Dalhart possible MX base site

WASHINGTON (AP) — Dalhart, Texas, is under consideration as a support base in the unlikely event that part of the proposed MX missile system is located in the state, the Air Force has announced.

A base at the Texas Panhandle town is included as one of eight options being studied by the Air Force in the MX draft environmental impact statement scheduled for release next month.

Six of the eight options locate the entire system in the Nevada-Utah desert, which the Air Force has described as the preferred location for the massive system.

The seventh analysis included in the report considers locating the entire system of 200 missiles and 4,600 shelters in West Texas and Eastern New Mexico.

In that case, the proposed support bases would be at Dalhart and at Cannon Air Force Base in Clovis, N.M.

The eighth analysis considers split-basing, or placing half the system in Utah-Nevada with a base at Coyote Spring, Nev., and the other half in Texas-New Mexico with a support base at Clovis.

Lt. Col. Mike Terrill, spokesman for the mobile missile system, said the draft statement also analyzes a ninth possibility of taking no action at all.

After the proposal generated criticism in Utah and Nevada, Congress ordered the Air Force to at least examine alternatives.

The final decision on where the system should be located will be made by Congress.

Elected officials from Texas have said they doubted the MX system would be located outside of Utah and Nevada.

Sen. John Tower, the Texas Republican in line to become chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, said he thought the Pentagon would conclude that the Nevada-Utah desert is the only appropriate location for the entire system.

Pentagon officials have said their preference would be locate the MX in Nevada-Utah.

"The most promising area looks like Nevada-Utah," Terrill said. "Within that there are six different options."

The new Air Force schedule for completing the examination of prospective locations calls for the draft environmental statement to released in the middle of December, followed by a 90-day period for public comments when hearings will be held in all four states under consideration.

The schedule for the public hearings has not been announced.

The Air Force said the final environmental impact statement will be released as soon as possible after the public comment period ends, and its final decision on where to locate the system will be made no sooner than 30 days after that.

Terrill said if everything goes as planned a likely date for making the final decision would be early summer 1981.

The proposed MX system would move 200 MX nuclear missiles among 4,600 launching sites in a hide-and-seek pattern designed to protect them from attack.

American killed in Korean jet crash

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — A Korean Airlines jumbo jet from Los Angeles crash-landed in heavy fog and caught fire as it plunged onto the runway at Seoul's Kimpo Airport today, killing 12 people including an American, airline officials said. At least 15 of the 214 survivors were injured.

Military sources said the pilot, who was killed in the crash, reported trouble with the controls, then the Boeing 747 brushed an anti-aircraft gun emplacement as it was landing and a wing hit a military vehicle parked off the runway.

Survivors said when the plane touched the runway, it filled quickly with smoke and fire. The upper portion of the fuselage from the cockpit to the tail section was largely destroyed by the roaring flames, while the lower section of the body and the wings remained mostly intact. Inside portions of the cabin were turned into charred rubble.

Quick action by crew members in opening the emergency exits and lowering escape chutes was credited with the large number of survivors. Authorities said the flames did not erupt in full force until most of those aboard had been able to escape. Crews worked through the day to dismantle the gutted carcass of the airliner and clear the runway.

Reports of the number of dead varied, but airline authorities said 12 bodies had been recovered and all others aboard were accounted for.

A spokesman for the line said six passengers, one of them an American, and six crew members, five Koreans and a Hong Kong Chinese, were killed. He denied a report from his Los Angeles office that a ground crewman was killed fighting the fire.

In Los Angeles, Korean Air Lines spokesman Bill Core gave the following names and residences, if known, of the passengers who died in the crash:

Mr. Donald Sailer, believed to be from Tacoma, Wash.; Mrs. K. Hammerschlag, exact address unknown, but family was in Seoul; Mrs. Hong Ok Saeng, of Seoul; Mrs. Kim Hwa Suk, of Los Angeles; Miyake Tane of Japan; Mr. Park Chang Kwon, of Korea.

South Korean officials said two Americans were among the injured, that one was released from a hospital after treatment, and that the other was in good condition.

They identified only one of the Americans, Sue Hachtmann, 44, of San Antonio, Texas, a native of Korea, who said she "barely managed" to escape from the plane.

A spokesman at Severance Hospital in Seoul said none of the injured were in serious condition.

The airliner left Los Angeles with 206 passengers and 20 crew members and refueled en route in Anchorage, Alaska. The airline's office in Los Angeles said 27 Americans and 12 Canadians were among the passengers.

The big jet circled Seoul several times and hit an "unspecified barrier" alongside the runway as it landed about 7:15 a.m., the district aviation control director for Seoul, Kim Pyong Hoon, told a news conference.

But reliable military sources said the pilot radioed he was having trouble with his controls shortly before he began his landing.

Dresser sues Iran

DALLAS (AP) — A $17.3 million suit has been filed in federal court here against the government of Iran by Dresser Industries, Inc.

The suit, filed here Tuesday, alleges that the revolutionary government of Iran has converted property belonging to Dresser in violation of existing contracts and without paying compensation.

U.S. District Judge Barefoot Sanders has been asked to determine the liability after studying facts in the contract dispute.

Three charged in robberies

By DEBORAH BRIDGES
Staff Writer

A former Pampa resident is in the process of being extradicted from Lovington, N. M., on aggravated robbery charges, culminating a month - long investigation by county and city officers in connection with two armed robberies here on the night of Oct. 15, authorities said today.

Edgar Lee Dyer, 30, formerly of Pampa, is being held in Lea County Jail on two counts of aggravated robbery, but had refused to sign a waiver of extradition at press time today, a spokesman for the Lea County Sheriff's Office said.

Gray County Sheriff Rufe Jordan said Dyer is the third of three men arrested by officers of the Pampa Police Department and Gray County deputies, charged with the robbery - at - gunpoint of two men in the Coronado Inn and of the Allsup's convenience store, located at the intersection of Price Road and State Highway 152, on Oct. 15 and Oct. 16.

Also arrested in connection with the robberies were Ricky Young, 29, of 613 W. Foster and Robert Willard Dwight, 27, of 9075 Bivins, Amarillo, the sheriff said. Young was arrested Oct. 21 and Dwight was arrested Nov. 4.

Following his arrest, bond for Young was set at $10,000 each for two counts of aggravated robbery. Dwight was assessed bail of $25,000 each for two counts of the same charge. Both men were in Gray County Jail in lieu of bail at press time today.

According to Sheriff Jordan, the events began at 11:30 p.m. Oct. 15 when two men — identified by officials as Curtis Lynn Cliner, 37, and Wilford Charles Dickson Jr., 30, both of Irving — were robbed by three men who forced their way into the motel room at the Coronado Inn.

No money was taken, Jordan said. However, the two victims were searched and a quart of vodka was taken.

Earlier city police reports said Cliner was struck on the head with the butt of a short - barrelled, 12 - gauge shotgun. Cliner was treated and released from Highland General Hospital following the attack, police said.

Jordan said the suspects left the scene of that crime and went to 412 Somerville, the apartment of Mike Childress. He said the suspects, along with two or three others, stayed at the residence for about two hours, drinking.

At 1:30 a.m., the suspects reportedly drove out to the Allsups, entering the business carrying a sawed - off shotgun and a sawed - off .22 - caliber rifle, he said.

Gray County Sheriff's Department reports say $144 was taken in the holdup.

Jordan said the three suspects were driving a 1973 blue Ford owned by Diana Marie Wilhelm of Moore, Okla., at the time of the Allsup's robbery.

The automobile was reportedly recovered by police.

Dyer, Young and Dwight have all been indicted by the grand jury and will be going to trial soon, the sheriff said.

"I'd like to stress that the cooperation and coordinated efforts of both departments (Pampa Police Department and Gray County Sheriff's Office) in giving 30 days of hard work to these armed robberies brought about the apprehension of these three subjects," Jordan said.

Chief of Police J. J. Ryzman said, "I am pleased with the way the two departments cooperated in the investigation."

Roloff trial could affect local day school

By SHEILA ECCLES
Staff Writer

A Pampa independent Baptist minister will be attending the Austin civil trial of evangelist Lester Roloff — a trial which may have legal implications for the future of a local day care center, sponsored by the Pampa Baptist Temple.

The Rev. Jerry West of the Pampa Baptist Temple is currently involved in a licensing question with the state of Texas concerning the church - sponsored day care center at 500 E. Kingsmill. The licensing question concerns only the day care center portion of the Pampa Christian Academy, a school for nursery through 12 - year - old students, operated by the Pampa Baptist Temple.

West has returned the center's certified license to the state of Texas. The license is needed for legal operation of the day care center.

"We will not renew our license to operate," West has said.

In a claim similar to that of the controversial Roloff, West says, "I feel that the license is a violation of freedom between church and state."

During testimony in Austin Tuesday, Roloff said, "A state agency set up to oversee human resources has no say over that which is divine. They are stepping out of bounds."

West says, "The state has no ground to ask for the licensing of day care centers. There is no licensing of Sunday schools required. We feel that the day care center is an arm of our Sunday school — only it is operated Monday through Friday."

In 1979, State District Judge Charles Mathews ruled that radio evangelist Brother Roloff must have a license to keep his Texas homes for wayward children in operation.

"The state is currently in court with a new suit against Roloff. The state again wants Roloff to obtain a license for the operation of his homes for children," Assistant Attorney General David Young said.

The state of Texas has listed strict guidelines for the operation of day care facilities.

"The day care facilities, including church schools, generally comply with the guidelines of the state," according to Mary Hardesty of the State Attorney General's Office.

Questions concerning licensing of the Pampa Baptist Temple Day Care Center were submitted to the Texas Department of Human Resources in Amarillo several months ago.

The Amarillo staff conducted an investigation of the Pampa center and referred the questions to their legal staff, the Attorney General's Office.

The referral from Amarillo is now being "looked into" in Austin, Ms. Hardesty said, and could result in an injunction against the Pampa center.

The minimum day care licensing and operation standards, set forth by the state of Texas, include this paragraph: "When it appears that a person has violated, is violating, or is threatening to violate the licensing, certification, or registration requirements of this chapter or registration rules and standards, the division may file a suit in a district court in Travis County or in the county where the facility is located for assessment and recovery of civil penalties under Section 42.075 of this code, for injunctive relief, including a temporary restraining order, or for both injunctive relief and civil penalties."

According to the minimum standards, a civil penalty of not less than $50 nor more than $100 for each day of violation and for each act of violation should be assessed if the person: "(1) threatens serious harm to a child in a facility by violating a provision of this chapter or a department rule or standards; (2) violates a provision of this chapter or a department rule or standard three or more times within a 12-month period; or (3) places a public advertisement for an unlicensed facility."

In the yellow pages of the Pampa telephone directory are two listings for the Pampa Christian Academy. The listing appears under the heading "Day Nurseries and Child Care." The listing itself does not mention the words "day care" but lists ages and times of the academy.

"The referral in Austin now is simply concerning the licensing situation at the Pampa school," Ms. Hardesty said.

"The result of the Roloff trial now being conducted in Austin may have some bearing on this case," she said.

West said, "We do not want a legal battle over this."

"However, we will continue to operate the day care center. I have talked to the congregation about the situation, and we want the right to teach our children," West said.

Rev. West was quick to add that his school will comply to the letter with educational and health standards generally accepted in state schools.

The Pampa Baptist Temple Day Care Center has been certified by Pampa Health Department Officer Elmer Young.

"It was approximately one year ago when we checked the school and it was found in compliance with the health regulations," Young said.

"We will welcome investigations by the fire departments and health department at any time," West said.

"It is just the state licensing to operate our facility that we are against. Until the 1870's there was no such thing as a state school," West said.

"We will not close down. All my congregation have vowed," West said.

Public hearings slated on city block grant application

City officials have slated two public hearings on a pre - application for a Community Development Block Grant — the city's fifth try for the federal funds.

The first hearing will be at 7 p.m. Nov. 25 and the second at 9:30 a.m. Dec. 9. Both hearings are scheduled in the city commission room of city hall.

The grant is described by officials as a multi - faceted program designed to upgrade living conditions in under - privileged areas of the city.

City Manager Mack Wofford said the purpose of the hearings is "to allow citizens to make a comment on the methods we propose to use to expend these funds."

Wofford said the "target areas" will be the south and southeast portions of the city. Should the city qualify for the funds, the money will be used for replacement of water lines, street improvements — including paving, curb and gutter and drainage installation — and housing rehabilitation. The city manager said it could include demolition of unoccupied structures and improvement of park and recreation facilities.

The city will be judged on a "point" system with 645 points the minimum necessary to qualify for the grant. The city will be given a certain number of points pursant to the amount of low to moderate - income residents the funds will affect.

"Last year was the closest we've come to qualifying," the city manager said.

Pampa was twelfth on the list of applicants, he said. However, the grant was only made available to 10 qualified applicants.

County treasurers to meet

Gray County Treasurer Jean Scott will be conducting a meeting for all treasurers from the 26 counties in the Panhandle on Friday at 10 a.m. in the Gray County Courthouse coffee room.

The meeting will include reports on the September conference and information about an insurance plan being offered the Texas Association of Counties (TAC).

Grants and procedures will also be discussed in the Friday meeting, which is the first of its kind to take place in Gray County.

Local girl escapes abduction

A 16 - year - old Pampa teenager narrowly escaped an abduction attempt last night when an automobile drove into the parking lot of M. K. Brown Auditorium and distracted her captor. Police are continuing to search for the suspect, city authorities said today.

Chief of Police J. J. Ryzman said the kidnap attempt occurred about 6:45 p.m. Tuesday.

The near - victim told police she was approached from behind by a man she believed to be about 20 years old. Ryzman said the suspect reportedly put a hand on her neck and his arm around her midsection.

Ryzman said the suspect told the girl, "Don't scream or it will make it harder on yourself."

The suspect allegedly told the girl he had a gun, but the girl said she never actually saw it, Ryzman said.

At this time, another vehicle drove into the parking lot and distracted the suspect, allowing the girl to wrench from his grasp and get away, Ryzman said. The girl immediately notified the police, he added.

The police chief said the suspect left the scene in a vehicle. He said officers are continuing to investigate the incident.

The girl was not harmed, Ryzman said.

Roloff attorney says case could determine state's role

(See related story Page 1)

By KEN HERMAN
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — The lawyer leading evangelist Lester Roloff's umpteenth battle against state licensing of his children's homes says the outcome of this fight could determine if only the state can decide how to care for youngsters.

"This is a very important case however it goes," attorney William Ball said during a break in Tuesday's civil trial. "It could determine whether there will be methodology other than the state's chosen means for the care of children."

The State of Texas long has argued that Roloff needs a state license to operate his homes for wayward youth and courts previously have ruled in favor of the government.

The evangelist, however, has steadfastly refused. He has testified the state has no right to license what the Lord has called him to do.

Roloff recently shifted control of his homes from Roloff Evangelistic Enterprises to his People's Baptist Church of Corpus Christi.

He argues that the state cannot require a license because the constitution guarantees separation of church and state.

Assistant Attorney General David Young, who is seeking $46,000 in civil penalties and an order forcing Roloff to get a license, put on the state's short case Monday. Testimony continued today in the suit.

"Comprehensive, suffocating, minute surveillance is a very, very dangerous thing where First Amendment liberties are involved," Ball said.

The Harrisburg, Pa., lawyer said State District Judge Charles Mathews' ruling could also decide "whether to carry out a religious ministry to children one has to be under state control."

Since Monday, Ball has called residents of the homes, Roloff officials, and Roloff.

During Tuesday's testimony, Ball tried to show the state laws concerning child care facilities are vague. Hazel Baylor, an associate commissioner for the Texas Department of Human Resources, told Ball that "judgment" is sometimes needed to interpret the rules.

After the testimony, Ball said answers given by Mrs. Baylor and Jerome Chapman, former Texas commissioner of human resources, showed, "The language problems the state is having" in the laws.

Ball said he has represented Mennonites and Amish people in battles against state mandatory education laws. In both cases, he said, courts decided the religious groups had the right to keep their children out of high school.

Families evacuated as fuel leaks

PORT ARTHUR, Texas (AP) — About 240 families were forced to evacuate early today after gasoline began leaking from a pipeline near a heavily populated neighborhood of expensive homes.

"Everything's under control," Assistant Fire Chief Louis Miller said. "The leaking was stopped last night. Now it's a matter of getting the gas out of the ground and cleaning up the ditches."

He said "a large amount" of gasoline escaped the pipeline.

"It filters through the earth like a capillary action and you have a lot of fumes and vapors," Miller said.

The pipeline was blocked off, "but we haven't uncovered it yet, so we don't know what caused it (the leak)," said Bob Watts, spokesman for Independent Refining Corp. in Winnie, owner of the line.

He said the line, which pumped gasoline from the Winnie refinery to the company's plant at Port Neches, was shut down after the leak was discovered about 6 p.m. Tuesday.

Police spokesman Alfred Gillen said officers were "setting up roadblocks and keeping traffic out of the area," which covered about 10 blocks.

The Red Cross offered to place evacuees in local motels, but only one family accepted the offer, spokesman James Carter said.

"The chapter has been open since 4 a.m. and we were informed at that time the situation had become dangerous," he said. "There is a danger of an explosion due to the fact that the wind is not blowing away the fumes."

He said 750 to 1,000 people lived in the area, but that most stayed with friends or relatives overnight.

The evacuation was ordered about 7 p.m. when the gasoline began seeping into the Newport neighborhood of apartments and new $100,000 to $200,000 homes.

Miller said firefighers were pouring water on the gasoline-soaked ground and sucking it up with machines.

Reagan lawyer eyed as attorney general

WASHINGTON (AP) — President-elect Ronald Reagan's personal lawyer, William French Smith, is the clear choice to become attorney general in the new administration and choices for other Cabinet posts are narrowing, sources on Reagan's transition team report.

Several sources said Smith, 63, a longtime Reagan confidante, seems assured of being selected for the top Justice Department spot, while former Treasury Secretary William E. Simon is likely to return to the job he held under President Gerald R. Ford.

Reagan was in Washington today to receive a national security briefing and meet with Republican members of Congress. He is expected to review a narrowed list of Cabinet candidates before leaving for California on Friday.

The top few choices for the Cabinet positions were compiled by a group of close advisers headed by Smith who met Monday at Smith's downtown Los Angeles office.

Smith, a New Hampshire native who received his law degree from Harvard University, is a senior partner in the law firm of Gibson, Dunn and Crutcher. He has been on the advisory board for the Center for Strategic and International Studies.

Youth supporting 'Smokeout'

Pampa High School "Youth Against Cancer Group" is sponsoring a Great American Smokeout Day, Thursday.

Chairman for the Thursday Smokeout is Pam Ryzman, language teacher at Pampa High School.

"We hope that city residents and students will try to quit smoking for the one day. We are also including dipping snuff in the Great American Smokeout Day," Mrs. Ryzman said.

The Smokeout is a day on which smokers show themselves quitting the habit is possible and not as difficult as many might fear.

They do this by giving up cigarettes for 24 hours.

Students can sign up for the Thursday "fast" at the registration desk set up in the high school.

With the pledge not to light up, Pampa smokers will be given a special green frog badge.

"Kiss Me, I Don't Smoke" is the slogan on the badge.

"We are getting a lot of interest in the badges, so that may be an indication of the participation," Mrs. Ryzman said.

Smokeout day is sponsored in cooperation with the American Cancer Society, Gray County Board.

Rosalynn expresses feelings of detachment following campaign

WASHINGTON (AP) — First lady Rosalynn Carter says she did her best to aid her husband's re-election bid and now has "the most detached feeling I have ever had" when she reads about the plans of his successor.

"I worked as hard as I could to make sure we got to continue what we started," said the strong-willed Mrs. Carter as she recalled her husband's landslide defeat to Republican Ronald Reagan.

"The things he (Reagan) is talking about now, we were already doing," she said, citing President Carter's efforts to balance the budget and the government hiring freeze she says is already in effect.

She declared that Carter "redefined the Democratic philosophy" and will be remembered as a great president. He lost the election, she said, because of a protest vote of frustration.

Mrs. Carter calmly recounted her experiences during the campaign and her feelings on leaving the White House in an informal session Tuesday with a small group of reporters in the family living quarters.

Later, perhaps thinking she had not adequately conveyed the pain she has experienced since Election Day, she had her press secretary call reporters to say the first lady has had some bad moments since the long and grueling campaign ended Nov. 4.

One was on Election Day, when the president's own pollster had said the campaign was doomed even before the polls closed. Mrs. Carter said she had cried "a little bit" in the privacy of her own bedroom after returning from the end of the campaign and seeing tears in the eyes of son Chip's girlfriend.

Another sad moment came last week, she said, as she read through her old speeches and thought how convincing they were. She heard a trumpet blare and looked out the window to see her husband bidding farewell to Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin. She broke down and cried, she said.

Echoing what Jimmy Carter himself told reporters a day after the election, the first lady said she did not see the defeat as a personal rejection of her husband, but frustration over the economy, unemployment and the hostages in Iran.

There were two "worst" moments the last four years, she reported: when her son Chip and his wife Caron split up and when the attempt to rescue the hostages was aborted last April.

"But just like the election, it (the rescue mission) was just not supposed to be," she said. "It was planned so carefully and so detailed. It was just not supposed to be. That was the worst time for Jimmy," the only time he was unable to sleep.

Mrs. Carter's only advice for Nancy Reagan is: "The first lady can do what she pleases," an enormous opportunity that Mrs. Reagan should take advantage of it.

Germans resist Pope's position

MUNICH, West Germany (AP) — Pope John Paul II celebrated a Mass directed at young people today, the last day of his West German tour, and was told the church's teachings on sex and personal relationships are too strict for young people.

The Mass was celebrated at the scene of the Oktoberfest terrorist bombing.

Barbara Engl, chairwoman of the League of German Catholic Youth here, departed from the text of her remarks delivered after the Mass and told the pope there were "too many prohibitions" on young people in the church's teachings.

She said many youths do not understand the church position on celibacy for priests at a time when many prospective priests are deterred from taking their vows by church rules against marriage.

She also asked the pope to turn his attention to increasing the participation of women in the church hierarchy.

The pope lowered his head and clasped his hands during her brief remarks, then looked up after she was finished. He made no comment and left the Mass as scheduled.

An estimated half-million people streamed into the city fairgrounds, site of the annual Oktoberfest beer festival. Many carried flags and streamers that dotted the meadow with ever-shifting reds, blues and yellows.

NAMES IN THE NEWS

LONDON (AP) — Prince Andrew is pompous and unpopular among his fellow trainee pilots, the Sun newspaper said Wednesday.

The 20-year-old son of Queen Elizabeth II joined the Royal Naval Air Station at Culdrose in Cornwall 10 days ago to become a helicopter pilot after a short course on how to handle lower deck men. The course gave him "big ideas," said the report, quoting unnamed trainees at Culdrose.

"He is the most unpopular man on the base. If only he could forget that his mother is the Queen," said one unnamed trainee.

His older brother Prince Charles, 32, the heir to the throne, also served in the navy and was very popular.

A Culdrose spokesman said Andrew "has settled down very well and is treated as one of the lads."

LONDON (AP) — Larry Hagman, who plays nefarious J.R. Ewing in the top-rated "Dallas" television series, is doing his part to keep Britons on the right side of the law.

Under the slogan "Trust me. Would I steer you wrong?" Hagman's picture will appear soon on British Broadcasting Corp. posters urging Britons to pay their annual 34-pound ($80) TV license fee.

Britain's pay-as-you-view TV system imposes fines of 200 pounds ($480) on anyone caught watching without a license. But the national network claims it is losing millions of pounds annually because Britians are dodging payment. BBC, which doesn't sell advertising, is funded through license fees.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Saying "That's where the power is," newly elected state Sen. T. Milton Street switched his allegiance to the GOP, guaranteeing the Republicans control of the state Senate.

Street was elected two weeks ago as a Democrat and announced his switch Tuesday even though Democrats in his predominantly black district have a 10-to-1 registration edge.

Before Street's move, there was a 25-25 Senate tie for the coming term with one Republican seat about to be vacated. Now, even if the Democrats win the seat, they can't regain control because Republican Lt. Gov. William Scranton III has a tie-breaking vote.

Republicans have controlled the House since 1978 by a slim margin.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — U.S. Supreme Court Justice William Rehnquist says America could find itself in the midst of another civil war if government regulation of private lives isn't slowed.

Rehnquist on Tuesday also called for new controls on courts to prevent "judicial supremacy" where appointed judges rather than elected representatives set policy by arbitrarily declaring laws unconstitutional.

"If we...force people by law to do what we would like to see them do voluntarily," Rehnquist told the Vanderbilt University Law School, "we run the risk of another crisis in our society, equivalent to the days of the New Deal or even of the Civil War."

Outside, about 35 members of the Southern Prison Ministry — a group advocating prisoners' rights — picketed, protesting Rehnquist's espousal of the death penalty.

Bottom dropping from under Appalachian town locations

FAIRMONT, W.Va. (AP) — The bottom is literally dropping out from under Fairmont, which like many Appalachian towns sits on brittle earth atop a honeycomb of subterranean coal caverns.

Fairmont's caverns are the remains of 19th century coal mines carved out of the hard-scrabble Marion County hillsides. Thousands of tons of Pittsburgh seam coal were cut out and shipped off.

But now the coal is gone and Fairmont people live with unseen danger. Every so often, one of the remaining coal pillars crumbles, allowing the earth above to shift and sink. Generally, it's a slow process, but it can eventually twist and crush buildings as if they were made of paper.

Fairmont's subsidence problem first appeared two years ago at a big apartment building and three houses at Second and Walnut streets.

"The gas lines pulled apart, the electric lines snapped," recalls one former householder who asked not to be identified. "The doors wouldn't shut and the cabinet doors wouldn't open. Nobody knew what was going on."

Within a couple weeks, the buildings were deserted. Some residents cleared out on their own. Others were routed when officials condemned the structures.

Across the street, the Rev. William Reid waited, sure his red brick Central Church of the Nazarene would be next.

He didn't have to wait long. The plaster walls started cracking this summer.

To the federal government, mine subsidence has become an expensive worry. The U.S. Office of Surface Mining expects to spend $5 billion over the next 15 years trying to correct mine subsidence.

But the money is slow in coming — it's collected from a special assessment on each ton of coal mined — and it has to be spread over other agency responsibilities as well, such as 200 underground mine fires and 3,500 coal refuse piles nationwide.

West Virginia alone has some 52,900 acres of coal refuse, 89,000 acres prone to subsidence, 1,200 acres of burning material and eight underground fires, said OSM spokesman Dick Leonard.

"We've only collected 7 percent of the money needed to correct the adverse effects of unregulated mining," said Leonard.

The government already has spent large sums trying to shore up Fairmont's labyrinth: $314,500 in 1979 and a separate $640,000 effort this year.

The OSM plans to spend another $200,000 to stop subsidence under Reid's church, which lies just to the west of the downtown business district. And federal and state officials are trying to find $2.8 million to make sure that downtown area remains stable.

Those figures come from a just-released U.S. Bureau of Mines report that says coal pillars "may be failing in what could be referred to as a domino effect (that could) continue eastward to eventually affect this whole section of downtown Fairmont."

The report was made by geologist Jesse Craft after the OSM responded to urging by Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., whose office was alerted to the problem by a lobbying campaign — organized by Reid.

"Within four hours after I contacted Sen. Robert Byrd's office, I got a call from the OSM," Reid recalls.

Craft's study, using hundreds of core drillings and television cameras lowered into the caverns, showed that control of surface water and a stabilization program might stop the problem before it became worse.

Overblown report sends emergency crews running

BROWNWOOD, Texas (AP) — Authorities reacted quickly and en masse early today when they received a report that a plane had crashed into a Lake Brownwood motel and that there were "bodies all over the place."

Five nearby communities sent fire units to the Flagship Motel. Four ambulances were dispatched. Cars loaded with law enforcement officers raced to the scene.

The hordes of emergency vehicles on the highway even resulted in a minor accident as other drivers tried to get out of the way.

The "disaster," however, turned out to be an explosion and fire in one room of the motel. The room was heavily damaged and an adjoining room suffered smoke and heat damage.

One motel employee, Chester Thomas, was treated for lacerations caused by flying glass.

SCM rejects directors

DALLAS (AP) — Stockholders of SCM Corp. have rejected a slate of directors nominated by a dissident faction wanting to sell the conglomerate's Durkee Foods division and split the remainder of its holdings into two groups, the company announced Tuesday.

Results of a proxy vote held Oct. 30 showed 63.4 percent in favor of retaining the board and 36.6 percent favoring the election of an opposition slate, according to Chairman Paul Elicker.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessing. For only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that all men are equally endowed by their Creator, and not by a government, with the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property and secure more freedom and keep it for themselves and others.

To discharge this responsibility, free men, to the best of their ability, must understand and apply to daily living the great moral guide expressed in the Coveting Commandment.

Ronald Reagan's golden opportunity

This year's election produced the first voter rejection of an elected president seeking a second term since the Great Depression brought down Herbert Hoover in 1932.

What makes the electorate's resounding repudiation of Jimmy Carter all the more remarkable is the fact he was the candidate of the nation's dominant political party running against an opponent widely perceived as having major flaws for holding the nation's highest elective office.

In the end, no matter how uneasy many were — and still are — about the prospect of a President Ronald Reagan, a majority of the voting public simply could not support four more years of shattered hopes. Indeed, many who voted to re-elect President Carter did so reluctantly after correctly judging his failures as more than the normal ups and downs of national and world events.

Despite the doubts — and we share them — with Reagan there does appear to be an opportunity for a fresh start, for an upturn in the nation's fortunes. It is difficult to see how things could get any worse.

Whether or not Reagan can deliver, he will have the opportunity, particularly considering the stunning dimensions of his victory and the Republican Party's accompanying resurgence. Carter, too, had his chance — and simply blew it, taking many a Democrat down to defeat with him.

As our 40th president starting Jan. 20, Reagan comes equipped with no magic wand to produce instant, easy solutions to the mess Carter, Congress and the Washington bureaucracy have generated. Nor does Reagan have any easy answers for the troubles a chaotic and threatening world presents to the United States.

At best, we dare hope for a patient, gradual process of reform and restoration — of the government, the economy, military defense and international policies. Drastic changes will not occur overnight, if at all.

Indeed, if Reagan finds it impossible to deliver on at least substantial portions of his campaign promises, America may over the next four years reach the unhappy realization that our country has drifted too far off course and cannot again return to our past as relatively free men.

The key may be whether President Reagan's conservative, limited-government philosophy and sound instincts about the American character can survive the Washington meat grinder and global realities long enough to reduce the role of the federal government in American society, with fewer government-imposed burdens on the productive capacities of our people. Reagan is on the right course when he says he will "take government off the backs of the people of this country." He is moving in the right direction when he promises "to restore to the federal government the capacity to do the people's work without dominating their lives."

Can he do it? Frankly, we'll believe it when we see it.

But Reagan does understand and appreciate the free-enterprise, independent, individualistic spirit that built America. He does seem to have more respect for the private sector than for government as the source of our real strengths as a nation. Still, America has been on the wrong road for so long, under Republicans and Democrats, that it is simply too much to expect a sudden about-face.

We believe Reagan will try to end our economic turmoil and to restore our place of respect in the world as the cornerstone among free nations. We believe he will try to strengthen America's defense capabilities, assuring our security against threatening totalitarianism.

Reagan's best asset may be his ability to communicate with people, directly and using the mass media. Perhaps his positive outlook, his optimistic style can help restore our confidence and produce a degree of unity that could be vital in confronting the dangerous, uncertain period ahead.

Ronald Reagan truly believes there is an "I can" spirit in every American. Maybe he will be able to convince more of us. Maybe he already has.

Certainly he will achieve a measure of success if his administration encourages more Americans to place less reliance on the welfare state and more on themselves.

Contrary to his critics' false caricature of him, Reagan is a decent, competent man, of good humor and common sense, a secure and self-confident man, not given to paranoia or vindictiveness. His style in the White House will be more outwardly passive than we have come to expect from the likes of Carter, Ford, Nixon, Johnson and Kennedy. That prospect, we think, is healthy. There well may be less concentration of the reins with one man, less calculating, all-knowing arrogance of power in the person of the president. Reagan is more likely to provide quiet, goal-oriented leadership, relying on and respecting the contributions of the talented, fresh-thinking administrative team he is expected to assemble. For a change, we may again see a Cabinet-style government.

Americans already have figured out that Reagan is not the uncaring, warmongering, racist, reactionary boob Jimmy Carter made him out to be on the low road of the campaign. We also are going to discover Reagan is not an ideologue, but rather is a capable politician who will govern more in the mainstream than his rhetorical record suggests.

Reagan will proved to be a flexible, pragmatic sort of fellow, but with sound philosophical moorings. Compromise and accommodation are not alien to his personality. He will be able to work with the Congress, including the Democrats. That alone provides some hope for problem-solving since, obviously, the mess in Washington is not only the handiwork of the executive branch.

Ronald Reagan's popularity probably will start to decline once he begins to wrestle with the duties of the presidency. If he doesn't worry about that and if he doesn't expect more than four years in the Oval Office, it is possible historians will look back on the election of 1980 as a critical turning point. For now, though, it is perhaps more realistic to maintain somewhat less hopeful expectations.

Why Reagan won

By Oscar Cooley

Ronald Reagan's victory was so sweeping, everybody is asking, "why?"

Some theorize it marks a deep change in the American people's thinking, a nationwide protest against the growth of monster government.

Maybe. The switch from Democrat to Republican-controlled Senate appears to reenforce that view. But revolutions do not reveal themselves suddenly.

If one wanted to vote against New Dealism and for individual freedom, there was the libertarian ticket, on the ballot for the first time. Ed Clark's platform is a forthright manifesto for liberty of the old-fashioned, Daniel Boone variety. But Ed got only about one percent of the vote.

Let's face it. The welfare state is seductive. The Romans were corrupted by "bread and circuses," and we Americans dote on our food stamps.

Free enterprise? Yes, that is the national ideal, touted at every Chamber of Commerce luncheon, but when the politicians offer a new bundle of pap there are plenty of enterprisers on hand to take it. Freedom has a cost; if one is to be free to paddle his own canoe, he must expect to cope with rough water.

I am inclined to think Reagan won mainly because he is a likable fellow. He has an engaging smile. He is good-looking, even if his face begins to show seams. His sense of humor never deserts him. And when speaking off the cuff, he hems and haws a little, just as most of us do. The words do not pour out with the prodigal fluency that veteran politicians like John Anderson have. Reagan is spontaneous. That is why he now and then says one thing, another later.

And that he is an ex-movie actor does not hurt. Isn't the U.S. a land where anyone can become president? First, a peanut farmer, then a movie actor.

Carter, one must grant, is not such an engaging character. He smiles now and then, but weakly. Did he ever say anything really funny? Piety is written all over him. You don't find fault with piety, but you don't trust it enough to vote for it.

Carter is over serious. They say he works long hours - tries to dot every i and cross every t. Reagan won't read a memorandum that runs to more than a page. He'll delegate details to his staff and go home to Nancy about 4 p.m. That's why, though 69, he may well endure a couple of terms in the grueling job of president.

To most of us, men are more interesting than what they stand for. They are easier to understand and to become for or against.

Take inflation, a major issue of the campaign. How many see it as anything more than a rise in prices? Even the scholars are not agreed on its cause and cure! Both Carter and Reagan are against it. Who isn't? But just how will their methods of combatting it differ? After three months of listening to their campaign talk, I still do not know.

Consider unemployment. Both candidates promised to create more jobs. Of course. But how does a president "create jobs?" This was left up in the air.

Deficit financing. There is a mouth filler for you. Most of us know it refers to the debt of the U.S. government, which is nearing the astronomical sum of a trillion dollars. In early 1980, Carter promised to stop the debt from growing. By October, we learned it had increased by $59 billion.

Reagan has promised not only to balance the budget (in due time) but to cut taxes 10 percent per year for the next three years. He will reduce spending -- but spend more for defense, our No. 1 cost. Just how will he accomplish these contradictory ends?

The baffling nature of these issue questions may be why half the voters do not go to the polls. Most of those who do, I think, are influenced more by personalities than by principles.

Some time, a woman will run for president. She had better be good-looking, have a ready smile, and appreciate humor. She should have a fair gift of gab, but just what she says about inflation, deficits, national defense, and such perennial problems won't matter greatly. She will be a hard contestant to beat.

A mighty big 'if' for Reagan

If President Reagan can look beyond yesterday to the days before his candidacy when he spoke of the greatness of America...

If he can have the will to take away rewards for indolence...

If he can have the will to tear away the false superstructure of government's empire and lift the burden from the taxpayer...

If he can look across the seas and say with stern and steady voice, 'I'll leave you be, don't tread on me'...

If he has the will to rip away the hands that take from those who work and save...

If he has the will to remove the props that save from failure those businesses that deserve failure...

If he has the will to withstand the cries and whimpers of those whose pointless jobs are lost and leave them to find another...

If he can keep the will to remove bureaucracy's bottleneck on the flow of energy...

If he has the will to halt the government's printing press, and cause a dollar earned to become a dollar produced...

If he can look upon the voice of the voter as a cry for help but see that help not as more from government but as less of government...

If he can throw down the gauntlet to America's laborers as well as America's industrialists and bid them go to work...

If he can have the will to let him fail who would fail and let him who would soar with eagles fly as high as his strength, ability and courage will take him...

If he can have the will to do all this...

He can stand, a sentinel, and watch America become great again.

But are we ready for Reagan?

by [illegible]

President-elect Reagan is ready to lead us. But are we ready thus to be led?

Last Election Day there was a cartoon in the Wall Street Journal. It showed a husband and wife at the breakfast table. He is reading the newspaper. She is saying, "The least you can do is to wait until they swear them in before you cuss them out."

Another election should have taught the pundits, the pollsters and the politicians, "Never underestimate the quiet American. He does not shout his demands and he does not think much of those who do. He does not blab to the pollsters about his sex life, his religion or his politics -- this quiet American. But he is a formidable adversary; he is a powerful ally."

He speaks softly -- but carries a big vote. However ...

The quiet American -- the hard-working, tax-paying, nothing-for-nothing, fiercely independent American -- is better at competing than cooperating, a better critic than follower.

He is quick to throw rascals out of office, sometimes less willing to support even good men in office.

Let's take President-elect Reagan at his word and see if we are prepared to put his words into action.

He will name constructionists to the Supreme Court, including a woman justice. His philosophical enemies will mobilize themselves mightily against any conservative on the High Court; the president will need help to get any such appointment confirmed.

As president, Reagan will want to increase our nation's military budget, convinced that we can negotiate equitably only from a position of strength.

There are still organized gimme-gimme factions in our country who will protest loudly that their wants should come first.

Can the president count on you to support him against them?

As president, Reagan will urge relaxation of government regulations which presently stifle the generation of more energy -- including nuclear energy.

He will try to do something about the wasteful, self-defeating crosstown busing of schoolchildren.

He will oppose mandatory health insurance in favor of voluntary health insurance.

Opponents will try to make him sound callous, insensitive, cruel. Will you side with them -- or him?

As president, Reagan will seek to return the jurisdiction of welfare programs to states and local communities. The entrenched Washington bureaucracy and the generation that has suckled at the breast of Big Government will holler like everything.

Will you be shouted down, intimidated by them? If you will, he will.

Or will you give the new administration a chance to try less dependence on government, more self-reliance and self-discipline?

As president, Reagan will be constantly badgered by the noisy Americans.

Unless the new president's good intentions are to abort, quiet Americans may have to become a little less quiet.

Reagan faces challenges

By Anthony Harrigan

In his victory speech in Los Angeles, President-elect Reagan quoted Abraham Lincoln and thereby indicated his recognition of the tremendous burdens that he faces in the future. It is well that he recognizes the difficulties ahead, for they will be immense.

Mr. Reagan is inheriting a terrible mess at home and abroad. Years of mismanagement of public funds have left this country with colossal debts. In recent months, Presient Carter promised the moon to untold numbers of communities in an effort to win votes. It will be extremely expensive to fulfill those promises.

President Reagan will seek to bring down inflation in a country with a severely deteriorated industrial system, with its wealth-creating machinery in disrepair, in other words.

Our next president will be tested by America's adversaries throughout the world. Though Mr. Reagan intends to rebuild our armed forces, this can't be accomplished overnight. In the meantime, the United States will be exposed to peril.

The new president may even be left to handle the Iranian hostage problem, which came about as a result of the Carter administration's weakness and ideological zeal in attempting to oust the shah. He will be well advised to let Mr. Carter carry out his constitutional responsibilities in this area until January 20. Mr. Carter owes it to the nation to try to clean up the mess he created.

The United States needs a solution to its energy problems. But Mr. Reagan will be stuck with the unwise and hurtful windfall profits tax that diverts money from energy producers to bureaucrats. He would find a sympathetic response in the new Senate if he sought to repeal the windfall profits tax.

As he seeks to encourage Americans in a new measure of productivity, Mr. Reagan will run head-on into the unions. He should not hesitate to call for enactment of a law that will apply anti-trust legislation to the union monopoly. Unless that monopoly -- the last monopoly -- is broken up, full industrial recovery won't be possible.

The new president also will find it necessary to tackle the anti-nuclear movement that is still alive and well and eager to de-industrialize the United States. One of the most constructive actions that can be taken by the new administration would be prompt licensing of nuclear power plants that have been denied licenses for months or years.

Whie he swept all before him in the political arena, there are entrenched forces that will resist Mr. Reagan in the months ahead. The major media, especially television, are bound to prove hostile if the new president disturbs the liberal status quo. Much political courage, inventiveness and energy will be required to overcome the powerful federal bureaucracy.

Mr. Reagan has his work cut out for him. He has need of a very strong-minded cabinet that is wholly dedicated to free enterprsie, energy development, industrial modernization, the right to work, and national security.

Today in history

Today is Wednesday, Nov. 19th, the 324th day of 1980. There are 42 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Nov. 19th, 1863, President Abraham Lincoln delivered his Gettysburg Address.

On this date:

In 1493, Christopher Columbus discovered Puerto Rico.

In 1794, the United States and Britain signed the Jay Treaty adjusting issues that were not settled in the Revolutionary War.

In 1919, the Senate rejected the World War I Treaty of Versailles.

In 1965, a federal jury in Washington, D.C., fined the American Communist Party $230,000 for failing to register with the government as an agent of the Soviet Union.

Thought for today: I destroy my enemy when I make him my friend — President Abraham Lincoln (1809-1865).

Man denies charges of rape in hearing

TEXARKANA, Ark. (AP) — A former Texarkana School Board member on trial for rape testified in Miller County Circuit Court Tuesday that he did not force the woman to have sex with him.

Allen Eugene Rogers, 42, is charged with raping a 39-year-old Wake Village, Texas, woman several times in February 1979. Rogers was to be cross-examined by the prosecution today.

John Young and the late Wade K. Smith, both of Texarkana, also were charged with rape in the incident. Smith was found shot to death in March, 1979, and Rogers and Young both were charged with capital murder in connection with that case.

Rogers has entered a plea of innocent to the murder charge, but has not yet been brought to trial. Young pleaded guilty to the murder charge and is in Miller County Jail awaiting sentencing.

The woman had testified Monday that she was held captive and raped by Rogers and Young and later raped again by Young and Smith.

But the woman admitted Tuesday under cross-examination by defense attorney Damon Young that she had made at least 25 inaccurate statements during her earlier testimony.

Rogers testified Tuesday that he had been invited to a party by Smith at a local motel where he discovered Smith, Young and a naked woman.

Rogers said that he suggested the other two men leave, then had sex with the woman. Rogers said the woman then asked to have sex with him again, but he suggested they go to an apartment.

Rogers said he had sex with the woman again and left the apartment when Young and Smith arrived later.

He said he learned several days later that Young and Smith had been charged with rape. Rogers said he went to the police in an attempt to obtain information about the case and was charged with rape.

Deputy disappears during transfer

WHARTON (AP) — A Wharton County sheriff's deputy has disappeared with a prisoner he picked up Tuesday at Rusk State Hospital in East Texas.

Deputy Alvin Davidson left Wharton Tuesday morning to pick up murder suspect Addie Whalon, who had been held 21 days at the hospital to determine whether she was mentally competent to stand trial.

Sheriff Rudy Machala said Davidson left the hospital with Ms. Whalon about 2:30 p.m. Tuesday. He should have returned to Wharton about eight hours later.

When he had not returned by midnight, Machala alterted law enforcement agencies across the state and sent officers to search the route Davidson would have taken.

Machala said the deputy was driving a standard sheriff's patrol car with a wire mesh cage separating the prisoner from the driver.

If Davidson had car trouble, he should have been able to contact authorities via the police radio in the car, Machala said.

Ms. Whalen was arrested Aug. 27 and charged with the suffocation death of her 17-month-old son, whose body was found buried in a garbage bag on her property.

Rusk authorities said she had been found competent to stand trial.

Mother on trial for killing four small daughters

MADISON, Neb. (AP) — Anthony Almarez, whose wife Stella is charged with the killing of their four daughters, was expected to testify when her murder trial gets under way today, prosecutors say.

Almarez discovered the bodies of the girls, ages 2 to 10, and their mother with an apparent self-inflicted wound when he arrived at his Norfolk home on June 18, police said.

Two of the girls — Odelia, 10, and Gloria, 2 — died of gunshot wounds, according to police. The other two — Antoinette, 7, and Stella Lorraine, Gloria's twin — died of knife wounds. Mrs. Almarez was hospitalized with a gunshot wound to the head, according to authorities.

The 29-year-old woman, who was charged with four counts of first-degree murder, pleaded innocent by reason of mental derangement.

Mrs. Almarez was declared competent to stand trial after psychiatric examination. If convicted, she could face the death penalty or life imprisonment.

The killings shocked neighbors and friends of the Almarez family in Norfolk, a northeast Nebraska community of about 15,000.

"She really cared for the kids a lot, and they seemed like a real close family," said Douglas Brozek, who worked with Almarez at the Nucor Steel Mill in Norfolk. "There was no indication whatsoever that something like this could happen. They seemed like the last people that something like this would happen to."

Jury selection was completed Tuesday, after nearly eight hours of questioning. Almarez was not present for the proceedings, but prosecutors said they plan to call him as a witness.

The seven men and five women were not sequestered, and Madison County District Judge Merritt Warren warned them not to pay attention to news accounts of the case or discuss it with anyone. He said the trial could take from three to six days.

Workers settle, strike goes on

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Striking copper workers have ratified an agreement on a new contract with Asarco Smelter here, settling a walkout that began July 1.

A spokesman for the United Steelworkers of American Local 509 said the 800 striking copper workers voted to ratify the new contract, but said he was not certain when they would return to work.

Ratification of the new contract was not expected to end labor problems at the Asarco smelter. The striking copper workers here say they will not return to work until union disputes are settled at all other Asarco plants. The firm operates in Texas and four other states.

The El Paso smelter has been shut down since the July 1 walkout. Company spokesman Bob Reid said once the copper workers agree to return to work it will take 10 days to get the plant running at full strength.

Details of the settlement were not announced.

Ambassador killed by angry husband

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — The Dominican Republic's consul in Bogota shot and killed the Dominican Republic's ambassador to stop him from raping the consul's "youthful and beautiful wife," the consul's lawyer said.

The Bogota newspaper El Tiempo quoted police investigators as saying the ambassador was hit in the back by seven bullets.

The consul, Rafael Augusto Sanchez, will be flown home to Santo Domingo today to face possible charges in the shooting of Ambassador Eduardo Antonio Garcia, lawyer Rodolfo Valero told reporters in Bogota Tuesday night.

Garcia was killed Sunday night, and Valero said his client shot him "in legitimate defense of his honor after he saw the ambassador "lewdly fondling" and trying to rape Mrs. Sanchez.

Energy companies pay for oil leases

By ED McHALE
Associated Press Writer

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Energy companies wanting to search for oil and natural gas in the western Gulf of Mexico have committed more than $1.4 billion for federal leases.

A total of 101 companies submitted 268 bids Tuesday totalling more than $3.5 billion on 74 of 81 tracts put up for lease by the U.S. Interior Department's Bureau of Land Management.

The bid opening coincided almost to the day with the 33rd anniversary of the first far offshore oil discovery in the Gulf of Mexico on Nov. 14, 1947.

The apparent high bids totalled $1.436.448.959 — including a highest of all $169.004.160 by Mesa Petroleum Co. and Texaco Inc. for exploring 5,760 acres off the Texas coast between Brownsville and Corpus Christi.

Mesa and Texaco had to outbid eight other companies or groups of companies for the costliest of the leases.

That same general area — about 40 to 50 miles offshore in water between 200 to 250 feet deep — also produced the next highest bids.

Superior Oil Co. and Sohio Petroleum Co. outbid four others with $108,215,000 on 5,760 acres. Gulf Oil Corp. and General American Oil Co. outbid seven others with $81,365,000 for the same acreage in the same general area.

The U.S. Geological Survey estimated the parcels bid on Tuesday might produce 7.58 million barrels of crude oil and 524.96 billion cubic feet of natural gas.

Neither Mesa nor Texaco could be reached for an immediate estimate of what their costly parcel might produce. Texaco representatives at the bid opening left the Louisiana Superdome immediately afterwards.

While Tuesday's sale of 458,308 acres did not exceed the $2.8 billion bid in September for about twice as many parcels, some oilmen considered the total proportionately comparable.

Oilmen bid on 147 of the 192 parcels offered in the September sale.

The new exploration area extended from High Island, near the western Louisiana border, to Padre Island, to south Padre Island, just north of the Mexican border.

Most of the 81 tracts offered this time are a mile square and some are as far out as 120 miles.

Twenty-two of the tracts were offered on a new bidding formula by which the government gets a fixed share of the net profit if drillers strike oil or natural gas.

Ten tracts — including the three which brought the highest bids — were offered for a flat cash payment plus future royalties on a sliding scale basis, depending on the amount of oil or gas produced.

Eleven were offered for a cash payment, called a bonus, plus a fixed royalty of 33 and one third percent.

The remaining 38 tracts were offered on a conventional basis — a cash payment plus a royalty of 16 and two-thirds percent of production.

The leases are for as long as the wells produce, but companies may lose their lease if drilling hasn't begun after five years.

Binges harm even moderate drinkers

NEW YORK (AP) — That New Year's Eve party or that drinking binge every now and then may be damaging to your heart even if your overall consumption of alcoholic beverages is moderate, a new study says.

The finding is an important warning in light of recent evidence that mild drinking may help prevent heart disease, according to researchers from the Medical College of Wisconsin.

Their report was being presented today to the American Heart Association scientific meeting in Miami Beach, Fla.

"While there seems to be a protective effect of alcohol at moderate levels, it's probably countered by drinking occasional large amounts," said Dr. Harvey W. Gruchow, the biostatistician who headed the study.

"Our study suggests that this 'binge effect' is independent of total consumption....The crucial variable is not so much how much they're drinking as the difference between what they usually drink and the amount they drink on these special occasions," he said.

Several recent studies — including one in last Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine — have shown that moderate drinking seems for unknown reasons to be associated with a lower risk of heart disease.

These studies, however, have measured only the overall consumption of alcohol, not drinking habits, Gruchow said.

To see whether drinking habits mattered, researchers examined the drinking history of 225 men who underwent a procedure called coronary angiography.

Coronary angiography is used to measure the amount of blockage in the arteries that supply blood to the heart. A measure of the severity of heart disease, it is commonly used to tell whether heart patients need surgery.

Agriculture Department warns of food cost rise

WASHINGTON (AP) — Retail food prices are expected to climb 12.2 percent in 1981, the sharpest increase in seven years, the Agriculture Department said today.

Jumps in meat, poultry and egg prices will lead the way, a department economist forecast.

Such an increase would be almost 1½ times the 8.7 percent rise predicted for this year and the steepest jump since 1973 and 1974, when food prices rose about 14.5 percent each year.

In general, said economist Paul C. Westcott in a report prepared for the department's annual Agricultural Outlook Conference, "the major source of food price inflation in 1981 will come from rises in meat, poultry and egg prices."

Meat and poultry prices, he said, will likely rise between 15 percent and 20 percent due to "only slight increases in...beef and broiler production."

Pork production, he said, could decline "perhaps 8 to 10 percent."

And as people seek substitutes for high-priced meat and poultry, Westcott added, egg prices will rise about 17 percent.

Dairy prices are expected to go up 10.7 percent next year, with mandatory boosts in federal milk price supports "and rising marketing costs again being the major causes," he said.

Although fruit and vegetable prices are among the hardest to predict, because of their sensitivity to weather, Westcott said an overall rise of 8 percent now appears likely.

Department officials have been saying since August that food prices would increase within a range of 10 to 15 percent in 1981; today's 12.2 percent estimate refined that estimate.

But Westcott said price increases could vary about 2 percent from the new prediction depending on:

—The severity of this winter's weather and its effect on citrus crops and livestock marketings.

—The size of the fall 1981 grain crop.

—Whether inflation surges anew or abates.

—How close the global sugar crop comes to meeting demand.

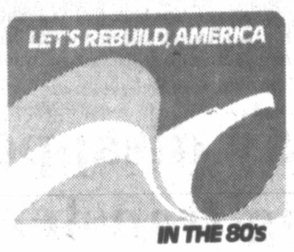

In economic news Tuesday, economists in and out of government took heart in a new report that personal income rose 1.1 percent in October, equalling September's increase, while spending rose a full percentage point.

The economists said the report is further evidence of a recovery, albeit slow, from the recession.

But they cautioned that rising interest rates could damage the apparent recovery. On Monday, banks raised their prime lending rate to 16.25 percent.

Purchases of durable goods rose $6.4 billion last month, following September's $2 billion decline. Most of the increase was for cars, trucks and auto parts, which Commerce Department economist William Cox said "reflects the recovery taking place in recession-stricken heavy industries and construction."

—Personal savings stood at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $89.4 billion in October, compared with a yearly pace of $88.8 billion the month before. That represents a 4.8 percent savings rate, the same as in September.

Chemical clean-up past October limit

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — Unforeseeable delays caused Todd Shipyards Corp. to miss an October deadline to reduce its inventory of low-level radioactive wastes, officials said in response to recent allegations by state officials.

Todd had stored about 11,000 55-gallon drums of radioactive wastes at its Pelican Island facility, but state officials ordered the company to reduce its inventory to 2,000 drums by Oct. 15.

The Galveston-based firm failed to meet the deadline, and the state now seeks a permanent injunction and civil penalties against Todd.

State officials have alleged the company violated a radioactive materials license and a solid waste disposal permit.

A hearing is scheduled Dec. 19 before State District Judge Ed Harris.

Todd officials said they failed to meet their deadline because a May 2 fire forced the firm to slow its processing operations.

Officials also contend the firm had been embargoed last May from shipping radioactive materials to Beatty, Nev. The delay forced Todd to wait four months before receiving permission to move the wastes to the burial site in Washington, officials said.

Todd officials said the company is shipping about 450 drums of low-level radioactive wastes each week to the Washington burial site and expects to be in compliance with state regulations by May 15, 1981.

Woman gored by pet deer

YUBA, Okla. (AP) — An 80-year-old woman was listed in serious condition in a Texas hospital Tuesday after she was gored by a pet deer as she attempted to catch the animal so it wouldn't be shot by deer hunters, authorities said.

Mrs. Eura Quarles was in her yard about 8 a.m. when she saw a pet deer belonging to her neighbor, Bud Jamison, roaming about. She tried to coax the animal close to the house so she could tie it up so it would be safe from hunters, authorities said.

The deer turned on her and injured her jaw with its horn and injured her hand with its hooves, authorities said.

The elderly woman lay on the ground for more than two hours before she was found by a neighbor, authorities said.

Mrs. Quarles was taken first a Durant hospital and transferred to the Medical Plaza Hospital in Sherman, Texas, where she underwent surgery to her jaw and hand. She is also suffering from exposure, authorities said.

Family members said the pet deer had been around the neighborhood for several years. It had been found in the woods and brought into Yuba where it was reared by hand by Jamison.

The deer fled after the attack.

Chemical drums being tested as water threats

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Authorities are awaiting test results on the contents of more than 1,000 chemical drums discovered in a mesquite thicket on the south side of San Antonio last week, state officials say.

Investigators with the Texas Department of Human Resources discovered the drums, many of them disintegrating from rust and corrosion, while testing water in a lake located just south of Loop 410.

Military markings were noted on many of the barrels, but such drums often are sold and reused, TDWR official Vernon Francis said Tuesday.

Approximately 30 drums, six of which contained highly alkaline chemicals, were discovered near the illegal dump site in July, according to Tom Milligan, TDWR public affairs officer.

Milligan said another barrel contained trichloroethylene, a flammable degreasing solvent that can cause breathing problems if inhaled.

The large cache was discovered last week when state personnel returned to the lake at the request of adjacent landowners, Milligan said.

John Latchford, the department's assistant director of the enforcement, said the drums could have contaminated a major freshwater acquifer known as the Wilcox Sands, which stretches from the Rio Grande into Northeast Texas and Louisiana.

The contents of the drums also could pose a threat to the waters of Leon Creek and the Medina River, Latchford said.

The Medina empties into the San Antonio River, which joins the Guadalupe River before it reaches the coast.

Tower appointment could spark major battle

AUSTIN (AP) — If Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, resigns to become secretary of defense, as some speculate, it would mean another all-out political war between Texas Democrats and Republicans.

Although the dust is just beginning to settle from the GOP sweep of Texas in the presidential race, a special Senate election would stir everything up again.

However, it's hard for a number of Democratic, and Republican, leaders to believe it could happen.

"I don't believe it's true for one minute," said National Democratic Chairman John White, who may be a candidate if there is a vacancy for Tower's seat. "My immediate reaction is that it is just a bunch of horsefeathers."

"I just don't see how it could happen," said a prominent Republican campaigner who did not want to be quoted, "but it will be a hell of a race if it does happen."

The Texas speculation started after published reports that President-elect Ronald Reagan might select Tower to be secretary of defense and Texas Gov. Bill Clements might name former Gov. John B. Connally to replace Tower until a special election could be held.

"That's the nuttiest thing I've ever heard," Clements said of the report.

"I have not been offered the job of secretary of defense," said Tower. "I understand that several names are going to be presented to President-elect Reagan."

Some close Tower associates in Texas predicted he would take the cabinet job if offered.

The most likely Democrats to oppose Connally, if he is appointed, would be Robert Krueger, ambassador-at-large to Mexico who lost a hot race to Tower in 1978 and former Attorney General John Hill, who lost to Clements in 1978, and White.

Hill and White were active in the recent Texas campaign for President Jimmy Carter and both are probable candidates for the Democratic nomination in 1982 to oppose a second term by Clements.

Under state law, Clements would name a temporary successor to Tower if Congress is in session to be sure Texas is represented. He must call a special election within five days after a vacancy occurs for the next 60 to 90 days to fill the remaining four years of Tower's term.

After Lyndon B. Johnson was elected vice president in 1960, he resigned as a Texas senator and Tower won a "high man" special election in 1961. Later, the Texas Legislature changed state law to require that U.S. Senate races must be won by a majority vote, with a runoff if necessary.

Tower won the 1961 special election and was re-elected in 1962 with considerable help from liberal Democrats unhappy with the conservative faction of the party, particularly Connally. He was re-elected in 1972, defeating Barefoot Sanders, Dallas, now a federal judge. Connally was head of Texas Democrats for Nixon that year but did not support Tower.

"I couldn't pretend that there would be no interest but it's a bit premature to indicate any definite plan," Krueger said from Washington. "I think clearly I would look at it very closely and there certainly would be that possibility. This speculation has been around for some time."

Jones fined and placed on probation after plea

By KEN HERMAN
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — Houston Sen. Gene Jones says he lied two months ago when he denied using state employees to work on his unsuccessful re-election bid and the Houston Democrat now has pleaded guilty to those charges.

State District Judge Tom Blackwell Tuesday ordered Jones to pay a $2,000 fine and $10,000 in restitutions. Jones also was placed on probation for one year as a result of the Class A misdemeanor conviction for official misconduct.

Prosecutors said Jones, a Democrat, used state employees and equipment to mail out fund-raising letters for his campaign. The allegation initially was made by Mike Richards, the Houston Republican who beat Jones Nov. 4.

The matter were brought to Travis County District Attorney Ronnie Earle by Richards' aides.

Jones, 46, is an associate dean at the South Texas College of Law.

He was called to the witness stand by defense attorney Roy Minton, who asked if the senator "knowingly had people working in your office ... solely and only on campaign matters."

Jones replied, "That is a fact. Yes, sir."

At a September news conference, Richards laid out his allegation.

"This (fund-raising) event from its inception in July was organized, promoted, and implemented entirely from Sen. Jones' office at taxpayer expense — totally in violation of state law," Richards said.

Jones quickly denied the allegation. He said any misuse of state employees or equipment was a result of "over-zealous" work by staff member Jeff Senter. Jones paid $1,647 restitutions to the state in September.

"At no time did I ever request Senter or any other state employees to do any kind of campaign work," Jones said on Sept. 2.

He changed his story when he got to the witness stand Tuesday.

Minton asked if Jones knew at the time that state employees were doing campaign work.

"Yes, sir. There were certain instances where that was correct," Jones said.

He also said there were other instances he did not know about.

"Since then I have learned a great deal of things occurred based on my negligence," he said.

Relatives believe palsy victim used as guinea pig by courts

DALLAS (AP) — Cerebral palsy victim Jimmy Morphis took his dream of being independent to the courts, where he successfully fought policies that denied him and other handicapped people admission to city housing projects.

But his dream became a month-long nightmare that ended after relatives found him with no food in his apartment other than mashed doughnuts and squashed hot dogs that littered the kitchen floor.

Still fighting the pride that made him eager for independence, Morphis repeated over and over in labored and almost unintelligible speech: "I tried. I tried. I tried."

The United Cerebral Palsy Association, which helped him win an apartment in the high-rise Lakeland Manor here, now finds itself accused by Morphis' relatives of using the 44-year-old man as a guinea pig to fight Dallas Housing Authority policies.

Morphis himself admits the suit was a mistake.

"I was wrong," he said.

The action resulted in new rules governing admission of handicapped people to city housing projects such as Lakeland, which provides no medical or support services.

Eager to demonstrate his fierce stab at independence, Morphis crawled from his wheelchair to the refrigerator, opening the door to reveal the moldy hot dogs, soggy doughnuts and sour milk that was the only food he could reach in the apartment.

He showed the electric razor he accidentally broke while trying to use it. He pointed to the cans of food in the cupboard he couldn't open with the hand-operated can opener in the drawer.

Morphis' neighbors said he haunted the hallways in search of someone to open a can for him. They got Meals on Wheels dinners for him, but often he would spill them before getting back to the apartment.

"I'm not knocking him for trying," said his cousin's wife, Rita Morphis. "But I'm not going to let him sit over there and starve to death."

She plans to return Morphis to a nursing home, where he lived after his parents died and before he moved to the apartment.

Morphis now says he believes the nursing home is where he belongs.

United Cerebral Palsy staffers said they helped Morphis with the suit, filed last summer, after he told them repeatedly while attending an adult day program that he wanted to live independently.

"The Dallas Housing Authority did determine he was capable of living in the building," said Susie Jones, community education coordinator for the association.

DHA attorney Deke Austin said Morphis' suit, which was decided Aug. 27, resulted in a test to determine eligibility of people wanting to live in the projects. Morphis passed the test, given by DHA staffers who asked him to perform certain tasks.

"In the last few weeks, I have heard there are some problems with the test," Austin said.

Although Morphis asked for monetary damages in the suit, "it's our position that the case is substantially settled and that it simply remains for the experts to reach a final report," Austin said.

Ms. Jones said Morphis was transported to the association's day program for lunch, and had Meals on Wheels and a licensed physical therapist twice a week.

"She's done some of the necessary housekeeping," Ms. Jones said.

But Mrs. Morphis said the nurse just started her visits and that she left Friday without leaving any food for Morphis.

Seven charged in Texas arson ring

HOUSTON (AP) — Seven people have been charged with multiple counts of arson in Pasadena and Houston in "one of the biggest arson rings ever broken" in the metropolitan area, authorities said.

Pasadena Fire Marshal E.C. Summers said Tuesday the arrests culminated a 1½-year investigation by his department, the Houston Fire Department's arson division and the Harris County District Attorney's special crimes division.

"This is the bigest (arson) ring that I've seen in this area," said arson investigator Sterling Jones, who has been with the Houston fire department 18 years.

Arrested on charges of arson were Henry D. Womble, 65, a Houston vending machine distributor; Charles J. Lunsford, 45, of Houston; and Neil F. Moss, 43, address unknown, Summers said.

The three were named Nov. 13 in sealed indictements, accusing them of burning two game rooms. Each was charged with two counts of arson and released Tuesday on $20,000 bond.

Also arrested and charged with two counts of arson were Henry A. Caldwell, 21; Rodney J. Ryans, 18; and Earl H. Conz, 49, all of Houston. They were released on bonds ranging from $2,000 to $55,000, Summers said.

The indictment alleged the trio conspired in the June 2, 1979, burning of a home and allegedly set fire June 26 to another game room.

A 16-year-old male also was arrested, Summers said.

"These were insurance jobs," Summers said. "In most cases the fires were at business that were owned by the company or where they had machines. Some of them were at other businesses that had given them trouble."

Jones said Womble's company leased the machines and then would have the leasing businesses burned so he could collect the insurance. Womble apparently had businesses burned if they refused to lease his equipment and gave their business to his competitors, Jones said.

Times have changed in Peoria

By WAYNE SLATER
Associated Press Writer

PEORIA, Ill. (AP) — They were wrong about Alyce Broshe, alias Karen Connally, the last of the Peoria madams.

She did not get shot or stabbed and die in the streets somewhere. She did not grow old and obese and pass away quietly one morning in bed.

Somehow, she has survived. And surely the Alyce Broshe of today would have startled her old cronies in that storied red-light district called the Merry-Go-Round.

"I was the best at what I did," says Miss Broshe, who at 45 doesn't do it any more.

Times have changed.

The city this summer leveled the last of the old houses in the Merry-Go-Round to make room for urban renewal. The old madams are all dead and gone. The hookers have taken to freelancing in the street.

"There is no professionalism in it anymore. They're amateurs, really. It's no longer a job or a business or a profession," she says. "It's a crime."

Once, Peoria's verfront district was legendary. It was a lusty, brawling, wide-open place with gambling, dancing, raw liquor and willing ladies. It was an island of vice in the land the settlers built, and everybody in the Midwest knew it.

In 1913, the Illinois Senate decided to put a stop to it. The Senate's Committee on vice held hearings in Peoria to investigate what one lawmaker called "the sporting women" and to determine "what makes a good girl go to the bad."

After long hearings, the committee made a number of recommendations aimed at ending prostitution.

Nonetheless, by the late 1920s, Peoria's red-light district was flourishing. And at the helm was a huge woman with flared nostrils named Diamond Lil.

Diamond Lil had a stable of white and black girls in a big Victorian sporting house that operated not far from the Empire, the leading gambling spot in town.

There was a string of bootleg joints serving bathtub gin, and up on Main Street a dance hall called the Ingla Terra where a long rope was stretched down the center of the floor to separate the raucous Charleston from the more sedate dances.

Payoffs were common. Every Monday, a messenger dispatched by local hoodlums arrived at City Hall, carrying a sealed envelope filled with cash.

The amount was always dutifully recorded in the city treasurer's report — $60,000 in 1937 under the title "Special MiscellaneOus: Madison Novelty Co."

Clerks nowadays will drag out these dusty old figures and explain how the mythical company got its name from the location of City Hall on Madison Avenue.

"In high school our dates used to drive us on a dare through the red-light district," says feminist author Betty Friedan, a Peoria native. "I can still remember those women standing in the doorways."

There was a brief flurry of reform after World War II. Police padlocked the houses. Officials prosecuted the girls.

But the only thing that changed was the location of the red-light district, to new ground a few blocks south bounded by a triangle of streets which men drove their cars around and around. Thus the name the Merry-Go-Round.

Alyce Broshe was 15 when she started working in the Merry-Go-Round, a runaway from Terre Haute, Ind., by way of Chicago, where she had run errands for pimps and strippers.

She called herself Karen Connally for no particular reason and served her apprenticeship under a reclusive, politically well-connected madam named Pam Miller.

"Pam ran the town, police, politicians, everything," she recalls. "I voted when I was 15. Pam piled us into a station wagon and took us all down to vote. Those were the payoff days."

One day in 1950, after a lot of whisky and cocaine, Karen told her pimp, Blackie Jennings, she didn't want to work that night. Blackie pulled out a .45-caliber pistol and shot her in the head.

She survived, and the feud lasted until 1963, when she walked into Blackie's house and shot him twice in the back. He survived, and she was on her own.

A couple of weeks before Christmas 1963, she walked into a liquor store with a .32-caliber pistol and walked out with a handful of cash. The owner shot her twice in the stomach before she'd gone a block.

She survived. Upon her conviction for robbery, for which she was sent to prison for 11 months, prosecutor Morton Goldfine declared: "This is the last of the madams in Peoria. All the rest have been sentenced or put out of business and this puts an end to the Merry-Go-Round."

But he was wrong. Baby Doll Cowan was still in town.

Baby Doll was a grinning, good-hearted woman who says she started selling her services at age 19 after being jilted in a love affair. She had been arrested for prostitution 51 times in Peoria, the last time for soliciting an undercover cop.

That was five days before she died. She was 73 years old.. Baby Doll's place is gone now, leveled by the wrecking ball.

Monkey talk used for communications advance

By TERRY KIRKPATRICK
AP Newsfeatures Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Herbert Terrace was wondering: what does a non-human think about the world? It seemed possible to him that some day an extra-terrestrial being might tell us. But why wait for that, he asked, if we can communicate right now with the apes?

Encouraged by several apparently successful efforts to teach language to chimpanzees, Terrace, a professor of psychology at Columbia University, acquired a chimp in 1973. Seven years later, his city-wise creature in retirement at a primate farm in Oklahoma, a disappointed Terrace is back in the lab studying the learning ability of pigeons.

His conclusion: maybe the apes can tell us something other than that they want another banana, but they haven't yet. A larger outcome of his experiment, however, has been a passionate, sometimes rather personal debate in the scientific community. On one side there are those who believe apes and humans can converse intelligently. On the other, those who say these cousins of man have yet to demonstrate anything near language and are merely performing on a par with circus animals.

The debate has intErrupted a decade anD A half of spectacular claims made for "talking" apes. And it has caused some to question whether scientists can talk to each other with any more sophistication than the apes have shown.

Terrace's chimp, Nim, learned 125 words in the sign language used by deaf people and was picking up New words at the rate of two a week when Terrace ran out of funds. After reviewing videotapes, however, he decided that Nim's linguistic capacity was far inferior to that of a human child.

Terrace says most of Nim's chatter was not spontaneous — he was only aping his teachers. What's more, he says, chimps can't fathom the give-and-take of conversation and are forever interrupting their teachers.

When he began, Terrace thought he just might poke holes in the idea that language is what makes man different from other animals. Nim shrank from the challenge, putting it this way in his longest utterance: "Give orange me give eat orange me eat orange give me eat orange give me you."

Terrace's conclusion was strong enough, coming from someone in the fraternity of animal-language researchers. In a recent book, though, he extended his criticism of Nim's performance to the work of other scientists and their chimps. The feud that started still simmers in the pages of learned journals.

Before Terrace and others sowed discord this year, ape-language study had progressed without major distraction since the mid-'60s, when Beatrice and Allen Gardner of the University of Nevada began teaching sign language to a chimp named Washoe. They recognized the apes' physical inability to speak words and their natural tendency to gesture.

Early in the '70s, Duane Rumbaugh and Sue Savage-Rumbaugh at the Yerkes Regional Primate Research Center in Atlanta took a different route: teaching a chimp named Lana to communicate by using a computerized keyboard. Symbols on the keys represent words.

As in other projects, they have witnessed human-like behavior. Distracted for a while by other chimps one day, researchers at Yerkes suddenly realized that they had left Lana alone with a younger chimp named Columbus for some time.

Rushing to the room, they found the two chimps sleeping, holding tightly to each other. On the projector above Lana's language board were the words she had "uttered" by pressing keys: "You Columbus Columbus?"

The most far-reaching claims made for an ape and the most novel application come from Penny Patterson, president of the Gorilla Foundation in Woodside, Calif. Her 8-year-old gorilla Koko is said to link gestures whose corresponding words rhyme. Handed a stalk of broccoli, Koko signed, "flower stink fruit pink ... fruit pink stink."

Koko is also said to lie and joke. When given a test once in which she was to mimic her teacher as she pointed to parts of her body, Koko repeatedly pointed incorrectly. Since Koko had done it easily before, Ms. Patterson finally scolded her and signed "bad gorilla." Whereupon Koko signEd "funny gorilla" and laughed.

Perhaps the sharpest critic of all this is Thomas Sebeok, a linguist at Indiana University. "If they ever go to a circus, they would realize that much of what these animals do is what happens in a circus," he says.

Sebeok's objection is that animal-language researchers don't account for the possibility that the animals may be picking up subtle cues from their teachers. Given the word "key" and tolD to select it from a box of other items, for instance, a chimp may be only watching his teacher for a grin or upraised eyebrows indicating That he is reaching for the right object.

In a recent issue of the New York Review of Books, science writer Martin GaRdner reviewed Terrace's book and a new anthology on ape language by Sebeok. He listed the problems Terrace and Sebeok have with the monkey talk experiments, zeroing in on Ms. Patterson and Koko: "It is not hard to understand why Penny — young, pretty, with long, blonde hair — has received such enormous publicity. What could be more dramatic than color photographs of Beauty and the Beast, heads together, raptly chattering to one another?"

Ms. Patterson answered in a succeeding issue, noting that Koko makes correct responses even when deliberately cued incorrectly, and added a dig at Sebeok: "One cannot trace the evolution of language from an armchair in Indiana."

In addition to inadvertent cuing, Sebeok and Terrace believe many animal researchers read into the animals' behavior more than is there. "People think they talk to their dogs," Terrace says. "It's called projection. It happens all the time."

Those who work with apes say SeBeok has never been near one (he contends that his detachment makes him more objective). They say Terrace's work was flawed because he had too many teachers (57 over four yeaRs), which hindered Nim's progress. They say they have tested their apes in situations in which visual or aural cuing is impossible, and the chimps respond correctly.

LETA V. OLSON

Leta V. Olson of Pampa, a teacher at Pampa High School and Clarendon College, has been chosen by the American Institute for Foreign Study (AIFS) of Greenwich, Connecticut, to accompany a group of students to Europe. AIFS is the oldest and most experienced student travel organization; it has arranged foreign study programs for nearly 250,000 students and teqchers since it was founded in 1964.

Members of "European Heartland" spend three weeks, beginning with a cruise on the Rhine, visiting Munich, Berlin, Amsterdam, Paris, London and hiking in the Swiss Alps. As the group travels across central Europe, multi-lingual tutors provide lectures and valuable background information on the history, culture, and people of each area visited. This program is especially attractive, with its enriching view of Europe, to students with a limited amount of time. There are still places available in this group. For further information, students and parents may contact Leta V. Olson, 616 N. Powell St., Pampa, Texas 79065.

Consultants charge taxis cheating

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Cab drivers at Dallas-Fort Worth airport are fleecing metroplex tax-payers of a possible $125,000 a year by not anteing up required airport fees, a consultants' report says.

Consultants with Kimley-Horn and Associates said that cab drivers not associated with Surtran Taxicabs, Inc., must pay a $1.75 fee when leaving the airport.

Surtran, a ground transportation system owned by the two cities, should receive 75 cents of the fee and the remainder goes to Surtran Taxicabs. But the consultants said many cab drivers have found a way to avoid paying the fee.

Fees from a normal month should amount to $14,000 to $15,000, but cab fees during October totaled only $4,500, the 55-page report released Monday said.

The report said some cab drivers also are violating the agreement by directly soliciting airline passengers to use their vehicles instead of Surtran buses.

"Steps should be taken immediately to establish and enforce regulations which would require taxicab operators to stay near their cabs while waiting at the airport and not allow them to solicit passengers in the luggage claim area," the report said.

The consultants said some drivers approach groups of passengers waiting to board Surtran buses and invite them to share the cost of cab rides.

Cancer victims to use marijuana

HOUSTON (AP) — Synthetic marijuana pills may be prescribed as early as Friday at the University of Texas M.D. Anderson Hospital and Tumor Institute here for cancer patients suffering the painful side effects of chemotherapy, a hospital spokesman says.

Dr Fred G. Conrad said Tuesday the National Cancer Institute has mailed 1,200 capsules to the hospital, where 15 physicians have been approved by federal authorities to prescribe the medication.

Conrad, vice president of patient care, said the pills probably will be given to 48 patients.

"Personally, I have at least 7 or 8 patients on chemotherapy coming to the clinic Friday and if any of them are having bad nausea, I will tell them about the new pills," Conrad said.

The man-made pills contain a synthetic form of TCH, or delta-9-tetrahydrocannabinol, a natural substance found in marijuna plants.

He predicted doctors at M.D. Anderson will need a "minimum of 3 to 6 months" will be needed to evaluate the usefulness of the pills.

The new and somewhat controversial pill will be prescribed to patients undergoing chemotherapy and suffering excessive nausea and vomiting that standard medication has not relieved.

Use of the marijuana-type capsules is "highly experimental" but early research at other cancer centers has indicated it has been a boon to patients taking potent anti-cancer drugs, he said.

Conrad also serves as chairman of a Texas Department of Health committee formed to monitor the use of marijuana for medical purposes throughout Texas.

He said several other treatment centers across the state probably will be using the synthetic pills soon.

Patients must sign consent forms before the synthetic pills are prescribed.

Cut your own taxes

Don't waste those deductions

By Ray DeCrane

Income tax deductions are only valuable if they save you money. That proposition is so evident it becomes trite to use it. Yet, millions of people waste deductions every year.

When it comes to filing federal income tax returns, you have two choices on deductions. You can either itemize them individually and claim the total amount, or you can elect to take a uniform amount dependent on your filing status.

It follows that if you don't exceed the uniform amount by listing deductions, you are wasting your time and your money. So these are the target amounts you must exceed if you want to save tax dollars by itemizing deductions:

If you are single or an unmarried head of a household, $2,300.

If you are married, filing a joint return, $3,400.

If you are married, filing separately, $1,700.

Take a dry run now on your deductions. Where do you stand, in relation to the uniform allowance?

If there seems to be no way you can top the standard deduction, don't seek out deductions this year. Save them for next year when they might do you some good.

If you have already passed the standard deduction limit, or even if you are close to it, exert every effort to pack in every possible deduction by Dec. 31. It is a guaranteed way to save you tax dollars.

Every deduction opportunity should be considered at this point. But there are three areas on which you should concentrate. They will be examined in the next installment.

(NEXT: Medical, tax and charitable deductions.)

Know your paper towels

By the editors of Consumer Reports

An old rag, a household sponge, or any of an array of cleanup tools works as well and lasts longer than a paper towel. Yet, the disposable towel industry soaks up more than $1 billion a year in sales.

Much of the selling may be due to the extensive TV advertising done by a handful of national brands. It was with such advertising claims in mind that Consumer Reports tested 30 products. Because it's expensive to ship bulky paper towels, many of them were regional or store brands.

The ideal paper towel absorbs a lot of liquid and stays strong when wet — as Rosie the waitress emphasizes when she uses a Bounty to sop up spilled coffee and then sets the empty cup and saucer atop the outstretched towel.

That the tests showed some paper towels were, in fact, both as absorbent and strong as; in a way, a tribute to paper manufacturers. The processes that make paper absorbent tend to make it weak, and those that make paper strong tend to make it non-absorbent.

Various techniques to overcome the weakness of absorbent paper have been developed. Take, for example, Job Squad. That's a relatively new Scott product, not yet available everywhere. It comes in two versions. One is a hybrid of cloth and paper, according to its label; the other has tiny diamonds on its back that are actually a substance printed on the towel to help hold it together. (One of the two versions of Viva towels CU tested has similar diamonds.)

Both Viva and Job Squad are made by Scott Paper Co., and the different versions of those two towels are sold in different parts of the country. A national name, it seems, is no assurance of a uniform paper towel.

In our tests, we found that two-ply was generally better than one-ply and three-ply was generally better than two when it comes to wet strength and absorbency. We also found that the stronger, more absorbent products were generally more expensive.

But if you use paper towels for wiping up small spills or drying hands between cooking chores, spending all that money for the best brands may not make sense. Price differences between brands can be quite large — for the price of one roll of a highly rated brand you could almost buy two rolls of some of the lower-rated products.

For a special reprint of Consumer Union's test of toilet bowl cleaners and another subject send 50 cents plus a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to CONSUMERS, P.O. Box 461, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019. Be sure to ask for the reprint on toilet bowl cleaners.

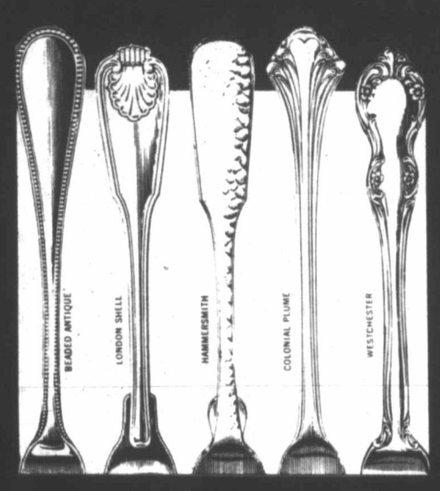

Price-shopping among towels of similar quality can be difficult since paper towels come in too many different sizes and sheet quantities for comparison.

If your paper towels are frequently used as substitutes for a mop, buy by the square foot. But if you want a strong absorbent towel for even the smallest jobs, then buy a high-rated towel according to its price-per-towel.

WTSU to present "No, No, Nanette"

CANYON — The decade of the 70s brought to Broadway such successful musicals as "Chicago," "Dancin' " and "A Chorus Line," all of which were dominated by elaborate choreography.

This month, the West Texas State University Opera-Musical Theatre Workshop will present "No, No, Nanette," another musical which focuses on its dance numbers.

Debbie Bray, instructor of physical eduiation at WTSU, is the choreographer for the musical. She said "No, No, Nanette" involves more dancing than any musical that has been done at WTSU. "Every musical number has at least some dancing in it," she said.

Since many of the students in the cast have had little or no dancing experience, Bray has been rehearsing the choreography for the past four weeks.

"It's a fantastic musical. I couldn't have asked for anything better," Bray said. "There are so many different kinds of dancing included in it because of changes in the music. It isn't monotonous. A lot of it is Gene Kelly-Fred Astaire-type dancing."

The story, a light-hearted framework for such old-time favorites as "Tea for Two" and "I Want to Be Happy," concerns Jimmy Smith, a publisher of Bibles, and the trouble he gets into on a summer weekend in New York and Atlantic City.

Because the show includes such a variety of dances, including tap, the fox-trot and the Charleston, and because of the inexperience of so many of the cast members, the students have found a challenge in preparing for the performance.

Chris George, a freshman music education major whose parents live in Zapata and who has the title role in the musical, described the choreography as being "pretty difficult." She has found it necessary to practice on her own.

Sherry Strain, a freshman theatre major from Hereford who plays Pauline in the show, said, "It's hard, and sometimes it's frustrating. But it's real neat to come out of here knowing something you didn't know before."

Brent Biles, a senior music education major from Canyon and a member of the show's chorus, said he thought the tap dancing was the hardest part because he hadn't danced like that before.

Even those students who have had some dance experience have found the choreography difficult.

Tina Walton, a junior music therapy major from Sherman and another member of the chorus, has had four years of dance, but still finds the numbers "harder than those in other shows." She, too, thinks the tap dancing is the most difficult.

Teresa Baugh, a freshman theatre major from Portales, N.M., is assistant director of the musical. She said that the students "have been working extremely hard on the dancing. They even practice backstage when we're rehearsing the non-musical parts of the show."

Despite the difficulty, students said they were having fun doing the show.

Mary Anna Kidd, a junior mass communications major from Plainview, has had eight years of classical and modern dancing and ballet. "The choreography isn't the hardest, but it's not the easiest either. What it is is fun."

Bray has had a lot of fun choreographing the musical and rehearsing with the students, as well.

Bray, who is from Pampa, graduated from WTSU in 1974 with a Bachelor of Science degree in physical education. She received her Master of Education degree from WTSU in 1976. She has choreographed several musicals, including WTSU's production of "A Little Night Music" last fall.

"No, No, Nanette" will be performed Thursday through Monday at the Branding Iron Theatre.

CAST MEMBERS of West Texas State University's fall musical production, "No, No, Nanette," practice one of the dance numbers in the show. The musical will be performed Thursday through Monday in the Branding Iron Theatre.

'Tonight' book is informative

THE TONIGHT SHOW. By Robert Metz. Playboy. 290 Pages. $11.95.

TV's "Tonight" has been America's "nightlight and nightcap rolled into one" for three decades, from the "Broadway Open House" of early television, featuring Jerry Lester and his blonde sidekick, Dagmar, to the present-day version starring perhaps the most influential performer on the airwaves, Johnny Carson.

Robert Metz's book takes a look at the show from its early days right up to the present in an interesting and sometimes revealing history of the show, its stars and some of the goings-on behind the curtain.

Metz profiles each of "Tonight's" three major hosts: Steve Allen, Jack Paar and Carson. Allen, who captained the show during the mid-'50s, is revealed as the perfect straight man who helped develop a band of fine comedians, including Tom Poston, Don Knotts and Louis Nye, but was nevertheless, discontented at his post. Paar, the sensitive and emotional host who followed Allen through the early '60s, is treated here with kindness and sympathy.

Carson was the little-known host of a daytime quiz show when he became "Tonight's" host in 1962, and not too many of TV's insiders held much hope for his success. The book tells how, over the past 18 years, he has become one of the most powerful and commanding forces on television and the shaper of what the "Tonight" show is today.

Nail facts

If you've been downing gelatin and extra vitamins to make your nails stronger and longer, you're probably wasting your time. According to the experts, there is no miracle nail food. However, dietary deficiencies will show up in your nails, so your best course is to eat a well-balanced diet containing adequate protein. And be patient — nails only grow an average of one-eighth inch a month.

Clothes life

When shopping for clothes, it's helpful to know how many years of wear you can expect from each garment. Most dresses will last 3 years. Wool and wool blend suits, jackets and pants average 3 years; other fibers 2 years. Expect 3 years of wear from cotton and cotton blend shirts, 2 years from other fibers. Sweaters should last 3 years. Rainwear stands up about 2 years. You can get 3 years out of most cloth or pile coats, 4 years from leather ones.

Ribbons and bows

For all-out feminine allure, nothing surpasses a pretty bow in your hair. For a sexy-yet-soft hairdo, sweep back one side of long, wavy hair with a velvet or satin bow. Give a classic pageboy a fresh look with a simple ribbon headband, or braid a thin ribbon into a small lock of hair. Add evening glamor to short hair with a bow on a comb or bow-shaped clips.

Why we make up

Diane Von Furstenberg told Beauty Digest magazine her feelings about makeup: "Men say they don't like makeup but I think that's only when they notice it. I think most of us put on makeup because of other women. I feel very drab if I have no makeup on and I walk into a room where all the women are beautifully made up."

Thanksgiving

Here's a plan to enjoy Thanksgiving dinner without wrecking your diet. Get yourself a calorie counter and figure out before the meal how much you can eat of each food. Balance denials with rewards. Forego gravy and you can have a taste of stuffing. If you can, choose plain potato over candied yams. Indulge in turkey, undressed salad and fruit. Concentrate on the warm feeling of being with family and friends and you won't miss the food so much.

Belly dancing

To shape up your stomach, practice this slow flutter from a classic belly dancer's routine. Put on some sensuous music. Stand tall and straight with hands at sides. Now slowly pull in your stomach, tensing stomach musles as you inhale. Hold for a count of two. Release and exhale at the same time. Do 20 times.

DEAR ABBY

Smokers: Here's your chance to quit

DEAR READERS: Tomorrow will be the fourth annual Great American Smokeout. It's a good-humored, upbeat effort to encourage smokers to give up cigarettes for 24 hours — just to prove to themselves that they can. It's sponsored by the American Cancer Society on the theory that anyone who is able to quit for 24 hours can quit forever.

According to the Gallup organization, in 1979 nearly 15 million Americans attempted to give up cigarettes on Smokeout day. Five million succeeded for the full 24 hours; one to three days later, 2.3 million were still off cigarettes, while another 7.8 million said they had cut down considerably.

Natalie Cole, who describes herself as a "moderate" smoker, is the 1980 honorary Smokeout chairperson. She has vowed to set a national example by quitting permanently on November 20. She admits she's tried to quit several times, but failed. Natalie's father, the beloved Nat King Cole, died of lung cancer in 1965. He was a heavy smoker.

Sammy Davis Jr., the national honorary chairman in 1977, tried to go without smoking for 24 hours, but he couldn't make it.

Ed Asner, a lifelong heavy smoker, quit the habit permanently when he became the honorary chairman in 1978. He accepted the chairmanship again in 1979 and is still clean.

So, if you're hooked on cigarettes and have been meaning to quit, why not start tomorrow — for just 24 hours? It won't be easy, but it will be the best present you can give yourself — and those who love you.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: I have a wonderful hairdresser with whom I have a standing appointment once a week. I am a busy woman and like to get in and out of the beauty parlor as quickly as possible. My problem is that my hairdresser is a chatty person, and he talks with his hands! He just about drives me crazy, wasting all that time gesturing. How can I tell him to work with his hands, not talk? No names, please. I need him more than he needs me.

IN A HURRY

DEAR IN: It's time you did a little talking. With the voice, lady.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: I am 23. I began smoking pot at 13. By 17, I had taken LSD and shot heroin. I have been addicted to opiates for two years. I am on the methadone program now. (It's a government-approved substitute for heroin, but I have to get a fix every day.)

If just one young person reads this and takes heed, I will feel that I have accomplished something.

The road to drugs is for fools. A kid starts because he thinks he is being smart. Or because he wants to be "in" with the crowd. Or because he's afraid they will think he's chicken. Taking that first joint is the dumbest thing a kid can do. I know. It cost me my future. I had a chance to be a really good ball player, but I lost interest because I would rather get high. I didn't even finish my education because I would rather get high. Then my head got all messed up and I didn't have a choice anymore.

Now I beat my brains out in a hot factory.

Kids, stay straight. Say no to that first joint, and when you reach 23 you will be on top of the world. Not like me. No money. No friends. Suicidal feelings. Needing a fix every day.

I'm nobody to be giving advice, considering what I've done with my life, but maybe you kids out there can learn something from a loser.

FOOLISH

DEAR FOOLISH: One who has made mistakes, picked himself up, brushed himself off, then tries to prevent others from becoming victims is no loser in my book. Too bad you'll never know how many lives you may have saved by writing one letter.

Cabbage is base for many tasty dishes

Some vegetables have become such an integral part of our daily diet that we tend to take them for granted.

Such a one is cabbage, one of the most versatile of vegetables, that blends with almost any spice or flavoring.

Cabbage can be served sweet, sour, tart, bland or creamed. It can be eaten at any stage of the meal from soup through dessert. Yes, there is a chocolate cake recipe that calls for cabbage as an ingredient.

Cabbage is most often used, however, as a casserole, vegetable accompaniment to meat or as a salad.

Cabbage should be served crisp and tender, but if you keep a head free of wilted leaves and seal it, you can store it in the refrigerator for many days without losing the nutritional value.

Cabbage comes in many varieties including white, green, winter, red, mild-flavored savoy and tiny brussels sprouts.

One derivative of cabbage is sauerkraut, which increases in popularity each year, not only as a topping for a hot dog on a roll but in soups, salads, with pork dishes and as a health drink.

When cooking cabbage, it is well to make sure of how much you are going to eat. It takes only about 10 minutes to cook, but within that time cabbage cooks down to about half the original measure. And, since it is low in calories, you can eat a good deal of this vegetable without feeling full.

A number of sauces, such as white cream sauce or a dressing made from cottage cheese, complement cabbage. Personally, when eating cabbage as a vegetable, I prefer it plain with just a little vinegar and pepper. But if you make it the main dish a few more frills are in order, as in this recipe for Cabbage Hawaiian.

1½ pounds white or green cabbage
3 tablespoons butter
3 teaspoons sugar
6 tablespoons canned crushed pineapple, with juice
¼ cup shredded toasted coconut

Cut cabbage head in half lengthwise, then cut in wedges and remove core. Stack two wedges together so that the thin side of one wedge is on thick side of second wedge. Slice thinly. Repeat till all cabbage is sliced. Put cabbage, butter, sugar and pineapple in covered casserole. Stir. Cook in 300-degree oven till tender, about 30 minutes. Stir in coconut and serve. Serves 4.

Volunteers work for Rose Bowl parade

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — The 1,400 members of the volunteer, non-profit Tournament of Roses Association are "people who get the job done, no matter what," says Millard Davidson, 1980-81 Pasadena Tournament of Roses president.

Committees for the annual January 1 parade order and set up decorations, host tournament guests, supervise float entries, organize food services, transportation and tickets, and plan for national and worldwide television, radio and print media coverage.

Committee members also provide the Rose Bowl's university teams with entertainment and invite and oversee the placement of 22 band groups and 250 equestrians. Rose Queen selection and coronation committees swing into action before the announcement of the Rose Queen and Court each fall.

Davidson has logged over 30,000 miles to visit each city from which a band was invited to the parade, whose theme this year is "The Great Outdoors."

Astro-Graph

November 20, 1980

The most important thing to keep in mind this coming year is being true to yourslf. Everything will go quite well for you, so long as you don't mask or disguise things to suit your or someone else's moods.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Major decisions won't intimidate you today, but small matters could cause you to be uncharacteristically indecisive. Treat all judgments similarly. Find out more of what lies ahead for you in the year following your birthday by sending for your copy of Astro-Graph. Mail $1 for each to Astro-Graph, Box 489, Radio City Station, N.Y. 10019. Be sure to specify birth date.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Don't let your mind wander from the tasks at hand today, or you could make mistakes and have to do everything over. Concentration can prevent this.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) For the sake of expediency today you may take some little risks which you normally wouldn't even consider. It's unwise to depart from your usual pattern.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) In your domestic relationships today don't act with a heavy hand. Coming on too strong will evoke a like response from all the family.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) When striving to learn something today you may miss the entire point if you permit your thoughts to wander. Discipline your mind so that you're extra-attentive.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) In matters where large issues are at stake today you should do quite well. However, in situations which are small, yet significant, it may be another story.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Companions could find it irritating today if you fail to yield on minor points. Be flexible in your relationships. Don't make mountains out of molehills.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Small, unpleasant tasks should not be swept under the rug today. They will only pop up later, could prove to be even more inconvenient to handle.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Be tolerant in your associations with friends today and overlook their small frailties. They'll not call your to attention if you ignore theirs.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Progress is likely in your endeavors today, but it may not be in leaps and bounds. Have an appreciation for small steps, not just large strides.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Be very careful today regarding what you say to others or to what you sign. Important documents must be carefully studied before signing.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) One who always borrows small items but never seems to return them could make a similar request of you today. Think twice before depleting your inventory.

Small businesses see 10,000 failures per year

NEW YORK (AP) — Small business is risky business, as 10,000 or more failures a year attest, but that impersonal statistic tells but a part of what it means to be small in today's volatile economy.

"We have been in business for one year, nine months and now I wish I never heard about the small business world," writes a Wisconsin business person. "I have never been so broke in all my life."

An upstate New Yorker: "Due to taxes, financing and interest rates, inflation, shortages of fuel and cost — in that order — we have been unable to continue to run the business. I have obtained work outside the business to support my family."

From Idaho: "The incentive to produce is being killed by taxes from all government bodies." From Texas: "I will be selling out ... before the end of the year. I've had enough." Missouri: "If things aren't better by January 1, 1981, we are closing the business down."

A certain amount of griping is common to small businesses, since the game played is a serious one of big hopes and often small results. Now, some business people are saying, hopes are shrinking, too.

The comments were culled from a random sampling of the 620,000-member National Federation of Independent Business, which says the sample offers a gray picture for small business.

"The so-called 'recovery' from the 1980 recession which began in the third quarter was only a term used by some, but certainly not by the small business owner," said Professor William C. Dunkelberg of Purdue.

Dunkelberg, an economist who with Professor Jonathan A. Scott of Southern Methodist University interprets federation data, says that "at the bottom of the recession, when small business should have been bounding back, nothing much happened."

The federation's October quarterly survey showed employment had weakened, capital expenditures were flat, and credit conditions had deteriorated.

"More than 98 percent of the commercial establishments in this country are small businesses," the House Committee on Small Business reported two years ago, "but small businesses employ less than two-thirds of all private sector workers.

"Therefore, it is surprising to some observers that between 1969 and 1976, small businesses accounted for what can be considered virtually all the new private sector employment in this country."

The 1,000 largest firms, as ranked by Fortune magazine, contributed less than 2 percent of the growth in new jobs in that period, the committee stated.

If big business is the main artery of the economic body then small businesses are the veins and the capillaries that in good times spread nourishment and the glow of health throughout the parts.

When the patient is dragging, as the economy is today, you can see it in those veins and capillaries. They provide telltale signs, and it doesn't take an expert to read them.

Retooled sitcom could be new hit

LOS ANGELES (AP) — ABC may have found a hit in a retooled sitcom salvaged from the endangered species section of its prime-time schedule.

"Happy Days," rebounding from the strains of old age, appears to be headed back toward old form.

This figured to be the last season for "Happy Days," once the flagship comedy of a healthier ABC lineup. For one thing, "Happy Days" entered its seventh year without Ron Howard, who provided the series with character weight when it threatened to soar off in flights of silliness.

Howard, who played straight man (in both connotations) Ritchie Cunninghan to Henry Winkler's Fonzie, was lured from ABC by a fat multiproject deal at NBC. Also absent is Donny Most, the goofy Ralph Malph.

Both characters are supposed to be in the Army.

That left a core of support characters and The Fonz — not, it seemed before the season, the ingredients of success. None but Fonzie of the regulars was demonstrably capable of carrying a series solo; and Fonz seemed to be no character at all anymore, just the leather-clad remnant of a spent craze.

But in its season premiere last week "Happy Days" crackled with the old vitality, suggesting more the pleasant, well-crafted comedy of seven years ago than the human cartoon it became under Fred Silverman's handiwork.

This new "Happy Days" is not serving under the thumb of Arthur Fonzarelli. Fonzie's still there, but his presence is understated — he's a character again. And indications are that he'll be woven into the fabric of the show as he was at the beginning, before Silverman (then chief ABC programmer) "fine-tuned" Fonzie into caricature.

Sharing the light with Fonzie will be Erin Moran, who plays Ritchie's little sister, Joanie, and Scott Baio as Chachi. It's a happy combination. Miss Moran, who never betrayed possession of any acting ability before, has suddenly blossomed into a main room performer.

Young Baio has presence and natural style. He promises to be a new, perhaps fuller, Fonzie.

There is also a new character, Joanie's pal Jenny Piccalo, who will help divert attention from Fonzie. And with a fuller, restrained (though by no means diminished) Fonzie, Tom Bosley and Marion Ross as Mr. and Mrs. C may get to start acting like grownups again.

This is drawing a lot from one episode of a weekly series. But that first one was a surprise — a snappy, bright little show, risen from the ashes of an overworked, second-rate sitcom. "Happy Days" may be here again.

"BABY", a yellow - crested cockatoo, is conversing with Pat Miller, the owner - operator of Fish and Critters pet store. The bird has moved, along with other pets from the business, to the new location at 1404 N. Banks, formerly the Harvester Barbeque building. The grand opening of the newly - redecorated store was held this weekend. Fish and Critters, owned by Mrs. Miller and her husband, Doug, is now the largest pet store in the Texas Panhandle.

Book set on odds for 'who shot J.R.'

LAS VEGAS (AP) — The sports book at a Strip resort has set up a betting line on the culprit in the shooting of J.R. Ewing, the popularn villain on the CBS-TV series "Dallas." A lot of the early bettors felt it was a self-inflicted wound.

The odds on J.R. shooting himself were set at 20-1 Monday when the line was posted in the sports book at the Castaways Hotel and many of the early bettors put their money on J.R., said hotel spokesman Duke Hoover.

Sports book manager Sonnq Reizner established Ewing's series wife Sue Ellen and her boyfriend Dusty Farlow as the favorites at 3-1. As a joke, Reizner set Dallas Cowboys coach Tom Landry at 500-1, and former Cowboys quarterback Roger Staubach at 1,000-1.

Hoover said the whole thing started as "a gag," but added, "people are going bananas."

"We know we could take a loss on all this," Hoover said, "so we've limited the size of the bets to $100." The odds on the particular characters will probably change from day to day depending on whom most of the bets were placed.

Reagan - Carter meet will take on new mood

WASHINGTON (AP) — When Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan get together Thursday, with great civility and almost a sense of ceremony, it will be a far cry from past transitions.

John Adams found it expedient to sneak out of the White House at midnight because he did not want to meet Thomas Jefferson, the incoming third president, on the day of his inauguration.

Harry Truman thought Dwight Eisenhower "had a chip on his shoulder" when they met, post-election, in the Oval Office. Eisenhower's demeanor, Truman wrote, was one of "frozen grimness."

William Howard Taft rode with Woodrow Wilson to Wilson's inauguration but did not fill him in on any government business.

Herbert Hoover privately confessed that in 1932 he tried to trap Franklin D. Roosevelt into decisions that would have forced the incoming president to abandon "90 percent of the so-called New Deal" and adopt the Republican administration's major programs.

Carter, on the other hand, coupled his telephoned congratulations to Reagan on election night with a vow to do everything in his power to smooth the transition.

The practice of formally helping the new president dates back only to 1952 and Truman, who thought it was "an omission in our political tradition that a retiring president did not make it his business to facilitate the transfer of the government to his successor."

After Eisenhower won the Republican nomination in 1952, Truman invited the general to Washington for foreign policy briefings. In a new book, "Off the Record: the Private Papers of Harry S. Truman," author Robert H. Ferrell writes that Ike refused because "his advisers evidently thought it would hurt his campaign."

Truman wrote in his diary, "the president-elect has been coy about cooperating for the turnover ... Ike and his advisers are afraid of some kind of trick. There is no trick."

Eisenhower, by all accounts, was warmer when he turned over the government to John F. Kennedy. "I don't think we have asked for anything that they haven't done," Kennedy said after their two pre-inauguration meetings in the White House.

The transition from Richard Nixon to his appointed vice president, Gerald Ford, in one of the most traumatic periods of the nation's history, was greased through the foresight of Ford's friend Phil Buchen.

Months before Nixon resigned, Buchen — without telling Ford or anyone else — formed a sub rosa transition team, which met on a regular basis.

"They realized that had I known of their activities, I would have demanded that they stop," Ford said later.

But, he added, "it did provide a good start."

Yearling, owned by Pampa trio, places in Futurity

Run For Blue, a yearling colt owned by Dr. Harbord Cox, Delores Cox and Robert Cobb of Pampa, placed fourth in the Select Futurity held earlier this month in Oklahoma City.

The Futurity, which is the richest event for halter horses in the nation, was held in conjunction with the Appaloosa World Championship Show in Oklahoma City.

The Pampa trio began their quest for national honors at the Central Regional in Grand Island, Neb. where their champion colt received his ticket to the Futurity finals.

When the judges' cards were in, Run For Blue had earned $750 and national recognition.

Run For Blue was sired by the nationally known stallion, Roman Straw Man, who has also sired several National and World Champions at halter, as well as performance and race winners.

Tri-State rodeo results

Jo Linda Lowery of Pampa placed in three divisions during the Tri-State High School Benefit Rodeo last weekend in Dumas.

Lowery took second in breakaway roping, fourth in goat tying and sixth in barrel racing.

Lena Stewart, also of Pampa, took second in goat tying and fourth in breakaway roping.

Leisa Wilson of Canadian placed second in barrels.

Luke Stephenson of Guymon and Sid Howard of Canyon tied for all-around cowboy honors.

In the boys' division, Olin Douglass of Pampa was sixth in both calf roping and team roping.

Landy Manns of Canadian finished in a three-way tie with Hadley Reed of Spearman and Frank Winters of Clayton in bareback riding.

Todd Freeman, White Deer, was fourth in ribbon roping and Greg Gabel, McLean, was second in steer wrestling.

Suzanne Hart of Gruver was all-around cowgirl.

The Pampa team competes in another Tri-State Rodeo this weekend in Amarillo.

Britt nabs American League MVP honors

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — George Brett was taking life easy in Palm Springs, Calif., far from Kansas City's harsh November winds, when he learned Tuesday that he'd finally won the award he wanted most.

In a landslide, Kansas City's 27-year-old third baseman was named the American League's Most Valuable Player.

"It's like the Cy Young if you're a pitcher," Brett said from his vacation retreat. "This is the one I really wanted." Although honors and awards have poured in since Brett ended his spectacular season, he was apprehensive about his chances of winning the MVP.

"There's a little anxiety, you don't want to build your hopes up too high," he said. "I remember one year (1976) I thought I had a good chance at it and didn't win. That left me a little upset. Thurman (Munson, Yankee catcher) got it. So I learned not to be too confident about winning."

Nevertheless, he challenged the magic .400 batting average until late in the season and finished at .390, highest in the major leagues since Ted Williams hit .406 in 1939. With 118 RBI in 117 games, he became the first player in 30 years to drive in more runs than games played, with a minimum of 100 RBI.

Ninth grade drops opener

Lefors High School varsity slipped past Pampa Red ninth-grade, 46-43, in double overtime Tuesday night at Lefors.

It was the first game of the season for Pampa Red, coached by Al Clark.

The score was tied at 38-all at end of four quarters of play.

Lefors led by seven, 18-11, at halftime, but Pampa rallied to pull within one, 28-27, going into the final quarter.

Monte Basket and Mark Connell tossed in 17 and 16 points respectively for Lefors.

Coyle Winborn of Pampa was the game's top scorer with 20 points. C. Chapen added 10.

Pampa hosts Perryton at 6 p.m. Saturday in Harvester Fieldhouse. The game precedes the Pampa-Lawton McArthur (Okla.) High School game.

Kentucky tabbed as No. 1 in AP basketball poll

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

The Kentucky Wildcats will go into the college basketball season as the No.1 team in the nation.

The Wildcats were accorded that lofty position in The Associated Press pre-season poll by a panel of the nation's sports writers and broadcasters after a strong recruiting year for the second straight season by Joe Hall.

Led by 7-foot center Sam Bowie, and peopled with a host of high school All-Americas, the Wildcats collected 30 of 59 first-place votes and 1,131 points in the poll released Tuesday to edge out DePaul for the top spot.

DePaul, which finished No.1 in last season's final poll, taken before the NCAA playoffs, grabbed 18 first-place votes for 1,072 points.

Louisville, the defending NCAA champion which lost superstar Darrell Griffith, was third in the voting with two firsts and 902 points. Maryland, led by Atlantic Coast Conference Player of the Year Albert King, was No.4 with two top votes and 837 points.

Syracuse Coach Jim Boeheim is among those in agreement with the Wildcat's top-rating.

"Kentucky has the best talent I've seen in a long time," he says. "They have the top ten players of any team in America. Their second five can beat anybody else's second five by at least 20 points, I think."

Boeheim, whose own team was picked for No.19, added: "I think there are three great teams in the country this year — Kentucky, DePaul and Maryland — and dozens of good ones who all have some kind of talent."

The highest Eastern team in the poll is Georgetown's defending Big East champions, at No.16, a fact that does not surprise Boeheim.

"The East is not easy to sell in the preseason polls," he says, pointing out that voters tend to go for traditional teams like the Kentuckys, Indianas and UCLAs.

In that regard, Indiana was picked No.5 with two first-place votes and 836 points, while UCLA nailed down No.6 with two firsts and 826 points.

The Bruins were picked ahead of a team they finished behind of last year in the Pac-10 race — Oregon State. The defending league champions garnered one No.1 vote and picked up a total of 731 points for No. 7.

Virginia, which won the National Invitation Tournament last season and returns one of the highest-profile centers in the country in Ralph Sampson, was No.8 with one first and 724 points. Ohio State, the only other team to get a first-place vote, received 717 points. Notre Dame rounded out the Top Ten with 591 points.

Skinner third at Ponca City

Ten-year-old James Skinner of Pampa claimed third place in the Mini-Mini Class last weekend during the Central Region Championships in Ponca City, Okla.

The Ponca City event was a qualifying race for the Grand National Finals March 15 in Houston's Astrodome.

Skinner placed 16th overall in the championship finals last year.

There were 547 riders from eight states competing for 15 positions in the Grand Nationals.

Doug Youree, also of Pampa, was tenth overall in the 125cc novice class. Todd Elrod, Borger, was eighth overall in the open expert class.

Several other local riders competed, but their results will not become available until later. They were Jamey Finney, Lefors, Mini-Mini; Jimmy Hannon, Lefors, 80 cc Junior; Roy Rippetoe, Pampa, 125 cc intermediate and Gary Giggs, Pampa, 250 cc Intermediate.

David Youree, Pampa, had to drop out because of engine failure.

Most of the local and area riders are entered in the North Texas GNC Regionals Dec. 7 at Lake Whitney Cycle Ranch.

Harvesters open season Friday night against Lawton McArthur

Can the Pampa Harvesters retain the district basketball championship crown they won a year ago and also improve their 16-14 record?

Those questions will begin seeking answers as the Harvesters open a 24-game schedule at 7:30 p.m. Friday night against Lawton McArthur (Okla.) on the homecourt.

Besides the regular season games, the Harvesters are entered in tournaments at Lawton, Okla., Borger and Wichita Falls.

Another league title and a winning record will depend on how well coach Garland Nichols can use speed, balance, and shooting accuracy to compensate for inexperience and lack of height.

There are gaps to fill. Sharpshooting forward Ronnie Faggins, the district's MVP is gone, and so is All-District center Cedric Parker and guards Steve Glover and Joe Jeffers, All-District second-team and honorable mention picks respectively.

Pampa's only returning starter is 6-2 sophomore Mike Nelson, who was picked as the district's newcomer of the year after he was pulled out of the ninth-grade ranks to start the last 16 games of the season. He averaged 7.6 ppg.

Returning lettermen include 6-2 Charles Nelson, who started parttime, and 6-5 senior Damon Fleming, who saw lots of action near the tailend of the season.

Nichols has high hopes for 5-11 senior Kirt Crouch, 5-9 senior Ricky Smith and 6-2 senior Ray Condo.

Others moving up from the junior varsity ranks are 5-9 senior Ed Guerra, 6-2 senior Jay Henson, 5-8 senior Terry Neal, 5-8 senior Dee Orr and 6-1 junior Jimmy Barker.

Pampa compiled a 7-2 district record last season to win its first district title since 1977. The Harvesters stood 2-2 in the first-half league standings, but rallied in the second half to go unbeaten. They routed Palo Duro, 60-39, in a playoff for the district title.

In eleven years as a head coach, Nichols has compiled an outstanding .781 winning percentage. This is his second season at the Harvester helm.

Virdon named NL manager of year

HOUSTON (AP) — Bill Virdon, who once lost his job as manager of the New York Yankees because he didn't show enough flamboyance, got a chance to prove that being calm can be a virtue last season as manager of the Houston Astros.

Taking a mild-mannered approach, Virdon engineered the Astros to their first division title in the franchise's 19-year history and for his leadership has been named National League Manager of the Year by The Associated Press.

Throughout the Astros' historic 1980 season, the team reflected Virdon's influence. Virdon never allowed himself to get too high our too low and the team seemed to adopt a similar personality.

The Astros almost lost the divisional title in a tense final three-game series against Los Angeles. The Dodgers won three straight games and forced a one-game playoff for the title.

The Astros won the playoff and then took world champion Philadelphia to a nerve-wracking five games in the best of five National League championship series.

After the final heart-stopping 8-7 Phillies victory, Virdon spoke of his team in his now-predictable low-key fashion, taking no credit and praising the players.

"The Astros don't have to bow their heads," he said. "They are a better ball club than a lot of people give them credit for — I have to tip my hat to them.

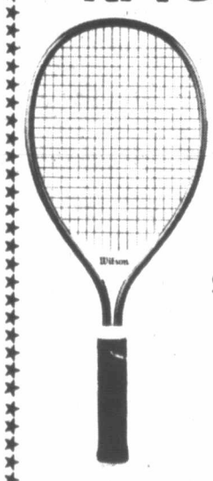

"This team went through a lot in this season. There were injuries, but they held together. They had a lot of heart and I think that surprised a lot of people. They proved that they were a top-rate team."

Virdon could not be reached at his Missouri home for comment after Monday's award

A nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters gave Virdon 293½ votes for a wide victory margin over Phils Manager Dallas Green, the runnerup with 167½ votes.

Bobby Cox, who led Atlanta on a surge in the second half of the season before the Braves finished fourth, was third with 66 votes.

MOSOSAUR BONES DISCOVERED

DALLAS (AP) — An expert has determined that bones discovered by a brick company employee belonged to a mososaur — a 60-million-year-old, 30-foot aquatic reptile.

After years of scrapping clay to make bricks, Luvenson Davis of Ferris thought he had found his first dinosaur Friday.

But Southern Methodist University paleontologist Bob Slaughter Monday declared the fossil that of a mososaur, a member of the lizard family that lived at the same time as dinosaurs.

If enough of the animal's bones are found, Slaughter indicated he would attempt to reconstruct it.

ROSE TAKES NEW SHOW

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Charlie Rose, for 20 months host of the highest-rated local talk show, is resigning to host a similar show for television station WRC in Washington, D.C., that will be syndicated nationally.

Rose's new live show will be shown at noon weekdays in Washington beginning Jan. 5, but will air at its usual 9 a.m. spot on television station KXAS here.

WRC is owned and operated by NBC. WRC, along with Charlie Rose Productions and Post-Newsweek stations, will syndicate the show. Rose said his show's format will not change.

AFFAIR MOTIVE IN WIFE'S MURDER

RICHARDSON, Texas (AP) — A belief that his wife was having an extramarital affair caused Allen Monroe to chase her out of the house with a .38-caliber revolver, police investigators said Monday.

Kathy Monroe, 36, was shot and killed as she screamed for help on her next-door neighbors' porch Sunday.

Monroe, 37, was released from Richardson City Jail Monday after posting $15,000 cash bond, police said. His bond was reduced from $100,000 during a hearing before state District Judge John Vance Monday, said Monroe's lawyer, Mark Holland.

Richardson Police Chief Kenneth Yarbrough said Monroe heard reports from three associates on a hunting trip that his wife was having an affair, and confronted her about it when she returned home.

MID EAST STUDENTS DISRUPT IRANIAN SPEECH

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Seven University of Texas students from the Middle East have been found guilty of violating university rules when they disrupted a speech last Jan. 31 by the former Iranian Ambassador to the United Nations, Fereydoun Hoveyda.

Professor George Dix, hearing officer for the university disciplinary proceedings, said another hearing would be held to consider penalities for the students. The 11 possible penalties range from a written admonition to suspension or expulsion.

The students were among 12 demonstrators, nine Iranians and three Palestinians, who were found guilty in September in a non-jury county court trial of disrupting the speech by the former spkoesman for the late Shah of Iran. Each was fined $200 and given a jail sentence. None had to serve any time because the judge credited them for time already spent in jail after their arrests in Januaryr.

Dix did not set a date for the disciplinary hearing.

RESTRAINING ORDER ISSUED AGAINST INSURANCE COMPANY

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Attorney General Mark White said Tuesday a temporary restraining order has been issued against United Capital Life Insurance Co.

The state alleged the firm was operating in an insolvent condition in violation of state insurance laws.

Anthony G. Harris was named temporary receiver.

District Court Judge Tom Blackwell set a hearing on a temporary injunction for Nov. 25.

TEXAS WOMAN KNIGHTED

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) —Dr. Cecile DeWitt Morette, physicist and professor of astronomy at the University of Texas, has been declared a knight in the National Order of Merit by the French government.

She was selected by her native country for the honor in recognition of the founding of the Lew Houches School of Theoretical Physics after World War II.

The school was the first of its kind designed to teach physicists the new developments in their fields.

PARKING METERS FOR RAILROADS?

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Reps. Hector Uribe, D-Brownsville, and Jerry Benedict, D-Angleton, say they considered putting parking meters at railroad crossings but decided stiffer fines would be just as good.

The two pre-filed a bill Tuesday for the 1981 Legislature that would allow judges to assess fines of $500 to $1,000 on railroads for blocking intersections. The current law, passed in 1921, sets the fine at $5 to $100.

"The existing penalties are simply too low to provide a deterrent to the railroads," said a joint statement. "The railroad companies simply treat them as another cost of doing business. We thought about putting parking meters at railroad crossings but couldn't find any that would take $500 bills."

Their bill also would allow any railroad employee to be ticketed, not just the "driver."

FREEWAY RAPIST GETS 50 YEARS IN PRISON

HOUSTON (AP) — A 23-year-old man that police dubbed the "Freeway Rapist" for his alleged attacks on as many as 30 women has been sentenced to 50 years in prison for the Feb. 21 assault of a Houston woman.

James Ricky Richard, a Houston cement truck driver, was convicted and sentenced Tuesday on a charge of aggravated sexual abuse.

Assistant District Attorney Jack Frels said the case was one of six the state filed against Richards. However, he was uncertain whether the state will prosecute the other five cases.

Frels claims Richards preyed upon women driving along Houston freeways alone late at night between February and September.

Richards got the victim's attention, telling her sparks were coming from under the car, Frels said. He coaxed the women to side of the road, where he then raped and sometimes robbed them, Frels said.

Oil consortium seeks offshore unloading port

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Post reported today a four-company consortium plans to ask the Department of Transportation for a license to build an offshore supertanker unloading facility similar to one proposed by the now-defunct Texas Deepwater Port Authority.

The Texas Offshore Port consortium plans to apply for the license "sometime in December," the Post reported.

The four companies — Phillips Petroleum Co., Continental Pipeline Co., Dow Chemical U.S.A. and Seaway Pipe Line Co. — want to build a single buoy unit near Freeport, about 12 miles offshore in 72 feet of water, the newspaper said.

The facility would have an unloading capacity of 500,000 barrels of oil a day at a minimum rate of 40,000 barrels an hour and would supply Phillips, Dow and Conoco Inc. plants in Southeast Texas, according to the Post.

The project resembles one proposed by the TDPA that folded after its license expired Saturday and federal officials rejected a plan to scale down the original 2.5-million-barrel-a-day facility to one capable of off-loading 500,000 daily.

TDPA officials were unable to obtain use agreements from oil and chemical companies to underwrite bond sales of more than $1 billion to build the larger facility. The groups, however, obtained non-binding letters of intent from about a half dozen firms willing to import 550,000 barrels of oil a day through the proposed port.

There currently are only four members in the consortium, but the newspaper said other companies could be added later.

The consortium indicated earlier they would make no final proposal to federal officials until a final decision has been made on the TDPA application.

Sheriff dies

CROWELL, Texas (AP) — Emmett Howard, 41, sheriff of Foard County, died late Tuesday in a Crowell hospital after a lengthy illness.

Howard started his law enforcement career with the Odessa Police Department, where he eventually became sergeant of detectives.

He was appointed Foard County sheriff in 1971, following the resignation of Dan Calloway, and remained in office until 1976. In 1978, he was re-elected and served until his death.

Funeral services will be in Crowell Thursday.
