Subdued Perry tries to steady campaign in Iowa

Governor avoids reporters and stays on message before New Hampshire debate

By Charles Babington
Associated Press

ORANGE CITY, Iowa — Rick Perry has lost some of his Texas swagger. Maybe that's what happens when a governor tops Republican presidential polls the minute he joins the race, only to plummet after a shaky debate performance.

Whatever the cause, it was a more careful Perry who campaigned in Iowa on the weekend, trying to get his campaign back on track before Tuesday's debate in New Hampshire and an Oct. 18 debate in Las Vegas. Rather than the new sheriff in town, he looked more like a cowboy cautiously remounting his horse after a surprising throw.

In four Iowa towns in two days, the Texas governor stuck to his stump speech, sometimes glancing at notes. He took a half dozen questions from voters at each stop, but none from the numerous reporters around him. He shook some hands and posed for pictures in the small but crowded restaurants his staff selected, but he left before others could greet him. Some voters appeared eager for more love than he returned.

Perry never mentioned his chief rival, Mitt Romney by name. It's possible, however, that he was thinking of the former Massachusetts governor when he repeatedly said Iowans measure leaders "by how they walk, not how they talk" on issues such as job creation.

Perry seemed so eager to stick to his talking points that he passed up some softball pitches. Asked in Orange City what books have influenced him, Perry didn't mention the

Taking time to raise awareness about breast cancer

Submitted by Fatimah Castillo, Gifts of Hope executive director

DIFFERENCE MAKERS

Every day, often out of the limelight, people are making a difference in our community.

Difference Makers is a bi-weekly profile written by readers that acknowledges those who work to make the Permian Basin a better place.

If you would like to profile a Difference Maker, please contact Editor Stewart Doreen at 687-8856 or send a submission to sdoreen@mrt.com. Please keep submissions to no longer than 500 words.

Cherrie Wilson, a wife, mother, grandmother and owner and operator of Kyotee Screen Printing & Gifts, was diagnosed with breast cancer in 2002.

It had been five years since her last mammogram, and she was changing physicians. Her new physician told her he would not see her unless she had a recent mammogram. So she scheduled one. The report was not good — stage II breast cancer. She started chemotherapy and radiation immediately, followed with two surgeries. While she was undergoing treatment, Cherrie saw the effects the treatments had on others.

Cherrie said after she completed her treatment she often wondered what she could do to help. She wanted to promote awareness for routine screenings and early detection. One day a friend, a fireman, came to her shop and started talking about doing something together. That's when the idea was born. He wanted to hold a breast cancer awareness walk in April. Cherrie said, "Let's do one in October during Breast Cancer Awareness Month."

And Cherrie has collaborated with the Midland Fire Department every year since. This will be the third year Cherrie decorates Grafa Park in Central Midland. It also is the third year Kyotee Printing and the Midland Fire Department host a walk. This year, the Breast Cancer Awareness walk will take place at 9 a.m. Saturday.

The walk is open to anyone who would like to participate. There is no charge to walk.

Cherrie raises money for Gifts of Hope, a non-profit organization that assists cancer patients. She purchases T-shirts and other various breast cancer awareness items to sell during the walk. She sells these items at her cost and donates everything so all the

Pink the Park honors, memorializes loved ones with breast cancer

By Sara Higgins
Staff Writer

Pink flags waved calmly in the sunny afternoon air, serving as reminders of those whose lives have been touched by breast cancer.

The flags, which were planted at the Basin Breast Cancer Coalition's Pink the Park event at Wadley Baron Park Sunday, will remain at the park throughout the month of October to honor and memorialize those who survived, died or continue to fight breast cancer. Family and friends remembered their loved ones by saying their names aloud before planting the flags along "A" Street, then walked around the pond after a survivor's lap for a time of contemplation. The walk was hosted simultaneously at Freedom Park in Odessa.

GET YOUR PINK ON

The Reporter-Telegram is providing three days of special coverage dedicated to bringing attention to Breast Cancer Awareness Month.

The three days culminate on Tuesday with our special "Pink Edition," which will be a first for the Reporter-Telegram and will include a section dedicated to the topic and those who have fought to beat the disease.

The event was one of several that will be hosted by the coalition and its partner agencies through October for breast cancer awareness. The coalition was formed this summer by volunteers and staff of health care systems, non-profit agencies and support groups in the Permian Basin.

"We are a loose-knit group of dedicated souls who, in our two cities, try to provide support for breast cancer patients," said Betsy Triplett-Hurt, the group's unofficial chairwoman and volunteer through the Laura W. Bush Institute.

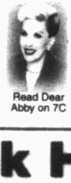

The Rev. Joe Mayo, of Stonegate Fellowship, was in attendance to give the invocation, and his wife Sheri was invited to tell her story as a breast cancer survivor.

"As a survivor and now a health care provider, I believe it's important to educate women on their individual risks," she said.

Obituaries

Floyd Martin

Sadly my beloved husband, our beloved Father and Grandfather, Floyd Martin, 79 years old, passed away on Saturday, October 8, 2011. He was surrounded by his wife, children, grandchildren and friends during his last days. He was born in Big Spring, Texas on September 21, 1932 to Irland and Lena Ruth Sample Martin. His mother died when he was a young child. Lee and Cordelia Castle raised Floyd from the age of thirteen months and moved to Knott. He attended school in Knott and later graduated from Stanton High School in 1950. He married the love of his life, Mary Frances Burchett on August 5, 1950 in Big Spring, Texas, and they were married for 61 years. Floyd was a wonderful provider for his family and he will be loved and missed.

Floyd was a proud farmer and rancher. He was a Deacon and actively involved at Lenorah Baptist Church. He had his own Christian ministry and was passionate about learning the Bible and sharing the word of God with others. His ministry included the Big Spring Prison for six years along with many youth programs in Tarzan and Lenorah.

Floyd was preceded in death by his parents, foster parents, his two sons, Larry and Lonny Martin and one grandchild, L. V. Welch. He is survived by his wife, Mary Frances; two daughters, Charoltte Welch of Midland and Belinda DeArman and husband, Jeff of Plano. He is also survived by his grandchildren, Monica Burks, Scottie and Holly Welch, Waylon Martin, Travis and Kristin Martin, Terri and Jesse McDaniel and Alyssa DeArman; eight great-grandchildren and one great-great-grandchild. Also surviving is Virginia Martin of Midland and her two sons, Jeff and Ray Duke.

The family is very appreciative of the love and support by many of his friends over these last few days.

Funeral services will be 2:00 PM Tuesday, October 11, 2011 at the First Baptist Church in Stanton with Rev. Leandro Gonzales and Dr. John Key, officiating. Interment will follow at Evergreen Cemetery. The family will receive friends from 6:00 PM to 8:00 PM Monday at the funeral home.

The family suggests memorials be made to a favorite charity.

Arrangements under the direction of Gilbreath Funeral Home of Stanton. Online condolences can be made at: www.npwelch.com

Roy H. Davidson

Roy H. Davidson, born January 16, 1919, passed away on Friday, October 7, 2011.

He was preceded in death by his wife, Robbie W. Davidson and his parents, Roy H. Davidson Sr. and Virginia Davidson.

Roy is survived by daughters, Diane Davidson Claiborne and Elaine Davidson Smith; his grandchildren, Shauna I. Claiborne; R. Hayes Smith and wife, Elizabeth; Paul E. Smith and wife, Stephanie; Robbie Smith Moseley and husband, Bruce; Dr. Joseph P. Schneiderjan and wife, Tricia; and Jerame G. Schneiderjan; great-grandsons, Miles Davidson Smith, William Schneiderjan, J. Paul, , and Jack Schneiderjan; and great-granddaughters Maddie and Miche Moseley.

With great appreciation, we thank Dr. Gregory Bartha.

Memorial services in honor of Roy will be held at First Baptist Church on Monday, October 10, 2011 at 11:00 am. Arrangements are under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home of Midland, Texas. Condolences may be made at www.ellisfunerals.com.

3 people injured in parking lot by unknown shooter

Police said three people were struck by gunfire when an argument broke out in the parking lot of a Dallas nightclub.

Witnesses tell police shots were fired when the argument escalated into a physical altercation early Sunday.

Three people in the crowd were struck by gunfire and were taken to a hospital with non-life threatening injuries.

Police are calling the shooter "unknown."

The Dallas Police Department's gang unit is investigating the incident.

It was the second shooting at a Dallas nightclub over the weekend.

Early Saturday, eight people were shot when members of two rival gangs confronted each other at a Rap Off competition. The victims remain in critical to fair condition in Dallas hospitals, according to police.

Coast Guard rescues 8 from boat in storm

The U.S. Coast Guard has rescued eight people from a boat stranded in bad weather northeast of Corpus Christi.

The Coast Guard said the group intentionally grounded their 16-foot aluminum flat bottom boat because of increasingly severe weather at Mitchells Cut near Matagorda Bay.

Coast Guard Lt. Michael Gibson said in a news release that winds were gusting up to 46 mph with lightning strikes.

Four adults and six children were on the boat. Two adults and the children were rescued by helicopter about 1 a.m. Sunday. The Coast Guard said two adults opted to stay with the boat and ride out the storm.

The Coast Guard said the rescued family members were turned over to an emergency medical crew waiting at a nearby boat ramp.

University of Texas buys Nobel laureate's archive

By Jim Vertuno
Associated Press

AUSTIN — The professional archive of Nobel Prize-winning writer J.M. Coetzee will be housed at the University of Texas' Harry Ransom Center humanities library, providing a rare glimpse into the man considered a master storyteller of the South African experience and public injustice.

The Ransom Center's $1.5 million acquisition of the Coetzee collection was scheduled to be formally announced Monday. The collection purchased using private grants and university money includes 155 boxes of manuscripts, notebooks, essays, speeches and letters to his publishers dating back to 1956.

"He writes brilliantly of his native home of South Africa, but the themes and conflicts he explores in his works are universal," Ransom Center Director Thomas Staley said.

Coetzee was born in Cape Town, South Africa, in 1940 and earned his doctorate in English, linguistics and Germanic languages at the University of Texas in 1965. He won the Nobel prize for literature in 2003.

The thread of South Africa's history of racism and social inequality runs through Coetzee's diverse body of novels, memoirs and criticism.

Coetzee has published 13 books, including "Life & Times of Michael K" in 1983 and "Disgrace" in 1999. Both novels received the prestigious Man Booker Prize, awarded each year for best full-length novel. Coetzee was the first author to win the Booker award twice.

The collection will give scholars an intimate view of how he developed characters and storylines in his novels as well as conversations with agents and publishers, said Molly Schwartzburg, the Ransom Center's curator of literature.

The collection includes nine "drafts" of "Life & Times of Michael K." Coetzee's fourth novel about a simple gardener and his mother who live in Cape Town when the city erupts into violent unrest.

Some of the drafts are only a few pages long but several present alternative narratives for the main characters. In one, Michael is viewed as a brilliant poet. In another, he is an educated dispatch clerk. Anna, who is Michael's mother in the final version, changes roles from his mother to his wife to his grandmother. Coetzee didn't settle on the final relationship of mother and son until the sixth version.

"He knows it's about a man and a woman who are related in some way. Whether they are exercises or false starts, we don't know," Schwartzburg said.

Schwartzburg called the Coetzee archive one of Ransom Center's most important literary acquisitions and noted the center's expanding collection of key Africa-based authors. The Ransom Center also has the archive of Nobel-winning author Doris Lessing, who grew up in Rhodesia, which is now called Zimbabwe.

Other Nobel laureates represented in the Ransom Center collections include Samuel Beckett, T.S. Eliot, Ernest Hemingway, George Bernard Shaw, Isaac Bashevis Singer, John Steinbeck and W.B. Yeats.

"I expect to hear from scholars around the world," about the Coetzee collection, Schwartzburg said.

The son of a sheep farmer, Coetzee left South Africa for a decade after the Sharpeville shootings of 1960, when police fired on demonstrators and killed 70 people. He worked briefly in England as a programmer for IBM before enrolling at Texas for his doctorate. Coetzee's dissertation was on the early fiction of Beckett and he did much of his research in the Ransom Center.

Coetzee's first novel, "Dusklands," came out in 1974. Other works include the novels "Foe" and "The Master of Petersburg," and two memoirs written in the third person, "Boyhood" and "Youth" in which he labels his early years in South Africa "a bad start. A handicap."

Coetzee has frequently taught at American universities, including a stint at Texas' Michner Center for Writers in 1995. He lives in Adelaide, Australia.

"My association with the University of Texas goes back almost a half century," Coetzee said. "It is very satisfying to know that my papers will find a home at the Ransom Center, one of the world's great research institutions."

Tornado damages homes, post office in San Antonio

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — A small tornado touched down in San Antonio early Sunday, damaging several homes and a post office.

The overnight storm dumped more than 3 inches of rain on the city and left thousands without power, the San Antonio Express-News (http://bit.ly/puHppY) reported. It was not immediately clear whether the tornado caused any injuries.

The twister touched down about 1:20 a.m. Sunday and traveled about 1.5 miles with a path about 50 yards wide, according to the National Weather Service. Strength and wind-speed estimates have not been determined.

The storm tossed around postal trucks and bent lights in a parking lot before it dissipated.

The extent of the damage was unclear Sunday, but at least four families were displaced from their homes, according to the American Red Cross in San Antonio. Volunteers met with the families and made arrangements at a local hotel for 11 adults and eight children, Red Cross spokeswoman Luch Lashover said.

Lisa Campos, 35, said she was awakened by the strong winds shortly after 1 a.m.

"It sounded like a whistle, and then everything crashed," she said. "I didn't know what it was, but it was over fast — it just lasted about two minutes."

Campos said she and her four sons between the ages of 2 and 14 stood in shock in the living room before realizing what happened. Shortly afterward, she heard sirens, and a San Antonio police officer later knocked on her door and told her a tornado may have struck.

She said trash was strewn across her backyard, and the roofing of a back patio had been bent in different directions.

"It could have been much worse," she said.

Nearby, Daniel Martinez, 27, awoke to a loud bang. He said his younger brother pried open the front door, which was being held shut by the wind, and saw a mailbox flying through the air. After several minutes, the winds quieted, he said, and neighbors emerged from their homes to survey the damage.

The roof of his parent's house had been blown off, and a neighbor's tree had somehow become lodged in the windshield of a truck.

"It was very surprising," said Martinez, whose family chose to remain in the partially damaged home. "We're not really known for our tornadoes here in San Antonio."

About 9,300 homes reported power outages overnight, CPS Energy spokesman Victor Robledo said. By midday, about 2,300 customers remained in the dark, he said.

More rain was expected throughout the day and officials warned that low-water crossings could flood. Several had been closed.

More than 3 inches of rain was reported in San Antonio between midnight and 3 p.m. Sunday, forecaster Bob Fogarty said.

"This was a significant rain event," Fogarty said. "It was a good one, because it was widespread; it got the aquifer good. Every little bit helps."

But the rain wasn't enough to put a dent in the precipitation deficit created by this year's drought, he said.

Unemployed seek protection against job bias

By Sam Hananel
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — After two years on the unemployment rolls, Selena Forte thought she'd found a temporary job at a delivery company that matched her qualifications.

But Forte, a 55-year-old from Cleveland, says a recruiter for an employment agency told her she would not be considered for the job because she had been out of work too long. She had lost her job driving a bus.

"They didn't even want to hear about my experience," said Forte. "It didn't make sense. You're always told just go out there and get a job."

Forte, scraping by now as a part time substitute school bus driver, is part of a growing number of unemployed or underemployed Americans who complain they are being screened out of job openings for the very reason they're looking for work in the first place. Some companies and job agencies prefer applicants who already have jobs, or haven't been jobless too long.

She could get help from a provision in President Barack Obama's jobs bill, which would ban companies with 15 or more employees from refusing to consider — or offer a job to — someone who is unemployed. The measure also applies to employment agencies and would prohibit want ads that disqualify applicants just because they are unemployed.

But Obama's bill faces a troubled path in Congress, as Republicans strongly oppose its plans for tax increases on the wealthy and other spending provisions. Should the bill fail, Democrats are sure to remind jobless voters that the GOP blocked an attempt to redress discrimination against them at a time when work is so hard to find.

The effort to protect the unemployed has drawn praise from workers' rights advocates, but business groups say it will just stir up needless litigation by frustrated job applicants. The provision would give those claiming discrimination a right to sue, and violators would face fines of up to $1,000 per day, plus attorney fees and costs.

"Threatening business owners with new lawsuits is not going to help create jobs and will probably have a chilling effect on hiring," said Cynthia Magnuson, spokeswoman for the National Federation of Independent Business.

"Business owners may be concerned about posting a new job if they could face a possible lawsuit."

Cow named Lucky rescued from well

BOULDER — Firefighters, neighbors and animal control officers have rescued a pregnant cow that crashed through a wooden cover and fell eight feet to the bottom of a wide, rectangular well northwest of Denver.

The cow, named Lucky, was hoisted to safety Saturday afternoon. The Denver Post reported a veterinarian checked her out and she appeared to be all right.

Tim Losh of the Mountain View Fire Department said firefighters were called out at about 3:30 p.m. Saturday to the well outside the Boulder County town of Erie. A neighbor called someone who owns a crane and then climbed into the well to calm the cow.

Rescuers looped fire hoses under Lucky's belly, attached the hoses to the crane and lifted her out.

Police say man robbed bank, then went for pizza

YUMA — Arizona authorities say they have arrested a man who robbed a Yuma bank then went and spent some of the stolen money on beer and pizza at a nearby restaurant.

Yuma police said 56-year-old Henry Elmer has been booked into county jail on a variety of robbery and theft-related charges.

Officers responded to a robbery call at the main branch of the Wells Fargo Bank across from the Yuma Police Station around 1:30 p.m. Saturday.

A man reportedly entered the bank, produced a box-cutter knife and fled with an undisclosed amount of cash.

Police said Elmer then went to a nearby restaurant, ordered beer and a couple of slices of pizza and paid with some of the bank's money.

Police said they located Elmer before the meal was served. It's unclear whether he has a lawyer yet.

Immigrants fearing deportation make plans for kids

By Jay Reeves
Associated Press

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Terrified by Alabama's strict new immigration crackdown, parents living in the state illegally say they are doing something that was unthinkable just days ago — asking friends, relatives, co-workers and acquaintances to take their children if they're arrested or deported.

Many illegal immigrants signed documents in the past week allowing others to care for their children if needed, assistance groups say, and a couple living illegally in nearby Shelby County extracted a promise from the man's boss to send their three young children — all U.S. citizens — to Mexico should they be jailed under the law.

A key sponsor of the measure, state Sen. Scott Beason, said such concerns weren't raised when legislators were considering the bill, and he wonders if the stories now are designed to "pull on heart strings" and build sympathy for illegal immigrants.

But for Maria Patino — who prays every time she leaves home — even a chance encounter with police could end with her two elementary-age children being left alone or taken to foster care if she and her husband are sent back to Mexico. Both are in the country illegally and have no friends or relatives close enough to take in the kids.

"Every time I leave I don't know if I will come back," Patino, 27, said through tears. "I can't stop working. My daughters need shoes and other things."

Social worker Jazmin Rivera helps dozens of Spanish-speaking immigrants fill out paperwork weekly, and many are now seeking legal documents called powers of attorney so friends and others could care for their children.

"People are scared, and they want to be sure their kids are safe if something happens to them," said Rivera, a case manager at the Hispanic Interest Coalition of Alabama.

Beason, R-Gardendale, has his doubts about how widespread such cases really are.

"I would do whatever it took for my family to stay with me," he said. "It's beyond my comprehension that you would just leave your children anywhere."

Alabama's law, regarded by many as the toughest in the U.S., was passed by the Republican-controlled Legislature this year and signed by Gov. Robert Bentley. A federal judge blocked some parts of it but allowed key pieces to stand — including a provision that allows police to hold suspected illegal immigrants without bond. On Friday, the U.S. Justice Department and civil rights groups asked a federal appeals court to block the law, saying it could lead to discrimination against even legal residents.

However, the law will remain in effect at least until Nov. 29, when the appeals court said it would hear oral arguments.

Immigrant parents say that leaves them little choice other than to seek out people to care for their children because they fear the youngsters — many of whom are U.S. citizens — will be left home alone or sent to foster care if they are suddenly nabbed under the law.

Cristian Gonzalez, 28, said she has informally asked the manager of the rental property where she lives to take care of her 10-year-old daughter should she and her husband be arrested because they are illegal immigrants. The girl, a U.S. citizen who has medals for making good grades, needs to finish school in America and is deeply rooted in Alabama, she said.

Gonzalez said their other three kids are too young to remain and will go back to Mexico with her and her husband even though they are U.S. citizens.

"We're afraid to go back to Mexico because of the drugs, the cartels and the killings," Gonzalez said. "And we are afraid to stay here because of the law."

Mexican authorities have struggled in the fight against drug cartels known for carrying out brutal killings as they try to tighten control over territory. Authorities say that country's drug war has claimed thousands of lives.

Under the law, police making traffic stops can question anyone suspected of being in the country illegally and jail them without bond if they lack proof of citizenship. Many police agencies say they have yet to begin enforcing the law because officers haven't been trained in all of its intricacies.

Still, fear runs deep among people living in the state without visas, passports, driver licenses and other documents.

Patino isn't sure what would happen to her kids if she is arrested. Neither is stay-at-home mom Cristian Carraon, who is in the country illegally yet is married to a U.S. citizen and has three children — 8, 5 and 3 — who also are citizens.

Are You Concerned About Your Water?
I am writing you to tell you that I am very happy with the "Home Water Treatment System", that you installed in my home recently. I was dissatisfied with the Midland water and had investigated my choices to improve the quality. The results are:
1. My hair no longer feels like broom straw.
2. My skin enjoys the softness of the water.
3. I use less soap in the washer.
4. The mirror in the bathroom no longer has a chemical crust on it.
5. And best of all, the taste and smell is wonderful. No more bottled water, and no salt bags to load into a softener. Thanks again for this fine product.

Mayo's great-grandmother was diagnosed at the age of 35 and died at the age of 36. Her mother also was diagnosed at 35 and died three years later. Mayo received her own diagnosis at the same age of 35 and is an eight-year survivor today.

"I just felt like a ticking time bomb waiting to happen," she said.

Her journey reignited a love for medicine she held as a child, and she became a physician's assistant to help educate women on a daily basis about the importance of mammograms and self-examinations.

"You've got to be your own health care advocate," she said.

Walkers were not required to register or fundraise before the event. Instead, The coalition pooled money to provide about 50 flags at each park in Midland and Odessa, so that all the $25 donations made toward flags would go toward funding for free breast protheses in the Permian Basin through the American Cancer Society. T-shirts were sold at the event for $15 to benefit free mammograms for local women through the Laura W. Bush Institute.

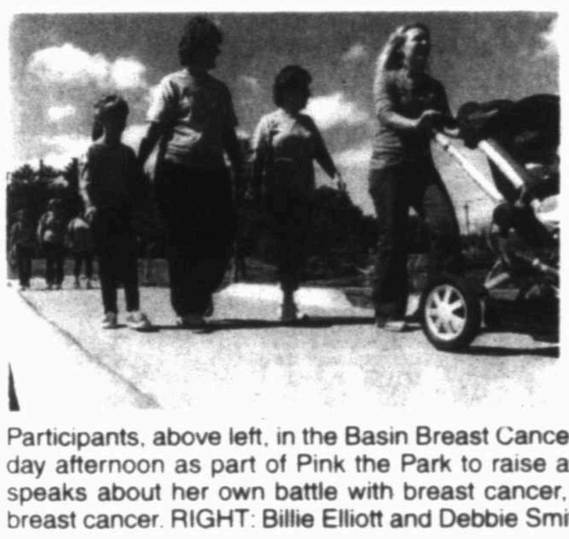

The idea for the walk was sparked by Fran Billingsley, who wanted to do something in honor of her older sister who was diagnosed with breast cancer eight years ago. Though Billingsley decided to walk in memory of Triplett-Hurt's mother Sunday, she will participate in other events throughout October in her sister's name.

"I got really emotional today," said Triplett-Hurt, whose mother died of complications from breast cancer five years ago.

Upcoming events planned for breast cancer awareness this month include the Pink the Basin Luncheon at the Midland Horseshoe on Oct. 11; the Fight Like a Girl event at Matthew's Martial Arts Oct. 14; and the Gifts of Hope Chili Cook-off at the American Legion on Oct. 15.

For more information about the Basin Breast Cancer Coalition, visit www.basinbreastcancercoalition.org. To make a donation toward one of the flags posted at Wadley Baron Park in memory or honor of a loved one, call 334-6815.

PERRY

From 1A

Bible or the works of famous Americans. He cited only the late Austrian economist Friedrich Hayek, a strong advocate of free markets, then veered back into his familiar criticisms of President Barack Obama's stimulus programs.

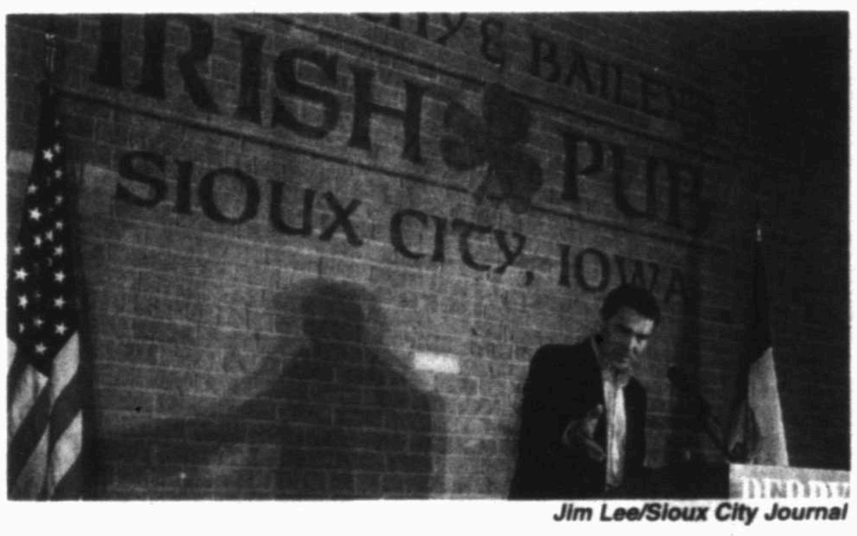

Perry has sharpened his answers about illegal immigrants, the topic that bedeviled him in the Sept. 22 debate, and which several Iowa Republicans pointedly raised this weekend. A woman in Spencer said she could not understand why he agreed to give in-state college tuition rates to illegal immigrants in Texas.

Perry defended the program. But he avoided suggesting that its critics have no heart, as he did in the last debate, to widespread criticism. He stuck entirely to economic reasons.

"Are we going to create a class of tax wasters or are we going to create taxpayers?" he asked, describing the difference between immigrants who don't go to college and those who do. "Texas chose the latter."

Several skeptics seemed unconvinced, as Perry drew less of a distinction between illegal immigrants and U.S. citizens than they wanted to hear.

Speaking to another woman who challenged him as he was leaving the event in Orange City, the governor said: "Anyone who moves to the state of Texas and spends three years there, they are eligible for in-state tuition. So no free ride at all."

Jim Lee/Sioux City Journal

Gov. Rick Perry, GOP presidential contender, speaks at McCarthy & Bailey's Irish Pub in Sioux City, Iowa, on Saturday.

Perry addressed the tuition issue only when asked, but at every stop he eagerly detailed several of his get-tough positions on immigration. They included his vetoing a bill that would have let illegal immigrants obtain Texas driver's licenses, spending heavily on border security, and his endorsement of a law requiring photo identification cards for Texans seeking to vote.

Perhaps the best news for Perry is that many party activists don't seem concerned about specific incidents and snafus that drive TV talk shows. Few of them appear passionate about Romney, giving the Texan an opening to regain momentum.

These GOP activists care intensely about ousting Obama, however, and Perry has a way to go in showing them he's the one to do it.

"I'm waiting to be convinced," said Mary Dittmer, 61, moments before Perry took the stage in Tiffin on Friday, his only east Iowa stop of the weekend before flying to the state's deeply conservative northwest quadrant. She said she's lukewarm about Romney, mainly because he mandated health insurance coverage in Massachusetts. But Perry hasn't closed the deal, Dittmer said, and she's still weighing other candidates including Herman Cain and Newt Gingrich.

People interviewed at the Johnson County GOP barbecue in Tiffin expressed no interest in recent dustups about Romney's Mormonism, the name of a Texas hunting camp used by Perry, or the finer details of Perry's debating skills

"We don't have to have a great debater," said Lynn Yoder, 69, a carpenter and garage door salesman. "We need a good leader."

The issues that prompted Perry's fall in several polls, Yoder said, seem "manufactured."

Some Republicans at all four Iowa stops, however, said Perry seems too sympathetic to illegal immigrants. News of Texas' tuition policy "bothered me when it first came out," said Jim Lichty, 58, a land surveyor.

"I have a very strong record on immigration," Perry said in Tiffin and the other towns.

Most of his stump speech, which ranges between nine and 15 minutes, is devoted to bashing federal spending, regulations and taxation. These topics play well with Republican activists. Perry, generally seen as a better one-on-one campaigner than Romney, encouraged voters to tune out the TV chatter.

"Pundits don't choose presidents, Iowans do," he said at almost every event. Those voters, he said in Tiffin, "are not looking for the most polished candidates. They're looking for the most principled candidates."

In the televised debates Tuesday and next week, Perry's supporters say they hope he adds a bit more polish to his claim that he's the most principled candidate, and the one best suited to defeat Obama in November 2012.

She has said they have a great time decorating and they look forward to it every year. They spend about three hours decorating Grafa Park with pink flowers and ribbons. When you are driving down Midkiff Road don't forget to take time to admire the beautiful decorations. Cherrie even went to the city to ask for permission. After she spoke to the city they now allow her to keep the decorations up the entire month.

Cherrie said "It comes from my heart. God puts you on this earth to do certain things," and she believes her mission to bring awareness and attention to breast cancer in the Midland area. Cherrie said she has learned a lot of lessons and always questioned why but now her purpose is clear. She wants people to know the impact of breast cancer and how it impacts women. She wants to promote mammograms and early detection. Cherrie wants the people who don't think they will be affected by breast cancer or the people who think it won't touch them to know; because she never thought it would touch her.

Today in history

Today is Monday, Oct. 10, the 283rd day of 2011. There are 82 days left in the year. This is the Columbus Day observance in the United States, as well as Thanksgiving Day in Canada.

Today's highlight in history:

On Oct. 10, 1911, Chinese revolutionaries launched the Wuchang Uprising that led to the collapse of the Qing (or Manchu) Dynasty and the establishment of the Republic of China.

On this date:

In 1845, the U.S. Naval Academy was established in Annapolis, Md.

In 1913, the Panama Canal was effectively completed as President Woodrow Wilson sent a signal from the White House by telegraph, setting off explosives that destroyed a section of the Gamboa dike.

In 1967, the Outer Space Treaty, prohibiting the placing of weapons of mass destruction on the moon or elsewhere in space, entered into force.

In 1973, Vice President Spiro T. Agnew, accused of accepting bribes, pleaded no contest to one count of federal income tax evasion, and resigned his office.

Ten years ago: U.S. jets pounded the Afghan capital of Kabul. President George W. Bush unveiled a list of 22 most-wanted terrorists, including Osama bin Laden.

Deficit 'supercommittee' struggles as clock ticks

By Andrew Taylor
Associated Press

WASHINGTON— The supercommittee is struggling.

After weeks of secret meetings, the 12-member deficit-cutting panel established under last summer's budget and debt deal appears no closer to a breakthrough than when talks began last month.

While the panel members themselves aren't doing much talking, other lawmakers, aides and lobbyists closely tracking the committee are increasingly skeptical, even pessimistic, that the panel will be able to meet its assigned goal of at least $1.2 trillion in deficit savings over the next 10 years.

The reason? A familiar deadlock over taxes and cuts to major programs like Medicare and the Medicaid health care program for the poor and disabled.

Democrats won't go for an agreement that doesn't include lots of new tax revenue; Republicans are just as ardently anti-tax. The impasse over revenues means that Democrats won't agree to cost curbs on popular entitlement programs like Medicare.

"Fairness has to be a prerequisite for it," said House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif. "We have just come through passing a bill that was (all spending) cuts, no revenue." Pelosi was referring to the August debt limit bill, which set tight "caps" on agency budgets but didn't contain revenue increases pressed by Democrats.

Democrats are more insistent on revenues now.

"There's been no movement on revenues and I'm not sure the Democrats will agree to anything without revenues," added a Democratic lobbyist who required anonymity to speak candidly.

Asked last week whether she is confident that the panel can hit its $1.2 trillion goal, co-chairman Sen. Patty Murray, D-Wash., sidestepped the question.

"I am confident that the public is watching us very closely to see if we can show this country that this democracy can work," Murray told reporters. "I carry that weight on my shoulders every day and so does every member of this committee."

The two parties have equal strength on the panel, which has until Thanksgiving to come up with a plan to submit for up-or-down House and Senate votes in December. That means bipartisan compromise is a prerequisite for a successful result.

Thus far, say aides to panel members and other lawmakers, neither side has demonstrated the required flexibility in the super-secret talks.

The $1.2 trillion target evolved after efforts by President Barack Obama and House Speaker John Boehner, R-Ohio, to strike a so-called grand bargain on taxes and spending fell apart in July.

Those discussions and earlier talks led by Vice President Joe Biden identified numerous options for cutting the deficit. They included requiring federal workers to contribute more to their retirement, cutting farm subsidies, auctioning broadcast spectrum and curbing payments to Medicare providers like skilled nursing facilities, rural hospitals and home health care services.

The supercommittee could scoop up these relatively easy-to-generate savings but still fall short of the $1.2 trillion target. Interest groups like the powerful farm lobby might be willing to accept cuts when everybody else is getting hit, too, but are likely to fight back if they're among the relative few getting singled out for sacrifice.

"Once you start taking things off the table or you pick a deal that only hits some parts of the budget, then you have some people who get hit who say, 'Well, why me? Why not other people?'" said Maya MacGuineas, president of the Committee for a Responsible Federal Budget.

To be sure, the supercommittee still has time. And panel members, while divided, earnestly want a result. A more optimistic scenario is that in coming days and weeks, members of the panel will become more flexible as the deadline nears — and as pressure builds from financial markets and credit rating agencies like Standard & Poor's, which in August downgraded U.S. debt from its AAA rating.

At the same time, failure to produce a measure would trigger painful across-the-board cuts to the Pentagon budget and a big slice of domestic programs, including Medicare, food stamps and Medicaid. The idea behind this so-called sequester was to force the two sides to come together because the alternative is too painful.

Time to put an end to the district newsletter

■ You are paying for the fluff mail or in some cases re-election literature.

MICHAEL QUINN SULLIVAN
Texans For Fiscal Responsibility

Jeff Wentworth didn't come up with the idea of having taxpayers pay for his political self-promotion mail-pieces, but his state senate office's mishandling of a "district newsletter" demonstrates why it's long past time for this perk to end.

For decades, taxpayers have picked up the tab for mass-mail newsletters in which legislators highlight their own achievements and promote themselves at the taxpayers' expense.

It was revealed last week that staffers for State Sen. Jeff Wentworth, R-San Antonio, put his newsletter in the mail to nearly 100,000 homes three months earlier than planned. The letter was written to land in mailboxes shortly after the 2011 Christmas and New Year holiday.

You know, that'd be a new year that begins with Wentworth (and all state senators) on the ballot. Just coincidentally, it will be a primary ballot in which the moderate Wentworth is facing a stout challenge from the right on his legislative record.

So it was probably just another coincidence that this newsletter includes articles bashing Congress and lamenting the death of legislation addressing illegal immigration. All red-meat issues for his primary voters. Remember, just coincidentally, it was going out at the front end of his 2012 re-election campaign, not at the end of the 2011 legislative session this summer. Just a coincidence.

Yeah, right. All a coincidence.

For his part, Wentworth apologized — sort of — for the mailing. Well, not exactly; he apologized for the piece going out early … lamenting he didn't have the money to re-mail later to those households who got the letter ahead of schedule.

After all, those voters might go into the election season forgetting about all the good things he said about himself with their money. They might not remember all the right-sounding things he had to say, safely divorced from his rotten record as a lawmaker.

Proponents of these official-political fluff pieces (that is, the elected officials themselves) claim the mailers are a critical way to stay in touch with their constituents, providing them with news and information. Pure bunk.

The newsletters provide news the same way a public relations firm does. Which is to say, it doesn't. These publications are merely ways for legislators to flex the muscles of their incumbency at the expense of Texas' taxpayers.

Now, legislators will claim, correctly, that the dollars spent don't amount to very much of the overall budget. That's nice, but it's also not the point. The question isn't how much is being spent on the activity, but that the activity takes places at all. Taxpayers shouldn't pick up the tab for legislators' re-election materials.

Some readers might remember that leading up to his 2010 electoral defeat, former State Rep. Joe Moody (D-El Paso) distributed a tax-funded newsletter in which he tried to bolster his pro-business credentials by plagiarizing the speeches of Texas Gov. Rick Perry. (Moody lost to Republican businessman Dee Margo in the 2010 general election.)

Letting politicians use the taxpayers cash to promote themselves is bad enough, it is worse when it happens during an election, and downright disgusting when – as in Wentworth's case – the mail piece is so cynically produced so many months in advance.

It's time for the tax-funded "district newsletter" farce to come to an end. In all fairness, Mr. Wentworth's "newsletter" deserves some credit for reminding us just how manipulative lawmakers can be in spending the people's money.

Michael Quinn Sullivan is president of Texans for Fiscal Responsibility (www.EmpowerTexans.com). He can be heard on KWEL radio from 5-6 p.m. Wednesdays.

OUR VIEW

Relationship with doctors means more than government opinion

Many people advancing in age (50 and above) try to stay on top of medical and government recommendations for maintaining proper health checks. Sometimes reaching agreement in this area can produce a lot of anxiety if groups differ on what regimen one should follow.

And sometimes we're concerned even if all the major groups do agree. That was the case this last week when a government panel recommended routine PSA blood test to check men for prostate cancer actually does more harm than good and healthy men should no longer receive the tests as part of routine cancer screening.

While the government opinion is in line with the medical opinion, there remains concern that this advice is counterproductive in scope and practice. However, no major medical group recommends screening for prostate cancer for healthy men.

The government finding concludes that "prostate-specific antigen (PSA) in the blood only sometimes signals prostate cancer is brewing. Worse, screening often detects small tumors that will prove too slow growing to be deadly. And there's no sure way to tell in advance who needs aggressive therapy."

While medical studies appear to be aligned with the government findings, the recommendation did not come as a surprise to cancer specialists. Dr. Virginia Moyer of the Baylor College of Medicine said about a third of men ages 40 to 60 have brewing prostate cancer but "the huge majority of them will never know it in their lifetime if they are not screened." The conclusion: There's little if any mortality benefit.

Of course, the bottom line for individuals remains a matter of choice. You should be able to get a PSA test if you so desire. What you need to keep in mind, however, is that the test might not be totally reliable on detecting whether or not your "brewing" cancer is serious enough for treatment or not.

PSA tests might also be an option for a man with possible prostate symptoms. The bottom line remains that we are responsible for our own health regardless of what the studies tell us. They should be used only as a guide.

Most men over 50 have had at least one PSA blood test, the assumption being that finding cancer early is always a good thing. While this new recommendation undoubtedly will change many current medical practices, there will remain some uncertainty over the wisdom of this move.

We understand the angst that might remain in the wake of this recommendation, so we err on the side of caution in all such cases. The best way to go forward is to follow the recommendation of your doctors because they know your makeup better than anyone.

Chances are if you are getting regular checkups, you will receive a proper diagnosis.

Don't expect Obama to lead 'Occupy' movement

■ The president is too nuanced to lead this group, which has no problems moving forward without him.

DANA MILBROOK
Washington Post Writers Group

As the Occupy Wall Street demonstrators moved to Washington on Thursday and swarmed outside the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, President Obama was at the other end of Lafayette Square trying to align himself with the swelling protest movement.

"I think it expresses the frustrations that the American people feel, that we had the biggest financial crisis since the Great Depression, huge collateral damage all throughout the country, all across Main Street, and yet you're still seeing some of the same folks who acted irresponsibly trying to fight efforts to crack down on abusive practices that got us into this problem in the first place," Obama said at a news conference in the East Room.

For the struggling president, the nascent movement offers a chance at salvation, the opportunity to excite liberals with the sort of populist energy that has fueled the tea party for two years. But, as liberal leaders already know, the young movement must be careful to avoid Obama's embrace: He decimated the progressive cause once, and he would do it again if given the chance.

Liberal activists who rallied behind Obama in 2008 watched as he defied their wishes and instead made unrequited concessions to the Republicans. "Every one in this crowd, I am certain, has had disappointments and frustrations with this White House," Robert Borosage, a director of the Campaign for America's Future, told the audience as he convened the annual gathering of liberal activists in Washington last week. He accused Obama of being "too cautious," "pre-compromised," criticizing his performance on jobs, global warming, defense and foreign policy.

Another of the speakers at the confab, former Obama White House official Van Jones, said it was the liberals' own fault for placing too much faith in the president. "We all affiliated (with) him," he said. "We made a mistake." Obama "got to become head of state, he got promoted — good for him," said Jones, who was forced to quit the White House after being attacked by conservative critics. "But here we are — and it's worse than before."

Yet, the most striking thing about the progressives' gathering was how little Obama was mentioned, and how dismissive the few mentions were. When one woman at the convention tried to ignite Obama's trademark "fired up!" cheer, only a few people responded with the usual answer, "ready to go!" The attempt quickly died.

Rep. Donna Edwards, D-Md., came closer than most in defending Obama, with this less-than-ringing endorsement. "I haven't always been the happy Democratic camper, OK?" But, in terms of liberals' goals, "we can get there faster with our crowd than we can get there with their crowd."

The more successful appeals ignored Obama in favor of calls to turn the Wall Street protests into a "movement moment" to target corporate greed and, as one protest flier put it, "Wall Street's servants on K Street in the Pentagon and in our government."

That would seem to be a fat and juicy target. American companies are sitting on $2 trillion in cash while nearly 15 million of their countrymen are out of work. And Washington does nothing, in large part because vast swaths of the town are controlled by corporations. Some 5,400 congressional staffers have joined lobbying outfits in the last decade, according to a LegiStorm study, and 605 current congressional staffers have lobbied in the last decade. The Center for Responsive Politics counts 328 Obama officials who have already passed through the revolving door to corporate riches. Of the 120 lawmakers who departed from Congress last year, 39 are now in the lobbying trade.

The Democrats, however, have been unable, or unwilling, to turn the corporate excess to their political benefit. The Democratic National Committee's latest attempt, a web ad released Wednesday, shows various Republican presidential candidates calling for repeal of the Dodd-Frank financial reforms, a piece of legislation the average voter almost certainly doesn't know about.

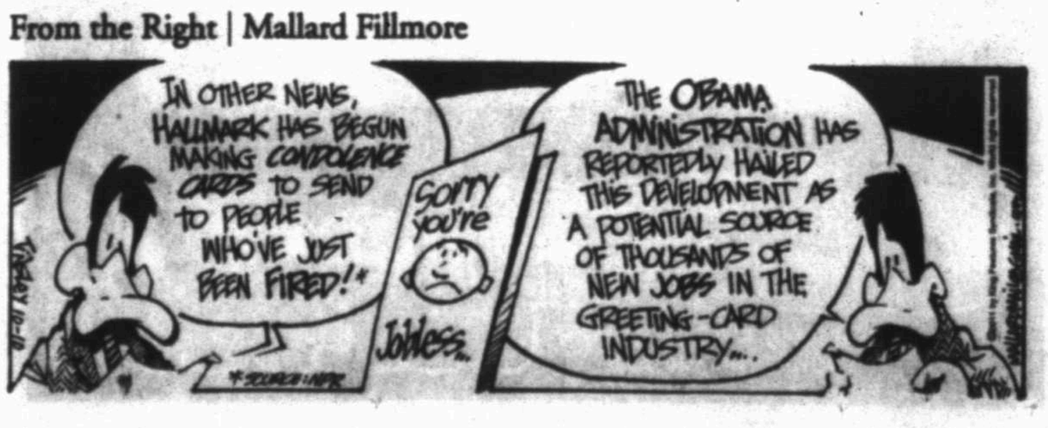

Then there's Obama, entirely too evenhanded to be a populist. "I think people are frustrated, and the protesters are giving voice to a more broad-based frustration about how our financial system works," he said during Thursday's news conference. But in the next breath, he added: "Now, keep in mind I have said before and I will continue to repeat, we have to have a strong, effective financial sector in order for us to grow."

True, but uninspiring. And liberals should by now know that a nuanced president cannot be a movement's mouthpiece.

Seasoned activists critique Wall Street protests

By Cristian Salazar
Associated Press

NEW YORK — To veterans of past social movements, the Occupy Wall Street protests that began in New York and spread nationwide have been a welcome response to corporate greed and the enfeebled economy. But whether the energy of protesters can be tapped to transform the political climate remains to be seen.

"There's a difference between an emotional outcry and a movement," said Andrew Young, who worked alongside the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. as a strategist during the civil rights movement and served as U.S. ambassador to the United Nations. "This is an emotional outcry. The difference is organization and articulation."

The nearly four-week-old protest that began in a lower Manhattan park has taken on a semblance of organization and a coherent message has largely emerged: That "the 99 percent" who struggle daily as the economy shudders, employment stagnates and medical costs rise are suffering as the 1 percent who control the vast majority of the economy's wealth continues to prosper.

Labor unions and students joined the protest on Wednesday, swelling the ranks for a day into the thousands, and lending the occupation a surge of political clout and legitimacy.

President Barack Obama said Thursday that the protesters were "giving voice to a more broad-based frustration about how our financial system works;" some Republicans have been seeking to cast Occupy Wall Street as class warfare.

The growing cohesiveness and profile of the protest have caught the attention of public intellectuals and veterans of past social movements.

"I think if the idea of the movement is to raise the discontent that a lot of people from different walks of life and different persuasions have on the economic inequity in this country — it's been perfect," said the Rev. Al Sharpton, who plans to broadcast his nationally syndicated radio show from the park on Monday and five days later lead a jobs march in Washington, D.C.

He said he felt it was necessary to be there to talk about how blacks and Latinos are also buffeted by the economic difficulties.

"I think it is more a movement to show dissatisfaction. I think that is effective and useful," he said.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson said the protest was a growing success. "There is a legitimacy to their demands for economic reconstruction," he said, with the analysis of the problems in the economic system "dead on," as he wrote in a commentary.

He said the protest could become a powerful movement if "it remains disciplined, focused and nonviolent — and turns some of their pain into voting power."

History is littered with social movements that failed to emerge as political forces to create lasting change — including mass labor protests to end unemployment and to call attention to job injustices, said Immanuel Ness, a professor of political science at Brooklyn College and the editor of the "Encyclopedia of American Social Movements."

He compared it to the tea party movement, saying both were raising concerns about general anxieties over the economic system.

"The messaging is directed at working people," he said. "Both the tea party and Occupy Wall Street are arguing that something needs to change. The question is, What is the source of the problem?"

In the late 1990s, a global movement to reject corporate-driven globalization took to the streets, most famously in the U.S. by shutting down the 1999 meeting of the World Trade Organization in Seattle. In spite of several actions aimed at summits by world institutions, the "movement of movements," as it soon came to be known, faded away.

Much like the Occupy Wall Street protests, one of the main criticisms was that it lacked a cohesive message.

Todd Gitlin, an author and former president of the Students for a Democratic Society in the mid-1960s, attended Wednesday's rally and said the emerging movement was different.

24 dead in worst Cairo riots since Mubarak ouster

By Maggie Michael
Associated Press

CAIRO — Flames lit up downtown Cairo, where massive clashes raged Sunday, drawing Christians angry over a recent church attack, Muslims and Egyptian security forces. At least 24 people were killed and more than 200 injured in the worst sectarian violence since the uprising that ousted Hosni Mubarak in February.

The rioting lasted late into the night, bringing out a deployment of more than 1,000 security forces and armored vehicles to defend the state television building along the Nile, where the trouble began. The military clamped a curfew on the area until 7 a.m.

The clashes spread to nearby Tahrir Square, drawing thousands of people to the vast plaza that served as the epicenter of the protests that ousted Mubarak. On Sunday night, they battled each other with rocks and firebombs, some tearing up pavement for ammunition and others collecting stones in boxes.

At one point, an armored security van sped into the crowd, striking a half-dozen protesters and throwing some into the air. Protesters retaliated by setting fire to military vehicles, a bus and private cars, sending flames rising into the night sky.

After midnight, mobs roamed downtown streets, attacking cars they suspected had Christian passengers. In many areas, there was no visible police or army presence to confront or stop them.

Christians, who make up about 10 percent of Egypt's 80 million people, blame the country's ruling military council for being too lenient on those behind a spate of anti-Christian attacks since Mubarak's ouster. As Egypt undergoes a chaotic power transition and security vacuum in the wake of the uprising, the Coptic Christian minority is particularly worried about the show of force by ultraconservative Islamists.

Prime Minister Essam Sharaf, addressing the nation in a televised speech, said the violence threatened to throw Egypt's post-Mubarak transition off course.

"These events have taken us back several steps," he said. "Instead of moving forward to build a modern state on democratic principles we are back to seeking stability and searching for hidden hands — domestic and foreign — that meddle with the country's security and safety."

SOUTH TEXAS SHORTAGE

Houston Chronicle

The Eagle Ford Oil boom has caused the cost of renting a house in South Texas to skyrocket, forcing local people to move away as oil field workers move in. This four-bedroom house in Cotulla rented for $550 a month until recently. The owner is now seeking to charge $125 a week per occupant to eight or more workers.

Housing scarce in Eagle Ford shale patch

By John MacCormack
San Antonio Express-News

COTULLA — The "For Rent" sign hanging on the fence outside the rundown, four-bedroom house captures perfectly the new housing dynamic in many of the small communities booming across the Eagle Ford shale.

"Oil Field Guys — Welder, Pipe Liners (Guys Only)," it reads.

And while the old white house with the peeling paint is nothing to look at, its owner hopes it soon will generate thousands of dollars a month from transitory workers looking for little more than a place to flop.

"I'm asking $125 a week per man. It can hold up to eight beds, even 10 or 12, and I pay the utilities," said landlord Gustavo Ayala in a recent phone conversation. In comparison, the longtime tenant who was evicted this summer paid $550 a month.

And while the oil and gas boom is creating instant millionaires and bringing prosperity to many others across two dozen Texas counties, not everyone is cashing in. Among those hurt are renters, older people on fixed incomes and others unable to work in the oilfields.

In July, after living in the white house with the peeling paint for nine years, Cotulla City Councilman Joe Flores, his wife Cheryl and their two kids were kicked out. While Ayala claims they paid their rent late and caused other problems, Cheryl Flores said this is untrue, and it was simply to make way for high-rent oilfield workers.

And, the family quickly discovered, the era of affordable rent houses in Cotulla is over.

"We looked around for a month, but it was ridiculous. Two bedrooms or little trailers and they wanted $1,200 to $1,400 a month," said Cheryl Flores, 48, who waited tables at Moe's Family Restaurant for years.

And after failing to find a place to live in Cotulla, Joe Flores quit his supervisory job at a local prison, resigned from the city council and took his family east to his wife's hometown in Kentucky.

"There was no place we could stay because the oil people took over the whole town. It's good for business, but it really sucks for the townies. They are pushing us out," said his wife.

The trend upsets City Librarian Clara Jo Horton who knows of other middleclass families who have either lost rental housing in Cotulla because of the boom, or, as newcomers, cannot find anything affordable.

"I'm on this soapbox about the greed, but I realize that if I had property to rent or be leased to the oil companies for drilling, I might do the same thing as everyone else," she said.

"But when we have to lose people who have been here for years, who support the needs of the community, like a physician's assistant, like teachers, like a city councilman — just for the money, what does that mean in the long run? What will we have left?" she asked.

Alan Kerr, 62, a physician's assistant who has lived in Cotulla for two years, is moving to a cheaper apartment in Pearsall, about 40 miles up Interstate 35. He also is offended by the radical changes in the housing market.

"The people in the apartment complex were notified that it was being bought by a new group, and we learned through the housing authority that had administered this complex that the intention was to triple my rent," he said.

"I make a good living, so it's not that I couldn't afford the rent, but I thought it was an evil thing to do. Other people there couldn't afford it," he said.

And, he said, it was a cold economic decision, with no consideration given to the tenants.

"They're doing it only because they can get that kind of money. The oil people have a housing

In West Texas, a parched football field spells crisis

MCT

Robert Lee High School in Robert Lee went to extraordinary lengths to save their football field from this year's drought, trucking in water daily, drilling a well and buying a new water storage tank. The day before homecoming, it still looked yellowed and dusty.

By Molly Hennessy-Fiske
Los Angeles Times

ROBERT LEE — It is the day before homecoming, and there is trouble at the Robert Lee High School football field.

The field is dying.

The field was once so lush, so emerald green, that the maintenance staff took calls from other schools begging to know its secret. Visitors sometimes assumed it was AstroTurf, then genuflected and found, to their surprise, real blades of springy Bermuda grass. Then came Texas' punishing drought. The parched field now has patches of yellow and brown while the rest struggles to stay green.

Robert Lee is not alone. All across Texas, in heat-battered towns where water towers hang like giant IVs, high schools are struggling with fields where grass has shriveled, dirt has hardened and artificial turf has become too hot to handle.

In a town this small — population 1,050 — everyone holds a memory of the field. It was where wide receiver Lupe Torres learned the meaning of dedication. Where quarterback Aaron Hood made his father, then superintendent, proud. And where defensive end Jimmy Skinner played on the team that won the Region I championship in 1984.

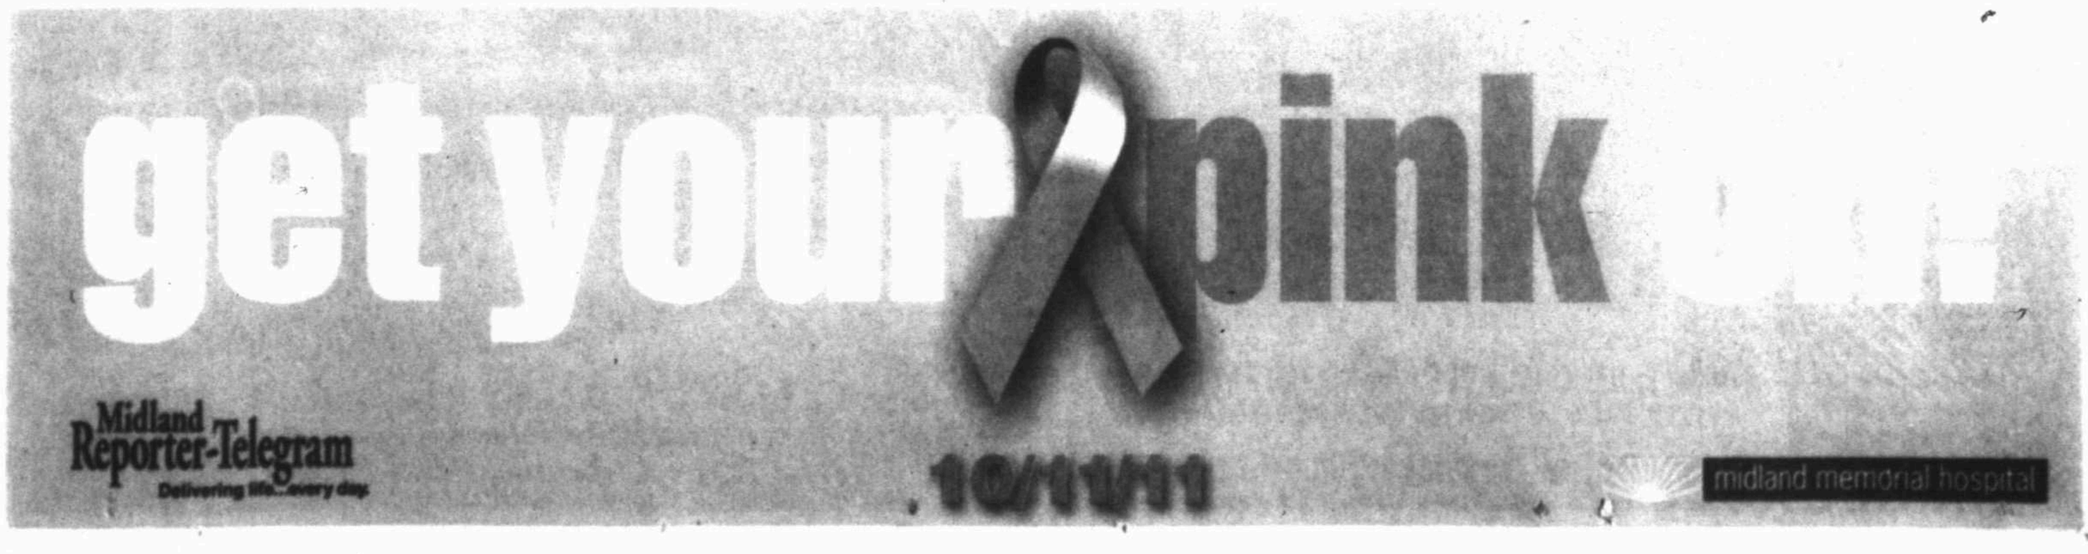

So people here are doing everything they can think of to save it. After all, this isn't just about a game. Here in West Texas, football is God, and the field is church.

At the start of a recent school day, Coach Shay Avants, 35, strides past the orange and black "Robert Lee Steers" sign to survey the field. He glances up. Gray clouds have been rolling since dawn. All across town, named after the confederate general, people are talking rain. Since the start of summer, they received less than an inch.

Avants stops under a goal post and kicks the field. Dust rises. That's not uncommon in the red clay fields of Coke County, about 250 miles west of Dallas. Around here they quote an old saying about football — "3 yards and a cloud of dust" — with the emphasis on dust. But it's not supposed to be this bad.

They have been watering twice a day. The record-breaking heat wave evaporated everything, even overnight. Nearby San Angelo recorded 97 days of triple-digit temperatures.

Please see FOOTBALL/2B

FOOTBALL

From 1B

"We seeded," Avants says, "but the seed never came out."

The storm has cooled the temperature into the mid-70s, but it will rise to 100 by day's end. The coach looks up again and scowls. "We're not going to have a miracle overnight," he says. "I'm sure the opposing team. ... I can't imagine what they'll think."

The opposing team is the Blackwell Hornets. The Steers once felt sorry for them because they trained on such a paltry little field. Last year, the Hornets got artificial turf, and with it, a sense of superiority.

But even schools with artificial turf, including Robert Lee's longtime rival, the Bronte Longhorns, have suffered. At Wylie High School near Dallas, where the temperatures on its field reached 185 degrees this summer — coaches snapped photos of thermometers to prove it — crews started watering the fake turf to cool it down, and practices were held on a grass field instead.

In Robert Lee, problems with water go back years before the current drought. The level of a nearby lake dropped during the last decade, and with it the town and school population, with 100 fewer students. Seven years ago, the school rolls fell to about 275 students, down from five to two busloads, and the Steers were forced to go from 11-man to six-man football.

Avants crosses the field to where Lupe Torres is kneeling in the balding grass. Torres, 46, runs school maintenance, but specializes in keeping up the field.

He has tried aeration, he's tried fertilizer. Today he was supposed to paint an intricate diamond or checkerboard pattern in the end zone, "pro-style," to surprise the Steers. But the paint won't stick to dirt.

He's not sure if there's enough grass to emblazon the image of the school mascot at center field, a homecoming tradition.

Torres is embarrassed, depressed even. He feels for the seniors. They were supposed to write their names in paint on the grass. Now that's canceled. Robert Lee runs grades K through 12, so he has known these kids most of their lives.

Hood, the former quarterback who returned to Robert Lee a decade after he graduated to succeed his father as superintendent and athletic director, joins Torres and the coach at center field. All three sport Steers shirts, their hair cropped short. They look like a team huddling up.

MCT

Julia Longoria rakes what is left of her yard near downtown Robert Lee. Longoria, 83, raised a family in town, including two sons who played football for Robert Lee, and has never seen things so dry.

Hood, 33, walks Torres over to a circle of green at midfield. On the edge of the sprinkler's range, the turf is starting to brown.

"We got to try to hit these stations again," he says, kicking the dirt. "Look at this — it's nothing but powder."

Hood has a school budget of $3.5 million. When the town, like many across Texas, came under watering restriction in April, he started paying about $200 three times a week to truck in water. Each 6,300-gallon load is piped in through the sprinklers.

In May, they started watering the field daily. Then nearby wildfires tied up the water haulers, so he turned to Jimmy Skinner, another Robert Lee graduate. Hood knew that Skinner, 45, a truck driver for the oil companies, had inherited a gift for dowsing, or "witching" water, from his father. Come help us, Hood said.

Torres knew Skinner, too. They had played football together in the '80s. Skinner's 16-year-old son, Zach, a junior, plays center for the Steers, a living image of his father's senior picture that still hangs on the high school wall — same dark eyes, shaggy hair, strong jaw and broad shoulders.

Dowsing rods in hand, Skinner crisscrossed the field in June. He settled on a spot, but was suddenly unsure of his own powers. West Texas is mean country, full of things that stick, stink or sting. Even if he found water, the well might be salty, or run dry.

Hood paid about $18 a foot to drill hundreds of feet and even bought a used 500-barrel water tank from Bronte for $1,000 to store whatever they found.

The school drilled three times near the field. The third time, 240 feet down, they struck water. And it was good water — not too salty, with a strong flow. Torres installed hundreds of feet of pipe to connect the new well to the field.

"Never hit a dry hole yet," Skinner says.

Skinner does not regret the taxpayer money spent to revive the field. To those who question it, he says, "Come live here."

Torres looks up from the field, encouraged. The troubled sky has begun to spit rain.

On homecoming morning, a block away at Cindy's Grocery, former Steers coach Kenneth Rasco — who taught both Skinner and Torres — is fetching his coffee. He unfolds the San Angelo Standard-Times and reads about all the other dying fields during the seemingly endless drought.

Coaches in nearby Llano and Junction were downplaying rumors that they might have to play their home games on the road because their bone-dry fields had become unplayable. Odessa High's coach complained that players were suffering additional injuries as their field became as hard and dry as concrete. From Lubbock to Dallas and San Antonio, coaches were debating whether to re-sod, truck in water or wait for rain.

The overnight drizzle was not nearly enough to save the Robert Lee field. But the consensus around town is that the field perked up. It finally holds the orange paint Torres sprays with an air gun. He traces the outline of a steer's head, pointing out patches of dirt on the cheeks that make him nervous.

That night the questioning from the sidelines commences soon after kickoff.

"You see that dust coming up?"

"Didn't y'all water it?"

Men in straw cowboy hats line the fence in front of the concession stand that's selling barbecue and Frito pies. Skinner stands near the back.

"We watered it all last night," Hood says, keeping his cool.

"Have you been hauling water?"

"Every day," Hood says.

"What about the well?"

"We can only do about 5 gallons a minute," Hood says, and the men all nod.

No one in the crowd or the packed stands or the line of pickups backed up to the field's cyclone fence asks how much all that water cost.

The Steers don't seem to mind the field. By halftime, they are up 46-8. They go on to win, 54-8.

In the press box, under the unforgiving glare, Torres critiques his work. As the crowd files out, he lingers. Below him in the stands, a voice drifts up.

"Have you been watering the field?"

He listens for Hood's reply.

"Yeah, we've been watering the heck out of it."

Torres does not allow himself time to grieve. He has to prepare for the next home game against the Santa Anna Mountaineers in two weeks.

Throughout town that night, behind dark windows, television screens glow with football highlights from across West Texas. Suddenly, someone shouts, "There's our boys!"

Sweet teas, leftover barbecue and worries about the thirsty field are set aside as people settle down to watch. And when the scroll at the bottom of the screen says Bronte lost, living rooms erupt in cheers.

Texas falling behind in the solar manufacturing industry

Houston Chronicle

As the founders of Austin-based AstroWatt prepared to launch their solar technology company in 2008, they tallied the competition.

Solar energy start-ups were emerging around the world, fueled by global discussions about climate change and new government funding for renewable energy industries. The AstroWatt team wasn't the only one with a technology idea and the capital to invest in the booming industry of polysilicon solar energy.

"From day one, we knew this was going to be a bloodbath," said co-founder Dharmesh Jawarani. "We counted 60 new entrants for polysilicon manufacturing in China alone."

At least three U.S. solar manufacturers have collapsed under the weight of that competition in recent weeks, including California-based solar-panel maker Solyndra.

Its bankruptcy is a hot political issue because the Obama administration touted the company's potential to create clean-energy jobs after it got $535 million in federal stimulus loans.

Those failures have led some industry watchers to conclude that China's low-cost panels have won the solar battle. But others still see hope for the U.S. solar industry and say the flooded market is just shaking out the weakest companies.

Key, some say, is investing less in building panels and more on engineering them.

"It has become very hard to compete with Chinese manufacturers. Their labor costs are so low and they've been receiving giant subsidies from the Chinese government," said Keily Miller, a research associate for the Energy Forum at the James A. Baker III Institute for Public Policy at Rice University. "If the U.S. government is going to promote this form of energy, they should be promoting research and development."

Such a focus could be a boon for Texas, where high-tech research facilities and a skilled workforce have been attracting solar startups, like AstroWatt.

While Texas has been a leader in wind energy, it has fallen behind other states in solar. Proponents blame a lack of tax benefits and financial incentives for consumers and companies involved in solar energy development.

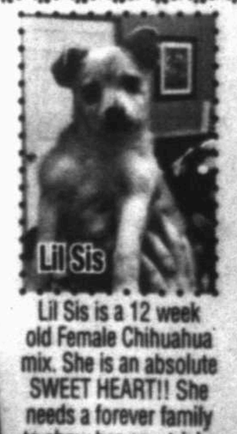

A 2010 report by the Solar Foundation estimated that Texas has about 170 solar-related companies employing about 6,400 workers. The vast majority of them are solar installers, as opposed to manufacturers, according to the report.

Texas exempts companies that manufacture, sell or install solar panels from the state franchise tax. But it doesn't offer additional benefits like equipment and utility rebates on a statewide level, said Natalie Marquis, executive director of Texas Solar Energy Society, an advocacy group.

"Our state government is not pushing for solar manufacturing and solar companies," Marquis said.

"There are so many other states that want to have that industry and the jobs, so they are offering great incentives," she said. "Texas is not doing that."

Where did the new Bush library get its funding?

■ Don Evans said foreign money accounts for less than 2 percent of money raised to date.

We now know that the George W. Bush Foundation has topped its $300 million fundraising goal for the Bush library and institute under construction at Southern Methodist University. We don't know where the money came from. But I now can tell you where almost all of it didn't come from: foreigners, and that's good.

Americans ought to pay for libraries for American presidents, especially when those presidents are still in office.

In February 2008, I asked Bush at the White House whether his foundation would disclose where the library/institute money came from, whether he'd accept money from foreigners, whether he'd place a limit on generosity and some other things about the project.

"No, yes, no, yes," Bush joked. "Next question." But then he responded to my queries.

"You know, there's a lot of people, or some people — I shouldn't say a lot — some people who like to give and don't particularly want their names disclosed, whether it be for this foundation or any other foundation," he said. "And so we'll take that into consideration."

I pressed about foreign money.

"Yes," he replied. "I'll probably take some foreign money but don't know yet."

My point in asking the questions was, back then, that we had a president — or at least his friends — seeking money for that president's library, lots of money. Seems to me we the people ought to know when and if that sitting president was taking money from foreign interests. In fact, we ought to know where all the money was coming from.

"We're weighing, taking a look, taking consideration, giving it serious consideration," Bush told me. "Nice try, though."

I had that in mind Monday at the topping-out ceremony at the George W. Bush Presidential Center. I still think we should know who gave money for the project. Former Commerce Secretary and longtime Bush buddy Donald Evans, chairman of the library foundation, told me Monday, "The generosity of supporters of the president and the first lady has been amazing."

I asked who gave the money.

"We don't have a plan when we will release the full list of donors. There will be names on the building, certainly, in the spring of 2013" when the center opens, Evans said, "Many of the donors will be known, if they're not known now."

Foreign money, he said, accounts for less than 2 percent of the money raised to date. The Washington Post reported in 2007 that just over 10 percent of the $165 million cost of Bill Clinton's presidential library came from foreign sources, including $10 million from Saudi Arabia's royal family, which gave a similar amount to George H.W. Bush's presidential library in College Station.

The George W. Bush Presidential Center will include a library and a policy institute in 227,000 square feet being built on a 25-acre site just west of North Central Expressway (making it a new landmark to ponder while enjoying that highway's legendary jams).

Project architect Robert A.M. Stern, dean of Yale University's architecture school, led Monday's tour of the construction site and told us the museum "will explain the president's ideas and involve how he got to his ideas."

Stern kind of dissed Austin when he called the Bush project "the most urban presidential library to date." The John F. Kennedy Presidential Library and Museum is in Boston, but "a very remote location" there, he noted. He made no mention of the LBJ Library, located in the remote outpost of Austin.

Stern showed us where the Bush museum will have a full-size Oval Office replica in which visitors can "stand behind the desk and understand what it's like to be the president of the United States." Let me know when you plan to visit because, for a fee, I will further help you understand what it's like to be POTUS by tagging along and badgering you with obnoxious, multipart questions.

The Bush archives will include more than 70 million pages of paper, 43,000 artifacts and 80 terabytes of electronic information, including 200 million emails — none from Bush, who, aware they'd eventually be released, never emailed while in office.

Stern showed us a mass of dented steel from the World Trade Center that will be in a 9/11 display. Another highlight will be the White House Situation Room — not a re-creation, but the actual setup taken from the White House during a remodeling. Should be interesting.

At the ceremony, Bush talked about the project's "symbiotic relationship" with SMU. "Big word," he joked in a self-deprecating way. And he said the institute will publish a book next year by four Nobel Prize economists on "how to grow the economy at 4 percent" per year. Any way we can get that information a bit sooner?

All in all, it was an upbeat event. SMU President Gerald Turner noted that it was part of "a great weekend in Mustangland," a reference to Saturday's football victory over TCU, a win that can mean only one thing: SMU is cheating again.

OK, and only because you asked nicely, one cheap joke about the museum: It seems to have a grand entryway, but less thought seems to have gone into an exit strategy.

Ken Starr, an improbable unifier presides over Baylor

By Reeve Hamilton
Texas Tribune

WACO — Based solely on his brief tenure, Ken Starr might reasonably conclude that one of the annual summer duties of a Baylor University president is scrambling to preserve the Big 12 Conference.

On May 31, 2010, Starr, the former federal judge and Clinton antagonist, pulled into the driveway of the Allbritton House, the official president's residence of the roughly 15,000-student, private Baptist-affiliated institution here. He took office on June 1. The next day, he found himself in Kansas City, Mo., negotiating the preservation of the conference as two universities, Nebraska and Colorado, broke away.

If that was a 400-meter dash, Starr said, this summer had been a marathon. Texas A&M University's effort to leave the Big 12 for the Southeastern Conference threw the future of the region's major athletic conference — which also includes the University of Texas and the University of Oklahoma and Texas Tech University — in turmoil, and century-old rivalries in doubt.

While the larger universities would be picked up quickly by other major conferences if it came to that, Baylor would risk getting left behind — a potentially devastating blow to its prominence and prestige. In the last major conference shake-up, in the mid-1990s, Baylor's interests were protected by powerful alumni: Gov. Ann Richards and Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock. That luxury no longer exists.

"I don't think it's an exaggeration to say we've been in crisis mode for about six weeks," Starr said.

Athletic conference instability has easily been the most significant struggle of his first year, Starr said. Otherwise, the unlikely Baylor president has thrived beyond expectations — something that even those who opposed his appointment happily concede.

To put it mildly, Starr's reputation preceded him. Most famous for the Whitewater investigation and his lead role in the Monica Lewinsky melodrama that led to President Bill Clinton's impeachment, Starr remains a divisive figure in national politics.

"I had some very serious misgivings when the announcement was made that he was going to be the president," said former Gov. Mark White, a Baylor alumnus and a Democrat. "How happy to know that I was totally wrong."

Another alumnus, state Sen. Kirk Watson, D-Austin, said he worked hard to keep an open mind, and he has reached a similar conclusion. "It is a universal assessment that his first year has been a success," Watson said.

Starr does not care much for talking about himself. When it comes to his current day-to-day duties, he said the notable trials of his past were "an irrelevancy."

"I tend to look forward and not in the rearview mirror," he said. "That was a specific set of duties that came my way."

For those involved in Baylor's presidential search, concerns about Starr's political baggage arose "right off the bat," said Buddy Jones, an Austin lobbyist and chairman of the Baylor Board of Regents. But they quickly evaporated.

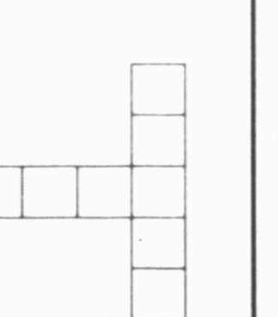

"After we said, 'No way, but we'll give him an interview,' we literally fell in love with him," Jones said.

allowance that allows for a lot more rent than people are used to paying in Cotulla," he added.

Repeated attempts to contact Nora Rodriguez, director of the local housing authority were unsuccessful.

In neighboring Dimmit County, also smack in the middle of the Eagle Ford boom, low-income housing is already in a crisis, according to Alfredo Castaneda, director of the Carrizo Springs Housing Authority.

"Between 15 and 25 families are out there looking, and two years ago we didn't have a problem. There was plenty of housing we could lease through the landlords. Right now our waiting list is about a year and a half," he said.

Castaneda said that subsidized Section 8 housing rapidly is vanishing in Carrizo Springs as landlords turn to the more lucrative private market.

"We give out Section 8 vouchers, but families can't find housing. A lot of people who used to rent their mobile home or house with us are leasing to the oilfield, which is understandable because they get more pay," he said.

With no relief in sight, Castaneda is exploring construction of a low-income housing project. Otherwise, he said, his clients will be completely shut out of the housing market.

"There are a lot of developments coming to Carrizo Springs, including one 288-unit apartment complex. That's fine, but it will be at market rates, not for vouchers. I imagine they'll be renting for $1,300 to $1,500 a month," he said.

Nearby Dilley also has a shortage of affordable housing.

"The housing authority is going to demolish the low-income housing project and build another one, but in the meantime, the people won't have a place to live," said City Manager Melissa Gonzalez.

"We didn't anticipate the oil boom when this project came into play," she added.

Robert Diaz, director of the elderly nutrition program in Dimmit County, said some of his 200 clients also have been affected adversely, principally by the higher retail prices that have followed the oil boom.

"All the commodities have gone up in the local stores. Gasoline has also gone up, and the traffic is very congested, so some of the elderly cannot drive to get their weekly or monthly food items at the local stores," he said.

Yes! There is help for Medicare supplement questions

"Medicare decisions do not have to be so complicated," says Rosa Lindsey, CSA, owner of Rosa Lindsey Insurance. "I can help narrow things down to your two or three best options."

Rosa has been advising seniors about their Medicare alternatives for eight of her 11 years as an insurance agent. She can help you or your loved one make an informed choice. There is never a charge for her services.

She will start by assessing your medications and health conditions. As an independent agent, she can search a variety of companies to find the two or three best coverage options. Then you and your family can make an informed decision. "Almost every time I can get your medications covered (minus copays) on a plan," she says.

Many clients bring adult children or other family members to meet with Rosa in order to better understand the options.

The Medicare Annual Enrollment Period (AEP) begins later this week. Call Rosa Lindsey, Certified Senior Advisor, at 685-9244 to clear up the confusion.

The Annual Enrollment Period (AEP) is different this year than before: It starts October 15 and ends December 7—a sort of "D-Day" for insurance decisions. Most enrollments need to be done during this period.

Rosa Lindsey Insurance is "Bringing Light to Insurance Needs." Call today for an appointment.

The phone number for Rosa Lindsey Insurance is 685-9244.

Lee, MHS may need tougher non-district tests, but season not over yet

JORDAN MASON
Sports Writer

How long ago does Odessa Permian falling 65-26 to Broken Arrow (Okla.) on its home field seem?

Anybody remember Abilene Cooper starting 0-2 and needing a 88-yard touchdown pass to get its first win of the season?

After Friday, I doubt it.

All Lee and Midland High did in non-district play was go a combined 10-0 while outscoring opponents by an average of 26.5 points per game.

Friday, Lee entered the half down 17 and Midland High entered halftime down 15 as both fell for the first time this season against teams that started the season a combined 2-4.

Whoever predicted that needs to use that power for good and help my fantasy team.

But maybe that person isn't as big of a visionary as he or she seems.

One difference between Lee and Midland High and the rest of 3-5A in non-district — you know, besides the losses — was their schedule.

The Rebels and Bulldogs, for the most part, seemed to be missing that big-name opponent that tests a team early in the season.

Permian played Broken Arrow. Cooper played Austin Westlake.

Odessa High played Arlington Bowie.

Abilene High played Longview (and Harlingen and Euless Trinity, but who's counting).

Amarillo High seemed to be that team for Lee and Midland High, especially after it was one stop on 3rd and 30 from beating the Bulldogs in the season opener.

So, we praised Midland High for finding a way to gut out a 24-17 overtime win against the Sandies and lauded Lee for holding the Sandies to 93 first-half yards in a dominant 26-10 win.

Yet we turned our heads when Odessa High, who entered district play with a 3-5A-worst 1-4 record, went into Amarillo and competed with the same Sandies for an entire half, even taking a 10-7 lead into the second quarter.

Meanwhile, teams like Cooper and Permian endured slow starts against difficult early schedules.

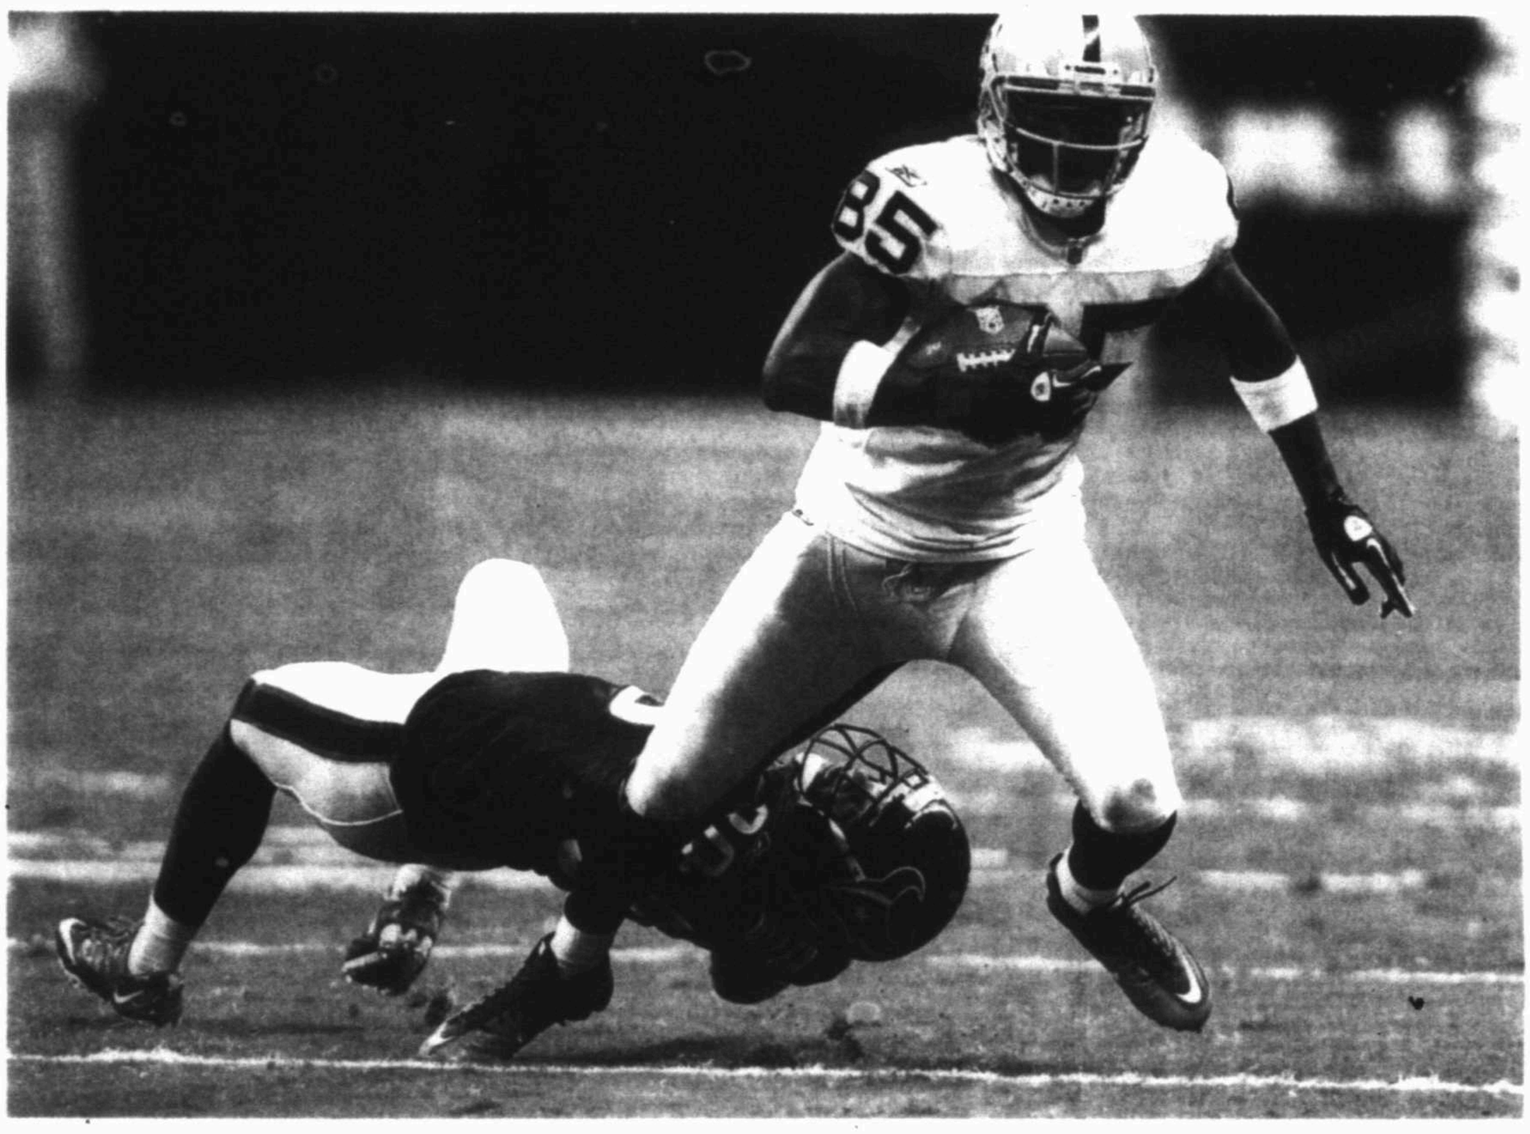

Now, it seems what a team like Permian gave up in difficult early-season losses — and it was difficult as Permian allowed a school-record 65 points and 720 yards to Broken Arrow — the Panthers gained in experience and confidence by going toe-to-toe with elite teams.

The same defense that faltered against Broken Arrow held the potent Midland High offense to six first-half points and came up with big stops in the second-half to secure a district win.

The same Cooper defense that gave up 41.5 points in two losses to start the season swarmed to the ball and stifled the Rebels long enough for Cooper to build

Raiders rise

Oakland Raiders wide receiver Darrius Heyward-Bey (85) races away from Texans cornerback Jason Allen (30) on his way to score a touchdown Sunday in the second quarter in Houston. The Raiders won, 25-20.

Oakland beats Houston a day after Davis' death

By Chris Duncan
Associated Press

HOUSTON — Coach Hue Jackson sank to his knees, buried his face in his hands and finally released the emotions he'd been holding back. Up in the visitor's suite at Reliant Stadium, Mark Davis wiped away tears with a paper towel and glanced to the sky.

The Oakland Raiders won the day after their maverick owner Al Davis died, beating the Houston Texans 25-20 on Sunday behind Jason Campbell's two touchdown passes.

Michael Huff intercepted Matt Schaub's pass in the end zone on the final play, and the Raiders ran to celebrate a bittersweet victory unlike any other in the storied history of the franchise.

Al, this one's for you.

"One thing coach (Davis) always taught me was he said: 'Hue don't believe in plays, believe in players and eventually the players will make plays for you,'" Jackson said. "And that's what I did. I could just hear him saying that to me the whole time. Believe in your players and not the plays."

Stadiums around the league observed a moment of silence before the early games to honor Davis, who died at his Oakland home at age 82. His son, Mark, took his place in the owner's box, and the Raiders wore black decals on the backs of their helmets with "AL" written in silver letters.

They were statistically dominated by Houston, outgained 473-278 and held to 11 first downs and 94 yards rushing. They still managed to do the only thing that ever mattered to Davis.

They just won, baby.

"We know he's looking down on us right now," Huff said. "This win is for him. I appreciate everything he's done for this organization. He's never gone in our eyes. We'll never let him go. He's with us."

Sebastian Janikowski kicked four field goals, and Oakland hung on to improve to 3-2. The Raiders drafted Janikowski in 2000, only the third time a kicker had been taken in the first round.

"He was looking over us," Janikowski said. "I was feeling good and hitting everything in warmups."

Schaub threw for 416 yards and two touchdowns but missed star receiver Andre Johnson, who sat out with a right hamstring injury. The Texans (3-2) still had a chance to win with under a minute

Johnson dominates from start to finish at Kansas

By Dave Skretta
Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Kan. — That'll teach everyone to count out Jimmie Johnson.

The five-time defending Cup champion dominated Sunday at Kansas Speedway, weathering a series of late cautions and holding off Kasey Kahne to win for the first time since April.

Johnson stumbled through the first two races in NASCAR's version of a postseason, and was 10th in the standings heading to Dover. A second-place finish last weekend gave Johnson confidence, and his first win since Talladega moved him into third in the Chase behind Carl Edwards and Kevin Harvick.

Johnson

"Jimmie was the car to beat all day," said Brad Keselowski, who finished third.

Jeff Gordon made things interesting when his care blew up with three laps remaining.

Johnson chose not to pit before the green-white-checkered finish, but still managed to drive away from Kahne and Keselowski on worn out tires. Keselowski, who won the Nationwide race Saturday, still moved up to fourth in the Chase with six races left.

"It all comes back to having a good team," Keselowski said. "Good teams have good cars, they're the best at the end, the fastest at the end, they have good pit strategy and they're strong through adversity, and I just have a really good team."

Tony Stewart spent most of the afternoon trying to chase down Johnson, and at times appeared to have the car to do it. Stewart climbed 17 spots to sixth after about 50 laps, and at one point brashly told his team over the radio, "I'm in a hurry. ... I've got things to do."

A series of mistakes near the end cost him, though.

Stewart chose to pit when Gordon brought out the final caution, but carried too much speed down pit road and slid through his stall. By the time his team backed him up and changed tires, Stewart had shuffled back to 17th and he crossed the finish line in 15th.

Stewart won the first two races of the Chase to vault into the points lead, but he struggled all weekend at Dover and finished 25th. He'll now head to Charlotte eighth in the standings.

Edwards and Harvick came in tied for lead in the Chase, with the top nine drivers separated by a mere 19 points. Things shook out a bit Sunday, but Edwards and Harvick are still on top.

Edwards struggled with a tight car all afternoon, and his crew did everything from put round after round of wedge into the right rear to putting a shim in the left front. He dropped a lap down at one point, but got back on the lead lap after a caution and stormed to a fifth-place finish.

Game 2 of ALCS postponed due to rain

By Jeff Wilson
McClatchy Newspapers

ARLINGTON — The threat of rain Sunday night and the potential for multiple game stoppages forced the postponement of Game 2 of the American League Championship Series.

The game between the Texas Rangers and Detroit Tigers is scheduled to be played at 3:19 today at Rangers Ballpark on the first of two scheduled off days in the best-of-seven series.

Major League Baseball decided to postpone the game around 3 p.m. EDT Sunday, more than four hours before the scheduled first pitch and just as a steady rain that started falling overnight had stopped.

But the forecast for the rest of the day called for conditions similar to the ones that plagued Game 1, and the No. 1 interest became preserving the integrity of the game.

"We didn't want to experience what we did last night," Rangers president Nolan Ryan said. "With the forecast for this evening, it appears that it's going to be a duplication of what we saw last night.

"The one thing we're concerned about is the integrity of the game and not putting either team in a situation where possibly the elements could affect the outcome of the game."

The Rangers took the opener Saturday night in a game that was stopped twice in the top of the fifth inning for a total of 1 hour, 50 minutes. Rangers starter C.J. Wilson returned after the first delay, which spanned 42 minutes, but Tigers ace Justin Verlander didn't throw another pitch.

Managers Ron Washington and Jim Leyland were forced to tax their pitching staffs. Eight relievers finished the game, including the Tigers' scheduled Game 4 starter, Rick Porcello.

"It is tough," Washington said. "But it becomes how mentally tough are you.

I don't think any of us can do anything about Mother Nature when she

SUNDAY'S NFL ROUNDUP

FROM WIRE REPORTS

CHIEFS 28, COLTS 24

INDIANAPOLIS — Matt Cassel threw for 257 yards and four touchdowns, and Kansas City scored the final 21 points against winless Indianapolis.

Dwayne Bowe and Steve Breaston each caught two TD passes to give the Chiefs (2-3) their first win at Indianapolis. The 17-point comeback matched the biggest in team history.

With the injured Peyton Manning watching from the sideline, Curtis Painter had a brilliant first half. He was 12 of 17 for 237 yards with two TDs and a quarterback rating of 152.2 as the Colts (0-5) built a 24-7 lead.

But Cassel found Breaston for a 16-yard TD pass just before halftime and Bowe on a 5-yard score with 40 seconds left in the third quarter to get the Chiefs within 24-21. Then, with 5:15 left in the game, Breaston caught the 11-yard go-ahead score.

PATRIOTS 30, JETS 21

FOXBOROUGH, Mass. — BenJarvus Green-Ellis ran for a career-high 136 yards and two touchdowns.

Tom Brady had another strong game, completing 24 of 33 passes for 321 yards and one touchdown as the Patriots scored at least 30 points for the 13th straight regular-season game.

Meanwhile, New York's Mark Sanchez had another tough one, passing for just 166 yards against the team that entered with the NFL's lowest-ranked defense. One week earlier, he threw for 119 yards in a 34-17 loss at Baltimore.

In the last meeting between the Jets and Patriots, Sanchez outplayed Brady in New York's 28-21 playoff win on Jan. 16, adding to the fierce rivalry between the AFC East teams.

BILLS 31, EAGLES 24

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. — Fred Jackson had 196 yards from scrimmage and linebacker Nick Barnett had two of Buffalo's four interceptions.

After scoring on a 31-yard interception return in the second quarter, Barnett sealed the victory by grabbing Michael Vick's tipped pass intended for Jason Avant with 1:49 remaining at the Bills 26.

Jackson scored on a 5-yard run and finished with 111 yards rushing in helping the Bills (4-1) match their best start since 2008.

The Eagles (1-4) have lost four straight and are off to their worst start since 1999, coach Andy Reid's first season.

Vick went 26 of 40 for 315 yards and two touchdowns, but was undone by a career-worst four interceptions. He added 90 yards rushing to pass Randall Cunningham for most career yards by an NFL quarterback.

Saints 30, Panthers 27

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Drew Brees found Pierre Thomas wide open on the right side for a 6-yard touchdown with 50 seconds left to lift New Orleans (4-1).

Brees threw for 359 yards and two touchdowns, including a nearly flawless final drive in which he completed 8 of 9 passes for 80 yards to take back momentum after Cam Newton and the Panthers (1-4) had taken their first lead early in the fourth quarter.

The Saints' defense finally sealed the win, letting the Panthers reach only midfield before Newton's desperation heave downfield fell incomplete for the game's the final play.

Newton threw for 224 yards and two touchdowns, including the go-ahead 5-yard scoring pass to Greg Olsen for a 27-23 lead with 12:32 to play. He also scored on a sneak late in the third quarter.

CHARGERS 29, BRONCOS 24

DENVER — Philip Rivers overcame an interception and a fourth-quarter fumble to lead San Diego despite Tim Tebow's best efforts to rally Denver from a 16-point deficit.

Tebow threw for one touchdown and ran for another after replacing Kyle Orton to start the third quarter, and had one final shot for the win before his pass fell incomplete in the end zone on the final play.

Nick Novak kicked five field goals and Ryan Mathews ran for a career-best 125 yards for San Diego, which takes a 4-1 record into its bye week.

Denver (1-4) is full of questions heading into its break, chief among them if Tebow's team or was this just a temporary fix?

Orton was 6 of 13 passes for 34 yards with no touchdowns and an interception.

49ERS 48, BUCCANEERS 3

SAN FRANCISCO — Alex Smith threw two of his three touchdown passes to Vernon Davis. Frank Gore ran for a score on his second straight 100-yard rushing game for San Francisco.

Carlos Rogers returned an interception 31 yards for a touchdown and tight ends Davis and Delanie Walker each caught TD passes of 20-plus yards in San Francisco's third straight win since blowing a late lead in a Sept. 18 overtime loss to the Cowboys.

The 49ers are 4-1.

Josh Freeman never found the flow that made him so effective in the rout here last November and the Bucs (3-2) were a step behind in a short week after beating the Colts on Monday night.

SEAHAWKS 36, GIANTS 25

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Backup quarterback Charlie Whitehurst threw a go-ahead 27-yard touchdown pass to Doug Baldwin, and Brandon Browner returned an interception 94 yards to clinch Seattle's win.

Whitehurst, who replaced the injured Tarvaris Jackson in the third quarter, led the Seahawks (2-3) on an 80-yard TD drive, which he capped with his pass to a wide-open Baldwin with 2:37 left on a play that the Giants (3-2) seemed to stop after defensive end Osi Umenyiora jumped offside.

The Giants, who had staged fourth-quarter rallies to win their last two games, mounted another late drive and had first-and-goal at the Seahawks 5 after consecutive completions of 41 and 19 yards to Victor Cruz.

A procedure penalty on first down pushed the ball back to the 10, then Eli Manning's pass tipped off Cruz's hands, bounced off Kam Chancelor and was picked off at the 6 by Browner.

STEELERS 38, TITANS 17

PITTSBURGH — Ben Roethlisberger tied a team record with five touchdown passes — including two to Hines Ward.

Other than a slight limp when he ran, Roethlisberger appeared to have no issues with his sprained left foot, also hitting Mike Wallace, Heath Miller and David Johnson for scores as the Steelers (3-2) ended Tennessee's three-game winning streak.

The five TD passes tied a single-game team record Roethlisberger already shares with Mark Malone and Terry Bradshaw.

Tennessee's Chris Johnson ran for a score but finished with 51 rushing yards on 14 carries. The Titans are 3-2.

VIKINGS 34, CARDINALS 10

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Adrian Peterson powered in for three first-quarter TDs to build a lead large enough even Minnesota (1-4) couldn't lose it.

Peterson rushed 29 times for 122 yards and Donovan McNabb jogged in for a score, too, as the Vikings (1-4) made it 28-0 less than 12½ minutes into the game. Kevin Kolb had three turnovers for the Cardinals (1-4) and finished 21 for 42 for 232 yards and one touchdown pass, a performance so shaky the Vikings were able to confidently run down the clock after stumbling through the second and third quarters.

This wasn't a productive afternoon for either former Philadelphia quarterback, from McNabb's bounced passes to Kolb's errant throws.

BENGALS 30, JAGUARS 20

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. — Andy Dalton threw two touchdown passes, Bernard Scott scored with 1:56 remaining for Cincinnati (3-2).

The Bengals took advantage of Matt Turk's 22-yard punt into the wind to set up the winning score, a touchdown needed because Mike Nugent missed an extra point in the first half.

Dalton hooked up with Jermaine Gresham on a fourth-and-6 play to keep the short drive alive, then found Andre Caldwell for an 8-yard gain.

With the Jaguars (1-4) expecting a pass on third down, Dalton handed to Scott, who weaved his way into the end zone to make it 23-20.

Jacksonville had a chance to tie, but Blaine Gabbert fumbled a bad snap and the Bengals ended up with the ball. Cincinnati also scored on a fumble return on the final play.

PACKERS 25, FALCONS 14

ATLANTA — After a sluggish start for Aaron Rodgers and the Super Bowl champs, the result was the same.

Another win in Atlanta for the Green Bay Packers.

Following up on a blowout of the Falcons in last year's playoffs, Rodgers threw for 396 yards and a pair of touchdowns to rally the Packers from an early 14-point hole, keeping Green Bay unbeaten with a 25-14 victory Sunday night.

The high-scoring Packers (5-0) were held without a touchdown in the first half by Atlanta (2-3), which was trying to make up for an embarrassing 48-21 loss to Green Bay last January.

The Falcons had the Georgia Dome rocking when they raced to a 14-0 lead early in the second quarter, scoring on their first two possessions. After that, the home fans had little to cheer about.

FROM STAFF REPORTS

Benson

CEDRIC BENSON
RB, CINCINNATI BENGALS
(LEE HIGH SCHOOL)

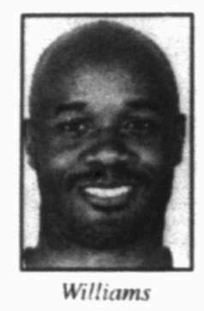

Benson was ineffective, but the Bengals improved to a winning record by scoring 14 points in the final two minutes of a 30-20 come-from-behind win against the Jacksonville Jaguars. The former Lee Rebel had just 54 yards on 24 carries with his busiest carry of the day coming on an eight-yarder.

Winston

ERIC WINSTON
OT, HOUSTON TEXANS
(LEE HIGH SCHOOL)

Winston and the Texans' offensive line had their worst game of the season as the Oakland Raiders erased a two-point halftime deficit in a 25-20 road win Sunday. Houston rushed for 70 yards on 25 carries as the Texans only mustered six second-half points. Winston did record his first tackle of the season when Texas product Lamarr Houston intercepted a Matt Schaub pass in the first quarter.

Williams

ROY WILLIAMS
WR, CHICAGO BEARS

left, facing a third-and-23 from the Oakland 39.

Schaub scrambled and found tight end Joel Dreessen open at the 5, and Schaub spiked the ball with seven seconds left. Instead of trying to run for the winning score, Schaub lobbed a pass to Jacoby Jones, and Huff stepped in to pick it off.

Jacks win third straight game

Staff Reports

FAIRBANKS, Alaska —The Odessa Jackalopes saw a two-goal lead evaporate in the final 1:32 of regulation, but endured a scoreless overtime period to win it in a six-round shootout, 5-4, against the Fairbanks Ice Dogs Saturday.

The win against the defending Robertson Cup Champions was the Jackalopes third straight and improved them to 3-3-2 on the season.

Jalen Krogman scored his first goal of the season at 8:49 in the first period to give the Jackalopes an early 1-0 lead.

Odessa entered the final period up 3-2 and appeared to have the game wrapped up when forward TJ Sennott scored at 18:28 to put them up 4-2.

But the Ice Dogs scored two goals in less than two minutes to send the game to overtime.

After the scoreless overtime, Odessa goalie Connor Hellbuyck notched four saves and Alex Ostrowski scored the decisive goal to seal the win.

The Jackalopes now have sole possession of fourth in the NAHL South standings.

a 17-0 halftime lead that proved too deep a hole for Lee to dig out of.

Now, Lee and Midland High find themselves in 0-1 holes to start the district season after beginning the year 5-0.

Yet it's hard for me to see either team in a bind right now, even with Lee heading back to Abilene to face district favorite Abilene High in its next game.

With four of six teams eligible for the postseason, Lee and Midland High can conceivably make the playoffs with just two district wins — just like Odessa High did last year.

Midland High may be halfway there after Friday when it takes on a team it will be highly favored to beat in Odessa High. And Lee, even if it loses to the Eagles Friday, will have a favorable schedule to do it with home games against the Odessa schools sandwiched around a showdown with Midland High.

But, most importantly, Lee and Midland High both had bright spots in their district-opening losses Friday.

Lee held the top offense in the district to 17 points (Cooper scored its final touchdown on an interception return) and 244 total yards — well below the Cougars' season averages of 39.4 points and 415 total yards entering Friday.

If the Rebels' offense, described as "sluggish" by coach James Morton, can find a way to move the ball consistently — which it did late Friday when it forced Cooper to respect the passing game — they should be fine with that defense.

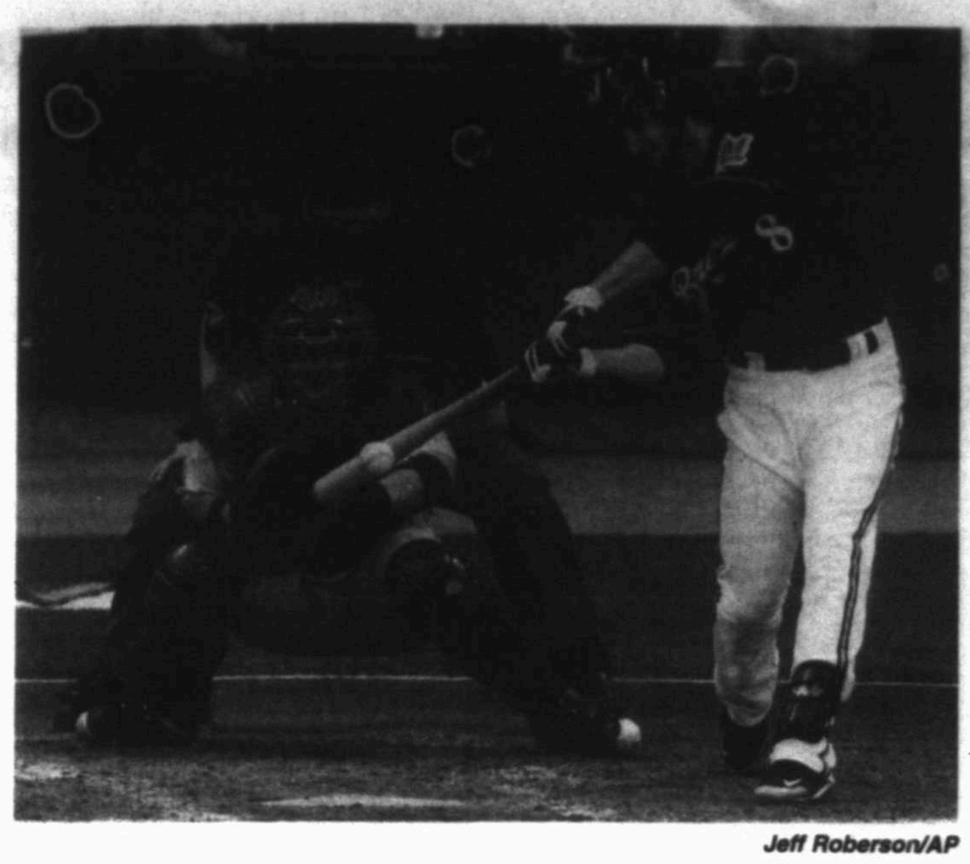

And Midland High, as it's become known to do, mounted a furious rally in the second half against Permian, outscoring the Panthers 20-7 in the second half and coming a missed two-point conversion away from forcing overtime.

If the Bulldogs find a way to stop getting into early holes, like they did against Amarillo High and San Angelo Central as well, they'll have as good a chance as any to challenge for a district crown.

These aren't big adjustments for either team, and I suspect Lee and Midland High will both have a say in the outcome of the district race this season.

And if that happens, Friday's district opening losses will become as distant a memory as Cooper and Permian's early-season struggles.

Milwaukee's Ryan Braun hits a two-RBI double Sunday during the fifth inning of Game 1 of the National League Championship Series against the St. Louis Cardinals in Milwaukee.

Pujols' double play kills Cards rally

Colin Fly
Associated Press

Brewers	9
Cardinals	6

MILWAUKEE — Albert Pujols had the pitch he wanted, ready to give the St. Louis Cardinals the big hit they always expect. Instead, he failed to deliver in a result that's become far-too-familar this year.

With St. Louis trailing by three runs in the seventh inning, Pujols grounded into a double play with runners at the corners and no outs, thwarting a rally attempt in a 9-6 loss to the Milwaukee Brewers in Sunday's NL championship series opener.

"I had a good pitch to hit, man. I just missed it," Pujols said. "You throw me that pitch, I bet you seven out of 10 times you throw that, I put it in the seats. It is what it is. It's baseball. You're going to get opportunities and, hopefully, I come through."

The three-time NL MVP has just one RBI in six playoff games after grounding into a major league-leading 29 double plays during the regular season.

St. Louis wasted a 5-2, fifth-inning lead and was trailing 8-5 when Rafael Furcal chased Zack Greinke with a leadoff single in the seventh. Jon Jay's hit-and-run single off Takashi Saito advanced Furcal to third.

Ahead 2-0 in the count, Pujols fouled off a pitch and checked his swing on the next as umpire Gary Darling called a low strike. Pujols appeared rankled, looking upward, muttering and stepping out of the batter's box.

Pujols pulled Saito's next pitch down the third-base line, breaking his bat and sending shards flying nearly as far as the ball. Jerry Hairston Jr. scooped up the ball, starting a 5-4-3 double play as Furcal came home.

"It was not a good game for him today, but you can't say anything," Furcal said. "He's going to produce. Everybody knows in the world he's a pretty good hitter and what he can do."

Lance Berkman followed with a popup, and the Cardinals didn't advance another runner past first.

Game 2 is Monday night, when Edwin Jackson faces Milwaukee's Shaun Marcum.

Given the three-run lead, Cardinals starter Jaime Garcia allowed a two-run double to Ryan Braun and a two-run homer to Prince Fielder on consecutive pitches in the fifth. Braun also hit a 463-foot, two-run homer in the first after Hairston walked.

Garcia insisted Saturday he would not be thinking about letting the Brewers' biggest stars beat him. A day later, Braun and Fielder drove in all six runs Garcia allowed.

"It was just bam, bam, bam," Cardinals manager Tony La Russa said. "It's unusual for a guy throwing the ball that well to miss. He's probably upset. Human nature."

Reliever Octavio Dotel made a throwing error that allowed Rickie Weeks to reach, and Yuniesky Betancourt's two-run homer made it 8-5.

After Braun's first-inning homer put Milwaukee ahead 2-1, the Cardinals went ahead on David Freese's three-run homer in the fourth. Berkman added an RBI single in the fifth.

"We've lost some tough games, and we bounced back," Pujols said. "We did it against Philly. We did it the last two weeks of the season when we needed a win. I mean, we're too good of a ballclub. This is a long series."

Milwaukee and St. Louis split 18 games during the regular season in one of baseball's most intense rivalries in recent years.

Nyjer Morgan took to his Twitter account and referred to Pujols as "Alberta." Greinke said Saturday that some of his teammates don't like Cardinals ace Chris Carpenter because of his demonstrative demeanor on the mound, saying he had a "phony attitude."

La Russa was booed heavily in pregame introductions, and responded by tipping his cap to the crowd.

"I'd be willing to challenge anybody here to show me one division that didn't have one or two sparks. We play each other 15, 16, 17, 18 times," La Russa said. "We just play each other, and everybody reads the situation their way."

After Braun's homer, Fielder was hit by Garcia's next pitch, though it didn't appear to be intentional as Garcia struggled with his command early. Darling warned both benches immediately, and there was no other trouble.

"I don't want our players and their players to be egged on, and I don't think they will," La Russa said. "We're going to play as hard and good against each other as we can."

NOTES: The Cardinals led the majors by grounding into 169 double plays during the regular season. They have four in the playoffs. ... Jackson allowed 10 runs — eight earned — in seven innings of his first start against Milwaukee this season with the Cardinals on Aug. 3 because La Russa needed to rest his bullpen. Jackson jokingly said, "What game?" when asked to recall it. ... The next two starts against the Brewers, he went 1-0 with a 2.08 ERA. ... Marcum is 0-3 with a 5.84 ERA in his last six home starts, including two against the Cardinals.

decides to open up. You just have to make adjustments.

"They are doing an excellent job today to keep the integrity intact.

Hopefully, Mother Nature will bless us where we can go out there and play a ballgame." The postponement would seem to have an immediate positive impact on the Rangers' bullpen, which would have been without right-hander Alexi Ogando on Sunday. He continued his terrific postseason with two scoreless innings in Game 1, but threw 32 pitches and wouldn't have been asked to pitch on back-to-back nights.

But the potential of playing four consecutive days, beginning today through an if-necessary Game 5 at Detroit, puts demands on both bullpens and also both catchers.

Relievers often throw on back-to-back days, occasionally going three in a row, but rarely four straight. The starting pitchers can provide the relievers with some relief by working deeper into games." "As a bullpen, it's going to make it a little more tough," right-hander Mike Adams said. "Four in row can get a little tricky sometimes. Hopefully, we can get a couple lengthy starts in there to save the bullpen a little bit."

Mike Napoli, who has been the Rangers' starting catcher in all five postseason games, said that he is prepared to catch the next four in a row if needed.

"I can do it," said Napoli, who caught four straight once in the regular season. "Both teams have got to deal with it, so there's not any advantage and there's not any disadvantage." The rain didn't alter either team's rotation plans. Left-hander Derek Holland will start for the Rangers today against Tigers right-hander Max Scherzer.

Holland, for one, was glad that he didn't have to deal with the possibility of rain delays Sunday night.

"If they all of a sudden say it's been pushed back from 6:45 p.m. to 7:45 p.m., now you've got to change everything again," he said. "And you've got to continue to do that every time you've got to wait. For me, that's the hardest thing about waiting everything out."

Faxon wins rain-shortened Insperity Championship

Associated Press

THE WOODLANDS — Brad Faxon won the Insperity Championship without hitting a shot on Sunday when heavy rain washed out the final round of the Champions Tour's event.

Faxon, an eight-time winner on the PGA Tour who turned 50 on Aug. 1, shot a 7-under 65 in windy conditions Saturday to take a one-stroke lead at 10-under at The Woodlands Country Club.

Tommy Armour III was second, and Eduardo Romero finished two strokes back. Jay Haas, Olin Browne and Schwab Cup points leader Tom Lehman (70) followed at 7 under, and winner Fred Couples was 4 under.

Faxon won his first title on the 50-and-over circuit in his sixth start.

"I had passed all my goals this week, was hitting my irons a lot better and made a 4-footer on 18 on Saturday, which turned out to be the winning stroke," he said about the victory that he learned about when he received a text message while standing in the clubhouse.

The round was washed out after two morning delays. Faxon was asked if had ever won a tournament as a pro or amateur, without hitting a shot because of weather on the final day.

"Nope, never. Not one, definitely never," Faxon said. "I can't say I was hoping for a rainout because of what a win means out here, but I wanted to play. I was playing really good."

Champions Tour official Brian Claar said tour regulations do not allow for a Monday finish.

"There was no place to push the water it was came down so fast and we had already had so much rain today," Claar said.

Armour remained winless on the tour, but did move into top 30 in the money standings to possible qualify for the season-ending Charles Schwab Cup.

"Sure I wanted to play, but there was nothing we could," Armour said. "It's just what we have here. I am ready to go, but there nothing you can do about this."

Lehman retained his large lead in the season-long Charles Schwab Cup points standing headed to the final two events of the season.

Hanna Bank Championship: At Incheon, South Korea, top-ranked Yani Tseng won the LPGA Hana Bank Championship on Sunday for her sixth LPGA Tour victory of the season and ninth overall title of the year, shooting a 5-under 67 to edge Na Yeon Choi by a stroke.

The 22-year-old Taiwanese star, the LPGA Championship and Women's British Open winner, finished at 14-under 202 on Sky 72 Golf Club's Ocean Course. Choi, the 2009 and 2010 winner, shot a 68.

Tseng earned $270,000 to push her tour-leading total to $2,396,838. She has 11 victories in four full seasons on the LPGA Tour.

Brittany Lincicome (66), Jamin Jang (68) and second-round leader Soo-Jin Yang (71) tied for third at 11 under. Michelle Wie had a 69 to tie for 35th at 1 under.

ONEASIA

Korea Open: AT Cheonan, South Korea, rickie Fowler won the OneAsia Tour's Korea Open for his first professional title, closing with a 3-under 68 for a six-stroke victory over U.S. Open champion Rory McIlroy.

The 22-year-old Fowler, the 2010 PGA Tour rookie of the year, finished at 16 under at Woo Jeong Hills and earned $249,864. He opened with rounds of 67 and 70 and shot a 63 on Saturday.

McIlroy finished with a 64. South Korea's Kim Meen-whee (71) was third at 10 under, and countryman Y.E. Yang (75) followed at 5 under.<

PGA European

Madrid Masters: At Madrid, England's Lee Slattery won the Madrid Masters for his first European Tour title, finishing with a 1-under 71 for a one-stroke victory over Italy's Lorenzo Gagli.

Slattery had a 15-under 273 total at El Encin Golf Hotel. Gigli closed with a 70. Top-ranked Luke Donald, the winner last year at Real Sociedad Hipica Espanola Club de Campo, had a 72 to tie for 11th at 8 under.

TCU trustees ready to take next step on B12 invite

Associated Press

FORT WORTH — TCU trustees are scheduled to meet today, when they will discuss the school's invitation to join the Big 12 Conference.

A person with knowledge of the plans told the Associated Press that the board's meeting is expected be followed by a "major announcement." The person spoke on condition of anonymity late Sunday night because the university was not prepared to publicly reveals its plans.

The Big 12 Conference publicly issued an invitation to TCU for membership in its league Thursday.

TCU, currently in the Mountain West Conference, was scheduled to join the Big East next year.

Today's session will be the first time trustees will gather as a group since the Big 12's invitation.

Dan Beebe says Big 12 now taking steps he touted

By Ralph D. Russo
Associated Press

Ousted Big 12 Commissioner Dan Beebe said he touted equal revenue sharing and members handing their television rights to the conference years ago, but the schools — and not just Texas — liked the idea of being able to start their own networks.

Beebe said in a phone interview with the Associated Press on Sunday that Oklahoma, Nebraska and even Texas A&M were interested in "developing their own distribution systems" for their sports programs.

The Big 12 recently agreed to switch to equal revenue sharing after years in which the schools that made the most television appearances received the most money.

The eight remaining schools — not including Missouri, which is considering a switch to the Southeastern Conference — also agreed to hand their most lucrative television rights over to the conference for six years, a move that makes it practically impossible for members to switch leagues.

Beebe said he first brought up equal revenue sharing in 2008 and the members never even voted on it. Nebraska, which left the Big 12 for the Big Ten last year, was among the schools against equal revenue sharing.

In 2009, ahead of negotiations on a new television contract, Beebe said he asked the members to grant the conference their top-tier TV rights, and the schools balked again without ever going to a vote.

"Had we been able to do that none of the schools probably would of had a chance to leave because a significant amount of their rights would have been with the conference," he said.

Now that the Big 12 has moved to implement the ideas Beebe had pushed for in the past, he said it's "bittersweet."

"It's sweet because hopefully it will be what binds this conference together and I have a great love for the conference," he said. "But it's bitter because had we taken these actions previously we may have been able to avoid the problems that have occurred."

Beebe also said he was disappointed to find out Texas A&M already had been working toward a move to the SEC before he was allowed to address the Aggies' concerns about Texas' Longhorn Network.

A&M officials were upset about plans for high school games to be aired on the Longhorn Network, a plan that ended up being scrapped.

"I found out later that there had been a meeting between Texas A&M officials and SEC officials prior to us having the ability to address (the Aggies') grievances," he said.

"I think the conference decisions that were made by the members as a whole ended up being a place that addressed many of their grievances. Maybe not perfectly, but more to their favor than not."

In the summer of 2010, the Big 12 was on the verge of collapse. Nebraska left for the Big Ten, and Colorado joined the Pac-12. Texas A&M was considering a move to the Southeastern Conference and Texas and Oklahoma, along with their sister schools Texas Tech and Oklahoma State, were looking at creating a Pac-16.

Ultimately, the 10 remaining members committed to stay together and Beebe negotiated a 13-year, $1 billion television deal with Fox Sports.

But when Texas struck a huge deal with ESPN to start to the Longhorn Network, a 20-year, $300 million venture between the university and network, it changed the dynamic in the league.

"The institutional networks were part of the design of what we were doing when we were negotiating our contract with Fox," Beebe said. "We were for the first time deliberately setting out to reserve the right for every school to do a football game and to do significant other content that wasn't able to be done previously.

"What wasn't counted on in allowing that was the degree of support and the amount of revenue that was able to be achieved by the Longhorn Network and even (Texas Athletic Director) DeLoss Dodds has said that isn't something he thought was going to happen either."

Beebe was pushed out of the job he had held for five years last month and replaced on an interim basis by Chuck Neinas, the former Big Eight commissioner.

NBA negotiators meeting ahead of today's deadline

Brian Mahoney
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Top negotiators for the NBA and players' association met Sunday night in perhaps the last chance to avoid canceled regular-season games.

Commissioner David Stern has set today as the deadline for a new labor deal to be reached before the first two weeks of the season will be canceled. No meetings had been planned since he set the deadline Tuesday, before the sides agreed to talk Sunday.

Stern, Deputy Commissioner Adam Silver, owners Peter Holt of San Antonio and Glen Taylor of Minnesota, and senior vice president and deputy general counsel Dan Rube met with union executive director Billy Hunter, president Derek Fisher of the Lakers and vice president Maurice Evans of the Wizards, and attorneys Jeffrey Kessler and Ron Klempner.

The meeting comes two days after the union said the league insisted it accept a 50-50 split of revenues as a condition to meet. Instead, the precondition was dropped, a person with knowledge of the situation told The Associated Press on condition of anonymity because the details were to remain private.

No talks had been expected after Friday's developments, when the league said it had been willing to meet on other issues but confirmed it wouldn't go beyond a 50-50 split. Union executive director Billy Hunter had planned to fly to Los Angeles on Monday for a regional meeting with members.

That meeting is still planned. Fisher sent a letter to players, obtained by The Associated Press and other outlets, urging as many as possible to attend.

"We find these meetings extremely productive and informative as we review the status and details of the CBA negotiations, answer questions and discuss next steps," Fisher wrote.

But travel plans could change if there is enough progress Sunday. Talks were still ongoing more than four hours after they began.

Owners brought the idea of the 50-50 split to players on Tuesday, which they rejected. They were guaranteed 57 percent of basketball revenues in the previous collective bargaining agreement and have said they wouldn't go below 53 percent in a new deal.

Even if they were able to agree on the revenue split Sunday, the structure of the salary cap system hasn't been worked out, and numerous other items haven't even been touched because the two main issues have been so contested.

The season is scheduled to open Nov. 1.

Despite crushing Texas, Sooners stay put in poll

By Jaime Aron
Associated Press

The new poll released Sunday offered mixed news for the Oklahoma Sooners.

Their 55-17 thrashing of then-No. 11 Texas wasn't enough to help start a climb back toward the top of the rankings.

But, hey, at least they didn't drop to fourth.

Having slid from first to second to third in successive weeks, the Sooners can take some solace for holding tight at No. 3.

It's a fine spot to be considering the teams ahead of them, LSU and Alabama, meet in a few weeks and the loser is bound to dip a few spots — and being in the top two at season's end is ultimately all that matters.

Maybe that's why Oklahoma coach Bob Stoops did such little lobbying after the big win over the rival Longhorns on Saturday.

He also insisted that his team only kept piling on points because they were playing well, not in an attempt to sway the voters who'd slowly but surely been downgrading the Sooners (5-0, 2-0 Big 12).

"I don't know if that's necessary," Stoops said. "It is certainly not on my mind. Now don't get me wrong, we want to come here and play absolutely as well as we can. I thought we did that."

Landry Jones wasn't as accurate as usual, and he failed to finish off a pair of early drives that got within 10 yards of the end zone.

Still, he threw three touchdown passes and got Texas so afraid of the pass that it opened room for Dominique Whaley to scoot 64 yards for a touchdown in the third quarter.

But the 2011 edition of the Red River rivalry won't be remembered for offense. It'll be for the defense scoring three touchdowns for the first time in program history and tying another mark by racking up eight sacks.

And, remember, they did it all against a team that came in undefeated.

So even if they weren't seeking style points, they still picked up a few.

Alas, they did it in an early game, which means LSU and Alabama took the field knowing lopsided wins would help their status among voters. The Tigers beat then-No. 17 Florida 41-11, and the Crimson Tide stopped Vanderbilt 34-0.

"We are not sitting here saying we have to win by this or that. It's way too early in the year," Stoops said.

"I get that's what everyone likes to do. Some other teams have been rewarded for some good games they have played. That's OK. They should be. I'm sure we will be rewarded for playing a game like this today."

Oklahoma won over at least one voter. After being listed first on seven ballots last week, the Sooners were atop eight this week.

If the Longhorns could vote, their rivals would be No. 1 with a bullet.

"That's the best that they've played us," said senior running back Fozzy Whittaker, who finished his career 2-2 against Oklahoma.

"They were just out there flying to the ball, playing faster than us. It's one of those things where you just have to stand back and give them credit for doing what they do best. ... It's kind of hard to see why they slipped down (in the poll) when they played us so well."

The Sooners remain atop the coaches' poll, which is a factor in the BCS standings. The season's first BCS rankings will be released next Sunday.

Next up for Oklahoma is Kansas, a club that's 2-3 and coming off a 70-28 loss to Oklahoma State.

JOHNSON

From 1C

The Missouri native climbed out of his car and said he felt as if he'd won.

"There's a lot that can happen in the next six races," Edwards said. "There are so many moments that will still define this championship."

Edwards leads the Chase by a point over Harvick, who finished sixth. Keselowski climbed two spots to fourth in the standings. Matt Kenseth is fifth after a fourth-place run, Kurt Busch dropped two spots to sixth and Kyle Busch is seventh after a top-10 finish.

There is still just 19 points separating the top eight drivers.

They're all chasing Johnson.

The most dominant driver in NASCAR went to the front after a caution flag on Lap 21 and spent the rest of the afternoon cruising around the 1 1/2-mile trioval. Stewart tried to chase him down, and a few other contenders tired to work fuel strategy to make up ground, but a series of late yellow flags took fuel mileage out of the equation.

Mom gets served an earful in line at breakfast buffet

DEAR ABBY

Write Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069. Her column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I were on vacation out of state with our four young children, staying at a large resort that offered a free buffet breakfast. While my husband tended to the children's beverages and eating utensils, I stood in line to make waffles for everyone. (There were three waffle irons available.)

As I made four waffles for the six of us — as others were doing for their families — a woman began berating me and another man for "monopolizing" the waffle irons. She said we should make only one waffle at a time and then get back in line. She went on to insult our kids by saying that by feeding our kids whole waffles for breakfast, we are responsible for the epidemic of childhood obesity in this country.

Was I being rude? Is there a rule of etiquette regarding waffle-making in a buffet? We like to sit down as a family and enjoy our meal together. — WAFFLING IN THE SOUTH

DEAR WAFFLING: As far as I know, you broke no rule of etiquette. What you encountered was a hungry woman who was taking her impatience out on you. She is lucky you didn't hand her an egg and tell her to go suck on it.

DEAR ABBY: Two weeks before our youngest child's wedding, my husband of more than 40 years suddenly became obsessed with worry that I was unfaithful. It was unfounded and nearly ruined the wedding for both of us. This continued for two weeks after the wedding, until he finally vowed to "let it go."

My husband is now bending over backward to make it up to me. He is as thoughtful and passionate as if we were on our honeymoon again. While I'm enjoying the attention, I can't help but wonder if he is the guilty one. What do you think? — TURNING THE TABLES IN ILLINOIS

DEAR TURNING THE TABLES: What I think isn't nearly as important as what YOU think. If you think he has been unfaithful, you may be right. The question now is, what do you intend to do about it? If you no longer trust your husband, then marriage counseling would be appropriate.

DEAR ABBY: I lost my wife and only child three years ago in a car accident. I felt my life ended that day, but I've managed to put the pieces back together thanks to the support of my family and friends. Now I'm at the point where I think I'm strong enough to start dating again.

When do I tell my date what happened? I don't want to scare her away with my story. It's a big part of who I am, but it's not ALL I am. First dates are about getting to know someone and it's hard not to share this, but I'm uncomfortable sharing right away. Do you have any advice? — TENTATIVE IN MINNESOTA

DEAR TENTATIVE: I see no reason why you should disclose all the details of what happened to your wife and child on a first or second date. If the subject of your marital status is raised, it's perfectly all right to say you are a widower, that the subject is a painful one, and you will share more details when you know the person better. It would be insensitive for anyone to press you for more information after hearing a statement like that.

Bidding Quiz

Q 1 — Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠ K Q 6 ♥ A 7 ♦ K Q J 8 5 ♣ 7 5 4
The bidding has proceeded:

WEST	NORTH	EAST	SOUTH
1	Pass	1♠	?

What action do you take?

A — While it is risky to step into the auction between two unlimited hands and while you would have liked to have a sixth diamond to act at the two-level, you have too much to pass. Inactivity now could force you to bid at a higher level, when the danger would be greater. Bid two diamonds.

Q 2 — Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠ J 10 9 8 ♥ K 6 ♦ 9 3 2 ♣ A 7 6 4 3
The bidding has proceeded:

WEST	NORTH	EAST	SOUTH
1	1♠	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A — Treat partner's overcall as if it were an opening bid. Had West passed and partner opened one spade, your best response would have been to raise to two spades, so take that action now.

Q 3 — As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠ K 9 8 5 ♥ Q 7 6 5 ♦ A 7 ♣ 8 3 2
The bidding has proceeded:

WEST	NORTH	EAST	SOUTH
1♣	Dbl	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A — When responding to partner's takeout double, rate your hand in one of three categories: weak, invitational or game forcing. This hand, although dead minimum for such action, qualifies as invitational. Jump in your better four-card major, in this case two spades. Partner, with a minimum double, is allowed to pass.

Q 4 — Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠ 7 ♥ K Q 8 ♦ Q J 9 7 6 4 2 ♣ 9 5
Partner opens the bidding with one heart. What do you respond?

A — It is not often we suggest you conceal a seven-card suit, but this is clearly the right time for that. Your hand is probably worth only one bid, and to conceal such good support for partner's major would be criminal. Bid two hearts.

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS

The stars show the kind of day you'll have: 5-dynamic; 4-positive; 3-average; 2-so-so; 1-difficult

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Monday, Oct. 10, 2011:

This year the unexpected occurs within a partnership. You often go back and forth trying to deal with a problem that is perpetually transforming. But the core issue could be the same. You often wonder how much to give. Sometimes you become resentful, as you feel you give too much. Other times you feel you don't give enough. If you are single, you will face the above-mentioned issues when you start relating. You could have quite a selection of suitors. Enjoy the process of eliminating some and choosing "the one." If you are attached, you might need to explore different ways of handling emotional issues with your sweetie. You will come up with solutions. ARIES can be challenging.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) ★★★★★ You note that your energy gets higher and higher this morning. You might experience a challenge or two, but as you are operating at peak performance, you hardly notice. Note that it is your attitude that defines the depth and nature of your problems. Tonight: As you like.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) ★★★ Consider what is going on behind the scenes. When you decide to act — which would be best if it is not today — you will know what to do. The issue might be how much of the problem you are bringing to the table. Others perceive a situation differently. Tonight: Try an earlier bedtime.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) ★★★★★ A key person nudges you out of your office today. When you focus on goals and others, the unexpected occurs. A meeting could be serious but also has a fun component, as the people involved have a sense of humor. Tonight: Where the conversations are.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) ★★★ Be ready to act ASAP. You might be surprised how quickly you take the lead. An easygoing interaction with an authority figure is far more preferable than any other pattern. You can work together. Tonight: A must appearance.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) ★★★★★ A talk could go a lot longer than anticipated. Try to remain focused, which could be challenging, as you are aware of calls and another matter involving publishing, the law or a distant contact. Experiment with a sensitive ending to the talk, for now. Tonight: Blaze a new trail.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) ★★★★ Prepare to blaze a new trail or experiment with a different approach. Check in with a key partner or loved one whose support you need before taking off on a tangent. An element of surprise is involved in this relationship. Tonight: Continue a conversation over dinner.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) ★★★ You might need to focus on certain details and complete calls before you deal with an associate or get involved in a meeting. Be clear that others cannot and will not wait. Move quickly and efficiently through your must-do's. Tonight: Meet others' demands.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) ★★★★ You might want to understand what is happening with a child or loved one. Explaining that it is a workday and that you need to move on might not be as popular as you would like. Open up to another approach. Tonight: Burning the candle at both ends.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) ★★★★★ You have answers, and they keep coming in. Your creativity remains your strong suit. The unexpected corrals your attention. Be sensitive to the costs of proceeding in a key direction. Tonight: Let your hair down.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) ★★★ You might feel the need to revise a personal situation or make a necessary change. Your caring warms up what could be a difficult person. This person understands; he or she feels your concern. Tonight: Head home.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) ★★★★★ You have a jovial style that emerges with ease. Your personality comes forward and helps others through the unpredictable. A partner is there for you, and lets you know he or she understands. Tonight: Let a talk flow into dinner.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) ★★★ Your caring will evolve to a new level if you remain open. Your instincts carry you through a bad moment or two. A friend could change his or her mind, leaving you a bit stunned. Tonight: Your treat.
