 to 8 weeks because the shoes lose their ability to absorb the impact of the feet hitting the floor."

Cochran also agrees with the necessity to alternate exercise programs. "In order to be effective, different types of exercise should be used," he said. "For instance, if you dance three nights a week, alternate that with bicycling or running, or other types of exercise."

As for "going for the burn," Cochran said "that is particularly outmoded."

"When people push themselves so hard in aerobics — until they are breathing hard, and pouring off sweat — then they reach an anaerobic phase where instead of burning off fat tissue, they are burning glucose."

The solution to avoiding the anaerobic phase is in practicing more moderate types of exercise for longer durations. Doctors suggest framing 15-20 minute aerobic peak periods, during which your heart should reach and maintain 60 to 80 percent of your age-specific maximum pulse rate. (Subtract your age from 220 and multiply the result by 0.6 and 0.8 to get your "target" pulse range.)

Forget about "no pain, no gain," and "going for the burn," and as for the dreaded sit-ups, Ms. Cole said, they too, "have become obsolete."

Health plan should emphasize fitness over diet, expert says

Hearst News Service

If Virginia Beal gets another life, she wants to live it as an exercise physiologist.

It's an odd wish, coming from a woman who is near the end of a long and distinguished career in nutrition education and research. The professer emeritus of nutrition at the University of Massachusetts took her first class in nutrition 50 years ago. Despite this abiding interest, Beal makes a forceful argument that we all pay less attention to diet and more to exercise.

Today's major killers — heart disease, stroke and cancer — are complex diseases arising from any number of factors, including heredity, gender, hormonal production, diet, smoking and exercise, Beal says. Because there is little one can do about many of these factors, much attention has been focused on the ones that can be controlled — diet, exercise and smoking.

However, Beal says, "I'm not really sure that diet is as big a factor as indicated."

Turning to the issue of heart disease and diet, Beal says, "No one quibbles that plasma cholesterol is related to heart disease. The question is, how does diet relate to plasma cholesterol? That's where the debate lies."

It is true that some people cannot adjust their own production of cholesterol to compensate for a diet high in cholesterol. But others can, she says, arguing that it is not fair to restrict their diets as well.

"Should everyone in the population be put on low-cholesterol diets? And what about those who are not sodium sensitive? Why put them on a diet they don't like?"

Beal says the research evidence on nutrition and health is contradictory and inconclusive. She says the widespread adherence to recently developed dietary guidelines may be damaging to the profession in the end.

"We need to stop promising people all kinds of long-term results we can't really prove," she argues. "What we're doing to the public is unfair. These very careful rules imply that changing the diet is going to improve the health of everyone, but there is no evidence that it will. When it worked for less than half, should it then be recommended for the entire population?

"We may be losing our credibility in the long run. We are implying that we will improve their health if they follow a particular diet. If you look for evidence, I don't think you'll find it."

Beal cites separate studies in which people on low-fat and low-cholesterol diets had lower mortality rates from heart disease. However, the overall mortality rate of the study population remained the same because of an increase in the number of deaths from cancer.

However, Beal says, "We can decrease our emphasis on diet if we increase our emphasis on exercise."

Beal says there is good evidence to back up this assertion. Exercise has been shown to be effective in weight control, bringing down high blood pressure, increasing the healthy form of cholesterol levels in the blood and in preventing osteosporosis.

"We ought to call exercise another nutrient and in this case, we can start with children," she says.

Beal says children should not be put on diets while they are growing without very careful monitoring. Instead, they need to be encouraged to find forms of exercise they will enjoy throughout their lifetime. She calls on schools to switch their emphasis from competitive team sports, as these activities exclude too many children.

"People don't play football in their 40s. Exposing children to individual sports such as walking, swimming, biking, is one of the best things we could do.

"We need to put a tremendous emphasis on physical activity for all groups, particularly children," Beal says.

Doctor suggests changes in sports

Copley News Service

Most children's sports aren't designed to benefit kids.

They exist to benefit parents and adult coaches.

But that can — and should — change, according to Dr. Robert Koslow of the University of Alabama.

First, the physical education professor says winning should be de-emphasized, and having fun should be stressed.

Therefore, eliminate championship games.

Second, Koslow says kids should be taught the basic skills and then be allowed to "officiate" their own games.

Third, he says sports such as soccer and racquetball should be offered to kids who aren't as big as basketball players.

Finally, Koslow says the overemphasis on winning is causing an incredible amount of serious sports injuries to kids.

Dishwashers necessity of life for some, nuisance for others

Associated Press

A year ago Dorothy Yoder's dishwasher, freezer and television set all died at the same time.

"We went without a TV all summer and still haven't replaced the freezer, but we had a new dishwasher in a week," the Norwalk, Conn., resident said.

Shirley Mathews' Stamford, Conn., condominium came with a dishwasher.

"We run it once a year, whether it needs it or not," Mathews joked, adding that she has so few dirty dishes it's hardly worth turning the appliance on.

That's the way it goes with dishwashers. Recent investigations by the Association of Home Appliance Manufacturers confirmed that for some people a dishwasher is one of life's necessities, while for others it might just as well be used as a high tech planter.

One AHAM study found that only 47 percent of American households are equipped with electric dishwashers, compared with ownership figures of over 95 percent for other major appliances. Furthermore, ownership of dishwashers reached 40 percent in the late 1970s and has increased only slightly in the last decade.

Curious about these figures, the industry commissioned another study to learn more about dishwashing habits and attitudes toward the appliance some people can't do without and others won't have in the kitchen.

They found out most women dislike washing dishes by hand because the task is repetitive and time consuming.

Focus group research suggests dishwashers have not achieved greater sales for several reasons. "It's not a top-priority purchase. Microwave ovens and VCR's, which participants perceive as costing less, using less space and benefiting the entire family," are further up on many shopping lists, an AHAM spokesman said.

Once a family has had a dishwasher, however, these quibbles rapidly diminish. They regard the appliance as a time-saver (up to 3.8 hours a week, according to AHAM) and a good place to store the day's accumulating dirty dishes.

Couple begins farm-sitting as new, successful career

ITHACA, N.Y. (AP) — It's relatively easy to find someone to water the geranium and feed the dog while you're on vacation.

But what if you also have 300 acres of crops and 100 cows on a modern farm with complex milking equipment, an array of machinery, computerized feed formulas and other high-tech wonders?

When Ed and Paulie Drexler were forced to leave dairy farming two years ago, they remembered the trouble they had finding someone to mind their farm when they were taking a trip in 1960. So they began a new and successful career: farm-sitting.

Farm-sitting is doing a farmer's daily chores.

The young couple, who live in a house they built on 54 wooded acres in the town of Fabius, near Syracuse, believe their occupation is unique.

"As far as we can tell, no one else has ever heard of anyone doing what we do as a profession," Ed said. "Farmers might be able to get help from neighbors for a short period of time but it's tough to find someone who could fill a void for a week or two."

The Drexlers have worked on numerous farms in the Northeast.

"We will milk in Tahiti if someone there pays our air fare," Paulie said with a laugh. "Seriously," she added, "we go anywhere."

Their business is booming. They are booked for this summer and fall, and February 1988 is taken, too. Many people make reservations months and even a year in advance, Ed said.

The Drexlers said they draw deep satisfaction from helping farmers get a much needed escape from their grinding daily chores.

"Every time the phone rings, it's exciting because we know somebody out there needs us, and we try to schedule our time to help them get away," Ed said. "When we arrive at a farm, we get comments such as 'Where have you been the past 20 years?'"

The Drexlers are graduates of Cornell University, where they majored in animal science. In 1978, they bought their first farm — with 62 cows and 200 acres of cropland — in St. Johnsville in Montgomery County.

Their herd was designated the most improved in Montgomery County in 1980. The Drexlers also were named the New York Farm Bureau's "Outstanding Young Farmers" that year.

They sold the farm in 1981 — because of its poor soil quality — and moved to Pompey near Syracuse, where they bought a farm with 165 cows and 600 acres of cropland. But they experienced problems with the herd and sold the farm in 1985. It was shortly thereafter that they started the farm-sitting service.

The business soon brought in more jobs than they could handle.

"The first year we were turning down about five to six jobs for every one we could take," Ed said. "This year, we are booked 100 percent from the last week of June to Christmas."

When two of their three children are out of school, the Drexler family travels together and moves right into the house of the farmer who hires them.

"We have a camper, but we soon found out that the farmers wanted us to stay in their homes. We take care of everything, including watering plants and feeding cats and dogs."

Vacationing can give love life a lift

Copley News Service

If your love life needs a lift — take a vacation.

A recent survey shows that business executives who take a holiday break feel better about what goes on in bed.

According to the survey, 50 percent of execs who hadn't taken a vacation reported sexual problems.

But of those men who had taken off, only 30 percent reported having a limp love life.

The survey was conducted by a British hotel chain and shows that 60 percent of executives feel their lives are overstressed.

But despite that finding, almost half admitted they hadn't taken a vacation in more than a year and weren't planning one.

Pollster David Sandkey of the Crest Hotel chain claims a few days away from the grind can do wonders for every area of your life.

Special how-to course takes aim at marriage

By CAROL DEEGAN

NEW YORK (AP) — When it comes to marriage, Margaret Kent means business. In fact, it is her business.

Kent is a Miami lawyer who specializes in taxation, international law and divorce law. She also teaches a course for women on how to get married.

Since 1969, more than 400 clients have completed her course and, she says, every single one of them has gotten married — most within two years.

Her clients come in all shapes and sizes, and from all kinds of social and economic backgrounds. Many are in their early 30s, Kent said in an interview here.

But she doesn't let everyone into her course. There's a waiting period for those newly divorced or widowed, to allow for an emotional transition from marriage to being single.

AND KENT says she'll accept only those women who are willing to "deal in reality."

And what is that reality?

- That love and marriage are too important to be left to happenstance.
- That competition is fierce.
- That women shouldn't expect magic.

She says, "if you want anything else in life, you know you have to work for it, not wait for Santa Claus. The same is true when seeking a husband.

"The odds were greatly in your favor during your teen-age years, but if you are past 25, the odds are increasingly against you. You cannot sit around like a beached whale, waiting for the tides to come in. All you'll get is dead fish and seaweed."

Kent says mental attitudes are important. To women who want to get married, but who don't believe it could happen to them, she says: "Look around you. Is every married woman you see 18 years old, thin and beautiful? Of course not. So, what do they know that you don't?"

SHE SAYS the answer lies in self-awareness, male-awareness and the application of some basic psychology.

Kent says choosing a man for marriage requires considerable effort.

"To marry well, you need to make good use of your time and abilities. Since you cannot sift men through giant colanders, you must sift them through your life by learning about them. Then you can pick and choose the best," she says.

Kent is the daughter of an American father and Cuban mother. Her dreams of a diplomatic career ended when Castro seized power in Cuba in 1959 and her mother's large family arrived in Miami from Cuba needing assistance.

It wasn't until 1967 — after finishing graduate school in Mexico and working as a language teacher in Miami — that her thoughts and plans zeroed in on getting married.

ONE OF her evening students in a Spanish language program was George Kent, a lawyer and psychiatrist who had a number of Spanish-speaking patients and clients. She says Kent asked her to be his translator.

"As an attorney, George had a number of female clients who had been left by their husbands after long marriages were dissolved and were distressed about their prospects. As a psychiatrist, George had a number of patients who were single women and despondent over their marriage chances. As I worked with George, I realized that there was a pattern to these marriage problems and their solution.

"By this time, I had fallen in love with George. I decided to turn these patterns into a strategy and use them to catch him."

She says she put her plan into effect in September 1968. They were engaged on Valentine's Day in 1969 and married that June.

As a result of her experience, she put together a marriage course for six of her friends, and they each married about six months after the course ended.

SHE STARTED teaching her course in 1969. As word of her successful approach spread, she began lecturing on the subject.

The course material was privately published in 1985 in a paperback edition that sold for $95. The book came with a money-back guarantee if the purchaser had not married within three years. Kent, who has sold 2,000 copies of her manual, says that, so far, she has yet to refund any money.

Now a publisher has come out with a hard cover version of the book titled, "How to Marry the Man of Your Choice."

Kent's husband died in 1979. She began law school in 1980, graduated in 1983, and became an attorney in Florida. She met Robert Feinschreiber, a tax expert, on Dec. 30, 1981. They started dating 18 months later and were married on Dec. 30, 1984.

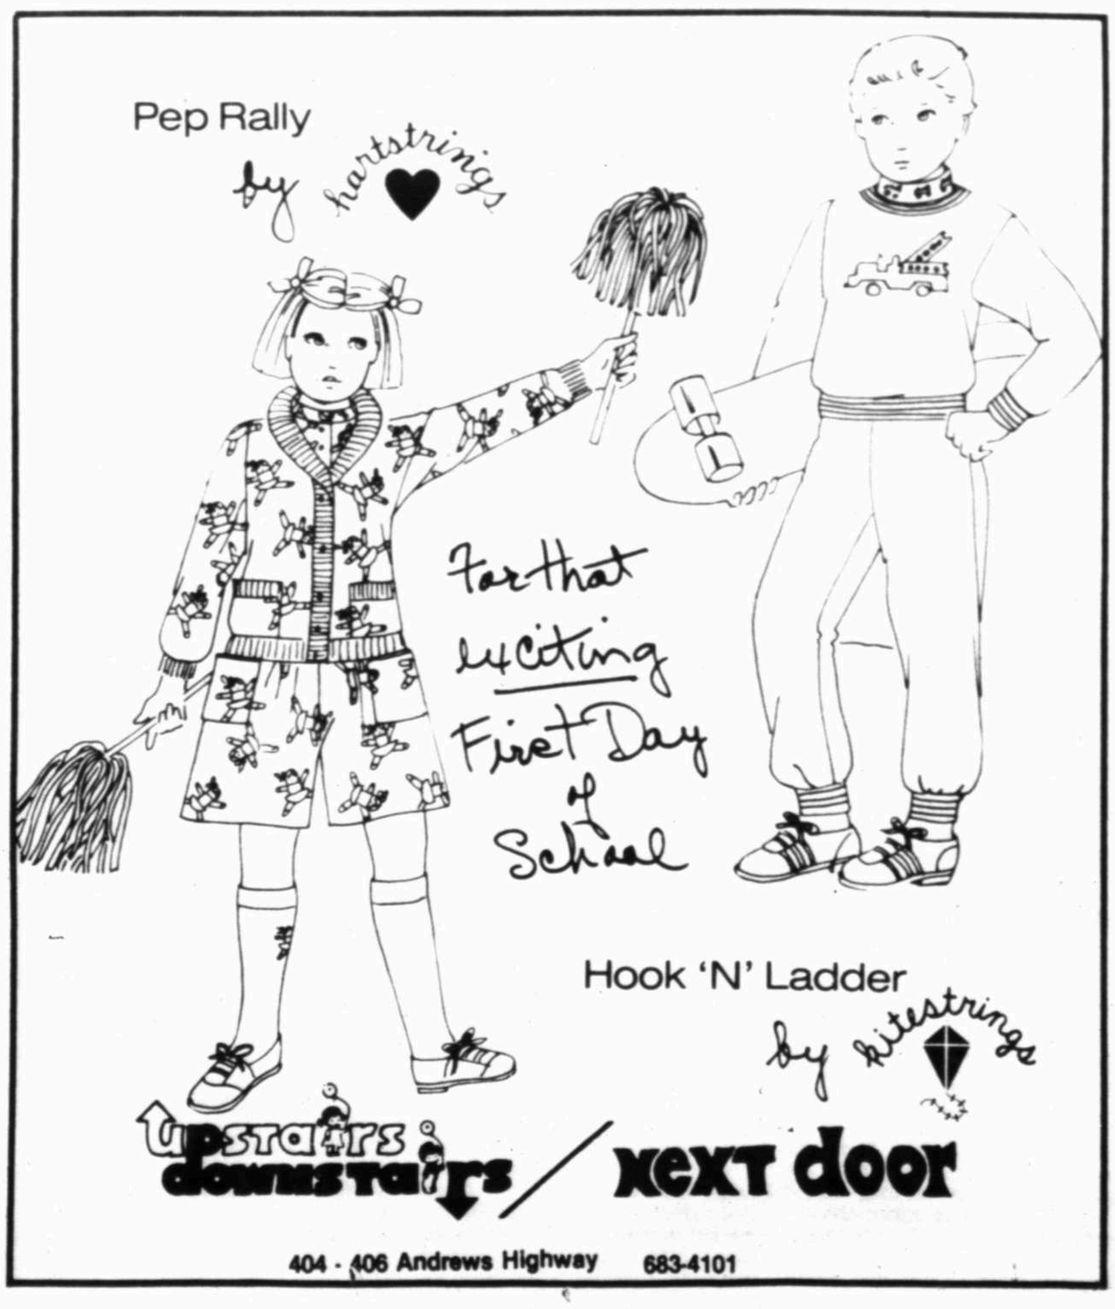

Kent says she applied the techniques of her course to meet and marry Feinschreiber — and he knew it. "He is so smart he sensed it."

Life in the fast lane leads to boredom

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

I call it the fast-forward generation. Never in my lifetime have I seen such an acceleration of life. By contrast, their parents are people who spent the first 20 years of their lives sitting around whining, "There's nothing to do." Anticipation was the only thing that kept them alive.

Not today's young people. Some are millionaires at 20, have written their memoirs at 21 and have traveled around the world by the age of 30. The ones considered underachievers are juggling careers, marriage, parenting and planning for their retirement.

Marriage is given 15 minutes to become comfortable, create bonds and make the earth move. If it doesn't, it's history.

A job is given three months to fulfill long-range goals, challenge creative talents and pave the way for financial independence.

It's ludicrous. A pretty young friend of mine in her early 30s said the other day, "I'm thinking of a face-lift." I moved in for a closer look. "Aren't you being premature?"

She pointed to a small line around her eye. "You call this premature?"

She was talking to a woman with a neck with more rings on it than a 200-year-old redwood. "I'm saying gravity hasn't even started with you yet. Don't be in such a hurry to put a car up on blocks when the tires aren't even bald."

"I hate your metaphor," she said and drifted away.

A few days later, I was leafing through a magazine where there was a before and after picture of a woman who went from a size 5 to a size 3 by liposuction. Was she serious? I've cooked bigger turkeys than her "before" picture.

As this generation races down the road of life, crashing through traffic lights and ignoring stops, it made me wonder what I was doing at the age of 20. Did I have my goals in place? Was I in sync with my timetable? Was success within my grasp? Actually, at age 20 my priorities were getting angora fuzz off my good black skirt and shaving my legs every 24 hours.

The most astonishing fact is that sexual activity has peaked and now is on the decline among young people. Today's generation explored it at an early age and since then has been saturated with sex on TV, novels, films and magazines. We've done everything but choreograph it.

It's sad somehow that the No. 1 malady in this country is boredom. We're back to a generation sitting around whining, "There's nothing to do."

The difference is they've done it already.

Future washing machines will use ultrasonic waves

Copley News Service

In the near future, clothes will be laundered in same way that diamonds are now cleaned, thanks to Tokyo-based JAC, which has designed a washing machine that cleans by using ultrasonic waves.

Here's how it works: Bubbles are produced when ultrasonic waves collide with air injected into the washing machine's water.

While the gadget isn't qiote ready for market, a prototype at a Japanese research laboratory is working well.

Currently, opticians and jewelers use smaller version of ultrasonic wave machines to clean eyeglasses and jeweiry.

JAC hasn't priced the device for consumers yet, but company officials guess it would initially cost about $1,000.

Anthropologist finds heirlooms

Copley News Service

It was just 1,231 years ago now that Mayan priests lined up at the altar beneath the Great Hieroglyphic Stairway of the temple we call Pyramid 26, in the ancient Mayan city of Copan in western Honduras.

The priests gathered, we are told, to draw blood from their Mayan king known as "Smoke Shell" so that his temple might be properly dedicated.

This story is carved in stone there for all to see, according to Princeton anthropologist William Fash and his trusty student aide David Stuart.

Stuart has found the actual flint spearheads — each carved with seven profiled faces — several stingray spines, and the spiny oyster shell that priests used to draw the king's blood.

In fact, there is still some dried blood inside the shell.

These artifacts were buried beneath the altar, along with two large jade figurines carved into shapes of human and supernatural beings.

Fash and Stuart are confident the jade pieces are heirlooms rather than bloodletting tools because they are hundreds of years older, dating back to the Early Classic Period of Maya from 300 A.D. to 600 A.D.

Heart attack leads to device for calculating foods' fat content

By JACK SEARIES
Hearst News Service

In 1980, John Borer was 53, apparently in good health and holding down a high-pressure job as senior vice president and general counsel of a major financial concern. Little did he know that a few years later his corporate career would be over, he'd be recovering from major surgery and he and his wife would invent a device that might help others avoid the health problems that had threatened his own life.

To Borer's amazement, when he went for his annual checkup in 1980, his doctor told him he'd suffered a "silent" heart attack.

"It's as serious as any other kind of heart seizure," Borer says. "In fact, it's especially dangerous because you don't feel any symptoms. You don't realize you're in danger."

Looking back on it, Borer is convinced that the stress of his work — he's since left the job with Financial Corp. of America, owner of American Savings — helped bring on the attack. His family background — his father and three uncles had died of heart disease — didn't help, either.

Borer and his wife, Pat, are now convinced that diet probably was a major factor. Aside from keeping his sodium intake down, he'd never made much effort to avoid the fatty, cholesterol-laden foods that are generally conceded to be culprits in artery blockages and heart disease.

"Whatever the cause, it turned out that I needed a quadruple bypass. And, fortunately, the operation was a success."

Afterward, Borer was reasonably conscientious about walking and doing other exercises, but he and Pat were surprised that the doctors hardly said a word about proper diet.

Pat, who had been trained as a nurse but had never gone into the profession, did some research and discovered that the American Heart Association recommended that "fat calories" ought to make up less than 30 percent of the total number of calories a person consumes. She found, too, that the average American's diet is more than 40 percent fat.

It was time, the Borers agreed, to put a lid on John's fat intake. First, it would help strengthen his cardiovascular system; second, it would help him take off weight.

"In my research," says Pat, "I was highly impressed by the theories of Covert Baily, a biochemist who urges people to cut down on fat in their diet while building a 'lean body mass' with exercise."

Unfortunately, Pat soon discovered it was practically impossible for a layman to determine the fat content of most foods.

"I finally found the formula," she notes. "It's grams of fat times nine divided by total calories. Naturally, there was no way the average person could figure this out every time he did his food shopping."

Pat, who has designed several products that she markets by mail, asked their son-in-law Mike McCauley, an engineer, to help her develop a plastic wheel that could calculate a food's fat content almost instantaneously.

The result, Fat Finder, debuted in May. By lining up an item's grams of fat on the inner disk with its calories on the outer disk, the percentage of fat calories appears in a window.

Obviously, one glaring difficulty in using Fat Finder is that a lot of the food found in supermarkets doesn't specify its fat or caloric content. Pat says the information can be found on the labels of about 60 percent of the items and that the information about most other foods can be learned by doing some independent research.

John says he's feeling fine these days. He credits reduced fat intake, exercise and getting away from the corporate life.

Several years ago, the Borers moved to Rancho Santa Fe, Calif., north of San Diego. In Encinitas, within walking distance of their home, they've established a company called Vitaerobics, through which they're marketing Fat Finder and an accompanying booklet by Pat, "30% Fat ... What's That?"

John says they've sold several thousand combinations of the calculator and the booklet at $5.95 plus $1 for postage and handling. The calculator alone can be had for $3.95. The Borers are also producing a jumbo-size wheel for classroom use. Vitaerobics' address is 4403 Manchester, No. 107, Encinitas, Calif., 92024.

Fat-finding tips given

Hearst News Service

In "30% Fat ... What's That?" the booklet that accompanies her Fat Finder calculator, Pat Borer offers some of the shopping and food preparation techniques she's used in helping her husband recover from a heart attack. Some samples:

- If you don't know or can't determine the content of a food, don't buy it.
- Cut down on sugar by using fresh fruit juices when baking or cooking.
- When you cook dried fruit, remember it has three times the sugar concentration of fresh fruit. Before cooking, soak and drain water twice. Save the juice and use for flavor when cooking other foods.
- Use carob or cocoa powder for chocolate flavor. Both are high in potasssium and low in sodium.
- Bake turkey breast for sandwiches. Remove skin before baking. Baste with a natural-flavored seltzer or a mixture of light fruit juice and Perrier. Carbonation keeps meat moist while pulling out fat.
- The higher the grade of meat, the more fat it will have. Prime Grade has the most, Choice Grade less and Good Grade least of all.
- Shop for items as low in sodium and as high in potassium as possible.
- Decrease fat absorption when cooking meat or fowl by placing on a rack. Do not let it sit in its own juice.
- Avoid luncheon meats because of high fat and sodium content.

Caution urged in exercising

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. (AP) — Just can't seem to jog that one extra mile? Will another aerobic workout put you down for the count? Sounds like you might be a victim of the dog days of summer.

Scorching temperatures and high humidity create uncomfortable conditions for conducting even daily routines, let alone strenuous physical activity. During heat waves, many serious exercisers feel like they just are not performing up to par.

Well, rest easy. There are some tried and true tricks to beating the heat while staying in shape, according to a Penn State University physiologist. And the longer it stays hot, the more you will find yourself adjusting to the heat.

Dr. W. Larry Kenney, assistant professor of applied physiology in Penn State's Noll Laboratory for Human Performance Research, said it is essential to pace an exercise regimen to allow for "acclimatization" to heat and high humidity.

"On really hot and humid days, or after days away from exercising, it pays to consciously slow down your exercise routine," Kenney said. "If you jog, either run fewer miles than normal or take longer to run the same number of miles.

"You just cannot do the same amount of running in the summer as you do in the winter without acclimatizing," he said.

"A good plan to follow is if you run an average of one hour each day in comfortable weather conditions, then only run about 20 minutes on an 80-degree, humid summer day. The next day, run 30 minutes. Gradually increase the time so that within a week or so, you will get back up to an hour of jogging."

Acclimatization, according to Kenney, is the gradual, "natural" adjustment of the body to heat. Acclimation, on the other hand, describes the process of "artificially induced" heat tolerance. Both terms describe how the body adapts to exercising in the heat, or how we regulate our internal thermostats.

After acclimatization, the body generally maintains a lower temperature. The heart rate lowers and the body sweats more during exertion, which keeps the body cooler.

Heat cramps also are reduced after acclimatization. They often occur when the body losses too much fluid, which prevents muscles from contracting normally.

"Humidity generally plays a larger role than heat does in making the environment uncomfortable," Kenney said. "On humid days, the body feels hotter because sweat doesn't have an opportunity to evaporate from the skin. Sweating helps to keep the body cooler, especially on dry, hot days when perspiration evaporates more easily.

Kenney said it takes most people approximately four to seven days to acclimatize to hotter, more humid climates if they continue their normal physical activity each day.

You've got class! That's right, but it's not style and fashion we're talking about. It's time to go back to school, only this time you're off to college and you've got class after class to choose from.

There are many adjustments that must be made during the transition from high school to college life. Learning to be a college student is much more than learning to do your laundry and ordering pizza in the dormitory. There is a great amount of responsibility that goes with entering college, from assembling your own class schedule to managing your time wisely.

Even though you have filled your closet with the latest fashions and trends in an effort to fit in with the crowd, there is a lot more to college life than you might imagine.

To begin with, you know you are going to be a freshman again. But that is just the beginning.

You also will be dealing with classes that begin before the sun comes up, enduring three-hour labs that seem to be in Greek, attending monster classes of hundreds of students and realizing that your entire identity has been diluted to a nine-digit number — your social security number. Some of your teachers will never learn your name and some won't even care if you come to class.

THE RESPONSIBILITY of your education will be placed directly on you and what you choose to do. You will have freedom to do things you have never done before, and it's up to you to make the right decisions. And if you make the wrong decisions, you flunk.

From the very beginning, it is important to realize that your first year of college will offer you the freedom for many new opportunities. There will be new friends, new places, new knowledge, new schedules. This is particularly true if you attend a school away from your home town or live in your own apartment or the dormitory.

Finding a delicate balance between your new-found freedom and your responsibility is a crucial part of the road you must travel for the next few years.

Don't panic. This doesn't mean your freshman year will be a total disaster. With a little research, you can breeze through your first year of college and, who knows, you might even find classes that you like.

CLASS

Although college may seem a little intimidating at first, never be afraid to ask questions, and don't feel silly for asking them either. You are new at this. It would be much sillier to wander around trying to figure everything out on your own and wasting your time. This is particularly true when deciding on the courses you will take.

Selecting the right courses can be one of the biggest dilemmas for freshman. Your choices can lead you down the road to academic success or the road to frustration.

Study your catalog carefully and ask a faculty advisor or counselor about anything you don't understand. Some students take this book too literally and get bogged down in all its requirements. Others don't pay enough attention to what the book says they need to do. The catalog explains many of the things you will need to know, and some things that possibly no one else will tell you.

BE SURE to keep a copy of the catalog for the year you enter the university. Most schools allow you to follow the graduation requirements stated in the catalog you enter under, therefore sparing you of additional or changed requirements made while you are attending school.

Most freshman begin by signing up for the basic, introductory classes that sound like grown-up versions of their high school classes, but in reality, are quite different than expected. But understanding what the courses are and when to take them can make this burden much easier.

Counselors and faculty advisors are available at most colleges and universities to help students understand what the class is about, but often they cannot give you any advice about the professors who will be teaching these classes.

OFTEN, THE instructor is the crucial difference between loving a class and doing well at it, and hating a class and flunking it. For this reason it is advisable to talk with upper classmen about which professors are the best and which should be avoided. Some schools have class-evaluation forms written by the students available or offer advisory guides at the dormitories.

The best professors usually are well-known, so finding them shouldn't be to much of a problem.

If you already have decided what you major will be, don't be to anxious to finish all of your prerequisites in the first semester. There will be plenty of time to complete them. Plan a manageable, yet challenging course load.

THE MISTAKE many freshman make is signing up for a course-load that is to heavy — either too many hours at one time or too many difficult hours at once. College isn't like high school where taking six to eight classes was no problem.

There will be many new things to explore and new people to get to know. Leave yourself time for all of the adjustments you will need to make. Getting in over head with too much class work can lead to unnecessary failure and discouragement.

If you have not decided your major, that's OK too. There is plenty of time and there are plenty of required courses for most majors to fill your first semester schedule. This will give you time to look around for a major you will enjoy. Scan the catalog for courses that look interesting, and if something intrigues you, try it out.

Experimenting with various fields of study can broaden your knowledge, be fun and may possibly even uncover latent interests and talents.

But, if while experimenting or just in your regular scheduling of classes you find there a course that just isn't for you — get out.

Most schools have a two week adjustment period — commonly called drop/add — when classes can be dropped or added without a penalty to your grade point average or being recorded on your transcript.

ALTHOUGH DROPPING a class, and adding a replacement if you choose, may incur an additional fee and entail a struggle through a lot of "red tape," it is well worth the effort to avoid a disastrous experience. If the course is too hard, too easy or just not interesting, get out while there is time. Don't stay with your original schedule just because you pre-registered for it.

If you have over scheduled yourself, you should reevaluate your schedule and drop a class you can pick up the next semester. Remember, the semester usually starts out slowly, then all of a sudden you have two mid-terms, a research paper and a presentation due at the same time. If time seems to be a problem in the beginning, it most likely will not get any better.

In addition to your class schedule, freshman need to consider their social schedule and how the two will work together. Time management is tricky for freshman, and most discover that their outside activities have to take a back seat until they have adjusted to the college pace of study.

If you will be working in addition to going to school, this also should be carefully considered when planning your class schedule. If you can, leave yourself some time to "hang out with the group," so that later you don't regret your busy schedule.

So as you head down the road to your college education, remember that a little research on your own and talking with other students can make the difference between a great freshman year and a year of misery and disaster.

Well, what are you waiting for? Go get busy. You've got class.

Preparing for, taking SAT, quizzes, tests

Copley News Service

For students from grammar school to high school, the end of the summer signals the beginning of the back-to-school, test-terror blues. Whether it's a spelling quiz, a midterm or the Scholastic Aptitude Test, taking any test means butterflies in the stomach, sweaty palms and pressure for many teens.

Because of these fears, many students spend too much time worrying about a test and not enough time preparing for it.

BEFORE THE TEST

PLAN AHEAD: Start from the first day of class to take well-organized notes on the lectures in outline form. Develop a personal shorthand so you can take accurate notes quickly.

As you read textbooks and other materials, underline the main points of each section with a highlighting pen. Then, summarize these points in your own words in the margin.

Don't just memorize information. Make sure you understand the principles involved and how you solved the problems before going to the next chapter.

THE SAT

The SAT, alias "stress and tension," evokes a unique fear in many college-bound high school students. When the dreaded SAT is looming, students welcome all the help they can get. Here are some test tips geared especially for the SAT:

Bring a sharp mind, but make sure the points of your No. 2 (soft-lead) pencils aren't too sharp — they might break.

Know the directions that precede each test section so you won't have to spend even one second rereading them when you are taking the test.

Don't gorge yourself with a 10-course breakfast the morning of the test — blood will rush from your head to your stomach, and you think with your head, not your stomach. But do eat breakfast.

There is a penalty for an incorrect answer, so don't guess wildly. However, if you can eliminate at least one choice that you know is wrong, the odds are in your favor of getting the correct answer.

Make sure you don't goof on the answer grid — check it every fifth question to make sure the number of your question matches the number on your grid.

TEST TIPS

If there are essays on the test, read each one through and put your thoughts in the margin. Then, organize the notes into a logical sequence before you start writing the essays.

Since the point value assigned to a question usually reflects the number of points you are required to make in your answer, spend the most time on questions that have the most point value.

Always leave extra space after you answer an essay, in case you think of additional information later.

Always look over the entire test before you hand it in.

Applying early for financial aid recommended

WOOSTER, Ohio (AP) — Starting early is a big advantage in applying for college financial aid, says an administrator.

The junior year in high school is not too soon to start learning about the application process, says Diane Gorrell, director of financial aid at the College of Wooster here.

She has these suggestions for high schoolers and their parents:

- When you start to write away for college information, ask for financial aid materials as well. Start the financial aid process by January of your senior year.
- Watch for information sessions each January when financial aid officers of local colleges visit area high schools.
- Keep copies of your financial records, like tax returns on part-time jobs, as well as other official documents.
- Talk to a financial aid officer; find out if the school you're interested in has any specific guidelines or deadlines. Ask about work-study plans and obligations for paying back loans.
- Ask about grants and scholarships (which do not have to be paid back or earned through work).
- Be aware of all the options; don't limit your choice of a college because of the cost. Financial aid packages and work-study awards can vary from school to school.
- If you have applied for admission to a specific college, don't wait to hear about the admission decision before applying for financial aid. Send in the form about the same time as your entrance application.

The fall collection of Oscar de la Renta designs will be informally modeled Monday and Tuesday at Julian Gold, 4610 Garfield.

Job search work

Copley News Service

If you're looking for a decent job, get ready for writer's cramps, stiff necks and sore ears, because today's average job-seeker sends 1,100 letters and places 2,100 phone calls before finding a new position; plus, a job search averages five weeks per $10,000 of salary you expect to earn, according to John Cain of Scientific Systems, a Connecticut-based computerized placement service.

Conducting a job search is like performing two years of work in a six-month time span because mergers and acquisitions have tightened the market.

Cain says if you can't write 50 or more query letters per week, forget it.

Proper nutrition necessary to maintain good health

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

Nutrition is important at every age level, but it is extremely important as persons grow older. Improper eating habits seem to reinforce some of the infirmities and disabilities that tend to accompany the aging process. They may also produce unwelcome symptoms and ailments which may be wrongfully attributed to aging.

You might not expect to find that poor nutrition is a major problem among the elderly, yet it is. Although there are many factors involved, probably the most common problem factor is that meny elderly people live alone. Many of them basically just lose interest in the mechanics of preparing and eating food. Recent studies indicate that of the elderly living alone, only ⅓ of those surveyed had eaten three meals during the day before the interview, and that 17 percent had no more than three of the basic foods required for a balanced diet.

It looks relatively simple, yet the selection, preparing, serving and sharing of food items is a complicated action. A person's economics, past experiences, values and associations play a vital role in a person's eating habits. When these factors are added to the mental, emotional and physical problems of the elderly, a simple task becomes a major problem for those living alone.

Eating is generally regarded as a social act. Memories of family and friends joining together for mealtimes are indelibly imprinted on the minds of most people. Sharing meals with others has been a very strong bond in family-friend relationships.

For many women, food preparation is often one of the mediums by which they have expressed love for a countless number of years. Cooking has been a way for women, and more recently some men, to channel their creative talents and energies. Cooking is an accomplishment that often mistifies a spouse and sparkes rave reviews.

Those who are accostomed to the role of cook feel robbed of their duty as they grow older. They often recollect their role nostaligically and are unable to reconcile themselves to the shrunken ritual of preparing a meal for just one person. Added to this factor is the non-motivational aspect of eating alone.

An older man living alone may have considerable trouble adjusting. He is conditioned to eating with others by past memories of family meals and enjoyagle times around the family dinner table. In addition, many men do not know how to cook.

Reeducation process for the elderly living alone may be neccessary. A woman may have to learn to prepare smaller amounts, or to freeze portions for a later time. Men, however, may have to start at the beginning and be taught the basics of cooking, shopping and use of the kitchen equipment. Clas s teaching these subjects frequently are offered at the Senior Citizens Center, YMCA and other non-profit social service agencies.

Individuals living alone may want to consider participating in the nutrition programs offered by Midland Senior Activity Center and Casa de Amigos. At noon Monday-Friday, a hot lunch is served to participants. The meal, consisting of a meat item, two vegetables, bread, fruit/dessert and milk is well-balanced and meets USDA requirements. For those who find cooking difficult and whose nutritional habits are poor, this may be a good way to eat a nurishing meal without having to prepare it while at the same time become more active socially.

A close watch should be kept on an elderly parent's or friend's eating habits who lives alone. A lessening of appetite or dentures may cause eating problems, therefore carefully monitoring of the regularity and content of the older person's meals is important. Many older people who seem to be in good health do not eat intelligently and are undernourished or malnourished in terms of the necessary intake of nutrients, vitamins and minerals.

Keep a close watch on the eating habits of these loved ones and friends by being persistent in voicing your concerns about good nutrition.

Seniors given tips on travel, pets, youthfulness

By LEONARD J. HANSEN
Copley News Service

Mature adults, age 55-plus, will find new recognition and discounts for travel, at least through the end of 1987, aboard the Greyhound bus system. The Greyhound Golden Savers Seniors Club is the new program, where qualifying adults need only present proof of identification and age at any Greyhound station to secure a cost-free membership card.

The new discounts for mature adults are 15 percent from any fare — including promotional fares — on the Greyhound route system. For example, the cross-country special fare of $59 is reduced with the discount, to only $50.15.

"Mature adults are important as patrons of our expanding system," we were told by Chester Fisher, director of market for Western Greyhound Lines. "Greyhound has now absorbed Trailways system, and this gives mature travelers an even greater selection of destinations and routes — and all of these are available at a fare discount."

Expansions in the program benefits for 55-plus age members is possible. "We are looking at other beneficial tie-ins, " stated Fisher. "We are already cooperating an a number of hotel programs," and it would seem the hotel accommodations might someday also be offered as discounts for members.

"If the program achieves success, as we hope it will, in these first months," Fisher said, "then it is possible the program will be made a permanent program for Greyhound Lines. With our increased service, our fine safety record, taking our passengers along scenic routes to their destinations, and the ease of traveling on our coaches, we are looking to be all the more service to our mature adult travelers."

Information on the new Golden Savers Senior Club may be secured from local Greyhound offices and the ticket facilities in terminals.

A PET TO PET

If you're a senior citizen, particularly one living alone, you might want to consider having a pet — for companionship and safety. And, if you will consider adopting a pet Ralston Purina Co. may start you off with the pet and a batch of supplies — all at no cost to you.

Five thousand senior citizens around the nation have already adopted companion pets through the Purina Pets for People Program. Qualifying age is 60. More than 100 animal shelters in 90 cities from coast-to-coast are participating in the adoption program. They conduct orientation sessions for potential adopters, match qualifying seniors with a cat or dog that suits their needs and interests, and make follow-up calls to the new pet owners.

Ralston Purina donates $100 to the shelters for each pet adopted through the program, to fund the adoption fee, inoculations, spaying or neutering, and a pet-care kit that includes collar, leash, food and water bowl and a starter supply of Purina brand pet food.

Researchers study radioactive antibodies

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Radioactive antibodies may help combat cancer, according to University of Rochester researchers.

The technique directs cancer-killing doses of radiation at specific areas of tumors. Cancer researchers discovered the technique of using antibodies — natural agents that fight off infection and other diseases — to target cancer cells as the result of a study of how very small pockets of cancer multiply in the body.

By using radioactive antibodies, the researchers say they can reach tiny "microregions" of cancer.

DEAR ABBY

Wife torn up over husband's clothes

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: In your column in the Niles Daily Times, you said, "No one has the right to dispose of another person's property." That is what my husband and I have been discussing in reference to his work clothing.

I think I should dispose of his clothing when it's tattered and torn, and my husband feels that I have no right to do this. Let me go further and explain that he never throws anything away — he will wear trousers that require a safety pin to keep the fly together, and shirts with holes in them. I should add that he dresses this way only around the house and yard; when he goes anywhere, he looks nice and neat.

I don't think he should look like a slob while working around the house and yard. (Sometimes our friends casually stop by.) He contends that he's "comfortable," and should be able to wear whatever he wants to wear — and dispose of it when he wants to. I told him that if Abby agrees with him, I will never toss out a thing of his again. — MRS F. IN NILES, OHIO

DEAR MRS. F.: If your husband wants to wear torn shirts around the house and yard, back off. But trousers with a safety pin to keep the fly together — never! It's an open or shut case.

DEAR ABBY: I think I have good reason to wonder who my real father is. I am now 17, and was named after my father's best friend. I look enough like him to be his son, which I think I am.

My parents and this man and his wife have been close friends for years, and I have put two and two together and think there must have been some wife swapping years ago.

Should I come right out and ask? If so, whom should I ask? My parents, or possibly the man I think is my "real" father? — WHO AM I?

DEAR WHO: The person to ask is your mother. If you closely resemble this family friend for whom you were named, it must be apparent to others, so this question will not come as a surprise to anyone.

DEAR READERS: I don't know whether round robin letters qualify as "correspondence" in the "Guinness Book of World Records," but according to assistant editor Cyd Smith, the longest sustained correspondence on record to date is one of 75 years — from Nov. 11, 1904, between Mrs. Ida McDougall of Tasmania-Australia, and Miss R. Norton of Sevenoaks, Kent, England, until Mrs. McDougall's death on Dec. 24, 1979.

Another fascinating entry in the "Guinness Book of World Records": The shortest literary correspondence on record was between Victor Marie Hugo and his publisher, Hurst and Blackett, in 1862: The author, who was on holiday and eager to know how his new novel "Les Miserables" was selling, sent the following message to his publisher: "?"

The succinct reply: "!"

(For Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding," send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054.)

Study: Husbands, wives look alike

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Science is lending support to the old belief that married couples eventually begin to look alike.

Couples who originally bore no particular resemblance to each other when first married had, after 25 years of marriage, come to resemble each other, although the resemblance may be subtle, according to a new research report.

Moreover, the more marital happiness a couple reported, the greater their increase in facial resemblance.

The increase in facial similarity results from decades of shared emotions, according to Robert Zajonc, a psychologist at the University of Michigan, who did the research.

In the study, people were presented a random array of photographs of faces, with the backgrounds blacked out, and were instructed to match the men with the women who most closely resembled them. Two dozen of the photographs were of couples when first married; another two dozen were of the same couples 25 years later, most taken around the time of their silver wedding anniversary.

All the couples in the photographs were white, lived in Michigan or Wisconsin and were between 50 and 60 years old at the time of the second picture.

THE YOUNG couples showed only a chance similarity to each other, the study found, while the judges found a definite resemblance between the couples who had been married a quarter-century. While the resemblances were not dramatic — some seemed to involve subtle shifts in facial wrinkles and other facial contours, for instance — they were marked enough that the judges were able to match husbands and wives far more often when the couples were older than when they were younger. And the resemblances were greater in some couples than in others, the study found.

The study, done by Zajonc with his graduate students Pamela Adelmann, Sheila Murphy and Paula Niedenthal, will be published later this year in the journal Motivation and Emotion.

Zajonc (pronounced ZI-onz), in explaining the findings, holds that factors such as similar diets — and thus deposits of fatty tissues — may contribute to the resemblance but are not crucial: when the photographs were evaluated for facial fat, the older couples were found to have less similarity than the younger ones.

Instead, he proposes that people, often unconsciously, mimic the facial expressions of their spouses in a silent empathy and that, over the years, sharing the same expressions shapes the face similarly.

Evidence for mimicry of expressions has come from research by Olaf Dimberg, a psychologist in Sweden, who measured the tension levels in the facial muscles of volunteers while they were shown photographs of various facial expressions. When the volunteers saw an angry face, for instance, their facial muscles mimicked the anger, often to a degree that was invisible but was measurable by electronic devices.

In an article published in 1985 in Science, Zajonc pointed out that the carotid artery that supplies blood to the brain forks at the neck, sending out a major branch to the face. As the facial muscles tense and relax, they tend to act as tourniquets on the veins draining blood from various parts of the brain, indirectly regulating blood flow and temperature in various brain areas. Zajonc's theory holds that this process helps to determine which chemicals are released in the brain.

In this view, which Zajonc conceded was speculative, a given facial expression — a smile, say — triggers the brain chemicals that evoke the associated feelings, such as happiness. Thus, when people mimic their spouses' facial expressions, they also evoke the same emotions, thus empathizing all the better.

"Facial mimicry allows a truer empathy because it triggers the same inner state," Zajonc said. "Couples can understand each other much better when this happens."

One sign that such empathy has been going on, in Zajonc's view, is that people's fixed facial features begin to resemble those of their spouses as a result of sharing the same expressions so often. In support, he points to the finding in his study that those couples who were found to resemble each other most greatly after 25 years were also those who reported the happiest marriages.

OTHER EXPERTS agree that shared emotions could gradually sculpture the faces of a couple to become more similar, but they do not agree with Zajonc's explanation.

"Common life experiences over years and years can alter facial musculature and wrinkle patterns, leading to an increased resemblance, but there is no reason to believe that it has anything to do with blood flow to the brain," said Paul Ekman, a psychologist at the University of California Medical School in San Francisco, who is an expert on the muscles involved in emotional expression. His research has identified the specific configurations of the more than 100 facial muscles that compose each expression.

Meanwhile, though some researchers agree with Zajonc's basic finding about the resemblance in spouses' faces, none has proposed to test the adage that people likewise begin to resemble their pets.

Camp prepares teens to fight drugs, alcohol

By ROBERT LEE ZIMMER
Associated Press Writer

MONTICELLO, Ill. — The teenagers come to this unusual prairie camp to talk about drugs, sex — and themselves. Then they go back to their hometowns and help other teens stay out of trouble.

They are rich and poor; from industrial cities and farm villages; wearing designer shirts or tattered jeans. Still, camp officials say they share many of the problems of adolescence.

"We realize they can go out and do whatever they want and we can't stop them, so we just give them information and hope they'll make the right decisions," said volunteer director Mark Nelson of Mattoon.

"Now, they can talk to other kids who have been through the same things and see that they can make it too," he said.

About 750 high school students attend the three sessions of the Illinois Teen-Age Institute at Allerton Park, tucked between fields of tall corn and the Sangamon River, about three hours south of Chicago.

The focus of each weeklong camp is building self-esteem and leadership skills, then showing the teens how they can deliver the message about clean living to their friends at home.

Presentations by the staff cover topics ranging from drug and alcohol abuse to sexuality and divorce. Teens often meet in small groups to discuss each issue privately. They also can talk with the 50 counselors any time during the week.

"That's what makes this work," said Tony Rennard, camp director. "It's not just a presentation and then we go home."

Nelson says the camp, which has just completed its 13th year, has become a model for other states. This year it attracted a group from England interested in creating a similar program.

"We're not used to opening up — we tend to bottle everything up inside," said Seema Rajput, 17, who lives near London. "It's such a relief to share and realize you're not alone."

The camp is sponsored by the Illinois Alcoholism and Drug Dependence Association. Tuition is $185 but many participants receive scholarships from groups like the Illinois Sheriffs' Association and the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Nelson said.

On one sultry afternoon, the students filed into the huge, rustic dining hall for a family-style meal. An old phonograph played a scratchy version of "Wake Up Little Susie."

With the week nearly over, they gathered again in small groups to discuss what they would do when they got home: a clown presentation to alert younger children about drugs; after-prom activities to discourage drinking.

Brad Wiley, 16, a high school junior from Greenup, attended the camp last year, then returned this year to help newcomers. He said the most important thing he had learned was self-esteem.

"You talk to kids about their problems and tell them you don't want to see them doing drugs," he said. "You say, 'Take care of yourself, somebody cares.' It takes time to build their confidence, but then if they need you, they know you're there."

In spite of new trends, children still children

By PHYLLIS BATTELLE
Hearst News Service

NEW YORK — In the heady days of the late '70s, the dream of feminist-leaning mothers was to raise their children androgynously. Little girls were given trucks and fire engines to play with; boys were presented with dolls. The theory was that if sex role stereotypes could be eradicated, the path to true equality between the sexes would be smoothed.

As many parents learned, however, raising the consciousness of little people is sometimes a losing battle. My neighbor, Ruth, discovered that on the day she read a story to her 5-year-old, Amy, about a girl who decided to become a doctor instead of "just a nurse."

"But I don't want to be a doctor!" wailed Amy, rejecting liberation with the same gusto she used in rejecting inoculations. "They stick you with neeedles — ick!"

The family across the street from Ruth and Amy, meanwhile, was teaching 14-year-old Tom the values of unisex work patterns. Once a week, Tom was made to help his mom by vacuuming the house and mopping the kitchen floor. On Saturdays, he helped his father with outside jobs (stereotypically "man's work"), such as painting, mowing and chopping wood. The message he was meant to absorb is that male-female sex roles are interchangeable. The message he in fact learned, and told his parents, is that housework is a breeze compared with man's work — and he'd rather mop than chop.

"I THINK this damn sex role thing is backfiring," Tom's father warned his wife. "Tom doesn't know what he is." As Tom's mother explained to me later, "It didn't help that the homosexuality issue came out of the closet at the same time as the push for boys' rights to be sensitive, nurturing human beings. Fathers got scared if their sons weren't macho. They backed off."

But there was no backing away from little girls' aspirations to "have it all" — if that is what they wanted. And therein lies a tale of remarkable progress for young women, at least through the college years. While dozens of all-male colleges gave in to society's pressures for equality by admitting women (there are only three men's colleges in existence today), the all-girl colleges not only resisted the trend toward going coed, they are thriving. Educators who predicted female insitutions would have to admit men or perish, are amazed to see that there are still 115 women's colleges in the U.S. — and they're among the most heavily-endowed: Smith College led private liberal-arts schools in fund-raising last year, bringing in nearly $20 million, and Wellesley was a close second.

IT WOULD seem that, in excluding men, women's institutions are contributing to a polarization between the sexes, rather than fostering the feminist drive to wipe out sex-role stereotypes. The colleges, however, claim that they are paving the way toward true equality by offering women students majors in chemistry, economics, math and physics — career fields that women are "subtly discouraged" from entering at coeducational schools. (To back up that contention, a current study found that graduates of women's colleges in the late '70s were more than twice as likely to be admitted to medical schools as their peers from coed institutions.)

In spite of the progess of women's colleges, which attract the high-achievers among girls, sociologists and psychologists still question whether there is lasting merit in trying to teach young children to be androgynous (having the natural characteristics of both male and female). A study of nursery school children in 1979 concluded that anatomically, physiologically and psychologically, there is no neuter sex. From birth, a human is unequivocally a girl or a boy with feminine or masculine predispositions. And a newly-released Roper poll of youths between ages 8 and 17 seems to confirm that fact.

When asked what they wanted to be when they reached adulthood, 80 percent said they first wanted to go to college, and seven in 10 had already selected the career fields they wanted. Most of their aspirations fell along traditional male-female lines; e.g., 24 percent of girls elected to go into health care, compared with only 8 percent of boys. In the field of education, 13 percent of girls choose teaching, while only 2 percent of boys mentioned that profession. On the other hand, sports and athletics — "men's work" — were chosen by 10 percent of boys and no girls. Science and engineering attracted 8 percent boys and only 1 percent girls, and police, firefighting and aviation were cited by 6 percent of boys and no girls.

THE ONLY surprise in the "when-I-grow-up-I-want-to-be" poll was the reaction to careers in computers, one of the most highly touted, highly paid fields open to them. Only 3 percent of both boys and girls had any interest, which proves that regardless of sex or stereotype, American young people would rather interface with humans than machines — and that's a healthy sign.

Childhood asthma can be deadly

DENVER (AP) — Nearly 1,500 children in the United States die from the chronic disease each year and the death rate is on the rise, according to medical experts at the National Jewish Center for Immunology and Respiratory Medicine here.

The experts say children who have trouble adjusting to the disease are the most likely to die from an asthma attack. These children frequently:

- Have emotional disturbances, depressions and-or family problems;
- Disregard their symptoms;
- Use their asthma to manipulate others.

Doctors advise that parents of asthmatic children with such problems, or demonstrating such behavior, should seek medical and psychological evaluation and treatment for their children.

Center offers ex-spouses neutral ground

DALLAS (AP) — Without fail, at 6 p.m. every first, third and fifth Friday of the month, Bill Turner pulls up in a blue convertible to a house filled with toys and posters proclaiming "Kids Are People, Too."

Waiting inside is his 9-year-old daughter, Jennifer, who was delivered to the place by her mother, Pat, and stepfather, John Curtis, at 5:45 p.m.

Here, on the front porch of an old, two-story house in Oak Lawn, the children of divorced parents wait to be picked up by mothers and fathers who don't want to see, speak or be at the same place within 15 minutes of each other.

At Kids Xchange, everyone is on neutral ground.

"It's better than pulling into my ex-wife's driveway because I could always anticipate something tense happening," says Turner, a salesman for Tel Plus Communications. "We'd exchange a few words. Sometimes it would get nasty and emotional. It wasn't easy for Jennifer, either."

Turner and his ex-wife — who has custody of Jennifer — were married for five years when they divorced in 1979. Jennifer was barely a year old at the time. The couple has been using Kids Xchange — the only service of its kind in Dallas — for the past seven years. The cost is $30 for each exchange.

PAT, WHO remarried six years ago, says "the tension got severe" when her ex-husband used to pick up Jennifer at her Dallas home for a weekend visit. Worse, Jennifer would witness those confrontations between her parents, Pat says.

"It wasn't good for any of us. Not for me, not for Bill and more importantly, not for Jennifer. Through Kids Xchange, Jennifer has peace of mind and we all can carry on with our own lives," she says.

Ed Rodela, 43, the center's director and a psychologist, says children are often caught in a power struggle between divorcing parents. It was for that reason that 36-year-old Sarah Griego-Rodela, Rodela's second wife, started the Kids Xchange in 1982. Sarah had been having visitation problems with her ex-husband, Rodela explains.

Together the Rodelas have built their service, and added a second in Austin, into an agency that today gets referrals from divorce attorneys and family law judges. More than 200 divorced parents — several who live outside Texas and have to travel to Dallas to pick up a child for a visit — use the service in order to avoid words and fists during the exchange of a child from one ex-spouse to another.

Such confrontations witnessed by a child could lead to psychological problems for the youngster, Rodela says. "A child in such a case could start getting bad grades in school, develop behavioral problems and discipline problems. I remember a 4-year-old child who developed ulcers, another who had suicidal tendencies and several who became depressed," he says.

BECAUSE OF the service's growth, the Rodelas moved Kids Xchange out of their home and into its own headquarters last February. The house has two playrooms to accomodate the 40 youngsters between 18 months and 17 years old who are dropped off and picked up by divorced parents each weekend. In most cases, a child waits for 15 to 20 minutes before a parent arrives.

Kids Xchange also handles court-ordered controlled visits — cases in which the visiting parent is permitted to spend up to four hours with the child, but is not allowed to leave the premises. A kitchen is provided for parents to cook a meal. In supervised visits, a counselor accompanies the parent and child on trips to the zoo, a movie or McDonald's. Fees are $12 an hour with $3 tacked on for each additional child. The center also offers counseling to parents and children by one of three trained staff members.

"We're not a babysitting service or a day-care center," Rodela says. "We're neutral ground for parents who can't get along. There are no fights on our front porch and no put-downs are exchanged because our parents don't run into each other. If they do, they ignore each other or say 'Hello' and are on their way.

"Our main concern is always to protect the interests of the child. That's number one. We want to see the child react to a parent in a very warm, positive way," says Rodela, a former counselor with the Dallas County Family Court Services, which deals with cases involving parental conflicts over child visitation.

Almost all of the children dropped off at Kids Xchange are there because of court orders handed down by judges or attorneys who recommended the services to parents involved in visitation disputes, Rodela says.

JUDGE CATHERINE J. Stayman of the 305th District Court says, "It's tragic that the service is essential, but we're living in a day in which there are so many custody arrangements being made between separating or divorcing parents who are in a volatile situation and the child is trapped in the middle. The nature of the service is one that is very valuable to the court system."

Judge Merrill Hartman of the 303rd Family District Court agrees. He has ordered the use of the Kids Xchange in many cases.

"When the parents are divorced the most frequent occasion to see each other is around the exchange of the children. If there's a history of violence between the parents and the parents are using the exchange of children to torment each other, then we order them to use the service. It's a very effective remedy. It's sort of like not having a cat and a dog in the same room," he says.

When ordered by the court, Kids Xchange will be used until both parents agree "they've got their anger in control" Hartman says.

Linda Hahn, manager of the county's Family Court Services, an agency that handles evaluations of custody and visitation disputes for the courts, says Kids Xchange keeps parents' tempers cool.

"In one family I worked with, there was extreme physical violence throughout the marriage. And during the couple's separation, the violence continued," Ms. Hahn says.

SHE SAYS on more than one occasion, when the ex-husband went to his ex-wife's house to pick up his children for a visit, he dragged his ex-wife by her hair out of the house and then beat her on the front lawn in front of the children.

"The woman feared for her safety if he had any contact with her. So we set up a situation where he picked up the children from the Kids Xchange. It not only protects the adults, but also the children," Ms. Hahn says.

Robert McDermott and his ex-wife mutually agreed three years ago to use the service to exchange their 5-year-old son, Dillon. Since then, McDermott has picked up Dillon every other weekend. Before Kids Xchange, there was inconsistency in visits, he says. There also was a spat or two between the couple, he says.

"Both of us were experiencing bad feelings of the divorce every time we came into contact with each other and that was having an effect on Dillon," says McDermott, national marketing and sales director for Enviro-Med Clinics Inc.

"Using the place to exchange Dillon has been wonderful in that those feelings have been eased. I like the consistency and the lack of conflict. I can get along with the rest of my life and Dillon feels comfortable."

McDermott says he will continue to use the service until he and his ex-wife agree to meet on common ground when arranging visits with Dillon.

According to the American Cancer Society, one out of ten women in the United States will develop breast cancer sometime in her lifetime. It is currently estimated that over 37,000 wome die each year as the result of breast cancer.

Ninety percent of breast cancers are diagnosed by women or their physicians finding a lump in the breast. Women who are diagnosed with a lump large enough to feel have a 50 percent five year survival rate. A woman who is diagnosed as having breast cancer by mammography, before a lump can be felt, has a 97% five year survival rate and a 90% 10 year survival rate.

A mammgram can detect a cancer this small, ● even before it can be felt.

Appointments may be made by calling 561-9999

The Mobile Breast Cancer Detection Unit from Odessa Women's & Childrens Hospital will be in Midland on the Old Gibsons parking lot on Cuthbert St.

The American Cancer Society has established guidelines for mammography in asymptomatic women. (Women who have no symptoms of disease). Those guidelines have been adopted by the American Academy of Family Physicians, American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, and The American College of Radiology. THose guidelines are:

I. 35-40 years of age-One baseline mammogram.

II. 40-50 years of age-A mammogram every 1-2 years depending on breast type and risk factor.

III. 50 years of age and over-An annual physical examination and annual mammogram.

IV. Asymptomatic women under years of age with significant high risk factors should be examined at appropriate intevals. These risk factors include previous breast cancer and family history of cancer.

V. A symptomatic woman should have a mammogram at any age when she experiences a mass, nipple discharge, skin changes or unexplained breast pain.

A screening mammogram is an x-ray of the breast using extremely low dosages of radiation (usually comparable to dental x-rays) and is designed to find very early cancers.

A female technologist who i highly trained in mammography will perform the examination.

The charge for the screening mammogram is $50.00. The Unit accepts cash, check, Visa, Mastercard and American Express.

Approved by the American Cancer Society.

Texas trucker takes new track

Merchants goes for high profile

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Changing times could bring a new look to Texas trucking.

A sagging economy, intense competition, and the threat of deregulation has prompted at least one large intrastate trucking firm to announce this week that it is changing many of its ways of doing business.

With rates and routes regulated by the Texas Railroad Commission, trucking companies in Texas have traditionally operated secure in the knowledge that they would always have a share of the business without having to be aggresively competitive. The result was a conservative, low-profile approach to business. But that may be changing now.

"We're becoming more aggressive, more competitive and taking on a higher profile," said Bruce Boyd, vice president of inbound terminals for Merchants Fast Motor Lines, which serves Midland and surrounding areas from a major terminal at 3100 W. Kentucky. Boyd, who was in Midland to explain the new posture, said the trucking company was "changing with the market."

Merchants announced this week that it had engaged a public relations firm to take a hard look it the company from top to bottom and give it a brand new image and a higher profile.

He explained: "But we're no longer a 'good old boy' business, and we've had to take a hard look at our competitive positon and how we market ourselves. Our new strategy represents a radical change in trucking industry tactics."

One of the reasons Texas trucking industry is being forced to louk a new tactics is the soft Texas economy which has seen freight shipments fall off 18 to 24 percent statewide.

"We haul everything from caskets to nipples," said Boyd, "and makes our business track with the state economy."

Another reason is the invasion of interline carriers into traditional intrastate markets since Motor Carrier Act of 1980, which deregulated interstate trucking. Interlines that once turned in-state shipments to intrastate truckers

Congressional aides to tour Basin

Bob Parker to address field tour

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

If the petroleum industry has had harsh treatment in the halls of Congress, many in the oilpatch attribute it to misunderstanding and misconceptions surrounding the oil industry. Improving understanding and dispelling stereotypes in Congress is a challenge the West Texas Producers Forum has accepted.

Wednesday the Forum will play host to nine congressional aides, providing them a tour of Permian Basin oilfields and a briefing on the industry by Robert Parker, chairman of Parker Drilling Co. of Tulsa.

It is the third year the organization of 200 members has sponsored the congressional tour of the oilpatch. The field trips, funded by local independent oilmen, are mainly targeted at aides of those congressmen serving on the Ways & Means and House Energy and Commerce committees, where critical legislation affecting the oil industry is often formed.

Included in this year's field trip are aides of congressmen from Pennsylvania, Oregon, Utah, Illinois, Arkansas and Texas.

Parker

"We hope to provide them a realistic view of the oil industry and show them that it is not like the oil business they see on TV or the stereotypes they have come to know. We want to show them that a lot of us are young people, just trying to get by," said Charles W. "Bro" Seltzer, a spokesman for the Forum.

Seltzer said that since most of the congressional aides are in their late twenties and early thirties, the West Texas Producers Forum, comprised mostly of young independent geologists, producers, accountants, engineers and lawyers, in the oil industry, could help dispell the image of oilmen as "fat cats."

He said it was critical that aides be informed, because they are often the ones advising congressmen and passing on information and insight to them.

The three day agenda for the aides begins Wednesday with a tour of the Petroleum Museum and a visit to a Midland independent oil and gas company where they will be instructed in the process of oil and gas prospecting and fund raising.

The day will conclude with an address by Robert Parker, one of the nation's top drilling contractors and a former consultant to the Secretary of Energy during the first Reagan administration. He has also been a member of the National Petroleum Council and a member of the Committee on Public Issues of the American Petroleum Institute and continues to serve both Secretary of Interior Hodel and Secretary of Energy Herrington, when called upon.

Thursday, the tour will hear a speaker on tax policy and its effects on the independent producer, followed by a tour of a working rig and Core Lab. The day will conclude with dinner and Summer Mummers.

Friday, after a brief review of the field trip, the group will return to Washington.

Houston firm keeps nation cool

10 million Igloo coolers in use in U.S.

HOUSTON (AP) — Americans seeking relief from the heat of summer are most likely to dip into an Igloo.

From beaches to construction sites, the colorful plastic ice chests and water coolers bearing the Igloo name have been building a reputation now for 40 years for keeping cold things cold.

"We're the industry leader," says John Caldwell, vice president of sales and marketing for the Houston-based company, which was purchased Monday in a leveraged buyout by an investor group that included Igloo management. The company was formerly owned by Quaker Oats Co.

The newly formed Igloo Holdings Corp. will include First Boston Corp., senior management of the two companies and a group of four Houston investors identified only as Iceman Associates.

"This transaction gives our company a tremendous opportunity to considerably expand our already significant consumer franchise," said Jonathan H. Godshall, chief executive officer of Igloo.

Caldwell estimates as many as 10 million Igloo products are in use today. Igloo's chief competitors are Coleman and Thermos.

"This is a fun product. When I'm traveling and I run into people and they say, 'I've got one. It's a great product.' You always get a good smile. I enjoy that," Caldwell says.

But the chests and water jugs are building an even more loyal following among people who credit the products with saving their lives in situations that were anything but fun.

Steve and Lynn Kelly of Aurora, Colo., were on vacation in May, driving through a remote section of Utah when their car rolled over, collapsing the roof.

"The roof of the car stopped over our Igloo cooler," Mrs. Kelly said. "The state patrol said if the cooler wouldn't have been there, the car would have been on my head. Our Igloo came out without a scratch. Even the bottles inside did not break."

Igloo files are filled with letters from other grateful customers, like Judy Davis of Fayetteville, Tenn., whose husband Glen was in an accident similar to the Kellys'. Davis' Igloo lunchbox was wedged between the seat and the top of his rolled-over truck.

Dallas man operates museum of bad taste

Collects offensive products

DALLAS (AP) — These are the conservative, let's-do-lunch '80s and, on the surface of things, Bill Kleinman is an '80s guy.

What we have here is a 30-year-old attorney for Haynes and Boone, an MIT and UT-Austin grad, a man with a nice home and a sober job and a polo-shirt-and-shorts lifestyle, a fellow balanced quite comfortably on the very cusp of yuppie-dom.

But what we also have is a guy who lives for bad taste — for Godzilla cigarette lighters and pens shaped like potatoes, for pink radios-toilet paper dispensers and salt-and-pepper shakers shaped like the Venus de Milo, for Hawaiian hula dolls that shake and shimmy, and for packages of Mr. T car air freshener.

An eclectic menagerie, to be sure, but there's much, much more. Most of it sits on shelves in Kleinman's comfortable (and otherwise quite tasteful) North Dallas home.

They come from all over the country and beyond, these tacky little monuments to tourism and consumerism, and they gladden Bill Kleinman's heart and make his face curl into a grin.

Stock buy restores Flare Inc. ownership

A stock purchase announced Thursday restores ownership of Flare Inc. to its principal owners and ends litigation by some of its directors against the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

The directors of the Midland-based company said Thursday that they have acquired 2,831,000 shares of the common stock of the company held by the FDIC.

The acquisition follows a purchase in December of 1986, in which the director's group acquired acquired a total of 1,026,000 shares from Texas American Bank/Midland and MBank Abilene.

The stock acquisitions bring to 3,857,000 the total shares owned by the group and represents 54.71 percent of outstanding common stock in Flare, Inc., according to Charles A. McNamara, III, President of the company and Steven D. Timms, President of Seismic Reflections, Inc.

Flare, Inc., owns Seismic Reflections, Inc., which is engaged in the acquisition, sales, and brokerage of seismic date to the oil and gas exploration industry.

The purchasing group includes McNamara, Peter A. Manhart, Chairman; Timms, Executive Vice President; David W. Holden, Secretary; Michael S. Forsman, and James. E. Weger.

In addition, each individual member has the right to acquire additional shares from the company pursuant to Flare's issued warrants totalling 5,200,000 shares. The warrants were issued in 1986 in exchange for loans to the company and a cash payment.

If the rights under the warrants are fully exercised, the directors' group would own approximately 73.92 percent of the outstanding stock.

The FCIC negotiations followed several other steps which have resulted in a much-improved working capital position for the company. In 1986, the company underwent a reduction-in-force and salary reductions, and disposed of its buildings. Earlier this year, Flare finalized the refinancing of its debt, extending maturities to five-to-seven years.

"We are now in an excellent position to participate in the recovery of the oil and gas business, and believe that we are among the best capitalized companies in our field," McNamara said. He noted that Seismic Reflections has strong demand for its Michigan Basin data, and is acquiring additional coverage there.

The oil industry: still looking for a fair shake

Pitts

Getting a group of oilmen together to talk about the state of the industry and trying to avoid a speech on "the need for a national energy policy" is something akin to trying to dodge a bullet.

That topic came up again Thursday (as it always does) at the Permian Basin Petroleum Association annual meeting, but Oil & Gas Journal Editor Gene Kinney put it in a way we had never heard it before.

Said the caustic Kinney: "Famous Egyptian War Heros...Famous Italian Statesmen...Oklahoma Banking Wisdom...The Handbook of Texas Humility — to this list of the shortest books ever written, you can add Effective U.S. Energy Policies."

With well-chosen words he was able to paint a nauseating picture that most in the industry know too well, namely that the U.S. petroleum industry is often regarded by many as an enemy within; that national leaders more often than not seek ways to persecute, rather than help the industry; and, that there is a serious shortage of wisdom with a lot of foot-dragging, inconsistency and injustice when it comes a national energy policy.

Offering up a chronicle of past energy policies, Kinney wondered why when it came to an energy policy, wisdom was something that had to be forced upon a reluctant government — regardless of the benefit to the people.

He recalled U.S. energy policy blunders of the past:

—The imposition of price controls on natural gas at the wellhead in the early fifties, which served as an effective ceiling on oil prices and guaranteed a shortage of domestic oil.

—Followed by the pursuit of domestic policies in the '50s and '60s that guaranteed a dependence on foreign crude oil, while pursuing a foreign policy that guaranteed the oil would not be there in a pinch, resulting in the embargo of 1973.

—A "shot gun" cure following the embargo that threw money at everything but domestic oil, which gave $100 million to develop synthetic fuels then took it back.

—Deregulation of crude oil (at the insistence of other industrial nations) which resulted, for the first time in U.S. history, in a tax on too much profit (Windfall Profits Tax) and introduced a new word to the lexicon of American free enterprise "excess profits."

—Deregulation of natural gas in 1978 which created a hodgepodge of old and new, and deep and shallow gas prices which resulted in a false exploration boom that found deep expensive gas that couldn't be sold.

Kinney could muster no sympathy for the current policy that has chosen to put its faith on foreign imports, which he considers a threat to national security.

He questioned the wisdom of committing the U.S. Navy, national prestige and billions of dollars to defend foreign oil while not spending one dollar to promote domestic development.

"The Senate recently voted 55-41 NOT to do anything to prevent imports from exceeding 50 percent, and they called it a victory for consumers, environmentalists, business and agriculture. We'll see how they feel in 1990 when they are dancing to OPEC's tune," he scoffed.

He warned that the domestic industry would not get any help from the administration, which has energy in about fourth place on the priority totem pole, and that it could not depend on OPEC for help, because the price that would bring relief to the domestic industry is not the same price the Saudis see as in their best interest. "They don't want prices to go much above current levels, because oil in the mid-$20 would encourage non-OPEC production ... That's what the price war of 1986 was all about.

"An effective energy policy must consist of more than hoisting American flags on Kuwaiti tankers and sending warships and American tax dollars to make the Persian Gulf safe for Arab and Iranian oil. What about making America safer for investors willing to risk their fortunes to develop American oil?" Kinney wondered.

He contrasted Middle East policy with the Windfall Profits Tax: "Thanks to WPT, we get the worst of the free market when its down, and only a fraction of the benefit when the market is up." He denounced the notion that Windfall Profits should be considered a pro-industry issue, saying it should be a "motherhood"

Energy states still 'pooling' with IOCC

By ED HOUSEWRIGHT
Dallas Morning News

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — In the early 1930s, the U.S. oil industry faced a crisis.

The discovery of numerous large oilfields led to overproduction, driving the price of oil in many parts of the country to a third of its post-World War I level.

Oklahoma Gov.-elect E.W. Marland, realizing the waste that was occurring in the oil patch, called together representatives of seven other oil-producing states to discuss forming an association that would address the problem of overproduction and other common concerns.

After two subsequent meetings in early 1935, the Interstate Oil Compact Commission was formed and authorized by Congress.

Now, more than 50 years later, its membership has grown to 29 states, and it has tackled a variety of issues — the oil shortage of the early 1970s, the large-scale plugging of stripper wells last year with the oil-price collapse, environmental matters, oilfield theft and enhanced recovery methods.

The Interstate Oil Compact Commission, based in Oklahoma City, has a full-time staff and 11 standing committees composed of officials from state government and the energy industry.

The commission, funded by state legislatures, publishes regular statistical reports used by federal and state agencies and industry. And, as in its early days, the compact tries to foster cooperation among oil states to solve common problems.

"If Texas has gone through something Oklahoma is just now experiencing, they can give use guidance, and vice versa," said Rick Conner, statistical manager of the Oklahoma Corporation Commission, which regulates the oil and gas industry, and a committee member of the IOCC. "We all have common goals."

Former Texas Gov. Mark White served as co-chairman of the IOCC in 1985, and Gov. Bill Clements was chairman in 1980 during his first term.

"He (Clements) attaches great importance to it," said Philip Patman, an Austin energy attorney who is one of Clements' current appointees to the commission.

"The compact commission is unique in several respects. It is the only organization of states that has to do with the oil industry. It provides a forum for state regulatory officials and private industry people to meet and discuss common areas of concern outside an adversarial situation."

IOCC held its semi-annual meeting in Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, earlier this summer and it drew 350 people. Members approved a resolution calling on Congress to establish an energy incentive tax plan that would counter some of the effects of the 1986 tax reform.

They also named seven governors, including Clements and Oklahoma Gov. Henry Bellmon, to serve on a new group called the National Council on Energy Assurance to make suggestions on a national energy policy.

The group will seek other members from the academic community, energy companies, Congress and environmental groups.

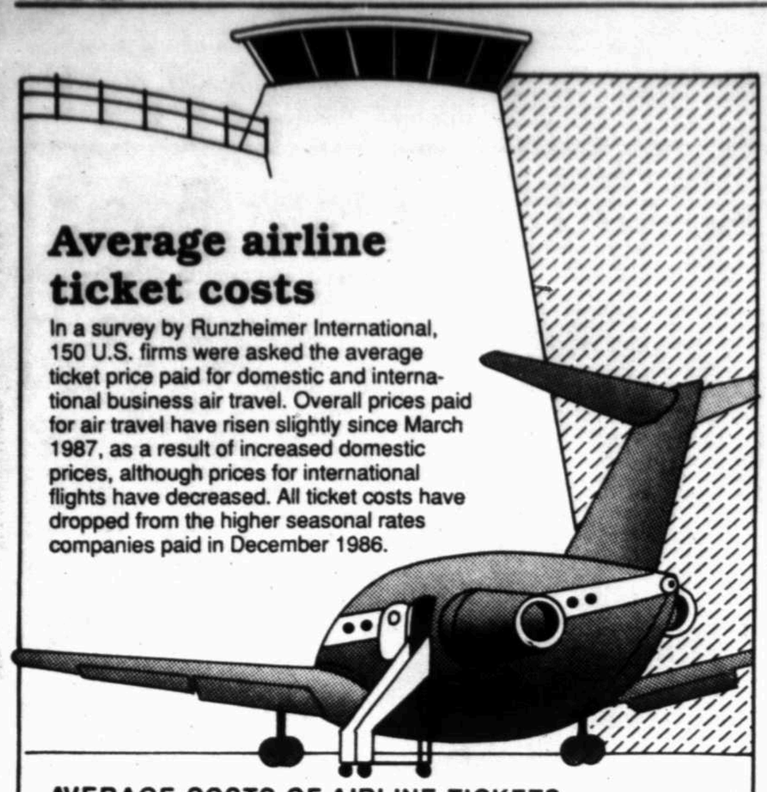

"Diversity is central to the project, and our aim is to bring together an improbable coalition of diverse leaders and viewpoints," said North Dakota Gov. George Sinner, current chairman of the IOCC, in announcing the group's formation. "We want to search out the broadest range of viewpoints to assure a fresh look at the energy situation, to hear each other out and to move beyond old positions.

"But primarily we want to move the energy debate to a more productive plane."

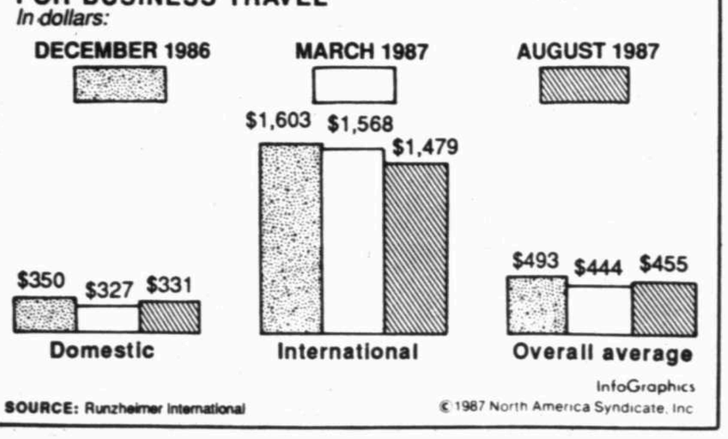

Shortly before the meeting, the IOCC issued one of its periodic reports — this one on the number of oil wells shut in or temporarily abandoned in seven of the largest oil-producing states during 1986. The report said that more than 97,000 wells — or about 15 percent of the U.S. total — were shut in or temporarily abandoned.

Average airline ticket costs

In a survey by Runzheimer International, 150 U.S. firms were asked the average ticket price paid for domestic and international business air travel. Overall prices paid for air travel have risen slightly since March 1987, as a result of increased domestic prices, although prices for international flights have decreased. All ticket costs have dropped from the higher seasonal rates companies paid in December 1986.

Tougher control for chemicals

By MATT YANCEY
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — An estimated 3.5 million companies around the country will have to begin training employees to protect themselves from hazardous chemicals in the workplace under newly expanded "right-to-know" regulations by the government.

The Labor Department estimates that the training, required labels on products and posted instructions at worksites will cost employers more than $687 million next year, or more than $40 for each of the estimated 18 million American workers coming under the law's protection.

The court-ordered expansion of coverage beyond the chemical and manufacturing industries, to include virtually every major workplace in the country, was announced Wednesday by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration.

OSHA officials estimated that worker knowledge of chemical hazards around them will reduce occupational injuries, illnesses and deaths by 20 percent in non-manufacturing industries once the regulations become fully implemented in May 1988.

Formally known as the hazard communication standard, the regulations were recommended more than a decade ago by a federal advisory committee to help combat the annual 100,000 deaths and 340,000 disabling illnessess and injuries blamed on workplace hazards.

Both government officials and outside experts predicted Wednesday that the new requirements will quickly become the most effective weapon in the government's arsenal for reducing occupational illnesses and diseases.

"OSHA's existing hazard communication standard has been the agency's most significant regulatory action ever taken to protect America's manufacturing workers," said Deputy Assistant Labor Secretary Frank White.

The agency last year expanded "right-to-know" coverage to include 300,000 companies employing some 14 million workers. It first imposed the regulations on the chemical industry and its 1.4 million workers in 1985.

But OSHA also was under orders from the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Philadelphia to expand the requirements further to cover workers in agriculture, construction, services, transportation and office occupations.

The court in May ordered OSHA to accelerate the timetable for making the expanded coverage final.

"It's unfortunate that it took a court order and the threat of a contempt citation for the Labor Department to act," said Margaret Seminario, association director of occupational health and safety for the AFL-CIO.

The expanded regulations require all employers falling under OSHA's jurisdiction to inform their workers of any hazardous substances on the job and train the employees on proper safeguards. Willful noncompliance can result in fines of up to $10,000, officials said.

The regulations also require a label on every container on the premises that includes any amount of some 2,300 hazardous substances. OSHA last year estimated there were some 575,000 such chemical products in the workplace, with more being introduced every day.

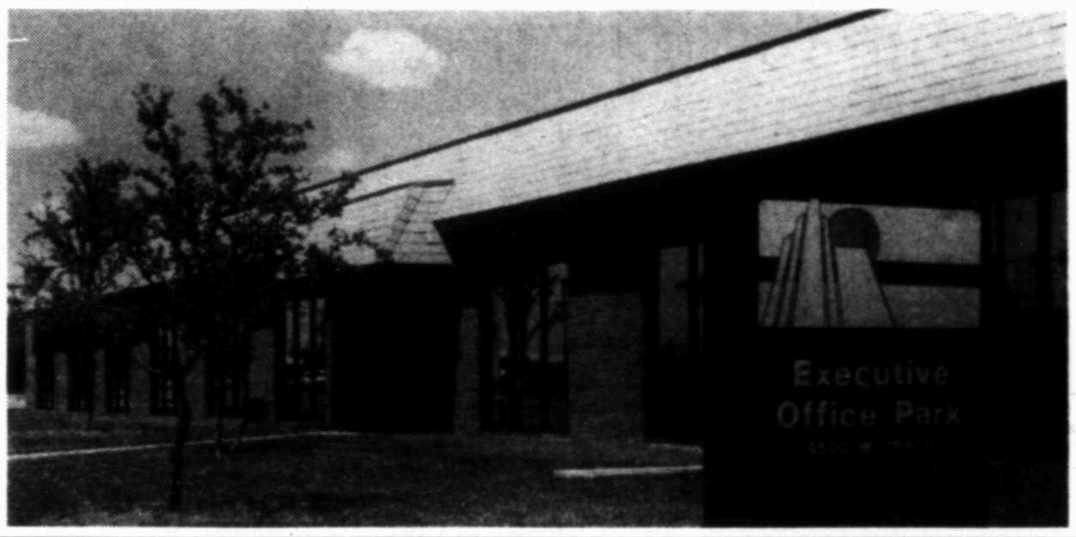

Manufacturers generally supported expanded coverage under the federal regulations because they pre-empt local and state laws that in many cases are more stringent.

Basin count rockets up by dozen

From Staff Reports

The number of active rigs in the Permian Basin jumped to 141 this week, up from 129 a week earlier. The count stands more than 70 percent above last year's level of 82.

Nationally, the number of rigs making hole rose by 15 to 998 from the previous week, Baker Hughes announced.

Last week, the rig count rose 10 for a total of 983. A year ago, the count totaled 738, the Houston-based oil toolmaker said.

California, Oklahoma and Louisiana saw the largest shifts in the count. California and Louisiana had increases of 10 and six rigs respectively, while the count for Oklahoma dropped by eight.

In the Basin, Andrews and Gaines counties continued to gain ground on Lea County N.M. as the most active area. The two Texas counties each gained on rig during the week to stand at 14 and 13 respectively, while three rigs were taken down in Lea County to put its total at 16.

Rig utilization figures show continued improvement, according to Smith Tool Co. figures. In the Basin 25.6 percent of available rigs were at work during the week after two weeks at 25.1 percent.

Nationally, the utilization rate climbed to 24.8 percent from 24.1 percent last week.

AUSTIN (AP) — The Railroad Commission set the statewide oil allowable for September at 100 percent, maintaining a practice of wide-open production started in the spring of 1972.

As usual, production in the East Texas field was restricted to 86 percent to avoid possible waste.

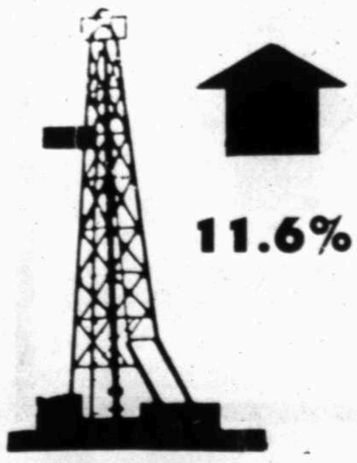

Nominations for Texas crude oil for September totaled 2,028,744 barrels a day, a decrease of 11,225 barrels daily compared with August nominations.

Wallace said crude and petroleum products imports into the United States averaged 7,729,000 barrels per day for the four weeks ending July 31, an increase of 1,365,000 barrels per day from the same period last year.

Tiny firm leads AIDS research

By LAWRENCE M. FISHER
New York Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO (NYT) — Although most medical experts expected that some company would receive approval this year from the Food and Drug Administration for human clinical trials of an AIDS vaccine, the list of possible candidates never included Microgenesys Inc. Indeed, until this week few analysts who follow the biotechnology industry had heard of the tiny company, which is based in West Haven, Conn., and has now become the first company to get that FDA approval.

Founded in May 1983 by an immunobiologist named Franklin Volvovitz, Microgenesys (pronounced mi-CRO-gen-esis) is privately held and has not been financed with venture capital. Volvovitz, 38, formed the company to explore the use of an insect virus as an agent for the production of pharmaceutical proteins using recombinant DNA technology. The company has fewer than 30 employees and has yet to market a product.

Volvovitz, who received a B.S. degree in biology and did graduate work in immunology and virology at New York University, founded a company, Biotechnologies Inc., in 1979 to produce interferon by natural rather than genetically engineered means. That company folded after a year and a half, and Volvovitz began recruiting scientists for Microgenesys. Among those he signed up are Mark A. Cochran from the National Institutes of Health and Gale A. Smith from Texas A&M, the two researchers who jointly developed the possible AIDS vaccine.

Although the approval from the FDA puts the spotlight on Microgenesys, analysts said it does not mean the company has a serious lead on others developing AIDS vaccines. These include the Chiron Corp., in collaboration with the Ciba-Geigy Corp.; the Repligen Corp. working with Merck & Co., and the Oncogen subsidiary of the Bristol-Myers Co.

In a telephone interview, Volvovitz emphasized that the AIDS vaccine is in a very early trial stage using animals. He said Microgenesys was working on vaccines for seven other viruses, and that it was "quite possible" that one of them would become the company's first marketable vaccine. The company is also using AIDS antigens to develop a diagnostic test for AIDS antibodies, which could be its first marketable product, possibly in late 1988.

Working with the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases in Bethesda, Md., Microgenesys has done trials of the AIDS vaccine on mice, rabbits, guinea pigs, rhesus monkeys and chimpanzees. In addition to looking for side effects, the tests have sought evidence that the vaccine is immunogenic: Does it cause antibodies to form, what are their nature and what other cellular immune responses occur?

Of the animals tested, only chimpanzees can be infected by AIDS, and none of the animals have been exposed to the AIDS virus. "What we have seen in the animals is that antibodies are produced, and that sera from the animals would protect human cells in a laboratory," Volvovitz said. "That is a great distance from determinining whether the vaccine would prevent infection by the virus."

Viren Mehta, a biotechnology analyst with Wood, Mackenzie & Company Inc. in New York, said, "If they have not challenged chimps, that would put them seriously behind" other companies working on AIDS vaccines.

"It is curious that the FDA would let them go ahead," Mehta said.

Jim McCamant, editor of the Medical Technology Stock Letter, said he still thinks that Chiron has the most advanced effort under way on an AIDS vaccine, although the company has been publicity-shy about its work. Microgenesys is "obviously only one of the players" in AIDS vaccine research, he said. "There are two or three others I expect will get approval by the end of the year."

The human trials, which will not expose subjects to the virus, will use 81 volunteers from the Washington, D.C., area, of whom 75 will be male homosexuals.

"This is predominantly a study on the male homosexual population because that is one of the groups most likely to use such a vaccine," said Dr. Anthony S. Fauci, director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases. The volunteers will be screened for the absence of AIDS, and to make the trial valid must not engage in activities that would put them at risk of contracting AIDS, he said.

Houston rents bottom out

HOUSTON (AP) — Rents for Houston apartments have bottomed out this year and tenants will soon be paying more, real estate researchers say.

"Right now the boon is to the renters," said Barton Smith, director of the University of Houston's Center for Public Policy. "That is going to be shortlived."

Smith told The Houston Post today that he predicts a remarkably sharp increase in rents over the next three years that will see a $300 per-month apartment soar to over $900.

Jim Gaines, a vice president of a research organization affiliated with Rice University, agreed with Smith but said it is hard to predict exactly what the market will do.

Experts say the Houston market has continued to slide since it first went sour in 1982. A study by a local real estate brokerage and research firm found that 2,939 apartments units in 22 complexes had closed by December 1986. An additional 5,000 to 7,000 have been closed since then.

Iranian imports irk textile industry

By CLYDE H. FARNSWORTH
New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON (NYT) — A surge of low-priced textiles from Iran has prompted an outcry from a textile state senator and a promise by the Reagan administration to study the possibility of imposing import curbs.

A trade official in the administration, acknowledging that it was already weighing broad trade restraints against Iran, said he expected a textile decision shortly. "We're feeling a lot of heat from the industry," he said.

This official and others said any textile move could become part of a wider policy of generally tighter trade with Iran.

But a second option being weighed at hastily called interagency meetings this week has been to isolate the textile issue by imposing a restrictive quota specifically against Iranian textiles — as the administration did last month against the Soviet Union after imports from that country rose sharply.

Administration officials also said they were studying possible restrictions on imports of Iranian oil products through the Virgin Islands. Imports of gasoline, fuel oil and other products refined from Iranian crude in Virgin Islands refineries have more than doubled in the last two months over the average of shipments in the first five months of this year, according to a State Department official.

Trade and economic specialists said the pickup in oil and textile shipments from Iran apparently reflects that nation's pressing desire for more cash to pursue hostile actions in the Persian Gulf.

Two large shipments of an unprocessed cotton fabric called sheeting, which is used in women's sportswear and men's slacks have recently entered the ports of Charleston, S.C., and Los Angeles, trade officials said. These shipments total 600,000 square yards, compared with 215,000 square yards received from Iran during all of 1986.

In a letter to President Reagan, Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., noted this development and said he had been "outraged to learn that our nation is now importing textiles from Iran." He called for immediate restrictive action.

The imports are a potential cause of market disruption, industry officials said, because they have been entering the United States at 42 to 45 cents a square yard, against the domestic price of 72 cents.

"This certainly casts a shadow over the effectiveness of the government's textile trade program," said Robert G. Laidlaw, president of the American Textile Manufacturers Institute, "and shows only too clearly the need for enactment of the textile trade legislation pending in Congress."

Gary Holmes, a spokesman at the Office of the United States Trade Representative, said the administration recently "became aware of these imports, is looking into them and will make a decision as soon as possible."

Imports from Iran, which totaled $612 million last year, include crude oil, carpets, pistachio nuts, caviar, furs and skins, glassware and spices.

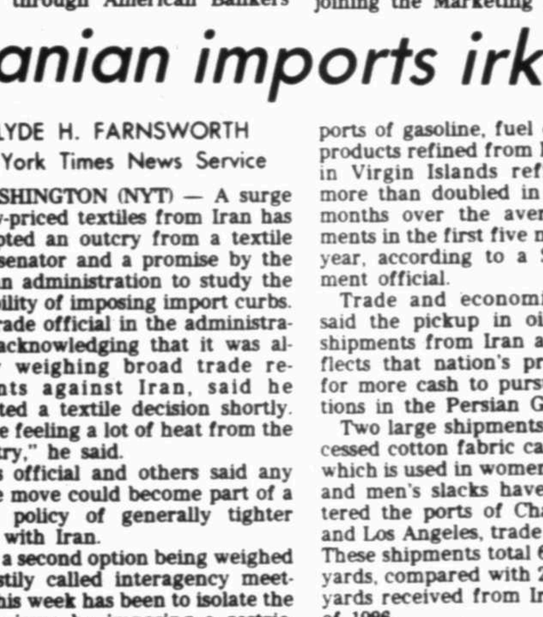

Pistachio imports are already under heavy restraint, following trade cases brought by growers in California. The United States now sets a duty of more than 300 percent on Iran's roasted, shelled pistachios and nearly 100 percent on Iran's raw, shelled pistachios.

Open hearth still burns at two steel plants

Tradition dies hard for some

EDITOR'S NOTE — At the end of World War II, 72 million tons of molten steel a year streamed from the tap holes of 1,000 open-hearth furnaces across the country. Today, open hearths are used in only two steel mills in the United States. But the men who work in those mills take a special pride in their dangerous, deafening jobs.

By EARL BOHN
AP Business Writer

FAIRLESS HILLS, Pa. (AP) — In a cavernous building beside the Delaware River, the curtain is coming down on an industrial drama that helped give the American economy its metal backbone: open-hearth steelmaking.

The stage is a tangle of beams, pipes, hoses and wires rising into darkness above a row of garage-sized furnaces. Inside the furnaces, brilliant pools of yellow liquid boil beneath roaring crowns of white flame.

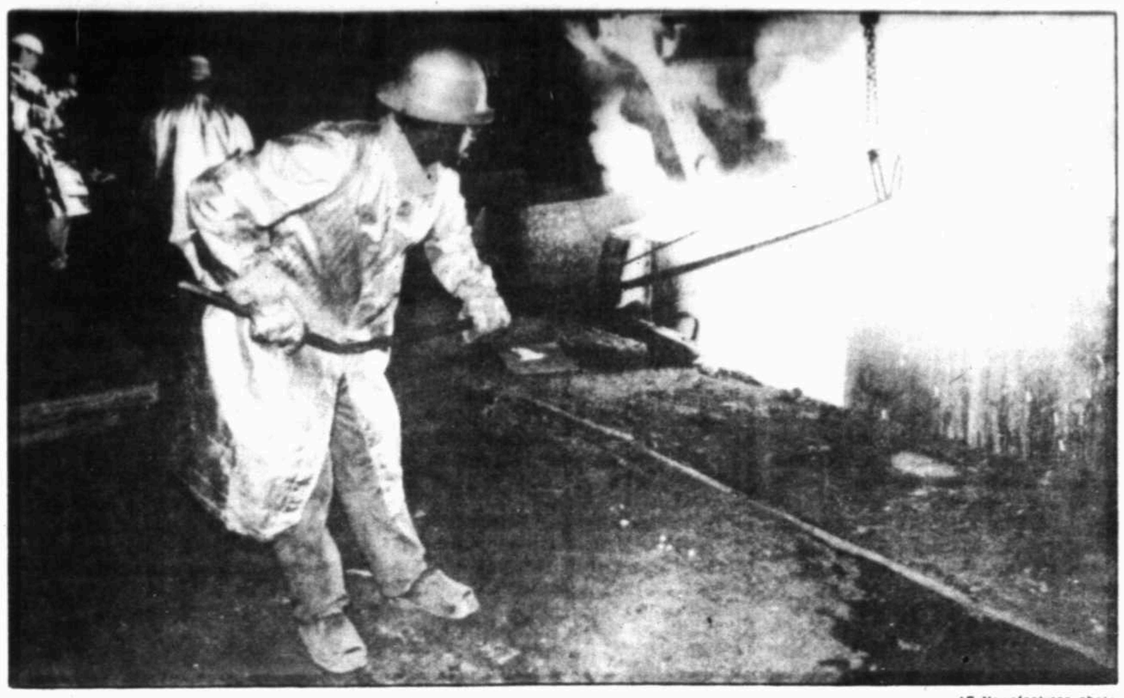

Across a dirt floor, three men wearing hard hats, overalls, steel-toed shoes and serious expressions stand nose-to-nose, shouting to hear each other above the deep voice of the fires.

One man moves a switch on a control panel, and one of the chambers falls silent. Its fire dies. Behind the furnace, one worker sets an explosive charge.

Above the uninterrupted roar of the other furnaces, a siren powerful enough to make a person's jaw vibrate screams a warning, punctuated by a boom. The blast opens a tap hole in the furnace, and an incandescent stream races through a trough and cascades with a rumble into a ladle as big as a two-story town house.

It is the birth of steel, and the attendants are the big-boned midwives of the open-hearth furnace, a century-old invention that digests molten iron, scrap steel and purifying additives in a 7½-hour, gas- and oxygen-fired inferno.

"It's fascinating, dangerous but fascinating. I've seen it being done since '55, and I still look at it in amazement," says Colson Derby of Penndel, a steel pourer in the open-hearth shop of the sprawling USX Corp. Fairless Works on Pennsylvania's eastern tip.

A steelworker is part of the spectacle of open hearth steelmaking at USX Corp. Fairless Works in Pennsylvania. It's the only plant in U.S. where open hearth process is still in use.

The spectacle of open-hearth steelmaking, which dominated the U.S. steel industry for 50 years, can be seen in only one other place in the United States today. Bethlehem Steel Corp. recently started one open-hearth at its Sparrows Point Works near Baltimore. Steel orders will determine how long it operates.

The Fairless furnaces might have gone cold already except that a four-year contract with the United Steelworkers promises no permanent shutdown until 1991.

The furnace, named for the broad, shallow hearth that typically holds 450 tons of molten metal, is the oldest steelmaking technology in use in the country. Quicker basic oxygen furnaces now refine most of the molten metal that flows from iron-making blast furnaces, and electric furnaces make steel from scrap.

The open-hearth process clad America in steel for World War II and later helped conquer city skylines with office towers, span the continent with highways and bridges and fill those highways with cars. The open hearths also required brawny men who helped define the image of blue-collar America.

Not every steelworker would accept the job.

"I've seen hundreds of guys come through," Derby says. "You see guys come into the open hearth, get their new safety shoes and the next day they're not back. I've seen some guys come in and one hour later they're not around. It's dangerous."

Albert P. Morgan, 58, of Levittown, an open hearth veteran and retired steel shipper, represented USW Local 4889 as safety committee chairman in investigating accidents, including one worker's fall from the back of a furnace.

"Four of us hauled him out of the hot slag. He was crying, 'I broke my shoulder.' He didn't realize he was burned, practically dead in my arms," Morgan said. "He died of pneumonia two days later."

Morgan says another worker was struck in the head and killed by the cap of an ingot mold that was catapulted by one of the occasional explosions triggered by oxygen dissolved in the steel.

"That poor kid was only in the mill a week," he says.

Such eruptions are rare now that newly tapped steel undergoes sophisticated analysis, says Paul Krupp, an open hearth manager.

Steel still shrinking

Associated Press

How far has the domestic steel industry slipped? Recently released facts by the American Iron and Steel Institute offer a recession-colored picture.

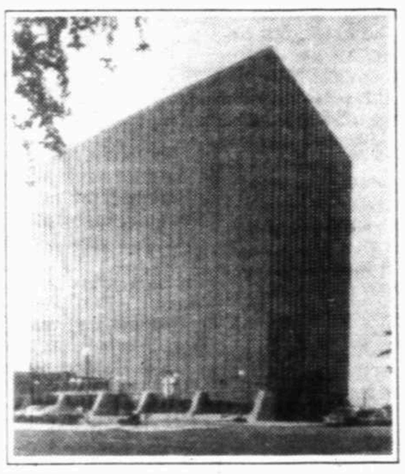

— Hourly paid workers: 544,300 in 1953; 169,000 in 1983. In the first five months of 1987, 112,000 hourly workers had steel jobs.

— Total workers: In 1970, 531,000 people were employed in the industry, including white-collar workers. In the first five months of 1987, there were 152,400, the lowest number since the institute began compiling statistics in 1933.

— Steel plants: Since 1971, the domestic steel industry has closed more than 700 plants or parts of plants. Included are 19 companies that have ceased operations entirely.

— Capacity: Raw steel production capacity, the amount that can be produced, fell from 160 million tons a year in 1977 to 112 million tons estimated for 1987. Actual production in 1977 was 125 million tons. The projection for this year is 82 million tons.

MUSEUM

botched family vacations and seedy little souvenir shops, if it inspires visions of a world overrun by "Welcome to Florida" candles shaped like palm trees, it's kitsch.

Kitsch is capitalism happily overdosing on itself.

"What's it all mean?" Kleinman asks rhetorically, looking at his collecton and picking up a Los Angeles "snow scene" paperweight that, when shaken, produces black smog instead of snow. "What it really means is, this stuff is capitalism at its purest. It doesn't matter how tasteless or insenstitive it is. If it sells, it's OK. And hey, I mean that positively."

To prove his point, he arranges his collection of oddly shaped pens — which resemble everything from body parts to strawberries — on the floor, and gazes at them lovingly.

"I mean, somebody has made a living out of selling these things," he says. "This is the pinnacle — where consumerism knows no boundaries at all.

"Is this a great country or what?"

The country may be great, but its certifiable kitsch capitals are few.

"Well, there's exceptions, but all kitsch comes from three basic sources," Kleinman says. "You've got Stuckey's, flea markets and places called 'Souvenir City,' which could, of course, be anywhere."

Including Dallas.

Twelve years ago, as a Dallas high school student, Kleinman paid a visit to the old John F. Kennedy assassination museum downtown. He'd grown up in the city, but had never visited the now-closed museum. He could hardly believe his eyes.

"I was beside myself that such a thing could exist," he says. "But even though it was really a very insensitive and tacky thing, it was popular with thousands of tourists."

The museum had plates and trajectory-of-the-bullets postcards and newspapers from around the world telling of JFK's death. But what caught the eye of young Kleinman and his mother was a pair of salt and pepper shakers. One shaker bore the likeness of JFK and the other of "Mrs. John F. Kennedy."

"We were shocked and amazed," Kleinman says. "My mom said, 'You have to buy this.' And I did."

The more he thought about it, the more he began to see such stuff as "a vast, untapped and unrecognized source of humor."

Kleinman soon was buying up Elvis swizzle sticks, fishing lures shaped like beer cans, dead chicken key chains, and postcards of half-naked females frolicking on the beach.

He personally located about 90 percent of his collection. Most of it cost less than $5 an item. The other 10 percent is stuff friends have brought back from trips abroad, hoping their pieces might be included in the Kleinman museum.

There is, he notes, a lot to choose form. But most kitsch falls into several broad categories, like key chains from around the world, candles (shaped like pancakes or virtually anything else) and salt and pepper shakers. Kleinman's shaker collection includes pieces that look like lobster claws, flamingos, teeth, and a tiny TV set. (Turn up the volume and the shakers rise out of the cabinet.)

"And, of course, Hawaii is a theme unto itself," he says. "People bring so much stuff back to me from there that I think Hawaii was admitted to the U.S. just to end our dependence on foreign souvenirs."

Perhaps the largest category of kitsch is personality items. Kleinman has a John Lennon music box that tinkles out "Imagine," a John Wayne statue-radio, and a Mr. T piggy bank.

IGLOO

"He only had minor injuries and his lunch box is still as good as ever," Mrs. Davis said.

In Lanesboro, Mass., a 19-year-old construction worker escaped serious injury when an Igloo water cooler blocked the fall of 25 wooden trusses which would have crushed him.

Then there's the story of a California woman, Patricia Citarella of Hercules, who told of a bear unsuccessfully mauling her family's Igloo cooler to get at the food inside.

"He bit it, he threw it, but the little Playmate wouldn't give in," she said. "So the bear gave up. He left the cooler and all the little goodies behind."

The company has its roots in the oilfields, when in 1947 Production Tooling Co., a small Houston tool and die shop, began supplying metal water coolers as replacements for old wooden water kegs.

A Memphis, Tenn., company, John T. Everett Corp., took over sales and through a series of mergers became Texas Tennessee Industries Inc. in 1961.

"Then we developed the first two-handle ice chest — all plastic," Caldwell recalls. "At that time all were made out of metal. The problem they were trying to overcome was rusting and chipping and cracking."

That was 25 years ago, when the 48-quart plastic ice chest was born. It's now known as the "Legend" model and is the foundation of the Igloo product line. It remains Igloo's most popular ice chest.

"We easily have millions around the world," Caldwell says. "Over the years, we've changed the handle. At one time we had it with rivets, now there's stainless steel screws.

issue.

"Free markets and fair taxation are as American as apple pie and tacos. What's free and fair about price and tax measures applied to only one industry?"

The native Oklahoman wondered aloud why the oil industry must always be in the position of begging for fairness. Many in the Permian Basin, no doubt, wonder the same thing.

First RepublicBank names Schiebout to bank board

Marvin G. Schiebout has been elected to the board of directors of First RepublicBank Midland, according to Matthew P. Murphy, president.

Schiebout is currently an executive vice president and manager of General Banking, responsible for the lending and credit functions of the bank. A graduate of North Texas State University, he joined the bank in 1984, after holding positions with RepublicBank Houston as senior vice president and manager of the Houston/South Texas Energy Lending Division. He also served RepublicBank Dallas as vice president and manager of the Dallas/Fort Worth Energy Lending Group.

"We are delighted to add Marvin to our board of directors," said Murphy. "His expertise in banking and energy lending will be an asset to the board."

Other members of the board include: John L. Cox, chairman; Roy E. Campbell, L. Decker Dawson, James E. Hall, W.D. Kleine, Matthew P. Murphy, B.J. Pevehouse, Clarence Scharbauer III, Jack E. Walcher and Wilbur A. Yeager, Jr.

In addition to numerous civic activities, Schiebout is a member of the executive board of Permian Basin Petroleum Association, and an active member of several Texas and New Mexico oil and gas associations.

TRUCKER

truckers can now make deliveries directly to customers within the state. Texas truckers like Merchants that once received up to 60 percent of their hauls from interlines, now are lucky to get 30 pecent.

While a compromise bill that puts more flexibility in rates has temporarily sidetracked a campaign to deregulate trucking, the threat of deregulation nevertheless remains a potential bomb that could blow Texas truckers out of their conservative cocoons into the hard realities of cut throat competition. That is something truckers don't want to think about, saying it would bring about predatory pricing, disrupt service to small towns and cause safety to deteroriate. Pugh pointed out that only five states have deregulated interstate trucking and two of them want to return to deregulation.

Proponents of deregulation have agreed not to reintroduce another bill until 1993, but Boyd says the threat of deregulation has made Merchants more aware of the need to become more aggressive and competitive.

With the pressure on to become more competitive, some of the changes being seen at the freight carrier are:

- a new computerized accounting, billing and message system to provide better and faster service to smaller accounts;
- a new up-to-date $3.7 million look with the addition of 47 new tractor and 105 new trailers;
- an internal campaign to recognize achievement and enhance employee morale;
- expansion into the interstate business;
- creation of a new service-orientated advertising campaign

Perhaps, the biggest break with the past has been the emphasis on advertising to boost name awareness and company identity and to identify Merchants as a company that "Goes the extra mile" for service.

"In the past, trucking companies rarely advertised or used marketing to generate business," says Merchants President Richard F. Bacon. "There was enough freight volume to use the capacity of our terminals and trucking equipment."

The advertising campaign includes print advertising, outdoor signage and roiling billboards. Merchants once sent it trucks down the road with only the word Merchants on them. Now, they will all bear the new motto: 'We go the extra mile," says Kirby Pugh, Merchants vice president of safety and personnel.

Merchants is counting on the new service approach and its computerized system to attract the attention of many merchants in small towns who must "inventory on wheels" by ordering items for their customers.

With the external campaign to increase the profile goes an internal campaign to build company morale.

Said Boyd: "When you're selling service, morale is very important."

In business since 1922, Merchants employs 1,450 at 22 major terminals and 65 commisioned agencies in five states, and in its low-profile days never went in much for attention within or without. "We found we had loyal and dedicated employees who were not getting the attention they deserved," said Boyd. "We have some employees who have driven 35 years without an accident. Now we are making every effort to publicly honor and recognize those employees who make a significant contribution to the company."

STEEL

Sixteen workers were killed in U.S. steel plants and 4,400 were injured seriously enough to miss work in 1985, the last year for which records are available, according to the American Iron and Steel Institute. From 1981 to 1985, fatalities totaled 138, or an average of 28 per year. More than 27,000 workers were injured in that period, averaging 5,410 per year.

Workers say the most dangerous area around the open hearths is the pitside, the area below and behind the furnace where the slag is separated and ladles filled, moved by overhead cranes and emptied from the bottom into ingot molds.

"It's the armpit of the open hearth, always was and always will be," says Wilfred "Boots" Huber, 61, recently retired after 33 years on the Fairless steel furnaces.

Filling bottle-top ingot molds could be particularly tricky, he says.

"When the ladle goes from one mold to the next that steel hits it and flies. Everybody runs 'til the crane gets it centered over the next mold," Huber says.

"It's just like the Fourth of July, and you're right there, not 80 yards from it," says Derby, who at 57 is the oldest worker on the pitside at Fairless.

"I went through three pair of shoes down there in a month. Burnt the soles right off," says Huber, a thickly built but soft-spoken descendant of German and Dutch immigrants.

Danger didn't stop the many workers who followed opportunity into the Fairless Works, built 35 years ago.

Huber left railroading in Altoona when diesels replaced steam. He eventually became a first helper, a job operating a furnace and one of the best-paying positions among the hourly employees.

Before contract concessions began trimming wages in 1983, a first helper could earn $40,000 to $45,000 per year, depending on the furnace he operated, Huber says.

A sense of pride in doing a difficult job also drew workers to the open hearth.

"I wouldn't say there's a lot of prestige, but there's knowing no one else would do it," Derby says.

The open hearth era peaked at the end of World War II, when molten steel streamed at the rate of 72 million tons per year from the tap holes of 1,000 open hearths across the country.

This year, Fairless will refine an estimated 2 to 3 million tons of the 73 million tons of iron expected to be cast from blast furnaces in the United States. Blast furnaces convert ore to iron in a process that dates to the 14th century and still has no commercial-scale replacement in sight.

Barring an unexpected and sustained surge in the demand for American steel, the open-hearth process will disappear under the economic hammer of intense world competition and the race for cheaper processes.

Until then, however, they are a linchpin in the Fairless operation.

"I don't apologize to anybody about our open hearths," says John A. Maczuzak, a Ukrainian coal miner's son and a 6-foot-5, former University of Pittsburgh football lineman who bosses the plant's 2,300 employees.

"We're very cost competitive here at Fairless even though it is an open-hearth shop."

The Fairless furnaces survived this long in part because for USX they are nearest the East Coast market and because they can accept a widely variable mix of cold scrap or molten iron, an advantage when materials costs fluctuate.

The plant, whose 3,900-acre site is home to a white-tailed deer herd and is a resting spot for migrating Canadian geese, receives raw material at a deep water port, saving overland freight costs. Fishermen also enjoy pursuing the lunker catfish in the plant's deeply dredged river channel.

And while open hearths require more fuel, time and expensive insulating brick, they are known for producing high quality steel, which the plant rolls into a variety of sheets for the makers of truck frames, passenger rail cars, auto parts and food cans.

"That's what we always bragged about," Morgan says. "When we gave you steel out of an open hearth you were getting prime product. They may be outmoded, but they're still the best."

With the open hearths will go a trade whose best members could tell how far along the refining process was by the shape of the globs, called fishheads, leaping out of the molten bath. The old-timers could gauge the carbon content of each batch, called a heat, by the size and number of carbon monoxide bubbles rising to the surface. They could also judge the temperature of the heat by how a sample poured from a hand ladle.

"That's something I had to learn because we didn't have this stuff then," says Krupp, a 35-year veteran, nodding toward a computerized instrument panel.

"The computer is great. It was a great help," Morgan says. "But if Derby were to tell me no on something and the computer said yes, I would take his word rather than the computer's."

Open-hearth workers needed muscle and grit to accompany their metallurgical savvy.

For example, reaming the furnace tap hole, a maintenance chore once performed by crews between heats, was done by angling a steel bar down across the 30-foot width of the hearth to knock away deposits.

"The last man had to be at least 6 feet tall to hold the end of the bar," said Krupp.

Bar codes being used by industry

By PHILIP E. ROSS
New York Times News Service

DETROIT (NYT) — The bar codes designed to hurry groceries through checkout lanes are now being applied to parts on the automobile assembly line, allowing auto makers and suppliers to cut costs by managing their inventories more tightly.

The thick-and-thin, black-and-white lines on soup cans, cereal boxes and most supermarket products can be read by a laser scanner, sometimes a wand, sometimes mounted on the counter.

In a grocery, as soon as the code passes before the scanner, a sale is recorded and the computerized inventory is updated. Supermarkets pioneered the technology because they had the most to gain.

"Profit margins are so low in that business that the motivation to save is higher," said Prof. Ram Rachamadugu, an industrial management expert at the University of Michigan's business school. "Even when the states mandated stamping the price on products" — to insure that consumers would find a price they could read — "bar coding was still useful for accuracy and inventory control."

American auto makers became interested in bar coding in the early 1980's, a decade after the grocery industry had adopted the uniform product code for its bar labels. The lag largely reflected the feeling in Detroit that its competitive position was secure. But faced with increased competition from overseas and the oil shocks of the 1970's, the industry began to pay more attention to cost cutting and efficiency.

Bar codes are now imposed from the top: The auto makers require them of suppliers and many suppliers in turn require them of their suppliers. The effect has been to advance both plant automation and the Japanese manufacturing technique called "just-in-time," in which parts are shipped only as they are needed.

In 1981, 12 of the largest North American auto makers and suppliers formed the Automotive Industry Action Group to establish standards for bar codes and other specifications and to cajole smaller suppliers into accepting the technology.

But bar coding has so far been accepted with some reluctance by some auto suppliers. The suppliers feel they are being asked to bear the cost of the bar codes, while the benefit goes almost wholly to the customers. That feeling is part of their larger complaint that they are under pressure from auto makers both to improve quality and reduce prices.

At the Detroit stamping plant of the Budd Co., a major auto parts supplier, J. Richard Schmitt, a materials and inventory supervisor, said bar coding had so far saved money for customers but not for Budd.

"It hasn't really done anything for reducing our inventory," said Schmitt, who is helping introduce bar coding at Budd. "Die transitions, for example, are no faster." Die transitions, during which the molds against which metal parts are stamped are changed, are often the bottlenecks in a factory's assembly line.

As he walked through the plant, which employs 1,500 workers, Schmitt gestured toward a 20-ton die and the 800-ton piston that surmounted it, then to a carousel carrying half-finished door assemblies. Bar codes have made it easier to note the part's progress through the assembly line, he said, but had not saved labor costs.

"This terminal is linked to our data base," Schmitt said as he stood before a bank of video monitors. Budd's data base is in an IBM mainframe computer in Bloomfield, Mich.

Richard Kalin, an assembly clerk, demonstrated how he would label a crate of parts ready for a shipment: "I'm asking for a GT door," he said, entering its name, destination and other specifications on a keyboard. Moments later, the computer printer spewed out a three-part panel of labels noting the part, the quantity — there were 12 doors in a crate — the customer and the date. One panel is a receipt for internal accounting, the second for the customer and the third a tag for the crate.

Toy sales disappointing

Hearst News Service

Executives in the toy industry might have to start asking Santa Claus for the one thing they desperately want for Christmas this year – a dramatic increase in sales.

"There is no question that the first half of the year was a disappointment," said David Leibowitz, a market analyst with American Securities Corp. "As a result, most toy companies will earn less than originally anticipated."

Some market analysts blame lower sales on children's growing lack of interest in high-tech toys, which have flooded the market in forms ranging from high-priced interactive dolls to laser guns. Others say overseas suppliers' production and delivery difficulties are at fault.

Worlds of Wonder Inc., home of Lazer Tag and the talking bear, Teddy Ruxpin, felt the industry crunch in second-quarter losses of $10.4 million – compared with a $1.3 million loss a year earlier. Revenue dropped to $23 million from $23.5 million.

"People are singing the toy-industry blues," said Dick Stein, executive vice president and chief financial officer at WOW. But Stein was optimistic about the coming season. "We have a good product line this year, and they are all toys the consumer has demonstrated they like and will buy," he said.

High-tech toys like Teddy Ruxpin were expected to catapult the industry into big profits this year, bu those predictions have fizzled. Some say parents balk at high-tech's high prices, and children tire of the technological wonders.

"Children are getting a bit bored with the sameness of what's out there," Leibowitz said. "There is room for just so many Teddy Ruxpins and knockoffs."

Paul Valentine, a toy analyst at Standard & Poor's, told the Associated Press that toy makers simply don't have a "hot product," which is why this year is weaker for toys than any since 1983.

"Sales of the talking dolls died after Christmas, with the exception of Teddy Ruxpin," he said.

National tune-up franchise got its start in Beaumont

By ROBERT POOL
Beaumont Enterprise

BEAUMONT (AP) — A large map of the United States stands against the wall in Donald Ervin's office here, its face dotted with yellow flags and yellow push pins that trace the extent of one of the country's most successful franchisors — Precision Tune Inc.

Each of the flags represents one of the dozens of subfranchisors developing Precision Tune centers in different parts of the nation, and each of the 366 pins marks the location of a single store.

An observer's eye is naturally drawn to the clusters of yellow pins that decorate several metropolitan areas on the upper right side of the map, but Ervin, chairman and chief executive officer of Precision Tune, pays more attention to the wide open areas in the rest of the country.

Ervin plans to triple the number of Precision Tune franchises in the next five years, to 1,000 centers, and most of the growth will come in those wide open areas.

Although most of Ervin's yellow flags and pins are concentrated in the heavily populated northern and eastern parts of the country, Precision Tune got its start in Beaumont.

Bill Childs opened the first Precision Tune in 1975 in an abandoned service station at 4th and College streets. Childs, who was running a janitorial service company at the time, was looking for a business that would do well in an economic slump. He found one.

He opened a second location in Groves six months after the first, and began franchising the shops in 1978. By 1979, the company had 30 franchises. That number had jumped to 150 two years later.

His formula for a specialty tune-up shop that could get the job done in a few hours and do it cheaply was a hit.

The original Precision Tune at College and 4th is still there, but it was sold to franchisee Kirk Broiles. Precision Tune sold its last company-owned store in 1986 and now operates only through its franchises.

Ervin is a newcomer to Precision Tune. He was a banker for 28 years, the last 12 of them as president of Enterprise Bank in Fairfax County, Va., outside Washington, D.C. Those 28 years in banking were devoted to "supplying funds to small and growing businesses," Ervin says.

He became interested in franchising several years ago, and he was particularly interested in the auto aftermarket — specialty stores that provide service and repair to automobiles — because he was handling loans for a number of such businesses.

Ervin says he decided to leave banking because a number of changes in the industry had made his job less fulfilling. The franchise industry was a natural place to look for a second career because he believed franchise businesses would take an increasing portion of he consumer dollar in coming years. He was already familiar with Precision Tune through franchisers in the Washington area.

"I liked the way the company was run, and I liked the potential market for it," he says.

So last September he contacted Childs to see if he would be interested in selling his company, which by then had grown to about 350 franchises.

Ervin and a group of Washington investors completed the purchase April 30, and he took over as chairman, chief executive officer and president. He has wasted little time in gearing up the company to triple in size over the next five years.

Ervin says the key to any successful franchise operation is finding a good site. To this end he hired Bill Chaffee, whom he describes as "the top man in the franchising field on site selection." Chaffee, who recently joined Precision Tune as senior vice president for franchise development, comes from Grandy's Inc., where he headed up the site selection program for that fast food chain.

Childs, Ervin says, mostly left the site selection to the individual franchisers, but with Chaffee's hiring the company will become more involved in finding good locations for its franchisors.

Meanwhile, Ervin devoted his first two months at Precision Tune to developing a new marketing strategy for the chain. Marketing studies show that customers have become more interested in quality service.

General Foods to reorganize

By CALVIN SIMS
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK (NYT) — The General Foods Corp., a part of the Philip Morris Companies, said this week that it would eliminate most of its corporate staff and create separate operating companies to run its three lines of business.

General Foods, whose brand names include Kool-Aid, Maxwell House coffee, Jell-O gelatin and Entenmann's baked goods, said the reorganization is intended to reduce layers of management so that its divisions can make faster and more flexible decisions. But analysts said the goal was to increase profits.

While most of the 2,000 employees at the White Plains headquarters might lose their jobs, General Foods said it was too early to tell how many would actually leave. It did say it would try to place workers at one of the three operating companies.

A spokesman said the management staff would be reduced to a minimum, and analysts estimated that the company would save $150 million a year from the staff reductions.

Still, these projected savings failed to buoy Philip Morris stock in Tuesday's sinking market. The company's shares fell $1.625, to $103.375, on the New York Stock Exchange.

Under the reorganization plan, each of General Foods' three product sectors would become a separate operating company that would report directly to Philip Morris. The domestic grocery sector would become General Foods U.S.A., the worldwide coffee and international products sector would become General Foods Coffee and International, and the processed meat sector would become Oscar Mayer Foods.

"This decentralization will make our businesses more formidable competitors because they will be able to move more quickly and aggressively," said Phillip L. Smith, president and chief executive of General Foods. "And they will have all the resources they need to be successful." Smith, who is also vice chairman of Philip Morris, will become chairman of the three operating companies.

Analysts said that the restructuring marks the first intensive involvement of Philip Morris in the management of General Foods since it acquired the food company in 1985 for $5.6 billion. With that takeover, Philip Morris, the nation's biggest cigarette maker, became the nation's largest consumer products company.

Philip Morris acquired General Foods to diversify from its basic tobacco business.

Symphony and chorale

This year marks the 25th anniversary of the Midland/Odessa Symphony and Chorale. This year two events will be added to the concert schedule — "A Gourmet Season" and the new "Pops Series." "A Gourmet Season" showcases the musical talents of the symphony, conducted by Dr. Thomas Hohstadt, below, along with the culinary talents of some of the area's restaurants. The expanded "Pops Series" is the result of the success of the Christmas and Spring Cabaret Pops, says Connie Linsler, the organization's executive director.

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

A smorgasbord of musical offerings comes to ticket holders during the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale's 25th season.

This year, for the first time, the organization is presenting two concert series — The Master Season's "A Gourmet Season" and the all new "Pops Series."

"The Master Season — "A Gourmet Season" — showcases the musical talents of the symphony along with the culinary talents of some of the area's finer restaurants," says Connie Linsler, the organization's executive director. "Each person ordering a Master Season subscription will receive a set of coupons outlining 'meal specials' from participating restaurants."

Those restaurants include, in Midland's, Anasazi's, Imperial Garden and Shogun; and, Odessa's, Pelican's, Polly's at the Holiday Inn Centre, Legends at the Odessa Hilton, Shogun and The Barn Door.

"Another exciting feature of the 25th anniversary season is lower prices than last year with savings up to 25 percent for subscription ticket holders over single admission ticket prices," Ms. Linsler says.

For more information on ticket prices call the symphony offices, 563-5269, at Terminal.

The campaign drive for subscription ticket sales in Midland officially begins Saturday with an early sampling of the symphony's pops music. Pops at the College starts at 8 p.m. at Midland College. Odessa's drive kicks off at 8 p.m. Aug. 30 with the Pops at the Park Concert at Freedom Park. Both outdoor pops concerts are free and open to the public.

"An added attraction this year in celebration of the 25th anniversary will be free balloons for kids attending the outdoor pops concerts," Miss Linsler says. "Also, T-Shirts, highlighting the symphony's 25th anniversary logo, will be sold at both performances."

Food and beverages will be available at the outdoor pops concerts starting at 7 p.m.

The Pops Series begins Sept. 24 in Midland and Sept. 26 in Odessa. The Pops Series concerts will be held at the Holiday Inn Convention Center, Midland, and at the Holiday Inn Centre, Odessa. Showtime is 8 p.m. Remaining dates for the Pops Series are Dec. 10 and 12, Feb. 26 and 27 and May 6 and 7. The first listing in each pair of dates is the Midland performance.

"The idea for the development of the all new pops series came about after seeing the success of the Christmas and spring cabaret pops concerts over the last several years," Ms. Linsler says.

"Through large audience participation at those concerts we discovered a demand existed in this area for more pops concerts. This was reconfirmed through an audience survey."

The symphony is pleased with the response it's received thus far for the pops series.

"Ticket sales are exceeding expectation," says Ms. Linsler. "There has been a great interest by area corporations in sponsoring concerts on the series."

Next up on the organization's calendar is the "Battle of the Batons," Oct. 5 at 7 p.m. The show, to be televised and now in its second year, will be aired live on Channel 2, KMID-TV, from the Odessa Hilton.

"Local personalities compete against each other for the title of 'Best Amateur Conductor of the Permian Basin' in this entertaining production, which features the Symphony and Chorale," Miss Linsler says. "The show will also focus on the Thouvenel String Quartet, the Lone Star Brass Quintet and present an historical look at the symphony's 25 years."

Then, the Master Season Series begins Oct. 13 in Midland and Oct. 15 in Odessa when violinist Erick Friedman performs as guest artist.

All Master Season Concerts are performed on Tuesdays at Midland's Lee High School and Thursdays at Odessa's Bonham Junior High School. Concert time is 8 p.m. Other performances on this year's Master Season Concert Series are:

— Nov. 10 and 12, Robert Page, guest conductor, a native of West Texas and director of the Cleveland Orchestra Chorus;

— Feb 2 and 4, flutist Carol Wincenc, hailed as "The Queen of the Flute" by New York Magazine, First Prize Winner of the Naumburg Solo Flute Competition;

— March 22 and 24, National Young Artists Competition, some of the finest young talent will perform as the symphony presents the winners of the NYAC; — and April 19 and 21, pianist Li Ming-Qiang, from China, has toured in over 22 countries and his list of recordings include works by Handel, Beethoven, Schubert and Liszt, among others.

In addition, the Chorale and Lone Star Brass Quintet will present a special performance on April 5 in Midland and April 7 in Odessa. Locations will be announced later. In September, the Thouvenel String Quartet will announce the dates for its five-concert series in Midland and Odessa.

The organization has enjoyed strong community support through the years. This year is no exception.

"The Symphony and Chorale could not have reached this landmark 25th anniversary year without the efforts and generosity of countless contributors, volunteers and concert sponsors," Ms. Linsler says.

The Country Music Hall of Fame and Museum in Nashville has many unusual items on display like this set of golf clubs given to Willie Nelson, Elvis Presley's cadillac and the jacket Kenny Rogers wore in the film, "The Gambler." The popular musuem is celebrating its 20th anniversary.

By JOE EDWARDS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — It has Elvis Presley's 1960 Cadillac and the long cream-colored coat worn by Kenny Rogers in the movie, "The Gambler." There's also a picture of Willie Nelson posing as a high school football player in 1948.

All this, and much more, are on display at the Country Music Hall of Fame & Museum, which is currently celebrating its 20th anniversary.

The Hall of Fame & Museum, at the head of Music Row, is the scene of an every day Nashville cliche: tourists in Bermuda shorts and athletic shoes, with cameras around their necks, piling out of tour buses and filing into the building.

It bills itself as the most popular music museum in the country. With about 400,000 visitors each year, it touts itself as having a greater attendance than the Museum of Broadcasting and the Songwriters Hall of Fame, both in New York City.

"There's no other field of entertainment that has an arts program like this," says Bill Ivey, director of the Country Music Foundation, which runs the Hall of Fame.

Besides the plaques saluting the 45 members of the Hall of Fame, there are 80 costumes on display, 74 instruments and various memorabilia such as the mechanical bull used by actor John Travolta in the 1980 movie, "Urban Cowboy."

Inductees into the Hall of Fame are announced each October during the nationally televised Country Music Association awards show.

Other items on display include:

— The dress country star Loretta Lynn made early in her career and which she gave to actress Sissy Spacek to wear in the movie about Miss Lynn's life, "Coal Miner's Daughter."

— The piece of cardboard on which Nelson wrote the song, "Hello Walls," in 1961. Written in a garage, the tune was Nelson's first hit as a songwriter.

— A collection of 30 photos, mostly landscapes, taken by Rogers, a photography buff.

"The country music fans can see important items connected with the legendary stars," Ivey said. "They can go further into their music.

"The non-fans can do the same thing but the hall of fame shows them the historical depth of the music and the diversity of it."

Surveys have shown that Presley's Cadillac is the most popular item in the 36,000-square-foot museum. Presley, his manager Tom Parker and RCA Records donated the car to the museum in 1976.

"He used this car for a long time and toured all over in it," Ivey said. "He had a lot of them, but this was his main one. It's probably the most photographed thing in our collection."

Kinescopes of Presley performing are shown in a theater in the museum. Another theater shows performances by such country music pioneers as Jimmie Rodgers and Merle Travis.

Visitors, who pay $6 for adults and $1.50 for children, also can take a quiz about songwriters or stand on a replica of the Grand Ole Opry stage.

A section saluting country star Johnny Cash will be added later this year.

Three blocks away is another part of the facility, Studio B. This is the studio that has produced more country music hits than anywhere else. It was the recording home of Dolly Parton, Chet Atkins, Jim Reeves and Hank Snow. Presley recorded more than 100 songs in the studio, including "Are You Lonesome Tonight."

Behind the scenes, the museum has 130,000 discs in its library and 10,000 still photographs. Museum officials work with local education representatives on special projects. Others work on projects to issue newly discovered recordings by country music pioneers such as Hank Williams Sr.

"We're almost like the Smithsonian Institution," Ivey said.

Items in the facility are not appraised, but insurance on the contents is about $5 million.

Ivey said he finds it interesting that country music, viewed by some as the least sophisticated musical form, "is by far the most advanced in this area, preserving the history of the music and interpreting it."

Hollywood has different attitude toward working moms

By JUDY FARAH

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Actresses Shelley Long and Rhea Perlman hid behind the "Cheers" bar when they were pregnant, but Tyne Daly and Meredith Baxter Birney boasted big bellies on their TV shows.

Actresses today are enjoying tremendous freedom in combining work and mothering, but that wasn't always the case. Just six years ago Lynn Redgrave was fired because she wanted to breast-feed her 3-week-old daughter, Annabel, while she was shooting "House Calls" for CBS.

"It was ghastly," said the actress, who unsuccessfully sued MCA and Universal Television for $10.5 million. "I was told I could not come back to work with my child. I was appalled. When it was suggested that was an impossible choice, I was fired."

Today, Miss Redgrave would have an easier time being a working mom since pregnancies are often woven into scripts, and some studios provide day-care facilities and nurseries and give actresses time out on shoots to feed their babies.

Working pregnant actresses are nothing new. Thirty-four years ago, millions watched as Lucille Ball, through advance filming, gave birth to Little Ricky on "I Love Lucy" while in real life, she delivered her son, Desi Arnaz IV.

However, actress pregnancies became less public after that. Some either put off having children or decided not to have any at all because they feared they would be denied roles.

Patty Duke, president of the Screen Actors Guild, said she was unaware of any such problems with actresses today.

"Many producers have been more than willing to accommodate actresses who are expecting. Producers, in several instances, have been able to work it into the storyline," said Carol Akiyama, spokeswoman for the Alliance of Motion Picture and Television Producers.

They must, or they risk losing a major star. Five of the top 10 television shows have had to use clever storylines or camera trickery to weave star pregnancies into the script.

Susan Saint James, a divorced mother on "Kate & Allie," was placed in bubble baths and hospital beds to disguise her pregnancy. Priscilla Presley's pregnancy coincided with her carrying Bobby Ewing's child on "Dallas." Constance McCashin was pregnant both off and on the screen in "Knots Landing."

"We are happy to have that in our lives. That's what life's about," said Gary Goldberg, creator and producer of NBC's "Family Ties."

"The work place should be an extension of our roles as mother and father. We love having babies and kids around. We think you don't have to give up anything to work."

When Miss Baxter Birney was pregnant with twins, Goldberg built a nursery across the stage. "Our whole schedule had to be adjusted to her feeding, but that's a happy adjustment," he said.

That concept was extended onto the lot of Paramount Studios, where a day-care facility was established for the cast and crew of movies and such TV shows as "Family Ties," "Cheers" and "McGyver." Fifty families have signed up.

A special dressing room was set up for Miss Daly's daughter, Alyxandra, on the set of "Cagney & Lacey."

"One little goo-goo and they would stop (shooting). They had a method. Tyne breast-fed in the room," said Miss Daly's spokeswoman, Marilyn Reiss.

Phylicia Rashad, the mother of five children on "The Cosby Show," hid her pregnancy last season behind briefcases, grocery bags and pillows. She also breast-fed Condola Phylea on the set.

"Usually my daughter's with me everywhere I go. I take her to work with me," Miss Rashad said.

The writers at "Moonlighting," though, will have to be more creative now that Cybill Shepherd (Maddie Hayes) is pregnant with twins and Alyce Beasley (Ms. DiPesto) is also expecting. Ms. DiPesto can hide behind her receptionist desk. But Maddie Hayes the detective will obviously be unable to slide down rails, jump out of windows and do belly flops as she has in the past.

Miss Shepherd, who won't be returning until after she gives birth in early October, filmed special scenes in June that will later be inserted into stories.

Television isn't the only medium affected by pregnancies. Production on the sequel to "Romancing the Stone" and "Jewel of the Nile" was postponed by 20th Century Fox because Kathleen Turner is pregnant. Two-time Academy Award winner Sally Field will take a hiatus from films after the birth of her third child later this year.

However, Jessica Lange went right to work on "Crimes of the Heart" after giving birth to her daughter, Hannah.

'Can't Buy Me Love' sparkles

MYRA LEE SALCEDO

Salcedo

As fresh and exuberant as the Beatles' song of the same name, "Can't Buy Me Love" describes teen angst with a deftness not seen since "The Breakfast Club."

The light-hearted youth comedy, written by newcomer Michael Swerdlick (an attorney who wrote his first screenplay, no less!) concerns a plain average blend-into-the-wallpaper kind of guy, Ronald Miller (Patrick Dempsey) who literally buys the attentions of the head-cheerleader Cindy Mancini (Amanda Peterson) for a month in order to become popular with the 'in' crowd.

Miller assumes that it's not who you are but who you are seen with that counts, an assumption which will inevitably reverse before the credits roll. Even though the ending is predictable, getting to the age-old theme of "Be yourself" is great fun thanks to the acting talents of Dempsey (who starred as Eugene in the Broadway touring company of Neil Simon's "Brighton Beach Memoirs") and the smart-aleck allure of Seth Green (who portrayed the young Woody Allen in "Radio Days) as Miller's younger brother, Chuckie.

Even the red-haired Courtney ("Children of the Corn") Gains as Kenneth, Miller's buddy and fellow nerd, does a commendable job of portraying the loyal friend whose friendship is trod in the dust when Miller becomes the most popular guy on campus.

What makes the film work is that the typical stereotypes of jocks and nerds aren't as flat and rigid as most films ("Revenge of the Nerds," "Porky's") insist on portraying them to be. The so-called nerds of "Can't Buy Me Love" are ostracized not because they laugh too loud, belch or pick their noses (the gospel according to Nerdism in "Revenge of the Nerds"). They are nerds because they would rather work a mean geometry problem than execute a perfect pass on the football field.

The best moments happen after Miller is once again relegated to Nerdom in the guise of a "social leper" and the question becomes: "Who are the real nerds?" "Are they the jocks who followed a nerd who made fools of them?" "Or are they the ones who understood and detested the ruse all along?"

Some of the funniest lines concern the "turn-about is fair play concept."

When one of the popular girls (who dated Miller during his Mr. Big Stuff phase) spies him driving by and labels his car the "nerdmobile," a friend replies, "seems to me you had some pretty good times in that 'nerdmobile.'"

But the best scene by far involves Courtney reminding a jock and big man on campus of a childhood memory (when Courtney carried his rival, — injured and hysterical — 12 blocks to aid after he fell from a treehouse).

It's all the small touches — Chuckie decapitating a Barbie doll with a guillotine for a French class project; a triumphant Miller riding his lawn mower off into the sunset; nerds recognizing a new wave dance for what it is — an African healing ritual — that makes "Can't Buy Me Love" sparkle.

You can't buy love, but you can buy entertainment and "Can't Buy Me Love," fills the bill.

Basinger steals the show in 'Nadine'

In the spirit of "Raising Arizona," director-/screenwriter Robert Benton (who grew up in Waxahachie and Oak Cliff) brings us a similar tale of down-home humor with a squabbling, not-too-bright "just folks" couple in "Nadine."

Best known for his work on "Kramer vs. Kramer" and "Places in the Heart," Benton has a good ear for dialogue, which saves the light romantic comedy about Vernon (Jeff Bridges) and Nadine (Kim Basinger) Hightower from being so-so.

Set in 1950s Austin, where Nadine is a hairdresser in the Alamo Beauty Shop and Vernon runs a losing operation called the Bluebonnet Lounge (a poorly located roadhouse that does $6 a day when business is good), the story opens with the couple on the verge of divorce (and Nadine secretly pregnant) kept together by murder and mayhem.

The fun begins when Nadine attempts to retrieve some "art studies" (risque photos) from a sleazy photographer who said he knew Hugh Hefner. Tired of waiting for huge sums of money to come in and deciding that posing for "art studies" wasn't such a good idea after all, Nadine badgers the photographer (in an inspired scene) into returning her photos. While in the studio, Nadine witnesses a murder, and is given an envelope containing something far more valuable than her photos.

Miss Basinger is superb as the fast-talking "classy white trash," and brings a natural freshness to the earthy "Nadine," a role that could easily have been portrayed as whiny in anyone else's hands. Miss Basinger's no-nonsense demeanor is also a perfect foil for Bridge's boyish optimism and charm.

Glenne Headly and Rip Torn have some fun as a small-time floozy and a big-time crook. The acting is fine and the plot moves along well enough, but it is Ms. Basinger who steals every scene, proving that she has a flair for comedy — glimpsed in "Blind Date" — and developed to fruition in "Nadine."

Miss Headly is also believable as Vernon's good-hearted mistress, an accounts receivable clerk in the Lone Star Brewery, and yearns to marry him so much that she is willing to steal his unpaid bills from under the nose of her boss.

Although not a Movie of the Year Oscar contender, the warm-hearted "Nadine" is engaging, and Miss Headly has a particularly funny and memorable scene when she returns a negligee to Bridges (an unintended gift).

What makes the film enjoyable and funny is not its strained zaniness, but the utter seriousness with which Nadine and Vernon and everyone else in the film attempt to cope with a series of dangerous mishaps with a "kiss-my-grits" wit. The Southern-fried humor works well in this love story in which the heroine doesn't simper "Love means never saying you're sorry," but snaps, with withering white-trash sarcasm, "'Sorry' just don't get it done, Vernon."

'Nadine" gets the job done, with a few laughs along the way.

"Nadine," rated PG-13 for adult language, and sexual innuendo, is playing at the UA Cine 4 on Cuthbert.

Jeff Bridges hasn't had limited career

By BOB THOMAS

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — For a fellow who was Los Angeles-born and raised amid the hurly and the burly of Hollywood, Jeff Bridges has had an amazing career of playing down-home, good ol' boys on the screen.

It all started with his role as the small-town Texas tough in "The Last Picture Show." That earned him a 1971 Academy nomination as best supporting actor (Ben Johnson won the Oscar for the same film) as well as other clod-kicker roles: "Lolly Madonna," "Bad Company," "Hearts of the West," "Rancho Deluxe" and "Heaven's Gate."

Now he's once more in the heart of Texas with Tri-Star's "Nadine." He plays Vernon Hightower, owner of a failed bar, the Bluebonnet Lounge, and estranged husband of the erratic beautician Nadine, who is played by Kim Bassinger. They get thrown back together after she witnesses a murder and is menaced by the bad guys, headed by Rip Torn.

"Nadine," which was filmed in Austin and San Antonio, also marks a return to Texas for the Waxahachie-born Robert Benton. The writer-director immortalized his home in "Places in the Heart." Benton, who had directed Bridges in "Bad Company," wrote "Nadine" with the actor in mind.

"I guess it all started with 'The Last Picture Show,'" the 37-year-old Bridges said, reflecting about the southwest direction of his career. "After that, the other parts started coming.

"The accent? It came easy. During 'The Last Picture Show,' I got a friendship going with one of the young locals in Wichita Falls, a fellow named Lloyd Catlett, who is now my stand-in. He's still got his accent, and he's around a lot. So when I hear him, it keeps me going in the right direction."

Bridges hasn't been limited in his career. He has also portrayed an adventurer ("King Kong"), a pro-football player ("Against All Odds") and an extra-terrestrial ("Star Man"). He received an Oscar nomination for best actor for his portrayal of the alien in "Star Man."

With the exception of Michael Caine, he is probably Hollywood's busiest star.

"I've been away from my family 10 months out of the past year," he said. "That's not good. I've got to figure out some way to take them along on location — or else find pictures to make in Hollywood."

Bridges knows what it's like to grow up in a family with a traveling father. His, Lloyd Bridges, was busy with a far-flung career that included the TV series "Sea Hunt" when sons Beau and Jeff were young.

"But the good thing about our work," Jeff said, "is that we can also have two or three months to devote entirely to our wife and children."

The Bridges boys seem to defy the legend that stars' kids become troubled adults. Jeff gave his first performance at 6 months, then retired until he appeared at 8 in his father's TV series. After high school, he studied acting at New York's Berghof Studios and made his feature debut in the 1969 "Halls of Anger."

Bridges' rugged good looks and take-charge manner have made him much sought-after by filmmakers.

"I'll still fight for roles when I'm attracted to something," he said. "Funny thing — most of the ones I audition for I lose. I sure liked a script I read, 'Desert Bloom.' Jon Voight got the part and I've heard good things about the movie.

"I don't get too upset when I lose a part. I kind of look at the interviews as sort of an end to themselves. I go in there and give a performance, then I go on to other things. If I get the part, that's the cherry on the cake. The interviews are just an opportunity to get up there and give it a good shot."

Bridges just finished what may be his best role so far — the automobile innovator in Francis Coppola's "Tucker."

"I didn't audition for that one at all," the actor said. "I got a call on a Friday to report for work on Monday."

YOUR HOROSCOPE

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Work while others play and you will move ahead of them. Success in the coming year is tied to your ability to concentrate on business. Consolidate recent gains. It will be easier to keep a relationship on track if you can lighten a financial burden you have had to shoulder. Those in college find out what they really want to do. A windfall is possible.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: Baltimore Orioles star Cal Ripken Jr., author Sir Max Beerbohm, TV host Dennis James, announcer Durward Kirby, pianist Louis Teicher, musician Mason Williams, Richard Cardinal Cushing.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You are in a mood to get a few things off your mind. Choose the right time and place. Your candor will help you recover from a blow. Get busy rebuilding a relationship.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You should be riding high all week. Follow a specific plan and focus on money issues. Find a commonsense way to introduce innovative ideas. The publishing field holds new interest for you.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): The longer you wait to speak out, the harder it will be. Repair the damage caused by a weekend confrontation. Acting arrogant will not go over well with your business associates. Be tactful.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): No one is likely to pull the wool over your eyes today. Move quickly to consolidate and build on recent gains. Open a savings or money market account. Check an insurance policy.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Make decisions with special care so they do not backfire. It may be time to sell instead of buy, but check with an expert first. The challenges that a trip presents double your pleasure.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your colleagues could make unreasonable demands on your time. Save your energy for tackling projects that will benefit you directly. A family question needs to be answered honestly and promptly. Be frank.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You should have no trouble staying in a positive frame of mind today. Your attitude makes success quite likely. A relationship can be a good one if you work at it. Postpone travel.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You are possessed by the spirit of fun today. It may be difficult to concentrate on work. Forge ahead and show fortitude. It is essential that you meet all deadlines.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): The fast pace may get to you today. Doing an unpleasant task well could lead to a new job offer. Your ambition is showing, but that is fine. Play your cards close to your chest.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Take care of practical matters. Plan on doing more traveling. Your creativity is enormous. The sky is the limit so far as what you can accomplish! Share good news with loved ones.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Refuse to let someone hold a past mistake over your head. Get everything into the open yourself. Tension will fade and those who really care will be forgiving. Show humility.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You have a chance to go far if you rid yourself of certain hang-ups. You have all the right qualifications for a special job. Be supportive of other family members. Listen attentively.

Opening lead: Ace of

Some contracts look so easy you don't bother to look out for possible trouble. Beware—danger lurks around every corner.

Even though his partner was a passed hand, South chose to open with a strong two-bid in case his partner held two aces. When North responded negatively, South simply bid the spade game.

It did not take South long to go down. West led the ace of diamonds and continued the suit for declarer to ruff. East followed to this trick with the king. Declarer went after trumps, leading the jack. West ducked, but then won the queen with the ace.

Interpreting the king of diamonds as a suit-preference signal for the higher-ranking suit, West shifted to a heart. East took his ace and reverted to the queen of diamonds, and his partner's ten of trumps was promoted to the setting trick.

Had declarer been alive to the possibility of a trump-promotion play, he could have taken countermeasures. Declarer was in too much of a hurry to draw trumps—dummy's lone trump had an important role to fulfill in keeping East off lead at the crucial moment.

At trick three declarer should have ruffed one of his master clubs in dummy. Then he could lead a diamond from the table and, in a loser-on-loser play, discard the heart loser from his hand!

The contract would then be unbeatable. Declarer could win any return and set about drawing trumps. As long as the ten of trumps was guarded no more than twice, the contract was assured—there was no way the defenders could promote an extra trump trick.

Archaeology exhibit at musuem

ODESSA — On display through Sept. 5 at the Presidential Museum is the traveling exhibit "Archaeology of Texas," produced by The University of Texas Institute of Texan Cultures at San Antonio.

The exhibit explores how archaeological research helps Texans gain an understanding of the state's first inhabitants.

"Texas history and material culture have been revealed and studied through various sites around the state," says Anne Sherburn, the museum's director. "For example, dark stains in the soil indicate patterns and hearths and so describe the settlement patterns of early Texans. Stone tools and pottery detail the trade routes, diet and artistic development of those living in the Neo-American Period."

Through artifacts loaned from Midland's Museum of the Southwest, the pre-history of Ector County and West Texas is documented. From the early spear points produced by Paleo-Americans over 10,000 years ago, to finely crafted bone musical instruments, the lifestyle of Ector County residents is revealed. Complementing the artifacts, are photographs of pictographs and rock art found in Ector County.

In addition to learning about early man through the artifacts he left behind, the exhibit explains the science of archaeology. Field techniques are detailed, excavation procedures are highlighted and laboratory processes are explained throughout the exhibition. The importance of preserving the artifacts and archaeological record is emphasized.

The Presidential Museum, 622 N. Lee St., is open Tuesday through Saturday 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. No admission is charged.

Dance to be held at Million Barrel Museum
